CHILD KILLED — Afghan firefighters carry the body of a young girl killed in a powerful bomb blast that shattered rows of homes and shops Saturday in downtown Kabul, Afghanistan. At least 11 people were killed and more than 20 injured by the explosion, believed to have been planted in a truck on the eve of the Soviet withdrawal from the country, scheduled to begin Sunday. Afghanistan Bomb Blast Kills 11; Anti-Communist Rebels Blamed

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — A bomb Saturday ripped through a truck parked near reviewing stands to be used for ceremonies marking the withdrawal of Soviet troops. Eleven Afghans, including a baby, were killed.

Residents said three rockets later hit a village on the outskirts of Kabul, killing four people and wounding four others. The official Soviet news agency Tass put the death toll at three.

Tass, monitored in Moscow, blamed both attacks on Afghan guerrillas and said one of those responsible for the 5:45 a.m. truck attack was arrested.

Soviet Communist Party Central Committee official Vladimir Sevruk reported that 11 people were killed and 12 injured in the explosion.

The blast killed a baby and an 11-year-old girl, and all the casualties were Afghan civilians, according to a Western photographer on the scene.

Most appeared to have been occupants of nearby homes destroyed by the impact of the explosion, he said.

"When the bomb exploded some of the houses nearby just collapsed," said the photographer.

The blast was so great that it shattered the windows of a bus depot across the river, 300 yards away and left a crater 20 feet wide and 10 feet deep.

Soviet troops arrived afterward, the photographer said by telephone.

The blast demolished embankment walls on both sides of the river that threads through this ancient capital.

Blood was visible on the gates of a nearby factory and personal belongings, including carpet slippers, were scattered in the street.

Last month, six people were killed and 49 wounded in another bomb blast along the river on the 10th anniversary of the April 1978 revolution that brought a Marxist government to power in Afghanistan and triggered widespread insurrection.

Tass said the rockets Saturday hit the village of Chamane Baraqi, killing an old man and two children. Residents said one rocket hit a hut, killing two children inside and that an elderly man and another child were killed by debris. The village is located about a half-mile from the British embassy.

Pitt Board To Have 9 Members, At Least 1 Black, After Election

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

The Pitt County Board of Commissioners, with a new method of election this year, will have nine members after the November general election.

And, for the the first time this century, the board will have at least one black member. Depending on the outcome of a May 31 second primary, the board could have two black commissioners.

The present six-member board, required to be residents of specific districts, but elected at large, will be increased the first Monday in December to nine members elected by voters of the districts — three of the districts predominantly black — in which they live.

The change in the size of the board, and the method of electing members, was designed to give blacks equal representation.

Three of the present board members — Charles McLawhorn, Kenneth Dews and Tom Johnson — will continue their terms as commissioners when the board reorganizes in December.

And incumbent Eugene James, seeking re-election, won in the May 3 primary over a black opponant.

Since James has no Republican opposition in November, he is all but guaranteed a seat on the board, as are Linwood Mercer and Wilton R. Duke, who also won nomination races earlier this month.

Incumbent Charles Gaskins, presently chairman of the board, won the Democratic nomination and will appear on the November ballot.

Gaskins will face Republican Stuart Shinn in the general election. But if past history is any indication, since registered Democrats far outnumber registered Republicans in the county, Gaskins could be predicted to win that race.

The one black guaranteed on the board at this time will be from District 1. It's simply a matter of who.

Rioting Inmates Holding Guards

By GIL BROYLES
Associated Press Writer

STRINGTOWN, Okla. (AP) — Inmates at an overcrowded state prison held three guards hostage Saturday following a fiery uprising that left one dormitory gutted and two others damaged, officials said. One guard and one inmate were injured.

Eight guards were grabbed by 10 prisoners when the disturbance began, but five hostages were released unharmed Saturday and the others were reported in good condition, said officials at the medium-security Mack Alford Correctional Center.

The inmates, believed to be armed with crude knives, threatened to kill their hostages if authorities attempted a rescue, said Jerry Massie, spokesman for the state Department of Corrections.

"One inmate is keeping it going," said prison spokeswoman Anita Trammell. "I think the inmates are tired. We have one leader. I think if it wasn't for the leader, things would have been closed up."

The uprising began late Friday after some inmates accused others of theft and threatened retaliation, authorities said. A group of the inmates was being prepared for transfer to a maximum-security prison when they seized hostages.

Iraqi Raiders Hit Five Tankers

By RICHARD PYLE
Associated Press Writer

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iraqi warplanes bombarded an offshore terminal in the Strait of Hormuz on Saturday and set fire to five tankers, including two of the world's largest, in a stepped-up drive to destroy Iran's oil lifeline.

Up to 54 crewmen were reported missing.

One of the ships, the 235,000-ton Spanish tanker Barcelona, was said to be sinking. Two others, including the Seawise Giant, at 564,739 tons the largest vessel afloat, were blazing out of control hours after the mid-afternoon raid on Larak island, according to shipping sources.

Gulf-based sources said Iranian salvage tugs were battling flames aboard the ships, some of which were moored together to transfer cargo.

Iraq announced the raid five hours later, the 10th attack it has claimed against Iranian oil targets since April 29.

Reports of casualties varied widely.

Gulf-based shipping executives said at least 16 crew members were missing, 14 from the Seawise Giant and two from the 457,841-ton British-flag Burmah Endeavour.

In London, Lloyd's Shipping Intelligence Unit said that all of the approximately 50 people aboard the Seawise Giant and four from the Barcelona were unaccounted for.

There were no reports regarding crews of the other two tankers, the 152,004-ton Cypriot-flag Argosy and the 231,712-ton Iranian tanker Khark. The Argosy is under Iranian charter and the Khark is government owned.

The attacks were part of an intensified effort by Baghdad to cut off the export revenues that Tehran uses to finance the war with Iraq, now in its eighth year.

"Penetrating Iranian enemy defenses, Iraqi pilots struck at berthing supertankers off the island, setting them ablaze and gutted in fire. Columns of smoke were seen billowing from the hit targets," said the official Iraqi News Agency, quoting a military communique.

The raid was the third in the past seven months against Larak, where international tankers pick up oil cargoes brought from Kharg Island by Iranian ships.

To reach the Hormuz strait, the Iraqi jets must fly more than 750 miles each way, requiring mid-air refueling en route to or from the target.

Five tankers also were hit in the

Three More Die At Temple

By RAJU GOPALAKRISHNAN
Associated Press Writer

AMRITSAR, India (AP) — Indian commandos shot to death three Sikh extremists Saturday in a fierce firefight at the Golden Temple complex and captured two more buildings from Sikhs holed up inside the sacred shrine, authorities said.

Black Cat commandos uncorked a fusillade of gunfire around 8 p.m. and took over a community dining hall and a prayer hall adjoining the main temple, Sikhism's holiest shrine.

The deaths raised to at least 30 the number of people killed since the temple siege began Monday. The United News of India news agency put the toll at 34. It said several bodies were recovered from the temple on Saturday.

The two buildings are on the small pathway that separates the temple and its residential quarters from the temple's offices and a hostel, a police spokesman said.

Siddharth Shankar Ray, governor of Punjab and the top state official, issued a stern warning to the 100 or so militants inside the temple to give themselves up.

"If the terrorists refuse to see reason, then no one should blame us for our action," he said in a statement from the state capital of Chandigarh.

Suresh Arora, the city police superintendent, said the security forces also had taken over a tall tower near two buildings captured Saturday. The tower was set ablaze by police, he said.

First Section Of Airport Land Use Plan Completed

By GREG LAUDICK
Reflector Staff Writer

The city's rapid growth has generated a significant increase in aircraft activity at Pitt-Greenville Airport during the past several years. Projection studies indicate air-travel demands at the airport will continue to increase well into the next decade.

To support and assist the continued growth of the airport, the Airport Authority requested that a special joint city-county committee produce the Pitt-Greenville Airport Area Land Use Plan.

According to its author, Lynne James, land use planning can provide a mechanism whereby the negative impacts of future airport expansion may be minimized by identifying the areas to be affected so that appropriate measures can be taken.

The plan identifies existing and potential land use conflicts, particularly those caused by airport noise and safety concerns, and proposes to identify methods for alleviating those conflicts through the development of suitable plans and implementation procedures.

Recently completed is the first phase of the plan, a land use and facility analysis. The 87-page report presents a detailed examination of all aspects of the airport. Included are runway patterns and measurements, current zoning adjacent to the facility, soil analysis and characteristics, and fihures regarding runway approach slopes.

The plan has been adopted by the

Pitt County Board To Have Nine Members

Rouse, the unopposed Republican hopeful, will face each other in November. But again, if voters follow their party, Moore should be the winner.

The only "undecided" seat is from District A — a contest between black Greenville businessman D.D. Garrett and James Dupree, a white Bethel businessman.

Dupree gathered 1,270 votes in a three-way race for the Democratic nomination on May 3, while Garrett received 1,129. The third hopeful, Ralph Love, a black, received 714 votes.

It's that race, where Garrett asked for a second primary, that will be decided on May 31. Without Republican opposition in November, the man who receives the most votes in the runoff will become the ninth commissioner.

Dupree said last week that the second primary is "just something I had expected."

And he said, "I'm working just as hard as I can. It's the first time I've been in a runoff."

Dupree served four terms as mayor of Bethel and three terms as a member of the town board.

"I'm campaigning like I always would ... working as hard as I can. I don't want my supporters to think I'm not as interested now as I was in the beginning, because I certainly am."

According to Dupree, "I don't plan to do anything different," in campaigning for the second primary. "I was well satisfied with the campaign," for the May 3 balloting. "We were successful. I hope we will be successful again."

Looking to the runoff, Garrett said last week, "My whole goal is to win this runoff.

"We set out," Garrett said, to elect three blacks to seats on the board. "I think it's obvious now we're not going to get three. But it's imperative we get two blacks ... to give some kind of racial balance.

"I'm going to do the same thing this time I did last time. I'm just working harder.

"I'm doing everything I did before. There was nothing lacking in our (first) campaign. It was just a matter of votes being split in the black community, and I have the assurance that will not happen this time."

How will the reorganized board operate?

"You know you have a black from District 1 ... possibly two," incumbent Eugene James said.

But James said, "I think the philosophy" of the new board will "be about the same" as the present board. "I think those people that will be elected are going to serve all of Pitt County and not just their particular area."

James suggested, "I think we'll have a closely united board. I don't anticipate any problems."

Incumbent Tom Johnson also said he feels the new board will have the same philosophy as the present body. And he said, "I think there will be a smooth transition (with) no major changes in the current approach," to setting policy for the county government.

"That current approach," Johnson said, "is moving as rapidly as we can in providing all citizens the kinds of opportunities that should be available in Pitt County.

"I don't see any difficulties in the transition to a nine-person board."

But Kelly Barnhill, a former county commissioner, had a different thought last week ... one which bothered the present board members when they were considering a district method of election.

"From the standpoint of commissioners being elected to represent smaller specific districts, rather than elected at-large," Barnhill said, "I'm afraid there will tend to be occasions the commissioners will be acting for the interests of a particular district.

"That was somewhat different in the past," Barnhill suggested, "when commissioners were elected, and represented, all the people of the county.

"I personally think the new system will not represent the county as a whole as well as the old system."

last Larak raid, on Dec. 22, among them the Seawise Giant, which was damaged in the first raid last October.

Both Seawise Giant and Burmah Endeavour, also one of the world's five largest vessels, are under charter to Iran as "mother ships," or offshore storage tankers, at Larak.

More than 500 ships have been damaged in the war, most of them since it spilled into the gulf in 1984. Since the start of 1986, about 300 commercial ships have been hit by one side or the other.

Estimates by maritime agencies and other sources indicate that more than 300 seamen have been killed and many injured.

The Larak raid came hours after a U.S. Navy-escorted convoy of three Kuwaiti tankers sailed through the Hormuz into the Gulf of Oman without incident. It was the 31st convoy of the year.

One of the escorting warships, the destroyer Stump, later returned to the gulf, passing through the strait where the smoke of Larak's fires were still visible.

Earlier in the day, gulf-based sources quoted radio monitors as saying an Iranian fighter plane had warned a U.S. warship to leave an area in the southern gulf, but there was no reply.

An American source said the Navy had overheard an Iranian F-4 fighter-bomber "requesting permission to attack a ship."

The source, speaking on condition he not be named, said there were no U.S. ships in that immediate vicinity at the time.

Meanwhile, Iran reported that it would soon begin 10 days of maneuvers in the southern gulf and the Gulf of Oman. No specific date was given for the exercises, the first since the Iranians lost six naval craft in clashes with U.S. forces on April 18.

The Islamic Republic News Agency quoted the commander of Iran's navy, Rear Adm. Mohammad-Hussein Malekzadegan, as saying Iran's naval forces had "increased several times" since the battle. of the Soviet withdrawal, Afghan President Najib said his government will survive because it offers peace. He added that he will address the U.N. Special Session on Disarmament in New York next month and planned trips to Czechoslovakia and Cuba.

"We can state confidently that we will last because we strive and struggle for peace," he said. "Our opponents offer the Afghan people war, and the people hate this."

Also at a news conference Saturday, the head of the Soviet military contingent in Afghanistan said the anti-Communist rebels were taking their toll on the Soviet and Afghan troops but that rebel attacks will not deter the withdrawal, which begins Sunday.

"The opposition may have some effect on us, but not much, and certainly they will not be able to frustrate the timetable," Lt. Gen. Boris Gromov told reporters. "We have the means at our disposal to fulfill the timetable."

The comments by Gromov and Najib and the report of the rocket attack were carried in a Reuters news agency pool report from Kabul. The Associated Press was excluded from the pool because of questions it asked Afghan President Najib last month.

Under an accord signed in Geneva on April 14, the Soviets will complete their withdrawal within nine months. Half of the Soviets must be out by Aug. 15, according to the peace agreement.

Soviet soldiers entered the war in December 1979 to help the allied government fight off the insurgents, and about 115,000 remain here to back forces loyal to President Najib.

In one of the most incredible coincidences of American history, the second and third presidents of the United States — John Adams and Thomas Jefferson — both died on July 4, 1826, 50 years to the day after the Declaration of Independence was adopted.

Firefight At Temple Leaves Three Dead

Security forces are trying to take over another similar minaret near the temple complex, he added. The two minarets have been used by the rebels as watch towers and firing posts.

K.P.S. Gill, the state police chief, said the militants fired at people who tried to leave the temple compound during an hour-long police cease-fire.

Six elderly Sikhs came out of the temple complex Saturday and told reporters they were temple workers.

Journalists saw two women and a child try to leave, but they retreated after the extremists fired a volley of shots.

Gill said about 20 women and children, thought to be relatives of the radicals, were still inside.

Earlier Saturday, Indian security forces sprayed machine-gun fire to pin down the extremists. Sporadic fire was heard from Sikhs inside the sprawling temple complex, their spiritual and military stronghold.

Uttam Singh, a local Sikh leader, appealed over a loudspeaker to the militants. "People, please come out. At least allow the women, children and old people to leave," he pleaded.

"Why don't you come in!" a man inside shouted back.

About 2,800 government police and paramilitary troops, including 300 commandos from the National Security Force, surrounded the temple complex.

It is the largest show of force at the Golden Temple since 1984 when the army stormed the holy shrine to dislodge Sikh radicals. More than 1,200 were killed in that incident.

The current siege began Monday when Sikhs inside the temple complex opened fire and wounded five officers of the Central Reserve Police Force.

Commandos and government troops were deployed in sandbagged bunkers atop buildings overlooking the temple's 20-foot walls. People and food have been prevented from entering the complex since Monday, but the radicals routinely stockpile huge quantities of supplies and ammunition inside.

The government's tactics appeared aimed at containing and wearing down the radicals. An attempt to storm the temple would invoke the rage of many of India's 2 million Sikhs, for it would be considered a grave desecration of their holiest shrine.

Prime Minister Indira Gandhi was assassinated by Sikh bodyguards in 1984, five months after she sent the army into the Golden Temple.

Uniformed army troops have not participated in the current siege.

Commandos equipped with heavy drills capable of piercing walls were deployed outside the western wall of the complex. Some were armed with Israeli-made Uzi submachine guns and German-made MP-5 machine pistols, weapons used in close-quarter combat.

Authorities escorted journalists to a sandbagged bunker on a rooftop overlooking the temple complex Saturday afternoon. The bunker had a sweeping view of the Golden Temple and the sacred pool surrounding it.

Sikhs comprise 2 percent of India's 800 million people, but they are a majority in Punjab state and are fighting for an independent Punjab homeland.

The radicals have killed about 960 people so far this year in Punjab, compared with 1,030 for all of 1987. The victims include moderate Sikhs as well as Hindus.

ECU To Host Language Institute

ECU News Bureau

East Carolina University has been selected as the site for the first Governor's Language Institute for Spanish Teachers, one of three such institutes planned this summer to promote second language education in North Carolina.

The institutes are being conducted to serve approximately 60 public and private school teachers of French, German and Spanish from throughout the state. By next year, the Governor's Language Institutes program hopes to have four sites to accommodate these languages and Latin.

"Learning languages is increasingly important to the economic, political and social life of our state," Gov. Jim Martin said in requesting proposals for institute locations last December.

Professor Manolita Buck of the ECU Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures will be director of the Spanish institute at ECU. The staff will include Dr. Michael Schinasi and Mrs. Raquel Manning of the ECU foreign languages department; Dr. Emily Spinelli, visiting professor from the University of Michigan, and two native Spanish-speaking monitors who will reside in a dormitory with institute participants.

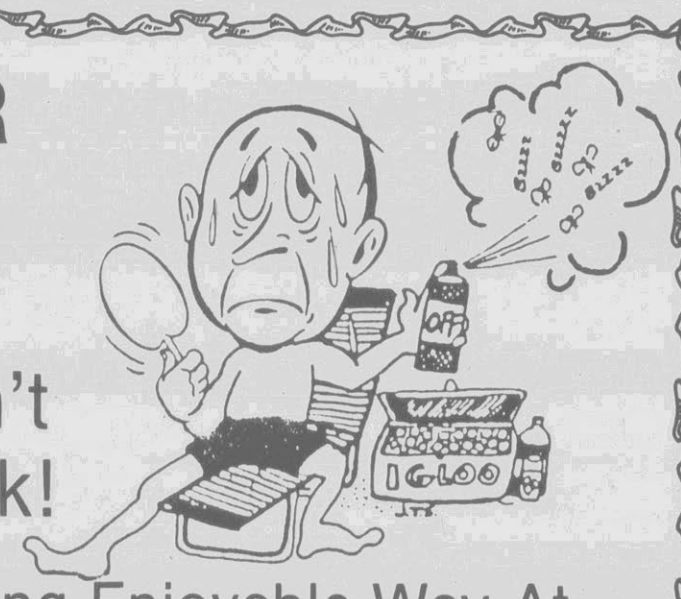

The institute will be open to approximately 20 Spanish teachers from grades six through 12. The program consists of an intensive four-week residential language institute (meaning that all participants will speak and communicate only in Spanish throughout the four weeks).

Dates of the institute are June 27 through July 22. Martin is scheduled to attend the opening session at 9 a.m. June 27 in the foreign languages department in the new general classroom building.

Grain Field Day

Pitt County farmers will have an opportunity Thursday to see the latest developments in small grain production. A small grain field day will be held at the Piedmont Research Station near Salisbury, beginning at 5 p.m., according to Mitch Smith, Pitt County extension agent.

"This will be the first small grain field day at the Piedmont Station since 1985," Smith said. "I think growers will see a lot of new and interesting things."

Small grains to be covered at the field day include wheat, oats, rye, barley and triticale. This last crop, a cross between wheat and rye, is relatively new in North Carolina.

Available for inspection will be research and demonstration plots on the station covering new varieties, maximum yields and growth regulators. Growers can also see the latest research on managing weeds, diseases, and insects, including hessian fly, cereal leaf beetle and aphids.

Computer Programs

Three groups of students in the East Carolina University School of Business have been recognized for developing outstanding computer programs during the spring semester.

The students, working in teams, were enrolled in three sections of the basic course in management information systems. The course is offered through the ECU Department of Decision Sciences.

Top prize was awarded to the team that developed 'Aristotle,' a program which allows for computerized searches of a reference article data base. Team members were Richard Brake of Tarboro, Todd Cutler of Washington, Mike Gilgo of Atlantic and Jeff Christenat of Potomac, Md.

The other two teams were tied for second place.

One second place winner was "Ten Ton Trailer," a manufacturing information system program with added security features, developed by Kim Bailey of Durham, Allison Warren of Mount Olive, Stephanie Ginn of La Grange, Lisa Deaton of Hickory and John Hodges of Williamston.

The other second place winner was "Interactive Marketing Systems," a program to help sales representatives track and monitor inquiries and orders. The program was produced by Stephen Brock of Kinston, Bill Chisholm of Newport and Keith Parker of Fairmont.

Public Session On Naming Pitt Secondary Roads Set

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

The last in a series of five public meetings to review and receive comment on proposed names for secondary roads in Pitt County will be held this week at the county office building.

County Planner Jeff Ulma said the final road name meeting will be held Thursday at 7:30 p.m. at the county office building at 1717 W. Fifth St.

Ulma said attendance at the previous sessions "has been minimal," totaling "about a dozen people."

Once the hearings are completed and the proposed road names are approved by the county's road name committee, the county planning board and the Board of Commissioners, signs will be made and erected at each secondary road intersection throughout the county, Ulma said.

The recommended secondary road names, Ulma said, were selected from road names collected from various sources, with preferred local names provided by the various fire and rescue departments throughout the county.

While efforts were made to use the "common" or preferred name, Ulma said "this was not always possible due to duplication of road names or other considerations."

But, Ulma said, "If you would like to suggest an alternate name for any of the roads ... be sure the name you suggest corresponds with the entire length of the road as currently numbered by the N.C. Department of Transportation."

A list of the recommended names is available from the Pitt County Planning Department, and road maps are available for inspection at the planning department prior to the meeting. Maps and recommended road names will also be available for review at the Thursday night meeting.

Council Approved Rezoning Request

Several actions were taken Thursday by the Greenville City Council at its regular monthly meeting at City Hall.

The council unanimously approved a request by James F. Arthur Jr. and Louis C. Arthur to rezone 3.87 acres located on the southwest corner of 14th Street and Charles Boulevard from CN (neighborhood commercial) and CH (highway commercial) to CS (shopping center).

The fate of the Patrick-Arthur House, currently existing on the property, was not discussed during the rezoning discussion. The owners have offered to donate the house to the city should city officials decide to pay for its removal.

A request by Bill Dansey to annex 25.58 acres of lots 4 and 5 of Liongate Subdivision, located north of N.C. 43 and west of SR 1202, was continued until September. However, the public hearing regarding the annexation request was conducted Thursday night.

In another rezoning matter, the council unanimously approved a request by Daphine L. Richardson to rezone a .344 acre tract located on Port Terminal Road adjacent to Cliff's Seafood Restaurant from RA-20 to CN.

In other action, the council approved amendments to the Budget Ordinance which will appropriate $12,340 for the purchase of an automobile for the police chief's use, along with additional office equipment; appropriated $1,302 for the purchase of two desks and two chairs for both the personnel and planning departments; appropriated $9,800 for payment of services regarding the recently completed police evidence and drug operations audit, and appropriated program income for community development eligible activities in the same neighborhoods from which those revolving monies originated.

The council voted to submit a grant application for $5,000 from the Emergency Shelter Grant Program for the Greenville Community Shelter; approved a mutual aid agreement between various Pitt County communities as part of an operation plan in the event of emergencies; approved the release of $188.78 in taxes, and adopted the first phase of the Airport Area Land Use Plan which identifies existing and potential land use conflicts caused by airport noise and safety concerns.

Inmates Holding Three Guards Hostage

"They released the (fifth) hostage in return for getting to talk to two specific negotiators," said Massie. He would not identify the negotiators.

Officials said the inmates had "a short list" of specific demands, but refused to disclose what they were.

"I think their primary concern is for their safety and their well-being," Massie said. "It's just real non-specific. It's not like a list of 'We want better food or better water.'"

"We're fine. They're feeding us. They're taking care of us," one hostage was quoted as saying when inmates permitted him to make a telephone call.

The 33-year-old red-brick prison was surrounded by Oklahoma Highway Patrol tactical teams in camouflage clothing, rifle-toting corrections department officers and firetrucks that were used to battle blazes in three buildings.

Officers carrying teargas launchers donned bullet-proof vests in a parking lot and huddled around blueprints of the prison. But officials wouldn't say if that activity signaled any impending action.

"That's what you call contingency planning," said patrol spokesman Lt. Stewart Meyer.

A spokesman said Gov. Henry Bellmon had no plans to call in the National Guard to assist the law officers already on hand.

The inmates started a fire that destroyed the east dormitory at the prison, then moved to another dormitory with their hostages, Massie said.

Smoke was still rising from the roof of the torched dormitory Saturday; fires in two other dormitories were doused.

"Ten of the 82 are participating in the hostage situation ... the others just got caught inside," said Ms. Trammell. Thirty to 35 of the uninvolved inmates locked themselves in their cells, she said.

Trammell said one guard was treated after apparently being hit on the hand with a rock, and one prisoner suffered a minor stab wound to the shoulder.

Officers were preparing to transfer five inmates to the Oklahoma State Penitentiary in McAlester, about 40 miles away, when the disturbance began. The five had reportedly threatened other inmates who allegedly had stolen from them.

"Apparently, during that period of time, an officer was taken hostage," Massie said. Other officers then were seized.

More than 500 inmates were evacuated from the prison's dormitories and held in a yard behind a fence topped with razor wire. Many were being transferred to other facilities throughout the state.

Family members of some of the hostages gathered at a secluded area outside the facility in rural southeastern Oklahoma near the Texas border, 130 miles southeast of Oklahoma City.

Mack Alford, with 652 inmates, has the sixth-largest prison population in Oklahoma but has an operational capacity of 492, Massie said. The prison opened in 1955, he said.

Airport Plan In Works

Airport Authority, the Greenville City Council, and is currently being examined by the County Commissioners for consideration.

However, Ms. James said adoption of the plan does not give the Airport Authority or the other two governing bodies the authority to enact any kind of regulatory measures until extensive public input has been obtained.

Besides identifying current airport trends, the plan projects future operation scenarios such as jet operation and the projected accompanying noise levels, along with compatible future land uses.

According to Ms. James, the second phase of the plan is its actual implementation.

"Implementation might involve regulatory measures that the local government may undertake such as zoning and height regulations," she said. "In addition, the airport authority may undertake such measures as land acquisition and noise abatement techniques.

She said the first step in the implementation process may involve a series of public meetings involving property owners within the study area. A schedule for these meetings has yet to be established.

Toll Rises From Accident

AGUASCALIENTES, Mexico (AP) — Army and civilian rescuers chipped away at concrete slabs Saturday to try to reach two people still missing in a building collapse that killed at least 15 people, officials said.

A state communique said the death toll from Thursday's collapse rose to 15 on Saturday and may go as high as 17. The Red Cross listed 19 dead, Juan Diaz Andrade, in charge of special services for the local agency said.

Rescuers believe they have located the body of one of the missing and believe the second also is dead, said the communique issued Saturday.

Fifty-seven people were injured in the accident and 12 of them hospitalized, the report said.

The governor of Aguascalientes, Miguel Angel Barbarena Vega, visited the site Saturday and said an investigation to determine why the four-story building collapsed will be stepped up Monday.

The building housed a furniture factory on the ground floor and part of the three-level basement area. It gave way as concrete was being poured during construction of three more floors that were being added on.

Jesus Maria Romo, owner of the furniture factory in this state capital 320 miles northwest of Mexico City, said paperwork for indemnization for relatives of the victims will begin Monday, the government news agency Notimex reported.

He estimated damage at about $225,000, Notimex said.

Preliminary Engineering Funds For Evans OK'd

The N.C. Board of Transportation, at a meeting Friday in Beaufort, approved $200,000 for preliminary engineering work on the proposed widening of Evans Street from Greenville Boulevard to 10th Street.

Randy Doub of Greenville, a member of the transportation board, said, "At the present time, the section from Greenville Boulevard to Howell Street remains on schedule for right-of-way acquisition in June," with contract letting on that portion of the project scheduled for November.

The second portion of the project, Dowb said, from Howell Street to 10th Street, "is being coordinated with the city of Greenville for right-of-way acquisition and our department of transportation for funding."

Smoker Says He Didn't Alter Smoke Detector

SEATTLE (AP) — The first person arrested under new regulations banning smoking on short airline flights says he's willing to plead guilty to smoking but would fight any more serious charge.

In an interview published Saturday in The Seattle Times, Darryl Seigel denied an official's suggestion that he may have tampered with a smoke detector in an airliner restroom during a USAir flight from Seattle to Reno, Nev.

Seigel, 38, of Seattle, admitted smoking a cigarette in a lavatory during the Thursday flight but said he did so absent-mindedly. He said that if he is charged with "smoking in the lavatory, I'll plead guilty, but if it's for anything else I'll fight it."

Regulations that went into effect three weeks ago ban smoking on domestic airliner flights lasting less than two hours.

Federal Aviation Administration spokeswoman Elly Brekke said Seigel is apparently the first passenger to be arrested under the new rules.

The lack of an alarm from the lavatory smoke detector caused the flight crew to suspect it was tampered with, Brekke said. It was given to maintenance workers for an inspection.

But Seigel said of the smoke detector, "I touched it, that's all, but I did not do anything other than look at it out of curiousity."

Brekke said the investigation should take 60 days, and Seigel faces three possible charges: Smoking when a no smoking sign is on, which carries a $1,000 fine; smoking in the lavatory, also a $1,000 fine; and tampering with a lavatory smoke detector, a $2,000 fine.

Nuke Plant Vote Set

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Voters here may become the first in the nation to shut down an operating nuclear power plant when they consider rival ballot measures to decide the fate of the problem-plagued Rancho Seco plant.

A measure sponsored by a group called SAFE, or Sacramentans for Safe Energy, would order the permanent closure of the 14-year-old plant, one of the few publicly owned nuclear power plants in the country.

An alternative plan put on the June 7 ballot by the Sacramento Municipal Utility District, which owns Rancho Seco, in effect asks the district's voters to give the the plant 25 miles southeast of here another chance.

The utility district, which comprises Sacramento and surrounding areas with a combined population of more than 420,000, has struggled with operating problems at the plant for years.

In addition, district consumers have struggled with electricity rates that have gone up nearly 85 percent in three years, and critics blame Rancho Seco for that, too.

"The thing has such a history of running so poorly and being unsafe that no one would believe it won't do the same thing in the future," said Bob Mulholland, political director of Campaign California, an environmental and consumer's group working on the shutdown effort.

"We figure that the odds of Rancho Seco operating above the industry average are about the same as winning the California lottery," said Karl Ory of Campaign California.

Rancho Seco managers say the plant deserves another chance.

"We're champing at the bit to show the public we can do it," said Steve Redeker, deputy operations manager. "For the first time, we have an attitude of do it right."

Camping Homicide

GETTYSBURG, Pa. (AP) — A gunman shot two female campers, one fatally, in a desolate area near the Appalachian trail, state police said Saturday.

Rebecca Wight, 29, of Blackburg, Va., was killed Friday night at a remote camping site and Claudia Brenner, 31, of Ithaca, N.Y., was shot once in the face, state police dispatcher Clifford Whitmoyer said.

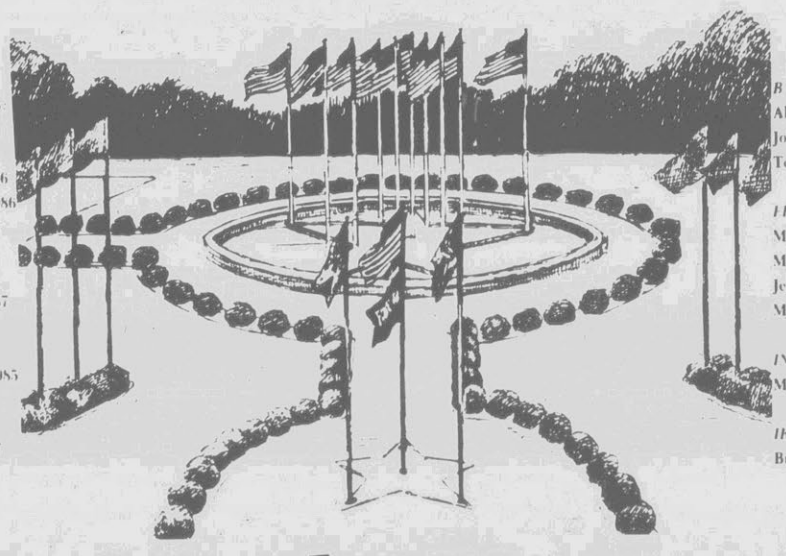

Whitmoyer said the women were hikers on the Appalachian trail and had set up camp in the Michaux State Forest. He said the man appeared at the site, pointed a gun at the women and shot and killed Ms. Wight. Investigators had not determined a motive, he said.

Ms. Brenner, though wounded, made her way to Hershey Medical Center, where nursing manager Kathy Cerullo-Frick said no information was available Saturday on her condition.

Lee County Site Meets Board's Waste Treatment Plant Criteria

SANFORD, N.C. (AP) — A "Lee County profile" report says the N.C. Hazardous Waste Treatment Commission is interested in a 2,394-acre Lee County tract because the land's profile fits the commission's criteria for a treatment plant.

The commission has been looking for a site, the report says, that was:

— near the state's waste generators

— near highways to provide safe transportation access

— not near major population centers.

"After evaluating hundreds of sites," the report says, "the commission has identified a site in Lee County that is potentially suitable for a hazardous waste tretment plant."

The report, a copy of which was obtained by the Sanford Herald, emphasizes "potentially" because an environmental impact study, which is rquired by the state, must be prepared and evaluated to determine whether the site will actually be chosen.

An EIS takes eight to 10 months to prepare and eight to 10 months to evaluate. Public hearings are required during the study procedure to make sure citizens concerned are heard and addressed, the report says.

The Lee County site adjacent to the Deep River on the Chatham County line, is a realistic location, the commission says. Among its findings:

— At nearly 2,400 acres, the property would offer a large buffer zone between the facility and any surrounding communities.

— The site has direct access to U.S. 421, a four-lane, state-maintained highway.

— The population and the census tract for the property is 59 people per square mile, or nine per acre. There are no single-family homes within a one-mile radius of the property, 29 homes within 1.5 miles and 139 homes within 2 miles.

The report goes on to say that Lee county's natural resources, including water, soil and plant and animal life, have been studied and found to be acceptable for the locating of a treatment facility.

Technology being discussed by the commission will allow for the reduction of the amount of wastewater currently being discharged into the Deep River. The technology will meet state law by requiring that every gallon of waste water be able to be diluted by 1,000 gallons of river water during the river's driest conditions.

The report says the commission is also studying effects of air emission n the White Pines Natural Area, located near the joining of the Deep and Rocky rivers, and of wastewater on the Cape Fear shiner, a fish living in the waters of the Deep and Rocky rivers, which was declared an endangered species in October last year.

Lee County has eight major waste generators, the report says, which produced 208 million pounds of chemical byproducts in 1986 — 201 million pounds of which were treated or disposed of on-site in the county.

Those totals make the county the state's second-largest producer of hazardous waste behind Mecklenburg County.

The proposed facility will treat 90 million pounds of hazardous waste per year, or about 70 ercent of the waste shipped off-site by North Carolina generators. Five hundred state industries produced 2.4 billion pounds of hazardous waste in 1986, most of which was treated by the producers.

Educators Speak To Graduates

By The Associated Press

Graduates of North Carolina universities heard Saturday from educators, one of whom told students at UNC-Wilmington that institutes of higher learning must remain open to students "on the basis of ability to learn rather than ability to pay."

Schools must also remain open to the free exchange of ideas, Raymond Dawson, vice president for academic affairs and senior vice president, told the 1,008 graduates.

Meanwhile, Chancellor Ann Reynolds of the California university system, the nation's largest, addressed students at UNC-Charlotte.

Dawson said North Carolina's belief that the benefits of UNC should be "extended to the people of the state as free of expense as practicable" is being assailed by those who call for higher tuition in public universities.

"Higher tuition in our public universities is not the answer to our need for more money, for libraries, for salaries, for laboratory equipment and all the other resources this campus and other campuses need ...," Dawson said. "It is not consistent with the commitment to provide opportunity to college education on the basis of ability to learn rather than ability to pay."

Just as important, he said, is that universities be places that are receptive to the expression of different ideas and opinions, even when those views are unpopular with other groups on campus.

He compared the shouting down of such groups as the Central Intelligence Agency to the days of the Speaker Ban Law.

"Nowadays, when speakers are shouted down, when lectures are disrupted when recruiters are harassed, one hears very little about it from on campus ... as faculty and administrators and students, we all need to recognize that academic freedom can be jeopardized by forces from within the university just as surely as it can be by those (from) without."

Convention Fees Anger Robertson's Delegates

RALEIGH (AP) — The suspension of Pat Robertson's campaign for the Republican presidential nomination does not appear to have ended the often bitter fight between Robertson supporters and backers of Vice Presidentia George Bush.

Robertson and Bush forces have clashed across the state as they fought for control of the North Carolina delegation to the Republican National Convention this summer. The most pitched battled occurred two weeks ago at the 4th District Republican Convention in Louisburg, where at least three fistfights broke out and extra police were called in to maintain order.

Unless a compromise is reached, the two sides could go at it again at next month's state Republican Convention. The Robertson forces plan to challenge the delegation from five congressional districts.

Sue Wyatt, director of Robertson's state campaign, said Robertson's withdrawal would not affect those challenges. Robertson supporters have known since early March that Robertson would not win the nomination, she said. But they have continued to attend GOP meetings and conventions to push Robertson's issues.

Mrs. Wyatt said Robertson supporters in North Carolina remain ready to talk but have been rebuffed.

"We have let it be known that we are willing to negotiate with the Republican Party ... and they have made no overtures to negotiate anything with us," she said.

In addition, Robertson delegates are angered over the fee that delegates must pay to attend the state convention.

Delegates will be charged $40 if they pre-register and $75 if they register at the door for the convention, to be held June 3-4 at the Raleigh Civic Center.

Mrs. Wyatt said the registration fee is an attempt by the GOP establishment to discourage Robertson supporters from attending.

"It is another exclusionary tactic we feel like," Mrs. Wyatt said. "I don't know of any other state that has anything near that high. It's like a poll tax."

The registration fee at the state Republican convention in Asheville in 1987 was $25.

But state Republican Chairman Jack Hawke said the state GOP Central Committee voted unanimously to raise the convention fee in March in an effort to cover rising convention costs.

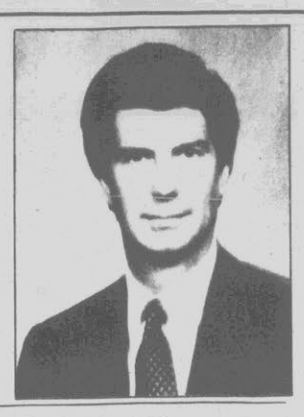

"There is no attempt to exclude anyone," Hawke said.

Bragg Officials Say Land Needed To Handle Training Requirements

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (AP) — Newer and faster weapons require more land, say officials at Fort Bragg, who would like to almost double the size of the base — the most heavily used training facility in the U.S. Army.

A five-year-old study done at Fort Bragg, which already occupies a major chunk of Hoke and Cumberland counties, recommended immediate action to obtain for the base another 154,160 acres, an area almost three times the size of Raleigh.

Joseph D. Hibst, the installation range officer responsible for scheduling and maintaining the training areas and facilities, says the study, which he helped write, is more valid today than it was in 1983.

"That is not a wish list," Hibst told The News and Observer of Raleigh. "If you were to let the commander train the way he's supposed to train, this is how much land he requires.

The Army bought 12,650 acres from International Paper Co. in 1986, bringing Fort Bragg's total acreage to 142,067, and cutting the land shortage to 141,510 acres. And it is trying to buy another 398-acre tract adjacent to nearby Camp MacKall in Richmond County.

The report does not say what land Fort Bragg wants, but a former commander of the XVIII Airborne Corps and Fort Bragg told Rep. Bill Hefner, D-N.C. in a June 1984 letter that the Army preferred to expand northward.

Hibst, who is responsible for scheduling and maintaining the training areas and facilities at Fort Bragg and nearby Camp MacKall, said the Army is preparing solders to fight with a new generation of weapons, like the multiple launch rocket, Abrams tank, Apache attack helicopter, and the Blackhawk helicopter, which ferries troops into battle.

He said the Army ordered the study because it wanted to know how much more land is needed to train with those and other new weapons.

The 18th Field Artillery Brigade, which is stationed at Fort Bragg, is armed with a multiple launched rocket system which has a range of more than 40 kilometers, he said. Fort Bragg, at its greatest length and width, is only 26 kilometers by 13 kilometers.

Hibst said the Hellfire missile, an anti-tank missile that is fired from an attack helicopter, has a range of about 15,000 meters, severely limiting other training that can be scheduled at the same time.

He also said troops are more mobile. The Blackhawk helicopter carries 14 troops, instead of the nine carried by the old Huey helicopter, and the Blackhawk carries them further and faster, he said.

The report said, "XVIII Airborne Corps units would be better trained ... if more training land were available. Under current conditions, the most critical impact is the inability of battalions to conduct realistic maneuvers."

Despite improvements in weaponry and mobility, the report said, Fort Bragg has remained about the same size since it was established in 1918. And thousands of acres can not be used for maneuvers because they are already committed.

The study said increased pressure from nearby civilian communities to cut down on noise had resulted in the restricting of firing of tanks and medium artillery from eastern portions of the range.

The proximity of public highways restricts use of other parts of Fort Bragg. For example, Hibst said units can maneuver, but can't fire, on the 12,650-acre tract acquired in 1986 because a state road slices through that property.

"So we'll never be able to shoot over there," he said.

IN THE STATE

Copter Crashes

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A U.S. Army helicopter with nine people aboard — including Special Forces troops — crash-landed in front of a Charlotte office building, about 200 feet from hundreds of Boy Scouts, authorities said.

No one was hurt, but some observers were showered with leaves, splintered wood and debris when the chopper's rotor cut down a tree about 25 feet high and 8 inches in diameter.

"That's about as close a call as I've had," said Mecklenburg County Emergency Medical Techicnian Steve Mauney, 26, a bystander who dived for cover when the Blackhawk UH60 hit the ground about 20 feet away from him.

"It's about as close as I've come to buying the farm," Mauney said.

The accident happened about 4 p.m. Friday on the lawn on of the Equitable Building near SouthPark Mall, where a joint scout and military aircraft show opened this weekend.

The helicopter, which roared at treetop level down Morrison Boulevard, was supposed to pull up and hover while four members of Fort Bragg's Seventh Special Forces group descended on ropes to the ground, carrying a letter of greetings from Gov. Jim Martin.

Witnesses said the helicopter was settling near treetops at the western edge of the lawn when it suddenly dropped about 20 feet to the ground.

Recount Appeal

ASHEVILLE (AP) — Rep. Jim Hughes of Avery County is appealing a recount in the 46th House District Republican primary that apparently gave Lenoir lawyer David Flaherty Jr. a one-vote victory over the incumbent.

The recount reversed what had appeared to be a 24-vote victory for Hughes in the May 3 primary. The Avery County Board of Elections set a hearing Friday for May 21 on a request by Hughes that it recount the Avery ballots for the second time since the primary elections.

Flaherty is complaining that the hearing is improper, and the result may be influenced by the fact that one of the Avery elections board members works for Hughes.

"What are we going to do if we have a recount and I don't like (the results)? Are we going to have another recount, and if (Hughes) doesn't like it, have another one, ad nauseum?" Flaherty said. "I don't dislike Jim Hughes, but I've got a real problem with the way things are going."

Avery elections board member Tom Perry is office manager for Hughes' Pixie Motor Inn in Linville. Flaherty said the relationship creates "a good likelihood of a conflict of interest" for Perry, but Perry says he sees nothing improper.

Road Contracts

BEAUFORT, N.C. (AP) — The state Board of Transportation has approved $33 million in construction contracts, including construction of a four-lane section of U.S. 64 from Rocky Mount to Tarboro and bridges across the Roanoke River near Williamston.

The new section of U.S. 64, along with the two bridges carrying U.S. 13 and U.S. 17 over the Roanoke River, are part of a system of strategic highway corridors approved by the board last year to link all sections of the state.

The board unanimously approved a $7.4 million contract to Adams Construction Co. of Roanoke, Va., to grade and pave a new 13.8-mile section of U.S. 64 from Rocky Mount to U.S. 258 at Tarboro.

The board awarded a $9.7 million contract to Carolina Bridge Co. for the two bridges linking Bertie and Martin counties at Williamston.

The board also approved a $6.3 million contract to Barnhill Contracting Co. to pave the next phase of Fayetteville's Central Business District Loop.

In other matters, Neal Lewis, executive director of the Carteret County Chamber of Commerce, told the board that a top priority for the coast was the widening to four lanes of all sections of U.S. 70 between Morehead City and Raleigh and all of U.S. 17.

Records Probed

CARRBORO, N.C. (AP) — An attorney hired to look into the dealings of Carrboro's ArtsCenter has found evidence of sloppy record-keeping, poor legal advice and bad financial decisions, but no evidence of illegalities.

At question are the dealings of the ArtsCenter with a group called Main Street Partners over the former supermarket on Main Street that houses the ArtsCenter.

A central issue is why did the ArtsCenter — once a member of the Main Street Partners — spend $700,000 to renovate half of the shopping center and then drop out of the partnership to become a tenant in the improved building?

That move, attorney Grainger Barrett suggested, has left the tenant ArtsCenter with "substantially similar obligations as an owner without the benefits."

Shinn Asking Judge For Figure On PTL

CHARLOTTE (AP) — George Shinn, the Charlotte businessman who is considering buying PTL, said he wants U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Rufus Reynolds to tell him how much he would have to pay.

"I'm going to get him to make some recommendations," Shinn said. "It would be embarrassing to me if I put forward a proposal and the judge turned it down."

Shinn, owner of the Charlotte Hornets NBA team and the Charlotte Knights minor league baseball team, announced earlier this week he wants PTL's 2,200 acres, just across the South Carolina line, for a sports complex that would include a new ballpark for the Knights as well as a training facility for the Hornets.

So far, he said, although he and PTL trustee David Clark have agreed to pursue the arrangement, neither has mentioned a price.

PTL owes as much as $130 million to creditors, but Shinn suggested Friday that some creditors would have to settle for as little as 50 cents on the dollar.

He said he has adequate financial backing to pursue such a purchase. His two NBA partners, auto dealer Rick Hendrick and Charlotte TV executive Cy Bahakel, have agreed to participate, Shinn said.

Hendrick, whose holdings include 25 auto dealerships, confirmed that eh and Shinn discussed possibilities for the PTL property Thursday and said he would invest in the venture, if asked.

"All he's got to do is call me," Hendrick told The Charlotte Observer. "George isn't going to do it if it doesn't make sense."

Shinn indicated he isn't inclined to put up a huge amount of cash. "I'm not going to borrow money to pay creditors," he said.

He repeated Friday that an essential part of the deal is for York County, S.C., to chip in $12 million to build the baseball park, and to build a six-lane highway to connect the park to Interstate 77.

If York County fails to come through with the money, Shinn said, "That would probably shoot the whole thing apart."

PTL plans to file on Monday a bankruptcy reorganization plan that essentially puts up for sale everything the financially troubled TV ministry owns. A new tax-exempt ministry, to be called Heritage Ministry, would lease the facilities it needs to carry on its present religious functions, incluidng religious broadcasting over the PTL satellite network.

Gays Shout At Dukakis In LA; Bush Hears Reagan Criticism

By RICHARD L. VERNACI
Associated Press Writer

Democrat Michael Dukakis was heckled Saturday by gay political activists over his stand on their rights to be foster parents, while Republican George Bush fended off a corporate executive's criticism of Reagan administration policies on taxes and trade.

Both parties' presidential frontrunners were spending the weekend campaigning in the West, where the the bulk of the final round of primaries will be held in the next two weeks.

Dukakis, speaking to several dozen homosexual activists at a political action committee meeting in Los Angeles, promised, "You're going to be deeply involved in what we do."

But the Massachusetts governor was challenged over a policy in his state giving low priority to homosexual couples who want to be foster parents.

Dukakis said he favored the Massachusetts policy "because I think it's best, all things being equal, for a child to grow up in a household with a mother and father and other children."

His defense of that policy was met with some hisses from the crowd and occasional shouts of protest. One man shouted, "bigot," and another yelled, "You're anti-gay. Why don't you admit it?"

Dukakis later shrugged off the hostile reception, saying, "It was lively. That's what democracy is all about."

His aides, nevertheless, were pleased with the way the meeting went. "I thought it was very good, very open," said Alice Travis, national political coordinator for the campaign.

Meanwhile, Bush toured an Intel microchip plant in Oregon, where the company's board chairman, Robert Noyce, told the vice president of a need for higher taxes and for President Reagan to sign the trade bill.

"I don't think that there is any chance of a balanced budget without new taxes," said Noyce.

Reagan on Saturday repeated his vow to veto a trade bill passed by Congress because of a provision requiring large companies to notify employees in advance of plant closings.

"The plant-closing aspect of the trade bill does not seem onerous to us," Noyce said. "It is no less than we would do in any case."

Bush said he was not swayed by Noyce's arguments.

The vice president also sought to take the high ground on the issue of the environment, saying, "For too long we have given away the playing field to the Democrats on the environment. I want to make the environment a Republican issue."

The next two weeks mark the close to the primary season with Oregon's primary on Tuesday, followed a week later with primaries in California, New Jersey, New Mexico and Montana.

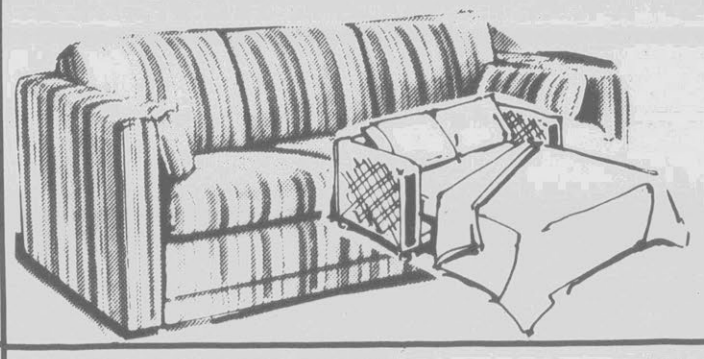

In Arizona, ousted Gov. Evan Mecham, who was removed from office by a state Senate impeachment trial and faces still another trial on criminal charges, was selected as an at-large delegate to the Republican National Convention. No presidential candidate was claiming him, and other state politicians were openly hostile toward his candidacy.

Pentagon Opposed Drug War Role For Military

By TIM AHERN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The decision by Congress to order the military into the war on drugs came despite warnings from Pentagon leaders that soldiers aren't trained for civilian law enforcement and fears it may blur the line between military and civilian authority.

"Our people are not trained to read Miranda rights. They are trained to shoot to kill," Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci told Congress last week.

Sen. Ted Steven, R-Alaska, said, "The military is uncomfortable with this, that's true, and I think there are very tricky questions here, but they have to realize that the American public wants them to help."

"There's a war going on against our people, a war of drugs, and we need the military's help in fighting that war," said Stevens.

Two weeks ago, the House voted 385-23 to order President Reagan to have the military seal off U.S. borders against drug trafficking.

Last Friday, the Senate voted 83-6 to order an expanded military role, including arrest powers for Navy officers aboard warships that stop drug boats in international waters.

Both votes approved amendments to the separate Pentagon budget bills passed by each chamber. The bills now go to a House-Senate conference to reconcile differences, including the military-drug provisions.

Carlucci and other Pentagon officials have outlined two major fears about expanding the military's role in the drug fight. One is practical and the other legal.

The practical objection is that having the military fight drugs takes away from the Pentagon's main task of defending the United States against military threats.

The legal objection arises from the nation's traditional separation between military and civilian authority. That separation is most clearly spelled out by the Posse Comitatus Act, an 1878 law which bans the military from enforcing civilian laws.

"The military are not trained for the law enforcement mission," Carlucci said last week. "To suddenly tell them you're in law enforcement, you have to shift the entire focus, the training... There's a major difference between military and police work."

Pentagon spokesman Dan Howard noted that devoting military resources to drug enforcement means those resources will have to be taken from somewhere else and "that can affect the readiness of this country to defend itself."

The two fears are legitimate, noted Stevens and other supporters of an expanded military role.

"I don't think we're really blurring the line too much," he said. "Any arrests the military would make would be on the high seas, in international waters, where a member of the military has the same arrest power that any citizen does."

As for the effect on the military's readiness to fight, Stevens noted, "I believe that's something that we're going to have to closely watch, and if there is an effect on readiness, then we'll have to deal with that. But they have to be ready to help this country fight a war that's already going on, a war against drugs."

Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, said, "I think it's very troubling to be using the military this way, and one must be very careful because you run into all sorts of potential legal problems about the separation of the civilian and the military."

"There are also potential problems with readiness," said Aspin. "The military is trained for specific roles and missions and to the extent you take them from those missions, you detract from readiness."

But "there is tremendous pressure to act," Aspin noted. "People want something done and the pressure is growing."

Sens. Bob Graham, D-Fla., and Pete Wilson, R-Calif., said they understood the military's objections, particularly on legal issues. But both are from states with long international borders and severe trafficking problems, and they said those facts override the fears.

"We have to stop the drugs before they get into the country," said Wilson. "We need to stop them on the seas or in the air. Local law enforcement is being overwhelmed by a flood of drugs. Once it gets into the United States, it is immeasurably more difficult to control."

Graham said, "this nation faces a terribly, terribly serious drug problem. I think that there is a narrow, specific role for arrests by the military in international waters. They have the resources to do this."

Rally Held For Family Legislation

WASHINGTON (AP) — People pushing baby strollers, holding toddlers and carrying union signs gathered Saturday near the Washington Monument in support of so-called "family" legislation for working parents and the elderly.

"Hurrah, hurrah for the American family," said Rep. Claude Pepper, D-Fla., 87, the oldest member of Congress and a champion of bills to expand job and medical benefits for working parents and senior citizens.

The rally was sponsored by a coalition of labor organizations, and religious, civil rights and women's groups. About 3,000 people were in attendance, according to Officer Maria Gonzalez of the U.S. Park Police.

"Let us rededicate ourselves to the sanctity, to the nobility and the well-being of the American family, the base of our great society, the base and strength of our great America," said Pepper, as rally-goers cheered.

The event at Washington's big outdoor pedestrian mall featured entertainment for the children, such as a Chinese lion dance and trampolines. Adults marched with union signs or set up picnics on the grass.

Bills now pending in Congress would require businesses to give unpaid leave to workers with a newborn, newly adopted or seriously ill child and provide home health care for the chronically ill.

Coast Guard Seizes Yacht Used By Hart, Rice On Bahamas Trip

By A.J. DICKERSON
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The luxury yacht Monkey Business, which ferried former presidential candidate Gary Hart to the Bahamas with model Donna Rice, was seized Saturday when U.S. Coast Guard officers found marijuana on it, officials said.

"They found one gram of marijuana, that's one-twenty-eighth of an ounce. According to 'Zero Tolerance,' if we find enough to test positive it's enough to seize the vesssel," said Petty Officer Dan Vogeley.

"The one gram of marijuana tested positive," he said.

The 82-foot yacht was boarded during a routine safety check about 22 miles northwest of the Bahamian island of Bimini, and a member of the boarding party spotted rolling papers used to make marijuana cigarettes.

"We consider that probable cause," said Vogely. A further search uncovered a single joint of marijuana in the pocket of a jacket hanging in a closet.

The four people on board, whose names were not released, have not been arrested because the marijuana has not been linked to anybody, Vogeley said.

The cutter Cape Shoalwater escorted the Monkey Business to the Coast Guard's base here. Vogeley said the yacht, worth at least $1 million, is currently registered to Turnberry Isle Marina, and the four crewmembers were wearing Turnberry Isle t-shirts.

When Hart, his friend William Broadhurst, Ms. Rice and her friend Lynn Armandt took their trip in March 1987 to Bimini, about 55 miles east of Miami, the chartered yacht was owned by millionaire developer Donald Soffer and kept at Turnberry Isle in North Miami Beach.

Hart withdrew from the race for the 1988 Democratic presidential nomination on May 8, 1987, only weeks after he had announced his candidacy, when The Miami Herald revealed his liaison with Ms. Rice.

Hart, who also had Ms. Rice as a weekend guest at his home in Washington, maintained that the relationship and the trip to Bimini were innocent. He eventually reentered the race, but did not do well and finally withdrew again.

The multidecked, aluminum-hulled motor yacht with a hot tub and a bar adorned with an Oriental rug has a flashy history beyond presidential politics.

Celebrities who have visited the Monkey Business' rosewood-paneled staterooms include Elizabeth Taylor, Jack Nicholson, Lucille Ball, Elton John, Julio Iglesias and James Caan.

Zero Tolerance is the Reagan administration's new get-tough policy under which any drug conveyance can be confiscated and may be auctioned off after a hearing. The quantity of drugs does not matter.

For example, the $2.5 million, 133-foot Ark Royal was confiscated off Key West on May 7 when less than a teaspoon of marijuana was found aboard.

The yacht was returned last week after Michael Rogerson, president of the California-based company that owns the boat, paid a $1,600 fine.

The Zero Tolerance policy was announced in Maimi two weeks ago by Transportation Secretary James Burnley. It has been in effect since April 11.

YACHT SEIZED — Coast Guardsmen leave the luxury yacht Monkey Business after docking the vessel Saturday at the Miami Beach Coast Guard station in Florida. The yacht, which ferried former presidential candidate Gary Hart and model Donna Rice to the Bahamas, was seized on the high seas after marijuana was found aboard. There were four crewmen on the yacht at the time, according to the Coast Guard. (AP Laserphoto)

Book Says Ted Kennedy Wanted To Concoct Story About Kopechne

CHRISTOPHER CALLAHAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the hours after his car plunged off the bridge at Chappaquiddick, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy wanted to tell police that Mary Jo Kopechne was alone in the car, according to a new book about the accident.

In an account attributed to Kennedy cousin Joseph Gargan, Kennedy told Gargan and a friend, Paul Markham, the morning after the accident that "I'm going to say that Mary Jo was driving." Kopechne drowned in the accident, which has shadowed Kennedy's political career for 19 years.

The book, by Leo Damore, is "Senatorial Privilege: The Chappaquiddick Coverup," and is purportedly based, in part, on the first extensive interviews Gargan has ever given for publication. Gargan and Markham went with Kennedy to the bridge shortly after the accident to try to rescue Kopechne from the submerged car.

A statement issued by Kennedy spokesman Jeff Smith said: "As the record shows, no reputable publisher would touch this book. The charges about senator Kennedy are false. The book is an irresponsible rehash of all the old rumor and innuendo, and we have no intention of making any further comment."

Gargan, a lawyer who is now a member of the Massachusetts state Insurance Division's Board of Appeals, did not return repeated telephone calls over the past week. Contacted recently by the Cape Cod Times, he said: "My God, that was 19 years ago. It's just not worthy of discussing anymore."

The book is being published by Regnery Gateway, a conservative publishing house based in Washington, after being rejected by a number of New York publishers. Damore, of Old Saybrook, Conn., is a former Cape Cod resident who has written several books, including a flattering account of John F. Kennedy's years on the cape.

Random House had given Damore a $250,000 contract, but cancelled it, saying an early version of the book was too unwieldy and that the author failed to provide tape recordings to authenticate the Gargan interviews. Penthouse magazine canceled an excerpt plan on ground that Damore couldn't verify key parts of the Gargan interviews.

But Jimmy Smith, a former Kennedy campaign aide and now a U.S. magistrate on Cape Cod, said in a telephone interview that he was present for nearly all of the Damore-Gargan sessions, in 1983. He declined to go over specifics, but vouched for the book's accuracy. Gargan also read the book and made corrections prior to publication, Smith said.

According to Damore, Gargan told him Kennedy concocted the proposal that authorities be told Kopechne was alone in the senator's Oldsmobile when it plunged off tiny Dike Bridge over an inlet on the east side of the Massachusetts island.

The accident occurred the weekend of July 18-19, 1969. Kopechne was one of six women known as the "boiler room girls" who had worked on Robert F. Kennedy's 1968 presidential campaigns and who attended a party Gargan had organized.

"Kennedy was having alternative ideas about the situation," wrote author Damore. "Why couldn't Mary Jo have been driving the car? Why couldn't she have let him off and driven to the ferry herself and made a wrong turn?"

"Kennedy asked to be brought back to the cottage to establish the story. After a while he could leave. Kennedy suggested that when he was back (in Edgartown), Gargan could 'discover' the accident and report to police that Mary Jo had been alone in the car."

But Gargan purportedly rejected the idea, noting that the trio did not even know if Miss Kopechne could drive or had a license.

The senator testified at an official inquest that he "had full intention of reporting" the accident when the trio returned to the Chappaquiddick ferry landing and the senator swam back to Edgartown alone.

Syrian Troops Said Preparing To Enter S. Beirut Slum Area

By MOHAMMED SALAM
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Thousands of tank-led Syrian troops rolled down from Lebanon's central mountains Saturday and massed beside the slums of south Beirut, where Western hostages are believed held by pro-Iranian extremists.

More than 4,000 soldiers and 250 tanks and armored personnel carriers were preparing to enter the 16-square-mile slum area, military sources said.

The move followed the conquest of the slums by fundamentalist fighters of the Iranian-allied Hezbollah, or Party of God, in nine days of savage fighting with the pro-Syrian Amal Shiite Moslem militia. Police said 211 people were killed in the violence.

The vanguard of the incoming forces rumbled across south Beirut's Ouzai coastal highway at 5 p.m. in 48 T-55 Soviet-made tanks with gunners atop their swinging turrets.

They were led by Brig. Gen. Ghazi Kenaan, Syria's military intelligence chief in Lebanon, and Maj. Gen. Saeed Beirakdar, commander in chief of the Syrian forces in Lebanon.

Both headed the battalion in a chauffeured, bulletproof, dark blue Mercedes. Truckloads of infantrymen and ammunition and jeeps mounted with 106mm recoilless guns streamed in afterwards.

Reporters and photographers watching from a distance were blocked from going in by hundreds of plainclothes Syrian secret servicemen at all gateways to the slums.

"They're going to move in peacefully under an agreement being worked out by the presidents of Iran and Syria," a high-ranking Lebanese military source said. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

The reinforcements were coming from the Bekaa Valley, where Syria maintains the bulk of 25,000 troops stationed in eastern and northern Lebanon, the source said.

The move came on the heels of a Syrian threat of "immediate and drastic treatment" after Hezbollah's forces stormed through the last stronghold of Justice Minister Nabih Berri's rival Amal militia.

"After advancing across half of Shiyah, Hezbollah now controls 90 percent of south Beirut," reported a police spokeman, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Police said 20 people were killed and 41 injured Saturday in the house-to-house inter-Shiite Moslem combat and other factional clashes in south Beirut. The latest casualties raised the toll in area fighting to 211 killed and 586 wounded since May 6.

The thud of exploding shells echoed across west Beirut as Hezbollah militiamen advanced across Shiyah and Amal fighters withdrew toward Syrian lines in west Beirut.

Police estimate Hezbollah has 3,000 combatants fighting the pro-Syrian Amal, which has thrown about 6,500 militiamen into the battle.

A ranking official of Syria's 7,500-member contingent in south Beirut said, "Hezbollah has become an aberrant phenomenon on the Lebanese scene.

"This phenomenon is destabilizing tranquility and warrants an immediate and drastic treatment," the official told the Moslem Voice of the Nation radio. The official, unidentified in the broadcast, did not elaborate. As Hezbollah and Amal dueled in Shiyah, rival Palestinian guerrilla factions battled with howitzers and mortars for control of the nearby Bourj el-Barajneh refugee camp.

At the refugee shantytown, seven people were killed and 16 wounded in clashes that broke out early Saturday between guerrillas of Palestine Liberation Organization leader Yasser Arafat's Fatah faction and Col. Saeed Mousa's Syrian-backed Fatah-Uprising, according to a police spokesman, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The south Beirut fighting was taking place in a 16-square-mile enclave where most of the 18 foreign hostages, including nine Americans, are believed held by kidnappers affiliated with Hezbollah.

The Beirut-based magazine Ash-Shiraa said Friday the hostages had been moved from an exposed Hezbollah barracks to the home of Hezbollah's spokesman Sheik Ibrahim al-Amin to prevent their liberation.

Reporters could not reach Amin's home to verify the report because of the intense fighting. A man who answered the telephone there said the clergyman had left for the Bekaa Valley in east Lebanon.

Ash-Shiraa broke the story of secret U.S. arms sales to Iran in November 1986.

Hezbollah said in a statement Saturday it had also occupied Amal's military headquarters on the Beirut airport highway in a fierce overnight assault.

Helmeted Syrian troops manned checkpoints along all roads connecting south Beirut with the city's western sector, police said. The Syrian move was aimed at preventing the Amal-Hezbollah confrontation from spreading to Syria's sphere of influence in west Beirut, they said.

South Beirut remains outside the jurisdiction of the Syrian contingent that deployed in west Beirut in February 1987 after a month of bloody clashes between Amal and Druse warlord Walid Jumblatt's Progressive Socialist Party.

Syria, the main power broker in Lebanon, maintains 25,000 troops in the Bekaa and in north Lebanon under a 1976 Arab League peacekeeping mandate.

Syrian troops Friday shot and killed five Hezbollah fighters who tried to cross into the Syrian-policed Ouzai seaside district. It was the first clash between the two groups in south Beirut.

New Trade Union Formed In Hungary

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Scientists, educators and other intellectuals Saturday formed communist Hungary's first new trade union in 40 years.

It was not known whether the Democratic Union of Scientific Workers would be independent of the government-approved union structure, said a participant who spoke on condition of anonymity.

"You certainly cannot compare the (union) with the Polish trade union Solidarity, because it is a non-political organization," he said. Solidarity, the Soviet bloc's first independent union federation, was banned in 1981.

The participant said about 400 people attended the founding session and elected a 59-member steering committee.

The meeting was to take place at the Science Faculty of Budapest's Eoetvoes Lorand University, but it had to be shifted to the Metro Club, a cultural club, because the university rector withdrew an earlier permit granted by the dean.

Pope Counsels Latin America

TRINIDAD, Bolivia (AP) — From the heights of the Andes to the tropical lowlands, Pope John Paul II has carried a message of self-reliance and prodded Latin Americans to take the initiative in solving their deep social and political problems.

From combating drug trafficking and corruption to stemming the "brain drain," the pope has argued that it is up to the people themselves to do battle.

Addressing a Mass on Saturday in the Amazon basin city of Trinidad, the pope insisted that "constant, intense, honest and efficient work by everyone" was needed to overcome poverty.

"We can't expect everything from outside," he said.

The 12-day tour of Uruguay, Bolivia, Peru and Paraguay is John Paul's ninth pilgrimage to a region he calls "the continent of hope."

Many people along his route have hoped for his help and blessings. About 20 women occupied a Roman Catholic church Saturday in Lima, Peru, to ask the pope to intercede for leftist rebels held in prison.

NOTICE TO WATER SYSTEM CUSTOMERS
BELL ARTHUR WATER CORPORATION
EASTERN PINES WATER CORPORATION
STOKES REGIONAL WATER CORPORATION

The United States Congress amended the Safe Drinking Water Act in 1986. One requirement of this Act is that all people using public water systems should be notified of the potential for exposure to lead through the water distribution system and the plumbing in individual homes. All public water systems are required to make this notification even if there is no evidence of lead contamination and the drinking water complies with the Standards established by EPA.

The State of North Carolina and the North Carolina Section of the American Water Works Association have developed this notice which may be used by public water suppliers in order to comply with the Safe Drinking Water Act. All public water suppliers who do not exceed the EPA established Maximum Contaminant Levels for lead may use this notice to inform their customers of the potential for lead contamination.

WHERE DOES LEAD COME FROM?
Lead accumulates in the body from three potential sources. The major source is food, followed by air and drinking water.

Lead has been a common component of the materials used in the construction of water distribution systems and household plumbing throughout the centuries. While water supply systems do not still use lead joints and services, some older parts of existing systems may contain lead.

Lead is also commonly found in the soldered joints and the plumbing fixtures of older as well as modern homes and buildings. All water, even that which has been treated to reduce corrosiveness, can cause traces of lead to dissolve in the drinking water.

WHAT ARE THE HEALTH EFFECTS OF LEAD?
The United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) sets drinking water standards and has determined that lead is a health concern at certain levels of exposure. There is currently a standard of 0.050 parts per million (ppm). Based on new health information, EPA is likely to lower this standard significantly.

Part of the purpose of this notice is to inform you of the potential adverse health effects of lead. This is being done even though your water may not be in violation of the current standard.

EPA and others are concerned about lead in drinking water. Too much lead in the human body can cause serious damage to the brain, kidneys, nervous system, and red blood cells. The greatest risk, even with short-term exposure, is to young children and pregnant women.

Lead levels in your drinking water are likely to be highest:
-if your home or water system has lead pipes, or
-if your home has copper pipes with lead solder, and
-if the home is less than five years old, or
-if you have soft or acidic water, or
-if water sits in the pipes for several hours.

WHAT CAN I DO ABOUT LEAD?
The American Water Works Association recommends that the cold water tap run for a sufficient amount of time to clear standing water from the line prior to using it for consumption (approximately two to three minutes). This should be done in the morning or after the system has not been in use for several hours.

Since hot water dissolves lead more quickly than cold water, use water from the cold water tap for drinking and cooking purposes, and especially for making baby formula.

When making any repairs or additions to the drinking water lines always insist that "lead-free" solder be used.

WHAT IS THE WATER SYSTEM DOING ABOUT LEAD?
All public water supplies in the United States are monitored for lead and other potential contaminants to insure that Maximum Contaminant Levels established by EPA are not exceeded. In addition, most water suppliers treat the water prior to distribution to reduce corrosiveness which might cause lead to dissolve. The North Carolina building code also now requires that "lead-free" solder be used in drinking water plumbing.

The Department of Human Resources and the public water systems in North Carolina are committed to providing the safest available water to the people of this State.

As required by law, our systems are monitored on a regular basis and we are pleased to inform you that the lead content in our water is well below allowable levels.

If you desire further information on your water supply please contact your water system office or the U.S.E.P.A. at 1-800-426-4791 or order Lead and your Drinking Water from U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, Washington, D.C. 20460.

Youths, Israeli Soldiers Clash; Teen Shot In Leg

By KARIN LAUB
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM (AP) — Masked Arab youths battled Israeli soldiers in the occupied territories Saturday after the military lifted a travel ban. An Arab report said four protesters were savagely beaten by soldiers and dumped on a highway.

A 16-year-old Palestinian was shot in the leg in the fighting between stone-throwing Palestinians and Israeli troops. The clashes came after Israel ended a 29-hour closure of the Gaza Strip and eased travel restrictions in the West Bank.

A top Israeli official said the civil disobedience campaign against Israeli occupation had failed. "We certainly noticed some fatigue," said Shmuel Goren, policy coordinator for the occupied territories.

Gaza City's Ahli Arab Hospital treated seven Palestinians for beating injuries after Saturday's clashes, doctors there said.

An Arab reporter, who spoke on condition of anonymity for fear of reprisals, said four of them were dumped by Israeli soldiers along Gaza's main highway after they were clubbed.

The four, ranging in age from 16 to 22, told the reporter they were detained during protests in Gaza City, then beaten and thrown out of a truck several miles away.

The army said it was checking the reports.

Authorities had sealed Gaza and blocked West Bank Arabs from entering Jerusalem on Friday to prevent Moslems from praying at Jerusalem's main mosques on the last sabbath of the Moslem holy month of Ramadan.

PLO underground leaders, who have orchestrated strikes by Arab merchants, permitted Palestinian shops to open for several hours Saturday so Moslems could stock up for the three-day holiday marking the end of Ramadan.

In Gaza's Shati refugee camp, soldiers opened fire to disperse stone-throwing demonstrators, wounding a 16-year-old Palestinian in the leg, said doctors at Ahli Arab Hospital. The army said it was checking that report.

In the West Bank city of Ramallah, about 60 masked Arab youths erected roadblocks of burning tires and threw stones at soldiers in the main street. Troops dispersed the crowd with tear gas and rubber bullets.

Associated Press photographer Martin Cleaver said he was attacked by two soldiers when he photographed them arresting a teen-age Arab demonstrator.

Cleaver said the soldiers punched him five or six times in the head and kicked him in the thighs. Cleaver said he was not seriously hurt.

The army said it was investigating.

In a radio interview, Goren acknowledged that the majority of the Palestinians still backed the uprising, which has entered its sixth month and claimed the lives of 187 Arabs and two Israelis.

But he said the main objective of the Palestinian civil disobedience campaign — breaking the hold of the military government in the occupied territories with tax boycotts, underground schools, and other means — has failed.

"The main goal of the campaign was to establish alternative systems," Goren said. "This has not happened until today, and we will not allow it to happen."

Israel has occupied the territories since the 1967 Middle East War.

Jerusalem spokesman Menahem Raboy announced that schools in Jerusalem's Arab sector would reopen May 22 after being closed since Feb. 4.

Military officials have said they were considering reopening schools in the West Bank after the end of Ramadan but have not set a date. West Bank schools have been closed for five months.

Schools in Arab east Jerusalem and the occupied territories frequently have been the site of anti-Israeli protests.

Accident Kills Miners

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Ten gold miners plunged to their deaths Saturday after a lift hit an obstruction in the mine shaft, management said.

The Harmony Gold Mine, honored earlier this year for its safety record, said the accident occurred shortly before daybreak when miners being lowered into the mine fell from the door of the lift after it struck "an as yet unknown obstacle."

The company initally reported that six miners were killed and later said search teams found four more bodies. The names of the victims were not released pending notification of relatives.

Harmony, owned by Rand Mines, is near the town of Virgina in the Orange Free State, the centermost of South Africa's four provinces.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Not Consistent

Requests Merit Sharp Scrutiny

For a city manager who stressed frugality and financial efficiency when he arrived in Greenville nine months ago, Greg Knowles' hint for an assistant and his expensive budget requests for his office seem inconsistent and ill-timed.

They should be thoroughly questioned by the City Council as it examines Knowles' first-ever city budget.

A $300 request for a color television, another $1,175 for a desk and furniture, $700 for a typewriter and a $60 a month car phone, plus the possibility of an assistant in the future?

These items sound more like the perfect executive job than the requests of a city manager charged with economically handling public money. For an executive who calls himself a tight financial manager and brags on his sharp pencil, those requests are contrary. And although the expenditures may be necessary, the proposed costs don't add up to frugality befitting public business.

When Knowles came to Greenville less than a year ago he implied he was a penny-pincher and stressed his sleeves-rolled-up approach to managing city government. Now, in his first budget proposal to the City Council, he hints for an assistant? He is on unsteady ground with this suggestion.

First, paying a consultant to tell him he needs help doesn't lend itself to credibility. Second, the city has pressing personnel needs in planning, law enforcement, fire/rescue and public works that take precedent. With these needs in mind, to suggest adding an assistant city manager — paid more than the public works director and the police chief — is debatable.

Third, the city manager's timing for raising this issue and for making costly personal budget requests is questionable. Knowles, in his first year as the city's top administrator, can still be considered an apprentice. Even if Greenville needs an assistant city manager and other accouterments to properly conduct public business, raising the issue after two years or so or experience would be more credible and appropriate.

The City Council has an obligation to scrutinize the budget cautiously to make sure expenditures of public money are judicious. The city needs a reasonable, down-to-earth approach to finances. That was one reason a new city manager was hired. The council should stay that course.

Time For Effort

Greenhouse Effect Must Be Reversed

A major concern of North Carolina has been protecting the fragile and beautiful Outer Banks.

Now an oceanside playground of the East coast, the Outer Banks are vulnerable to the sea and, in fact, have been shifted about through the centuries. Even today one major storm can open or close inlets.

In less than 40 years, however, the Outer Banks could be history if the warming trend caused by the greenhouse effect continues as is predicted.

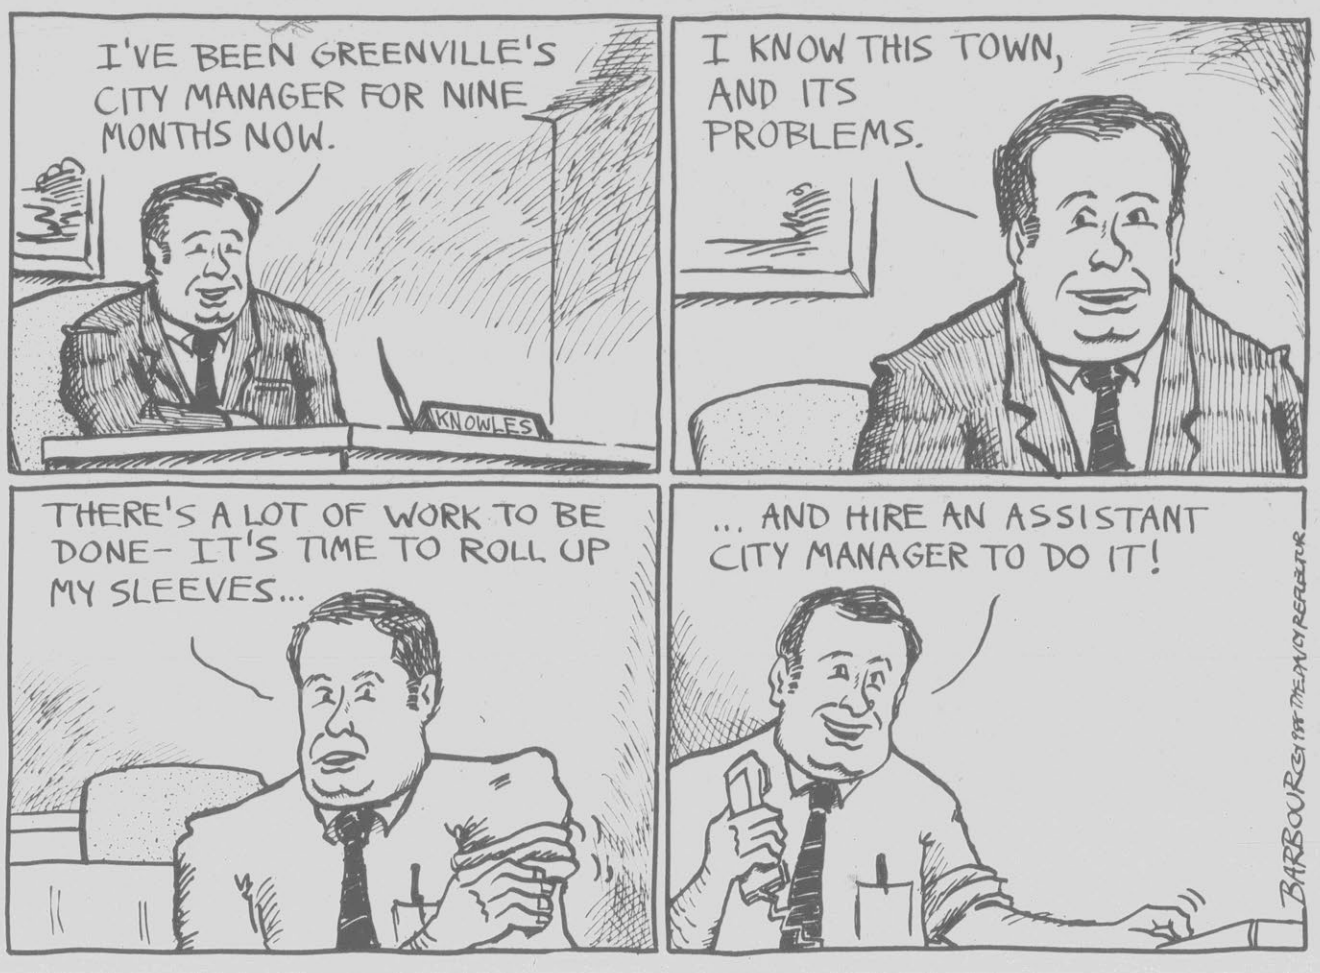

And where would the shoreline be? Scientists at a workshop in Beaufort last week say that Greenville and Williamston could be under water by the year 2025. Stanley Riggs of East Carolina University said Dare County will become the Pamlico Sound.

The greenhouse effect is caused as emissions are sent into the atmosphere. The gases trap the heat from the sun which eventually warms up the atmosphere. The warming trend shrinks the polar ice cap. The resulting rise in sea level could make underwater cities out of Greenville and Williamston.

As disastrous as all that would be, the disappearance of wetlands and salt marshes would be equally devastating. The sea life and wildlife which now abound in the sound areas would be totally changed. Crabs, crawfish and shrimp and most varieties of fish which now live in the protected waters would be destroyed.

If that sounds like Armageddon for the Coastal Plains area, that is not far from wrong. And not only would eastern North Carolina be affected but every coastal area in the world would likely feel the changes.

The answer, of course, is to reverse the greenhouse effect, if that is possible. Stringent laws will be necessary and they will have to be applied internationally. Affluent nations might have to financially assist Third World countries in reducing air pollution. If it's not too late, the civilized world had certainly better try.

A Little Luck Doesn't Hurt

Sunday Morning Notes

If the first lady of the land consulted astrologists to determine the presidential movements, she is not alone in seeking good fortune and good luck in unconventional ways.

For many years it was a rare southern community who didn't have its fortune teller who, for a fee, would tell a damsel she was soon to meet a dark, handsome stranger who would change her life in the best of ways.

In a depression-wracked nation the fortune teller, who billed herself as a gypsy, would promise money would be forthcoming, or at least an automobile. There were also things to beware of, such as a coveting relative, or a man driving a shiny new car.

Of course, those who believed in astrology scoffed at fortune tellers. Astrology was supposed to be a science.

Anyway, this ancient activity grew in sophistication while fortune telling faded. Now the stars have their favorite astrologist. For the rest of us, virtually every newspaper carries a daily horoscope and, while we might not believe, there are few of us who don't know our sign and few who don't read the horoscope to see what the stars hold for us.

It's not my purpose here to argue the validity of astrology. President Reagan has been described as the luckiest president ever, and if astrology had anything to do with it I'd like some of his luck.

In the larger picture it is human nature to look to some outside force as an influence on our lives. That way we can blame our bad fortune on it. Or we can seek to determine how these unseen forces affect us in an effort to change our luck.

It can be simple thought process. Even the most educated of us are aware that a black cat crossing one's path is bad luck. So is walking under a ladder. And heaven help us if we break a mirror. That's seven years bad luck.

In the south, where poverty and accompanying disease were so depressing for many decades, anything that promised better times was welcomed.

All that is either harmless, or if it works for you, so much the better.

Then there is the school that holds that hard work and positive thinking are the way to improve one's lot in life. No superstition here, and that philosophy has often worked for many who follow it. Not always, though. Depression era farmers abounded who worked from sunup to sundown only to see their farms sold at the courthouse door. And in recent years news stories have come out of the midwest of farms being sold due to depressed prices.

To the editor:

As most citizens of eastern North Carolina are aware, Pitt County Memorial Hospital is attempting to add 140 beds to its hospital for tertiary care teaching and additional educational beds. Being a private practice physician in this community for eight years, I am finding it increasingly more difficult to give optimum care to those residents who should benefit most from this hospital, those in Pitt County and Greenville.

On several occasions our orthopedic practice has had several patients denied admission for elective surgery simply because there were no beds in the hospital for elective admissions. All beds were being used for acute emergent medical and surgical admissions, as well as patient transfers from outside hospitals.

The medical school has added greatly to our community as well as to our hospital expertise, but it also requires a significant number of beds for the educational and tertiary care of patients sent from surrounding areas. I find it ironic and sad that the patients closest to this hospital seem to have the most difficulty in access to its care.

As we all know, Pitt County Memorial Hospital has applied for a certificate of need which will require a political decision rather than a medical decision in regards to its approval for the additional beds. I urge all citizens of eastern North Carolina, especially those of Greenville and Pitt County, to please become politically active and voice their opinion to their political representatives in support of the hospital addition. I also think that The Daily Reflector, being the voice of Greenville and Pitt County, should be considerably more active in its support of the hospital's request for additional beds.

To the editor:

I am writing in reference to the front page article of Monday, May 9, by Martin Crutsinger of the Associated Press titled, "Study Recommends New International Money Plan." Folks reading this article should be aware of the goals of the members of the Institute of International Economics who developed the study mentioned in this article. These people are the dedicated architects of a scheme for a one-world currency and a supranational bank which their benefactors will control.

How does this affect you, a citizen of the United States of America? First, turn to an almost universally ignored document. The very core of our being! The Constitution of the United States of America. Article I, Section 8, gives the power to Congress from the people to coin money and regulate the value thereof. Section 10 of Article I prohibits any state from making anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts.

It is imperative that all responsible citizens (which should be all of us) by writing or other personal communication bring to the attention of our elected officials in the Congress the urgent need to restore honest money to these United States of America as ordered by the Constitution. The present system we are using is obviously evident as not following the precepts of the law of the land, our Constitution. Where has it brought us? To a sinking paper currency dollar which will continue to sink. In 20 shorts years, it has lost 68 percent of its value. Using a 1940 dollar as a standard of 100 cents, the current paper currency we are using is worth four cents.

There is little time left to prevent us from having a terrible disaster to the economic structure. The international money plan is not in the best interests of the citizens of these United States of America. Contact your elected officials in the Congress, House and Senate now!

Donald Regan's Real Record

Rowland Evans & Robert Novak

WASHINGTON — Obscured by astrological revelations and Nancy-bashing is Donald T. Regan's exaggerated self-description in his memoir as President Reagan's anti-tax guardian, a rewriting of history that reveals both shortcomings and victories of this administration.

While Regan was indeed the last senior official to succumb to each recurring tax increase virus, succumb he usually did. Although more faithful to the president's wishes than his colleagues, he adhered to no ideological standard. When Reagan surrendered to the taxers, Regan's white flag also went up.

Regan's heroic status with a few conservatives for being savaged because he embraced Reaganism stands on shaky ground. Coming here seven years ago as a Wall Streeter recommended by William Casey and unknown to the new president, he typified non-doctrinal policymakers who slowed the Reagan Revolution. The fact that his often sulfurous "For the Record" paints Don Regan as a militant supply-sider attests to the triumph of the Revolution's ideas.

Regan unleashes full fury on the 1982 Tax Equity and Fiscal Reform Act (TEFRA), the $100 billion tax increase decreed by the administration's "Gang of 17" negotiations with Congress. He writes that "economically unsophisticated" Reagan aides were overcome by the "perfidy" of Speaker Tip O'Neill.

"The president was snookered into a deal that gave Congress — and, incidentally, Chief-of-Staff James Baker and OMB Director David Stockman — what they wanted all along: more taxes," Regan continues. "It did not surprise me that spending — and the deficit — increased as a result."

No one today can remember Regan saying those words, either during or after the Gang of 17 met. In fact, a dozen actors in that drama questioned by us recall hardly anything at all about the secretary of the treasury during that drama. "What he always tried to do was read the old man," ex-White House aide Ed Rollins told us. "Where the old man was, he was."

Regan began 1982 with a premature statement that economic recovery was at hand. Shortly thereafter, Lawrence Kudlow, then OMB's chief economist and Stockman henchman, gave senior officials a gloomy economic assessment that laid the groundwork for higher taxes. Instead of fighting, Regan wrote a mash note (later framed on the wall of Kudlow's Wall Street office) agreeing with his analysis and complimenting him for a "good job."

Regan is not bashful in claiming credit for the 1986 tax reform, but here, too, the record shows otherwise. His rejection of supply-side revenue projections and acceptance of anti-business provisions pushed by Treasury's bureaucracy nearly killed the project. Not until Sen. Robert Packwood dramatically cut tax rates did the reform win enough Republican support to pass.

"For the Record" confirms that Regan rejected a White House recommendation for supply-sider Lewis Lehrman to be deputy secretary because of fear "he would not be content to take a back seat." However, as soon as he discovered the new president's agenda, Regan tried to adhere to it, a faithfulness alien to Stockman and, to a lesser extent, Baker and his deputy, Richard G. Darman.

Republicans Take Leave Of Census In Counting Dispute

Dirk Olin

WASHINGTON — In the information age, we assume that the federal government knows the who, what, when and where of every single citizen. Not true: The U.S. Census Bureau admits that it missed roughly 5 percent to 6 percent of minorities in 1980, and even 1 percent to 2 percent of the rest.

No count is foolproof, of course. But a widely accepted technique for double-checking is now available to help counters more accurately estimate who is missed by the census. Such precision is vital to a country that bases both its congressional districts and federal budget blueprints on the population survey. As of last fall the Census Bureau was preparing to use a small, but representative, follow-up survey to gauge how many citizens remain uncounted by the 1990 enumeration.

The problem, however is that the Department of Commerce blocked the use of readjustment. Departmental officials claimed that the follow-up was "controversial." It is not hard to discern a GOP motive for blocking the statistical adjustment, since the Reagan administration doesn't much like the economics nor the politics that hidden Americans are likely to represent.

The poor and the homeless — those lost in rural shacks and urban tenements — do more than smudge the administration's economic image. They do more than represent a potential drain on federal coffers. They tend to vote Democratic.

On Capitol Hill, some members have responded by fighting politics with politics. Rep. Mervyn M. Dymally, D-Calif., and Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., have begun pushing a bill that would force the Census Bureau to use the double-check.

The lawmakers are championing their own states' political agendas, of course. New York, which has witnessed a continuing population decline, is fighting a rear-guard action to prevent the loss of a third congressional seat after the 1990 census. Two House seats from New York already seem destined for extinction.

California, by contrast, is growing fast and is slated to receive greater congressional representation. At least three seats are likely to be added to the current 45-member delegation. A fourth could come after a double-check turns up extra Californians.

The effect on Rust Belt states such as Michigan and Illinois is less clear. Both have significant and concentrated minority populations; both are shrinking and in danger of losing House seats. But whether their congressional delegations will be convinced that a census readjustment would help remains to be seen.

Whichever states are ultimately affected, the common assumption is that the majority of new-found citizens will increase population counts within Democratic strongholds. And, while the amounts in dispute might vary, nobody denies that the impact on federal expenditures could be enormous. With an estimated 500,000 of its residents missed by the 1980 census, for example, New York City complains that it has lost federal revenue-sharing that totals between $26 million and $52 million each year.

The politics of people-counting has been with us for millennia. Long before the decree went out from Caesar Augustus that all the world should be enrolled, many ancient kingdoms used censuses to exert control over certain segments of society: for taxation, conscription or forcible employment. But just like England's famous Domesday inquest — which was designed to help William the Conquerer figure out who it was he had conquered — most population surveys inadvertently discouraged or intentionally excluded many from being counted. People were afraid of state head-counters, or the state chose to ignore particular heads.

The United States made history in 1790 by creating an ostensibly impartial census as the basis for representative democracy. Article I of the Constitution dictated that House seats and direct taxes would be apportioned according to a census shaped by congressional law.

Enlightened as that development was, it took emancipation to stop the practice of counting a slave as "three-fifths" of a person; American Indians came to be counted only in the 20th century. Subsequently, lawmakers have mandated the confidentiality of responses, penalties for improper disclosure and sundry other elements to fine tune the nation's survey.

Just this decade, Congress bowed to another evolution when it authorized a mid-decade census. House districts still will be redrawn only at the decade, but legislators realized that the high craft of demographics has made interim polling truly vital for governmental planners.

Despite all the improvements, however, every U.S. census has suffered from under-count. No matter how extensive the system of safeguards, certain segments of society continue to evade the pollsters. Poverty, frenetic mobility, simple indifference and outright hostility continue to plague counters.

Which is why -- partisanship and budget deficits notwithstanding — we need continually to improve our best guess of how many folks are really out there. Its historical significance, not to mention the effect on both taxation and representation, is what makes the integrity of our census so important.

In squashing the use of a follow-up survey last October, Commerce Under Secretary Robert Ortner declared that the existing census was 99 percent accurate. Any application of a second poll, he said, would constitute "a threat to the customary process of reapportionment." He called the polling technique "controversial" among statisticians.

Dr. Barbara Bailar knew that was a sham. As the Census Bureau's associate director for statistical standards and methodology, she understood what was really going on. And she resigned.

"I thought it was a purely political decision," she says. "Some people did not want those poor and inner-city and minority categories to be increased. And I think it's obvious that those groups are usually thought of as not voting for the Republican party."

But what about the controversy over the use of a second survey? "The methodology is not really in dispute by statisticians," said Bailar. "It's in dispute by those who are against readjustments."

This is not sour grapes on Bailar's part. Michael Wolter did not resign his post as the Census Bureau's chief of statistical research, yet he agrees that second surveys have been proved effective.

Wolter says that a variety of factors lead to under-counts: fear of government, fear of housing codes or people just plain living in non-standard housing arrangements. As for the accuracy of a follow-up, said Walter: "The consensus, with really only one or two exceptions, is that the methods are available. We can provide an estimate of the total number of people in the country that is closer to the true number than the original census was."

Indeed, the process is quite simple. After the original census, follow-up surveys are taken among a representative sample of some 300,000 households around the country. Pollsters then measure the statistical sliver of previously unfound people who showed up on the second tally. That yields what Wolter calls "a very conservative assumption" of how many were missed first time around.

Evidently, the assumption is not conservative enough for this Administration. But instead of bowing to executive fiat, Congress should mandate use of the double-check, whether or not it benefits members' states; it's just the right thing to do.

Dirk Olin is a former congressional correspondent.

Still Lost In Pittsburgh

Ward Sinclair

PITTSBURGH — There is a theory, skillfully advanced by the evangels of boosterism, that this once-brawny bastion of American heavy industry has weathered the hard times and is reincarnating as an affluent high-tech center ready to take the 21st century by storm.

And in many ways, what is popularly called "Renaissance II" seems to be taking root. Downtown Pittsburgh bears all the earmarks of boom and vitality — new buildings, new businesses, public-works projects.

But the theory does not begin to reckon with the depression of spirit and human hurt that the collapse of Big Steel, coming hand in hand with the recession of the early 1980s, strewed up and down the Monongahela Valley.

"There's the two-cities theory," said Ann Marie Draham, an organizer with the Tristate Conference on Steel, a worker-oriented organization that is trying to salvage something from the wreckage in the valley. "There's the recovering city that has nothing to do with basic manufacturing. And the second city is the rest of us."

Between 1979 and 1985, when the companies systematically shut antiquated mills and looked for bigger profits elsewhere, this area lost more than 58,000 steel jobs and at least 54,500 more jobs in related industries. That doesn't count the groceries, the bars, the service jobs that went by the boards as blue-collar income dried up.

Mill towns such as McKeesport, Duquesne, West Homestead, Homestead, Clairton, South Side, Aliquippa and others have become derelicts: unkempt streets, abandoned businesses, crumbling facades, grayness and gloom. On the river side of each town sits a monstrous old mill, either closed forever or clunking along with a token work force.

Clairton got into such a financial box, with revenues from its wage tax gone, that it disbanded the local police force and turned over law enforcement to the state. West Homestead tried to raise operating funds by purchasing state lottery tickets. Homestead beautified by building brick walls to shield from view the empty lots where businesses once thrived.

The street corners and the impromptu food pantries in these dreary towns tell another side of the story. Daytime idlers stand along the streets, as if awaiting buses that will never arrive. Others lounge on porches or on the front stoops of neighborhood bars. Woebegone jalopies cruise the streets. Lines form at community centers and churches where donated food is handed out.

"They walk around as though they have been poleaxed. There's a lostness in their eyes," said Barney Oursler, an unemployed steel worker who now heads a program aimed at stimulating industrial redevelopment in the Mon Valley. "The lostness strikes anyone who had 15 years or more in those plants. The will is still there, but they start to know not what to do with themselves.

"The folks in these valleys were the quintessence of middle-class America. They went to school, took a job in the mills, went to service, came home to the job in the mills. There were always layoffs in steel, but always short-term," Oursler said.

"But since 1984, when they realized the jobs would never come back, they feel as though they've been forgotten and left out. These are people who were plugged into a social structure — the church, the clubs, even the jobs. There is no money for beer so they avoid the clubs. They can't make donations so they stay away from church. All that is gone for them now."

Oddly enough, notwithstanding all the gloom and doom, nobody is doing much blame-laying. Oursler's group, the Tristate Conference and a recently formed Steel Valley Authority, a consortium of local governments set up to preserve the area's industrial base, express a sort of optimism about the future.

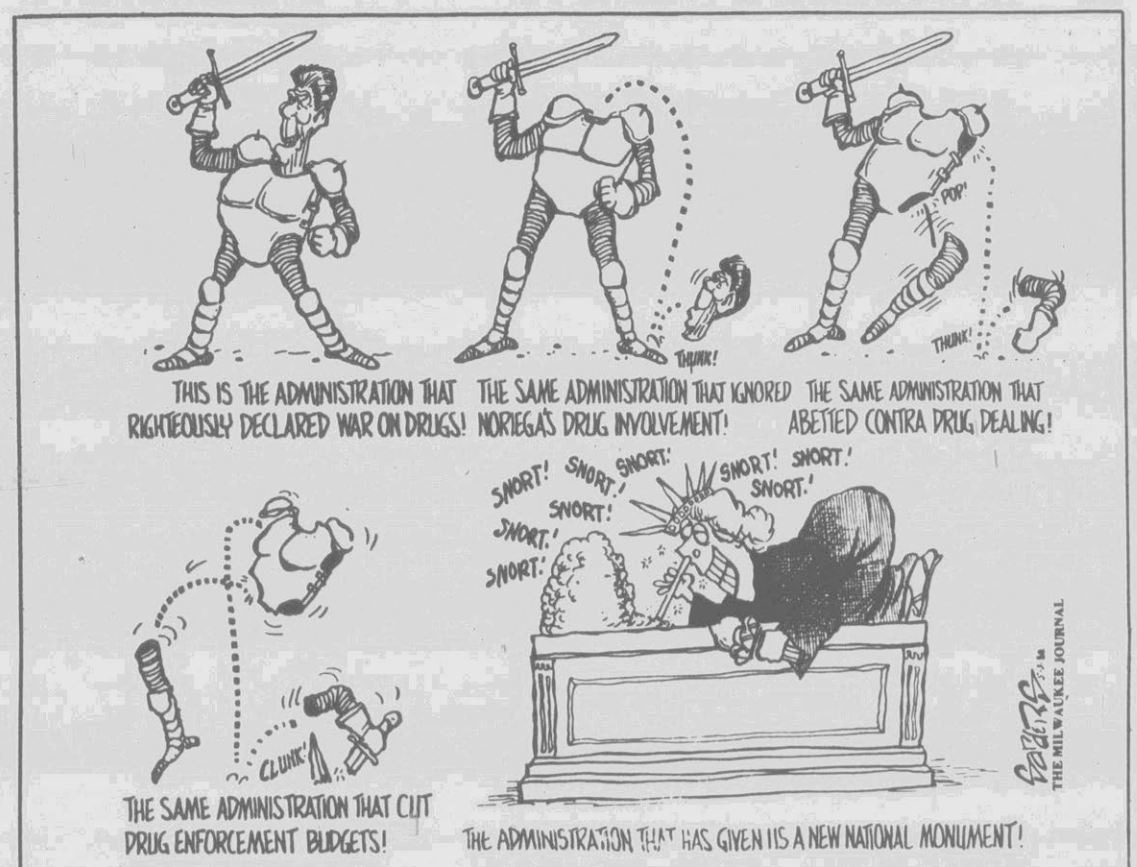

"It's sad, yes," Oursler said, "but if we can turn it around it can be pretty exciting. People see new possibilities because it is clear the companies aren't going to take care of them and the government won't. When they're left in the lurch, they rise to the occasion, take care of themselves."

Even in areas hit hardest by federal budget cuts, the bitterness levels run low. At the Brashear Association, a community center in South Side just across the river from downtown Pittsburgh, there was excitement last week over the news that Barbara Bush, the vice president's wife, planned to visit to talk with tutors in the center's literacy program.

Food-stamp cutbacks, the end of government-surplus cheese and butter donations and an end to a federally funded summer-camp program for low-income children have put heavy new burdens on Brashear. But Chuck Rompala, a center director, said, "The spirit is not broken. I don't think anything would break us. Original South Siders have been through it all. They've come out of it, and they'll come out of it again. That's the spirit around here."

"HEE-HEE! CAN YOU BELIEVE THIS?! RON AND NANCY INFLUENCED BY THE STARS...!"

Is The War On Drugs Folly?

Kurt Schmoke

Has the time come to add America's "war on drugs" to the long list of history's follies? In the view of historian Barbara Tuchman, to qualify as folly, a policy must not only be unsuccessful, it must also be plainly against the interests of those in whose name it is being carried out. And folly has one more characteristic: Nobody wants to recognize it.

Whether the drug policies of the United States have reached the point of folly, I'm not prepared to say. But this much seems apparent: Political maturity, intellectual honesty and justifiable concern about drug-related violence make raising the question long overdue.

This is why I asked the U.S. Conference of Mayors last month to adopt a resolution calling upon Congress to hold hearings on whether to decriminalize narcotics.

The details — which drugs would be legalized, and how and by whom they could be purchased — would be left to Congress and state legislatures to decide after first concluding on the basis of research and testimony that some form of decriminalization is warranted.

Many who oppose decriminalization argue that it will serve as an open invitation to use drugs. If there is evidence to that effect, then it should be dispassionately presented to Congress and other policymakers, but it should not stand in the way of a public debate about decriminalization.

The time has come to admit that the emperor has no clothes. The war on drugs is being lost, notwithstanding President Reagan's recent claim that we are digging our way out. And continuing our present policy — even with more money — is unlikely to make any difference.

There are three basic arguments in favor of decriminalization: libertarianism, economics and health. I don't subscribe to the libertarian view that people should have a right to injure themselves with drugs if they so choose. Drugs — even if decriminalized — also pose a danger to third parties. But the other two arguments are compelling enough for Congress at least to study the question.

•Economics. Just as Prohibition banned something millions of people want, our current drug laws make it illegal to possess a commodity that is in very high demand. As a result, the price of that commodity has soared far beyond its true cost.

This has led to enormous profits from illegal drugs and turned drug trafficking into the criminal enterprise of choice for pushers and manufacturers alike.

During my years as a prosecutor, as I watched drug crime change the character of America's cities, I learned some important lessons.

First, drug traffickers — no matter how high-up or how venal — care very little about the sanctions of the criminal justice system. Going to jail is just part of the cost of doing business. It's a nuisance, not a deterrent.

Second, drug dealers fear one another far more than they fear law enforcement officials. They know that the police must give them due process, but competing drug dealers will kill them at a moment's notice.

Finally, profit is the engine driving drug trafficking. Neither criminal sanctions nor even the competitive business practices (murder, extortion, kidnapping) of their fellow dealers have much, if any, effect on people who trade in drugs.

But take the profit out of their enterprise — and you'll get their attention. Perhaps it's time to fight the crime epidemic associated with drug trafficking by communicating with the drug underground in the only language they understand: Money.

Decriminalization would take the profit out of drugs and greatly reduce, if not eliminate, the drug-related violence that is currently plaguing our streets. Decriminalization will not solve this country's drug abuse problem, but it could solve our most intractable crime problem.

It is very easy for people living in communities where drugs are not a problem (and those are becoming fewer all the time), to argue that drug-related violence cannot justify decriminalization. But if you have to live with that violence day in and day out — as millions of people in large urban areas do — and live in terror of being gunned down, robbed or assaulted, or having the same occur to one of your loved ones, you soon start wanting results.

Taking the profit out of drugs would have a detrimental impact on those who are now producing and selling drugs. Drug lords would no longer risk prison for a commodity that was not making them a profit.

•Health. Some will argue that the public health risks from drugs will only worsen if they are decriminalized. Again, this is a question Congress would need to resolve, but there is every reason to believe that decriminalization would improve public health.

First, violent crime associated with illegal sale of drugs would fall dramatically. For those who doubt that, imagine how violent crime would increase if we once again made the use and sale of alcohol illegal.

Smoking kills over 300,000 people every year, but we have made the policy decision to treat tobacco as a health problem, not a crime problem, and we are making real progress. The number of people smoking continues to fall because of a concerted public education campaign about the health effects of smoking.

There is a no reason that we could not do the same with drugs. And then we could find the money we need to educate our young people on the harmful effects of drugs and treat those who are currently addicted, instead of engaging in a wildly expensive cat-and-mouse game that the mouse is winning 90 percent of the time.

To make matters worse, the Reagan administration has continuously tried to cut drug programs aimed at the prevention and treatment of drug abuse.

Leader Says Woes Caused By System

By ALISON SMALE
Associated Press Writer

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Communist Premier Branko Mikulic on Saturday defied calls for his resignation from Yugoslavia's two most Westernized republics and blamed the nation's economic crisis on an inefficient, outdated system.

In a 75-minute speech to the Federal Assembly, the national parliament, Mikulic denounced Slovenia and Croatia for demanding a vote of no confidence in his government.

In closed debate later, Slovenian and Croatian delegates harshly criticized Mikulic, with one Croatian deputy labeling the premier's speech an insult, the Tanjug news agency reported.

One house of the assembly, the Chamber of Republics and Autonomous Provinces, swiftly backed Mikulic and rejected calls for a no-confidence vote, Tanjug said. Debate on the no-confidence motion continued in the other house, the Federal Chamber.

Slovenia has accused the government of allowing three-digit inflation, a near collapse of the economic and social system and a failure to introduce market-oriented reform.

Mikulic said his government was not contesting the seriousness of the nation's economic situation.

"But ... is it really the consequence of the policy proposed and executed by the government in the last two years?" he asked.

He argued that each government act had been approved by the national parliament and republican assemblies and said replacing the present Communist government with another would not solve the problems.

Slovenia and Croatia, the most advanced republics in this Adriatic nation, instructed their delegations to this weekend's Federal Assembly meeting to attempt to unseat Mikulic's government.

Technically, 56 delegates can topple the government if only the minimum quorum of 111 delegates to the Federal Chamber attend and vote. However, the chamber was packed Saturday, suggesting that Slovenia's and Croatia's 60 delegates would not get the simple majority required to topple Mikulic. There was indication when the vote would take place.

Tanjug said "an occasionally very sharp and polemical debate" took place after the two chambers of parliament met in separate closed sessions to debate the government's fate.

Joze Marolt, a Slovene delegate, recalled that in July 1986 Mikulic submitted what was then dubbed an emergency economic package and warned that Yugoslavia stood before an abyss.

"Today, we are not just in front of the abyss, we are in it," Marolt said.

Elections Set By Mitterrand

PARIS (AP) — President Francois Mitterrand dissolved the National Assembly on Saturday and announced that parliamentary elections would be held June 5 and June 12.

Mitterrand made the announcement in a nationwide television address.

Mitterrand said he made the decision after his new premier, Michel Rocard, informed him "that despite his efforts, he did not believe he could bring together a solid and stable majority that all governments need to carry out their programs well."

Rocard said Friday he had sought support from centrists in the 577-seat Assembly for his government and received a negative response.

In his three-minute address, Mitterrand deplored the fact that "the opening (to the center) that I sought could not be brought about to the extent that I wished. Therefore, it was my duty to draw the appropriate conclusions. A few seconds ago I signed a decree dissolving the National Assembly."

He said the two-round election would be held on the first and second Sundays of June.

Mitterrand was re-elected to a second term May 8 and appointed Rocard his premier after conservative Premier Jacques Chirac, who had run against Mitterrand for president, resigned.

According to an opinion poll to be published Sunday in the Journal du Dimanche, 47 percent of the French favored dissolution of the Assembly, while 28 percent opposed dissolution.

The poll indicated that the Socialists, the largest party in France, would get 41 percent of the vote, 24 percent would go to the neo-Gaullist Rally for the Republic, and 15 percent would go to the center-right Union for French Democracy.

The rest of the vote would go to minor parties on the left and the right, the poll indicated. Nearly 20 percent of those polled said they would not vote.

Richmond Sends Bucs Home Early

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

RICHMOND, Va. — East Carolina reached into its pitching barrel Saturday morning and found not only was it scraping the bottom — there wasn't a great deal left to find there.

As a result, Richmond pounded the Pirates for a 15-2 victory and sent the Pirates reeling to their second straight defeat and eliminated the defending champions from the Colonial Athletic Association's baseball tournament, being played at The Diamond in Richmond.

The Pirates used four hurlers in the game, but none of them were able to slow down the parade of Richmond batters who got on base. The Spiders banged out 12 hits and took advantage of eight walks and four errors to score a CAA tournament record 15 runs in the game.

Friday night, the Pirates had fallen to George Mason, 10-2, as again, the pitching let them down, moving the Patriots along in the winners' bracket of the tournament. (See game story elsewhere in today's sports section.)

Both coaches were surprised by the margin of victory — and by the pitching performances they saw. Richmond's Don Rehman went the distance for the Spiders, allowing eight hits and two earned runs, upping his record to 6-4 on the year. Rehman is the lone Spider pitcher with a winning record, but the two earned runs was less than half his seasonal earned run average.

East Carolina's Brian Berckman took the loss, his fourth in six decisions, and he only lasted one-plus innings, allowing three runs, all earned. Jonathan Jenkins, who had gone three innings the night before against Mason, gave up three earned runs, but a total of seven altogether in just an inning and a third of work as the Spiders bombed the Pirates for eight third inning runs.

"We just weren't able to stop them early," Pirate coach Gary Overton said. "Then, our defense broke down in the third and helped them along.

"Usually at this point in the tournament, most of the teams are out of their better pitching — as we were. Jenkins' work last night obviously affected him today but I knew that if he couldn't stop them, it would be a long day for us."

As it turned out to be.

"They came out swinging the bats and they had some pitching left," Overton continued. "We ran into weaker pitching at this point last year."

Spider coach Ron Atkins was surprised at how well his pitcher did in the game. "I thought maybe he'd give up four or five runs at least," Atkins said. "I though that if we swung the bats like we were capable of, we'd have a chance to win, but I had no idea it would turn out like this, even though they helped it along. Even so, some of those balls that were hit into errors were hard hit."

It really didn't seem to matter as the Spiders scored enough earned runs to have make the difference anyway. Nine of the runs, however, were unearned.

East Carolina's only scoring of the day came in the first inning. With two away, Calvin Brown drew a walk and Jay McGraw doubled to left, scoring Brown all the way from first. McGraw moved on into third on the throw to the plate, scoring on a bunt single down the third base line by John Adams.

But the 2-0 lead was short lived and the Pirates got only three other players past first base the rest of the afternoon. Chris Cauble walked and moved up on a hit by David Ritchie in the second, while John Thomas singled and advanced on a passed ball in the eighth. Ritchie hit a two-out triple in the ninth, but died at third as Steve Godin flew to center for the final out of the game.

By then, it was academic anyway.

Richmond pushed ahead in the bottom of the first and never trailed again. Brian Jordan and Rob Reid both drew walks. Greg Harding then singled to center, driving in Jordan. Andy Malloy followed with a double up the gap in left center, scoring both Reid and Harding for a 3-2 lead. Malloy was thrown out trying to stretch his hit into a triple.

Then, in the third, the Spiders broke it open, scoring eight big runs for an 11-2 lead.

Reid opened with a single and Harding arrived on an error. Malloy was safe on an infield hit, loading the bases. With one down, Don Vossler hit a two-run single and David Boynton followed with a two-run double. Daniel Paule walked and Mike Zambo reached on an error, scoring Boynton. Jordan doubled to drive in Paule and Reid's sacrifice fly scored Zambo. Harding closed out out with a double, plating Jordan with the final run of the inning.

Four more crossed in the fifth to close it out. With one down, Zambo walked and Jordan was safe on an error. Both moved up on a wild pitch and Reid hit another sacrifice fly, scoring Zambo. Walks to Harding and Malloy loaded the bases and reliever Tim Langdon unleashed a wild pitch to score Jordan. Pete Engels followed with a two-run single, finishing it off.

Malloy led the Richmond hitting with three while Reid and Harding each had two. Adams and Ritchie each had two for the Pirates.

Richmond, with the win, improves its record to 24-32, and was to face the loser of the day's second game between the two unbeatens, James Madison and George Mason, later Saturday night. The winner of that game, along with the winner of the Saturday afternoon game, move into Sunday's championship round.

The Pirates end their year with a 33-14 record, and Overton said he considered it a successful year. "I'm very pleased with the season. Thirty-three wins is a good year, and it gives us something to build on next year, with only two players leaving the team."

Those two are senior first baseman Jay McGraw, who set several new career records this year and moved into the top three in nearly all of the other batting categories, and pitcher Gary Smith, who was the most valuable player in last year's CAA tournament.

Pistons Romp Past Bulls

Hold On

Detroit Piston Isiah Thomas holds back Chicago Bull forward Charles Oakley as other players were involved in a fight during their NBA playoff game Saturday. (AP Laserphoto)

CHICAGO (AP) — Isiah Thomas worked hard to make things easy for his teammates. He did his job so well Saturday that the Detroit Pistons walloped the Chicago Bulls 101-79.

"We made our shots and played good defense," said Thomas, who had 19 points and 11 assists. "The last two games we did not get enough easy shots and my job is to help make the shots easy."

That good defense helped limit Michael Jordan to 24 points and held him scoreless for the first 17 minutes as the Pistons took a 2-1 lead in their best-of-seven NBA playoff series.

Jordan, who averaged 41.6 points in his first seven playoff games, felt he was out of synch because of an incident in the first two minutes in which he threw a punch at Bill Laimbeer.

"That's the first time in my career I actually threw a punch and I didn't land it," said Jordan, who drew a technical over the incident. "But what Laimbeer did was uncalled for. When he was called for an offensive foul, he elbowed me."

Laimbeer laughed it off and said "No matter what happens, I'm the villain. It happened so fast that I don't know what happened. Our style is to be antagonistic."

Once matters were resolved, the Pistons went on a 12-1 run led by Thomas to open a 16-5 lead, which they expanded to 37-18 midway through the second quarter.

Jordan's first basket came with 5:23 left in the quarter and sent him on a 12-point tear. But Laimbeer and Thomas maintained a steady scoring pace and the Bulls still trailed 52-38 at the half.

With Jordan and Charles Oakley hitting in a 9-2 run, the Bulls managed to get within 11 points at 58-47 and finally down to 10 at 65-55 with 3:37 left in the period on a basket by Jordan but the Pistons held on and baskets by Johnson and Thomas in the final minute gave them a 73-58 lead going into the final quarter.

Then they coasted home in the fourth quarter.

Vinnie Johnson led a balanced Detroit attack with 23 points, Thomas had 19 and Adrian Dantley, who rested in the fourth quarter while Johnson was scoring 13 of his points, added 16.

"We came out with the intent of winning the game and we usually play good when the pressure is on," said Thomas.

The pressure was on because the Bulls had defeated the Pistons 105-95 last Thursday night to get the home advantage. The Pistons regained it with authority.

"This was the crucial game," said Detroit Coach Chuck Daly. "We got the home court advantage back and I had a chance to rest some our players, like Dantley, in the fourth quarter. We played good defense and they didn't shoot very well."

The series continues Sunday in Chicago before the two teams go back to the Silverdome for the fifth game Wednesday night.

DALLAS (AP) — Denver guard Bill Hanzlik was as surprised as the sellout crowd of 17,007 in Reunion Arena that Coach Doug Moe chose him to be the hero Saturday.

But he had a feeling it would work out — and it did.

Hanzlik drove for a layup with three seconds to play, giving the Nuggets their first lead of the game and a 107-105 victory over Dallas in Game 3 of their NBA Western Conference semifinal series.

"I hadn't been shooting well, so Dallas never expected me to take the shot," Hanzlik said. "But I felt something good was going to happen. Everything I'd been doing in the last few minutes had gone right."

Hanzlik scored only nine points in the game, but had the tying and winning baskets to give the Nuggets a 2-1 lead in the best-of-seven series. The Mavericks host Game 4 Sunday night.

He pulled Denver even at 105-105 with 35 seconds to play, then grabbed a rebound with 20 seconds to go and called time out to set up the winning play.

Denver never led until the Hanzlik hit his game-winner, but kept within striking distance until the end.

"They hit all the big shots at the end," Dallas Coach John MacLeod said. "But I thought there were a lot of positive things that happened for us in the game."

The Mavericks jumped off to a 10-2 lead and led 61-53 at halftime as the Nuggets, who shot poorly in losing the second game to the Mavericks, 112-108, put themselves in an early hole again, hitting just eight of their 24 shots in the first quarter.

Dallas' biggest lead of the half was a 42-31 advantage with 8:38 to go.

The Mavs still led 87-78 entering the final quarter, but the Nuggets moved to within 90-87 with 9:20 left in the game and cut it to one with 5:59 left on a basket by Alex English, who led them with 23 points.

Sluman Holds Off Charge Of The Vets

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Jeff Sluman handled the pressure Saturday when veterans Ben Crenshaw and Bruce Lietzke faltered and moved into position to win his first PGA Tour event.

"It's a nice feeling but I won't dwell on it," said Sluman after his steady 3-under-par 67 gave him a one-shot lead after three rounds of the $750,000 Byron Nelson Golf Classic.

Sluman, a non-winner on the PGA Tour, was at 10-under 200 after 54 holes, one shot ahead of Crenshaw and Lietzke.

Sluman, a New Yorker who played at Florida State, said "I'm not going to do anything differently on Sunday. I'm going to play just like I was 10 shots behind instead of one shot ahead. If I looked at the scoreboard it would drive me nuts."

Crenshaw, the second-round leader and Sluman's playing partner, bogeyed three of the last five holes for an even-par 70 to finish at 201.

"I had a nice round going and had notions of running away with it," said Crenshaw, who led by two shots entering the day. "Then I made two bogeys before I could turn around. I was very disappointed I dropped three shots like that."

Lietzke, the 1981 champion, had a chance to finish the day on top, but three-putted the last green and settled for a 66.

"Although it's been a year since I've been one shot out of the lead, I think I know what it takes to win," Lietzke said. "I just need to be in contention on the final three holes. It's just like an NBA game. You want to be there in the final two minutes."

Sluman, whose highest finish was a second place at the Tournament Players Championship when he lost a playoff to Sandy Lyle, is one of the steadiest players on the Tour. In 1987, he was in the money 22 times in 32 events.

Sluman had a three-birdie, no-bogey round to jump into lead in the quest for the $135,000 first-place prize.

Crenshaw went out in 31 but began his bogey run when he missed a 6-foot putt on the 183-yard par 3 No. 13. He was blocked by a tree after his tee shot on the 390-yard par 4 No. 14 and bogeyed again.

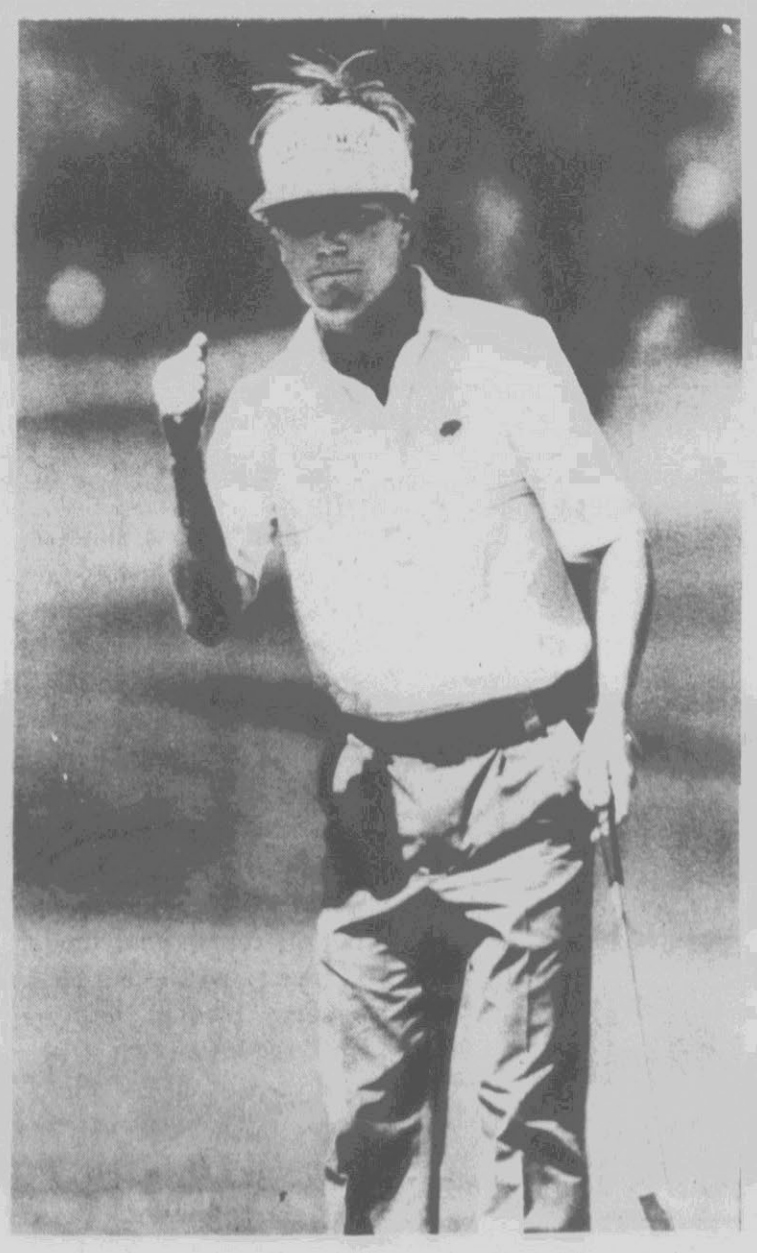

Crenshaw, known as one of the finest putters on the Tour, then three-putted the easy 554-yard par 5 No. 16 green from 30 feet.

Paul Azinger, who used only 25 putts, shot a 7-under 63, just a shot off the record at the Tournament Players Course at Las Colinas, to move into contention at 204.

"It was a day when everything went in," said Azinger. "I was thinking about a 59 after I made a 40-foot birdie putt on the 14th hole. A 59 (the PGA Tour record) was very achievable. However, I parred in from that point. It was very exciting."

Defending champion Fred Couples shot a 65 for a 203 on a sun-splashed day in which Nelson official Ron Case

Area Players Aim For The Big Leagues

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

A number of former area baseball players are one step closer to the big time this season, attempting to turn a strong year at the AAA level into a chance at the major leagues.

Former Rose High and UNC star Roger Williams, ex-Louisburg player Kelly Heath and former ECU pitcher Bob Patterson as well as former North Pitt and N.C. State player Greg Briley are all playing AAA ball this season.

Williams, a pitcher, is 2-0 with a 2.35 ERA and 17 strikeouts in six starts for the Des Moines (Iowa) Cubs. He has allowed 28 hits in 38⅓ innings along with 10 earned runs.He has allowed two homers while issuing 20 walks and 17 strikeouts. This is his first year on the AAA level after a season of AA ball in Pittsfield, Mass. last year.

"It's been an adjustment from double AA to here, but it was a bigger adjustment going to AA," Williams said. "Here you have a lot of guys that you play against with big league experience. The hitters are more experienced and you have to be sharp every time on the mound. You don't get away with any mistakes.

"I've changed in my mechanics. I throw the same pitches I threw in college. I probably throw more changeups then I ever have. When you are here in AAA, you are only one step away (from the majors)," he said. "I don't really look at it as pressure. I look at it as opportunity. I look at it as I'm here in triple A, and if I do my job, somthing good has to happen."

Williams left UNC after his junior year not really knowing what was in store for him, but things have not really changed all that much for him.

"I really didn't know what to expect," he said. "Everything was new to me. It's still a game, but you have to approach it in a business-like manner. You realize you're working for somebody and you are out there to do a job."

Williams returns to the mound Tuesday.

Heath, playing second base for Syracuse Chiefs of the Toronto organization, has been hampered late by hamstring problems which have moved him out of the playing lineup and into a designated hitter role.

In 16 games, Heath is batting .292 with six doubles and one homer. He has driven in four runs and walked seven times while striking out six times. Heath has a .458 slugging percentage and a .364 on base percentage.

Heath was playing at AAA Richmond for the Braves organization last year but is presently with the Toronto Blue Jays organization, which signed him as a six-year free agent.

Briley is hitting .309 and leads the team in hits with 42, including eight doubles, three triples and two home

Thompson Taking No Chances

By JIM O'CONNELL
AP Basketball Writer

The days when the United States could win an international basketball game simply by walking on the court are over and John Thompson is determined to leave nothing to chance at the Seoul Olympics, even if it means angering a few people.

Thompson, the Georgetown coach who will direct the U.S. Olympic basketball team, is known for sheltering his players from the public and the trials that begin Wednesday in Colorado Springs will be no different.

They will be closed to all except Thompson's staff, officials of the Amateur Basketball Association of the United States, NBA scouts and representatives of sneaker companies.

The United States Basketball Writers Association has protested the exclusion of the media from the practices and several news organizations have threatened to go to court to gain entrance to the tryouts.

There is some possibility the closed-door policy may change or be modified, but officials make it clear that winning is the top priority.

"We're still looking at possibilities of the media being allowed into the sessions but we don't consider this a media event," said Big East Commissioner Dave Gavitt, the chairman of the Games Committee.

Ninety-three players received invitations to try out for U.S. team and as of Thursday, 85 intended to be one of the 12 to wear the uniform with "USA" across the chest. The impressive list included the first team of the AP All-America team and most anyone else that made a post-season team with an All- in front of it.

Thompson, who will invite about 20 of these players to a summer camp at Georgetown for the final cuts, has a rough road to the gold medal ahead of him. The United States lost the Pan American Games gold medal last August to Brazil. The last time the United States lost the Pan Am gold was 1971 and the next year the United States lost the Olympic gold for the first time.

The Seoul Games will also mark the first Olympic basketball confrontation between the Soviet Union and the United States since 1976. The Soviets are not the only team Thompson has to worry about as Yugoslavia has consistently proved itself worthy as an international opponent.

"There's no doubt the rest of the world is catching up," said Gavitt, who will be involved with his fourth Olympic team.

"These players are going to be in a 2½ to 3-hour morning practice and a 1½ to 2-hour session in the afternoon," Gavitt said in explaining the closed tryouts. "That's five hours on the court in a addition to an hour for taping and stretching. That's an 8-hour day and I just don't see the time available for these kids to do interviews."

Thompson will be available each day of the trials via a conference call but the only eyes on the players until a doubleheader scrimmage in Denver's McNichols Arena on May 24 will be of the two representatives from each NBA team and those people from the sneaker companies, who are allowed in according to one ABAUSA official because of a "sizable donation."

Eight players have turned down the invitations for a variety of reasons.

Louisville's Pervis Ellison and Jeff lebo of North Carolina cited nagging injuries that need extensive recuperation.

Temple's Tim Perry and Gary Grant of Michigan said they needed the time for academic work to ensure on-time graduation.

Others such as Oklahoma's Harvey Grant and Mookie Blaylock, Ed Davender of Kentucky and Duane Ferrell of Georgia Tech never gave a definitive reason for the refusal.

"We expected some to say no, figuring the number would drop by seven or eight," Thompson said. "I don't think it's an un-American-like activity. But those are the factors we have to deal with."

Gavitt said he was surprised the number of those declining wasn't higher.

"I thought the number would be higher because usually the Games are held in July or August but this time they will be in September so it will affect school for some players," Gavitt said. "Then September is also the starting time for your NBA camps so some of the seniors had a difficult decision to make."

The difficult decision of who will be on the team is Thompson's but each selection must be approved the by Selection Committee. "In '76 and '80 the team was selected by the Player Selection Sub-Committee with the coaches giving daily reports and opinions in meetings," said Gavitt who coached the 1980 team that was deprived of a chance at a gold medal because of the U.S.-led boycott of the Moscow Games. "(1976 Coach) Dean (Smith) and I both got pretty much what we wanted but not totally, but it wasn't something we couldn't live with.

"Before us, Henry Iba had no control over the selection of his team but the United States was always good enough to survive. The process changed for the 1976 team when control went from the AAU. Active coaches and administrators got more involved"

The process changed again with the 1984 team coached by Bob Knight and Thompson will have the same privilege of selecting his own team.

"The Sub-Committee still is in consulation with the coach and his staff and it still approves each selection as system of checks and balances."

Gavitt says increased competition makes the selection process more important that ever before.

"That's why it no longer is a matter of picking the 12 best players but rather the 12 best that comprise a team," he said. "Eight or nine players will stand out and then the coach has to look for specialists whether they be defensive, 3-point shooters or ballhandlers. He has to find players for the 9, 10, 11 and 12 spots that will be willing to sacrifice, not play so much and be willing to accept the role of cheerleader."

Robinson was the first player taken in last year's NBA draft but a Naval commitment has kept his status as an amateur intact and he says he is ready despite being away from competition since the Pan Am Games.

"I'm not going there just to make the team," the 7-foot-1 Robinson said of the trials. "I want to be one of the best players there, to stand out. ... Besides, I don't think John Thompson would be happy if I came out with the attitude of being happy just making the team. ... I expect at least that much from myself."

Crampton's 65 Good Enough For A One-Stroke Advantage

MALVERN, Pa. (AP) — Bruce Crampton shot a 5-under-par 65 Saturday to climb from ninth place into a one-stroke lead after two rounds of the $225,000 United Hospitals Senior Classic.

Crampton, 10th on the Seniors' money list this year with $61,188, was at 4-under-par 136 after 36 holes. He had a 71 in Friday's opening round.

In second place heading into Sunday's final round at the Chester Valley Country Club were Lou Graham, the 1975 U.S. Open champion, and Billy Casper, winner of last week's tournament in San Antonio. Both shot 67s after matching par-70 in the opening round.

Defending champion Chi Chi Rodriguez could not better par for the second successive day and was tied for 10th place at 143 after shooting a 72.

All three players tied for second after the first round also struggled.

runs. Briley also has a team-high 20 RBI's. Playing at second base for the Cannons, Briley has committed only seven errors.

"I'm working real hard and just trying to do the best I can," he said. "I'm seeing the ball real well. In AA ball, the pitchers can get wild but around here most of the pitchers are throwing around the plate and you got a pretty good idea of what they are doing."

After enduring a season of AA ball and long bus trips in Chattanooga last year, Briley said he's a lot happier on the AAA level.

"Last year the travel was real bad," he said. "(Now) we take planes. That's better than long bus rides."

For a lot of young players, switching from the collegiate aluminum bats to the professional wood bats is a big adjustement, but Briley said he hasn't had that much of a problem.

"You have to get used the wood bats," he said. "I adjusted real well. The ball goes just as far if you hit on a sweet spot."

With the numbers Briley is posting, he hopes to make his way up to Seattle before the end of the season.

"I'm just going out and doing the best I can," he said. "What happens happens. It's not my decision. It's theirs.

"Hopefully I can make it up by the end of the year and show them what I can do."

Patterson has a 2-0 record for the Buffalo (N.Y.) club and an earned run average of 2.32 through four starts. He has pitched one complete game and has pitched 31 innings, giving up 12 runs and 26 hits. Patterson has walked four batters while recording 20 strikeouts.

Patterson split time between the AAA squad and the major league team in both 1986 and in 1987, with the majority of time coming at the AAA level.

Another former Rose High player, Randy Warren, is playing for the Chicago White Sox organization's instructional team in Sarasota, Fla., where he has moved from the outfield to second base.

Warren played collegiately for Louisburg and Elon and was chosen by the White Sox last spring in the amateur draft.

The Instructional League, according to Sarasota manager Art Kursnyer, is an extension of training camp designed to refine the skills of younger players.

"Randy is coming along real well," Kursnyer said. "He has made a real fine adjustment. We moved him over to second base. They told me he was an outfielder. When I came over, he was at shortstop. They moved him to second base."

The league plays a regular schedule against similar teams from the Pittsburgh Pirates, Montreal Expos, Texas Rangers and Atlanta Braves, but little or no statistical information is kept. Kursnyer, though, said Warren has done well at his new position.

"If you got a kid who can play, a kid like Randy, he can make the adjustment," the coach said. "His hitting is coming along real well. At this extended program, they don't keep batting averages. Randy needed to work at second base and he is one of the fortunate guys because he is the only second baseman here so he gets a lot of playing time."

Knepper Stops Cubs, Wins 5th

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston left-hander Bob Knepper continued his surprising start Saturday, becoming the first Astro pitcher to win five games this season with a 3-1 victory over the Chicago Cubs.

Knepper, 5-0, went 7 1-3 innings and retained his National League ERA lead with a 0.85. Knepper, who struggled to an 8-17 record last season, snapped a string of six straight Houston losses to the Cubs. He gave up eight hits and did not strike out or walk a batter.

Al Nipper, 0-1, was the loser, giving up three runs on three hits, walking three and striking out one in six innings.

Chicago took a 1-0 lead in the first when Shawon Dunston singled, moved to third on a Mark Grace single and scored on Andre Dawson's sacrifice fly. It was Dawson's 1,000th career RBI.

Houston moved ahead 2-1 in its half of the first. Gerald Young ld off with a walk and went to third on Billy Hatcher's single. After Young was tagged out in a rundown on Bill Doran's ground ball, Kevin Bass singled in Hatcher and Doran scored on the play on a throwing error by catcher Damon Berryhill.

Giants.....3

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Robby Thompson's wind-blown, two-run triple keyed a three-run rally and gave the San Francisco Gaints a 3-2 victory over the New York Mets Saturday.

Right-hander Mike Krukow, 2-2, continued his career mastery of the Mets, giving up five hits in 7 2-3 innings in winning a pitching duel with right-hander Ron Darling, 3-3, who yielded three hits in seven innings. Atlee Hammaker finished up for his foruth save.

Ex-Giant Mackey Sasser gave the Mets a 1-0 lead in the third by leading off with his first major league home run. Sasser was the only Mets' batter to reach first base through the first five innings.

The Giants, winning two games in a row for the first time since April 18, erupted for all of their runs and three of their hits in the third inning. It was the first time since April 19 that New York has lost two straight. Jose Uribe led off with a single to right and Krukow sacrificed. Brett Butler snapped an 0-for-19 slump with an infield single and Thompson followed with a towering drive to right center.

Center fielder Len Dykstra appeared to misjudge the ball and it sailed over his head in a stiff wind for a two-run triple. Thompson scored on Will Clark's grounder to first for a 3-1 lead.

Krukow, now 18-7 lifetime against New York, was touched for a run in the sixth. Kevin Elster led off with a single, Darling sacrificed and Elster went to third on a wild pitch. He scored on a bloop single by Dykstra.

After Thompson's triple, Darling retired the next 14 batters before leaving for a pinch-hitter in the seventh.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Mario Soto and John Franco combined on a three-hitter Saturday night as the Cincinnati Reds held off the Pittsburgh Pirates 5-3.

The Reds got four runs in the first inning against Mike Dunne, 1-2, and Pittsburgh scored three times in the bottom of the first. Eric Davis led off the Reds' ninth with his sixth homer for the game's other run.

Soto, 2-2, gave up three hits and four walks in 7 1-3 innings for his 99th major league victory. He improved his career record against the Pirates to 14-5 and won for the first time in his last six starts.

Franco finished for his fifth save, teaming with Soto to retire the final 17 batters. Pittsburgh began the night 14-3 at Three Rivers Stadium, the best home record in the majors.

Mattingly, Winfield Key Yankee Win

NEW YORK (AP) — Don Mattingly and Dave Winfield homered Saturday to help Tommy John to his 279th career victory in the New York Yankees' 6-2 win over the California Angels.

John, 2-0, walked two, struck out two and gave up 13 hits. Dave Righetti, making his first appearance since May 2, came on to get the final two outs and register his fifth save.

California's only runs off the 44-year-old left-hander came on Tony Armas' RBI single in the sixth and Brian Downing's third homer of the season, an opposite-field drive leading off the seventh.

Mattingly's second homer came with two out in the fourth off Angels starter Dan Petry, 2-3, the first of four Angels pitchers used in the game, and Winfield ignited a four-run fifth inning with his eighth home run.

After Winfield's homer, Mike Pagliarulo doubled, Don Slaught was intentionally walked and Rafael Santana followed with a tainted triple to score Pagliarulo and Joel Skinner, running for Slaught.

BOSTON (AP) — Roger Clemens pitched a three-hitter and struck out 10 en route to his fourth shutout of the season as the Boston Red Sox beat the Seattle Mariners 3-0 on Saturday.

Clemens, 6-1, walked a season-high five and was helped by three double plays as he beat Scott Bankhead, 0-1.

It was the sixth time this year Clemens has struck out 10 or more in a game and the 27th time in his career. The five walks were the most allowed by Clemens since last June 6, when he walked seven versus Detroit.

Clemens leads the majors with 93 strikeouts in 76 innings. It was his 14th career shutout in 113 starts and his seventh career three-hitter.

Bankhead, who underwent shoulder surgery last October, allowed only five hits, struck out eight and walked two in six innings in his 1988 debut.

Sam Horn, who hit his first homer in a 14-8 victory over Seattle Friday night, put the Red Sox ahead when he homered into the bleachers beyond the Boston bullpen in right-center with one out in the second inning.

The Red Sox added a run in the sixth when, with two out, Dwight Evans beat out a grounder over second for a single and scored on Mike Greenwell's double off the wall in center.

Indians.....6
Brewers.....4

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Joe Carter singled in the go-ahead run in the fifth inning and the Cleveland Indians defeated the Milwaukee Brewers 6-4 Saturday for their fifth straight victory.

Carter's two-out single in the fifth broke a 2-2 tie and came after a single by Willie Upshaw and a balk on Milwaukee starter Mike Birkbeck, 1-3.

The Indians then added three runs in the sixth inning off Brewers reliever Odell Jones, two scoring as shortstop Dale Sveum muffed a bases-loaded grounder.

The loss was the fifth straight for Milwaukee following a 10-game winning streak.

Carter also doubled in a run in the third as Cleveland beat the Brewers for the third straight game and ran its record against AL East teams this season to 10-0..

The Indians took a 1-0 lead in the first on Julio Franco's leadoff triple and a single by Pat Tabler. Milwaukee tied it in the bottom of the inning off John Farrell, 4-2, on a single by Paul Molitor, Robin Yount's bunt single, a sacrifice by B.J. Surhoff and an infield out by Greg Brock.

Tabler walked with two outs in the third and beat the relay home when Carter doubled into the left field corner as the Indians took a 2-1 lead. Sveum tied it for the Brewers with his fourth homer leading off the bottom of the fourth.

Cory Snyder, Andy Allanson and Jay Bell singled with one out in the sixth off Jones. Sveum then booted Franco's grounder near the bag as Snyder and Allanson raced home. After an intentional walk reloaded the bases, Tabler drove in the third run of the inning with a sacrifice fly.

Milwaukee scored twice in the eighth. Surhoff singled and came home on Brock's double, knocking out Farrell. One out later, Earnest Riles singled home Brock.

DETROIT (AP) — Les Straker pitched his first major-league shutout and Mark Davidson hit his second big-league homer Saturday as the Minnesota Twins defeated the Detroit Tigers 7-0.

Straker, 1-1, who came off the 15-day supplemental disabled list 10 days earlier, allowed four hits. He walked one and struck out one.

Straker gave up a leadoff bunt single to Gary Pettis in the first, then didn't allow another hit until the fifth inning when Chet Lemon had a one-out single.

Frank Tanana, 6-2, was pounded for six runs on nine hits. Tanana walked two and struck out two in 4 1-3 innings. Don Heinkel and Paul Gibson finished up for Detroit.

Dan Gladden started the Twins' three-run third with a walk, went to third on Steve Lombardozzi's single and scored on a single by Kirby Puckett.

Lombardozzi moved to third when Lemon bobbled Puckett's single in right field for an error and scored on a single by Gary Gaetti. Puckett scored from second on Gene Larkin's single to left field for a 3-0 lead.

Davidson's first homer of the season in the fourth was a solo shot into the lower left-field seats.

White Sox.....7

CHICAGO (AP) — Light-hitting Fred Manrique hit a tie-breaking three-run homer and drove in a fourth run with a bunt single Saturday night, powering the Chicago White Sox to a 7-5 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays.

Manrique, who came into the contest with one home run this season and seven in 401 major-league at-bats, broke a 2-2 tie in the fourth inning by hitting the first pitch from John Cerutti, 1-2, into the first row of seats in left field.

Manrique's four runs batted in made a winner of Dave LaPoint, 4-2, who yielded nine hits and three runs in seven innings.

Toronto scored an unearned run in the first inning. Lloyd Moseby singled to right and continued to second when Ivan Calderon fell to his knees while fielding the ball. Moseby took third on a single by Juan Beniquez and scored when the White Sox failed to turn a double play on George Bell's grounder.

Chicago took a 2-1 lead in the second thanks to two players called up from Vancouver of the Class AAA Pacific Coast League a day earlier. Russ Morman singled with one out and Dave Gallagher followed with a triple. One out later, Manrique got Gallagher home with a perfect bunt single.

Bell tied the score 2-2 in the fourth with a solo home run, his sixth of the year, but Chicago went ahead to stay in the bottom of the inning. Calderon opened with a double, Morman sacrificed him to third and Gallagher walked. Calderon was out at the plate on Donnie Hill's grounder but Manrique followed with his homer, giving him the game-winning RBI for the second night in a row.

The Blue Jays made it 5-3 in the fifth on a double by Cecil Fielder, LaPoint's balk and a single by Tony Fernandez.

Cerutti left after a leadoff single by Hill in the seventh. Duane Ward got Manrique to hit into a double play but walked Ron Karkovice and Gary Redus tripled to give the White Sox a 6-3 lead.

The Blue Jays scored a run off Bobby Thigpen in the eighth on singles by pinch hitter Rance Mulliniks, Bell and Fred McGriff, another pinch hitter. Bill Long got pinch Ernie Whitt to hit into an inning-ending double play with the bases loaded and went on to earn his second save. He allowed a run in the ninth on Nelson Liriano's double and a single by Fernandez.

Chicago nicked Ward for its final run in the bottom of the eighth on Morman's two-out double, a passed ball by Whitt and Gallagher's infield hit.

Tigers Hand Heels First Loss Of ACC Baseball Tourney

GREENVILLE, S.C. (AP) — Left fielder Jerry Brooks lined a two-out, seventh-inning single, pushing Clemson to a 5-4 victory over North Carolina in the Atlantic Coast Conference baseball tournament Saturday.

Brooks' single gave the Tar Heels, 33-26, their first loss of the tournament and moved Clemson to 50-11.

The victory left the tournament with a three-way logjam at the top. The winner of the 2:30 p.m. Virginia-Georgia Tech game will join Clemson and North Carolina as the tourney's three remaining teams.

A post-game coin flip gave the Virginia-Georgia Tech winner a bye into Sunday's finals, and Clemson will face North Carolina again at 7:30 p.m. Saturday.

The Tar Heels led off the first, fourth and fifth innings with home runs, by Tom Nevin, Chris DeFranco and Ron Maurer.

Clemson, meanwhile, was countering by repeatedly getting its leadoff man on base and moving him around the bases. Five Tiger leadoff men reached base in the game, and four of them scored runs.

In the fourth, Brian Kowitz singled, stole second and moved to third when North Carolina right fielder Darren Villani dropped Threadgill's fly ball. After Jimmy Crowley popped to short, shortstop Rusty Charpia singled in Kowitz and Threadgill to put Clemson up 3-2.

After Maurer's home run, his 10th, tied the score again in the fifth, Clemson took a 4-3 lead when Randy Mazey scored from third on Brooks' double-play grounder. The final deadlock occurred in the sixth when Nevin singled to open the inning and scored on an error by Clemson first baseman Mike Milchin.

After Brooks' game-winning RBI, Clemson coach Bill Wilhelm brought Milchin to the mound to pitch the ninth inning. The left-hander notched his ninth save by striking out Campbell and Jesse Levis, then Dave Arendas was called out on batter interference when he ran into Tiger catcher Bert Heffernan after Milchin's third strike eluded Heffernan.

Mike Kimbrell, 3-0, the first Clemson reliever, was credited with the win and Brad Woodall, 1-1, took the loss.

"It was another struggle," Clemson Coach Bill Wilhelm noted. "If you were expecting our bats to erupt, well, you didn't see any eruption today.

"We didn't win 50 games by hitting the ball like we have in this tournament," he added. "We have to hit the ball better."

Wilhelm, Clemson's coach since 1958, said, "We're going to play one team (North Carolina) three times in one tournament without any of the games being for the championship. That's a situation I've never heard of."

The Tigers lost 1-0 to North Carolina Thursday.

North Carolina head coach Mike Roberts said, "It was a very even ballgame, and most even games come down to two-out base hits. Brooks got it."

Racing Wife Gets Home Feeling At Indianapolis 500 Each Year

By SHELLEY UNSER
For The Associated Press

EDITOR'S NOTE — This is the first of two first-person columns by Shelley Unser, the wife of Indy-car star Al Unser Jr., sharing some of her feelings and insights about the Indianapolis 500 and how it effects her. The second column will move for race weekend.

Every year it's the same thing. My brain always seems to take over and put up a wall of defense to prepare me for the ups and downs of the Indy 500.

It's so different from any other race. it's so big and overwhelming that I always feel everyone is watching everything I do, down to shopping at the grocery store. And for a month my husband becomes public property. Nowhere else in the world are the race fans so enthusiastic and, boy, do these fans know their racing.

The people in Indianapolis have such an effect on me that I don't want to let them down. I tend to want to please everybody.

The hardest one to please is Al. As a matter of fact, I'm convinced that it's impossible to please him during the month of May. The best thing for me to do is to be his sounding board and try desperately not to take anything he says personally.

While Al and the Galles Team spend their days trying to figure out which springs and shocks to run on their March race cars, I am busy juggling our kids between Indy and our home in Albuquerque, N.M., and cursing myself for not bringing the right clothes for the latest function.

And, being pregnant is less than a great joy during May, because all of a sudden I notice just how many pretty girls there are in Indianapolis hanging around the track.

Most of the month I spend in a confused, dazed state because from one minute to the next I never know where we are supposed to be. And everything we do is a last minute rush to get there.

When we do get to where we're going, someone always asks me the inevitable question: How do you handle the pressure and the danger of Al racing?

I dream about the day Al will win the Indy 500, mainly because your entire month is so pressure-filled, building each day and when the race is over it's very anticlimactic, unless you win. To win it would justify everything everyone has been through for the month.

There are two separate pressures on us during the month. We have no time for socializing until qualifying is over. Then it slowly builds back up until race day. In the meantime, we do have some time for some local friends, some jet-skiing and some relaxation.

One thing is for sure, the month of May is like being on an emotional roller-coaster ride and, if it weren't for the great excitement and the people at the track, and the warm welcome I always feel from the locals, I know I couldn't make it through the month.

But, in all honesty, if I wasn't here in May, and was back home, I know I would miss it more than anything in the world.

Lukas Hopes For Another Chance

BALTIMORE (AP) — Eight years after a D. Wayne Lukas-trained colt stopped a Kentucky Derby-winning filly in the Preakness, Lukas could get a chance to do it again.

But this time the filly is also trained by Lukas.

Winning Colors will try to become the first filly to win two Triple Crown races when she opposes about 10 3-year-old colts next Saturday in the 1 3-16-mile Preakness at Pimlico.

One of her rivals could be Tejano, who also is trained by Lukas.

In 1980, the filly Genuine Risk went into the Preakness as the favorite and finished second, 4¾ lengths behind the Lukas-trained colt Codex.

After Winning Colors' neck victory in the 1¼-mile Kentucky Derby May 7, Lukas said Tejano would join her in the Preakness.

"He has a different owner," Lukas said. "He deserves a chance to run in the Preakness. He could upset her."

After Tejano finished second in the one-mile Withers Wednesday at Belmont Park, Jeff Lukas, the trainer's son and assistant, said he did not know if the colt would start in the Preakness. Tejano is owned by L.R. Jr. French and Barry Beal. Winning Colors is owned by Eugene V. Klein.

Winning Colors' victory in the Derby gave Lukas his first triumph in the race after seven straight failures and made her the third filly to win the Derby in 114 years. The others were Regret, 1915, and Genuine Risk, 1980.

The Derby was Regret's only Triple Crown start, but a filly, Rhine Maiden, did win the Preakness in 1915.

Genuine Risk, trained by LeRoy Jolley, became the only filly to run in all three Triple Crown races when she finished second, two lengths behind Summing in the 1½-mile Belmont. Codex finished seventh.

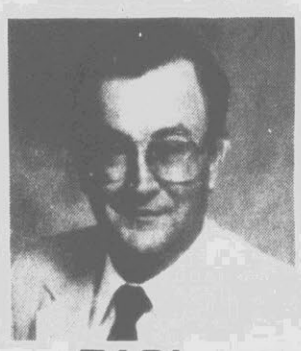

Winning Colors, who was the 35th filly to start in the Derby, will be the 51st to start in the Preakness. The filly winners were Flocarline, 1903; Whimsical, 1906; Rhine Maiden, 1915, and Nellie Morse, 1924.

The Belmont has had 18 filly starters. Those who won were Ruthless, 1867, and Tanya, 1905.

Genuine Risk was the last filly to start in the Preakness or Belmont.

Forty Niner will be back for another shot at Winning Colors in the $350,000-added Preakness.

GMU Tops JMU, 2-0

RICHMOND (AP) — Dayton Moore knocked in one George Mason run and scored the other and the Patriots tagged James Madison pitcher Dana Allison with his first loss of the season by knocking off the top-seeded Dukes 2-0 in the Colonial Athletic Association tournament Saturday.

George Mason starting pitcher John Styles, who allowed five hits, took advantage of his team's two unearned runs in the eighth inning to move to 4-4. His victory left the Patriots, 33-24-1, as the only undefeated team left in the double-elimination tournament and put them into Sunday's championship round.

Allison, who also gave up five hits, struck out nine in dropping to 12-1.

Kevin Kobylinsky led off the George Mason eighth with a grounder to James Madison shortstop Matt Lasher, who threw it into the first base dugout for a two-base error. Kobylinsky advanced to third on a groundout and scored on a double by Moore.

Skins Happy With Results From Their First Minicamp

HERNDON, Va. (AP) — The Washington Redskins minicamp this spring was much more than merely a reunion for the defending Super Bowl champions and a welcoming party for rookies and free agents.

No one wore pads, everyone wore shorts and no jobs were on the line. Two-thirds of the players who participated won't be part of the roster on opening night in September, but Coach Joe Gibbs nevertheless found a lot to like about the six-day camp that ended Saturday.

"We took a look at all our draft choices and had a chance to evaluate our depth, to see where we can use help," said Gibbs. "Now we'll decide if there's a position where we should maybe go out and try to find someone."

The Redskins coaching staff forcefed the newcomers much of the playbook, providing them plenty of food for thought over the next two months. In fact, much more time was spent in meetings than on the field.

"We obviously put in a lot of offense, a lot of defense," Gibbs said. "Some (teams) try to go slow and make sure everyone understands every single aspect. We try to jam it at them as hard as we can go and as fast as we can go to see how much of it they can absorb.

"It's very important for us," he added. "This way, our guys have been exposed to most of the concepts we have. That means we can move that much quicker in training camp."

The minicamp answered few questions.

Will quarterback Doug Williams fully recover from the knee injury he suffered in the Super Bowl? Will Jay Schroeder be content as his backup? Who will be the team's placekicker?

Hornets Winding Up Search

CHARLOTTE (AP) — After meeting with Continental Basketball Association coach Bill Musselman, Charlotte Hornets vice president Carl Scheer said he may have concluded initial interviews to hire the NBA team's first head coach.

While he reserved the option of interviewing two still-unnamed NBA assistants involved in the playoffs, Scheer said he is comfortable with hiring a coach from the eight candidates he has interviewed and who still are available.

Scheer said the Hornets have no other candidates beyond those two NBA assistants, whom he declined to identify.

JMU Starts Slow But Still Wins

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — For the second time in as many games, top-seeded James Madison got off to a slow start in its bid to win the Colonial Athletic Association baseball tournament.

The Dukes spotted Richmond a 3-0 lead before downing the Spiders 4-3 in Thursday's opening round. On Friday, it was more of the same as James Madison shook off an early 4-2 advantage by North Carolina-Wilmington before scoring 10 unanswered runs for a 12-4 victory.

"When you hit like we can, we know we can come back, and sometimes that leads to hitting from behind," said James Madison Coach Brad Babcock, whose team set a tournament record with 17 hits against North Carolina-Wilmington.

The victory put James Madison, 43-7-2, into a winner's bracket contest today against George Mason, which downed East Carolina by a 10-2 score Friday night.

Richmond, after ousting William & Mary from the double-elimination tournament Friday with a 7-4 triumph over the Indians, will meet East Carolina today. The tournament will end for the loser of that game.

James Madison's Mark Brockell, normally the Dukes' designated hitter, opened Friday's game on the mound, but lasted only 2 2-3 innings, yielding all four North Carolina-Wilmington runs.

Brockell atoned at the plate, however, knocking in four runs. His output gave him 75 RBIs for the season, a new James Madison record.

The Seahawks, 11-42, took their early lead on three RBIs by Randy Fennell, two on a third-inning home run.

The Dukes broke it open with a five-run sixth inning and a four-run seventh.

James Madison had six straight hits in the sixth, starting with a two-run double by Sam Rose. He finished with three runs batted in and Rod Boddie had two. Jeff Garber set a tournament record by scoring four runs.

James Madison's Brian Kimmel, who pitched the final six innings, picked up the victory to raise his record to 7-2.

Jerome Hunt, the first of four North Carolina-Wilmington pitchers, absorbed the loss, his 11th in 14 decisions.

Chris McMullan had three hits in Richmond's 14-hit barrage as the Spiders, seeded last in the six-team tournament, improved to 23-32 with the victory over William & Mary.

William & Mary, 17-28, scored first on a Bobby Knox home run, the first of his three-year career, but Richmond took over with a three-run fourth inning that was highlighted by an RBI triple by Dan Paule and an RBI single by Mike Zambo.

McMullan's efforts at the plate were backed by five more Spiders who each had two hits.

Jim Merritt, 2-3, went the first 7 2-3 innings to pick up the victory.

No Impossible Dream This Year

Woody Peele

There would be no "Impossible Dream" for East Carolina's baseball Pirates this year at the Colonial Athletic Association tournament at The Diamond in Richmond, Va.

Last year, the Pirates, who were seeded fourth, lost on the second day of play and fought their way back through the losers' bracket and made two miracle finishes to win the championship and the league's postseason NCAA berth.

But this year, the pitching in the rest of the league was too strong for the Bucs. Except for Gary Smith's performance on the opening day of the tournament against William & Mary, the Pirates were missing in that department.

Surprisingly, East Carolina led the CAA in earned run average with a 3.64 mark, well ahead of George Mason's 4.16.

But the Pirates had only two pitchers in the top 11, while regular season winner James Madison had two, George Mason had three and Richmond had three. Madison's two were the top two in the league, Dana Allison, the player of the year in the conference, at 1.52 and Mike Linskey at 1.88.

Jake Jacobs, who lost to George Mason on Friday night, was fourth in the league at 2.79, while Smith was ranked sixth at 3.74.

ECU coach Gary Overton said he felt that the Pirates had more pitching than did the rest of the league, but that the quality didn't quite measure up to the rest of the conference.

James Madison used some strategy in setting up its pitching rotation for the tournament, and Coach Brad Babcock was hopeful Saturday that it would work out.

He deliberately held out Allison from the first two games, saving him instead for the winners' bracket finals on Saturday afternoon. He used his number two pitcher, Linskey, in the opener against Richmond, then came back with Mark Brockell, who had only pitched two innings this year and who usually was the DH, against UNC-Wilmington.

Brockell didn't last, but Brian Kimmell, the number three pitcher, who had been sidelined with an injury, came on and pitched six strong innings to earn the win.

The strategy nearly backfired though. Both Richmond and UNCW moved out to leads on the Dukes before they finally rallied to pull both games out.

□ □ □

East Carolina loses only two seniors off this year's squad, plus another member of the team who will be transferring. The two seniors are first baseman Jay McGraw and pitcher Gary Smith.

Both have been star players for the Pirates. Smith earned most valuable player honors at the CAA tournament last year and won the only game the Pirates won this year, going the full nine innings against William & Mary. McGraw has set several batting records for the Pirates and stands either second or third in most of the other batting marks.

Pitcher Scott Stevens, who posted a 4-5 mark for the Pirates in a hard-luck season, decided a short time before the tournament not to return next year and left the team at that time.

One other senior member of the team, shortstop Mike Andrews, sat out most of this year with a broken leg and will return for a red-shirt fifth year next spring.

This gives the Pirates a lot to build with. Coach Overton will be seeking more help in the pitching department and a little more power hitting. He has already helped himself in both departments, signing Rose ace Tom Moye and gaining Rose power hitter David Daniels, who signed a football grant with the Pirates and plans to play baseball also.

The Pirates will be getting some help in the financial department this fall, earning another grant and a half, but they are still only slightly past the half-way point toward the total NCAA allowance of 13 grants.

James Madison fields a team that has the full allowance. Richmond has more than do the Pirates while George Mason is about even. However, the Patriots have a travel budget, for the team to go on the road — or for recruiting purposes — that is in itself more than the Pirates' total budget. UNC-Wilmington's grant situation is, it is believed, slightly behind the Pirates now, while William & Mary appears to be headed to a horrible situation of not having any baseball grants — per se — at all.

Hopefully, the Pirates will begin catching up to the others in the league in the next few years.

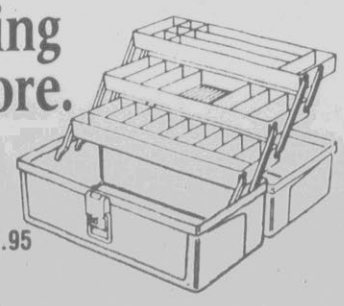

Wilt Chamberlain was the first NBA player to score 30,000 points. He reached that mark in 1972.

Bottom Of The Order Sinks Bucs

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

RICHMOND, Va. — George Mason used the bottom of its batting order to do the job Friday night, bruising East Carolina, 10-2, in the second round of the Colonial Athletic Association baseball tournament at Richmond's The Diamond.

The Patriots banged out 12 hits on the night and the bottom four batters accounted for nine of them. Number eight batter Jim Richbourg had only two of those hits, but he drove in four runs. Those, added to the three he got in Thursday night's win over UNC-Wilmington, gave him a total of seven for the tournament. He had only six in the regular season.

Kevin Kobylinski, who hits seventh, had three hits, one of them a run-scoring triple, while number nine James Timbers also had three hits.

'The guys at the bottom have all struggled,'' Mason coach Bill Brown said, "especially Kobylinski and Richbourg. But they're taking the tournament like it was a new season. That's the way they're looking at it.

"I don't have any other reason for it. It's something you can't predict."

East Carolina took an early 1-0 lead in the game, but Mason rallied for two runs in the top of the second, taking the lead.

ECU's run came when David Ritchie led off with a walk in the first, then raced to third when an attempted pickoff went into right field. He scored on a hit by Calvin Brown. Jay McGraw added a single, but the first of four record-tying double plays by Mason ended the threat.

Mason then rallied for two in the second. Dan Clements walked and scored on a triple by Kobylinski. Richbourg then laid down the perfect sacrifice bunt to score Kobylinski with the go-ahead run, 2-1.

"When they scored and we came back to take the lead it really got us going," Brown said. "Kobylinski's triple really put a spark in us. Then, we got on top with the sacrifice and we just relaxed and went out and played like we could."

East Carolina's Gary Overton said that Mason played 'extremely well."

"They made a few mistakes, but they didn't hurt them. Too, I don't think we played a fine game.

"We made three mistakes and they were all crucial," Overton said. "They swung the bats well and took advantage of their opportunities."

Overton said the three mistakes were an error at first base, a passed ball and another error in the middle of the infield, all in the fourth inning when Mason broke the game open with five runs to take a 7-2 lead. Actually, the first of those plays was ruled a base hit by the official scorer of the game.

It came when Timbers laid down a bunt and catcher Chris Cauble's throw to first was low and hit the base. But the scorer ruled that the runner had already reached first before the throw.

'We swung the bats as well as we have all year in BP (batting practice)," Overton said. "But in the game, we just hit the ball right at people. We hit it hard, but we never got it to fall in for us so that we could play our game."

ECU tied it up at 2-2 with a run in the third. Chris Cauble walked and was sacrificed up, scoring on a double by Brown to left center.

But the bottom fell out on the Pirates after that as the Patriots scored five times in teh bottom of the fourth.

Clements led off with a double to left and Kobylinski singled to center. Richbourg again came up with the key play, a single to center, scoring Clements. Timbers then reached on his bunt single and a passed ball let Kobylinski score. Dayton Moore followed with a double to left, driving in both baserunners, chasing starter Jake Jacobs.

Reliever Jonathan Jenkins got the first man on a bouncer back to him, but he walked Ralph Schmidt and then Chris Lawrence reached on an error, scoring Moore with the fifth run of the frame.

The Pats added the final three in the seventh and chased Jenkins in favor of Mike Whitten. Rod Billingsley struck out but reached on a passed ball. With one away, Kobylinski singled to right and both runners moved up on a passed ball, the fourth of the night on Cauble.

New pitcher Mike Whitten gave up a single to Richbourg which brought both runners in. Timbers got a hit and Moore got a single to score Richbourg.

Moore also had three hits to go along with those of Kobylinski and Timbers.

East Carolina was led by two each by Brown, McGraw and Cauble.

The win upped Mason's record to 32-24-1 on the year and was their third win over ECU in four games. The Pirates gall to 33-13.

"We're back where we were last year at this time," Overton said. "We have to win four games in two days, just like we did last year."

Ritchie Sacrificed For Baseball

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

RICHMOND, Va. — David Ritchie, one of the top players for East Carolina's baseball team, admits that at times, he regrets having made the sport his number one priority.

That seems a strange statement from a guy who was all-district and all-regional in baseball his last two years in high school, but it's true.

To play baseball, Ritchie gave up his dream — to be a member of the United States Olympic gymnastics team.

To sort that all out, one must go back to Ritchie's high school days in Reston, Va., where he played five sports, including football, basketball, baseball, track and gymnastics.

"I didn't play organized baseball until my junior year," Ritchie said. "In track, I just went to the meets, and only rarely went to a practice (because of participation in baseball or gymnastics)."

In track, Ritchie ran in the 55-meter dash, the 800-meter relay and competed in the long jump indoors. Outdoors, he ran the 100 along with the latter two from winter. He was good enough in the long jump to go 22 feet, 11 inches and place third in the state meet.

In football, he quarterbacked his team to the district title in 1984, passing for over 1,000 yards. In basketball, he played the point position.

But gymnastics was his real love, as he competed in the pommel horse, the vault, the high bar, the parallel bars, and the floor exercises, earning All-American honors by gaining enough points in qualifying meets during his sophomore year. One of his teammates, We Suter, has gone on in the sport and will be a member of the U.S. team in Seoul this summer.

But during the early summer between his sophomore and junior year, he was out with some of his friends who played baseball. He was out in the outfield shagging flies when the coach, who had come to toss batting practice, noted his abilities.

"He told me he needed an outfielder and asked me if I'd like to play. I told him I had never played before, but he said he thought I had the ability. So I played that summer and did well and he convinced me to play in the spring."

That, however, meant giving up his dream in gymnastics.

"It was a big decision, giving up gymnastics, but I did pretty well (in baseball), making all district and second team all regional. So I decided to go with baseball full time.

"I quit gymnastics, and that may have been the biggest mistake of my life," Ritchie said.

For someone who has had the success on the baseball field Ritchie has had, that's a big statement.

"I regret it at times," he said. "One of my goals was to make the Olympic team, but you never know whether I would have made it. I do love the sport — it's a challenge for me. I regret it, but I can't worry a b o u t i t . ' '

So, Ritchie turned from the gym to the baseball field, and since coming to East Carolina, has been a versitile performer, playing two outfield and two infield positions in three years.

Redshirted his freshman year, Ritchie shared duties in right field with Mont Carter, playing about half the time in his first year of action. "I started about half the games and had over a hundred at-bats and hit something like .278, .279 (actually .277)," he said.

"My sophomore year, I thought I was going to be the starting centerfielder and started there in the fall. But just before the spring, the coaches asked me if I would consider switching to the infield. They wanted to improve the defense there."

Ritchie made the switch and became the third baseman. During the year, his hitting slumped, however, as he hit only .207.

"I was concentrating so much on learning how to play (third base) that my concentration on offense slipped," Ritchie said. "It wasn't that I didn't care, but the defense was just more important to me that year.

"This year, I'm more comfortable in the field and have a better balance in my concentration, and it's made a difference."

Indeed. Ritchie went into this week's CAA tournament at Richmond's The Diamond with a .290 batting average.

This year, too, he's had to make another move. He started the season at third, but was then switched to shortstop. He says the move wasn't nearly as difficult as the move from the outfield to third.

"Last year, I was really concentrating so much on what I was doing at third that I didn't really watch to see how the other positions were played, so I did have a lot to learn about shortstop," Ritchie said. "But the coaches were patient with me and even though I did make some mistakes, it was an easier transition," Ritchie said.

Making the switch wasn't the only hurdle Ritchie had to get over. Last year, in the next-to-last regular season game at George Mason, Ritchie tore up his left knee and underwent surgery to repair the cartledge and ligament damage.

"They told me that I probably won't be able to play for a while, but I was out playing tennis in three months," he said. "I was the (designated hitter) in the fall and by then I was fine. I got over it three months ahead of schedule."

Some people have even said that he's faster now than before the operation. "I don't know about that," he said. "Coach Best said that I ran a faster 60 this spring, so maybe I am. But it still does hurt me at times."

With one more year to go, Ritchie looks to inherit the mantle of team leader from Jay McGraw next season. He'll be a fifth year senior, and is looking forward to the role.

"I always wanted to be a leader," Ritchie said. "Not so much vocally, although I am vocal in my own way in getting up for a game. In high school, in every sport I played, I became a leader through the God-given talent I had.

"I want to be in that role, but to be a leader by my actions."

Ryan Pitches Astros Past Cubs

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

Nolan Ryan said the complete game, his first in more than two years, meant nothing. Ryan, however, means a great deal to his teammates.

Ryan allowed seven hits and struck out 11 as the Houston Astros beat the Chicago Cubs 8-2 Friday night. Ryan snapped a three-game personal losing streak, throwing just 117 pitches in his first complete game since April 25, 1986.

"It doesn't mean anything," Ryan said of the complete game. "I've gone that far a couple of times and haven't gotten a decision, and I've thrown that many pitches before.

"It's not important. It's nice to get it, but it's only important because it gives our bullpen a rest."

Giants 3, Mets 2

San Francisco scored two runs in the seventh inning after almost running themselves out of the game, handing the Mets only their fourth loss in 19 games. Bob Melvin and Jose Uribe drove in the runs, but only after Kevin Mitchell was doubled off second base on a fly ball.

Both the Mets runs off Kelly Downs were unearned after a fourth-inning error by Robby Thompson on a blooper he lost in the wind. Downs allowed only three hits, singles to Tim Teufel and Kevin McReynolds and a double by Gary Carter.

Phillies 2, Dodgers 1

Kevin Gross allowed six hits in eight innings and singled home the eventual winning run in the sixth inning with a single. Juan Samuel drove in Philadelphia's first run with a fourth-inning homer, his second, off Tim Leary.

Gross left after yielding a leadoff double to Kirk Gibson in the ninth, and Kent Tekulve stranded him there, earning his second save. That's all the saves the entire Phillies relief staff owns.

Padres 7, Expos 1

The Padres broke a five-game losing streak. Carmelo Martinez had three hits, including an RBI double and two-run homer for San Diego, which scored three in the sixth and four more in the seventh.

Jimmy Jones pitched a five-hitter, and Shane Mack had a two-run single to cap a three-run Padres sixth. Jones ended a personal three-game losing streak by going the distance for the first time this year, with three walks and five strikeouts.

Cardinals 7, Braves 5

Jose DeLeon struck out 10 batters in 8 2-3 innings, allowing seven hits before Ken Dayley got the last out in Atlanta's three-run ninth. The save was Dayley's first.

Terry Pendleton had three hits and two RBI for the Cardinals, and DeLeon drove in a run with a single as he became the first St. Louis pitcher to win three games this season.

Big Cut

Rampants Roll Past Fike To Capture Big East Title

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

Rose's 12-1 baseball win over Wilson Fike followed a predictable and productive pattern for the Rampants, according to catcher Axel Smith.

"Practically every game, we've scored (most of) our runs in the fourth and fifth inning," he said.

And it was Smith's grand slam in the fourth-inning that broke open a tight game and moved Rose to 20-0 overall and 12-0 in the conference. The win also clinched Rose's third straight Big East Conference title.

Rose held a 3-1 lead heading into the bottom of the fourth but quickly scored two runs as Jamie Brewington opened with a single and John Bolen reached off an error. Both runners moved up on a passed ball and Brewington scored when Heath Clark reached off a fielder's choice. Tim Moore's single scored Bolen to make it 5-1.

A walk to David Leisten loaded the bases against Fike's Greg Poythress. Smith then came up to the plate and missed badly on the first pitch, but he lined the second pitch well over the left-field fence to make it 9-1.

"I was just trying to put the ball in play," Smith said. "I took my head off the first pitch."

Smith's shot broke the game wide open, according to Fike coach Will Flowers.

"Rose is just so strong," Flowers said. "We tried to pitch around their better hitters to get to the bottom of the order to try and let those guys beat us. And they did."

"It seems like somebody gets us going every game," he said. "This team has the ability to really take advantage of something like that.

"Right now, I feel good about our top 12-13 hitters. They are all being aggressive and taking their cuts. Heath (Clark), Jamie (Brewington), Dallas (McPherson) and the others (bottom of the order hitters) are on base a lot. And you can't neglect Chris Christopher. They set the table. Then you have to pitch to the top of our order."

Rose added another run in the fifth and two more in the sixth before the game was called on the ten-run rule.

Bolen, the number eight hitter, lined a solo shot over the left center field fence in the fifth inning. An error and a single by Dave Daniels drove in two more runs in the sixth inning.

Tom Moye picked up the win for Rose, moving to 7-0 on the year. Moye gave up three hits and struck out nine and got stronger as the game went on.

"Typical Tom," Vincent said. "He just gets stronger later in the game. He just goes out and gets the job done in the big games."

Moye allowed his only run in the second inning when Brian Warren singled, stole second and later scored off a single by Kevin Bowen. But Fike never really threatened after that. The Golden Demons had runners at second base in both the third and fifth innings but failed to advance them.

"I feel real proud of these guys that have won their third straight championship," Vincent said. "I'm real proud of the seniors. We don't talk about being undefeated a lot, but 20 wins sure is nice."

Daniels had three hits to lead the Rampants, while Moore and Smith added two apiece.

Poythress took the loss for Fike in his first start of the season, giving up 12 hits and four walks with one strikeout.

Local Players To Form Guilford Trio

Tom Morris

When former East Carolina aide Rex Sponhaltz left the Pirate Football coaching staff to assume a similar position with Guilford College in Greensboro, he didn't forget about a number of high school football prospects he had come across in his travels through Eastern North Carolina.

And that memory paid off for Sponhaltz and the Guilford football program as three area players have signed to play for the Quakers.

North Pitt quarterback Calvin Hunter, D.H. Conley defensive back Derrick Credle and Rose lineman Barry Murry will form a Pitt County trio for the Division III team next season.

"This year we really put a heavy concentration on East," Sponhaltz said. "We felt that they were kids that could compete for Guilford. Sometimes the feeling is that the East is sparsley populated and doesn't have the prospects.

"(But) you don't have flukes when you look at schools like New Bern, Havelock and Greenville Rose.

"One of the biggest misconceptions is that academically they can't cut it. That is shortchanging these kids. I think that come four years from now, Calvin, Barry and Derrick are going to be proof postive that they (Eastern North Carolina kids) can do it."

Hunter was a four-year starter for the Panthers, leading them to the playoffs in each of his final three seasons. As a sophomore and a junior, he was named the Daily Reflector's All-Area quarterback.

"In Calvin's situation, we really don't have a proven quarterback in camp," Sponhaltz said. "We have a backup who got some playing time (last year).

"With the background Calvin has, he is a guy who could come in and if he didn't start, could step in and help (eventually)."

Murry, the son of former ECU assistant football coach Don Murry, was one of the main reasons Rose had such a productive rushing attack this past season as the Rampants went undefeated and claimed the Big East Conference title. Murry was one of the linemen opening the holes for Tim Moore, Dave Daniels, Adrian Barnhill and Axel Smith.

"Of all the linemen I saw, fundamentally and mechanically, I did not see a better offensive lineman in North Carolina, South Carolina or Virginia," Sponhaltz said. "The size he weighs (5-10, 210) is not going to be a detriment. He obviosly is very coachable."

Credle played wide receiver and defensive back for the Vikings, who finished third in the Coastal Conference standings and made it to the 3-A playoffs. Credle earned All-Coastal Conference honors as a senior.

"Derrick really came on strong at the end of the year," Sponhaltz said. "We have all our defensive backs returning. (But) Derrick could very easily be some kind of a special teams person right away."

Former Rose baseball player Toby Fischer has just wrapped up the baseball season at Limestone College, which fielded its first baseball team ever under the guidance of Williamston native and former major league pitcher Gaylord Perry.

The team went 17-21, but Fischer, a junior transfer from Chowan, posted some impressive honors while playing both second and third base along with some time as a designated hitter.

He started 19 games and played in 27, hitting .278 with three doubles, one triple and three homers. He was one of the team's co-captains and was voted most popular player on the team.

He had only five errors all season and had a fielding percentage of .904.

"Toby was a sparkplug type," said Andy Solomon, Director of Communications for the college as well as one of the broadcasters for the team.

"He displayed a good amount of leadership and was well percieved by coach Perry and the players."

In the last game of the year against Erskine, Fischer keyed a late rally with a two-run homer that pulled Limestone within 13-11, but Erskine eventually came away with a 13-12 win.

Conley Tops Havelock, 9-3

HAVELOCK — Bronswell Patrick fanned 12 batters and also led Conley in hitting with three hits to lead D.H. Conley to a 9-3 win over Havelock in a Coastal Conference baseball game Friday.

Havelock took an early 3-0 lead with three runs in the top of the third but Conley scored two in the bottom of the inning and one run apiece in the fourth and fifth to take the lead for good.

In the third, Scotty Barnhill and Patrick singled. Barnhill moved to third on a pop up and Patrick stole second. Kervin Vines then reached on an error to score both runs.

Barnhill, Jim Faulkner and Nichols had two hits apiece to lead Conley, which moves to 14-5 and 8-2, which is good for first place in the Coastal.

Orioles Hand Stewart His 1st Loss

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Oakland's Dave Stewart had won eight games all by himself. The 34 players who have suited up for the Baltimore Orioles this season had combined for all of four victories.

So naturally the lowly (4-29) Orioles beat Stewart and the high-flying (24-9) Oakland Athletics 4-1 Friday night.

"If you keep taking your turn, eventually you're going to lose one," Stewart said. "I just try to go out and give it my best effort, 100 percent. If I do, there's nothing to worry about. I feel I did that tonight. I just came out on the losing end."

"We played as well as we have all year," said Baltimore's Fred Lynn, who put the Orioles ahead with a fourth-inning homer, doubled and scored in the eighth, and made a running catch before crashing into the wall in the seventh.

With two out in the Baltimore fourth, Eddie Murray homered to tie the score and Lynn promptly put the Orioles ahead. It was the first time this season they hit two home runs in an inning and only the second time they hit two in a game. Stewart had not allowed a homer in 57 1-3 innings.

Angels 5, Yankees 4

Brian Downing hit a two-out, two-run homer in the ninth inning, his first ever at Yankee Stadium. Reliever Cecilio Guante retired the first two batters but hit pinch hitter George Hendrick with a pitch. Downing then lofted a high fly ball just inside the left-field foul pole at the 318-foot mark.

"I thought it was a weak fly ball," Downing said. "I got lucky. I was in the right ballpark."

Tigers 7, Twins 0

Luis Salazar, Alan Trammell and Ray Knight homered in support of Doyle Alexander's seven-hit pitching. Alexander struck out six and walked one in handing the world champion Twins their 11th setback in 14 road games.

Salazar, who was 4-for-4, hit his fourth home run of the season in the first inning off Allan Anderson. Salazar started Detroit's three-run fourth with a single and Trammell followed with his fifth homer. With two out, Knight hit his first homer.

Red Sox 14, Mariners 8

Mike Greenwell drove in four runs with a pair of homers, Sam Horn hit a three-run shot and Rick Cerone added a solo shot as Boston won a nine-homer slugfest.

Four-time American League batting champion Wade Boggs broke an 0-for-10 drought with four consecutive singles, his first four-hit game of the season for the Red Sox, who had hit only 12 homers in their first 30 games.

Indians 4, Brewers 3

Cory Snyder greeted Milwaukee relief ace Dan Plesac with a three-run homer with two out in the eighth inning, giving the victory to Greg Swindell.

After allowing two runs in the first inning, Swindell, 7-1, retired 16 batters in a row. He needed relief from Doug Jones with two out in the eighth.

Rangers 2, Royals 1

Rookie Ray Hayward allowed six hits in 7 1-3 innings and Oddibe McDowell keyed a two-run second inning with an RBI triple as Texas stretched its winning streak to seven games.

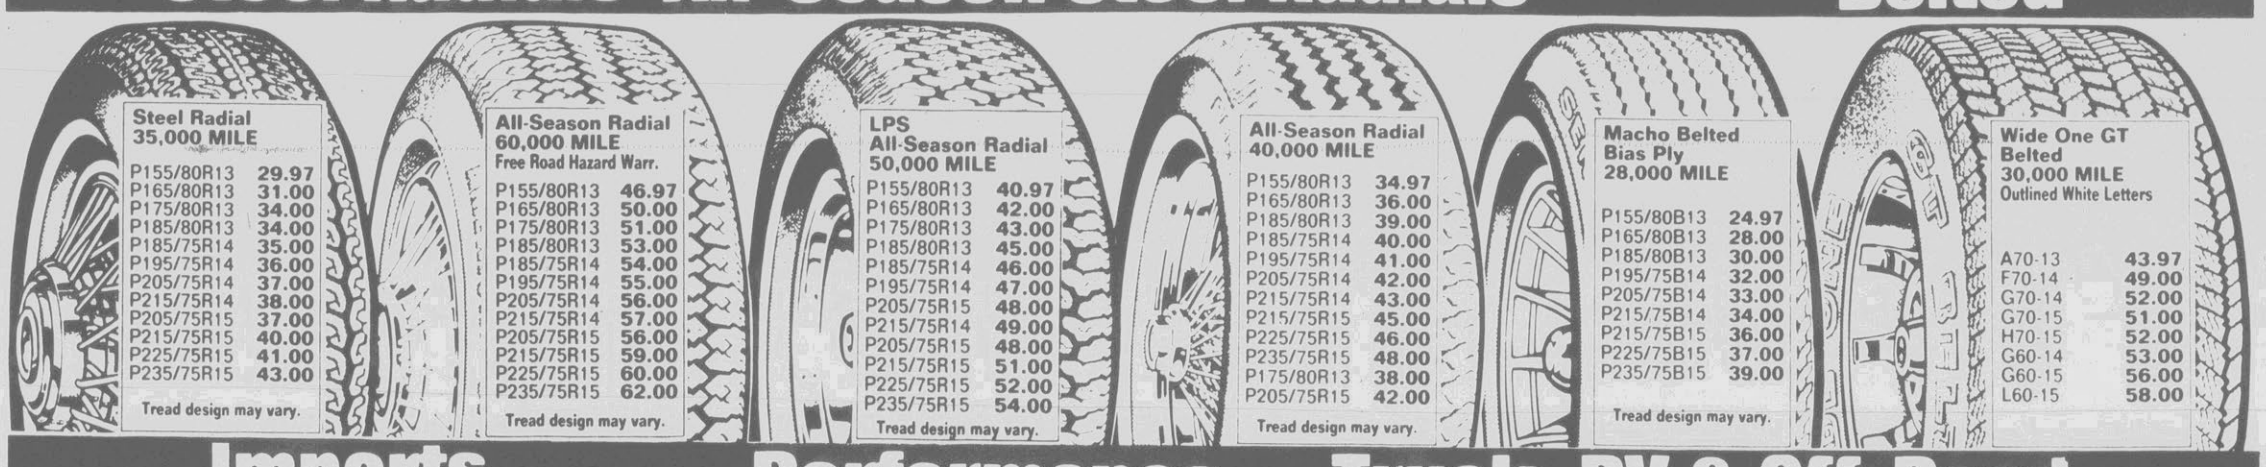

Hayward retired 15 straight batters from the first through the sixth inning in his third start since coming up from the minors. Kansas City's only run was George Brett's two-out solo homer in the first inning, his seventh.

White Sox 4, Blue Jays 1

Unbeaten rookie Melido Perez pitched a three-hitter for the first complete game of his career and Harold Baines broke an 0-for-8 drought with a two-run homer and a single.

Jazz Top Lakers For 2-1 Lead

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Los Angeles coach Pat Riley knows what the problem is against the Utah Jazz. The question is, "Can the Lakers do something about it before it's too late?"

"We were slow tonight," Riley said after the Jazz defeated the Lakers 96-89 Friday night to take a 2-1 lead in the best-of-seven playoff series. "Our whole attitude has to be up-energy. We have to take it to them."

For much of the game Friday, the Jazz took it to the defending NBA champions, who are trying to become the first team to repeat since the Boston Celtics did it in 1969.

Utah's Karl Malone scored 17 of his 29 points in the first half as the Jazz jumped to a 56-42 halftime lead and continued the assault early in the second half. The Lakers, behind Byron Scott's 14-of-23 shooting from the field, remained within striking distance and staged a late run, but could get no closer than four points in the final minutes.

"If it hadn't been for Byron Scott's perimeter shooting, we would have been blown out," Riley said. "Our attitude has to change collectively and individually.

"We made a hard run but came up short. If Kareem (Abdul-Jabbar), Earvin Johnson and James Worthy — those are the guys that we depend on — can't get the ball in the post or you cannot run sets for them, they've got to get it other ways."

Also Friday, Boston defeated Atlanta 108-97 for a 2-0 lead in the Eastern Conference semifinals.

In today's games, Denver was at Dallas and Detroit at Chicago in series that are tied 1-1. All four series resume Sunday.

The Jazz, who won at the Forum 101-97 Tuesday, made it two straight against the Lakers and five straight at home largely with a stingy defense led by Mark Eaton.

The 7-foot-4 center clogged up the middle once again, scoring 10 points, blocking six shots and grabbing 14 rebounds.

He held Abdul-Jabbar, the Lakers' 41-year-old center and the NBA's all-time playoff leader in scoring, to just six points on 3-of-14 shooting from the field.

"He was a little off tonight," Eaton said. "That was important down the stretch. I just try to push him a little farther out."

John Stockton, who finished with 22 points and 12 assists, stole the ball from Johnson and drove for a layup that gave the Jazz a 78-65 lead with 2:30 left in the third quarter.

"He was all over the court," Eaton said of the NBA's single-season assist leader. "I can still remember clearly the one steal where he came around Magic and stripped the ball from him. He was terrific."

Riley, whose team routed Utah 110-91 in the opener Sunday, said the Lakers have not been the same in their last two outings.

"From last Sunday until tonight it's like we're a different basketball team — totally," Riley said. "I don't know what happened. I'm going to try to get it back tomorrow."

Johnson, held to 16 points, said Eaton's inside play is hurting the Lakers.

"We just have to quit worrying about Eaton and go on out and play," he said. "In the first half I thought we were looking for him so much that made us miss. We just didn't take the best shot possible."

The Lakers, who have made the NBA finals six times since 1980, had a league-best 62-20 record during the regular season and swept San Antonio 3-0 in their opening-round playoff series.

"Not in our wildest dreams did we think we could be down 2-1, but it's reality now and we have to deal with that," Johnson said. "If we lose Sunday, we could be down 3-1 and our backs would be against the wall."

Celtics 108, Hawks 97

Boston squandered an early lead for the second straight game, but held on to beat Atlanta and pull ahead 2-0 in the Eastern Conference semifinals.

Kevin McHale scored 32 points and Dennis Johnson scored 10 of his 23 in the fourth period for the Celtics, who led 25-9 after one quarter.

The Hawks, who got 22 points from Dominique Wilkins, got as close as two points before a 10-4 spurt at the start of the fourth quarter put Boston back in control.

Walters Trial Is Rescheduled

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — The case against Norby Walters, a New York sports agent charged with three misdemeanors for dealing with two University of Alabama basketball stars, will be rescheduled within a month if no settlement is reached, prosecutors said.

At the request of state and defense attorneys, Circuit Judge John M. Karrh declared a mistrial Friday in the case.

"Both sides are talking in this situation," said Don Valeska, an assistant state attorney general. "Negotiations are continuing between the state and Norby Walters."

"We're either going to settle this case or go to trial," he said. "If we go to trial, our witnesses are ready and we're ready."

After declaring the mistrial, Karrh dismissed the jury that had been chosen to try Walters on criminal counts of commercial bribery, violation of deceptive trade law and tampering with a sports events. For days, the attorneys have been negotiating a settlement that would satisfy the university, which had to forfeit $250,000 in NCAA tournament playoff revenues because of Walters' dealings with Derrick McKey, Southeastern Conference player of the year in 1986-87.

After disclosures that McKey received money from Walters during that season, Alabama's best ever, he lost his senior year with the Crimson Tide because of NCAA rules.

Jordan Legend Growing With Each Passing Game

By BILL BARNARD
AP Basketball Writer

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — Michael Jordan's been called a monster, Superman and God by opponents in the NBA.

Jordan's mother, Deloris, knows better.

"He shocks me with some of the things he does out there on the court, but I know he's human," Mrs. Jordan said. "I was there when he was born."

Before Tuesday's opener of the Eastern Conference semifinal playoffs between Jordan's Chicago Bulls and the Detroit Pistons, Jordan was casually lacing up a new pair of Air Jordans when a young boy, part of the halftime tumbling show, shyly stepped forward.

"Can I look at your shoes?" he asked, then inspected them with wondrous eyes, searching for the secret within. Handing them back, the youngster said, "These will be flyin' later on."

Two hours later, those shoes indeed were flying on Jordan's feet, but not as high as he had become accustomed in the playoffs.

In the opener against the Pistons, he was 10-for-22 from the field and scored 29 points.

"We did everything possible and he still ended up with 29," Pistons coach Chuck Daly said. "He's a monster."

Larry Bird sees it differently.

"It's just God disguised as Michael Jordan," the Boston star said in April, 1986, after Jordan came back from a broken foot to score 131 pointed in three playoff games against the Celtics, including 63 in one game.

Jordan, who averaged 35.0 points and shot 53 percent from the field during this regular season, upped the ante to 45.2 points and 56 percent shooting in his first five playoff games, all against Cleveland.

"Guarding him is an honor, a thrill, a challenge, a nightmare," the Cavaliers' Craig Ehlo said. "It's all instincts with him. He has no tendencies. Everything's spontaneous; he just does it."

But as Jordan soared to 226 points, an NBA playoff record for a five-game series, questions resurfaced about whether a scoring champion can ever lead a team to a championship.

"If I didn't believe it, I wouldn't want to play," Jordan said. "The team is better this season. I'm getting better shots this season because I'm not having to force it."

Bulls coach Doug Collins said the balance issue is overblown because it puts too much stress on scoring.

"In the first two games against Cleveland, he carried us with 55 and 50 points," Collins said. "But in Game 5, everybody contributed. It's not always points that determine how you're playing. There's so much focus on Jordan's scoring, people forget that we led the league in defense and rebounding."

Whether the Bulls can win a title with Jordan scoring 44.3 percent of the team's points, as he did against Cleveland, or even 33.3 percent, as he did in the regular season, remains to be seen.

Chapman Opts For NBA

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Can Kentucky's Rex Chapman succeed in the National Basketball Association?

Chapman decided to give it a shot Friday, announcing that he was passing up his final two years of collegiate eligibility to make himself available for the NBA.

"I had mixed emotions," Chapman said. "This was much harder than picking a college. It's kind of a gut feeling that this is the best time for me."

"I think it will be a tough adjustment," Kentucky coach Eddie Sutton said at a news conference. "I hope he's drafted by a team that's well established like the Lakers or Celtics so that he won't be rushed" in his development.

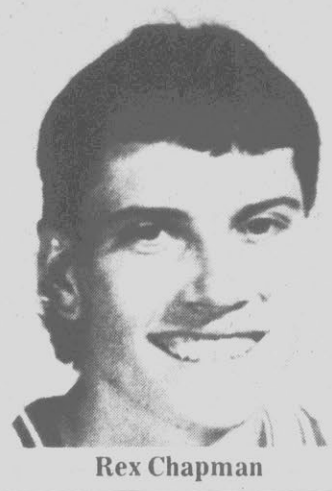

"I think they should stay in school," Marty Blake, NBA director of scouting, said of players leaving school for the pros. "Physially and emotionally, they are not ready. I don't think people realize how good the NBA is."

The NBA's deadline for underclassmen declaring for the June 28 draft is midnight tonight. Chapman mailed a letter to league commissioner David Stern on Friday, meaning there is no chance he can change his mind, NBA officials said.

Chapman, 20, refused to speculate on where he might be taken in the draft.

Only last month Chapman, a 6-foot-4, 185-pound guard, indicated that he would remain at Kentucky.

"It's strictly a business decision," Chapman said from his Owensboro home Friday. "There is only one reason to enter the NBA draft early ... because I feel I have the talent and the ability to utilize that talent, and the maturity that is needed."

More Than a Million Stripers Are Stocked from Hatchery

Just a couple of miles fown the river from Roanoke Rapids is the small town of Weldon, not known much for its plush hotels or night life. But it is sprinkled with a few bait shops and small hardware stores, and it boasts a fishing history worthy of being passed on for generations.

Weldon is also home to one of the state's more unique fish hatcheries operated by the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission. In a long, narrow cinderblock building that sits on the bank of the Roanoke River, biologists work 24 hours a day during the Spring to raise striped bass and striped bass-white bass hybrids.

From this hatchery, the Wildlife Commission expects to stock about 1.6 million young fish in the state's reservoirs and the Albemarle Sound this year.

The hatchery operation itself is more than a century old. In 1872, biologists with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service began taking female striped bass, commonly known as rock fish, from the Roanoke River during their annual spawning run. Those fish were "caught" the regular fishing way — with hook and line.

In the late 1800s, eggs were taken from the female stripers, fertilized by the male, then put back into the river to hatch. But with new tchnology, biologists can produce more fish by hatching the eggs in special hatchery jars. The young fish are then raised to whatever size desired before they are stocked.

Today, biologists use an electrofishing method in which charges of electricity are sent through the water from a boat. The fish are temporarily stunned, and when they come to the top of the water, they are scooped up in nets.

About 15 males and 15 females weighing between 12 and 17 pounds are placed in holding tanks filled with water from the Roanoke River at the Weldon hatchery. Biologists take samples of eggs from the female stripers to see when they will be ready to spawn (lay eggs).

When a female is ready, biologists remove the eggs, which can number in excess of a million. They fertilize the eggs using milt from the males, then put them in incubation jars until they hatch.

"After hatching, we hold them for about two days and then take the young fish out to one of the state or federal hatcheries that have rearing ponds," said Fred Harris, chief of the Commission's Division of Boating and Inland Fisheries. "We hold the fish in those rearing ponds until they're about two inches in size. That takes about six weeks."

The young fish — or fingerlings, as they are called by biologists — are then stocked in reservoirs such as Falls or Jordan. Some are stocked in the Albemarle Sound where they live most of their lives.

"The natural population of striped bass in the Albemarle Sound is at an historically low level, and some of the fish that are produced at Weldon are stocked back into the Albemarle Sound to support that population," Harris said. "We think that overfishing in the sound and water flows that are too low or high in the river are two big reasons for the decline in that population, but there may be others."

The second reason the hatchery is so important is because of "the spawning requirements of the fish. The striped bass normally lives in salt water and comes up into our rivers in the Spring to spawn," Harris said.

"When we stock striped bass in reservoirs, the lakes provide excellent habitat for growth, but not spawning habitat the fish need to maintain populations. Without these stockings, the populations would probably vanish eventually."

Black-Footed Ferrets Born

By BILL SCHULZ
Associated Press Writer

This week's birth of three black-footed ferrets in Wyoming brings hope for doubling the number of North America's rarest mammal.

"After this year, maybe they won't be'' the rarest, said Don Kwiatkoswki, ferret center biologist at the Sybille Wildlife Research and Conservation Education Center near Wheatland, Wyo.

All 15 females among the 24 animals at the center, all of the black-footed ferrets believed left in North America, were bred in March and April. It shows the biologists have found the right combination of handling in captivity, diet and light to stimulate breeding.

"We should double the population. We could do it. With a few things going right, going our way, we could do better than that," this spring, Kwiatkowski said.

Fourteen of the females bred normally. The 15th, Molly, refused all interested males. She was artificially inseminated.

Becky, one of two females who had kits last year, gave birth to three kits Tuesday. One died almost immediately. The others were small, but nursing.

"We don't check them. We don't disturb the nest," We have a camera through a small hole," said Kwiatkowski.

The gestation period is 42 days — meaning births could continue over the next month, possibly longer.

"We have some others that look like good bets, we just don't know how many are going to whelp. It's probably a safe assumption we will improve over last year in both numbers and percentage," Kwiatkowski said.

He said females show few signs of pregnancy until the final days before birth.

The entire known wild population of the weasel-like animals with black masks across their faces, was captured in 1985, 1986 and 1987. All were from the last known colony, at Meeteetse, Wyo.

Six of the nine males did the breeding this year.

The kits born this week were from the last male captured, in February, 1987. He had not bred before.

"We don't know if he was a breeder in the wild. This will provide us with his contribution to the species," Kwiatkowski said.

Every breeder is important, especially with such a small group of animals, as biologists try to get the largest possible gene pool and reduce possible problems caused by inbreeding.

Kwiatkowski said biologists at the Sybille center keep the animals in a controlled environment but do not try to duplicate their natural environment, the prairie dog towns of the North American prairie. The ferrets live among and prey on the prairie dogs.

"Most are in cages, but we do have four large dirt pens," Kwiatkowski said in a telephone interview from the center. "They are still nocturnal. We do provide them with an undisturbed environment. We provide them with three nest boxes and a latrine chamber and nesting chamber in each box."

Since the lengthing spring day controls the breeding cycle, "we have lots of windows. We make sure they get a lot of light. Also, the light in the building is coincidental with the light cycle," he said.

Spanish Mackerel Are In Abundance

By The Associated Press

The Spanish mackerel arrived in abundance along the North Carolina coast this weekend, catching many fishermen by surprise.

John Dudley of Dudley's Marina in Swansboro said he could not recall ever seeing the Spanish mackerel close to shore so early.

"I've never seen the Spanish in this early," Dudley said, "especially in abundance. The kings are early too, they are about a week early.

"They actually should be late according to the way the weather's been. You just can't figure it. That's what it makes it so much fun.

Hatteras

Dave Hissey of the Pelican's Roost said the fishing was excellent.

"We've had several good runs of drum on Cape Point and Hatteras Inlet. We've had good fishing for small blues, sea mullet and flounder," Hissey said. "Offshore fishing has been excellent for tuna, dolphin, king mackeral and wahoo. We had a 101-pound wahoo caught last week.

"We've had quite a few grey trout in Wallace Channel on Ocracoke and we're expecting the cobia run to start any day."

Topsail Island

"The fishing has been absolutely super," said Hollis Whitley of the Jolly Roger Pier.

"Monday, the Spanish mackerel came in. Also Monday, they caught a 63- and 64-pound amberjack."

Whitley said there were lots of blues in the area, as well as Virginia mullet and croaker. Whitley also reported that Don King of Topsail Beach caught the season's first king mackerel Wednesday afternoon, a 13-pounder.

Wrightsville Beach

"We've been getting some Spanish mackerel and blues," he said. "They do real good early in the morning and late in the evenings, not much during the day right now."

Nags Head

Andy McCann of the Nags Head Fishing Pier reported a big day Wednesday after a couple of slow days on Monday and Tuesday.

"It was real slow fishing Monday and Tuesday was even worse (but) our fishing has been excellent today," McCann said. "We've had the best day we've probably had since Easter. They had a real good run on grey trout. Anybody that went out there got grey trout.

"As soon as they started slowing up, people started catching spots and sea mullet. This has been going on all day."

Offshore, McCann reported catches of tuna and dolphin.

Swansboro

Besides the unannounced arrival of the Spanish and king mackerel, Dudley also reported some good offshore fishing.

"I've even seen some dolphin caught today, had three or four nice dolphin and some pretty grouper. They're nice big tuna, too. They're also catching big blues."

Domestic Auto Sales Up

By JANET BRAUNSTEIN
AP Auto Writer

DETROIT (AP) — The rush to beat widespread buyer-incentive deadlines boosted sales of domestic-made cars and light trucks 35.2 percent in early May compared with a year ago, industry analysts said Friday.

Automakers sold 204,270 domestic-made cars and light trucks in the eight selling days from May 1-10, up from 151,131 in the period a year ago, the companies reported.

Last year, the incentives expired in April, depressing sales in early May, said David Healy, analyst with Drexel Burnham Lambert in New York.

General Motors Corp., the industry leader, sold 35.1 percent more cars and light trucks, while No. 3 Chrysler Corp. sales jumped 48.6 percent from the low performance of a year ago.

Chrysler's sales rose on most vehicles, but particular improvements included a 72 percent increase in Jeep sales from sales by American Motors Corp. a year ago and a 55 percent increase in minivan sales.

Chrysler held 57 percent of the minivan market in April, said Chrysler spokesman Baron Bates.

Bates and Chrysler's director of sales operations planning, Steve Torok, attributed the increase in Jeep sales to increased production and greater consumer confidence in Jeep since Chrysler bought AMC in August.

For Ford Motor Co., the No. 2 maker, combined car and truck sales were up 31.5 percent and set a company record for the period. Ford's truck sales also passed GM's and set a separate company record for the period, said Ray Windecker, a Ford company analyst.

The Big Three extended their incentive programs after May 11 but reduced the numbers of models covered in some cases and cut the size of rebates on many vehicles because inventories have been cleared out.

GM's domestic-made car sales rose 36.4 percent, Ford's were up 30.5 percent and Chrysler's rose 44.8 percent from a year ago. GM light truck sales increased 32.1 percent, Ford's rose 32.9 percent and Chrysler's jumped 53.1 percent.

Nissan Motor Corp., Mazda Motor Corp. Honda Motor Co. and Toyota Motor Corp. all also reported increased sales of U.S.-made cars and, for Nissan, light trucks.

Volkswagen of America Inc., which is closing its Westmoreland, Pa., factory in July, has begun phasing down production there, leading to a decline in its domestic-car sales.

AMR Corp. Subsidiary Buys American Eagle

By JOHN BARE
Reflector Staff Writer

American Eagle Airlines, which conducts three daily commuter flights into and out of Pitt-Greenville Airport, has been purchased by a subsidiary of AMR Corp. as part of a bankruptcy agreement with AVAir.

"From what I understand, we are supposed to add additional flights to Greenville this year, but I'm not sure of the date," said Ed Moore, general manager of the American Eagle office in Greenville.

AMR Corp. is also the parent company of American Airlines, which is based in Dallas and has a hub at the Raleigh-Durham Airport, and PGV Director Jim Turcotte said a large corporation such as AMR will provide stability for American Eagle.

"As far as stability, as far as resources, as far as operating capital, it's the same company (operating American Airlines and American Eagle)," Turcotte said. Nashville Eagle Inc., a subsidiary of AMR, now operates American Eagle flights out of RDU.

"Everything is so much more secure now and our operation runs much smoother — as far as our flights and everything," said Moore. American Eagle shut down for two weeks in January after declaring bankruptcy, but with the financial backing of American Airlines they began flying again Feb. 3, he said.

"Our operation since we came back in February — well, it can't be beat," Moore said. "Last month we had 90 flights (out of Greenville), and two of them were late. To run 98 percent on-time, that can't be beat."

"Certainly it ensures that we will have a viable two-party organization out here," Turcotte said. "It makes the competition healthy, and it provides the traveling public with a number of choices." Piedmont also has a commuter airlines that serves Greenville.

American Eagle had six flights into and out of Greenville before declaring bankruptcy, and now they are down to three, but Turcotte said the move by AMR should give consumers more confidence in the airline. "I think the capitalization is there, and the public knows they can be assured that the planes can operate anytime," he said.

"We do have a good market share here, and we are picking up," Moore said. "We have a pretty good cut of the customers out of Greenville."

At one time as many as 1,600 passengers flew American Eagle into and out of Greenville each month, and though the number has fallen, more than 1,100 passengers are now flying the airline each month, Turcotte said, and he expects American Eagle officials to aggressively pursue more customers.

"I don't think there is any question about that," Turcotte said. "I think they've devoted most of their energy and attention to completing this purchase agreement, then they'll take a brief rest, then begin back in earnest with market research and advertising.

"Each hub of American's will have a regional air carrier system to feed that hub," Turcotte said. Nashville Eagle is the corporate name, and American Eagle is the name under which regional air carriers will fly.

Nashville Eagle, based in Nashville, Tenn., purchased $3 million in AVAir assets such as spare parts, furniture and other equipment and also assumed leases on 20 aircraft formerly operated by AVAir. The deal was part of an agreement worked out last month in U.S. Bankruptcy court in Lynchburg, Va.

Nashville Eagle now operates American Eagle flights in Nashville and Raleigh-Durham, Moore said, and AMR is in the process of acquiring another regional air carrier system in California.

"Commuter operations are really important to a hub," Moore said. "We serve 30 cities now out of Raleigh and Nashville."

AVAir moved its operations from Raleigh to Lynchburg last year after the American Airlines hub opened at RDU, and AVAir filed for protection from its creditors in January and closed operations for two weeks.

The company claimed $9.2 million in assets and $12 million in debts, including a $1.5 million debt to American Airlines, AVAir's largest unsecured creditor. American Airlines provided American Eagle with financial support to keep the airline going while the purchasing agreement was being finalized.

FSLIC Closes Cardinal Savings

NEWPORT, N.C. (AP) — Federal regulators have shut down insolvent Cardinal Savings Bank in Newport, making it the first S&L in North Carolina to fail in more than 50 years.

Cardinal's $91 million in deposits was transferred Friday to United Federal Savings and Loan Association in Rocky Mount, which will open four of Cardinal's five branches Monday. No depositors with less than $100,000 in their accounts will lose any money, the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. said.

Meanwhile, the FSLIC, which regulates savings institutions, took control of Cardinal's $94 million assets, mainly mobile homes and bond funds. The agency plans to sell those assets to recover some of the costs of taking over the S&L, which lost $33 million last year.

An FSLIC spokesman said the takeover is expected to cost the agency $34.4 million even after it sells the assets.

Most of Cardinal's workers, except those who will operate Cardinal's branches, are expected to lose their jobs after they help the FSLIC sell Cardinal's assets. An FSLIC spokesman said the agency would decide this weekend whether it would continue to employ the S&L's top officers, President Willard I. Gatling, who was assigned to run the S&L last year by regulators, and Frank Read, a senior vice president.

Cardinal's problems stem from its parent Conner Corp., once one of the nation's largest mobile home manufacturers and dealers but now under protection from creditors in U.S. Bankruptcy Court.

In 1984, Conner bought Cardinal, then called Sun Savings and Loan Association in Rocky Mount, from a group of business leaders. The mobile home dealer had loaded Cardinal up with $81 million in mobile home loans as of July, when Conner filed for bankruptcy.

Most of the loans were made in depressed rural and oil-producing areas, where buyers defaulted in staggering numbers. As of Dec. 31, 14 percent of Cardinal's loans were thought to be troubled, compared with an industry average in the Southeast of 0.3 percent.

As of Dec. 31, Cardinal's debts exceeded its assets by $25.6 million.

George C. King, head of the N.C. Savings and Loan Division, said Friday that after Conner filed for bankruptcy, Cardinal's problems grew because of a $10 million reserve for loan losses that regulators ordered Cardinal to set up.

Cardinal operated branches in Morehead City, Spring Hope, Warrenton and Rocky Mount as well as a loan office in Raleigh. United Federal, which paid $2.8 million to gain control of Cardinal's deposits, will close the Rocky Mount branch and might close the Raleigh office, but it is expected to operate the other branches.

Business Leaders Think Trade Bill Will Survive Veto

By DAVE SKIDMORE
Associated Press Writer

HOT SPRINGS, Va. (AP) — Business leaders and Reagan administration officials are betting that Democrats have worked too hard to fashion trade legislation to scuttle it after President Reagan's expected veto.

"Members of Congress have put a great deal of work in this legislation and my judgment is that these persons will not wish to see the bill disappear," U.S. Trade Representative Clayton K. Yeutter said. "They have a great deal of time, effort, energy and creativity invested in this piece of legislation."

Yeutter said he expected the president to deliver his veto message to Congress next week, but he said he was optimistic about it not meaning the end of the three-year effort to write the trade bill.

Although not specifically mentioning House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, by name, Yeutter noted that a provision repealing the windfall oil profits tax is dear to the hearts of Texas legislators.

"I suspect it will be particularly difficult for them to explain to Texas constituents that they were willing to drop a piece of legislation so important to the state of Texas," he said.

Reagan is vetoing the massive trade bill because of a provision that would require companies to give 60 days' notice of plant closings and major layoffs.

Yeutter said the technical language of the provision would provide "a field day for lawyers and a nightmare for American businessmen" by providing a legal basis for challenging virtually every plant closing or layoff.

American Express Co. Chairman James D. Robinson III, one of the executives attending the retreat ending today, acknowledged that a veto of the trade bill risked losing "very constructive" legislation, but he said, "The business community is prepared to take that risk."

"It's been called simple plant-closing legislation, well it's 10 sections and 56 subsections and inconsistent language," he said.

The business executives, in an economic report issued at the start of their conference, predicted that last year's record trade deficit of $171.2 billion would drop below $150 billion this year.

But, the forecast, which reflects a consensus of the member companies' chief economists, said the reduction would not be enough to stem the fall of the dollar.

It said the dollar, which has lost about half of its value against the Japanese yen in two years, would fall from its present level of 125 yen to about 115 yen by the end of 1989.

John S. Reed, chairman of Citicorp, the nation's largest bank holding company, said a substantial improvement in the trade deficit was iminent because of the devalued dollar.

Reagan Books Sell

NEW YORK (AP) — Writing about your ex-boss, who also happens to be the president of the United States, can be profitable.

A sampling of the crop of books on President Reagan by former administration officials shows that some of the authors have done quite well.

There was a first printing of 250,000 copies for Donald T. Regan's "For the Record: From Wall Street to Washington," to be published by Harcourt Brace Jovanovich on May 23. There's a second printing of 75,000, and the former White House chief of staff was given a $1 million advance. Regan says he is donating the advance and the proceeds of the book to charity.

Harper & Row spent a reported $2.4 million in 1986 for David Stockman's "The Triumph of Politics: Why the Reagan Revolution Failed." The investment seems to have paid off for both the publisher and the former director of the Office of Management and Budget with 325,000 books in print.

"Revolution," a book written by Martin Anderson, former assistant to the president for policy development, to be published on May 18, has a first printing from Harcourt of 25,000.

Charles Scribner's Sons published "Speaking Out" earlier this year by Larry Speakes, Reagan's former spokesman. The book had a first printing of 100,000 copies, and Speakes and co-author Robert Pack received a six-figure advance.

However, there were only 35,000 books in print for former deputy White House chief of staff Michael K. Deaver's "Behind the Scenes," published by William Morrow Co. in 1987.

Forecast Boosts Soybean Quotes

By DAVID DISHNEAU
Associated Press Writer

Soybean futures prices skyrocketed Friday and grain futures also advanced after the National Weather Service predicted a month of drier-than-normal growing conditions.

On other markets, precious metals were higher; cattle futures rose while pork futures were mixed; energy futures were slightly higher; and stock-index futures advanced.

Soybean futures, which had posted strong gains in five of the six previous sessions, leaped as much as 14 cents a bushel on the Chicago Board of Trade and set new contract highs across the board.

The National Weather Service said in its 30-day outlook that the Ohio River valley, central Mississippi River valley and the Mississippi Delta region would all be drier than normal.

The large speculative firms Refco Inc. and C&D Commodities led the trading, analysts said.

"They were using that forecast as an excuse to rally the (soybean) market," said Jon Horton, an analyst at Research Department Inc. in Chicago. "It's still a bull market, so everyone's back in it on the long side."

Some private forecasters also reduced their predictions for rain over the weekend, said Mickey Luth, soybean analyst with Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc.

The soybean market is particularly sensitive to weather concerns because of indications that the U.S. soybean stockpile is dwindling and a large crop is needed to meet expected demand.

Some analysts have called the recent soybean speculation excessive but Luth questioned that opinion.

"Who knows? From an over-all balance sheet point-of-view, maybe the soybeans should have been up here anyway," he said.

Wheat settled 3½ cents to 4¾ cents higher with the contract for delivery in May at $3.06 a bushel; corn was ¾ cent to 1¼ cents higher with May at $1.97 a bushel; oats were ½ cent to 2 cents higher with May at $1.57¼ a bushel; soybeans were 9 cents to 14 cents higher with May at $7.19½ a bushel.

The surge in soybean futures supported expectations for higher inflation, which helped boost precious metals futures prices, analysts said.

Platinum futures led group, which had been flagging in reaction to a government report issued early Friday that said wholesale prices had risen a moderate 0.4 percent in April. The inflation-sensitive metals markets had expected a great-er increase.

"Better buying emerged late in the session as soybean and some other markets firmed," said Stephen W. Platt, an analyst in Chicago with Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. "That mitigated the effects of the Producer Price Index for April and tended to fuel inflationary expectations that have been building recently."

Platinum settled $6.70 to $7.20 higher on the New York Mercantile Exchange, with July at $550.30 a troy ounce.

On the Commodity Exchange in New York, gold settled $1.50 lower to 40 cents higher with June at $453.70 a troy ounce; silver was 4.8 cents to 5.8 cents higher with May at $6.632 a troy ounce.

Advances in the cattle pit were limited by position-eve-ning ahead of Monday's seven-state cattle-on-feed report, which is expected to show few-er feedlot placements during April compared to last year and a nearly equal number of April marketings, analysts said.

Support for the hog and pork belly contracts stemmed from expectations that cash markets will remain firm as hog slaughters experience a seasonal de-cline, said Philip Stanley, an analyst in Chicago with Thom-son McKinnon Securities Inc.

Live cattle settled .15 cent to .65 cent higher with June at 73.80 cents a pound; feeder cattle were unchanged to .48 cent higher with May at 80.77 cents a pound; hogs were .13 cent lower to .43 cent higher with June at 53.55 cents a pound; frozen pork bellies were .35 cent lower to .38 cent higher with May at 54.40 cents a pound.

West Texas Intermediate crude oil settled 4 cents lower to 4 cents higher with June at $17.49 a barrel; heating oil was .15 cent to .30 cent higher with June at 47.47 cents a gallon; unleaded gasoline was .15 cent lower to .42 cent higher with June at 52.34 cents a gallon.

Hundreds Go Out To Pick Strawberries

By JOHN BARE
Reflector Staff Writer

Pat Tutino of Greenville visited Dews Berry Farm in Winterville last Wednesday morning — her first visit ever to a pick-your-own strawberry farm — and she gathered 16 pounds of strawberries in about 20 minutes.

"This is the first time I've ever picked strawberries, and it's wonderful," Ms. Tutino said as she wrote out a check for two cardboard boxes heaped full of red berries.

Ms. Tutino, who moved from Pennsylvania to Greenville 10 months ago, said she planned to freeze some strawberries, use some for a strawberry shortcake and some for her first attempt at making strawberry jam.

Kenneth Dews Sr. said his family has been raising strawberries on the 3.5-acre family farm, located on N.C. 903 about three miles from N.C. 11, for about 12 years, and they have a steady flow of patrons.

"We've had as many as 700 people go through in a day," Dews said. "Some of them will pick a quart, some will pick 50 pounds.

"People, historically, like to pick berries when they're at their peak, and when there are plenty of them and they're ripe. And all that depends on the weather," he said.

Pitt County strawberries should reach their peak in the next seven days, and so far the weather has cooperated, Dews said. "It started out kind of cool, but the last week has been almost ideal."

Pitt County farmers grow about 15 acres of strawberries each year, according to agricultural extension agent Sam Uzzell. "Normally, there's a sufficiency for anyone who wants to go and pick some," Uzzell said. "On a good strawberry plant it's easy to pick a bunch in a short time."

Vendors at the Pitt County Farmers Market sell mainly vegetables, said market director Provert Lassiter, but there are usually a few strawberries for sale and they go quickly.

"We had a few last Saturday, but they didn't last long. Everybody wants strawberries, and that's good," Lassiter said. "We're hoping to have a lot more come out."

"This is the best crop we've ever had — the best, nicest berries," said Dan Gooding, who weighs the berries on large Toledo scales and rings up purchases at the Dews farm on an old Burroughs cash register with a lever that opens the cash drawer and a matrix of punch keys that don't work anymore.

Strawberries cost $1 a pound at Dews if they pick them, and the pick-your-own sell for 60 cents a pound — about a nickel less than last year, said Gooding, who kept a cigar in his mouth and three more in his shirt pocket.

Gooding, who built more than 15 wooden hand crates for pickers to carry into the field, also totes berries to customers' cars, directs anxious preschoolers to the richest areas of the field and generally holds down the fort from 7:30 a.m. until the last berry is picked in the evening.

"It's going to get better. The next week or so will be our peak — weather permitting," Gooding said.

New Bern and some other areas in eastern North Carolina were hit with hail and severe weather Tuesday night, but only a rainshower fell on the Dews farm and Gooding said more light showers would help.

"We were holding our breath all the time," Dews said of the hailstorm that just missed Pitt County. "With a hailstorm like they had in New Bern, it would have ruined these berries, everyone of them."

Wednesday was all blue skies and sunshine, and Dews said the green berries would ripen in a matter of hours, and the smaller buds would be ready for picking in three to four weeks.

Warm nights also help ripen the berries, Dews said."We had been picked almost clean on Sunday, and just overnight they ripened back up."

Nineteen students from the Waldrop Acres Preschool in Winterville did their best to pick the field clean last week during their visit to Dews farm — the first step in the students' recipe for making strawberry shortcake for their noontime dessert Thursday.

About two school groups visit the Dews farm each day to pick strawberries and get a firsthand look at a farm. The trips are educational, Gooding said.

"Oh, yeh, they love it," Amy Maness, a teacher at Waldrop, said of the children's visit to the strawberry field. "Every year we do a big thing on strawberries, and we go back to the school and have strawberry shortcake made with the strawberries they picked."

"Waldrop has done this for years," said Gloria Moore, director of the preschool. "This is our springtime thing."

Five-year-old Kate Frieman, formerly of Boston, carried a white Styrofoam cup with her name printed on the side in blue ink and berries piled over the edge.

"I love them," Miss Frieman said. Most of the students ate as they picked and Miss Frieman's violet- and white-striped outfit was splashed with bright red strawberry juice.

The eastern North Carolina sunshine also appealed to Miss Frieman, who said she was glad to be rid of the harsh Massachussets winters. "I was trying to escape from the snow. I hate snow."

In addition to the cupfuls the students picked, six adults gathered strawberries for the students' shortcake. "I think they're about the biggest I've ever seen. They really are big and pretty," said Ms. Maness — or "Miss Amy" as the students shouted to her — who picked 10 pounds.

There should be strawberries available into early June, Gooding said, and the Dews farm is open all day Monday through Saturday, and from 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. on Sunday.

"We get a lot of people after work. It's cooler, you see, and the people who can't stand the heat can wait until later in the afternoon," Gooding said.

Former Lawyer Now Photographing Flowers

By ANGUS PHILLIPS
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — They ought to make a bumper sticker for Jessie Harris's four-wheel-drive Bronco: "So Many Wildflowers, So Little Time ..."

Harris is on a mission. Now that she's unfettered by the workaday world, she aims to photograph every species of wildflower known to exist in the Northeast.

That's 5,000 little flowers, not counting those that bloom on bushes and trees. In the first 10 years of her quest she's already put 3,000 on film.

That was the easy part. Now the examples come deeper in the woods, ever farther from home. Her trips run from one to five weeks, from Florida to Georgian Bay in northern Canada, just Harris and her old dog Rasky in the Bronco, living in a tent, munching peanut butter sandwiches, wandering the woods, mountains and stream banks alone from dawn till dusk, day after day.

As the remaining species get harder and harder to find, will she ever finish? "Oh, I'll be lucky to finish before I'm dead," said Harris, chuckling contentedly.

So what makes her continue?

"I suppose it's just my cataloging mentality," she said.

Welcome to the consuming world of wildflowers, which for Harris replaced a differently consuming world when she left her job as a Washington lawyer a decade ago.

She didn't plan it this way; just got sick of lawyering, "playing God," as she put it, and with time on her hands began photographing wildflowers, renewing an acquaintance with the delicate, evanescent beauties she had enjoyed as a child in Wheeling, W.Va.

Next thing she knew, she'd quit her three-pack-a-day cigarette habit and was on a mission, scratching out modest earnings selling her photos, preparing her yet-unpublished book, "Roadside Wildflowers — a Guide for the Glove Compartment," and wandering the East in search of toothworts, spring beauties, adder's tongues and skunk cabbage; bloodroot, round-leaf hepatica, pussytoes, dutchman's breeches, May apples, toad-shaped trillium and purple dead nettles.

What began as a hobby grew into

Direct-Mail Buying Is U.S. Convenience

EDITOR'S NOTE — Take a phone book, some census data, ZIP codes and auto registration lists. Add a computer, credit cards and 800-prefix phone numbers and you have the main ingredients for an enterprise that's one of the wonders of the Western world — direct-mail marketing as refined, with amazing ingenuity, in the United States. Here's an intriguing report on how the numbers magicians do it.

By SID MOODY
AP Newsfeatures Writer

To keep on eating, he broke the blockade by placing an ad in House & Garden offering tubes of whiskey-flavored toothpaste. He sold 100,000 before the year was out. A bottle opener in the shape of dentures sold even better.

Spencer Howell had rediscovered a sales tool as ancient as the Babylonians: direct mail. Instead of waiting for the customers to come to you, go to them.

Some 6,000 to 10,000 catalog retailers — the figure varies — do just that, 11.8 billion catalogs a year, according to trade groups. They range from titans such as L.L. Bean in Maine to Lands' End in Wisconsin to Sears, Roebuck and Co. anywhere to Larry Selman in Santa Cruz, Calif., who sells glass paperweights from a $15 catalog including a toadstool-shaped antique you can have for $27,000.

The average American home gets 50 catalogs a year. A burdened letter carrier delivered 324 catalogs to this writer between last Labor Day and Thanksgiving.

Last year 88 million Americans — 51.2 percent of the adult population — bought something by phone or mail. Direct mail has had a 15 percent annual growth (30 percent for upscale catalogs) since 1970, compared to 5-10 percent for store sales. This is 8.3 percent of the nation's general merchandise sales. Direct mail is a high-tech, almost scientific, business which undoubtedly has the brains to overcome April's 30 percent third class postal hike by becoming even more so.

Little of this would have been possible without the computer, the credit card and the 800-prefix telephone number. And above all, the mailing list. The mailing list stems from four of the more mundane items on this part of the planet: the phone book, census reports, ZIP codes and your car registration.

Mailing list compilers can get more info from these bare numbers and names than a Biblical exegete could from the Dead Sea Scrolls. Donnelley Marketing, one of the big compilers, says it has more doctors of philosophy interpreting the data than the neighboring Stamford, Conn. hospital has doctors of medicine.

Babylonian catalogs came on cuneiformed clay tablets. After Gutenberg invented movable type, Aldus Manutius of Venice had a catalog of books he published of Greek and Latin authors. Ben Franklin — who else? — put out a catalog of 600 books in 1744. American colonials bought everything from lace cuffs to musket balls by mail from the Mother Country.

But Montgomery Ward is the direct father of today's direct mail. His 1872 catalog promised farmers savings of up to 40 percent by eliminating the middleman for items ranging from harnesses to parasols. The first compiler was not far behind.

He probably was Lester Martin, clerk of Story County, Iowa, who discerned that the registrees of Henry Ford's new tin lizzies were not only farmers but the wealthier of the breed. Such names might mean money. Martin got rights to the names and opened the M and F Mailing Co. with his brother-in-law. Reuben H. Donnelley, another visionary, bought them out in 1917.

This vision comes true daily at Donnelley's computer operation in Lincoln, Neb. There the names and addresses from the nation's 2,700 telephone books are "laboriously converted to computer language," says Dick Vincent, Donnelley's director of marketing services. An average directory takes six weeks to computerize.

But what's in a name?

Not a whole lot until those computers start comparing notes with other computers. Census data, for instance, tell how many people live at a phone address. It gives particulars on value of home, income.

The name begins to take on some flesh.

Compare those results with motor vehicle registrations, compiled by the R.L. Polk Co. of Taylor, Mich. Two cars at the same address? Maybe mom works. An RV? Somebody goes camping. Station wagon? Kids. Sports car? A carefree young in heart if not in fact, a spender.

Add some input from ZIP. Admittedly these can be misleading, says Larry Heely, a mailing list executive at Direct Media in Port Chester, N.Y. The same ZIP code in Chicago contains the wealthy living in high-rises along the lakefront and the decidedly unwealthy only a few blocks inland.

"ZIPs are not homogeneous," says Bill Weisshahar at Donnelley's computer facility in Nevada, Iowa. So some firms like Claritas in Chicago dissect who lives where within a ZIP and divides the United States into 250,000 neighborhoods.

"When I got out of college, I moved into an apartment with orange-crate furniture and tacked posters on the wall for decor," says Dave Chambers of Claritas. "I've moved up and away, but the new tenant probably still has orange crates and tacked posters. Birds of a feather flock together." All the easier, then, to identify the flock.

This computerized database from national sources — about half the states will sell vehicle registration lists — is then inspected, rejected and detected as closely as a 280-pound woman discus thrower from behind the Iron Curtain.

Almost everybody buys mailing lists from everybody else to try to find out who John and Jane Doe are behind the door at 000 Main Street, Centerville and just what it is they want to buy. Do they subscribe to The New Yorker? Upscale. Money magazine? Strong evidence of loose change. National Geographic? Travelers, armchair or actual. Field & Stream? And live in rural Colorado? And own a camper? John and Jane are going to hear from Eddie Bauer and Orvis. If they buy a sleeping bag and a fly rod, L.L. Bean and Norm Thompson won't be far behind.

"It's mind-boggling how many sources of data there are," Chambers says. Credit card applications. Mortgage loans. Alumni directories. Charitable donations. Building permits. Voting lists. Computers cross-reference all this to draw a profile.

Many hospitals sell lists of new mothers. That's grist for the baby catalogs. And, in time, grist for kitchen appliances, toys, back-to-school wear, home computers, brides and eventually — particularly if the addressee has had the same phone for 30 years — empty nest catalogs.

To keep all this straight, lists are continually subjected to merge-purge, eliminating duplications, merging the newly born and purging the newly departed, since even direct mail cannot reach beyond the grave.

Omaha Steaks International, say, will take a hint from this list, one from another and make a very educated guess as to who's entertaining a lot, having first, of course, cross-checked with the vegetarian list. Maybe it will be a Jaguar owner in an upscale ZIP code with a bouncing new mortgage on a showplace address who subscribes to Gourmet and Gentleman's Quarterly and recently bought a crystal table set from Bloomingdale's by mail.

Female Enrollment Is Up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Enrollments in the nation's women's colleges are rising, according to a survey conducted by the Women's College Coalition headquartered here.

The survey reports that inquiries for the current academic year (1987-1988) increased by almost 12 percent; freshman applications were up about 4.5 percent; full-time freshman enrollments were up for the second year in a row, registering a 2.3 percent increase; part-time undergraduates were up almost 3 percent, following the unbroken upward trend started in the early '70s.

The survey data came from 51 of the 96 women's colleges in the country today. They span 18 states and the District of Columbia and include public and private, independent and churchnd hearing children will share a day-camp experience this summer at 15 YM-YWHA and community centers, according to the UJA-Federation of New York. A grant from the federation will pay for deafness resource consultants at the camp sites.

The program is good for both sets of campers, notes Lynn Weintraub, a Lexington School for the Deaf teacher who coordinates the sessions.

The children with good hearing learn the language of signs, and they find out first-hand that deaf people have the same abilities for learning, friendship and fun as they do, she points out. The hearing-impaired youngsters learn to work and play with children who do not share their impairment.

The children without hearing difficulties will learn through stories and books what it means to be deaf, what sounds deaf people may actually hear and why people may sound different when they speak.

Young Scholars Acclaim Einstein

WASHINGTON (AP) — Given the opportunity, which living or dead scientist would you most like to know, and why?

That question was posed to the 40 national finalists from 17 states who met here recently to share $140,000 in scholarship and cash awards in the 47th annual Westinghouse Science Talent Search.

The 26 boys and 14 girls are all high school seniors whose independent research projects in science and mathematics were adjudged the most outstanding among 1,339 entries by an independent board of eight scientists.

The overwhelming majority of STS winners opted for scientists who are no longer living. Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Edison, Sigmund Freud, John Dalton and Leonardo da Vinci were among those named.

Slightly more than 25 percent cited physicist Dr. Albert Einstein, whose theory of relativity revolutionized much of science, while Sir Isaac Newton, formulator of the laws of gravity and the elements of differential calculus, ranked a close second, with 23 percent of the students mentioning him.

The brilliance and genius of both men were noted repeatedly. Inspiration, mind-probing and learning more were the primary reasons for wanting to know them.

More subtle reasons were expressed as well. For example, Scott Ryder, 18-year-old senior at Edison High School in Fresno, Calif., most admires Einstein "because he never let a challenge beat him."

Former Lawyer...

an obsession. "I could never go back to working indoors now," she said.

Harris was perched on a rock in the woods off the C&O Canal near Great Falls, Md. In her backpack lay her old Olympus camera with the macro lens and a dog-eared copy of the wildflower hunter's bible: "Peterson's Field Guide."

Under her feet, a small lizard skittered around in the dry leaves; a warm, spring sun beat down through the trees. All around, the ground was littered with spring wildflowers in bloom.

Virginia bluebells by the thousands dressed the damp, low places in a riot of pink and pale blue; there were bluets and common violets, rue anemone, moss pink, cinquefoils; grape hyacinths, golden alexander, saxifrage by the basketful; trout lilies, sweet cicely, squirrel corn, kidney-leafed buttercups, solomon seal and wild geraniums, woodland phlox, yarrow.

How could anyone possibly remember all these names?

Nobody can, of course, and Harris continually checked her various field guides and wracked her brain as forgotten species popped up in flower. "Come on, Jessie," she'd mutter. "It'll come to me in a minute."

The best way to remember, of course, "is to look them up yourself," said Harris, brandishing her Peterson's. "If someone tells you a name, you always forget it. But if you go through the agony of looking up all the characteristics yourself and finally find it, you'll never forget."

And few places are better than Washington's close-in suburbs this time of year for testing one's memory. "In the canal-river area from Carderock (Md.) to Great Falls," said Harris, "there is probably more biological diversity than anywhere in Maryland. This is a very special place."

The area has a broad range of wildflower habitat, from natural river bottom to creek banks and ponds, from the disturbed ground of the canal banks to steep hillsides, deep forest and sunlit, rocky cliffs so dry and hot they support native Eastern cactus, among other things.

The Potomac River brings odd species, too, Harris said. She's found wildflowers listed as indigenous to Florida nestled under the Chain Bridge connecting Washington, D.C., and Virginia.

Into a wild and natural place she comes wandering, eyes to the ground, walking slowly, hoping to unearth some peculiar breed listed on the wildflower "watch list" of unusual and disappearing species.

It's curious sport, if you could call it sport. The pace is hardly aerobic."

ELDERLY TAKE RISKS

QUINCY, Mass. (AP) — The elderly, both the 65 to 74 age group, and the very elderly, those over 75, are at special, increased risk from home fires, particularly if their mobility is limited, according to a recent study.

The study from the National Fire Protection Association here, "Patterns of Civilian Fire Casualties in Home Fires by Age and Sex, 1981-85," documents patterns of "risk" that a person will be killed or injured in a home fire. It also showed that males are at a greater risk of fire death and injury than females.

GOOD REFERENCES NEEDED

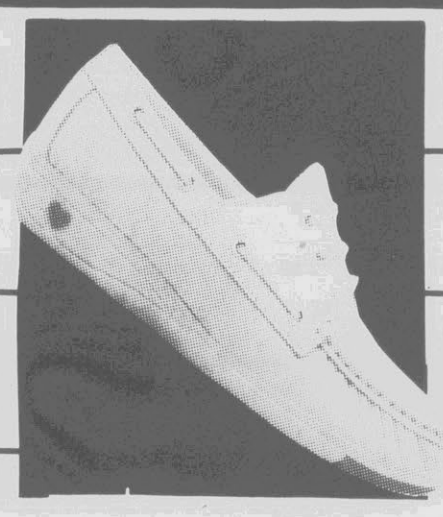

NEW YORK (AP) — References are often the most overlooked part of a job hunt but are vitally important, says Andrew Sherwood, chairman of Goodrich and Sherwood, a human resources management consulting firm.

Although there are no guarantees that a reference will be entirely laudatory, he concedes, you can help ensure a positive one by asking those you list for permission to do so and informing those you've worked with that they may be called.

Sherwood suggests that those you think might be contacted should be sent a brief reference checklist of key facts about you and your experience. Include special skills, strengths, accomplishments, relations with coworkers and reasons for leaving.

Abby Readers Respond To Mail Call

DEAR ABBY: Please help us thank all the wonderful people who were kind enough to send letters, Valentines and Easter greetings to us aboard the USS Tower. More than 30,000 Dear Abby readers flooded our ship with messages of love and gratitude —— some sent candy and cookies. Our lone postal clerk went bananas!

Morale is certainly high out here; many crew members are corresponding with those who wrote. However, some letters were separated from their envelopes, and others had no return addresses. Even if they were intact, there is no way a crew of this size could answer each writer individually. But we want to thank everyone who wrote.

Each one of us is proud to be an American, proud to serve in the military, and proud to know that we are defending so many caring and loving people. —— MIKE CERVI FOR THE CREW OF THE USS TOWER

DEAR MIKE: I appreciate the explanation. Some disappointed readers wrote to say that they had written per my suggestion, but received no feedback. I was assured by the military that if one ship had more mail than it could handle, the overflow would be transferred to another ship. Dear Abby readers don't care where their letters land —— as long as they're read.

DEAR ABBY: I was very much impressed with your efforts to cheer up American troops who are far from home in the service of their country. And judging from the letters you received from grateful servicemen, it was a great morale booster. However, being a serviceman myself (Army), I was disappointed to see the U.S. Navy get all the attention. I am stationed in Korea in the DMZ (Demilitarized Zone), and there are Air Force and Marine troops over here, too, you know.

We are stranded up here for a year at a time guarding against North Korean troops trying to infiltrate. So, please, Abby, give us a break and direct a little mail our way. —— J. YARGO (DMZ, KOREA)

DEAR J. YARGO: Here's your letter, and don't say I didn't warn you. Just wait until this hits print.

Readers, how about cheering up our men and women in the Army, Air Force and Marines? Write to: Operation Dear Abby-DMZ, c/o Commanding Officer, CO C 122 Signal BN, Camp Casey, Korea 96224-0346.

DEAR ABBY: Will you please settle an argument between my husband and me? Recently my mother's brother died. He and my mother had a falling out seven years ago, and they had not spoken to each other since.

My mother chose not to go to her brother's funeral. My husband said she should have gone and paid her last respects. My mother said, "I'm no hypocrite. We didn't respect each other while he was living; why should I pay my respects when he's dead?"

My husband thinks my mother was wrong. I think she was right. What do you think? —— DYING TO KNOW

DEAR DYING: Funerals are for the living. The deceased will not know who was there and who wasn't —— but the grieving family members will. I think your mother's presence at her brother's funeral would have comforted the family —— after all, they were brother and sister. Had she attended his funeral and buried her grievances, it might have made her feel better.

DEAR ABBY: I have some good news for the 60-year-old Ohio farmer who, though married, had not experienced marital relations for many years.

The last 12 years of a previous 35-year marriage were also void of all marital relations. As a healthy male, this caused me considerable frustration. At 53, I wondered if I had become impotent.

At age 65, my sexless marriage was terminated when my wife died. Shortly after, I ran into a former high school sweetheart whose marriage had been terminated (unknown to me) 12 years earlier! Our romance resumed and we were married on Valentine's Day.

Abby, I have no idea how old one must be when the bells stop ringing, but at 65, they rang again for me, and life was every bit as exciting (romantically speaking) as it had been 40 years ago.

It takes the right partner to return love and affection in the same manner it is given. Thank God for my lovely bride!

I am signing my name, and you may use it. — WILLIAM HUFFMAN, WINSTON-SALEM, N.C.

DEAR MR. HUFFMAN: And thank you for giving me permission to publish your wonderful letter.

DEAR ABBY: Four years ago my husband had an affair with a young woman in his office. She told him her husband had been consistently unfaithful. This affair lasted two years.

I have been 100 percent true to my husband, but I am reasonably certain that the woman in his office was not his only affair. He is very attractive and friendly, and his business takes him out of town, so I am not being unduly suspicious.

With all this talk about AIDS, I would like my husband to be tested. He refuses, saying I am being vindictive, bitchy, punitive and insulting. Am I? I don't think I am. I have an appointment to be tested, and pray I test negative. I just want to make sure that one of us is around to raise our three children who are all under 18. — WORRIED WIFE

DEAR WIFE: I think you're a wise woman. Take the test. But be aware that there are false positives and false negatives, so I recommend that you be tested again in about six months. Your husband should be tested, too. But testing isn't enough. If he continues to have extramarital affairs, he must learn safer sex techniques and follow them to the letter.

LOVE INC. Provides A Helping Hand To Needy

EDITOR'S NOTE — A Michigan man seven years ago created LOVE INC., a clearinghouse and referral service to link those in need with the agency or group most able to help. It has now grown to a network of 50 local programs in 14 states, involving 1,300 churches of 50 denominations.

By LISA PERLMAN
Associated Press Writer

HOLLAND, Mich. (AP) — One year ago Diana Huckaba was in almost constant pain — physical and mental.

A spinal defect resulting from childhood scoliosis and worsened by a later auto accident kept the Allendale woman in bed all day, "thinking nobody cared." A single mother, she scraped by on Social Security disability checks.

Then her furnace broke.

"I had no money and didn't know where to turn," says Huckaba, 37. "But as it turned out, that furnace breaking was the turning point in my life."

When Huckaba called the heating company, she ended up speaking to the local program director of LOVE INC. Before she knew it, she had a new furnace. Soon after, she had a new outlook on life.

In cases like these, LOVE INC. provides the missing link, says Virgil Gulker, founder of the nationwide church services network.

Gulker began the first LOVE INC. program in this southwest Michigan city in 1981 while working for a church-sponsored community agency.

He was frustrated that the vast resources of area churches, mainly their volunteers, were not being tapped to help meet the community's needs.

Gulker saw the waste created by agencies and private organizations that duplicated services because they lacked a clear idea of what others did.

He was frustrated by the "holiday food basket syndrome," the tendency by churches to provide groceries at Thanksgiving or a coat at Christmas, while ignoring deep-seated problems faced daily by members of the community.

Guided by the belief that a church's resources, if organized effectively, could meet almost every need of a community, Gulker set out to create LOVE INC., local clearinghouses that would keep inventories of services provided in a community and link those in need with the agency or group most able to help. Where a need couldn't be met by an existing group, LOVE INC. would tap the resources of the church.

Since its inception, LOVE INC. has expanded to 50 local programs in 14 states, linking 1,300 churches of 50 denominations and meeting about 12,000 individual needs each month, Gulker says.

What sets LOVE INC. apart from other church-sponsored organizations is that it is strictly a clearinghouse and referral service. Its volunteers do not provide any direct assistance. That's left up to the agencies or churches to which the person in need is referred.

"We have a saying here, 'We will not knowingly help anyone,'" Gulker says. "That sounds awful, but it's the only way a program like this can work."

If a person has a need that a government or private agency is not equipped to meet, or if the person does not meet specific eligibility requirements, a participating neighborhood church is called upon to help.

One of LOVE INC.'s most important responsibilities, Gulker says, is to ensure that community services provided are not duplicated.

"In one community, clothing was provided so readily and without a governing policy, that some families stopped doing their laundry," he says. "When their clothes would get dirty, they'd throw them out and get more.

"Through our failure to communicate, as agencies and church representatives, we have created that dependency. We have said to these people, 'There's no need to be personally responsible for your own situation, we will take care of that for you.'"

To end the chronic dependent's cycle, LOVE INC. encourages churches to attach "self-help" conditions to assistance so the individual can become self-sufficent.

For example, a person who continually asks a church to help meet rent payments would be required to improve budgeting skills — with the help of a church volunteer.

Other self-help conditions include academic or vocational training, personal counseling, or help with parenting, shopping or cooking — all of which are provided by church volunteers.

All participating churches are asked to survey their volunteers to find out what type of service each individual can best provide. A physician may volunteer to help a sick child whose mother doesn't qualify for emergency medical aid, while an auto mechanic may be able to donate a few hours to fix the car of a struggling family.

When someone in need contacts a LOVE INC. office, program directors first conduct a background check to weed out roving panhandlers. If the need is legitimate, it is then funneled to the appropriate government agency or existing help group, such as the Salvation Army.

In Diana Huckaba's case, LOVE INC. referred her to a little-known government program, which provided a new furnace.

Now, on the days when she is feeling healthy enough, she works as a volunteer at the local LOVE INC. office.

"Since getting involved in the program, the entire community has reached out to embrace me," says Huckaba, who remarried in December. "My entire life has changed. LOVE INC. has given me back my dignity."

Gulker says government agencies are best able to deal with specialized needs, such as spouse abuse or mental illness. But as federal funds dry up, church assistance becomes essential.

LOVE INC., which got a boost in November when it entered a partnership with the international relief agency World Vision, wants to have at least one program established in each of the United States within 10 years.

In Fresno, Calif., more than 2,200 church members from a total of 50 area churches have volunteered to help with LOVE INC. cases since the chapter opened two years ago.

Thirty-three local government agencies also are part of the chapter's network.

"All the agencies have responded very favorably. They feel that the church is an untapped resource and they're at the breaking point," says program director Larry Waddell.

He said that of the approximately 400 requests for assistance that come into the office each month, LOVE INC. can arrange to meet about 90 percent of those needs, about 40 percent of those through existing agencies. The rest are handled by church volunteers.

Kathleen Busse opened a LOVE INC. chapter in the Chicago suburb of Clarendon Hills about two years ago.

There are more than 200,000 people in the area served by the chapter and about 85 requests for assistance come in each month. Of those, the chapter can successfully refer about 60 cases.

Sixty-four churches now participate in the program.

"I think we've been doing a bang-up job, but we have nothing to compare it to, really," she says. "There's no precedent for it."

The long sleeves were tapered and fashioned with beaded lace inserts. The fitted bodice extended over the torso to a basque waistline, embellished with alencon lace, pearls and sequins. The back bodice was of satin with lace appliques. The skirt and chapel train were edged in alencon lace. Her derby hat was overlaid with chantilly lace, sequins and pearls with a pouf in back attached to a fingertip veil. She carried a flowing cascade of white phalaenopsis orchids centered with pearl sprigs.

The maid of honor wore a satin floor-length gown of lavender styled with a scoop neckline, dropped waistline and full skirt. The puffed short sleeves were gathered at the shoulder. She carried a hand bouquet of white freesia, pink, white and purple and lavender delphiniums. Bridesmaids were dressed identically. The flower girl wore an European-length white batiste dress with purple and lavender English handsmocking and lace threaded with purple and green ribbons. She carried a white wicker basket with assorted flowers.

A reception was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Anthony Lewis, sister and brother-in-law of the bridegroom. Shelby Manning Futreal and Dr. and Mrs. James Franklin Gibson greeted guests.

After a wedding trip to Williamsburg, Va., and Atlantic Beach, the couple will live in Greenville.

The bride is a graduate of James Sprunt Community College and attends East Carolina University. The bridegroom is a graduate of ECU. She is registered nurse at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. He is a realtor in Greenville.

A dinner was given by the parents of the bridegroom Friday evening. The couple was honored at a party and miscellaneous shower held prior to the wedding.

Disabled Have Travel Options

BAYONNE, N.J. (AP) — Travelers with disabilities essentially want to visit the very same places and do the very same things as able-bodied people, says Robert S. Zywicki, editor and publisher of The Itinerary, a magazine for travelers with disabilities.

"There are numerous opportunities now available for travelers with disabilities, no matter what their preference in destinations and style of travel," notes the longtime advocate for the disabled who travels the world in his wheelchair. "They just have to do a little research and preplanning to assure themselves the least amount of inconvenience."

Zywicki, who is president of Whole Persons Tours Inc., an operator of accessible vacations, has been disabled with a severe form of arthritis for 25 years, since he was 17. He speaks at seminars and workshops throughout the United States about accessible travel.

"While every opportunity is not yet opened to us, an increasingly larger array of travel destinations and experiences becomes available to persons with disabilities each year," he says.

In the United States and Canada, he points out, almost every major hotel and motel chain has made some provisions for guests with disabilities. The same is true for major sightseeing attractions, domestic airlines and Amtrak, especially on passenger trains traveling west of Chicago.

Most of the newer hotels in Europe are designed to make them fairly accessible, Zywicki says. Many have added some adapted rooms, and a few hotels have even been constructed with the needs of disabled guests considered from the earliest planning stages. Some foreign transportation companies also provide for disabled passengers, he adds.

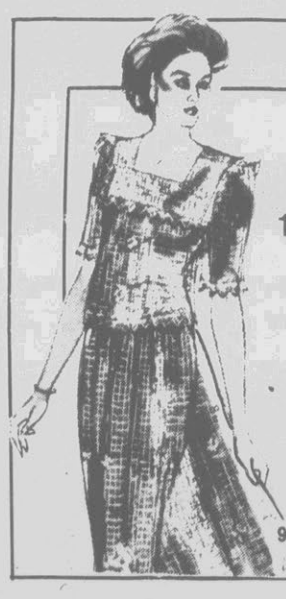

"If you're the happy-go-lucky type, the world is wide open to you," he says. "Many disabled persons have trekked to places where most able-bodied people would hesitate to venture."

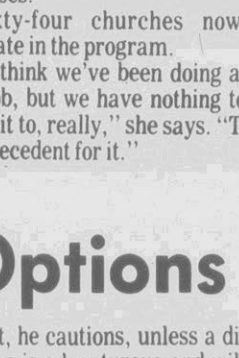

But, he cautions, unless a disabled person is adventurous and willing to take the chance of not finding specially adapted accommodations, he or she must thoroughly preplan and doublecheck everything before leaving home.

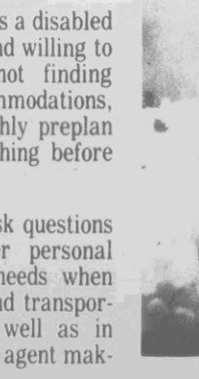

The traveler should ask questions specific to his or her personal disability and special needs when dealing with lodgings and transportation, he advises, as well as in discussions with a travel agent making the reservations.

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

THINK ABOUT CONVERSATION GROUPINGS

Probably nothing is more important when arranging your living room furniture than to make sure it's arranged properly for conversation. Even if you have the most beautiful furniture in the world, if it's not arranged to allow easy conversation between two or more people, you haven't made your home all it could be.

Try to place some chairs and sofas so that people can see each other with a minimum of turning their heads. Conversation is inconvenient if people are lined up in a straight line, and have to crane their necks to see those they're talking to.

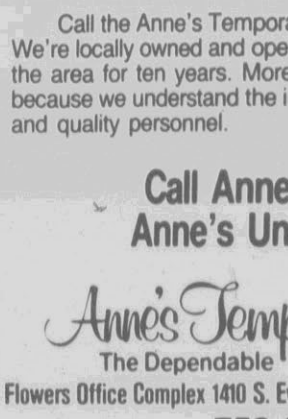

Conversation groupings should also have the seating pieces close enough together so people can talk easily. On the other hand, you want to leave enough space between pieces for comfort and movement.

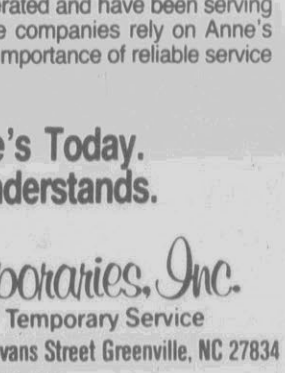

Every living room should have at least one basic conversation grouping; if necessary, you might also want to consider two or more such groupings.

It's helpful for you to have enough tables on which you and your guests can easily place refreshments.

Try to have one conversation grouping more-or-less permanent so you don't always have to move chairs around each time guests come. To see the perfect furniture to help any conversation group, stop by and see the latest in quality home furnishings by Century, Sherrill, Statton, White and many others.

Bahai Institute In S.C. Bible Belt

By DAVID HILL
The (Myrtle Beach) Sun News

HEMINGWAY, S.C. (AP) — The northern corner of Georgetown County is generally flat land, where vistas are cut short by stands of pine trees as thick and green as moss.

Here and there are farm houses, an occasional tobacco barn, and every few miles along the sun-bleached, two-lane roads, a church, of either red-brick or whitewashed wood, but always with a steeple.

With these beacons poking out of the pines, there's no forgetting this is the Pee Dee region of South Carolina, as solid a link as there is in the buckle of the Bible Belt.

Yet here, surrounded by icons of the traditional ol' time religion, is the Louis G. Gregory Bahai Institute, a center for the Bahai faith, a relatively young religion based on the belief that mankind is essentially one.

By appearances, the place could be a small Baptist youth retreat. Its 130-acre physical plant is mostly the ubiquitous pines, with paths leading to a main building with a couple of offices; a small auditorium and rehearsal hall; a commercial-style kitchen; and a 44-bed dormitory for youth camps held off and on during the year. There's an outdoor, two-goal basketball court, and a small cemetery cleared among the trees.

Last summer, jazz legend Dizzy Gillespie, a Bahai born in Cheraw, played at the institute's PeaceFest '87, a four-day festival of gospel, jazz and other music. During PeaceFest, the Institute gave its first Peace Award, to state Attorney General Travis Medlock for an anti-drug program, and had Gov. Carroll Campbell declare the period Peace Week for the state.

The institute is a gathering center for area practitioners of the Bahai faith. Founded in the 19th century by the son of a Persian nobleman, the religion stresses unity of mankind, individuals' pursuit of truth, and equality among the sexes and races. There are temples throughout the world.

Followers spread the faith, but active proselytizing is forbidden, and only accepted members may contribute money. The faith recognizes Christ, Moses, Mohammed and the figures of many East Asian faiths.

Members come from all religions, but its central figure is Bahaullah (Arabic for "the Glory of God"), whom Bahais regard as God's messenger for the modern age.

Clearly, these beliefs aren't exactly the stuff of the typical Deep South Sunday school. At first glance, an institute devoted to the Bahai faith would seem as out of of place in the lowlands of South Carolina as a ski jump.

But, explains Roy Jones, the 38-year-old institute director, there are good reasons for the Louis Gregory Institute's location.

First, there are an estimated 15,000 Bahais in South Carolina — 10 to 12 percent of the national total, the largest concentration in North America.

If that seems a small number, remember that when Pope John Paul II came to Columbia in September, he visited a state with only 20,000 Catholics.

"As a religious minority that places as high as any in the state," Jones said. "The people of the Bahai faith are the nameless and faceless. They're not the kind who get in the media. They're not the movers and shakers."

That namelessness and facelessness is another reason the Bahai community put the center where it is, explained Jones.

The worldwide Bahai community is diverse and pluralistic, but in the South, it is largely a faith of rural black people, he said. The institute's namesake grew up in post-Civil War Charleston, where Gregory saw his grandfather lynched. He is credited with bringing the faith to South Carolina, suggesting why it is popular among rural blacks.

In the South, rural black people often are poor people, people too often undereducated and underemployed, people left behind. In short, people who need to be served. And in the Bahai faith, service to others is as much worship as baptism or bar mitzvahs. Said Jones: "To Bahais, service to their fellow man is, next to believing in God and Bahaullah himself, perhaps the most important thing."

The second principal figure in the faith is Abdul Baha, Bahaullah's son, who spread the religion to the West. His name in Arabic means "service," or "service to the Glory of God," Jones said.

To Bahais, there is really no differentiation between religion and daily life. To them, living properly is worship itself. To that end, said Jones, "We promote the quality of life. We wage peace, not war. We promote what brings us light, not destruction and death. We don't want to be a part of what's destroying us."

Living and working in the impoverished rural Pee Dee, then, is a chance to convert these ideals to practice.

One of the institute's most visible outreach programs is its summer youth academy. Twenty youngsters, ages 14 through 17 — Bahai or not — spend four weeks living at the institute. They work there, take field trips to Charleston, Columbia, Washington, D.C., and Atlanta.

"It's an enrichment program. It's not summer school. We're working on identity, particularly adolescent behavior, family development, the role of youth in their family," Jones said. "We invest in youth and children. We have to assume some of the functions that are natural in an urban environment. There's no Boys' Club, no YMCA. There's no community-based thing."

Devil's Island Now A Tourist Favorite

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

ILES DU SALUT, French Guiana (AP) — During their grim years of imprisonment on Devil's Island, both Alfred Dreyfus, the martyr to French anti-Semitism, and Papillon, the Marseilles safecracker, reached the same conclusion.

The breeze-swept, coconut palm-dotted island off the northern coast of South America wouldn't be a bad place to spend a holiday or even the rest of one's life if it weren't for the awful isolation, the monotonous cuisine and the company of guards and fellow convicts.

Now tourists are discovering the charms of Les Iles du Salut, the triangle of tiny islands with Devil's Island at the northern-most apex, that for nearly 100 years, down to the end of World War II, served as France's notorious penal colony.

Motor launches from the occasional cruise ships calling at Ile Royale, the main island, deposit eager, mostly elderly passengers in the tiny harbor behind the rock jetty. Hundreds of convicts lost their lives building it in that pounding surf.

Luxury yachts bob at anchor in a picture-postcard cove near the channel separating Royale from St.Joseph, where sharks used to answer the 6 p.m. chapel bell tolling the burial at sea of another "mec," as the inmates called themselves.

Henri Charriere, alias "Papillon," watched in horror one evening as more than 100 sharks executed a deadly ballet with the flour sack-shrouded body of his closest friend, lifting it high above the water in their churning greed, despite the heavy rocks and steel-wire trussing meant to sink the corpse from sight.

There is no convict cemetery on the islands, but camera buffs can focus their lenses on the graveyard for guards and their families, where Papillon disrespectfully dug into a tomb to hide sections of a boat he was assembling for a "cavale," an escape attempt.

Postcards of the smaller, more picturesque cimetiere d'enfants, the children's cemetery, are available in the gift shop in the former guards' dining room. It also features, at rather larcenous prices, photocopies of French front-page coverage of the 1894 Dreyfus treason trial and T-shirts made in Hong Kong declaring that the wearer has accomplished "L'Evasion," an escape from Ile du Diable, Devil's Island.

The same long, low building has a small hotel with a notice on the bulletin board that would have amused lifers Dreyfus and Papillon: "Checkout time 11 a.m." There is a snack bar and garden bistro with prices, if not l'ambiance, worthy of a sidewalk cafe along the Champs-Elysees.

Two young officers from a cruise ship grumbled about "this place still being a den of thieves" after paying $12 for a beer and a Pernod. But the menu listing hot dogs at $3.50 did not seem to discourage a rush to the tables by sightseers arriving from the capital at Cayenne on the noon helicopter. The chopper lands in the meadow where guards used to test the guillotine by inserting banana stalks beneath the blade.

Papillon recounted in the best-seller memoirs he transcribed in 13 school copybooks how the "original" Dreyfus coffee mug and the "authentic" Dreyfus mess tray, inscribed with his initials, were sold over and over again to the gullible Breton seamen who every two years delivered from France a "convoy" of up to 1,800 convicts, handcuffed and chained to each other by the ankles.

A boatman will row the tourist the few hundred yards from Royale over to Devil's Island and show him the stone bench where Capt. Dreyfus stared longingly in the direction of the France that had wrongly accused him of being a German spy and where Papillon, who thought himself wrongly convicted of murdering a Montmartre pimp, sat for hours, day after day, patiently plotting his 10th and at last successful escape attempt. From the initials carved on the palm trees and the graffiti scrawled on the cell blocks now overgrown by the jungle it's hard to tell which memorabilia were inscribed by tourists and which by inmates. They began to arrive in 1854 when Napoleon III conceived a penal colony in French Guiana for "our worst bandits."

When asked who would guard them, he replied, "even worse bandits."

Like Dreyfus and Papillon, visitors disembarking at Ile Royale first see the lighthouse, the bakery and the stone boathouse that for a few hours, until the last helicopter leaves, serves as headquarters for the air patrol. They are the only police on the island, which has a year-round population of 20.

"There is no crime here at all now," laughed a wife of one of the caretakers, hanging out clothes to dry in the flower-decked breezeway of what once was a row of cottages for staff and guards' families.

Crumbling and ensnared by huge vines and tree roots, the maximum security wing and its dungeons are a mecca for camera buffs. They must be alert for the tarantula colonies that horrified Papillon. The prison hospital and the chapel are the next most popular attractions sought out on the tourist locator maps.

Besides its shark-calling sunset bell, the chapel offers some poignant, realistic frescoes executed over the years by the inmates. One depicts Christ preaching from a boat on the Sea of Galilee against an almost three-dimensional background of green and brown Judean hills. Another shows the Prodigal Son beaming a beatific smile of gratitude for the forgiveness shown by his tearful father.

The faces, all drawn from convict models, are unforgettable, but one need not be astonished. After all, Luis Dega, Papillon's dormitory mate, was a past master at transforming 500-franc national defense bonds into 10,000-franc denominations.

On the veranda of what had been the warden's house, two maintenance men spent the siesta break playing cards under friendlier rules than prevailed in the old penal days when a knife fight decided who would deal the two-francs-a-point game of belote.

A lovely woodland trail, fragrant with frangipani and alive with the screeching of exotic birds, winds down to a turquoise cove where suddenly three enormous sea turtles surface. These 400-pounders may have been mere youngsters when Papillon dived for lobsters off these jagged rocks. Lizards and peccaries, tropical wild hogs, darted from the underbrush.

Just across the water, "grim and green" as Papillon called it, looms Devil's Island. At the water's edge of "that enormous rock covered with coconut palms" could be seen a few of the cottages, painted yellow with gray tin roofs, where the political prisoners like Dreyfus spent their exile.

Actually, this smallest and rockiest of the three penal islands was the least brutal.

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

In the late 1920s, the chairman of Sears & Roebuck sent several architects to New England. Their assignment: to develop prefabricated New England-style homes that Sears would donate to house what is said to be America's first residential center for string quartets.

Four homes and a concert hall were designed, manufactured and shipped by rail to Lime Rock, Conn. And, in August of 1930, the Gordon String Quartet performed the first chamber music concert at Music Mountain on a mountaintop near Falls Village, Conn.

Music Mountain — the life dream of Jacques Gordon, a Ukrainian immigrant who became first violinist of the Chicago Symphony at the age of 21 — has been operating ever since. This May, the four Sears houses — redecorated by 30 designers — became the setting for what may be the most unusual decorator showcase of this or any recent year.

As Nicholas Gordon, president of Music Mountain and Jacques Gordon's son, sees it, there are three missions for the showcase which runs through the end of May. They are to refurbish the buildings which house the musicians during the summer season; to raise funds to build a dormitory for students who come to study the art of the string quartet, and to publicize Music Mountain.

The houses, which are on the National Historic Register, had not been touched since 1930 and needed major renovations, explained Georgette Miller, project coordinator. The board paid for improvements such as new roofs, wiring and floor repairs, but there were no funds leftover for decorative grace notes. That's where the designers came in.

Though the furniture and accessories will be dismantled and returned to their various sources when the musicians arrive early in June, "everything painted, nailed down and screwed down stays," said Miller.

That includes the four new kitchens, wallpapered and painted walls, new skylights in a remodeled attic, some window treatments and the gardens installed by several landscape designers.

One of the more fascinating aspects of this showcase is that three of the houses are identical Cape Cods. (Sears marked the design as "the Gordon" from 1931 to 1933.)

Showcase visitors can thus observe how different decorators have handled the same space. No one would ever guess that the three kitchens, for example, have the same layout. Florence Perchuk has installed a country kitchen with a diagonal cooking and dining island in the house known as "Viola" and lined the walls with narrow shelves for collectibles. She has created a traditional arrangement in "Cello" and turned the kitchen in "Violin" into a futuristic cooking center. (The houses are named for the three instruments in a string quartet.)

Besides the three Cape Cod houses in which the resident group, the Manhattan String Quartet, resides during the summer, a colonial known as Music Mountain House has also been decorated. It accommodates guest solists who come to play at the concerts given every Saturday and Sunday from June through September.

All the homes are decked out mainly in cheerful colors, especially floral prints. Sturdy antique and reproduction furniture and accessories emphasize the English country style to convey an informal yet cultivated atmosphere. Comfort, plenty of bookshelves and tables and simple window treatments that admit lots of natural light predominate.

The contributions of local craft artists are noteworthy.

On The House

A sensible reason to repair brickwork as quickly as possible is because neglect will result in a weakening of the construction by permitting water to enter it. Aside from that, brickwork that is starting to deteriorate becomes unsightly, losing its usual pleasing appearance.

When the mortar between bricks is cracked, it can be repaired without replacing any of the bricks. Doing this requires patience, since you must chisel out the damaged mortar. Use a cold chisel and a hammer, working very slowly and carefully. If you are inexperienced at this kind of work and attempt to hurry the job, you are almost certain to bungle it. The old mortar should be chipped away to a depth of about three-quarters of an inch. Use a stiff brush to take away the crumbled mortar, then dampen the area any way that is practical. It can be with water from a hose, a wet sponge or even a glass of water thrown against the damaged section.

You can make your own mortar mixture with one part of portland cement, two parts of hydrated lime and seven parts of sand, but you can make the job a lot easier if you buy a ready-mixed mortar that requires only the addition of mortar. However you handle it, use just enough water to make a workable mix. Redampen the area to be patched just before applying the mortar. Not so incidentally, always wear goggles when chipping away at any kind of material that is likely to send dust or chips through the air.

When the brick itself is broken or otherwise in need of repair, it is better to replace the entire brick. Once again, use the cold chisel-hammer technique, but this time you must chip away at the old mortar until the brick can be removed. Sometimes you may have to chip away at the brick itself to get it loose. If you have never used a cold chisel before and must purchase one, get what is called a cape chisel, especially good for this kind of work. Once the brick has been removed and the mortar scrapped off the adjoining bricks, wet down the opening, this time using water from a hose, since the pressure will help to clear out the cavity. Professional masonry workers not only soak the replacement brick in water, they allow it to air dry before using it.

A trowel is necessary to butter the brick with mortar, but be extra careful not to get any mortar on the face of the brick. If any does get on, wipe it off immediately. Stop whatever you are doing to perform the wipe-off process, as even a minute or two can make a difference. That means you must keep a wet cloth handy at all times. When the brick is in place, try to make the same kind of mortared joint as the rest of the bricks have. Use a small jointer or a piece of pipe or anything that will smooth and shape the joint.

The new brick and the surrounding area, including the joints, should be wet down immediately and two or three times a day thereafter for a few days. The objective is to keep the patched section from drying out too quickly.

If your brickwork seems to be in fairly good condition but is getting whitish in spots, the condition is known as efflorescence. The whiteness is the salt being washed to the surface. Sometimes it can be removed with soap and water, but more severe cases require the use of muriatic acid. Don't even try this treatment unless you are willing to exercise extreme care. You must wear goggles, rubber gloves and old clothes and you must always add the acid to the water, not the other way around. The mixture should be one part of acid to nine parts of water. When you finish, hose down the area completely with water from a hose. Do it twice just to make sure there is no residue.

(Do-it-yourselfers will find much helpful information on a variety of subjects in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," which can be obtained by sending $2 to this paper at Box 5, Teaneck, N.J., 07666.)

Here's The Answer

Q. — I have to install several locks in doors in my house. While I have done some carpentry work, I have never made holes for locks. Is it easier to do this with a compass saw or a keyhole saw?

A. — Both of those saws are fine for the purpose, but if you have a portable electric drill, get an attachment known as a hole saw. You can get diameters of different sizes for a single attachment. It will make the job a lot easier. For certain irregular circles and shapes, though, the compass saw and keyhole saw are better.

Q. — I plan to install a concrete patio floor at the rear of our house. I want to be sure rainwater slopes away from the house. Is there any special slope that is necessary to make this work?

A. — A good rule-of-thumb is the slope should be one inch for every 10 feet of patio.

Q. — I looked over the siding of my house prior to painting it and I noticed peeling paint in one section. There is an exhaust vent from a dryer that blows hot air on to that part of the siding and this evidently caused the peeling. Before I repaint, what is the best way to prevent this in the future?

A. — A properly placed hood over the vent will direct the hot air away from the siding. Another way is to extend the vent so the hot air comes out a short distance away from the siding.

Q. — I am puzzled by the terms "strip hardwood flooring" and "strip oak flooring." Isn't oak a hardwood?

A. — Yes. The terms are used generally to indicate oak and hardwoods other than oak, such as beech, maple, etc.

Q. — I have heard of a wood finishing process called French polishing. It sounds interesting and I would like to try it. But the description I read about it did not say whether the final finish would be glossy, mildly glossy or non-glossy. Can you help?

A. — French polishing is a name for a manner of polishing with shellac. It produces a glossy finish. Follow the directions you have been given, but be warned it is a technique that requires some practice. Try it out first on some scrap wood or at least on a piece of furniture which is not expensive.

Sweet Gum Wood Popular

From WOOD
A Meredith Magazine

Until the 1920s, few woodworkers had ever even seen a sweet gum board. Although sweet gum trees grew from Texas to Connecticut, little of the wood became lumber because of uncontrollable warping problems during seasoning.

When lumbermen finally discovered sweet gum boards had to be either heartwood or sapwood for satisfactory drying, production boomed. By the 1930s, sweet gum climbed from commercial obscurity to a rank of seventh in hardwood usage, says Wood magazine.

Then, with the advent of World War II, most of the commercial walnut supply went to war as gunstocks. Only the wealthy could afford furniture made from the scant walnut remaining. So sweet gum stepped in s "poor man's walnut." Stained, the figured wood made a superb walnut imitation in economically priced furniture and radio cabinets. Sweet gum was even introduced to Europe as "satin walnut," and many board feet still sail in annual exports.

In contrast to the come-from-behind popularity of sweet gum wood, sweet gum sap has always boasted a reputation. It has a delicate fragrance that at one time was extracted for scenting ladies' gloves. The sap also acts as an antiseptic for surface wounds, and a modern extraction, liquid storax, becomes an ingredient of styrene plastic. Frequently called red gum because of its brightly colored fall foliage, sweet gum tints autumn from southern Connecticut to Florida and as far west as Texas, Oklahoma, and Southeast Missouri. In rich, moist soil, the tree grows to heights of 120 feet and diameters of 36 inches.

The dark gray, deeply furroed bark on the main trunk of sweet gum trees often measures an inch thick. Limbs tend to have broken-patterned, wart-like bark resembling alligator skin.

Use sweet gum sapwood for turned objects, treenware and the hidden parts of furniture. Work heartwood into furniture, cabinets and interior trim. The wood's fragrance makes it a pleasant choice for the sides and bottoms of lingerie and linen drawers.

Log Houses Are Chosen Often As First Homes

By John Lacy
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

HARTFORD, Conn. — The log home, a humble pioneer shelter in early America, has become a desirable, if not cheap, place to live in the 1980s.

Log cabins survived into the 20th century mainly as vacation getaway homes. They were revived as permanent homes in the early 1970s, spurred by the back-to-the-land movement and wider acceptance of factory-cut log-home kits for do-it-yourself assembling. They were being built then at a rate of 2,000 a year.

Last year, industry sources say, Americans built an estimated 25,000 log houses. Most are not second homes — eight of 10 log houses built today are the primary residences for their owners.

Log homes average 1,500 to 2,000 square feet and usually are built on large lots. The designs typically favor an outdoor lifestyle, emphasizing decks, porches and windows.

While they may have that Lincoln-Logs look on the outside, the interiors can be surprisingly elegant. Exposed-beam ceilings are blended with knotty pine sidewalls or wallboard partitions that can be painted or papered. Diverse materials such as ceramic, glass and metal can be used along with hand-peeled logs to create a luxurious bathroom complete with hot tub or other fancy fixtures.

Some rooms are kept woodsy and rustic for a country look and easier maintenance. In other rooms, exposed logs may be mere accents amid painted walls. Often, log homes have a large fieldstone fireplace, balanced by a soaring cathedral ceiling.

Drew Crandall and his wife, Dawn Crandall, moved into a log house in Ellington, Conn., last fall. Their three-bedroom home helps define a lifestyle that is appealing to them.

The Crandalls, who are in their 30s, weren't thinking of a log home when they went house-hunting last year. When they looked at the 6-year-old, two-story log home on 3½ acres of woods, however, they were hooked.

They bought the place in October.

"We were very excited when we saw it," says Dawn Crandall, a medical receptionist. "I like the informal, rustic atmosphere.

"The surrounding countryside, with woods all around us, adds to the atmosphere," she says.

In six months there, she has found she likes the interior, too. The living room has a lofty cathedral ceiling. The brick fireplace holds a wood stove, which is supplemented by electric heat.

"One of the first things you notice is the really nice smell of the wood," she says. "I like that a lot. There's hardly any dust. I don't have to dust very often."

Drew Crandall, a sales and marketing consultant, says this, the third home they have owned, is "hopefully, our last. We'd be nuts if we did leave here."

Admitting to a fast pace in his job, he finds the log home very relaxing.

"'No rushing' became our slogan here," he says. "It's a lifestyle that's a comfort. The environment has integrity and charm to it."

He noted that log homes almost always are in rural settings that provide privacy.

"People who live in log homes tend to be friendly and down-home people. One of the things that motivates people to log homes is their privacy."

Many people mistakenly believe that buying a log home kit is always less expensive than a conventional home. But that really depends on whether the owner does most of the work.

And it is no longer true that log-home buyers are all avid do-it-yourselfers; most work with distributors and contractors in building their homes.

Not many people are skilled enough to do their own construction. Banks consider many do-it-yourself projects too risky for standard mortgage loans.

The industry says 44 percent of log homes built last year cost more than $70,000, not counting the land.

Don O'Brien, marketing director, says a completed log home is just as expensive as a conventional house. A construction estimate used in the industry is that a log home will eventually cost about three times the kit price, not including land and interior finishes.

A basic log-home materials package contains only logs for the walls. More complete packages may include logs for the walls, windows, doors, a roof system, lumber and materials for sub-floors and interior partitions.

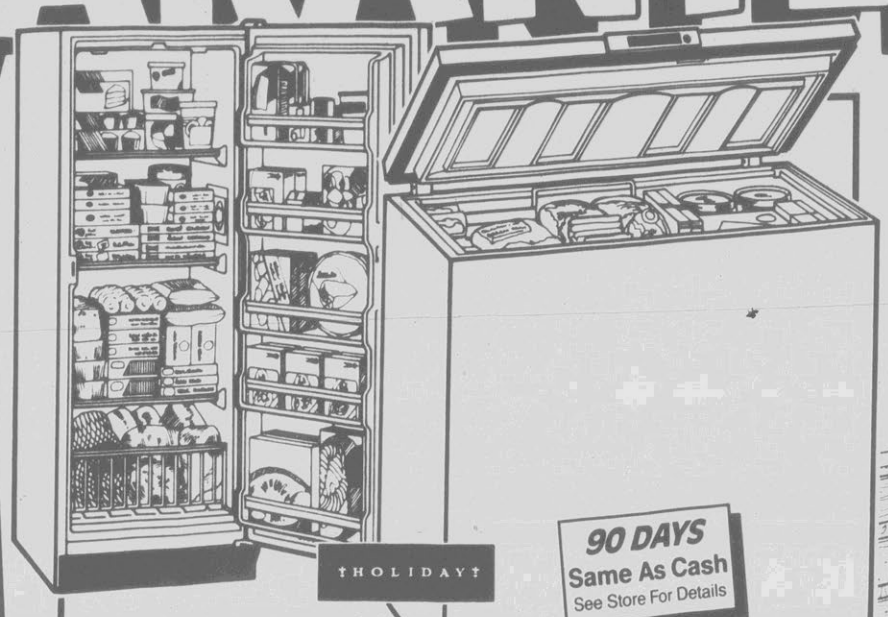

Kit buyers should learn what they are required to provide, which may include the lot and all development costs, including excavation, grading, foundation, well, septic system, subfloor, construction labor, roofing material, electrical and phone service, plumbing, fireplace, heating system, interior materials, landscaping, closing costs and legal fees.

The 20 percent to 25 percent of kit buyers who assemble their own shell can save 8 percent to 10 percent of the total cost, O'Brien says.

SOUND SIDE VISTA — From atop a high dune overlooking the sound side of Bear Island, a photographer can capture a world of blue water, dark green islands of marsh grasses, and in the foreground, the emerald green of new myrtle growth. The variety of landscapes and seacapes on Bear Island offers opportunities for photographers and for artists — as well as the enchantment of visual beauty for all visitors.

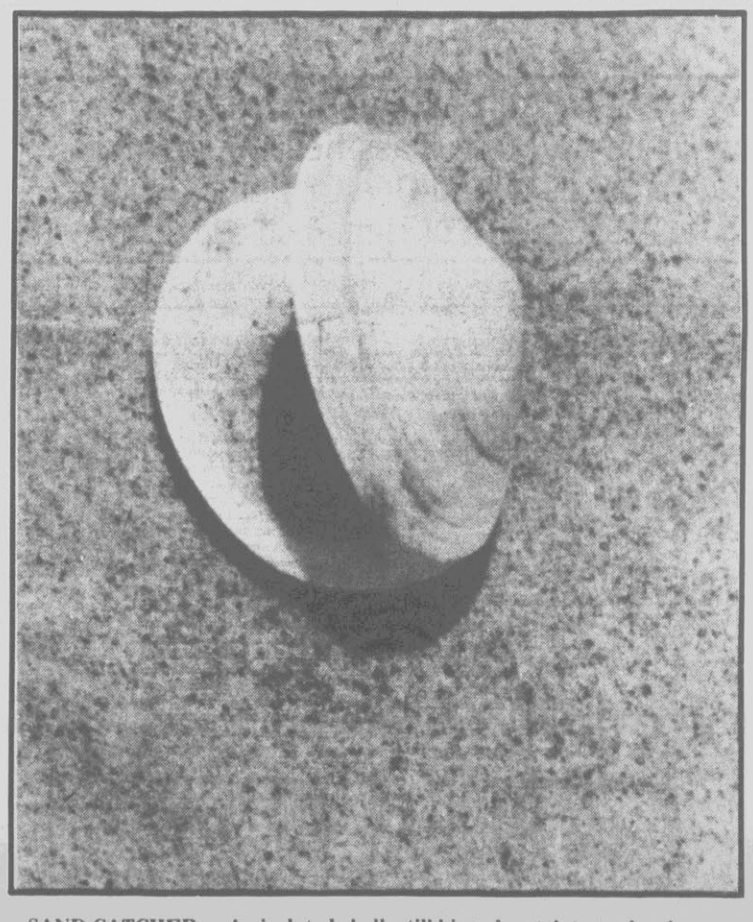

SAND AND GRASSES — Breezes constantly resculpts the fragile sand dune landscape of the park. Sometimes the effects are startling, as in the case of seemingly human face buried up to its nose in the center of the photograph.

Hammock's Beach State Park, Refuge Of Unspoiled Visual Enchantment

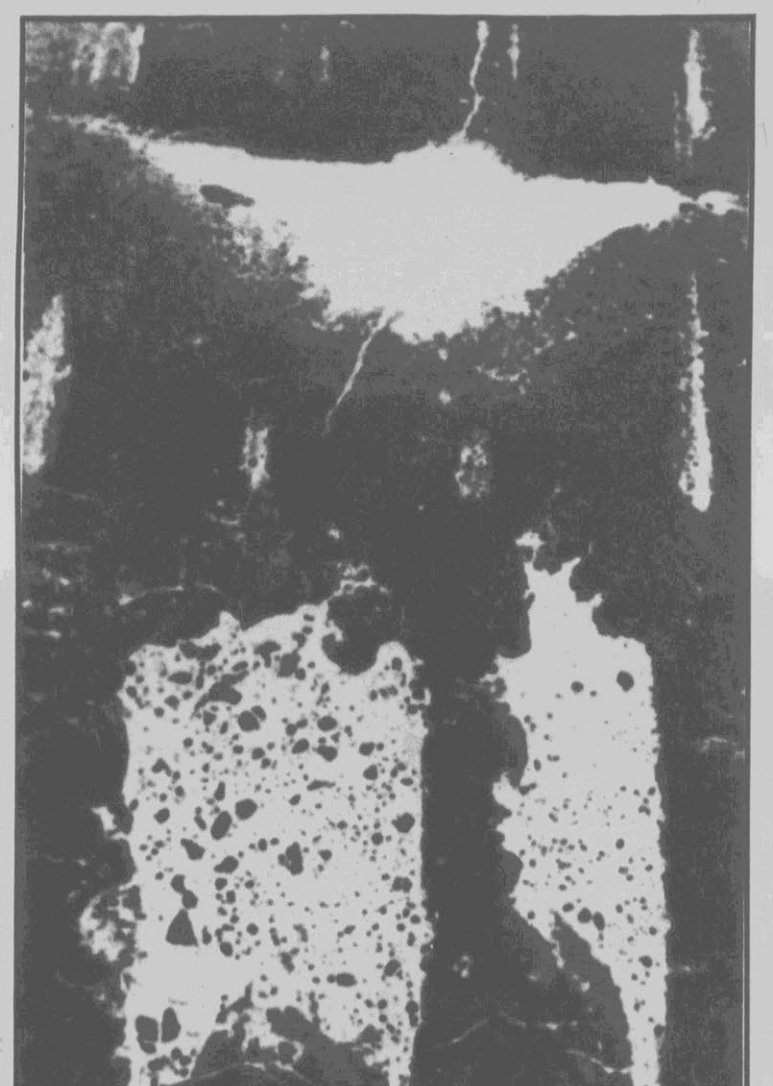

Text And Photographs By Jerry Raynor

There's a place in North Carolina where the beach is a long, wide ribbon of clean, patterned sand washed by the white froth of incoming waves from the Atlantic Ocean.

Just offshore schools of dolphins curve, dive and play. Overhead, pelicans in flight look strangely prehistoric as they hover, then suddenly fold their wings to dive headfirst into the water with incredible speed, and a moment later emerge with a speared fish.

SAND CATCHER — An isolated shell, still hinged, catches sand as breezes sweep across the dry sands of the upper reaches of the beach.

BLACKTOP ART — An unexpected bonus at Hammock's Beach is dozens of examples of nature created abstract art. These are formed by a deposit of white sand into cracks and fissures of the blacktop road connecting the dock and the bath house.

In shallow waters, shell enthusiasts wade slowly, scanning the ripple of sand as currents wash back to sea. These searchers are often rewarded with a find of a nice seashell specimen, entire, unbroken. Less dedicated seekers of shells content themselves with lovely fragments of shells deposited on the beach.

Behind the beach, white, gray and cream sand dunes rise like miniature mountains sculpted into changing shapes by forces of winds — mostly gentle, sometimes brisk. Brown sea grasses cling to the slopes, their thin, curled bottom leaves embrodering the sand in delicate shadows. Here and there, hardy green sand-loving plants are covered with flower clusters.

Behind the Atlantic beach-front range of dunes across a distance of about half a mile to the north shore of quiet Bogue Sound water, this island paradise offers vistas of damp hollows lush with myrtle bushes, small oak and pine trees; beds of jade green pennywort. Silvered skeletons of dead trees stand where sand has been the conqueror. Vines, both briar and scuppernong grape, fasten their hold on other growing things.

From the sound side, visitors see a network of circlets of marsh grass laced with still water channels, with views of Swansboro and nearer populated mainland shores two or three miles distant.

• The name of this North Carolina public coastal nature retreat is Bear Island — or by its other name, Hammock's Beach State Park.

Its unspoiled natural beauty is the lure for those who prefer their seashore ventures free of noise, crowds and proliferating signs of commercialism.

The only access to Hammock's Beach State Park is by private boat or by the free ferry ride from the mainland. The ferry ride itself is an adventure — an open air ride on a pontoon ferry covered by a canopy. The first section of the ferry ride along a stretch of the Intercoastal Waterway is likely to result in meeting fishing boats, yachts and on rare occasions, a tug boat pulling a long line of heavily laden barges.

Other than a couple of vehicles used by the staff of the island, there are no motorized vehicles.

One large, modernistic building, the bath house, is located near the entrance path to the beach. Here, visitors can get showers, use bathrooms, purchase drinks and a limited array of snacks and candy, and relax on benches that line the second floor.

Several picnic shelters are available near the bath house. Showers are $2 for adults and $1 for children.

Campers have a selection of several campsites. These are in sheltered hollows behind the dunes fronting the Atlantic, where protection from strong breezes does not preclude the lulling music of ocean breakers rolling in. Rental for each campsite is $4, with up to six people permitted at each site. Enclosed camp stoves may be used, but open fires are not permitted. Campers use toilet facilities at the bath house. Camping reservations can be made from one to ten nights.

All campers must get permits at the park office on the mainland, whether they go by private boat or by the ferry. Those going by private boats are to check with the office to get information on legal docking space at the island.

For the remainder of May, the ferry operates only on weekends. Departures from the mainland begin at 9:30 a.m. and continue once an hour until 4:30 p.m. Departures from the island begin at 10 a.m. and end at 5 p.m.

Beginning in June, ferry services will be accelerated, with ferries from the mainland leaving every half hour beginning at 9:30 a.m. and until 4:30 p.m. with departures from the island every half hour from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. This schedule is followed from Wednesdays through Sundays — with the abbreviated weekend schedule still in effect on Mondays and Tuesdays. Also beginning in June, lifegaurds will be on hand at an area assigned for swimming.

Fishing can be done without a license as it is saltwater fishing. Visitors are permitted to take fishing gear (hooks protected), folding chairs, food hampers (no alcoholic beverages) and other comfort items of managable size, including surf boards if space is available on the ferry.

An asphalt road, in places crumbled and in places covered with sand, leads from the island docking area to the beach house. Handicapped persons or older persons who may find walking in these conditions difficult are to contact the mainland office prior to boarding the ferry so that the staff can have transport waiting at the island docking site to take them to the ocean side.

As a measure to protect loggerhead turtles coming ashore to deposit their eggs on the oceanside of Bear Island, camping is not permitted on three nights monthly during June, July and August. These are the full moon nights of those months as well as the nights before and after full moon.

Visitors are allowed to take shells and fish, but no other items. Staff members at the park will answer questions within their sphere of knowledge about the history of the island, the park, the flora and fauna.

How To Get There

The distance from Greenville To Hammock's Beach State Park by the most direct route is 86 miles. From Greenville take N.C. 43 south to New Bern, continue through New Bern on U.S. 17 to Maysville.

One mile outside Maysville, just after crossing White Oak River, turn left into the village of Belgrade. A good paved rural road leads for a distance of 14 miles to N.C. 24, where the traveler will turn left toward Swansboro.

From the junction at N.C. 24, be on the watch for a brown and white highway marker indicating the turn-off to Hammock's Beach State Park ... indication of the park is not very prominent.

Travelers with a penchant for seeing the sights along the way will do well to allow extra time for the drive from Belgade to N.C. 24. There are several examples of interesting church architecture along the roadside. The Port Of Call and Silverdale communities are centers of truck farm cultivation with fields of dark green cabbage maturing at this time of year.

Also, as days grow longer, travelers may want to set aside an hour or so to take a tour of Swansboro. This small town is a fishing village at the confluence of White Oak River and Bogue Sound. A few historic buildings date back to the late 1700s. Many two story houses of the late 19th and early 20th century are being saved and renovated.

Strange as it might seem, finesses are not an easy subject for a bridge writer. A few days ago, we discussed a hand where the winning line was to avoid having to take a finesse. Today, the road to Eldorado lies in taking a finesse in a suit where you have no loser!

North-South were using transfer bids in response to no trump openings. Thus, North's two diamond response showed a heart suit, and his two spade rebid confirmed game-going values and suggested interest in slam. Since South held a maximum no trump with filling cards in spades, he cue-bid his club ace, and North needed no further urging to go for slam.

Wisely, West decided that he did not want to lead from any of his honors, so he chose a trump lead. That dissuaded declarer from even thinking about a finesse in the suit, and he was delighted to find the queen of trumps dropping on the second round.

It might seem that declarer could now afford to take finesses in both spades and clubs for his slam. If either were to succeed, a 75 percent chance, 12 tricks were there for the asking. However, declarer found a sure-trick line. At trick three he led a low diamond from dummy, intending simply to cover any card that East produced.

When East followed low, declarer inserted his eight. West won the trick cheaply enough with the 10, but he was well and truly endplayed. Whichever suit he returned would give declarer an extra trick in that suit: a diamond would allow three discards from dummy; a heart or a club would resolve declarer's problem in the suit led, and he would get sufficient discards from dummy on the ace-king of diamonds to take care of the other losers in the side suits.

Black Mountain College Is To Reopen

By PAUL NOWELL
Associated Press Writer

BLACK MOUNTAIN, N.C. (AP) — Black Mountain College, the legendary experimental school where Buckminister Fuller designed his first geodesic dome and composer John Cage staged his first "happening," will open again after a 30-year hiatus.

"The original college was founded at a time of great political turmoil and imbalance. Today's political balance is not much different," said Marc Herring, one of two men who are trying to revive the school in the Blue Ridge Mountains of western North Carolina.

Black Mountain College was founded by John Andrew Rice in 1933, during the Great Depression and Adolf Hitler's rise to power in Germany. From the beginning, it was obvious the school would have a radically different approach to higher education.

Students and faculty shared responsibility for running the school, which has been credited with helping shape the arts in America. Lectures, school bells, tests and other standard educational tools were discarded.

A farm was started on the 600-acre campus and classes were offered in photography, woodworking, weaving and bookbinding.

In the 1940s, the emphasis on the arts increased. When it closed because of money problems in 1957, Black Mountain College was a small Bohemian art colony of students and teachers.

In her book "The Arts at Black Mountain College," art historian Mary Emma Harris said the school's experimentalism and progressivism led to the United States' emergence as an international leader in the arts in the 1960s.

As he walked up a steep path on the campus through a thicket of rhododendron trees, Herring stopped and grabbed a branch.

"These are the woods where (artist Josef) Albers sent his students to get berries to make nature paintings," he said.

Back down the other side of the hill, he pointed to a small clearing where a satellite dish stood.

"That's the spot where Buckminister Fuller erected his first dome," he said. "If you take that dish and invert it, it's just about the same idea."

Still, Herring and his colleague, David Peele, insist they don't intend to exploit the alumni. "We're not selling any Bucky Fuller T-shirts," said Herring.

Herring, who at 27 calls himself "perhaps the youngest college president in America," said he can't predict just what the new Black Mountain College will be when it opens its doors in the spring of 1989.

"We have no preconceived notions," he said. "Our purpose is to facilitate nontraditional thinking. I can say it will be a place where people can come and bring their projects. It will be very hands-on."

A former resident of California who came to Black Mountain to help produce a play, Herring decided to settle here. He and Peele, who owns McDibb's, a cafe and music hall in Black Mountain, came up with a plan to reopen the school.

Remarkably, most of the 55-year-old campus was intact. The campus was sold in 1957 to Camp Rockmont for Boys, which still uses it in the summers.

Herring and Peele created a for-profit corporation that has solicited money from investors and a non-profit trust that will seek grants and donations. They play to lease the campus from the camp's owner during the school year.

They also plan to open an arts-based children's school on the campus this fall for 10 to 25 students. Meanwhile, they are organizing faculty and improving physical facilities in preparation for a February 1989 reopening.

Like the original college, the new one will feature small classes of between five and 15 students. So far, the curriculum includes classes on writing, dance, folk art, walking — even a course on the history of fishing.

Seminars and weekend retreats also are planned.

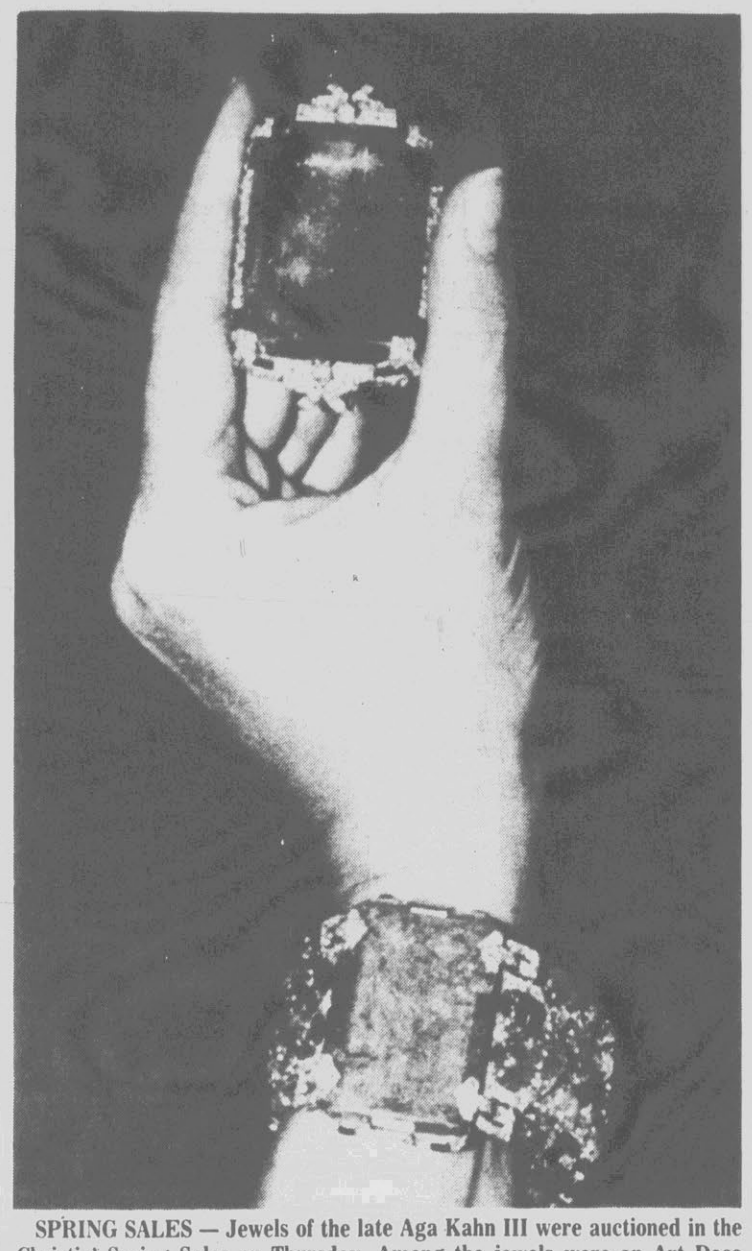

To Herring, the simple stone and wood buildings have an aura of magic to them.

"This was a community in which people could think and create in an environment free of competitive and commericial obstructions," he said. "Just like the 1930s, chaos abounds. That's why a retreat setting in the lush theatre of nature is so appealing."

As with the original school, success will be measured by different standards at the new Black Mountain College.

"I can't tell you what this place will be like a year from now," Herring said. "If 10 people show up and discuss something, we've done something.

"What we're offering is a retreat setting where masters and disciples will be equally responsible for the outcome," he said. "There will be no tenure at Black Mountain College, and no complacency. This is a war on mediocrity."

Floodwall Is A Reminder Of Earlier Destruction

By KEVIN McGILL
Associated Press Writer

MORGAN CITY, La. (AP) — Stretching more than three miles along the Atchafalaya River, a sleek, ornate floodwall stands as a protective memorial to a time when all that stood between this city and disaster was two feet of concrete and some plywood boxes.

It was 1973. Southern rivers gorged themselves on waters from the spring thaw up north and heavy rains at home. The result was one of the worst floods of the century and billions of dollars worth of damage.

Much of Louisiana went under water and the Atchaflaya swallowed up the docks at Morgan City and lapped at the top of the 7-foot-high concrete flood wall guarding homes and businesses.

"We were happy with mudboxes at the time," recalls Lt. Gen. E.R. Heiberg, who then was commander of the New Orleans district of the Corps. But they looked awful, he said.

The mudboxes proved unnecessary and the corporate limits of Morgan City were spared from the floods that washed over much of the state, according to then-Mayor C.R. Brownell. But the scare was enough to persuade the corps to build a better floodwall — one that was as aesthetically pleasing as it was functional.

Ten feet higher than the dull, gray 7-foot structure it replaced, the new wall, about three feet thick at most points, is adorned with a huge sunburst where Everett Street intersects Front Street, the thoroughfare that runs alongside the wall. Elsewhere, the wall is adorned with murals — of oil derricks, shrimp boats, speedboats and giant crawfish — molded into the concrete as a tribute to life in the bayou country.

"The wall's graphic motifs are geared to what is important here," said Heiberg, now the retiring commander of the entire corps.

He visited Morgan City again last month to hand out awards to the wall's engineers and contractors. The corps brings in independent judges to critique its projects every two years and the wall won the top engineering award for 1987. It also took the second place award for landscape architecture and the third place award for environmental impact.

As part of the $35 million project, a similar wall winds along a little more than a mile of the river opposite from Morgan City, protecting the town of Berwick. "This wall," said Heiberg, "is all that stands between Morgan City and Berwick and a disastrous flood."

A chunk of the old wall still sits on Front Street, and the water level of the 1973 flood is marked — about a couple of feet below the top — as a reminder of what might have been.

Some members of the community are still afraid of what might be. Brownell said he is lobbying the corps to beef up dirt levees that still ring much of the city, which is below sea level and surrounded by marshes and bayous.

Col. Kent Brown, head of the New Orleans District of the corps, says the wall is just part of a multi-faceted flood control effort that includes projects up and down the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

Heiberg, in his speech honoring the wall's engineers last month, said he believes the wall will be instrumental in holding back disaster when the Atchafalaya swells again.

"The floods are coming," Heiberg said. "We don't know when. But there's an absolute certainty the floods are coming."

Quilts, Other Fabric Art In Current GMA Exhibition

Lovely colors, patterns, shapes and evidence of fine workmanship adorn the walls at the Greenville Museum of Art at this time — all in the field of fabric art in the form of quilts, banners and other categories.

In the museum's North Gallery a dozen examples of quilts and samplers created by members of the Greenville Quilters' Guild are being exhibited.

Flowers are the subject of three of the large quilts. Beth Howard (and friends) have quilted a colorful "Friendship Poppies" quilt. This contemporary pattern quilt employs a distinctive design in burgandy, red, black and green on white. Through the impact of its one pattern repeated in a placement of diagonal lines, it becomes particularly effective when seen from across a room.

Tulips are the choice of design for two other large quilts — "Dancing Tulips" by Zelda Fasciano and "Tulip Baskets" by Carol Volkman.

The tulips in "Dancing" evoke the beginning of spring flowering in lighter shades of pink and touches of early green. Volkman's "Basket" has darker hued tulips and is enhanced by intricate workmanship of appliqued hand quilting — giving an effect similar to embossed white-on-white often found in paper art.

Wonderfully whimsical can best describe the little ladies in each square of Mary Forlines' "Dreams of Childhood." These figures, presented in profile, all striding to the left, recall earlier style illustrations in children's story books. The young girls are garbed in print dresses and wear face-hiding bonnets in solid or print colors.

Kay Clemens shows two pieces. One is "Mini-Madness," a small version in brilliant reds and greens of a full size quilt from the 1800s which evokes the flavor of a Christmas card, and "Contemporary Sampler," which displays a collection of different quilt patterns.

A study in colors in "Amish Hearts" by Sylvia Wheless is a most attractive creation in rich, deep colors highlighted by a placement of small hearts, all in soft, velvet-like fabrics.

• Varied forms of textile creations by Susanne Yowell Schuett are exhibited in the South Gallery. Ms. Schuett, formerly a North Carolina visiting artist and Penland resident craftsman, now works with young people in the Durham public schools.

The examples of her fabric art shown at GMA reveals more than just the careful craftsmanship involved in fabric works. In shape and choice of subject matter, they extend the visual world of fabric art to the role of telling stories in means other than a repeated motif. Some of her art harks back to skills traditionally employed in the creation of banners and commemorative pieces. Two smaller ones are wedding banners — two others, rectangular with a shield of flowers placed precisely between borders of geometric shapes bear a strong kinship to Renaissance era coats of arms displayed by European cities and feudal states.

Two others are engaging portraits superimposed on fabric; and yet another is a commemorative quilt in which a brief story is told in lettering.

The manner in which Ms. Schuett has used quilting and other techniques of fabric art to achieve a combination of lovely colors and patterns along with storytelling is an admirable achievement in expanding the limitations and enriching the long heritage of fabric art.

Stamp News

A sad day in the life of many Austrians is marked with a new 25-schilling stamp dedicated to the 50th anniversary of "Anschluss," the "reunification" with Nazi Germany. The stamp depicts a barbed wire fence symbolic of a concentration camp, the Austrian national flag at half staff and military helmets atop makeshift grave markers. The inscription in bold type translates into "11 March 1938-Austria Finished."

The Anschluss in 1938 became effective when German troops marched across the border to occupy Austria and solidify the Nazi puppet regime.

An Indian 1-rupee stamp honors the 4th Battalion of the Kumaon Regiment on the 200th anniversary of its formation.

The famed regiment served with distinction in the Maratha War of 1817, the operation against the Bhils in 1841, against the Arabs in 1853, the Rohilla War of 1854 and the battle against the Jhansi in 1857. During World War I, members of the Kumaon fought in East Africa against the Germans. They battled the Japanese in both the Malayan and the Burmese jungles during World War II.

BIG CERAMIC — "Stele: What Were We Protected From?" by artist Norman Schulman is one of the pieces exhibited at the N.C. Museum of Art in "Big Clay: Ceramic Pieces by N.C. Artists." The show will be on view through July 3. (Photograph Courtesy NCMA)

Show of Ceramics On View At NCMA

By ANNA UPCHURCH
N.C. Museum of Art

RALEIGH — Large-scale ceramic works by six North Carolina artists are now on view at the North Carolina Museum of Art July 3.

"Big Clay: Recent Ceramic Pieces by N.C. Artist" includes works by Denise Suska-Green of Charlotte, Tom Spleth of Raleigh, Xavier Toubes and Patricia Rieger, both of Chapel Hill, and Norman Schulman and James Herring, both of Penland.

The exhibtion was organized by the museum with Verne Stanford, director of the Penland School of Crafts, Inc. as guest curator.

To select the participating artists, Stanford traveled the state surveying the activities of many artists working in clay. He selected six whom he felt are making provocative and personal statements, and among whom he found shared concerns.

The exhibition includes the artists' most recently completed pieces, many on view for the first time. All the works are oversize. Many are vividly colored and have magical qualities. "These artists work large, using the extended surfaces as a means to convey a message," explains Huston Paschal, assistant curator of the museum and the exhibition coordinator. "The emphasis here is on content rather than the decorative or functional."

• Patricia Rieger has frequently exhibited her nearly life-sized people and quadrupeds, many from her "Journey" series. These figures also have mythical qualities demonstrated by the white, four-legged creature with a box on his back included in "Big Clay."

• Denise Suska-Green is represented by two vessel forms over six feet tall and nearly three feet in diameter. She is an instructor at Central Piedmont Community College, Charlotte.

• Tom Spleth is represented by two free-standing abstract earthenware works which have textured surfaces. The works stand atop tables made by the artist.

The exhibition is accompanied by a free, illustrated gallery guide with an essay by Verne Stanford. "Big Clay" is supported by funding from the North Carolina Museum of Art Foundation.

The North Carolina Museum of Art is located at 2110 Blue Ridge Boulevard in Raleigh. Hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday; 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Friday; 12 noon to 5 p.m. Sunday. Admission is free. For more information, call 833-1935.

I'VE HEARD BEFORE

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Ever hear a country tune that kept playing in your mind again and again?

"One of the great appeals of country music is that it's easy to remember because of repeated patterns," says Donald Shetler, a music professor at the University of Rochester. Rhythms repeat over and over, and three, four or five chords carry the harmony.

Country music fans are usually at least 20 years old, he said, because the typical themes of this music — falling in love, mourning a lost love, working for a living — center around family life.

FRANCIS W. EDMONDS

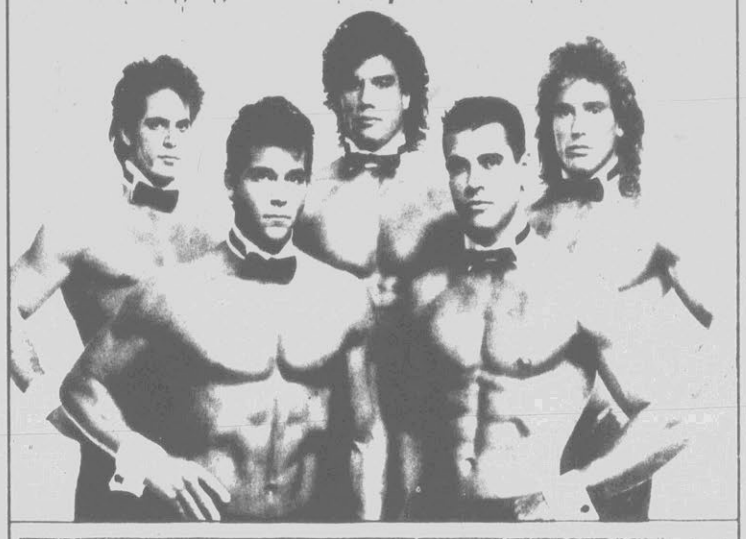

NEW YORK (AP) — The exhibition "Francis W. Edmonds: American Master in the Dutch Tradition" focuses on the work of Edmonds (1806-63) and the stylistic debt 19th century American art owed to Dutch painting.

The exhibit, at the New York Historical Society through June 19, traces Edmonds' career and includes 27 paintings and 13 oil studies and drawings. It also includes two of his sketchbooks.

Of Edmonds, the society says, "He took inspiration from 17th century Dutch genre painting, echoing its meticulous rendering of the everyday world and its fondness for rustic and humorous scenes."

Details In Hallberg's Novel As Engrossing As His Characters

THE RUB OF THE GREEN. By William Hallberg. New York: Doubleday, 1988. $17.95

Golf is, essentially, a game of character — you can't blame a poor shot on your partner, nor can you lament a loss because of a lack of teamwork. Even in tournaments, it is really only yourself you play against, always trying for a lower score. There are no bad passes in golf; it is only your own mistakes which account for a losing round.

So, when you rehash the game as all serious golfers do, the "if only my putt had gone in on the 17th," means both the limitations of your own abilities and an acknowledgement of fate: what golfers call the rub of the green. Accepting that reponsibility takes a certain moral toughness and developing that kind of character is what William Hallberg's first novel "The Rub of the Green" is all about.

This ability to accept responsibility for one's own life — one's actions and their consequences — is what the protagonist, Ted Kendall, learns in this novel. It begins as Ted remembers why golf became his teenhood obsession: "At first golf was only a green shade protecting me from the gathering white heat of my mother's death." Golf becomes a catharsis for Ted as he sinks his grief in the discipline of learning the game.

With Ben Hogan's "Power Golf" as his guide, Ted gives himself over to golf and, with the imaginary voices of famous pros to encourage him, he learns the game while putting his life back together.

Although Ted's father, Stan, considers all golfers as enemies because their errant drives have so often shattered his windows, he helps Ted learn his most valuable lesson — quid pro quo. Although Stan "considered golf one of the great American diseases," he becomes Ted's most loyal supporter, both on and off the course.

Ted's determination wins him a scholarship to Ohio State where he meets another serious golfer, Trayn, and his girlfriend Janice. Their triangular relationship forms the basis of Ted's four years of college memories — Trayn was his competitor in both love and golf: "Trayn's relationship with Janice was, in a strange sort of way, like a round of golf. But everything else in life is, too, if you work at the metaphor, so why bother with useless comparisons?" Ironically, the same sense of justice or character which Ted has developed on the course is what leads him to protect Janice, and sends him to Moss Point Prison.

Each chapter alternates between past events and his present life in jail, where this time, his dedication to golf helps him regain his self-respect. Initially feeling sorry for himself, "Well, Teddy boy, I say, here you are . . . trapped again, only in a different cage with no possible escape," Ted realizes that the traps we make are really those of our own construction.

Accepting that, Ted digs his way through 13 months in jail by reconstructing the two-hole prison golf course. His helpers are the three least-liked prisoners, and his relationship with them is what I found most humorous and winning in this novel. His side-kick and tractor mechanic, Drago, is full of raw humor and energy, and mysterious Grayson is Ted's hardest worker. His other helper and roommate, Chapman, is full of sanctimonious conviction and dry, droll humor: "If someone had told me a few years ago that I would be a day laborer on a prison golf course I would have hanged myself." He carries his shovel like one of the Seven Dwarfs, "Then again, the Lord forbids self-slaughter..." Together, this odd quartet refurbish the two holes — giving themselves and all of the prisoners something green to look forward to in the spring.

While golf is a game of character, writing style is certainly a reflection of character. And Hallberg's character comes through here — sharp, original, imaginative and very, very funny.

Not only is the structure of the book balanced, so is the tone: sometimes dry and witty, sometimes sad and reflective. This balance makes for smooth reading, as does the superb dialogue. Hallberg develops his characters through their conversations and comments, and they stay true to form.

Like the writing, the golf in this novel is a dedication to excellence. If you don't play golf, you may not understand a term or two, but don't let that stop you from reading this novel; it doesn't matter if you know a birdie from an eagle — that is not the point. If you do play golf, you'll ache to be out on the fairways enjoying the mystique of the game along with Ted Kendall.

Hallberg's careful selection of vivid details make the descriptive passages as lucid and as engrossing as the characters. This was a book I read with discipline, only three chapters a night, so as not to rush the pleasure.

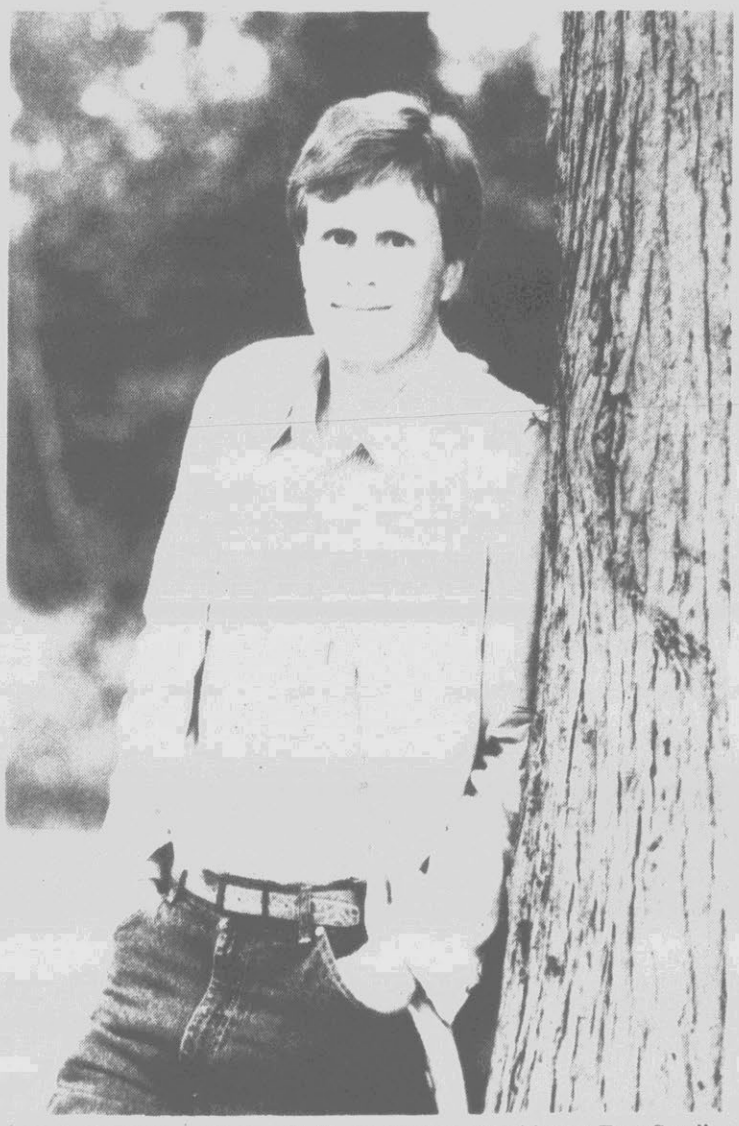

• Author William Hallberg is as dedicated to golf as his protagonist; and has played some of the best courses both in the U.S. and in Scotland.

Originally from Bowling Green, Ohio, he has been teaching writing at East Carolina University for the last seven years. Also scheduled for publication by Doubleday in 1989, is Hallberg's anthology of English and American golfing stories. He has just completed his second novel, "Van Gogh's Ear."

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By HANSEY JONES

In a world of Supermoms and Superkids, Dr. David Elkind sounds a note of warning to parents who are encouraging their children to do too much too soon.

In his book "Miseducation, Preschoolers at Risk," Dr. Elkind advises parents how to avoid the kind of miseducation of young children that he feels is on the increase in America today. He maintains that in schools and homes across the country, educational programs intended for school-age children are being misappropriated for the instruction of preschoolers. Books, lecturers, and the media, he contends, propagate the idea that only a "superkid" can grow up to compete successfully in the adult world — thereby encouraging parents to teach infants and very young children academic and athletic skills. Yet, he says, there is considerable evidence that early instruction can do lasting harm — that young children subjected to this kind of education are, in fact, at psychological risk, for no useful purpose.

After exploring the reasons why this miseducation exists on such a large scale, Elkind discusses the differences between the mind of a preschool child (how it works) and that of a school-age child, emphasizing how much young children can do and learn when they are presented with developmentally appropriate parenting practices and education.

Finally, the book discusses what parents should look for when deciding upon the intial stages of their children's education; what kinds of preschool programs are the most constructive and considerate of the individual child; when and where to enroll children in kindergarten; the "age effect" — what it can mean to a child to be youngest or oldest in a class; and the merits of such private educational systems as the Montessori and Waldorf schools. In a special section, Dr. Elkind answers the most common questions he is asked by parents in his position as professor of Child Study and Senior Resident Scholar at Tufts University.

Readers who are interested in pursuing this issue further will also want to read Dr. Elkind's earlier books, "The Hurried Child" and "All Grown Up and Nowhere to Go."

Flood Rate Level In Smuggling Artifacts

By CONNOISSEUR
A Hearst Magazine

The ancient art and artifacts of China are being smuggled into Hong Kong at a flood rate and are turning up at the leading New York and London auction houses.

Pottery figures and vessels, jades, bronzes and jewelry, many from illegally excavated tombs, according to an article in the current issue of Connoisseur, have been smuggled out of China since around 1981.

What started as a trickle turned into a flood by 1984, and some of these treasures are emerging half a world away in the salerooms of Sotheby's and Christie's.

A magnificent Tang horse and groom, which sold for $572,000 at Christie's last June, reportedly was fresh from China. So was the seated figure of a dog from the Han dynasty that decorated the cover of the June Sotheby's catalogue and sold for $63,800.

In Hong Kong, smuggled artifacts are found at every level of trade, from back-street junk shops to the elegant shops run by dealers of world repute in luxury hotels.

Just as the French Revolution yielded dazzling examples of European craftsmanship that had formerly belonged to the nobility, so the Chinese revolution has literally brought ancient treasures to the surface.

Peasants tilling land that had not been farmed for centuries came upon ancient tombs whose precious contents offered far greater opportunities for financial gain than any crop.

There are stories of whole villages turning out to dig the tombs by night.

The big impetus to the smuggling trade came with the lifting of travel restrictions within China in the mid-1970s. Since many of the burial grounds — including the rich tombs in the vicinity of the imperial court — were in the north of China, that meant establishing an illicit trade route of a thousand miles.

It has been pointed out that high officials must be involved or the material would not flow south in such quantity.

East Coast Premiere Of Young Composer's Work Given Here

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

Statistics are not readily available, but it's probably safe to say there are not many teen-agers in the U.S. today who are seriously engaged in composing classical music.

One of this obviously small number of gifted musicians, 15-year-old Carl Voss of St. Cloud, Minn., was in Greenville last weekend and early this week to attend the premiere East Coast performance of his major work to date, his "Symphony No. 1" written in 1987.

"This is my first time in North Carolina and I'm really astonished by the beauty of the countryside here," Voss said in an interview during a rehearsal break last Sunday afternoon. "There are so many trees everywhere around Greenville and it's all so bright green."

He added that it's evident spring comes earlier in North Carolina than in Minnesota. Other pleasures of Greenville he spoke about "are the friends I've made in this brief visit and the love of music I've found among people my own age."

The East Coast premiere of Voss's symphonic composition took place Monday evening at the A.J. Fletcher Recital Hall on the East Carollina campus, performed by the Eastern Youth Orchestra under the direction of ECU faculty member John O'Brien.

"I wrote this piece especially for performance by orchestras at the high school level," Voss said. "There're two versions. The first I scored for strings; the second, the version being performed here, is scored for full orchestra including strings, woodwinds and brass."

Voss lists Beethoven and Shostakovich as his favorite composers. "I really go for Shostakovich's string quartets, and I never tire listening to Beethoven's 'Third Symphony.'"

Most of Voss' compositions have been chamber music. "For one thing," he said, "it's faster and it's easier to write string music."

On the matter of scheduling time to compose, Voss sounded like any typical teen-ager speaking of time and decisions. "I don't schedule any special time to sit down and say I'm going to compose. Usually, ideas or the urge to write music will come and, when it does, I sit down and do it."

Voss, a sophomore at Technical High School in St. Cloud, mentioned having to provide time "to keep up with my studies as well as play outdoor sports. I love playing volleyball and riding a bike. I enjoy skiing, too, sometimes around my home, other times in Colorado where my parents and I go pretty often."

Close association with music came early in Voss' life. "I began taking lessons in the Suzuki method, playing the violin when I was 3 years old. Right now I'm studying the viola at the MacPhail Center for the Arts in Minneapolis.

"I started writing music when I was 5, and no," he laughed, "nobody pushed me into writing. It's just something I discovered that I enjoyed doing."

An only child, he said that neither of his parents are particularly musical, "although they love music and have certainly encouraged my efforts, but without pressuring me in any way."

His compositions have won state, regional and national awards and have been widely performed — receiving a high degree of exposure for a fledgling composer.

His first symphony is soon to be performed by the Des Moines, Iowa, Symphony Orchestra and has already had a performance in Minnesota.

"The symphony score is set for publication by the Kjos Music Publishing Company, located in San Diego, California. I find that exciting."

Another recent composition performed earlier this year by the St. Cloud State University Mixed Chorus is his "Lament For Mixed Chorus." Other of Voss' compositions include "Nokastral in X," "Keyboard Suite No. 1," and "Two Preludes and Fugues," all for piano, and "Symphony For Strings."

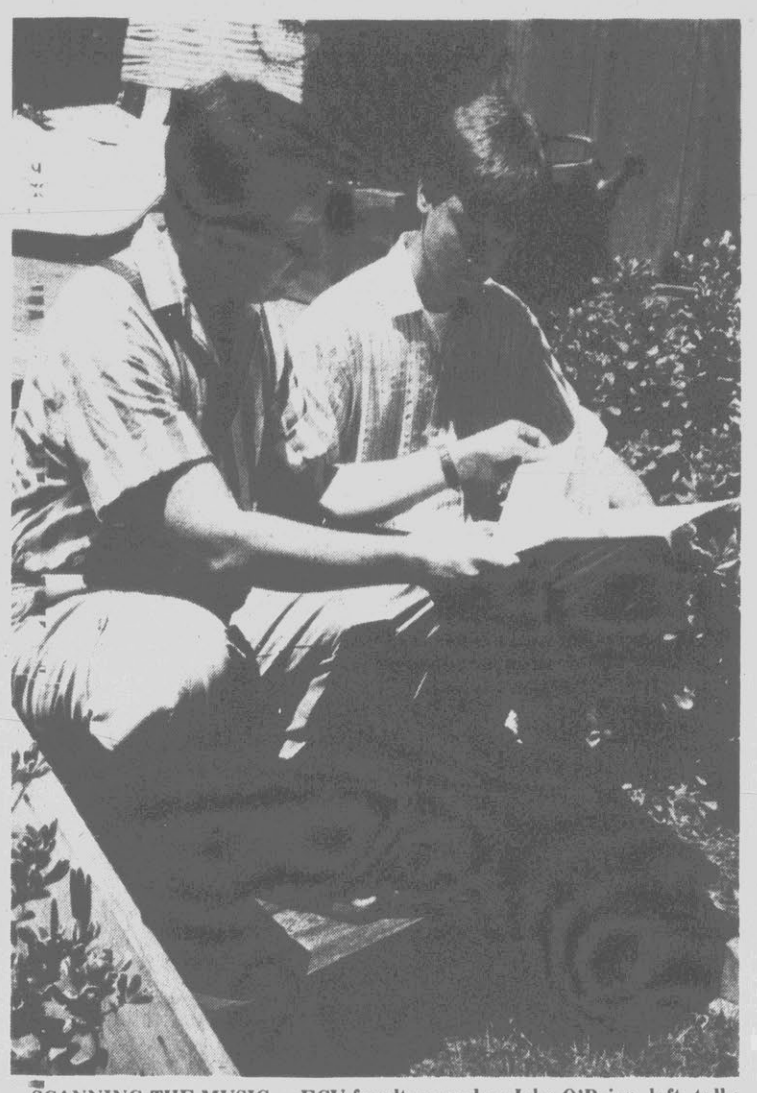

These are exceptional achievements for one so young, but Voss declares that at this time "I haven't come to any decision about making writing music my career. I'm not sure which way I want to go, but there's no rush. I have plenty of time to decide."

Aside from composition, Voss is involved in performing and has won numerous honors over the years in that field. Mathematics and Spanish are two favorite endeavors. When he was 14, he scored a perfect 800 on the math section of SAT and he finished second place in Minnesota's high school Spanish exam given last month.

"I love the Spanish language," he said, "and I've had the pleasure of one trip to Mexico. I want to travel more in Mexico some day soon."

The Monday night performance of Voss' symphony received a very warm response. He played with members of the orchestra in that and in other selections.

The symphony is in four movements. The work is considerably shorter than an average symphony, yet it reveals this young man's talent for melodic, warmly textured music — definitely a pleasure to listen to.

To Introduce Kabuki At NCMA

Raleigh — On May 22 at 3 p.m. performer Sachyo Ito will introduce kabuki at the North Carolina Museum of Art. Admission is free.

Kabuki is a popular theater that combines drama, music and dance. Miss Ito will explain the steps, patterns and gestures characteristic of Kabuki theater and will perform several traditional works. Often considered a male art, kabuki was created in the 17th century by a Japanese priestess.

Miss Ito toured Japan before coming to the United States in 1972. She has appeared throughout this country and toured as a member of the All Nations Company, which is sponsored by the National Endowment for the Arts.

THE NORTH CAROLINA HUMANITIES COUNCIL invites the citizens of North Carolina to a FREE showing of "FREEDOM OR TYRANNY" followed by a

PUBLIC HEARING
Friday, June 17, 1988
at the New Bern-Craven County Public Library
400 Johnson Street New Bern, NC

You are invited to witness the 1788 election of delegates to the Hillsborough convention. This video recreation, "Freedom or Tyranny," resumes the 200-year-old debate over states' rights versus a strong central government and was taped from a live performance in Edenton sponsored by the Historic Albemarle Tour, Inc. The live performances and town meetings were supported by a grant from the North Carolina Humanities Council.

In the simulated town meeting which follows the video presentation, you will have an opportunity to voice your opinion of the "newly-proposed" Constitution. Dr. Fred Ragan, professor of history at East Carolina University, will lead the discussion.

You will also have an opportunity to voice your opinion of the North Carolina Humanities Council, its current work and its future goals. The NCHC was established in 1972 to carry out the mandate of Congress and the National Endowment for the Humanities, a mandate to promote the humanities in public life. The establishing legislation cited a need, in a democratic society, to value and support the nation's scholarly and cultural activities. In doing so, we achieve a better understanding of the past and present and a better view of the future.

Copies of NCHC's current goals and plans for the next year will be available at the New Bern-Craven County Public Library at the time of the hearing or can be requested prior to the meeting by calling or writing the NCHC office - 112 Foust Building, UNC Greensboro, Greensboro, NC 27412, telephone (919) 334-5325.

PONTIAC'S GOT YOUR NEW CAR Excitement

We Now Offer Two Special Finance Plans For The New Car Buyer!

PONTIAC
COLLEGE GRADUATE FINANCE PLAN
NO MONEY DOWN* NO PAYMENTS FOR 3 MONTHS FOR QUALIFIED BUYERS

Congratulations! You deserve a lot of credit for your college achievements. And Pontiac wants to be the first to give you the credit you deserve . . . with Pontiac's College Graduate Finance Plan through GMAC. This plan can put you in the driver's seat of a high-performance road machine at financing terms within your budget. That's right. Now you can begin establishing that all-important credit history with Pontiac's help and drive the excitement of one of Pontiac's most popular models!

EXACTLY HOW DOES THIS PLAN WORK?
It's simple. Participating Pontiac dealers offer you . . .
A Pontiac "No Down Payment" Exclusive through GMAC. Pontiac pays the down payment of up to 5% of the cash selling price.
AND
A Deferred First Payment* with equal monthly payments of up to 60 months, beginning 90 days after date of purchase.

WHO'S ELIGIBLE?
It's easy to qualify. All we require is . . .
Receipt of a degree from any graduate degree program, four-year college or registered nursing (diploma) program within the past year (seniors within six months of graduation at a four-year college are also eligible), or current enrollment in a graduate degree program.
Verifiable permanent employment, or commitment for employment.
No derogatory credit references or no credit history at all.
The ability to meet the monthly payments.

HOW LONG DOES THIS OFFER LAST?
You can take advantage of this exclusive finance plan between now and Sept. 30, 1988.

PONTIAC
1st TIME BUYER FINANCE PLAN
$600 OFF TOWARDS DOWN PAYMENT FOR QUALIFIED NEW CAR BUYERS

Make no mistake. As a first-time buyer, your business is very important to Pontiac. And just to prove it, we're offering a $600 allowance that can be applied towards the down payment on selected all-new 1988 Pontiacs! It's called Pontiac's First-Time-Buyer Finance Plan through GMAC. And the best part is, while you're enjoying the ride of your life, you'll be establishing strong credit ties with GMAC.

IS ANY PRIOR CREDIT HISTORY NEEDED TO QUALIFY?
No. All we require is . . .
No derogatory credit history.
No prior new-auto financing.
Verifiable satisfactory employment and residence.
Confirmed physical damage insurance. (In some states, this requirement must be met with six months' worth of prepaid insurance. Ask your dealer for specifics.)
Acceptance by GMAC.

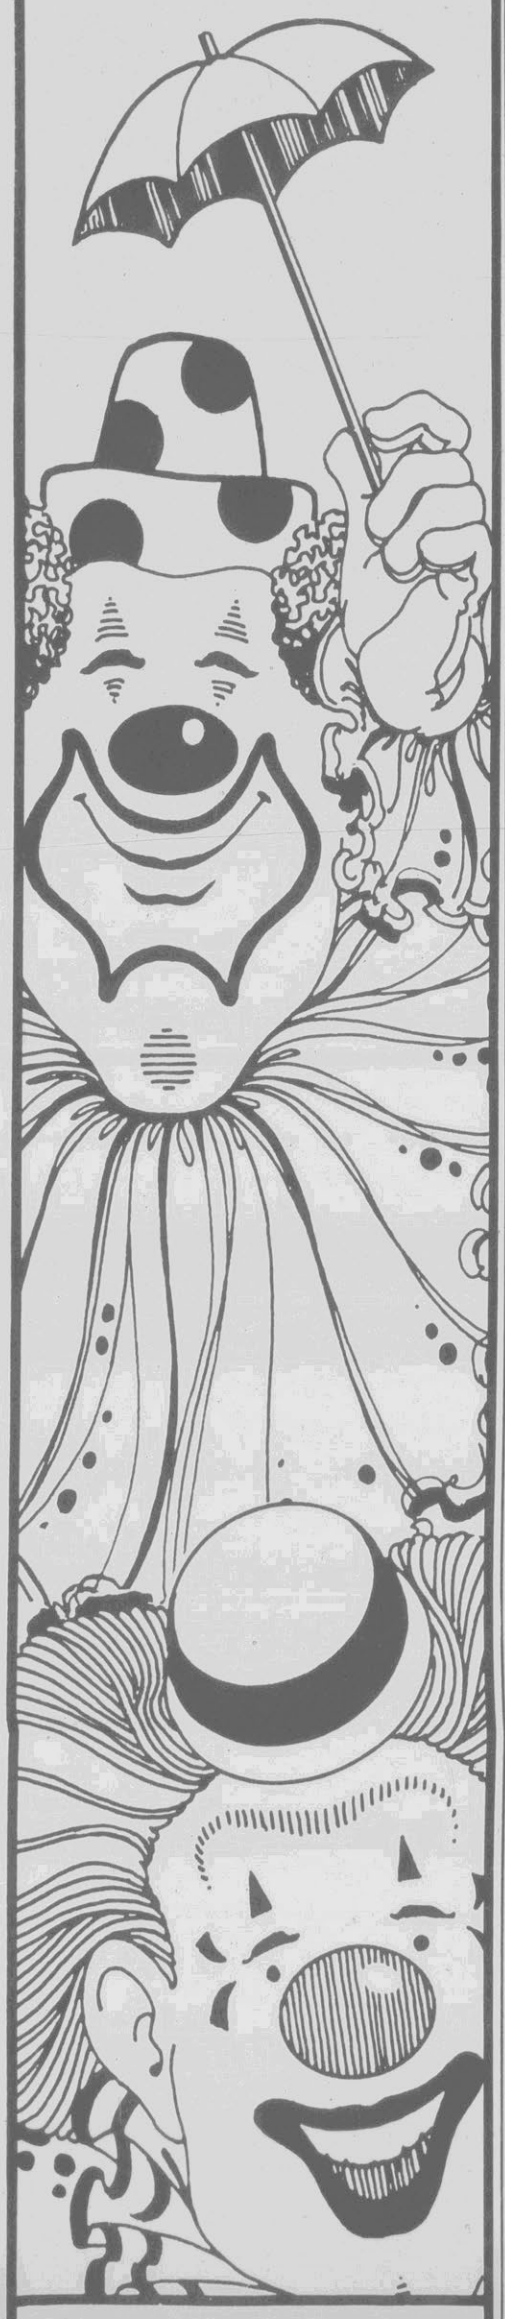

WHICH CARS ARE ELIGIBLE FOR THIS OFFER?
Just some of the hottest machines on the road is all . . .
Fiero
Firebird (Base and Formula only)
LeMans
Sunbird
AND Grand Am

ANYTHING ELSE?
Yes. This unique program is offered in addition to existing incentive programs available on the models mentioned above at the time of purchase. (See your dealer for details.)
NOTE: First-Time-Buyer Finance Plan cannot be combined with the College Graduate Finance Plan

WHAT ARE THE TERMS?
Equal monthly payments for up to 60 months. Of course, your monthly payments and financing costs will depend on how much you put towards your down payment. Simply put, the more you put down . . . the less your monthly payments.
That's it. That's all.

Q. In your opinion, which of these three TV network anchormen—Peter Jennings of ABC, Tom Brokaw of NBC and Dan Rather of CBS—is the most popular and best liked by his colleagues? —K.L., Santa Cruz, Calif.

A. Our surmise—and that's all it is—leans in the direction of Brokaw.

AP/Wide World (Jackie) and UPI (Eddie)

Eddie joins Jackie in comic composite on 1967 Esquire cover

Q. How old is Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis? How old is singer Eddie Fisher? Were these two ever involved together in a romance? Did Jackie ever threaten to run off with Eddie Fisher a few years after her husband, President John F. Kennedy, was assassinated, when she was a lonely widow?—L. Barnes, Virginia Beach, Va.

A. Jacqueline Bouvier Kennedy Onassis was born July 28, 1929, in Southampton, N.Y. Eddie Fisher was born Aug. 10, 1928, in Philadelphia. The two never were involved in a romance with each other, but their names were linked in an account of Jackie's 1967 meeting with the author William Manchester.

The former First Lady had objected to the impending serialization in "Look" magazine of Manchester's book "The Death of a President" and summoned him to Hyannis Port, Mass., to enlist his support in opposing the "Look" management. Jackie later was quoted as having said, in the course of their conversation: "Anyone who is against me will look like a rat—unless I run off with Eddie Fisher." At that time, owing to previous marital difficulties with Debbie Reynolds and Elizabeth Taylor, Fisher was not held in the highest light by the American public.

A. Bush says he is opposed to abortion except when the life of the mother is threatened or when there was rape or incest. "I support a Constitutional amendment," he declares, "that would reverse the Supreme Court's Roe vs. Wade decision on abortion made in 1973. I also support a human-life amendment with an exception for the life of the mother, rape or incest. In addition, I oppose the use of federal funds to pay for abortion except when the life of the mother is threatened."

Q. What is Cher's original name? Does she have her original nose? Was her mother really married eight times, or is that just publicity? Has success gone to Cher's head? How much can she ask for and get to act in a motion picture?—Edna McDonald, El Paso, Tex.

A. Cher's original name is Cherilyn Sarkisian, and her original nose has been reshaped by a plastic surgeon. Her mother, Georgia Holt, has indeed been married eight times, thrice to the same man. The Oscar-winning actress can ask for and get $2 million plus a piece of the profits to act in a film. She likes power but uses it judiciously. Cher, who turns 42 this week, is not only a rapidly rising movie star but also a woman of compassion.

Q. Kindly settle an argument between my husband and me. I say Doris Day has had three husbands. My husband insists she has had four. Who is correct?—J.O'Reilly, Woodcliff Lake, N.J.

A. Doris Day has had four husbands: the trombonist Al Jorden, saxophonist George Weidler, agent Martin Melcher and maitre d' Barry Comden.

Q. Who are the brains behind the Rev. Jesse Jackson, who wants to be the next President of the U.S.?—Norman Phillips, Gary, Ind.

A. Jackson has several astute advisers, among them Willie Brown, speaker of the California State Assembly and chairman of Jackson's Presidential campaign; Gerald F. Austin, his campaign manager; Bert Lance, Georgia banker and director of the Office of Management & Budget in the Carter Administration; and Ann Lewis, former political director of the Democratic National Committee. Some of the "many others" behind Jackson are Robert Borosage of the Institute for Policy Studies; Frank Clemente, an issues coordinator; Carol O'Cleireacain, a union economist; Bill Cosby, multimillionaire comedian-producer; and a variety of academic experts he feels free to call upon.

John Wetterer, a Vietnam vet, has given new life to more than 500 troubled, orphaned and abandoned boys in Guatemala

FATHER, TEACHER, FRIEND

"Tio Juan" with some of his boys: Ruben Dario Fernandez (rear, l) and Rodolfo Lopez Garcia, Angel Guerra and Jorge Canil (l-r).

Photographs by Andy Levin

GUATEMALA CITY. On the night that 18 of his boys came down with the chicken pox, John Wetterer was up till dawn, administering aspirin, comfort and calamine lotion. He'd quiet three adolescent patients, and a fourth would wake up scratching. With 248 boys in the house, things could only get worse.

"Don't be so triste, so sad, papa," Wetterer would plead in the endearing way of a real Guatemalan father. The boys, most of whom had never known their fathers, looked up at him with moist, brown eyes and red, spotty faces. "But, Tio Juan," more than one of them cried out that night, "this hurts!"

Say the name "Tio Juan"—Uncle John—in Guatemala City, and people know that you are referring to John Wetterer, a 40-year-old American bachelor who is as famous here as Father Flanagan of Boys Town was in Nebraska. In the courthouse, judges and social workers shake his hand; in the marketplace, peddlers move their wares so he can park; and in the city's shantytown slums, grandmothers greet him deferentially while children brag to their friends: "I saw him! I saw Tio Juan!"

Since coming here in 1976, Wetterer, a former New York City bank officer and a thrice-decorated Vietnam veteran, has helped more than 500 troubled, orphaned and abandoned boys. He has given them homes, clothing, medicine, schooling—and futures. And he has done it all using only private donations —without government funds or a salary. Even in this country, which adores its children, that is considered extraordinary.

About half of Wetterer's boys —teenagers and younger—live with him at Mi Casa (My House), a 50-room orphanage that was once a children's hospital. Within the last two years, he also has taken over a smaller orphanage and started a day school for 200 boys who live with their families in the slums. But Mi Casa remains the flagship of his enterprise.

Wetterer's methods are as impressive as his numbers. At Mi Casa, he knows each boy by name and which ones forget to brush their teeth. In the evening, after the teachers and the cook go home, he is the only adult in the house.

"Too many cooks spoil the broth, and too many employees make for an institution," he says. "I know institutions where for every two kids they have an employee. I'm not so sure that's good. Here, if a boy is sick at 3 o'clock in the afternoon or 3 o'clock in the morning, he knows I'm here to give him his medicine." Aura Marina Marcucci, the magistrate who heads Guatemala's juvenile justice system, says it is this attitude that makes Mi Casa a success. "The door is open," she notes. "The boys can leave anytime. But most of them don't."

Like many Latin American countries, Guatemala has seen the kinds of trouble that create orphans. In 1976, there was an earthquake. Over the last two decades, there have been thousands of murders and disappearances, most of them at the hands of politically motivated death squads. Conditions are said to be better under the country's 2-year-old civilian government, but most Guatemalans are still poor. The latest figures put per-capita income at about $1000 a year and illiteracy at nearly 50 percent. At Mi Casa—which is situated in the capital's richest area, a neighborhood of elegant homes and fancy boutiques—the abandoned children of poverty-stricken parents knock on the door.

In the early 1970s, when many of the Mi Casa boys were infants, Wetterer was working in the personnel office of Chase Manhattan Bank in New York, where he eventually became an assistant treasurer. Wetterer is the kind of person a job applicant likes to see. He is tall but too thin to be imposing. His smile is dimpled, angelic. His former boss, William Menger, recalls that Wetterer was particularly adept at placing teenage high school graduates with the bank. Earlier, as a 19-year-old Army infantry sergeant in Vietnam, Wetterer assisted nuns who ran an orphanage. Later, while working for Chase, he traveled to Vietnam to help two other orphanages. When Saigon fell in 1975, he helped airlift hundreds of children. He also adopted three Vietnamese boys.

It is, perhaps, because he has had so much experience with children that Wetterer seems to run Mi Casa more like a household of three than of almost 300. When he goes for a ride in the school van and 30 boys ask to come along, he does not flinch. Some of the older teenagers help Wetterer with the younger boys, but ultimately he is the one who is responsible.

Like any parent, Wetterer understands that busy children behave better. Classes at Mi Casa meet six days a week. A passing grade in most subjects is 80 percent. Volunteers give the boys piano lessons and supervise the home's marimba-band practice. The boys run two stores—one selling donated clothing (women's garb they cannot use), the other selling food and paper goods (bought wholesale), which are retailed to hotels and restaurants. When the boys asked for a new in-ground swimming pool to replace their worn-out above-ground model, Wetterer gave them a do-it-yourself book. In 11 days, they had dug the hole. The pool soon was completed and in use.

Less than a dozen boys have run away since Mi Casa opened 12 years ago, most because they could not adjust to a home after life on the streets. But among those who have stayed for years, four are now in college—three in Guatemala and one in Florida. One is in a pre-med course at San Carlos University here in Guatemala City.

In the late afternoon, after classes, the boys rush into Wetterer's never-locked office and surround him. On this day, he finds Rodolfo Lopez Garcia, 8, napping beneath his desk. "Excuse me, papa," he coos, gently picking up the child. "Excuse me for waking you." Rodolfo was born in prison—where both his parents were serving time—and was brought to Mi Casa at the age of 2½. His father was killed in prison. His mother was released but never came to claim him.

Soon, 17-year-old Rutilio Sanchez comes in to ask if he might go out for the evening. Nine years ago, his teenage sister brought him here because she couldn't take care of him. Rutilio never knew his mother. Now his problems are of a lighter variety: Wetterer says Rutilio likes girls better than schoolwork.

"What's early?" asks Rutilio.

"Well, Rutilio, anything after 7:30 sounds pretty late to me."

"Okay. Eight o'clock."

"You had to stretch it, didn't you?"

They smile as Rutilio leaves.

Every boy at Mi Casa has a difficult story to tell. Ruben Dario Fernandez is 11. His parents, he says, named him after a famous Nicaraguan poet. "The soldiers killed my mama and papa," he adds, as tears well up.

Mario Javier Pirish, 13, has been at Mi Casa for four years. "My mother gave me away to a señora," he explains. "But she beat me, so I ran away. For a year, I lived on the street. I slept on benches and watched cars for people. I used the money they gave me to buy rice with beans—and sweets." Mario says a priest finally took him in, then brought him to Mi Casa. He hated his first day here: "I missed the priest," he says. He'd lived with the priest only a week but had never had someone to miss before.

As the father of 248 boys, Wetterer has little time for introspection. Ask why he does what he does, and all he will say is that he loves it. In 1975, during the Saigon airlift, 78 of the babies he had rescued died in a plane crash. But even if that tragedy had not occurred, Wetterer says, he still would have dedicated his life to children. About his decision to open Mi Casa, he says, "I did know that when I retired from Chase Manhattan Bank when I was 65, what I would have done is open a home for children. It made more sense not to wait until I was 65."

So Wetterer retired at 29, supporting himself, as he still does, on the rent from his Long Island home. He wrote to a number of Third World countries, describing his plan to open an orphanage using start-up funds from an organization he had founded to help the Vietnamese children. The most enthusiastic response came from Guatemala. So he went there, rented a large house with only one bathroom and took in 37 boys. Four years later, he had 173 boys and a row of outhouses in the backyard. Eventually he moved Mi Casa to its present site.

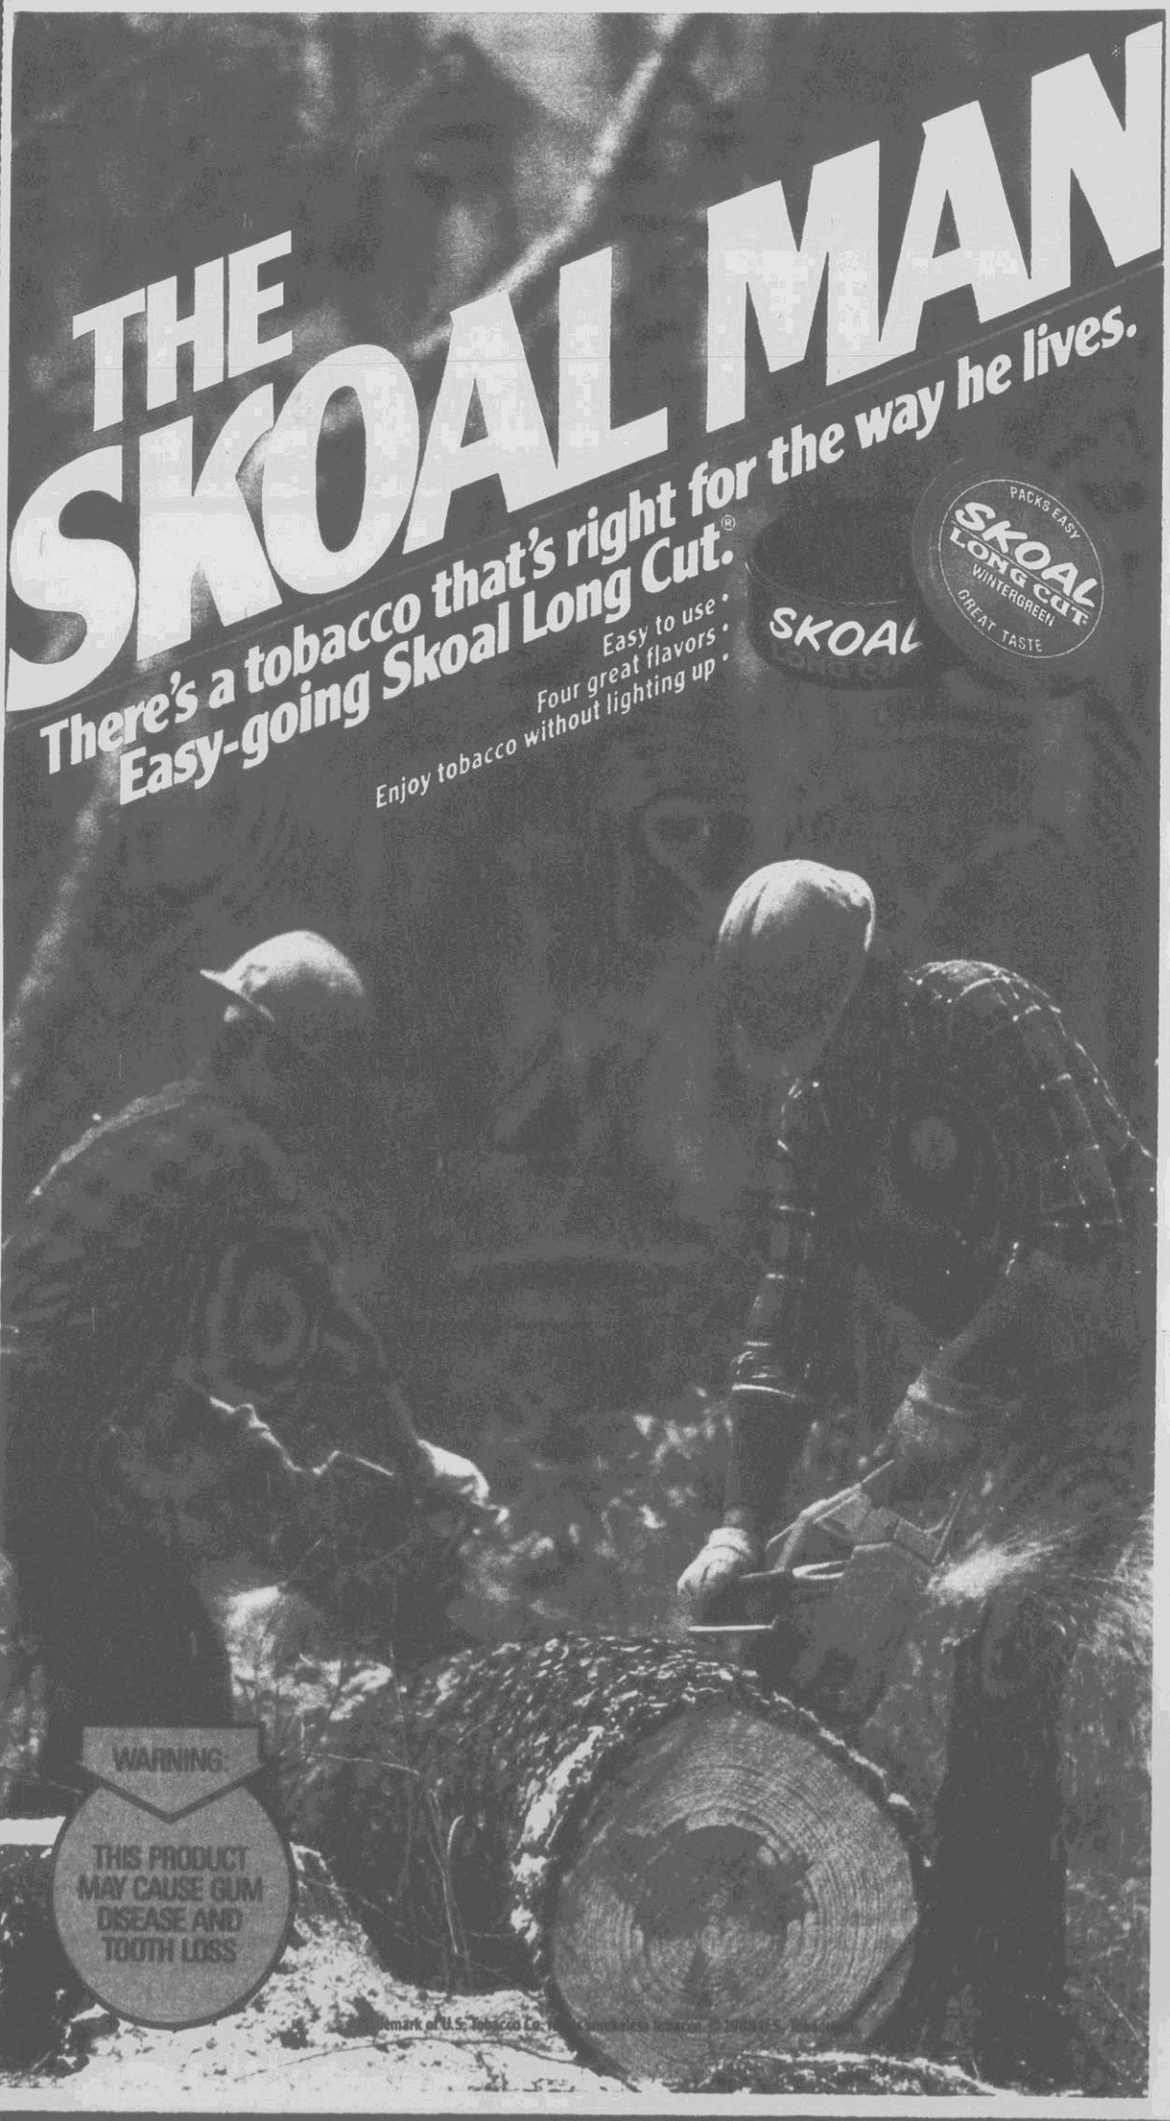

For years, Guatemalan businesses and American companies with offices in Guatemala City have been donating the supplies that help keep Wetterer's homes and schools solvent. He gets soap and shampoo from Johnson & Johnson, tortilla dough from General Mills, cereal from Kellogg, spaghetti and sugar from Guatemalan companies. Beyond those donations—and there are many more—it costs about $12,000 a month to run the two homes and schools. The Chase Manhattan Foundation, through its philanthropic grants program, has given Wetterer a total of $21,000.

But most of the help comes in small donations sent to American Friends of Children, his organization in New York.

Wetterer explains his success simply. "I have a lot of friends," he says. Ask Ruben how he feels about Tio Juan, and his eyes moisten once again. "Como papa [like a father]," he says. Rutilio, who did get home by 8 that night, says that he dreams of going to a university. What would his life have been like without Wetterer? "I don't have any idea," Rutilio says, "because I never think about that. I love him like my father. And I know that he loves me."

"I live in a home," Rutilio adds. "A nice home, with my brothers—a lot of brothers."

MOVIES

They Come in All Sizes

The eagerly awaited Ron Howard-George Lucas fantasy-adventure Willow is about the perilous journey of a 4-foot farmer of the peaceful "Nelwyn" race (Warwick Davis) who takes on a task no one else will: To carry a human-size "Daikini" baby girl to safety, despite the sorcery of an evil queen determined to kill her. Howard, who directed, says some of the characters are only 9 inches tall, "like elves—actually, they're the real version that nobody knows about." This must be how you talk when, like Howard, you've been acting in movies since you were 18 months old (MGM).

BOOKS

Bantam's Bard—In 29 Volumes

Paperback editions of Shakespeare's plays aren't exactly a rarity, but Bantam has issued a new series, edited by David Bevington, that is unusually attractive. The type is clear and easy to read, the introductory matter and notes are informative, and the characters' names are spelled out—no more "Cor." for Coriolanus or "Ham." for Hamlet. Best of all, the prices are reasonable: from $2.50 or slightly more for single plays to $4.95 for multi-play volumes.

Joseph Papp and Elizabeth Kirkland contribute an introductory volume, Shakespeare Alive! ($4.50). But what really matters is that this 29-volume edition of the 37 plays provides easy and rewarding access to English literature's greatest treasure trove.

Set a goal for sensible workouts and you'll succeed!

SHAPE UP FOR SUMMER

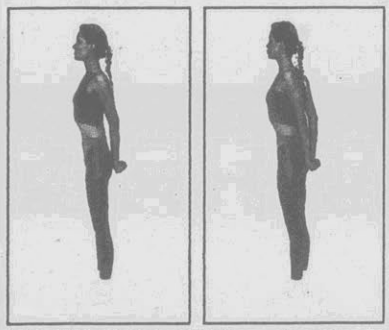

If you're behind on your fitness program, now is the time to gear up for bathing-suit season. Most of us do not have the profile of a model, like ours at left. But don't try to remedy the situation by suddenly overtaxing your body and brain with more than you can handle. Chances are you'll lose interest before you lose inches. Michael O'Shea, PARADE's contributing editor on fitness and founder of the Sports Training Institute in New York, says establishing a realistic goal for weekly workouts is the key to shape-up success. Strive for a combination of sensible diet (low in fats, high in such complex carbohydrates as whole-grain breads, potatoes) plus activities aimed at three goals: strength, flexibility, aerobics. The results of muscle-strengthening exercises are most likely to show on the beach. But flexibility-training improves how you move, and aerobics benefits your lungs and heart. Following are some exercises you can do on your living room rug, well before your bathing-suit debut. Each is marked (S), (F) or (A), denoting which of the three ways it helps your body. Aim to work out for 30 minutes, three times a week. Start slowly and gradually increase the count on strength and aerobics exercises; for flexibility, don't push too hard—just hold the stretch and feel your muscles pull. Vary your routine for interest and a well-balanced body.

Men's haircoloring discovery!

Blends away gray in 5 minutes

...without changing your natural color

After years of testing, the world leader in men's haircoloring has perfected a unique product created especially for the needs of men. That's why it's called JUST FOR MEN.™

Here, at last, is a man's haircoloring that replaces gray faster and easier than was ever before possible. The results are so subtle, so natural, even men who hadn't thought of coloring their hair are changing their minds.

JUST FOR MEN is incredibly simple. Just apply it, and in 5 minutes, wash it out. That's right, in the time it takes to shave or shower—the gray is blended away. Just 5 minutes, not 40 like women's hair dyes.

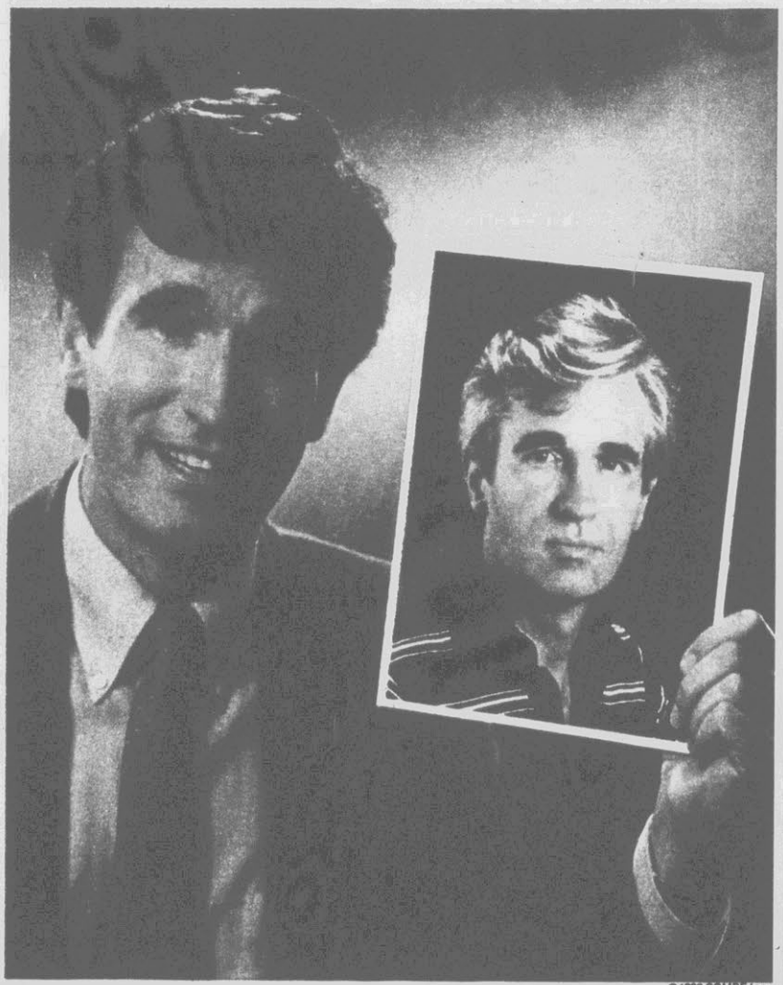

And just one application is all you need—for up to six full weeks. With JUST FOR MEN, the color doesn't fade or wash out—shampoo after shampoo.

Hair regains its natural look

JUST FOR MEN works so subtly, it colors only the gray—without altering the rest of your hair's color. So gray is gone, blended away, and your natural-looking color is back.

Men all over the country are reporting their hair looks natural, healthier and even fuller—the way it used to.

GOOD GROOMING FOR MEN

With the onset of summer, the forecast is for plenty of warm days and a new crop of grooming habits to counteract the heat's harsh effects. Looking good means staying crisp even when the weather isn't. Here are tips to help cope and renew your warm-weather style:

- Always use sunscreen when you are outdoors for a prolonged period, not just at the beach. Working in the yard or sitting in the bleachers at a ball game takes a high toll on your skin. Wear a hat and use creams with high SPF (sun protection factor) on face, hands, neck, ears, lips and bare scalp.
- Drink lots of water to hydrate your body, keep you cool. Down at least eight glasses a day in warm weather and increase your intake when exercising vigorously.
- Bathe more frequently, freely applying talcum and deodorant. Choose products from a group scented with a favorite fragrance to make a fresh statement, but don't combine them with heavy scents that fight one another.
- Select a lighter, fresher cologne for summer and apply it liberally to chest and back after bathing. Avoid the antiquated "slap-it-on-the-face" approach—this can sting the skin and overpower those around you.
- Increased bathing and swimming are drying to hair. Always rinse out chlorinated or salt water. Try a water-based conditioner twice a week.
- To camouflage gray hair, try a hair-coloring product that will take the gray strands to a lighter shade, giving a sun-streaked effect. Don't go for high contrast: Select a natural tone, one shade lighter than your own. Consult a professional or try a shampoo-in product that allows you to experiment.
- Moisturize more conscientiously after increased showering and swimming. Again, choose unscented lotions that don't fight other scented grooming aids.
- Avoid shaving right after you've been in the sun, when skin is most sensitive.
- Take extra precautions when shaving summer skin: Shower first to thoroughly soften beard, or generously splash on warm water to open pores. Use an after-shave balm or moisturizer, rather than an alcohol-based product.
- Buy sunglasses with great-looking frames, tinted lenses in dark green or lavender/gray to add new proportion and color to your face.

BEWARE OF QUICK FIXES

We asked Dr. Georgia Witkin, the author of "Quick Fixes & Small Comforts: How Every Woman Can Resist Those Irresistible Urges," to explain why so many women feel that their lives are run by a compulsion to spend money, clean house or reach for the phone. What follows is adapted from her new book, which will be published by Villard Books later this month.

AS A PSYCHOLOGIST, I REGULARLY SEE WOMEN who seem to have everything—family, job, money, clothes—and yet they tell me they feel empty inside. As I see it, these women—be they housewives, career women or both—are so busy that they don't know what they feel. Instead, they block their feelings and avoid their upsetting thoughts by eating, shopping, smoking, drinking, yelling or telephoning. The odds are that you do too. For example:

Is a telephone call every hour the only way you can get through the day?

Is a sleeping pill something you really don't need but take each night just in case you might be sleepless?

Does your living room get rearranged every time you end a romance?

I see these irresistible urges and compulsions—buying binges, cookie sprees and cleaning marathons, among them—as "quick fixes" which women use to try to make their lives better. We all have our "fixes" and refer to ourselves affectionately as telephone junkies, bargain addicts or junk-food junkies. Not many of us have given much thought to what such fixes really are.

Fixes are behaviors that we rely upon to keep ourselves going at a fast pace, indulge in to make ourselves feel better rather than face feeling bad, use to displace anger or frustration and to ward off tension and anxiety.

Through my work, I have found that women are particularly prone to these behavioral "quick fixes," because we have not been raised to make our problems priorities. We have been raised to try to be perfect. And "perfect people" don't have problems. So we try to solve our problems quickly, quietly and by ourselves.

We act as parents to our children, our spouses and even our parents. We buy their clothes, prepare their food, listen to their problems and give them love. I think, therefore, that women who give at home and at the office need to take in order to keep going. Is it any wonder then that women buy themselves clothes, feed themselves food, talk on the telephone and want tender loving care for themselves?

Some of these compulsions are quick to plan but turn out to be very slow in execution: a new house to revitalize a relationship; a new baby to bond a marriage. Others come with potions, lotions and the magic-mirror images of our childhood fairy tales. The diet do-over is one example. The makeup makeover is another. Change our hair, and we will be changed, they tell us.

The problem with these quick fixes is that they bring small comfort and often tend to make things worse in the long run. Take, for example, the snack—a small comfort that many women turn to. There is a moment of pleasure as the chocolate meets the taste buds, but afterward there may be consequences. Too many snacks may result in a weight problem, which affects health and self-esteem.

At the same time, a fix can interfere with other areas of your life. Suppose your fix is sleeping pills. You may find that you pay for a good night's sleep with grogginess the next day that puts you at less than your best.

A fix can compromise your sense of control and

Many of us reach for food when we really want fun. Or we buy ourselves gifts when we want someone else to give us love. Snacks, shopping and other quick pick-me-ups help us focus on the moment only—and avoid upsetting feelings such as "I'm unhappy at work or in my marriage." To change, first ask yourself, "What am I really craving?"

choice—for example, when bargain-hunting becomes compulsive-shopping. Suddenly you can't stop shopping, even when your bank balance is too low to pay the bills. And, finally, a fix can become destructive instead of constructive because it is overdone. A nap may be just right when you are tired, but constant napping may tell your family that you are withdrawing from family life, just when you need them most.

When fixes become failures. Why do we continue to seek our fixes even when they have begun to erode the quality of our lives? Why do we keep reaching for the telephone when we know we will not hear what we need to hear? Why do we keep searching through stores when our need is for more emotional fulfillment, not closet-filling? Why do we give ourselves food when we want fun? Why do we clean our closets when we need to clean up our relationships?

We probably persist because these behaviors spare us from having to come face to face with realities. If we give up a fast fix, we must face a slow solution. Or we must face a problem with no solution. Or we must admit that without the fix we feel more vulnerable or sad or frightened or resentful or dissatisfied. We might have to look at our dependencies on others, our disorganization, our human failings. Fixes help us focus on the moment only and avoid such unsettling thoughts and questions.

If this sounds like you, it's time you set about separating the demands of society and other people from your own wants, needs, wishes and desires. We all think we want to keep going at any cost, but often the cost is too high.

It is time for you to slow down to a pace that permits you to deal with problems realistically and constructively, rather than do rush patch jobs because you expect yourself to keep going at any cost. It's time for you to focus on functioning well, rather than just functioning. Learn to recognize your fast fixes and the reasons for each. Here are a few guidelines:

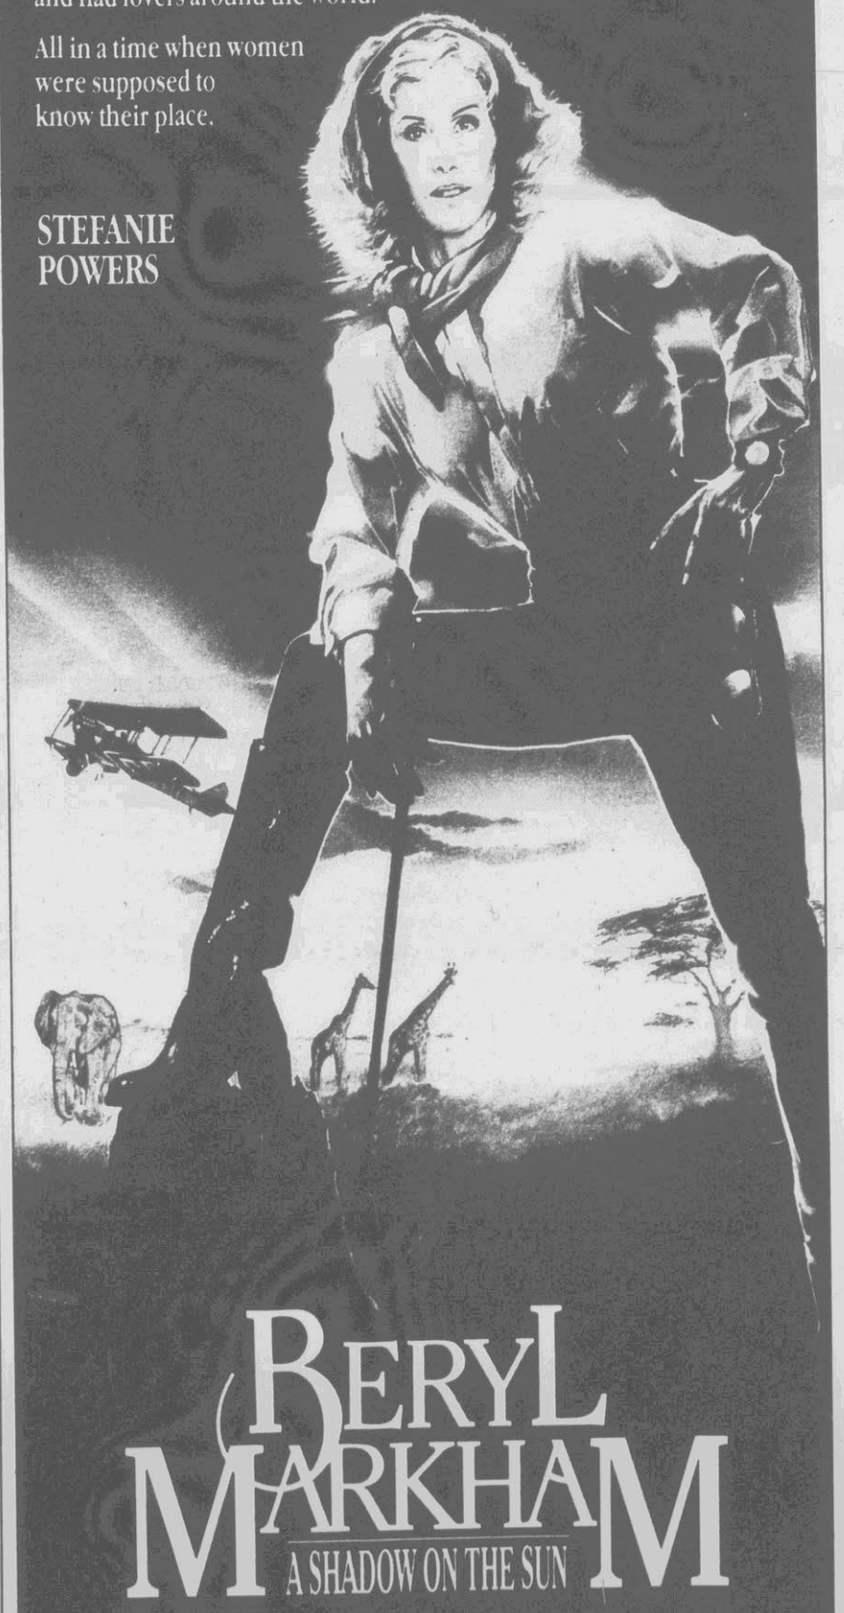

- Recognize that a need for a fix means something needs fixing!
- Recognize that compulsive, out-of-control behaviors are always symptoms of a syndrome. Let's not pretend that the fixes are our only concern. "If I could just stay away from singles bars, my life would be different," I hear. Or, "If I didn't take so many tranquilizers." Ask yourself instead: "Why am I craving sex or sedatives?" Only then can you really change behaviors that bring momentary sweet nothings into behaviors that bring lasting self-esteem.
- Recognize that makeovers don't last and do-overs don't exist. After you learn about your fixes and their sources, you will still be you. And that's okay. With humor and patience, we can all learn to manage our impulses. Perhaps even indulge ourselves from time to time—by choice!

Never Say CAN'T

BY TOM DAMMANN

"I DON'T LIKE BEING TOLD what you can't do when you have a medical problem," says Jimmie Heuga. "You need to be told what you can do."

Jimmie Heuga's medical problem is multiple sclerosis—one he shares with 250,000 other Americans. His condition is all the more poignant because he had been one of this country's top skiers, winning a bronze medal in the Winter Olympics in 1964.

Now 45, Jimmie still skis—but with a new purpose. He's proving to himself and to others with M.S. that they can still pursue a sport or any other activity that brings them happiness, pride and a sense of living a full life.

In Vail, Colo., Heuga runs The Jimmie Heuga Center, designed for those with M.S. who, like himself, are determined to fight the effects of the disease.

Heuga's approach to dealing with M.S. runs contrary to traditional medical thinking. It's an approach he developed out of his own experience (although a recent study shows some scientific basis for his views). It emphasizes that reasonable aerobic exercise, while no means a cure, will help persons with the disease to improve their physical condition and their self-confidence.

People with M.S. are told to avoid emotional and physical stress. But when Heuga took up bicycling to "take charge of my life," he found exercise beneficial and thought others might too. "We can't just sit around and wait for the consequences of our disease," he says.

Jimmie launched his center in 1984. Participants in the eight seminars held there every year meet with experts in various fields of disease rehabilitation. They undergo comprehensive physical and psychological evaluations, and each receives instructions for a personal exercise program at the end of the four-day session.

Jimmie's form on the slopes today is a far cry from his Olympic days. Legs far apart, his turns are slow and wide. But his wife of one year, Debbie, watches unflinchingly when he takes a fall. She knows he'll always get back up again.

A Girl Named Princess

London Express

Controversial Miss Manwaring-Spencer

In this country, parents can name their offspring pretty ~~nearly anything~~ they like—and they have, such as Ima Hogg and Silence Bellows. Overseas, however, child-naming is a different story—as Hugh and Audrey Manwaring-Spencer of Scotland learned almost two years ago, when they named their new daughter Princess Dulcima Rosetta. In so doing, they spawned a bureaucratic hassle involving Queen Elizabeth, the General Register Office for Scotland and public opinion.

It all began on July 5, 1986, when Audrey Manwaring-Spencer gave birth to her fifth child. She and her husband thought Princess Dulcima Rosetta would be a lovely and lively name for their baby girl and had it registered with the authorities in Edinburgh. Presently they received a birth certificate bearing the name.

Five months later, the General Register Office notified the Manwaring-Spencers that their daughter's name would be expunged from the records and asked them to return the birth certificate. "Based on an Order in Council of 1910," they were told, "Princess is not a recognized forename in this country because it is part of the Crown's prerogative and cannot be assumed or entered in a register or official document without the consent of the Sovereign."

LLOYD SHEARER ©1988

The Manwaring-Spencers thereupon wrote Queen Elizabeth at Buckingham Palace, requesting her consent. A reply from Robert Fellowes, Elizabeth's private secretary, followed. "I am commanded by the Queen," it stated, "to thank you for your letter of 11th December about the name of Princess which you have given to your daughter. Your courtesy in writing Her Majesty is appreciated, but you may rest assured that you have caused no offense to the Queen, and you may continue to use the word as your daughter's Christian name."

The Manwaring-Spencers interpreted those words to mean that all was okay, that Elizabeth had granted them the necessary permission. But they were mistaken. In January, they received another missive from the Queen's secretary. It read:

"I understand from the General Register Office in Edinburgh that there is some confusion about the use of the word Princess which you have given to your daughter.

"According to the Registration of Births, Deaths and Marriages (Scotland) Act of 1965, it is not possible for your daughter to be officially registered under this name under Scottish law, and it will have to be omitted from the birth certificate.

"However, as you will note from my letter of 17th December, there is no objection to you and your family continuing to use the word Princess as the name by which your daughter is known to her friends and family."

As we went to press, the case of Princess Dulcima Rosetta Manwaring-Spencer had not yet been resolved. A spokesman for Buckingham Palace refused to talk to us about it. The little girl's parents said they were not about to change their daughter's name or to return her birth certificate, as the bureaucrats demanded. And Henry Chappell of the General Register Office in Edinburgh informed us, "The matter is under investigation, and it's not an easy one to decide. It raises several questions: Do parents have the right to name their children as they wish, without the consent of the Sovereign? Was the Queen's permission implied in the letter her secretary wrote Mr. Manwaring-Spencer? Do parents have the right to call their offspring Earl or Duke or Major, which are also titles, but not Princess or Prince? The matter will take some sorting out."

Up and Up

It will pay more than ever to win the Nobel Prize this year, unless the bottom drops out of the Swedish crown. The Nobel Foundation, which finances the celebrated awards, announced recently that it planned to raise the amount of its annual prizes by 15% this December, so each will be worth about $428,000—depending, of course, on the rate of exchange between the U.S. dollar and Swedish krona. Last year's Nobel Prizes were each in the amount of 2,175,000 kronor (worth $345,000 at that time), up 8% from 1986.

Adjani Triumphs

You win some; you lose some. Not too long ago, the French actress Isabelle Adjani starred with Warren Beatty and Dustin Hoffman in the movie comedy Ishtar. Filmed in Morocco and reminiscent of the old Hope-Crosby road pictures, Ishtar bombed mercilessly in the U.S. to the tune of nearly $40 million. Last month, however, a little sunshine entered Adjani's life.

She won a $300,000 judgment in her lawsuit against Time Inc. and its advertising agency, Young & Rubicam, for using her photo without permission in a Time magazine ad campaign. Judge Ronald Lew ruled that publishing Adjani's photo without her permission was a violation of the New York Civil Rights Act in that it deprived her of the right to control her own publicity.

"Skin cancer! Skin cancer doesn't happen to someone who's thirty-three. Or at least that's what I thought when my doctor first told me I had it.

"You see, ever since I was young, I've been a person who loves spending all day in the sun. I never put a sunscreen on. I just never thought the sun was doing any damage.

"Then, one day, my doctor told me I had skin cancer which might have been prevented if I had used a sunscreen regularly all those years.

"Fortunately, I'm fine, now. But I'm trying to do everything I can to keep it from happening to me or my family again. So I protect all of us all day long with new Super Shade 30+."

That's because Super Shade 30+ protects you for up to nine hours. Super Shade 30+ gives you all-day protection from ultraviolet B rays that cause sunburn. Its broad-spectrum formula protects you from ultraviolet A rays, one of the major causes of premature aging and long-term skin damage. Sandy Duncan

IN AN OLD ROZ RUSSELL movie called My Sister Eileen, two young out-of-town sisters seeking New York City careers move into a Greenwich Village apartment. By the second reel, the apartment has been invaded by local characters, lovelorn young men, Brazilian naval cadets, circus acts, cheating husbands, gangsters—everything but the Chicago Bears and a ballroom-dance competition.

BRADY'S BITS

Sandy developed a brain tumor in 1971 and had to have one eye removed. She's so casual about it, you don't even know which eye is real.

Sandy is a slender, bouncy woman who says, "I look like somebody's sister."

She misses singing on her TV show, but not the dancing. "Dancing hurts," she explains. She does yoga three times a week.

"That's why I've been doing yoga," she says. "A lot of lower-back pains and other problems from dancing have gone away." Sandy turns down offers for national tours of musicals. "You can't stay out there producers want to make you—seven months at a time," she says. "I won't leave the kids for six months."

The other day, when I went up to see Sandy Duncan, star of NBC's Valerie's Family, I was reminded of My Sister Eileen.

Sandy and her husband, Don Correia (he played the Gene Kelly role in the Broadway hit Singin' in the Rain), have two young sons, but the boys were home in California. "I leave out some food and spread newspapers on the floor," Sandy cracked. Their apartment, right off Park Avenue, was hardly dull.

Cindy Garvey was upstairs with a crew doing a taped interview for her cable-TV show. Real estate agents were calling (the Correias are selling the New York place to settle permanently in Los Angeles). Danny, the superintendent, was carrying out papers. Don was moving furniture to make the place look neat for potential buyers. I did my interview sitting on a kitchen stool. Sandy was making coffee. Outside it was snowing, and she was trying to reach a car service on the phone. Cindy Garvey left and then, having forgotten something, came back. Sandy finally poured herself a glass of wine and lay down on a sofa to continue the interview. Don was on the phone describing the bathrooms.

"Your life is a sitcom," I said.

We all know Sandy from Peter Pan and several TV shows of her own, but what is extraordinary about her NBC success is that she took over a show in very real distress (Valerie Harper held out for more money, was fired and now is suing) and made it work. "It will probably be renewed for next season," Sandy said, "but they're thinking of calling it The Hogan Family [Sandy's character is named Sandy Hogan]. We've already got sweaters and jackets with Hogan labels!"

I wondered if there were bad feelings on the set after the Valerie Harper situation. "People were wary at first," Sandy admitted. "But the Valerie thing was not of global importance, and I said so. and now nobody asks me about it anymore." When she finishes taping this season's shows, she and Don may do a couple of nightclub acts or a TV movie of the week. Sandy and the Broadway star Tommy Tune plan a musical version of Topper with Cole Porter tunes, but that's three years away.

She and Don have a cottage in Brentwood, Calif. ("It was the staff quarters on the Shirley Temple estate," she told me), but they plan to build their own house. "I'd been driving a little rented car out there," Sandy said. "One day someone came to the door and said, 'Missus, a truck just scraped up your car.' But when I ran out, there was an ice-blue Jaguar with a red ribbon at the curb, a gift from Don. I've gone Hollywood!" she added triumphantly. "People even stare at me in shopping malls."

Sandy Duncan is such a big hit on "Valerie's Family," she has made everyone forget the talented Miss Harper. Now they're planning to rename the show.

Hasselhoff Resurfaces In 'Perry Mason'

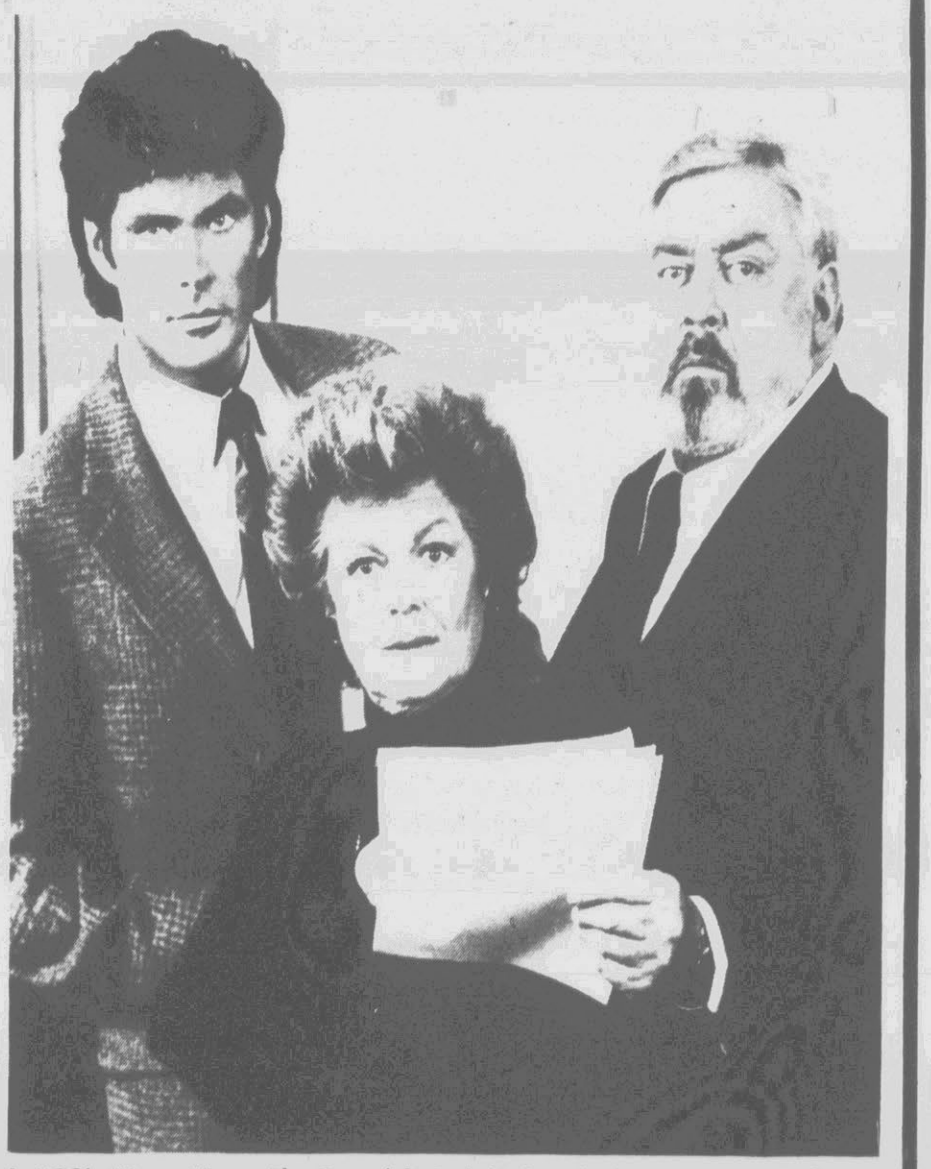

By Evan Levin

For four years, we watched a man talk to his car. David Hasselhoff and KITT, the computerized, souped-up Trans Am, gave a new twist to the crime show and the car-as-technological-wonder by combining the two in "Knight Rider." After the show's demise, however, the wisecracking avenger couldn't find work anywhere. "I finally went to Europe," says Hasselhoff, who's back this week in NBC's "Perry Mason: The Case of the Lady in the Lake," airing Sunday, May 15. "I could either play Peoria or Paris, so I chose Paris."

In "Lady in the Lake," Hasselhoff plays the defendant, who is accused of murdering his wife. "I was sitting in a hotel room in Portugal watching 'Perry Mason' movie. It was a great coincidence. I turned down a lot of bad stuff, but I wanted to do this.

"It's a sensitive, emotional role, very different from Michael Knight," Hasselhoff continues. "I wish I could have been cross-examined or played the bad guy, but this was great. Especially since Perry was defending me, and we know he never loses."

Hasselhoff is hoping the movie will give him the exposure he needs to start building a new career. He's done several films in Europe, and still tours there with a group called David Hasselhoff and the Knight Rockers. "That all came about because this girl won a trip to come see me through an Austrian magazine," he explains. "She came and brought the magazine with her, and I saw an ad for this album I'd done. I said, "How many copies has that sold, five?' She looked at me like I was crazy and said, 'It's No. 1.' So I realized they were making a huge amount of money off me and I wasn't getting any of it. I went to my manager and tried to get him to put together a tour with me singing, built around the 'Knight Rider' car, and he said no. Fine. So I put it together myself, it was a huge success, and I came back and said, 'ha ha, you don't get any of it!'"

In NBC's "Perry Mason: The Case of the Lady in the Lake," Mason (Raymond Burr, r.) must defend a man (David Hasselhoff) accused of murdering his wife. He's helped by trusty aide Della Street (Barbara Hale). The movie airs Sunday, May 15.

After the movie airs, Hasselhoff plans to continue his European tours, but also wants to develop several projects in this country. "If I tried to be a singer here, I would just end up in the Catskills," he says. "It was really rough right after 'Knight Rider' went off the air. It was like, 'I'm 35, I have to pay my dues now?' But I'm ready for some more adult-oriented work. I want people to know I'm more than just a guy who talks to a car."

ASK ME ABOUT TV

'Hill Street' actor's problem occurred many years ago

By Toni D'Amato

Is it true that Daniel J. Travanti of "Hill Street Blues" once had a drinking problem? My husband says he did, but I've never read anything about it. – P.B., Owatonna, Minn.

Daniel J. Travanti

It has been reported that Travanti did have a battle with the bottle, but that was long before he landed the role of Capt. Frank Furillo on "Hill Street Blues."

In 1973 Travanti had a breakdown which reportedly led to a realization that he had a problem with alcohol. He recovered, and in the mid-1970s could be seen in guest-starring roles on TV series such as "Gunsmoke." He even did a six-month stint on "General Hospital" in 1979. His big break came in 1981 when he won the part on "Hill Street Blues." That work earned him Emmy awards in 1981 and '82 for Best Actor in a Drama Series.

I'd like to know something about the late Judy Holliday, including when and how she died and how many movies she was in. – W.D., Penticton, British Columbia, Canada.

Holliday died in 1965 from cancer. She was 43. She made 11 films, starting in 1944 with "Greenwich Village" and including "Adam's Rib" (1949) and "The Solid Gold Cadillac" (1956). She won an Academy Award for Best Actress for 1950's "Born Yesterday." Holliday had been a last-minute replacement for Jean Arthur in the stage version, and Columbia reportedly wanted Rita Hayworth for the film version. But Holliday landed the role and made it into a classic. Her last film was "Bells Are Ringing" (1960).

He hosted "Can You Top This?" in 1969 and "Tic Tac Dough" from 1978 to 1985.

Martindale started his career as a D.J., then became a record promoter and even had a hit record of his own – a narrative titled "Deck of Cards."

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: Please give us some information on Stephen Caffrey, who portrays Lt. Goldman on "Tour of Duty." – K. MILLER, GATLINBURG, TENN.

Caffrey was only 7 years old when he decided on an acting career after seeing one of his older brothers in a school play. He began acting in productions at Chicago's Lakeview High School,and skipped college in order to pursue acting. Following several dinner theater appearances and road company tours, he worked for two years with Chicago's Immediate Theater, an ensemble company he also helped to develop.

In 1984, Caffrey appeared in the TV movie "Hard Knox" and the after-school special "Safe Harbor." His one-year stint as Andrew Cortlandt on "All My Children" led to a Daytime Emmy nomination in 1986 for Best Juvenile Actor. A former Chicago resident, Caffrey now lives in New York, but he remains a loyal Cubs fan.

Dear Michele: Who played Lamont Sanford on "Sanford and Son"? I say it was Richard Pryor. My friend says it was someone else. – GARY OHNICK, MONUMENT, COLO.

Demond Wilson portrayed Lamont Sanford on this sitcom, which aired from 1972-77. Richard Pryor occasionally contributed scripts for the series.

Dear Michele: Please help settle an inter-office discussion. Who did Victoria Principal leave in order to date Andy Gibb, now deceased? Was it Barry Manilow? – THE PANGERE CORP. (YVONNE, MARY AND BOB),GARY, IND.

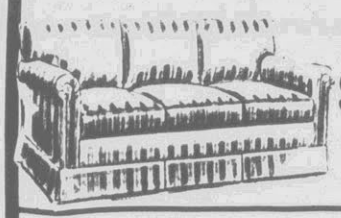

Victoria Principal has been linked to such notable figures as Frank Sinatra, financier Bernie Cornfeld and football player Lance Rentzel. She has never been linked with Barry Manilow. In 1979, she married actor Chris Skinner, a union that lasted only 20 months. She wound up in the arms of Andy Gibb, and they were an item until she called off the romance in 1982. Principal then took up with Dr. Harry Glassman, a plastic surgeon, and the two have been happily married since June 1985.

Dear Michele: Which actress was known as "the girl with the million-dollar legs"? – JANET W. ALLEN, ANGIER, N.C.

That shapely sobriquet belonged to Betty Grable, the actress and World War II pinup queen. Grable received the nickname as a result of a shrewd publicity stunt by Fox Studios, who insured the star's gams for $1 million with Lloyd's of London. Ironically, one of her early films (1939) was titled "Million Dollar Legs." Grable, whose second marriage, to bandleader Harry James, lasted from 1943-65, died in 1973 of lung cancer.

CINDY SAYS

Mariette Hartley: A movie Suzanne Somers: Lecturing

By Cindy Adams

Remember that forgotten CBS "Morning Show"? The one with Mariette Hartley? Well, she's moving to make it immortal. Mariette and a pack of outtakes will be choreographed into a one-woman show, which she is now working on. Stunning Mariette, who sings and does monologues, will also be seen in "1969," a movie about a small town, co-starring Kiefer Sutherland – she plays his ma – and Bruce Dern – she plays his wife. "It's for the kids' market," says Mariette, adding: "It will give me a visibility that I never had."

Mariette Hartley

Milan, Italy's Channel 5 will pay large lira for Jessica Hahn to come over and tell her story. In English. Two guys from the station flew here, met Jessica, guaranteed all expenses, all the pasta she can eat, big fee and big publicity. Being the home of Il Papa, Italy is super religioso. Nothing they like better than a minister getting his.

What's a film star spend his salary on? Lukas Haas, of Vista's "Lady in White," bought baseball cards and drums. Also a dog, hamster, cat and rabbits. Not exactly Elizabeth Taylor's shopping list, but then, Lukas is 11.

Suzanne Somers

The Suzanne Somers best seller "Keeping Secrets," the story of her life as the child of an alcoholic, has led to the lecture platform. There are 25 million children of alcoholics in this country. Suzanne will lecture to medical facilities plus garden-variety clubs. The presentation will include film clips of "Three's Company," with a correlation between how Americans viewed her at her TV height and how this glitter masked a trunkful of demons.

TV Chatter

By Frank Sanello

Bob Hope celebrates three big events on his latest NBC special, airing May 16: 50 years in broadcasting, 50 years in film and 85 years on earth. (Technically, the birthday celebration is two weeks premature. The veteran comic turns 85 on May 29.) On the special, 22 stars reminisce about Hope, and clips from past TV specials and Hope's "road" movies will be shown. Hope's favorite clip? Jimmy Durante singing the lushly romantic "September Song." "I also like the skit where Liz Taylor and I are doctor and nurse and we're operating on this guy," he says. "We take the sheet off his head, and it's Richard Burton."

Despite his own longevity, Hope marvels even more at his colleague, George Burns. On Burns' 92nd birthday, Hope called to congratulate him. Burns asked Hope his age. "I'll be 85 in May," Hope replied. "Eighty-five!" Burns shot back. "When I was 85 I was involved in a paternity suit!"

Lee Remick was delighted to play the title role in "Jesse," an upcoming CBS movie about a nurse who is tried for practicing medicine without a license. "'Jesse' just made me feel so good," she says. "It's nice not to have anybody shooting, chasing cars or molesting your daughter. It's important to extol the virtues and the best side of people, too." Playing Jesse Maloney, a coal miner's wife, was a departure for the aristocratic Remick, a Barnard graduate and daughter of a millionaire department store owner. "Playing blue-collar wasn't that hard. Yes, I've played a lot of upscale characters, like the mother of Winston Churchill or Eleanor Roosevelt, but I've played worse in the last 30 years," she says. She cites her role in the 1959 film classic "Anatomy of a Murder," in which she played a sluttish Army wife living in a trailer park. "You know, it hasn't been all white gloves and watercress sandwiches for me."

With his white spiked hairdo and outrageous accent, Jacko, who plays federal marshal Jetto on NBC's cartoonish series "The Highwayman," doesn't worry about becoming the next Mr. T. "A lot of people compare me to Mr. T," he says. "It doesn't bother me a bit. I just like to do a good job. I'm a real person, approachable. I don't get carried away with all that stuff. I'm just having a great time," says the former Australian football star and TV pitchman for Energizer batteries.

Despite his own success, Jacko remains star-struck. A big thrill occurred recently when Wayne Newton, who had just guest-starred on a "Highwayman" episode, flew the cast and crew in his private jet to the Las Vegas Hilton to watch him perform. "My dad used to sing Wayne Newton's songs in the shower and at work," Jacko says. "He was a big fan. Dad passed away a couple of years ago, so Wayne's performance was pretty sentimental for me. It brought back a lot of memories."

SOAP OPERA WEEK

By Kimberly Redmond

Does Nicolette Goulet play Meredith Reade on "Guiding Light"? Is she Robert Goulet's daughter? Did she appear on another soap opera? – M.M., Paterson, N.J.

Nicolette Goulet

Nicolette Goulet does play Meredith Reade, and she is indeed the daughter of singer Robert Goulet. She has also appeared on "Search for Tomorrow" as Kathy Phillips and on "Ryan's Hope" as Mary Ryan.

I'd like to buy a cape like the one that Shannon O'Hara (Margaret Reed) wears on "As the World Turns." Where can I get one? – I.I., Elcampo, Texas.

For that information, write to the "ATWT" costume designer, Carr Garnett, c/o "ATWT," CBS-TV, 51 W. 52nd St., New York, NY 10019.

Some time ago I saw a photo of Andrea Evans (Tina Roberts on "One Life to Live") holding two babies. The caption said they were her real children and that they take turns portraying her on-screen baby. Is that true? – M.W., Perryton, Texas.

Evans has two little dogs that she has been photographed with several times, but she doesn't have any children. Al Roberts is played by twins Frankie and Nickie Navarro.

Can you list some of Ronn Moss's (Ridge Forrester on "The Bold and the Beautiful") credits? – B.C., Mentor, Ohio.

Ronn Moss

Before joining "B&B," Moss starred in the films "Hearts and Armour" and "Hard Ticket to Hawaii." He also guest-starred on CBS's "Trapper John, M.D."

(Have a question about soap operas? Write Kimberly Redmond at 200 Park Ave., Room 602, New York, NY 10166. Questions cannot be answered personally but those of general interest will be answered in future columns.)

Baseball Wins As Most Popular Sport Of All

By Marty Linehan

Many sports claim to be the country's favorite pastime, but assuming that fans put their money where their preferences lie, baseball was tops last year. That's what the 41st Annual Survey on Sports and Attendance, published by the Daily Racing Form, recently showed.

This may be a shock to the NFL people, who probably get the most publicity in the sports world. Or the NBA, which is now in the middle of its never-ending playoffs. But according to attendance figures supplied by the governing bodies of the individual sports, Abner Doubleday's game leads the pack, followed by horse racing, football and basketball.

Baseball's overall attendance — including post-season, minor-league and college games — was 88.2 million. The major-league season accounted for 52 million.

Horse racing drew a total of 73.6 million paying spectators, and football drew a total of 50 million. Basketball came in fourth with 45.1 million.

Auto racing drew a total of about 78 million and should have been near the top, but the figures supplied were not actual paid-attendance figures, but estimates.

Two sports showed a year-to-year decline. Professional football, a victim of the players' strike, drew 11.4 million, 2.2 million less than it drew in 1986. And harness racing, which has been in a decadelong decline, drew half a million fewer fans than the previous year.

Baseball's No. 1 position received a boost from college baseball, which has grown in popularity from a total 5.2 million paying customers in 1979 to a whopping 14.4 million last year.

But you won't have to pay anything to watch hard-hitting shortstop Alan Trammell and the Detroit Tigers play the Chicago White Sox or California Angels vs. the Boston Red Sox in Fenway Park on Saturday, May 21. NBC will carry both games.

* There's an NBA playoff double-header on CBS on Sunday, May 15, not to mention the ABC production of the Grand Prix of Monaco. That same day, ABC's golf attraction, the Byron Nelson Golf Classic, comes from Irving, Texas.

* On Saturday, May 21, ABC also offers the second jewel of racing's triple crown, The Preakness Stakes, from the Pimlico Race Track in Maryland.

There's A New Edition Of Ultimate Soap Book

By Connie Passalacqua

We said it when it was originally published in November 1985, and we'll gladly repeat it with the publication of its second edition — Christopher Schemering's "Soap Opera Encyclopedia" (Ballantine Books, $9.95) is the finest soap book ever and a must for fans. No, we're not trying to double hype the book. It's just that there's so much new information in the updated second edition. And a new edition of this authoritative book is a major event in the soap opera sphere.

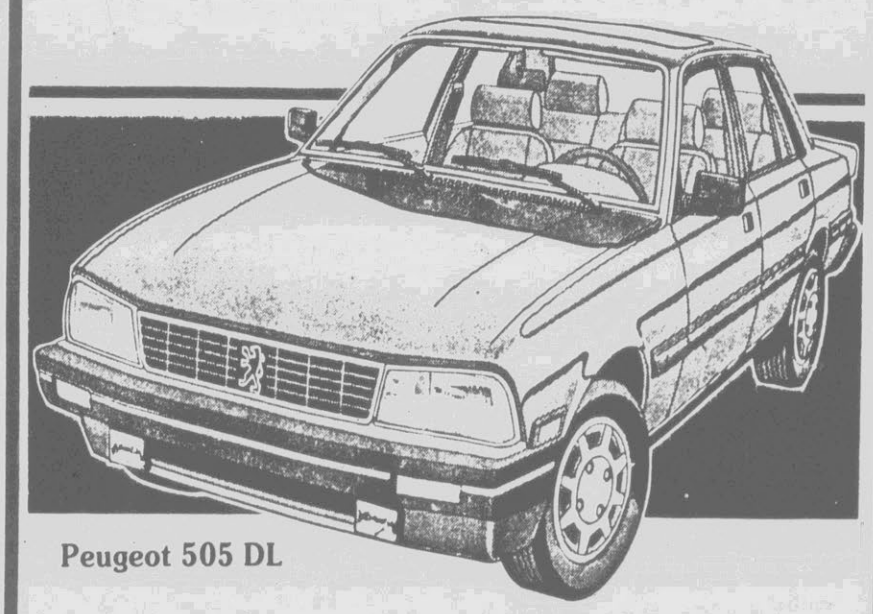

What has happened in the last two and a half years? Plenty! Besides the hundreds of actors who have come and gone (annotated meticulously in Schemering's updated cast lists), soaps have been disappearing off the air. Schemering carefully chronicles the last sad days of "Capitol" and "Search for Tomorrow," taking care to detail the culmination of story lines on the final episodes. (We retold that "Capitol" 's producer was so incensed at the sudden cancellation that story lines were left dangling in protest. We were even on the set that last day — but no one mentioned that to us!)

HOCUS-FOCUS

CAN YOU TRUST YOUR EYES? There are at least six differences in drawing details between top and bottom panels. How quickly can you find them? Check answers with those below.

Differences: 1. Picture is missing. 2. Piano leg is different. 3. Skateboard is missing. 4. Neckline is different. 5. Shade is different. 6. Hand is moved.

- HOT SHOT! Take five shots at the target at the right, hit each of the numbered circles at least once, and score 15. Can you do it?

Arrows shown are those of another marksman who was given the same challenge with a target total of 12. See how quickly you can fire off the five shots for a total of 15.

Two fives, two twos and one one will do it.

- TREE HUNT! Find a tree in each sentence: 1. She wore a short skirt. 2. Presto, a knife appeared. 3. He's a man of iron. 4. The eel moved away.

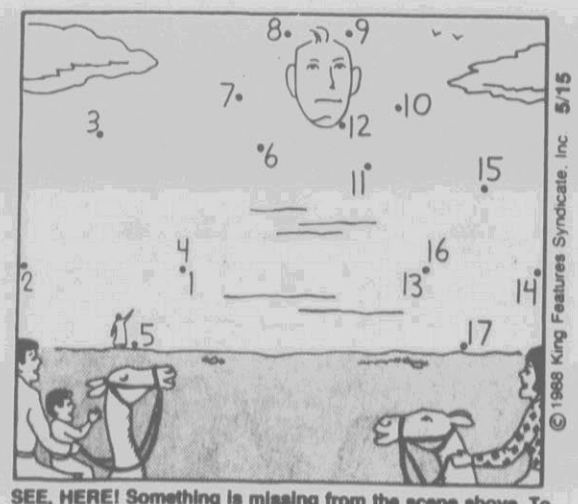

1. Ash. 2. Oak. 3. Fir. 4. Elm.

WORD SLEUTH PUZZLER

Test your prowess with words by finding a seven-letter term in this very sentence that will provide an answer to the following problem:

Without my 1, 5, 7, I am a judge's garment.
Without my 2, 4, 5, 7, I am a famous poet.
Without my 5, 7, I am an inquiry.
Without my 1, 4, 7, I am a part in a play.
My 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, are a puzzlement.

SPELLBINDER

SCORE 10 points for using all the letters in the word below to form two complete words:

BOASTFUL

- - - - - - - - -

THEN score 2 points each for all words of four letters or more found among the letters.
