Summit Shows Signs Of 'Coming Together'

By TERENCE HUNT

AP White House Correspondent
MOSCOW (AP) — President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev held a second round of talks at the Kremlin today, followed by a dramatic effort by Reagan to champion the cause of human rights and religious freedom by visiting a monastery and meeting with dissidents and refuseniks.

Imploring Gorbachev to permit a new era of religious freedom, Reagan quoted Russia's pre-revolutionary writer, Alexander Pushkin, and said: "It's time, my friend, it's time."

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the formal summit session focused on nuclear arms control and said there were signs "the two sides were coming together" on an arms-test notification procedure — one of several minor accords that seemed sidetracked just last week.

His Soviet counterpart, Gennady Gerasimov, called the session "businesslike," and said Soviet Communist Party General Secretary Gorbachev still hopes to come to agreement with Reagan on an important treaty to reduce strategic arms arsenals. Arms control working groups continue to meet, he said.

To the several dozen dissidents and refuseniks and members of their families arrayed before him at the U.S. Embassy guesthouse, Reagan said: "I came here hoping to do what I could to give you strength."

"But I already know it is you who have strengthened me. You have given me a message to carry back: While we press for human rights through diplomatic channels, you press with your very lives, day in, day out, year after year, risking your jobs, your homes, your all."

He said the United States "views human rights as fundamental, absolutely fundamental, to our relations with the Soviet Union and all nations."

Reagan said it was "a hopeful time" for the Soviets, with the release of political and religious prisoners and an increase in the number of people allowed to emigrate. Even so, he said the Kremlin does not meet the standards spelled out by the 1975 Helsinki agreement on human rights.

Reagan was applauded warmly by the audience, but he likely inflamed Soviet sensitivity on the subject. Before his arrival here, Gorbachev and other Soviet leaders said they didn't want to be lectured on human rights.

Reagan also expressed hopes for religious freedom in the Soviet Union, pointing out that thousands of homes of worship "are now closed, boarded up or used for secular purposes."

The second day of summitry also was marked by a new air of optimism that agreement could be reached on two secondary arms-control pacts that had been stalled.

Reagan attended a morning meeting with Gorbachev and then paid a visit to Moscow's oldest monastery, where he was greeted by bearded monks and the pealing of church bells.

Later, he held an extraordinary meeting at the U.S. ambassador's residence with Soviet refuseniks and dissidents. One speaker, Gleb Yakunin, a Russian Orthodox priest, lost his parish 22 years ago and was sentenced to a labor camp.

He said the constraints on religions resulted in a decline of morals, growth of alcoholism and drug addiction and stagnation of the economy, and said that Gorbachev's program of perestroika, or restructuring, "is unthinkable without true freedom of religion."

Reagan's second day in Moscow began with a meeting with Gorbachev in St. Catherine's Hall behind the brick walls of the Kremlin enclave.

About 30 seconds after a clock chimed 10 a.m., the gold doors at opposite ends of the room were opened and, from the left, in walked Gorbachev leading the Soviet delegation, while from the right, the president led the U.S. participants.

They met at the center of the table and shook hands, then shook hands with each member of the other delegation.

The Soviet leader was asked by reporters if he would act on the 14 human rights cases included on a list presented by Reagan on Sunday. "There are too many lists," Gorbachev replied.

Commenting on Soviet willingness to allow his meeting with dissidents and refuseniks, Reagan said, "They did that for me so that I'd feel at home."

He added, "Every once in a while I am meeting some rather disagreeable people at home." A reporter asked if he was saying dissidents are disagreeable people. With a pained look on his face, Reagan said, "I don't mean that. You know what I mean."

Inside the monastery, Reagan, accompanied by his wife Nancy, told the monks that he and other Americans prayed that perestroika would bring a reawakening of religious freedom to the Soviet Union.

"The faith of your people has been tested and tempered in the crucible of hardship," Reagan said. "We may hope that perestroika will be accompanied by a deeper restructuring ... and that glasnost, while means giving voice, will also let loose a new chorus of belief."

Church chimes rarely are heard in Moscow, but rang twice for a total of about six minutes during Reagan's visit, once when he and his entourage

Nation Remembers Its Dead

By LARRY RYCKMAN

Associated Press Writer

The mournful sound of buglers playing taps and the cadence of marchers in Memorial Day parades helped Americans remember those who died fighting for their country, while beaches and parks were packed with holiday revelers.

A sea of fluttering American flags marked the 72,000 graves at Willamette National Cemetery in Portland, Ore. Officials planned ceremonies of remembrance today at Arlington National Cemetery in Virginia and at the Vietnam Memorial in Washington.

In Gettysburg, Pa., Gen. William Westmoreland, commander of U.S. troops in Vietnam during the war, planned to speak after a parade honoring soldiers who died in the Civil War battle 125 years ago this summer.

In Omaha, Neb., a brass band today planned to wend its way through a pioneer cemetery to salute a 19th century madam called "the hooker with a heart of gold."

And on Attu Island, Alaska, Americans and Japanese erected a monument that was to be dedicated to the thousands of soldiers from both sides of the Pacific who died there — the site of the only World War II battle fought on North American soil.

A snowstorm in the Southwest stranded some campers in Cedar Breaks National Monument in Utah and whipped up waves that sank an unoccupied 60-foot houseboat on Lake Powell, authorities said.

Temperatures in the 80s lured hundreds of thousands of sunbathers to beaches from Massachusetts to South Carolina.

"It's like the people are saying, 'Welcome to summer,'" said police Sgt. William Selig of Rockport, Mass. "It's like this until the cold weather comes. In a few months we'll be looking forward to fall."

In Ocean City, Md., a swimmer drowned in the ocean 90 minutes before lifeguards went on duty Saturday for the first time in the season, police said.

An estimated 100,000 people headed to New York City beaches on Sunday to enjoy sun and sand on the opening weekend of the summer beach season.

Lifeguards were on duty for the first time this year at the city's Jones

Beach State Park, but there wasn't much for them to do because of the cold water.

"Most people are just sunbathing," said Joseph Lescinski, park superintendent.

About 10,000 people, mostly bikers, ended their two-day American Motorcycle Jamboree on Sunday in Cobleskill, 30 miles west of Albany, N.Y.

"I didn't see a single wheelie," Mayor Nicholas Iorio said.

The pace was quicker in Indiana, where an estimated 350,000 to 450,000 people watched Sunday's 72nd running of the Indianapolis 500. About 100 people were arrested in pre-race revelry, and one man died after falling out of a pickup truck, police said.

Rick Mears, 36, overcame an early one-lap deficit to win the race for the third time in his career.

The Prospect Hill Preservation Brass Band planned its eighth-annual Memorial Day tribute to Anna Wilson, who ran Omaha's highest-priced house of ill repute for 30 years before donating it to the city as a hospital shortly before her death in 1911.

In Menands, N.Y., a veterans group took time out from the weekend sun and fun to honor President Chester A. Arthur, who is buried in the Albany Rural Cemetery.

In Hackensack, N.J., submarine veterans Sunday held their 15th annual ceremony in memory of the 52 submarines lost in World War II.

'Jamaican Gangs' Enter Drug Trade

RALEIGH (AP) — One of the nation's most deadly emerging organized crime groups — Jamaican gangs — has begun carving out a piece of North Carolina's drug trade for itself, law enforcement officials say.

"We've known of the Jamaican presence in North Carolina for several months," said Cuyler Windham, assistant director of the State Bureau of Investigation. "I don't think it's getting any better."

The SBI and federal authorities know of "five or six areas" in the state where an "identifiable Jamaican organization is operating," said Paul Lyon, the Charlotte-based special agent in charge of North Carolina and South Carolina operations for the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

Other officials said gang members had been identified in Raleigh, Charlotte, Greensboro, Jacksonville and New Bern. Their products include cocaine, marijuana and the potent cocaine derivative "crack."

Throughout North Carolina, officials said, there have been isolated arrests of Jamaicans who had ties to gangs. But because gang activity is in its early stages, there are no statistics available on gang-related crimes.

Nationwide, the groups — who call themselves "posses" after a Jamaican slang term for gang — have been responsible for a substantial rise in the rate of murders and other violent crimes in cities such as Kansas City, Seattle, Dallas and Washington.

Car Bomb Kills 15 In Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A powerful car bomb exploded in a residential area of Christian east Beirut today. Police said the blast tore off the front of eight apartment buildings, killed 15 people and wounded 68.

No group claimed responsibility for the car bomb, which exploded 500 yards from a branch office of President Amin Gemayel's right-wing Phalange Party.

Police said the explosion may indicate that Moslem and Christian extremists have launched a new round of retaliatory car bombings in Lebanon's civil war.

The bombing occurred about two miles from Beirut's southern slums, where Syrian troops deployed to stop fighting between militant Shiite Moslems.

Police said a blue Volvo car packed with an estimated 220 pounds of TNT blew up in crowded Rmael Street in the Ashrafiyeh district at 10:35 a.m. (4:35 a.m. EDT). Ten of the 15 bodies were charred beyond recognition, police said.

The explosion gouged a crater three feet deep and six feet wide in the road. Three bulldozers were brought in to remove the debris.

Sisters Battling To Regain Home

By PAIGE ST. JOHN

Associated Press Writer

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — An 81-year-old woman says she and her sister lived alone quietly and happily until they were "yanked out of our home like animals" by a county commission decision.

Glenna Ashby, a retired hairdresser, cannot comprehend how she and her sister were removed from their Huntington home last March without the benefit of a court hearing, or a lawyer to protect them.

Ms. Ashby said she was unaware her competency even was under question until the day the sheriff's department took her away.

"I don't understand it all. They took hold of my arm and said, 'Come with me.'"

"We were yanked out of our home like animals," Ms. Ashby said in a telephone interview Sunday from the Morris Memorial Convalescent and Nursing Home in Milton. "I'm 100 percent and I am capable and I don't need anybody to care for me."

"Now, I've been just about out of my mind. I feel so helpless. I'm just so worried — I felt like a prisoner."

In March, the three-member Cabell County Commission ruled that Ms. Ashby and her 82-year-old sister, Jo Ann Gillette, were mentally incompetent and ordered them removed from their home in Huntington, 80 miles west of here. The women were put in the custody of the sheriff, who put them in the nursing home.

The women say they do not know

The Pitt County Elections Office was to be open today until 5 p.m. to handle any emergencies in preparing the 25 Pitt County polling places involved in Tuesday's second Democratic primary election, according to Margaret Hardee, supervisor of the Pitt County Board of Elections.

Two races are involved in Pitt County's election Tuesday. Democratic voters in County Commissioner Districts 1 and 2, which con-

"Voters are urged to exercise the privilege of voting and at the same time take care of their responsibility and get that good feeling by doing their patriotic duty," Mrs. Hardee said.

"The voters have already been to the polls twice in less than three months. This election will be their third trip to vote," she said. "If they don't show up, it will be like having a party and nobody attending."

Council To Study Promotional Plans

A discussion regarding the efforts of various groups to market the city will be continued at a budget session workshop of the Greenville City Council Tuesday at 5:30 in the third floor conference room of City Hall.

Representatives from the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, Evergreen of Greenville Inc., the Pitt County Development Commission and the Pitt County Convention and Tourism Bureau are scheduled to complete presentations to the council regarding respective promotional efforts.

The presentations were initially presented at last Tuesday's workshop session, but that meeting was adjourned early due to severe weather conditions.

The group's presentations were requested by the council following a budget discussion relating to a $39,000 request by the chamber of commerce for financial assistance in future marketing endeavors.

Also scheduled at Tuesday's workshop are budget reviews of the Recreation and Parks Department, the Planning and Development Department and the Police Department.

The three department budget reviews are part of an ongoing process by the council to review the entire 1988-89 city budget proposal as submitted by City Manager Greg Knowles.

Knowles has proposed an expansion of the 1988-89 city budget 7.8 percent over the current year — a rise from $19,656,163 to $21,693,443. In addition, Knowles has proposed to initiate a capital improvement program which would raise the proposed budget to 10.36 percent over this year's level. Knowles has not as yet outlined details of the program to the council.

A public hearing on the budget proposal is scheduled for June 6, while the proposed date for budget adoption is June 20.

THEIR ROAD A DUMP?

I live on Allen Road near the Pitt County Landfill. I've been out this morning picking up trash out of my yard. It's a never-ending battle. Real often I see big debris like a cinder block or sheetrock in or near the road. I understand there's a law that trucks have to be covered to prevent trash from falling or being blown out of them. Somebody needs to enforce this law. Littering is bad everywhere, but along this road, it's terrible. We property owners in this area feel like our yards and roadway have been, for a long time, a dumping area for the whole county caused by people's carelessness. Can't the county and state do more about enforcement? R.O.

Phil Dickerson, Pitt County engineer, said he sympathizes with you and other residents of the Allen Road area. He said every truck that enters the landfill is required to be covered if it is hauling refuse that can blow out. If it is hauling something like tree limbs, these must be tied down. He said $100 fines can be levied for violations of this law.

It's still true, however, that some trucks are getting almost to the landfill before the drivers stop and cover up. Dickerson questions why it isn't just as easy to do it earlier. He said he believes the N.C. Highway Patrol needs to be giving out tickets to drivers of trucks that are littering the highways, not only those in the landfill area, but anywhere in the county.

DWI community service workers were used last weekend to clean up the Allen Road, he said. But, like you, he believes the solution lies in each person taking responsibility for not littering and in unrelenting enforcement of anti-littering laws.

TREASURES

The graves are treasures which heaven has made sure, "sealing the stone and setting a watch".

Of those who live, we are not certain that in the providence of God, they will henceforth be an unmingled source of comfort; but those who are in those graves are garnered fruits, are finished works, are each like the rod of Aaron laid up in the ark, which bloomed blossoms and yielded almonds.

All else which is dear to us on earth may seem changeful, or changed; the home may have been broken up, or changed; the plighted faith and love may have been recalled; but we visit that burial spot, and there is permanence; it has not betrayed our confidence; it is not weary of its precious charge; it has kindly staid behind to permit and encourage our griefs when all else may have fled.

The winter's snows have fallen, the tempests have beaten, there; and now, this April or May morning, it is as steadfast and quiet as when the slumber there began.

Martin Funds

The Martin County Board of Education is seeking a total of $3.3 million from the county for the upcoming 1988-89 fiscal year.

In a budget request presented to Martin County Commissioners, school board officials outlined a budget of $2.6 million for current expense operations and $643,595 for capital outlays funds.

His presentation included two new items: an alternative school program and an employee dental plan. Pictures Can Spark Interest In Words

GREENSBORO (AP) — Students in an experimental program being used in Guilford County schools — which is so new that it hasn't been named yet — have advanced their reading skills by an average of almost one grade level in only 10 weeks' time, authorities say.

A couple of months ago, 11-year-old Monica Rose found reading boring, frustrating and hard. She dreaded school during the day and cried at night.

Tests showed she was reading at a level one year lower than her fifth-grade classmates at Brightwood Elementary in Guilford County.

Now, she's reading at the seventh-grade level.

"I look forward to reading," Monica said. "It's fun."

Ten weeks ago, she began the special reading program, which had never before been used as part of a public school curriculum.

Monica is one of 209 students in eight Guilford County schools involved in the program, which was developed by Robert Zenhauser, a psychology professor at St. John's University in New York. Students who began the program in February recently completed tests to gauge their progress.

"I'm really thankful for the program," said Monica's mother, Nedra Rose. "Her whole attitude has changed. Her confidence — that's the main thing."

The program is founded on the theory that most people who have trouble reading aren't making a connection between a word printed on a page, and the sound of the word.

"They see the word, but they can't think what it means," said Zenhauser, who has been in the county for a week, assessing the progress of students. "It's like a chronic 'tip-of-the-tongue' phenomenon."

Farm Scene

By MITCH SMITH

As tobacco transplanting draws to a close across Pitt County, the crop is reported to exhibit one of the best stands of recent years. Despite the good appearance, growers have expressed a strong concern over the livelihood of this year's crop to flower prematurely. Premature flowering is a condition where the plant is exposed to stresses like saturated soil and low temperatures thus causing it to flower.

The exact causes of premature flowering are not well understood, but can be linked to the growing season and the variety grown. Some researchers believe that stresses experienced by the crop throughout the year interfere with nitrogen uptake and/or utilization which in some way triggers the flowering mechanism.

It is believed that exposure to low temperatures in the plant bed is more critical than exposure in the field when predicting premature flowering. Although temperatures in the field have been low enough to trigger early flowering in 1988, the days have been bright when the coolest night temperatures occurred. Therefore, the early flowering may not be quite as severe as the cool temperatures might indicate.

Tobacco varieties vary greatly in their susceptibility to stresses related to early flowering. K-326, which is grown on about one-third of Pitt County's acreage, has moderate susceptibility to this problem and will probably produce some early flowering.

Early flowering usually looks worse than it really is. If this problem occurs, growers should take random field counts and act only if the percentage of plants flowering is 10 percent or higher.

DIABETES AND GUM DISEASE

If you or some member of your family has diabetes, you should make certain that you get regular dental checkups for several reasons. One is the threat of gum disease. Diabetes doesn't cause gum or periodontal disease, but once it is established it tends to progress more rapidly and do greater damage in a shorter period of time.

Periodontal or gum disease is the number one cause of adult tooth loss in the U.S. It occurs when bacterial plaque begins to accumulate and harden below the gumline. This irritates the gum surface and leads to the formation of pockets where the infection thrives and spreads. Untreated or not treated soon enough, this can lead to destruction of bone and loss of teeth.

No matter what kind of diabetes you or some member of your family may have or how severe it may be, to protect your dental health be sure to get regular checkups. They're needed to help keep your teeth and gums healthy.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Keep It Short

Limit Budget Session To Money

North Carolina's lawmakers should keep their eyes on the dollar sign during the 1988 short session of the General Assembly and not be distracted by issues which could slow proceedings.

When the legislature convenes Thursday it should be with the determination to keep the short session short and to focus on sound budgeting. That is, after all, the reason for the session. Lawmakers are in Raleigh to prepare a budget, the most essential function of a governing body. In 1988, that process means accounting for the responsible expenditure of at least $400 million — that's the bottom line figure for funds available.

Lawmakers should make that responsibility their primary thrust. They should strongly resist turning the proceedings into an election-year marathon, with pork barrel maneuvering slowing the pace of progress to a crawl. Extraneous issues that have no place being discussed in a budget session — such as the location of the state's hazardous waste site — should not be allowed on the agenda.

Instead, lawmakers should focus on providing educators a reasonable pay raise, finding the $24 million necessary to implement a federally-mandated adult bus driver program, securing $3 million needed for capital improvements at the state's university system and devising funding for measures to address the state's nursing shortage.

These monetary concerns are the ones that need addressing, and attention should not be diverted from them by unrelated issues.

It is the duty of legislators to avoid a needlessly lengthy session that costs taxpayers money. The General Assembly does not have a good record on meeting deadlines. The 1987 session, overloaded with issues from the beginning and slowed by political profiling, took entirely too much time and money to complete. The state's leaders must make certain the 1988 short legislative session doesn't follow this precedent; that it addresses the need for which it was scheduled — the development and approval of a sound state budget.

Fight For Peace

Harmony Best Memorial

There is one very important premise which should be remembered this Memorial Day.

That premise is not honoring the courageous men and women who defended America's beliefs with their lives. It's not acknowledging the heroism and integrity endemic to fighting for a belief. It's not even recognizing the significance of the flag everyone waved today.

No, the most appropriate way to honor the victims of war is by dedication to the cause of peace.

Only with a strong commitment to peace in communities like Greenville across the nation can those for whom this day was cited be adequately acknowledged. That commitment is especially significant in 1988 when so many threats to global peace persist. The Persian, Gulf, the Middle East, Central America and Korea stand as proof of the frailty of harmonious coexistence.

That's not to say a cause worth fighting for shouldn't be defended against threats to its existence. Democracy (not bureaucracy) and freedom merit vigorous defense. The rights to vote, speak freely, assemble, bear arms and worship are precious safeguards against tyranny. It is the duty of a nation possessing them to protect them.

But it is also the responsibility of a democracy to strive for peaceful, not violent, solutions to conflicts and to anticipate and successfully extinguish threats to peace.

It is with this dedication to peace that those who died fighting for this nation should be memorialized in 1988.

Opinion

Public Forum

To the editor:

$5 million a year for waste disposal facilities that no other county or state wants? Top dollar for farmland near Mayo's Crossroads? No thank you. Are we in Edgecombe County so knowledgeable in chemical engineering and waste disposal technology that we can see a promising future in radioactive and hazardous waste disposal, a promising future no other community is intelligent enough to recognize?

I, as others, received the idea of industrial development as innovative and interesting. My initial acceptance, however, turned to disappointment and feeling betrayed as I realized that our elected officials had voted to endorse this controversial, potentially dangerous and stigmatizing proposal before the citizens were even informed. Just when Edgecombe County is on the upswing with the construction of Sara Lee, highway construction and school merger negotiations, we are informed by our elected officials and the media that, Edgecombe County is so destitute, illiterate and and desperate for the dollar that we must accept the unacceptable for a quick fix.

The public hearings and other immediate vocal opposition are our only opportunities to influence our commissioners to halt or delay action on this proposal. Following the hearing, the commissioners will vote on whether to invite a site location team to Edgecombe County. Once the team is invited, the issue is "out of our hands" according to Commission Chairman Bardin.

The "wait and see" and "gather further information" approaches that some citizens are taking have no value, since an invitation, as Bardin explained to my family, gives the site location committee the authority to study, then proceed as it sees fit. Citizens who oppose or even have reservations about any part of the proposal must speak immediately or forever hold their peace.

Yes, our county could use extra money. Yes, my family would enjoy profits from the sale of a small farm. But is this the direction we want to take for our county's future? No. My quality of life, my community pride, my future, my soul are not for sale.

Susan Davis Roberson

To the editor:

A meeting this Tuesday at 8 p.m. in the Jaycees Park Auditorium on Cedar Lane in Greenville will furnish major information about the waste site for low-level radioactive, hazardous and solid waste considered for the Conetoe area, just upriver from Pitt County and 26 miles from Greenville. All concerned citizens are invited, and in this matter we believe that every citizen ought to be a concerned citizen.

Presenters will be Bill Hollman, the legislative lobbyist who has carefully followed the conception of the waste management park; Dr. Linda Little, executive director of the NC Waste Management Board, and Dr. Trenton Davis, an environmental health specialist from ECU. There will also be a respondent panel of local and state legislators and other invited specialists.

Concern, not only for the economic well-being of Edgecombe County, but also for the lasting economic, environmental and psychological vitality of eastern North Carolina need to be addressed when considering this issue. Tuesday should prove to be an interesting, informative meeting. It should most certainly be but one in a much longer series of careful explorations of this dramatic proposal with consequences extending far into our and our descendants' future.

Brushfires Break Out For Martin, Jordan

RALEIGH (AP) — A politician strong enough to win his party's nomination for a major office might think he shouldn't have to waste time dealing with criticism — or defections — from within his own political alliance.

But nothing can be taken for granted in politics, a truth demonstrated anew in the gubernatorial race last week.

Republican supporters of erstwhile presidential hopeful Pat Robertson served notice on Gov. Jim Martin that he might not get their support in his re-election bid.

Upset that Martin refused to get involved in the delegate feud between supporters of Robertson and other presidential candidates, Robertson state chairman Sue Wyatt said she was "reserving judgment" on whether to back the governor.

Meanwhile, Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan drew criticism from black leaders — who represent the Democratic Party's most loyal constituency — for allegedly tilting his campaign message too far in the direction of business and away from working people and minorities.

Jordan sought to reassure his critics last week in a private meeting with the Legislative Black Caucus, which had been scheduled earlier for discussion of matters that will arise in the General Assembly session that gets under way Thursday.

In both cases, the nominees were confronted with political brush fires that should pose no major threat to their prospects for victory.

But just as wind and dry conditions can whip a brush fire into a conflagration, inattention to or clumsy handling of internal discontent can cause a major headache for a politician.

In 1984, for example, former Gov. Jim Hunt's U.S. Senate campaign received a blow from a wholly unexpected source. Eddie Knox, Hunt's one-time college buddy, blamed him for Knox's loss to Rufus Edmisten in the race for the gubernatorial nomination.

Martin's alliance with Robertson's flock has never been solid; they represent vastly different brands of Republicanism.

Since the early 1970s, the GOP has had two distinct factions. The "traditional" wing is comprised of long-time Republicans from the Piedmont and mountains who emphasize economic issues. They're conservative but generally pragmatic. Martin, former Sen. Jim Broyhill and former Gov. Jim Holshouser are traditional Republicans.

The "New Right" wing consists mostly of staunch conservatives in the mold of Helms who defected from the Democratic Party in the 1960s. Social issues, such as abortion and school prayer, and anti-communism are dear to their hearts.

The two wings feuded throughout the 1970s, but in recent years they've more or less peacefully coexisted under the Republican banner.

The Robertson phenomenon is something new. His entry into the race led many conservative Christians to become politically active for the first time or to switch from the Democratic Party to the GOP. They are not as party-oriented as traditional Republicans and might be less apt to close ranks behind the nominee after losing a tough intra-party fight.

If Martin is unable to heal the rift and the Robertson backers turn against him or at least sit out the fall campaign, the extent of the damage may depend on how the party's Helms wing reacts.

Martin probably could win without help from voters who joined the GOP within the past year; he did in 1984. But if the New Right Republicans who were on board four years ago turned against Martin out of sympathy for the Robertson backers, he would be in trouble.

Jordan's problem appears less serious. While they may question his campaign strategy, black Democrats appear nowhere near the point of "reserving judgment" on whether to continue supporting him. After last week's meeting, they emphasized that their suggestions were designed to ensure that he wins.

Even so, Jordan has decided to give black legislators a bigger role in his campaign — largely as liaisons between him and their constituents. He doesn't want to be in a position of hoping that blacks will vote for him only as the lesser of two evils. They might not think Martin's so bad.

Taking And Giving To Business

RALEIGH — A year after the General Assembly raised business taxes, it appears ready to give about half of that increase back to the business community.

Gov. Jim Martin's budget recommends that the state's method of computing a multi-state corporation's taxes be changed and that the state reinstate the merchant's discount. Both moves have support in the assembly.

When a corporation operates in more than one state, there has to be a formula for determining how much of that company's total income is taxed in North Carolina. The state currently uses three factors: The percentage of its total sales that occur in North Carolina, the percentage of its total plant investment here and the percentage of its total payroll in the state. The three percentages are then averaged, and that determines the percentage of total income which is subject to North Carolina tax.

For example, a company with 40 percent of its investment, 40 percent of its payroll and 10 percent of its sales in North Carolina would pay state taxes on 30 percent of its income.

In a move recommended to the state by RJR Nabisco when it agreed to put a major baking plant in Garner, Martin is now proposing to figure the sales factor twice.

For companies with significant investment in North Carolina plants and with large payrolls in the state, that will mean a tax cut. For companies which only sell here, that will mean a tax increase. C.C. Cameron, state budget officer, says the tax cut will give North Carolina a big advantage in the recruitment of industry. Only a few other states figure taxes this way.

"Double-weighting" sales, as the idea is called, was introduced in the assembly last year by Sen. Ted Kaplan, D-Forsyth. It therefore has bipartisan support. Sen. Ken Royall, D-Durham, and Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, both said in recent interviews that they would probably support the tax cut.

"In the long run, it could be very beneficial," Royall said. "It could very easily be revenue neutral." That is, the tax cut might draw enough industry which would pay new taxes that it would wipe out the lost revenue.

Sen. Tony Rand, D-Cumberland, who says he'll probably support the tax cut, says the RJR plant alone will generate enough new tax revenues to pay for half of the tax cut. The loss of revenue in the first year is expected to be $10 million. In the second year, when it will be in effect for a full tax year, the loss to the state will amount to $26 million, according to state budget office estimates.

The merchants' discount also appears to have broad support, but, as reported in this column previously, there is considerable difference of opinion as to how it will be computed. Martin has a plan and so does Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan. Various legislators also have their own ideas.

The impetus behind reinstatement of the discount, which was terminated in 1987 to raise funds for school construction, is equity. Merchants were supposed to be helped by repeal of the inventory tax, which was part of the school construction funding package. But for small merchants, relief from paying inventory tax was inconsequential because they do not carry large inventories, proponents of reinstatement say. They argue that because it costs these merchants something to collect the taxes, to compute how much is owed to the state and then send the money to the state, the state ought to reimburse them.

Estimates of the costs of reinstating the discount range from $18 million to $26 million a year.

After The 'Atmospherics,' What's Left For The Summit?

The planets were where they were supposed to be Sunday, so Ronald Reagan met Mikhail Gorbachev in the fourth, but not necessarily the last of their periodic tete-a-tetes. Probably little will be accomplished, other than some interesting sightseeing by the American entourage, because not much is on the agenda.

When Reagan left, the treaty banning intermediate-range nuclear missiles in Europe still awaited ratification by the U.S. Senate. And the bigger treaty that would cut by 50 percent the most dangerous weapons of all — the intercontinental missiles with which America and Russia can destroy each other — is still a long way from completion. We want them to cut more of their rail-car mobile missiles, and they want us to have fewer low-flying cruise missiles. If such an accord is finally worked out, it would mark a revolutionary change in the superpower arms race. And it would not be possible without Reagan's equally dramatic new attitude toward negotiating with the Soviet Union. But there is still a lot of trading and whittling to do, and a strategic missile accord of this scope may not be ready until the Reagans have ridden off into the sunset to chop wood and contemplate the zodiac. However, since Reagan would dearly like to be remembered for such an agreement, a fifth summit could well take place before the end of the year.

The atmospherics are particularly good now that Gorbachev has publicly praised Reagan for his "realism," and the president thinks of his Soviet counterpart as a "friend." Somewhere along the way what Reagan used to call the "evil empire" seems to have evolved into something like a friendly federation.

If there's nothing to sign in Moscow, and no longer any get-acquainted to do (Ron has probably spent more time with Mike than with most of his Cabinet, and Nancy and Raisa seem to know each other quite well enough), why are we having this summit anyway? The answer is easy. Reagan wants to go out as the man who brought peace, or at least who cooled down the arms race — and not as the one who left the country with deficits the next three generations will be paying for.

Gorbachev, for his part, also has peace images in mind, particularly the constituency he is wooing in Western Europe. Also, he wants to show skeptics in the Central Committee, which is far from being under his total control, that he can get the Americans to come to the conference table and make concessions.

If his monumental task of "restructuring" (that is, perestroika) of an ossified Soviet society is to succeed, he has to make deep cuts in the military budget. This means both nuclear weapons and conventional forces. A summit can help establish the mood that would make the Americans more amenable to a deal — especially now that an inflated American budget also needs to be pruned. A successful summit also would give Gorbachev some momentum going into next month's Communist Party Congress, where he will be working to cement his control over the party apparatus.

Further, there is the superpower prestige factor. Summit encounters reassure both America and Russia that they are kings of the mountain. Other countries hold summits, too: India and Pakistan, Argentina and Chile, Egypt and Syria. But who cares?

Shouldn't summits have a real agenda? Normally their purpose is to ratify agreements worked out by diplomatic underlings in painstaking negotiations. Diplomats who have haggled away for years at places like Geneva, investigated every possible loophole and checked all the footnotes — these are the people whose work the big bosses are supposed to sanction solemnly at the summit.

If one discounts the public relations aspect of summits — the "atmospherics" — then there is a good deal to be said for this approach. When summiteers start negotiating over issues that haven't been masticated a dozen times at lower levels, big trouble can occur. Consider the Reagan-Gorbachev summit at Reykjavik in December, 1986.

There the president, freed from his prepared script, mused that it would be nice if the superpowers scrapped all their nuclear arms. It took the State Department months to reassure the NATO allies, who all along have been told that their safety rests on the American nuclear guarantee, that Reagan didn't really mean it.

If summits should not be too free-form, there is also a danger in overdoing them. The whole point of summits is that they are supposed to be special. Reagan came into office thinking they were so special that they shouldn't happen at all. During his first five years he didn't meet once with a Russian leader, and it seemed unlikely that he ever would.

Analysis

Then, suddenly, he changed his mind, and over the past 30 months he has cheerfully attended four summits.

Contrast this with the fact that there was not a single Soviet-American encounter at the top from 1945 until 1959. During the 1960s there were but two summits, and in the decade of the 1970s — even in the full sun and afterglow of detente — only five. Reagan, now that he has discovered the joy of summitry, has succeeded in making summits banal.

The one issue that might have been most useful to discuss at this summit is likely to be ignored completely. That is the problem of "regional issues" — or, more bluntly, superpower-backed conflicts in the Third World. But the fact is that neither side, at least for the time being, is willing to give up the quest for influence in countries that seem up for grabs.

The Soviets may be walking out of Afghanistan, and Reagan has had the rug pulled out from under the Nicaraguan Contras, yet the belief persists that superpower status depends on involvement in Third World quarrels. The Reagan Doctrine — which dictates support for anti-Communist insurrections in the Third World — has been pretty much a fiasco. Nonetheless, the effort to spread democracy through the gun barrels of religious fanatics, drug runners and scavengers continues.

The trouble, in any case, with a superpower accord to end regional quarrels is that it wouldn't have much effect. Even if Moscow and Washington backed off, Iranians and because they are reluctant to show how little control they have over their ostensible clients.

Meanwhile, as eyes are on the summit, bystanders in the foothills have their own interests to protect. The Europeans, for their part, usually get nervous when the superpowers sit down together. They are happy to see tensions reduced, but they are worried that this may be done at their expense. As Reykjavik scared them, and even the Intermediate Nuclear Forces accord at the Washington summit met with a mixed response, they can't help but wonder what surprises will come out of this one.

Budget, Waste Issues Will Highlight Legislature's 'Short' Summer Session

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — With fall campaigns approaching, state lawmakers headed to Raleigh this week for the "short session" hope to adjust the 1988-89 budget, tie up loose ends and leave town within a month, but many controversial and potentially time-consuming issues litter the path to adjournment.

Gov. Jim Martin's $558.7 million budget plan, the seemingly endless waste-disposal debate, and hundreds of bills on topics ranging from abortion to zoning await the legislators.

The session could be the last for Republican Gov. Jim Martin, whose re-election battle against Democratic Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan will form the backdrop for much that takes place in the next few weeks. Chances are the relationship between Martin and the Democratic majority will be sour as ever.

"There's some good things they can do," Martin said. "They'll say they haven't got time to deal with the issues that I send over, but they'll find time for pork barrel and ... the things they want to do."

Democrats, meanwhile, say they expect Martin and his GOP allies to try to bog down the session by raising controversial, complex issues and then bashing the Democrats if some are ignored.

"Naturally, our governor ... would like for us to stay here until September so he can sit back and shoot at us and criticize us," House Speaker Liston Ramsey said. "He'll be taking political advantage of the General Assembly."

The "short session" is a relatively new phenomenon. The Legislature used to meet only in odd-numbered years.

But in 1973, lawmakers agreed to get together for a few days in June 1974 to make mid-course adjustments to the state budget. Some observers speculated the Democrat-dominated Legislature also wanted to keep tabs on then-Gov. Jim Holshouser, the state's first Republican chief executive elected this century.

Since then, short sessions have gotten longer — as has the list of issues eligible for consideration in off-years.

Aside from any matter related to the budget, bills that passed either the House or Senate but not both in 1987 are fair game, along with measures recommended by study committees that met between sessions. Any other matter may be brought up if two-thirds of the members of both chambers agree.

The budget is the most complex and lengthiest item in any session. Last year, the Legislature approved a $19.6 billion spending program for the 1987-89 biennium. Earlier this month, Martin unveiled a proposed $558.7 million addendum for the second year, which begins July 1.

The 106-member Joint Appropriations Committee held six days of hearings on the Martin plan over the past two weeks. The hearings, and other pre-session skirmishing, suggest that numerous budgetary issues will be political footballs:

- Revenue availability. Democrats say the governor has requested up to $150 million more than likely will be available, based on the legislative staff's estimates of future tax collections and unspent revenue. They accuse Martin of advocating Washington-style deficit spending, which the state Constitution prohibits.
- "The governor has put us in a box with that budget," Jordan said.
- "Oh, come on," Martin said. "That's a standard maneuver for those guys. ... They don't know what to say when the budget comes out, so they say it's out of balance. But they always seem to come up with the money."
- Pay raises. Martin wants $217.6 million for a "compensation package" for state employees and teachers. The money could fund a 4.5 percent, across-the-board pay increase. But Martin has recommended that the Legislature grant a smaller across-the-board raise and use the rest of the money to lift a six-year freeze on merit pay increases.

The Legislature usually manages to outdo Martin on pay raises, but Democratic leaders admit they might not exceed 4.5 percent this time. "We may get to 5," said House Appropriations Committee Chairman Billy Watkins, D-Granville.

Employee and teacher groups are pushing for raises as high as 12 percent but chances for that are virtually nil.

- Aging. Both parties are seeking the allegiance of the state's growing, politically active elderly population. Martin has declared 1988 "The Year of the Older Adult" and is pushing a $5 million plan to improve state services for the elderly, based on a network of county "senior centers."
- A legislative committee has a rival plan with roughly the same price tag but a different focus: a community-based system designed to keep the elderly in their homes and out of institutions.
- Democrats say Martin's plan is one of many designed to make him appear busy in an election year after three years of passive, "Rip Van Winkle" leadership.
- Martin says he's had new initiatives each year. "You know what would have happened if I had not put anything forward. They'd have criticized me for doing nothing."
- $2.8 million for industry and trade promotion programs in the Department of Commerce, which Jordan has vowed to replace with a public-private corporation if elected governor. Many of Martin's Commerce budget requests were rejected in 1987.

- $44.3 million to build new prison facilities and expand the probation and parole systems, including construction of a treatment center for convicted drunken drivers. Correction Secretary Aaron Johnson wants the DWI facility to be built and operated by private contractors, a concept the Legislature has rejected.
- $37 million in business tax cuts, including roughly $27 million for partial restoration of a 3 percent sales discount for merchants as compensation for collecting the taxes. The discount was abolished last year as part of a school-construction financing package that also eliminated the inventory tax.
- Jordan favors restoration of some of the merchants' discount, but Ramsey opposes it.

"I thought we had an agreement with them (merchants) that they'd accept abolishing the sales tax discount in exchange for the inventory tax (abolition)," Ramsey said. I haven't had a single letter or phone call from my district about it. It's the big chains that want it."

— Martin's sweeping plan to consolidate all state environmental and health agencies in one department. He unveiled the blueprint in February and asked for a vote this summer. Legislative leaders say there isn't time to consider such a complex issue; Martin says it could be approved in half an hour.

Other items in the budget are less controversial, such as $3.5 million to establish pilot pre-school programs for academically "at-risk" four-year-olds and $18.8 million to recruit adult school bus drivers in the wake of the federal government's order to stop using 17-year-old drivers.

There's also $239.8 million for capital improvement projects.

TOGETHER AGAIN — The 1918 class of Durham High School recently held its 70th reunion. Four members of the 54-student class returned: William Horner, Mildred

Pickett and Maggie Morris, all standing, and Coma Cole Willard. (AP Laserphoto)

Four Ex-Classmates Meet At Their 70th Reunion

DURHAM (AP) — Durham High School's class of 1918, which graduated the year after the Russian revolution and in the midst of World War I, held its 70th reunion last week and four of the 54 graduates attended.

"This is amazing, isn't it? Seventy years," said Patricia W. Kennedy of Cary, whose mother, Coma Cole Willard was attending the reunion at a Durham hotel.

"She wouldn't miss it for anything, and with the exception of the year she had her stroke, she's been here in her wheelchair," Ms. Kennedy said.

Maggie Morris of Durham presided in a light blue suit and a navy straw hat. She said the reunions had been held every year since the first one took place 50 years after they graduated.

"Well, we talked about it and talked about it, and then all of a sudden we decided to do it," Miss Morris said the original reunion in 1968.

Eight students remain. They are now in their 80s. One lives in a rest home, one lives in a retirement home, one lives in Florida and one had a heart attack last week and couldn't come. The four other graduates — Miss Morris, Mrs. Willard, Mildred Pickett, and William Horner — were joined by Arnold Andrews, who had to drop out of school before he could graduate with his class. He later graduated from another school.

The equivalent of the graduates' high school yearbook, "The Messenger," was displayed at the reunion. The book mentioned the buying of Liberty Bonds and how the girls volunteered to join the Red Cross when they heard about the agency's heroics.

The boys did their part, too.

"When the country awoke to the realization last winter that we were facing a serious fuel shortage because coal was not to be had and wood was sky-high in price," the book said, "the boys in the school volunteered, at the suggestion of our principal, to go into the woods and cut trees so that the people of our city would be relieved of their suffering."

"On a cold dreary day, when the ground was covered with snow, the boys from our school cut eight cords of wood."

Gloria H. Driver, a friend of Miss Morris', said the reunions meant a great deal to Miss Morris, who was voted "brainiest girl" and "most religious."

"I'm sure that starting tomorrow morning she'll be thinking about what to do next year," Mrs. Driver told the News and Observer of Raleigh. "It is getting difficult to get them all together, but she likes to get together with them."

IN THE STATE

Bad Memory

WILMINGTON (AP) — After having suffered through several months of tourism doldrums brought on by poisonous algae along much of the North Carolina coast, business owners say the crowds are back, the fish are biting and the water is fine.

"The bottom line ... was somewhere between $15 and $25 million in economic loss" from the red tide, said William Hogarth, head of the state division of the National Marine Fisheries in Morehead City.

"That's the total impact, including fishermen, loss of sales of seafood, lack of business throughout. It had a lot of ramifications. It boomeranged through the whole industry," Hogarth said.

But as the Memorial Day weekend kicks off the summer tourism season, fishermen and restaurant owners say the red tide, which swept across 200 miles of North Carolina's beaches, is just a bad memory.

in investment — are needed to make the trip possible.

Scientists at North Carolina State and N.C. A&T State universities are doing their part, with a grant from NASA, trying to develop materials that would make the trip bearable.

Researchers at A&T in Greensboro hope to develop tough, but light composite materials such as those that would cover the spacecraft, while N.C. State researchers want to develop lightweight composite structures for the vehicle.

Over the next 4½ years, the two universities could receive up to $8.4 million to do research in the areas of hypersonics, composite materials and lightweight structures.

Reagan Tells Refuseniks 'To Work For More'

By ALISON SMALE
Associated Press Writer
MOSCOW (AP) — President Reagan told Soviet dissidents and refuseniks today the time is ripe to press for human rights because Kremlin leaders "appear to grasp the connection between certain freedoms and economic growth."

Speaking to several dozen dissidents gathered in Spaso House in U.S. Embassy compound after visiting a 13th century monastery, Reagan said that while there have been "hopeful signs" of improvement in the Soviet Union, "there can be no relenting for us now. We must work for more, always more."

"I came here to give you strength, but it is you who have strengthened me," the president said in a meeting that some Soviet officials had criticized as going too far to criticize internal affairs in the country.

"While we press for human lives through diplomatic channels, you press with your very lives, day in and day out, risking your homes, your jobs and your all," Reagan told the group in remarks which brought occasional applause from his audience.

"We hope that one freedom will lead to another," the president said, saying he hopes Soviet leaders realize that economic growth hinges to a large degree on individual initiative.

An individual Soviet citizen, Reagan said, must sense that the government "respects him enough to grant him all his human rights."

In advance of Reagan's arrival from his visit to the Danilov monastery, roughly 100 guests had their names checked against a list of invitees, and Soviet police let them inside the new embassy compound. Spaso House is a half-mile ride from the entrance to the American facility.

U.S. officials kept secret the identity and even the number of the guests expected to meet Reagan, apparently fearful that Soviet authorities would interfere with dissidents invited to the president's Moscow residence.

At least one guest, Roald "Alec" Zelichonok, a Leningrad Jew refused permission to emigrate for more than 10 years, reported last week that Soviet security police had warned him not to travel to Moscow to meet with Reagan.

Moscow refuseniks have not reported any similar warnings, but U.S. Embassy officials said they had made arrangements to pick the guests up at a city meeting point and drive them together to Spaso House, the U.S. Ambassador's residence where Reagan is staying.

On Sunday, Reagan considered making a private visit to a refusenik family, the Ziemans, but U.S. officials scrubbed the trip after the Soviets indicated it could damage the family's chance to emigrate after 11 years of waiting for an exit visa.

The Ziemans said they planned to attend Monday's reception, and Yuri Ziemans said other refuseniks invited included Benjamin Charney, who has campaigned for a visa for medical treatment in the West, and Yuli Kosharovskiy, who has been waiting for 17 years to emigrate.

At the White House, Reagan has received some of the most well-known Soviet dissidents allowed to leave the country, including Jewish activists Natan Sharansky and Yuri Orlov, a member of the Moscow group founded to monitor Soviet compliance with the Helsinki Act.

Andrei Sakharov, once the Soviet Union's most well-known dissident, did not attend the reception, but has been invited to the Reagans' formal dinner for Soviet Communist Party General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev on Tuesday night.

Sakharov, who turned 67 on May 21, has restricted his contacts with Western diplomats and journalists since he returned to Moscow in December 1986 from internal exile in the closed city of Gorky. But he still speaks out on human rights issues in the Soviet Union, calling for the release of political prisoners and the ending of psychiatric abuse.

Many other figures have emerged to campaign for more political freedom in the Soviet Union and for the rights of Jews and others seeking to emigrate, and most are thought to have been invited to meet Reagan.

Sergei Grigoryants, founder of an independent journal called Glasnost, was among those at the reception. Another former political prisoner, Lev Timofeyev, also was invited.

Reagan's dissident meeting was preceded by a visit to Moscow's Danilov monastery, where he greeted representatives of the officially tolerated Russian Orthodox church.

The church, which adheres to limits imposed by the officially atheist state, has come into the limelight even in state-run media recently, following a unique Kremlin meeting between Mikhail S. Gorbachev and the head of the Russian Orthodox church, Patriarch Pimen.

But religious activists like Alexander Ogorodnikov, who was among the 300 or so political prisoners released from Soviet labor camps last year, were to have a chance to tell Reagan about religious activities outside the confines of the state-sanctioned churches at Monday's reception.

Reagan has made restrictions on religion a focus in his statements on human rights leading up to the summit, listing them first in a human rights speech given in Chicago May 4.

Grigoryants, who was jailed for a week after a police raid on his independent newspaper May 7, will give Reagan some pointers on his second area of human rights concern, freedom of speech.

N.C. State Team Captures Victory In College Bowl

By ELIZABETH SHOGREN
Associated Press Writer
CHICAGO (AP) — In a battle of lightning-fast minds, a team from North Carolina State prevailed as students from 16 universities tested their memories in the national College Bowl championship.

"One might think of College Bowl players as eggheads, but eggheads are the worst College Bowl players," said Don Reid, the man who created the game 35 years ago.

"It (College Bowl) takes someone who is able to participate quickly in anything in life — someone who's alive to what's going on in the world," said Reid, who attended the weekend event.

"The best players in a College Bowl game will eventually be the players in the game of life," he said.

Dan Petrus, a 24-year-old veterinary student at N.C. State, helped his team capture the victory by answering this question: "In a February 1988 poll of its readers by Rolling Stone, he was voted worst male singer and worst dressed, and creator of the worst album and worst single — in other words, really and truly bad."

The answer: "Michael Jackson."

One of the questions in the final match between N.C. State and Emory University was: "On Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays, he works from 9 to 5; on Wednesdays, from 9 to 1; and on Fridays until early afternoon. During working hours, he often takes two or three hours to read and answer his fan mail."

Emory's Mike Barkin, a 25-year-old law school graduate, pushed his buzzer and yelled, "President Reagan," before the moderator finished reading the question.

That was right, according to journalist Bob Woodward's recent book about former CIA chief William Casey. But it wasn't good enough to win the national College Bowl title.

Other questions during the two-day event held at the Chicago campus of the University of Illinois dealt with subjects ranging from chemistry to the "Wizard of Oz."

Petrus, a rugby player, said he's good at the game because, "I remember a lot of facts and I'm able to recall them quickly."

But Petrus said it takes practice to perform well in the College Bowl, so his team trains four hours a week.

College Bowl started on national radio in 1953, and then became a regular television show in 1959. The game is still shown periodically on U.S. television and is broadcast in 12 foreign countries, Reid said.

Reid, a former basketball star, said he thought up the game because he felt, "there has to be some way to have fun with a sport of the mind."

The contest began Saturday with four-man teams from 16 colleges answering a moderator's questions with various point values in a series of rounds. Each team was paired with another and had to accumulate more points than the other to win the round and eliminate the loser from the competition.

No prizes were awarded to participants, but Petrus said the reward of beating teams from colleges such as Princeton University, the University of Chicago, Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Cornell University "is knowing that you've been able to think faster and out-think the others — it's an ego thing."

Car Rams Crowd, Injures 15 People

RALEIGH (AP) — Fifteen people were injured when a man in a 1966 Cadillac drove through a crowded Franklin County pig picking during the weekend, authorities said.

The incident took place late Saturday night on private property on a rural road in the Gold Sand community, about 12 miles east of Louisburg, Franklin County Sheriff Arthur Johnson said Sunday. When the deputy arrived on the scene, there were "people laying around on the ground," Johnson said. "Some people were trying to fight the subject."

Milton Leon Gupton, 44, of Louisburg was arrested and charged with assault with a deadly weapon, inflicting serious bodily injuries. He was being held in Franklin County jail Sunday under $25,000 bond, Johnson said.

"That's a mighty big car," Johnson said of the Cadillac. "The only thing that stopped him was he ran into a tree. If he hadn't struck the tree, there could have been more injuries."

Vets Find Funds Short

RALEIGH (AP) — About 15 years after the United States pulled out of Vietnam, a veteran says much of the public still is unsure whether the Americans who fought there are heroes or villains.

"I think the polarization is starting again," said Dennis Hoban, a board member of the Winston-Salem-based group Vietnam Veterans Leadership Program.

"It's a we-they thing," Hoban said. "That's a real dangerous situation."

The veterans' group is trying to raise the money for a memorial park along Interstate 85 that would commemorate those who fought in the war. But group members said contributions are sagging, and they have had to postpone construction.

The memorial will be a centerpiece for the 26-mile section of I-85 between Greensboro and Lexington, which has been designed as the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Highway.

In almost two years of fund-raising, the veterans' group has raised about $270,000 of its $600,000 goal, Ulmer said.

The memorial's design, which was chosen from more than 130 entries from across the country, will feature a circular brick wall of 58,130 bricks, representing all the Americans who died or are missing in action in Vietnam.

The brick wall will be 12 feet high and 700 feet long, with water cascading down it. One hundred trees will be enclosed within the wall, each representing a county in North Carolina.

Inside the circle of trees will be an open grass field with a granite monolith, on which will be etched the names of the 1,607 North Carolinians who died or are missing in action in Vietnam.

About 216,000 North Carolina residents served in the war.

Most of the money and donations of materials have come from corporations, rather than individuals, said Dennis Hoban, a board member of the veterans' group.

"If there's any disappointment at all, it would be that the grassroots — who probably don't know about this project — has yielded very little," he said, adding that the group recently hired a fund-raising consulting firm.

First Ladies Unite To Deny Chill

By SUSANNE M. SCHAFER
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Nancy Reagan, "a little overwhelmed" by her first visit to the Soviet Union, has quickly united with Raisa Gorbachev in a joint effort to squelch reports they don't get along.

Mrs. Reagan, who is scheduled today to visit a prestigious Moscow children's school and the suburban dacha and grave site of the renowned poet Boris Pasternak, spent a good part of her first afternoon in the Soviet capital touring the Kremlin under the tutelage of her fast-talking counterpart.

Asked to explain lingering reports they dislike one another, Mrs. Reagan shot back, "You explain it to me."

Holding hands and smiling, the two women put on an elaborate show of friendship. They dismissed the feuds as "rumors." But when the talk turned to religious activities the Soviet first lady cut the conversation short. Every time they've met, Mrs.

Reagan said, "We've gotten along very well."

On a tour of the ancient Russian fortress and its collection of golden, onion-domed cathedrals, the first ladies were also often shoulder-to-shoulder, discussing the religious paintings that adorned the walls of the Cathedral of the Assumption as if they were a pair of school girls.

The Soviet first lady had a take-charge attitude of the tour as she put her arm about Mrs. Reagan's waist and guided her about the inside of the 14th century cathedral, one of the oldest churches-turned museums in the Kremlin.

According to Mrs. Reagan's press secretary, Elaine Crispin, the two women discussed the supposed feud over tea, and she quoted Mrs. Gorbachev as saying, "All these rumors are trivial stories."

Mrs. Reagan then replied, speaking of the media, "Yes, but you can't get them to change their minds. I've told them so many times that the rumors are not true," Mrs. Crispin quoted her as saying.

Last December, when Mrs. Gorbachev visited Washington, reports of a frosty relationship emerged from the two first ladies' White House get-togethers.

Mrs. Gorbachev also sought to dispel the rumors. Displaying the outspoken style she used at the White House, chimed in, "Rumors have it ... that there is some misunderstanding between myself and the (president's) wife ... I would like to say, I think it's not serious."

Former chief of staff Donald Regan wrote in his recent book that during their first meeting, in Geneva, Switzerland, in 1985, Mrs. Gorbachev dominated the dinner table conversation and when she left Mrs. Reagan asked, "Who does that dame think she is?" Mrs. Reagan was asked Sunday if Regan was inaccurate.

With an icy stare, she replied curtly, "Yes."

After the two women entered the cathedral, they answered reporters' questions.

Mrs. Gorbachev was asked about what she wanted to tell the American people about what the summit should produce.

"Peace and friendship and that they understand the Soviet people," she replied. Asked what else, the former university lecturer shot back: "What do you mean, what else? That's the most important thing."

Mrs. Reagan, appearing a bit bewildered, was asked her impressions of the Soviet Union. "Wonderful, very exciting, it's a little overwhelming," she replied, eyes wide and blinking.

After viewing one of the oldest icons in the church of the Madonna and Child, Mrs. Reagan turned from Mrs. Gorbachev and towards the interpreter, insisting, "Now let me finish."

She then asked whether the cathedral was used mainly as a museum or for religious activities.

Miss Anderson Is Wed

Dr. Michelle Kyle Anderson of Decatur, Ga. and Samuel Proctor Massie III of Lexington, Ky. were united in marriage, Saturday, in a 1 p.m. ceremony at St. Paul's Episcopal Church. The Revs. Joseph H. Banks and Middleton L. Wooten III presided over the double-ring ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of William H. and Dorothy T. Anderson of Greenville. The bridegroom is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Samuel Proctor Massie Jr. of Laurel, Md.

Music was provided by organist Laura Gaither and soloists Sibby E. Anderson and Mary Smith. Music selections were "Ave Maria," "O Perfect Love," "The Lord's Prayer," and "Whither Thou Goest."

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a floor-length gown with a cathedral train of bridal taffeta with re-embroidered Alencon lace. The fitted bodice featured a bateau neckline with an illusion sweetheart yoke outlined with Alencon lace, long tapered sleeves, and basque waist. Alencon lace motifs embellished with seed pearls and sequins applied the bodice and deep V back and accented the back of the waist. The floor-length skirt extended into a cathedral train. Scattered Alencon lace motifs applied the skirt and train. A deep border of scalloped Alencon lace encircled the hemline of the skirt and train. The bride chose a waltz-length bridal veil of illusion with a hand-rolled edge accented with a standing pouff flowing from the back of an open crown Alencon lace wreath etched with seed pearls. Her bouquet was a silk nosegay with rose stephanie, baby's breath, ivy and matching ribbon.

The bride's maid of honor was her sister, Sibby E. Anderson of Philadelphia. The matron of honor was Kathryn P. Moore of Hoover, Ala.

They wore tea-length gowns of apricot moire taffeta with princess necklines, fitted bodices, elbow-length puffed sleeves, basque waists and full circular skirts.

Bridesmaids were Nicole Anderson of Carboro, sister-in-law of the bride; Dr. Halina Meson of Washington, D.C., and Dr. Sharon Nicholson of Baltimore, Md. The bridesmaids wore gowns similar to the maid of honor's except the color of the gowns was peach.

The flower girl, Jody Massie of Little Rock, Ark., niece of the bridegroom, wore a gown of apricot moire taffeta with matching overlay and lace puffed sleeves.

Dr. Lawrence M. Samkoff of New York City was best man. Groomsman were Bruce K. Dallas of Washington, D.C.; Guy M. Jean-Pierre of Edison, N.J.; Edward J. O'Brien of Middle Island, N.Y.; and Stephen W. Peacock of Dallas, Texas. The ring bearer was Justin Massie of Little Rock, Ark., nephew of the bridegroom.

Following the wedding, a reception was given by the bride's parents at the Wiz Club in Greenville. An after-rehearsal dinner was given by the parents of the bridegroom at the Holiday Inn in Greenville. A shower was given by friends of the couple in Lexington, Ky.

The bride is a graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and the UNC-CH School of Dentistry. The bridegroom is graduate of Amherst College and Vanderbilt University School of Law. The bride is a dentist at Emory University in Atlanta and the bridegroom is an attorney employed by IBM in Lexington, Ky.

Following a wedding cruise to the Bahamas, the couple will reside in Lexington, Ky.

Masked Husband Is An Improved Lover

DEAR ABBY: There is no one in this world I can tell this to but you. My marriage was made in heaven. I have been married for 50 years to a man who adores me. We are financially secure and have a beautiful family of children and grandchildren.

We keep strong lights burning around our home at night for security reasons. About a year ago, my husband began wearing a sleeping mask. Naturally, I thought it was because of the brightness of our bedroom, but I learned differently. He wears it only when we make love. He talks to me at this time about how long and silky my hair is and how firm my body is — just as he did when we were first married, when I was 18 and he was 21.

When I questioned him about this, he said he was "fantasizing" and suggested that I wear a sleep mask, too, so we could both pretend that we are young again!

I can't do that, Abby. He is twice the size he was when we were married — plus, he's bald. Also my hair isn't long and silky now; it's short and gray. And my body at 68 is far from firm. However, since he started wearing the sleep mask, his lovemaking has improved so much, it's unbelievable.

Should I wear one, too? —

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

PERPLEXED IN PASADENA

DEAR PERPLEXED: Why not? If a mask will enhance your enjoyment as it has his, go ahead and wear one.

DEAR ABBY: I have been a telephone operator with the Bell system for 18 years, and I am continually amazed at the conduct of some customers on the telephone. I have had people curse, burp, yawn, cough, sneeze, chew and eat while requesting a telephone number, and I have yet to hear the first "Please excuse me, operator," or a simple "I'm sorry."

This rudeness is universal. One would expect physicians, lawyers, teachers, secretaries and other professionals who deal with the public to have better manners. Perhaps they have, but because they can't be seen, they don't bother to use them.

Telephone operators have to deal with abusive drunks and pervers who get their jollies by using obscene language on the phone, but we consider the source and carry on.

Although to some extent we are computerized, we are still real people manning those telephones, and there is no excuse for such rudeness. If this letter makes a half-dozen people realize that telephone operators are human beings with feelings; then writing it will have been worthwhile.

DEAR DISGUSTED: I'm sure you are not alone. Anonymity does not justify crudeness. But it certainly fosters it.

UPHOLSTERY STAIN REPELLENT?...

"Since you've finally purchased that 'just perfect' new upholstered furniture, doesn't it make sense to protect your investment with a stain repellent?"

Sound familiar?...It does if you've purchased upholstered furniture lately, since many furniture retailers are selling a new add-on service—stain repellents. Really, it's a good idea, but only if you remember a few facts.

Two Types

First, there are two primary types of stain repellents: silicone-based and fluorochemical-based. The silicone products provide repellency for water-based stains only. If your favorite spots consist of oily substances or particle soils, silicone repellents won't help much. However, if you'd like your stain repellent to resist particle soils (the kid's Crayola, silly putty), while also repelling both water-based stains (Kool Aid, the coffee that missed your new dress, "The cat did WHAT on my new sofa?") and oil-based stains (Domino's latest delivery, Rover's overdue for a bath body), fluorochemical repellents are for you. Look for names like 3M Scotchgard or Dupont Teflon.

How Do You Tell?...

"But without trade names, how does the average shopper tell the difference?" Simple...just ask the sales person for a blotter card, which repellent manufacturers provide to demonstrate the effectiveness of their product. Take it home and apply a little cooking oil. If it soaks through within seconds, the product is less effective silicone. If it forms a bead on the surface, you've found the more effective fluorochemical.

Oh, one more important point. Never allow anyone to apply a silicone repellent to a fluorochemical treated fabric. Not only will it fail to repel oily stains; it will attract dry soil, causing premature soiling.

A word to the wise...

Sisters Battling To Regain Their Home

who instigated the proceedings. Sheriff Robert Bailey Jr. said the 20th Street Bank sought the incompetency ruling, saying the sisters were unable to manage their business affairs and could not care for themselves.

Bank officials could not be reached for comment on Sunday.

Ms. Ashby said her sister closed her account with that bank several years ago and transferred the money to another Huntington bank.

County officials said David Pancake, a private lawyer appointed to investigate the sisters' mental health, recommended that they be put away. Pancake did not return calls by The Associated Press to his Huntington house Sunday.

The sisters said they didn't know he was their attorney.

"I didn't know anything like that could happen in the United States," Ms. Ashby said.

Under state law, the county commission rules on mental competence cases and will receive 5 percent of the sisters' estate.

"Of course they want to go back home. Everybody wants to go back home," said Gladys Jordan, appointed by the county to oversee the women's affairs as their guardians.

Jordan said the sisters were living in "horrible conditions."

"It was filthy and inhumane conditions at the least," Jordan said. "I don't think they had had a bath for years and years. It looked like they had been living in their beds. There wasn't even a chair. Their hair was matted together — like a dog's — hanging in their faces."

"That's damn lies," said Ms. Ashby.

Jordan said the women ate only once a day Monday through Friday, and that the house was rat-infested and had a natural gas leak. She said workers removed 280 bags of newspapers and debris from one room alone, and found $33,700 in cash in the house.

Assistant nursing home administrator Rose Greene corroborated Jordan's account of Ms. Ashby's and Ms. Gillette's condition when they were brought in. "The smell ... it was deplorable," she said.

However, she said she is unqualified to say if the women belong in a full care nursing home "or maybe just need someone to check on them once a day to make sure they wash themselves."

Dr. Samuel Henson, a 20-year employee of the nursing home where Ms. Ashby and Ms. Gillette are being kept, said Friday the women don't belong there.

"In my opinion, they belong at home," he said. "This simply goes against everything we attempt to practice in this country."

County commissioner Forest Underwood defends his decision declaring the women incompetent, but said he is willing to reconsider.

Underwood said "there's no certain criteria" for judging incompetence.

"It's a matter of sitting there, gauging and judging what you think they're capable of handling," he said.

A 1987 series by The Associated Press examined guardianship laws in each of the 50 states and the District of Columbia and found a network of overburdened courts that routinely fail to monitor wards under their jurisdiction. The system often opened the door to physical and financial mistreatment, according to the series, "Guardians of the Elderly: An Ailing System."

Najib Appealing For Afghan Peace

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — President Najib opened a multiparty national Parliament with a call to rebels to abandon their eight-year war and join the government.

Also Sunday, a guerrilla leader claimed anti-government forces control 90 percent of the Afghan countryside.

During talks in Peshawar, Pakistan, rebel alliance spokesman Gulbadin Hekmatyar urged the U.N. official overseeing Afghan refugees to work with reconstruction and resettlement commissions already set up by the guerrillas.

In Kabul, meanwhile, Najib said he would not concede any territory to the guerrillas, who have been fighting his Soviet-backed government for a decade.

In a 20-minute speech interrupted seven times by applause from members of Parliament, Najib continued his efforts to portray himself as no longer the leader of a one-party state.

The Parliament, the first in 15 years, was elected April 14 as part of a government effort to widen its base. It consists of the House of Representatives and a 158-member Senate and replaces the Revolutionary Council as Afghanistan's law-making body.

held by groups or individuals with ties to the government.

Two former guerrillas hold what the government calls "opposition" seats.

There are 50 vacant seats that Najib says have been left open for the guerrillas if they stop fighting.

"We are ready to listen to the views of the opposition," Najib said. "We are ready to receive them in Kabul."

The session was held as rebel forces have been mounting attacks in and around Kabul. Najib said the signing of an accord last month providing for the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan "opened new doors for peace in Afghanistan," but he said it "does not mean overnight peace."

The U.S.-backed guerrillas have not halted their battle despite the start of the Soviet withdrawal May 15, and they say they'll keep fighting as long as Najib, a former secret police commander, remains in power.

Talks Progressing

arrived at the 13th century Danilov monastery, and again when they left.

The monastery was closed to worshippers during the visit but several hundred Soviets crowded against police barricades near the monastery and lined the nearby sidewalks during the 30 minute visit, some waving at the American group.

As the red hammer and sickle fluttered alongside the American Stars and Stripes on major thoroughfares, Reagan and Gorbachev put arms control differences at the top of today's agenda.

Neither side expected enough progress to produce a treaty to achieve a goal both leaders have embraced: deep cuts in the superpowers' arsenals of nuclear bombers and missiles. Verification issues appeared insurmountable.

A U.S. official said today that chances were improving for signing an agreement providing advance notification of nuclear missile tests, and another agreement establishing procedures for monitoring experimental nuclear explosions at Semipalatinsk in the Soviet Union and the Department of Energy's Nevada test site.

As recently as Saturday, Assistant Secretary of State Rozanne L. Ridgway said "it is not going to be possible to reach agreement" on the notification pact because the Soviets were trying to expand it beyond what was acceptable to the United States.

Officials also had said it appeared that technical issues would block final agreement at the summit on the nuclear monitoring agreement.

Reagan and Gorbachev fielded a half-dozen questions at the start of their second Moscow meeting.

Gorbachev said he had the impression neither side had "a very good idea" about human rights situation in the other's country. He said that was why he had proposed to Reagan that the U.S. and Soviet legislatures set up joint seminar groups to explore the issue.

Asked if he had a Memorial Day message for the American people, Gorbachev wished them peace and prosperity.

Reagan, meanwhile, said he was aware of "big improvements" in human rights in the Soviet Union.

Car Bomb Kills 15

The blast gutted several shops and destroyed the fronts of eight apartment buildings. More than 20 other buildings were badly damaged and at least 30 cars were reduced to piles of smoldering, twisted metal.

Firemen battled several blazes ignited by the explosion, and ambulances ferried casualties to hospitals. Radio stations broadcast urgent appeals for blood donations. Severed overhead power cables dangled onto the street and broken glass littered the area for 300 yards around the blast scene.

Phalangist militiamen and others from the Lebanese Forces, the Christians' main militia, cordoned off the blast site and fired in the air to clear paths for fire engines and ambulances through the traffic.

Walking past pools of blood, a jeweler picked pieces of gold bracelets, rings and necklaces scattered outside his devastated store.

"I'm still alive, that's what counts in a country like ours," he said, refusing to give his name.

Zeina Ghebril, 21, a telephone switchboard operator whose home was gutted in the blast, said: "My father died six months ago, leaving us only this house to live in. Now the house is gone and my mother and I have nowhere to go."

Christian and Moslems have frequently attacked each other with car bombs during Lebanon's 13-year-old civil war, killing hundreds of people and wounding thousands.

Five weeks ago, 69 people were killed and 111 wounded in the northern port of Tripoli, a predominantly Sunni Moslem city 50 miles north of Beirut, when a car bomb exploded in a vegetable market. Officials blamed Christians.

Today's bombing came two days after Syrian troops deployed throughout Beirut's southern slums to stop fighting between Shiite Moslem militias.

The Syrians were enforcing a cease-fire between the Iranian-backed Hezbollah and the Syrian-backed Amal militia, who had battled for three weeks for control of the maze of alleyways and cement-block shanties.

Police said 296 people were killed and 1,000 wounded in the street battles, which left Hezbollah, or Party of God, in control of most of the area.

More than 130,000 people have been killed in Lebanon's civil war.

Mears Takes 3rd Indy Victory

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Rick Mears now owns three Indianapolis 500 victories — one for each driver who finished second on Sunday.

Mears, the fastest driver ever to qualify at Indy, struggled with early handling problems, then waited patiently for the right moment and blew untouched through a multimillion-dollar demolition derby.

At the end, it wasn't even close. Confused, certainly, in part but not in whole because of the yellow flag ever that afflicted the race from start to finish.

Only seven other drivers ever won the world's most famous race three or more times. None before the 36-year-old Mears ever had three different drivers finish twice in the same year.

First, the 400,000 or so at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway were told that Jim Crawford was second. Then, they were told that defending champion Al Unser was second. Finally, three hours later, the few still around were told that Emerson Fittipaldi was second, that he hadn't illegally passed in the pits after all and that his two-lap penalty was rescinded.

At one point, Mears' car owner, Roger Penske, thought he would go himself one better for his seventh Indy victory, sixth in 10 years, fourth in five years: a 1-2 finish, Mears and Unser.

Mears' part was never in doubt. It wasn't the fastest of his 11 Indys, but it was perhaps his best in a race in which 10 of the first 12 dropouts were victims of crashes. A record 14 times for 67 laps, the race was slowed by yellow caution flags, the last still waving at the finish to the almost audible yawn of the crowd, and Mears' winning speed of 144.809 mph was the slowest by a winner in seven years.

Unser, a four-time winner, was third, followed by Michael Andretti, Bobby Rahal and Crawford.

Even those standings were unofficial until today's posting by the U.S. Auto Club. That's SOP for Indy.

"There was all sorts of confusion out there," Crawford said. "Some very famous people came past me under the yellow flag."

The early yellow flags kept Mears close, even when he dropped far behind the leaders, and at the end the yellow kept him in the lead after he found the right setup for his Chevrolet-powered Penske racer, the same one in which he set a four-lap qualification record of 219.198 mph two weeks earlier.

"The car just went loose and couldn't run fast enough to keep up," Mears said. "We had to survive until we could get it running the way we wanted it. I was getting frustrated because of the difference between the way it had been working (in practice and qualifications) and today. When it was loose, I couldn't run on the apron, and I needed to get there to make a run" for the leaders.

Mears, who now has led during eight of his 11 races at Indianapolis, lost his pole-position advantage to another Penske teammate, Danny Sullivan, at the very start of the race.

He fell behind by more than a lap, dropping as far back as 10th place before the series of yellow lights allowed him to begin his steady comeback.

Many of the crash victims complained of track conditions, a hazardous buildup of rubber made even more slippery by the 100-degree heat of the asphalt surface.

"There was a lot of traffic," said Mears, who finally found the right setup with a tire change and wing adjustments. "A lot of guys were sliding around because of the heat wave out there. There were some close ones, but everything worked out for us."

Mears knows all about close ones. His third Indy victory put him in select company; but for a flicker or two of fate, it would have put him in a class by himself.

"It's a tough race. It's either your day or it's not. We've had a little bad luck here or we'd have two more (victories)," said Mears, who also was involved in the two closest finishes in Indy 500 history — second to Gordon Johncock by .16 seconds in 1982 and third behind Rahal and Kevin Cogan by 1.8 seconds in 1986.

Sullivan, who started from the middle of the front row, took the lead on the first lap and held it for 91 of the first 94 laps, avoiding the early accidents that wiped out nearly a third of the field.

Scott Brayton, Roberto Guerrero and Tony Bettenhausen all went out on a first-lap crash in the second

NASCAR Feud Erupts Again

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — Geoff Bodine felt justice was served. Dale Earnhardt did not. And Rick Hendrick was left with mixed emotions.

Bodine and Earnhardt, bitter rivals on the NASCAR Winston Cup circuit, engaged in another controversial bumping incident in Sunday's Coca-Cola 600 at Charlotte Motor Speedway.

The incident came on the 58th lap of the 400-lap race at the 1.5-mile trioval. The results upset both sides.

After the two bumped down the backstretch and again heading into the third turn, Bodine spun and tagged the wall between turns three and four. He ended up in the garage for 69 laps while his crew repaired the heavily-damaged Chevrolet.

Earnhardt escaped physical damage, but wound up in NASCAR's version of the penalty box, forced to sit idly in the pits for five laps and watch his chance for victory go racing by.

Earnhardt finished 13th, six laps behind race-winner Darrell Waltrip. Bodine finished 24th.

"The 3 car (Earnhardt) and I did bump a bit going down the back straightaway," Bodine said, "but why he turned right I don't know. NASCAR penalized him. There is a sort of justice in this."

Detroit Wary Of The Celts

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — Detroit Pistons coach Chuck Daly is so wary of the Boston Celtics' never-say-die spirit that he's not even sure four victories will be enough.

"I'm afraid that if we win four games, Commissioner (David) Stern is going to declare that we have to win five to beat these guys," Daly said Sunday.

The Pistons led the best-of-seven NBA Eastern Conference finals 2-1 going into today's fourth game at the Pontiac Silverdome.

"I know for sure that their best effort will come in the next game," Daly said. "It's the game they have to have."

Daly said the Pistons can't afford to be too confident against the Celtics, who are trying to reach the NBA championship series for the fifth consecutive year. Detroit has never been to the finals.

"The Celtics are like the woman in 'Fatal Attraction,'" Daly said. "She was shot in the chest and was under water for five minutes, but she was still dangerous."

Daly said Larry Bird, despite missing 37 of 57 shots in the series, is the most dangerous Celtic.

If Boston wins at Pontiac, Daly said, "then Bird can say to us, 'You had your opportunity,' like he did in Atlanta. I don't want our guys to hear that."

Bird's three-game slump fueled a persistent rumor that he has mononucleosis or was tested for the illness, but he said Sunday that he feels fine. It's been just a week since he scored 20 points and made nine of 10 shots in the fourth quarter of Boston's seventh-game playoff victory over Atlanta.

"Larry looks fine to me, more rested than last year," Daly said. "He's just waiting to have a big game. He's capable of 30 or 40 points any time. Just look what he did in the seventh game against the Hawks."

Rebound Fight

Harper Gets His Revenge On LA

DALLAS (AP) — Four years ago, Derek Harper's mental lapse cost the Dallas Mavericks a chance to beat the Los Angeles Lakers in a key playoff game.

On Sunday, he got his revenge.

Harper scored a career playoff-high 35 points and had no turnovers in 39 minutes, leading the Mavericks to a series-tying 118-104 victory over the Lakers in Game 4 of the NBA Western Conference finals.

"I certainly wasn't thinking about four years ago out there today, but I'll never forget about it as long as you guys keep asking me about it," Harper said.

In a 1984 playoff game against the Lakers, Harper held the ball for the final six seconds of regulation time, thinking his team led by one point. The game actually was tied — and the Mavericks lost the game in overtime and the series 4-1.

"People thought they'd heard the last of me but I didn't go out and jump off a building," Harper said. "I put it behind me."

The series returns to Los Angeles for Game 5 Tuesday night.

The Mavericks shot the lights out in the first half, hitting 61 percent of their shots, but still trailed Los Angeles 57-56 at halftime thanks to Magic Johnson, who scored the Lakers' last seven points of the half.

But Harper took over in the third quarter, scoring 14 points — including a three-point play that tied it at 77 and a 3-point shot that put the Mavericks ahead for good at 80-77.

The Lakers, who scored only 18 fourth-quarter points in losing Game 3, wilted in the stretch for the second straight game as Dallas ran off a 15-4 charge in the fourth quarter Sunday that helped turn an 89-87 lead into a 105-94 bulge with 3:48 left.

"We had breakdowns and their shooting was excellent," Lakers Coach Pat Riley said. "Dallas is showing what they are all about."

"We played well for 3½ quarters and then we disintegrated. They dominated the boards at the end and we couldn't stop them."

The Lakers, outrebounded 62-40 in Game 3, held a 26-13 halftime rebounding lead Sunday. But the Mavericks ended up with a 45-42 lead for the game, including a 22-5 edge in the final period.

"They've done a great job on the boards," Lakers center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar said. "They've been consistent and persistent. They've definitely made it tough on us to get second-chance baskets."

Johnson, who finished with 28 points, kept the Lakers in the game until the fourth-quarter Dallas surge.

"They were hot and hitting their shots, that's the story," Johnson said. "They were coming after us like I knew they would. Derek Harper played extra well today."

"He ran their offense solidly and hit a bunch of important shots against some pretty good defense."

Mark Aguirre scored 26 points for the Mavericks, hitting five straight baskets in the fourth quarter.

"They were doubling me when I got the ball so I basically put myself up as a decoy," Aguirre said. "I got the ball over to the guards and they did a good job. But in the last few minutes, I had the opportunity to go."

Preservation Ideal Keys Waltrip's Win

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.

AP Sports Writer

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — Preservation of car and driver is the key to winning the Coca-Cola 600, and Darrell Waltrip brought his car to victory in NASCAR's longest race by using those ideas to near-perfection.

Over the 600-mile race, most drivers will tell you that it's not as important to run hard at Charlotte Motor Speedway as it is to run smart.

"We determined early on that 32.50 (seconds per lap) was an ideal pace," Waltrip said. "We never saw any doubt or problem. We determined a 32.50 would keep us in contention, out of trouble and give us a shot at the end. That's literally what we did."

As a result, Waltrip became the first four-time winner of the Coca-Cola 600 and also won his first race this season.

In addition to keeping a specific pace, Waltrip's race crew had to keep an eye on the tires, which were a source of concern all day since five of the accidents which occurred could have been attributed to tire wear.

"The tires are too good," Waltrip said of the Goodyear tires that replaced the Goodyear tires in most of the pit crews in the week prior to the race.

"The tires are so good that (the car) literally tears them off the wheel. I can't tell you when I've had a car that was as consistent as mine was today," Waltrip added. "But you have to realize that they had their limitations. You had to stay within those limitations or you were going to be on the hook."

The 41-year-old Tennessean claimed the lead on Lap 369, passing

Strange Holds Off Challenges For Win

DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) — Curtis Strange felt the fire inside when it counted most and he held off the challenge of David Frost and Hale Irwin to earn a two-stroke victory in the Memorial Tournament.

"I still think you need that fire under your belly. Especially I think I do," Strange said Sunday after matching the 36-hole record at the Muirfield Village Golf Club. "When you play good down the stretch, that's as rewarding as winning the golf tournament. When the heat is on, you find out what you're made of."

In hot and humid conditions on a golf course that was grudgingly giving up birdies, Strange played the final seven holes in three under par.

His chief adversaries, Frost and Irwin, managed one birdie — and that came on the closing hole after Strange had already locked up his 14th career victory.

Strange's 64 on Saturday tied the course record and he then wrapped up the victory and matched the 36-hole record with a final-round 67 over the 7,104-yard, par-72 Jack Nicklaus layout.

The 33-year-old Wake Forest graduate started with rounds of 73 and 70 and finished at 14-under-par 274.

Irwin, who led after the second and third rounds, chipped in for a birdie on the final hole to tie Frost for second at 276.

It marked the seventh time that Frost — who has never won a tournament in the United States — has finished second.

Overton Earns "Up and Coming" Award

Kristi Overton has added another national award to her growing list with her naming by the Women's Sports Foundation as one of 10 recipients of its "Up and Coming" Award.

Overton, 18, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Parker Overton of Greenville, is a world-class water skier. Her award from the foundation is in the women vs. nature category for the progress and promise she has shown in her sport.

Late last year, Overton was named as the female winner of the Dial Award, as the top amateur athlete in the country.

Since 1984, the Sports Foundation has honored 10 female athletes whose achievements to date demonstrate a potential for greatness.

"These sportswomen are entering the elite competitive ranks and they deserve lots of support for their achievements to date," Deborah Anderson, executive director of the foundation, said. "This is our way of encouraging these great athletes on their way to the top."

Overton has distinguished herself in three areas of water-skiing — slalom, tricks and jumps — earning world class honors. She holds the national record for junior girls in all three events and took first place in tricks, slalom and overall girls' division at the 1987 National Championships. Overton is currently ranked number four in the world for junior girls and was an alternate for the 1985 and 1987 U.S. National Teams.

Past "Up and Coming" winners include Bonnie Blair, 1988 Olympic gold medalist in speed skating; Debi Thomas, 1988 Olympic bronze medalist in figure skating; Lynette Woodard, basketball player and the first female Harlem Globetrotter; and Caitlin Blodeaux, ranked number one among fencers in the U.S. and an Olympic hopeful.

The Women's Sports Foundation is a non-profit, educational organization dedicated to enhancing the sport experience for girls and women.

Lady Jaguars Take Fourth At State Meet

DURHAM — Cheryl Hopkins took first in the triple jump and fourth in the long jump at State 1A/2A Girls' High School Track Championships to help Farmville to a fourth-place finish in the team standings.

Farmville totaled 32 points while winner South Granville had a total of 51.

Hopkins won the triple jump with a leap of 37-7 1/4 and earned fourth in the long jump with a mark of 16-6 1/2.

Farmville's 4x100 meter relay team of Monica Hunter, Hopkins, Kim Harrison and Beverly Vines took second with a time of 50.03, their fastest time of the year.

Farmville's 800 meter relay team of Hunter, Sheila Speight, Harrison and Hopkins also finished second by recording their fastest time of the year at 1:47.22.

Farmville's mile relay team of Harrison, Speight, Hunter and Vines rounded out the top Lady Jaguar performances by taking fourth with a time of 4:14.25.

Harrison also qualified in the high jump but didn't qualify.

Turner Continues Her Upward Swing

CORNING, N.Y. (AP) — After her first four victory last week at the LPGA Championship, Sherri Turner overheard a reporter refer to her as "a household name" — only in her household.

That should change after Turner became the first golfer to take win consecutive tournaments on the LPGA Tour this year with a victory on Sunday in the $325,000 Corning Classic.

"Maybe after this victory, my name will become known in a few more households," said Turner, who finished at 15-under-par 273, two strokes ahead of Korea's Ok-Hee Ku and JoAnne Carner.

The victory didn't come easy for Turner, however, as she battled Ku in Sunday's final round before consecutive birdies on 14 and 15 in her round of 70 provided the margin of victory.

Graff One Of Few Big Names Left

PARIS (AP) — Defending champion Steffi Graf, her booming forehands cutting through a cold drizzle, beat Bettina Fulco of Argentina 6-0, 6-1 Monday to advance to the French Open semifinals.

Graf, the top women's seed, lost just three points in the first set before relaxing slightly toward the end of the 43-minute match on center court.

Fulco, 19, won just 13 points in dropping the first 11 games, but then took 10 points in the last two games, one of which she won. Graf won 56 points during the match, mostly with powerful forehands.

The start of play was held up 20 minutes by rain, which continued intermittently in chilly temperatures.

The 18-year-old West German became the first player to qualify for the semifinals in a tournament where youth is running rampant.

Over the weekend, teenagers ousted four favored veterans, including longtime champions Chris Evert and Martina Navratilova.

A fifth upset victim, sixth-seeded Yannick Noah, lost to Spain's Emilio Sanchez, who celebrated his 23rd birthday on Sunday with the victory that put him in the quarterfinals.

Padres Feeling Better After Win

By HILLEL ITALIE
Associated Press Writer

After just two games under Manager Jack McKeon, the San Diego Padres are already feeling better.

The Padres defeated the New York Mets 6-3 on Sunday, giving McKeon his first victory since taking over for Larry Bowa, who was fired the day before. It was only the fourth road victory in 20 games for the Padres and the first time they had won a road series since last Sept. 18-20 at Houston.

"It seems we're a little more carefree now," said Jimmy Jones, who allowed eight hits, walked none and struck out three in 8 2-3 innings to improve his record to 4-5. Mark Davis relieved in the ninth with two outs and a runner on first to earn his sixth save.

"You could hear him yelling encouragement from the dugout the whole game," said outfielder Tony Gwynn, a two-time batting champion who was 1-for-4 in his first game since coming off the 21-day disabled list. "He was talking to the batters in the on-deck circle, telling them what to look for."

Keith Moreland's RBI double sparked a five-run seventh inning, the Padres' biggest outburst of the season, and broke open a scoreless duel between Jones and Bob Ojeda, 4-4.

Dodgers 2, Expos 1

Kirk Gibson and John Shelby hit home runs and Orel Hershiser scattered nine hits as Los Angeles won at Montreal.

Hershiser, 7-2, struck out seven and did not walk a batter as he pitched his third complete game. It was Hershiser's first victory over Montreal since May 21, 1986.

Cardinals 3, Braves 1

Jose DeLeon and Ken Dayley combined on a four-hitter for St. Louis' 11th victory in 13 games against Atlanta.

DeLeon, 4-4, allowed four hits, walked one and struck out eight but lost his bid for a shutout when Albert Hall hit his first homer of the season with one out in the bottom of the ninth. Dayley relieved and earned his second save.

Pirates 4, Reds 2

Andy Van Slyke drove in three runs with a groundout and a double and Bobby Bonilla hit his league-leading 12th homer as Pittsburgh won at Cincinnati.

John Smiley, 4-4, allowed just one hit over the first four innings, then gave up two unearned runs in the fifth. Eric Davis' pinch-hit single drove in one run and Smiley balked, allowing Lloyd McClendon to score.

Astros 7, Cubs 1

Rafael Ramirez's grand slam highlighted a six-run sixth inning and Nolan Ryan allowed three hits in 7 1-3 innings as visiting Houston defeated Chicago to snap a four-game losing streak.

It was Ramirez's second homer of the season and the first grand slam in his eight years in the major leagues. He also singled in a run in the eighth.

Phillies 4, Giants 2

Bruce Ruffin scattered nine hits over seven innings and Chris James homered and scored twice as Philadelphia defeated San Francisco to complete a sweep of the three-game home series.

Ruffin, 4-4, who was aided by four double plays, struck out two and walked two. Steve Bedrosian pitched two hitless innings to earn his third save. Mike Krukow, 4-3, took the loss, ending a personal three-game winning streak.

Filer Continues Comeback By Defeating Milwaukee

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Tom Filer is still on pace to break the major-league record for consecutive victories by a pitcher ... a snail's pace, that is.

After stretching his seven-year winning streak to 10 games Sunday with a five-hitter in the Milwaukee Brewers' 7-2 victory over the Cleveland Indians, Filer can reasonably expect to tie the American League mark of 17 straight sometime before, say, the turn of the century. The major-league record of 24 in a row may take a while longer.

"I have some space in there, that's true. I wish I could have established myself sooner than this," said the 31-year-old right-hander, whose winning streak began in 1982 when he was 1-2 for the Chicago Cubs before spending the next two years in the minors.

After going 7-0 with Toronto in 1985, Filer injured his elbow and spent all of 1986 on the disabled list. He didn't pitch again in the majors until he shut out Detroit on five hits last Tuesday.

Athletics 5, Red Sox 4

Carney Lansford, the major leagues' leading hitter at .396, singled to start a three-run first inning and doubled and scored in the second to key Oakland's fifth consecutive victory. The Athletics scored all their runs against Jeff Sellers, 0-5.

Yankees 7, Mariners 3

Dave Winfield drove in three runs, two with his 11th homer, and John Candelaria pitched five innings for his sixth straight victory before leaving with a sore elbow.

Winfield's homer off loser Mike Campbell followed a two-out double by Mike Pagliarulo in the fifth inning after Seattle scored all its runs in the fourth to pull within 4-3.

Twins 6, Tigers 3

Kirby Puckett drove in three runs with a pair of homers as Minnesota stretched its winning streak to eight games, its longest since 1985. Puckett hit a solo homer in the third inning and a two-run shot in the fifth off

Doyle Alexander that gave th Twins a 4-3 lead.

Royals 12, Rangers 1

Willie Wilson drove in four runs for the first time in six years and Bo Jackson hit a two-run homer as Kansas City batted around in successive innings. The Royals scored seven runs in the second inning off Ray Hayward and four in the third off Dwayne Henry. Winner Bret Saberhagen scattered four hits in seven innings.

Blue Jays 4, White Sox 2

Rookie Pat Borders tied the score with a solo homer in the seventh inning and the winning run scored later in the inning on pitcher Dave LaPoint's throwing error. Winner John Cerutti scattered five hits over eight innings before giving way to Tom Henke and David Wells.

After Borders opened the seventh with his fourth home run, Sil Campanuso doubled on Dave LaPoint's next pitch and scored when LaPoint threw away Nelson Liriano's bunt. Liriano, who wound up on second, was sacrificed to third and scored on Lloyd Moseby's sacrifice fly.

Orioles 3, Angels 2

Larry Sheets hit a tie-breaking two-run single in the eighth inning as Baltimore snapped its latest losing streak at four games.

Coke had tied the game 3-3 when Adrian Jones doubled in James Ebron in the fourth inning, but the Lions came back to score the go-ahead run in the bottom of the fifth.

Chad Langley had two hits to lead the Lions while Jones and Jacob Zonn had two hits apiece for Coke.

Sportsworld went ahead early thanks to a nine-run third inning and then held off a late charge by Clark Construction to take a 13-12 win Sunday in a North State Little League baseball game.

Mike Worthington doubled in three runs and Kevin Smith doubled in two more to key the third inning for Sportsworld that put them ahead 9-5.

But Clark crept back into the game, scoring four runs in the fourth, keyed by Kory Welch's two-run dou-

Waltrip Earns 600 Win

Brett Bodine. Then, some of his challengers began heading for the pits to get set up for the final 30 laps.

Then, on Lap 387, Geoff Bodine's Chevrolet rolled to a stop on the apron in the fourth turn, bringing out the record-tying 13th caution flag of the 400-lap race. When the green flag came down on Lap 391, Waltrip beat Wallace to the start-finish line with Alan Kulwicki and Brett Bodine giving chase.

Waltrip opened up a wide lead over Wallace for seven of the last nine laps. Wallace closed the gap near the finish and tried to drive inside of the leader at the end, stirring up some infield grass and dust but only finishing second by two car lengths.

"I was hoping the last caution would never come out because I was catching him pretty good before that," Wallace said. "We just didn't need that last caution. That's two races in two years that I should have won here."

Wallace blew an engine at last year's Coca-Cola 600 just as he appeared headed for victory.

Rick Wilson, who started 10th but was in the lead and charging toward the first victory of his career, blew a tire in the backstretch on Lap 352, bounced off the outside wall and caught fire, bringing out the caution flag for 10 laps.

"It would have been about like Rusty, but it would have been somebody there to contend with," Waltrip said. "But I think we could have handled everybody fine. I told the guys all day long, 'I got the car to do it with. If you get me in the lead, I'll hold on to it.'"

That turned the race into a 40-lap dash before a sellout crowd. There were 43 lead changes among 18 drivers, tying another NASCAR record for most drivers holding the lead.

Tire wear blamed on heat contributed to several accidents and many of the pit stops as crews whose cars were still in the race tried to secure tires from those teams whose cars had been taken out of competition.

Most of the cars running at the end looked more like survivors from a demolition derby. Points leader Dale Earnhardt had a cracked windshield, but that was the least of his problems.

For the second straight day, Earnhardt nudged Geoff Bodine and sent his car into a spin in Lap 58. NASCAR officials penalized Earnhardt five laps for his conduct and he was never in contention.

"I felt like that was unjust," said Earnhardt, who was greeted by a resounding chorus of boos when he was introduced prior to the race. "Five laps was more than they ever gave out before. If you look at the tapes, you'll see I didn't try to wreck him."

Bodine returned to the track, 69 laps behind, with his hood and front panels missing.

"This is getting kind of hard to accept," said car owner Rick Hendrick, who also owns the cars of Waltrip and Ken Schrader. "We've got a lot of sponsors and crew who've worked hard, and in two days your cars get taken out for no apparent reason. ... I guess, evidently, the infraction was so flagrant today that they had to give him five laps."

In Saturday's 300-mile race, Earnhardt nudged Bodine, sending him into a spin and putting him out of contention for that championship.

Two drivers were transported to a nearby hospital after their cars wrecked, and 63-year-old Bud Moore, crew chief for Brett Bodine's car, also went to the hospital after Bodine hit him while trying to brake during a pit stop.

Moore suffered a broken right leg and had it placed in a cast.

Harry Gant, whose hard luck is legendary on the Winston Cup circuit, had two breaks in his left leg after he wrecked his car, and Neil Bonnett was taken to the hospital for treatment of multiple contusions after his car hit the wall in turn two. Bonnett suffered a broken leg last year at Charlotte.

Piniella Refuses Challenge Of Yankees' GM Position

By Steve Buckley

(c) 1988, The Hartford Courant

SEATTLE — Four months ago, Lou Piniella said that being general manager of the New York Yankees was a challenge, that the job offered him a chance to be a more well-rounded baseball man.

Now, Piniella is saying that being general manager of the Yankees is no fun. Sunday, he resigned.

"The job's a headache," Piniella

Piniella still is general manager. Reached by telephone at his New York home Sunday, Quinn, 51, said that he could not speak on the record.

Greene also said that Yankees scouts Gene Michael and Stan Williams will have greater input on baseball decisions.

Both Piniella and Martin went to great lengths to shoot down reports that Piniella resigned because he was unable to get along with Martin, for whom he once played. Still, Piniella and Martin have had their spats this season. In April, after Martin publicly criticized Rafael Santana after the shortstop made an error in a 17-9 loss to the Toronto Blue Jays, Piniella countered with a statement saying that Santana would continue to be the Yankees' shortstop, and that the entire Yankees brain trust—including Martin—had agreed with the decision to obtain Santana from the New York Mets during the off-season.

"Billy's not the easiest person in the world to get along with," Piniella said, "but there was no friction."

"The reason I'm resigning, the biggest reason, is that I've been on the field for 26 years, and it's difficult to get acclimated to an office and the administration of a ballclub. I didn't feel comfortable with it."

"You take a look at other general managers in baseball. Not many of them are former players — Al Rosen (San Francisco Giants), Tom Grieve (Texas Rangers), Dick Balderson (Seattle Mariners), a couple of others are former players. Most of them are business people, desk people."

"At times it didn't seem like baseball to me," Piniella said. "I was too close to the action before. In this job here, I was at the ballpark but I seemed so distant. It was tough for me to go into the office and be that close but be that far away."

Said Martin, "He was just beautiful to work with. Managers and general managers also have their differences, but anytime I had a problem with a player he was Johnny-on-the-spot."

Martin also praised Piniella for his off-season acquisitions, saying that

Bob Quinn

Santana's play at shortstop has improved, that catcher Don Slaught's record "speaks for itself," and that left-hander Lee Guetterman, now pitching at Triple-A Columbus, Ohio, "is coming along real well and could be back with us soon."

Piniella, who managed the Yankees for two seasons before becoming general manager, is still under contract to the Yankees. Club sources said that Steinbrenner had been pressuring Piniella to sign a new three-year contract as general manager, but Piniella never signed the contract and thus was continuing to be paid under the terms of his managerial contract, which expires at the end of this season.

Piniella's decision led to immediate speculation that he would resurface as a major league manager. He is a close friend of former Yankees General Manager Woody Woodward, who now runs the Philadelphia Phillies, and Piniella's name has often been whispered in connection with managerial positions in Kansas City and Seattle.

"I'd like to manage again, and there's a very good chance I'll be managing again," Piniella said. "But I'd like to channel my energies into what I can do for this team through the remainder of the year."

said Sunday. "I'll stay in the organization, but I'm resigning as general manager. I plan to stay with the team, and I'll do some scouting, but I won't be involved in the day-to-day baseball operation."

With that, the Yankees became the only first-place team in recent history to lose its general manager during the season, and added to the growing list of off-the-field activities that have been as much a part of this Yankees season as Dave Winfield's book and Billy Martin's brush with stucco at a topless bar in Texas.

Even the announcement of Piniella's resignation had a ring of calamity to it. Speaking by telephone from his New Jersey home, Piniella, 44, said that he was stepping down and that Bob Quinn, who as vice president in charge of baseball administration has served as Piniella's assistant, would be assuming the duties of general manager. However, Yankees spokesman Harvey Greene later said that no decisions would be made on a replacement until Piniella meets with principal Yankees owner George Steinbrenner. According to Greene, "no titles will change" until Steinbrenner and Piniella meet, at which time they will decide what Piniella's new duties will be.

In other words, while Piniella was in New Jersey saying that Quinn is the general manager, a Yankees spokesman was in Seattle saying that

Resignation Won't Distract

SEATTLE (AP) — New York Yankees manager Billy Martin says his division-leading team won't be "distracted" by former manager Lou Piniella's surprise announcement that he's stepping down as general manager.

"We've been distracted before many times," Martin said. "This is not going to distract us."

The players learned of Piniella's announcement from members of the media Sunday night and then went out and beat the Seattle Mariners 7-3.

They won two of three games in Seattle before moving to Oakland to meet the American League West-leading Athletics in a three-game series beginning tonight. The Yankees lead the AL East.

American, Soviet Youth Planning Musical Summit

By STEPHANIE NANO
Associated Press Writer

OBERLIN, Ohio (AP) — While President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev meet this week, dozens of young musicians in the United States and the Soviet Union are tuning up for a musical summit this summer.

The 110-member American-Soviet Youth Orchestra makes its debut in August, the start of a month-long concert swing through five U.S. cities and three in the Soviet Union.

"It's such a great opportunity to make music and travel in the United States and travel in Russia," says Caroline Coade, 20, of San Diego.

Ms. Coade, who plays the viola and graduates Monday from Oberlin College, is one of 58 Americans and 52 Soviets, ages 17 to 23, selected for the orchestra. Twelve participants are from Oberlin College.

The orchestra will assemble at Oberlin's campus July 16 for rehearsals and workshops to acquaint them with each other's social and cultural traditions.

After that, the orchestra will have its premiere Aug. 5 at the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington under the baton of Zubin Mehta, music director of the New York Philharmonic.

The orchestra's repertoire includes works by American and Russian composers. The New York performance also will feature the world premiere of a piece by Soviet composer Edison Denisov.

The inspiration behind the orchestra came from a luncheon attended by Oberlin President S. Frederick Starr, an expert on Soviet affairs, and officials of AFS Intercultural Programs, an international exchange group based in New York, said Grace Kennan Warnecke, the orchestra's executive director.

She raised the idea with the Soviet Ministry of Culture last year and found "it was greeted with far more enthusiasm on both sides than anticipated ... which is not to say it still isn't hard."

Ms. Warnecke said a joint orchestra wouldn't have been possible before glasnost, Gorbachev's policy of openness, although separate tours have been permitted.

"What's different about this is we're creating a brand new institution from scratch," said Ms. Warnecke, who lived in the Soviet Union periodically as a child and attended fifth-grade in a Soviet school while her father, George F. Kennan, was U.S. ambassador.

She said the orchestra could be ongoing, but efforts are concentrated on this year's program.

"If glasnost becomes a complete success, increasing openness to the point that we don't need a Soviet-American orchestra ... (we'll) put ourselves out of business and that's all the better," she said.

The American musicians from 24 states were chosen from 500 who auditioned either in person or with tapes. Their expenses will be paid and they'll receive a small allowance. Negotiations are continuing, but most of the money to cover costs in the United States is coming from foundations, Ms. Warnecke said.

In the Soviet Union, the orchestra will be sponsored by the Ministry of Culture and Gosconsert.

The trip to the Soviet Union will be especially important for Claudia Lasareff-Mironoff, 23, who is studying for a master's degree in viola at Northwestern University. Her parents left the Soviet Union as children and emigrated to the United States after World War II.

"I think it's really important that we share musical ideas," said Ms. Lasareff-Mironoff, who speaks Russian.

Calvin Lewis, who studies the violin at the Cleveland Institute of Music, doesn't know any Russian.

"Music is a language in itself. I don't think there'll be a problem," said Lewis, 18, of Hephzibah, Ga.

During the orchestra's 2½ weeks here, the musicians will rehearse with Larry Rachleff, Oberlin conductor and music director, and Leonid Nikolaev for the Moscow Conservatory of Music.

After the opening concert, the musicians will perform in New York City on Aug. 7; Milwaukee, Aug. 9; San Francisco, Aug. 11 and Trenton, N.J., Aug. 14. The Soviet tour will open and close with concerts in Moscow, with four concerts in two other cities in between.

'Other Daryl Likes Arkansas

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — John Volstad, who plays the ever-silent "Other brother Daryl" on CBS-TV's "Newhart" comedy series, wants movies made in Arkansas.

Motion picture production should have "runaway" success in the Arkansas Ozarks, Volstad said at a reception here.

Volstad, who is prohibited by his contract from talking on camera, made the comments after television crews left Thursday night's reception sponsored by the Northwest Arkansas Motion Picture Commission.

Volstad pantomimed for a television crew that he wanted to get in some golf and fishing while spending the weekend in the Ozarks.

Show Returns

MIDDLEBURY, Vt. (AP) — Garrison Keillor's "Prairie Home Companion," public radio's popular show, will return to the air Saturday in a live broadcast from New York's Radio City Music Hall.

And the one-time special, which made its debut last weekend at Middlebury College, reflects Keillor's move from Minnesota to New York.

The show finds the endless cornfields shadowed by skyscrapers and all those bachelor farmers rubbing elbows with the homeless.

and many fans responded with shouts of "Pink Floyd."

"All of them are going to hell," said David Tribb, 34, who carried a wooden cross and was one of eight members of a college ministry preaching to about 1,000 concert-goers outside the stadium Saturday night.

The concert, the first permitted at the 66-year-old stadium at Ohio State University, drew about 62,000 fans. One man collapsed while waiting to enter the stadium, but there were no reports of serious injury.

More than 160 Franklin County sheriff's deputies and university and city police officers were on hand to control the crowd. Security officers checked concert-goers to prevent them from taking alcohol inside the stadium.

CBS Documentary Shows War Isn't Over For Vets

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — It would seem, in view of the much-visited Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington and the popularity of Vietnam movies in the theaters and on TV, that America has finally welcomed the Vietnam veteran home.

But as reported in the powerful CBS documentary "The Wall Within" this Thursday, as many as 1 million Vietnam veterans have yet to leave behind a war that still terrorizes them every day, and little has been done to help them. Some have committed suicide and abused their families. Others suffer flashbacks, nightmares and withdrawal.

CBS went to Washington state, where many veterans who suffer from Post Traumatic Stress Disorder have fled. The dense forest, perhaps reminiscent of the jungles of Vietnam, shelter them from a world where they cannot speak of the atrocities they witnessed.

"They literally took to the hills," CBS anchor Dan Rather said in an interview. Rather interviewed some of the veterans and narrates the documentary, which was produced and directed by Paul and Holly Fine and written by Perry Wolff.

"I don't want to have to be nobody all my life," says Terry Bradley, one of the veterans interviewed for the documentary. "I'd want to be able to come home, with some dignity."

Bradley's reward for his service in Vietnam was overmedication as a paranoid schizophrenic that left him with organic brain damage. Other veterans tell of facing rejection and indifference when they returned from combat.

"This hour that we do, this is not the movie 'Platoon.' This is real stuff," said Rather. "These are real people struggling to recover from real wounds."

Another of the veterans interviewed describes how he almost killed his mother when she woke him one morning and he thought she was the enemy.

Some of the veterans are beginning to deal with PTSD in the only way they can, by talking to other veterans in rap groups sponsored by Vietnam veterans centers, many of which will soon be closed due to lack of funding.

One reason some of the veterans talked to CBS was because Rather had been in Vietnam as a reporter.

"They won't even consider talking to somebody who didn't go to Vietnam," he said. "It was slow going to even get them to talk to us. So my reporting from Vietnam was a help." Rather said he also had to listen to a lot of complaints about how the war was reported.

One veteran took Rather on a flashlight visit to the small, unlit room he keeps at the back of his basement where the walls are covered with rough drawings, like a cave-dweller's, depicting his Vietnam nightmares.

"As very young people they were plunged into a green jungle hell," said Rather. "They saw terrible and horrific things. They saw these things done to others, done to themselves. Then suddenly they are jerked back and dumped back into a country where in many cases they were despised, humiliated, criticized, and still very young. Is it any wonder that they suffered a psychological wound that is deep and abiding?"

Another veteran suffers from a symptom of PTSD called "hypervigilance." He recalls with great difficulty watching a buddy die on the deck of an aircraft carrier because he was not alert enough. So he patrols incessantly at night, driving city streets or back roads in his truck.

Mike Rice suffers from flashbacks. Viewers, like Rather, will be moved to reach out physically to Rice as he breaks down while he struggles to describe the aftermath of an enemy attack.

"I noticed the sergeant kinda laying over some of the pipes over there. I knew he was hurt, and he'd always kinda come around and showed us a picture of his family — his wife, his little boy and little girl. He was just laying over there, and I thought, God, no one's helpin' this guy, and I ran over there to help him and reached down and grabbed him and he was, um, he was, um, he was blown in half. He was b-b-blown in half. It was just his top half. It was just his top half left. ..." He breaks down into sobs.

"He's healing," assures Rather. "He's healing because until now he couldn't tell this story to anyone. He had his flashbacks alone."

CBS seems to have helped the healing somewhat by bringing three of the veterans, Bradley, Rice and John Michaelson, to the Vietnam Veterans Memorial where they wept as they found the names of buddies they lost in Vietnam. It is these moving scenes, shot just before dawn, that conclude the documentary, to the strains of "Appalachian Spring."

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKJ8763 ♥Void ♦KQ542 ♣A
Your partner deals and opens four hearts. What action do you take?
A.—A hand that, at first glance, needed little for slam now might not even produce game, especially at this vulnerability. Since partner cannot hold two aces, you have one sure red-suit loser and who knows how many others, especially if the opening lead is a club. You have useful cards for partner. Pass, and hope he makes it.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AKJ72 ♥6 ♦Q876 ♣A83
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♠ Pass 2 NT Pass
What do you bid now?
A.—Even if you play four-card majors, a bid of three spades now would promise a six-card suit. Suggest an unbalanced hand by bidding three diamonds. Don't worry about the quality of your suit. You are simply showing your distribution so that you and your partner can proceed intelligently to the best contract.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AKJ72 ♥63 ♦Q87 ♣A83
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♠ Pass 2 NT Pass
What do you bid now?
A.—Don't develop a fixation about your five-card spade suit and heart weakness. Show a minimum balanced hand by raising to three no trump. With his no trump jump, partner promised a heart stopper and a balanced hand of 13-15 points.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ652 ♥6 ♦Q876 ♣A43
The bidding has proceeded:

North East South West
Pass Pass 1 ♠ Pass
2 NT Pass
What action do you take?
A.—Since partner is a passed hand, he has, at most, 12 points and game is very unlikely. However, that does not relieve you of the responsibility of trying to find the best spot. Bid three diamonds, intending to pass whatever partner bids next unless it is forcing.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AJ93 ♥Q754 ♦J102 ♣62
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
1 ♠ Pass
What do you bid now?
A.—Unless partner is able to jump on the next round, you have enough for only one bid. That does not mean that you should depart from the normal principle of showing your suits up-the-line. Bid one heart, even though the quality of your spade suit is better.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J9643 ♥A ♦A986 ♣A102
The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♠ Pass 2 ♣ Pass
What do you bid now?
A.—The problem with bidding two diamonds is what do you do if partner next bids two hearts? A preference to three clubs now shows a better hand than you have. You can avoid most rebid problems by raising to three clubs immediately.

'Ship Of Poison' Finds A Port

GENOA, Italy (AP) — For 15 months, the freighter known as the "ship of poison" roamed the seas trying to find a port that would dispose of its 2,200 tons of Italian-produced toxic chemical wastes.

Djibouti, Venezuela, Syria and Greece were tried and refused.

Now, the Syrian freighter Zanoobia has come full circle. It docked Sunday after Genoa officials agreed to accept and incinerate the toxic cargo.

"The condition of my crew is very bad," Capt. Ahmed Tabalo said after the ship docked. "For three months we have not entered a port. Now we are all nauseous and sick to the stomach."

Lawyers for the ship's owner, Tabalo Shipping, say two people have died, possibly after being contaminated by the wastes — a boy in Venezuela and a Zanoobia crewman during the voyage to Italy.

Port official Giuseppe Telmon said officials would begin a chemical analysis today to determine what is in the approximately 12,000 drums of waste and how to deal with it. Workers, meanwhile, will begin to unload the ship.

The freighter, which the Italian press is calling "the ship of poison," arrived in Genoa port seven hours after leaving the northern Italian port of Carrara. It had been moored outside that port since April 26, seeking permission to unload the cargo originally shipped from Carrara in February 1987.

All 18 members of the ship's crew made the voyage Sunday, including three who had been hospitalized Saturday near Carrara with symptoms blamed on exposure to the wastes. Two other crewmen were released from the hospital this month.

Francesco Rizzuto, a lawyer for Tabalo Shipping, said a group of Italian chemical companies paid the Milan-based company Jelly Wax about 36 cents a pound to dispose of the waste. He said the company instead shipped the waste out of the country.

The waste was sent first to Djibouti, in East Africa, and then Venezuela, Syria and Greece before returning to Italy.

The cargo was unloaded in Venezuela, but a young boy died reportedly after playing near an opened drum, and the government ordered the waste shipped out of the country, a lawyer for the Zanoobia's owners said.

It was sent to Syria and then on to Greece. After being refused in both places, the ship sailed to Carrara.

The Genoa port commissioner said the wastes will be burned at a local incinerator. Port sources said that will cost 72 cents to $1.86 a pound.

S. Koreans Stage Anti-U.S. Protest

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Thousands of anti-government students marched through the city today yelling "Yankee go home" and burned a huge American flag before police broke up the demonstration with tear gas.

Once the giant U.S. flag was set ablaze, police fired tear gas from armored vans and hundreds of riot troops in green combat fatigues and visored helmets charged protesters in front of Seoul's central railway station.

About 10,000 protesters had gathered outside the station after marching with the coffin of a student who set himself on fire in an earlier anti-government protest. Police did not intervene during the peaceful four-mile march.

South Korea has during the past two weeks been hit by a wave of violent anti-government and anti-U.S. protests by radical students who are calling for the overthrow of President Roh Tae-woo and removal of the 42,000 U.S. troops on their soil.

Roh, a former general who took office in February after winning an election two months earlier, ordered a crackdown Friday to halt protests. He said the radicals were threatening the Olympic Games to be held in Seoul in September.

John Paul Tries To Expand Church Influence With New Cardinals

VATICAN CITY (AP) — In naming a new batch of cardinals, Pope John Paul II seeks to expand his church's influence in the Soviet Union and China. But U.S. Roman Catholics may be disappointed in their share of the 25 new red hats.

Two new American cardinals are on the list of new "princes" from 18 countries announced by the pope on Sunday: Archbishop Edmund C. Szoka, 60, of Detroit and James A. Hickey, 67, of Washington, D.C.

Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro said the passing over of Los Angeles Archbishop Roger Mahony, 52, was the "great exclusion" among other possible American candidates.

He said Mahony was bypassed because of his relative youth and is likely to become a cardinal at a later time.

The appointment of Szoka and Hickey will bring to five the number of active U.S. cardinals. The others are Bernard Law of Boston, Joseph Bernardin of Chicago and John O'Connor of New York.

The new cardinals will be installed at a June 28 Vatican session and bring to 161 the membership in the College of Cardinals, the church's most important governing body. Cardinals under age 80 — now 120 — elect a pope's successor.

John Paul, making the announcement during a Mass in St. Peter's Basilica, said his choice of new cardinals underlines the universality of the church: "In fact, among the new cardinals there are prelates from every continent." Navarro said the Polish-born pope was seeking to bolster church influence by naming cardinals from Lithuania, the Roman Catholic stronghold in the Soviet Union, and Hong Kong, the British colony that passes to Chinese Communist rule in 1997.

"These are not symbolic choices but they are options for the future," Navarro told reporters.

The Lithuanian prelate, Vincentas Sladkevicius, 68, was "impeded" by Soviet authorities from performing his religious duties and held under virtual house arrest from 1963 to 1982, the Vatican says.

Sladkevicius is an historic choice, the first publicly named cardinal from Lithuania, which was an independent republic before World War II. At least 2 million of Lithuania's 3.5 million people are Roman Catholics.

There has been widespread speculation that another Lithuanian is the cardinal the pope chose "in pectore" — in his heart — in 1979.

Sladkevicius will be just the second resident cardinal in the Soviet Union, following the elevation of Julijans Vaivods of Latvia in 1985.

John Paul has publicly disclosed that on at least two occasions he has been refused permission to visit Lithuania.

Dukakis Meets With Black Backers; Bush Works On Fall Strategy

By LAURA KING
Associated Press Writer

Democratic presidential front-runner Michael Dukakis, beginning a drive to capture black votes in November, was meeting with black backers from around the country today. But Jesse Jackson reminded his rival that his help will be needed, declaring, "It's going to take both of us to win."

Certain Republican nominee George Bush, at his summer home in Maine, was marching in a Memorial Day parade today and continuing a weeklong strategy session with aides and GOP officials.

The vice president's advisers are working on ways to shore up his standing against Dukakis, who has been consistently out-polling Bush in public opinion surveys.

The Bush camp indicated over the weekend that the vice president would begin attacking the Massachusetts governor more aggressively and moving away from President Reagan on some issues.

With the Democratic primary season heading into its final week, Dukakis and Jackson both campaigned Sunday in New Jersey, one of four states staging contests on June 7. The New Jersey race, plus primaries in California, New Mexico and Montana, offers a total of 466 delegates.

Dukakis, with more than 1,700 delegates, is within striking distance of the 2,081 needed to nominate, while Jackson trails with less than 1,000 delegates.

The Massachusetts governor expects to clinch the delegates he needs with the final round of primaries and a continuing stream of commitments from "super delegates," who vote at the convention by virtue of their party or elective office.

Jackson is signalling that he knows it's almost the end of the road for his presidential bid.

"When the race is over June 7, life goes on June 8," he said as he campaigned in New Jersey. But his pride was evident as he told a crowd: "We should never forget this campaign."

And Jackson has been making it clear that even if the nomination is out of reach, he expects to play a major part in shaping the Democratic platform. He is also indicating that the massive black support he has garnered in primary contests to date shouldn't be taken for granted by the Democratic nominee.

"It's going to take the both of us to win," said Jackson, referring to himself and Dukakis. "Together, we're gonna win."

Dukakis took a boat cruise with environmentalists, who showed him polluted waters off New Jersey on Sunday. Last summer, New Jersey beaches were closed on several occasions by pollution, including sewage and hospital waste that washed ashore.

"It's pretty disgusting," said the governor on viewing trash and sludge in the water off Asbury Park.

But Dukakis acknowledged that he himself had been slow in starting a cleanup of filthy Boston Harbor. The Environmental Protection Agency finally got a court order to speed things up.

"Nobody is without sin," the governor said.

Dukakis' record as governor of Massachusetts has been coming under close scrutiny, and some backers of Bush say there's plenty of potential ammunition. New Hampshire Gov. John Sununu, who met with Bush over the weekend at Kennebunkport, cited "management failures of the Dukakis administration" and said those would become campaign issues.

Bush, in turn, has come under fire for weeks from both Jackson and Dukakis over the administration's dealings with Panama's Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega.

Jackson was on the attack again over the weekend, suggesting that Reagan wanted a deal to get Noriega out of power to silence him before the Moscow summit, which began Sunday.

Dukakis marked the start of the summit by saying he believed the Soviet Union's economic problems led Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev to agree to arms reductions.

"I think that is the driving force behind this, the recognition on his part that they're falling further and further behind, they're losing the economic race, the technological race and that they cannot be a great nation unless they significantly reduce the amount of resources they're putting into the military," he said in an interview with the British Broadcasting Corp.

The interview was taped last week while Dukakis campaigned in California. He was heading back to the state for more campaigning later this week.

Attorney General Edwin Meese III's legal problems continued to dog the Bush campaign. White House chief of staff Howard Baker said Sunday that President Reagan still has confidence in Meese but believes Meese's legal problems could harm Bush politically "for the moment and to some degree."

"But I think that he too would urge you to wait and see how all this unfolds and develops," Baker added in the interview with NBC's "Meet the Press."
