Eligible Voters Denied Ballots In Pitt Runoff

By JOHN BARE
Reflector Staff Writer

Due to a mistake by precinct workers, two people in Greenville precinct No. 7 that were eligible to vote in the county commissioner runoff race between D.D. Garrett and James H. Dupree were not allowed to vote, election officials said Monday.

Garrett defeated Dupree by two votes — 1,171 to 1,169 — in their May 31 runoff for a seat in Consolidated District A. Because the margin of victory was less than 1 percent of the total number of votes cast, the Pitt County Board of Elections honored a request by Dupree and will conduct a recount Wednesday.

At a meeting Monday to discuss procedures for conducting the recount, election officials agreed they will not make a decision concerning the voting error unless it will affect the result of the recount.

If the race is decided by less than three votes, or there is a tie, either candidate could protest the irregularity by filing a written complaint. If there is a tie, the executive committee of the Pitt County Democratic Party would have to decide the winner.

"In this election it turns out to be significant because the loser lost by two votes," said Margaret Hardee, elections board supervisor. "We don't know how the two people would have voted, but if both of them had voted for the loser, it would have been a tie."

Dupree said both Carolyn F. James and William T. James of Greenville had voted for him in the May 3 primary and he feels they would have voted for him in the runoff had they been given proper instructions at the polls. Dupree, of Bethel, has not yet filed a written complaint.

Consolidated District A is made up of the Bethel, Belvoir and Carolina precincts, and parts of seven Greenville precincts — including a portion of No. 7. Not every voter in No. 7 was eligible to vote in Consolidated District A.

Because Dupree received 19 votes in No. 7 in the primary and Garrett received none, Dupree said he was suspicious when the results of the runoff showed no one in No. 7 voted for either candidate.

"That's what prompted me to say, 'Where's my vote?' It seemed rather odd," Dupree said.

Dupree contacted Mrs. Hardee and examined a list of everyone that voted in precinct No. 7 in the runoff and spotted the Jameses, whom he knew to be supporters. Mrs. Hardee checked the list of voters and verified that they were eligible to vote in Consolidated District A.

The Board of Elections was experimenting with electronic machines at precinct No. 7, and precinct worker Elizabeth Deal said it would have been her job to determine if a voter was eligible to vote in Consolidated District A. She would have then filled out a qualified-to-vote form which the voters would have presented to the precinct worker in charge of instructing people how to use the machines.

Mrs. Deal said she inadvertently did not give qualified-to-vote forms to either Mrs. James or her son, William.

Edgecombe Drops Park Plan

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

TARBORO — In a surprise move that brought a standing ovation and cheers, Edgecombe County commissioners Monday decided not to offer the county as the location for a proposed low-level nuclear waste disposal site or a comprehensive hazardous waste treatment plant.

But Edgecombe's state Rep. Joe Mavretic said, "We're not out of the pot, we're right back in it," along with the other 99 counties in the state. The problem of hazardous waste is "not going to go away," he said.

However, "I was very, very pleased" with the Edgecombe board's action, Charles Gaskins, chairman of the Pitt County Board of Commissioners, said Monday night. "We thought that was not good planning for our region."

But Gaskins said Pitt commissioners will continue with plans for a task force to study the impact of the proposed waste site on the area.

Edgecombe commissioners last month publicly proposed that the county volunteer to host the state's low-level radioactive waste site and the comprehensive hazardous waste treatment plant.

At a public meeting to announce the proposal, county officials, who suggested that the waste park would be located at the eastern edge of the county near the Pitt County line, said millions of dollars in incentives from the state would come to the county if the sites were located there.

Billed as part of a public education process, a public hearing was held on the proposal at Edgecombe Community College's Tarboro campus on May 26. That hearing drew more than 600 people, most of whom seemed to oppose the waste park idea.

And Pitt County commissioners adopted a resolution asking the state to delay any action on considering Edgecombe for the site of the nuclear and hazardous waste facilities until the waste park's impact on the surrounding area could be determined.

The Pitt board also asked East Carolina University's Regional Development Institute to supply the legwork and expertise needed, and asked commissioners in surrounding counties — including Edgecombe — to appoint three members to a task force to oversee the study.

The second public hearing on the waste park plan by Edgecombe officials was scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Monday. And again, more than 600 people filled the Edgecombe Community College auditorium and student lounge, where television monitors had been set up to handle the overflow crowd.

When the hearing had not started by 7:32, the more than 500 people in the auditorium began clapping in unison.

And when board Chairman Tom Bardin Jr. and the other commissioners walked onto the stage moments later, they were greeted with boos from the audience.

Bardin, reading from a prepared statement, told the audience the board had proposed siting the waste facilities in Edgecombe "because of the economic benefits" to the county. And he said commissioners, after study, "felt" the low-level nuclear waste and hazardous waste treatment sites would "not be detrimental to the people or the environment."

Again Bardin was greeted by boos.

But then Bardin said that, since "It appears the citizens of Edgecombe County do not favor offering our county as a site, the board will not offer Edgecombe County as a site for

Pitt Had Chance To Share

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Edgecombe County officials Monday — in what appears to be a last-minute effort to stem opposition — asked Pitt County commissioners if they had any interest in joining Edgecombe in hosting a low-level radioactive waste site and comprehensive hazardous waste treatment facility and sharing millions of dollars in state incentives.

Charles Gaskins, chairman of the Pitt board, said state "Senator (Bob) Martin called me and made an offer of a joint venture ... that the so-called waste park be partially in Pitt and partially in Edgecombe and that an authority be appointed from the two counties to operate it."

Martin, Gaskins said, "told me he was requested by the Edgecombe folks to see if the board had any interest in something like that."

Pitt's commissioners, "of course, ... refused to even listen to any such thing," Gaskins said.

"We told him (Martin) we considered it to be an insult to be asked

Computer Costs Upsetting Council

By GREG LAUDICK
Reflector Staff Writer

Some members of the Greenville City Council are a "bit" concerned about the expansion of the city computer system.

A request to use $28,140 in unspent 1987-88 budget funds for the purchase of additional disk storage space has members of the council wondering what future computer-related requests are ahead.

"I'm concerned about where we are now and where we are going," said council member Lorraine Shinn regarding the IBM System 38 which the city acquired last year.

"Nobody told us we were going to have to buy a $25,000 battery. Nobody told us we were going to spend $12,000 on (computer room) air conditioning," said Ms. Shinn.

Following a discussion on the subject, the council voted to have city staffers prepare a report outlining what computer equipment the city now has, and what computer needs and equipment the staff foresees in the future.

"I would like a report before we make any more adjustments to our budget (regarding computer equipment), a report on what we've got invested, what needs are projected, and what it's going to take to get us up and operating," Mrs. Shinn said. "I want a realistic view of what it's going to take to bring us up to where we ought to be."

Finance Director Ron Kimble told the council that a basic computer system was bought by the city which would have a great ability for expansion.

"At the time we purchased it, we knew we were purchasing the lowest end of a highly upgradeable system and somewhere down the road, we knew we were going to have to add new storage space and memory," Kimble said.

"It's clear to my understanding that we would be basically able to operate and satisfy our basic data processing needs without these sorts of requests for awhile," Carter said. "My concern is we're just getting started and we need to know where we are, we need to know where we're going."

Council member Rufus Huggins also expressed a desire to receive an "overall picture" of the current computer situation.

Another council member, Inez Fridley, said it is important to realize that change is inevitable when dealing with computers.

Growing

The Fred Webb Inc. firm of Greenville climbed sharply in its rating among the 100 top North Carolina companies for 1988. The firm, which is 58th in the current statewide ranking, rose from 75th place in 1987.

The Webb firm, listed in the state report as a "distributor of feed grains," specializes in buying, storing and selling agricultural grain products. It falls within the $50 million to $99 million statistical category of revenues for a one-year period.

The firm is headquartered in Greenville and has branches in several eastern North Carolina locations.

Textile companies took four of the top 10 spots in an annual ranking of North Carolina's largest private companies by the Arthur Andersen & Co. of Charlotte.

Greensboro's Cone Mills led the list. Charlotte construction company McDevitt & Street was second, followed by Golden Corral Corp. of Raleigh in third.

Pitt Will Set Up Task Force To Foster Recycling Policy

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Pitt County Commissioners on Monday agreed to form a countywide solid waste task force to foster the development of a comprehensive county recycling program and to educate the public on ways to conserve, reduce waste and manage waste property.

The joint county-municipal task force on solid waste would act as a vehicle to help create public awareness of solid waste management problems.

County Engineer Phil Dickerson, who oversees the county's solid waste program, including the landfill, suggested that such a group could help educate the public on the need to recycle as much material as possible and reduce the amount of waste going into a landfill.

"There will have to be drastic changes in the solid waste program in the next five years," Dickerson told the board. "We'll have to spend three times the money on the landfill that we are spending now" after new state regulations force any landfill operating after February 1993 to be lined with plastic.

In an effort to limit the amount of waste going into the landfill in the future, Dickerson said "we are going to be encouraging more separation (recycling)."

Inez Fridley, a member of the Greenville City Council who said she was speaking in "no official capacity," encouraged the commissioners to "look at a joint committee to begin to help us with recycling."

Mrs. Fridley suggested that such a task force could bring "peer pressure

(and) help educate people about solid waste management."

Michael Corcoran, a representative of the N.C. Wildlife Federation, asked the commissioners Monday to reconsider a resolution opposing the creation of a 30,000-acre national wildlife refuge along the Roanoke River in parts of Martin, Bertie and Halifax counties.

Corcoran, who said the wildlife federation is "the largest conservation organization in the state," with 40,000 members — 1,027 of them in Pitt County — told commissioners, "your action (in opposing the refuge) makes it much more difficult" for 1st District congressman Walter Jones of Farmville to support the proposal.

But Charles Gaskins told Corcoran, "Our concern is over eroding the tax base" of Martin and the other counties.

Council Backs Greenways Plan

By GREG LAUDICK
Reflector Staff Writer

City officials want to be sure efforts are made to keep the green in Greenville.

Members of the City Council, at a workshop session Monday, unanimously voted to operate with a commitment to a Greenways Resolution approved by the council in July of 1984.

The resolution calls for the Greenways plan to be formulated and incorporated in all long-term and short-term planning projects for the city.

Greenways can be described as linear parks within towns and cities and are usually found along flood-prone waterways. Trails are often established, providing recreational opportunities for walking, jogging and bicycling.

Raleigh has the state's oldest and largest greenway system, involving 800 acres of land and 27 miles of trails.

Representatives of the Greenville

Environmental Advisory Commission appeared before the council Monday with a slide presentation featuring areas of Greenville which might be considered for protection under a Greenways plan.

Commission member Bernard Kane said that establishing environmental corridors within the city would protect areas of both recreational and aesthetic benefit from runaway land development.

"One way of doing that is taking land that is difficult to develop and preserve it as wildlife corridors and hiking and bikeways, generally those areas that are floodplains and wetlands," he said.

"We could keep a certain aspect of Greenville that we are rapidly losing," he added.

Among the areas Kane said which might be affected by the policy are those which form the 100-year flood zones of Green Mill Run, Hardee Creek, Reedy Branch and the Tar River.

Conley Wins NIE Contest

The department of exceptional children at D.H. Conley High School has been named the winner of the Teacher of the Year contest sponsored by the Newspaper in Education staff of The Daily Reflector.

In its first year, the contest honors "a teacher or teachers who have actually used the newspaper in the classroom," said Gigi Walter, an NIE coordinator at the Reflector.

"We're trying to encourage the use of the paper with students and show them there's something for everyone in The Daily Reflector," she said. "You can teach in all areas with the newspaper."

The Conly department includes teachers Mary Craft, Phyllis Ross and Barbara Smyth and was nominated by the school librarian, Carolyn Garris.

In submitting the nomination, Ms. Garris said the department uses help wanted ads in the newspaper to help students write job application letters. Also, interpreting television schedules, writing opinion paragraphs using the editorials, using ads for comparison shopping, practicing math computation using the sports pages and writing complete sentences using the headlines are all activities the teachers use in incorporating the newspaper into the classroom.

In addition, students also use the five W's (who, what, when, where, why) from stories and comic strips to write paragraphs, apply math skills to grocery ads and retail store ads and preview current events and political news by using the newspaper.

The department will receive a year's classroom subscription to The Daily Reflector in which 10 newspapers will be delivered to the school on the days of its choice. Included in the subscription will be holiday lesson plans and other yearly activities prepared by the Reflector's NIE department.

In addition, the department will receive a brass apple, NIE's symbol, on a base with the names of the teachers on it, Ms. Walter said.

AIDS Report Draws Local Praise

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

Medical personnel in Pitt County are emphatic in agreeing that the "Understanding AIDS" brochure by the surgeon general being sent to all addressees throughout the United States is a valid, admirable effort in educating the public in easy to understand terms about the dread disease.

"I think it is very helpful," said Dr. Tim Monroe, director of the Pitt County Health Department. "I'm glad the surgeon general has taken this action, which is a very responsible one."

"I definitely feel it's a most effective way to educate the public, particularly since it's written in simple language, frank and easily readable. People can read and understand how to reduce the risk of contacting AIDS."

Monroe likes the manner in which "the brochure is well balanced. It has facts, no judgments, and the facts presented are undeniable. The emphasis is on unsafe sexual practices and drug usage employing needles as the only ways of contacting AIDS."

Dr. Leo Waivers, an assistant professor in the East Carolina University School of Medicine noted that, "Basically, it shows the importance of being informed about the disease, the first time the U.S. government has provided a health warning to all people in the U.S."

"Great Britain had a similar informational program a couple of years ago, one that was very successful in raising interest and knowledge of the dangers of AIDS."

Waivers cited two reasons he feels the brochure is important to the public. "First," he said, "it helps get out information that can stop the spread of AIDS. The only way to stop its spread is being informed."

"Secondly, it's straightforward, and will do much to allay public fears about such unfounded misinformation that it can be contacted from toilet seats, from mosquito bites and through means other than sexual contact. It's a good effort, without hysteria or emotionalism."

The prevalence of AIDS in Pitt County, Waivers said, "is substantially lower than the national rate and slightly lower than the overall state rate."

"At any time, Pitt Memorial Hospital has a couple or more AIDS patients being treated, which may make it seem our local rate, when applied to the population of Pitt County, is relatively high."

"However," he added, "the hospital here is a referral center serving Pitt and surrounding counties, which gives us a greater AIDS patient load than we'd normally have."

"Another situation applicable here," Waivers said, "is that some of the patients we see are people who have lived here, who have moved away and lived outside the state and have been diagnosed in other areas as having AIDS. These are people who have come home to be treated, ones who most likely will die at home."

Jack Davies, Pitt Memorial's epidemiologist who works with all types of infectious diseases, like Waivers stresses the point that "the number of AIDS cases we have treated in no way reflects the rate of the disease among the populace of Pitt County. Many of the people we have treated acquired AIDS in out-of-state locations and for one or another reason came to Greenville for treatment."

"We treated our first AIDS case in the summer of 1983, and since then have treated about 65 patients," Davies said.

"I have only praise for the brochure and the surgeon general for distributing it to the public," Davies said. "Only one thing about it is something of a problem. Although it is simple and direct, we have an awful lot of people in Pitt County whose reading level is low. This concerns me. I hope people with greater reading skills will share this valuable information with others who may not understand it as well."

Greenville's assistant postmaster, Van VanWyck, says "the volume of this brochure is unprecedented for us. We received more than 34,000 copies to be delivered to every addressee and post office box listed in Pitt County. We are making every effort to ensure delivery of all copies at the earliest possible time."

In Raleigh, deputy state health director Dr. Thad B. Westler has announced that a tollfree AIDS hotline has been started in expectation of numerous queries on AIDS that will be generated as a result of the surgeon general's brochure.

The North Carolina AIDS hotline number is 1-800-535-2437 and will be staffed from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Mondays through Fridays. It will have two incoming telephone lines manned by AIDS control program employees who will provide information on AIDS as well as referrals.

Additionally, a national tollfree AIDS hotline, 1-800-342-2437 is available and is staffed 24 hours daily, seven days weekly.

League Questions Proposals For Mayor-Council Spending

By GREG LAUDICK
Reflector Staff Writer

An increase in the proposed 1988-89 budget for the mayor and City Council has raised the ire of the League of Women Voters of Greenville-Pitt County.

Representatives of the local chapter of the League of Women Voters voiced concern over the mayor and the council's appropriation at a public hearing on the budget proposal Monday at City Hall.

Mary Alsentzer, chapter president, said the organization noted that the budget for travel and training for the council has doubled since 1986.

"We certainly view this as important for elected officials," she said. "We feel the need, however, to question this priority in view of budget cuts for such basic items as in-office computer printers. In-office printers will make more efficient use of computers and employees time."

City Manager Greg Knowles has recommended the upcoming budget for the mayor and City Council be increased from $46,805 in 1987-88 to $66,309 for the upcoming year.

Adoption of the budget proposal is set for June 20. Council members are still free to make changes in the proposal until then if so desired.

"We saw, as a result of revaluation, the city's tax rate dropping from 63 cents to 53 cents for operational purposes," said City Manager Greg Knowles at the hearing. "In this budget we did not recommend a tax increase for operational purposes."

According to Knowles, the proposed budget, as has been amended by the council, calls for a reduction in the tax rate for operational purposes to 52.49 cents, while the expansion of the capital improvement program will cost a tax rate increase of 2.87 cents.

"When added together it comes to 55.36 cents, for an actual tax increase of 2.2 cents," he said.

Knowles said a large chunk of the capital improvement budget is to be used for the Evans Street widening project. Other capital expenditures include playground equipment, repair of lamps on the Town Commons, and for repairs of the Eppes Center and the South Greenville Center.

The original budget recommendation from Knowles, before the council's adjustments, called for a budget of 53.16 cents for operations, and 4.34 cents for the capital improvement program for a total tax rate of 57.5 cents.

Ms. Alsentzer also said the League of Women Voters has noted that funding has not been recommended for recycling containers in the city.

"Our recommendation is for the city to work with the county in developing a comprehensive waste disposal/recycling program," she said.

She said the organization also expressed additional concerns regarding the upcoming budget.

Telephone Problems

Pitt Community College has had problems with its telephones for the last few days and is trying to correct them, said Susan Nobles, director of public relations at PCC.

Ms. Nobles encouraged persons trying to contact the college to "be patient and keep trying" as the phones should be working later this afternoon or Wednesday morning.

Prayer Group

Men's Mid Week Prayer Group, an interdenominational Christian prayer group, meets Wednesday from 11:30 a.m. until 1 p.m. at 105 Greenville Blvd., according to a spokesman. Prayer requests may be mailed to the group.

Voters Turned Away

There are no paper ballots involved with the experimental "Shoupronic" machines, and voters press buttons to vote and the tally is recorded electronically.

Precinct workers would have had to activate the machines to allow voters to participate in the county commissioner's runoff, and precinct registrar Jerry Person and other precinct officials said they never activated the machines.

A statewide race for a seat on the N.C. Court of Appeals was also on the ballot, and all machines were activated for that election because every voter was eligible to vote.

Mrs. Deal and Person said a number of people asked about voting in the Garrett-Dupree runoff, but all of the ones that asked were not eligible to vote in Consolidated District A.

The Jameses did not protest and did not question the precinct workers while the polls were open, but Mrs. Hardee said she had spoken with them since then and they said they were not allowed to vote.

No Dump, Please

Regional Voice Heard In Edgecombe

A salute is in order.

The citizens of Edgecombe, Pitt, Martin and Nash counties deserve one. The Tarboro-Edgecombe Manufacturers' Association deserves one. And others who loudly raised their voices against a hazardous/low level nuclear waste dump in Edgecombe County Monday should be given a hearty backslap for their fortitude.

To the commissioners, who foolishly offered to host the dump without an ounce of public discussion, the message at the rally was clear: the people of Edgecombe don't want it here. The neighbors don't want it here. The environmental risks are too steep; the economic peril too great. The proposal process was flawed; too many serious questions cannot be satisfactorily answered.

All are indisputable facts and the Edgecombe Commission correctly listened to the voice of the people when it withdrew support for a dump.

And for the public officials involved in the fiasco, the experience should send another poignant message: underhanded manipulation of issues will not work. Neither their constituents in Edgecombe nor others in the region will tolerate questionable, back-room deals. The process must be open. It must involve the people.

The commissioners overlooked that point before, but they know it now.

Another message was clear at Monday's rally. The region, when unified on an issue, can effectively work for change. Many of the voices heard Monday were from Edgecombe, but many were also from Pitt, Martin and Nash counties. This issue vaulted political and geographic boundaries and demonstrated regional unity of concern and perspective.

The battle to keep a waste dump out of Edgecombe County may not be over, but the opposition won a significant victory over the county commission Monday. The issue will still have to be watched carefully at the state government level; even as the Edgecombe Commission voted to reject the site the county's state representative was trying to make deals with Pitt County.

But the message from this region of North Carolina was unmistakable: Edgecombe County is neither willing nor suitable to accept the toxic refuse and nuclear debris of the Southeast.

Progress Present

Momentum Must Be Maintained

It might be that local leaders are upset about the community's losing out in the "All-American City" competition, while neighbors — Kinston and New Bern — go on to the finals.

That, however, is not what such competition is all about.

Local leaders felt they could prepare an entry that would be competitive for the award, given the progress in medicine, community development and human resources the area has experienced.

The entry was not flawed. Greenville is a city which is building toward being ranked as one of the great medical centers of the nation. It has developed a community recreation center out of an unneeded indoor pool and a teen recreation center from a shut-down Elks Lodge building.

The city has increased its job opportunities by recruiting outstanding industries and it has striven to protect the ecology for itself, its neighbors and future generations. It has succeeded in attracting better commercial air service and is on the way to obtaining the fully controlled highway it must have to the west.

Pitt County has consolidated its school systems and voting districts have been redrawn to give minorities a better opportunity to serve in public offices.

The area is well aware of the farm crisis and the necessity of maintaining a strong farming economy. It is looking to the future to provide adequate farm production to keep farmers viable businessmen.

Thus it is not so important whether Greenville is in the All American Cities finals, as prestigious as it would be to have the national recognition which goes with such an honor. What is important is that the community continue to do the things which will build it and provide the jobs which future citizens will need. It is important that it improve human relations and improve our quality of life for all. It is most important to attack the problems of drugs, pollution, litter, poverty and highway deaths. And it is essential to continue to challenge young people to tackle productive careers and to give some of themselves back to the community.

Greenville must maintain the momentum which has carried it forward at such a rapid pace and with such great success. While the community can always prepare another All American Cities entry, that momentum is too valuable to lose.

AH, SENOR PRESIDENTE REAGAN. YOU ARE TOO QUICK FOR THIS HUMBLE PANAMANIAN PEASANT. ... BUT I WILL HAZARD THE GUESS AGAINST YOUR BRILLIANT MOVES. THE PEA IS UNDER THE... THE... CENTER SHELL NO!?!?

YES!! RIGHT AGAIN, MANUEL! HOW DO YOU DO IT, HOMBRE?!? MY MOVES ARE SO SUBTLE... SO WELL THOUGHT OUT...

Public Forum

To the editor:

Graduation time is right around the corner for our Pitt County schools. Many students will feel heavyhearted though deliciously happy saying goodbye to inspiring and remarkable teachers, especially those from whom they benefited with meticulous discipline and rigorous training in subject matter.

Do show your appreciation. What about honors awards ceremonies? Teachers crave respect and appreciation for their contributions to society's advancement. Surely we are aware that great teaching is in short supply, yet it is never more needed. Everybody thrives on appreciation from birth until death.

Beatrice C. Maye
Greenville

To the editor:

Where do Pitt County Memorial Hospital, the East Carolina University Medical School and East Carolina University dump their hazardous waste? How will ECU dispose of asbestos found in several areas? How will Pitt County prevent runoff of hazardous agricultural chemicals into the Tar-Pamlico River? Will the concentration of people, manufacturing and automobile exhaust result in air contamination? Which will cause more cancer — a low-level waste dump or tobacco products?

North Carolina Differs On Dropouts

RALEIGH — Educators anywhere in the United States can tell you the kind of high schools which typically have the highest dropout rates. The problem has been studied in so much detail that there's plenty of data.

But when an educational consultant began compiling data on North Carolina dropouts, he was surprised to see how different this state's experience has been from that of the nation as a whole. Barry Kibel of Research and Evaluation Associates, Inc., of Washington, D.C., says "all the stereotypes go out the window" in North Carolina.

Kibel collected data on dropouts from 90 percent of the state's high schools. He's preparing a report for state educators and shared preliminary findings with the legislature's Joint Governmental Operations Committee.

Kibel said that high schools with grades seven through 12 usually have lower dropout rates for two reasons.

Youngsters are spared the difficult transition to a big new facility in either ninth or tenth grade. Also, youngsters become comfortable with the school over the extended number of years they are there and are less anxious to leave.

But in North Carolina, these 7-12 high schools have the highest dropout rates. Schools with grades 9-12 have the lowest.

Nationally, small high schools tend to have lower dropout rates. The feeling is that in these schools, teachers and administrators get to know children better and usually spot trouble earlier.

In North Carolina, Kibel said, there is only a small, statistically insignificant, difference between the dropout rates of schools of less than 500 students and those which are larger. While the smallest high schools did have the lowest dropout rates, the largest schools, those over 1200 students, were a very close second.

Kibel also reported that for the nation as a whole, black students have much higher dropout rates than do white students. In North Carolina, however, predominantly black high schools actually have lower dropout rates than schools in which blacks comprise less than 30 percent of the student body.

There is one exception here, he said. Ten schools surveyed in which blacks comprise more than 75 percent of the student body did have an average dropout rate that was the highest of all categories. But Kibel felt that two especially bad schools in that group had brought up the average considerably.

Finally, youngsters from poor socio-economic backgrounds have higher dropout rates than do children from affluent families. But in North Carolina, the differences are virtually insignificant statistically, with the schools serving the largest percentage of affluent children actually a bit higher in dropouts than some schools with poverty levels of one-third or more. "There is no pattern," Kibel said.

"Forget stereotypes," Kibel said after reading the results to legislators. "Two schools identical in every respect (racial, economic, geographic)... you can't predict who will have a high dropout rate and who will not." The determining factor, he said, is what is happening in the schools.

That is, schools with low dropout rates are likely to have stronger dropout prevention programs. Schools with high dropout rates, he said, are likely to have ineffective programs, although some individual instructors and principals may be very committed to correcting the problem.

In a future column, Kibel's findings on the differences between effective and ineffective prevention programs will be reported.

Reagan Snubs Free Press, Too

'If anything, he and his fellow conservatives in government have systematically tried to intimidate and discredit the press; blocked information; lied to Congress, the media and the public ...'

It is always an occasion for something approaching awe to hear President Reagan extol the virtues of a free press and free expression whenever he wants to score propaganda points with countries that neither practice nor believe in them. You could almost be convinced that he believed in them himself.

He has frequently invoked the shining image of America's press in putting down the Sandinistas for their suppression and harassment of the media in Nicaragua, and more recently in his efforts to shame Gen. Manuel Noriega into vacating Panama.

Last week, during his visit to Moscow, he spoke warmly about the link between a truly democratic system and "freedom of thought, freedom of information, freedom of communication," in an effort to point up the differences between the Soviet Union and the United States.

While it is indisputable that there are vast differences between the Soviet-controlled information apparatus and the freedom that American media enjoy, it is also indisputable that those circumstances owe nothing whatsoever to Reagan.

If anything, he and his fellow conservatives in government have systematically tried to intimidate and discredit the press; blocked information; lied to Congress, the media and the public, and otherwise given every indication that in their heart of hearts they viewed with great envy the Soviet system.

That is not as contrary or as inconsistent as it may at first seem. The trend of governments worldwide has been toward paying lip service to democratic freedoms while working diligently to undermine them, and Reagan's administration is no exception. It just depends on which end you start from.

In the case of glasnost, Gorbachev works from the bottom up. He seems to realize that the Soviet government's iron grip on freedom of expression is counterproductive and that at least a semblance of liberty is desirable. What little freedom he has allowed he boastfully refers to as "democracy."

Reagan starts from the top down. Inheriting the superb democratic instrument that is a free press, he and his aides have worked hard to blunt it. Perhaps some day the two systems will meet in the middle, with Soviet citizens enjoying a little more freedom, which will seem to them like heaven, and Americans a lot less, which will seem to many of them (but by no means all) like hell.

Coincident with Reagan's rhetorical tribute to freedom of information, against which he has waged a war that has been as effective as his proclaimed war against drugs has been inept, the American chapter of PEN has published a study that uncomfortably calibrates the inroads against free expression that have been made since Reagan took office.

It is called "Liberty Denied: The Current Rise of Censorship in America," and was conducted by Donna A. Demac, a lawyer who has written widely on public access to information. PEN, of course, is the well-known organization of writers, which has a vested interest in the subject.

The study can serve as a quick reference for anyone who wants to pull his or her head out of the sand — including any number of Washington correspondents — and see what time of day it is in America. If it is morning, it is raining, and there is a cold fog over the Potomac.

It is breathtaking to think that one administration could have undone so much in such a relatively short time. Information previously published by government agencies has been cut off wholesale in the name of economy, and warehouses full of the stuff have been classified secret in the name of national security.

And all of this is mild. It does not count the oppressive tactics used against government workers to insure that nobody talks — the use of contracts to bind hundreds of thousands of them to lifelong censorship and the threat of lie detectors to prevent them from tipping the press to waste, corruption and lawbreaking.

Nor does it include the threats of prosecution against the media themselves for publishing information arbitrarily labeled secret; the clever formulation of a British-style Official Secrets Act, under which journalists can be prosecuted for publishing leaks, and which we all will live with for some time to come; the hounding by the FBI of groups opposed to Reagan's Central American policy, and last but not least, the collusion between the administration and Philistine groups that are attempting to influence school curricula and dictate the kinds of books available in libraries. And on and on.

What is remarkable is that all of this has come about under our very noses with hardly a murmur of protest. Demac calls this mental lapse a "gullibility crisis of major proportions." Her concern and that of PEN's is that the Reagan "legacy of fear and ignorance" will probably not disappear with his departure. "The United States is at a turning point with regard to freedom of expression," she says. What may be needed is a U-turn.

Rising Price Of American Dream Creating Bitter Animosity

Here's the question of the hour, to be answered by people who have owned their houses or apartments for five years or more: Could you afford to purchase your own residence were it to go on the market for whatever it is worth today?

It may seem a frivolous question, cocktail party chatter for yuppies, but rest assured that it is not. The fluctuations of the real estate market may have been, within quite recent memory, the fodder for idle conversation about life's queer vicissitudes, but that no longer is the case. Though only a few people seem to have recognized it, and even fewer to have done anything about it, the explosion in housing prices is no longer funny business; it is the raw material for an American crisis of the first order, one that contains ample potential to divide the country along economic lines — and to leave the vast majority of Americans on the wrong side of the dividing line.

By way of illustration, consider a couple of news accounts that appeared last week. The first was in the Baltimore Sun, which reported that between 1984 and 1988 housing prices in the Baltimore metropolitan area increased 52 percent, while median income rose only 20 percent. The result is that many middle- and lower-income workers have been forced to commute great distances to their jobs, because they cannot afford to purchase property in such places as suburban Howard, Carroll and Anne Arundel counties — where average house prices now stand, respectively, at $151,808, $110,393 and $129,528. Only in Baltimore City, where nearly a quarter of the residents are below the poverty line, is housing at a level affordable to most people: $59,894.

The second report appeared in Spy magazine, which is not incapable of seriousness. In a regular feature called "Topic A," Spy told of "a nice two-story frame house in Larchmont (N.Y.)" on the market earlier this year for $675,000. In 1948, according to Spy, that house was worth $20,000. At the general rate of inflation, its value now should be $89,000. "Try to find a house at that price," Spy remarks. "According to both New York City and Westchester County real estate brokers, it is nearly impossible."

Yes, it is true that housing prices in New York, Manhattan especially, went through the ceiling years ago, but what is happening there no longer can be dismissed as atypical. As the figures from Baltimore make frighteningly clear, the increase in housing prices in virtually all metropolitan areas is racing so far ahead of the inflation rate that it bears no discernible resemblance to reality. Except in the inner cities, where much housing is dilapidated and/or in risky neighborhoods, the price of a house has reached the point that most people can purchase one only at extreme financial sacrifice or cannot purchase one at all.

Quite simply, this puts at risk the assumption, which since World War II has been as sacred in American popular mythology as the Constitution itself, that any American willing to work hard can afford to own his own house. That is no longer true. The National Housing Task Force reported in March that between 1980 and 1986 the percentage of American householders declined from 65.6 percent of families to 63.8, the first decline since the end of the war. "Homeownership is becoming a fading dream," the report declared, "as a result of high real mortgage rates, rising home prices and substantial down payments required."

What this means is that in more and more American communities the prosperous and the rich are the only people who can afford not merely urban mansions and exurban estates, but the suburban housing that, for better or worse, has for years been the ultimate stop on the road to the American dream. These neighborhoods in places like Howard and Anne Arundel counties where houses are selling for $150,000 and up are not exclusive communities built for the rich; they are tract developments with tract housing, scarcely distinguishable from the Levittowns of a generation ago except that lot sizes, mandated by zoning restrictions, tend to be larger.

A generation ago it was reasonable for a middle-class American — a civil servant, a firefighter, a teacher — to aspire to a house in the suburbs, with a back yard and a patio and a garage. Now that is no longer within reason for all except those with high incomes and ample credit, or those willing to invest a dangerously large percentage of their income in housing. The Sun spoke with a schoolteacher who commutes 50 miles a day because she cannot afford to buy a house where she works, in Howard County. "Prices were so high," she said, "I just got discouraged to go on looking."

To call this a "disturbing trend," as The Sun's report does, is if anything understatement. If allowed to go unchecked, the housing crisis — for a crisis it indeed is — will have effects too numerous and deleterious to imagine. People who cannot afford to live near their jobs will be forced on to the highways in ever greater numbers; adding still more vehicular traffic to roadways already overburdened; placing ever greater burdens on an infrastructure about which everyone talks and no one does anything; increasing the risk of auto accidents, with attendant injuries and deaths, thereby raising insurance premiums — which as everyone knows already are outrageous — still further; and, of course, pushing up fuel consumption and pollution ever higher.

How, it is worth asking, will these people feel about their country as they leave their inadequate residences, drive over congested highways, and report for work at jobs that do not pay them enough to permit them to live nearby? Will they feel that it is still possible in America for people to earn a decent wage and with it to live a decent life — or will they feel that the rules of the game no longer are fair, that the only people with a shot at the American dream are those with too much money, too much luck, too much privilege, too much clout? The betting here is the latter. Those who feel otherwise are advised to have a look at an understated but devastating article, in the current issue of The Atlantic, by my colleague Thomas Byrne Edsall. He has looked at the figures, both political and economic, and concludes that we are heading toward a moment at which a dominant characteristic of American life will be inequality: not between the haves and the have-nots, but between the haves and the have-not-enoughs. The American middle class is being squeezed out: by a political system dominated by big money, as Edsall notes, but also by a housing market that no longer is reasonably accessible to ordinary Americans.

This is a terrible problem, one with great potential for bitter animosity within the population and, as a result, for mischievous and demagogic politics. It is, further, a problem exacerbated by certain aspects of public policy — tax deductions for mortgage interest, low-density zoning ordinances — and by the cozy relationship between developers and local governments. Like it or not, it is a problem that will be solved, if it is to be solved at all, through the political process. Might not we begin talking about it now, before it is too late?

Democrats Step Up Attack On Martin Budget

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — Democratic legislative leaders have stepped up their attack on Republican Gov. Jim Martin's proposed budget, saying it would put the state in the red by $137 million and force them to make unpopular cutbacks.

"He may have run the sausage machine backwards," Sen. Tony Rand, D-Cumberland, said Monday. "You know, decide what you want and then figure out how you're going to get it."

Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, a Democrat running against Republican Martin in the gubernatorial race, accused him of deliberately packing more into his budget than the state could afford.

"Any fourth-grader should understand that there's not enough money to fund the things that he's put in the budget," Jordan said.
"I think he (Jordan) knows better than that," countered J. Ward Purrington, Martin's legislative liaison. "He knows the governor wouldn't do that."
The exchange came after the Legislature's chief fiscal analyst, David Crotts, provided an updated revenue forecast for fiscal 1988-89.
Crotts estimated that $421.5 million will be available for new spending in the 1988-89 fiscal year, which begins July 1. Martin's budget calls for spending $558.7 million — including roughly $37 million for business tax cuts.

Rand and Jordan said the difference between the administration's and the legislative staff's estimates of revenue availability was so stark that the Legislature might have to scrap Martin's budget and assemble its own.
"We're going to have to sit down and look at the whole jelly roll," said Rand, the Democratic nominee for lieutenant governor.
They said state employees probably would receive the 4.5 percent pay raise Martin recommended, but that dozens of other expenditures sought by the governor and other department and agency heads were in jeopardy.

The governor last week dismissed as "a charade" the claim that his budget would create a deficit, saying Democrats levy that charge every year but always end up spending more than he asks for.
State Revenue Secretary Helen Powers was scheduled to give the administration's side of the issue this morning in testimony before the House Finance Committee.
The 4.5 percent pay raise, costing about $210 million, likely will survive, said Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Aaron Plyler, D-Union. Another top priority is $18.8 million to increase pay and benefits for school bus drivers as the state obeys a federal order to hire no drivers under age 18.

The only other spending item virtually certain to be spared is roughly $25 million for upgraded prisons, also mandated by the federal government, Plyler said.
That leaves in limbo such Martin proposals as the first $5 million installment in an eventual $48 million expansion of state services for the elderly; $3.5 million to establish eight pilot pre-school programs for "at-risk" four-year-olds; and $2.7 million to hire 60 new highway patrol troopers.
According to Crotts, the state is likely to take in about $218 million in "recurring revenue" — money that can become a permanent fixture in the budget. Martin's forecast includes $318 million in recurring money.

Both sides agree there will be about $203.5 million in one-time revenue that could be spent only for capital improvements or other items that will not require annual appropriations, Crotts said.
The governor wants to restore the 3 percent sales tax discount for merchants abolished last year, at a cost of $27 million, and adjust the formula for calculating corporate income taxes in a way that will cost about $10 million.
The governor's budget is based on $521 million in new general fund revenue and includes $41.3 million in cuts from the budget approved last year.

IN THE STATE

Graduation

RALEIGH (AP) — Up to 3,000 Wake County high school students will be attending a $35,000 all-night graduation party Saturday, provided they get parental permission and agree not to use alcohol or drugs.

"If the alcohol industry is not above bribing them into thinking they can only have a good time if they're drinking, I'm not above bribing them into letting them know they can have a good time without drinking," said Anne Barnes, the statewide coordinator for "Project Graduation."

Saturday night's party is sponsored by the Wake County PTA Council, with support from Students Against Drunk Driving, Mothers Against Drunk Driving and a number of businesses. It is Wake County's first effort in a growing statewide movement to combat teen-age drinking, especially on graduation night. Teen-agers and local officials hosted similar affairs at Carowinds theme park outside Charlotte last weekend.

Empress II

NORFOLK (AP) — An attorney for an environmental group says the Navy will begin generating intense electromagnetic pulses off the Virginia-North Carolina coast before the group can get a court hearing on an injunction seeking to halt the test.

The Foundation on Economic Trends asked the U.S. Appeals Court for the District of Columbia Monday to halt the Empress II project that was to start today.

Lt. Barbara Kent, a spokeswoman for the Navy, said the Empress II barge was towed offshore Monday afternoon to the test site, 15 miles east of Corolla, N.C., near the Virginia line. She said the barge was to begin generating bursts of electric energy today.

Empress II is designed to produce enormous bursts of electrical power to simulate the electromagnetic radiation that would follow the detonation of a nuclear weapon outside the Earth's atmosphere. The tests are intended to determine the ability of Navy ships, aircraft and weapons to withstand the pulses.

Dismal Canal

CHESAPEAKE, Va. (AP) — The Great Dismal Swamp Canal, hand hewn by slaves from the wilderness nearly two centuries ago, has been placed on the National Register of Historic Places.

The designation Monday culminated a two-year effort by Virginia and North Carolina officials.

"I hope people who may have been indifferent to the canal will now view it in a different light," said Rep. Walter B. Jones, D-N.C., who has struggled for years to prevent closure of the 55-mile cut linking Deep Creek in Chesapeake with North Carolina's Pasquotank River.

Radon Found

RALEIGH (AP) — Random air sample tests at Pope Air Force Base have found in at least one building radon levels above federal standards, officials say.

Lt. Paul B. DeVane of the Air Force's Bioenvironmental Engineering Services said Monday that the amount of radon detected in one dormitory at the Fayetteville facility was not alarming but that it did qualify the entire base as "medium risk" for exposure to the gas. Radon is an odorless, colorless radioactive gas that has been linked to lung cancer among people exposed to large amounts of it over a number of years.

It comes from the natural decay of uranium in the soil and becomes dangerous when it seeps into buildings where it can concentrate. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency estimates that 5,000 to 20,000 cancer-related deaths each year may be caused by the gas.

Hotline

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's Hurricane Hotline will be reactivated when tropical storms threaten the nation, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration announced Monday.

The hotline will provide a timely recorded message whenever a named tropical storm develops, with information provided by the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla.

The number is 1-900-410-NOAA. Calls cost 50 cents for the first minute and 35 cents for each additional minute. The average call costs 85 cents.

NAACP Drive

ROCKY MOUNT, N.C. (AP) — The state chapter of the NAACP will try to increase its membership from 35,000 to 60,000 registered members this year, and a voter registration campaign also is being launched, state NAACP president Kelly Alexander said Monday.

On Sept. 24, the NAACP will hold a national radiothon aimed at recruiting more members, Alexander said at a news conference.

Passed Over

RALEIGH (AP) — Sematech, the semiconductor manufacturing consortium that chose Austin, Texas, over the Research Triangle for a major research center, has passed over North Carolina in creating its first five university "centers of excellence."

But N.C. State University and an additional four candidates are expected to be named Sematech centers of excellence before the year ends, making each eligible for between $500,000 and $1.5 million of annual support from the consortium, officials said Monday.

The Triangle had been a leading candidate for a $1.5 billion research facility where Sematech hoped to develop the next generation of microchip manufacturing technology with joint support from industry and the federal government.

Instead, Sematech picked Austin in January. But the consortium announced that, through its centers of excellence program, it still planned to draw on expertise at selected universities across the nation.

Escape

RALEIGH (AP) — Two men remained at large Monday after escaping from the minimum-security prison in Person County, officials said.

Thomas Edwards of Greensboro and William Edwards of Florida, who are not related, escaped Sunday, said David Guth, a spokesman for the Department of Correction. He said Thomas Edwards was serving 30 years for charges that include assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill. Thomas Edwards was serving a four-year sentence for assorted misdemeanors including assault on a police officer.

Boom Period Is Over For Textiles

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — The textile industry boom of 1987 is starting a downturn, industry analysts say, but mergers should continue shrinking the number of textile companies in the marketplace through the November election.

"The best is past," said Daniel Frierson, vice president of the American Textile Manufacturers Institute.

Frierson said in an interview the industry's profits of $1.8 billion in 1987, a 9 percent rise, were far below other manufacturing segments.

Operating capacity, a key measure of factory use, is dropping from record highs in 1987.

As with all U.S. industry, the mills are seeking clout in the marketplace by merging with competitors, or going through financial maneuvers such as leveraged buyouts to avert unwanted takeovers.

Since 1981, the year Reagan took office, 12 of the 15 largest public mills have either been sold or become private companies. West Point-Pepperell, now the biggest of the survivors, is being circled by takeover strategists.

Kay Norwood, an analyst with Interstate Securities Corp. in Charlotte, said, "There will be a continuing rush of takeovers until Election Day, because the Reagan administration's been very lenient on this sort of thing."

Many companies are expanding their production of industrial and home-furnishing fabrics as a hedge against imports, which account for half the $154 billion in apparel sold in the United States, but far less in other categories.

County Spokesmen Want State To Pay

RALEIGH (AP) — Some county officials say if the state is going to require all new school buildings to have offices for teachers, then the state should be willing to pay for the additional construction costs.

Anything the state mandates, the state ought to pay for," Gene Causby, executive director of the North Carolina School Boards Association, said in an interview.

"I'm still concerned we don't know what it is going to cost," Causby said Monday. "We just want an abundance of caution to be sure the standards required are what they were purported to be — minimum."

The N.C. County Commissioners Association is also concerned that the standards, adopted by the state Board of Education last week, went beyond the minimum, said Debra Holley, the association's information director.

"Mandating it as a minimum requirement does seem a little bit extreme when we have so many other facility needs out there," Ms. Holley said.

The standards, which affect all schools designed after July 1, define minimum acreage for school sites and dimensions for classrooms, laboratories, shops and other school spaces.

The Wake County commissioners Monday said they wanted the state to pay for costs the new standards would add to their school construction plans and asked County Manager Richard Stevens to send that message to legislators.

"I don't think this has been well thought out, and I think we ought to communicate with our legislators," said Commissioner Robert Heater.

Stevens told commissioners Monday that teacher offices alone would add $7.1 million to the cost of 11 new schools in the second phase of the county's building program between 1989 and 1994.

Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, said he wasn't prepared to comment on whether the state should pay for the standards.

"As you know, I think the state should pay for all new construction," Watkins said.

The state deserves some control over building standards since lawmakers last year allocated $3.2 billion over the next 10 years to build schools, said Howard Haworth, chairman of the state Board of Education.

"We are in a sense having a discussion and debating. Is the state for $3.2 billion going to have some say so in the standards for facilities construction?" Haworth said.

Causby said his association and the county commissioner's group had been comparing standards from other states and might know by the end of the week what action they would take.

"We have talked tentatively about going back to the state board and asking them to review them," Causby said. "We have also talked about going to the legislature to review them."

Haworth said he did not think the board would consider delaying the standards. He said school and government officials have had ample time to review the standards through at least 10 regional meetings and hearings since they were first proposed in September.

Wright Used Office Funds For Aide Working On Book

WASHINGTON (AP) — A leading critic of House Speaker Jim Wright said today he isn't sure Wright was wrong in using an aide to help write a book, but the speaker's activities should be investigated.

The aide was paid $2,000 from official congressional accounts for expenses during a 1984 trip to Texas to oversee final editing of a privately published book by Wright, House records show.

"I'm not sure, frankly, whether we have a problem here or not with this particular case," Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., said on the CBS show "This Morning."

"There's clearly a legitimate public policy role served in writing books," Gingrich said. "The question would come, whether the primary job of that staffer was to write a book which was being written purely for profit, or whether that was a natural part of his job, doing something that reflected a public policy interest."

"I think every member of Congress has at times used their staff in a legitimate way to look at serious public policy pronouncements or serious efforts to influence public policy," Gingrich said.

But he reiterated previous calls for a House Ethics Committee investigation of Wright's activities.

Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., also said Wright should be investigated. Frank said he doesn't consider accusations against Wright valid, but feels that an investigation would help restore public confidence.

The book, "Reflections of a Public Man," published by a longtime Fort Worth friend of the speaker, brought Wright nearly $55,000 in royalties.

Matthew Cossolotto, who has since left Wright's staff, said in a telephone interview Monday that his Texas trip was the culmination of several months of on-and-off work in Wright's Capitol Hill office to help the Texas Democrat draft the book's manuscript.

House ethical guidelines allow wide latitude in the use of staff members, but stipulate that "Employees may not be compensated from public funds to perform nonofficial, personal or campaign activities on behalf of the member."

Records maintained by the House show $2,078.27 paid to Cossolotto for hotel accommodations "while on official business," car rental and meals from Oct. 22 to Nov. 14, 1984, when Cossolotto said he was in Fort Worth to complete work on the book.

At the time, Wright was House majority leader, the No. 2 leadership post.

U.S. Youth Flunk Math, Report Says

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's 17-year-old students are dismal at math, with only half able to cope with problems usually taught in junior high school, a testing agency reported today.

The federally sponsored National Assessment of Educational Progress also said that nearly 27 percent of 13-year-olds are lacking in basic computational skills.

More than a quarter of the 17-year-olds reported that they did not usually understand what was talked about in mathematics class, and only 6 percent could solve problems that took several steps or involved algebra or geometry.

The agency reported the results of tests it gave nearly 15,000 students ages 9, 13 and 17 in 1985-86, as well as comparative data from math assessments in 1973, 1978 and 1982.

The report, "The Mathematics Report Card: Are We Measuring Up," said all three age groups improved recently, but mostly on low-level skills, and the 17-year-olds still have not regained all the ground they lost in the 1970s.

Albert Shanker, president of the American Federation of Teachers, commented, "Our youngsters are doing better at memorizing rules and applying them in a rote fashion — but often they don't have a clue about what they're doing or what it all means."

The report said 98 percent of the 9-year-olds and 100 percent of the older students knew simple arithmetic facts, such as 39 - 26 = 13.

But virtually none of the younger students and only 6.4 percent of the oldest could solve multistep problems and algebra questions.

Apartment Fire Kills 7 People

HAMILTON, Ohio (AP) — Fire broke out early today in two apartments above a used furniture store, killing seven people, including five children ranging in age from 2 to 6, authorities said.

Six victims — one woman and all five children — were found beneath a boarded-up window, said Hamilton Fire Chief Don Lickert.

In addition, he said, the three-story, wooden-frame building had no fire escapes and a door on the ground-floor that was the exit for the two apartments was locked on the outside.

The seventh victim, a man, was found in a second-floor hallway, Lickert said.

Three adults were injured and taken to local hospitals, officials said.

Two of the victims were identified as Faye Reeseman and her 2-year-old son, Chris, by Butler County Coroner Dr. Richard Burkhardt.

At least four of the other victims were children of a second woman, who survived, according to Elizabeth Blackburn, the owner of the building. The dead children ranged in age from 2 to 6, she said.

"I was very close to them. I used to take them to the store," said Mrs. Blackburn, who did not live in the building. "That's the only thing I cared about, was those babies."

The victims died of apparent smoke inhalation, Coroner's Investigator Thomas Marsh said.

Senate Gives Final OK To $1.1 Trillion Budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress was fulfilling a deficit reduction agreement with President Reagan when it passed a $1.1 trillion federal budget for fiscal 1989, but a hefty deficit remains and spending priorities have already shifted.

The budget, approved by the House last month and the Senate on Monday by 58-29, shows a deficit of nearly $142 billion when not counting sales of government assets, which aren't counted under the Gramm-Rudman budget balancing law.

The president's Office of Management and Budget says higher interest rates combined with government bail-outs of banks could drive the deficit higher.

If it gets past $146 billion, OMB is required to order automatic, across-the-board spending cuts under the Gramm-Rudman law.

And the spending plan doesn't come close to meeting Gramm-Rudman's goals for the years after fiscal 1989, which are designed to force a balanced budget by fiscal 1993.

"This is a paltry, pathetic and completely meaningless reduction (of the deficit) during times of economic prosperity," complained Sen. William Armstrong, R-Colo. "We're just putting the whole problem off until after the election."

Senate Budget Committee chairman Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., conceded: "We've taken some steps in the right direction, but I'm afraid there's miles to go before we sleep."

The spending plan also was nearly two months after the April 15 deadline, creating confusion over the details of next year's federal spending policy.

Within total spending levels for military, foreign aid and domestic programs that were set by last fall's agreement with Reagan, the budget envisions increased federal spending on the space program, education, AIDS research, fighting drugs, and other election-year priorities.

But the resolution itself is non-binding, acting only as a guide for production of the annual spending legislation for running the government. And because of the delays, the House and Senate have been moving ahead with the regular spending bills that stray from the budget's priorities.

The Senate Appropriations Committee voted to include less money for education and space programs, shifting those funds to energy and interior agencies.

"We urge the appropriations committee to follow our lead and support the nation's future through increased funding for science and space programs," said Chiles, who had pushed hard for that new spending.

Those and other details of next year's federal spending will be settled in the next few months before the start of fiscal 1989.

Overall spending would be about $5 billion above Reagan's request and $44 billion above this year's level. Total revenues would be about $964 billion.

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Charlotte-Mecklenburg officials are asking residents to reduce water consumption following record use caused by rapid growth and dry weather.

Officials called for the restraints beginning today — the fifth time such measures have been sought in six years.

The voluntary program asks residents whose homes and businesses have even-numbered addresses to water lawns and gardens only on even-numbered days. Those with odd-numbered addresses may water on odd-numbered days. There are no hour restrictions.

Shultz Hints At Still Another Mideast Peace Trip

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer
CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz, winding up a futile Middle East peace mission, said today that extremism and an arms buildup could engulf the region unless Arabs and Israelis shed their illusions.

He said the United States would not slow its efforts to prod the two sides into negotiations, adding that he would like to have another try at Mideast diplomacy before the Reagan administration ends in January.

"The underlying problem won't go away by itself and can't be wished away," Shultz told a news conference. "Nor can it be ignored. The lives and well-being of too many people are endangered by the continuation of this conflict."

During five days in the region, he met with leaders of Israel, Jordan, Egypt and Syria and found support for his plan for two-stage negotiations only from President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt, whose nation is at peace with Israel.

Mubarak repeated his limited endorsement in a statement to Egypt's Middle East News Agency after holding a final meeting with Shultz early today.

"The American initiative has some positive points and some other points that need more alterations. We have to accept these positive points and to work on developing the other points," Mubarak said.

"We ask him (Shultz) to come back time and time again. There is something new in each trip, more understanding ... of viewpoints."

Shultz had said he found "universal interest in finding a way to move forward" with his peace initiative.

He planned to stop in Madrid for a meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization on the way home.

The trip was his fourth to the region this year in an effort to convene a peace conference, take up the problem of Palestinians in the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip and then move to an overall settlement.

The plan calls for trading occupied land for peace.

"I am ready to come any time that it seems there is something constructive to be done," Shultz said.

He has said he may try a different approach next time, stepping up consultations with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze and other Kremlin officials. The idea would be to see if the superpowers together can accomplish what the Reagan administration could not do alone.

"We have made very considerable progress, and the Moscow summit sort of symbolizes that fact," Shultz said.

Washington has dropped its opposition to a Soviet role in a Middle East peace conference, but objects to outsiders' active participation in negotiations between Israel and its Arab foes.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir of Israel opposes any Soviet role in peace talks, but plans to meet Shevardnadze at the United Nations this week.

Shultz declined to pinpoint obstacles that stand in his way or point a finger of blame at any Middle East leader.

He said there are many obstacles, but "the most important is for people to shed illusions. ... Finding dreams that can be realized is what we need to encourage."

Fielding questions in a hotel nightclub after a last meeting with Mubarak, a weary Shultz urged Arabs and Israelis alike to "recognize that the most extreme form of their dreams cannot be realized."

In a 2½-page opening statement, Shultz said, "Realism is required to prevent serious problems from becoming worse ... problems such as extremism, proliferation of dangerous weapons and more intense animosity between Arabs and Israelis.

"There will be no diminution of the American effort," he said. "We are confident of our initiative, confident of the desire of the parties to proceed, and confident that the peace process can be carried forward."

Shultz reiterated U.S. opposition to an independent Palestinian state and said other ways can be found to express Palestinian identity.

"I have often noted to people that if you ask President Reagan just bang off the top of his head: 'Where are you from?' he would probably say 'California.' He is the president of the United States ... but he thinks of himself as a Californian as well as an American."

Shultz said "certain affiliations" could give Palestinian people a sense of identity. He did not elaborate but appeared to be implying Palestinian association with Jordan.

Shultz spent about four hours Monday in Syria, half of it in meetings with President Hafez Assad, who has taken a hard line on peace with Israel.

The Syrian leader told Shultz he had no new information about American hostages held in Lebanon.

Cigarette Lighter's Flame May Have Set Off Gas Blast In Mine

BORKEN, West Germany (AP) — A cigarette lighter's flame may have sparked the methane gas explosion in a coal mine shaft that led to the deaths of at least 46 men, a national television network reported.

Also Monday, mine owners defended the rescue operation despite the revelation that a radio operator told six trapped miners to get off a radio channel just hours after Wednesday's blast.

The six were discovered alive Saturday after officials had insisted there were no signs of life in the Stolzenbach mine in Borken, 72 miles northeast of Frankfurt.

A statement from the rescue team said searchers had found another miner's body early today, bringing the total confirmed dead to 47. Four men were still missing in the mine's north field, which officials said had the highest concentrations of deadly carbon monoxide.

Prosecutors are investigating whether an open flame may have ignited the gas explosion, the ZDF television network reported Monday night. ZDF, quoting unidentified officials, said cigarette lighters were found inside the mine.

It said miners were known to have smoked on the job, but a mining official said he doubted that was true.

"We have very strict regulations against smoking in the mine, and if someone were to be caught doing it they would be immediately fired," said Wulf Boettcher, an official with the Preussen Elektra utility company that operates the Borken mine.

Kassel prosecutor Stephan Walcher said a full investigation was launched into the cause of the disaster. But he refused to elaborate or to say whether a cigarette lighter may have caused the explosion.

High concentrations of carbon monoxide inside the mine delayed search efforts on Monday. Exhausted rescuers were forced to renew their oxygen supplies repeatedly.

Authorities said that because of the deadly carbon monoxide fumes, there was little chance the missing miners would be found alive.

Owners of the coal mine acknowledged Sunday that a radio operator told the six surviving miners to stop sending messages from the pocket of air where they were trapped because he thought they were another search team.

Heinz Cramer, a technical director for Preussen Elektra, told reporters Monday that failure to recognize the radio contact as a sign of life from the trapped miners had not endangered the men.

"We knew that the area (where the men were found) presented the best possibility of finding survivors, and that's where we began drilling," Cramer said.

WRECKAGE — Rescue workers remove wreckage scattered along a track near Arzamas, U.S.S.R., after 120 tons of explosives blew up Saturday at a rail crossing. At least 68 people were killed and 230 injured in the blast, which flattened several city blocks and tossed railroad cars and automobiles like feathers. (AP Laserphoto)

West Bank Mayor Hurt In Attack

RAMALLAH, Occupied West Bank (AP) — The Israeli-appointed mayor of the West Bank town of El-Bireh was stabbed in the chest today in an apparent assassination attempt by Palestinian militants.

The stabbing of Hassan Tawil, in his 70s, follows repeated demands by underground leaders of the 6-month-old Palestinian uprising that he and other Israeli-appointed officials resign their jobs in the occupied West Bank.

Tawil was taken to nearby Ramallah Hospital, where officials said he was in stable condition after surgery.

He was stabbed once with a "very long knife" that pierced his heart, diaphragm, liver and stomach, said the officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Brig. Gen. Shaikha Erez, head of the military government in the West Bank, said Tawil was attacked near the city hall in El-Bireh, a town of mostly Moslems about nine miles north of Jerusalem.

Shortly after the stabbing, Associated Press photographer Martin Cleaver saw Tawil lying slumped against a shuttered store front. He was surrounded by Israeli troops.

Tawil appeared ashen-faced and had a large, bloody stab wound on the left side of his chest, which was partially covered with a bandage.

Cleaver said four soldiers commandeered an Arab vehicle, climbed inside with Tawil and rushed him to the hospital.

"The mayor left his office without his bodyguard. Almost at the threshold he was stabbed," Police Minister Chaim Bar-Lev told reporters at the stabbing scene.

Hussein Tawil, a son of the mayor, said a driver who also acted as a guard was with his father at the time of the attack. He said the man was being questioned by police. However, Bar-Lev said the mayor was alone.

The police minister said a knife was found near the scene. Asked whether any suspects were in custody, he said only that the investigation had just begun.

"I assume it's a nationalistic motive," Bar-Lev added, meaning the attack was made by Palestinian nationalists.

Three Israeli soldiers guarded Tawil's room at Ramallah Hospital and prevented even family members from entering.

When Hussein Tawil appeared, he said, "Let me in. I want to see my father." But soldiers pushed him away.

Strike Violence Kills 7 In South Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Hundreds of thousands of black workers and students remained on strike today to demand the right to oppose apartheid. Police said seven people were killed and more than 20 injured.

Strike supporters and transport companies said the protest, in its second day, eased in many areas and worker attendance increased. But participation near 100 percent was reported in others.

Police reported more than two dozen incidents of violence between Monday evening and dawn today, including many firebombings and stonings of homes, buses and trains. Twenty-one arrests were reported.

One black youth was killed by police shotgun fire after municipal officers were stoned, police said. The other six blacks who died, including three children, were killed in shootings and a hand grenade attack in which the assailants were not identified.

In the black homeland of KwaZulu, hospital officials said a bus passenger injured in a firebomb attack early Monday had died.

A bomb caused minor damage to a rail line in Soweto early today, delaying some trains carrying blacks from the huge black township to jobs in Johannesburg.

Black union leaders had called for a three-day "national protest" without specifying a strike. They said the action aims to pressure business leaders into demanding that the white minority government ease restrictions on the anti-apartheid movement.

A three-day strike would be the longest nationwide protest since the longest nationwide protest since the government decreed an emergency June 12, 1986 to thwart a black revolt against apartheid, the policy of racial separation that reserves power as well as the best schooling and living for South Africa's 5 million whites and denies the country's 26 million blacks a voice in national affairs.

The boycott is the most ambitious opposition effort since the government in February banned political activity by major anti-apartheid groups and the Congress of South African Trade Unions, the largest black labor federation.

New Coloring Book Aims To Help Abused

By CAMILLE A. MENDLER
The Tucson Citizen
TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — To sexually abused children, going through the criminal justice system can be as painful as the crimes that the system must punish.

But a new book, written by Carole DeLuca of the Pima County Victim-Witness program and Tucson police detective Karen Ives, may ease children's fear of telling the truth.

It's a coloring book, called "Traffic Wiggles," aimed at preschoolers to 13-year-olds. In it, an old traffic sign helps children distinguish between a "good" or "bad" touch and walks them through the court system.

"The emphasis of the book is that it's OK to talk and OK to tell," said Ms. Ives, who is a three-year veteran in the police division investigating sexual abuse of children.

"Traffic Wiggles" indicates caution, stop or go in various situations and shows the child what should be done next.

The book was illustrated by Kathleen Bright, a part-time composite artist for the Pima County Sheriff's Department. All the characters are bears and the dialogue rhymes.

"Kids love rhymes. They're easy to read and remember," said Ms. DeLuca, who with Ms. Ives tried out the book on her own children.

"Kids relate well to animals. You don't have to worry about race or sex. Bears are all pretty generic," Ms. Ives said.

The authors hope the book will be used both for prevention and for therapy of children who have been molested.

"It's important that parents read this with their children," Ms. DeLuca said. "The guilt a child feels isn't fair. But if Mommy and Daddy say I'm OK, then I'm OK."

Ms. Ives said, "It also could be used with children not opening up right away (when first interviewed)."

The book also attempts to demystify the intimidating criminal justice system that children must face if their cases go to trial. It introduces children to a policeman, a doctor and a lawyer, and it emphasizes that these people all are children's friends.

"Kids are victims all over again in the court system," said Ms. DeLuca, who as a child was sexually abused by her father.

As part of her job with Victim-Witness, she accompanies children to trials and tries to answer their questions. "Sometimes I take them into the courtroom three or four times (before trial) and they ask a lot of questions. Sometimes just touching things helps," she added.

Videotaping of victims' testimony still is considered a violation of defendants' rights in Arizona. And until such videotaping becomes legal, children will continue to meet their aggressors in court.

Since the beginning of 1988, more than 900 calls have been made to state Child Protective Services officials about physical abuse and molestations.

"It's a lot higher than last year," Ms. Ives said, "but it could be that with more information, children know to tell and talk."

Ms. DeLuca and Ms. Ives obtained funding for the book from the Santa Rita branch of the National Exchange Club, an organization dedicated to fighting child abuse.

Tucson police received the first 1,000 copies. Boys & Girls Clubs of Tucson Inc., the Pima County Sheriff's Department and the Phoenix Police Department have also asked for the book.

Ms. DeLuca and Ms. Ives plan to distribute the book in schools if the book is successful and if they can find a publisher.

Wife Is Nurturing Anger

DEAR ABBY: I have a 10-month-old baby. She is our first child and this was my first Mother's Day. My husband didn't give me anything — not even a card for my daughter to give to me. I was very hurt. I didn't say anything to him about my feelings, but he knew I was hurt.

A friend of mine at work who has a 2-year-old says her husband has never remembered her for Mother's Day either. His excuse was: "You're not my mother."

I finally told my husband (I didn't nag or yell) that I was hurt because he forgot me on Mother's Day. He didn't even say he was sorry.

I suppose the hurt will go away in time, but I wish I knew why he didn't even wish me a happy Mother's Day. — FORGOTTEN ON MOTHER'S DAY

DEAR FORGOTTEN: Some men are not sentimental — and you married one of them. Instead of hurting in silence, tell your husband that special occasions are important to you, and it would make you ever so happy if he sent you a card. And just to make sure he doesn't forget — remind him.

DEAR ABBY: The letter from the person who had been approached by a total stranger who told her to smile caused me to recall that the same thing happened to me.

Just two weeks after I buried "Jimmy," my 18-year-old son who had been killed in an automobile accident, I went grocery shopping. When I saw all the favorite foods I used to buy for Jimmy, I had to fight back the tears.

As I was putting my groceries in the car, I congratulated myself on how well I had handled all those painful memories, when a woman I had never seen before came up to me and said cheerfully, "Smile, my dear,

Dear Abby

nothing can be that bad!"

I managed to get my groceries into my car, got inside and just sat there and cried. Sign me ... GRIEVING MOM

DEAR MOM: My condolences on the loss of your beloved son. Your poignant letter serves to remind us that because we never know what battles others may be fighting, we should never make personal comments to strangers.

DEAR ABBY: A girlhood friend who had been a bridesmaid at my wedding asked me to be her bridesmaid. I accepted gladly. She asked me in April 1987 — the wedding was to take place on Nov. 7, 1987.

I found out that I was pregnant in May, and was due in January 1988. I mailed a couple of pre-wedding gifts to her — a blue garter and a silver cake knife — thinking all was well.

I was later asked not to be in the wedding because I would be seven months pregnant! Abby, I gained only 18 pounds, and at 5 foot 7, 134 pounds didn't look so big.

My real friends thought it was a tacky, tasteless thing for her to do. What do you think, Abby? — UNASKED IN HOUSTON

DEAR UNASKED: Regardless of how "big" you would be, it was small of the bride to disinvite you to be in the wedding party. Shame on her.

DEAR ABBY: You recently ran a letter from a Carlton R. Epperson (retired), First Class Petty Officer, who said he believes that his 11 months at sea without setting foot on land is a record. I am writing this letter to you for my uncle, who is still laughing so hard he can't write.

He served from 1942 to 1946 on the USS Minneapolis CA36 heavy cruiser and spent three years and nine months at open sea. (He has 11 battle stars.)

My uncle, who was both a shellback and a polar bear, has gone around the world seven and a half times in water mileage, and engaged in surface battle with the Japanese fleet at Corregidor, the turning point of World War II — so maybe Mr. Epperson owes my uncle a right-hand salute. I'm sure you'll be hearing from many of the other 2,000 men who served on the USS Minneapolis during that time. Any one of them can verify this. — TONY (GABBY) GAMBINO, NEW ORLEANS

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market headed lower today, running into resistance from sellers after its sharp rally over the past week.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up more than 118 points over the past five sessions, dropped 11.02 to 2,064.19 in the first half hour of trading today.

Losers outnumbered gainers by nearly 2 to 1 in the overall tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 336 up, 656 down and 467 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 21.08 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

Interest rates rose in the bond market this morning. Prices of long-term government bonds, which move in the opposite direction from interest rates, fell about $5 for each $1,000 in face value.

Analysts said the pressure of bonds stemmed largely from inflation worries that have increased with rising commodity prices of late.

Brokers said uncertainties over inflation and interest-rate prospects helped to discourage traders from chasing after stocks with the popular averages near the high end of the trading range in which they have fluctuated for the past several months.

Losers among the blue chips included International Business Machines, down 1/2 at 113 3/8; General Electric, down 3/8 at 42; McDonald's, down 3/4 at 45; and General Motors, down 1/4 at 76 3/4.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks fell .60 to 149.95. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was off .34 at 301.60.

PCMH Says Wastes Carefully Monitored

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Ralph Hall, vice president of facilities services at Pitt County Memorial Hospital, said the disposal of medical waste such as syringes, blood and amputated limbs at PCMH is carefully monitored internally.

Statewide, consumer groups recently have been questioning whether a 1985 state law that forbids potentially infectious garbage to be buried in landfills is sufficient. They argue that there are no federal or state laws to monitor the incinerators.

"We have always incinerated this kind of waste," he said. "We've recently installed a new incinerator to take care of the ever-increasing volume being generated here. It was approved by an inspection of the North Carolina Department of Human and Natural Resources."

Hall said that, regardless of state or federal monitoring, an infection control committee of the hospital sets policies and procedures for what must be incinerated and what can be sent to the landfill. In addition to the materials incinerated, the hospital sends about 1,500 pounds of precompact waste to the county landfill each day. A private contractor hauls this waste, he said.

Cardboard is sent to the East Carolina Vocational Center for recycling. Glass is not being recycled. He said the volume of glass disposed of at the hospital is small, as breakage is considered a serious consideration and most products are packaged in plastics.

Hall said the volume of refuse generated by the hospital is ever-increasing as the patient load grows, so do concerns about the spread of infection. Disposables in everything are the order of the day, he said, creating more and more waste.

Edgecombe Drops Plan For Waste Park

either low-level radioactive waste or hazardous waste.

Those comments by Bardin then received a standing ovation.

Bardin and the other board members, as well as Mavretic, then walked off the stage, ending the hearing.

But moments later, outside an office in which the board waited for more than an hour until almost everyone had left the community college grounds, Bardin said the waste park proposal was "simply not one this county was ready to accept. It seemed to be tearing the county apart. It was divisive."

Because of that, he said commissioners voted "earlier this afternoon ... between 5 and 5:30" not to offer the county as a host for the sites.

A short time later Mavretic, who had been credited with presenting the waste park idea to the commissioners, said the "key" to the board's action in voting not to offer Edgecombe as a waste site was the opposition of industries.

"The decision was because of the industrial opposition, not the peoples," Mavretic said.

Mavretic, who said he had no regrets about presenting the proposal for the waste park idea, said opposition to the proposal was because the names "hazardous" and "radioactive" created negative images.

Mavretic suggested that the Edgecombe experience all but puts an end to "citizen involvement and participation" in siting hazardous waste facilities.

He also suggested that the Edgecombe experience "laid to rest" the idea that "adequate incentives ... a set of incentives would encourage a volunteer."

And Mavretic said the Edgecombe board's decision not to offer the county as a site was "not a good decision as far as economics" are concerned.

"The key reason not to extend an invitation," Mavretic said again, was based on "opposition of local industry. I wish it had been supported in a stronger way by the industries."

"North Carolina must still find a county for low-level radioactive waste and hazardous waste," Mavretic emphasized.

Before the scheduled hearing Monday, about 300 people opposed to the waste park plan held a rally outside the building where the hearing was to have been held.

Randy Davis of Tarboro, a spokesman for the Citizens for Democracy and Safety, speaking from the back of a flatbed truck, suggested that most people in the state thought Edgecombe County was begging for the waste facilities.

"Are we begging for this facility,?" he asked.

"No!," shouted the crowd.

After Bardin's announcement, Davis said commissioners "responded to the wishes of the people." But he said, "I don't think this is a dead issue."

And Jimmie Keel, co-treasurer for the Citizens for Democracy and Safety, said he was "elated" at the board's decision. "It's the best thing for the county. There's no question about that."

But, he said, "Whenever you win a struggle you know you should win ... it's sort of a letdown."

"I feel the commissioners made a very bad mistake in proposing the waste park idea," Keel said. Their action in withdrawing the proposal, Keel suggested, was done "to cut their political losses."

about anything like that."

Edgecombe commissioners, three weeks ago, openly proposed that the county volunteer to host the state's low-level radioactive waste disposal site and a comprehensive hazardous waste treatment facility. But because of public opposition, the Edgecombe commissioners voted Monday to withdraw the waste park plan.

Rather than consider the Edgecombe proposal, Pitt commissioners Monday named three people to a multicounty task force designed to study the effects on other counties of the proposed waste park.

The Pitt board, two weeks ago, adopted a resolution asking the state to delay any action on considering Edgecombe for the site until the impact on the surrounding area could be determined.

And the Pitt board asked East Carolina University's Regional Development Institute to supply the legwork and expertise needed for the study, asked commissioners in surrounding counties — including Edgecombe — to appoint three members to a task force to oversee the study.

Bethel Mayor Frank Hemingway, Commissioner Eugene James, and Phil Dixon of Greenville, chairman of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce board, were named to represent Pitt County.

hope we'll hear from the other counties before the week is out.

"We're still going ahead with it ... just in case."

Edgecombe Rep. Joe Mavretic Monday night confirmed that Edgecombe officials had approached Pitt commissioners on a joint venture.

Mavretic, credited with the idea of bringing the hazardous waste facilities to Edgecombe County, said Pitt officials were contacted to see if there was any interest in a joint venture, in which Pitt would "share in the compensation."

But Mavretic said the Pitt board's "reaction was 'No.' They were not willing to pursue it."

HILLEL ITALIE

Associated Press Writer
Two outs away from a no-hitter, Cincinnati's Tom Browning took on a two-time batting champion and lost. Browning had held the San Diego Padres to three walks and an error through eight innings Monday night. He retired Roberto Alomar on a grounder to third to start the ninth. Up came Tony Gwynn, a .422 hitter against Browning lifetime. Browning fell behind 3-0, worked the count to 3-2 and then allowed a ground single to left. He ended up with his second career one-hitter as the Reds won 12-0.

"When he came up in the ninth inning, I sure as heck had no intention of walking him. I didn't mean to fall behind 3-0," said Browning, who one-hit the Cubs on June 4, 1986. "Once I got behind in the count, he fouled off about four pitches out of the strike zone, so he gave me every opportunity to get him out."

Browning struck out three and was helped by a spectacular diving catch by center fielder Eric Davis in the fifth inning. Davis robbed Shane Mack by fully extending himself as he ran toward left field to make a sensational catch.

"You get involved when one of your guys is pitching a no-hitter," said Cincinnati manager Pete Rose. "Hell, I get involved if one of my guys is pitching a shutout. You've got to give him credit, the guy breaks up his no-hitter, but he completes the other end of the deal and doesn't lose the shutout."

Browning's near no-hitter came just short of 50 years after Cincinnati's Johnny Vander Meer pitched consecutive no-hitters, the only time it has ever been accomplished in the major leagues. Vander Meer performed the feat on June 11 and June 15, 1938.

The last NL no-hitter was on Sept. 25, 1986, by Houston's Mike Scott against San Francisco in a game that clinched the NL West pennant for the Astros.

Phillies 5, Expos 4

Philadelphia's Lance Parrish and Mike Schmidt had two hits and two RBI apiece and Kevin Gross raised his lifetime record against Montreal to 11-3.

Gross, 6-2, allowed eight hits, struck out three and walked one. He took a 5-1 lead into the bottom of the eighth, but gave up an RBI single to Herm Winningham and a run-scoring grounder to Andres Galarraga before being relieved by Steve Bedrosian with two outs.

Bedrosian allowed an RBI single to Tim Wallach, but pitched 1 1-3 innings to earn his fifth save.

Chris James hit his ninth homer in the second inning against Floyd Youmans, 1-5. Juan Samuel extended his hitting streak to 12 games. Wallach's single in the eighth was his 1000th career hit.

Mets 6, Cardinals 2

Darryl Strawberry drove in four runs with a homer and a single as New York won for the sixth time in seven games against St. Louis this season.

Sid Fernandez, 3-5, who had lost four of his previous five starts, allowed six hits, struck out seven and walked none in seven innings. Randy Myers worked two innings to earn his ninth save.

Larry McWilliams, 4-1, began the sixth by retiring Mookie Wilson and Keith Miller on groundouts. First baseman Bob Horner then snagged Keith Hernandez's grounder wide of the bag, but McWilliams muffed the throw for an error. Strawberry followed with a towering home run to right to give the Mets a 3-2 lead. It was Strawberry's 12th homer.

Astros 10, Dodgers 4

Gerald Young reached base six times, scored three runs and stole three bases and Glenn Davis drove in three runs with a homer and a single as Houston won at Los Angeles.

The Astros had 14 hits and stole a season-high six bases. Young singled twice and walked four times. It was the eighth time this season Young has stolen two or more bases. Terry Puhl, Billy Hatcher and Kevin Bass also had steals. Denny Walling had three hits.

Bob Knepper, 7-1, allowed five hits over six innings, striking out seven and walking three. Larry Andersen pitched three innings to earn his second save.

The Astros managed only three hits against Don Sutton in the first six innings and trailed 2-1 before rallying in the seventh against Alejandro Pena, 2-3.

New Mariners Blank Brewers

By The Associated Press

The Seattle Mariners fired Dick Williams as manager because the team was underachieving.

Monday night, in their first game under Jim Snyder, they were world-beaters.

The Mariners became the last major league team to shut out an opponent as Scott Bankhead, Mike Jackson and Mike Moore combined on a four-hitter for a 2-0 victory over Milwaukee.

"It was a great win and a shutout at that," said Snyder, who was named interim manager after Williams became the fourth major league managerial casualty of the season. Snyder managed 14 years in the minor leagues and was the team's first-base coach.

"We all knew something was imminent," Snyder said of the firing of Williams, who was criticized by ace pitcher Mark Langston on Sunday. "When you don't win you lose managers."

"Dick Williams had his way of doing things. I'll do things the Jim Snyder way. I've managed before and I have my ideas," he said. "I've always been an aggressive type manager. I've always tried to force the game."

The Mariners didn't have to force much against Milwaukee, which got all of its hits off Bankhead, 1-2. Jackson retired the side in the seventh and eighth innings and Moore worked the ninth for his second career save and first since Aug. 4, 1986. Moore was moved to the bullpen last week after being a starter his first six years with Seattle.

"Moore came in and did a great job for us," Bankhead said. "He got his first save and that's a big step for him. Hopefully, he'll get enough confidence to become our stopper."

Also on Monday, Billy Martin returned as Yankees manager, but New York lost 3-2 to Boston. Elsewhere, Kansas City blanked Oakland 2-0, Minnesota took Chicago 9-4, Baltimore beat Detroit 5-2, Cleveland defeated Toronto 6-3 and Texas was a 6-4 winner over California.

Scott Bradley and Henry Cotto hit run-scoring singles for Seattle, which was 23-33 and sixth in the AL West under Williams.

"I think in the last couple of days Dick Williams lost control of this club," general manager Dick Balderson said. "I just don't think the players were responding to him at all. I don't think Dick Williams was getting all he could out of his players."

On Monday, Snyder got all he could expect from the Mariners.

"It says 'MGR' on the end of my title and that's my role for now," he said.

Mariners Get Rid Of Dick Williams

SEATTLE (AP) — The Seattle Mariners say fired Manager Dick Williams wasn't getting the most out of his players and had lost control of the team.

The Mariners have never had a winning season and were 23-33 under Williams this year. He had more success with other teams, leading the Oakland Athletics, Boston Red Sox and San Diego Padres into the World Series.

"I think in the last couple of days Dick Williams lost control of this club," general manager Dick Balderson said Monday. "I just don't think the players were responding to him at all. I don't think Dick Williams was getting all he could out of his players."

Williams, 59, was not at the Kingdome when reporters arrived after the announcement.

The Seattle Post-Intelligencer reported in a copyright story today that in an interview at his downtown condominium, Williams recalled meeting with Balderson and club president Chuck Armstrong about 10 days earlier.

"I told them that something had to be done," he said. "I told them they had to do one of three things: Fire me, give me an extension or make a major maneuver, a blockbuster trade."

He said he had no resentment toward the front office, club ownership or most of the players.

"Our guys (the players) have been busting their tails, and they are good people. Maybe they're too nice," he said.

Jim Snyder, 56, the Mariners' first-base coach, was named interim manager. In his first game at the helm, Seattle beat the Milwaukee Brewers 2-0 Monday night.

"This was something we felt needed to be done," Armstrong said. "We think we have a pretty good club that was not achieving its expectations."

Third-base coach Ozzie Virgil, a long-time Williams coach who worked with him at Montreal and San Diego, also was fired.

The question of a permanent replacement was left hanging.

"Let's take it one day at a time," said club owner George Argyros, a Southern California real-estate developer. "Let's get our team turned around and see what progress we make."

The dismissals came one day after Mariners strikeout king Mark Langston blasted Williams for leaving him in a game Saturday against Kansas City. Seattle lost in the ninth inning when Langston tired.

"I definitely think we're a better team than we've showed," Langston said then. "We've lost a lot of close games I don't feel we should have lost, including that one Saturday night."

Teammates seemed to agree.

"I think there was a lack of communication," reliever Mike Moore said. "But that's always been his way. He's always talked to his players through his coaches."

"I didn't like that. You never knew what was going on."

Williams fired back in his newspaper interview.

"The only thing I don't like is our so-called ace pitcher (Langston), who doesn't have a gut in his body, probably will be credited with making this happen," he said. "A lot of things about that young man ... leave a lot to be desired."

Williams said Langston took himself out of games, "didn't have the guts to finish them. He's a self-centered individual, and if he's the ace of the staff they are going to have trouble."

"He doesn't have gut one. He's supposed to be a franchise player but hasn't shown it."

He also noted that he had opposed hiring pitching coach Billy Connors, who said Sunday the relationship with Williams was strained.

Bad Results Get Fitch Dismissed

HOUSTON (AP) — Good trades and bad results added up to Bill Fitch's dismissal as head coach of the Houston Rockets.

"We just felt that we didn't make progress at the end of the year," General Manager Ray Patterson said. "We were playing under .500 ball with pretty good personnel. So we felt it was time for a change."

The Rockets dismissed Fitch as head coach Monday with three years remaining on his contract, a package worth about $800,000.

The Rockets shipped Ralph Sampson to Golden State for Joe Barry Carroll and Sleepy Floyd and also got Purvis Short from the Warriors.

All owner Charlie Thomas had to show for it at the end of the season was elimination from the NBA playoffs by the Dallas Mavericks in the first round. Some fans turned on Fitch during the season that included criticism of the head coach by all-star center Akeem Olatujun.

"We think that we made good trades in getting Purvis Short, Joe Barry Carroll and Sleepy Floyd," Patterson said.

"They integrated into the ball club very well at the beginning of the year. We ran into a series of things where we lost ball games we shouldn't have lost."

Sampson criticized Fitch's coaching methods after he left and Olatujun questioned his coach later in the season.

"All I know is that the players say they are afraid to make a mistake," Olatujun said on March 5. "If they make a mistake, he takes them out. Nobody knows their role on this team. I don't know my role either."

Olatujun could not be reached for comment Monday night but teammate Jim Petersen said Olatujun's comments didn't cause Fitch's firing.

"I don't think Akeem has that ability to make a big decision like that," Petersen said. "What he says may have some impact but I'm sure Mr. Patterson and Charlie Thomas made their own decision."

Petersen, in Fitch's doghouse on several occasions last season, defended his former coach.

"I think if some of the players went in and talked to him one-on-one like I did and Cedric (Maxwell) they'd find there's method to what he does," Petersen said. "He's not a heartless man."

Fitch led the Rockets to the NBA finals in 1986 but the Rockets lost in the second round of the 1987 playoffs and were eliminated by Dallas in the first round this season.

Fitch could not be reached for comment.

The Rockets were the brink of booming an NBA power after the 1986 season with the "Twin Tower" lineup of Olatujun and Ralph Sampson.

But Sampson's trade to Golden State broke up the tandem and the Rockets never were able to gain consistency the rest of the season.

Near the end of the regular season, bumper stickers were displayed in The Summit reading "Ditch Fitch."

Patterson said the Rockets felt the positions of head coach and personnel director should now be divided. Fitch held both jobs with the Rockets.

"The personnel director will have greater responsibility in the area of free agents and we are doing more the European League and the Continental League."

Patterson said Rockets assistant coach Rudy Tomjanovich, a former Rockets forward, may be a candidate for the personnel position.

The Rockets will move quickly to name a coaching replacement, Patterson said. "I think we'll have a coach in place in time for the NBA draft and that's June 28," Patterson said.

Speculation about a new Rockets coach has centered around Kansas Coach Larry Brown.

Women's Amateur Basketball Has Come A Long, Long Way

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Times have changed for women's amateur basketball, especially where the Olympics are involved.

In the three previous women's basketball trials leading up to the games, anyone who thought they had a chance to make the team was encouraged to try out. When Coach Kay Yow opened a mini-camp for the team that will go to Seoul in the fall, the 21 participants were summoned to Raleigh by invitation.

"You have to come a ways to be able to have invitations," Yow said.

"I think we're broadening our base of quality players each year, slowly for this kind of quality, but yet it's broadening," she said in noting this year's competition for a team that will go for a second gold medal to match the honor in Los Angeles. "We do not have a broad enough base of quality players, but it gets larger each year. And I do feel there are more players than in 1986."

Nine of the candidates will be cut before training continues and the team goes to Seoul. But that means the best players are on hand, and as the game grows, it will develop a bigger pool for future Olympic teams.

"I think that's why we can see a women's professional league in this country won't go unless we have a broad enough base of quality players," she said. "But it gets larger each year."

Yow will not have an easy time picking from the field this year, but it is because the tryouts are loaded with talent and experience.

Of the 21 candidates, four got their gold medals in Los Angeles, and in that group are Cheryl Miller, Anne Donovan, Teresa Edwards and alternate Kamie Etheridge. Donovan was a member of the 1980 team that stayed home because of the boycott of the Moscow Olympics.

Twelve of the 21 were on the 1986 World Championship and Goodwill Games teams that won gold medals in Moscow against the Soviets. Eight of those in camp have received NCAA national championship rings.

With all that talent, Yow doesn't expect to have trouble motivating the team.

"My (words) to the team are to know that you have the opportunity and take advantage of it, to know what we have while we have it, and get it done," she said.

Observers see the Soviet Union as the primary challenger, especially because the Soviets have two losses to avenge.

"This is going to be the most competitive Olympics ever," Yow said. "The thing I don't want us to do is think about the Soviets so much that we don't play well against a very, very good team, and that game keeps us from ever having that kind of opportunity" to face the Soviets once more.

"We have to play our best each game, and we have to build and become a better team every time we practice and every time we play," Yow said.

Yow considers China "a really strong team, particularly strong at the forwards." She also added Yugoslavia, Brazil, Canada, Czechoslovakia and several other countries to the list of challengers.

Thus, Yow is sending a scouting team to Malaysia to watch the pre-Olympic qualifying tournament, which starts June 11.

"They have to play hard, they have to do well, they have to get one of those six spots, which I feel they will," she said of the competition. "I think they're going to try to up their tempo. I think we're going to see them try more pressure defense on us, and I think we'll see a match-up zone."

The U.S. will respond with transition basketball, getting players down the floor fast and generally disrupting the opponent's defense with speed. Defensively, constant pressure is the key by stopping the 3-point shot and keeping the opponent's game out on the perimeter and away from the post.

Edwards is the candidate to lead the American offensive attack. The 5-foot-11 guard from Georgia was a member of the 1984 U.S. women's team and also led the American women to the gold at last year's Pan American Games in Indianapolis.

While at Georgia, Edwards handed out 653 assists to top the school's career list. Her 342 steals also are tops, and she left the Bulldogs in 1986 as the third-leading scorer in school history with 1,989 points.

Upset Win Over Hearn's Leaves Bittersweet Taste

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — The joy of victory is underscored when an underdog scores an upset.

There is sadness, too, in seeing a dominant fighter beaten. So while a roar, fueled by the unexpected and the violence of a prize fight, erupted from some 8,000 throats, there had to be a tug at a lot of hearts when Thomas Hearn's lost.

The Hit Man from Detroit, one of most exciting and successful fighters of the decade, fell Monday night before the sword he has wielded mightily so long.

A crashing right to the jaw thrown by 4-1 underdog Iran Barkley lifted the World Boxing Council middleweight title from Hearn's head in the third round.

It left him flat on his back, and although he got up, the fight was stopped a few moments later.

It was a flashback to Joe Louis lying on the ring apron where he was deposited by Rocky Marciano; to Joe Frazier being lifted off his feet by the power of George Foreman; to Muhammad Ali quitting in his corner against Larry Holmes, and to Holmes falling before the fury of Mike Tyson.

It's a scene that can put a lump in your throat, but it is the way it must be in a sport in which men grow old while they are still young.

Hearn's head was high when he met the media after the fight.

"I have nothing to look down on, nothing to hold my head down for," said Hearn, whose only two losses in a 48-bout career were in fights destined to become part of boxing legend — losses to Sugar Ray Leonard in 1981 and Marvelous Marvin Hagler in 1985.

"It's like every dog having his day," Hearn said. "I've had many days and I'm proud of them."

Indeed he has. A champion in every year of this decade, he is the only fighter to win titles in four divisions — welterweight, junior middleweight, light heavyweight and middleweight.

At the post-fight news conference, however, Hearn said, "I guess it's time for me to move aside and let someone else have his day."

Stanford Suffers Through 2 Nightmares In 1st Loss

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — A dream performance by Fullerton State's Mark Beck was only one nightmare defending champion Stanford had to live through in its first loss of the 1988 College World Series.

Beck fired a four-hitter and struck out 13, while Stanford committed six errors, including four in one inning, to hand the Titans a 5-3 victory Monday night.

Stanford, seventh ranked and 42-23 on the year, will have to rebound against No. 3 Miami, 52-13-1, an 8-4 winner over No. 2 Fresno State, 56-12, in an elimination game earlier Monday.

Stanford and Miami play tonight following an elimination game between No. 1 Arizona State, 57-12, and No. 5 Florida, 48-18-1.

Beck, 10-6, made only one major mistake. He gave up a three-run homer to Ed Sprague after Frank Carey walked and Troy Paulsen singled in the third.

"I've had a couple of games like this but this one seems like the peak because it's in the World Series," Beck said. "The ump was giving me the outside corner so I was throwing it there."

"He was in total command the whole ball game," Fullerton State Coach Larry Cochell said. "Pitching and defense win and Mark pitched extremely well."

Fullerton State scored single runs in the first and second on RBI singles by Shane Flores and Mark Razook, then added three unearned runs in Stanford's nightmare sixth inning.

Third baseman Sprague committed three errors in that inning, including one to allow a runner on and another to allow two runs to score.

"I didn't have time to relax after the first error," Sprague said. "I got two more hit to me and the next thing I know it is 5-3. There were no bad hops. They just kept hitting it to me and I just kept kicking it."

"Making the errors hurt, but Beck pitched a good game against us, too," Stanford Coach Mark Marquess said. "He really dominated us."

Stanford starter Mike Mussina, 9-4, took the loss, giving up only two earned runs and six hits in 7 1/3 innings.

In the opener, it was a battle of two teams who didn't want to go home and two stingy pitchers.

Fresno State starter Rich Crane went 10 2/3 innings, allowing only two hits and three baserunners from the second inning to the 11th.

Crane gave up two runs in the first on three singles and a wild pitch, and allowed a single run on a sacrifice fly after Rey Noriega tripled to lead off the second.

"You've really got to hand it to their guy. He shut us down for 8 2/3 innings without a hit and he really turned in a gutsy performance," Miami Coach Ron Fraser said of Crane.

"I just got on a roll," Crane said. "I don't think there was a person I didn't think I could get out for seven or eight innings."

Dirty Team Image Follows Pistons

By Scott Ostler
(c) 1988, Los Angeles Times
Let's clear up one huge misconception before the National Basketball Association finals get under way Tuesday night.
The Detroit Pistons are not a dirty team. They play physical basketball. I know this is true because I have heard several knowledgeable NBA insiders say it. All of these knowledgeable NBA insiders happen to be Detroit Pistons, but would they lie?
"We are not a dirty team," the Pistons say, over and over, like a third-grade class reciting the multiplication tables. "We play physical basketball."
Right. And Wilt Chamberlain isn't tall, he simply has real good posture.
Where do you draw the line between physical and felonious? When the Pistons got into a heated disagreement with the Chicago Bulls this season, Piston forward Rick Mahorn picked up the Chicago coach and threw him into the stands.
No harm, no foul. The coach was unhurt, and Mahorn qualified for the U.S. Olympic team. At Seoul, he will be our country's top hope in the Doug Collins throw.
Bill Laimbeer, the Piston center, is also a physical player. He is the team's toll collector. When you drive through his territory, you must expect to pay. In lieu of cash, which NBA players seldom carry, Laimbeer will accept traveler's checks, teeth, or your Adam's apple.
"As far as the Pistons being rough, for the most part they are," said Laker substitute Tony Campbell, who spent the previous three seasons with the Pistons. "They like the rough and tough game. Tactics."
Tactics? Such as?
"Mahorn is going to push and hold," Campbell said. "His specialty is trying to get guys off balance, make 'em fall. He'll pull you down, or lean on you and then move away real fast so you fall, like he did with (Boston's) Kevin McHale."
"(Dennis) Rodman does a good job pushing under the basket. He'll hold you, then push you out and get put-backs (offensive rebound baskets)."

The Pistons, Campbell noted, will tug on the odd jersey to slow down a running team.
Of course the Pistons didn't invent these tactics, at least not all of them. In the Laker-Jazz series, for example, Mailman Malone accused Michael Cooper and A.C. Green of grabbing Malone's jersey and water-skiing behind him as he ran downcourt.
Quietly, the Lakers believe they can hold their own - their own ground, not jerseys - against the Pistons if the series comes down to a battle of tactics.
"We worked on our trembling drills this morning," Coach Pat Riley said Monday, with a trace of sarcasm.
Still, there's no denying the difference in styles between the clubs in this year's finals. This contrast is best reflected in the courtside celebs.
At the Forum you might see Barbra Streisand, who sings, "You Don't Bring Me Flowers."

The Pistons' most loyal Silverdome celebrity is rocker Bob Seger, who penned that anthem-like ode to chivalry, "Love to Watch Her Strut."

Snow Hill Tops Kinston, 9-6, For 1st Win

KINSTON — Tommy Eason and George Burnette had three hits apiece to lead Snow Hill by Kinston, 9-6, in American Legion baseball action Monday. Snow Hill broke open a tight game with six runs in the fifth inning to take a 9-1 lead. Todd Mewborn started things off by getting hit by a pitch and went to second on a wild pitch before scoring on a single by Burnette. T.J. Johnson reached off an error. A double by Eason scored Burnette. Johnson came home on a sacrifice fly by Shay Beaman. Eason scored off of a base hit by Chris West, who later scored off Cornelius Hill's triple. Cedric Collins then drove in Hill with the final run of the inning. Mewborn added two hits for Snow Hill, which moves to 1-1 and returns to action Thursday against Wayne County.

Whittenburg Returns To State As A Coach

RALEIGH (AP) — Derek Whittenburg, a guard on North Carolina State's 1983 national championship basketball team, has returned to the school as a full-time assistant coach, Coach Jim Valvano announced Monday. Whittenburg will replace Ray Martin, who was promoted from assistant coach to Assistant Director of Athletics. "We're very happy that Derek is coming home," Valvano said. "Derek, as a player, displayed the enthusiasm, dedication, work habits and leadership ability to be a star. I fully expect him to bring into the coaching position the same traits." Whittenburg, who graduated from N.C. State with a degree in business and economics in 1985, was an assistant coach at Long Beach State last year after spending the previous season as an assistant at George Mason. He was a graduate assistant with the Wolfpack in 1984-85.

NASCAR Makes Last Stop At Riverside

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Stock-car racing interest turns to Riverside International Raceway in California this week for a historic 400-miler. Riverside's famed road course will be hosting its final Winston Cup run. Not long after the Sunday race, the track will be demolished and the land used for housing. Meanwhile, Dale Earnhardt will head into the race leading the closest Winston Cup points chase in history, a mere 16 points over second-place Rusty Wallace, 1,621-1,605. The next-closest since NAS-CAR first began using the current points system at the beginning of the 1976 season was Terry Labonte's 19-point edge over second-place Bill Elliott after the first 11 races of the year. Darrell Waltrip ended up winning the Winston Cup title that season. "This race has all the earmarks of being one no one will ever forget," said Labonte. "We've got the closest Winston Cup points ever and virtually everyone in the top 10 right now has won at Riverside at least once before. Add to that the fact that so many guys want to be remembered as winning the final race at Riverside." Seven of the current top 10 have recorded at least one Winston Cup win at Riverside. Elliott is third in the standings with 1,571 points, followed by Sterling Marlin, 1,539; Labonte, 1,527; Bobby Allison, 1,511; Ken Schrader, 1,428; Geoff Bodine, 1,413; Bobby Hill, 1,387; and Darrell Waltrip, 1,358. Being within 350 points of the lead at this point in the season is considered by many to be the same as being in the forefront for the championship, and 16 drivers are within that range right now. Still, there will be a lot of pressure to move closer to the top quickly, Labonte said. That will fall to 250 points by the middle of the season. "The thing is, there are a lot of highly unpredictable tracks coming up in the next few weeks," said Labonte. "With that, you can't tell who's going to end up where by the time we get to halfway." The 15th race and traditional halfway mark in the 29-event Winston Cup season will be the July 2 Firecracker 400 at Daytona International Raceway. The two races before that are the June 19 500 at Pocono (Pa.) International Raceway and the June 26 400 at Michigan International Speedway. Labonte leads the circuit in money-winnings with $450,735, followed by Earnhardt ($415,295); Davey Allison ($394,700); Bobby Allison ($390,290); Elliott ($312,525); Waltrip ($307,960); Wallace ($298,955); Marlin ($260,800); Neil Bonnett ($243,785); and Phil Parsons ($240,035). Wallace became the 18th driver in NASCAR history to surpass $2 million with his third-place finish in the Budweiser 500. Wallace, a native of St. Louis, Mo., now has career winnings of $2,019,868. Sunday's race will be sponsored by Budweiser.

A Bigger Bat Boosts Murphy's Average

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A new bat may be helping Atlanta Braves slugger Dale Murphy out of his hitting slump. The new bats — 33 ounces instead of 32; 35 inches long instead of 34½ — were shipped to Murphy Friday in San Diego, where the Braves lost two of three weekend games to the Padres. Murphy's early results with the new equipment were good. He had five hits in the three-game series, including two home runs Friday night. Murphy said he will continue to experiment with the bat for the rest of the current road trip, which ends next Sunday. Through 51 games, Murphy is batting .235 with seven homers and 21 RBI. He said he is relieved that he has a five-game hitting streak, which started with the lighter bat. "It's a little better, but two things: One, I've got to keep it going. And two, it didn't take too much to get a little bit better the way I was going," he said.

Ueberroth Agrees To A Contract Extension

NEW YORK (AP) — Peter Ueberroth, who two months ago predicted he would be a one-term baseball commissioner, has agreed to extend his contract, The Associated Press has learned. At a meeting of major league owners last week in San Francisco, the clubs indicated they wanted Ueberroth to stay in office at least through the 1990 labor negotiations, a source close to Ueberroth said on Monday. Ueberroth said at the meeting he would agree to an extension that would carry his term through a new collective bargaining agreement. "No length was discussed," the source said. "It came up in a report and took less than two minutes. The details will be worked out." Ueberroth, who succeeded Bowie Kuhn as commissioner on Oct. 1, 1984, is credited with turning around baseball's finances. When he took office, 21 teams were losing money, Ueberroth said. He recently predicted that 20 clubs would show a profit this season. In response to teams' increased fiscal conservatism, the players union has charged owners with conspiring against signing free agents for the last three years.

NEW YORK (AP) — The umpires struck back and Billy Martin says now "it's war."

Martin was back in the New York Yankees' dugout Monday night following a three-game suspension and was under the threat of ejection by the umpires had he come out to argue.

Martin was assessed the suspension and fined $1,000 last week by American League President Bobby Brown for kicking, then throwing dirt at rookie umpire Dale Scott on May 30 in Oakland.

On Friday, umpires' association general counsel Richie Phillips held a conference call with the crew chiefs and the umpires threatened to eject the fiery Yankees' manager if he stepped out of the dugout to argue a call.

Martin had coach Chris Chambliss bring out the lineup card for the Yankees' game against Boston and then was quiet for nine innings as his team lost 3-2.

After the game, Martin announced to the media mob that he would no longer remain silent and he would no longer remain cooped up in the dugout.

"I gave my word to somebody I wouldn't go out," Martin said, "and my word is my bond just as my word is I will file a lawsuit against Richie Phillips and the umpires' association."

"It's a war, but it's a good thing there are no dead bodies. There will be some dead egos though," he said.

Martin said he will be back to his aggressive, and often controversial ways, tonight.

"I'll be out on the field all day," Martin promised. "Every time I want to go out I will go out on the field and I will argue and do everything a manager is supposed to do, and I defy Richie Phillips to stop me."

"The first amendment allows for freedom of speech. In Russia you can gag somebody, but I won't be gagged. Mr. (Richie) Phillips is a lawyer and should know better," Martin said.

On learning of the threatened legal action, Phillips said, "Billy is Billy. There's been some talk, some threat of filing a lawsuit, but it doesn't particularly concern me. It may be just a threat or Billy may file a lawsuit that isn't meritorious."

Martin had said before the game he would no longer kick dirt on umpires. But that act of contrition did not satisfy Phillips.

Phillips, after meeting with Brown during the game, restated the position that Martin would still be "treated differently" than other major league managers.

In announcing the umpire's resolution against Martin last Friday, Phillips said, "From now on, for Martin to stay in games, he's going to have to be an altar boy, sitting there with his hands folded and his lips shut. From this day forward, Billy just doesn't have the same rights and privileges that any of the other managers in the American League have."

And following a day of meetings and calls on Monday, Phillips and the umpires' weren't backing down one bit.

"Billy Martin is the quintessential recidivist in baseball, and Bobby (Brown), in determining the penalty, should take into account his past behavior," Phillips said.

Racehorse Owners Bumping Heads

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — The controversy over bumping horses in the Preakness has evolved into a battle of bumping heads.

Eugene Klein, owner of Kentucky Derby winner Winning Colors, accused trainer Woody Stephens of deliberately stopping his filly from winning the Preakness last month. In the heated dispute following the race, he called Stephens a "hall of shame trainer" for using Forty Niner to battle Winning Colors from the gate and ultimately slow her down.

On Monday, Stephens said the filly's owner has developed a reputation as "Crying Klein" for accusing jockey Pat Day of continuously bumping Winning Colors.

"I don't think he (Klein) really means to be that way," Stephens said while attending a "Legends of Racing" reception hosted by Caesars Hotel Casino. "I was in the Hall of Fame eight years before he ever owned a horse."

"I don't think he means to have the reputation of being a 'Crying Klein,' but that's what he's getting," Stephens said. "All the horse people tell me, 'Woody, we can't believe this man acted this way.' But you know, I feel like he doesn't know anything. He got beat, and that's it."

In the days before Saturday's Belmont Stakes, a lot of dinner talk concentrated on personal favorites. Stephens obviously has his hopes pinned on his entry, Cefis. Others favor Preakness winner Risen Star or second-place finisher Brian's Time.

But the "bumping controversy" still sparked sentiment among jockeys, owners and trainers. Bumping among a crowded field on the track, they insist, is a fact of life in horse racing.

"Bumping is something very common," jockey Angel Cordero said. "It's like driving in heavy traffic."

Cordero pointed to his own controversial experience with bumping, when he rode Codex to a 1980 Preakness victory over the Kentucky Derby winner, another famous filly named Genuine Risk.

"I told them I felt tonight's game would go uneventfully," Brown said.

Brown said he was upset that the umpires expressed their disapproval publicly rather than privately. But he said he did not reprimand them.

"They objected to what Billy did and objected to what he's done before," Brown said.

Brown and Phillips appeared on the pre-game show of Monday's nationally televised game and Phillips again reaffirmed that Martin would be treated differently from other managers.

Brown and Phillips then met privately for 30 minutes after the television interview and Phillips called the meeting positive.

"He wanted to have a fuller understanding of our position and we wanted to give him that," Phillips said. "It diffused what could have been a bad situation."

Afterward, Phillips met with Yankees principal owner George Steinbrenner for about an hour.

Yankees players said they thought the umpires' position was out of line.

"That's a crazy stand to take," said infielder Bobby Meacham, who was involved in the controversial play when the umpires ruled he did not catch a sinking liner. "I can't believe they won't let him come out of the dugout. Billy is tough and he'll stand up for what's right."

The Yankees, already assured of a big crowd with the rival Red Sox in town, got a bonanza of sorts with the Martin-umpire rivalry unfolding before 37,000-plus and a national television audience.

"I came to see if the umpires are going to kick Billy out," said one fan. "They have no right to do that."

Red Sox 3, Yankees 2

Billy was back, but he made no appearances outside the Yankees dugout as the Red Sox came from behind. Martin returned from a three-game suspension for throwing dirt at umpire Dale Scott in Oakland last Monday.

He was under threat of ejection by the umpires if he came out of the dugout to argue and said before the game he would never kick dirt on an umpire again. After the game, he said he planned to sue the umpires' association and its general counsel, Richie Phillips.

"They have no right to tell me how to do my job," Martin said. "It's a war but it's a good thing there are no dead bodies. There will be some dead egos though."

Mike Greenwell's homer and two-run double brought back the Sox after the Yankees got two runs in the first inning.

"On both the double and home run (Yankees pitcher Neil) Allen got the ball up a little and I was able to drive it," Greenwell said. "We've been struggling (with four straight losses) and it was good to win here."

Royals 2, Athletics 0

Like Seattle, Kansas City got a three-way shutout as Steve Farr, Jeff Montgomery and Jerry Don Gleaton combined on an eight-hitter.

Frank White singled in both runs in the second inning, making a winner of Farr, starting for the ailing Floyd Bannister. It was his first victory as a starter since Sept. 6, 1985.

Montgomery pitched 1 2-3 innings of one-hit ball and Gleaton got the last four outs for his second save as Kansas City stretched its winning streak to a season-high five games.

Orioles 5, Tigers 2

Baltimore got just its second home victory against Detroit in the last three seasons as Cal Ripken broke out of a month-long slump with four hits, including a three-run homer, and scored three runs. Larry Sheets had three hits and drove in two runs.

Ripken had gone 14-for-89 since May 9, dropping his average from .316 to .239. But he got three singles and the home run off Jack Morris, 5-7. Ripken has a .370 lifetime average against Morris.

Ripken's homer was the first by an Oriole with more than one man on base since Terry Kennedy hit a three-run homer in Detroit last Sept. 30.

Twins 9, White Sox 4

At Chicago, Tim Lardner homered twice and Kirby Puckett drove in three runs with a two-run homer and tie-breaking double for Minnesota. The White Sox knocked out Frank Viola, who had won nine straight games, with three runs in the sixth inning.

But Dan Gladden doubled to open the seventh against reliever Bill Long, 1-2, and scored on Puckett's double. Puckett scored on a single by pinch-hitter John Moses.

"When they tied it against my best pitcher," Twins manager Tom Kelly said, "I said 'Oh, boy, here we go.' But the boys came back and put the numbers on the board."

Indians 6, Blue Jays 3

Brook Jacoby had three hits and drove in two runs for the Indians, who scored two runs in the sixth on balks by Mark Eichhorn and another on a bases-loaded hit batsman.

John Farrell, 6-3, allowed nine hits in 6 2-3 innings. Doug Jones finished and allowed a ninth-inning homer to Nelson Liriano, the first homer off Jones in 84 innings since last July 24.

Rangers 6, Angels 4

Oddibe McDowell had a pair of hits, drove in two runs and stole two bases in a sloppy game. Jose Guzman, 6-4, allowed eight hits and struck out eight in pitching his fourth complete game. He overcame three errors and several mental mistakes by teammates as Texas sent the Angels to their 12th defeat in 15 games.

"Errors are going to happen sometimes," Guzman said. "You just take a deep breath and go after the next hitter. Last year I'd get mad, then make a mistake on the next hitter."

Randy Travis Wins Four Awards In Music Survey

By JOE EDWARDS
Associated Press Writer
NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Randy Travis, country music's newest success story, displaced the Statler Brothers as the fans' favorite in an annual popularity poll.

Former rodeo barrel racer Reba McEntire was chosen No. 1 female singer for the fourth straight year.

"I hope you all aren't getting tired of seeing me up here," she said. "I sure am enjoying it."

Travis, 29, won four honors Monday night, including entertainer of the year and No. 1 male artist, at the 22nd annual Music City News country music awards.

Travis, a former short-order cook, also won single of the year for "Forever and Ever, Amen" and album of the year for "Always & Forever."

His four honors were double those won last year by the Statler quartet, who had won 36 since their first award in 1971.

"Everybody can relate to our songs," Travis said after the syndicated television special at the

REBA MCENTIRE

Grand Ole Opry House. "We really look long and hard for the right song."

A song like "Forever and Ever, Amen" that has a good message, it's hard not to like it."

The Statlers, of Staunton, Va., were voted group of the year for the 17th time and won best video for "Maple Street Memories."

In the emotional highlight of the presentations, Conway Twitty received a standing ovation as he tearfully accepted the Living Legend Award for at least 25 years of musical achievement.

In his acceptance speech, he introduced his mother in the audience and said, "See, mama. I told you not to worry."

Other winners were: Ray Stevens, comedian of the year; "Maple Street Memories," video of the year, Statler Brothers; Ricky Van Shelton, Star of Tomorrow; Emmylou Harris, Dolly Parton and Linda Ronstadt, vocal collaboration of the year; The Judds, vocal duo of the year; "Nashville Now," country music television series of the year, The Nashville Network cable channel; "Grand Ole Opry Live," country music TV special of the year, The Nashville Network; Ricky Skaggs, top instrumentalist; and The Chuck Wagon Gang, top gospel group.

The two-hour awards show was hosted by the Statler Brothers and Barbara Mandrell. It will be seen on a delayed basis in some cities.

Winners and finalists were chosen by subscribers to The Music City News, a monthly country music publication in Nashville.

Travis became country music's top star in less than three years. His albums "Always and Forever" and "Storms of Life" have both sold more than 2 million. His "I Told You So" is currently the No. 1 record on the country music charts.

He was cooking and singing part time when discovered at a Nashville nightclub.

NBC Holds Early Edge With Sports

By MICHAEL HILL
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

Though most of the country is just preparing for the hot months, it is already the middle of fall for the television industry. That's because it is generally acknowledged that, even if the strike by the Writer's Guild were settled tomorrow, the new network television season would not start until mid-October at the earliest.

The big winner in this is already the champion, NBC, which has the Summer Olympics scheduled during two weeks of September with the World Series following a few weeks later. Those were already expected to dominate the ratings. Up against reruns, their numbers should be gigantic.

NBC also was the big winner when the Writer's Guild announced that 77 independent studios had signed contracts that allow them to go back into production. That's because the shows produced by those companies include NBC's "Tonight Show," "The Cosby Show," "ALF," "Amen," "A Different World" and "Highway to Heaven."

Of shows on the fall schedule affected by the strike, only ABC's new "Roseanne" gets to go back to work under these agreements, while none of CBS' shows gets the go-ahead. CBS' three news hours — "60 Minutes," "West 57th" and "48 Hours" — are not covered by the Writer's Guild contract and neither is ABC's "20-20" nor NBC's reality-based "Unsolved Mysteries."

Actually, NBC's luck in this instance is not luck at all. It's just another payoff of the gamble that the team of former NBC Chairman Grant Tinker and NBC Entertainment President Brandon Tartikoff took when they played their cards in the way that put NBC on top. Not that they planned for a strike, but they did what Tinker always did when he ran MTM Enterprises during its glory days: They surrounded themselves with creative, talented people certain that good shows would eventually result.

Most network executives are big business types who came up in the advertising and selling side of the television industry. They are comfortable with other big business types. So they like getting together with the heads of big studios, not with creative types.

Thus the deals they signed were for shows produced by those studios — Universal, Fox, Warners, Lorimar — where the strike is still in full force. Some of the individuals signed up by NBC work with a big studio, such as the team that produces "Cheers" at Paramount, but many had their own companies or made arrangements with smaller outfits where they felt more comfortable. So they're back to work and NBC is the beneficiary.

ABC does have one rather hefty ace up its sleeve, however. Brandon Stoddard, president of ABC entertainment, is expected to tell his network affiliates, meeting in Los Angeles this week, how he plans to play the 30 hours of "War and Remembrance."

There has been all sorts of speculation on this — a weekly series of one-hour shows, a 14-hour week-long mini-series followed by weekly two-hour movies, two 15-hour mini-series in November and February, three 10-hour mini-series in November, February and May — figuring that people would not sit still for one two-week, 30-hour, mega-mini-series.

At $100 million, "War and Remembrance," the sequel to the very successful 18-hour "Winds of War," was a big gamble for ABC that needs huge audiences to be even a break-even proposition. It would tilt those odds if it could run against rerun opposition. The writers' strike might make that possible. There's some history here; in 1980, NBC ran "Shogun" at the beginning of a strike-delayed season and it did much better than expected in the ratings.

ABC doesn't want to run "War and Remembrance" that early in the game because viewership in September is not as large as it is later in the season when the shorter days and colder weather have more people inside watching television.

RIGHT SOUNDS — Composer Craig Safan works in his small studio in the converted garage behind his home in Los Angeles. Safan composed music for "Cheers" and

Composer Seeks 'Right' Sounds For TV Shows

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Composer Craig Safan was looking for the right sound to express the feeling of NBC's "Cheers."

"One of the most important things a film composer does is come up with a sound for a project," he said. "Every movie and television show sounds different. After reading the first script of 'Cheers' the sound came to me."

"I said I wanted an instrument that sounds like a bar. Jimmy Burrows, who's the director and one of the executive producers, suggested a clarinet. Then it came to me: Woody Allen playing the clarinet at 3 a.m. in a bad band. It's not slick. They're not trying to impress anyone. It's just Woody Allen and a few guys playing because they love to play."

Safan writes the background music for "Cheers." He did not write the theme song that opens the show.

"We do the music for 'Cheers' at a studio," said Safan. "I play the piano."

Safan has composed the theme music for ABC's "Supercarrier" and scores for "The Twilight Zone," "Alfred Hitchcock Presents" and "Amazing Stories." He wrote music for such TV movies as "Samaritan: The Mitch Snyder Story," "Timestalkers" and "Getting Married," and more recently the theatrical feature "Stand and Deliver."

Ordinarily, Safan records most of his music in the little studio in the converted garage behind his home. He works primarily with electronics, but may find a tune in anything from a plastic water bottle to his son's xylophone.

He recorded the soundtrack for "Stand and Deliver" in the studio. His primary instruments were a water bottle and a lag bolt.

"It has a feeling of traditional Latin music in the main title," he said. "But I tried to go into the subtlety. What is this really about? It's about a man yearning to do something specific for people. It never matters that it's a Latin story. It's like saying 'Romeo and Juliet' is a story about two Italians."

"I listened to a lot of Latin music, but there are so many different kinds. Then I began to mimic sounds. I used a water bottle for a conga. I recorded it digitally and played it back through the computer. The guiro is a gourd with little ridges you scrape with a piece of wood. I took a lag bolt and scraped wood along the threads and recorded it digitally in the Synclavier. You can record every possible sound into the computer. That's how you turn a lag bolt into a percussion instrument."

His studio is lighted by skylights. One side is all glass and opens onto what will be a Japanese garden.

Donahues Want To Destroy Home

WESTPORT, Conn. (AP) — Talk show host Phil Donahue and his wife, Marlo Thomas, have upset preservationists because the couple wants to demolish a unique contemporary home on their property.

Although an ordinance provides a three-month grace period for structures over 50 years old, nothing is on the books to stop the demolition of those built during the past 50 years.

"We want architecturally significant structures included in the ordinance as well," said Lucinda McWeeney, chairwoman of a historic survey of 400 Westport homes.

acres overlooking Long Island Sound.

The couple bought the land adjoining their property to prevent construction of a subdivision.

The house is considered a landmark in modern architecture, McWeeney said, and should be preserved for that reason.

"I'm sorry that these people whom I respect would suggest that my only interest is the view," Donahue said. "My main interest is the security of my family and all the children who visit my home during the summer."

The concrete house, built in 1963, is located on the shore at Donahue's property. It was purchased for $6.8 million in March by the couple, along with 7 acres and a guest house next to their $3.5 million Tudor home on 3.1

Opening lead: Ten of ♥
 How important is the opening lead? On this hand, it meant the difference between making a slam or going down. And we can only extend our sympathy to West, for we would probably have attacked with the same suit.

North's decision to jump shift, although based on a fit for opener's suit, was borderline. North's four clubs was a mild slam try, and South took the opportunity to cue-bid his ace of hearts. North needed no further impetus to leap to slam.

From South's spade bid and North's decision to bid slam only after he heard the heart cue-bid, West inferred, correctly, that North's weakness was hearts. Had he known how much of declarer's strength was in hearts, he would certainly have selected some other suit. With a spade lead, South would have had no play for his slam.

Declarer captured the queen of hearts with the king and cashed the ace-king of clubs. He took his remaining hearts for a spade discard from dummy, then cashed four rounds of diamonds. As luck would have it, West was short in both minor suits, and East had to follow suit as declarer sluffed two spades.

All that remained was for declarer to give East his trump trick. Down to nothing but the pointed suits (spades and diamonds), East had a choice of ways to commit suicide. He could either lead a diamond to give a ruff-suff, allowing declarer to discard a spade loser from one hand while trumping in the other, or else lead away from his king of spades. Declarer would let this ride round to the queen in dummy while offering a silent prayer that West did not hold the king.
