U.S. Aids Danish Tanker

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — A U.S. warship fired a warning shot near one of three Iranian gunboats that attacked a Danish-flagged supertanker in the southern Persian Gulf on Saturday, a Pentagon spokesman said.

It was the first time a U.S. warship has gone to the aid of a non-U.S. flagged tanker since Secretary of Defense Frank Carlucci announced in April that such assistance would be provided when requested, Lt. Col. Arnold Williams said in Washington.

The challenge came hours after Iraqi warplanes attacked two Iranian tankers, shattering a nearly three-week lull in the gulf's "tanker war."

Williams said the USS Elmer Montgomery, patrolling the area, responded to a distress assistance request from the tanker at 7:10 p.m. (12:10 p.m. EDT). The tanker was identified by gulf shipping sources as the 337,733-ton Karama Maersk which they said was carrying Saudi Arabian crude oil.

"The tanker reported being under attack from three small Iranian gunboats," Williams said. "By the time the Montgomery got into range, twoof the gunboats had left. One was still in the vicinity. The Montgomery fired a warning shot and the boat departed."

Williams said there were no injuries, damage or casualties to the tanker or American warship. He said the incident occurred about 13 miles south of Abu Musa island.

The shipping sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the island, 30 miles north of the coast of the United Arab Emirates in the southwest gulf, is fortified by Iranian gunboats.

The tanker continued on its course south toward the Strait of Hormuz and the Elmer Montgomery resumed its normal patrol, according to Williams.

Shipping sources said the tanker would have cleared the strait by midnight (5 p.m. EDT).

State's Boaters Cautioned To Keep It Cool And Safe

By JOHN BARE
Reflector Staff Writer

Anyone packing a cooler, piling friends into a boat and frolicking up and down the Tar River this holiday weekend needs to remember to play it safe.

The N.C. Wildlife Commission has officers patrolling waters all across the state, and they are on the lookout for tipsy skippers, careless and reckless drivers and boaters not displaying proper registration.

Sound like the cops? "We've got 215 officers across the state, from Murphy to Manteo. Our responsibility toward boaters is like the Highway Patrol's is toward the motoring public," said Maj. Ray Johnson of Raleigh, who has been with the wildlife commission for 35 years.

With more than 240,000 boats registered in North Carolina, and up to 100,000 out-of-state boats using Tar Heel waters, wildlife officers say July 4 is one of the biggest boating weekends of the year.

"We put a major emphasis on motorboat laws on these holiday weekends," said Sgt. Kay Dunn of Greenville, who supervises wildlife officers in Pitt, Greene, Duplin and Lenoir counties.

The Tar River is a popular water-skiing spot for boaters from Pitt and Beaufort counties, he said, because the river is calmer than the Neuse or Pamlico.

"On weekends there's a fairly large crowd from

Soviet Issues Unsettled

By ALISON SMALE
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — The first Communist Party conference in 47 years ended with the biggest overhaul of the Soviet political system since the 1920s, but it did not resolve the issues that touched off the most heated debate.

Fiery oratory came from workers on the problems of food shortages, pollution and the privileges of the elite. Party members clashed over the new openness of the Soviet press.

With each day of the four-day conference, discussion became more impassioned, building to the spectacle Friday of a Politburo member and his ousted rival dueling before the 5,000 delegates and an audience of millions on national television.

Introducing the most radical overhaul of the political system since the days of Josef Stalin, Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev on Tuesday embarked on a discussion of his reforms in a 3½-hour keynote address.

He proposed to have the Communist Party officials at every level stand for election. This will mean Gorbachev will be eligible to seek a new, strengthened presidency to be elected by the 2,250 members of a representative body to be known as the Congress of People's Deputies. The congress would be elected every five years and meet once a year.

Politburo member Alexander N. Yakovlev, a close Gorbachev ally, said Communists will lose their party posts if they fail to win elections as heads of soviets, or governing councils, in secret ballots of the deputies.

According to ousted Moscow party boss Boris N. Yeltsin, the proposal on the soviets was "so unexpected" that many delegates did not understand it.

Even Gorbachev admitted there was "a certain lack of understanding" for the proposal when he took

Car Bomb Kills Two Outside South African Rugby Stadium

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A car bomb exploded Saturday outside a stadium as thousands of fans left a rugby match, killing two people, injuring 26 and setting nearby buildings ablaze, police and witnesses said.

The minister of law and order, Adriaan Vlok, blamed the outlawed African National Congress, the main organization trying to overthrow the white-led government.

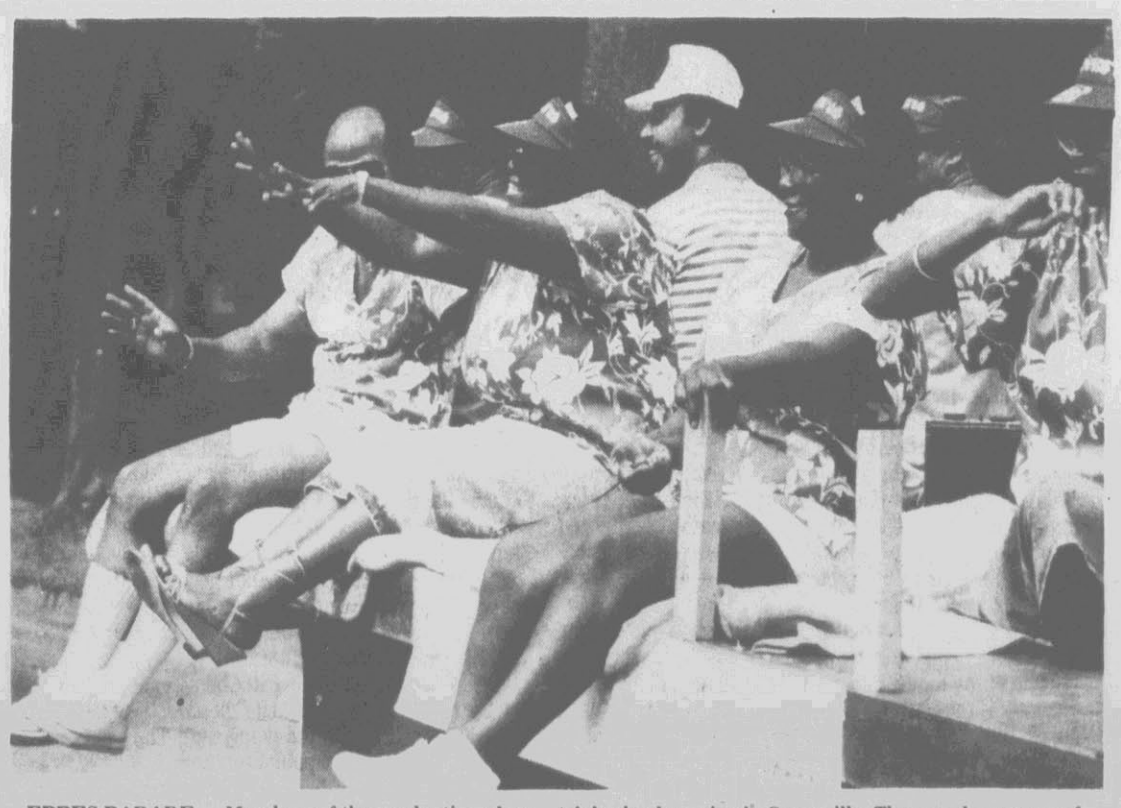

Vlok called the attack "barbaric" and said police will "leave no stone unturned to find the murderers and to ensure the safety of our people."

The blast occurred on a street alongside Johannesburg's Ellis Park stadium minutes after crowds began pouring from the complex following the match. Police spokesman Pierre Louw said the bomb went off at 5:07 p.m.

The rugby players and virtually all the spectators at the game between Transvaal and Orange Free State were white. The stadium is the largest sports facility in the Johannesburg area and seats 75,000.

No attendance figure was available. However, rugby is the most popular team sport among whites and Saturday afternoon matches generally attract at least 25,000 fans.

Police said the two men killed were white and that several of the injured were in serious condition. The injured included 23 whites, two blacks and one Asian, police said.

Appliance Plant May Pick Lenoir

By The Associated Press

White Consolidated Industries of Cleveland, the parent company of Frigidaire, Tappan and White Westinghouse Appliances, plans to build a plant in Lenoir County if the General Assembly appropriates $4 million to extend water and sewer lines to the plant site, according to a published report.

State Sen. Harold Hardison, D-Lenoir, told the Senate Appropriations Committee Wednesday a company has agreed to open the plant, which would create about 1,300 jobs, if the state appropriates the water and sewer money.

Hardison declined to identify the company. But the Charlotte Observer reported Saturday that sources said the appliance manufacturer is the company.

At Hardison's urging, the Senate approved a budget amendment shifting $2.1 million from a $10 million repair and renovation fund for the University of North Carolina to Lenoir County. The Senate budget plan already included $1.9 million for the project, bringing the total appropriation to $4 million.

The House has not approved the proposed expenditures.

Paul Hellinger, a White Consolidated spokesman, would not confirm or deny the company's interest in North Carolina. "I'm not in a position to confirm anything," he said. "I think we'll have to wait on this one."

Hardison said last week the company would create about 1,300 jobs, making it Lenoir County's second largest employer. Du Pont now employs about 2,600 people.

Other sources have indicated the company was proposing a $30 million project.

FATAL ACCIDENT — Rescue workers give emergency aid to one of two persons killed Friday afternoon on N.C. 102 east of Ayden. According to Trooper John Tomer, a car driven by Vernestine Beckwith of Milford, Mass., failed to stop for a stop sign at Venters Crossroads and was struck by a Blount Petroleum gasoline tanker truck driven by Linwood Wethington of Winterville. A passenger in the Beckwith auto, identified as Verna Simpson of Grifton, was killed in the accident. Ms. Beckwith, who was trapped in the car for about an hour, died later at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. Wethington was injured slightly. (Reflector Photo by Thomas Forrest)

U.S. Helps Fired-On Tanker

Radio reports during the incident were monitored by gulf shipping companies. At one point, the U.S. frigate radioed: "Small craft in the area. You are standing in danger. Please clear the area." That apparently was addressed to the gunboats but it was not clear.

Later the Elmer Mongomery radioed the Karama Maersk and asked for an assessment of the situation. The tanker's reply was, "We have no casualties. We have not discovered any damage."

Then the frigate advised the tanker, "I will remain with you until further directed" and received the response, "Roger U.S. warship. We appreciate your assistance."

U.S. military sources in the gulf who spoke on condition of anonymity said that in following the Navy's rules of engagement, the Elmer Montgomery confirmed with the captain of the Karama Maersk that his ship was not carrying war-related materials.

Boaters Urged To Use Safety

Greenville on down, especially around Grimesland," Dunn said. "Everybody knows on the Tar River that there are going to be officers out there. Generally, when you check there, it's the same crowd every weekend.

"The number one violation would be a life jacket violation. The next thing would be registration violations, including failing to display proper identification numbers," Dunn said.

"We issue some (citations for) careless and reckless operation of skis and careless and reckless operation of boats," he said, "and we're going to be looking for drunks operating boats on the July 4th weekend."

It is not unlawful to drink beer on a boat. But it is against the law to operate a boat while impaired, and wildlife officers use the same sobriety test as the Highway Patrol, including touching fingers to noses and walking a straight line — if they can find one on dry land.

"We're going to start putting more emphasis on the OWI — operating while impaired, as they call it in North Carolina," said Officer Milton Jones, who patrols the Tar River from Greenville to Washington.

"They get out on the water and feel like it's a recreational thing, which it is, but they don't understand the danger in it," Jones said. Twenty-eight people died in boating-related accidents in the state last year, and 13 people have died so far this year, according to statistics from the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission.

'It's not really a problem unless they really get carried away with it," Jones said. "Anyone falling down drunk doesn't need to be operating a boat."

After administering a field sobriety test, officers may ask people to take a Breathalizer test. The law does not require people to take a Breathalizer test to be charged with OWI because people do not have to have a blood-alcohol level of .10 to be considered impaired for operating a boat, Jones said.

Operating a boat while impaired is a misdemeanor punishable by up to six months in jail, a $250 fine, or both.

"One of the biggest problems with people drinking on the river is they litter. People throw things in the river," Jones said. "I don't know why people would want to throw things in the river."

Underage drinkers on boats is another problem, Dunn said, but wildlife officers are not sworn peace officers and do not have the authority to enforce all misdemeanors — only felonies and the statutes included in the boating laws.

A bill introduced in the N.C. General Assembly a few years ago would have given wildlife officers the authority to enforce all laws, but Dunn said the N.C. Sheriff's Association lobbied hard against the proposal and it did not pass.

Still, he would like to see wildlife officers given more authority. "There are very many misdemeanors that occur in front of us every day we work, and we can't do anything about it," Dunn said.

Officers do issue citations for careless and reckless driving or skiing, and usually when the waters are crowded, like this weekend.

Careless and reckless is defined as an act that endangers the life, limb or property of someone, and the citations often go to water skiers taking wide swings too close to other boats.

In addition to being sober and safe, boat operators have a number of other requirements to meet.

There must be Coast Guard-approved life saving devices on board for all passengers, the boat must be registered with the wildlife commission and the identification number must be displayed on the front portion of the craft, motorboats need fire extinguishers and boats must be equipped with lights if they are used after dusk.

Wildlife officers patrol inland lakes and rivers as well as the Intercoastal Waterway and the Atlantic Ocean, Dunn said, while the Coast Guard primarily patrols the Atlantic and large rivers such as the Pamlico, but they come inland as far as Pitt County about once a year.

The penalty for violations is a $10 ticket, and first offenders can usually mail in their fine with the ticket.

"It's usually minor stuff that people overlook," Jones said of the most common violations. "There are a lot of people on the Tar River and, for the two years I've been here, they do pretty well.

"All in all, the people in Pitt County expect to see us out on the river and don't mind it," he said. "My job is to help people, and I don't mind doing that. The job is not just writing tickets; we're public servants."

Obituaries

Baker

NEWPORT NEWS, Va. — Mr. Clarence N. Baker, 72, died Saturday in Riverside Hospital in Newport News.

His funeral will be conducted at 3 p.m. Monday at the Lawrence B. Wood Funeral Home in Hampton by the Rev. Tom Hunt. Burial will be in Pinewood Memorial Park in Greenville, N.C., at 2 p.m. Tuesday.

Mr. Baker was a Pitt County native, but lived in Newport News for 35 years. He was retired from the maintenance department of the Newport News School Board. He was a member of the Northampton Church of Christ of Hampton and the Men's Crusader Class within the church.

Surviving are his wife, Lucy C. Baker of the home; one son, Tommy P. Baker of Hampton; three sisters, Margaret B. Smith, Nina B. Weston and Emily B. Mobley, all of Greenville; two step-sisters, Betty Winston of Culpepper and Estelle B. Sutton of Stokes, N.C.; one brother, Burney W. Baker of Greenville; one stepbrother, Lenwood E. Bright of Marathon, Fla., and two grandchildren.

The family will receive friends at the funeral home from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. Sunday. The body will be at the gravesite from 1 p.m. to 2 p.m. Tuesday.

In lieu of flowers, the family suggests contributions to the building fund of the Northampton Church of Christ or the American Cancer Society.

Beckwith

Mrs. Vernestine Simpson Beckwith, 42, of 5 Prentice Ave., Milford, Mass., formerly of the Piney Grove community of Craven County, N.C., died Friday at Pitt County Memorial Hospital following an automobile accident.

Her funeral will be conducted Tuesday at 2 p.m. at Zion Chapel Free Will Baptist Church in Ayden by the Rev. Nathaniel Hollis. Interment will follow in the Simpson Family Cemetery near Piney Grove FWB Church.

Mrs. Beckwith was born in Pitt County but was raised in Piney Grove. She was a 1964 graduate of Newbold High School of Fort Barnwell and a member of the Washington Technical School of Nursing class of 1976 in Washington, D.C.

She is survived by her husband, Jermiah D. Beckwith Jr. of the home; one son, Wayne E. Beckwith of Framingham, Mass.; one daughter, Colette Beckwith of Milford; her father, Shade Simpson of Route 1, Grifton; two brothers, Jimmie Lee Simpson and George Clifton Simpson, both of Route 1, Grifton, and one sister, Stella Simpson Holt of Mechanicsville, Md.

The family will receive friends at the home of Shade Simpson, Route 1, Grifton. Norcott and Company Funeral Home in Ayden is in charge of services.

Bowen

Mr. Robert Wilbur Bowen, 91, died Friday at Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

His funeral will be conducted Monday at 2 p.m. in the Wilkerson Funeral Chapel by the Rev. Douglas Allen. Burial will be in the Bowen Family Cemetery.

Mr. Bowen spent his life in the Ormondsville community of Greene County and was a retired farmer. He was a member of the Kingdom Hall of Jehovah Witnesses of Snow Hill.

He is survived by two daughters, Irma B. Barnette of Ayden and Lillie Dean Bowen of the home; two sons, Wilbur Bowen of Zebulon and Milton Bowen of Hookerton; two sisters, Nina Bowen of Snow Hill and Lena McKeel of Grifton; 11 grandchildren; 26 great-grandchildren, and 10 great-great grandchildren.

The family will receive friends at the funeral home from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. Sunday.

Floyd

FARMINGTON, Conn. — A funeral for Mr. Gentry Floyd, 77, formerly of Pitt County, N.C., will be conducted Tuesday at 4 p.m. at Mitchell's Funeral Chapel in Winterville, N.C., by Elder Elmer Jackson. Burial will follow in the Branch Cemetery.

He is survived by his wife, Lizzie Floyd of Greenville; three daughters, Mattie Brockett and Della Cobb, both of Washington, D.C., and Bessie Daniels of Greenville; his stepmother, Olivia Malone of Greenville; four sisters, Nina Smith, Priscilla Tyson and Esther White, all of Greenville, and Dorris Hanna of Brooklyn, N.Y.; three grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

The family will receive friends Monday from 8 p.m. to 9 p.m. at Mitchell's Funeral Home in Winterville and at other times will be at the home of his wife, 1108 North Vandyke St.

High School Teachers Brush Up On Genetic Engineering

ECU News Bureau

Twenty-four high school biology teachers from eastern North Carolina schools are learning fundamentals of genetic engineering at a biotechnology workshop at East Carolina University supported by a grant from the North Carolina Biotechnology Center and the ECU Science and Math Education Center.

Biotechnology is the study of designing and using living organisms or their processes for the benefit of mankind. The workshop, conducted by the ECU Department of Biology, is an eight-day program of intensive lecture and laboratory presentations of recently-discovered techniques for working with DNA, the material of genes.

ECU officials said the program is designed to equip participants with information and skills needed to include biotechnology in his school sicence curricula. It is one of eight programs at colleges and universities across the state this summer.

"The objective of this project is to inform all North Carolina high school biology teachers about the impact biotechnology is having on science and society, and to provide them with the skills and materials to perform experiments involving DNA manipulations in their high school laboratories," said Dr. Wendall Allen, ECU biology professor.

In turn, Allen said, they will pass this understanding on to students "providing them with the knowledge to make educated decisions about biotechnologically related issues as they occur."

Teachers attending the ECU Biotechnology Workshop include: Dorothy R. Barnes, Farmville Central High School; Ruby W. Jackson, D.H. Conley High School; Mary M. Koonce, North Pitt High School; Nancy B. Wynne, J.H. Rose High School.

Police Check Theft Reports

Greenville police said Saturday investigations were continuing into several incidents reported Friday.

Officer J.E. Fleming said the theft of four window fans valued at $150 from a home at 207 Manhattan Ave. was reported at 9:29 a.m.

Officer J.G. Bridges said an attempted common law robbery in the area of East Fifth and Holy streets was reported at 1:04 p.m. Bridges said a man's wallet was stolen, but later recovered when the suspect dropped it while fleeing.

Officer N.B. Rice said the theft of a black and white television and fan worth $100 total from 405 Bonner Lane was reported at 9:21 p.m.

Officer R.L. Vandiford said a breaking, entering and larceny at 305 Contentnea St. was reported at 9:46 p.m. Vandiford said the thief broke through the home's bedroom window and entered the house, removing a VCR and other items totaling $169.

Officer E.E. Laughinghouse said a breaking, entering and larceny at 1623 S. Pitt St. was reported at 11:29 p.m. Laughinghouse said a VCR worth $600, a portable radio worth $70 and a .22 caliber pistol were taken after the thief gained entrance to the home through the rear door.

Local Man Charged In Shoplifting Case

Greenville Police Officer Alexander Batts said Wesley Alexander Foye, 39, or 7 Ford St. was arrested at 1:30 p.m. Friday following a shoplifting incident at the Foodland grocery store in the Buyer's Market at West End Circle.

Batts said Foye was also charged with assault inflicting serious injury, resisting arrest and damage to personal property.

In other arrests made Friday, Officer B.W. Lewis said Wesley Lewis, 21, of Route 4, Lot 3, Homestead Trailer Park, was arrested at 9:38 a.m. on charges of assault and larceny earlier at New York Fashions on the Evans Street Mall. Officer Lewis said a second male involved in the incident was a juvenile.

Officer J.E. Williams said Cathy Ann Holloway, 32, of Lot 12, Airport Village was arrested for larceny at 7 a.m.

Officer T.E. Nevelle said Michael Jerome Smith, 25, of 1101-A N. Washington St. was arrested at 11:50 a.m. on charges of uttering a forged instrument and attempting to pass a forged check in an earlier incident at the Wachovia Bank in Meadowbrook.

Officer K.R. Evans said Kenneth Earl Scott, 28, of 201 N. Woodlawn St., was arrested at 12:48 p.m. on charges of stealing a set of car keys in the Meadowbrook area.

Officer B.M. Highland said Johnny Gray Bright, 38, of Route 3, Box 520, Ayden, was arrested at 3:50 p.m. on charges of shoplifting two AM/FM car stereos worth $99.97 and $89.97 from Roses Department Store.

Officer J.K. McCarthy said Robert Earl Hinton, 45, of 415 W. 4th St., was arrested on a larceny charge at 4:50 p.m.

Officer J.W. Isenhour said Michael Eric Shorts, 18, of 1511 E. Wright Road, was arrested at Nichols Department store on charges of shoplifting and possession of breaking and entering tools.

Fireworks Show Set Monday

The Greenville Jaycees' Fourth of July fireworks show will be held at the Town Commons along the Tar River Monday beginning at 9 p.m.

Shoplifter Uses Knife To Escape

Greenville police Saturday were looking for a suspect in an attempted larceny involving the threat of an assault with a deadly weapon at the Harris Supermarket on North Memorial Drive that took place at 12:48 p.m. Saturday.

Officer Alexander Batts said a man was putting two cartons of cigarettes in a brown paper bag when he was approached by another man at the grocery. When the second man tried to detain the suspect, the suspect threatened him with a knife, then escaped, Batts said.

Batts also said the theft of a tire worth $50 from a car at 410 W. 5th St. was reported at 8 a.m. Saturday.

In other incidents Saturday, Officer P.W. Worthington said the theft of a color television worth $59 and an electric clock worth $12 from 802-A Tyson St. was reported at 7:07 a.m.

Officer B.M. Highland said a rock was thrown through the plate glass window at the Public Works Building on Beatty Street, causing $200 damage, in an incident reported at 8:35 a.m.

Officer R.L. Smith said a mailbox was damaged at 1801 Rosewood Drive, causing $15 damage, in an incident reported at 8:02 a.m.

Officer J.K. McCarthy said a breaking and entering at 1024 Fleming St. resulted in the theft of two squares of carpet worth $150 total. McCarthy said the thieves gained entry through the rear north-side window of the residence.

Officer T.L. Forrest said the theft of two wallets, containing $225 in cash and a $204 check, from 804 Vanderbilt Drive, was reported at 11:07 a.m.

Plane Crash

ASHEVILLE (AP) — Members of a Clemson, S.C., family were uninjured Friday except for minor scrapes when their single-engine airplane lost power and clipped a utility pole in Madison County, missing a house trailer by only a few feet, authorities said.

The aircraft landed in a grassy field about one mile south of Spring Creek Elementary School. It slid in the grass for about 700 feet before it clipped a utility pole, ripping off the plane's right wing.

The plane's occupants — pilot Brenda Von Tungeln, 28; sister Sonya Von Tungeln, 26, and brother Eric Von Tungeln, 17 — required only minor medical attention.

Developer Wants Tar Power Plant

ROCKY MOUNT, N.C. (AP) — A South Carolina power plant developer wants to put Rocky Mount's reservoir on the Tar River to work producing electricity, but city officials don't like the idea.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission is considering this summer whether to grant a license for the private power plant. Under federal energy laws, the builder does not need the city's approval to take advantage of the city-owned reservoir and dam. Federal laws designed for the energy crisis of the 1970s also make such privately-owned plants profitable.

While federal authorities will have final word on the proposal, Rocky Mount officials worry the proposed plant's appetite for a continuous flow of water could mean a lower reservoir level than they want, especially in dry weather.

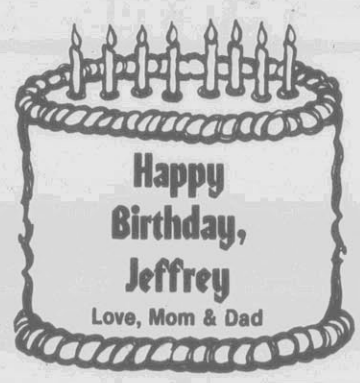

"We just don't want it," Rocky Mount City Manager William Batchelor told The News and Observer of Raleigh. "That's a water supply, not a power source. What we release would not be enough to run a power plant."

An eminent domain provision of the license that could override city objections is "pretty hard to swallow," said Peter Varney, an assistant city manager.

Varney said Rocky Mount built the dam and the 4-billion-gallon reservoir in 1970 with $3.1 million of its own tax and bond money to avoid being beholden to the state, federal or county governments.

"We did it for the reason that we would retain, forever and forever, exclusive control over our water supply," he said. "We're not really interested in somebody building a power plant and drawing down our water."

But the developer, Charles Mierek of Southeastern Hydro-Power Inc. of Spartanburg, S.C., said the proposed plant would use only what Rocky Mount normally discharges.

Legislature's 'Special Provisions' Flesh Out Budget

By F. ALAN BOYCE
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Special provisions, once the battleground for last-minute budget squabbles, have been reduced these days to a kind of budgetary glue lawmakers use to shift funds and clarify laws.

In this short session, more than 140 of these legislative footnotes were melded into the budget — items ranging from implementation of a 4.5 percent increase in salaries for state employees to the stipulation that the Department of Cultural Resources spend $35,000 of its theater-aid money for the Duplin Outdoor Drama Society's production of "The Liberty Cart: A Duplin Story."

Special provisions were used to create a second judgeship in Robeson County, fulfilling a promise made by lawmakers after Lumbee judicial candidate Julian Pierce was killed, leaving District Attorney Joe Freeman Britt unopposed for the county's first Superior Court seat.

While some of the provisions are weighty, they no longer carry the controversy of bygone sessions, when lawmakers accused each other of using the vehicles to raise salaries for friends on the state payroll or to rewrite the Administrative Procedures Act.

"It used to be they'd bring it (a special provisions package) out and give you five minutes to look at it and then you'd vote on it," said Sen. Charles Hipps, D-Haywood. "Some of us have developed a pretty good stable of spies who tell us where the funny stuff is."

The Senate went to the mat with the House the past two years over special provisions that went beyond simple funding adjustments, Hipps said.

"The fact we stopped both of those things dead cold has had a chilling effect on the process," he said.

Still, high-profile programs such as AIDS prevention and education and care for "latch-key" children before and after school are part of the special provisions package this year.

Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, co-chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, said it was the Senate that tried to misuse special provisions in the past.

"The only things I know of that was slipped in was by the Senate," he said. "Most of the time it depends on whose ox is getting gored."

Watkins said when he tried to exempt 20 positions from APA salary guidelines it was only because "the executive branch was trying to override the laws set by the General Assembly. We had to do something."

Officially, special provisions are designed to "further explain what the appropriation does, in some cases it spells out in more detail allocations or distribution of funds," said Tom Covington, head of the Fiscal Research Division. "Agencies may assist us in determining how money can be used or they may want to correct something."

In light of that definition, Hipps said the Legislature still has room for improvement. For example, lawmakers resorted to a special provision directing the testing of first- and second-graders.

"We decided what we wanted to do, they (the Department of Public Instruction) didn't implement it and we had to spell it out," he said. "We probably should limit it even further so we simply clarify what has been an attempt of the General Assembly in certain areas."

Other special provisions call for:

— A legislative study commission on restoring merit pay to state employees.

— Transferring $1 million from the Department of Public Instruction to the Department of Correction to pay for more probation and parole officers as well as some clerical workers.

— The use of $17.4 million allotted to the Office of Management and Budget to build new prison units at various sites.

— Expanding summer school to 12th-grade students who have failed to graduate.

— Bay scallop reseeding under the UNC Sea Grant Program.

— Allocating $1.8 million of Agriculture Department funds for a drought emergency reserve.

JAPANESE-AMERICANS — These Greensboro residents, all Japanaese-Americans, were interned during World War II. They say an apology from the U.S. government is more important than cash awards being considered by Congress. (AP Laserphoto)

World War II Internees Say Apology Is More Than Cash

GREENSBORO (AP) — Japanese-Americans in North Carolina say getting an apology for the U.S. government for moving them to internment camps during World War II is more important than $1 billion in financial awards Congress is considering.

"It's an acknowledgment of a gross violation," said Kikuye Sasaki, 48, a part-time reservation clerk with Piedmont Airlines. "The financial award ... I haven't even thought about it."

"It's the principle of the thing. When you do something wrong, you need to pay a fine," said Miiko Horikawa, a librarian from Philadelphia who was visiting her brother in Winston-Salem last week. "They did something wrong — now they must pay."

"They were putting American citizens behind barbed wire without due process," Miiko's husband, Herbert, said. "This is an outrage."

Legislation acknowledging that the internment camps were a mistake has passed both houses of Congress and is in conference committee. Conferees may act on the measure as early as next week.

Leo Sasaki, 49, K&W Cafeterias Inc.'s vice president for administration and finance in Winston-Salem, recalls playing ball with his sister, Miiko, and other kids at a camp in the hot, dusty Arizona desert, and watching movies on a screen set up outside the barracks.

"I think the kids for the most part didn't know any better, so they had a good time," said Mrs. Horikawa.

But viewing the internment of 120,000 Japanese-Americans as adults, their years of confinement can only be considered a national disgrace, the Sasakis and the Horikawas said.

Japanese-American activists, as well as administration sources, are optimistic that President Reagan will sign the bill into law.

"He was a former governor of California, so he knows what happened," said Grayce Uyehara, executive director of the Japanese-American Citizens League's legislative action committee, which has lobbied for the bill's passage.

In addition to acknowledging a mistake, the legislation would approve $20,000 cash payments to each of 60,000 internment camp survivors, for a total of $1.2 billion paid out over 10 years, beginning with the oldest survivors.

The measure appears to have enough support in Congress to pass. But some legislators, including Rep. Howard Coble, R-N.C., who opposes the measure, are concerned about approving more than $1 billion during a time of tight budgets.

"This is not the way to remedy the situation," Coble, who lives in Greensboro, said Thursday. "We're trying to buy back what may have been wrong. If we were rolling in money, that would be one thing."

Coble, who acknowledged that Japanese-Americans were treated unfairly, said he could support a public apology.

In the early months of World War II, the U.S. government found it easy to trample on the rights of Japanese-Americans, internment survivors say.

The Japanese had bombed Pearl Harbor several months earlier, and anti-Japanese sentiment was strong. When President Franklin D. Roosevelt issued an executive order Feb. 19, 1942, sending Japanese-Americans along the West Coast to the camps, there was little opposition.

The Japanese-Americans were forced from their homes with little more than the clothes on their backs.

Court Backs Appeal By Robeson Indians

RALEIGH (AP) — The 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals has ruled in favor of two Tuscarora Indians jailed without bond since their arrest Feb. 1 on federal hostage-taking charges, one of their attorneys said Saturday.

In a telephone interview from New York, attorney William Kunstler said he had just been informed by a special delivery message that the court ruled a magistrate did not provide a timely detention hearing for Eddie Hatcher, 30, and Timothy Jacobs, 19.

"Imagine, they have lost a half-year of their lives," Kunstler said.

The three-judge panel, which issued its decision in Richmond, Va., on Thursday, sent the case back to U.S. District Court in Raleigh for "prompt determination of appropriate conditions of pretrial release," Kunstler said.

"We hold that the magistrate's failure to hold a detention hearing on Feb. 2, 1988, or within five calendar days thereof, constitutes a flat violation of the critical time requirements of the statute," he read from the ruling.

"More importantly, to countenance findings of waiver would seriously undermine a difficult balance struck by Congress between concerns of public safety and constitutional concerns related to an accused's interests in retaining his or her liberty until proven guilty. We therefore reverse the District Court's detention order as fatally flawed by the failure to hold a timely detention hearing," the judges said.

Hatcher and Jacobs are scheduled to be tried July 11 on charges of hostage-taking and manufacturing illegal firearms in connection with a Feb. 1 incident in which up to 20 people were held hostage at The Robesonian newspaper offices in Lumberton.

The hostages were freed after the two negotiated a deal that included the establishment of a state task force to investigate their charges of alleged corruption among Robeson County officials.

Hatcher and Jacobs, who are being held in the Craven County Jail in New Bern, were previously held at the Federal Correctional Institute at Butner, the Cumberland County Jail in Fayetteville and the Onslow County Jail in Jacksonville.

The two men went before Magistrate Wallace Dixon Feb. 2 but didn't have their detention hearing until Feb. 17. At that time, Dixon ordered them held without bond.

Kunstler said Dixon contends the two Indians waived their detention hearing, saying they were afraid to be released. But Kunstler said defendants cannot legally waive their own hearing.

Attorneys for Hatcher and Jacobs appealed in April before U.S. District Court Judge Terrence Boyle, but he upheld the magistrate's decision.

"A lot of the delays here are the judges ... they just don't give a damn about the Indians," said Kunstler, who is with the Center for Constitutional Rights.

Green Crops Aren't Always The Best

MORGANTON, N.C. (AP) — One of North Carolina's cash crops is thriving despite the drought, and the dry conditions are making it easier for law enforcement officials to find the illegal marijuana fields.

That's because cultivators of the illegal but highly profitable crop tend to grow it in small plots using sophisticated irrigation, and the green fields stand out among the parched ones, authorities say.

"When it's drought season like this, they've got to grow their plants close to water, where the areas are not as dense as they'd like," said Burke County sheriff's Capt. Robin Dale. "When we search from the air, we can concen trate around water."

North Carolina's leading legal cash crop is tobacco — worth $738.4 million in 1987, agricultural officials say.

But by some estimates, marijuana is the state's real No. 1 cash crop.

Last year, according to the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws, the N.C. crop was worth $1.4 billion, making North Carolina the nation's fourth-largest marijuana-producing state.

That was after law enforcement officials pulled up 89,273 plants and made 204 arrests.

This year, Burke County officials have found 1,116 marijuana plants. The plants looked as healthy as in years when there was plenty of rain, Dale said.

"Marijuana growers are using technology to get an edge," said Jon Geptman, national director of NORML. "When you think of the value of the plant — $1,000 to $3,000 per pound, 1 pound per plant — it's well worth whatever it takes to get water to that plant."

Since the State Bureau of Investigation (SBI) began keeping statistics in 1983, it has found the most marijuana in northwestern and western North Carolina, especially Wilkes, Burke and Henderson counties — all in the area hard hit by the drought.

With farmers losing legal crops to the drought, the high profitability of marijuana-growing could entice many, Geptman said.

Although he predicts the drought may kill up to 20 percent of the nation's marijuana crop, "that will only drive the prices up."

"It's like the oil business: When oil prices are high, people drill," Geptman said.

Scott, Jordan Say Magnet School Plan Leaves Questions Unanswered

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin's plan to establish up to 20 vocational education "magnet" schools has drawn questions from the president of the state community college system and criticism from his re-election opponent.

Martin unveiled the plan June 25 during his campaign debate with Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, but offered few details. He said in an interview he hadn't put a price tag on the project, which is among the initiatives he said he'd push if elected to another term.

Last week, Jordan's camp described the magnet-school proposal as a hastily conceived gimmick, designed to offset a perception that Martin has been a do-nothing governor.

"It sounds like he's trying to come up with a new idea to solve a problem he's neglected for the first four years of his term," said John Crumpler, Jordan's campaign manager.

Tim Pittman, Martin's campaign spokesman, said the idea had been on the drawing board for some time. "It's not something conjured up for the debate," Pittman said.

The job of selling the plan to the education establishment was under way last week. Martin discussed it at the Capitol with former Gov. Bob Scott, president of the community college system.

Scott said the idea of establishing high schools to focus on vocational training had "been around for awhile, but never has taken hold in North Carolina in the past. I'm not sure why."

He reacted cautiously to Martin's poposal, saying it was worth a look but raised questions about funding, the schools' mission, their public perception and the effect on existing vocational education programs.

The program remains in the planning stage, Pittman said. But as currently envisioned, it would offer an alternative for high-school students who want to develop skills to enter the work force immediately after graduation instead of going to college.

The key to the program's success would be enlisting the support of the business community, Pittman said. That's because Martin wants to guarantee a job for every student who graduates from a vocational magnet school.

"In the governor's approach, there is a group of business leaders who would serve as a school's board of directors," Pittman said. "They would have direct influence on the curriculum and other factors so the school would prepare the students for the jobs that will be available."

Enrolling in the magnet schools would not rule out college for students who decide they want additional schooling, Pittman said. Although the magnets would focus on vocational training, they also would provide instruction in the "basics" — English, mathematics and social studies — required for any high school diploma.

Graduates of the magnets would be qualified to enroll in a junior college and later transfer to a four-year college or university, Pittman said. Or, they could return to a regular high school and resume the college-prep curriculum.

"The point is it would guarantee a job for students who don't go to college," he said. "But it would maintain the flexibility which would be necessary in any high school program. So if a student decides he wants to pursue an English degree in a regular university he could do that."

Jordan says he favors expanding "Tech Prep," an experimental program at Richmond County High School that offers students a choice between a technical track and the traditional college-prep track. Students who opt to concentrate on technical studies could further develop their skills at a community college or technical school, he said.

Statewide Tech Prep is part of an anti-dropout package Jordan unveiled earlier this year. Other components are providing before- and after-school care to children of working parents; persuading the business community to reduce the work hours of their part-time student employees on a promise of full-time employment after they graduate; and denying driver's licenses to minors who quit school.

Scott said his talk with Martin left unclear whether the magnet program would downgrade the vocational education classes already in high schools — and if so, whether teachers of those classes might have reason to fear for their jobs.

Pittman said the new program was not intended to disrupt existing ones.

"We're not talking about displacing any teachers or thwarting any programs in the high schools now," he said. Current vocational ed classes merely supplement the regular curriculum, whereas the new program would put greater emphasis on preparation for the working world, he said.

"This would be a focused and dedicated program where a student is led on an educational path toward a job," he said.

Scott voiced concern that the program would siphon off money from the community-college budget "and we've been skinned all we can be skinned." Transporting the students to and from the schools, which Pittman said probably would be located in bigger cities, poses another problem, Scott said.

A further concern is how the public would view the magnet schools, Scott said. Historically, he said, development of such institutions has been hampered by a perception that students attending them would be unable to "cut it" at a regular high school.

Rule Boosts Need For Legal Seminars

RALEIGH (AP) — A new rule requiring North Carolina's 10,000 lawyers to complete at least 12 hours of continuing education a year has more than doubled the demand for seminars, legal groups say.

And several continuing education organizations, seeing a potentially lucrative market, are lining up to offer them.

"It has created a huge demand for seminars and has provided a tremendous opportunity for providers of continuing legal education," Wilson attorney Henry C. Babb Jr., president of the N.C. Academy of Trial Lawyers, said.

"It has generated a tremendous increase in revenues for our organization, and I'm sure it's been the same for others," he said.

Last October, the state Supreme Court ruled that starting Jan. 1 lawyers must complete at least 12 hours of continuing education annually.

The N.C. State Bar can suspend the license of any lawyer who does not complete the work. A lawyer must complete the course work and pay a $250 fine to get the license returned.

Organizations that traditionally offered continuing education classes, such as the academy and the N.C. Bar Association, greatly have increased the number of seminars this year compared with last year.

In addition, dozens of out-of-state organizations are asking the State Bar for accreditation to offer seminars. The State Bar, the regulatory agency for lawyers, must approve all continuing education classes, and lawyers must tell the bar what classes they attended.

Educational seminars can be profitable. A typical one-day seminar usually costs $90 to $120 per person, and some groups report that 500 or more lawyers have attended classes, even before the new rule.

Allan B. Head, executive director of the N.C. Bar Association, a lawyers' professional group, said the lure of profits has him concerned about the motives of some organizations now coming to the state.

"We know that in other states when they go to mandatory requirements, there's a tremendous influx of CLE (continuing legal education) providers who really aren't interested in quality service," Head said. "I'm not accusing all of those folks of just trying to make a buck, but there are some."

Head said many lawyers have been taking continuing education classes all along. But he agreed the new rule increased demand and said his office hired two employees to help handle the load.

North Carolina is one of 38 states requiring the continuing education classes, which are designed to keep lawyers abreast of changes in state and federal laws.

M. Jo Frenette, continuing education coordinator for National Business Institute Inc. in Eau Claire, Wis., said the new-found demand for classes in North Carolina is similar to what has happened in other states.

Ms. Frenette said the institute had offered about six seminars annually in North Carolina for the past five years, but expects that to increase to 10 or 12 this year.

Ferry In Service

OCRACOKE, N.C. (AP) — The state's newest ferry began its maiden voyage Friday morning from Cedar Island to Ocracoke, just in time for the holiday weekend traffic.

The $2.7 million Carteret sailed at 8:15 a.m., more than a month ahead of schedule, officials with the N.C. Department of Transportation said.

The 161-foot ferry carries up to 30 cars and 200 people and is more modern and comfortable than Cedar Island's other two ferries, the Pamlico and the Silver Lake.

With three ferries on the route, the transportation department has expanded its daily schedule to include six, rather than four, round trips to the island.

So far this year, about 297,800 people have passed through three state ferry landings on their way to Ocracoke, transportation officials said.

Gantt Says Blacks Must Raise Goals To Succeed Academically

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Poor performances in school by black children cannot all be blamed on the school system, former Charlotte Mayor Harvey Gantt told the 12th annual North Carolina Black Leadership Caucus this weekend.

"Too many kids today say if I can just pass, if I can just get a C," Gantt said Friday. "And too many leaders have the same expectation that if they can just pass. I don't want them just to pass. They can do just as well (academically) as they've done athletically.

"They do well athletically because they practice more," he said.

If the gaps in grades and test scores between blacks and other students remain, people will wonder if something is wrong with the black students, Gantt told about 150 people at Mount Zion Baptist Church. He called on parents to instill an attitude of excellence in their children.

Politically, Gantt argued that blacks can no longer afford to be divided on the issues and candidates they support. Blacks make up 22 percent to 25 percent of the state's registered voters, and they must use that strength, Gantt said.

"In a close election year, everybody wants you because you make all the difference," he said. "But you won't make a difference when you're scattered, or when you're divided or mad. We can't afford to squander this election."

Leaders must help define the issues important to blacks so that voters can elect candidates who will address those concerns, Gantt said. Then, systemwide change that benefits the black community can occur, he said.

Gantt encouraged blacks to trust each other more in the economic sector. Black consumers don't trust or respect black businesses, and black businessmen don't provide the level of service that they should, he said.

More emphasis must be placed on blacks becoming producers in the marketplace, he said. Blacks spend less than 10 percent of their income in the black community, and this must be changed, he argued.

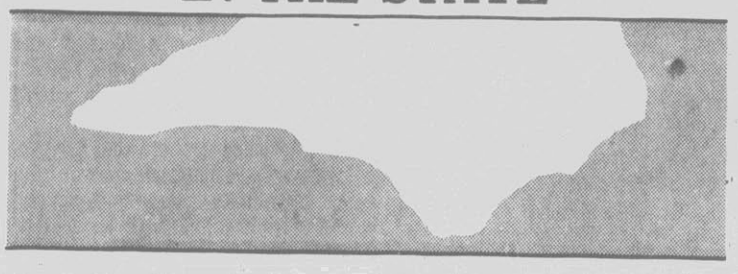

"To have political power without having economic power is like having a nice car with no gas," Gantt said.

IN THE STATE

Late Books

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — About 40 library books are back in the hands of Cumberland County librarians after spending between 30 and 80 years stacked in two boxes in the attic of a Fayetteville landmark.

Dusty, dirty and deteriorating, the books include a 196-year-old volume of English history and a series of Charles Dickens novels.

The books were found boxed and stored in a corner of the attic of the Market House, along with a wooden clock hand, two 48-star American flags and a glass bottle. They were discovered by architects researching the Market House as part of a renovation project.

The Market House was used as a library from 1910 until 1952, library officials said.

Haylift

GREENSBORO (AP) — Farmers in four Piedmont counties have so far promised several truckloads of hay and expense money for truck drivers to deliver it to the bone-dry Midwest.

"There is going to be enough for eight or nine truckloads of hay," Alamance County agricultural extension agent Paul Walker said from his office in Graham. He's also received about $170 for expenses of truck drivers who have pledged to haul the hay for free.

Walker and Guilford County extension agent Tony McGaha sent 500 letters of appeal to farmers in Guilford, Rockingham, Alamance and Randolph counties earlier this week.

Courtroom Cameras

RALEIGH (AP) — Reporters will be allowed to use hand-held tape recorders with permission from the judge under an extension of North Carolina's experimental cameras-in-the-courtroom program approved by the state Supreme Court.

The court approved a two-year extension of the experiment and added a provision that "hand-held audio tape recorders or camera-mounted video-audio recorders may be used upon prior notification to, and with the approval of, the presiding judge; such approval may be withdrawn at any time."

The ruling extends the experiment approved in September 1982 until June 30, 1990. The project had run out Thursday.

Charged

HILLSBOROUGH, N.C. (AP) — A former Durham County jailer has been charged with murder in the 1985 disappearances of two Orange County men, and officials say an indictment will be sought next week charging a former Durham police officer.

Orange County District Attorney Carl Fox said the bodies of Thaddeus Hayes and Curtis Bane had not been found. The two men vanished in July 1985 while working on a fence near Bane's home.

"Based on the evidence we've collected, I am certain these individuals are dead. But where they are is another matter," Fox said.

Charles Antonio Buchanan, 34, a former Durham County jailer who now lives in the Warren County town of Wise, was charged Friday with two counts of first-degree murder. Fox said he would seek murder indictments next week for former Durham police officer Lentz Craig Franklin.

Franklin, who was fired from the department several years ago, currently is serving a 20-year jail sentence in Troy for several armed-robbery convictions that followed a five-year tenure as an officer.

Insurance Hike

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina's insurance industry has asked for an overall 6.4 percent increase in automobile insurance premiums, while it fights a state order to reduce rates in court.

The request filed Friday seeks a 10.4 percent increase in liability insurance rates and a 0.7 percent increase for physical damage coverage effective Jan. 1, 1989.

The request came three months after the N.C. Rate Bureau implemented higher rates while it appeals an order to lower auto rates to the N.C. Court of Appeals.

Party Swtich

ASHEVILLE (AP) — Buncombe County Sheriff Buck Lyda, who was elected in 1986 on a Republican ticket, says he will change his political party affiliation to Democrat.

Lyda, a registered Democrat since 1956, changed to Republican in 1986 to run for sheriff. He defeated Democrat Thomas H. Morrissey with 26,868 votes to the incumbent's 22,153.

Charlotte May See Forced Busing Go

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A new member of the Charlotte-Mecklenburg school board says the school system, like others across the nation, should replace mandatory cross-town busing with a voluntary system that includes more neighborhood and magnet schools.

"I don't think forced busing is going to be here in 10 years," says Jan Richards, who was elected to the school board in May.

She said she believes a majority of the school board could be against busing as soon as 1990.

In two years, four seats will be open on the nine-member board. Ms. Richards says her supporters already are working to find candidates to fill those seats.

"In two years, more people are going to un the same way I did," she said. "Eventually they will make the majority rule."

And if a majority of the school board votes to bring the case back to court, the judge who ordered desegregation in 1970 — James McMillan — probably will have retired, Ms. Richards says. A new judge could probably rule against busing, she says.

"That's how busing's going to end in Charlotte," she says. "It's not going to happen overnight."

Charlotte-Mecklenburg school board chairman Ashley Hogewood says he believes the pupil-assignment plan — which relies on busing to desegregate — is solid, has broad community support and will survive.

"I foresee in this next decade a continuing commitment to a desegregated system," he says. "I think the pressures will come at making certain each child receives an appropriate education at whatever school we assign them."

Supt. Peter Relic will focus on educational quality to ensure continued support for busing.

"We need to continue to focus on what's at the end of the bus ride," he says, "then people will say, the fact that the bus ride is sort of long and inconvenient, we can live with that."

But, nationally, schools are resegregating. Milwaukee and Prince Georges County, Md., are using magnet schools instead of busing. And Norfolk, Va., in 1986 won a court ruling allowing it to dismantle its busing plan.

Some desegregation experts predict schools will be so segregated in 30 years that most middle-class parents — black and white — will send their children to private schools, while public schools will be the domain of the poor and the nonwhite.

Duke Appoints Acting Chief

DURHAM (AP) — Dr. William G. Anlyan, the head of Duke University Medical Center, will split time between that position and the chancellorship until his successor is chosen and in place, a Duke spokesman said.

In November Duke President H. Keith H. Brodie announced that Anlyan would end his leadership of the medical center and take the chancellor's seat Friday.

"He continues to function as chancellor for health affairs. And he has already taken on much of the new job as time permits," Leonard Pardue, associate vice president and director of university relations, said Thursday.

Pardue said he hopes a successor to Anlyan will be selected by late summer or early fall.

Court Orders Death Sentence In Two Torture Murders

By LEE LINDER
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A jury that convicted Gary Heidnik of killing two women in his basement torture chamber, including one who died by electrocution, ordered Saturday that he die in the electric chair.

"Now my sister can rest in peace. I feel happy," said Denise Dudley, sister of electrocution victim Deborah Johnson Dudley. "We got what we wanted. He's going to die."

Jurors deliberated nearly two hours before choosing death sentences instead of life imprisonment for the two first-degree murder counts on which they convicted Heidnik on Friday.

The panel, chosen in Pittsburgh because of pretrial publicity here, also had convicted him of kidnapping and rape in the imprisonment of four other women in his Philadelphia row house.

Common Pleas Judge Lynne Abraham thanked the jurors, dismissed them and formally imposed one of the death sentences. That will allow the the 44-year-old defendant to be removed from the city's overcrowded prison system and placed in a state prison.

"I don't feel very good," Heidnik's lawyer, A. Charles Peruto Jr., said after the two death verdicts.

Peruto, who had presented an insanity defense, said Heidnik "really didn't express anything over the verdict or over the penalty." Heidnik showed no emotion as the jury forewoman read the sentence.

Heidnik, who has been under treatment for schizophrenia for 25 years, has been receiving a drug that tends to keep him sedated.

Peruto said Heidnik was insane and was mentally ill when he committed the crimes between November 1986 and March 1987.

"This man is legally sane and he knew what he was doing and he did it with torture," Assistant District Attorney Charles Gallagher said in arguing for the death penalty. He said later he was "gratified" with the jury's decision.

Besides the two murder charges, Heidnik also was found guilty Friday of kidnapping, rape, aggravated assault and involuntary deviate sexual intercourse. He was acquitted on one count of the latter charge.

The judge set Oct. 5 for sentencing on those charges, formal sentencing on the second murder conviction and a post-trial hearing. The judge told Peruto to file motions for a new trial, even though the attorney had indicated earlier that his client wasn't interested in an appeal.

"I'm going to file an appeal," Peruto said Saturday. "I don't know if he wants an appeal or not. The only discussion we've had on this is that he wants to get it over with."

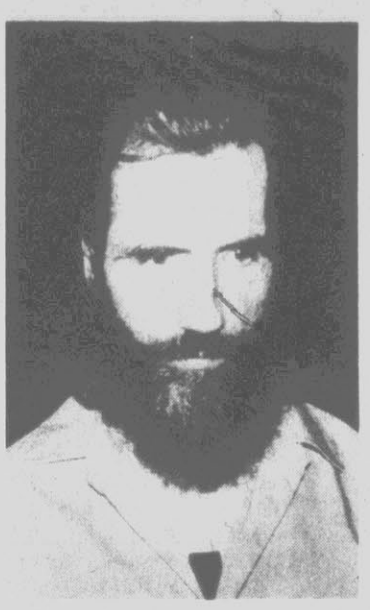

Even without an appeal, the death sentences will automatically be reviewed by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court.

No one has been executed in Pennsylvania since 1962, but there are more than 80 people on death row in the state. A technical challenge to the state's execution law is currently before the state's high court.

During the trial, the jury heard testimony about how Heidnik lured six women, imprisoned them in his basement, repeatedly raped and tortured them, and eventually killed two of them.

One woman, Sandra Lindsay, died while being chained to a rafter, and Heidnik sawed up her body and fed part of the remains to the other captives, according to testimony. Ms. Dudley was electrocuted when Heidnik touched live wires to her chains while she stood in a water-filled pit, according to testimony.

"I was hoping for death. It's what he deserves," said Teresa Lomax, sister of Ms. Lindsay. "He's going to die, and he should die."

Five Firefighters Die In One Blaze

HACKENSACK, N.J. (AP) — Flags flew at half staff throughout the city Saturday for five firefighters killed in one fire, and condolences came in from other firefighters from around the nation.

The men killed Friday in a car dealership fire were the first firefighters killed in action in Hackensack, and their department brought in counselors to help its 91 members cope with their loss.

Fire Chief Anthony Aiellos said a police captain from Fort Lee and two assistants who have had counseling experience met twice with Hackensack firefighters in an effort to alleviate "this type of stress. This hasn't happened in the city before."

"This only happens in other cities, you know?" he said at a news conference.

Firefighters and law enforcement officials from across the country sent messages of condolence, Aiellos said.

"We've had calls from Texas, Atlanta, Georgia, the New York City Fire Department, It's very touching," Aiellos said.

Flags throughout the city were lowered to half-staff, black bunting draped a firehouse and Aiellos began meeting with the victims' families Saturday to try to comfort them.

"I'd just like to say there may be as good firefighters in the country, in the world. There's no better, absolutely none better," Aiellos said.

"I've seen these guys in operation. When the time comes, they do their job, no matter the risk involved,' he said.

The firefighters were killed instantly when the building's interior roof collapsed at Hackensack Ford and Mazda. The firefighters were trying to cut a hole in the ceiling so they could extinguish the fire burning between the false ceiling and the roof.

Aiellos said the dealership, which he estimated was 30 years old, met existing building codes when it was constructed. But revised codes probably would have forced the owners to rethink the design, he said. He did not say how the construction might have been different under current fire codes.

Virginia Farmers Send Hay To Ohio

COLDWATER, Ohio (AP) — Trucks carrying some 2,000 bales of donated hay for drought-stricken farmers arrived here Saturday as Virginia farmers returned a favor granted by their Ohio counterparts during a drought two years ago.

Four trucks rolled into this Mercer County village in western Ohio shortly before noon and about 50 farmers who were involved in the 1986 haylift to Virginia lined up for free hay.

Each farmer received 40 bales, or about enough to feed an average Mercer County herd of cows for one day. Virgil Dues, who operates a farm with about 200 head of cattle, was the first farmer to get his hay.

"One bale is good, two bales is better," Dues said. "We're going day-by-day. There is nothing we can do about (the drought) right now."

Ralph Heyne, who operates a nearby cattle farm, said he donated about 1,500 bales to Virginia farmers in 1986 when the Southeast suffered a pasture-killing drought and farmers across the nation shipped donated hay by the trainload.

"At the time, I had a lot of hay in my barn and I thought it was the thing to do," said Heyne.

Union Chief Says Reforms May Lead To Teacher Backlash

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
AP Education Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The current wave of school reforms is bound to fail and teachers will face an angry backlash unless they try radically different ways of educating children, American Federation of Teachers President Albert Shanker said Saturday.

Shanker, in an interview and in a keynote address to 3,000 delegates at the AFT convention, said, "You can't stay out of the issue of transforming the schools."

"Nobody else is going to do it," he said. "And if we don't do it, a lot of the hard-won gains of collective bargaining are going to be lost. We're going to be dismantled by breaking up the districts."

"The reform movement has raised very high expectations ... and as those expectations are not realized — which I do not believe they will be ... there will be anger and backlash."

"The threats are there," said Shanker, pointing to New Jersey's recent move to take over the educationally bankrupt Jersey City schools as well as efforts to create a separate district in Milwaukee's inner city and continuing calls for vouchers that parents could use in public or private schools.

He said the dilemma was acute for the AFT, most of whose 670,000 members teach in big cities where public schools face the greatest difficulties.

"Who's going to be in bankruptcy? It's going to be the urban areas. It's not going to be most of the nice NEA (suburban) districts," said Shanker.

The Jersey City teachers actually belong to the rival National Education Association, but Shanker said, "Mostly it will be an AFT problem."

Shanker said the National Assessment of Educational Progress has shown 80 percent or more of the 17-year-olds still in school cannot handle algebra or even write a simple, persuasive letter.

AFT delegates will get a chance over the holiday weekend to debate a resolution endorsing Shanker's call for widespread, radical experimentation with new ways of running schools.

Shanker said his aim is to get "within the next two years more than a thousand locations" trying these new methods.

Shanker said both teachers and students should work in teams, with computers and technology allowing teachers to "get away from lecture and talk."

The reform resolution, backed by the AFT's 36-member Executive Council, says that despite some gains, "much that has happened as a result of education reform ... is bad."

"We are witnessing major efforts to de-skill and and deprofessionalize teachers," it said. "More and more teachers are being told what to do, when to do it and how — old-fashioned 'teacher-proofing' in the name of reform."

It adds, "Teacher evaluation systems of the worst sorts have proliferated — 'snoopervision' checklists ... that reduce teaching to a simple and dubious formula."

The resolution would endorse Shanker's let-a-thousand-flowers-bloom approach to reform, encouraging bottom-up efforts by teachers in groups of six or more to form schools within schools.

They would get a pro-rated share of public school budgets and freedom to try their experiment for at least five years, with participation voluntary for both teachers and parents.

Shanker also said he will seek to expand his union's political muscle by recruiting parents and others to sign up as associate AFT members.

For $25 a year, these so-called "Friends of Education" would attend conferences and receive its publications and other services, but would not be able to vote on union affairs.

Shanker predicted it would push AFT membership past 1 million.

"Politically it's very important. Politicians don't ask you which category of members you have or where they work,' he said.

The biennial AFT convention runs until Tuesday, when delegates will hear addresses by satellite television from both Michael Dukakis, the certain Democratic presidential nominee, and his only rival, Jesse Jackson.

Dukakis will also speak Tuesday via satellite from Boston to the National Education Association convention, which opens Monday in New Orleans.

The NEA's board of directors gave a delayed primary endorsement to Dukakis Friday, but the AFT is sticking with the AFL-CIO's plan of making no endorsement until both parties hold their conventions. But a dozen top AFT leaders, including Shanker, are Dukakis delegates.

Rescue Team Finds Ship ... Three Times

VICTORIA, British Columbia (AP) — The Canadian Search and Rescue Coordination Center found the Solution last week — three times.

The Solution, a fishing boat, was put back on course twice when it reported itself lost, said Canadian Coast Guard spokesman William Frowd.

But the third time, the vessel was towed into port.

The saga began Wednesday, when the Solution's captain radioed that he was lost on a trip from Cape Scott to Hakai Passage, north of Vancouver Island.

An aircraft went to the area along with another fishing vessel and helped the Solution get back on the course, but Thursday morning search and rescue officials got another call.

This time, a Canadian Forces tracker plane used directional equipment to find the Solution. The boat's captain decided to head for Port Hardy on the northeastern tip of Vancouver Island, and was helped to get on that course.

But 4½ hours later, yet another call came in.

The Solution eventually was found, again, by another fishing vessel, about 20 miles from where it was during the preceding call.

The vessel was then taken in tow by another boat to Hartley Bay.

Coast Guard Cpl. Randy Young said Friday that the vessel appeared to have problems with equipment that wasn't working, an oil leak that caused the engine to break down and a depth sounder that did not work.

Young said he hoped the Royal Canadian Mounted Police would "have a chat" with the Solution's captain.

"We've got a line on her now," said Frowd. "There's no way she can get lost."

Slayings In Texas Linked To Utah Cult

By PEG McENTEE
Associated Press Writer

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The slayings of three men and a child in Texas are the latest in a series of deaths and disappearances believed linked to a violent sect of polygamists still faithful to a vengeful patriarch who died seven years ago.

Internal violence has long marked the cult of Ervil LeBaron, a self-proclaimed prophet whose quest for power and teaching of blood atonement launched a 22-year reign of terror among Mormon fundamentalists.

The killings in Texas, which police suspect are the work of three of LeBaron's sons, bring to 18 the number of LeBaron's former disciples who have died or disappeared over the past two decades.

In Utah, where LeBaron was convicted of masterminding the 1977 murder of rival polygamist leader Rulon Allred, members of other polygamist groups are horrified at the bloodshed, a professor said.

"They're disgusted, and some of them are a bit frightened," said John Stewart of Utah State University, who has studied polygamist groups. "Most of them are peaceful and mostly law-abiding, except for the polygamy, of course."

LeBaron's Church of the Lamb of God is but one of many groups who advocate a return to polygamy, which was taught by Joseph Smith, founder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The Utah-based church banned polygamy in 1890 and excommunicates those who practice it. Nevertheless, an estimated 20,000 to 30,000 people are believed to live in polygamist families.

At the heart of the struggle may be the fundamentalist belief that God will send "one mighty and strong" to reform the Mormon Church, by violence, if necessary.

"That has been the thing that has been a deluding scripture for all these splinter group leaders for the past 100 years," Stewart said. "It leads to this egomaniacal approach that leads to continual splintering.

"This process has been going on for a long time and undoubtedly will continue to do so," he said.

Among others knowledgeable about the clan, there is little surprise that the young LeBarons are suspects in the killings of Eddie Marston, 32, in the Dallas suburb of Irving, and brothers Mark Chynoweth, 36, Duane Chynoweth, 31, and Duane's 8-year-old daughter, Jennifer, in Houston.

Marston was a stepson of LeBaron and Mark Chynoweth was married to LeBaron's daughter, Lillian.

Texas detectives are seeking LeBaron's sons, Andrew, 28; Heber, 27; and Aaron, 20, for questioning.

"I would think they certainly would be considered prime suspects, inasmuch as since Ervil died, there have been these threats made to other former members of the LeBaron organization," said Murray Police Lt. Paul Forbes, the chief investigator in Allred's slaying.

LeBaron died of a heart attack at Utah State Prison in 1981. But Lillian Chynoweth has said that he targeted a number of people for death for being unfaithful to his teachings.

Those who have died or vanished since 1966 have included LeBaron followers, brothers, nephews, wives, critics and rivals.

Marston and Mark Chynoweth were acquitted of charges in the Allred slaying, and Marston also was acquitted in the 1975 death of Robert H. Simons, another polygamist who challenged LeBaron.

In October 1987, Daniel Ben Jordan, who had split with the LeBaron group and moved his polygamous family to Colorado, was fatally shot at a deer-hunting camp in southeastern Utah.

LeBaron and Jordan both claimed to be the "one mighty and strong," as did Leo Evoniuk, who founded his own church after LeBaron's death and vanished from Santa Cruz, Calif., in May 1987.

Rena Chynoweth, a widow of Ervil LeBaron and sister of the slain Chynoweth brothers who has gone into hiding since her brothers' deaths, considers the LeBaron sons to be seriously unbalanced, said her attorney, John O'Connell of Salt Lake City. She believes she is also on LeBaron's "hit list," said O'Connell.

Candidates Seem To Be Seeking Votes In All The 'Wrong' Places

By EVANS WITT
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — In recent days, Michael Dukakis campaigned in Mississipi and Indiana, states that have backed a Democratic presidential hopeful only once in 28 years. This week, Republican George Bush is going to Dukakis' hometown for a Greek Orthodox church dinner.

No, these presidential candidates aren't just wasting their time, looking for votes in all the wrong places.

These events are early feints in the general election campaign, a strategy called attacking your opponent's base. It is one piece of putting together the Electoral College puzzle to win 270 electoral votes and the White House on Nov. 8.

"If Bush is tied down in places like Indiana and the South, he's going to have a hard time doing what he needs to win the election," said Democratic pollster Mark Mellman.

"It's a smart strategy for both sides," said Vince Breglio, a Republican campaign tactician. "It's not defending your solid core vote. It's the marginal voters who are part of your base. They are part of the core, but not a dependable part."

Of course, Bush and Dukakis are looking for every possible vote in the fall.

The theory behind the "attacking the base" strategy is straightforward: If a candidate must spend his time making certain the people who usually vote for his party will back him, he won't have time to win the swing voters who have been increasingly crucial to victory in this country.

For example, Dukakis has campaigned across the South and the farm belt in the Midwest, regions that have been very strong for the Republicans. Thus, if Bush must defend his base of support in those areas, he will have less time to campaign in California, New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio, where the GOP needs to do well.

While such a strategy is used in all kinds of races, it is particularly important in a presidential campaign because of the Electoral College system.

Winning the most votes doesn't mean winning the White House. A candidate must win enough states to gain a majority of the 538 electoral votes at stake to succeed Ronald Reagan in 1989.

Of course, Bush, Dukakis and their aides proclaim that they will battle for every state in the fall, taking nothing for granted and conceding nothing.

"It's not designed to make Dukakis pay attention to his base," said Bush spokesman Mark Goodin of the Thursday trip to Boston. "It's an indication that we are not going to take anything for granted."

Dukakis spokesman Leslie Dach said the Massachusetts governor's strength and campaigning all across the country makes it tough for Bush and the GOP.

"In their grand plan, they thought they didn't have to secure landing rights in big regions of the country," Dach said. "Now, they're finding they have to lease apartments everywhere."

The reality is that there are limited resources for a presidential campaign and limited time for a candidate's campaigning.

"Once things have started to solidify, I'm sure the Dukakis campaign will sit down and make a careful assessment of where to concentrate the resources," Mellman said.

The starting point of any Electoral College strategy — and the "attacking the base" tactic — is history. And history is on the side of Bush and the Republicans.

One way to look at electoral history is the percentage of the two-party vote for each candidate from 1952 through 1984. Mellman points out that Democrats have averaged a majority of the vote in only six states and the District of Columbia over that period. That's a total of 52 electoral votes from Georgia, Hawaii, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Rhode Island, West Virginia and the District of Columbia.

The Republicans have averaged at least 55 percent of the vote in 27 states through the same elections, for 208 electoral votes.

Thus, Democrats would have to win 218 electoral votes among the 17 remaining states to add to their base to return to power in the White House. The GOP could hold onto its historic base and win the White House with only 62 electoral votes from the 278 available in those swing states.

Is Gender Gap Real For Bush?

By CATHLEEN DECKER
L.A. Times-Wahington Post News Service

A few days ago in Louisville, a relaxed George Bush brushed off the hand-wringers and adopted a "what, me worry?" approach to the gender gap troubling his campaign.

"What you do is spell out your position on the issues and the gender gap goes away and you win the election," the vice president said. "That's what happened in '84 and that's exactly what I want to have happen in 1988."

It is unlikely to be so easy. Less than five months before November's election, while holding his own among male voters, the vice president is confronting consistent dissatisfaction on the part of women, who constitute 53 percent of the electorate. The yawning gap is largely responsible for Bush's runner-up status behind Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis in polls in recent months.

Illinois congresswoman and Bush adviser Lynn Martin calls the gender gap the "400-pound gorilla" of the campaign. Irene Natividad, chair of the National Women's Political Caucus, calls it "explosive." Bush, in somewhat more casual terms, calls it "the women thing." His advisers call it a "concern."

The gender gap itself is not a phenomenon new to this election, but what is novel is its acknowledged capacity this year to decide the national winner in a close election.

"This is the election when the gender gap will really determine who becomes the president of the United States," declared Andrew Kohut, president of the Gallup polling organization.

The gap is not based exclusively on concerns that formed the women's movement, but rather draws on a collision of varied issues. Women have, according to polls, trouble with the Republican party's advocacy of foreign intervention and its repudiation of government as a tool to protect needy segments of society. Men, generally, are more supportive of aggressive military moves and more scornful of a nurturing government.

And because women are relatively new entrants into the workplace and receive less pay than men, they also take a more pessimistic view of the economy — leading them to seek a more protective, Democratic-style government, analysts say.

While some Republican leaders dismiss the gap as a temporary blip that will vanish as the campaign lurches on, some Bush partisans and Republican political consultants are dismayed at the absence of a concerted appeal to women voters by the vice president's campaign.

Mary Louise Smith, the former head of the Republican National Committee and an avid Bush supporter, said she and others have struck a "wall of resistance" when attempting to push campaign officials toward a strategy to embrace women voters. She attributes the inertia to a desire to accommodate the party's conservative wing.

"Throughout the whole campaign or administration, if you will, there doesn't seem to be the understanding, the sensitivity. They don't see the opportunities to relate to women," she said. "It's almost like there's a block there."

In essence, the gap is an exaggeration of Bush's overall, much-debated problem — difficulty in presenting a cogent, independent image of leadership after almost eight years spent as a loyal vice president.

Furor over the "gender gap" has in recent weeks propelled a great deal of talk about solutions. Republicans and womens' activists, groping for results, suggest everything from picking a woman vice presidential nominee to outlining specific programs to deal with child care and other concerns.

Clinton Will Nominate Dukakis

BOSTON (AP) — Michael Dukakis picked fellow governor Bill Clinton of Arkansas Saturday to nominate him for president at the national convention, as the Democratic nominee-to-be met with two congressmen and prepared to host Jesse Jackson on July Fourth.

Clinton is the second southerner named to a prominent convention speaking role. Texas State Treasurer Ann Richards was named last week to deliver the keynote speech opening the convention in Atlanta July 18.

Clinton will address the delegates the next night, formally nominating Dukakis for the party's presidential nomination. He will deliver a 15-minute speech focusing on Dukakis' record as Massachusetts governor and his leadership abilities, the Dukakis campaign said.

"Bill Clinton is a leader among the nation's governors who shares my commitment to building a strong economic future," Dukakis said in a campaign statement. "He is an eloquent spokesman for our party."

Clinton, who has worked at lengths with Dukakis as part of the National Governors Association, told a news conference in Little Rock that Dukakis is sincere about wanting to spur economic development in the South.

Dukakis "was very forthright in discussing with me how profoundly concerned he was that our part of the country was so economically depressed and had been so neglected by the national administration, and he said he just didn't understand how you could have a national government that didn't try to help distressed areas of the country," Clinton said.

"I think the American people ought to know that," Clinton said. "He cares about people who aren't as well off as he thinks they ought to be, who don't have the opportunities that they ought to have. That counts for a lot with me."

Tradition at recent conventions is for a brief nominating speech followed by one or two seconding speeches. But Dukakis spokesman Mark Gearan said Clinton would deliver the sole nominating address.

Jackson, who is expected to have his name placed into nomination as well, was scheduled to visit Dukakis on Monday. Jackson and his wife, Jackie, were to dine with Dukakis and his wife, Kitty. They then were to attend the traditional Boston Pops Independence Day concert on the banks of the Charles River.

Dukakis aides say the meeting is largely social but that they expect the subject of the No. 2 spot on the ticket to come up.

Jackson is being considered but Dukakis advisers say it is highly unlikely that he would be offered the vice presidential nomination. For his part, Jackson has said he has decided whether he would accept if it was offered to him but has not said what he has decided.

Metro Atlanta Will Offer Democrats Bad Sports, Busy Airport, 'GWTW'

By ROBERT BYRD
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — The city the Democrats have picked for the nomination of the 41st president — they hope — is known to outsiders as the home of "Gone With The Wind," one very busy airport and three historically rotten sports teams.

To those who live here, Atlanta is a city that's easy on the eyes and fairly low on stress, once even winning Rand McNally's "most liveable" designation. A city with no hurricanes and very little snow. A city that has always taken a great deal of pride in itself, despite the problems that plague many counterparts: crime, poverty and the rest.

Metro Atlanta, with no mountains or oceans to stop it, spreads in every direction across 18 counties, where about 2.5 million people live — 41 percent of Georgia's population. With around 425,000 in the city itself, most "Atlantans" actually live in the suburbs. The average house costs $100,000, and the average salary is a shade over $19,000.

Not much is left of Atlanta from the Civil War days — indeed, its burning at the hands of Union forces made a spectacular scene in "GWTW," as the locals are wont to abbreviate the movie.

Yes, Hartsfield Atlanta International Airport is entrenched in an ongoing battle with Chicago's O'Hare for the "nation's busiest" title. But it is, after all, an airport, and you do not often think about it.

The world's most accurate perception of life in Atlanta may be of its sporting life. The Braves, the Falcons and the Hawks really have been, through their history, pretty rotten. In Atlanta's 23 years as a "big league city," through 75 seasons — including eight by the Flames hockey team, which up and left — citizens have yet to be inconvenienced by the rigors of lining up for tickets to a championship game.

(A long-dead soccer team, the Atlanta Chiefs, did play for a championship once — and won — but you didn't exactly have to camp out to get in.)

To get around, Atlantans get in the car. The city enjoys an extensive bus system and a clean, fast train operation, but trains serve only four lines, which end at commuter lots in the suburbs, and the system covers only two counties.

Two other heavily populated suburban counties, Cobb and Gwinnett, have rejected joining MARTA, the Metropolitan Atlanta Rapid Transit Authority. The most often stated reasons are fear of crime and taxes, although it is widely understood that more than a few in Atlanta's white suburbs fear the train will bring blacks into their neighborhoods.

That's a painful admission for a city that then-Mayor William B. Hartsfield, during the civil rights movement of the late 1950s, called "the city too busy to hate."

But Atlanta struggles still with racism.

The city itself is 66 percent black; the 18-county metro area is 74 percent white. While the metro area's cost-of-living ranks eighth best among the nation's large urban areas, the city itself is the second-poorest in the nation, with 28 percent of its people living in poverty.

Although metro Atlanta's school systems and public places are integrated, most individual schools and neighborhoods are not. And in the housing projects of the inner city, the drug trade and its attendant crime make regular headlines.

The city's elected leadership is predominantly black, a point of pride for those surveying civil rights gains in the United States. But it is not untroubled: two Fulton County commissioners are facing jail terms for vote-selling convictions, including A. Reginald Eaves, who was public safety commissioner under Atlanta's first black mayor, Maynard Jackson.

The city has sustained a major business boom for the past three decades, the root of its "too busy to hate" boast.

Ted Turner's once-homey little TV station, which once used a dog as a co-host of the news, has grown into a global news and communications empire known as Cable News Network. City fathers in the mid-'60s built a major-league sports stadium before they had a team to put in it.

The same booster spirit was evidenced earlier this year when Atlanta surprised even itself by winning designation as the U.S. candidate to host the 1996 Summer Olympics.

Atlantans like to say, with a knowing smile, that their city is "a nice place to live, but you wouldn't want to visit here." However, tourist attractions can be found.

Metro Atlanta has Stone Mountain, a mammoth granite hill with a popular park surrounding it, and the Memorial Arts Center, home of the High Museum of Art and the award-winning Atlanta Symphony Orchestra.

There is also the restored birthplace of Martin Luther King Jr. and the nearby King Center; the Carter Presidential Center, home of the former president's museum, library and policy forum, and an increasing number of nightclubs, bars and first-quality restaurants.

Atlanta also has 100 Waffle House restaurants, which "lead the WORLD in serving T-bone Steaks, Grits and Waffles," and a mystifying number of Mexican restaurants. The Varsity, meanwhile, bills itself as the world's largest drive-in restaurant.

Atlanta has Piedmont Park, a tranquil lawn surrounded by the commotion of the city in the manner of New York's Central Park.

Security Measures Tightened

ATLANTA (AP) — Organizers of the Democratic National Convention are preparing for the worst — assassination attempts, larcenous ladies of the evening and massive demonstrations — in hopes that all their work will be for naught.

"We can't always predict. We have to assume that someone will try to do something and we have to try to minimize that possibility. We can't guarantee anything," said Dick Murphy, head of the DNC security advisory committee.

Last month, the Atlanta-Fulton County Emergency Management Agency held drills on how to respond to 179 possible disasters ranging from riots to spills of nuclear materials during the convention.

In addition, state, county and local police have been taking special courses in anti-terrorist tactics, crowd control and arrest procedures.

And downtown hotels say they are increasing hotel security, especially late at night, to prevent room burglaries and keep out prostitutes.

Even the rapid rail transit stop at the Omni International, the convention site, will be closed to discourage would-be terrorists.

About 35,000 people are expected for the July 18-21 convention. The total number isn't a city record for a convention, but a major political event tends to attract thousands of demonstrators with a range of causes.

In response, the city has taken over a 85,000-square-foot parking lot across the street from the convention site and wants to limit demonstrations to that space, allocating 90 minutes per group on a first-come, first-serve basis.

Current plans call for demonstrations in the lot between 9 a.m. and midnight each day. The city will provide stage and sound equipment.

Despite the arrangement, Atlanta Police Maj. W.W. Holley, who is in charge of security for the area, said the city has not ruled out the possibility of large parades and demonstrations similar to those at the 1984 convention in San Francisco.

But he says, "we will not have a convention like they had in Chicago," referring to the riot-scarred Democratic gathering in 1968.

Murphy declined to give the number of federal, state, county and local security people assigned to convention duty, but The Atlanta Journal and Constitution reported that 1,350 police officers would be involved.

Gene Guererro, state director of the American Civil Liberties Union, said his group is recruiting about 100 volunteer lawyers to help people who are arrested.

"We don't know who is going to come or how many. We have been encouraging people to apply for applications (to demonstrate)," he said.

Murphy, a veteran of Democratic conventions, said current controversies do not match the emotional levels of the Vietnam War and the early stages of the civil rights movement.

Session To Have Financial Impact

ATLANTA (AP) — Local leaders figure the Democratic National Convention will make a $60 million impact on Atlanta's economy and the Democratic Party hopes to cash in too.

In addition, business owners are hoping to take advantage of the presence in town of so many political and corporate decision-makers by doing a little lobbying on their own behalf.

The party itself is selling rights to use the convention logo on various souvenirs — including a official, licensed, party-approved donkey call.

One study done in conjunction with Atlanta's bid for the convention estimated that the overall economic impact will be $58.7 million. A second study placed the amount at $64.3 million. It all depends on how many thousands of people actually show up.

Less measurable is the amount of business that might be done as a result of contacts during convention week.

But Barry King, Atlanta Chamber of Commerce vice president for communications, says that "every high-roller in political circles will be here."

"It's an opportunity for Atlanta to be seen and Atlantans to be seen and for anybody to make a deal," he said.

By offering decision-makers a good time, businesses hope to gain an edge when contract time comes around. Or by staging an event where customers can rub elbows with the famous and powerful, businesses hope to benefit from kind memories later on.

The Atlanta Convention and Visitors Bureau says each convention dollar spent in the city turns over 2.09 times in the local economy.

GAY HERO BURIED — The body of Air Force Sgt. Leonard Matlovich is buried at the Congressional Cemetery in Washington Saturday. His discharge as a homosexual became a rallying point for gays in the mid-1970s. The stone's inscription reads: "A Gay Vietnam Veteran ... When I was in the military they gave a medal for killing two men and a discharge for loving one." (AP Laserphoto)

Gay Vietnam Hero Given Military Honors At Burial

WASHINGTON (AP) — Leonard Matlovich, a Vietnam War hero whose 1975 discharge from the Air Force for his avowed homosexuality became a rallying point for gay rights activists, was buried here Saturday with full military honors.

Matlovich, 44, died June 22 in Los Angeles, from complications associated with AIDS, a fatal virus-borne disease whose chief victims have been homosexual men and intravenous drug abusers.

He was buried in Congressional Cemetery just 20 blocks from the U.S. Capitol in a ceremony that mixed the military pomp of a horse-drawn caisson and a traditional three-volley salute by seven riflemen with eulogies from gay rights activists.

"The Air Force finally did it right and on Leonard's terms today," said Frank Kameny, a Washington gay rights activist who was instrumental in counseling Matlovich on testing the military's ban on homosexuality.

"It's a pity that they didn't do it 13 years ago," Kameny said as an Air Force color guard departed the cemetery.

Matlovich, who was awarded a Purple Heart after stepping on a Viet Cong land mind and the Bronze Star for killing two Viet Cong soldiers attacking his post, first challenged the Air Force's rules on homosexuality in 1975.

At the time, he was a technical sergeant working as a drug and alcohol abuse counselor at Langley Air Force Base outside Washington with nearly 12 years of service.

"After some years of uncertainty I have arrived at the conclusion that my sexual preferences are homosexual as opposed to heterosexual," Matlovich said in a memorandum to his commanding officer. "I have also concluded that my sexual preference will in no way interfere with my Air Force duties."

Following a hearing, Matlovich was given a general discharge from the service. His challenge of the action in court put his face on the cover of Time magazine, and in 1980 the Air Force was ordered to reinstate him with back pay.

Months later, Matlovich and the Air Force reached an out-of-court settlement in which he was paid a total of $160,000 in back pay and other compensation and given an honorable discharge.

"When Leonard lived in the neighborhood, he would come over here and walk," Lee Jenny, the administrator of the cemetery where many members of the nation's first Congresses are buried, recalled Saturday. "He loved the history. He was one of the most patriotic men I ever met."

Ms. Jenny helped design the tombstone that Matlovich wanted for his grave as a memorial to gay and lesbian Vietnam veterans. It is located on a plot less than 20 yards from where former FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover and Hoover's longtime associate and friend, Clyde Tolson, are buried.

Matlovich's tombstone includes in the top corners pink triangles that were used by Nazis during World War II to identify homosexuals in concentration camps and that have since been adopted as a symbol in the gay rights struggle.

Under the triangles is the inscription:

"A Gay Vietnam Veteran"

"When I was in the military they gave me a medal for killing two men and a discharge for loving one."

Duke Grant

DURHAM (AP) — Duke University Medical Center has received a $292,000 grant from the John A. Hartford Foundation, Inc., of New York City to prepare the nation's next generation of geriatricians, officials say.

The Duke University-John A. Hartford Foundation Program for Student Scholars in Geriatrics will provide support for undergraduate, medical student and junior-faculty research in the area of chronic illness in the elderly, said William Anlyan, chancellor for health affairs at Duke.

Palestinian Moslems Avoid Annual Pilgrimage To Mecca During Unrest

By G.G. LaBELLE
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM (AP) — The Arab uprising that has torn the Israeli-occupied territories for seven months is now interfering with one of the most sacred rites for Palestinian Moslems — the hajj, or pilgrimage to Mecca.

This month, as the world's Moslems travel to Islam's holiest shrine in Saudi Arabia, only about 1,300 Palestinians from the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip will make the pilgrimage, less than a quarter the number who went last year.

Palestinians say the sharp drop is due to the economic and psychological impact of the uprising and to tactics the Israelis are using to try to quell it.

Adel Abu Sneineh, owner of an Islamic book store, said he decided not to go to Mecca for fear of what might happen while he was gone.

"I wouldn't even be thinking about the hajj," he said. "I'd be worried about whether my village was under curfew."

Families with sons in jail were also reluctant to leave. Israeli officials say 5,000 Palestinians are imprisoned in connection with the uprising. More than 200 Palestinians and four Israelis have been killed in the violence.

Palestinians are also faced with deep cuts in income this year as a result of dozens of anti-Israeli protest strikes, which have shortened their business hours, and orders from Arab leaders not to go to jobs in Israel.

The cheapest route to Mecca costs $740. This covers a bus ride from the Jordanian capital of Amman to Saudia Arabia and includes hotels, but not food and other travel costs. It's an extra $30 if the bus is air conditioned.

A travel agent specializing in hajj trips, who gave his name only as Abed, said some pilgrims were also having trouble getting Israeli exit permits because of unpaid taxes and age restrictions on Arab travelers.

Withholding taxes is a chief weapon used by Palestinian underground leaders in their campaign of civil disobedience against Israel. One way Israel catches tax evaders is by checking records of any Palestinian who applies to go to Jordan.

Under the age restrictions, Palestinian men aged 16 to 35 who go to Jordan are ordered to stay there for nine months before returning. The measure was adopted several months ago to try to prevent messages from being passed to and from members of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Abed Al-Rahman, 30, owner of a small cafe in Arab east Jerusalem, said this is preventing him and many others from making the monthlong hajj. "I just want to make the pilgrimage. I don't want to hang around Amman almost a year," he said.

Olivier Rafowicz, spokesman for Israel's West Bank military government, said the age and tax measures were aimed at calming the violent uprising, not at holding back Moslemswishing to go to Mecca.

"The point is that everyone who wants to cross the bridge (to Jordan) has to be checked about his tax payments," Rafowicz said. "If there is no problem, he can cross the bridge."

It is one of the basic tenets of Islamism that all Moslems go to Mecca at least once, if they can afford it.

This year, 1,300 Moslems will make the pilgrimage from the West Bank and Gaza, according to Ahmed Bayoud, head of the hajj department of the Jerusalem Wakf, or Moslem welfare society. He said 5,800 Moslems made the trip last year.

By the Moslem lunar calendar, this year's hajj is expected to begin July 14. Buses begin the long trip to Saudia Arabia this month. The high point of the pilgrimage, marking Abraham's sacrifice of his son, should fall on about July 22.

Samir Mohammed Shuweiki, 31, a picture framer, feels so strongly about making this year's hajj that he paid for the trip even though he is kept from going by the government's age restrictions.

He said has been going daily to the Israeli Interior Ministry, but has not been granted an exit visa.

"This is harassment. Before the intefadeh (uprising), I could have gotten the permit in one day," he said.

Shuweiki, a father of five, spoke in his small shop in Eizariyya, an east Jerusalem suburb. On the walls were framed verses from the Koran, Islam's holy book.

He said he would keep up his daily visits to the Interior Ministry until the last moment.

"Why are the Israelis making these obstacles?" Shuweiki asked. "I want to go for prayer, not for politics."

Soviet Inspectors En Route To Utah

TRAVIS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — A team of Soviet inspectors left Saturday for a Utah weapons plant to begin monitoring compliance with the treaty to eliminate medium-range nuclear missiles.

The 22 missile experts and linguists departed about noon with their U.S. escorts for the Hercules Aerospace Co. missile plant in Magna, Utah, said Travis spokesman Capt. Thomas Dolney.

Early Sunday, 48 other inspectors will leave to conduct spot checks at as many as five missile sites in California, Utah, Colorado and Arizona.

The "baseline inspections" to be conducted within the next two months are designed to verify the exact number of missiles and related components to be destroyed under the treaty.

The Soviet inspectors arrived with a 10-member air crew aboard an Aeroflot jetliner at Travis on Friday, the same day 20 American inspectors left for Moscow and the Soviet city of Votkinsk.

Friday was the first day for the unprecedented inspections under the Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces treaty signed Dec. 9 at the Washington summit.

At the Magna plant, which made Pershing missile rocket motors, the Soviets have the right to monitor the plant's gates for up to 13 years. The U.S. may station inspectors for the same period at a Votkinsk plant that formerly built the SS-20 missiles, the most important Soviet weapon to be eliminted under the treaty.

The Soviets were scheduled to announce late Saturday which of the five sites they will visit to conduct the baseline spot checks. The five are a General Dynamics Corp. plant in San Diego; the Army's Dugway Proving Ground in western Utah; the Pueblo Army Depot in Pueblo, Colo.; Fort Huachuca, Ariz.; and Davis-Monthan Air Force Base near Tucson, Ariz.

Altogther, there are 26 missile sites in the U.S. and Western Europe and 133 sites in the Soviet Union, East Germany and Czechoslovakia that are open to inspection under the treaty.

The INF pact, the first to allow such on-site inspection, is viewed as a trial for the proposed Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty, which would slash arsenals of long-range superpower nuclear weapons by 30 percent to 50 percent, and involve much more complicated verification procedures.

Latin Democracies Urged To Hold Line

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sounding much like the college professor he once was, Secretary of State George P. Shultz took a back-to-basics message to four friendly Central American countries last week: democracy works, Marxism doesn't.

During visits to Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras and Costa Rica, Shultz repeated that theme time and again, urging the countries and their peoples to stay on their democratic course and to reject Nicaraguan-style Marxism.

As Shultz saw it, the four democracies, three of which are relative newborns, now boast of economic growth, declining inflation and improved social services.

In contrast, Shultz said, living standards in Nicaragua have dropped by two-thirds over the past four months, inflation is "sure to exceed 2,000 per cent this year, and tens of thousands of workers are paid less than the cost of subsistence."

Shultz's optimistic appraisal of the four democracies seemed excessive to some analysts. Shultz himself saw some of the despair still plaguing the region, particularly on Thursday as he raced from Guatemala to El Salvador to Honduras and back to Guatemala.

In El Salvador, a country where fully half the labor force is unable to find adequate employment, armed rebellion continues, and human rights abuses, after a long period of decline, are now on the increase.

Shultz called democracy the "way of the future" in Central America but many Salvadorans obviously are not convinced.

The atmosphere was far more tranquil in Honduras, but there Shultz could see the fruits of an appalling housing shortage: people by the thousands living in shelters consisting of little more than sheets of corrugated metal.

Shultz's point, though, was that Central America's democracies, for all their problems, are moving ahead, while Nicaragua's living standards continue to retrogress.

Shultz did his best to deflect attention during his trip from the pending debate in Washington over aid to the Nicaraguan Contras.

But the Contras, normally a U.S. ally, upset this design after a meeting late Thursday night with Shultz at his hotel in Guatemala City.

With the stall in efforts to reach peace between the Contras and the Sandinistas, the rebels offered tantalizing details of a new aid strategy they are developing in cooperation with the administration and their supporters on Capitol Hill.

Panel Wants Panamanian Bans Lifted

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — A committee including U.S. lawmakers from the Democratic Party urged the Reagan administration Saturday to end sanctions against Panama, saying the measures are destroying that country's middle class.

Patrick J. Lucey, former governor of Wisconsin and ambassador to Mexico during the Carter administration, called the sanctions "an unloaded gun pointed at Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega." Noriega is the commander of Panama's Defense Forces and controls the civilian government.

Lucey called on President Reagan to appoint a special envoy to examine the situation first-hand and to recommend changes in "what is clearly a policy gone awry."

Lucey and four other members of the "July 4th Emergency Committee for Justice in Panama" issued a report in San Jose following a three-day visit to Panama that ended Friday night.

The report said the sanctions were devastating the private business sector and causing suffering among workers who lost their jobs because of private business closings.

"Thus U.S. policy is leading thousands of Panamanian workers to view private enterprise as less attractive than working for the government," the report said.

Washington imposed economic sanctions on Panama earlier this year in an attempt to force Noriega out of office following his indictments by federal grand juries in Florida last February that accused the general of drug trafficking.

Lucey is the founder and one of three co-chairmen of the committee for justice in Panama. Another co-chairman is George McGovern, a former Democratic senator and presidential candidate from South Dakota.

Lucey is pledged as a delegate to Michael Dukakis and has worked actively in the Massachusetts governor's presidential campaign for the Democratic nomination. He denied, however, that his committee was tied to either the Dukakis campaign or the Democratic National Committee.

He said his group proposed no solutions and its mission was "to assess the damage caused by the sanctions to the Panamanian economy, to the Panamanian social structure, to the Panamanian people and to U.S.-Panamanian relations."

Other committee members include Rep. Robert Kastenmeier, D-Wis., and three Democratic state legislators from Colorado: Philip A. Fernandez, Tony Hernandez and Robert Martinez.

Women Balking At Islamic Law

LAHORE, Pakistan (AP) — Hundreds of women demonstrated Saturday in the Punjab capital of Lahore against their country's implementation of Islamic law last month.

Many women fear the new code will negate Moslem laws enacted in 1961 giving women the right to file for divorce or to demand the right to register marriages and divorces.

The demonstration by about 400 women was the second in as many weeks against the change, announced in a decree June 15 by President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq.

In his televised address, Zia said Islamic law would be the "supreme law" of Pakistan. But he said the laws would not affect the nation's non-Moslems.

Witnesses at Saturday's protest said many of the women were waving the flag of Pakistan's leading opposition party, the Pakistan People's Party (PPP). The party is headed by Benazir Bhutto, whose father Zulfikar Ali Bhutto was deposed in a 1977 military coup led by Zia.

In the southern port city of Karachi, meanwhile, political opposition parties plotted election strategy in anticipation of an election call by Zia. Zia, who is also army chief of staff, dissolved Parliament May 29 and fired the country's civilian government.

Zia charged the government with, among other things, failing to move quickly on imposing Islamic law in Pakistan.

Zia promised to hold elections within the framework of the constitution. But Pakistanis have debated whether the constitution demands an election within 90 days or simply requires Zia to announce a date within 90 days.

Party Conference Prompts Soviets To Speak Up

By ANDREW KATELL
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — From a woman wearing a button showing fallen reformer Boris Yeltsin to a spirited conversation between shoppers in a food store, the Communist Party conference encouraged ordinary Soviets to speak their minds.

"It was a lesson in democracy," proclaimed Alexei Medvedev, a 35-year-old scientist encountered Saturday by a reporter in downtown Moscow.

Excitement over the four-day conference that ended Friday was evident. When a reporter asked one Soviet in the street for his reaction, at least 100 other people gathered to listen or join in. Many carried newspapers with extensive reports on the proceedings.

The hottest sensations of the conference, according to about a dozen Soviets gathered in 86-degree heat, were speeches Friday by Yeltsin and the No. 2 man in the Kremlin, Yegor K. Ligachev, who skewered Yelstin's appeal for rehabilitation.

In his speech, Yeltsin continued the blunt talk that made him popular among Muscovites but that led to his ouster as Moscow party boss in November and from his non-voting seat on the ruling Politburo in February.

Yeltsin complained the party's reform proposals didn't go far enough and said his only mistake in speaking out last October before the party Central Committee was that he spoke too soon.

But Ligachev, a rival of Yeltsin and considered a conservative counterweight to Gorbachev on the Politburo, said Yeltsin was full of "destructive energy" and hadn't learned his lesson.

At one Moscow food store, several Soviets were overheard condemning Ligachev. The scene was similar on Pushkin Square.

"Yeltsin's speech was superb," a woman shouted to a reporter. "Then Ligachev spoke, and he's a scandal monger." The woman then stalked off. Former political prisoner and dissident journalist Lev Timofeyev said the conference was the most lively and democratic Communist Party meeting in recent times, but that it skirted key issues.

"For us, practical results will be whether they release political prisoners, how they treat the independent press and whether they end repression against people in independent groups," Timofeyev said by telephone.

A man who would identify himself only as Roger called The Associated Press bureau in Moscow to read a statement saying, "The conference has been a total collapse of all our hopes.

"It marks the start ... It is the start of a new era of repressive regime," the man said.

Yuri Mityunov, a spokesman for the Democratic Union, a fledgling political group offering itself as an alternative to the Communist Party, said by telephone the conference was "a victory of conservative revolutionists."

"It is not the radical reform that people expected," Mityunov said. "It is only restructuring of the system of bureaucratic management of the country, and I think it won't help solve the very difficult problems."

Noting that Gorbachev's call for more openness is not a guarantee of free speech, Mityunov said three members of his group were detained Friday night and fined or jailed for seeking signatures on a petition demanding that jailed Democratic Union activists be released.

The crowd on Pushkin Square, which has become a gathering place for political activists and those curious enough to want to watch demonstrations, was grateful for the chance to hear Ligachev on television.

"Yesterday we saw who Ligachev really is," Medvedev said. " He's a demagogue." Medvedev lived in Sverdlovsk while Yeltsin was party boss there before coming to Moscow, and he remains a Yeltsin partisan.

Irina Bogantsyeva, a teacher, displayed a button she said she made after Yeltsin got in trouble in October. She had typed Yeltsin's name on a newspaper photograph, encased it in plastic and affixed it to her blouse.

"The only reason I haven't turned in my party membership card," Bogantsyeva said angrily, "is that I belong to the same party to which Boris Nikolayevich Yeltsin belongs."

Ligachev denied in his speech that he opposed perestroika, Gorbachev's program to modernize the political and economic system.

Party Ends Test Of 'Glasnost'

the floor for a second time on Thursday with a passionate appeal for political reform.

Delegates endorsed the proposal on elections with 209 dissenting votes, in spite of a party tradition of uniting behind the leadership when a vote is taken. The resolution was the only one of seven adopted by the conference that was published the day after the proceedings ended late Friday.

Resolutions on Gorbachev's policy of "glasnost," or openness, on ethnic questions, legal reform, economic restructuring and fighting bureaucracy still were unpublished late Saturday.

Opposition to "glasnost" became evident during the conference debate, as delegates shouted down liberal editors Ivan Laptiev of Izvestia and Grigory Baklanov of the literary monthly Znamya. On Wednesday, Russian writer Yuri Bondarev charged the reformist press "destroys, humiliates and flushes down the toilet our past and our sacred national values."

Intervening frequently in the debate, Gorbachev repeatedly reminded delegates that "we are learning democracy" and encouraged them to let speakers have their say.

In addition to Yeltsin, others ventured into territory that for years has been off limits to criticism — a steelworker from the Urals, a Siberian party official and a delegate from a Moscow aerodynamics institute, who demanded that Yeltsin address the conference.

Three years after Gorbachev began his reforms, steelworker Veniamin A. Yarin said workers see no results.

Talking about industrial pollution in his city in the Urals, Yarin harangued the government for failing to take action and demanded measures in the 60 most polluted Soviet cities to stop this "Chernobyl-like catastrophe."

Yeltsin noted that "we are all proud of socialism ... but in 70 years we have not resolved the most important problems: how to feed and clothe the people, provide services and decide social questions."

Yeltsin, who as a former nonvoting member of the ruling Politburo has had access to the special stores, limousines and food deliveries reserved for top party officials, called for abolition of special privileges.

Yeltsin also requested regular reports on Communist Party finances, saying that as head of the party in Moscow and earlier in the Urals city of Sverdlovsk, he knew the party raked in "millions of rubles" in members' fees, but saw the results only "in dachas so luxurious that it's embarrassing when people visit from other (foreign) parties."

Gorbachev told conference delegates in a casual chat televised Thursday that "we should take a look" at party privileges because there are so many popular complaints about them.

But Kremlin No. 2 Yegor K. Ligachev criticized Yeltsin and polls on public attitudes toward party privileges published in the reformist weekly Moscow News. The newspaper said that of 548 Muscovites asked, 84 percent disapproved of special food deliveries to certain officials.

Ligachev said "official figures" should be published but defended such privileges by stressing how hard party leaders work.

He also defended party stalwarts Andrei A. Gromyko and Mikhail S. Solomentsev as supporters of Gorbachev. A delegate said Thursday that the two officials and others who carried out the now-discredited policies of former premier Leonid I. Brezhnev can't properly serve under Gorbachev.

Yeltsin, too, lashed out at unnamed officials who came to power in the Brezhnev era, saying they should be dismissed after giving a public explanation of why they supported policies that led the country to a crisis.

He also attacked Solomentsev by name, accusing the head of the party's chief disciplinary body of failing to call to account "people who took bribes in the millions."

City Budget Fails The Test

Empty your pockets, Greenville taxpayers.

The City Council wants another 2.2 cents in taxes for each $100 in value you own. The back-door tax hike voted by the board Wednesday is not good fiscal policy. Instead of thriftily snipping away the fat from an administratively top heavy 1988-89 budget, the council saddled the city's taxpayers with an unwarranted tax increase.

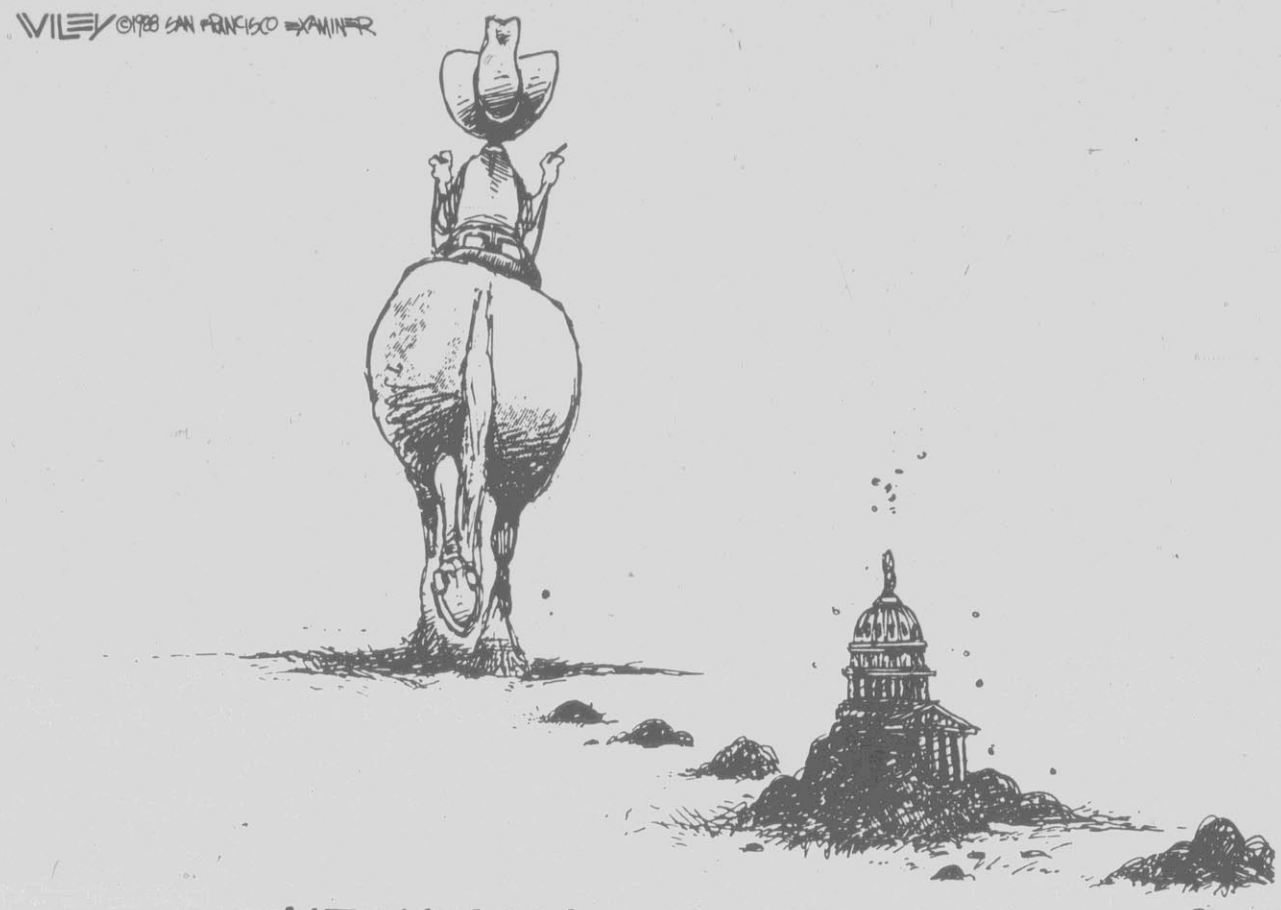

The board just could not resist the temptation to readjust the tax rate just enough to cover some special projects and to give themselves some breathing room. And that's not fair. The voters put them in office to keep costs — and taxes — down. They've done neither.

The tax hike demonstrates how unwilling or unable the city's elected officials are to make tough monetary decisions. In addition, it shows the council's priorities are on padding the top. The new budget includes monies for an assistant to the city manager and raises for key department heads. How can this approach be justified when Greenville has urgent manpower needs in public works, police, fire/rescue and planning?

Council member Lorraine Shinn, the only one who voted against the inflationary budget, correctly said "When I look at these numbers ... I think we've got something out of line." When a city is as beset by personnel needs as Greenville, it doesn't pay to spend money on amenities.

But for the next 12 months, the citizens will have to live with a budget that fails the test for frugality. They'll have to find the extra money to pay the tax hike because city leaders couldn't find the fortitude to cut costs.

Council members need to start planning how to do better next year.

To the Editor:

"...the Christian's goal is now power, but justice. We are to seek to make the institutions of power just, without being corrupted by the process necessary to do this."

"In reference to the county commissioners race involving D.D. Garrett and James Dupree, the prolonged decision affects minorities, especially future minorities specifically, who have made progress in voter registration as well as voting. Let's not dampen nor destroy it with this elongated indefiniteness, wasting the taxpayers' money, misusing time and energy, as well as positive emotions.

I, too, observed the counting of the votes. There was no difference. Garrett received the majority, making him the winner. "Twice is nice."

Accept your defeat like a man, Mr. Dupree. "A man is not defeated by his opponents, but by himself." "Justice is truth in action."

To the editor

The 4.5 percent pay increase allocated for teachers and other state employees for the 1988-89 school year is both disappointing and discouraging to educators statewide. The State Board of Education adopted a goal of 21 percent increase in teacher salaries over three years. With this year's salary increase we will have received 9.5 percent for two years. The state's goal now is almost unattainable.

There is a turnover rate of approximately five percent in North Carolina teachers annually. This means 3,000 could leave the teaching profession this year. Universities tell us the number of students going into teaching has dropped dramatically. The state saw this as a potentially staggering problem and developed incentive programs for especially promising students to go into teaching. One such incentive is a four-year scholarship of $5,000 annually. This is a wonderful thing to do, but what is North Carolina promising these students once they become teachers?

Do these students know that a teacher beginning his or her fourth year of teaching this fall will make the same salary as a beginning teacher? Does this happen in other areas of employment in this state?

There is a commitment to the educational process in North Carolina, but where is the commitment to educators? North Carolina teachers rank 29th in pay in the nation. Governor Martin stated in Sunday's paper his second term agenda will include "raising teacher salaries to the national average by 1992." Would he say his goals for North Carolina's youth is for them to receive an average education in four years? Receiving the national average in salaries would be an improvement, but if we would not set such an educational standard for the youth of North Carolina, why set such a limited goal when it comes to compensating the people who teach our most prized possessions — our children?

Sensitive Area

If That's What It Takes, Do It

A State Environment Management Commission panel has recommended that the Tar River basin be designated as a "nutrient-sensitive" area, a proposal which merits strong attention.

If the proposal is to be explored properly, the full commission must hold public hearings on the reclassification plans.

If designating the Tar nutrient-sensitive is what it requires to reduce the problems of the Tar-Pamlico, it should be done. A Greenville Utilities official said the proposal was expected and the only question has been when.

Tightening the controls on the Tar is not as simple as it appears. It could be costly for Greenville, Tarboro, Rocky Mount and other communities along its way. Individuals and business operations in the Tar watershed could be affected by new regulations. That, however, is the reason for public hearings. Municipalities and individuals that could undergo hardship can express their concerns.

The known factor is that fish and crabs are dying in the Pamlico, there are algae blooms and commercial seafood hauls are declining. While there may be a number of causes, one possible culprit is nutrients from the upstream Tar.

Keeping the Tar River clean won't come without cost. Municipalities could spend millions upgrading waste water treatment facilities. Rainwater runoff from the many miles of paved streets may be having an effect. Numerous other sources could be contributors to the decline of the Tar and the Pamlico.

Man made the problem and it will fall upon man to correct it. The cost of doing nothing will eventually be far greater that the cost of taking steps now to correct whatever is going wrong.

Somewhere On Cotanche Street ...

Alvin Taylor

Sunday Morning Notes

During World War II many wire services dispatches from the war zones carried the dateline: SOMEWHERE ON THE WESTERN FRONT.

The fronts moved, of course, and secrecy was sometimes essential so the war correspondent's location was left vague.

Well this dispatch could very well carry the dateline: SOMEWHERE ON COTANCHE STREET.

Due to the extensive construction under way on The Daily Reflector building your columnist's office has moved — not once but several times. The first move was from an office I had comfortably occupied for 20 years. Part of the rearranging called for its total demolition. That part of the building has now been fully redone.

From there I went to an office on the front of the building. Alas, that went, too, when workmen began tearing out the lobby to make way for an entirely new front on the newspaper building. I moved forward to an area adjacent to the news department.

One day last week the construction people let it be known that some steel work in that area would require still another move. My computer terminal was moved into a part of the news department's newest area. I lost my desk for a few days. It was shoved into a room which is a part of the area to be demolished.

There will be at least two more moves, maybe three, before I finally become settled in a new office which has yet to be built. Anybody who wants to find my desk on any given day will just have to take their chances. I do.

Even with all the inconvenience there is nothing more exciting than watching the splendid new offices of our building take shape. Air hammers vibrate. Workmen actually removed the ceiling and replaced it in one night in the news department. Dry wall goes up before our very eyes and is soon covered with Vinyl. Desk are shuffled about as new carpet is installed. From the outside the public will soon see steel for a new lobby and new front taking shape.

The air hammers do tend to give one a headache and the dust rains down daily from the vibrations ... but, me I'm not complaining. The building will be outstanding when it is completed.

A Brisk Pace For Shultz

Barry Schweid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Even in the jet age, a 55-hour trip is a pretty brisk pace for a U.S. Secretary of State.

How does George Shultz do it? Also: Why?

He does it by relying on what appear to be enormous reserves of energy. But why did he decide to sweep through Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras and Costa Rica in his first trip to the region since 1986?

Some senior members of Congress are puzzled. Is Shultz trying to lay the groundwork for a new U.S. drive to win support for the Nicaraguan rebels known as Contras?

And why did he ignore appeals from the Nicaraguan leader, Daniel Ortega, that he stop in Managua?

A senior official who briefed reporters before Shultz's departure Wednesday said renewed aid for the Contras would not be a major focus of the trip,

Shultz apparently shunned Ortega because U.S. policy calls for avoiding Sandinista leaders until they display what the Reagan administration regards as serious interest in moving toward a democratic system.

From Ortega's perspective, that would be a lot easier to do if the United States stopped trying to overthrow the Nicaraguan government.

Sandinista leaders have been appealing to the Contras to resume peace talks, but the Contras say the Nicaraguan government would have to take certain steps first.

These include granting permission to open a television station not run by the government, allow the taking of public opinion polls, declaring a general amnesty and suspending military recruitment.

And so, round and round they go, with the prospect of renewed fighting always there.

Peace talks ended June 9. The cease-fire has lasted three months, but the thousands of Contra soldiers who took sanctuary in Honduras during the lull may be ready to fight again. They are rested and have received food, clothing and medicine from the United States.

Shultz hopes the leaders of Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras and Costa Rica will pressure Nicaragua to take a more flexible position on peace talks with the Contras.

U.S. aid to the rebels ended Feb. 29, and the mood on Capitol Hill is strongly against a resumption. Ostensibly, the administration is trying to decide what to do. Conservatives on its right flank do not want to see the Contras foresaken.

Critics have insisted from the start that President Reagan's objective is to overthrow the Sandinista government one way or another.

Shultz's harsh rhetoric over the past six years has lent support to this theory. "The Sandinistas seek to build totalitarian society on the back of a massive military machine," he said Thursday in Honduras.

The softened tone Reagan and Shultz have taken lately toward the Soviet Union is not duplicated in this hemisphere. Cuba and Nicaragua remain anathema to them, and a test of U.S. resolve in Central America.

The military takeover in Haiti was a setback to U.S. hopes. The State Department has stopped ticking off proudly the number of countries in the hemisphere deemed to have turned democratic since Reagan entered the White House 7½ years ago.

But Shultz made the point in Tegucigalpa on Thursday that Nicaragua's per-person income is the lowest in the region while the picture is brighter elsewhere.

"Nicaragua is out of step, a country isolated by its rejection of freedom, growth and the security of its neighbors," he said.

Fidel Castro is firmly in charge in Cuba, and Ortega may be in Nicaragua. But there is an armed resistance in Nicaragua and Reagan and Shultz have not lost hope the rebels will force a change in Managua before the administration shuts down in January.

Scandals Mean Administration At The Trough Too Long

Kevin Phillips

A plethora of scandals and misadventures — Pentagon contracting, the covert Iran-Contra affair, the ethical corner-cutting of Attorney General Edwin Meese III, the conviction of former White House deputy chief of staff Michael K. Deaver and lesser pecadilloes — all add up to spell November trouble for the Republicans. Yet they do so in a way that transcends the law or morality of any one particular episode. Taken in sum, they're a symptom of political burn-out.

What the Reaganites face — and in this election year, what the George Bush people must also confront — is a growing national feeling that the GOP occupants of Washington's Executive Branch have been at the trough too long. They've become too caught up in self-interest to pay attention to the public interest. There's one particularly relevant precedent. Back in 1952, when the Democrats had been in the White House for two decades, a succession of scandals and mini-scandals gave the GOP some of its highest-powered ammunition. "Time for a change" and "Throw the rascals out" became Republican campaign slogans. Few voters could have told an inquiring reporter precisely what offense had been committed by which Democratic office holder, but of the overall impression there was no doubt. The more Truman Era Democrats ran out of ideas, the more Americans got to read about conflict-of-interest and influence-peddling.

As of 1988, the Republicans who came to the nation's Capitol for Richard M. Nixon's inauguration have been around nearly 20 years. That's just as long as the Democrats who came to town with Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1933 had been in Washington when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Pentagon procurement, Department of Justice and Internal Revenue Service scandals began breaking in 1950-52. Hardly anyone remembers 1952 names like Assistant Attorney General T. Lamar Caudle and White House appointments secretary Harry Vaughn but they were forebears of 1988 names like Meese, Deaver and Navy Secretary John F. Lehman Jr. It's not just the Reagan Administration that has had a Pentagon scandal; so did the Truman administration — the "five-percenters" who traded Department of Defense influence, some of them working (then as now) hand in glove with military procurement officers.

Let's get to the psychological heart of the matter. The average 1988 voter is no more informed about the details of alleged corruption than the average 1952 voter. But what the situations share is a strong aroma of easy ethics and influence for hire. That would hurt any regime, but especially a 1988 administration that has put so much emphasis on the high-mindedness of economic incentives. Conflict-of-interest situations have already begun to undermine White house defense and trade policies. And even Bush, whose personal ethics aren't subject to any doubt, has recently been accused of bad judgment. As soon as Bush named James Lake, an old GOP war horse now lobbying for Japan, as his communications director, United Auto Workers President Owen Bieber found the appointment "offensive and disgusting." For Lake will continue to work for three Japanese industrial clients even as he advises the GOP candidate. That kind of insensitivity is right up there in Meese's league.

Historically, there's been an unappreciated sophistication in the way voters chose to regard scandals. When such behavior came at the beginning of a new political period, the electorate often push it aside or subordinated it. That happened with the famous Teapot Dome Scandal in 1923-24. Republican Vice President Calvin Coolidge, taking over from dead President Harding — during whose tenure the skulduggery had occurred — won a landslide victory in 1924 as if nothing had happened. Only Republican leadership could provide the right decibel count for the freedoms and flapping of the Roaring '20s, and the voters somehow knew it.

A similar subordination happened in 1972; the early evidence of the Watergate scandal bothered voters but didn't dissuade them from giving Nixon a huge 61 percent national majority over too-far-left Democratic presidential nominee George McGovern. And for all that Watergate interrupted the conservative tide in 1974, it didn't keep it from resurging in 1978 and 1980.

A long, cumulative build-up of conflict-of-interest and sleaze is something else. At a certain point, voters take it as evidence that the party and politicians to whom they've been entrusting national power have run out of creativity and become bogged down in greed. That description is now beginning to apply to the Republicans. There is, however, one bright spot on the GOP's cloudy 1988 political-ethical horizon: Democrats, too, face public skepticism for the unfolding evidence of their own corruption and conflicts of interest in the House of Representatives, where they've been busy entrenching themselves for 34 long years.

Indeed, the last time the Republicans won the House of Representatives was in 1952, the same year when the corruption in the Democratic administration of Harry S. Truman became a major issue. But the Democrats quickly recaptured the House in 1954, and party control is now so long-established as to make White House Republicans look like mere Washington tourists by comparison.

From an institutional standpoint, it's no coincidence that an independent special prosecutor has been appointed to look into the conduct of House Speaker Jim Wright of Texas, or that the three congressmen so far identified with the Pentagon corruption investigation are Democrats. If ordinary power corrupts, 34 years of uninterrupted hegemony breds a special nonchalance and arrogance.

To some small extent, this behavior by congressional Democrats may restrain voter enthusiasm for sweeping the Republicans out of the White House. After all, the ethical standards of the House of Representatives are hardly likely to improve if Democrats are restored to control of the entire elected federal government again — White House, Senate and House of Representatives alike.

Yet to a larger extent, the public desire for a new broom is more likely to sweep away Republican prospects for maintaining control of the Executive Branch. Since 1952, the people have not let either party occupy the White House for more than two consecutive terms, and given the unfortunate frequency of scandals and ethical contretemps during the second Reagan administration, it's hard to see the 1988 election breaking that pattern. Thirty-six years ago, the Republican Party asked a disillusioned electorate, "Had enough? Vote Republican." This year, on balance, the same question appears to favor the Democrats.

A High-Wire Act

Arthur Cox

The breathtaking sweep of General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev's proposals to transform the Soviet political system bring to mind the courage, vision and statesmanship of Abraham Lincoln during the Civil War or Franklin D. Roosevelt during the Great Depression. If Gorbachev's revolutionary reconstruction of the Soviet system is adopted and implemented, 800 years of authoritarian and totalitarian rule under the czars and the Bolsheviks may be replaced by a form of democracy. Gorbachev has launched a perilous balancing act on a very high wire, which risks a possible fall. But those of us who aspire for greater freedom and stability in this world pray that he will successfully reach the other side.

Gorbachev and his supporters launched their revolution with emphasis on changing the structure and management of the failing economy. But after more than three years, the new blueprints and constant exhortations were producing only limited results. It was clear that the lack of progress was caused by the encrusted, sterile decadence of the Communist Party. The party ran everything and the party followed a centralized command system created by the tyranny of Joseph Stalin and emulated by the dead hand of Leonid I. Brezhnev. Perestroika, restructuring, could not work without changing the political system — without changing the role of the party.

Gorbachev, opening the party conference last week with a 3½-hour address, stated that the Central Committee of the Communist Party sees the crucial question to be "reforming our political system." He presented a series of astounding recommendations which would strip the party of considerable power.

Gorbachev's most dramatic proposal called for the creation of a new supreme governing body — the Congress of the Soviet Union — made up of 1,500 elected representatives of the territorial and national districts and 750 elected deputies representing the party, trade unions, cooperatives, youth, women, veterans, academics, artistic and other organizations. The congress would be convened annually to decide the nation's more important constitutional, political and socioeconomic issues. It would elect from its members a smaller 400- to 450-person Supreme Soviet.

Gorbachev proposed that the president of the Soviet Union should henceforth be elected or recalled by secret ballot of the members of the congress. The president would provide overall guidance for drafting legislation and major socioeconomic programs, and would decide key issues of foreign, defense and national security policy and be chairman of the powerful Defense Council. In other words, the president would assume many of the most important roles now held by the general secretary of the Communist Party.

Since Stalin, the Supreme Soviet has been a figurehead — it meets only once a year and its activities have been inconsequential; the party ran everything. Gorbachev is proposing a reduction of party power and a revitalization of the government through the creation of the congress and reliance on the Supreme Soviet, the Soviets and the economic enterprises for day-to-day operations. He rejects a multiparty system, however, and asserts that the Communist Party will remain as the "political vanguard."

On the question of foreign policy, Gorbachev said that by failing to scale down tensions and promote mutual understanding between nations, "we allowed ourselves to be drawn into an arms race which could not but affect the country's socioeconomic development and its international standing." His criticism of the excessive Soviet arms buildup is further evidence of his determination to change the course of Stalin and Brezhnev.

It is extraordinary to have such recommendations emerging in a nation which only a few years ago was a police state. While the proposed changes in the Soviet system are mind-boggling, what are their chances of fulfillment?

Gorbachev and his inner team are masters of the art of politics through the media, especially television. They have virtual control of all of the major media. It has been interesting to note how skillfully they handled the television coverage of the party conference. But the main reason Gorbachev will probably succeed is that his new political thinking is affirmative, dynamic and likely to capture the imagination and harness the energy of the people — in time. It will take time, probably at least a decade, for the revolution to demonstrate fundamental progress.

Silence Just To Stay Alive

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — "The Army is an institution which occupies a position of force on the political scene. Without the Army or against the Army, there is no viable political solution to this country," Leslie Manigat said two days before his election as president in January.

It was his failure to establish what candidate Manigat had called a "dialogue with the military" in hopes of "democratizing" it, that forced him into exile just 19 weeks after taking office.

In the end game that led to his ouster, Manigat sought to retire the lynch pin of the military structure, Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy, while reshuffling the army's top commands. Within hours of that announcement, Manigat was on a plane to Santo Domingo, replaced by Namphy.

The cast of characters in Haiti filled all the same important roles that existed in Ronald Reagan's Panamanian nightmare: an Army strongman resisting democratic change; drug dealings among top officers, and a president who owed his election to the military.

The face of Panama's Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega must have beamed over these reverses: Namphy emerging triumphant, the "democratically-elected president" banished and the most visible State Department drug target, a Haitian colonel indicted in Miami, still in command of his battallion.

While similar nightmares may suddenly loom elsewhere, notably in Honduras, Haiti was the latest example of the limits of U.S. power and its inability to get results through a mixture of pragmatism and Cromwellian zeal against drugs and dictators. In the end, the military option, another Grenada, seemed the only alternative. Noriega knew that wasn't likely to happen.

The Reagan administration wanted a freely-elected civilian president, and to that end had financed the lion's share of the disastrous November 29 Haitian elections.

When more than 34 people were killed in election-day violence, much of it linked to the military, Namphy canceled the voting and fired the independent election commission. The Namphy people — and Manigat — believed the commission had rigged the election in favor of Gerard Gourgue, a respected human rights leader and professor. Despite that, the U.S. canceled $60 million in aid to Haiti, removed its military advisers and criticized Namphy when he set new elections for January.

Manigat, a brilliant political science professor who spent 23 years in exile, thought he knew what he was getting into when he refused to join other popular candidates in boycotting the elections. He said he knew how to deal with the military.

Since the Duvalier downfall, only two top Macoutes have been brought to justice. Yet of all the candidates in the November election, only Sylvio Claude, a fiery Baptist preacher, promised to put some of the Duvalier criminals on trial. The rest of the candidates were silent on the subject, even if just to stay alive.

Pageant Director Says Miss America Now More Than Just Beauty Queen

By JOYCE A. VENEZIA
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Miss America is not supposed to portray the innocent bathing beauty anymore — she's a career woman who is educated and articulate, and she may not even be a virgin, says the pageant's new director.

Miss America contestants, says Leonard Horn, are human beings living in a very liberal 20th century.

"They sweat. They're nervous, they've made mistakes. They may not all be virgins. I don't know whether they are or not. Who cares?" Horn says. "I'm sure that if we found out 25 or 30 years ago that a girl lived with somebody or had intercourse, she wouldn't make the morals clause."

"Today? Come on!" he says with a laugh.

In an interview last week, Horn described what could become sweeping changes to assure that the public never again views Miss America as just a beauty queen.

The Atlantic City attorney, who has volunteered with the pageant for the past 25 years, replaced Albert Marks as director of the 68-year-old contest, ending Marks' 35-year reign.

The biggest challenge for pageant directors always has been attracting television viewers in the same age group as the contestants. The contest has a loyal following of older women and young starry-eyed girls, but young college and career women often spurn the event as old-fashioned, Horn said.

This year's pageant will emphasize the contestants' backgrounds much more, he said.

"These women are interesting individuals," Horn said. "They're thinking human beings. You can get any one of them in an intense conversation. And for the most part, they're pretty courageous kids to put themselves on the line for some specific goal, whether it's for a scholarship or displaying their derriere — which is probably not the case anymore."

Some standards still apply, however. Horn said former Miss America Vanessa Williams had to be dethroned after nude photographs were published in order to protect the integrity of a pageant that still wants young girls to dream about the crown.

The pageant also is not seeking only drop-dead-gorgeous contestants.

"If a young woman considered herself to be the ugliest person in the world, she could still enter a local pageant," Horn said. "Those who enter these contests enter because they are confident enough of their beauty. So what is defined as 'beauty' is self-limiting by the contestants."

An updated stage production is planned as a way to reshape the contest's image.

Tony and Emmy award-winning Broadway producer Donald Pippin will be music director for this year's show, replacing Glen and Edna Osser, who have handled the productions for the past 35 years.

"They did a great job, but there comes a time when you've got to change things," Horn said. "The music has to be more upbeat. We don't want to go into hard rock, but we are dealing with young people so we don't want to turn them off."

Another change aimed at luring more viewers will be bringing in celebrity judges on the final night of the pageant to pick from the top 10 contestants, Horn said.

This year's pageant will be held Sept. 10, a week earlier than usual to accommodate NBC-TV's coverage of the Olympic games.

Episcopalians Look At Marriage Issue

DETROIT (AP) — The Episcopal Church's 69th General Convention opened Saturday with a church official saying that while marriage among homosexuals and the AIDS epidemic are on the agenda they shouldn't dominate the meeting.

Presiding Bishop Edmond L. Browning asked about 4,000 people in his opening address to "look beyond particular issues to what unites us," expressing concern that the church could become a "single-issue church."

"I hope that we do not let any one particular issue dominate the convention. That is not to say that issues are not important," he said.

The triennial convention will look into the issue of setting a policy to recognize "single-sex marriages."

"We have a ministry to the gay community," Browning said. "We are struggling to find out what that means. We are not going to back away from it, because there are some voices that question whether this is the thing to do.

"The way we can be more understanding is to stay in communication and avoid a judgmental approach in this ministry."

The Rev. David B. Collins, deputy president of the convention's House of Deputies, said the church should recognize all relationships regardless of sexual preference.

"We have been supportive of (single-sex) marriage and we have to get back to that," Collins said. "We're being unfaithful to marriage."

Gay rights became an open issue in the church in 1976 when the general convention affirmed gays as "children of God," decried violence and prejudice against them and asked a special church commission to study whether they should be ordained to the priesthood.

In 1979, despite a positive recommendation of the special commission, the convention narrowly defeated a proposal to open the priesthood to gays. Twenty-one bishops, including Browning, immediately declared their opposition to the ban.

Graf Stops Navratilova At Wimbledon

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Steffi Graf, winning 12 of the last 13 games, captured her third straight Grand Slam title and ended Martina Navratilova's bid for Wimbledon history with a 5-7, 6-2, 6-1 triumph in the women's final Saturday.

Graf's 21st straight victory in Grand Slam matches this year, avenged her loss to Navratilova in last year's final and kept alive her hopes of becoming the first since Margaret Court in 1970 to sweep tennis' four major tournaments the same year.

It also ended Navratilova's drive to set Wimbledon records with a seventh straight singles title and ninth overall.

Graf, who won nine straight games after falling behind 2-0 in the second set, celebrated her first Wimbledon championship by throwing her racket into the stands at Centre Court.

"I didn't succumb to pressure. I succumbed to a better player today," said Navratilova, who had won 47 straight singles matches at Wimbledon since losing to Hana Mandlikova in the 1981 semifinals.

After a "terrible" first set, Graf said she got "really pumped up" in the second set.

"The last two sets I played the way I should have from the beginning," said Graf, who was seeded first ahead of Navratilova.

In the completion of a match suspended by darkness Friday and delayed twice by rain Saturday, two-time men's champion Boris Becker beat top-seeded Ivan Lendl 6-4, 6-3, 6-7 (8-10), 6-4 in the semifinals after Lendl saved eight match points.

Becker meets third-seeded Stefan Edberg in the men's singles final Sunday.

Graf, who turned 19 last month, is the youngest woman singles champion at Wimbledon since Maureen Connolly won in 1952 at age 17. Since that time, four other 19-year-olds have won the women's championship, but they were all born earlier in the year than Graf.

Graf, the first German woman to win the singles title since Cilly Aussem in 1931, won the Australian and French Opens this year before Wimbledon. She can complete the Grand Slam with a victory at the U.S. Open in September.

"Everybody's talking about it," Graf said. "But I'm going to concentrate on every tournament. I'm not going to change now."

Navratilova shares the Wimbledon record of eight singles titles with Helen Wills Moody and the mark for consecutive championships with Willie Renshaw, who won six in a row in the 1880s when the defending champion automatically advanced to the final.

But her bid to break the records fell short against the rocket returns, sizzling smashes and booming serve of Graf, who replaced Navratilova as the world's top-ranked female player last August.

"She's amazing," said Navratilova, who failed to win a singles or doubles title at a Grand Slam event for the first time since the 1983 French Open.

"I was hitting good volleys and she kept running them down," Navratilova said. "She's just so fast. Other players would not even get to those balls, and she was hitting winners."

In last year's two-set final, Navratilova took advantage of Graf's unsteady backhand. This year, there was no weakness to exploit.

"She's better than she was a year ago," Navratilova said after losing a Wimbledon final for the first time. "She's definitely improved her backhand return and she volleyed extremely well. I was surprised she came in so much."

Graf broke for a 3-2 lead in the first set with a lob that Navratilova jumped for and missed. But after Graf held serve for a 5-3 lead, Navratilova took the next four games to win the set.

Navratilova made it six straight games when she broke Graf with a backhand volley to make it 2-0 in the second set. But then the tall teenager caught fire, winning nine straight games before Navratilova broke her with a backhand winner to close within 3-1 in the final set.

The match was then suspended for 44 minutes by rain, which fell sporadically throughout the day.

When play resumed, Graf quickly broke Navratilova to go up 4-1. Frustrated, the 31-year-old defending champion slammed her racket down on her chair during the changeover.

After holding at love, Graf gained a match point with a blazing forehand return and then ended the contest with a cross-court backhand that nicked the top of the net and skipped past Navratilova.

"I saw her in the lockerroom (during the rain break) and she looked down," Graf said. "She didn't look relaxed. I thought she would have a tough time coming back."

Even though she is one of the all-time Wimbledon greats, Navratilova rarely is the crowd favorite here. After her semifinal victory over Chris Evert, she said the fans made her feel "like a Martian out there."

After Saturday's match, she again blasted the fans for booing her when she went to the sidelines to wipe her glasses during the second set.

"I was so upset, I couldn't believe it," she said. "I wasn't arguing about line calls and it wasn't gamesmanship. I was just wiping off my glasses."

Lendl, runner-up the past two years, tried valiantly to make it to a third straight final even though his injured left thigh was heavily bandaged. But he couldn't stop Becker from getting to his third final in four years.

"It comes down to who is having the better nerves and who puts it together on break point," Becker said. "It was not an easy night for either of us."

Darkness suspended play Friday night after Lendl had saved three match points and won the third-set tiebreaker.

After two rain delays totaling 71 minutes Saturday, Becker took a 5-4 lead in the fourth set and moved to double-match point on two volleying errors by Lendl. But Lendl stayed alive when Becker netted two passing shots.

Becker gained another match point on a backhand pass, but Lendl came back and moved to set point when Becker netted a return and hit a forehand wide.

Lendl saved two more match points before Becker again gained match point No. 9 with a running backhand down the line. The 20-year-old West German then won the match with a forehand drive that whistled past a defenseless Lendl, who never has won a grass-court tournament.

"Of course, I'm disappointed right now," said Lendl, who survived a pair of five-setters in the middle rounds. "I thought I played better this year than last year, so I'm sure when I look back at it I'm not going to be as disappointed as last year."

Elliott Wins Firecracker 400 Over Wilson In Photo Finish

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Bill Elliott won the Firecracker 400 Saturday, while Rick Wilson wound up with smear of red paint on the side of his yellow car and second place. The results were related.

Elliott, who qualified 38th in the 42-car lineup, came to the front of the field just 23 laps from the end, then held on to beat Wilson by 18 inches in a fender-rubbing finish.

"The car just wouldn't run very fast drafting with anybody else or running by itself, but with (Wilson's) car behind me, this car would fly."

Elliott said his victory in the 400-mile, 160-lap race at Daytona International Speedway "was just a miracle, that's all there is to it."

He struggled to qualify for the race, barely avoided a seven-car accident on the second lap and nearly went a lap down before a caution flag on lap 110.

"When the race started, my car ran pretty good, but I couldn't draft with anybody," Elliott explained. "But Rick and I practiced together and we found out we could really help each other out.

"The funny thing about these cars is you get around certain cars and they either hurt you or help you.

"We didn't talk about it or plan it at all, but when we were running together, we were able to just go right by a lot of people. If we hadn't got together late in the race, I don't think there's any way either one of us would have been there at the end."

The two drove bumper-to-bumper at the head of the field from lap 138, when Elliott went into the lead, until the last lap of the race.

That's when Wilson tried to squeeze his yellow Oldsmobile Cutlass past Elliott's red Ford Thunderbird in the final two turns.

The challenger, who never had finished better than seventh in a Winston Cup race, nosed ahead coming off the fourth turn, but Elliott held his ground and the two cars rubbed together, puffs of smoke flying into the air as the crowd estimated at more than 80,000 stood and cheered wildly.

"You help each other get to the last lap, then you do what you can to win the race," Elliott said.

Wilson said, "It was for the win, so I was going to do the touching if he was. But he just beat me."

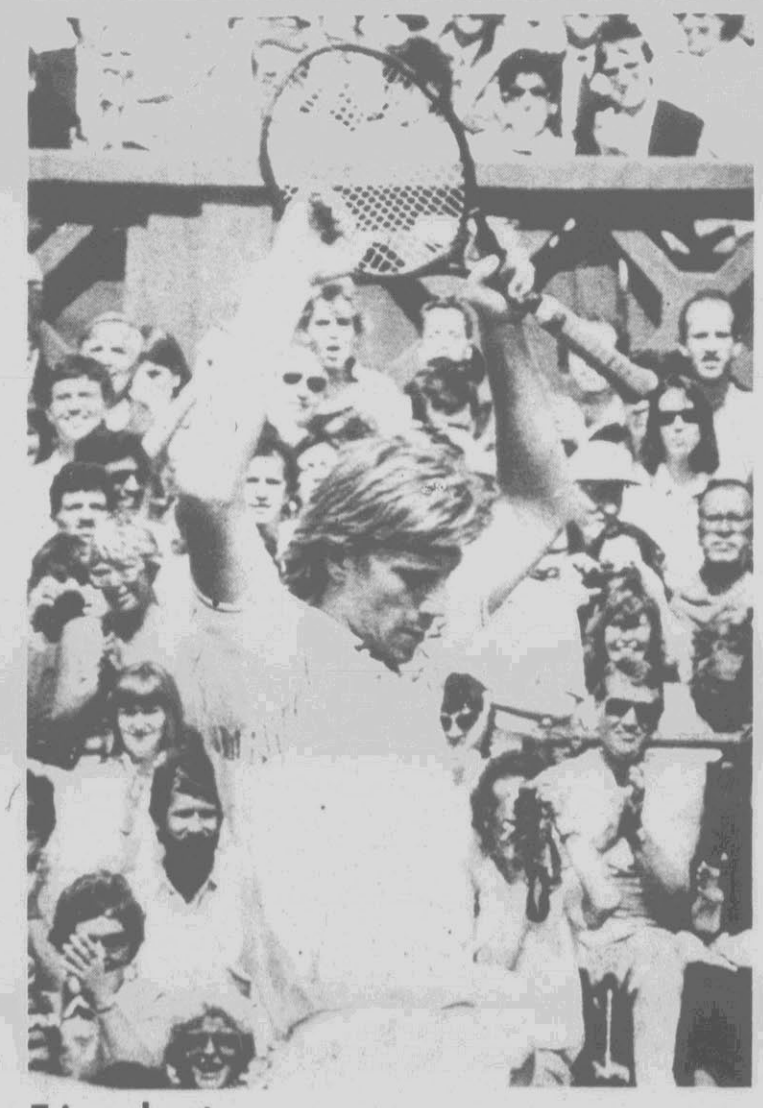

The winner led the final 23 laps on the 2.5-mile, high-banked oval, capturing the 26th victory of his NASCAR stock car career and his series-leading third of the season.

Elliott averaged 163.302 mph as he earned the winner's share of $63,500 from a total purse of $549,020.

To get his first Firecracker victory, Elliott came from farther back than any winner in the 30 years that the race has been run. The previous mark was held by Bobby Isaac, who won from 21st in 1971.

Phil Parsons wound up third, followed by two-time defending Winston Cup champion Dale Earn-

Triumphant

Boris Becker raises his arms in victory as he beats Ivan Lendl in the men's semi-finals Saturday at Wimbledon. Becker will now move to the finals to face Stefan Edberg. (AP Laserphoto)

Edberg To Challenge Becker For Honors

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Boris Becker has been there twice before. Stefan Edberg will be feeling its pressure for the first time.

The men's championship match at Wimbledon Sunday pits two of the best serve-and-volleyers in the game for the $272,250 first prize.

Becker, champion in 1985 and 1986, is going for his third title in four years at the place where he says he was born as a tennis player.

The 20-year-old West German beat Kevin Curren for his first title, and the following year hammered Ivan Lendl in straight sets.

Lendl, 28, was the only player to take a set from Becker this year at Wimbledon, doing it in the semifinals. The Czechoslovak, the world's top-ranked player, saved three match points Friday before winning a third-set tiebreaker that sent the match into a second day.

Lendl, runner-up the last two years, failed to make further headway Saturday amid intermittent showers and several stoppages, despite saving another five match points. Becker finally won 6-4, 6-3, 6-7, 6-4.

Edberg, the world's third-ranked player and seeded three places above Becker at No. 3., has had a far tougher route to the final than his opponent.

Only once, in the fourth round, has Edberg come through any of his matches in straight sets. But he gained a huge confidence-booster in the semifinals when he was on the brink of defeat against Miloslav Mecir and staged a remarkable comeback to win 4-6, 2-6, 6-4, 6-3, 6-4.

In that match, Edberg shook off his reputation as a big- point choker at Wimbledon, staving off a succession of break points to reach his first championship match.

Like Becker, Edberg has won two Grand Slam titles, the 1985 and 1987 Australian Open. He is the first Swedish player since Bjorn Borg seven years ago to reach a Wimbledon final.

"Wimbledon is far more important to me than the Australian," Edberg said after his semifinal victory.

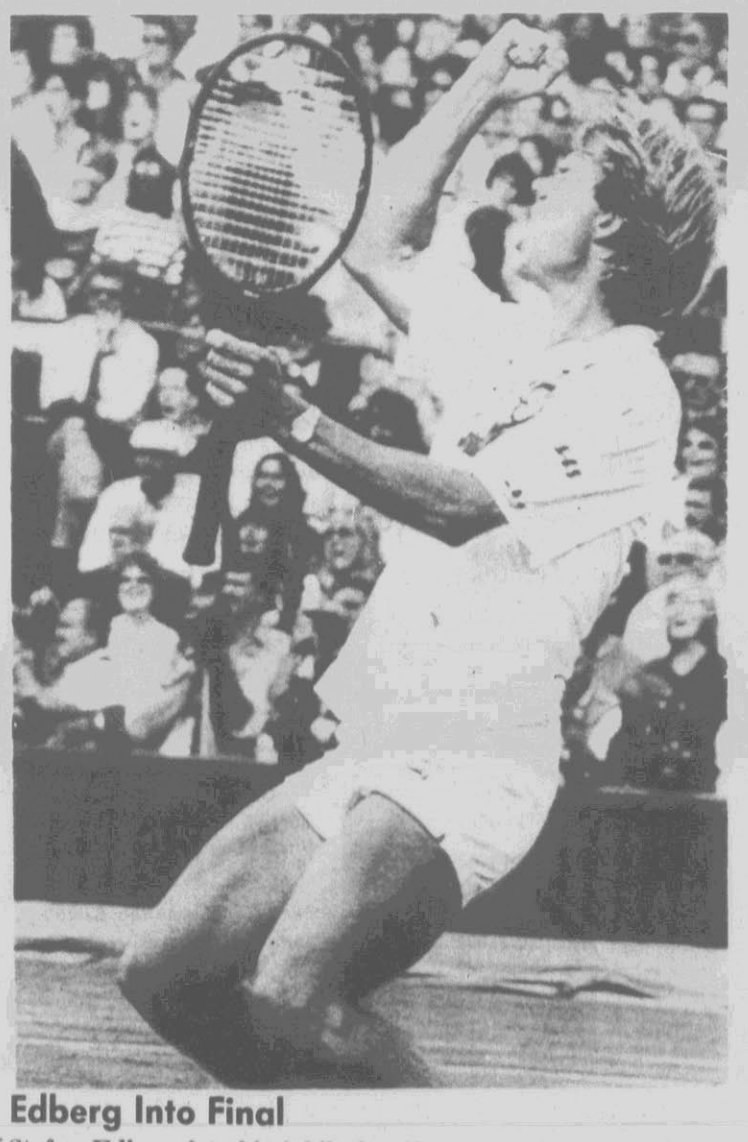

The London-based Swede said he would have to play extremely well to prevent Becker collecting his third title on Centre Court.

The West German leads 9-4 in their head-to-head meetings, including their only meeting on grass.

That came last month at the pre-Wimbledon warmup event at Queens Club in west London when Becker won 6-1, 3-6, 6-3 after playing what he described as "the best set of my life" at the start of the match.

Becker said Edberg's comeback against Mecir will give the Swede extra confidence for Sunday.

"It will pump him up and help him psychologically," Becker said.

Indians Top Mariners, End Losing Streak

CLEVELAND (AP) — Joe Carter, Ron Kittle and Brook Jacoby drove in two runs apiece and Doug Jones extended his major-league record string of saves to 15 in a row as the Cleveland Indians snapped a six-game losing streak with a 10-7 victory over the Seattle Mariners on Saturday night.

John Farrell, 9-5, took a 9-3 lead into the eighth inning but gave way to Jones after Steve Balboni hit a three-run homer with two out, his fifth of the season.

Jones, appearing for the first time since he set the record of 14 consecutive saves on June 24, preserved Cleveland's sixth victory in its last 22 games. It was his 19th save.

He yielded a run in the ninth on Greg Briley's doubled and a single by Mario Diaz. It was only the second run in 23 2-3 innings during his record streak.

Loser Bill Swift, 6-5, gave up five runs and six hits in 3 2-3 innings as the Mariners suffered their 15th loss in the last 17 road games.

Carter snapped a 1-1 tie in the fourth inning when he grounded a two-run double inside the left-field line after the Indians loaded the bases on singles by Andy Allanson and Ron Washington and a walk to Willie Upshaw. Kittle then hit a sacrifice fly to put the Indians ahead 4-1.

The Mariners got RBI singles from Ken Phelps and Mario Diaz in the fourth and fifth innings while Cleveland scored in the bottom of the fourth on Washington's RBI groundout.

A four-run fifth inning against Ed Nunez and Jerry Reed boosted the lead to 9-3. Carter singled, Kittle doubled and Mel Hall was intentionally walked to load the bases. Cory Snyder singled one run home and Brook Jacoby followed with a two-run single.

Jacoby scored from second on Domingo Ramos' routine fly to center fielder Henry Cotto for the second out. Cotto thought it was the third out and Jacoby beat his late throw home. Ramos was credited with a sacrifice fly. The Indians added a run off Rod Scurry in the bottom of the eighth on a hit batsman, a balk, a sacrifice and a passed ball.

Kittle put Cleveland ahead 1-0 with an RBI single in the first inning and the Mariners tied it in the second when Phelps doubled and later scored on Farrell's.

TORONTO (AP) — Terry Steinbach capped a six-run third inning with his first career grand slam and Dave Henderson added a three-run shot in the eighth as the Oakland Athletics defeated the Toronto Blue Jays 11-3 Saturday.

Henderson also had an RBI double and Mark McGwire had three hits as the Athletics improved their record to 7-0 against Toronto this season.

Curt Young, 6-5, allowed six hits and was relieved by Gene Nelson after giving up Cecil Fielder's seventh homer to lead off the sixth. Nelson allowed six hits the rest of the way to earn his third save.

Mike Flanagan, 7-6, failed to get his 150th victory. Flanagan thought he'd reached the milestone with a 4-1 win over Detroit last week, but the club said before the game that a clerical error had been made. Flanagan has 149 career victories.

The A's took a 1-0 lead in the second on Don Baylor's RBI double and batted around in the third.

With one out, Mike Gallego walked and scored on Henderson's double. Jose Canseco was hit by a pitch and McGwire doubled to drive in Henderson. Baylor was walked intentionally to load the bases and Steinbach connected for his fourth homer of the year to chase Flanagan.

Fielder singled to lead off the fourth and George Bell followed with his 10th homer.

CHICAGO (AP) — John Candelaria pitched his second two-hitter of the season and Jack Clark homered and singled Saturday as the New York Yankees defeated the Chicago White Sox 4-0.

Candelaria, 9-4, gave up a leadoff single to Gary Redus on his second pitch of the game and then retired 22 straight before Dave Gallagher singled with one out in the eighth inning. Candelaria struck out 12 and didn't walk a batter in winning for the eighth time in his last 10 decisions.

It was Candelaria's fifth complete game of the season and second shutout. The left-hander finished the game despite developing a blister on his pitching hand. His other two-hitter this year was against Oakland on May 22.

Clark led off the second inning with his 17th homer and third in the last four games. It came off Jerry Reuss, 6-5, and landed into the center-ield bullpen despite a 15-mph wind blowing in.

Reuss, who has lost three straight, allowed nine hits, walked two and struck out four in 7 2-3 innings.

Clark also singled to key a two-run fourth inning. Dave Winfield opened the fourth with a walk and went to third on Clark's single. Gary Ward singled to score Winfield and after Don Slaught's sacrifice moved the runners up, Willie Randolph hit a sacrifice fly.

New York added a run in the ninth when Randolph doubled, took third on a balk and scored one out later on Mike Pagliarulo's single.

DETROIT (AP) — Detroit's Jeff Robinson pitched a two-hitter and Darrell Evans, Pat Sheridan and Dave Bergman homered as the Tigers defeated the California Angels 6-1 Saturday.

The Tigers have outscored the Angels 17-1 the last two games.

The only hits off Robinson, 9-3, were Brian Downing's 10th home run with one out in the sixth and a two-out single by Wally Joyner in the ninth. Robinson struck out six and walked two in pitching his fourth complete game.

Robinson, who shut out the Angels on April 26, is 7-1 in his last nine starts at Tiger Stadium where Detroit has won nine of 11, including the last five.

Evans opened the Detroit second with his ninth home run on a 1-0 pitch from Willie Fraser, 5-8, who has lost six of his last seven decisions.

The Tigers batted around while scoring five runs in the third.

Fraser walked Gary Pettis and Matt Nokes with one out and Sheridan followed with his 10th homer, a towering blow off the facing of the third deck in right. It was the second successive game that Sheridan had reached the third deck with a home run.

Evans singled and Bergman hit his third homer one out later for a 6-0 lead.

Royals.....3
Red Sox.....1

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — After three innings, Kansas City manager John Wathan had an unusual thought.

"I was thinking Charlie Leibrandt might get an 18-hit shutuout," Wathan said.

Leibrandt, who allowed six hits and no runs through three innings, wound up scattering 11 hits in 7 2-3 innings as the Royals beat the Boston Red Sox 3-1 Saturday night. Jeff Montgomery retired one batter in the eighth inning and Steve Farr pitched a perfect ninth for his seventh save.

"It's not easy pitching out of the stretch every inning," said Leibrandt, 4-10. "I'm hopeful of turning things around this season. I think I can win some games for this team."

Bo Jackson, who had been on the disabled list since June 1 with a torn hamstring, wasted little time in making an impact on his return. He doubled Frank White home in the second inning with the Royals' first run.

"I'm just happy to be back and get out of the house for a while," Jackson said. "When I hit the ball, I thought (center fielder Ellis) Burks would catch it. When he didn't, I said, 'Thank you.'"

White doubled off Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd, 6-7, in the second and fifth innings and scored Kansas City's first two runs on doubles by Jackson and Pat Tabler. Boyd allowed seven hits in 7 1-3 innings and lost for the fourth time at Royals Stadium, where he has never won a game.

The Royals scored their final run in the eighth inning. They loaded the bases on singles by Mike Macfarlane and Kurt Stillwell, a sacrifice and an intentional walk to George Brett. Bob Stanley relieved Boyd and Danny Tartabull hit a sacrifice fly.

The only run off Leibrandt was a fifth-inning inside-the-park homer by Wade Boggs when center fielder Willie Wilson missed a diving try for his liner. It was Boggs' second home run of the season and the first inside-the-park homer of his career.

Boggs had three hits to raise his major-league-leading batting average to .353. Jackson's double was his only hit in three at-bats. He is batting .309.

Bo Is Back

KANSAS CITY (AP) - Bo Jackson, the Kansas City Royals left fielder who has been on the disabled list since June 1, returned to the starting lineup Saturday night.

Jackson was sidelined with a tear in his left hamstring.

"I'm ready to play ball," said Jackson, who was hitting .309 with nine home runs and 30 RBI at the time of his injury. "That's about all I have to say at this time."

Jackson was the designated hitter Saturday night against the Boston Red Sox.

hardt and pole-winner Darrell Waltrip.

Buddy Baker and Ken Schrader were the only other drivers on the lead lap at the end.

Rusty Wallace, who finished a lap down in 12th, held onto his Winston Cup point lead and won the $150,000 that goes to the series leader at the halfway point in the 29-race schedule.

The first caution flag came out on lap two when Alan Kulwicki lost an engine heading into turn four. He appeared to run through his own oil and spun down the banking into four-time Firecracker winner Cale Yarborough. The two cars then slid up the banking and into the concrete wall.

As Yarborough bounced off, he collected Benny Parsons, while Kulwicki's car ricocheted into the car driven by Brett Bodine, who in turn hit Derrike Cope. Rookies Ken Bouchard and Ernie Irvan also had their cars damaged in the incident. Richard Petty, who escaped serious injury in a fourth-turn crash in the Daytona 500 in February, barely avoided all the spinning, crashing cars and sped down the pit road.

No injuries were reported, and the cars of Irvan, Parsons and Bouchard were able to continue after repairs.

Green-flag racing resumed on lap nine and continued until Ken Ragan spun harmlessly in turn two on lap 110.

By that time there were two rounds of green-flag pit stops and only nine cars remained on the lead lap.

When the second caution flag came out, Wilson was leading and Elliott was just ahead of him on the track, the last car on the lead lap.

Gooden, Strawberry Lead Mets

NEW YORK (AP) — Dave Johnson gave orders to Dwight Gooden and the 23-year-old right-hander carried them out to perfection by pitching the New York Mets to a complete-game, 7-2 victory over the Houston Astros Saturday night.

"I told Doc that I didn't have a bullpen and he was all alone," said Johnson, who believed his relief pitchers were overworked in the previous four games.

"It was my duty to go nine," said Gooden, who took longer than usual in the trainer's room because he got hit with a line drive off his left forearm in the sixth inning after fouling off a ball on his left foot in the fifth.

"I didn't have a fastball early in the game and that made me concentrate more than usual. I wasn't able to get ahead of the batters early, either, but by the fifth inning things started to come around."

Gooden pitched a no-hitter through five innings and finished with a five-hitter. Was he thinking this might be the game for him to become the first Mets' pitcher to achieve the feat?

"The fifth inning is too early," Gooden said. "Usually you get your heart broken in the eight or ninth inning, so I just put it out of my mind.

"My goal was not to give up my game plan ... shut out the other team."

"Gooden didn't have real good stuff," Houston's Kevin Bass said. "We hit the ball well, that wasn't the problem. What we did was hit a lot of 'at 'em' balls. Probably what we did wrong was hit the ball too hard."

Darryl Strawberry hit his 20th homer of the season and drove in three runs for the Mets.

Gooden, 11-4, pitched his seventh complete game of the season and now has 49 complete games for his career and is 10-1 against the Astros.

Winner of only one of his previous four decisions, Gooden lost his bid for a no-hitter when he gave up infield singles to pinch-hitter Gerald Young and Rafael Ramirez in the sixth.

Howard Johnson hit his 15th homer and Mookie Wilson, who had a double and single in three at-bats, drove in two runs.

Bob Knepper, 8-2, who allowed five runs on six hits in five innings, was the loser.

Wilson opened the first inning with a walk, and two outs later Strawberry lined a 2-2 pitch into the right field stands. It was his 11th homer off left-handed pitching this season.

Johnson homered to lead off the second inning, giving him five homers and 13 RBI through the last 13 games.

Gooden started the fifth inning with a single and raced to third on Wilson's double. One out later, Kevin McReynolds singled for one run, and Wilson scored on Strawberry's grounder to make it 5-0.

Wilson added a two-run single in the sixth before the Astros scored two unearned runs in the eighth.

Errors by shortstop Kevin Elster and first baseman Dave Magadan, sandwiched around a single by pinch-hitter Terry Puhl, loaded the bases with no outs. Ramirez followed with a sacrifice fly and Bill Doran grounded out for the second run.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — David Palmer combined with three relievers on a four-hitter and also doubled in two runs as the Philadelphia Phillies defeated the Cincinnati Reds 5-3 Saturday.

Palmer, 4-6, held the Reds hitless until Jeff Treadway singled up the middle to lead off the sixth, but then had to leave the game with stiffness in his right forearm. The right-hander struck out three and walked two.

Treadway scored two outs later when reliever Greg Harris gave up an RBI single to Kal Daniels. Bruce Ruffin allowed two hits in 1 2-3 innings and Steve Bedrosian retired the last four batters to earn his 14th save.

Phil Bradley put the Phillies ahead in the first with a sacrifice fly against Jack Armstrong, 0-3.

Palmer's double came in the fourth inning. Chris James led off with a single and was forced by Bradley. Luis Aguayo singled and, one out later, Palmer drove in both runners.

The Phillies added two more runs in the sixth off reliever Jeff Gray. Jeltz singled and went to second when pinch-hitter Tom Barrett, in his first major-league at-bat, singled to center. Samuel singled in Jeltz, and Barrett scored on a double by Von Hayes to give Philadelphia a 5-1 lead.

Pinch-hitter Tracy Jones drove in two runs for the Reds with his first homer in the eighth.

Giants.....2
Pirates.....1

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — With only five hits in two games, the San Francisco Giants needed help Saturday.

And the Pittsburgh Pirates obliged.

With the bases loaded and one out in the bottom of the eighth, Pittsburgh reliever Barry Jones threw a wild pitch that bounced high in the air, enabling two runs to score as the Giants won 2-1.

Darnell Coles had given the Pirates a 1-0 lead in the top of the eighth with his fifth home run and Doug Drabek had held the Giants to one hit through seven innings.

But pinch-hitter Ernest Riles led off the bottom of the eighth with a single and Drabek was replaced by Dave Rucker, 0-1. After Brett Butler walked, Jones relieved and Robby Thompson's sacrifice bunt moved the runners up. Will Clark was walked intentionally to load the bases.

With the count 0-2 on Candy Maldonado, Jones threw a wild pitch past catcher Junior Ortiz as Riles and Butler scored.

"I knew before I threw it that it was going to be down and away," Jones said. "The last thing I was going to do was hang it. I was going for a strikeout."

"Everything went right," Butler said. "There were two strikes and I was looking for Candy to make contact. I didn't look at the third base coach (Bill Fahey). I just looked at Ortiz and figured he didn't know where the ball was."

Ortiz agreed.

"I knew an outside pitch was coming," the catcher said, "but I didn't see it after it bounced away."

Mike LaCoss, 6-6, allowed eight hits in eight innings, striking out eight and walking three for his first victory since June 9. Scott Garrelts worked the ninth and earned his sixth save.

Drabek, who has not won since May 30, gave up a leadoff single to LaCoss in the third and held the Giants hitless until Riles' single.

Giamatti Is Picked

NEW YORK (AP) — New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner predicted Saturday that National League President Bart Giamatti would succeed Peter Ueberroth as baseball commissioner.

"I'll go right on the limb. I'm a Bart Giamatti man," Steinbrenner said on the pre-game show for NBC's "Game of the Week." "I think he has all the qualities I'd like to see in a commissioner. He left the presidency of Yale University, which is like running a major business today and he's shown me, in my associations with him, that he'd be a fine commissioner."

Ueberroth will leave his job in 1990.

Pirates Are Packing Them In

By ALAN ROBINSON
AP Sports Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A former semi-pro soccer player who grew up in the Beatles' hometown of Liverpool and once worked for British Leyland Motors may be as important to the Pittsburgh Pirates' resurgence as Jim Leyland or Bobby Bonilla.

Bernie Mullin never played baseball, but he knows how to sell it.

You talk about a super salesman? Bernie Mullin has sold people on attending Pirates' games, something he was told in 1985 was impossible — not after a drug scandal, a run of last-place finishes and a succession of igh-priced and unpopular players.

If the Pirates' turnaround on the field has been remarkable, its transformation from dying franchise to a booming, vibrant one is even more dramatic. Baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth calls it the proudest accomplishment of his four-year tenure.

"I never thought baseball was dead in Pittsburgh, because this is a great sports town, a great community," said Pirates General Manager Syd Thrift. "We just had to give them something worth watching."

Thirft acquired the players and Leyland manages them, but Mullin, sales and marketing director Steve Greenberg, volunteer sales director Bob Derda and others have put people in the stands to watch them — lots and lots of people in a stadium where only 735,900 wandered into Pirates' games in 1985.

Now, just three years after the worst attendance by a National League club this decade, the Pirates will threaten the franchise's all-time attendance record of 1,705,828 set in 1960. They've drawn more than 900,000 halfway through their home season after more than 127,000 turned out for three games with the New York Mets last week, and Mullin said they could draw 2 million fans by 1990.

"What's the one thing that's turned it around?" Mullin said. "It's not one thing, it's the 1,000 things we're doing better. We've tried all along to be a Disney-style operation, where the No. 1 priority was for our guests to have fun in a clean and safe environment, with excellent customer service.

"We call them guests, not fans ... we got that from Disney, too, but that's what they are, our guests for the day."

A native of England who had never seen a baseball game until he moved to the U.S. in 1973, Mullin, 39, had never worked for a pro sports franchise before becoming the Pirates Senior Vice President for Business Operations.

He taught sports marketing at the University of Massachusetts, coached soccer at Kansas and ran a consulting business, but it serviced mostly tennis and golf clubs.

"I'm sure people wondered what this Englishman was doing in baseball, somebody who had never worked for a sports team before," he said. "I asked myself the same question when the Pirates offered me the job. But I had trained students for 10 years and the teams they worked for — the Phillies, the Orioles — had broken attendance records. I had a big consulting business and I had plenty of confidence in my ability."

The first thing Mullin did was to disregard all of the popular theories about the Pirates: that they could never draw in a Steeler-dominated town, that their fans were 50- and 60-year-olds who listened on the radio but wouldn't attend games in person.

The Pirates beefed up their sales and promotions departments, hired former pitcher Nelson Briles to sell tickets to corporations and did numerous marketing surveys.

"The biggest thing was that Syd and Jim put a better team on the field," Mullin said. "The fans told us they didn't like the players who were here before ... basically, they considered them jerks. That was the No. 1 problem. The fans tell us now that they genuinely like the players, that they enjoy having them in the community."

Thanks in part to Pittsburgh's hilly topography, the Pirates' main problem was not how to get their few loyal fans into the stadium, but how to get them out. So a consultant video taped traffic patterns to determine why fans waited so long to enter and exit stadium parking lots.

"It's hard to believe the Pirates had been here (Three Rivers Stadium) for nearly 20 years and had never bothered to put a traffic plan in place," Mullin said. "It's a city of rivers and bridges and obviously getting in and out was a problem. What's amazing is, that with a major reconstruction job on the major traffic artery to the stadium, we're getting fans in and out faster than ever this season."

The influential local owners have helped create a positive image, too. "Face it, when Doug Danforth (the Pirates' board chairman and the former CEO at Westinghouse Electric) calls, the people in Pittsburgh listen," Mullin said.

The Pirates brought their radio network in-house and substantially increased the number of stations that air their games. They improved in-game entertainment and hired a local advertising firm, which has turned out a series of award-winning promotional ads. (One recent tongue-in-cheek ad campaign chided the Mets as "one more thing to hate about New York.")

Derda directs a volunteer sales force, the Diamond Club, consisting of 45 businessmen who sell more than 300,000 tickets a year. The salesmen aren't paid, but are rewarded with free road trips to spring training and the West Coast if they meet their sales goals.

"Some are insurance agents, others are accountants," Derda said. "We don't even give them free tickets to games; they work because of their love for the game, their love for the Pirates. They service all of our season ticket holders and make sure they're happy and satisfied. The fans come back because we take care of them.

"We used to call teams to see how they handled their season tickets. Now, teams call us to find out how we handle groups. We're getting a good reputation in baseball."

Pirates' promotions used to consist mostly of cheap, unpopular giveaway items. (Remember Pirates' Barbeque Apron Day?) The Pirates now stress group sales and fan participation events.

Every Sunday, a fan selected a random tries to catch three fly balls fired from a batting practice machine. With each successful catch, all fans in attendance win a fast food prize. To the Pirates' amazement, two fans have caught all three fly balls, costing sponsoring Pizza Hut more than $300,000 in pizza prizes.

Later this season, the Pirates will invite preselected fans to bring packed suitcases with them, and winners will be flown to the vacation destination of their choice in the U.S. immediately after the game.

"We still have all kinds of things we want to do. People thought we were crazy when we said we would draw 1 million our first year, when we said our goal was to draw 2 million," Mullin said. "But the way I look at it, you haven't seen anything yet."

Rumor Of Sutcliffe Trade Is Denied

By The Associated Press

The latest rumor surrounds a possible trade of pitcher Rick Sutcliffe to an American League contender.

"It's strictly a rumor and was started by a guy with a pencil," says Chicago Cubs manager Don Zimmer. "Why somebody would write this is beyond me, since there is absolutely no truth to it. The only thing I hope is that it doesn't bother Sutcliffe, or any player for that matter."

Outfielder Darryl Strawberry became the father of girl Tuesday when his wife, Lisa, gave birth at North Shore University Hospital shortly after 10 a.m. Hospital spokeswoman Carol Hauptman said the infant weighed six pounds, 15 ounces and was named Diamond Nicole. Hauptman said the mother and daughter are "doing super." She described the birth as "an easy and uneventful birth." Later that night, Strawberry hit a home run. Earlier this season, Strawberry hit two homers on his son's birthday.

Jacobsen Unhappy With Four-Shot Lead

OAK BROOK, Ill. (AP) — For someone with a four-shot lead after three rounds, Peter Jacobsen was not a happy man.

"I can't believe I did that. I just gave two shots away. Incredible," Jacobsen said after a bogey-bogey finish took some of the gloss off his 3-under-par 69 in Saturday's third round of the $900,000 Western Open.

"It's so frustrating," he said. "I can't stop thinking about it."

But that is precisely what he must do Sunday if he is to hold on for his first PGA Tour victory since 1984.

"It's very disappointing to finish with two bogeys. Like most players, I tend to look at what I did wrong, instead of what I did right," he said. "That's what I'm going to try to do tonight, think about all the things I did right. I played well. I drove the ball extremely well.

"I'm leading. I'm comfortable with it. It's the position I want to be in.

"Now, I've just got to go out tomorrow and stay aggressive, try to play well, make some birdies.

"I'm going to be on my best behavior, because there are several guys right there looking to make up ground in a hurry.

"And they can. The golf course is yielding birdies. I wouldn't be surprised if someone comes out of the pack with a 64 tomorrow, so I've got to stay aggressive.

There were birdies aplenty Saturday on the Butler National Golf Club course that was robbed of its natural defenses by the absence of wind.

Jacobsen, rebounding from back problems that have plagued him for three years, completed 54 holes in 12-under-par 204 and matched the largest third-round lead on the PGA Tour this season.

Dan Forsman, Dave Eichelberger, Bill Britton and Jim Benepe, playing in his first PGA Tour event, shared second at 206.

Forsman had a 71 that included a double bogey-6 on the last hole. Britton moved up with a 67. The 44-year-old Eichelberger shot 68 and Benepe, a Wyoming native who has played on the Asian tour, in Australia and Canada in the last two years, had a bogey-free 69.

Mark Calcavecchia was next at 209 after a 67.

Ben Crenshaw scattered 10 3's across his card in a 65 that lifted him into a tie at 210 with defending champion D.A. Weibring, who had a 69.

"That's about as easy as the golf course can play. Butler can be had today," Crenshaw said.

Tom Watson, a three-time champion, got as far as 8-under, but slumped on the back nine and bogeyed his last two holes for a 70 that left him at 211.

PGA champion Larry Nelson, a winner last week in Atlanta, struggled to a 74 and was at 214.

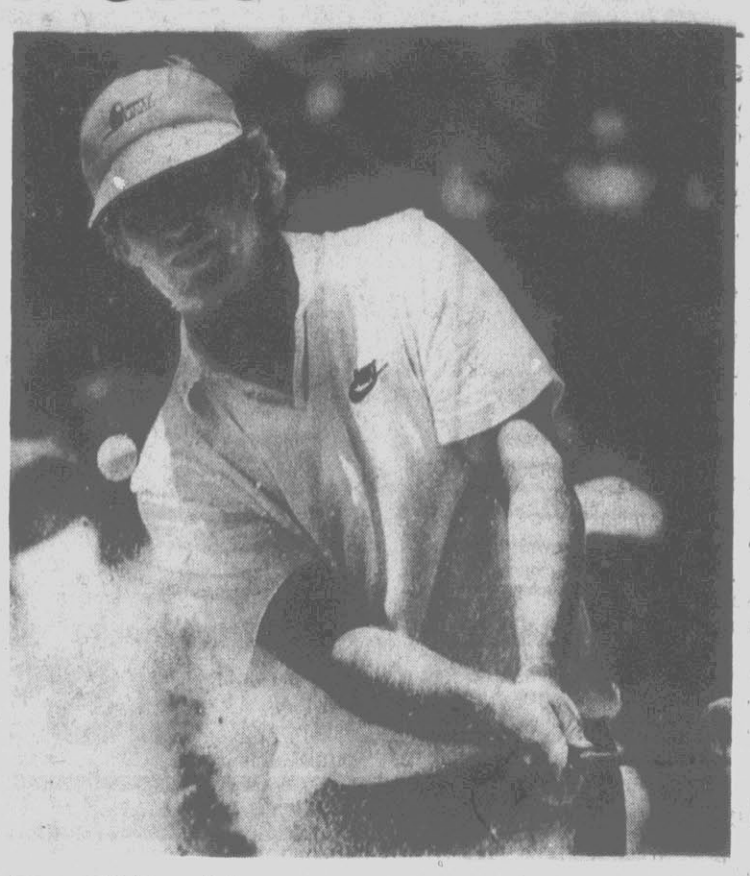

Jacobsen, two shots ahead when play started, got short irons close to the cup for birdies on the seventh and eighth holes, reached the turn in 34 and had doubled his advantage.

He chipped in from about 35 feet for a birdie on the 11th, two-putted for birdie-4 on the 12th, hit a 7-iron to six feet and birdied the 14th.

That put him at 14-under for the tournament. He was threatening to make it a rout before bogeying the last two holes — each time from the middle of the fairway.

He got a 4-iron second shot into a difficult position in a bunker on the 17th. On the 18th, his approach was short, then backed down a slope still further away from the hole. He pitched to about five feet, but missed the putt.

"Terrible," he said, then added, "that's golf."

Out Of Trouble

Little Getting Closer To First Victory Since 1982

COQUITLAM, British Columbia (AP) — Sally Little took another step toward her first LPGA victory since 1982 by shooting a 3-under-par 69 Saturday for a two-shot lead after three rounds of the du Maurier Classic.

Little, 36, had a 54-hole total of 8-under-par 208 after three trips around the 6,361-yard Vancouver Golf Club course.

Sherri Turner and LPGA Tour rookie Laura Davies of England both shots 70s and were tied for second at 210.

Patti Rizzo, Amy Alcott and Debbie Massey were next at 213. Rizzo shot a 70, Alcott had a 71 and Massey struggled to a 73.

Colleen Walker, with a 73, and Rosie Jones, who shot a 71, were next at 214. Jan Stephenson and Japan's Ayako Okamoto were in a group of six players at 215.

The $500,000 tournament is the third of the LPGA's four majors and the only Tour stop in Canada.

Little, a 36-year-old native of South Africa who now lives in Delray Beach, Fla., has 14 career Tour victories, but none since 1982. Back surgery in 1983 set back her career.

She took the lead from Turner during the second round with a 65 and stretched her lead to three shots Saturday before bogeying the 16th hole.

Defending champion Jody Rosenthal fell out of contention with a 74 for a 219 total. Nancy Lopez, this year's leading money-winner, had her best round, a 70, but was well out of contention at 220.

"My tough round was the first day when I didn't make any birdies," said Lopez, 31, a member of the LPGA Hall of Fame. "I hit the ball real well today and was consistent. I'm pleased.

"I won't give up. I don't think I can win the tournament, of course, but I know I can get in there and finish well."

Dawn Coe, the top Canadian in the field, had a 74 and fell eight shots off the lead at 216.

Thomson Leads Senior Event By One Shot After Firing A 66

RANCHO MURIETA, Calif. (AP) — Australian Peter Thomson shot a 6-under-par 66 Saturday to take a 1-stroke lead after the first round of the $350,000 Senior Gold Rush.

Miller Barber was second after firing four birdies on the front nine and finishing with a 67.

Gary Player, coming off a playoff win last week in the Silver Pages Classic, bogeyed the final two holes to slip into a tie for third with Lou Graham and Billy Maxwell at 68.

Thomson, 58, carded six birdies, including a 25-foot chip-in on the par-5 third hole. He took the lead from Barber with birdies on the 16th and 17th holes.

The steeply sloped green on the third hole has drawn criticism this week from the players in the three-day, 54-hole tournament.

"I heard the putting (on the third hole) is impossible, so I just chip it in," said Thomson, who also holed a chip shot on the third during a shootout event Wednesday.

Many of the first-round leaders completed their round before temperatures reached a high of 104 degrees. The heat was expected to be more of a factor Sunday, with the leaders scheduled to tee off two hours later in the day.

"I just try to walk slow and drink a lot of fluids," said Barber, who scored seven birdies and a bogey.

Orville Moody, who won last year's inaugural Gold Rush with an 11-under-par 205, shot a 72, and Arnold Palmer shot a 2-under-par 70 on the course he redesigned last year.

Attendance was 14,320 Saturday at the Rancho Murieta tournament, one of the most popular Senior PGA Tour events.

Hoyt To Serve Sentence

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Former Cy Young Award winner LaMarr Hoyt checked in to a Columbia halfway house on Saturday where he's expected to finish out his one-year sentence for violating parole.

Hoyt, 33, declined to be interviewed when he arrived back in his hometown after having spent more than four months at the Allenwood Federal Prison Camp in Montgomery, Pa.

Sharon Driggers, public relations director for the Alston Wilkes Society, which runs several halfway houses in the state, said the former major leaguer would be treated like any other inmate at the facility in downtown Columbia.

Prison officials approved Hoyt's transfer to the two-story, brick halfway house late last month. Hoyt was released Friday morning from the Pennsylvania prison.

Hoyt pleaded guilty to possession of cocaine and marijuana in February in a case stemming from a Dec. 15 drug arrest at his Columbia apartment. Judge Frank Eppes sentenced Hoyt to 2½ years in prison but suspended the term to seven months and ordered it served concurrent with a one-year sentence given Hoyt by a California magistrate.

The one-year sentence originally was suspended by U.S. Magistrate Roger Curtis McKee of San Diego. McKee suspended the sentence after Hoyt pleaded guilty in 1986 to two misdemeanor drug charges but reinstated the sentence after Hoyt broke the terms of his probation when he tested positive for cocaine in October.

Hoyt began serving that sentence at the Pennsylvania prison Feb. 22. The former pitcher had reduced his sentence to about 10 months because of good behavior and was scheduled to be released from the prison camp Nov. 25.

Recreation Tennis Competition Continues

Aldridge and Southerland defeated East Carolina Lincoln-Mercury and Joe Pecheles Volkswagon defeated Re/Max Properties in the second week of competition in the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department Summer Novice Tennis League.

Top players for Aldridge and Southerland were Chas Scarantino and Patrick McNally. Each player lost only one match during the week.

Chip Davis was the spark for East Carolina Lincoln-Mercury as he went through the week without a loss.

Leading Joe Pecheles Volkswagon to victory were Bob Pleasants and Bubba Williams.

Action will continue next week as East Carolina Lincoln-Mercury will battle Joe Pecheles and Clark-Branch Realtors takes on Re/Max Properties.

Little League Field Day Set For July 4

The 33rd Annual Greenville Moose Lodge Little League Field Day is set for July 4 at Elm Street Park from 1 p.m. to 6 p.m.

Louis Causey, Jr. Governor of the Greenville Moose Lodge #885, will get the event underway followed by an invocation from J.L. Petty and the flag ceremony by Bill Shaw.

The seven field events will follow at 1:30. At 4 p.m. the father's all star game between the fathers of the Tar Heel League and the fathers from the North State League. There will be a picnic at 6 p.m. for all players and their families.

Lebo Hopes To Make Carolina Even Better

(AP) — When Jeff Lebo, a rising senior basketball player at the University of North Carolina, says he needs to improve his point-guard play, there is every reason to believe the conviction is based on more than numbers.

"For us to improve, I need to improve," Lebo said recently. "Of course, that goes for everyone on the team every year. But this is my last season, and I want to make sure I've done everything I can to make it as good as possible."

Like most of coach Dean Smith's pupils, Lebo, a 6-foot-3 guard, has become a consummate team player despite being a shooting machine in high school.

But last season, there were indications that Lebo's offensive scales got out of balance through no fault of his own.

The departure of first-round NBA pick Kenny Smith had left the Tar Heels without an experienced floor leader and with a shortage of backcourt players in general. Lebo, who for years had made his athletic name by sinking jumpers, was moved to the point.

Soon afterward, Lebo's shooting percentage went sour. The guard who had shot 51.4 percent from the field as a freshman and 53.2 percent as a sophomore slumped to 43.6 percent last season.

His scoring average, never a big factor in UNC's offensive system, also fell slightly — from 13.5 points per game as a sophomore to 12.2.

Two other statistical categories were more significant. As a sophomore wing guard, Lebo had 144 assists. He increased that total only by 15 as a playmaker, and his steal total dropped from 46 to 34. His turnovers made a moderate increase, from 64 to 76.

Kenny Smith had 209 assists, 104 turnovers and 51 steals and shot 50.2 percent as a senior in 1986-87.

Lebo makes no secret that he wants full satisfaction in his last season, and the potential is there. Only one player, Ranzino Smith, graduated from a team that finished 27-7.

But there are questions, not the least of which is Lebo's health. A non-stop, year-round player, Lebo has suffered the effects of fatigue and physical wear for the past year. Near the end of last season, a lower-leg stress fracture was diagnosed that eventually caused him to decline an invitation to participate in the U.S. Olympic team selection tryouts.

Twice in the past year Lebo has been ordered by doctors (and or Smith) to take competitive sabbaticals. The latest of those two, a six-week rest period for the stress fracture, ended last week.

NCAA Tennis Tourney To Stay At Georgia

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — The NCAA men's tennis tournament that was supposed to be played away from the University of Georgia's Athens campus next year will be back in the land of the Bulldogs after all.

Karl Benson, assistant director of championships in charge of tennis, said Friday the men's tennis committee has recommended to the NCAA's executive committee that the University of Georgia be the site of next year's Division I men's tennis championship, to be held May 19-27.

Last year, the association announced that the tournament would be held at an Indian Wells, Calif., tennis club in 1989 and at the University of Georgia in 1990.

"The Indian Wells facility would not have its new courts completed in time to host the '89 event," Benson said from NCAA headquarters in Mission, Kan. "Fortunately, Georgia agreed to switch dates with Indian Wells, which will be host in 1990."

Georgia has been the site of the men's tennis championship 13 times.

"It's a great honor for Georgia to be selected to host the world's premier tennis competiton," said recently retired Georgia tennis coach Dan Magill.

"I supported the change at the time, because I thought that was a good way to defuse the situation," Magill said. "I knew after we won the second championship that there were going to be coaches saying we had a home-court advantage.

"Our intention has always been to make the tournament better every year," he said. "That's what we'll try to do next year."

Brawls With Umps Hurt Martin's Chances

NEW YORK (AP) — Conflicts with umpires helped Billy Martin lose his job as manager, New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner said Saturday.

Steinbrenner was asked on NBC's pre-game show before the "Game of the Week" whether Martin was fired June 23 for his rumored drinking problems and his poor handling of the Yankee pitchers.

"It was a combination of things. And those were two things, but not paramount things," Steinbrenner said. "One of the things was the umpires situation. I mean when you're told by the umpires association that you will be treated different than any other (manager) in the game and that you come out of the dugout your going to be run. ...

"Even after his apology they didn't come back with a full-scale endorsement. We could see what was happening. He was reticent to go out and argue for his players when they thought they were right. You can't function as a manager on seven out of eight cylinders, you just can't do it."

Martin was suspended once and fined twice by the American League in May for throwing dirt on umpires. After the second incident, Richie Phillips, head of the umpires' union, warned that Martin would have to sit in the dugout with his hands folded and his mouth shut or be throw ejected from games. Martin later issued an apology for his behavior..

Steinbrenner said, referring to his frequent changes in managers — 15 in 15 years: "Different strokes for different folks. Different rhymes for different times."

Close Finish Was Too Close To Call

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Bill Elliott overcame a poor qualifying effort, dodged a wreck and coaxed a sluggish engine to victory Saturday in a Firecracker 400 finish that was too close for him to judge.

"I had to ask who won," Elliott said. "I didn't even know."

The veteran NASCAR driver led the final 23 laps and beat Rick Wilson by less than a hood's length for his third Winston Cup series victory this year.

This week, Elliott had failed to make the field on the opening day of qualifying at a superspeedway for the first time since 1984. He came from farther back in the field than any previous Firecracker winner, starting 38th in the 42-car lineup.

Elliott had started in the front row here the past three years.

"Really, it's not that bad starting 38th," he said. "It's no different than starting the race, having a problem and being in the back anyway."

Elliott nearly had a problem on the second lap of the race, when a seven-car wreck occurred in turn four as he was rounding turn three.

"If I had qualified better, I probably would have been in the middle of the wreck, so it's better that I started where I started," Elliott said. "Things happen for a reason."

Elliott said he avoided the wreck, which knocked four cars out of the race, by hitting the brakes hard.

"I just about stopped," he said. "I got way down on the inside and was just able to feel my way through it. There were even some cars behind me that got in the wreck."

Elliott said his Ford Thunderbird handled well in the corners but was slow on the straightaways, except when Wilson was on his rear bumper. They ran that way for much of the last half of the 400-mile race.

"The only way my car would run was with (Wilson) behind me. When he got to me, we started picking up on everybody else," Elliott said. "Why, I have no idea."

Wilson nosed ahead coming out of turn four on the last lap, but Elliott regained the lead as their fenders rubbed in the final 100 yards.

"If he had made his move a little bit later, I think he would've been all right," Elliott said. "I knew if he didn't completely clear me, I had a chance.

"It was just a miracle, that's all there is to it."

Pitt County Tops Snow Hill In Opener

By TIM CHANDLER
Reflector Sports Writer

The American Legion post-season playoffs got off to a bang Friday at Harrington Field as Pitt County outslugged Snow Hill to take a 14-12 victory.

In the game, there were 26 total runs, 32 hits and 11 errors.

Pitt County seemed to have the game under control, as it headed into the eighth inning with a 14-5 lead. Snow Hill had other plans, however.

In the top of the eighth, Post 94 sent 11 batters to the plate, collected six hits and scored seven runs to close to within 14-12 and open the eyes of the yawning fans in the stands.

"Snow Hill's the type of team that's going to keep their intensity up for the whole game regardless of what the score is," Pitt County coach Toby Holliday said. "We had a big lead there late in the game, but they didn't give up and they came back strong."

In the eighth, Snow Hill got its rally started with one out. George Burnette for the night, doubled to left and then scored the first run of the inning on T.J. Johnson's double to center.

Following a single by Tommy Eason, Shay Beaman tripled off the centerfield wall to score two more runs. Chris West then singled to right, punching across Beaman for the fourth run of the inning.

That sent Holliday to the mound to pull starting pitcher Gary Hodges. Hodges was replaced on the mound by Robbie McDonald.

Anthony Jones then stepped in against McDonald and was put on base with a walk. Walt McKeel then doubled to center to score both West and Jones. McKeel brought home the final run of the Post 94 rally when he tagged home following a dropped ball in rightfield by Jamie Brewington.

"They (Snow Hill) showed they could hit the ball," Holliday said. "We played the better defense (Snow Hill had eight errors compared to three for Pitt County) and that made the difference."

Pitt County struck first in the game with a single run in the opening inning. After the bases were loaded with a pair of walks and a single by David Daniels, Ty Little was struck by a Todd Mewborn pitch to force the run in.

Snow Hill counterd in the second with two runs to snare the lead. Hodges gave up a bases-loaded walk to Mewborn for the first Post 94 run and a fielder's choice by Burnette scored the other run.

Post 39 knotted the game at 2-2 in the bottom half of the third as Tom Moye singled to left, moved to third following a base on balls and a fielder's choice and then scored on a wild pitch by Mewborn.

Snow Hill put together five hits in the top half of the fourth to score three runs and take a 5-2 lead. Burnette, Eason and Beaman each collected an RBI in the inning.

Not to be outdone, Post 39 posted three runs of its own in the bottom of the frame to once again tie the score, this time at 5-5, Moye, who was 3-3 with two RBI and five runs scored for the game, provided the big punch with a two-run double in the inning. Moye also scored later in the inning on a Snow Hill error.

Pitt County jumped out to a 9-5 lead in the fifth inning sparked by a three-run homer to center by Daniels, who was 3-4 with three RBI. Heath Clark also added an RBI double in the inning.

Post 39's lead grew to 10-5 in the sixth when Little singled to right to open the inning, moved to second on an error and scored on a run-scoring single to right by Hodges.

Pitt County seemingly closed the door shut on Snow Hill in the bottom of the seventh when it recorded four more runs to push the lead to 14-5.

Moye opened the inning with a single, followed by a single by Daniels and Little. All three managed to score without any more hits as Snow Hill committed three errors in the inning and had a pair of wild pitches. Hodges, who reached base on one of the errors also scored in the inning.

"They've (Snow Hill) got a tough club," Holliday said. "If we can get our pitching together I think we'll be better off."

Snow Hill, who slipped to 8-10 with the loss Friday, and Pitt County, who improved to 9-8 with the win, met again Saturday in Snow Hill for the second game of the best-of-three first round series. If a third game is necessary, it will be played Sunday at 8 p.m. at Harrington Field.

Jarman's.....11
Coca Cola.....4

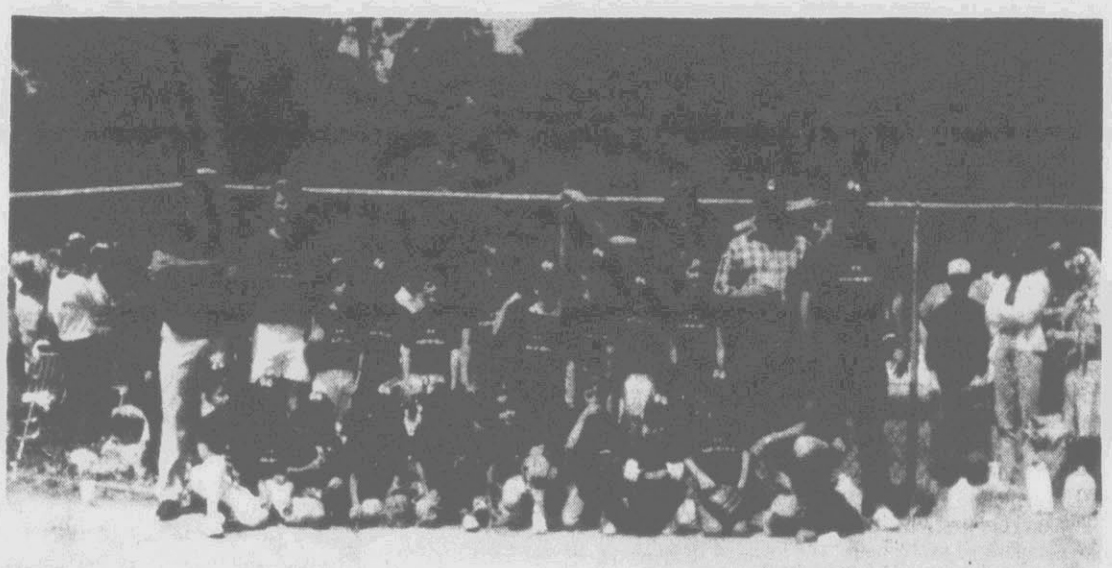

Jarman's bounced back from a Friday loss to Coca Cola to win 11-4 Saturday in the Little League Championship playoffs.

Jarman's scored five runs in the first inning behind four hits to seize the lead. Nicky Phillips homered in the inning, while Brandon Pierce had a triple and Adam Vicent had a double.

Jarman's added four more runs in the fourth inning to open up a 5-2 lead. Coca Cola managed to score two more runs in the sixth inning, however, Jarman's had already countered those runs with a pair in the bottom of the fifth.

Vincent wound up the game with a 3-4 performance at the plate, as did Russell Williamson.

Coca Cola was led by Kevin Pilgreen, who went 3-3, and Adrian Jones, who went 2-3.

Farmville Pee-Wee Champions

Coca Cola.....13
Jarman's.....3

Coca Cola scored six runs in the first inning and never looked back en route to posting a 13-3 win over Jarman's in the Greenville Little League Championship game Friday.

Coca Cola entered the game after taking the title in the North State League, while Jarman's won the title in the Tar Heel League.

Jarman's managed to score a pair of runs in the bottom of the first to close to within 6-2, however, a five-run barrage by Coke in the sixth inning ended any hopes of a comeback.

Steven Salrgo led the way for Coke at the plate with a 3-5 performance. Jacob Zonn was 2-4 and James Ebron went 2-3.

Zonn picked up the win on the mound for Coke as he went the distance, giving up only three hits.

Sr. Babe Ruth

Winterville Machine...11
Ayden-Grifton.....8

HOLLYWOOD — Gray Mills went 3-3 at the plate to help pace Winterville Machine to an 11-8 victory over Ayden-Grifton in Senior Babe Ruth League baseball action Friday night.

Winterville jumped out to a 6-0 lead in the first inning of the game and never looked back.

Gray Mills was 2-3 for Winterville, while Paul Jackson picked up the win on the mound.

Ayden-Grifton was led in hitting by Gary Eubanks' 2-2 performance. Both of Eubanks' hits were doubles. Scott Chauncy added a 2-4 performance for Ayden-Grifton.

The win boosted Winterville to 7-1 for the season with a game upcoming Tuesday night at home against Washington.

Babe Ruth

Wachovia.....9
Everette's.....8

Wachovia build a 9-1 lead early and then held off a furious comeback by Everette's to capture a 9-8 win in Babe Ruth League baseball action Friday night.

Wachovia held a 9-1 lead going into the top of the sixth inning, however, Everette's sent 11 batters to the plate in the inning and wound up closing to within a single run of the lead before the rally faltered.

Ledwick Jackson and mark Aldridge paced Wachovia at the plate in the win by posting 2-4 performances. Everette's was led by four batters with two hits each.

Randy Miller, Billy Gorham, David Likosar and B.J. Jackson all had a pair of hits.

The game wrapped up the regular season for both ball clubs. The two teams will return to action next week in the league playoffs.

Pepsi Cola.....6
Home Builders.....3

Marty Whichard hurled a four hitter Friday to lead Pepsi Cola to a 6-3 victory over Home Builders in a Babe Ruth League baseball game.

Whichard went the distance on the mound for Pepsi to pick up the win.

Pepsi managed to break open a 3-3 tie in the bottom half of the fifth frame with a pair of runs. Another run in the sixth inning gave Pepsi its margin of victory.

Kevin Hardee led the way at the plate for Pepsi as he went 2-3, while Grant Harman collected half of Home Builders' hits in going 2-3 at the plate.

The game was the final Babe Ruth League game of the season for both teams as playoff will begin next week.

Soccer Fans Should Celebrate July 4

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

The American soccer community should have some heavy celebrating to do on the Fourth of July.

Independence Day figures to be Confirmation Day for World Cup USA '94. The United States is a heavy favorite to be awarded the 1994 World Cup, soccer's world championship and the most popular sporting event on the planet. FIFA, the international soccer governing body, will announce its decision July 4.

A year ago, the bid seemed headed for Brazil, whose biggest supporter was FIFA President Joao Havelange, a native of that country. But the financial demands of hosting the tournament, combined with Brazil's struggling economy, forced the Brazilian government to refuse to fund the bid.

Morocco, which does not have the facilities but claimed it would build them if awarded the tournament, was the only other bidder, and not a particularly serious one. Since the '94 World Cup is scheduled for anywhere but Europe — it will be in Italy in 1990 — that left the United States, which failed to get the Cup in '86, losing out to Mexico, in control.

But Werner Fricker, president of the U.S. Soccer Federation, insists the Americans won't be getting the tournament by default.

"The most important thing is this time we had sufficient time to do the job," Fricker said. "The last time, FIFA had to look around, and make the safer choice of going with someone who had done it before and did it successfully.

"The odds are in our favor for many reasons. Soccer with respects to the national team is finally stabilized, we have support of the government, the president, relationships with corporate sponsors.

"This time, we started well in advance. We were all equal."

The United States never has been more than a minor player on the international soccer stage. That certainly will change with the Cup coming to America.

"To be the host, you can pull together the soccer community," said Paul Stiehl, director of World Cup USA '94. "It will give us a more cohesive and powerful organization and, by 1994, more direct soccer affiliates than any other nation. Do you know what that means, what I am saying? We would have the strongest federation in the world.

"Statistically, think it through. With 250 million people at our disposal and the leisure time available to us — other federations are in for a rude awakening when it dawns on them we could take over as a power in the soccer community."

For now, however, the USSF and World Cup USA '94 anxiously is awaiting the July 4 announcement. If the United States does not get the bid, it will be a shock.

"For soccer to grow in the U.S. the country needs the World Cup," said Michel Platini, the former French captain and three-time European player of the year. "It is the only chance. At the same time, I think it is wrong to give the World Cup to a country that doesn't like football. The World Cup should really go to countries that play big-time soccer. The danger is it could be a one moment thing and afterwards there may be nothing."

Franz Beckenbauer, captain of the West German team that won the 1974 World Cup and former captain of the New York Cosmos, also endorsed the United States' bid.

"It's about time that the most popular game in the world took off in such a great country," said Beckenbauer, now head coach of West Germany's national team. "The World Cup would be a great boost to American soccer and would be a great success."

U.S. soccer officials, who flew to Zurich this week to make a final presentation, are confident, but naturally nervous.

"So far we have not made any mistakes," Fricker said. "I'm not saying we're perfect, but..."

Few details of the U.S. bid have been revealed, but a likely site for the final is Joe Robbie Stadium in Miami. Robbie has been an influential supporter of the American bid and joined the group in Zurich this week.

"The main advantage we have (at getting the final in Miami) is that the inspection committee said this (Joe Robbie Stadium) is the most outstanding soccer facility in the world," he said.

Perhaps the biggest factor in the United States even being considered as a host is the corporate backing available in this country.

"We did get substantial monetary infusions from many corporations, like Warner Communications, Marlboro, Union Pacific, American Express, Coca-Cola," Stiehl said. "It goes without saying that if they put up that kind of cash, there is a method to the madness, that they expect a significant return and to be first in line for involvement in the tournament. They deserve to be for the early backing they gave.

"It's a stepping stone, a necessary one," Stiehl added. "We all pull to '94, then push from there on."

Optimism Abounds, Except in England

LONDON (AP) — Soccer shrugged off its troubles to produce a feast of skill, enterprise and fair play at the European Championships.

The tournament showed glimpses of a bright future for a sport that has has been struggling to throw off a tarnished image.

But that bright future is set to bypass England, soccer's birthplace, which remains alienated because of crowd violence and shackled by antiquated methods on the field.

England's teams remain barred from European competition because they are unable to eradicate the sort of crowd violence that left 39 people dead at the 1985 European Champions' Cup final in Brussels' Heysel stadium.

The only country that exports soccer violence, England winced as its rowdies fought with their German counterparts during the recent European Championships, ensuring that their clubs will stay in the soccer wilderness for the forseeable future.

England's sterile soccer was exposed by three defeats in the European Championships. The team lacked imagination and subtlety and the nation that once led the soccer world appeared to have fallen behind in terms of how to play the game.

Cut off from European competition unless they transfer abroad, English players and coaches remain stranded on their soccer island as a wave of optimism about the game sweeps across the rest of the continent.

The Netherlands' triumph in the eight-team European Championships showed that flair and positive play can triumph over method, dour defense and kick and rush soccer.

Dutch coach Rinus Michels said after his side's 2-0 victory over the Soviet Union in the final: "What we saw was the soccer of the future."

The fact that no one was sent off in the 15-match tournament reflected a higher standard of fair play.

And the vast majority of the fans responded with what Jacques Georges, president of soccer's European governing body, UEFA, described as a "new atmosphere of fraternization."

In his address to UEFA's 19th Congress on the eve of the European Championship final in Munich, Georges described how violence had changed soccer.

"Twenty to thirty years ago, you could go to a stadium with your family in all safety. Now, the fans don't go to a stadium, they go to a fortress where the field is surrounded by a thousand police who have to keep order.

"But from these matches," he went on, "we are able to note that there is a new atmosphere among the supporters.

"There is the start up of a fraternization, a friendship. We have found supporters getting together and mixing without any problems.

"I think this may be the gentle start along the lines we want to see," Georges said.

Sitting in the conference room, prior to his election to UEFA's Executive Committee, was Bert Millichip, chairman of the English Football Association, which has the task of shepherding English clubs back into the European fold.

He was in no position to share the president's optimism.

"We are faced with so many, many problems," Millichip said.

"If we are to get our clubs back into Europe and if we are to keep the England team in other competitions, then we, the F.A., really have to find some answers."

Hans Bangerter, a 64-year-old Swiss who retires as UEFA's general secretary after 29 years at the helm of European soccer, has one answer.

"These hooligans should have their passports taken away," he said in an interview. "They should not be allowed to leave their country.

"As long as this measure is not taken, there is little chance of readmission," Bangerter warned.

"We regret the absence of the English clubs from our competitions. But the situation is we cannot take the risk to readmit them."

Bangerter also had optimistic words for a sport he has served for almost three decades.

Looking at the European Championships, he said: "We have seen high class football and in the stadiums we have had up to 40,000 people from a visiting country (the Netherlands) behaving very well indeed.

"That makes is believe that soccer, in itself, is sound, but that manipulation outside the game, such as hooliganism in the streets which is not under our control, still poses serious problems."

Bangerter also was wary about the impact on soccer of commercialization and television.

"Commercialization must be kept under control. We do need commercialization, but it must not be allowed to give orders to sport," he said.

"The TV situation will get bigger and bigger because of the diversification of TV through cable and satellite. We are no longer dealing with just a few organizations and we must make sure we get the best deal for soccer."

Looking back on his time in charge of European soccer, Bangerter said: "Twenty-nine years ago, all we had to deal with was sports problems. Now we are mainly occupied with extra-sporting matters, which is very regrettable.

"Sport has become a means for everyone to interfere in some way," Bangerter said.

"I hope the soccer leaders of tomorrow will keep to the good old traditions. If they don't leave that path, I think football will survive because it is still the most popular sport," Bangerter said.

While English administrators wrestle with the problem of hooliganism, its coaches and players face a dilemma.

Should they stay at home and make the best of the domestic game? Or should they risk their reputations abroad?

Last season, England midfielder Glenn Hoddle left north London's Tottenham Hotspur and helped Monaco win the French League title.

Interviewed by the mass circulation Sun newspaper, Hoddle was quoted as saying English soccer had learned nothing in 15 years.

"The truth is we are lacking technical ability and, until our outlook changes, that situation will remain," Hoddle, who will be in next season's Champions' Cup with Monaco, told the Sun.

"European competition is a vital stepping stone between League and international football," Hoddle was quoted as saying.

Cram Wins Another Dream Mile

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Britain's Steve Cram outkicked a star-studded field in the final 40 meters Saturday night to win his fourth straight "Dream Mile" at the Bislett Games IAAF Mobil Grand Prix track meet.

Earlier, Liz Lynch-McColgan of Britain handed world record-holder Ingrid Kristiansen of Norway her first-ever loss in the 10,000 meters.

Cram came from the inside lane to overtake Jens-Peter Herold of East Germany, fellow Briton Peter Elliott and Abdi Bile of Somalia, who surprisingly won the 1,500 meters in last year's World Championships. Cram won in a time of three minutes, 48.85 seconds.

It was a great comeback for the 27-year-old Cram, who finished last in the World Championships last year and was running his first major race of 1988.

"I said before the race that it would not matter who won tonight," Cram said. "But I'm very pleased. It was a very satisfying win.

"I needed a race like that to get my confidence back. Bislett is the best track in the world."

Cram was in a very bad position towards the end.

"I just had enough room to elbow my way past the other guys and make it to the line," he said.

Cram set the world record of 3:46.32 in perfect conditions here three years ago. On Saturday, high humidity and gusty winds caused some problems for the runners.

Elliott's time was 3:49.20, just .02 ahead of Herold and .20 in front of Bile.

Steve Scott, America's top miler in the last decade and a six-time U.S. champion in the 1,500, was fifth in 3:50.09. Fellow American Jim Spivey, a bronze medalist in the 1,500 in the World Championships, finished sixth in 3:50.57.

It was the fastest 10,000-meter time in the world this year and a new personal best for Lynch-McColgan, who had predicted after her Belfast victory that she would beat Kristiansen in this meet.

She did, pulling away late in the race. After running most of the way together and lapping several other runners, Kristiansen suddenly stopped with 2½ laps left due to pain in both sides.

Kristiansen, who has broken four world records in the 5,000 and 10,000 meters at Bislett Stadium since 1981, resumed running after a few seconds. But she had no chance to catch McColgan, who had built up a 100-meter lead.

Kristiansen, the world champion in Rome last year, had set her previous world marks here after solo races. She finished in 31:31.37, well off the world record of 30:13.74 she ran here two years ago.

Kristiansen and Lynch-McColgan had split times well under the world record pace until the 4,400-meter mark, but couldn't keep it up.

Kristiansen, 32, who has only lost twice in the 5,000 — to Zola Budd of Britain and fellow-Norwegian Grete Waitz — said she didn't feel very well during the race.

"I felt pain in my stomach," she said. "Three years ago, I had the same problem when running here. I felt the same today. My stomach was not OK."

Xiuting Wang of China was a distant third in 32:02.21, just ahead of France's Annette Sergent-Palluy, who was timed in 32:04.78.

In the men's 5,000 meters, Pascal Thiebaut nipped John Ngugi of Kenya by less than a half-second, winning in 13:17.48, the fastest time of the year. Ngugi, who had the previous fastest time, was clocked in 13:17.95.

Third went to Yobes Ondieki, another Kenyan, in 13:19.95. American record-holder Sydney Maree, running his second race in two days, was fourth in 13:20.29.

East Germany's Heike Drechsler blazed to a 10.91 clocking in the women's 100 meters for the second-fastest time of the year. American Florence Joyner-Griffith has a 10.89 earlier this year.

Drechsler's time was also a new meet record, .15 faster than American Evelyn Ashford ran in 1982.

Dannette Young of the United States was runnerup in 11.26.

Eamonn Martin kicked strongly to win the men's 10,000 in 27:23.06, a new British record, the fastest time of the year and a new meet record. It was also the fifth-fastest time in history.

After Four Months, Jansen Still Writing

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The mail of the world still comes to Dan Jansen's door, more than four months after the Calgary Winter Olympics made him a hero to some and a tragic figure to others.

And Jansen, busier than he's ever been in his life, tries to write back.

"It's been unbelievable. They're still coming," Jansen says on a hot summer afternoon as he prepares to ride in a parade with fellow members of the U.S. Olympic speed skating team.

"They're not nearly what they were for a while. Now we get one or two. The mailman was bringing stacks like this every day with rubberbands," Jansen says, holding his hands several inches apart to describe the size of the bundles.

He estimates that he's received about 5,000 notes and letters and cards from everywhere.

"We answered just about every one of them, and now a lot of them they're 'Thank you for answering our letter,'" Jansen says with a chuckle.

"It's been a real nice thing to feel so much support. It's helped me out a lot."

Dan Jansen didn't win a medal in the Olympics, even though he trained for that goal for years. The morning of his first race his sister, Jane Beres of West Allis, died of leukemia.

Jansen went ahead and raced that evening in the 500 meter event because he knew his sister would have wanted him to. He fell in the first turn. And with the world watching three days later, he fell again in the 1,000 meters.

But now Jansen has picked himself up and when he reflects on Calgary, it's not with anguish.

"Yeah, I think back a lot," he says. "I don't know. It's something that was strange timing with the whole situation.

"I had trained for how many years basically with that in my head and when the time finally came my mind was somewhere else. It's sort of ironic.

"But I don't feel mad or bitter about it. It's just an experience I have to learn from."

Jansen has learned to go on with his life. He's training again for next season, hopes to return to Calgary as a student where he can practice on the same indoor oval that hosted the Olympics, is making public appearances galore and is carving out a future.

He did an advertisement for a coffee company and just recently began working in the sports marketing department of a local brewery.

"I didn't expect it at all but it's not going to last forever," Jansen says of his busy schedule. "I've got to enjoy it while I can.

"It used to be where I had nothing going on but training and that's all I would think about. I was doing two workouts a day but now with so much else going on, it's hard to motivate a lot."

The 1992 Olympics are far away and Jansen can't project to the next winter Games in Albertville, France. They would be his third Olympics.

"I go year-by-year now. Hopefully I can repeat my world sprint championships. That's my goal this year. If I can do that, I'd be satisfied," he said.

Waterfowlers Can Put Away 12-Gauge

Outdoor News

By BILL SCHULZ
Associated Press Writer

Many waterfowlers probably can keep the 12-gauge packed away until October; the early teal seasons are probably gone this year, and the regular duck season will be short with a small bag limit.

Fall waterfowl hunting will be another victim of the drought in the prairies of the Midwest and Canada.

Ducks don't appear to be nesting, meaning the fall flight could be the smallest in history.

Waterfowl managers in Washington are looking to reduce bag limits and season lengths.

It's something duck hunters should accept for the sake of future hunting, said Matt Connolly Jr., executive vice president of Ducks Unlimited.

"I tell our people, 'You ought to go to the duck blind this fall and be prepared to make a sacrifice and make that sacrifice very willingly for the benefit of the resource,'" said Connolly.

"But at the same time, there should be others who are sacrificing elsewhere and in other ways, and some of those are our government and the government of Canada, who must face up to their responsiblity to do something a lot more seriously about habitat."

The sacrifice is going to be a lot fewer ducks for the table this fall.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has proposed cancelling the early teal season in Alabama, Arkansas, Indiana, Illinois, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, Texas, Colorado, Oklahoma, Kansas and New Mexico, as well as the early season on many species in Iowa. Major cuts in early seasons are proposed for Florida, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alaska, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

The word from the prairie pothole country of Canada and the plains of the Midwest is "grim." There ponds have dried up. There is no water for the ducks to raise young.

Many have flown on north, close to the Arctic Circle, to try to find water. Early observations, however, indicate they may not be breeding.

"You'll see groups of males, which shouldn't be grouping, but getting into territoriality and normal things a duck would be doing," prior to nesting, Connolly said. "But when they got into this overflight and they go into habitats which can sustain them through the season, they don't have that normal behavioral habit of breeding."

"They are very, very critical conditions," Connolly said.

He agreed a cutback in the harvest this year is inevitable.

Saying he has not not heard anything official, Connolly said he's heard speculation the cuts could range from a complete ban on taking certain species to a three-bird limit, of which only one can be a Mallard of pintail.

Asked what he would tell the biologists at the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service who must set the seasons, Connolly said:

"I can only hope they will be very mindful of the criticality of the situation, the need of the resource."

He said he wanted a season that would reflect the needs of duck populations in each of the four flyways.

"Given we are in a situation where population levels are at their lowest," he said, "we should anticipate that we will be looking toward a need to cut back on harvest" through a shorter season and smaller bag limits.

A reason that will happen, he said, is because that is all that resource managers, who for years have not done all of the other things they could have done to protect ducks from drought, can now do nothing but cut the harvest.

Government, he said, "has been, I think, neglect in carrying out efforts to enhance habitat," and officials now are "confronted with one of the few things left that they can control, and the last thing left that they can control is the harvest."

He said things government should have done include predator control and eliminating toxins that kill ducks.

Now, he said, "any responsible manager is going to try to protect that resource" any way he can and that way is to reduce the harvest.

The Predator Stalks Pike

By BOB SCHRANCK
Star Tribune of Minneapolis

CALEDONIA, Minn. (AP) — The swirl in shallow water is the tipoff for Al Huesmann. He becomes the predator, stalking the greatest predator among freshwater fish — a northern pike.

"When you see a swirl, it almost always means a northern is making a move," Huesmann said. "Cast there. When you see another swirl, a bigger one, it means he has your No. 3 Mepps and the battle is on."

With his fishing cabin on the Mississippi River at Brownsville 15 miles away, the Caledonia banker has hundreds of northern hot spots in the backwaters of the great river.

What type of equipment does Huesmann suggest?

"Northerns aren't fussy, just mean," he said. "When they're ready, they'll hit anything. I like ultralight, but you can't get too light, because they're big mothers.

"I use 8-pound test line for everything, even when I fish in Canada. With 6-pound line, they seem to tear it apart. And with 10-or 12-pound line, you really lose some of the lure action that produces continuous strikes."

That's the reason he doesn't use steel leaders. He'd prefer not to use any leader, but knows better. "A northern running deep can rip a line pretty good. That gill will pop them easily if they do a turn on you. A lot of people blame the teeth when it's the gill plate that cuts the line.

"I use a 9-inch leader, but with one that short, you must keep the line up."

He said the angler doesn't have to use a boron or graphite rod; fiberglass is good, and a northern doesn't know the difference. "However, I use a boron rod," Huesmann said, "because it makes a five-pound northern fight like a 10-pounder. That's real enjoyment."

Huesmann said presentation of the lure, usually a Mepps spinner, is critical. He casts as close as possible to the weed bed and starts his retrieve as soon as the lure hits the water; 90 percent of strikes occur in the first 10 feet of retrieve.

Some northern anglers prefer morning fishing; Huesmann likes to fish from 6 p.m. to dusk. He doesn't believe northern pike follow the cycles as much as other fish.

"Go into the back waters if you're fishing a river," he said, "or in a lake, try to get into a bay where the water is shallow and there's no current. Early in the season, without weed growth, you have to fish close to shore. Northerns head for shade as summer comes on. When the weed beds are defined, you know where you can pick them up."

Crab Disease May Be Linked to Texasgulf Discharge

Scientists stopped short this week of blaming Texasgulf, a phosphate mining company near Aurora, for an outbreak of crab disease in the southeastern Pamlico River.

Blue crabs, an economically important resource, are widely affected by disease in that area, according to a report released this week by the N.C. Division of Marine Fisheries (DMF) and N.C. State University.

"We don't know who or what is to blame," said Fisheries Director William T. Hogarth, "but the association between Texasgulf and the outbreak of shell disease cannot be dismissed as a fortuitous event and warrants further investigation."

Further investigation is already under way by the newly formed Pamlico Environmental Response Team (PERT) ordered by Gov. James G. Martin. PERT, an emergency study team made up of DMF and Division of Environmental Management technicians and scientists, is also studying other issues affecting the Pamlico River and the Pamlico Sound.

According to scientists, blue crabs from the Pamlico River showed large lesions on their shells in the summer of 1987. In July, DMF technicians sampled 60 areas from Mauls Point to Indian Island.

Results from those trawling surveys substantiated reports of crab disease by area fishermen, and indicated that the disease primarily occurred on the south side of the Pamlico River between Durham Creek and South Creek. Texasgulf is located on the banks of that area of the river.

In August, scientists set out to determine if healthy crabs developed shell disease when placed in the Pamlico River at four locations: Core Point, Indian Island, Long Point and the Texasgulf discharge area. The study found that lesions developed on the crabs at all of the sites, but development was significantly faster at the Texasgulf and Long Point sites.

The French-owned company discharges numerous organic and inorganic compounds directly into the river on a daily basis. Those compaunds include phosphate, cadmium and fluorides.

Scientists say fluorides have been shown to cause skeletal abnormalities in mammals, and could possibly interfere with the shell development of blue crabs. Cadmium has been shown to cause lesions in some species of crabs.

N.C. State Veterinary School officials say the cause of the outbreak is probably a result of abnormal shell sythesis or repair brought about by a chemical imbalance. The cause of the imbalance has not been established.

The N.C. Division of Environmental Management is currently working on a new wastewater permit that will require Texasgulf to recycle its processed water instead of releasing it into the river. This system will significantly reduce the current discharge of contiminants into the river.

Dry Weather Threatens Trout

Anglers planning to fish for trout in mountain streams this summer may want to go now. Dry weather conditions in western North Carolina are forcing fisheries biologists with the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission to speed up their summer trout stocking schedule.

Because of low water levels in most of the mountain trout streams, biologists are currently stocking about 50,000 trout that were scheduled to be stocked in August.

"This will allow the trout to be stocked while adequate amounts of water remain in the streams," said Fred Harris, chief of the Commission's Division of Boating and Inland Fisheries. "We're not too worried about losing fish because they'll probably be caught soon after they're stocked."

If water levels in these streams continue to drop and water temperatures get too high, biologists fear some fish may die. They are finding few places deep enough to stock trout from the state's fish hatcheries.

"Fish kills are a big worry across the state when water levels drop too low," Harris said.

If water levels drop substantially in North Carolina's lakes and reduce shoreline vegetation, younger fish will have few places to hide and would likely be eaten by bigger fish. Biologists would not know how many younger fish were lost until next year during sampling.

The stocking schedule change will allow biologists to reduce the quantities of fish in the Commission's fish hatcheries to levels that can be supported by existing water supplies.

"If things get really critical, we will not have enough water for next year's fish," Harris commented. "We have several hundred thousand young fish in our hatcheries that will need to be stocked next year."

Eggs that are developing in fish now could also be adversely affected by low water levels, which could result in low productivity next year.

Algae Is Harmless

An algae lingering off the southern and central North Carolina coast for the past two months is a nuisance when its purple pigment rubs off on peoples' skin, but it is harmless to beachgoers and marine life, according to N.C. Division of Marine Fisheries (DMF) officials.

The algae, which usually disappears in May, is annoying to vacationers and residents and clogs fishermen's nets. Cooler water this spring is thought to be responsible for its presence.

According to DMF Director William T. Hogarth, the purple pigment "is completely harmless and has absolutely nothing to do with last year's occurrence of red tide organisms. The feathery plant, found in the surf or along the shore, does not cause respiratory irritation.

Local Tournament Winners

Several area fishermen were winners in the 1988 Raleigh Saltwater Fishing Club King Mackerel Tournament held June 25-26 out of Captain Stacy's Fishing Center at Atlantic Beach.

Taking first place overall was Ed Holland of Winterville, fishing aboard the boat "Chaser," with his partner, Kim Tavasso of Greenville.

Other daily winners were Pete West of Winterville, and Terry Savage and Stacy Mills, both of Greenville. They were fishing among 96 boats that entered the annual tournament.

Business Notes

Employee Retires

Eveready Battery Company Inc. announced the recent retirement of David Jones from the Greenville plant.

The company said that Jones, who worked as a production employee for more than 28 years, was honored at the plant with a retirement party.

National Addy Won

Adams & Longino Advertising of Greenville announced that it won a "Citation of Excellence" in the recent national Addy competition held at the American Advertising Federation's national conference in Los Angeles.

The firm said the winning entry, a direct mail piece created for a business, was one of 107 national winners out of 1,860 entries from regional competition in AAF's 12 districts nationwide.

The advertising firm has operated in Greenville since 1978.

MDRT Participant

Orman E. Whichard, a New York Life Insurance Co. agent from Greenville, was one of 5,000 members of the Million Dollar Round Table gathering in Atlanta recently.

The life insurance sales association's 61st annual meeting represented more than 40 countries around the world.

During the five-day meeting, more than 100 professional speakers discussed subjects of concern to those in the life insurance and financial planning fields.

Management Session

Frances Faust, executive secretary and staff manager of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, recently completed a five-day Institute for Organization Management at the University of Georgia.

Over 300 voluntary organization executives from across the country participated in the professional development program.

The Georgia Institute is one of seven annual, one-week sessions sponsored by the Center for Leadership Development, a division of the National Chamber Foundation, at leading universities throughout the country.

During the session, participants spend 27 classroom hours in the Institute course of study, which includes courses in management philosophy, interpersonal processes, government, law and organization structure, and economic and environmental concerns.

Co-Anchor Named

Roy Hardee, news director of WNCT-TV in Greenville, announced the appointment of Brette Lea as co-anchor of the station's 6 p.m. and 11 p.m. news broadcasts.

The new co-anchor was most recently associated with KVII-TV in Amarillo, Texas, where she held positions as anchor, reporter, producer, and morning talk hostess.

She is a 1985 graduate of the University of Texas at Austin with a degree in broadcast news.

Developer Award

The North Carolina Minority Business Development Association announced that it has awarded Dr. Marvin E. Barrett of Greenville its "Business Developer of the Year" plaque in recognition of business loans exceeding $3 million in 1987-88.

The organization said the loans involved a medical center, mortuary corporation and minority boat manufacturing corporation.

Barrett, a Greenville native, recently graduated and received the "Certified Real Estate Broker" designation from the National Board of Real Estate Appraisers.

Training Course

Vicky Masters, supervisor for Christmas Around the World, a national Christmas decorating party plan company, has completed a two-day training course designed to improve management skills and introduce the 1988 marketing program.

Ms. Masters, who has been associated with Christmas Around the World for four years, has made her home in the Greenville area for two years with her son, Ryan.

Christmas Around the World specializes in Christmas decorations and related Christmas items representing various cultures and countries, according to Ms. Masters.

Employee Honored

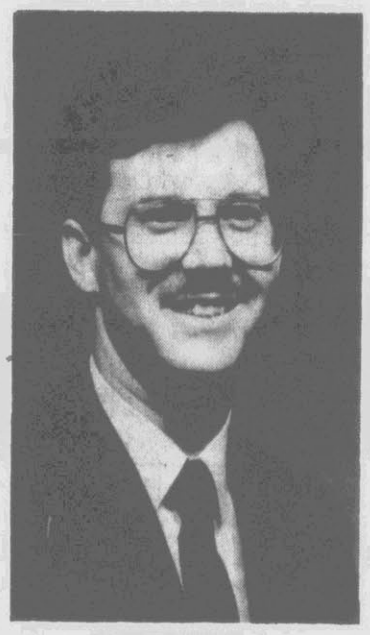

Grady-White Boats of Greenville announced that Jean Davis has been honored by the company as its "Employee of the Month."

The firm said Ms. Davis has been employed at the local boat manufacturing facility for 11 years and has perfect attendance for this year. Grady-White said she is cross-trained in all areas of her department.

NCNB Promotion

NCNB National Bank announced the promotion of Gary W. Brown, consumer banking director in Jacksonville, to vice president.

Brown joined NCNB in Greenville in 1978 shortly after graduation from East Carolina University where he earned a bachelor's degree in business administration.

GARY W. BROWN

Brown, who has worked for the bank in Kinston, Burgaw and Farmville, was manager of NCNB's Farmville branch before moving to Jacksonville in March.

The son of James and Elizabeth Brown of Greenville, he is married to the former Cathy Harris of Greenville and they have a son and a daughter.

Dividend Plan

Shoney's Inc. announced that its shareholders have approved a recapitalization plan that provides for a special $20 per share dividend.

Under the plan, the company will pay shareholders of record as of Tuesday a special dividend of $16 cash and $4 in principal amount of subordinated debentures bearing a 12 percent annual interest rate.

The anticipated payment date is July 25.

J. Mitchell Boyd, vice chairman and chief executive officer, said the plan allows shareholders to realize an immediate portion of the value of their shares.

Staff Addition

WIKS-FM in New Bern announced that Ayden native Henry Davis has joined the station's sales force.

The station said that Davis has returned to North Carolina from New Haven, Conn., with his wife, Donna, and three children.

Davis studied at the University of New Haven, majoring in communications. He served as staff manager for Allied Personnel, specializing in executive placement in engineering, data processing and banking.

New Office Manager

Carolina Telephone announced that Radford E. Cain, formerly commercial supervisor-customer service in Tarboro, has been named manager of CT&T's business office in Fayetteville.

The company said that Cain is responsible for the internal operation of the business office to provide satisfactory customer service for residential and business customers.

Cain joined CT&T as staff assistant in New Bern in 1980. He was named commercial supervisor-customer service in Tarboro in 1985.

The Fayetteville native, a 1979 graduate of East Carolina University, is married to the former Elaine Johnston of Greenville.

Driver Recognized

Paul Hackworth of Greenville, a driver for Southern States, Farmville, won third place in the five-axle flatbed classification at the 49th North Carolina Truck Driving Championship recently in Smithfield.

The skill-driving competition, involving professional truck drivers from across the state, was designed to determine through a series of events the contestants' skill in handling the type of truck used in their class of competition.

The event is sponsored by the North Carolina Trucking Association and its Safety, Security and Personnel Council.

Stock Purchase

Robert I. Baker, president of Vermont American Corp., announced that he has been notified by Newell Co. of the firm's intention to acquire additional shares of Vermont American's Class A common stock.

Baker said the action would result in Newell Co. owning 15 percent or more of the outstanding Class A common stock.

Vermont American, which has a plant in Greenville, manufactures and markets cutting tools, power tool accessories, hand tools, and lawn and garden products for consumer and industrial use.

Quarterly Dividend

Heilig-Meyers Co., Richmond-based home furnishings retailer, announced that its board of directors has declared a quarterly dividend of 9 cents per share, payable Aug. 20 to shareholders of record July 20.

Heilig-Meyers has a store on Greenville Boulevard.

Corporate Emblem

Zip Mart Convenience stores recently unveiled its new corporate emblem during a ceremony at the company's Rocky Mount headquarters.

Zip Mart, an operating division of Stallings Oil Co., owns and operates over 40 convenience stores in south central Virginia, eastern North Carolina and Research Triangle area.

The division is directed by Snow Hill native Robert L. Beaman, executive vice president. Beaman, who joined Stallings Oil in 1987, previously served in various positions with Fast Fare Corp., including executive vice president.

Promotion Noted

Empire Brushes announced the promotion of Dianne F. Wetherington to industrial engineering manager with responsibility for directing activities of the industrial engineering staff to broaden its role in the enhancement of plantwide productivity.

The company said Ms. Wetherington, who joined the local brush manufacturer in 1975, began in plastics before transferring to the industrial engineering department where she worked her way up to industrial engineer in 1981.

Ms. Wetherington graduated from Pitt Community College with an associate degree in industrial management. She lives in the Greenville area with her husband, J.K., and their son, Jay.

Pitt Unemployment Rate Drops In May

The unemployment rate for Pitt County dropped from 2.9 percent in April to 2.8 percent in May, according to statistics provided by the Employment Security Commission of North Carolina.

May figures released Saturday indicate Pitt County recorded a labor force of 53,210 people with 51,710 of those being employed and 1,500 listed as unemployed.

Unemployed persons are defined as those persons 16 years or older who do not have a job during the particular reference week, but are available for work and are actively seeking work.

Unemployment rates in May for other eastern North Carolina counties are Craven, 3.7 percent; Edgecombe, 4.4 percent; Greene, 3.5 percent; Lenoir, 3.7 percent, and Onslow County at 2.7 percent.

Overall, unemployment rates in May decreased in 59 of North Carolina's 100 counties.

Two counties in the state experienced May unemployment rates over 10 percent, Graham with 13.4 percent and Cherokee with 11.6 percent.

May unemployment rates for various North Carolina Metropolitan areas include Raleigh-Durham with 2.5 percent; Wilmington, 4.3 percent; Greensboro-Winston-Salem/High Point, 2.8 percent; Fayetteville, 4.1 percent; Charlotte-Gastonia-Rock Hill, S.C., 2.9 percent; Burlington, 2.9 percent, and Asheville, 3.2 percent.

Study Projects U.S. Foreign Debt Will Rise

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States, already the world's largest debtor country, could see its foreign debt increase to more than $2 trillion by 1995, seriously cutting into American living standards, a congressional study said Saturday.

The report by the Congressional Research Service rejected claims by the Reagan administration that the country's status as a large debtor country was not cause for concern.

The study predicted that while the country's trade deficit will finally show an improvement this year, after deteriorating for six years, this improvement could be short-lived.

The report forecast that the deficit in the broadest measure of trade, the current account, would fall to $151 billion this year, down slightly from a record $154 billion deficit in 1987.

The report predicted a further decrease to $129 billion in 1989, saying these improvements were virtually assured given the declines in the value of the dollar that have already taken place.

But the study said the trade deficit would begin rising again sharply in the 1990s and could hit $326 billion by 1995.

The study said it based this outlook on assumptions that the dollar does not decline further in value and that current growth rates and interest rates in the United States relative to other countries remain essentially unchanged.

The dollar has actually been rising in recent weeks, prompting concern among economists who believe the U.S. currency still needs to drop for the U.S. trade deficit to narrow further. A cheaper dollar makes U.S. exports more attractive on overseas markets and imports more expensive to Americans.

If the dollar does not decline, the report projected that the heavy import penetration the United States has suffered through the 1980s will continue.

The string of higher trade imbalances would mean that the country's position as a net debtor would worsen as well.

The government announced on Thursday that total U.S. foreign debt increased to $368.2 billion at the end of 1987, further lengthening the country's lead as the world's largest debtor nation. This means that foreigners now own more in U.S. investments than Americans own in overseas investments.

The congressional study projected that U.S. foreign debt would climb to $576 billion at the end of this year and surpass $1 trillion in 1991. By the end of 1995, the total foreign debt would be $2.06 trillion, or one-fourth of the country's total gross national product, the report said.

A debt of that size would require an annual payment of $96 billion to foreigners to service the debt, an amount equal to 1.2 percent of the projected GNP for that year, the study said.

That would mean if the GNP increased by 3 percent in 1995, a generally optimistic outlook, one-third of the increase would be siphoned off to meet debt obligations to foreigners.

"If, on the other hand, we are pessimistic about real growth prospects, seeing only a 1 percent annual increase as likely, then debt service would tend to preclude any improvement in U.S. living standards in the next decade," the report said.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, who requested the congressional study, said it showed that without a dramatic change in the country's trade policies, the size of America's foreign debt will explode over the next six years.

Bentsen was a key sponsor of an omnibus trade measure recently vetoed by President Reagan. He is leading the effort to get a stripped-down version less objectionable to Reagan passed into law.

"Even though the trade deficit will go down a little this year and again a little bit next year, unless trade policies dramatically change, then they're going to start up," Bentsen said.

The congressional study, while presenting a pessimistic view of what could happen, is not out of line with projections made by private economists. Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. said that depending on what happens to the dollar, world growth rates and the U.S. federal budget deficit, America's foreign debt burden could be anywhere from $900 billion to $2.5 trillion by 1995.

The U.S. debt of $368.2 billion for 1987 was 36.8 percent higher than the previous year and served to illustrate how fast the foreign debt is accumulating. The United States had an investment cushion of $89.4 billion as recently as 1983, making it the world's largest creditor nation, a position now held by Japan.

Democratic critics hope to make the country's slide from the largest creditor nation to the largest debtor nation an issue in this year's presidential campaign. They contend that the burgeoning foreign debt is eroding America's political and economic standing in the world.

But the administration, sensitive to the issue in an election year, held a lengthy briefing last Thursday, when the new debt total was released, to argue that the United States should not be considered in a class with such large Third World debtors as Brazil, Mexico and Argentina.

"We are nowhere near getting into trouble," Commerce Undersecretary Robert Ortner told reporters. He said that foreigners still own no more than 5 percent of the assets in an economy that turns out $4.5 trillion in goods and services a year.

But private economists contend that the growing foreign debt makes the United States more vulnerable to pressure from foreign investors, driving up U.S. interest rates and heightening the volatility of the dollar.

House Report Blasts Efforts To Help Women In Business

By JILL LAWRENCE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Most federal efforts to halt discrimination against female business owners have been "superficial, unimaginative and lacking in long-term commitment," said a bipartisan House report released Saturday.

The report by the Small Business Committee also concluded that "the federal government has been seriously delinquent" in helping female entrepreneurs gain access to government contracts and subcontracts.

Furthermore, the report said, women face gender-related barriers that severely limit their access to business credit. It also said that statistics on female entrepreneurs are insufficient to help policy makers deal with these problems.

Womenowned 25 percent of U.S. businesses in 1982 but received only 10 percent of business receipts, according to the Census Bureau. Business size and type account for some but not all of the discrepancy, the report said.

"There are other, less defensible reasons — namely sex stereotyping and continued discrimination," the report said. "Women have had to work harder, wait longer, manage with fewer dollars, and be content with smaller operations just to maintain their present levels of independence and business success."

The chairman of the Small Business Committee, John J. LaFalce, D-N.Y., plans to introduce an Omnibus Women's Business Ownership bill later this month along with Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., head of the Congressional Caucus on Women's Issues.

In a statement accompanying his committee's report, LaFalce said that the bill will address the four principal barriers blocking equal economic status for female entrepreneurs — lack of management training and technical assistance, lack of access to capital, "the virtual exclusion" of women from government contracts, and lack of accurate and timely data on female-owned businesses.

According to the report, women owned less than 5 percent of American businesses 15 years ago compared with 28 percent today. They are starting firms at twice the rate of men and are expected to own 50 percent of U.S. businesses by the year 2000.

"These women are part of the most educated generation of women that has ever existed. They are a gold mine of human capital," the report said. "It is essential that remaining barriers to women entrepreneurship be eliminated."

The committee recommended a number of steps to correct problems that came to light during a series of hearings on the issue. Among them:

—Establishment of a Women's Business Council with both public and private representatives, to develop an action plan that includes goals and timetables. The plan would be due at the end of 1989.

—Creating a guaranteed mini-loan program within the Small Business Administration for loans of up to $50,000. Firms in the fast-growing service sector, where female-owned businesses are concentrated, would be targeted.

—Requiring the Federal Reserve to limit inquiries into marital status for commercial loans, and requiring lending institutions to notify clients of their right to learn why they were denied loans.

—Forming a public-private partnership fund to provide management training and technical assistance for female business owners.

—Reforming the federal procurement system to give women greater access to contracts and subcontracts, including annual participation goals.

—Requiring large government contractors, by statute, to establish subcontracting goals for female-owned businesses.

—Developing a high-quality computer listing of firms controlled by women.

Republicans Break Off Long Alliance With Teamsters

By MATT YANCEY
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A government attempt to take control of the Teamsters has dissolved a three-decade marriage of convenience between the nation's largest union and the Republican Party while forging an unlikely alliance: Michael Dukakis and Sen. Orrin Hatch.

"To try and put in trusteeship a complete union like the International Brotherhood of Teamsters ... smacks of totalitarianism," says Hatch, a conservative Republican from Utah, who is an outspoken critic of unions but fervent defender of Teamster President Jackie Presser.

"It's the kind of thing you would expect in Russia, not the United States," Hatch said of the government's suit last week branding the union corrupt and seeking to dethrone Presser and 17 other top Teamster officers.

Dukakis also condemned the Justice Department's use of the 1970 Racketeering Influenced Corrupt Organization (RICO) Act to place the 1.6-million-member union under the supervision of a court-appointed trustee.

"Such an extreme remedy is fundamentally inconsistent with the very concept of independent and democratic trade unions," he said in a letter to AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland.

Dukakis, who with union support has wrapped up the Democratic presidential nomination, said he would vigorously prosecute and seek to remove from office individual union leaders, corporate executives or government appointees who misuse their jobs.

"However, I simply see no need to resort to an extreme legal approach that would unnecessarily deprive rank-and-file union members of their right of self-governance," he said.

Equally ironic is what Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and Vice President George Bush have in common on the government's proposal to take over the Teamsters: Neither has anything to say about it.

"Don't wait on us for a reaction," said a spokesman for Kennedy, the liberal, pro-union chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, whose brother Robert succeeded in putting both Presser's father and former Teamster President Jimmy Hoffa in jail.

Bush declined a solicitation from labor leaders to all of the presidential candidates to criticize the government's anticipated takeover attempt when U.S. Attorney Rudolph Giuliani of Manhattan was still putting the suit together.

New York Rep. Jack Kemp and former Secretary of State Alexander Haig, two one-time contenders for the GOP nomination, both eagerly responded to Teamster pleas for support, as did all of the Democratic candidates.

With the biggest campaign war chest of any group in the country — 50 percent larger than the American Medical Association's this year — Teamster leaders for decades have danced with politicians from both parties while prosecutors pursued them in court. Lost in the glare of publicity over the Teamsters' support for Republicans Dwight Eisenhower, Richard Nixon and Ronald Reagan for the presidency was the flow of most of its money in congressional and state races to Democrats.

In 1986, for example, 87 percent of the Teamsters' campaign money in Senate and House races went to Democrats. But with a political fund of $4 million two years ago and $6 million so far this year, the union has plenty of cash to spread among members of both parties.

Cheaper Oil May Serve As Needed Tonic For Prices

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Wall Street's inflation-watchers are counting on cheaper oil to take the sting out of rising food prices in the months ahead.

World oil prices have fallen sharply of late amid signs that oil-exporting countries are producing faster than market demand can absorb.

West Texas Intermediate crude oil, widely used as an overall gauge of the trend in oil prices, dropped below $15 a barrel Friday to its lowest level since 1986.

That news, together with some rainfall at last in the parched Farm Belt, has encouraged talk in the financial markets that inflation might not be as bad as had been feared in the second half of 1988.

One of the most reliable barometers of inflationary expectations, the yield on 30-year Treasury bonds, has fallen from a peak of nearly 9.5 percent several weeks ago to less than 9 percent in recent days.

The drought watch continues on Wall Street, of course, even as it does in the areas of the country that suffer most directly from the lack of moisture.

While the current weather charts showed rain in the Midwest this past week, traders in the futures and financial markets switched their attention to forecasts suggesting more unusually dry conditions in the next few weeks.

For the national economy, however, many analysts say it is necessary to keep the role of agricultural commodities in perspective.

"Although the drought could be the worst in nearly a century, it should be kept in mind that the importance of raw food commodities has changed dramatically over the years, and the impact of sharp price rises in this area is not particularly great on consumer spending or the inflation indices," said Michael Sherman, analyst at Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc.

David A. Levy and S. Jay Levy, a Chappaqua, N.Y., economic forecasting team, say they have no desire the minimize the distress the drought is causing for farmers and other businesses in agricultural areas.

However, they add, "the drought will indeed increase the prices of many foods but have limited impact on inflation. Food and beverages account for less than 18 percent of the Consumer Price Index."

Furthermore, they add, rising food prices actually can serve to depress prices of many non-food items.

"As food prices accelerate this year, non-food stores, especially those competing for consumers' discretionary income, will lose some sales. Price-cutting will be more frequent.

"This deflationary effect will substantially reduce the overall impact of the drought on the CPI to about half a percent."

Despite such assurances, the stock market's early-summer rally bogged down in the past week. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials slipped 11.38 to 2,131.58, ending a five-week winning streak.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index dropped .88 to 153.68; the NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market rose 3.08 to 394.70, and the American Stock Exchange market value index was up .51 at 309.00.

Volume on the Big Board averaged 208.42 million shares a day, against 170.99 million the week before.

Like the drought, the decline in the price of oil is cause for serious concern in some already beleaguered areas of the country.

But unlike the dry weather, cheaper oil can be seen as a distinct plus for such broad economic forces as nationwide consumer spending.

"This recent drop in oil prices reminds us of the drop back in early 1986 when the Dow Jones industrials were rallying and had moved above 1,700," said Jay Donnaruma, an analyst at First Albany Corp. in Albany, N.Y.

"At that time no one liked the rally and everyone was looking for a correction. We get the same feeling now.

"Can the rally in stocks, bonds and the dollar all be related to the drop in crude oil prices? Probably not entirely — but for our money, watching the price of oil is better than watching the stars."

New Rule On Mutual Funds May Cause More Confusion

By ALBERT B. CRENSHAW
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Another of the new government rules covering mutual funds took effect Friday, and industry officials are worried that the regulation may cause some confusion until investors get used to it.

The new rule governs advertising of mutual fund yields, a measure of what might be described as a fund's "earning power." And it requires funds to use a standard formula to arrive at the yield numbers they put in their ads and sales literature.

In addition, funds have been required since May 1 to use standard methods for calculating "total return" — a measure that includes share price movement as well as dividends and interest payments.

Together the new rules, approved earlier this year by the Securities and Exchange Commission, will bring a level of uniformity heretofore unknown in mutual fund advertising.

The SEC's goal was to provide investors with the kind of data that would allow them to make meaningful comparisons between funds.

Until now, fund advertising has had to be accurate, but funds have been given considerable latitude in choosing time periods and other variables to use in formulating their ads. Not unexpectedly, funds have tended to select the ones that make them look best, with the result that many funds in every category have been able to advertise themselves as top performers.

Investors who already hold fund shares, however, may notice some discrepancy between advertised yields under the new regulation and what they actually receive in distributions.

These differences could arise for several reasons.

First, under the new SEC rule, yield can include only dividends and interest earned by the fund. Distributions can include short-term capital gains realized by the fund from sale of assets from its portfolio or from sale of options on its assets.

Second, there can be timing differences. The SEC rule requires that yield be based on dividends and interest accrued by the fund over a recent 30-day period. Distributions, however, aren't necessariiy based on the same period, and even if they are, distributions may not match the accrued income for the period.

Finally, there may be accounting differences. The SEC specifies the accounting method funds must use in yield calculations, but other methods are acceptable in calculating distributions. For example, the Investment Company Institute, a mutual fund trade group, notes that the SEC requires that when funds buy bonds at more or less than face value, a portion of these premiums or discounts must be included in the yield calculations. However, "generally accepted accounting principles" do not require such inclusions.

The new uniform yield numbers will be helpful to investors in income funds, but they should be careful not to lose sight of total return figures. Bond prices move in the opposite direction from interest rates, depressing share prices even as yields rise.

Many shareholders last year found that though their funds had yields of 12 percent or more, rising interest rates pushed share prices down so much that their total return for the year was zero or less.

USAir To Combine Some Departments

WASHINGTON (AP) — USAir will combine the operations of the USAir and Piedmont Consumer Affairs Departments in Winston-Salem and relocate the airlines' Frequent Traveler Program and USAir Club administrative offices from the Washington area, officials say.

The relocations, scheduled to begin and August and to be completed within the next three to four months, will involve about 100 additional jobs in Winston-Salem, USAir said in a release Friday.

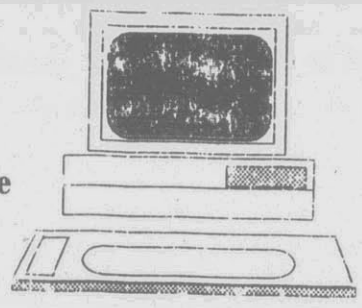

The moves will bring to more than 600 the number of positions either already moved or scheduled to be relocated to North Carolina as the two airlines approach operational integration, which is now scheduled for early 1989.

USAir has already moved about 160 positions from its revenue accounting and agency sales and audit sections from Washington, D.C., and California to Winston-Salem. And about 50 jobs in the credit and collections department, another 50 from the management information services division, plus the balance of about 250 jobs in revenue accounting, remain to be moved in phases between now and early 1989, USAir said.

House Softens Limits On Insurance

L.A. Times-Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Insurance action: There was good news from Congress last week for people who have purchased single-premium or similar investment-oriented life insurance recently.

Although the House Ways and Means Committee voted to restrict policyholders' ability to draw money out tax-free, it passed a "grandfather" provision that would protect policies that were in place on June 21.

The clause also would exempt from penalty premiums and other payments paid into existing policies if the terms of the policy required such payments. Voluntary payments would be subject to the new rules.

The committee's bill is far less severe than that proposed by Reps. Fortney H. "Pete" Stark, D-Calif., and Willis D. Gradison Jr., R-Ohio, which would have grandfathered only policies written before last October.

However, if you are thinking of taking out an investment-oriented policy, you would be well-advised to wait and see where the final bill comes out.

There is widespread agreement in Congress that single-premium policies and their relatives ought to be restricted, but the debate so far has focused on how to construct a formula that gets at the abuses without wiping out conventional whole-life policies.

The committee adopted a plan that in effect looks at the investment component of a policy and compares it with the insurance component.

All whole-life policies have both components. In traditional whole life policies, the premiums are the same over the policy period. The premiums in the early years more than cover the insurance cost, and the extra is invested. In later years, the investment earnings keep the premiums level as the policyholder grows older and the insurance cost rises. In single-premium and other "limited payment contracts," the buyer makes a small number of payments, perhaps only one, in the early years. The policy is so heavily weighted toward the investment side that no further premiums are necessary.

Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., had sought a "20-pay" formula, meaning that any policy whose investment component exceeded that of a 20-year level-payment policy would be subject to taxes and penalties if the policyholder took out any of its cash value through loans or withdrawals.

The panel finally adopted a "seven-pay" formula, so a policy would have to have at least the investment structure of a seven-year level-payment policy. Policies that fail this test would be dubbed "modified endowments" and withdrawals and loans from them would be taxed. In addition, money taken out before age 59½ would be subject to an additional 10 percent penalty tax.

The insurance industry said the formula "clearly and effectively addresses the investment abuses." But Rostenkowski and others on the panel are not so sure, so the committee vote is unlikely to be the last word on the issue. The Treasury Department and others say that anything less than a 10- or 12-pay test will not eliminate the problem. The Senate Finance Committee has not yet begun writing its tax bill.

Insurance companies are undoubtedly at work on policies that would meet the seven-pay test, but that may not be the formula that becomes law.

Alumni Focus On Rekindling Ideals

By ROSALIE TROTMAN
Reflector Lifestyle Editor

Rekindling ideals instilled by the faculties of the former Greenville and C.M. Eppes high schools was the focus of alumni attending the ninth annual reunion of the two schools.

"To preserve the history of the western part of Greenville after the school burned is also one of our purposes," said Jean Darden of Greenville. Mrs. Darden is current president of the alumni association.

"The feelings and values instilled in us still remained when the schools merged. To assure the perpetuation of the name of the school, scholarships were established in the names of the three principals — C.M. Eppes, W.H. Davenport and A.E. Murrell," she said.

C.M. Eppes High School was originally Greenville Industrial High School, established for black students in 1903. The last graduating class finished in 1969. The 10th, 11th and 12th grades at Eppes consolidated with J.H. Rose High School in the fall of 1969 in the effort to integregate the public school system.

Eppes then served as a junior high school for the next two years. The main building was demolished after a major fire. The junior high school students consolidated into E.B. Aycock Junior School, and the school property was then purchased by the city of Greenville for use by the Department of Recreation and Parks.

The association's executive board accomplished a 1986 goal — that of renaming the only remaining structure of the school, the gymnasium-cafeteria from West Greenville Recreation Center to C.M. Eppes Recreation Center.

A bust of C.M. Eppes, designed and sculptured by the late alumnus, Robert Shivers, will be housed in the center. The library-exhibit room will contain papers, pictures and other artifacts of Eppes, the Greenville Industrial and C.M. Eppes high schools, the faculty, staff and alumni.

The ribbon cutting at the Heritage Center Saturday afternoon was a highlight of the alumni weekend.

In the spring of 1979, alumnae Imogene Taylor Dupree and Marion Gorham Wilkes spearheaded the formation of the Eppes Alumni Reunion. The reunion was attended by alumni, from many states, who favored more reunions in the future. As a result, the alumni formed an association which was incorporated in North Carolina the next year. In 1981, two $500 scholarships were given to two students at Rose High School. Since 1982, the scholarship worth $1,000 has been given to one student each year at Rose. This year, a $2,000 scholarship was given to Rose High graduate Renee Barnes.

Activities started Friday evening at the Moose Lodge when an executive board meeting was held, followed by registration and informal gathering. Mrs. Darden opened the breakfast and business meeting Saturday morning.

In an effort to involve the entire community in West Greenville, an alumni parade is held yearly. "Everybody joins in the fellowship of the parade. It ends at the original site of the high school — Thomas Foreman Park — for a picnic. Fellowship is the key to the picnic and parade," said Mrs. Darden. The parade theme this year was "Our Afro-American Heritage."

"The reunion dance provided an opportunity to renew old acquaintances and generally have fun. We traditionally close our activities by attending a church service which is held on a rotating basis at churches in the community," said Mrs. Darden.

The alumni association is made up of chapters in Washington, New York, Baltimore, Hampton, Greenville and New Haven. The chapters have ongoing activities throughout the year. "We have had inquiries about the formation of chapters in Greensboro and the greater Miami area," said Mrs. Darden.

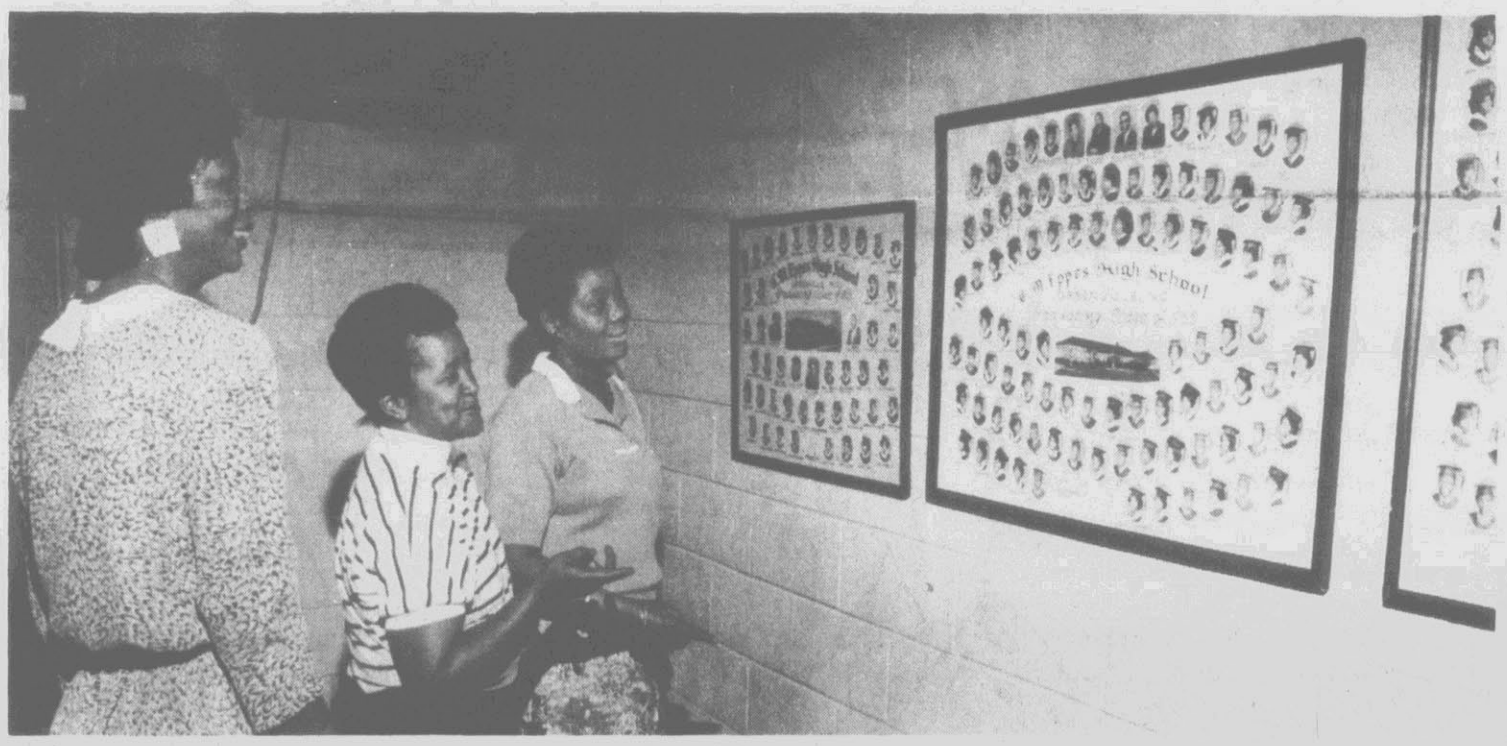

Serving on the current board of directors with Mrs. Darden were J.B. Taft, president-elect; Marion Wilkes, vice president; Amy Taylor, recording secretary; Janice Reid, corresponding secretary; Sheila Latham, financial secretary; David Barnhill, treasurer; D.D. Garrett, parliamentarian; Mattie Carr, registered agent, and Ella Harris and Inez Nimmo, historians.

Committee chairpersons included Betty Barrett, publicity; Glenda Latham, membership; Johnny Wooten, parade; Sallye Streeter, scholarship; Sheila Latham, constitution, and Julia Davis, nominating.

At-large members were Randy Dupree, James Forbes, Carlton McGlone, Marion Langley, Barbara Williams, Ms. Dupree, Ms. Shivers, Alvorado Payton, Ary K. Ridley, Selina Forbes and Ellis Brown.

Directors emeritus are Olga Myers and Erma Carr. Ms. Myers is a former Greenville Industrial and Eppes High School faculty member. Lillie Mae Shivers represented Greenville Industrial High School.

Honored classes were those whose years ended in three and eight. Reunions were held by the classes of 1958, 1963 and 1968.

More Adults Pursue Life With Determination

By BETH ANN KRIER
L.A. Times-Washintgton News Service

The tip-offs are everywhere, from the grocery store to the newsstand.

Stouffer's alone makes 86 different frozen foods designed to feed just one person. Want ads in search of relationships are so pervasive they have reached even the august New York Review of Books. And dating services have proliferated to the point that they are targeted to such subgroups as the physically handicapped and the astrologically inclined.

The U.S. Census Bureau confirms it: Singleness is the highest it has been since the early part of the century. According to Steve Rawlings, a Census Bureau family demographer, about 41 percent of all adults of marriageable age (15 and older) are now single. That includes the never-married, the divorced and the widowed.

The numbers are so high that "we've begun to accept the idea of non-traditional households as being normal," said Susan Hayward of the Yankelovich Clancy Shulman market-research company.

Demographers call it a "glacial" trend — one that creeps up on us. In the case of singles, their percentage of the total population has been inching upward since about 1960, when it hit a 20th century low of 32 percent.

The rise of singlehood in recent years, particularly among people in their 20s and 30s, has led Rawlings and others to predict that the percentage of people who will never marry — now about 5 percent — is likely to double by the end of the century.

Why are so many opting for the single life? Or, to put it another way, why does it seem so difficult for people to get and stay married these days?

There are nearly as many explanations as there are single people. But among the theories most frequently cited are the growing economic independence of women; the high divorce rate; an increase in longevity, and thus more widows and widowers; more reliable birth control; the acceptance of cohabitation without marriage; the emphasis on career achievement.

Some experts also suspect that, as society becomes more accepting of alternative life styles, fewer homosexuals feel the need to marry to hide their sexual orientation. But these experts could cite no studies to support their suspicions, and whether such a trend would make a statistical difference is uncertain.

Perhaps the most often-heard explanation is simple economics. As women have received more education, moved into the workplace and become capable of supporting themselves in greater numbers, the theory goes, they have felt less pressure to marry for economic security.

"The financial gains to marriage have been going down," said economist Thomas Espenshade, senior fellow at the Urban Institute in Washington, D.C. "Women have less and less of an incentive to get married.... Their earning power is approaching parity with men, at least it is for black women ... as female education has risen, wage rates for women have risen."

Louise Bernikow, author of "Alone in America," sees "a social and emotional thing" that goes with that freedom.

"If you don't need a man to support you," she said, "you're much freer to judge a man as a companion. A lot of women, who used to put up with certain kinds of male behavior, don't do it anymore."

Like many observers of trends in marital status, Espenshade said that the current level of singlehood is not unusual if you consider the patterns of the last century. Around the turn of the century, he said, the percentage of single adults was slightly higher than it is now — about 46 percent. In that sense, the marriage boom of the 1950s was an aberration, and only now are things getting back to normal.

But if the improved financial status of women accounts for fewer marriage vows in recent decades, what explains the similarly high level of singles in the late-19th and early 20th centuries?

"You have to look at it through the eyes of the man," Espenshade said. "The man was saying to himself, 'Can I afford to support a whole family?' " As living standards gradually rose, "men could say to themselves that it's easier to take on the responsibilities of a family." Reliable birth control has also meant that children aren't necessarily a fact of married life.

University of Minnesota historian Elaine Tyler May, who chronicled marriage and divorce patterns from 1880 to 1930 in "Great Expectations: Marriage and Divorce in Post-Victorian America," said that being single was once "a much more legitimate option."

"In the 1930s, '40s and especially the '50s, the percentage of women getting married increased, and by the 1950s there were powerful stigmas against men and women who weren't married, both political and sexual," she said.

May does not buy the notion that improved economic status for women sent the rate of unmarried adults back up after the '50s. "There are more women who manage to survive on salaries today than there were in the '50s," she said, "but women are still desperately underpaid. There are a lot of other historical and political issues that have a very powerful effect on behavior."

As May sees it, children of the baby boom era are far more similar to their grandparents than to their parents.

"In the early 20th century, we had a powerful women's movement, we had a lot of single people, we had a lot of grass-roots political activism, we had a spirit of social reform, we had movements on behalf of black people and we had a huge burst of new popular culture modes: dancing, music, amusement halls. In the 1960s we had the same things....

"It's the generation in between that stands out as different. They married very young in huge, huge numbers and conformed to middle-of-the-road consensus politics." Now, she said, "it's much more legitimate to be single, but it still isn't economically viable, especially for women."

Or perhaps men either. Warren Farrell, the author of "Why Men Are the Way They Are," believes that men are increasingly reluctant to marry because of what they perceive as numerous inequalities in modern wedlock.

"Men are finding more incentive to be single because they feel commitment creates an unequal promise," said Farrell. "Let's say a successful woman meets a successful man. From his perspective, the successful woman is saying, 'I would like three options once we commit: to continue my success as a career woman, to be involved full-time with my family, or some combination of the two.' He sees he has only one option: work full time, work full time or work full time."

To postpone dealing with commitment issues, many singles have decided simply to live together.

Paul Glick, a 40-year U.S. Census Bureau veteran who is now an adjunct professor of sociology at Arizona State University, sees a huge increase in activities that "replace marriage," such as cohabitation.

"People are going to school longer, they're becoming more independent in their thinking, they are less likely to be tradition-minded," he said. "They are likely to accommodate the (marital status) situation to their own interests and preferences. There's more tolerance of variation from the norm, and this is one demonstration of that."

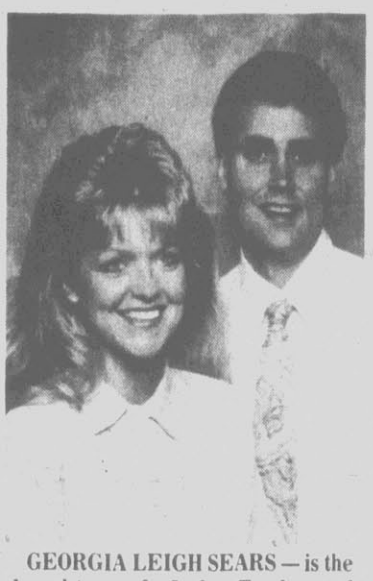

Larry Bumpass, a demographer who teaches in the sociology department at the University of Wisconsin, has been looking at cohabitation as part of a major federally funded study of families.

"We find that it (cohabitation) has almost become the majority pattern," said Bumpass, who expects to publish his findings later this year. "In virtually half of all recent marriages, people lived together before they were married and about half of all people in their early 30s have lived with someone outside of marriage."

Bumpass also found that only about 60 percent of those in cohabitation arrangements would go on to marry their partners. He cites industrialization and shifts in society brought about by the changing economy as largely responsible for the fact that single people — and to some extent married people — generally depend less on family relationships for their social needs.

Instead of relying on a spouse and children, singles may develop many sources for such experiences. "I see people who choose singlehood as developing a viable alternative life style where the focus may be on career, education, relationships, political activities, community involvements — a number of other issues," said Peter Stein, a professor of sociology at William Paterson College of New Jersey. "Marriage may be No. 6 on the agenda, not No. 1."

Vines-Credle Vows Exchanged Saturday

MRS. VINES

WINTERVILLE — Ona Lynne Credle became the bride of Terry L. Vines Saturday at 4 p.m. in a ceremony performed in Good Hope Free Will Baptist Church. Dr. William H. Mitchell officiated at the ceremony.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Credle of Winterville, and the bridegroom is the son of the Rev. and Mrs. Allen Vines of Fountain.

The bride attended East Carolina University and is a graduate of Pitt Community College. The bridegroom also attended Pitt Community College. She is employed by Lowe's of Greenville and he is employed by the Pitt County Sheriff's Department.

The bride's gown was designed by her mother. It was chapel-length of white satin with a scoop underbodice neckline and long tapered sleeves of chantilly lace, gathered caps and stand-up collar. The fitted bodice was attached to a gathered skirt with a center front pleat. The chapel-length train was trimmed with scalloped lace. The bride designed her veil of illusion and floral headpiece. She carried a cascade bouquet of silk miniature carnations and roses with peach, white and aqua streamers. She was given in marriage by her parents.

Jean Brown of Baltimore, Md., aunt of the bride, and Geraldine VanLong of Greenville, sister of the bridegroom, were honor attendants. Ruberna Knox, Shkondria Patrick and Katrissa Bell, all of Winterville, and Betty Forbes of Greenville were bridesmaids.

Tiffany Credle of Ayden, cousin of the bride, was flower girl and Travis Brown of Baltimore, cousin of the bride, was ring bearer.

Jimmy Vines of Greenville, brother of the bridegroom, was best man. Leon Vines and Glenn Vines of Greenville, brothers of the bridegroom, Jeffrey Credle of Ayden and Kenneth Credle of Greenville, cousins of the bridegroom, and Henry Dupree of Farmville were ushers.

Roger Ingram was organist while Miranda Moye of Baltimore and Harold Allen of Greenville were vocalists.

The honor attendants wore tea-length dresses of peach eyelet fashioned with scooped necklines, short bordered sleeves and hemlines. Their bouquets were of silk peach roses, white carnations and aqua lilies accented with peach, aqua and white streamers.

The bridesmaids' dresses were aqua tea-length gowns styled like the honor attendants' and their flowers were similar. The flower girl wore a peach tea-length dress styled like the other attendants'. She carried a white basket filled with flowers.

The couple will live in Winterville.

A reception was held in the fellowship hall of the church followed by a cookout given for the couple.

Eula Younger introduced guests and Brenda Bryant presided at the guest register. Shirley Daniels, Mary Daniels, Angela Smith and Debra Daniels assisted. Cake was served by Mable Hooks and punch was poured by Eldress Rhuarma Knox. Goodbyes were said by Ruby Jean Best.

MRS. FRANKS

Miss Edwards, Mr. Franks Marry Saturday

Brenda Sue Edwards of Greenville and Donald Lee Franks of Tarboro were united in marriage Saturday at 2 p.m. in Town Common Amphitheater in Greenville. Conducting the double-ring ceremony was the Rev. James. E. Tripp, brother-in-law of the bride.

Gwendolyn Maye and Linward Dudley were vocalists for the ceremony.

Sharon Glast of Fayetteville was honor attendant for her cousin. Patricia E. Sanders of Gallipolis, Ohio, was matron of honor for her sister. Bridesmaids included Genien Cherry, Mary A. Maye, and Sherilda Davis, cousins of the bride of Greenville, and Angela Franks of Stokes, cousin of the bridegroom. Delicia J. Tripp of Greenville, niece of the bride, was junior bridesmaid and Madonna R. Sanders of Gallipolis was flower girl. She is niece of the bride. Patrick M. Sanders of Gallipolis, nephew of the bride, was ring bearer.

The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew D. Little of Stokes. Reginald Robertson of Richmond, Va., was best man for his cousin. James Clark, Michael Clark and Vinnie Ward, cousin of the bridegroom, all of Stokes, and Carlton Clemons of Greenville were ushers.

The bride is the daughter of Irene E. Williams of Greenville and the late Moses Edwards. She was given in marriage by her mother and escorted by her brother-in-law, SSgt. Milton R. Sanders of Gallipolis. The ceremony was directed by Dorothy E. Tripp, sister of the bride.

The bride wore an ivory tea-length taffeta and satin gown. The sleeves were elbow length with poufs at the shoulder. The neckline and bodice was embroidered in alencon lace motifs highlighted by pearl and crystal beads, a torso waistline and V-back. She wore an ivory heart shape hat with three satin flowers on the side. A veil of imported silk was elbow length of illusion with a handrolled edge. She carried a cascade bouquet of white roses, tulips, freesia, white lilac, dendrobium and baby's breath.

The honor attendants wore tea-length gowns of aqua styled with fitted boned bodice of floral lace over satin with sequin trim on the top ruffle. The gowns had basque waistlines, spaghetti straps and full skirts. Each carried a crescent bouquet of white freesia sprinkled with minuette, blue statice and baby's breath. The attendants wore aqua tea-length gowns of lace over satin with basque waistline and tiered skirt lined in acetate satin. The junior bridesmaid and flower girl wore tea-length aqua dresses fashioned with scalloped lace over the shoulders, V-back, satin cummerbund and back bow. Each carried bouquets like those of the honor attendants. The flower girl carried a basket of long-stemmed roses.

A reception was held at the Comfort Inn given by the bride's parents. Diane Daniels, cousin of the bride, presided at the guest register. Cake was served by Linda Barnes, cousin of the bride, and Donreal Frank, aunt of the bridegroom.

The couple will live in Tarboro after a wedding trip.

The bride is a graduate of North Pitt High School and Pitt Community College. The bridegroom graduated from North Pitt High School. She is employed at Pitt County Memorial Hospital and he is employed by Grady White.

Mrs. Tripp, sister of the bride, gave an after-rehearsal dinner. A bridal shower was also given for the couple.

Tour Can Simplify A Trip

NEW YORK (AP) — Tours are becoming more popular with people who do not have the time to plan vacations or who prefer to travel in a group, says a travel expert.

"For people who choose them, tours provide freedom from responsibility, a high degree of security and a greater opportunity to meet people than if you travel alone," says John Martinen, managing director of Globus-Gateway and Cosmos Tours.

Martinen says there are a number of ways to tour a country.

"For instance," he says, "several million people a year tour Europe by motorcoach, accompanied by a guide who is familiar with the countries visited and the people along the way.

"They drive through the countryside that is unique and atmospheric, stay in the great old capitals of the world, take excursions that bring out local flavors, mingle with the natives and sleep in comfortable hotels."

For those considering a tour, Martinen has developed a list of points they should keep in mind:

— There are three price levels in every form of organized travel: budget, first class and deluxe. The hotels in each group influence the total tour price, and a good way to economize is to look for a package that combines air and land arrangements.

— All tour operators include some excursions and attractions in the price and offer others at additional cost. Tourists should list the optional excursions they think they may want to take and ask their travel agent to price them.

— Buying lunches and dinners adds significantly to the cost of a trip. On the other hand, freedom to eat where you like may be important to you. Either way, estimate the cost of meals that aren't covered by the tour price and add that figure to the tour costs, too.

— Tourists should check out where hotels are located, and if they are on the outskirts, are they near public transportation?

— Find out if they are well known or recommended in standard guidebooks. Do they offer modern comforts and amenities? Or are they simple but charming? Do all rooms have private baths?

— Tourists should carefully read the brochure descriptions of what is and what is not included in the tour price. Most good brochures include a specific list of what the price covers.

"However," says Martinen, "keep in mind that even the best brochures sometimes have space limitations and omit important information."

Couple Marries In Mount Gilead

MOUNT GILEAD — Penny Clark Lassiter of Mount Gilead, formerly of Greenville, and Warren Henry Whisonant III of Salisbury were united in marriage June 25 in the First United Methodist Church.

The double-ring ceremony was performed by the Rev. Jerry J. Juran.

Gina Keel of Fayetteville, daughter of the bride, was matron of honor. Frank White of Salisbury was best man.

Immediately after the ceremony a reception honoring the couple was given by Mr. and Mrs. B.W. Safrit at their home.

After a wedding trip the couple will live in Black Mountain.

Engagement Announced

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Franklin Sullivan Jr. of Garner announce the engagement of their daughter, Sylvia Lane, to David Edgar Anderson, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Joseph Bennett of Greensboro and the late Henry Leonard Anderson. The wedding will take place Aug. 6.

Evening Wedding Vows Said

CARY — Jeanne Marie Ingenito and John A. Pendergrass were united in marriage Saturday at 7:30 p.m. in St. Michael's Parish. The Revs. Charles Mulholland and Robert Whalen conducted the ceremony.

Daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Alphonse Ingenito of Greenville, the bride was given in marriage by her parents. Maids of honor were sisters of the bride, Diana Ingenito of New York and Carol Ingenito of Chapel Hill.

Bridesmaids included Elizabeth Colbert of Cary, Michelle Parkin of Laurel, Md., Lisa Langley of Houston, Texas, and Brenda Whitford of Greenville.

The bridegroom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Jack Pendergrass of Durham. Gregory Pendergrass of Greensboro was best man for his brother. James Ingenito of Greenville, brother of the bride, Cume Tilley of Chapel Hill, Tim Walter of Durham, and Tim McMahon of Raleigh were ushers.

Jennifer Burkey of Durham, niece of the bridegroom, was flower girl.

Wedding music was presented by organist Kathleen Hansinger, flutist Christina King and vocalists Bill Stockton and Sean Gargan.

The bride and bridegroom attended the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He is in the graduate program through Loyola University. She is employed by Dr. Toni Manscherin as a dental hygienist in Cary. He is employed by St. Michael's Parish as a young adult and youth minister.

The bride wore a white taffeta gown with a light pink underlay. The alencon lace bodice was beaded with pearls and sequins. It was fashioned with a sweetheart neckline, V-back, and cathedral-length outlined with sequins and pearls. The puff sleeves have flowers and pearls over each shoulder matching the flowers on the light pink veil. She carried a cascade of orchids, bridal pink and white roses, variegated ivy and pink and white satin ribbons.

Each of the attendants wore a satin tea-length gown styled with a black bodice and daphne rose skirt. The V-back was accented with bows. Each carried a bouquet of dianthis, bridal pink and white roses, variegated ivy and satin ribbons.

A reception was held in the church parish hall.

The couple will live in Cary after a wedding trip to Gatlinburg, Tenn., and Cherokee.

Double-Ring Ceremony Performed

Annette Darlene Anderson of Greenville and Gregory Vernard Williams of Chicago were married in Bell's Chapel Holy Church Saturday evening at 7:30. Dr. Thomas D. Dixon conducted the double-ring ceremony.

Organist Gregory Whitaker, Faith Clark and Stanley Jones, vocalists, presented wedding music.

The bride's sister, Nebra Bryant, and Felecia T. Ingram, cousin of the bride, both of Greenville, were honor attendants. Bridesmaids included Dina N. Edwards of Tillery, Mendy D. Elbert of Winterville, Phyllis M. Gardner and Wanda K. Gardner of Chicago, sisters of the bridegroom. Junior bridesmaids included Nikkara Boyd of Greenville and Tenika Bryant of Clinton, Md., both cousins of the bride. Echo Gardner of Chicago, niece of the bridegroom, was flower girl while Germain Bryant, cousin of the bride, of Clinton, Md., and Marketta Williams, cousin of the bridegroom of Chicago, were ring bearers.

Donnie J. Robinson of Macon, Ga., was best man. Ushers included Timmy L. Blount, Clifton D. Bryant and Leonard Bryant, brothers of the bride, Edward Moore, adopted brother of the bride, all of Greenville, Jacques Thigpen of Winterville, and Kelvin Bryant of Fayetteville.

The bell chimer was Lamar Bryant of Clinton, Md., cousin of the bride.

The bride is the daughter of Sandra Bryant of Greenville. She was given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her stepfather, Raymond Bryant III. The bridegroom is the son of Stanley Bobo and Vera Gardner of Chicago.

The bride wore a tea-length gown of white baroque satin styled with a fitted bodice, V-neckline, sheer illusion yoke and semi-bishop collar. The keyhole opening was trimmed with strands of faux pearls. The cathedral train was edged with faux pearls and center panel of schiffli lace. She wore a headband covered with schiffli lace and satin accented with matching pearls. The pouf flowed from the back with an attached elbow-length veil accented with bows and pearls. The gown was designed by the bride and Lucy Garris while the headpiece was designed by the bride's mother and Mildred Atkinson. The bride carried a bouquet of roses, daisies, miniature carnations, stephanotis and baby's breath accented with pearls tied with lace and satin streamers.

The honor attendants each wore a peach tea-length gown fashioned with drop semi-fitted bodice, lace collar, short sleeves and full skirt. Each carried a brandy snifter filled with miniature peach roses, baby's breath, greenery, peach candle with peach, ivory and gray streamers. Bridesmaids were dressed identical. The junior attendants were dressed similar and carried similar flowers. The flower girl wore a dress of ivory similar to the other attendants. She carried a peach and white satin covered basket trimmed with white lace and matching ribbon.

Shannon Bradley presided at the guest register. The wedding was directed by Helen Bridges of Winterville, who also introduced guests. A reception was held at W.H. Robinson after the ceremony. Cheryl Tyson, cousin of the bride, and Karen Williams, aunt of the bridegroom, distributed wedding programs.

The rehearsal dinner was given by the bride's parents. A bridal luncheon, several cookouts, lingerie party, bachelorette breakfast and a miscellaneous shower were given prior to the ceremony.

The bride is a graduate of D.H. Conley High School and N.C. Central University. She is employed by Pitt County schools. The bridegroom is a graduate of Fenger High School in Chicago and attended DePaul University. He is serving in the U.S. Marine Corps and stationed at the Naval Air Station in Anaheim, Calif.

The couple will live in Anaheim.

Double-Ring Vows Spoken

The wedding of Pamela Parker of Fountain and Broderick Darin Maye of Farmville, took place Saturday at 4 p.m. in a double-ring ceremony. Dr. Robert Gorham conducted the ceremony at Dilda's Chapel Free Will Baptist Church.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Russell Lee Parker Sr. of Fountain and Mr. and Mrs. Lee Andrew Knight of Farmville.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride chose a formal gown of ivory satinette with a sheer neckline, pearls and re-embroidered lace appliqued fitted bodice, quarter length sleeves trimmed with lace appliques and pearls at the shoulder. The gathered skirt had lace trim encircling the hemline and chapel train. She wore a fingertip length V-shaped wreath veil with appliques and pearls to one side.

Cynthia McKeithen, sister of the bride, attended as matron of honor. Bridesmaids were Brenda Spell, Towanda Carney, Kimberly Spell of Richmond, Va., cousins of the bride; Lynette Horne of Campspring, Md., cousin of the bride; and Marion Slade of Robersonville. The attendants wore tea-length gowns of bridal royal blue, scalloped edged lace over a slip of gleaming satin featuring V-backs and royal blue satin cummerbunds tied with wide back bows. The flowergirl was Bianka Newton of Greenville. She wore a dress identical to those of the attendants.

The best man was Robert Barnes of Farmville and the ring bearer was Deric Parker of Fountain. Serving as ushers were Jerry Parker, Russell Parker Jr., of Fountain, brothers of the bride; Corey Carney of Richmond, Va., cousin of the bride; Dana

MRS. MAYE

Knight of Farmville, brother of the bridegroom; and Dino Maye of Boston, Mass., cousin of the bridegroom.

Music was performed by Donald Tyson, Vanessa Daniels, Linda Johnson, Lynwood Mercer and Aundie Spell.

A reception, given by the bride's family, was held in the church fellowship hall. A rehearsal dinner was given by the bridegroom's family. After the reception the bride's parents hosted a party at their home.

Couple Marries On Saturday Afternoon

Peggy Ann Latham and Clinton Eugene Williams, both of Greenville, were united in marriage Saturday at 2 p.m. in St. Peter's Missionary Baptist Church. The Rev. David Hammond presided over the double ring ceremony.

Parents of the bride are William Henry and Millie Latham of Greenville. The bridegroom is the son of Joseph and Kadell Williams of Grimesland.

A reception given in honor of the couple was held at Wellcome Middle School.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a formal white gown of satinette featuring a sweetheart neckline and short pouf sleeves enhanced by silk flowers, pearls and lace embroidery. The full circular skirt with a peplum design in the back and the cathedral-length train fell from a bustle bow cascading to waterfall length extending to the floor. Her headpiece was a two-layered veil of illusion extending from a band of silk flowers interspersed with sprays of pearls.

Annie Ward of Newark, N.J., aunt of the bride, attended as maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Doris Perkins Ward, Emmaline Williams, sister of the bridegroom; Cynthia Ward, cousin of the bride; Laverne Sheppard, cousin of the bride; and Junior bridesmaid, Doris E. Ward, cousin of the bride. All are from Greenville. The maid of honor wore a pink tea-length taffeta gown featuring a V-neck and long sleeves with a lace overlay. The skirt was accented with a bow in front. The bridesmaids wore pink tea-length gowns made of taffeta with short pouf sleeves and a bow accenting the waist. The bride and attendants carried bouquets of pink and white silk flowers with miniature pink roses, pearls and ribbons.

Tawanda Ward of Newark, N.J., cousin of the bride, was flower girl.

Warren Williams of Grimesland, attended his brother as best man. Ushers were Jasper Latham of Greenville, brother of the bride; Jeffrey Ward of Greenville, cousin of the bride; Edward Williams, Raymond Williams, and Robert Williams, brothers of the bridegroom, all of Greenville; and Perry Ward of Greenville, brother of the bride.

Quincy C. Williams of Grimesland, nephew of the bridegroom, was the ring bearer.

The bride is a senior at East Carolina University and the groom attends Pitt Community College.

The Absolute Best Deal In Town!

Couple Marries Saturday

The First Baptist Church in Murfreesboro provided the setting for the 1:30 Saturday wedding ceremony of Mae Carter of Winston-Salem and Joseph Leroy Godette Jr. The Rev. Addison Williams officiated the double ring ceremony.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Willie Carter of Murfreesboro and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Leroy Godette Sr.

The bride attended Winston-Salem State University and is employed with the Kingswood School at the United Methodist Children's Home in Winston-Salem. The bridegroom attended East Carolina University, undergraduate and graduate school. He is an assistant football coach and instructor at North Carolina A&T State University in Greensboro.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a gown of white crystalette satin. The gown featured a heavily-beaded molded bodice with medallion trim, highlighted by silk and English netting and fashioned with hand-tucked Juliet pouf sleeves. The full medallion length train featured a wire-hemmed ruffle accenting the front of the skirt and cascading down the back.

Kimberly Doggett, of Greensboro attended the bride as maid of honor. Beth Day Hairston of Winston-Salem was matron of honor. Bridesmaids were LaSonja Branch and Monique Branch of Murfreesboro, Joyce Douglas of Oxen Hill, Md., Amy Gillus of Virginia Beach, Va., Karen Hicks of Richmond, Va., Thelma Johnson of Winston-Salem, Doris Monger of Woodbridge, Va., and Sharon Spikes of Winston Salem. The attendants wore red satin gowns fashioned with spaghetti straps and a Grace Kelly neckline and plain bodice. The high/low hemline flowed from a draped hip band, accented with a side bow.

MRS. GODETTE

Freager Sanders of Neenah, Wis., attended as best man. Ushers were John Williams of Greenville, nephew of the bridegroom; Steve and Tony Williams of Washington, D.C., cousins of the bridegroom; Phillip Barnhill of Washington, D.C., cousin of the bridegroom; Kermit Blount of Forestville, Md., Terrell Britton of Winston-Salem, Theodore Sutton of Forestville, Md., Oscar Tyson of Richmond, Va., and Billy Washington of Virginia Beach, Va.

Danielle C. Hinton of Winston-Salem was flower girl.

A reception was held at the Sandy Shore Lake Side Lounge immediately following the ceremony. Prior to the wedding several parties were given in honor of the couple.

After a wedding trip to Williamsburg, the couple will reside in Winston-Salem.

Miss Payton Speaks Vows

The wedding ceremony of Sharon Yvonne Payton and Jimmy Alvin Booth took place Saturday at 3 p.m. in the Metropolitan A.M.E. Zion Church in Washington, N.C. Performing the ceremony were the Revs. Melvin Murphy, brother-in-law of the bride, and David Moore.

Parents of the couple are Earl and Shirley Payton of Greenville, and Harry Lee and Lois Booth of Plymouth.

Organist Tim Boyd and vocalists Lakisha Peartree, Leon Randolph Jr. and Theodore Randolph presented wedding music.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. Sophia Gray of New York, sister of the bridegroom, and Betty Murphy of Ayden, sister of the bride, were honor attendants. Bridesmaids included Mia Norris of Ayden and Loretta Payton of Greenville, sisters of the bride, Doretha Martin of Virginia, sister of the bridegroom, Sandra Halloway of Washington, aunt of the bridegroom, Valerie Bell of Plymouth, cousin of the bridegroom, and Gwene Spencer of Belhaven, sister-in-law of the bridegroom. Shaniece Booth of Washington, niece of the bridegroom, and Keyvette Murphy of Ayden, niece of the bride, were flower girls.

The best man was the bridegroom's father. Ushers included Harry Spencer of Belhaven; Fraizer Booth and Charles Booth, both of Greenville; Ronnie Booth and Billy Booth, both of Washington; Gregory Booth of New York and Neal Booth of Washington, all brothers of the bridegroom. Jamal Gray of New York, nephew of the bridegroom, was ring bearer.

The bride wore a gown of satin styled with a chapel-length train, puffed melon sleeves and yoke stand-up neckline detailed with schiffli embroidery and ribbon trim. Her headpiece was trimmed with pearls, flowers and had an illusion veil. She carried white orchids, roses and stephanotis.

The honor attendants wore tea-length gowns of hot pink taffeta covered with matching lace. The V-back had a bow and the sleeves were puffed. Each wore a hat covered with matching pink taffeta flowers and each carried mums with matching streamers with baby's breath.

The bridesmaids were dressed identical and the flower girl wore a cameo pink tea-length taffeta gown with hot pink ribbon and puffled sleeves. She carried a matching basket.

A reception was held in the church parlor and was given by the bridegroom's parents and aunt, Carrie Randolph, and other relatives. An after-rehearsal dinner was also given by his parents.

The couple will be living in Greenville.

The bride is a graduate of Ayden-Grifton High School and Pitt Community College. The bridegroom graduated from Pantego High School and PCC. She is employed in Greenville and he is employed in Farmville.

Several miscellaneous showers were given for the bridal couple.

'Diana' Is History

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: In a recent letter, you referred to the wife of Prince Charles as "Diana, Princess of Whales." Granted, Diana is a rather large girl, but she's not that large. However, if we continue to use that title, perhaps it will do something positive for the conservation of whales. — DAVID MORGAN, BOTHELL, WASH.

DEAR MR. MORGAN: I suspected something was fishy when all the mail concerning the "Princess of Whales" gaffe came only from readers of the Sunday Seattle Post Intelligencer.

In consulting my files, I noticed that I had referred to Diana as "Princess Diana," which I later learned was incorrect because in order to have the title "Princess (given name)," one must be born a princess, such as Prince Charles' sister, Princess Anne.

Apparently an editor in Seattle knew more about royal nomenclature than I, and dutifully changed the incorrect title, "Princess Diana," to the correct one — "Diana, Princess of Wales." Unfortunately, through some fluke, the "Wales" became "Whales." And the rest is marine history.

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS
FURNISHING THE AREA THAT GIVES FIRST & LAST IMPRESSION

Remember, the first and last place a guest sees in your home is your entrance area--and, fortunately, no matter what the size of that area, you can do an attractive furnishing job there.

You can put your best foot forward in your entrance area. Even if you have only a tiny space, there are ways you can show both hospitality and decorating skill. It is what you make it.

It's one place, by the way, you can really personalize. For example, you can use an outstanding accessory or perhaps one dramatic piece of furniture there.

You can also make the area useful with such things as a chest and mirror, which will not only dress it up, but also serve functionally. If you have the room, a chair or bench can be helpful.

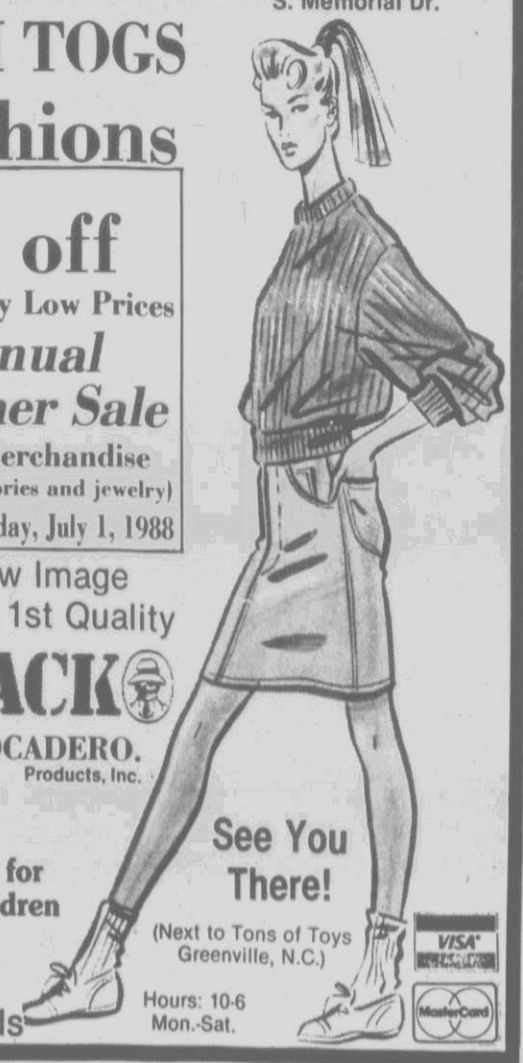

The entrance area is a good place for a picture or other attractive wall items, and don't forget the right lighting.

You can display friendliness and pretty decorating in your entrance area, and we can help you with furnishings there--and, of course, for any room in your home. Stop in and look around. You'll be glad you did.

Little Environmental Headway In Latin America

By CARRIE FIGDOR
Associated Press Writer

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — After 15 years of breakneck population and industrial growth, Latin America is taking stock of its progress in environmental protection — and it is not happy with what it sees.

Following a landmark international conference in Stockholm, Sweden, in 1972 on the environment, Latin Americans set out with high hopes of promoting growth while protecting its largely untouched resources.

Throughout the area, special government ministries and departments were created, pollution standards were approved, and millions of dollars were spent on campaigns to protect the environment.

But the results "have not been what we would have desired," conceded Jose Lizarraga, director of the United Nations Environmental Program for Latin America and the Caribbean.

"In practice, environmental management lost the priority status it had been given, and in some cases was simply forgotten," he said in an interview. "Even while there has been a big advance in terms of consciousness-raising, there has not been such improvement in actual management."

Lizarraga met with Latin American officials involved with environmental issues for a conference here in April to assess the region's progress in protecting its environment.

The officials blamed the deterioration on burgeoning urban populations and industrial growth, which Lizarraga called "predatory and shortsighted."

In Mexico City, now one of the largest cities in the world, too many vehicles using leaded gasoline have led to air pollution so bad that people often can't wear contact lenses.

In just two generations, Brazil's population has changed from 70 percent rural to 73 percent urban, with sewerless shantytowns ringing major cities and an 8-million-unit housing deficit.

Most large Latin American cities have seen immigrants swarm in from the countryside to live in substandard housing without running water, sewage facilities, garbage disposal or paved roads.

But even widespread urban housing and health problems are surpassed by industrial pollution in terms of long-range damage, the environmental experts said.

While pollution standards and procedures for dealing with wastes are often on the books, enforcement is lax and penalties are often painless.

In Venezuela the worst penalty for violating an environmental law is a 50,000-bolivar fine (about $3,400 at the official exchange rate) and three days in jail, according to Environment Vice Minister Carlos Barrios.

Treatment of industrial effluents often is inadequate or non-existant, and wastes are being dumped into rivers or lakes used for recreation and drinking, in violation of laws on the books.

Fertilizers, including some that are limited or banned in industrialized countries, also are being used to gain more production faster from poor land, the environmental experts said.

In Venezuela, before a clean-up effort began in 1984, Lake Maracaibo was nearly dead from the dumping of untreated waste from industries on its shores and from Maracaibo, a city of 1 million, which until recently had no sewage treatment plant.

According to Lizarraga and others, Latin America's poor record in environmental protection is mainly a political problem.

"Environmental repair is more costly than prevention, even though prevention can cost more in the short-term. The problem is that politicians have a short-term view," Lizarraga said.

Officials also note that Latin America's debt crises have made the situation worse.

Government spending for environmental concerns has been cut to pay huge foreign debts.

At the same time, the need to produce and export more, so that debts can be paid, has aggravated the region's tendency to exploit its natural resources as intensively as possible.

"Sometimes you lose hope," Lizarrage said. "But over the last 15 years there has been a process of maturity and consciousness-raising. What we have to do now is transform this consciousness into action."

Satsumas Don't Grow In Satsuma Anymore

By GARRY MITCHELL
Associated Press Writer

SATSUMA, Ala. (AP) — Satsumas don't grow in Satsuma anymore, but the sweet-tasting cousins to the orange have enticed growers in coastal Alabama into trying again to outsmart winter.

Residents of Satsuma still talk about the satsuma groves that provided jobs before the long freeze of 1940 killed the fruit trees in this Mobile suburb of 6,000.

There weren't as many residents back then and many of them picked satsumas, figs and pecans for shipment north. Once the idea of fruit-growing spread, land developers ran advertisements that enticed Northerners down to the "Fruitland of the South" for speculative growing ventures.

Workers in Satsuma now drive to jobs in local chemical plants or into Mobile instead of picking fruit.

"There are no satsumas in Satsuma anymore," said Kathy Stubbs, the assistant city clerk. She said she still gets phone calls from people curious about the town's name. She pulls out a Sungold Satsuma paper label like those that once identified the crates of satsumas loaded onto railcars here.

Before the satsuma came along, the town was known as Fig Tree Island. It became Pace Orange Orchard in 1910, and Pace Orchard Company in 1913.

By 1915, it was called Satsuma, after the delectable fruit.

The McConaghy family know all the details. Their family ran the giant tin-roofed satsuma shed, where the fruit was crated after harvest and shipped to New York and Chicago.

"That's where the prices were highest," recalled Margaret McConaghy Mealy, 73, whose father managed the business after they moved here in November 1918.

Her nephew, John McConaghy, 35, removed the ice pack from an ankle injured in a basketball game and started the satsuma tour of their property, which includes the barren groves and production shed where the shipping crates are heaped in the rafters.

McConaghy runs a sawmill now, manufacturing cedar picnic tables among other things.

On the terraced land, the McConaghys raised satsumas on about 80 acres, beside a backdrop of pecan trees. The land drifts down to a sandy beach on a wide creek that gives way to swampland.

McConaghy said he's going to plant a few satsumas to show people who come around asking about the history of the place.

Before the trees froze in 1940, his grandfather received a 10 percent commission on the crop one year in the 1930s of $10,000 — a lot of cash back then. But after the freeze, the groves vanished and the packers strayed to other jobs.

If it hits 20 degrees and the leaves freeze off, the trees suffer and won't produce.

People still look for satsumas in the markets, but they have to be trucked in from Louisiana or Florida. The mandarin satsuma oranges were introduced in 1876 to Florida. It was not until the year 1910 that the "satsuma madness" struck coastal Alabama.

And it hasn't entirely vanished.

Some 30 or 40 miles south of Satsuma, Billy Deakle of Deakle Farms said he has sold satsuma trees to several customers. And Henry Poiroux, who planted 65 trees seven years ago, expects to harvest his biggest crop this fall.

"I've got five of the biggest trees in Mobile County," Poiroux said. "I'm retired. It's just a hobby, but I've already had some demand for them."

Deakle said at one time in the 1920s, about seven satsuma packing houses operated around the county.

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR SUNDAY July 3

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Start a project with the help of a good but practical person. Perhaps there is a special event you've had in mind that should be finalized.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Decide now how to make your home more harmonious and festive. Avoid outside pressures, but listen to a troubled colleage.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Support a co-worker's plans to expand, then you can be more efficient at your work. Focus on modernizing methods. Do not shun a personal duty.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Help your mate to solve his or her meaningful monetary affairs. This may involve adjusting your own accounts. Forget the advice of others.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Now is a good time to listen to your mate's advice. Advances are made toward fulfilling a wish in the evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Accept the invitation to go on a short trip with a friend. Forget about attending an event in the evening which could be counter-productive.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Practical affairs may challenge your sense of responsibility to something else. Use your insight to realize a loved one's unverbalized need.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): An important outside affair needs attention, but first finalize your budget. Avoid an irate partner, but listen closely to a new contact.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Settle an old debt; then study a new project that is profitable. Use your ability to see both sides to help a co-worker.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan.20): Listen to those with practiced instincts today for new insight. Later, apply careful thought to a creative idea. Avoid extravagance in the evening.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): A higher-up is in an excellent position to help you if you make your desires known. Avoid a counter-productive situation between a family member and an outsider.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Conditions prove favorable for cutting down on expenses. Follow through on a new contact and it will enhance your whole day.

FORECAST FOR MONDAY July 4

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Take care of personal affairs before setting out in the world today. Try to be more lenient with your mate. Try to remain cheerful despite problems.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): You must work harder to convince friends of the worth of a project that means a great deal to you. Your plans warrant explanation, not apology.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Colleagues are not in a receptive mood, so don't ask for favors. Work as independently as possible, for now.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Be careful what you say today, especially where out-of-town matters are concerned. Your long-distance relations can be most fruitful.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Your mate may need reassurance about the advisability of an upcoming affair; make your ideas clearer. Pay an outstanding debt.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Ask questions of a partner in order to avoid arguments later. Know what others expect of you and level with them about what you can do.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Make your environment more charming and comfortable. Avoid conflict. Spend a quiet evening at home.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Enjoy yourself today, but plan your activities in detail. Keep your mate's demands in perspective, but don't ignore them.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Home and family prove most enjoyable today. Your recent shining accomplishments make this a great time to work on intimacies that have floundered.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan.20): Follow your instincts today. See only those who you most want to see. Take time out to answer correspondence that has been neglected.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Plan a fine, intimate family dinner. You can benefit your position today by examining your relationships and studying your practical interests.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): You may be doing too much daydreaming today, but it is not the time for it. Indulge those around you. Make this a memorable day.

The bidding:

Most deceptive plays are made by declarer—after all, it does not matter if the dummy hasn't the foggiest idea of the real lie of the cards, but there are two defenders who might be fooled. Obviously, a defender takes a chance when he tries a falsecard; declarer knows his assets, but it is the defender's partner who could be led down the primrose path.

Where South found his rebid of four hearts we will never know. We can only presume that he was dazzled by his 100 honors. However, his bidding so impressed West that, rather than conduct a normal defense, he got off to the fanciful lead of the jack of diamonds.

Declarer covered with the queen and East won the ace. Back came a low spade to declarer's king, and West elected to hold up one round. Since drawing trumps would make the hand an open book, declarer simply fired back a spade. West won, cashed the king of diamonds and, when his partner discarded a spade, he continued with the nine. Instead of ruffing for the setting trick, East let go another spade! Declarer won, drew trumps and claimed the rest of the tricks for his contract.

Why didn't East ruff the third diamond? Because West's deceptive opening lead had succeeded admirably. East could not believe that his partner would lead the jack without holding the ten, so he presumed that partner's nine was simply showing the bottom of a sequence headed K-J-10-9 There is some sort of rough justice, after all, to the potential disastrous consequences of a falsecard.

Northeast Takes Fancy To Homes That Have Exposed Wooden Beams

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Nancy and Bob Karlson liked the idea of exposed wood beams in the new home they were planning to build in Weston, Conn.

"If you're going to do it, there is a guy in New Hampshire you ought to talk to, we were told, so I called him," said Nancy as she showed a visitor around the timber frame house she shares with her husband and their five children.

After meeting with Ted Benson, one of those responsible for the revival of a type of building which appears to have reached its pinnacle in the early part of the 14th century, the Karlsons opted to go ahead. The home's superstructure contains no nails, only pegs. This makes the Karlsons members of a small but slowly growing community of Americans who live in contemporary timber framed houses.

Most who know of this type of construction associate it with the early New England structures erected in house and barn-raisings. These ultimate examples of American neighborliness were occasions at which all the able-bodied males from miles around assembled to help raise the four walls of a new building.

Benson, whose book "The Timber-Frame House" (Taunton Press) shows and tells how to adapt the building style and update the construction techniques to fit present-day needs, has built more than 200 such homes throughout the country. However, he says the revival is especially strong in the Northeast where it was always strongest.

The style of building is one in which massive timbers, 20 feet or longer and typically eight by eight inches thick, are joined with mortise and tenon and dovetail construction. Such a structure is immensely strong and self-supporting. Other advantages include compatibility with passive solar heating and with an open floor plan in which both heat and traffic move about easily. Some drawbacks are higher costs and longer construction time.

Benson recalled that "the first time I saw a barn entirely put together with wooden joinery and pegs, I was very impressed."

He soon learned that prior to 1850 virtually any wooden structure was a timber-frame construction and that the style had accommodated buildings as varied as a Scandinavian stave church, a French manor house, a German cathedral and a Japanese temple.

Timber frame buildings evolved around the birth of Christ from tied-together poles around which animal skins or matting were wrapped. The other significant events in the style's development include the creation of mortise and tenon joints some time between 500 and 100 B.C. and, in the 10th century, the development of a framework rigid enough to support itself above-ground.

Although Benson maintains that "we still have a way to go" to achieve the level of excellence of some old buildings, there have been some contemporary improvements.

For example, his company developed a computer program to work out the mathematics of joinery much more quickly. "With the computer, what took 100 hours five years ago now takes five minutes. But it still takes a craftsman with a sharp chisel to cut the joint," he said.

The resurgence of interest in the last few years is shown in the larger number of enthusiasts it is drawing. This spring, 500 individuals from the United States and Canada attended the annual conference of the Timber Framers Guild of North America in Elizabethtown, Pa.

"At the first few conferences, the issue was can we make a go of this? Will we be here next year?" said Benson who helped found the group. "This year I felt like we'd make it. Many of the companies are doing quite nicely and the issue was how are we going to improve the organization.

"We resolved that at next year's conference, we will raise the frame for a low-cost house and donate it to Habitat for Humanity," he said. The volunteer group builds houses for the poor in many parts of the world.

The timber framers are going to draw up plans and divide the work of constructing the frame. They'll send the plans for the whole and for an individual piece of the construction to the members who will each bring a single notched timber to next year's meeting in York, Pa. Then the group will raise the frame by communal effort.

(For information about timber-frame construction write: The Timber Framers Guild of North America, Box 1046, Keene, NH 03431. Phone 603 357-1606.)

On The House

By ANDY LANG

What's new on the market?

THE PRODUCT — A light control to provide security against house and property prowlers.

Manufacturer's claim — That this control turns on an outdoor light and an indoor light the moment a person enters its detection field ... that the control uses an infrared sensor that activates lights automatically by sensing heat in motion ... that the sensor is designed to provide overlapping coverage both outward and downward up to 70 feet away, covering a range of more than 4,000 square feet ... that the sensor not only makes a house appear occupied, but insures that family members never come home to a dark house ... that its wireless receiver simply plugs into an electrical outlet, with no additional wiring needed to make the indoor light work ... and that the control is easy to install and mounts in minutes to any standard outdoor floodlight fixture and has ultraviolet protection to insure the sensor is not desensitized by exposure to direct sunlight.

THE PRODUCT — An electronic setback thermostat to cut down on air conditioning costs.

Manufacturer's claim — That this product, used more commonly during the heating season, can be programmed to cool a house by allowing the room's temperature to rise to a pre-select level to save energy while nobody is at home ... that it automatically cools the house before the family retires for the night .... that the thermostat can be installed in less than 20 minutes and is as easy to set as a clock radio ... that it has an illuminated display for checking thermostat readings at night ... and that it has "arm chair" programming for convenient setting.

THE PRODUCT — A combination dial and key locking hasp.

Manufacturer's claim — That it can be latched without locking and has a convenient dial lock for security ... that it has a corrugated leaf for strength ... that it has a full-width knuckle with supporting sidewalls ... that it has a hold-open feature to reduce swinging and rattling ... and that it has a corrosion-resistant zinc finish.

THE PRODUCT — A portable benchtop table saw with a 10-inch blade.

Manufacturer's claim — That is has a heavy duty, precision die-cast aluminium table top ... that it features right and left miter capabilities ... that gauge slots are molded into the top of the table to guide the miter gauge ... that the blade can be tilted for cutting bevels to 45 degrees, with the depth of cut at 45 degrees being 2½ inches ... that it has a 13.8 amp, 2-horsepower motor ... and that it has a 1¼-inch dust chute to allow for the attachment of a standard vacuum hose to a vacuum cleaner to help keep the work area clean.

Microwave Ovens, Freezing Units Can Speed Preserving Of Flowers

By EARL ARONSON
AP Newsfeatures

Summer is the time to harvest wers to preserve for decorations d for crafts, and collectors are fin- ng modern microwave ovens and w freezing units speed and ease eir efforts.

Harvest flowers just before they ach the fully opened stage with the wer methods of preservation just you do with the older drying ethods. Don't wait until they are rting to fade.

From Grace Rymer, a floral de- gner at Cleveland, Tenn., comes rd that marigolds and chrysan- emums need 3 minutes of heating microwave ovens and 10 minutes cooling. Salvias and tulips need 3 nutes of heating in the microwave d 24 minutes of cooling. To keep wers bright after drying, spray em with hair spray, an aerosol lac- er or a specially formulated floral eservative, she advises.

Some suggestions from Rymer: r flowers that wilt, apply a drying ent such as silica gel, borax or rnmeal, or an absorbing kitty litter ixture before drying in the crowave.

She says silica gel is good for smooth surfaces such as daisy or orchid.

Rymer uses glass or paper items of the size used for dessert, cereal bowls or shoe boxes, deep enough so that the drying agent covers the entire flower.

When using the microwave, put a cup of water in the oven to provide moisture. After microwaving, add stems by using florist wire.

Plastic shoe and garment boxes are fine for storage.

Some flowers may become brittle and shatter, so Rymer uses a humidifier to make them pliable for arranging.

Here's some advice from Michigan State University:

Cut flowers on a warm, sunny day. Flower surfaces will be fairly dry, so mold and mildew aren't like to be a major problem.

Process flowers immediately after cutting. Holding flowers in water for even 24 hours increases surface moisture and causes damage to delicate petals. Process more material than you think you may need to allow for shrinkage and breakage.

In her May-June FlowerLetter, Sunny O'Neil (River Road, Bethesda, MD 20817) writes about freeze-drying flowers, including a visit to the Northstar Co. at Nisswa, Minn., which she says has pioneered in portable freeze-dry systems for preserving flowers. O'Neil will be guest curator this fall for a flower preservation exhibit at the Smithsonian Natural History Museum.

New for gardens — Sow Easy Seedsticks (from Wilkinson Sword Ltd. in Wales, Great Britain) resemble books of matches. They are available in nine collections and in single packs. Each pack contains 20 sticks. The Seedsticks include vegetables, window plants, summer bedding, children's garden, indoor plants and herb gardens.

To use, rake the ground. Push Seedsticks point downward into firm soil to sow-depth line on sticks. Each Seedstick is color-coded for identification.

Rodale's Organic Gardening magazine reports that wildly decorated beach balls suspended above crops and bobbing in the breeze may save American and Asian fields from crop-threatening birds.

"Nearly 1.5 million of these beach balls were used in Japan last year protecting orchards, gardens and rice paddies from bird damage," the magazine noted. "It seems giant 'eyes' painted on the balls appear to be predators' eyes, frightening thieving birds. Generally performing well in tests, the balls reduced bird damage on a commercial grower's blueberry crop from the usual 80 to 90 percent to only 5 percent .... For unknown reasons, the only bird not fooled so far is the robin."

Six balls per acre were found to offer the best protection; yellow-colored balls were most effective.

Here's The Answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — We have screens with metal mesh that is neither fiber glass nor any kind of plastic. Small holes have developed in several of them. Can they be patched so the patches will not be too conspicuous yet will keep out insects?

A. — For very small holes, putting a dab of household cement over the opening often is sufficient. For larger holes, you can buy ready-made patches that can be placed over the openings and attached according to directions. Or you can take pieces of a similar mesh, make your own patches and attach them by unraveling a few strands and then bend them into place.

Q. — I am a paint dealer and do not agree that, when enamel is shaken in a mechanical shaker, it causes bubbling. Enamels can be put on a shaker because they mix well that way, much better than when stirred by hand. Varnishes are another matter. They will bubble up when shaken. Your questioner's problem probably stems from applying enamel over unprepared or unsanded surfaces, in which case the enamel may bubble.

A. — Of course, enamel is varnish with pigment. I found two written supports for the non-shaking of enamel, but they were in books published some years ago. After talking to two authoritative sources, I am convinced you are correct about modern enamels. Both agreed enamel can be placed in a mechanical shaker. They are John Oberle, technical director of Benjamin Moore & Co., and Kathleen McGuire, manager of technical services, Pittsburgh Paints.

Q. — My friend and I both bought houses with cedar shingles a few years ago. He painted his white. Since then, some yellowish brown stains have developed on his house, as though something in the wood had bled through the paint. I am now considering either painting my shingles or finishing them with some kind of transparent coating. Any advice to avoid the stains?

A. — The stains probably are from the tannin in the wood and do not always occur. You can use a clear finish or you can paint. Unless you have some good reason, it seems more logical not to change the natural color of cedar, but many people do. If you use a paint, it should be an acrylic latex and it should be applied over a primer-sealer that has a water base. This will prevent bleeding.

Q. — I have to paint my house some time this year. Is it better to paint the siding first and then the trim or vice versa?

A. — The professional way is to paint the siding first, then the trim. But sometimes it is easier to paint them both at the same time, especially if they are to be the same color. Our experience is that it also is better to paint them both at the same time if it is a two-story house.

(All aspects of painting a house are discussed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Paint Your House Inside and Out," which can be obtained by sending 75 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column.)

Garden Clinic

Q. I have already started receiving talogues offering tulips, daffodils d other spring-flowering bulbs. I ard there is a booklet that tells hat tulips are the best to choose for anting in North Carolina. Do you ow how to order it?

A. The publication is "Spring owering Bulbs: Trials in North arolina." It costs two dollars and is vailable from the Publications Of- e, Section G, Box 7603, N.C. State niversity, Raleigh, N.C. 27695. The ooklet is published by the N.C. Agri- ltural Research Service and gives formation about which tulips, hya- nths and daffodils perform best in r area. The booklet also gives in- rmation about fertilizing bulbs and reparing the site where they are to planted.

Q. Can fall crops such as collards d broccoli be directly seeded in the arden rather than buying ansplants?

A. Broccoli, collards and certain her crops may be grown directly om seeds or from transplants. The ccess of direct seeding, however, depends on having adequate moisture available to keep the young seedlings actively growing after germination. Gardeners who do not have an irrigation source will have better results by using transplants.

Q. A friend has given me a pot of basil. Should it be planted in the sun? How tall does it grow?

A. Sweet basil, or simply basil, grows best in full sun in warm, well-drained soil. A light sand to a silt loam with a pH of 6.4 is ideal. Basil is an annual and grows one to two feet tall. Basil is a popular herb known for its flavorful leaves. The fresh or dried leaves add a distinctive flavor to many foods, for example, Italian-style tomato sauces, pesto sauce and salad dressing. Do not overfertilize basil or flavor will be sacrificed for growth. Basil will not tolerate moisture stress, so provide a regular supply of water. Basil can be grown from seed but also roots readily from cuttings. It is an easy herb to grow.

Keeping Knives Sharp Is An Art

By The Associated Press

Keeping kitchen knives razor sharp and in mint condition is an art. With practice and patience, most people can master traditional techniques, but modern technology also offers simpler and more effective solutions to a drawer full of dull blades.

"However you choose to sharpen your knives, do it frequently, rather than once or twice a year," says chef Lou Bouchenot, gourmet and cooking instructor. "In fact, for maximum effectiveness, knives should be sharpened after every use."

The most popular tool for reviving dull knives is the butcher's or sharpening steel. It is relatively easy to use, but does not actually sharpen a blade. Instead, it realigns the bent fibers of the blade and evens out the edge where they have broken off.

Hopes To Save The Astor Home

By DIRK BEVERIDGE
Associated Press Writer

DANVILLE, Va. (AP) — English nobles may help wage the battle to save the birthplace here of the first female member of Britain's House of Commons from being bulldozed into a parking lot.

An insurance company that owns the childhood home of Nancy Astor can wreck the place if the Danville Historical Society does not buy it by Aug. 20.

"I don't know what the pressing need is here for a parking lot," society member Gary Grant said as he stood in front of the faded white building laced with peeling green trim and punctuated by a small orange and black "For Sale" sign tacked on the front door.

The insurance firm of Blanks Pollok Lewis & Wells Inc., which is seeking to demolish the house, declined comment to The Associated Press.

The historical society began working to save the home this spring when local government decided that if no one steps in to buy the property, the insurance company can knock the building down and pave another parking lot to go with the three that flank it.

Preservationists had been aware of the house's historical significance for years but never thought it was threatened because it was occupied as apartment space.

Then the insurance company announced it wanted a parking lot. Now, the preservationists must come up with $32,000, a price agreed upon by three independent appraisers.

As the effort to save the building got under way, society board member Susan Stilwell wrote to England to the Fourth Viscount Astor, William Waldorf Astor III, grandson of the woman born as Nancy Langhorne Shaw in this tobacco and textile city that was founded in 1793 as a tiny tobacco inspection station.

The viscount wrote back to say he and relatives might send money to preserve the place.

It is a structure with an uncertain past. Those seeking to save it agree that after being built in the 1870s, shortly before Nancy Langhorne Shaw's birth, the building was moved from one end of a small lot to another.

Nancy Langhorne Shaw went on to marry the Second Viscount, Waldorf Astor, and become a liberal, temperance-pushing English parliamentarian.

In the early 1920s, perhaps, a second floor was apparently built on and the place was divided into four apartments.

"Architecturally, of course, it's of fairly minor importance," Grant said. "But, historically, it's internationally important."

Despite the humble architecture, preservationists say, Nancy Astor recognized the building in a quiet Danville neighborhood as her home in the two trips she made to Danville as a member of Parliament, when children tossed rose petals in her path.

The historical society is not quite sure what it would like to do with the Astor house, as the place is called on a historical marker put up on a nearby road now filling up with medical buildings and parking lots.

The preservationists talk of building a museum honoring the "steel magnolias," strong-willed women of the South, or even of making a headquarters out of the place.

First, they merely want to save the building.

Asked if they would be satisfied to move the once-moved house to another location, they said they found the idea distasteful.

"Our first objective is to protect it in this setting," Grant said. "We could be playing chess sets with houses."

GRIST MILL, COVERED BRIDGE — The grist mill section of Hoggard Mill, completed more than 250 years ago in 1736, is today in a remarkable state of preservation. This is due in part to its construction of heart pine inside and wide cypress planking on the exterior. The covered bridge over the dam site is an integral part of the mill's construction and is one of two covered bridges at the site.

Visitors Information

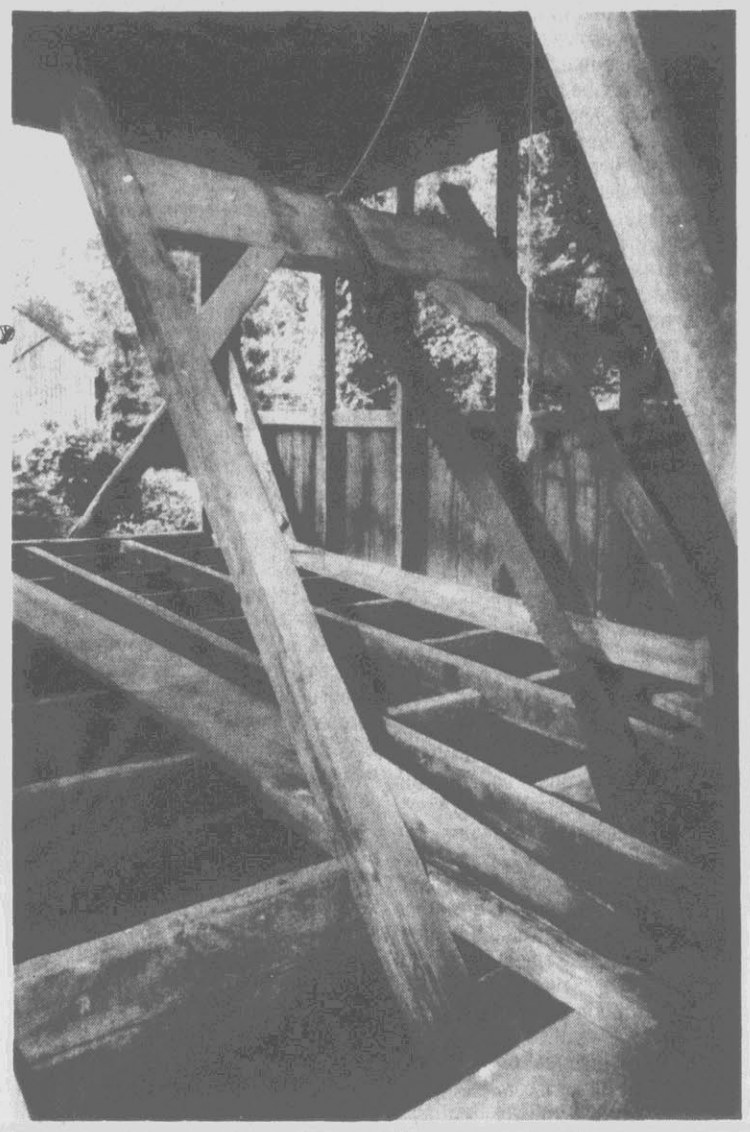

Since Hoggard Mill is on private property, visitors are asked to view the mill only from the state road that runs through the property.

No fishing or littering is permitted, but photographs are.

Anyone interested in more information is to stop at Thompson Lumber Company located on the 13 by-pass just before Mel's Diner, or to call 794-3716.

Other Historic Sites

Bertie, site of early settlements, has a number of historic places. Among these are the Hope Plantation, located four miles west of Windsor; the town of Windsor, incorporated in the late 1700s; one of only two remaining cable-drawn ferries in the state, the one at Sans Souci ferry across the Cashie River, and the Indian Woods community, where Tuscaroras once lived, in eastern Bertie County, across the Roanoke River from Martin County.

DURABLE CONSTRUCTION — Shown here is a portion of a remaining section of the saw mill at Hoggard Mill. The large saw in the tilted framework remains in place among the solid beams of heart pine.

Hoggard Mill, An 18th Century Historic Site In Bertie County

Text By Darla Baggett, Photos By Cliff Hollis

If you happen to turn right at Mel's Diner off highway 13 by-pass from the town of Windsor in Bertie County, you can find a place of magic. The place is Hoggard Mill. Half a mile after turning at Mel's Diner, you turn right again and there's the mill.

In fact, there are two mills. One is an old grist mill; the other a saw mill. Both are so well preserved that it isn't hard to believe they look much as they did over 200 years ago.

Much of the internal support structures of these two buildings are made of heart pine, a wood commonly used when the mills were built. Today, when repairs are necessary, heart pine is still used.

The beautifully weathered exteriors are of cypress, cut from the swamp where the mills stand. Hoggard Mill was built by a man named Synnott — first name and nationality unknown. It has a 30-foot thick dam base and a quarter mile crest. Six years were required to build the grist mill, which was completed in 1736. Synnott built the mill for James Castelaw and Nathaniel Hill on land owned by Castellaw.

Ownership of the mill has changed hands many times over the years. Sometime between 1810 and 1815 it was purchased by William Hoggard and passed to his son, John, in 1839. Later owners have included Johnathon Taylor, Josiah Mizelle and a Mr. Mitchell, but the name Hoggard has persisted to this day.

Dam Breaks

Both the grist mill and the saw mill were operated by water power until 1922, when the dam broke in half. This caused the saw mill building to collapse. To take care of operations, a one-cylinder kerosene engine was installed. Operations continued until 1928, when the grist mill finally shut down.

In the mill's latter years, one man, the miller, ground the corn meal and flour.

Altogether — from 1736 to 1928, the grist mill functioned for a period just eight years short of two centuries, a remarkable record of durability.

Local history tells us that in the 18th century, it was extremely difficult to keep "hard currency" in the area. Most currency found its way north and then often to England. This created a need for an extensive barter system.

Also, at a time 40 years before American independence, going into business required dealing with the Colonial Assembly. One law, in effect, read: "If any man had a site suitable for a water-powered mill then he had to make application to the Colonial Assembly, and then build the mill. If he failed to do this, anyone could come along and build a mill on the property, and after having operated this mill (free of charge) to the public for a period of two years, then the land would belong to whoever built it."

Wealth of Information

Harry Thompson, one of the present owners, has a wealth of information on the history of Hoggard Mill. He points out, for example, that many people are under the impression that the mill is located on the Cashie River. That, however, is not the case. It was originally built and still stands today in Wills Quarter Swamp. The stream serving the mill is a complete loop that doubles back on itself under the road with the water from the millstream draining into the Cashie River some distance away. Before breaking, the dam itself served as the main road.

Thompson explained that a water wheel of a type different from those serving mountain streams were used in the coastal area. In the mountains, water wheels were much larger, 10 to 12 feet in height, and were placed in an upright position over a stream.

In coastal areas, two types of wheels were necessary. Both were installed horizontally. One was placed in a room and flooded with a foot of water. That wheel had curved paddles and was known as a turbine. The second wheel, known as a flutter wheel, had water running under it. There is one of each type at Hoggard Mill. The grist mill has a turbine type, the saw mill a flutter type.

The Road, Covered Bridges

Although the road on which the property is lcoated has been known as Hoggard Mill Road for many years, the road, Rural Road 1300, has just recently been officially designated as the Hoggard Mill Road.

Two covered bridges are located at the Hoggard Mill site. Thompson noted that the National Historical Society lists only six such structures in North Carolina — three of them in Bertie County.

Both mills now stand behind a closed picket fence, giving the site an ambience of mystery, adding to its rural secluded ambience.

Other fascinating facts revealed by Thompson touch on the history of Bertie County and its courthouse. In 1744, officials declared Bertie County much too large. As a result, it was divided into what is now Bertie and Northampton counties. Prior to the 1744 split, the Bertie County Courthouse was located in what is now Northampton County.

Windsor, now Bertie's county seat, was not chartered until 1768. So, after the 1744 split, a decision was made to place Bertie's courthouse at Hoggard Mill, then known as Castelaw's Mill.

Other Structures

And other structures were built at the site. One was the county jail, with its traditional stocks and whipping post of the time. A tavern was also built.

The man appointed jailer was also given special approval to build and operate the tavern. The jailer was responsible for feeding the prisoners.

Thompson said that "a small town virtually grew up around the mill at that time. In Colonial America, with its outlook of the time, it was considered permissible for a man to be both a jailer and the operator of a tavern at the same time."

To the Surveyor Genrall or his Deputy Greeting

You are forthwith to admeasure and Lay out unto Nathaniel Hill and James Castellaw Two Acres of Land in the most Convenient place for a Water Grist mill upon Wills Quarter Swamp out of the Lands of the aforesaid Nathaniel Hill Observing that in the Laying out the aforesaid Land no persons Garden or Orchard be Injured thereby And a Platt and Certificate thereof to Return in to Our office at Our next Court and for your Doing this Shall be your Warrantt

Dat: at the Clks office this 25th Day of August A.D. 1736

PERMISSION TO BUILD — A short document from King George II of Great Britian to the surveyor general (of Carolina) or his deputy, dated 25 August 1736, authorized Nathaniel Hill and James Castellaw to operate "a water grist mill upon Wills Quarter Swamp." The document stipulated that in the layout of the mill "no persons garden or orchard be injured thereby."

A FINE MILLSTONE — This millstone at Hoggard Mill, partially covered by vines, is of typical construction. It has a hole in the center where it revolved around a large pole, and grooves radiating from the center to the outer edge. Meal or flour ground on the stone sifted down the grooves into a container where it was screened through a silk mesh.

THERE WAS A TAVERN — The building shown here is the so-called Courthouse Tavern at the Hoggard Mill site built in 1763. It was built as a private building on county property and in 1810 a second story was added to the original one-story structure.

NATURAL BEAUTY — Kudzu vines frame a section of the dark water stream at Hoggard Mill. Cypress and hardwood trees line the further shore of the stream which empties into the Cashie River some distance away.

Restoration Of Old Brazilian Town Is Being Planned

By PETER MUELLO
Associated Press Writer

CANUDOS, Brazil (AP) — This sleepy backlands town has hopes of becoming less poor than it is because historians have found a 19th century uprising here to be highly significant in the study of social dissent.

Brazilians have come to call Canudos' uprising of 1897 a communist-style revolution 20 years before the Russians had theirs.

But the Brazilian army and police crushed the uprising here with bloody force.

An army of peasants led by a messianic preacher rose up against the government, the army and the Roman Catholic Church. At least 15,000 rebels died in combat or were massacred by soldiers.

Now historians and scientists from the United States, Portugal and Brazil plan to restore part of the original peasant settlement and battleground and build a center to study the town's past and its place in the social history of the drought-plagued and impoverished Brazilian northeast.

"Canudos really scared Brazil," said Robert Levine, head of the history department at the University of Miami in Florida and a collaborator on the Canudos restoration project, said in a telephone interview. "It awakened Brazilians to their own internal reality of backwardness and rural poverty and raised questions whether the country would advance. The modernist movement after 1910 had roots there."

The restoration project calls for a 6,263-acre Canudos Park and possibly a "living museum."

Plans also call for a community action program to stimulate local arts and crafts and to improve health and education in one of Latin America's poorest regions.

"This is important for us," said acting Mayor Joao Ribeiro Gama. "We don't have a lot except for our history. But almost anywhere you dig with a piece of stick you find bones."

In the 1890s, Canudos was a farming colony that once supported 25,000 people. Today, it seems barely inhabitable.

It is 1,200 miles northeast of Rio de Janeiro on the edge of a region so desolate that it was for years a hideout for outlaws and, more recently, a proposed dump site for Brazil's nuclear waste.

The main street is a dirt road that begins and ends ends where the town begins and ends, giving way to scrub-covered red plains stretching to the horizon. The nearest paved road is in Uaua, 32 miles away.

Most of the town's 12,000 residents now raise goats or work on government projects during the chronic droughts of the Northeast.

But on a rise overlooking the town is a reminder of its past: the bullet-riddled wooden cross erected by preacher Antonio Conselheiro at the original settlement.

Antonio Conselheiro, which means Anthony the Counselor in Brazil's Portuguese language, was a lawyer who roamed the wild northeastern interior, preaching frugality and chastity, before settling here in 1893. With a long gray beard and dark robes, he looked and sounded like a Biblical prophet.

"Folks used to call him 'the good Jesus,'" recalled Joao Cardoso da Silva, who says his age is something "over 100" and is by consensus the area's oldest living resident. "I was just a boy of 10 at the time, but an uncle and a grandfather of mine left home to follow him."

Antonio Conselheiro set up a commune on an abandoned farm and established strict rules: no private property, no paper money, no outside work.

Later he became more militant and preached tax revolt and civil disobedience.

"Some say he really was a land reformer or an early communist," archaeologist Yara de Ataide of Bahia State University, the coordinator of the Canudos project, said in an interview in Salvador, Bahia's capital.

Peasants came from miles around to follow the new messiah, and Canudos grew from a tiny hamlet to Bahia's second largest community after Salvador on the coast. But the Catholic Church and the government worried about Antonio's growing influence, and the army was sent to break up his commune.

However, the ill-equipped bands of peasants, fighting on terrain they knew well, ambushed and routed three army expeditions and Canudos became a national embarassment for the government.

Finally, a fourth expedition of about 10,000 soldiers and police surrounded Canudos and decimated the settlement during a three-month siege. On Oct. 5, 1897, troops invaded the commune and slaughtered the final holdouts.

"My great-aunt was there and managed to escape. She used to tell us kids how the soldiers cut off heads and the blood ran ankle-deep in the streets," said Maria dos Santos, who runs the Brasil Hotel and boarding house in Canudos.

Despite its impact, little has been written about the rebellion. Few outside of Latin American scholars know about the Canudos War.

The best account was "Rebellion in the Backlands" by Euclydes da Cunha, who covered the uprising as a reporter for the Brazilian newspaper O Estado de Sao Paulo. In 1984, the Peruvian novelist Mario Vargas Llosa published "The War of The End of the World" based on the rebellion.

But the government was less than eager to preserve the memory of Canudos. One reason was that the issues it raised — land reform, rural guerrilla warfare, religious militants.

"Canudos became a model for social revolution and resistance to central authority," said Ms. Ataide of Bahia State University.

After the fighting, the settlement was burned and razed. Later a dam was built on the Vaza Barris River below Canudos and most of the commune was flooded by the reservoir it created.

But the town's past won't go away.

Luiz Carlos Lopes de Magalhaes, a mapmaker with the historic project, walked through a seemingly trackless plain in the area known as the Valley of Death. He knelt by a ring of stones and pointed to a partly exposed skull, which had a jagged hole in the forehead.

"This probably was a soldier," he said. "They came here after the ambush to be treated or die. There are rusty canteens and ammunition clips all around here."

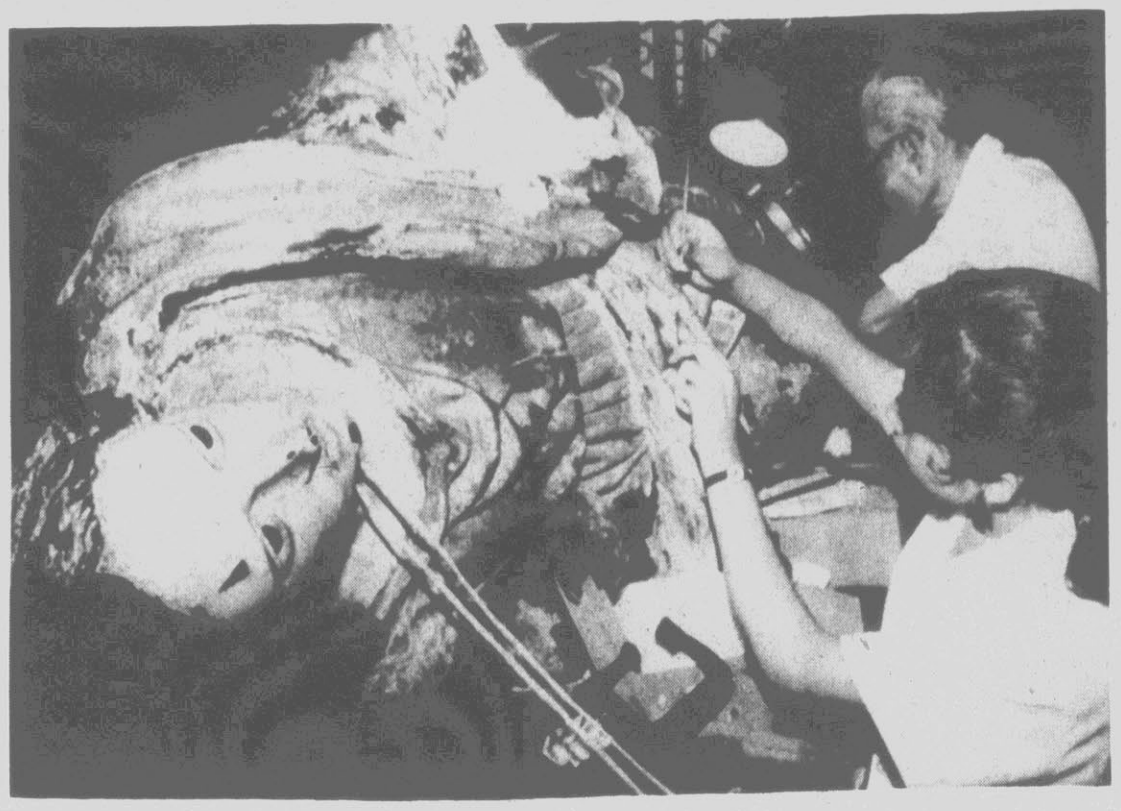

Magalhaes thinks Antonio Conselheiro got a raw deal from history.

"They make him sound like a fanatic. But a lot of people here think he was just trying to help the poor," he said.

Levine of Miami University maintains that portraying Antonio Conselheiro as a communist or a land reformer misses the mark.

"He was more like an Ayatollah Khomeini or a Jim Jones, of the People's Temple in Guyana — an austere, devout, unworldly chaplain who tried to follow the precepts of the Catholic Church by withdrawing from the world," he said.

"Canudos is important to understanding the background of social dissent. We need to study it in relation to other events in the world, like the rise of fundamentalism in the Mid-East."

To Display Artifacts

WILMINGTON — On July 10, from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. Rudy Weiman and Ray Jackson of The Society of Interpretive Historians will display artifact reproductions from the American Revolutionary War.

They will bring a variety of American Revolutionary War memorabilia from their collection. Among the items presented will be replicas of a cannon, a blunderbuss, pistols, Brown Bess muskets, and a complete American naval uniform.

Weiman, a native of Germany, is an engineer and president of The Society of Interpretive Historians. Jackson, vice-president of the Society, is a native of Wilmington and is the former assistant site manager of Brunswick Town State Historic Site.

They have been collecting these reproductions for 15 years. The two will be available for questions throughout the afternoon. As always, "collectors talk" is encouraged.

The program is free at New Hanover County Museum of the Lower Cape Fear, 814 Market Street, Wilmington.

A Landmark Cafe In Madrid

By RICHARD LORANT
Associated Press Writer

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Rumors the Gran Cafe de Gijon in Madrid might be sold to a British bank rattled coffee cups far beyond the century-old literary landmark once frequented by the likes of Ernest Hemingway and Truman Capote.

Legend has it that the actress Ava Gardner once punched a photographer there.

When the rumors spread recently of its possible sale, major publications rushed into print with what they called the inside story. Mayor Juan Barranco pledged to preserve the cafe. Part-owner Jose Lopez de Brito spent a week denying it was for sale.

"We are not selling. It is impossible," Lopez told reporters the day reports came out that an British multinational bank, not identified, had made a $5-million bid for the cafe that first opened its doors in 1888.

Although it was before noon, the Gijon was already thick with cigar and cigarette smoke, and most of its marble-top tables were filled.

The Gijon stands just off Madrid's traffic-clogged main thoroughfare, the Paseo de la Castellana, as a reminder of quieter days when cafes stretched across the city and coffee time was a ritual.

Although its glory days are past and Madrid is much busier in an economic boom, the Gijon still attracts dozens of "tertulias," groups of intellectuals, artists or retirees who meet once or twice a week for relaxed conversation with a cigar over coffee and brandy.

Lopez de Brito said accepting the unidentified British bank's offer would have broken a pledge made to his grandmother, Encarnation Fernandez, who bought the cafe from its original owners in 1913.

"Before my grandmother died, she made my father and my aunt promise not to sell. As long as my aunt is alive we wouldn't even consider it," said Lopez de Brito, who owns the cafe with his four cousins.

"After that, who knows?" he said. "The younger generation all have professional careers. They want their free time. The cafe doesn't allow that."

Grandmother Encarnacion and her daughter, Lopez's Aunt Maria, presided over the Gijon in the years after the 1936-39 Spanish Civil War, when struggling actors and writers were drawn to cafes because of their central heating and cheap admission — the price of a tiny cup of coffee.

By the time grateful artists showered Encarnacion with drawings and verse on her 100th birthday in 1968, most of them were eating better, and the Gijon was a grand old survivor, its fame cemented by the gradual demise of most competitors.

"The majority of the cafes were converted into bank branches, and the literary people took refuge here because there weren't many places left," said Maria's son, Jose Garcia Lopez, who began working at the Gijon in 1950.

"The coffee hour was a bit sacred," he said. "People would talk about their projects, about bullfights. They generally avoided politics" during Franco's 36-year rule.

Pilar G. Nombrela, who has lived above the cafe for 20 years, said the Gijon in the late 1960s "was a classic cafe."

"People would spend three hours over a cup of coffee and talk about art and literature. There were tables and tables of famous people. It was incredible."

Today, the "tertulias" are fewer. At nights, the cafe is filled with young Spaniards who prefer gin-tonics to brandy. An armed guard stands inside the door to keep out heroin addicts who have occasionally robbed patrons at knife point.

Gentifrication has set in the neighborhood around the cafe and real estate values have shot up like the skyscrapers along the Castellana as the Spanish economy marks an annual 5.2 percent growth rate.

"The cafe has changed a lot, just like the country has changed," the 63-year-old Garcia Lopez said. "In those days, there were 20 cars circulating in Madrid. Horse-drawn carriages were used a lot. People worked less and had more time."

"Madrid was a city of cafes," he said.

Luis Martin, an octogenarian who has met at the Gijon to chat with fellow Standard Electric retirees for the last two decades, does not miss those times.

Former Resident Remembers China With Fondness, Rancor

By JOHN PLATERO
Associated Press Writer

HALLANDALE, Fla. (AP) — Ernest G. Sloan remembers China with love and his Japanese torturers with rancor but, at 68, he's had his vengeance and now lives only for the future.

"I'm too young to live in the past," explained the energetic senior citizen who, for nine years, has served here as honorary consul for Botswana, a small land-locked nation in South Africa.

A widower, Sloan lives alone with few visible mementos of 17 years spent in China, including the years of World War II when he spied on Nazis in Shanghai, smuggled arms and explosives to the Chinese underground and provided intelligence for the Office of Strategic Services, forerunner of the CIA.

Permanent reminders of his suffering under the Japanese are a slight limp and scars on his left leg — the one Japanese interrogators attached a metal plate to to induce electric shocks during questioning — and false teeth for those lost during his confinement.

However, Sloan hopes to return to Shanghai one day. "I'd like to visit my father's grave and see if I can find any of the old friends."

Born in Trieste to European parents, his youth was spent in Germany until 1934 when Singer Sewing Co. of Holland transferred his father to Shanghai.

"We lived in the international settlement of Shanghai which was governed by 54 nations represented there," he explained.

Fluent in English and German, he learned to speak Japanese, Russian and two Chinese dialects.

As a teen-ager, he became the protege of Peter Wong, son of a wealthy Chinese department store owner who headed an intelligence network for OSS.

In 1940, it was arranged for Sloan to work for the North German Leather Works, whose general manager was Dr. Albert Voss, a Nazi and former consul general to Japan.

As an employee, Sloan was able to pass on to Wong information gathered from visiting German officials.

On one occasion when Voss was summoned urgently to the German Embassy, Sloan made a horrifying discovery from documents left in an unlocked safe.

"German engineers had built large ovens in Pootung. They were to be used to kill about 25,000 Jews who had escaped Hitler's Germany and fled to China," he recalled.

It was Monday in Shanghai on Dec. 7, 1941, when the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor. The Japanese took over most of the Chinese city except for the French section.

With Wong's help, Sloan obtained a Portuguese passport which afforded him some immunity and allowed him to travel throughout China.

Because of suspicion concerning Sloan's activities, he left the German company and joined Gen. Claire Chennault's Flying Tigers in Kunming as a civilian. Sloan's duties, however, were to smuggle explosives and arms to the Chinese underground.

"I transported arms and ammo every which way — by land and sea. The underground used it to blow up Japanese posts, radio stations — anything."

It gives him pleasure to recall that explosives he provided the underground were used to destroy the German extermination ovens.

"They almost blew up the whole city," he remembered with a smile.

As cover for his clandestine operations, he masqueraded as an assistant to his father.

In 1943, Sloan lived in the French section of Shanghai where he was immune from Japanese authorities although he knew they were increasingly suspicious.

"It was in July when — I'll never forget his name — Col. Bunzo Yoshida — knocked at my apartment and asked me to go to his office the following morning to answer some questions."

The next day, he crossed Soochow Creek and went to the Hongkew section of Shanghai where the intelligence section of the Imperial Japanese Army was headquartered.

For the next 110 days, Sloan was subjected to beatings and torture under the direction of Yoshida.

"Sometimes they put me before a firing squad and went through all the commands — ready, aim, fire — and I would hear the click of the empty guns."

Others weren't so fortunate.

"One day Yoshida came into our cell and beat two British policemen to death with rifle butts," he continued.

Sloan never confessed his undercover activities.

"They didn't know I spoke Japanese so I knew they didn't have any proof. If I had told them, they would have killed me," he explained.

Finally, he was released and thrown into the street. Chinese residents, he recalled, carried him to a barber shop and fed him soup.

"When I got out I weighed 67 pounds. I was 138 when they arrested me."

Doctors wanted to amputate his leg because much of the flesh was eaten away by electric shocks administered through a hand generator. It took him 17 months to recuperate.

Near the end of 1944, Sloan's father was arrested and taken to Bridgehouse, the most infamous Japanese prison in China.

On Jan. 15, 1945, he found his father's decaying body in a warehouse where Japanese tossed dead prisoners.

"I could only recognize him by the clothing. We used a cart to transport his body to a funeral home."

After the war, Sloan and his mother moved to San Francisco.

In 1948, the British asked him to testify against Yoshida at war crimes trials held in Hong Kong.

Sloan agreed under one condition.

Because of his testimony, Yoshida was convicted of murdering the two British policemen and was hanged three days later.

Sloan remembers watching in the courtyard as soldiers escorted the Japanese officer to the gallows. The British had met Sloan's condition.

Recalling his thoughts as Yoshida's body fell through the trap door, Sloan smiled and said, "Satisfaction."

In the United States, Sloan worked in restaurants and clubs in New York, Nevada and Florida, where he's lived since 1962. He's written food and entertainment columns for local newspapers for years and spends his spare time on autobiographical manuscripts.

At his retirement, he was selected to be Botswana's representative in Florida and has turned that into a full-time job.

Admittedly, his thoughts are often back in Shanghai.

"The Chinese are beautiful people. I miss them."

CHINA REMEMBERED — Ernest G. Sloan remembers China with love and his Japanese torturers with rancor but, at 68, he'd had his vengeance and now lives only for the future. Stamp News

The new Ouimet stamp brings to mind other U.S. issues honoring sports and its star performers.

Professional baseball was hailed on its centennial in 1969 with a stamp featuring a batter swinging at a ball. That same year, intercollegiate football was honored on its 100th anniversary with a stamp showing a player and his coach.

Legend holds that baseball was invented in Cooperstown, N.Y., by Abner Doubleday. Baseball received earlier recognition in 1939 with a 3-cent stamp commemorating the centennial of both amateur and professional baseball.

Basketball also received its stamp garlands with an adhesive marking the 100th birthday of its inventor, James A. Naismith, in 1961.

Many U.S. stamp sets have been issued to commemorate our participation in the Olympic Games and Pan American Games. Last January, a 22-cent stamp was released for the Winter Olympics. A 25-cent stamp for the Summer Olympics will be off the presses in August.

Do you know about U.S. souvenir cards?

These cards have been issued as souvenirs of the philatelic gatherings at which they were distributed by the U.S. Postal Service (and its predecessor, the U.S. Fost Office Department). They are not valid for postage.

Most of the cards bear reproductions of U.S. stamps with the design enlarged or altered. They are not perforated. A forerunner of the souvenir card is the 1938 Philatelic Truck Souvenir Sheet distributed in various cities visited by the philatelic truck. The design depicts the White House printed in blue on white paper.

The first official souvenir sheet by the United States was released in 1954. It was a tribute to the Postage Stamp Design Exhibition at the National Philatelic Museum in Philadelphia on March 13, 1954.

Taxes are the main source of government revenues in all countries of Latin America. In 1985 they accounted for more than 90 percent of such revenues in Argentina, Barbados, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Jamaica, Mexico and Uruguay, and between 80 and 90 percent in 12 other countries, according to the Inter-American Development Bank's 1987 report on Economic and Social Progress in Latin America.

Grifton Writer Wins Seven Awards

Grifton freelance writer Maxine Carey Harker once more this year returned home from a writer's conference with a number of literary awards.

The conference she and other area writers attended was the Dixie Council of Authors and Journalists, an annual week-long conference held each summer at St. Simons Island, Ga. The 1988 conference ended June 24, the date awards were announced.

Mrs. Harker was winner in three categories of competitions. The awards she received are:

• Books: (Two chapters and synopsis) — First place, Frances Patton Statham Fiction Award for "Eidolon" — First place, James Bryant Non-Fiction Award for "Honey, There Ain't Nothin' Interestin' About Me." — Second place, Hellen Elliott Non-Fiction Humor Award for "Syntax: How to Avoid and Audit." — third place, Bennie Rhodes Juvenile Award for "Granny O's Ghost Town."

MAXINE CAREY HARKER

• Articles: Third place, Josephine Mellichamp Journalism Award for "OOMM Means Out of My Mind." — Third place, Marel Brown Inspirational Article Award for "Medicine for Melancholia."

• Poetry: Second place, John Ransom Lewis Award (sonnet category) for "Old Man. What Need Have We for Dulcimers?"

Mrs. Harker is a member of the Greenville Writer's Club, the Creative Writing Class at Pitt Community College, the North Carolina Writer's Network, the North Carolina Poetry Society, the North Carolina Haiku Society and the Dixie Council of Authors and Journalists, Atlanta.

Another Pitt County writer, Harry Jarvis of Ayden, won second place in the Inspirational Article Award for "The Lonesome Soldier," and a third place award in poetry for a sonnet, "Pity Me."

Others from the area attending the conference were Emma Lee Jarvis of Ayden and Glenda Wilkins, formerly of Grifton, now living in Luxembourg.

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

BY MEREDITH FOLTZ

Sheppard Memorial Library has new books for good reading throughout the year, but if you have been waiting for summer leisure to catch up on your reading, check out these current events titles on the new-books shelves at the Main Library.

• "Convictions: My Journey From the Convent to the Courtroom" by Arlene Violet. The first nun to earn a law degree in Rhode Island, Arlene Violet also became the first woman to be elected a state attorney general. In deciding to seek that office, Violet was forced to leave her order, the Sisters of Mercy, after 23 years. During her two years as attorney general of Rhode Island, "Attila the Nun" continued her lifelong advocacy of the powerless and squared off with organized crime, street crime, and corrupt government officials.

• "The Spy Who Got Away" by David Wise. Trained to spy in Moscow for the United States, Edward Lee Howard sold to the KGB the secrets of the CIA's Moscow operations after the CIA had fired him. He eluded the FBI and turned up a year later in the Soviet Union. David Wise details the CIA handling and coverup of Howard's case and, with information obtained in secret interviews with Howard himself, describes the defector's escape and his life in Russia.

• "Outrageous Conduct: Art, Ego, and the Twilight Zone Case" by Steven Farber and Marc Green. On July 23, 1982, actor Vic Morrow and two child actors were killed by a crashing helicopter during the filming of "Twilight Zone: The Movie." The accident resulted in allegations of lax safety procedures and in charges of involuntary manslaughter against director John Landis and others. A raucous, high-profile trial forced motion picture professionals to choose sides on the legal and ethical issues raised.

New Building For Brevard

BREVARD — The Carolina Pavilion, a $715,000 dining hall and conference building that was four years in planning and construction, has been completed at the Brevard Music Center.

Brevard Music Center is the South's major summer music festival. Located in the foothills of the Blue Ridge mountains, the center has been designated a statewide arts resource by the state of North Carolina.

The new dining/conference facility, which opened June 12, replaced a 60-year-old dining hall which had been in service since the late 1920's.

The new building will serve primarily as the center's dining hall, but will also be an activities center, housing such student services as a post office, a camp store, and public restrooms.

Designed by Brevard architect Alfred F. Platt Jr., Carolina Pavilion has over 14,000 square feet. The dining room seats 230, while the meeting room seats 150.

Fundraising for the building is almost complete. The N.C. Legislature appropriated $250,000 for the project, and the Kresge Foundation, headquartered in Michigan, gave $125,000 in grants. Over $300,000 was raised in gifts from trustees, patrons and friends.

Watercolor Workshop

WASHINGTON, N.C. — Nature artist Sallie Middleton will conduct a watercolor workshop July 22 at the Beaufort County Arts Council and Civic Center. The workshop is in conjunction with the Art Council's Fine Art Show.

Ms. Middleton will present a short demonstration before participants begin painting in a medium of their choice. The workshop emphasis will be on encouraging good techniques.

The class is limited to 25 people and costs $25. Workshop hours are 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Some experience in painting is recommended for participants.

For more information or to register, call 946-2504 or visit the Arts Council at 108 Gladden Street in downtown Washington.

A Reflector Review

Old Superstitions Still Linger On

KISS A MULE, CURE A COLD: Omens, Signs and Sayings. By Evelyn Jones Childers. Illustrations by Tim Lee. Atlanta, Ga. Peachtree Publishers, LTD. Paper, 122 pages, $5.95.

Mrs. Childers has compiled a collection of superstitions, notions, omens and ideas that have been handed down for generations, incorporating the ones she long remembered, plus adding new ones she has gathered in research through the years.

Dealing with subjects based on real or fanciful resemblances between events, persons and objects and how they relate to things that are similar, the author has coverd in short, pithy saying details on folkore in seven chapers. These include Marriage, Babies and Home Remedies; Good Luck, Bad Luck, and Dreams and Omens.

Confirmation that the tendency to cling to superstition remains strong in the current generation is obvious. Some of the superstitions still prevail today, despite the fact that as a whole they are intended for amusement and as oddities.

In Home Remedies an old English peasant remedy of wearing an ill-smelling plant substance called asafetida to ward off illness is mentioned. From the viewpoint of vanity, under the same heading, it is said that "If you wash your face in the first frost of fall you will have a lovely complexion;" and "to get rid of bags under your eyes place tea bags over your eyes . . . or use a sliced cucumber."

Some of the more pleasant forms of home remedies come in the form of whiskey drinking. "To get rid of a headache, drink a cup of tea with a shot of whiskey and go to bed."

Ancient belief in astrology is found in advice outlined in the chapter on Gardening and Household Chores, which instructs gardeners to "plant corn on a decreasing moon and you will get big stalks and little ears." Also, "Cutting when the moon is new in August kills Johnson grass, roots and all."

The influence of the zodiac on the human body is detailed from the observation that "If you plant green beans when the signs are in the bowels, the beans will bloom themselves to death."

And in reference to other crops — "Any crop produces well when the signs are in the feet . . . or at least below the knees."

The use of charms and objects credited with powers to protect one from evil is explained in the Good Luck, Bad Luck chapter. "Nail a used horse shoe over the entrance to your home for good luck," and, "Wearing a coral necklace is support to protect the wearer from storms and lightning."

If you read "Kiss a Mule, Cure a Cold" with entertainment and/or curiosity in mind, disregarding the absurdity, aware of the origins of some beliefs found in ancient cultures, especially Babylon, chances are you will enjoy it.

ECU Summer Band Camp Under Way

REHEARSAL TIME — A line-up of young musicians attending the annual East Carolina University Summer Band Camp are shown concentrating on a score during rehearsal in preparation for a concert.

The East Carolina University Summer Band Camp is currently under way at East Carolina University. The camp got started on June 26 and will conclude July 8.

Now in its 34th season, the camp offers band students from North Carolina and other southeastern states an opportunity to get together and perform with other students of exceptional ability.

This year, the camp has an enrollment of about 300 students.

The camp, directed by Harold A. Jones, chairman of the Instrumental Department of the School of Music, has classes beginning at 8:30 a.m. and continuing until 3:30 p.m. In addition, pupils wishing to do so can arrange for private instruction in their own field of music.

Attendance at these annual camps also provide the young musicians a chance to sample living on campus, as they are housed in dormitories, eat at the college cafeteria and use the facilities at Mendenhall Student Center.

Of particular interest to the public will be the major performance of the band camp period being held today.

The concert will begin at 6:30 p.m. and will be presented in the open area in front of the A.J. Fletcher Music Center just off east Tenth Street.

"The program will feature a variety of show tunes, marches, and patriotic music in commemorating of the fourth of July independence celebration," Jones said. "We welcome any interested listener and advise them to bring lawn chairs or blankets for seating."

The traditional division of students into four bands is again carried out this year. Band leaders and the band they head are:

- Mike Kirby of Chesapeake, Va., the Purple Band of the youngest members in the camp.
- Dottie Knight, Greenville, the Green Band. This band is comprised of the next oldest group of players.
- Ray Haney of Elizabethtown is in charge of the Red Band, the third highest level in the age group of student musicians; and
- Jones, who will conduct the Blue Band of the oldest group of students attending the band camp.

Jones said that "the School of Music welcomes visitors to the camp during classes and rehearsal hours and to evening performance activities."

Anyone who wants to visit the camp at the A.J. Fletcher Center on campus can come by the school of music office or call 757-6331 for details.

Few creatures are more odd than the dolphin, according to Discover magazine. Dolphins are odontocetes or "toothed whales," a group that includes sperm whales, killer whales, pilot whales and porpoises. Because of their looks, dolphins are often mistaken for fish.

Twenty-Six Choreographers In ADF's Annual Summer Workshops

DURHAM — Nkwabi Ng'Hangasamala isn't using his Kiswhaili or his Kisukuma or his Swedish this summer. His English is perfect, but he hasn't had to depend on it. Ng'Hangasamala has come to Durham to study modern dance choreography. Dance is a universal language — one that Ng'Hangasamala speaks very well, too.

Ng'Hangasamala is from Tanzania. He's one of 26 foreign choreographers who have made a pilgrimage to the American Dance Festival.

These choreographers are all artists and leaders of the modern dance movement in their home countries. They are taking classes in the ADF School to learn more about American styles of modern dance. Some are in turn offering master classes in their own styles of dance. They are discussing their art with their peers.

Nearly every night they are in the theater, watching performances.

There will be informal showings of the work of many of these choreographers on July 10. There may be additional showings on Wednesday, July 13th.

Most of the choreographers have come to ADF for the first time as participants in the International Choreographers Workshop. The ICW, which was begun in 1984, is supported by the United States Information Agency and The Rockefeller Foundation.

Three of the choreographers — Pavel Smok, of Czechoslovakia; Sardono Kusumo, of Indonesia; and Il Kyu Park, of Korea, are past participants in the ICW who have been invited to return this year to create works using dancers in the ADF School. These three will have their premieres, as part of the formal ADF performance season, on July 18th and 19th.

One of the choreographers, Zhang Ying, is here from the Guangdong Dance Academy, in Guangzhou, China. With support from the USIA and The Rockefeller Foundation and additional assistance from the Asian Cultural Council, the ADF has introduced modern dance in China through its Institutional Linkages Program. Ying has spent the past year in the United States, under the ADF's sponsorship, immersing herself in modern dance. She returns to China at the end of the ADF season in July.

In addition to the four choreographers mentioned above, other choreographers attending the 1988 ICW events, and the countries they represent, are:

Argentina, Ms. Susana A. Tambutti; Brazil, Ms. Eliana Carneiro; Burundi, Ms. Sylvie Hatugimana; Chile, Ms. Stella Veronica Ferrero.

China, Xing Jin; Finland, Ms. Marja Anitta Korhola; Guatemala, Ms. Ana Lizette Lunda; Haiti, Ms. Rachel Jean-Louis; India, Ms. Dakasha Sheth; Ivory Coast, Mrs. Rose Marie Guiraud.

Malaysia, Ibrahim Ramli; Mexico, Jorge Dominguez; New Zealand, Ms. Mary Jane O'Reilly; Nicaragua, Ms. Maria Antonieta Sieroe; Philippines, Ms. Edna Reyes Froilanl.

South Africa, Carly Dibakoane; Spain, Ms. Maria Antonia Oliver, Thailand, Vadanavisit Svastivatana; Turkey, Ms. Dilek Evgin; Venezuela, Ms. Adriana Josefina Urdaneta, and Zimbabwe, Ms. Leah Lorraine Nelson.

Fifty-four years old and in its 11th season in North Carolina, the American Dance Festival is an international mecca for modern dance. By July 23rd, when the season ends, nine dances — eight of them commissioned by ADF — will have had their world premieres.

Yves Musard To Dance At ADF

DURHAM — Because of a last minute postponement, Yves Musard will appear at the American Dance Festival in Durham on Tuesday and Wednesday. He replaces Eiko and Koma, who will perform next year instead.

Musard has been called "a gnomically mysterious performer" who astonishes audiences "with his brainy, high-velocity dancing."

In 1986 the festival invited him to create a work as part of its yearly Young Choreographers & Composers Project; "Parts of a Battle, Human Scale," set to music by Rhys Chatam, premiered that season.

Now ADF audiences will have a chance to see "Antipodes," Musard's program this season. It is a solo, and will be danced by Musard.

For tickets, call 684-6402.

Transylvania Festival Of The Arts

BREVARD — The Translyvania Festival of the Arts is being held in Brevard beginning today and continuing through Saturday. Activities include a program of sacred music today at a local church and ends Saturday with a folk music concert. Other events scheduled during the week include a wide range of recreational and entertainment events, a big book sale, a performance of "The Belle of Amherst," arts and crafts, historical heritage displays and the performance of a melodrama. For more details call 704-883-3700.

Diverse Roles For Actors In 'The Lost Colony' Drama

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

This summer, some members of the cast of Paul Green outdoor drama, "The Lost Colony," now playing on Roanoke Island, are also active in theatrical ventures outside their principal work as actors in the drama.

Two of these, juggler Bear Stuart, who fills a number of minor roles in the drama; and Dan Brunson, this year's Master of the Queen's Ceremony, are typical of "The Lost Colony" actors who are doubling their theatrical efforts — and experiences.

• Stuart, whose specialty is juggling, said "I do a juggling act as a roving gypsy in the Plymouth dockside scene in 'The Lost Colony', as well as perform a number of other roles, including that of a British Redcoat soldier.

"Since 'The Lost Colony' performance time is 8:30 each night, I have time to be part of The Sunset Festival that takes place on the waterfront in Manteo."

The festival, which is presented from 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. daily, is free and is billed as a bonus entertainment, "to those on their way to take in 'The Lost Colony.'" according to Stuart,

"Sunset is a variety type of presentation. Each day I perform as juggler extraordinaire, and each day we have either singers or dancers from 'The Lost Colony' cast on hand to perform."

In addition, special acts are featured during the summer through August 6. "On July 4th and 5th, we have two attractions, the three Wilder Brothers who are guitarists. At 9 on Monday night, there will be a waterfront display of fireworks. That should be a spectacular sight."

A native of Lexington, Va., Stuart attended Washington and Lee University and received a degree in history from James Madison University.

But all along after graduation, he notes "I maintained my love for juggling. A friend taught me the basics eight years ago, and for a long time I looked upon juggling as a vocation. Then, as I became more interested and more proficient, I began getting seasonal engagements in variety acts.

"The season for festivals, arts and crafts shows and other outdoor forms of entertainment generally runs from April up to about Christmas time. Most of my juggling is at festivals, school assemblies, and spring and fall craft fairs."

His juggling act has taken him to Lynchburg and Charlottesville in Virginia and along the east coast to upstate New York.

In the past couple of years, as his interest in the art of juggling and the number of opportunities to perform increased, Stuart said "I began to attend juggling conventions in places like Cleveland and San Jose, Calif. This put me in touch with a wider choice of performing possibilities."

One of the contact points was the Southeastern Theater Convention in Richmond, Va. "I went there, was a little late, but put in my bids anyway for anything available. Luckily, 'The Lost Colony' accepted me to play the juggler role as a gypsy for the 1987 season, perhaps because of my dark hair and beard. And I was invited to return this year."

When "The Lost Colony" season ends, Stuart turns again to roving assignments, primarily with festivals and fairs. "There's a resurgence of interest in outdoor street entertainments, so I'm getting quite a few engagements with these," Stuart said.

Asked about future plans, Stuart said, "I'll continue to focus on juggling and see how far I can go with that. So far, I'm managing to keep body and soul together.

• Brunson, from Charlotte, said "I've known for a long time that I wanted to be in theater, and I dreamed too of going to the Outer Banks again.

"Before getting accepted for the 1987 season of 'The Lost Colony,' I had only visited the Outer Banks once, when I was a child of five or six."

For four years, Brunson was a student at the North Carolina School of the Arts in Winston-Salem. "I spent two years training in voice, and two in drama," he said, "and was accepted last year for 'The Lost Colony,' where I performed as Ralph Lane and sang with the choir. I'm also doubling with the choir again this season. I'm a tenor.

"This year, I received the role of Master of the Queen's Ceremony. It's one in which I appear in fashionable dress of the period of the first Queen Elizabeth. I'm garbed in a tall plumed hat, white silk tights, and carry a long staff. The queen reportedly liked for the men around her to wear white, gold and silver."

Brunson is also an understudy for the role of Sir Walter Raleigh.

Like Stuart, Brunson got his start with "The Lost Colony" by attending auditions in Richmond.

Performing just after sunset on the waterfront stage at Manteo, Brunson said, "is always an exciting thing. The site is beautiful, and I love the play. One thing Bear and I will remember is that we both got to sign the 50th anniverwary flag last season, a very special occasion."

Aside from his acting and singing roles with "The Lost Colony," Brunson's additional work is with the colony's workshop, which produces two plays and the annual children's play. "These are rewarding activities, a change from the nightly roles," he said.

While attending the North Carolina School of the Arts, Brunson said "I became close friends with a Pitt County student, Mitchell Riggs. He's a truly gifted performance and a fine guy. I feel certain he has a great future in theater."

At the conclusion of "The Lost Colony" season, Brunson will return to Charlotte. "I'll be auditioning for regional theater, making TV commercials in Ckarlotte. I hope eventually to do television and movie work.

"I can think of no better training ground that being in 'The Lost Colonly.' And besides, it's great fun. Relations among the cast are super, and I have time now and again to indulge in wind surfing and sailing, both of which I love very much."

One Dream Came True For Actress Hazel Stapleton

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

When she was a child, Greenville's veteran actress Hazel Stapleton cherished two persistent dreams. One was to somehow be transformed into an Indian; the other was to be an actress.

The dream of becoming an actress was fulfilled in Greenville after a long wait. The hope of magically being turned into a dark-haired, dark-skinned maiden of the forest, capable of speaking a strange exotic language never materialized for the blonde, blue-eyed girl. Yet it remains a cherished part of her life.

"I so wanted to become an American Indian," Mrs. Stapleton said. "As a child I read all I could get my hands on about Indians. I wept dramatically after reading about the Cherokee Trail of Tears.

"Looking back, I think that maybe this wish to be something different from what I really was had something to do with the fact that I was the only one of my extended family born in the U.S.

"My father, a Presbyterian, and other members of his family were all missionaries who served in foreign countries. As a result, my sister, Antoinette and all my close cousins were foreign born. Antoinette was born in Mexico. Close cousins were born in China, Japan, in African countries. And I was born in Glenville, W. Va. soon after my parents returned from Mexico."

She has, however, one "hidden consolation, a secret sign. I was born with a blue birthmark on my hip. As I grew older, the birthmark stretched and after a while it turned into three words, 'hecho en Mexico' (made in Mexico). That may be a story not everyone will believe," she said with an impish smile.

The dream of being an Indian continued past her earliest years. As a young girl, she sometimes visited her grandfather who lived in Duplin County near Rose Hill.

"There was a mound on his farm that was said to be an Indian burial ground. I found shells and some arrowheads there. Once, I decided to dig into it. So I got a shovel and soon it struck a skull. My grandfather explained that one did not dig into graveyards.

"At any rate, I came across a tiny bone on the ground which I was convinced was the fragment of a long-dead Indian. In all probability a squirrel's bone. That night was one of moonlight, so I performed a ceremony by my bedroom window, eating a tiny part of the bone.

"The magic transformation didn't take place. The next morning I was blonde as ever. I decided then that I could always love Indians, but never be one. I'm still deeply fascinated by the history, the lore and legends of American Indians."

Greenville veteran actress Hazel Stapleton

Early Acting

Mrs. Stapleton, born Hazel Black Farrior, cannot remember a time when she was not intriguted by acting, singing, any form of entertainment.

"I'm sure my love of the stage came from my father. In Mexico and in the U.S. he stressed the importance of plays and pageants in services for young people.

"My very first stage appearance was when I was three, in one of my father's Christmas pageants. Whatever my role was I've long forgotten, but I have a clear memory of a cardboard camel falling on me during the performance. An omen? Who knows."

Across from the minister's house in West Virginia, "the manse, as they were most often referred to then, there was a row of Sunday School rooms with sloping roofs. Often I climbed the ladder to the roofs, which was my stage. There I'd sing my heart out to an imaginary audience."

Those early childhood year in the 1930s are ones that Mrs. Stapleton recalls as "wonderful, a time of close family loving, although now I realize it was a time of strict economy for a small town minister because of the Great Depression.

"Our family dearly loved listening to the radio. Since batteries were costly and had to be preserved, we had a strict schedule of listening time. Programs we listened to include the National Home and Farm Program, the Don McNeil Breakfast Club, the old radio Showboat and the Jack Benny Program.

"Do you recall the radio jingle for Carter's Little Liver Pills. For years I'd not thought of it until one time I was called on to recite something on the spur of the moment. Of all things, the jingle in its entirely came to my mind. I do think my choice for the occasion startled my listeners."

Florida Years

While she was still very young, her father was reassigned to a church in Frostproof, Florida. "That's where I spent the greater part of my childhood and grew into a young woman," Mrs. Stapleton said.

After graduation from high school, she first attended a Presbyterian school in Memphis, Tenn., then was a student for two years at Florida State College for Women in Tallahassee.

"After that, I attended the Medical Collge and Richmond Professional Institute in Virgina where I receive a degree in physical therapy.

"This training was put to good use. For five years I worked in Minnesota with children who were victims of a polio epidemic. My Vikings I called them."

It was in 1952 that she came to eastern North Carolina "where was director of the guidance counseling services for public schools in Lenoir County. During that time I got my master's in guidance from East Carolina University." Then, after three years of teaching in Kinston, she was at UNC-Chapel Hill where she studied for a doctorate.

"In 1963, I came to East Carolina University to teach psychology and remained on the faculty there until my recent retirement. So in a big sense, Greenvile is now home."

One Dream Comes True

In all those years, the still-harbored dream of going on stage never completely faded. "But I was busy, teaching, raising my four children, and being a housewife." Her children are Norman, who lives in Greenville; Christine Riddle, living in Ayden; David, now in Columbia, S.C., and her youngest, Danny, a student at East Carolina University. Her husband, Kenneth Stapleton, died four years ago.

"It was in 1970 that my children shanghaied me and insisted that I try out for auditions for an ECU production of "The Night That Thoreau Spent in Jail." 'You've always wanted to be an actress,' my daughter insisted. I gave in and to my surprise, and delight, I was chosen to play the role of the mother.".

"I've been in action on the stage since then, and haven't regretted a moment of sandwiching theater into teaching, housework, motherhood, sometimes teaching Sunday School at First Presbyterian Church, and" she laughed, "doing what else had to be done.

"Next, Edgar (Edgar Loessin) cast me as Mama Mustain in Reynold Price's play based on his 'A Long and Happy Life.' Reynolds came to ECU to work with Edgar in building up a beautiful, touching play. I was happy to be part of that lovely experience."

Since then, Mrs. Stapleton has performed in many ECU productions as well as a one-time stint with the Ayden Theater Workshop and in giving support to The Greenville-based Playwrights Fund of North Carolina — as actress, narrator, director — in various reading performances.

Commenting on her roles at East Carolina University, Mrs. Stapleton said, "One of my absolute favorites was the fine play about a Vietnam veteran, 'The Fifth of July.' In that, I was Aunt Sally Friedman, a marvelous role. One play I was hesitant about being in was 'Shadow Box,' but I must say I'm happy I was talked into it."

Among other plays she remembers with special fondness are "The Children's Hour" and "Equus."

"The truth is, I've performed in dozens of plays, and have loved them all. I've never regretted having done any of them."

Her most recent performance was in the June 4 production of a PFNC-Hilton Inn joint production, "Special Pals." "That was a most rewarding experience. It's a delightful play, one I hope will get more attention."

Retirement Plans

Responding to plans for her retirement years, Mrs. Stapleton replied. "Retirement? What's that. I'm just not teaching anymore. Let's see. There are my lovely grandchildren I can give more time to. More time to catch plays in Washington or New York when time and money permits. Dishes still to be washed, and maybe even some dusting.

"My love of American Indians is still as strong as ever, and I'd love to get around to collecting artifacts, maybe studying some in anthropology, a subject my son Danny is majoring in at ECU.

"And of course, there's the theater. I'm sure there are many fine mother roles I've not played, maybe even some grandmother roles. Just think about Ann Sothern and Bette Davis, actresses I greatly admire. They haven't retired, and I'm younger, my dear, than either of them."

Exhibition At Weatherspoon Gallery

GREENSBORO — "Landscapes and Collages from the Permanent Collection," an exhibition of about 50 works, is now on view at the Weatherspoon Art Gallery, University of North Carolina, Greensboro.

The summer exhibit is featuring major works in the collection and includes works by John Marin, Thomas Moran, Thomas Hart Benton, Fairfield Porter, Robert Henri, Robert Smithson, Jim Dine, Romare Bearden and others.

The show will be on view through August 28. Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesdays through Fridays and 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. on weekends. The gallery is closed Mondays.

New Hampshire Stamps

The Postal Service will pay tribute to the bicentennial of New Hampshire, "the state that made us a nation," with a 25-cent commemorative.

On June 21, 1788, New Hampshire became the ninth and deciding state to ratify the Constitution of the United States.

Depicted on the new 25-cent commemorative is "The Old Man of the Mountain," the famous rock formation at Franconia Notch. Considered New Hampshire's best known natural wonder, the same "Old Man" appeared on a 3-cent New Hampshire stamp issued in 1955.

Today's Sunday In The Park

TODAY'S PERFORMERS — Bluegrass music makers, The New Dixie Grass, will perform in the weekly Sunday in the Park concert beginning at 7 p.m. today on the Town Common. Todays's program will also feature dances by the local Green Grass Cloggers. Admission is free.

Today's Sunday in the Park entertainment is a twofold presentation — a concert by the New Dixie Grass, performers of Bluegrass music, and a local group of dancers, the Greenville Green Grass Cloggers.

The concert, part of a continuing series presented by the City of Greenville under the auspices of the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department, will begin at 7 p.m. at the Eugene West amphitheater site on the Town Common along First Street.

Parking is available in parking lots in the downtown area. Those attending are encouraged to bring folding chairs and other items for comfortable listening at the outdoor site.

Dixie Blue Grass is comprised of four regular members — Bobby Cherry, banjo player; Julian Elliott, mandolin; Simon Perry, lead vocalist and rhythm guitar, and Joe Whitaker, bass player.

THe quartet often has one of two Dobro players to join it in performance. One is Kenny Haddock, who has performed and recorded with the Country Gentlemen. The other is Clyde Mattocks of the Super Grit Cowboy Band, who plays with the Dixie group when his schedule permits him to join it for a performance.

Starting out as an eastern North Carolina group who loosely patterned its style of playing on that of the Washington, D.C. group, Country Gentlemen, Dixie Blue Grass nevertheless soon developed its own particular style.

At first, the four started making music for personal enjoyment and to entertain friends. By the mid-70s, they chose the name New Dixie Grass and began making concert appearances with well-known Bluegrass groups. This was followed by an ever increasing number of concert dates and by recording albums of their own music.

Recent appearances include performances at a number of festivals — at Bass Mountain; at Amelia, Va.; at the Southern 500 in Darlington, S.C., and Summerfest in Durham. At a Smithfield, Va. festival, New Dixie won a first place award for vocal harmony.

Currently, the group is selecting and rehearsing material for its forthcoming fourth album.

During today's Sunday in the Park program, dance performances by the Greenville Green Grass Cloggers are also scheduled as part of today's entertainment. The dancers have made numerous appearances in Greenville and in eastern North Carolina.

Folk Musicians Honored

RALEIGH — Three North Carolina traditional musicians were honored at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C. on June 25 in conjunction with the 22nd annual Festival of American Folklife.

In evening ceremonies at the Smithsonian's American History Building, officials accepted the donation of the musical instruments of Elizabeth Cotten, a guitarist from Carrboro; Tommy Jarrell, a Mount Airy fiddler; and Fred Cockerham of Low Gap, a banjo player. Donated by the family members of the deceased musicians, these instruments will be displayed in the Smithsonian's Hall of Musical History.

A musical and film tribute to Cotten, Cockerham, and Jarrell preceded the presentation ceremonies. Organized by Smithsonian officals and N.C. Arts Council folklife section staff, it honored these three folk musicians whose fame spread from North Carolina to many other countries.

Cotten's finger-picking guitar playing and songs such as "Freight Train" greatly influenced folk musicians across America and around the world. Tommy Jarrell and Fred Cockerham were visited in their rural homes by hundreds of aspiring fiddlers and banjo players who sought inspiration from these two oldtime masters of their art.

Virginia adopted a state constitution in 1776 and Patrick Henry was made governor.

TO: Contractors Owning Mowing Equipment
ISSUED BY: Pitt County Drainage District Number Three and Seven
Swift Creek Watershed

Pitt County Drainage Districts Number Three and Seven are now seeking price quotations for maintenance mowing of certain channels and travelways within the Swift Creek Watershed.

Channels to be mowed:
Swift Creek Main from S.R. 1128 to Jct. SC-19, 8.86 miles.
Swift Creek Main from Jct. F.S. Main to Corps Sect., 1.61 miles.
F.S. Main from S.R. 1708 to Jct. S.C. Main, 9.49 miles.
All Clayroot Main down to S.R. 1725, 11.47 miles.
All Clayroot Laterals, 21.74 miles.
All Indian Wells Main and I.W. Laterals, 22.30 miles.
TOTAL MILES: 75.47

Equipment needed includes bush hog, sideboy or boom-type mower with a reach adequate to mow channel side slopes and travelways.

The work will include removal of debris from all side pipes installed under the travelway and removal by hand of the wooded growth on channel side slopes not reached by power equipment (being clumps of trees, along travelways, etc.)

Clumps of trees along the travelways are not to be damaged or scarred.

Mowing will be done on one side only.

Mowing is to commence during the month of September and is to be completed not later than November 30, 1988.

Price quotations are to be submitted for cost per mile (including pipe cleanout).

The successful contractor must furnish the District either (1) a comprehensive liability insurance policy issued by an insurance company authorized to do business in North Carolina or (2) evidence of qualificatin of "self insurer" which complies with the regulations of the North Carolina Insurance Department in the amount of no less than $100,000.00.

Those wishing to see the project will assemble at the Carolina East Mall parking lot in front of Sears, Highway 11, South of Greenville, at 9:00 a.m. on Tuesday, June 28, 1988.

June 16, 1988
TO: Contractors Owning Mowing Equipment
ISSUED BY: Pitt County Drainage District Number Nine
Chicod Creek Watershed

Pitt County Drainage District Number Nine is now seeking price quotations for maintenance mowing of certain channels and travelways within the Chicod Creek Watershed.

Channels to be mowed are Chicod Creek Main and all lateral channels.

Approximately 55.76 miles of mowing are to be done on travelway side and 10 miles on the offside.

Equipment needed includes bush hog, sideboy or boom-type mower with a reach adequate to mow channel side slopes and travelways and bottom.

The work will include removal of debris from all side pipes installed under the travelway and from all pipes in the channels; and removal by hand of the wooded growth on channel side slopes not reached by power equipment (being clumps of trees, along travelways, etc.)

Clumps of trees along the travelways are not to be damaged or scarred.

Mowing will be accomplished as follows: Mow travelway, channel banks and channel bottom from travelway side. Also, mow the offside channel banks and filter strip through open land. Through wooded areas mow approximately 20-25 feet on the travelway adjacent to the channel, including the bicolor lespedeza on the back side of the travelway.

Mowing is to commence during the month of November and is to be completed not later than January 30, 1989.

Price quotations are to be submitted for cost per mile (including pipe cleanout).

Our computer training has captured two very important names in business: IBM and Sandy Decker-Jones, office temporary.

IBM took a close look at Manpower's Skillware® training and liked what they saw. And, now, we're working with IBM to provide training for their customers at the time of installation.

Sandy Decker-Jones, one of our long-time office temps also took a close look at Manpower's Skillware® training. She decided to learn more about it. And she did — nine different brands of it. In fact, she just recently trained on IBM's System/36.

It's time you took a close look at our training for word processing operators. Call us. You'll find out all about the advantages of working as a Manpower office temporary in today's working world. We know you'll like what you see.

WHY I CHOSE ALDRIDGE & SOUTHERLAND

(New agents, limited desk space is still available!)

Two Reasons: Quality and Commitment
When I chose real estate as a profession, I wanted to work with the best. In 1987 Aldridge & Southerland was the top sales volume agency in the Greenville area. You don't get to the top overnight. It takes time to establish the kind of reputation for quality service that makes you number one in your field. You don't get there with alot of flash and empty promises. It takes a long term commitment to the people you serve. If working with the best is important to you, call me at Aldridge & Southerland.

Q. In World War II, even though he was a captain in the U.S. Army Air Corps, is it true Ronald Reagan was afraid to fly? How did he conquer his fear of flying? Was it through hypnosis? —Sy Burke, Prescott, Ariz.

A. Ronald Reagan was afraid to fly before, during and after he served in the motion picture unit of the Army Air Corps. In the 1950s, when he was under contract to General Electric as its spokesman, Reagan had a clause inserted in the agreement that limited his mode of company travel to trains. Reagan conquered his fear of flying by willpower, not hypnosis.

Q. Irving Berlin, whose 100th birthday we all celebrated, seems to have won every songwriting award in existence. Did he ever win an Oscar, however, for best song in a motion picture? I think not. Could I possibly be in error?—Natalie Robbins, Los Angeles, Calif.

A. I'm afraid you are. Irving Berlin won an Academy Award in 1942 for the song "White Christmas," from the motion picture "Holiday Inn," starring the late Bing Crosby and Fred Astaire.

Tennis beauties Sabatini, Bassett Seguso, Rinaldi (l-r)

Q. In your opinion, who are the three prettiest young women playing the professional tennis circuit?—Rosemary Stokes, Columbus, Ohio

A. Beauty, of course, lies in the eyes of the beholder. And with that caveat, this reporter selects Gabriela Sabatini, 18, of Argentina; Carling Bassett Seguso, 20, of Canada; and Kathy Rinaldi, 21, of Florida. Bassett Seguso is the married one.

Frank Gaeta / Smeal/Gaeta

Ex-wife Ava (l) and Barbara, the current Mrs. Sinatra

Q. I read in the newspaper: "Frank Sinatra is heading for an explosive showdown with his wife, Barbara, over a million dollars he has spent on former wife Ava Gardner." It goes on to say: "The money has helped Ava maintain a rich lifestyle in London and have medical treatments in Los Angeles. But Barbara is furious and wants Sinatra to stop the money supply." How much of the story, do you think, is true?—S.B., Brandon, Fla.

A. Very little. Frank Sinatra was married to Ava Gardner, who has been ill of late. But we doubt much if his fourth wife, Barbara, would reprimand him for treating his second wife generously.

Q. Who was it who said: "Patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel"?—David H. Ruja, Montecito, Calif.

A. James Boswell, in his biography "Life of Johnson," credits Samuel Johnson with making that remark on April 7, 1775.

Q. Has King Fahd of Saudi Arabia broken diplomatic relations with Iran? Does a state of war exist between those two countries?—G.G. Malouf, El Segundo, Calif.

A. On April 26, King Fahd ordered the severance of diplomatic relations with Iran. He also announced that Saudi Arabia was on a near war alert and prepared to use its newly acquired Chinese missiles against Iran. At this writing, however, a state of war between the two nations hasn't been declared.

Q. I am taking a course in film history and would like to know who was the most popular Hollywood actress in World War II and what has happened to her. I would appreciate any information on her.—Althea Henderson, Shreveport, La.

A. Most popular at the box office in the World War II days was Betty Grable, the blond, leggy, curvaceous queen of the pinups. Born in St. Louis in 1916, Grable arrived in Hollywood with her stage-door mother in 1930, lied about her age and worked as a song-and-dance girl in campus comedies and other light film fare. She was married to Jackie Coogan from 1937 to 1940, later got her big break when she replaced a sick Alice Faye in "Down Argentine Way."

Grable's famous '40s pinup

Under contract to 20th Century-Fox, Grable was cast in a series of mediocre musicals but nevertheless consistently was ranked among the nation's top 10 film stars from 1942 to 1951. In 1942, she fell in love with the trumpeter Harry James, who appeared with her in "Springtime in the Rockies." Pregnant, she bought him out of his unhappy marriage and wed him in 1943. Their marriage lasted 22 years and produced two daughters, Victoria and Jessica. In the postwar era, Grable's popularity began to diminish as Marilyn Monroe's began to rise. She starred in her last two films in 1955, "How To Be Very Very Popular" and "Three for the Show," then retired. She died of cancer in 1973. Harry James died of the same disease 10 years later. Betty Grable was one of the few film stars who remained uncorrupted by success at the height of her fame. She was friendly, folksy, chummy, convivial and never pulled rank.

OUR BROTHER, JOHN FITZGERALD KENNEDY

'WE WANT TO REMEMBER HIS LIFE, NOT RELIVE HIS DEATH'

A quarter of a century ago, President John F. Kennedy was assassinated on a street in Dallas. Throughout this year—and especially in the fall—newspapers, magazines and broadcast journalists almost certainly will recall the tragedy in voluminous detail. We asked the late President's brother, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, to share the feelings and the reflections of the Kennedy family today.

ONE OF MY FAVORITE early memories of President Kennedy is of Fourth of July weekends at Hyannis Port. Year after year, they were the highlights of our summers on Cape Cod. Dad, my oldest brother, Joe, and Jack never failed to make the holiday a patriotic feast for the rest of the family. Even today, I can see the gaily decorated porch, the long wooden table piled high with boiled potatoes and green peas and its centerpiece of fresh salmon, which Dad had brought in from New Hampshire or Maine, or even Newfoundland, if he'd heard that the best salmon were running there.

Afterward, we would go down to the harbor for the annual race. Jack would skipper the Victura, the small sailboat he loved all his life, and Dad would take the rest of us in his motor launch to cheer Jack on. One of my proudest moments growing up was the first year Jack condescended to take me on the Victura as his crew for the Fourth of July race. I was 9, and it was the summer of 1941, the last time our whole family was together for a Fourth of July. We lost, but I admired Jack all the more, because he should have blamed me and didn't. Winning was important, he said, but loving sailing was even more important.

After the races, when I was younger, Jack would spend time reading on the porch, which made my forced naps a little more tolerable, since Jack seemed to be doing something boring too. At dusk, we would all go to the West Beach Club in Hyannis for fireworks. Even after Jack became President, whenever we saw fireworks together, we would tell each other that nothing compared to those evenings at the beach club in Hyannis on the Fourth of July.

Dennis/Magnum

John F. Kennedy campaigning for the Presidency in New York, 1960.

On summer weekends as President, Jack would often take his daughter, Caroline, and his son, John Jr., for long walks on the beach. In the summer of 1963, he had recently visited Rome, where the Italian government had presented him with a beautiful 4-foot scale model sailboat for his children. He was delighted with the gift and brought it back with him for the Fourth of July weekend on Cape Cod. He took it to the beach with Caroline, and they set its sails and its course, pushed it off to sea and waved goodbye. A half-hour later, as we all boarded the Honey Fitz for an afternoon cruise, Jack took out his binoculars, and for the next hour he and Caroline were off on the magical adventure of rescuing the little sailboat lost at sea.

Even now, 25 years after we lost him, I still get a lump in my throat recalling those happy times together.

Family outings on the water were part of Jack's lifelong bond with the sea. "It is an interesting biological fact," he said as President, "that all of us have in our veins the exact same percentage of salt that exists in the ocean, and therefore we have salt in our blood, in our sweat, in our tears. We are tied to the ocean. And when we go back to the sea—whether to sail or to watch it—we are going back from whence we came."

He had the ability to relate to others in much the same manner that he touched all of us in the family—in small, personal ways that left indelible impressions, even on strangers. As Senator and then President, those impressions were magnified by television for the world to see and feel.

The tears shed in 1963 were for a friend and brother suddenly taken—but the reasons he was loved, here and everywhere, will always exist. They are found in many things he did and said, but nowhere more so than in his plea in 1963 to see our world as one community: "Our most basic common link is that we all inhabit this small planet. We all breathe the same air. We all cherish our children's future. And we are all mortal." What endures is the way he summoned us to reach beyond ourselves, to do things for others that would reflect our shared humanity—"to strive, to seek, to find, and not to yield," in the lines from Tennyson that he loved.

November 22 this year is the 25th anniversary of Jack's death. The shock of that tragic moment in Dallas is still vivid in people's minds even after a quarter century, and it is easy to understand the natural desire of many Americans to honor Jack on that day.

But the November 22 anniversary, with its traumatic pictures and TV replays, is always a depressing time for our family. In paying tribute to my brother, we want to remember his life, not relive his death. In recent years, many of his friends have begun to honor his memory on May 29, his birthday. I hope that on this July 4 weekend, as we commemorate the birth of America, people will understand my family's feelings about Jack and will join us in future years by marking his birth and not his assassination.

Last year, by chance, I came across a story from 40 years ago that tells how, from the beginning of his career, Jack was able to reach out to those of different backgrounds. It explains why his qualities of caring and concern are remembered so vividly in this country and other lands.

A Polish-American expert on Eastern Europe at the Library of Congress came to my Senate office to brief me for a trip to Poland. He told me that in 1946 he had been a graduate student at Harvard teaching Polish. He had joined the local Polish-American Citizens Club, and the members had been invited to a memorial service in Cambridge, Mass., honoring a Polish-American soldier killed in World War II. Endless speeches by local officials paid tribute to the historical ties between Poland and the United States. But again and again, the speakers stumbled over the names of Polish heroes, and the audience began to groan at each mistake.

Then Jack was introduced as a young Navy veteran who hoped to be the Congressman for the district. He spoke with feeling of Poland and America, of Pulaski, Kosciusko, Paderewski and others. And each time he mentioned a Polish name, the pronunciation was flawless—so much so that the crowd stirred, and voices in the audience began to joke in Polish, "I wonder what his name was before he changed it to Kennedy. Was it Kedziejewicz? Kedzierski?"

Jack won that election to the House of Representatives, and he carried the Polish ward by more than 95 percent. He had taken the time to learn something about his future constituents and their traditions. And in the 40 years since then—throughout all Jack's time in Congress and the White House and their own careers—they never forgot that vivid moment when they first met him.

His White House days were fleeting, but their memory is undimmed. In continuing to honor his vision of public service, we remember him now in the way he would have wanted—as a man whose achievements and ideals reach out across the generations and inspire us anew to ask not what our country can do for us, but what we can do for our country. The lesson of his life is that Americans of all ages, in any age, will respond to that challenge, if only we have leaders wise enough to ask us.

People often wonder what attracts men and women into public service. What persuades them to endure the pressure, the frustration, the sacrifice of privacy, the lack of time with family and friends, the loss of income that is sure to follow? Ambition? Perhaps. Excitement? Certainly. But it is also something more, an ideal that often takes its root in youth and grows all our lives—the satisfaction of giving something back to America in return for what it has given us.

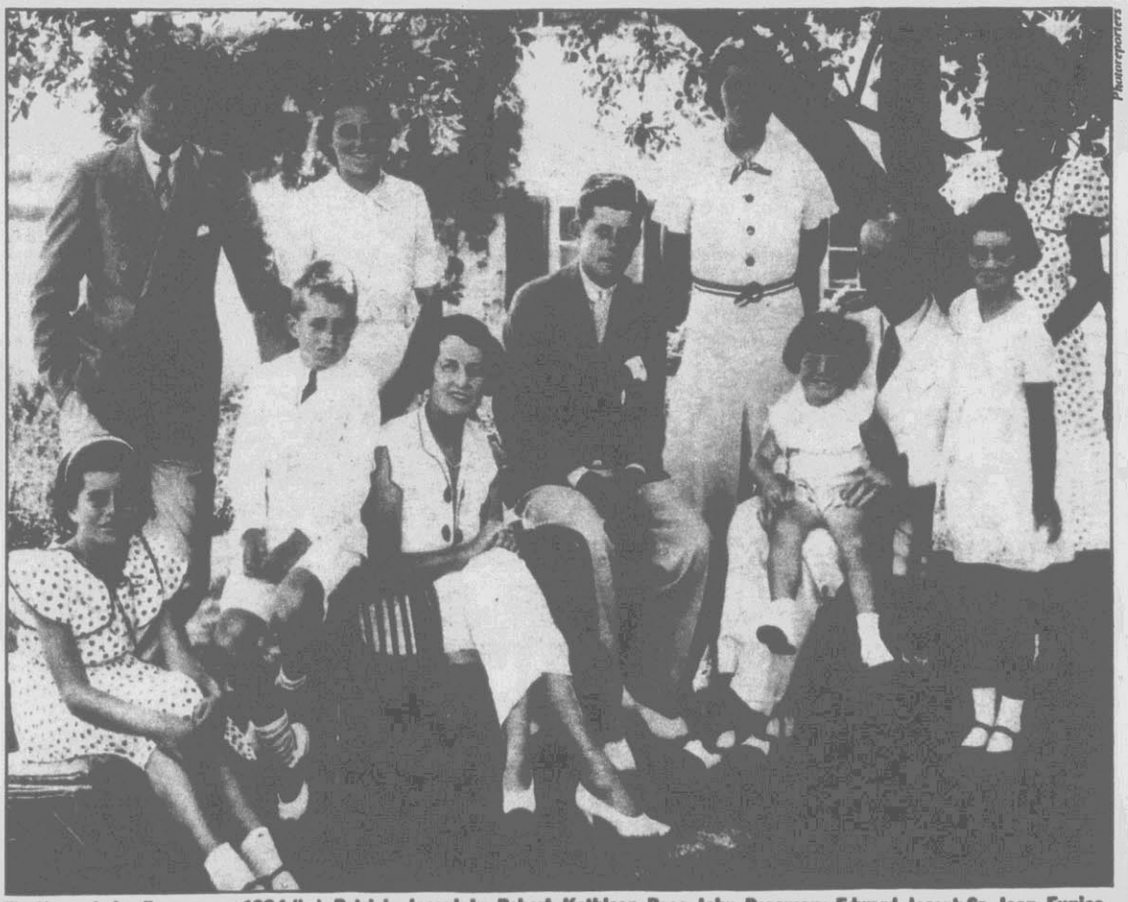

It embraces the simple, profound, enduring beliefs that America is a promise of better things to come, that individuals can make a difference and that government can make a difference too. Survival of the fittest may be the law of the jungle and of some people in public life. But it is not the law by which John F. Kennedy lived, and so long as people with his talent and commitment to others are willing to enter public life, it will never be the law of the United States.

He did not know what the future would bring, but he did know the direction in which we should be heading. From his reading and his sense of history, he understood the tensions that are as old as America and as current as the day's headlines—the continuing battle in each generation between the past and the future, between those who talk about change and those who make change happen, between those who say people never had it so good and those who say America can do better.

He believed that a sound economy is America's greatest social program and that government should be the friend, not the foe, of those in need. Strange as it seems in this era of mega-deficits, I remember how he agonized with his economic adviser, Walter Heller, over his last federal budget, which contained a deficit to ensure that the economy would keep growing.

He could see beyond the passing moment. As he once put it as President, he believed it to be the task of each generation to build a road for the next. He liked to tell the story of Marshal Lyautey of France, whose gardener asked him why he wanted to plant a tree, since it would not bloom for 100 years. "In that case, plant it this afternoon," the marshal said.

In describing America's role in space and the mission to the moon, he would recall the young Irish boys in the Frank O'Connor short story who threw their caps over a high wall and then had no choice but to follow after them. That's the way Jack faced other challenges as well. He inspired America to throw its cap over the walls of discrimination, poverty and disease, and the rest of us, even after he had left us, had no choice but to follow.

He had a special rapport with the young. More than anyone else, he aroused and inspired what had been the "Silent Generation" of the 1950s. He did not live to see what they accomplished—"What made us dream," Yeats wrote of a friend who died too young, "that he could comb grey hair?" One of the finest chapters in the history of America's involvement in Vietnam was written by millions of young men and women who first saw the truth about the war and persuaded America to turn back. One of the finest chapters in the history of civil rights was written by those who marched for the Public Accommodations Act of 1964 and Voting Rights Act of 1965. One of the finest chapters in America's concern for impoverished peoples is being written every day by young Americans in the Peace Corps overseas and in domestic service programs here at home.

"We are not here to curse the darkness but to light the candle that can guide us through that darkness to a safe and sane future," he told the Democratic Convention in Los Angeles when he accepted his party's Presidential nomination 28 years ago this month. Because of Jack, Americans are continuing to light worthwhile candles at home and abroad. Physicians and nurses are bringing health care to people and places that never had a doctor. Teachers are bringing knowledge to children who never had a school. Lawyers are bringing legal services to people too poor to know their rights. Businessmen and women are bringing new opportunities to old neighborhoods. In nations throughout the world, people inspired by Jack are striving to end the ancient curse of poverty and neglect. Few things move me more deeply than to visit a hut in a distant, poverty-stricken land and come upon his picture on the wall.

Part of the timeless quality of his appeal is that he never took himself too seriously. He loved to tell about the opinion poll that proved parents still want their children to be President—as long as they don't have to get involved in politics. He could tease the Nobel Prize-winners of the Western Hemisphere by calling them the most extraordinary collection of talent ever gathered at the White House "with the possible exception of when Thomas Jefferson dined alone" and mock himself by saying, "I am the man who accompanied Jacqueline Kennedy to Paris."

He was committed to the NATO Alliance, but he was equally proud of his Alliance for Progress and the hope it kindled for the people of Latin America. He had little regard for those in power who believe in rugged individualism—so long as it is rugged on someone else and comfortable for themselves.

He was a President for all seasons. He could launch a rocket to the moon and declare war on hunger in Appalachia. He could extol the arts by inviting Robert Frost to write a poem for his inauguration and ally himself with the oppressed throughout the world by visiting the Berlin Wall and proclaiming, "Ich bin ein Berliner." He could be Commander in Chief—not just of the armed forces but of the forces for civil rights. He could stand up to the Soviet Union in the Cuban missile crisis and sit down with Soviet leaders a few months later to negotiate the first arms-control agreement of the nuclear age—the Test Ban Treaty of 1963, the achievement he valued most.

It seems like only yesterday that his call went forth to get America moving again. He campaigned across the country in 1960, summoning us to his New Frontier and telling us, "This is a great country, but I believe it can be greater. This is a powerful country, but I believe it can be more powerful." America responded, because we knew then, as we know today, that our country can do better, if all of us do our best.

A century ago, Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes Jr. spoke of the influences that had shaped his generation. "Through our great good fortune," he said, "in our youth our hearts were touched with fire." That has been our great good fortune too. In the brief time Jack had, he touched our hearts with fire, and the glow from that fire still lights the world. More than all the schools and squares, more than all the avenues and airports and other monuments, that is, and will always be, Jack's greatest and most enduring memorial.

Jackie Onassis—Her Life Is Worth a Fortune

McGough/DMI

Neal Peters Collection

Mrs. Onassis and object of her efforts—the great Garbo, pictured at her peak

Jackie Onassis, who helped persuade the singer/dancer Michael Jackson to write his best-selling autobiography, Moonwalk, reportedly was busy recently trying to sign the legendary Greta Garbo, 82, to pen her memoirs for Doubleday. In the past, a few biographies of Garbo, the recluse, have been published—but, to date, no autobiography. Ironically, one of the memoirs most in demand by publishers is Jackie's.

For years, editors have told us that Jackie could demand and receive a $5 million advance on the story of her life. Having obtained a $26 million settlement from the estate of her second husband, Aristotle Onassis, it is doubtful, however, that earning large amounts of money ranks No. 1 on Jackie's list of priorities. At her age—she will be 59 on July 28—money is no problem.

Incidentally, as we go to press, word comes from publisher Lyle Stuart that his company is handling an unfinished biography of Mrs. Onassis by C. David Heymann titled A Woman Named Jackie. On the basis of 150 pages and an outline, Stuart already has sold more than $1 million worth of foreign rights to the book to publishers overseas. Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis is one woman about whom people everywhere remain insatiably curious.

Hits or Misses?

Late in May, Hollywood released three films—all considered potential blockbusters—primarily for the summer audience of young moviegoers: Willow, a George Lucas fantasy with no big names in the cast; Rambo III, a sequel starring Sylvester Stallone; and Crocodile Dundee II, another sequel, with Paul Hogan in the leading role.

Together, these three productions cost a large fortune—somewhere over $100 million—and separately each has spawned cloudy reviews. This is the July 4th weekend, after which it should be apparent as to how many of these heavily promoted motion pictures have caught on at the box office. Do you care or dare to guess?

Linda Kozlowski and Paul Hogan return in Crocodile Dundee II, hoping for big bucks

From the Ronald Reagan Joke File

"His name was John Wayne. We called him, in Hollywood, 'Duke.' Well, one day the Duke was on a set, filming a scene, and he'd just delivered a big and important line when the director shouted, 'Cut!' and came up to him and said, 'Duke, you've got to deliver that line with a little more awe.' Well, sure enough, on the next take, the Duke looked up, opened his mouth and began the line saying, 'Aw...'"

THE AMERICAN WOMAN PHOTOGRAPHY CONTEST

SPONSORED BY PARADE AND KODAK

WE'RE WAITING TO SEE YOUR photograph of The American Woman —your favorite boss, teenager, grandmother, sister, wife or friend. She could be swimming, giving a speech or taking a nap in the shade.

You know her as well as anyone does, and your winning photograph will end up in a national exhibit.

Parade magazine and Kodak are sponsoring The American Woman photo contest. Your picture can be a woman in your life or in the life of the nation—any image that seems to you to capture The American Woman.

Your entry can be a black-and-white or color print. Our distinguished judges will select 100 winners, who will each receive $100 and an award certificate. Some of the winning photos will be published in Parade, and all 100 will become part of the exhibit.

The deadline is Sept. 9, 1988, and winners will be announced in the Nov. 20, 1988, issue of Parade.

THE JUDGES

THE RULES

- Anyone is eligible, except employees of Parade Publications, Inc. or Eastman Kodak Company and members of their families.
- No entry fee is required for participation.
- All entries must be postmarked no later than Sept. 9, 1988. We cannot accept any postage-due mail.
- Send entries to The American Woman Photo Contest, c/o Parade/Kodak, P.O. Box 3870, Grand Central Station, New York, N.Y. 10163. Each contestant may submit ONLY ONE photograph. Prints no larger than 8" x 10" may be submitted, made from slides or negatives, in color or black-and-white. The contestant's name, address and telephone number must be written clearly in ink on the back of the photograph. Contestants should not send original slides or negatives.
- All entries become the property of Parade Publications and will not be acknowledged or returned. Parade assumes no responsibility for any photographs.
- Late, mutilated or previously published photographs are not eligible and will not be considered. The contest manager's determination regarding late, mutilated, lost or previously published entries shall be final.
- Contestants must know the names and addresses of any identifiable persons appearing in their photographs.
- One hundred photographs shall be selected for awards. The winners will be determined by a panel of judges, based on pictorial composition, originality, interest of subject matter, visual appeal and consistency with the theme of The American Woman. The decisions of the judges shall be final.
- Each winner shall receive a $100 cash prize and an award certificate. If a winner's photograph is published in Parade, the contestant shall then receive an additional $200. Any taxes are the responsibility of the winner.
- Only contestants formally designated as award-winners will be asked to supply the original negative or transparency of the winning photograph and a release from each identifiable person in the photograph.
- Award-winners agree to the use of their submitted photograph and their names and pictures in the editorial pages of Parade magazine and by Parade Publications and/or Kodak for trade or advertising purposes.
- Winners may be required to sign and deliver to Parade a publicity release and an affidavit of eligibility certifying that the submitted photograph is his or her own effort.
- This contest is void where prohibited.

How I Overcame Three Fears

Malcolm Boyd. He finds comfort in the dark now—after fearing it for years.

Rob Levine

EVERYBODY HAS a fear of some kind. It might be a fear of anything—snakes, the dark, flying, big buildings, small spaces, the number 13, spiders, speeding cars, empty houses or people in authority.

I used to have a fear of public speaking. When I had to say anything in a meeting or had to introduce other people, my legs shook, I sweated and couldn't concentrate. What to do about it? I got myself invited as a speaker to various community meetings. I wrote my remarks on cards and rehearsed carefully. It worked. After a half-dozen such speaking engagements—agonizing for me—I began to enjoy public speaking. When I was asked to address 10,000 men and women at a national convention, the experience was both successful and personally satisfying.

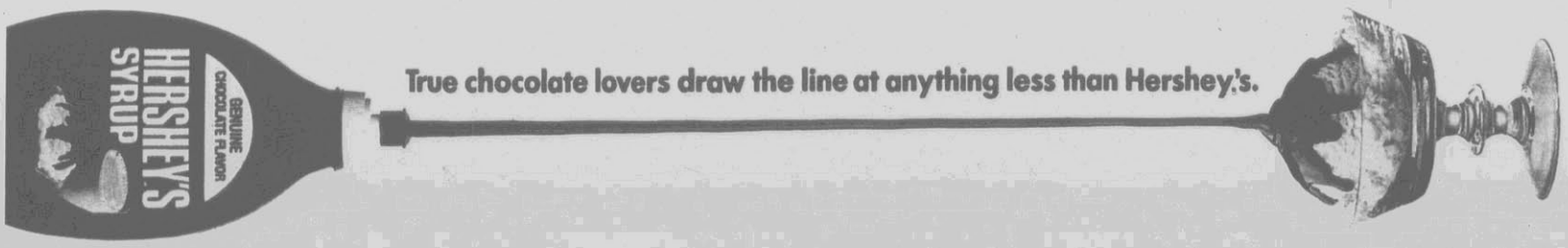

Since then, I have spoken in public hundreds—even thousands—of times. What I once dreaded is now a major part of my life and is always uplifting.

Many times our fears do not have such happy endings.

The most curious story I know about fear concerns Mary Pickford, who was one of the first great female movie stars and the goddess of modern celebrity. We became close friends in the 1940s, when I was in my 20s and she had attained legendary status. As the empress of Hollywood, she had wielded enormous social and economic power and was adored by millions. Yet she confided that she had an obsessive fear of success.

"I have found that success is like being on top of a flagpole," she told me. "Alone there, I continually have to fight other climbers coming up, trying to seize the top place. The height is dizzying. Far below, other people resemble mere ants. I lose all sense of relationship with them. Perspective becomes distorted; a widening gulf develops. It's cold atop the flagpole. Winds howl. To make matters worse, the pole is greased. If I slip, the descent is all the way to the bottom. People who envy me hurl mud and rocks in an attempt to dislodge me."

BY MALCOLM BOYD

True chocolate lovers draw the line at anything less than Hershey's.

From Hershey. The Chocolate People.™

Her crippling fear of success held tragic consequences. Mary Pickford became a recluse in her fabled estate, Pickfair. She asked me to visit her shortly before her death. Tears rolled down her face. We held hands while we talked. She had been called the world's most celebrated and beautiful woman. But celebrity dims, beauty fades, applause ceases. I perceived that Mary's self-constructed prison was inhabited by ghosts, sadness and unfulfilled dreams. Her fear kept her from enjoying success, from sharing it openly with others and from being creative about it.

It is necessary for us to "name" our fears, to come to understand them and to enter fearlessly inside them in order to win freedom from them. We have to make up our minds to deal with them in a decisive and forthright way, realizing that time is on our side if we do. We can, you and I, overcome fears. This is how I overcame three of my greatest fears.

Fear of the dark. When I was 5 years old, my parents went away for a day. They had asked a neighbor to stay with me. The woman was seldom around children and must have had a strong need to exert authority. I did something—I can't remember what—that upset her. She struck me on the side of my head and announced that she was going to lock me in the dark closet next to the kitchen. It held canned goods and utensils and—she said—a huge white rat that would eat me. Then she forced me into the closet and locked the door. Inside, it was cavernous and pitch-black. I screamed in terror, waiting for the rat to attack me. My sense of complete helplessness in that closet would return again and again, in nightmares, for years.

I pleaded through the locked door for release, beat my tiny fists on its hard wood until they bled, to no avail. After that, well into adulthood, I was always terrified of the dark.

In middle age, I felt a strong desire to overcome this troubling fear. Friends were planning to travel. Would I care to house-sit? I said yes. Their large, isolated home sat amid tall, brooding trees.

After I moved in, having decided to free myself of this fear, I was determined to take the next steps—to face it and to leave it behind. I did not turn on the lights when darkness fell. I started to walk slowly through the rooms, feeling my way by touching a wall or pieces of furniture. I climbed up into the shadowy attic, walked down into the musty, coal-black basement. At first I was scarcely able to breathe. But gradually I became accustomed to the dark and comfortable in it. Happily, I still am. When I confronted headlong those terrors familiar in my imagination—bogeymen leaping out from shadows—my fear was gone. Now, in the darkness I find a strange kind of beauty, with warmth and support.

Fear of dogs. One day when I was a boy, an angry unleashed dog attacked and bit me. I can still see its face—its teeth bared—an image of fury. After that I was acutely afraid of dogs.

During high school, I sold magazines door-to-door. If a dog approached me, or even barked inside a house, it was torture. My fear stayed with me over the years.

As a graduate student in my early 30s, I went on a tour of Europe. One day, with friends, I visited a remote island off the coast of Turkey. Separated from my companions, I was alone on a tip of the island when I became aware suddenly of a pack of wild dogs standing on a hillside above me.

The dozen animals, closely observing my alien presence, seemed frozen in place, ready to charge down the hill and tear me to pieces. I had no defense. Instinctively, I knew that I must betray no emotion, show no fear. I had chosen to respond to my fear of the dark, but this decision held no option. It was a life-or-death crisis.

I controlled my thoughts, my breathing. I painstakingly shifted my attention from the dogs to the clouds in the sky. I walked slowly—very slowly—away from the dogs. Concentrating on lightness and easiness, I did not merely act nonchalant. I became so. The dogs did not follow me. Apparently, I had become a part of the landscape for them.

Since then, I have owned and loved several dogs and am relaxed and easy with all kinds of dogs in diverse situations.

Fear of growing old. I remember when 30 seemed old, but my 30th birthday came and went inexorably, if not too easily, without undue trauma. My 40th slipped by with deceptive ease. It was my 50th birthday that nearly did me in. This was the time I realized I was afraid of growing older. Of growing old.

To slow the process, I applied black dye to my graying hair. But, looking in a mirror, I saw something of a stranger, laughed, and decided to get back to my own graying hair as quickly as I could. I suddenly realized I liked it that way.

I made a decision: I'm glad to be me. I wouldn't think of reliving the past. Now I am 65, and I believe this is the best time for me. I perceive aging as a new horizon to be explored. Meanwhile, I possess today. I want to make the most of it in every way.

Some fears are harder to overcome than others. But I hope you agree that many of our fears are relics from bad childhood experiences, standing in the way of our ability to live freely and happily, and just waiting to be discarded.

We take the sting out of fear when we look at its limitations and refuse to be its victims. When we overcome fear, our self-esteem is increased. We open ourselves to growth, become bearers of new possibilities. Banishing old fears, we let the sunshine in.

Why contact lenses can make your eyes look older.

And what to do about it.

Contact lenses do wonders for your vision, but they can also make you squint more. And handle the delicate eye area more. Are you aware that all that extra squinting and stretching can push and pull you into earlier wrinkling?

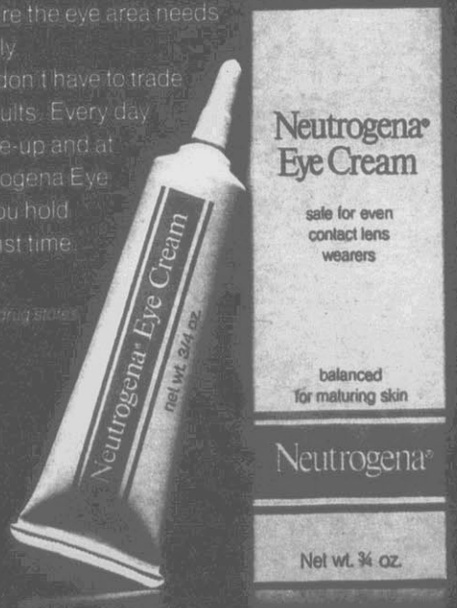

That's why you need to use a moisturizing eye cream faithfully every day. But there's a catch. Because your eyes are more sensitive to irritation, you can't take chances with anything that might cause redness, puffiness, bumps or tears.

Neutrogena® Eye Cream gives you everything ophthalmologists and dermatologists insist upon for safety. It's balanced to the pH of tears, fragrance-free and non-comedogenic (won't clog pores). It's even formulated with the same safe moisturizing and cushioning ingredient used in delicate eye surgery.

The results are something to see. You can actually feel your skin become softer and smoother as the hydrophilic (water-loving) formula attracts and holds all the moisture the eye area needs so desperately.

Now you don't have to trade safety for results. Every day—under make-up and at night—Neutrogena Eye Cream lets you hold the line against time. And irritation.

Available at better drug stores.

Zipper kit includes travel sizes of Neutrogena® Eye Cream, Neutrogena® Night Cream, and Neutrogena Moisture®—a $3.50 value. Just send front carton panel from Neutrogena Eye Cream, sales receipt, and this completed certificate to: Neutrogena Moisturizing Kit, P.O. Box 4162E, Monticello, MN 55365-4162E.

Arthur and Hobson: Together Again

The best news about Arthur 2: On the Rocks is the return of Sir John Gielgud, who was the tipsy playboy's valet, Hobson. Yes, he did die in Arthur, but filmmakers looking at potential receipts can be very inventive. It's four years later, and he's in Arthur's mind as an adviser-conscience. And no wonder: Director Bud Yorkin says that the millionaire drunk (Dudley Moore) and his wife, Linda (Liza Minnelli), the former waitress from Brooklyn, are faced with marriage and fertility problems (they adopt a baby boy), and Arthur joins AA. Does that mean Moore gets to grow up in this movie? Warners.

• Next week, you can see Walt Disney's Bambi, an animated film treasured by children—and parents—since its first release, 46 years ago.

ROBOT NUMBER 5 STRIKES AGAIN

Talk about confidence. David Foster, producer of last year's smash ($100 million) Short Circuit and now Short Circuit 2: More Input, says he already has been asked to do another sequel and a TV series starring Number 5, the robot who "came alive" after being hit by electricity. In SC 2, the endearing robot comes to the big city to help his Indian friend and co-inventor, Ben (Fisher Stevens), whose life and toy robot business are threatened by bad guys set for a big jewel heist. Just like last time, expect a lot of the laughs to come from Number 5's mimicking of characters he sees on TV. Foster says, "Just wait till you see him go after the escaping thieves." Hint: He has been watching Tarzan. Tri-Star.

Everything is Copasetic!

Most people know of Bill Robinson as the dance partner of Shirley Temple, but "Mr. Bojangles" was much more than that. In Mr. Bojangles, The Biography of Bill Robinson ($18.95, Morrow), Jim Haskins and N.R. Mitgang tell of the struggles of the congenial tap dancer-actor-comedian. Robinson was a heavy gambler, quick-tempered, and he once was tried for a crime that he never committed. He also created the word "copasetic," which by definition (it's now in Webster's) means "very satisfactory"; fought for actors' rights; tried to patent his famous stair dance; and broke the color barrier to star on the vaudeville circuit for three decades.

In the nearly 40 years since his death, Bill Robinson's spirit lives on through those to whom he brought happiness. —Renée Keller

TERMINIX KILLS PESTS SAFELY NO MATTER HOW DANGEROUS THEY ARE.

You don't have to live in the rockies to get Rocky Mountain spotted fever. Ticks will see to that.

Silverfish can ruin a library of books without a whisper.

Flies can be infectious. They bite your pets and they can bite you too.

Gnawing carpenter ants can seriously damage the wood in your home.

Earwigs can destroy all types of green plants, indoors and outdoors.

The common cockroach probably brings more diseases closer to more people than any other insect.

Ants can bite, invade pantries and contaminate food supplies.

Drop for drop, a black widow's venom is more potent than a rattlesnake's.

Killing bugs is one thing. Killing them without endangering your plants, pets and family members, is something else again.

That's why it pays to call Terminix. Terminix responds to pest problems fast. Within 24 hours.

LOSE YOUR JOB?

BY JANE CIABATTARI

Getting fired at 57 turned out to be a great opportunity for Kenneth Richardson, (l), seen here at the New York office of Forty-Plus, a support group. Karen Houser, below, went back to school after losing her job; it changed her life.

Photos by Bob Wagner

KENNETH RICHARDSON OF Montvale, N.J., was let go last fall when an American Brands division where he was director of national accounts was on the verge of being sold. "There were rumors," he recalls. "I should have looked clearly at the fact that my job was threatened. I waited until somebody tapped me on the shoulder and said, 'Your services are no longer wanted. We're cutting back.'"

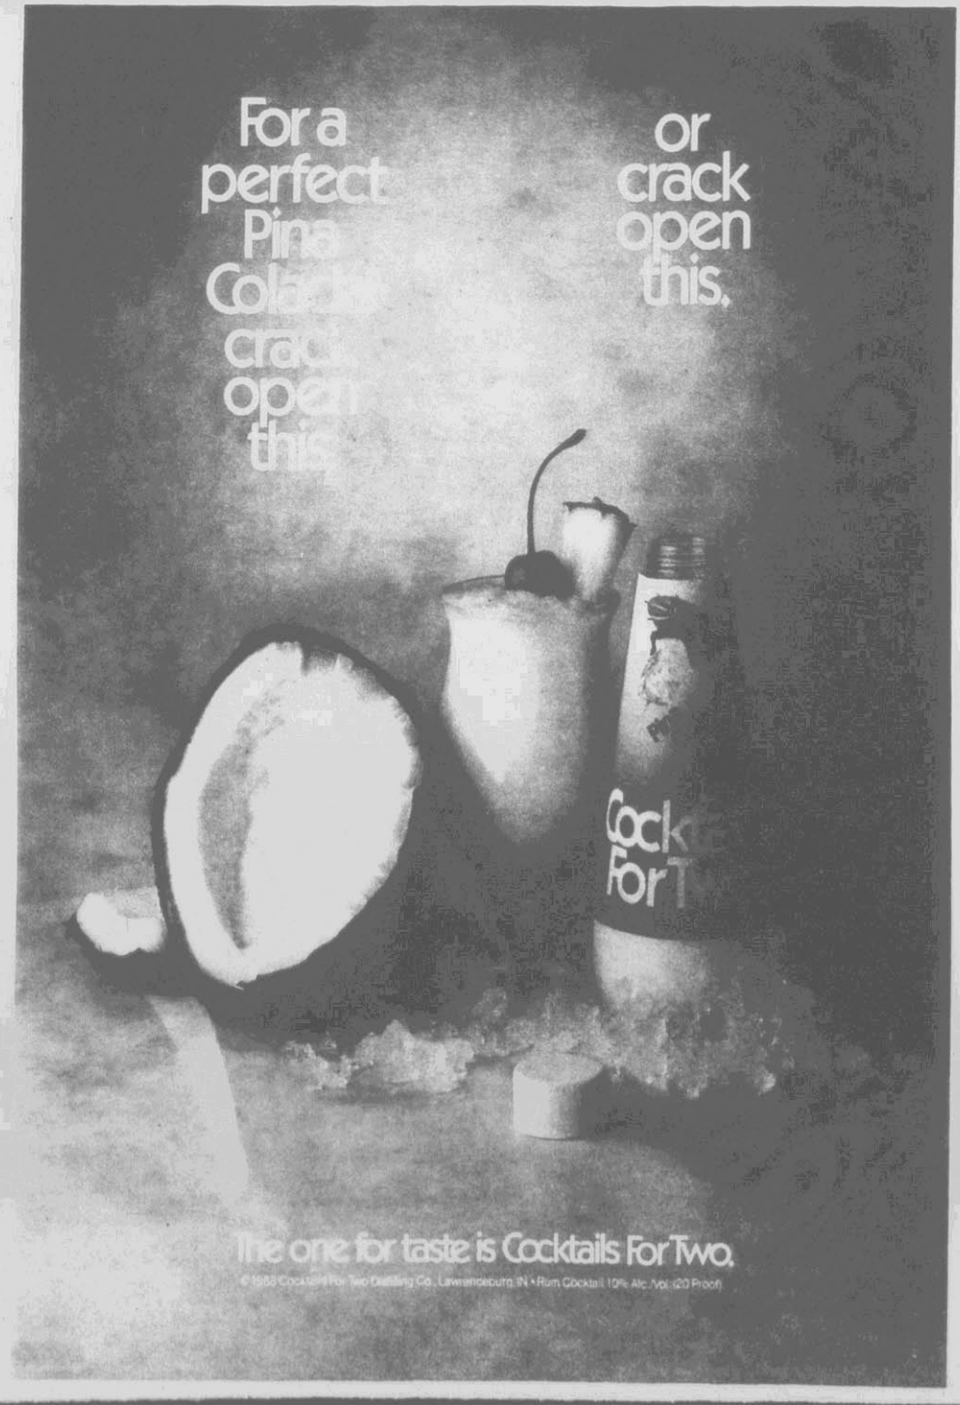

It took a day for the fact to hit home. "I'm 57," Richardson recalls thinking. "Is there life after death?"

Between 1980 and 1985, Karen Houser, 41, of Lansdowne, Md., went through four layoffs at manufacturing plants (two at International Harvester, one at a steel mill and one at a General Electric factory that manufactured electric ranges). Through it all, she was supporting her daughter, Karen, now 16.

Richardson and Houser are just two of the millions affected by this decade's buying, selling, restructuring and downsizing of American businesses. General Electric alone has cut back some 100,000 employees, or a quarter of its work force, over the last seven years. According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, 10.8 million American workers were displaced as a result of plant shutdowns and company cutbacks between 1981 and 1986. Losing a job has become so commonplace that the stigma of being fired has faded. And it affects people at all levels, from blue collar to top management.

Even so, the loss of a job can be a devastating blow. But there are ways you can transform it into a rare opportunity.

• Accept the grieving process. Working through your reactions to the job loss is necessary before you move on. Most counselors compare this period to the five stages of loss experienced by dying patients, as described by the psychiatrist Dr. Elisabeth Kübler-Ross. "People will respond with similar stages to any loss in life," she says. Understanding this can help you and your family know what to expect.

The first stage is denial. "When you lose a job, you are in a state of shock and numbness," says Dr. Kübler-Ross, "unless you got lots of messages ahead of time." Then you can expect to feel anger. "If you can express this anger in a healthy, nondestructive way, then you get through it very fast," she adds.

Next, you are likely to go through a bargaining stage and then depression. "You mourn the loss of your co-workers, your place of work—all the things that were familiar to you, all the security that you thought you had," explains Kübler-Ross. After this silent grief, she says, "hopefully you get to an acceptance, and you do better in the next place."

Hope is an important part of the process. "Some people have gone through the stages so often they become experts," says Kübler-Ross. "You know that this too will pass, and if you have enough faith and enough solid friends, you will make it through."

It is realistic to be hopeful. According to two recent U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics studies, about half of those reemployed after a job loss are earning as much or more in their new jobs. "With the proper support, people learn to adapt," says Michael P. Hickey, president of the firm that ran a reemployment program for General Electric in Columbia, Md. "And that will help them cope with the current job market, which is fluid. People can't expect to have only one career anymore or work for only one company. They have to be flexible."

• Your family is your best support system. "We urge people who are fired to go right home, gather their families and talk about it," says Nancy Garbett, an outplacement consultant for Eclecon in Salt Lake City. "Families need to share their reactions to the past and weave the bridge to the future together."

Don't leave preschool children out, Garbett cautions: "Hold them on your lap, hug them, give them extra reassurance during this time. Let them know that a transition is going on. It's not their fault. Their parents still love them." A sense of sharing and excitement about the future also will teach children that a job loss can be an opportunity for growth, change and renewal, she adds.

While family and friends can help by listening, when it comes to finding a new job, look for resources in your community: library career sections, seminars at local colleges, Y's, churches or job-search organizations.

• Find a network—and have patience. After losing his job, Kenneth Richardson remembers thinking that things were going to turn out okay but that he'd never work for a big business again—"their choice, not mine." He figured there were smaller or new start-up companies that could use his expertise. But how would they know where to find him?

"There are unlimited opportunities," Richardson says, "but the matchmaking part is terribly difficult."

HOW ONE MAN'S LOVE FOR BBQ LED TO A MASTERPIECE.

Rich Davis grew up on barbecue. His father introduced him to the art. He gave Rich an appreciation for good barbecue and simple, honest ingredients. And after Rich grew up, he began a quest for the perfect barbecue sauce.

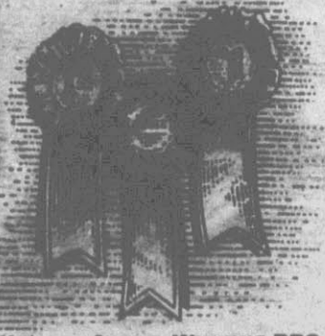

THE FINEST INGREDIENTS

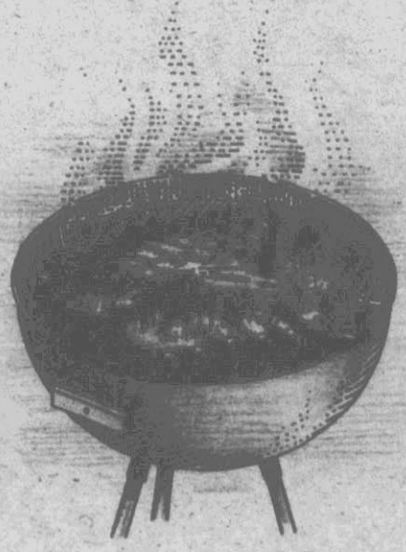

RICH DAVIS, CREATOR OF K.C. MASTERPIECE®

Perfection was a long time coming, but all the time spent puttering around in his Kansas City kitchen finally paid off. He mixed up the barbecue sauce that was to become K.C. Masterpiece.® Rich says, "I kept changing the ingredients and seasonings until it was the best stuff I'd ever tasted."

Barbecue lovers agree with him. K.C. Masterpiece® has been used in winning over 50 first place awards in barbecue competitions. And the reason is simple. Rich Davis refused to take short cuts. There's no sugar, gums or artificial thickeners in K.C. Masterpiece.® Instead, Rich uses the finest ingredients—like ripe tomatoes and dark molasses—for a taste you won't find anywhere else. K.C. Masterpiece® is truly a sauce that lives up to its name.

His answer was to join Forty-Plus in New York City, a volunteer organization staffed by members. There are 16 such groups nationwide. Forty-Plus gave him an office base, career counseling, advice about preparing a resumé and interviewing—plus the camaraderie of others in the same boat, which helped keep his spirits up. Most important, Richardson gave himself time.

• Take advantage of retraining. After the cutback in 1985, Karen Houser went to career-counseling workshops and a demanding nine-month course in electronics offered in the reemployment program sponsored by General Electric. She hadn't been in a classroom in 20 years. "At first I was leery," she recalls. "I was pushing 40. But I was tired of changing jobs every two years."

As Houser learned, a period of unemployment can be a good time to complete educational degrees or take training courses in new fields. This will ultimately expand your job possibilities.

Houser's determination led to a new job as a production assembler with Ohmeda, a hospital-equipment manufacturing company in Columbia, Md. Nine months later, she won a promotion to inventory-control coordinator. "Going to school helped me have the gumption to put in for the promotion," she says. "I figured if I could learn computer electronics, I could do anything."

For Kenneth Richardson too, patience and persistence were the keys to an impressive comeback. Five months after cutbacks eliminated his job, he and his wife, Joan, were celebrating a friend's retirement—and his own new beginning at the best job he has ever had, as vice president of marketing and sales for a small company based in New York.

Jane Powell

I hope Jane Powell's new book sells like mad. You know why? Unlike most Hollywood kiss & tell books, it's toughest on the author. Jane Powell doesn't trash anyone, except Jane Powell.

A FEW WEEKS BEFORE SHE WAS TO wed for the fifth time, Jane Powell told me, "I'm embarrassed about those four marriages. Through ignorance and fear, I married so many men. If I went out on a date, I thought, 'Well, you've got to get married.'"

She is 59 years old now, and I think this marriage, to onetime child actor Dick ("Dickie") Moore, is going to take. I asked about a honeymoon. "We've been on one for seven years," Jane said. "Next year Dick's taking me to Africa, to shoot pictures of lions." Why were they marrying now? "It's just that we feel we should," she said. "It's so awkward when you introduce each other: 'This is my lover.' It sounds so strange. I want to say, 'This is my husband, Dick.'"

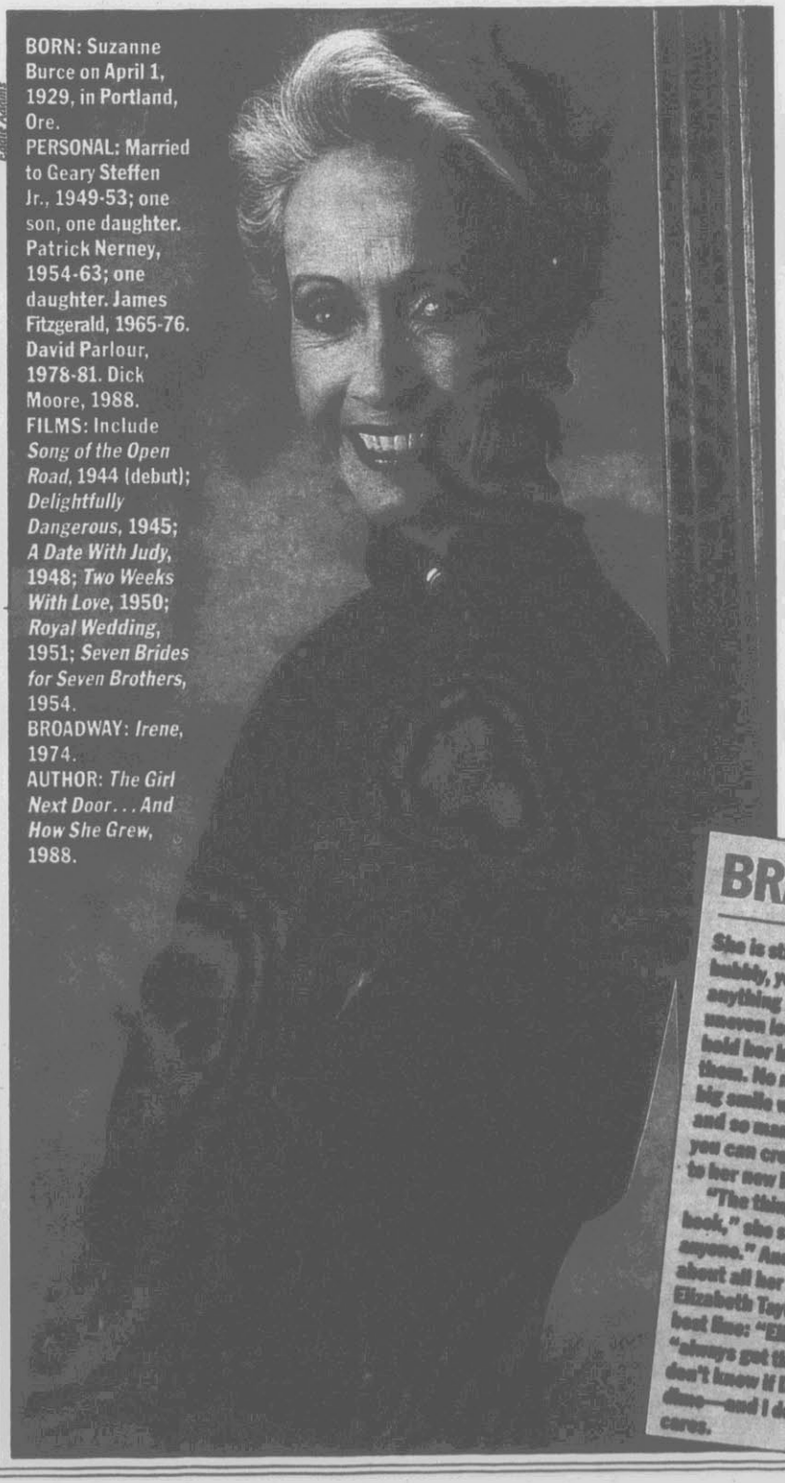

Before you slough off Jane as just another of those ditsy Hollywood actresses who collect men, give her the benefit of a doubt or two. We remember her best, I guess, for those big MGM musicals, like Seven Brides for Seven Brothers. But she is a delightful and very pretty woman, a superb singer and a ruthlessly honest person who understands better than anyone else how screwed up her life has been.

At age 2 in Portland, Ore., her hair was permed to look like Shirley Temple's. Later her mother told Jane she didn't really want to have her. "It was the Depression," explained Mom—as if that made it okay. Jane was a movie star at 14. She and Elizabeth Taylor were bridesmaids at each other's first wedding. "But only the first," Jane said, laughing, "or we'd have done nothing else." Her own children, one of them a recovering alcoholic, "are not close." Though MGM promoted Jane as "the girl next door," when you learn the bare facts of her life, you wonder where she finds the guts to go on with a career and even to dare to fall in love again.

We talked about the stars. Fred Astaire was polite but cold. Clark Gable so awed her when he dropped by her table to chat, she couldn't recall his name. Jane and Miss Taylor went to school together and worked together, "but we weren't close, not girlie-girlie."

She has homes in Manhattan and Connecticut. She has a concert act, will work this summer with Donald O'Connor and loved doing the soap opera Loving for nine months. "My role was that of a short Barbara Stanwyck," said Jane. She added that if she found the right role, not even a lead, she'd drop everything for a return to Broadway—where she starred in 1974 in Irene "and lived right next door to Katharine Hepburn!"

Finally, Jane is making her own decisions. "I was always pleasing someone else," she said. "My mother, the men I married, the studio . . . I did what I was told. There were only three things I wanted to do and did—marry, have children, get divorced. Otherwise, it was always someone else who decided for me." ■

BORN: Suzanne Burce on April 1, 1929, in Portland, Ore.
PERSONAL: Married to Geary Steffen Jr., 1949-53; one son, one daughter. Patrick Nerney, 1954-63; one daughter. James Fitzgerald, 1965-76. David Parlour, 1978-81. Dick Moore, 1988.
FILMS: Include Song of the Open Road, 1944 (debut); Delightfully Dangerous, 1945; A Date With Judy, 1948; Two Weeks With Love, 1950; Royal Wedding, 1951; Seven Brides for Seven Brothers, 1954.
BROADWAY: Irene, 1974.
AUTHOR: The Girl Next Door . . . And How She Grew, 1988.

BRADY'S BITS

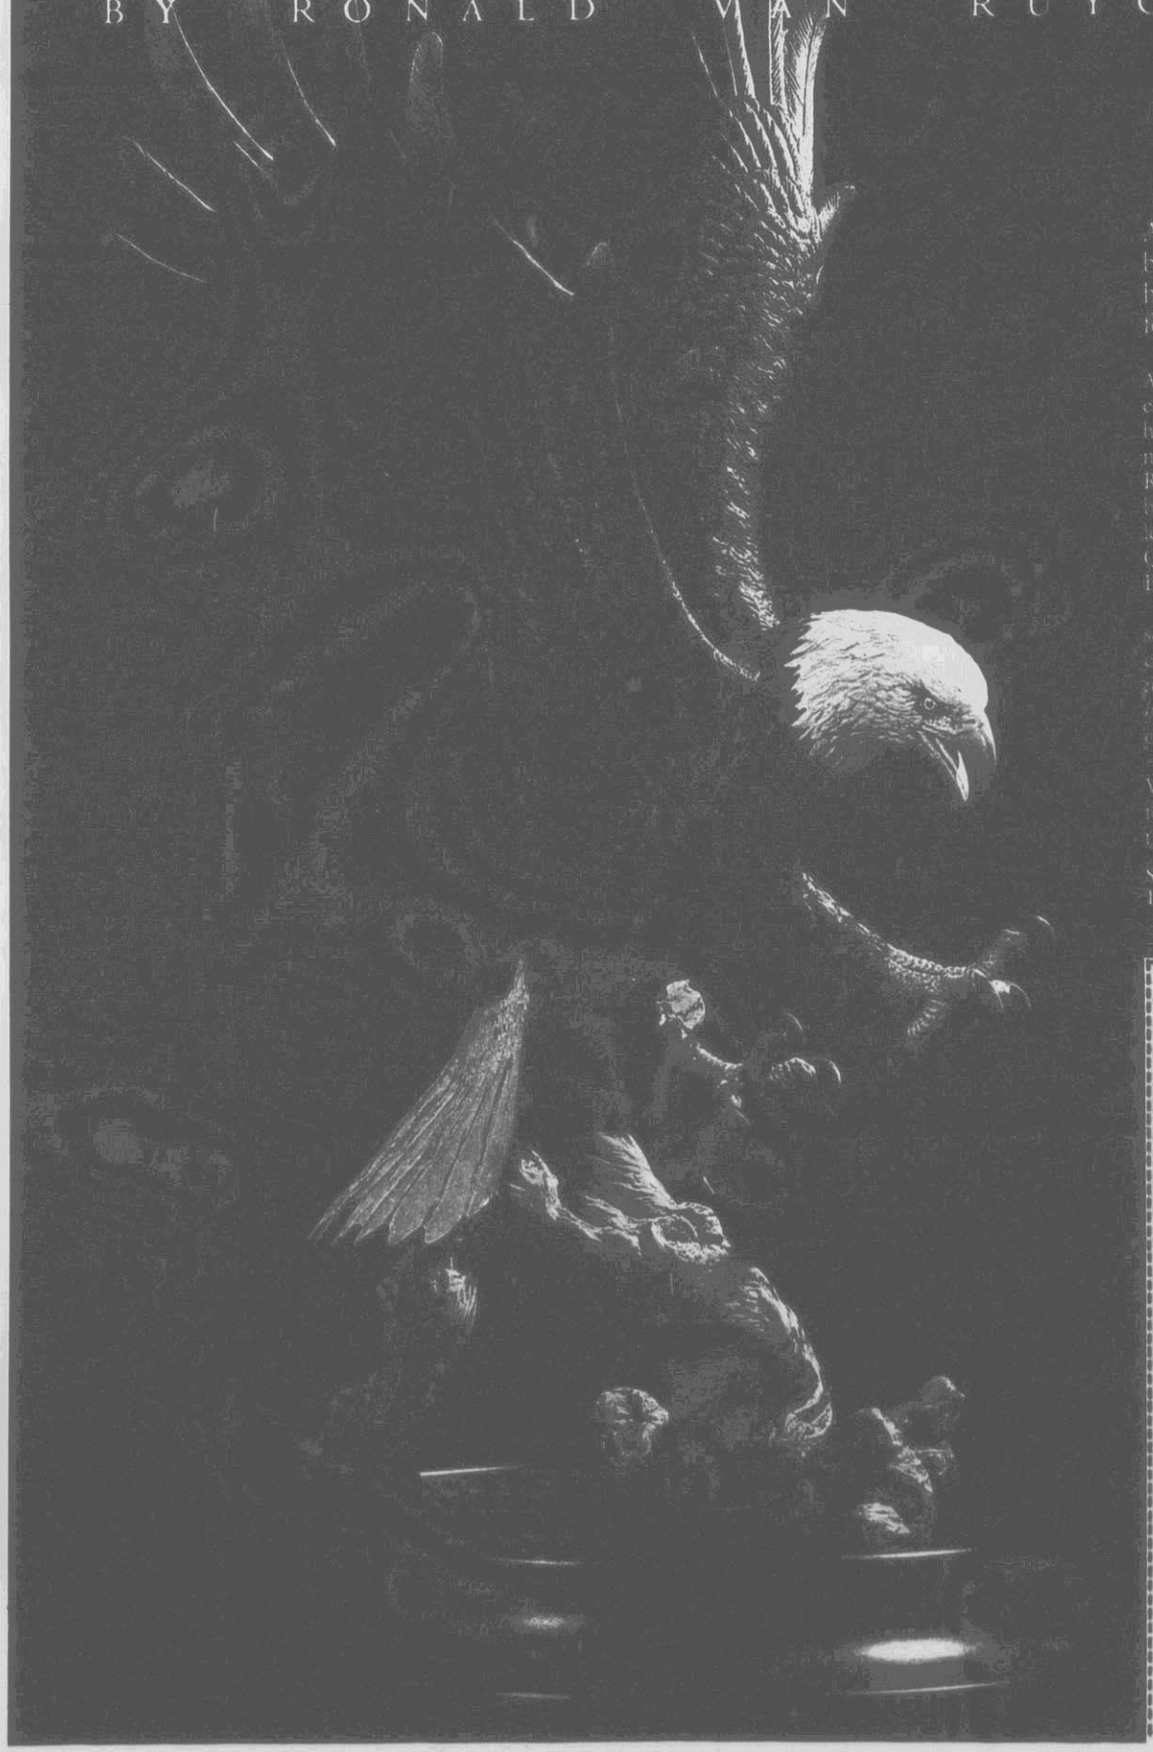

She is still so slim and pretty and bubbly, you forget her life has been anything but a rose garden. She has uneven lower teeth and used to hold her hand over her mouth to hide them. No more. Now you get that big smile we saw in Royal Wedding and so many other films. Maybe you can credit this new confidence to her new husband, Dick Moore.

"The thing I like best about my book," she said, "is that I don't kill anyone." And then, as we talked again about all her husbands and all of Elizabeth Taylor's, Jane got off her best line: "Elizabeth," she said, "always got the wealthier ones." I don't know if Dick Moore has a dime—and I don't think Jane Powell cares.

"L.A. Law" Is Still A Hit

By Paul Elie

Nothing points up the mediocrity of the past TV season more than the fact that "L.A. Law" is still television's newest hit. Sure, this season ABC's "thirtysomething" found an audience as earnest as its characters, and fans of "The Wonder Years," which had only a six-week run in the spring, seem to miss the show almost as much as they miss the '60s. But Steven Bochco's polished law drama (which airs Thursdays on NBC) is the last new series that had people telling their friends, setting their VCRs and taking their phones off the hook.

In its second season, the series refined a weekly formula that could be summarized on a one-page brief: smart, ironic drama that unabashedly glamorizes the legal lifestyle. It boosted its already solid ratings, placing regularly in the Nielsen top 10. And yet it enjoyed a respite from the publicity that accompanied its October 1986 debut. "The shine goes off a show like 'L.A. Law' after a season," says Harry Hamlin, who plays attorney Michael Kuzak. "It becomes an accepted institution, rather than this new thing that everyone has to see. Which is good," he adds. "It wasn't necessary to have all that blather surrounding the show each week." Hamlin should know: For the show's first year, he and Corbin Bernsen, who plays divorce lawyer Arnie Becker, had their backs rubbed by the Los Angeles publicity machine. People magazine preposterously dubbed Hamlin "The Sexiest Man Alive"; Bernsen, meanwhile, made a fashion of smirks and suspenders. But this year they stepped out of the limelight. Of all the attorneys at McKenzie Brackman Chaney & Kuzak, only Stuart Markowitz and Ann Kelsey (played by Michael Tucker and Jill Eikenberry) retained the stature they established last season.

Contrary to everyone's expectations, this year's story lines featured the show's unusual supporting characters. Mentally retarded mailroom worker Benny Stulwicz (played by Larry Drake) was used as a foil to the airbrushed attorneys: He was given fashion counsel by Becker, accused of sexual assault after visiting a peep show and shown feeling affection for a gorilla after a visit to the zoo. Douglas Brackman (played by Alan Rachins) confronted problems one usually sees on a soap opera: He discovered that his late father had a mistress, feuded with his wife and his continuously surfacing half brothers, and feared that he had AIDS after a seamy affair with a court bailiff.

Offscreen, headlines were made by the bitter dispute between Bochco and co-creator Terry Louise Fisher. But onscreen the series remained remarkably consistent, splitting time between issue-oriented stories and dark-edged satire. It tried scrupulously to avoid its worst problem — an intensity that often turns it into a shrill, wordy melodrama. District Attorney Grace Van Owen (played by Susan Dey), confiding in her lover, Kuzak, during one key scene, seemed to speak to the series' problem: "Do you think I'm cold and humorless?" "Yes," Kuzak said, "we both are."

But now that last year's hype and this year's controversies have subsided, "L.A. Law" can take its place as a more elegant "St. Elsewhere," a hipper "Hill Street Blues" — a continuing drama you can count on.

New Morning

CBS has added five new series to its Saturday daytime lineup, which will premiere this fall: "The Adventures of Raggedy Ann and Andy," "Superman," "Garfield and Friends," "Hey, Vern, It's Ernest!" and "Flip!" "Raggedy Ann and Andy," "Superman" and "Garfield" are animated series, while the latter two series are live-action series, perhaps after the fashion of CBS's "Pee-wee's Playhouse."

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

Dear Michele: I have always enjoyed Andy Griffith, and have been viewing "Matlock" for quite some time. I've heard Griffith was stricken with Guillain-Barre syndrome at one time, and would like some information. When did it happen? How long was his recovery? What was his age at the time? — EVELYN MEITNER, FT. PIERCE, FLA.

Andy Griffith, 62, was stricken with Guillain-Barre syndrome in 1983, which left him paralyzed from the waist down for over six months. The actor, who owned a piece of "The Andy GriffithShow," claims the show's residuals helped him through a broken back and his bout with Guillain-Barre. The disease is a crippling, debilitating and sometimes fatal nervous-system disorder. Griffith recovered and resumed his acting career, but did not disclose his personal trauma for several years. "It's the nature of Hollywood," the star of NBC's "Matlock" explains. "I didn't talk about it because once you get sick in this town, you have to prove you didn't die." Although the actor does suffer from a residual effect of the disease, chronic pain in both legs, he bravely confesses hecan handle the pain now and accomplish anything he wants.

Dear Michele: Please tell me if the killer of Bob Crane ("Hogan's Heroes") has ever been apprehended. — LOUISE HAGLER, RALEIGH, N.C.

At this writing, Crane's murderer remains at large. The case remains unsolved after 10 years.

Dear Michele: My husband and I were watching an Elvis Presley movie called "Flaming Star," and my husband contends it was the first Presley film. I say he made at least one prior to it. Can you settle our bet? — MRS. GARY FOX, SAN GABRIEL, CALIF.

Elvis Presley made his film debut in the 1956 feature "Love Me Tender." He appeared in three more films, "Loving You" (1957), "Jailhouse Rock" (1957) and "King Creole" (1958), prior to his much-publicized stint in the Army. Following his discharge, he appeared in "G.I. Blues" (1960) and "Flaming Star" (1960). Presley continued making two or three films a year, grossing more than $150 million at the box office for the producers of his 33 movies. It wasn't until "Change of Habit" (1969) that Elvis abandoned his lucrative film career — mainly due to his struggles with weight and the obvious embarrassment it caused him. He did, however, appear in two subsequent film documentaries of his concert tours: "Elvis — That's the Way It Is" (1970) and "Elvis on Tour" (1972).

Dear Michele: I really enjoy the theme from "Night Heat," the CBS late-night crime drama. Has it ever been recorded, and who sings it? — DAISY DUNN, NEW MATAMORAS, OHIO

The "Night Heat" theme, sung by Roy Kenner, was composed by Domenic Troiano, who also produced the record and plays guitar, bass and drums. B.J. Cook wrote the lyrics to the title tune, which was initially released in Canada (where the series is filmed) in late 1986 as a single and a 12-inch extended-play dance record. Check with local record shops for availability in domestic release.

Dear Michele: Did Donna Mills ever star in a soap opera, and did Morgan Fairchild play the role of her sister? — CONNIE WHEELER, CANON CITY, COLO.

While both actresses have gone on to achieve a modicum of success as sybaritic bitch goddesses on primetime soaps — Mills as Abby Ewing on "Knots Landing" and Fairchild as Constance Carlyle on "Flamingo Road" — they do not appear to have been soap siblings.

Mills made her television debut as Rocket, the sexy nightclub singer on the CBS soap "The Secret Storm" after moving to New York from her native Chicago. Following her film debut in "The Incident" (1967), with Beau Bridges and Martin Sheen, Mills appeared for three years (1967-70) as the chaste Laura Elliott on the CBS soap "Love Is a Many Splendored Thing." Fairchild landed her first TV role in 1973 as Jennifer Pace Phillips on "Search for Tomorrow."

DICKIE ROOK

Grass Stain Removal

With warm weather here grass stains on clothing is a problem.

Fresh grass stains have a characteristic green color. However, as they age they become yellow. Grass stains usually appear as smears because of accompanying clay, mud, or dry soil. This is why the stain tends to remain on the surface of the fabric.

You'll have a better chance removing the stain if you attack it while the stain is still fresh.

To remove from washable fabrics, you could try a prewash product. Follow directions. However, as you know, grass stains are stubborn and most products won't remove them.

Do not use alcohol, as some people unwisely suggest. It's harmful to cloth and it's flammable.

Professional care may be your only answer. Drycleaners can usually get the stains out using several different chemicals.

TV Chatter

By Frank Sanello

As far as "Dynasty's" Gordon Thomson is concerned, it will be no more Mr. Nice Guy next fall. Last season, Adam Carrington put his villainous personality on hiatus after falling in love with Dana (Leann Hunley). "I was a good guy this year," says Thomson. "Well, comparatively. When anybody falls in love — and Adam was very much in love with Dana — it changes you, makes you a more positive person." Thomson regretfully adds that Hunley's contract Wasn't renewed for the upcoming season, and he "will revert to type, which is basically a mean SOB!" Thomson says the decision to bare Adam's fangs once again came from David Paulsen, "Dynasty" 's new executive producer. "David likes Adam real mean — and a bachelor, which means I can play the field, unencumbered by a wife."

Jane Wyatt, the British actress who's best known for playing wholesome mom Margaret Anderson on "Father Knows Best," says she wouldn't mind doing a third TV-movie reunion based on the 1950s sitcom. "It would be fun, but I don't know what we'd do," says Wyatt, 74. "We're all grown up now. In fact, some of us are over the hill. They'd have to change the title to 'Grandfather Knows Best'." The title wouldn't be the only change. "If you translated the show to the '80s, you'd have to deal with the problems in the world today: People not getting married, abortion, people burning draftcards." She pauses and then remembers, "I guess that's not too topical anymore." Wyatt bristles at critics who, with benefit of hindsight, criticize "Father Knows Best" as offering a saccharine view of the 1950s. "I know Bob Young and I both feel the show was an accurate reflection of the period as people thought it was happening at the time," Wyatt says. "We didn't consider ourselves goody-two-shoes. It's what Americans were striving to have at home in those days."

While other cast members may take it easy, Marsha Warfield, who plays "Night Court"'s truculent bailiff Roz Russell, regularly works weekends. Every Friday evening, Warf eld hops on a plane to do her standup comedy act in comedy clubs across the country. Warfield doesn't attribute her workaholism to boundless energy or artistic impulses. Color her motivation green. "I'd love to say it was for love of my craft and because I like to bring smiles and joy to people who might have a bleary outlook, people whose lives might not be as happy as mine," she says. "But truthfully, it's because of the dollar signs and the zeroes. If they say enough zeroes, I'll go anywhere and do just about anything."

Why are the '60s so popular on TV these days? Explains Carol Black, co-creator and co-executive producer of ABC's second-season hit, "The Wonder Years": "Enough time has passed so we can lookback and laugh rather than be embarrassed. In college, you could make a fool of yourself at a party and want to crawl under a rug the next day. But 10 years later, you think it was kinda cute."... Despite rumors to the contrary, Pierce Brosnan definitely will not appear in a TV remake of "The Saint." "That," says the dapper Irishman and former star of "Remington Steele, "would only be treading the same old water."

SOAP SCOOP

'Loving' goes back to old-fashioned basics

By Connie Passalacqua

A year ago, we expressed some mighty unloving thoughts on the occasion of "Loving" 's fourth anniversary, and bandied about such terms as "plastic" and "retread." But something is different in year No. 5. We find ourselves loving "Loving." Has it changed – or have we?

Well, "Loving" has improved a bit this year, but the change has come from within this highly jaded soap viewer and the daytime soap audience. Yes, this is the year soaps finally picked up on the conservative, traditional agenda of the Reagan '80s, and everywhere it's back to basics. What's truly basic about daytime soaps is that viewers crave true love and relish watching the search for it. And today there's no more basic a soap than "Loving."

Remember the revolution that occurred in daytime soaps in the early '80s, pioneered by Gloria Monty on "General Hospital"? Action/adventure stories? Teens in bikinis? Lavish on-location sequences? Well, "Loving" has none of these. And it's refreshing and liberating that someone is finally giving it all a rest.

Tune in to "Loving," and what you have are soaps' three basic plot lines, as exemplified by the show's heroines!

Ava Rescott Alden (played by Roya Megnot), the poor girl from the wrong side of the tracks,craves respectability, so she spends her life marrying into wealth.

Stacey Donovan Forbes (played by Lauren-Marie Taylor), a drippy but proud housewife, is betrayed by her husband's one-night infidelity with a psycho, separates from him and gets involved with her husband's even drippier, but gorgeous cousin. Yet, from afar, she and hubby still love each other.

Shana Sloane Vochek (played by Susan Keith) has an accident-imposed miscarriage, separates from her ex-priest, ex-amnesiac husband, gets involved with a sleazy, but gorgeous con man. Yet, from afar, she and hubby still love each other. Is this 1968 or 1988?

Last year, all this deja vu was insulting. This year, there's a certain calm beauty to the show's faithfulness to the rudiments of the soap form. We want love and romance! Not twins. Not Zsa Zsa and Dick Cavett making guest appearances. Not scenic travelogues of Ocho Rios, Jamaica. "Loving" is 99 and 44/100 percent pure soap. And boy, did we ever need it.

Academy Awards

ABC and the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences have signed a five-year contract for ABC to broadcast the Academy Awards through 1995. The Awards, usually one of the highest-rated — and most hyped — shows on television, have aired on ABC since 1976. "The 60th Annual Academy Awards" aired last April.

Sports Roundup

SUNDAY, JULY 3

Tennis (NBC)

The All England Tennis Championships, men's final, live from Wimbledon, England. For all his skill and success, Ivan Lendl has never won Wimbledon, the crown jewel of the sport's Grand Slam. Sports psychologist Julie Anthony has a special perspective on this situation — she put herself through her Ph.D. program by playing pro tennis for more than a decade. Anthony believes that aftera few years, a "jinx" like Lendl's becomes a self-fulfilling prophecy. "The press starts focusing on the fact that he hasn't won it and the player starts focusing on it," she says. "The one thing you don't need on the pro tour is more pressure, which adds just enough to distract you from the concentration that you need."

However, adds Anthony, Lendl's problem is primarily technical. "Wimbledon, a grass surface, is his weakest surface. He's not a great serve-and-volleyer." Until he addresses that weakness, she submits, Lendl will never win Wimbledon. "You can't compensate psychologically for weak technique," says Anthony.

Track and Field (CBS)

Michelob Track and Field Invitational, from San Diego, Calif.

Auto Racing (ESPN)

CART Cleveland Grand Prix, live from Burke Lakefront Airport, Cleveland, Ohio. Brazil's Emerson Fittipaldi was once the Formula One champion. On the CART circuit he has yet to equal that success, but last year at Cleveland, he registered the third CART victory of his career, setting a new record for this 198.4-mile event.

PGA Golf (CBS)

Western Open, final round from Butler National Golf Club, Oak Brook, Ill.

MONDAY, JULY 4

Senior Golf (ESPN)

Rancho Murieta Senior Gold Rush, final round from Rancho Murieta Golf and Country Club, Sacramento, Calif. Orville Moody won this event in its inaugural year in 1987 when Butch Baird took a penalty on a free drop. Some genius had given Baird and several other players the wrong rules sheet, so Baird thought it was a legal drop from the hazard in question. The mistake cost him the victory.

Baseball (ABC)

FRIDAY, JULY 8

Baseball (NBC)

SATURDAY, JULY 9

Baseball (NBC)

Oakland Athletics at Detroit Tigers or New York Mets at Houston Astros. With all the ink that has been expended on Oakland's young sluggers (Jose Canseco and Mark McGwire), the old leaders (Don Baylor and Dave Parker) and the strong arms (Dave Stewart and Bob Welch), not much has been said about a guy who is really holding the A's together: Carney Lansford. He is one of those players who nobody seems to notice much, but whose numbers are consistently good. This season, Lansford has been on pace for a 200-plus-hit season, with 93 hits by early June. He led the league in batting average at that time, and was among the league leaders in runs scored as well. At the same time, he does a solid job at third and is a quiet force in the Oakland clubhouse. If the A's live up to pre-season expectations, lots of guys will get credit. We hope Lansford is one of them.

Boxing (CBS)

Kelvin Seabrooks defends his IBF bantamweight title against Gaby Canizales in a scheduled 12-rounder.

Are Athletics Losing Some Of Their Luster?

By Marty Linehan

There was a time when every boy wanted to be a big-league ballplayer. But the times, they are a-changing.

According to a new evaluation of 250 American occupations listed by "The Jobs Rated Almanac," published by the World Almanac, such once-desired occupations now rank very low.

Men would rather be waiters, ranked 169, than professional football players, ranked 241. Bank tellers (130) scored ahead of baseball players (222), and dishwashers (188) prefer suds to shooting hoops in the NBA (214).

The poll shows that people would rather be Indy Car drivers (204) and jockeys (209) than go in for the established professional sports. There's a message in there someplace.

Women prefer being secretaries (96), maids or file clerks (both 107) to entering the professional sports world.

Even basketball coaches (159) finished ahead of their hirelings. And the controversial baseball umpires come in at 153, much better than the players.

But one has to wonder about the accuracy of the poll, when one hears the No. 1 job on the list: an actuary.

* On Sunday, July 3, we'll see how the professional men of tennis do when the men's final of the All-England Tennis Championships airs from Wimbledon, England, on NBC. Pat Cash won last year.

* On July 3, CBS presents the final round of the Beatrice Western Open, from the Butler National Golf Club in Oak Brook, Ill. No, Seymour, Beatrice Western is not a girl's name. It's the old Western Open that has been sponsored by the Beatrice conglomerate. Last year's Western Open was marred by rain that clobbered the course.

HOCUS-FOCUS

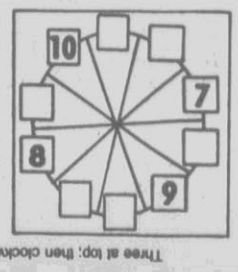

CAN YOU TRUST YOUR EYES? There are at least six differences in drawing details between top and bottom panels. How quickly can you find them? Check answers with those below.

Differences: 1. Birdhouse is missing. 2. Cleat is missing. 3. Hair is different. 4. Rope end is missing. 5. Cap is missing. 6. Cloud is smaller.

• BOX SCORE! Challenge: Place digits 1 through 6 in boxes of the figure, right, so that the sum of the numbers in any two adjacent spoke-segments of the wheel total the same amount as the sum of the two numbers diagonally opposite. Each number is to be inserted once.

Can you work it out?

Three at top; then clockwise: 6,7,2,9,4,5,8,1,10 will do it.

• TURN TALE! Replace X's with a single vowel so the following sentence will read the same backwards and forwards: M X D X M I M X D X M.

Replace X's with the letter A.
