160 Lost In Oil Rig Fire

By MAGGIE JACKSON
Associated Press Writer

ABERDEEN, Scotland (AP) — An armada of rescue ships and helicopters scoured the chilly North Sea today for more than 160 people missing after a fire engulfed an oil platform in one of the worst oil rig disasters ever.

Police said up to 167 people were missing and that hopes of finding more survivors of the inferno were fading.

The final death toll aboard the Piper Alpha rig 120 miles northeast of the Scottish coast was expected to surpass the previous worst North Sea disaster. The Alexander L. Kielland platform capsized in Norwegian waters during a storm in March 1980, killing 123 people.

Sixteen hours after the Wednesday night fire gutted the rig and broke it in half, flames still leaped from the mammoth Piper Alpha, the coast guard said. Two explosions reduced it to a burning wreck of twisted metal about half its original size.

"It was a case of fry and die or jump and try," said Ron Carey, 45, who managed to leap off the platform into the 57-degree water after he was choked by smoke.

A police statement said 67 people were rescued and an unspecified number of bodies were recovered and being taken to a temporary morgue in this northeast Scotland city.

"With the passage of time, hopes are fading of finding any other survivors," said a police statement.

Six NATO warships diverted from maneuvers to join the search that filled the skies with helicopters and the waters with more than two dozen boats.

Sleeping workers died when flames raced through the Piper Alfa's living quarters. Others leaped 150 feet into the water.

Confusion clouded the precise number of missing.

Police put the number missing at 167. Rig owner Occidental Petroleum revised the number aboard the rig to 227, down from 232. That would lower the number of missing by five. Police said most victims were Scottish.

The Aberdeen coast guard said the missing included three rescuers from a rescue vessel, the Sandhaven, who disappeared into the flames as they headed to the rig in a small boat and

Congressmen Say Ship Captain Acted Properly

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. ships in the Persian Gulf are "in an untenable position" and President Reagan's policy in the region needs to be reassessed following the Navy's downing of an Iranian airliner with 290 people on board, Senate Democratic leader Robert Byrd said today.

Byrd and other members of Congress attending a series of closed-door Pentagon briefings appear convinced that the captain of the USS Vincennes acted responsibly in launching the missile that destroyed an Iranian airliner with 290 people on board.

In a Senate floor speech, Byrd said he is not advocating a U.S. withdrawal from the gulf, where American ships have operated for 40 years. He added:

"It's one thing to maintain our presence there. But it's another thing to go day to day in a volatile environment. ... They are placed in an untenable position."

He said he had asked Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci on Wednesday to "give us a new assessment" of threats to the Navy in the shallow, crowded gulf. He said the new review is needed "so we won't be going from day to day with the likelihood of this occurring again."

House Speaker Jim Wright, meanwhile, called the incident "a very straightforward error of misidentification" but said the Iranian government "must assume some serious responsibility for this kind of an error" because of the attacks by its gunboats on the Vincennes just before the A-300 Airbus was shot down.

Lawmakers said several factors — the skirmish with Iranian patrol boats, electronic data that made the approaching plane appear to be military and intelligence information that indicated heightened chance of a major attack — combined to justify the decision of the captain of the USS Vincennes to fire two missiles at an unseen target.

"The ship's captain had every reason in the world to feel threatened," Rep. Ike Skelton, D-Mo., a member of the House Armed Services Committee, said after one briefing on Wednesday. "I don't think he had any choice but to shoot it down."

"Every precaution the ship's commander could take was taken," said Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., noting that radar told the ship the approaching plane was descending from about 9,000 feet and gaining speed.

That information was at odds with data gathered by another ship in the area, the USS John H. Sides, which put the altitude as 12,000 feet and steady. That and other conflicts remain to be cleared up by a Navy investigative team sifting through recorded information in the Persian Gulf.

Other unanswered questions included why the Airbus 300 passenger jet apparently was emitting electronic "signatures" for both a commercial plane and for a military craft.

House Armed Services Committee Chairman Les Aspin, D-Wis., said he believed the most likely explanation was that the code for a military plane was actually emitted by a second aircraft in the area, but was confused with the signal from the commercial plane by the sophisticated gear on board the Vincennes, an Aegis-class cruiser.

Jones May Head UNC Governors

By JOHN BARE
Reflector Staff Writer

When the University of North Carolina Board of Governors meets July 29 it is expected to do something it has never done before: elect a chairman that is not an attorney and not a graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Robert L. "Roddy" Jones, a Raleigh developer and an East Carolina University alumnus, is in position to succeed outgoing chairman Phillip G. Carson of Asheville.

Jones said he discussed the chairmanship earlier in the summer with other board members who were considering the post, and when they decided not to run he announced his intention to seek the job.

"You just put your foot in the ring and see if anybody steps on it," Jones said of the subtle campaigning that goes on between members. "So far nobody has stepped on it."

Jones, a former president of the ECU Board of Trustees who has served on the board 11 years, said he does not think there is any significance to the fact that all previous chairmen have been UNC-CH alumni.

"I've had a lot of people ask me that question. It may be coincidental that all the chairmen were lawyers and UNC graduates," he said. "I don't think there's any significance as to where somebody graduates from college."

"I think if you can run the board, it really doesn't matter what profession you're in. Probably, starting off, there were so many organizational aspects and legal questions, (the chairmanship) may have lent itself more to the legal profession."

"I look at it as an honor, and equally as a challenge," he said. "It's a big responsibility; a kind of working honor."

Shopping Spree Checks Cost Of Living

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

Staff members of the local chamber of commerce will shop in Greenville today and Friday, compiling costs of goods and services for an index that will compare the city's cost of living with other state cities for the third quarter of this year.

Figures from the first quarter's shopping spree listed Greenville second only to Chapel Hill as the city with the highest cost of living in the state, according to the index of the American Chamber of Commerce Researchers Association.

In the association's first-quarter report, the average American city has a cost-of-living index of 100. Chapel Hill had the state's highest index rating of 110.2, followed by Greenville, 101.2; Raleigh, 100.9; Durham, 100.6; Charlotte, 99.2, and Greensboro, 98.2.

Greenville's index rating usually fluctuates around the average, Ed Walker, president of the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce, said in a news conference Wednesday.

Results of the third quarter's prices will be available in about six months, he said. The city did not participate in the index for the second quarter.

To compile the figures for the index, staff members of the chamber have two days to collect prices of goods and services in six different categories — groceries, housing, utilities, transportation, health care and a miscellaneous category, Walker said.

"During the second week of each quarter, we go to five stores, dentists, doctors" and other varying businesses to compare prices, he said. They also price goods such as one pound of bacon and services such as receiving a shampoo and cut at the salon or a dry cleaned suit. The cost of electricity for a 1,800-square-foot house is presented as the utility bill.

"Every chamber has to go by that standard" of collecting the figures, Walker said. Chambers participating in the index shop on the same days.

"I've looked at this today and said what's wrong with us. Why are we higher than some of the other cities," he said.

"You'll notice Chapel Hill had the highest hospital care at 102.9," Walker said. "That happens where the major hospital is a teaching hospital."

Greenville, housing Pitt County Memorial Hospital as a teaching medical facility, also ranked above the average at 102 in the health category, he said. "The instructional aspect does cost more but look what it's brought us" in the form of better health care.

The miscellaneous category, which includes a variety of goods including the cost of pizza, a newspaper, movies and a man's shirt, also ranked above the

Campaign Spending Law Enacted

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — A bill designed to provide matching funds for political candidates who voluntarily limit campaign spending for statewide office is now law, and its sponsor said questions about the law could only be resolved by time.

House Minority Leader Betsy Cochrane, R-Davie, questioned whether people were likely to donate the millions of dollars needed for the program to work. Rep. Walter Jones Jr., D-Pitt, the bill's sponsor, countered that the only way to test the program was to establish it.

"There's no way to gauge how much money it would raise without a track record, and it doesn't have a track record," he said.

Jones, who introduced the bill in 1987 and shepherded it through a legislative obstacle course over the past year, called it "a very positive step forward in reducing the ever-increasing cost of running for public office in North Carolina."

"When you look at the fact that this is a major change in campaign financing in the state, we are very pleased," Jones said.

The House enacted the measure Wednesday by voting 72-25 to accept changes made by the Senate. The vote was mostly along party lines, as three Democrats joined 22 Republicans in opposition.

Republicans mounted last-minute opposition by raising questions about the bill, contending it was fatally flawed in its reliance on voluntary taxpayer contributions.

"I've talked to no one at home that is interested in using tax dollars" to finance campaigns, said Rep. Bob Brawley, R-Iredell. People who want to contribute, he said, "want to send their own volunteer contribution to the place they want it to go."

"I urge you to defeat this bill and let people manage their own campaigns," he said.

Under the bill, taxpayers will be

Compromise Budget Wins OK

RALEIGH (AP) — A lengthy stalemate over the state budget was broken today as a joint conference committee took 13 minutes to rubber-stamp a $177 million spending plan negotiated by two veteran lawmakers.

"Nobody won in my opinion," said Sen. Kenneth Royall, D-Durham, who hammered out the compromise with Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville. "We accepted things that we didn't want and they accepted things they didn't want."

But Senate GOP leader Larry Cobb, R-Mecklenburg, charged that the package represented "a complete capitulation" by the Senate Democratic leadership, which backed off its vow to resist funding of local "pork barrel" projects.

"They made up and made all these great speeches about openness ... and stood firm that we weren't going to have pork barrel this year," Cobb said. "And we end up with $7 million worth of pork and we end up with all the final decisions being made behind closed doors by two people."

The plan was expected to reach the House and Senate floors by late today or Friday, paving the way for adjournment of the legislative session this weekend.

"It looks like to me we're on track now," Jordan told reporters Wednesday.

Royall, who began one-on-one negotiations with Watkins last weekend in an effort to break the budget impasse, told reporters the two had put the finishing touches on their blueprint Wednesday. The same day, Jordan and House Speaker Liston Ramsey appointed the 14 members of the joint conference committee.

The House and Senate last week passed widely different versions of the bill to spend the final $163 million installment of the 1988-89 budget. The package will fund one-time grants and capital projects.

The rival plans agreed on how to spend about $110 million but differed

Twin-Trailer Routes Under Study

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

State transportation officials have recommended new regulations for twin-trailer trucks that for the first time would limit the rigs to what the N.C. Department of Transportation considers safe routes beyond the federally designated system.

But Charlie Sessoms, assistant state traffic engineer, said this morning that the recommendations are not designed to expand the number of routes twin-trailer trucks could use and suggested that if the recommendations are given final approval, motorists in Pitt and surrounding counties would see little change.

The proposal, unveiled Wednesday to a committee of the N.C. Board of Transportation, calls for the trucks generally to be limited to roads with lanes that are at least 12 feet wide. It also would require the DOT to determine whether proposed routes outside the federal network were safe, based on considerations such as traffic volume and highway design.

According to Sessoms, the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 provided for the designation of a national truck network by the U.S. Department of Transportation "for twin-trailer trucks to use as ... a national system. That system has been designated in North Carolina along with other states.

"The routes designated by the U.S. secretary of transportation," Sessoms said, "were designated as U.S. federal aid routes (such as U.S. 264, U.S. 258, U.S. 13, U.S. 17, U.S. 64 and I-95).

"The Surface Transportation Act also provided that these vehicles be allowed reasonable access to terminals, fuel, food, lodging and repair off the national truck network," Sessoms said.

"It's a matter of reasonable access to terminals the Board of Transportation is considering now," Sessoms said. "Reasonable access to fuel, food, lodging and repair is defined in the N.C. state statutes as within three miles of the network. It (state law) does not define reasonable access to terminals beyond the network.

"The proposal being considered is addressing reasonable access to terminals beyond the three mile limit," Sessoms said. "There would be no additional designation of any routes in North Carolina."

James Lynch, state traffic engineer, said, "We would be restricting the roads on which the twin trailers can operate going to their terminals, based on safety considerations. Under the unwritten rules we have been operating on, we have allowed the twin trailers to run on routes they determined to be safe without our input."

Twin-trailer trucks are generally restricted to about 3,305 miles of North Carolina highways. "States cannot deny twin-trailer trucks reasonable access" to storage and shipping terminals, but neither the federal government nor the state has defined the term.

The proposal being considered by the transportation board's Drivers and Owners Committee, which agreed to seek input from trucking and motor safety officials, would define "reasonable access" and "terminals" for the twin trailers.

Beyond the three-mile limit, the companies could ask for additional routes, but they would have to be studied by DOT, Lynch said.

University sophomore from Currituck County, will lead the group and an assistant will be named later.

"The goal was 150 units so we came in short of goal, but I am appreciative of the ones who came out and donated at this time," he said. "I understand that with the holidays, vacations and ongoing activities, it is incredibly difficult for one to come out and give blood. But, I am hoping the donations will pick up in Pitt County."

Gaskins said four first time donors and 17 deferrals were recorded Tuesday.

The next bloodmobile is scheduled for Sept. 6 at the Greenville Moose Lodge.

Following its adoption, the plan is intended to help guide efforts of individuals, organizations and communities in developing various facilities and services to meet the health care needs of all areas of the state.

Facilities to be addressed by the plan include acute care hospitals, rehabilitation facilities, nursing homes, home health agencies, psychiatric hospitals, chemical dependency treatment facilities, intermediate care facilities for the mentally retarded, and kidney dialysis facilities.

Geography Project Attracts 35 Teachers

ECU News Bureau

Thirty-five elementary school teachers from across the state participated in the first North Carolina Geographic Alliance Summer Geography Institute for Teachers held at East Carolina University.

The institute received a $50,000 grant from the North Carolina General Assembly and matching funds from the National Geographic Society. Additional sponsors were ECU and the state Department of Public Instruction.

"These funds permitted us to put on eight two-day place conferences (conferences held in each of the eight Department of Education regional centers) that concentrated on geography taught in the fifth grade, plus this summer institute," said Dr. Douglas C. Wilms, professor of geography at ECU and director of the institute.

The institute's staff consisted primarily of North Carolina public school teachers who attended a month-long National Geographic Institute held at the National Geographic Society headquarters last summer in Washington, D.C.

"They were trained in geography and how to best teach it," said

Wilms. "They now lead the four peer-teaching groups where they share their best curriculum materials and most successful lessons. It's a situation of teachers teaching teachers, a model National Geographic found, that works."

Part of the agreement between the teachers and the NCGA was that they must host three geography workshops after returning to their home school districts.

"What was unique about this institute was that not only did the teachers come to learn some geography, but they go back and hold workshops," Wilms said. This process, called "the multiplier effect," is considered to be a cost-effective method for improving education throughout the state and providing excellent professional development for teachers, he said.

The 12-day institute ran from June 27 through July 8.

Local participants were Betty Scopmire and Anne Hamze, both of Greenville Middle School, Georgia Brooks-Smallwood of Bear Grass High School, Dorenda Bryant of Farmville Middle School and Linda Calder of G.R. Whitfield School.

Trooper Praises Hero

A Tarboro man has been credited with saving the lives of three men he pulled from a burning truck on N.C. 33 north of Greenville Tuesday night.

Trooper A.G. Wright said Richard Joyner of 1308 Baker St., Tarboro, saw a truck driven by Dwight Edmond Gray, 37, of Route 4, Greenville, hit a driveway culvert after attempting to pass a car and veer onto the left shoulder of the road. Gray told the officer that the truck was in flames immediately after hitting the culvert.

Besides the driver, Joyner got Alex James Clark of Greenville and William Bland, 17, of Route 6, Greenville, out of the vehicle before anyone else arrived at the site of the 11:55 p.m. accident, Wright said.

Gray and Bland were taken to Pitt County Memorial Hospital where Bland was treated and released. Gray remained in the hospital this morning and was listed in serious condition, according to a PCMH spokesman.

Gray was charged with driving while impaired, exceeding the speed limit and driving left of center, Wright said.

ECU Names Official For Minority Affairs

ECU News Bureau

Dr. Larry T. Smith will join the administrative staff of East Carolina University next month as ECU's first assistant vice chancellor for student life and director of minority student affairs.

Smith, who has a doctorate in higher education administration and supervision, was a cum laude undergraduate in English at Johnson C. Smith University in Charlotte in 1978.

He comes to ECU from a post as associate dean of students for programs and activities and director of minority affairs at Knox College, Galesburg, Ill.

His appointment, effective Aug. 15, was announced by Dr. Elmer E. Meyer Jr., vice chancellor for student life. Meyer headed a committee that conducted a national search to fill the new position, which will involve development of programs and activities of interest to minority students, advising student organizations and assisting with student orientation.

Smith will also develop a peer mentor program at ECU and work with university committees on matters of minority student life and support services, Meyer said.

Smith's doctoral research program and dissertation dealt with a predominantly white university's environment and its relationship to the giving behavior of black and white alumni.

He received a master's degree in college student personnel and doctorate from Bowling Green State University in Ohio. He held a teaching fellowship and a graduate assistant's post in the office of the vice president for student affairs and the student development office at Bowling Green.

Board

While there are difficulties in operating a 16-campus university system serving more than 130,000 students, Jones said the board has done good work.

"There are problems in anything of that magnitude," he said. "I think we're there to create policy and solve problems. I see a lot of the same type of action going on ... that is, dealing with each of the 16 institutions and their each individual needs."

Jones also said he would like to improve the working relationship with the State Board of Education.

The university system and the public schools are intertwined because the public schools provide the colleges and universities with the bulk of their enrollment, he said, and because teachers educated at area institutions return to public schools to teach.

"I think we have to continue to make greater strides in cooperating with the State Board of Education," Jones said, "which is responsible for kindergarten through 12 grade."

"We've got to get our quality up. We've got to get kids entering college up to a higher level ... I think a greater cooperative effort between the two groups will improve our standards in SAT standings and with literacy problems, and lots of other things."

Under a new policy, board members may serve three four-year terms. The chairman is eligible to serve two consecutive two-year terms, but Jones' last term on the board expires in 1991.

Train-Car Wreck

ASHEVILLE (AP) — A 9-year-old Rutherford County boy died when a train struck a car driven by his sister Wednesday, authorities said.

Killed was Daniel Lee Ingle of Caroleen, officials said. His sister, Annette Lynn Ingle, 16, was in critical condition with a head injury at Spartanburg Memorial Hospital in South Carolina Wednesday night, a nursing supervisor said.

Highway Patrol Trooper David Jackson said the train struck the passenger side of the car, where Daniel Ingle sat, and dragged the car 117 feet. After jarring loose from the train, the car rolled down a 15-foot embankment and struck an all-terrain vehicle driven by Charles Eric Bridges of Forest City.

Jackson said Bridges escaped serious injury.

Fatal Fight

GREENSBORO (AP) — Three Greensboro men, two of them teenagers, have been charged with murder after the parking lot death of a 33-year-old drifter from Maryland, authorities said.

The victim, bludgeoned in the head with an iron pipe, apparently lost his life Tuesday in a five over a bottle of cheap whiskey, police said.

The victim has been identified as Joseph Wayne McCauley of Hagerstown, Md., a transient who was camping behind an abandoned pizza restaurant, police said. Neighbors say the parking lot was jammed with cars and beer-drinking revelers Monday night, hours before the slaying, which occurred between 3 a.m. and 4 a.m. Tuesday.

After McCauley died, the men "just walked off down the road, drinking the man's liquor," the detective said.

Electrocution

BOONE, N.C. (AP) — A 28-year-old Watauga County man was electrocuted Wednesday morning after the boom he was operating came in contact with overhead power lines, officials said.

Ricky E. Harper, who was employed by Wood Masonry Supply, died at Watauga County Hospital after the accident in Blowing Rock.

Soviets Say Armenian Protester Shot, Killed

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet security forces using plastic bullets shot and killed a protester during a demonstration that shut down a major airport in Armenia, the Armenian press agency reported today.

It was the first official acknowledgment that Soviet forces have killed people and used guns against demonstrators since protests began in the Armenian capital, Yerevan, in February.

Soviet authorities denied anyone was killed.

The account also was the first official indication that troops patrolling the area are armed with rounds designed to be non-lethal.

Troops called in to break up a demonstration at Yerevan's international airport Tuesday were withdrawn from the airport and the city, and the situation was calm today, an editor at the republic's official news agency said.

The editor, who asked not to be identified by name, said Armenpress reported that the slain demonstrator was shot on a road not far from the Zvartnots Airport. Soviet spokesmen in Moscow on Wednesday denied that there had been any deaths in the latest round of demonstrations by Armenians seeking annexation of a nearby region from the neighboring republic of Azerbaijan.

The editor at Armenpress identified the victim only by his last name, Zakharyan. Alexei Mananikov, an editor of the unofficial Moscow journal Glasnost, told The Associated Press on Wednesday that a 22-year-old Armenian named Khachik Kazaryan was killed in a confrontation with troops at the airport.

The Armenpress editor said the shooting occurred Tuesday after several thousand demonstrators mobbed Yerevan's airport to force airport workers to join a general strike.

The labor newspaper Trud reported today that the disturbance forced cancellation of 60 flights Monday and Tuesday and disrupted travel for about 14,000 passengers.

The airport was reported to be operating normally today.

S. Petrosyan, a member of Armenia's Politburo, urged Armenians on Wednesday to resume work and "be reasonable," the newspaper reported. It said the Ministry of Internal Affairs said the situation in the capital remains serious.

Soviet authorities on Wednesday acknowledged that paratroopers crushed the airport protest.

The national television news program Vremya showed pictures of the demonstrations on its Wednesday evening show. The announcer said hundreds of thousands of Armenians thronged Yerevan's streets as a strike continued.

The government daily Izvestia said mass transit was still shut down and the situation had worsened since Tuesday, when 26 factories and economic agencies in the southern republic were idled.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Vadim Perfiliev told reporters, "the rumors that Armenians were killed are groundless."

He said Soviet troops late Tuesday routed about 2,000 people from in and around the Zvartnots Airport and that 36 people "had to seek medical assistance" after the clash.

Perfiliev said about 400 people occupied the airport's terminal. Another 1,500 gathered outside, according to the official Tass news agency.

Firebombs Thrown In West Jerusalem

JERUSALEM (AP) — Mayor Teddy Kollek said today that the first firebomb attack in Jewish west Jerusalem since the Arab uprising began signals a dangerous escalation of anti-Israeli violence.

Arab assailants hurled two firebombs Wednesday at an Israeli bus in west Jerusalem's busy commercial district. Police said there were no casualties.

Although stone throwing and firebomb attacks have escalated recently in east Jerusalem, where 135,000 Arabs live, the attack Wednesday was the first time the violence has spread into Jewish west Jerusalem.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said the firebombing showed that the Arab uprising is a serious threat.

"This is additional evidence that all this struggle, this uprising, is not about territorial issues but is about the very existence of Israel," Shamir told Israel radio.

Also Wednesday, a brick was dropped from the roof of a commercial building in one of the most crowded areas of Tel Aviv, striking the roof of a car on the street below.

Kollek described the firebombing as "a terrible danger for the present and the future."

"I think the assailants wanted to prove that in Jerusalem, where life is relatively good compared with the territories, especially here they are in control," Kollek said on Israel radio.

Deputy Police Chief Rahamin Comfort told the radio the attack "was a very severe incident. It has great importance because until now we did not have such a case."

After the attack at about 10:30 p.m. on Jerusalem's King George Street, a busy thoroughfare packed with tourists and shoppers, Israeli passersby drew their guns and chased the suspects.

Joint Committee Accepts Budget Proposal

on the remaining $50 million to $60 million. The differences generally centered on funding for community colleges, lawmakers' pet local projects and local water and sewer system expansions.

The compromise negotiated by Royall and Watkins totals $177 million, as Royall said another $4 million was obtained from federal sources and $10 million had been included erroneously from a $274.2 million operating budget bill enacted earlier.

Royall said he and Watkins overcame the final hurdle by agreeing that both chambers would decide how to spend half of a disputed $5 million. The deal enabled the House to fund many of the locally oriented appropriations the Senate had resisted, some of which would pump money into districts represented by House leaders.

The original House bill called for funding numerous projects and programs in western North Carolina, a region long championed by House Speaker Liston Ramsey, who reportedly was angered when the Senate originally left the items out of its plan.

No Retirement

NEW YORK (AP) — Singer, talk show host and game show producer Merv Griffin says he could have retired after Coca-Cola bought Merv Griffin Productions for $250 million, but decided on another career: real estate mogul.

"To me, retirement is the choice after death," the 63-year-old businessman said in the August issue of Life magazine.

"What I am doing now is fun," said Griffin, who recently won control of Donald Trump's Resorts International in a hostile takeover and bought the Beverly Hilton Hotel.

"I love the gamesmanship," Griffin said. "This may sound strange, but it parallels the game shows I've been involved in." Griffin helped create television's popular "Wheel of Fortune" and "Jeopardy!"

Among the expenditures the House chose to insert in the compromise bill were $866,500 to purchase land for Western Carolina University, including $200,000 for "economic development efforts of the Center for the Improvement of Mountain Living."

Also, the House proposed $750,000 for Haywood Community College; $3 million for the University of North Carolina at Asheville to design a conference center and physical education building and $692,000 for the Blue Ridge Mental Health program.

Under the plan, the Legislature would appropriate:

- $7 million to add a seventh floor to the Department of Public Education building planned for downtown Raleigh. The Senate had opposed the expenditure but backed off.

- $10 million for loans and grants to local governments for water and sewer projects, a victory for the Senate, which had wanted to spend $15 million while the House favored only $3 million.

- $7.2 million for local projects, commonly referred to as "pork barrel" appropriations. The House passed a separate bill to spend $3 million for projects in its members' districts, while the Senate Appropriations Committee approved a $3.6 million bill for its members' districts this morning. The Senate later approved the bill 41-3 and sent it to the House.

- $3.5 million for the North Carolina Zoological Park. The Senate had called for $6 million and the House $2 million.

- $1.5 million for a new sports arena at North Carolina State University. The money would be held in reserve until the university matched it. The appropriation represents another Senate concession, as it was proposed by Rep. Wendell Murphy, D-Duplin.

The bill also includes numerous appropriations for individual community colleges, although the Senate had favored letting the state Board of Community Colleges dole out the money instead of earmarking it for specific campuses.

Watkins, meanwhile, complained that reporters had interfered with him and Royall by stalking them as they negotiated.

"The real problem is all this openness," Watkins told WPTF-TV. "You can't work with all the news media hanging on each arm. ... If we could get off to ourselves and talk just a little while and wasn't pestered by the news media, we could get something done."

Jordan, who has insisted that budget deliberations be open to public and press in contrast to the policy in past years, defended his stand.

"Opening the process has slowed it some," Jordan said. "But opening the process still should have been done and ... if it has to be slower to open it, so be it."

Falling Short

Not Keeping Up With The Neighbors

Why isn't Pitt County keeping up with the Joneses? Edgecombe County has Sara Lee. Martin County can boast of a major meat processing plant. Now, there's substantial talk of an appliance plant in Lenoir County bringing 1,500 jobs to that community.

These announcements are good news for neighbors, but why isn't Pitt County mentioned when it comes to major industrial development? Why are all the feathers going to the caps of other counties in the region?

It's not because Pitt lacks the services or amenities necessary to recruit large industries. That's not valid. It has good roads, excellent schools — kindergarten to doctorate programs — clean, adequate resources and attractive quality of life.

It's not because the county doesn't spend money advertising and boasting of its advantages. The Pitt County Economic Development Commission budget went from $108,730 in 1985 to $257,007 in 1988 — money that was well-placed.

The money and the advantages raise the question of whether Pitt is pursuing industrial prospects as aggressively as it should be. The county is spending the money, it's strengthening its visibility, but is it accomplishing what needs to be done to bring large, quality industries to Pitt County?

No, because Pitt hasn't landed an industry employing comparable numbers since the 1970s. Neighboring counties have, though, and that's what smarts.

Granted, Weyerhaeuser is a plum and numerous successful home-grown industries have made Pitt County home, but other no giants have nibbled at the county's offerings.

The heyday of luring large manufacturers may have passed, but there are still opportunities to be found — Sara Lee in Edgecombe County and the possibility of White Consolidated Appliance in Lenoir County are proof. There're just not coming here.

The superstructure for success is in place. Major funds are earmarked for development; the community continues to improve transportation links, strengthen its school system, broaden its services. Economically, Pitt prospers, and offers new employers a wide spectrum of appealing reasons to locate here ... yet there seem to be no takers.

It's time for a hard look at the way the county goes after industries. The Economic Development Commission should be held accountable for Sara Lee, for White Consolidated. The neighbors' success is that board's shortfall.

Pitt must make sure its tax dollars earmarked for development are being spent effectively.

Second Best

Decision-Making Time In Raleigh

Surely the N.C. General Assembly can compromise on a reasonable budget and adjourn.

Surely lawmakers can put politics aside, forget it's an election year and do their job — providing North Carolina with a sound operating budget.

It's doubtful the problem is what Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan claims — he says there's not enough money to do the things that need to be done. The money is there; the problem is, politics, not good budgeting, is determining where it's being spent. Instead of sharp pencils and reasonable compromise, campaigning for November is the priority.

Democratic legislators halted the budgeting process last week with objections to expenditures for pet projects — pork barrel money — but not for the reason you might think. Instead of citing favoritism in funding, the Democrats are afraid money sent home to districts may help some Republicans get re-elected.

It shouldn't happen that way. The state's elected officials are in Raleigh to do a job — devise a workable budget. So why are they balking? Can't they see their priorities are incorrect and their responsibility is to the people who elected them, not to politics?

Lawmakers had a good chance to settle the budget today, as key leaders from the House and Senate considered a compromise spending proposal — one that, at $177 million, surpassed the original $163 million budget by $14 million. It is appalling lawmakers would have to add that much money to reach a compromise. The point of budgeting is frugality, not expansion to avoid disagreement.

Nevertheless, adjournment Friday or Saturday would be welcomed by the legislators' constituents, who must pay to keep them in Raleigh. There's undoubtedly some fat in this budget proposal. It would be preferable if this excess could be cut, but this sniping should be done promptly.

It would have been much better if lawmakers could have agreed on a budget quickly without adding an arm and a leg to it. Since they couldn't provide taxpayers with this efficiency, legislators ought to do the second best thing — approve a budget and come on home.

THE SEXUAL REVOLUTION: UPDATE!

WELKE
THE AUGUSTA CHRONICLE

Public Forum

To the editor:

Your editorial "Spoiling the Water ... Leaking Tanks Are Health Hazards" made some good points on the need to protect groundwater and the environment. However, you had some bad information.

Petroleum marketers conceived and promoted the legislation in the House last year. All of us in the petroleum industry supported it wholeheartedly and actually favored it over this year's version, but certain key senators would not buy the tax of one-fourth cent per gallon.

The newly ratified bill is much tougher on industry than last year's. Responsible owners of commercial underground tanks have to underwrite the first $100,000. Further, they have to pay tank registration fees to create one of the cleanup funds.

Neither last year's House version nor the ratified bill would cover existing leaks. A matter of money — the legislature couldn't come up with the estimated $25-30 million amount to clean up existing leaks and today's tank owners shouldn't be expected to pay for others' prior leaks.

Last year's bill created approximately $10 million of the one overall fund, not $15 million. Based on insurance company statistics and experience in other states with similar legislation, we believe the state's cleanup estimates of $15 million per year are grossly exaggerated.

As to standards, yes, we agree they are needed and EPA is in process of adopting some very stringent ones. Also, the Building Code of North Carolina which most local governments have adopted already incorporates a great many standards for underground tanks.

There are laws already on the books to protect the groundwater in North Carolina. The problem is that if the responsible party doesn't have any money, the State has very little money to enforce such laws. The Underground Leaking Tank Cleanup Fund will supplement that legislation and strengthen it immeasurably.

To the editor:

As a citizen of Greenville, I would like to publicly praise Greenville city council member Lorraine Shinn for her dedication and thoroughness in evaluating this year's submitted budget. She did her homework on this one! To understand a budget package of this magnitude in itself deserves compliment. In addition, Mrs. Shinn took the time to compare and weigh the growth of monies, staff and services with the current and past budgets.

We may not agree on an item-by-item budget evaluation, but I am assured of Mrs. Shinn's knowledge of and her devotion to the workings of city government and this community.

Taking The Advice Of Alger

RALEIGH — North Carolina banks have taken the advice of Horatio Alger: They've looked westward in pursuit of new riches.

But some legislators say the state's banks will find only trouble when they venture into Texas, and they fear that communities at home may suffer for it.

In June, the General Assembly expanded the state's Interstate Banking Act of 1984 to include Texas. North Carolina banks can now, through reciprocal legislation passed in Texas, buy Texas banks while Texas banks can buy North Carolina banks. But because of the weakened condition of the banking industry in the Lone Star State, Texas banks are not expected to move into North Carolina.

Most likely, the holding companies for North Carolina's three leading banks — NCNB, First Union and Wachovia — will enter the Texas market, buying up banks there and making loans. That's what troubled some House members who tried to stop the Texas bill.

"The whole economic climate down there bothers me," says Rep. David Redwine, D-Brunswick. "Their economy is based on oil, ranching and real estate and it's been proven that that is a volatile mix." Redwine worries that the strength of North Carolina banks will be undermined if they make loans in a market that is weak. If that happens, he worries what will happen to the lending market back home.

Sen. Harold Hardison, D-Lenoir, chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee and a leading proponent of the Texas bill, says Redwine and others were trying to "legislate intelligence," something the assembly has no power to do. The state's banks did not get as strong as they are by making bad loans, Hardison says, and they'll show enough wisdom to stay out of trouble when they get to Texas.

"Anybody can make a mistake," he says "but they can make a bad loan here in North Carolina, too."

Rep. Ray Fletcher, D-Burke, chairman of the House Banking Committee, countered Hardison's point, saying, "That's true. But your chances (of making a bad loan) in Texas are greater" because the economy is worse.

Still, Fletcher voted for the Texas banking bill because it became involved in a legislative trade-off with a bill he favored that will regulate some mortgage companies. About three-quarters of the state House also voted for Texas banking.

Hardison says that the state's banks, to stay healthy and independent, must keep growing. "Our bankers have far more capital than is in demand" in North Carolina, he says. If the banks don't expand their markets, they will not have enough places to lend their capital. "Texas is a good place to go and expand."

As the state's banks expand, and as they grow stronger, it is less likely that they'll be bought up by out-of-state banks. Strong independent native banks make North Carolina stronger, Hardison says. "Interstate banking (in the Southeast) has made the North Carolina banks as strong as the Atlanta banks." To date, no out-of-state bank has purchased a North Carolina bank under the reciprocity agreement in the 1984 Interstate act, but North Carolina banks have been very active through the South.

A tangential issue in the Texas debate was the recent movement, by the three major state banks, of credit card operations out of state. Rep. Alex Hall, D-New Hanover, says his opposition to Texas banking was a reaction to those moves, but Hardison counters that North Carolina law makes it difficult for banks to profit on credit cards.

No Shortage Of Clients

I was almost run over by a Maserati the other day. The driver was a friend we all call "Louie the Lawyer."

He had a huge grin on his face. "We're back in business," he said, wiping the windshield with a $100 bill.

"I didn't think lawyers were ever out of business," I answered.

"This is really big. We're talking about a scandal that could reach to the very top of the teapot on the Pentagon. We're looking down the road at hundreds of indictments of officers, civilians and defense contractors. This is a legal bonanza the likes of which Washington has never seen."

"How did it happen?"
"I guess we just got lucky."

"I'm not talking about you," I told Louie. "I mean how could so many people have committed so many criminal acts under the watchful eye of the vigilant Secretary of Defense?"

"Nobody committed any criminal acts, at least none that can be proven. That's the reason they all need lawyers. Our job is to prove their innocence, and if we can't do that, then we will at least plea-bargain with the government to keep them out of jail. Because it involves a great deal of work, it means we have to burn a lot of oil late into the night. But that's what we get paid for."

"How can you be sure that you will get paid?"

"We have to assume that all the clients who are pleading innocent have put away enough money from their activities to ensure that their lawyers' fees will be covered in case they're caught."

"I bet you there are some who didn't," I said.

"Then they will have to go to jail as common criminals. Lawyers have no use for indicted clients who don't think ahead."

"According to the newspapers, the players in the Pentagon scandal are Defense officials, consultants and contractors. Is there anybody you prefer to represent more than the others?"

"The defense contractors always come first in my book. They eat in the best restaurants, and the government rarely has the heart to send them to jail. White-collar tradition requires that the best way to make them atone for their sins is to get them to pay a fine. After contractors, I like to defend consultants because I can always ask the Justice Department to allow them to rat on clients in exchange for a suspended sentence."

"I didn't know that consultants rated on their own clients."

"It's not in the contract, but they'll do it if they have to. The last group, government employees, have to be examined with caution before I'll take them on as clients. I don't mind defending an Assistant Secretary of the Navy, or some general in charge of Engine Contracts for the Air Force, but I'm not going to help out an Army clerk who typed up the bids to competitors."

"Why not?"

"Because when it's all over, he's the guy they'll throw the book at. It doesn't matter how I plead him, they won't let him off because they want to teach all Pentagon clerks a lesson."

"Well, at least you have enough work to keep busy."

Louie said, "I thought 1987 was a vintage year for lawyers, but this summer is going to break all records. We've doubled our office space and because of the number of indictments our lawyers have agreed to make house calls."

"So this is your way of saying how happy all the lawyers in Washington are these days."

"Greed has been good to us."

DROUGHT HELP — N.C. Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham, right, helps his staff and volunteers load hay into trucks bound for drought-stricken Ohio farmers. Indian Says Martin, Hunt Will Be Called To Testify

By The Associated Press
It will be the government, in Raleigh and Robeson County, that will be on trial when two American Indians are tried for taking hostages at a Lumberton newspaper, one of the defendants has asserted.
"We're going to show through witnesses and documentation how we were literally forced to do this through negligence on the part of local and state, and to some extent, federal government," said Eddie Hatcher after being released from jail on a $100,000 unsecured bond.
In outlining what probably will be his and Timothy Jacobs' defense against federal hostage-taking and firearms charges, Hatcher said Wednesday officials were repeatedly presented information concerning alleged racial injustice and police corruption in Robeson County over the years, but failed to rectify the problem.
The 30-year-old Tuscarora Indian claimed his attorneys have compiled a list of 80 people to subpoena, including Gov. Jim Martin and former Gov. Jim Hunt, as well as state and U.S. representatives and officials with the FBI and State Bureau of Investigation whom he declined to name.

"We're going to be the law in the trial," he said. "They are going to have to answer the questions my lawyers ask."
Hatcher, dressed in jeans and moccasins and wearing a campaign hat of the slain Indian judicial candidate Julian Pierce, spent his first day of freedom in more than five months milling around his uncle's auto repair shop. He will be staying in Winston-Salem until his trial, which is scheduled for July 11 but likely will be postponed.
On Tuesday, U.S. Magistrate Charles McCotter, in allowing Hatcher and Jacobs, 19, free on bond, ordered them not to set foot in Robeson County and to check in with probation officials daily. Jacobs is living in Halifax County with a family friend.
The pair is accused of entering the Robesonian newspaper building in Lumberton on Feb. 1 armed with sawed-off shotguns and holding up to 20 people hostage. The hostages were released after Martin agreed to form a task force to investigate alleged corruption in the county.
The incident focused national attention on the rural county of 105,000 people divided almost evenly among whites, blacks and Indians.
Hatcher said he and Jacobs wanted to take over the Robeson County Courthouse, but didn't think two people could pull it off. He also said he was shocked by the deluge of media coverage the incident attracted.
Now that he's free, Hatcher said his "No. 1 priority" is keeping District Attorney Joe Freeman Britt from becoming a Superior Court judge.
Although Pierce, vying to become the state's first Indian elected Superior Court judge, was shot to death five weeks before the primary, he unofficially outpolled Britt by nearly 2,000 votes in May. Britt, a Democrat, is set to run unopposed in the November general election.
"I'm going to fight it til Jesus comes," Hatcher said. "(Britt) did not win the vote count. He won because he was the only one in the race. And that's not right."

Jacobs and Hatcher celebrated with their family and friends with a dinner and dancing at a New Bern hotel Tuesday night before heading in different directions.
"It really feels good to be back among my own people," Jacobs said. "I lost a lot of weight (in jail). Some of the food I just couldn't eat and lots of times I was so depressed I just didn't want to eat."
"It was quite an experience," he said. "I learned a lot about myself and my family — and who my friends are. I lost a lot of supposed old friends, kept the real ones and made some new friends."
"I've always heard that you find out who your real friends are when you're down," Jacobs said. "The way I feel about a lot of people has changed. A lot of people I was on the street with before didn't do a thing to try to help get me out or visit me or anything. I don't think I'll be going back around them again."

N.C. Farmers Return Favor By Shipping Hay To Drought-Stricken Ohio Growers

By PAUL NOWELL
Associated Press Writer
DAVIDSON, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina farmers showed their "Yankee friends" they have not been forgotten by sending more than 1,000 bales of hay to drought-stricken farmers in Ohio, agriculture officials said.
"This is a good will effort on our part to reciprocate for what they did for us two years ago," North Carolina Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham said as he threw another bale of fescue hay onto a tractor trailer at Joe Poteat's farm near Davidson. "We're paying them back."
Ohio was one of several Midwestern states that came to the aid of drought-ravaged farmers in North Carolina and other Southeastern states during the drought of 1986. This year, the Midwest has been suffering from what experts describe as the worst drought in 50 years.
"A lot of people are having it difficult in North Carolina, but not like two years ago," the 67-year-old Graham said. "Farmers are really hurting in Ohio, so we're sending them some high quality hay."
Two tractor trailers donated by Burlington Industries will transport the hay to the Gallia County Fairgrounds, where it will be distributed to farmers who need it the most, said agriculture officials.

Later Wednesday, a livestock truck loaded with about 450 bales of hay donated by Burlington-area farmers departed for Kentucky from the Piedmont Livestock Co.
Graham stressed that the haylift would not mean farmers in North Carolina — particularly those in the drought-ravaged southwestern mountains — would not get enough hay to feed their animals.
"We don't know of anyone who's in desperate shape right now," said Graham, who visited recently with dairy farmers in several southwestern counties. "If we get some moisture in the next week to 10 days we'll be OK. They (North Carolina farmers) promised to let me know if they need help."
State agriculture officials learned about the free hay when an associate of Poteat, Joe Vale, called the state's Hay Hotline, which was set up for farmers seeking hay or listing hay for sale.
"Every little bit helps and this is what we had to offer," Vale said as Graham and members of his department finished loading the second truck. "We want to contribute to the areas that helped our farmers two years ago."

Meanwhile, Alamance County livestock agent Paul Walker said Wednesday he is making arrangements to ship as many as 15 to 20 truckloads of hay to farmers in Kentucky, Ohio and western North Carolina.
"We've been pledged 3,682 square bales and 183 large round bales and five tractor trailers," said Walker, who is seeking donations to help pay for transporting the hay.
Wednesday was another scorcher for the Midwest, where dozens of record high temperatures were set, according to the National Weather Service. International Falls, Minn., sometimes called the nation's icebox, tied its all-time record high with 98 degrees. Flint, Mich., reached 101 degrees, the second time this year the all-time record — set on the Aug. 24, 1947 — was tied.
In the New Orleans area, thousands of people bought bottled drinking water because the drought has allowed salt water to push up the Mississippi from the gulf.
"I have a dog that refuses to drink it. It's salty, very salty," Shirley Ellard said of water drawn at Port Sulphur, about midway between the mouth of the river and New Orleans.

On the Mississippi River, the drought has lowered water levels, forcing barge traffic into the man-made 243-mile-long Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway, which ends at Mobile.
In Kentucky, barges and tows were moving through the channel near the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers.
On the Ohio River, a U.S. Army Corps of Engineers team surveyed the shallow channel in Ballard County on Wednesday to determine whether it should be closed again for dredging, said Petty Officer 3rd Class John Moss of the U.S. Coast Guard.
"It may be necessary to close the channel for one or two days later this week," Moss said.
By Wednesday afternoon, there was no backlog of tow boats and barges waiting to pass through the channel near the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, Moss said. It marked the first time since the channel reopened Sunday that the boats did not have to wait in line.
Meanwhile, the drought was showing no favoritism among Ohio crops — wilting corn and soybeans as well as young Christmas trees and marijuana plants.
The drought killed all 2,500 Christmas tree seedlings in Clinton County that Don Chafin planted this year at his farm in southwest Ohio.
In nearby Ross County, Sheriff Thomas Hamman said marijuana needs as much water as other crops, and growers "are going to have to water it by hand," or create an irrigation system.
"The people that grow the million-dollar crop will take a lot more care of their plants," said Mike Webb of the Ohio attorney general's office.
Some growers have dug water pits, usually lined with plastic, and haul water from the pits to the illegal plants, he said.
Authorities aren't offering any relief to the pot growers, however. Officers began their marijuana eradication program earlier than usual this year because of the drought.

Reprimand

RALEIGH (AP) — The North Carolina Board of Ethics has reprimanded one of the governor's appointees to the Coastal Resources Commission for violating state conflict-of-interest rules during a recent vote.
In recommendations to Gov. Jim Martin on Wednesday, the board said Martin should remove Ronald O. Watson from the commission should further conflict of interest become "apparent." Watson is a developer from Emerald Isle.
"The governor accepts the recommendations of the board of ethics. He considers the findings and recommendations to be a reprimand and a final warning," said Jim Sughrue, Martin's press secretary.
Watson appeared before the board Wednesday afternoon in response to a complaint from the N.C. Wildlife Federation.

Senate Panel Debates Fairness Of Automatic DWI Revocation

By MARTHA WAGGONER
Associated Press Writer
RALEIGH (AP) — The fairness of automatic revocations for people who register .10 or more on the breathalyzer after a drunken driving arrest was debated in a Senate committee which was considering a bill to increase the revocation period to 30 days.
"The point of this bill is to punish people. That's what we're doing," said Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe. "We're increasing the punishment. But we're punishing people in this bill who have never been found guilty, and I don't know of any other crime that we do that for. If a person robs a store in front of two policemen and the evidence is obvious, clearly guilty, we still don't punish him until after we've tried him and found him guilty."
The Senate Finance Committee did not vote Wednesday on the bill, which would increase the automatic revocation to 30 days from 10 days for drivers arrested for DWI who have a blood alcohol content of .10 percent or more. The committee could vote today on that bill and another DWI measure, also sponsored by Rep. Coy Privette, R-Cabarrus. That bill would lower the legal blood alcohol content for commercial drivers to .01 percent.

The bill originally lowered the legal limit for commercial drivers to .04 percent. Winner and Sen. Paul Smith, R-Rowan, said they plan to file an amendment to put the limit back to .04 percent.
Winner said a .01 limit put too much faith in the machine, especially since some items, such as menthol, could cause a reading on the breathalyzer.
But Tuesday's discussion centered on the pretrial revocation. Winner said he would support a 30-day revocation after a defendant had been found guilty but not before.

The North Carolina Supreme Court has upheld the constitutionality of automatic revocations.
Frances Wells, president of the North Carolina chapter of Mothers Against Drunken Driving, said a person arrested for DWI tried himself and proved himself guilty when his blood alcohol content was .10 percent or more.
"The point that the driver has blown a .10 on the breathalyzer is in itself a proof of his guilt," she said.

IN THE STATE

Convention

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin is planning to spend three days at the Republican National Convention in New Orleans next month but he said he won't be a delegate.

Martin said scheduling conflicts would prevent him from attending the entire GOP convention, but that his schedule had been juggled to allow him to be on hand three of the five days.

Martin denied some Democrats' contention that he wanted to keep a low profile there because he didn't want to be associated with Vice President George Bush, the likely GOP presidential nominee.

Martin said he expects Bush to carry North Carolina and the nation and that the vice president will not be a drag on the state's Republican ticket, though he probably won't have the same coattail effect that President Reagan did in 1984.

Escapees Sought

VERO BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A nationwide alert has gone out for two North Carolina prison escapees identified as prime suspects in the execution-style slayings of three Domino's Pizza workers.

Michael Lovette, 29, and Tommy Wyatt, 24, escaped from the minimum-security road crew near North Wilkesboro, N.C., on May 13 — four days before the Domino's killings.

"These men ... have been known to be violent. They should be considered armed and extremely dangerous," said David Morgan, assistant state attorney and spokesman for the task force probing the murders.

Domino's manager trainee William E. Edwards, 27, and his wife, Frances Edwards, 29, were found dead in a back storage room at the Vero Beach restaurant. A co-worker, Masoud Mathew Bornoosh, 27, died May 22 of his injuries.

The prison escapees are also believed to have killed Cathy Nydegger, 26, of Hillsborough County, and dumped her body May 20 on a canal bank near Vero Beach, Morgan said. Like the Domino's victims, she was shot in the head with a .38-caliber revolver.

No arrest warrants have been issued for Lovette and Wyatt, but the two are being sought for questioning, Morgan said.

Family Reunion

WILMINGTON (AP) — After 35 years of searching, Robert Max Malone of Iowa found his father and the family he never knew existed.

Malone, 49, was greeted with hugs and handshakes Wednesday at the New Hanover County Airport by his half-brother Robert Oren Malone Jr., 40, and half-sister Roberta Hammond, 45, of Verona. Before Monday, they had only heard that their father had another son by a woman he was married to before he married their mother.

Robert M. Malone grew up in Ohio, but later moved to Woodward, Iowa, which is just north of Des Moines. He planned to spend three days with his new-found family before returning home to Iowa, but he said he would stay in touch.

Court Session

DURHAM (AP) — Richard Lee Hunt of Durham spat at one television cameraman and tried to hit another outside Durham District Court in his first court appearance on charges of first-degree kidnapping and firing a gun within the city limits, court officials said Wednesday.

In Hunt's brief appearance before District Court Judge R.L. Warren, attorney Douglas M. Holmes was appointed to represent Hunt.

Hunt's nearly eight-hour standoff with police ended early Tuesday when a friend persuaded him to give up, police said.

Hunt, 29, was being held on $500,000 bond after being charged with holding his girlfriend hostage during the ordeal.

Report Available

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — High Point and Guilford County Commissioners have the power to examine a confidential State Bureau of Investigation report containing references to county attorney Bill Trevor, an authority on governmental law said Wednesday.

Steve Allred, a staff attorney for the N.C. Institute of Government in Chapel Hill, said state law governing the privacy of employee personnel records would allow any commissioner to examine the report, copies of which now rest in the personnel file of Frank Wilson, former director of the county's Social Services Department.

Commissioner chairman Dot Kearns on Tuesday labeled the document "a confidential, privileged report" when asked why commissioners had not asked to examine the SBI report.

The SBI compiled the report after investigating a controversial child custody case in which a Greensboro man earlier convicted of assaulting a young boy obtained custody of another young boy. An investigation by the Guilford Board of Social Services of Wilson's involvement resulted in his resignation.

Assault

BURLINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Two Alamance County men have been charged with assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill inflicting serious injury after a Burlington man was shot Tuesday morning, officials said.

Ronald Demont Miles, 17, of Burlington was shot in the left thigh with one bullet from a small-caliber firearm. He was transported to Alamance County Hospital for emergency medical treatment and later released.

Rufus Daniel Maye Jr., 16, of Burlington, and Stephen Craig Winn, 16, of Altamahaw were charged in the shooting.

Detective Lt. Steve Lynch of the Burlington Police Department said the shot that injured Miles was fired from a pick-up truck. Lynch said people in the truck made racial slurs toward Miles and Wade, then shots were fired.

Maye and Winn were being held in the Alamance County Jail under a $20,000 secured bond each.

Bike Death

DURHAM (AP) — A 54-year-old Durham County postal clerk was killed when he fell and hit his head while riding his daughter's bike to test its brakes, officials said.

James Douglas Mangum was found dead by a passing motorist at 7 p.m. Tuesday, Sgt. Raymond Isley of the state Highway Patrol said Wednesday. Mangum was breathing but unconscious when found, Isley said.

He was declared dead on arrival at Durham County General Hospital.

Isley said Mangum's 11-year-old daughter had ridden the bicycle down the same stretch earlier. She lost control of the bicycle on a hill and jumped off.

Mangum was testing the bicycle on the hill when the accident occurred, Isley said.

Child Killed

ALAMANCE, N.C. (AP) — A two-car crash south of Burlington claimed the life of a 2-year-old child Tuesday evening, officials said.

Lowell Kennedy Hyder was killed in the 7:50 p.m. accident when the car in which he was riding was stuck by another car approximately five miles south of Burlington near the Alamance Battleground.

No Summons

KENANSVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A police officer here has been charged with failing to serve himself with a summons in a civil case.

Linwood Kennedy, a Kenansville police officer, was charged by State Bureau of Investigation Agent J.S. Zawistowski with fraudulently taking a court document, a misdemeanor. According to the arrest warrant, Kennedy removed from court documents a summons issued to Kennedy in a civil case against him.

"The fraudulent purpose was that the defendant intended to delay and prevent service of said summons upon himself," the warrant said.

Abandoned Baby

RALEIGH (AP) — Garner police were searching for the mother of a newborn girl abandoned Wednesday afternoon hours after birth. A 17-year-old youth found the baby in his car at a Garner swimming pool.

The infant was reported in good condition Wednesday night at Wake Medical Center in Raleigh, said hospital spokeswoman Elizabeth McRoberts.

Todd Graden, a rising senior at Garner High School and a part-time lifeguard at the Claymore Road pool, said it appeared the girl had been born very recently because the umbilical cord was still attached.

A woman at the pool helped Graden bring the infant inside and called police. A Garner rescue team took the infant to Wake Medical Center.

Gas Leak

ROSEBORO, N.C. (AP) — About 125 people were evacuated for a little more than an hour Wednesday while emergency workers repaired a break in a natural gas line, officials said.

The gas line was broken around 10 a.m. by someone operating a backhoe, said Debbie Honeycutt, assistant to the director for Sampson County Emergency Management. She said the evacuees from Brentwood Apartments were taken to a nearby middle school until repairs were completed.

Samurai Sales Fall Sharply

NEW YORK (AP) — The Suzuki Samurai collided head-on with bad publicity in June as allegations that it was prone to roll over contributed to a 70.6 percent drop in sales from a year earlier.

Consumers Union, the group that blasted the Samurai, said the drop was a "good sign" if it was the result of the group's report alleging that the boxy, four-wheel-drive vehicle was dangerous in certain situations.

American Suzuki Motor Corp. said Wednesday it sold 2,199 Samurais in June, the least since December 1985, which was the month after the vehicle's U.S. introduction.

Suzuki sold 7,479 Samurais in June 1987 and 6,074 in May of this year, when concerns about the Suzuki already had begun to spread through the buying public.

Suzuki has maintained the Consumers Union tests were biased and inaccurate, but dealers said potential buyers were unnerved by dramatic television news clips of the vehicle tilting over during driving tests.

Suzuki said it was not surprised by the decline, expected sales to increase in coming months, and remained confident of the Samurai's safety.

Consumers Union, the non-profit publisher of Consumer Reports magazine, has said Suzuki should recall the vehicle and give owners refunds.

Asked for comment on the sales figures, Consumers Union spokesman David Berliner said, "It is a reflection in any way of the public giving credence to our findings, then I think that is a good sign."

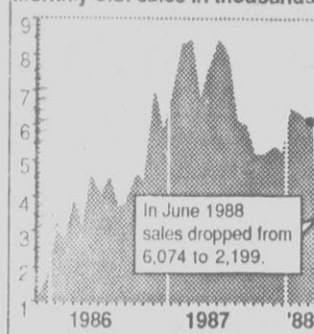

Consumers Union said June 2 that the Samurai tends to roll over when the driver swerves sharply back and forth to avoid an accident. The Mount Vernon, N.Y.-based group gave the vehicle its first "not acceptable" rating in 10 years.

Suzuki is not planning to withdraw the Samurai from the market in response to the poor June sales, said Bob Fisher, a representative of the company's public relations agency, Rogers & Associates.

For the first six months of 1988, Samurai sales were down to 31,221 from 12,900 a year earlier, according to American Suzuki, the Brea, Calif.-based subsidiary of Japan's Suzuki Motor Co. Ltd.

Auto Makers Report Sales Spurt In June

DETROIT (AP) — Car shoppers in a healthy economy, lured by sophisticated incentive programs, are likely to continue buying at the higher-than-expected, accelerated pace set in the first half of the year, industry analysts say.

The Big Three domestic automakers — General Motors Corp., Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp. — reported on Wednesday a jump in their sales rates during the June 21-30 period and for the first half of 1988.

Combined domestic car and light truck sales totaled 459,918 during the late-June period this year, against 359,784 in the same period last year, a jump of 13.6 percent in daily sales rate.

The late-June period had nine selling days this year and eight in 1987, so percentage comparisons are made on the basis of daily sales rates rather than total sales.

Combined domestic car and light truck sales totaled 1,179,862 for June, an 8.5 percent increase in daily sales, and 6,184,576 for the year through June 30, up 11 percent from the first half of 1987.

"We see sales for the rest of the year as pretty good, with a possible soft spot in October," said Thomas O'Grady, an analyst with Integrated Automotive Resources Inc. in Wayne, Pa.

A 10-year pull might occur as buyers wait for what incentives will be offered on newly introduced 1989 models in dealers' showrooms, he said.

Among imports, car and light truck sales totaled 333,004 for the month, down 1.2 percent, and 1,874,904 for the first half of the year, down 1.5 percent.

For the June 21-30 sales period, Ford sold 29,927 cars, a 27.4 percent jump in daily sales. For the year through June 30, Ford sold 1,161,574 cars, a 13.8 percent increase over the first half of 1987.

General Motors sold 144,205 cars in late June, an 18 percent jump, and 1,952,402 for the first six months, a 9.9 percent increase.

Chrysler sold 40,817 cars in late June, up 3.4 percent a day, and 574,609 for the first half of 1988, up 14.3 percent.

Sales were helped by the success of new models, such as General Motors' GM 10 models — the Buick Regal, Oldsmobile Cutlass and Pontiac Grand Prix, O'Grady said.

Sales also were boosted by U.S. automakers' increasing adeptness at offering incentives, by offering shorter programs and more frequent changes in affected models, such as sales peaks and valleys the programs once triggered, he said.

Misfired Shell Hits Marines

POHAKULOA, Hawaii (AP) — A misfired mortar shell exploded among a platoon of Marines at the Army's training area here, killing two and wounding 15, a Marine spokesman said.

The platoon of about 30 Marines was conducting live fire exercises with 60mm shells at about 8:30 p.m. Wednesday when the mortar round accidentally landed among the group, said Maj. Kerry K. Gershaneck, the public affairs officer at the Kaneohe Marine Corps Air Station on the island of Oahu.

"We had a company of infantry Marines who were practicing night defense fire," he said. "That is, all the fire, all the weapons and ammunition that would normally be used at company level were being fired simultaneously."

The injured, all suffering shrapnel wounds, were treated at medical facilities at Pohakuloa Training Area, located on Hawaii Island, and at Hilo and Kona hospital, where they were taken by a military helicopter, Gershaneck said.

Two of the injured Marines were in serious condition, he said.

Three Marines were taken to Hilo hospital, where officials declined to discuss their conditions, referring questions to the military.

Nine Marines were taken to Kona Hospital where Nursing Supervisor Patty Haupt said "most are what they call 'walking wounded.' We're mostly looking at stray shrapnel wounds."

She said there was no immediate determination of their conditions.

The names of the dead and injured were withheld, pending notification of families.

Just how the mortar happened to land among the Marines "probably will not come out until after the investigation," said William E. Buck, the deputy public affairs officer.

"It wasn't fired from the same location as the Marines, but the actual circumstances are under investigation," he said.

Petty Officer 1st Class George Bakke, a corpsman helping treat Marines at Kona Hospital, said he could not let any of the Marines speak with reporters. "They've been told not to talk to anyone," he said.

The platoon was part of the Marine 2nd Battalion, 3rd Marine Regiment stationed at Kaneohe. The battalion of more than 800 Marines is halfway through a monthlong training exercise at Pohakuloa, Gershaneck said.

Pohakuloa is an isolated military training ground located at the 7,000-foot elevation on the southwest flank of the 13,976-foot Mauna Kea, Hawaii's tallest mountain, about 200 miles from Honolulu, on Oahu.

A mortar is a muzzle-loaded, high-angle weapon in which the round is dropped down the muzzle. A firing pin in the weapon detonates a charge on the bottom of the round, hurling it several hundred yards.

Forest Fire Threatens Mount Rushmore

CUSTER, S.D. (AP) — A runaway forest fire eating its way toward Mount Rushmore today charred more than 8,000 acres and prompted evacuation of up to 1,000 residents and tourists near the national memorial, authorities said.

"When we told them (residents and campers) it was burning 1,000 acres per hour ... and it was three miles away, they kind of believed us," said Sgt. Howard Brunner of the Pennington County Sheriff's Department, who helped evacuate the town of Keystone.

The blaze, which shot billows of smoke so high its pall was visible 160 miles away, also threatened the park's Game Lodge, summer White House for two presidents. No structures have been destroyed.

"It's a very serious situation," Jerry Hagen, fire information officer with the U.S. Forest Service, said early today. The fire in Custer State Park and the Black Hills National Forest was within three miles of Mount Rushmore this morning. All entrances to the park were closed Wednesday.

"The fire is extremely erratic and very frustrating to fight," Hagen said.

Brunner said the pace of the fire was slowed somewhat this morning when the winds shifted back toward the fire.

About 400 firefighters battled the fire in a steep, rocky area on Wednesday, but were forced to abandon their lines at nightfall. About 1,000 firefighters were expected to be on the scene early today.

One firefighter suffered a minor injury, Hagen said.

The fire was fueled by a continuing drought that has created extremely dry timber. Smoke was billowing thousands of feet into the air and the plume was visible from Rapid City 25 miles away. A haze from the smoke hung over a large part of western South Dakota and was visible from Pierre, 160 miles away.

Pennington County sheriff's officials knocked on doors in the tourist town of Keystone and at the memorial asking people to leave early today, Hagen said. He estimated between 300 and 400 people were being evacuated; 600 were evacuated earlier from Custer State Park.

"There was a continuous line of cars from Keystone to Rapid City, but from all reports it went smoothly," Hagen said.

Keystone, about two miles from Mount Rushmore, has only about 300 residents, but it attracts thousands of tourists. A National Guard official in Custer estimated Wednesday night that 1,500 to 2,000 people would have to leave the area because it is the height of the tourist season.

Neither the town nor the monument was in immediate danger this morning, but the evacuation was a precaution in case the fire expands in their direction, said a dispatcher at the fire center who refused to give his name.

Employees who work at Mount Rushmore and park officials also were asked to leave, Hagen said.

Evacuees fled to a Red Cross shelter in Rapid City or to the National Guard armory in Custer.

Authorities believe lightning started the fire in the north-central part of the 73,000-acre park Monday night. It was not spotted until Tuesday afternoon.

Debris Forces Beach Closing

MINEOLA, N.Y. (AP) — Blood vials, syringes and other hospital waste washed up on Long Island beaches, prompting authorities to ban swimming along a 25-mile stretch that includes two popular state parks.

Meanwhile in New Jersey, officials said Wednesday that five of the 104 blood-filled vials that washed up on its shores last weekend contained AIDS-contaminated blood. Another two dozen vials were found Wednesday.

The affected area on Long Island stretches across the Island's South Shore on the Atlantic.

Technicians were analyzing the debris, including bags of waste and balls of grease, collected Wednesday from several beaches. The Nassau County Health Department recommended that the state, county and town beaches remain closed to swimming until the water is determined safe, said Shelly Domash, a department spokeswoman.

"It's the unknown — you don't know what it is or what it's carrying," said Ronald F. Foley, regional director of the New York State Parks. "We wanted to be on the safe side."

On a typical weekday, 50,000 to 60,000 people visit Jones Beach and Robert Moses state parks, with up to 15 percent swimming, he said. On weekends, as many as 200,000 go to Jones Beach and about 40,000 to Robert Moses, which is 10 miles east.

A heat wave has just begun, with forecasters predicting temperatures in the 90s through the weekend.

Domash said officials were trying to figure out where the debris came from and whether it was related to the debris that washed up in New Jersey.

The last time the parks' beaches were closed in New York was 1976 when sewage washed up, Foley said.

The New Jersey Health Department announced Wednesday that five vials discovered last weekend in Bayonne showed evidence of the AIDS antibody. It was the second time in a month that vials had washed ashore in New Jersey.

Bush Says Hispanic Needed In Cabinet

By ROBERT GREENE
Associated Press Writer

Michael Dukakis was finding some relief from a politically embarrassing budget crisis in his home state as Vice President George Bush pledged to right "a wrong that has been out there for many years" and appoint a Hispanic American to his Cabinet.

Dukakis, the Massachusetts governor, was spending most of today in his Statehouse office before heading West for three days of campaigning. He was preparing to review a proposed fiscal 1989 state budget compromise.

Massachusetts House and Senate leaders agreed late Wednesday on a compromise budget of $11.75 billion that would increase state spending by about 4 percent.

Dukakis was forced to seek emergency spending authority this week to keep government functioning. Massachusetts faces a $450 million deficit on an $11 billion budget in the just-ended fiscal year.

Dukakis has been highly critical of the Reagan administration's deficit spending, and Republicans are planning to make political hay of his troubles.

"It could turn out to be the Achilles heel of the Dukakis presidential campaign," said state Sen. Paul Cellucci, a Massachusetts coordinator for the Bush campaign.

Dukakis, for his part, continued to attack the ethical standards of the Reagan administration, saying the resignation of Attorney General Edwin Meese III does not erase the administration's shoddy record.

"If someone in my administration is caught breaking the law, we won't make excuses for him, we'll prosecute him," he told a friendly audience of Greek Americans in Boston.

Bush was traveling to Boston tonight to address the same ethnic group at a Greek Orthodox diocesan dinner. Aides said Bush was going to talk about the importance of religion.

Dukakis was traveling to Dallas tonight to address a convention of the League of United Latin American Citizens, the same group to whom Bush promised Wednesday he would make a Hispanic appointment.

Bush said after addressing LULAC, the largest and oldest Hispanic American civic group, that he would not go around the country making the same promise to other special interest groups.

"Other groups have been represented in the Cabinet and Hispanics have not," said Bush.

"I will be very open-minded and broad-based in who I select to serve in my Cabinet, but I'm addressing myself to righting a wrong that has been out there for many years," he said.

Oscar Moran, the group's president, said Bush "attracted the attention of some voters who already decided on Dukakis."

But Tony Bonilla, an influential Democrat in the group, said it was "a little patronizing" for Bush to make such a statement after serving eight years in the Reagan administration without a Hispanic in the inner circle.

Hispanics are a politically important group, especially in key battleground states like Texas, California and Florida. Dukakis' command of Spanish gives him an advantage in competing for votes from those groups.

Dukakis met for more than an hour Wednesday with 20 national civil rights leaders, including NAACP executive director Benjamin Hooks, National Urban League President John Jacob, the Rev. Joseph Lowery of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and Coretta Scott King, the widow of Martin Luther King Jr.

"I cannot recall an issue he disagreed with us on," Hooks said. But whether blacks will support Dukakis without Jesse Jackson on the ticket is largely up to Jackson, Hooks said.

Jackson, meanwhile, met with Arab leaders at the United Nations. Afterward he emphasized that the shooting down of an Iranian passenger jet by a U.S. ship in the Persian Gulf was "an accident, an error."

Jackson called for a period of mourning for the victims of the attack and urged the United States to pay reparations to the victims' families.

EAL Unions Say Pact Isn't A 'Total Cure'

MIAMI (AP) — Eastern Airlines' unions and management are not ready to declare peace is at hand, despite an agreement to separate safety issues from their other disputes.

The pact announced Wednesday comes a month after federal investigators warned that safety could be threatened at financially-troubled Eastern, the nation's sixth-largest airline, if its labor problems were not resolved quickly.

"The key word to use is 'guardedly' optimistic because there's been such an extended period of mistrust," said J.B. Stokes, a spokesman for the Eastern local of the Air Line Pilots Association, which represents 3,500 pilots. "You have to be somewhat cautious."

The deal spells out procedures for the company and its 32,500 workers to discuss complaints and disagreements.

"We are optimistic and hopeful this will represent a breakthrough in relations," said Charles E. Bryan, district president of the Machinists union, Eastern's largest labor group with 12,000 members. "We don't think this is going to be a total cure for all the problems of Eastern."

Judy Coughlin, secretary-treasurer of the Transport Workers Union local, representing 7,000 Eastern flight attendants, said her union was skeptical of the deal but supported any attempt to improve safety.

Robin Matell, a company spokesman, said Eastern would not characterize the agreement beyond a statement by President Phil Bakes, who said the pact would keep safety out of collective bargaining issues. But Bakes also noted it was essential to complete negotiations on economic issues with the machinists and pilots unions.

Former Labor Secretary William E. Brock, chosen by federal officials on June 2 to find ways to ease Eastern's labor-management relations, said he found "tensions were accelerated to an unbelievable level" between the two sides.

Years of disputes, including lawsuits, lobbying in Congress and negative newspaper advertisements, have made passengers afraid to fly Eastern and had created a situation where the airline is losing $1 million daily, Brock said.

Transportation Secretary James H. Burnley IV called the agreement a good beginning and said federal inspectors would continue stepped-up monitoring of Eastern "to assure the flying public that it remains a safe, fit airline."

The pact calls for the establishment of a master safety committee comprised of top company and union officials, which will help resolve safety problems pointed out by employees.

Panels will be established throughout the country at which local managers and union leaders will attempt to resolve issues such as captains' authority, the handling of complaint calls, training of maintenance workers and a study of workplace injuries.

Eastern has been marked by labor-management conflicts for more than a decade, as a period of cooperation under former Chairman Frank Borman deteriorated and led to the money-losing airline's sale in 1986 to Houston-based Texas Air Corp.

Texas Air's management led by Chairman Frank Lorenzo heightened tensions by saying Eastern had to cut its labor costs by up to 30 percent. Eastern lost $241 million last year, and Texas Air lost $466 million.

Soviets End Tests At U.S. Missile Sites

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Soviet missile inspectors left today after completing checks at two U.S. intermediate-range nuclear rocket sites in West Germany.

It was the first Soviet inspection in West Germany under the superpower treaty aimed at eliminating all medium- and shorter-range nuclear weapons.

The 19 Soviet missile specialists departed from Frankfurt's Rhein-Main Air Base for Moscow aboard an Aeroflot IL62 aircraft. They made no comments to reporters before leaving.

U.S. Air Force Col. John Fer, chief of the European field office of the On-site Inspection Agency, said the inspections went according to expectations.

"Both sides conducted themselves according to the terms of the INF treaty," Fer said.

The Intermediate Nuclear Forces treaty, signed by the United States and the Soviet Union in December, calls for the elimination of nuclear missiles with a range of 300 to 3,000 miles.

N.Y. Hotels Increase Services And Prices

By HARRY BERKOWITZ
L.A. Times-Washington Post
News Service

NEW YORK — As workers erect what will be New York City's tallest hotel on West 54th Street, Karl Hofer is mapping plans to make the Royal Concordia one of the highest-rated — even including a grand piano or antique billiard table in each of the six royal suites.

But many other New York hotels also are heaping on extras — free shoeshines, extra phone lines, lavish decor and terry cloth robes. So Hofer, the Royal Concordia's general manager, also will concentrate on making sure the staff provides service to justify rates of more than $250 a night for each of the 510 suites.

"We could put golden doorknobs on everything, but if the service is not up to par, forget it," said Hofer, who a decade ago opened and managed the posh Helmsley Palace.

The 54-story Royal Concordia is one of dozens of new, planned or existing hotels in Manhattan that are trying to fine-tune their identities in an increasingly competitive and demanding hotel market that has become by far the most expensive in the nation and also one of the strongest.

In recent years, that market has been boosted by the city's strong attraction for tourists and business travelers. Arts offerings and packages, favorable currency that appeal to foreigners, Times Square area and a convention market aided the industry.

"I went from a bad city in the 1950s to a good city to go to," said Stephen W. Brener, a hotel industry consultant. "Now, people are flocking here."

At the same time, developers face huge costs for land, construction and labor in the city.

The strategies that hotels are adopting are wide-ranging:

Donald Trump, who vows to restore luster and a top rating to The Plaza, tried unsuccessfully to lure classy cafe entertainer Bobby Short from the Carlyle and may reopen the Persian Room. Sheraton and Equitable Life have just closed the once-premier St. Regis to renovate or possibly sell it. The Waldorf Towers is splitting up some of its biggest multibedroom suites to create more guest rooms. New hotels like Maxim's de Paris are competing for charity balls and parties, for celebrities that polish a hotel's image and for the title of best pamperer.

Even hotel chains that are aiming for the mid-market are making special adjustments for Manhattan. The Holiday Inn Crowne Plaza, for instance, will put aside six private floors, or 20 percent of its 30 floors here for extra-service business customers, rather than the usual 10 percent. The extras include cocktail hour and d'oeuvres and complimentary breakfast.

Amid all the activity, room rates are soaring.

Last year, the average room rate in the city topped $111 a night, compared with $68.70 nationwide, and a double at The Plaza goes for as high as $450. The presidential suite at the Intercontinental lists at $5,000 a night.

"The proportion of rooms in the city at the upper-middle to the upper end of the market is growing, while the overall total number of rooms is remaining stable," said John Fox, senior principal at Pannell Kerr Forster, an international accounting firm based in Manhattan that specializes in the hotel industry. "The question becomes how long can rates continue to grow at the same pace."

Even at the few new hotels that are aiming for "budget" status, rates are steep. Journey's End Corp., a 97-hotel chain based in Belleville, Ontario, says it will charge $110 for a single at the Journey's Court Hotel in Manhattan, compared to $65 for its next-highest-priced hotel in Toronto.

"We see New York as having one of the hottest hotel markets in North America," said Glen Nicholson, vice president for business development at Journey's End.

While developers in many cities overbuilt in the early 1980s and often suffered foreclosures as a result, the high cost of land in Manhattan and the booming market for office construction limited the amount of hotel construction and helped avoid a glut. In fact, the number of hotel rooms — about 98,000 — is still lower than in 1975, thanks to the closing or temporary closing for renovation of some older hotels.

New York occupancy rates topped 76 percent last year, the highest since 1980. With the help of an expected strong summer full of European and Japanese tourists, it may duplicate that this year, despite a slow start, industry officials and analysts said. The nationwide average hotel occupancy rate among U.S. cities was 66.2 percent, and the only city with a higher rate than New York's was Honolulu, at 86.8 percent.

Reagans Celebrate Nancy's Birthday

By MERRILL HARTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — First lady Nancy Reagan capped a busy birthday by attending "Les Miserables" at the Kennedy Center Opera House, where the cast of the musical sang "Happy Birthday" and presented her with a cake.

Mrs. Reagan, escorted by President Reagan, blew out the single candle on the large one-layer cake with white frosting as the first couple mingled with the cast during intermission.

When an actress asked Mrs. Reagan whether "this makes you want to get back into show business," the first lady replied: "Yes. You'll save a place for us?"

Reagan quipped that this "is much different than 'Bedtime For Bozo,' one of the not-so-famous movies in which he played a leading role.

Reagan, 77, joked with the cast that when age sets in, three things happen: "First, you start to forget things, uh, and I can't remember the other two."

Claude-Michel Schonberg, one of the adapters of the classic Victor Hugo novel about social injustice in 19th century France, sent a telegram congratulating Mrs. Reagan.

Noting he shared her birthday, he said, "Great people are always born on the same day."

Accompanying the Reagans to the theater were the president's daughter, Maureen Reagan, and her husband, Dennis Revell, along with former Sen. Paul Laxalt and his wife, Carole.

Although there's no disputing the day, the date of Mrs. Reagan's birthday is a sensitive subject around the White House.

Her official biography lists her birthdate as July 6, 1923, but her high school and college records record the year as 1921, making Wednesday her 67th birthday.

Earlier Wednesday, Mrs. Reagan was treated to lunch at a country inn, L'Auberge Chez Francois, in suburban Great Falls, Va., where the staff presented her with a decorative ceramic teapot. She was also given a song specially written for her by composer Marvin Hamlisch, a frequent White House visitor.

Sunlight Exposure Can Damage Fabric

Question: I have recently washed some curtains and the fabric was torn at the end of the wash cycle. Do you have any ideas for what might have caused this?

Answer: Damage to curtains during laundering is most likely the result of sunlight damage. Long exposure to sunlight weakens the fibers and shortens the life of the fabric. These weakened fabrics will often tear during normal laundering.

To avoid damage while laundering articles that have been exposed to long periods of sunlight, we offer the following suggestions:

- 1) Use a gentle or delicate cycle to wash the items.
 - 2) Launder curtains and washable draperies before they become heavily soiled to extend their life.
 - 3) Protect the curtains by washing them in a mesh bag or pillowcase.
- These guidelines should help avoid such fabric damage in the future.

Question: My teenagers have purchased several pairs of stone-washed and acid-washed jeans. Will the life of the jeans be affected? Are there procedures to follow to do this at home?

Answer: Both stone-washed and acid-washed jeans have become popular recently. According to the American Association of Textile Chemists and Colorists similar processes are used for stone-washed and acid-washed jeans, but specific treatments differ from one manufacturer to another. The results of the processes look different and may perform differently as well.

Stone-washed jeans are manufactured by tumbling the jeans in heavy steel washers with volcanic rock (lava), enzymes, softeners and sometimes bleach. The rock actually wears away the surface of the dyed yarns in the denim so the fabric feels softer and has a softer blue color as the bleached or undyed yarns show through. You may notice that stone-washed articles show signs of wear sooner than non-stone-washed garments as the process causes some strength loss.

Acid-washed jeans (white-frosted) get their high-contrast and wrinkled looking white look or blue appearance by treating the jeans with volcanic rock. This has been soaked in hydrochloric acid. This harsh and fast surface treatment attacks the dye on the surface of the fibers leaving them with a white or frosted appearance. This process may reduce strength and durability by as much as 25-50 percent. When garments are sewn before the acid-rock finishing, the seams may be weakened so they break open easily.

It is impossible to duplicate these commercial processes at home as the washer would be affected. Nor do we recommend applying full strength liquid chlorine bleach. This can cause cotton fabrics to turn yellow, develop holes, or weaken so much that they split and fall apart.

However, there are products available (such as Rit's Fast Fade) that speed up the natural fading of cotton jeans. As long as these projects are made for use specifically in "in-home" washers and the directions are carefully followed the washer should not be affected.

Singers Try For Harmony In Fierce Competition

By DAVID SEDENO
Associated Press Writer
SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — With the tough competition of the "Olympics of barbershop singing" only a day away, hundreds of vocalists found harmony in hotel lobbies and halls as they belted out familiar tunes.

But all bets were off today, when more than 1,000 barbershop quartet and chorus singers compete at the 50th International Convention of the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barbershop Quartet Singing in America.

Fifty-one quartets will battle for five finalist positions, while 16 choruses of 50 men each vie for five spots.

The finals are set for Saturday, with one gold, one silver and three bronze medals up for grabs in each category. The gold medal winners are the international champions.

"This is the Olympics of barbershop singing and all of them have had to battle on the local level to get here," international president James Warner, a lawyer from Memphis, Tenn., said Wednesday. "It will be a tough competition because there is a lot of prestige that goes with the medals."

The competition may be fierce, but in virtually every corner of the Henry B. Gonzalez Convention Center and hotels Wednesday, many unfamiliar foursomes gathered like old chums and stretched their vocal chords.

Barbershop quartets, which cropped up mainly on the East Coast at the turn of the century and became popular during the vaudeville era, use four-part harmonies to carry tunes.

The lead singer carries the melody. A tenor harmonizes and a baritone and a bass handle the lower chords.

Barbershop quartets began fading when vaudeville was replaced by other forms of music and motion pictures in the aftermath of World War I.

But in 1938, Owen C. Cash, a Tulsa, Okla., tax attorney, and Rupert Hall, another Tulsa businessman, formed the barbershop quartet society to preserve the music.

Today, there are 2,000 quartets and 800 choruses divided into 16 regions in the United States and Canada, as well as other groups in England, Sweden, West Germany, Holland and New Zealand.

The organization, based in Kenosha, Wis., helped spawn two women barbershop singing groups, the Sweet Adelines Inc. and Harmony Inc.

"I think we are gaining some respect again across the country," Warner said.

"We are developing programs for young men in some high schools and it's found increasing acceptance," he said.

Greg Zinke, 27, began singing in a quartet after being around his father's group.

Zinke, who works in a tool and die shop in High Bridge, N.J., said he opted for barbershop quartet singing instead of rock 'n' roll because of the selection of clean, simple old songs.

"Just about anybody that has some kind of ear for music can do this; you don't have to be a professional," Zinke said.

"You don't have to be a fantastic singer to do this. I think that's what makes it so nice for the guy off the street who admires the music. He can come sing it, too," he said.

"It's easy to sing and it's portable," said 35-year-old Roger Payne of New York City. "All you have to have is your pitch pipe and three other guys and you don't have to call anybody to move your piano. It interacts with the audience in a real entertainment-kind of way."

Dad Enjoyed His Letter

DEAR ABBY: Although I have an extraordinary relationship with my mother, my father has never been able to accept affection, or give it. When my older brother, "Buddy," died unexpectedly a couple of years ago, Dad brooded silently over his death. He had never really verbalized his love for Buddy.

Last year, on Father's Day, I took your advice and wrote Dad a letter, telling him how much he meant to me. I recalled some memories — some happy, some sad. When he called to thank me for my "wonderful letter," I was thrilled. Then he told me that he had received a similar letter from Buddy shortly before his untimely death.

Six months ago, Dad suffered a cerebral hemorrhage, causing him to lose most of his long-term memory. Had I put off writing that letter, I would have lost the opportunity to share some of my most cherished memories and tell him how much he meant to me.

I can't tell you how glad I am that I wrote that letter while Dad was still able to enjoy it. Thank you, Abby, for motivating me. — JOAN M. FOWLER, BALTIMORE

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Having just read your article on lightning, I commend you for your efforts, but I must correct one of your "facts."

You said, "Do not use the phone during lightning storms." Abby, there is no possibility of being killed by telephone-line electrical surges caused by nearby lightning strikes, because the size of the wires in the telephone prohibits transmission of high voltage. The wires would "blow," much like a light bulb filament when a light bulb burns out.

However, the rest of your information is very good. You are right: Lightning can strike twice in the same place. In fact, lightning must strike the same place at least eight times before it can be seen by the human eye. Electricity is that fast!

— WASHINGTON READER
DEAR READER: Read on, please:

DEAR ABBY: Your column on how to avoid the dangers of lightning ran in the Syracuse (N.Y.) Post-Standard on Saturday, May 21. Thank God, I read it carefully that morning, because Saturday afternoon the storm clouds gathered and I quickly called my three children indoors. We shut all the windows and doors — and stayed away from the windows as you advised. Then the storm broke loose, and it was terrible!

Later we read in the paper that a 22-year-old woman, eight months pregnant, was killed during that storm while talking on the telephone! Lightning had struck the telephone wires and traveled into the receiver, killing her instantly. In your column you said, "Don't use the telephone unless it's absolutely necessary. Electricity can travel through the telephone wires."

All I could think of was that if she had read Dear Abby in the Syracuse Post-Standard that day, this tragedy could have been avoided.

Abby, we'll never know how many lives you saved that day. Moral: Read Dear Abby every day. — SAD-DENED IN SYRACUSE

DEAR SADDENED: I checked with the Syracuse Post-Standard and discovered that the cause of death is still in dispute, with some investigators pointing the finger at a microwave oven the woman was standing next to, and others blaming the phone wires. Stay tuned.

Problems? What's bugging you? Unload on Abby, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Mother Nature Has A Trick

Years ago when we lived in one of those cookie-cutter houses in the suburbs, we used to have a joke about the shrubbery that came with every home.

We all got the standard six evergreens, eight yews, two flowering fruit trees, one maple tree, a weeping willow, 36 Living Rose hedge plants, and an exoticeroba mystery plant with a card on it that said "A spring dazler. Keep moist and keep your camera loaded."

The entire landscaping package was delivered to us one night in an 11-by-14-inch envelope.

We planted all the little brown twigs, but most of them had tragic endings. We lost the maple tree by drowning when our puppy favored it. The weeping willow had to be destroyed when its roots cut off the water supply to the entire township. Twenty-three of the Living Rose hedge plants never got planted because one of the kids put a soft drink can on them and crushed them. And the evergreens were the fast-growing kind. Within six months they were a foot taller than the town's TV tower.

It was only the exoticeroba

At Wits End

mystery plant that kept us all going. It never really lived and it never really died. The leaves stayed green all year round. Supposedly it bloomed for 15 minutes, and those of us in the neighborhood had a pool to see who could record it on their camera.

After 15 years we moved from the neighborhood, giving up all hope of ever seeing the plant bloom. We moved to Arizona, where we fell heir to an entirely different landscape.

The nursery man told me that out by the driveway lamp was a night-blooming cactus called Echinopsis. When all the conditions were right, the plant would produce a flower that would bloom in the middle of the night, last a few hours and wilt in the morning sun.

I was intrigued. My husband dated a girl like that once.

Daily I monitored the plant for some sign of a bud or a cluster to indicate it was ready to bloom. Then late one night I heard some dogs around the garbage cans and ran out to break up the party when I saw it. A single, beautiful white bloom dazzled me with its perfection in the moonlight.

The next emotion was one of frustration. It was like hitting a hole in one, all by yourself, or bringing a perfect soufflé out of the oven with no one to see it, or your baby uttering its first word when your husband is out of town.

Fearing for my own safety, I wisely decided not to wake my husband out of a sound sleep and tell him the Echinopsis was blooming, so I punched the cactus with my fist and said, "Way to go, kid." There's probably something deep and poignant here somewhere about how something not shared is empty and meaningless, but my hand hurts. It has a thorn in it.

Fire Causes Oil Rig To Break In Half

a second explosion occurred. Police said only two rescuers were missing. Queen Elizabeth II sent a message of sympathy and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher expressed deep shock.

The only confirmed death was reported by the Royal Air Force Rescue and Coordination Center.

Aberdeen hospital spokesman Alan Reid told reporters 21 people were hospitalized, 13 of them in serious condition.

Carey, an instrument technician, lay in a hospital bed with his arm in a sling and his eyes closed by burns.

He said he was choked by smoke after hearing the first of two explosions.

"It was over the side or nothing. I just dived. It may have been 60 feet. I was totally enveloped," he said.

A second explosion sent bits of lifeboat raining into the water, he said. "There was a lot of debris floating around and the flames were billowing above us. I found my head was being cooked. I had to keep ducking down to get it cool."

He saw bodies float past and then was rescued.

Dr. Alistair Matheson of the Royal Infirmary, who treated injured aboard a rescue ship close to the rig, said, "There was a strange silence about the place. I could feel the heat of the flames in my face. I knew this was a disaster of major proportions."

Matheson said survivors told of taking refuge in a cool area of the rig, and, when the flames approached, finding nowhere to jump where the sea was clear of flames. Two who jumped survived.

"Those who were lucky and able to escape were up and at work at the time and were able to jump straight into the sea and get into rescue vessels," John Brading, Occidental's executive vice president, told a news conference.

He announced an urgent inquiry into why lifeboats with room for 300 people failed to get off the platform.

The injured "range from people who were able to walk away to those who are seriously ill with 50 percent burns," said hospital spokesman Alan Reid.

Witnesses said the flames engulfed the rig and towered over the horizon.

"When we went on late last night, we certainly could see the fire raging from 60 to 70 miles away and the flames at that time were, we'd estimate, 300 or 400 feet," said Royal Air Force Squadron Leader Garfield Porter, who was involved in the rescue.

Coast Guard spokesman Peter Webb said rescue conditions were good.

"People have been picked up by helicopters, by fishing boats and everybody else who responded," said a police spokesman who spoke on condition of anonymity.

It was the third accident at North Sea oil installations in the past week. On Friday, a blast rocked British Petroleum's Sullom Voe onshore terminal on the Shetland Islands.

On Tuesday, a fire broke out on the North Sea Brent Alpha platform.

Occidental is one of the major oil companies operating in the North Sea.

Jones' Campaign Spending Bill Enacted

able to donate some or all of their income tax refund to the campaign fund, which supporters hope will be large enough to fulfill its purpose by 1992.

Beginning that year, candidates for governor and other statewide offices will have the option of participating in the spending-limit program. Those who do will be required to abide by spending ceilings that will be determined by a formula set in the bill.

The formula would permit candidates for governor to spend $1 for every vote cast in the previous gubernatorial election; candidates for council of state offices would be permitted to spend 50 cents for every vote cast in the last gubernatorial election.

There were about 2.3 million votes cast in the 1984 gubernatorial contest, so if candidates were able to participate in the program this year, they could spend no more than $2.3 million each.

The candidates would receive $1 from the fund for every dollar raised from contributors. Thus, a gubernatorial candidate who received $1 million from donors would receive another $1 million from the fund.

The bill calls on the 1991 Legislature to review the program and decide whether taxpayers have donated enough money to make it workable the next year. If not, the program would be dismantled and whatever money had been contributed to the fund would be diverted to the state budget for general expenditures.

The Senate watered down the bill by exempting legislative races after questions arose over how to impose ceilings on races in multi-seat districts and critics said there would be different standards for candidates in urban and rural districts.

Jones said he and others would try to develop additional sources of money for the fund, including the possibility of corporate donations, and would develop other fine-tuning mechanisms next year.

He also said he would like to restore legislative races to the program at some point. "What we've done here is what nine other states have done, which is to start with statewide races," Jones said. "This is a good first step."

Byrd Says Navy In 'Untenable Position'

Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman Sam Nunn, D-Ga., said he believed it was too early to explain the dual civilian and military signals that seemed to be coming from the plane. If a second plane were involved, "suffice it to say that the captain could not have known that based on the information he had," Nunn said.

Little new information emerged from the three House and Senate briefings by Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci and a phalanx of subordinates.

The Pentagon did back off from its earlier assertion that the Iranian airliner was flying outside the prescribed commercial air corridor, conceding that while the plane had deviated from the corridor's center, it had never actually left the designated airspace.

Several lawmakers also said U.S. forces' nervousness had been heightened by specific intelligence warnings in the days before that a major attack on them was likely over the July Fourth weekend.

Aspin said intelligence received in the days before the incident indicated that two Iranian F-14s had been moved from a military airfield elsewhere in Iran to the joint military-civilian airfield at Bandar Abbas on Iran's coastline.

Aspin also said the electronic "signature" picked up by the Vincennes just before the shootdown bore the identical digital code that had been associated with F-14s flying in the area in the days before the incident. The failure to identify the jumbo jet shows that identifying aircraft electronically remains "an art, not a science," he added.

ABC News on Wednesday quoted military sources as saying Iranian commercial airliners have been used to carry soldiers from Bandar Abbas — the point of origin for Iran flight 655 — to the front with Iraq. The sources said troop transports often have carried both civilian and military transponders, the radar-activated devices that broadcast a plane's identification signal.

Aspin said lawmakers were told the plane was warned to identify itself at least a dozen times on both civilian and military frequencies, beginning within two or three minutes after it took off from Bandar Abbas and before it turned to make a course correction, heading it toward the Vincennes.

In other developments: —Lawmakers continued to be generally supportive of the idea of paying compensation to families of victims, which was being studied by administration officials. "I do not believe it would constitute any admission of guilt," said Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa. "To have compensation awarded would be an act of generosity ... and would be very appropriate in this case."

—Some called for a new examination of the U.S. role in the gulf and whether it was worth a repetition of last weekend's tragedy and the terrorist retaliation that might result. "Such a tragedy could happen again today or tomorrow and we have no way of preventing it," said House Majority Whip Tony Coelho, D-Calif.

"The opportunity for disaster is just sitting there waiting to happen."

—A Washington Post-ABC poll published today found that 71 percent of the respondents believed shooting down the plane was justified while 23 percent disagreed. The telephone survey of 524 randomly selected adults in the continental United States was conducted Tuesday and had a margin of error of plus or minus 4 percentage points.

—Soviet military staff chief Marshal Sergei F. Akhromeyev said at a Pentagon news conference that he had discussed the incident with his U.S. counterpart, Adm. William Crowe. Akhromeyev said he had concluded that destruction of the Iranian jetliner differed from the Soviet shootdown of a Korean Air Lines commercial flight over the Sea of Japan in 1983. "I would not draw any similarities," he said.

Davis Leaves Suns For Denver

DENVER (AP) — Walter Davis, a six-time NBA all-star and the all-time leading scorer in Phoenix Suns' history, became the second unrestricted free agent to change teams when he signed a contract Wednesday with the Denver Nuggets.

Pete Babcock, Nuggets president and general manager, made the announcement during a news conference but would not disclose terms of the contract, in keeping with the club's policy, but Davis said the pact was for two years.

"The contract I signed is for two years. That's what I want to play," said Davis, who had announced previously that he would retire after next season. "At that time, I had back problems. My back feels great now."

"I think I would be selling myself short if I retired now. I'll re-evaluate it again after two years," he said.

Davis said he and his agent, Lee Fentress, wanted a two-year deal from the Suns or another team.

The Suns reportedly had offered Davis a one-year contract to return to the team for a reported $450,000 — about half of his salary last season. He also was told he'd be used as a sixth man.

Babcock said Denver freed up the money to sign him because the Nuggets have decided not to re-sign free-agent guards T.R. Dunn and Mike Evans.

Davis, a 6-foot-6 guard, has played his entire NBA career with the Suns. The 33-year-old Davis became an unrestricted free agent following the 1987-88 season and he signed with the Nuggets one day after forward Tom Chambers signed with the Suns after playing with Seattle for five seasons.

Davis said he "should fit in very well with Denver. They play the passing game, which I like. I feel I can help this team. They were a hot team last year and I'm glad they wanted me to be a part of them."

"I'm excited to be here in Denver and play for the Nuggets. They had a great year last year," he added. "I have mixed emotions about leaving Phoenix, some happiness, some sadness. I'm looking at this move as something positive. It's nice to be going to a contender."

Unrestricted free agents are allowed to sign with any NBA team without former clubs receiving any compensation or having the right of first refusal under terms of the league's new collective bargaining agreement.

Davis, who played collegiately at North Carolina, was the fifth selection in the 1977 NBA draft and immediately became one of the top scorers in the league. In his 11 seasons with the Suns, Davis averaged 20 points or better seven times, including a career-high 24.2 per game in his first year to earn rookie of the year honors.

He has been ranked among the league's top 20 scorers five times, most recently in 1986-87 when he ranked 11th in the NBA with 23.6 points per game.

Davis ranks 36th on the NBA's all-time scoring list with 15,666 points, averaging 20.5 points over 766 games. He made six all-star appearances, including four straight from 1978 to 1981, and also played in the 1984 and 1987 games.

Davis testified before a Maricopa County grand jury investigating drug use in the Phoenix area in March 1987 that he started using cocaine in 1977 — his rookie season — and continued using it twice a week until December 1985.

He entered a rehabilitation clinic in Van Nuys, Calif., on Dec. 12, 1985, for cocaine and alcohol abuse and returned to the team on Jan. 10, 1986. He missed 11 games in that span.

Davis testified he used cocaine three times after his release and was admitted to the clinic again on April 16, 1987, for 60 days of additional treatment and was suspended from the Suns without pay.

His testimony under a grant of immunity led to the indictments of several current and former Suns players for various drug charges ranging from possession to trafficking in narcotics.

Davis missed only the April 18th regular-season finale during his second treatment.

Asked about his drug problems, Davis said: "I can only speak of the present. I have 15 months of sobriety. I think that's pretty powerful. It means a lot to me."

"I've known Walter personally since the mid-1970s," Babcock said. "Doug (Moe) knows him personally. We feel comfortable with him."

The Nuggets, who were said to be looking for rebounding or shooting help in this year's draft, selected Pittsburgh's Jerome Lane, who led the nation in rebounding as a sophomore and was third as a junior last season at 12.2 per game.

But Babcock said the Nuggets pursued Davis because the team was still interested in finding someone who could shoot from the outside.

"Since the season concluded, we have been looking to fill some holes," Babcock said. "We felt we needed to rebound better and get better scoring from the perimeter."

"We hope to have helped our rebounding problems through the draft, and now we think we have filled our needs in getting somebody who can be a threat from the outside."

Oakland Leads All-Star Choices

NEW YORK (AP) — Not since the days of Reggie, Catfish and Rollie have the Oakland Athletics been this popular.

These A's haven't won three straight World Series, as the 1972-74 Oakland teams did. They have captured the fancy of American League fans, though, with three of them being voted starters for the All-Star team.

Outfielder Jose Canseco, the overall leader in the AL with 1,765,499 votes, first baseman Mark McGwire and catcher Terry Steinbach were picked by the fans in results announced Wednesday. The Athletics will be the only team with three starters selected by fans for next Tuesday's classic in Cincinnati.

"This is a great team, and I think the fans realize this," said McGwire, the 1987 Rookie of the Year who is batting .245 with 14 homers and 47 RBI. "It's an honor to the team, the organization and to us players to be recognized."

Canseco, the AL Rookie of the Year in 1986, leads the league with 23 home runs, 70 runs and 65 RBI. He said the voting shows how positive a future the Athletics have.

"It says a lot about the young ability of our team, about the youth throughout our organization," said Canseco, who turned 24 last week. McGwire also is 24 and Steinbach, who has fought slumps and injuries this year and is batting just .217, is 26. "We're basically going to be around a long time. You'll be hearing about the A's for 10 or 15 years. We're going to have a strong core for a long time."

Joining the three A's on the AL starting team are outfielders Dave

Winfield and Rickey Henderson of New York, Milwaukee second baseman Paul Molitor, Detroit shortstop Alan Trammell, who is on the disabled list with a broken left elbow, and third baseman Wade Boggs of Boston, the AL's leading batter with a .353 average.

Molitor has served exclusively as a designated hitter this year, but with no DH spot on the ballot, he was placed at second base. And won.

"It's not a perfect system, but the players have to understand it's not going to be fair year-in and year-out," Molitor said. "In many regards, it's just a popularity contest. I don't see it changing and I don't have any gripes about it."

Ozzie Smith certainly can't have any gripes with the voting. The slick shortstop of the St. Louis Cardinals was the top overall vote getter for the second straight year with 2,106,757.

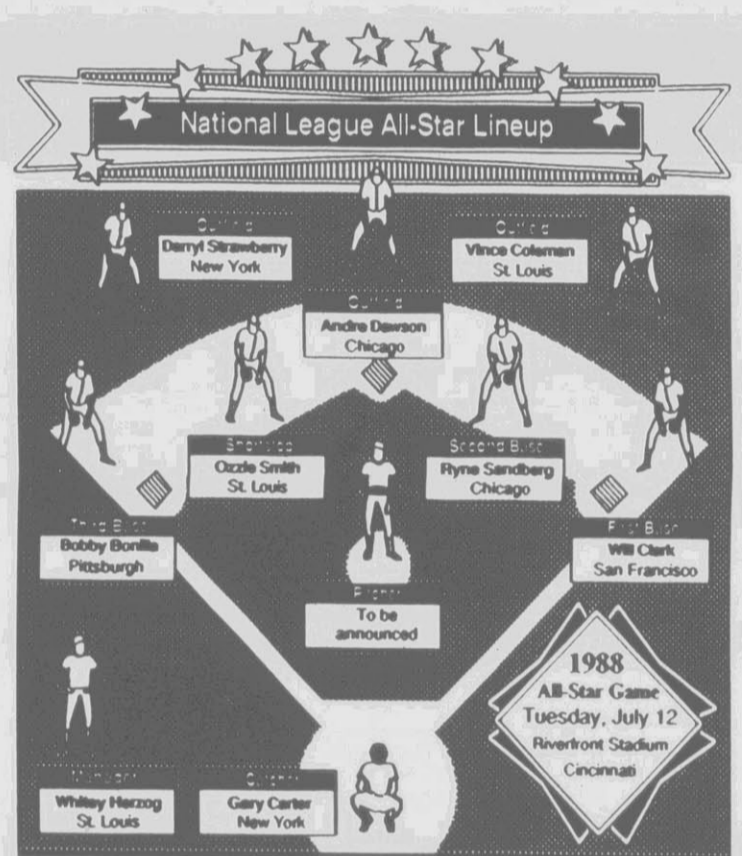

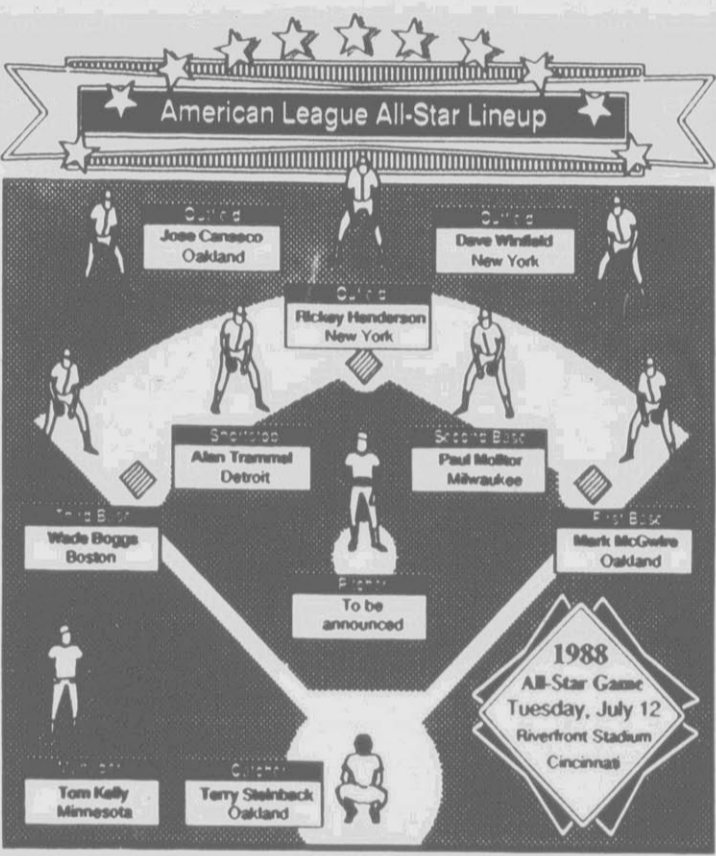

Smith will start for the National League for the sixth straight year. He is the first player to repeat as the top vote-getter since Rod Carew did it three consecutive years, 1977-79.

"I've gotten a kick out of all of them," Smith said. "They've all been so special. Any time you have the opportunity to play with baseball's best, it's a great thing."

"The last two were very special. Any time you get over two million votes, that's really an honor. I just want to thank all the people that took the time to punch my name on the ballot, and hopefully, I can live up to the expectations that people are looking for."

One Upset At Event

BROOKLINE, Mass. (AP) — Horacio de la Pena of Argentina defeated seventh-seeded Luiz Mattar of Brazil 6-4, 6-3 Wednesday in the only upset on the third day of the $425,000 U.S. Pro Tennis Championships.

Except for de la Pena's easy victory, form held up as five other seeded players advanced through the second round in steaming heat on Longwood Cricket Club's clay courts.

Eighth-seeded Thomas Muster of Austria narrowly escaped elimination, surviving a 2-hour, 18-minute duel with Jimmy Arias, who at 23 is trying to regain the form which earned him a No. 5 ranking in 1984.

Muster, 20, was unable to cash in on four match points before he finished off a 6-4, 3-6, 7-6 victory by winning the tie-breaker 9-7.

Arias, winner of $1.3 million, moved to within one point of an upset with a cross-court forehand for a 7-6 lead in the tie-breaker. However, Muster, a southpaw, won three points in a row with a forehand passing shot, a hard service return and Arias' errant forehand during a rally.

Bullets Say Moses Not In Their Plans

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — The Washington Bullets are headed in a new direction, and 33-year-old center Moses Malone won't be going along for the ride.

In a prepared statement released after a meeting with coach Wes Unseld and General Manager Bob Ferry, team owner Abe Pollin said Wednesday that Malone didn't fit into Washington's revised scheme.

"We feel he (Malone) does not fit in with a young, developing team, but with a team at its peak," Pollin said. "This should not be construed either as criticism of Moses Malone or as an attempt to limit our player payroll," Pollin added. "Moses is a fine player and we wish him well."

Ferry recently had been indicating the Bullets were not interested in offering more than a two-year deal to Malone, whose scoring average dipped to 20.3 from 24.1 in 1986-87, and whose rebounding fell to 11.2 from 11.3 this season. Malone, a 14-year pro veteran paid $2.1 million for each of his two seasons with the Bullets, is a free agent under terms of the National Basketball Association's new collective bargaining agreement.

Bullets spokesman Mark Pray said offering Malone a one-year contract would "not be a viable option."

Malone, a 10-time All-Star, told the Atlanta Constitution that his first choice would be to re-sign with the Bullets, although he was impressed by the Atlanta Hawks.

"You can tell the guys (in Atlanta) want to win," Malone said. "When we played against them you could see it. They came to win. They've got the attitude you need. The best team I ever played on was the Philadelphia 76ers. They're that type of team."

Hawks officials have refused comment on published reports they are seeking Malone, who was traded from Philadelphia to Washington two years ago.

"I have no comment on free agents," Hawks president Stan Kasten said Wednesday.

But The Washington Post, quoting league sources, said the Hawks have offered Malone a three-year deal worth about $6 million — an arrangement worth about $600,000 less than what Washington paid him last season.

League officials in New York said Malone's contract is no longer part of the team's salary cap, which will rise from $6.4 million to $6.9 million this year. Without it, Ferry could pursue younger centers who are free agents.

Pollin, who has owned the Bullets for more than 20 years, noted that the team has had a great deal of success acquiring older players with short career expectancies. The Bullets won more games than any other National Basketball Association team in the 1970s, Pollin noted.

"Under such circumstances, a team is particularly vulnerable to injuries and other uncontrollable variables. Consequently, while we have made the playoffs seven of the eight years since 1981, we have advanced past the first round only once," Pollin said.

Pollin said he wants to provide Unseld with the players he wants without regard to their position and "with great regard for their potential abilities."

Malone told the Atlanta newspaper he did not believe a deal with the Hawks was imminent, but said he was prepared to change teams if he could not reach an agreement with Washington.

Snow Hill will now take on Wayne County, which beat Wilson two straight to claim the other playoff series. The first game is set for Saturday at Wayne County.

Chapman Disappointed At Being Cut

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Rex Chapman, one of the chosen his entire life, said being cut from the U.S. Olympic basketball team two days ago sliced into his heart.

"It's the biggest disappointment I've had in basketball," the former Kentucky guard said Wednesday. "I'm disappointed more in myself than anything. I had it all in my hands and I just dropped it."

Despite making the Pan American team last year and leading the silver-medal squad in several offensive categories, Chapman did not make it to the final stage of tryouts for the Olympic team. Twenty-one players are still in the running for the 12 spots, and Olympic coach John Thompson will make the final cut by Sept. 2.

The 6-foot-4 Chapman played down the pressures caused by his decision to leave Kentucky after only two years and turn professional. He was drafted in the first round of the June 28 NBA draft by expansion Charlotte Hornets.

"I really didn't play well overall," he said. "There was some pressure, and sometimes you just don't play well for whatever reason. I had the opportunity and I missed it. Now I've just got to regroup."

Thompson had given Chapman a second chance by sending him on a European tour along with other Olympic hopefuls after a tryout camp. But Chapman said he played well in only two of the U.S. Select Team's six games.

"I played about as well as I could in the last two games, but I really didn't play well over a long period of time," he said. "That's what they were looking for, I guess."

Chapman said he wasn't sure whether he thought he would make the team on the strength of his last two performances.

"Well yeah, well, no. ... I was just waiting to see what was happening," he said. "I'm not angry, though. They picked a lot of great guys. I'll be cheering for the team."

Chapman, Kentucky's leading scorer during his two years there, had declared making the Olympic team his biggest goal as the summer began. Now he is hoping pro basketball players will be allowed to play in the 1992 Olympics in Barcelona, Spain.

"I definitely am interested in playing in 1992 if they let the pros play," he said.

"I still want to be on an Olympic team. Maybe I still can."

Allison Receives Card From Reagan

ALLENTOWN, Pa. (AP) — Bobby Allison's recovery from serious injuries suffered in a June 19 auto racing accident is getting moral support from high places: the White House.

President Reagan sent a get-well note to Allison at Lehigh Valley Hospital Center, where the 51-year-old veteran stock car driver remained in guarded condition, a spokesman said.

Ed Gossage, spokesman for Miller Racing, Allison's sponsor, also announced Wednesday that Mike Alexander has been assigned as the "permanent temporary" replacement for Allison for 1988, until Allison can return.

Gossage said Reagan's letter, dated June 30 but received Wednesday, told Allison: "Just want you to know that Nancy and I are keeping you in our thoughts and praying that all goes well with your recovery. You are an American original and we are all looking forward to seeing you fully mended. In the meantime, though, take it easy — president's orders. This is a time to rest and relax and let others take care of you for a change.

"God bless and keep you."

Allison has campaigned for Reagan and has been his guest at the White House, Gossage said. One of Reagan's daughters has checked for the president on the condition of Allison, Gossage said.

"Maureen Reagan called and talked with me on a couple of occasions immediately after the crash, so he's been informed and aware all along," Gossage said.

Allison suffered a serious concussion and several broken bones in the first lap of the NASCAR Miller 500 at Pocono International Raceway in Long Pond when his car blew a tire, hit the outside wall and careened into the path of another car.

Alexander has driven in Allison's place in two races since the Pocono event, finishing 10th in the Miller 400 at Brooklyn, Mich., June 26 and 15th in the Firecracker 400 at Daytona Beach, Fla., last Saturday.

Alexander, points leader in NASCAR's Busch Grand National Division, one step below Winston Cup racing, will race on both circuits, Gossage said.

"He's been doing fine and we knew he would," Gossage said of Alexander. "We've made a commitment to him. For the duration of Bobby's absence in 1988, Mike will run the car."

Gossage said the commitment will give Alexander a chance to "prove to other folks, other teams, that he's capable of driving on this circuit and doing well."

No Takers In NFL Supplemental Draft

NEW YORK (AP) — None of the 17 players available in a supplemental draft was chosen by National Football League teams.

The draft, held Wednesday, was for players not eligible for the regular college draft last April. It was a weighted lottery, giving the teams with the poorest records the most chances. Teams that selected a player would have forfeited a pick in next spring's regular draft.

Some teams were reluctant to risk offending college coaches, who oppose supplemental drafts for players involved with sports agents.

Customs Revealed For Olympics

By Scott Ostler
(c) 1988, Los Angeles Times

For the benefit of American reporters going to Seoul, South Korea, for the Summer Olympics, the United States Olympic Committee has thoughtfully assembled and distributed a guide to manners, customs and philosophy in Korea.

I think the memo is worth sharing, even with fans who will be staying home, that they may absorb the flavor of the host country.

Some of the tips (boldfaced comments mine):

Korean men greet other men by bowing slightly and shaking hands with either the right hand or both hands. Korean women rarely shake hands.

Rather than admitting that they don't know the answer to your question, Koreans sometimes give the answer they think you want to hear. They believe that it's more important to preserve your good feelings than to give you accurate but unpleasant information.

Not unlike an American stockbroker or big league baseball manager.

Extreme modesty ... is a social tradition. Don't be surprised if a man makes disparaging remarks about his wife and children.

Great. A million Henny Youngmans.

Koreans eat lots of garlic but don't like to hear disparaging remarks about their food or breath.

How about disparaging remarks about the breath of their wives and children?

To get a waiter's attention, say "Yo-Bo-Se-Yo" (hello).

Two-fingered whistling, then, is best used as a last resort.

When you use the chopsticks or spoon, never leave them sticking into the rice — that's how offerings are made to ancestors.

Whereas our ancestor offerings are made by leaving doggie bags in the back seats of our cars.

Look for taxi drivers wearing yellow shirts and jackets adorned with awards. They have been recognized for their safe driving records.

Sorry, this concept does not translate.

Koreans don't like to give or receive a flat no, so they might say yes just to avoid upsetting you. Phrase your questions so they don't require a yes-or-no answer ("When can you provide it?") is a better question than, "Can you provide it by Wednesday?"

I get it. Like, "When can you move your automobile off my foot?"

The USOC memo, which even suggests "Good conversation topics" and "Bad conversation topics," should prove very useful. However, shouldn't the Koreans be provided a similar list of tips regarding American tourists and their customs and philosophies? If so, the list should include the following items:

Attention, Seoul cab drivers: American fares will become uneasy and disoriented if you treat them politely and drive them directly and safely to their destination. Smoke a cigar, bore your riders with the story of your aborted career as an opera singer and sharpen your driving techniques by studying the chase scene from the Steve McQueen movie, "Bullitt."

American drivers in city traffic will occasionally display their middle finger and scream a two-word phrase. Translation: "Excuse my poor driving, friend, and while you're at it, please summon a police officer so that, for the safety of all, I may turn myself in and have my car impounded."

When offering to sell a ticket to an Olympic event, remember, Americans attach personal status to the amount of money they pay for a ticket. Don't insult them by asking any less than 100 times face value.

Because America is a land of divergent beliefs, each citizen is required to wear a T-shirt clearly spelling out his or her philosophy. It is best, however, not even to ask what is meant by such T-shirt declarations as "Surf naked" or "Honk if you just ran over Spuds McKenzie."

Strange Hopes To Get Win On Home Course

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — More than two weeks after winning the U.S. Open, Curtis Strange is still trying to sort out everything, both in his head and at the mailbox.

"I still think about it every time I have some free time," Strange said of his June 20 playoff victory over Nick Faldo to The Country Club in Brookline, Mass.

Within moments of capturing the first major title of his career, the 33-year-old Strange dedicated the victory to the memory of his late father, who died of cancer when Strange was 14.

The emotional outpouring Strange showed in the speech has prompted a flood of letters that has left him spending several hours at a time in recent days trying to read all his mail.

"The people who pick up a pen and pencil who you've never heard of before and write a letter to you — that to me has been more surprising than anything else," Strange said.

"Every one of those letters mentioned the ending, which was awful nice of them," he said.

Strange, a three-time winner this year, is hoping some of his recent success will carry over at home, which for him is on the grounds of the Kingsmill Golf Club, where the Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic began today.

"I feel good. I'm well-rested," said Strange, who has never finished higher than fourth at the Anheuser-Busch. Two years ago, he missed the cut. Last year, he finished in a tie for 36th place.

Strange knows his U.S. Open title won't necessarily translate into success in other tournaments.

"I haven't changed. I'm no different. I don't hit cuts any better or draws any better," he said.

"I'm no better a golfer, I'm no different a person now, but there is something behind my name now that means a hell of a lot."

Also in the field for the $650,000 event on the 6,776-yard, par-71 layout are defending champion Mark McCormack as well as 1986 winner Fuzzy Zoeller and Mark Wiebe, the 1985 champion.

All-Star Lineups

baseman Will Clark of San Francisco, second baseman Ryne Sandberg of Chicago and Pittsburgh third baseman Bobby Bonilla.

The NL outfield has New York's Darryl Strawberry, Chicago's Andre Dawson and St. Louis' Vince Coleman.

The NL catcher is Gary Carter of the New York Mets, selected to start for the eighth straight season, tying Philadelphia third baseman Mike Schmidt's record for overall starts. But, like his counterpart with the A's, Carter has struggled this year and was hitting .245 with eight homers and 33 RBI. He has not homered since May 16, when he got the 299th homer of his career.

A total of 6,146,477 votes were cast by fans this year, the most since 1984.

Players who will collect contract bonuses for being elected All-Star starters are Winfield ($50,000), Dawson ($50,000), Boggs ($50,000), Clark ($25,000), Strawberry ($25,000), Molitor ($25,000), McGwire ($20,000), Canseco ($20,000), Bonilla ($15,000), Coleman ($15,000) and Sandberg ($10,000).

The acrobatic Smith long has been known as the game's premier fielding shortstop. His offense hasn't been bad, either, and he was hitting .281 with 27 stolen bases and 52 runs scored.

The closest voting in the AL was at catcher, where Steinbach had 84,266 more selections than Carlton Fisk of Chicago. The biggest margin of victory was, ironically, by Molitor, who finished more than 245,000 votes ahead of New York's Willie Randolph.

"There's no question it's an ironic situation to be selected to start at a position you haven't played all year," Molitor said.

In the NL, the tightest race was at catcher, with Carter beating 1987 Rookie of the Year Benito Santiago of San Diego by 90,476 votes. Smith was the biggest winner, by more than 1.6 million votes over San Francisco's Jose Uribe.

Whitey Herzog of St. Louis is managing the National League team and Minnesota's Tom Kelly handles the American League. They will announce their pitchers and reserves today.

Johnson Gets Stomach Relief From Myers

Avoiding The Hit

New York Mets Manager Davey Johnson had an upset stomach, but was feeling a lot better after getting some fast relief from Randy Myers.

Johnson, who was in the Mets' clubhouse with stomach pains, rushed off his couch and back into the dugout in time to call Myers in from the bullpen to save a troubled Ron Darling on Wednesday night.

Myers quickly struck out Kal Daniels, who had a 2-0 count, and got the next six batters to preserve the Mets' 5-4 victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

"I knew I had a control pitcher in Myers," Johnson said. "And about the same time, my stomach started to feel better. It was perfect once Daniels struck out."

"It doesn't take long for Randy to warm up ... five or six pitches. It takes him longer to tie his shoelaces."

In other National League games, it was San Francisco 2, Chicago 0; Atlanta 3, Philadelphia 2; Montreal 4, Houston 2, and Los Angeles 7, St. Louis 3.

Darryl Strawberry, the NL home run leader with 21, hit a two-run shot for the Mets in the first inning.

Daniels and Paul O'Neill then hit two-run homers in the sixth to give the Reds a 4-2 lead. But the Mets came back with three runs in the bottom of the inning as Darling capped the rally with a run-scoring single. It was the first game-winning hit of the pitcher's career.

"My pitchers take their hitting seriously," Johnson said. "Batting practice is something they enjoy. They don't try and duck it."

Added Darling: "If you're in the lineup, you might as well help yourself out."

Giants 2, Cubs 0

Jose Uribe doubled and scored on two sacrifice bunts and Rick Reuschel and two relievers combined on a seven-hitter as San Francisco defeated Chicago to shut out the Cubs for the second straight game.

Reuschel, 11-4, allowed six hits, walked none and struck out four to win for the fifth time in six decisions. Craig Lefferts allowed one hit in the ninth before giving way to Scott Garrelts with two outs. Garrelts earned his seventh save.

Jamie Moyer, 5-8, gave up four hits and two walks and struck out one before leaving for a pinch hitter in the eighth.

Braves 3, Phillies 2

Ken Oberkfell singled in the tie-breaking run with one out in the eighth inning to boost Atlanta over Philadelphia.

It was the third straight victory for the Braves and their first sweep of a three-game series this year. The loss was the fourth straight for the Phillies.

Zane Smith, 4-6, snapped a personal three-game losing streak. He yielded eight hits and three walks in going eight innings. Bruce Sutter pitched the ninth for his 12th save.

The loss went to Shane Rawley, 5-10, who gave up 10 hits in 7 1-3 innings.

Expos 4, Astros 2

Rex Hudler drove in the winning run with a fifth-inning single and Pasqual Perez pitched five-hit ball over eight innings, leading Montreal over Houston.

The victory was the seventh in eight games for the Expos, while the Astros lost for the eighth time in nine games.

Leading 1-0, Perez, 6-3, gave up a two-run double to Rafael Ramirez in

Mr. Inside Hurls Three-Hitter To Pace Twins Past Red Sox

By The Associated Press
Just call Frank Viola the Minnesota Twins' "Mr. Inside."

Viola pitched a three-hitter Wednesday night to beat Boston 8-1 for his American League-leading 14th victory and continued his Metrodome mastery.

Viola, 14-2, has not lost in the Metrodome since May 22, 1987. In 23 starts at home since then, he's 18-0.

"I can't explain it," Twins manager Tom Kelly said of Viola's success indoors. "He's pitched well the last couple of years, and a little bit better yet this year. Maybe it's confidence, I don't know, or maybe playing in the World Series and the playoffs is a factor."

Viola won Game 7 of the World Series last season against St. Louis and was named the Series' MVP.

The victory moved the surging Twins within 3 1/2 games of first-place Oakland in the American League West and two in the loss column. The Athletics lost to Cleveland 8-6 Wednesday. On May 21, the Twins trailed the Athletics by 1 1/2 games.

Elsewhere in the AL it was Detroit 7, Seattle 6; Texas 4, New York 2; California 5, Toronto 4 in 10 innings; Chicago 4, Baltimore 1; and Milwaukee 4, Kansas City 2.

Viola, in tying the Chicago Cubs' Greg Maddux for the major league lead in victories, became the earliest 14-game winner in Twins history. The left-hander reached the 14-victory mark last season on Aug. 16.

The victory was Viola's third straight complete game victory over Boston this season and Dwight Evans' fourth-inning homer is the only run scored by the Red Sox against him this season.

"I'm not taking anything for granted," Viola said. "Boston, when I looked up the stats before this season, just hammered me. This year it seems like I've had good stuff on the days I've faced them and we've been able to get ahead of them. The guys have made it easy for me."

The Twins backed Viola with 11 hits, led by Kirby Puckett's four hits and two runs batted in.

"It's a long season," Puckett said. "In the beginning, we couldn't do anything right. We had to get our confidence, and once we got together, we knew we'd be back. Well, we're back."

Indians 8, Athletics 6

Mel Hall hit an inside-the-park homer with two on to cap a four-run seventh inning as Cleveland overcame a five-run deficit to beat visiting Oakland.

The Indians had spotted Oakland a 5-0 lead in the first inning and trailed 6-4 in the seventh.

Tigers 7, Mariners 6

Luis Salazar singled home Matt Nokes from third base with two out in the bottom of the ninth inning to cap a two-run rally as Detroit beat Seattle at Tiger Stadium. The victory moved the first-place Tigers 2 1/2 games ahead of New York in the AL East.

Rangers 4, Yankees 2

Pete Incaviglia hit a solo homer, tripled and made a key defensive play as Texas beat New York at Arlington.

Angels 5, Blue Jays 4

Chili Davis hit his second homer of the game with two out in the 10th inning to lift California past Toronto at Exhibition Stadium. Davis, who had four hits, hit both homers off reliever David Wells, 3-5.

White Sox 4, Orioles 1

Rookie Jack McDowell allowed four hits in 8 1-3 innings and lost a shot at his first major-league shutout when Fred Lynn homered with one out in the ninth.

Brewers 4, Royals 2

Darryl Hamilton reached on a bunt single, went to third on Bret Saberhagen's wild pickoff attempt and scored the go-ahead run on a passed ball in the eighth inning as visiting Milwaukee beat Kansas City.

Robin Yount tripled home Paul Molitor with the Brewers' second run of the eighth as the Royals lost their third straight game.

Saberhagen took the loss and fell to 10-7.

Buoniconti's Trial Continues In S.C.

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — Marc Buoniconti's previous neck injuries had nothing to do with the broken neck that left him paralyzed in a 1985 football game, an orthopedic surgeon testified.

Dr. Victor Frankel told the Charleston County Court of Common Pleas jury hearing Buoniconti's $16.5 million negligence suit Wednesday that an X-ray taken five days before the injury showed no weakening of the neck.

"The ligaments were all intact," he said, adding the broken neck was "totally independent" of Buoniconti's existing neck condition.

Buoniconti is suing Citadel football team doctor E.K. Wallace Jr. in the case.

Buoniconti, the son of former Miami Dolphins linebacker Nick Buoniconti, broke his neck while playing middle linebacker for The Citadel against East Tennessee State on Oct. 26, 1985. He was left a quadriplegic by the accident.

The suit alleges Wallace was negligent in treating a neck sprain Buoniconti suffered in a game several weeks earlier.

It also charges Buoniconti was never warned when he enrolled at The Citadel back in 1984 that an existing neck condition made it dangerous for him to continue playing football.

Frankel is the chief of orthopedic surgery at New York University's Hospital of Joint Diseases.

He said while the 1985 X-ray showed Buoniconti had a flattened vertebra lower down his neck, the broken neck occurred in another area.

The X-rays, taken the Monday before the game, showed "no damage to the structure of the neck that would cause the neck to be unstable."

And he said the X-rays also showed nothing that would indicate Buoniconti might suffer a broken neck.

"There's no ligament damage, no missing bone. There's nothing that would predispose him to this type of injury," Frankel said.

The sprain Buoniconti suffered in a game three weeks earlier was "a common garden-variety neck sprain," Frankel said.

NBC Getting Strong In TV Sports World

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer
NBC, the overall leader in network ratings, suddenly has become a power broker in sports-television negotiations.

The network is in such a good position that it was able to seek renegotiation of its contract with the Rose Bowl, asking for a reduction in rights fees, then let the game slip away to ABC when the oldest of the bowl games balked at a cut in network payments.

"The Rose Bowl is a financial dud, a money loser," an industry source said after the New Year's Day game ended a 36-year affiliation with NBC by switching to ABC for the next nine years. "It hasn't had a national championship matchup since 1980."

NBC saved $23.7 million by dumping its Rose Bowl contract, which had two years to run. More importantly, the move showed just how powerful the network has become in sports.

Because NBC has the Olympics, World Series and Super Bowl coming up, it is considered a cinch to lead the overall ratings once again. And with the writers' strike pushing back the new television season beyond the Olympics and World Series, NBC stands to make a bundle in additional advertising revenue. With no new episodes of weekly series available, advertisers are searching for other programming to sponsor. One place they're looking is the major sports events, all of which are on NBC.

"It's almost a situation of the other networks having to concede that two, three-week period to the Olympics," said Jon Miller, NBC vice president for program planning and development. "Advertisers realize that, realize they will get a fringe audience for the Olympics that otherwise would be watching the new series."

"The Olympics are a tremendous place for them to be. They can get the association with the Olympics with virtually no competition."

"The strike has played in our favor, no question. It's accelerated interest and brought in new advertisers who would not normally be in the Olympics."

The $300 million the network paid for the Seoul Games might turn into the bargain of the decade. Projections that NBC could make $25 million on the Olympics are being upgraded weekly, with some profit estimates running as high as $75 million.

"The fourth quarter (of the year) is where network advertising agencies will make huge investments," Miller said. "They want the best they can get for their money." In the Olympics and World Series, NBC has it.

As for the Rose Bowl, much of the game's luster has worn off because neither the Pac-10 nor the Big Ten seems capable of producing an unbeaten team. Not since Southern California and Ohio State played in 1980 has a Rose Bowl participant had a shot at the national championship.

With that in mind, and knowing the Orange Bowl — a prime-time winner every year — has become the most attractive New Year's Day game, NBC could afford to insist on a reduction in payments to the Tournament of Roses Association. When ABC said it was willing to take the game now for the $11.5 million NBC was scheduled to pay for 1989 and '90, the move was made.

"We said, 'It's not a national championship game because of the restrictions of it's tie-ins with the Big Ten and Pac-10.' Letting it go was a decision that had to be made from a business and common sense approach for NBC," Miller said.

NBC might not be hurt a bit by losing the Rose Bowl, which it began to cover on radio in 1927. It still has the Orange Bowl, of course, and that game has produced a national champion four of the last seven years.

NBC also has a wild card in the Fiesta Bowl, which has no conference affiliation. Two years ago, when Miami, Fla., and Penn State, both independents, were ranked 1-2, the Fiesta got them. NBC moved the game to prime time on Jan. 2 and made out superbly.

"The Fiesta has been a tremendous game for us," Miller said. "We feel it has a very bright future with a lot of flexibility because it is not beholden to anyone. It absolutely has better possibilities than the Rose Bowl."

ABC To Air 'Winds' Sequel In November

By DIANE HAITHMAN
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

HOLLYWOOD — In order to fill the void of new fall programming expected if the 18-week-old Writers Guild of America strike continues much longer, ABC announced plans Wednesday to air the first 18 hours of its 30-hour miniseries "War and Remembrance" in November, rather than next February as originally intended.

The remaining 12 hours of the World War II drama, a sequel to the 1983 miniseries "The Winds of War," will air sometime in 1989.

ABC Entertainment President Brandon Stoddard said in a prepared statement, "We never imagined that the film's premiere would be affected by a labor dispute, but in our determination to provide the best possible entertainment this fall, we now will be leading with our most exciting television event."

Ted Harbert, vice president of programming at ABC, said the decision to rush the miniseries onto the schedule was made Monday — "and believe me, it wasn't easy," he said.

Even if the writers' strike ends within the next few days, "we face a programming problem in late October and early November," he said in an interview Wednesday. "The ability to get 'War and Remembrance' takes care of a major problem for us in terms of filling time."

Production is virtually completed on the first 18 hours, Harbert said, with only scenes involving miniatures still being shot in London.

"It was a big question whether or not we could get this thing done physically in time; it will be a big achievement," he said. "Even though the rough cut (is in good shape), there's still a lot of work to be done."

ABC's decision to air the miniseries in two blocks was not precipitated by the writers' strike, Harbert said.

"We never intended to air it in one 30-hour part," he said.

Moving the first 18-hour segment into the November ratings "sweeps" period will leave a hole in the February sweeps, but the network still has plenty of competitive programming for that period, he said.

"Nothing we do will be as monumental (as 'War and Remembrance'), but I think we're going to be OK," Harbert said.

"War and Remembrance," based on the Herman Wouk novel, is the sequel to the 18-hour "The Winds of War," which ABC said attracted an audience of 140 million viewers when it aired in February 1983.

"The Winds of War" traced the events leading up to World War II through the story of the family of Victor "Pug" Henry, a fictional career Navy officer who became an unofficial envoy for President Franklin D. Roosevelt during the late 1930s. That series concluded on the day of Japan's attack on Pearl Harbor.

"War and Remembrance" begins one week later, as Pug Henry is taking command of a cruiser at Pearl Harbor, and chronicles the travels of the Henry family to locations of the major events and battles of the war: Midway, Guadalcanal, Stalingrad, Yalta, El Alamein, the Battle of the Bulge, Leyte Gulf, Iwo Jima and Hiroshima. The series was filmed in 10 countries.

Both miniseries were produced and directed by Dan Curtis; the screenplay for the new miniseries was written by Wouk, Curtis and Earl Wallace. Most of the cast is the same, with Robert Mitchum as Henry, Polly Bergen as his wife, Victoria Tennant as Pamela Tudsbury, David Dukes as Leslie Slotze, Peter Graves as Palmer Kirby and Ralph Bellamy as Roosevelt.

New to the sequel are Hart Bochner, replacing Jan-Michael Vincent as Henry's son Byron; Jane Seymour, replacing Ali MacGraw as Byron's wife, Natalie, and Sir John Gielgud, replacing John Houseman as Natalie's uncle, Aaron Jastrow.

British Firm Buys Moore Company

L.A. Times-Washington Post

HOLLYWOOD — Actress Mary Tyler Moore and the three top executives of MTM Entertainment confirmed Thursday that the successful television production company is being acquired by Television South of London for $320 million.

Flanked by MTM President Arthur L. Price, Senior Executive Vice President Mel D. Blumenthal and Executive Vice President Thomas E. Palmieri — with the company's famous mewing kitten logo in the background — an upbeat Moore pronounced that it was "a very important and exciting day for us, both corporately and individually."

Asked if she felt like the victim of a foreign takeover, Moore laughed and said, "No, I feel like we've been given a tremendous opportunity to grow, especially in the European market."

Price said that, rather than an acquisition, MTM management viewed the TVS buyout as "a merger out of which will grow a bigger and stronger company."

According to Price — who founded the company in 1970 along with Moore and her former husband Grant Tinker — the current MTM management will remain in place, as will the company name. He said the four directors — Moore is a "non-executive" director — "have taken a major stock position" in the new company, which he put at 20 percent for the group, and have signed 7-year management contracts.

"There will be no change in personnel or creative attitude," he said, adding "the only thing that will change is that our bank account will move from New York to London. (TVS chief executive) James Gattward has no intention of coming over here and telling us how to run the company," he said.

Legless Vietnam Vet Earns Role Using Skateboard On TV Show

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bob Wieland, a legless Vietnam veteran, said some people were skeptical when he began work on NBC's "Sonny Spoon," thinking he might be there just as window dressing.

Wieland, 41, a former medic, lost his legs to a booby trap while trying to save a buddy. He plays Johnny Skates, a sidewalk surfer and street-smart informant who helps private detective Sonny Spoon, played by Mario Van Peebles in the tongue-in-cheek detective show.

"The first day this big guy was chasing Sonny, and I threw out my skateboard and knocked him down," Wieland said. "I came out like a jaguar and hit him with a body roll. It took all the fight out of the guy. They couldn't believe it. After that nobody wondered what I was doing on the show."

Wieland had never acted until "Sonny Spoon" and said he nearly turned down the role.

"I heard NBC was looking for a double-amputee who was athletic," he said. "I qualified for that. But I had to read for executive producer Stephen Cannell and see if I hit it off with Mario. After I got the job and received the first script I looked at it and it said I was 'a legless derelict panhandler.'"

"I called the producers and said I wouldn't do that. I've been promoting a positive image since I came back from Vietnam. They told me that was the way Johnny Skates was written until they hired me. They said from now on they'd write it around Bob Wieland and my personality. Now, Johnny Skates is a guy who ends up protecting the able-bodied."

A superb athlete, Wieland was about to try out as a pitcher for the Philadelphia Phillies until he enlisted in the Army 20 years ago. The Minnesota Twins and New York Mets were also interested in the 6-foot-4, 205-pounder from the University of Wisconsin at La Crosse.

In 1977, he broke the official world record for the bench press, lifting 303 pounds with a body weight of 122 pounds.

He raised $315,000 for charities with his "Walk for Hunger" across the United States in 1982-86. He's also competed in the New York Marathon, finishing four days after the start. He propels himself on padded hands, lifting his body up and forward.

He plans to compete in the Ironman Triathlon in Hawaii, in which he will have to swim 2.4 miles in the ocean, cycle 112 miles and run a marathon of 26 miles, 385 yards.

He was named U.S. Track Athlete of the Year in ceremonies at the Pro Bowl in Honolulu this past February. Both People magazine and Reader's Digest named him a living American hero.

When he's not acting, Wieland earns his living making inspirational talks around the country.

"I help people to set goals and objectives and overcome obstacles," he said. "I visit a lot of high schools. I spend the whole day with the kids. I cap it off by going to one of their games at night. I kid that I'm good for about two extra touchdowns. I say that one high school with a belief is better than 99 schools with only an interest."

Wieland said that handicapped is a word that's not in his vocabulary.

"I didn't know I was handicapped until one of my neighbors told me I was," he said. "I was mowing the grass. I'd push the lawn mower, then roll my wheelchair, then push the lawn mower, then roll my wheelchair. My neighbor leaned over the fence and told me I shouldn't be mowing the lawn. He said I was handicapped."

 Winning tricks with high cards is easy enough. It's not always as simple to spot the right hand in which to win the trick.

North-South reached four spades in quick time. Apparently, they had an agreement that an immediate raise of partner's major suit response guaranteed four-card support—not recommended by this department. If not, South's correct rebid was three diamonds, which would be a one-round force, to get partner to clarify his spade support.

West got his side off to a good start with his club opening lead. Since the hand seemed to depend only on finding East with the ace of diamonds, declarer got a trifle careless. He won the ace of clubs, cashed the ace of spades and drew a second trump with the king. A heart to the king lost to the ace, and the defenders cashed a club, then forced declarer with a third round of the suit.

After drawing the last trump with dummy's queen, declarer led a diamond to his queen. Suddenly, his predicament dawned on him. His only entry to dummy to lead another diamond was with a trump. But if declarer took out dummy's trump, the defenders would score the ace of diamonds and a club for a one-trick set. So declarer led a diamond from the king in the hope of finding a doubleton ace—down one.

The hand was too easy. After winning the ace of clubs declarer should draw two rounds of trumps ending in dummy. Then he leads a diamond to the queen. No matter what the defense does, declarer is a tempo ahead. He will be able to lead a second diamond toward his hand to land his contract while there is still a trump on the table.

South Korean Leader Calls For More Contact In North

By BARRY RENFREW
Associated Press Writer
SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — President Roh Tae-woo today announced a six-point plan to ease 40 years of bitter confrontation with communist North Korea and clear the way for peaceful reunification of the divided peninsula.

In a nationally televised speech, the president called for broad trade, humanitarian, cultural and political contacts with the north to normalize relations and end the struggle for supremacy.

"I believe we have now come to a historic moment when we should be able to find a breakthrough toward a lasting peace and unification on the Korean peninsula," Roh said.

He called for an end to international rivalry between the two Koreas in foreign diplomacy, saying the two nations should work together instead of competing for international backing and trying to isolate each other.

"We hope to bring an end to counterproductive diplomacy characterized by competition and confrontation between the south and the north ... We also hope that representatives of South and North Korea will contact each other freely in international forums," he said.

The six points, most of which had already been mentioned by Roh in recent weeks, were similar or identical to proposals made by other South Korean governments since 1972.

Roh's proposals did not go as far as a call by President Chun Doo-hwan for a meeting with North Korean President Kim Il Sung in 1981 that never took place. Roh said more measures would be taken if North Korea "will positively respond to the measures outlined."

In a separate development, the South Korean Defense Ministry warned today that the north "is inevitably expected to provoke war if the opportunity arises" and had not given up its plans to conquer the south.

A group of newspaper editors were told at a ministry briefing that the north continues to mass its forces on the border for a possible lightning strike. The ministry routinely makes such warnings, but it was not clear why the briefing was held the same day as Roh's speech.

South and North Korea have no relations and technically remain at war since no peace treaty was signed at the end of the Korean War in 1953. The border is closed, there are no communications or transport links and both governments refuse to recognize each other.

The pro-Western capitalist south is emerging as a major economic power, while the communist north is one of the world's most repressive and isolated nations.

There was no immediate response from the north, but unification is not seen as possible under existing conditions with both Koreas refusing to abandon their rival political systems.

South Korea's main opposition parties, which have been pressing the government to move ahead on unification, cautiously welcomed Roh's proposal as a "forward looking step."

Roh said the south would no longer try to stop nations it has ties with from trading with the north "provided that it does not involve military goods."

He also said Seoul would help the north establish relations with South Korea's allies, including the United States and Japan. South Korea would continue to seek relations with the north's allies, principally the Soviet Union and China, he said.

South and North Korea have been bitter opponents since their creations in 1948 after U.S. and Soviet troops divided the Korean peninsula at the end of World War II.

The communist north invaded the south in 1950 to start the Korean War.

Unification has become a major issue in the south in recent months with radical and dissident groups pushing for quick action to reunite the peninsula. The Roh government, caught off guard on the issue, has been trying to recapture the political initiative.

Past attempts at improving relations between the two countries resulted in a few exchange and cultural visits and talks on a variety of issues. But the talks always collapsed before making substantial progress.

The last talks between the two Koreas collapsed in 1986 after the north protested joint South Korean-U.S. military exercises. The United States has about 42,000 troops in the south under a mutual defense treaty.

Hijack Trial Is Delayed

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Because an important witness failed to appear, a court today adjourned until next week the trial of a Lebanese man charged with the 1985 TWA hijacking and murder of a U.S. Navy diver.

Less than an hour after the trial of Mohammed Ali Hamadi resumed today, chief judge Heiner Mueckenberger recessed the proceedings until Wednesday.

The trial, under heavy security in a specially constructed prison courtroom, began Tuesday.

Both of the trial's first two sessions have been cut short, raising prospects the proceedings could extend into next year. Already, officials have scheduled court days into December and say more could be added.

Hamadi, a Lebanese Shiite Moslem, is on trial for murder and air piracy in the June 1985 TWA hijacking. During the ordeal, 39 Americans were held hostage 17 days and U.S. Navy diver Robert Stethem of Waldorf, Md., was murdered after gunmen forced the Athens to Rome flight to land in Beirut.

Mueckenberger said he was adjourning the trial because a witness who knew Hamadi during his previous stay in West Germany was unable to come to today's session.

The man, a social worker, originally had been scheduled to testify next Wednesday but was later asked by the court to appear today.

Tuesday's opening session was also quickly suspended after Hamadi refused to participate in the proceedings.

Mexican Vote Totals Late

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The governing party claimed today that its candidate won Mexico's presidency, despite a computer breakdown at election headquarters and opposition charges that the government rigged the vote.

Neither the Federal Electoral Commission nor any of the parties had released any results when Jorge de la Vega Dominguez, president of the Institutional Revolutionary Party, announced "a crushing, legal and incontestable victory" for Carlos Salinas de Gortari shortly after 1:30 a.m. The party has ruled Mexico since 1929.

Moments after the victory claim, Interior Secretary Manuel Bartlett went on national television to reject allegations of vote fraud.

A few hours earlier, the three leading opposition presidential candidates met with federal officials and issued a statement accusing the government of rigging the election.

One witness to the voting Wednesday said she saw an 8-year-old boy cast a ballot. People were also seen voting for their whole families and election workers were said to be stuffing ballot boxes.

"The election day that just ended represented a civic awakening of the Mexican people" that the government has quashed by rigging the vote, the opposition candidates said.
