By JOHN BARE
Reflector Staff Writer

State lawmakers have approved a $177 million spending plan for one-time grants and capital projects, and East Carolina University will receive funds to acquire land for a regional activities center.

Lawmakers Friday approved what may be the final installment of the $9.9 billion state budget, but a move by House leaders delayed adjournment, and legislators will convene again Monday.

The approved package includes $500,000 for land acquisition at ECU, and state Sen. Tom Taft, D-Pitt, said the next step is receiving primary funding for the activity center building, which should come in the 1989 session.

"I'm delighted," Taft said. "Again our district is fairing well, and that's because of teamwork."

"There was never any question about (the $500,000). The leadership approved that right from the offset," said state Rep. Ed Warren, D-Pitt.

Thomas A. Bennett of Winston-Salem, chairman of the ECU Board of Trustees, said the board has not discussed a particular site for the regional activities center, but he is pleased with the appropriation.

"There is no reason we shouldn't be on target for what we have been asked to do," Bennett said, "and that is plan for the regional center."

"We do not have any excess land," said ECU Trustee Max R. Joyner Sr. of Greenville. "As yet, we really do not know what we're going to do. But if land becomes available, we'll have the money to do something about it."

The university does own about 15 acres of land on N.C.

Eastern Crops Escape Midwest Weather Woes

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Corn in Illinois and other parts of the Midwest, which should be at eye level now, is barely waist high. Streams and springs in North Carolina's mountains are drying up because of the drought in that area, and hot, dry weather is threatening central North Carolina's agricultural economy.

But in the eastern section, and especially in Pitt County, "crops are looking great right now, according to Sam Uzzell, an agent with the Pitt County Agricultural Extension Service.

"The thing about the crops" in Pitt County "is that growing conditions have been rather good this spring," in spite of "a cool, wet March, April and May. I think that really we've had excellent growing conditions," Uzzell said.

"As far as small grain is concerned, the yields of those crops are just extremely good this year for most people, and crop prices are high for these things too. So there are some excellent chances and opportunities for soybean and corn growers to ... lock in a price that they can maybe make up for some lean years.

"We are sorry that we can kind of benefit from the drought and misfortune of Midwestern farmers," Uzzell said. "But we suffered with dry years in the past, too."

According to Uzzell, "This is a year in which optimism in farming abounds and as we have completed the harvest of small grains and are beginning the harvest of tobacco and are tending to soybeans, peanuts and corn, things look real good.

"We're in a somewhat dry period in the northern part of the county," Uzzell said. "But ground moisture supplies are good and if corn can receive some rainfall in the next two weeks, that should be a good yielding crop.

"There's plenty of water for tobacco," he said.

Heat Boosting Ozone Quantities Over Cities

By GUY DARST
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The heat wave in much of the country is pushing up concentrations of ozone, a major air pollutant, over big cities to levels sometimes not seen for a decade.

"We are having an absolutely horrendous summer," commented Bill Becker, executive director of the State and Territorial Air Pollution Program Administrators Association, on Friday.

Ozone prompted air pollution advisories in Chicago every day last week and caused standards to be violated in Vermont for the first time in recent memory.

Several states and cities warned people with lung problems to curtail activities and stay inside during the afternoon. New York had a statewide advisory on Friday.

The new peaks come at a time when the Environmental Protection Agency is considering whether new ozone standards are needed because of unexpected lung damage under certain conditions.

They also coincide with warnings from some scientists that the long-predicted "greenhouse effect" warming of the earth has begun, and hot, dry ozone-prone summers are going to become more frequent.

James Hansen, a climatologist at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, says hot summers — with "hot" defined as the warmest one-third of all summers in 1951-1980 — could occur half the time in the mid-1990s.

Heat speeds up ozone formation. Temperature inversions may trap ozone near the ground and keep it from dispersing.

Though in the stratosphere ozone protects the earth from harmful ultraviolet rays of the sun, at ground level EPA has defined it as unhealthy in concentrations over 0.12 parts per million for an hour. Ozone constricts the air passages in the lung. It is the chemical than makes your chest feel tight in smog.

Three things make ozone: sunlight, oxides of nitrogen from burning fossil fuels and compounds like those found in unburned gasoline vapor, which react with the nitrogen oxides. Concentrations peak in the afternoon and decline at night.

The chief weapon for fighting ozone is reduction of gasoline vapors through controls on cars. Some areas require auto inspections and vapor recovery at service stations.

The junking of older, dirtier cars has brought cleaner air to many cit-

Just Like Any True Easterner, Miss N.C. Loves Her Barbecue

By AMY GAVIGAN
Reflector Staff Writer

This year's winner of the Miss North Carolina pageant may be moving on to bigger and better things but the Pitt County native has not forgotten her roots or her taste for eastern-style barbeque.

Janet Lee Beamon, who won the Miss North Carolina crown June 25 in Raleigh, has come a long way from her days as a tomboy in Greenville, according to her mother, Janet Beamon.

"In second or third grade she was a tomboy and wanted to get all her hair cut off," she said. "Of course, we weren't too happy after it was all cut off."

But the tomboy stage did not last too long. "She has always been prissy and her mother has always dressed her to a tee," said her grandmother, Margaret Bowen of Ayden.

In the second grade, Miss Beamon began dancing under the direction of Greenville dance instructor Ramona VanNortwick and, according to her mother, wanted to quit after the first few months.

But the agreement was that she would complete the entire year of lessons and she stuck with it. "And it turned out to be the love of her life," said her mother.

The Beamon family moved from Greenville to Henderson when Miss Beamon was 8 years old. Her memories of the Pitt County area are few, but one that has endured is her love of barbecue, specifically Parker's. "I love their barbecue," Miss Beamon said.

While in Greenville, Miss Beamon attended kindergarten and first grade at Greenville Christian Academy before moving on to A.G. Cox for second grade and part of third.

The family spent the next 10 years in Henderson where Miss Beamon first became involved in beauty pageants. She entered her first contest during her senior year in high school and finished first runner-up in the Miss Henderson contest.

"That was her goal because she knew she was not ready for the re-

Paramedic Service Now Offered By Eastern Pines Rescue Squad

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Srtaff Writer

The Eastern Pines Rescue Squad has started providing full paramedic service to residents of the Eastern Pines, Simpson, Grimesland and Black Jack fire districts.

Ron Dale, the squad's training officer, said late last week that Eastern Pines began providing paramedic service on July 1 after 11 squad members each completed 292 hours of training that began June 30, 1987.

Squad Captain Ervin Hardee said the training, provided by the East Carolina University School of Medicine, was funded by a $10,000 grant from the state's Office of Emergency Medical Services which was secured through the medical school's department of emergency medicine and Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

Mary Gardner, coordinator for the medical school's division of emergency medicine, said Friday that Eastern Pines is "the only totally volunteer paramedic service providing 24 hour service east of Raleigh ... I think probably the only one in the state. That makes them pretty unique," she said. "They are at the highest level of prehospital care available in the United States.

According to Ms. Gardner, the training program for each of the squad's paramedics involved 136 classroom hours of instruction, 56 clinical hours and 100 hours of field training while being precepted by a physician.

And Ms. Gardner said, "the Department of Emergency Medicine physicians who precepted the squad members ... took their own time," to precept the students. "The attending and resident physicians spent the time needed — almost 1,600 hours — riding with them. That was pretty unique.

"The support from the medical community in general ... the dedication from each of the private physicians who taught" was also "really unique," according to Ms. Gardner.

As paramedics, the squad members "will be able to use advanced medical skills ... similar to those that could be done previously only in the emergency department," Dr. Kathleen Cline, head of the division of emergency medical services with the medical school, said. "In many ways, they are an extension of the emergency physician out into the community."

According to Dr. Cline, "each individual member of the squad who has taken time to undergo paramedic training ... has full-time jobs in other fields. They are volunteers.

"I hope their enthusiasm will encourage other squads to follow the same course and develop a paramedic system in the county," Dr. Cline said.

Eastern Pines' paramedics will be able to give many more lifesaving drugs, especially for asthma and

ECU Gets Funds To Buy Land

43, Joyner said, but it is a good distance from campus.

C.G. Moore, vice chancellor for business affairs at ECU, also said he was not aware of any specific site earmarked for the activities center.

Lawmakers began the legislative short session June 2 and ran past the target adjournment date of July Fourth as House and Senate members haggled over how to spend the money and whether to fund local pet projects, or pork barrell items.

Legislators worked this week to arrive at a compromise, and a joint conference committee, made up of 14 House and Senate members, reached an agreement Wednesday.

Legislators approved the spending package Friday by a vote of 47-0 in the Senate and 98-12 in the House, but House budget leaders introduced a measure to exempt employees of the Office of Administrative Hearings from state personnel guidelines — a move many Senators oppose. Both branches will consider the proposal Monday.

Also in the spending plan, lawmakers approved $15 million for renovations throughout the 16-campus UNC system, and the University of North Carolina Board of Governors will decide how to allocate the money.

The state's community college system will receive $9.9 million for capital improvements for the 58 community colleges and technical schools in the system, and Pitt Community College will receive $200,800 to go toward completion of a new building on campus.

The Pitt-Greenville Art Museum, which has raised nearly $200,000 for construction of a new exhibition wing, will receive $100,000 from the state to help finance the project.

Other area items in the spending package include: $101,000 for the Pitt County Mental Health Center's detoxification facility; $145,000 for the Tideland Detoxification Center in Washington, N.C.; $100,000 to open a Farmers Market in Martin County, and $25,000 for historical preservation in Martin County.

After much debate over whether to fund pork barrell items and how the appropriations might affect candidates running for state office this year, the Senate and House did approve dozens of local pet projects.

Voters are often opposed to funding pork barrell items, Taft said, but they usually support the idea after they see they how the money is spent — such as the renovation of the historic Grifton Railroad Depot, for which the Senate allocated $30,000.

Rezoning Requests Key Council Workshop Session

Members of the Greenville City Council will meet for a workshop session Monday at 6 p.m. in the third floor conference room of City Hall to discuss several items, including eight rezoning requests, that are on the agenda of Thursday's monthly action meeting.

Included among the rezoning matters is a request by the Pitt County Board of Education to rezone 52 acres along Arlington Boulevard to allow for the relocation of the proposed Rose High School facility.

The request, which was unanimously recommended for approval by the Planning and Zoning Commission, is to rezone a 52-acre tract on Arlington Boulevard, east of Hooker Road from RA-20 (residential/agricultural) to O&I (office and institutional).

Also to be discussed is a request by J. Bryant Kittrell to rezone two tracts located in the Medical District, north of Stantonsburg Road, south of State Road 1202, and east of Medical Oaks Apartments and Cornerstone Missionary Baptist Church. Tract 1, 4.53 acres, is requested to be rezoned from MD-3 (medical district professional) to MD-5 (medical district residential) while tract 2, .44 acres, is requested to be rezoned from MD-5 to MD-3.

Other rezoning requests to be discussed include a request by Lester and Bernice Branch to rezone 20 acres located north of SR 1421, south of the Belvoir Highway and northwest of the Pitt-Greenville Airport from RA-20 to IU (unoffensive industry); a request by Morco Realty to rezone 11 acres located north of Mumford Road and west of Parkers Creek from RA-20 to IU; a request by the Department of Planning and Development to rezone a 1.18-acre tract located on the north side of Edwards Street between Monroe Street and Williams Avenue from CS (shopping center) to R-9 (residential); a request by Charlie Speight to rezone .27 acres located off the northwest intersection of Greenville Boulevard and Alexander Circle from R-9 to O&I (office and institutional); a request by Joseph D. Speight to rezone a .95 acre tract located south of Peed Drive and being a portion of Summerfield Gardens Apartments from RA-20 and CH (highway commercial) to R-6, and a request by C.J.L. Co. to rezone a 1.29-acre tract located east of Charles Boulevard and the Thackery Road intersection from R-9S to O&I.

Other matters on Thursday's agenda to be discussed Monday include an annexation request by the Greenville Housing Authority for voluntary annexation of a 9.5-acre tract located off SR 1204 and east of Rountree and Westhills Townhomes; a resolution of intent to annex Colonial Mobile Home Park and to establish a public hearing date for the matter, and a request to designate a 15-member Historic properties/District Commission.

Also to be discussed is the establishment of a capital project account of $6,948 for the operation and rehabilitation of the Community Life Center; approval of a $240,000 budget for the Pitt-Greenville Convention and Visitors Authority for 1988-89; recommendations from the Citizens Advisory Committee on Cable TV; a bid award for two sanitation trucks; an award of an architectural contract to Dudley, Shoe, Ellinwood and Associates for the addition and renovations to George Washington Carver Library, and a resolution establishing an ad hoc committee to study various alternatives regarding the future use of the Gardner Fire Station.

Items on Thursday's Consent Agenda to be discussed Monday include continuing a leasing arrangement of the Moyewood Center to the Pitt County Department of Social Services for the continued operation of a day-care center; amending a chapter of the City Code regulating parades; accepting sections of Mulberry Lane and Mattox Road for permanent city maintenance, and the release of $485.48 in taxes.

The council will also conduct an executive session Monday to discuss land acquisition.

Report Says B1 Bomber Plagued By Design Flaws

WASHINGTON (AP) — New tests show that the B1 bomber's electronic warfare system has design flaws that could prevent it from reaching the Air Force's planned capabilities for the warplane, according to a published report.

The Washington Post, in its Sunday editions, said the flaws detected in the tests could force the Pentagon to reroute possible bombing runs through the Soviet Union in the event of nuclear war.

The newspaper cited an internal congressional document written by House Armed Services Committee Chairman Les Aspin, D-Wis., who received a classified Air Force briefing late last week on the problems, and Pentagon sources.

"The plane was designed to be capable of a nuclear attack against the Soviet Union," Aspin said. "It is now called into question whether it will ever be able to do that mission in the way it was advertised."

The Air Force said "the existing system was discovered to be incapable of meeting the ... specification requirements."

Aspin as in Wisconsin for the weekend and could not be reached for comment by The Associated Press. Pentagon spokeswoman Capt. Nancy Laluntas had no comment on the report.

Air Force officials said the tests found that parts of the plane's electronic countermeasures system — designed to help protect the low-flying, penetrating aircraft on its most critical bombing missions — does not work and cannot be corrected without major changes, the newspaper said.

The B1 bomber's history has been beset with controversy.

"This is indeed a happy and significant day for the citizens of Pitt County," Dr. Jack Allison, chairman of the medical school's department of emergency medicine, said. "Personally, I have waited eight years for the implementation of paramedic care in the county of Pitt.

"The sophistication of this medical center warrants the utilization of EMT-Paramedics and I am pleased that the Eastern Pines squad has pioneered this level of training here in Greenville.

"I am especially appreciative of Dr. Cline and her staff with the division of EMS ... for obtaining the training grant. I am also most appreciative of Dr. William Laupus, vice chancellor and dean for the ECU School of Medicine, for establishing the department of emergency medicine and subsequently the division of emergency medical services. Because of his vision and personal dedication, emergency medical services have definitely improved, not only here in Pitt County, but throughout eastern North Carolina," Allison said.

"My hat also goes off to Captain Ervin Hardee and the entire paramedic crew at Eastern Pines, for they are indeed a bright, energetic and dedicated group who have performed exceptionally well during their paramedic training program.

"Now that Eastern Pines has helped set the tenor and tone for paramedic skills in Greenville and in the county," Allison said, "we look forward to an orderly expansion of the paramedic level for other rescue squads in the coming months and years ahead."

Allison said, "It is particularly worthwhile to note that Eastern Pines Rescue Squad is fully voluntary ... operated on a volunteer basis, and that nationally, volunteers in EMS are indeed a vanishing breed.

"The citizens of Pitt County can be exceptionally proud of the Eastern Pines squad," Allison said.

According to Stuart Elks, an Eastern Pines first lieutenant, the squad, which began operations on August 1, 1982, has 44 members, including three ambulance attendants, 11 emergency medical technicians, 13 EMT-Intermediates, four EMT-Advanced Intermediates and 13 paramedics.

"Our goal," Elks said, "is to provide the best possible service ... the highest level of training, to the citizens that we can." And, Elks said, "In order to do that, it takes dedication and cooperation at all levels of training to make this thing work."

Two other Eastern Pines members, Joe Burris and Richard Lambert, are graduates of previous paramedic courses, Elks said, while two other squad members are expected to complete paramedic training in the near future.

Partner Named

McGladrey & Pullen, accounting and consulting firm, announced that it has named James W. Carlin, senior manager with the New Bern office, to the firm's partnership.

Carlin worked for R.J. Reynolds, Ernest & Whinney and Du Pont after earning a master's degree from East Carolina University in 1963. He joined McGladrey & Pullen in 1985 as manager and provides consulting services to clients throughout eastern North Carolina.

Action Plan

GREENSBORO (AP) — The Department of Community Colleges plans to develop an affirmative action plan that will promote efforts to hire black faculty and administrators, recruit and retain black students and increase the number of black trustees.

"We consider that sort of a basic minimum," said Bob Scott, president of the community college system.

Five Are Arrested

Greenville police said five people were arrested in the area Saturday.

Officer Phillip Worthington said William George Daniels, 34, of 509 Shepard St. was arrested at 12:02 a.m. and charged with assault inflicting serious injury following an incident that involved a dispute over $2.60.

Officer C.M. Credle said William Stacey May, 19, of Route 2, Box 471, was arrested at 1:32 a.m. in connection with a kidnapping incident at Evans Street and Reade Circle.

Officer T.A. Lee said Martin Luther Anderson, 20, of Box 169, Winterville, was arrested at 1:37 a.m. at Fifth and Ford streets for operating a motor vehicle without a license.

Officer S.A. Person said Lorionia Williams, 29, of 300 Paige Dr., was arrested at 11:40 a.m. and charged with shoplifting $8.78 worth of ribeye steaks from Kroger.

Officer M.F. Benton said Curtis Crandell, 29, of 204 Ridgeway St., was arrested at 11:44 a.m. on a charge of shoplifting $17.11 worth of chuck roasts from Piggly Wiggly.

Correction

Guest Speaker

Herschel Redding, president of the North Carolina Home Builders Association, will speak at Tuesday's meeting of the Greenville-Pitt County Home Builders Association.

The meeting will be held at 6:30 p.m. in the Pitt County Shrine Club building.

Chapter Meeting Set

The Greenville chapter of United Ostomy will meet Monday at 7:30 p.m. in conference room A of the Gaskins-Leslie Center.

Linda Fletcher, an enterostomal therapist, will be guest speaker.

The executive board meeting will start at 6:30 p.m.

College Loans

Three educational loan programs for North Carolina residents attending colleges in or out of state and for non-residents attending colleges in North Carolina are available through College Foundation Inc.

One program is for dependent or independent students and is based on financial need. One is for independent self-supporting students and is not based on financial need. The third program is for parents of dependent students and is not based on financial need.

For more information write College Foundation Inc., P.O. Box 12100, Raleigh, N.C., 27605 or call 919-821-4771.

Men's Day Set

Men's day will be observed at St. John Baptist Church, Falkland, Sunday at 11 a.m. The speaker will be the Rev. James Harris from St. Reddicks Missionary Baptist Church, Belhaven.

Road Contracts

The N.C. Board of Transportation awarded contracts Friday for $147,500 in spot safety projects in and around Greenville.

Randy Doub of Greenville, a member of the transportation board, said the projects include: $20,000 for a multiphased traffic signal to be installed at the intersection of U.S. 13-N.C. 11 and Secondary Road 1417 near the Staton House Volunteer Fire Department; $28,750 for a three-phase signal and left turn lanes at the intersection of N.C. 33 and Secondary Road 1726, and $82,500 for interconnected traffic signals at the intersections of Emergency Drive, SR 1203 (the Allen Road) and SR 1204 with the Stantonsburg Road in the area of Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

REACH Speaker

Bob DeSoto will be the speaker at a REACH meeting for families and friends of the chronically mentally ill Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. at the Pitt County Mental Health Center, 2310 Stantonsburg Road.

DeSoto, the coordinator of continuing care services at the Pitt County Mental Health Center, will discuss "Housing for the Chronic Mentally Ill."

The organization is sponsored by the Mental Health Association in Pitt County. For information call Candace Currin at 752-7151.

Event Participants

Eight members of the John A. Wilkinson High School Vocational Industrial Clubs of America chapter in Belhaven recently attended the national leadership conference in Wichita, Kan.

About 4,000 students, industry leaders, parents and teachers participated in the four-day event that showcased skills ranging from areospace technology to drafting, welding and public speaking.

The JAW-VICA Club participated in the event, "Opening and Closing Ceremonies." Team members were Jessica Respess, Cherryl Boyette, Paula Webster, Jay Holland, Nancy Allen, Reatta Wright, Karen Hassell and Brandi Windley.

This was the school's fourth consecutive year as a state winner and a member of the official state delegation to the national conference.

Teen Goes To Ireland

The Irish Way, a holiday and study program sponsored by the Irish American Cultural Institute, is a non-profit organization based in St. Paul, Minn. Participants study Irish literature, history and culture, and explore various social and recreational activities such as attending a play at a Dublin theater and seeing the sport of hurling.

The Irish Way completes the program with field trips, a tour of the island and a home stay, where each student is adopted by an Irish family.

ies, but EPA lists 68 cities and rural areas as violating ozone standards.

The latest research, part of a wave of new findings that started about two years ago, could mean an additional standard covering a longer period like six or eight hours, said Bruce Jordan, head of the standards section in EPA's air program. That could take 18 months to develop, he said.

Most ozone research has concentrated on peak exposure, but new work shows that several hours of exposure at elevated levels means it takes less exercise to bring on restricted breathing. "We've seen an effect at 0.08 ppm for 6.6 hours," said Jordan. "Our real concern is multiple hits (of peaks and valleys of exposure) ... you seem to get more damage than with a constant exposure."

Animal studies show that lung damage from high concentrations tends to persist, something the agency hopes to confirm or rule out through human autopsy studies.

Some reports from the field:

—At Bennington in the southwest corner of Vermont, a monitor recorded ozone concentrations of 0.125 ppm on two days in June. "I'm not prepared to say what the origin is, but the majority has to be interstate transport," said Brian Fitzgerald of the state Natural Resources Agency.

In other words, pollutants emitted in Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York and other upwind points early in the day were still forming ozone after having been blown into Vermont.

He said no one could remember the last violation, but he believed it was three or four years ago.

—Washington, D.C., as of Friday had seen 15 days in which the standard had been violated, compared with six expected in a normal year. The peak reading, 0.19 ppm on Thursday, has not been matched in nine years.

—Chicago has had nine days over the standard, compared with an estimated seven in a normal year. The city issued its first "yellow alert" in a decade, the first step up from an advisory, for readings at three monitors over 0.20 ppm last Thursday, with a peak of 0.223 ppm.

—Louisville, Ky., has had seven days over the limit vs. six in all of 1987. Gary Wilson, technical services supervisor, said, "My only comment is, Lord, send us some rain." But the long-range forecast, he said, is "dismal," with the same weather pattern expected for all of July.

—Five cities in Pennsylvania — Harrisburg, Scanton-Wilkes Barre, Reading, Altoona and Erie — have had readings high enough this year alone to win them official designation as "non-attainment areas," something EPA does after averaging data for three years.

Panel Probes Charges Against IRS

LAWRENCEVILLE, Ga. (AP) — A U.S. House subcommittee is investigating allegations of attempts to influence senior Internal Revenue Service officials in Washington and six other cities, a panel aide says.

"The allegations of misconduct concern high-level people at district and regional office levels," Peter Barash, staff director of the Commerce Consumer and Monetary Affairs subcommittee of the House Government Operations Committee, told the Lawrenceville-based Gwinnett Daily News on Friday.

For seven weeks, subcommittee investigators and the General Accounting Office have been looking into charges of abuse by senior staffers in Los Angeles; Cincinnati; Newark, N.J.; San Francisco; Chicago; and Dallas, as well as Washington, Barash said.

The investigators also are trying to determine if top officials at IRS headquarters in Washington failed to act against senior regional officials who allegedly misused their authority, Barash said.

Barash said the subcommittee, chaired by Rep. Doug Barnard, D-Ga., received a number of allegations in the spring about misconduct within the agency.

"We checked out some things and found out that the allegations appear at this preliminary stage of the investigation to be true enough to begin a formal investigation," he said.

Barnard's subcommittee will conduct hearings by early October on the results of its investigation, Barash said.

Museum Of Art Gets Capital Improvements Funds

By JERRY RAYNOR
Reflector Staff Writer

The North Carolina Legislature on Friday approved a budget appropriation of $100,000 to the Greenville Museum of Art for capital improvements in a non-recurring category.

"All of us are gratified that the museum will receive these funds," said State Rep. Ed Warren. "Senator Tom Taft has been the one person most instrumental in getting the appropriation approved for the museum. Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan was also supportive in seeing this item approved."

"We are indeed pleased to get this substantial help in our capital improvement program," said Nelson Britt, director of the Greenville museum. "At this particular moment I don't know what direction will be taken in the use of these funds. That of course will be up to the decision of the board of trustees."

Britt said that he feels certain, however, that "the appropriation will be earmarked for the expansion of more gallery space. In fact, when we put in the request for funds, we also furnished information and an architect's preliminary sketch that calls for the possibility of a multi-faceted gallery space in a building to be constructed and connected to the existing building, most likely to the rear of the present building.

"These are ideas that have been previously expressed by the trustees, although plans are not concrete. It is hoped that we can build a large, lofty type gallery in a manner that will not alter the existing structure.

"Personally, I feel, and I think that the general public may also feel, that the present building should not be altered as in time to come the Greenville museum building will have a great deal of historical value within the community."

Nelson added that "the interest and support given the museum by our legislators certainly gives wide support to the museum as a facility worthy of public support."

Warren said the $100,000 appropriated is on a two-to-one matching fund basis, and that the nearly $200,000 raised recently in a capital improvement campaign and spent for improvements and expansion of gallery space at the museum is eligible to help meet the matching funds criteria.

"I think it's great that we have been able to secure this appropriation in the non-recurring category of budgeting," Warren said. "Last year, the eastern part of the state received very little of the supplementary budget funds. I hope the funds for the museum and other funds approved for Greenville and eastern North Carolina is the beginning of greater statewide support to eastern North Carolina.

Nell Webb, president of the Greenville Museum of Art Board of Directors, said "This is certainly exciting news. I hope it's a beginning to another phase of forward progress that will continue the growth of the museum as a vital part of Greenville. The prospects are wonderful, and all of us are indebted to Tom Taft, Ed Warren, Nelson Britt and everyone else who has so enthusiastically given time and effort in seeking support for the museum."

Mrs. Webb said that the board of directors will meet July 26, at which time discussions will be made on further plans for "expanding the museum's much-needed additional gallery space."

Childcare Training

The Pitt Community College Small Business Center announces that it will hold classes in childcare training.

The sessions will begin Wednesday and continue through Aug. 3 from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. in Room 202 of the Whichard Building on the PCC campus.

The workshop will be offered on four consecutive Wednesday nights with each class time covering a different learning center. Eight contact hours will be awarded upon completion of each session.

Registration is limited to the first 35 persons each session. For further information call 756-3130.

Marionettes Perform

The Vagabond Marionettes will present the fairytale Cinderella at the Jaycee Park administrative building Thursday at 2 p.m. and 7 p.m.

The program is sponsored by the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department. Admission is $1, with advance tickets on sale at the Jaycee Park administrative building.

The fantasy is told by little Pierre the Mouse, Cinderella's confidante. The production will feature Victorian sets and costumes, magical effects and laughter.

sponsibility involved (in being Miss Henderson)," her mother said.

She then won the Miss Henderson pageant at age 19 before going on to win the Miss North Carolina pageant at age 20.

Despite Miss Beamon's success in pageants, her mother said it was not a role she had been groomed for during childhood.

"She was not a pageant girl (growing up)," she said. "Most people think they (pageant competitors) are groomed from the time they are babies, but she was not."

Miss Beamon expressed little interest in competing in pageants until her present managers, Glenn and Edith Nunnery, approached her and told her of her potential.

Miss Beamon, a pyschology major, is a rising junior at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro and plans a career in family counseling, but she plans to take a year off to fulfill her responsibilities as Miss North Carolina.

Miss Beamon intends to focus on the family's role in alcohol and drug abuse. "I plan to discourage alcohol and drug abuse and hope to set a good example," she said.

"My big thing is the family. I want to focus on the family's part in children's alcohol and drug abuse. I think everything starts at home. That is what I will try to promote this year."

As winner of the Miss North Carolina crown, Miss Beamon will receive a $5,500 scholarship and $10,000 in other prizes, as well as the opportunity to do what only one other Miss North Carolina has done — win the Miss America title, which Maria Beale Fletcher captured in 1961.

Mrs. Bowen said she was not surprised to see her granddaughter in the running for the Miss North Carolina title, but she was a little surprised to see her win.

"We expected her to be in the top 10," Mrs. Bowen said, "but we were shocked when she was crowned. We knew she had the capabilities but you don't want to be let down too much."

The pageant crown even sparked some interest in her husband, A.T. Bowen, she said, "He doesn't get excited over much, but he did over this!"

If she had the opportunity to do so, Miss Beamon said that she would participate in the pageant all over again. "Oh yes, it's the opportunity of a lifetime. The experiences I gain will be so advantageous.

"The Miss North Carolina and Miss America programs are self-improvement programs for young women," she said. "I've formed opinions on what's going on in the world and have become a more solid person."

The question Miss Beamon says she is asked most frequently about winning the Miss North Carolina crown is, "How does it feel?" To which she usually responds, "I'm still Lee, the person I always was, the person I always will be, so I guess you could say if feels like being Lee."

ECU Student Working At Disney

Debra Ann Herron of Washington, N.C., is one of 13 East Carolina University students spending the summer at Walt Disney World in work-learning arrangements coordinated by the ECU Office of Cooperative Education with the Lake Buena Vista, Fla., resort complex.

Ms. Herron, an education major, is working as a food service hostess.

As participants in the Walt Disney World College Program, the students are working 30 hours a week as attractions hosts, lifeguards, parking lot attendants or sales personnel. In addition they attend a series of business management seminars given by Disney employees on such topics as marketing, entertainment, park operations, finance and employee relations.

According to Daniel Shull of the ECU cooperative education office, students are recruited for placement at Disney World by Disney representatives who visit ECU and some 160 other campuses each semester.

Students are signed up to work in one of three yearly sessions: January-May, June-August and September-December. Like other cooperative education placements, the Disney Program is planned so that students can alternate semesters of work with on-campus studies.

"We have 13 students working down there now, and at least five or six more will go to Disney World in the fall," Shull said. "Some of them will be able to get academic credit or official recognition for work experience in a field related to their studies."

Shull said most of ECU's Disney students have been broadcast communications or leisure systems studies majors. Disney officials are particularly interested in students from these fields, as well as marketing, hotel-restaurant management and general business. A total of 1,500 students are recruited for the Disney World College Program each year, he said.

The Disney World complex, billed as "America's most-visited vacation destination," includes the Magic Kingdom theme park, Epcot Center, Disney World Vacation Resorts and the Walt Disney World Village.

College Program employees receive a $4.70 hourly wage and are lodged in a new low-cost apartment complex provided by the resort. Students may also arrange to take courses in such areas as advertising, marketing, hospitality management and public relations offered at the site by the University of Central Florida.

Harry Huntington Weathers of Roanoke Rapids, an ECU student who worked at Disney World during the spring, said being in the program was a wonderful experience.

Lunch Menus

The Pitt County schools have announced their menus for the summer food service program in the upcoming week.

Thursday: Grilled cheese sandwich, cheese stick, french fries with catsup, fruit cup and milk.

Teamsters Union Chief Jackie Presser Dies

Presser, 61, who led the Teamsters union back into the mainstream of organized labor but extended its reputation for corruption, had suffered from brain cancer. He was hospitalized in the Cleveland suburb of Lakewood on June 28 with a blood clot on the right lung.

His death was announced by Lakewood Hospital spokesman John Kerezy.

Presser, who became president of the Teamsters in 1983 after his predecessor was convicted of fraud and bribery, faced federal charges of racketeering and embezzlement. His trial, however, was postponed indefinitely after he was diagnosed as having brain cancer.

He entered Lakewood Hospital the same day as federal prosecutors in New York filed a massive civil suit seeking to break alleged Mafia domination of the union.

The previous month, He had a brain tumor removed May 17 at the Barrow Neurological Institute in Phoenix in what doctors called a successful operation, and he subsequently was treated for a smaller tumor affecting his pituitary gland.

Born Aug. 6, 1926, Jackie Presser was the son of William Faye "Big Bill" Presser, a union organizer who eventually became president of the Ohio Conference of Teamsters and part of the entourage of union president Jimmy Hoffa.

Presser left school after the eighth grade, went to work delivering juke boxes and pinball machines and joined the Navy at age 17.

His first union work was on the staff of Local 10 of the Hotel and Restaurant Employees Union in Cleveland, and he was elected president of the local in 1948. Later he went to work for his father as a Teamsters organizers.

In 1964, with a loan from the Teamsters Central States Pension Fund, he put together a commercial and shopping development in suburban Cleveland. The project failed.

In 1966, Presser formed Teamsters Local 507 in Cleveland, organizing paint company workers and other non-trucking laborers, as well as some truckers, into a 6,000-member local, the biggest Teamsters unit in Cleveland.

Presser became vice president of the Ohio Conference of Teamsters in the 1970s, and worked to improve the organization's image through charitable activities and political work.

In 1976, Presser was elected to succeed his father as an international vice president, and made his public relations campaign a national effort.

During the 1980 election, Presser used his influence to gain a union endorsement for Ronald Reagan, and was rewarded by being named labor cochairman for Reagan's inaugural.

He became president of the 1.7-million-member union in April 1983 when the executive committee named him to succeed Roy Williams, who had been convicted of conspiring to bribe a U.S. Senator.

Two of Presser's three other predecessors also were convicted on labor-corruption charges.

Dave Beck served 2½ years in prison for filing a false Teamsters tax return and for grand larceny, and the next president, Jimmy Hoffa, went to prison for jury tampering and fraud.

When appointed to replace Williams, Presser had a reputation for having a keen sense of local politics. Some civic leaders described him as a man "who can get a lot done" for their projects.

Presser began his regime on a high note, ordering a strong public-relations campaign to counteract the effects of government investigations of Teamster activities and indictments of union officials.

Appearing before a Senate subcommittee in 1983, Presser asked "for a chance to move this union in a progressive direction" and that he be judged on his actions.

He was plagued, however, by allegations of ties to organized crime and accusations by union dissidents that he was too quick to grant contract concessions.

In a lengthy report issued in 1986, the White House Commission on Organized Crime concluded that neither Presser nor Williams would have become Teamsters president without the help of Anthony "Fat Tony" Salerno, identified as head of the New York-based Genovese crime family.

In May 1986, Presser was charged with embezzlement and racketeering on allegations that he took $700,000 from his Cleveland local's office and paid it to "ghost" employees who performed no work. Two other officials in the Cleveland local also were indicted on payroll-padding charges.

Presser remained secretary-treasurer of Local 507 while Teamsters president, drawing a reported $237,000 from the local and an estimated $600,000 a year from the international union.

His last major public appearance was in October 1987, when Presser spoke to the AFL-CIO biennial convention. At that meeting, the Teamsters were welcomed back into the union umbrella group after 30 years of exile.

"I take pride, and I am very pleased and proud, that I and my entire organization as well as my entire executive board are here in attendence at this convention for reaffiliation," Presser told the 700 delegates meeting at Miami Beach, Fla.

Menem Posts Upset Victory

By RANDALL HACKLEY
Associated Press Writer

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The Peronist Party's first presidential primary in four decades Saturday gave La Rioja provincial Gov. Carlos Menem an upset victory over Buenos Aires provincial Gov. Antonio Cafiero, officials said.

Electoral board returns to choose the Peronist candidate for the 1989 presidential election showed the charismatic Menem leading 735,799 votes (53 percent) to Cafiero's 641,163 votes (46.2 percent).

The remaining percentage went to lesser candidates or nullified ballots.

The labor-backed Justicialist Party, more commonly known as the Peronist Party, is Argentina's main opposition group. It made a comeback in national elections in September last year after five years of electoral setbacks, capturing the governorships of 17 of the 22 provinces.

The party has been split in recent months over the candidacies of Menem, a fiery orator, and party president Cafiero, a member of a reform faction. Observers had given Cafiero, the former economy minister, a slight edge going into the voting.

"Of course I'm happy. We won. We ran a good race," he said.

In remarks from a downtown hall in the capital Buenos Aires, Menem dedicated his victory to "the poorest people, those who need it the most."

Cafiero, 66, whom Menem described as "my friend ... a loyal man (who ran) a dignified campaign," went on television later Saturday for about three minutes to congratulate "Carlos Menem, the winner."

Complete official results were expected Monday.

Cafiero said he would support Menem in the presidential elections, dispelling fears in political circles of a split in the main opposition party, which is favored to defeat the ruling Radical Civic Party next year.

Both candidates had favored declaring a moratorium on the interest portion of Argentina's huge $53 billion foreign debt. The upcoming campaign is expected to focus on economic issues in inflation-plagued Argentina.

In a related development, a flatbed truck carrying some voters to the polls collided Saturday afternoon with a train at an unmarked rail crossing in northern Argentina, killing at least 16 people and seriously injuring about 20 others, police and hospital officials said.

The accident occurred as the truck was taking voters to a polling station in El Quebrachal, a village 150 miles southeast of Salta.

Up to 4.1 million card-carrying party members were eligible to vote in the nationwide internal elections. No other incidents were reported as voter turnouts of up to 65 percent in some interior provinces were reported.

The governing Radical Civic Union Party of President Raul Alfonsin elected its candidate, centrist Cordoba provincial Gov. Eduardo Angeloz, on July 3. By law, Alfonsin cannot run for re-election.

The presidential elections are tentatively scheduled for next May or June, and the president will be elected to a six-year term beginning in December.

Ferry Runs Curtailed

SWANSBORO — Due to the heavy influx of summer visitors, administrators at Hammocks Beach State Park near Swansboro have advised that curtailment of the boat runs to the island park from the mainland is necessary on a periodic basis.

Because of the fragile nature of the beach and the dunes behind the beach, only a certain number of visitors are permitted to be on the island at any given time, a spokesman said.

As a result, the runs from the mainland on the pontoon passenger ferry boat to Hammocks Beach will cease operation each day at any time the visitor limit is reached. The spokesman said that already this situation has resulted in cutting off runs from the mainland as early as 1:30 p.m. on several occasions to date.

The passenger ferry operates from the mainland on a normal schedule every half hour beginning at 9:30 a.m. and continuing until 5:30 p.m. Wednesdays through Sundays. On Mondays and Tuesdays the schedule is once an hour every hour.

On days when the passenger ferry is curtailed, the ferry will still make runs from the island to the mainland until the final run at 6 p.m.

The park administration reminds visitors that on full moon nights, and the nights before and after full moons during July and August, camping will not be permitted on the island due to loggerhead turtles coming ashore to lay eggs.

Also, no pets are permitted on the island other than seeing-eye dogs. Handicapped persons going to the island are asked to contact the administrative office on the mainland side prior to making the ferry trip so that assistance can be awaiting them on the island.

For more details, or to check on ferry runs at any time, call 326-4881.

CABER TOSS — Bob Porterfield from Charlotte gives it all he's got during the Caber toss competition being held at Grandfather Mountain this weekend. Annual Highland Games Under Way

GRANDFATHER MOUNTAIN, N.C. (AP) — Some 14,000 people gathered Saturday for the 33rd annual Grandfather Mountain Highland Games and Gathering of the Clan, a two-day event touting everything from Highland dancing, piping and drumming to the tossing of the sheaf.

On Friday night, Ceilidh, or a piping concert, and a Scottish country dance gala were held at Lees-McRae College at Banner Elk. The Canebury Caledonian Pipe Band from New Zealand appeared by special invitation.

In keeping with the celebration of the Highland traditions, exhibitions of superior sheep herding skill were scheduled for Saturday and Sunday afternoon by Bill Wyatt and his champion border collies.

Events Saturday included the Gaelic competition, which included the turning to the caber, which involves throwing a telephone pole-type object, and the tossing of the sheaf, which is a 16-pound sack of hay that is thrown with a pitchfork. A track and field meet also was held, with sprinters, jumpers and vaulters from across the South.

The events came on the hottest day of the 1988 at Grandfather Mountain, with a reading of 79 degrees.

Ken Starnes, who won four events, was named the professional athlete of the traditional games. Starnes, of Rembert, S.C., won the 22-pound hammer throw with a toss of 87 feet, 9 inches, and the 56-pound weight toss, with a throw of 32 feet, 5 inches. He also won the turning of the caber and he set a record with his victory in the tossing of the sheaf. Starnes heaved the hay 24 feet, 3 inches, breaking a 1986 record of 24 feet held by three people.

Other winners in the traditional games included John Roehr of West Point, N.Y., who won the tossing the clachneart, Bryan Lemont of Gainesville, Fla, who threw the 28-pound weight 65 feet, and Bill Dunn of Chesapeake, Va., who won the 56-pound weight toss in a record performance. Dunn tossed the weight 15 feet, breaking a record set by Dave Harrington of Quebec, Canada in 1983 of record 14 feet, 9 inches.

Ben Hill of Fayetteville was named the amateur athlete of the traditional games.

There was also traditional highland wrestling. James Steachan of Bedford, Va., took the heavyweight championship, and Sam McKay of Norfolk, Va., won in the light heavyweight division. Ewan McNeill of Roxburghshire, Scotland, took the middle weight championship, and Aubrey Cattell of Cherry Hill, N.J., was the light weight champion.

Sunset Beach Remains A Place To Get Away From Life's Woes

By JANET OLSON
Wilmington Morning Star

SUNSET BEACH, N.C. (AP) — If work, worries and woes could be stuffed into shoeboxes and left behind, the pile beside the mainland end of the bumpy, one-lane bridge leading to this quiet town might well reach halfway to the moon.

People come here with their cars loaded with family, groceries, beach umbrellas and chairs, paperback books, decks of cards and maybe even a Monopoly board. They drive across the floating swing bridge, wave to its round-the-clock tender and forget about the rest of the world for a week or two.

Sunset Beach is a well-kept secret; most people hear about it from a friend or a friend-of-a-friend who's been here. The casual traveler isn't likely to find it tucked behind billboards for Ocean Isle or Myrtle Beach, S.C.

Yet just 16 miles from the Ocean Highway off N.C. 179, Sunset Beach waits with its welcome sign, its two seafood restaurants and its antique, one-lane bridge.

It is a quiet, restful town, mainly because its residents have fought to keep it that way. When state officials marched proudly into town to announce their generous gift of a new, high-rise bridge, they drew frowns from the people who live here and have become used to waiting for the tender to swing the bridge open for countless pleasure boats.

Old-timers fear the new-fangled bridge — due to be built around the end of this decade — will change things in this town where thousands of families fill hundreds of beach cottages and houses each summer.

The same families come to this Brunswick County town near the South Carolina line year after year — many during the same week each summer, to stay in the same house or cottage. They drive from as far away as Georgia and Florida, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Ohio — even Colorado.

They come knowing they'll find little else besides beach houses and cottages — no high-rise hotels, no water slides, no merry-go-rounds, no bumper cars.

At the center of Main Street, which runs parallel to the shore, vacancy signs hang in front of two old-fashioned beach hotels, the kind with wood siding and screen doors. Between them, there's a handful of small shops and a game room, where children too young to know how to hold a cue stick track sand between worn pool tables and video games.

A few steps away, the island's only grocery store sells week-sized boxes of necessities like laundry detergent and trash bags, cold drinks, bread and milk, rubber flip-flops and sand pails. A rainbow of souvenir T-shirts crowds a shop window next door.

Past several rows of grassy dunes, families cluster on the wide, clean beach. Fathers and mothers lead little ones into the shallow surf, coaxing them to enjoy small waves. Bigger children splash and paddle on blow-up rafts and build castles or dig forts in the sand.

There are no high, white lifeguard chairs — just a parent plopped in a soggy sand chair every few hundred feet in the surf.

By mid-afternoon, waves lap at the delicate sand castles that small hands crafted in the morning. A few people rest in the shade under the sole fishing pier.

Most days, not one radio can be heard along the three-mile span of beach. This is why people come here.

"We just heard it was a family beach," said Diane Jones of Fayetteville, explaining why she and her family first came here six years ago and keep coming back. "You don't see gangs of teenagers walking up and down the beach, and there's no loud music."

The Jones' week at Sunset has become an annual family reunion. Mrs. Jones brings her mother, and her two sisters come with their families from South Carolina. Every year, they pile 13 children into the same four-bedroom house.

Tom Beck, a Charlotte postal clerk, liked Sunset Beach so much when he found it seven years ago that he bought a place. He had shopped in Myrtle Beach and Garden City, S.C., but the small, homey atmosphere sold him on Sunset.

"It's a lot less crowded and not near the hassle," he said. " ... And this is a little beach. Good gracious, you can see from one end to another."

A lack of convenient parking and amenities such as showers and rest rooms helps keep the crowds away.

But some people, like Callie and George Gunter of Bladenboro, are willing to make the trip. Avid anglers, the elderly pair loves the 1,050-foot pier and has spent days here for about seven years.

"We have a lot of friends who fish out here on this pier," said Mrs. Gunter, standing at mid-pier amid a jumble of poles, nets and a cooler.

"If I get tangled up, and I can't get my catch in, they'll come and help me," she said.

People have come from as far away as Arizona to fish on the pier, said its manager, Walter Smith. Almost defiantly, as if someone would challenge him, he boasts that it's the longest pier "up and down the East Coast."

IN THE STATE

I-Jordan Benched

RALEIGH (AP) — The state Board of Transportation has benched a proposal to name a stretch of Interstate 40 for basketball star Michael Jordan, so it appears that if Wilmington oficials want to honor their hometown hero, the ball is in their court.

A motion to rename a section of the highway near Jordan's former home came before the board Friday, but the board delayed a vote until August. The delay came at the request of board member Tommy Pollard of Jacksonville, who represents New Hanover County on the board.

"My thoughts were that even though Michael Jordan did make a great contribution to our area, and we were very proud of him, he was not quite time-tested," Pollard said. "I really feel like as young as Michael is at this time, his recognitions will probably come later in life."

After leading Laney High School and University of North Carolina basketball teams to victory, Jordan, 25, is now a star guard with the Chicago Bulls.

The board's policy in naming roads and bridges is to wait to honor people until after they pass the prime of their careers.

Naming a road after an athlete also "would be kind of a dangerous precedent," Pollard said, "because there's such great athletes all over the state."

Banks Merge

RALEIGH (AP) — The merger of the Columbia Bank for Cooperatives with eight similar banks across the nation will help the farm lender cut costs and increase its leading territory, bank officials say.

The merger, announced this past week, is the first step in a consolidation of the Farm Credit System that some farm leaders say could weaken the voice of farmers in South Carolina and North Carolina who borrow from the bank.

The merger will make the Columbia lender a district office of the National Bank for Cooperatives and is expected to cut the bank's administrative overhead by $1 million a year to about $3.3 million, officials said. The savings result because many administrative duties will be passed on to the central bank.

The consolidation was mandated by farm legislation passed by Congress last year. Many congressional leaders say a leaner, less bureaucratic organization is needed for the financially troubled system to survive.

But others say such a change would inevitably strip power and control from some of the system's present banks and officers.

Woman Sues City

SANFORD, N.C. (AP) — A Sanford woman has filed a $1.5 million civil suit in U.S. District Court in Greensboro against the city of Sanford and several employees, saying she was assaulted and arrested without probable cause when her home was searched.

Lisa S. Quick charged in a suit filed by her attorney, Romallus O. Murphy of Greensboro, that a police officer slammed her onto a concrete porch and kicked her in the back with his knee. She also charged that another officer then grabbed her by the hair and began kicking her while the first officer twisted her arms behind her back and handcuffed her.

The suit names the following defendants: the city of Sanford; Sanford Mayor Rex McLeod, Oscar B. Stokes, former city manager; Ronald V. Yarborough, chief of police; and Clement A. Stone, Michael A. Jackson, William T. Fredericks and Jeffrey W. Crowson, police officers.

Ms. Quick was arrested Aug. 16, 1987, and charged with resisting a public officer and assault on a law enforcement officer. She was found innocent of both charges in Lee County District Court on Sept. 11, 1987.

In her suit, Ms. Quick said the named officers and several others came to her apartment and demanded they be allowed to enter to search for a murder suspect. She refused to let them in without a search warrant.

She was assaulted after the officers arrived about 30 minutes later with a search warrant, she said in the suit.

After she was assaulted on the porch, Ms. Quick said she was placed in custody, not informed of any charges against her and taken to the magistrate's office.

Ms. Quick is seeking compensatory damages from all the defendants for $1 million and punitive damages of $500,000 from the four police officers.

Bodies Discovered

DURHAM (AP) — Two bodies believed to be those of Curtis Frederick Bane and Thaddeus Eugene Hayes, who were last seen three years ago fixing a fence in Orange County, have been found in Durham County, authorities say.

Durham County officials said Saturday that the clothing on the bodies match the clothing the men were wearing when they were last seen on July 10, 1985. The bodies were found late Friday night.

Bane, 55, and Hayes, 25, of Orange County, were reported missing after they did not return from putting up a fence on Bane's property near Interstate 85 and U.S. 70 in eastern Orange County, near the Durham County line.

Authorities say the remains were discovered 50 yards into the woods near a dirt road off the Old Oxford Highway, which is less than a mile from Lake Michie. The bodies will be taken to North Carolina Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill, where the dental and X-ray records will be checked Monday for identification.

IS THE END NEAR? — State Rep. Billy Watkins, right, talks with Rep. Bobby Etheride during the legislative session Friday in Raleigh. The Legislature enacted a $177 million dollar budget bill as it tried, without success, to conclude its short session. (AP Laserphoto)

Legislature Plays 'Billy Ball' In Closing Hours

RALEIGH (AP) — Legislative Billy Ball — named for Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville — features high-speed action and frequent arguments among the players, much like the aggressive brand of baseball popularized by the Oakland Athletics in the 1970s.

But, unlike the baseball season, which lasts 162 games, Billy Ball takes place only in the closing days of each session. This year, for instance, the opening day for Billy Ball was Friday.

Legislative Billy Ball is played with bills, and the diamond is the House Appropriations Committee. In the typical contest, Watkins and the other leading Democratic budget-makers zip the final spending bills through the committee, with Republican objectors swinging and missing.

Here's how it was played at Friday's meeting of the House Appropriations Committee: Watkins and Rep. Bobby R. Etheridge, D-Harnett, the House appropriations co-chairman, spun out nine bills for the committee to consider. Although the committee had never seen some of these bills before, the proposals were overwhelmingly approved after brief explanations.

The committee's Republican minority raised frequent objections to no avail. When the Republicans tried to prolong the explanation of one bill, Etheridge simply called for a vote and moved on to the next bill.

Watkins did offer to postpone one bill — the Senate's $3.6 million "pork-barrel" bill — because the committee members did not have copies. A few copies of the 61-page bill were passed out to the Republican members, and less than a minute later the bill was approved by the committee.

"I am trying to speed things through, but there's no attempt to not let them (the members) see the bills," Watkins said after the meeting.

The committee members' binders are filled with bills that the Republicans don't bother to read, he said.

Watkins has been setting the tempo in these late-session meetings since 1981, said Rep. David H. Diamont, D-Surry. But legislators said that Billy Ball is as much a function of the time of year as it is Watkins' well-noted love for legislative jousting.

"I think that's just inherent in the system. At the end, at some point in time, somebody has to cut things off or we'll be here forever," said Rep. David Redwine, a former high school baseball player from Brunswick County.

"All politicians like to make speeches. Somebody has to throw a high, tight, hard one to get the process moving. ... It's part of his job. I don't think he means anything personal or disrespectful by it, somebody has to do it," Redwine told the Winston-Salem Journal.

Rep. Sidney A. Locks, D-Robeson, said that Watkins "couldn't play hardball if he couldn't get support." Besides, he said, the Legislature is in the ninth inning with critical work left to be done.

Rep. Martin L. Nesbitt, a Democrat from Buncombe County and a high-ranking budget-maker, said that everyone who wanted to speak Friday got at least one chance. "At some point the majority of the people want to put a stop to it and vote on the bill," Nesbitt said.

The Republican who struck out most often Friday was Rep. Frank J. "Trip" Sizemore III of Guilford County.

"If the game is who wins the current budget battle, for pork, for your special provisions, (for) who's in charge right now, it is a mismatch," Sizemore said. "If the game is out there (outside the Legislative Building), in strengthening the two-party system ... we are winning hands down."

The goal for the GOP, he said, is to show the public how the game is played. By shedding light on the dark places of legislative budget-making, he said, the Republicans are racking up support in the bleachers and the ballot box.

"It's the classic situation of seeing the World Series ahead of you, and hanging in there one game at a time. That's the courage and the spirit that the American people appreciate," Sizemore said.

J. Allen Adams, a former Democratic budget leader in the House, said the Republicans "have intentionally removed themselves from the (appropriations) process for political purposes."

Late in the session, he said, their comments in the committee meetings are designed only to build a record for the next campaign.

"You can only have so much of that, then you've got to cut it off," he said.

For the Democrats, playing Billy Ball sometimes means voting a bill out of committee before they understand it. Rep. Marie W. Colton, D-Buncombe, said: "One has to take things on faith. ... I read them (the bills) as fast as I can, and I don't ask questions because I know someone else will."

Besides, Nesbitt said, a bill will be reviewed by at least two committees, as well as each chamber as a whole, before it becomes law. "The bad stuff will get found somewhere in there (the process)," he said.

Fight Over Administrative Procedures Threatens Bill

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — A long-running House-Senate feud over rulemaking by the executive branch has erupted again, contributing to the latest failure to adjourn the legislative session.

The House Appropriations Committee on Friday drastically amended the Senate version of a bill dealing primarily with sanitation standards for migrant farmworkers by inserting provisions that would exempt the Office of Administrative Hearings from the state personnel pay classification system.

It contains other provisions that critics said would expand the powers of OAH Director Bob Melott and enhance the office's status as what Sen. Charles Hipps, D-Haywood, called "a fourth branch of government."

Senate leaders vowed to fight the House version, even if it meant scuttling most or all of the bill.

"It's just making a special exemption for this office, and I don't think we should do it," said Senate Majority Leader Tony Rand, D-Cumberland.

The sharp disagreement was among the last-minute snags that once again dashed hopes of adjourning the legislative session. The Legislature will return to Raleigh on Monday, when Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan said he hoped the matter quickly would be resolved.

As passed by the House committee, the bill would:

— Require reconsideration of all regulations established by the state Department of Labor that impose more stringent standards regarding sanitation facilities for migrants than the federal government has imposed.

The regulations would expire July 1, 1989, unless reinstated under a new procedure in which the independent Administrative Rules Review Commission would decide whether they are justified.

Farmers have complained that the Department of Labor has set unreasonably strict rules that go beyond federal standards.

— Increase the pay of numerous Office of Administrative Hearings employees and enabling Melott to grant future increases by giving him authority now wielded by the State Personnel Commission.

The provision, in effect, would exempt the OAH's employee pay system from the jurisdiction of the personnel commission, which sets the pay scales for other departments in state government.

— Establish the Administrative Rules Review Commission as an independent agency. The commission, which acts as a watchdog on executive-branch regulators by studying the rules they write, currently is under the OAH's jurisdiction.

— Extend hundreds of existing regulations written by the Department of Human Resources, occupational licensing agencies, the Department of Cultural Resources, the governor's office and Council of State departments such as Insurance and Agriculture.

Unless this provision is enacted by July 15, all the regulations will expire. Some speculated that the House inserted the extension into the bill to force the Senate to act on the measure.

The Office of Administrative Hearings and the Administrative Rules Review Commission were created under a body of law known as the Administrative Procedures Act (APA), which gives executive-branch agencies, departments and boards their authority to write rules.

For the past several years, powerful Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, has pushed to strengthen the OAH and ARRC. He contends that they keep the regulators in check and prevent them from usurping the Legislature's role, while giving citizens an independent forum for appealing agency rulings.

The Senate, led by Jordan, has watered down Watkins' APA bills, accusing him of treading on the executive branch's turf. Fights over the APA have prolonged several legislative sessions.

"Certainly it seems that there has been some strategy to leave that bill to the very end, and therefore put more pressure on the Senate," Jordan said.

Watkins denied authorship of the House version of the latest APA bill. But Rep. Martin Nesbitt, D-Buncombe, who sponsored it before the House Appropriations Committee, also said it wasn't his bill.

Watkins defended the APA provisions, saying the current policy of treating OAH salaries separately had worked well. The Legislature would continue determining the salaries of the office's eight administrative law judges, who actually hear appeals of agency rulings, he said.

Rep. F.J. "Trip" Sizemore, R-Guilford, charged that the APA provisions represented a "power grab" by Watkins, whom Sizemore said had influence over Melott and the OAH.

"He wants control over the group," Sizemore said. "He wants somebody he can go to to fight with the (executive branch) departments when they don't do what he wants."

Four Die On Roads

By The Associated Press

Weekend traffic accidents in North Carolina have resulted in four deaths, including a Bayboro man killed early Saturday while crawling along a Pamlico County road, the Highway Patrol said.

The deaths pushed the North Carolina highway death toll for the year to 714, down from 750 deaths during the comparable period last year.

Southern-Style Coronation Awaits New Englander

By DAVID ESPO
AP Political Writer

Democrats will convene in Atlanta next week in a spirit of unity and optimism unseen in a dozen years, assuming that Michael Dukakis can find a way to have Jesse Jackson on his side without placing him on the ticket.

As the Democrats' 1988 nominee-in-waiting, the 54-year-old Dukakis unquestionably will command center stage in the convention city in the heart of Dixie.

And a southern-style political coronation it will be for the man from New England, from the convention site itself to the selection of a Texas Treasurer Ann Richards as keynote speaker and the decision to have Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton place Dukakis' name in nomination a week from Wednesday night.

All this from a political party hoping to reclaim at least a portion of the South that has become a political desert in recent presidential elections, with the exception of Georgian Jimmy Carter's Southern success in 1976 en route to the White House.

Judging from the public opinion polls, the South remains a difficult hurdle to overcome for Dukakis. Overall, Democrats haven't enjoyed this much of a chance to win the White House since Carter's narrow victory of a dozen years ago, even though Dukakis' double-digit lead of late spring has all but evaporated in the wake of persistent attacks by Vice President George Bush.

While Dukakis' hold on a nominating majority of the delegates is unquestioned and the convention's nightly two-hour prime time program has been designed to convey his campaign themes, Jackson has reserved a starring role.

He'll arrive at the confab at the head of a "Jackson Action" three-day bus tour but denies his pre-arranged fanfare will steal the thunder from Dukakis.

"It has nothing to do with thunder. Mr. Dukakis had no intention of bringing any thunder to Atlanta," Jackson said Thursday.

The runner-up in the primary season will have the support of more than 1,100 delegates at the convention and almost certainly will have his name placed in nomination on Wednesday night, providing a symbolic challenge to Dukakis' nomination. A noisy floor demonstration will ensue.

Jackson's campaign is organizing a series of events outside the convention hall to maintain enthusiasm. In addition, Rep. Gus Savage of Illinois, a Jackson delegate, holds a police permit for a demonstration outside the Omni, which is expected to urge Dukakis to name Jackson as his running mate.

And Jackson's response to the nomination of the vice presidential candidate on the final night of the convention has the Dukakis campaign on edge. The Massachusetts governor is widely expected to turn elsewhere for his running mate, and Dukakis aides are concerned that rebellious Jackson forces may place their man in nomination and force a prime-time showdown on the final night of the convention, or perhaps even stage a public walkout.

"I think he has been and will be positive no matter what happens," says Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri, a one-time primary rival and one of the contenders to be Dukakis' running mate.

But Dukakis' aides concede they need support from Jackson and the millions who voted fo him during the primaries to defeat Bush in the fall campaign.

Jackson himself has provided conflicting clues of his intentions in the five weeks since the primaries. He has criticized the platform, campaigned publicly for the vice presidential nomination and dismissed the other contenders as "unknown quantities." Yet he has spoken consistently of expanding the Democratic party, and when he left Boston earlier this week after spending the Fourth of July with Dukakis, he said, "our interests converge."

Dukakis says he hopes to settle on a running mate and perhaps squeeze in a little campaigning time before flying to Atlanta next weekend. The leading contenders are believed to be Sens. John Glenn of Ohio; Bob Graham of Florida; Lloyd Bentsen of Texas and Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee as well as Gephardt and Rep. Lee Hamilton of Indiana.

Sens. Sam Nunn of Georgia and Bill Bradley of New Jersey have ruled themselves out, as has House Democratic leader Tom Foley of Washington.

The vice presidenial issue aside, Democrats say there is little controversy that could seriously mar the four-day spectacle that party officials hope will speed Dukakis on his way to the White House.

Disputes over party rules and delegate credentials — forums for nasty disputes in conventions of the recent past — have been ironed out between the Jackson and Dukakis campaigns.

The two sides are expected to continue meeting over their platform disagreements. But Dukakis' aides seem to welcome a floor vote to reject an expected Jackson call to raise taxes on the wealthy and to freeze Pentagon spending.

Unlike the conventions of 1980 or 1984, there has been little question that Dukakis holds a majority of the delegates, and no talk of a convention showdown that might loosen his grip.

Aside from Jackson, nearly all of Dukakis one-time rivals have not only warmly endorsed him but campaigned by his side in recent days.

Dukakis wrapped up the nomination early and also has benefitted from the lack of animosity that has accompanied recent Democratic races. In 1980, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy waged a last-ditch floor fight in an unsuccessful attempt to wrest the nomination from Carter. And in 1984, Walter F. Mondale struggled to win his nominating majority on the final day of the primary season, while fending off repeated challenges from Gary Hart and Jackson.

However harmonious the proceedings are inside the hall, the Democrats will attract the normal complement of street demonstrators, ranging from white supremacists to gay rights activists to animal rights groups. Not to mention a group of Georgians opposed to a four-lane highway to Carter's presidential library.

Republicans will try to grab their share of media attention at the Democratic meeting. They will send several well-known officials to Atlanta to make themselves available for newspaper and television interviews.

But one group's protest is another's opportunity.

Local leaders figure the convention will be worth roughly $60 million to the economy.

The Georgia Tourist Division has sent each of the 4,000-plus delegates a can of state-grown popcorn with the words "Georgia's Popping." The hope is to entice some convention goers — and their convention dollars — out of Atlanta and into other regions of the state.

Dukakis: Bush Plan Is A Tax Increase

By WILLIAM M. WELCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Democrat Michael Dukakis said Saturday a plan by George Bush to boost fees for some government services amounts to raising taxes, something the Republican vice president has said he would not do.

"I understand yesterday he had some difficulty distinguishing between certain kinds of taxes and other taxes," Dukakis said. "Back where I come from, if it looks like a duck and walks like a duck and quacks like a duck, it's a duck."

Dukakis was referring to comments by the vice president that he favors higher fees including higher payments for Medicare recipients who choose to accept catastrophic health care coverage under terms of recent health legislation.

"I don't know if Mr. Bush has problems trying to distinguish between taxes and premiums, but I think we'd better read the fine print in that insurance policy very, very carefully before we sign on," Dukakis said in opening remarks at a news conference.

Lee Atwater, national campaign manager for Bush, said Dukakis' search for a vice presidential candidate to join him on the ticket was "making Hamlet look like the rock of Gibraltar."

Atwater also said the Massachusetts governor's decision to raise taxes in his home state while running for president was "dumb."

'Red' Adair Coordinating Job To Make Burned Oil Rig Safe

By MAGGIE JACKSON
Associated Press Writer

ABERDEEN, Scotland (AP) — Troubleshooter "Red" Adair took the first steps Saturday toward capping the wells of a burned-out oil platform. The rig's owner said it might take three weeks to find the bodies of 149 men killed in the North Sea disaster.

Adair's men explored the twisted remains of the Piper Alpha platform for about an hour Saturday and used a camera-equipped submersible to assess the damage, said a statement from Occidental Petroleum Corp.

Occidental, which owns the platform, hired Adair to make the rig safe, seal gas leaks and save the oil wells to which the rig is connected. Adair, 73, is based in Houston, Texas, and has gained fame over several decades by capping out-of-control oil wells.

The Piper Alpha exploded Wednesday night in a fireball that Occidental says may have been caused by a gas leak directly below the living quarters.

Sixty-four men escaped. Eighteen remained in the Aberdeen Royal Infirmary on Saturday, one in serious condition.

Seventeen bodies were recovered before the search was called off Friday night around the ruined platform 120 miles east of Scotland.

John Brading, chief executive of Occidental International Oil Co., told a news conference Saturday the company wants to recover the bodies but must clear debris from the site of the world's worst oil field disaster and make the area safe for divers.

"I think it's going to be some days before we remove the debris, and then the capping will begin," Brading said in Aberdeen, where most of the bereaved families live or have gathered. "Once the situation is safe, we will send divers down whose first task will be to search for remains."

Occidental said fires still burned at several of the platform's 36 wellheads. It said all leaking oil was burning and none was escaping to the sea.

Brading predicted the Piper Alpha disaster would bring "a whole number of changes" in North Sea oil rigs, echoing the views expressed Friday by Occidental chairman Armand Hammer and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. The government has ordered public and technical inquiries.

"What might have been an acceptable standard for this day last week appears to be an unacceptable standard today," Brading said.

David Martin, president of Occidental Oil and Gas, said living quarters may be separate from the production platform in future.

"Living on something which produces oil and gas is, in my opinion, too dangerous," he told the news conference. Martin said workers would have had to be a quarter-mile from the Piper Alpha to have been safe. u "There is going to be the question of, should not people living there be on something that can back away — in effect, be a floating hotel," he said.

Survivor Harry Calder, 35, has said at least 100 men died screaming for help, trapped in the rig's living quarters after suriving the initial explosion.

Occidental reported part of the rig's accommodation quarters was retrieved from the site Saturday and a spokesman said: "It was described as in good condition. As far as I know no bodies were found on board."

Company officials played down a report in The Scotsman newspaper quoting retired safety manager Jack Donaldson as saying the company ignored safety recommendations, after a 1984 explosion on the Piper Alpha, that included replacing the wooden living-quarters module. Occidental said the platform complied with all government standards.

A memorial service for the dead will be held Wednesday in Aberdeen.

Cause Of Roof Collapse Sought

By SUZANNE GAMBOA
Associated Press Writer

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Clogged roof drains may have contributed to the collapse of a department store during a torrential rain, officials said Saturday, while rescuers dug cautiously through the rubble with little hope of locating more survivors.

By Saturday morning, workers had reached the first level of the three-story building and had cleared more than half the debris from Thursday's collapse.

Two adults and four children were rescued from the massive pile of rubble Friday, but 16 people died and at least 47 were injured. Taree of the victims have been found but not removed from the debris of the Amigo Store.

Clogged drainage holes on the building's flat roof could have contributed to the collapse by allowing rain water to accumulate and possibly overload the building, said Kermit Cromack, tax assessor-collector for Cameron County.

"If you were the owner of the store, how many times would you go up and see if the drainage pipes were clogged, especially if it's a three-story building?" Cromack asked.

Tony Yzaguirre Jr., a city tax assessor-collector, said the building was inspected earlier this year by the fire department, as it is annually.

Minimal construction standards contributed to the tragedy, other officials charged.

"That old store was nothing more than a stack of blocks," Cromack said. "This was bound to happen sooner or later."

The third floor of the 20-year-old building was added in 1975 and Cromack said the building's construction was average for one that age in the area, explaining "we don't build as heavy as they do elsewhere because we don't have snow."

"The roof is not designed to carry all that weight," Brownsville building inspector Fernando Romero told The Dallas Morning News. "It's a tragedy and one that may happen again at any time."

Bernard Levin, owner of the Amigo Store, could not immediately be reached for comment. A person who answered the telephone at his home refused to speak to a reporter; other calls encountered a busy signal.

Mayor Ygnacio Garza said investigations were being launched by the city, the building's insurance company and the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

Garza said the rainstorm, which poured 2 inches in less than 30 minutes, may have been a factor, but that other factors also may have played a role.

"We have a report from witnesses that a bolt of lightning struck behind the building and hit some transformers and perhaps knocked them down," Garza said.

Rescue workers concentrated their efforts Saturday on two sites in the rear of the building, where U.S. Border Patrol drug- and people-sniffing dogs indicated spots where people, living or dead, might be trapped. Workers formed human chains to remove debris basket by basket.

Juan Garcia, assistant chief U.S. Border Patrol agent in McAllen, said the dogs located nine bodies Friday. "The dogs are so well trained they know for sure there's a body down there," said Garcia.

"Right now we don't have much hope we'll find anybody alive, but there's always a chance, especially in the back where there is corrugated metal that could have given them some air," said Monty Jenkins, coordinator of the Special Medical Response team from the U.S. Bureau of Mines from Pittsburgh.

Rescuers were removing chunks of concrete, broken cinderblocks, shattered glass, merchandise and splintered tables.

"By this time tomorrow morning, the building won't be there anymore," Terry Ray, a construction foreman leading the digging effort, said Saturday.

Empty Beaches Putting Disposal Issue Into Focus

By JUDIE GLAVE
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — As New Yorkers sweltered through temperatures in the 90s last week, some of their favorite beaches were vacant — except for a few men and women who picked through tidal debris.

The beachcombers were not looking for shells. Syringes, blood vials and other waste had washed up at Jones Beach, Robert Moses State Park and other locations along 25 miles of Long Island shore. The workers were enlisted to comb the closed beaches for additional items of waste.

Although at first the debris was thought to be hospital waste, federal and state officials concluded the debris resembled household and boating garbage. Most of the beaches were reopened on Saturday.

"We don't believe this is a medical or hospital-type washup," William J. Muszynski, the deputy regional administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, told The New York Times.

He suggested that fears had been raised by the discovery of 145 vials of blood a few days earlier on the shore in industrial Bayonne, N.J.; five of the vials were contaminated with the AIDS virus. A month ago, five vials of blood were found farther south, in Ocean County, N.J.

The debris on the Long Island beaches focused attention on the issue of medical-waste disposal, commonly called red-bag trash because of the color of the bags in which it is put to distinguish it from regular garbage.

Those bags often contain lab waste, body parts, disposable medical supplies, blood vials, needles, syringes, intravenous tubing and any other material used to puncture the skin.

A 500-bed hospital will spend an average of $120,000 annually to a specially licensed carter to haul it away, said Kenneth Raske, president of the Greater New York Hospital Association. Larger hospitals which treat many AIDS patients often pay twice as much.

Carters then must take the trash to high-tech incinerators capable of burning the waste at temperatures of more than 2,000 degrees and up and pay anywhere from 50 cents to 90 cents a pound to burn it.

Most of these incinerators are far from the trash's point of origin, some as far away as Pennsylvania, resulting in added trucking costs.

This, state environmentalist spokesman R.W. Groneman says, is an invitation to the "midnight dumper." Carters can either undercut their competition or raise profits by promising to abide by the law, then dumping the refuse at sea or on land.

"As we apply tighter and tighter standards on managing garbage, we're also making it more costly and as a result we're getting a lot of illegal dumping," said J. Winston Porter, EPA assistant administrator of solid waste.

Fatal Blaze Investigated

PASCO, Wash. (AP) — Fire quickly engulfed an old, wood-frame rooming house early Saturday, killing three people and seriously burning another, and a rash of smaller fires were reported across the city.

Fire Chief Larry Dickinson said firefighters were kept busy going from fire to fire as flames broke out in 10 separate fires in garbage bins, brush along fence lines and in an apartment building 20 blocks from the destroyed rooming house. Only minor damage was reported in those fires.

Assistant Fire Chief John Fifer said a state fire marshal was being called in to investigate the fatal fire, and to determine whether it was linked to the others, which he said were probably arson.

"We are presuming those (others) are all set fires," he said.

The dead were tentatively identified, but authorities were withholding their names pending positive identification and notification of their families. Fifer said all three victims were males.

The manager of the destroyed building, Godfrey Davis, said he discovered the fire at 3:45 a.m. as he got up to go to work.

"When I opened the doorm it seemed like all hell was busting loose," Davis said. "It knocked me back. So then I started hollering, 'Get everybody out there! It's a fire!'"

One of the victims was a double amputee who called down the stairs from the second floor that he couldn't find his artificial legs in the smoke, Davis said. He said he told the frightened man to jump, but he wouldn't.

Dennis Morris, a firefighter, said the rubble from the rooming house was searched and no other victims were found. There were reportedly 20 to 25 people in the two-story building when the fire hit.

Davis said it seemed to him that the fire had begun outside the building, but fire officials said they had not determined where it began.

The fires at the apartment building 20 blocks away were set in a garbage can and a laundry room, but were quickly extinguished, said fire officials.

The burned man was taken to Our Lady of Lourdes Health Center with burns over 40 percent of his body, said nursing supervisor Peggy Tschauner. She identified him as Steven Knight, 32.

Knight was later flown by helicopter to Harborview Medical Center in Seattle, she said.

Officer Rescues Woman From Sea

MIAMI (AP) — A cruise ship officer stripped to his shorts and leapt more than 50-feet into choppy night seas to rescue a drowning woman, the Coast Guard said Friday.

The woman either fell or jumped off the Scandinavian Sky cruise ship 11 miles east of Cape Canaveral, said Petty Officer Tom Leyden.

Sylvie Mullaly, 31, of Cocoa Beach, and her rescuer, Staff Capt. Lars Kragelund, were treated and released from Cape Canaveral Hospital following the ships return, the Coast Guard said.

Mullaly, who works at a topless nightclub in Cocoa Beach, is under investigation for possible intoxication, Leyden said. An investigation of the entire incident, including the ship's safety procedures, is underway, he said.

Ms. Mullaly was spotted bobbing in the water as the ship returned from a daylong cruise, Leyden said. Kragelund raced from the ship's wheelhouse, peeling off his uniform as he ran and dived from a ship's rail, he said.

As he swam to the woman, the ship's crew assumed "man overboard" alert stations and the vessel swung in a wide circle around the couple, Leyden said.

"Apparently they were retrieved from the water via ladder. The Coast Guard headed to the scene but turned back when we found out they had her" out of the water, he said.

The Scandinavian Sky is owned by Miami-based Sea Escape Limited and registered in Panama, according to Coast Guard reports.

Runaway Car Kills 3

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — A runaway car jumped a sidewalk and struck and killed three young children as they played in front of a house, police and witnesses said.

The children died after they were taken to two hospitals after the accident Friday night. Killed were Jason Northrup, 9; his sister, Marlene, 7, and a 2-year-old neighbor, R.J. Murray.

The car driver, Stan Dlugolenski, 79, was slightly injured. He said the car "just went like a rocket on me" as he turned a corner.

"It just kept going," he said. "I had the car serviced yesterday. I tried the brakes and they wasn't working. I just couldn't get it to stop."

Gulf War: High Technology, Quick Decisions

By ROBERT BARR
Associated Press Writer

Before noon last Sunday, Capt. William C. Rogers III was at war. His ship, the guided-missile cruiser USS Vincennes, had engaged five Iranian speedboats in the Strait of Hormuz.

On the Iranian side of the strait, at the military-civilian airport in Bandar Abbas, Capt. Mohsen Rezaian of Iran Air was revving up his Airbus A300 for a 150-mile hop across the water to Dubai. He had nearly a full load — 290 passengers and crew.

Among the passengers: Pakistan's military attache in Iran, who boarded with his wife and two children; an Iranian couple flying to Dubai to shop for a daughter's wedding; a woman flying with her eight children to meet her husband, an Iranian merchant in Dubai; Indians, Afghans, Yugoslavs, an Italian, going about their peaceful business in a region at war.

The old Persian port of Bandar Abbas was a place Capt. Rogers had to keep an eye on. It was becoming an important base for Iran in the 8-year-old conflict with Iraq.

U.S. officials said Iran had moved a few of its hottest fighters — U.S.-built F-14 Tomcats — to Bandar Abbas. It also was believed to be a base for anti-ship Silkworm missiles, and the Vincennes' assignment was to protect merchant ships from the Silkworms.

The mix of civilian and military traffic through the Gulf's hazy skies was a headache for U.S. patrols.

"An Iranian F-4 would take off from Bandar Abbas and right behind it is a commercial aircraft," said one Navy veteran of the Gulf, Rear Adm. R.G. Zeller. "They would both take roughly the same route for a while. Initially it's very difficult to distinguish between the two. We had to be awfully careful for obvious reasons."

The billion-dollar Aegis-class cruiser Vincennes, a major piece of U.S. muscle, had been in the Gulf only a month.

It carried the latest in what Rogers jokingly called "gee-whiz merchandise," including phased-array radars designed to simultaneously identify and evaluate the threat from dozens of potential targets.

"Putting this ship with its radar into the gulf will put a lot of battle management on the scene," Rogers had told reporters who toured the newly arrived vessel.

To deal with hostile targets, the Vincennes bristled with Harpoon and Standard missiles, anti-submarine rockets, two 5-inch guns and two Phalanx close-in, rapid-fire guns to knock down incoming missiles. "If it flies, it dies," boasted the crew of the first Aegis cruiser.

At 10:10 a.m. last Sunday, the Pentagon later reported, Iranian patrol boats fired on a helicopter from the Vincennes. The patrol boats are 43-foot Boghammar pleasure boats made in Sweden, souped up with big engines, machine guns and rocket-propelled grenades.

At 10:37 a.m., according to Brig. Gen. Mansour Satari, the Iranian air force commander, Rezaian switched on the twin engines of the A300 and opened communications with the tower to prepare for takeoff.

Five minutes later, by the Pentagon's chronology, the Iranian patrol boats turned toward the Vincennes at high speed and opened fire. The Vincennes and the frigate Elmer Montgomery returned fire, sinking two patrol boats and damaging a third.

At 10:45 a.m., Iran Air Flight 655 was airborne, and within two minutes the Vincennes was checking it out by radar. Quickly reviewing the data from the "gee-whiz merchandise," Rogers concluded that the blip was an attacking F-14. He gave the order to fire, and one of two SM-2 Standard missiles from the Vincennes scored a kill.

It was then 10:54 a.m., 2:54 a.m. in Washington.

At 3:45 a.m. EDT, the White House "situation room" notified national security adviser Colin Powell and other officials of the incident. At 4:52 a.m., Powell woke up President Reagan at Camp David to report that U.S. forces believed they had shot down an Iranian jet fighter.

Meanwhile, news reports from the region quoted shipping sources as saying an Iranian Airbus had crashed in the Persian Gulf.

Within an hour, Iran's Islamic Republic News Agency reported that the plane had been "downed by the U.S. forces."

At the Dubai airport, a shipping executive reported seeing dozens of people crowding the Iran Air booth for information about the overdue plane. Among them, the executive told the AP, was the Iranian merchant.

"The man just went out of his mind, going from pillar to post and banging his head," the executive said.

Shortly before 8 a.m. EDT, a Pentagon spokesman, Lt. Col. Arnold Williams, told reporters that U.S. forces sank two patrol boats and shot down an F-14. U.S. officials are aware of the Iranian claim, he added, "and we're checking it out."

At 8:11 a.m., Reagan was given a written update, noting the Iranian claim. At 9:50 a.m. Reagan was notified that the target apparently was a civilian aircraft.

In the early afternoon, the president issued a statement saying U.S. forces, "in a proper defensive action," unintentionally shot down a passenger plane.

"The course of the Iranian civilian airliner was such that it was headed directly for the USS Vincennes, which was at the time engaged with five Iranian Boghammar boats that had attacked our forces. When the aircraft failed to heed repeated warnings, the Vincennes followed standing orders and widely publicized procedures, firing to protect itself against possible attack," Reagan's statement said.

Said Rogers, in a message back to the States: "This is a burden that I will carry the rest of my life, but I took this action to defend my ship and my crew. I alone am responsible."

As Reagan was releasing his statement, Adm. William Crowe, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told a news conference that the Airbus had not responded to three warnings by the Vincennes on a civilian distress network and four warnings on a military network, and that the plane was descending toward the Vincennes and accelerating, like an attacking aircraft.

"It is logical to conclude that while he is firing and they (the gunboats) are approaching him and an aircraft lifts off from Iran, goes toward him, steady course, high speed, decreasing altitude, will not vary, will not contact him — it's a more logical conclusion that he may very well be in jeopardy," Crowe said.

The captain and others in the Vincennes command center had only four minutes to make a decision, Crowe said.

But the version that emerged from the Pentagon in those first hours soon began to change:

—Crowe said Sunday the aircraft was four or five miles outside the civilian air corridor. But by week's end the Pentagon acknowledged that, as the Iranians insisted, Flight 655 may have been on its prescribed path.

—Crowe's assertion that the jetliner was descending came into question when it was disclosed that another Navy ship, the USS John H. Sides, reported that the A300 was either holding steady or ascending. The Iranians insisted the plane was climbing.

Although Crowe reported numerous radio warnings by the Vincennes, Iran's ambassador to the United Nations, Mohammad Ja-Afar Mahallati, asserted there was no warning.

The Pentagon also said the "target" — Flight 655 — was sending radio signals on two channels, one a military channel "identified with the F-14s." A Navy spokesman dismissed speculation that the military signal emanated from a second, military aircraft.

Iranian air force chief Satari, who was trained in the United States, told reporters in Tehran on Thursday that the A300 pilot was in contact with the control tower at Bandar Abbas for 21 minutes, speaking in English, and he believed U.S. systems could have picked up the conversation.

Rezaian was an experienced pilot who learned his job the American way, at a Boeing flight school in Texas 15 years ago. His 5-year-old daughter was born in Oklahoma, where his sister-in-law and her husband live.

"I think he flew that route many times and just like me and you going from our homes to work and come back, we know our way. I think it's the same way for him," Kamran Sadeghi said.

However the pilot performed, said Pentagon spokesman Dan Howard, the Iranians started the shooting Sunday and had a responsibility to "ensure the safety of their civilian aircraft by not sending them into harm's way."

Satari called the shooting "intentional and unprovoked." He said the U.S. military "accepted on purpose" the risk of attacking civilian planes because it could not control its sophisticated systems.

Technology and tactics mattered little to the crowds in Tehran. At mass funerals for Flight 655's victims, ceremonies that erupted into anti-American rallies, crowds spilled around the coffins, shouting "Death to Reagan!" "Revenge! Revenge!" and, inevitably, "Death to America!"

Rehabilitation Of Disgraced Bolshevik Complete

By ANDREW KATELL
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — The Communist Party restored Nikolai I. Bukharin's membership Saturday, completing the rehabilitation of Lenin's old comrade 50 years after Josef Stalin had him shot as a spy for opposing the dictator's policies.

Retrieving Bukharin's memory from disgrace is part of the effort by Mikhail S. Gorbachev to clear the names of dozens of people who became Stalin's victims after helping lead the 1917 Bolshevik revolution and form the Soviet state.

Tass, the official news agency, said the Party Control Committee of the policy-making Central Committee readmitted Bukharin, another old Bolshevik, Alexei I. Rykov, and 14 other people.

Millions of Soviet citizens heard the announcement on state television's evening news program.

The rehabilitations began Feb. 4, when the Supreme Court cleared Bukharin and the others of the charges for which they were executed or imprisoned. Many articles examining Bukharin and his policies have appeared in the Soviet press.

In Bukharin's case, rehabilitation has special significance because it implies endorsement of his opposition to the harsh policies with which Stalin forced the industrialization of the Soviet Union and the collectivization of agriculture.

It answers an emotional plea he made for rehabilitation before he was shot in 1938. In it, he said: 'Know, comrades, that on the banner which you will carry in your victorious march to communism, there is a drop of my blood."

Bukharin also incurred Stalin's displeasure by advocating a greater role for voluntary work cooperatives, more individual enterprise and other policies resembling reforms Gorbachev has promoted.

Gorbachev noted in a speech Nov. 2, however, that Lenin regarded Bukharin as not "fully Marxist" and said rapid develolpment of Soviet industry and agriculture had been necessary.

Saturday's announcement praised Bukharin and Rykov for helping build communism. It said they took "dissenting positions in the determination of courses and methods of socialist construction" but added that the "mistakes and dissenting positions are not of an anti-party character."

Since gaining power in March 1985, Gorbachev has attacked Stalin for his "cult of personality," tried to dismantle much of the central bureaucratic structure Stalin built and acknowledged that innocent people suffered under the dictator's terror.

In the November speech, he announced a resumption of the effort begun by Nikita S. Khrushchev 30 years ago to rehabilitate the millions of victims.

He told the Communist Party conference July 1, in a reference to Stalin's purges, that it is important to "restore justice with regard to the victims of lawlessness" and it is the party's "political and moral duty" to do so. He endorsed building a monument to Stalin's victims in Moscow.

Tass said the Control Committee restored the party memberships June 21, but the agency did not explain why the action was not announced for more than two weeks.

Bukharin, Rykov and Stalin were allies in 1926, two years after Lenin's death, in the power struggle with Leon Trotsky.

Two years later, with Stalin firmly in control, Bukharin and Rykov were branded leaders of a "rightist deviation" in the party and Bukharin was labeled a "falsifier of Marxism." They were stripped of their party posts in the ensuing years.

On June 13, the Soviet Supreme Court reversed the convictions of three other Bolsheviks who perished under Stalin: Lev Kamenev, Gregory Zinoviev and Karl Radek.

Trotsky has not been rehabilitated.

He was accused of leading an anti-Soviet plot and murdered in Mexico City in 1940, apparently on Stalin's orders. On June 17, Soviet historian Yuri N. Afanasyev suggested Trotsky be exonerated of criminal charges and his writings be published in the Soviet Union.

Vatican Moves To Recover Followers Of Archbishop

By VICTOR L. SIMPSON
Associated Press Writer

ROME (AP) — Shaken by the first schism in the Roman Catholic Church in more than a century, the Vatican has moved with unusual speed to try to win back followers of renegade Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre.

But it is showing no leniency for those who intend to follow the 82-year-old Frenchman, who consecrated four bishops without papal approval June 30 and was excommunicated.

Lefebvre contends the Vatican has broken with true Catholicism by adopting Mass in languages other than Latin and by taking other modernist steps.

Within days of Lefebvre's defiant act, the Vatican firmly stated that it would not tolerate Lefebvre sympathizers, but it made clear that it hoped to persuade them to be loyal to the Roman Catholic Church rather than follow Lefebvre out of it.

It warned that excommunication awaited those who followed Lefebvre and the bishops he consecrated, who also were excommunicated. An excommunicated Catholic cannot participate in the life and sacraments of the church.

Pope John Paul II said Catholics would be committing "a grave offense to God" by joining the archbishop and sympathizing with the traditionalist views of his followers. The renegade movement claims to have millions of sympathizers worldwide, but the Vatican says only about 500,000 Catholics turn to Lefebvre's priests for various church functions.

In an attempt to win back Lefebvre's sympathizers, the pope announced the Vatican would permit wider use of the 16th century Latin Mass.

Clash Leaves Palestinian Dead; Commerce Halted

By ALLYN FISHER
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli soldiers and Palestinian protesters clashed in street battles across the occupied territories Saturday, and the Palestinian death toll reached 217 as the uprising against Israeli rule entered its eighth month.

A general strike shut down commerce in major cities and towns.

The fatality occurred in the Jebalya refugee camp in the Gaza Strip. Palestinian reporters said soldiers shot 25-year-old Fayek Suleiman Hussein in the heart after opening fire on stone-throwing protesters. They said two other protesters were shot and wounded.

The army confirmed the death in Jebalya but said it was investigating the circumstances.

In Arura, near the West Bank city of Ramallah, witnesses said soldiers beat five demonstrators during a raid and smashed the head of a man into a wall and with a rifle butt.

The army said troops detained several stone-throwing youths in Arura after chasing them into homes. It said it was investigating charges of excessive force.

Stores were closed and public transportation was halted in Arab East Jerusalem, Ramallah, Nablus, Hebron, Gaza City and other main towns in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

The shutdowns, expected to last at least through Sunday, follow the instructions of a leaflet signed by the "Unified National Leadership of the Uprising-the PLO."

In some cities, such as Nablus, the strike began Friday under orders contained in different leaflets apparently issued by a rival underground faction.

The strikes signified the start of the eighth month of the uprising, which began Dec. 8. According to official figures, 217 Arabs have been killed. Four Israelis have died.

Clashes broke out in half a dozen towns and refugee camps in the occupied territories.

In Arura, a village of 3,000, Arabs hurled blocks and bottles at soldiers, the army said, after soldiers apparently entered the area after midnight to conduct arrests.

One soldier received medical treatment after being struck in the shoulder by a block, and then the troops chased the stone-throwers into homes and detained several of them hiding under beds, an army spokesman said.

During the ensuing raid, soldiers broke furniture and windows in at least 10 homes and beat five villagers with sticks and rifle butts, said Joost Hiltermann, a spokesman for Law in the Service of Man, the West Bank affiliate of the Geneva-based International Commission of Jurists.

Hassan Abdel Rahman, 23, was in intensive care at nearby Ramallah Hospital with a fractured skull after being beaten with a rifle butt and having his head smashed into a wall, hospital officials said.

The army confirmed three Palestinians were injured and hospitalized after soldiers used "reasonable force" to try to detain them. It said it would investigate complaints about the beatings and vandalism.

In a clash at the Khan Yunis refugee camp in Gaza, soldiers opened fire on stone-throwers who surrounded the troops, wounding 17-year-old Mohammed Abu Silmiya in the leg, the army said.

Palestinian reports said 17 people were treated for tear gas and beating injuries after the incident.

Also in Gaza, a Palestinian reporter said a 22-year-old man, Shawki Mohammed Khalil Odeh, was hospitalized and his right eye swollen shut after soldiers beat him in the head and kicked him after a stoning attack on troops.

The army said soldiers imposed curfews on four refugee camps in Gaza and closed the West Bank's largest city of Nablus to reporters, declaring it a closed military zone.

Soldiers fought for 90 minutes with protesters in Bani Naim near Hebron, and three protesters were injured by rubber bullets, Arab reports said.

The army said six demonstrators were injured by rubber bullets in the Aida refugee camp near Bethlehem after soldiers fired on several Palestinians who tried to grab a gun from a soldier and stoned the troops.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Less than three weeks after he seized power in a military coup, Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy shredded Haiti's popular Constitution and dealt a major blow to the country's move toward democracy.

Namphy said in a live television broadcast Friday night from the Presidential Palace that a new constitution will be written soon. He said the one approved by a massive voter turnout in March 1987 was "unhappily written and ratified in a climate of passion and emotion."

"It is obviously illusory to think of the full enjoyment of rights and liberties in the context of absolute poverty in which nearly 70 percent of the population in the country is vegetating," Namphy said.

"The future depends on what we do, or refuse to do now," he said, adding that the new constitution will take "Haitian reality into account."

Namphy pledged his government would respect freedom of speech and assembly and the right to participate in labor unions and political parties.

Port-au-Prince remained calm late Friday night, as it was after the June 19 coup that sent President Leslie Manigat into exile.

Namphy said the current constitution — the most liberal in Haiti's 184-year history and ardently defended by civic and political groups — introduced foreign elements to Haitian traditions.

The constitution, approved by 99 percent of Haitians who voted in a March 29, 1987 referendum, prohibited close Duvalier collaborators from running for public office for a period of 10 years. It also provided for an independent Electoral Council to organize national elections.

During the 20-minute speech, Namphy was flanked by Manigat's Cabinet ministers and top aides to former dictators Jean-Claude Duvalier and his father Francois Duvalier.

After Jean-Claude Duvalier fled into exile in 1986, Namphy ruled until Manigat's inauguration last February, a period tainted by army killings of peasants, demonstrators and opposition leaders.

On Nov. 29, 1987, Duvalierists shot and hacked to death at least 34 voters while soldiers looked on and in some cases escorted the gunmen. The same day Namphy dissolved the independent Electoral Council, then hand-picked another council, which ran the fraud-riddled January vote resulting in Manigat's election.

HENRI NAMPHY

Namphy spoke in the same Hall of Busts where Manigat had held his three monthly news conferences. The entire High Command of the Haitian military was present, including Col. Jean-Claude Paul, indicted earlier this year by a federal grand jury in Miami on charges on drug smuggling.

Sitting in the front row among the invited guests were three former presidential candidates, Francois Latortue, Gerard Phillipe-Auguste — Manigat's minister of agriculture — and Gregoire Eugene, now Namphy's adviser on constitutional law.

Also present were two Duvalier supporters who had been rejected as presidential candidates by the former independent Electoral Council, Claude Raymond and Clovis Desinor.

Asked if he thought the new constitution would promote democracy in Haiti, Philippe-Auguste responded: "Democracy is one thing, a constitution is another. ... All depends on whether the law, written or unwritten, is obeyed."

Eugene insisted that civil liberties would be respected under the new constitution. He said he opposed the constitutional provision banning Duvalier suporters from running for office.

"I think it is better to let the people decide for themselves whether they want to vote for former Duvalierists," he said.

Derailment Toll Reaches 103

By SEEMA SIROHI
Associated Press Writer

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Divers working under 30 feet of water used blowtorches Saturday to cut open a railway car and found 13 more victims of a train wreck in southern India, bringing the death toll to 103, officials said.

The massive rescue operation stretched into Saturday night as divers searched for more bodies beneath the sunken coaches in Lake Asthamudi in Kerala state.

At least 103 bodies were recovered, and 167 people were hospitalized, said Abdul Latif, a senior official in Quilon, a town near the accident site. At least 1,000 police and navy personnel were involved in the search.

Nine cars of the crowded 14-car Island Express tumbled toward the lake Friday after the train derailed crossing a bridge. Six coaches were partly or fully submerged, and three hung into the water from the bridge 15 feet above.

It wasn't known how many people were on the train, which crashed at about 1:15 p.m. At least 500 people were treated for injuries. The train had a capacity of 1,700 people, but survivors said it was extremely crowded.

Vice Admiral Laxminarayan Ramdas, chief of the Southern Naval Command, told The Associated Press by telephone, "It's a ghastly disaster. Today, the relatives have managed to accept their miserable fate, but yesterday it was terrible."

"The scenes in hospitals are reminiscent of casualties from a battlefield .... Bruises, wounds, cuts all over," he said.

Railway Minister Madhav Rao Scindia ordered a formal inquiry into the accident. He announced that victims' families would be given 100,000 rupees, or $7,142, in compensation.

During a news conference in Quilon, he refused to comment on the cause of the accident.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

At The Top

Mind The Store Carefully, Greenville

Greenville is at the top again, but its latest distinction is not one to cheer.

The American Chamber of Commerce Researchers Association index says the city had the second highest cost of living in North Carolina — next to Chapel Hill and just above Raleigh and Charlotte.

Greenville certainly can't quibble with the company of these larger metropolitan areas, but earning second place in cost of living isn't exactly the eminence it hoped for.

The ranking, although it prompts skepticism, should not be dismissed. For whatever reason, the data gathered by the survey showed Greenville is an expensive place to live. Since this tabulation is done quarterly, second place may be a temporary condition. But winding up on top this time around is an indication the city is experiencing the growth — and problems — that larger urban areas face.

There are positive economic implications of a high cost of living ranking. It can indicate a healthy economy and a flow of dollars capable of sustaining this strength.

It can also indicate a large white-collar or professional population base, traditionally more affluent. People who earn more money have more money to spend, hence a trend toward high prices and cost of living.

But there are sharp negatives also. High living costs can squelch economic vigor. A city with a reputation for high housing, utility, food, clothing, service and health costs can repel, not attract new people. Prolonged inflation can deter industries from considering the area.

Statistics can be manipulated to achieve virtually any conclusion, but there is no reason to think the data that put Greenville toward the top in expenses is skewed. The city simply had the second highest prices on the items the researchers sought on the particular day costs were surveyed. That fact is should disturb an area that welcomes growth but wants the quality of life to remain high.

Officials were quick to point the finger at health care costs, citing the regional medical center housed by the East Carolina University School of Medicine and Pitt County Memorial Hospital as the culprit. But if health care is expensive here, it alone could not push Greenville beyond cities like Raleigh, Greensboro and Charlotte, where out-of-control growth has sent living expenses soaring.

The message from this second-place ranking is one of caution. Enjoy and encourage current growth, Greenville, but mind the store carefully.

To the editor:

It was with some irritation that I read Alvin Taylor's last item in his Sunday, June 26 column titled "Just A Small Price To Pay." Indeed, it was his bemused reflection that it is sure is nice "having the auto inspected once a year" that motivated me to finally write a letter to the editor that I have been meaning to write for some time.

My question is simply this: If I must have my car inspected and Alvin Taylor is having his car inspected, why doesn't everyone in Pitt county have to have their vehicle inspected as well? One must only take a look around when out for a scenic tour of the area to note that there are many, many vehicles on the road that couldn't pass inspection by any stretch of the imagination! Mr. Taylor brought up a good point: it is unsafe to have vehicles driving around that may be in poor mechanical condition: however, another important point concerns our environment — that these vehicles which are driving around spewing out tons of exhaust are a health hazard of an entirely different kind. That care with the exhaust spilling out of it may never hit you, but what is it doing to the air you breathe? There are federal regulations governing fuel emission standards for vehicles for a reason. I have no idea why Pitt County vehicles are the exception, but someone — more than one someone — is illegally okaying vehicle inspections in this county. Maybe this letter will invoke a reply or two. If anyone can justify the blatant disregard for the law involving this issue, please step forward.

If every car isn't going to be inspected using the same guidelines and standards, then car inspections should be discontinued. Incidentally, they were discontinued in Georgia, where I used to live, for the simple reason that inspection stations simply took the money and slapped on a sticker, no matter what condition the vehicle was in. While there is certainly a strong argument for vehicle inspection for the very reason Mr. Taylor noted, if the system is so blatantly abused, of what real use are the inspections?

To the editor:

I, too, was saddened by the recent loss of life in the Persian Gulf this past week; however, my thoughts of sadness were shifted by the letter from Camille Kroll, as well as the picture that followed on Page 7 of The Daily Reflector on July 6.

The picture showed the body of Capt. W.E. Nordeen being returned to the U.S. after he was killed by a terrorist attack last week. My mind raced back into time to the pictures of the USS Stark limping toward port after an unwarranted terrorist attack that resulted in some 30-plus lives lost.

Over the last few years, there have been similar pictures of American servicemen returning home after giving their lives so that we can live in a country where freedom abounds and Americans such as Camille Kroll can stand freely and criticize why we do what we do.

I further agree with Ms. Kroll when she says, "Our allies need to view America as a nation of strength and peace." They also need to view America as a country that takes its freedom and peace very seriously and will, by the sacrifice of willing men and women, if necessary, defend its freedom, with unswerving dedication in any clime and place.

To the editor:

Justin Sturz cites four quotes from Soviet leaders which, he claims, show that the USSR cannot be trusted to keep a treaty. Perhaps, but the quotes don't prove it.

Let's begin with the two recent leaders: both Khrushchev and Gorbachev said, in effect, that they would not betray the faith (Communism) their country has lived by for 70 years. Did Mr. Sturz suppose they could and still retain power? As well expect an American politician to repudiate democracy.

But perestroika and glasnost are changing the Soviet people's understanding of Communism. What do we care if we are, as Gorbachev put it, moving toward a "world of Communism" provided it's a democratic world? Khrushchev said you might as well wait for shrimp to whistle as for the Soviets to abandon the teachings of Marx, Engels and Lenin. Parts of Marx et al are repulsive, but parts would be acceptable in the Republican platform. During the Cuban missile crisis, Kennedy wisely ignored the more belligerent Soviet communications and responded to the one that gave room for negotiation. We should follow his example.

Mr. Sturz's quotations from Lenin and Stalin come from a hero dead of 60-odd years and a less-than hero, also long dead. In the modern world, their dicta remind me of the frantic damage control from the White House when our President has said something more honest than the official line. Secretary of State Shultz was a different person when he testified before the Iran-Contra hearings than when he wears the usual mask, so accurately described in Stalin's "Sincere diplomacy is no more possible than dry water or iron wood."

Deplorable. But students of the matter have said that the Soviets' record on keeping treaties is about average.

Dole's Return?

From Taking Aim To Taking Second

Ah, politics. Only a few months ago Bob Dole was carefully aiming fire at his fellow Republican George Bush. Of course at that time Dole and Bush were fighting it out for the GOP presidential nomination. Now Bush has the nomination wrapped up and there is talk — serious talk — of Bob Dole becoming his vice presidential running mate.

Certainly Dole is prepared to take to the road to help the party's presidential nominee in the fall campaign. Dole now fires away at Michael Dukakis who is certain to receive the Democratic party's nomination.

Gone is the talk about Bush being a loser in November. Instead he talks of Dukakis' 'liberal'' tendencies.

Nobody is saying whether Bush has narrowed down his vice presidential choices to Dole but some polls suggest that it would be a strong ticket. A Charlotte Observer poll of North Carolina voters showed Bush-Dole ticket 9 points over a Democratic ticket of Dukakis and Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia ... and that is the strongest southern ticket that most observers can envision.

The harsh words of the Republican presidential nomination campaign can't be erased. Past campaigns, however, have proven they can be explained away. There was never a more unlikely paring, for instance, than John F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson.

It will be some time before George Bush announces his choice for a vice presidential running mate. It is certain that Robert Dole ranks up there. It could be he will not want to leave the Senate for the vice presidency, and he might not want to rank second to anybody in the White House.

Few politicians of stature, however, can resist the call that they will strengthen the ticket and perhaps be the difference between a win and a loss for their party. If called, Robert Dole might be impelled to accept.

Bikini Watch, Bikini Watch ...

Sunday Morning Notes

Summer by the calendar has only begun. The calendar doesn't tell the full story, however. Actually what we have had is the longest day of the year. Now if one notes the daily hour of sunset it will be seen that the days are once again getting shorter.

Each day from now until Dec. 21 a small amount of daytime will be chopped off (with a big jump coming the last weekend in October when Daylight time ends).

That's not to say the summer heat is ended. Indeed some of our hottest weather is ahead in July and August. Nevertheless football, which means fall, is only two months away. Labor Day, which officially ends the beach season in these parts, is only about eight weeks away. Colleges will begin their fall semesters in about six weeks.

In no way does that call for wasting these summer days which are still with us.

There is still plenty of time to:

- Visit a swimming pool.
- Lounge on the beach.
- Bikini watch.
- Drive with the convertible top back (requires a convertible).
- Get a sun tan. (observe sun cautions).
- Walk on the beach.
- Climb a sand dune.
- Stretch out on the grass.
- Bikini watch.
- Wade barefoot in a pond.
- Visit a local or state park.
- Wiggle your toes in the mud.
- Get out and wash the car.
- Bikini watch.
- Wear as little as possible on a hot day.
- Observe growing flowers.
- Take a walk through the woods.
- Go fishing.
- Go boat riding.
- Go sailing.
- Go canoeing.
- Bikini watch.
- Take a ride on a state ferry.
- Drive across one of North Carolina's magnificant coastal bridges.
- Take a walk on a summer evening.
- Mow the grass.
- Prune the hedges.
- Have a cookout.
- Make lemonade
- Make homemade ice cream (hand cranked).
- Freeze vegetables.

In sum, summer isn't gone yet. It will be, but for now it is here to enjoy. Don't pass up any opportunities.

Chickens & Cows No Longer Machines

Paul O'Connor

RALEIGH — North Carolina's chickens and cows should feel more self secure these days. For purposes of taxation, they're now all inventory.

In 1987, the General Assembly repealed the state's inventory tax and decided that some chickens and cows were inventory and some were machinery. The ones designated as inventory were no longer taxed. Those considered machinery -- that is, the chickens who laid eggs and the cows who gave milk -- were taxed as property.

"That distinction caused more trouble than it was worth," Rep Joe Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, said of the line drawn between fryer and egg-layers.

So Mavretic ran an amendment to a bill that adjusted the inventory tax credits paid to cities and counties. The distinction is no longer part of the law and chickens and cows are no longer taxed as machines.

Republicans usually complain that Democrats are all too anxious to kill their bills. Last week, when a Republican tried to kill his own bill in the House Finance Committe, Democrats found a new way to make miserable the lives of minority party members. They kept the bill alive for a few extra minutes and made its sponsor sweat.

Rep. Ray Warren, R-Mecklenburg, had sponsored a bill to implement a local tax on services. Although Warren predicts that such a tax will someday be in effect statewide, he said he realized that his bill had no chance to become law this year. He therefore asked that the bill be indefinately postponed by the committee.

But committee Democrats had bunches of questions for Warren about how such a tax would work. The questions pointed up weaknesses in the bill, and Warren continuously said that if he were still pushing the bill, he'd make corrections.

Time For Decision-Making On The 'Second Bananas'

Dole Or Kemp For GOP?

Rowland Evans & Robert Novak

WASHINGTON — While Sen. Robert J. Dole suddenly has become the party's overwhelming consensus to be George Bush's running mate, he arouses deep misgivings among the vice president's men who are looking hard at Rep. Jack Kemp.

Almost surely, it will be one or the other. Now that the myth of a Republican Electoral College lock has been broken, Bushies say this is no campaign for neophytes. They want a running mate for Bush who has been blooded in the presidential campaign crucible, and since no insider considers Howard Baker desirable, that means Dole or Kemp.

By conventional measurement, it is no contest. Dole is way ahead in polls, among pols and in prestige. Yet, he rings sour for key Bush advisers, who fear Bush-Dole is not a marriage made in heaven. What the vice president's men may not fully appreciate is Dole's inability to shore up Bush's weak spots in conducting a campaign of values against Michael Dukakis and in wooing the conservative movement.

A Bush-Dole ticket has moved from fantasy to reality. GOP politicians, fearful they are about to nominate the wrong man, are doubling back to the stronger challenger they passed over last winter. Dole-for-vice president not only shores up Bush in the Midwestern heartland but encourages worried California Republicans. By taking his erstwhile tormentor, party people say, George Bush will come over as a big man. Nor is there doubt Dole is eager for redemption in national politics.

The polls agree. The Wall Street Journal-NBC survey shows that Dole would make voters "more likely" to support Bush by a two-to-one margin, that the impact of Kemp and Howard Baker would be neutral, and that Sen. Nancy Kassebaum and Elizabeth Dole would make voters "less likely" to back Bush by huge margins.

But Bush insiders are wary about Dole's inevitability. Fearing a ticket that will never look so good as it does the day it is unveiled, they contemplate the return of the old Dole — first on video, perhaps later in person. Can someone who never has concealed his contempt for George Bush now pose as a faithful vice president? Does matching a 64-year-old with a 65-year-old present the proper image?

The contradictory concerns are that Dole may be an uncontrollable vice presidential candidate who will go his own way but will disdain the anti-Dukakis hatchet-man's role he would be assigned. Fearing that Dole is most interested in cleaning up his image for 1992, they envision a ludicrous tableau with Bush's vice-presidential nominee on the high road while the presidential nominee is forced to take the low road.

Dole does not ease Bush's continuing problem with the conservative movement. While the vice president's agents have learned the words in efforts to woo the Right, they have trouble carrying a tune. When one conservative activist protested selection of New Jersey's Gov. Thomas Kean as keynote speaker because he is pro-choice on abortion, he erupted in fury when Bush convention manager Fred Malek called that a "small" matter.

Bush infuriated social conservatives when he readily accepted the Watkins Commission's call for anti-discrimination protection of AIDS victims after the White House had rebuffed it. But Dole had endorsed the idea even before the report was issued.

In a campaign that may debate values rather than economics or national security policy, Dole is not much better equipped than Bush. Conservatives believe the running mate who could best extoll the family and social tradition while flailing Dukakis' hide would be Secretary of Education William J. Bennett. But Bush is unlikely to risk naming a recently converted Republican who never has run for public office.

Kemp may be more comfortable talking about tax rate reduction and the SDI, but he knows the conservative words and music. At a recent hand-holding with Bush agents, leading right-wingers displayed surprising unanimity of support for Kemp.

Bush himself does not belong to the Kemp fan club and recently referred to him as "too light." But the vice president has a long memory and does not forgive easily. He remembers what Bob Dole has said about him publicly and is reputed to have said privately. If truly his options are down to Dole and Kemp, which one he chooses is still not preordained.

Careful Pairing For Democrats

Horace Busby

WASHINGTON — Before the Democratic Party's new leaders settle on a vice-presidential nominee, they should take time to bone up on the party's record in open years.

"Open years" are those in which no presidential incumbent is seeking reelection; thus, the White House is open, as it is this year. Since incumbents nearly always win — 12 of 16 times since 1900 — open years figure to make the competition between parties more nearly even.

That has not been the case for Democrats. In the century's six open elections — in 1908, 1920, 1928, 1952, 1960 and 1968 — the party has won only once, in 1960. That is a winning percentage of .166, behind even the Baltimore Orioles.

Why such a dismal record? Democrats have not lost with second-stringers. William Jennings Bryan, Al Smith, Adlai Stevenson and Hubert H. Humphrey headed open-year tickets that failed. Nor have Republicans won with worldbeaters; twice, their open-year victors were turned out after a single term.

Thomas Jefferson, the first ticket-maker, taught that forming a Democratic ticket requires careful pairing of the geography of the vice-presidential candidate with that of the presidential candidate. Some configurations succeed; others fail. In open years, Democrats have repeatedly neglected the record of their own tickets.

As a reminder, here is a checklist of that record in this century's elections:

On the 10 winning Democratic tickets, the vice-presidential candidate has always been from a Central Standard Time-zone state.

Seven of the party's last eight victories since 1932 were won on tickets in which the two candidates were from states on opposite sides of the Mississippi River.

North-South tickets (excluding Texas) have never won, losing three times.

North-North tickets, pairing states of the northern tier as on 1984's Minnesota-New York ticket, also have lost three times and been without a win.

Tickets with farm-state candidates in the No. 2 slot won twice and lost once.

Time-zone overlaps, with both candidates from states fully or partially in the same time zone, have been high risk. While Democrats have twice won on such tickets, overlaps have lost five times, the most losses for any configuration.

When choosing open-year vice-presidential candidates, Democrats have not heeded these records. Five of six times they have opted for losing configurations: time-zone overlaps in 1908 and 1920, North-South combinations in 1928 and 1952 and a North-North alignment (Minnesota-Maine) in 1968.

The only time in an open year that Democrats went with a winning configuration — the Massachusetts-Texas ticket in 1960 — the party was victorious.

For 1988, Democrats are off to a promising start. The nominee-to-be is a governor of an Atlantic seaboard state; that has been a feature of the party's tickets for three of the four times it has won the White House away from Republicans. But it is not time to begin popping the champagne corks.

Democratic ticket-makers could squander the strength at the top of the ticket by choosing a running mate from any of the following: the deep South, far North, Eastern Standard Time zone or any state east of the Mississippi.

Where should the party turn? Texas is out; Republicans demonstrated the folly of selecting a vice-presidential nominee from the same state as the other party's presidential candidate when, in 1960, such a choice led to their only open-year defeat:

Democratic ticket-makers might break new ground by venturing into the Mountain or Pacific time zones, trying a governor-governor ticket or, maybe a governor-preacher combination. If they stay with successful precedents, though, they will seek a running mate in a Central Time zone state other than Texas west of the Mississippi.

Donna Demac

On the United States' 212th birthday last week, Americans celebrated the individual liberties that have made this country unique. While we speak frequently about freedom of speech and freedom of religion, there is a another right that is essential to our society: the right to know. The Constitution makes access to information about the government and information collected by the government an essential part of the democratic vision.

In the 1980s, however, this right is in danger. The Reagan administration has gone beyond any before it in using the power of the executive branch to restrict the flow of information. Consider:

•Some 2 million government employees, scientists and researchers who receive federal funds have been forced to sign lifetime secrecy agreements — a deliberate attempt to reduce the information available to the press and the public.

•More than 25 percent of all federal publications have been eliminated over the past seven years.

•The Department of Energy and other agencies have created limited-access databases consisting of unclassified material.

•A presidential order has for the first time allowed federal officials to classify materials already in the public domain.

One of the main targets of the Reagan offensive against glasnost has been the Freedom of Information Act, the nation's most important access law. The administration succeeded in getting Congress to approve a number of major new loopholes that allow officials to withhold documents. Federal agencies have also created cumbersome new bureaucratic procedures that can delay for years the fulfillment of Freedom of Information Act requests.

We have recently seen some of the consequences of this policy. As one of its "counterintelligence" programs, the FBI has pressured librarians to supply the bureau with confidential information about library users. Though the targets were said to be KGB agents, the practice compromises the longstanding traditions of privacy and open access in public libraries.

In this century the federal government has become the nation's principal information provider. We depend on it for information about environmental hazards, dangerous products, employment levels and government itself. This has greatly increased the power of those in charge of getting information to the public. By cutting back or increasing the cost of government information, officials can in effect censor public actions that might have resulted from access to that information.

In the 1980s, officials working within the sprawling federal bureaucracy have succeeded in denying Americans access to a vast array of data. Acting in the name of budget cutting, deregulation and paper-work reduction, they have succeeded not in promoting efficiency, but in keeping the public less informed.

In essence, ceasing to collect information has made it easier for agencies to pursue erroneous policy: no information, no problem. A recent report by the General Accounting Office concluded that lax information policies at several agencies, including the Food and Drug Administration, now mean that the public is getting misleading information about hundreds of food products each year. Moreover, action to address the risks of the drug Accutane to pregnant women would likely have come earlier if the Food and Drug Administration had been more energetic in examining reports and lawsuits dating back to 1982.

The Environmental Protection Agency has moved at a snail's pace with regard to its mandate to clean up toxic waste sites, now thought to number more than 5,000 nationwide. This is a result both of a failure of collect adequate data on the problem, which allows the agency to deny the full gravity of the situation, and a resistance to sharing what information it does possess.

In Brookhurst, Wyo., for example, extensive dumping of toxic substances has seriously polluted the water and air, leading to a high level of cancer in the town. Attempts by community residents to obtain information from the EPA about the origins of these toxics have been to little avail.

Why hasn't there been more public outcry over this assault on the public's right to know, since it has weakened government accountability and undermined meaningful public action on important issues? Much of the problem is that these restrictions have been implemented through technical, little-publicized changes in administrative procedures. And until recently, there has been little interest in challenging such rationales as "national security" and "cost cutting," used to justify limits on public access.

If we are to reverse the current trend toward a more closed society, information policy will have to become as much of a priority as economic or foreign policy. Specifically, the next president should abandon the current rules that abuse the classification process and reinstate the dividing line between classified and unclassified information. The permissive authority granted the intelligence agencies in the 1980s should be rescinded, and Congress should be pressured to update the Freedom of Information Act, making explicit the extension of the right of public access to computerized government information.

Most of all, we must all reaffirm that the strength of the American system lies in openness and government accountability.

Politics & The Height Of Fashion

Jay Mathews

LOS ANGELES — Earlier in this presidential campaign, I toyed with the notion that we had finally outgrown the ancient bias that has haunted me, and millions like me, much of our lives.

It is a genetic deficiency that, I admit, makes my net game a joke and forces regular readjustment of rental-car seats, but for a while I thought I saw signs that it would no longer be considered a fit topic for public derision and would be expunged forever as a subliminal measure of political competence and leadership ability.

I was wrong, of course.

A recent editorial cartoon and Johnny Carson's monologue punctured my optimism. I suppose they were amusing to some.

The cartoon showed Michael Dukakis, the distinguished governor of Massachusetts and a man about to lead our nation's largest and oldest political party, yet his body was drawn so grossly stunted he had to stand on top of a computer to see over the top of his lectern.

Carson, celebrating the return of his regular writers, reeled off three or four Dukakis-height jokes. "He may be the first president in history," said the 5-foot 10½-inch comedian, "who will have to be lifted up to see his own inaugural parade."

I cannot speak for Dukakis. Perhaps he does not mind that he is only 5 foot 8, a half-foot shorter than his Republican opponent George Bush (6-foot-2). Perhaps he does not find it as ominous as I do that in only two of nine television-era presidential campaigns, 1972 and 1976, has the shorter candidate won. Perhaps he feels his victories over Jesse Jackson (6-foot-2½) and Sen. Al Gore, D-Tenn., (6-foot-1) exempt him from this handicap.

I doubt it. One of my untested theories is that the difficulties women encounter in politics are as much a result of heightism as they are of sexism, and that Walter Mondale would have had better luck with Dianne Feinstein (5-foot-9) than he did with Geraldine Ferraro (5-foot-4) as a running mate in 1984.

Granted, little rigorous research has been done in this area, one more sign of the depth of the problem. Can you imagine the speed with which Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., (6-foot-1) would have awarded his Golden Fleece to a National Science Foundation grant on life cycles of the slightly undersized? Nonetheless, it is time to give long overdue consideration to the origins of this prejudice, and ways it might be cured.

I confess to being hypersensitive on this issue. The last time I checked, I was 5-foot-5¾ inches tall. Those fractions are important when you're trying to intimidate editors, or impress sources, or keep your eldest child (age 15, 5-foot-5) from telling you for the 98th time that older people tend to shrink.

The boy is right, of course. That is why for the last 11 or 12 years I have avoided tape measures and those height measuring devices attached to doctors' office scales.

There are more destructive forms of bias than heightism, to be sure, and being short has some advantages, such as an apparently longer life span. Most of us below the average American height (5-foot-9.1 for men, 5-foot-3.7 for women) have learned to live with it. I have absorbed, without flinching, a sales clerk's suggestion that I try the junior department and have grown accustomed to being told to occupy the front row in group pictures.

Few of us want to be president, but it seems only fair that we have a better shot at the job than has been the case recently.

It is not just that we of diminutive stature are so frequently slighted. Much of the course of history we have acquired an undeservedly bad reputation. Lesome figures like Nero and Napoleon come to mind. Antibles and comics — Rumpelstiltskin, various trolls, Andy Capp, the K — often seem to be compensating for their lack of height.

What can be done to wipe away this stain? Where can Dukakis Democrats turn to stave off catastrophe?

Republicans found salvation a few years ago in Hollywood. I think the key to wiping out heightism in our time also lies here.

Few have noticed, which in part proves my point, how many successful, yet short, leading men have emerged in the films of the last several years. Richard Dreyfuss, Al Pacino, Dustin Hoffman, Mark Hamill and even Robert Redford do not come close to the stature of John Wayne, James Stewart or Cary Grant. How do they do it?

As far as I can tell, it is mostly good scripts, clever casting and camera angles. Audiences are willing to ignore the fact that the star can barely see over the steering wheel during the car chase if the words he speaks are clever and the dialogue ignores his disability. Casting directors look for a leading lady who at least approximates the hero's height. An actor even as small as Michael J. Fox (5-foot-4) can overcome this handicap with the right script, close attention to camera position and a good ratio of sitting scenes.

Some strategists will suggest confronting the issue, throwing in a few self-deprecatory jokes or noting the heroic exploits of Spud Webb, 5-foot-7 guard for the Atlanta Hawks, but I consider this risky.

It is far better to stand straight, with your chin up, as my mother always told me to do. Look your adversary in the eye — though don't stand so close the camera can get both of you in the same frame.

Finally, pray that good taste and fair play win the day. If they don't, it will be a long time before we see any more like James Madison (5-foot-4) in the Oval Office, what with colossal 1992 presidential hopefuls, glandular cases like Sens. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., (6-foot-5) and Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., (6-foot-7), hulking in the wings.

Tougher Immigration Law

LONDON (AP) — A new law making it harder for some Commonwealth citizens to immigrate to Britain takes effect Aug. 1 over objections from critics who say it is discriminatory and will break up families.

Under the law, male Commonwealth citizens living in Britain will have to prove they can financially support their families before relatives living abroad are allowed to join them.

The law will require proof that the families have somewhere to live in Britain and that a marriage was not entered into primarily for immigration reasons.

The Aug. 1 start-up date for the new law, written by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government, was announced Friday by the Home Office, which is responsible for immigration.

The opposition Labor Party opposed the law as it proceeded through Parliament but failed to stop it. The bill formally became law on May 10 but left it up to the government to announce when the new measures would come into force.

"This is a shameful betrayal of the promises given by successive Home Secretaries and will cause great misery and hardship," said Roy Hattersley, the deputy leader of the Labor Party. He said Labor would fight for immigration controls that respect family unity.

The government said the new law was necessary because it was being left with the responsibility of supporting families of immigrants who couldn't afford to do so themselves.

The government also charged that in some cases, marriages were entered into solely to permit people who would not otherwise be allowed in to come to Britain.

Timothy Renton, a junior minister of state at the Home Office, said: "The changes... will improve our ability to carry through the government's commitment to a system of immigration control which is both firm and fair."

Soviets Said Weighing Hungary Troop Pullout

WASHINGTON (AP) — A senior State Department official said intelligence reports indicate the Soviet Union may be ready to withdraw up to 65,000 troops from Hungary "and we would welcome it."

A pullout from the East European country has long been a subject of speculation here and in Western allied capitals. Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev has already begun pulling back in Afghanistan while Soviet-backed Vietnam has announced a troop withdrawal in Cambodia.

The U.S. official, who briefed reporters under rules of anonymity, said Gorbachev may have already passed the word about Hungary to Warsaw Pact leaders.

Last year he set the stage for a nuclear missile reduction treaty with the United States by announcing Soviet short-range rockets would be withdrawn from Eastern Europe. This diplomatic offensive could be a preliminary step to a Soviet acceptance of Western terms for holding wide-ranging negotiations to reduce conventional troop concentrations and armor concentrations in Europe.

At the same time, the Soviet leader is faced with growing unrest in several Eastern countries, such as Hungary, where economic conditions are falling short of workers' expectations.

A recent change in government in Budapest seemed to indicate Hungary, in some ways the most liberalized of the communist states, was about to embark on a reform program matching Gorbachev's perestroika-reconstruction policies at home.

In Prague on Friday, Soviet Premier Nikolai Ryzhkov repeated a Kremlin proposal to withdraw the Red Army from all foreign territory by the year 2000.

But the Soviet government chief told Western reporters such moves could come only in the context of a general withdrawal — involving other nations as well as the Soviet Union.

"Our proposal is this: let us take out all the armies," he said. "The armies in Czechoslovakia are part of the Warsaw Pact armies. Let us agree on a radical solution in the West and in the East."

Three Tied For Busch Golf Classic Lead

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — For the second straight week, Peter Jacobsen is atop the leader board going into the final round of a PGA Tour event, and this time, he doesn't intend to let victory slip away.

"I'm planning on the 69 being my highest round of the week," Jacobsen said after that 2-under score left him tied for the lead with Kenny Knox and Tom Sieckmann after Saturday's third round of the $650,000 Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic.

In last week's Western Open, Jacobsen took a four-shot lead into the final round, only to lose the tournament by one stroke when he took a double-bogey 6 on the 72nd hole.

Jacobsen said a four-shot advantage on the final day creates "conflicting thoughts. You could take it easy, put the ball on the green and make pars, or you could rip out the flags."

"I've got to try to make birdies," said Jacobsen, who had no success in that regard Saturday, pairing 17 pars with an eagle.

"My putter let me down today," he said, "but I'm happy about my position."

Jacobsen, Knox and Sieckmann each finished three tours of the 6,776-yard Kingsmill Golf Club layout at 201, 12 strokes under par. Knox shot a 65 on Saturday and Sieckmann a 66.

One shot behind the leaders was 1985 Anheuser-Busch champion Mark Wiebe, who had the day's best round, a 7-under 64.

U.S. Open champion Curtis Strange, whose home is on the Kingsmill grounds, was joined at 9-under 204 by Fuzzy Zoeller, Scott Hoch and Billy Ray Brown. Brown, a former NCAA champion from Houston, had a 66 while Strange, Zoeller and Hoch each shot 69.

Jacobsen, who shot rounds of 67 and 65 to start Saturday's play at 10 under, made his eagle at the 514-yard third hole. His second shot flew over the top of the flag and stopped about 15 feet past the pin, from where Jacobsen sank the putt to get to 12 under.

Knox overcame a first-hole bogey with birdies on each of the next five holes. He added a pair of birdies at the par-3s on the back nine.

"It's just nice to be in a position to win again," said Knox, who has two career victories. "I've been struggling just to make cuts all year."

Knox said he could sympathize with Jacobsen's Western Open finish. Knox was in contention late in last Sunday's final round until playing the final four holes in five over par.

"I went from finishing top 10 to finishing 50th," Knox said. "It was a little bit of a letdown, but it didn't hurt me as much as it did Peter."

Sieckmann's bogey-free round included a birdie at the third hole and four birdies over a six-hole stretch on the back nine, the longest from 22 feet.

"I haven't been in this position a lot, obviously, since I haven't played real well a lot of times," said Sieckmann, a non-winner in four years on tour who has missed the cut in 10 of 14 events this seson.

Wiebe, six strokes off the lead after two rounds, teed off two hours before the leaders. He had a pair of birdies on the front side to make the turn at six under, and added five more birdie putts of between 3 feet and 10 feet on the back nine.

Wiebe said he has been struggling with his game in recent months, but began to see improvement this week.

"This doesn't surprise me to shoot low," he said. "But I would think that I'm kind of still an underdog."

Jerry Pate and Tom Purtzer, who began the day at eight under and two shots behind Jacobsen, each had trouble. Pate matched par with a 71 and was at 205, one shot ahead of Purtzer, who shot a 72.

McKinney Takes Big Step With Knockout Of Hinton

CONCORD, Calif. (AP) — Kennedy McKinney, sick of silver medals, beat U.S. champion Jemal Hinton on Saturday and took a big step toward making the Olympic boxing team.

The 22-year-old McKinney, of Killeen, Texas, got the 18-year-old Hinton, of District Heights, Md., in serious trouble in the thid round and won a 5-0 decision in 119-pound final of the Olympic Trials.

"I got tired of going home and telling everyone I lost in the finals," said McKinney, runnerp in the finals of the U.S. Amateur Championships three times, including on a 3-2 decision to Hinton this year.

"I got enough silver," McKinney said. "I want the gold, no more silver. No one remembers the second place finisher."

To get a chance at the gold, McKinney and the 11 other Trials champions must survive the box-offs next weekend at Las Vegas, Nev., against a "most worthy opponent" to be selected by a six-man committee.

The other six finals will be held Sunday at the 3,500-seat Concord Pavilion.

"Now it's three down (three fights here) and one more to go," said Gould, of Rockford, Ill. "Next step, going for the gold in Seoul."

Anthony Hembrick, 22, stationed at Fort Bragg, N.C., used a good left jab and right-hand counters for a 5-0 victory over 23-year-old Darin Allen of Columbus, Ohio, in the 165-pound final. It was the second win for Hembrick in six bouts against Allen, who also won a world title in 1986.

Starting A Legend And Ending A Career

Pete Rose of the National League All-Stars slams into American League catcher Ray Fosse as Fosse blocks the baseline during the 1970 All-Star Game in Cincinnati. Rose flattened Flosse and scored with two outs in the 12th inning to give the National League a 5-4 victory. Fosse, then a promising 23-year-old rookie, went on the disabled list and was never the same again. (AP Laserphoto)

Riverfront Revival Set For Tuesday

CINCINNATI (AP) — On a summer night 18 years ago, Pete Rose started a legend and stopped a career.

It was the last time the All-Stars came to Cincinnati. Riverfront Stadium was only two weeks old. Hank Aaron and Willie Mays were among 11 future Hall of Famers who played, and that didn't even include Johnny Bench, Tom Seaver and Carl Yastrzemski.

But it all came down to Pete Rose vs. Ray Fosse.

"Because it was an All-Star Game, because it was Pete Rose, you see it over and over. If he hadn't gone on to do what he did in his career, this probably wouldn't be replayed so much," Fosse said.

"You figure who the player was and you figure what the play was. It's part of history," he said. "People say it's a meaningless game. It's not a meaningless game. It's a game you take great pride in. You're trying to win."

Remember who won? Waved home by coach Leo Durocher, Rose flattened Fosse and scored with two outs in the 12th inning to give the National League a 5-4 victory in the 1970 All-Star Game.

Rose went on to bat .316, led the Cincinnati Reds to the World Series and became baseball's all-time hit leader.

Fosse, a promising 23-year-old rookie, went on the disabled list. He never was the same, even though he stuck in the majors for nine seasons.

"Because of the fractured (and separated) shoulder, I developed a different type of swing, and I never felt I had the same confidence as I had in my swing that first half. It was just one of those things. It happened," said Fosse, now a broadcaster for the Oakland Athletics.

"I had 16 home runs at the All-Star break, and two after the break. I never hit more than 12 in a season after that. People talk about regrets. The thing I wonder is, could I have hit 30 home runs in a year."

Rose, a substitute who struck out in his first two at-bats, called the American League clubhouse immediately after the game. Fosse was already gone, on the way to the hospital.

"If I can change the score, I'm not going to worry about getting hurt," Rose said at the time, stretched out on the trainer's table. "I had to do something."

Fosse never held a grudge.

"I don't think you expect that particular type of play, but you expect hard play," he said. "The bottom line is, you have a catcher whose job is to prevent a runner from scoring, and you have an aggressive baserunner trying to score."

"Pete and I had been interviewed about it many times, but never together. In 1981, I saw him at Candlestick Park and we went over the whole play again. He said he started sliding head first and then looked up and saw me, and his momentum carried him into me. If you look at the replay, that's exactly what happened."

Neither Fosse nor Rose will be at Riverfront Stadium on Tuesday night for the 59th All-Star Game, a series the NL leads 37-20-1. The NL won the two other games in Cincinnati in 1938 and 1953.

Fosse intends to enjoy the break at home. Rose — as he predicted after steamrolling into All-Star history — will also be absent.

"This'll be my last All-Star Game here," Rose said at the time in 1970. "I don't think I'll play 24 more years in this league."

He almost did. Rose played until 1986 before turning his attention to being the Reds' full-time manager. He wanted to be the NL's honorary captain, but Willie Stargell had already been asked.

Being a coach did not interest Rose.

"Managing the All-Star team is my goal now," he said. "But not coaching. Besides, the same people who came out to see me in 1970 will still be out there Tuesday night, even if I'm not there."

Rose's job was been rumored to be in jeopardy. This week, Reds general manager Murray Cook said his position was safe, although team owner Marge Schott makes the major moves.

One decision Rose made this year was putting 26-year-old named Chris Sabo at third base instead of veteran Buddy Bell. Bell is now with Houston; Sabo, who Rose says "was put on this planet to play baseball," is batting over .300 and is the only rookie on either All-Star roster.

Pirates Will Look To The Air In '88

By WOODY PEELE
Reflector Sports Editor

When East Carolina University's football team switched from the I formation to the run-and-shoot, the idea was to get the ball into the air a good deal more.

But the lack of a veteran quarterback and/or the lack of a quality group of receivers made it a little slower than expected in coming around.

Last year, however, the passing game began to come into its own, receiver coach Ken Matous said. "We started looking better about mid-season," he said, "and this spring, we really showed it."

Even so, there was little passing in the spring game. Matous, however, said that there is a good reason for that. "In a game, we'll use four or more wideouts. In the spring game, they were split up, so that we really couldn't get a continuity going. The game was no real test of our passing ability."

Matous' statement about last year's passing being improved is correct. The Pirates passed for 1,416 yards, less than 200 short of the school's single season record. That gave them an average of 128.7 yards per game.

"We're going to try and do more passing this year," Matous said. "In the past, we've been a pretty good trapping team and it's taken some time for the kids to learn the run-and-shoot."

He compared things to the 1983 team which went 8-3 and was nationally ranked at the end of the season. "That year, we had a proven quarterback in Kevin Ingram. I'm convinced that if Ingram had been back in 1984, we would have had a winning season (the Pirates were 2-9).

"But we didn't have an experienced quarterback. And last year is the first year since 1983 that we could say we did have some experience at quarterback. I've been here six years now, and we're so far ahead of anywhere we've been since then," Matous said.

The Pirates return a good crew of receivers, led by returning starter Walter Wilson (6-0, 180, Jr.). Wilson was the number two receiver on the team — and the leading returnee — with 18 receptions for 324 yards and one touchdown. Wilson's yardage was tops on the team.

"We know that he can play at this level," Matous said.

Joining him at the other wideout position may be Don Gaylor (6-1, 195, Sr.). Gaylor pulled in five passes for 77 yards last season. "He needs more consistency, but these two have the most experience."

Probably the most improved player at the position during the spring was Al Whiting (5-11, 175, So.), who has yet to make a varsity reception. "He was just cruising along and we laid down the law to him that he must either produce or step aside," Matous said. "He broke out of his pattern and really had a good spring."

Whiting is a good bet to end up with one of the starting positions.

Another top candidate will be Bo-Jack Davenport (6-0, 180, Jr.), who has also to make his first catch in a varsity game. "Neither of them (Whiting and Davenport) have a lot of playing time, but they should be impact players for us. It will seem like they've come out of nowhere. Davenport will give us some extra size, too."

Further backup roles could go to Terry Bennett (5-10, 166) and walkon Hunter Gallimore (6-0, 167), both redshirted freshmen who have yet to see action.

"Bennett is still learning, but he has exceptional speed. Gallimore has a chance to help us too. He and Whiting have the best hands on the team," Matous said.

Another possibility is Charlie Tyson (5-11, 177, So.), who is listed as a slotback. Matous, however, said that he may work some at the wideout position. Tyson caught one pass for three yards last year.

"A couple of freshmen, Eric Booker (5-11, 170) and Larry Farrare (6-2, 190) will also be given a look, but more than likely, they'll be redshirted this fall," Matous said.

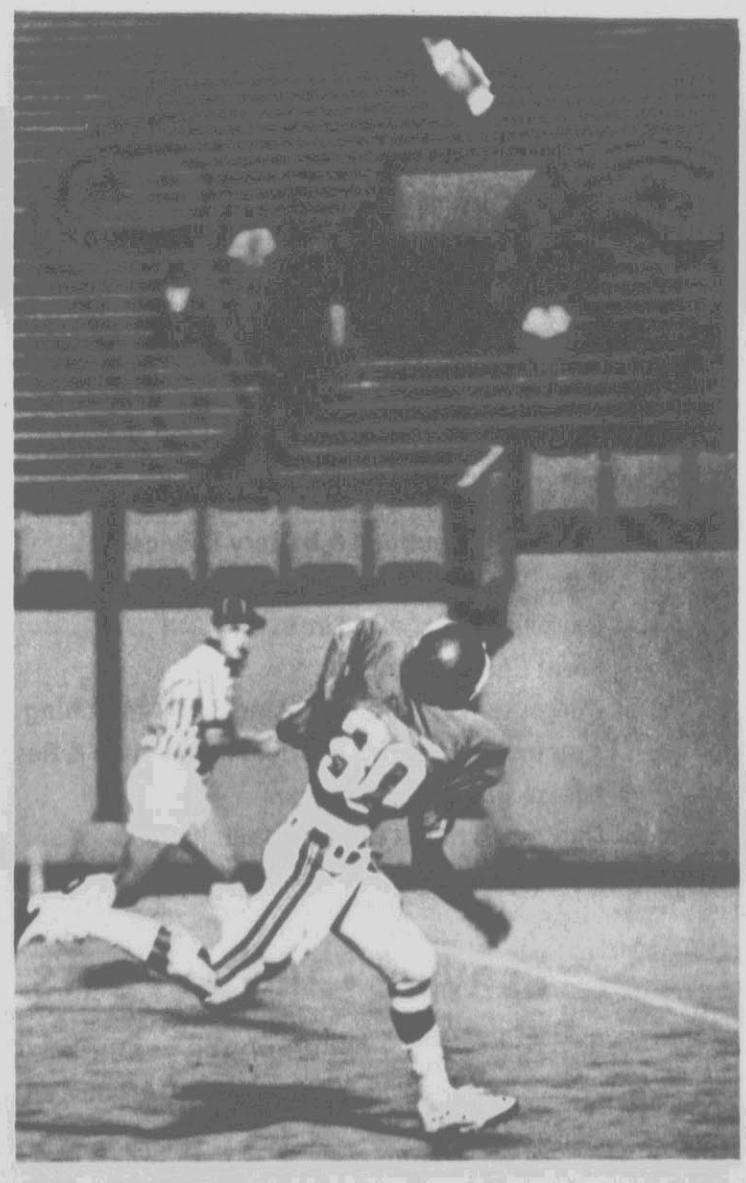
Matous thinks that the receiving crew has fairly good speed. "Those who don't have great speed do have good quickness, which can offset the lack of speed."

The Pirates won't throw to the tight end a lot, but Matt McLaughlin (6-2, 223, Sr.), who will probably play that position most of the time, has proven he can catch the ball. He had one reception last season for 18 yards and a touchdown.

"We will take advantage of the situation when we can," Matous said.

"We had five pretty good receivers on that '83 team," Matous recalled. "They had more experience and overall, were faster. But these six catch the ball just as well as they did."

If so, the Pirates may be headed for a record-shattering year through the air.



Running It Down

Expos Win Sixth Straight, Top Braves 9-4

ATLANTA (AP) — Hubie Brooks drove in three runs and Andres Galarraga hit his 20th home run as the Montreal Expos extended their winning streak to six games with a 9-4 victory over the Atlanta Braves Saturday night.

It was also the ninth victory in the last 10 games for the Expos.

In seven innings, Dennis Martinez, 9-7, allowed six hits, walked one and struck out two en route to his sixth victory in his last seven decisions. Joe Hesketh pitched the eighth and Jeff Parrett the ninth for the Expos.

Otis Nixon singled, went to second on Smith's balk and advanced to third on Tim Raines' single. One out later, Nixon scored on Brooks' infield groundout and Tim Wallach followed with an RBI single.

The Expos chased Smith with a four-run second that included a two-run single by Raines, who came off the 15-day disabled list just before the game, and a two-run single by Brooks off reliever Rick Mahler. Mahler was knocked out in the first inning of Montreal's 7-1 victory Friday night.

The Braves cut the lead to 6-2 with two unearned runs in the third. Ozzie Virgil doubled, went to third on Ron Gant's single and both runners scored when first baseman Galarraga fielded Gerald Perry's grounder and threw wildly behind Martinez, who was covering first.

Montreal added two runs in the fourth on Luis Rivera's run-scoring double and an RBI single by Nixon.

Galarraga made it 9-2 in the eighth when he homered to center field. Last season, Galarraga hit 13 homers.

The Braves added two runs in the eighth on Ken Oberkfell's RBI single and Ken Griffey's run-scoring grounder.

Reds.....6
Phillies.....3

CINCINNATI (AP) — Eric Davis doubled home the tie-breaking run in the seventh inning and Nick Esasky followed with a two-run homer Saturday night to give the Cincinnati Reds a 6-3 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies.

The Reds overcame a 3-1 deficit with two runs in the fifth off starter Bruce Ruffin and three in the seventh off Kent Tekulve, 2-5.

A throwing error by catcher John Russell fueled the Reds' winning rally. Chris Sabo singled with two out in the seventh, his second hit of the game. The Phillies then called a pitch-out as Sabo tried to steal, but Russell bounced the throw into center field for an error sending Sabo to third. Davis then lined a full-count pitch to the wall in right-center to snap the tie.

Esasky hit his seventh homer to cap the inning and send rookie Rob Dibble, 1-0, to his first major-league win. John Franco pitched the ninth for his 13th save.

Russell, making his first start since being recalled from the minors Wednesday, had three hits off Tom Browning, including a second-inning homer for a 1-0 lead.

Ruffin gave the run back in the third, when he walked two and threw three wild pitches. Barry Larkin walked, took second on a wild pitch and scored from there on another wild pitch that skipped to the backstop.

Phil Bradley put the Phillies ahead in the fifth with a two-run homer, his fourth. It was the 16th homer allowed by Browning in 18 starts.

Ruffin's control got him in trouble again in the fifth, when the Reds tied the game. He walked Daniels with two out and gave up a single to Sabo that sent Daniels to third. Sabo then stole second and the ball got away from second baseman Tommy Barrett for an error that let Daniels score. Esasky singled to score Sabo, ending Ruffin's outing.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Chris Speier hit for the cycle in the first five-hit game of his 18-year career and the San Francisco Giants hit five home runs en route to a 21-2 rout of the stumbling St. Louis Cardinals on Saturday.

Speier, filling in for regular second baseman Robby Thompson, hit two doubles, a triple, a homer and a single to pace a season-high 20-hit attack.

The Giants' 21 runs set a San Francisco record, surpassing the previous high of 19.

Speier, Kevin Mitchell, Bob Melvin, Will Clark and Earnest Riles each homered. Riles hit his in the seventh and it was the 10,000th homer in the history of the Giants franchise. The New York Yankees reached that milestone earlier this season.

Right-hander Kelly Downs, 8-7, pitched the first seven innings, yielding seven hits and two runs. By scoring twice in the fourth inning, the Cardinals snapped a string of 30 1-3 shutout innings by the Giants.

John Tudor, who entered the game as the National League's ERA leader, lasted only two innings after allowing five runs in the second inning. He fell to 4-4.

HOUSTON (AP) — Nolan Ryan joined Cy Young as the only pitchers in major league history to win 100 games for two different teams, hurling the Houston Astros to a 6-3 victory Saturday over the New York Mets.

Ryan, 6-7, the all-time career strikeout leader, fanned out five to increase his National League-leading total for the season to 130 and his career total to 4,677.

Ryan pitched 7 1-3 innings, gave up eight hits and three runs while walking three. Juan Agosto pitched the final 1 2-3 innings for his second save.

Rick Aguilera, 0-4, was the loser in relief, going 1 2-3 innings and giving up four runs on three hits. He walked four and struck out one.

Houston took a 6-3 lead in the fifth with a four-run rally. After walks to Gerald Young and Kevin Bass, Glenn Davis singled in Young, and Buddy Bell singled in Bass.

100th Win

Houston Astros pitcher Nolan Ryan hurls his way to becoming the second pitcher in major league history to win 100 games for one team in each league. The Astros behind the pitching of Ryan defeated the Mets Saturday in the Astrodome to secure the 100th victory. Ryan joins Cy Young as the only other pitcher to accomplish the feat. (AP Laserphoto)

Twins Slip Past Brewers In Ninth Inning

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Pinch-hitter Jim Gantner's two-out, two-run single capped a three-run ninth inning off Minnesota relief ace Jeff Reardon Saturday night, lifting the Milwaukee Brweers to a 5-4 victory over the Twins.

Reardon, 0-3, entered the game to start the ninth to protect a 4-2 lead for starter Allan Anderson. He retired the first two Brewers before giving up a single to pinch-hitter Billy Jo Robidoux and a bloop single to Darryl Hamilton.

Paul Molitor followed with a double, scoring Robidoux and sending Hamilton to third. Molitor was able to advance because the Twins did not cover second base. Two pitches later, Gantner lined his single to right, causing Reardon to blow his fourth save opportunity out of 27 chances this season.

Chuck Crim, 1-4, pitched 1 2-3 innings of shutout relief and Dan Plesac got the final two outs for his 21st save.

Earlier, the Twins had scored four runs in the fourth inning to take a 4-1 lead. Al Newman, a last-minute pregame substitute for injured Gary Gaetti, capped the rally with a two-run single.

Newman, inserted into the lineup at third base because of All-Star Gaetti's slight hamstring injury, entered the game batting only .206. The switch-hitter had a .154 average right-handed, which is how he got his bases-loaded hit off Ted Higuera.

Higuera, making his first start since June 26 due to tendinitis in his shoulder, walked Mark Davidson to load the bases and then Greg Gagne to score the go-ahead run before Newman lined a 2-2 pitch to center.

CLEVELAND (AP) — Tony Armas had three hits, including a three-run homer, and Chili Davis snapped an eighth-inning tie with a run-scoring single as California beat Cleveland 8-5 Saturday for its fourth straight victory.

With the score tied 4-4, Johnny Ray led off the Angels eighth with a single off reliever Doug Jones, 1-2. Ray went to third when first baseman Willie Upshaw misplayed Wally Joyner's bouncer for an error.

Davis then lined a single to right, scoring Ray. Davis was caught in a rundown between first and second on the play, but Upshaw threw wildly into left field for a throwing error, allowing Joyner to score and Davis to go to second. After Thad Bosley walked, Armas lined a run-scoring single to make it 7-4.

The Angels added a run in the top of the ninth when Rick Rodriguez walked Davis with the bases loaded.

The Indians made it 8-5 in the bottom of the inning on singles by Andy Allanson, Julio Franco and Terry Francona, whose one-out hit knocked out California reliever Brian Harvey.

Donnie Moore came in and picked up his third save by striking out Joe Carter and getting Mel Hall on a groundout to end the game.

Harvey, 4-2, picked up the win despite allowing five hits and one earned run in two innings.

The Angels have won 16 of their last 22 games, while the Indians have lost 21 of their last 30.

California took a 4-1 lead in the sixth inning. With two outs, Davis walked and went to third on Bosley's single. Tony Armas then hit his fourth home run over the left field fence off Cleveland starter Tom Candiotti.

Cleveland rallied to tie the game 4-4 in the seventh. Following singles by Ron Washington and Allanson, Franco knocked out Angels starter Mike Witt with a one-out RBI single. Harvey then gave up run-scoring singles to Francona and Carter.

TORONTO (AP) — Greg Briley hit his first major league home run and Steve Balboni added a three-run shot in a five-run fourth inning as the Seattle Mariners routed the Toronto Blue Jays 9-3 Saturday.

Scott Bankhead, 4-3, cruised behind Seattle's 15-hit attack. He allowed seven hits — five of them doubles — and three runs over six innings while striking out five and walking two.

Sparked by Briley's leadoff homer that broke a 2-2 tie in the fourth off Todd Stottlemyre, 3-8, Seattle sent 10 men to the plate. Harold Reynolds walked following Briley's homer to right and Rey Quinones singled to finish Stottlemyre.

Reliever John Cerutti appeared to be out of the jam until, with two out, Scott Bradley's grounder deflected off his glove and second baseman Manny Lee made a wild throw toward first to allow a run.

David Valle hit a two-run double in the sixth to make it 9-2.

Kelly Gruber hit RBI doubles in the first and third innings for Toronto and Rick Leach had an RBI single in the sixth.

DETROIT (AP) — Lou Whitaker hit a three-run homer and Darrell Evans had a solo shot as the Detroit Tigers beat the Oakland Athletics 4-3 in a battle of American League divisional leaders Saturday.

The win was Sparky Anderson's 800th as Tigers manager, making him the first manager to reach that plateau in both leagues.

Detroit starter Frank Tanana, 11-4, allowed two runs on five hits and struck out six in six innings. Guillermo Hernandez, the third Tiger pitcher, earned his fourth save.

Bob Welch, 10-5, gave up four runs on six hits and walked four in 6 1-3 innings for Oakland.

BALTIMORE (AP) — Jim Traber and Ken Gerhart hit back-to-back home runs and Jay Tibbs scattered eight hits over six innings Saturday night to lead the Baltimore Orioles past the Texas Rangers 4-1.

The Orioles were outhit 10-6 in their seventh win in 12 games. In the first three games of this four-game series, the Orioles needed only 17 hits to score 15 runs.

With two outs in the sixth and the Orioles leading 2-1, Traber hit a 3-0 pitch from Texas starter Charlie Hough 15 rows up into the bleachers down the right field line.

Gerhart then hit Hough's next pitch over the left field fence to put Baltimore ahead 4-1. The Orioles have hit 27 home runs in their last 20 games.

The back-to-back homers were the first given up by Hough on the road this season. The veteran right-hander had gone 71 2-3 innings on the road without allowing a homer.

Hough, 8-9, pitched his seventh complete game of the season, losing his second straight start.

It Wasn't In The Cards For St. Louis

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Truth be told, it probably wasn't in the stars for the St. Louis Cardinals to become baseball's first team of the 1980s to make successive appearances in the World Series. Just look at the signs:

—In January, Jack Clark rejects a contract offer and signs with the New York Yankees, leaving the Cardinals sluggerless.

—In spring training, an epidemic of the flu knocks the starch out of several key players for a couple of weeks, and the team goes into the regular season after losing seven straight exhibition games.

—On opening day, relief pitcher Ken Dayley injures his rib cage. Then starter Joe Magrane injures his rib cage. In all, 13 Cardinals have been on the disabled list, prompting Manager Whitey Herzog to wonder if his players need to add more juicy red steaks and icy cold beers to their diet.

—And lastly, history seems to be against the Cards. They were in the World Series in 1982 and 1985, and they were duds in 1983 and 1986. They were in the World Series last year, too.

On July 4, a time-honored baseball milestone, the Cardinals were 13½ games out of first place in the National League East and headed toward depths they hadn't known for 70 years.

"We're the worst club in the league," Herzog said while watching St. Louis slip closer to last place, a position it had not occupied at year's end since 1918.

"I don't mean that it's going to stay that way, but right now we're pretty easy prey," Herzog said. "Somewhere along the line we've got to go 20-and-5. If we could do that, then I think we could maybe cause a little bit of havoc."

So far, however, the only disruption the Cardinals have created has been to their own peace of mind and their manager's best-laid plans.

Injuries, including those that put four of the team's five starting pitchers on the disabled list at one time or another, haven't helped. Neither has subpar fielding.

The club's offense, predicated on speed (127 stolen bases) as a substitute for power (39 home runs), has never really been synchronized. Left fielder Vince Coleman, for instance, tripled home a run on May 25 and then went six weeks without an RBI. The Cardinals, in fact, have the dubious distinction of leading the league in runners stranded and are hitting the worst with runners in scoring position.

For a time, thanks to the late-April trade of second baseman Tommy Herr to the Minnesota Twins for outfielder Tom Brunansky, the run-production problem seemed to be solved.

Brunansky's eight home runs, 35 RBI and .311 batting average in his first 43 games helped St. Louis rebound from a 4-11 start to move 6½ games back of the first-place New York Mets a month ago. But after reaching their high-water mark of 32-26, the Cardinals lost their next six games. Their most devastating setback may have been a 2-1 loss on June 13, when Lee Mazzilli's RBI single in the 12th inning snapped the Mets out of a five-game losing spell.

Herzog said the injury-related absences of first baseman Bob Horner and third baseman Terry Pendleton through most of a 6-17 slump damaged the Cardinals the most.

"We lost both of them at the same time," Herzog said. "We just didn't have enough to withstand that. We never have recovered."

"So often in our ballgames, especially the games that we've been losing in extra innings, we've had chances in the eighth and ninth innings ... but we haven't been able to get that hit," Herzog said.

Halfway through the season, St. Louis' record was 12-14 in one-run games and 6-7 in extra innings.

A year ago, in contrast to the 38-43 overall record they possessed on July 4 that left had them fifth in NL East standings, the Cardinals led the division by eight games at 52-29. They wound up 1987 with a 95-67 mark, good enough for their 15th pennant by a margin of two games.

"Last year we were 9½ games up at the All-Star break and barely hung on to win," shortstop Ozzie Smith said.

Collusion I Resumes, II Is Deliberated, III Begins

By The Associated Press

While an arbitrator deliberates over Collusion II, Collusion I resumes this week and Collusion III begins.

George Nicolau, baseball's permanent arbitrator, is reading transcript, briefs and examining exhibits in Collusion II, the free agents between the 1986 and 1987 seasons. On Monday in New York, testimony begins in the Collusion III case, the free agents from last winter.

Meanwhile, the remedy stage of the Collusion I case continues on Monday in Washington before Thomas Roberts, the arbitrator who found the owners guilty last September. Lawyers for the owners will be continuing their cross-examination of the union's economic experts. Hearings have been scheduled for the entire week.

"I can't keep my cases straight," joked Lauren Rich, assistant general counsel of the Major League Baseball Players Association. ...

Ueberroth and the Free Agents

Commissioner Peter Ueberroth often has said he has not seen any evidence of collusion. But he also has said he tried to avoid situations where he might have found out details of what owners were doing.

In one of the final pages of the union's collusion brief is an except where Ueberroth confirms this.

"Q: Do you and (Rona) ever discuss what he and the P.R.C. do or do not tell clubs about the free agents?"

"A: Baically, no. I do not basically, no, because I don't want to know, because I don't want to ever be asked a question and be able to answer it in the affirmative. I don't want to know and leave me out of it." ...

Detroit right-hander Doyle Alexander, who has earned a reputation for moving around, says he's developing a feeling for the Tigers. "I like the guys on this team," Alexander said. "There's a good feeling in this clubhouse."

That's not to say, however, that money isn't still important. "I've been happy other places," Alexander said. "I was happy in Toronto. They had a great bunch of guys when I was with the Blue Jays. "I left Toronto because they wouldn't pay me and when I leave Detroit, it'll probably be for the same reason." ... Alexander, 37, was named to the AL All-Star pitching staff Thursday by manager Tom Kelly. It's the first in Alexander's 18-year career that he's been an All-Star team. ...

Lee Smith, hailed as Boston's bullpen savior after coming over in an off-season trade with the Chicago Cubs, has blown five saves in 16 opportunities, including two in a row. ...

Dave Stewart, 11-7, lost to Cleveland 3-0 in the first game of a doubleheader Tuesday. Stewart is 3-7 after going 8-0 to start the season. ... The Athletics have played 13 innings or more seven times this season and are 7-0 in those games. ...

Ray Hayward failed to get an out in the first inning Tuesday night as the New York Yankees scored five runs. It was the fifth time in the major leagues this season that a starter failed to record an out and the third time it happened against the Yankees. The last Texas starter who failed to retire a batter was Dave Schmidt in 1982. ...

Frank Viola continued his Metrodome mastery Wednesday night, winning his league-leading 14th game with a three-hitter as the Twins defeated Boston 8-1. Viola, 14-2, has not lost in the Metrodome since May 22, 1987. In 23 starts at home since then, Viola is 18-0.

Numbers Game

Fernado Valenzuela hasn't struck out more than four batters in any of his last 10 starts. ... In his career with the Mets, Howard Johnson has hit 11 home runs from the eighth inning on to win games. ... Johnson is 0-for-20 lifetime against Cincinnati left-hander Tom Browning. ... St. Louis shortstop Ozzie Smith made two errors Tuesday against Los Angeles, giving him 12 for the season. Smith made 10 all of last season. ... Minnesota's Jeff Reardon has seven straight seasons with at least 20 saves, longest of any current major leaguer. ... Against Minnesota's Frank Viola this year, the Red Sox are 0-3 and have scored only one run — Dwight Evans' homer Wednesday night. ...

Seattle's Mark Langston allowed a pair of solo homers to Mike Heath Wednesday. Langston has allowed 21 home runs this season, the most in the major leagues. Of the 21, 19 have been solo. ... New York Mets catcher Gary Carter is 3-for-3 as a pinch hitter this season. Carter entered the season hitless in 27 career pinch-hitting appearances. ... Texas Ranger pitchers have allowed six grand slams this season. The six grand slams are the most against any major-league team this season and one shy of the club record.

Paul Hahn To Give Golf Clinic Wednesday

Paul Hahn Jr., one of the top golf trick shot artists in the world, will be in Greenville on Wednesday to take part in a golf clinic.

The clinic, sponsored by the Greenville Evening Rotary Club and the Carolinas Section of the Professional Golf Association, will be held at the Pitt County Boys' Club, starting at 9:30 a.m. It will include about a three-hour session, and a hot dog lunch will be served following the clinic.

It is open to all boys and girls in the county and their parents.

Gordon Fulp, who will head the staff for the clinic, said that films on rules and etiquette will be shown while he and other CPGA members will provide instruction. A limited number of clubs will be available for those who do not have them, Fulp said.

North Edgecombe Wins Wachovia Award

North Edgecombe High School, paced by a third place finish in baseball, inched past Chocowinity High School to capture the Tobacco Belt Conference's Wachovia Trophy this year.

Bath took third place with 190 followed by Columbia with 184, Belhaven with 140, Jamesville with 115, Creswell with 97½, Aurora with 92½, Bear Grass with 85 and Mattamuskeet with 80.

The trophy is presented annually to the school which earns the most points in each athletic conference across the state. Each conference determines its own policy for awarding of points.

Joe Pecheles, Re/Max Winners In Tennis

The Greenville Recreation and Parks Department's Novice Tennis League completed its third week of play Friday. Joe Pecheles Volkswagon defeated East Carolina Lincoln-Mercury in action and Re/Max Properties knocked off Clark-Branch Realty.

Billy Willis and Phil Tripp led Joe Pecheles Volkswagon to victory going undefeated in match play.

Leading the way for Re/Max Properties was Andy Vincent and Laura Beth Nichols.

The next action in the league will be July 22 when Aldridge and Southerland takes on Joe Pecheles Volkswagon and Clark-Branch Realty battles East Carolina Lincoln-Mercury.

Wheat First Tennis Tourney Begins Monday

Trump Agrees To Be Mike Tyson's Manager

NEW YOPK (AP) — Real estate developer Donald Trump has agreed to act as business and boxing manager for heavyweight champion Mike Tyson, a published report said Saturday.

Trump, the hotel and casino owner who bankrolled Tyson's successful title defense June 27 against Michael Spinks in Atlantic City, N.J., told the New York Times that Tyson had asked him "to serve jointly" as his career adviser and to help him with lawsuits against his current manager, Bill Cayton.

Tyson is suing Cayton in an attempt to void contracts under which Cayton received one-third of all of Tyson's boxing earnings. Tyson received a little less than $21 million for the Spinks fight alone.

Although Trump would not disclose details, he said he would be paid a substantial fee, which he would donate to various charities. Trump said he would hire a boxing expert to help with decisions concerning future opponents.

The Times spoke with Trump by telephone on Friday. Neither Tyson nor his attorney, Michael Winston, could be reached, however, and Cayton would not comment other than to say: "There will be no compromise of any kind, no concessions. My contracts are fully enforceable and will be enforced."

Cayton said he had been approached by Tyson's lawyer about a settlement, "but I'm not going any further on them. There will be no settlement."

The next court hearing on Tyson's suit is scheduled for July 19. In the suit, Tyson alleges that he was defrauded because he was never told of the fatal illness of his comanager, Jimmy Jacobs, who died last winter, or of the clauses in the contract that would allow Cayton to take over sole management of Tyson after the death.

"I feel like Tyson's lawsuit is a very good one," Trump told the Times. "The contract is onerous and unfair. If Mike knew Jim Jacobs was not going to be around, that he was terminally ill, I don't believe he'd have signed the present contract. His relationship was with Jim Jacobs, not Bill Cayton."

Trump said he met last week with Tyson's attorney and his mother-in-law before agreeing to the arrangement.

"I like the concept because I like Mike Tyson," Trump said. "Also because it's so different from what I've done before."

Anthony Smith Transfers To Arizona

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — The University of Arizona announced Friday that a football player from the University of Alabama is transferring to the Tucson school.

Anthony Smith, 6-5, 247 pounds, will have to sit out the 1988 season under NCAA transfer rules and the 1989 season will be his only eligibility for Arizona, Arizona said.

Smith saw duty with the Crimson Tide as a nose guard in 1985, as a defensive tackle in 1986 and as a defensive end in 1987. The native of Elizabeth City, N.C., started in four games last season.

Arizona Associate Athletic Director Bob Bockrath said a written release from Alabama Athletic Director Steve Sloan allows Smith to transfer with a scholarship from Arizona and to practice during the 1988 season.

Babe Ruth

Everette's 5
Coke 4

Everette's scored three runs in the seventh inning to come from behind and defeat Coke 5-4 for the tournament championship in the Babe Ruth League.

Milton Carawan ripped a two-RBI single in the inning and later scored on a run-scoring shot by Randy Miller to pull of the comeback.

Coke had built a 4-1 lead in the game after pushing across three runs in the bottom half of the fifth.

Everette's tacked on a run in the sixth to close to within 4-2 before making the comeback in the seventh.

Miller led the way at the plate for Everette's with a 2-4 performance, while William Gibbs went the distance on the mound to pick up the win. Gibbs gave up only one hit in the game, that to Jason Bizzaro in the three-run fifth, however, he issued 12 bases on balls.

Home Builders 15

Coke scored four runs in the eighth inning to slip past Home Builders 18-15 Friday night to advance to the finals of the Babe Ruth League tournament.

Coke battled back from a 10-7 deficit midway through the game to force extra innings after the two teams knotted at 15-15 after seven frames.

Toure Claiborne led the way at the plate for Coke, going 3-6 with a pair of triples and a double. Johnathon Powers, Steven Nobles and Billy Shivers each went 2-5, while Tom Howard was 2-4.

Everette's 9
Wachovia 4

Everette's scored four runs in the fifth inning Friday night to pace the team to a 9-4 victory over Wachovia in the semi-finals of the Babe Ruth League tournament.

The four-run burst by Everetee's erased a 2-1 Wachovia lead and gave it the lead for good in the game.

Randy Miller led the way in hitting for Everette's as he went 2-3. Rocky Thurston paced Wachovia with a 3-4 performance, including a double, while Matt Aldridge went 2-3.

Bambino League

Ayden 7
Tri-Community 6

AYDEN — Ayden clipped past Tri-Community, 7-6, in the winners' bracket of the District V Bambino League Baseball Tournament Friday to move to the semifinals of the tournament.

Ayden was paced by Joseph Haddock, who went three for three in the game including a home run and a double. Willie Brown also added a homer for Ayden.

Tri-Community was led by Brandon Taylor, who went 2-3, both singles.

Farmville 16
Winterville 6

AYDEN — Farmville romped to a 16-6 victory over Winterville in the losers' bracket of the District V Bambino League Baseball Tournament at Ayden Friday night. The loss eliminated Winterville from the double elimination tournament.

Jayme Harris had two hits in as many trips for Farmville, including a triple while Scott Dail went 2-3 with a double. Winterville was paced by Chris Evans, 2-2, including a double.

North State Tops Tar Heel Squad

The North State Little League All-Stars scored 13 runs in the top of the sixth inning to break open a tight contest and roll to a 17-5 victory over the Tar Heel Little League All-Stars Saturday afternoon.

Tutu Moye led the way at the plate for North State in the game with a 4-4 performance, while Garry Haddock, Lance Clark, Wade Finkley and Nabeel Barakat added two hits each.

With one out in the sixth inning, Clark, Moye, Haddock, Barakat and Finkley each stroked base hits to get the barrage started.

David Koonce then reached on an error, which scored Finkley, who had tripled. Chip Davis followed with a double to score Koonce and make the score 10-2.

Walks to Jeff Smith and Jeremy Gonzales were followed by Clark's second hit of the inning. Barakat and Finkley also followed with their second hits in the inning after Johnathon Clark and Haddock had reached base on walks as North State sent 19 batters to the plate in the frame.

Competition will be in a two-man better ball of pair format and is open to anyone.

Competition actually begins on July 30 at 9 a.m. and July 31st's play will be by flight. Practice rounds may be played on July 29, but are not included in the $65 entry fee.

For more information, or to enter, contact Pines Invitational, P.O. Box 1445, Southern Pines, N.C., 28387, or contact Kelly Kunz, Tournament chairman at 944-2141 or 692-8890.

Ayden Golf and Country Club

The Ayden Golf and Country Club held its annual Couples Scotch Foursome tournament with 56 teams competing.

Ralph and Janet Wingate captured first place in the championship flight, while Vernon and Chris Clark took second.

In the first flight, Dean and Mary Lou Wingate were first, followed by Larry and Elaine Phelps. David and Dee Dee Phillips took the second flight title with Joe and Verna Whaley second.

Bruce and Barbara Wade took the third flight, with Thomas and Patsy Anderson in the runner-up slot. The fourth flight went to Allan and Ann Jackson, followed by Don and Karen Riberio.

John Haughn, Patsy Anderson, David Phillips and Ronda Phillips won closest to the pin contests, with Laurie Belangia making the tournament's longest putt.

Brook Valley Country Club

The Big I Youth Insurance Classic will be held at Brook Valley Country Club on Tuesday.

A field of 50 young golfers will participate in the event which is a qualifying tournament for the state tournament, to be held later this summer.

Greenville Country Club

Pat Norris took low net honors on Ladies Day at the Greenville Country Club this week. Janice Whitaker finished second while Tee Ficklen was third.

In the low gross section, Harriette White took top honors, followed by Nancy Monroe and Sue Castellow, in that order.

The club will hold the men's and women's club championship on July 16-17.

Myers, Yakamoto Tied For Lead

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Terry-Jo Myers hails from Florida, so hot and humid weather is nothing new to her.

"It was another beautiful day, perfect weather. The cool breeze out there kept it nice," said Myers, who shot a 3-under-par 68 to tie Japan's Ayako Yakamoto for the 54-hole lead of the $400,000 Mayflower Classic golf tournament.

Okamoto, seeking her third victory of the season, shot a 67 on Saturday to join Myers, a non-winner in four LPGA seasons, at 8-under-par 205. They held a two-shot lead heading into Sunday's final round at the Country Club of Indianapolis. The tournament winner will receive $60,000.

"I did what I wanted to do, stayed slow," said Myers, who lives in Bonita Springs, Fla. "It went a lot easier than I really thought it would go. I was aggressive every single hole."

Okamoto was content just to survive the afternoon.

"It was too hot," she said. "I never thought about my score. It was so hot I was fighting the heat all day ... going under shade trees and drinking lots of water."

Jerilyn Britz also made a move on the leaders, shooting a 67 that left her at 207. She was joined by Amy Alcott, who had to settle for a par round after a bogey on the 18th hole.

Britz, the 1979 U.S. Women's Open champion who hasn't won since 1980, had four birdies and no bogies during a round played in temperatures near 100 degrees.

Okamoto, the 1984 Mayflower winner, opened with a three-foot birdie putt on the first hole and was at eight under after sinking a three-footer for birdie at No. 11. Okamoto gave a stroke back when she missed a four-foot putt for par on the 12th hole, but got back to eight under with an 18-foot birdie putt on No. 16.

Myers, who has missed nine cuts this season and is only 98th on the tour money list with $11,443 in 17 starts, moved into contention with three birdies on the front side. She got to nine under when she hit a 7-iron to within three feet at No. 10 to set up a birdie putt.

An errant tee shot at No. 12 cost Myers sole possession of the lead. Her tee shot landed behind a tree and her approach to the green was 20 feet short. After chipping on, she two-putted for her only bogey of the round.

Sherri Turner, the No. 2 money winner this season, shot a 71 and was alone at 208, three shots out of the lead.

Crampton Battles Back To Take One Shot Lead In Senior Event

KENMORE, Wash. (AP) — Bruce Crampton came from three shots off the pace Saturday with a 4-under-par 68 to take a one-stroke lead in the $300,000 Northwest Classic PGA Senior tournament.

Crampton's 137 total is 7-under par for 36 holes on the 6,501-yard Inglewood Country Club course. First-round leader Larry Mowry, after a 72, and Senior Tour rookie Don Bies, after a 67, were at 138.

Defending champion Chi Chi Rodriguez, Bruce Devlin and Harold Henning were in a tie at 139. Rodriguez and Devlin shot 70. Henning shot a 68 in a round he began with an eagle-3 after hitting a 4-wood shot three inches from the pin.

Crampton, a 52-year-old from Dallas who has 14 victories in less than three seasons on the Senior Tour, birdied the first three holes.

He chipped to within six inches on the first, wedged to five feet on the second and rolled in a 12-foot putt from above the hole on the third.

Crampton took his only bogey on the fourth hole, where he drove through the fairway, then put his second shot into a bunker on the right.

A seven-foot putt gave him a birdie on the 13th. He birdied the 18th with a 14-footer after driving into rough.

"I'm still not comfortable with my game this year, although I've won twice," Crampton said. "But today I hit a lot more shots on line."

Mowry, who went into the day with a one-shot lead over Bob Brue, bogeyed the eighth hole, missing a four-foot putt, and the 10th. He got back into contention with a 10-foot birdie putt on the 12th and a two-putt birdie on the 18th.

Bies, from Seattle and a hometown favorite who gained his first senior victory after 12 tournaments this year, birdied the second, fifth, seventh and eighth holes with putts of five feet or shorter, and the ninth with a 15-footer.

He took the lead with a birdie on the 14th, hitting his 9-iron second shot to within 2½ feet of the cup, then fell into a share with Crampton with his only bogey. He three-putted the 16th, missing a four-footer. Bies missed a three-footer on the 18th that would have sent him back into a tie for the lead again.

Bies and Walter Zembriski, who was coming off a 76, had the low rounds of the day. Brue was only a stroke out of the lead until he bogeyed the 14th, double-bogeyed the 15th and bogeyed the 16th.

The field of 68 will play the final round Sunday, with first place worth $45,000.

The tournament is sponsored by GTE.

Williams Expects Tough Time At KU

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Roy Williams, an assistant basketball coach at North Carolina, was named head coach at the University of Kansas Friday to replace Larry Brown, who bolted to the NBA after leading the Jayhawks to the collegiate championship last spring.

Williams, 37, said it will be tough following Brown because of the competitiveness of the Big Eight Conference and the fact that other schools will be gunning for Kansas.

"Following the job Larry Brown did is not going to be something that's easy to do. I do realize it's needless to say it's a tough act to follow. There is a lot of pressure, a lot of expectation," Williams said at a morning news conference.

He said he was not bothered by the fact that KU officials had said they expected to hire a head coach from an NCAA Division I school to replace Brown or that several big-name coaches withdrew their names from consideration or said they were not interested before he was hired.

"I think every job I've had, I've not been the first choice," Williams said.

Earlier names mentioned in connection with the KU job included Wichita State's Eddie Fogler, Southwest Missouri's Charlie Spoonhour, Ohio State's Gary Williams and Purdue's Gene Keady.

Williams said his reputation as a strong recruiter may stem from the fact that he stays put and does not move from job to job. Brown has said his reputation as a carpet-bagger hurt his recruiting efforts at Kansas.

"I've had the same wife for 15 years, and I've had the same set of golf clubs for 17 years. My hope is that you don't have to go through another press conference to hire a new head basketball coach for the next 30 years," Williams said.

"Last night they told me Kansas wins the national championship every 37 years. I don't know if I can last that long, but I'm going to try," he said.

The new KU coach said he will not be seen yelling at players during a game, something that Brown did frequently. But he said he will be animated during games.

"I will be emotional. The officials will know where I'm sitting," Williams said.

Williams, who graduated from North Carolina in 1972 and returned as an assistant to Coach Dean Smith after five years as basketball coach at a North Carolina high school, has been described by Smith as a good recruiter.

"Roy is a highly organized person who has all the characteristics of a great coach. ... He's played a key role in the success we've had here in recent years. His goal is to be a head coach and he will be an outstanding one," Smith said.

"In the past, he has done a great job in recruiting. The last time he was heavily involved in that aspect of our program he was instrumental in recruiting the class of 1984, which included Sam Perkins and Matt Doherty," Smith said.

Brown, who played at North Carolina and was an assistant under Smith in the early 1960s, announced June 13 that he was leaving Kansas to become head coach of the San Antonio Spurs of the National Basketball Association for a reported five-year, $3.5 million contract.

The new Kansas coach is just the seventh in the school's 90-year history and follows one of the most successful periods ever at Kansas. Brown's 135-44 record in five seasons includes one Big Eight title, trips to the 1986 and '88 Final Four and the 1988 NCAA championship.

Athletic Director Bob Frederick said when Brown resigned that he had been thinking for more than a year that he might have to hire a new coach this summer. Brown turned down an offer to coach at UCLA just two months before accepting the San Antonio post.

Frederick said in a statement released at a news conference this morning that Williams was given a four-year contract at an annual salary of $78,000.

"We have great respect for Dean Smith and his program and his last recommendation (Brown) brought us a national championship," Frederick said.

"I called Dean Smith and asked for his thoughts about a new coach. 'Roy Williams will soon be one of the best coaches in America,'" Frederick quoted Smith as saying.

Frederick said Williams comes from a program "that has graduated 160 of 166 seniors and has a goal to accomplish similar results at the University of Kansas."

"He has directed a highly organized recruiting effort. Like Larry Brown, he has been influenced by the late Phog Allen through Dean Smith and will continue the aggressive defense and up-tempo style of play that has made Allen Fieldhouse such an exciting place to play," the athletic director said.

Hornets Looking For Help From Free-Agent Center

CHARLOTTE (AP) — The NBA expansion Charlotte Hornets are looking at unrestricted free agents to help at center and powere forward after choosing mostly perimeter players in the expansion and college drafts, a Charlotte newspaper says.

The Charlotte Observer reported in Friday's editions that an unnamed source close to the team said four or five unrestricted free agents, all big men, are being considered by the team.

The Hornets are looking for help for 6-foot-11 Dave Hoppen, the only true center taken by the Hornets in either draft. And the quickest route appears to be the pool of about 30 unrestricted free agents.

"We've been talking to a lot of different people, and we may be able to sign someone by next week," Hornets vice president Carl Scheer told the newspaper Thursday.

Among the free agents is Los Angeles Laker Kurt Rambis, one of the first veterans to benefit from the NBA's new collective bargaining agreement. Under that agreement, unsigned veterans with seven years of NBA experience may sign with any team.

Rambis reportedly is on vacation in Hawaii, and was unavailable for comment. Rambis's agent, Peter Johnson, also could not be reached.

Scheer said his concern in playing the free agent field is that those players are demanding guaranteed contracts.

One free agent the Hornets won't consider is center Moses Malone, who is not being offered a contract by his former team, the Washington Bullets. Malone, a 14-year veteran, is too old (33) and too highly paid (more than $2 million per year) to make him a viable alternative forthe Hornets, Scheer said.

Other big men whose names appeared on the unrestricted free-agent list are: 6-10 Jeff Cook of Phoenix, 6-9 Earl Cureton of the Los Angeles Clippers, 7-0 James Edwards of Detroit, 7-2 Artis Gilmore and 6-11 Bill Walton of Boston, 6-10 Clemon Johnson of Seattle, 6-11 Caldwell Jones and 6-9 Maurice Lucas of Portland, 6-10 Kurt Nimphius of San Antonio, 7-1 Tree Rollins of Atlanta and 6-9 Orlando Woolridge of New Jersey.

Former Raider Marc Wilson Signed By Packers Saturday

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — Quarterback Marc Wilson, released last month by the Los Angeles Raiders, was signed by the Green Bay Packers, the NFL club announced Saturday.

Wilson received $1 million from the Raiders last season in the final year of a $4 million contract he signed in 1983. He reportedly demanded a guaranteed contract to re-sign with the Raiders, and, under NFL rules would have had to receive a minimum of $1.1 million.

One report last month said the Packers had offered him $400,000 for a one-year contract. Wilson termed that a starting point.

Green Bay's quarterback list includes Robbie Bosco, Blair Kiel, Don Majkowski, Dave Walter, Randy Wright and Bud Keyes, a 10th-round draft choice who signed Friday while Braatz was talking with Wilson.

The club's training camp opens next week.

Wilson was a No. 1 draft choice of the Raiders in 1980, out of Brigham Young University. He was the 15th player selected in the NFL draft that year.

Wilson started the last seven games for the Raiders last season, and completed 152 of 266 passes for a 57.1 completion percentage. In his career, he completed 871 of his 1,666 passes, or 52.3 percent and 11,760 yards. His statistics included 77 touchdowns and 86 interceptions with a long completion of 92 yards.

The 6-foot-6, 205-pound Wilson set 11 NCAA records in three seasons at BYU, including leading the nation in total offense with 3,580 yards and 29 touchdown passes his senior year en route to BYU's 11-0 record.

Battles Wage For Prospects

CONCORD, Calif. (AP) — While America's top amateur boxers compete this week for a spot on the Olympic team, another battle just as intense is being waged outside the ring.

Like the boxers who dream of Olympic gold, this fight is also about gold — in the form of the riches some fighters may earn once they turn professional.

In the lobbies and bars of the Concord Hilton, representatives of at least four different managerial groups are on the prowl, looking to open new relationships with pro prospects or cement existing ones.

In whispered conversations with a fighter's trainer in the hallway or a meeting with his parents in a hotel room, they try to get the inside line on fighters they think might have a chance to have a lucrative career.

"They're always tagging behind, following other people," said Kelcie Banks, the favorite to make the team at 125 pounds. "I see them bugging other fighters. I can't see how they can concentrate."

The stakes — at least for the few top fighters who have chances for medals in Seoul — are high. An Olympic gold can be the passport to quick riches to a fighter and his manager or promoter.

"They tell me if you can get a gold medal you're an instant millionaire," said super heavyweight Riddick Bowe.

Even fighters who have no realistic shot for a medal are being courted on the theory that some may make better pro fighters than amateurs.

That was the case in 1984 when a young heavyweight who lost a spot on the team in his final bout turned out to be the best prospect of all. The heavyweight was Mike Tyson, who earned $21 million for his fight last month with Michael Spinks.

"Most of our kids are in the program to go into a career of professional boxing," said Jim Fox, executive director of the Amateur Boxing Federation. "This gives them a chance to meet the people who may further those careers."

Fox said the ABF encourages pro managers to establish contacts with fighters because they can provide the training facilities and routines that prepare boxers for their amateur fights.

"It's not like basketball where you've got the schools feeding players into the program," he said. "We do it on a club level where we need the facilities these people offer."

Many of the fighters work out at facilities run either by the Houston Boxing Association or Lou and Dan Duva's Main Events Inc., which signed many of the 1984 Olympians. Sugar Ray Leonard also provides space for fighters who may be willing to sign with his stable.

Leonard is also a special adviser to this year's Olympic team, a position that competitors have claimed is a conflict of interest.

One fighter close to Leonard's stable, light heavyweight prospect Andrew Maynard, lost in the first round this week and has his Olympic hopes resting on whether a six-member committee will name him the "most worthy opponent" to compete in the box-offs next week in Las Vegas to pick the final squad.

"Leonard isn't on that decision-making panel," said Fox. "He'll have no influence at all."

Although some of the fighters will admit they are leaning toward one manager or another upon turning pro, most are reluctant to talk about any arrangements they have with the pro managers.

Some, though, are recipients of trust funds established by the managers to pay their training and living expenses before they turn pro.

Todd Foster, a 139-pounder who trains in Houston with Main Events, conceded that he would "most likely" sign with the organization after turning pro, quickly adding: "I don't like to say one way or another.

Drought May Affect Waterfowl Hunting

Severe drought conditions in prime duck nesting areas of the United States and Canada may force tighter restrictions on North Carolina's waterfowl hunting this fall.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has notified the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission that the federal guidelines on migratory bird hunting regulations for 1988-89 may include changes in season lengths and bag limits.

Waterfowl experts with the Commission's Division of Wildlife Management expect to have preliminary guidelines on these restrictions when they hold public waterfowl meetings in August in each of the state's nine wildlife districts. The commission conducts these meetings each year before it adopts regulations for hunting migratory birds in North Carolina. These regulations include seasons for waterfowl such as ducks, Canada geese, snow geese, brant and tundra swans.

The Fish and Wildlife Service reports that preliminary results of breeding-ground surveys indicate that habitat conditions are the poorest observed in many years. Federal estimates of duck breeding populations will be completed and made public this month.

During North Carolina's annual waterfowl meetings, comments from the public are recorded and considered by the commission in the waterfowl regulations decision-making process. The commission may limit waterfowl seasons in North Carolina, but it may not extend them beyond the waterfowl regulations framework approved by the Fish and Wildlife Service.

Three public waterfowl meetings are scheduled for Aug. 22 at the courthouses in Edenton, Albemarle and Asheville. On Aug. 23, meetings will be conducted in New Bern, Graham and Yadkinville, while on Aug. 24, the meetings will be in Nashville, Elizabethtown and Morganton. They begin at 7:30 p.m.

Safe Decks

Dangling a fishing line off the end of a pier on a lazy summer afternoon is a fun, reasonably safe way to pass from time. But hauling huge nets stuffed with fish onto the violently pitching deck of a storm-tossed commercial fishing vessel is neither fun nor risk free. In fact, commercial fishing is the most dangerous occupation in the country — twice more hazardous than mining.

But steps are in motion to improve the safety of those who make their living cultivating the sea's resources. Legislation requiring fishing vessels — for the first time — to carry safety equipment has passed the U.S. House of Representatives.

"Fishing is among the most dangerous professions in the United States," said Walter B. Jones of Farmville, chairman of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. "However, from a safety perspective, these is very little government regulation to protect the safety and welfare of seamen."

Basically, Jones said, the only items the Coast Guard can require on most commercial fishing vessels are life preservers and fire extinguishers.

The bill mandates fishing, fish processing and fish tender vessels to carry lifeboats, immersion suits, radio equipment, navigation equipment, first aid equipment and other items seen as necessary by the Coast Guard. In addition, larger vessels carrying 16 or more crew members would also have to meet standards for radar, fire protection, insulation, electrical systems, fuel systems and ventilation systems.

"I do not believe we can wait any longer to implement safeguards for these working individuals," Jones commented. "Therefore, this is strictly a safety bill. I believe it will significantly improve the working conditions on fishing industry vessels and increase the survival rate on vessels which do encounter a casualty."

Don't Feed State's Alligators

Biologists with the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission are advising residents of eastern North Carolina to avoid feeding alligators or any other wildlife species that live in areas where alligators are found.

Wildlife officers and biologists were recently forced to remove a 12-foot-long alligator from Lake Waccamaw after the alligator showed aggressive behavior toward humans. The alligator had not attacked anyone, but reports indicated that it had been fed by humans over a period of time and was losing its fear of humans.

"We regret we had to remove the animal, but we felt it was a matter of public safety," said Hal Atkinson, chief of the commission's Division of Wildlife Management. "In this case, we identified one particular alligator that was demonstrating aggressive behavior toward residents and removed just that one. People often cause these problems when they feed alligators and other wildlife because it causes the animals to lose their natural fear of humans and become aggressive."

The death of a child who was attacked by an alligator in Florida in June had prompted several inquiries to the commission about the status of alligators in North Carolina.

Although commission biologists recall no incidence in recent history of an alligator attacking someone, they caution people to avoid feeding them. Ducks also should not be fed in areas where alligators live because alligators feed on ducks and would be attracted to the feeding area. Biologists also recommend that fish not be cleaned in areas where the reptiles could be attracted.

Alligators in North Carolina are found mostly in the southeastern part of the state. They are considered to be a threatened species and are protected by federal law.

Atkinson advises that an officer or biologists with the commission be contacted if an alligator shows aggressive behavior toward humans or animals.

Family Fishing Tournament Under Way

The third annual Emerald Isle Family Fishing Tournament is being held through Nov. 30, with fishing allowed from boats, piers or the surf.

The tournament, sponsored in part by the Emerald Isle Merchants Association, is designed for families. Fifteen species of fish are eligible, with cash prizes totaling $10,000 being awarded. For more information, contact Emerald Isle Family Fishing Tournament, Block Drive, Emerald Isle, N.C. 28557.

Wind And Heat Determine Catches Along The Coast

By The Associated Press

Fishing has been spotty along the North Carolina coast, with the winds and heat determining the catches, pier operators say.

"Everytime the wind switches to the east-northeast, it brings us spots," said Hardin Crouch of the Jolly Roger Pier on Topsail Island. "It's been doing this for two weeks. The night before last, some of the boys had two five-gallon bucket fulls."

Other operators weren't painting such a rosy picture.

"Things have slowed down considerably," said Dave Hissey of the Pelican's Roost.

Hatteras

Hissey said fishing has slowed down in his area after several excellent weeks.

"At Cape Point and Buxton, we've had fair runs of grey trout and Spanish mackerel," he said. "In the sound they're still catching a few cobia and scattered catches of flounder and grey trout.

"Inshore fishermen are catching Spanish and a few small king mackerel. Offshore fishing has slowed considerably with quite a few dolphin, and good numbers of white marlin."

Southport

At the Long Beach Pier, Buck Melton said the hot weather was keeping the fishermen inside and the fish out to sea.

"We caught ... spots and blues and still a few Spanish and some flounder; the flounder are medium size," he said. "That's about typical for this time of year."

Melton also reported catches of king mackerel.

Nags Head

Andy McCann of Nags Head Fishing Pier reported his area's first real brush with the king mackerel of the season.

"Weve been having a pretty good year," he said. "This weekend we really got into the kings."

McCann reported good runs of speckled and grey trout every morning and evening, runs of spots and croakers as well as Spanish mackerel, cobia and blues.

Offshore business was also booming, McCann said.

"Offshore boats have been doing real well. They're getting lots of dolphin, king mackerel, blue marlin and lots of white marlin," he said.

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

Now that the United States has the World Cup in 1994, what does it mean for American soccer in 1988, 1989 ... even beyond '94?

"The eyes of the world will be on us, it's that simple," says Paul Stiehl, director of World Cup USA '94. "We will be the focal point for soccer and that brings instant respect to the sport here and for American soccer abroad. Any potential future failures will be highlighted and so would any progress.

"It's a self-perpetuating thing from the time we got the bid. People will be talking about soccer in America, and wanting to get involved. We have lots of hard work coming up to get ready."

Some of that work will be focused on developing professionai soccer in this country. Not since the North American Soccer League folded in 1985 has there been a nationwide outdoor league with any clout. Indoor soccer might be headed toward extinction, too, with the Major Indoor Soccer League in dire financial straits.

"A professional league would greatly help the World Cup and soccer in the U.S.," Stiehl says. "Where can a player go to when he finishes college? He has to turn to the indoor game or to club teams or try to go overseas, where he is overmatched."

Just as U.S. teams always have been overmatched.

"From a player viewpoint, getting the Cup is essential to the development of world-class teams," Stiehl says. "The U.S. team gets significant exposure at the national level and is a popular opponent for overseas teams. They all will want to come here to play exhibitions and to see where the Cup games will be held and to work out. They'll all want to play the U.S. team and that is something we've lacked for so long.

"That kind of competition will make for a significant improvement in the quality of American soccer. We have the size, speed and talent but it is very immature and unrefined. My feeling is you improve more rapidly playing against the best competition than against equal competition."

Some U.S. soccer officials hope that securing the World Cup will lift soccer into the mainstream of sporting life.

Humphrey Made Jump In Just A Few Hours

ATLANTA (AP) — In just a few hours, fur trader and fishing tackle salesman Danny Joe Humphrey made the jump to fishing's biggest event — one which will take place almost in his back yard under conditions he's fished since childhood.

Humphrey, 42, of Kinsville, N.C., won the B.A.S.S. Federation National Championship, for the amateur members of the Bass Angiers Sportsman Society's affiliated clubs, and will compete in the BASS Masters Classic on the tidal waters of Virginia's James River.

"I'm going to go down there and look and feel every piece of water down there. There's no doubt about that," he said.

"I'm just sitting down to try to figure out the dates" of the tournament and time to visit the James for practice, Humphrey, who has a bachelor's degree in social science, said in a telephone interview from Chattanooga after his July 4th weekend victory.

"I've been dealt a good hand. This isn't just the icing on the cake, this is the whipped cream and the cherry on top," he said.

Even though he never has fished a major tournament, he said he thinks he has "a definite advantage" in the Classic, which will be Aug. 25-27 between Richmond and the Atlantic.

"Tidal water is something that I'm used to," said Humphrey, who grew up fishing the tidal rivers of North Carolina. "I'm not familiar with the area, but I'll probably take off at least a week to look at it. I'm only 200 miles from Richmond."

He runs the Carolina Fish and Fur Team Tournaments on those tidal rivers.

Fishing tidal rivers means running with the ebb tide as the conditions change.

"If it's an outgoing tide, I'd fish certain places on outgoing tide, try to outrun the tide; fish this spot when water level is such and such, and when the tide goes out, drop downstream and fish another spot," Humphrey said.

"Up there, I think it's around a 3-foot tide. You fish it out, then you fish it coming back in. On the rivers that I fish, the fish are easier to catch on the outgoing tide, by far. The reasons is the fish tend to get on the places we can get them, the points, the cuts," he said. "When the tide comes in, the fish seem to disperse more."

"I don't think tidal fishing is going to create a real problem for me. Not knowing the water is going to create a problem for me, but I'll have to familiarize myself with it."

Humphrey said fishing against the nation's top pros "is wonderful, it's a dream come true. the competition will be wonderful, win, lose or draw."

He added, however, he feels he will be competitive. "I've got a natural ability to locate fish."

That may have come through genetics of practice, he said.

"My granddaddy, Dan, was a fisherman if there's ever been one and my daddy, Courtney, was a bigger fisherman and he is a fisherman, 70 years old," Humphrey said. "He got me started when I was probably 10 or 11 years old. I got a Mitchell 300 reel and Shakespeare rod when I was about 11 and I thought I knew something.

"I probably caught my first bass when I was about 11 and I haven't been right since."

Grayling, Jewel Of The West, Still Lurks In Montana Waters

BOZEMAN, Mont. (AP) — Most fishermen think of grayling as a precious jewel of a fish found only in the blue-cold waters of the Yukon or Alaska.

They would be surprised to know that there are still a few grayling left in the lower 48 states that can be caught within walking distance of their car.

In fact, Montana's state record grayling came out of Hyalite Reservoir, just a hop, skip and bump up a paved and dirt road from downtown Bozeman.

"Grayling fisheries — period — are fairly unusual, plus this population is characterized by large fish," said Jerry Wells, a state Department of Fish, Wildlife and Parks fisheries biologist who studied Hyalite in graduate school.

"And being so close to an urban area with a paved road to it, that's really unique."

Bozeman resident Steve Houser fishes Hyalite Reservoir often, and his efforts paid off in 1986 when he landed a 2-pound, 10½-ounce grayling. The lunker squeaked by the old state record of a 2-pound, 10-ounce grayling caught from Handkerchief Lake high in the Beartooth Mountains.

Houser said he caught the record fish on "a buggy-looking brown fly" that he tied himself. He was "semi-trolling" when it struck. "It was snowing and blowing and I was just heading into the boat ramp at the time," he recalled.

Although it's a comely fish with a sweeping, turquoise-specked dorsal fin and noble fighting qualities, the grayling hasn't always been welcome in the United States.

Once found even in northern Michigan, the grayling now occupies just a few scattered strongholds mainly in Montana and Wyoming.

"The main problem is competition from exotic species stocked on top of it," such as brown, brook and rainbow trout, said Ron Jones, a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service biologist watching over Yellowstone National Park's fragile grayling fishery.

Although they were native to the Gibbon and Madison rivers in Yellowstone Park, grayling are now found only in Grebe and nearby Wolf and Cascade lakes, Jones said. Occasional grayling are still caught out of the Gibbon and Madison, but probably drifted down out of Grebe or Wolf, he speculated.

The average grayling in Grebe Lake, a short walk off the highway between Norris Junction and Canyon, will be 10 inches long, he said, although he has seen them up to 16 inches there.

All grayling caught in the park must be released. Biologists are also looking for suitable streams where they can try to reintroduce grayling, Jones said. "We're finding out grayling migrate quite a bit," he said. "They go up small streams in summer and migrate down to deeper streams in winter."

The Big Hole River in Montana is the last bastion of stream-dwelling grayling in the 48 lower states. But even there, this "glacial relic" is not numerous, said FWP fisheries bureau management chief Steve McMullin of Helena.

Besides competition from non-native trout, the Big Hole grayling have suffered from irrigation, logging, road-building and grazing that have damaged water quality, McMullin said.

"Our concern is that there's been some rumblings from various folks about whether it should be listed under the Threatened and Endangered Species Act," he said. "We're not anxious to see it listed. It would be cumbersome to manage, with so many agencies involved you wonder if it does more harm than good."

To protect the unique Big Hole population from overfishing, all grayling caught in the river must be released. "They are one of the easiest fish to catch there is," McMullin said. "It's not difficult to catch every grayling in a hole."

Fishermen looking for an easy meal, though, might prefer to let grayling go. As table fare, McMullin rates them just below whitefish. "As something for the frying pan, you're better off going after brook trout or something else," he said.

Big Hole grayling will range up to 13 to 15 inches long, he said.

Because grayling are doing "quite well" in lakes, there's little danger they will become extinct in Montana as they have in Michigan, McMullin said.

GAF Indictment May Signal Tough Federal Stance

By RICK GLADSTONE
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Tentacles from the Ivan Boesky insider trading scandal surfaced in a surprising way this past week with the indictment of GAF Corp. for stock manipulation.

Securities lawyers said such charges against a large U.S. industrial company are highly unusual and suggest the government is toughening and expanding its crackdown on Wall Street corruption.

At the same time, however, they said stock manipulation is always difficult to prove and that federal prosecutors could face a time-consuming and possibly embarrassing court fight with GAF, a major producer of chemicals and building materials based in Wayne, N.J.

The 10-count indictment returned by a Manhattan federal grand jury last Wednesday against GAF, vice chairman James T. Sherwin and two subsidiaries alleges they manipulated Union Carbide Corp. stock in 1986 after a failed takeover attempt of the much larger chemical company.

The object of the purported scheme was to induce other investors to buy Carbide shares and thereby inflate the price, so GAF could sell its 10 percent stake at a better profit or with minimal loss, the indictment alleges.

If convicted on all counts, GAF could face $15 million in fines, while Sherwin could face a 50-year prison term and $2.5 million in fines. GAF and Sherwin have proclaimed innocence and vowed to contest the charges.

It is the first indictment brought against an American industrial concern stemming from evidence supplied indirectly by Boesky, a well-known stock speculator now serving a three-year prison term for his central role in the biggest insider trading case in history.

The connection between Boesky and GAF is Boyd L. Jefferies, former head of a West Coast brokerage that bears his name. He was implicated by Boesky after the speculator agreed to cooperate with the government's investigation.

Jefferies, who also has pleaded guilty to criminal charges and is cooperating with the government, is the main source of information that led federal prosecutors to investigate GAF.

"This appears to be part of the government's pattern of looking at market practices of all kinds," said John F. Olson, a securities attorney at the Washington law firm of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and chairman of the American Bar Association's task force on insider-trading regulation.

"We're seeing more of that and more focus on it," he said. "This also shows that prosecutors are continuing to reap the benefits of deals they made with Boesky and Jefferies."

Nevertheless, securities lawyers said that in the GAF case, one of the main legal challenges facing the government will be to prove a conspiracy existed to influence the price of Carbide's stock.

Carbide is one of the largest publicly held companies and a component of the Dow Jones industrial average, with more than 127 million common shares. On any given day, its stock price could change for a number of innocuous reasons, ranging from an analyst's earnings estimate to a stock-buyback rumor.

Some people familiar with the GAF indictment, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said a second potential problem facing the government is its possible use of Jefferies as a witness. Because Jefferies is an admitted felon, defense lawyers could destroy his credibility before a jury.

A third problem confronting prosecutors is whether the alleged manipulation succeeded. The government claims Carbide shares rose in price as a result, although records show GAF didn't sell its stake until several days later.

Several attorneys said they doubted prosecutors would have sought an indictment unless they had much more than evidence supplied by Jefferies.

Others also noted that, unlike civil cases, rules concerning evidence in criminal matters are biased in the government's favor. The defendants may not know until trial what incriminating material the prosecutors will present.

"I have to assume that if it's a criminal case, the government will be ready to go to trial, and the judge will certainly push the case to trial relatively quickly," said Gerald Walpin, a partner at the New York law firm of Rosenman & Colin and a former assistant U.S. attorney. "I think certainly within six months we'll know exactly what the government's case is."

The GAF indictment wasn't the only development in the Boesky scandal this past week. Speculation heightened that the Securities and Exchange Commission was about to file civil charges against Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., the Wall Street investment firm that has been under government investigation for months.

Another Boesky conspirator, inside trader Dennis B. Levine, was transferred from prison to serve the remainder of his two-year term in a Manhattan halfway house. But in a setback for Levine, a federal judge ruled he must use his $12.8 million in illicit profits to repay defrauded investors and not back taxes, which total $12.2 million in federal claims alone.

In other business and economic news this past week:

—The nation's two largest financial markets took a joint step toward averting another stock crash, proposing reforms that include special attention to small investors and coordinated trading halts when the Dow Jones industrial average falls 250 points. The announcement by the New York Stock Exchange and Chicago Mercantile Exchange addressed many issues raised by government studies on the causes of the October crash.

—The Securities and Exchange Commission voted to limit American companies' ability to weaken the voting power of their stockholders as a way of fighting hostile takeovers. The new one-share, one-vote rule spells out how shares with reduced voting power can be issued.

—Federal regulators said it will cost $15.2 billion to bail out Texas' ailing savings and loan institutions, more than double their previous estimate.

—The government said youth summertime employment helped drop the nation's civilian jobless rate to 5.3 percent in June, the lowest since 1974. Another government report showed Japan was the only industrial power to best the United States in reducing manufacturing labor costs in absolute terms last year.

—The nation's major retailers said sales rose between 3.5 percent and 4 percent in June, helped by the hot weather and consumer purchases of summer clothing.

—Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng, after meeting with six farm-state governors, said there was an urgent need for legislative action to provide drought relief.

—Officials of the Farm Credit System announced a merger that will combine nine of the system's banks for cooperatives into one lending institution.

—The United States and Japan signed an agreement opening Japan to more American beef and citrus.

—American Suzuki Motor Corp. said sales of its Samurai sport vehicle plunged 70.6 percent in June from a year earlier. It was the automaker's first sales report since Consumers Union alleged the Samurai tips too easily.

—Ford Motor Co. and General Motors Corp. said their car sales rose in late June, and the Big Three automakers all finished the first half of 1988 ahead of the same period last year.

—Singer Co. agreed to sell its motor products division to Ryobi Limited of Japan for about $325 million. The division is a major source of power tools for Sears, Roebuck & Co.

—Sun Co., a leading producer and distributor of gasoline and petroleum products, agreed to buy the smaller Atlantic Petroleum Corp. for $513 million.

—Tropicana Products Inc. sued Coca-Cola Co. over labeling and advertising claims for its "premium choice" pasteurized Minute Maid orange juice.

—Bank of New York Co. got a reprieve in its hostile pursuit of Irving Bank Corp. when a state judge struck down a provision of Irving's anti-takeover "poison pill."

—Eastern Airlines and its unions signed an agreement designed to defuse years of bitter battling and improve safety procedures at the often-criticized carrier. The pact comes a month after federal investigators warned that safety could be threatened.

—USG Corp. shareholders approved a recapitalization and restructuring plan that increases the company's debt fourfold. The plan was part of the company's successful defense against a takeover bid from Desert Partners L.P.

—Financier Marvin Warner was stunned by a Florida jury verdict requiring him to pay $22.6 million for fraudulently removing money from ESM Government Securities, a failing securities dealer.

—The Postal Service announced that window service at the nation's post offices, reduced earlier this year to save money, will return to normal in September.

NLRB Probing Union Complaints

DURHAM (AP) — Federal officials are investigating allegations that a Charlotte company doing maintenance work at a firm in Research Triangle is trying to stop employees from organizing a union by threatening them with the loss of their jobs.

The complaints, being probed by the National Labor Relations Board, were filed by Local 465 of the International Union of Operating Engineers against Jones Operation & Maintenance Co. of Charlotte. The union alleges the company has "interfered with, restrained and coerced" pro-union Jones employees doing work at the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences.

The employees in question maintain the heating and cooling facilities at the institute. The complaint was filed March 7.

Attendants Join AFA

WASHINGTON (AP) — Flight attendants employed by Charlotte-based Carolina Coastal Air, a feeder carrier for Piedmont Airlines, have voted to join the Association of Flight Attendants, AFL-CIO.

The representative election was conducted by the National Mediation Board, the federal agency that oversees labor-management relations in the airline industry.

The 35 flight attendants were not previously represented by any union.

Business Notes

New Board Member

Burney S. Warren, president of First Federal Savings and Loan Association of Pitt County, was recently elected as a new member of the board of directors of the North Carolina League of Savings Institutions.

The organization said Warren will assume his position on the board during the League's upcoming 85th annual convention in Colorado Springs, Colo.

The League is the trade association that represents the $20 billion savings industry in North Carolina. Headquartered in Raleigh, it serves the 136 savings and loans and savings banks in the state.

Employees Honored

Two area employees of Carolina Telephone's installation and repair department were honored recently by the company in recognition of their service tenures.

Jesse L. Turner, a cable maintenance technician in Farmville, received an emblem noting 25 years of service, while Carlton L. Parker, an installer repairer in Greenville, was cited for 10 years of service.

A native of Edgecombe County, Turner and his wife, Kay, reside at Route 1, Pinetops. They have two children and attend Eagles' Baptist Church.

Manager Is Named

Roses Stores Inc., Henderson based discount retail chain, announced that it has named Mike Leonard manager of its store at The Plaza mall in Greenville.

The company said that Leonard, who previously was manager of Roses in Rocky Mount, will supervise 74 Roses associates in the 48,000-square-foot facility.

Leonard said The Plaza store has 30,000 discount items in 68 departments.

Promotion Made

Downeast Donuts, doing business as Dunkin' Donuts of Greenville, announced the promotion of David Miles to store manager for the firm's Memorial Drive location.

CIC Designation

Carolyn V. Bowen, Insurance Center of Greenville Inc., was one of 30 professional insurance agents from North Carolina and South Carolina confirmed as "Certified Insurance Counselors" during the recent annual convention of the Carolinas Association of Profesional Insurance Agents in Hilton Head, S.C.

The CIC designation is awarded by the Society of Certified Insurance Counselors, a national non-profit organization dedicated to providing continuing education in all related major fields of insurance and agency management.

The association said some 10,000 agents from the across the nation have earned the CIC designation.

Firm Changes Name

Mid-Atlantic Mortgage Corp. announced that it has changed its name to FirstMark Mortgage Corp.

FirstMark is based in Greenville and markets throughout eastern North Carolina, the firm said.

Facility Opens

A ribbon cutting ceremony Thursday marked the official opening of Carolina Mini Storage at 3275 Landmark St.

Officials said the facility is of concrete and steel construction and will consist of 38,900 square feet upon completion. Each unit features lights, electrical outlets and telephone service, with access to units offered seven days a week.

Staff Addition

Mavis Butts, owner of Mavis Butts Realty, announced that Trudy Whitehurst Gulley will be associated with her agency in Greenville, specializing in residential real estate.

Ms. Gulley is a native of Bethel and resides there. She is a graduate of Peace College and East Carolina University with a major in sociology. She has been employed with the Edgecombe County Department of Social Services since 1976, working in the foster care unit.

The new employee, who is a member of Howard Memorial Presbyterian Church, has a daughter, Fran.

NCPA President

The North Carolina Placement Association announced that Leslie D. Rogers will serve as president of the organization for 1988-89.

Sales Supervisor

James A. Duckett, formerly business office manager for Carolina Telephone in Rocky Mount, has been promoted to residential sales supervisor for the company in Tarboro.

Carolina Telephone said that Duckett is responsible for establishing and achieving company objectives through development of the residential market for communications services.

Duckett joined CT&T as an operator in Greenville in 1974 and transferred to Tarboro as coin telephone supervisor in 1978. He was named business office manager in 1985.

The new supervisor, a native of Washington, Ind., is a 1977 graduate of East Carolina University. He is a member of Mount Pleasant Christian Church in Greenville.

Duckett and his wife, the former Ann Warren of Washington, N.C., have two children, Ben, 6, and Jessica, 4.

Performance Noted

First Federal Savings and Loan Association of Pitt County has been selected by Sheshunoff and Co. Inc. for its publication of the highest rated savings and loans in America for the year ending December 1987.

The firm said it was given an "A" rating, awarded in recognition of First Federal's achievement in performance as measured by capital adequacy, asset quality, and earnings and liquidity as compared to its peers throughout the nation.

General Manager

Wallace Penny has been named Raleigh general manager for Swisher Service Co., with responsibilities for operations of the commercial restroom hygiene company throughout eastern North Carolina.

The company said that Penny, who was previously operations manager for Maplehurst Bakery Distributors in Charlotte, will direct Swisher operations in Greenville, Raleigh, Chapel Hill, Durham, Cary, Fayetteville, Jacksonville, New Bern, Rocky Mount, Wilson, Henderson, Smithfield, Goldsboro and Kinston.

Swisher provides restroom hygiene services to commercial and institutional organizations.

Store Milestone

TCBY, frozen yogurt franchiser, announced that it has achieved the 1,000-store milestone in its sixth year of operation.

Herren Hickingbotham, president, said that the first TCBY store opened in 1981 in Little Rock, Ark. Today TCBY Systems Inc. has stores in 48 states and Canada, with development under way in the Bahamas and Taiwan. He said the company expects to have more than 1,200 stores open by the end of 1988.

The spokesman said that at the end of the company's second quarter on May 31, TCBY's sales and franchising revenues increased 44 percent from a year ago to $26,666,000, net income rose 47 percent to a record $5,716,000, and total systemwide sales increased 76 percent to a record $53.4 million.

Figures Increased

The company said corporate revenues advanced 27.5 percent to $677,958,000 from $531,680,000 for the year-earlier period. Net income from continuing operations increased 13.6 percent to $23,630,000 from $20,808,000.

Total net income for the first quarter ended May 30 was $71,579,000, reflecting a one-time gain from the sale of discontinued operations of $47,059,000, as reported in the first quarter of fiscal 1988.

The company, based in Shiremanstown, Pa., said that current sales include revenues accrued since April 24 from 39 drugstores and 146 dry cleaning operations acquired as a result of Rite Aid's purchase of the Richmond, Ky., based Begley Co.

Earnings Dip Seen

Robert I. Baker, president of Vermont American Corp., announced that he expects the company's second quarter ending June 30 to be down 20 percent to 30 percent from comparable 1987 results.

Baker said that for the quarter ended June 30, Vermont American reported net income of $4,833,000.

Vermont American, based in Louisville, Ky., is a manufacturer and marketer of cutting tools, power tool accessories, hand tools, and lawn and garden products for consumer and industrial use.

Wage Administrator

Robert E. Henry has been promoted to wage and salary administrator in Carolina Telphone's personnel department in Tarboro. Henry was formerly an accountant in accounting.

The company said Henry is responsible for administering its wage and salary programs and performing job analysis studies.

Henry joined Carolina Telephone as a staff assistant in accounting in 1983.

He is a 1983 graduate of East Carolina University and a member of Immanuel Baptist Church.

Staff Changes

The company said that Barbara Woolard, who joined Texasgulf in 1980 as a scheduler, has been promoted to employee development specialist where she will develop, recommend, implement and administer employee development programs related to testing and training.

Ms. Woolard graduated from East Carolina University with a degree in business education. She and her husband, Phil, who is also an employee of the phosphate operations, reside in Chocowinity with their three children.

Texasgulf said that Jeffrey Furness has joined the operations as an envoronmental scientist. He was formerly with the Environmental Toxicology Laboratories at Kansas State University.

A New York native, Furness graduated from Michigan State University with a bachelor's degree in fisheries and wildlife biology, and crop and soil science. He has a master's degree in environmental biology from Kansas State.

The company said that his primary responsibility will include wetlands permitting, process for mine advance, land reclamation and Pamlico River environmental concerns.

Furness and his wife, Norreen, and two children live in Greenville.

Board Member

Reginald M. Fountain Jr., chairman, president and chief executive officer of Fountain Powerboat Industries Inc., announced that Theodore J. Rupley has been appointed to the board of directors of the Washington, N.C., based company.

Rupley is president and chief executive officer of Metropolitan Property and Liability Insurance Co., a subsidiary of Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. Prior to his affiliation with MPL in 1986, Rupley was senior vice president and a director of Allstate Insurance Co., which he joined in 1964.

Fountain said that Rupley's appointment as a director fills a vacancy on the board created by the resignation of Henry W. Lorin.

Improvement Noted

The Planters Corp. reported second quarter net income of $2,456 million, a 14.6 percent increase from the $2.144 million earned in the second quarter of 1987.

Earnings per share amounted to 35 cents, compared to last year's second quarter amount of 31 cents per share.

For the first six months of 1988, net income increased 9.4 percent to $4.747 million from $4.338 million earned in the same period last year. Earnings per share increased to 68 cents, compared to 63 cents per share for the first six months of 1987.

On June 30, total assets of The Planters Corp. increased to $945 million, a 12.9 percent increase from a year earlier. Deposits rose to $838 million, a 13.4 percent increase, and loans grew to $674 million, a 11.4 percent jump.

June Saw Higher Interest Rates

By DAVE SKIDMORE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Interest rates on 30-year, fixed-rate mortgages moved higher in June, the third consecutive monthly increase, the government said.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the regulator of savings institutions, said the national average for conventional, single-family loans jumped to 10.75 percent in early June, up from 10.65 percent in early May.

It was the highest rate since January, when the average was 10.97 percent.

However, a separate report by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp., known as Freddie Mac, indicates that rates eased later in June and early this month. It said the average this week was 10.38 percent, down from 10.39 percent last week and 10.58 percent in the week ending June 3.

Freddie Mac averages are lower than the bank board's comparable averages because they do not include add-on fees, known as points, which are paid by borrowers.

The bank board averages, which hit 11.42 percent just before the October stock market crash, dropped steadily for five months, hitting 10.33 percent in early March, and then began rising.

After the brief respite in June and early this month, economists are expecting rates to begin climbing again.

Richard W. Peach, deputy chief economist of the Mortgage Bankers Association of America, said he expected 30-year, fixed-rate mortgages to be in the 11.25 to 11.5 percent range by the end of the year.

"We had a temporary lull in interest rates during the last three weeks of June. The dollar strengthened and that boosted the confidence of the bond market. In the past week, though, we've seen some renewal of concerns about inflation pressures. Today's employment release (showing joblessness at a 14-year low of 5.3 percent in June) is going to accentuate that fear," he said. The bank board said rates for the most popular type of one-year, adjustable-rate mortgages, those with caps on how high the rate can increase, also rose, from 8.63 percent in early May to 8.80 percent in early June.

The percentage of mortgages closed with adjustable rates rose to 55 percent in June, up from 53 percent in May and 49 percent in April.

Peach said as fixed-rates rise, home buyers turn to the less-costly adjustable rates.

Tenn. Behind In Contracts

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Tennessee lags behind other states in the Southeast in the number of federal government contract awards to small businesses, an agency official says.

"Tennessee small businesses were awarded 15 percent of $2.82 billion in total federal contracts in 1986, which is almost 5 percent below the national average," said Robert Hartman, the state's district director for the U.S. Small Business Administration.

Eight Southeast states as a whole have 23.5 percent of all government awards to small business, Hartman said.

Although Tennessee has fewer military bases than Florida and Georgia, "there's no reason in the world a small business in Tennessee can't get a contract with (the government)," he said.

"The trick is to get the buyer and seller together under one roof," he said.

Toward that end, the U.S. Small Business Administration plans a two-day workshop next week in Nashville. Similar workshops already have been held across the country.

The workshop is held to show small businesses how to lure government contracts and to let government purchasing agents know where to find companies to fit their needs.

Wall Street Reaction Sluggish To 'Banner Year' Statement

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Though the stock market has rallied since late spring, Wall Street is still having trouble working up much excitement over what President Reagan has labeled a "banner year for peace and prosperity."

The occasion for Reagan's statement was a Labor Department report Friday that the civilian unemployment rate fell three-tenths of a percentage point in June to a 14-year low of 5.3 percent.

That figure, and the accompanying news of a 346,000 increase in non-farm payroll employment, far exceeded advance estimates on Wall Street.

The dramatic numbers seemed to leave the stock market with a clearly defined choice: Either it could jump ahead on the evidence of solid economic growth, or it could drop sharply amid the inflation fears that have been raised by many other favorable economic reports of late.

As it turned out, however, the market did neither of those things. Instead, it spent the day drifting quietly lower, almost as though there was no news of any note to deal with.

One primary source of caution in the financial markets of late has been a widespread suspicion that the state of the economy is too good to last.

Before long, many investors fear, strong growth will bring with it increased inflation and upward pressure on interest rates. Indeed, rates moved up significantly on Friday after the employment statistics were issued.

To some analysts, this amounts to nothing more than the latest of a series of false inflation scares that have hit the markets in recent years.

Yes, they say, the rise of the Consumer Price Index in 1988 is likely to be a little larger than it was last year, with production closer to full capacity and special influences like the drought in the farm belt.

But no, they argue, inflation is not about to reach the point where it forces stringent credit-tightening by the Federal Reserve and brings an end to the economic expansion.

"The economic cycle will last longer than any investors expect," maintains Donald Carver at Centre Square Investment Group in Philadelphia.

"Peak earnings are still several quarters away. Inflationary pressures from some commodity prices are offset by weakness in energy.

"Interest rates are unlikely, anytime soon, to reach levels that would dampen the economy."

Such assurances did little for the stock market in the past week, however. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 25.43 points to 2,106.15.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index fell .87 to 152.81, and the NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market lost .37 to 394.33. The American Stock Exchange market value index edged up .02 to 309.02.

Volume on the Big Board averaged 163.40 million shares a day, down from 208.42 million the week before.

Susan Berge Kent at Tucker, Anthony & R.L. Day Inc. takes a different slant on the inflation debate: She regards fears of upward pressure on prices as misguided, but thinks the stock market is headed for trouble anyway.

Ms. Kent argues that the basic question facing the stock market is how the nation will deal with "the greatest debt problem this country has faced since the late 1920s.

"Since the early 1980s," she says, "deflation has been a greater risk than inflation, particularly in light of the debt problem."

Unions Cite Terminations

MIAMI (AP) — Eastern Airlines union leaders say a new safety agreement with the carrier could be a sign of progress, but add that tense labor-management relations will improve more if the high number of firings and suspensions is reduced.

"We've had five terminations this week, so nothing has abated," said Nancy Currier, a vice president of the Transport Workers Union local representing 7,000 flight attendants. The rate of firings "is far higher than it was last year, and far higher than it was before (Frank) Lorenzo.

Lorenzo's Texas Air Corp. took over Eastern more than two years ago, inheriting some $2.5 billion in debts and a recent history of labor-management conflict.

At the district office of the Machinists union, Eastern's largest with 12,000 mechanics, baggage handlers and ramp workers, union officials keep detailed charts tracing the steady rise of disciplinary measures, particularly firings, since the takeover.

"Our big concern is the unjust terminations. Lorenzo talks about mending fences, but I don't think the word has filtered down to his front-line management, who keep burning bridges," said Rick Iacino, a Machinists general chairman.

Eastern spokesman Robin Matell said Eastern wouldn't comment on the safety agreement announced Wednesday in Washington beyond a statement from President Phil Bakes.

Tot Lot Children Enjoy Fun Format

A fun format with structured activities is one of the appeals of Greenville's Tot Lot program. The summertime program is sponsored by the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department.

Approximately 30 children, ages four and five, were able to attend the first summer programs. Several years ago, the program was expanded to include 120 children on a two-week period, involving 30 youngsters.

Tot Lot activities include playground and outdoor games, arts and crafts activities, story telling, finger painting and songs. Hands-on activities are also included in the preschool program.

Daniels-Williams Vows Said

WINTERVILLE — Amy Cornelia Williams and Charles Bernard Daniels were united in marriage in Good Hope Free Will Baptist Church, Saturday afternoon at 4 p.m. Dr. W.H. Mitchell conducted the double-ring ceremony.

Parents of the bride are Mr. and Mrs. George Williams Sr. of Edenton. Mr. and Mrs. Lendel Daniels of Winterville are parents of the bridegroom.

MRS. DANIELS

The maid and matron of honor were Dr. Lafrance Ferguson of Beaufort and Lena Hines of Winterville. Bridesmaids were Hope Clark of Raleigh, Cynthia Daniels, Sharon Daniels, and Wanda Green, all sister-in-laws of the bride from Winterville, and Karon Williams of Williamston. The junior bridesmaid was Elegra Gatlin, daughter of the bride, of Winterville.

The flower girl was Tameke Daniels of Winterville, niece of the bridegroom.

Lendel Daniels of Winterville served as best man. Ushers were James Cooper of Greenville, Ben Corbett and London Corbett, both of Winterville, and Elmer Corbett of Greenville, all cousins of the bridegroom, Bobbie Green of Winterville, George Williams Jr. of Raleigh, both brother-in-laws of the bridegroom, and Sylvester Cherry of Greenville.

Escorted by her brother, the bride wore a formal gown with a cathedral-length train of traditional white bridal satin, organza and alencon lace. The fitted bodice feature scalloped lace, with embroidered alencon lace with a Queen Anne neckline, and long Victorian sleeves extending to the wrist with lace appliques. Schiffli-embroidered motifs appliques appeared on the front and back of skirt overlay and garlands of scalloped schiffli embroidery bordered the hemline of the gown. Her veil was a pointed-tip wreath with white satin silk flowers, pearls, and tear drops. She carried a nosegay bouquet of silk roses with stephanotis, sequins, pearls, streamers, and baby's breath.

The matron of honor wore a violet taffeta tea-length dress accented by a bodice of scalloped lace with a V back and dropped waistline. She wore in her hair a spray of stephanotis, pearls, and tear drops. The maid of honor wore a dress identical to that of the matron of honor. She wore a hat of violet taffeta accented with white pearls. They carried bouquets of white and lilac roses with stephanotis, streamers, and lace collars.

The bridesmaids' dresses were identical to those of the maid and matrons of honor. Each carried a bouquet of lilac flowers and white streamers.

A reception was held following the ceremony in the church fellowship hall. Shirley Clark was the head hostess.

After a wedding trip, the couple will reside in Greenville.

The bride is employed by East Carolina University Department of Family Medicine and the bridegroom is employed by Grady White Boats.

Community Has Program Which Provides Loans

By MARY JANE LANE
The Lancaster Sunday News

LANCASTER, Pa. (AP) — When Jed Kensinger needed to borrow money for college, he went to his neighbors for help.

It wasn't the first such request.

For the last 30 years, the Manheim Student Loan Association has provided thousands of dollars to Manheim youngsters — without a single default.

Manheim Central High School graduates may borrow up to $875 a year for four years — a total of $3,500. After they leave school, they have five years to repay the loan at 6 percent interest. Currently, 24 students have loans.

Thanks to a recent $25,000 bequest, the association now has assets of $100,000, according to Dennis Denenberg, president of the community group.

"It's the first time we've had any extra money in a long time," he said. "We try to see every dollar in the fund is working for someone's education all the time."

The remaining funds come from community sources, Denenberg said. Some local businesses, organizations and individuals contribute regularly.

At a time when government-supported student loan programs are plagued by deadbeats, the Manheim program flourishes. Denenberg cites two reasons for the association's success.

"We exercise very tight control," he said. "We know where all our students are and how they are doing."

He also credits the attitude the community fosters in its young people.

"The students seem to feel very good about recirculating the money," he said. "They repay their loans quickly, so it can go out again to help someone else."

Requirements for eligibilty are kept as informal as possible. Denenberg said the association looks at a number of factors when considering an applicant: the money needed, financial need and the number of siblings, particularly if they are going to be enrolled in college at the same time.

Denenberg attributes the rising number of applicants in recent years to increasing college costs. And since the loans are offered for renewal every four years, the association has only been able to grant about half the requests in recent years.

"We used to be able to help all the applicants 10 years ago, but now the number has risen to between 15 and 20 every year," he said.

A nine-member board representing the community studies the applications, then votes by secret ballot.

If repayments failed, so would the program. But the association's directors have never been forced to hound their clients.

Just as the requests are considered individually, so are repayment schedules. If a student has a good reason, deferments are granted, Denenberg said. The association has delayed repayment for graduate school and, in one case, for a tour in the Peace Corps.

Denenberg himself is one of the fund's success stories. Both he and his sister borrowed money for college, with Denenberg using his loan to study political science at the College of William and Mary.

The loan allowed him to concentrate on his academics rather than outside work while attending classes, and it paid off. He graduated in 1969 with honors, and was elected to Phi Beta Kappa.

After he earned his bachelor's degree, Denenberg was drawn into education rather than his intended profession of law. He began teaching social studies at his alma mater, Manheim Central.

Firmly hooked, he earned both his master's and doctoral degrees in education at Penn State University.

Today at 40, Denenberg is a respected educator. He's served as an elementary school principal as well as an assistant to the superintendent of the Manheim Township School District. He is currently an assistant professor of elementary education at Millersville University.

And Denenberg has done more than repay his student loan. For the last 12 years he's served as president of the association.

Jeans Are 'In' For College Coeds

By The Associated Press

Bubble skirts are "out" and miniskirts are "in" for college coeds this fall — but blue jeans will retain their popularity on the campus for both sexes, according to a national survey at 25 colleges and universities.

Students taking part in the Roper Organization poll included on their fashion "out" list such items as cut-off shorts, plaid clothing, cowboy boots, floral print blouses, "granny" boots, and cropped shirts.

The survey, sponsored by Levi Strauss & Co., was based on interviews of 1,000 college students asked to predict what clothing and accessories will be fashionable on campus this fall.

Included on the students' fashion "in" list were T-shirts, high top athletic shoes, sweat pants, oversized denim jackets, pleated trousers and oxford shirts.

Top accessory choices included sunglasses, leather belts, backpacks and sport watches. Backpacks were selected by 51 percent of the freshmen but got only 35 percent of the senior vote.

Leather boots appealed to 56 percent of the women but only 17 percent of the men. Penny loafers were popular with 45 percent of the men and 23 percent of the women in the poll.

Also heavily favored by coeds were headbands or hair accessories, and hoop earrings.

Stonewashed jeans were the most popular style of blue jeans, followed in order by old and faded jeans, acid-washed jeans, "torn with holes" jeans and bleached jeans. Men said they wore jeans 60 percent of the time, while women wear them 47 percent of the time.

Called the Levi's 501 Report, the survey has been conducted annually since 1985.

Engagement Announced

Mrs. William A. Ross Jr. of Greenville announces the engagement of her daughter, Sherry Anne, to Warren Christopher Sugg, son of Patricia B. Sugg and Bobby G. Sugg, both of Greenville. The bride-elect is also the daughter of the late Mr. Ross. The wedding is being planned for July 23.

Couple Marries Saturday

MRS. CLEMENT

WILSON — Louise Cheatham Johnson of Wilson and James Edwin Clement Jr. of Greenville were united in marriage Saturday in St. Timothy's Episcopal Church.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Johnson of Wilson. Parents of the bridegroom are Dr. and Mrs. James Edwin Clement of Greenville.

The bride is a graduate of St. Mary's College and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. The bridegroom is a graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and is an account executive at Fickling Insurance Associates in Greenville.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore her mother's chapel- length dress of ivory peau de soie trimmed with alencon lace and seed pearls. She chose a Juliet cap of silk illusion with alencon lace and seed pearls. She carried a nosegay with sweetheart pink roses, Queen Anne's lace, poet's laurel, baby's breath, white brevardia, and stephanotis.

Caroline Pringle Clement of New York, sister of the bridegroom, attended as maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Victoria Clement Garrett of Little Rock, Ark., sister of the bridegroom; Sarah Scott Grine Frantz of Durham, Suiter Whitehead Coxe of Hartsville, S.C., Mary Duke Sanders of Washington, D.C., Harriet Anne Ashby of Wilmington, Mary Hunter Brantley Martin of Raleigh, Sallie Harris Glover of Raleigh, and Eva Carol Smith of Raleigh. The attendants wore pink and yellow floral print tea-length dresses and carried bouquets of golden aster, pink brevardia, daisies, zinnias, Queen Anne's lace, and poet's laurel.

Flower girls were Anne Norman Burzio of Bethesda, M.D., and Brenning Marie Johnston of Statesville, both cousins of the bride.

The father of the bridegroom served his son as best man. Ushers were Stephen Lee Johnson of Rocky Mount, brother of the bride; James Theodore Johnson of Seward, Alaska, brother of the bride; James Bunyan Glover of Raleigh, Patrick Forbes Nash of Washington, D.C., John Robert Belk of Charlotte, Hubert Reid Jones of Raleigh, Ned Dumas Garrett of Little Rock, Ark., brother-in-law of the bridegroom, and Brian Louis Pecheles of Greenville.

Wedding Vows Said Saturday Afternoon

MRS. WOTTON

Katherine Lynn Wallace, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Hackworth of Greenville, and Joel Alton Wotton, son of Mr. and Mrs. R.E. Rice of Greenville and the Rev. Eddie R. Wotton, were united in marriage Saturday at ? p.m.

Ruby Whitehurst was organist for the ceremony.

Robin Barker of Winterville was matron of honor and bridesmaids were Julie Wotton of Greenville, sister-in-law of the bridegroom, and Marilyn Beamon of Winterville, sister of the bridegroom.

The best man was Jerry Barker of Winterville. Ushers were Dan Wotton of Greenville, brother of the bridegroom, and Mac Beamon of Winterville, brother-in-law of the bridegroom.

Troy J. Yates of Durham, grandfather of the bride, gave her in marriage. She wore a formal gown of white crystal organza styled with a princess bodice and a sweetheart neckline adorned with seed pearls and sequins. The dropped waistline was outlined by embroidered schiffli lace and the pouffed sleeves were enhanced with floral appliques and sprays of pearls. The flowing organza skirt and cathedral train featured hand cutouts of lace with ruffles outlining the train. She wore a wreath of silk flowers with seed pearls attached to a two-tier illusion veil. She carried a bouquet of white roses with pink sweetheart rose accents.

The honor attendant wore a formal gown of pink satin and carried a brandy snifter with a white candle and pink, blue and white silk flowers tied with a bow and matching streamers. The other attendants wore formal gowns of blue satin with flowers like those of the honor attendant.

The parents of the bride entertained at a reception in the church fellowship. Mr. and Mrs. Rice entertained at a rehearsal dinner and several bridal showers were held for the couple.

After a wedding trip to the North Carolina mountains, the couple will live near Winterville.

The bride attends Pitt Community College and works at Gandalf's Gifts. The bridegroom is employed by Daniel Daughtry Construction and is a graduate of Pitt Community College.

It's Too Hot To Remember

Temperatures across the nation recently have registered higher than most bank balances. Arizona, where I live, is not called the Shake-n-Bake state for nothing. The other day it hit 116.

As I was commiserating with someone by phone from the East and explaining how at least we were set up to handle heat, the house shuddered and the electricity went off. It was 3:45 in the afternoon. Five hours later, as my body went from a solid to a liquid state, I sat at the phone with my flashlight and dialed the electric company. Five hours of hearing a recording say, "If this is an emergency other than a power outage, please call ..." (What other emergency would there be? I was getting too much electricity? What?)

Finally, a person answered the phone, and I told her I had been without power for five hours. She said in a clipped, professional voice, "What is your account number?"

I know you're going to lose all

At Wits End

respect you ever had for me, but I don't know the account number on my electricity bill. My brain is on overload now from trying to remember all the numbers I'm supposed to remember. Like the first time I rushed one of my kids to the emergency room at the hospital. His lips were blue and he was urinating blue. (I didn't know until later that he had swallowed Melody Blue paint tint.) As I stood there with this crying child in my arms, the receptionist said crisply, "Your Blue Cross number, please."

No number, no treatment. That's the American way.

The importance of numbers became a reality with every day of my life. I remember one day my washer started to jiggle. It moved out of the little space behind the louvered doors in the kitchen, pinned me against the sink and then proceeded to boogie toward the door. I picked up the phone and called the washer repair service. Do you know what the first question was? "What's the serial number of your machine?"

"I have no idea," I said.

"Just look for that little nameplate on the bottom of the washer on the lower right-hand side. You have to turn it over."

Since then, I've committed to memory my Social Security number, my car license, the numbers on the right-hand corner of my catalogs, all sequences of my traveler's checks, my charge cards, my bank passbook number and my sweepstakes number.

It is predicted that if the "greenhouse effect" continues to turn this country into an inferno, by the year 2025, Arizona temperatures could go as high as 127 degrees. Maybe I'll remember my account number by then.

Japanese Students Find

Cultural Differences Vary

By ELLIOTT MINOR
Associated Press Writer

AMERICUS, Ga. (AP) — Japanese students who are spending the summer in south Georgia were amused to find catfish in restaurant menus.

In Japan, the whiskered creatures figure prominantly in legends, but seldom wind up in rice bowls.

"I can't believe you would eat catfish," said Fumiko Kinjo of Tokyo. "In Japan, catfish are believed to cause earthquakes when they move."

Miss Kinjo is among 43 Japanese students taking part in an exchange program arranged by Don Lee, an anthropology professor at Georgia Southwestern College.

Their two-year visit is sponsored by the Hokkaido International Foundation of Japan, a non-pofit group that promotes cultural exchanges between the United States and Japan.

After almost three months of training in Americus, the visitors will teach Japanese to students at 42 colleges and universities in the United States and Canada.

GSW faculty members will teach them about American culture and linquistics, and Eleanor Jorden, a Japanese specialist from Johns Hopkins Universty, will provide specialized language training.

Since the students' arrival on April 13, host families have treated them to a variety of Southern specialties, including fried chicken, barbecue and pecan pie. Their hosts also have spread peanut butter among them.

"It's very tasty, but I'm very worried about my weight," said Miss Kinjo.

Marty Suzuki agreed that the ew diet has caused some students to gain unwanted pounds.

Although he has taught English in Yokohama, Suzuki said he was unprepared for some words and expressions commonly heard around Americus, a town of 16,000 in southwestern Georgia.

Suzuki said the Japanese visitors sometimes feel uncomfortable wearing shoes in homes, they were surprised to find "so many people going to church" and were heartened to discover such widespread interest in their anguage and culture.

Miss Fumiko said she was impressed by American hospitality.

"People are friendly. Since I've been here I've been invited by many people," she added.

In paving the way for the exchange program, Lee arranged for four GSW representatives to take part in a Hokkaido Foundation language program in 1986 and sent 10 more to Japan last year. Besides teaching,he directs the University System of Georgia's Asian Studies Consortium, based on the GSW campus.

In addition to the Hokkaido program, 20 students, including 12 Japanese businessmen, will study English and American culture from May through July as part of the college's Asian studies program.

Candlelight Vows Said On Saturday

GRIFTON — The First Baptist Church was the setting of the candlelight wedding of Mary Angela Lewis and Randy Kane Eubanks, both of Greenville. The Rev. Jerry Angevine conducted the double-ring ceremony.

Parents of the bride are Jerry and Jackie Ayers of Stokes and Raymond and Gerry Eubanks Jr. of Grifton.

The maid of honor was Melody Ricks of Greenville. Bridesmaids were Kim Pope of Greenville and Vanessa Fisher, niece of the bridegroom, of Grifton.

MRS. EUBANKS

Third Class Petty Officer Hubert Lewis, brother of the bride of Groton, Conn. served as best man. Ushers were Ray Eubanks of Winterville and Tony Eubanks of Greenville, both brothers of the bridegroom, and Bernard Dixon of Greenville.

Escorted by her father, the bride wore a formal-length gown of ivory satin. The dress consisted a sweetheart neckline and satin pouf sleeves edged with imported lace seed pearls and sequins. The bodice was accented with a basque waist featured lace appiques with seed pearls and sequins extending into a floor-length A-line skirt. The cathedral-length train was adorned with imported lace appliques. She wore an ivory lace small-brimmed hat with a pouf of illusion extending into a fingertip-length veil. She carried a cascading bouquet of lilies and roses with peacock feathers and greenery.

The bridesmaids wore peach tea-length gowns of taffeta. Each neckline was scooped and the sleeves were poufed and three-quarter length. The basque waist flowed into an A-line skirt. Each attendant carried a bouquet of flowers which featured a lily as the center of the arrangements surrounded by roses and ivy.

A reception was held after the ceremony in the Grifton Rescue Squad Building. Rosemary McLamb presided over the registry. Karen Windle served the cake.

After a wedding trip to the Bahamas, the couple will reside in Greenville.

The bride graduated from North Pitt High School and Pitt Community College. The bridegroom graduated from Ayden-Grifton High School and served three years in the military. Both are employed by Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

Roberson-Tyner Vows Solemnized

Green Springs Park was the setting of the wedding of Pamela Sutton Tyner and Phillip Gene Roberson, both of Greenville. The Rev. Ben James conducted the double-ring ceremony.

Organist Susan Forlines and soloist Lynn Elks Sutton presented music for the ceremony including the songs, "If," "Through the Eyes of Love," and "Always."

Matron of honor was Gladys Williams of Winterville. Bridesmaids were Myrna Byrd, sister of the bride, and Tina Street, niece of the bride, both of Greenville. The flower girl was Ashley Byrd, niece of the bride, also of Greenville.

MRS. ROBERSON

Johnny Sutton, brother of the bride of Greenville, served as best man. Ushers were Wesley Roberson, son of the bridegroom of Greenville, and Eugene Baker of Bear Grass. The ring bearer was Lee Byrd, nephew of the bride, of Greenville.

Given in marriage by her son, Allen Tyner, the bride wore a chapel-length gown of white satin, venise and chantilly lace. The Queen Anne neckline was enhanced with venise lace embroidery. The bodice was decorated with beaded lace medallions and the basque waistline had a V design. The full satin skirt extended into a chapel-length train with pick-up satin bows. The veil fell chapel-length with a chantilly lace edge. She carried a white lace fan with red and white roses.

The matron of honor wore a red satin gown accented with a ruffled neckline and a V waistline. She carried a white lace fan accented with red and white roses. The bridesmaids' dresses and flowers were identical to those of the matron of honor. The flower girl wore a long white satin gown accented with tiny bows.

A reception was held on the park lawn. Cake was served by Loretta Cherry and Leola Cox, sisters of the bride. Punch was poured by Faye McLean, sister of the bride. Sue Morgan, sister of the bride, presided at the register.

After a wedding trip, the couple will reside in Greeenville.

The bride is employed by Prepshirt of Greenville, and the bridegroom is employed by Blount Petroleum of Greenville.

Relationship Lacks Communication

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a 14-year-old female and a freshman in high school. My problem is one that most teen-age girls have — a snoopy mother. She goes through my drawers and reads any letters and notes she finds — then jumps on my case about them. Just today she cleaned out my purse and proceeded to question me about every little thing in it.

Some people might say that I keep too much from her, but that isn't true. I tell her almost everything about my life.

I have considered investing in a small, inexpensive safe. Would this be too drastic? Any answer will be appreciated. — NO PRIVACY IN ILLINOIS

DEAR NO PRIVACY: Forget the safe — unless you want a safecracker for a mother. Like all people who snoop, your mother is trying to find out more about your than you have told her, which means that something is missing from your relationship: communication and trust. I hope for both your sakes you address this very important issue soon. It's as important for a teen-ager to be able to trust her mother as it is for a mother to be able to trust her daughter.

DEAR ABBY: You once ran a tongue-in-cheek piece stating that anyone who thinks women have equal rights in this country is crazy. Please give it another go. — ROSEMARY AND PEACHES

DEAR R. AND P.: Your wish is my command.

Anybody who thinks women have equal rights in this country is crazy.

If a man's trousers are too tight, he's just put on a little weight. If a woman's skirt is too tight, she's trying to be sexy.

If a man stands on a street corner, he's getting some fresh air. If a woman stands on a street corner, she's looking to be picked up.

If a man has one drink too many, he's "feeling good." If a woman has one drink too many, she's a lush.

If a man has a night out with the boys, he's put in a hard day's work and needs to "relax." If a woman has a night out with the girls, she's up to no good and should stay home with her family.

If a man cheats on his wife, people say he's probably married to a cold fish and he's only human. If a woman cheats, she's a tramp.

If a kid turns out good, she's a chip off the old block. If he turns out bad, his mother did a rotten job of raising him.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I were out last evening celebrating our wedding anniversary. Well, one thing led to another, and I asked him if I was the first girl he proposed marriage to. He became upset, clammed up and refused to answer.

I didn't ask him with any bad intentions — the conversation just flowed in that direction.

My question: Was that a bad thing to ask the man you've been married to for several years? My attitude is, what's the difference at this point? I don't know any of his former girlfriends.

Maybe you could throw this one out to the married men who read your column. — BUFFALOED IN BOSTON

DEAR BUFFALOED: "Was this a bad thing to ask?" It wasn't a good one. Why remind him of past experiences that might have been embarrassing, regrettable or possibly painful? Leave the past in the past. What was, was.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I received a graduation announcement from "Jennifer," the daughter of a man who works for the same company my husband works for. They live in another state, we have never met the girl, and my husband and her father are not close friends. We saw no reason to send this girl a gift, but we did send a very nice card.

Today, we received an acknowledgment from Jennifer. Inside the envelope was the card we had sent her, folded to fit the small envelope. Her message was: "Thank you so much for the nice card for my graduation. I thought maybe you would like to use the card again. (Signed) Jennifer."

Abby, I never knew it was mandatory to send a gift when one receives an announcement. We send graduation gifts to all our relatives and friends we know well. Were we wrong to send only a card? I am now thinking that perhaps she could have used a book on etiquette. Please comment. — BEWILDERED IN NEWARK

DEAR BEWILDERED: An announcement is not a bill. Under the circumstances, you were under no obligation to send a gift. I doubt that an etiquette book would help. What Jennifer could really use is a good spanking.

Wedding Vows Said Saturday

NEW BERN — Kimberly Ruth Hargett and James Edward Reaves were united in marriage Saturday at 3 p.m. in Rhems Methodist Church. The Rev. Lynn T. Wall conducted the double-ring ceremony.

Parents of the bride are Mr. and Mrs. Charles Allen Hargett of Greenville. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Lloyd Reaves of Oklahoma City are parents of the bridegroom.

Pianist and soloist Doug Jervey presented music for the ceremony.

Deanne M. Calisto and Vicki P. Bissette, were the maid and matron of honor. Honorary bridesmaids included Kay Fisher Moore of Winterville and Sarah Hayes of Burlington. Other bridesmaids were Eugenia Williford of Everetts and Louise Williford of Raleigh. Mrs. W. Bradley Gray of Greenville directed the wedding.

James Coltrain of New Bern and Corey Cameron of Cherry Point served as best men. Ushers were Vincent Smith, Darrell Lawson, and Richard Knapp, all of Cherry Point, and William Preddy and Frankie Bissette, both of Greenville. The ring bearer was David Bissette of Greenville.

Escorted by her father, the bride wore a formal gown of white satin with Venise lace appliques embroidered with sequins and seed pearls. The basque bodice featured a Queen Anne neckline with French puffed sleeves and a keyhole back with pearl-strand closings. The full skirt was topped with a rosebud-bow bustle which flowed into a sheer, petal embroidered, Palais Royale train. The bride's bandeau cap was created by her mother and consisted of silk rose petals, sequins and pearl sprays. She carried a bouquet of cascading silk roses, freesia, and stephanotis, accented with pearl sprays and trailing ribbons.

The maid and matron of honor wore tea-length gowns of royal blue satin featuring a basque bodice with a sweetheart neckline and off-the-shoulder French puffed sleeves accented with shirring which ended in a side bow. They carried bouquets of silk tea roses, yellow mini-carnations, and white daisies accented with baby's breath and ribbons.

The bridesmaids wore gowns and carried bouquets identical to those of the maid and matron of honor. Honorary bridesmaids wore royal blue silk dresses and corsages of pink mini-carnations, white carnations and daisies, baby's breath and bows.

Mrs. Charles A. Hargett, mother of the bride, wore a dress of her own creation, a formal gown of powder blue Chantilly lace over powder blue silk. Mother of the groom, Mrs. Roberts L. Reaves, wore a silver gray tea-length dress in a rose weave pattern. Each was presented with a wrist corsage of white tea roses, blue delphinium, baby's breath and white ribbons.

MRS. REAVES

Following the ceremony, the parents of the bride entertained at a reception at the Sheraton Hotel and Marina in New Bern. Assisting in serving was Nancy Caprara of Vanceboro.

Pre-nuptial parties included a floating bridal shower, a bridal luncheon, a pig-picking, and a rehearsal cake-cutting.

After a wedding trip to Oklahoma, the couple will reside in Havelock.

The bride graduated from J.H. Rose High School and Pitt Community College and the bridegroom graduated from Oklahoma City High School. The bride is the assistant manager of Record Bar in New Bern and the bridegroom is a member of the United States Marine Corps in Cherry Point.

Double-Ring Vows Performed

Parkers Chapel Free Will Baptist Church was the scene of the wedding Saturday at 2 p.m. of Kimberli Ann James and James Lee Dail.

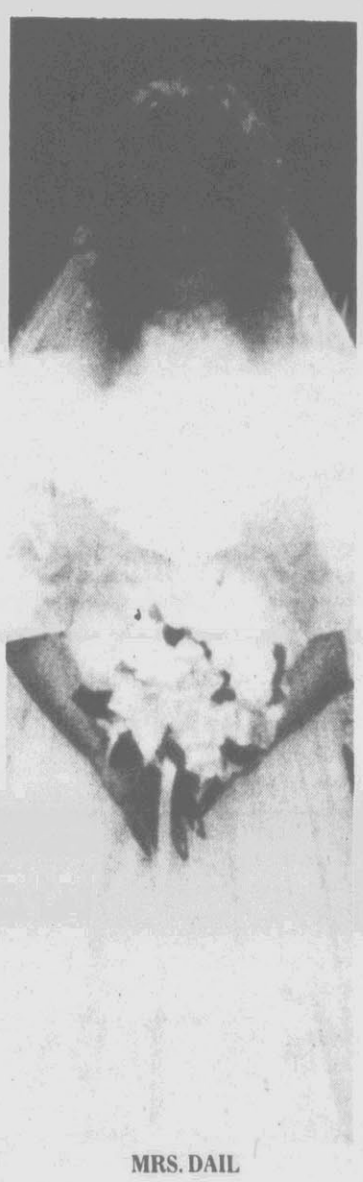
The double-ring ceremony was conducted by the Rev. Larry Stevens.

Mr. and Mrs. John R. James and Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy R. Dail, all of Greenville, are parents of the couple.

The Rev. Donnie Miles was organist for the ceremony. Mike James and the Rev. Miles were vocalists.

Rebecca James of Greenville was matron of honor for her niece. Sherri Smith of Tarboro, cousin of the bride, and Mary Jo Joyner of Greenville were bridesmaids.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers were Joseph Dail, brother of the bridegroom, Steven James, brother of the bride, and Billy Stancill, all of Greenville, and Stuart Fleming of Winterville.



MRS. DAIL

The bride is a graduate of Mt. Calvary Christian Academy in Hookerton and is employed by Saslow's Jewelers. The bridegroom, a graduate of J.H. Rose High School, is employed by Cox Armature Works.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of white satin and lace. Schiffli embroidery trimmed the stand-up collar with chantilly lace accenting the bodice front. Venise lace trimmed the waist and puffled ruffled sleeves. The full skirt was styled with tiers of chantilly lace and satin bows and extended into a chapel-length train. She wore a fingertip veil of illusion edged in a double-row of lace attached to a Juliet cap overlaid in lace with pearls. She carried a trailing cascade of white roses, miniature silk roses intertwined with satin lace.

Each of the attendants wore a formal-length gown of pink satin. The bodice was overlaid with lace extending into a basque waistline. The back of the full skirt was ruffled and accented with lace inserts and bows. Each carried a nosegay of pink silk roses with pearl inserts.

After a wedding trip to Virginia, the couple will live near Greenville.

A reception was given by the parents of the bride in the church fellowship hall. Lee Ann Corbett passed out rice bags and Tammy Bunting passed out scrolls. Marie Corbett poured punch and Ernestine Roebuck served cake. Goodbyes were said by Mr. and Mrs. Steve Dail.

A rehearsal dinner was given by the bridegroom's parents in the church fellowship hall. Several showers honored the couple prior to the wedding.

Piano Teaching Is Becoming A Career

DALLAS (AP) — The computer field has been considered a hot career market. But more and more young men and women are opting to make their living with a different kind of keyboard — the piano — the National Piano Foundation (NPF) headquartered in Dallas reports.

"The perception of piano teaching as being a part-time activity or hobby has definitely changed," says Ruth Chown, a private piano teacher from Escanaba, Mich., who has helped her community become nationally acclaimed for its quality keyboard instruction.

According to Chown, old perceptions about private piano instruction have changed, in large part because of the availability of specialized training for piano teachers.

"Until recently, training in the art of private teaching was unavailable," she says. "Teachers had to learn by trial and error over years of experience. Today, piano teaching has been infused with a new sense of professionalism. Now teachers can get professional pedagogy training at colleges and universities at both the undergraduate and graduate levels."

To better prepare music majors for full-time careers in private piano teaching, more colleges and university music departments are offering piano pedagogy courses than ever before, the foundation says.

Between 1980 and 1982, the number of American colleges offering these degrees increased from four to 22, and the numbers continue to grow, according to statistics gathered by the NPF.

Piano teacher Patricia Taylor Lee, author of several NPF educational brochures, notes that piano teaching methods have changed radically from the days of repetitive finger exercises and rote memorizaton.

"Teachers now recognize that piano playing technique can be acquired as easily through the study of carefully selected pieces as through the repetition of exercises," she says. "Today, there is more emphasis on playing as a musical, rather than mechanical, experience. That emphasis makes piano lessons more rewarding for both the teacher and the student."

Besides being fun, piano teaching can also be profitable. A recent survey conducted during a national piano pedagogy teleconference revealed that the average yearly income for a part-time teacher (teaching 14 hours per week, 38 weeks per year — 26 percent of a typical work year) was $6,700. Therefore, a full-time teaching career can produce earnings of more than $20,000 annually.

Piano students have responded to the new professionalism in today's piano teachers, as well. Julia Amada-Adams, vice president of the National Guild of Piano Teachers, one of several U.S. music organizations offering piano pedagogy certification, reports more and more students are selecting teachers based on their qualifications.

"With all the other activities that compete for people's time, the old criteria for choosing a teacher — such as proximity and cost — have become less important," she says. "As a result, standardized certification has become more important. Certification helps teachers to present their credentials and allows students to better evaluate them."

Mushrooms, Economic Mainstay Of A Depressed Community

EDITOR'S NOTE — In a depressed area of western Pennsylvania, where the unemployment rate is double the national average, the mushroom has become the mainstay of the economy. Picking mushrooms is back-breaking work, and some days the pickers never see daylight, but most are grateful just to have a job.

By CATHERINE DRESSLER
Associated Press Writer

WORTHINGTON, Pa. (AP) — The search for jobs often ends underground in this small western Pennsylvania town, where workers who once manned assembly lines now pick mushrooms in the dark caverns of a limestone mine.

"At least we have one industry left in our area that pays a half-decent wage," says Ray Denny, 50, of nearby Fenelton. "It pays enough that we can get by on."

With more than 970 workers, the Moonlight Mushrooms Inc. mine is the largest private employer in Armstrong County, about 50 miles northeast of Pittsburgh, where the continuing shutdown of steel mills and factories has hit hard. The county unemployment rate was 11.4 percent in February, double the nation's jobless rate of 5.7 percent that month.

"Any time there's any opening in this area that pays $5 or more, that employer almost always is overwhelmed by the number of people applying," says Terri Kinney, a supervisor at the state unemployment office in nearby Kittanning.

The mushroom mine, once one of several big employers in the area, has become the mainstay.

Major shareholders, members of founder John Yoder's family, said in April they wanted to sell the mine and Moonlight in early June announced it had agreed to sell out to a New York holding company, Prospect Group Corp.

If the sale goes through, "There not going to be any disruption in the way the business is being run," says Fred Bennitt, Moonlight's group manager of administration.

In the mid-1980s, cheap mushrooms from China, Taiwan, Korea and Europe dried up much of the processed mushroom market — those with an imperfect appearance used in soups, gravies and other processed foods.

That forced many American mushroom farmers to adjust their crops for the more competitive fresh market: the large, white unblemished variety found in grocery stores.

"The price of mushrooms hasn't gone up much in the past 10 years, and we're trying to maintain our people with higher production and maintenance costs," says Francis "Chug" Giesler, Moonlight's materials purchasing manager.

Through research, Moonlight has developed more efficient ways to grow mushrooms, and sales of $40 million were reported in fiscal year 1987, Bennitt says.

The mine's 525 pickers make $7.15 an hour plus bonuses for harvesting more than 30 pounds an hour. The average worker picks 62 pounds an hour and gets a bonus of $1 per hour, says Nancy Lahmers, Moonlight's human resources manager.

"There's nothing in the community that's as good," Denny says. "You can leave and take a minimum wage job, but that's about all you can get."

Denny, a Moonlight employee for 31 years, directs a crew of 15 pickers as it moves through the labyrinth of rocky corridors big enough for a fire truck to pass through.

In the mine, as much as 380 feet underground, conditions are perfect for mushrooms year-round; it's always damp and about 60 degrees. Mushrooms require no sunshine. Large cavernous growing areas, a small portion of the 150 miles of tunnel, are lit only by small white lights on the pickers' hats, tools of the trade, along with rubber gloves and small knives.

Mushrooms grow so fast they double in size in a day, so picking starts at 7 a.m. every day and continues "until the work is done," seven to 10 hours later, Ms. Lahmers says.

"There's days you don't even get to see daylight at all," says picker Randy Zema, 29, of Fenelton. "You go down in the dark and come up in the dark."

Mushrooms are grown in rich compost in large wooden trays placed on tables, with one tray at ankle level, another about waist level. Workers water the crops with long hoses.

As Zema works, his hands move quickly, slicing stems, grabbing and dropping top-quality mushrooms into one basket and imperfect ones into another.

The large white mushrooms gleam like pearls when light strikes them. Good mushrooms are soft and "nice picking," but bad ones are tough and "hard to grab hold of," Zema says.

"It's tiresome work," says Tom Parisi, 34, of Templeton. "It's hard on your legs and you're bending all day. You stoop a lot."

Workers don't talk much while they pick, and soft music piped in around growing areas penetrates the stillness.

Pickers ride to and from the mine in electric carts and head for a brightly lit oasis to eat, an underground lunchroom with vending machines.

Many pickers have a spouse, parent or child working beside them. Zema's grandfather began working at the mine in 1937 and his mother has worked her way from picker to assistant manager.

Zema and Parisi had worked in nearby Butler at the Pullman Standard box car plant, which closed in 1982, idling 2,800 workers.

"I made a few dollars more in there than what I am now," says Zema, who painted railroad cars for Pullman. "I miss the whole job, period."

Like many pickers, Marge Lasher, 34, of Ford City says competition from foreign imports led to the demise of her former job. She was laid off from her assembly-line job at a garment factory.

In July 1985, the mushroom company closed its nearby 200-acre West Winfield mine, where it began operations a half-century ago. The 250 workers who were laid off eventually were hired at the current mine, bought in 1961 after being abandoned by USX Corp., Ms. Lahmers said.

School Merger

LUMBERTON, N.C. (AP) — The Robeson County school board will have about one year to put together a unified school system from the five current systems, which include Lumberton, Red Springs, Fairmont, St. Pauls and Robeson County, officials said.

John Barker, chairman of the 15-member interim board, said the county has been notified of the merger's approval by the U.S. Justice Department.

The merger was approved by Robeson County voters March 8. The Justice Department's ruling was the last step in the approval process, Barker said. He said the interim board will be sworn in and hold its first meeting Monday in Lumberton.

Diet Pills Sweeping U.S.

Doctors Invent 'Lazy Way' to Lose Weight

New 'Fat-Magnet' Diet Pill Gives You Steady Fat Loss

BEVERLY HILLS, CA (Special)— An amazing new weight loss pill called "fat-magnet" has recently been developed and perfected by two prominent doctors at a world famous hospital in Los Angeles that reportedly "guarantees" to help you steadily lose fat by simply taking their tested and proven new pill.

You Can "Eat Normally"

Best of all, "you can continue to eat all of your favorite foods as long as you don't increase your normal eating habits. You can start losing fat from the very first day, until you achieve the ideal weight you desire."

It is a totally new major scientifc breakthrough for weight loss (worldwide patents pending).

Flushes Fat Out of Body

The new pill is appropriately called the "fat-magnet" pill because it breaks into thousands of particles, each acting like a tiny magnet, "attracting" and trapping many times its size in undigested fat particles from food that you have just eaten. Then, the trapped fat is naturally "flushed" right out of your body.

Within 2 days you should notice a change in the color of your stool, caused by the fat particles being eliminated.

"Pills Go To Work"

The fat-magnet pills alone, "automatically" help reduce calories by eliminating dietary fat, with no exercising. You simply take the pills with a glass of water before meals. However, you can lose weight "faster" if you choose to follow the fat-magnet diet plan along with the pills.

The fat-magnet pills are already sweeping the country with record sales and glowing reports of weight loss. It's a "lazy way" to lose weight for people who enjoy eating.

Now Available to Public

If you need to lose a large or small amount of weight, you can order your supply of these new highly successful fat-magnet pills and diet plan (now available from the doctor's exclusive manufacturer by mail or phone order only) by sending $20 for a 90 pill supply (+$2 handling), or $35 for a 180 pill supply (+$3 handling), cash, check or money order to: Fat-Magnet, 9016 Wilshire Blvd., Dept. W634, Beverly Hills, CA 90211. (Unconditional money-back guarantee if not 100% satisfied.) Visa, MasterCard and American Express OK. (Send card number, expire date, and signature.) For fastest service for credit card orders ONLY call anytime 24 hours, toll free 1(800)527-9700, ext. W634. ©F-M 1988

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

HELP IN PLACING FURNITURE

You might want to clip this column out, and keep it around for handy reference when you're arranging furniture. The figures used here are generally recommended in the furniture industry.

It's usually wise to allow at least 3 feet for traffic lanes in a room. In other words, in those areas of a room where people generally walk within a room, or from one room to another, don't put any two pieces of furniture closer than 3 feet to each other.

On the other hand, where you want to make a conversation grouping, try to keep the farthest reaches of that grouping no more than 8 feet away. If seating pieces are farther away from each other than 8 feet, people have a hard time communicating easily.

For a cocktail table in front of a sofa, try to leave about 16 inches between them. Any further, and it's too long a reach while any closer and it's too hard to get in and out of the sofa.

In dining rooms, the rule of thumb is to leave about 54 inches between a chair and wall so there's room for seating and serving.

In a bedroom, most experts recommend putting the bed, if at all possible, on the wall away from the door so you don't have to walk around the bed every time you enter the bedroom.

Any time you need help or suggestions, stop in and see us. You will also enjoy seeing our fine selection of quality furnishings.

Writer Discusses Stylistic Tricks Of The Home Decorating Trade

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

The adage that truth is stranger than fiction certainly applies to the world of home decorating magazines, says Virginia Carry.

The former home furnishings magazine editor and stylist resorted to fiction to tell the truth about stylistic tricks of the trade known to every decorating editor worth his or her salt.

In the course of the story, Carry reveals how stylists fool the camera — and the reader. Some tricks she doesn't use in her book but says are common in real life include slipcovering a sofa on only the side that will be photographed, stapling or taping dust ruffles on and doing creative reupholstery with carefully knotted scarves.

She would often fill a basket with crumpled newspaper before adding pine cones or yarn for a Christmas shot, she said. Another favorite ploy was creating libraries of the classics with tattered second-hand books by covering them with marbleized paper.

"What you see in magazine pictures is often an illusion," said Carry. The reasons for the subterfuge, she added, are hardly sinister. It's simply that "a room that may look fine in real life almost always has to be rearranged for photography."

That explains why — once the flowers, accessories and rented props have been placed in the room to create the right look — the effect in real life is often too cluttered.

Carry, a history major at Duke University, got into the decorating magazine field by chance after college but she discovered she had a knack for it.

She made the switch from magazines and public relations writing and editing and styling rooms for photography to fiction as a result of joining a writing group.

One assignment was to write a beginning for a novel. After she read her work, fellow members of the group kept asking her what happened next to the characters she created. So she wrote more of their adventures. It took her three years to get the book into print — two years to complete it. But in the course of her effort she says she learned how to write fiction.

While some of the decorating tricks she details might be considered "dirty tricks," most of them can be employed by anybody to make a home look more attractive. Take the scarf caper — you can enhance a room by placing each one of a bunch of throw cushions diagonally on a large scarf, folding the corners of the scarf into the center and tying them in a knot.

Another effective idea is to mass inexpensive accessories from flea markets and junk shops — she favors white candlesticks — on a table or shelf.

Her own old-fashioned, three-bedroom Manhattan apartment home has been photographed for a number of national magazines.

Some storage ideas she developed for the home, which accommodates Carry, her husband and two school-age children were the basis of her first book, "Double Duty Decorating."

As a decorating writer she says she is in favor of fads. "I wouldn't spend a lot of money on them, but they do add spice to a home." In her apartment, for example, a neoclassical pedestal now stands. "I bought the pedestal for $75 and when neoclassical goes out, it will go too."

— Layer oriental rugs — small rugs on top of larger ones — to cover holes or worn spots. The look is rich and luxurious.

— Paint a "rug" on the floor — even the fringe. Cover your handiwork when it begins to fade or you tire of it with a real rug or just paint another.

— Too many skinny table legs spoil the picture and the room. Drape tables or fill in space beneath with a footstool piled with coffee table books or a basket of dried flowers (you can use the newspaper trick to eke out the display).

On The House

By ANDY LANG

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

When we do any remodeling in and around our house, the preferences we make regarding the kinds of material and the manner of construction usually are a compromise between our wishes and our budget.

Refinishing an attic to add living space to a house falls into this compromise category. To guide us properly in our choices, there are two things that must be done before we cut or hammer anything. One is check the local building codes to determine what can and cannot be done, since an unfinished attic becomes the business of the community when it is to be lived in rather than used for storage. The other is to check wherever you can (the homes of friends and relatives and dealer displays) to see what is available and how much it costs. While you can do most of the work yourself, most building codes specify that the electricity and plumbing be done only by licensed professionals.

There was a time when 2-by-4 studs had to be spaced 16 inches apart on center, but now you usually can get by with 2-by-3s either 16 or 24 inches apart on center. That's a time and money saver. Incidentally, "on center" means the distance between the center of one stud to the center of the next, which is not the same as the distance between the studs. And a 2-by-3 actually is 1½ by 2½, the 2 by 3 being the measurements before the wood is planed and made ready for the market.

Anything can be used for the walls and ceiling that is used elsewhere in the house, but the big selier is gypsum board because it usually is cheaper. Like plywood, hardboard and the other materials, gypsum board is available with decorative finishes as well as solid white. It's a kind of gypsum plaster sandwiched between tough paper.

Attic ceilings usually are 8 feet. You can make them any height you wish merely by where you nail 2-by-4s to the rafters, but the collar beams or joists must be at least 2 feet below the highest point of the roof. All of this planning, including the location of closets, builts-ins, etc., should be laid out on paper. It makes no difference how rough your sketches are as long as they can be understood. This is a sure way to avoid unnecessary cutting, which is inevitable if you haven't worked out everything ahead of time.

Let your plumber and electrician decide at which point during the construction they will do their work. Most of the time it is after the framework has been installed but before the walls are put up. Sometimes the plumber will want to get his job done before anything else. Try to get commitments from these workers, otherwise you may find yourself stalled for days or weeks awaiting their arrival.

The finished floor usually is left for last, but it depends on what kind of floor already is there. If the attic has nothing but a few walk-on boards, it will be necessary to put down a subfloor. Later, when everything else is done, you can lay the resilient floor tiles or whatever you are using. If you install the finished floor some time during the construction, it is likely to get damaged.

No matter what the climate of the area in which you live, you will need insulation in the attic.

(You can get a copy of Andy Lang's booklet, "Insulating an Attic," which can be obtained by sending 75 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P. O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743.)

Ventilation above the attic insulation is important. This can be provided with vents so that air can flow in and out of them. Vents at the eaves and gable ends will do an excellent job, but even better is a combination of eave vents and continuous ridge venting. This is not always practical when you get around to attic remodeling, but bear in mind you will save yourself a lot of condensation and mildew headaches if you make sure there is a continuous flow of air under the attic roof.

Garden Clinic

Q. How fast does kudzu gros?

A. Kudzu can grow as much as one foot per day. The length it grows in one season will depend on the weather, soil, water, length of the season and other factors.

Q. Can summer pruning of peach trees substitute for winter pruning?

A. Summer pruning of peach trees is not meant to substitute for winter pruning but to supplement it. Summer pruning should primarily be used to increase light penetration into the interior fruiting zone of the tree. The amount of wood removal depends on the vigor and age of the trees. Summer pruning can be used for tree height reduction, water sprout removal and wood removal in the center portion of the tree. If too many large cuts are made, vigorous, unfruitful regrowth may occur. If too much wood is removed in the center of the tree, sunscald may be a problem. Sunscald causes bark splitting, which in turns wweakens the trees and increases the incidence of diseases such as bacterial canker. Damaged trees or trees stressed by diseases or insects are less winter-hardy. Overpruning a peach tree in either summer or winter will lower its productivity.

Q. Our parents will be celebrating their 25th wedding anniversary soon. They are gardening nuts. What are some silver plants we can give them?

A. Carolina silverbell (Hale... carolina) is a native, small tree that would be an excellent gift for any occasion. There may be times when the flowers glisten silver, but they are actually white. Dusty miller is a favorite silver-leaved plant. With varieties named 'Silver Lace,' 'Siver Dust' and 'Silver Queen' and 'Silver King.' Lamb's ear (Stachys byzantina) not only provides attractive silver foliage to look at throughout the year, its soft leaves are a delight to touch as well. Verbascum bombyciferum 'Siver Lining' is a striking plant whose tall flowering stalk can look like a silver candlelabrum lighted with yellow flowers. The huge leaves of silver sage (Salvia argentea) will draw comments in almost any garden. The grass-leaved golden aster (Heterotheca graminifolia) has leaves that are silky with silver. Certain species of sea holly (They are not true hollies, but members of the genus Eryngium. The "holly" comes from their prickly appearance.) have an almost metallic cast of silvery gray or blue. Other silver-leaved pear (Pyrus salicifolia), snow-in-summer (Cerastium tomentosum), deadnettle (Lamium maculatum), several yarrows (Achillea spp.), silver horehound (Marrubium incanum), rose campion (Lychnis coronaria), and several lavenders (Lavandula spp.). Painted arum (Arum italicum 'Pictum') and Lamistruin galeabdolon 'Herman's Pride' have leaves mottled or spotted with silver. There are many other silver possibilities. Contact your local garden center for more suggestions. Happy Anniversary!

Here's The Answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — We have an old dining room table badly in need of refinishing. I assume the old varnish may have to be removed with a commercial remover, but can you tell me how to refinish the table without taking this step. I intend to use lacquer as the final coat.

A. — If the old varnish is in bad shape, you must remove the old finish. Sometimes varnish can be applied over varnish, but the surface must be in fairly good condition in order to do it that way. And, whatever you do, do not apply lacquer over the varnish. It will wrinkle it up, since the lacquer thinner acts as a sort of varnish remover.

Q. — I have to have some work done in our basement and the contractor wants to put in copper tubing for the water supply. He says it is strong and has many advantages. What are its disadvantages? He says there are none.

A. — He is right. It has many advantages. The main disadvantage from your standpoint is it is fairly expensive.

Q. — We rarely use our attached garage and are contemplating converting it into living quarters. Is this a good idea?

A. — Generally, yes. You have less trouble with code regulations and permits since the building is already in place. Converting a garage usually costs less than adding extra space onto your house. That's also true for the installation of heating and cooling equipment. The main thing is to be sure the garage is in sound condition.

Q. — I have stripped the old finish from a bedroom bureau, but find traces of color still in the wood. Is it better to sand it off or use a bleach and, if so, what kind?

A. — Sanding is all right if the color comes out when you work over the surface very lightly. If not, bleaching is in order. Use the kind of commercial bleach that comes in two containers, although some woods can be lightened with ordinary household bleach. No matter which kind you use, be very careful. Most especially, provide plenty of ventilation, as bleaches give off toxic fumes.

Q. — Is polyurethane varnish synthetic and is it all right to use it on fine furniture?

A. — Yes, it is synthetic (actually, a plastic) and it can be used on any kind of furniture. There are several brands that differ slightly so follow the manufacturer's instructions on the proper use of it.

(The techniques of using varnish, shellac, lacquer, bleach, stain, remover, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending 75 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column.)

Rental Car Coverages

By CHANGING TIMES
The Kiplinger Magazine

It's bad enough the collision damage waiver (CDW), which auto-rental companies twist your arm to buy, costs too much. What's worse is companies can still hold you up even if you don't take the coverage.

No matter what the rental-car agent says, you probably don't need CDW. Companies typically charge $9 or $10 a day for it, to pay for damage to the car if you're in an accident. But it has been estimated auto insurers could provide the same protection for $3 a year. In fact, at least 60 percent of all private auto insurance policies do insure policyholders when they rent a car.

To be sure, Changing Times suggests you check with your insurance agent before you arrange a rental. Also, certain premium credit cards — American Express's gold and platinum cards, for example — provide you with CDW automatically when you use the card to rent a car.

Even with your own coverage you're not home free. In case of an accident, the car-rental company may slap a repair charge estimate on your credit card bill and leave you to settle up with your insurer. That could take a while, especially if the car is then driven to another location or fixed before your agent can inspect the damage. Once the claim is settled, you could still end up paying out-of-pocket charges if the rental company tacks on extra fees your insurer doesn't pay. One example: loss-of-use charges for the time during which the car is out of commission.

Help may be on the way in the form of proposed state legislation. The National Association of Insurance Commissioners wants state laws that would require rental companies to provide CDW automatically and include it in their advertised rates.

Official Couch Potato

SANTA ROSA, Calif. (AP) — A man who calls himself "the fastest remote control in the West" will spend two weeks doing what he does best, which is very little.

John Silveira, 24, a print-shop employee and aficionado of old movies, was selected the Sonoma County Fair's official Couch Potato.

Each day of the fair, which starts July 25, he will lounge in a specially built booth, reclining on a couch, reading or watching TV 10 hours a day, eating whatever junk food he desires, and talking with fairgoers.

For this, he will be paid $1,000.

"The trick is to move around a lot" on the couch he said in an interview with the Santa Rosa Press Democrat. "Sometimes you lie on your back and watch the TV upside down. If you always watch from the same position, you get bedsores."

Silveira of Santa Rosa out-loafed 12 other couch potato competitors, including 64-year-old Thomas Bonesteel, who said he literally lives on the couch in his tiny apartment.

"The only piece of furniture in the whole place is my couch," said Bonesteel, who claimed to watch TV "about 15 hours a day, my choice."

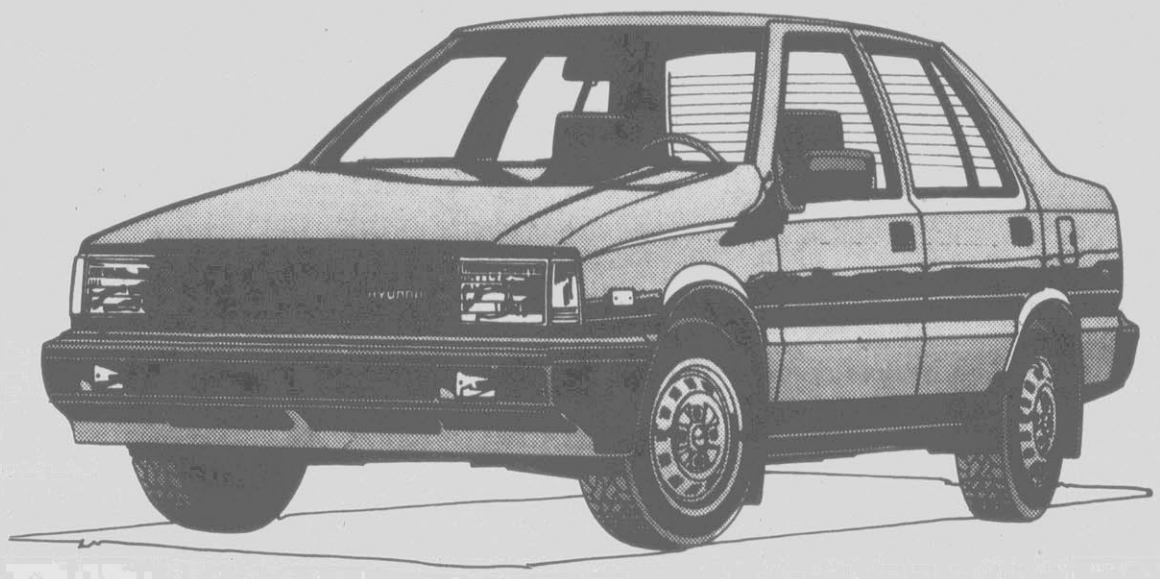
No Comparison.



When you look for a new car, price is important. What you get for that price is even more important. At Leith Hyundai, we have something for you to consider: the Hyundai Excel.

Before you buy a new Ford Escort, Chevy Spectrum, Toyota Corolla, or Nissan Sentra—before you buy anything—come see the Hyundai Excel. When you compare the standard features of the Excel with any other car in its class, you'll find there are no other cars in its class. The Hyundai has more standard features at a lower price than any car in America.

1988 Hyundai Excel GL #HY2272

All the Excel models feature 5 all-season, steel-belted radial tires, front-wheel drive, room for 5, full carpeting, electric rear window defroster, and 65 more standards. This luxurious 4-door sedan also includes air conditioning, 5-speed transmission, and a sunroof.

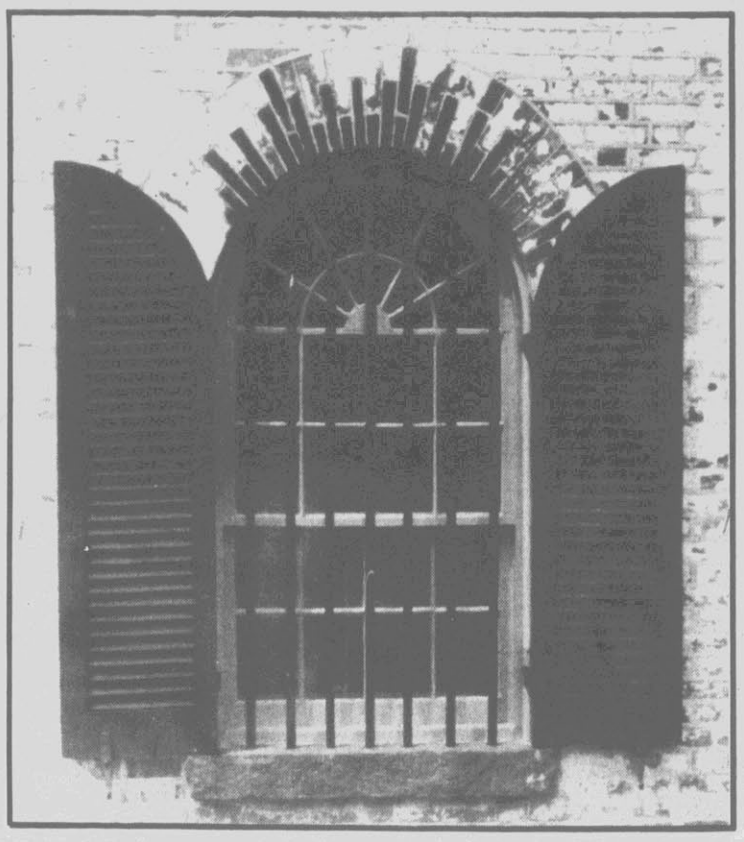
THE LURE OF THE SEASIDE — Young children seemingly never run out of energy when they are taken for an outing to a beach. Here, three members of the Johnnie Vendrick family of Arapahoe dig in the sand, playing imaginative games that children play. Frequently, they interrupted their sand games to dash into the water for awhile before returning to their spot in the sand.



A BARRED WINDOW — Fort Macon still has a number of windows with sturdy iron bars embedded in granite sills and enclosed by shutters. Many visitors comment on the beauty of the arched windows, the heavy square entrance doors and the tremendous number of bricks used in constructing the fort.

Fort Macon State Park Encompasses An Underground Historic Fort, Nature Trails And A Public Beach

A Favorite Visitation Site On The Coast Of North Carolina

From Greenville, a trip of about 85 miles using the shortest route and a little more on a slightly longer route via a river ferry, takes a visitor to one of the most interesting sites on North Carolina's varied coastline of sightseeing adventures.

The place is Fort Macon State Park, south of Beaufort and Morehead City and a short distance east of Atlantic Beach. Quite often, visitors to the Beaufort-Morehead City-Atlantic Beach complex run out of steam or else do not realize the enticements of the end of the island fort and park at Fort Macon.

The Fort Macon Park site has dual enducements — one historic, the other seashore attractions on an ample scale without commercial clutter.

The Fort

Early in North Carolina's history, in the days of the small sailing vessel, the region around Beaufort was vulnerable to attack from the sea. Blackbeard and other pirates passed through Old Topsail Inlet (now Beaufort Inlet) in their quest for booty.

In 1747, the Spanish captured Beaufort and held it for several days before being driven out. A year later, the General Assembly appropriated 6,000 pounds to construct four forts, one to be near Old Topsail Inlet. This fort, begun in 1756, was never completed, which meant the Beaufort harbor was left defenseless. It remained that way for more than 50 years, until 1808 when Fort Hampton, a small stone fort, was built near the site of the present fort. The power of the sea was that fort's enemy, sweeping it into the widening channel in the early 1820s.

The present fort, begun in 1826, was completed and garrisoned in 1834. It derived its name from Nathaniel Macon, a U.S. senator from North Carolina who was instrumental in getting funds authorized for the fort.

In 1861, Fort Macon was seized from the federal government by North Carolina, and on April 25, 1862 it was heavily bombarded by Union forces. The next day it surrendered.

When Fort Macon fell to the Yankees, federal forces used it as a coaling station for Union ships. The fort was closed as a garrisoned station in April, 1877.

It was again garrisoned from June to September, 1898, during the Spanish-American War. By that time, only four guns remained mounted at the fort. Two of these are 10-inch mortars now on the parade ground.

After 1900, Fort Macon was completely abandoned until Congress gave the property to North Carolina. It has been a state park since then, except from 1941 to 1946, when troops were stationed there during World War II.

Built roughly in the shape of a pentagon, Fort Macon is interesting architecturally as well as historically. From the entry point, known as the Sallyport, a ramp slopes downhill across a moat now covered by well-tended grass. The entry leads directly to the Parade or inner court. The court is surrounded by a series of 26 casemates, or small rooms, once used for many different purposes. Three stairways lead from the inner court to the grassed-over roofs of the casemates. A connecting bridge at one point leads from this area to the five-sided covertway which encircles the moat.

From this vantage point, visitors can view portions of the Fort Macon beach area; watch ships entering and leaving the Beaufort Inlet; view the nearby Coast Guard station and the tangle of small trees and vines typical of ocean-fronting areas in North Carolina.

The brief history given above is taken basically from a free brochure, "A Guide & Brief History of Fort Macon." It is temporarily out of print, but copies are expected to be available again soon.

Book lovers can find a range of publications, post cards, posters and other printed material about the fort, the area and North Carolina in general by visiting the bookstore housed in one of the casemates.

Park rangers or other attendants are on hand at all times to answer questions about the fort. Periodically, these people conduct tours around the fort.

Note Of Caution

Since the roofs of the casemates and the covertways are not fenced in or otherwise protected, all visitors are urged to exercise extreme caution during a visit. Carelessness can lead to falls which could be injurious or even fatal. Parents are urged to keep children in firm control at all times.

Natural Areas

A leisurely tour of the fort still leaves time, even on a one-day visitor, to discover the attractions of the natural areas enclosed within Fort Macon State Park. Adjacent to the fort is a quarter mile nature trail through a shrub thicket, the site of an occasional special program throughout the year.

Just across a stretch of dunes from the fort, a jetty constructed of large hunks of fossalized material proves irresistable to most visitors. Here, the grandeur of waves dashing against the rocks can be marveled at; and this point too provides a prime vantage point for watching all types of watercraft coming and going into Beaufort and Morehead City.

Less than a mile west of the fort is the entry gate to the park's main beach. Ample parking lots can usually accomodate visitors (with occasionally a brief wait on holiday weekends). Facilities here include a bathhouse, a refreshment stand, showers and covered picnic shelters.

The beach front is refreshingly clean, uncluttered. Lifeguards are on duty at a designated swimming area; surf casting is permitted, and perhaps best of all, there's space for hiking and dreaming along the sands of the shore.

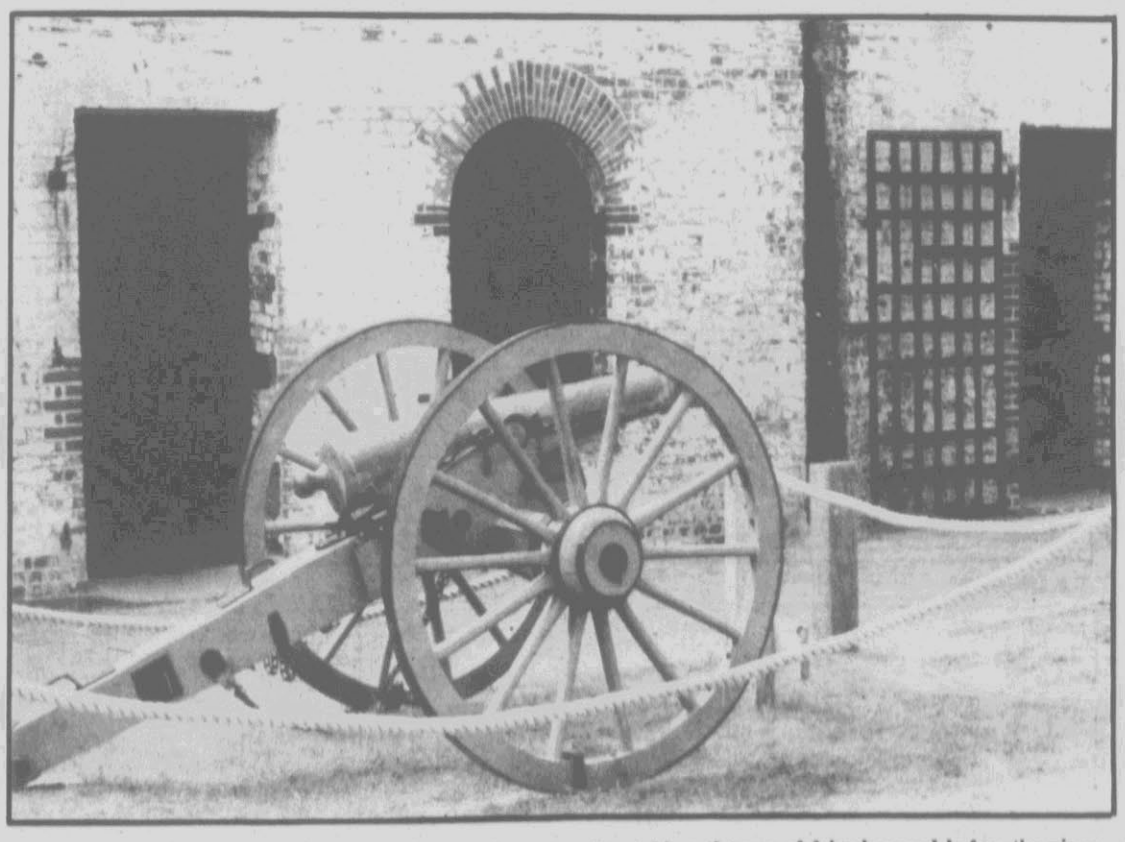
From the standpoint of combining history and outdoor pleasures in an easy one-day travel from Greenville, few North Carolina sites can equal Fort Macon State Park.

The beach area of the park is open from June 1 through Labor Day from early morning until 8 p.m. daily. The fort is open during daylight hours all year. No admission is charged for either facility.

How To Get There

From Greenville, two main routes. The shortest is via Vanceboro to New Bern, then U.S. 70 to Morehead City. The longer route is to take N.C. 33 to Chocowinity, on past Edward, then N.C. 306 south to Minnesott Beach. At Minnesott take the free ferry across the Neuse River, follow 306 with a right turn on N.C. 101 to Beaufort, thence to Morehead City. On either route, cross the bridge at Morehead to Atlantic Beach, then turn left to Fort Macon. The ferry from Minnesott operates hourly from 6:15 a.m. to 9:15 a.m., at 11 a.m., then hourly from 1:15 p.m.

A PLACE IN THE SUN — The public beach at Fort Macon State Park is often crowded on weekends and holidays. The size of the public beach, however, assures plenty of space for visitors to enjoy a variety of activities, whether it's lounging, walking, flying kites or playing beach games. Here, a quartet relaxes in front of a lifeguard stand. Two guards, one on the stand, another standing, keep a watchful eye on swimmers.



OBJECT OF ATTENTION — This well-preserved cannon mounted on a two-wheeled carriage is displayed in the Parade (or inner court) at Fort Macon. It receives considerable attention by visitors, with photographers often taking pictures of friends posed before the piece. Note the two door entrances and an arched window in the background, typical architectural elements throughout the fort.

A PLACE OF EXCITEMENT — A jetty of large fragments of fossilized material at a point near Fort Macon is a favorite gathering place for visitors. Some fish; others explore the diverse marvel of tiny fossilized life forms embedded in the rock, and others thrill to water spray as breakers dash against the jetty.

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR SUNDAY July 10

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Today you have the opportunity to get a clearer picture of several conditions around you, or in politics. Be patient with others.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Get a new perspective, through those that you trust, on how to handle anxieties at home and at work. Turn worries into advantages.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Listen to an associate who bluntly but honestly can give you excellent insight into your relationships.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Relax today and do not think about work. Avoid those who wish to manipulate your thinking. Write to a loved one far away.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Contact a fascinating new acquaintance and learn from this person. If you use your charm at a social affair today, you can save a valuable friendship.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Take advantage of an opportunity to improve your standing within your community. Budget your money carefully.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): A charming new contact emerges, to whom it is best to be polite and kind. Pay attention to different philosophies.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Don't permit a foolish quarrel to separate you from those that you love. Control your temper. Catch up on your rest tonight.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Don't let the problems of others interfere with your affection for them. Resist the urge to criticize. Be careful with new proposals.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan.20): Study what you can do to help a friend in trouble. Show that you are being understanding, not merely charitable.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Make changes in your entertainment plans to fit new developments. Show more affection for your mate and avoid a big argument.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): A current of nervous tension runs at home today. Do not invite guests in at this time. Take some quiet time alone to read and study.

FORECAST FOR MONDAY July 11

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): You must reconcile old standpoints with new ones, so give all aspects careful thought. Postpone the trip you have been planning.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Making changes in your financial policies at this time would be foolish, despite indications to the contrary. Security should come first.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Do not be hasty to replace the old with the new at this point. Old friends have much to offer if you use your imagination.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Circumstances do not seem to suit your personal needs at this time, but do not be hasty to change them. Be generous to your loved ones.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Get expert advice before going ahead on a pressing new venture. You will have to decide whether to cooperate with your mate or a feisty friend.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Go after your goals in a positive manner, but don't expect others to understand your methods. Plan your time carefully.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Handle your important duties early, because later there will be a strange new project in need of attention. Be tactful in your communications.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Your practical affairs take precedence at this time. Listen to a proven financial expert instead of to a self-proclaimed expert.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Get your ideas well-organized before presenting them. Today you may need expert advice for a personal problem.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan.20): Someone quite close to you will need your help before you carry out your plans. Do not take sides in arguments at work or among friends.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Budget some time for old acquaintances before starting a new project. Accept expert advice, but move carefully with your plans.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Your homelife will be quite busy today; lend your help gracefully. You may have to mediate an argument before you can work on your own affairs.

Many moons ago, we had a partner who loved to bid slams. It was his belief that, if you had 11 sure tricks, you could usually drum up a 12th. And if you could count 12 tricks, there was some way to squeeze out another. Strange thing, he was right more often than not. He would have loved this hand.

North's two diamond response to the artificial two-club demand bid was not necessarily negative—most expert pairs play that you cannot make a positive response on a five-card suit unless it is headed by two of the three top honors. Since his partner's king was likely to be in hearts and, as a result, there would be no entry to the North hand, South settled in six spades to take advantage of his honors.

West made a normal lead of the jack of diamonds, and declarer's first good move was to believe that the lead was unlikely to be away from an inside tenace. There were 11 sure tricks, and declarer saw that, if either defender held both minor-suit kings, or if West held the king of diamonds and East the king of clubs, the contract was cold.

Declarer played low from dummy to the first trick and, when the nine of diamonds appeared from East, he decided to play that defender for either K-9 or 9-x. Therefore, he won the ace, cashed the ace of hearts and ran all eight of his spades, coming down to the king of hearts and Q-8 of diamonds on the board. He then exited with a diamond, rising with the queen when West followed low. West was forced to return a club, and a successful finesse landed a well-played slam.

Story Of Assassinated Bishop Being Filmed In Mexico

By SOLL SUSSMAN
Associated Press Writer

CUERNAVACA, Mexico (AP) — The Rev. Ellwood E. Kieser, producer of the movie "Romero," believes he is telling the tale of a 20th century hero.

"I'm not doing a political tract; I'm not preaching a sermon," Kieser said in a recent interview on the set.

But he clearly sees the story of assassinated Archbishop Oscar Arnulfo Romero of El Salvador as an audience-grabber with impressive moral overtones.

"I feel he is for the latter part of the 20th century what Mahatma Gandhi was for the first part," Kieser said.

The movie, starring Raul Julia in the title role and an almost completely Hispanic cast, may well be the first commercial feature by a Roman Catholic order. Its budget is in the $2 million range.

Kieser's company, Paulist Pictures, is associated with the Paulist Fathers. He produced their television program, "Insight," for 23 years until it was discontinued in 1983.

Last year, he produced the television movie, "We Are the Children," starring Ted Danson and Ally Sheedy, about the famine in Africa.

"Our whole thing is to combine entertainment with audience enrichment," he said.

Although he prefers to be called Bud, greetings of "Hello, Father," can be heard as he moves about the set. He also has learned enough Spanish to be able to say Mass for anyone involved in the production who wants to attend.

To Kieser, Romero was a mouse transformed into a tiger, a withdrawn intellectual who gathered courage in response to the horrors around him until he was silenced by an assassin.

"I have the chance to tell the story of Oscar Romero to a couple of hundred million people," the producer said.

Julia, however, believes the archbishop's courage always was there.

"His change came about as he realized the circumstances — outside of his world of editing, writing and studying," the actor said in an interview in his trailer.

Julia groped for the right words to explain Romero's emergence as a vocal human rights advocate as the situation deteriorated in El Salvador and emerged in a full-scale war that still persists between leftist rebels and the U.S.-supported government.

"He started seeing that other reality," Julia said, costumed in priestly garb. "But I think he always was a committed man, a religious man, an honest man."

Julia also insisted that the movie is not a political one but rather "a movie about people."

Yet the film's script quotes extensively from Romero's homilies as the violence escalates before the outset of the war in late 1979 and as the rightist death squads that claimed thousands of victims take their toll.

Salvadorans jammed the unfinished metropolitan cathedral to hear Romero conclude his homily each Sunday with his report on the week's grim events. Loudspeakers were set up outside so the overflow crowd could hear and, as the movie dramatizes, the sermons also were broadcast nationally.

"When you hear the words of a man telling you to kill, remember instead the words of God," Romero said the day before his assassination. "No soldier is obliged to obey an order contrary to the law of God.

"I beseech you, I beg you — I order you: Stop the repression."

A lone gunman killed the archbishop as he said Mass at the Divine Providence Chapel in San Salvador on March 24, 1980. Although no one has ever been arrested, it is widely believed to have been ordered by the death squads.

"He was an ordinary person who brought forth his courage," said Julia, who has listened to many of the archbishop's sermons and even his tape-recorded musings.

John Duigan, making his first movie outside his native Australia, is directing. The script is by John Sacret Young, who is involved in the critically praised TV series, "China Beach."

Unlike previous movies about Central America such as "Under Fire" and Oliver Stone's "Salvador," "Romero" does not dwell on an American venturing into the region but instead concentrates on the native situation.

"The story just didn't call for an American," Sacret Young said. "None of them were major enough. Our choice was, not to leave them out, but to tell it the way Romero might have thought about it."

He also describes the archbishop in heroic terms.

"If you told it as fiction, it would be unbelievable," the writer said. "Eventually, in that crucible, he changed, so he was not following events, he was leading events."

Songs Are Spawned By Palestinian Uprising

By KARIN LAUB
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM (AP) — Palestinian singers usually known for sentimental love songs have found a new kind of music: political anthems calling for violent revolt against Israel and glorifying young Arab stone-throwers.

Israeli authorities have blacklisted the songs on grounds they incite rebellion, but they are distributed secretly in recorded form and are heard widely in Arab east Jerusalem and the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

The current No. 1 hit, "Insurrection," urges Palestinian children to "rise up with your stones." It booms from music stores and portable radios in east Jerusalem when Israeli police or soldiers are not around.

In Bethlehem, junior high school students came from classes recently chanting the refrain of the song "Intefadeh" (Arabic for uprising): "With firebombs and stones, I make my revolution."

Arab youths also gather around stereos at home and sing along to ballads such as "Palestinian," whose lyrics say: "I fight for my identity, I fight for freedom, I fight for spring."

In Jerusalem, police have raided several music stores, confiscated tapes of songs about the uprising and charged store owners with incitement.

In the occupied territories, troops confiscate tapes of banned song if they find any during house searches, but they don't look specially for them, said a military official.

"We act whenever we can, but this is not our first priority. We are too busy with other things."

Since the Dec. 8 start of the uprising, dozens of militant, anti-Israeli songs have surfaced in the occupied lands. They range from mournful ballads about the more than 200 Palestinians killed in clashes to stirring anthems glorifying teen-age stonethrowers.

Intefadeh songs are recorded in makeshift studios in Jerusalem, taped from Syrian television or smuggled from Arab countries. Some tapes are sold under the counter in music stores, while others are copied at home and passed along to friends.

Among the two most popular song collections are "I Am The Son of Gaza" by the Syrian band "Palestine Roots" and "Intefadeh" by Riad Awad, a singer from the West Bank city of Tulkarem. "Palestine Roots" also sings "Insurrection," while Awad has recorded "Palestinian."

Awad and others are part of the so-called "Western wave," a new musical style popular among the young. It builds on Arabic music traditions, but also uses synthesizers and electrical guitars, placing greater emphasis on rhythm.

"Today, 95 percent of my customers ask for intefadeh or nationalistic songs," said an east Jerusalem music store owner.

His store was raided earlier in June after he played "Insurrection" over loudspeakers. Police confiscated dozens of intefadeh tapes and charged the owner with incitement. He was released on bail the equivalent to $1,300.

Since the raid, he has restocked his supply, keeping the tapes in two small boxes under the counter. But he no longer plays intefadeh songs loudly, and scrutinizes customers to make sure they are not undercover police officers.

Distribution of intefadeh songs is often unorthodox. A friend of the Jerusalem-born Palestinian singer Mustafa Kurd recently made the rounds of the music stores, carrying a single copy of Kurd's latest tape "The Children of Palestine."

Shopowners who wanted it made copies in their stores.

At a music store in Jerusalem's walled Old City, "Insurrection" was booming from loudspeakers one recent day, mingling with the sales pitches of street vendors in the cobblestone street. Riot police patrolled nearby, but took no notice.

"I play this because I believe in it," said the store owner. "When the cops come, I just change the tape." He added that he was free on bail after being charged with incitement following a raid.

Military officials said all songs and written material calling for violent revolt against the 21-year Israeli occupation are illegal and subject to confiscation.

However, the officials added, military officers have not compiled a list of banned material because they can't keep up with the number of intefadeh songs flooding the occupied territories.

But the songs also have their critics in the Palestinian community.

Hussein Barghouti, a literature teacher at the West Bank's Bir Zeit University, said most have little to do with art.

"Art is buried in these songs. What remains is sloganism," said Barghouti who writes songs for a Jerusalem band. "As a human being, you are touched only on a superficial ideological level."

He added that the quality of the songs might improve if they were written by the young activists confronting Israeli soldiers with their stones and slingshots.

"But the kids are too busy to write songs," he said.

NUTRITION BENEFITS

NEW YORK (AP) — People who don't eat enough, or not enough of the right foods, suffer far more painful symptoms of arthritis than do well-nourished people with the same condition, according to Dr. Graciela S. Alarcon.

Alarcon, says AIMplus magazine, is an associate professor of medicine at the University of Alabama, Birmingham. She says, "While we now know good nutrition is very important to maintaining overall good health, we are currently doing additional studies to investigate how following sound nutrition principles can help alleviate the painful symptoms of arthritis."

Dual Stamp Issue

By BRIAN HICKMAN
British Post Office

"Farewell to old England forever....for we're bound for Botany Bay" — so goes the haunting song which catches the sentiments of the adventurous band of settlers who set out from Britain for Australia in an epic voyage 200 years ago.

The long journey to the land "Down Under" was made by a fleet of 11 ships carrying convicts, marine guards, naval officers, seamen and officials under the command of Admiral Arthur Phillip of Bath.

Botany Bay proved unsuitable as a site for permanent settlement, and the ships sailed on to Port Jackson, described by Phillip as "one of the finest harbors in the world", and now called Sydney.

To mark the bicentenary of the British settlement, Britain's Royal Mail and Australia Post have collaborated to produce a first ever joint issue of stamps by the two countries.

The special set consists of two 18 pence stamps and two 34 pence stamps which reflect the links between the British and Australian peoples, their democracy, sport and culture.

The common background to the four stamps is the Australian flag. Based on the British Blue Ensign, it has three principal elements: the Union flag, representing links with Britain; the Southern Cross, indicating Australia's geographical position; and a large seven-pointed star, representing the six states and the Northern Territory.

The tide of immigrants grew rapidly in the 1850s with the discovery of gold in Victoria and New South Wales. The vast majority came from England, Scotland and Ireland and ships — carrying fortune-hunters — arrived in Melbourne in May 1853 at the rate of more than two each day.

The gold rush fueled the demand for clipper ships — fast, light sailing vessels — to bring emigrants from England to Australia, and to carry gold and wool on the return journey. One of the best known later clippers was the Cutty Sark, now preserved in dry dock at Greenwich, London. Launched in 1869, she made her name as the fastest clipper on the Australian run.

On the other 18 pence stamp, the queen is shown against a foreground of the British and Australian Parliaments. Parliamentary institutions were set up in the "settler" colonies of the British Empire, based on the Westminster model.

In Australia, each of the six colonies had its own separate parliament, now the State Parliaments. The federal parliament, which meets in Canberra, was formed in 1901, and is responsible for matters of national importance, including the treasury, defense, foreign affairs, customs and excise, social services and immigration.

The Australian Head of State is the Queen and the new Australian Parliament House was opened by her as one of the major events in the 1988 bicentennial celebrations.

Sporting links between the two countries are epitomized on one of the 34 pence stamps which depicts tennis — and of course, cricket. The almost legendary cricketing story of the Ashes dates back to 1882 when the Australian tourists won a well-publicized match against England's finest players at the famous Oval ground, prompting the publication of an obituary in the London Times.

Lamenting the death of English cricket, the notice informed the readers that the "body" would be cremated, and the ashes taken to Australia.

A few months later an English team arrived in Australia, determined to recover the mythical 'Ashes'. The story goes that a group of Melbourne women burned bails, sealed the ashes in an urn, and presented it the victorious English team.

The urn is now kept permanently in the Imperial Cricket Museum at Lord's, although each time England and Australia meet for a Test series, the victors are still said to have "won the Ashes".

Strong artistic connections are another feature of Britain's ties with Australia and these are featured on the other 34 pence stamp which shows Shakespeare, John Lennon and the Sydney Opera House.

The distinctive architecture of this famous building, opened by the Queen in 1973, is intended to suggest the sails of the yachts which throng Sydney harbor. For visitors to Australia the sail-like roofs of the Opera House are also a permanent and striking reminder of the tall-masted ships which took the first British settlers to a new world "Down Under."

NOT HAUNTED, JUST HUMID

NEW YORK (AP) — When your house creaks and groans at night, it doesn't mean it's haunted. "What you hear is the wood contracting and expanding as it picks up and gives off moisture," says wood specialist Julian Beckwith in Family Circle magazine.

Chapbook Winner

CARRBORO — Edison Dupree of Chapel Hill has won the 1988 North Carolina Writers' Network Chapbook Competition with his manuscript "A Rapid Transit" which will be published by the network for release this fall at a special reading and reception in Dupree's honor. He receives a $200 prize and 50 copies of the chapbook.

The North Carolina Writers' Network is a nonprofit statewide organization open to all writers — literary, journalistic, technical, etc. including editors, publishers, librarians and others interested in the written word.

Dupree is a graduate of the Master of Fine Arts program at the University of Iowa, where he was a teaching-writing fellow from 1985 to 1987. He graduated summa cum laude in English from North Carolina State University in 1985, and also attended the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill as an undergraduate. Born in New Braunfels, Texas, he is a 1972 graduate of Broughton High High School in Raleigh.

During intervals between his academic work, Dupree has devoted himself to writing while holding a series of jobs. In 1983, he received a North Carolina Arts Council Writing Fellowship and also a seven-month Writing Fellowship at the Fine Arts Work Center in Provincetown, Mass.

In the fall, Dupree wil return to school at Bowling Green State University in Ohio, where he will study for his Ph.D.

Copies of "A Rapid Transit" may be reserved by ordering in advance of the fall printing, at a postage paid cost of $5, from NCWN, P.O. Box 954, Carrboro, N.C. 27510.

Williams Play Next For Summer Theater

Two-time daytime Emmy Award winner Kim Zimmer and television and stage star A.C. Weary will star in "Cat On A Hot Tin Roof," the second of the four productions to be produced by the East Carolina Summer Theatre in July.

Miss Zimmer and Weary, who are married, will lead a cast of professional actors in the production which will run Monday through Saturday at 8:15 p.m., with special matinee performances scheduled for Wednesday and Saturday at 2:15 p.m. in the McGinnis Theatre on the East Carolina University campus.

Kim Zimmer achieved national recognition for her roles in daytime drama, most notably as Reva Shayne on CBS's "Guiding Light." Her other well known roles were Echo on "One Life to Live" and Nola on "The Doctors."

She was also featured in the film "Body Heat" opposite William Hurt and Kathleen Turner.

Miss Zimmer's stage work includes a variety of shows ranging from the musicals "Cabaret," "Godspell," and "Oklahoma" to the dramas "Accent on Youth" with Ricardo Montalban and "The Big Knife" with James Farintino. She also has her own night club act in New York.

Miss Zimmer finds time to give to charities including the Duke Children's Classic and the Ronald McDonald House.

Starring opposite Miss Zimmer is A. C. Weary, who will be taking time off from his work in New York. Weary has appeared in several major evening and daytime television series. He has guest starred on "Hill Street Blues," "Kate and Allie," "Nero Wolf"and "Leg Work" to name a few. His daytime characters have been seen on "Ryan's Hope," "One Life to Live," "Guiding Light" and "Edge of Night."

Weary has also appeared in the feature films "Secret of Phantom Caverns," "Nocturna" and "Starting Over." He lists a number of stage credits on off-Broadway and in regional theatres across the country. Weary is highly skilled in stage combat and will be the producer and director of "A Night at the Fights" which will open next spring. He is currently one of the directors of NBC's "Another World."

Also appearing in the cast will be Greenville native and Broadway veteran Graham Pollock, who most recently starred as Pap Finn in "Big River."

"Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" by Tennessee Williams won the Pulitzer Prize and the New York Drama Critic's Award. It is an intense dissection of some powerful human emotions — greed, dread of death, love, hate and despair. It is set in Mississippi in the heat-drenched home of the Delta's biggest cotton planter.

Tickets, if available, may be reserved with a Mastercard or Visa by calling 757-6390 Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. or they may be purchased by writing to: The General Manager, East Carolina Summer Theatre, East Carolina University, Greenville, N.C. 27858-4353.

SUMMER THEATRE'S MAGGIE — Kim Zimmer, star of "The Guiding Light" television program, will appear as Maggie in the East Carolina Summer Theatre's production of Tennessee Williams' "Cat On A Hot Tin Roof." The play opens Monday at McGinnis Theater on the ECU campus and will run through Saturday.

Peacock

LOS ANGELES (AP) — NBC, which operates a popular and lucrative souvenir store in Rockefeller Center in New York, is planning to retail such memorabilia as "Late Night" T-shirts and "Today" show coffee mugs nationwide through its newly established marketing branch, Peacock Enterprises. NBC began testing the idea in April with an NBC store at Union Station in Indianapolis.

Two Dancers Join The N.C. Dance Theater

WINSTON-SALEM — Two new principal dancers, Mel Tomlinson and Alain Charron, have joined the North Carolina Dance Theater and will perform with the company beginning with the 1988-89 season which opens in Stevens Center October 7-8.

Tomlinson, a Raleigh native, appeared as guest artist with Dance Theater during 1987-88 season performing in "Satto" and "No Right on Red," which he also choreographed.

After becoming principal dancer with the Agnes De Mille Heritage Dance Theater, the Dance Theater of Harlem, the Alvin Ailey American Dance Theater and the Joffrey Ballet, he joined the New York City Ballet in 1981.

Tomlinson, who has also been named director of Educational Services for North Carolina Dance Theater, has been active in the lecture/demonstration circuit in the North Carolina school system.

North Carolina Dance Theater completed a pilot program with North Forsyth High School this spring which included teacher familiarization, classroom visits by the dancers and culminated in a performance of five pieces of classical ballet and modern dance at the school for staff and students.

Tomlinson will direct the educational programs in the fall.

Tomlinson was the first recipient of the North Carolina Prize (1983) awarded for outstanding work in visual or performing arts. In 1987 he danced as Bill Cosby's double in Leonard IV. A graduate of the North Carolina School of the Arts, Tomlinson has most recently been a member of its Dance Faculty.

Charron, a native of Hamilton, Ontario, has studied and performed widely in Canada. Most recently he was a soloist with the Royal Winnipeg Ballet for whom he choreographed "Fleeting Vision."

His credits include teaching and master classes in Winnipeg and in major cities across Canada and performances on the Canadian Broadcasting Company of the "Nutcracker Pas de Deux" and "Romeo and Juliet."

North Carolina Dance Theater, under artistic director Salvatore Aiello, is a much sought-after professional dance company. The state dance company, with headquarters in Winston-Salem, was founded in 1970 by Robert Lindgren. Last season the dance theater received critical acclaim in New York City. Its seventeen dancers have varied and impressive backgrounds. The company's tours include locations throughout the United States, Canada and Europe.

Guest Roles

LIVERPOOL, England (AP) — Pop star Paul McCartney and his wife, Linda, returned to his childhood home in northern England to film guest roles for a TV comedy series.

The British Broadcasting Corp. series is being shot on Elswick Street near the Mersey River, where one of the former Beatle's childhood friends used to live.

IN DURHAM THIS WEEK — The Pilobolus Dance Theater, well-known for its acrobatic style of dance, will perform at the American Dance Festival on the campus of Duke University on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. All performances are at 8 p.m. For ticket information and reservations, call 684-6402. (Photo by Clemens Kalischer)

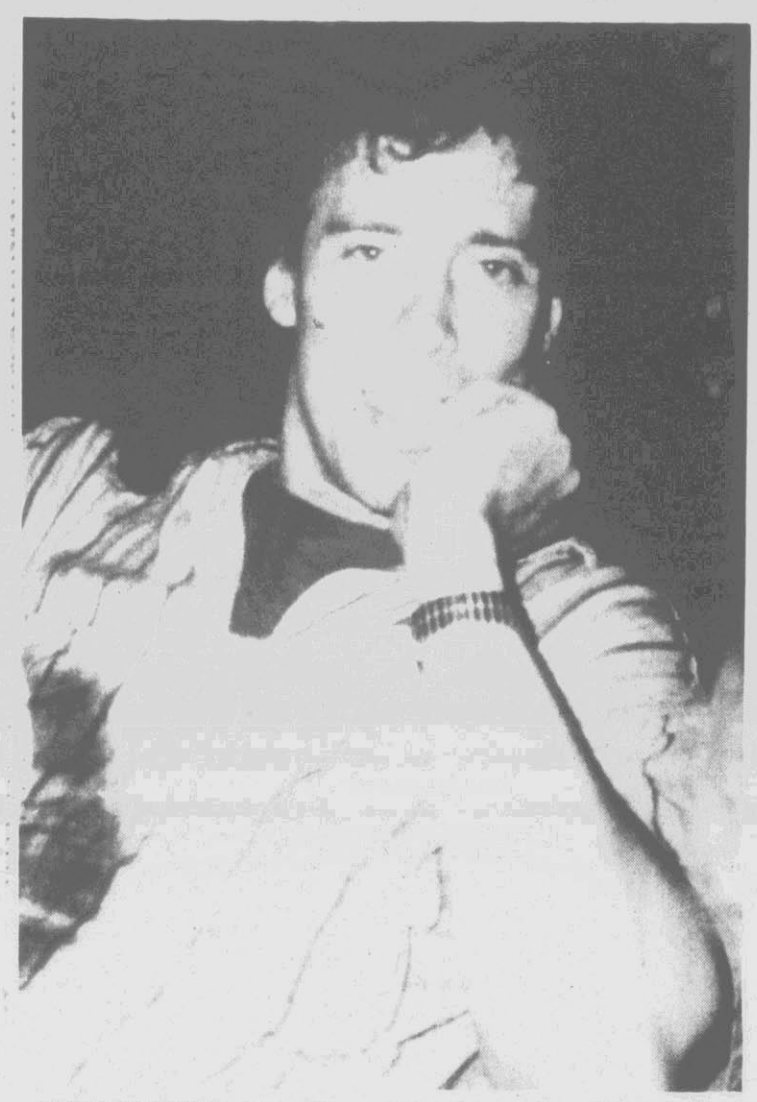
Actor Returns To His Carolina Roots

By KIMBERLY DALE

Actor Terrence Mann unwinds after a long day of rehearsals for "1776" in Raleigh. He can't remember exactly when he knew he was destined to become a performer. "It seemed like a natural evolution for me as a person," he said. "My mom was a concert pianist and my dad is a barbershop quartet singer, so we always had music and singing in the house. I never knew how to do anything else but to perform on Sunday for grandparents.



CAROLINA ROOTS — Actor Terrence Mann relaxes after a day's rehearsal in the musical, "1776." The play opens Wednesday in Raleigh's Memorial Auditorium, home of the North Carolina Theater Company. Mann appeared earlier with the company in "Camelot" and also has performed in "The Lost Colony" outdoor drama, where he had his first experience in the world of theater. (Photograph by Kimberly Dale)

"There was never one time when I said 'that's what I want to be,' but I remember seeing Laurence Olivier's 'Hamlet' on television and being mesmerized. I was young, 13 or 14, listening to the words and understanding what he meant. I've always had a propensity towards the classics."

Mann, an actor with curly brown hair and blue eyes, has performed in the New York production of two major Broadway musicals. He has earned a Tony nomination; moved into television to garner a Daytime Emmy nomination, and branched out to appeal in several films.

During this month, he has returned to his theatrical beginnings to direct and appear in the Raleigh-based North Carolina Theatre Company's production of the musical "1776."

"North Carolina has been very good to me," he said. "My biggest interest right now is in developing the company as a regional theater. I'm bringing down friends from New York who have worked on Broadway." He mentioned that at the end of this season "Memorial Auditorium, home of the theater company, will undergo a $10 million renovation."

The company was established in 1983 with the purpose of creating a professional regional theater company in the Raleigh area. Mann was in the first production of the group. Company founder Deanne Jones, with whom Mann had worked previously, contacted him in 1983, offered him a job, and asked what show he wanted to do.

He chose "Camelot" and played the role of King Arthur. Since then, the company has brought young professional artists to the triangle and has drawn audiences from all parts of the state.

My interview with Mann was in the lounge of the Radisson Hotel during a thunderstorm. He had just finished the first day of rehearsal for "1776" which he directs as well as performs in the role of Richard Henry Lee.

I must confess that I've been a fan of this actor since seing his performance as Rum Tum Tugger, the independent character in the original Broadway cast of "Cats."

His most recent triumph was as Javert in Broadway's original company of the musical "Les Miserables." This role earned him a Tony nomination in 1987.

Mann left "Les Miserables" after one year "because I felt it was time to move on. I wanted to leave while still I was still very high on the show, still very emotionally attached to it, not being bored in doing it." He called the role of Javert "the pinnacle of my career."

Mann spoke about his early days in theatre. A native of Lexington, Ky., he grew up in Florida where he attended Jacksonville University. His acting teacher there was associated with "The Lost Colony" outdoor drama. So, through his teacher, he had an opportunity to work in Manteo in the summers of 1970 and 1971. Fellow cast members there encouraged him to apply for attendance at the North Carolina School of the Arts in Winston-Salem. He was accepted and attended the school from 1971 to 1973, left, and returned again a few years later to graduate.

It was at the "Lost Colony" that he met Mavis Ray, actress, choreographer and professor at East Carolina University. "Mavis Ray is the one who got me back into theater," he said. He had left the School of the Arts to return to his home in Florida.

In the summer of 1974 he returned to Manteo "just to visit friends at 'The Lost Colony.' Someone tapped me on the shoulder. I turned around. It was Mavis Ray. 'Do you want a job?' she asked. 'Sure,' I said. So I was back dancing again in the show.

"I also did the Children's Theatre at the colony and that got me a job at Theatre in the Park in Raleigh."

Being at "The Lost Colony" led to Mann's first break on Broadway. Joe Layton, then director of the outdoor drama and also a Broadway director, cast Mann in the musical "Barnum." Mann graduated into the title role for matinee performances during the show's West Coast touring company run.

Television and films roles followed. Mann appeared as Theo on "One Life to Live," and won an Emmy nomination for best guest performance for his role as a prison inmate on "As The World Turns."

In film, Mann portrayed the choreographer in Richard Attenborough's film version of the Broadway musical, "A Chorus Line." Of Attenborough he said "He is the best, a director who loves actors." Other movie roles, Mann said, "were not so memorable." They include "Solarbabies," the horror films "Critters" and "Critters 2."

After "1776," completes its Raleigh run, Mann plans to spend time in London with his wife, British playwright Juliette Mann, whose work has been performed in off-Broadway in New York. "There are some future film deals in the works but I'm not free to discuss them because they're not yet definite," he said.

Beginning this month, audiences can see Mann in his latest film, "Big Top Pee-Wee." "I'm in white-face throughout the movie. It was a trip, working with that eternal man/child Pee-Wee Herman."

After working in theater, television and film, Mann said "I feel a greater affinity for the stage. My roots are there. There's something far more special about it, because you have a rappart with the audience that becomes a communion of the souls."

(The North Carolina Theatre Company's production of "1776" opens Wednesday and plays through Sunday at Raleigh's Memorial Akditorium. Ticket prices range from $8 to $25. For more information and ticket reservations, call the box office at 755-6060).

WORK ETHIC

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Though some managers complain that employees don't work hard, a psychologist at the University of Rochester who studies motivation believes most workers do want to perform well on the job.

"By nature, people enjoy being effective workers," says Edward Deci. "Of course, some people don't work hard, but these people probably have had a set of experiences that have alienated them from work."

What turns off employees? A boss who insists that everything must be done "my way" and who doesn't give the employee any autonomy on the job.

Sunday In The Park Features Group Sax

TODAY'S PERFORMERS — Entertainment for today's Sunday in the Park will be provided by the six-member Group Sax. The concert, at the Eugene West Amphiteater on the Town Common, will begin at 7 p.m. The concert is free and open to the public. Patrons are encouraged to bring blankets, folding chairs and other items to provide comfort for seating on the grass.

A North Carolina-based jazz ensemble, Group Sax, is the entertainment group being featured in today's Sunday in the Park concert. The concert, free and open to the public, will begin at 7 p.m. at the Eugene West Amphitheater on the Town Common.

In the event of inclement weather, Group Sax has agreed to perform a rain date at 7 p.m. Monday at the same site, weather permitting.

In performance, the group offer songs in group playing as well as solo playing by individual members.

Other songs which have become familiar audience favorites and are often requested in the concerts include "Prime Time," "Monty's Blues," "Love's The Only Way" and "Accents."

The group has performed extensively throughout the Carolinas, most recently at a Sunday concert at the North Carolina Museum of Art in Raleigh and at the Piccolo Jazz portion of the Spoleto Festival in Charleston, S.C.

Writing about the group's performance in Charleston, Jack Dressler, a reviewer for Charleston's Post-Courier, said Group Sax "was one of the standouts of the last two weeks of high-powered talent.

"(It is) a sensitively nuanced swing ensemble . . . (whose) sense of engagement and excitement never lets up. . . All in all, Group Sax is wonderfully wild and unfettered and at the same time thoroughly disciplined musically."

This Greenville performance today by Group Sax is supported in part by a grant from the North Carolina Arts Council, and in part by funding from the City of Greenville.

The Sunday in the Park series of concert is under the auspices of the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department, and is coordinated by Stuart Aronson.

SHORT SUBJECT

NEW YORK (AP) — Movie audiences are growing by 4 percent a year, despite increased competition from video cassettes and rising admission costs.

In return though, moviegoers now want more for the bigger bucks they are putting down at the box office. And that could mean a return to entertainment "extras," such as serials and short subjects, says producer Stan Zeitlin.

BOTTLED WATER COSTS

LODI, N.J. (AP) — Bottled water continues to grow in popularity, but for the most part it is a blind item to the average consumer, says Charles Norris, president of Deer Park Spring Water.

Norris says, "Most people buy it because it tastes better than tap water but many don't know if they are overpaying and exactly what they are getting for their money."

Arts Council Awards

RALEIGH — Two composers and one jazz musician from North Carolina are the recipients of North Carolina Arts Council awards. Each of the three recipients has received a stipend of $5,000 in recognition of his or her achievements in the field of music.

Composers honored are Lanette M. Lind of Raleigh and Perry Townsend of Charlotte, recipients of the council's 1988 Composer Fellowships. These awards are eligible on an annual basis to any North Carolina composer who has made substantial contributions through his or her art over the past five years.

The selection panel this year was composed of Martin Mailman, chaiman of the composition department at North Texas State University; Noel DaCosta, a composer and Rutgers University instructor, and Karl Boelter, director of music at Atlanta's High Museum.

- Matt Kendrick, a Winston-Salem musician, is the recipient of the council's 1988 Jazz Fellowship. Any North Carolina jazz musician who has made substantial contributions to jazz in the state over the past five years is eligible to compete for the fellowship. Serving on the jazz selection panel this year were Kalamu ya Salaam, former director of the Jazz Heritage Foundation in New Orleans; Doug Richards, director of the jazz program at Virginia Commonwealth University, and Ethan Fein, a New York City composer and musician.

The N.C. Arts Council awards fellowships each year to artists in various fields — fiction writers, poets, jazz musicians, visual artists and composers.

For more details on the fellowship programs, interested persons are to contact Raymond Williams, 733-2821.

THINKING ABOUT A RETURN — Ava Gardner, who suffered a mild stroke two years ago, is contemplating a return to the silver screen. The 66-year-old actress has recovered from a stroke in late 1986, for which she was hospitalized for two months. (AP Laserphoto)

July Events In Wilson

WILSON — The Arts Council of Wilson and Heritage Bank are jointly presenting a celebration of County Wide County Pride for a period of four weeks this summer.

The Rock Ridge Community will be the first to host the council's Artmobile Monday through Friday at Rock Ridge Elementary School in daily sessions from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Music, drama, dance, arts and crafts will be offered. Admission is free.

An outdoor display of children's art will take place from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. Friday, with "The Shades" group to perform on the school ground. Those attending are to bring chairs, blankets, food. In the event of rain, activities will be held inside the school.

From July 18-22, the Artmobile celebration week will be at Elm City Middle School. On July 22, a dinner to be served by the Ruritan Club will benefit the Ted Davis Transplant Fund. "Top Secret" will perform in concert.

New Hope Elementary School will host the Artmobile July 25-29. On July 29 Brice Street will be in concert.

The final week of County Wide Community Pride will be August 1-5 with the Artmobile at the Lucama Community Building daily. On August 5 Top Secret will be in concert.

Displays of art will be featured July 22, 29 and August 5 at Elm City, New Hope and Lucama. Concerts each Friday night are free.

New Shows At GMA

Two exhibits of art are now on view at the Greenville Museum of Art, 802 South Evans Street. Both shows are by Greenville artists, and both are being shown in the museum's South Gallery.

James Beaman is showing examples of his painting/collages. He holds the BFA degree in painting and drawing from East Carolina University.

Ludwig K. Bradley is exhibiting wood constructions. He is studying for the MFA degree from East Carolina University and holds a BA degree from Appalachian State University.

Hours at the Greenville Museum of Art are from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesdays through Fridays, and from 1 to 4 p.m. on Sundays. Admission is free. For more details, call 758-1946.

Writers To Meet Tuesday Evening

The first meeting in July of members of the Greenville Writers Club will be held at the home of Mrs. Ida Wooten Tripp. The Tripp home is located on the Pactolus Highway, 4.5 miles from the stoplight on Greenville Boulevard.

Meetings are held the second and fourth Tuesdays of each month at various homes in Greenville and the local area.

Those planning to attend and who wish more specific directions or who would like to share a ride are to meet at Krispy Kreme Doughnut Shop, East Tenth Street, at 7:30 p.m.

News Nuggets

LOS ANGELES (AP) — NBC is launching a service for daytime viewers — 30-second on-the-hour headlines from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. EDT. NBC News President Lawrence K. Grossman promised affiliates meeting in Hawaii that the news nuggets, to begin in August, will "serve to promote your own news image as the round-the-clock source of news in your communities."

Rivera Specials

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gerald Rivera will put Lee Harvey Oswald on trial this fall on Nov. 22, the 25th anniversary of the assassination of President Kennedy, and Nov. 23, says the Tribune Entertainment Co. which announced three more specials by Rivera.

The first, in October, will air on NBC, no subject matter yet. Likewise another in April. Both it and the Oswald trial will be syndicated.

Q Lucille Ball has been publicized recently as having suffered a heart attack and possibly a stroke. How old is she? Would you say her career is finished—or, like Bob Hope, is Lucy eternal? —Trish Butler, Tucson, Ariz.

A Lucille Ball, who will be 77 on Aug. 6, probably has reached the end of her working days as a comedienne. But, then again—like Bob Hope, 85, and George Burns, 92—she may prove "eternal."

Q How long have the Rev. Jesse Jackson and his wife, Jacqueline, been married? How many children do they have? Where do they go to school? Is it true that Jackson and his wife plan to split after the election? Where do they now live? —Jennifer Evans, Hamtramck, Mich.

A The Jacksons have been married 25 years and have five children—three sons and two daughters. The oldest is their daughter Santita, 24, a senior at Howard University in Washington, D.C. Jesse Jr., 23, and Jonathan, 22, are recent graduates of North Carolina A&T, their parents' alma mater, in Greensboro. Their third son, Yusef, 17, recently was graduated from St. Alban's, a prep school in Washington, D.C. And their youngest, Jacqueline, 12, attends school in Massachusetts. The Jackson family home is in Chicago. There is no truth to the rumor that the Jacksons plan to split after the election. Their marriage appears solid at this point.

Q During the Moscow summit, Gennady Gerasimov, the spokesman for the Soviet Foreign Ministry, said over U.S. television: "We are going to do something awful to you. We are going to deprive you of an enemy." What did he mean by that remark?—B. Resnik, West New York, N.J.

A Gerasimov was predicting that the meetings between President Ronald Reagan and General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev, held in Moscow from May 29 to June 1, would produce a relationship so warm, so friendly, so cordial and understanding between the two countries that the United States in the future would no longer regard the Soviet Union as an enemy.

A At this writing, the two women members of the Senate, Nancy Kassebaum (R., Kan.) and Barbara Mikulski (D., Md.), are unmarried. Senator Mikulski has never been married. Also unmarried are John Stennis (D., Miss.), a widower, and the following seven Senators—William Cohen (R., Maine), Christopher Dodd (D., Conn.), Wyche Fowler Jr. (D., Ga.), Edward Kennedy (D., Mass.), Mitch McConnell (R., Ky), George Mitchell (D., Maine) and John Warner (R., Va.)—all divorced. In addition, on May 31, Sen. Alan Cranston (D., Calif.) filed for divorce from his wife of 10 years.

A Loni, at 41, is not too old—and she's erroneously rumored to be pregnant. She has a daughter, Deidra Hoffman, 21, by a previous marriage.

A To protect against financial loss, should a leading actor die or become physically disabled in the course of filming, studios buy cast insurance. Last December, Columbia dismissed Burt Lancaster from "Old Gringo" because, it announced, the studio was unable to purchase insurance for him at customary rates (Lancaster, 74, underwent quadruple-bypass surgery in 1983). The actor requested that he be paid in full, $1.5 million, for his part. Columbia thereupon sent him a check for $196,428. He returned it and sued for $1.5 million. Lancaster contends that, according to industry custom and the studio's standard business practices, he first should have been notified of insurance problems and accorded the opportunity to solve them. Instead, he was dismissed. "Columbia had no right to terminate the agreement between the parties based on an inability to obtain cast insurance," his lawsuit says, "until it first notified [Lancaster] or his representatives of any potential problem."

MORE THAN 100,000 WOMEN NOW DRIVE BIG TRUCKS, BUT THERE'S ONE THING SOME STILL FEEL THEY NEED:

'I WANT RESPECT, THAT'S ALL'

BOUNCING ON THE AIR-cushioned seat high up in the cab of her 13-speed Kenworth tractor, pulling a 48-foot trailer bound for the West Coast, Darlene Dwyer is "running hard" over the long, flat highway as the Florida sun goes down. She is in control of an enormous machine on 18 wheels, carrying 40 tons. At the same time, she is a lone female driver in a world of macho male truckers who see her as a vulnerable object of prey.

"This is Biscuit," she yells into the CB radio, using her "handle" to call another woman trucker on the road.

A male voice breaks in: "Hi, sweetie! Where are you?"

"Want to fool around? Make love?"

"No way, cowboy!" she says, clicking off the CB unit and turning to me as we roll on: "A lot of these guys still have the notion that every female out here is fair game. To be honest, it's lonely and tough on the road."

The number of lady truckers is rapidly growing, from less than 2 percent of the total drivers a decade ago to about 4.2 percent today. Of 2.5 million truckers hauling rigs of various sizes, just over 100,000 are women. "There has been steady growth," says Ron Roth of the American Trucking Associations. "I think that women are not so overwhelmed by the hardships anymore."

The new female drivers include many wives "riding team" with their husbands. Some, married to men who are not truckers, drive "short haul" and return to their families each night. Those women who pull the big rigs alone, over long distances for weeks at a time, are mostly single or divorced.

"I don't recommend it for all women," says Helen Jones, 49, of Hendersonville, Tenn., who started riding with her husband four years ago after raising a family. "It takes a special kind of person who can withstand the stress. You have to enjoy physical labor and love the outdoors."

"My life force comes from this truck," says Dwyer, who adds that her work always comes first. "This is what I love, what I do, what I am."

When I'm driving, my husband is in the sleeper [inside the cab, just behind the seats], and so I'm on my own. And I'm constantly thinking ahead in advance of any trouble.

"What if one of my tires blows? What if that car suddenly pulls in front of me? And some days, when the wind is howling and there's freezing rain, you wish you were anywhere else. But what did our great-great-grandmothers do? They went across this country in covered wagons!"

At the Vero Beach, Fla., truck stop, Darlene Dwyer rolls into a vast lot where dozens of tractor-trailers are parked in rows. As she deftly backs her 62-foot rig into a space, several male drivers gather to watch. "Hey," one calls after she hops down, "did you just drive that big ol' thing in here? By your little ol' self?"

"Nah," she says, grinning. "I had Captain Kirk beam me down!"

Dwyer, 29, is a single woman who operates her own tractor, driving alone. Over the last eight years, she has logged 900,000 miles across 48 states. Every few months she returns to Lockport, N.Y., where she grew up, but otherwise, as she puts it, "I've basically been living out of my truck." Under contract with North American Van Lines to pick up and deliver cargo, she does all the physical loading and unloading by herself. She can repair wiring, adjust brakes, change fan belts, fix hairline tire leaks and even blend her own fuel. A strong, muscular young woman, Dwyer says she can be as "feminine" as any other female, but that would only invite more hassles. "If I wore a skirt, I'd just be asking for trouble." Instead, she wears a driver's uniform shirt over a pair of jeans, uses no makeup and keeps her hair pinned. Referring to the grease all over her hands and face, however, she laughs and adds, "Of course, right now no guy would go near me!"

Another trucker, Norma McNamara, 33, of Portland, Maine, recalls the time a male driver at a Midwest truck stop kept "hawking" her to join him in his motel room: "I told him no, and he got very angry. I went for dinner alone, but he went out to the lot and pulled my tractor-trailer pin. When I drove off, the entire load crashed to the ground behind me!"

Interviews and rides with dozens of female drivers hauling heavy rigs reveal that since the 1970s they have been producing a significant chapter of the women's movement. In addition to facing male hostility and being treated as sex objects, they have struggled to overcome strong doubts about their capabilities.

"There's still resentment because driving the biggest trucks used to be something only a man could do," says Marlene McNeill, 49, of Hayward, Calif. "Now that is being taken away from them." McNeill, who drives for Safeway, raised seven children before she got into trucking in 1973. At the time, she was the first woman to work out of the local hiring hall. "I'd walk up to the loading dock," she recalls, "and all the guys would glare, as if to say, 'What is she doing here?' They gave me four 55-gallon drums and said, 'If you can load 'em, you can haul 'em.' So I got the dolly while they stood back and watched. I had to climb up to push that thing over, but I passed the test. I knew that I couldn't break down or quit, because I was representing any other women who would come along."

"I want their respect, that's all," says Patty Balagot, 32, of Newark, Calif., "because I'm good at what I do. I want

Lady truckers who drive alone speak of having to maintain a "split personality" in terms of how they appear and act. Says Balagot: "I like to wear dresses and high heels when I go on a date, but out here I need a gutter mouth to fit in."

"I don't want to be the stereotype of the grubby, macho trucker," says Marlene Day, 35, of Fort Wayne, Ind., who is lead driver of a Peterbilt Conventional, riding with her husband. "So I work hard at trying to preserve myself. I keep my nails done and wear diamond earrings. If I can't wash or shower, I give myself an alcohol bath to take the grime off. And I use extra deodorant or perfume. Otherwise, you can easily lose yourself."

For all the women drivers, there are common motivations for taking on this rugged way of life. Married or not, driving a big rig means a chance to gain economic independence. Nationwide, truckers gross an average of $18,200 a year, but senior union members who drive company trucks can gross up to $50,000. As an owner-operator, Darlene Dwyer grosses up to $130,000 annually but spends as much as $32,000 a year on fuel alone. Her fixed costs, including payments on her truck, amount to $110 a day before she starts driving. Other expenses, plus income taxes, bring down her net income to perhaps $35,000.

Each woman I met on the road also spoke of a desire for personal freedom and a quest for adventure. "I love to drive and I've always wanted to see the country," says Marlene Day. "And although my husband and I ride together, I run the business as owner-operator. It's a big challenge."

"Part of it for me is having an independent streak," says Norma McNamara. "I drove long-distance by myself for the first four years, but even though I'm married now with two children, I still love to drive." Working short haul, she wakes up at 4 a.m. and drives a big rig from Portland to northern Maine and back. "My sister takes care of the kids," she says, "and my husband, who is in the warehouse business, is very supportive.

"I'm not incapable of other work," adds McNamara. "I just choose to make my living this way. Most women drivers are professionals doing a job. We're just earning money by driving a truck instead of working, say, in a bank. We don't like to be confined that way."

The entrance of more females into the trucking industry has coincided with severe driver shortages caused, in part, by the chaotic price wars that followed deregulation in 1980. Many veteran male drivers have retired after company cutbacks or closings. Others, who were owner-operators, have bowed to competitive pressures and quit the road.

In their place have come less-experienced male truckers, who often accept low rates in order to obtain loads. Some of these new owner-operators, the older men complain, give the entire industry a bad image: taking drugs to stay awake, behaving wildly at truck stops (where "lot lizards," or prostitutes, are plentiful at night) and generally "raising hell" on the nation's highways.

By contrast, lady truckers are regarded as a counterbalancing, positive force. "I feel safer out there with the majority of those gals behind the wheel," one man told me.

Norma McNamara, mother of two from Portland, Maine, wakes up at 4 a.m. to begin her run. Right: Mae Stephens has been a trucker for 30 years.

More important, perhaps, is the fact that customers have been increasingly asking for lady truckers to haul "sensitive" loads. Both Darlene Dwyer and Marlene Day have become experts in the handling of tricky freight such as computer systems, Grand Prix cars, medical equipment and valuable works of art.

Despite the obstacles, life is improving for women truckers. Most truck stops now have separate shower facilities. Gone are the days, mostly, when a lady driver had to find a man willing to "stand guard" for her outside a men's room. Another sign of women's influence is the more domestic atmosphere of the sleeper compartments in the tractor cabs: Now there are double bunks, hot-and-cold running water, portable toilets and microwave ovens, not to mention cuddly stuffed animals as well as live pets.

Because of the difficulty in finding qualified drivers, trucking schools are actively seeking to enlist women of all ages. "They're all going after the female labor market," says Kathleen Coy, an executive at North American Van Lines, "and the industry is looking at predictions that within the next several years many of the new drivers will be women."

Unlike some men who "raise hell" on the road, women are a positive force. Says one male trucker, "I feel safer with those gals behind the wheel."

Most will become employees of companies, earning union wages. Of the 1.6 million heaviest rigs on America's highways, less than 20 percent are driven by owner-operators. Only a handful of these entrepreneurs, perhaps 9000, are women; and the vast majority of those are part of husband-wife teams. Single women like Darlene Dwyer, who drive their own trucks by themselves, are in a small but special category. Dwyer may be an exception to the rule, but she is the quintessential lady trucker.

"No matter how lonely it gets out here, I'm always aware that I'm running my own business," she says. "My life force comes out of this truck. Last year I met a male driver, at a truck stop of all places, and now we're engaged. We plan to run together when we get married. But he knows how much my work means to me and that the truck comes first in my life because it supports me. This is what I love, what I do, what I am."

The sun has gone down, and we are back on the road in darkness. Dwyer shifts by ear, as if there were diesel fuel in her blood. On the dashboard, dozens of luminous dials are potential warnings of trouble with temperature, pressure, water, fuel, oil, electricity, brakes, axles. Dwyer is alert to it all, not to mention the potential dangers on the highway itself. It's impossible, she reminds me, for an 80,000-pound rig going 60 mph to stop on a dime.

"I prefer to be out here at night," she says. "I love it when the road is clear. There's more freedom."

A self-confessed workaholic, Dwyer drives 10 hours at a time, with as few breaks as possible. Late at night, when she wants to sleep, she pulls to the side of the road or finds a shopping center where she can park. But then she is back up at 5 a.m. and, after brushing her teeth with water from a jug, she keeps on running.

At age 21, she answered an ad for a co-driving job and got her training all over the country from a few veteran male truckers. Along the way, she survived a wreck in Utah after her rig slid on ice and nearly rolled down a ravine. She has walked miles for help after mechanical breakdowns, and she learned to handle all the paperwork involving mileage and taxes. To buy her first tractor, a used model, she put down $1000 and paid off the remaining $28,000 in two years. Her hands are callused and tough from physical labor, but she shares with all truckers a sense of romance, because she has seen so much beauty from behind the windshield. Relishing her hard-won feelings of freedom and, yes, even power, she seems to embody the motto inscribed on the back of her Kenworth cab:

"Without dreams, there is no need to work. Without work, there is no need to dream. Go for it!"

Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, who once fled the Nazis, is the refugee's greatest advocate

Knowing The Nightmare, He Can Foster The Dream

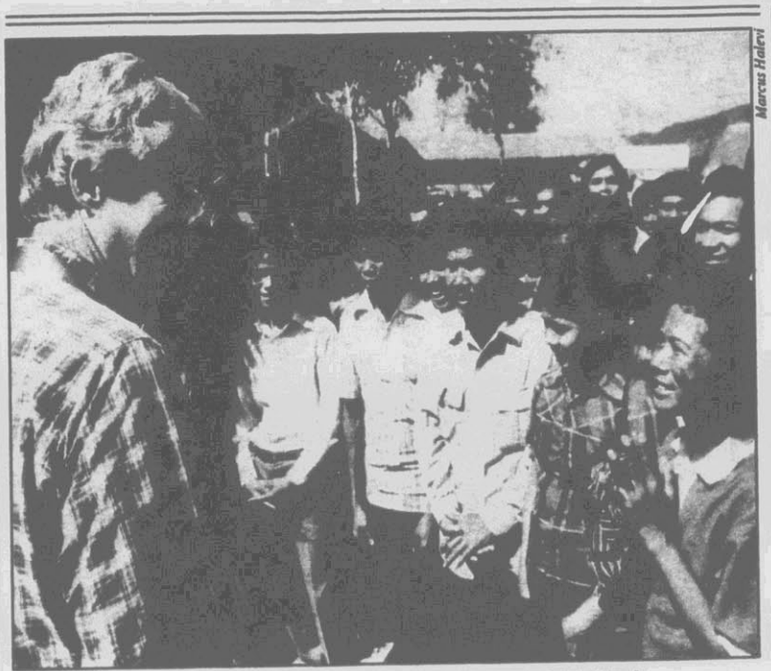
THE PHOTOGRAPH IS before me, but even without it, I could never forget that scene. There are two refugees in the foreground—a young woman and a middle-aged man. While his face shows concern, hers is contorted into a mask of pain; her hand covers her face, and tears are coursing down her cheeks. In the background, her young husband and their year-old child look on while the older man uses his handkerchief to daub her tears. I was there when it happened, and, like everyone else in that little shack, I felt her anguish run through me like a knife.

Her name is Onn Rith, and she is 22. For seven years, she has lived in the Khao-I-Dang refugee camp in Thailand, along the Cambodian border, a place of barbed wire and armed guards and communal dirt-floored huts. She is crying because she has lost all hope of ever leaving this place. She has spent one-third of her life here; she is sure she will die here.

Rudy Boschwitz, the man who is comforting her, is also a refugee, although from a different place and time. Fifty-six years ago, his father was dismissed from his position as a judge in Berlin, simply because he was a Jew. Rudy Boschwitz was just 2 years old when his family left Berlin and wandered through Czechoslovakia and Switzerland, Holland and England, until, years later, they found a home in the United States. "You should have hope," he tells the young woman gently, and perhaps, coming from him, the words will have some effect. "You should have hope," he says again. And he is proof that there can be hope for refugees.

Rudy Boschwitz, refugee, is a United States Senator.

BY MICHAEL RYAN



Marcus Halevi

Senator Boschwitz greets Cambodian refugees at Site Two camp in Thailand.

We are sitting in the incongruous comfort of the Bangkok Sheraton that night, helicoptered back from a day of watching human misery along the border. The junior Senator from Minnesota is being realistic.

"Refugees are not a popular subject," he says. "You'll go back and write your article, and I'll get lots of letters from people who say you should spend your money on locals—don't even consider bringing in anybody new. A lot of people have a great resentment of refugees. They forget that if it wasn't them or their parents, then their grandparents or great-grandparents were refugees."

About 600,000 new people enter this country legally every year. Senator Boschwitz believes that we can handle more than that—and that we should. "People think that refugees take away jobs and depress wage levels," he says. "They forget that the time when millions were coming in every year was the time of the fastest development of this country. Refugees are the ultimate consumers: They come here with nothing, and they have to start buying. They create new jobs, and they're pretty energetic people. I mean, if you can get in a boat and go straight out to sea and cope with pirates and cope with smugglers and come across rivers and take great risks—these are not easy things to do. These are qualities that have made Americans such an energetic and progressive group."

The United States ended its military involvement in Southeast Asia in 1975, but the sufferings of the people in the region have never ended. Thailand has become an unwilling reception center for Vietnamese who work their way through the war zones of Cambodia to seek safety in Thai camps. The maniacal genocide that ravaged Cambodia, Thailand's neighbor, has abated. Many have sought refuge from the brutality in camps along the Thai border; ironically, so have many of the perpetrators, who still launch raids from their camps. In the northeast, thousands of Hmong tribesmen—the staunch allies of the U.S. during the war—have left their homes in the highlands for camps along the Thai side of the Laotian border.

It is easy to see the misery of these people; what is astounding to a visitor is their strength. Earlier in the week, we were in a place called Chiang Kham, in the highlands near the Thai border with Laos. Families of Hmong tribespeople—men and women, young and old, some of them holding young babies to their breasts—had walked six hours through the jungle to meet Senator Boschwitz.

Here was Nane Chia Shai, who lost four children when mortars were fired on the band of refugees with whom he had escaped from Laos. Here were Vang Kong and Cha Cher Thong, a resistance fighter and a survivor of a "reeducation camp," telling about the scores who had died in the groups they escaped with. And here were sergeants, lieutenants and private soldiers, forward air controllers and even a pilot, all of whom had fought side by side with American troops.

Now they were in Thailand illegally, hoping for a chance at a new life in the West but knowing that their troubles were far from over. Although nobody mentions it, everybody knows that just last November a Thai army patrol—acting on its own, according to officials—pushed a group of Hmong back across the border. Thirty-three were slaughtered. Quietly, with dignity, they told their stories—not asking for sympathy, just a chance to rebuild their lives.

"We're working for you," Boschwitz told them. "Learn English, study hard and be ready to work hard when you come to the United States."

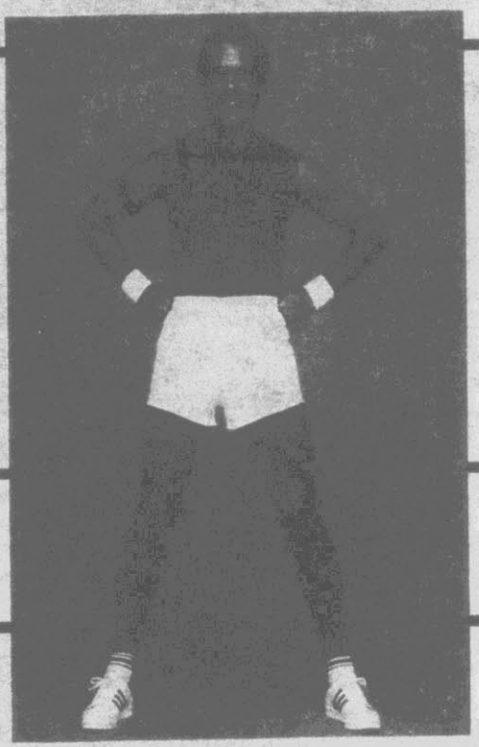
FLATTEN YOUR STOMACH FOR MEN OVER 40



BY A. DUGAN AND THE EDITORS OF CONSUMER GUIDE®

WHAT DIET ALONE WON'T DO, AND SIT-UPS WON'T DO— THIS BOOK CAN DO FOR MEN OVER 40 . . . OR YOUR MONEY BACK!

It's never too late to flatten your stomach and narrow your waistline. But as you have probably noticed, diets alone are not enough.

That is especially true as you get older. Even if you keep your weight down and get some exercise, your stomach may bulge and sag because your abdominal muscles are not properly toned.

Sit-ups alone work on only some of these muscles. But unless you exercise all four major abdominal muscles—your stomach may be hard, but it won't be flat.

This new book shows you how to flatten your stomach by exercising all—and not just some—of your stomach muscles. And it is specially designed to meet the needs of men over 40. Strenuous exercises are avoided . . . so you need not be in shape to get started.* After you get going, you progress at your own speed to intermediate and advanced programs. And each level includes exercises to strengthen your back and give your cardiovascular system vital aerobic conditioning.

Give this NEW QUICK, EASY WAY TO FLATTEN YOUR STOMACH FOR MEN OVER 40 a try. It has easy-to-follow directions. All exercises are fully illustrated in color. Plus it's spiral bound to stay open and lie flat while you exercise. See if you don't feel more fit, energetic and self-confident in just a few short weeks. You must get the results you want or we'll give you your money back. So don't wait any longer. Put your order in the mail today!

For all the hardship, the Hmong have it easiest getting permission to enter the U.S. Some Cambodians who want to resettle may never find a new home.

Take Onn Rith. After she dried her tears, she told a story that was heart-rending but far from unusual. Back in the confusion of the early 1980s, when thousands of Cambodians were interviewed for resettlement in the United States, a bureaucrat misread a map. He thought that her home village lay in an area of Khmer Rouge strength and concluded that she must have collaborated with the Pol Pot government in its brutal genocide—even though she was only 9 years old when the Communist insurgents conquered her country. Her application to come to the U.S. was denied. An uncle in Canada said he was too poor to support her; no other country would take her.

"We will try to help you," Boschwitz told Onn Rith as he left her hut. Later, he said he was reminded of another refugee, in another bureaucratic nightmare.

"I don't remember much about my passage," the Senator told me, in a van bumping along the dusty road between two camps. "I was only 2 when we left Berlin. I remember a little about Holland, and I remember England, but not the rest, and my father didn't like to talk about it much. But my father-in-law used to tell me his stories—about how he went to the American consul in Zurich, and the man made it very clear that he didn't want any more refugees, he didn't want any more Jews. His family went across France to Portugal, and the American consul there would make my father-in-law stand in front of his desk, hat in hand—they wouldn't let you sit down. They'd hardly look up as they read your case. Finally, they went by boat to Brazil, and my father-in-law was standing before the American consul in São Paulo.

"The consul said, 'What is your name?'

"My father-in-law said, 'Lowenstein.'

"The consul looked at the paper and said, 'You spell it in a funny way. Do you have any family?'

"He said, 'I have a brother in Johannesburg.'

"The consul jumped up and said, 'Your brother befriended me when I was in Johannesburg.' He gave him a visa. And that's how my father-in-law came to the United States."

Small accidents of fate, as Rudy Boschwitz knows well, can determine the course of a refugee's life.

A worker in one of the camps takes me aside. "The people seem happy during the day," she says, "but it's at night that the frustration comes—and the hopelessness. We have one case where a husband and wife tried to kill themselves by banging their heads against the floor after their applications were denied. We keep telling them, 'Where there's life, there's hope,' but it's hard for them."

A few feet away—as they have for two days now—refugees are telling Rudy Boschwitz their stories, and he is listening, encouraging, promising to try to help. In turn, he makes them promise to work hard, to learn job skills, to be ready to contribute to their new countries. Boschwitz is a Republican who leans toward the conservative. He believes that states should make it difficult for new arrivals to collect welfare, in order to encourage them to work. "My father sponsored 226 refugees for immigration to the United States," he says, "and not one of them ever went on public assistance." His doctrine of hard work has eager listeners here. But most of all, they seem to be grabbing at the hope he offers, soaking it up through their eyes and pores. Perhaps tonight the hopelessness will dim a bit.

Nothing can prepare an American for Site Two. Here, at the largest of the Thai camps, 160,000 people live. It seems that almost all of them have come to line the dirt boulevard that leads to the administration building. They applaud and sing and hold up placards that say "We Need Education" and "America Can Help Us." As he walks along the road, Boschwitz again and again returns the wai, the traditional greeting of respect, hands folded prayerfully before his face. The emotion here is almost palpable; the yearnings of these people fill the camp air. When Boschwitz leaves, they all turn out again to see him off. The van drives off to the applause of thousands. They know that their visitor is going home to try to help them.

"We'll go back, and we'll talk to people, and we'll make some progress," Boschwitz says. "Things will get better." He seems a bit more subdued as he says it. Most of the time, his demeanor seems to spring directly from an energetic combination of his lawyer's mind and his puppy-dog enthusiasm, but now he is a bit more serious, senatorial. "We'll make some progress," he says, and he believes it. But the progress will be slow.

After all, refugees are not a popular subject.

There are several ways you can help refugees in Southeast Asia. One is to write to your Representative and Senators, urging them to encourage the Administration to act more forcefully to aid the inhabitants of the camps in Thailand. There are also organizations that accept contributions for refugees and place American volunteers in camps, where they can do the most good. Two of these are: International Rescue Committee, Dept. P, 386 Park Avenue South, New York, N.Y. 10016; and American Refugee Committee, Dept. P, 2344 Nicollet Avenue, Suite 350, Minneapolis, Minn. 55404.

BY JAMES BRADY

Sam Waterston

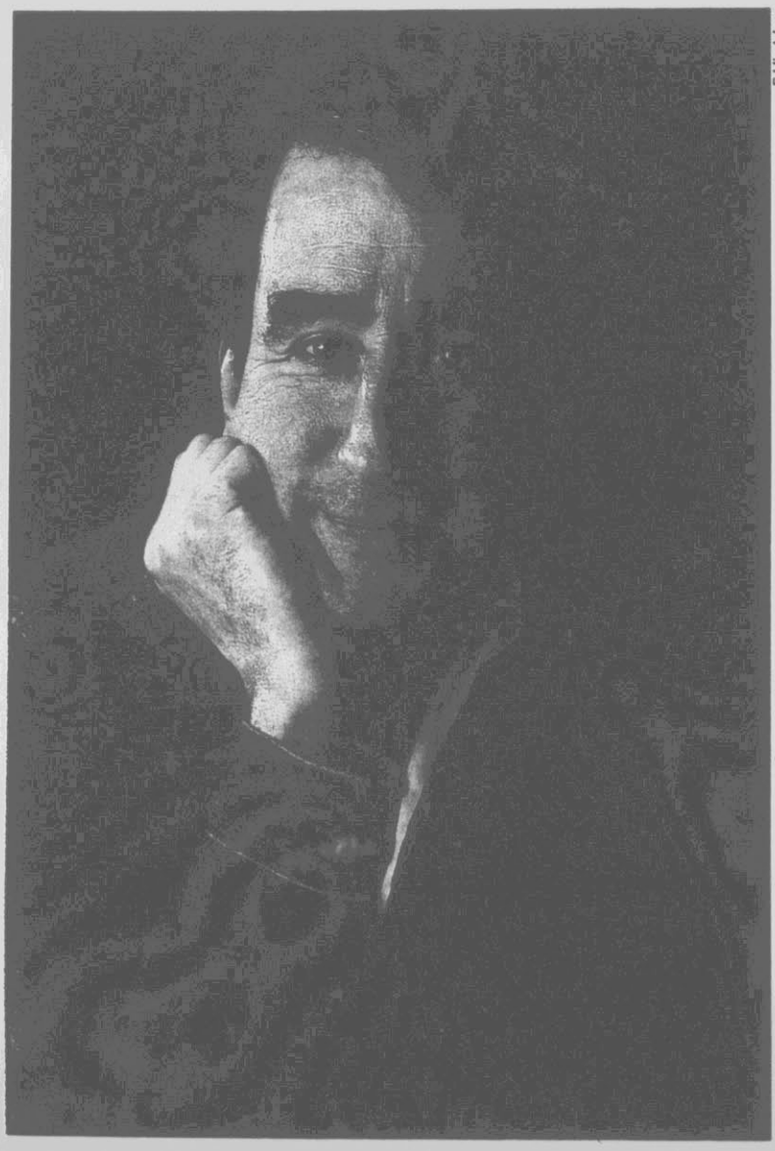
SAM WATERSTON went to Groton and Yale and looks it—a tall, lean, long-nosed man with hair that behaves—the sort of fellow you assume wears crisply ironed underwear. He is also one of our finest actors, whether on Broadway or on TV or in the movies. And it would be wrong to think, because of his schooling, that this was just a rich man's son dabbling in theater. His father taught school; Groton and Yale were on scholarship.

BORN: Nov. 15, 1940, in Cambridge, Mass. PERSONAL: Previous marriage to Barbara Johns; one son. Married Lynn Louisa Woodruff in 1976; three children. FILMS: Include Savages, 1972; The Great Gatsby, 1974; Rancho Deluxe, 1975; Interiors, 1978; Capricorn One, 1978; Heaven's Gate, 1980; The Killing Fields, 1984; Just Between Friends, 1986; Hannah and Her Sisters, 1986; September, 1987. BROADWAY: Includes The Trial of the Catonsville Nine, 1971; Much Ado About Nothing, 1972; A Doll's House, 1975; Lunch Hour, 1980; A Walk in the Woods, 1988. TV: Includes The Glass Menagerie, 1973; Friendly Fire, 1979; Q.E.D., 1982; Oppenheimer, 1982; Gore Vidal's Lincoln, 1988; Terrorist on Trial, 1988.

This year Sam has been working a lot. But then, he always does. He and Mary Tyler Moore did an NBC miniseries on Lincoln (one critic called Sam "magnetic and persuasive"); he co-starred with Robert Prosky on stage in A Walk in the Woods, described as the best new American play; and, by the time you read this, he may be off to Europe for another role.

On the day I was due to see his play and then drop by the dressing room afterward, I had lunch with Swoosie Kurtz. She'd read for a role with Waterston. "He talks like a director, not an actor," she said. "He knows exactly what works and doesn't work in a script."

He also knows what he wants. He wanted to play Nick Carraway, the pivotal figure in The Great Gatsby around whom the other characters revolve. He got the role and was so good that some critics thought he, not Robert Redford, should have played Gatsby. Another role he set out to win was that of the journalist in The Killing Fields. He got an Oscar nomination for it. He has taken on risky jobs, as in this year's controversial TV film Terrorist on Trial, which asked whether an Arab accused of terrorism could get a fair trial in America.



Eddie Adams

Waterston will be 48 on Nov. 15 and has been acting since his dad directed him in a school version of Antigone. At Yale, he was in the dramatic society, but when he went off to Paris for a junior year at the Sorbonne, he felt he was over-theatered and intended to stay away from acting. Instead, he fell in with a group of expatriate American actors and went right back to work.

To understand just how good Waterston is, think of the people he has worked with: Woody Allen, Katharine Hepburn, Walter Matthau, Liv Ullmann, Glenn Close, Joe Papp, Gilda Radner, Carol Burnett, Jeff Bridges and, of course, Redford and Miss Moore.

This season's play, A Walk in the Woods, is a two-character comedy in which he and Prosky play the American and Russian disarmament experts meeting in Geneva to negotiate a nuclear treaty. Waterston is boyish, hopeful, intense; Prosky older, playful, cynically convinced neither side really wants to cut a deal that would leave the U.S. simply as "a rich Canada" and Russia as "a huge Poland."

Sam Waterston and Robert Prosky make you laugh. But they do something even more disturbing: They make you think.

BRADY'S BITS

I am always intimidated going backstage. Once past the stage door, you're in the terrain of theater people. Just inside, a stagehand was watching a Mets game on a mini-TV. Waterston was waiting. He'd done a matinee and an evening show, and I assumed he was tired. "Sometimes you're down," he admitted, "but two performances can be invigorating." He stays in New York most nights, but this evening he was going home to Connecticut. He has four kids. The youngest, 5, hadn't seen A Walk in the Woods. "It's not a children's play," he said, "but my 11-year-old daughter can repeat the lines better than I do." When I left, the stagehand was celebrating: "The Mets won! Gooden threw a shutout."

Doll shown smaller than actual size of approximately 16".

Little Bo Peep

For generations, dollmakers have drawn inspiration from the charming figures who live only in storybook lore.

Little Bo Peep. A sweet shepherdess. Lovingly sculpted in fine imported porcelain. Hand-painted. And dressed adorably in layer after layer of pretty petticoats, pantaloons and skirts.

COURTYARD by Marriott

Courtyard by Marriott gives you so much for $39,* anybody would feel guilty taking our towels.

Things like spacious rooms with king-size beds. Cable TV with HBO and ESPN. A swimming pool, whirlpool and exercise room. An inviting lounge and full-service restaurant. Plus thoughtful little touches like in-room coffee service. And, of course, lots of fresh, clean towels.

All this is capped off by the kind of outstanding Marriott service that has inspired professional travel planners to rank Courtyard Hotels the best in the moderate-priced hotel segment.

There are now 100 Courtyard Hotels located across the country. There are also a limited number of rooms available at this weekend rate, so call our reservation and information number today: 1-800-321-2211.

Get a great price on a great place to stay.

How much of his lean, handsome and androgynous-looking face does Michael Jackson—the world-famous song-and-dance entertainer, who turns 30 next month—owe to heredity and how much to the expertise of the plastic surgeon?

Jackson and his supporters maintain that to date he has undergone only two cosmetic surgeries: a nose-job and a cleft-chin job.

His detractors, however, without any evidence, insist that Jackson also has submitted himself to cheek implants, chemical face-peels, skin bleachings, tattooed eyeliners, a forehead lift and almost any other surgical and cosmetic procedure that will help him achieve the physical perfection which he believes has been attained by his high-cheekboned role model—singer Diana Ross.

Whatever the motivation or cost, Michael Jackson—one of the wealthiest, most charitable and bizarre performers of this era—seems driven constantly to alter his appearance until he finds the look with which he can peaceably live.

Girls Who Binge and Purge

Ever hear of bulimia? It's a disorder in which people first gorge themselves with food and then induce vomiting or some other method of elimination to control their weight. Several months ago, after surveying the eating patterns of 565 adolescent girls, researchers reported the results in the American Journal of Public Health. Among their findings: Girls who binge and purge also get drunk and depressed more frequently, and smoke cigarettes and marijuana more frequently, than their normal classmates.

Bulimia is becoming more common, affecting as many as 19% of college-age women. Unfortunately, it is a weight-control flop. According to the survey, most of the girls who told researchers that they had binged and purged to control their weight were still heavier than those respondents who had not indulged in bulimia.

From the Ronald Reagan Joke File

"As you know, I recently visited Mexico to meet with President De la Madrid. And I was reminded in that visit of when I was governor of California and had been asked by the then President to go down and represent him there... On this first visit to Mexico, I gave a speech to a rather large audience and then sat down to rather unenthusiastic and scattered applause. I was embarrassed and tried to cover all of that, because what made it worse was that the next speaker up was speaking in Spanish, which I didn't understand, but he was getting interrupted virtually every line with most enthusiastic applause.

"So, I started clapping before anyone else and longer than anyone else until our ambassador leaned over and said to me, 'I wouldn't do that if I were you. He's interpreting your speech.'"

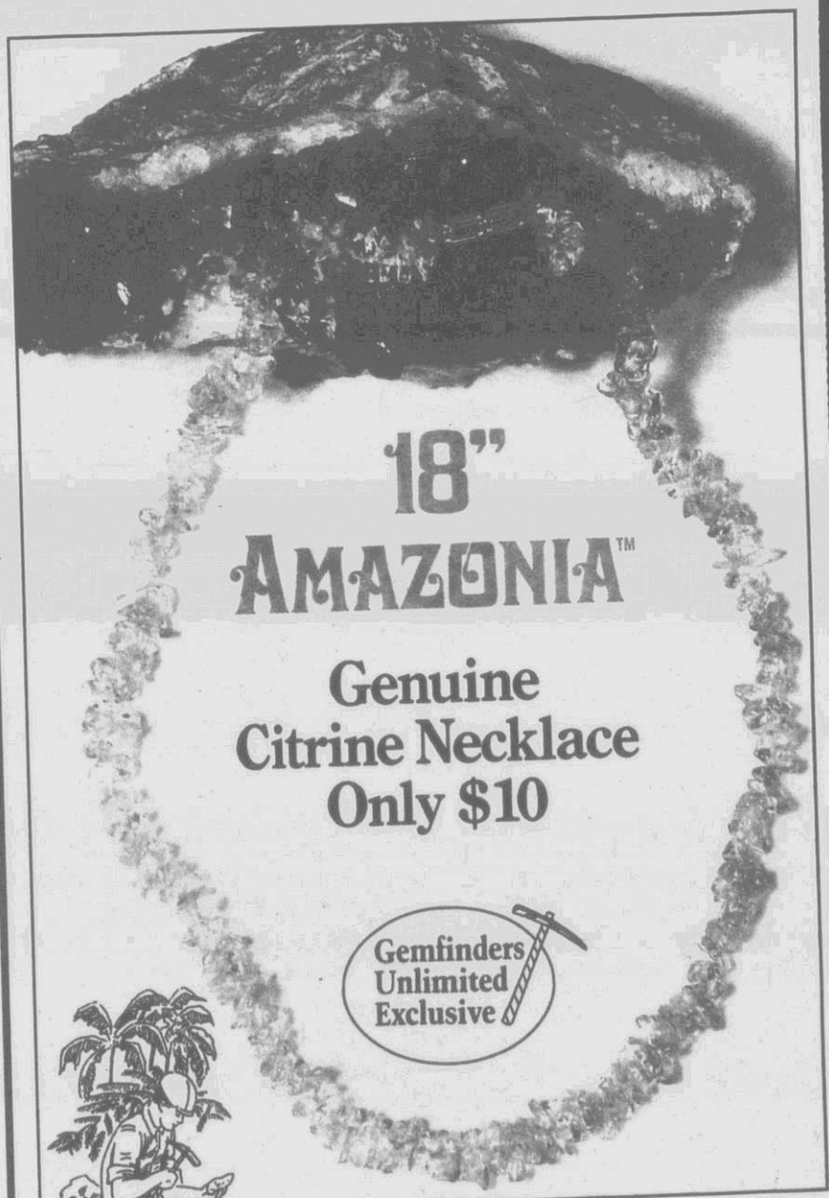
Asthma Update

In our May 29 issue, we ran an item on asthma medications which contained a typographical error. Instead of "beta antagonists," the correct term should have been beta agonists. Beta antagonists are drugs which inhibit the action of another substance in the body. Beta agonists are drugs which stimulate a desired action in the body. Sorry.



In the days of old, it was believed that Citrine could help the body heal itself. Citrine was used to cure bad vision. First the gem was soaked in wine for 3 days, then it would be placed on the eye.

Today, it's been discovered that Citrine can truly be an electrifying experience. When heated, this remarkable quartz actually produces an electrical charge!

When Gemfinders Unlimited discovered this alluring necklace, we could not wait to add it to our collection. We search all over to find the most distinctive jewelry that can be offered to you at very special prices—and the Amazonia Citrine Necklace simply could not be passed up.

Extracted from remote mines deep in the Brazilian Amazon jungle, our rough stones are shipped to India where the citrine is pried from the rough rock. Then the quartz is put into barrels of water, and turned continuously until each gem is tumbled smooth. The citrine is then drilled through and hand strung by master craftsmen—the same way it's been done for generations.

Each necklace is a full 18" long and consists of a minimum of 100 carats of genuine citrine gems. We've even added a barrel clasp for added security.

You can almost sense the power of this extraordinary necklace the moment you slip it on. And Citrine...November's birthstone...makes a wonderful gift for someone special—for birthdays, anniversaries or just to say "I Love You."

This may be the only chance you'll ever have to buy the Amazonia™ Citrine Necklace at the incredibly low price of $10. Our supplies are restricted to 100,000 necklaces, so we must limit our offer to only three per household. We guarantee that you will be 100% satisfied. We ship on a first come, first served basis with all orders shipped within 60 days.

TO ORDER: The Amazonia™ Citrine Necklace send your name, address, zip code and check or money order for $10 plus $2.95 postage and handling for each necklace to Gemfinders Unlimited, Box 4165, Dept. PA91-PC, Huntington Station, NY 11746. IA, IL, MI, NJ and NY residents add sales tax.

Somebody made her mad: Ella and athlete

Monkey Shines: An Experiment in Fear is a deliciously scary horror story about the relationship between a recently crippled athlete and Ella, the monkey trained to help him, who begins to act out his darkest instincts. Ella, whose real name is Boo, actually was destined to live with a disabled person. But her owner couldn't bear to part with her. After some of the stunts Boo learned to do for this movie, her owner may be having second thoughts. Veteran horror director George Romero says the tricks were easy to teach. "What was difficult," he explains, "was getting Boo to look as if she was thinking or listening. Finally, her trainer tried pulling out a snake or a mouse to make her look curious, and it worked…I'm going to try it with actors next time."

The Big Show of 1787

What if TV had been around in 1787 and 1788 to cover the heated debates surrounding ratification of the U.S. Constitution? Phil Donahue would have worked his audience about what should be included and what left out and why. William F. Buckley would have interrogated people like Alexander Hamilton. Walter Cronkite would have reported the big story. And that's what happens—all in 1980s dress and lingo—on An Empire of Reason. You'll never have more fun learning. The shocking stories of four military officers who blew the whistle

Shelly Katz

How They Punish Heroes

By Jack Anderson

THIS IS THE STORY OF FOUR LONELY HEROES. Military men who became privy to wrongdoing and refused to condone it. Men who blew the whistle—then found themselves clapped into psychiatric wards and declared mental misfits by the authorities. Let the record show that it is not the Pentagon's policy to discredit whistle-blowers by labeling them psychotics. Yet they can be forced to submit to an "administrative evaluation" to determine their fitness for duty.

"There have been abuses of the fitness-for-duty psychological evaluations," says Dr. R. Dale Walker, a former Air Force psychiatrist who now heads the American Psychiatric Association's committee on the abuse and misuse of psychiatry in the United States. "There are horror stories all the time in the military," says James Klimaski, an attorney in Washington, D.C., who specializes in military law.

These four did not violate military regulations; they revealed nothing that would jeopardize military security. Yet the armed forces rewarded them by attempting to label them psychologically "unfit for duty."

Michael Tufariello. He was an 18-year Navy veteran, a chief petty officer with a collection of combat decorations. While payroll supervisor at the Dallas Naval Air Station, he discovered that some reservists were being paid for work they didn't do. Tufariello reported the fraud to higher-ups. He was told to forget it. But he persisted. Then he received a more explicit warning: He'd better back off, or he'd get a "poor performance evaluation." Finally, he was dismissed from his job and told to spend a few days at home.

Several days later, he was summoned back to the base. When he arrived, Tufariello was escorted without explanation to a car, which whisked him to the Sheppard Air Force Base hospital 150 miles away. He was confined in the mental ward for four days. "My uniform was taken away, and I was issued blue-striped pajamas and slippers decorated with happy faces," he says. "The ward looked just like the one in the movie One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest."

They refused to condone the corruption they saw around them—and they paid a price

Tufariello was locked up on a Friday. His anxious family wasn't notified until the next day. Not until late Monday afternoon did a psychiatrist get around to examining him. The doctor quickly cleared him and released him for duty.

If the attempt to portray Tufariello as a mental case failed the mark as diagnosis, it was highly effective as intimidation. He was removed as payroll supervisor and assigned menial tasks.

"Few if any of my shipmates spoke to me," he says. "I received the worst evaluation of my career, and I was not recommended for promotion." What did he do about it? "I dropped the fraud charges," he confesses.

But later on Tufariello wrote to several Congressmen about the incident. This led to an investigation by the Office of the Naval Inspector General. The investigators, though unschooled in psychiatry, concluded that Tufariello displayed "a behavior pattern" that generated "a concern for his mental stability." Still, the investigators acknowledged that Tufariello "had been correct," that the practice of paying no-show reservists was a "violation."

The disconsolate Tufariello, bypassed for promotion after the first poor evaluation in his career, retired last year from the Navy at age 39. Two weeks before his retirement, he received a Letter of Commendation from the Navy for uncovering payroll fraud in excess of $100,000.

his 16th birthday and earned three degrees in psychology.

He dreamed of a military career, accepted an Air Force commission and signed on as chief of mental health services at Seymour Johnson Air Force Base in North Carolina. His work won him the Meritorious Service Medal, the military's third-highest service award.

Then Luedtke was granted an interservice transfer to the Navy, which assigned him to the naval air station near Memphis. He discovered that Navy recruiters, under pressure to meet quotas, were signing up misfits who couldn't cope. Many wound up in the brig, where they were punished instead of treated.

Luedtke submitted blunt case reports, criticizing the recruiting practices and complaining about inhumane treatment. This caused a stirring of alarm among his superiors, who sought to deflect the stinging reports. First they tried soft talk; then their entreaties turned to threats.

Conspiring behind his back, his superiors set him up. He was hustled off to Bethesda, Md., under escort, and committed against his will to the psychiatric ward of the National Naval Medical Center. The commitment papers labeled him as "hypomanic" and "manic depressive."

A psychiatric board later ruled the diagnosis was erroneous and recommended that Luedtke be returned to duty. But the damage had been done.

The victim's aggrieved father, Col. Karl Luedtke, wrote to the Secretary of the Navy: "You cannot imagine the mental anguish I have endured... to have prepared an only son for a brilliant career in the service of his country... only to have him crucified. With his dreams blasted, his character assassinated and his record blemished beyond repair, he had no alternative but to submit his resignation."

Peter Cole. When Cole was a young cadet, a high-ranking officer put it to him straight. "Pete," he said, "you're smart enough. If you keep your mouth shut for 20 years, you'll wear stars." But Cole disregarded the advice.

At West Point, he turned in fellow cadets for drug use. This created a confrontation that landed him in the psychiatric ward at Walter Reed Army Hospital in Washington, D.C. He retained a military attorney who fought to have his record cleared.

Eventually, he was assigned as a battalion logistics officer in Germany, where he investigated the loss of combat equipment. He found evidence of massive theft that would affect the combat readiness of the troops. Cole had to go over the head of his superior to report his findings.

Instead of praise for his diligence, he was abruptly relieved of his duties, reassigned to nonexistent Army positions, given a poor officer evaluation and threatened with court-martial. But the inspector general, having been alerted, investigated Cole's charges. They turned out to be not only true but also Armywide. More than $118 million worth of war matériel was missing.

This embarrassed some generals, whose outrage was directed not at the wholesale thievery but at the officer who exposed it. One general wrote to another: "If you decide to keep him on, he probably will require extensive psychiatric counseling." But it wasn't Cole's mental health that concerned them.

The behavior of his superiors caused Cole to suspect that they would be pleased by his destruction. Under the pressure, he resigned. But he thought better of it afterward and began a legal battle for reinstatement. While he awaits the outcome, Cole, 41, is serving as a major in the Army National Guard in Texas.

John Kartak. He was a 19-year Army veteran, assigned to the recruiting station in Minneapolis, where misfits were being recruited to meet quotas. Sometimes documents even were forged to qualify the unqualified.

Kartak found himself engulfed in the whisperings and winkings that attend backroom fraud. But he refused to join the conspiracy. Once he was ordered to sign a bogus reference letter from a high school and a bogus police report saying a recruit had no record; he wouldn't do it. Instead, he called an Army hotline and blew the whistle.

One of Kartak's superiors ordered him into a local Veterans Administration hospital for psychological evaluation. The officer explained to the hospital: "He has lodged numerous complaints recently... I find his behavior highly unstable. I am concerned that he may do something to harm himself or others."

The examining psychologist didn't think so and pronounced Kartak "fit for duty." But Kartak was kept under the cheerless scrutiny of his superiors. He was ostracized, threatened and intimidated by his co-workers, who were implicated in the scandal. Then he was sent back for another psychological evaluation—this time to the Great Lakes Naval Hospital, near Chicago.

"That one really hurt the most," Kartak, now 41, says ruefully. It reminded him "how the system really worked." Again, the psychiatrist found nothing wrong with him and returned Kartak to duty.

Meanwhile, the inspector general confirmed Kartak's charges. No less than 58 people in the Minnesota recruiting battalion had engaged in such illegal acts as forging diplomas and concealing criminal records so marginal recruits could be signed up. One recruiter demanded sex from a female recruit; several were dealing and using drugs and running a prostitution ring; two were charged with receiving stolen goods purchased from criminals whom they had recruited.

Kartak had cut and had been cut. He had suffered and had survived and had won. But the message is all too clear: The blowing of whistles can be hazardous to your mental health.

INSECTS:
SOME OF YOUR WORST FEARS
MAY BE TRUE.
A comprehensive look at how bugs affect our lives, from RAID,® America's most trusted name in insect protection.
ENTER THE RAID $50,000
SWEEPSTAKES
Details inside.

INSECTS ARE A THREAT TO EVERY HOME, EVERY FAMILY IN AMERICA.

Insects can carry the threat of sickness and disease. They can contaminate the food you eat. They can bite and sting. They can even weaken the structure of your home by eating away at floor and roof supports.

Bugs. From germ-spreading roaches to blood hungry fleas and mosquitoes. From ants that chew away at your home to wasps that can cause deadly allergic reactions. Bugs have been multiplying and evolving since dinosaurs roamed the earth. Some have even survived nuclear explosions. They seem unstoppable.

That's why Raid offers you this guidebook. It shares some of the world's most advanced and comprehensive knowledge about insects and insecticides. Read it. Keep it. Refer to it. You'll better understand bugs and their behavior. While we can't guarantee you a life free of bugs or the health problems they can cause, we can help you be prepared to better protect your home and family.

THE THREAT: ROACHES

THE FACTS.

Roaches have survived and thrived for over 300 million years. There are over 3,500 different varieties including the German, the American and the newest U.S. invader, the flying Asian cockroach. Even if you've heard them called Palmetto bugs or Water bugs, they're still roaches. They live and breed in almost every corner of the United States. So it's no surprise that so many American families have roach problems.

Most people think roaches are just smelly, filthy bugs. You clean, seal food up tight, and hope. Roaches are considered an embarrassing nuisance.

But roaches are actually a threat. We now know that roaches can carry bacteria that cause food poisoning, infectious hepatitis, dysentery and a wide array of other serious illnesses. Roaches can even cause allergic reactions among 50-60% of people who suffer from asthma. And these reactions can range from simple sniffles to conditions where blood pressure falls, the heart weakens and breathing becomes rapid and difficult.

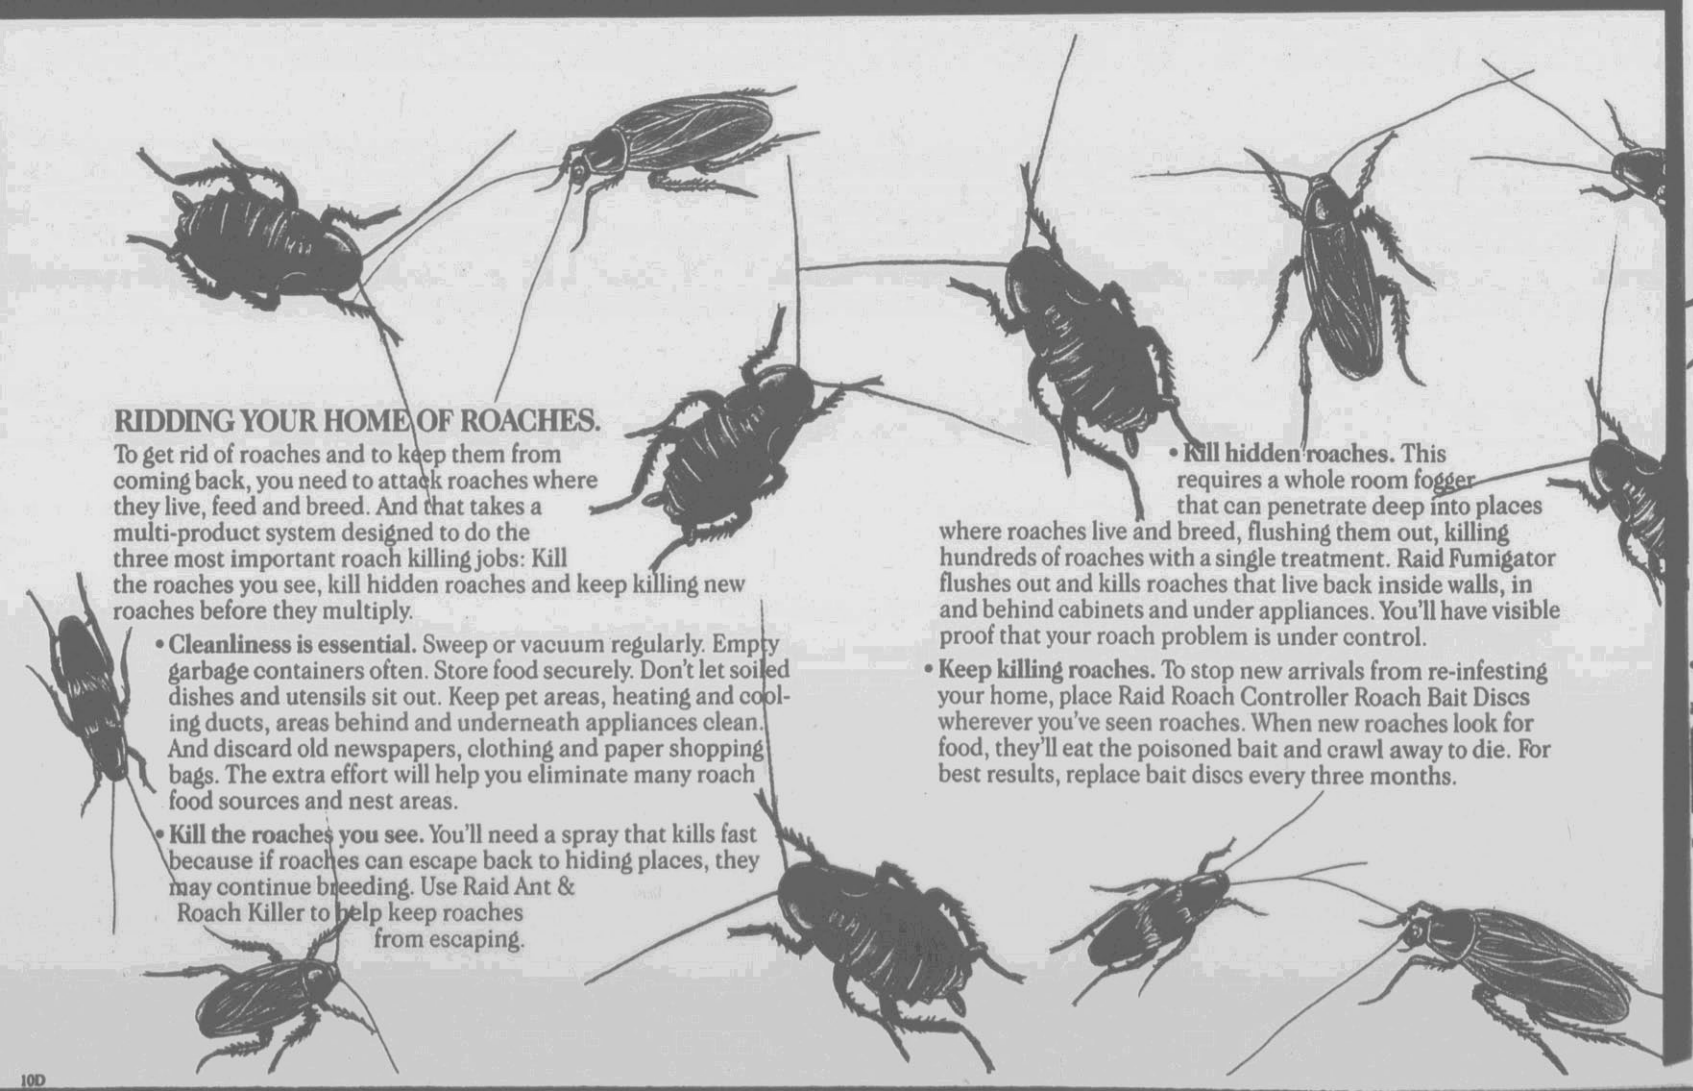
With these new facts, it's even more critical to understand how to win your war against roaches.

UNDERSTANDING ROACHES.

Roaches have simple needs. That's why they easily adapt to any living situation. They hide and breed in dark, warm and damp areas, primarily kitchens and bathrooms. And since they prefer the dark, roaches do most of their dirty work at night.

They'll infest even the cleanest homes because roaches don't just feed on crumbs or food left unprotected. They'll eat almost anything: Glue, leather, plant materials, animal hair, even dead roaches.

And roaches are incredible breeders. One female and her offspring can produce up to 20,000 young in a single year. As their numbers increase, food becomes more scarce, forcing them out, even in daylight. The fact is, that for every roach you see, there could be well over 100 more roaches hiding in your home.



RIDDING YOUR HOME OF ROACHES.

To get rid of roaches and to keep them from coming back, you need to attack roaches where they live, feed and breed. And that takes a multi-product system designed to do the three most important roach killing jobs: Kill the roaches you see, kill hidden roaches and keep killing new roaches before they multiply.

- Cleanliness is essential. Sweep or vacuum regularly. Empty garbage containers often. Store food securely. Don't let soiled dishes and utensils sit out. Keep pet areas, heating and cooling ducts, areas behind and underneath appliances clean. And discard old newspapers, clothing and paper shopping bags. The extra effort will help you eliminate many roach food sources and nest areas.
- Kill the roaches you see. You'll need a spray that kills fast because if roaches can escape back to hiding places, they may continue breeding. Use Raid Ant & Roach Killer to help keep roaches from escaping.
- Kill hidden roaches. This requires a whole room fogger that can penetrate deep into places where roaches live and breed, flushing them out, killing hundreds of roaches with a single treatment. Raid Fumigator flushes out and kills roaches that live back inside walls, in and behind cabinets and under appliances. You'll have visible proof that your roach problem is under control.
- Keep killing roaches. To stop new arrivals from re-infesting your home, place Raid Roach Controller Roach Bait Discs wherever you've seen roaches. When new roaches look for food, they'll eat the poisoned bait and crawl away to die. For best results, replace bait discs every three months.

OUTSMARTING ROACHES.

Getting rid of roaches is no simple task. To win your war against roaches, you need a system, a combination of Raid's most sophisticated insecticides ever.

Raid Ant & Roach Killer.* Its new formula has been tested and proven to be the fastest killing roach spray you can buy.

Raid Fumigator gives you today's most advanced and effective way to kill hidden roaches. In tests against aerosol foggers, Raid Fumigator killed up to twice as many roaches. Its patented non-aerosol smoke penetrates deeper into more places to flush out and kill more roaches where they live and breed.

Raid Roach Controller Bait Discs stand guard against roaches, killing them 24 hours a day, seven days a week for up to three long months. That's continuous 'round the clock protection you can use in any room of your home. And Raid Roach Controller is guaranteed to work or your money back.

NOBODY DOES IT DEADER.

FIGHTING BITING FLEAS

When you have fleas in your home, you actually have three very different problems: Biting adult fleas, their hatching eggs and the tougher resistant fleas that have become immune to certain insecticides. But you can better control all three problems with the Raid Flea Control System. It offers Raid's most advanced technology for fighting and controlling today's more complicated flea problems.

Raid Fogger gives you what ordinary foggers can't: The power to kill even those fleas that have become resistant or immune to certain insecticides. Raid Fogger uses nature's own insecticide, an extract of the Chrysanthemum plant, which fleas aren't immune to. With Raid Fogger, you'll kill thousands of fleas, even the tough resistant ones, with a single treatment.

Raid Flea Killer Plus Egg Stop Formula has a Plus no ordinary flea killer's got. It not only kills adult fleas, it kills hatching flea eggs as well. Its Egg Stop Formula contains an Insect Growth Regulator, the most scientifically advanced way to stop flea eggs from hatching into new generations of hungry, biting fleas.

NOBODY DOES IT DEADER.

THE THREAT: FLEAS

THE FACTS.

One of nature's smallest, yet nastiest pests is the flea, the dark brown wingless insect that inflicts painful bites on animals and humans, especially small children crawling or playing on carpets.

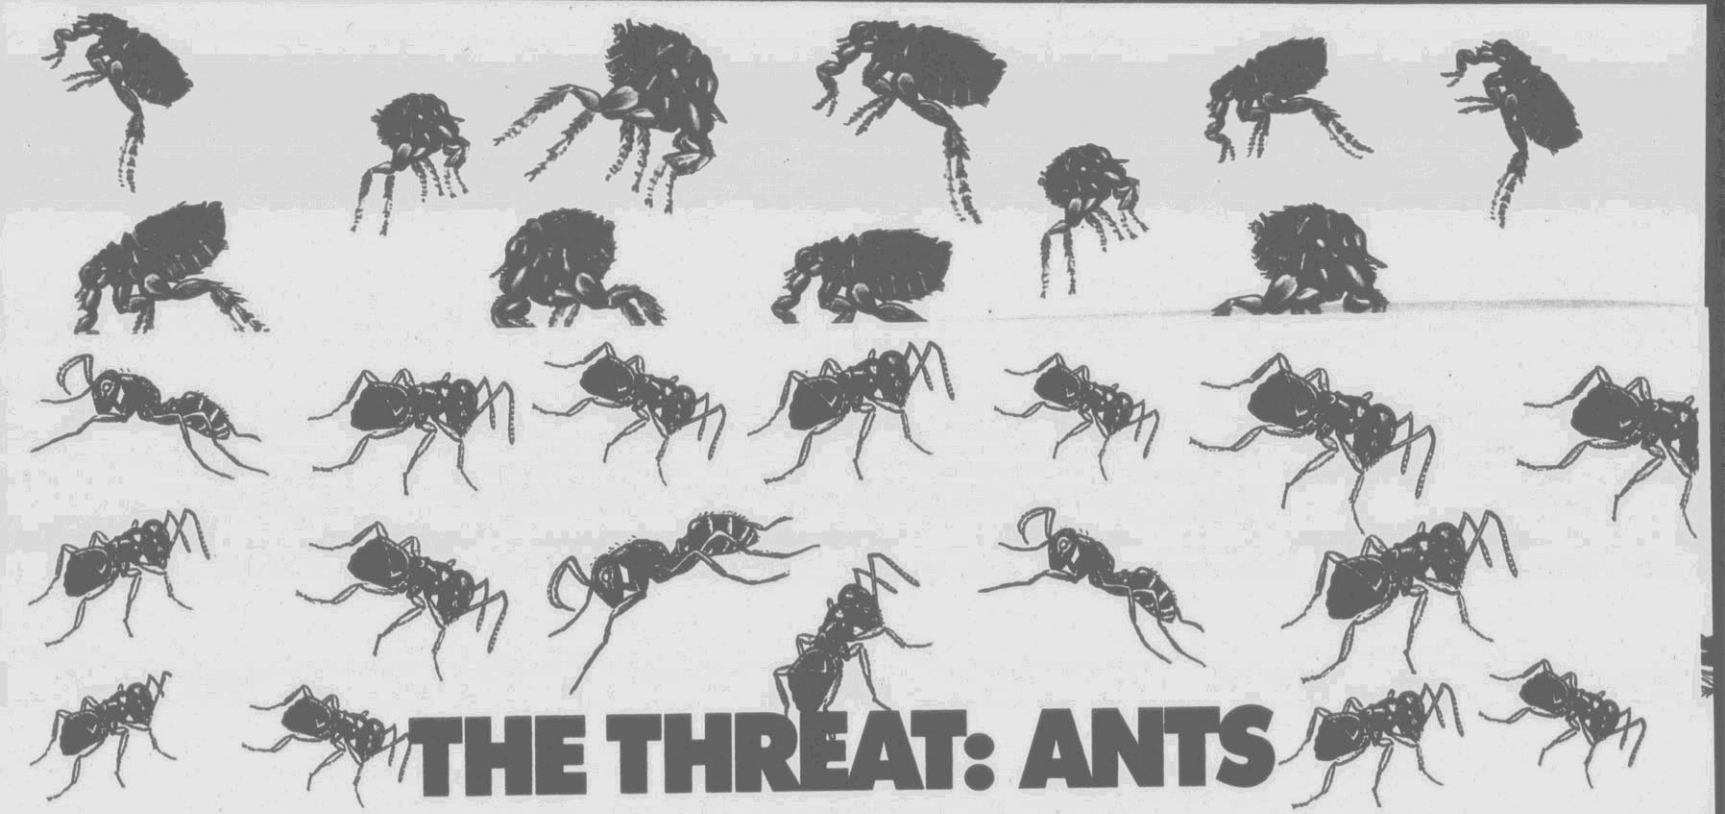
UNDERSTANDING FLEAS.

Fleas bite because they need a blood meal to survive and breed. That means fleas migrate to their food source: Dogs or even humans. Fleas jump onto their hosts outside, then enter your home on your family or dog. Once inside, one female flea can lay up to 400 eggs, planting them on carpeting, furniture and your dog. What's worse, when your dog shakes or moves about, it scatters eggs into even more places. In as little as 20 days, these eggs hatch, creating thousands of new breeders and biters.

RIDDING YOUR HOME OF FLEAS.

Because new fleas can continuously enter from outdoors, you should regularly repeat a four part protection schedule:

- Clean-up is key. Thoroughly vacuum carpeting, upholstered furniture, mattresses and your dog's favorite sleeping areas. Discard or clean out the vacuum bag immediately to get rid of fleas and eggs.
- Treat your dog. Regularly shampoo your dog and spray it with an insecticide that can kill both adult fleas and their hatching eggs. Raid Flea Killer Plus Egg Stop Formula will help stop your dog from the biting and scratching that can produce skin irritations and open sores.
- To get big flea problems under control. You'll need to use a whole room fogger. One that will fill an entire room with insecticide and penetrate deep into carpets and other flea hiding areas to kill thousands of fleas on contact. Make sure to use the fogger that can kill even those fleas that have become immune to certain insecticides: Raid Fogger.
- To keep flea eggs from hatching. Treat your home with Raid Flea Killer Plus Egg Stop Formula. By spraying carpets, upholstery, furniture and your dog's sleeping areas, you'll keep killing hatching flea eggs for up to 120 days.



THE THREAT: ANTS

THE FACTS.

Household ants. That's the pleasant sounding name for the family of ants that aren't so pleasant. They can contaminate foodstuffs and can carry disease and bacteria as well. And some types of household ants have even more nasty habits. Carpenter ants, like termites, can cause structural damage to homes as they tunnel through wood to create nests. Pharaoh ants, with their saw-like teeth, can actually chew through packages to contaminate their contents.

UNDERSTANDING ANTS.

Ants enter homes in search of food. Once they create a way in, they set up a trail to food sources. And they'll use this trail over and over again like a map to food and water. Ants take food back down the trails to their nest areas to feed the queen and the rest of the colony.

ELIMINATING ANTS.

Watch ants as they travel between food sources and their nests. You'll learn where you need to take action:

- Clean-up: Make sure to keep kitchen counter, floors and stovetops free of crumbs and grease to help eliminate food sources.
- Kill the ants you see. Spray Raid Ant & Roach Killer* directly on the ants. It's the fastest killing ant and roach spray you can buy.
- Treat the trail, the nest and entry points. By following the ants, you'll also uncover the ants' trails, their nest area and the places ants enter the house. Spray Raid Ant & Roach Killer* on all three areas as well as baseboards, thresholds and windows.
- For on-going control. Use Raid Ant Controller Bait Discs. New ants will find the discs, carry the poisoned bait back to their nest, to feed and kill the queen and the entire colony.

*New formula available in California in 1989.

THE THREAT: OTHER COMMON PESTS

THE INSECT	THE FACTS	WHAT TO KNOW	WHAT TO USE
MOSQUITOES	Can carry diseases including encephalitis and dengue fever; inflict itchy, sometimes painful bites.	Mosquitoes bite humans or pets for a blood meal. Particularly active at twilight.	Raid Flying Insect Killer kills indoor mosquitoes on contact. Raid Yard Guard kills mosquitoes outdoors.
FLIES	Can carry bacteria that contaminate foodstuffs.	Flies are attracted indoors by kitchen aromas.	Raid Flying Insect Killer kills flies on contact.
WASPS/ HORNETS	Inflict painful stings when aggravated. Can cause severe allergic reactions.	Carefully locate outdoor nests, often under building eaves, in trees or in the ground. Treat nests at dusk when wasps and hornets are less active. Do not aim a flashlight at nests. Wasps and hornets will charge toward the light.	Outdoors, Raid Wasp & Hornet Killer kills entire wasp and hornet nests from up to 12 feet away. Indoors, Raid House & Garden kills stray wasps or hornets on contact.
SPIDERS	Can bite and inject poison, however very few are dangerous to humans.	Spiders construct webs where they are not likely to be disturbed, in corners and beneath seldom used furniture.	Raid House & Garden kills spiders fast. Sweep or vacuum webs and spray vacuum bag as well.

Cover Story....

The All-Star Game

By George Robinson

Consider the rippling muscles of Oakland Athletics outfielder Jose Canseco. The 1986 American League Rookie of the Year can field, throw, steal bases and hit with power. A lot of power. Last year, Canseco hit 31 homers, drove in 113 RBI, and this year he should match those numbers. Jose Canseco turned 24 on July 2. The prospect of watching Canseco in this year's All-Star Game at Cincinnati's Riverfront Stadium (ABC, July 12) is surpassed in its promise only by the prospect of watching him over the next 15 years. But that's not all, as the mail-order TV pitchmen say. How about Canseco's teammate, first baseman Mark McGwire? All he did last year was hit a rookie record 49 home runs, with 118 RBI. He'll be all of 25 on Oct. 1. Of course, across the bay, the Giants feature Will Clark at first. Clark is 24, and his 1987 numbers were pretty snazzy: .308 BA, 35 HRs, 91 RBI.

Get the picture? Right now, there are more talented players under the age of 30 in the majors than at any time since the truly classic days of the early 1930s. Just look at some of the names on this year's All-Star ballots: The New York Yankees' Don Mattingly and Montreal's Tim Raines, possibly the two best players in major league baseball, are both under 30. Going position by position, you realize we'll undoubtedly be seeing many of these same players in the first All-Star Game of the 21st century.

At first base, there are also such all-star candidates as Montreal's Andres Galarraga (27), California's Wally Joyner (26) and Minnesota's Kent Hrbek (28). At second base, you have San Francisco's Robby Thompson (25), Pittsburgh's Jose Lind (24) and Cincinnati's Jeff Treadway (25). At third, Pittsburgh's Bobby Bonilla (25), Kansas City's Kevin Seitzer (26) and Seattle's Jim Presley (26) should be around for another eight or 10 years. Young shortstops include the Cubs' Shawon Dunston (25) and Chicago White Sox' Ozzie Guillen (24). The outfield harbors enough young talent to stock several all-star teams, including the Mets' Darryl Strawberry (26), Pittsburgh's Barry Bonds (23), Cincinnati's Eric Davis (26), Kansas City's Danny Tartabull (25), Minnesota's Kirby Puckett (27) and Texas's Ruben Sierra (22). The only position in both leagues that is beginning to look depleted is catcher. San Diego's Benito Santiago (23), last year's NL Rookie of the Year, and Matt Nokes (24), the Detroit Tigers' surprisingly powerful receiver, are the best of a thin lot. Which is a shame, because the pitchers they'll be handling are so good. For example, the New York Mets rotation — Dwight Gooden, Ron Darling, Sid Fernandez, David Cone and Bobby Ojeda — is all under 30 (well, Ojeda is 30). Boston's Roger Clemens (27) has already won two Cy Young Awards.

Does this mean that we're guaranteed a decade or more of brilliance from every player named? Of course not. The history of baseball is littered with players cursed by "unlimited potential." But the old saw, often disputed, is that a major-leaguer's most productive years are from ages 26 to 32. That means that for many All-Star Games to come, we can look forward with pleasure to seeing some great athletes playing our most graceful and satisfying game.

Animated schedule

NBC has announced its fall 1988 Saturday-morning schedule, which includes five current programs and two new ones. Returning programs are the animated "ALF" (which will be expanded to an hour),"Kissyfur" (which did not air last season), "Smurfs," "The Chipmunks" and "Disney's Adventures of the Gummi Bears." The new series are "The Misadventures of Ed Grimley," which features comic Martin Short, and "2 HIP 4 TV," which is set at a rock club.

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

Dear Michele: I have seen actor Sam Neill in several films and miniseries, including "Amerika." Would you please furnish some information on him, and how he got his start? — MARY HUSSELSTROM, SANTA FE, N.M.

Neill, 40, was born in Northern Ireland, where his father was serving with the Royal Irish Fusileers. The family returned to New Zealand when Sam was 8, and he was raised in Christchurch,South Island. As a young man, he moved to the country's capital, Wellington, where he began to act in theater and direct documentaries for the New Zealand National Film Unit. In 1977, a friend asked Neill to star in the first color feature ever made in New Zealand, "Sleeping Dogs." On the strength of his performance, he landed his first Australian film, "My Brilliant Career" (1979).

When the picture was released in England, Neill unknowingly became the protege of a couple who were highly impressed with his work. The couple, it turns out, was none other than the late actor James Mason and his wife, Clarissa Kaye. They began a letter-writing campaign to producers and directors recommending him, and eventually sent him a plane ticket to England so he could meet some ofthese filmmakers. "If they hadn't taken this interest in me, I might never have left Australia," explains Neill. "He was a nice man, James, and I miss him." Since then, Neill has done extensive television work, and has appeared in such films as "The Final Conflict" (1981) and "Plenty" (1985).

Dear Michele: I read in "Who's Who in Show Business" that Academy Award-winning actor Christopher Walken's birthday is March 31, 1943. A newspaper article, however, stated that it's March 30, 1944. Which is it? — TRACY MacNEAL, SAN MATEO, CALIF.

I'll have to go with March 31, 1943, a date quoted by numerous sources. As I have reported countless times, it is extremely difficult to pinpoint an actor's birthdate. Accuracy is deliberately disregarded in most cases!

Walken was born in Queens, N.Y., the middle son of three born to a German immigrant baker and a Scottish stage mother. He began his career as a child, modeling in print ads, and appearing in a succession of minor TV roles. At age 16, he made his Broadway debut in "J.B.," and his film debut in a bit part in "Me and My Brother" (1967). His most memorable films include "Annie Hall" (1977) and "The Deer Hunter" (1978), for which he won an Academy Award for Best Supporting Actor.

Dear Michele: In what year did "Fibber McGee" go off the radio? — BETTY R. WILKE, MICHIGAN CITY, IND.

"Fibber McGee" 's last radio broadcast was in 1952. The show made a short-lived stab at television in 1959. Jim Jordan, who played the bumbling McGee for 22 years, died in Los Angeles onApril 1, a week after a fall at his home caused a blood clot in his brain. Jordan was 91 years old.

Dear Michele: My 37-year-old daughter has always been told she looks like Susan Hayward. Could you please run a picture of her, and some information on this actress? — RUBY HUDSON, MIAMI, FLA.

Hayward was born Edythe Marrener on June 30, 1918, in Brooklyn, N.Y. A former photographer's model, the ravishing redhead arrived in Hollywood in 1937, along with hordes of others, for the role of Scarlett O'Hara. Vivien Leigh was cast ultimately as Scarlett, but Hayward was able to launch her film career with a role in "Hollywood Hotel" (1937). Hayward was nominated for an Oscar five times and finally won a Best Actress award for her role as a condemned woman in "I Want to Live!" (1958). Hayward died from a brain tumor in 1975.

Dear Michele: I have watched all three "Nightmare on Elm Street" films, and would like to know who the producers and directors were. — T. HARVEY, BRISTOL, CT.

Robert Shaye produced all three films. Wes Craven wrote the screenplay and directed "A Nightmare on Elm Street" (1984). Jack Sholder directed "A Nightmare on Elm Street, Part 2 Freddy's Revenge" (1986) and Chuck Russell directed "Nightmare on Elm Street, Dream Warriors" (1987).

DICKIE ROOK
BARBECUE STAINS
This is the time for backyard barbecues, easy living and fun. But as much as we enjoy summer time, it is a difficult time for your clothes. The food is covered with delicious barbecue sauce, but no matter how careful you are, some of the sauce or mustard from your hot dogs will always find its way to the center of your shirt or blouse. What can be done about these stains?
Have them cleaned promptly. Do not allow the stains to remain on the garments. Stains are easier to remove when fresh, especially mustard.
Many garments can be damaged by home stain removal attempts. We at A CLEANER WORLD have the knowledge and facilities to remove the stains safely. We will take good care of your clothes. Do not worry about stains and enjoy your summer barbecues.

TV Chatter

By Frank Sanello

On CBS's "Blue Skies," Season Hubley plays a sophisticated New Yorker who moves to Oregon with her husband (played by Tom Wopat) to operate the family lumber mill. Hubley says she finds it easier to play the woman after she starts rusticating in Oregon rather than the original, sophisticated New Yorker. That's probably because Hubley herself is a down-home person. She and her 8-year-old son Boston (from her marriage to actor Kurt Russell) share a home in an exclusive Los Angeles neighborhood with several stray cats and dogs as well as a pair of goats.

Hubley linked up with the goats just as they were about to be shot as part of a program to control a population explosion on a small island off the Southern California coast. An animal shelter asked Hubley to attend a press conference at the posh Beverly Hills Hotel to persuade people to adopt the doomed animals. "They told me to bring two goats with me," she recalls. "So here I was walking through the lobby of the hotel with these two adorable baby goats on a leash. One of them started, uh, dropping on the carpet, and the hotel manager started getting apoplectic." Before they could kick her out, the organizer of the press conference stuck his head out of a banquet room and said, "We're ready for the goats now, Miss Hubley." And with that, the actress sailed past the fuming manager.

"It's one of the few shows on the air where the guy doesn't carry a gun. He has to use his wits, not his mitts," says Mario Van Peebles, the man with a thousand faces — and voices — on NBC's "Sonny Spoon." This fall, look for the introduction of a whole new set of characters — all played by him. "I'm going to play Arnold Schwarzenegro," the black actor says, joking. Or is he? Last season in his pursuit of bad guys, Van Peebles played everything from a female gospel singer in a black fright wig to a stuffy IRS agent. The ideas for all the outlandish characters come from both the writers and from Van Peebles. "They come to me and say, 'We want you to do a Bruce Lee character,' and I'll say, 'OK, but make him a chef at Benihana too.'"

Since it debuted as a series of specials, NBC's "Unsolved Mysteries" has helped apprehend five criminals. That's one of the reasons Robert Stack agreed to continue to host the show when it becomes a weekly series this fall. (Another installment airs this week on July 13.) "I feel like we're doing a public service, but I shouldn't say that because public service programs don't get the ratings, and 'Unsolved Mysteries' has won its time slot 20 out of 21 times." Stack's favorite success story involved a man accused of killing a gas station attendant. "They found him in a small town in Washington. He was watching the show when they caught him. He told the arresting officers 'Unsolved Mysteries' was his favorite show!"

Jack Lemmon, who met Fidel Castro at the 1986 Havana Film Festival, says the Cuban leader confided that "Some Like It Hot" was his favorite film and insisted it be included on the festival's program... Here's Sophia Loren on ethnic pride: "I'm proud to say I'm an Italian, but before my time the image of Italians in this country was terrible. People thought we were were either servants or Mafioso."

SOAP SCOOP

Robin Wright moves on; McArthur takes over

By Connie Passalacqua

"Santa Barbara" took the unusual step of holding an open casting call for an actress to replace Robin Wright in the key role of Kelly Capwell Conrad – and even advertised it in a Hollywood trade paper. But the actress they've cast isn't really an unknown. She's Kimberly McArthur, a former Playboy centerfold, who has done episodes of "Magnum, P.I." and "Highway to Heaven."

Since Wright, who originated the role and has been around since the show's 1984 premiere, hit it big last year in the title role of Rob Reiner's movie "The Princess Bride," it has been a foregone conclusion that she wouldn't be renewing her contract. In the beginning, prototypical California blonde Wright came under heavy criticism for acting with her hair, among other things, but her acting has gotten stronger with every one of eternal victim Kelly's traumas.

• One of the nicest things about soap actors is that they really do give of themselves for charity events. This summer, Surf laundry detergent (soaps, get it?) organized a team of 25 soap stars who will tour the country playing softball games to benefit the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation. To help promote the team, the Surf people have done a survey of their stars.

Did you know that 15 percent of the soap stars polled say they have met "someone special" at the laundromat? (Eighty percent admit they go elsewhere to meet dates.) Forty percent do their own laundry, while another 40 percent leave "the responsibility" to spouses or friends. Come on! On a soap-star salary, we'd send it out.

Fifty-five percent say that if fans watch more than three soaps a day they should consider themselves addicts, but 15 percent believe that an addict is someone who watches every soap opera. Well, someone has to drive up those ratings points – and write soap columns!

The survey also claims that 75 percent of the stars wear their own clothes on the air, as opposed to wearing costumes provided by the studio. Now that's a lot of bubbles! The only people who wear their own clothes on soaps these days are extras. Costume designers for all the shows dress everyone (down to the day players, who have only two or three lines) to the finest detail. The last soap we heard of in which any cast member wore anything of their own was that super-low-budget soap "The Doctors," which was canceled in 1982.

FRIDAY SONNY SPOON

Roy Campanella Jr. (r.), son of the legendary baseball player, directs Mario Van Peebles, son of film maker Melvin Van Peebles, in an episode of NBC's "Sonny Spoon." The rebroadcast airs Friday, July 15.

Sports Roundup

SUNDAY, JULY 10

Boxing (ABC)

U.S. Olympic Boxing Trials, live from Concord, Calif.

Golf (NBC)

Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic, final round from Kingsmill Golf Club, Williamsburg, Va.

Boxing (CBS)

Ras-I Luja vs. Fred Pendelton in a USBA lightweight title fight, scheduled for 12 rounds, live from Atlantic City, N.J. Back when he was known as Livingstone Bramble, Ras-I Luja's head gamesfirst won, then lost him a piece of the lightweight crown. Now he has a new name and new management, and is on the comeback trail.

TUESDAY, JULY 12

Baseball (ABC)

The All-Star Game, live from Riverfront Stadium, Cincinnati. In 24 seasons as a player, Reds' manager Pete Rose was selected to 17 All-Star teams, missing only one game (1968) because of injuries.

"All-Star Games are great to play in," says Rose, "but I never worried about my performance."

Indeed, Rose's All-Star numbers were not prepossessing: .212, 0 HRs and 2 RBI. "The only guys I ever got a hit off of were guys I had faced the previous year in the World Series."

However, one of the best-known moments in Rose's career occurred in 1970, the last time the All-Star Game came to Riverfront. With the game tied 4-4 and two out in the bottom of the 12th, Rose, Billy Grabarkewitz and Jim Hickman singled. Charging toward home, Rose found AL catcher Ray Fosse blocking the plate. Pete's choice was typical of the intensity with which he played even an exhibition game. He hurled himself at Fosse, knocking the stuffing out of the receiver and the ball out of his glove, giving the NL the victory.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 13

Baseball (ESPN)

AAA All-Star Game, from Buffalo, N.Y.

SATURDAY, JULY 16

PGA Golf (ABC)

The British Open, third round from Royal Lytham and Saint Anne's Golf Club, Lancashire, England. This is probably the least picturesque on the Open schedule, an urban-set course bordered byhouses and a railway. However, it is a stern test of golfing skill.

Baseball (NBC)

Cycling (CBS)

Tour de France continued. Prior to this year's Tour de France, much of the Stateside coverage was focused on Greg Lemond's return to competition. But Lemond went down with injuries again. In the meantime, another Coloradan, Andy Hamptsen, became the first American to ever win the Tour d'Italia. He has to be considered a serious contender for this race.

Boxing (Showtime)

Evander Holyfield vs. James "Quick" Tillis, in a 10-round heavyweight fight, live from Lake Tahoe, Nev. Lou Duva is grooming Holyfield for a late 1989 showdown with Mike Tyson. This is his first fight as a heavyweight, but trainer Georgie Benton figures Holyfield should have no trouble. "I don't think it will pose any problem whatsoever," says Benton. "He's gonna have the strength, the speed and the skills."

"I think everyone has to fight at one level at a time, and then move up," says cruiserweight champ Holyfield. "I don't intend to face Mike Tyson until I think I can win."

Players Are All-Stars, But The Stadium Isn't

By Marty Linehan

The 59th All-Star Game takes place Tuesday night (July 12). It will be covered by ABC and described by Al Michaels, Jim Palmer and Tim McCarver. They will no doubt spend a lot of time describing Riverfront Stadium in Cincinnati, where the game will be played.

Riverfront, where the All-Star Game was last played in 1970, is one of those modern stadiums that was designed for more than one sport, and it is typical in its dullness.

It doesn't even have the endearing characteristics of New York's Shea Stadium, where the crowd, a mixture of old Dodgers fans, Giants fans and their descendants, raise Cain with the noise level—when the jets from nearby LaGuardia Airport aren't drowning them out.

Nor can it match Minneapolis's Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome, where the field's odd shape and a noise level of unbelievable proportions makes the "Homerdome" a perfect home field.

Nor does Riverfront have the wind of San Francisco's Candlestick Park, where during an All-Star Game in 1961, Giants' hurler Stu Miller was blown off the mound and charged with a balk. Or Chicago's Wrigley Field, where a four-run lead in the ninth inning is never a sure thing.

It doesn't have the beauty of Royals Stadium in Kansas City, with its waterfalls beyond the centerfield fence. Royals Stadium is one of only two major-league parks in which only baseball has been played. The other is Dodger Stadium in Los Angeles. Even Wrigley Field was once used by the Chicago Bears for football.

* Before we get a chance to see Riverfront and the All-Stars, we'll have boxing to watch Sunday, July 10.

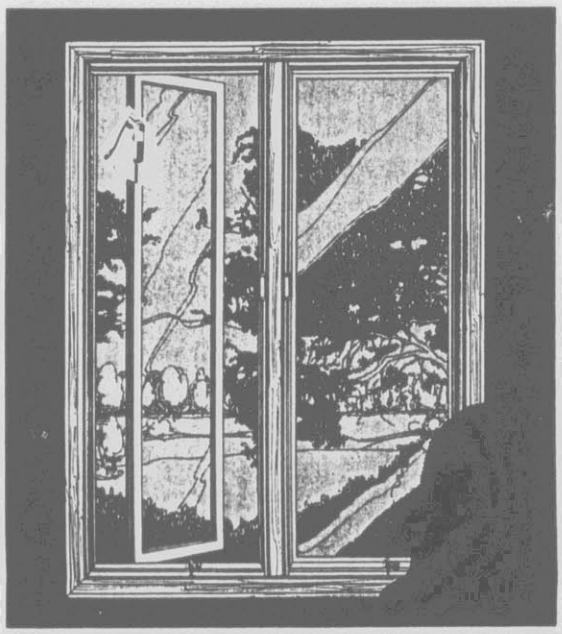
OF THIS WOOD CASEMENT WINDOW

BREAKTHROUGH



No other casement window is made the way Peachtree's Ariel is. Beautiful wood interior, heavy-gauge tubular aluminum exterior creates a window that is • more weathertight • longer-lasting • styled more beautifully • This is America's best window and best window value.

PEACHTREE®
ARIEL

WINDOWS

Peachtree's ARIEL window is the first completely new window developed in the last 20 years. It is the new standard for window quality.

It comes to us from a new, automated plant that has built into this window the technological and design innovations we've been waiting for.

ARIEL has been designed for today's tastes. Slimmer, sleeker frame and sash give it a more beautifully proportioned look. Inside and out.

And it has been engineered for today's needs: longer life, exceptional weathertightness, higher energy efficiency, easier maintenance and more versatility.

Come in and let us show you that quality for quality, feature for feature, price for price, ARIEL is America's best window value.

HERE'S THE BEST WAY TO REPLACE

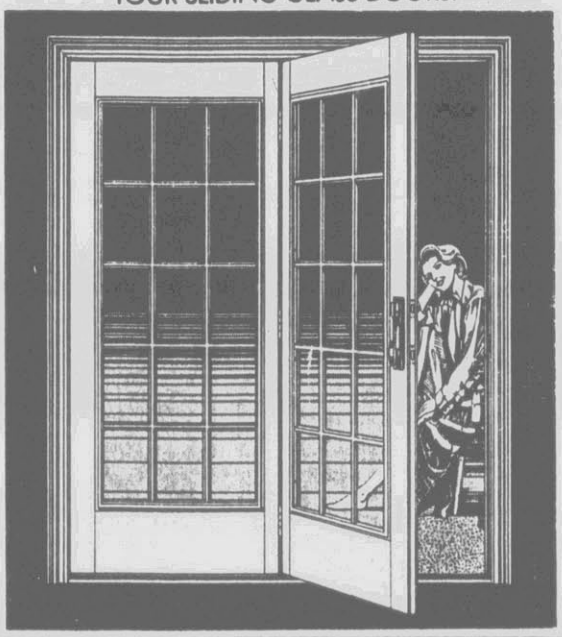
YOUR SLIDING GLASS DOORS.



PEACHTREE'S Prado, the new insulated patio door that swings, is your best choice for replacing worn sliding glass doors. PRADO doors are • more insulating • more weathertight • lock more secure than any other swinging patio door on the market. And, in addition, PRADO doors give you the classic beauty you want.

PEACHTREE PRADO

DOORS

PEACHTREE CARVEL

Peachtree's Carvel wood-framed sliding glass doors are simply the finest you can buy. • Carvel doors are easier to operate. They open and close with one finger • They are more weathertight • They lock more securely • They are better looking. This time, why not the finest? Carvel doors from Peachtree.

DOORS

CARVEL

Carvel, a well designed wood-framed patio door glazed with Twinsul insulating glass can be a great source of Energy Conservation. The benefit provided by solar heat from natural sunlight admitted thru properly oriented glass areas was one of the first recognized applications of this natural resource.

The Patio Door That Has Solved The "Ins And Outs" Of Energy Conservation.

For maximum protection against air infiltration, we use an outside sliding panel with a single plane weatherseal closing tightly against the face of this panel. Heavy-duty aluminum framed screens are on the inside where they are protected from weather and require less maintenance. Panel rollers are all-steel, ball bearing wheels mounted in tandem. A two-level stepped sill provides a guard against water infiltration. Wood components are properly treated, sealed, and receive an electrostatically applied finish in Clear, Colonial White, Nature Brown or Driftwood.

PRADO

Here at last is PRADO, the classically beautiful swinging patio door that is also an extremely practical insulating door.

PRADO is the patio door for the times.

No other swing patio door can come close to giving you the insulation that PRADO's polyurethane core does. And its beautifully crafted skins of steel make it extremely stable, PRADO will never check, crack or warp as wood doors inevitably will. PRADO is made by Peachtree, maker of America's best-performing, best-selling insulating entry door systems.

PRADO is available in a wide range of sizes and arrangements. They are ideal replacement doors and wonderful additions to new houses.

HOCUS-FOCUS

CAN YOU TRUST YOUR EYES? There are at least six differences in drawing details between top and bottom panels. How quickly can you find them? Check answers with those below.

Differences: 1. Dart is missing. 2. Collar is smaller. 3. Purse is smaller. 4. Elbow is concealed. 5. Arm is lowered. 6. Umbrella stand is missing.

• PIN GAME! How quickly can you build up a list of seven words beginning with PIN, at right? Each word contains one more letter than the one before it. Random letters may be used — which is to say, letters of previous words may or may not be used again. Time limit is two minutes.

1 PIN _
2 PIN __
3 PIN ___
4 PIN ____
5 PIN _____
6 PIN ______
7 PIN _______

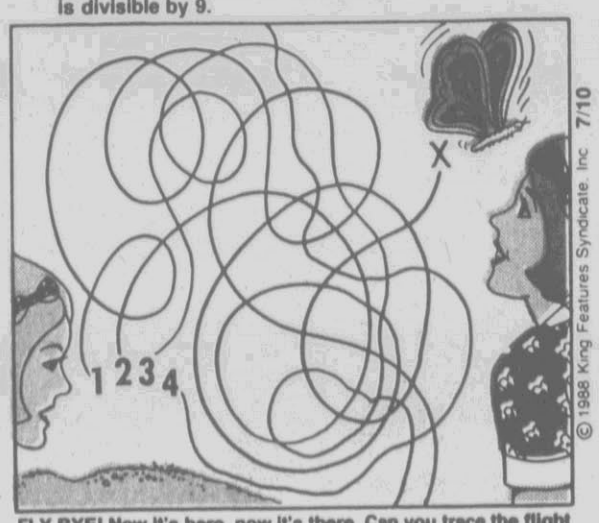
SHE'S SAVVY ABOUT AGE

She knew he was older than she was, but not how much. To find out, she subtracted her own age from 99, jotted the answer on a sheet of paper, gave the paper to him. She asked him to add his age, remove first digit of the sum and add it to the last digit. When he revealed the total, she had the information she wanted.

For example: Say she is 17; he's 20. Then 99 minus 17 is 82; 82 plus 20 is 102; 1 plus 2 is 3 — the age difference.

P.S.: If he's younger, the same age, or a lot older, she may need a new scheme.

• SUM FUN! From any whole number having two or more digits, subtract the sum of the digits. The result will always be divisible by 9. Example: 123-6 = 117; 117 is divisible by 9.



FLY BYE! Now it's here, now it's there. Can you trace the flight of the butterfly from lower left to top right?
