Dukakis Opts For Bentsen

BOSTON (AP) — Michael Dukakis today will name Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen as his vice presidential running mate, according to a well-placed party source, giving a conservative and Southwestern flavor to the Democratic ticket.

The selection came late Monday night in a meeting among Dukakis, his long-time confidant Paul Brontas and campaign manager Susan Estrich. The word was passed to Bentsen late in the night or early this morning and he accepted, the source said.

Bentsen, 67, was expected to fly to Boston today for a 2 p.m. news conference in Faneuil Hall near the Massachusetts statehouse. Bentsen appeared briefly this morning on the Senate floor in Washington but declined to answer reporters questions.

"I hope to be in Boston," he responded with a smile when asked what his plans were. Other Democratic senators congratulated Bentsen as he made his way to the Senate chamber and then back to his office.

Bentsen's selection will give the Democrats a ticket much like that of 1960, when John Kennedy of Massachusetts chose Texan Lyndon Johnson in a successful effort to add experience and balance.

With his choice, Dukakis signaled a determination to challenge the Republican Party's Electoral College stronghold in the South and especially in Bush's presumed strongest state. Texas is his adopted home state.

Texas has 29 electoral votes, more than any state except California and New York, and some Dukakis aides have said they hope selecting a Southerner would at least force the expected Republican candidate to spend more time defending the region than he would want.

Bentsen, an elegantly tailored, silver-haired patrician, is the scion of a wealthy landed family from the Rio Grande Valley — and a card-carrying member of the Senate Democratic establishment. He is a former chairman of the Democratic Senatorial Committee, a position that requires fund-raising to elect Democrats to the Senate, and has been chairman of the Senate Finance Committee since Democrats gained control of the Senate 18 months ago.

Bentsen is up for re-election to his Senate seat in November, and if he chooses, could run for both offices at once — a precedent set by Johnson in 1960.

Bentsen will be nominated at the Democratic convention in Atlanta on July 21, the fourth and final night of the party gathering.

Bentsen was chosen over six others who were being considered by Dukakis: Jesse Jackson, Sens. John Glenn of Ohio, Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee and Bob Graham of Florida and Reps. Richard Gephardt of Missouri and Lee Hamilton of Indiana.

Democrat Counting On Bentsen To Woo Southerners Who Bolted

By DAVID ESPO

ATLANTA (AP) — Michael Dukakis undoubtedly hopes the selection of Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen to be his vice presidential running mate will rekindle warm memories of 1960 and become an example of history repeating itself.

But Dukakis didn't make this choice on nostalgia alone. Geography, Washington experience and a relatively conservative voting record pointed the way to Bentsen — a fellow who has already defeated George Bush once.

Beyond helping in Texas, Bentsen's choice is designed to reassure the white male voters across the South who have abandoned the Democratic Party in droves in recent elections, and to win over the voters who shunned Dukakis in many of the primaries across the South on Super Tuesday last March.

The history Dukakis hopes to repeat is John F. Kennedy's choice of Texas Sen. Lyndon Johnson, a decision that enabled the Democratic ticket to carry Texas and claim the White House in one of the closest elections of modern times.

In many ways, Kennedy is a political model and a hero for Dukakis, who delights in recalling how he and close friend Paul Brontas once traveled across country in a battered car to see the son of Massachusetts nominated for president in Los Angeles 28 years ago.

Now, more than a quarter century later, another son of Massachusetts is the Democratic Party's leader, and longtime sidekick Brontas shepherded the selection of a partner for the fall campaign.

Kennedy's brother, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, quickly embraced the selection of Bentsen, saying today, "The Massachusetts-Texas combination got this country moving again in 1960, and it will do the same for the nation in 1988."

Bush's top campaign aides speak hopefully of a virtual lock on Southern electoral votes, putting 200 to 220 such votes within the vice president's grasp with relative ease.

Texas accounts for 29 of those votes, and no Democrat in this century has won the White House without carrying the state. "This will

School Board Cites 10 For 'Extra Mile'

By CHERIE EVANS

The Pitt County Board of Education conducted its monthly meeting before a group of about 50 people Monday night, but some were there under false pretenses.

School personnel coerced the first 10 recipients of the "Above and Beyond the Call of Duty Award" into attending the board meeting Monday night without knowing they were being honored.

"The ABCD awards were set up as a way to recognize the unsung heroes of the Pitt County schools," Barry Gaskins, public information officer of the Pitt County schools, said. "Employees could nominate other employees for going above and beyond the call of duty in their job. This could have been for a specific task they've done or for consistently exemplifying the model employee."

"What's unique about the award is that it is an award for people nominated by their peers and colleagues and it offers an opportunity for the Board of Education to recognize these people who may otherwise never see any form of recognition for their commitment to their specific job," he said.

"Mr. Cates told me that Dr. West wanted me to sit in on the board meeting and listen in on a few things," said Johnny Atkinson, a janitor at H.B. Sugg School who was given an award. Tony Cates is principal of Sugg.

"I thought they were going to transfer me," Atkinson said. "They got me good. I didn't know they had chosen me. It tickled me to death. I felt great."

The award also pleased his family, Atkinson said. "They were tickled to death — my momma cried."

Congress Balks At Jet Payments

By JIM DRINKARD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's decision to pay families of the 290 people killed in the U.S. downing of an Iranian airliner met fresh resistance on Capitol Hill today, with some lawmakers saying the gesture is premature and politically touchy.

"The United States of America is not guilty of anything" except protecting the lives of American sailors, Rep. Gerald Solomon, R-N.Y., said on NBC-TV's "Today" show.

He contended that the Iranian government deliberately provoked the U.S. cruiser Vincennes into firing on the jetliner and said, "I don't think there's any question this was a provoked attack...."

"It was an act of martyrdom by the Iranian government to bring humiliation on the United States and we should not be a part of that at this time," Solomon said.

Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., concurred. "It's too early. There are many serious questions that need to be resolved ... before we would contemplate compensation. We should also expect some progress on the hostage situation," he said on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America."

"I don't see why there's this rush to judgment."

Their comments echoed those of other members of Congress who said after Monday's announcement that the distinction may be largely lost on the U.S. electorate, which harbors long-simmering resentment of Iran stemming from the seizure of the U.S. embassy in 1979, from its sponsorship of international terrorism and from the continued holding of Americans in Lebanon.

Reagan's request "has some problems," added Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., the chief Democratic vote counter in the House, who said he personally opposed the idea. "I don't understand why they're trying to move it along."

School Board Clears First Step To Sell Rose High

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

After an executive session Monday night, the Pitt County Board of Education instructed its attorney to begin the paperwork to sell the J.H. Rose High School facility to East Carolina University.

The board instructed attorney Phil Dixon to write a letter of intent to sell Rose and to acquire a lease for continued use of Wahl-Coates School.

"All the letter of intent does is express an interest by both parties to further work toward the acquisition of properties which would be mutually beneficial to the university and the school system," said Dr. Eddie West, superintendent of the Pitt County schools.

"Greenville Middle will be converted into a high school, and the university would like Rose and they own Wahl-Coates," West said. "It's a way for us to work together in the best interest for the total community."

The letter of intent "confirms the willingness of the Board of Education," he said. "There's nothing legally binding by the letter of intent but it shows a willingness to work with the university."

The Wahl-Coates facility, which houses fourth through sixth graders in the Pitt County school system, is owned by the university as a laboratory school and is leased by the school system.

In the open session of a regular monthly meeting, board Chairman George Williams appointed an ad hoc committee on affirmative action. "It will focus on issues and concerns much more effectively and much more efficiently," he said.

Board members named to the committee were Donovan Phillips, Leonard Lilley, Mary Williams, Frank Grooms and Walter Morehead.

In addition, the board approved a contract with Youthguard Inc. for student accident insurance for next school year, but said the insurance coverage needs to be better explained to school personnel and parents.

Several board members shared stories of the coverage being unclear to teachers and administrators when students have filed claims against their policies.

"My concern is that the teachers and possibly some of the administrators are not reading it close enough," Leonard Lilley said.

Youthguard provides the student with accident insurance, Dan Thomas, financial controller for the school system, said. It serves as primary coverage, which means it would be the first claim filed if the child has an accident. Coverage beyond what Youthguard provides would come from the child's parents' coverage, or it would have to be paid by the parents out of pocket if they do not have insurance.

"It's not a cure all for everything but for what it costs it's not a bad policy," Thomas said.

The coverage will cost students.

faculty and staff $6.75 during school time. Twenty-four hour coverage for students, faculty and staff and varsity football coverage is $40.

Three architects, recommended by the board's ad hoc committee for operations, were chosen by the board for future capital outlay construction projects in the school system. Firms approved were Dudley, Shoe, Ellinwood and Associates and Hites Associates, both of Greenville, and The Smith Sinnett Association of Raleigh.

Likewise, the board approved criteria for determining construction priorities. Attendance line changes, regulatory requirements, basic education plan requirements and enrollment changes were the four major criteria established by the board.

The student fee schedule for next year also was approved by the board. The money collected ensures appropriate support for the programs, and it is distributed by each principal in the schools.

The board approved an interim budget resolution, which will allow salaries and usual expenses of administration to be paid between the beginning of the fiscal year and adoption of the 1988-89 budget. It also approved personnel recommendations.

During the regular meeting in August, the board will consider a health curriculum for grades kindergarten through 12 and the third part of the annual application for Vocational Education state and federal funding.

Assembly Nears Adjournment Hour

RALEIGH (AP) — Moving toward expected adjournment today, the Legislature prepared to ratify the final two budget bills and continued work on a compromise on administrative rulemaking and migrant farmworker protection.

Adjournment was expected late today as legislators tried to ward off still another day for their so-called "short" summer session.

The Legislature overwhelmingly enacted a "mopup" budget bill Monday that shifts $2.6 million from a planned crime laboratory to a variety of projects, some in the districts of powerful Democrats.

Lawmakers also passed a $36.5 million highway funding bill. Both will become law today when ratified, or signed, by House Speaker Liston Ramsey and Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan.

The two chambers reportedly were close to agreeing on a bill combining new provisions on the Administrative Procedures Act and sanitation standards for migrants. But Jordan said he expected the Senate to reject the version the House approved Monday so a joint conference committee could work out the remaining differences.

The bill, a compromise negotiated by Rep. Martin Nesbitt, D-Buncombe, and Sen. Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, won final House passage 69-35.

The bill "would clean up some problems," in the Office of Administrative Hearings, Barnes said. The OAH is an independent agency that hears citizens' appeals of executive branch rulings with which they disagree. The hearings are conducted by administrative law judges.

"We didn't consider winning or losing," Barnes said of the compromise bill. "We just thought it made it a better bill."

Barnes said he had accepted the updated version except for one provision that requires each department to appoint a single liaison to work with the OAH. Current law allows for one or more liaisons, and most departments have several, he said.

Under the revised bill, the Legislature would continue setting the salaries of employees of the OAH. But director, Bob Melott, would not be permitted to determine the employees' pay grades as was called for under the earlier version.

At the Senate's insistence, the House also dropped a provision under which administrative law judges would have the final word on disputed agency rulings.

Council Agrees Recycling Needed But Disagrees On Advisory Group

By GREG LAUDICK
Reflector Staff Writer

Although agreeing on the importance of waste recycling in the community, members of the Greenville City Council could not come to a consensus Monday regarding the details of a proposed advisory committee on the subject.

During a workshop session Monday at City Hall, the council debated details of a motion by council member Inez Fridley to "give a little credence" to a group of volunteers currently involved with city recycling efforts by changing its scope to an official advisory committee to the council.

Monday's discussion by the council followed a recent move by the Pitt County Board of Commissioners to establish an 11-member Solid Waste Task Force to study recycling and other waste-disposal issues throughout the county and to make recommendations to that governing body.

For several years the city has had a volunteer group working to encourage and educate the public about recycling. Council member Fridley said since its inception, the group has made significant strides.

"It's gotten us to the point where we are recycling 30 percent of what we could recycle. We're doing better than Charlotte and it's all been through volunteers," she said.

Mrs. Fridley said a reasons for changing the committee's status is because recycling is not an issue which is going to fade away.

"I think recycling is something we're going to see well into the next century," she said.

But council member Lorraine Shinn voiced reservation over such a move, saying "I'm not ready to commit to another committee with more power and more authority until we understand their role. I think the thing that concerns me here is that we committee ourselves to death sometimes."

"I certainly believe they need to exist but I'm not sure exactly what their role is at this point," she explained.

Council member Nancy Jenkins also voiced concern over the permanent establishment of an official committee on the subject.

"All of us are certainly dedicated to the concept of recycling and this (volunteer) committee I think has been doing a very fine job."

"What I'm hearing you say is you want a little more legitimacy to it — to make it a legitimate committee," she said.

Mrs. Jenkins said she felt it important to have any future committee established with the guarantee to make sure its duties and responsibilities include working with the county towards the incorporation of city recycling efforts into the county's efforts.

Mrs. Shinn followed Mrs. Fridley's motion with a substitute motion that the committee be formed on an ad hoc basis, but that motion met resistance from council members Fridley, Bill Hadden and Rufus Huggins. Mayor Ed Carter was absent from the meeting, creating a deadlocked vote.

"I just get bothered with (the term) 'ad hoc,'" Mrs. Fridley commented later.

"Ad hoc means to me that you have a specific mission and it's only for a particular length of time. You take care of it, it's done in a month or a year or whatever, and it's over with. I don't think (the need for recycling) is something that's going to end," she said.

Mrs. Shinn then replied, "I have problems with a committee that is empowered to go on and on forever. I think it dilutes the power of elected officials to make decisions. I think sometimes that's passing the buck," she said.

"If we establish this as ad hoc, then we don't have to go through disbanding it ... and if we figure it needs to go on, then we can move for it to be a permanent-type committee," Mrs. Shinn added.

Hadden said an advantage to forming an official committee would be to have an official city representative organization working along side the county's efforts.

"I really think recycling is a heavy part of this city's agenda and if the county doesn't happen to act as the city would like to see, this committee would have the weight to go to the county and say 'hey, let's get together and work on this,'" Hadden said.

Huggins said recycling is not going to be a short-term problem.

"I think the city has to take some initiative on its own and not rely on the county for this type of thing," Huggins said. "I just feel that we rely to much on the county. I've been very disappointed in the county in the past, I've had very little faith in what the county does and what they obligate themselves to do," he said.

The council agreed to discuss the matter at a later workshop session.

In other action Monday, the council agreed to continue consideration until September's monthly meeting a request by Charles Speight to rezone a .27 acre tract located off the northwestern intersection of Greenville Boulevard and Alexander Circle from R-9 (residential) to O&I (office and institutional); continue until August a request for council designation of a Historic Properties/District Commission, and delayed approval of the budget for the Pitt-Greenville Convention and Visitors Authority for the next fiscal year until budget items can be explained at the July 25 workshop session.

GOP Blasts Jordan, Democrats' 'Pork' Session

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — Although he promised open budget deliberations, Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan has acknowledged participating in an unannounced weekend talks that produced a final spending package Republicans say is laden with "pork."

"It undermines everything the lieutenant governor has tried to do with opening up pork barrel," Rep. Ray Warren, R-Mecklenburg, said Monday. Senate Minority Leader Larry Cobb, R-Mecklenburg, labeled the bill "Son of Pork III."

The bill surfaced Monday at a meeting of the Joint Appropriations Committee, which speedily approved it despite Republicans' protests. It later zipped through the House and Senate on votes mostly along partisan lines.

Also approved Monday was a $36.5 million package of highway improvement funds, including $8 million for resurfacing projects.

Legislative leaders described the first measure as a "mopup" package containing instructions on spending money appropriated in earlier bills and authorization of between-session studies.

But it also removed $2.6 million from $10 million appropriated earlier for a planned State Bureau of Investigation crime laboratory and distributed the money among more than a dozen recipients, including local projects in the districts of powerful Democrats.

Even Senate Majority Leader Tony Rand, D-Cumberland, voiced reservations about the way the bill was put together. Yet Rand was one of the small group of Democratic chieftains who participated in the unannounced weekend talks.

Jordan denied the gathering amounted to resurrection of the so-called "supersub," the eight-member group of Democratic bosses who privately assembled the budget in past years.

"That was not, as far as I was concerned, a meeting of the supersub," Jordan said. "They were trying to get together on some of the final appropriations. There were some House members there and some Senate members there. But it's not like the meetings that they held in the past."

Cobb disagreed. At the beginning of the session, he said, Senate leaders promised that "we were going to be expeditious; we were going to have open debate; we were going to do away with pork barrel. I submit to you we have done none of those things."

Ironically, some of the local projects in the "mopup" bill had been left out of a $177 million capital improvements bill enacted last week because the Senate leadership opposed them.

For example, the latest bill awards $250,000 to Jackson County for development of a vocational rehabilitation facility to serve physically and mentally handicapped residents of western North Carolina counties.

Jackson County is in House Speaker Liston Ramsey's district.

"It's the old pork-barrel system in all its horrible glory," Warren said.

Other last-minute funds went to:

— The Anson County Farmers' Market, which is in the district of Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Aaron Plyler, D-Union ($150,000).

— The Brevard Music Center, in the district represented by budget subcommittee chairman Rep. Martin Nesbitt, D-Buncombe, for paving a parking lot ($78,000).

Some money also went for statewide purposes such as a Shakespeare Festival tour of metropolitan and rural communities ($75,000) and a reserve fund to hire 16 probation officers and other correction system staff ($262,000).

Another section of the bill earmarks some of the $10 million appropriated earlier for grants and loans for water and sewer projects to specific areas, including another $1.6 million for an industrial recruitment project in Lenoir County. Earlier, the project was awarded $2.4 million.

Under questioning from Republicans, House Appropriations Committee Chairman Billy Watkins, D-Granville, said he and Plyler had put together the mopup bill over the weekend with help from other key lawmakers.

Plyler told reporters they had used no particular system to decide how to use the $2.6 million. Some of the expenditures were requested in bills introduced last month. In some cases, legislators simply asked for the money, Watkins said.

"This was something that Representative Watkins and I agreed to," Plyler said. "We looked at (the requests), decided which were the most worthy. We looked at it on the merits."

Rand told reporters the way the bill was put together was "not the best way to do things." Asked whether the Senate had accepted the House's wishes on the budget to clear the way to adjournment, Rand said, "I believe that's right."

Other provisions in the wide-ranging bill include creation of a legislative commission to monitor the executive branch's handling of environmental issues and other panels that will study issues ranging from surrogate parenthood to low-level radioactive waste.

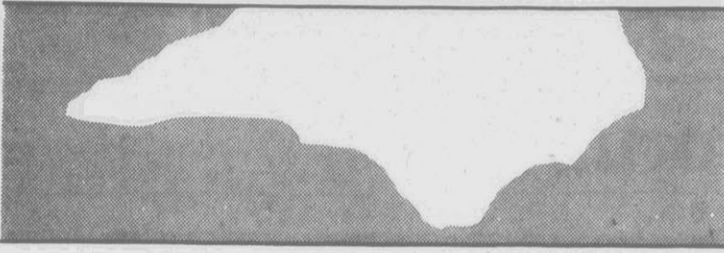

The measure also orders the administration to submit quarterly reports on how it spends the $340,000 the Legislature appropriated for the state's continued recruitment of the superconducting super collider project.

The reporting requirement was sought by legislators representing Person, Granville and Durham counties, which would host the $4.4 billion federal project if North Carolina is chosen. Local legislators have mounted strong opposition, charging the super collider could harm the environment and would force some families to move their homes.

Another provision limits the circumstances under which state employees can charge the state for business lunches.

The highway bill pumps $8 million into resurfacing projects and earmarks $883,293 for secondary road construction and $85,236 to purchase six drug-sniffing dogs that will help highway patrol troopers catch smugglers.

IN THE STATE

Bodies Identified

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — State medical examiners have identified two bodies found in Durham County last week as Thaddeus Hayes and Curtis Bane, who disappeared in July 1985, Orange County authorities said.

District Attorney Carl Fox said Hayes' remains were identified Monday using dental records and X-rays at the state Medical Examiner's office in Chapel Hill. He said two bullets were recovered from Hayes' body.

Another slug was recovered from the head of Bane, an Orange County resident, the newspaper reported.

Charles Antonio Buchanan and Lentz Craig Franklin have been charged by Fox with first-degree murder in the case. Buchanan and Franklin will be arraigned Aug. 1, Fox said.

Law-enforcement officials say they believe Bane and Hayes were shot to death in a dispute over a property line.

Robeson Board

LUMBERTON, N.C. (AP) — The interim school board overseeing the merger of Robeson County's five school systems has launched its search for a superintendent of the unified system.

The board, whose first official meeting had been delayed because of legal wrangles, has one year to combine the Lumberton, St. Pauls, Fairmont, Red Springs and Robeson County systems into a single unit.

The board began its search for both a superintendent and an attorney for the unified school system. Opponents of the merger have said they want someone from outside the county to be named superintendent to avoid charges of favoritism in the merged system.

Trade Conference

RALEIGH (AP) — A high level Chinese trade delegation is visiting Raleigh to explore purchasing and joint business ventures with North Carolina companies.

The delegation, which was to be in Raleigh today and Wednesday, is headed by the governor of China's heavily industrialized Liaoning province, Li Chang Chung.

The North Carolina Department of Commerce and North Carolina State University are co-sponsoring the conference to help match Chinese and North Carolina business partners.

"This conference will be a perfect opportunity for North Carolina businessmen to get in on the ground floor of what will undoubtedly be one of the world's most important markets of the 1990s and beyond," said state Commerce Secretary Claude Pope.

Special Number

RALEIGH (AP) — A special three-digit telephone number has been established by the nine cellular telephone systems in North Carolina so drivers can call directly to the Highway Patrol to report accidents, drunken drivers and other problems.

The new number — "Star" H-P — will give drivers immediate access to troopers, Joe Dean, Secretary of Crime Control and Public Safety, said Monday. The cellular telephone companies are providing free air time for calls to the patrol.

Station Shooting

RALEIGH (AP) — Police are searching for two men they think shot a handgun into the Stantonsburg police station in Wilson County.

Police say the shooting early Sunday morning may have been related to another shooting just outside of town earlier Saturday night and a raid on illegal liquor houses.

Stantonsburg Mayor Seth Hunt said Monday a single bullet passed through the front window of the police station, over the main desk used by officer, and hit a filing cabinet in the back of the building. No one was in the building at the time.

Bodies Found

BURLINGTON, N.C. (AP) — The bodies of a Burlington couple and their daughter were discovered in their home Monday in what police say may have been a double murder and suicide.

Police found the bodies of Edward Alston, 45, his wife, Mary, 40, and their 3½-year-old daughter, Nicole, inside their apartment. Neighbors had called police Monday after noticing an odor around the apartment.

Burlington Police Lt. Steve Lynch said it appeared Mrs. Alston and Nicole were asleep when they were shot. Lynch says Alston was found lying next to his wife with a pistol in his hand.

Police say the shootings apparently occurred sometime late Friday or early Saturday.

Rider Killed

DEEP RUN, N.C. (AP) — A 14-year-old Deep Run youth was killed early Monday when the bicycle he was riding was struck by a car on N.C. 11 about 10 miles south of Kinston.

Curtis Ray McIver was riding his bicycle in the same direction as a car driven by Joseph Wright Carey III, 42, of Wilmington, reports from the state Highway Patrol indicate.

Witnesses told troopers the car moved to the left lane in an attempt to pass the bicycle and the bicycle also changed lanes at the same time.

Prison Population Emergency Ends But Crowded Conditions Continuing

By MICHAEL HOBBS
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — The recent end of North Carolina's prison population emergency does not mark an end to the crowding problem, according to correction officials.

"We must continue to pursue our two-pronged strategy of new construction and alternatives to incarceration if we are to expect to achieve a solution to prison overcrowding in North Carolina," Correction Secretary Aaron Johnson said Monday.

"We have come a long way during the past three years," Johnson said. "But there is still more we will have to do if we are to maintain a correctional system that is just, humane and constitutionally defensible."

Emergency procedures to alleviate crowding at North Carolina prisons were lifted Monday after the number of prisoners dropped below a state-mandated cap, officials said.

"When this (emergency) was triggered on the 23rd of June we had been over the cap for 28 of the previous 30 days," Correction spokesman David Guth said.

"We're pretty tight all the time," he said. "We'll be flirting with (the cap) some more. The system is so overcrowded, our space is so tight, I wouldn't be very surprised if we went over in the fall."

Under state law, procedures to lower the prison population must be started if the system holds more than 17,460 prisoners for more than 15 days.

Officials said the system's population was 17,250 Monday morning. The department was required to reduce the prison population to less than 17,280 by Aug. 21.

Guth said the department relied on early releases of inmates who had received short sentences for misdemeanors to lower the prison population.

He said normally the N.C. Parole Commission considers parole for prisoners 90 days from their scheduled release date. But during the emergency, parole was considered when inmates came within 270 days of their scheduled release date.

"Some of (the population drop) was normal activity but most was from the accelerated parole," Guth said.

Some convicts who had received short sentences for misdemeanors were not admitted to the prison system and were housed in county jails during the emergency. He said some of those inmates now will be accepted into the system.

This marked the third time since the General Assembly adopted the Emergency Prison Population Stabilization Act in 1987 that the state invoked the provisions to lower the prison population.

Guth said an abnormally high rate of admissions into the prison system during the summer was partly responsible for the population increase.

But the primary reason for overcrowding is due to a lack of proper facilities for inmates, Guth said. He said 18 of the system's 86 prisons are under court orders to keep their populations under a certain level.

Guth said the state is conducting a construction program of building additional dormitories that will add 2,500 beds to the prison system.

"We should have the majority of them by the end of the year," Guth said.

But he said the additional beds will not contribute directly to the end of the overpopulation problem. He said the additional beds will be used to give inmates more space in an effort to protect the state from lawsuits over inmate conditions.

He said the state would have to build 1,600 more beds than scheduled to reach a federal standard of 50 square feet per inmate.

"I don't like to guess what the Legislature is going to do, but I think the weight of litigation against the state of North Carolina is going to dictate it," Guth said.

He said the state is working to improve prison conditions to prepare for its defense in an upcoming class-action suit which involves 49 of the state's smaller prisons.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

$500,000 Closer

Activity Center No Baloney

'Regional activities center' may sound like a catch phrase for a barrel of pork but it's not. Such a facility is an asset to the community and area.

It can house regionwide meetings, attract large conventions, host lucrative trade shows and draw outstanding entertainment. It can widen the horizons of the university and community and provide northeast North Carolina a 'central location for conducting its business. That's no salty baloney in a keg.

The hub of a region should have a regional activities center, and for East Carolina University, the news that it's $500,000 closer to housing such a facility is welcome. State lawmakers earmarked that amount in the newly-approved 1988-89 budget for land acquisition for an activity center, a project that is essential if the University is to lead eastern North Carolina.

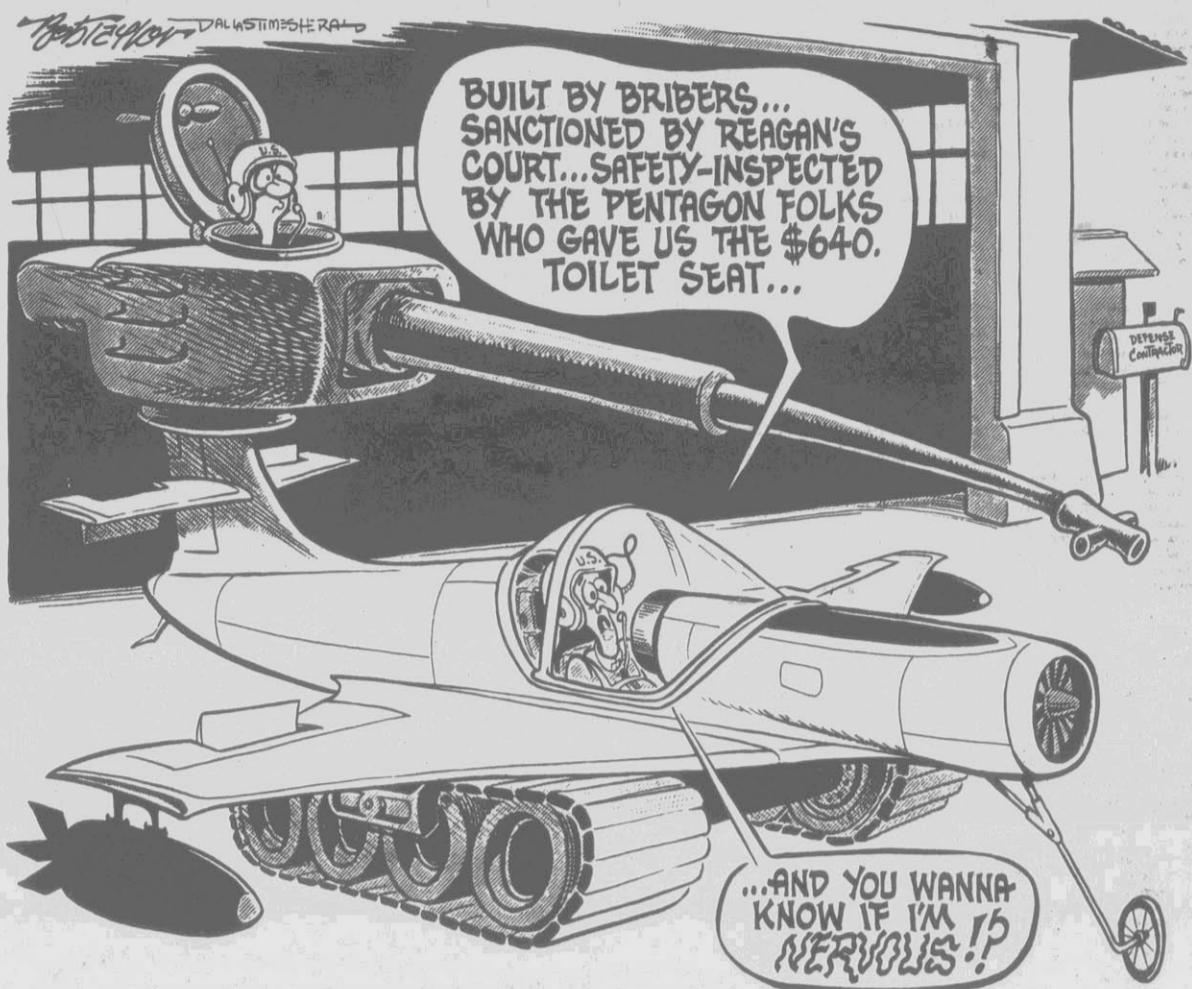

For Greenville, the implications of housing the center are far-reaching.

First, the need for a large activity center at ECU is well-acknowledged. As the medical school grows and the University expands its prowess as a research facility, the number and scope of resource-related meetings increases. Distinguished groups seek a sophisticated, convenient setting for their seminars. Currently, there is no such suitable environment.

Second, the city's rocketing travel and convention trade needs the support of a regional activity center. Greenville's revenue from travel rose the sharpest in the state in 1987. While the industry will continue to expand in 1988, it cannot reach its full potential without expanding the resources drawing this business. That translates to a large, meeting-oriented facility capable of housing a major trade show or entertainment event.

But the impact of a regional activity center will, and should, extend far beyond the geographic and political confines of Greenville. Such a facility could attract cultural and sports events to northeastern North Carolina. It could provide a large, regional setting for conducting the business of the region, and it should be planned with this broad application in mind.

The next step is securing funding for the facility itself, an issue which lawmakers should be prepared to vigorously pursue in the 1989 session of the N.C. General Assembly.

To the editor:

The recent disaster of Iranian Flight 655 has raised many questions and has been the subject of debate since this unfortunate incident occurred.

Flight 655 was within proper airspace designated for commercial aircraft. Military aircraft, however, has been known to conceal themselves within such airspace, only to swoop down at the last moment to destroy their target.

Captain Rogers was justified in his decision to launch missiles at the aircraft he believed to be hostile and approaching his ship. He could not allow himself to be overcome by doubts that he may have been making the wrong decision. His primary concern was the protection of American lives.

Our government has done more than enough regarding this incident. We have issued statement after statement expressing our regrets. We have carefully examined all information that Captain Rogers had available to him at the time he made his fateful decision. We support him in his decision.

No reparations or compensation should be given, especially to a known terrorist-producing country such as Iran. Have we forgotten about the hostages that have been taken out of Iran by terrorists? What of the men of the U.S.S. Stark? Or even the men who were a part of the Multinational Peacekeeping Force in Beirut, who were killed in a suicide mission by a terrorists supported by the Iranian government?

Not once have we received even an apology from these people, let alone monetary compensation for the families of our servicemen. All we get are more threats, more acts of terrorism, and more caskets bearing home the bodies of innocent Americans!

The memory of this tragedy will stay with Captain Rogers for the rest of his life, but I seriously doubt that the terrorists who have taken the lives of Americans are the least bit bothered by their actions.

To the editor:

This is in response to Camille Kroll's letter that appeared on July 6th. Certainly all civilized people were saddened by the tragic event that occurred on July 3rd in the Persian Gulf. At the same time, we cannot condemn the defensive action of the Vincennes' commander. Whether the plane was a jet liner or an F-14, it repeatedly refused to identify itself during a time of conflict and continued on a course toward our ship. Already in combat with Iranian gunboats, the Vincennes had precious little time to consider its options. Would Ms. Kroll have our ship experience a repeat of the Stark incident? I should hope not.

Any plane, military or civilian, is capable of inflicting injury on a ship by Kamikazi attack. To a devout Shiite Moslem such death would mean martyrdom and instant entry into their Heaven. We only have to remember that the attack on the U.S. Marine facility in Beirut was carried out by such fanatical Moslems.

Ms. Kroll might also note that Congress has already reassessed our interests in the Gulf, not once but many times. The fact remains that the reason for our presence there is to insure the flow of oil. Failure in this effort would result in global economic repercussions. Surely no one wants to return to the days of the two-hour gas lines that we experienced during the Arab oil embargo.

Indeed, how does one deal with a government that condones and even perpetrates the seizing of a foreign embassy and the holding of innocent hostages for 444 days?

Truth Lurks Between Good And Bad

RALEIGH — To a degree, Gov. Jim Martin is probably right. Education in North Carolina will most likely benefit from the placement of public schools atop the political agenda which he and his Democratic opponent, Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, are debating. But for that to happen, voters will have to keep a critic's ear turned to the campaign claims.

Martin is claiming to be a leading force for education in North Carolina and he's charging that Jordan is unwilling to take the bold steps that are needed right now to move ahead.

Jordan is claiming that Martin has lagged behind himself and the General Assembly on education matters. He's saying Martin is insincere in his support of the schools and can't be trusted to follow through on any promises he makes in 1988.

How about some truths in all of this? Let's try to recall a few.

Jordan is right when he says Martin was slow to embrace the Basic Education Plan. Martin was elected on a platform of lower taxes. To pay for tax cuts, he had to slice from his 1985 budget some of the education spending that had been proposed by departing Gov. Jim Hunt. The assembly ignored those suggestions and funded most of the BEP that year, and also cut taxes.

Had Martin had his way, the biggest BEP cuts that year would have come in the area of professional support personnel. The BEP greatly increased in 1985 the number of librarians, school counsellors and psychologists. Martin says now that he didn't fully understand the real need for those new people and that Jordan "may be right" to have pushed for them.

Jordan is not fully candid with the public when he tries to compare the pay raises he and Martin have proposed for teachers. He says Martin's raises have totalled 13.2 percent over the last three years and that the assembly has funded raises totalling 22.6 percent.

But Jordan fails to mention all of Martin's salary program for teachers. The governor strongly supports the state's Career Ladder program which would increase teacher pay based on performance. Jordan is luke warm in his support for the ladder. The plan would increase teacher salaries by some $300 million statewide and would most certainly bring Martin's total salary increase package into line with what the Democrats in the assembly have provided.

Jordan also stretches credulity a bit when he says that Martin "tried to gut" the BEP. For the past several years, Martin has been trying to take credit for the BEP and has been a relatively strong supporter, although he may differ on some points of it. In 1985, he did propose less new BEP spending than did Hunt, but he still proposed that most of the program go forward. That's not trying to "gut" it.

Martin, for his part, fails to come to grips with the most important element of education funding in this state. One cannot keep attacking the General Fund—the revenues which pay for education in North Carolina—and still bring the state's education effort up to where it should be. Whether it be money to pay for the Highway Patrol, school bus operations, or more tax cuts for businesses, Martin has repeatedly pursued policies that would have lowered the amount of money available for education in North Carolina. He can argue that other spending can be cut to make up for lost or transferred revenues, but he has rarely proposed any sizeable cuts in any other parts of state government.

So let the two candidates call each other names. Neither is as good, nor as bad, as they'd have us believe.

Is It Obscene Or Is It Junk?

Just before dinner I asked Ed Elson if I could use his phone.

"I prefer that you don't," he replied. "It's time for the junk phone calls to start coming in and I would hate to miss one."

"I didn't know you were turned on by junk telephone calls," I said.

"Answering them is my favorite pastime in the evening. I don't like to refer to them as junk calls — to me they're really obscene calls because they come into people's houses without their permission. I don't care if the caller is soliciting business, raising funds or just taking a survey — he or she has a filthy mouth. So when I answer the phone I talk back dirty and it makes me feel good."

I admitted that I got my share of calls, but I never felt the thrill about them that Ed does.

Ed said, "At one time they had human beings dialing our numbers — now a lot is done by computers. Frankly, I don't like computer junk calls because computers don't breathe heavily on the phone."

"Do you believe junk calls are more harmful than obscene ones?"

Ed said, "There are more perverts making junk calls to sell stuff than there are making porno ones. You have to understand, a pornographic call is initiated by the owner of the telephone. He has to call a number to get his kicks. A junk call is initiated by someone in a boiler room who's just getting paid to do it."

I said, "I think there should be a law against junk calls."

"You can't get a law passed by Congress because most of the legislators use junk calls to get re-elected. And others make them to raise campaign funds."

"Then you're dead."

"We have one chance. The courts have ruled you can't use the phones for obscene commercial practice. Well, what could be more obscene than a message from an insurance company, an upholsterer or a politician, when you break your neck racing through the house to answer it?"

"You sound like you've given junk calls some thought."

Ed said, "I may not know what pornography is but I know it when I hear it."

"I guess the reason that junk calls are legal is that they are not sexually explicit."

"There are worse things than something that is sexually explicit."

"How's that?"

"What is more sadistic than being in the bathtub, worrying about your kid because he has the car, and having some pitchman in a basement ring you up to offer a free trip to Tampa to see a new development located in an Everglades swamp?"

"You've spelled out the problem. What's your solution?"

"We have to call every congressman and senator at home after midnight and ask them to pass a bill banning junk phone calls. If they're not persuaded we must call them the next night, and the night after that, until they get the message about what an obscene weapon the telephone can be."

"Well done, Ed."

"All I'm trying to do," he said, "is give our legislators a taste of what it is like to be in bed with someone you love when the phone rings and the voice on the other end wants to know if you would be interested in taking 10 free lessons in ballroom dancing."

Too Hot ...

... To Ask Stupid Questions

It's time for that question.

You know, the one folks are obliged to ask in the summertime. The one that makes everybody groan. The one that can neither be asked nor answered properly until the mercury soars to triple digits, the paint parches on the house and even the gnats drop dead from the heat.

Since Pitt County is in the grip of a hellacious hot spell, it's time for this obnoxious summer rite. Here comes both question and answers.

How hot is it? Well, let me tell you. It's ...

Hot enough to make a watermelon water.

Hot enough to make a dog yearn for dog days.

Hot enough to stir fry vegetables in the garden.

Hot enough to buy bread and butter at the store and have toast by the time you get home.

Hot enough to fry a bald man's brain.

Had enough? Too bad. There's more.

It's so hot the coffee machine is spitting ice cubes in pity.

It's so hot the hot air from politicians feels like an arctic breeze. (Now that's hot.)

It's so hot a pig could turn into barbecue lying in the sun. Just pour a little sauce on.

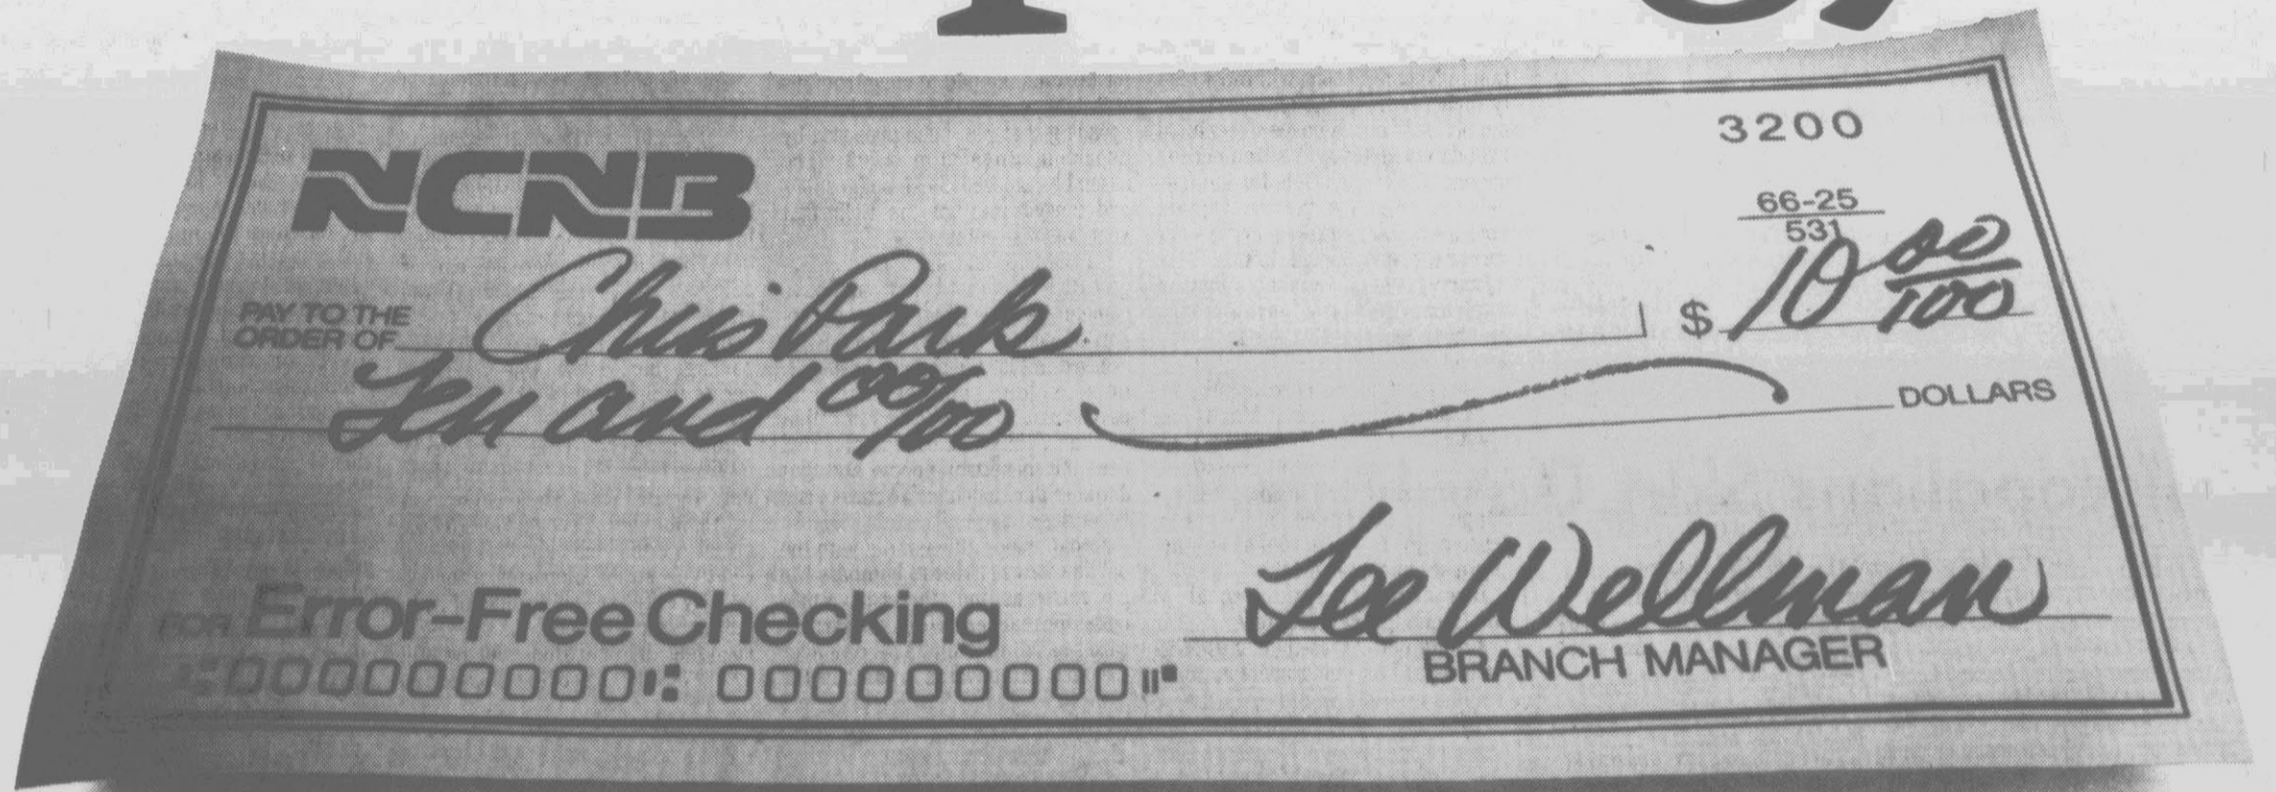

It's so hot newspapers burst into flames on the street.

In fact, this editorial is so hot it could spontaneously combust. So could the author ...

Inmates Use Helicopter In Brief Escape

By SUE MAJOR HOLMES
Associated Press Writer
ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Police today captured a convicted murderer who escaped by helicopter from state prison with two other convicts who were caught when authorities forced down the aircraft in a nearly two-hour aerial chase.

Daniel Mahoney, 30, was apprehended near Los Lunas about 20 miles south of here shortly before 1 a.m., said state police Sgt. John Balderston.

Mahoney, the two other inmates, the pilot — who also flew the helicopter used in Monday's escape attempt in the movie "Rambo III" — and a woman believed to be Mahoney's girlfriend were in custody, officials said.

Officers with tracking dogs and on horseback searched dense woods and set up roadblocks in the hunt for Mahoney, who ran from the helicopter when it landed briefly at Mid-Valley Airport in Los Lunas on Monday morning.

A corrections officer spotted Mahoney's tracks about 7:30 p.m. Monday, and called in a canine unit, Balderston said. Officers followed the tracks along the Rio Grande to a bridge near the city.

Mahoney was serving life plus 60 years for second-degree murder at the Penitentiary of New Mexico.

The yellow-and-bronze helicopter, occupied by a man and a woman, landed in a recreation yard of the prison about 9:50 a.m. Monday.

The convicts jumped aboard as guards in two towers fired rifles, said Corrections Department spokesman Don Caviness.

One of two helicopters that pursued the getaway chopper already was in the air on another mission, Caviness said.

During the chase, the getaway helicopter tried to force a state police helicopter into a crane and nearly rammed a U.S. Customs Service copter in the Rio Grande Valley, said Maj. John Denko, who piloted the police chopper.

"We were hanging right with him," Denko said. "We were not giving him a chance to set down and get away."

The other convicts, Randy Mack Lackey, 36, and Francis Preston Mitchell, 26, were returned to the Penitentiary of New Mexico after their capture.

Also arrested was Beverly Shoemaker of Santa Fe. Her name appears on Mahoney's visitor list and she is believed to be his girlfriend, said Dan Taylor, spokesman for the state Department of Public Safety.

The pilot, Charles Bella, 43, of El Paso, Texas, was being held at the Santa Fe County Jail while authorities checked his story that he was hijacked after flying to Santa Fe to pick up a fare, officials said.

Bella flew the same helicopter in "Rambo III," and also did stunts in the movie "Extreme Prejudice," said a friend, Tony Mobley.

Bella, owner of Bear Helicopters, was hired by a man who identified himself as a businessman, said his wife, Carol, in El Paso. Bella told his wife that Ms. Shoemaker forced him to fly to the prison by putting a gun to his head and handcuffing him to the control stick, she said.

The five-seat Aerospatiale Gazelle helicopter took off from the prison yard and flew south. Authorities followed in a Customs helicopter and an Immigration and Naturalization Service airplane.

The Gazelle landed at Mid-Valley Airport, and pursuing officers saw people jump out before it took off again, heading north toward Albuquerque, Denko said.

State police troopers waiting at the airport wounded Lackey in a gunbattle and captured him, Caviness said. Ms. Shoemaker also was arrested.

Lackey was treated at University of New Mexico Hospital in Albuquerque for a gunshot wound to his left shoulder, then taken to the prison infirmary, the spokesman said.

After leaving Los Lunas, the helicopter flew to Coronado Airport, a commuter airport on the north side of Albuquerque, where it hovered as police on the ground drove up. The aircraft turned south as Denko's helicopter joined the Customs helicopter in the chase. When the Gazelle reached Albuquerque International Airport on the city's southern end, it tried to ram the Customs craft, then tried to force the police copter into a crane, Denko said.

The Gazelle landed on the airport tarmac with its pursuers right behind, he said. The pilot "was running low on fuel," Denko said. "He was getting desperate."

Nicaragua Claims U.S. Diplomat Incited Unrest

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The leftist Sandinista government accused U.S. Ambassador Richard Melton and seven other embassy officials of inciting unrest and ordered them to leave the country Monday.

Also Monday, the Sandinistas shut down the country's Roman Catholic radio station, arrested an opposition politician and closed the lone opposition newspaper, La Prensa, for 15 days.

The moves came a day after police used tear gas and beat protesters in breaking up one of the largest anti-government demonstrations since the Sandinistas came to power. An estimated 10,000 people took part.

The State Department today called the expulsions "an outrage and completely without justification" and said it was considering what actions it will take in response.

Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto said the U.S. diplomats, who were ordered to leave within 72 hours, had engaged in "activities complementary to the state terrorism the administration of U.S. President Ronald Reagan is carrying out against Nicaragua."

He said he summoned Melton to his office Monday to inform him of the order.

D'Escoto called Melton "a robot of the maniacal (Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs Elliott) Abrams" at a news conference.

He said U.S. Embassy officials were at Sunday's rally in Nandaima, about 40 miles south of Managua, at the Interior Ministry said police arrested 42 people. The Sandinistas have repeatedly accused U.S. diplomats of trying to destabilize their government by encouraging unrest.

In a letter to Secretary of State George P. Shultz, D'Escoto's identified the U.S. diplomats ordered expelled with Melton as John E. Hope, first secretary in charge of economic and commercial affairs; Hugh V. Simon Jr., first secretary; Delvin Junker and David Nolan, both second secretaries; John S. Creamer and Aubrey A. Carlson, third secretaries and vice consuls; and Robert Bruce Murray, an assistant attaché.

Melton, 52, arrived as ambassador in May, filling the post left vacant since July 1987.

"This man has violated all acceptable standards of behavior," D'Escoto said. "I told him that here you cannot come give orders like a proconsul in Honduras and that this country is sovereign and independent."

On June 6, 1983, the government expelled three U.S. diplomats accused of taking part in an alleged plot to poison D'Escoto. The United States responded by closing several Nicaraguan consulates in the United States.

In a statement released in Washington today, the State Department said Melton and the seven diplomats "maintain contact with as wide a spectrum of Nicaraguans as possible" and defended their activities as "the normal duties of U.S. officials overseas."

"The U.S. rejects the Sandinista pretext for these expulsions," the statement said. It said the Reagan administration was "considering what actions we will take in response to this affront."

In the Philippines capital of Manila, Shultz condemned the expulsions.

"When they talk about destabilizing Nicaragua, it's the government of Nicaragua that's destabilizing Nicaragua because of the way they are conducting themselves, including, just yesterday, breaking up a rally with tear gas and things of that kind," he said.

Shultz was in Manila for talks with President Corazon Aquino.

In closing Radio Catolica, the Interior Ministry accused the station of "inciting to violence, disorder and lack of respect for constitutional government" in reporting about Sunday's demonstration.

In compliance with a regional peace plan, both the station and La Prensa were allowed to reopen in October after being shut down for more than a year.

Monsignor Bismarck Carballo, the station's director, called the closure order "unjust and arbitrary."

An official in the Interior Ministry press office, speaking on condition of anonymity, said police on Monday arrested Miriam Arguello, secretary-general of the opposition Conservative Party for "being the principal instigator" of Sunday's rally.

Witnesses said police started Sunday's fracas by pushing at the back of the crowd gathered on a field to listen to speeches. They said the crowd threw stones in response to police tear gas.

Terrorists Kill At Least 11 In Greek Cruise Ship Attack

PIRAEUS, Greece (AP) — Government sources said today two men and a woman were photographed as they staged the bloody attack on a Greek ship in which at least 11 people died and 98 were injured.

The sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said copies of the photographs were being distributed to airports, border entry points and harbors around Greece.

Authorities had said three men hurled grenades and fired automatic weapons Monday at terrified passengers aboard the City of Poros cruise ship. But the sources said today the two men and a woman were photographed as they carried out the attack.

Police said the three assailants fled in a speedboat.

There was no claim of responsibility for the assault, which appeared to be a terrorist operation in which plans had gone awry.

Today, a body was pulled from the Aegean Sea and a second was found on the cruise ship. Nine bodies were recovered earlier, and officials said the casualty count was expected to keep rising.

"We also have found some floating body remains that indicate the death toll could go higher," said a harbor authority officer who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Earlier Monday, two unidentified men believed to be of Arab origin were killed when an explosives-packed car blew up near the Trocadero Marina, police said. They said the blast probably was linked to the cruise ship attack.

Police said they found an Iranian magazine in the wrecked car. They said the vehicle had been rented to a 36-year-old Lebanese man, Hamoud al Hamid, and contained hand grenades and automatic weapons.

Terrified passengers scurried for cover and leaped into the sea when the gunmen hurled grenades and sprayed gunfire at the tourists on the crowded vessel. The grenade blasts triggered a fire aboard the ship as it headed for the Trocadero Marina in this Athens port.

Thornburgh Likely Choice For Justice

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan announced today he will nominate former Pennsylvania Gov. Richard L. Thornburgh, an ex-prosecutor with a reputation for staying cool under fire, to succeed Edwin Meese III as attorney general.

Reagan praised Thornburgh as a "prosecutor's prosecutor" and a "tough-minded crime buster" who he said had won an unprecedented number of convictions in six years as the U.S. attorney for western Pennsylvania.

The news cheered officials with Vice President George Bush's presidential campaign, who had worried aloud about political damage to the cert. in Republican nominee from the persistent questions over Meese's ethics.

The news cheered officials with Vice President George Bush's presidential campaign, who had worried about political damage to the certain Republican nominee from the furor over Meese's ethics in office.

Thornburgh's resume includes successful prosecution of public corruption cases at both the federal and state level, in addition to his eight years as governor of Pennsylvania.

Thornburgh, 55, earned a reputation for methodical, steady leadership in 1979 when, after only 72 days as governor, he was faced with the nation's worst commercial nuclear accident, at Three Mile Island near Harrisburg.

Vietnam Returns More Remains

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Vietnam will return to the United States on Wednesday what it believes are the remains of 25 missing U.S. servicemen in one of the largest ever turnovers, the U.S. embassy said today.

An embassy statement said the remains will be flown from Vietnam's capital of Hanoi to the U.S. Army Central Identification Laboratory in Hawaii for identification and return to next-of-kin.

Remains are usually returned in a simple ceremony at Hanoi's Noi Bai airport, with a U.S. officials saluting as a U.S. military honor guard carries the caskets onto a U.S. military transport plane.

The turnover would be the fifth since retired Gen. John W. Vessey, acting as a special presidential envoy, reached an agreement in Hanoi last August to significantly speed up progress on the issue.

The United States was told about the remains during regular talks in Hanoi last month between technical experts of the two sides.

The lack of diplomatic relations between the two countries has hindered the attempt to account for the fates of nearly 1,800 Americans who remain missing in action. U.S. forces withdrew from South Vietnam in 1973 after the involvement cost 58,000 American lives.

The last return of remains, on April 6, was the largest ever. Vietnam returned 27 sets of remains it tentatively identified as those of Americans, and three other sets which it said were those of ethnic Asians who might possibly be among the missing Americans.

Episcopalians Skirt Gay Issue

DETROIT (AP) — Episcopal Church leaders have closed their 69th General Convention without adopting a proposal that could have encouraged the ordination of homosexuals.

A resolution Monday expanding "access to the selection process for ordination" for all persons, including homosexuals — but refusing to recognize a right to ordination for all — fell one vote short of passage in the church's House of Deputies.

Church leaders on both sides of the homosexual debate agreed that Monday's vote left the issue unresolved.

The 900-member House of Deputies, divided between lay and clerical church members, and the 200-member House of Bishops establish policy for the 2.7 million-member church, whose 10-day convention ended Monday. The conventions are held every three years.

Delegates considered almost 500 resolutions at the convention, which opened July 2. But the question of ordaining gay priests dominated the final days of the convention.

Current church law says candidates for ordination must be at least 21 years of age and pass prescribed medical, psychological and academic tests. But leaders of some of the church's 118 dioceses in the United States have ordained homosexual priests without running afoul of Episcopal canon law.

In 1979, the 66th General Convention approved a resolution stating in part, "We believe it is not appropriate for this church to ordain a practicing homosexual."

That resolution, however, is not a part of canon law, which draws a distinction between homosexual activity, which it says is sinful, and homosexual orientation, which it says is not.

Canon law was left intact and thus maintained discretion within the dioceses as to consideration of homosexual candidates for the priesthood, said the Rt. Rev. Paul Moore Jr., bishop of New York City.

"I'm not unhappy that it didn't pass," said the Rt. Rev. George N. Hunt, bishop of Rhode Island. "We are not of one mind on the subject. Until we are, we should be cautious of passing anything until we can speak with authority."

Also Monday, both houses approved a resolution opposing "abortion as a means of birth control, family planning or sex selection."

Seven People Die In Apartment Fire

CHICAGO (AP) — Fire swept through a brick apartment building on the city's West Side this morning, killing seven people, officials said.

Police were investigating reports that another person may remain in the rubble of the fire, which appeared to have started in trash behind an enclosed wooden back porch at the rear of the building, fire officials said.

"We're interviewing people now to see if we can find any witnesses," said Sgt. John Keane of the police Bomb and Arson Unit.

Keane said officials aren't yet certain whether the fire, which spread to an adjacent building, was set.

Spokesman Jerry Lawrence of the Fire Department said an empty gasoline can was found, but investigators were not certain whether it was used to set the blaze.

Fire Commissioner Louis Galante said there were some indications of arson.

"It started in rubbish behind the back porch and spread up to the second and third floors," he said. "In the last hour and a half or two hours, we've had similar fires in the immediate area."

A spokeswoman for the Cook County Medical Examiner's Office who declined to be identified by name said seven bodies had arrived at the morgue. She said the victims had not been identified, and that the youngest appeared to be about 12 years old.

Fire officials say the blaze broke out about 1:30 a.m. EDT and was put out by 3 a.m.

Designer Gives Tuxedos Unusual Art Deco Touch

By RICK CARROLL
Honolulu Advertiser

HONOLULU (AP) — New York artist-designer David Leigh quit his fancy apartment on 57th Street last year and moved to Waikiki because he "needed a break."

Since he first visited Waikiki with his mom when he was 13, he said, he's had this thing for Hawaii.

"I live here now," he said, proudly.

He's found a small, expensive apartment near the world-famous beach, painted the ceiling and walls with trompe l'oeil clouds and settled down to embark on what may come to be known as his "tropical" period.

Leigh paints art deco designs on tuxedos and sells them for small fortunes. He's doing that here now.

Hawaii, he said, is "so art deco, with the palms and all. There's so much art here and it's a great place to paint."

But tuxedos in the land of aloha shirts and flip-flops?

"They wore tuxedos here in the '30s and '40s," he said, a bit defensively. "Everybody wore a tuxedo."

His latest original creation, inspired by Hawaii, is a white dinner jacket featuring black palms, hibiscus blossoms and fern leaves.

The jacket goes for around $638, signed, dated and numbered.

"It's a little pricey," he admitted, "but it's art. The people I sell to are interested in art."

He's 25, bears uncanny resemblance to Montgomery Clift, and name drops like crazy.

His heroes are Erte, the 95-year-old Folies Bergere costumer, who once admired his work, and anyone rich or famous enough to buy his arty clothes.

It all started on Melrose, in L.A., Leigh said.

He painted a secondhand tuxedo and went out on the town in 1983, and the look attracted enough looks to make a few sales to the right people.

He paints tuxedos and fans, kimonos and black motorcycle hats in the morning, then goes to his boutique — really just a niche in the Waikiki Shopping Plaza.

"It takes two or three days to paint a jacket," he said. "It's all hand painted. I don't believe in silk screening or printing. There's not two alike."

His fantasy visions are inspired, he said, by Erte, the prominent art deco illustrator-designer of the '20s, whom he met in New York.

After the master complimented his "beautiful work," the Daily News picked up on it and proclaimed Leigh "Heir to Erte," at only 24.

His creations, also on denim and suede, range up to $1,000 a copy, and may be purchased off the rack or custom-tailored.

Or, you can bring in your old tuxedo and he'll paint art deco pyramids and cobras on it and stud it with rhinestones for about $150.

His Waikiki clientele, so far, he said, hails from Los Angeles, Florida, New York and Japan, in that order.

Vacations Aren't For Some

They were a family headed for a vacation. Everything pointed to it. The little girl wore a "Bon Voyage" T-shirt, the mother balanced a large canvas bag between her knees, and the husband was already winding down as he read the paper and sipped his coffee from a paper cup.

As they stood up to board the plane, the woman said, "Roger, I think I left the hose on in the rose garden."

Roger blanched as he developed a tic in one eye and coffee spilled over his hand.

There's one in every family — people who just can't have a good time. Some people pack bathing suits. They pack shrouds. Some people sit quietly and watch sunsets. They sit and wonder if someone remembered to unplug the coffeepot. Some suck in their breath at the excitement of the Sistine Chapel. They suck in their breath remembering they left bananas by the sink, which will attract more fruit flies at the end of three weeks than a garbage barge.

At Wits End

Erma Bombeck

At some time or another, we have all endured what I used to call the Ugly Oracle: The kid who announced she was exposed to measles and wouldn't be surprised if she broke out the day we arrived at the beach. Or who saw a strange man in a parked car watching Mommie as she put the house key under the flowerpot.

I gave birth to a baby gloomer who drove us nuts. You couldn't climb into the car without her prediction, "Cindy's dad's car sounded like this just before it caught fire on the expressway." Behind every cloud was a tornado.

And the weird part is they never sweat ... they're just carriers of the sweat. After they ruin everyone else's trip, they push their "clear" button and the worry is gone. They get on with their lives, leaving the others in a state of depression and anxiety that will not go away for the rest of the trip.

Our daughter would wait until we were all in the car singing "99 Bottles of Beer on the Wall" and giddy with the excitement of a camping trip, when she would say, "You know what?" The voices stopped singing. "You know that little panel that fits in the doggie door? Someone forgot to put it in. You know our paperboy, Dwayne? He said a man broke in their house once through one of those little doors."

When I grabbed her by the ponytail and asked, "Why didn't you say something before we left home?" she answered, "You always said children should be seen and not heard."

I watched as the woman with the canvas bag guided her husband to the plane. "Roger, what's the matter?" she asked. "This is a vacation, for crying out loud."

Hard Of Hearing Has Problem

DEAR ABBY: "Hurt in Paterson, N.J." said her day was spoiled when the florist delivered a beautiful basket of fruit — an Easter gift from her granddaughter — and on the delivery order was written: "She is deaf, so please wait for her to answer the door."

Abby, this grandmother has mistaken a kindness for an insult. In some cities, delivery people merely ring the doorbell, and if no one answers, they leave the package by the door where it can remain for hours — or even days.

How thoughtful it was of her granddaughter to have given those special instructions to the florist. And since florists make numerous deliveries in one day, their drivers can't be expected to remember special instructions unless they are written on the package.

Abby, a hearing loss is a fact of life; it is neither an insult nor anything to be ashamed of. I was surprised you didn't point that out instead of agreeing with "Hurt" that it was "insensitive and thoughtless" for the delivery instructions to have been in plain sight.

Seems to me, "Hurt" is overly sensitive. If that spoiled her day, she should have sent the basket of fruit to a nursing home where residents would have been thrilled to be remembered at all. — DOLORES WERDER, SUN CITY, ARIZ.

DEAR DOLORES: You are absolutely right — I rate a raspberry on that answer.

One wonders why so many people who are hard of hearing are reluctant to admit it. And how ironic it is that so many of us willingly stick something in our eyes to improve our vision, but we're too embarrassed to stick something in our ears to improve our hearing.

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

Let's hear it from a sister who's right on in Sisters, Ore.:

DEAR ABBY: "Hurt in Paterson, N.J." should have been grateful, not hurt.

I was hospitalized not long ago. Several nurses were in and out of my room to take care of me. Some of them scolded me for not following instructions until I explained that I could not hear. One of the nurses made a sign and hung it over my bed: "Mrs. Tuggle is deaf, but she reads lips well."

From then on, all the people who came into my room made sure I could see their faces when they spoke to me. I wasn't offended by that sign. I was grateful to the nurse who put it there.

I hope that "Hurt" will accept her disability and not try to deny it or reject the help that comes from letting others know about our special needs. I have never known a person who did not respond positively to me when I explained my special needs.

Thank you, Abby, for giving space in your column to the problems of hearing impairment. You may use my name. — RUBY TUGGLE, SISTERS, ORE.

Bed-Wetting Breakthrough

Worried about when your child will stop bed-wetting? We believe bedwetters are deep sleepers and find the following remedies usually do not work: restricting fluids, using drugs, offering rewards, getting them up or using punishment. Bedwetting causes loss of self-esteem and embarrassment about spending the night with friends for fear of wetting the bed. Nightly, 10-15 million children and adults suffer from enuresis (bed-wetting). 2% of all bedwetters have a physical disorder. So, if you have not already done so, consult your doctor. It is hereditary, psychologically damaging, and can be treated after age four. Most often parents are told, "Don't worry, your child will outgrow it." Now this problem can be cured in a few weeks, so don't delay help for many harmful years. Bedwetting is costly to maintain. Wet-NO-More® can save families $5-$10 a week on diapers, soap, and hot water for laundry and baths. Wet-NO-More® is FDA registered and your family's success is money-back guaranteed.

Woman Shocked

BREVARD, N.C. (AP) — A Balsam Grove woman jolted by a lightning bolt channeled through a curling iron she gripped was in satisfactory condition Monday, although her memory of the accident was hazy.

Bentsen Chosen

make Texas a real battleground," said one Dukakis campaign strategist, and indeed it should.

Bentsen defeated Bush in the state in a 1970 Senate race, and will be on the ballot twice this year. Under a special law passed for Johnson in 1960, Bentsen can seek re-election to his seat as well as run for vice president.

So while Bush may yet win the South, Bentsen's selection means it won't be easy. And the more time Bush is forced to spend in the South defending his natural political base, the less time he has to challenge Dukakis in California, Illinois, Michigan and Ohio, states shaping up as the critical tests in the battle for the White House.

Dukakis also balanced the ticket in another way when he selected Bentsen.

He has been urged repeatedly to select someone who has experience in Washington, and Bentsen is the walking embodiment of the Senate establishment. He is chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, a one-time head of the Democratic Senatorial Committee and widely respected by his peers.

But Bentsen is no clone of Dukakis, just as Johnson was no clone of Kennedy. He has voted in favor of funding for the Contra rebels battling the government of Nicaragua, and his record on civil rights will come under scrutiny from the liberals whose support also will be needed for Dukakis to win the White House.

An early test will come on Wednesday, when Bentsen is expected to join Dukakis in an appearance before the NAACP in Washington.

Two employees at Elmhurst School won the award and enticed each other to be present at the meeting.

"I was very surprised," Janice Jones, the secretary of the school said. "I went to take a teacher here who I knew was getting one. She thought the same thing. She thought she was taking me to give me one," Ms. Jones said of Betsy West, a teacher at Elmhurst who also received an award.

"I was very honored," Ms. Jones said. "Somebody had to nominate me and that makes me feel good."

Nelson Baldree, principal of D.H. Conley High School, also received an award.

"I was kind of surprised," he said. "I thought I was over there to discuss the field trip policy and I couldn't find it on the agenda. I thought sure I was over there to do that."

"I shared with the faculty they could nominate some people. I knew some people on the staff were nominated but I was surprised" at being nominated, he said. "That's one of those fringe benefits in life that's worth more than money."

The ABCD award winners were chosen from among more than 60 nominees by a committee of people unrelated to the school system, West said in presenting the awards with board chairman George Williams.

Others receiving the award were Ola Perry, kindergarten through third grade coordinator for the school system; Mary Parker, secretary at H.B. Sugg; Miriam Bailey, assistant principal at H.B. Sugg; Tiffney Saieed, first grade teacher at Sadie Sautler; Barbara Tripp, kindergarten teacher at Belvoir Elementary; and Debby Avery, a teacher for the Trainable Mentally Handicapped at Wintergreen Elementary.

Payments Opposed

But Sen. John Chafee, D-R.I., appearing with Solomon, responded that compensating the families of those who died is "the fair and the just and the right thing to do... we're not admitting any guilt."

Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., also appearing on "Good Morning America," said Reagan's offer "distinguishes us from others... It's the sign of a compassionate and strong nation."

The disagreement spread even to two former hostages in Iran, who appeared on CBS-TV's "This Morning."

Morehead Kennedy suggested forming a mixed claims commission to handle U.S. claims against Iran as well as that nation's claims against the United States.

Such a procedure would establish a connection with the nine Americans held hostage in Beirut, he suggested.

"I don't think that we should go this guilt trip by ourselves," Kennedy said. "There is a very culpable Iranian guilt here."

Another victim of the U.S. Embassy takeover in Iran, Bruce Laining, said however that he agrees with Reagan. "This is a clear case where we have a humanitarian obligation to offer compensation to the victims," he said.

Reagan's spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, said in Monday's announcement that Reagan was motivated by humanitarian concerns and was acting out of charity rather than obligation. He made it clear that payments were to go to victims' families and not to the Tehran government of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

A Navy investigative team is still looking into the incident, in which the Vincennes fired on the airliner after mistaking it for a warplane.

Numerous questions about Reagan's decision remained unanswered, including how much money would be paid to the families, how contact would be made in the absence of formal diplomatic relations between the two countries and just what legal authority would be used to make the payments.

A State Department official, briefing reporters on condition of anonymity, said it is not clear whether a flat amount will be paid for each victim or whether the age, number of dependents and earnings of the victims will be taken into account in assessing compensation.

It also was unclear whether the gesture would require congressional legislation. Congressional leaders assumed that the White House would seek House and Senate approval out of a desire for support for its policy decision, if not out of a need for money to pay the families.

House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, said offering payments to the survivors of the victims would be "a voluntary act committed by a nation that is both generous and genuinely regretful" of the incident. He said he expected quick action once Reagan formally makes a request of Congress.

"If the president is satisfied (that payments are warranted), I would imagine the Congress would be satisfied," Wright said. Leading members of the congressional foreign policy and defense committees also have spoken out in favor of making such payments.

"We are a just and generous people," said Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., who said the payments should go forward "on basic grounds of fairness and decency."

All-Star Clash To Feature 30 Fresh Faces

CINCINNATI (AP) — Infused with 30 fresh faces, this year's All-Star Game will be a test of whose new blood is best.

Never have there been so many newcomers — 18 on the National League side, including starters Vince Coleman, Will Clark and Bobby Bonilla.

Starting pitcher Frank Viola is among 12 first-timers for the American League. Combined, more than half of the 56 players are making their first appearance.

"I kind of feel like the old man of the team," said rightfielder Darryl Strawberry, who at 26 is making his fifth all-star start. "There are so many new faces here that it just doesn't seem like the same NL All-Star team anymore. It's good to have some new blood."

Dwight Gooden, Strawberry's teammate on the New York Mets, will start for the NL. It's his fourth All-Star game, but this represents a new start.

"I want to put aside the distractions of the past," said Gooden, who missed the first two months of the 1987 season because of cocaine rehabilitation.

"For the first two months, when the temptation (of cocaine) would come around, I'd just think about all the people I'd hurt," he said. "It just takes over. You're not abusing the drug, you're abusing yourself."

Gooden, 11-5, lost his last start on Friday night. This time, his support will include such familiar faces as Strawberry and Gary Carter of the Mets, Andre Dawson of the Cubs and Ozzie Smith of the Cardinals.

Viola, 14-2, won his previous start on July 6. Instead of the Minnesota Twins, Viola will be surrounded by the likes of Rickey Henderson and Dave Winfield of the New York Yankees and Wade Boggs of Boston.

Both managers announced the batting orders Monday.

Vince Coleman of St. Louis will lead off for the National League and play left field. Second baseman Ryne Sandberg of Chicago will bat second, followed by Dawson in center field.

Strawberry will play right and bat fourth, followed order by third baseman Bobby Bonilla of Pittsburgh and first baseman Will Clark of San Francisco.

Carter, a two-time All-Star MVP, will bat seventh and shortstop Smith, the leading vote-getter this year, hits eighth.

American League manager Tom Kelly had a small problem because he wasn't sure how his outfielders would line up as Winfield and Jose Canseco both played right field this season

Henderson will lead off and play center field, followed by Paul Molitor of Milwaukee, elected at second base although he has played there only twice this season, this past Saturday and Sunday.

Boggs will play third and bat third, with Canseco fourth in left and Winfield fifth in right. Cal Ripken of Baltimore replaces injured Alan Trammell at shortstop and bats sixth, followed by Oakland teammates Mark McGwire at first base and Terry Steinbach catching.

But some other perennial All-Stars are not present. Mike Schmidt, Dale Murphy, Tim Lincecum and Eddie Murray are among the big names missing.

Even two of the six umpires are first-timers — Dale Ford and Dan Morrison of the American League.

"It just seems like there are a lot of National League veterans not having good years and a lot of young players doing well," said Rafael Palmeiro, batting .311 for the Chicago Cubs.

There are five Minnesota players on the team, the first time the Twins have had more than one in 11 seasons. They were picked by Manager Tom Kelly, who guided the Twins to the World Series championship.

"They all deserved to make it," Viola said of teammates Kirby Puckett, Gary Gaetti, Jeff Reardon and Tim Laudner.

Oakland also has five players, given (See All-Star, B-2)

Tyson's Retirement Will Not Last Long

NEW YORK (AP) — Mike Tyson said Monday his "retirement" would last one or two months, that Kevin Rooney may be out as his trainer and confirmed that Donald Trump is advising him.

The heavyweight champion, speaking at a news conference in a Manhattan hotel, was surrounded by Trump, attorney Michael Winston, wife Robin Givens, mother-in-law Ruth Roper and Rory Holloway, a long-time friend. Tyson said he wanted to dispel the swirling stories about his future but he may have started more than he stopped.

"I called this press conference to set the record straight. I call all the shots," the heavyweight champion said in a pink and mauve ballroom, surrounded by 46 pink spotlights, 22 candelabras and 28 ionic columns.

Thirteen days ago Tyson said he was quitting. "It's time to move on. It's time to call it a day," he said then.

"I didn't say I was retiring," he said now. "I love fighting."

How long will the layoff last?

"This is something I have to consider. Perhaps a month or two."

Tyson, who is 22, had been tentatively scheduled to fight Frank Bruno this fall. He didn't talk about that fight but said he would fight for about five more years.

"Nobody wants to be in the gym getting your body hit at thirty-five," he said.

Rooney, Tyson's trainer, was in the ballroom but left before the news conference started.

Tyson said that Rooney, who has trained him since his start as an amateur, will be dropped if he sides with Bill Cayton in the litigation begun two weeks ago to break Cayton's managerial contract. Cayton claims he has three-and-a-half years left on the contract, but Tyson claims he wasn't represented by a lawyer when he signed it.

"Anybody that goes against me can no longer be with me, can no longer be associated with me," Tyson said. "If somebody turns against me after eight years just because Bill Cayton signs the checks ..."

Tyson said he had not spoken with Rooney. But he said he had heard through third parties that the trainer would side with Cayton, who became Tyson's sole manager when Jimmy Jacobs died earlier this year.

Tyson insisted he made the deci-

A Short Retirement

J.C. Thomas' Move Had Domino Effect

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

When D.H. Conley Athletic Director J.C. Thomas requested a transfer to W.H. Robinson Elementary, the move had a definite domino effect.

Conley went in house to fill Thomas' position, but that move opened up two additional spots on the coaching staff, one of which was filled by a coach from another Pitt County high school.

Conley head basketball coach and assistant baseball coach Walter Claybrook will assume Thomas' duties as athletic director, while North Pitt head basketball coach Cobby Deans will take over Claybrook's old job. Claybrook's lone coaching responsibility will be golf.

"When Mr. Thomas left, we had talked to coach Claybrook about the athletic director job," said Conley Principal Ike Baldree. "We felt like it would be a good move for him if he were willing to give up coaching major sports. It was a move he felt like, career-wise, would be something good for him. He is in school working on an administration degree."

For Deans, the transfer to Conley will be a move closer to his Ayden home.

"He (Deans) had initiated (contact) when he moved to Ayden that if the situation ever became open, he would like to be considered," Baldree said. "His wife had transferred here three years ago. He was interested in a job, not necessarily as being basketball coach, but in his certified area (physical education and drivers education)."

"We have since that time never had an opening we could talk to him about. When this came open, it would have been difficult to find somebody (that exceeded) his background and success. Year in, year out, he has had tremendous success. We felt like we were fortunate to gain a coach of his caliber."

In addition to his basketball coaching duties, Deans will also be a trainer for the Viking football program.

"This was a hard decision for me, but one that was in the best interests of me and my family," Deans said. "During my tenure at North Pitt, I have been guided by some outstanding administrators and have worked with an enjoyable faculty and school community.

"All of these have been very supportive of our program. My greatest concern is leaving a great group of basketball players."

"At Conley I'm looking forward to working with another great administration and faculty and a great basketball program."

Conley lost three starters off last year's Eastern 3-A runner-up, including 6-8 Wake Forest signee Phil Medlin, but returning are part-time starters Paul Merritt, Bershaun Thompson and Terry Williams.

"I'm fully aware of players lost to graduation and I see this as a great challenge for me to carry on the winning tradition coach Claybrook has established. I do know this team and look forward to working with a very young but multi-talented group of players."

North Pitt has yet to name a successor for Deans.

"We're considering different options," said North Pitt Principal Josh Potter. "There is not much to choose from in here. As far as I know, no one is interested in staff. I'm sure as soon as the word gets out, there'll be some people interested."

Deans is the third coach to resign coaching duties at North Pitt in the last year, following the departure or resignation of football coach Larry Bolger and baseball coach Gerald Garner.

Bolger and Garner reportedly were dissatisfied with school administration, but both Potter and Deans said the circumstances regarding Deans' departure and the other resignations were different situations.

Pitt County school system athletic director Bob Dailey declined comment on the changes in the athletic department at North Pitt, and Potter also declined to comment on changes in his school's athletic department.

Potter, though, praised Deans as a coach.

"Cobby's record speaks for itself," he said. "He traditionally had a winning program. He was an excellent strategist and was consistently able to get the most out of the talent that was available."

Judge Refuses Free Agency To NFL

Still In Good Shape

Gene Upshaw, executive director of the NFL Players Association, said the player's union could claim a victory even though a judge turned down the player's bid for free agency Monday in court. (File Photo)

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — U.S. District Court Judge David Doty refused on Monday to turn loose 300 NFL players from their teams by granting them free agency, saying it could destroy competitive balance and cause some teams to fold.

Instead, Doty urged that the sides get out of the courts and go back to the bargaining table while preparing for an antitrust trial that he said he thought the players would win.

"After assessing each of the factors, the court finds that the balance tips decidedly in favor of the owners and against granting a preliminary injunction," wrote Doty, whom the union had asked to grant an injunction that could free almost 300 players to sign with any team.

"The court finds that the potential migration of many key players from more desirable clubs to more desirable ones could have a devastating long-term impact on the competitive balance within the league."

"The danger that destruction of the competitive balance could ultimately lead to diminished spectator interest and franchise failures itself constitutes a sufficient basis for denying the requested injunctive relief."

Doty's ruling, in effect, means that such prime players as quarterback Randall Cunningham of the Philadelphia Eagles, nose tackle Bill Maas of the Kansas City Chiefs, offensive lineman Gary Zimmerman of the Minnesota Vikings and two New York Giants All-Pro's, tight end Mark Bavaro and linebacker Carl Banks, must re-sign with their old teams.

Until June 15, those players could have signed with other teams but only under the restrictive compensation and right-of-first-refusal rules under which just two players have signed with new teams in 11 years.

But only linebacker Wilber Marshall of Chicago moved before the deadline, signing a $1.6 million, 5-year contract with Washington in March. The Redskins had to give up two first-round draft choices in return.

Doty said that, although he considered it "probable that the players will prevail" in the antitrust trial and that at least some of the players "are likely to sustain irreparable harm if they are not immediately permitted to sign with other NFL clubs, the court shall not grant the players' motion for injunctive relief."

Both sides claimed victory of a sort.

"It is time to get out of the media and back to the bargaining table," the NFL Management Council said in a statement, expressing relief that the present system will stay in effect for at least another season. "We believe the NFLPA should resume bargaining at the earliest possible."

Doug Allen, the union's assistant executive director, also claimed victory.

"It was a win-win situation for us," Allen said. "We have the judge predicting that we will win the trial and he's recognizing that damages will be available to the players affected."

And union head Gene Upshaw said in a statement the players were willing to go all the way through a trial. He said the union had asked for an expedited trial date.

"It is too late for the NFL clubs to undo that damage for 1988 free agents, so they face a huge liability in this litigation," Upshaw said.

"We are not surprised that the injunction was not granted, because it is rare for a court to grant such relief prior to a trial."

"What is significant though is that Judge Doty reaffirmed that what the owners have done since last season

Lyle, Ballesteros Favored In British Open

LYTHAM, England (AP) — Sandy Lyle and Seve Ballesteros were made the pre-tournament favorites in this week's British Open golf tournament with the consensus among the experts that it's unlikely an American will win.

The 117th British Open Championship begins Thursday at Royal Lytham-St. Annes with Great Britain's legal bookies making the Spaniard and the Scotsman 8-1 choices.

"Maybe they know something I don't," said Lyle, winner of the American and British Masters and also the leading money-winner on the U.S. tour.

But he had his tongue firmly planted in cheek.

"My confidence is pretty high right now," said the low-key, soft-spoken man who won the British Masters earlier this year and leads the American money-winning list.

"I'm pretty well prepared. There's been a lot of preparation behind the scenes, things you haven't seen," he said.

Part of that — and it only adds to the confidence — come from a couple of unofficial outings the last two days.

On Sunday, Lyle and defending British Open champion Nick Faldo beat Jack Nicklaus and Tom Watson in a better-ball exhibition match. Monday, Lyle and Jose-Maria Olazabal beat Ballesteros and Jose Rivero in a practice round.

"It was for lunch. Seve lost. But he hasn't bought lunch yet," Lyle said. "We were quite a bit under par. My short game is pretty decent. My second shots are decent."

"But the thing you have to be concerned about on this golf course is off the tee, keeping it in play so you can play the second shot."

Michael Bonallack, secretary of the sponsoring Royal and Ancient Golf Club of St. Andrews, said the fairways are about 12 yards more generous than they were the previous year at Muirfield.

"Well," said Sandy, "it isn't noticeable."

"The course looks to me to be one of the toughest we've ever played in the Open."

The course, on the west coast of England, always has been tough for the Americans.

Bobby Jones, an amateur, won here in 1926. But in the six British Opens played at this site since then, no American has won. And an American has not won this, the oldest of all the world's golf titles, since Tom Watson collected his fifth British Open crown in 1983.

Lyle indicated he expected the trend to continue.

He mentioned Barry Lane, the youthful winner of last week's Scottish Open, Faldo and Ballesteros as the most likely contenders in the 153-man field.

Only under questioning did he name an American.

"Payne Stewart is a good wind player," Lyle said. "He's played well in the Open before."

The latest betting odds had Lyle and Ballesteros at 8-1, Faldo at 10-1. U.S. Open champ Curtis Strange was the top American at 14-1 with Bernhard Langer of West Germany.

Mark McNulty of Zimbabwe, the leader of the British Order of Merit, and Ben Crenshaw were next at 20-1.

Portions of the final two rounds Saturday and Sunday will be televised nationally in the United States by ABC.

Kansas Eager To Clear Up Its Recruiting Violations

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — The NCAA is investigating national champion Kansas for alleged recruiting violations in its basketball program, Athletic Director Bob Frederick said Monday.

Frederick said, however, that the university considers the allegations explainable and had been cooperating with the NCAA for about a year. He said was "stunned" when the NCAA notified the university last month that an official inquiry was under way.

"We feel at this point like we're working hand-in-hand with them to resolve this matter," Frederick said. "The things that we self-reported that they are now saying in the allegations 'You did this,' we feel are explainable."

KU also released a statement from Larry Brown, who coached the championship team, in which he said he would work closely with the university to resolve the matter. Brown, who coached the Jayhawks for five years, resigned June 13 to become head coach of the San Antonio Spurs.

Frederick was not specifically asked about Brown and did not specifically clear him. He said before his session with reporters that he would not mention names.

When asked if one or some of the staff members involved were still employed at KU, Frederick said "some." Frederick also said Roy Williams, named Friday to succeed Brown, was informed of the situation before he took the job.

The allegations, which included providing transportation for and loaning money to recruits, did not involve any member of the team which beat Oklahoma in the NCAA finals, Frederick said. In fact, he said, none of the players involved enrolled at Kansas.

The athletic director declined to release the names of staff members, institutional representatives and recruits involved in the allegations.

Frederick said he became aware of the NCAA interest about two weeks after he succeeded Monte Johnson as athletic director on May 13, 1987.

"There was a long period of time during which we were working with them (the NCAA) in which we thought this matter would not end up in an official inquiry," Frederick said. "That's why I feel very confident we're going to get through this thing OK. It's something we want to be up front about. We've asked for the speediest resolution possible."

"We think at least in our own mind that we came as close as we could without coming to that level. There are some matters that we self-reported. Other matters were brought to our attention by the NCAA."

Kansas received official notice from the NCAA on June 20, Frederick said. The university must respond by Sept. 2, and could appear before the NCAA Infractions Committee as early as the end of September, he said.

"I think the thing we felt confident about is they felt there was no intent, no consistent pattern of anything," Frederick said. "Many of them are very small items and represent some reporting errors and some represent carelessness."

Frederick released a statement detailing 14 allegations against KU which allegedly occurred between June 1986 and April 1987. KU was also asked to provide information about certain "representatives of the university's athletic interests."

The allegations included providing transportation and airline tickets, meals and clothing to recruits as well as loaning money and paying a recruit for work not done.

The KU statement said in some cases that "institutional interests" who made loans or bought tickets expected to be paid back, but were not.

Another charge against KU was that "a staff member acted contrary to the principles of ethical conduct in relation to certain alleged violations and that this demonstrates a knowing and willful effort by the staff member to operate part of the institution's intercollegiate athletic program in a manner contrary to NCAA legislation."

The NCAA is also investigating a charge that KU applied eligibility regulations improperly and allowed a player to compete after becoming aware that the player had received improper benefits.

Finally, the NCAA said staff members told Chancellor Gene Budig they had no knowledge of recruiting violations, causing him to certify KU's compliance with NCAA rules.

Budig said in a statement that KU was committed to an "infraction-free environment." He said "early and effective answers" would be given to the NCAA.

Frederick said KU had tried to resolve the allegations with the NCAA before the start of the last basketball season, in which the Jayhawks survived injuries and academic problems to follow Danny Manning to an improbable national championship.

"The national championship will always be a significant accomplishment by an outstanding group of coaches and young men who represented the university and intercollegiate athletics with distinction," Frederick said.

Possible penalties against KU range from a private reprimand to television and postseason sanctions.

KU could not be stripped of its championship, even if a player on the team was involved, said David Berst, head of enforcement for the NCAA. Recruiting violations, if proven, can only affect future competition, he said.

All-Star Game

ing the AL West a total of 17. It's the first time the division, long considered a weak sister of the East, has had that many since 1975.

"The main thing is I'll get to play. I feel like part of the team," said cleanup hitter Jose Canseco, who was an All-Star in 1986 but did not appear in the game.

There is a chance, however, that no one will play Tuesday night.

Both teams had their workouts halted by rain Monday afternoon and there was an 80 percent possibility of showers Tuesday afternoon and 50 percent in the evening.

The best player no one will see is Cubs pitcher Greg Maddux, who leads the majors with 15 victories. He pitched a complete game Sunday and is unavailable.

"I'd like to pitch, but I don't think I can," he said. He is one of six Cubs on the roster, most from any team. Most likely, Bob Knepper and Danny Jackson will follow Gooden. Orel Hershiser, David Cone and Bob Walk also pitched Sunday and will not work.

"I hear all of the talk about the National League not having very many pitchers ready because a lot of them pitched yesterday," said Mark Davis, another All-Star rookie. "Well, tell Whitey (Manager Herzog) that I can go whatever he wants me to."

Roger Clemens, who struck out 15 on Saturday night, probably will relieve Viola.

"I'm sure I'm going to pitch," Clemens said. "I went out and played catch today. I feel strong enough to go Tuesday night."

Clemens was the MVP in 1986 when he outpitched Gooden as the AL won. The previous AL victory at an NL park came in 1962 at Wrigley Field.

The NL leads the series 37-20-1. It has won 14 of the last 16 along with 22 of 25.

That winning tradition has struck with the NL players, both new and old.

"I hope I can do something to help us win," said Cincinnati's Chris Sabo, the only rookie on either team.

"This is a kind of thrill for me. Growing up in Detroit, people like Lance Parrish and Alan Trammell were my heroes. It's still hard for me to believe I'm in the same locker room with Lance."

Ditto for Montreal's Andres Galaraga, whose NL-leading 338 average earned him his first All-Star trip.

"Growing up, all I ever thought about was making it to the major league All-Star Game," Galaraga said. "It's been a struggle for me to get national attention. It's good to finally be noticed."

Driessen Proud Nephew Perry Made All-Star Team

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Dan Driessen never made baseball's All-Star game in his 15-year career. But seeing his nephew, Gerald Perry, on the National League squad makes him as proud as if he had done it himself.

Tuesday night, Driessen will watch Perry play the turf Driessen knows so well — first base at Cincinnati's Riverfront Stadium.

Driessen, a native of Hilton Head Island, went to the World Series with the Cincinnati Reds and St. Louis Cardinals in his career. But despite several years in which he hit over .300, he was shut out of All-Star competition.

Perry grew up on Hilton Head Island with his uncle as hero and role model. Now, an Atlanta Brave, he is second in the National League with a .337 average, one point behind Montreal first baseman Andres Galaraga.

Perry "is playing really good baseball," Driessen said. "He has come into his own and I am really proud of him. It's an honor to play in the All-Star game."

"They only take the best," said Perry's mother Ida, who is Driessen's sister. "There are a lot of people that could have been picked. I guess he is one of the lucky ones. He is having a great year, but it didn't have to be him."

"I couldn't be happier. I was just overjoyed when he called and told us."

Ida Perry said her son idolized her brother. "Gerald could call him anytime and Dan would talk to him and he would spend a lot of time with him," she said.

Driessen says he didn't spend a lot of time watching Gerald, but from the bat added:

"I knew he could play. He could hit, was fast and had a good arm," Driessen said.

"I told Cincinnati scouts about him when I was playing with the Reds. I told them I had a nephew down in Hilton Head they needed to go check out. I guess they got in on him a little late because they came back to me and asked me why I hadn't told them about him sooner."

Driessen said his nephew's selection to the All-Star team did, in a sense, complete things.

"It makes up for a lot of things," Driessen said. "I had the numbers a couple of times but was never selected. It is quite an honor and I am glad Gerald has got the chance to play in the game. I hope he has several opportunities to play in it again."

While Perry holds his uncle in high esteem, Driessen said he hopes Perry will have the same effect on today's youth.

"It is extremely gratifying to have someone so close to you follow in your footsteps," Driessen said. "This is a great game and a good profession. Hopefully some young person in Hilton Head will look up to him the same way."

Morris Campbell, who was Perry's manager when he played for the former Hilton Head Blue Jays, has the same hope as Driessen.

"The Gerald Perry story has to be encouraging to others," Campbell said. "The All-Star game is a hell of a place to be and a place a lot of us wish we could be. We are proud of him and the best thing is that it has not changed Gerald."

"His attitude is still the same and he remembers the people around here and remembers where he came from."

Cardinals Sign Quisenberry To Help Heal Relief Pitching Woes

CINCINNATI (AP) — The St. Louis Cardinals, in dire need of effective middle-relief pitching, announced Monday they have agreed to terms with former Kansas City bullpen ace Dan Quisenberry.

In Cincinnati for the All-Star break, St. Louis general manager Dal Maxvill said in a news release that Quisenberry would join the Cardinals for their home game Thursday against the San Diego Padres.

"In Quisenberry, we are getting a relief pitcher who has been one of the best in the American League in the 1980s, even though he has struggled some this season," Maxvill said. "I hope that a change of leagues will help him regain that form. We sure could use the help."

They could, indeed.

Quisenberry, 35, joins a team that has lost six straight games — including a 21-2 wipeout in San Francisco — and 22 of its last 28. Cardinal relief pitchers have blown their last six save opportunities.

Manager Whitey Herzog, in Cincinnati to manage the NL All-Stars, has been searching for a middle relief pitcher who can come in advance of closers Todd Worrell and Ken Dayley. Herzog said he hopes Quisenberry will be that pitcher.

"I'll use him mostly as a set-up man in the sixth and seventh innings to try to help me get to Todd and Dayley," said Herzog, who was Quisenberry's first manager in the major leagues, in 1979 with the Royals. "We think he can help us ... all he has to do is come in a pitch to one hitter for me. That basically could be a big benefit to him."

Quisenberry has 238 career saves, and is tied with Sparky Lyle for fourth on the all-time list. He has a 51-43 record with a 2.55 earned-run average. This season, he was 0-1 with the Royals with one save and a 3.55 ERA.

Coaching Changes

Claybrook had just completed his fourth year as the Vikings' head coach, including a state championship in 1987. He has been a coach at Conley since 1970, when the school opened.

"It's an opportunity for a step up," Claybrook said. "I still enjoy coaching and enjoy being around the guys, but the part I don't enjoy is getting on the bus at 4 p.m. and getting off it at around midnight."

"I have also started back to school and if I had stayed coaching basketball, baseball along with being the athletic director, it would have been too much to do credit to all the jobs. I want to take the program where J.C. Thomas has risen it to and keep raising it."

In other shuffling of personnel within the athletic department at Conley, boys' track coach Terry Morris will become an assistant boy's basketball coach, replacing Keith Gould, who was recently named girl's basketball coach for the Valkyries. Football coach Steve Craft will take over Morris' track responsibilities.

In addition, Conley officials are looking for assistant coaches for both football and baseball.

Danny Thompson Racing Despite Father's Death

By Shav Glick
(c) 1988, Los Angeles Times

HUNTINGTON BEACH, Calif. — Being the son of a dynamic racing personality was never easy for Danny Thompson when his father Mickey was alive. Now that Mickey and his wife Trudy are dead, victims of assassin's bullets last March 16, the difficulties have compounded.

Almost since the day he drove a little quarter-midget at his father's Lions Drag Strip when he was 9, Danny has longed to be a race driver, to drive in the Indianapolis 500, or on the high banks of a superspeedway in a stock car.

"I haven't made it, but the dream is still as strong as ever," Danny said.

Now 38, time may be running out for the man who looks like a smaller version of his dad.

Danny has been a winner in racing — in quarter-midgets, in motocross, in Formula Atlantic cars, in Super Vees and in off-road buggies and trucks — but whatever he did, his flamboyant father was the one who grabbed the headlines.

Danny was always in his father's very large shadow.

"I've tried to steer myself toward Indy, but over the years I've found that you've got to go with the flow. Right now, all my efforts are with my stadium truck."

Danny will be driving a Chevrolet S-10 racing truck Saturday night in the Los Angeles Coliseum. Win or lose, Danny will probably remain in the shadows.

The event, the Mickey Thompson Off-Road Gran Prix, was created by his father for stadium racing nine years ago to showcase the excitement of desert and Baja racing in a capsule form. And Saturday night's event is being presented by the Mickey Thompson Entertainment Group, another extension of his father's legacy.

Danny won a heat race on that first night in 1979, in a single-seat buggy, but as always, it was Mickey's show.

"People have always asked me, more so since he was killed, if I expected to be like him, meaning as successful as he was," Danny said. "I always said that it would take two, maybe three, lifetimes to even start to accomplish all that he did."

"I've always wanted to be successful, sure, and I feel I've been competitive in anything I've undertaken, but let's face it, he's a legend. He was always my hero. Even when we didn't get along and there was a lot of that, I always idolized him. I always will."

"That's what makes losing him so tough. I mean the way we lost him. If he'd died of cancer, or got hit by a car on the street or killed in race, I could reconcile his being gone. But the way it happened, it was like someone coming up and hitting you right in the forehead with a hammer."

Los Angeles County Sheriff's investigators have said that they believe that the brutal double murder was a contract killing. Although their investigation is ongoing, they have been unable to establish any solid clues.

"It was particularly hard for me at the first two races after it happened," Danny said. "At Seattle and Houston. I kept expecting to see Dad walk around the corner, the way he always did, trying to do everything himself. It was tough to swallow."

"He always taught me to be tough, though, and I know if I'd sat around moping about him being gone that a big bolt of lightning would have come down and hit me right in the butt."

As early as 6 or 7 years old, Danny remembers Mickey teaching him about being tough.

"There were three kids whose idea of fun was pushing me into the rose bushes after school. I went home one night, whining about what they'd done when my dad walked in. My mother was busy picking the thorns out of me and telling me how sorry she was."

"Dad's reaction was to tell me I'd better learn how to be tough. He said I ought to take some boxing lessons ... so I could take care of myself. I did, and you know, I never had any trouble with those guys again."

Danny also parlayed the training into a short career as a Golden Gloves boxer. He won enough to get people talking about him turning professional, but it wasn't for Danny.

"All the time, my only real interest was to be a racer. I hung around Dad's garage every chance I had, doing whatever I could to help. I chased stuff and swept out and finally started doing some welding and fabricating."

"Once I learned how to build things, Dad kept me awful busy. His passion was shock absorbers. He thought about them every day and most nights, too. I'd be asleep and the phone would ring, as often as not around 1 or 2 in the morning."

"It would be Dad. 'Turn the light on,' he'd say. 'Get a pencil and some paper. I've got a new idea I want you to work on. Get up and have it ready by the time I get there in the morning. We need to test it.' More times than not, I'd get up and get it done. It was never a threat to get it done, it was just the urgency that he expressed. He made it sound like it was the most important thing in the world. And to him, it was."

Danny is still making shock absorbers. The ones on his Chevy truck were hand built.

Although Mickey Thompson made millions with his inventions, businesses and promotions, he used little of it to promote his son's racing career.

"Dad wanted me to be a lawyer, not a racer," Danny said. "He started out supporting my racing when I was young, but he always said school had to be my first priority. I went to college for two years at L.A. Harbor, but I was spending all my spare time racing."

"When I told him that I wanted to quit school and race full-time, he said that if that's what I wanted, I'd have to earn the money to support myself and my racing."

"He realized that I got a lot of my independence from him, and that he was the one who always said that if you wanted something real bad, to go after it. He respected that when I quit school. Sure, he gave me a lot of support mentally, and I learned a lot from watching him, but when I had to spend bucks for equipment, he made sure that I earned it."

The younger Thompson said that he also learned about intensity from his father.

"You couldn't be around my dad long without feeling it," Danny said. "When I'm working on a project, or racing, I feel like I'm the same way. I don't know if I inherited any of that from him genetically, but I know it was instilled in me by association."

Danny rode along with Mickey for five years in Baja, but Danny never got a chance to drive himself.

"Dad's theory seemed to be that it was OK if he killed me (racing), but I couldn't kill myself."

About Saturday's race, Danny said, "The Coliseum race has a special meaning for me, though. Knowing it was where Dad started it all (stadium off-road racing), and knowing I won there in the first race, it all adds up to a special kind of motivation."

"I never thought I could be motivated more than I am before the start of any race. I am always motivated by the thought of winning, but I know when I'm lining up for the main event Saturday night, I'll have a little extra jolt of adrenaline flowing."

"I'll have a lump in my throat, thinking about Dad. Subconsciously, I'll probably be looking for him walking down the track, but once I flip the visor down on my helmet, nothing else will be on my mind except the race. Once I'm in the car, my mind is 100 percent on the business at hand."

All-Stars Explain The Downfall of Homeruns

CINCINNATI (AP) — The All-Star home run derby was a washout Monday just as it has been all season for the major leagues.

The All-Stars took their cuts in batting practice and then explained why it's harder to hit homers this season compared to 1987 when every game seemed like a home run derby. Reasons for the drought ranged from the cold weather to the enlarged strike zone.

A "skills competition" had been planned at Riverfront Stadium as part of the All-Star festivities but was rained out and the only skill the players got to practice was the art of conducting interviews.

Several slugging stars from the past, including Mike Schmidt and Jim Rice, are absent from this year's All-Star game and the homers have been missing this season, too.

Last year, there were 1,824 home runs in the National League and 2,634 in the American — both records.

At All-Star break, the NL had 704 homers and the AL 894 for a projected drop off of 25 to 30 percent.

"I think the weather has a lot to do with it," said Texas manager Bobby Valentine, an All-Star coach. "It was

Crumpler Accepts Post With ECU

Carlester Crumpler, the all-time leading rusher in East Carolina football history, is returning to his alma mater as Director of Administrative Services for the department of athletics. ECU athletic director Dave Hart announced today.

Crumpler's primary responsibilities will center around the recruiting and compliance coordination of prospective student-athletes and serving as the liaison between the athletic department and the admissions office.

"We've made an exceptional addition to our staff with the hiring of Carlester Crumpler," Hart said. "Our department had a real need for a person to coordinate our compliance and regulations."

"Carlester is a man of high integrity and he obviously has a special feeling for East Carolina University. He is an ECU graduate and a former football star who understands where we've been and where we want to go with our program."

As compliance director, Crumpler will be the university's representative at NCAA related seminars on the national level. He will also be directly responsible for structuring a minimum of four athletic department seminars each year for staff and student athletes on various subjects.

A 1980 inductee into the East Carolina Sports Hall Of Fame, Crumpler won numerous honors during his playing days for the Pirates from 1971-1973. He was a two-time honorable mention selection All-American in 1972 and 1973 and was named the Southern Conference's Athlete of the Year in 1972.

Crumpler was named national back of the week in 1972 and completed his career at tailback with a career-record 2,889 yards, including an ECU record 1,309 yards rushing in 1972.

The 37-year-old Wilson native played professional football for the Buffalo Bills and the Washington Redskins of the NFL and the Montreal Alouettes of the Canadian Football League from 1974-76.

He has served as a sportscaster on WNCN in Greenville from 1979-1981 and was Sports Director of a Wilson radio station for two years in the 1970s. He joined the ECU athletic department after working private business since 1974.

Snow Hill Slips By Wayne County

GOLDSBORO — Tommy Eason went 4-4 and George Burnette went 4-5 to lead Snow Hill to a 6-5 win over Wayne County to take a 2-1 lead in their best-of-five American Legion baseball playoff series Monday night.

Snow Hill took the early lead by pushing across two runs in the first. T.J. Johnson got things started when he singled and stole second. Eason doubled Johnson home for a 1-0 lead and went to third on a wild pitch before scoring on a single by Chris West.

Snow Hill added a run in the top of the third, but Wayne County countered with two runs of its own to make it 3-2.

Snow Hill pushed its advantage to 4-2 after seven innings but Wayne County came up with two runs in the bottom of the eighth to tie the game at 4-4.

In the top of the ninth, Snow Hill scored two runs to regain the lead.

George Burnette doubled and was sacrificed to third by Johnson. Eason reached off a walk and stole second.

A wild pitch brought Burnette home and moved Eason to third before he scored on an infield single by Shay Beaman.

Wayne County countered with one run in the bottom of the ninth, but that was as close as it would get.

Chris West added three hits for Snow Hill while Mike Lanier and Michael Odum had two hits each for Wayne County.

The teams return to action at Snow Hill tonight. A win by Snow Hill will wrap up the series while Wayne County must win to stay alive.

Murphy Honored With Clemente Award

CINCINNATI (AP) — Dale Murphy of the Atlanta Braves was named Monday as the winner of the Roberto Clemente Award, given to the player who best exemplifies the game of baseball both on and off the field.

Consideration is given to sportsmanship, community involvement and an individual's contribution to his team and to baseball.

"I'm constantly amazed the power a baseball player has," Murphy said. "Just a handshake or an autograph can make a difference."

The award was announced as part of the All-Star game news conference.

Murphy, a four-time nominee, is actively involved in the Cystic Fibrosis Society and serves as a member of the national board of the Huntington's Disease Society and has been a spokesman for the Georgia March of Dimes, the American Heart Association, the Georgia PTA and the Arthritis Foundation.

"I am honored to receive an award of this kind," Murphy said. "That it is in the name of Roberto Clemente means a great deal to me."

Clemente, a member of the Hall of Fame, was killed in a plane crash while on a flight to help earthquake victims in Central America on Dec. 31, 1972.

"He was a great ballplayer who exemplified everything a player should show on the field, and in the way he helped others, he showed us how we should act off the field. This is one of the most meaningful awards an athlete can receive."

Murphy is in his 13th season with the Braves and won the National League Most Valuable Player award in 1982 and 1983.

Miami Heat Names Rothstein To Post

MIAMI (AP) — Detroit Pistons assistant coach Ron Rothstein will be the fledgling Miami Heat's head coach, the NBA club said Monday.

"That is correct," club spokeswoman Jodi Grossman said. She declined further comment, saying Rothstein will meet the news media here Tuesday.

Radio station WINZ said Heat managing partner Lewis Schaffel confirmed a Miami News report that Rothstein was being offered a contract, and said Rothstein will be the coach. Schaffel declined to go on the radio, WINZ reported, and wasn't available later, the club said.

Earlier reports said the NBA expansion club, joining Charlotte as new entries for the coming season, had narrowed its coach search to Rothstein and Utah Jazz assistant Jerry Sloan.

Rothstein had spent two years as the defensive specialist coach of the Pistons. His name began surfacing for coaching vacancies as the Pistons gained the NBA championship final against the Los Angeles Lakers this year.

Rothstein was an assistant for three years with the Atlanta Hawks, and a scout over five seasons for first the Hawks, then the New York Knicks, earlier.

He began his coaching career in the late 1970s at New Rochelle High School and Eastchester High School. He graduated from Rhode Island and has a master's degree from Hunter College.

Griffey One Away From 2,000th Basehit

ATLANTA (AP) — Ken Griffey needs just one more hit to reach the 2,000-hit plateau, but he doesn't know whether he'll be playing for the Atlanta Braves when he gets it.

Griffey, 38, has played outfield and first base this season, all the while being shopped around to a variety of major league teams. The list has included the Cincinnati Reds, Detroit Tigers, Minnesota Twins, New York Yankees, Oakland Athletics and Seattle Mariners.

"Really, I don't know where I'm going," Griffey said this week. "I heard I was going to the Yankees last week. Then I heard Oakland. I just heard that (Saturday) and that was the first time I'd heard that."

Griffey picked up his 1,999th career hit in Sunday's 13-inning loss to Montreal. Coming into the 1988 season, Griffey was a career .299 hitter with 135 homers and 771 RBI, playing for the Braves, Yankees and eight full seasons with the Reds.

For this season, one in which he has seen sporadic playing time, Griffey is hitting .251 with two home runs and 19 RBI.

He said he would welcome a trade if it would mean more playing time, particularly to an American League club where he could become a designated hitter.

"I have never said I wanted to be traded," Griffey said. "At the beginning of the year, Chuck (Tanner, the former Braves manager) said, 'You're going to get your ABs (at-bats),' and then I wasn't playing."

"He told me, 'We're going to go with a youth movement' and they said they'd trade me someplace to help a club."

General Manager Bobby Cox said the Braves, who believe they have a strong future pitching staff getting some seasoning in the minors, want a power-hitting prospect in return for Griffey.

"We feel we've got a lot of pitching coming, we've just got to keep looking for hitting," Cox said.

Those Not In Game Are Happy Too

CINCINNATI (AP) — It's hard to tell who enjoys the All-Star break more: those that play in the game or those that don't.

"I need to get away from baseball for a few days," Oakland catcher Ron Hassey said. "I'm going to Lake Tahoe."

For most players, the All-Star break is a much-anticipated time to rest, relax and recuperate. Three full days to spend with family and friends is more than they'll get all summer.

"I'm going to upstate New York with my family," Willie Randolph of the Yankees said. "We'll do some swimming, horseback riding and have picnics."

"You know, kids of ballplayers don't get a chance to do things like that with their fathers during the season," said Randolph, a five-time All-Star. "I think this should be a good experience for all of us."

Tim Raines and Mike Schmidt, each perennial All-Stars, have been slowed by recent injuries and are not playing this year. That's fine by them.

"I'll get to go home to Florida during the season for the first time ever in my career," Raines said. "I'm looking forward to it. It will also give me three extra days to get ready."

Schmidt was with the Phillies on Sunday in Cincinnati, site of Tuesday night's All-Star Game. He went home to Philadelphia, but was going to spend one day in New York looking at adding another boat to the one he already owns.

"I like playing in All-Star Games and I was picked for 11 of them," Schmidt said. "But as you get older, you reach a point where you also look forward to having the days off."

Detroit's Ray Knight headed straight home to Georgia to be with his wife, golfer Nancy Lopez.

"We're going to camp out on the farm," Knight said. "I think we'll play a little golf, too."

Houston pitchers Nolan Ryan and Dave Smith are having a get-together.

"I'm going up to Nolan's farm and help him breed some cattle," Smith said. "We've got a couple of families going up there just to lay around and fish. I'm just going to take three days off from baseball."

Chili Davis of the California Angels planned something constructive.

"First of all, I'm going to spend time with my son. I'm also going to check out construction drawings for my house in Arizona," he said.

Toronto pitcher Todd Stottlemyre, who has struggled in his first major league season, also intends to get some work done. That means a visit with his father, Mel, a former pitching star and current pitching coach with the New York Mets.

"Dad and I will spend a lot of time talking baseball," Stottlemyre said.

"And when I come back, I'll be throwing strikes, that's for sure."

Mets pitcher Sid Fernandez doesn't have time to go home to Hawaii. Instead, the bachelor will hang around New York.

"I'm going to do a little cruising," Fernandez said. "I'm going to take it easy and get ready for the second half."

Atlanta's Ken Oberkfell and Texas' Charlie Hough didn't set up anything special.

"I'm going to sit at home with my wife and kids, probably out at the pool," Oberkfell said. "Probably with cookouts all three nights."

Said Hough: "I'm going to hang around the house, watch the game, play a little golf. Pretty standard stuff."

Hough, however, was one of the few who definitely planned to watch the All-Star Game. For many players, a break from baseball means no baseball, not even on television.

"I'm not going to drop everything to watch it," Davis said.

Echoed Smith: "I think we'll be driving during the game, so I don't think I'll watch. It's Tuesday night, isn't it?"

Charleston Wheelers Battle For 21 Innings

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — The Charleston Wheelers did more than extend their winning streak with a victory over Fayetteville — they made it into the South Atlantic League record books.

The Chicago Cubs' farm team needed 21 innings to defeat the Generals 7-5 Sunday night, tying the Class A league's record for the longest game in league history.

The game, took five hours and 22 minutes.

The Wheelers took a 5-4 lead on a two-run triple by John Jensen in the eighth. The Generals loaded the bases with no outs in the bottom of the ninth but managed only an unearned run to tie the game.

Josy Rosario drove in Lenny Bell from second for the winning run with a single in the top of the 21st inning Sunday. Harry Shelton added an insurance RBI single, giving him four hits on the night.

Frank Campos, 4-11, pitched the final three innings for the win. Jay Eddings pitched nine innings — the 10th through the 18th — of shutout relief for the Wheelers. In all, the Wheelers used five pitchers, while the Generals used six.

Charleston now is on a three-game winning streak but remains mired in the cellar of the league's Northern Division at 8-16, the second-worst record in the Sally league.

Tyson Is Back

sion to part with Cayton, that it was not made by his wife or mother-in-law.

"That's very absurd," he said of assertions that his family controlled him. "Face the facts."

Tyson downplayed the role that Cayton had in his past, especially the negotiations for his television contract with Home Box Office.

"Without me he wouldn't have had a chance to put his foot in the door with HBO," Tyson said.

Trump's press agent, Howard Rubenstein, orchestrated the news conference. Trump sat in the middle and called Tyson "a fine young man ... a champion of the people ... a wonderful person." He posed for photographs with Tyson, Tyson's wife and Tyson's mother-in-law and said that he was helping out "as a friend of the family."

Trump and Winston claimed that

Tyson was not represented by a lawyer when he signed the managerial contract with Cayton and Jacobs. And while Trump said he was Cayton's friend, he made it clear with whom he sided.

"Bill has got to be fair with the family," Trump said.

Trump, the billionaire New York builder, has agreed to become a director of Mike Tyson Enterprises, a corporation set up to manage the boxer's affairs. Trump is recruiting several others for the board, Tyson said. Winston would not name them.

Trump said Tyson had not agreed to do any promotional work for Trump-controlled organizations but said he would encourage the champion to make charitable contributions.

Trump clearly was enjoying his role astride the heavyweight champion. "I think it went really well," he told Rubenstein on the way out.

"They really loved that champion of the people stuff," Rubenstein said.

Court Decision

cannot survive antitrust scrutiny. The judge is obviously warning the NFL that they will likely face huge damages unless they stop their illegal conduct."

Doty has had jurisdiction of the case since last October, when the players filed an antitrust suit at the end of their unsuccessful 24-day strike.

Doty had urged several times that the two sides return to the bargaining table, although no talks have been held since last Oct. 15. On June 17, he followed the National Labor Relations Board's lead in declaring that an "impasse" existed in bargaining, leading the union to optimistically hope he would grant their injunction, claiming that impasse meant the case had become an antitrust dispute rather than one involving labor and management.

However, Doty said he did not agree that the presence of an impasse signifies the end of a labor dispute.

"Indeed, a bargaining impasse is by definition a labor dispute," he said. "An impasse merely signifies a stalemate in negotiations. It does not mark the end of labor relations."

As a result, he invoked the Norris-LaGuardia Labor Act of 1932, which deprives federal courts of jurisdiction to issue injunctions in cases "involving or growing out of labor disputes."

He said that for at least a decade, the players and owners have regarded free agency as negotiable.

"Under these circumstances, and where the bargaining relationship and the collective bargaining process remains intact, a controversy regarding terms or conditions of employment constitutes a labor dispute."

Doty said the potential harm to the owners "greatly outweighs" the potential harm to the players.

"Although the requested injunction would only be preliminary pending final resolution of this matter, its effects may be felt for years since many players who moved would undoubtedly sign long-term contracts with their new clubs."

Later, he said:

"Collective bargaining involves agreements on, and tradeoffs among, a broad range of different items affecting the terms and conditions of employment," he wrote in the 16-page decision.

"For a court to align itself with one of the parties by, in effect, eliminating from bargaining one of the major items in the bargaining mix, would work a wholesale subversion of the collective bargaining process."

Reaction was mixed from those directly affected.

Cunningham, a 25-year-old quarterback who might have seen his salary soar under free agency, called the ruling "no big deal."

"I didn't get all fired up about it," he said.

David Fishof, Bavaro's agent, was disappointed.

"I think that it sets professional sports back," Fishof said. "I didn't expect them to get total free agency this year. But I thought it would start it. Now it's going to take years."

Another agent, Marvin Demoff, expressed similar sentiments.

"They continue to play the game — one on the field and another in court," said Demoff, who represents John Elway and Dan Marino, who recently signed long-term contracts, but also has several free agents.

"Unfortunately, the one in court will probably outlast the one on the field for many players."

The Family Circus By Bil Keane

While Bil Keane is on vacation this week, Billy gives us his version of Daddy's fishing trip.

Horoscope From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR WEDNESDAY July 13

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Anything that needs clearing up at home can be done easily now. It is also a good time for study. Work on a family project in the evening.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Work on your personal correspondence this morning, and later focus on fulfilling personal desires. A good friend can really help you.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Try to find a way out of your most mundane responsibilities today; the time is better spent in a creative manner. Have an intimate talk with your mate.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Arrange your personal matters carefully in the morning, then enjoy a hobby with a friend. Work on improving your personal appearance and charm.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Rid yourself of anything that you think is thwarting you in the morning. Tonight is a good time to get involved in a public activity.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Work to improve your relations with a sensitive friend in the morning. Later, a short trip may offer an unexpected and pleasant surprise.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Get outside distractions solved early so that you can concentrate on business. Address the needs of your mate, who may feel neglected.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Stop procrastinating and start on a new project. You have planned it enough. Your reputation is good, but it could be even better if you act on your first instincts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): A business affair has met many a delay, but it can be finished satisfactorily soon. Have a talk with a practical co-worker.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): The best time to reach an agreement is in the morning. Be charming toward people you value this afternoon.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Do not worry about the exact state of your finances until your demanding job is done. Show off your expertise and how well you have done your job.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Double-check all your assumptions about your business and social calendar; leave no room for confusion.

The bidding:
 South West North East
 3 ♣ Pass Pass Pass
 Opening lead: King of ♣

In most bridge columns, opposing preempts are brushed aside as declarer and his partner skillfully his opponent had preempted. He decided that it was too risky to act, and three clubs became the final contract. When the defenders failed to find their diamond ruff, declarer romped home. Even had it been defeated one trick, it would still have been a major triumph for North-South.

At the other table South decided to pass. West opened the bidding with one spade and, after North passed, East made a limit raise of three spades. No action by South now could keep East-West out of four spades, a contract that could be defeated only by double-dummy defense. (North must lead a low heart, win the ace of clubs, cash the ace of hearts and give his partner a heart ruff to promote a trump trick.) After the more normal ace of clubs lead, 10 tricks were there.

'Hill Street' Veteran Creates Show His Kids Can Watch

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — Michael Warren says he came up with the idea for a show called "Home Free" because his children were too young to watch him in the gritty police drama, "Hill Street Blues."
 "I was on 'Hill Street' for seven years," he said, playing Officer Bobby Hill, "and my children never really got a chance to see it. Maybe it's my ego, but I wanted to do something they could see and enjoy."
 "I remember one day my son's class had career day. They asked him what I did and he said actor. But he didn't know what I did. My daughter's 11, and my son's 9, and 'Hill Street' came on too late and was too real."
 In "Home Free," which NBC will air Wednesday, Warren plays a construction company executive who becomes the foster father of four boys. A Navy buddy, played by Trinidad Silva, takes over the cooking and looks after the boys, a group of street kids, black and white.

 While he was filming the one-hour pilot, Warren brought the dailies home for his daughter, Kao, and son, Cash, to watch.
 "I knew I was on to something when my daughter learned all the lines and wanted pictures of the boys," he said. "My son, with typical sibling rivalry, was looking for some way to get even with her and put tacks in the pictures."
 Warren teams up again with MTM Enterprises which produced "Hill Street." David Milch, a producer and writer on "Hill Street," is executive producer of "Home Free" and co-wrote the script with John Romano, based on a concept by Warren. Mark Tinker directed.
 The show was passed over as a series for the fall season, but if it gets a high rating it may be picked up as a midseason replacement. Warren says he is enthusiastic about the show's chances.
 "This is a rare opportunity for the public to choose a show they can watch," he said.
 "The idea for the show is that every family goes through change. The kids I take in have been through a lot of change, all negative. In my household they experience the first stability, loving and caring they've had. One of the older boys has reached an age when he has to leave, and I have to make the younger kids understand it's time for him to leave. We present the idea of change being for the better."
 Warren says he sent a videocassette of the pilot to John Wooden, the retired UCLA basketball coach. Warren had played for Wooden in his years there.
 "John is the embodiment of what America's all about," he said. "He loved the show. He's not a big fan of television. But he also understood the message of 'Home Free,' which is change and growth. He was family to me, so I want him to see things I've done and appreciate it. I know he saw 'Hill Street Blues' once or twice because I was on it, but it wasn't his kind of program."
 Warren at first considered a career in pro basketball. "I was drafted by the Seattle SuperSonics," he said. "They sent me a contract in the mail. It was mimeographed with a place for me to write in my name. I felt like it could have been addressed to 'occupant.'

 "I felt I'd already proved myself as a basketball player. They wanted me to try out, and if I was accepted they'd pay me $10,000. I didn't know what I'd do with all that money, so I declined."
 Warren began his acting career in commercials. He had several stage roles and was in the movie "Butterflies Are Free." He was a guest star in a number of series before becoming a regular in the 1974 NBC series "Sierra" as Park Service Ranger P.J. Lewis, and in CBS 1979 show "Paris" as Officer Willie Miller.

'Boys Town'

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Mickey Rooney, appearing at a ceremony marking the 50th anniversary of the making of the film "Boys Town," said he wants to make a weekly TV series based on the famous home for boys.
 Rooney, who played the tough teen-ager Whitey James in the 1938 film, said he would approach Columbia Pictures next year about the possibility of creating the TV series.
 Rooney appeared Monday with Bobs Watson, who was 7 years old when he played little Pee Wee in the movie starring Spencer Tracy as Father Flanagan, founder of Boys Town. Rooney was 18 when the movie was made.

MGM Movie Division Sold

L.A. Times-Washington Post
LOS ANGELES — MGM-UA Communications, which confirmed reports that it had agreed to sell its MGM motion pictures division, said Monday that it is reviewing offers to buy the remainder of the entertainment company.
 "We are considering offers being made for a portion of MGM-UA," said company president Stephen D. Silbert, who would not provide any further details on the offers.
 But Silbert said that investor Kirk Kerkorian, who currently owns 82 percent of MGM-UA, intends to retain majority ownership of the company if any offers should be accepted. "He has no plans to affect his majority ownership of MGM-UA," Silbert said, who added that Kerkorian intends to keep at least a 50 percent stake in the company.

 Kerkorian was not available for comment.
 Under the sale announced Monday, MGM will be spun off into an independent company involved in television and motion picture production. MGM-UA will be renamed United Artists, which will be involved in motion picture production and distribution and will own a 950-film library. Both United Artists and MGM will end up owning half of a movie distribution company.

At least 25 percent of MGM will be owned by a company controlled by investor Burt Sugarman and movie producers Jon Peters and Peter Guber. Guber will become chairman of MGM and Peters will join him as president. The group will get to select half of MGM's board of directors.
 In a complex deal, a Kerkorian-controlled company will end up owning about 57 percent of MGM. The remainder will be owned by the public.

Berlin Opera To Perform In U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Berlin Opera will present two performances of Richard Wagner's sprawling opera masterpiece "Der Ring des Nibelungen" in an exclusive American engagement at the Kennedy Center next June, center officials announced today.
 The four-opera "Ring" cycle, which consists of nearly 15 hours of music, will be performed twice in the Kennedy Center Opera House, June 2-18, to mark the 40th anniversary of the founding of the West German republic.
 West Berlin's leading opera company will present the innovative 1985 staging of the "Ring" cycles by general director Gotz Friedrich, which features a "time tunnel" extending the full depth of the stage.

 Each cycle includes the operas "Das Rheingold," "Die Walkure," "Siegfried" and "Gottterdammerung" and will be performed over four days and last almost 18 hours, including intermissions and a dinner break.
 The Berlin Opera's first Washington appearance since 1976 is being underwritten by the Bonn government.

New Career

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Society band leader Lester Lanin will try his hand at movies after a music career that has spanned nearly 75 years.
 Lanin, who is closing in on 80 but refuses to reveal just how close, is here this week to film "Life After Life," a Tri-Star picture starring Cybill Shepherd and Ryan O'Neal.
 Lanin will portray himself in the film, leading his orchestra in three fox trots and a rock number.
 It's the first time Lanin has agreed to do a movie, although he's received other offers. "I feel at this stage of the game I can go forward. I'm going in for some better things."
 Lanin has been hired to perform by eight presidents and four kings and queens.
