Agreement Reached On Cuban Troops' Pullout From Angola

By PETER JAMES SPIELMANN
Associated Press Writer

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Angola, Cuba and South Africa agreed that Pretoria will end its 73-year rule in South-West Africa and that Cuban troops will leave Angola, but did not set a schedule for the Cuban pullout.

Private meetings among the negotiators began Monday under tight security at the U.S. Coast Guard station on Governors Island in New York Harbor and concluded Wednesday at their hotel.

"As a result of these 2½ days, the Angolans, Cubans, and South Africans were able to reach agreement on a set of principles which constitute the essential elements of a political settlement in southwestern Africa," said Chester A. Crocker, undersecretary of state in charge of African affairs, who led the host American delegation.

Crocker said the South African administration in South-West Africa, also known as Namibia, would be replaced by U.N. civil and military administrators to comply with a U.N. resolution calling for that nation's independence under black majority rule.

"There are some large gaps that remain," Crocker said. "For example, the existing gap on the timing of the Cuban troop withdrawal from Angola is a major issue. I think the parties agreed that this was not the time to come to grips with that issue, and we agree with that judgment.

"But they do recognize ... that there's going to have to be a compromise, that there's going to have to be no losers, that it's going to have to be something that can be verified to the satisfaction of everybody," Crocker said.

The statement of principles adopted by by the military and political negotiators must now be approved by their respective governments. Details of the principles will not be released until then, said Crocker.

South Africa has said it would accept a U.N. Security Council resolution calling for South-West Africa's independence when the estimated 50,000 Cuban troops withdraw from neighboring Angola.

The U.S. goal is a full Cuban troop withdrawal in one year, the same time span that the U.N. resolution sets for granting independence to Namibia.

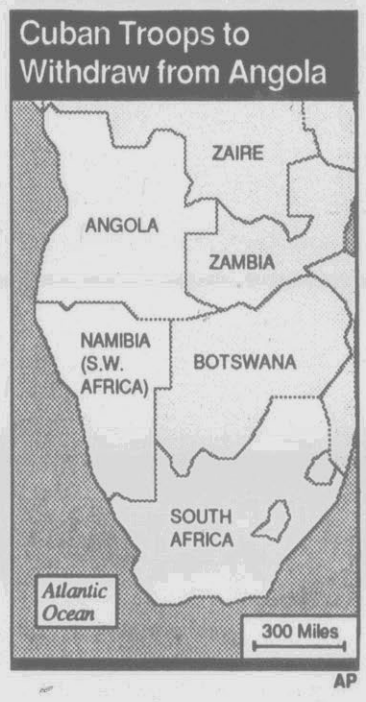

Angola and Cuba had insisted that the Cuban withdrawal should take place over four years.

The United States is a party to the talks because it has been supporting anti-communist rebels in Angola with funds and weapons since 1985.

Cuba's delegation, led by Cuban Communist Party secretariat member Carlos Aldana, had no immediate statement but called a news conference for today.

Before Crocker's announcement, the leader of the Angolan delegation, Lt. Gen. Antonio dos Santos Franca, said a final settlement was "very close — this is the wish of everyone."

Bush Defends U.S. Presence In Gulf

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Vice President George Bush today called the accidental U.S. destruction of an Iranian airliner carrying 290 people a "terrible human tragedy" but told the U.N. Security Council that Iran shares in the responsibility.

Presenting the U.S. case in the Security Council's debate on the downing of Iran Air flight 655, Bush defended the U.S. naval presence in the Persian Gulf as "our legal right." Iran, which asked for a council condemnation of the U.S. action, was represented by its foreign minister, Ali-Akbar Velayati.

Bush said that Iran "allowed a civilian aircraft loaded with passengers to proceed on a path over a warship engaged in battle. That was irresponsible and a tragic error."

The vice president said he would not "dignify with a response the charge that we deliberately destroyed Iran Air 655."

And he said that Velayati "knows better."

Bush called the Persian Gulf a "region of vital importance to the United States and the economy of the world." He said the U.S. presence in the gulf was intended to help ensure the flow of oil and protect neutral

Angry Senate Sends Warning To Sandinistas

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — In an unprecedented show of bipartisan unity, the Senate is warning Nicaragua's Sandinista government it could face renewed U.S. military aid to the Contra rebels unless it reverses "dramatic new steps in brutality" against its own citizens.

In what some senators called a "carrot and stick policy," adopted on a 91-4 vote, the Senate also said i was ready to extend U.S. economic aid to Nicaragua if the Sandinistas fully comply with commitments made a year ago and "proceed to permit the establishment of a democratic system."

The "sense of the Senate" resolution is non-binding.

But the wide bipartisan coalition which swung behind it emphasized the anger and concern caused by recent Sandinista actions to suppress disent.

These include the closing of the opposition newspaper La Prensa and Nicaragua's Catholic radio station, the suppression of a non-violent demonstration in Managua, the arrest of 40 opposition political leaders and the expulsion of U.S. Ambassador Richard Melton and seven other U.S. diplomats.

"You can say it's only a sense of the Senate resolution, but in my view it means a great deal," said Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas.

Dole told his colleagues: "We are moving now because the Sandinista goons ave been in the streets of Managua again; because the Sandinista jails are filling up with new prisoners; because what little independent media there has ever been in Nicaragua is being closed down again; and because the light of freedom in Nicaragua has been nearly snuffed out again."

The resolution states in part: "The Sandinistas should understand that blatant violations (of lst year's peace agreement) and the human rights of the Nicaraguan people could cause Congress to consider the provision of additional humanitarian and other appropriate assistance, including military aid, if conditions should so warrant."

Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., said that by their actions, "the Sandinistas have shown their true colors."

Military aid to the Contras was supended in hopes that the Central American peace process would take hold but Boren said: "We have tried removing the pressure and all we have done is harm the cause of peace.

"If the Sandinistas continue down this path they will leave us no choice but to resume the pressure, even military pressure if necessary."

Wobbly Earth

By MALCOLM RITTER
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — It's been known as terra firma through the centuries, but scientists reported today that the Earth actually wobbles slightly as it rotates, partly because of constant shifting of air masses in the atmosphere.

The wobble ranges up to only about two feet wide at the poles, but its existence will let scientists use the Earth as a means to studying the atmosphere, said researcher T. Marshall Eubanks.

He said the phenomenon is like the quiver of a clothes washer with an off-center load, with the shifting air masses acting like the unbalanced laundry.

An analysis is published in today's issue of the British journal Nature by Eubanks of the U.S. Naval Observatory in Washington, and scientists at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif., and Atmospheric and Environmental Research Inc., of Cambridge, Mass.

Road Funds May Help Traffic At Bells Fork

By JOHN BARE
Reflector Staff Writer

The quirky Bells Fork intersection, with two stoplights about 200 feet apart, may be improved with funds from the Small Urban Construction Program.

The General Assembly allocated $20 million for the fund in a highway appropriation bill approved this week, and each of the 14 highway divisions in the state will receive $1 million for local projects. The remaining money will be used for small projects as approved by the secretary of transportation.

"The Small Urban Construction Program is basically for little projects for small towns," said state Department of Transportation board member Randy Doub of Greenville, whose division includes Pitt and seven other eastern counties.

"We've done some in little Washington, some in Grifton and some Ayden," Doub said, "because they really don't have the opportunity to get the big-dollar projects like the bigger cities."

Doub, who was appointed to the board by Gov. Jim Martin, said he gets requests from people all over the region, and he consults with DOT

Economists Forecast Stable Rates

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan is talking tough about using higher interest rates to fight inflation, but despite an increase in the prime lending rate today, many economists believe rates are not headed higher until after the November election.

Major banks announced today they were increasing their prime lending rate from 9 percent to 9.5 percent, its highest level in more than three years.

The action came one day after Greenspan delivered his mid-year report on Fed monetary policy to Congress, saying the central bank stood ready to boost interest rates higher if the pace of economic growth did not slow in coming months.

Some analysts said they believed the banks made their move because they interpreted Greenspan's congressional testimony Wednesday as an indication that the Fed had no intention of increasing its bellweather discount rate.

David Wyss, an economist with Data Resources Inc., said that the banks had hoped to use a hike in the Fed's discount rate, the interest the central bank charges to make loans to member banks, as an excuse for raising the prime rate.

However, with no discount rate hike in sight, the banks decided they would go ahead and raise their prime rate anyway, Wyss said.

"The spread between the prime rate and banks' cost of funds had narrowed enough that banks felt they needed a bigger return," Wyss said.

But Wyss and other economists said they believed the one-half percentage point jump in the prime rate may be the last increase in interest rates until after the November election.

Greenspan on Wednesday issued some stern warnings about rising inflationary threats in the economy, singling out tight labor markets, rising import prices and the drought's effect on grain prices as particularly worrisome.

He said the central bank had already made a series of credit-tightening moves "from late March through late June" in an effort to keep inflation in check.

"The costs to our economy and society of allowing a more intense inflationary process to become entrenched are serious," Greenspan said.

But Greenspan also suggested that the credit-tightening which has occurred may be enough to dampen inflationary pressures because of an expected moderation in growth in the second half of 1988.

Panel Member Contends Cable TV Report Flawed

By GREG LAUDICK
Reflector Staff Writer

A member of the Greenville Citizens Advisory Committee says some suggestions in an interim report that the group is set to present to the City Council tonight are poorly conceived because they don't encourage cable TV competition.

Carson Bays, an associate professor at East Carolina University and cable TV committee member, says although he agrees with the substance of the report's recommendations, he believes the balance of the document contains suggestions which, if followed, could lead to flawed public policy.

"The committee has thus far made no effort to notify potential cable suppliers that a rapidly growing and progressive urban area is in the refranchising process, and would be receptive to innovative proposals," Bays wrote in a dissenting letter to fellow committee members.

He calls not having other cable suppliers involved in the process a "foolish negotiating mistake which puts (the city) in a weak bargaining position" with the current franchisee.

Bays said he believes subscribers would see a drastic change in the behavior of the existing franchise should it suddenly face the prospect of competition.

"The only possible leverage is to force it to compete with other competing firms," he said.

The Interim Report and its recommendations are scheduled to be submitted to the council by committee Chairman Andy Chused at the council's monthly action meeting tonight at 7:30 p.m. at City Hall.

The report recommends the council proceed in the refranchising process with the intent to award a nonexclusive franchise to the present franchisee under improved franchise requirements, and that the city should hire a consultant to assist in the refranchising process, with the cable company picking up the cost as has been done previously in other cities.

Bays contends that since a law stipulates municipalities cannot regulate the prices which a cable company charges, any policy which raises the cable supplier's direct cost of operation will be eventually be reflected in the price of the service which subscribers pay.

He says since subscribers would eventually share in the cost of a consultant, it is appropriate they be consulted first.

"However, the Committee has thus far made no effort to solicit comments from — or even to inform — cable subscribers regarding its consideration of what is eventually a tax upon them," Bays writes.

In addition, Bay said he believes the provision of cable TV is widely regarded by most as an issue of public interest. For example, if the cable operater were to agree to provide cable community access facilities and equipment as part of its refranchising agreement, the use of which would likely be available for the entire public — not just for subscribers.

"It would be especially unfair to force subscribers to bear the cost of employing a consultant to negotiate on behalf of nonsubscribers. If cable television does in fact involve issues of a public interest nature, then the public should be willing to pay the cost of addressing those issues," according to his letter.

Subsequently, Bays suggests if a consultant is to be employed, then the cost should be paid for by the city rather than by cable subscribers.

Another issue which Bay said he feels was not adequately addressed in the committee's Interim Report is the possibility of opening up the franchising process to other cable suppliers in addition to the existing company.

"I believe that the committee's recommendations fail to provide any protection whatever against the pricing power of the existing cable TV monopoly. Cable TV of Greenville has already demonstrated that it can raise its prices with impunity since the new law took effect: its most recent increase, in January of this year, was over 15 percent. Unless the company faces the discipline of competing against other franchises, then we can expect similiar price increases in the future," according to his letter.

The current cable TV franchise was awarded to Greenville Cable TV Inc. of Aug. 5, 1976, for a period of 15 years, expiring in August 1991.

The Federal Cable Communications Policy Act of 1984 provides that either the city or the the cable franchisee may request a renewal or new franchise proposal 36 months prior to the ending date of the franchise agreement. That period beigins on August 5.

The next meeting of the Citizens Advisory Committee on Cable TV is scheduled for Aug. 2.

School System Receives Grants

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

Efforts to get ahead and to create new ideas for approaching an aging problem recently have brought $10,000 to the Pitt County school system.

Three separate grants to the school system from the state level will fund a creative drama curriculum and an alcohol and drug defense program for next year.

The $3,500 Public School Challange Grant and the $1,500 Initiative Grant were provided by the N.C. Arts Council to continue the drama curriculum established in 1987, Alice Keene, Community Schools coordinator said.

"This is a continuation of what we started last year," Ms. Keene said. Steve Myott, a creative drama specialist, "will be developing a curriculum guide for the creative arts area for fifth through sixth grade this year," she said. The program began with fourth graders last year.

"We are developing these creative drama techniques and activities based on the goals and objectives of the Basic Education program."

Myott will work with teachers and students in the drama curriculum, Ms. Keene said. "The Initiative Grant will allow him time to do research and come up with techniques and activities" to present in the classroom.

"We're trying to get a jump ahead" on the drama curriculum as it will be among courses offered to students through the BEP, she said. "We're very grateful for the North Carolina Arts Council and the support we've got from them over the years."

Getting people involved is the key to receiving money provided by a grant of $5,000 from the state Department of Instruction, Bob Dailey, health coordinator, said.

The school system was among 65 across the state competing for the funds, he said. "We felt that the best use of the money would be if the community and students get involved" in producing a alcohol and drug defense program.

All schools in the system may apply for a minigrant for up to $1,000 to fund a creative alcohol and drug defense program, he said. The program should involve students, parents, school administrators and the community.

"It does try to involve a lot of people, which I think is a pretty good idea."

Funds May Help Bells Fork

engineers before making recommendations to the state board.

"We look at the various needs in the eight counties," Doub said. "We also look at what municipalities might be willing to contribute to a project.

"We've had several requests. We're trying to do something with the Bells Fork intersection. That's probably the biggest complaint I get — traffic around that intersection. Hopefully, we'll use some of the money for that."

Charles Boulevard turns into N.C. 43 outside the Greenville city limits, and the road runs through Bells Fork about three miles outside of Greenville, splitting SR 1725.

But, instead of SR 1725 crossing N.C. 43 so that motorists can make one stop at the intersection, SR 1725 is staggered so that southbound drivers must turn left at a traffic signal on to N.C. 43 and then make an immediate right turn at another traffic signal back on to SR 1725.

Northbound motorists on SR 1725 reverse the procedure and anyone trying to drive straight on N.C. 43 may get caught by two lights just 75 paces apart.

The bottleneck is at its worst between 5 p.m. and 6 p.m. when motorists leaving Greenville on N.C. 43 are sometimes backed up to the city limits and southbound drivers on SR 1725 are ususally lined up around a shopping center which sits in one corner of the intersection.

In addition to Pitt County, Doub oversees roadways in Beaufort, Pamlico, Lenoir, Greene, Jones, Craven and Carteret counties, so the $1 million does not cover everyone's needs.

"All of the areas have needs. We try to respond to them the best we can, but that is a fairly small amounty of money when you spread it over eight counties. It spreads it kind of thin," Doub said." Projects financed through the small urban construction fund usually receive about $150,000.

In previous years money from the fund has been used to improve 14th Street and and to widen Evans Street south of Greenville Boulevard, Doub said, and projects in Morehead City, New Bern and Havelock have already been approved this year.

"Randy did a good job in handling this money last year," said state Rep. Ed Warren, D-Pitt. "I think he is very fair and very attuned to the area. I plan to help him the best I can."

The DOT is also working on some larger regional projects, including completing the Farmville bypass and purchasing land for the right-of-way for the northwest bypass, which will loop around Greenville, but Doub said the General Assembly's failure to approve the governor's highway bond proposal will slow progress on other projects.

Martin proposed a $450 million bond issue to fund highway construction, and Doub said the project could have been financed with existing highway funds and would not have required a tax hike.

A study commission is looking at the state's long-term needs and is scheduled to report to the General Assembly during the 1989 long session, and the Democratically-controlled legislature nixed the governor's bond proposal.

"Unfortunately, the General Assembly just ignored it," Doub said. "We looked at it as sort of a interim financing system until the General Assembly can set up a long-range plan."

"The study commission is supposed to report to the General Assembly as to the findings and the needs," Warren said. "I think the thinking was, as I can gather, that they wanted to wait and see the report from the study commission.

"Good legislation usually comes out of study commissions because they have depth in the study," he said.

"We're also facing a $20 to $30 million shortfall in federal funding this year, which may force some projects throughout the state to slip," Doub said.

North Carolina is losing federal transportation dollars because of a bill passed in 1987, Doub said. President Ronald Reagan vetoed the bill, which helped larger states and hurt North Carolina, but Congress overturned the veto, with Sen. Terry Sanford, D-N.C., casting the deciding vote.

"That's the one Terry Sanford performed his triple flip-flop with a one-and-a-half twist," Doub said. After swaying back and forth on whether to vote with the Democrats in the Senate or to support Reagan's veto in the hope of getting a better bill for North Carolina, Sanford voted along party lines to overturn the veto.

"A lot of our federal highway dollars are paving highways in Massachusetts, Illinios and California," Doub said.

Bush Defends U.S. Presence

commerce. "This is our legal right," he said.

Bush accused Iran of "reckless behavior toward neutral ships engaged in lawful commerce."

Bush, as he has done repeatedly over the last few days, defended the captain of the USS Vincennes. "One thing is clear," he said, "the USS Vincennes acted in self-defense" in firing two missiles at the jetliner, which it had deduced was an Iranian F-14 fighter closing in on the cruiser.

Bush called on Iran to immediately divert civilian air traffic away from areas of "active hostilities" and to join with Iraq in accepting an immediate cease-fire in the war that has raged since 1980.

"The victims of Iran Air 655 are only most recent casualties of a brutal and senseless war that has brought immense pain and suffering to the people of both sides," Bush said.

Bush said he came to the United Nations, where he served as ambassador from 1971 to 1973, at the request of President Reagan, "because of the importance of the issues at stake."

Bush said it was "not just the terrible human tragedy of Iran Air 655 but the continuing conflict between Iran and Iraq" that brought him to speak.

Speaking with reporters on Air Force Two as he flew to New York, Bush said he had been selected because "the president decided to put some real emphasis on the policy of the United States by elevating the level of representation."

The appearance is likely to give the prospective Republican presidential nominee high visibility at a time when Democrats are preparing to nominate Michael Dukakis as their presidential candidate.

However, presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Reagan's selection of Bush "reflects the importance of the issues at stake" and was not made for political reasons.

The speech is Bush's first speech to the Security Council since he was ambassador under President Nixon. U.N. officials said no U.S. vice president had addressed the council in recent memory.

In the days following the shooting down of the airliner, Bush was outspoken in his defense of the captain of the U.S. cruiser Vincennes, Will Rogers III, calling the episode in the Persian Gulf "just an unhappy incident" and telling audiences repeatedly, "Life goes on."

The United States has said it will offer compensation to the families of the victims, but that the mechanics and amount of the offer have not been determined.

Meanwhile, campaign aides said that Bush over the next few days would settle on a process of selecting a running mate, now that the Democratic ticket has been completed with Dukakis' selection of Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas.

Prime Rates Viewed

soon" and he also predicted that the unemployment rate, which has fallen dramatically this year, would level off. Both of those developments would be seen as easing inflationary pressures.

In response to a question, Greenspan said he did not think that further increases in interest rates were inevitable, especially if current inflationary pressures begin to ease.

There had been widespead expectations that the Fed would soon move to nudge interest rates higher, especially since the unemployment rate fell to a 14-year low of 5.3 percent in June.

But many analysts said Greenspan's comments seemed to indicate that the central bank is satisfied that it has done enough for now.

Beginning in late March, the Fed initiated a series of credit-tightening moves by reducing the amount of money banks have to make loans. Those efforts have pushed a key interest rate, the rate banks charge each other for overnight loans, up by a full percentage point.

That in turn triggered an increase in the prime lending rate to 9 percent in May and sent mortgage rates, which had dropped below 10 percent, up to a current level of 10.38 percent.

David Jones, an economist with Aubrey G. Lanston & Co., a New York securities dealer, said he believed rates would hold steady at these levels in coming months.

"Greenspan feels he has taken the appropriate tightening steps and that will be enough to cool off demand growth in the second half of the year," Jones said.

"Greenspan believes the economy will not be that strong in the second half and that you shouldn't tighten credit conditions with an economy slowing considerably," said Michael Evans, head of a Washington consulting firm.

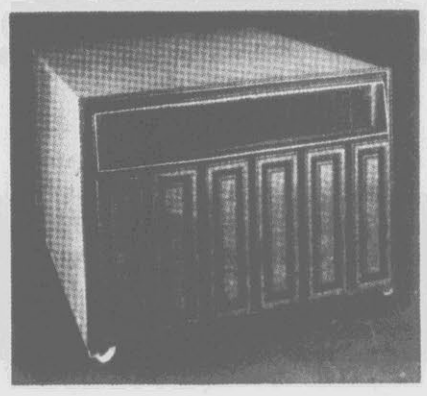

David Wyss, chief financial economist at Data Resources Inc., predicted that the Federal Reserve would "keep its head low during the election campaign" and will avoid its strongest tightening move, a boost in the discount rate it charges on money it loans to member banks.

Many analysts believe that Greenspan, and the other members of the Federal Reserve's board of governors, all appointed by President Reagan, would try to keep the economy on an even keel in an effort to promote George Bush's presidential chances.

But some senators at the hearing expressed concern that Greenspan and the Fed had already overdone the efforts at tightening credit conditions and had raised the risk of a recession next year.

"I would come down on the side of avoiding a recession almost at all costs," Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., lectured Greenspan. "I do hope the Fed would not be hypersensitive to signs, real or imagined, of inflation."

Short Session Merits A 'B'

It's about time, lawmakers.

The end of the 1987 short session of the N.C. General Assembly was overdue, but thanks, legislators, for ending it Tuesday before any more money could be wasted or mischief found.

The session was supposed to be for budget preparation, and for the most part, it was. What it wasn't, was short and open, despite the promises of candor and haste.

And that lack of expediency cost taxpayers $1.7 million — $66,000 per day. In addition, the 28-day session was the third-longest "short" session in history.

And in the end, the budget was determined by the same powerful supersub committee members as in the past, not through open debate as Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan claimed at the onset. Last-minute compromises were hammered out in unannounced weekend talks. Despite all the talk about accessibility, the budget process didn't quite work that way in 1988.

But all things considered, lawmakers did a decent, though not prompt, job of devising a 1988-89 budget for North Carolina. The budget is balanced, although some last-minute 'pork' spending was inserted — for example, $250,000 for a Jackson County vocational rehabilitation facility, (home county of House Speaker Liston Ramsey, $250,000 for the Anson County Farmers' Market (home of Senate Appropriations Committee Chairman Aaron Plyler, D-Union) and a whopping $1.6 million to lure White Consolidated Appliance to Lenoir County (home of democratic strongarm Harold Hardison).

The 9th Senatorial District, which includes Pitt County, also fared well from pork barrel, netting $124,000 for projects that, upon examination, merit the adjective worthwhile. For example, Pitt County received $14,000 to split between local fire departments; Grifton got $32,000 to renovate the Grifton Historical Museum; the Pitt County Board of Education netted $7,250 for projects at four schools, and Pamlico-Tar River Foundation received $2,500 for environmental education. All of these expenditure, despite their "pork" status, benefit the people.

In addition, the highway bill lawmakers approved included much-needed funds for reworking Pitt County's bottleneck Bell's Fork intersection on N.C. 43.

Along with a balanced budget, the legislators also managed to approve some other commendable measures. Among them:

- A bill limiting campaign spending in state elections, sponsored by Rep. Walter Jones Jr., D-Pitt. Too bad lawmakers watered down the legislation to exclude gubernatorial and council of state candidates.
- Approving funds for a "latchkey child" program.
- Granting teachers a 4.5 percent pay increase.
- Keeping funding for the Basic Education program on track.

Lawmakers get a "B" for the 1988 short session. The budget is above average — it's fair but could have been better. Quicker action would have raised the grade.

To the editor:

Wake up, Blacks, you've just been shafted again by the good 'ole Democrats. After blindly voting the Party line all these years, you've been rewarded by being having your candidate, Jesse Jackson, totally ignored.

Maybe you can learn something from the "rednecks" in Eastern Carolina who made the same mistake since the 30's until about 12 or 15 years ago. Eastern Carolina was totally ignored. Why not? The Democrats had their vote. All the attention was on "West of Raleigh" where they had to compete.

Since the redneck shift, see what's happened: U.S. 264 four-laned to Washington, U.S. 70 four-laned to Morehead City, I-40 nearly completed to Wilmington (I-40 was completed to Asheville in 1970, 18 years ago!)

Oh, we've still got some "Grandpappy Democrats," but the Blacks could learn from the rednecks. If they can count on your vote, don't expect anything but lip service.

To the editor:

The budgetary decisions made during this 1988 session of the 1987 General Assembly have been shared and made by the chairmen of the Appropriations Sub-Committees of the State House of Representatives.

This session has been one in which the House Sub-Committee chairmen have met and been involved in important decision beginning with the first-time decision to file a separate Budget Bill. It is extremely important to include and to inform the many members of the House Appropriations Committee before making the decision final.

Please publish this letter to help correct the erroneous impression that the House Budget involved only two men.

Scaring The Drunks Out Of Driving

RALEIGH — Like a cancer that had been in remission but which returned and began to spread again, the state's drunk driving problem is almost as bad as it was before drunk driving laws were toughened.

It has been nearly five years now since the Safe Roads Act went into effect. Drunk driving arrests have begun to increase again after a huge initial drop, but far more disturbing is news that alcohol related deaths on the highways are actually higher now than they were in the year before the law was changed.

The current push to fight drunk driving began in earnest in North Carolina in 1982. That year, due to increased publicity about the problem, the state actually saw a small improvement in the number of drunk driving arrests. They fell from 96,404 in 1981 to 95,492. More importantly, the number of alcohol related deaths in 1982 fell to a 382, a drop from the previous year total of 448. In each of the next three years, the number of drunk driving arrests dropped considerably. By 1985, arrests were down to 67,489. Many people cited had dropped by 30 percent in four years and the number of alcohol related deaths had dropped by 23 percent, from 448 to 356.

But beginning in 1986, the numbers began to shoot back up. Arrests increased by nearly 10,000 that year to 77,020 — a jump of 15 percent — and then totalled 75,775 in 1987, according to the N.C. Division of Motor Vehicles. Alcohol-related deaths were 27 percent higher in 1986 than they had been in 1985 — a jump from 345 to 437. Last year they totalled 422.

These trends set the background for this month's legislative debate over changes to drunk driving laws. The assembly considered expansion of the 10-day automatic revocation law to 30 days and lowered the allowable blood alcohol level for the commercial bus and truck drivers by 60 percent.

But it was obvious from listening to committee debate that no one expects the drunk driving problem to improve tremendously with these two changes. Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, said the revocation bill, which he opposed, "is not going to help anything." Winner sounded as though he thinks the state has done as much as it can with tougher laws.

"There's only so much the law can do. This is a serious social problem." He said that 92 percent of the people who are arrested for drunk driving one time are never a problem again. The other eight percent — the repeaters — are hard core. "Those people are sick and the law has no effect on them."

Several senators said that the public's fear of the Safe Roads Act has begun to wear off. The law is not as tough as it was perceived to be, and some people have found they can still drink and drive and not get caught. To get the trend heading downward again, tough new laws may be needed to get people scared again.

Acting Like The War Is Over When It's Just Begun

'The rhetoric of the GOP as it enters the 1988 election has lost its proud conservative strain. This is ironic, since it was on a conservative agenda that the GOP won the 1980 election ...'

The fortunes of the Republican Party and its conservative movement appear to be heading downward.

The Democrats are in an excellent position in the presidential race. While Vice President George Bush seems to have picked up ground against Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis in recent polls, he is hampered by strong negative ratings. A Gallup Poll last month found that 40 percent of voters surveyed hold an unfavorable opinion of Bush, a number that will be hard to overcome.

Bush, who has been dogged with image problems, now is increasingly viewed by a large segment of the American population as dangerously tangled up with dictators and drugs. Most everyone seems to believe that he lied about his role in the administration's dealings with Iran and Central America. Unfortunately, Bush's campaign efforts in the past few months to improve his image problems have been ineffective.

Republican House members face a dim future of minority status for at least another decade, reducing the possibility of financial support from special interests. While there appear to be some opportunities for gains in the Senate (Florida, Mississippi), there are also seats that may be lost (Nevada, Virginia, Washington). The psychological victory that was so close in the state governorships, will almost certainly elude the party with the loss of the Arizona governorship and likely loss of at least a couple more this fall.

The high-water mark of modern conservatism was 1981. Those were heady days in the 10-month aftermath of the 1980 election. Ronald Reagan, the principal standard-bearer of the conservative movement since 1964, was incredibly popular. That the great names of the cause such as Jeane J. Kirkpatrick and David A. Stockman manned the key posts of government was the wildest of dreams come true for conservatives. Massive tax cuts were passed. A start on cutting back federal spending was launched. Surely, a new age had arrived.

Then the changes began to unravel. The economy slipped into recession. A short-term analysis of the Reagan economic program doomed the tenuous working majority of the new president in the 1982 election.

One of the great tragedies of this early period was the effort by administration opponents to discredit conservative domestic social ideas and efforts before they had had a chance to take effect.

This discrediting was begun with the hatchet job delivered to Stockman by the Washington news media and angered bureaucracy.

Stockman saw the market as central to a more productive and wealthier society, increased political freedom and maximized incentives for the disadvantaged. Minimal government, with an emphasis on getting people to try to look after themselves, was, in fact, a traditional GOP concept until the mid-1970s, when the party drifted into moderation.

Stockman's altruistic vision of greater individualism was twisted and presented to the public as a dream of a heartless accountant aiming to balance the books of the federal government on the backs of the poor.

The rejection of the administration's Social Security reform package in the fall of 1981 effectively put conservative domestic efforts on the defensive for the rest of the administration. The ferocious liberal attack led to policy back-pedaling.

How can the conservative social agenda be assessed if it was never really enacted? The role of federal domestic spending in the American economy is almost exactly the same as it was in 1981. The Department of Agriculture today, for example, spews out more than $25 billion in handouts to U.S. farmers.

The prospects for the conservative goal of smaller government based on an ethic of greater self-reliance are remote. If government is going to be restrained, it will be because Washington politicians do not have the guts to tax people to pay for what they are giving them. Limits on government spending won't come with a message that "we're doing this because we, the government, think you, the people, should look mainly to yourselves to get ahead," but with the message that "we know it's not your responsibility that you're disadvantaged and here's as much as we can give in tight budgetary times." This is hardly the atmosphere in which to re-create a true individualistic consensus.

The rhetoric of the GOP as it enters the 1988 election has lost its proud conservative strain. This is ironic, since it was on a conservative agenda that the GOP won the 1980 election, the party's greatest victory since at least 1952.

It is as if the party has bought into the line that Reagan drastically cut government spending. He hasn't cut back government; he has only stopped its growth. Much of the Republican Party seems to act as if the war is over instead of just begun.

The administration has achieved some limited successes in foreign policy. Yet, the American left has managed to cast aspersions on most all Reagan efforts. In Central America, Congress, pressured by so-called peace groups, finally implemented a policy to torpedo the Contras. Even clearly successful policies and actions such as the Grenada invasion were condemned. The critics never could effectively challenge the fact that the people of Grenada, the United States and the world are better off when people are brought out from under pro-Soviet regimes. They claimed the invasion was wrong on legalistic grounds.

But today's foreign policy muddle cannot solely be blamed on opponents of the administration. The administration has played a role in the discrediting of its foreign policy through such episodes as the Iran-Contra debacle.

The Republican Party may be heading for a rough November. Much of the conservative agenda appears to be stalled. Whether a party that often seems more interested in everything but governing can motivate and rejuvenate itself is the question for the long summer ahead.

John E. Berthoud, a doctoral candidate in political science at Yale University, is an aide to state Senate Republicans in Connecticut.

Intoxication Standard 'Absurd,' Martin Says

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

RALEIGH (AP) — A state representative who sponsored a tougher intoxication standard for commercial drivers in this summer's legislative session acknowledges the measure has been weakened, but insists the bill will eventually become permanent.

"The very fact that we have a 0.04 standard on the books will send a message to those people to think twice before they drink and then drive those 40-ton rigs down the highways of our state," said Rep. Coy Privette, R-Cabarrus.

However, Gov. Jim Martin said Wednesday that the tougher intoxication standard is "absurd" because it won't take effect for nearly a year and could expire a month after that.

"I'm putting them on notice, here and now, that everywhere I go, I'm going to call them to task for the way in which they trifled with this serious issue," Martin said.

Martin said the expiration date gave the bill a "nonsensical form."

"The only excuse for such an absurd result is for the General Assembly to appear to be doing something about this important matter, while actually doing next to nothing," Martin said at a post-session news conference.

Enactment of the bill was one of the final acts of the Legislature before adjourning its five-week summer session Tuesday.

It lowers the intoxication threshold for drivers of commercial vehicles from a blood-alcohol content level of 0.10 to 0.04, while leaving intact the current 0.10 standard for drivers of passenger vehicles.

Martin proposed the bill in 1987, along with another that would extend from 10 days to 30 days the period for which a driver's license is suspended immediately after being charged with DWI.

Both bills cleared the House but were "bottled up" in a Senate committee, as Martin put it.

This year, the Senate Finance Committee approved both measures, but they ran into trouble on the floor and were diverted to the Judiciary I Committee. The commercial-driver bill was heavily amended, passed and returned to the House.

At the urging of Rep. Joe Hackney, D-Orange, the House refused to accept the amended version. Hackney said the package was "a mess," with some amendments drafted so poorly they could not be included in the state's law books.

"I think the bill is almost an irrelevancy but if we're going to put it in the law, I want it to be right," said Hackney, chairman of the House Judiciary III Committee.

He said federal standards for commercial drivers are expected to be updated next year and probably will include the 0.04 standard.

A joint conference committee hammered out the final version, including provisions delaying the bill's effective date until June 1, 1989, and causing it to expire June 30 unless the Legislature extends it.

The "sunset" provision was suggested by Rep. George Miller, D-Durham, as a way to force the Legislature to deal with the issue next year, Privette said.

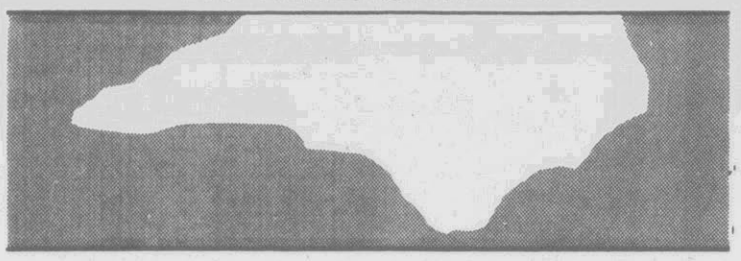

Sen. Bob Shaw, R-Guilford, said he didn't trust the Legislature's Democratic leadership to extend the law next year. "I think they'll try to bury it," he said. "How anybody could come up with anything like this is beyond my comprehension."

Privette, however, said such a move would be a political disaster for the Democrats.

"There is no way we're going to go backwards," said Privette, a member of the conference committee. "We have established this standard. I don't see how in the world ... they are going to renege on that commitment. The last thing any official wants is to have the wrath of 20,000 members of MADD against them."

MADD stands for Mothers Against Drunk Driving.

IN THE STATE

Friday On Panel

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Five university leaders from across the nation have been selected to make financial recommendations aimed at restoring the University of Minnesota's credibility.

The five, dubbed "The Wisemen," will advise Gov. Rudy Perpich's Blue Ribbon Commission on Financial Management at the University of Minnesota.

Their recommendations are due Dec. 1.

The advisers are to make sure "the right questions are being asked and that the answers don't get fogged up," said commission Chairman Ed Spencer, who put the team together in the wake of controversies that led Kenneth Keller to resign as university president in March.

The members of the group are Harold Enarson, former president of Ohio State University; Arthur Hanson, former president of Texas A&M; William Friday, former president of the University of North Carolina system; William Massy, vice president for finance at Stanford University; and James Brinkerhoff, recently retired vice president for finance at the University of Michigan and former vice president for finance, operations and planning at the University of Minnesota.

Wiretap Measure

RALEIGH (AP) — Supporters say a bill expanding the use of wiretaps by law enforcement agencies could resurface in the General Assembly next year, but some defense attorneys say the measure is an invasion of privacy.

The bill, which for the first time would allow state law officers to listen in on telephone conversations, was still in a House judiciary committee Tuesday when the Legislature adjourned.

But Sen. Tony Rand, D-Cumberland, said he plans to push for the expanded wiretap authority next year.

"We don't have the capacity to penetrate the truly well-financed conspiracies without this kind of tool," Rand said.

Elections Suit

DURHAM (AP) — Two Durham residents are suing the state and county elections boards to place them on the November ballot as third-party candidates for the Durham County Board of Commissioners.

Amy Freeman and Bernard Obie, along with the New Alliance Party, claim in the suit that their constitutional rights are violated by a state law that prohibits candidates for local offices from running as candidates of a new political party.

The suit was filed Friday in Wake County District Court, but state Elections Director Alex Brock — one of the defendants named in the suit — told The Durham Sun on Wednesday he has yet to be served with it.

The three-member county elections board voted unanimously to ask that the state Board of Elections assist it in defending the lawsuit.

The New Alliance Party — which Obie described as a "people-first party" with a "pro-peace, pro-environment, pro-people" agenda — has been trying to qualify as a legal party for North Carolina's November ballot.

Salary-Benefits

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — The new chancellor of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill says he intends to make salary and benefit improvements for UNC's faculty and staff one of his top priorities.

"Let's look at ways to enhance the ways we compensate the people who are doing the fine work that's being done here," said Paul Hardin, who began his new job at UNC Monday after 13 years as president of Drew University.

Hardin said he also wants to look at faculty recruiting, the administrative structure at UNC and the school's bicentennial celebration and fund-raising campaign.

An improved benefits package may come before improved salary, said Hardin, who succeeded Christopher C. Fordham III, who retired June 30 as chancellor after eight years.

Standard Issue

NEWPORT NEWS (AP) — Starting Sept. 1, something soft and fuzzy will be part of Virginia state troopers' standard equipment.

Eighteen hundred brown, stuffed, 10-inch bears wearing white T-shirts with "Trooper Teddy" printed on the front will be distributed to all troopers in the state.

"These are not a public relations gimmick," said Joe Tucker of the department's planning and research office.

The bears will be given to children 12 and younger who are victims of crimes or involved in car accidents, and to children 15 and younger who are victims of sexual attacks.

"They are to help the child through what can be a very difficult time," Tucker said. "They can be a sort of a surrogate figure to children in distress."

Shinn Confident His PTL Plan Will Win Approval

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. (AP) — Sports entrepreneur George Shinn of Charlotte, N.C., says he wants to take over the PTL complex to "clear up a blemish in the community."

Shinn, owner of a new professional basketball team in Charlotte, predicted Wednesday that he'll be able to buy PTL and later bring a major league baseball and football team to the area within 10 years.

Shinn gave the keynote address to the South Carolina Tourism Council, which was meeting at Kingston Plantation.

Shinn said he originally did not want to get involved with PTL because the controversy surrounding the television ministry had made the 2,300 Heritage USA complex just south of Charlotte "a blemish on our community that I wanted to stay away from."

But he said he took an interest when the mayor of Charlotte asked him to help "resurrect this thing that is obviously dying." PTL owns the complex outside Fort Mill that includes a hotel, shopping mall, water park, and residential areas.

Shinn discounted statements recently made by PTL founder Jim Bakker, who has been trying to regain control of the ministry.

Shinn said he will win control of the PTL land "unless the Lord changes his mind with Jim Bakker or if someone that has a lot more money than they have business sense comes along, then they might get it. If we do get it, we have a lot of plans to change things and clear up the blemish in our community."

Shinn, who was scorned when he first attempted to bring the Charlotte Knights franchise to the city three years ago, masterminded a plan that took Charlotte from the bottom to the top of the National Basketball Association's list of new franchises. He set a record for selling 15,000 season tickets before the team and coach were picked. The team starts its first season this fall.

"I never tried to sell Charlotte," Shinn said. "I tried to sell the region. If you measure within a 100 mile radius, Charlotte is bigger than Atlanta or Miami. With Columbia and Greensboro, you have more than 5 million fans who are hungry for pro teams in a growing area."

Saying "we're just an infant," Shinn said if the new team wins more than 20 games in its first season, its coach, Dick Harter, should be named "coach of the year."

Looking at other sports, Shinn said he will go "step by step" to upgrade his Double A baseball team, the Charlotte Knights of the Baltimore Orioles organization, first to Triple A status and within 10 years to a major league team.

He has been planning to build a 15,000-seat multi-purpose arena in York County near the PTL property there. He said the arena would be built so it will be "expandable" to accommodate either a 45,000-seat baseball stadium or 65,000-seat football stadium.

He said the National Football League is expected to expand in stages, first adding two teams. He said if the NFL adds four teams in its second phase, Charlotte has a "good chance" of obtaining a franchise and if the NFL adds six teams, the Carolinas would have "a superb chance."

Variance Was A Major Victory For Paper Mill

By The Associated Press

Champion International Corp. won a major victory when North Carolina approved the paper mill's request for a variance from state water quality standards in the Pigeon River near Canton, company officials said.

Discharges from the company's mill stain the river the color of coffee or dark tea. The firm has said it would have to close the mill if forced to comply with the state and federal standards.

Calling the decision from the state's six-member National Pollutant Discharge Elimination System committee "a very important step." Champion Operations Manager J. Oliver Blackwell said Wednesday the next goal was to seek similar approval from the state of Tennessee.

"I won't say we're not expecting problems," Blackwell said.

Tennessee officials will hold public hearings beginning on Aug. 18 in Newport, said Paul Davis, director of the Tennessee Water Pollution Control Division.

Davis said the variance adopted Wednesday was a compromise reached during negotiations earlier this year between the two states, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, and Champion, but he said he could not predict that it would be approved in Tennessee exactly as written.

If both states approve the variance, the EPA could issue a discharge permit to the mill that incorporates the lower color standards.

Forrest Westall, regional water quality supervisor in Asheville for the N.C. Division of Environmental Management, said Tennesseans had shown "more negative political and public feeling" toward the variance.

Champion's inability to meet standards that would reduce the pigmentation — called true color units — by 90 percent has put approval for the company's new permit in a holding pattern.

Champion has promised instead to develop a filtration system which would result in a 50 percent reduction in true color units in its discharge or effluent.

According to the variance approved Wednesday, "the coloration of the river causes no demonstrated toxic human health or safety effects."

The variance marked the end of a series of public hearings in North Carolina on the paper mill's long-running battle to avoid what it has called "impossible" standards.

Those standards, Blackwell said, would force the mill to close and put more than 2,000 employees out of work.

Despite some public opposition from citizens and environmental groups during public hearings earlier this year, most county and local officials spoke on the plant's behalf and cited its economic importance and civic contributions.

The mill is the largest employer west of Charlotte. Last year, the company paid $700,000 in taxes to the city of Canton and treated the town's sewage, according to the text of the variance.

Westall, the principal author of the variance, said that even with final approval by both states and the EPA, Champion would have three years to implement the new standards.

The decision as written and modified Wednesday requires Champion to periodically report on its efforts to reduce color units in the river and to submit periodic reviews of its water quality monitoring to the state.

"At present there are no requirements on the mill to meet any standards," he said. As many as 400 to 500 units have been measured in Champion's discharge this past year.

"I won't deny it is no longer pristine," Westall said. "Given the standards that Champion says it will meet I'd say it will look like something between tea and ginger ale."

Meanwhile in Washington on Wednesday, Rep. James Quillen told a House subcommittee that the EPA has no excuse for a delay in testing the Pigeon River for dioxin.

After dioxin, considered a probable human carcinogen, was fund in fish taken from the river earlier this year, Quillen accused the EPA of dereliction of its duty and requested a hearing by the water resources subcommittee of the House Public Works Committee.

At the hearing, Quillen said the EPA "has not conducted itself with prudence, diligence and responsibility. The EPA has failed in its duty. We want to know why, and we want a new start."

The panel was looking into EPA's handling of the discovery of dioxin in pulp and discharge water by many paper mills using the chlorine-based kraft bleaching process in general and by the 80-year-old paper mill, in particular.

Quillen said he was "floored, then outraged" when he found out dioxin previously had been linked to paper mills.

"Here was a lethal chemical compound associated with paper mill operations since at least 1980 and after all these years of struggle to clean up the river, the EPA was just getting around to preliminary and unsystematic dioxin testing this past winter," he said.

Quillen, Rep. Don Sundquist, R-Tenn., and some witnesses urged the EPA to delay issue of a new discharge permit to the suspected culprit in the pollution of the Pigeon, the Champion paper mill.

"What we in Tennessee are asking, and in fact what we are demanding, is that the Champion paper company begin at long last to operate its Canton mill in a manner which does not continue to grossly pollute the Pigeon River," Quillen said.

Escaped Murder Suspect Caught

STATESVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Michael Gene Lovette's flight to freedom, which officers believe took him and a companion on a murder-and-robbery spree through three states, ended quietly in his hometown after a motel clerk alerted police to his whereabouts.

The 29-year-old North Carolina prison escapee wanted for questioning in connection with four killings and two armed robberies in Florida and South Carolina was captured Wednesday afternoon outside a Statesville motel room that a relative reserved for him, authorities said.

Lovette, without his mustache and with cropped hair, walked out of his room with his hands up.

The FBI charged Lovette with unlawful flight to avoid confinement and turned him over to North Carolina prison officials. He was later transferred to Central Prison in Raleigh.

The arrest ended a two-month search by FBI and state investigators for Lovette and Thomas Anthony Wyatt, 24, of North Wilkesboro, who escaped from a road crew in Wilkes County on May 13.

Wyatt was captured after a two-hour chase in Lancaster County, S.C., on July 7. He was charged with three counts of first-degree murder at a Domino's Pizza in Florida on May 17 and with armed robbery and kidnapping at a Chinese restaurant in Greenville, S.C., on May 14.

He is a suspect in a fourth killing of a Tampa woman May 20, said David Morgan, assistant state attorney in Indian River County, Fla. All four killings occurred in the East Coast county.

Three Florida officials flew to Statesville to question Lovette on Wednesday.

Greenville, S.C., authorities also plan to question Lovette in the kidnapping and robbery of a restaurant chef May 14.

Woo's Kitchen chef Wo Kwok told Greenville sheriff's investigators that two men grabbed him and drove him to a dirt road, where they robbed him.

FBI agents say Lovette also is a suspect in a May 16 armed robbery of a Taco Bell in Florida, one day before the Domino's killings.

Morgan told The Charlotte Observer officials believe the two split up May 20 or 21 after the killings.

Law enforcement officials say the men's backgrounds didn't suggest they were capable of the capital crimes. Lovette was serving a five-year sentence for breaking, entering and larceny; Wyatt was serving a 15-year sentence for second-degree kidnapping, assault inflicting serious injury and common-law robbery.

"They were essentially two-bit criminals. Now they're in the big leagues," said N.C. Correction Department spokesman David Guth.

Morgan said Lovette was working construction in Jacksonville, Fla., before he took a bus home Monday. He spent Tuesday at Statesville's Downtown Motel, police believe, then decided to move.

A part-time night auditor at the 104-room Scottish Inn in Statesville called police around 2 a.m. Wednesday after Lovette's uncle, Boyd Lovette, made a two-night reservation in his own name, police said.

The auditor, Dan Whitson, who is the news director at WSIC-WFMX in Statesville, said he was suspicious when Boyd Lovette made the reservation at 1 a.m. and "appeared nervous" standing outside the night window.

About an hour later, a man came by Whitson's window.

"It appeared he wanted in and wanted a drink. Then he walked away. I thought it could be (Michael) Lovette," Whitson said.

Whitson called the Statesville Police Department and went home around 7 a.m. Two hours later, police and Whitson returned. Whitson went to the room to give Lovette towels and soap and to get another look.

About 40 minutes later, with six officers hidden, Lovette left the room to get ice. Whitson, 34, pretended to knock on a room door to get close enough for a third look.

Boyd Lovette called Michael Lovette from the office and said: "Mike, this is Boyd. You're surrounded. You might as well go ahead and give up," Statesville police Lt. Ken Shawver said.

Police found no weapons.

Also on Wednesday, a Lancaster County man who said he befriended Wyatt without knowing he was an escapee was charged in a burglary with Wyatt.

Lancaster County sheriff's officials said James C. Scott Jr., who housed Wyatt for a week in his home, also led him to a Heath Springs home to steal guns and jewelry July 1.

Reagan Tours Drought Plagued Areas Of Ill.

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says he will do all he can to protect farmers from excessive losses, but he won't approve drought-relief measures that would "bust the budget."

Reagan made the statements in a meeting with farm leaders in the elegant Roosevelt Room of the White House Wednesday before he left for southern Illinois today to visit damaged soybean and corn fields and "see the effects of the drought for myself."

His schedule called for him to receive a briefing from state agricultural officials after viewing the crop damage at the State Fair Grounds near Marion, Ill., then visit with Herman Krone and his family at their DuQuoin, Ill., farm.

From Marion he was flying to Davenport, Iowa, to take part in the dedication of a new building at radio station WOC, where he broke into radio in 1932, and to speak at a luncheon sponsored by the station and the local chamber of commerce.

Although Krone's farm has had nearly 2 inches of rain this week, today's forecast was for mostly sunny skies, hot and humid with highs in the 90s. Some parts of southern Illinois have had up to 4 inches of rain recently, but agriculture experts say it won't do much to help the already shriveled corn crop.

"Even though it has rained, when the president looks at the crops, he's going to see a bad situation," said Steve Newman of the Illinois Farm Bureau.

At the 2,800-acre Krone farm, about 400 acres of the 1,200-acre corn crop are believed to have been irreversibly damaged, for a financial loss estimated at $35,000. Krone said corn stalks that should be 10 feet to 12 feet high by this time of year measure only 2 feet to 5 feet, with burnt, brownish tassels.

The dry spell also has parched 125 acres of pasture used to feed Krone's 150 head of cattle, so that for the past month he has had to feed them alfalfa hay.

Krone, a Reagan admirer who doesn't receive any federal subsidies, said, "I'm not looking for a handout. I can survive if there's no rain and it (the drought) continues."

In the Roosevelt Room meeting, Reagan said, "Now is the time to start work on legislation to help the many crop farmers who will suffer substantial losses."

He added, however, that "drought relief has to be considered in the context of our efforts to reduce the federal deficit."

"To put it very simply, we mustn't bust the budget," the president said. "The automatic budget sequestration cuts that overspending triggers would take back from farmers with one hand what we're providing in drought relief with the other."

Congress is considering a bill to provide payments of up to $100,000 apiece to farmers whose crops are destroyed or severely damaged.

Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng said that because of the severity of the drought the administration would overlook minor flaws in the bill. White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the president "generally supports this legislation."

The spokesman said the bill would cost about $5.5 billion.

"The bill would be financed with money that would have been paid as subsidies to farmers in ordinary weather conditions," he said. "Because of higher cash prices, congressional aides calculate the government farm programs could be as much as $8 billion less than originally estimated."

There have been indications that the White House Office of Management and Budget may be scrutinizing the surplus of federal dollars available under the crop acreage support program as a means of helping the government avoid mandatory budget cuts in mid-August under the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction act.

Reagan, addressing about 50 state leaders of the American Farm Bureau Federation, said, "Our administration is committed to taking whatever actions are necessary."

"We'll get over this drought," the president said.

Baby Dies In Car Fire

CASTRO VALLEY, Calif. (AP) — A baby trapped in a car safety seat burned to death when her parents' car burst into flames in the parking lot of a doctor's office, officials said.

Najia Nawabi, 16 months, was pronounced dead at the scene of Wednesday's blaze.

Two other Nawabi children, 4 and 2½, escaped injury. They watched in horror as their younger sister perished while two bystanders tried to rescue her.

"I pulled and jerked on that baby seat but it wouldn't budge," said Gary Smith of San Leandro. "The flames completely engulfed the car. All I wanted was to get the baby out of there."

Smith and another bystander, Dr. Mosa Mardanzai, attempted to unfasten the baby seat, but had to give up when smoke and flames encircled the screaming infant.

Baby Born On Airliner Abandoned By Mother

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A baby found abandoned in the blood-splattered bathroom of a United Airlines jet was apparently born five hours earlier, just before the plane took off from New Jersey, authorities said.

Weighing 8 pounds, 9 ounces, the newborn girl was found by a custodian on Wednesday stuffed beneath a sink in a lavatory of United Airlines Flight 35.

Minutes earlier, the mother and 252 other passengers disembarked from the non-stop flight from Newark, N.J. Police were still searching for the mother Wednesday night.

The white infant, who has dark brown hair and blue eyes, is listed in good condition at Mills Hospital in San Mateo, where nurses have named her "Elizabeth," said Lt. Mike Dow of the San Mateo County Sheriff's Department.

Dow said flight attendants told him a woman, accompanied by a man she identified as her husband and a 3-year-old she identified as her son, asked to use the bathroom as the flight was preparing to take off in Newark.

The plane was delayed for 30 minutes as flight attendents urged the woman to come out of the bathroom, Dow said.

When she finally came out, flight attendants found the bathroom splattered with blood. Believing that the woman had suffered from an extreme case of diarrhea, the crew sealed off the bathroom for the rest of the flight until the cleaning crew boarded the flight after it landed at San Francisco International Airport.

The woman's seat was found to have blood on it when investigators inspected it in San Francisco, Dow said.

Dow said the mother will be charged with attempted murder if she is found.

"She had the baby and she stuffed it under the sink. That's attempted murder," Dow said, adding that the male companion could also be charged.

But he was not optimistic that the mother would be found quickly.

"We're going to have to run the people (on the airplane) down one by one, and that's going to take time," he said.

The couple may have given a false name when they purchased the tickets. It is also possible that the man who was accompanying the woman didn't know she was pregnant, Dow said.

"The attendents said he looked very concerned and kept asking her if she was all right," Dow said.

Specialists from the sheriff's crime lab dusted the plane for fingerprints and looked for other evidence that could link someone to the abandoned baby. Detectives were also attempting to get information on the passengers from the Newark end of the flight, Dow said.

Abducted Infant Safe

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. (AP) — A newborn girl taken from her hospital crib two days ago was back in her parents' arms today after FBI agents arrested an Ohio woman, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Lindsey Manns, 3 days old, was in good health at Cabell-Huntington Hospital, spokeswoman Janet Ferguson.

Linda Lou German, 26, of Wheelersburg, Ohio, was charged with kidnapping, according to Ferguson, who said she talked to FBI agents at the hospital.

The FBI received "a tip from a relative" of the suspect Wednesday night which led to German's arrest in Ohio, the spokeswoman said.

Donald and Linda Manns of Lincolbd County on Wednesday tearfully pleaded for the return of their child, who was taken the day before from Cabell-Huntington's third-floor maternity ward.

"I'd just like to say, whoever's got it, please bring it back," Donald Manns said. "Just call and tell us it's all right."

Officials said they believe the kidnapper carried the baby through the hospital front door and into the parking lot of a nearby supermarket.

Hospital officials declined to comment on whether the case might be related to the attempted abduction Sunday of another baby born at the same hospital.

A Marrowbone Creek woman told state police that after she delivered her baby at the hospital, she was visited at her home by a stranger who told her she had recently lost a newborn. The mother told police the woman told her she had a gift for the baby.

Once inside, the woman was allowed to hold the baby, then brandished a knife and threatened to take the infant with her, state police said. The intruder fled when somebody else walked into the room.

"We suspect a connection between the two incidents because of the time frame and the fact that both incidents involve babies born at the same hospital," said state police Sgt. F.H. Butler.

Poll Indicates Slight Margin For Dukakis

By GARY LANGER
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Nearly six in 10 voters say they already have made their choice for president in the November election, and a third of the rest have strong leanings, a Media General-Associated Press poll has found. Michael Dukakis has a slight lead.

Among those who said they have decided on a candidate, 48 percent in the national survey backed Democrat Dukakis and 42 percent supported Republican George Bush. Among strong leaners, support was evenly divided.

Other national polls have sought to measure the candidates' standings among all registered voters, a gauge that also has showed a close contest. A CBS News-New York Times poll Monday had it 47-39 for Dukakis.

A USA Today-CNN poll released today showed the two in a virtual dead heat. That poll of 1,264 registered voters nationwide showed Bush with a 47-44 percent lead over Dukakis, but the margin was within the poll's margin of error of three percentage points either way.

A Los Angeles Times national poll also published today had Dukakis with an 11-point lead, about the margin the Democrat has held in most polls since the end of the primary season.

The Times poll of 1,763 registered voters had Dukakis ahead 49-38 percent and had a margin of error of plus or minus three percentage points.

All three polls were completed before Dukakis named Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas as his running mate Tuesday.

The Media General-AP survey looked at adults who said they planned to vote and had definitely decided on their candidates — 58 percent — or at least had strong leanings. The closeness of the race among people in those groups indicates that if they stick to their choices the outcome will be decided by the minority that has yet to choose.

This undecided group, 23 percent of those who plan to vote, is dominated by voters who take the middle ground politically. Half described themselves as moderates and nearly half said they were independents.

Dukakis led among moderates and independents who said they have made up their minds already. But among the small number of moderates and independents who were leaning strongly, Bush moved up to make it a closer race.

The national poll, with a 3 point margin of error overall, was conducted by telephone June 22 to July 2 among 1,223 randomly selected adults.

Dukakis, Bentsen and Bush all have been criticized for a lack of charisma. But when the poll asked prospective voters whether they gave more importance to a candidate's positions on issues or his personal style, 79 percent said issues mattered more. Just 5 percent said style was more important and 12 percent volunteered the two were equally important.

For the respondents who said they planned to vote, economic issues in general were the most important, cited by 55 percent. Just 13 percent said social issues were the most important, and 10 percent said foreign affairs; 21 percent volunteered the three were equally important.

Respondents were divided in their perceptions of the political parties' abilities to handle the key issues. In the most frequently cited economic and social issues, the deficit and drugs, the parties were rated equally.

Overall, the Democrats led in economic and social issues, the Republicans in foreign affairs.

Given a choice of six economic issues, 34 percent of all respondents said the federal deficit was paramount. But that group was split on which party is best able to handle the deficit: 34 percent said the Republicans, 31 percent said the Democrats. The rest had no opinion.

The Democrats were favored strongly on the next-most-often cited economic issue, unemployment. Twenty-eight percent of respondents said unemployment was the most important economic issue, and nearly half said Democrats were best able to handle it. Fewer than a fifth picked the Republicans.

Inflation was cited by 13 percent, and again the parties were ranked equally in their ability to handle it. Dealing with foreign trade, rated fourth, went to the Republicans, 42-32.

When asked the most important social issue from a list of six, more than a third of respondents said illegal drugs. Nearly a fifth each cited poverty and AIDS. The parties ranked evenly on handling drugs, but Democrats were rated as far better able to handle poverty, 51-17 percent, and better on AIDS, 33-20 percent.

Republicans were rated better, 40-24, on dealing with crime, the next-most-cited social issue. Democrats did better on handling the last two issues — the environment, 49-20, and civil rights, 56-12.

On foreign affairs, a fifth of respondents said the key issue was U.S.-Soviet relations, a fifth said it was the spread of nuclear weapons and nearly a fifth said it was unrest in the Middle East.

The GOP was judged better able than the Democrats to handle the Soviets, 44-32, and to handle the Middle East unrest, 38-29.

Jackson Ponders Atlanta Strategy

By WILLIAM C. HIDLAY
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Jesse Jackson heads to Atlanta today looking for signals from Michael Dukakis on their future relationship as he ponders whether to launch a showdown at the Democratic convention.

On Wednesday, Jackson may have fueled the passions of those who want to run him against Dukakis' vice presidential choice by saying the floor was "wide open" on the vice presidential vote next Thursday night.

Jackson's departure by bus caravan to the convention city comes as many of his supporters are still reeling from what they considered a snub by Dukakis in failing to fully consult Jackson on his choice of a running mate, and in not notifying him of that choice before word leaked out.

Dukakis says he tried to call Jackson on Tuesday morning to tell him Lloyd Bentsen had been picked, but was not able to reach him. He spoke with Jackson before the actual announcement, but after reports were already circulating of the Texas senator's selection.

And two Democratic sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Jackson was told privately Monday afternoon that he would not be picked. One source said Dukakis campaign chairman Paul Brountas told Jackson "he would bring the ticket down" if nominated for vice president.

A clearly irked Jackson complained in a news conference that Dukakis is excluding him from the unity team Jackson has repeatedly emphasized as the key to victory in November.

"At this point I'm not in the partnership," he said, adding: "I'm not suggesting that I will compete for a place on the ticket but the floor is wide open on Thursday night when the recommendation is made."

"I'm being asked to, in spite of inadequate communication and not being recommended for the ticket, to motivate more people and deliver more votes and pour out more energy at greater risk and danger than any governor or any senator."

He would expect in return, he said, satisfaction for "the legitimate and reasonable requests" of his constituents.

On Wednesday night, speaking to Operation PUSH, the civil rights group he founded, Jackson sounded similar themes, complaining about exclusion.

"For too long, the power brokers have sat in small rooms with closed doors and made great decisions," he declared. "We must be a part of this process. When they sit around these tables, the key investors in our party are not in the group."

No decision has been made about convention strategy, said Jackson convention manager Ron Brown. Jackson's team is waiting to see if Dukakis reaches out to undo the damage from the perceived snub on the Bentsen issue, Brown said.

Jackson officials had been negotiating privately on unresolved platform issues, but those talks were halted in light of the running mate matter, he said.

It's up to Dukakis "to make it a unity convention," Brown said, adding that Jackson has the logistical wherewithal to "make our presence felt" on any matter at the convention.

Told that Dukakis had said Wednesday he wants Jackson's support and plans to talk to him "from time to time," Brown stated, "Those comments are encouraging, but I think they need to talk now."

Jackson was "flabbergasted" to learn of the Bentsen choice from reporters instead of from Dukakis in advance, Brown said. He said Dukakis aide Paul Brountas had assured Jackson he would be consulted, not for a veto prerogative, but out of courtesy.

Young Aviator Retraces Charles Lindbergh Flight

CHARLES CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

LE BOURGET, France (AP) — An 11-year-old California boy today became the youngest pilot to cross the Atlantic, landing at the Paris airport where Charles Lindbergh completed a historic solo crossing in 1927.

Christopher Lee Marshall touched down his single-engine plane at Le Bourget airport on a flight from Glasgow, Scotland, where he spent the night.

The boy aviator was greeted by his mother as he stepped from the plane wearing a bright blue flight suit and a baseball cap with a sign reading "Chris Marshall Tour."

"We're finally here. We made it," he said, grinning ear-to-ear but looking tired.

"Mommy missed you so much. Give me a kiss," said his mother, Gail Marshall, who waved an American flag and clutched a stuffed bear intended as a present for her son.

The young aviator from Oceano, Calif., then kissed his mother.

Christopher started his flight in San Diego on July 7. He was accompanied by retired Navy pilot Randy Cunningham, 46, who limited Marshall's flying time to eight-hour stretches.

A champagne and cola reception was held in the hangar of the airport, north of Paris.

Despite the trans-Atlantic venture, which included stops in St. Louis, New York, Montreal, Greenland, Iceland and Scotland, Christopher revealed his youth.

On stepping from the plane, his first words to his mother were: "I have to go to the toilet." He disappeared briefly then returned to pose for photographers.

At one point, Christopher re-entered the aircraft to produce his old stuffed bear, from which he has said he is inseparable. Photographers snapped pictures of Christopher with the cuddly animal in its goggles and helmet and bearing a sign with its name "Charles Lindbeargh."

Christopher arrived in Glasgow Wednesday night after an 840-mile flight from Reykjavik, Iceland in his single-engine Mooney 252 aircraft.

He arrived in Reykjavik early Wednesday after flying about 450 miles from Kulusuk on Greenland's southeast coast in 2 hours 15 minutes.

The arrival in Paris was delayed by one day due to engine troubles Wednesday that forced the plane back to Greenland.

Cunningham said he took over the controls to fly the plane 50 miles back to Greenland after engine trouble and bad weather with low visibility made the situation critical.

He said it was the only time during the flight that he took control of the aircraft.

Cunningham said he had trouble finding the air field at Kukusuk, an island of Greenland's southeast coast: "We would have had to ditch at sea. I didn't think I was going to live."

The oil filter cap had rattled loose so the oil pressure plummeted and the engine overheated.

Christopher's mother said her son began flying with his father at the age of 4 and began training with an instructor at age 7.

She said she was worried by the problems Wednesday.

"If I knew, I don't think I would have let him go," she said.

Battleground Sentiment

WASHINGTON (AP) — Momentum is building in Congress to protect a hallowed Civil War battleground from a massive shopping center complex that a developer wants to build next door.

The House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee approved a measure Wednesday authorizing the federal government to seize a 542-acre tract next to the Manassas National Battlefield Park.

The bill, a combination of legislation introduced by Rep. Frank Wolf, R-Va., and another bill sponsored by Reps. Michael Andrews, D-Texas, and Robert Mrazek, D-N.Y., now moves to the House floor after passing the committee by a 27-11 vote. Supporters hope the matter will come up for a vote when the House reconvenes after the Democratic National Convention.

Critics of the measure, including Rep. Ron Marlenee, R-Mont., complained that the bill was too costly, but it was approved after the panel defeated an amendment offered by Marlenee that would have added 11,000 acres to the Custer Battlefield National Monument, near Billings, Mont.

Congress Gets 2 Acid Rain Plans

By KIM I. MILLS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — House and Senate leaders are presenting similar versions of what they say is long-overdue acid rain legislation that stands a good chance of passing this year.

"For seven years, we have supported legislation to control acid rain," Sen. George Mitchell, D-Maine, said at a news conference Wednesday to announce a tentative acid rain plan agreed to by 27 senators. "Three times in this decade the Committee on Environment and Public Works has reported such legislation ... but thus far, the legislation has not been considered in the Senate."

On the other side of the Capitol, Rep. Sherwood Boehlert, R-N.Y., was joined by Ohio Gov. Richard Celeste, New York Gov. Mario Cuomo and three Ohio congressmen when he announced legislation patterned after a compromise reached by the two governors last month.

Both plans call for a 10-million-ton reduction in sulfur dioxide emissions from old coal-fired utility plants, as compared to a 12-million-ton reduction called for in amendments to the Clean Air Act now stalled in the Senate. The Boehlert bill would give utilities 15 years to comply, while the Senate plan gives them 12.

Figuring that it will cost about $1.8 billion a year to reduce emissions, the Boehlert bill proposes that polluters pay half that cost, the oil industry pay $650 million a year through fees to the federal government for oil storage, and the federal government pay the remaining $250 million annually.

The Senate measure suggests a cost-sharing effort tied to the amount of electricity generated but giving credit to those states that have already implemented acid rain controls.

The Senate measure is not yet in the form of a bill, but Mitchell said it probably would be introduced as an amendment to an appropriate legislative vehicle. He refused to be more specific.

"In terms of timing, we rule nothing in or out," he said. "We will do it at the time that seems most opportune for advancing this legislation."

He said he would drop efforts to get a vote on the existing amendments to the Clean Air Act, stalled in the Senate since last November.

He also said he did not anticipate the usual roadblocks to acid rain legislation, such as the opposition of Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., who has protected interests of his state's auto industry, or Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., who represents a large coal-mining state.

"From the standpoint of an opponent, this may be a very opportune time to act," Mitchell said, noting that both apparent presidential candidates have voiced support for acid rain legislation.

Byrd is studying the plan, but "As of this time, we do not have the support of Sen. Byrd," Mitchell noted.

Several senators expressed reservation about cost-sharing, details of which are still being worked out.

"I firmly believe that polluters should pay to clean up their dirty facilities," Sen. Gordon J. Humphrey, R-N.H., said. "I endorse this new approach to acid rain control which includes a cost-sharing proposal in the hope that this compromise may finally have what it takes to enact effective acid rain controls."

But Sen. Edward Markey, D-Mass., called the plan "the fairest way, cost-wise." He estimated that in Western states, utility customers might see another 30 cents to 40 cents on their monthly bills while in a state like Massachusetts, people might expect to pay another 80 cents.

For the most part, the legislators were upbeat about the chances of passing a bill, now that Ohio and New York have put forward a solution.

"Every passing day brings another indication that Congress is serious about meeting its responsibilities to act on acid rain," Cuomo said. "Today, you've seen two very big indications."

Sulfur dioxide emissions from the burning of coal have been blamed as a major cause of acid rain, which environmentalists say is destroying waters and woodlands in the Northeast. Much of the sulfur dioxide comes from coal-burning power plants along the Ohio River.

Plant-Closing Bill Passes

By MATT YANCEY
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — With plenty of extra votes in the Senate and maybe enough in the House to override a veto, Congress is forcing an election-year showdown with President Reagan on giving workers advance notice of plant closings and layoffs.

Fifty-four of the 177 House Republicans abandoned the administration and the party's presidential candidate, Vice President George Bush, on the issue Wednesday. Nineteen of the Senate's 46 Republicans did the same last week.

On a 286-136 vote, more than the two-thirds needed to enact the law over a veto from Reagan, the House voted Wednesday to let workers caught up in plant closings or layoffs involving more than 50 of them know about it 60 days beforehand.

The Senate approved the same measure a week ago by a veto-proof 72-23 vote in the biggest legislative battle of the decade between corporate America and labor unions.

House Republicans aware of polls showing that more than 80 percent of the American public favor the notices are distancing themselves from Reagan and Bush on the issue.

"I don't think he'll be able to sustain a veto," said Rep. Marge Roukema, R-N.J., who led the House fight against the mandatory notices through the legislative process but voted for the bill Wednesday.

"There are a lot more than 54 Republicans who don't want him to veto it," she said. "We fought every fight ... but you have to pick your battles. Bush is going to have to handle the issue now."

Immediately after the vote on the layoff notices Wednesday, the House approved by an even larger 376-45 vote a trade bill that President Reagan vetoed in May because the plant closing and layoff notices were then a part of it.

The 14.1 million-member AFL-CIO, possessing one-sixth of the delegates at next week's Democratic National Convention, has threatened to withdraw its pivotal support for overhauling the nation's trade laws if the plant closing notices are not enacted separately.

And the labor movement's chief supporters in the Senate — Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, — have vowed to reattach the notices to the trade legislation or kill the bill entirely if Reagan's veto of them as a separate measure is upheld.

"Today's House vote, coupled with last week's overwhelming Senate margin, clearly give the White House a strong message that this bill should be signed," AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland said Wednesday.

In vetoing the trade bill in May, Reagan echoed the sentiments of business groups such as the National Association of Manufacturers, U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the Business Roundtable, which oppose notices of plant closings or impending layoffs. Reagan called them anti-competitive and said they would stifle the creation of new jobs.

Under the Constitution, Reagan has 10 days — excluding

Jailed Minister Was 'Wonderful Pastor'

By ROBERT NAYLOR JR.
Associated Press Writer

VICKSBURG, Miss. (AP) — Stunned worshippers gathered for Bible study without their church's pastor, who was in jail today accused of killing his live-in girlfriend and burying her hours before giving his Sunday sermon.

"Everybody's just knocked out and surprised," said Hezekiah Butler, chairman of the board of deacons for Zion Traveler Missionary Baptist Church, one of three churches served by the Rev. Jonathan Hamiin.

"He's been a wonderful pastor and a wonderful young man. You've never run across a finer person in the world," Butler said.

Hamlin, 24, was arrested Monday by the Warren County Sheriff's Department, accused of fatally shooting 24-year-old Lula Sims. Held on $100,000 bond, he won't be required to enter a plea until a grand jury issues an indictment.

Authorities say Hamlin shot Sims in the head and chest on July 3, buried her body in woods about 40 miles southeast of Vicksburg, and hours later preached during Sunday morning worship at Zion Traveler.

Sims remained buried for eight days, until Dorothy Lipscomb persuaded Sheriff Paul Barrett to investigate her daughter's disappearance.

Barrett said he questioned Hamlin, a father of three, who admitted that he had killed Sims and led officers to her shallow grave Monday night. Police recovered the pearl-handled, .22-caliber pistol they believe Hamlin used.

Hamlin's estranged wife had given him the gun as a gift, Barrett said.

The sheriff did not provide further details of Hamlin's admission.

On Wednesday night, members of the congregation gathered for Bible study at the small red brick building that houses the church. Outside, a sign read: "Rev. J. Hamlin, pastor."

"He was just a first-class minister," said Daniel Clark, a longtime member of Zion Traveler. "That's the way it seemed to us."

Hamlin, a member of Zion Traveler, was elected to lead the 500-member congregation in November after the church's longtime pastor died, Butler said.

The church grew under Hamlin to the point where all the worshippers couldn't enter the sanctuary on the one Sunday each month that the church held services, Butler said.

Church members purchased three adjacent houses and other pieces of property and were planning to enlarge their building.

Sims' mother recalled a different side of Hamlin.

"About a month and a half ago he choked her," Lipscomb said Wednesday in the living room of her small, neat Vicksburg home.

Lipscomb said she had gone to the house Hamlin shared with her daughter because the minister "called me and said he was bleeding to death."

After she and her husband, Carl, arrived, Lipscomb said, her daughter ripped open the T-shirt she was wearing. "Her breasts were nothing but scars and she had scars around her neck where he had choked her." She said Hamlin, who had told her daughter he was separated and getting divorced, had a small cut on the head.

Lipscomb said, however, that her daughter never complained to her that Hamlin was violent. "She was the type of person, she would keep her problems to herself."

Vicksburg, a town of 35,000 along the Mississippi River, is "stirred up about Rev. Hamlin," Butler said.

"They just don't see, as fine a man as he was, how in the world something like that could happen."

Paraquat Spraying On U.S. Marijuana Crop Is Defended

By PETE YOST
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is defending its plan to spray U.S. marijuana crops with the highly toxic herbicide paraquat, which can cause serious harm when inhaled or absorbed by humans or animals.

At a news conference Wednesday, Attorney General Edwin Meese III said "the real environmental damage" is being done by growers of marijuana.

He contended that growers are cutting down trees, damming streams "and pouring pesticides and fertilizer" into the water to irrigate their crops.

Meese said many large-scale marijuana growers have moved their operations into national forests and other remote areas to avoid detection. Because of the dispersal, Meese said "there are less and less places that are good targets" for aerial herbicide spraying but that "whenever we find them, we're ready to do it."

Drug Enforcement Administration director John Lawn said paraquat, which was banned from use on national forests in 1983 because of environmental concerns, would be one of three herbicides used in the current program.

A DEA spokesman, Cornelius Dougherty, subsequently said that paraquat would be used in spraying for marijuana eradication on private land, not on public property, in light of the court ruling. The other two herbicides cited by Lawn — 2, 4 d and glyphosate — are not involved in the 1983 federal court decision and could be used in spraying on public lands.

An environmental group criticized the use of herbicides in general on public lands.

"The other two chemicals don't have the same restrictions, but while that may be complying with the letter of the law, it is violating the principles that protect national lands to ensure the protection of wildlife habitats and recreation areas," said Jay Feldman, coordinator of the National Coalition Against the Misuse of Pesticides.

Lawn said the government must prepare an environmental impact statement when eradication is contemplated and that "at that point, the determination is made by environmentalists, by law enforcement, which chemical will be most effective."

Opposition Charges Fraud In Mexico Balloting

By CHRIS ANGELO
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Opposition leaders say the governing party stole the presidential election, which final results say Carlos Salinas de Gortari won by the slimmest margin in the Institutional Revolutionary Party's 59 years.

The opposition won four seats in the 64-seat Senate, the Federal Election Commission said Wednesday, but easily retained control of the two-chamber federal legislature.

The centrist governing party, known as the PRI, had never lost a presidential, gubernatorial or Senate race.

The PRI-dominated commission, which originally promised results the day after the July 6 balloting, said Salinas received 9.64 million votes, or 50.36 percent, far below the 70 percent the PRI has traditionally won.

Cuauhtemoc Cardenas of the leftist National Democratic Front was second with 5.96 million, or 31.12 percent; and Manuel J. Clouthier of the conservative National Action Party was third with 3.27 million votes or 17.07 percent. Two minor candidates accounted for the rest of the vote.

The commission did not say how many of Mexico's 38 million registered voters cast ballots. Some ballots were blank, others nullified.

Opposition representatives on the commission accused it of fraud, saying the release of the vote totals had been delayed so they could be doctored.

"It appears that there are two Mexicos," said Jorge Amador, a National Democratic Front supporter on the commission.

He said there is a modern Mexico where the federal electoral code is respected, honest results were posted and the victorious candidate is Cardenas, and a second, backward Mexico "in which the federal electoral code is not known, is not applied," and the the popular will was thwarted.

"In many garbage dumps and on isolated roads, in some rivers of the republic are flowing electoral material marked in favor of parties of the opposition," he said.

Amador's aides carried into the commission boxes of ballots, some of them partially burned and others he said they found in the streets.

Diego Fernandez de Ceballos of the National Action Party said: "We do not accept this election as clean ... because there were violations of the law, because the (state) governors pressured voters, because the resources of the political power were at the service of the PRI, because the official and private television was for the PRI.

"For many reasons we believe that it has given the lie to democracy in Mexico," he said.

Jorge Alcocer of the Mexican Socialist Party, the largest leftist party and a supporter of Cardenas, said, "The delay in information meant increasing the votes of the PRI."

He said there were "countless maneuvers" to take away votes from Cardenas, including altering electoral rolls and changing ballots.

Interior Secretary Manuel Bartlett, who heads the commission, denied it delayed releasing results: "No one has ever hidden information in this process."

The results gave four of Senate seats, two from Mexico City and two from Michoacan, to parties supporting Cardenas, and 60 to the PRI.

The PRI won 249 of the 300 directly-elected seats in the Chamber of Deputies, the lower house of Congress. The National Action Party took 31 and parties supporting Cardenas took 20.

The remaining 200 seats in the chamber are assigned on the basis of proportion of the vote received, so the PRI will retain its majority.

Earlier Wednesday, about 2,000 Cardenas supporters marched to the election commission's offices to protest fraud.

About halfway there, Cardenas climbed atop a van to tell the cheering crowd that blocked busy Reforma Boulevard: "We will not allow the electoral fraud to continue and a usurper government come to power.

"Demonstrations like this have been repeated in all the country," he said. "This struggle will not end ... the victory will be of the people, the victory will be of the nation, the victory will be ours."

Cardenas is son of a late president who reorganized the PRI and gave the party its present name in 1938.

Salinas, a 40-year-old, Harvard-educated economist, served for five years as budget and planning secretary in outgoing President Miguel de la Madrid's administration until his nomination last fall.

He has been pledging to modernize both his centrist party and Mexico's government administration.

The PRI's power has waned with infighting, six years of economic crisis brought on by low oil prices, popular discontent with widespread corruption, and a growing belief that its leaders are out of touch with the people.

Clouthier is a businessman and rancher.

Polish Security Orchestrating Crowd Reaction To Gorbachev

By DEBORAH SEWARD
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Polish television has served viewers a full menu of Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's encounters with eager crowds of Poles, who offer flowers or urge him to autograph a copy of his book.

But the gatherings are less spontaneous than they seem.

Flower merchant Jozefa Paslawska pointed to the four copies of the book "Perestroika" on Soviet reforms, prominently displayed in front of her flowers.

"It will be a big souvenir when he signs it," she said.

Ms. Paslawska did not show up on the Krakow market square Tuesday by accident.

Like the rest of the hundreds of Poles who closed in on Gorbachev when he emerged from a sumptuous lunch in the freshly painted Wierzynek restaurant in the southern city, her presence had been carefully planned.

According to protocol, Polish security has the upper hand in arranging Gorbachev's safety during the six-day visit, which began Monday.

In doing so, it has also made sure Poles who might raise Solidarity banners or flash the two-fingered "V" sign of the banned free trade union movement are kept far from Gorbachev.

As a result, the 'spontaneous' meetings are artificial.

The desire to avoid incidents that might embarrass communist authorities was evident in Krakow, which has an active branch the pro-Solidarity Independent Students' Union and where workers in nearby Nowa Huta went on strike in April during Poland's worst labor unrest since a 1981 military crackdown suspended Solidarity.

Blue-uniformed police began emptying Krakow's medieval market square, one of Europe's largest, and blocked the small streets leading to the square six hours before Gorbachev arrived on Tuesday.

Those allowed to cross police barriers had special invitations from their factories. When the Soviet leader toured the square, plainclothesmen with special blue-and-white badges locked arms and formed a second barrier in addition to Gorbachev's regular guards.

The civilian guards ringed the entrance to St. Mary's Roman Catholic church, which Gorbachev visited for about 20 minutes. Even pre-selected guests were bumped back by the guards.

Polish government spokesman Jerzy Urban said the tight control was necessary to avoid traffic snarls.

The places Gorbachev visits have been carefully chosen for their symbolic value.

On Wednesday, he visited the Warski shipyard in the Baltic port of Szczecin, a former Solidarity stronghold.

The 3,000 Workers who heared him speak were required to have an invitation from their place of work and only about a third actually worked at the shipyard. The workers showed little enthusiasm when Gorbachev spoke.

Not all the situations were artificial.

Outside the Lenin museum in Poronin, a southern mountain village where Soviet founder Vladimir Lenin spent several summers before World War I, Gorbachev spoke to a crowd that included casually dressed vacationers.

Landslides, Floods Kill 6

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Heavy rains in the nation's central and southern sections triggered landslides and floods that have killed at least six people this week, the National Counter-Disaster Center reported today.

Officials said four people died Wednesday when several homes in valleys in Chunchon were buried under tons of mud and rocks. Another reportedly was killed in the city, but details were not available.

The area east of Seoul was hit by 6.1 inches of rain during a 10-hour period Wednesday.

Several other people reportedly were injured and about 100 homes flooded in Chunchon, forcing residents to flee temporarily, officials said.

One person died earlier this week in the south.

Flood and rain damage to homes, crops, highways and bridges has caused losses the counter-disaster center estimated at $12 million.

The Central Meteorological Observatory today issued a new warning of torrential rains in central South Korea as a front moved through the region toward the southern coast, dumping heavy rains.

The summer rainy season is expected to last through the end of next week.

Armenians Stage Rally, Strike Over Annexation

By JOHN-THOR DAHLBURG
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — More than 200,000 people rallied in the Armenian capital of Yerevan to demand annexation of an Armenian enclave in neighboring Azerbaijan, and a strike today paralyzed many of the city's industries, sources said.

People took to the streets Wednesday night after learning that Azerbaijan's government had overridden Nagorno-Karabakh's decision to secede and join Armenia, Khovik Vasilyan, an Armenian activist said by telephone from Armenia.

"There will be another rally in Yerevan tonight and the reaction of the Armenian people to Azerbaijan's impudent lie will become visible," said Vasilyan, a former political prisoner.

The Presidium of Azerbaijan's Supreme Soviet met Tuesday night, just a few hours after the secession declaration by Nagorno-Karabakh's legislature, and declared the regional parliament's decision illegal.

Soviet media did not announce the ruling until Wednesday.

Armenians have been agitating for five months for the transfer of Nagorno-Karabkh to Armenia, resisting authorities in Moscow and Azerbaijani officials, who oppose any change in the territorial status of the mountainous region of 160,000 people.

In February, 32 people died in ethnic rioting in the Azerbaijani city of Sumgait. Ethnic Armenians are predominantly Christian, most Azeris are Moslem.

Rem Ananikyan, deputy director of the official Armenpress news agency, said by telephone that more than 200,000 people gathered outside a Yerevan historical institute Wednesday night to call again for the annexation of Nagorno-Karabakh.

"They demanded that this decision be solved, that the strike be continued," Ananikyan said.

He said Armenians expect the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, the highest executive body in the Soviet goverment, to meet Monday in Moscow to consider the Nagorno-Karabakh question. No such meeting has been officially announced.

Participants in Wednesday night's demonstration "called for a continuation of the strike until July 18th, that is, until the meeting of the Presidium," Ananikyan said.

He said the Armenian capital of 1.1 million people was calm this morning and the subway and other public transportation were working normally but strikes continued in many of the city's factories.

Vasilyan said "basically, the entire republic is not working."

The Communist Party daily Pravda reported today that the widespread work stoppage, which began July 4, has caused $65 million in lost economic production, and construction work worth $29 million was not carried out.

Phone calls placed from Moscow to Stepanakert, the capital of Nagorno-Karabkah, did not immediately go through this morning.

But state-run Radio Moscow reported that a general work stoppage in the Delaware-sized region was continuing.

"All industrial enterprises in Stepanakert were at a standstill on Wednesday," Radio Moscow said. "Public and urban transport was also at a standstill, and shops and services were closed."

An employee of the Gostelradio state broadcasting authority in Stepanakert said Wednesday that enough bread and milk was being produced locally to meet residents' needs, but that other foodstuffs were critically short and that food shipments from Azerbaijan to Nagorno-Karabakh had ceased.

Radio Moscow also said police were investigating Nagorno-Karabakh residents who had manufactured or acquired weapons, but it gave to clue to what the arms might have been intended for.

Soviet television reported Wednesday that police in the district had confiscated dozens of grenades, pistols, revolvers, sawed-off shotguns and ammunition from residents in the past month.

Coup Attempt Said Quashed

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Liberian President Samuel K. Doe said his security forces repelled an invasion and coup attempt led by his former second-in-command, a church-owned radio station reported.

Radio Elwa reported that in a nationwide broadcast Wednesday night, Doe said his forces exchanged gunfire Wednesday morning "with what is believed to have been an invading force" at a Liberian border post in Nimba County in the north of the West African country.

The radio is operated by the Sudan Interior Mission, an interdenominational, international Christian mission.

The broadcast, monitored in Nairobi, quoted Doe as saying the force was led by J. Nicholas Podier Jr., described as vice head-of-state of the former ruling People's Redemption Council.

Doe, 36, was quoted as saying the attackers suffered some casualties, but he did not specify how many or whether Podier was among them.

The radio quoted Doe as saying 12 people were involved in the alleged invasion, but did not specify where in Nimba County, 350 miles north of the capital, Monrovia, the incident occurred. Nimba County shares borders with Guinea to the west and the Ivory Coast to the east.

They Express Views On Society Throught Art

By MARY ROSE DONAHUE
Associated Press Writer

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The Indianapolis Children's Museum has given students the chance to fill a gallery with art that reflects their feelings about the issues of today's society.

And some students say gallery visitors may be uncomfortable when they see the exhibit.

About 200 students ages 10 to 17 worked with teachers, museum coordinators and art counselors on the exhibit, "Teens Speak Out On Issues."

The 5,000-square-foot gallery houses paintings, sculptures, video displays and other forms of art created during the past year.

The ideas have been generated by students from about 10 Marion County schools and some in neighboring counties, says Kay Cunningham, the museum's coordinator of early childhood education.

"I know it's going to cause a stir," said Chris Sullivan, 15, of Broad Ripple High School. "It's very honest. It tells a lot about how high school people think. We've been pretty tasteful about what we're doing but we're still candid."

David Levine, museum programmer and projects analyst, said coordinators listened to tapes of junior volunteers at the museum talking about what was important during this election year. Six issues seemed to stand out: AIDS, teen-age pregnancy, war and peace, drug and alcohol abuse, education in schools and child abuse.

"We're not asking kids about Dukakis or Bush," said museum spokesman George Gonis. "We want adults to know that, hey, these kids have feelings about the issues."

Children and adult visitors will be able to express how they feel about the issues in a computer survey. Gonis said the survey and exhibit will run until election day, Nov. 8, with up-to-the-minute results. Admission is free.

"Some things they want to say aren't real comfortable, especially for adults," said Nikki Craig, assistant programs manager. "We know there are going to be parents who don't want their kids to go through."

A sign posted in front of the museum warns that some material may not be appropriate for younger members of the family, she added.

Hamilton Heights High School in Arcadia is among the schools that worked on the subject of AIDS, with a video tape about their first-hand experience in dealing with Ryan White, the AIDS student who has received national attention.

Ryan provided pictures of himself and his family, but did not work on the project, said project coordinator Diane Bryant. "They've had so much publicity. We didn't want to put him in the limelight," she said.

The students also worked on a quiz with questions about AIDS.

A 10-by-10-foot room houses Sullivan's message about drug and alcohol abuse.

"It's a two-sided message," he said. "The first side is the facade of a house. It's supposed to look like there's a party inside with flashing lights and everything. You walk inside, expecting a good time, and it's gloomy and there's scary figures everywhere.

"The party might be inviting now. It might be fun and everyone's doing it, but the flip side isn't fun and the consequences aren't pretty," he said.

Exhibit designer and art coach Tina Sibbitt said Broad Ripple students would get a course credit for their work. Some schools were able to work the project into their curricula but others didn't have the resources, she added.

Eighth-graders at Craig Middle School in Indianapolis created a tunnel.

"The tunnel's dark to begin with to show what the kid is feeling while suffering child abuse and it gets brighter by dealing with it and talking about it," said Gonis.

Craig said the project has been as much a challenge for the adult coordinators as it has been for the students.

Museum officials approached school administrators to draw on students who wanted to participate, Craig said. The ideas for the gallery were generated by the students.

"How do you work with personalities that are indigenous of that age group? And whether we'll listen to what they want to say with their exhibit. Will we accept it," said Craig.

"We said we trusted them to do a good job and trusted their ideas. We gave them a forum at the museum to let kids and adults know they have genuine ideas, genuine opinions."

Wedding Vows Said July 2

The wedding of Marie Irene Boyette and Dennis Michael Cristiano took place July 2 at 5:30 p.m. in the Arbor Room of the Comfort Inn. The Rev. Charles Mosley performed the single-ring ceremony

Parents of the couple are Dr. and Mrs. Charles Boyette of Belhaven, and Mr. and Mrs. Hugo Cristiano of Greenville.

A program of vocal music was presented by the officiating minister and Peggy Mosley. The tune, "Edelweiss" was played when the wedding party entered.

The bride was given in marriage by her family. Cathy Canfield Stokes of Greenville was her honor attendant. The father of the bridegroom was best man.

The bride wore a tea-length gown of imported Brussels lace with a lace chemise over ivory taffeta. It had a matching taffeta cummerbund and bow. She wore jewelry belonging to the late maternal grandmother of the bridegroom and her maternal grandmother. She wore a matching veil of tulle with a bow of lace matching her dress. Her veil was of tulle and a lace bow matching her gown. She carried a bouquet of roses, lavender, zinnias, fern, ivy, straw flowers and baby's breath tied with ivory satin ribbon.

The wedding director was Betty Beacham. Sheri Carter presided at the register and said goodbyes.

A buffet dinner was given after the ceremony by the parents of the bridal couple. A reception, including a cake-cutting, followed, with Mrs. Beacham and Corrine Lancaster assisting in serving.

The bride graduated from Pitt Community College and is employed by Greenville Utilities Commission. The bridegroom attended Louisburg College and Pitt Community College. He is employed by Grady-White Boats.

After a wedding trip to Williamsburg, the couple will live in Greenville.

Need To Feel Better? Please Read Column

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

Pardon me. Got a minute? Thank you.

Did you ever get the feeling that the whole world is in need of a courtesy bypass? Just answer when you feel comfortable.

It seems impatience is rampant. Human fuses are ignited by a single word, and you don't have to be bilingual to understand the hand signals of the person in the car behind you when your car stalls at the light.

Goodness gracious, Miss Manners, I never thought I'd see the day when movie aisles are patrolled by trained guard dogs. Why, just the thought of an usher flashing his light in your face used to be enough to keep the town bully quiet for a week. Now in Jackson, Miss., a Doberman pinscher on a leash patrols a theater to keep teen-age gang members under control.

And on public beaches, dueling boom boxes give new meaning to the expression "day at the beach." One even had to set some guidelines. Any radio, tape deck, television, instrument or any other sound that exceeds 60 decibels is considered a violation. (As a point of reference, 60 decibels is the noise level of a screaming child who does not want to come out of the water and go home when it is still daylight.)

In one Hawaii city, an ordinance was just passed in which a person can play bongo drums on the beach only for an hour and then must knock it off for an hour. (They had to do something, as sterility by listening was causing the birthrate to fall.)

For reasons I do not know, humanity seems to be at odds with one another. They park in handicapped spots and feel no remorse, cut into lines, have smoking and non-smoking confrontations, engage in disputes over animals, argue over dogs that wet on their trees, and over trees that drop leaves on their property.

With your permission, I should like to share a story to illustrate how far things have gone. You are too kind.

A substitute teacher in California says that "Abandon hope all ye who enter here" should be written on every school door. "The moment a substitute teacher enters the campus," she said, "whispers of 'sink the sub' go out." From then on in, it's pure survival. Substitute teachers become victims of book drops, stink bombs, noise, spitballs, paper wads, gum hurling, verbal and physical abuse and yes, even death threats. She has had to learn to fight back. When a student yelled, "Retire!" she yelled back, "Graduate!"

There is help for your frustration. There's a blaster on the market that fits on a desk or dashboard with either Velcro or suction cups. You push a button and it simulates the sound of a machine gun, a laser or a nuclear bomb.

Feel better? You're welcome. You have a good day now.

Some States Forgive, Forget First Criminal Offense

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Some time ago, you published a letter from "Depressed Down South," a nursing student who had been convicted of shoplifting. She worried constantly about how this might affect her future employment prospects.

Your recommendation to get counseling to help "Depressed" deal with her emotional problems is right on the money. But there is something else she can do that can put her fears to rest.

Abby, many states have laws that permit a one-time offender to have the conviction and/or arrest record "expunged," erased and/or set aside. "Depressed" should contact a criminal defense lawyer in her state to look into the availability of that procedure. If the conviction is set aside, some states even have laws that permit job applicants to truthfully state that they have never been arrested, much less convicted.

If any of your readers have a similar problem and don't know the name of a criminal defense lawyer to consult, they should write or call: National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers, 1110 Vermont Ave. N.W., Suite 1150, Washington, D.C. 20005. Telephone: (202) 872-8688.

And to "Depressed," good luck! — JOHN H. HINGSON III, TREASURER, NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF CRIMINAL DEFENSE LAWYERS

DEAR MR. HINGSON: Thank you for some valuable information that could turn some lives around. One mistake does not a loser make. Justice is sometimes tempered with mercy.

DEAR ABBY: I am a widow in my early 60s. Several months ago I started going to baseball games, symphony concerts and the theater with a gentleman whose wife died a year ago. I really enjoyed his company. Two weeks ago he called and asked me to accompany him to a function in the middle of the week. I had to decline because I had a previous engagement with friends. Since then, he hasn't called me. I don't know whether he's angry, hurt or out of town.

Should I call him, and, if I do, what excuse do I use for calling? I miss his companionship and the nice places he used to take me. — STRANDED IN ST. LOUIS

DEAR STRANDED: Call him. You don't need an "excuse" — use the real reason. You miss him. You're past the age of playing games, so tell him the truth, and invite him over for a home-cooked dinner.

DEAR ABBY: Here's a tip for all those people who are bothered by moochers who want to visit them during the season: When we retired to Florida nine years ago, I promised myself we wouldn't operate a motel for moochers, so I made my second bedroom into a sewing room. Now when anybody calls and wants to visit, I tell them we will be happy to reserve a room for them at a nearby motel — then I ask how much they want to pay. That solves the problem.

I do not care to be stuck with dirty sheets and towels and vacationing folks who keep different hours.

If they get mad and don't want to come, that suits us fine. — 'NO VACANCIES' IN FLORIDA

(Don't put off writing thank-you notes, letters of sympathy, etc., because you don't know what to say. Get Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send a check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054 (postage and handling are included).

Engagement Announced

James and Billie Sue Norman of Greenville announce the marriage of their daughter, Kathryn Zimmerman, to Robert Tyrone Taylor, son of Bobby and Nancy Taylor of Ayden. The wedding will take place Aug. 26.

According to a survey of more than 600 husbands, those with wives working outside the home felt no more burdened with household and child care tasks than husbands with wives who stayed at home. Husbands did tend to report feeling inadequate if they were not the sole support of the family.

Choose The Correct Fuel For Physical Activity

By Colleen Pierre
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

Smart food choices help power physical activity as well as speed recovery between exercise bouts.

To stay fresh and maintain training schedules, choose "power foods" to replenish nutrients and fluids lost during workouts. These are foods rich in complex carbohydrates and starch, which quickly replenish muscle glycogen, the energy stored in muscles and exhausted during workouts. Power foods also are high in vitamins and minerals that facilitate energy production, and they provide fluids to relieve heat build-up.

Some tips:

Choose a little lean red meat.

Many athletes mistakenly sacrifice iron-rich lean meat for foods of lower nutritional value filled with hidden fat. Low-fat, low-calorie, cholesterol-lowering diets allow two 3-ounce servings of lean meat each week. Besides iron, lean meat offers high-quality protein, B vitamins and more zinc than any other protein source.

All cuts of meat are not created equal, however. Newly available "Select" beef is the leanest grade. Top round and bottom round are the leanest cuts. For leanest preparation, trim all visible fat. Broil, roast, stir fry or simmer in wine and vegetables.

Choose plenty of fresh fruits and vegetables.

Fresh fruits and vegetables help replace lost fluids, potassium and muscle glycogen. Melons, strawberries and tomatoes are high in vitamin C, and juicy peaches and cantaloupe are high in vitamin A. Fresh Silver Queen corn is almost pure starch.

All fresh produce is high in complex carbohydrates and naturally low in fat and sodium.

Choose low-fat frozen treats.

Popsicles, sherbet, sorbet, ice milk and frozen fruit juice bars make great hot-weather fluid-replacement treats. But watch out for high-fat ice cream and creamy fruit bars.

Choose breads, crackers and cookies wisely.

Breads, crackers and plain cookies are concentrated sources of carbohydrate, some iron and the B vitamins. But many commercially prepared varieties are high in fat and saturated fat — so read the labels. Coconut, palm and palm kernel oils are hard on your heart.

Choose non-fat dips and spreads.

Few of us like our carbos plain, but be careful: Fat calories pile up fast! Use the new non-fat yogurts and low-fat ricotta cheese as the base for heart-healthy low-fat garnishes for snacks. They provide high-quality protein for muscular strength and endurance, calcium for sturdy bones and lots of B vitamins.

Heart-healthy snack combos.

For fruit: "Honey Lime Yogurt Dressing." Combine 16 ounces skim milk yogurt, grated peel of 1 lime and 3 tablespoons honey.

For vegetables: "Breathless Dilly Dip." Combine 16 ounces skim milk yogurt, 1 teaspoon dill, 1 teaspoon garlic powder and a dash of cayenne.

For raisin bagels, graham crackers, vanilla wafers, animal crackers: "Sweet 'n' Spicy Spread." Mix part skim milk ricotta cheese with cinnamon or pumpkin pie spice.

For pretzels, Rye Krisps and melba toast: "Hot 'n' Spicy Spread." Mix part skim milk ricotta with "Mrs. Dash" seasoning.

Three large money-center banks in New York and Chicago raised their prime lending rates today from 9 to 9.5 percent.

Cuban Troops To Leave Angola

The South Africans had no announcement.

But during the talks, their chief negotiator, Neil van Heerden, told reporters the parties were "talking turkey" and the negotiations were "on track."

The optimism expressed by the Angolan and South African were a marked contrast to the usual rancor and recriminations in statements about each other.

Another meeting has been set for early August to begin working out details of the withdrawal of all foreign forces from southwestern Africa — the Cubans from Angola, and the South Africans from South-West Africa.

A site for the meeting has not been set.

Angola has been convulsed by civil war since it gained independence from Portugal in 1975. The Marxist one-party government has been fighting the anti-communist rebels in the south, who call themselves UNITA, for National Union for the Total Independence of Angola.

South Africa has repeatedly sent troops across the border from Namibia into Angola to support the UNITA rebel forces in their clashes with Cuban and Angolan forces.

Namibia has been ruled by South Africa since World War I, when the League of Nations gave it a mandate to administer the territory. The League's successor, the United Nations, has revoked that mandate.

The four parties first met in London in early May, then reconvened last month in Cairo, Egypt. South African and Angolan officials held a separate meeting in May in Brazzaville, the Congo.

Tricky End To Operation

UNION SPRINGS, Ala. (AP) — The only obstetrician-gynecologist in two rural counties died while performing a hysterectomy, and another doctor had to fly 40 miles from Montgomery to complete the operation.

Dr. Robert X. Williams, 54, suffered a heart attack Wednesday and was pronounced dead in the operating room of Bullock County Hospital, officials said.

A helicopter from St. Margaret's Hospital flew in Dr. Judi Jehle, who successfully completed the surgery, said Don Priori, chairman of the Bullock County Hospital Board.

Williams' death leaves Bullock and Macon counties without an obstetrician-gynecologist. The two counties in southeastern Alabama are among the poorest in the state and have high infant-mortality rates.

"As far as OB delivery goes, it will close us up," Priori said.

Williams delivered between 60 and 80 babies a month, he said. "That's a pretty heavy delivery load for one doctor," Priori said. "He had more than two a day."

Priori said a search has begun to try to find a replacement physician.

After Williams' death Wednesday, two women who had gone into labor were rushed to Baptist Medical Center in Montgomery.

"We're worried about the women who are real close to delivery," Priori said. "The two we sent to Baptist hospital in Montgomery by ambulance were already having contractions. We're watching several others now. We have the ambulance standing by."

Bullock County's infant mortality rate in 1987 was 21.5 deaths per 1,000 births, according to state health officials. The state average was 12.2.

City Council In Battle

CHICAGO (AP) — City Council allies of Mayor Eugene Sawyer have stripped power from his key opponents in a meeting marked by name-calling and police intervention, driving a deeper political wedge into the city's black community.

"This just opens all the old wounds," said political scientist Paul Kleppner of Northern Illinois University.

Most white aldermen voted to oust eight opponents of the black mayor, including several influential black aldermen, from committee chairmanships during an unruly council meeting that ended late Wednesday.

At one point during the meeting, police officers rushed to the floor to break up a near-fight between Dorothy Tillman, a black Sawyer critic, and Marlene Carter, a black Sawyer ally.

Ford To Replace Williams

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — The man who ran the four-corners offense to near perfection in the late 1970s at North Carolina will be returning to the Tar Heels as an assistant coach.

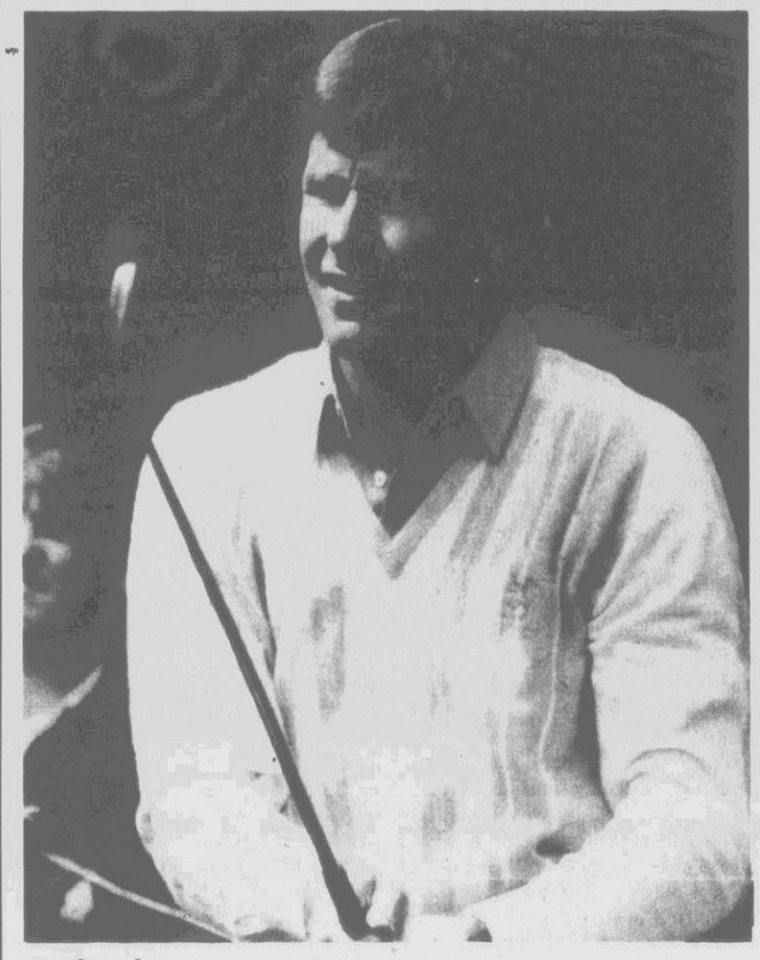

Former guard Phil Ford, 33, will replace Roy Williams, who resigned last week to become head coach at Kansas.

The selection of Ford, announced Wednesday by North Carolina head coach Dean Smith and athletic director John Swofford, leaves the Charlotte Hornets NBA franchise without a color commentator for its radio network.

"It's a loss for us and our broadcasting team," said Hornets vice president Carl Scheer, "but I am delighted for Phil. He'll make a great coach at (North) Carolina and anywhere else he may coach."

Scheer said the Hornets and WBT, the Charlotte radio station which will originate the team's network, have not had time to consider a replacement for Ford.

Ballesteros Takes Lead

LYTHAM, England (AP) — Seve Ballesteros overpowered the wind and the tricky Royal Lytham and St. Annes course to shoot a 4-under par 67 for the early first-round lead at the British Open Thursday.

Ballesteros, the winner of the open the last time it was held in this resort town on the Irish Sea, in 1979, birdied five of the first nine holes while the 25 mph winds were gusting against his back, then rode out the winds on the back nine.

"I feel I played the best I can on the first 13 holes," he said. "It's definitely very difficult to shoot 4-under in these conditions, but the way I played I don't deserve any worse."

His worst moments came when he drove far off the fairways and into unplayable positions at the 14th and 18th holes. He took a drop and a stroke at both holes and scrambled to save two bogeys with long putts.

"Both shots landed behind bushes. I don't think even Daniel Boone could play from there," the Spaniard said.

Ballesteros got one of those shots back with a birdie 3 at the 17th, sinking sinking a short putt after coming close to holing out his second shot.

Most of the leading players, including defending champion Nick Faldo of England, had late tee-off times for the first round.

Playing in the 10th threesome out on the gray, chilly day, Ballesteros finished two shots clear of anyone else who had yet set foot on the 6,673-yard course.

Gordon Brand Jr. of Scotland was 3-under par through 11 holes, with an eagle 3 on the seventh hole and a birdie 3 at the 10th. Ron Commons, an American who plays on the European PGA Tour, also was 3-under through the front nine, with an eagle at the sixth and a birdie at the eighth.

Chip Beck and Larry Nelson were Americans among a a bunch at 2-under with holes remaining in their rounds. Peter Senior of Australia was in the clubhouse at 1-under 70, but none of the other early finishers were even close.

As he played his first round, the odds on Ballesteros winning his third open title dropped from 9-to-1 to 4-to-1 among Britain's legal bookies.

And the way the course was playing, Ballesteros' round looked more and more remarkable as the wind blew and scores soared.

The front nine was playing relatively easy, with golfer after golfer picking up birdies, particularly on the par-5 sixth and seventh holes.

With the winds at their backs, they were driving long and easily reaching the greens in two strokes.

But once they made the turn, they found the wind in their faces, or blowing across the fairways, with mist and drizzle making the scene even more uncomfortable.

And the leader board, loaded with red numbers for sub-par rounds on the front nine, turned green for even par and then the pale blue of bogeys and double-bogeys.

Take Greg Bruckner, for instance.

An American who plays on the Asian PGA Tour, Bruckner eagled the sixth and seventh, then added a birdie at the eighth to stand 4-under at the turn.

Then Bruckner was introduced to the other side of Royal Lytham.

He bogeyed Nos. 11 and 12, took a double-bogey 6 on the 13th, dropped another shot on the 14th and finished the round at 1-over 72.

Jack Nicklaus, who has won the open three times, finished the first round at 4-over 75 despite an upset stomach that made him wonder whether he would play at all.

"About 6:30 this morning, I was lying on the bathroom floor, not knowing if I was going to make it," Nicklaus said.

The American veteran said he felt fine through the round, although his golf must have given him twinges of pain. He birdied the first hole, took bogeys on the second and third and dropped three more strokes on the windblown back nine.

The wind is a presence as constant in this seaside town as beach sand and rain-soaked tourists.

"An unremitting breeze," is how

Steinbrenner's Comments Rang Loud

By Scott Ostler
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

Tuesday night's baseball All-Star Game has left me depressed.

I wasn't expecting a wild, action-packed game, because they hardly ever are. The highlight of every All-Star telecast is the introduction of the players. Batting practice is almost always livelier than the game.

What ruined the event for me was picking up the papers the next day and seeing who won the game — George Steinbrenner.

Big George, Yankee owner, the Sultan of Slander, hitting with power to all fields, had put the big knock on three of his Yankee players.

Steinbrenner wasn't even in Cincinnati for the game. From a bunker in New York or Florida, George lashed out through the New York press at Dave Winfield, Don Mattingly and Rickey Henderson.

Steinbrenner's quotes, and the reaction of his players, dominated Wednesday's newspaper coverage of Tuesday's game.

Why did this bother me? Because I'm jealous. I have Steinbrenner envy.

As a native of the Los Angeles area, I have never experienced the slightest twinge of inferiority to citizens of New York. It's a fabulous city, but it really has gone downhill since the Algonquin tribe sub-leased it to English settlers.

But New York does have one major cultural advantage over Los Angeles — George Steinbrenner.

New York baseball fans have more fun than any fans in baseball, because they have George. They are the most united fans in baseball, because they are united against George. As are the Yankee players. New York sportswriters never have to search for a story angle when George is on a roll. All they have to do is get out their notepads and roll up their sleeves.

And their pants cuffs.

In Los Angeles, we have nothing to compare with the Bambino of Bombast.

Peter O'Malley? When it comes to creating a public nuisance, the Dodger owner can't carry Steinbrenner's jock. Peter simply can't grasp the time-honored concept of firing a manager to create a trumped-up news event. And when was the last time you saw a headline: "O'Malley Calls Dodgers 'Pack of Sniveling Wimps'"? Not recently.

Gene Autry? To his credit, Gene occasionally gets in a good rip. He'll whine about the Angels being overpaid and underproductive. But you sense that Autry's heart isn't in it. He's such a harmless galoot, he comes off like a kindly old next-door-neighbor complaining about the noisy rubbish collectors.

Jerry Buss? What's for him to complain about? His players win everything every year, and never from him is heard a discouraging word. But put Steinbrenner in charge of the Lakers for one week and he would stir the stew. He would fire Pat Riley, hire Paul Westhead and call Magic Johnson an overrated hot dog.

Georgia Frontiere? She last granted media interviews in about 1942. And she's sitting on a gold mine. What would Steinbrenner have done with an Eric Dickerson situation? Or a Dieter Brock? Say, George, what was your opinion of John Robinson's play selection on that third-and-two play? It makes me weep to think of all that raw material going to waste.

Al Davis? A true eccentric, but Al's criticisms of coaches and players are too subtle or confidential to make decent headlines. Davis paid Marc Wilson $1 million a year, and for all we know, Al considered it a bargain.

Los Angeles owners: Not a blustering buffoon in the bunch.

Steinbrenner's motto is Never a Dull Newspaper, Never a Calm Clubhouse. Or: Commitment to Chaos. Or: No Superstar Too Big To Belittle.

Exuding the charm of a subway mugger, George does so much with so little. In his pre-All-Star Game rips, Steinbrenner blasted Dave Winfield for wasting time and energy autographing his autobiography. "He shouldn't do any more endorsements or book signings," Steinbrenner said.

Book signings! Babe Ruth went through houses of ill repute like a hurricane through a trailer park. Mickey Mantle and Whitey Ford proudly poured themselves into the beer-drinker's hall of fame. All that stuff went down quietly.

Yet Winfield finds himself skewered in bold national headlines for sitting in a bookstore, chatting with old ladies while he scribbles his name. You'd think the guy was moonlighting as a lumberjack.

And is that Winfield book a sweet piece of irony, or what? It is selling like classic literature because in it Winfield takes a few zings at Steinbrenner, who then generously promotes the book by railing at Winfield for writing it and autographing it.

What next? A Steinbrenner book rebutting the Winfield book? With a forward by Dave Winfield?

George calls Mattingly, one of the great Yankees, "awful." Then Steinbrenner criticizes his three All-Stars for attending the All-Star Game. Says they should have stayed home and rested.

Kersee Remembers Finishing Second

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Four years ago, Jackie Joyner-Kersee had a dream: to win the Olympic gold medal in the heptathlon.

She fell five points short, finishing second behind Glynis Nunn of Australia.

That disappointment is what motivates Joyner-Kersee now.

"That girl in Australia with the gold medal is what makes Jackie better," Bob Kersee, her husband and coach, said Wednesday.

"She learned from that. She has turned that disappointment into positiveness. That's not to take anything away from the silver medal she earned, but she didn't perform up to her capabilities then."

After that heartbreaking setback, Kersee said he told his dispirited wife, "Now, you have to wait four years for that dream to come again."

That time is approaching. The Seoul Games are about two months away, and, at present, Joyner-Kersee not only is the prohibitive favorite for the heptathlon, the two-day test of skill and strength in seven tough events, but also the favorite for the women's long jump.

She won both events in convincing fashion at last year's World Championships in Rome, and to win both again would be an extraordinary accomplishment.

First, however, she must make the U.S. team in those events during the Olympic Trials, which begin Friday at the Indiana University Track and Field Stadium.

Barring injury, that should not be difficult.

Joyner-Kersee is the world record-holder in the heptathlon, and is the only athlete to score more than 7,000 points in the competition, having done it three times.

She also is the American record-holder in the long jump, and shared the world record with Heike Drechsler of East Germany until June 11, when Galina Chistyakova of the Soviet Union broke the mark by nearly three inches.

In addition, Joyner-Kersee shares the American record in the 100-meter high hurdles, an event in which she also is entered in the Trials but probably will not contest unless she has unexpected difficulties in the heptathlon or the long jump.

"It doesn't make sense to do it here if she's not going to do it in the Olympic Games," Kersee said, referring to the hurdles.

The major concentration will be on the heptathlon, to be held Friday and Saturday, and Kersee said his wife was fully prepared for an assault on her world record of 7,158 points set in 1986 at Houston.

"We came here with the intention of breaking the world record," he said. "We're also going after the first-day world record (4,256 points, set in the 1987 World Championships). I would like to see her around 4,300 points."

Overall, Kersee said he had his wife "programmed" for 7,194 points.

Joyner-Kersee, considered the world's best female athlete since Babe Didricksen Zaharias dominated women's competition during the 1930s and 1940s, said, "My first goal is to go after the win."

"Then, I will see where I am, and take it from there," she said. "I might PR (break her personal record).

"My biggest goal is making the Olympic team, going to Seoul and winning the gold medal. My dream last year was to win the gold medal at the World Championships, and I did that."

Joyner-Kersee said she blames her near-miss in the heptathlon during the Los Angeles Games on lack of experience rather than a tight hamstring that hampered her during the long jumping, her best event.

"In 1984, I was inexperienced as far as international competition was concerned," she said. "I doubted my ability.

"I was stubborn and hard-headed, and I paid the price. It wasn't my injury that cost me the gold medal — it was my stubborness. After that, I decided to do the little things that prevented me from winning the gold."

Those "little things" included working out early in the morning before attending classes at UCLA, making sure to go for proper treatments from her physical therapist and eating the right foods, Joyner-Kersee said.

"Once I realized I wanted to be the best in the world, I knew I had to do the little things," Joyner-Kersee said.

She has been doing the little things so well that even her husband is surprised — and optimistic.

Female Ump

Pam Postema calls a strike during seventh-inning action from the first-ever AAA All-Star game in Buffalo, Wednesday. Postema, the only woman umpire in AAA baseball has a good chance to become the first woman to umpire in the major leagues. (AP Laserphoto)

Postema Gaining Support In Quest

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — AlbuquerqueDukes manager Terry Collins believes Pam Postema "knows what she's doing," but says her selection as home plate umpire in the first Triple A All-Star game "probably was a public relations move."

Postema, seeking to become the first female to umpire in the major leagues, said she doesn't care why she was selected for the honor.

"I don't really care about how I got it," she said. "I got it."

Aside from a few glares from batters on called third strikes, Postema fulfilled any umpire's desire in Wednesday night's 2-1 victory by American League farmhands over their National League counterparts: she did her job well enough that she went unnoticed.

Although her unique situation automatically brings attention to her, Postema is clearly tired of dealig with the questions about when — or if — she'll ever make it to the majors.

"I'm not thinking about that now," she said. "I really don't want to talk about going up to the big leagues — when or where or if — because I don't know anything."

Postema said she's "uncomfortable with it (the publicity). I really don't want it, but I understand it. I guess we all kind of like to be noticed, but I don't think it's good for umpires. I think umpires' work should be kept on the field. I don't think there's any need for me to b up there talking."

She added, "I understand that I'm different, but I'm just another umpire out there on the field."

The All-Stars gave Postema their approval, although at least one was clearly concerned with the possibility any public comment may come back to haunt him later.

"I don't want to say anything that can get me in trouble," said the Denver Zephyrs' designaed hitter Tim Pyznarski, who sees Postema regularly in the American Association.

"She's a decent umpire," he said. "I've seen worse. I've seen better. She's doing the best job that she knows how."

Joe Boever, the Richmond Braves pitcher who lost the game, said Postema is a good umpire.

"She's consistent in her calls," he said. "She doesn't take any flak."

Collns, who had Postema for three seasons in the Pacific Coast League, said she "knows what she's doing. She's very good behind the plate."

He added, "The last time I saw her, I thought if she improves on the bases, she can work in the major leagues."

Postema was one of seven umpires being considered for two National League openings and umpired several major league exhibition games before being sent back for her sixth season at the Triple-A leve.

"I just was hoping, especially in spring training, that I could just kind of slip in unnoticed, but it didn't work out that way," she said, adding, "Thank you, Bob Knepper."

Knepper, who pitches for the Houston Astros, brought Postema unwanted attention when he maintained women shouldn't be umpires after Postema worked a game he pitched in spring training.

"That's just an indication of how things change, but they don't really change. It was such a shock to me. I didn't expect it," she said.

Then she added with a laugh: "By the way, he's a good kisser."

Boggs Charges Extortion, Prostitution

BOSTON (AP) — The agent for four-time American League batting champion Wade Boggs is accusing the woman who filed a $6-million lawsuit against the Boston Red Sox third baseman of prostitution and extortion.

"I think it is a sad commentary that society has put ... Margo Adams in celebrity status when we all know that her admitted behavior is nothing short of prostitution and extortion," Alan Nero said in an interview Wednesday.

Nero also accused Adams of choosing "to air her dirty laundry publicly for her own personal profit."

"And Wade prefers to be a gentleman and to not bring the same pain to other people's families she has brought to his," Nero said.

Boggs admits to an affair with Adams, but disputes her claim that he agreed to pay her expenses when she traveled with him during road trips. He also denies compensating her for time she spent away from her business.

Adams, a 34-year-old Californian, also alleges that she met with Nero on more than one occasion to discuss a financial arrangement.

"All absolutely wrong," Nero said. "I met her once four years ago by mistake."

He said he had met Adams once by chance, but he declined to say where.

Nero said Adams will have a chance to air her allegations in court on Aug. 12.

"If there's any substance to her allegations, then there's a proper medium for it and that medium is not the Boston Herald or People magazine or the 'Donahue' show," Nero said.

Adams appeared on "The Phil Donahue Show" on Tuesday and alleged that Boggs gave her photographs of some Red Sox players in compromising positions.

"If some guys on the team (did) something Wade didn't particularly like, or they were going to talk about what was going on, he devised a little thing called the 'Delta Force.'

"What he did was make sure they were set up in a compromising position and he'd break into the room and take pictures," she said.

Adams said she had no intention of making any photographs public, and Boggs has denied that any exist.

Steinbrenner Apologizes For Remarks

NEW YORK (AP) — New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner is apologizing for his criticism of All-Star first baseman Don Mattingly, according to a published report.

Steinbrenner was quoted in today's New York Daily News as saying he would leave the players alone and not criticize them publicly the rest of the season.

"I'm backing off, I've got to back off," he told the newspaper. "So I'm off. I'm clamming up."

Earlier this week, Steinbrenner criticized what he called his "big-money players," specifically referring to All-Stars Mattingly, Dave Winfield and Rickey Henderson.

This time, he said of his comments on Mattingly:

"I'm sorry that it came out wrong about Don Mattingly and you can quote me. Listen, here's all I was saying about Mattingly, other than I don't think a guy who's not long off the disabled list should be going to the All-Star Game, which is a carnival, nothing more. Mattingly, you ened up judging him by superhuman terms. ... I wasn't calling Don Mattingly a bum. I just was saying Don Mattingly hasn't given me the kind of production he has in the past, if you look carefully at his numbers. His .311 has been unproductive."

Steinbrenner said he plans to talk to all the of the players he criticized through the media.

He also reiterated his wish that Winfield tone down his off-field schedule, particularly public appearances.

"What I am basically saying about Dave Winfield is that I want him to conserve all his available strength so he can play in August and September the way he did in April and May."

Winfield is batting .346 with 15 homers, 62 RBI and 57 runs scored.

As for any further messages he might deliver through the media, Steinbrenner said, "If they want me to shut up, fine, I'll shut up."

PGA's Hot Golfers Staying Stateside

COAL VALLEY, Ill. (AP) — The British Open may have the big names, but three of the hottest golfers on the PGA Tour were in the field for the $600,000 Hardee's Golf Classic.

Tom Sieckmann, Mark Wiebe and Kenny Knox — who finished 1-2-3 in last weekend's Anheuser Busch Golf Classic — were among the 151 golfers scheduled to tee off today at the par-70, 6,606-yard Oakwood Country Club.

Knox, the defending champion, has been playing well the past month.

"Actually I'm playing better this year than when I came in here last year," said Knox, who fired a tournament record 265, 15 under par, in winning the 1987 event.

But Knox said he doesn't feel he's under any pressure to repeat.

"It's unique. I found out last week it's hard to win a golf tournament," said Knox, 31, who rallied to finish third in the Anheuser-Busch.

Hoefling On Rare Program

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — For a conditioning coach, Gus Hoefling is anything but Jack La Lanne. While La Lanne is tall and svelte, Hoefling is short, bald and paunchy. And while La Lanne may be for every body, Hoefling's program is for a few.

"Best program in baseball," Philadelphia Phillies dugout coach John Vukovich says as he walks by. "Best program in sports."

Hoefling has been the Phillies' stength and flexibility instructor for the last 12 years, and his disciples — albeit fewer in number — are as dedicated today as they were a dozen years ago.

"He changed my athletic life," said California Angels catcher Bob Boone, who at 40 holds the record for the most games caught and is still behind the plate daily. "(Without it) I don't think I'd be around today."

Boone, Steve Carlton, Roman Gabriel and John Denny and many others have long since left Hoefling's daily tutelage, but they continue to do his program every day.

Hoefling, 54, holds black belts in several martial arts disciplines, but says doesn't know exactly how many forms he has studied.

"That's from my younger days," he says, waving his hand as though it didn't matter.

But Hoefling's program, which involves conditioning and calesthenics, is heavily dependent on the disciplines of kung fu.

"I'm a big believer in discipline," Hoefling said. "If you can't control yourself, how can you control someone else? How can you control someone else on the athletic field?"

Only a select few does Hoefling allow into a second phase, the inner circle to whom he teaches the martial arts.

Hoefling is willing to work with anybody on his conditioning program, which is fine for most. But others want more.

"I use it (the kung fu) as a carrot," he said. "They have to earn that. If they want access to the best martial arts training in the world, and I believe I have that, they have to work for it."

"I drive hard," Hoefling said.

"His program involves work. That's the key," said Phillies pitcher Shane Rawley, who came to Philadelphia in 1984 with a 23-44 career record. He is 56-42 since.

"A lot of it is discipline, disciplining your body."

The program is so strenuous, most players choose not take part.

Hoefling says in the late 1970s, when the ballclub was winning its four divisional championships in five years, nearly every player worked out every day. This year, he has most of the starting pitchers, most of the catchers and a few others here and there.

"He's under the philosophy, anybody that he teaches has to be willing to do the work," Rawley said. "He will not build a paper tiger. He doesn't teach just the (kung fu) moves. Without the physical part, the second doesn't mean anything."

All of Hoefling's followers, the ones who just want the conditioning and the few who take it further, admit the calisthenics are grueling. But a common thread seems to be the "No-pain-no-gain" theory.

"It doesn't change your skills, but it enhances them," said Boone, who has been working with Hoefling since the exercise guru was hired by the Eagles in the early 1970s and then moved across the Veteran Stadium hallway to the Phillies. "It enables you to go out there day in and day out. One thing condition does is it allows you to work harder."

Rawley credits Hoefling with getting the four Phillies starters last season — himself, Don Carman, Bruce Ruffin and Kevin Gross, to pitch over 200 innings each. No other major league club accomplished that.

"It just makes you a lot bigger, a lot stronger," Gross said. "He can't pitch for us, but he can prepare us physically and somewhat mentally. He can take any staff and make them stronger."

Because the program must, or should be, done every day, Rawley says day-to-day ballplayers feel they can't be in Hoefling's program and still perform during the game, making the plan more advantageous to starting pitches who get three-to-four days rest between appearances.

But Lance Parrish doesn't buy that.

"I'm proof you can do it every day," Parrish said. "Most people don't take conditioning seriously until they have to."

Carlton is Hoefling's most celebrated student. Carlton won his first Cy Young Award in 1972, but won three more — 1977, 1980 and 1982 — after the Phillies brought in the strentgh coach to get "just one more season out of him," according to Hoefling.

Denny, who won his Cy Young in 1983 after a mediocre career with St. Louis and Cleveland, attributed much of his dramatic change to Hoefling.

Carlton, Denny, Boone, Rawley, Carman, Parrish and Gabriel have been given Hoefling's martial arts teachings. And they still work at it.

"I enjoy it (the kung fu) because it is not the same thing," Carman said. "With other programs, there is only so far you can take it. You can only do more pushups, run farther. This is unlimited.

"Martial arts everybody thinks is a mystery. It's just brutal hard work. It's not mystic. It gives you a calm confidence. You can go back there and know you are not limited. You can reach back for more and Gus can make you see it."

Hoefling came to Philadelphia after working with Gabriel when he played with the Los Angeles Rams. When Gabriel was traded to the Eagles, then Philadelphia coach Mike McCormack was so impressed with the conditioning of his new quarterback, he asked Hoefling to evaluate the entire team.

He was with the Eagles until Dick Vermiel took over as coach.

"He had one year of me and I had one year of him and that was enough," Hoefling said.

At Boone's urging, then Phillies owner Ruly Carpenter, who was working out with Hoefling, hired him to work with the team.

But it all may end soon.

"Another two years, hell maybe this year," Hoefling said. "I don't like the people who are coming into sports these days. All the kids. They're all know-it-alls."

Tyson Is Hard Person To Doubt

By ED SCHUYLER Jr.
AP Sports Writer

It's hard to doubt Mike Tyson when he says, "I'm the greatest fighter on the planet."

It's just as hard to believe him when he says he is in charge of his life.

"I call all the shots," the champion said this week while admitting he has asked billionaire Donald Trump to advise him.

At least he and Trump say it was Tyson's idea to seek Trump's advice.

"Mike called me," Trump said. But he also said, "My initial meeting was with Winston and Ruth Roper."

Attorney Michael Winston and Roper, the heavyweight champion's mother-in-law, are two of the characters in what resembles a daytime soap opera.

Call it, "As Mike Tyson's World Churns."

Other characters are, of course, Trump in the role of Daddy Warbucks; the beautiful Mrs. Tyson, actress Robin Givens, manager Bill Cayton, who is cast in the role of the villain, and promoter Don King, a man who plays many parts at the same time.

King, who would like to be Tyson's main adviser, has proclaimed he is "one-thousand percent behind Mike Tyson." Some people believe it's better to have the promoter 1,000 percent in front of you.

There is litigation to break Tyson's 3½-year boxer-manager contract and three-year personal services contract which he signed in February with Cayton and the late Jim Jacobs.

Trump said he has "a great relationship with Bill Cayton," but added "I think he (Tyson) has a very strong case."

Trump noted that Tyson was not represented by a lawyer when "he signed a contract with some very sophistcated people."

The people in the champion's increasingly crowded corner contend Tyson would have not signed in February had he known Jacobs was terminally ill. Jacobs, who was close to Tyson, died in March. Cayton's relationship with the fighter has been strictly business.

Givens and her mother called for Cayton to give an accounting of Tyson's finances shortly after the actress and champion were married in February, and Tyson has accused the manager of villifying Robin and Ruth in the press.

He also has accused members of the media of embarrassing his family, although his wife and mother-in-law don't seem to mind talking to the media and his sister-in-law volunteered to one reporter that she had seen Tyson hit Robin.

Tyson denies ever hitting his wife, and she has not been far from his side at anytime since they were married even though he fought twice in that period.

There have been assertions that Givens and Roper are behind Tyson's decision to break with Cayton.

"That's absured," Tyson said. "Face the facts."

It really is not fair to accuse Givens and Roper of not having Tyson's best interests at heart. Nor is it fair to scoff at Tyson for sticking up for his wife and her family.

Ford Tabbed

Smith said North Carolina's coaching staff will be realigned, with Ford and Randy Weil, already on the staff, sharing Williams's duties. Ford has been designated as one of the three Tar Heels coaches, along with Smith and Bill Guthridge, who can go on the road recruiting. Weil has teaching responsibilities at the university.

"We had a great number of our former players presently in basketball to consider for this position," Smith said. "However, I had no idea Phil would be interested.

"But I am extremely excited he does want to be a college coach."

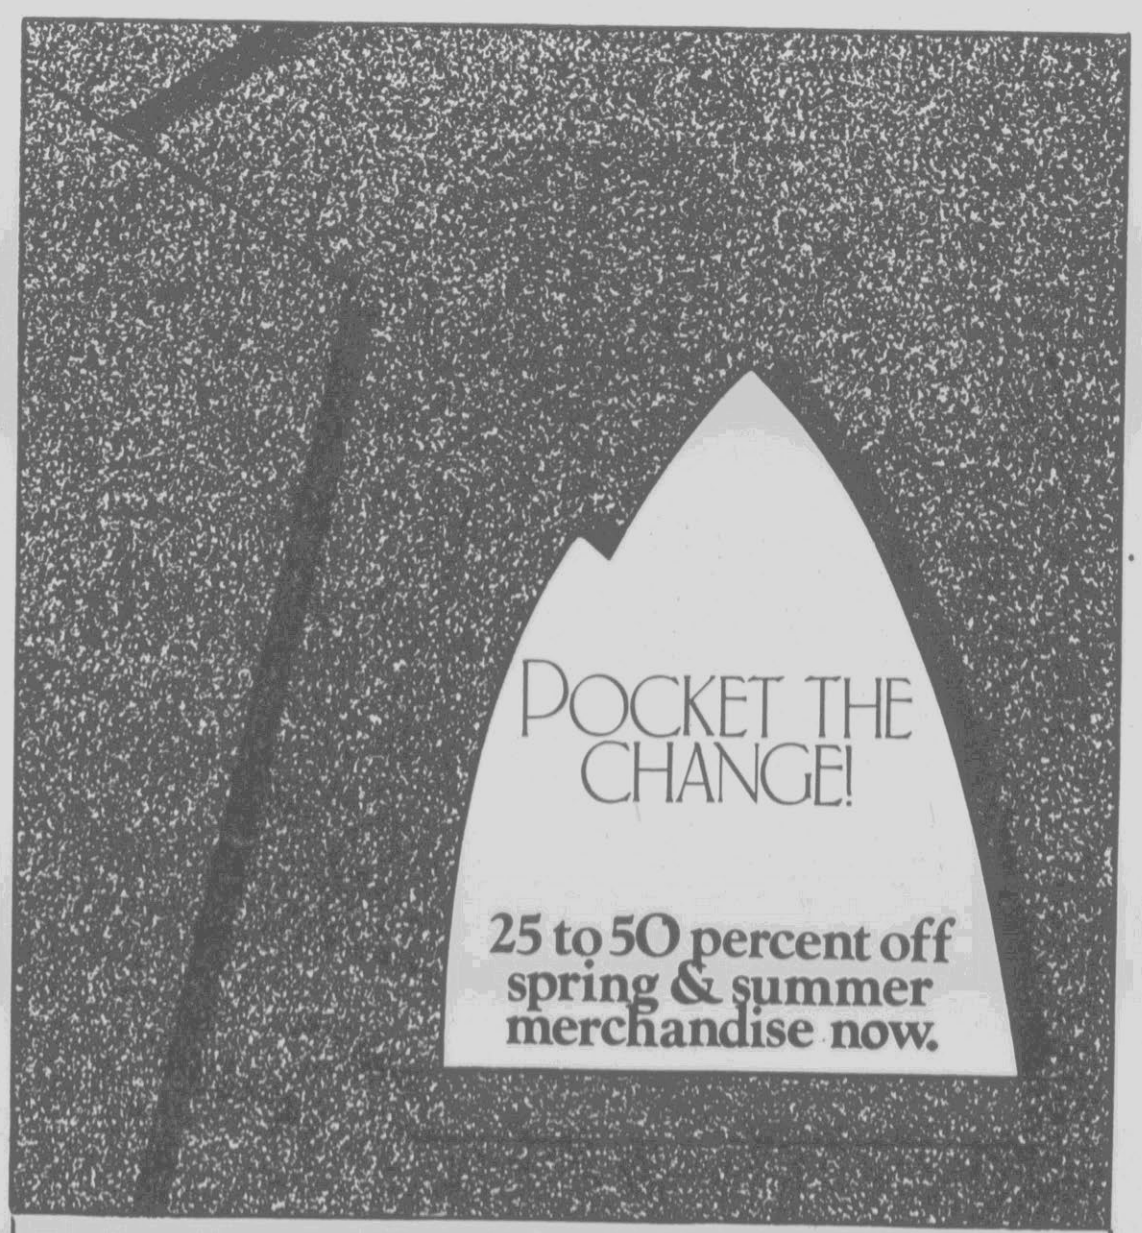

Ford, of Rocky Mount, was an outstanding playmaker who was recognized for his ability to run North Carolina's spread offense. He is the university's all-time scoring leader with 2,290 career points and is second in career assists.

He was a three-time All-American guard for the Tar Heels, in 1976, 1977 and 1978. He won the John Wooden Award in 1978 as the nation's best player and was also chosen national player of the year by the U.S. Basketball Writers Association, the National Association of Basketball Coaches and The Sporting News.

He was selected most valuable player in the 1975 Atlantic Coast Conference tournament, the first time the award was given to a freshman, after leading the Tar Heels to an upset victory over N.C. State.

Knee High Wind

Portland Beaver pitcher Roy Smith buries his knee into his glove as he winds up as the starting pitcher for the American League during the first-ever Triple-A All-Star game Wednesday. Jurak's Case Of Deja Vu In 1st AAA All-Star Game

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Ed Jurak provided a case of deja vu for at least one ungraeful onlooker in the inugural Triple-A All-Star game.

Jurak of the Tacoma Tigers tripled and scored the winning run in the ninth inning as the American League's top farmhands duplicated the feat of their older brothers 24 hours earlier. They beat the National League 2-1 Wednesday night in the inaugural All-Star game teaming players from the International League, Pacific CoastLeague and American Association.

But Jurak's heroics were nothing new for Terry Collins, manager of the team of the National League's best minor league prospects.

"I've seen Eddie Jurak beat me a lot," said Collins, whose Albuquerque Dukes play the Tigers in the PCL. "As a matter of fact, he beat me about a month ago in a big ballgame where he got a base hit with a couple of guys on base. He's a good, solid player."

In a game that featured excellent pitching, an enthusiastic sellout crowd of 19,500 at new Pilot Fild, an appearance by baseball's buxom "Kissing Bandit" Morganna and the presence of female umpire Pam Postema behind home plate, it was Jurak who held the spotlight as the game's most valuable player.

Jurak, who spent the 1983 and 1984 seasons with the Boston Red Sox, said he thought about being the hero before he opened the ninth inning with his triple.

"It always pops thrugh your mind," said Jurak, an Oakland Athletics farmhand who said Oakland catcher Terry Steinbach's MVP performance in the major league All-Star game gave him added incentive.

"I was telling our second baseman, Lance Blankenship, let's keep it in the Oakland organization as far as the MVP goes," said Jurak, who made a loser out of Richmond Braves pitcher Joe Boever.

Jurak said that, like all the other minor league All-Stars, he's hoping his performance might help him get back into the majors.

"Hopefully, Oakland ppreciates it and I'll get up there and get a chance to play in the fall," said Jurak, who was called up briefly by the Athletics earlier in the season.

Pitchers dominated in the game. Seven American Leaguers limited the Nationals to only three hits, one a solo homer by New York Mets prospect Gregg Jefferies of Tidewater in the seventh inning.

Ironically, Edmonton Trappers pither Urbano Lugo, who gave up the Jefferies home run, got the victory.

"It's kind of like spring training; you're seeing a different pitcher every inning," said American League and Oklahoma City 89ers third baseman Tom O'Malley, the only player to get two hits. "Pitching is always a dominant force in baseball. It proved it in the major league All-Star game and in our game here.'

Added Vancouver Canadiens pitcher Donn Pall, who got the first two National League outs in the final inning, "The hitters haven't seen many of us pitch at all. It seems like when nobody really knows the opponent, the pitchers seem to have the advantage."

One hitter who had an unusual handicap was the National League's Benny Distefano. The Buffalo Bisons designated hitter became the first minor league player to be bussed by Morganna, who said she's kissed 21 major leaguers.

"I turned around and I saw here and I said 'Gee,'" said Distefano, who got the treatment as he stepped to the plate in the second inning. "I had a lot of fun. It was awesome at the time and it's something I'll never forget."

A grinning Distefano wasn't inspired by the special treatment, however. He popped out to center.

Morganna, who wasn't charged despite the fact spectators aren't allowed on the field, apparentlywas impressed as well.

"I like this," she said to a national audience that watched the game on ESPN. "I may keep this up with Triple A."

Postema, the first female umpire in the highest minor league classification, worked the game without incident.

McCullum Says Debt Can't Be Repaid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sam McCullum says there is no compensation to repay him for the time he was prevented from playing as a wide receiver for the Seattle Seahawks.

McCullum, a 10-year National Football League veteran who was cut by the Seahawks in 1982, told a House subcommittee on Wednesday that no favorable decision on back pay by the National Labor Relations Board, which has had his case almost five years, could compensate him for the lost years.

"The amount of time I have been fighting this ... People say ... 'Why did you do this?'" he told Chairman Tom Lantos, D-Calif., of the House Government Operations employment and housing subcommittee.

"The most important thing, though, is that a lot of people are wondering whether Sam McCullum was telling the truth," he said. "No compensation will repay me."

McCullum said Wednesday he wouldn't put his faith in the federal government again if he were going to fight management over his dismissal from the team, a dismissal he said was caused by his union activism.

He told the subcommittee that he would "put his faith in the players. I would ask them if they would back me. If the commitment was there, the process would stop until justice was served. You're only as strong as the individual player.

"We were led to believe that the NLRB would help protect us, but it hasn't," he said.

McCullum, now 35, said he had started at wide receiver in every Seattle game for six years, plus every 1982 preseason contest, and served as the team's player representative when he was cut by the Seahawks just before the strike-plagued 1982 National Football League season.

Acquired by Seattle in the 1976 expansion draft after two years with Minnesota, he returned to the Vikings during 1982 and 1983.

McCullum filed a grievance with the NLRB, and won a decision from an administrative law judge who ruled on Nov. 23, 1983 that he had been released by Seattle for his union activities. The judge directed that he should be reinstated with backpay.

McCullum, now director of the Washington Traffic Safety Commission, has been waiting since then for the NLRB to act on his complaint.

"The delays of the board have not only hurt me, but also the players of the National Football League," said McCullum, who now resides in Seattle. "I saw a system that I and many of my fellow players had put our faith in let me down. I was led by the Players Association's leadership, and other labor leaders, to believe that the written 'law' and the actions of the board would be swift and fair, that the board would look at the unusual circumstances in this case and would expedite the decisional process in rendering an opinion.

"Obviously, that has not happened," he said.

Lantos told NLRB Chairman James Stephens and three members of the board that it was outrageous that there would be an undecided case after five years.

"If I were chairman, I would be ashamed," Lantos said at one point during the hearing.

Lantos said the subcommittee staff had discovered 36 cases that have been before the NLRB for longer than five years.

Stephens attributed the backlog to previous members of the board, and the agency's turnover in personnel. He said that a year ago there were 70 cases with more than five years longevity and the board has decided 62 of them. Since then, he said, others have been added to the list of five or more years.

The NLRB said 114 cases before it are at least three years old.

Lantos said he could not understand the attitude of the board. "There is an unwillingness to say we made a mistake," he said, referring to the McCullum case. "There is this pretext to perfection."

In his formal remarks, Stephens said, "there is no excuse for the delay which has occurred in deciding these cases. Moreover, it certainly does not please us when we hear the kind of testimony which was presented.

"They are all troubling instances of the system not being sufficiently responsive and by themselves these cases do not speak well of the agency," he said.

Lost Chances Don't Concern Eckersly

CINCINNATI (AP) — Dennis Eckersley would rather not think about all the saves he might have collected and all the money he might have made if he'd been a reliever for his whole career.

"What, do you think I could have had 300 saves by now? I don't know how my arm would have held up," said the Oakland right-hander, who saved Tuesday night's 2-1 All-Star victory for the American League by pitching a perfect ninth innning.

Eckersley, a starter for most of his first 12 years in the majors with the Cleveland Indians, Boston Red Sox and Chicago Cubs, was sent to the bullpen last year by Oakland Athletics manager Tony LaRussa. At the time, he'd made only 17 relief appearances in 12 years, 10 of those as a Cleveland rookie in 1975.

But Eckersley, now 33, responded with 16 saves in 1987, 13 after the All-Star break. He leads the majors this year with 26, not counting the All-Star save.

He began this season with a career record of 157-136 and a 3.64 ERA.

Always a hard thrower, Eckersley said his job as a closer has given him a new intensity, because he's better able to focus his attention, his emotions and his physical resources in short stints of one or two innings.

"The way I've been used this year is easier than starting," said Eckersley, who pitched a no-hitter against California for the Indians in 1977 and who threw his 100th career complete game while with the Cubs in 1986.

"I've never thrown three days in a row this year, and I haven't gone more than two innings. Before every game, he (LaRussa) always asks me how I feel."

Eckersley wasn't thrilled about the prospect of going to the bullpen last year, particularly before it was clear what his role as a reliever would be.

"I thought it was just for the time being, but I did a good job and I sort of made my own bed," he said. "Being a regular reliever stinks. Being a long reliever is no fun at all. You never know when you're going to get in a game. But it's fun being a closer."

Eckersley has been used almost exclusively in save situations this year, although he has had to pitch in a handful of games where no save was possible. He has a 2-1 record and 1.48 earned run average.

"I've always been an aggressive pitcher," he said. "I always threw the ball hard when I was young, so now I can be myself again. I can be aggressive again for one inning."

Eckersley's emotions have occasionally gotten him in trouble. He has a habit of clenching his fist and shaking it after getting a key out, a gesture that's been toned down from a more flamboyant routine he once used.

"I'm trying to control myself," he said. "But it isn't fake. It's real. Some people take it personally."

He irritated his former Cleveland team last week when he shouted at the Indians' Ron Washington after striking out Washington to close a 16-inning marathon. Washington charged after Eckersley, and both benches cleared before the umpires regained control.

"That did bother me. I don't want to make people mad," Eckersley said. "I'm not as full of myself as I was when I was younger. In baseball, you act cocky to hide some of your insecurities and fears."

He said he was motivated by fear on Tuesday night, when he took the mound in the ninth inning of the All-Star Game after seven previous AL pitchers had limited the National League to a run on five singles.

"Everybody had done a good job, and then I come in there," he said. "You don't want to be the goat."

As has been typical for him this year, he cruised through the ninth, retiring three straight batters including one strikeout. He clenched his fist during the inning, but there was no unusual display of emotion.

"I wasn't too flamboyant," he said.

Jury To Decide Fate Of Buoniconti's Suit

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — A Charleston County jury is about decide who was at fault in the 1985 football accident which left Citadel middle linebacker Marc Buoniconti a quadriplegic.

After hearing testimony from more than 50 witnesses over 22 days, the jury of six men and six woman was expected to begin deliberations in Buoniconti's $16.5 million negligence suit late today.

Buoniconti is suing Citadel football team physician Dr. E.K. Wallace Jr. for negligence stemming from an Oct. 26, 1985 accident during a Citadel game at East Tennessee State.

Closing arguments were to be heard this morning, followed by what's expected to be a lengthy charge to the jury.

Testimony in the case ended about noon Wednesday after the defense called its last witness and the plaintiff put up two brief reply witnesses, one of them the 21-year-old Buoniconti — the son of former Miami Dolphins star Nick Buoniconti.

The lawsuit charges Wallace was negligent in treating a neck sprain Buoniconti suffered several weeks before the game. It also charges Wallace failed to warn him that existing abnormalities in his neck made it dangerous for Buoniconti to continue playing football.

The defense contends Buoniconti was to blame for his injuries because he speared an opposing running back — hitting the player helmet-first in violation of football rules.

The $16.5 million is the estimated cost of providing care for Buoniconti for the rest of his life as well as estimates of lost wages. The figure also includes actual medical bills since the injury.

Buoniconti's attorneys have also said they will seek punitive damages, but no figure was mentioned in trial testimony.

While witnesses for Buoniconti have testified it would take $14.5 million up front to finance his care for the rest of his life, experts for the defense countered that $547,000 would cover the bill.

While testifying Wednesday, Buoniconti refuted earlier testimony from former Citadel assistant trainer David Walsh.

A deposition from Walsh read in court Tuesday said Walsh warned Buoniconti about tackling with his head and that Buoniconti replied "that's the way I tackle."

The plaintiff denied saying that and also denied he was warned by either Walsh or former defensive coordinator Danny Smith about the way he tackled.

"Neither Coach Smith nor anybody ever warned me about improperly using my head," Buoniconti testified.

Dr. John McGinty, the chairman of the Department of Orthopedic Surgery at the Medical University of South Carolina, was the last witness for the defense.

He testified there was nothing in X-rays of Buoniconti — one taken only five days before the accident — that indicated he was at risk for suffering a severe injury.

The 64-year-old Wallace provided proper care for Buoniconti's neck sprain and "his decision to allow Marc Buoniconti to play on that fatal afternoon was appropriate," McGinty testified.

McGinty also said there was no relation between Buoniconti's injury and his existing neck condition.

He noted the broken neck occurred in a different location than his existing neck abnormalities which included a flattening of a vertebra.

When the case when to court, both The Citadel and school athletic trainer Andy Clawson were named as defendants.

But an apparent settlement was reached at the end of the third week of the trial.

Starr Calls For Tough Drug Laws After Death Of Son

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — Bart Starr, a National Football League Hall of Famer, called for tougher drug laws Wednesday after disclosing that his son died from cocaine.

Bret Starr, 24, was found dead last week in his home in Tampa, Fla. He was buried Monday in Montgomery, Ala., after funeral services there.

"The official ruling from the medical examiner is cardiac arrhythmia due to acute cocaine indulgence," said Hillsborough, Fla., sheriff's spokesman Jack Espinosa.

The elder Starr called a news conference in Green Bay Wednesday morning to discuss the cause of his son's death.

"Drugs do kill," Starr said. "He only had traces and yet the traces killed him."

Starr said he called the press conference for three reasons: to thank the public for its compassion; to report the cause of his son's death; and to challenge the public to a greater awareness of the dangers of drugs.

"All of us, one-on-one, at every level of society, should pressure those who can change our laws to severely punish those who deal and sell drugs because drugs are a killer," said the former Green Bay Packers quarterback and coach.

Starr said there was no evidence of foul play in his son's death. He said he expects the case to be closed because there is no reason to believe authorities can determine where his son got the cocaine.

"I'm vitally concerned that we're losing the war or have lost the war on drugs," he said. "I don't think people are aware of the severity of the problem. It's worldwide, it's extremely severe and it's growing."

Starr added that he has been "numbed" by the death of his son.

"I don't think it's really hit me yet," he said. "I've run a real roller coaster of emotions. The one consistent thread is the support of people all around us."

The coroner said Bret Starr died accidentally on July 4 or 5. His body, unrecognizable due to decomposition, was found July 7 when his father, concerned because he had not been able to contact him, went to the house.

Police said the house was locked up tight without the air conditioning running.

Starr talked about his son's battle with cocaine in his recent book: "My Life in Football: Starr."

"Unbeknownst to us, by the time Bret graduated from high school he was well on his way to a cocaine addiction," the father wrote, explaining the family's repeated efforts to get him help.

Europe Getting Its Own Sports Channel

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Nine years after ESPN became the first 24-hour sports network in the United States, Europe is about to get an all-sports channel of its own.

Media baron Ruppert Murdoch and 15 public broadcasting networks are joining forces to create Eurosports, expected to go on the air early next year.

The partnership gives the financially strapped public broadcasters a better chance to compete for new sports contracts against commercial networks. It also entitles them to half of the channel's profits.

The station gives Murdoch another addition to his worldwide empire, which includes newspapers, magazines and television stations in his native Australia, the United States and Europe.

But the biggest beneficiaries may be Europe's sports hungry television viewers, often fed a meager diet by their national networks.

Murdoch and the public broadcasters have reached an agreement in principle and are on the verge of signing the final contract, said Jaklien Caenberghs, an aide to Eurosports chairman Cas Goossens.

Eurosports will combine the television transmission rights of public broadcasters in Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Iceland, Finland, Switzerland, Austria, Italy, Britain, Ireland, Spain, Portugal, France and Belgium, which has two public networks.

"There is a great pool of high quality sports programming there," said Fiona Waters, a spokeswoman for Murdoch. "From that point of view, the product is already there."

Eurosports is to be transmitted to most of Europe through the Luxembourg Astra satellite, set for launching in November. The early aim is to reach more than 13 million homes.

The channel will start with nine to 18 hours of programming a day, but plans call for eventual around-the-clock broadcasting.

Eurosports will transmit Europe's favorite sports such as soccer, cycling and tennis in addition to major championships and the Olympics.

The deal comes at a critical time for Europe's public broadcasting companies, suffering from the effects of deregulation and increased competition from commercial stations.

Last spring the West German public networks lost a major soccer contract to RTL-plus, controlled by communications giant Bertelsmann.

"That really taught us a good lesson," Caenberghs said.

By increasing their potential market through Eurosports, public broadcasters will have a better chance in future negotiations with sports federations.

"Federations will realize that their sport will be seen in millions of European homes," Caenberghs said.

The channel also will give public networks a chance to showcase major sports events, rather than show them piecemeal as part of their overcrowded regular schedules.

Because of such programming restraints, the networks currently show only about 10 percent of the potential sports programming.

"They were recording an enormous amount of good material that is never used," Waters said.

While the public stations provide the program rights, Murdoch will handle the costs of production, transmission, marketing and advertising.

Caenberghs said Murdoch would cover up to $78 million in losses over a five-year period. The contract allows him to get out of the deal if the losses go beyond that, she said.

If and when the operation makes a profit, Murdoch and the networks would share it equally.

Eurosports backers should be encouraged by the example of ESPN, which went through tough times before becoming a major success.

When ESPN went on the air in 1979, it reached only 1.4 million homes. Today it can be seen in 47.8 million homes, or 54 percent of all U.S. households with televisions.

ESPN's programming and profit picture have followed the same course.

When it started, the cable network relied heavily on minor sports such as softball, billiards and hurling. Now it features big-time events such as college football, the NCAA basketball tournament and prime-time NFL games.

The network was near financial ruin in 1982, but has grown steadily ever since and last year earned an estimated $55 million.

British Open

Tony Nickson, the course historian, describes the wind, which generally blows from the northwest.

Not a very warm welcome for the best in the sport, but typical conditions for this tournament known in Britain simply as, "The Open Championship."

"What makes it tough is the wind," said Paul Azinger, the American who finished tied for second at last year's open in Muirfield, Scotland.

The wind can make an especially fierce impression over the final four holes, a finishing quartet that Nicklaus said was as tough as any on the courses around Britain where the open is played.

"When the wind is blowing strong, you can just about make No. 15 and No. 17 par 5's," he said. All of the last four holes are listed as par 4's.

Azinger held a one-shot lead going into the final round last year and lost the championship when he bogeyed the final three holes.

Faldo shot a final round of nothing but pars and finished one stroke ahead of Azinger and Australia's Rodger Davis for his first major title.

That unexpected victory underscored the European reign in golf, one that started with a Ryder Cup victory in 1985 and continued this year with Scotland's Sandy Lyle winning the Masters.

Faldo almost made it a second consecutive British success in major U.S. tournaments when he forced a playoff for the U.S. Open last month. Curtis Strange won the title on those extra 18 holes, but the victory has done little to dull European hopes of a fifth consecutive British Open victory.

"Looking at the favorites this week, I can't see beyond a European win," said Tony Jacklin, the European Ryder Cup captain and the open winner here in 1969.

Jacklin, who is playing in the tournament, admitted he might be biased in his prediction. But the feeling was shared by the oddsmakers, who installed Seve Ballesteros of Spain, Lyle and Faldo as the top three choices.

Ballesteros won the open here in 1979.

Accurate or not, biased or not, Jacklin's comments struck a nerve with many of the Americans in the field.

"It might make me think I had something to prove if I was coming down the stretch," Azinger said.

Strange would not be drawn into a debate on the merits of Jacklin's statement, but he did not share the former champion's feelings.

"I think I want to go play and let my golf clubs do the talking," he said. "That's the way it should be."

No American has won the open since Tom Watson took the last of his five titles in 1983 at Royal Birkdale. That was the 12th time in 14 years that an American had won the open.

No American has won the tournament at Royal Lytham and St. Annes since 1926, when Bobby Jones made one of the storied shots of golf from a bunker at the 17th hole and went on to victory.

That was in Jones' amateur days, so no U.S. professional ever has been a winner here. It's a mystifying streak in a sport and a tournament that Americans dominated for so long.

"I don't think there is any reason for it," Watson said. "It's a fine golf course."

McDonald's In Hospitals Sparks Medical Debate

By LINDSEY TANNER
Associated Press Writer

OAK BROOK, Ill. (AP) — McDonald's is opening restaurants in hospitals in what one doctor suggests is an invitation to a Big Mac heart attack. But a hospital spokesman argues the food "hasn't killed anyone yet."

The fast food chain has opened eight such restaurants nationwide. One more is under construction at Dayton Children's Hospital in Ohio, and four are under contract, said Steven Roth, McDonald's manager of hospital development.

Dr. Michael Goldblatt, McDonald's staff nutritionist, said the restaurants supplement hospitals' regular food services and are aimed at staff and visitors, not patients.

"Yeah, the sodium is high in some of the food, but they also have salads and salt-free french fries. It's not going to kill you. It hasn't killed anyone yet," said John Head, spokesman at Denver General Hospital, where a McDonald's opened last month.

McDonald's spokesman John Onoda said the hospital restaurants are no different than the chain's setups in museums, airports and train stations. Burger King and Wendy's also have opened restaurants in hospitals.

"McDonald's will open up where people go, where people are," he said Monday in an interview at the chain's headquarters in Oak Brook, a Chicago suburb.

"The whole idea is ridiculous," said Dr. Sidney Wolfe of the Public Citizen Health Research Group, a Washington-based consumer advocacy group.

"What better way to create new patients than to sell food which significantly increases the risk of coronary artery disease and heart attacks?" he wrote in a group newsletter in an article headlined "Big Mac (Heart) Attack."

"It is not unlike, in my view, the idea of hospitals selling cigarettes," Wolfe said Monday.

The American Hospital Association and the American Medical Association declined comment. A spokesman for American Heart Association took issue with the practice.

"We feel hospitals should provide leadership in health care," said spokesman Howard Lewis. "They're not giving the leadership with this move to McDonald's, because of the image of McDonald's and other fast food companies — the image of food that is high in cholesterol, high in fat and high in salt, which are three areas we're very concerned about."

The heart association's guidelines urge people to limit intake of fats, especially saturated fats, sodium and cholesterol.

In announcing those guidelines in 1986, Dr. W. Virgil Brown, a former chairman of the committee that drafted them, said, "Hamburgers are far and away the No. 1 cholesterol problem in the country."

"As far as quality goes, McDonald's uses the finest-quality ingredients," Goldblatt said. "Our food is really no different than the kind of food you consume at home.

"Our hamburgers contain no more than 22.5 percent fat. ... The restaurants offer food from the four food groups, even with the addition of salads," he said. "It's possible to get a very light nutritious meal as well."

Wendy's International Inc. opened a restaurant in 1985 at the Miami Valley Hospital in Dayton, Ohio, said spokeswoman Sue Willis.

First Double Liver Surgery Is Performed

By BRENDA C. COLEMAN
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — A baby boy and girl were in critical condition today following the first double liver operation in the United States, in which another infant's organ was divided between the two, hospital officials said.

The boy, 12-week-old Joseph Kovach of Geneva, Ill., is the smallest person ever to receive a liver transplant at 4.2 pounds, said University of Chicago Medical Center spokesman John Easton. The infant had open-heart surgery earlier, he said.

Joseph went back into surgery Wednesday night to fix a bleeding problem, said night administrator Camille Renella.

"His liver looked OK, but he's still in critical condition," she said. The girl, 7-month-old Jaclyn Manrose of Crystal Lake, Ill., was also in critical condition, which is considered normal after transplant surgery.

In Tuesday's operation, which lasted 12 hours, the liver of a 1-year-old Illinois youngster who died in an accident was divided between Joseph and Jaclyn, Easton said.

"It worked out well," he said. "The two segments that came from the one donated liver worked well for the two people who needed them."

Donor livers are in short supply in this country. An estimated 475 people are awaiting liver transplants, many of them children who will die without new organs.

Joseph was born with neonatal cirrhosis, a type of liver damage that exists at birth from an unknown cause, the spokesman said.

Jaclyn suffered from a hereditary defect called alpha-1-antitrypsin deficiency, a deficiency of an enzyme that can lead to hepatitis or cirrhosis, the spokesman said.

"Kovach was the more urgent of the two," he said. The operation was performed by Dr. Christoff Broelsch, professor of surgery and head of liver transplantation at the university.

Dr. Jean Emond, assistant professor of surgery, operated on the Manrose infant, Easton said.

"During the early stages of that, Broelsch separated the liver," Easton said. "While Emond was completing his operation, Broelsch did the transplant on Kovach."

Double liver transplants involving adult donors have been performed in Europe, but such an operation has not been done in the United States, he said.

Panel Weighing Health Hazards From Cosmetics

WASHINGTON (AP) — Kristie Smith says she never suffered from asthma until she was exposed to chemicals used on patrons' hair at a beauty school four years ago.

Today, the 24-year-old Portland, Ore., woman says her lung condition is so bad that a whiff of perfume can trigger a breathing attack.

"What I am really angry about is that no one told me — or anyone else in my school — that the chemicals we were using might be dangerous," Smith said in remarks prepared for delivery today at a House subcommittee hearing on unregulated cosmetics.

Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., called the hearing to investigate the safety of cosmetics, a $17 billion-a-year industry.

"We do know that cosmetic ingredients may cause cancer, birth defects, central nervous system disorders, allergic reactions and have long-term health effects," Wyden said.

The subcommittee intends to look at the occupational health problems faced by those who work with cosmetics, as well as the $17 million-a-year industry involving anti-aging and wrinkle creams, he said.

Wyden said nearly 8,000 chemicals are used in cosmetics and fragrances. Products on the market combine those chemicals in as many as 20,000 and 40,000 combinations.

Smith said she encountered trouble breathing within months of enrolling in the beauty school where she routinely gave women permanent waves and used other chemical compounds. She was diagnosed as having occupational asthma 10 months after starting school.

She said she sued the school and received a settlement.

Beth Shulman, vice president of the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, said members of the union who work in salons and beauty schools are worried about the chemicals contained in the products they handle.

Comedy Cop Caper Stars Maher

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bill Maher sometimes has trouble explaining to people that in the NBC movie "Out of Time," his co-star plays his great-grandson, and they are about the same age.

That's because in this comic adventure, the great-grandson is 21st-century policeman Channing Taylor, played by Bruce Abbott, who has traveled back in time 100 years to catch a master criminal.

Maher plays Max Taylor, Channing's great-grandfather. To people in the year 2088, Max is a legendary figure honored for pioneering scientific crime-fighting. But in 1988, Max is only a rookie and the laughingstock of the police force because his inventions haven't been perfected and often go wrong.

Unaware Channing is his great-grandson, Max teams up with him to nab the killer Markus, played by rock star Adam Ant.

"Out of Time," which NBC will televise Sunday, is a pilot for a possible midseason series, although as with all network series for next season, its schedule is uncertain because of the Writers Guild strike.

If the show does go to series, said Maher, "We plan to keep it in 1988, although we could go into the future if we get the old time machine fixed. Actually, it ran out of fuel. It takes unleaded and they only had regular."

The pilot was executive produced and directed by Emmy winner Robert Butler, who directed the pilot of "Hill Street Blues."

Maher said he was intrigued by the conflict that is central to the plot. "This guy who comes in from another time is groping around like a fish out of water. At the same time everybody's laughing at my character. Yet this guy knows that in the future I'm going to be somebody important."

The movie also stars Rebecca Schaeffer ("My Sister Sam") and Kristian Alfonso ("Days of Our Lives").

Maher, a standup comedian who has appeared on "The Tonight Show" and "Late Night with David Letterman," starred in the NBC comedy "Sara," long since canceled, but revived for a summer run.

CBS Hires ABC's David Burke As News President

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS' announcement that it would bring in an ABC news executive as president of CBS News marked the end of an era for CBS, and the acknowledgement of a new period of respectability for ABC.

ABC News Vice President David Burke will become president of CBS News on Aug. 1, the first outsider to ever hold the job. He replaces Howard Stringer, who was promoted to president of the CBS Broadcast Group, the financial heart of the network.

Burke arrived at ABC 11 years ago when Roone Arledge took over the division. At the time, it would have been unthinkable that big-shot CBS, the home of the late broadcasting great Edward R. Murrow, would look to third-place ABC for leadership.

That's one reason Burke's boss at ABC didn't exactly sound distraught when he commented on Burke's new job.

"He richly deserves this recognition, which is a compliment both to him and to ABC News. ... We all wish him the absolute best," Arledge said.

Stringer replaces Gene Jankowski, who becomes chairman of the Broadcast Group.

William S. Paley, chairman of the CBS board of directors, and Laurence A. Tisch, the company's president and chief executive officer, announced the changes in a statement Wednesday.

The changes follow a dismal prime-time season that dropped CBS into an embarrassing third in the ratings for the first time in its history.

Despite that, CBS also reported Wednesday that its second-quarter profit climbed 40 percent to a record high. The company cited higher interest income, improved operating efficiency and an increase in broadcast sales in spite of a sluggish advertising market.

But Tisch warned at a news conference that the business outlook for broadcasting this year "is somewhat uncertain" because the 19-week strike by the Writers Guild of America threatens to delay the start of the fall TV season.

The CBS news division has fairly flourished under the controversial and highly criticized layoffs and budget cuts that Tisch imposed during Stringer's tenure as president.

Despite the cutbacks, the division reclaimed the morning show time period from the entertainment division, launched a new prime-time news show, "48 Hours," and brought the "CBS Evening News" back to No. 1 in recent weeks after trailing NBC last summer and trailing ABC during the second quarter of this year.

And CBS News has three hours of prime-time news on the fall schedule — albeit partly because of the writers' strike creating the need for programming. News show writers are not covered by the guild. ABC has one prime-time news hour, NBC none.

Stringer, a former executive producer of the "CBS Evening News," has been with CBS for 23 years, the last two as president of CBS News. Jankowski has served 11 years as president of the CBS Broadcast Group.

Jankowski moved up through the CBS sales division to become head of the Broadcast Group. During his tenure, CBS' prime-time schedule fell victim to NBC's rise. Last season, Kim LeMasters replaced CBS Entertainment President Bud Grant and will be tested when his first full-season schedule gets on the air in 1988-89.

Tisch said Jankowski had told him that with the completion of this year's program development cycle, it was "an appropriate time for an orderly transition in the management of the broadcast group."

Burke, a one-time political staffer who worked for U.S. Sen. Edward Kennedy, joined ABC 11 years ago as a business and policy adviser to Arledge. Stringer said Burke has established "a remarkable record as a news executive through program innovation and management strength."

Garner Doing Well

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor James Garner is making a "remarkable" recovery following artery surgery, an operation postponed three months ago after doctors decided he needed an immediate quintuple heart bypass.

"He is doing quite well," said Ron Wise, spokesman for Cedars-Sinai Medical Center. "He is up, out of his bed, and walking around in his room."

The Emmy-winning actor entered Cedars-Sinai last Thursday. The surgery the following day was to correct an aneurysm, or weakness, in the aorta, the main artery carrying blood from the heart.

Garner, 60, starred in television's "Maverick" and "The Rockford Files," winning an Emmy for "Rockford."

'In Country'

PADUCAH, Ky. (AP) — Actor Bruce Willis, who is starring in a forthcoming movie about the return of Vietnam War veterans, met with a group of former soldiers from western Kentucky to find out "what it's like to come home."

"I lost a couple of friends in the Vietnam War," Willis, 33, said Wednesday before the start of filming "In Country."

The Bible should be compulsory reading for bridge players—it contains much sage advice. For instance, consider this morsel of wisdom: "Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's." Had West but followed that dictum, we would have had nothing to write about.

West was unnecessarily cautious in the bidding. Once his partner could raise spades, West should probably have competed with four spades. He was looking at seven or eight playing tricks in his own hand, and his partner had raised. As the cards lie, four spades has a shot if the defense makes the slightest slip.

West compounded his timidity in the bidding with a poor choice of opening lead. Reluctant to present declarer with a spade trick that he might not be able to make on his own. West chose to lead the jack of hearts. Declarer played low from dummy, East signalled encouragement with the eight and declarer held up the ace. There was still time to switch to a spade, but West thought he had struck gold.

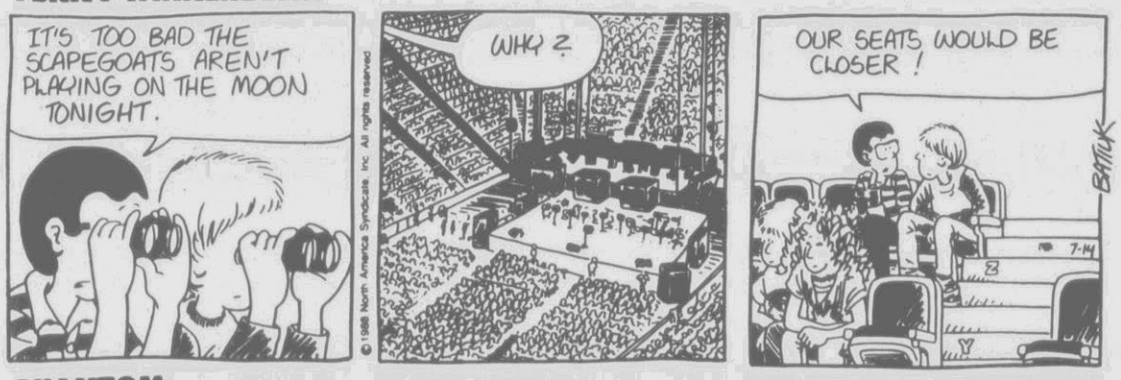

Declarer won the heart continuation with the ace and led a club to the table's king. A diamond to the ten was allowed to win, and declarer crossed back to the ace of clubs to repeat the diamond finesse. When that brought the ace from West, all was well. Declarer scooped up six club tricks, two diamond tricks and the ace of hearts.

Obviously, the contract goes down with a spade lead. Declarer does get a spade trick, but that gives him only eight tricks in toto.
