Jackson Seeks 'Partnership'

ATLANTA (AP) — Jesse Jackson staged an emotional and forceful entrance to the Democrats' heat-baked convention city Saturday, telling thousands of cheering supporters that he seeks "shared responsibility" with the party's certain nominee, Michael Dukakis.

In the cool of the downtown hotels, Dukakis' high command met privately with Jackson advisers, hoping for harmony in the fall campaign against Republican George Bush.

Dukakis, his nomination assured, worked in Boston on Massachusetts budget matters. He and ticketmate Lloyd Bentsen arrive here Sunday.

In his first Atlanta appearance — before sweltering supporters massed in Piedmont Park — Jackson said his goal was to drive Bush "back into private life." He seeks no title or party post, he said.

"I seek a partnership, I seek equity, I seek shared responsibility," he added. "I don't mind working — I'll go out in the field and pick some voters. I'll come back and bale up some voters. When I get up to the big house, I want to help count the cotton."

Jackson played down talk of convention confrontations.

"We come to Atlanta not for fireworks, but for noble works," he said.

Dukakis confidant Paul Brountas said a strategy session with Jackson aides went well, although Dukakis sources said privately they doubted the two Democratic rivals would meet before the convention opens on Monday.

"It was a very good start to a convention which I believe will lead to a very unified party that will go into a general election campaign that will beat George Bush in November," Brountas told reporters.

Jackson's seven-bus caravan rolled into town after stopping en route in Calhoun, Ga., to pick up adviser Bert Lance. Jackson was running mate, and his bus halted along busy Interstate 75 so Lance could climb aboard. Police blocked other cars from using the road, and a massive traffic jam resulted.

8 Apartments Gutted By Fire

Eight units of the Langston Park Apartment complex were destroyed in a fire Friday that caused approximately $200,000 in damages, according to Greenville fire officials.

Batallion Chief Tony Smart said Saturday that investigation is continuing into the cause and origin of the blaze.

The fire, which gutted apartments C17 through C24, was reported at 6:07 p.m. Friday, according to Smart, who said it was under control within 20 minutes after the first fire unit arrived. He said that fireman stayed at the scene until early Saturday to make sure no hot spots flared up into another blaze.

Smart said the building was equipped with smoke detectors, but that no determination had been made Saturday as to whether the devices worked properly Friday.

Smart said three residents — Tom Staple, Brian Freeze and Chris Santevsanio — were forced by the fire to jump from their second floor balconies to safety.

Smart said another resident, William Slade, was burned in the face when he tried to kick down the door to his apartment to rescue his dog. Slade was later treated and released from Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

Fire Chief Jenness Allen said Saturday the fire spread quickly because the apartments had a plywood exterior held together by glue.

Allen said all three Greenville fire stations responded to the call, and the Eastern Pines Volunteer Fire Department was later summoned as backup due to the day's intense heat.

Thousands Demonstrate In Election Protest

By JAVIER PICHARDINI
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Thousands of people rallied Saturday in the main square in front of the presidential palace, and defeated presidential candidate Cuauhtemoc Cardenas again accused the governing party of widespread fraud.

"An important part of that fraud was deficient voter registration rolls with millions of names repeated, which do not correspond to those in the various electoral districts or are the names of dead people," Cardenas told the huge crowd in Mexico City's Zocalo square.

Reporters estimated about 300,000 supporters of Cardenas' left-wing National Democratic Front attended the rally that was noisy but peaceful.

The Institutional Revolutionary Party, which has governed Mexico since 1929, won the July 6 presidential and congressional elections but with the smallest margin in decades. Its presidential candidate, Carlos Salinas de Gortari, received just over 50 percent of the vote. He will take office Dec. 1.

The governing party released a statement Saturday night saying it will "fight with the arms of the law for the full respect of the vote and the acknowledgement of the popular will" expressed in the official vote count.

In the statement, titled "Stop the Lie and Provocation," the party also said Gortari "triumphed over his opponents by an absolute majority." It noted Salinas won in 27 of Mexico's 31 states and that the party "obtained absolute majorities" in 249 of the country's 300 local electoral districts.

The statement was signed by party Chairman Jorge de la Vega, Secretary-General Humberto Lugo Gil, and three other officials.

At the rally, Cardenas also denounced the shooting of a Mexican television cameraman, saying it was "another attempt against freedom of information and expression."

"It is a violent action that seeks to intimidate the news media and foreign correspondents and photographers so they return to their countries and stop giving news about this Mexico in struggle in these post-election days," Cardenas said.

Gunmen in an automobile stopped Carlos Duenas' car on the south side of the capital early Friday and shot him in the face. Duenas, 30, who had worked during the election for U.S. Cable News Network's Telemundo program, was reported Saturday to

Party Business

By CAROLYN S. CARLSON

ATLANTA (AP) — Delegates and journalists arriving for the Democratic National Convention promptly got down to business on Saturday night — party busines, that is.

Former President Jimmy Carter threw a bash for about 500 of what he called "my old friends — and I use the word carefully — in the White House press corps."

Former Carter White House officials, including press secretary Jody Powell, dispensed political wisdom as the journalists gathered round in the crowded, hot room.

Outside, several dozen T-shirt clad demonstrators gathered outside the Carter Center to protest in an ongoing dispute over a proposed road leading to the facility.

Musician Stephen Stills, clad in a conservative grey double-breasted suit, white shirt and a bright fuschia tie, chatted with Carter sons Jeff and

Joyner New ECU Trustees Leader

(Related photograph on A-6)

Greenville businessman Max Ray Joyner was elected chairman of the East Carolina University Board of Trustees at a meeting Friday that saw trustees increase fines for those violating the school's traffic regulations and adopt a new policy on drug abuse.

And sources close to the board said trustees, in an executive session, voted to name James Hallock, associate dean for All Childrens Hospital for the College of Medicine at St. Petersburg, Fla., to replace retiring ECU Medical School Dean William Laupus.

Joyner, who was appointed to the board by Gov. Jim Martin in mid-1985, replaces Tom Bennett of Winston-Salem, who said when elected chairman in 1987 that he would serve only one term.

James Maynard of Raleigh was named vice chairman, while Sandra Babb of Raleigh was elected secretary.

Lawrence Murphy, president of the ECU Student Government Association, took the oath of office as a member of the board as Friday's session began.

Hallock attended the board's executive session, but ECU officials would not say whether he was the board's choice to replace Laupus, who has headed the medical school since 1975.

Joyner, during the regular board meeting, suggested that trustees might take action on a replacement for Laupus during an executive session. But he said any action would require final approval by the University of North Carolina Board of Governors, which is scheduled to meet in Chapel Hill on July 29.

A Patterson, N.J., native, Hallock received his medical degree from Georgetown University and completed his residency in Philadelphia before spending two years in the U.S. Air Force. He began his association with the University of South Florida as a medical college assistant instructor and has been associate dean since 1987.

Trustees, following the recommendations of the school's parking and traffic committee and the board's executive committee, voted to increase fines for violating the university's traffic regulations. Action by the board increased $2 fines to $5 for such things as overtime parking and parking with a valid permit in the wrong zone, while some $5 fines — for such things as freshman parking violations, littering, parking outside permitted areas — were raised to $10.

The fine for having an unregistered vehicle on campus was increased from $10 to $20, and a new penalty — for illegally parking in a private lot — was established, with a $15 fine.

The new drug policy, described as "consistent with the University of North Carolina policy" by board member Roy Flood of Murfreesboro, is intended to "prevent drug abuse through a strong educational effort; encourage and facilitate the use of counseling services and rehabilitation programs by those members of the academic community who require their assistance in stopping drug abuse; and Discipline appropriately those ... who engage in illegal drug-related behaviors."

While saying the university "will conduct a strong educational program" aimed at preventing drug abuse, and shall provide information about drug counseling and rehabilitation to those who "voluntarily avail themselves," the policy promises that "any member of the university community" who violates the law who violates the law will be subject to "prosecution and punishment by the civil authorities and to disciplinary proceedings by the university."

Penalties provided by the police range from suspension from enrollment or from employment to expulsion or discharge.

In other action Friday, the board be in critical but stable condition.

Marco Antonio Carrasco, a cameraman who was with Duenas, said the gunmen stole the victim's watch and shoes. Investigators described the assault as a common robbery.

Cardenas claimed the attack was aimed at journalists in general "so that they do not denounce any more violations of the law."

On Wednesday, a gunman shot and killed Romay Gonzalez Reyes, a 32-year-old journalist in the city of Comitan near the border with Guatemala.

Gonzalez, director of the local newspaper El Mundo, was working in his office when he was hit by eight bullets. The killer escaped.

The Thursday afternoon edition of the Mexico City daily Excelsior said Gonzalez "was popular for his defense of social and popular causes, which probably were the source of the attack."

Cardenas, accusing the governing party of fraud, said: "While being taken to district electoral committees, packages of ballots were opened, their contents were altered. On the one hand votes in favor of the official party were introduced and our votes on the other hand were removed.

"Many of these (ballots) were later found floating in rivers, in garbage dumps, in ravines, and others were simply strewn in the streets."

By official count, Salinas de Gortari won the presidential election with 50.36 percent of the vote, while Cardenas was second with 31.12 percent.

Manuel J. Clouthier, a rancher and candidate of the conservative National Action Party, had 17.07 percent.

Parties Start

Chip, nursed a beer and relaxed before a performance at a media bash for 9,000 at at the Georgia World Congress Center.

"It's a little disorganized, as usual," Stills said. "I'm going to play a little by myself and there might be a band. I don't know."

Dozens of brunches, lunches, dinners, receptions and dances were on tap for the 5,000 delegates and 13,000 journalists as they arrived in Atlanta this weekend for the four-day convention, which starts Monday.

Many got their parties in early.

On Friday night, Walter Mondale relaxed with foreign dignitaries, Georgia Sen. Sam Nunn laughed at political jokes, and about 10,000 volunteer workers jammed Stone Mountain Park for a pre-convention picnic.

Mondale, the Democrats' 1984 presidential nominee, hosted a reception at the Carter Presidential Center Friday night for about 350 diplomats and foreign parliamentary leaders attending the National Democratic Institute's crash course in democracy.

Mondale joked that the dignitaries soon would be "experts on that unique institution called the Democratic National Convention."

"And when you become experts," he told them, "you can write a book and I promise to buy it. I would like to know what the heck we're doing here half the time."

Mondale, a member of the Minnesota delegation to the convention, said this one was "kind of a relief" for him.

"I've been going to these conventions for years," he told one partygoer, "and I've always had something to do that was dangerous — getting Hubert Humphrey elected or running for president."

Although Mondale remains the titular head of the party until it nominates a new presidential candidate on Wednesday, he lamented his diminished clout as an ex-office holder.

"I used to take care that the Minnesota delegation had a good seat," he groused. "Now, we're back there near Americus, Ga., or Columbia, S.C."

Nunn was among 4,000 Georgia politicians and business leaders who listened to humorist Mark Russell lampoon the Democrats at a big show Friday night.

But Nunn missed the joke Russell told during rehearsal, referring to early speculation that the Senate Armed Services Committee chairman might be Michael Dukakis' vice presidential choice.

"Nunn was going to be vice president and secretary of defense at the same time," Russell marveled. "Half of him was going to be ignorant of what the other half was doing."

In the biggest pre-convention party, thousands of young volunteers crowded into Stone Mountain Park in suburban Atlanta Friday night to feast on barbeque, listen to rock 'n' roll bands and watch a laser show play across the granite carving of Confederate heroes on horseback.

Fire Destroys Units

"Yesterday (Friday), as hot as it was, it just takes its toll on the firemen," Allen said. "If it had been a cool day, we would have had plenty of personnel."

Smart said the department had no chance at saving the building by the time the fire was reported. "We were playing catch up from the very beginning since the fire was through the roof when we arrived," he said.

He said the first priority for the firefighters was insuring the safety of neighboring buildings, and that the D apartment complex was only scorched by the blaze.

The complex is owned by K.B. Patel of Greenville.

Safety Decision Questioned

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House subcommittee has asked the head of the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration to respond to a published report that she vetoed a staff recommendation for a federal safety standard on the rollover of sport utility vehicles.

The request was made in a letter to NHTSA Administrator Diane Steed from Reps. Thomas Luken, D-Ohio, and John Dingell, D-Mich.

The lawmakers asked for "all internal letters, notes, memoranda, studies, etc." connected with her decision to reject a petition to set safety standards for the Jeep-like vehicles and recall those that fail to meet the standards.

The lawmakers cited a Wall Street Journal report of May 23 which said that according to internal agency documents, Ms. Steed last summer vetoed a recommendation from four major NHTSA departments to establish such a standard.

A NHTSA spokesman said there was no one at the agency immediately available to respond to the lawmakers' comments.

Since 1984, NHTSA's regulations have required a special label to be placed on all utility vehicles warning of possible rollovers following sharp turns or abrupt maneuvers. And last April, the agency announced it was issuing a consumer information pamphlet about special precautions drivers of the on- and off-road vehicles should take.

"A warning label and a pamphlet may not be enough," said Luken, chairman of the House Energy and Commerce transportation subcommittee.

Fonda Epic

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Actress Jane Fonda says her latest movie "Gringo Viejo" is an epic that "has everything."

The movie, inspired by Carlos Fuentes' book about the lives of two North Americans who find themselves in Mexico in 1913 during the Mexican Revolution, is directed by Luis Puenzo, who also directed the Oscar-winning Argentine film "The Official Story."

Refinery Fires

TORRANCE, Calif. (AP) — An explosion and fire at a Mobil Oil refinery killed one man and injured two Friday just hours after a flash fire in another part of the plant injured five other people, officials said.

The two fires were not believed to be related, and both involved employees from private companies contracted by Mobil Oil, said Fire Chief Denny Haas.

"They were different companies, with different processes in different parts of the plant," said Haas.

Shortly before 10 a.m., a flash fire injured five men from an outside contractor who were working on the refinery's sewage system, said Haas.

Jackson Tells Supporters He Wants A Partnership With Dukakis

In a 45-minute speech in the heat of a Southern evening, Jackson prodded his supporters, "Don't surrender your dreams."

"I was born in the slums and yet my name will go in nomination because the slums were not born in me ... and they were not born in you," he told the faithful.

He said that when his name goes into nomination Wednesday night in the Democratic presidential roll call, "it means Harvard and Yale don't have a lock on the White House. It means (black colleges) Morehouse and Spellman stand a chance."

Aides to Jackson and Dukakis bid to defuse tensions before the convention opens. "We want Rev. Jackson campaigning" for the ticket this fall, said Susan Estrich, Dukakis' campaign manager.

"My sense is that Rev. Jackson and his staff and his supporters are very much interested in being included," she said in an interview. "We're reaching out. Our view is that the inclusion of the Rev. Jackson in the campaign is important."

"Better late than never" Jackson said of the unity talks.

In a rally in Chattanooga, he expressed interest in revamping the Democratic National Committee and hinted at replacing its chairman, Paul Kirk — normally a prerogative of the convention winner.

Estrich declined to provide specifics on the talks, and Jackson's side wasn't saying much, either. Sources said the two sides had made progress toward a unity platform even if some issues remained unsettled.

Delegates already were arriving by the planeload, greeted by heat, humidity and hospitality.

The convention hall — cramped by any reasonable standard — was nearly ready for the assemblage of delegates, alternates and journalists, although painters were still at work on the podium where Dukakis and Bentsen will stand next week to accept their prizes.

Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, who will place Dukakis' name in nomination next Wednesday night, rehearsed his speech in a private room beneath the podium.

Estrich, heading up the advance troops here, said Democrats are recruiting top talent from the world of commercial advertising to work with political media experts, a practice Republicans have pioneered.

She said one of those recruited to help Dukakis is Ed McCabe, creator of the Frank Perdue slogan, "It takes a tough man to make a tender chicken."

Dukakis will use the four-day celebration of his candidacy to dramatize his economic theme by going beyond the customary convention appearances to campaign among local residents — at a factory gate and elsewhere.

"That will be the central issue of this campaign, an economic future that creates good jobs in every part of this country," Dukakis said in a pre-convention interview with the Associated Press.

Vice President George Bush was fishing in Wyoming with his pal and adviser, Treasury Secretary Jim Baker. Bush is to return to politicking on Wednesday, the night Dukakis is formally nominated. President Reagan carried the Republican attack, using his weekly radio address to charge that Democrats would take the nation "back to the failed policies of the past."

For all the Democratic sweet talk, convention officials disclosed that Jackson forces had picked up the petitions needed to challenge Texas Sen. Bentsen's nomination for vice president next Thursday night.

However, Jackson told his followers not to focus too much on the vice presidential issue.

"Don't start talking about what's going to happen Thursday. Today is Saturday," he said at the rally on his arrival in Atlanta. "We ... must negotiate and debate and deliberate."

"It's not about concessions or conquests. It's about common ground," he added.

Former President Jimmy Carter toured the Omni hall and said that while he will speak Monday night, he does not expect to play a major role. He expressed the hopes of Democratic party elders everywhere when he said he expects Jackson will campaign hard for the Democratic ticket this fall. "The inevitability is that they will work out any differences," said the man who won the White House a dozen years ago. "We'll come out of here with a united party."

But that wasn't yet the case.

Jackson backed off a little in earlier hints that he would lead a challenge to Bentsen's nomination — but only a little.

"I'm not putting my name into nomination, but if it were to happen it certainly is an option that would be within the rules of the convention. It would not be breaking precedent," he said late Friday night ABC's Nightline.

If Bush was taking a few days off, Reagan was working to offset the image Democrats want to portray.

Board Wants Help For Child Abusers To Be Mandatory

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

The Pitt County Board of Social Services wants to have the "leverage" to require parents or guardians to seek mental or psychiatric treatment when those people abuse or neglect their children.

During its regular monthly meeting Friday, the board instructed its attorney, Ed Harper, to search for ways to require caretakers who abuse and neglect children to participate in treatment.

Harper and the administrative staff of the department explained to the board that such treatment usually is only a condition for custody of the children in juvenile court cases, or is required through some civil court action.

"We see the need for tapping resources, but we have no leverage" to require clients to participate in treatment, Peggy Chandler, the department's chief of services, said.

The number of children served in the child abuse and neglect program increased by more than 100 from 1986-87 to 1987-88, Ms. Chandler said. The number of reports reported increased from 446 to 552 during the same time.

The bulk of the sources of the reports are school and medical personnel in addition to relatives, nonrelatives and other human resources agencies, she said.

Ms. Chandler told the board the department can expect to serve from 113 to 117 children this fiscal year in the day care program.

In other matters, Sam Carson of Bethel was elected to serve as chairman of the board, replacing Burney L. Tucker. Randy Horton of Greenville replaced Carson as vice chairman. Board member Lillian Bradley of Farmville was sworn in for a new term of office ending June 30, 1991.

All commodities are expected in the quarterly distribution Aug. 10 and Aug. 11, said Debbie Ryals, eligibility director. "But, we won't be certain until the unloading of trucks," she said.

The department is looking for a site for conducting its Low Income Energy Assistance Program, Ms. Ryals said. Interviewing for temporary help to run the program will begin in late August, while applications for the program will be accepted in October and November.

Her staff also will begin assessing the impact the federal government's Catastrophic Health Plan will have on the department and on the state's Medicaid program, she said. The information is scheduled to be shared with the board during the August meeting.

Ed Garrison, director of the department, told the board that Pitt County Commissioners have hired a consulting firm to evaluate space conditions and necessities of county offices.

Currently, the Department of Social Services is violating state privacy regulations required of its department because of cramped office conditions not conducive to privacy, he said.

The department needs 17 additional offices to meet state requirements, Garrison said. Failure to meet the requirements within 12 to 18 months could result in the state withholding administrative reimbursements to the county.

The consulting firm is scheduled to make a report to the Commissioners by Labor Day, Garrison said.

There are four vacancies in the department, Garrison said. Positions include those for social workers, eligibility specialists and clerk-typists.

He said no injuries occurred during the fire but a neighboring trailer was damaged when the fire caused a typewriter to disintegrate, spraying parts. (Reflector Photo by Cliff Hollis)

Sioux Indians Seeking Return Of Stone Quarry

By MELISSA JORDAN
Associated Press Writer

PIPESTONE, Minn. (AP) — When she was young, Stella Pretty Sounding Flute heard her elders tell of traveling many miles to the Great Red Pipestone Quarry to dig the soft, red stone they used to carve their sacred pipes.

The Dakota Sioux woman journeyed on foot to the quarry Saturday with about 50 other Sioux seeking return of the site from the government and protesting the sale of items made from the stone they believe represents the blood of their ancestors.

"I cry because I'm seeing the sacred pipe at rummage sales," said Pretty Sounding Flute, who lives in Aberdeen, S.D. "They say it's just a trinket."

The march by the Indians Saturday was the last leg of a monthlong, 450-mile walk across South Dakota to the quarry in this city of nearly 4,900, eight miles from the South Dakota border.

The marchers, singing as they arrived Saturday night, said they would set up camp and remain two or three days at the quarry, now the Pipestone National Monument.

The Sioux group says the sale of souvenir pipes, jewelry and other items made of pipestone is a desecration.

Other Indians who make their living from the quarry contend that trading pipestone is a traditional practice that does not violate Indian religion.

The controversy over the quarry stirs deep emotions in the Indian people and involves issues of Indian land rights, cultural assimilation and religious freedom.

Members of the Yankton Sioux Tribe believe the quarry was illegally taken from them more than 60 years ago by the government. The tribe's council has asked the government and the Pipestone Indian Shrine Association, a non-profit organization that helps market pipestone items, to give up the quarry.

The council contends that 1858 and 1892 treaties with the government guaranteed Yankton Sioux rights to the quarry.

The site was sold to the government in the late 1920s, but the Yankton Sioux claim the sale was invalid. Congress designated the site a national monument in 1937.

Herbert T. Hoover, a University of South Dakota history professor, said the sale of the land, legal or not, should not affect the Yankton Sioux's rights to the pipestone, the only major outcropping of its kind in the country.

"The tribe may have given up the land, but you have to understand that, economically, that tribe had hit rock bottom in the 1920s," he said. "You can talk about legality all you want, but you have to talk about morality, too."

Hoover said the government payment for the land was nearly $329,000 or about $150 to each member of the tribe.

Vince Halvorson, superintendent of the monument, said the National Park Service has no plans to relinquish the monument or curtail sale of pipestone items.

"I think it's strictly an issue between the two (Indian) factions," Halvorson said. "As long as there's nothing illegal, and it's a practice that's been going on since we've been here, we'll keep on doing what we're doing."

The shrine association also has maintained distance from the dispute. Betty Zorich, the group's business manager, declined comment on the issue.

Halvorson said about 130,000 people visit the monument each year and about 100 people, including craftspeople, earn a living directly from the quarry. Only Indians can dig at the quarry.

Indians involved in the walk said they don't want put other Indians out of work.

"We do not want to close the quarries down," said Wesley Hare Jr., a Yankton Sioux. "We'd like to see that if they take this stone, they use it for what it is meant for. That is the basis of our tribe's spirituality."

Weyerhaeuser Mill Will Create Jobs

Approximately 100 new jobs will be created in the area next year when Weyerhaeuser begins operating a sawmill currently under construction approximately five miles south of Ayden, according to a company spokesman.

Located on State Road 1900, the Greenville Lumber Facility is planned to open in July of 1989, said Terry Tait, company sales and marketing manager.

Tait said the mill, which is approximately 10 percent complete, will produce southern pine lumber.

He said work at the new facility will be divided into work cells or teams with a team leader responsible for operating equipment and coordinating the efforts of his team.

He said approximately 12 team leaders will be hired in early fall with an additional 80-90 positions to be filled in the spring of 1989.

According to Tait, the company will start accepting applications for trainees and team leader positions Monday at the Employment Security Commission.

Weyerhaeuser has been in the forestry business since 1900. The company grows and harvests timber and manufactures, distributes, and sells various lumber products in the United States, Canada, Europe, and the Far East.

British Tempers Flare

LONDON (AP) — About 100 vacationers angry over a daylong flight delay Saturday blocked a departure lounge and threatened to hold a runway sit-in at an airport near the capital.

The travelers protested after a plane, already delayed 23 hours after it was scheduled to take them to Palma on the Spanish island of Majorca, was reassigned to other passengers.

The outbreak occurred at Luton Airport about 30 miles northwest of London. Kim Petherick, a nurse who was waiting for another flight, said everyone seemed to lose their temper at once.

"A group of men got through the security and were going to lie in front of the planes," she told Independent Radio News. "They were going to stop the planes taking off until they got off to Palma."

A deputy airport manager, Geoff Smith, said the mob blocked other travelers for only "about five seconds." Police who were called to the scene said order had been restored by the time they arrived.

The angry passengers were put on another plane to Palma an hour later, Smith said.

Thousands of tourists have been forced to camp out at British airports for the past week as flights to sunny southern Europe have been delayed up to 24 hours.

Already busy summer flight schedules were thrown into turmoil by a Greek air traffic controllers' strike, which ended Wednesday. But French and Spanish controllers have also threatened summer job action.

Britain's Civil Aviation Authority said travelers can expect similar problems for summers to come until improvements are made to outdated air traffic control systems throughout Europe.

Official Says Rally Speakers Urge End To Strike

By ANDREW KATELL
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — A regional official said speakers at a rally in Armenia's capital called Saturday for an end to a crippling two-week strike over demands for control of an Armenian-dominated enclave in a neighboring Soviet republic.

The speakers told supporters to go back to work Monday, the day the executive committee of the Soviet Parliament is to meet, said an employee of the Armenian republic's Ministry of Internal Affairs in a telephone interview from the capital Yerevan.

Many Armenians have said they expect the body to take up their demands and the official news agency Tass made reference to the issue Saturday in announcing the meeting.

The ministry official, who spoke anonymously, said the rally took place late Saturday outside a Yerevan institute for the study of ancient Armenian manuscripts, but he said he did not know how many people attended and he gave no other details.

An employee of the Armenia Hotel in Yerevan said she heard from people who attended the rally that the strike was cancelled. However, she declined to give other details or her name.

Armenians, who are predominantly Christian, launched a general strike July 4 to press their demand that Nagorno-Karabakh be taken away from the mostly Moslem Republic of Azerbaijan, to which it was annexed in 1923.

Armenians in Nagorno-Karabakh itself, a mountainous enclave about the size of Delaware, have also been striking since May 23. More than three-quarters of the enclave's population of 160,000 is Armenian.

Tass has acknowledged the strike has taken an economic toll. It said Saturday that Armenia's construction industry lost $32 million as more than 25,000 construction workers struck daily.

The republic's Communist Party Central Committee on Friday said party and government officials had not been able to "display civic courage to openly oppose anti-social actions and gave in to the blackmailers and instigators," Tass reported

The body singled out the republic's Ministry of Internal Affairs, which oversees police work, and prosecutor's office for taking "a conciliatory stand toward violators of law and order," Tass said.

Daily protest rallies in Yerevan have developed "illegal trends" involving "appeals of incitement," the committee was quoted as saying.

Two Armenian party officials were ousted for supporting the strike, the news agency said.

In Stepanakert, the main city of Nagorno-Karabakh, a 52-year-old Armenian housewife said residents were relying largely on locally produced food because transport routes from Azerbaijan had been cut off.

"Azerbaijanis have stopped selling food at the market," she said by telephone, speaking on condition of anonymity.

She said Armenians were not working in the region. "People are sitting home. No factories are working. They're just waiting to see what Moscow does," said the woman.

Foreign reporters have been prevented from entering the region to report on the unrest.

In a dispatch from Stepanakert, Tass also gave the first official confirmation that the Presidium, or executive committee, of the Supreme Soviet, or parliament, would meet Monday.

"The situation in the Nagorno-Karabakh Autonomous Region is becoming more tense with the approach of July 18, the day when a meeting of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. is to be held," the news agency reported.

However, it did not explicitly give the topic of the session.

The Nagorno-Karabakh legislature voted Tuesday to secede from Azerbaijan and join Armenia, but the Azerbaijan Parliament declared the move illegal.

Central Communist Party officials in Moscow in February ruled out a transfer of Nagorno-Karabakh.

YOUTH TOPS CAREER

NEW YORK (AP) — Thomas Garth, a former Boys Club member himself, has become the 11th national director in the 82-year history of Boys Clubs of America. His elevation to the top administrative post in the Boys Club-Boys & Girls Club Movement comes after more than 30 years as a professional youth worker.

Myerson Enters A Guilty Plea

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. (AP) — Former Miss America and television personality Bess Myerson pleaded guilty to shoplifting, seven weeks after her arrest at a department store.

Miss Myerson, 64, was arrested by South Williamsport Police Chief Charles Smith May 27 after leaving the Hills store with $44 in merchandise. She said at the time, and reiterated in a statement handed to reporters Friday that she was only "leaving the store to lock (her) car" and planned to return and "pay for the merchandise."

Her attorney delivered the signed guilty plea to the retail theft charge Friday morning to the office of District Justice John M. McDermott.

"I represent that I make this plea knowingly, voluntarily and intelligently. I plead guilty," the form signed by Miss Myerson said.

McDermott fined Myerson $100, plus $48.50 court costs.

"That's the normal fine and costs for a first offense," he said. "It's over with."

According to published reports, Miss Myerson was also arrested for shoplifting in London in the early 1970s.

However, Assistant District Attorney Kenneth Osokow said that based on the state crimes code, the London offense cannot be considered a prior retail theft arrest here because it occurred prior to the adoption of the new state shoplifting law.

The fine was paid by Miss Myerson's attorney when he delivered the guilty plea. The $150 bail she posted at the time of her arrest is being returned to the New York City resident, who faces federal charges for allegedly trying to influence the judge handling the divorce of her reputed lover, Carl A. Capasso.

Capasso is serving a sentence at nearby Allenwood Federal Prison Camp for tax evasion.

Myerson reigned as Miss America in 1945 and most recently served as New York City cultural affairs commissioner.

Trustees Approve Capital 'Wish List'

East Carolina University's trustees Friday gave approval to a list of capital projects totaling more than $157.9 million to be submitted to the University of North Carolina Board of Governors for funding consideration in the 1989-1991 benumb.

The "wish list" from the medical school alone totals some $66.68 million, including, among other things: $11 million for land acquisition; $6.63 million for an addition to the school's vivarium; $6.83 million for a companion structure for the biotechnology building; $3.15 million for a technical services facility; $2.59 million for expansion of the regional rehabilitation center at Pitt County Memorial Hospital, and $1.82 for an expansion of the health sciences library.

Other medical school requests include: $11.38 million (self-liquidating) for an outpatient center; $8.32 million in non-state appropriated funds for a medical communications center; $7.81 million in non-state money for expansion of the radiation oncology center; $5.71 million for completion of the biotechnology laboratory building, and $88,500 for a wellness-health center.

The $71 million-plus wish list for ECU's main east campus lists: $24.41 million for a 163,580-square-foot addition to Joyner Library; $1.32 million for campus grounds lighting, elevators in five buildings, renovation to two classroom buildings and new air conditioning chillers for three classroom facilities; $5.39 million for a new administration building; $4.17 million for Memorial Gymnasium renovation, and $2.81 million to add a third floor to the Home Economics-Nursing Building.

Among other items on the list: $1.21 million for improvements to the steam plant; $1.57 million to renovate the Graham Building; $1.48 million for renovations to the north tower of the biology building; $1.15 million for a warehouse; $3.25 million for an automated energy management system, and $796,000 for renovation work at the Messick theatre arts complex.

Non-prioritized items on the list approved by the trustees include some $11 million for land acquisition, $3.88 million (self liquidating) for renovations and addition to the student health center, and $15.06 million for a new student recreation-physical education center.

N.C. Democrats Hope Dukakis, Jackson Can Solve Differences

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — Members of North Carolina's 95-member delegation to the Democratic National Convention began arriving Saturday with their fingers crossed, hoping for a rapprochement between Michael Dukakis and Jesse Jackson.

"I expect, I'm optimistic, that all the differences will be worked out and we'll have a unified ticket, a unified party and leave Atlanta feeling very good about ourselves," state party chairman Jim Van Hecke said before departing.

But state Rep. Dan Blue, D-Wake, state chairman of Jackson's campaign, said the success of fence-mending efforts would depend on whether Dukakis comes forward with "something substantive and tangible" to convince Jackson he and his supporters will have a meaningful role in his campaign.

"Dukakis is going to be the nominee and he's got certain prerogatives," Blue said. "But this is a democracy and you have to bring together a whole coalition to be successful. Everybody has to be a full participant."

The North Carolina group consists of 34 delegates committed to Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore, 31 to Jackson and 17 to Dukakis, based on results of the state's March 8 primary results. There also are seven members of the Democratic National Committee, and six U.S. House representatives, all of whom are uncommitted.

Van Hecke warned earlier this month that an acrimonious convention could be disastrous for the Democratic ticket in North Carolina, the only Southern state with a gubernatorial race this year.

Republicans have won the state's governorship only twice — in 1972 and 1984. Both years, they rode the coattails of GOP presidential nominees who won in landslides.

Relations between Dukakis and Jackson deteriorated last week, when Dukakis chose Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen as his running mate and failed to notify Jackson before reporters did. Dukakis said he tried to reach Jackson earlier but failed.

Leaders of North Carolina's delegation agreed it was important to heal the rift. But in interviews Friday before leaving for Atlanta, they differed on the approach Dukakis should take.

Blue said Dukakis had to demonstrate his commitment to blacks, feminists and left-of-center whites who comprise Jackson's constituency.

"The shabby way the decision was announced says there still isn't respect for the effort Jesse put forth ... and for his supporters," Blue said.

But former Gov. Jim Hunt, whose challenge of Republican Sen. Jesse Helms was engulfed in the 1984 GOP tide, said courting liberals might harm Dukakis' prospects for victory.

"The key for Dukakis is to appeal to the middle-of-the-road, mainstream Democrats and mainstream America," said Hunt. "And if he gets away from that to appease Jesse Jackson or anybody else, he's not going to be president of the United States."

Hunt was dubbed a "Mondale liberal" by Helms television commercials in 1984, when Walter Mondale lost to Reagan. Since then, Hunt, who may seek a rematch with Helms in 1990, has championed political moderation within the Democratic Party.

He angered Jackson supporters by endorsing Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore Jr. for president, as did Sen. Terry Sanford, D-N.C.

Ken Spaulding, a black former state representative from Durham who is co-chairman of Dukakis' state campaign, said he understood Jackson's resentment and that supporters of other candidates should be sensitive to his desire to have a meaningful role.

"He has been involved in this campaign for over four years," Spaulding said. "It is unrealistic for armchair philosophers to sit back and criticize him for doing no more than (Gary) Hart did when Mondale ran."

Spaulding and Blue said they wanted to take part in the rapprochement process, especially within the state delegation, and would urge their colleagues to have conciliatory attitudes.

"What does Kenny Rogers say — you've got to know when to hold 'em and know when to fold 'em," Blue said. "That's pretty good legal advice and pretty good political advice: Jesse's matured; he knows what the ultimate prize is."

The delegation will meet as a group each day of the convention, which begins Monday and ends Thursday. The North Carolinians also will attend the evening floor sessions.

Jordan, the delegation chairman, will seek a high profile although his request to address the convention was denied because of insufficient time. A Jordan fund-raiser is scheduled for Monday afternoon at a downtown office building.

Marine Gets Prison For Indecent Acts

PARRIS ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — A former Marine drill instructor who pleaded guilty to commiting indecent acts with other women was sentenced Friday by a military judge to a year in prison and a dishonorable discharge.

Sgt. Cheryl Jameson of Napa, Calif., also was convicted of failure to obey an order and will be reduced in rank to private and stripped of all pay and allowances. She could have received up to 22 years in prison.

Ms. Jameson, 27, pleaded guilty Thursday to committing indecent acts with a fellow drill instructor and a private, but the defense was successful in having charges of sodomy and obstruction of justice against her dropped.

In a related development, another female sergeant has been charged with sodomy, indecent acts, obstruction of justice and failure to obey an order, a base spokesman said.

Sgt. Glenda Jones, 29, of Raleigh, N.C., was charged in connection with an ongoing homosexuality investigation at the depot. That investigation has already resulted in charges against Ms. Jameson and four other female Marines.

One of the women, Cpl. Barbara Baum, 23, of Mishawaka, Ind., was sentenced June 10 to a year in prison and dishonorably discharged following her two-day court-martial.

Two other women were discharged but not court-martialed.

In addition, Navy Petty Officer 3rd Class Terry L. Knox, 25, has been charged with perjury in connection with the testimony she gave during the investigation, and faces an Article 32 hearing, similar to a civilian grand jury.

Ms. Jones has been suspended as a drill instructor and is scheduled to appear Monday at an Article 32 hearing. She could face a court-martial.

During Thursday's proceedings against Ms. Jameson, attorneys haggled for more than an hour over the legal definition of sodomy before the charge was thrown out. The charge carries a sentence of five years.

Ms. Jameson, a Marine for nine years, was found guilty of committing indecent acts and fraternizing with a female corporal during a trip to Savannah, Ga., and Knoxville, Tenn., in July 1987.

Both women admitted developing a friendship while the corporal was still a recruit under Ms. Jameson's guidance and said they planned the trip during two casual conversations that took place while the recruit was still in training.

Ms. Jameson also pleaded guilty to an additional charge of engaging in indecent acts with drill instructor Staff Sgt. Bonnie Ferguson, 37, of Atlanta while they lived together from July 1987 to January 1988.

Ms. Ferguson appeared at joint Article 32 hearing with Ms. Jameson in March and faces a number of charges including indecent acts. A decision in her case is still pending.

Parents, Children Set For Classes

RALEIGH (AP) — About 180 parents and children will attend classes together this fall at four North Carolina sites as pioneers in a program that unites families in a quest for literacy.

"Parents with low levels of literacy tend to have children who develop low levels of literacy who in turn become parents," said Robert E. Stoltz, director of educational policies for the Southern Regional Education Board in Atlanta. "This is an effort to reduce, curtail, break that cycle."

The board, a 15-state compact for education, is administering a $700,000 grant from the William R. Kenan Jr. Charitable Trust in Chapel Hill. It will create schools for parents who have not finished high school and their 3- and 4-year-old children at two sites in Louisville, Ky., and four in North Carolina.

William Friday, executive director of the trust and former president of University of North Caroiina president, said the trust was backing the yearlong experimental schools because they attack illiteracy on two fronts.

While reducing the risk of failing school for disadvantaged children, the schools also educate the parents, he said in a telephone interview with the News & Observer of Raleigh.

The North Carolina sites, each of which will serve 15 children and their parents, will be in elementary schools in Fayetteville, Henderson, Wilmington and an undetermined site in Madison County.

Children and their parents will attend classes together for three days a week. An early-childhood education specialist and an aide will teach the preschoolers how to follow directions, organize shapes, identify colors and other skills that will put them on even footing with their peers when they begin kindergarten.

Meanwhile, an adult-education specialist provided by local community colleges will help parents complete their high school education. Parents also will be taught how to find jobs and teach their children.

The two schools in Louisville began serving students in March, and children and their parents already have made significant progress, said Sharon K. Darling, project director and designer of the program.

After three months, none of the 20 parents in the Louisville program had dropped out. One completed her high school education, and several are developing job prospects for the first time in their lives, Ms. Darling said in a telephone interview from Louisville.

Tests showed that all the children had progressed toward mastering skills they will need for school, she said. The project was so successful that a state human resources agency has provided a grant to add two more sites.

Retiring Heart Surgeon Recalls 'Tough Early Days'

ASHEVILLE (AP) — One of the pioneers of open heart surgery at Asheville's VA Medical Center remembers when every heart operation at the hospital was uncertain.

The anesthesia was difficult to administer, the tools were primitive and with no intensive care unit, recovery was just a long shot.

"It was tough in those early days," said Dr. Timothy Takaro, who was on hand for the first heart operation performed at the hospital in 1959. "The mortality rate was high and I can remember sweating out the recovery of each and every patient."

He had no idea that nearly 30 years later, the operation that many physicians learned by practicing on dogs would be one of the most common procedures in the country, he said.

"Cardiac surgery was a natural offshoot of the thoracic surgery and work with tuberculosis we were doing here at the hospital," said Takaro, who retired Friday as the medical center's chief of staff.

"The need was there — there were veteran patients needing the heart surgery to live and there were very few centers in the country that were offering it. We felt it was the logical direction for the hospital to take."

Born in Budapest, Hungary, Takaro attended New York University College of Medicine and came to Asheville VA Medical Center for a residency in thoracic surgery in 1951. He returned to the hospital in 1957 after three years in India with the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions. He was chief of surgical service before becoming chief of staff in 1983.

In the early stages of the Asheville VA heart program, only one or two cardiac operations were performed each week, Takaro said. Physicians from the hospital would make monthly treks through North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, West Virginia, Georgia and Florida, examining potential candidates for the surgery.

But it was the medical center's role in the VA Cooperative Study on Coronary Artery Surgery that began in the late 1960s that put the hospital on the map, Takaro said.

"The studies we made helped to show that some cardiac operations were not useful or effective," he said. "Thirteen other VA hospitals joined with us to do that job and it has been extremely helpful research."

In retirement, Takaro, 67, said he will continue to work on that study, which is scheduled to be closed in late 1989, and on his research into the causes and development of emphysema.

"My great interest has always been the lung," he said. "I came into cardiac surgery as sort of a second love, but I want to spend some more time researching emphysema and what can be done, outside giving up cigarettes, to slow or reverse it."

Low-Income Children Take Summer Nutrition Classes

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Some children of low-income families are attending a summer school that emphasizes the ABC's that don't get enough attention — the vitamins A, B and C — and other nutritional advice.

Chris Haines, a rising sophomore at Duke University, who is working as a summer intern for the Forsyth County Agricultural Extension Service, is the instructor.

He teaches two-hour classes for five days with a different aspect of nutrition emphasized each day. He uses the 4-H program's Expanded Foods and Nutrition Education Program for the first part of the class, then helps the students prepare food for the remainder of the day.

The program is mainly for children ages 8 to 12, but it is open to younger and older students.

The course gives the students experience in the kitchen preparing nutritious foods, Haines said. It also stresses the importance of eating a variety of good foods.

While the students are learning important nutrition facts, Haines also wants them to enjoy it.

The students prepare such foods as taco pizza, small pancakes and burritos, fruit salad. And then they eat the finished product.

"The major goal of the whole thing, which I think is the most important thing of it all, is to have a lot of fun," Haines said in a recent interview with the Winston-Salem Journal at the Salvation Army Girls Camp, where he was teaching. "They've had a whole year of being in class."

Before he took the job, Haines feared he might not be able to control the children or capture their interest, he said. But that has not been the case.

"The kids have always been responsive; they've always enjoyed everything," he said. "I've had no problem in getting their interest in what I've been trying to teach them.

"Really there's nothing hard about it. The kids make it easy. It's amazing how great they are."

Researcher Feels Pollution Good Fuel For Red Seaweed

BY ALISON FELDMAN
Wilmington Morning Star
An AP Member Exchange Feature

WILMINGTON (AP) — Each spring, dark red seaweed has appeared on beaches in southeastern North Carolina.

Usually it dies and is blown out to sea before the first wave of tourist arrives.

This year it has not only extended its stay, but has multiplied at a greater rate than usual. The reason, one researcher says, is pollution.

From Bogue Inlet southward, shrimpers, surfers and swimmers have been pestered since early June by the feathery seaweed that wraps itself around everything from fishnets to the Velcro on surfboard leashes. The seaweed is harmless to fish and humans, but can leave purplish stains on the skin when handled at length.

Swimmers say it feels like fingers lightly touching their skin.

The seaweed, whose scientific name is Polysiphonia, has appeared on beaches in southeastern North Carolina for about eight years, said Donald F. "Fritz" Kapraun, a biology professor at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

He believes the seaweed, which grows in the Mediterranean Sea, is carried to the North Atlantic, where it attaches to a raft of brown seaweed that breaks off and floats south.

Once blown inland, it grows near islands, then breaks off and washes ashore. It is usually gone by May.

The reddish pest has grown in greater quantities and stayed longer this year because of an increasingly polluted marine environment, said Kapraun, who has been studying this species of Polysiphonia for six years.

"The bottoms of the bays and estuaries used to be giant grass beds," he said in a recent interview. "But because of the dredging and development activities there's not much left. This is like weeds. It takes hold and spreads because there's nothing there to stop it."

He compared the seaweed's proliferaton to an empty lot where no other plants or wildlife exist to slow the spread of weeds.

Kapraun has seen no Polysiphonia beds that appear to be growing, he said, but the seaweed has not been washed out to sea because southeasterly winds have kept it near the shore.

"Winds out of the northwest would take it right away," he said. "We haven't had that so far."

Meanwhile, visitors, residents and fishermen have been plagued by the mossy seaweed.

"Lots of tourists complain about it," said Kiesha Tyner, assistant manager of Bert's Surf Shop at Carolina Beach. "But I don't think it's stopping anyone from swimming."

Ms. Tyner said the seaweed is ruining the leashes that tie surfers' ankles to their surfboards. The seaweed strands get hopelessly tangled in the Velcro used to fasten the leash around the ankle.

"They can't get it out because it's so fibrous," she said.

The seaweed is thicker in some areas than others. Near Masonboro Island it is about a foot deep, said Kapraun. A fish dealer described one spot near Carolina Beach as "a carpet."

While beachgoers have been picking off the seaweed or trying to swim around it, shrimpers and other fishermen aren't so fortunate.

"It's affecting the number of catches," said Charles Liverman, manager of Gulf-Atlantic Seafood at Sneads Ferry. "It fills the nets up and they're catching mostly moss. They have to take real short drags and keep pulling them back up to shake them out."

Study Suggests Charity Givers Look For Something In Return

GREENSBORO (AP) — A recent study by The Foundation of Greater Greensboro confirms many North Carolina donors believe giving is an investment that pays personal dividends.

Nick Williamson, an associate professor of business at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, conducted the study. The results will be used in producing the foundation's promotional brochures.

Williamson sent questionnaires to 107 foundation donors. Fifty-five were returned, for a response rate of 51.4 percent.

The confidence level in the study's results ranges from one chance in 50 to one chance in 10,000 the findings could be random rather than representative of the whole group, the Greensboro News & Record reported.

"The results clearly suggest that visibility gained through foundation involvement pays dividends over time," the report says.

"They want to get something back in return," Williamson explained.

Last year, Americans gave a record $93.6 billion to charities.

"Most people need to feel a part of something larger than themselves," said Andrew Bell, assistant director of the Winston-Salem Foundation, whose assets total about $45 million. "Giving gives them that sense of belonging to a group, that extends their sense of who they are and what they stand for."

Non-profit organizations that depend on charitable giving for their survival make it their business to know what motivates people to contribute. Their success in attracting donations indirectly affects the whole community, whose quality of life may depend heavily on the benevolence of philanthropists.

Maurice J. Koury, president of Carolina Hosiery Mills Inc. in Burlington, can't hide his pride for his alma mater. That pride has compelled him to give more than $1 million to the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, where a natatorium — an indoor swimming pool — has been named in his honor.

"In my opinion, it's one of the top universities in America," Koury said. "We want to keep it there."

Koury also gives to his church, Elon College and to a local orphanage.

"I like to spread it around," he said.

By far the most popular type of charitable giving takes the form of funds named after the giver or in memory of a donor's relative. All but one of the more than 50 funds of The Foundation of Greater Greensboro, whose net worth is $2.5 million, fit this category.

"You don't have to be a giant philanthropist to be a philanthropist," said David Atwood, the foundation's retiring executive director. "But if you want to put a name on it, you have to put $1,000 in the pot."

Bell of Winston-Salem agrees named funds are the most popular.

"Most funds carry somebody's name," he said. "It may be some body they want to memorialize. That's a means of perpetuating or adding a sense of permanence to someone's existence."

Few things are more permanent than buildings. Some donors prefer to spend their money on bricks and mortar rather than on programs.

H. Curt Hege Sr. of Winston-Salem admits he is pleased the Guilford College Library will be re named in his family's honor. In the spring, Hege and his wife, Patricia, gave $2 million to Guilford College for a major library expansion and to establish an endowed professorship.

"I would have given to them either way," Hege said in a recent telephone interview. "But it's nice. The library there will be named for my family."

Guilford College has always been important to the Heges. Their four children went to school there. So did H. Curt Sr., president of Shields Inc., a wall and ceiling systems construction company based in Winston-Salem.

"They did a whole lot for me — they gave me a football scholarship and a job" as a student, Hege said. "And I just wanted to give a little back."

Feeling part of a larger community is a big motivator. A majority of the respondents strongly agreed: "It is important for me to know the impact of my gifts to the foundation on the lives of individuals."

Other statements on the questionnaire produced strong agreement:

"Before I made a gift to the foundation, I determined exactly who was responsible for managing the foundation's funds."

"Knowing who else gives to the foundation gives me greater faith that monies given will be wisely spent."

About 30 percent of the donors who said they inherited wealth believe their inheritance carries social responsibility — an impetus to their giving.

Contrary to some people's perceptions, tax benefits do not appear to be a primary motivator in charitable giving. Less than one-third of the respondents said the 1987 Tax Act — which eliminated charitable deductions for the 70-80 percent of taxpayers who do not itemize deductions — would cause them to decrease their future donations.

Expert Crab Picker Teaches The Touch

WANCHESE, N.C. (AP) — Josephine Spencer has been making a living at her craft for 35 of her 52 years, and now she's teaching the art of crab picking to others.

"I love to pick crabs," Spencer says, her brown eyes bright and never even looking down to see what her hands are doing. Less than a minute and she's on to the next crab.

Spencer is an expert at picking crabs.

"You don't get rich," she says, before adding quickly, "You don't stay broke once you learn how to pick 'em."

She teaches workers to pick crabs in this out-of-the-way corner of Roanoke Island. The job comes with a title — crab picking instructor for the College of the Albemarle, The Charlotte Observer reported Saturday.

"They put a timer on me one time long ago," she brags. "I used to be able to pick 75 pounds a day. I slowed down since I got older. Everything I do is fast. Everybody says that, even about my housework. What I have to do, I go ahead and do it."

Spencer grew up in Engelhard on Pamlico Sound, the site of most of the state's 40 crab houses. Crabs are big business on the North Carolina coast — fishermen caught more than 31.8 million pounds last year, valued on the docks at more than $7 million. It's such a good business, the college hired Spencer to train more workers.

Spencer began picking at age 17, the year after she married, and worked in crab houses in Engelhard and nearby Mattamuskeet. She went to St. Elmo's Crab Co. in Wanchese earlier this year, primarily to teach others there the art of picking crabs. There is an art.

The toughest part is making sure to pick only the meat — not the bones and other debris that often make their way into containers.

"If the crab is cut deep enough, you always get good clean meat. That's what I tell them," Spencer says. "I check out every pound. Oh my gracious, I like to work with the meat. I like to place the meat, fix it up nice

.... Not that I couldn't quit. I'm an ordained minister ...."

Spencer works with the same 4-inch stainless steel knife she's used for the past four years — another knife wouldn't do. She sits on a chair in front of a long stainless steel table. At 5 feet 3, she's too short to reach the floor of the concrete block building, so she rests her feet on a spare block.

Lisa Barnett, 19, works across the table. Her face contorts in frustration as she slowly picks at a crab.

"I don't like this," Barnett admits. "I don't know, maybe I could, maybe I couldn't. I can only do 10 pounds a day."

"Oh my gracious," Spencer says. "You can do more than 10 pounds, Lisa."

"I can. But I don't."

Patty Jarvis, co-owner of Mattamuskeet Seafood south of Wanchese, says she expects 20 pounds from each worker in an eight-hour day. Most pickers get paid by the pound — $1.25 to $1.50. If they're good, it generally works out better than the $3.35 minimum wage.

Donald Caroon, owner of St. Elmo's Crab Co., where Spencer teaches, pays his trainees by the hour instead of the pound. They go through about 2,000 pounds of crab meat a day, compared with 10,000 at Mattamuskeet Seafood.

"It's slow going," Spencer says. "But they'll catch on."

Freddie Barnes, 37, shovels a load of crabs on the table. Then he stares at Spencer. "I just like to sit here and watch her," he says. "She can put on a good show.

By the end of the day, she says, she's as smelly as the crabs she picks.

"Your whole skin smells. You really got to take a good bath. My husband, he can't stand the smell," sahd said.

"Now, crab picking has become a part of me," Spencer says. "I don't eat many. I been working in seafood so long crabs isn't one of my favorites. I just like to pick 'em."

Orion Construction

RALEIGH (AP) — Orion Air Inc. in Raleigh is considering plans to build a $20 million heavy maintenance hangar in Lake Charles, La., a move that likely would mean Orion would cancel plans it proposed in February to build a hangar at the Raleigh-Durham International Airport.

Orion officials met this week in Raleigh with Lake Charles City officials and Chennault Airpark representatives. Orion officials could not be reached for comment about when it might decide where to build the hangar. It was not clear whether the company was close to a deal with Lake Charles.

The company, the largest U.S. operator of cargo planes for the small package industry, is considering building the hangar at several airports other than RDU, said Charles H. Bell, Orion's executive vice president. The hangar would employ up to 700 people.

In addition to the Lake Charles proposal, Orion has proposed building the hangar in Greensboro; Dayton, Ohio; and Beaumont, Texas.

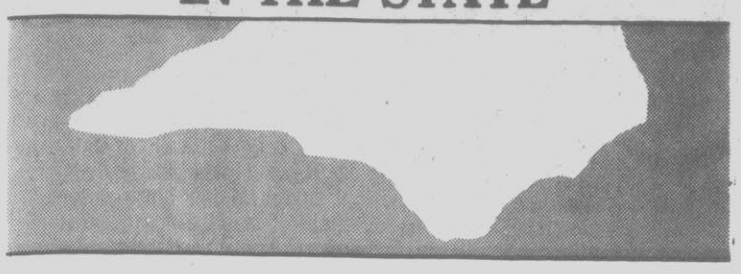
IN THE STATE



Jobs In Danger?

RALEIGH (AP) — An ammunition port described as the largest in the free world may sacrifice workers and its safety record if a new company takes over the loading docks there, an aide to a North Carolina congressman says.

Local workers, who hold 450 jobs at the docks, could lose them if a Florida company bids successfully on a military contract, Rep. Charlie Rose's legislative assistant, Keith Pitts, told The News and Observer of Raleigh this week.

"Safety is the main concern," Pitts said. "We've had workers down there that have been doing an excellent job for 30 years and all the sudden, we've got some new people coming in who don't have an established record loading munitions."

Members of the International Longshoreman's Association have worked the docks at the Military Ocean Terminal at Sunny Point, located near Southport, since 1956, said Willie Sloan, president of ILA Local 1426.

"We have a record ... we can brag on," he said.

If a company that does not use ILA labor gets the contract, Sloan said, 450 men would be out of work. The contract is to be awarded in October.

Sunny Point is a 16,300-acre site, about 30 miles south of Wilmington, from which ammunition needed by U.S. and NATO forces throughout the world is shipped.

Traffic Fatalities

RALEIGH (AP) — Two people, including a 6-year-old passenger, have died in weekend traffic accidents on North Carolina roads, the state Highway Patrol reported Saturday.

Jason Dewain Jordan, 6, of Mt. Mourne, was killed at 6:55 p.m. Friday when a car in which he was riding struck a car it was trying to pass on U.S. 21, 1½ miles west of Mooresville in Iredell County, troopers said.

On Saturday, George Waylon Johnson, 38, of Four Oaks, died at 12:30 a.m. when his speeding car ran off a state road 5 miles northeast of Benson in Johnston County and struck a tree.

So far this year, 744 people have died in North Carolina traffic wrecks, compared with 789 fatalities reported at this same time last year.

Turtle Snagged

RALEIGH (AP) — Scientists have found a dying loggerhead turtle that might have been saved by new federal procedures North Carolina shrimpers are trying to understand.

The 300-pound female loggerhead, one of a group of sea turtles threatened with extinction, was found Friday on Bald Head Island after it apparently had been caught in the net of a shrimp boat trawling nearby and then tossed overboard, said William Brooks, a naturalists with the Bald Head Conservancy.

It might have survived if the shrimp net had had a $200 to $400 piece of equipment required by federal law called a turtle excluding device which easily releases the creature from the nets, Brooks said.

Kidding Around

EDEN, N.C. (AP) — The Rockingham County Sheriff's Department took seriously a kidnapping report of a 14-year-old Eden girl, but there were signs the abduction was staged by the teen-ager, Sheriff C.D. Vernon says.

"The stuff in the house didn't look knocked over, it looked like it had been laid over," Vernon said. "There's a difference in knocking over a dried flower arrangement and laying one over. Plus, we've had some previous problems with this girl and her family."

Vernon said the department also learned the girl had called a local cab company asking a cab be sent to her house to take her to the airport. In addition, family members searching the house realized her passport was missing.

About three hours after authorities were notified of the kidnapping Wednesday, the girl was found at Piedmont Triad International Airport at Greensboro. She had a ticket to New York, purchased with her own money.

Vernon declined to release the girl's name because she is a juvenile.

New Publisher

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Frank McComas, publisher and president of The Bradenton, Fla., Herald, was named publisher of the State-Record Co. on Friday, succeeding Ben R. Morris, who will retire Aug. 31 after 16 years as publisher of The State.

McComas, 42, will join The State Sept. 1, becoming the first publisher who has not previously been associated with the company or a member of The State's founding family.

He also has worked at The Charlotte Observer and The Miami Herald. Those publications and The State are among more than 30 newspapers owned by Knight-Ridder Inc.

Flight Problems

MORRISVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A Florida pilot and his family escaped injury Saturday when their single-engine plane ran off a runway, and a USAir flight was aborted when smoke was spotted in the cockpit, Raleigh-Durham International Airport officials said.

Vernon Krause of Vero Beach, Fla., his wife and their three children were coming to the Raleigh area to visit friends and family when the incident occurred at 11:19 a.m., said R.C. Shackelford, deputy airport director.

Krause was attempting to land the Cessna 182, owned by Elk Aircraft Inc. of Florida, when it ran off the runway into a grassy area, Shackelford said. There was no fire, but the nose gear was folded back up underneath the airplane, he added.

Meanwhile, at about 3 p.m. Saturday, a USAir flight bound for Greenville-Spartanburg, S.C., was aborted and its 45 passengers were placed on other flights when the crew noticed smoke in the cockpit, Shackelford said.

He said the flight had been ready for departure when the incident occurred.

Dukakis, Jackson Camps Get Down To Business

By EVANS WITT
AP Political Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — Top aides to Democratic nominee-in-waiting Michael Dukakis and rival Jesse Jackson stepped up the negotiating pace Saturday to try to ease the strains that threaten to disrupt the party's national convention.

A face-to-face meeting of the candidates seemed likely on Sunday, the day before the convention opens.

Dukakis campaign chairman Paul Brountas and Jackson convention manager Ron Brown were to kick off the latest round of meetings with a private afternoon talk as Jackson pulled into town to end a three-day bus trip.

"Communication is the first way to get things back on track," Brown said before the meeting, adding "There have been intensive communications in the last 24 or 36 hours."

The negotiations were complicated by Jackson's continuing hints that his name might be put into nomination for vice president — as a protest to Dukakis' choice of Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen and the way the Dukakis campaign handled the selection and announcement.

Jackson staffers picked up the petition form to qualify him for the Thursday night roll call on vice president — as well petitions to make certain he is on the Wednesday roll call for the presidential nomination he has sought for the past two years.

The candidate himself sent contradictory signals on the possibility of continuing his fight with Dukakis beyond Wednesday night of the convention.

"I'm not putting my name into nomination, but if it were to happen it certainly is an option that would be within the rules of the convention. It would not be breaking precedent," Jackson said on ABC News' "Nightline." "We should be expected to use every rule that we can to advance our cause and expand our Democratic Party."

Jackson and Dukakis agreed in a telephone conversation Friday that their top aides would meet.

Brown said his meeting with Brountas would probably lead to a small group of top aides from each camp meeting late Saturday night.

Dukakis doesn't arrive in Atlanta until Sunday afternoon, and aides said a meeting that night could be crucial.

"The hope is the two candidates get together tomorrow," Brown said.

Over and over again, Jackson has talked of a partnership with Dukakis for the fall and beyond, although what such a partnership would be has not been made clear.

"There has been no discussion of the role I would play" in the fall campaign, Jackson said on his bus as he traveled from Nashville, Tenn., toward the convention on Saturday, adding he wants jobs for his supporters.

"I would never seek a job or a title or a position or a salary. There are those who do need jobs and who can do them well. ... That would not be an effective role for me to play, but I want to play a role," he said.

Brown said the talks will include "a complete definition and understanding of what that partnership means in specific terms."

He denied published reports that Jackson had asked the Dukakis campaign to provide a plane and other support for his efforts to register new voters and to get his mostly black supporters out to vote for the Democratic ticket in the general election.

"We're talking about a role of significance in the campaign. If folks expect you to go out and campaign 20 hours a day seven days a week, obviously you need the wherewithal to accomplish that and the staffing to acomplish that, but a story saying Jesse wants a plane is just silly," Brown said.

Jackson prepared for this latest round of talks with a high-level session of his own Friday night in Nashville.

In addition to Brown, the meeting was attended by former New Mexico Gov. Toney Anaya, Rep. Charles Rangel of New York and former Gary, Ind., mayor Richard Hatcher.

Contrasting Views

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan used his regular Saturday radio address to attack Democrats gathering in Atlanta for their convention, warning against a return to the liberal policies that "nearly wrecked our economy the last time the Democrats were in charge."

Sen. Tom Harkin of Iowa, however, speaking for the Democrats, said they are out to "repair the damage" that the Reagan administration has done.

Reagan, speaking from the Oval Office at the White House, charged that Democratic leaders, who open their convention on Monday, "want to take us back to the failed policies of the past."

"With the campaign season upon us, I thought I might take a few minutes this afternoon to put this whole issue into proper perspective," the president said.

"Getting the government off your backs and out of your pockets has worked," he told his listeners.

By contrast, he said, "The liberal view ... holds that it's the job of government to intervene in the economy and to intervene constantly — taxing, regulating, spending more and more of your dollars."

"And, yes, it's this liberal view that nearly wrecked our economy the last time the Democrats were in charge."

"We face an historic opportunity," the president said. "It's the chance to remove the fear of the boom-and-bust cycle once and for all, replacing it with consistent low-tax, limited-government policies."

He said he believes many rank-and-file delegates in Atlanta agree with him but "sadly, the leaders in charge of the convention will want to take America back to the failed policies of the past."

He urged convention watchers to ask: "Is the Democratic Party and its nominee for president going to keep taxes low and government growth under control? Or are they going to go back to the very policies that could wreck our economy yet again?"

Harkin, in the weekly response for the Democrats, said the message from Atlanta will be: "Let's repair the damage and bring integrity and competence back to government."

"Today the greatest threat to our national security is not military — it's economic. Yet, that's where this administration has left us the weakest," Harkin said.

"The captain's been asleep at the wheel, and his first mate doesn't seem to ever be on deck when decisions are made," Harkin said in a reference to Vice President George Bush, the apparent Republican presidential nominee.

"Eight years ago, this administration promised to get government off our backs," the Iowa senator said. "Instead, they've put the government right in the hip pocket of big business and Pentagon consultants. It's time we put government back on the side of ordinary families in this country."

'Tricky Business'

By JENNIFER DIXON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican John Tower, experienced at running against a Democrat nominated simultaneously for the Senate and the vice presidency, says Lloyd Bentsen's Texas campaign threatens to become "a bottomless pit people throw money in" — and a war chest for the Democrats' national ticket.

"I think it's going to really be a tight rope for him (Bentsen) to walk," says Tower, a former senator from Texas. "It's going to be pretty tricky business."

Tower, now an adviser to all-but-certain Republican presidential nominee George Bush, says his camp has put lawyers to work on sifting through campaign finance regulations.

They will be quick to pounce on any violations of federal election law that Bentsen makes as he mounts simultaneous campaigns for vice president and re-election to the Senate, Tower said in an interview Friday.

Republicans worry that Bentsen's Senate campaign could become "a bottomless pit people throw money in and use for the presidential campaign," he said.

Before being selected by Michael Dukakis as his running mate, Bentsen had raised more than $5 million for his re-election bid — more than any other senator.

He got more money from political action committees than any Senate candidate seeking election this year — $1.46 million. By contrast, Dukakis refuses to accept PAC funds.

Tower had firsthand experience with a Texas law that allows a candidate to campaign simultaneously for both offices — as Bentsen will do this fall.

FBI Watched Morse

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The late Sen. Wayne Morse and his supporters were the targets of FBI spying because of his opposition to the Vietnam War, a newspaper reported in Sunday editions.

The Sunday Oregonian reported that President Lyndon Johnson ordered the FBI to seek information that could be used to embarrass Morse's supporters in Oregon and around the country.

In August 1964, the Oregon Democrat and Sen. Ernest Gruening, D-Alaska, were the only two senators to vote against the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution, which became the basis of U.S. action in Vietnam.

The Sunday Oregonian reported that soon after the Gulf of Tonkin vote, an FBI domestic intelligence specialist notified FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover of the identities of 196 people, including 38 from Oregon, who wrote letters to Morse supporting his vote.

The newspaper said its report was based on documents recently obtained by free-lance writer Mark Kirchmeier of Washington, D.C., who requested FBI records under the Freedom of Information Act.

The newspaper said the FBI also investigated Wes Michaelson, a longtime aide to Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., through the administrations of Presidents Nixon and Ford. The records show the FBI found "no derogatory information" on Michaelson, who helped Hatfield frame his anti-war policy, .

Morse, who died in 1973, represented Oregon in the Senate from 1944 through 1968. He was widely regarded as a political maverick who jealously guarded his independence. Elected as a Republican, Morse became an independent in 1952 before he registered as a Democrat in 1955.

Leaky Shuttle May Face 2-Month Launch Delay

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Technicians located what they believe is the source of a faint gas leak in a space shuttle fuel tank Saturday, and said repairs may delay the first post-Challenger flight up to two months.

"They're not giving up fixing it on the pad; but they don't know what's caused the leak yet, and I don't think that's encouraging," said Chuck Hollinshead, director of public affairs at the Kennedy Space Center.

Hollinshead said that after a two-day search, workers using sophisticated equipment believed they pinpointed the source of the leak at a reaction control system (RCS) oxidizer tank near the top of a metal pod that contains an engine used to help maneuver the shuttle in orbit.

"They will work tonight and tomorrow to find the exact spot and to be sure there isn't more than one leak," he said. He said shuttle managers would meet Sunday to consider a course of action.

The suspect RCS oxidizer tank is in a difficult-to-reach location, Hollinshead said. If Discovery has to be removed from the launch pad and taken to a processing facility for repairs, Hollinshead said, September's planned launching with a five-man crew could be delayed as much as two months.

The RCS is a series of small jet thrusters that astronauts use to steer the shuttle in space.

Hollinshead said engineers were assessing the possibility of removing the engine pod on the launch pad, a never-attempted process considered extremely difficult.

Launch pad personnel detected a faint odor of nitrogen tetroxide gas late Thursday, just days after it was pumped into the engine's tanks.

The gas, which is toxic in heavy concentrations, serves as an oxidizer to ignite the steering engine's fuel, monomethyl hydrazine, in oxygen-poor space.

NASA spokeswoman Lisa Malone said the leaked gas measurement was only 3 to 4 parts per million, considered very small. She said the impact on the schedule "will depend on where the leak is and how severe it is."

If Discovery were taken off the pad, it would be taken to a building where it would be disconnected from its solid fuel booster rockets and external fuel tank.

Then the spaceship would be towed to a facility where there is equipment to remove the engine pod, which then would be taken to another building for repair.

It was not certain what effect the leak would have on a critical 20-second test-firing of Discovery's three main engines on the launch pad. That test is scheduled for July 26. The main engines are separate from the steering engines.

Discovery is being readied for the first shuttle mission since Challenger exploded 73 seconds after liftoff on Jan. 28, 1986, killing the crew of seven.

The flight originally was scheduled for last February, but has been postponed five times because of technical problems.

At the Morton Thiokol Inc. plant in Utah there was good news for the shuttle program. Engineers there completed their inspection of a solid fuel booster rocket damaged last week when a joint was mistakenly overpressurized.

NASA's John Thomas, head of the booster rocket redesign effort, reported that the damage was minimal and that the 149-foot booster was being reassembled Saturday for a test-firing about Aug. 20.

The test, the fifth full-scale firing of the redesigned rocket, is considered essential before Discovery can be committed to flight. A faulty booster joint triggered the Challenger explosion.

Judge Blocks Inmate Isolation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prison officials cannot isolate inmates to prevent their radical ideas from spreading to other prisoners, according to a federal court ruling.

U.S. District Judge Barrington Parker ordered authorities at the Federal Correctional Institution in Lexington, Ky., to transfer into the general prison population two women who were held in an isolation unit because of their political beliefs.

"Defendants may be concerned that the two plaintiffs will persuade inmates within the general prison population to share their political views but those fears cannot be accommodated at the expense of constitutional rights," Parker wrote in his ruling.

He said "the designation of prisoners solely for their subversive statements and thoughts is the type of overreaction that the Supreme Court has repeatedly warned against."

Parker barred the Bureau of Prisons from "considering a prisoner's past political association or personal political beliefs" in deciding on transfers within federal prisons.

The ruling came in a lawsuit filed by the American Civil Liberties Union's National Prison Project, the Center for Constitutional Rights, the People's Law Office and private attorneys challenging prison regulations.

It was filed on behalf of three women held in the high-security isolation unit at the Kentucky prison. Lawyers for the women said they had been treated so inhumanely that they might be permanently psychologically harmed.

Parker ordered the Bureau of Prisons to rewrite its regulations and to transfer Silvia Baraldini and Susan Rosenberg, alleged members of leftist political groups, into the general prison population.

He added: "The treatment of the plaintiffs has skirted elemental standards of human decency. The exaggerated security, small group isolation and staff harassment serve to constantly undermine the inmates' morale."

A third prisoner represented in the lawsuit, Sylvia Brown, had not been placed in the isolation unit because of her political beliefs and was not covered by transfer order, said the ACLU's Alexa Freeman.

Adjoa Aiyetoro, lead counsel for the prisoners, said the ruling was a "tremendous victory."

"The decision vindicates the rights of prisoners to hold beliefs based on conscience," she said.

John C. Cleary, who represented the Bureau of Prisons in the lawsuit, declined to comment on the ruling. At a hearing before Parker last month, Cleary argued that the women were transferred into the unit because they posed "a risk of external assault on the prison." He said there was no medical evidence to support claims they had suffered psychological harm.

The bureau has announced plans to close the Lexington unit and transfer prisoners to a new high security unit at Marianna, Fla. Parker warned the bureau to be careful that conditions at the new unit "do not lead to wanton and unnecessary inflictions of psychological pain."

Rosenberg is serving a 58-year term for possessing weapons and explosives in connection with a 1985 police raid in New Jersey and is one of seven recently indicted in the 1983 bombing of the U.S. Capitol.

No Water Shortage For These Workers

By CLIFF EDWARDS
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — While much of the Midwest wakes up to drought, Nick Dolas' first view in the morning is water — everywhere.

Dolas works three miles out in Lake Michigan at a city water intake station, making sure nothing stops the flow of fresh water to 6 million people.

He is part of two six-man crews that work 12-hour shifts on two pairs of steel-and-concrete stations that serve Chicago and 94 suburbs.

The four cribs, as they are called, take in most of the city's water and send it to two purification plants, which have a combined pumping capacity of 3 billion gallons a day. Two other cribs serve as backups.

"I think we take in a billion gallons of water a day," said the 48-year-old Dolas, who has worked for five years at the Carter Harrison-William E. Dever cribs. "And that's not even at a hundred percent capacity."

The crew members, called crib keepers, work a week at a time, cleaning 30-foot screens to keep algae and fish out of the intake tanks in summer and breaking up ice in the winter — sometimes with dynamite.

It can be a lonely job.

"Some people just aren't equipped for isolation," said Jim Martin, the Water Department's head crib keeper, who worked in the lake for 11 years. "You're so close to the city, yet so far away."

Martin recalled sending a boat to retrieve a man who quit after just two days. "He had a girlfriend, and I guess that he was a little worried about leaving her alone for so long," Martin said.

Crib keepers, who are paid $33,320 a year, live in round two-or three-story dormitories built over the cribs, with most of the comforts of home.

The living quarters at the Harrison-Dever cribs have a kitchen with microwave, coffee-maker and neatly set table for six with a linen tablecloth. Each man has a seperate bedroom.

A city tug visits weekly to bring food and fresh water and cart off garbage. The workers spend their off-time reading, watching TV and fishing.

Occasionally they have played lifesaver.

"I think the most memorable time was when we got this knock on our door late at night," said Dolas. "These two guys' boat had turned over. They were in the water three (or) four hours, and they swam over here."

The Edward F. Dunne-68th Street cribs also serve as a weather monitoring station. Workers report wind direction, air speed and wave heights to O'Hare International Airport and the National Weather Service.

Crib keepers say the worst part of their jobs is that they, unlike most people, can only go so far when they want to get away from it all.

"It's like Alcatraz," said Tim Welch, who at 30 is the youngest man on the cribs. "You can't go anywhere — you can't even run to the local store."

Some other things also are hard to come by in Lake Michigan.

"I wonder if they brought a paper out with them," asked 25-year crib veteran Raymond Perkins as the weekly supply boat pulled up recently. "For some reason we don't get home delivery."

Iowa Tornadoes Damage 10,000 Homes; Guard Watches For Looters

By SCOTT SONNER
Associated Press Writer

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa (AP) — National Guardsmen sealed off half the city to protect against looting Saturday as crews cleared trees and other debris strewn here and in Omaha, Neb., by tornadoes that wiped out entire blocks.

An estimated 10,000 homes were damaged and more than 100 families forced from houses destroyed or severely damaged by the twisters that slammed into the two Missouri River cities Friday.

At least 64 people suffered injuries, mostly minor, when wind gusting to 92 mph downed power lines, uprooted trees and ripped roofs off houses in a two-mile stretch along Interstate 29 near the river.

"It's a major disaster. There are complete blocks gone," said Pottawattie County Supervisor Larry Allen, who replaced the courthouse roof at 1 a.m. Saturday.

"It's an absolute miracle no one is dead," Council Bluffs City Councilman Stanley Grote said.

Omaha Public Power District and Iowa Power and Light Co. said an estimated 80,000 customers were without power Saturday in the two cities, down from 100,000 during the night.

Scattered looting was reported. It was not immediately known if any arrests were made.

Trees up to 48 inches in diameter snapped in Council Bluffs and others as tall as 100 feet were uprooted at an Omaha golf course. The twisters also started fires and overturned rail cars in a two-mile stretch in Council Bluffs.

"Vietnam. That's about it," Guardsman Carl Jennings said in describing the damage. "There's a lot of splintered wood, buildings destroyed, panic."

A tornado that hit Omaha in 1975 killed three people and wiped out homes and businesses over a 2,000-block area.

"More than half of the houses in town have damage that will cause them to file insurance claims, whether it's broken windows, trees on roofs or siding damaged," said Allen.

No dollar estimate of the damage was immediately available.

More than 170 uniformed officers, including 60 Iowa Guardsmen, helped protect against looting and reroute traffic. More than 50 Red Cross volunteers worked in shifts to distribute free food and drinks through the night.

Guardsmen sealed off a 700-block area of Council Bluffs, issuing permits to residents who lived and to anyone else with reason to be there, but otherwise allowing no one in. Some looting was reported early Saturday.

"Most of it has been oddball stuff. One guy had a cigarette machine in the back of his pickup. The worst problem has been the tourists," said Guardsman Les Hayes. Business owenrs guarded their closed storefronts.

Bulldozers cleared trees from streets, and cranes loaned by the Union Pacific Railroad were used to straighten metal supports on toppled signs and billboards.

Bonnie Nusser was with her three children when the tornado hit destroyed Council Bluffs home.

"We were in the hallway upstairs and the house just started sliding. I just grabbed for the kids and held on," she said. The family was safe under a pile of rubble in the back yard.

Allen said the clean-up was hampered because of streets blocked by fallen trees, some 100 to 150 years old.

"It will be days and days and days before we get it all cleared," he said. "The second-biggest problem has been the sightseers, the rubber-neckers out there."

Lightning and high wind knocked at least one radio station off the air, and the Council Bluffs Nonpareil was forced to use Omaha World-Herald presses to put out its Saturday edition because of the power outage in Council Bluffs.

Jack Kellogg, a Red Cross volunteer, said Saturday that shelters were set up but "no one stayed at them last night. It appears they are finding someplace to go. Neighbors are taking care of each other."

Elsewhere, high wind from thunderstorms damaged a few buildings Friday in Hattiesburg and Jackson, Miss. No injuries were reported.

Severe thunderstorms in Florida dumped up to four inches of rain and spawned a tornado Friday in Pinellas County, forecasters and police said. The twister tore the roofs off two mobile homes and slightly damaged six others, but no injuries were reported, said sheriff's spokesman Lt. John H. Bocchichio.

TREE PROBLEMS — Harold Goecker said he watched from the picture window as this large tree fell on the roof of his home Friday night in Council Bluffs, Iowa. "It just kinda fell real slow, but it left a good sized hole above the bedroom," said Goecker. A tornado ripped into this western Iowa community, downing trees and damaging homes. (AP Laserphoto)

Salt Water Stalls

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The salt water that has pushed upstream in the Mississippi River from the Gulf of Mexico, threatening drinking water and industrial needs, retreated a half mile, officials said.

However, the leading edge of the wedge-shaped mass of salty water will push forward once more if the flow of the drought-diminished river falls gain, said a spokesman for the Army Corps of Engineers.

Because less fresh water is flowing down the river, denser salt water is displacing the river water and flowing upstream, close to the river bottom.

The corps is building a dirt dam 32 miles downstream from New Orleans' Canal Street to retard the progress of the salt water while allowing fresh water to flow over the top. The underwater dike will be 25 feet high.

A combination of the dam and natural occurrences, including an increase in water flow, could be causing the salt water to retreat, the corps said.

Lawmen Face Murder Trial

TYLER, Texas (AP) — A judge Saturday ruled that three white lawmen acquitted of civil rights violations in the beating death of a black inmate can be tried on murder charges in the slaying.

State District Judge Joe Tunnell, denying a defense request to drop the murder charges, said a murder trial would not constitute double jeopardy, or prosecuting a defendant more than once for the same offense.

On Friday, a Sabine County jury with one black member acquitted Hemphill Police Chief Thomas Ladner, 41, and Sabine County deputies James "Bo" Hyde, 35, and Bill Horton, 58, of civil rights violations in the death of Loyal Garner Jr.

The 34-year-old truck driver from Florien, La., was jailed in Hemphill Christmas night on suspicion of drunken driving. Authorities said he was beaten unconscious that night. He died in a Tyler hospital two days later.

John Hannah, special prosecutor at the Sabine County trial, testified Saturday that the trial was unfair. "I have never seen a trial conducted more unfairly to produce the results that were produced," he said.

Defense attorney Haas Jeff contended the state and federal constitutions precluded prosecution of the officers on murder charges.

But the judge said the Legislature intended that prosecution under the civil rights statute not prevent prosecution on other criminal offenses. "I recall no other statute where I've read that," said Tunnell.

He set the case for trial Aug. 8.

Smith County District Attorney Jack Skeen said he would try the lawmen separately, beginning with Ladner. Tyler is about 100 miles from Hemphill.

"We're very pleased with Judge Tunnell ruling that there is not double jeopardy and we will be able to try all three defendants," said Skeen.

The Hemphill jury's verdicts Friday drew angry reactions from the East Texas town's black community.

"If there's justice for all in a free society, then it seems like there's justice for whites only in this society," said Will Smith, a preacher from the Church of Christ. "The message is to me that as black folks, we better be careful."

An inquest jury in Tyler had ruled that Garner died of head injuries. A pathologist had testified that Garner suffered severe brain hemorrhaging after apparently being struck on the head at least twice.

Corrine Garner, the victim's wife, said she was disappointed by the Hemphill verdicts, handed down after 11 hours of deliberations.

'Wrong Way' Corrigan Making Return Trip To Coast Of Ireland

By RICHARD DE ATLEY
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Imagine a brash astronaut thumbing his nose at the space agency and taking an old Mercury spacecraft all the way to the moon, then claiming it was a mistake, and you get a glimmer of Douglas "Wrong Way" Corrigan's feat 50 years ago.

"My compass froze. I guess I flew the wrong way," Corrigan claimed on July 18, 1938, after making a forbidden New York-to-Dublin flight in a used Curtiss-Robin monoplane on which he'd spent $900. Plus $90 for gas and oil.

He has steadfastly maintained he thought he was returning to his home base of Long Beach, Calif., after federal aviation authorities denied him permission to fly to Ireland.

But Corrigan, now 81 and living in Santa Ana, Calif., hinted in a telephone interview last week that his wrong-way explanation may change after he flies again to Dublin on Sunday, this time as an honored guest for three days of ceremonies commemorating his flight.

"Maybe this time over in Dublin I'll tell them another story. We'll see," he said Thursday.

Corrigan's "wrong-way" explanation sounded like pure blarney at the time —he was made a lifetime member of the Liars Club — but America and Ireland loved it.

He was the overnight guest of the U.S. ambassadors in Dublin and London. After he returned to New York by ship, with his plane in a crate, he was given a ticker-tape parade. There was even a meeting with President Franklin Roosevelt.

A movie was turned out by RKO Studios,"The Flying Irishman," starring Corrigan as himself, and there were magazine articles and an autobiography, "That's My Story." He estimated he grossed $65,000 from tours and speeches.

As punishment for his journey, the Bureau of Air Commerce forerunner of the Federal Aviation Administration, suspended Corrigan from flying for five days. Those five days were served while he was still aboard ship on the way home.

Whatever the true story, Corrigan had joined the ranks of his hero, Charles Lindbergh, and Wiley Post by making a solo, nonstop, single-engine crossing of the Atlantic.

He also dispelled the notion that air feats were only for millionaires and well-financed aviators.

When Corrigan was 20, he was a woodworker at Ryan Aircraft in San Diego and helped build Lindbergh's Spirit of St. Louis for the 1927 New York-to-Paris solo trans-Atlantic flight.

Corrigan got his pilot's license the next year. He bought a leather flight jacket just like Lindy's, scraped his money together and studied navigation.

He bought his monoplane for $310 in 1931, and spent an additional $590 modifying it into a long-distance machine. Before the flight to Ireland, he flew from Long Beach to New York nonstop in 27 hours on July 7-8.

Then the Bureau of Air Commerce refused to grant permission for a trans-Atlantic flight, on grounds his plane, loaded with 330 gallons of gasoline and five gallons of oil, was 55 percent too heavy for a safe flight.

Corrigan took off from New York's Floyd Bennett Field on July 17, saying he was headed for Long Beach. He landed at Dublin 28 hours and 13 minutes later, 3,150 miles from New York.

"There had been a haze near the ground and when I was 500 feet high, there was fog below the plane," Corrigan once said of his flight. "When I started to turn west I noticed the top compass was not working right, due to the liquid having leaked out. ... There was another compass down on the floor that I had set to fly a westerly course, so now I turned the plane until the parallel lines matched, and flew over the fog."

The wrong way.

He had no radio and his $1 wristwatch stopped. "The only modern instrument I had was a turn-and-bank indicator," said Corrigan, who subsisted on fig and chocolate bars and some water during his flight.

"I knew I wasn't in Long Beach when I dropped out of the overcast over Dublin," he said. "The place was greener and some of the houses had hay roofs."

Corrigan will be the guest of Aer Lingus on Sunday when the Irish airline takes him to Dublin aboard a Boeing 747.

"We offered him a first-class seat, but he said he would prefer to fly economy," said Aer Lingus spokesman Bill Maxwell in Dublin.

RIGHT WAY NOW — Douglas "Wrong Way" Corrigan stands next to a traffic sign at the Long Beach, Calif., airport during a recent interview. Corrigan, 81, got his name from a 1938 airplane flight in which he planned to fly from New York to California but landed instead in Ireland. (AP Laserphoto)

Parents See Abandoned Baby; Father Vows Custody Fight

By CATALINA ORTIZ
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The parents of a baby girl left at birth in the restroom of an airliner visited the hospitalized infant, and the father promised to fight for custody.

Christina Marie Locasto, charged with abandoning the infant after secretly giving birth Wednesday, and her husband, Louis, saw and held the baby for the first time Friday.

The parents decided to name the brown-haired, blue-eyed baby Alyssa Frances, attorneys said. Nurses at Mills Memorial Hospital in San Mateo, where the child was listed in good condition Friday, had named her Elizabeth.

"We are going to request in court Monday that the child be released to him as its father, and there are no charges against him," said Vicki Yeley, attorney for Louis Locasto, at a news conference following the visit.

But social workers, citing Mrs. Locasto's actions, said they would seek to have the baby kept out of the family's custody.

The child was found crying, swathed in bloody towels, beneath a sink on the United Airlines DC-10 on Wednesday shortly after the plane landed at San Francisco International Airport on a flight from Newark, N.J.

Investigators believe the newborn had been there for six hours, since shortly before the plane took off at Newark. Mrs. Locasto, 24, of New York City surrendered early Thursday after authorities traced her name from the passenger list.

Mrs. Locasto was charged with felony child endangerment and was released after posting $50,000 bail late Thursday.

Her husband, who was with her on the flight, was not charged. Her family was apparently unaware that she was pregnant, officials said.

Although both parents visited with the baby Friday, only the father attended the news conference. Locasto, the owner of a limousine service, did not speak, deferring to his lawyer.

Yeley noted that the family has two other daughters, ages 18 months and 6 years, and said the father is very upset. On Thursday, Mrs. Locasto's attorney, John L. Williams, described her in similar terms, saying she was "very remorseful, very distraught."

The child is currently in the custody of the San Mateo County's Children's Protective Services. A hearing is set for Monday in juvenile court to determine whether to continue the county's temporary custody; permanent custody will be decided later.

In court papers filed with the county Juvenile Court, social workers asked to retain custody for another 10 days, until a hearing to examine Mrs. Locasto's actions during the flight.

Both Locastos plan to attend Monday's closed custody hearing, according to their attorneys.

Detectives said Friday that Mrs. Locasto expressed no interest in the infant after her arrest.

"She never has said one thing about the kid. ... She never asked how it was," said Sheriff's Sgt. Bob Morse. But he said she admitted giving birth to the child and putting her under the sink.

Tricky Landing

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — The landing gear on a Portuguese airliner collapsed as the plane touched down in Frankfurt on Saturday, causing it to skid off the runway, airport officials said. None of the 114 people aboard was injured.

FIRE VICTIMS REMOVED — A group of Parisian firemen carry the corpse of one of five fire victims early Saturday after a blaze destroyed the Hotel St. Vincent de Paul in northern Paris early Saturday. Authorities, who said at least 12 people were injured, including American tourists, were working to determine the origin of the blaze that left the hotel manager dead. (AP Laserphoto)

Paris Hotel Fire Kills Five

PARIS (AP) — A fire destroyed a hotel in a northern Paris neighborhood early Saturday, and police said it killed five people and injured several more, including American, West German, British and Belgian tourists.

The names of the foreigners injured in the blaze were not made public, and officials said four of the dead had not been identified.

The manager of the Hotel St. Vincent de Paul, Bernard Bonhomme, 60, was taken to a hospital in nearby Seresnes with severe burns and died late Saturday, police said.

About 50 people, mostly young foreigners, were asleep in the hotel when the fire broke out at about 3:30 a.m., authorities said.

It started on the fourth floor of the hotel on rue d'Hauteville, in a run-down neighborhood near the Gare du Nord train station.

Fire officials said the cause of the fire was unknown but that it appeared to be accidental.

Protesters Hurt On West Bank

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli soldiers shot and wounded three masked protesters who raised Palestinian flags Saturday in the West Bank town of Nablus, the army and hospital officials said.

Scattered protests were reported in other parts of the West Bank and in Arab east Jerusalem. A 13-year-old boy and a woman were reported injured.

The army command said an Israeli patrol saw four masked men in Nablus raise Palestinian flags and throw stones. The Palestinian flag is outlawed in Israel and the occupied territories.

The army said the soldiers were forced to respond with gunfire and that they wounded three protesters.

Officials at Nablus' St. Luke Hospital identified two of the victims as Mohammed Abdallah, 21, who was shot in the abdomen, and Mohammed Hamir, 19, who was shot in the leg. Doctors at Al Ittihad Hospital said they treated 21-year-old Mahmoud Al Kasar for a bullet wound in his leg.

Since the Palestinian uprising began Dec. 8 in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, 222 Palestinians and four Israelis have been killed.

Troops clamped a four-hour curfew on the Jalazone refugee camp near the West Bank town of Ramallah, an army spokesman said. He said the step followed disturbances in the camp.

Ramallah Hospital officials said they treated Mahmoud Hattab, 13, and Jamil Abu Radaha, 28, after the Jalazone incident. They said the teen-ager was beaten by soldiers and the woman was hit by rubber bullets.

"I tried to protect Mahmoud, my neighbor, and a soldier pushed me away and later fired at me," a local Palestinian reporter quoted the woman as saying.

Palestinian reports said there were more protests in several villages around Ramallah.

In the southern part of Jerusalem, a firebomb was hurled at an Israeli car Friday night, and police arrested two Palestinian suspects, Israel radio reported. There were no injuries in the firebombing.

Police reported several stone-throwing attacks in Arab east Jerusalem on Saturday and said a window of a police vehicle was smashed.

Archbishop Calls For Unity

By GRAHAM HEATHCOTE

CANTERBURY, England (AP) — The archbishop of Canterbury said Saturday that speculation about the breakup of the worldwide Anglican Church over the role of women priests and bishops is premature.

"I keep saying that there are a lot of us who want to stay together," Archbishop Robert Runcie said in response to British newspaper stories predicting the Anglican Communion — with 70 million members across 164 countries — is perishing as a united body.

Runcie spoke as he toured the University of Kent campus at Canterbury, home to the 12th Lambeth Conference, where more than 500 Anglican bishops begin three weeks' debate Monday about their world role.

"I hope the conference will live up to the arrangements and preparations that have been so carefully made for it," said Runcie, leader of all Anglicans as spiritual head of their mother church, the Church of England.

Runcie told reporters earlier: "I have no doubt that the experience of our meeting together will deepen our sense that the things which unite us are much greater than those which divide us."

The conference is named after Lambeth Palace, the archbishop's official London residence, where the first worldwide conference was held in 1867.

The last conference was in 1978, two years after Anglicans in the U.S. Episcopal Church decided to ordain women. That conference evaded the issue of women priests by saying that each of the 27 self-governing Anglican provinces must respect the others' decisions. Each province consists of an individual country or region.

England still does not permit women to be priests, but the church's policy-making General Synod approved draft legislation July 5 to ordain them.

One week later, the Vatican issued a statement saying the decision could complicate relations with the Roman Catholic Church, which since 1966 has discussed full communion with Anglicans after a 400 year split.

A majority of Anglican provinces still reject women priests. But American, Canadian, New Zealand and Brazilian churches are among those that ordain women, and the conference must decide what to do about it.

The bishops must also decide what to do about the first woman bishop, likely to be consecrated by the U.S. Episcopalians within a year.

Bishops are regarded as the followers of the 12 male apostles of Jesus Christ. Runcie has warned that when a woman bishop appears, a number of bishops throughout the world will refuse to recognize her or those priests she ordains.

William Oddie, a traditionalist Church of England clergyman, predicted chaos at the conference.

Mandela Birthday Events Stopped; Prison Secured

By GREG MYRE
Associated Press Writer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Police on Saturday banned all events marking Nelson Mandela's 70th birthday and set up roadblocks around the Cape Town prison where the black leader is confined.

Hundreds of members of the security forces, many in armored vehicles, patrolled townships outside Cape Town. There were no reports of violence. Police briefly detained at least four runners in a race organized as part of the birthday celebrations.

The police action came amid renewed calls from foreign governments for the release of Mandela, who is regarded by black South Africans as the country's preemminent black leader.

Mandela turns 70 on Monday. He has been in prison the past 26 years.

Late Saturday, police Brig. Roy During issued an order banning all events related to the birthday, including a concert that was scheduled Sunday.

Other scheduled events, including pop music concerts planned in the southeastern port city of Durban and Soweto township outside Johannesburg, were banned last week.

Police blocked off Pollsmoor Prison and said only people with "valid reasons" would be allowed near the facility.

They sealed off a sports stadium in the Cape Town township of Guguletu, forcing cancellation of a soccer game and a rugby match that were part of the birthday celebrations.

Saturday's 15-mile road race was the only one of several birthday-related events that was allowed to begin.

But a heavy police presence apparently deterred most runners from showing up at the Cape Town shopping plaza that served as the starting line.

Witnesses said police detained the only five participants after they had run less than one mile. Police said four runners were detained and later released.

The runners wore T-shirts that read, "Mandela, Freedom At 70." Two people traveling in a van alongside the runners to provide drinks also were detained, witnesses said.

More than 30 people in the Cape Town area who were involved in Mandela's birthday celebrations were taken into custody last week.

Mandela's wife, Winnie, on Friday rejected a government offer to have a six-hour visit with her husband on his birthday. It would have been the longest reunion since he was jailed.

The reunion was to have included 11 relatives of Mandela, who was imprisoned in 1962 for leaving the country illegally and inciting unrest. While serving a five-year term on those charges, he was sentenced to life imprisonment in 1964 for sabotage and plotting the overthrow of the government.

Mandela is a leader of the African National Congress, the largest guerrilla group fighting South Africa's government and its system of apartheid, under which the black majority has no voice in national affairs.

Mrs. Mandela decided to forego the special visit to focus attention on other prisoners held for anti-apartheid activities, said the family's attorney, Ismail Ayob.

Mrs. Mandela "will spend the day quietly at home, as she has on his birthday for the past 26 years," Ayob said. "She has taken this decision as both she and Mr. Mandela have never sought any special privileges for themselves."

The government, which usually grants only 40-minute visits, confirmed the cancellation.

Celebrations were planned in London and Amsterdam to mark Mandela's birthday, and several foreign governments issued messages in honor of the occasion.

Among those calling for Mandela's release were West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, East German leader Erich Honecker, British Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe and Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney. Japan, Switzerland, Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden also have called for Mandela's release.

The Italian Embassy in Pretoria said it imported a copy of director Bernardo Bertolucci's film, "The Last Emperor," because Mandela wanted to see it.

South African Information Minister Stoffel van der Merwe responded to the wave of appeals for Mandela's release by saying that "humanitarian considerations must always be weighed against the possibility that civil uprising, violence and terrorism could follow such a release."

Just 'Plain English'

LONDON (AP) — A legislative tradition of addressing friends and foes as "honorable" gentlemen and ladies has come under attack from opposition lawmakers who want their colleagues to speak "plain English."

Three left-wing members of the Labor Party submitted a motion in the House of Commons on Friday challenging the "archaic" forms of address and urging members to use surnames.

Tunnermann Just Met Expulsion Deadline

Nicaraguan Envoy Says U.S. Wrong To Expel Him

By JAVIER PICHARDINI
Associated Press Writer

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Nicaragua's ambassador to the United States, who left Washington just minutes before a State Department deadline for his departure, called his expulsion arbitrary and illegal.

Carlos Tunnermann left Washington on a commercial flight five minutes before the expulsion order took effect at 5:30 p.m. EDT Friday.

About a dozen police officers were at the airline's gate at National Airport to make sure Tunnerman got on the plane. Two police cars followed the jet out to the runway and waited for it to depart.

He spent Friday night in Mexico City and was expected to leave today for Managua.

At an airport news conference here, Tunnermann said his government was right to expel U.S. Ambassador Richard Melton. But he said the Reagan administration, which expelled him in retaliation, had no basis for expelling Nicaraguan diplomats.

"If we expelled Melton we had reasons to do so because Melton . .. was interfering in internal affairs of Nicaragua in the spirit of destabilizing our government," he said.

He said Melton attended meetings where participants discussed replacing the Nicaraguan government.

"My work was absolutely diplomatic. We do not question the decision of the United States, even though it was unjustified, but in the case of Melton we were right," he said.

Nicaragua expelled Melton and seven other U.S. Embassy officials on Monday. A day later, the Reagan administration gave Tunnermann and seven other embassy officials 72 hours to leave the country.

The administration also described the action as retaliatory, but said Tunnermann and the military attache, Maj. Pedro Sampson, had abused their privilege of residence.

Tunnermann called that "a very vague charge."

For Tunnermann, it was an unhappy ending to his 3½-year stay in Washington in the somewhat lonesome role as the Sandinista government's chief defender in Washington.

Tunnermann served both as ambassador to the United States and to the Organization of American States, and he maintained throughout that the United States had no right to expel him, citing guarantees contained in the OAS charter.

Shortly before leaving on his flight to Mexico City, he took a parting shot at the administration, insisting that the U.S. action threatened the independence of the OAS and saying his government would seek recourse through OAS legal channels.

In Mexico, he said the United States should have given the OAS a list of the alleged abuses but did not.

"Today it's Nicaragua, tomorrow, another country," he said. "This is the height of arbitrariness."

Nicaragua's expulsions of U.S. diplomats came the same day the government closed a Roman Catholic radio station and an opposition newspaper and one day after government troops violently suppressed an anti-government demonstration.

U.S. Turns To New Strategy In Dealing With Sandinistas

A News Analysis

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — With both expectations and leverage in short supply, the Reagan administration is weighing new approaches for dealing with the increasingly defiant leftist government of Nicaragua.

Administration officials believe that U.S. ability to influence events in Nicaragua was drastically reduced following the cutoff of military aid to the Contra rebels last February. It is now groping for alternatives, none of which appear promising.

For lack of other options, the administration has been turning increasingly to diplomatic action for dealing with the Sandinistas. Secretary of State George P. Shultz discussed the issue during his visit to Central America two weeks ago and plans a return trip on Aug. 1, when he will meet with the foreign ministers of four friendly countries in Guatemala City.

But some administration officials believe that diplomatic pressure, in the absence of military pressure, will not have any noticeable impact on the Sandinistas.

Still, Shultz apparently believes he must continue the struggle no matter how long the odds. He is attempting to find a way in which the United States and the four Central American countries friendly to the United States — Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras and Costa Rica — can devise a common strategy for pushing the Sandinistas toward democracy.

President Reagan has expressed support for a new Contra aid bill introduced by Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., but there appears to be little appetite among Democrats, especially in the House, to take any action that would jeopardize the tenuous truce in place since March. The bill calls for $27.1 million in humanitarian aid and $20 million in lethal aid.

Hostility toward the Sandinistas has grown in the Congress since the expulsion of eight U.S. diplomats from Managua last week, and there is now faint hope among Contra aid supporters that this and other Nicaraguan actions may produce some defections in Congress in support of the administration.

Congressional distaste for recent Nicaraguan crackdowns on press freedoms and civil liberties was demonstrated in lopsided votes in both houses this past weeks on resolutions condemning the Sandinistas.

Despite staggering economic problems, reflected in a four-digit inflation rate, the Sandinista government remains militarily strong and its behavior recently has fulfilled the worst fears of administration officials.

As officials see it, the lack of military pressure on the Sandinistas has emboldened them to shelve the tentative steps they had taken toward creating democracy and to move aggressively against the U.S. diplomatic presence in Managua.

Ambassador Richard Melton, who was expelled along with seven colleagues this past week, believes Nicaraguan authorities took that action as a means of intimidating opposition leaders who saw the U.S. diplomatic presence in Managua as a source of encouragement.

Under Melton's guidance, the embassy placed high priority on maintaining contact with and on providing psychological support for the anti-Sandinista leadership.

As a further blow to the opposition, the Sandinistas have shut down an independent newspaper and radio station and arrested more than 40 people who participated in an anti-government demonstration last Sunday.

Nicaraguan authorities maintain that the two media outlets had violated the law and that last Sunday's protest at Nandaime turned violent at the instigation of the protestors.

According to U.S. officials, the Sandinistas now feel they can move with impunity against their domestic enemies because the government has little to fear.

They believe that the Sandinistas have largely written off the United States as a threat, reasoning that the prospects for renewed Contra military aid are slim. This is partly because the administration, now in its waning months and weary from previous battles, lacks the will to continue the fight with the same passion as before.

Nuke Pact Takes Effect

WASHINGTON (AP) — An agreement permitting Japan to fly plutonium derived from U.S.-supplied nuclear reactor fuel from Europe back to Japan without U.S. approval of each shipment goes into effect Sunday.

Critics have said the shipments, not expected to begin until the 1990s, increase the chance that terrorists someday could get their hands on enough plutonium to build a nuclear weapon.

No shipping container to hold the radioactive plutonium has been designed yet.

Japan plans to use the plutonium, which is produced during the fission of uranium fuel supplied by the United States, to supplement uranium fuel and later for "breeder" reactors which produce more plutonium from normally unusable uranium.

The spent uranium fuel has been shipped to French and British companies for several years for removal of the plutonium, which has been slowly accumulating there. Japan plans its own reprocessing plant to take over the plutonium removal.

Some forms of plutonium, which does not occur in nature, are produced in the fission of uranium. If breathed, plutonium and its compounds can cause lung cancer.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission, the Defense Department, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the General Accounting Office all opposed the new agreement with Japan as yielding too much control. But the Senate in March rejected a resolution that would have vetoed the pact.

The United States decided in 1977 not to use plutonium to fuel civilian reactors, both because of the danger that terrorists could obtain some and make a bomb or divert it to a country seeking to acquire nuclear weapons.

Nine Drown As Amazon Ferry Sinks

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — An Amazon ferry hit a partially submerged shipwreck and sank just outside the eastern port of Belem, killing at least nine people, the Belem port authority said Saturday.

Rescue workers pulled more than 70 survivors out of the Belem bay shortly after the accident Friday night, said port authority official Jonas Miranda.

Miranda said more passengers may have drowned just after the ferry hit the wreck. It was traveling from Belem, 2,070 miles north of Rio de Janeiro, to the nearby island of Marajo at the mouth of the Amazon, he said.

TV Globo, the nation's largest television network, reported Saturday that the vessel had a capacity of 60 people but more than 100 were aboard when it left Belem.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Unity, Unity

Humble Issue Test Of Cooperation

A simple, necessary item like recycling shouldn't be the victim of silly squabbling.

It should be handled jointly by Pitt County and Greenville. Those two do not need to go in separate directions. But judging from noises made at last week's Greenville City Council meeting, they are.

Council members failed to agree on forming an advisory committee on recycling at that meeting — a suggestion that followed the appointment of a Solid Waste Task Force by the Pitt County Commissioners.

And one council member, Rufus Huggins, said he thought the city should do its own thing because the county wasn't reliable. To be precise, he said "I think the city has to take some initiative on its own ... I've been very disappointed in the county in the past, I've had very little faith in what the county does and what they obligate themselves to do."

Those words ring counterproductive in a community where cooperation between two forward-thinking entities — one of them urban, the other rural — is essential to progress.

Now when it comes to recycling, it's up to the council to best decide just how this cooperation should work. But a committee to work alongside the county's task force and perhaps provide perspective and input seems plausible. That way, a group would have the authority and weight to express the city's concerns to the Pitt group.

All this fuss over sorting trash for reuse may seem trivial, but an humble issue like recycling is a good test of how well Greenville and Pitt County can function in unity. If the two can cooperate efficiently in this instance, it is likely they can foster a progressive relationship on issues of greater magnitude.

Besides, the issue of solid waste disposal — which recycling addresses — is a serious problem that knows no political confines. Since all Greenville's trash goes in the county Allen Road landfill, the dilemma doesn't end or begin with city limit signs. To effectively approach it, the city and county should work together. It would be counterproductive for the two to undertake separate projects, to go in different directions. This duplication of effort would waste taxpayers money.

Pitt County has faced the problem of solid waste disposal head-on. It has expeditiously planned for the future by funding recycling projects and seeking alternatives to landfilling. Greenville plays a part in this future. Only a unified approach is correct.

Proper Course

Compensation For Miscue Correct

There's a difference between accepting responsibility and accepting blame.

And the United State's decision to pay compensation to the families of the 290 people who died aboard an Iranian airliner shot down by a U.S. warship illustrates the distinction.

Compensation is appropriate because of the uncertainties surrounding the incident. Many questions about what happened in the turbulent Persian Gulf and its skies remain unanswered. What is clear, however, is the fact the United States made a mistake, a miscalculation.

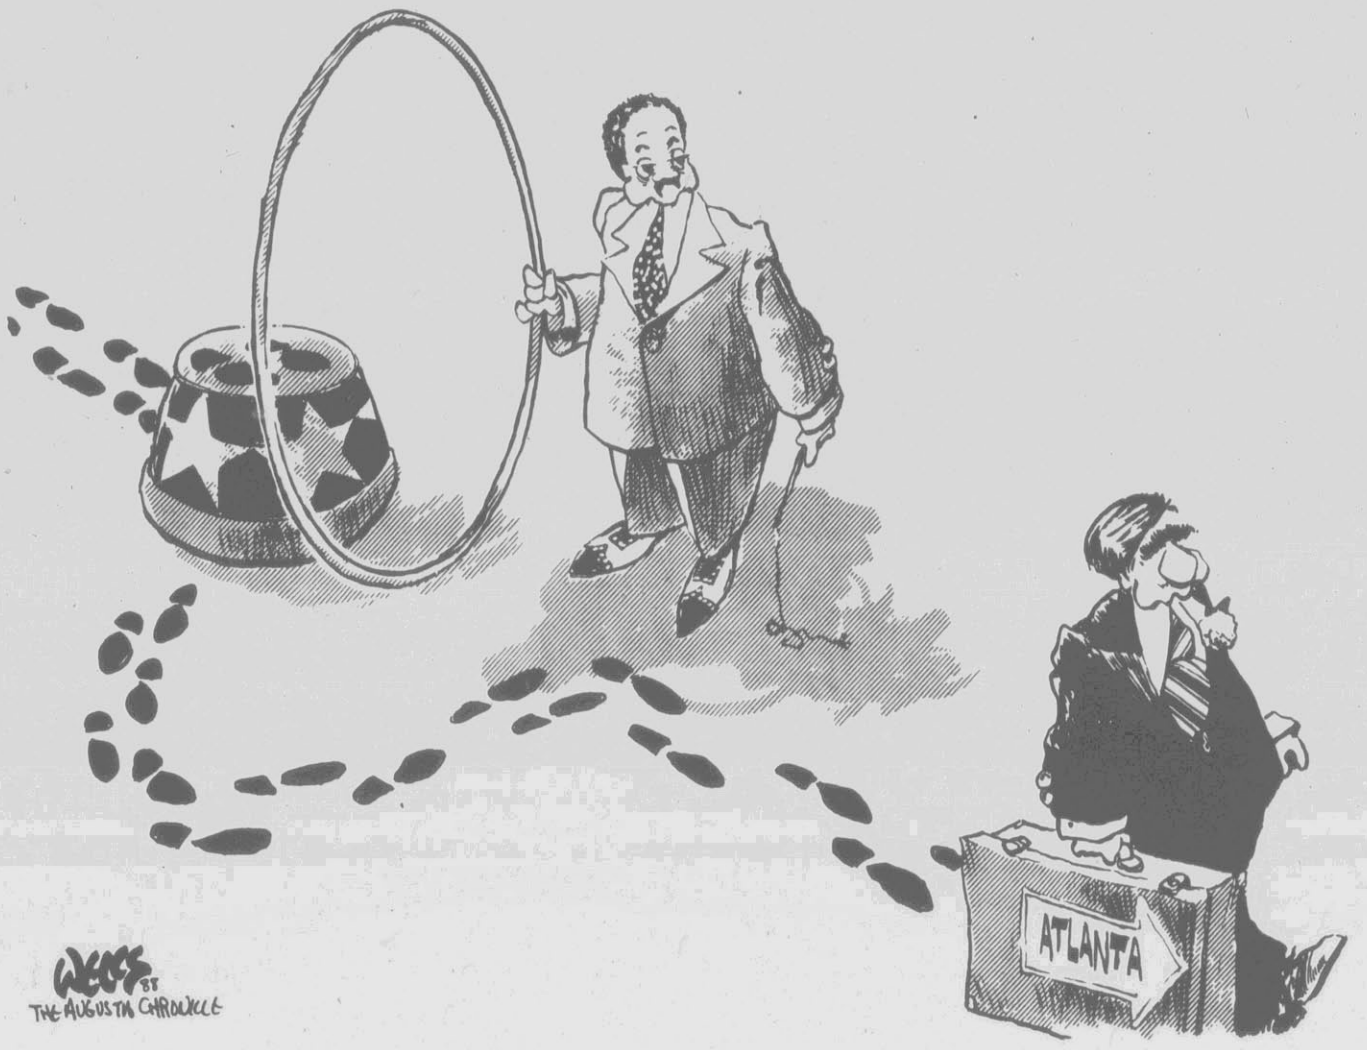
For that error the nation should accept responsibility. Volunteering to offer recompense for the human suffering caused by the tragedy is doing so.

But it should not mean the United States accepts sole blame for the incident. Compensation does not absolve Iran from its share of guilt. That nation bears a heavy burden for allowing a jetliner to fly over an area where fighting is occurring and peril is certain.

To be effective, the compensation offered last week should be administrated correctly and in a forthright manner. By no means should any money be paid to the Iranian government. Not only would that imply the United States is compensating the Iranian government, but funneling money through that hostile, unreliable entity would not get assistance to the families of the victims. Iran simply cannot be trusted. An objective, third-party intermediary should handle the compensation.

Volunteering compensation means the United States is prepared to accept responsibility for its actions in a situation where facts are few and proprieties vague. It is correct to offer recompense for human suffering; the United States must serve as a humanitarian role model for the globe. Agreeing to pay for Iran airliner mistake is consistent with this duty.

It is also consistent with the design and operation of the American justice system. Ideally, the courts of this nation, when a wrong is committed, order the responsible party to pay damages to the victim. The American miscue with the Iranian airliner is no different.



A Magic Collard Ride To Hollywood

Mary C. Schulken

Sunday Morning Notes

On a scorching September day in 1983 in Ayden, Mort Hurst ate more collards faster than anyone ever had before. Then he threw up.

The humiliation of chucking the hard-won title of Collard King led to a world's record at the 1984 Ayden Collard Festival — an honor he has managed to hold down and turn into a ticket to Hollywood.

You may laugh at Hurst, the 170-pound gobbling gourmand of Robersonville. You may not like him or what he does. But have your dreams come true? One of his will when he steps on a plane sometime this summer or fall and heads for tinsel town to star in a national TV show. The Collard King is going to Hollywood, where he hopes to eat his way into the prime time hearts of America — and to a national advertising contract.

"When I get on that airplane and get on the way to Hollywood I'll be flying higher than that plane," Hurst said. "When I land my feet are gonna hit the ground runnin'."

And so will his mouth and stomach, for the show, called "Incredible Sunday," will feature Hurst doing what he does best — ingesting enormous quantities of food quicker than you can say bellyache.

"I don't know if it's gonna be volume or speed eating," he said. "I'm hoping for speed since volume is so hard to train for."

If the show's directors want speed, Hurst will wash down two dozen eggs in one minute with a bottle of catsup, his trademark. Or he might wolf five pounds of watermelon and two bottles of catsup in under a minute. Or, if Hollywood decorum allows a little colloquialism, he will slurp a pound of collards in 20 seconds.

If it's quantity the directors desire, Hurst will be poised to eat 50 eggs in under three minutes — with very light catsup, of course.

How will he train for such diversity? Hurst will prepare for speed eating by gobbling one dozen eggs in 10 seconds. He will train for volume by gorging on 20 egg biscuits. Breakfast is served.

In addition, Hurst will defend his title as Watermelon King at the Winterville Watermelon Festival in August by gulping five pounds of melon and two bottles of catsup in under a minute, a challenge he calls a "training exercise." "I'm not gonna try, I'm gonna do it," he said.

In 1987, Hurst inhaled 15 pounds, two ounces of watermelon in 10 minutes. As an afterthought, he ate another three pounds with catsup.

The Collard King will also train by getting away from it all. "I got to take a few days off, go to the beach, relax, take my mind off all this," he said. Will he eat while he's on vacation? "I might do a little speed eatin' ... try to find some buffets although I've quit them, for the most part." Hurst doesn't want a reputation for putting restaurants out of business.

Infamy is not new to the mad eater of Robersonville. He's been written about in the National Enquirer, filmed by PM Magazine, and featured on radio talk shows in 42 states and Quebec. There, he met CBS's Charles Kuralt, and Hurst counts that experience one of his best.

He also likes to tell about an editor for his PM Magazine segment who, after three times seeing a clip of Hurst speed eating, asked an associate to play it back again — at the regular speed. "She though the projector was on fast forward but it was just me eating," he said.

The glamor of being a big eater isn't without hardship, however — and danger. Hurst has blacked out after his feats, but his doctor thinks that's because a nerve from Hurst's stomach to his brain gets overloaded and shuts down.

"Doc says there's no permanent effects, that it's not affecting my brain ..." he said. "I just go into a semiconscious state for a few minutes." Is that anything like what happens when you sit down on the couch after Sunday dinner at Mama's?

To Hurst, the peril involved in setting eating records isn't particularly troubling. "Death is secondary. I've blocked out the dangerous parts."

And he has the medical OK for his feat on national TV. "I've got the green light, I'm ready to go," he said. "I'm in good shape and my mind's as good as it's gonna get. It's never been that good anyway."

His stomach may be something special, however. "My doctor wanted permission to examine my stomach when I die and I said 'sure, that's fine. I'm an organ donor anyway.' He thinks I've got an unusual type of stomach."

Hurst sought notoriety because of challenge — regurgitating seven pounds of greens in front of hundreds of collard-lovers hurt his pride. "You've got to have failure before you can have success because you come back and try harder," he said.

The challenge is now a business — Hurst is after a national advertising contract and Hollywood is a stepping stone. "I'm ready to eat the Empire State Building if I have to."

But he likes the spotlight best.

"I enjoy winning," Hurst said. "My eatin' has carried me to a lot of places. I've met Charles Kuralt, been to Quebec, down south, and I like walking around these places having people recognize me.

"I like signing those autographs when I'm out of this area. The only thing I sign in Robersonville is the paychecks."

Hurst idolizes Elvis Presley and likens himself to the performer. "That's because he lived his life like he wanted to. That's what I'm doing."

Eat your heart out, Mort Hurst. You're a glutton's hero.

And like Elvis said: let the record show, he took the blows, and did it his way.

'Cool-Hand Lloyd' & The Duke Ready For Showdown

Ross Baker

In his account of the 1976 presidential nomination contest, journalist Jules Witcover described the efforts of Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen to achieve name recognition as a struggle to avoid being introduced to audiences as "Floyd" Bentsen.

Bentsen, a dignified but colorless former insurance man, never succeeded in having people get his name straight, and ended up being the first victim of the winnowing process of the 1976 campaign.

Knowing only this part of Lloyd Bentsen's history, one might be inclined to doubt the wisdom of Michael S. Dukakis' choice of the Texan as a running mate. How would this 67-year-old Tory Democrat, best known for his prodigious feats as a fund-raiser, benefit the self-proclaimed party of the people and its low-keyed likely nominee? At first glance it would appear that Dukakis had mysteriously resolved to duplicate all of his shortcomings and take on the additional burden of a plutocrat as a running mate. But, as the initial shock wears off, the political astuteness of Dukakis' decision becomes apparent.

As a political gesture to the key state of Texas, the choice of Bentsen is sensible. The senator's credentials as a son of this state with its 29 electoral votes are even better than Vice President George Bush's. Bentsen is native to the Rio Grande Valley area of south Texas, where his father, "Big Lloyd" Bentsen, came in 1921 to establish a ranch. In Texas terms Bush is a Johnny-come-lately who did not migrate to the Midland-Odessa area until after World War II. Bentsen, moreover, is one of the giant-killers of Texas politics. He not only humbled Bush, then a member of Congress, in the 1970 Senate race but six years later turned back a challenge from Rep. Phil Gramm, now his junior colleague.

Bentsen is no casual participant in Texas politics, either. He comes from the conservative wing of the state's Democratic Party and embarked on his Senate career with a primary election victory over the liberals' hero, Sen. Ralph Yarborough. That alone might have gained him the eternal enmity of the Texas Democrats' left wing, but he has managed over the last 20 years to enjoy the support of black and Latino voters who normally are not enthusiastic over candidates of Bentsen's philosophical stripe.

Bentsen brings an element of reassurance to the ticket. It is not, perhaps, so important as the role played by Lyndon B. Johnson on the ticket headed by Massachusetts Sen. John F. Kennedy in 1960, but it will go far to bolster the loyalty of some Democratic centrists who feared Dukakis as a crypto-radical.

If the Democrats gain the White House in November, Bentsen will be a major asset for Dukakis. Many in Congress fear that the Massachusetts governor might be another Jimmy Carter, but Bentsen is the consummate Senate insider. George Bush would have to go for Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas to match the congressional experience of Bentsen. The Texas senator has developed the reputation as a deal-maker of great skill. While he is the furthest thing from a protectionist, he collaborated with Rep. Richard A. Gephardt of Missouri on a tough trade bill in order to put a shot across the bow of the Japanese and induce them to open their markets to American products.

To characterize Bentsen as a suave tactician would be too simple, even though both his suavity and tactical sense are very much on display. While he undoubtedly feels most at home with legislative manipulations in Washington and the rough-and-tumble politics of Texas, Bentsen is no LBJ. Bentsen deals in substance, not just political expediency. He used his chairmanship of the Joint Economic Committee with great creativity. His well-documented love of tax cuts as a stimulus to the economy, which he championed on the committee, can be used as an amulet by Dukakis to ward off the big-spender tag that Bush is hankering to hang on the Democrats.

It was from the brainy staff of the Joint Economic Committee that Bentsen chose his principal political aide, Michael Levy, a product of Johns Hopkins and Rutgers who taught at Texas A&M and feels as comfortable discussing philosopher John Rawls as he does the sheriff's election in Brazos County. Bentsen's credentials as a national Democrat moreover are helped by the fact that he was never a conspicuous member of the boll weevils, the mostly Southern group of Democrats during the first Reagan administration who always took a malicious delight in bashing the more liberal members of their party. Indeed, Bentsen once described himself as a "Harry Truman Democrat" — a tag that makes him no enemies.

The man chosen by Dukakis is not easily pigeon-holed. He is a friend of bankers who voted for legislation dear to the hearts of organized labor. He is a man whose very lack of flamboyance makes it hard to view him as a fat cat or wheeler-dealer. He is also that rare politician who can blunder, make amends and move on.

Dukakis might have selected a more colorful politician as a running mate, but he could not have come up with one more self-possessed and confident as the man once referred to as "Cool-Hand Lloyd."

A Little?

Leonard Gross

Seventy million Americans, according to latest estimates, are habitual users of alcoholic beverages. Almost all of them would describe themselves as "social drinkers."

A cross-tabulation of government surveys by alcohol researcher Robin Room a few years back produced a definition of a heavy drinker as "someone who drinks twice as much as I do." While the social, psychological and biomedical consequences of heavy drinking are well known, most social drinkers derive great comfort and reassurance from the heralded reputation of moderate drinking as a beneficent adjunct to life that not only eases stress but contributes to good health and even longevity.

The news report a few weeks back of a possible chemical connection between alcohol and cancer had to give pause to every drinker who read or heard it. The report was based on a finding by Heinz Fraenkel-Conrat and Bea Singer, a husband-and-wife team of molecular biologists at the University of California, Berkeley. Writing in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, the scientists declared that alcohol and acetaldehyde — to which alcohol converts in mammalian cells — combine to change DNA in a manner similar to changes produced by other cancer-causing chemicals.

"These reactions could play a role in the recently documented association between moderate use and increased incidence of breast cancer," the two scientists explained in a carefully worded press release. And from their vacation home in England, Singer added, with equal caution, "If indeed there is other evidence indicating that alcohol is a carcinogen, this could be a mechanism."

Although a statistical corollary between drinking and cancer has long existed — the more you drink, the greater your risk of developing cancer — no one until this point had been able to say precisely what role alcohol played. Many authorities speculated that alcohol bathes the body cells to such a degree that they become vulnerable to known carcinogens found in tobacco and even in the alcoholic beverage.

Over the last 15 years, a number of researchers in the United States and abroad have developed the proposition that what passes for social drinking today in many parts of the world is so fraught with biomedical hazards it could be exposing millions of self-described "social drinkers" to serious health hazards, among them: liver problems, including cirrhosis; hypertension; cancer of the digestive tract; severe side-effects for those who simultaneously ingest alcohol and other mood-altering agents, or prescription and over-the-counter drugs; fetal damage even before confirmation of a pregnancy, and the impairment of sober intellectual capacities.

At what level of consumption might such damage occur? Although there is no universal agreement among those alcohol researchers responsible for the above findings, the consensus would appear to be that risks begin to rise after the consumption of the equivalent of 28 grams of absolute alcohol, or ethanol, a day — the approximate amount found in two 1.5-ounce martinis made with 80 proof gin, two five-ounce glasses of 12 percent wine, or two 16-ounce cans of 4.5 percent beer.

The alcohol beverage industry disputes all such calculations about what constitutes a safe-drinking threshold, as well as most of the research on which they are based. It argues that the association between alcohol and diseases has never been conclusively established, and it contends that physical and genetic factors and even cultural perceptions about what constitutes "heavy" drinking make the answer different for each individual. The industry maintains that most Americans are not only moderate drinkers — per capita consumption in the United States being half that of Portugal and France, and well below that of Italy, West Germany and even Switzerland — but have tended in recent years to "lighten up," increasingly favoring beer and wine over spirits.

While the industry is on solid ground in resisting the categorization of drinkers at arbitrary cutoff levels, its characterization of drinking patterns in the United States is, at best, misleading. While it's true that most American drinkers drink moderately, per capita consumption of absolute alcohol in this country is strikingly higher today than it was in the 1950s. During that decade, consumption held steady at two gallons per year per person. From 1960, it rose steadily, reaching a high of more than 2.7 gallons in the early 1980s, before tapering off to 2.62 gallons in 1985, the last year for which figures are available. Since per capita calculations include non-drinkers as well as drinkers, the increase in consumption among drinkers during this period was probably twice what the figures indicate. —

Per capita comparisons between countries are equally misleading. When you factor out the much higher prevalence of abstainers in the United States than in the countries where per capita consumption is greater — when you compare drinkers and drinkers, in other words — Americans are right up there with the leaders. As to the trend toward "lighter" alcoholic beverages, unless you're drinking a light beer or wine, a drink is a drink is a drink; each contains the same approximate amount of ethanol.

Misleading estimates about how much Americans drink are not exclusively the fault of the alcoholic beverages industry. Most drinkers delude themselves about the kinds of drinkers they are. Survey data demonstrate that the difference between how much Americans say they drink, when asked, and what they actually drink is at least 30 percent, and may be closer to 50 percent, below actual consumption.

The upshot of these consumption patterns is that a significant percentage of America's 70 million habitual drinkers could be consuming at levels now perceived as potentially dangerous by a contingent of investigators. And the news from these investigators is probably not going to get better. The trend in the alcohol research field is toward implicating smaller and smaller amounts of alcohol in adverse consequences of drinking. In addition to the aforementioned diseases, scientists are looking into the effects of social drinking on the bone marrow, the gastrointestinal tract, the reproductive system, the immune system, nutrition — and sleep.

Alcohol is a potent drug — in the view of many, the most potent of all. The difference between beneficial and dangerous drinking may prove to be very small.

Gorbachev Means Serious Business

Thomas Powers

A new era of Soviet history — and a period of danger for Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev — has begun with the rehabilitation of Nikolai I. Bukharin. The "Old Bolshevist" and friend of Lenin was denounced as a traitor, tried on phony charges, convicted on phony evidence and executed 50 years ago by his triumphant rival Josef Stalin. For half a century, Bukharin's name could not be uttered in the Soviet Union without risk of prison or worse. Daring students hunted up old editions of the great Soviet encyclopedia to read Bukharin's views on "The ABC of Communism." When Nikita S. Khrushchev denounced Stalin in 1956, he shrank from including Bukharin among the innocent victims.

Gorbachev must have known he was inviting the whirlwind a year ago when he embarked on the complex task of restoring Bukharin to the Soviet pantheon. He ran two great risks: the appetite for truth, once aroused, would be irresistible, and the Communist Party would be fundamentally discredited by the exposure of crimes it had tried to hide for so long. Nothing quite like this dangerous confrontation with history has ever happened. Gorbachev was not proposing to take back a few words uttered in the heat of political struggle, but decades of systematic political vilification. The destruction of Bukharin had not been a mistake, but a crime conceived by the leader of the Soviet state, carried out by the organs of the state and defended thereafter by every state official.

Like other prominent victims of the Moscow purge trials in the 1930s, Bukharin had been forced to admit his guilt. "I consider myself responsible for a grave and monstrous crime," he said at his trial in March, 1938. Before his execution on the night of March 15, 1938, Bukharin wrote a final letter to Stalin — a questioning, not a pleading letter — addressing him by the nickname used in the underground days: "Koba, why do you need me to die?" Stalin savored his victories as few men, and kept this letter in a personal file of similar documents — raw material for his own indictment by history.

The rehabilitation of Bukharin — an open door into the horrors of Soviet history — is a sign that Gorbachev is playing for keeps. On the 70th anniversary of the Russian Revolution last November, Gorbachev quoted from Vladimir I. Lenin's "last testament," describing Bukharin as "the favorite of the party." The party did not wait on this invitation to revise its history. In February, Bukharin's conviction was overturned and, on July 9, an official Soviet commission quietly announced that the Communist Party had rescinded its 1937 expulsion of Bukharin, restoring him to honorable membership.

Of course, other official pariahs still remain — G.E. Zinoviev and L.B. Kamenev are probably next in line for rehabilitation, and then comes the toughest of all — the one man who could have saved Russia from Stalin, Leon Trotsky. But after the Lenin's death in 1924, the Communist Party, tired perhaps of great men and revolutionary adventure, sided with Stalin — one of the great political disasters of history, something hard for the party's heirs to admit. Gorbachev has managed to speak Trotsky's name aloud in public, but that is it. Nearly 50 years after his murder, Trotsky still haunts the Soviet state.

But even so, Bukharin's rehabilitation completes one of history's most remarkable reversals. States, like kings, rarely admit fault. Here, fault and admission have been on a heroic scale. The "Moscow trials," that divided leftist intellectuals worldwide in the 1930s, began in 1934, following the murder of Leningrad's Communist Party leader, S.M. Kirov. Stalin used this murder — which most historians now agree he arranged — to destroy one-time rivals. The NKVD concocted a story that Trotsky's supporters murdered Kirov and planned to assassinate Stalin at the behest of German and British spy-masters, who sought to restore capitalism to the Soviet Union. To quell opposition, and fill labor camps with unpaid workers, the arrests began. Estimates of those who were shot or died from mistreatment run as high as 10 million.

Why did Stalin carry out this terrible crime, which has only one rival in history — Hitler's murder of the Jews? How did he manage it? There are no easy answers — the crime is too big to "explain," and too little is known. Until recently the principal historical sources for Stalin's Moscow were the memoirs of an NKVD defector and an anonymous pamphlet published in Paris in 1936. The defector was Alexander Orlov, who fled from Spain in 1938, and published a book in the late 1940s, "The Secret History of Stalin's Crimes." In great detail — only some confirmed by other sources — Orlov describes the mental and physical torture that broke Stalin's enemies.

The pamphlet, "Letter of an Old Bolshevik," only 60 pages long, remains in many ways the best account of the political background of the Moscow trials. Nearly 30 years after it appeared, the distinguished Russian emigre historian, Boris I. Nicolaevsky, confessed he had written the "letter." It was based on conversations with Bukharin in Paris in the spring of 1936 — when Bukharin was there on an official mission. With Nicolaevsky, Bukharin debated whether he should return to Moscow. The first of the trials had convicted G.E. Zinoviev and L.B. Kamenev of fantastic crimes and Bukharin knew he was next. "He'll finish us all off," he told Nicolaevsky and others. "We're all doomed."

In the fall of 1932, Stalin had been forced to promise he would not execute old party opponents, but he was biding his time. His control was complete, but something in him was wolf-like — at meetings Stalin often doodled drawings of wolves — and nothing would satisfy him but blood. Bukharin returned to Moscow anyway. "I must go back and drain my cup to the dregs," he told an emigre.

In Moscow, Stalin slowly drew the noose around Bukharin. Late in 1936, he appointed a new NKVD chief who would do his bidding without question. In 1937, he forced the party to expel Bukharin and took away his job as editor of the government newspaper, Izvestia. But before Bukharin died he wrote a letter to the future and asked his young wife, Anna Larina, to memorize it.

"I feel my helplessness before a hellish machine," he wrote. "I am confident that sooner or later the filter of history will inevitably sweep the filth from my head. I was never a traitor. ... I ask a new young and honest generation of party leaders to read my letter at a party plenum, to exonerate me and to reinstate me in the party."

But Bukharin's rehabilitation does not end matters. Many questions remain. Some concern details. It is said that some executions were announced before they took place, so new victims could see the "dead" and be told, "See? You've read that they were executed, but we promised to spare them, and we'll spare you too — if you confess." Many painful truths have been admitted in the Soviet Union under Gorbachev, but once the rewriting of history gets to details it will never end.

Ailing Soviet Refusenik In U.S. For Treatment

By KEVIN GALVIN
Assocaited Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — An ailing Soviet mathematician who fought for nine years to emigrate to the United States for medical treatment arrived here with his wife Saturday aboard U.S. industrialist Armand Hammer's private jet.

Benjamin Charny, 50, whose emigration had been blocked by Soviet officials who claimed he was privy to state secrets, was met at Logan International Airport by family members and U.S. political figures who worked for his release.

"I can tell you that I'm infinitely grateful to Mr. Hammer that brought me to you as a magician in a fairy tale," Charny said.

Hammer, who said he had appealed directly to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev on Charny's behalf, said, "This has been a difficult case. I feel it has been a privilege for me to assist."

"I think it's another example of the improving relations between our countries," said the 89-year-old chairman of Occidental Petroleum Corp. Hammer's friendly ties to the Soviet Union go back to Vladimir Lenin.

Charny and his wife Yadviga, 52, a metallurgist, plan to rejoin their daughter, Anna Charny-Blank, who lives in Brookline. His younger brother, Leon, a Massachusetts Institute of Technology doctoral student, lives in Needham.

Charny, a mathematician who from 1966 to 1971 helped calculate the re-entry orbits of Soviet space probes sent to the moon and Mars, lost his job in 1977 when he applied for an exit visa.

During the U.S-Soviet summit in Moscow last May, Charny met with President Reagan during a gathering of prominent refuseniks at the American embassy.

Charny, who walked off the plane on his own, has undergone surgery for a cancerous tumour on his back and has what is believed to be benign tumor on his neck that must be removed. He recently suffered a heart attack, leaving Soviet physicians reluctant to operate on the neck tumor for fear his heart was too weak.

In 1986, the New England Medical Center offered Charny free treatment. Leslie Fuhrer, a spokesman for the center, said Charny will be examined Monday by a cardiologist.

"We don't really know what's wrong until we examine him ourselves," Fuhrer said.

Charny's release resolves one of the best-known refusenik cases.

Beginning last year, Soviet officials increased Jewish emigration and have granted most well-known refuseniks exit visas. But Jewish activists assert thousands who have not attracted western media attention remain behind.

Among those who met Charny on his arrival were U.S. Sens. Edward M. Kennedy and John Kerry, D-Mass., and Kitty Dukakis, the wife of Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis.

During the first five months of 1988, the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration in Geneva reported, 4,574 Jews have been allowed to emigrate from the Soviet Union.

More than 8,000 Jews were allowed to leave last year, a sharp increase from previous years but far below the peak of more than 51,000 in 1979.

Probers Will Study Radar Signals From Iranian Jet

By BRYAN BRUMLEY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pentagon investigators will be taking a close look at whether the USS Vincennes detected radar signals emanating from the Iran A300 Airbus that it mistook for an F-14 fighter and shot down, military and industry sources say.

Publicly available evidence suggests that the Airbus was not using its weather or navigational radar, which send out different signals than radar aboard an F-14 and could easily have been distinguished by equipment aboard the Vincennes, according to Pentagon officials.

"If an F-14 is using its target acquisition radar, it is a very specific signal, and one which you can easily identify," Pentagon spokesman Dan Howard told reporters on July 5, two days after the incident.

Pentagon and industry sources said it would be common practice for either an attacking F-14 or an Airbus making the 175-mile run in clear weather between Bandar Abbas, Iran, and Dubai, in the United Arab Emirates, not to turn on its radar.

"The Iranians know ... when they paint something with their target illumination radar, that we can detect it and we can identify the target very specifically from that information," Howard said.

"It's not necessary to turn a lot of this equipment on if you know the location already from other sources," he said. "You can wait until you actually release your ordnance."

The absence of a radar signal, therefore, would tell the Vincennes' officers nothing about the approaching plane, but any radar signal originating from the Iranian aircraft should have identified it as civilian or military.

A computer analysis of electronic data from the Vincennes has been conducted in the United States and flown to Bahrain, in the Persian Gulf, where a six-member team headed by Rear Adm. William M. Fogarty is investigating the incident.

Pentagon officials have declined to discuss information uncovered by Fogarty, including whether the Iranian aircraft was sending out radar signals.

A device known as a transponder aboard the Airbus was sending one set of identification signals common to civilian and military aircraft, as well as a signal unique to warplanes, Howard said.

And the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Adm. William J. Crowe Jr., said that it was impossible for a ship to use its own radar to precisely identify an approaching aircraft, a view shared by Navy and industry officials who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The issue of whether the Airbus was emitting radar signals is quite different, however, and the answer is not likely to be known publicly until the results of the Fogarty investigation are released, something that Navy officials now say they do not expect until early or mid-August.

The Vincennes, and many other U.S. warships in the gulf, are equipped with a device known as a SLQ-32, which can distinguish the "signatures" of radars. Radars that are used by commercial airliners are quite different from those used by military aircraft.

The exact differences are classified, industry and Navy sources said, but generally military radars are far more powerful, operate on different frequencies, radiate farther, and "ping" objects more frequently with radio waves than do commercial radars, they said.

The SLQ-32, manufactured by Raytheon, Corp. of Massachusetts "is a little like a fuzz-buster," said one industry source. "It can spot a highway cop if he has his radar on. But if he doesn't have his radar on, you won't spot him."

The SLQ-32 can be programmed to distinguish the "signatures" of various types of radar. And one Navy source said that even if the device were not programmed to make that distinction, a skilled operator can tell the difference anyway.

Howard, in briefing reporters, said that he did not know "what the SLQ-32 was saying" aboard the Vincennes. "All that stuff is on the tape and will presumably be examined by the inquiry."

The 80 F-14s sold to Iran in the 1970s by the Grumman Corp. of Long Island, N.Y., were equipped with a radar system known as Airborne Weapons Guidance 9, or AWG-9, a sophisticated tracking and targeting device manufactured by Hughes Aircraft Corp. Iran is thought to have about 15 remaining F-14s capable of flying.

Rains Postpone British Open Third Round

All For Nothing

Tom Watson, winner of five British Opens, shows his feelings during third-round play in the rain-hit British Open Saturday. Watson will get to start his third round over again on Sunday, weather permitting. (AP Laserphoto)

LYTHAM, England (AP) — Heavy rains flooded at least four greens and forced postponement of the third round of the British Open Saturday.

Officials said the entire third and fourth rounds would be played Sunday, starting at 1:45 a.m. EDT, weather and course conditions permitting.

All of the scores shot today were thrown out.

Tournament organizers said play for the final 36 holes would be in threesomes, rather than the usual pairs. If a playoff is needed, it will be decided in sudden death over the third, fourth, fifth and 18th holes, they said.

The last time the open finished with a 36-hole final day was in 1961, when the tournament ended on Saturday.

Since the open went to a Sunday finish in 1980, it never has had more than the scheduled 18 holes played the final day. And, in its first 116 editions, golf's oldest tournment never has finished on a Monday.

Half the field of 71 golfers was on the course when rains, which started just after dawn, picked up.

A downpour about 2½ hours after the first starters, Payne Stewart and Gordon Brand Jr., teed off flooded greens at the ninth, 10th, 11th and 12th holes, and play was suspended at 7:20 a.m. EDT.

Officials waited an hour and 25 minutes before announcing that play had been washed out.

By that time, standing water, ankle deep in some spots, had flooded the 11th and 12th fairways, and the ninth and 11th greens looked like small lakes.

All of the worst-hit holes are in the northwest corner of the Royal Lytham and St. Annes course, and that's the lowest ground on the layout.

Those golfers out early found wet but very playable conditions.

The greens were soft, the winds that howled the first two days were down and scores were dropping.

Hubert Green of the United States took advantage of those conditions to birdie five of the first seven holes, dropping his overnight 5-over par to even-par. Then the rains came.

"The greens to where I played were not that bad," said Green, who was stopped on the eighth hole. "I got a run going."

That phenomenal start to the round was washed away with the rain.

"It can't be helped," Green said. "It's what the game of golf is all about."

Despite the rain, more than 35,000 fans had crowded onto the course by noon, and they were seeing the lowest scores of the tournament.

Gary Player of South Africa and Payne Stewart of the United States, two of the first four starters, each played the first nine holes in 2-under-par 33. Peter Mitchell of England, the 10th player out, eagled the par-5 sixth hole, as did Ian Woosnam of Wales. American Paul Azinger each birdied three of the first five holes.

Nick Price, the leader by one shot after 36 holes, and second-place Seve Ballesteros never got on the course. They had been set to tee off at 10:15 a.m. EDT.

The odds on Ballesteros winning his third open championship shortened considerably as the third round began. Britain's legal bookmakers made the Spaniard a 2-to-1 favorite, with defending champion Nick Faldo of England second at 4-1, 1985 champ Sandy Lyle of Scotland 7-1 and Price 8-1.

Craig Stadler of the United States was next at 11-1, with two more Americans, Andy Bean and Fred Couples, at 14-1 and countryman Bob Tway 20-1.

All were even par or better. But the wind was the dominant player over the first two days.

For the second day in a row, winds off the Irish Sea blew scores sky high Friday as the field was cut to 71 golfers for the final two rounds.

On opening day, it was raining and cold, and the wind blew hardest in the morning. Day 2 was sunny and warmer, and the wind picked up in the late afternoon.

"It was a one-shot, maybe a two-shot difference," said Ballesteros, who saw his first-round lead blown away in the afternoon breeze of an even-par second round.

Price, who hasn't won a tournament in Europe, Africa or the United States since 1985, matched Ballesteros's opening-round 67 for a 5-under-par total of 137 and a one-shot lead over the Spaniard.

Price was out early on the second day, before the winds picked up, and said the warmer, calmer conditions gave him a big boost.

"The warmer weather helped," he said. "Playing on Thursday, I was wearing three layers to keep warm, and I was losing the feel."

Five of the six golfers right after Ballesteros on the board were early starters, too.

Faldo and Stadler were tied for third at 2-under 140, Stadler shooting 3-under and Faldo 2-under for the day.

Next was Bean, who birdied five of the last nine holes for a 1-under 70-141.

Lyle and Couples had midday rounds of 69 for even-par two-hole totals. They were joined at 142 by Tway, who went out late, moved to 3-under with seven holes left — and dropped all three shots in the wind.

Of all the golfers in the second half of the field, only one — three-time champion Jack Nicklaus, with a 1-under 70 — broke par for the second day. Nicklaus was 3-over for the tournament, at 145.

"I was here about 11 o'clock and it looked as it it would be a nice day," Ballesteros said. "But the wind came up and it was very tough out there."

Price started the day 1-under, in a four-way tie for fourth, and swung his round at the end of the front nine.

He eagled the par-5 sixth hole, took a birdie-4 at No. 7, then a birdie-3 at No. 8.

He traded a bogey-4 at the 12th for a birdie-3 at the 15th, but by the that time, he said, his fate was assured.

"The real secret of this golf course is getting a good score out and holding it on the way in," he said. "Those par-5's are not tough par-5's."

That's the way Ballesteros did it Thursday. But on the second day, he bogeyed the par-4 third by two-putting from 10 feet and — when he bogeyed the treacherous 14th — there was no pad remaining.

"I feel I played better on the back side today," said Ballesteros, who had two bogeys on the back nine in the first round. "But I played the front side better (Thursday)."

The cut for the last two rounds was 148, 6-over par and two shots higher than at the open in Muirfield, Scotland, last year.

Even at that inflated level, the cut took away some of the biggest names in the field.

Gone were two-time champion Lee Trevino and former Masters champ Larry Mize, at 149; Christy O'Connor Jr., of Ireland and former American amateur champion Scott Verplank, at 150; Raymond Floyd at 153; Hal Sutton at 154; Tony Jacklin at 159; and Mark Calcavecchia at 160.

The highest score, 21-over 163, was shared by three players — Scottish Open champion Barry Lane and amateur Darren Prosser of England, and Robert Richardson of South Africa.

The Ninth Hole Told Story Of A Day That Never Was

LYTHAM, England (AP) — The scene at the ninth hole of the Royal Lytham and St. Annes Golf Club was played in two parts.

Together, they told the story of the Day That Never Was at the British Open.

Stage left sat the scoreboard, showing Curtis Strange 1-under for the round and Graham Marsh even-par.

Stage right were two members of the grounds crew, using big squeegees to try to push rain water off the green.

The ninth green was one of at least three that flooded in downpours Saturday, forcing officials to postpone the third round of golf's oldest event by one day.

"This is very disappointing, to have this happen at this stage," said Alistair Low, the tournament chairman.

They'll try to play two rounds Sunday, the first time since 1961 at Royal Birkdale that the last 36 holes of the open would be contested on one day.

The rain started just after dawn, soaking a course that got a good dousing in heavy showers a week ago.

Strange, the U.S. Open champion, and Marsh, an Australian who plays on the PGA European Tour, had just reached the ninth green when the heavy rain hit.

Until then, it had been a gentle shower, softening the greens to hold the ball better and becalming the biting northwest wind that had blown scores sky high over the first two days.

Strange, 6-over for the first 36 holes, birdied the par-5 sixth to stand 1-under for the round, while Marsh was still at 6-over after swapping bogey and birdie at seven and eight.

Then the rains came.

"It's not the end of the world," said Hubert Green, the American who may have lost most of all in Saturday's rainout.

Starting the day at 5-over 146, Green birdied Nos. 2, 3, 4, 6 and 7 to stand even-par.

Because of the need to change pin placement on the ninth green for Sunday, Low said, the scores were wiped out. Green will start Sunday back at 5-over.

"It can't be helped," Green said. "It's what the game of golf is all about."

Tournament officials waited about 1½ hours before abandoning play. While they waited, most of the 35,000 fans who had converged on the course milled around.

They jammed the Tented Village, a huge hall of stalls selling virtually everything related to golf, from clubs to course-side condominiums.

They packed the food and drink booths, overflowing the bar and bulging the side walls of the champagne tent.

They huddled under colorful umbrellas, bleachers, trees, even tractor-trailer trucks to try to stay dry.

And they waited for the golf to resume. It never did.

The announcement came at 1:45 p.m. British Summer Time. Water was standing ankle deep on some fairways and organizers said four greens were flooded, although Low said there was special trouble at Nos. 9, 10 and 11.

"They are different composition than other greens on the course, and they tend to flood," Low said.

As the fans trekked through the mud toward parking lots and hotel rooms, they were making plans to fill the empty afternoon and evening in a rain-drench seaside town.

Many talked of dinner or drinks. Some discussed movies and television. One threesome was heard debating whether to rent some X-rated videotapes from a nearby store.

Not everyone was leaving, though. On the practice tee, Mark James of England was hard at work, practicing his iron shots as the rain poured down.

ECU Offensive Line Hopes To Beat Out Size Problem

Clearing The Way

Grant Lowe (52) holds off a blocker for ECU quarterback Travis Hunter during a game last season. Lowe, a 6-5, 270-pounder, will be looked upon to aid the Pirate offensive line again this year. (Reflector File Photo)

If there is one lesson that East Carolina offensive line coach Steve Shankweiler has tried to pass on to his players, it's that technique more often than not can overcome size.

And although his offensive line is considered small compared to some of its opponents, he says he has confidence in them.

"They are not giants, but they have really come to believe in what I'm teaching technique-wise," Shankweiler said. "They've learned that by being coachable, they can be successful, which is a great lesson in life too. When you play against some of the people that we play against, it's a necessity."

Shankweiler is in his second year coaching the Pirate offensive lineman and to say he's a little more relaxed heading into his second season would be an understatement.

During his first year at ECU, Shankweiler found himself heading into the 1987 season with an offensive line with no real playing experience to speak of.

"It's hard to explain what happened," he said. "You had a group of kids before I came here that were starting and playing for about three years and these kids didn't get much (playing time). They had to play a year before they should have.

"I thought they responded well. The tradeoff is they have more experience, but as a team you struggle with it initially. It helps the player, but it hurts the team. But we've gone through it and as it turns out, they played pretty decent."

This year, ECU returns the bulk of last year's offensive line, including all five starters.

In fact, only tackles John O'Driscoll, who started early in the year, and Leon Hall, a backup, are gone from last year's offensive line.

Shankweiler felt the offensive line matured at midseason, during the Virginia Tech and Cincinnati wins.

"They really got some confidence (in those games)," he said. "Those were the first games that you can say as a group, they began to physically dominate the people they were playing. They dominated N.C. State (in the opener), but (against) Florida State, West Virginia (both losses), they struggled.

"But from that point on, they really began to play with a lot more pride and also we had very few injuries which helped them get to that point. From midseason on they were as good an offensive line as what we playing against.

"Right now they have a lot of confidence in themselves and for the most part it is warranted."

Shankweiler feels they should be able to go two deep at each position which may not sound like much, but is an improvement over last year when the Pirates went only one deep at each position on the offensive line.

"It's a concern but it's better than what it's been," he added.

Left guard Billy Michel is recovering from a knee injury, while right guard Stewart Southall is coming off an ankle injury he suffered in spring practice. Both are expected back for the start of fall drills.

Mets Top Braves With Eighth-Inning Run

ATLANTA (AP) — Kevin McReynolds' pop fly double to right field with two outs in the eighth inning scored Dave Magadan from first base as the New York Mets beat the Atlanta Braves 3-2 Saturday night.

Right fielder Dale Murphy failed to make a sliding catch and the ball got away, allowing the slow-footed Magadan to score.

The victory kept the Mets 2½ games ahead of second-place Pittsburgh in the National League East.

Magadan started the winning rally with a one-out infield single off the left hand of reliever Paul Assenmacher, 4-5.

The victory went to Edwin Nunez, 1-0, in his first appearance with New York. Nunez, replaced Dwight Gooden starting the seventh, and pitched one scoreless inning.

Roger McDowell pitched the final two innings for his ninth save. Andres Thomas led off the Braves' eighth with a single, stole second and moved to third on a grounder with one out. But McDowell got Gary Roenicke on a popup and pinch-hitter Jim Morrison flied to center.

Ron Gant walked leading off the bottom of the ninth, stole second, and moved to third on a grounder. But Gerald Perry, with the infield in, hit a grounder to second and Murphy grounded to third to end the game.

The Braves stole eight bases in the game, the most ever against the Mets in one game and an Atlanta record. Dion James had three steals and Perry two.

The Mets twice rallied from one-run deficits to tie the score.

Pinch-hitter Lee Mazzilli's sacrifice fly made it 2-2 in the seventh, scoring Mackey Sasser, who had singled and advanced to third on Keith Miller's bloop single behind first base.

Atlanta had taken a 2-1 lead in the sixth on a successful suicide squeeze when Bruce Benedict got the bunt down on a head-high inside fastball from Gooden.

The squeeze scored Thomas, who had opened with a double and reached third on a single by James.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Chris James hit an eighth-inning grand slam and added a double and two singles, leading the Philadelphia Phillies to 10-6 victory over the Houston Astros Saturday night.

The Phillies had taken a 6-5 lead in the bottom of the sixth on Phil Bradley's second double of the game.

In the eighth, Houston reliever Juan Agosto walked the first three hitters and was relieved by Dave Smith. Smith got Bradley to ground into a second-to-home-to-first double play, then intentionally walked Mike Schmidt. But James foiled the strategy when he hit his 12th homer of the year, and his first career grand slam. It was the first home run off Smith in 110 innings.

Reliever Bruce Ruffin, 6-7, allowed only one hit in three innings for the victory which broke a four-game Phillies' losing streak. Steve Bedrosian finished up for the Phillies, allowing a ninth-inning homer to Kevin Bass.

Reliever Danny Darwin, 3-9, took the loss which snapped the Astros' five-game winning streak.

Houston had tied the score at 5-5 in the top of the sixth on a RBI grounder by Billy Doran. But then Juan Samuel led off the bottom of the sixth with a single, stole second and scored one out later on Bradley's double.

The Phillies took a 3-0 lead in the first, on an RBI double by Bradley, and RBI singles by James and Darren Daulton. Houston scored a run in the second on a sacrifice fly by Rafeal Ramirez, but the Phillies added a run in the bottom of the inning on Milt Thompson's sacrifice fly. A sacrifice fly by Glenn Davis cut the Phillies' lead to 4-2.

Houston tied the score in the fifth off Phillies starter Don Carman on another sacrifice fly by Davis and an RBI double by Buddy Bell.

The Phillies moved ahead 5-4 in the bottom of the inning when James doubled and scored on Steve Jeltz's two-out infield single.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Mike LaValliere's two-run double and pitcher Doug Drabek's two-run triple highlighted a six-run third inning as the Pittsburgh Pirates routed the San Francisco Giants 10-1 Saturday night for their eighth straight victory.

Sid Bream and Tommy Gregg also had two runs batted in apiece for the Pirates, who matched their longest winning streak since 1983.

Bream's single scored a pair of runs in the first and Gregg's infield RBI grounder made it 3-0.

In the third inning, starter Mike LaCoss walked the bases loaded and LaValliere, who was 3-for-4, hit a two-run double. Rafael Belliard had an RBI single off reliever Randy Bockus and Drabek scored two more runs with his second triple of the season. Barry Bonds drove in the sixth run of the inning with a single.

LaCoss, who dropped to 7-7, is 0-5 on the road this season.

Gregg hit a sacrifice fly in the fourth after Andy Van Slyke started the inning with a single to extend his hitting streak to nine games.

Drabek, 7-5, allowed six hits and struck out five in eight innings. He lost his shutout when Kevin Mitchell led off the seventh with his 10th homer. Barry Jones got the last three outs for the Pirates.

Giants pitching has allowed 27 runs in 24 innings in the three losses to Pittsburgh. Prior to the All-Star break, the Giants had won five straight games, allowing only three runs in 45 innings.

MONTREAL (AP) — Tim Raines hit two home runs for the first time in his 10-year career and Hubie Brooks added a two-run shot as the Montreal Expos defeated the Cincinnati Reds 6-1 Saturday night.

Dennis Martinez, 10-7, pitched a six-hitter for his fourth complete game as the Expos won for the ninth time in 10 games. He struck out five and walked none.

The score was tied 1-1 when Raines hit his eighth homer — and his first since June 17 — with one out in the fifth off starter Tom Browning, 8-4. After Andres Galarraga doubled, Brooks hit his 11th homer.

Montreal added two runs in the seventh when Otis Nixon led off with a walk and Raines followed with his ninth homer.

Browning got into trouble in the second inning when Nelson Santovenia and Luis Rivera singled and Martinez was hit by a pitch to load the bases with one out. Browning walked Nixon to force in a run but escaped further damage when Kal Daniels caught Raines' fly ball in short left field and threw Rivera out at the plate.

The Reds tied the score 1-1 when Bo Diaz led off the fifth with his seventh homer.

CHICAGO (AP) — The Chicago Cubs and Los Angeles Dodgers were tied 2-2 in the ninth inning Saturday when rain forced postponement of their National League game, forcing it to be replayed in its entirety as part of a double-header Sunday.

All statistics of Saturday's game will count on the record.

Tim Belcher will pitch against Jeff Pico in Sunday's opener, with Chicago's Al Nipper facing Brian Holton in the second game.

The Cubs took a 1-0 lead in the first on Mitch Webster's double, a groundout and a balk by Orel Hershiser.

Chicago made it 2-0 in the third on Rafael Palmeiro's two-out double and Andre Dawson's bloop single to center.

The Dodgers scored an unearned run off Cubs starter Jamie Moyer in the fifth. Rick Dempsey walked, was sacrificed to second by Hershiser, took third on a two-out error by third baseman Vance Law and scored on Dave Anderson's single.

The Dodgers tied it 2-2 in the sixth after Mike Marshall and John Shelby singled and Jeff Hamilton sacrificed the runners to second and third, chasing Moyer. Tracy Woodson greeted reliever Les Lancaster with a sacrifice fly.

Moyer, who has made eight starts at home this year, is still looking for his first Wrigley Field victory. He is 5-8 overall but 0-5 at home.

Homers Power Twins Past Baltimore

BALTIMORE (AP) — Kirby Puckett hit a two-run homer in the first inning, and Greg Gagne and Gary Gaetti added solo shots, to power the Minnesota Twins to a 4-3 victory over the Baltimore Orioles Saturday night.

Twins starter Fred Toliver pitched seven innings of five-hit baseball in 90-plus degree temperatures to record his first American League victory. The well-traveled 27-year-old, who began in the Yankee organization and had pitched in the majors for Cincinnati and Philadelphia prior to his trade to the Twins, is 1-1 this season, 2-8 lifetime.

Puckett's homer brought home Dan Gladden, who opened the game with the first of his three hits, a double to left. Gagne homered leading off in the fifth, Gaetti as the first batter in the sixth. It was the 21st of the season for Gaetti, who is second in the AL behind Oakland's Jose Canseco (24). Home runs by Ken Gerhart and Mickey Tettleton provided the first two Oriole runs. Gerhart homered in the sixth, Tettleton in the seventh. It was the eighth of the season for each.

Juan Berenguer and Jeff Reardon finished up for the Orioles. Reardon gave up an RBI single to Cal Ripken in the eighth before recording his 25th save in his 29th save opportunity.

Red Sox.....7
Kansas City.....6

BOSTON (AP) — Kevin Romine hit his first major-league homer leading off the ninth inning Saturday, capping a comeback from a 6-0 deficit and giving the Boston Red Sox a 7-6 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

Romine hit Steve Farr's second pitch into the left field screeen for his first homer in 108 big-league at-bats, giving interim Red Sox manager Joe Morgan his third consecutive victory.

The homer made a winner of reliever Lee Smith, 4-4, who pitched the ninth. Farr fell to 2-2.

Kansas City, swept in a doubleheader in Morgan's debut Friday, led 6-0 through five innings, but the Red Sox scored four runs in the sixth and tied it in the eighth on Dwight Evans' two-run homer. Evans did not start because of a hamstring pull, but he got into the game as a pinch-hitter in the sixth.

The Royals jumped to a 2-0 lead in the first on George Brett's sacrifice fly and an RBI double by Danny Tartabull.

Bo Jackson made it 3-0 with his 12th homer in the second, hitting Oil Can Boyd's first pitch of the inning off the back wall in center to the right of the flagpole.

Seitzer's double and a single by Brett made it 4-0 before Boyd was lifted with no outs in the third.

With one out in the fifth, Seitzer singled and took third on Brett's 30th double and 45th extra-base hit, both tops in the American League. One out later, Pat Tabler drove in both runners with a single.

Mark Gubicza blanked Boston on three hits until he wilted in 98-degree heat in the sixth, but the Red Sox broke through on singles by Marty Barrett, Wade Boggs and Mike Greenwell.

With one out, Jim Rice walked, filling the bases. After Todd Benzinger fouled out, Rich Gedman lined a two-run single, making it 6-3.

Gubicza then walked Evans, with Rice scoring on Mike MacFarlane's passed ball on ball four. Gubicza then as replaced by Jeff Montgomery, who got out of the inning.

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Jeff Robinson continued his mastery over California with a four-hitter for eight innings, and Matt Nokes and Gary Pettis homered in a five-run fifth inning as the Detroit Tigers beat the Angels 10-1 and snapped their seven-game winning streak.

Robinson, 11-3, improved his season record against the Angels to 3-0. The first two victories were complete games, and he has aliowed only 12 hits and two runs in the three games.

The Angels took a 1-0 lead in the second inning on Tony Armas' sacrifice fly.

But the Tigers, held hitless for 3 1-3 innings by Willie Fraser, 6-9, took control in the fifth.

NEW YORK (AP) — Fred Manrique drove in three runs and Steve Lyons homered and hit a sacrifice fly Saturday as the Chicago White Sox beat the New York Yankees 7-4.

A crowd of 48,102 on Old-Timers Day at Yankee Stadium saw rookie Melido Perez, at 22 the youngest player on either team, improve his record to 9-5. Tommy John, the oldest player in the majors at 45, fell to 7-3.

Perez, brother of Montreal pitcher Pascual Perez, left after Jose Cruz lined a pinch-hit grand slam with no outs in the seventh inning, making it 6-4. Bobby Thigpen got the last five outs for his 19th save.

John and Perez matched zeroes in 89-degree heat until Lyons hit a solo home run with one out in the sixth. Lyons' fifth homer gave him only nine hits in his last 50 at-bats.

Morgan Already Making Own Decisions

By The Associated Press

One of Joe Morgan's first actions as manager of the Boston Red Sox was to veto the signing of designated hitter Larry Parrish.

Parrish, 37, hit 32 homers and drove in 100 runs for Texas last season but slumped to .190 with seven homers this year and was cut earlier this month by the Rangers.

Boson general manager Lou Gorman thought Parrish's right-handed power could still reach the left-field wall but Morgan wants to go with youth.

For years, Morgan has been getting mail for former Cincinnati second baseman Joe Morgan. In fact, Boston's Morgan even got bills for Cincinnati's Morgan...

Several hours after the Red Sox fired John McNamara, the Philadelphia Phillies dismissed batting coach Del Unser and third base coach Dave Bristol. Usually the coaches go with the manager, but the Phillies extended Lee Elia's contract earlier this month. Bristol must be shaking his head. He was fired as manager of Cincinnati in 1969, Milwaukee in 1972 and Atlanta in 1977. Now, he's out as a third base coach...

If Morgan doesn't make it in Boston, the Red Sox are still interested in talking to Joe Torre. Torre, who is a broadcaster, could have had the San Diego Padre job but turned it down...

Fred Lynn is being shopped around by the Baltimore Orioles. The Minnesota Twins, in need of pitching help, are interested in Texas knuckleballer Charlie Hough...

New York manager Davey Johnson says he expects the Mets' main competition down the stretch to come from Montreal instead of Pittsburgh or Chicago. The Expos, who surprised everyone last year, got off to a slow start caused by numerous pitching injuries. Johnson also said Darryl Strawberry should have had 70 RBI at the All-Star break.

Don Fehr of the players' association and Barry Rona of the Player Relations Committee met this week to discuss preliminary work on the new collective bargaining agreement. The reports that San Francisco pitcher Rick Reuschel got married during the All-Star break were true. The reports of whom he married were not. Numbers Game

Atlanta's 30-54 record in the first half was its worst since moving to Atlanta in 1966. It doesn't look much better. In the second half the last six seasons, the Braves are 196-262 (.428) compared to 268-244 (.523) in the first half... Charlie Hough is 1-9 lifetime against Milwaukee... Atlanta's Paul Runge has four career homers and three have been inside-the-park..

All-Star Numbers

Dave Winfield hit his seventh double in Tuesday's game to extend his All-Star record. Winfield has hit in seven straight All-Star games to tie Mickey Mantle and Joe Morgan. Whitey Herzog is 0-3 as manager of the National League All-Stars. He is the only NL manager to lose three games. Don Mattingly is 0-for-8 in five All-Star games. The AL has won the last two All-Star games played in NL parks (Houston and Cincinnati). The only other time that occurred was 1947 at Wrigley Field and 1949 at Ebbets Field.

Sometime in the next century, another All-Star game will be played at Cincinnati's Riverfront Stadium. The stories before the game will still reminisce about Pete Rose and Ray Fosse in 1970. And, oh yes, the All-Star game was played there again in 1988.

From Miners To Minors To Majors

CLEVELAND (AP) — Doc Edwards has gone from the miner leagues to the minor leagues to the major leagues, leaving behind the mountains of West Virginia and his own volatile temper.

And after one year as manager of the Cleveland Indians, Edwards hopes he has found a home in the big time.

Edwards doesn't get back to his native West Virginia very much, a place where he says "you can sit on the back porch and spit tobacco, but that doesn't make for too exciting a week."

There were days when chewin' and spittin' suited him fine. Growing up in Red Jacket, W.Va., Edwards got his real start by playing catcher and first base on a team of coal miners.

"I remember when I was 16 years old playing on one of the coal mining teams — I was playing on the same team with my father," Edwards said. "We had all the good local players, playing for different teams from the coal mining towns.

"One of my fondest memories was taking over for my dad. I was probably proudest when he turned the reins over to me."

After the miner leagues came the minor leagues.

And after four years in the minors, Edwards was called up in 1962 for an abbreviated career as a catcher with Cleveland, the Kansas City A's, New York Yankees and Philadelphia.

One of the biggest impressions made on Edwards was by Bob Tillman of Atlanta, who ran over the then-33-year-old Edwards when the player-coach was starting his fourth game with the Phillies.

"I got down to get the ball and leaned over to block the plate," Edwards said, crouching over to relive his playing days. "He came in and popped me right on top of the head.

"I walked around like this for a couple of days," he said, shrugging his shoulders and stalking around. "The next day he came up to me and said, 'You knew I had to get you.'

"I said, 'Yeah, I knew. I wouldn't have respected you otherwise."

Edwards entered coaching full-time later that year and became a manager in 1973. In his first season, with West Haven, he was named Eastern League manager of the year after a second place finish. He also won managerial honors in 1975 with Midland of the Texas League and 1983 with Charleston, W.Va., of the International League. The rise up the ladder came with a decline in his temper.

"The first year, I was kicked out 13 times in 140 games, including three days in a row," he said. "After a warning (from the front office), I only had eight the next year."

Edwards now averages four to six ejections per year and had just two at the All-Star break — but almost had a third during heated objections a week ago to an Oakland home run that he thought had been a foul ball.

"I had to quit arguing. I was going to put my arms around his neck and choke" him, Edwards said. Instead, he pounded a wall in the dugout and three days later still was nursing a gash across his knuckles.

Edwards was named the Indians' manager on July 16, 1987, after coaching in the minor leagues for 13 years. Between All-Star breaks, the Indians have had a 75-88 mark.

A record like that won't win pennants, but Edwards said he believes he has the Indians heading in the right direction — generally — especially after the Tribe finished last year 61-101.

"I was hoping we would have had 50 wins by the All-Star break. That would be pretty good," Edwards said. "After losing 101 games, I don't think anybody could expect you to win 162."

At the All-Star break this year, the Indians were 45-43.

Edwards has managed only one team to a title — Midland in 1975 — and won't predict when the next one will come. He only said he believes he's found a new home in the majors.

Offensive Line...

as well as physically. When his senior year comes, he's got a chance to be as good an offensive lineman as there is around this country."

Lowe's backup has yet to be determined. Competing for the spot are Mark Weatherford, (6-6, 254, redshirt freshman) who was moved from the defensive line in the spring, and Tod (cq) Creech (6-4, 260, So.). Creech, who has not played much at all, will back up both tackle spots. Weatherford missed spring practice with an injury, so he has yet to even practice at the position.

Left Guard: Michel (6-5, 275, Sr.) must recover from a knee injury. "At the time he got hurt, he was turning out to be a super player," Shankweiler said.

But because of Michel's injury, Wade Perry (6-3, 270, Sr) was able to step in adn gain a lot of experience. Another contender is Billy Maxwell (6-2, 231, So.).

Center: Kyle Condrey (6-1, 260, Sr.) "He started every game last year and his teammates voted us our best lineman," Shankweiler said. "He's a former walk-on who came here and really took to the situation. We expect good things from him this year.

"There were times you maybe wished he was bigger, against a (University of South Carolina noseguard) Roy Hart or somebody like that, but he really didn't have a problem with that. When you look at film of him, he went up against some good players and he hung in there and in a lot of cases came out on top."

Condrey will be backed up by Chad Martin (6-4, 275, So.), who will also be the backup right guard. Dean Taylor (6-1, 265, redshirt freshman) could also figure in as a backup center.

Right Guard: Southall (6-1, 263, Jr.) "He got hurt in the spring and didn't go the last 10 days, but up until that point was having a great spring practice and he had a good year last year," Shankweiler said.

Southall will be backed up by Martin and possibly Walt Hammett (6-3, 260, Junior college transfer who went through spring practice).

Right Tackle: Todd Drugac (6-3, 280, Jr) "Todd started the last six or seven games," Shankweiler said. "He improved his pass blocking greatly in the spring which was a point of emphasis for him."

Tim Orr (6-4, 260, Sr.) will backup Drugac. Orr has not played much in his career, but was having a good spring until he got hurt and missed the last one-third of spring practice.

□ □ □

With well over a year together under their belt, Shankweiler feels his offensive linemen have made a lot of progress.

"It's still a young unit, there are only two seniors," he said. "A lot of people are putting the heat on them, saying they are all back, but they are all still young.

"They are very coachable. They know exactly what I am talking about. They can intelligently discuss and understand what we're doing, rather than me just telling them. They understand why we're doing things."

The first man to gain 1,000 yards or more rushing in the NFL was Beattie Feathers of the Chicago Bears in 1934. He picked up 1,004 yards on the ground.

Walker Rebounds For LPGA Lead

DANVERS, Mass. (AP) — Colleen Walker lost her entire five-stroke lead over Jan Stephenson on the first eight holes. She got nearly all of it back on the last three.

"I'm not happy with the way I started out, but I am happy with the way I finished up," Walker said after ending Saturday's third round of the LPGA Boston Five Classic with a four-stroke lead over Stephenson. "It just proves that your mind is stronger than you think it is."

They were tied after 15 holes before Walker, the leader after the first two rounds, birdied the 16th and 18th on the steamy Tara Ferncroft golf course. Stephenson bogeyed the 17th and 18th, a 485-yard par-5 in which she hit a bunker and missed a 10-foot putt for a par.

"The last two holes, anything that can go wrong did go wrong," Stephenson said. "I feel sick."

The four-stroke swing left Walker, who shot 2-under-par 70, with a three-day total of 11-under 205. Stephenson had a 3-under 69 for a 209 going into Sunday's final round of the $300,000 tournament north of Boston.

"The third round is the tougher round to get through than the fourth round. I think it's the turning point of the tournament," Walker said. "Saturday is when people make their move."

Stephenson made hers early. She had four birdies in a five-hole stretch to tie Walker at 8-under after eight holes.

"I felt confident and smelled blood," Stephenson said.

But she began having driving troubles on the 14th hole "when it all just came apart."

"The tables turned," she said. "Once I hit my bad drive (at 14), she smelled blood."

Walker said she didn't panic on the front nine despite Stephenson's surge.

"I have a little game plan and just stuck with it," she said after going 1-over on the front nine and 3-under on the back side.

Betsy King, who played with Walker and Stephenson in the final threesome, shot a 70 on the par 72, 6,008-yard course and was in third place at 210.

Walker, the Tour's fifth-leading money-winner this year, is seeking her second career title and first this year. Stephenson is seventh on the earnings list.

Walker began the day with a five-stroke lead over six golfers, including Stephenson and King. But a slow start in which she bogeyed the first two holes, both par-4s, cut Walker's lead to two strokes over Cindy Rarick.

Walker never fell out of the lead although she shared it with Stephenson for much of the humid round played with temparatures in the 90s.

Stephenson trailed by three strokes after making pars on the first three holes.

Then Stephenson, seeking her first victory of the year and 17th of her career, made her move. A birdie on the 337-yard fourth hole began her string of five holes in which she made four birdies. Her birdie on the 150-yard eighth hole put her at 8-under and gave her a share of the lead with Walker for the first time.

They remained tied until Walker birdied the 150-yard 12th hole with a 6-foot putt. But Stephenson came right back with a birdie on the par-5, 465-yard 13th. Both made pars on the next two holes before Walker went ahead at the 156-yard 16th with a 4-foot birdie putt.

While Stephenson was bogeying the final hole, Walker birdied it by two-putting from 50 feet.

Like Stephenson, Jane Geddes, who won the tournament the past two years, shot 4-under-par 31 on the front nine to move into contention at 6-under. But she bogeyed the 16th hole and finished the day with a 69 for a 211, six strokes off the lead.

She was tied with Pam Allen, who also shot a 69. Rarick and Cathy Marino, who both shot 72, were tied at 212 with Patty Sheehan, who fired a 67.

McCallister After First PGA Victory

COAL VALLEY, Ill. (AP) — Blaine McCallister owns a share of a PGA Tour scoring record. Now, he'd like a victory.

McCallister, a seven-year pro who has yet to record a PGA win, followed his second-round 62 with a 63 Saturday, matching the Tour scoring mark for consecutive rounds and taking a four-stroke lead after three rounds of the $600,000 Hardee's Golf Classic.

"My swing is in a groove," said McCallister, whose 54-hole total of 17-under-par 193 is four shots better than the previous low of 197 set by Scott Hoch in 1980.

McCallister, who shot his 62 in 100-degree temperatures Friday, had an eagle and five birdies in cloudy, cooler conditions for his 7-under 63. His 62-63-125 total for the middle two rounds matched the best consecutive two-round total in PGA history, equaling Ron Streck's total in the last two rounds of the 1978 Texas Open.

McCallister, who putts left-handed but swings right-handed, was two strokes better than the 15-under-par total Kenny Knox won with last year at the 6,606-yard Oakwood Country Club — and had the best score for the second straight day.

"I was trying to play the course. That's all I was trying to do. I don't get into playing the leader board," said McCallister, who would more than triple his 1988 earnings with Sunday's $108,000 first prize.

Dan Forsman, who won this tournament in 1985 when it was known as the Quad Cities Open and entered the day tied for the lead with McCallister and Russ Cochran, fell to second, four shots back, with a 67.

But Forsman, who turned 30 Friday, wasn't dismayed.

"It's been a Cinderella story all week with the birthday, etc," he said.

Cochran had a 69 Saturday and was at 199, six strokes behind McCallister.

Another shot back at 200 were Brad Fabel and Billy Ray Brown, who shot 67s, Dan Pohl, with a 68, and Sam Randolph, who had a 69.

Hoch, who shot a 67, and Mark Maness, with a 69, were at 201.

Streck and two-time U.S. Open winner Hale Irwin were in a group of nine tied at 202. Streck had a 70 abd Irwin shot a 69.

Tom Sieckmann, winner of last week's Anheuser-Busch Classic, had a double bogey on his final hole to finish at 69 and was tied with three others at 203.

First-round leader Gene Sauers, whose 62 was the best first round ever shot in this tourney, continued to fade. He carded a 70 for 205.

At 208 were defending champion Knox and Dr. Gil Morgan, last year's runnerup.

After temperatures rose as high as 103 degrees Friday, Saturday's round began in a light rain and was played in overcast and cool conditions until the sun broke through late in the day.

Davies Looks To Defend In U.S. Open

BALTIMORE (AP) — The enormity of winning back-to-back U.S. Women's Open titles does not escape Great Britain's Laura Davies.

In fact, she can't find the words to decribe what the achievement would mean to her or any female golfer. "Retaining any tournament is tough, but the U.S. Open ..."

Davies widens her blue eyes and shakes her head of blond hair, a feeble attempt at dealing with this overwhelming possibility, which she will find awaiting her at the Baltimore Country Club, the site of the 43rd U.S. Women's Open, which begins Thursday.

"I'll just be coming here trying to make a good defense of my title," Davies said before the tournament at he 90-year-old golf club nestled less than 10 miles north of Baltimore.

Davies won her first U.S. Women's Open in her first try, prevailing over Joanne Carner and Japan's Ayako Okamoto in a three-way, 18-hole playoff last year at the Plainfield (N.J.) Country Club. She became the fourth foreign player to win the title.

That's a lofty claim for a pro in her third year who had competed primarily in Europe prior to taking the championship, which was the first LPGA tournament title of her career.

The next week, Davies missed winning the Women's British Open by a stroke. "I held both titles for six days," said Davies, who has added two more LPGA titles to her credentials this year.

The 1988 Women's Open will be played over the Baltimore Country Club's Five Farms course, which will play 6,232 yards long to a par of 71 for the championship. The total purse will be $400,000, with $70,000 going to the winner.

Designed by A. W. Tillinghast in the 1920s, the Five Farms course is renowned for its rolling hills and fast, undulating putting surfaces.

"There's a tendency at some of these courses to make the greens very fast for us," said touring pro Betsy King.

"The way the greens slope at Five Farms, they shouldn't make them any faster. If you're three feet above the hole, your putt is likely to roll past and you won't wind up within 10 feet of it."

The Baltimore area has had to endure three weeks of very hot weather, with temperatures surpassing 100 degrees, but superintendent Merrill J. Frank pronounced the course "in very, very, very good shape."

And the greens will be quick, Frank assured. A few days before the championship, he plans to thin the greens, which have been a little slower than usual the past month, a few days before the tournament begins.

Frank said the putting surfaces will measure 10-10 1-2 feet on a stimpmeter, compared to the 9-9 1-2 feet, the United States Golf Association desires. A stimpmeter is a precision instrument that measures the roll of a golf ball on a green, enabling the comparison of the speed of greens on different golf courses.

"We want to give them a little something special," Frank said, "and besides, the members usually play on fast greens, so we said, 'Let's give the ladies the same quick greens."

There will be 150 women trying to negotiate those greens. Among the record 735 entries, were several golfers who could be called favorites in the elite field.

Among the previous Open winners in the field: Amy Alcott (1980), Jane Geddes (1986), Jan Stephenson (1983), Pat Bradley (1981), Kathy Baker Guadagnino (1985) and three-time winner Hollis Stacy, who also happens to be the last woman to repeat as Open Champion in 1977 and 1978. Stacy also won the 1984 title.

Records Shattered At Trials

On A Record Pace

Jackie Joyner-Kersee jumps 22' 11 3/4" in the long jump portion of the heptatholon competition at the U.S. Olympic Track and Field Trials in Indianapolis Saturday. Joyner-Kersee went on to win the heptatholon. (AP Laserphoto)

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Heptathlete Jackie Joyner-Kersee, the greatest woman athlete in the world, and her sister-in-law, sprinter Florence Griffith Joyner, shattered world track and field records with frightening ease Saturday in the U.S. Olympic Trials.

Joyner-Kersee, 26, smashed her world record in the heptathlon with 7,215 points, 57 more than she accumulated at the U.S. Olympic Festival at Houston in 1986.

Griffith Joyner, 28, ran her second-round heat in the women's 100-meter dash in 10.49 seconds, erasing the mark of 10.76 set by Evelyn Ashford of the United States in 1984.

There were two other sensational performances on the second day of the eight-day Trials at steamy Indiana University Track and Field Stadium, but neither will be eligible for record consideration because they were wind-aided.

Carl Lewis, winner of four gold medals in the 1984 Olympics, won the 100-meter dash in 9.78 seconds, the fastest in history, but a wind of 5.2 meters per second — over the allowable limit of 2.0 — will negate the mark.

Overall, the first seven finishers in the eight-man 100 final cracked the 10-second mark, barrier, making it the fastest race in history.

And Willie Banks, the world record-holder in the triple jump, became the first performer to surpass 59 feet, doing it twice — but both jumps were wind-aided.

The wind, which played such a big part in eradicating the efforts of Lewis and Banks for the record books, was a controversial part of Griffith Joyner's mark.

Some observers thought the race was wind-aided, because the wind gauge at the triple jump, which was being held at the same time, showed a reading above 2.0 meters per second.

But track officials said the wind was a crosswind and determined that the race was legal.

Griffith Joyner, the 1984 Olympic gold medalist and the 1987 silver medalist in the World Championships, was timed in 10.60 seconds in Saturday's first-round heats, but was aided by a wind of 3.2 meters per second.

After her astonishing performance in the second round, she was shocked at her time.

"I can't believe it — 10.49," she said. "It didn't feel like 10.49, but I've never run that fast."

In lowering Ashford's record by .27 of a second, she bettered the women's 100-meter mark by the biggest margin since 1968, when automatic timing was introduced.

She still has two 100 races to go Sunday — the semifinals and the final — plus the 200 next week.

Joyner-Kersee had mixed feelings about breaking her record.

She was delighted with her performance, but disappointed that her brother, Al, the 1984 Olympic champion in the triple jump, failed to make the team.

After her tough, two-day, seven-event competition, Joyner-Kersee was getting ice applied to her weary legs when the public address announcer named the three qualifiers in the triple jump.

When her brother's name was not announced, she cried for a few minutes.

"It hurts to see my brother not making the team," she said. "We're family. It hurts a lot."

Joyner-Kersee started the day 222 points ahead of the record she set two years ago. After the opening two events, the long jump and the javelin throw, she still was 212 ahead.

In the final 800 meters, she needed to run only 2:24.95 to break the record. She did it easily, finishing in 2:20.64 to become the first to surpass 7,200 points.

Joyner-Kersee, who missed the gold medal by only five points in the 1984 Olympics because of a hamstring injury, injured her right thumb Saturday during the long jump, her best event.

After fouling on her first attempt, she leaped 22-8, but as she landed, her spikes grazed the thumb.

Appearing to be in some pain, Joyner-Kersee was treated for several minutes by two trainers.

She then shook off the pain and jumped 22-11¾, a Trials record. Although it was far short of her American record of 24-5½ and short of her world heptathlon record of 23-9½, it was good enough to keep Joyner-Kersee on target for the overall world mark.

She then got off a javelin throw of 164-4, just one inch short of her career best.

After six events, Joyner-Kersee had a total of 6,401 points, compared with 6,189 during her record performance.

No other heptathlete has exceeded 7,000 points, a figure Joyner-Kersee also surpassed with 7,148 in the 1986 Goodwill Games at Moscow and 7,128 in the 1987 World Championships at Rome.

The temperature reached 120 degrees on the track Friday, but the irrepressible Joyner-Kersee didn't let it deter her from setting a first-day world best with 4,367 points.

She also set an American heptathlon record in the opening event, the 100-meter high hurdles, with a clocking of 12.71; broke the American heptathlon record in the high jump, clearing 6-4; set a Trials record in the shot put at 51-4 1-4, and set a world heptathlon record of 22.30 in the 200 meters.

Cindy Greiner finished second in the heptathlon with 6,226 points. Wendy Brown beat 1987 World Championship bronze medalist Jane Frederick for the third spot on the team by 31 points, 6,079 to 6,048.

In the men's 100 final, Lewis was joined on the Olympic team by Dennis Mitchell, who ran 9.86, and Calvin Smith (9.87).

Also going under 10.0 were Albert Robinson (9.88), Joe DeLoach (9.90), Mike Marsh (9.94) and Emmit King (9.98).

Lee McNeill was the only runner to miss going under 10.0, finishing eighth in 10.08.

"My father was an inspiration to me here," Lewis said.

His father, Bill, died of cancer in May 1987.

"He wanted me to come back after the World Championships and be the best," Lewis said. "He helped me rededicate myself to the sport.

"I think that my rededication has helped make me less intense off the track, but more intense in competition."

Banks Keeps Olympic Hopes Alive

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Kelcie Banks, a world amateur and Pan American Games champion, kept alive his hopes of going to Seoul when he beat Ed Hopson in the 125-pound bout of the Olympic Box-Offs on Saturday.

Banks won a 4-1 decision, which was roundly booed by about 2,500 fans at the Caesars Palace Sports Pavilion.

Had Hopson won, he would have made the Olympic team. The victory by Banks, invited to the box-off as a "most noteworty" opponent, means the two must fight Sunday for the Olympic berth.

The 6-foot Banks, a left-hander from Chicago, had lost 3-2 to Hopson in the semifinals of the Olympic Trials. Banks scored well with some left jabs and right-hand counters but Hopson, a 17-year-old high school junior from St. Louis, appeared to be the busier boxer.

"I thought it should have been 5-0," the 23-year-old Banks said, "but four judges saw me outbox him."

Another "most noteworthy" opponent, Michael Collins of LaPorte, Texas, forced a Sunday bout at 119 pounds when he scored a 4-1 decision over Trials champion Kennedy McKinney of Killeen, Texas.

"I thought I won all three rounds," said Collins, who was beaten by Olympic gold medalist Steve McCrory in the 112-pound final of the 1984 Trials, then missed the box-off because of a hairline fracture in his left leg.

"I thought I won the second and third rounds," said McKinney, who beat Collins 5-0 in the Olympic Trials semifinals. "I thought I had it. Evidently, they want another show tomorrow, so we'll give them one."

Riddick Bowe of New York forced a Sunday fight in the super heavyweight division when he outscored Robert Salters of Fort Bragg, N.C., 3-2 in a dull, mauling bout. Salters had stopped Bowe in the first round of the semifinals of the U.S. Amateur Championships, which he won, and scored a 4-1 decision over Bowe in the Olympic Trials final despite being knocked down in the first round.

There was a little action Saturday and Bowe apparently gained the verdict with quite a few left jabs and being busier inside. Bowe weighed 231 pounds while the 25-year-old Salters weighed 248½.

"I don't know why he thinks that I can work for four years and he can come out of the blue sky for six months and go to Seoul," the 20-year-old Bowe said.

Salters, who began boxing in 1986, now has a 15-6 record. Bowe said his record is 201-7.

In five of the first eight bouts, Olympic Trials champions won and made the Olympic team.

Kenneth Gould of Rockford, Ill., who won a world amateur title in 1986 when Banks won his, was just too fast and experienced for the harder-punching Gerry Payne of Washington in the 147-pound bout. Four of the five judges voted for Gould.

Michael Carbajal of Phoenix opened the show with a victory at 106 pounds when James Harris of Washington, D.C., was disqualified in the third round for holding. The bout was halted with 49 seconds left in the first round when the lights went out.

Arthur Johnson of Minneapolis scored a 4-1 decision over Chris Carrillo of Whittier, Calif., at 112 pounds. Johnson, who had had trouble in beating Carrillo 3-2 in the Trials final, used his boxing skills to make things easier for himself on Saturday.

Romallis Ellis of Ullenwood, Ga., easily outboxed Lyndon Walker of Washington, D.C., in gaining a 5-0 decision at 132 pounds, while Roy Jones of Pensacola, Fla., used aggressiveness and more accurate punching to edge Frank Liles of Syracuse, N.Y., 3-2 at 156 pounds.

Andrew Maynard, a "most noteworthy" opponent who is with the Army at Fort Carson, Colo., forced a Sunday bout at 178 pounds when he scored a 4-1 decision over Alfred Cole, whgo is stationed at Fort Hood, Texas.

The bout was the most action-packed of the day, with Maynard keeping constant pressure on Cole, who beat him 4-1 in the Trials quarterfinals.

Maynard had Cole in trouble with a barrage of eight punches to the head late in the third round.

Victories and spots on the Olympic team went to Todd Foster of Great Falls, Mont., at 139 pounds, and Ray Mercer of the Army in Germany, at 201 pounds, in the ninth and 10th bouts on the program.

Foster overwhelmed Charles Murray of Rochester, N.Y., with head punches for a 5-0 verdict. The 27-year-old Mercer scored a 3-2 decision over Michael Bent, whom he had beaten 5-0 in the Olympic Trials final.

Bent came on in the second half of the first round to even the round, then took an edge by winning the second round with a good left jab and some nice body punching. Mercer went all out in the third round, staying on top of Bent and scoring with hard punches with both hands to eke out the decision.

"It's a dream come true — like Christmas all over again," Mercer said.

Buoniconti Vows To Walk Again

MIAMI (AP) — Saying he may never accept a jury decision clearing The Citadel's team doctor of negligence for the football injury that crippled him, Marc Buoniconti vowed Saturday to get on with his life and his goal of walking again.

Buoniconti's 23-day court fight ended Thursday when a Charleston, S.C., jury ruled that Dr. E.K. Wallace was not to blame for the 1985 tackling injury that turned the hulking middle linbebacker into a quadriplegic.

"It's been a long hard fight and evidently the jury found he was not negligent — I'll never accept that," Buoniconti said.

"If I ever had any feelings that I was negligent, I would never have filed the lawsuit two years ago and I wouldn't have traveled up to Charleston for six weeks to fight it," Buoniconti said at a news conference at Jackson Memorial Hospital.

Buoniconti's suit alleged Wallace improperly treated a neck sprain several weeks before the fateful injury. It also contended the doctor failed to warn Buoniconti that abnormalities in his neck made it dangerous for him to play football.

Wallace's lawyers countered that Buoniconti's injury resulted from his illegal, head-first "spearing" tackle in the Oct. 26, 1985, game against East Tennessee State.

"I really resent the fact that they felt it was an illegal tackle," Buoniconti said. "The jury even said that wasn't even an issue in the case. It all came down to whether the doctor was negligent."

Buoniconti, 21, said he was surprised the jury deliberated only three hours before reaching a verdict, but he bears no grudge.

"I noticed none of them could even look me in the eye after it was over. I know how hard it was for them," he said.

Buoniconti, flanked by his father and former Miami Dolphins linebacker Nick Buoniconti, said he wants to put the case behind him.

"My lawyers have talked a little about an appeal, but I just have to go on," said Buoniconti, who plans to complete his senior year at the University of Miami, where he majors in psychology, and then pursue a graduate degree.

"I'd like to do some counseling at some point," he said. "It's not over for me at all. I still have my plans."

Foremost among them is his goal to walk again. He hopes to achieve that by continuing as spokesperson and principal fund-raiser for the Miami Project to Cure Paralysis.

"We may have lost this battle, but we will win one day when we find a cure for paralyis," said Nick Buoniconti, adding that the trial has already prompted some reforms in college athletics.

"We've seen more no practice-no play rules adopted," he said. "If you're too injured to practice, why should you be allowed to play in the game?

"I believe that if The Citadel had such a rule," he said, "my son wouldn't be sitting in a wheelchair right now."

Disappointed With The Decision

Training Camp Won't Be The Same

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

The rookies report Sunday, the veterans on Thursday and by next weekend the Pittsburgh Steeler training camp will be oozing with football players. For the first time in 14 years, Donnie Shell won't be one of them.

Gary Fencik and Walter Payton won't be in Platteville, Wis., with the Chicago Bears. Don't look for Dan Fouts at the San Diego Charger camp or Ray Guy in the Los Angeles Raiders' facility at Oxnard, Calif.

They are among the former NFL players who for the first time in maybe two decades find they are not getting ready for a football season.

The scene at the Steeler camp in Latrobe, Pa., is a familiar ritual that is routinely resumed each July in towns like Suwanee, Ga., where the Atlanta Falcons pitch camp, and San Marcos, Texas, which hosts the Houston Oilers. From La Crosse, Wisc., where the New Orleans Saints are gathering, to Carlisle, Pa., where the Washington Redskins prepare to defend their Super Bowl title, and a host of mapdot towns in between, the NFL returns.

On every practice field, coaches with clipboards check wind sprints in one corner and oversized individuals attack blocking sleds and tackling dummies in another. Playbooks are distributed and digested. The whole football practice operation snaps quickly into place.

And yet, each year some players must adjust to the culture shock of not doing what they have always done, not being a part of that scene. They retire and suddenly, July becomes football's toughest time, a time to begin doing something else with the rest of their lives.

Shell went to training camp with the Steelers for 14 summers, the first one as a free agent strong safety hoping to make the team, the last one as the team's defensive captain with 50 career interceptions, more than any man who ever played the position.

This July as the Steelers' college training camp in Latrobe springs to life, Donnie Shell is staying at home in Columbia, S.C. He is, at age 35, retired.

"In my case, I was kind of unique," Shell said. "I played so long and I accomplished every goal I had set. I've done what I wanted to do. Now it's over.

"You miss it, though. After doing that for 23 years from high school to college to the pros, and then suddenly you're not doing it, you miss it. There's no question about that."

Most of all, Shell said, he thought he would miss the camraderie, the relationships with men who had been almost like brothers to him.

"You're living together," he said. "You're winning together and losing together. You establish feelings for each other. You lean on one another and you pull for one another."

Eric Margenau, executive director of New York's Center for Sports Psychology and consultant for a number of professional sports franchises, understands what Shell is saying.

"Certainly retirement is a big adjustment and shock for the successful athlete," he said. "It's a little hard to describe. Most of them don't know how big an adjustment it will be until they're into it. In some ways, it's comparable to having a child. Nobody can tell you ahead of time what the stress and strain will be. You can't know what it's like and how profoundly it will affect your life until you're into it.

"Football is a player's life from early age. It's a part of them. To be without it can leave them adrift emotionally. The ones who do better are those who anticipate retirement and plan for it well ahead of time."

Shell falls into that category.

"Sure, I look at my Super Bowl rings sometimes and there are great memories," he said. "But I can't do anymore than I did in football. I'm satisfied. I'm a realist. I planned when I'd be getting out. We knew a couple of years before I did it. That makes it easier."

The planning included going back to school for his Masters degree in guidance and counseling. He has launched his own business in Columbia, called Sports Counseling Service to provide help for other athletes.

Margenau thinks more and more athletes are approaching retirement the way Shell did, with a next-career game plan. That reduces the tension that the opening of training camps might otherwise trigger. It also makes it easier for Shell to do a cameo week in the Steeler camp, helping coach defensive backs. There will be no temptation for him to stay. He has a business to go back to in Columbia.

"The days of players who go fishing in the off-season is largely gone," Margenau said. "They are aware of the potential dynamic of retirement. So they create off-season careers for themselves. The change in salary struture has helped in that effort. They invest money in a business that can involve them."

Like Shell, Alan Page welcomed retirement. He had played 15 years in the NFL, one more than Shell. It was enough.

"Retirement wasn't a jolt for me," said Page, who will be inducted in the Pro Football Hall of Fame a week from Saturday. "When training camp time came around, I was busy doing other things. I had a law practice I was trying to get established.

"It was a different feeling, though, because I didn't have to go and do all the things you don't look forward to doing. I was ready, anxious and looking forward to my retirement, to the chance to spend the summer with my children.

"The other thing that helped was that I was still physically active. Retiring didn't mean a halt for that. I still was able to run."

Then Page added a little irony that makes the transition a bit easier for every retired player.

"In fact," he said. "I was able to run more. And I ran when I wanted to run, not when they wanted me to run."

Nike Puts Basketball In Proper Perspective

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP) — Like most basketball camps, it pulls in many of the top high school players in the nation and every major college coach. Unlike the others, more time is spent in the classroom than on the court.

In fact, basketball is only on the agenda for four hours in a very structured 16-hour day at the Nike-ABCD camp.

"Our camp teaches student-athletes to put basketball in its proper perspective," said Sonny Vaccaro, NIKE's advisory board director. "We impress upon the student-athletes, while they're still young, that what they do in the classroom will affect their future more than their performances on the court."

Vaccaro had some harsh facts for the players at the camp last week: Only 276 of the 500,000 athletes who play high school basketball during a given four-year period will eventually make it to the NBA.

Camp literature says that only one of 10 who do make it to the NBA leave school with a college degree.

"I think the student-athlete has been exploited throughout the past 50 years," said Frank DuBois, the academic director of the camp since its inception 11 years ago. "People like to be entertained and they are entertained by these young men, whether it be in football or basketball. We watch them on TV and they become heroes, but what happens to them afterwards is a shame."

Avoiding those post-basketball problems and earning a degree is the big lesson taught to the 120 high school blue-chip athletes who still have at least one year of school left.

The advice, the lodging at Princeton University and the basketball they play are free, furnished by Nike for about $200,000, according to Vaccaro. The schedule features 7 a.m. wakeup calls, three-hour morning classes, two separate lectures during the day, four hours of basketball, a couple of hours to eat and rest, capped with an 11 p.m. bedcheck.

It all starts less than 24 hours after the players arrive when they sit down and take the Gates-MacGinitie (reading) Comprehension Test and sample math section of the Scholastic Aptitude Test.

"We never know the type of (student) we are getting here," DuBois said, adding players are told in advance that academics are a big part of the camp. "In comprehension, they range from third-grade level to 12.9, which is off the scale."

DuBois said the first thing counselors need to determine is whether the test results are accurate.

"In my experience, there are some kids who are very, very slow," said DuBois, a counselor at Homewood-Flossmoor High School in suburban Chicago. "There isn't a whole lot you can do for a student like that. For the majority, there is usually something they missed along the line, maybe structural analysis or they did not have phonics, and they can be helped."

Once the test results are in, classes are formed with those in need of the most help placed in smaller classes. The 12 teachers in the program are from around the country, with the three in the lower level being specialists in behavorial disorder, special education and reading.

The middle and upper levels of the program are staffed by high school English teachers.

All test results are sent to the parents of the students and DuBois said no copy is kept on record by camp officials.

Students in the middle and upper levels spend their class time learning how to take lecture notes, improving memory, acquiring proper study habits, learning strategies for taking exams, using a college library, writing college applications and knowing how to question would-be recruiters on academic programs, tutors and financial aid.

DuBois said Proposition 48 — the rule which set standards for eligibility in Division I — has caused the biggest change in the program, which was taken over by Nike six years ago from a group called Athletes for Better Education.

"Three years ago we had 12 or 13 seniors who signed up for our SAT prep course," he said. "Last year there were 80 and we had to change our whole curriculum in a day."

Nike does not end its involvement with the students once the camp ends, DuBois said. On alternating months, students and parents receive letters about upcoming SAT tests, filing college applications, applying for student loans and grants.

"Teen-agers tend to think parents are the stupidest people on the face of the earth," DuBois said. "We try to inform parents about what has to be done so they can say, 'Have you registered for the October 12th SAT? Let's get the packet home and fill it out. I want it done this weekend.'"

Deron Johnson, a senior forward from Sunnyside, Ariz., said one of the keys to enjoying the camp is coming in with the right attitude and accepting the fact that going to class is part of the program.

"To be honest, I was hoping we could just go and play basketball," Johnson said. "But you can always improve learning. They are trying to teach us to be better students that we are."

Forward Aaron Bain of Falls Church, Va. said the camp helps most of the athletes get their priorities straight.

"They talk about reading and how important that is for you in the off season, so you don't fall behind," Bain said. "It's especially important in the senior year when you have a lot of pressure as far as picking a school. You have to be able to settle down and relax."

The camp also is a pressure cooker because almost every Division I program is represented, usually by a head coach and a leading assistant. No contact is permitted between the coaches and players, so coaches generally bring an arsenal of T-shirts, caps and shorts emblazoned with college logos just to let students know they are around.

Greenville had its opportunities to score in the game but could not capitalize.

In the fourth inning, Jason Krause led off Greenville's inning with a double. After one out Shea Harper was walked putting runners at first and second. The bases were then loaded when Sam Jennings connected for a two-out single. A strikeout, however, ended the inning.

In the seventh inning, Greenville led off the inning by getting runners at second and third with no one out before squandering the opportunity with a pair of strikeouts and a fly ball.

Reid Looking For Another Childhood Goal

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — J.R. Reid has reached two of the four goals he set for himself as a youngster, but to realize the third, he will have to impress U.S. Olympic men's basketball coach John Thompson.

Reid wanted to make his high school team, which he did easily. The second challenge was to play in college, and the 6-foot-9, 256-pound rising junior has distinguished himself at North Carolina. The fourth, playing in the NBA, is seen by some experts as a foregone conclusion.

The third is to play basketball in the Olympics, and he was betting on tuning up his skills last summer at the Pan American Games. But Coach Denny Crum didn't select him.

"I thought I played well enough to have a chance at the team, but I didn't fit the mold coach Crum had," Reid said in an interview. "That was something I had to live with."

The exclusion of Reid and other U.S. players got additional attention when the U.S. dropped a 120-115 gold medal contest to Brazil. Critics said the lack of strength contributed to the failure of the U.S. team to win the gold in Indianapolis.

Olympic Coach John Thompson of Georgetown has made it clear he will have a different philosophy. Reid, driven by his failure to make the team last year, hopes he will fit into Thompson's plans.

"Sure, there's extra incentive," Reid said. "When I didn't make it last year, I realized there must have been something missing from my game, so I tried to come back and improve myself. One thing I've really worked on is my offensive rebounding. I've never been strong at that, but I'm working on it now and I think I'm getting better."

Practices for the Olympic team will begin next week. Thompson has until Sept. 2 to make his cuts, but it's likely the team that will appear in two exhibition games in Charlotte next month will be the final 12 players chosen.

"I can remember dreaming about this when I was a kid," Reid said. "It happens once in a lifetime. The main thing for me would be being selected out of the thousands of players in the country, and wearing the United States' colors. That feeling would be hard to describe."

If he doesn't make Thompson's team?

"I'd definitely be upset again, but it would be something I'd have to deal with. Coach (Dean) Smith has already told me he's hoping I'd make it, but if I don't to remember that I'm a part of a team here and we want to win a championship next year," Reid said.

Williams Expects No Impact In NCAA Probe

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Former North Carolina assistant coach Roy Williams says he's facing an uphill battle as the new head basketball coach at Kansas because of a late start and allegations of Jayhawk recruiting violations in earlier years.

"The fact that I took the job on July 8, and the fact that nothing was done the previous two months, we are way, way, way behind," Williams said.

"I'm looking at a lot of youngsters because there wasn't much carryover left with the people that had been recruiting," he said. "Right now, out of the top 100 players in the country, probably none of them would list Kansas as one of their top five or six choices."

Williams said he was aware of the NCAA investigation when he took the new job.

"They showed me a list of allegations, and I handed it back to them and said there was nothing I could do about it," he said. "I had nothing to do with it; it was out of my control, so I wasn't worried about it.

The Kansas violations allegedly occurred between June 1986 and April 1987. They range from buying an airline ticket and giving $200 to a recruit, to several instances of providing improper transportation in Lawrence.

Williams, who was hired last Friday after Larry Brown left for the San Antonio Spurs of the NBA, said the school told all the Kansas coaching candidates about the allegations.

Although he is in the midst of recruiting, Williams said his first priority is the players who are currently at Kansas. After the announcement of his hiring last Friday, he met with rising senior Lincoln Minor, a 6-foot-3 guard, and rising sophomores Mark Randall, a 6-9 forward, and Kevin Pritchard, a 6-3 guard.

"Also, I've talked (with the other returning players) on the phone," he said. "I've just tried to reassure them that we are having a basketball program, and that I will work with them, and we will try and be the best basketball team that we can be, (and) also to try and help them graduate."

Allison Still On The Road To Recovery

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Doctors have told Bobby Allison's family the stock car driver should recover 100 percent from injuries suffered in a June 19 wreck, his brother-in-law said.

In fact, said Donnie Johnson, the 50-year-old Allison might be out of the hospital and back in a car before long.

"It wouldn't surprise me if he sat down in one this year. I'm not saying to compete, but maybe to practice or start a race and then park it," Johnson told The Birmingham News in an interview last week.

Allison was seriously injured in a crash on the first lap of the Miller 400 NASCAR at the Pocono raceway. He remains hospitalized in guarded condition in Allentown, Pa., where he is being treated for a broken leg, broken ribs, a broken shoulder and a cerebral concussion.

"He is still hurt bad. But the doctor tells us there is no way we should expect anything but 100 percent recovery. They just don't know when," said Johnson, who manages Bobby Allison Racing.

Johnson said Allison's wife has decided to leave him in Pennsylvania until he can come home to Hueytown.

"Judy made the decision that unless things change they're going to let him stay there until we can bring him all the way to Church Street," he said. "They say that will be in the neighborhood of three to four weeks."

Allison cannot speak because of a tube in his throat and he does not write notes. He recognizes family and friends and squeezes their hands and makes gestures.

"It's like this," Johnson said. "His mind is a file cabinet, and somebody came in and threw the files on the floor. Now he has to rearrange it. He's putting the files back in order. He has to pick up all the little papers and put them back in order."

Once that is done, Johnson believes Allison will be ready to go again.

"I'm fully convinced he'll defend his Daytona 500 championship next February. There's no doubt in my mind about it. Richard Petty and Dale Earnhardt still must contend with Bobby Allison."

Tulane Tabs Clark To Revive Hoops Team

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Tulane University has named Perry Clark to revive the men's basketball program that was dropped during a point shaving scandal three years ago.

Clark, 36, said Saturday he has a five year contract and expects to build a new program that the school and the community can be proud of.

"The challenge is hard, but a lot of people confuse a challenge with hard work," Clark said. "I want to build a good program, not just a good team. It will be based on hard work and academic integrity."

Clark, who has been the associate head basketball coach at Georgia Tech for the past two years, was selected him from a field almost 100 applicants for its head coaching job, Athletic Director Chet Gladchuk said.

"We wanted to be very careful about finding someone who had academic ability and athletic integrity. We had many very fine people apply for the job, but I think we chose the best one," Gladchuk said.

Clark is respected nationally for his recuiting and defensive coaching. In three of the past four years, the Yellow Jackets have given up fewer than 65 points a game.

Three of Clark's recruits at Georgia Tech were named Atlantic Coast Conference Rookie of the Year. The are Bruce Dalrymple in 1984, Duane Ferrell in 1985 and Tom Hammonds in 1986.

"Georgia Tech was once regarded as the worst program in the country. Perry Clark helped to change that," Gladchuk said. "If we give him one year running in the 80s, I believe Tulane will be one of the athletic success stories of the 90s."

Tulane plans to compete beginning in the 1989-90 season.

A native of Washington, D.C., Clark began his coaching career at DeMatha High School in Hyattsville, Md.

He became an assistant at Penn State in 1977 and is credited with helping to turn that program around.

Before Clark's arrival, Penn State had six straight losing seasons. With Clark as an assistant, the Nittany Lions rebounded to the National Invitation Tournament in 1979.

Tulane's men's basketball program was dropped in April 1985 after three players and three other students were arrested and charged with conspiracy to commit sports bribery.

Is Their Light At The Tunnel's End?

NEW YORK (AP) — The judge who refused to turn 274 NFL players into free agents expressed the feeling nearly everyone connected with football has about the continuing labor dispute:

Get This Thing Over With.

Unfortunately for players, fans, and club owners who want just that, Judge David Doty may have actually extended the dispute this week with 38 words of his 14-page decision.

He ruled that the dispute belongs in collective bargaining, not the courts. And he said that free agency could have "a devastating, long-term impact on competitive balance within the league."

But he may have ensured that the NFL Players Association and the Management Council will be tied up in the courts for years with these words: "...The court finds it probable that the players will prevail at trial and that at least some of the players are likely to sustain irreparable harm if they are not immediately permitted to sign with other NFL clubs ..."

As training camps begin opening, the only real effect of the 18-month-old labor dispute may be the late signings of the 274 free agents, advised by the union and their agents to wait for Doty's decision.

They include quarterback Randall Cunningham of the Eagles; linebacker Carl Banks and tight end Mark Bavaro of the Giants; nose tackle Bill Maas of the Chiefs; wide receiver Mark Duper of the Dolphins, and offensive linemen Gary Zimmerman of the Vikings, Ron Solt of Colts and Jay Hilgenberg of the Bears.

Even the free agents seemed tired of the dispute.

Cunningham called the decision "no big deal;" Maas said he's been ready to re-sign with the Chiefs for months and the Giants' Sean Landeta, one of the NFL's premier punters and another nominal free agent, summed up the feelings of his colleagues when he said:

"I just think the 1,600 players in the league have to be genuinely told what's being offered because I know that we want to sign an agreement and play ball."

There have been no formal bargaining sessions since Oct. 15.

Within an hour after Doty's decision, the Management Council called on the union to resume negotiations.

The union said it might, but only if management presented a proposal markedly different from the owners' last formal proposal — last Sept. 7. Meanwhile, the union's executive director, Gene Upshaw, said the players would seek an expedited anti-trust trial based on Doty's opinion that the players would win.

"If they tell us what they have to offer, we'll be willing to listen," Upshaw said. "But we have no indication they have changed a bit."

In fact, the two sides seem to be operating on totally unconnected wave lengths.

Jack Donlan, the owners' chief negotiator, wants to start from scratch, sitting down to begin where the two sides began on April 20, 1987, undertaking a line-by-line analysis of the contract.

The would range from mundane items like meal money to major ones like pensions, severance pay and "the system" — the method by which players could change teams once their contracts expire.

Upshaw, on the other hand, contends that the system issues are at the heart of the impasse. He also insists that talks be conducted under the supervision of Doty and be treated as an antitrust case, not collective bargaining.

The best thing the players have going for them is the desire by some owners — Al Davis of the Raiders, Art Modell of Cleveland and Pat Bowlen of Denver among them — to get the dispute settled quickly.

Other than that, management seems to hold the upper hand.

For one thing, the union needs money to pursue its court fight and has been literally begging players for their $1,800 in yearly dues since the strike ended checkoff.

For another, management has time on its side — the ability to appeal on and on, even if it loses. The NFL's lost its antitrust suit to Davis after he moved the Raiders without league permission from Oakland to Los Angeles but has yet to pay a dime and the case remains on appeal.

And for a third, management has the power to unilaterally impose a new contract, one which might broaden the players' freedom of movement — primarily by lessinging the compensation a team must pay for signing, not by unrestricted free agency.

However, management sources point out that any softening on player movement might cost the players money in the pension plan and severance pay — two areas that many players have said are more important than free agency.

And finally, the owners believe that Doty's strong language in turning down the request for an injunction is precedent-setting and will hold up at trial. They point to Doty's citation of the opinion by the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals the last time football free agency was in the court a decade ago.

It noted that unrestricted free agency "ignores the structured nature of any professional sport ... Precise and detailed rules must of necessity govern how the sport is played, the rules of the game and the acquisition, number and engagement of players."

Doty concurred.

"Briefly," he wrote, "the Court finds that the potential migration of many key players from less attractive clubs to more deirable ones could have a devastating, long-term impact on the competitive balance within the league.

"The danger that destruction of the comptetive balance could ultimately lead to diminished spectator interest and fanchise failures itself constitutes a sufficent basis for denying the requested injunctive relief."

That phrase angered both union officials and agents, who have a large stake in free agency.

"I don't think he knows anything about football." one agent said of the judge.

But many on the players' side recognize that whether Doty knows football is less important than the legal precedents.

"If it can work in major league baseball where attendance has gone up since free agency and it works in the NBA, where their attendance has gone up, there no reason it can't work in football," said David Fishof, Bavaro's agent.

U.S. Bid Boosts World Cup Business

ROME (AP) — The selling of the 1990 World Cup is paying big dividends, with some of the world's richest corporations signing on as sponsors in hopes of reaching a television audience in the tens of billions.

Italian organizers of the quadrennial soccer tournament say the decision to stage the 1994 World Cup in the United States has given them added incentive to put on a financially successful show.

"The eyes of that immense country will be on Italy and how we handle the event," said Antonio Matarrese, president of the Italian Soccer Federation.

Sponsors, television, tourism, licenses and public works improvements are counted on to play as much a part in the success of the month-long tournament as the on-field magic of superstars like Diego Maradona of Argentina and Ruud Gullit of the Netherlands.

"The World Cup is an event like no other, unparalleled in terms of audience," said Luca di Montezemolo, director of the Italia '90 organizing committee.

"We are trying to combine Italian creativity with technology, efficiency and competitiveness," Montezemolo said at a recent round-table forum in Rome on the business aspects of the World Cup. "We want to organize the best event possible, but also to allow the many big companies to achieve the proper return on their investment."

"In our relations with the sponsors," he added, "we have created a new method of working that can become an example for all. The companies have a role not simply as sponsors but are also directly involved in the organization of the Cup."

Among the international sponsors already attracted are Anheuser-Busch, Canon, Coca-Cola, Fuji Film, Gillette, JVC and Philips. Each has invested about $10 million, Montezemolo said.

Italian sponsors include Alitalia, Banca Nazionale del Lavoro, Fiat, Olivetti and the state-run RAI television network, which will be broadcasting 700 hours of soccer a week around the world.

In addition, there are more than two dozen official licensees who are entitled to use the World Cup symbol on their products, ranging from T-shirts to toothpaste. So far, 27 licenses have been granted for $8.8 million in royalties.

"We are confident that any previous record for licenses will be shattered," said Oscar Massari, administrator of the committee's licensing agency, Telemundi Italia.

The exposure for the sponsors can best be judged by the potential television audience for the 52 games.

Klaus Hempel, president of ISL, the official marketing arm of the international soccer federation, predicted that the tournament will attact a cumulatative TV audience of 26 billion viewers in 170 countries.

That would far surpass the 13.5 billion TV viewers during the 1986 World Cup in Mexico and the projected 6.5 billion for the upcoming Olympic Games in Seoul.

"It is easy to see why Italy '90 will be the biggest media event in history," Hempel said.

According to RAI, 107 nations have already signed contracts for television coverage, while separate deals are still being worked out with the United States and Canada.

RAI thinks it can teach a thing or two about soccer coverage to the American networks, who have relatively little experience with the world's most popular sport.

"The network could also have a role in the American tournament in 1994," said Vittorio Panchetti, deputy director of RAI's sports division. "We know perfectly the techniques for broadcasting a soccer game. These techniques are not known in the U.S. The organizers of the U.S. tournament could easily take advantage of our knowledge and lean partly on us."

Hempel said his agency is also looking ahead to 1994, with plans to work with the U.S. soccer federation to develop programs to educate the American public about the sport.

"We will look into using TV, showing the soccer skills of Maradona, Gullitt and others," Hempel said. "When Americans see these stars in close-up action, we are sure this will create greater interest."

While television will satisfy most of the world's soccer fans, millions are also expected to travel to Italy to watch the matches in person.

Tourism Minister Franco Carraro said the government projects the arrival of about 25 million foreign tourists during the period of the World Cup, an increase of 45 percent over the usual number of tourists during the June-July season.

The influx will test Italy's already-taxed public services and its deteriorating soccer stadiums. After months of delays, the government plans to allocate $2.7 billion for building, expanding and improving stadiums, roads, highways, airports and railway stations in the 12 cities hosting the cup.

"It's not a matter of safeguarding just the image of our country and its most important cities, but also, unfortunately, of salvaging wanting infrastructures and insufficient services," said Carlo Tognoli, minister of Urban Areas.

Promoting the country's image is also a concern of the Italian sponsors.

"The image of our country varies between genius and chaos," said Giovanni Maggio, head of advertising and public relations for Olivetti in Italy. "We intend to wipe out the chaos."

Corruption, Scandal Plagues Soccer

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — With a couple of potatoes, a chicken, some wine and a little firewood you can fix a meal. In Romania, you can also fix a soccer game.

A lot of things Westerners take for granted are in short supply in Eastern Europe and the state-controlled soccer federations are finding out that players, referees and even the people who run the leagues have their hands out.

And a well-placed chicken-in-the-hand has proven to be worth a goal-in-the-net.

At times the fix has been so obvious crowds erupted in chants of "the thieves, the thieves" and authorities were forced to change the outcome of games.

In energy- and food-short Romania, the government-controlled media said referees have been bribed with such rare goods as meat, poultry, potatoes and wine.

In one case, a referee was caught by police after a game with a car trunk filled with chopped firewood, a hotly sought item during the winter.

Sports reporters for the state-run press privately say they often hear more than they are allowed to write, and the biggest corruption cases are seldom revealed.

Even team and league officials have been involved.

Despite strict governmental controls, teams have been know to skim off money to buy a match when in danger of dropping in classification.

Last month, many of the 60,000 fans watching the Romanian army team play the team representing the police's Interior Ministry stormed onto the field after a referee disallowed a crucial goal. Police had to be called in to restore order.

A special sports commission which investigated the incident said the referee disallowed a "perfectly valid" goal and suspended him for one year because of "serious deviations from (refereeing) rules."

The commission validated the goal and awarded the victory to the army club by a 2-1 score.

There were no specific charges of bribe taking in the case, but matches between the sports archrival army and police clubs, which are the most powerful and best financed in the Soviet bloc, are a nightmare for any referee.

In Yugoslavia, controversy has surrounded the first division soccer championship for the last three years. This season, Red Star of Belgrade won the title with 45 points, one point ahead of its only rival Partizan, when it scored in the last minute to draw 2-2 against Sutjeska in Niksic.

Sports Yugoslav commentators generally agreed that Red Star's second goal, which sparked a free-for-all on the field in which police had to intervene to protect the referees, was scored from an offside position.

Sutjeska was relegated to the second division after Celik, trailing 0-2 in its game against last-placed Pristina, managed to score three goals within the last 90 seconds of the match to win 3-2.

The state soccer federation suspended the results of the two matches but a three-week investigation said it could not find anything unusual.

"An attempt to legalize corruption, bribery and immorality," the daily Politika Ekspres commented on the federation's decision. The state Tanjug news agency described the matches as "a new farce in Yugoslav soccer."

Soccer shenanigans have not spared Hungary either.

In June, the results and standings in the 1987-88 Hungarian First Division soccer championship were suspended amid allegations that bribes decided the outcome.

One commentator said the accusations, reported in Hungarian newspapers, had turned the Hungarian socccer establishment into a "beehive of strife."

A state control commission which launched a probe reportedly found no evidence of money passing hands but Soccer Federation President Jenoe Somogyi resigned soon after.

In the biggest public bloc scandal to date, Bulgaria's Communist Party ordered three years ago the disbanding of the country's two top soccer clubs after a chaotic championship match marred by fouls and expulsions.

The leadership denounced the game between Levski Spartak, which played for the Interior Ministry, and CSKA, representing the Defense Ministry, as a "sad final" and a "shame unprecedented in the records of Bulgarian soccer playing."

Five players from both teams were temporarily banned from sports activity for "gross violation of socialist sports ethics and for soccer hooliganism."

Former Yankee Dies

ALLOWAY TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — Former major league baseball player Whitey Witt, the first New York Yankee to bat at Yankee Stadium, has died at the age of 92.

Witt suffered a heart attack and died Thursday at his home here.

Born Ladislaw Waldemar Wittkowski in Orange, Mass., on Sept. 28, 1895, Witt, originally a shortstop, was signed by Connie Mack's Philadelphia Athletics in 1916 when he was 19.

"I signed with the A's right out of high school for $300 a month," Witt said at his 90th birthday celebration. "I got $500 raises each year through 1921, and when I signed with the Yankees, I got $9,000."

The 5-foot-7, 155-pounder changed his name to Walter Lawton Witt. He was later nicknamed "Whitey" because of his blond hair.

Witt was traded by the Athletics in 1921 and was the first Yankee to bat when the stadium opened in 1923, according to Yankees spokesman Harvey Greene.

"The day it was open, Whitey had the first walk, Babe Ruth had the first hit and they won the game," said longtime friend, Woodstown attorney Burton D. Zehner.

Witt played center field for the Yankees until 1925 when he was traded to the Brooklyn Dodgers. He had a .287 batting average during 10 years in the majors and once had 40 bunt-hits in a season.

After he retired from baseball in 1926, Witt purchased a farm near Alloway and opened Whitey's Irish Bar in Salem, a gathering place for fans and players.

Turkey Populations Hit Record High

North Carolina's wild turkey harvest jumped to a 40-year record this spring, showing biologists with the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission that their efforts to restore the state's population is paying off.

Reports from hunters across the state showed that 1,027 wild turkeys were taken during the April 9 through May 7 season. All three of the state's geographical regions showed dramatic increases in harvest reports. Harvests were up 99 percent in the Mountains, 31 percent in the Piedmont and 26 percent in the Coastal Plain. In 1987, 680 birds were taken statewide, while 351 were taken in 1983.

Biologists say the Commission's turkey restoration program and dry weather have contributed to the turkeys' comeback.

During the early 1970s, the Wildlife Commission launched an intensive wild turkey restoration program to replenish the state's dwindling turkey population. Biologists trapped and released wild turkeys in a restoration area, allowed them to reproduce, then as populations increased, trapped more birds and released them in another location to re-establish another population. Since 1970, 1,100 wild turkeys have been released on these restoration sites.

When the program began in 1970, the state's turkey population was estimated at 2,000 birds. In 1980, the population jumped to 8,000 birds. Now it is estimated at 15,000.

Biologists say dry weather for the past several springs has contributed to higher turkey populations.

"We've had several dry summers and while they've been tough on farmers, they've been great for turkeys," said Mike Seamster, the Commission's wild turkey project leader. "When poults (young turkeys) are born in early summer, two or three days of cold rain can cause them to die from hypothermia. In the last few years, we've had dry summers and subsequent high reproduction rates from good poult survival."

Seamster explained that there are usually 12 to 14 eggs in a nest, of which about 90 percent hatch.

"If five or six poults per hen make it through the first months, it will be a good year," he said.

The largest turkey populations in North Carolina are found near Camp Lejeune Marine Base in Onslow County, on the Roanoke River bottomlands and in Caswell County.

In searching for land for turkey restoration sites, biologists look for large areas of at least 5,000 acres. The ideal habitat for wild turkeys is a forest that is 50 percent mature hardwoods with 10 to 20 percent open land for brood range. The area should have few roads and people and provide the potential for the birds to expand into other areas. Public hunting should also be available.

"We're pleased with the progress we've made with these restoration sites," Seamster said. "We'll continue to look for suitable habitat to include in our restoration program."

Refuge Deer Hunts Announced

Pungo National Wildlife Refuge in Hyde County will open to archery deer hunting during 1988 in accordance with the state archery season and regulations. Special either-sex deer hunts with shotguns or primitive weapons will be held Oct. 11, 13, 15, 17, 19 and 21.

Hunters interested in applying for permits should do so by 10 a.m. on Sept. 7. To apply, send a 3 x 5 card with the following information: hunter's name, address, birthdate, signature and first through sixth choices of hunting dates. Applications should be sent to Pungo NWR, Route 1, Box N-2, Swan Quarter, N.C. 27885.

Up to five hunters may apply together by enclosing all cards (one per hunter) in one envelope and marking the outside of the envelope "Party Hunt." One-day permits will be limited to one per person. Selected hunters will be notified by mail.

Hunters under the age of 16 must have successfully passed a state-approved hunter education course in order to participate. In addition, youth hunters must be supervised by an adult 21 years of age or older.

Benefits Of Summer Life For The Whitetailed Deer

ALLENTOWN, Pa. (AP) — While the benefits of summer living are many — plentiful food, cool nights to balance the warm days and no hunters — whitetail deer must meet new challenges and make necessary adaptations during these times.

Hair color is the most notable change. A whitetail's summer coat is a rusty-orange that is exaggerated when the animal is seen in the slanting rays of a morning or evening sun.

The lighter summer pelage reflects more light than the dark winter coat, which absorbs sunlight and helps warm the animal.

Gone are the hollow insulating hairs and the dense underfur of the winter coat. The spring shed replaced them with short, thin hairs which, surprisingly, outnumber the hairs found in the cold season.

In addition to offering little insulation, the summer coat may prevent some biting insects from penetrating to the skin.

Another noticeable feature of summer deer is that the bucks carry antlers covered in velvet, a fuzzy, blood-rich skin that nourishes the fast-growing structures.

Warm to the touch, the antlers possibly function as an air-conditioning system since deer are unable to perspire. The animals will also cool themselves by exhaling hot air, sometimes by panting like a dog.

The developing antlers are sensitive and subject to injury, sometimes with profuse bleeding. In fall and winter hunters often take deer with strange antler formations that were caused by some injury during the growing season.

Stimulated by an increased secretion of testosterone from the pituitary gland, the velvet loses its supply of blood in late August and by early September most bucks have rubbed the dead, drying velvet from their racks.

Bucks play no role in raising fawns. Indeed, following the fall rut, in which some of them mated with several does, there's no way for a buck to know which of the young are his.

Child-rearing privileges fall entirely to the doe, which nurses her young within minutes of their birth. A thick, yellowish substance known as colostrum, deer milk contains about double the butterfat of cow's milk.

After a month the butterfat content drops, but still remains higher than that of cow's milk.

Colostrum also contains immunoproteins, which provide necessary antibodies, as fawns are subject to bites and skin punctures from ticks, lice and many other creatures.

Studies show that newborn fawns gain about 10 percent of their body weight daily for the first week or so then gradually diminish in their relative weight gains as summer progresses.

In the weeks immediately following birth, fawns remain in one spot, diminishing their chance of encountering predators, as the doe continues to feed. The doe returns to nurse several times daily and will lick the babes to keep scent from attracting predators.

By the time a fawn is a month old it will begin to move about more and nip green vegetation. Over the summer a fawn will gradually reduce its need for milk — although some does continue to allow their young to nurse well into autumn.

By the beginning of September most fawns will be on their ways to shedding their spotted summer coats. This, too, is dependent on their birth date.

By Thanksgiving Day fawns will have increased their birth weight ten-fold. Most Pennsylvania yearlings will weigh 60-70 pounds by then, although studies show that weights range from 45 to more than 90 pounds. Bucks typically grow faster than female fawns.

Parasites and insects represent the biggest bother to summer whitetails. The larger the deer population and the more crowded their range — such as in the state's southeastern counties — the more parasites are transmitted.

This year's profusion of ticks should have some effect on deer, which carry them all year long, and may eventually affect humans living in places with an overpopulation of deer.

Flies and mosquitoes also make life miserable for deer in the summer months. One of the most annoying is the nose botfly — a bee-like insect which lays eggs in the deer's nostrils and deep nasal passages.

When the eggs hatch, the larvae crawl farther into the nasal region and feed on the mucous. They are later ejected as the deer sneezes or snorts but will pupate into adults and return to complete the cycle.

Internal parasites like roundworms in the intestinal passages, lungworms in the respiratory system, flukes in the liver and brainworms also infest deer.

While deer have developed an immunity to brainworm, in counties such as Elk and Cameron where both deer and elk share the range, the elk will occasionally contract brainworm and die.

Battling Deadly Garbage Could Save Our Wildlife

ATLANTA (AP) — The best ways to keep widlife from strangling on plastic, choking on pull tabs or becoming dependent on garbage dumps from food is either to stop making the deadly materials or recycle everything possible, a trash expert says.

Almost every waterfowler has seen a duck, goose or other waterbird with its head stuck in a six-pack collar. Every hunter has tripped over cans when he thought he was hunting alone in the woods.

Suffolk County, New York, started its fight against plastic pollution by passing a law in April prohibiting many types of plastic packaging.

Congress last year banned bumping of plastic trash at sea. The Navy is studying ways to get plastic packaging and plastic displosal materials out of the fleet.

Paul Connett, a professor of chemistry at St. Lawrence University in Canton, N.Y., and consultant to many groups, including the Pro-Environmental Packaging Council, said a "bottle bill," demanding a deposit on every bottle and can is not the answer.

"It's just too cumbersome to have to return everything to the store and have a clerk handle the money and haul the cans and bottles," he said during a visit to Atlanta for a community meeting.

Recycling is the answer.

"Every home should have two trash cans, one for recycleables, bottles and cans, and the other for trash and garbage. In addition, all papers should be picked up for recycling," Connett said.

The answer to the rest of the trash problem is not just "dumping it into holes in the ground or burning it," he said.

It's composting.

Composting is the age-old process of dumping leaves, grass, paper and other vegetable waste in a pile in a corner of the yard and letting it "rot." What's left is organic material which is can be a valuable aid to agriculture.

"Most of today's trash, food waste, scrap paper, most organic materials can be shredded and composted," and, provided toxics are kept out of the mix, can be used in agriculture, he said.

Homeowners can make their own compost for gardens. But on a commercial scale, commercial composted trash can be sold or given to farms to grow food or forests, which benefit the outdoorsman until they are cut to begin the cycle again, Connett said.

Most plastic packaging can be replaced with paper packaging, which would both save oil resources and protect the environment, he said.

Other encironmentalists agree, plastic packaging must be at least drastically reduced.

"Plastic waste is killing our marine wildlife, fouling our beaches, engangling boat propellers, submarine and even divers," said Albert M. Manville, a biologist with Defenders of Wildlife.

On land, Connett said, recycling is the answer. "Our cities' landfills are filling up. We're running out of places to put the stuff. We've got to slow down our generating waste and start reusing the waste we must must generate."

Sara Lee Corp. Will Buy High Point Hosiery Firm

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — Adams-Millis Corp. has agreed to be acquired by Sara Lee Corp. in a tax-free exchange of Sara Lee Corp. stock for Adams-Millis stock valued at $17 per share, the companies announced Friday.

The High Point-based Adams-Millis has 4.7 million shares of common stock outstanding. The acquisition would be subject to approval by Adams-Millis stockholders.

"The merger offers Sara Lee Corp. entry into the $2 billion retail sock market and also strengthens Adams-Millis' market position," said Paul Fulton, president of Sara Lee.

Adams-Millis will operate as a separate operating company within the personal products business of Sara Lee and will continue to be run by its current management. James H. Millis Sr. will remain as chairman and chief executive officer.

"We believe this transaction is favorable to our shareholders," Millis said. "The transaction also ensures the continuity of current management and employees of Adams-Millis. Our strategic thrust and relationship with customers will remain intact."

Millis and his family, who together own more than 34 percent of outstanding Adams-Millis stock, are parties to an agreement with the company which would have resulted in shareholders receiving $16.50 per share in cash for the company. But he said they would terminate the agreement and vote in favor of the acquisition.

The acquisition includes all Adams-Millis subsidiaries and is expected to be compieted between Oct. 31 and Dec. 31.

Adams-Millis produces brand name and unbranded hosiery for men, women and children, including Hanes brand socks under a license from Sara Lee.

For the fiscal year ended Jan. 3, the company reported net sales of $198.4 million and net earnings of $5.96 million. Adams-Millis has about 3,600 employees at 16 plants in North Carolina and a New York sales office.

Sara Lee is an international food and consumer-products company with annual sales of more than $10 billion.

Interstate Securities, Johnson Lane Announce Merger Plans

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Interstate Securities and Johnson, Lane, Space, Smith & Co. announced that they have entered into an agreement in principle to merge, forming one of the largest broker-dealer and investment banking firms headquartered in the Southeast.

The new firm will have approximately 580 retail and institutional brokers and 76 offices located primarily in North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. The new company, which will be called Interstate-Johnson Lane Incorporated, will have a total of 1,540 employees and more than $100 million in capital.

According to preliminary merger terms announced Friday, Interstate Securities will acquire the outstanding stock of Johnson Lane at a price of approximately $28 million, subject to adjustments in Johnson Lane's audited book value on June 30. The transaction will consist of approximately $9 million in cash and $19 million of Interstate Securities' common stock, officials said.

J. Craighill Redwine, currently chairman and chief executive officer of Interstate Securities, will serve as chairman and chief executive officer of the new firm. Elmon L. Vernier Jr., president and chief executive officer of Johnson Lane, will serve as president and chief operating officer of the new company.

Completion of the merger is subject to approval by the boards of directors and stockholders of Interstate Securities and Johnson Lane, and appropriate regulatory bodies. The transaction is expected to be complete by Sept. 30.

Pam Am Reaches Labor Agreement With Union

By MARCY GORDON
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Financially pressed Pan Am Corp. has moved a step closer to recovery by reaching a tentative labor agreement with leaders of its largest union.

The Transport Workers union agreed to freeze wages, prompting Pan Am to withdraw its recent threat to sell a large portion of its assets. The airline, engaged in sporadic talks with the Transport Workers since February, originally sought a 10 percent cut in wages.

The agreement, covering about 5,200 mechanics, aircraft service personnel and flight dispatchers, still must be ratified by the union membership. It would save the airline about $81 million over the next three years, according to both the union and Pan Am.

"This is a crucial development in Pan Am's plan for financial recovery," Pan Am Chairman Thomas G. Plaskett said in a statement.

The Transport Workers union is the third out of the five unions ?at Pan Am to sign a new cost-saving contract with the carrier, which is seeking $90 million in wage reductions from its flight attendants and has imposed $35 million in cuts on the Teamsters under federal labor rules.

Pan Am said it will now direct its efforts toward reaching an accord with the flight attendants.

The airline's management believes it needs about $540 million over three years in pay cuts and other labor concessions to turn itself around. Last spring, the two unions representing pilots and flight engineers agreed to cuts totaling about $240 million over three years.

Teamsters leader William Genoese said the new agreement with the Transport Workers didn't change his union's position. Representatives of the Pan Am flight attendants weren't immediately available for comment.

"The whole thing is a farce; the company is going down the tubes," Genoese, director of the Teamsters' airline division, told The Associated Press. "We're in a position to strike the company ... we're going to fight 'em tooth-and-nail."

Because Pan Am softened its position with the transport workers, accepting a wage freeze rather than a cut, Genoese asserted, "They've got to soften their position with everybody."

Disney Wage Protest Ends On Violent Note

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) — A flag-waving union rally degenerated into a car smashing as union workers protested wages paid by a Japanese company and other builders of a hotel and convention complex at Walt Disney World.

Union protesters, incensed about wages paid to construction workers building on Disney property, pulled down 300 feet of a construction fence when the rally turned violent.

About 50 surged onto the Swan and Dolphin hotel property and used sledgehammers, ax handles and their feet to demolish a security guard's Toyota. Tires were slashed on another vehicle.

The rally Friday, which drew about 400 union members, got off to a peaceful start as state AFL-CIO President Dan Miller charged that for the first time in 20 years, contractors building on Disney property weren't paying wages set in a union agreement.

Miller focused much of his anger at Aoki Corp. of Tokyo, which along with two partners is building the complex on Disney land. He said builders are paying workers $2 to $4 an hour less that the $8 rate cited in union construction contracts.

The Toyota was demolished, and the unruly crowd dispersed quickly when there were shouts that the police were coming. No arrests were made.

One protester who remained, union bricklayer John Brady, said: "Violence is not the way, but our people are frustrated. They see foreign companies coming in to take American jobs. They feel that they're being sold down the river."

Tax Pitfalls Can Shoot Holes In Self-Employment

By Albert B. Crenshaw
L.A. Tomes-Washington Post News Service

Spurred by the almost daily tales of self-made millionaires and billionaires, an increasing number of Americans are launching business ventures of their own.

Many are plunging right in, telling their former employers to take their jobs and do you-know-what with them. Others are thrown in, having been told by their former employers to take their labor and do you-know-what with it.

But the statistics on business failures remain daunting, so for many who have the choice, a third alternative is tempting: keep the old job and start the business on the side.

This can make very good sense economically (if you can manage what amounts to two jobs simultaneously). If the new venture fails you're not left out there with no visible means of support. And if there are periodic tides of red ink there also is a tax benefit — you may be able to deduct the losses against your other income.

But if you do that, you have to be very careful. The law and the tax regulations are very specific, and the Internal Revenue Service — having seen a lot of wealthy executives and professionals try to write off expenses from their hobbies — is very suspicious of business deductions taken by people who are working full time.

Indeed, the more fun the IRS thinks you're having, the less likely it will be to let your writeoffs go unchallenged.

The fact remains, however, that real business enterprises are entitled to the deductions. The trick is in doing it right, as two recent decisions from the U.S. Tax Court here illustrate.

The moral of these two cases is that if you want to deduct your losses, you have to run your business in a serious way and keep good records.

One couple who did this — and beat the IRS in tax court — was Kenneth and Nan Rider, who ran a farm near Deschler, Ohio.

Their tax returns for 1962 and 1983 were the perfect sort to catch the IRS's attention. Kenneth Rider was an Eastern Air Lines pilot based at New York's LaGuardia Airport, pulling down $50,000 to $60,000 a year.

The Riders didn't live on the 27-acre farm, which they bought in 1974, and had never made a profit from it.

To the IRS, this had all the earmarks of a hobby farm, or "an activity not engaged in for profit," and it disallowed the Rider's losses of $907 in 1982 and $2,658 in 1983.

But the law doesn't say that you have to make money, only that you try to make money. So what it boils down to is a question of intent.

Since only the taxpayer knows for sure what he was trying to do, the IRS and the tax court over the years have learned to give little weight to "self-interested testimony" unsupported by hard evidence. Instead, the tax regulations lay out a series of tests by which intent can be measured.

These include:

— The manner in which the taxpayer carries on the activity — whether, for example, it is consistent and business-like.

— The expertise of the taxpayer and the adviser. In other words, does he know what he's doing or is he just playing?

— The time and effort expended by the taxpayer.

— The expectation that assets used in the activity may appreciate in value.

— The success of the taxpayer in the carrying on of other businesses.

— The taxpayer's history of income and losses from the activity.

— The financial status of the taxpayer.

— The "elements of personal pleasure or recreation involved" in the activity.

No single factor is determinative. It is the overall pattern that counts. A well-paid person like Rider, doing something that might be considered fun, like farming, can still prevail. On the other hand, deductions from an apparently straightforward business like bookkeeping may be disallowed if the operator doesn't seem serious about it.

What persuaded the tax court that the Rider's farming was for real was the fact that he spent almost as much time farming as flying. He and his family did almost all the farm work, planting crops, clearing brush and maintaining drainage ditches. He got advice from government agricultural experts, and read trade and government farming publications.

And he kept clear books and records, using a bookkeeping system devised by Ohio State University.

The court concluded that Rider "was more than just a weekend farmer" and that he had "honestly tried to cut costs to make his farm more profitable."

"The fact that he has not yet realized a profit does not necessarily mean that if he continues to work hard and cuts costs, he will not earn a profit in the future," the court said, all of which "persuades us that he was in farming to make money."

Not so fortunate were Herbert and Bertha Jenkins of Cincinnati. He had run a bookkeeping and tax service in the late 1960s, but left it to go to work for the IRS. He turned the business over to his wife, who — though neither an accountant nor college graduate — continued to operate it out of their home while working at other jobs.

Although she was in business to keep books for others, Bertha Jenkins apparently kept none of her own. The court found that "she kept no business books, payroll records, cash journals or ledgers of accounts payable or accounts receivable for the business."

Further, there was "no persuasive evidence that she had any clients" and "the materials... presented as her business records are checks, charge slips and cash register receipts which are generally uninformative as to the nature of the expense or its relationship to any business activity," the court said.

The couple's two daughters were also employed in the bookkeeping business, they said, but there were no payroll records and in several years the wages paid to the daughters exceeded the service's entire income.

Honda Tops Imports List

By William Sexton
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

TOKYO — To its own great surprise, an upstart U.S. auto manufacturer edged out Detroit's Big Three to seize the lead among American imports in the super-competitive Japanese home market this spring, trade association figures show.

The triumphant newcomer: Honda of America.

Honda, which manufactures the vehicles in question in Marysville, Ohio, sold 1,507 cars, or 55 percent of all the U.S.-built autos purchased by Japanese consumers during April and May, the Association of Japanese Auto Importers reported Friday.

The best-selling model, an Accord sports coupe, is the first car Honda, the Japanese automaker, brought back to this country from one of its overseas plants.

For GM, Ford and Chrysler, possibly the most distressing aspect of the sales figures is that the imported Hondas have U.S.-style left-side drive, which is on the wrong side for Japan's British-style traffic pattern. Analysts have long explained the poor demand for U.S.-made cars here by pointing to the unavailability of right-side drive. European manufacturers routinely produce right-side drive vehicles for the Japanese market.

When Honda first decided to import Accords from Ohio, many in Japan saw it more as a cosmetic gesture to U.S. political pressures than a serious sales drive. Company officials said they were as surprised as everyone else by the soaring sales.

The immediate impact on Detroit is not likely to be major, since the Big Three automakers have long trailed their European competitors in Japan.

Lynn Everette is representative of critical care nurses everywhere who face the challenge of bringing the human touch to high-tech medical care for . acutely ill and injured people.

Nurse Likes Challenge Of Critical Care

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Lynn Dail Everette had a rusty shovel slammed into her forehead by another child when she was 5 years old.

Her parents, Herbert and Patricia Dail of Falkland, rushed her to the Pitt County Memorial Hospital Emergency Room. She remembers lovingly administered and careful treatment and recalls her fascination with what she saw that day. She went home with five stitches in her forehead and a compelling desire to become a nurse.

She is a nurse now — a critical care nurse. And in this role, Mrs. Everette daily faces the challenge of patient care in Critical Care Unit IV at Pitt County Memorial Hospital. The acuity of illness and injury and the crucial decision making she confronts are indicative of the pressures and responsibilities that face critical care nurses across the nation.

She remembers throughout her childhood enjoying her visits to the pediatric office of Dr. Earl Trevathan and her favorite of his nurses, Mary Lou Buck. She recalls the gentle attention she received there and in other medical specialists' offices when it was discovered during her high school years that she had somehow — perhaps by infection — developed a hearing loss that required correction.

She remembers always considering it a privilege to take care of people, just as she saw her mother and her grandmother, Bettie Mae Little, also a Falkland resident, do. She remembers the terminal illness of her grandfather, Gus Little, and the excellent care he received both at Pitt County Memorial Hospital and at home. His death came in June 1976, the same week she graduated from Farmville Central High School.

But even before her grandfather's illness became apparent, she was clear on what she planned to do with her life. There was never any question as she was applying for college entrance what she'd study. She entered East Carolina University planning to earn a bachelor's degree in nursing and she worked steadily toward her goal.

By May 1981, she was graduating from ECU. She never lived on campus, always commuted from Falkland, first from her parents' home and then from that of her and her husband, Randy Everette, to whom she's now been married nine and a half years. During her senior year, she worked as a patient care technician in the 3 North A General Medical Unit of Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

And it was in 3 North A of PCMH that she landed her first full-time job. She stayed there for about a year and a half, then spent five years as a charge nurse in the 3 North B Postintensive Medical Unit and Cardiac Telemetry Stepdown Unit.

Shortly before January 1987, she decided she was ready for greater challenge. She applied to be a critical care unit nurse.

Stressful Work

"I found, as I expected," she said, "that nursing in critical care is stressful," she said. "But I love it. I love the fast pace. I love the unpredictability of it all. I love the diversity of jobs I'm called upon to do. It's good for me to have to daily prove to myself that I can be a quick thinker who can respond to any emergency decisively and thoroughly. The sickest and more seriously injured people from throughout eastern North Carolina come either to this or other critical care units of this hospital."

On a recent afternoon, as Mrs. Everette was being observed at work by the writer, her 10-bed surgery-trauma intensive care unit was caring for four patients who'd suffered multiple injuries in automobile accidents, one gunshot wound victim, three patients recovering from major surgery, one of whom had "coded" — experienced cardiac arrest — the week before, and two being stabilized for major surgery.

Five of these were being assisted in breathing by ventilators and all were having their heart function and other vital body activity monitored by electronic equipment carefully watched by nurses.

Mrs. Everette was caring for the man who had coded the week before, for a woman whose body was being stressed by infection following a gunshot wound which gouged a hole through her upper leg, and for a heart bypass surgery patient who had continued to need a ventilator following his surgery.

No critical care nurse at PCMH ever has more than three patients and there are times when a patient is so critically ill that one-to-one nursing is demanding. Often the level of care is great enough to demand one-to-two nursing. For many patient care jobs, nurses work as teams with one another and with other health care providers like health care technicians, respiratory therapists, infection control providers, and patient care representatives — to name a few of their co-workers.

During one few minutes of the afternoon she was observed, caring for her patients demanded that Mrs. Everette suction blood and sputum from one patient's mouth and throat. Stopping only long enough to listen intently to the concerns of the brother of another patient and answer his questions, she then went to another patient's room to clean decaying flesh and bacteria from a gunshot wound. She and health care technician Rita Smith wore protective clothing and disposable gloves during the latter task. And they liberally doused the room with oil of wintergreen to help them tolerate the stench from the wound.

No Longer Handmaiden

"The nurse today is no longer the doctor's handmaiden wearing a starched dress and cap," Mrs. Everette said. "Much of what we do is too unladylike for dresses and caps would just fall off or get in the way. We wear durable blue scrub suits. I drop mine in the washing machine on the way into my house every day and head for the shower. It's very important to me that I do all I can not to take contagion home."

She does take home sometimes, though, disturbed emotions about having had a patient die or take a turn for the worse. "You come to love your patients and their families," she said. "You also become convinced, with all the suffering you see, that there are worse experiences than dying. But it's still hard to see people in pain, physical or emotional. We've had in here recently two elderly people who had lost close loved ones in wrecks. It was hard knowing the emotional distress they were having."

Having been an observer of people through seven years of nursing, she recognizes the grieving process in patients' family members, at first shocked by the loss of health and possibility of death of their loved ones. She sees them work through their sadness, their anger, watches them bargain and sometimes sees them arrive at acceptance of their losses. At times she calls on the advice of a psychiatric nurse for assistance for a grieving family member or for herself or another health care provider in being with grieving people.

Sometimes the CCU has patients who have been involved in violence. Either they themselves have attacked someone else or there's a possibility that whoever attacked them will want to come to the hospital and finish the job. For this reason, armed guards are posted in the critical care unit when it is deemed necessary.

Visitors are strictly screened. And every visitor is requested to wash his or her hands upon entering and upon leaving the unit. "Most do it very willingly," Mrs. Everette said, "and if they could see all the germs that are around here, they'd really be glad to."

Related Activity

Mrs. Everette usually works 12-hour days at the hospital. She likes this schedule, because it gives her long stretches of time for home life as well as career-related and other activities. She serves on a task force which has developed a health care technician program for the hospital and serves as quality assurance representative for CCU IV. Until recently, she served as chairman of the Critical Care Division Quality Assurance Committee. In the past, she has served on various other nursing committees, including the Education Committee for 3 North B from 1983 to 1987 and the Basic Cardiopulmonary Core Task Force for the hospital.

An article by her titled, "Post-Operative Care of the Pancreas Transplant Patient" was published in the PCMH Nursing Service Perspectives On Nursing spring periodical.

She recently attended a four-day National Teaching Institute of the American Association of Critical Care Nurses in Dallas, Texas.

This past spring, she was honored as the hospital's Critical Care Nurse of the Year.

At home she assists her husband, Randy, in his general home repair business as his bookkeeper. The couple attends Belvoir Free Will Baptist Church. A pianist since childhood, she often plays for weddings and likes to knit or crochet her own sweaters and gifts, to quilt and to sew. She made all the curtains in her house herself.

She expects to be a nurse for many years to come. She plans eventually to obtain her master's degree in nursing and has recently undertaken a self-study program to prepare herself to take the Critical Care Registered Nurse test administered by the American Association of Critical Care Nurses. This preparation could be a two-year project, she said.

What will passing the test gain for her?. "I'll learn a lot doing the study," she said. "And it will be an indicator of the initiative I have as a nurse."

HONORED — Lynn Everette was honored on Nurses' Day, May 6, as Critical Care Nurse of the Year at Pitt Memorial. She and the other award winners from various divisions of the hospital were selected after having been nominated by their peers.

The miniature bride was dressed identically to the bride and carried an eyelet basket of silk gardenias, baby's breath and ivory satin streamers.

Readers Give Opinions On Bald Heads

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: "Losing Mine" wanted to know how women feel about balding or bald men. "Can a man without hair be considered sexy, handsome and a hunk?" he asks.

Here is one woman's view: Baldness is not a "loss" — it's a change. Forget the toupees and transplants. The expense, pain and anxiety over strong winds are worse than any change in appearance.

And whatever you do, don't try to cover your baldness with foot-long wisps of hair parted an inch over one ear and draped around the head as many times as it will go. This looks ridiculous, fools no one, and is the subject of more notice, derision and comment than baldness could ever be. Gentlemen, please accept yourselves as you are — the way millions of bald men and those who love them do. — LAURIE MITCHELL, WICHITA, KAN.

DEAR ABBY: I want to answer "Losing Mine": I've never seen hair on my husband's head except in pictures. He was bald at 31 when I met him and it didn't make one bit of difference to me. If a man needs a hairpiece or a transplant for himself, fine, but if he's doing it for the ladies, he's wasting a lot of money. Any woman who would reject a man because he's bald isn't worth having.

I'm married to a handsome, sexy hunk. And his hair doesn't tickle my nose when he sleeps with his head on my shoulder. To me, he's not really bald. He just has more face to kiss. — WHO NEEDS HAIR IN CHICAGO?

DEAR ABBY: My father, who just turned 50, started losing his hair when he was in the Navy about 30 years ago.

When our family (Mom, Dad and their four kids) went for a portrait sitting 10 years ago, the photographer wanted an outdoor shot, so he had us move to a shady spot so he wouldn't get a glare off Dad's shiny head. Once, when we joked to Dad that we'd read that "a bald head is solar power for a sex machine," Mom blushed.

Dad is a dead ringer for Gavin MacLeod in "The Love Boat." Everyone says so. My 26-year-old brother, whose hairline is also heading north, had a girlfriend tell him she hoped he'd be as handsome as Dad when he gets older. Go ahead and use my name. Everybody in the Carter family has a wonderful sense of humor. — PAM CARTER, ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.

DEAR ABBY: I can't verify that bald men are better lovers, but my hunch is that a man who has lost his hair — or is losing it fast and isn't preoccupied by the fact — is generally superior in bed.

Bald men who don't resort to trying to hide their baldness have obviously accepted themselves as they are. This is masculine, strong, honest, self-confident and, therefore, sexy! — BALD IS BEAUTIFUL

DEAR ABBY: You said it all when you said, "It's not what's on a man's head; it's what's in it that makes him attractive, sexy and handsome."

I'll tell you what handsome and sexy means to me: It's being kind, thoughtful, clean, honest and gentle.

My guy became my friend first — then my lover. He's everything I've ever admired in a man. I'm as crazy about him as if this were my first love. I'm 74 and he's 75. — IN LOVE IN VENTURA

DEAR ABBY: I nominate Louis Gossett Jr. as the handsomest, sexiest hunk I've ever set eyes on. I think he's bald, but I can't swear to it. I never could see above those gorgeous, penetrating eyes. — DOTTIE IN DETROIT

Program To Explore Senses

NEW YORK (AP) — Preschoolers will meet at the Staten Island Children's Museum this summer for a weekly series that will focus on their five senses.

The first week, barefoot participants will explore their sense of touch in a number of ways, including a walk and a touch-and-tell game. The museum's newest exhibit, The Clockwork Sound Arcade, will be the setting for the second week's experimentation with sound and music.

The third week's activities will help youngsters learn that light is essential to sight. Children will make kaleidoscopes and rainbow mobiles, play with prisms and learn about rainbows.

Sniffing colorful blossoms at the Staten Island Botanical Garden will awaken the children's sense of smell in the fourth week, when they will also learn to dry herbs and flowers and to make potpourri.

The final week features a program on taste in which participants will make peanut butter candies. The summer will be concluded with a sensory celebration for kids and their parents, complete with feasting, music and colorful decorations.

GROOMS PLAYING BIGGER

NEW YORK (AP) — A growing number of today's grooms want a role equal to the bride's in wedding plans, says Cele Lalli, editor in chief of Modern Bride.

Another change, she reports, is that while the bride's parents traditionally paid for the wedding, today expenses are frequently shared by the parents of both bride and groom, and increasingly by the couple themselves.

Americans today are marrying later, Ms. Lalli points out, at an average age of 27 for men and 25 for women. Weddings now typically involve working couples with a combined income of more than $40,000 a year, she notes.

ABWA Meeting Set For Tuesday

INSURANCE REVIEW URGED

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — It's important to review your homeowners insurance policy to make sure it provides sufficient coverage, advises Nationwide Insurance.

The homeowners policy typically covers losses caused to the home or its contents by fire, lightning, wind, hail, vandalism, theft and other perils. Also included is liability coverage for anyone who may be injured in an accident on the insured property.

Junior bridesmaids were Amanda and Heather Corbett, daughters of the bridegroom, both of Fountain, and Kelly Yoakam, niece of the bride of Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio.

William Bryant Corbett served as best man. Ushers were Durwood Corbett, brother of the bridegroom, of Pinetops, Leon Privott of Elizabeth City, Allen Corbett of Fountain and Wade Corbett of Raleigh, both cousins of the bridegroom, and Ron Hart, brother-in-law of the bride, of Raleigh. Junior ushers were Rusty and Andrew Page of Greenville and Neil Gilbird of Elizabeth City.

Danny Hamilton, nephew of the bride, of Centerburg, Ohio, and Chris Yoakam, nephew of the bride, of Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, Chris Coggins of Greenville, and Terry Gilbird of Elizabeth City were candle lighters.

Given in marriage by her brother, Donald Yoakam of Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, the bride wore a formal gown of white satin. The dress featured short puffed sleeves with lace overlays and a Victorian neckline accented with seed pearls. Cascading layers of satin and lace formed the chapel-length train. Her headpiece was of lace and pearls. She carried an arrangement of red and white roses.

Each of the attendants wore a tea-length dress of white moire. Each carried a bouquet of red and white roses highligted with greenery and streamers.

Following the wedding ceremony, a reception was held in the church fellowship hall. Lisa Driver, Barbara Stoddard, Jewel Coggins, Dell Williams, Rebecca Heller, and Connie Felton assisted in serving. Dot Hudson directed the reception.

Several miscellaneous showers and dinners were given in honor of the couple.

Following a wedding trip to Orlando, Fla., the couple will reside in Greenville.

The bride is employed by Proctor & Gamble and the bridegroom is employed at White's Department Store.

MAMARONECK, N.Y. (AP) — Billionaire John Kluge is known as a shrewd dealmaker.

Here's an example:

The 73-year-old owner of Metromedia Inc. could get $4 million by selling his waterfront house in Westchester County. But, by dividing the lot in two, he can get an additional $500,000.

The local zoning board unanimously approved a variance this week that will allow Kluge to divide the lot.

In 1972, Kluge paid $350,000 for an 18-room house located on a little more than an acre. He later bought property next door, slightly less than an acre, for $2 million and razed an 11-room house so he could add on to his home.

Kluge, who is worth $3 billion, is the second-richest American, trailing Sam Walton, head of the Wal-Mart retailing chain, according to Forbes magazine.

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

HOW TO BUY THE RIGHT LAMP

The first rule to remember in buying a lamp is that lamps should perform--not one--but two jobs for you.

Besides giving you the kind of light you want where you want it, the other job that lamps should do is to add a decorating quality to your rooms.

A famous designer once said that a lamp should be useful--EVEN WHEN IT'S OFF. What he meant was that lamps should be bought--not just for lighting--but for their own beauty. They should bring decorator touches to the place where they're being used.

But just as a lamp should be useful when it's off, you should take care that it will be useful when it's on, by having it be the right size to do the right job in lighting. Make sure that a lamp is the best height to throw the right amount of light in the right spots. And make sure that the lamp is the size you want in relation to furniture around it.

Lamps can do a lot for you, both when they're on and when they're off, if chosen properly. For all your home furnishing needs and help, stop in. We'll be glad to see you, and you'll be glad you stopped.

Abandoned Children Face Obstacles

By EDUARDO GALLARDO
Associated Press Writer

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Most Latin American countries are stepping up efforts to help millions of abandoned children, but they often are frustrated by critical economic conditions, old laws, war and political violence.

From Mexico to Chile, governments are allocating new resources, passing legislation and establishing aid institutions.

Nevertheless, the results remain poor.

Millions of children still live in the streets, eating what food they can get through begging, odd jobs or crime, including stealing and drug trafficking, authorities say.

COOL LESSON — Swimming lessons turned out to be just as much fun for Luanne Thayer as they were for her daughter, Lindsey, 3. The impromptu lesson occured on the shores of Lake Hartwell during a trip from their home in Newberry, S.C. (AP Laserphoto)

But some successes have been reported.

The government in the Brazilian state of Sao Paulo runs a special program to teach carpentry, mechanics and other trades to children picked in the streets. More than 9,000 children are being trained.

UNICEF, the United Nations Children's Fund, has called the Sao Paulo program "unique, creative, modern," and urges similar programs on other Latin American countries.

Alda Marco Antonio, secretary of the Sao Paulo Office for Children, said, "Our aim is to provide alternative education and training programs that can help abandoned children and keep them away from the road that usually leads to crime."

Leonardo, a boy who lived for years in the streets of Sao Paulo and often stole for a living, is now learning to be a carpenter.

"I used to steal, beg," Leonardo told a visitor in Sao Paulo. He said he was once arrested in the street and rather than go to jail reluctantly accepted a place in the government program.

"That was the best decision in my life," Leonardo said.

But Brazilian authorities estimate 7 million children have been totally abandoned in their country of 143 million people. An additional 36 million children are listed as lacking housing, education and health services.

Brazil is not alone.

Although most governments do not have exact figures, some Mexican officials estimate the number of abandoned children in the country may be as high as 12 million, almost as many as the 14 million attending the nations' schools.

Similar situations prevail in other countries in the region.

In Peru, the government estimates that 45 percent of the nation's children "live in a situation of risk," many of them totally abandoned.

Chile is widely credited with having one of the best aid programs in Latin America and has substantially reduced the number of abandoned children. The National Service for Minors says Chile's military government spends $208 million a year in assistance programs and the number of street children has dwindled to a few hundred.

The program operates through private and church institutions. Even the militarized national police force is involved, offering 33 "homes" for the children.

In Ecuador, the government recently levied a tax the equivalent of 1 cent on all checkbooks issued by banks, and a 2 percent tax on lottery tickets and other gambling, to gather funds for child aid programs.

Luis Alfredo Cevallos, head of the Ecuadorian Childhood Institute, calling the system "revolutionary in Latin America," said the government expects to collect $7.7 million during the first year.

In many countries, juvenile crime has become a major problem, authorities say. This is especially true in Colombia, Brazil and Mexico.

In some Colombian cities, including Bogota, the capital, organized gangs of children, called "galladas," are responsible for hundreds of crimes, according to the police.

The Rev. Javier de Nicolo, a Roman Catholic priest working with abandoned children in Bogota, says the problem is the result of "the enormous poverty in an unjust society."

The Colombian Institute for Family Welfare, a government agency, says it spends $100 million a year providing shelter, food and clothing for about 24,000 children, but officials add that figure represents only 20 percent of the children in need of help.

Officials in many countries say they often find that children living in the streets do not want to leave the freedom they believe they have and refuse to enter aid institutions.

"In the street we have a 'job' (stealing), and we can smoke marijuana," said Marcelino, a street boy in Bogota. "And when we have problems with the cops, we 'fix them' by giving them some money or part of our loot."

The government of Argentina has sent a bill to Congress to replace the only existing law to aid abandoned children, which has been in effect since 1919.

The government has used $500,000 supplied by the United Nations to establish a center for teachers specialized in dealing with abandoned children.

The situation in Argentina "is manageable, but is being worsened by the economic crisis," said the government's secretary for human development, Enrique de Vedia. He estimated that 7,000 children live in the streets in Argentina, while 3 million others live in extreme poverty.

Elsewhere in Latin America government officials also cite economic crisis as the biggest hurdle in aiding abandoned children. The crisis has been worsened in recent years by Latin America's combined foreign debt of about $400 billion.

In the impoverished nations of Central America, the situation for children has been worsened by years of war and political violence. Scores of thousands of children have been left orphans, abandoned or displaced.

In Nicaragua, the Sandinista revolution that toppled dictator Anastasio Somoza in 1979, and the war between the Sandinista government and the U.S.-backed Contras have left 51,000 orphans, according to the government. Similar situations have occurred in El Salvador and Guatemala.

Nicaraguan officials claim that through a Cuban-backed massive education program, they have succeeded in bringing illiteracy down from 50 percent to 13 percent. But they add that the Contra-Sandinista conflict has forced the closing of 502 elementary and high schools.

"We cannot implement our projects because of the war," said Marcia Ramirez, head of the Nicaraguan Social Security Institute. "We just don't have the money."

Latin American and international officials say that despite the difficulties, it is urgent for Latin American governments to maintain the efforts to help abandoned, exploited and poor children, and those who have been the victims of violence. The future of the region's societies is at stake, they say.

Will Video Phones Catch On?

By DEBORAH MESCE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly a quarter-century after visitors to the 1964 New York World's Fair were introduced to the Picturephone, the see-as-you talk concept is being offered again.

The cost is lower, but so is the technology.

Unlike the moving images of the Picturephone, which let fair-goers see as well as hear the person on the other end of the wire, the new devices produce only a freeze-frame shot.

And industry analysts still question whether the home video phone's time has come.

"The issue is behavior," said A. Michael Noll, a professor of communications at the University of Southern California who worked for American Telephone & Telegraph Co. in new product planning in the mid-1970s.

Using the telephone is akin to "whispering in the ear. Seeing somebody almost destroys the intimacy of the communication," he said. "When we ask an audience whether they want to see on the phone, half or more say no."

Mitsubishi officials recognize the psychological barrier Picturephone ran into, but the company believes its VisiTel visual phone display unit, introduced in the United States last November, will fare better

VisiTel, the only consumer product of its kind now on the U.S. market, has a camera lens that projects the user's image onto a black-and-white, 4.5-inch screen. The image can be transmitted to another VisiTel user in about five seconds. Since the unit uses ordinary phone lines, the same calling rates apply when the Visitel is used as when an ordinary phone is used.

"This is a passive product," said Tim Beck, national sales manager for the visual telecommunications division of Mitsubishi Electric Sales of America. "It's not like picking up the phone and immediately your picture is there. It only transmits when you hit the send key," he said.

Beck said VisiTels, retailing for about $400 each, are selling "very well." The company has orders for about 64,000 units and has delivered about 36,000 of them, he said.

Two other Japanese companies, Sony Corp. and Matsushita's Panasonic division, are planning to put similar products on the market by Christmas.

A variety of companies, such as PictureTel Corp. of Peabody, Mass., sell devices that transmit moving images, but those are more expensive and require higher-grade phone lines. They are mostly for businesses.

AT&T's Picturephone initially was aimed at the residential caller. AT&T set up phones at central locations in New York, Chicago and Washington. People could place calls from a Picturephone at one of these locations to a Picturephone at another location, where family or friends would be awaiting their pre-arranged call.

AT&T said it would extend service to other parts of the country if demand was large enough, and a June 1964 press release said, "There is no telling when Picturephone sets in the home will be as common as telephones are today."

"The problem was the technology was just ahead of its time. There wasn't the demand for it," said Gary Whaite, manager of AT&T's corporate staff for teleconferencing application development. "People didn't want themselves seen in what you would call the private home environment. It just wasn't appealing to the public."

It was also expensive to install and to use. Rates ranged from $16 to $27 for the first three minutes at one of the Picturephone centers. Installing a Picturephone in someone's home would have cost thousands of dollars for special wiring to connect the device to the phone network.

AT&T eventually turned its attention away from residential prospects and focused on the business community. Businesses were more receptive to two-way video, but the growth of what came to be known as teleconferencing was also slow because of the high cost of equipment and the special circuits required.

Even by the late 1970s, it cost about half a million dollars to equip a room with video monitors, cameras and special wiring, Whaite said.

Technological advances began bringing the cost down significantly in the 1980s and by the mid-1980s teleconferencing was becoming more attractive to companies trying to cut travel costs and open more lines of communication.

Now, an estimated 150 to 200 companies have their own teleconferencing networks ranging in size from two to 45 sites, said Elliot M. Gold, a teleconferencing consultant based in Altadena, Calif.

Technology has much further to go before moving pictures can be transmitted over ordinary phone lines at reasonable costs to the consumer, and estimates of when that will happen range from seven to 10 years at the earliest.

But even when the technology develops, many see acceptance in the business community as the key to unlocking the residential market for video phones.

"Business started with personal computers, and then they went into the home. It followed the business application because lots of people take their work home," Whaite said.

Home video phones "will follow the same pattern, but it will probably be a slower evolution ... and it will never get to the proportions it will in the business environment," he said.

Noll is more skeptical.

"I don't think the problem is technology. I think it's behavior," he said. "There is something inherent in people and the way they communicate that doesn't fit into this technology.

"We're 20 years into this idea (see-as-you-talk phones) and everybody is predicting it's going to take off and it doesn't take off. That should tell us something."

Cable Premieres

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The USA Network is ready to embark on a $50 million publicity campaign to tout the cable premieres of reruns of "Murder, She Wrote" and "Miami Vice."

The promotional money should be even better spent than USA Network hoped when the campaign was planned last May, now that the strike by the Writers Guild of America has indefinitely delayed the networks' new fall shows. Besides buying ads, the campaign includes sending splashy multimedia publicity kits to USA affiliates and a "Miami Vice" contest in October with a Ferrari Testarossa the grand prize. USA Network is available to approximately 45 million homes.

Georgia Bamboo For Pandas

By ELLIOTT MINOR
Associated Press Writer

SAVANNAH, Ga. (AP) — The agricultural research station near here doesn't just test alternative crops for farmers and help urban gardeners grow fatter tomatoes.

It also is home to "Chinese Goddess," "Tonkin" and dozens of other species of bamboo, the towering plant in demand for everything from flutes to panda food.

"There's tremendous interest in bamboo," said Charles Bruce, superintendent of the University of Georgia's Coastal Area Extension Research Center.

The 50-acre center, commonly called the bamboo station, has groves containing 85 to 100 species of the treelike grass that thrives in tropical regions.

During a recent tour of the facility, Frank Linton, a research assistant, pointed out a few varieties.

"When I first came here, I just thought bamboo was bamboo," he said while strolling past dense groves of giant timber bamboo and arrow bamboo.

The giant timber bamboo, used in the Orient for scaffolding and buildings, can grow to heights of 60 to 70 feet with diameters in excess of 4½ inches, he said.

Arrow bamboo is the favorite of pandas, but they will eat other types, he said. Tonkin is used to make flutes and split-bamboo flyrods.

The bamboo growing at the research center was planted by U.S. Department of Agriculture scientists in the early 1900s. They obtained varieties found in China, Japan and South America and placed them in the sandy white soil that is common along Georgia's coast.

When the university acquired the station in 1984, some farm specialists viewed the bamboo as a nuisance.

"All they talked about was bulldozing it. But this is an internationally known collection. We have people from all over the United States come to see the bamboo," said Bruce, a horticulturist. "There's a lot of interest in bamboo."

Bruce said the bamboo, some of which can grow as much as 18 inches in 24 hours, has helped generate extra funds that are used to help defray research costs.

Between January and March, people pay a fee to dig bamboo rhizomes, an underground stem with roots and bud, for replanting in their yards. Certain varieties of potted bamboo, also suitable for replanting, are available at the center year round.

When two giant pandas were on exhibit in Tampa, Fla., the center shipped 300 pounds of bamboo shoots a week to feed them. The female has been sent back to China for artificial insemination.

The center also ships bamboo shoots to at least four zoos to feed lesser pandas, the catlike cousins of the rare giants.

Bruce and Linton have made the revitalization of some bamboo groves a top priority. Some groves have been cut to allow new plants to grow and others have been thinned out to provide more sunlight to the remaining plants.

An unexpected source of bamboo demand has come from craftsmen who produce handmade shepherd's pipes, flutes and wind chimes, Linton noted.

"It's probably unlimited as to what people can do with it," he added. "It's become an asset to the station."

Designers Sitting Pretty With Outdoor Chair Ideas

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

The American love affair with outdoor living has led to some memorable outdoor chairs.

A few that come readily to mind are the wooden Adirondack chair which has graced many a hotel porch, the porch glider and the all-purpose aluminum folding chair with a webbed seat.

Recently, some fanciful new ideas have surfaced. A "throne" made out of a lightweight synthetic for mobility and a wooden bench decorated with a painted panther's head and clawed paw feet were among the clever works shown in an exhibit of chairs by 30 artists and designers.

The seating is spending the summer in the garden of the Cooper-Hewitt Museum in New York, where museum goers are welcome to lounge on and even romp over most of the examples. According to Dorothy Globus, curator of exhibitions, the public is enjoying an unaccustomed opportunity to touch and use the artworks and museum staff members are just as pleased to watch the explorations.

The 30 works on display are actually only part of a larger 50-piece exhibition held last year in Sansalito, Calif., which was conceived by landscape architect, Topher Delaney. Delaney invited artists, architects and furniture designers to update the great American outdoor chair.

The designers' unexpected ideas for outdoor seating are not likely to be found at the local leisure shop. But they do offer some promising directions to liven up a field which is not known for design innovation.

Virtually every contributor came up with an idea that was both practical and clever. To do so, some employed unusual materials such as plastic insulators, pressboard or lightweight fiberglass-reinforced concrete. Allen Meisner's throne chair of glasscrete is an example.

Others used wood, aluminum and steel in unusual ways: the bench with the panther design and animal paws by Wendy Maruyama and William Peters, for example. Another clever use of wood employed only tree branches — bark and all — which Pedro Castillo used to create a slender bench in the shape of skinny dog whose flattened back provides the resting place.

Two of the "chairs" are not really for sitting. One by Jeff Benedetto looks like an easy chair with arms but since it's constructed of wire mesh, it is suitable only for a weightless being. Benedetto actually designed it as a topiary frame. Carl Dern's 12-foot high chair — most of it legs — might accommodate the mythical Paul Bunyan or a circus clown on stilts, but nobody of human proportions.

While the artists have been rethinking the past to come up with outdoor seating ideas for the future, the furniture industry has been busy mining the past for reproductions. Perhaps the return of traditional styling in decorating and in garden design is encouraging a reprise of earlier styles.

In any case, one of the newest trends in outdoor furniture is reproductions of 19th century pieces.

At the national furniture market in High Point, N.C., this spring, for example, reproductions based on originals at Winterthur Museum and Gardens in Winterthur, Del., were shown. The 17-piece collection of wrought iron benches, chairs and tables manufactured by Wood, Metal & Love are being sold through Winterthur's mail order catalog and in furniture stores around the country.

Another traditional outdoor design enjoying renewed popularity is English-style teak benches, tables and chairs. These are made by a number of companies in England and the Orient and imported into this country.

According to Robert Currey, a sales representative for Winterthur furniture and an outdoor furniture retailer in Atlanta, the reproductions are essential for those who want to furnish an old fashioned garden because authentic antique pieces are now scarcer and far more expensive than they used to be. "The last Regency bench I heard about was for sale in Boston and they wanted $24,000 for it," he said.

The best quality American-made wood furniture nowadays, according to Currey, is of cypress, Adirondack maple and ash. He claims the painted reddish furniture many people refer to as redwood has lost popularity in some areas. For one thing, it is not necessarily made of that durable and long-lasting wood, but may simply be painted red.

Currey's advice for those seeking outdoor furniture this season is to consider their own needs first.

Most dealers assume you want to buy a dining table, umbrella and four or six dining chairs. This is a fine choice for those whose primary interest is dining furniture. But for many people several comfortable lounge seats and a coffee table or side table will be more useful, he said.

Whatever you choose, authorities say opting for better quality and, therefore, longer-lasting pieces, produces greater economy than buying the least expensive pieces you can find and then having to replace them soon.

Garden Clinic

Q: Please tell me how to trench plant tomatoes.

A: In many cases the tomato plants available to plant for the fall garden are leggy. Planting these leggy plants the way you did tomatoes in the spring may leave eight to 12 inches of bare stem above the ground. Planting to cover this stem would require digging a rather deep hole -- unless you trench plant the tomatoes. To trench plant a tomato plant, dig a horizontal trench rather than a hole for each plant. Next remove all the leaves from the plant except for the top cluster of leaves. Lay the plant on its side in the trench and cover the roots and bare stem with two to three inches of soil. If the plant is to be staked, go ahead and put the stake in the ground at planting time while the location of the buried stem is fresh on your mind. This will insure that you do not damage the stem later by driving a stake through it. Roots will form along the buried portion of the stem.

Q: On the way to the Independence Day celebration in downtown Raleigh, I saw an unusual tree in bloom. It had large leaves and large creamy-tan clusters of small blooms. The bark was smooth and green. Do you know what it could be?

A: It sounds like the Chinese parasol tree (Firmiana simplex), a large-leaved, tropical-appearing plant that is native to China and Japan. It blooms in late June and early July. The large inflorescences later develop papery fruits that dry to a light brown and are used in dried flower arrangements. An unusual aspect of the tree is its bright green to gray-green bark. The tree grows fast (4 to 7 feet per year) when young but later slows down. The tree's ultimate height is 25 to 30 feet.

Q: When should French hydrangea be pruned?

A: Prune the faded flower heads immediately after blooming. Since the flower heads develop on previous years' growth, later fall pruning is not recommended. The shrub should be kept 4 to 6 feet tall.

On The House

By ANDY LANG

The first step in insulating an attic prior to refinishing it is to determine how much insulation already is in the floor or what really is the ceiling of the room below.

When there is such insulation, it usually is 3 inches or less, in which case you should add enough to bring it to 6 or 8 inches. Even though the insulation already there probably is the loose fill type, it is better to use fiber glass or rock wool batts or blankets between the joists. But you don't want vapor barriers in that area, so be certain the new insulation does not have them. If the old has any, remove them or slash them freely, placing the insulation with the slashed side down. Put some of the new insulation between the joists of the floor that extend outside the living space.

You must place insulation between the sloping rafters, collar beams and knee walls, including the dormer walls and ceilings if there is a dormer. When insulating a wall, fit the end of a blanket snugly against the top piece of framing and work downwards, stapling the flanges about every 8 inches and cutting the blanket to fit tightly against the framing at the bottom.

When insulating an attic or anywhere else, always remember the vapor barrier should always face the side of the wall that will be heated in cold weather.

All this insulation, by the way, is not only to keep your attic warm but keep the space comfortable in cold weather or when the air conditioning is in operation. When you use insulation that is unfaced — that is, without vapor barriers — use foil-backed gypsum board with polyurethane sheeting or something similar made especially for the purpose.

To cut blankets and batts, use a sharp knife, such as a serrated-edge kitchen knife. You will find a rake very useful for pushing insulation into areas that you cannot reach easily.

The vapor barrier is intended to prevent moisture from entering the batt or blanket. If a tear should develop in the barrier when you are installing the insulation, mend it immediately. Use a piece of polyurethane for this. Or you can use a strip of barrier from a scrap section of blanket. If you do not mend the patch, moisture will enter the insulation and defeat the purpose of the barrier.

Be sure there is ventilation above the attic insulation you have put up to take care of the newly finished space. The idea is to provide openings that will permit air to move across the top of the attic. In stubborn situations, you may have to help this air move with some kind of fan.

Insulation fibers can cause skin irritation. When you are working, wear gloves and the proper clothing, such as a long-sleeved shirt. Do not smoke while you are working. Place insulation behind pipes, ducts and electrical wires, but proceed with care. Work around the electrical wires. Don't push or bend them out of the way.

Caulking and weatherstripping can result in substantial savings. Many different types are available. Try to get some advice from a knowledgeable hardware salesman. Talk to him about your situation even though the products you buy generally come with detailed instructions.

(Do-it-yourselfers will find much valuable information on a variety of subjects in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," which can be obtained by sending $2 to this newspaper at Box 5, Teaneck, N.J., 07666.)

Here's The Answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — Have to replace several window panes soon. Have done work of this kind in the past, but have never painted the glazing compound that sets the pane in place. Assume the compound can be painted. I want to use a paint matching the color of the window frame.

A. — The compound can be painted. Usually, you should wait several days before doing the painting. Read the label on the compound can to determine exactly how long to wait. When painting, be sure the paint extends a fraction of an inch on to the glass to insure protection against the passage of air and rain.

Q. — Some milk spilled on our coffee table and was not noticed for several hours. When it was wiped off, some of the finish came with it. Can the area be touched up or must the entire table top be refinished?

A. — As with any damage of that sort, you can make an effort to retouch the marred area. Then, if it doesn't work, a complete refinishing is in order. Milk sometimes acts as a varnish remover unless it is wiped off the moment it is spilled.

Q. — I will be doing some concrete work and want to keep the concrete surface rough so as to make it sort of slip-proof. Will it be OK to use a garage broom with stiff bristles to make the rough finish?

A. — Do the concrete work the regular way, but when it is time to do the troweling, use the bristles of the brush. Apply it so the ridges made by the bristles run across the concrete at right angles to the direction people walk. That will keep anybody from sliding on the walkway. Allow the concrete to "cure" for about a week. This means keeping it moist. One way is to place wet burlap over the finished job and moisten it twice a day. Special curing compounds also are available. If you do not want to bother with the burlap or use a commercial curing product, wet down the concrete about three times a day for six or seven days.

A Facelift Does Wonders For Old Kitchen Cabinets

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

If you are remodeling your kitchen and thinking about putting in new cabinets, you might want to consider giving your old ones a facelift instead. As a do-it-yourself project, it can save you money and at the same time get the quality look that you want.

A newly introduced solid oak kitchen cabinet refacing system packages contemporary-styled solid oak cabinet doors, drawer fronts and matching peel-and-stick oak veneer into a step-by-step procedure designed especially for the do-it-yourselfer and one that requires no special tools or carpentry skills.

The system offers a variety of cabinet doors and drawer fronts to accommodate almost any kitchen cabinet you might have. Cabinet doors and drawer fronts both are three-quarters of an inch thick, with door fronts available in two panel styles. Cabinet fronts come in nine standard door sizes; drawer fronts are available in three sizes. Non-standard door sizes can be adjusted using framing strips. The refacing system also includes matching peel-and-stick oak veneer for application over all front cabinet frame surfaces and exposed ends. The veneer features specially formulated pressure-sensitive adhesive to provide easy application as well as durability.

The refacing process is a four-step procedure that anyone with basic do-it-yourself skills can perform. Installing cabinet doors and applying the matching veneer is done as follows:

1. Remove all old cabinet doors, hinges and catches.

2. Match pre-selected doors with the appropriate cabinet door openings.

3. Apply peel-and-stick oak veneer over all old face frames and exposed side panels.

4. Apply the finish, add new hardware and complete the installation of the doors.

Installing new drawer fronts involves a similar four-step procedure:

1. Remove all drawers from cabinets and take off all handles, knobs or raised moldings. It is not necessary to remove the existing drawer fronts themselves because the new solid oak ones mount over the old ones. The replacement drawer fronts come in three sizes which will accommodate nearly all drawer sizes.

2. Using a hand saw, cut off any lip or overhang on your existing drawer fronts so that they are flush with the sides, top and bottom of the drawer.

3. Line up the new drawer front so that it centers over the trimmed drawer and covers the drawer opening completely.

4. Apply the finish, then, from the face side of the new drawer front, drill holes so you can attach new drawer handles. In most instances the screws used to attach the handles will be adequate to secure the new drawer front in place. Complete the installation of the drawer fronts.

According to Masonite Corp., which handles the refacing system, the average kitchen is composed of 15 cabinet doors and 11 drawer fronts which take between 16 to 24 hours to reface and finish.

For the relatively few hours involved, refacing may be the answer for the do-it-yourself enthusiast. Another advantage is less disruption to the normal everyday use of your kitchen. While you are refacing your cabinets, you still have the use of them, and avoid the mess that comes when you tear out your old ones and replace with new ones.

FEATURES

Rosedale, A Beaufort Plantation Home With A Rich History

The massive live oaks that shaded the Rosedale Plantation House for more than a century still stand, stretching out their branches to shield the old house from fierce summer sun.

Rosedale lies about a mile off Highway 264 four miles north of Washington. Visitors following the winding, sandy road to the house are struck by the sharp contrast between the old and new.

Behind the house is a long row of bulk tobacco barns, fuel tanks, grain bins, modern tractors, trucks and combines, and great fields of tobacco.

It was not always so. There was a time when the Rosedale House was the center of a self-contained village of more than one hunderd people on a 2,700-acre plantation.

Instead of bulk tobacco barns, there were rows of slave cabins — enough to house 99 slaves. Instead of grain bins, there were great storage barns and sheds. Instead of tractors and trucks, there were stables full of mules and horses; wagons, carts, buggies, carriages, and plows; and, instead of combines, there were dozens of field slaves to pick the cotton and gather the corn.

David Bradley Perry, whose family had come south from Connecticut to engage in the tar and turpentine business, married Mary Latham, who owned Rosedale. Colonel Latham, a veteran of the War of 1812, had bought the plantation from Sheriff Allen Grist of Beaufort County in 1832.

Mary Latham inherited the plantation from her father, and she and her husband, David Perry, built Rosedale House about 1854.

It is a large, two-story-and-attic house with "elaborate Italianate exterior and Handsome Greek Revival interior." The detached kitchen, gone now, sat at some distance behind the house, and what was apparently an office is attched to the main house by a porch at the back corner.

The house, dilapidated but structurally sound, features 14-foot ceilings, an ornate pine and mahogany staircase, and massive two-inch-thick doors that are four feet wide and seven feet tall. Candle chandeliers originally hung from the ceilings in the two front rooms and the foyer. There is a fireplace in each of the eight main rooms with carved, English style mantels. the four double chimneys are brick, faced with decorative plaster. Long, narrow eight-paned windows reach from floor to ceiling in the downstairs rooms and originally had working shutters.

The Perrys owned 99 slaves. It is interesting to note that David Perry's northern background did not deter him from using the forced labor of slaves. However, legend has it that Perry gave plots of land to various black people. It is not known if these were slaves he had freed or if he gave them the land after the war freed them.

The story is also told that one of his slave's sole duty was to saddle his master's horse each morning, bring him up to the house, and hold him in readiness in case Mr. Perry might want to ride over his vast acres.

The 1860 census reports that at that time the Perrys had 1,000 acres under cultivation, and in that year Rosedale Plantation produced 85 bales of cotton 10,000 bushels of corn, and $5,000 dollars worth of livestock. These figures provide us with a fairly accurate picture of what the place looked like.

We see a large, elegant home ringed with live oaks and boxwood hedges. We see rows of slave cabins, flocks of chickens, turkeys and geese, great pens of hogs. We see cows and sheep grazing in pastures. We see a smokehouse filled to the rafters with hams, bacon, sausage, barrels of lard, flour and meal.

It would have taken all of this, together with vegetable gardens and fruit trees, to feed more than 100 people.

And to clothe them, there had to be spinners and weavers busy at the spinning wheels and looms, seamstresses, and cobblers tanning leather and making shoes.

To keep the rolling stock in working order, there was a blacksmith and a wheelwright. And the records show that there was a cotton gin on the premises.

There were cooks, laundresses, soap and candle makers, gardeners, stable hands and carpenters.

David Perry was "noted throughout Eastern North Carolina for his hospitality." To make this gracious living possible, there had to be house servants to take care of the guests. One can almost see ladies in crinoline and gentlemen in fine linen arriving in carriages, strolling in the shade of the live oaks, lounging in the parlors, dancing in the ballroom.

David and Mary Perry had three daughters, and at his death in 1866, Rosedale passed to his daughter Mary, who married Rufus Watson Wharton, a Guilford County lawyer and lieutenant colonel in the Confederate Army.

The war had taken its toll of Rosedale. Colonel Wharton, faced with loss of slaves and the economic hardships of the Reconstruction years, nevertheless successfully managed Rosedale Plantation, restoring it to full production. He put in miles of tile and was famous for his innovative farming methods.

The colonel was apparently a very versatile and energetic gentleman; besides running a large plantation, he served as a Beaufort County magistrate, county attorney, and member of the State Board of Agriculture. Colonel Wharton also gave land "for the colored race of Beaufort County on which to build a school."

Colonel Wharton died in 1913, and Rosedale passed to his daughter Isabella, whose husband was United States Senator John H. Small. It was at this time that members of the family ceased to live in Rosedale House, leasing it instead to tenants.

Mrs. J.D. Adams reports that one of the families who occupied the house as tenants was that of her grandfather, M.I. Burroughs. Mrs. Adams says that at the time, the slave quarters were still standing — that they were one-room cabins built in rows, each cabin having a little front porch. She also says that two of the former Rosedale slaves, Isaac and Nancy Cobb, were still living in one of the cabins.

The Smalls sold the hose and some of the land in 1937, and Rosedale Plantation passed from the family that had owned it for 105 years, but its legacy continues: the name "Rosedale" had been given to a nearby church, a school, and a subdivision.

Among the owners since 1937 are T.J. Moore, H.H. Swanner, William J. Chauncey, and the present owner, J.D. Briley, who acquired the property in 1977.

Rosedale is on the National Register of Historic Places, and it is hoped that some day funds will become available to restore it to its former elegance.

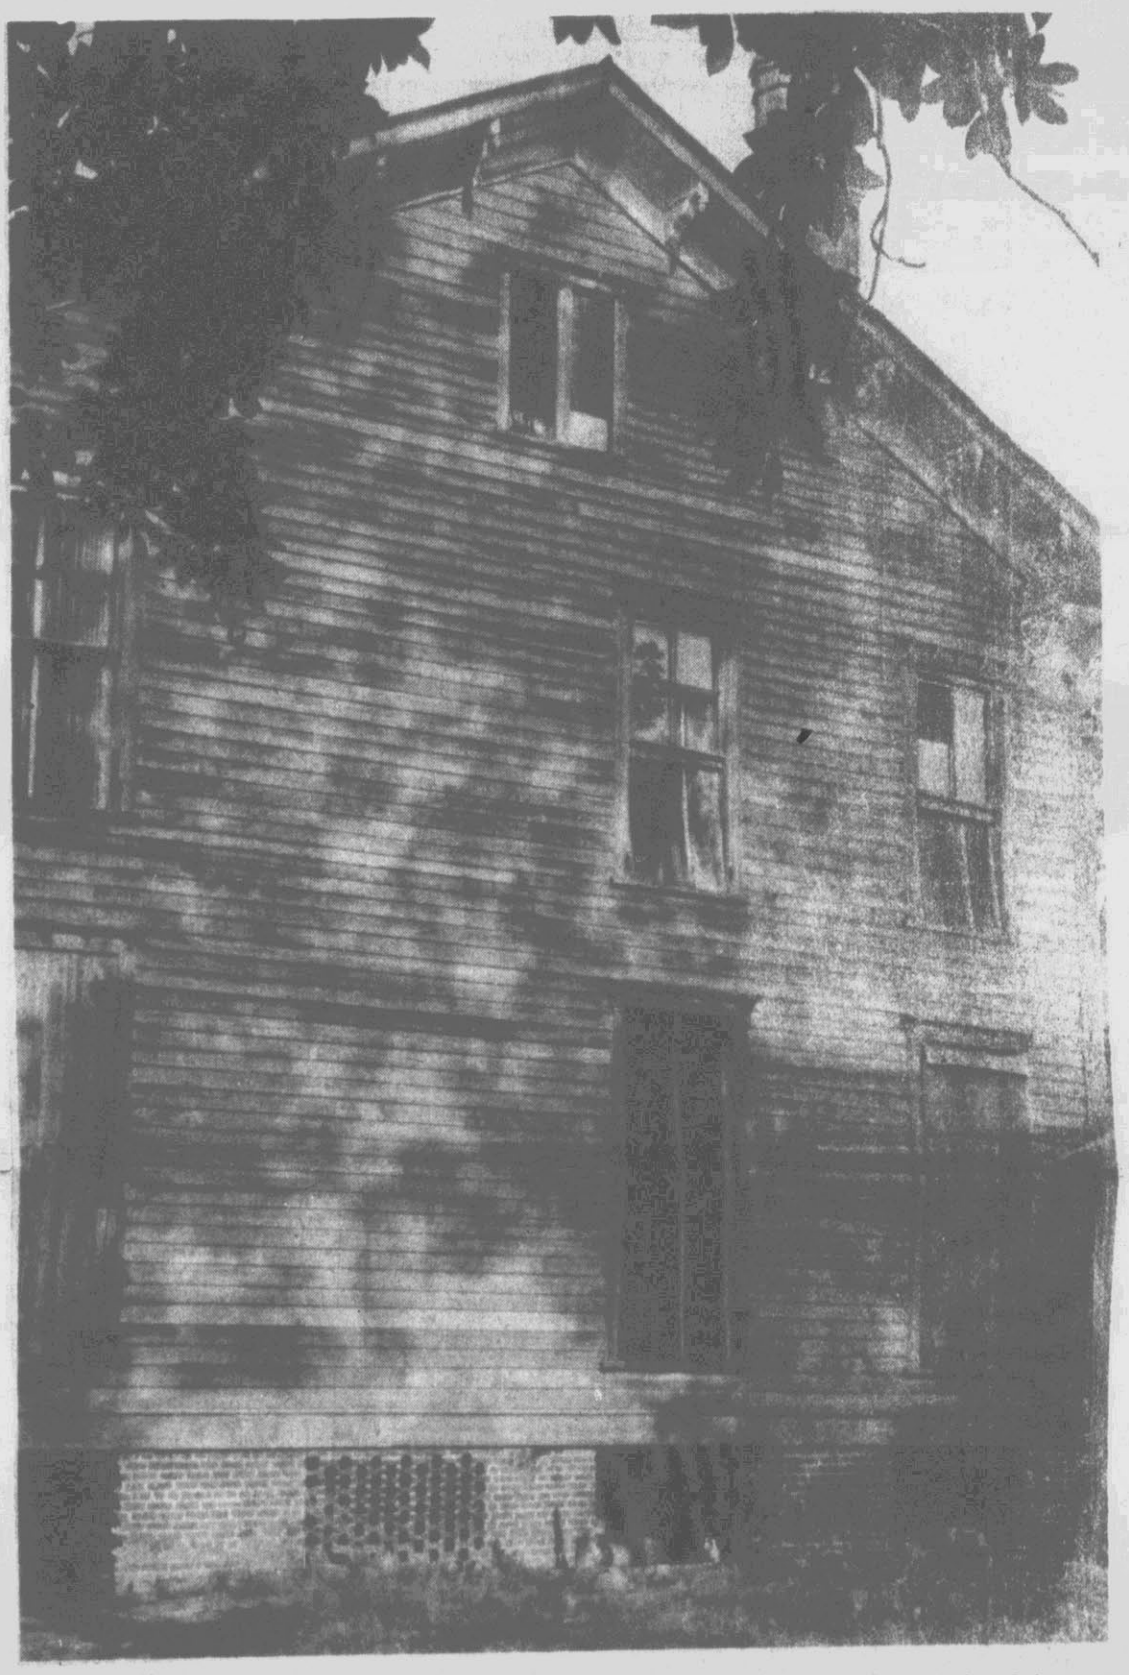
THE ENTRY DOOR — The massive doors at Rosedale Plantation, such as the front entry door shown here, are two inches thick, four feet wide and seven feet tall. Although scarred by years of neglect, the elegantly designed door is sturdy and unwarped.



STILL STRUCTURALLY SOUND — The westend view of Rosedale confirms that the house, built about 1854, remains structurally sound. Most windows have been boarded up, but the now paint-free outer boards have not deteriorated, and the massive floor beams are well supported by part of the original brick underpinning.

A Milestone Reached In Saving Historic N.C. Properties

RALEIGH — The Historic Preservation Foundation of North Carolina has sold the Baker-Ballard House in Hamilton, marking the 100th property in the state to be preserved by the organization.

"This is a true milestone in preservation, not only in North Carolina, but in the entire United States," said Gwynne Taylor, president of the historic Preservation Foundation. "No other statewide organization can point to such significant achievement. We still have a tremendous amount of work to do in saving our important built environment, but it is nice to pause and reflect that we have made a positive impact on saving what is good about North Carolina."

The Preservation Foundation, a nonprofit membership organization which promotes and actively saves North Carolina's historic architecture, established the nation's first statewide revolving fund to acquire endangered historic properties. Formed in 1975, the fund operates with monies obtained from private contributions, corporate grants and appropriations from the North Carolina General Assembly.

Donations of property have often provided the resources for the foundation to continue recycling these historic properties. The Preservation Foundation has saved houses, schools, churches, public buildings, archaeological sites and commercial structures and has won three national awards for its work.

The foundation's revolving fund is used to buy endangered buildings. Once a property is obtained, the search is begun for a buyer who is willing to undertake a sympathetic restoration. When the property is sold, the money from the sale is used to buy another endangered structure and the cycle is repeated.

Properties sold by the foundation have protective covenants placed in the deed which require the foundation's approval for alterations or additions. These covenants ensure that the architectural and historic character of the building will be maintained for future generations.

The foundation also accepts preservation easements on national Register properties. The easement, like the covenants, gives the foundation the right to protect the architectural integrity of the property. The easement donor may then be eligible for a charitable contribution tax write-off.

The Preservation Foundation has been active in the eastern part of the state with over one third of its properties located here. Commercial properties in particular have been popular restoration candidates in this area. For example, groundbreaking ceremonies have recently taken place for a major rehabilitation of the Swain School in Edenton for residential and cultural uses.

A significant example of antebellum Greek Revival architecture, the Bank of Washington in Washington, N.C. has been an amazing survivor. Built in 1854 with a layer of brick under its tin roof, it managed to escape the burning of the town by Federal troops as well as two later downtown fires.

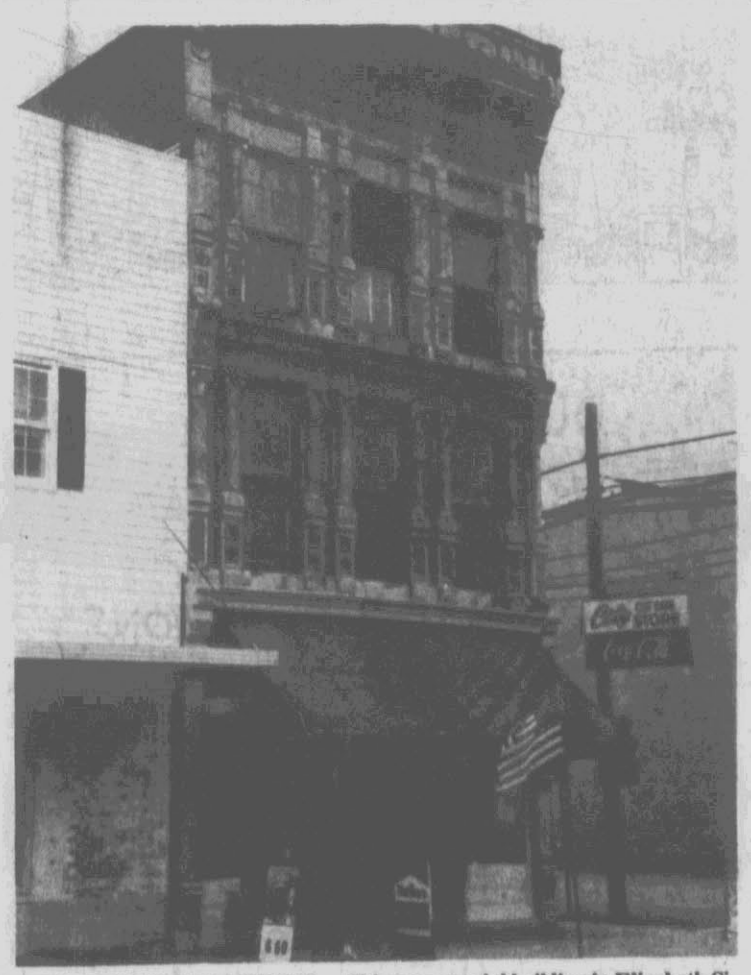
The McMullan Building in Elizabeth City is awaiting a sympathetic purchaser. Built in 1887-88 by Dr. Oscar McMullan as a medical office and drugstore, the structure possesses one of the few completely intact metal storefronts still in existence in North Carolina.

The birthplace of North Carolina's most prominent living artist, Francis Speight, is also available for restoration. Located near Windsor, it consists of a pair of connected houses. One of the outbuildings was used as a schoolhouse for Speight and other local children.

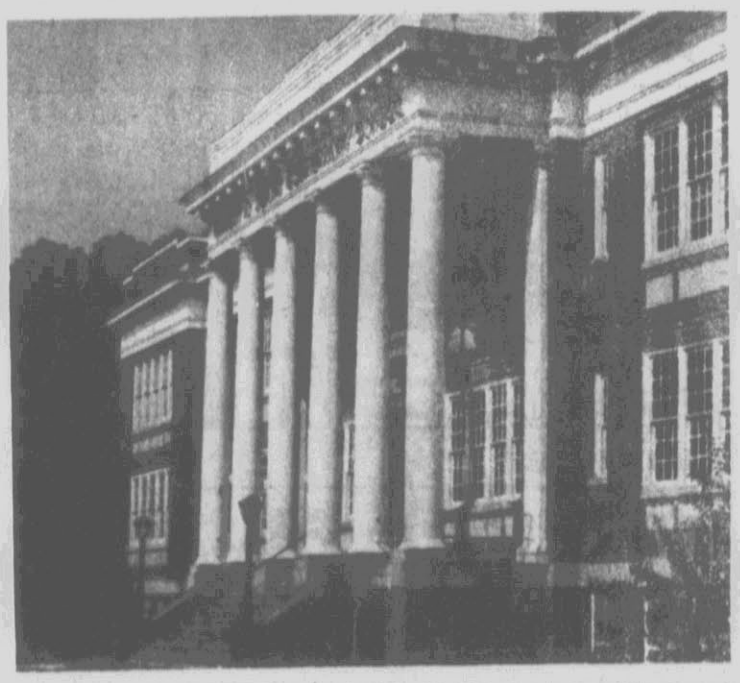
The Baker-Ballard House in Hamilton was sold to Melanie Douglas from California who will rehabilitate the property for use as a bed and breakfast inn. Despite fire damage in December, the house's Victorian flavor and inn potential captured Mrs. Douglas' interest, and she flew out from California and bought the property.

The Baker-Ballard House was built by Charles H. Baker who founded the Hamilton Pants Factory, the forerunner of Blue Bell. The Historic Preservation Foundation and Historic Hamilton Commission worked together to locate a buyer.

The Historic Preservation Foundation's office is located in the historic Caveness House in Raleigh. For more information about the organization and its work, contact them at P.O. Box 27644, Raleigh, N.C., 27611-7644, or call 832-3652.



THE McMULLAN BUILDING — This commercial building in Elizabeth City, built a century ago, is one of the few buildings remaining in North Carolina that still has an intact metal storefront. It is available for purchase from the N.C. Historic Preservation Foundation.



A HISTORIC PROPERTY — Swain School in Edenton is one of the several eastern North Carolina public buildings designated as a historic property by the Historic Preservation Foundation of North Carolina. A major rehabilitation of the school will take place for its use as a residential and cultural center. (Photo courtesy Historic Preservation Foundation of North Carolina, Inc.)

Opening lead: King of ◇

Normally, an endplay is designed to surrender the lead to a specific opponent. Once in while, though, declarer is in a most fortunate position—when he gives up the lead, he really doesn't care which defender wins the trick.

North's one-spade overcall effectively took East out of the auction. South had a good heart suit, and had no intention of letting the enemy buy the hand at the three-level, so he rebid his hearts and became declarer.

West cashed three top diamonds, then shifted to the king of clubs. Declarer drew trumps in two rounds, then paused to consider his chances. He knew that West held at least six clubs, three diamonds and two hearts. Therefore, there was scant chance to make an overtrick by setting up a long spade. Indeed, East was a favorite to hold the king of spades because he was marked with great length in the suit.

Declarer found a simple way to proceed—he exited with a club. If West won the club and had no spade as an exit card, he would be endplayed—either minor-suit return would present declarer with a ruff-sluff. And if he had a spade, declarer would have to fall back on a spade finesse. If East won the club, the contract would be a cinch; not only would a minor-suit return yield a ruff-sluff, but a spade would be into dummy's major tenace.

Declarer's play earned a just reward. West was indeed void in spades, and there was now no way the contract could be defeated.

Jasper Johns This Year's Venice Grand Prix Winner

By TERRY LEONARD
Associated Press Writer

VENICE, Italy (AP) — Three decades after Jasper Johns sent art's avante-garde spinning off in new directions, the world's most expensive living artist is winning new acclaim at the prestigious Venice Biennale.

But although the American captured this year's Grand Prix, an award previously won by such artists as Henri Matisse and Max Ernst, some experts feel compelled to defend the choice.

"There is an incredibly widespread assumption that Johns is an old master and a pop artist, assumptions that pigeonhole him, that do not recognize he is an artist in his prime," said Philip Ryland of the Peggy Guggenheim Collection in Venice, reacting to what he called superficial criticism of the show.

Since its beginning in 1895, the Biennale has enhanced the reputations of artists generally not widely known outside their own countries.

"Henry Moore's international reputation was established by winning the Grand Prix for sculpture in 1948," said Ryland.

Johns doesn't need the Biennale to reaffirm his role in 20th century art. His importance is demonstrated by the price he commands. His painting "Diver" sold for $4.2 million.

About 300,000 people are expected to visit the international exposition before it closes Sept. 25. Many will see Johns' work for the first time. Some will come because he won the prize, others because the domed, pink brick U.S. pavilion is the only one air conditioned among the 25 nestled in the Biennale gardens, which overlook the lagoon.

Ryland said Johns is seen in this show at his high point, with his crosshatch paintings and his most explicitly autobiographical work.

"What this show reveals, not only for Europeans, is how far Johns has developed from a few flags, targets and numbers," Ryland said in an interview.

Johns and others such as Robert Rauschenberg, who won the Biennale's Grand Prix in 1964, created an alternative to abstract expressionism, the dominant American style of the 1940s and 50s.

At his first show in January 1958, Johns heralded the pop art movement of the 60s with his paintings of common objects — American flags, targets and numbers.

"Some said art had been thrown back into the world of common images," Ryland said. "But the theft was in the opposite direction, it was a theft of popular images. He dragged the flag into the world of art."

Now, 30 years after that dramatic opening at the Castelli Gallery in New York, Johns wins the "Golden Lion" in Venice, one of the world's most influential exhibitions of modern art.

"It was important to give the prize to Jasper Johns," said Adriano Donaggio, the spokesman for the Biennale. "He has been a leader of his generation, but he never got the prize."

Both Donaggio and Ryland emphasized that his career was only one consideration made by the international jury and that the most important was the show at the Biennale.

The show put together by the Philadelphia Museum of Art is the first major exhibition for Johns since the retrospective that opened at the Whitney Museum of American Art in New York in 1977.

Johns works and reworks his surfaces, using oil and encaustic, a mixture of colored pigment in hot wax. He also evokes dream-like images with ink on plastic.

"His show is outstanding," Ryland said. "In pictorial terms it is much better than anything else in the Biennale."

He added that other renowned artists such as Cy Twombly, Enzo Cucchi and Alberto Burri were weakly represented at this Biennale.

Johns' works demonstrate his progression over the last 15 years, from the crosshatch and flagstone patterns of the 70s to the autobiographical paintings of the 1980s.

The works in the show also include "Scent," the first devoted entirely to the crosshatch style. The painting is done in oil and encaustic on three canvases in bright, bold, interlocking groups of strokes at various opposing angles.

"Racing Thoughts" and "The Seasons" are John's most autobiographical, presenting images closely linked to the artist such as a picture of Leo Castelli, who gave him his first show; pottery from his own collection, the double flag; and a printed image of the Mona Lisa that recalls his affection for both Marcel Duchamp and Leonardo da Vinci.

In "The Seasons," four paintings done in 1985-86, Johns also puts himself in his work for the first time by putting his shadow among the images.

In addition to the work of Johns and other established artists from 44 countries are 86 "young artists" in the open section.

"There are artists here that in 10 years will be household names," said Ryland.

One could be Barbara Bloom, the American who won this year's prize for the open section.

Gregg Hardy Photos Shown

Dr. Gregg Hardy, a neurologist with the East Carolina University School of Medicine and an amateur photographer, is the Pitt County Memorial Hospital artist of the month.

Hardy is a native of Greenville and a graduate of UNC-Chapel Hill and the Bowman Gray School of Medicine. Although photography had been a hobby for many years, he became a serious amateur photographer about five years ago.

His travels around the world form the basis for his first formal show. Selecting scenes from the byways of a country, he captures the flavor of the area and its native population.

The show begins and ends with the United States and includes Thailand, Indonesia, Hong Kong, France, Switzerland, Germany, Austria, Italy, and French Polynesia.

The photographs are exhibited on the walls of the main ground floor corridors. All sales benefit the hospital's art program and collection.

System Inaugurated To Reserve A Spot At National Parks

ATLANTA — Reserving a spot in one of America's scenic wonderlands now can be a year-round possibility in some national parks.

Grand Canyon and Yosemite National Parks have one campground each that will be available for reservations the entire year. Other parks' campgrounds may be reserved only during peak periods of visitation.

The National Park Service and Ticketron, a computerized ticket firm, have expanded the popular campground reservations system.

However, there are campgrounds in each park that will continue to operate on a first-come, first-served basis.

Family campsite reservations can be obtained in eleven of America's national parklands — in the East: Acadia National Park, Maine; Cape Hatteras National Seashore, North Carolina; Great Smoky Mountains National Park, North Carolina-Tennessee; and Shenandoah National Park, Virginia.

In the West: Grand Canyon National Park, Arizona; Rocky Mountain National Park, Colorado; Yellowstone National Park, Wyoming-Montana-Idaho; and four parks in California — Joshua Tree National Monument, Sequoia and Kings Canyon National Parks, Whiskeytown National Recreation Area, and Yosemite National Park.

Group sites can be reserved at Grand Canyon, Great Smoky Mountains, Joshua Tree and Yosemite.

Reservations can be made no more than eight weeks in advance for family campsites; 12 weeks for group sites. Full payment is required at the time reservations are made. A $10 cancellation fee will be charged for refunds.

Reservations may be made only by mail or in person. Mail-in reservations are to be sent to: Ticketron, Dept. R., 401 Hackensack Ave., Hackensack, N.J. 07601.

Reservations may be made in person at any Ticketron outlet in the U.S., some National Park Service regional offices, and parks with campgrounds on the reservation system.

Ticketron outlets in North Carolina are located at Burlington, Chapel Hill, Charlotte, Durham, Fayetteville, Greensboro, High Point, Lexington, Pineville, Raleigh and Winston-Salem.

Additional information and forms for mail-in reservations are available from: National Park Service Southeast Regional Office, 75 Spring St., SW, Atlanta, Ga., 30303; telephone 404-331-5187.

Stamp News

AP Newsfeatures

Seventy-five years ago, a young golfer made sports headlines by winning the U.S. Open Championship.

The year was 1913 and a 20-year-old former caddie, Francis Ouimet, stopped the favored British, becoming the first amateur and only the second native American to capture the U.S. Open.

Ouimet, who has been called "America's first golfing hero," is duly honored by the Postal Service for that triumph with the issuance of a new 25-cent stamp in the American Sports series.

Historians say his "common man's" victory over two professionals from Britain changed forever Americans' perceptions of golf as a pastime reserved for the privileged.

His triumph sparked a golfing boom in the United States.

Francis DeSales Ouimet was born May 8, 1893, in Brookline, Mass. He lived directly across from the old 17th green of The Country Club in Brookline, site of Ouimet's 1913 victory and this year's U.S. Open Championship.

Ouimet worked as a caddy from age 11 to 16, when he was required to quit to preserve his amateur standing.

In addition to winning the 1913, 1914 and 1931 U.S. Amateur titles, Ouimet was a member of the first 12 Walker Cup teams, serving six times as the captain. In 1951, he was named captain of the Royal and Ancient Golf Club of St. Andrews, the first non-Briton ever to serve in that capacity.

He died of a heart attack in 1967.

First-day cancellations of the Ouimet commemorative are available.

Collectors may purchase the stamp at their local post offices and affix them to their own envelopes. Send to: Customer-Affixed Envelopes, Francis Ouimet Stamp, Postmaster, Brookline, MA 02146-9991. The deadline is July 13.

If you prefer to have the USPS affix the stamp, enclose a money order or a personal check for 25 cents per stamp and send to: Francis Ouimet Stamp, Postmaster, Brookline, MA 02146-9992. Deadline is July 13.

'Ocracoke Portrait' Reveals The Endurance Of A Fragile Island

HALLOWEEN NIGHT AT THE BAR — "It's not easy being a sex symbol on Ocracoke," is the sub-caption given this photograph by Ann Sebrell Ehringhaus in her newly published book, "Ocracoke Portrait." A varied fare of photographs in the volume shows the sea, people, Outer Banks landscapes and small details that reveal life on Ocracoke Island today.

OCRACOKE PORTRAIT. Photographs and Interviews. By Ann Sebrell Ehringhaus. Winston-Salem, John F. Blair, Publisher. 64 photographs. 107 pages. Paper, $13.95, cloth $21.95

Since the time British artist John White recorded in drawings people and scenes from the Outer Banks more than four centuries ago, generations of artists have chronicled this fascinating ribbon of fragile nature.

There's something about the shifting sands, the unpredictable moods of the ocean, the almost fairyland quality of dwarf trees often tangled in vines that tugs at the heart of artists who long to show this strange form of beauty and to share it with others.

There's something special too about the people who populate these places where life even today is different from mainland life; a difference that elicits a strong sense of admiration.

Many artists (authors, poets, photographers, scholarly or popular writers) have given us accounts of the Outer Banks and the people who call this Tar Heel barrier home.

Some of these efforts have been honest, touching, admirable; others have been little more than another pretty pictorial representation of the same too-familiar landscapes and seascapes.

The portrait of Ocracoke by Mrs. Ehringhaus definitely falls into the category of an admirable achievement. For one thing, her domain is narrowed down to a managable size — the island of Ocracoke.

Aside from nearby uninhabited Portsmouth Island, Ocracoke today is the only major island along the North Carolina coast not connected by paved highway to the mainland. Travel to and from the island is by private boat or three ferries that serve the island — unless stormy weather closes the island off temporarily.

This factor gives Ocracoke the reality of remaining the last bastion of adventurous isolation that in the early days of settlements was true of all the populated Outer Banks lands from Currituck to Sunset Beach.

The strength — and lasting appeal — of Mrs. Ehringhaus' book is a rapport with the land and the people she has earned, both by developing her talent as a writer/photographer and by her knowledge of the land and people acquired by living there.

Since 1971, Charlotte native Ann Sebrell Erhinghaus has periodically lived year-round on Ocracoke — from 1971 to 1973 teaching at Ocracoke School; in 1983-84 teaching adult photography classes at Ocracoke; as visiting artist in the Ocracoke School in 1985 and more recently as a permanent resident of the island.

Time periods away from Ocracoke were spent studying photography in Boston; in teaching in Currituck, Greenville and New Bern, but always, as she clearly implies, that Ocracoke remained the place her heart called out to return to.

"Ocracoke Portrait" is particularly rewarding in that it is a many-faceted portrait in words and photographs.

In the preface the author establishes a sense of mood, a basic response to life as it is there now, and must have been in the past . . . "The island's sturdy fragility, its earthy magic and strong feeling of past times and people enchanted me then, as they do today. . ." and "There is a resilience about island people; they are survivors, but with a special sense of humor . . . People can be themselves at Ocracoke, with all the good and bad that implies. People feel connected with the natural world; it is part of them . . . they have a special sense of the interrelatedness of life and death."

A brief (four pages) but informative introduction provides the reader with little or limited knowledge of the island some highlights from the island's history, beginning with the arrival of the first European in 1585 when Ocracoke was known by its Indian name of Wokokon. Also touched on are details about the the changes of its shape and size dictated by environmental alterations over a period of years and the drama of hurricanes; the first official settlement in 1715, on down the years to its role as a favorite summer resort swelling the permanent population of 657 to several thousand.

Then comes the real heart of this visually lovely book — the 64 photographs in black and white. Fortunately, Mrs. Ehringhaus had the right instinct and the benefit of year long residency to show us something far more vital (and certainly more elusive to portray) than the standard array of places and faces even good photographers can fall victim to.

She doesn't strive for photographic art per se, although she achieves that too on occasion. Hers is a talent for capturing the mood of the land and sea in details or panoramic views. Hers too is the ability to show people, visitors and residents, at play and at work that combines artistry with honesty.

Enriching the photographs is a mixture of poetry-touched personal observations of the subtle, sometimes violent seasonal changes in nature, and down-to-earth comments from residents that reveal their feelings about their island. Some of the residents are descendants of long-ago settlers; others are comparative newcomers.

Several things comes across consistenly in "Ocracoke Portrait." It remains an island where going down to the sea (or the sound) to make a living from fishing is still the mainstay of livelihood, though tourism is becoming increasingly important; and it's a bit of water-surrounded land that most embrace with love.

"Ocracoke Portrait" is a book that anyone interested in coastal North Carolina, and Ocracoke in particular, will want to own, to enjoy and to share with others.

The Year's Winners In World Reportage

THE PULITZER PRIZES. Edited by Kendall J. Wills. New York. Simon & Schuster Inc. Hardcover, 587 pages. $19.95.

The compilation of some of the best in 1987 journalism is not only a teacher's dream but also a delight for journalism students and people interested in world events.

For the first time in one volume, there are winning newspaper articles, commentaries, reviews, photographs, cartoons and other material.

One of the newspaper articles comes from the The Miami Herald which details the Iran-Contra Affair. Virtually alone, The Herald did much of the work, tracing the money trails that exposed a secret network of American policy makers.

Some commentary Wills adds to his edition is that in Charles Krauthammer's "Political Prescriptions." Dr. Krauthammer adds light to issues such as affirmative action, Gramm-Rudman, AIDS in the workplace.

Richard Eder from The Los Angeles Times wins in Pulitzer's criticism category. His book reviews on "Monkeys" by Susan Minot, "Winter In Jerusalem" by Banche D'Alpuget, Roger's "Version by John Updike" and "Paco's Story" by Larry Heinman are examples of prize-winning writing.

The Pulitzer winners in the photography category are evocative. Kim Komenich's photos of "People Power in the Philippines," published in The San Francisco Examiner captures the defeat of Marcos as well as the fighting spirit of the peasants.

In the feature photography category, David Peterson, who photographs for The Des Moines Register, evokes in readers a sadness. His pictures show the body language of uncaring bureaucrats who listen, arms folded, to farmers who plead for more time to pay off loans. They also show the tragic sadness of a farm wife whose husband killed himself. The dark sky above the widow agrees with the sense of loss she feels as she stands by her husband's grave.

The editorial cartoon winner, "Bloom County" by Berke Breathed of The Washington Post jars us from our narrow views with his satire on South America's dilemma, screening for drugs in the workplace, and the oversaturation and overexposure of America's presidential candidates.

Wills has compiled these excellent works without critique. He lets readers do the criticizing after he introduces the winner's description of the story behind the story, photos, or cartoons. Each winning selection is then followed by a biographical sketch of its contributor.

Kendall Wills, assistant editor of the OpEd page in The New York Times, provides a great service to his profession and to his readers.

The book is available at Sheppard Library.

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By HANSY JONES

Two new books in the nonfiction section will make thought-provoking summer reading.

Four years after his best-selling autobiography, Lee Iaccoa is speaking out again. In "Talking Straight" Iaccoa speaks out, in his forceful fashion, about what is in his heart and on his mind — at home and in the marketplace.

What do we stand for today, he asks, and how do we retrieve the values our parents and grandparents gave us? Where has Washington gone wrong? How is American business going astray? When will we stop suing each other at the drop of a hat? Above all how can we improve the quality of our lives and make "made in America" mean something again? Iaccoa proposes some characteristically fresh answers to these and other tough questions. Among the answers are his ten commandments of good management and his ten suggestions for the next president.

For those who read Iaccoa and for those who will know him for the first time in this book, "Talking Straight" will be an entertaining and provocative experience.

"Getting Better, Inside Alcoholic's Anonymous" is an insider's story of the most successful self-help movement in history. Author Nan Robertson, a Pulitzer Prize-winning reporter for the New York Times, demystifies this extraordinary society by lifting its long-held ban of silence.

"Getting Better" begins with the remarkable saga of two helpless drunks — a surgeon and a failed stockbroker — who leaning on each other, found a way to stay sober one day at a time. Their shaken little fellowship grew into today's world membership of nearly two million.

The book then opens the doors on AA today. The reader meets the members, hears their voices, and learns how AA actually works and why it succeeds. All aspects of the organizations are discussed. One chapter tells what part religion plays —and does not play — in AA.

The climax comes with Nan Robertson's own story — her battle with alcohol after the death of her husband and her triumphant recovery through AA. This book will appeal to all who have any connection with the tragedy that alcoholism brings to lives and to all who are moved by a story of human courage and the indomitable human soul.

After being "lost" for more than 30 years, the thin-spined porcupine has been rediscovered in the tropical forests of eastern Brazil.

Local Writer Has Stories Published

Cindy Thompson-Rumple, a former newspaper writer and currently a student at East Carolina University studying for a master's degree in English, has had three pieces of fiction published in recent months.

One is "The Witness Tree," published in the East Carolina University magazine Expressions, the spring 1988 issue.

Other stories have been published in the South Dakota Review, in the Montana Review and Unknowns, an Atlanta publication. All three are literary journals.

Mrs. Thompson-Rumple has a bachelor's degree in English from Duke University. She has been a reporter for The Chapel Hill Newspaper and the News of Orange County newspaper.

She is a member of the Greenville Writers Club and is the wife of Tony Rumple, photographer for the East Carolina University News Bureau.

Dance By International Choreographers

DURHAM — For the second year in a row, three international choreographers — past participants in the American Dance Festival's International Choreographers Workshop — will present works they have created on the Festival stage.

The concert will be given at 8 p.m. on Monday and Tuesday in Reynolds Industries Theater, on Duke's West Campus.

Dances choreographed on commission from ADF by Sardono Kusumo (who prefers to be called simply Sardono), of Indonesia, Il Kyu Park, of Korea, and Pavel Smok, of Czechoslovakia, will have their premieres. The residencies of these choreographers are supported by funds from the United States Information Agency and The Rockefeller Foundation.

Sardono, Park, and Smok have been using the Festival as their laboratory since mid-June. They have set their dances on students in the ADF School. whom they chose by audition.

Sardono is artistic director, faculty member of the dance division, and associate rector for student affairs at the Jakarta Institute of the Arts. He has an international reputation as one of Indonesia's most important choreographers. In 1964 he studied with Jean Erdman, in New York City. His dances have been seen all over the world.

Park, who has degrees in dance from New York University, teaches at the Seoul Institute of the Arts and has formed a dance company there with his students — the Dong Rang Dance Ensemble. He has choreographed for the Hong Kong Dance Festival and is helping to choreograph the opening ceremony of the 1988 Olympics, in Korea.

Smok choreographs for the Prague Chamber Ballet, of which he is the director. His company has performed throughout Europe and South America and in Australia, China, Cuba, and Mexico. He has been guest choreographer for the Metropolitan Opera, Netherlands Dance Theater, the Leningrad Ballet, and many other companies.

Tickets for the concert are $10 and may be ordered by calling 684-4444 or 684-4059.

FINAL PROGRAM — Performances by the Merce Cunningham Dance Company will conclude the summer program of dance at the American Dance Festival on the Duke University campus, with performances on Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings. Shown here are two of the company's members, Robert Swinston and Catherine Kerr in a dance titled "Fabrications." For more details and for ticket reservations call 684-6402.

Hopes To Promote Flamenco

By SUSAN LINNEE
Associated Press Writer

JEREZ DE LA FRONTERA, Spain (AP) — Matilde Nunez gripped the edge of her wooden chair and strained to watch the little girl as she grabbed her ruffled skirts and sashayed across the stage.

"That's it, bonita, that's the way to do it," wailed the proud aunt of 7-year-old Manuela Nunez, whose dancing stole the show at an outdoor performance about Spanish Gypsy life. "That's the way to keep it alive."

Keeping flamenco alive is what both the brand-new Andalucian Flamenco Foundation and Matilde Nunez want to do.

She and her gypsy family and neighbors in Jerez's Santiago neighborhood don't have much time for lectures on the evolution of the "cante hondo" —literally, the song from the depth of the soul — or any arguing about the origin of the word flamenco.

But they do turn out in force, complete with bottles of sherry, ham sandwiches and babies, for "This Way of Life," a show that tells the story of Spanish gypsies through dancing, singing, guitar playing and hand-clapping in a style that has come to characterize the rhythm of southern Spain.

The show by author Tomas Rodriguez-Pantoja and director Manuel Morao features many Jerez gypsies and was the highlight of a conference in June, "Two Centuries of Flamenco," sponsored by the foundation — its first official activity since inauguration in May.

To conserve the memory of flamenco, to promote research into the art and to make contemporary flamenco known to as wide a public as possible are the principal aims of the foundation, according to director Joaquin Carrera.

The foundation, housed in a refurbished 18th century mansion in the heart of the Santiago neighborhood — the shrine of flamenco for many — has a record, video and book library as well as a dance hall. It has a $350,000 budget.

"Flamenco itself is a world of conflict," said Carrera. "Flamencologists have a tendency to expostulate, not to ask questions, and we thought this might take up too much time, especially for the foreigners who were attending."

When a Mexican conference attendee asked about the meaning of the word flamenco, there was an embarrassed silence, as though someone had asked about the origin of the word Christian in a church.

But Bernard Leblon, professor of Gypsy and Andalucian culture at the French University of Perpignan, offered the explanation that the term referred to the gypsies who had been forced into military service in the fife and drum corps of the Spanish regiments fighting in Flanders in the Low Countries in the 17th century. Flamenco is the Spanish word for a Fleming or a native of Flanders.

Another theory has it that the word derives from the Arabic "felamengh," or immigrant peasant and that many of the "cantes" or styles of flamenco songs were influenced by the Moors who occupied most of Spain for eight centuries.

Although opinion varies over the current health of flamenco, most "flamencologists" concur that the art form was first pulled from near oblivion by Spanish composer and musician Manuel de Falla in June 1922 when he organized a "cante hondo" contest in Granada.

Late 19th century Spanish intellectuals such as Jose Ortega y Gasset had declared flamenco vulgar and looked to northern Europe for their musical inspiration.

After fierce suppression following the 1936-39 Spanish Civil War, flamenco was appropriated by the authoritarian regime of Gen. Francisco Franco.

The subsequent stylization of flamenco forms in staged shows and films contributed much to the cliche of the "Spain of the tambourine and castanets" so rejected by Spanish youth who began to look to foreign music as an expression of rebellion and independence.

The publication of "Flamencologia" by Anselmo Gonzalez Climent in 1957 marked the acceptance, once again, by the intelligentsia of flamenco as a basic element in Spanish culture.

A contest the year before in Cordoba for "cantaores," singers of flamenco, also renewed interest.

But many students of the art point out that flamenco is not universally popular in Spain and that many Spaniards are embarrassed by foreign assumptions that flamenco is the nation's national music. Critic Angel Alvarez Caballero says flamenco has serious box-office problems. In a country where some 100 flamenco festivals are held each summer, half lose money and few would be possible without the support of local city or provincial councils. In Madrid, where 20 public flamenco taverns existed a decade ago, only five or six remain.

Many aficionados have taken refuge in "penas" or private flamenco clubs that invite artists to perform regularly, perpetuating the essentially intimate nature of the art.

Leblon, who places himself on the side that argues the determinant gypsy role in flamenco history, says he believes many Spaniards cannot accept flamenco as a serious art form because of its gypsy connections.

But many of flamenco's most celebrated performers such as guitarist Paco de Lucia and "cantaor" Antonio Fernandez Diaz "Fosforito" are not even gypsies.

COSTUMES, ASIAN COUNTRIES

NEW YORK (AP) — An exhibition of costumes from Laos, Tibet, Bhutan, Indonesia and the Miao people of China is on view at the Metropolitan Museum of Art's Costume Institute through Sept. 4.

The institute has a collection of over 40,000 articles of men's, women's and children's dress, worldwide in scope, spanning four centuries and five continents. Of these, some 8,000 are international, traditional and folk costumes.

The costumes in the show range from silk and gold to wool and beaten bark; from draped or wrapped techniques to sewn and pleated construction; from decorative dyes in the weave to appliqued shells and coins.

'Diamond Studs' Musical Next Summer Theater Attraction

BAYOU BASH — Terrence Simien, shown above, and his Mallet Playboys will provide entertainment at the Washington, N.C. Civic Center Park on Saturday in conjunction with the annual Fine Art Show. They players have just completed their first cross-country tour as well as a tour in Africa, and are coming to Washington from an appearance at Lincoln Center in New York City. The group specializes in performing Cajun music, and were featured on Paul Simon's Grammy-award-winning album, "Graceland." Admission to the concert is free. The performance will begin at 5 p.m. and continue until 9 p.m.

Television star Grant Goodeve will star as Jesse James in "Diamond Studs," the third of four productions to be produced by the East Carolina Summer Theatre in July.

Goodeve will lead the production which will run Monday through Saturday, at 8:15 p.m. with special matinee performances scheduled for Wednesday and Saturday, at 2:15 p.m., in McGinnis Theatre on the East Carolina University campus.

Tickets may be reserved, with a Mastercard or Visa, by calling 757-6390, Monday through Saturday, 10:00 a.m. to 8:30 p.m., or tickets may be purchased at the Box Office in McGinnis Theatre on the East Carolina University campus.

Sellouts have taken place for the first two productions of the summer theater, so that early purchase of tickets is encouraged.

Goodeve achieved national recognition for his role as the eldest son, David, on the television series "Eight Is Enough." He has also guest-starred in several other television series such as "Murder, She Wrote," "Hotel," "Love Boat," and "Trapper John."

He has been seen in a wide variety of plays and musicals including "Paint Your Wagon," "Meet Me in St. Louis," "The Owl and the Pussycat," and "The Fantastics."

In addition to his acting and singing talents, he participates in rodeos, plays tennis, and loves to ski.

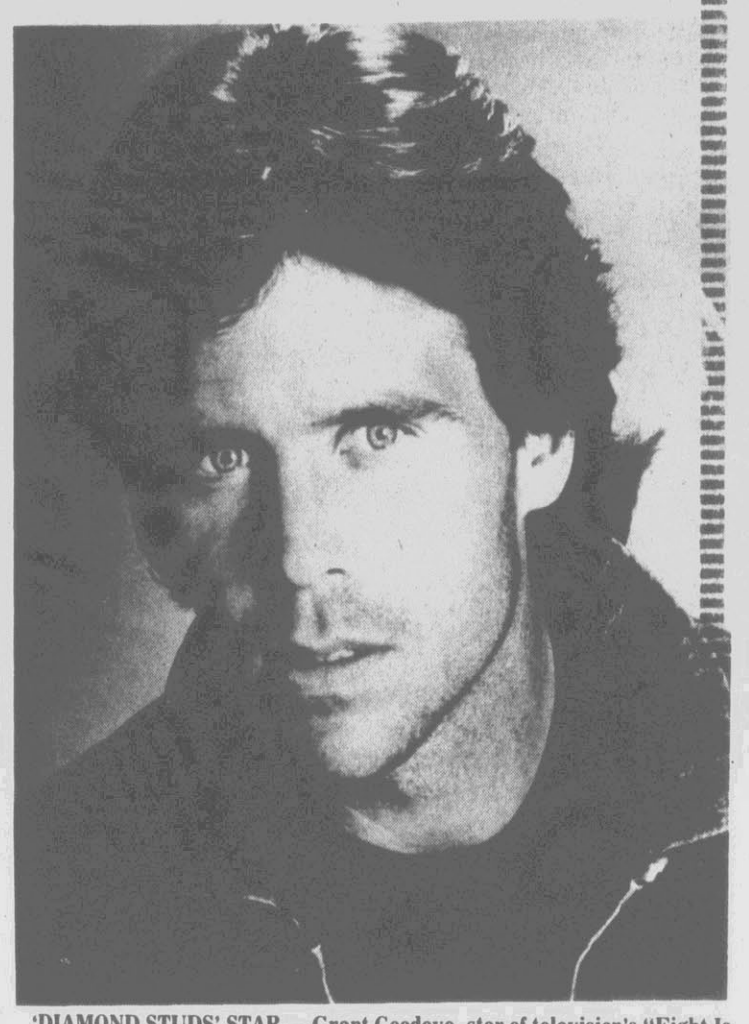
The role he claims most pride in is that of husband to his wife Debbie, and as father to three youngsters — Katie, eight, Emily, six, and Mac, four.

Other stars appearing in "Diamond Studs" will be Gatesville native Broadway veteran Graham Pollock and television and stage performer Mike O'Carroll.

"Diamond Studs" is a saloon musical about the life and times of the infamous outlaw Jesse James. Jesse is a frustrated Southerner at the end of the Civil War. He turns to bank and train robbery, ultimately to be done in by his pal Bob Ford for the sake of a reward and publicity.

"Diamond Studs" is home grown native Tar Heel entertainment. It was written by Jim Wann and Bland Simpson and made its debut in Chapel Hill.

"Diamond Studs" has a musical score that is both funny and sassy.



'DIAMOND STUDS' STAR — Grant Goodeve, star of television's "Eight Is Enough," will appear as Jesse James in East Carolina Summer Theatre's production of "Diamond Studs." The musical will be on stage at McGinnis Theatre Monday through Saturday evenings at 8 p.m., with matinees at 2:15 p.m. Wednesday and Saturday.

Dance Commission Announced

DURHAM — This year's Metropolitan Life/American Dance Festival Choreography Commission has gone to Ann Carlson. She was selected from among more than 80 candidates by a panel of dance experts.

The $8,500 fellowship has been offered annually since 1985 to help ADF in its continuing effort to present new works by promising choreographers. Anita Feldman received the commission last year.

Carlson, in collaboration with composer Eve Beglarian, presented new dance on July 11 and July 12 as part of the ADF's Young Choreographers and Composers Program.

Carlson's work combines dance, vocal material, and visual elements. Her Animal series, which includes a work for four goats, one dancer, and three vocalists, was recently produced by Dance Theatre Workshop, in New York and played to sold-out houses.

She has received numerous commissions as well as support from the National Endowment for the Arts and the Peg Santvoort Foundation.

Hispanic Theater In San Francisco

By ANTHONY MARQUEZ
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — For 10 years, El Teatro de la Esperanza toured the United States with a mission: to reach theater-starved rural audiences and show middle America that not all Hispanics are farmworkers.

But the members of El Teatro decided their company needed to change its focus and find a home where a regular audience could appreciate its original, bilingual plays. The rag-tag theater ensemble brought its act to San Francisco.

Two years later, El Teatro has established itself as the only professional Hispanic theater company in San Francisco and has produced three plays, including its latest, "Teo's Final Spin," a pun-filled play that follows the misadventures of Teo from collecting garbage to fumbling about in Nicaragua.

"We wanted to develop kind of a consistent audience that at its core was Hispanic," said Rodrigo Duarte Clark, El Teatro's artistic director.

El Teatro set down roots in the heavily Hispanic Mission District, the South-of-Market neighborhood filled with Latino restaurants, car repair shops and liquor stores.

Despite its success with a regular audience, El Teatro de la Esperanza, or The Theater of Hope, has not completely abandoned touring, because its members continue to feel a responsibility to take theater to rural areas, mental institutions and prisons.

Last month, El Teatro ended a six-week tour of "Teo's Final Spin" to the Southwest and Midwest.

Inside El Teatro's plain, small office in a three-story building that also houses a day-care center, the 39-year-old Duarte Clark fondly recalled his troupe's semi-annual treks to Del Rio, Texas, where they always enjoyed good audiences.

"The reaction from the Latino audiences is appreciative, because it's a rare thing," said Duarte Clark, a member of El Teatro since 1973. "It has a certain authenticity to it because it's done by Latinos."

On the other hand, reaction from non-Hispanics sometimes ranges from curiosity to confusion, because people outside the Southwest may never have seen a play that portrays Hispanics as everyday people, not just farmworkers or recent immigrants.

"In general, it opens up their vision of what Latinos are like," Duarte Clark said.

In 1970, El Teatro was founded as a student group at the University of California-Santa Barbara. Five years later, the nonprofit company moved toward establishing itself as a professional theater group with full-time paid staff.

Since the mid-1970s, El Teatro had mostly been a touring company, making regular spring and fall tours throughout the Southwest and Midwest. In some cases, the theater group took its production abroad to various international festivals.

In 1985, the company adapted Dario Fo's "We Can't Pay, We Won't Pay." Called "No Se Paga? No Se Paga!," it was performed in tours to San Francisco and Mexico.

The following year, the theater group inaugurated its move to San Francisco's Mission Cultural Center with a revised production of "Loteria de Pasiones," a bilingual play about an old woman's memories of love and guilt, centered on the Mexican bingo game "loteria."

Not everything has gone well for El Teatro since its relocation. Financial woes have plagued it for years, and Duarte Clark pointed out that company members are often forced to work several jobs to keep productions going.

Ruben Castro Ilizaliturri, an actor from Mexico City who joined El Teatro in 1979, said that when the company first moved to San Francisco, the facility where they were to perform was unfinished. Company members had to work as carpenters to help complete construction.

"Right now, we have to do everything — direct, write, be technicians, carpenters," he said. "And that's hard."

The ideal situation for El Teatro would be the availability of sufficient funds to allow the artists to concentrate on their work, according to Duarte Clark.

"To some extent, financial limitations create artistic limitations," said Duarte Clark, a UC-Santa Barbara graduate who last summer directed El Teatro's production of "Hijos: Once a Family," which examined a troubled Chicano family.

El Teatro plans to take "Teo's Final Spin" to San Antonio for a July 8 show as part of the 14th annual Tenaz Festival of Chicano Latino Theater.

Booking manager Nancy Levidow said the play will return to the San Francisco Bay area July 22, when it will appear at San Rafael's Dominican College as part of the Performance at Forest Meadow summer festival.

Next spring, the company plans to produce two plays, "La Victima," a story about the immigration and migration of a Mexican family in the United States, and "La Cantata de Santa Maria de Iquique," which deals with a miners strike in Chile that ended in the South American country's bloodiest massacre.

PARK PERFORMERS — The Greenville-based reggae group, The Amateurs, will perform in the Sunday in the Park program on the Town Common at 7 p.m. today. The group's founder and lead vocalist, Bill Shepherd, is shown here.

The Amateurs At Sunday In The Park

The Amateurs, a group with headquarters in Greenville and who specializes in reggae music, will be the performers in the Sunday in the Park concert. The concert will take place at the Eugene West Amphitheater on the Town Common at 7 p.m. Sunday.

Patrons are encouraged to bring along blankets, chairs and other items for listening comfort while seated on the grassy slopes in front of the amphitheater.

Although generally categorized as performers of reggae and rock music, the group also incorporates musical motifs from gospel, folk and beach music.

The band was first formed in the early 1970s through the efforts of Bill Shepherd, who remains group's leader. The group's first release consists of three songs — "What Can I Say," "Lay It On the Line" and "The Ocean."

Foremost in their music, nonetheless, is the influence of reggae, a beat that has Latin, African, European and folk sounds all blending into a particular style, reggae.

A native of North Carolina, Shepherd spent his early years in New York City in a neighborhood where he often heard music played by neighbors who hailed from Trinidad in the British West Indies.

Those formative years too were influenced by gospel sounds — his mother cut some 78-rpm gospel music and four of his sisters formed a gospel group called the Shepherd Sisters.

It was after he came to Greenville that Shepherd became more interested in music. At first, he and some friends played informally at church suppers and similar public events.

The groupd has performed throughout North and South Carolina — at park concerts, night clubs, restaurants, at beach sites and for community sponsored concerts such as Sunday in the Park.

Some of their repertoire is drawn from the music of artists such as The Heptones, Gregory Isaacs, Harry Belefonte, Santana, and The Tradewinds. Another part of their repertoire consists of original music composed by members of the group.

Sunday in the Park is funded in part by the City of Greenville and in part by the N.C. Arts Council. The concerts are administered under the auspices of the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department, with program coordination by Stuart Aronson.

'The Mahabharata' Runs Nine Hours

By MONIKA JAIN
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — Silence has greeted Peter Brook's lavish nine-hour odyssey based on the rambling Indian epic "The Mahabharata," but for the cast, the silence is golden.

Playing to nearly packed houses in Tokyo, the last stop of a year-long worldwide tour, Brook's adaptation of good's triumph over evil pits two warring clans in ferocious battle to gain control of a vast ancient Indian kingdom.

The epic, which comprises the world's longest poem, narrates a way of life in its dealings with feelings of hatred, love and jealousy — basic human emotions often hidden under a polite facade. Audiences in New York, Copenhagen, Paris and Glasgow have responded with awkward, embarrassed laughter.

"That has been true with many audiences all over the world," said Malika Sarabhai, the only Indian national in the performance. "We used to get very upset in the beginning.

"In America, they laughed at everything," said Sarabhai, an accomplished dancer-actress in India. "Anytime when there was something tense going on stage, they would laugh ... because they are embarrassed. They don't like ... to be confronted with very deep, very basic emotions."

In Tokyo, the silence has been louder; the Japanese audience has laughed the least. Many Japanese, Brook said, have discovered that "India is really the root of their culture."

Kenichiro Shirahama, a theater critic and author of several books on plays, said "The Mahabharata" has allowed the Japanese "to re-evaluate the meaning of life."

"Japan has drawn its culture from the centuries-old traditions of Korea, China and especially India," he said, "but in their pursuit of money, the Japanese have forgotten how to live.

"By watching the play, the people are reminded of the richness of life and human nature."

In Tokyo for an eight-week engagement as part of the six-month Festival of India, "The Mahabharata" has earned rave reviews from the local media, and Saison Theater personnel say tickets for the nine-hour marathon sessions were sold out well in advance before the opening last month.

Originally written in the ancient Indian language of Sanskrit, the epic under Brook's direction is staged in English and lines up a multinational cast of 50 people from over 15 different countries.

The cast of the Centre International de Creations Theatreales company, based in France, has already toured in Europe, the United States and Australia.

Ironically, India has not been part of its itinerary.

Marie-Helene Estienne, Brook's assistant, blamed the logistics of transporting a company of 50 plus into a nation notorious for its red tape, but said a movie on the play, next on the director's agenda, will open in New Delhi by September 1989.

Doordarshan, India's government-run TV network, will sponsor the play's move to celluloid and will also cast the same group of actors, with one notable difference: The play will be cut to six hours, "the shortest length of time in which the story can be told," Brook said. Doordarshan, he added, initially wanted only two hours.

The epic is played out an a stage packed with dry earth, complete with a pond in the front and a rippling stream in the back. Outdoor and indoor scenes within acts are signaled by changing floor mats, brought out by the actors themselves doubling as stagehands.

The story is about two groups of cousins, the Kauravas and the Pandavas, who fight over control of an ancient Indian kingdom. The climax of the story is an 18-day battle, in which the Pandavas, representing good, are victorious.

Around this core are woven thousands of subplots, which nearly fill an entire encyclopedia of 18 books.

"The play is very true to 'The Mahabharata,' very true to the spirit," Sarabhai said. "Had I not been proud of the production both as an Indian and as a woman, I don't think I would have stayed party to it."

ATW Opens Ticket Sales

AYDEN — The Ayden Theater Workshop has announced its 1988-89 season ticket sales drive — with a goal of selling 325 season tickets. The drive begins July 15 and will continue through October 13, the opening night of the theater's first production.

Tickets are being sold in two categories — individual and family. Family tickets cover parents and all children up to college age. Individual tickets are priced at $12.50 and family tickets are $25. Both categories cover admittance to the four offerings scheduled for the 1988-89 season.

In addition to admission, season tickets give holders voting membership in ATW, an invitation to the annual spring celebration, and admittance to ATW-sponsored workshops.

Season ticket members also receive a monthly newletter and have first option on all KATW-sponsored trips and tours.

David Webb is coordinator of the season ticket sales drive. For season tickets or more information, contact him at 746-2193.

Other points of contact are: Laura's Florist, 746-2270; Lynda Werdal, 756-2377; Don Watson, 355-5108, and Barbara Houston, 524-5552.

Entertainments scheduled for the forthcoming season are: "To Kill A Mockingbird," "Arsenic and Old Lace," a night of one-act plays, and "The Sound of Music."

This season marks the 10th performing season for the Ayden Theater Workshop, which is jointly funded by the Town of Ayden, the Grassroots program of the North Carolina Arts Council, and the Pitt-Greenville Arts Council.

Latin America has managed to survive the strains of the five-year-old debt and economic crisis of the 1980s, but in many countries falling living standards have begun to threaten both political and economic development.

Dance Film Is Honored

RALEIGH — "Chuck Davis, Dancing Through West Africa", a spirited celebration of traditional dance filmed in Senegal and Gambia, was recently honored by the Independent Film Association with the Cine Golden Eagle award. Its producers, Gorham Kindem and Jane Desmond, followed Chuck Davis, Durham's internationally known ethnic dancer, and several other American dancers into the villages and suburban compounds of West Africa.

Funded by the N.C. Arts Council, the film celebrates life, movement, and a sense of community in an intimate and inspiring portrait of African dance and village life. It focuses upon three different tribes or ethnic groups — Wolof, Mandinka, and Diola —in different regions of Senegambia. The video shows the important place dance occupies in the daily lives of West Africans.

Concluding with a stimulating dance performance in the United States by Chuck Davis and the African American Dance Ensemble, this community dance presentation celebrates peace, love, and mutual respect.

"Chuck Davis: Dance Through Western Africa" has been picked up by the Public Broadcasting System for national syndication and is also being aired at film festivals in the U.S., Italy and Germany. Copies of the piece are available for sale or rental through Filmmakers Library, 133 East 58th St. New York, N.Y. 10022.

The African Dance Ensemble's forte is music and movement inspired by West African-American cultures. Besides touring North Carolina through the N.C. Arts Council's Touring Program, the ensemble has also performed throughout the Southeast with verve and panache. It is currently packing houses across the state for a fourth successful season on the popular Black Folk Heritage Tour.

ABSTRACT PAINTINGS

NEW YORK (AP) — Abstract paintings by early modernist Manierre Dawson (1887-1969) are being shown at the Whitney Museum of American Art through Sept. 11.

The exhibition, "Manierre Dawson," contains 25 experimental oils. Dawson's brief but pioneering career as a painter was confined to the years 1909-1914. Trained as a civil engineer, he painted in his spare time, "developing an American style of abstraction that resembled Wassily Kandinsky's colorful and novel abstract forms."

After 1914, he spent less and less time painting and at his death in 1969 he was known as an investor and landowner.

CHINESE TREASURES

SEATTLE (AP) — "Son of Heaven," the most comprehensive art exhibition sent abroad by the People's Republic of China since 1949, will have its world premiere at the Seattle Center Flag Pavilion July 28-Dec. 31.

Spanning both the Pre-Imperial period of the 7th century B.C. to 221 B.C. and the Imperial period of 221 B.C. to 1800 A.D., the exhibit encompasses 26 centuries of Chinese creativity through more than 225 of China's national art treasurers.

After the Seattle showing, the exhibit will be in Columbus, Ohio, March 1-Sept. 4, 1989.

Q. Did Vanna White of TV's "Wheel of Fortune" act opposite Sylvester Stallone in racy films? If so, which ones?—M.L., Bridgeport, Conn.

A. Sylvester Stallone worked in porn pix in his days of poverty and struggle, but never with Vanna White. Six years ago, White acted in "Gypsy Angels," a low-budget, unreleased film which reportedly shows her with very little on.

Q. Of these 12 deceased celebrities, which ones were not homosexuals: Orson Welles, Tennessee Williams, Charles Laughton, Oscar Wilde, Montgomery Clift, Desi Arnaz, Ramon Novarro, Cole Porter, Bill Tilden, Lorenz Hart, Yul Brynner and Roy Cohn? I need the answer for school credit. No fooling!—P.D., Philadelphia, Pa.

A. The three who were not homosexuals: Orson Welles, Desi Arnaz and Yul Brynner.

Q. Would you have some idea of how much severance pay the CBS board of directors settled on Thomas Wyman, their chief executive officer, to leave the corporation two years ago? Is $400 million a reasonable ballpark figure?—I.B. Curious, Geneva, Ill.

A. Thomas Hunt Wyman was allowed to exercise previously voted stock options worth $4.4 million and given $400,000 a year in pension rights for life. Wyman is just 58. If he survives another 30 years, he'll have collected $16.4 million.

Q. What chance does Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, former U.S. representative at the United Nations, have to be chosen as George Bush's running mate at the forthcoming Republican convention? Also, I'd like to know which of the following is George Bush's home state: Massachusetts, Connecticut, Maine or Texas?—Barbara Shaw, Eugene, Ore.

A. Jeane Kirkpatrick, in our opinion, has a very small chance of being chosen George Bush's running mate. She endorsed Sen. Robert Dole, not Bush, to be the Republican candidate for the Presidency. Bush was born in Massachusetts, was reared in Connecticut and owns a home in Maine. After World War II, however, he established his residence in Texas and made it his home state.

Q. What does it take to get a reply from you—24-karat ink? Perfumed parchment? In the last six months, I've asked two times whatever became of actor Sterling Hayden. I ask again.—Craig Greelman, Cannon Beach, Ore.

A. Sterling Hayden—actor, adventurer, writer and sea captain—died in Sausalito, Calif., on May 23, 1986. He was 70. Tall (6 feet 4), blond and irresistibly handsome, Hayden preferred sailing to screen stardom. For a detailed account of his romantic and heroic life, read Hayden's critically acclaimed autobiography, "Wanderer," published in 1963—if you can find a copy.

Q. In the Hollywood galaxy of stars, who are the leading Republicans and the leading Democrats?—Ken Hogan, Albuquerque, N.M.

A. Among the leading Republicans, or independents who have supported Republicans, are Bob Hope, Jimmy Stewart, Tom Selleck and Charlton Heston. Generally favoring Democratic candidates are Gregory Peck, Ed Asner, Warren Beatty, Jane Fonda, Robert Redford and Barbra Streisand.

Q. Is it a fact that both Manuel Noriega of Panama and Fidel Castro of Cuba are the illegitimate sons of housemaids?—Rodolpho Cruz, New Orleans, La.

A. Noriega, 54, was born in Panama City, the illegitimate son of a maid who gave him up to a childless schoolteacher who, in turn, reared and taught him. Castro, 61, was born in Cuba, the son of Angel Castro, a wealthy landowner, and Lina Ruz González, the family cook. Angel had two children by his first wife and seven by Lina, at least three of whom—Angela, Ramón and Fidel—were illegitimate. Angel Castro later married Lina, thereby legitimizing all their offspring. ©WALTER SCOTT 1988

The Railway and Locomotive Historical Society presents

THE WORLD'S GREATEST LOCOMOTIVES

Superb handcrafted models in solid pewter. The first collection that captures the adventure of railroading in every era and throughout the world.

THEY ROLLED OUT OF THE YARDS at Altoona, Cheyenne, Bath and Chicago. Mechanical giants on tracks of steel. From iron works across Europe and the Orient they signaled a world-wide revolution in travel and commerce. And, from the early wood-burners to the new streamlined expresses, they have been objects of awe—fascinating symbols of adventure.

Now, the Railway and Locomotive Historical Society—one of America's oldest and most respected railroad historical organizations—has authorized their first collection of locomotive models ever to capture the sweep and drama of a century-and-a-half of railroading, as it happened here and around the world.

Selected by experts.

The collection will consist of 25 authentically detailed models portraying the most important locomotives of all time. Each has been selected on the authority of leading railroad experts. And each sculptured miniature will be individually cast in solid pewter, entirely finished by hand.

Beginning with the legendary John Bull of the 1830s, the collection will include such important American locomotives as: Engine 999 of the Empire State Express, which claimed a world speed record of 112 miles per hour in 1893. The Pennsylvania Railroad's K-4, a pioneer on runs like the Detroit Arrow. The sleek West Coast Daylight-type of 1941. And from other great railroading nations of the world: England's "Flying Scotsman"...Japan's "Asia Express"...Germany's S 3/6, pride of the Rheingold Express.

Precise and authentic.

Each imported locomotive will be carefully researched. The casting molds will be refined by hand to ensure accuracy. And the miniatures will show such fine details as handrails, suspension, fittings and cab layout—all in hand-rubbed pewter.

These are models you will want to examine—again and again. To inspect the amazing 16 driving wheels that powered the "Big Boy" over the Rockies...or the sculptured aerodynamic styling of the TGV, today's fastest train. And there's an expertly written commentary with each pewter model, so you'll be able to relive the adventure of railroading as it happened during every era.

A dramatic display.

So that you can showcase the complete collection, a hardwood wall shelf will be sent to you at no added cost. Tracks on each tier allow you to show the variety of locomotive types and styles—providing a handsome accent in the home, den or office.

The Railway and Locomotive Historical Society has appointed The Franklin Mint to craft the models and handle all subscriptions. To begin building this complete collection... bringing the excitement of railroading and the lure of these mighty engines into your home...simply sign and mail the accompanying application by August 15, 1988.

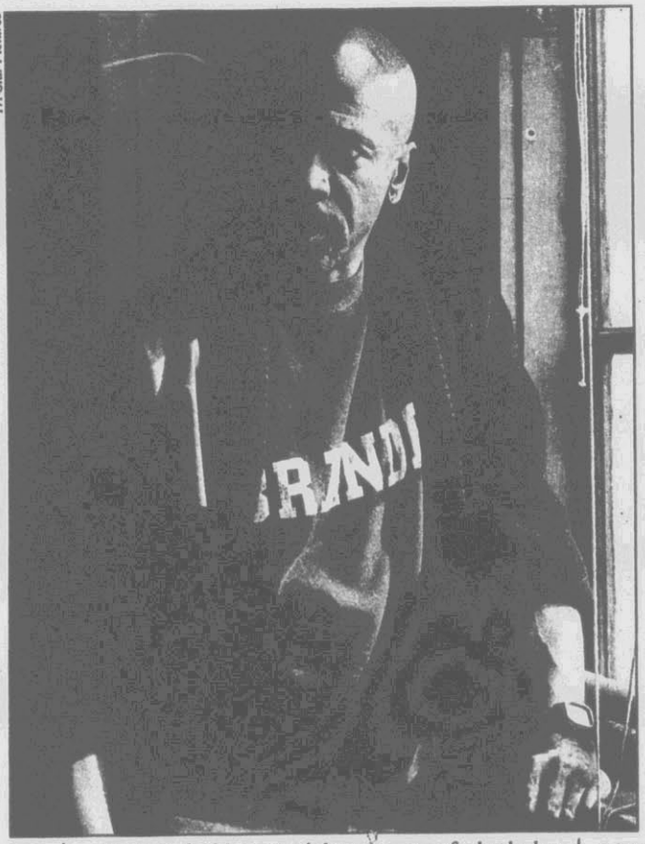
Winning the Oscar brought Louis Gossett Jr. face to face with problems that had been simmering for years.

'I Was Swallowing A Kind Of Poison'

By Tom Seligson



Tri-Star Pictures

Gossett in the 1987 high school drama The Principal.

IN 1983, LOUIS GOSSETT JR. WON an Academy Award for his supporting role in An Officer and a Gentleman. He was only the third black performer in history to win an Oscar, and it came when Gossett was 46 and had been acting for 30 years. "I got a lot of publicity," he recalled. "But the glory disappeared kind of quickly. I expected a landslide of parts, but none came. I became very disappointed, blaming it on racism. I thought that maybe I had chosen the wrong profession and had reached as far as I could go. It set me on a path of self-pity. That's when I got into alcohol and drugs."

For the next four years, Gossett became a heavy user of cocaine, marijuana and liquor. "I would stop when I made a movie," he said. "And you'd never know it from my performance. But the people around me knew. My children knew. And I knew. I decided I had to stop for good."

How Gossett succeeded in stopping his reliance on alcohol and drugs is not simply a story of overcoming an addiction. For Gossett ultimately had to come to grips with the underlying causes. He had to gain a deeper understanding not only of his family and his response to racism but, more important, of himself. What, I wondered, had he discovered? How had he taken control of his life?

We spoke at Gossett's sprawling ranch house near Malibu, a comfortably informal home obviously designed for children. Gossett has two boys, a 14-year-old from his second marriage and a 10-year-old he's in the process of adopting. West African art hangs alongside a stand-up Pac-Man machine. There's an indoor pool, and out back is a tree house, in front of which his four dogs napped in the sun. Gossett had just finished a workout when I arrived and was wearing a gray velour exercise outfit and running shoes.

He shared with me straight away part of what he has come to understand of his problem. "I finally learned why I got involved with alcohol in the first place," he said. "I've learned that when you're born into a family that has alcoholism, you're born with a propensity for some kind of addiction. It's like being born with a time bomb. You're just waiting for the match."

Gossett grew up in Brooklyn, near Coney Island. "I was the first generation of my family to be born up North," he said. "We were from Georgia and South Carolina, and the whole family had moved up together, almost like a tribe. So, although I was an only child, I had 30 cousins, aunts, uncles and grandparents all living within two or three blocks. All the women in the family were domestics, and the men were porters or cab drivers. After school, we kids would go to our grandma's or great-grandma's."

Gossett's great-grandmother was a former slave who lived to be 117. He used her as a role model when he played in Roots. "She remembered when Lincoln freed the slaves," he said. "However, she said her life didn't really change. She still had to live in the same plantation shack. She had no place else to go."

Gossett learned about determination from his parents. "My mother was a church lady," he said. "She was very proud." His father worked his way up from porter at the Brooklyn Borough Gas Co. to head of the billing company, while also running a newsstand. "The man who owned the newsstand was Italian," recalled Gossett. "He kind of adopted my father. And my mother worked as a maid for a lot of Jewish people. So I learned to eat lasagna from my father and stuffed kishka from my mother. I had to go to my grandmother's for soul food."

But his childhood memories are not entirely pleasant. Beneath the facade of family pride was a quiet torment. "I remember the whole family would get together at Palisades Amusement Park or Rye Beach," he said, turning serious. "It was bittersweet, because there was a lot of fighting. And it always had to do with drinking. Whatever frustrations members of my family had, they took them out through alcohol. Most of my uncles, on both sides, died of alcoholism. And my father, who was an unhappy man, also drank too much. It's a real sore point in my life. Of course, when I was growing up, I never thought it

L-r: Take a Giant Step (with Jane White) set Gossett firmly on the road to stardom. Among the plays that followed was A Raisin in the Sun (with Sidney Poitier and Ruby Dee). Thirty years after his stage debut, Gossett won the Oscar for his portrayal of Sgt. Emil Foley in An Officer and a Gentleman. In his most recent film, Iron Eagle II, he plays a retired colonel.

Gossett was a very good athlete as a boy. "I wanted to be Jackie Robinson," he said. One of his fellow baseball players in the Brooklyn youth leagues was Sandy Koufax, the future Dodgers star. "He could throw a ball at 91 miles an hour at the age of 17," Gossett recalled. "He was probably one of the finest athletes I've ever seen."

It was one of Gossett's teachers who was responsible for his becoming an actor. "I was captain of the basketball team in high school," he explained. "But during summer vacation, I got a job at Howard Johnson's and, from lifting stuff, I suffered a hernia. I had to sit out 10 games. I must have been depressed, because my marks dropped. My English teacher, Gus Blum, said, 'You know, you're used to this extracurricular stuff. Come try out for this class play.'"

"It was You Can't Take It With You," continued Gossett, nodding at the memory. "I did it, and it was over. I returned to the basketball team, and my marks got back up. I forgot all about acting. But then the same teacher came to me six weeks later. He said they were looking for someone young and black for this Broadway play, Take a Giant Step. They'd been auditioning everyone. Would I go and meet the playwright?"

On a lark, Gossett went. He obviously impressed both the playwright and the director, because they postponed production while they tried to turn him into an actor. "I had this thick Brooklyn accent," he explained, grinning. "They were paying me $300 a week to lose it, tutoring me every day after school."

The made-over Louis Gossett made his Broadway debut in 1953 in Take a Giant Step, at the age of 17. He won a Donaldson Award as best newcomer in the theater and entered New York University, where he studied acting and joined the basketball team. "The school had one of its best basketball teams in history," he said. "I decided to concentrate on drama."

We were interrupted by Sharron, the boy Gossett is adopting. Two years ago, he saw Sharron Anthony Jones on a Good Morning America story about the homeless. The boy was living on the St. Louis streets with his widowed mother and two brothers. Touched by Sharron's plight, Gossett tracked him down. With the approval of Sharron's mother, Gossett brought him home to Malibu.

"How you doing, my man?" Gossett greeted him.

"Fine," said the obviously shy 10-year-old, looking nervously at the visitor. He asked Gossett about going to the hardware store to get some materials for his science project.

"I'll take you right after the interview," said Gossett. "Why don't you start your other homework? Meanwhile, can I have a hug?...In public?...Guess that's kind of rough. Okay, I'll see you later."

When Sharron left, Gossett told how the boy had been very much on guard when he first arrived. "After surviving on the streets, when he came into a family and was happy, he was afraid it wouldn't last," Gossett said. "But he gets along very well with Satie, my 14-year-old son."

"You know what's interesting?" he added, lowering his voice. "He comes from the same kind of family I did, in terms of the drinking. I can see the danger signs in him already. That's another reason I wanted to hurry up and get myself together. Now I can help him."

Gossett's assistant brought us in some soft drinks. Nursing his soda, the actor talked about his early days in the theater. With his career now decided, he applied the same determination he'd learned from his father and won prominent roles in The Desk Set and Kurt Weill's Lost in the Stars. Gossett says he was drafted by the New York Knicks but instead decided to appear in A Raisin in the Sun and later in the musical version of Golden Boy. "Though I didn't always make much money as an actor, there were all these clubs in the Village where I used to sing church music and folk songs, then pass the hat," said Gossett. "I remember, I was making $45 a week off-Broadway in The Blacks and $75 a day playing conga drums. I also played guitar and learned how to write songs."

One of Gossett's songs, the anti-war anthem "Handsome Johnny," was sung at Woodstock by Richie Havens. Its success was to come in handy when Gossett moved to California in pursuit of movie and TV roles—and found himself temporarily short of funds. "I had this house on Laurel Canyon," he explained, "from

It turned out to be a royalty check for $11,800 for "Handsome Johnny." I'd completely forgotten about it. That's the closest I've ever come to the street."

Since then, Gossett rarely has been out of work. His films include A Raisin in the Sun, Skin Game, The Laughing Policeman, The Deep, The Principal, The River Niger and Enemy Mine. He has done a number of TV series and movies, including, of course, playing Fiddler in Roots, for which he won an Emmy. However, despite his steady employment, Gossett felt dissatisfied. He blamed his frustration on the limited roles for blacks and the way blacks are characterized on the screen.

"I was always smart enough in auditions to give the producer and director the image that they wanted," he said. "I accepted the fact that if I was black, I had to look and act a certain way. But I finally came to realize that I was swallowing a kind of poison. Yes, I'm black, but I'm also an American. And representing a black character as always having to be twice as good at something, or having to rise to his heights because of the difficulties of being black—now those clichés seem like part of the residual of slavery to me. I wasn't raised that way, and I won't accept it.

"You see, by accepting the traditional Hollywood attitudes about black characters, black actors end up crippling themselves. And if the part in the script doesn't actually say 'black sergeant,' they won't even go up for it."

Gossett decided to fight such stereotyping, which is how he won his breakthrough role in An Officer and a Gentleman. "The only reason I got it," he explained, "is because my agent broke doors down and said, 'Wait a minute. You can't tell me this Marine can't be black.' He kept calling the studio, and it finally came down to the director, Taylor Hackford, who met me and said, 'Hey, you got the part.' It took that kind of persistence, and it's always going to take that. But now I think the argument's getting easier. We proved our point."

Despite his success in An Officer and a Gentleman, or maybe because of it, Gossett's real battle was only just beginning. His enemy was more than just racism in Hollywood; it was the long-simmering conflict within himself. "When the Oscar came, and Lou Gossett didn't have a pile of scripts to choose from, I think I let my heart break," he said. "I wondered, 'Is this it? Is this all there is?' I wanted to cover up my resentment, not feel what I was feeling. I'd always managed before to run away from alcohol. It scared me because of my family, and I wouldn't even go to bars. But then I let my guard down. And when it came time to get back to work, I didn't feel like it. I knew I'd better stop this, but I couldn't. It took me a couple of years."

Gossett credits an anonymous group-support program with helping him regain his self-respect. "When I first went to meetings, I was afraid people would find out about my problem," he said. "But then I saw judges and police chiefs sitting there, even astronauts. I said, 'Okay, here's my story.' And they said, 'Here's what you have to do to get better.' They've got these steps, and the best of them is helping others in trouble. I now go to wherever I'm asked for help—especially when it concerns kids."

Gossett admits he has suffered temporary setbacks. "I've been at this three and a half years," he said. "There have been months of clarity, only to be followed by a weekend where I'd stay here and get high. The last time that happened was about eight months ago. I finally realized I was only hurting myself. I now know that what I have is a disease, and I'll have it whether I take a drink or not. I now accept the fact that without the program I'd be dead. It has helped me to get rid of resentments and anger and figure out what's truly important. Sure, Oscars and Emmys are important. But much more important is happiness inside of me and inside my home."

Gossett was married again last December. "I feel like it's for the first time," he said. His wife, the former Cyndi James-Reese, is an attractive young actress and singer who won on Star Search two years ago. "If I had not been more at peace with myself, she wouldn't have come into my life," Gossett admitted. "I wouldn't even have seen her. I'd have been too ashamed of myself. But I was in the program, and so I said, 'Look, I've got this situation I'm trying to work on.' She said, 'I'll come and help you.'"

When he's not shooting a movie—his latest is Iron Eagle II—Gossett spends most of his time at home. "I go to a meeting of the program every day," he said. "And my wife and I are working on a script. And when the kids come home from school, I play with them."

As for what Gossett has finally discovered—the secret that helped him take control of his life—he looked at me and smiled. "My life has now become very simple," he said with obvious contentment. "I always used to look at the bad side. Now peace of mind to me is waking up in the morning, having my family happy and healthy and being happy with myself. Also, I'm making a living at what I love doing. I now feel I'm ahead, and whenever I lose my clarity, you know what I do? I count my blessings."

Doctors and nurses are fighting it out over who should administer anesthesia

What This Medical Battle Could Cost You

Timothy White

At the head of the operating table is Mary Jeanette Mannino, president of the American Association of Nurse Anesthetists, with a patient undergoing surgery.

BY BERNARD GAVZER

THE TRANQUILIZER MAKES YOU MELLOW. SOON, THE sodium Pentothal is coursing through your veins. The last thing you see before losing consciousness is the masked face at the head of the operating table. It belongs to the anesthetist—the person who breathes for you, monitors your heart rate, blood pressure and temperature, and supplies the drugs and even the blood transfusion you might need as the surgeon does his work.

If you've ever had surgery, ask yourself now how much you know about whomever administered your anesthesia. Was that person an anesthetist or an anesthesiologist? Is there a difference in their training? In what they charge for their services?

For the record, an anesthetist is a person licensed to administer anesthesia. He or she may be: an anesthesiologist—a medical doctor specializing in the study and practice of anesthesia (an MDA); a certified registered nurse anesthetist specializing in the study and practice of anesthesia (a CRNA); or a licensed practitioner who is not an anesthesiologist (an M.D. or a dental surgeon).

"It's the best-kept secret in medicine," insists Patricia Walsh of Boulder, Colo., a retired CRNA, "but half the time, the face behind the mask is that of a nurse anesthetist, not an anesthesiologist."

There are about 22,000 anesthesiologists and about 23,000 nurse anesthetists now licensed and practicing in the United States, and each group does about 50 percent of the 18 million to 20 million anesthesias performed in this country yearly. As it is, the national bill for anesthesia is conservatively estimated at $3 billion a year. And it will keep climbing as the population ages and more people undergo life-extending operations.

The figures are noteworthy because these nurses and doctors are locked in a little-known battle over which group is most qualified to sit at the head of the surgical table in the nation's operating rooms. Few anesthesiologists are attracted to rural areas, where CRNAs long have worked without their supervision. But in metropolitan areas, where MDAs abound, the nurses' supervision by anesthesiologists is almost a given. The struggle between them is one of autonomy, and its outcome could cost us plenty.

"It's the best-kept secret in medicine, but half the time, the face behind the mask is that of a nurse anesthetist..."

1846: One of the first anesthesias (ether), given for oral surgery.

Says John F. Garde, a nurse anesthetist and executive director of the American Association of Nurse Anesthetists (AANA), "The anesthesiologists and their supporters have been pushing us into the hinterlands, trying to drive us out of business."

Not so, says Dr. Howard L. Zauder, past president of the American Society of Anesthesiologists (ASA) and chief of anesthesiology at the Health Science Center of the State University of New York in Syracuse. He adds, "We are being accused of leveraging our members to close schools for nurse anesthetists. Nothing could be further from the truth."

Some nurse anesthetists say that anesthesiologists have objected to having student nurse anesthetists in their operating rooms and that, consequently, the rooms—a major part of their schooling—often have been denied the students. Nurse anesthetist schools have dwindled from 190 to 88 in the last 10 years for many reasons, confirms the AANA. There has been a decline in enrollments in four-year programs for Registered Nurse degrees and in admissions to nurse anesthetist schools.

In this age of new drugs and technology, anesthesia is crucial. Anesthesiologists come to the operating table with four years of medical school, a year of internship in medicine or surgery and three more years of residency in anesthesia. Exams for board certification and recertification are vo untary.

The CRNAs have passed four years of nursing school to become registered nurses, completed a year of critical-care nursing and a minimum of two years of postgraduate study in nurse anesthesia. They must pass an exam for certification before becoming nurse anesthetists and then must take courses for recertification every two years to keep abreast of their field.

Despite their denials of charges like Garde's, anesthesiologists have supported new hospital standards that threaten the nurses. One such change was proposed and issued in 1987 by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals. Anesthesiologists interpreted the proposal to mean that, for a hospital to be accredited, an anesthesiologist must be on staff either to administer anesthesia or to supervise the nurse anesthetists administering it. When the AANA protested, the commission reviewed the matter, then said the proposal actually meant that supervision of anesthesia in a hospital could be provided by any licensed practitioner—including dental surgeons and, in some states, CRNAs.

Gary Kliewer is a nurse anesthetist in Fort Morgan, Colo., working independently in five different hospitals. He recalls what happened when a 10-bed hospital in Colorado's eastern plains received this proposed standard change before it was reinterpreted:

"The hospital advertised for an anesthesiologist and finally got one inquiry. The anesthesiologist who responded wanted to be guaranteed $500 a case, even for a tonsilectomy, and a minimum of five cases a day. I do a tonsilectomy that takes an hour to an hour and a half, and I charge $150 to $160.

"I'm prepared to challenge any anesthesiologist, head-to-head. We can match charts, litigation, end results. I've never faced a malpractice charge."

Nevertheless, changes in malpractice insurance are threatening nurse anesthetists like Kliewer. Some insurers, such as The Doctors' Company, in California, have—for certain procedures—placed restrictions on physicians' use of nurse anesthetists who are independent contractors. This, the nurses say, hurts them in getting and keeping jobs. The AANA filed a protest and anticipates a change soon.

Which is better? Both sides say they are eminently qualified.

"Anesthesiologists, due to their training in medicine and anesthesiology, can—far more than the surgeon or the nurse anesthetist—integrate the understanding of the physiology with the pharmacology of the anesthetic," says Dr. Robert Kaufman, associate professor of anesthesiology at UCLA.

Says Herbert Watson, chairman of nurse-anesthetist training at the Medical College of Virginia, "I've had nurse students working on heart transplants and bypass surgery. Our students graduate with a master's degree in nurse anesthesiology. They do general anesthesia, epidurals and spinals in obstetrics."

Economics clearly figures in this conflict. By the year 2000, the American Medical Association projects, the number of physicians will have increased by 23.8 percent and anesthesiologists by 41.7 percent. With their field now one of the fastest-growing in medicine, anesthesiologists in urban areas soon will be competing more fiercely with each other, as well as with nurse anesthetists.

Certainly, the nurses earn less. The nurses' association estimates that its members average about $46,000 a year. The anesthesiologists' society estimates that its members average $150,000 annually—more in metropolitan areas—and that they are among the highest-paid in medicine. The Health Care Finance Administration reports that nurse anesthetists were directly paid $160 million in Medicare payments in 1985. In a July 1987 report, the General Accounting Office said anesthesiologists got $612 million in 1985.

Even if you're admitted to a hospital that has a supervising anesthesiologist, chances are your anesthesia will be administered by a nurse anesthetist—unless you request an anesthesiologist on your surgery consent form.

"Typically," explains one hospital's spokesman, "the nurse anesthetist's fee is included in your hospital charges. You'll get a separate bill from the anesthesiologist."

How do charges compare between them? Generally, anesthesiologists' fees are higher, and both they and the nurse anesthetists charge more in big cities. It is nearly impossible to establish an "average" charge: Each surgery varies, depending on the patient's health, on complications and the time required to complete an operation—all of which add "units" of time for which the anesthetist charges.

The nurses note that few anesthesiologists choose to work in remote areas or in the less lucrative military hospitals.

In the military, nurse anesthetists often face situations similar to one Charles Reese met while he was the nurse anesthetist aboard the aircraft carrier U.S.S. Nimitz, one of the world's largest warships. On the night of May 26, 1981, one of the ship's jets crashed onto its landing deck, killing 14 persons and injuring 48. Reese single-handedly administered the anesthesias. He was decorated for his life-saving activities and now is a commander at the Naval Training Center in Great Lakes, Ill., near Chicago.

After investigating a rumor that the Army and Navy wanted to require anesthesiologists to supervise nurse anesthetists, the U.S. House of Representatives'

Committee on Armed Services issued this report in April 1987: "The committee is extremely skeptical that such a policy change makes sense from a patient-care, quality-of-care or medical-readiness standpoint."

But the civilian conflict persists. The Dec. 21, 1987, issue of FTC: WATCH, a publication of Washington Regulatory Reporting Associates in Springfield, Va., reported that a new medical investigation will focus on charges that anesthesiologists illegally restrict the ability of nurse anesthetists to compete with physician anesthetists. When she was asked to comment, M. Elizabeth Gee, assistant director of the Federal Trade Commission's Bureau of Competition (Health Care), would say only, "FTC policy dictates that we can neither confirm nor deny this report."

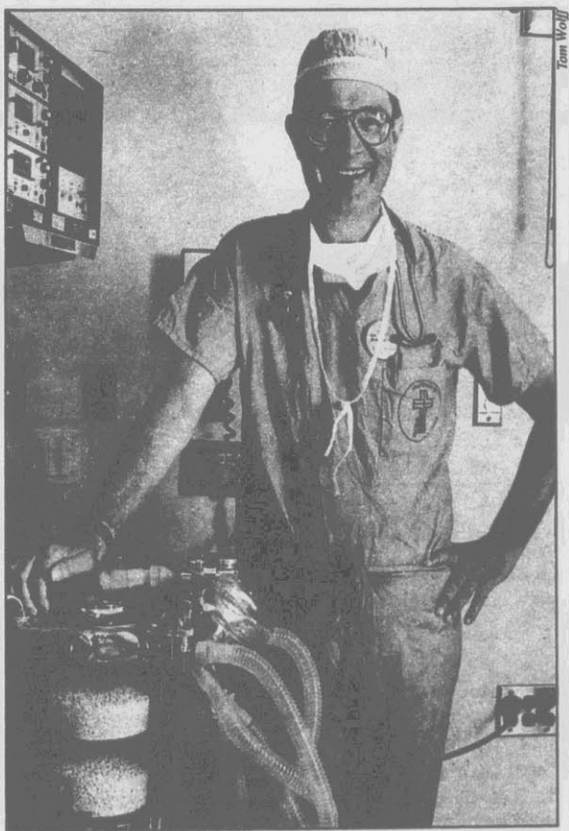
All of this raises the question: Is there a greater risk of dying or going into a coma with the nurse or the doctor?

The answer could be determined by a review of "bad outcomes," the label put on a death or coma under anesthesia. But to date there has been no clear compilation of "bad outcomes" and who was responsible for them.

Dr. Zauder says, "There has never been a study relating morbidity [complications] and mortality to the provider." He adds that the odds of dying under anesthesia are about one in 10,000 to one in 20,000. Dr. Richard Keenan, chairman of anesthesiology for the Medical College of Virginia in Richmond, examined 160,000 cases of cardiac arrest during anesthesia and found 27 deaths—a rate of one per 6000. More alarming was his conclusion that, of those 27 deaths, 20 could have been avoided.

Some preliminary information on the issue may emerge from a pilot study staffed by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta. "Very little is really known about the anesthesia problem, and we don't have a handle on the rates of mortality," says Dr. Douglas Klaucke, a medical epidemiologist and manager of the study. "We want to analyze the risk factors, which include the equipment, hospital procedures, the techniques of the anesthetist and the patient's health factors that might warn of problems with anesthesia—such as whether the patient is a smoker or a diabetic—and the role of certification and recertification for anesthesiologists and nurse anesthetists."

The $400,000 study of five hospitals across the country was financed by the American Society of Anesthesiologists. Nurse anesthetists also participated, at Dr. Klaucke's insistence and over the objection of some anesthesiologists.



Tom Wolf

Dr. Richard Keenan, chairman of Department of Anesthesiology at the Medical College of Virginia in Richmond.

The national bill for anesthesia already is estimated to be at least $3 billion a year. As the population ages, it will keep climbing.

Dr. Sidney Wolfe is director of the Public Citizen Health Research Group, a nonprofit organization he and Ralph Nader founded 17 years ago. He says: "Right now, there isn't good quality control in anesthesiology, and until that is addressed, arguments that anesthesiologists automatically are better than nurse anesthetists make no sense at all."

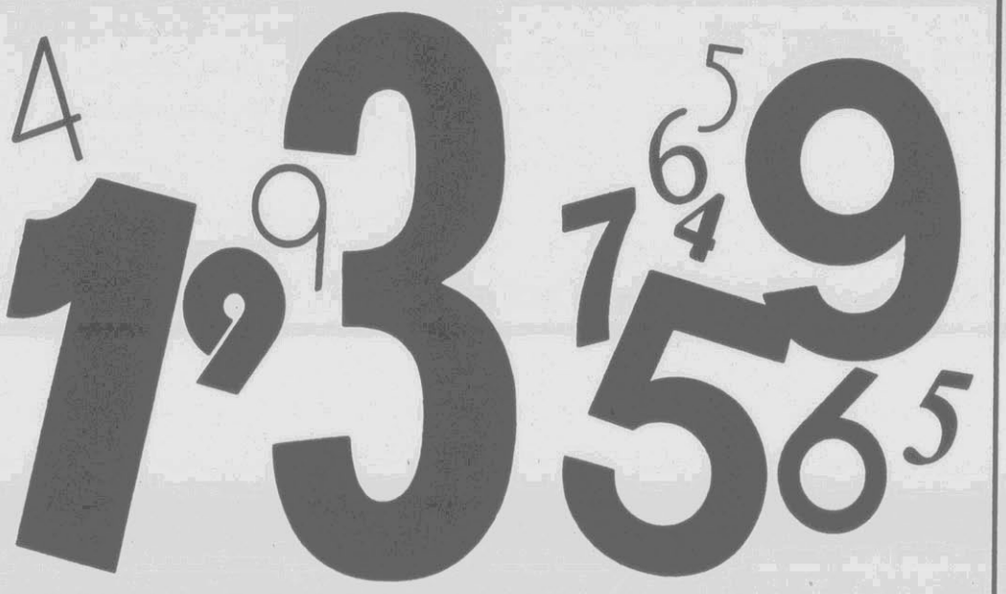
COUNT ME IN



What's in a Name? More Than You and I Ever Thought Possible

By J. J. Leonard

MARILYN 4 1 9 9 3 7 5 = (38) 11

MONROE 4 6 5 9 6 5 = (35) 8

= 19 = 10 = 1

I admit it. I'm a skeptic, one of those people who doesn't like to take things on faith. In the days of Columbus, I'd probably have insisted that the world was flat. (It doesn't look round, now does it?) So it goes without saying that I find it difficult to accept concepts like numerology. How could the letters and numbers associated with my name and birthdate say anything at all relevant about me?

I may be a tough sell, but I don't like to leave any stone unturned—especially one that might actually help me in my personal life and career. So when I had the chance to have a numerology profile done I took it, in part to prove that my skepticism was well-founded.

I'd almost forgotten about the profile when the envelope arrived several weeks later. I flopped on my bed and tore it open, ready to laugh out loud at the stranger they described. The first paragraph made me sit up and take notice. By the third page, the truth had hit home loud and clear. This was no stranger I was reading about. This was me!

Still, it could have been a coincidence. So I convinced a friend to have her's done. Though we've been very close for over ten years, we're completely different. Our personalities, what we believe in, how we lead our lives, even our strengths differ. The perfect test.

We reviewed her profile together. It was nothing like mine. She was astounded as she recognized trait after trait. A couple of points required reflection, but then she'd nod her acceptance of those, too. One passage evoked memories of her childhood, and she told me about being confused and a little scared of the acute awareness that she'd harbored even as a kid. It had set her apart from the other children who didn't share her capacity for perception. Two pages later, there it was in black and white. The ability, the early fear . . . the works. "This is so weird," she said, with a gasp. "It's all right on target."

With new respect for numerology, I decided to find out more. After numerous phone calls, I managed to track down Matthew Goodwin, a nationally recognized numerologist, and the expert responsible for the profiles my friend and I had received. I soon discovered that Goodwin rates among the top in his field. Author of the definitive Numerology: The Complete Guide, he's also appeared on radio and television, and written a column on numerology for a Los Angeles newspaper. In the 16 years that he's worked as a professional numerologist, Goodwin has helped thousands to discover their strengths, weaknesses, deep inner needs and emotions. "Numerology allows you to help yourself by increasing your awareness of your own character, as well as your understanding of others and how to better deal with them." he says.

How does it work? It all starts with your name and birthdate. They are the data base, from which a numerologist is able to describe you sight unseen. "Number values are assigned to the letters in your name," Goodwin explained to me over the phone. "By adding these—along with the numbers in your birthdate—in a multitude of different combinations—a numerologist establishes your key numbers. He then interprets the meaning of these key numbers, which results in a complete description of your personal characteristics."

When I finally caught up with Goodwin in person, I immediately asked him how he became involved in numerology. Afterall, it's not your regular nine-to-five occupation. It turns out that he just stumbled into it some 20 years ago. At the time, the MIT (Massachusetts Institute of Technology) graduate was a partner in an architectural firm, responsible for hiring the new employees. He worked with an assistant who habitually voiced her evaluation of prospective applicants each time she handed over a new resume. He found that her comments—whether good or bad—pegged the individuals he'd employed. "After a while I began to listen before I hired, rather than after," he says with a grin. "Her insights made a big difference in finding the right people."

After two years, the assistant moved away. Before she left, though, Goodwin asked her to share the secret of her success. The answer (much to his surprise) was numerology. "The only way I could have ever believed in numerology was to see it work for two years and never know what it was," says Goodwin in retrospect. "If someone had tried to tell me about numerology prior to that experience, I never would have believed them."

Goodwin's discovery of this science of numbers may have been startling, but it was hardly new. Not by a long shot. Numerology dates back thousands of years. Its father, Pythagoras, was the famous Greek mathematician and philosopher who developed the right triangle theorem that every high school math student learns today. During Pythagoras' time, however, numerology was reserved for rulers, who often used it when making critical decisions.

Pythagoras' role in mathematics may be the better-known, but his contribution of numerology is more intriguing by far. And while the latter's mechanism remains a mystery, its revelations couldn't be clearer.

David Stone was a computer programmer who at the age of 30 was making good money and advancing rapidly in his career. But something wasn't right. No matter how hard he tried, he couldn't rid himself of a profound feeling of dissatisfaction. His numerology profile indicated an intense love for people and an aptitude for communication. These skills were emphasized; the analytic side of his character was just mentioned in passing. At first David scoffed at the profile. Upon reflection, however, he began to realize that perhaps he'd been overlooking an important part of himself. Not long after, he went back to school. Four years later, he's a satisfied, happy psychologist, who can't believe that he ever worked at a computer terminal. "Becoming a psychologist is the last thing I thought I'd ever do," he admits with a chuckle.

Sometimes understanding someone else is just as important as understanding one's own self. Jim and Lisa Casey were able to improve—and perhaps even save—their bumpy marriage with the aid of numerology. "From the very beginning, I was always trying to change Lisa," admits Jim. "I always thought that my way was best." But instead of Lisa changing, fights and more fights resulted. Then they had their profiles done. "I gained a whole new insight about Lisa—what motivated her, why she did things the way she did, what her basic needs were," Jim explains. With the new understanding came new respect. "After reading her profile, I no longer tried to change Lisa each time she did something differently than I would have. For the first time I realized that she was not trying to be difficult, she was just being herself." Not surprisingly, their fights grew less frequent, and the marriage began to flourish.

Numerology has even helped parents to better understand and communicate with their children. Mary Gilroy had a profile done for her 18-year-old son who was getting ready to start college. Although Mary recognized most of the traits described in the profile, her son did not. A long discussion resulted, perhaps the first heart-to-heart talk they'd had since he'd become a teenager. "By using the profile as a vehicle for self-discovery, she was able to awaken within her son a new understanding of his abilities and potential," comments Goodwin. "He left home with a new look of self-confidence about him, his profile in hand for future reference."

Donna Thompson is a teacher who devotes herself to caring for her children, her husband, her house, her neighbors, even stray animals. Yet for years, the one person she neglected was herself. Eventually that neglect began to take its toll—on her and her loved ones. She couldn't understand why she felt so frustated and resentful so much of the time. When her numerology profile revealed that she tended to allow herself to be treated like a doormat, the point finally hit home. She suddenly realized that she had to balance her own needs along with everyone else's. It's taken some work, but she no longer ignores herself, and no longer lets herself be taken advantage of. She's a lot happier because of it. And so is her family.

Whether you use numerology to examine your life, take advantage of unexplored opportunities, confirm talents that in your heart you know are there, or simply figure out where to go next, it can be a penetrating tool to help you better understand yourself. "Numerology gives you the whole picture," explains Goodwin. "You see all the diverse parts of your personality and how they uniquely come together to make the person you are. Through this complete view you're able to make the most of your strengths in a way that wasn't possible before."

WHAT DO YOU ADD UP TO?

This is your chance to find out what numerology reveals about you. Though Matthew Goodwin usually charges $80 or more for his expertise, he has agreed to a special arrangement for Parade readers. For only $12.00 your numerology profile will be prepared by this renowned numerologist and his staff. To receive a comprehensive printed explanation of their findings and conclusions, simply follow the instructions on this page.

Those Rich and Famous

Marilyn Monroe

Her numerology profile mentions acting or singing talent, "a charisma which stands [her] in good stead," as well as moodiness, difficulties with communication, and a need to be alone. It points to the "desire to attain money, possessions, status and power," but adds that despite a forceful personality, Monroe will often feel insecure and incapable of going it alone.

Albert Einstein

Described as someone with a marked concern for humanity, and the capacity to give selflessly. Also noted was an affinity towards complex technical, scientific or philosophical studies in which he could use his "keen mental faculties to search for deeper truths."

Grace Kelly

Acting talent is highlighted, followed by the ability to operate in the world of big business and politics, and an attraction to "variety, unusual people, unusual interests, travel and adventure." The needs for status and recognition are offset by a giving, loving nature and the enthusiastic desire to experience joy. "An innate ability allows a boundless freedom most people can only dream about," reads the profile of the woman who married a prince.

Martin Luther King Jr.

Strong leadership potential may lead to significant position in the political world, says the profile. "You have a good mind and can find and develop creative solutions to problems. Others often see your strong character and appreciate your inner strength, too. They're often willing to trust your judgement and follow you."

DE NIRO AND GRODIN ON THE RUN

What a team for Midnight Run! Robert De Niro is an ex-cop turned bounty hunter who'll get $100,000 if he can deliver a bail-jumping $15 million embezzler to the L.A.P.D. Charles Grodin is the crook, an accountant who cheated his firm when he found out it was a mob front—and gave the money to charity. And Martin (Beverly Hills Cop) Brest is the director. The stars' acting and acrobatics, as the odd couple is chased cross-country both by the FBI and the mob, made fans of the pros they worked with. "But," says Brest, "there's one scene the film editors and I watched over and over: De Niro is just sitting there chewing on a chicken leg. He wipes his face, eats a spoonful of Jello—thrilling to watch." This we gotta see. Universal.

Twisting his arm for $100,000: Tough guy De Niro (r) with Grodin

When a Woman Fights Back

Shame may be the most powerful movie you see this year. It's about a motorcyclist who rides into a remote Australian town where a group of teenage boys has been harassing and attacking the women and no one is fighting back—mostly because of a boys-will-be-boys attitude on the part of the local men, including the sheriff. The cyclist—tough, decent and very handy in a fight—starts to make trouble for the bad guys and helps a teenage girl stand up for herself... with violent and horrifying consequences. The difference between this and other stranger-comes-to-town stories is that the heroic cyclist is a woman. Couples who see this together won't lack for conversation when it's over. Skouras.

Busy on the Beach

How do you catch a fiddler crab or feed a sea anemone? The same folks who brought you last year's The Bug Book and Bottle have come up with a great new idea: The Beach Book and the Beach Bucket, a tiny, colorfully illustrated guide to more than 30 curious sea creatures, with ideas about finding, catching, feeding and studying them in your own little blue-and-clear-plastic bucket. Workman, $9.95.

ASK MARILYN

BY MARILYN VOS SAVANT

Eddie Adams

Which is safer to play—the stock market or casinos?

—Julian Hammer, Carteret, N.J.

It seems safer to invest in stocks than in chips, because everybody at the company in which you invest wants your stock to go up and is hard at work to make that happen; on the other hand, everybody at the casino wants your number to lose and is hard at work to make that happen. Another way of putting it is that when you play Atlantic City, you bet against the house, but when you play Wall Street, you bet with the house.

Is there any aspect of human behavior or action that produces only advantages or disadvantages?

—Fred Iyasere, Sacramento, Calif.

I have great difficulty finding anything bad in healing the sick, and I have great difficulty finding anything good in wearing high heels.

If you have a question for Marilyn vos Savant, who is listed in the "Guinness Book of World Records" under "Highest IQ," send it to: "Ask Marilyn," PARADE, 750 Third Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017. Because of volume of mail, personal replies are not possible.

Stop the merry-go-round!

Headlines are screaming bloody murder, street noises assault the ear drums, clocks tick away relentlessly. The tension builds. And builds. Inwardly you are shouting, "Stop the merry-go-round, I want to get off." Or as the play of some years ago had it, "Stop the World."

Well, one can't really do that. But what one can do, and what many do do, is take time out to surround oneself with silence and talk to God in prayer. No special formulas are necessary to talk with this Best of friends. But sometimes formulas help us to put into words what we feel in our hearts. So prayer books have their place. We have a book of simple prayers to say alone or with the family. There are the traditional Christian prayers like the Our Father and there are some new prayers for special occasions.

If you would like to share the booklet we take into our pockets of silence, you are welcome to a free copy of Prayer Time. Write today. No one will call on you.

O'Toole vs. O'Toole: Kramer vs. Kramer in Real Life

London Express

London Express

Lorcan O'Toole and parents, Peter and Karen, in London during custody hearings

In 1980, Dustin Hoffman and Meryl Streep earned Oscars for their superb performances in Kramer vs. Kramer, a film dealing with a child-custody case and all the trauma such emotional conflicts breed. Now, almost 10 years later, we're witnessing a quintessential example of life imitating art, as the hell-raising actor Peter O'Toole, 55, battles his former mistress—a tall, well-turned ex-model of 37, Karen Somerville of Navesink, N.J.—for custody of their 5-year-old son, Lorcan.

O'Toole met Somerville in 1982. Subsequently she gave birth to their son and took O'Toole's name without benefit of marriage. The relationship was not a happy one, and in February of this year a New Jersey court ruled that each parent should have custody of the boy for three consecutive months. In his period of custody, O'Toole took Lorcan to London, where the Irish-born actor owns a comfortable home.

It has been alleged, however, that he failed to return the boy at the end of his custody period. Karen thereupon instituted legal proceedings in New Jersey, where a judge ordered O'Toole to send back the boy or face a fine of approximately $1000 a day.

A brainy eccentric, O'Toole—who reportedly vowed never to be separated from his son—had Lorcan declared a ward of the British court, thinking to remove him from the jurisdiction of the New Jersey judiciary. That triggered a flight by Karen to London, where Sir Stephen Brown, president of the Family Division, held hearings in chambers. On May 25, he ruled that it was in "the best interests" of little Lorcan to return to the U.S. with his mother.

As we go to press, Karen is back in New Jersey with her boy and plans to seek permanent custody. She has another son, Morgan, 11, from an affiliation with a land developer, Harry Brown. O'Toole's lawyer, it is understood, is hard at work compiling a dossier on Karen, just in case his client should want to charge her with not being a fit mother for his only son. Peter O'Toole has two daughters—Kate, 28, and Pat, 25—by his first wife, the actress Sian Phillips, who divorced him in 1979. Few people who know him well expect the actor to give up Lorcan without an endless fight, international or otherwise.

Infertility in the U.S.A.

Infertile couples who are interested in having a baby via in vitro fertilization should know that there are about 170 hospitals and clinics in this country offering such programs.

Unfortunately, some of them have failure rates as high as 100%. The average first-time success rate for couples attempting to produce a so-called "test-tube baby" is 6%, and—success or failure—the cost of trying ranges from $4000 to $6000 per cycle.

That particular bit of information was passed on to us by Gary Ellis, director of a task force at the Office of Technology Assessment, a Congressional research agency which recently released a 402-page report titled Infertility: Medical and Social Choices. It is one of the most thorough, up-to-date reports on the subject of infertility in the U.S. and is available at $16 a copy from the Superintendent of Documents, Dept. 36-AW, Washington, D.C. 20402-9325. Herewith a few samples of the data and knowledge it offers:

- An estimated 2 million to 3 million couples in the U.S. are infertile. They want to have babies but, without medical assistance, cannot.
- Between 300,000 and 1 million couples a year solicit medical help to combat infertility. Last year, they spent about $1 billion on physicians and their treatments, trying to have a baby.
- These treatments were basically conservative, involving hormones and surgery, but proved ineffective in about half the cases.
- Which is why a growing number of infertile couples, unsuccessful with conventional therapy, have resorted to "last-chance" in vitro fertilization (IVF), or what is popularly know as the "test-tube" method of conceiving.
- In the IVF method, a woman's eggs are extracted from her ovary, placed in a glass dish in the laboratory, mixed with male sperm and then, after fertilization, deposited in her uterus.
- A variation of the IVF procedure being used by several medical teams bears the acronym GIFT, which stands for gamete intrafallopian transfer. In GIFT, the woman's eggs are removed, mixed with male sperm, then—via catheter—transferred into her fallopian tubes, where, if successful, fertilization takes place. The basic difference between the two procedures is that fertilization takes place in the laboratory in IVF, in the fallopian tubes in GIFT.
- In 1987, there were approximately 14,000 attempts at in vitro fertilization in the U.S.

Sketch highlighting correct tower (arrow)

In our June 5 issue, we ran an architect's drawing depicting additions to the former Texas School Book Depository in Dallas, from the sixth floor of which Lee Harvey Oswald shot to death President John F. Instead of identifying the exterior elevator tower which will carry visitors to an exhibit on the sixth floor of the building, we incorrectly placed an arrow pointing to a tower in the distance. Eileen Ford

A knack for spotting future modeling stars and a sound business sense helped Eileen Ford make her agency one of the best in the world.

EILEEN FORD IS A TRIM, TAUT MOTHER of four who, for more than 40 years, has been in the business of turning pretty young women into magazine covers and making them rich and famous.

Eileen and her husband, Jerry, and three of their four kids, run Ford Models—perhaps the most successful and certainly the best-known model agency in the world. When I sat and talked with them in their East Side Manhattan office building recently, they were about to set off on yet another of their talent sweeps, looking for what they call the next "supermodel."

It's a process of selection rather than search. Every year, the Fords get upward of 100,000 applications; nearly half are from Americans, and 10,000 are from New York alone. "The best models are from the U.S.," said Eileen, "and from all over the States—from Portland, Ore., to Birmingham, Mich." The "look" is always changing. "In 1980," she noted, "dark hair came back, and dark eyes. Now, again, it's blondes."

Perhaps that's why her first stop on this particular talent safari would be Denmark. "Then," she said, "Norway, Sweden, Germany, the U.K., Paris—a day or a day and a half in each city." Everywhere the Fords go, agents and associates have the talent lined up, with photos to look over. A very pretty girl is not necessarily a "supermodel"; the camera has secrets of its own. And the traveling to find the "right" girl is unending; seven trips a year to Europe, four to the West Coast.

When they started the agency, Eileen was pregnant. Jerry, a former football player at Notre Dame, had to support his wife and baby-to-be. "I'd worked at Arnold Constable [a retail store] and for Tobé [a fashion expert] and for two photographers," Eileen said. "There were model agencies, but one of the owners would go to jail, and I thought a different kind of agency was needed—one you could trust."

They've been at it ever since. I asked Eileen who were her best models ever. "Cheryl Tiegs," she began, "Christie Brinkley, Jean Patchett 40 years ago and still beautiful and playing golf, Lauren Hutton, Suzy Parker and her sister, Dorian Leigh." What does she look for? "It's hard to say," Ford answered. "But a classically beautiful girl will always last longest and make the most money." What does she tell a pushy mother? "If I feel a child is hopeless, I say, 'Don't put your child on the stage.' Some parents are obsessed, but most want the truth. One mother told me recently that her daughter was 11, and she didn't want her to work yet. Neither did she want time to pass her by."

Eileen has been a model herself. "The summer of 1941, Mademoiselle magazine wanted real-live college girls," she said, "and I modeled one month." Now Eileen's getting really famous: She's in one of those ads for American Express cards.

BORN: March 25, 1922, in New York City.
PERSONAL: Married Gerard William Ford in 1944; three daughters, one son.
CAREER HIGHLIGHTS: Stylist for William Becker Studio, 1945; copywriter at Arnold Constable, 1945-46; fashion reporter for Tobé Reports, 1946; co-founder of Ford Model Agency, 1946.
BOOKS: Include Eileen Ford's Book of Model Beauty, 1968; Secrets of the Model's World, 1970; A More Beautiful You in 21 Days, 1972; The Ford Model's Crash Course in Looking Great, 1985.

Eddie Adams

This year's "supermodels" will compete for a contract with Eileen Ford's agency in a two-hour special, with Dick Clark. The top winner gets $250,000 and a diamond necklace.

BRADY'S BITS

Eileen Ford says the days of "couch casting" models are over. "No one wants to lose an account over a girl," she says. That doesn't mean she isn't careful. "I give them my uplifting message, tell them they have to exercise, how to get along in New York, tell them about drugs, about suitors." Each year, a few girls (seven at the moment) actually live with the Fords. "We have dinner together, and we know when they come in. We have a creaky old staircase and a couple of dogs from The Humane Society. Sure, there's a problem sometimes. But we've raised four of our own. There is nothing [the models] can do that hasn't been done by our own, no plot they can hatch."

THE COLFAXES TAUGHT THEIR SONS AT HOME...

Ed Kashi

David and Micki Colfax with their two adopted sons, Garth (l) and Reed.

Now They're At Harvard

How one California family used home-schooling to foster independence, responsibility—and academic success

BY MICHAEL RYAN

It WAS A BRIGHT, WARM February day, and most of the 12-year-olds in Boonville, Calif., were probably sitting in an overheated classroom, squirming in their seats. But Garth Colfax, the youngest of four sons at a homestead in the hills outside town, was fertilizing some trees, tending the lambs and generally having a good time. No truant officer was looking for him, either: Garth's home is his school. Like his three brothers—Grant, Drew and Reed—before him, he is learning from his parents, from books in the home library and from the world around him. That might make Garth sound educationally deprived, but don't worry too much about his future.

His three home-schooled brothers all got into Harvard.

"It wasn't that we were pushed out of the schools," David Colfax, Garth's father, explains. "It's more that we were pulled to what we could do better up here than the schools could. There's a lot more to do here, to learn and be responsible for, than you could ever find in a school. It's no contest."

Colfax and his wife, Micki, turned to home-schooling 15 years ago, almost by accident. David, a sociologist, was denied tenure at Washington University in St. Louis. The professors' union challenged the decision, and David won a cash settlement. The family decided to take the settlement money, find a piece of land and make a stab at being self-sufficient. The Colfaxes soon concluded that meant not just building their own house and growing their own food, but doing their own schooling too.

"If there had been an outstanding local school, where we could have had a real input or trusted the people involved, we might very well have gone that route," David Colfax says. "But the school system here just didn't deliver. A lot of parents were sending their kids 25 miles over the hills, to the school in Ukiah. We decided on home-schooling."

The day I come calling is a typical school day—typically unstructured, that is. David is tending to some chores; Micki is laid up with a tooth infection; Garth is on his own, unsupervised. "Sometimes you do schoolwork eight hours a day, and other days you work outdoors," David explains. "On a day like today, where I'm busy and Micki is sick, we let the boys do what they want. Later, I'll ask them, 'What did you do?' and I might say, 'You better pick up on this or that.' If it were raining, they might be more dug into the books." That may sound anarchic, but life on a self-sustaining homestead doesn't allow for much anarchy. "All of us are obviously motivated," says Drew Colfax, 20, a bioanthropology major at Harvard.

Allowing the kids independence and responsibility has produced some amazing results. Grant, 23, may have been the only magna cum laude graduate of his Harvard class who raised his own 4-H Club steer. When Drew was 12, he built his own telescope. When Reed, 18, tries out for next year's freshman cross-country team, he may be Harvard's only self-trained runner. (Lest you think that the Colfax children have some kind of genetic superiority, consider that Reed and Garth are adopted.)

Educators often raise two objections to home-schooling: that it deprives children of the chance to interact with others and that no home-school can possibly have the resources a traditional school offers. "When they say the function of the school is to socialize instead of to educate, they've already lost the argument," David Colfax snorts. Drew rejects that as well: "We weren't exactly withdrawn from all social contact," he says.

As for resources, the young man who built his own telescope says, "If we had any sort of interest, if we didn't already have the materials, we would get them. We have a large library, we had resources right at the house, and we went to the public library quite often."

David and Micki Colfax—herself a former high school teacher—say you needn't be professional educators to teach your children at home. They have written a book, Homeschooling for Excellence (out in October from Warner Books), that describes their experience and offers pointers. But they are not content merely to criticize public schools; they are working to change them as well. David has been elected to the school board. "I could certainly envision a public school I would be willing to send my kids to," he says. Now he's trying to help create one.

After an afternoon of moving around in the background, Garth comes in to report on his activities. He read for a while, he says, then worked in the garden. He made himself some lunch and tended to the animals. "We've got to tag the lambs, David," he reports. Then David and Garth pile into the car to go into town and fetch some hay.

It's just another typical day at school.

Frog Murders Bass

So Many Giant Catches, He Holds the Guinness World Record For Largemouth Bass Caught In One Season – An Amazing 3,001 in Just 77 Furious Days of Fishing

BY DAVE ROMEO – Guinness Record Holder

A frog lure discovered by Dave Romeo catches such giant bass for him...so many bass, so often...so fast, he recommends it for experts ... average fishermen ... beginners ... even children ... it murders bass. Here's how it can for you.

The Secret Of Catching Bass

For 22 years Dave Romeo fished bass the hard way ...but studied their habits... how they love weeds...and devour every frog they can get.

Dave tested simulated frogs of every color, shape, size and material he could find ... but even perfect replicas when motionless were so unnatural in water, they proved useless.

Then he found the answer. A fishing lure manufacturer, Harrison Hoge, had combined a synthetic rubber frog body and long trailing triple-jointed legs, with a weed-protected hook. This frog changed Dave's life and can yours. Here's how.

Twitches Of Rod Drive Bass Crazy

Dave rushed with his new frog and his weedless hook to the nearest weed covered lake. Once cast, the frog sat with just its eyes above water. When Dave twitched the rod tip, the frog's legs kicked backward in exact imitation of the real thing.

Before Dave could give a second twitch, something green, black and white struck to get at the frog...Scratch one bass.

Here was excitement, with this surface lure he could see everything – the frog, the fish leaping, the splashing, the strike...a lure that looked, acted, moved so naturally that it proved irresistable to bass. Dave could make it sit motionless ... move s-l-o-w or fast, or with a twitch of rod tip make it look frightened, hurt, and move the lure through heart of weed "jungles" as easily as if it lived there.

Harrison Hoge, the fish lure people, had done their work well. They sculptured one body after another out of synthetic rubber to get the precise shape, size and weight for perfect casting ... solved the problems of action and buoyancy.

Frog Irresistible To Bass

Dave can show anyone in five minutes how to use the rod with this frog. "You have to think like a frog, surrounded by bass, scared, and twitching with erratic movements ... cast your frog in water and let it lie a few seconds...then a quick dart to a nearby lily pad, stump, or in thick weeds where the huge bass hide... then a slowdown and struggle in water – and the bass will strike without caution. Once bass hits your frog, wait about three seconds before setting the hook. Now just hold on for one of the greatest thrills of your life!" You'll boat and release bass after bass.

Why Frog Casts Safely Into Thickest Weeds

1. New plastic weed guard completely shields hook point...nothing to get hung on.
2. Rugged, plastic guard "hops" frog over stumps and branches.
3. Clear plastic guard deflects instantly during strike ... does not interfere with hooking.

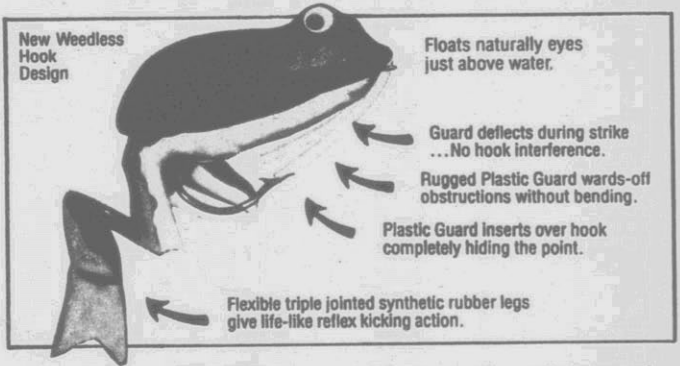
Impressive Credentials

1. His Guinesss World Record has stood since 1984.
2. In past 5 years, Dave caught and released 5,000 largemouth bass.
3. Since 1982, Dave painstakingly recorded data on every bass he's caught. His reputation for accuracy highest in fishing fraternity.
4. Articles on Dave in Outdoor Life, Fins and Feathers, Cast, and has appeared on numerous TV shows.
5. Fishermen rely on Dave's "Better Bass Fishing" book to catch largemouths using his methods.

Catches Bass Twice As big

Dave Romeo using frog below now catches bass like lunkers shown... on average twice as big as before.



One Fisherman Tells Another

"Most fishermen don't like to risk expensive lure in thick weeds, but with the Harrison Hoge frog lure you can go anywhere."

Dave remembers an early instance when "The Frog taught me it was the best all-around surface lure I had ever used." "Harrison Hoge's Frog lures superior to any on the market."

Dave was asked to select his three personal favorite Harrison Hoge frog lures (offered in coupon below.) "There's a 3/8 oz. Green Frog with White Belly that's so real it even fools other bullfrogs ... a 3/8 oz. All-Black Frog when cover is so thick bass might have trouble seeing a green frog ... and a 1/4 oz. Green Frog with Yellow Belly for those who like to take lunkers with light tackle."

What This Means To You

Now you can fish into center of weeds... over submerged logs, through matted bush, in underwater thickets, through weeds, grass, pads...make frog crawl... race...dive...sit motionless...dart away – use obstacles to help you that used to hurt you. Now you can catch bass as never before...bigger bass, more often.

Amazing Trial Offer

Try Dave's favorite lures at our risk. Fish in the worst weed trap areas you know...where bass has been caught but you've been skunked ... over logs, around rocks, through matted weeds. Unless delighted, return for no cost. You must catch more bass, bigger bass, more different kinds of game fish, more often ... must have more fun...or no cost.

First Come, First Served

Cover Story....

The Democratic National Convention

By Robert DiMatteo

As NBC, CBS, ABC, CNN and C-SPAN brace themselves to offer unstinting coverage of this year's Democratic National Convention in Atlanta (Monday, July 18 through Thursday, July 21), we voter-viewers brace ourselves to overload on electronically generated minutiae — absorbing the tiniest details of a nomination/election process that has become a never-ending media venture.

We don't need "Tanner, '88," HBO's brilliant Robert Altman-Garry Trudeau mock-documentary about presidential politicking, to tell us that media is what the election process is now all about. That awareness is etched into every telegenic candidate's nervously smiling face, as he or she dodges one more telegenic TV reporter's question. That awareness will fill the convention this week, as Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis receives the pre-ordained endorsement of his party, and galvanic upstart Jesse Jackson presumably offers up his supporters in exchange for future favors.

This time, the Democrats are taking a high-tech tack — employing state-of- Do you want gavel-to-gavel coverage — like in the old days before TV news began to seem an only partially disguised branch of the entertainment division?

Then join anchors Bernard Shaw and Mary Alice Williams on Cable News Network, for what looks to be the most comprehensive coverage this year. With its own network headquarters a few blocks away in Atlanta, CNN certainly has had a head start on the Democratic doings there. Also going gavel-to-gavel will be C-SPAN, that invaluable basic-cable service devoted to showing us the daily workings of our government.

The Big Three networks, meanwhile, will program the majority of their reportage in the 9-11 p.m. (ET) prime-time block. Pushing innovation the loudest may be NBC News President Lawrence Grossman, who touts his network's "town meeting format on a national scale." What this would seem to amount to is a series of pre-planned two-way discussions and debates. NBC may take us via satellite to a police precinct, for a talk with officials in drug enforcement and treatment. Then it will whisk us back to the convention floor to chat with party members working on the platform plank on drugs. Helming NBC's overall coverage are solid anchor Tom Brokaw, gentlemanly commentator John Chancellor and podium correspondent Connie Chung.

CBS claims its coverage will explain the convention to the "average" viewer — a new egalitarian posture for the so-called "Tiffany network." CBS kicks off with a one-hour special on Sunday,July 17, hosted by the increasingly dour anchor Dan Rather. Throughout the week, the cool-headed Diane Sawyer will be at the podium, while the sharp-minded William Safire, Roger Rosenblatt and Charles Kuralt provide commentary.

ABC's strong suit is straightforward, incisive analysis, represented this year by anchor Peter Jennings and the ever-scrappy Sam Donaldson, Lynn Scherr, Brit Hume and Jeff Greenfield on the floor. Ted Koppel's precise role in ABC's coverage was not pinned down at press time.

Frank Deford

Writer Frank Deford has signed a contract to continue as a commentator on NBC's NFL broadcasts. He also will serve as a commentator during the network's coverage of the Seoul Olympics. A staff writer for Sports Illustrated, Deford also has written four novels and the Christopher Award-winning "Alex: The Life of a Child," an account of his daughter's struggle with cystic fibrosis. That book was adapted for a TV movie. He joined NBC as an NFL commentator in 1986.

Michele Will Tell

Dear Michele: I've just seen "Platoon" on video, and would like some information about Willem Dafoe, who played Sgt. Elias. I don't think I've seen him in movies before. Was "Platoon" his first? — T.LYND, SHEBOYGAN, WISC.

"Platoon" was not Dafoe's first big-screen venture, but it certainly garnered him more press and exposure than his other outings, plus an Oscar nomination to boot! The actor first entered films as a bit player, appearing in "The Loveless" and "The Hunger," both released in 1983. In 1984, he portrayed the villainous Raven in "Streets of Fire." Next was his masterful performance as the demonic Rick Masters in "To Live and Die in L.A." (1985).

The actor, born July 22, 1955, was named after his father, William Dafoe, an Appleton, Wis., surgeon. Willem was an adolescent nickname that stuck. Dafoe hails from a large family comprised ofprofessionals, including doctors, lawyers and nurses. He is the lone actor in the bunch. In 1977, he moved to New York and joined an avant-garde theater group. Today, he continues to be actively involved with the Wooster Group, and is at his happiest interspersing film roles with off-Broadway stage work.

Dear Michele: Last year, I read a lot about Diana Ross expecting her fourth child. However, I've never read about the outcome. Did she have her baby, and was it a boy or a girl? — HELEN SANCHEZ, SANTA FE, N.M.

Ross gave birth to her first son, 8-pound, 7-ounce Ross Arne Naess, on Oct. 7, 1987. The baby's father is Norwegian shipping magnate Arne Naess Jr., whom Ross first wed in a New York City civil ceremony in October 1985 prior to their lavish Swiss church ceremony four months later. The former Supreme has three daughters from her first, six-year marriage to public relations exec/music manager Bob Silberstein.

Dear Michele: Please settle a bet. Was Burt Reynolds married to Dinah Shore? — DONNA CRUZ, EAST CHICAGO, IND.

Reynolds' 1963 marriage to actress Judy Carne was his first. Although he has frequently been quoted as saying the union "lasted about an hour and a half," the couple actually split aftertwo years. The divorce left him gunshy, and though his romantic liaisons with Dinah Shore and Sally Field were serious, Reynolds remained an elusive bridegroom. This past May, Loni Anderson changed all that. After a six-year courtship, Burt and Loni said their "I do's" in a 20-minute ceremony at his ranch in Jupiter, Fla. The affair was hosted and choreographed by the groom himself. It's Burt's second marriage and Loni's third.

Dear Michele: In the late 1950s and early 1960s, there was a Western TV series that starred Richard Egan as a ranch foreman, and Ryan O'Neal and Terry Moore as a brother and sister on that ranch. Can you tell me the name of the series, what year it began, and how many years it aired? — MARLENE D. MEYERS, BAKERSFIELD, CALIF.

The series you're thinking of is "Empire," which aired from Sept. 25, 1962 to Sept. 17, 1963, on NBC. The series revolved around the half-million acre Garrett Ranch in Santa Fe, N.M., and its foreman Jim Redigo, portrayed by the late Richard Egan. Anne Seymour appeared as ranch owner Lucia Garrett, with Terry Moore and Ryan O'Neal as her children Connie and Tal, respectively. Before he hit it big in movies, Charles Bronson appeared on the series as ranch hand Paul Moreno. A short-lived spinoff, "Redigo," with Egan still in the title role (minus the rest of the cast), aired for 13 weeks in 1963 on NBC.

Dear Michele: I know that Donna Reed died in 1986, but I would like some information about her marriages and her children. — ELLEN CARFREY, ABINGTON, PENN.

Reed was married three times. Her first marriage to makeup man William Tuttle lasted from 1943-45. In 1945, she married producer Tony Owen, with whom she had two children, daughter Mary Ann (1948) and son Timothy (1950). Daughter Penny (1947) and son Tony Jr. (1949) were adopted. Owen and Reed divorced in 1972, and in 1974 she married Col. Grover Asmus, a senior aide to Gen. OmarBradley. The couple remained happily married until Reed's death on Jan. 14, 1986.

DICKIE ROOK

BARBECUE STAINS

This is the time for backyard barbecues, easy living and fun. But as much as we enjoy summer time, it is a difficult time for your clothes. The food is covered with delicious barbecue sauce, but no matter how careful you are, some of the sauce or mustard from your hot dogs will always find its way to the center of your shirt or blouse. What can be done about these stains?

Have them cleaned promptly. Do not allow the stains to remain on the garments. Stains are easier to remove when fresh, especially mustard.

Many garments can be damaged by home stain removal attempts. We at A CLEANER WORLD have the knowledge and facilities to remove the stains safely. We will take good care of your clothes. Do not worry about stains and enjoy your summer barbecues.

We repair and alter garments: God repairs and alters lives.

TV Chatter

Michael Learned says she didn't have to do any research to play a psychiatrist pursued by a younger man (played by Art Malik of "Jewel in the Crown" fame) on ABC's summer series "Hothouse.""I've been in therapy for the past 20 years, and I'm married to a man eight years younger than I am. That was my research," says the 49-year-old actress best known as Mother Walton on the long-running '70s series. "Hothouse" takes place in a family-operated psychiatric hospital outside Boston. Passion seems to take precedence over psychoanalysis there, but Learned rejects the suggestion that "Hothouse" is "Dynasty in Therapy." "I think the writing is a little better."

Learned hopes her role as the sophisticated Dr. Marie Teller will help dispel her image as the down-home Olivia Walton, which she confesses has typecast her ever since "The Waltons" went offthe air. "I'm much closer to Marie Teller than Olivia Walton. I don't know if I'd like to do a 'Waltons' reunion show. I sure would like to see all the cast, but it's been hard to break that image.After the show went off the air, I got all these scripts playing rural mothers, always women 10-15 years older than I am. People must think I'm in my 70s by now!"

We caught up with Barry Bostwick as he was exiting the ABC affiliates meeting in Los Angeles, where station managers had just seen a 13-minute clip of the 30-hour miniseries "War and Remembrance." Bostwick was bowled over by the enthusiastic reaction to the "Winds of War" sequel. "If the audience gets that excited by a 13-minute segment, I have a feeling the audience as a whole will feel that way about the whole thing. I've heard nothing but raves about it from people at the network, agents, people who didn't necessarily have to rave about it," says Bostwick, who plays a World War II submarine captain.

Although she adores her young co-stars on "The Hogan Family," Sandy Duncan says she has no plans to invite her own two sons, Jeffrey and Mikey, both 5, to join their mother on the boards. "I'm not going to bring the matter up," she says of her sons' future thespian careers. "But if they asked or showed any interest, I would encourage them to do anything they're interested in. You support a child in anything he's interested in. People all the time say (the boys) are so cute they should do commercials. But I don't like the way they treat kids on the set. That's my opinion, but thank God other people don't feel that way or we wouldn't have TV sitcoms or wonderful child actors. But it's all so much hard work, and I want my kids to be kids. It's unnatural to be on the set all day."

Soap Scoop

Arleen Sorkin signs an enviable contract

By Connie Passalacqua

Arleen Sorkin

Just before the Daytime Emmys, Arleen Sorkin (who plays Calliope Bradford on "Days of Our Lives") announced that she has signed an agreement with NBC to produce and star in her own soap. The soap will be a spinoff starring the kooky Calliope.

Wow! This isn't the first time a soap has been been spun off from another ("Another World" begat both "Somerset" in 1970, and "Texas" in 1980), nor is this the first time a character has been spun off from one show to another ("Another World" characters traveled from Bay City to both "Somerset" and "Texas"). But this is the first time in soap history that a performer has ever signed such a production deal.

Sorkin, of course, is about as different from airhead Calliope as it is possible to be. A former member of the sophisticated New York City satirical group The High Heeled Women, Sorkin has been doing a lot more in her last four years in Hollywood than just working on the soap.

She co-produced "From Here to Maternity," a spoof on pregnancy based on a book by The High Heeled Women, that aired on Cinemax and co-starred Lauren Hutton and Carrie Fisher; and produced an HBO special for her friend Paul Reiser (who plays Michael Taylor in the NBC sitcom "My Two Dads").

• To celebrate its fifth anniversary, "Loving" had a lovely reception in the lounge of its studio. The only problem was that many of the press invitees had no idea where the studio was. In fact, only one or two had ever been over to the 3-year-old studio "Loving" shares with "Ryan's Hope." Talk about keeping a low profile!

The most surprising guest at the party, which was held during the thick of the writers' strike, was the show's co-creator and head writer Agnes Nixon. Even more shocking was Nixon's casual reply when she was asked what she was doing with her free time. "Well, I've been very busy," she said. "Writing. I'm not a member of the Writers' Guild, you know. Years ago, Irna (Irna Phillips, the creator of such soaps as "As the World Turns," "Guiding Light" and "Another World") and I signed some special agreements (with the networks)."

Mouths were agape. Soapdom's most pre-eminent writer has been working throughout the strike!

Sports Roundup

SUNDAY, JULY 17

PGA Golf (ABC)

The British Open, third round from Royal Lytham and Saint Anne's Golf Club, Lancashire, England. Paul Azinger, last year's PGA Player of the Year, had his first major victory in his hands atlast year's British Open. It was his to lose, and lose it he did. As a result, steady Nicky Faldo brought the silver trophy back home to England. Of course, last year's British Open was fog-enshrouded and drizzle-plagued. Aren't they all? But it wasn't the weather that did in Azinger. It was a mental error — poor club selection — that led him into bogeys on the last two holes in the last round at Muirfield.

Track and Field (ABC)

U.S. Olympic Track and Field Trials.

Auto Racing (NBC)

CART Indy-Toronto, from Exhibition Place, Toronto, Canada.

Cycling (CBS)

Tour de France coverage continues.

FRIDAY, JULY 22

Tennis (ESPN)

U.S. at Argentina in Davis Cup Zonal Finals, Singles Matches A & B. After last year's Humiliation in Hartford, when the West Germans sent the U.S. back to the "minor leagues" of Davis Cupplay, the U.S. has fought back with excellent play by youngsters Andre Agassi and Jay Berger. Nobody told these guys they were supposed to be cowed by noisy foreign crowds, so they weren't.

SATURDAY, JULY 23

Women's Golf (ABC)

Women's U.S. Open, third round from Baltimore Country Club, Baltimore, Md. This year's host club for the Women's U.S. Open is a test of golfing skill. Designed by A.W. Tillinghast, one of the creative geniuses of golf course architecture, Baltimore is neither overly long nor heavily bunkered. But it is hilly, with slick greens calculated to have the golfers tearing their hair out.

Baseball (NBC)

Montreal Expos at Cincinnati Reds or San Francisco Giants at St. Louis Cardinals. Montreal sputtered all through the first half of the season, struggling along around .500. The one major bright spot has been the emergence of Andres Galarraga at first base. Galarraga has been hitting well over .300 with power all year. More than that, he is turning into a Gold Glove fielder. The Reds have several young phenoms of their own, of course. Chris Sabo displaced Buddy Bell so completely at third that Cincy could afford to trade him to Houston. Rookie pitcher Jack Armstrong came up before the All-Star break and seems to be ready to take on the NL's hitters.

Speaking of fielding, what happened to St. Louis? In their first 68 games, the Cardinals turned the fewest double plays, 54, in the National League. Last year, they were ranked second in the league in twin killings, behind San Francisco.

Boxing (CBS)

Rocky Lockridge vs. Tony Lopez in an IBF junior lightweight title fight, scheduled for 12 rounds. Lockridge is probably on the downside of his career, having taken a lot of punches in the last few years, but he always puts on a great show.

Olympic Trials (ABC)

U.S. Olympic Track and Field Trials and Boxing team box-offs.

PGA Golf (CBS)

Greater Hartford Open, third round live from TPC of Connecticut, Cromwell, Conn.

The Cavanaughs

"The Cavanaughs," a half-hour drama series that first aired in 1986, will return to prime time in August on CBS. The series, which stars Barnard Hughes and Christine Ebersole as members of an Irish Catholic family living in Boston, will air new episodes beginning on Aug. 8. Also that night, "Newhart," which has aired at 9 p.m. Eastern time since its 1984 debut, will begin to air an hourearlier.

Golf's British Open Reaches Its Final Round

By Marty Linehan

With the baseball season starting the second half of its 1988 season and basketball finally enjoying its annual hiatus, let's concentrate on golf. On Sunday, July 17, ABC airs the final round of the prestigious British Open golf tournament from Royal Lytham and Saint Anne's Golf Club in Lancashire, England.

Last year, the British Open was won by England's Nick Faldo, who shot 18 consecutive pars in the final round to cop his first major victory at the foggy and drizzly Muirfield. Faldo was helped when Paul Azinger, last year's PGA Player of the Year, picked up two bogeys on the final two holes.

* Still on the links, ESPN will televise the first two rounds of the Women's U.S. Open from the Baltimore Country Club in Baltimore, Md., on Thursday and Friday, July 21 and 22. The final two rounds will be presented by ABC, whose coverage begins Saturday, July 23.

* On Saturday, July 23, the Greater Hartford Open airs from the Tournament Players Club in Cromwell, Conn. You thought maybe it would be held in Hartford?

* For adventure fans, ABC has rafting in Siberia on Sunday, July 17. It's a joint U.S.-Soviet rafting expedition into the Altai region of Siberia. This a place never filmed by outsiders and never even seen by Westerners. The trip also visits the Bashkaus River, another former no-no place.

* On July 17 and 23, ABC televises the U.S. Olympic Track and Field Trials.

* CBS covers the on-going Tour de France bicycle race on July 17.

* On Friday, July 22, ESPN's tennis fans can watch Argentina host the United States in Davis Cup Zonal Finals singles games. The U.S. team, featuring younger players such as Andre Agassi and Jay Berger, has fought back since the West Germans murdered them last year.

Aldridge & Southerland Realtors

Speaking Out About Aldridge and Southerland:

"Jeff Boswell has been our agent in our efforts to sell our home, and we felt you should know how much we have enjoyed working with him. He has kept us informed of the results of all showings and has never "lost" us among his listings. He has a very pleasant personality, and his honesty invoked complete confidence. He has been very innovative, and has even spent his own money on a new method for marketing our home. His positive attitude and his total commitment certainly helped us during a stressful time. We recommend Jeff to anyone that requires a realtor without hesitation."

- Dan and Anne D'Amico

"Jeff, in his first full year in the real estate business, had over 1.5 million dollars in sales volume. He is on course this year to exceed 2 million in sales. Testimonial letters from satisfied clients indicate the outstanding job Jeff has done helping people buy or sell homes. If working with an established professional is important to you, call Jeff."

-Mike Aldridge

"I chose Aldridge & Southerland because of their long-standing commitment to the real estate profession, and because of their commitment to the education and success of their agents. There is a great need for continuing education as the real estate profession becomes increasingly complex. At Aldridge & Southerland, courses in continuing education which lead to GRI and CRS designations are encouraged and paid for by the company. That's the type of commitment I was looking for."

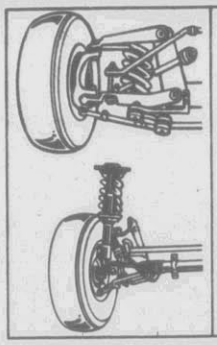
RADIAL TUNED a great ride on all tires!

People trust us to sell and install 15,000 shocks and struts a day nation wide!



SHOCKS OR STRUTS which do you have?

In many of today's rear and front wheel drive cars, struts act as shock absorbers and part of the frame support system. Thus they are larger and more costly than conventional shocks.

Conventional shock absorbers are the traditional bump—dampening product on many cars and trucks. They improve ride comfort and handling by keeping tires on the road.

Why You Need The All-New Protection Plus Hospital Plan

Hospital care today is very expensive. It's a fact of life. If you've been in the hospital lately, you already know this.

But, if you've been lucky and haven't had to be hospitalized, the cost of hospitalization could take you by surprise. That's why you should consider these startling facts.

- An average hospital stay now costs over $3,200.00.
- Over 99,000 people are admitted to the hospital each day—365 days a year.
- One family in every two will be faced with hospital bills this year.

These statistics from the American Hospital Association show just how common and how expensive hospital stays are.

Of course, you may have a good major medical or group plan already working for you.

But—even the best plans pay only 80% or less of your hospital bills—after you have paid deductibles of $100 or more. That means the rest is totally up to you.

Think about it. If you were hospitalized tomorrow, would you be able to pay your share of the bill?

Or would you have to dip into your hard-earned savings? Or worse yet, borrow the money?

That's why so many people have turned to the Protection Plus Hospital Plan. It pays cash benefits directly to you—or anyone you choose.

You can use the additional cash you receive from Protection Plus to pay the hospital, the doctor, left-over bills, or even household expenses. The money is yours to spend as you wish!

When you enroll in the Protection Plus Plan you are joining over a million Americans who are enjoying security and peace of mind with Physicians Mutual protection plans.

And that's why we say:

We're here when you need us

I received this letter from one of our policyowners recently and would like to share it with you.
Arnold W. Lempka, M.D.
Chairman, Board of Directors

Dear Dr. Lempka,

For many years my wife and I have been proud and satisfied owners in Physicians Mutual.

Any and all benefits have been paid promptly and correctly.

When those benefit checks arrive with those assuring words, "We are happy to be of service" ... how sweet it is!

I suspect there are some things more painful than being without insurance coverage from a company as good as yours, but at the moment, I can't think what it could be!

Cordially yours,

Edward J. Bryant

Here's How The All-New Protection Plus Hospital Plan Helps You Beat The Rising Cost Of Hospital Care

These Cash Benefits Will Be Paid Directly To You

$2,250.00 A Month—$75.00 A Day
For Any Covered Sickness Or Injury
You'll collect these cash benefits whenever you are hospitalized for any reason—even a simple checkup.

$3,375.00 A Month—$112.50 A Day
For Cancer Or A Heart Attack
Your cash benefits will increase by 50% when you are hospitalized for cancer (including leukemia and Hodgkin's disease) or a heart attack (acute myocardial infarction).

$9,000.00 A Month—$300.00 A Day
Double Benefits For You And Your Spouse
Protection Plus pays you and your insured spouse DOUBLE BENEFITS when you both are in the hospital due to the same, or different accidents.

A Special Note To People 65 & Over
Pays Benefits In Addition To Medicare
Protection Plus provides important extra help for people with Medicare.

During the first 60 days of hospitalization, Medicare pays most of the hospital costs. That's why Protection Plus pays half benefits during this time. After 60 days—when Medicare coverage reduces—you'll begin receiving full cash benefits for as long as you stay—even for life!

With Protection Plus, you don't have to pay for protection you don't really need. And you don't have to join an association or pay membership dues to get it. Your acceptance is guaranteed regardless of age.

You'll receive copies of the North Carolina Buyer's Guides with your policy. If you wish to have the Guides before you enroll, you may request them from the company.

You Also Get All These Special Features

- Protection From The Very First Day
  Your cash benefits are paid from the VERY FIRST DAY of any covered hospital stay. No deductible.
- Benefits For A Lifetime
  Your cash benefits are paid for EVERY DAY of covered hospitalization. No matter how many days you're hospitalized, or how many times. Even for life!
- You'll Collect Cash Benefits On Top Of Any Insurance
  That includes group insurance, major medical coverage, worker's compensation, prepaid health plans—even Medicare. And your benefits are not subject to state or Federal income tax.
- Money To Spend As You Choose
  Your checks will come directly to you, unless you tell us otherwise. These cash benefits are yours to use in any way you wish.
- Full Benefits For The Whole Family
  Your insured spouse and children will receive the very same protection you have. One rate provides full coverage for all—regardless of your family size.
- Pays Maternity Benefits, Too
  You'll collect full benefits for normal childbirth when pregnancy occurs anytime after your policy is issued. And at no extra cost.
- Freedom Of Choice
  Your Protection Plus coverage is good at any hospital, anywhere in the world—even federal and VA hospitals. The only exceptions are nursing homes, convalescent, extended care or self-care units of hospitals.
- Return Of Premiums For Accidental Death
  Here's an added feature. Should you die in a covered accident, your beneficiary will receive the total premiums you've paid into the policy up to $10,000.00.

  In addition, you and all insured family members are covered with an automatic $1,000.00 accidental death benefit.
- Quick, Convenient Cash Payments
  Your claims will be settled promptly—and your benefit checks will be sent to you by first class mail.
- Please Note These Limitations
  Old health problems (those that became evident or were treated before the effective date of your policy) are not covered for the first year of your policy. But once that year is up, even a health problem you've had for years is covered!

  If you are 65 or over you will be covered for cancer, heart attack, stroke, hernia, disease or disorder of the prostate, tuberculosis, cataracts, emphysema, cirrhosis or diabetes if your hospital confinement commences more than six months after the effective date of your policy.

  For confinement due to mental illness, half benefits are paid for up to 30 days.
- No Salesman Will Call
  We believe the Protection Plus Hospital Plan is good enough to sell itself. That's why you won't have to deal with a salesman to enroll. Everything is handled directly between you and Physicians Mutual.
- Enroll Today For Just $1.00! Your Acceptance Is Guaranteed
  Simply fill out the brief enrollment form and mail it back to Physicians Mutual along with $1.00 for your first month's coverage. There is no medical exam required, or health questions to answer. Your acceptance is guaranteed!

Money-Back Guarantee

Your easy-to-read policy (P500 Series) will come to you by first class mail. When it arrives, take a few moments to look it over.

Then, if you feel your Protection Plus Hospital Plan isn't every bit as good as we've said, simply mail it back within 30 days. We will promptly refund your money—no questions asked.

The Protection Plus Hospital Plan Gives You The Best Value At The Lowest Rates Possible

Still Available At Reduced Rates

While the price of nearly everything else is on the rise, the cost of Protection Plus coverage is actually lower than it was 5 years ago!

When you compare that with a nearly 60% increase in the average cost of a hospital stay in the same time period,* you'll see just how economical and how valuable this protection really is.

What's more, you'll be happy to know that low premium will stay low, too — because you're GUARANTEED never to be singled out for a rate increase.

And the value doesn't stop there. When you pay once a year, instead of once a month, you'll save over 8%. That's like getting one month of protection free.
