Welcome Rain Comes As A Blessing To Crops

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

When it comes to crops in Pitt County, tobacco and late maturing corn will benefit most from today's rain, said an Agricultural Extension agent.

"I think it comes at an important time, at a critical time for our tobacco crops," Mitch Smith said.

The upper stalk of the tobacco has yet to develop, and the rain will aid that process, he said. The upper stalk carries about 30 percent of the weight of the crop, and "without adequate moisture that weight would not develop."

While the critical period for soybeans and peanuts is not due for another two or three weeks, "some of the later maturing corn varieties will benefit from the rain," Smith said.

The cooler weather accompanying the rain also benefits the county's livestock, several producers said.

"It allows the birds to consume more feed which in turn would boost egg producation," Jerry Potter of the Gene Paramore Egg Farm in Grimesland, said.

High temperatures decrease feed intake and result in a smaller egg size and a decrease egg production, he said. Fans and fogging systems installed in the chicken houses help combat the hot temperatures of summer.

"That's about all you can do and let nature take its course," Potter said.

Pigs at Thomas Strickland's Hog Operation in Farmville were doing better this morning due to the cooler temperatures.

In hot humid weather, Strickland said he gets only about 50 percent conception from the boars and sows, and a lot of pigs are lost to fever.

Like Potter, Strickland uses fans and sprinklers to keep the livestock cool.

Hot weather puts a strain on the respiratory system of turkeys, Eric Peirce of Robert Pierce Farm in Farmville, said.

But, with today's temperatures, "they're doing a lot better," he said.

According to the Greenville Utilities water plant, 1.01 inches of rain fell from 8 a.m. Thursday to the same time this morning.

Forecasters say the rain is expected to continue through today and Saturday. Temperatures will range in the mid 80s.

Iran: Iraq Dropped Chemical Bombs

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran accused Iraq today of dropping chemical bombs on two villages in western Iran and occupying Iranian territory just as U.N. officials prepared to mediate peace talks between the Persian Gulf enemies.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency said Iraqi forces were occupying the Iranian border towns of Khosrawi, Qasr-e Shirin and Sar-e Pol Zahab in the central sector of the front.

"The battle is still raging in the area," IRNA said.

The towns are about 110 miles northeast of the Iraqi capital of Baghdad, and Sar-e Pol Zahab is 12 miles from the border.

IRNA said "tens of civilians" were wounded when Iraq bombed two of the towns with chemical weapons, but it did not specify which two. There was no immediate comment from Iraq. The war broke out in September 1980 when Iraqi troops went through the border crossing at Qasr-e Shirin.

An earlier IRNA report, monitored in Nicosia, said, "Iran's Moslem combatants are reportedly engaged in ongoing fighting with the enemy troops and have inflicted heavy losses and casualties on the aggressor Iraqis."

On Thursday, the official Iraqi News Agency said Iraqi troops were "purging Iraqi border peaks of the filth of enemies."

ATLANTA (AP) — Michael Dukakis and Lloyd Bentsen chose a gathering of Jesse Jackson's supporters today for their first post-convention appearance, with Dukakis praising Jackson and talking of his and Bentsen's own civil rights experiences.

Dukakis told the group, including many Jackson delegates disappointed that he is not on the Democratic ticket for the election, "We're going to need you. We want you. We can't win without you."

The presidential nominee recalled the civil rights struggle and spoke of his own experience traveling to Washington, D.C., in 1953 and seeing "Jim Crow" segregation.

He pointed to his running mate and said that as a Texas congressman Bentsen had voted in 1948 to kill the poll tax that was used to deny voting rights to blacks.

Jackson told the group that Dukakis "deserves to become the next president of the United States."

Dukakis, who was heading to Texas later today with Bentsen to begin the fall campaign, told the Jackson supporters, "We have 110 days, and I hope we can enlist every single one of you in this cause."

Thursday night, in his speech accepting the nomination, Dukakis urged voters "to raise our sights" beyond the Reagan years.

"The Reagan era is over and a new era is about to begin," Dukakis said in claiming the Democratic Party's nomination for the presidency.

"We're going to forge a new era of greatness for America," he said.

The three-term Massachusetts governor was setting out on his first campaign trip as the nominee after claiming the prize in a forceful, 50-minute speech Thursday night to the Democratic National Convention.

The trip was both a symbolic homecoming for Bentsen and a strong reminder that the Democratic ticket intends to battle for Texas, the third largest state with 29 electoral votes and the adopted home of Republican opponent George Bush.

Getting a fast start on the general election campaign, Dukakis and his vice presidential nominee then were flying on to Stockton, Calif., and planned later appearances in Minot, N.D., St. Louis and Erie, Pa., before Dukakis returns home Sunday night to Boston.

The three-day cross-country swing was both a campaign kickoff and a sign that the Democrats believe they can compete in regions such as the West, Southwest and Midwest — in farm areas and in industrial regions — that have gone Republican in recent elections.

"We're making a nationwide swing," said Dukakis spokesman Dayton Duncan. "He intends to run an aggressive national campaign that concedes no state, no region, to

Prosecutor Says Boss Edwin Meese Is 'Sleaze'

NEW YORK (AP) — Both sides in the Wedtech corruption trial found a rare point of agreement when a federal prosecutor shocked the courtroom by calling his boss, outgoing U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese, "a sleaze."

The Justice Department response Thursday was swift and angry in calling for an in-house investigation. Meese's lawyer branded the remark as "beneath contempt."

Assistant U.S. Attorney Edward J. Little stunned spectators at the racketeering trial of Rep. Mario Biaggi, D-N.Y., and six others Thursday when he brought up the sleaze factor, adding in effect, that it didn't matter.

"These defendants can't get out of this case by pointing fingers at Meese. So what? Who cares? That's got nothing to do with what happened in this courtroom," said Little.

Biaggi and his co-defendants are charged with turning Wedtech Corp., a now-bankrupt defense contractor, into a racketeering enterprise that paid millions of dollars in bribes for government contracts and other favors.

The defense has maintained during the four-month trial that corrupt Wedtech executives who testified for the government had links to White House insiders like Meese and did not need to bribe Biaggi.

The soft-spoken Little said the answer to "this Meese defense" was, "Meese was a sleaze, too, also, in addition to these people." He also denied defense hints that prosecutors were shielding "Ed Meese, our boss."

Little's remarks came near the end of his final argument to the federal jury in Manhattan.

Dominic Amorosa, the first defense attorney to sum up, said he was glad the government "has conceded what we have been saying: Meese is a sleaze, indeed he is and indeed he was."

Final defense arguments were expected to continue into next week.

Former County GOP Chair Makes Switch

By JOHN BARE
Reflector Staff Writer

Carlton Smith of Greenville, who resigned as chairman of the Pitt County Republican Party last month, is now a Democrat.

At a party meeting June 7, Smith resigned his chairmanship and also withdrew his candidacy for a seat in the state House from District 9, and this week he announced his change of party registration.

Smith said he believes Republican Gov. Jim Martin has not shown political leadership and has not been able to unify the conservative and moderate wings of the party. He pointed to a situation at the state GOP convention, when a 78-year-old member of the Republican National Committee was unseated by Martin supporters.

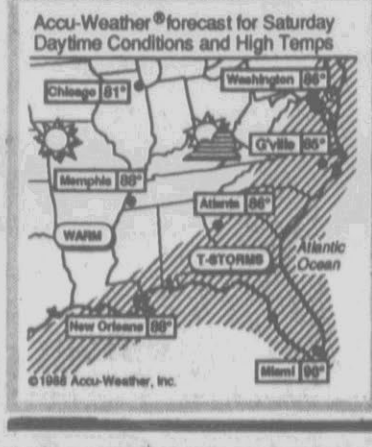

"Martinoids got together with their candidate and useated him," Smith said. "It was very embarrassing." The Democrats treat the elder statesmen of the party better, Smith said, citing the support shown for longtime Secretary of State Thad Eure.

Smith, a member of the conservative wing of the GOP that supports Jesse Helms, said there was constant friction between the two wings of the party.

Inflation Holds As Food Soars

By DAVID SKIDMORE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices climbed a modest 0.3 percent in June, with declines in gasoline and clothing costs nearly offsetting a sharp increase in food prices, the government said today.

The overall June increase, which matched the rise for May, would amount to an annual inflation rate of 4.2 percent if prices climbed at the same pace for 12 straight months, the Labor Department said.

Grocery store prices rose a sharp 0.7 percent, but there seemed to be little effect from the summer's drought other than the huge 5.4 percent rise in poultry prices and the even steeper 6.6 percent gain in egg costs.

Cereal and bakery prices, not yet showing the full effects of the drought, were up 0.4 percent. Grocery store prices, reflecting upward pressures before the drought took hold, had risen 0.5 percent in May and 0.8 percent in April.

As for meat, analysts expect prices to fall later in the summer as producers, facing staggering feed prices, sell off parts of their herds. But Donald Ratajczak, an economist who conducts his own price surveys from the Georgia State University in Atlanta, said in advance of today's report that some retailers have not yet passed their lower wholesale prices on to consumers.

Indeed, pork prices rose 1.2 percent last month while beef prices gained 1.3 percent.

As for energy, gasoline costs, driven downward by worldwide drops in crude oil prices, dipped a significant 0.9 percent after rising 1.6 percent in May.

Clothing prices fell 0.3 percent after rising a strong 3.8 percent through the first five months of 1988. Department analysts attributed the decline to larger than usual markdowns in prices for women's clothing.

The 0.3 percent seasonally adjusted gain in the Consumer Price Index left the annualized inflation rate for the first half of 1988 at 4.4 percent, the same as for all of 1987.

The index itself stood at 118.0 in June, meaning that a selection of goods costing $100 during a 1982-84 base period would have cost $118 last month, 50 cents more than in the preceding month and $4.50 more than a year ago.

Excluding the effects of the volatile food and energy categories, retail prices rose 0.4 percent in June, double May's 0.2 percent increase.

The department gave these details of June's price changes:

—Cooking oil prices were up 0.4 percent while dairy product costs fell 0.2 percent. Prices of fruits and vegetables edged downward 0.1 percent. Restaurant meal prices gained 0.4 percent. Food prices, including meals eaten outside the home, rose 0.6 percent.

—Energy prices overall were down 0.2 percent. Fuel oil prices dropped

Trooper Injured Chasing Speeder

GREENSBORO (AP) — A state trooper chasing a speeding motorcyclist in his cruiser collided with a truck on a state highway this morning, suffering critical injuries, authorities said.

The motorcyclist got away, they said.

"He's still in intensive care and it's very, very critical," said a dispatcher for the State Highway Patrol in Greensboro who asked not to be identified.

She said Trooper Mike Martin, 25, radioed the office about 6:30 a.m. to report a motorcycle traveling over 100 miles an hour on N.C. 87 south of Reidsville.

"He called in the chase, and the next thing we knew, there was this accident," she said.

Martin's car struck the truck head-on after chasing the motorcyclist for about 5 minutes, she said. Martin was taken to Moses Cone Hospital in Greensboro, where officials declined to discuss details of his injuries.

The driver and passenger of the truck also were taken to a local hospital, where they were treated and released, the dispatcher said. Their names were not immediately available.

State troopers early Friday were still searching for the motorcyclist, who sped away when the trooper's car and the truck collided, the dispatcher said.

The accident comes soon after a Greensboro police officer proposed legislation to restrict motorcycle licenses to those over 16 and impose stiffer penalties for motorcyclists who drive away from police at speeds of more than 15 miles an hour.

Texasgulf Gets Revised Permit

RALEIGH (AP) — Texasgulf Inc. received a new permit Thursday that Gov. Jim Martin said would reduce phosphorus discharge from mining operations by 90 percent over four years.

Martin, at his weekly news conference, congratulated Texasgulf officials, state agencies and environmentalists for forging the agreement under which the company will build a $20 million recycling system.

Texasgulf spokesman Tom Wright admitted it was not easy to satisfy everyone but added, "We all share the same long-term objective of protecting the environment."

Martin said removing the phosphorus and fluorides from the discharge into North Carolina's estuarine waters would help protect aquatic life. He said Texasgulf had not exceeded levels under an earlier permit but changes had to be made as more was learned about the affect of the chemicals on the environment.

AIDS Activist Says State Is Sitting On Help For Blacks

WILMINGTON (AP) — The black community in North Carolina has not been organized to fight AIDS and is unprepared to educate its people, the founder of the AIDS Awareness in the Black Community Project says.

AIDS activist Fred McRee also has accused the state Department of Human Resources of sitting on money granted to North Carolina by the federal Centers for Disease Control to assist community groups with AIDS education.

"People have gotten sick and hurt as a result of this," he said. "It's kind of hard to take that I'm out here swimming upstream and they're up there sitting on money."

"They have that money, and someone should tell the black community why they held that money up," said McRee, who has applied for a grant.

During a telephone interview with the Wilmington Morning Star, Human Resources Director David Flaherty, whose department oversees many of the state's efforts to combat acquired immune deficiency syndrome, questioned whether blacks are disproportionately affected by AIDS.

Blacks represent about 22 percent of the state's population and almost 44.6 percent of its AIDS cases.

"Are they?" Flaherty asked. "I didn't realize that. I don't think I've ever seen statistics to support that."

As of June 27, blacks represented 249 of the state's 558 confirmed AIDS cases, according to the AIDS Control Office, part of the Department of Human Resources. Nationally, blacks represent about 12 percent of the population and 26 percent of the 65,780 confirmed AIDS cases.

"If Flaherty doesn't know that, I want to know where he's been," said McRee. "You shouldn't have people in life and death situations who are that unaware."

The CDC has granted about $350,000 to the state over the past two years for community AIDS prevention projects, said Rebecca Meriwether, head of the Communicable Disease Control branch of Human Resources. Of that total, about $150,000 is earmarked for "minority initiatives," and $200,000 is tagged for "community-based risk reduction," Ms. Meriwether said.

The CDC has urged the state to allocate the money, which arrived in several grants starting in May 1987, said Gary West, assistant to the deputy director for AIDS at the CDC.

It has taken time for the state to develop a process for distributing the money that included local input, especially from local health departments, Flaherty said.

"Quite candidly, we didn't want to waste money and we didn't want to duplicate what's going on," he said.

The state also wanted to ensure that the funds were used properly, he said. Flaherty referred to a past situation in Mecklenburg County in which a gay organization used county money to produce an explicit pamphlet that dealt with more than AIDS prevention.

The state should not hold up any of the funds for fear of embarrassment, McRee said, and especially should not delay awarding the minority funds just because it is worried about how gay organizations will use the money.

Questions Are Raised By Swaggart's Crusade

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Jimmy Swaggart's first revival outside his home state since he was defrocked in a sex scandal begins tonight, causing painful questions of loyalty for some fellow evangelists.

"It's a very awkward situation and to some degree embarrassing," said the Rev. H.P. Vibbert, pastor of Abundant Life Memorial church, who has been a friend of Swaggart since the 1960s. "To have a fellow minister come to the city and conduct such a crusade and not even be able to support it."

Swaggart's crusade, which ends Sunday, is his first outside Louisiana since the fiery TV evangelist was dismissed April 8 by the Assemblies of God for refusing to abide by punishment imposed by the church for moral wrongdoing.

In February, Swaggart tearfully confessed to a TV audience that he had committed an unspecified sin against God and his family. Debra Murphree, a prostitute, later said Swaggart had hired her to pose nude and once had sex with her.

The Assemblies of God ordered Swaggart to refrain from preaching for a year, but Swaggart returned to the pulpit after three months, saying his multimillion-dollar global ministry could not survive the suspension.

The Rev. Mike Baldock, pastor of the independent New Covenant Church and organizer of the crusade here, has said he believes about 8,000 people will attend each of the three meetings this weekend.

Baldock said he has had no trouble recruiting more than 500 volunteers, 200 ushers and a security force.

Juleen Turnage, a spokeswoman at Assemblies of God headquarters in Springfield, Mo., said individual pastors must decide whether to support the crusade.

Officials of the Northwest Assembly of God Church here decided not to cooperate in any way, said Lucille Sexton, an aide to the Rev. Blanche Fiscus. Pastors have been instructed to have nothing to do with Swaggart's activities here, she added.

"I choose not to go simply for the awkwardness of being there," Vibbert said. "If I were there, I would feel I ought to be with him on the platform, so I choose not to go.

"My human instinct would be to go down and stand behind him and support him. But as an Assembly of God pastor I cannot cooperate with the crusade without contradicting the directions of the executive presbytery."

Vibbert has been neutral on the issue with his congregation, neither encouraging nor discouraging attendance.

As for Swaggart, Vibbert said, "We're still friends. That relationship, as far as I'm concerned, has not been severed. We're praying for Jimmy."

Counties At Meeting Won't Be Committing For Site

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Counties that seek meetings with the state Hazardous Waste Treatment Commission to discuss a $40 million waste plant will not commit themselves as hosts for the facility, panel members say.

Setting up a meeting "will not be construed as 'volunteering' your county," say letters sent to county managers this week offering them a chance to investigate the issue further.

The letters mean what they say, according to commission spokeswoman Katherine C. Neal.

"I think there are a number of people who are real familiar with this issue, and there are just as clearly many, many more who are not," Ms. Neal said.

The commission wants to make sure everyone who wants information about the plant can get it, she said.

The commission has for years been seeking a site for the controversial plant, which would burn and detoxify hazardous industrial wastes.

Earlier this year, after the commission chose Lee County as a potential site for the treatment plant, the North Carolina General Assembly passed legislation putting most of the commission's work on hold.

The new law allows the commission only to seek volunteers for the plant and to help negotiate contracts with other states to treat North Carolina's waste.

If the officials do not want the plant in their county, the letters provide a form for them to send back to the commission, Ms. Neal said. The commission's staff also plans to follow up the letters with telephone calls.

Ms. Neal said the commission will collect the responses for a new legislative study on hazardous waste.

The law that freezes much of the commission's activity also provides some financial benefits for the community that takes the plant. Local governments will benefit from a state tax equal to 2.5 percent of the plant's revenues, which would amount to an estimated $625,000 each year, the commission said.

REAL ESTATE FACTS

Supply & Demand!

Have you ever thought about ways in which the "free enterprise" system affects your daily life? If you've sold a home recently, supply and demand played a major role in the final price you received.

Think for a moment about the asking price you placed on your home. You may have sought advice from a real estate professional about pricing, or perhaps you based your price on what you "needed" to receive from the property. Either way you set a price acceptable to you.

As the seller, you controlled only one of the factors on which "free enterprise" thrives - the supply. You contributed to the supply of homes for sale by adding yours to the market. By making improvements, i.e. a new roof, paint, new carpet, you exercised control over the supply by improving what you had to offer, your improved home.

You had no control, however, over the other factor, demand. Buyers created the demand for your home. If there were few buyers, demand for your home was low. If there were many eager buyers, demand was high.

In the end, buyer demand determined the final sale price of your home. Depending on the number of available homes similar to yours and their prices, a buyer came forth and offered you an acceptable price. From the Gold Rush days of 1849 came an expression still valid today: "Them that's got the gold sets the price!"

Police May Exhume Victim Of Poisoning

HIGH POINT (AP) — Authorities might exhume the body of a High Point woman who died of arsenic poisoning 13 days ago to learn whether she was killed by a one-time dose or by several doses ingested over a period of months.

"That is a consideration," said Capt. R.J. McGuire, chief criminal investigator for High Point police. "But we haven't made a decision on it yet."

High Point police are investigating the death of Sandra Lyn Coles Coulthard, 30, as a homicide.

"I cannot imagine someone committing suicide by that matter," McGuire told the Greensboro News & Record. "But officially that cause of death has not been ruled out. We're looking at this as a homicide or product-tampering."

Police said they entered Mrs. Coulthard's home last week, confiscating medication. They also looked unsuccessfully for Terro, a brand of ant poison.

Dr. Arthur McBay, chief toxicologist for the state Medical Examiner's Office, said tests of hair samples would show the frequency and length of Mrs. Coulthard's exposure to arsenic.

Each individual dose of arsenic can be detected in the strands of hair. As the hair grows, the arsenic is deposited in the ends, leaving marks as clearly read as rings in a tree trunk, McBay said.

"It can be done," he said, "though it is very expensive."

Mrs. Coulthard died July 9 at Duke University Medical Center after about six months of poor health. Doctors originally thought she had Guillain-Barre syndrome, a disease characterized by vomiting, diarrhea and numbness of feet and fingers.

"One or possibly two of her doctors knew this disease that she had was not fatal," McGuire told the newspaper Thursday.

A toxicology report submitted by McBay on July 13 confirmed Mrs. Coulthard had died of arsenic poisoning.

McBay said his tests found an arsenic concentration of 17 percent in a sample of Mrs. Coulthard's liver.

"That's a pretty heavy amount," he said. "But it doesn't tell you if it all got there at once or whether it came in several doses."

McBay said Mrs. Coulthard's medical history suggests the poisoning had been occurring since December, when she was treated for paralysis in her ankles and wrists. About a month ago, she was hospitalized at High Point Regional Hospital for chronic nausea and vomiting. Two weeks before her death, she re-entered the High Point hospital and was soon transferred to Duke.

The average doctor, McBay said, can often mistake arsenic poisoning for another disease.

Hatcher Plans Write-In Race For Governor

RALEIGH (AP) — Accused hostage-taker Eddie Hatcher says he's throwing his hat into the governor's race as a write-in candidate, planning a campaign that will protest government policy and give a voice to North Carolina citizens afraid to speak out.

No North Carolina governor or U.S. senator has ever been elected by a write-in campaign, said Alex Brock, director of the State Board of Elections.

"This campaign shall be one of protest and one seeking justice for Indians, blacks and for whites — a protest aimed directly and wholeheartedly at the regime that now controls the lives of so many honest, justice-seeking people," said Hatcher, one of two American Indians accused of taking up to 20 people hostage at a Robeson County newspaper in February.

Hatcher, who faces federal hostage-taking and firearms charges stemming from the newspaper takeover, had scheduled a Raleigh news conference Thursday to announce his campaign. But he canceled it, saying he had received a threatening telephone call as he was preparing to leave his uncle's home in Winston-Salem.

"It's bad that someone would attempt to stop me from raising the issues," he said in a telephone interview.

Hatcher, who is free on bond while awaiting trial, said Republican Gov. Jim Martin had bowed to pressure from Democratic officials in Robeson County, "leaving many lives stranded in an environment of drugs, murder and corruption."

"Why has Jim Martin and his administration conveniently blinded themselves to the cocaine train that rumbles through the homes and schools of this state?" Hatcher said in his prepared statement. "It is time we speak for ourselves."

The 10-hour hostage siege in Lumberton Feb. 1 ended peacefully after Martin agreed to form a state task force to investigate charges of corruption and drug trafficking by county law enforcement agencies and other officials.

But an interim report from the task force last month said Hatcher and Timothy Jacobs, who faces the same charges, had met with the task force only once, canceling several other meetings. The report said no solid evidence had been uncovered to back up the allegations.

"A vote for Eddie Hatcher will send a loud and clear message that we shall not tolerate corruption any longer," Hatcher said. "We shall not tolerate government-sponsored racism any longer. ... We shall not tolerate government-sponsored drug-trafficking, not now, not never."

Tim Pittman, a spokesman for Martin's re-election campaign, said Hatcher's criticism was unjustified.

"Our campaign has no problem with his right to run," Pittman said. "But we would take issue with his criticism of Gov. Martin.

"The governor has tried diligently to find a long-term solution to the problems in Robeson County," Pittman said. "He has done that through creation of the task force, the handling of the judgeship down there and in keeping the pipeline open for people to communicate their concerns."

Spokesmen for Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan's campaign were in Atlanta for the Democratic Convention and could not immediately be reached for comment.

Brock said anyone who wanted to organize a legitimate write-in campaign must file a "declaration of intent" to run, get 500 qualified voters to sign petitions, have those names certified by county election officials and file them with the state elections board.

Those requirements must be met by Aug. 9 for Hatcher to qualify as a write-in candidate for the general elections Nov. 8, Brock said.

Nuclear Protest

TOKYO (AP) — About 1,700 people rallied Thursday near an unfinished nuclear power plant on the northern island of Hokkaido to protest the arrival of 75 tons of nuclear fuel at the facility, officials said.

Fifty other protesters held a sit-in outside the head office in Sapporo of the Hokkaido Electric Power Co., operator of the Tomari plant, said company spokesman Koichi Sato.

Swaggart School

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Enrollment at the Bible college named for defrocked Assemblies of God minister Jimmy Swaggart will drop 72 percent this year, but the school will proceed with plans to open a theological seminary, an attorney said.

Enrollment at Jimmy Swaggart Bible College on Aug. 29 will be about 400, compared with 1,451 students last year, attorney William Treeby said. The estimate is based on the number of students who have registered and the inquiries from potential students.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Easy Turn

Information Signs The Answer

Nobody wants to slight Greenville's motel operators with a sign ban on the new Farmville to Greenville segment of U.S. 264. But any directional signs erected on the roadway must conform with the decorum set by the county ordinance.

The sign ban was implemented to limit inappropriate development on the vital 264 corridor. That roadway is an important transportation link to the state's capital — and to other major metropolitan areas. It should be kept free of the clutter that accompanies development if it is to remain a quality highway. The sign ban is consistent with that goal.

But since the sign-free section of 264 from Farmville to Greenville has opened, motel owners have a predicament. Billboards in Wilson direct motorists to accommodations on 264 bypass — Greenville Boulevard. This road, however, is now 264 alternate, and motorists along the new Farmville-to-Greenville freeway have no way of knowing where to turn to seek these accommodations.

There is a easy, two-part solution to this dilemma. First, the existing billboards upstate must be changed to give the updated location of motels in Greenville.

Second, simple, unobtrusive information signs could be erected along the Farmville-to-Greenville 264 at appropriate exits, correctly directing travelers to accommodations. There is no need for these signs to contain any information other than location. No business logos, slogans, etc. Their purpose is to direct the motorist, not promote services. Once a traveler has arrived in Greenville, he or she can make decisions about where to stay.

Again, these information signs should be modest and directional. They should comply with the intent of the county sign ban.

If they do, the Pitt-Greenville Convention and Visitors Authority, the organization who has voiced the concerns of the motel owners, will have improvised a satisfactory solution to a ticklish problem.

Motel owners can be satisfied they aren't being bypassed, travelers will know where to turn for accommodations and 264 will remain as the sign ban demands — a quality road corridor free of clutter.

On The Way

Marathon Man Begins Trek

The man who ... . For the Democrats, that has become Michael Dukakis. The governor of Massachusetts has been formally designated the party's choice for its presidential candidate.

Dukakis is a man of surprises. There were not many who would have picked Dukakis to receive the nomination some 17 months ago. The field was heavy with Democratic candidates and it was difficult to determine a front runner. One by one they dropped out as the delegate strength failed to materialize. The strong Gary Hart sealed his own fate during the campaign and became an also-ran.

Then only Jesse Jackson stood in Dukakis' path to the nomination. The late primaries settled that and by the time of the convention's beginning, Jackson too was left behind.

Dukakis chose Sen. Lloyd Bentson, a Texas conservative, as his running mate and set about bringing peace to his party. It was soon made clear that Jackson nor anyone else was to rip apart this convention.

Now Dukakis is the person in front of the Democratic Party. His opponent will be Vice President George Bush, expected to be chosen at next month's Republican convention.

From here until November at least, Dukakis will be the only spokesman for the Democrats. He has already recognized his main task — that is to pursue long cherished Democratic Party traditions and still attract the return of conservative Democrats who have deserted the party to vote for Republican presidential candidates. Fortunately for Dukakis most of those voters have not left the party; they only deviate in presidential elections. If Dukakis can convince them he will observe sound fiscal policies even as he attempts to improve the lot of the poor, he will have the key to the White House.

And if he does succeed in his bid for the presidency, his challenge will be to devise tangible solutions to the economic dilemmas the Democrats have perceptively identified. In short, he must put rules behind his rhetoric.

Election is far from assured for Dukakis but the man has made a remarkable charge through the pack of Democratic candidates this year to claim the nomination prize. With that record it seems clear he can bring together the diverse factions of the Democratic party.

Even The Liberals Are Lying Low

ATLANTA — They are called Reagan Democrats — Southern conservatives and Northern ethnics who deserted their party to vote for Ronald Reagan in 1984. Exit polls put their numbers at 24 percent (8.4 million voters) of the Democratic electorate, but from the way the convention here has gone the number of Reagan Democrats is far understated. At this gathering, there are almost nothing but.

More than any other person — more than Mike Dukakis, more than Lloyd Bentsen and even more than Jesse Jackson — Ronald Reagan dominates the Democratic National Convention proceedings. Because of Reagan, the dreaded term "tax increase" will not be uttered.

It does not matter that the government is underfunded. It does not matter that national debt is piling up. It does not matter, either, that Democrats want to spend more on schools and welfare, health and child care — comfort the elderly, protect children, shelter the homeless, befriend the working man and lead the underclass out its sickening poverty. The intent is there. The money is not. Ronald Reagan has seen to that.

And Reagan determined Dukakis' choice of Bentsen. The tall Texan is the anti-Dukakis. He has more differences with Dukakis than he has with George Bush. Republicans will have fun ticking them off: school prayer, aid to the contras, the Reagan tax cut, a host of weapons programs. Dukakis, like the parent of a dull child, seeks whatever comfort he can find in his vice-presidential choice. His man, he says, proudly, is for civil rights. But who nowadays is not?

'A Democratic Party, famished for victory, is willing to eat the meal concocted by Ronald Reagan. The problems for liberals is that there's little on the plate.'

Only the left-wing of the party clamors for a real Democratic program. But it does not have the votes on the floor nor the attention of party leaders. At the countless parties that are the real business of this meaningless convention, they chirp their satisfaction.

One of them sniffed the room. "Victory," he said. "I smell victory." His wish was given voice by Ann Richards, the Texas state treasurer who turned the keynote address into a Minnie Pearl routine — a succession of one-liners so devoid of a message that even Patrick Buchanan could summon no bile for it.

The Democratic Party has entered not into convention, but into conspiracy. There's a smuggling operation afoot, an attempt to sneak the liberal Dukakis past a generally conservative electorate. Bentsen will run cover. The platform is vacant of hard proposals or expensive programs. Dukakis even shuns the label "liberal" and once rebuked an aide for calling him a reformer. He considers himself sui generis, a politician with no antecedents except the hometown boy who first interested him in politics: John F. Kennedy.

The term "Reagan Revolution" has been drained of its meaning by repetition. Besides, it's in dispute. What has so radically changed? To some conservatives, the term is even a rebuke: The economic programs of Democratic liberalism endure. Social Security has been cemented into bipartisan bedrock. Abortion is still legal; school prayer remains banned and the pornography industry flourishes. What did the New Deal legacy do during the Reagan Revolution? It survived.

But the real Reagan Revolution — a national consensus that taxes should not be raised and that government should be limited — has intimidated this convention. Even liberal Democrats are lying low. The Democratic Party has lost four of the five preceding presidential elections, the last by an embarrassing margin. The first order of business is to win in November. Only then can its program, a dream list of good intentions, be implemented.

These Democrats ought to look to the Eisenhower era when the Republican Party returned to power. To the GOP right wing, Ike was no real conservative. Yet it still hoped that its man would reverse the New Deal. Well into the 1950s, Republican conservatives were still trying to junk Social Security. But Ike knew who had elected him. Social Security stayed.

Something similar will happen with Dukakis, should he win. He will lack the mandate to implement a liberal agenda. Having never presented a liberal program to the voters, seeking to attract voters who would reject that program anyway, he will be in no position to implement one.

The challenge for historians is to distinguish the man from his times — whether, in the last election, Reagan led and the country followed or the other way around. Whatever the cause, the effect can clearly be seen here. A Democratic Party, famished for victory, is willing to eat the meal concocted by Ronald Reagan. The problems for liberals is that there's little on the plate.

The Promise And Peril Of Jesse

WASHINGTON — Reporters who have followed the Jesse Jackson campaign will tell you that he broke no new ground Tuesday night.

Except for a brief section in mild praise of Dukakis, his speech at the Democratic National Convention was a compilation of oft-repeated themes: America, the patchwork quilt; the need to move from "battle ground to common ground to higher ground"; his humble origins; his advocacy on behalf of those "locked out."

Reporters not only had heard it before; they had heard him do it better.

And yet, even on what was something of an off-night, Jackson was so far above anything else the Democrats could offer that he managed both to lift the convention and to diminish the man on whose behalf he has pledged to work.

That is the promise and peril of the man everybody calls Jesse.

The Democrats need hi — Dukakis needs him — to breathe some soul into what threatens to be a singularly dull campaign and also to deliver a significant chunk of voters that he alone can deliver.

But if he does it by making Dukakis appear small and uninspiring and not really in control of his own campaign, it could cost Dukakis the White House.

Jackson has already demonstrated what he can do by (in his words) "registering more Democrats than any other Democrat has ever registered." He showed the other night that he has the potential for delivering even more, with his masterful and moving appeal to the poor, jobless, disaffected, despised Americans who have given up on the political process. Give him a microphone, and Jackson could persuade a terminally ill anarchist that registering to vote is the only rational thing to do.

The Democrats need the votes of the disenchanted. But they also need the return of those right-of-center Democrats who helped to bring us eight years of Ronald Reagan. One question is whether Jackson can turn on the one without turning off the other.

But there are other questions that are at least as troubling.

Will Jackson's elevation to the unprecedented role of third man on a two-man ticket — and the only exciting member of the troika at that — make Dukakis and Lloyd Bentsen seem even duller? Will those Democrats who are not ready for an influential Jesse Jackson (whether because he is black or merely because he is Jesse) be driven to the Republican ranks?

And what may be the toughest question of all: Can Jackson subordinate his own personal and political agenda to that of the ticket on whose behalf he will be campaigning?

This is the perennial "ego question," and Jackson has responded to it by saying, "It's all right to have a Rolls Royce ego as long as you don't have a bicycle brain."

Clever, but wide of the mark. Jackson's ego problem is not that he thinks he is intelligent or perceptive or uniquely gifted; he is all of those things, and I would think less of him if he pretended not to know it. The problem is his need — one almost thinks "addiction" — for the spotlight, the microphone, the headline.

Last Saturday, after the Jackson caravan had arrived from Chicago, he addressed a crowd of some 12,000 in Atlanta's Piedmont Park. It was a typical Jackson speech, which is to say inspiring, educational, uplifting. He finished the speech to roaring applause. But then as the crowd started to dissipate, he called them back. "One minute, please. Please stop," he exhorted. I thought he intended to introduce Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young and former presidential candidate Shirley Chisholm, both of whom were on the platform with him.

You know what he did? He delivered another speech! It was as though he couldn't bring himself to leave the open mike and the TV cameras.

Can he subdue that part of himself — the part that seems to doubt his own existence when he is not in the spotlight? Can he at least turn it to the electoral interests of his party?

Obviously he can for a short time, as he did toward the end of the convention. Whether he can do it for a campaign season is a question that may have Dukakis lying awake nights.

Dukakis' best hope is that Jackson really did mean what he said Tuesday night, when he spoke of refusing to let the dream die. If he still holds to the dream that he may yet be elected president (or at least vice president) of the United States, Jackson will see it as in his interest to help elect Dukakis while keeping the party unified and unafraid of him.

If Jackson decides that since high national office is beyond his reach he might as well push his own agenda, Dukakis could be in deep trouble.

1988 Is Not 1960, Despite What Democrats Think

Analysis

ATLANTA — When it comes to comparisons with the campaign of 1960, the 1988 presidential contest is not exactly what Yogi Berra called "deja vu all over again."

Democratic nominee Michael S. Dukakis loves to draw the parallel to the contest of the previous generation, when "another man from Massachusetts" and his Texas senator running mate defeated the vice president at the end of a two-term Republican administration headed by the oldest president ever in office.

But interviews with veterans of the 1960 battle and a look at the numbers show how different the political and economic enivironments are today. There are also differences in the personalities of Dukakis, his running mate, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, and Republican standard-bearer George Bush, on one side, and their 1960 counterparts, John F. Kennedy, Lyndon B. Johnson and Richard M. Nixon.

Lawrence F. O'Brien, a key Kennedy strategist, sees "a degree of similarity" in that President Dwight D. Eisenhower, like President Reagan, "had succeeded in making the country pretty comfortable, pretty relaxed." Beyond that and states represented by the Democratic ticket, he said here, "there is no real comparison."

"I hope they (the Democrats) don't try to rerun that 1960 campaign," said George Christian, who was Johnson's press secretary and is an Austin political consultant. "These really are different times and different men," he added.

"The surface similarities are striking," said Robert H. Finch, the manager of Nixon's 1960 campaign, "but below the surface, the differences are even more significant."

How much Dukakis was trying to relive the past when he put together his version of a "Boston-Austin" alliance is not known. But there is no doubt that the 1960 Kennedy-Johnson campaign was the central event in his early personal and political life. He has spoken often of the trip he and Paul D. Brountas, then his law school buddy and now his campaign chairman, made to the Los Angeles convention where that ticket was formed.

But the circumstances of that deal were strikingly different from those of 1988. As O'Brien noted, Kennedy picked Johnson early in the morning the convention's last day to appease a powerful rival for the presidential nomination who could have used his position as Senate majority leader to make problems for Kennedy as president unless he were enlisted in the cause.

Historians agree with O'Brien's judgment that Johnson played a "very significant" role in the 1960 Democratic victory, bringing Texas and five other southern states to a young senator whose Roman Catholicism was then a major burden in the "Bible Belt."

But the political environment today is significantly different, in ways that can help or hurt the Democratic ticket but that certainly dictate an altered approach to the campaign.

On the plus side, Dukakis undoubtedly will have to spend less time reassuring people about his being Greek Orthodox and his wife being Jewish than Kennedy did on "the Catholic issue."

And the percentage of eligible blacks registered in the 11 southern states has almost doubled since 1960, enlarging that Democratic voting pool. That is why plans are being made for Jesse L. Jackson to campaign almost as extensively as the vice presidential nominee.

On the other hand, party loyalty has declined as a voting factor, and the Democrats' lead over Republicans in basic party identification has been reduced, especially in states such as Texas.

In 1960, Kennedy and Johnson could campaign throughout Texas and the South on the shoulders of Democratic officeholders who were rarely challenged by the GOP. Today, Texas has a Republican governor and senator, and Bush once held the House seat from the Houston district he still considers his home.

Worries about the Soviet Union and the American position in the world fueled Kennedy's campaign. U.S.-Soviet relations turned chilly after the Soviets downed an American U-2 spy plane and the Soviet "sputnik" launch signaled America's second-place status in the space race. By contrast, the Reagan's summits with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev and the recently signed nuclear-arms treaty signal an improving international climate.

Still, Americans say they are worried about drugs and deficits, and the "time-for-a-change" psychology that has made many political scientists speculate about the eight-year cycle of White House control is evident.

Reagan has shown clear signs he will work much harder for Bush's election than Eisenhower did for Nixon. But while five of seven voters approved Eisenhower's performance at election time in 1960, only five of nine express approval of Reagan today.

Beyond all these objective measurements, the key question in the 1960-1988 comparison turns on the contenders' personal qualities. Bush has not named his running mate, and Bentsen, except for an unsuccessful campaign for the 1976 presidential nomination, is largely untested outside Texas.

There, said old LBJ hand Christian, Bentsen is "more of a unifying figure for all elements of the Democratic Party" than Johnson was in 1960-and the proprietor of what is commonly called the best political organization in recent Texas politics. But, as former Johnson aide Harry C. McPherson noted, Johnson was a "galvanic personality," while Bentsen is "intensely cool."

Comparisons between Dukakis and Bush and their 1960 counterparts, Kennedy and Nixon, are necessarily subjective but carry a message of caution to anyone trying to push the analogy too far.

"Kennedy had a lot of charisma," Herbert G. Klein, Nixon's 1960 press secretary, said today, "and the lack of that is one of Dukakis' problems. Kennedy had little experience in government, and none in the executive branch. Dukakis has that. In personality, Bush's problem is that he comes through too soft; Nixon's, that he came on too strong."

Ex-Nixon manager Finch said there are "dramatic differences" in the lineup. "Nixon was a perfectionist, with incredible intensity of energy and intellect, wanting to do almost everything on his own. That's hardly George Bush. And Kennedy was a much more appealing kind of candidate. Dukakis has yet to spell out his own persona."

On the Democratic side, O'Brien said the Kennedy camp regarded Nixon as "a tough, strong opponent from the beginning," and he cautioned those who say Bush lacks those traits. "Bush has shown himself a pretty tough fighter when he had to be in the Republican primaries," O'Brien said. "I don't think this fellow will be any easy touch."

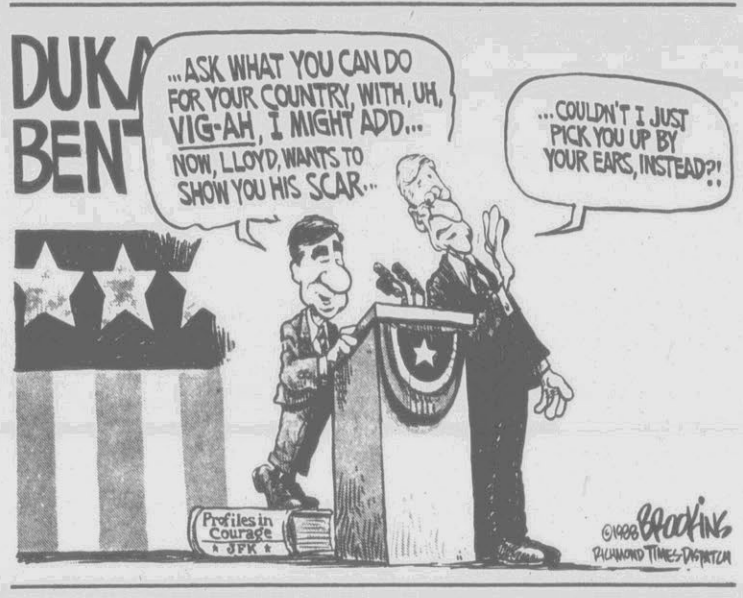

Sorensen, O'Brien's partner in the 1960 campaign, called Nixon "a shrewd, tough politician who had run many an election campaign. George Bush has never won anything outside one congressional district. Nixon was disliked for the way he used his strength, but Bush is seen as weak."

And Sorensen said he sees at least some similarities between Kennedy and Dukakis: "They're both younger than their opponents. When they take liberal positions, they mask them in moderate language. And they're both prepared to be pretty tough."

The net result of all these comparisons is obviously a matter of debate. Allan J. Lichtman of American University, author of "The 13 Keys to Winning the Presidency," said five of the "keys" that worked for Kennedy will work against Dukakis, reflecting a better economic and foreign policy environment for the GOP and the absence of charisma in either candidate. He concludes that Bush and his running mate will reverse the 1960 verdict.

Richard Neustadt, a Harvard political scientist and Kennedy adviser, differs only slightly. "I always thought that it was Nixon's to lose in 1960, and if Eisenhower had campaigned hard for him, I don't think Kennedy could have made it. This year again, I think it's Bush's to lose. And Reagan will not accommodate us."

Call Stresses Poetry, Not Programs

ATLANTA — For 16 months, Michael S. Dukakis has been told by one adviser after another that to be elected president, he must offer voters something more grandiose than managerial competence and "good jobs at good wages."

For 16 months, he paid scant attention.

Thursday night, in accepting a nomination he had the satisfaction of winning on his terms, Dukakis finally relented, and delivered a call-to-arms about where he wants to lead the nation. He spoke of "a new era of greatness"; he proposed to "light fires of innovations ... rekindle the American spirit of invention and daring ... take America's genius out of cold storage."

The political innovation of the speech is the path Dukakis described to carry the nation into this new era.

It is not studded with expensive government programs. The speech mentioned none — "I have a reputation for being a somewhat frugal man," as Dukakis said in a moment of self-description that he must hope will reverberate all the way to November.

Nor does it involve any risky new economic theories of the sort his Republican predecessor brought to Washington eight years ago. "This election isn't about ideology," Dukakis said. "It's about competence." The only label he would pin on his economic theories was a pragmatic one; he called for "exchanging voodoo economics for can-do economics."

Instead of programs or theories, Dukakis told a national television audience viewing him speak at length for the first time, the agent of America's greatness in the years ahead would come from the age-old idea of community.

"It is the idea that we are in this together, that regardless of who we are or where we come from or how much money we have, each of us counts," Dukakis said. He proceeded to quote one of Reagan's favorite historical figures, John Winthrop, the first governor of Massachusetts, who told the Pilgrims three centuries ago that they must "be knit together as one."

"John Winthrop wasn't talking about material success," Dukakis said, a gibe at what he had earlier called the "cramped ideals and limited ambitions of the Reagan era." The dream cannot be only for the well-to-do, Dukakis said, as he paid homage to his principal rival, Jesse L. Jackson. "Every citizen ... is a full shareholder in our dream."

"The speech was full of poetry, which we haven't gotten before from Mike Dukakis," said Democratic pollster Peter Hart, who has helped the Democrats orchestrate the themes of this convention. "He says it's okay to dream and be challenged, and if you want to believe, he is a guy you can believe in. I would call this a first handshake with the American people, and it was a very firm and sensitive one."

Dukakis is running for president as the candidate of a party still held suspect by many American households for being too quick to resort to government solution. The first reference to government in the speech came as he noted that he had balanced "nine budgets more than this administration has, and I've just balanced a 10th." He added that he had used government to produce good jobs and economic growth, and spoke of a management style and policy approach that relied heavily on partnership — business and labor, educators and community leaders — to solve problems.

He saved his lengthiest treatment of government for the end. He spoke of the rule of law, and pride of civil service, and set forth the areas where he thought the Reagan administration had fallen short of those standards.

Unlike the past two presidents — Reagan and Jimmy Carter — who ran against government, Dukakis has presented himself in this campaign as a man proud of his government service. He closed the speech by reciting the Athenian Pledge, setting forth ideals of honesty and courage and civic duty.

The speech was also notable for what it left out or passed over lightly. As he has all year, Dukakis avoided giving any indication of how he planned to pay for the many changes he promised to make in American society. He spoke of providing good child care for young parents, good schools for children, good prices for farmers and good health care for the elderly, but he offered no hint of where these good things might come from or who would finance them.

'As he has all year, Dukakis avoided giving any indication of how he planned to pay for the many changes he promised to make in American society.'

Since he began his run for the presidency, Dukakis has been determined to avoid the accusation that he was just another Democrat eager to raise taxes.

Another subject that got only cursory treatment in Thursday night's speech was defense and foreign policy — areas where, over the past 20 years, Democrats have conveyed the impression to many voters that they would squander the nation's strength.

He pledged to keep the nation "militarily strong," but also pledged a foreign policy that would reflect the "decency and principles and values of the American people" — a formulation reminiscent of Jimmy Carter, a president not usually identified with strength around the world.

But in this convention and throughout his campaign, Dukakis has set out to project strength in ways other than calling for new weapons systems or a hard-line approach to foreign policy.

The first is character. Democratic strategists hope that if voters frame their choice this November through the prism of personality — their candidates's competence, steadiness and quiet confidence versus Bush's privileged roots and perceived weakness — they will win. If they allow the opposition to frame the election around ideology — Dukakis's alleged liberalism versus Bush's mainstream conservativism — they will lose.

"As long as you keep the choice focused on character, we're in very good shape," said Robert Squier, a Democratic media consultant who advised the Democratic National Committee in staging this week's convention. "This is a lesson," he added, "we learned from Ronald Reagan."

Even before Dukakis spoke Thursday night, party strategists said they were pleased with the firmness he had shown in dealing with Jackson during the preconvention negotations. A firm style, Democrats hope, will persuade the country Dukakis can be a firm leader.

"Dukakis' style gives the lie to the attempts to turn him into a liberal, or make him look weak," said Frank Greer, a Democratic consultant. "He doesn't look and sound like a liberal, just as Reagan never came across like a big business Republican. In politics, personal style can transcend issue positions."

The presidency is the most personal choice voters make, and pollsters and academicians say that up to four-fifths of that choice is framed around an assessment of character and leadership style rather than of issues positions.

He did so with a post-liberal Democratic message that says the party can outperform Republicans in building a strong economy because it is now paying less attention to the idea of redistribution from the wealthy to the poor and more to the to the needs of working families.

If there was a target audience for this speech and this convention, it was the people Texas State Treasurer Ann Richards described Monday night in her keynote: "The people you see every day in the grocery store ... who obey the law, pay our taxes and fly our flags on holidays." She might have added, "and voted for Ronald Reagan."

IN THE STATE

Cone Mills Is Fined

GREENSBORO (AP) — An $11,000 fine has been levied against Cone Mills Corp. for violating terms of a permit to discharge wastewater from its Greensboro plant into North Buffalo Creek, state officials say.

Notice of the assessment, citing the textile company for exceeding acceptable levels of three pollutants 11 times between October and March, was mailed to the company June 16, said Tom Hegele, assistant director of public affairs at the North Carolina Department of Natural Resources and Community Development.

The fine was announced Wednesday as city officials prepared to implement an agreement for a five-month test that allows Cone to begin daily dumping of up to one million gallons of industrial waste into the city's sanitary sewer system. Among the pollutants Cone has discharged into North Buffalo is one that robs water of the oxygen necessary to maintain aquatic life.

The fines, $1,000 for each infraction, were 10 percent of the maximum allowed by state law. The company paid the fine, plus $347.22 to cover the state's investigation costs, on July 11.

"Weighing all the factors, a decision was made to pay the fine assessed and have it a closed matter," said Neil Koonce, a Cone Mill spokesman.

Zoo Short On Funds

ASHEBORO (AP) — Officials at the North Carolina Zoo aren't certain how a state funding shortfall will affect plans for the new North America exhibit, but they arre confident they'll make up the funds when the 1989 General Assembly rolls around.

For the first time in three years, the legislature took its budget knife to the zoo's expansion plans, cutting its $6 million building request to $3.5 million. During the General Assembly's session that ended July 12, a House-Senate conference committee came to the negotiating table with the Senate favoring $6 million for the zoo and House leaders proposing a third of that.

"We'll recover," zoo director Robert Fry told the zoo's advisory board Wednesday.

The legislature was working with a budget that was $70 million out of balance, said Sen. Marc Basnight, D-Dare, chairman of the Senate appropriations committee, which handles zoo requests.

Man Pleads Guilty

LILLINGTON (AP) — A Dunn man pleaded guilty to second-degree murder Wednesday in Harnett Superior Court in the Jan. 17 shooting death of a Benson man.

Billy Davis Young, 35, of Dunn, was charged with first-degree murder but, in a plea bargain, was allowed to plead guilty to the lesser charge.

He was accused of shooting Jerry Moore, 47, in the early morning hours of Jan. 17 after the pair had been on what a prosecutor described as a four-day whiskey and cocaine binge.

Superior Court Judge Bruce Briggs sentenced Young to serve 15 years in prison. He ordered that the sentence begin after Young completes a one-year sentence he is serving on a conviction for felony assault of two people in Carteret County.

Uniforms Planned

GREENSBORO (AP) — Two Greensboro public elementary schools will become the first in North Carolina to offer student uniforms this fall in a move parents and officials hope will boost school pride.

Children attending Wiley and Murphey Traditional Academies may choose to wear a red-and-black plaid jumper for girls or navy blue pants and a white shirt for boys. The uniforms were selected by a commitee of parents.

For less well-to-do children, the uniforms could be a major morale booster, school officials said.

Students in kindergarten through second grade attend Wiley, while Murphey offers grades three through five.

Officials at the schools say their curriculum gives extra emphasis to patriotism and American history while stressing traditional scholastic values of hard work and strict grading.

The uniforms will provide an unmistakable symbol of the schools' identity, said Wiley Principal Alma Stokes.

Fire In Greensboro

GREENSBORO (AP) — A fire that erupted on the top floor of a building that houses the U.S. Middle District Court of North Carolina damaged a judge's office but caused no injuries, authorities said.

The blaze struck Thursday, hours after one of the city's main underground water lines burst, sending millions of gallons of water gushing out and causing a drop in downtown water pressure, officials said.

However, the remaining pressure was sufficient to extinguish the fire within an hour, they said.

The fire damaged the southwest wing of the building's third floor, which houses the office of U.S. District Judge Eugene Gordon as well as a secretary's office and two other rooms used by judges, said Tom Lemonds, fire prevention supervisor for the Greensboro Fire Department.

Joanna Colodin, a spokeswoman for the city, said there were law clerks working in the building at the time of the fire. None was injured, although she did not know if they were forced to leave the building.

The building, which also houses the city's old post office, has no sprinkler system, she said.

Witnesses Sought

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — In the wake of reports that deputies were told not to fire at a gunman as he shot victims in their cars, the Forsyth County Sheriff's Department has called for witnesses to the rampage to come forward.

Sheriff Preston Oldham issued a memo Thursday asking for help from anyone who witnessed the shootings Sunday night but had not yet spoken with sheriff's officials.

"All calls will be treated with the utmost confidentiality," Oldham said.

Convention Doctor

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Winston-Salem Dr. Monty Leonard said he was intrigued by the chance to practice emergency medicine at the Democratic National Convention.

"I'm interested in disaster medicine, of which large crowds have the potential for producing disasters. And I'm interested in medical care for large crowds, which is different than anything else," he told the Winston-Salem Journal in its Thursday editions.

Leonard, 45, an assistant professor of emergency medicine at the Bowman Gray School of Medicine, applied for the job in December, he said. The American College of Emergency Physicians invited 450 doctors to apply. Fifty-seven were chosen.

The selection was not decided by political leanings. Leonard believes he was chosen because of his eight years in the emergency room and his interest in working with crowds.

Warehouse Sale

DURHAM (AP) — Durham developer Adam Abram of the Adaron Group and an official from American Brands in New York have met at the American Tobacco Co. complex to discuss purchase of the property.

The Wednesday meeting may result in Abram signing a 60-day option on the American property, which included 24 acres and 943,000 square feet of buildings, officials said.

Adaron is a Durham real-estate firm that has worked on speculative office developments, property management and commercial and retail leasing.

Martin Says He Will Implement Suggestions Of Literacy Council

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin says he hopes implementing several recommendations outlined by a literacy panel will help double programs for adult illiteracy in North Carolina while cutting high school dropout rates in half by the year 2000.

The panel proposed creating a North Carolina Advisory Council on Literacy whose 22 members would coordinate state efforts and help oversee a new Literacy Trust Fund.

The commission report released Thursday called for "immediate attention" to such things as developing funding guidelines to encourage research and development of innovative and alternative programs, develop ways to measure program performance and student progress, develop a uniform reporting system to notify community colleges of high school dropouts and encourage development of professional, full-time literacy teachers.

"It's in every region of the state. It's in every city of the state," said Bill Friday, former University of North Carolina president and chairman of the governor's commission. "It's in the farming communities, it's in the urban areas."

Friday said the panel found nearly 900,000 people in North Carolina are illiterate, with 23,000 youngsters dropping out of school every year.

"There is a large segment of the population out there that we have lost touch with," he said. "... I think we've got to attack the problem from five or six directions at once."

Turning to the Democrats, Martin said he was surprised at the philosophical distance between Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis and his running mate, conservative Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen.

"Senator Bentsen is not going to be able to campaign on the virtues of his philosophical position and his voting record because that would be undercutting the Democratic candidate for president," Martin said. "Therefore, Senator Bentsen may have to content himself with praising a point of view that he did not support as a senator. As he does it, he will not be coming across as a conservative candidate."

Martin, after praising his Commission on Literacy's recommendations at his weekly news conference, had no trouble reading between the lines of the Democratic National Convention's platform.

"It's been noted that this is the shortest platform since platforms have been written and adopted by a convention," Martin said of a document he said was one-tenth its usual size.

"I guess that means that they're kind of reluctant to show the other 90 percent of what they stand for," he said. "Maybe that's an example of a kind of hidden agenda at work in the national party just as we've seen down here in North Carolina.

"They could have run it down to just a sentence or two by saying to the American people that there are things that some of the more radical among you believe in that the Democratic Party believes in, too, but we're not going to talk about it in this campaign because it might cost us some votes."

On another issue, Martin said he was not aware of likely Republican presidential nominee George Bush's visit to Charlotte on Thursday.

"I certainly support him," Martin said when asked why he did not greet Bush. "After all, I do have a schedule for today, and I don't think I would have wanted to postpone further the report of the Literacy Commission. I'll be campaigning with Vice President Bush on many occasions.

Martin also said it was unfortunate that opponents of luring the superconducting super collider to North Carolina waved a protest sign in front of national television cameras.

"Those things happen and in a free country people are entitled to express themselves for or against anything they want to," he said. "And you can be against the most marvelous, magnificent and constructive thing ever to be envisioned for North Carolina if you want to."

Textbook Review Planned

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A special task force will study whether North Carolina needs to improve the way it selects its textbooks, the chairman of the state Board of Education says.

Howard Haworth said Thursday that board members had become aware during the last year of numerous subtleties in the textbook adoption process that merit a review.

For example, the 14-member textbook commission that now selects books with the aid of hundreds of volunteer readers "may be understaffed considering the importance of the textbook in the education process," Haworth told The News and Observer of Raleigh.

Haworth said he also was concerned that evaluators sometimes have little time to review textbooks. The relationship between the state's curriculum, its specifications for textbooks and the content of the books also needs to be studied, he said.

The task force will be chaired by Barbara Tapscott, vice chairman of the board and assistant superintendent for instruction for Burlington City schools.

"We are looking at how the process itself might be more effective and most efficient," Ms. Tapscott said.

She said the committee will study the procedures of 21 other states that adopt textbooks in a similar fashion to North Carolina.

Ms. Tapscott said the task force would have nine or 10 members, one of whom will be James Ellerbe, chairman of the textbook commission and superintendent of Johnston County schools.

The board's executive committee will select other members before the committee's first meeting on Aug. 9 and 10. The committee will include teachers, an elementary school principal, a worker for the Department of Public Instruction, and a district director of instruction.

The panel probably will meet twice a month for the next six months, Ms. Tapscott said.

Textbook Commission members, who are appointed by the governor, spend about seven months each year reviewing hundreds of books on their own time without pay. Each commissioner enlists the help of other educators to help review the books.

The commission then recommends a list of textbooks to the Board of Education, which typically adopts the list without looking at the books itself.

Local school systems must then spend the $22 million they receive from the state to buy books only on books on the adoption list.

Haworth stopped short of saying changes would be made, but voiced some concern about the current system.

State Education Board Strengthens Standards

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Three years after introducing an $800 million Basic Education Program to improve school quality, the N.C. Board of Education has adopted stricter standards to measure whether schools are succeeding.

The board on Thursday also decided to appoint a task force to assess the state's efficiency in choosing textbooks, and to hold a daylong public hearing on career development Sept. 6 in Raleigh.

The new accreditation program comprises about 200 standards that judge all aspects of education, from student achievement to curriculum to school buildings. It is a supplement to the Basic Education Program, an eight-year plan enacted by the legislature in 1985 to reduce educational disparities between rich and poor school districts.

"The BEP has set up an expanded set of expectations with the resources its providing," said Bill Brown, assistant state superintendent for research and testing. "The expectation is that high achievement will result."

"We all feel that this is the centerpiece of accountability for the BEP," said board Chairman Howard Haworth.

The board established accreditation standards for public and private schools. The standards will go into effect this fall on a trial basis, before final adoption for 1989-90.

Now, local school systems are judged only on how well they meet their own objectives, state officials said.

The new standards measure such things as whether test scores have improved and the number of dropouts has decreased. They also govern student-teacher ratios and whether teachers are certified.

School districts must file a yearly report documenting how they comply. State officials will make on-site school inspections.

Meanwhile, on average, 248,000 North Carolina students taking the 1988 California Achievement Test in grades 3, 6 and 8 scored above the national average or the 50th percentile of all students taking the test, the board said. The students are compared, however, to a national norm that has not been changed since it was set in 1985. A doctor in West Virginia conducted a survey earlier this year that showed most states rate above average on the standardized tests because the national norms are old.

Brown said the results reflect the slow, steady gain the state's students have been making for the last decade.

Third graders scored is the 60th percentile overall, a gain of two percentile points over last year. While sixth graders remained in the 55th percentile and eighth graders climbed by one point to the 53rd percentile.

Scores were lowest in reading with sixth and eighth graders placing in the 51st percentile.

Third graders posted the highest average score by placing in the 65th percentile in math.

Board Calls For Merit Pay Hikes

CHARLOTTE (AP) — The State Board of Education hopes to study a plan to eliminate the decades-old practice of across-the-board raises for teachers and other school employees, substituting merit increases, officials said.

The board, which met Thursday in Charlotte during a school superintendents' conference, endorsed the idea of flexible pay raises and called for a special task force to study that and other teacher pay issues.

"Next year we will make a flat-rate recommendation on educational salaries as we have done in the past," said Howard Haworth, chairman of the board. "At the same time, we will ask the legislature for adequate money for a very thorough and sophisticated study of the educational compensation system."

For years, the General Assembly has granted teachers across-the-board raises to meet rising living costs and to bring teacher salaries more in line with those around the nation.

This summer, the legislature granted a 4.5 percent increase for teachers and all state employees.

The flexible teacher-pay plan is not the first to be proposed linking raises with teacher performance.

A plan developed by the board's personnel committee would give teachers a 6.5 percent overall pay increase next year, with about 1 percent of that, or $25 million, to be placed in a special fund to boost salaries of more-deserving teachers.

The $25 million fund would be used until a Career Development Program, now being tested in 16 school systems, goes into effect statewide in 1991.

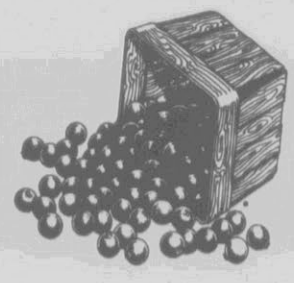

Under that program, good teachers are paid more money as they take on additional responsibilities.

The flexible pay plan would complement the program, say board members who support it.

"We have one more year to go with the flat (salary hike) rate," said Norma Turnage, chairwoman of the board's personnel committee. "We must change the scale in order to incorporate the performance pay, if we do move to statewide implementation."

Not everyone on the board liked the flexible pay idea, however.

Dukakis Declares That 'Reagan Era Is Over'

ATLANTA (AP) — Michael Dukakis, promising victory-hungry Democrats a presidency that will make America "greater, better, stronger, prouder," embarks today on a cross-country trek to show that no region will be surrendered to Republican George Bush.

"The Reagan era is over and a new era is about to begin," Dukakis declared in accepting the party's presidential nomination at a tumultuous, confetti-strewn windup session of the Democratic National Convention. Thousands of delegates shouted back, "We're gonna win, we're gonna win."

By early today, the floor of the convention hall — described by some as a an elaborate set for a national television show — had been reduced to piles of debris by a cleanup crew. A few torn placards remained, left behind by the sleepy-eyed delegates now boarding airport buses at their hotels.

Today, Dukakis attends a unity breakfast of the Democratic National Committee and then sets out with running mate Lloyd Bentsen for Bentsen's home state of Texas, a key battleground in the fall battle with Bush.

Over the next three days, stops also are planned in California, where many experts think the election will be settled; North Dakota, in the traditionally Republican Farm Belt where the Democrats hope to make inroads, and in the showdown states of Missouri and Pennsylvania.

"It's time to raise our sights — to look beyond the cramped ideals and limited ambitions of the past eight years," Dukakis told a jubilant convention crowd.

Beyond the rhetoric, there were other reasons for the Democrats to cheer. One was an ABC poll taken Wednesday that gave Dukakis a 53 to 41 percent lead over Bush, a sizable convention-week boost from a 46-45 Republican lead in a poll taken Sunday.

The jammed Omni coliseum — forced to close the gates for a third night because of overcrowding — never seemed smaller as flag-waving, hand-clapping delegates stood shoulder-to-shoulder to cheer Dukakis and Bentsen, clasping their hands high in triumph.

Accepting the vice presidential nomination, Bentsen made no bones about his differences with Dukakis on Contra aid, school prayer, a balanced budget amendment, the MX and B-1 and other policies.

"Of course we have differences of opinion," said the silver-haired Texan, who was put on the ticket to help crack the Republican grip on the South. "But on the basic issues of justice and opportunity, we stand united. Democrats agree that a good job at a fair wage is the passport to opportunity in America."

It was a night for old rivalries to be set aside.

Amid an explosion of cheers, one-time rival Jesse Jackson strode on stage to shake hands with Dukakis, the man he failed to defeat, and with Bentsen, whose job he wanted as a consolation prize.

Dukakis, the cool technocrat who rarely shows emotion, was stirred by the electricity of the evening and the shower of adulation. "I've never had a night quite like this one before," he said.

Delegates gave him rave reviews. "You got the idea he is real, he can feel," said Darrell Ringer, a Kansas farmer who had been pledged to Jackson. "He spoke our language," said Hartford, Conn., Mayor Carrie S. Perry, another Jackson delegate.

Betty Van Uum of St. Louis said that if Bush were watching the speech, "he was probably quaking in his little Gucci shoes."

"We're going to win because we are the party that believes in the American dream," declared Dukakis, the 54-year-old son of Greek immigrants. "I know because I am a product of that dream, and I'm proud of it."

His eyes glistened with tears and his voice caught in his throat as he spoke of his late father, Panos. "How I wish he were here tonight. He'd be very proud of his son and his adopted country."

He said the Nov. 8 election "isn't about ideology. It's about competence."

He said a Dukakis administration would have a Justice Department "that isn't the laughingstock of the nation."

Dukakis promised to do better than the incumbents in protecting the environment and fighting illegal drugs. What's more, he said, in a Dukakis White House, "if you accept the privilege of public service, you had better understand the responsibilities of public service.

"If you violate that trust, you'll be fired; if you violate the law, you'll be prosecuted; and if you sell arms to the Ayatollah, don't expect a pardon from the president of the United States."

North Carolinians At Convention Praise Dukakis

Jordan Says Dukakis 'Put It All Together'

ATLANTA (AP) — Michael Dukakis enthralled fellow Democrats with an acceptance speech challenging Americans to make a better world and answered critics who said the presidential nominee is uninspiring, North Carolina Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan says.

"It was one of the most moving speeches I ever heard," Jordan shouted over the tumultuous celebration in the Omni convention hall as the Democratic National Convention drew to a close Thursday.

"Governor Dukakis really put it all together," Jordan said. "I don't think the Democratic Party could be any more psyched. He tied everything together — family, the dreams."

With North Carolina's 95-member delegation heading home today, leaders eagerly looked forward to their nominee's first post-convention appearance in the state. Dukakis will campaign in North Carolina Aug. 18 at a place to be decided later, Jordan said.

"Hearing Michael Dukakis speak, when he talked about honest government, it really hit a nerve," the Democratic gubernatorial nominee said."

Jordan sharply dismissed Republican Gov. Jim Martin's assertion Thursday that Dukakis and Jordan had "hidden agendas" they feared to unveil until after the election.

"I hope that's all they can find to campaign on — slogans and gimmicks," Jordan said. "We'll talk about honesty and integrity."

Earlier, he and other North Carolina delegates said Dukakis and his fellow Democrats should counter Republican attacks but keep their focus on jobs, education and good ethics.

"It's a different challenge now than it was in the primary, when you had a whole lot of candidates and they weren't throwing around 'liberal' and 'conservative' tags that much," Jordan said.

Delegates were joyful that the Dukakis nomination had been pulled off Wednesday without alienating the Jesse Jackson camp.

But the euphoria was tempered by a common realization that the GOP would field a formidable ticket, headed by George Bush and Martin, in a state it has carried in four of the past five presidential elections.

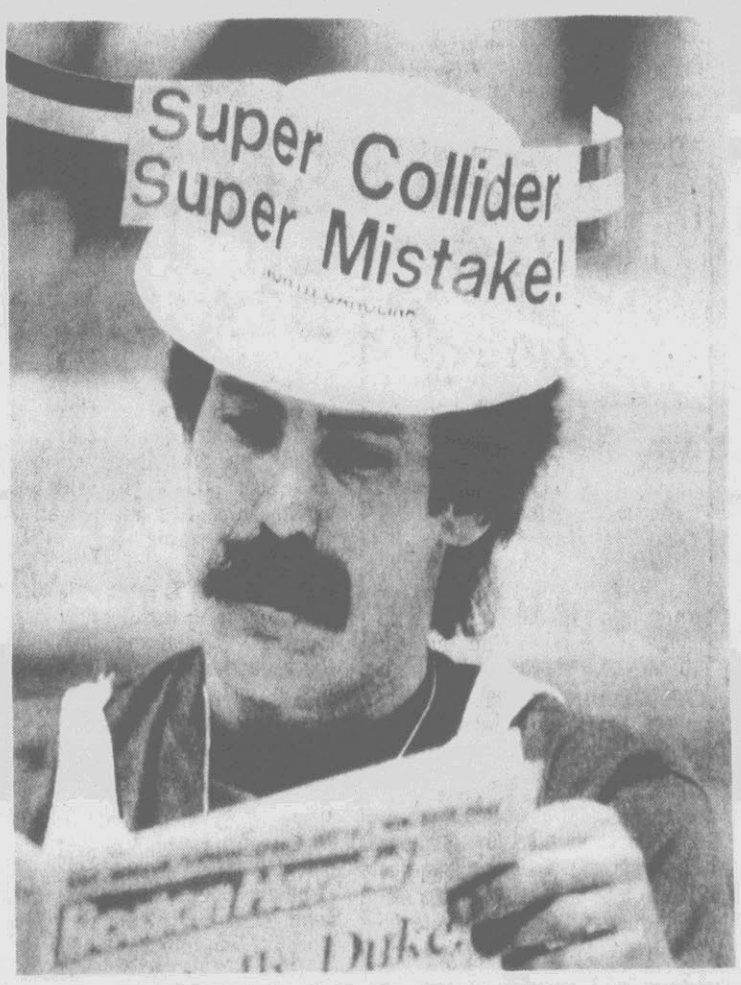

The Democrats also were bracing for Republican charges that Dukakis is a big-spending, high-tax, Northeastern left-winger. The National Congressional Club, Sen. Jesse Helms' political organization, this week kicked off a television ad campaign dubbing Dukakis and Sen. Ted Kennedy "a couple of Massachusetts liberals."

North Carolina delegates said the GOP strategy would backfire but that Dukakis had to make the right moves to parry the attacks.

"He has to ... stick to his message, counter the charges and sell his vision on America," Jordan said.

Linda Ashendorf, a Democratic National Committee member from Charlotte, said North Carolina voters were "tired and sick to their stomachs of negative campaigning."

Although Dukakis has been criticized as unexciting and unfeeling, North Carolinians and other Americans are less interested in charisma than they were, Ms. Ashendorf said. "After what we've had in Washington for the past seven and a half years, competence, organization high morals and smarts are going to be very important."

DOWN-HOME ISSUE — North Carolina delegate Mike Fennell expresses his views on a statewide issue, the Super Collider, as he relaxes with a newspaper during the final night of the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta. Delegates returned home to North Carolina today after four days of tending to the business of a national campaign.

State Party Leaders Say Ethical Clouds, Economic Questions To Bring Voters

ATLANTA (AP) — Ethical clouds hanging over the Reagan administration and economic uncertainty will prompt North Carolinians to vote Democratic, three of the state's congressmen said in speeches to the party's national convention.

"On the question of values and character ... it's sort of like an onion: you peel away and peel away and when you get to the core, there's nothing there," Rep. Steve Neal said Thursday.

Neal and Reps. James M. Clarke and David Price were among a parade of House members allotted two minutes apiece for speeches on the convention's final day.

Of the state's eight House Democrats, they generally are regarded as facing the toughest GOP opposition.

Clarke, whose opponent in his revolving-door 11th District is Charles Taylor of Brevard, also emphasized the morals theme.

"The American people are fed up with the lack of integrity and the dishonesty and greed in the Reagan-Bush administration," Clarke said. "Above all, they want honesty."

Americans favor a strong defense "but they don't want bribery of Pentagon officials by defense consultants with waste and mismanagement in weapons procurement," he said.

"They want government help with day care and an all-out attack on drugs at all levels, but they don't want these programs run by officials who line their own pockets in the process."

Neal, the 5th District representative from Winston-Salem facing businessman Lyons Gray, hailed the party's diversity. "What brings us together is this: we share a common vision," he said.

People frequently ask Neal how the Dukakis-Bentsen ticket will fare in his district, Neal said.

"I say this: the Reagan-Bush team has been very cruel to our farmers and our textile workers," he said. "Our people are against these crazy Republican debts, mismanagement, waste, fraud and contempt for our Constitution."

Price, a freshman challenged by Raleigh businessman Tom Fetzer in the 4th District, discussed his first-term legislative initiatives. He said the House had passed a bill he sponsored designed to require fair marketing of home-equity loans.

Bush Shrugs Off Convention Barbs

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Vice President George Bush, making a fund-raising trip to Charlotte, continued to shrug off barbs aimed at him during the Democratic National Convention this week and suggested the Democrats lack unity.

Bush, the likely GOP presidential nominee, also told reporters Thursday he probably won't name a running mate until the Republican convention.

But he refused to rule out any of the names shouted by reporters: Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas and his wife, former Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole, Rep. Jack Kemp of New York, Illinois Gov. James Thompson and California Gov. George Deukmejian.

Bush swept Southern primary states in March, carrying both North Carolina and South Carolina.

"I will do well in the South, but I have a national strategy," Bush said. "I feel good about Super Tuesday, and I have no reason to believe I won't do well in the South and the Southwest."

He said he'll emphasize education, peace and the economy in the two states as elsewhere, apparently in a strategy to campaign on continuing the Reagan years.

Referring to North Carolina, where the textile industry has been hit hard by imports, Bush described himself as "not a protectionist." But he said he felt existing trade legislation should be better enforced.

Bush also attended another fund-raising event in Greenville, S.C., later Thursday.

Bush prefaced his remarks by saying that he was trying to keep a low profile during the last two days of the Democratic convention in Atlanta.

"This is a good way to be doing it now. It wouldn't be good to look like we're frantically jumping around trying to make a lot of news," he said.

Bush said he watched some of Wednesday night's convention coverage and planned to be watching Thursday night when Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis gave his acceptance speech.

Bush declined to respond to the so-called "Bush bashing" that has been taking place at the Democratic Convention.

"I'm not going to respond to Ted Kennedy, of all people," he said, a reference to a speech given earlier in the week by the U.S. Senator from Massachusetts. "Why should I get uptight about some gimmick at the convention?"

Bush also said, "Soon the convention will be gone with the wind," an apparent reference to the Margaret Mitchell's book of the same name, which was set in Atlanta, where the Democratic National Convention is being held.

He did say he was looking forward to the upcoming debates, saying "Dukakis vs. Bentsen — it's going to be wonderful," referring to political differences between members of the Democratic ticket.

Threat To Israel Grows If Iran, Iraq Talk Peace

HATZERIM AIR FORCE BASE, Israel (AP) — Israel's Arab enemies have a combined air force almost as large as NATO's, and the threat is growing with the prospect of an end to the Iran-Iraq war, Israel's air force commander says.

Maj. Gen. Avihu Bin-Nun said Israel's air force was investing heavily in pilot training, new tactics and technology to meet the challenge of an unprecedented Arab arms buildup.

"We are trying to keep the qualitative edge, but when you look at the numbers, it gets more and more difficult all the time," Bin-Nun told reporters Thursday at the Hatzerim Air Force base in the southern Negev Desert.

But he added: "We believe we can cope even with the new technology the Arab countries are getting from all over the world."

Bin-Nun said most of the billions of dollars Arab countries have spent on weapons in recent years have gone toward beefing up their air power. He said Israel was especially concerned about the arms buildup in Iraq, Syria and Saudia Arabia.

"The number of fighters that can attack Israel in 20 minutes of flight is more than 1,500," he said.

The London-based International Institute for Strategic Studies says in its 1987-88 report that the Arab countries most likely to engage in a war with Israel have a combined force of 2,358 combat aircraft, compared to 676 in Israel and 2,409 in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's European deployment areas.

Israel was very concerned about the recent $30 billion British arms sale to Saudi Arabia, a country that has participated directly or indirectly in all wars against Israel, Bin-Nun said.

The package includes sophisticated Tornado fighter planes whose range enables them to hit any Israeli target from Saudi Arabia, he said.

"We must take into account that in case of war (against Israel) the equipment either will be used by the Saudis or sent over to one of the countries at war with us," Bin-Nun said.

He said the agreement with Britain did not bar the Saudis from sending weapons to other countries.

In addition, Saudi Arabia has transferred billions of dollars worth of arms purchased from the United States to Iraq, apparently without U.S. approval, he said.

With the prospect of a cease-fire in the Iran-Iraq war, the Iraqi air force also has become a greater threat, he said.

He said Iraq has sophisticated fighter planes supplied by the French and Soviets and has gained a great deal of experience during the 8-year-old Persian Gulf war.

But Bin-Nun said the Iraqis "haven't achieved what an air force of this size could have achieved after so many years of experience," and that Israel could cope with the threat.

The Iranian air force poses no threat because it is small and poorly maintained, said Bin-Nun.

Another potential threat comes from Syria, one of Israel's most implacable enemies, he said.

Since Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon, Syria has tripled the number of ground-to-air missiles, and today batteries of SAM-5 missiles are aimed at all of Israel's air space, he said.

"If you fly over the southern part of Israel above 20,000 feet, you are under the cover of the SAM-5s," he said. "You can shoot down airplanes over here from Syria."

In addition, Syria reportedly is buying M-9 surface-to-surface missiles from China and, according to Israeli officials, is developing chemical warheads.

"We are taking the threat from Syria very seriously," Bin-Nun said, but "if we have to fight the Syrians, we will suprise them again."

He also vowed that Israel would retaliate harshly against any missile attack. During the 1973 Middle East war, for example, Syria aimed a missile at a northern Israeli air force base, but struck an Israeli village instead, he said.

"The next morning, 80 bombs hit general headquarters in the middle of Damascus," he said. "The air force is capable of hitting any target within any distance. We proved it once, and we hope we don't need to prove it again."

In another development, Bin-Nun said Israel hoped to sign a new contract with the United States soon for the purchase of additional F-15 fighter planes. He would not elaborate.

Iran Accuses Iraq Of Sabotage Of Peace Efforts

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Iran accused Iraq of trying to sabotage U.N. efforts to end the 8-year-old Persian Gulf War by insisting on face-to-face talks. Iraq refused to say whether it would accept a U.N. cease-fire team.

U.N. and Iranian officials said Thursday that the eight-person U.N. team sent by Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar to arrange a cease-fire, would arrive Sunday in Tehran.

Iraq, which has a string of major military victories, is insisting on direct talks with Iran in New York to work out details of a comprehensive peace, including a cease-fire. It has withheld approval for the visit of a cease-fire team.

Iran, which seeks an immediate cease-fire, rejects direct talks and wants to negotiate through the United Nations.

Diplomatic sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Western leaders were trying to persuade Baghdad to soften its position.

Iran said it would welcome the eight-man mission coming from Vienna and Jerusalem, including U.N. military officers. It was not known when the team would visit Baghdad.

Perez de Cuellar said that after the team's week-long visit he would be able to set all the dates to set Security Council Resolution 598 in motion.

The resolution, passed a year ago, calls for an immediate cease-fire, prisoner exchange, troop withdrawal, comprehensive peace talks and an impartial body to determine which side started the conflict.

Iran announced Monday that it unconditionally accepts Resolution 598 and wants an immediate cease-fire. Iraq, which has said for the past year that it accepts the resolution, now says Iran must prove its sincerity in direct talks before a cease-fire.

Iranian Ambassador Mohammad Ja'afar Mahallti denounced Iraq's new proposals as efforts to "sabotage the peace process." He said Iraq was trying to introduce "extraneous elements which will only complicate the whole thing."

"Iraq wants to gain some more territory and leverage," he said.

Iranian Counselor Mohammad Javad Zarif said Iraq is "going against its own statements endorsing Resolution 598 which calls for an immediate cease-fire."

He said Iran has "unconditionally accepted the resolution and its implemention in explicit statements" by his nation's highest leaders.

Prosecutor Condemned For Remark

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of an Arab-American group is condemning a federal prosecutor who said one of eight men accused of illegal pro-Libyan activities was involved in a plot to assassinate a high-level U.S. official.

An administration source later identified the target as former National Security Council aide Oliver L. North.

The comments by U.S. Attorney Henry Hudson about an assassination plot are "outrageous ... unsubstantiated allegations which are not even part of the charges in this case," Abdeen Jabara, president of the American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee, said Thursday.

Hudson made the comments Wednesday in Alexandria, Va., in a court appearance by six men charged with violating the U.S. economic boycott of Libya.

The men allegedly used money sent from Libya to support pro-Libya demonstrations in the United States and to finance travel to Libya by American minorities. The boycott allows such money to be used only for the educational expenses of Libyan students in the United States.

Two other men were charged in the same case, in Denver and Ann Arbor, Mich.

During the Alexandria court appearance, Hudson said one of those charged, Mousa Hawamda, "was involved in a potential plot to assassinate a high government official of the United States." An administration source, speaking on the condition of anonymity, identified the target as North, who as a National Security Council aide masterminded counterterrorism activities against Libya, including the April 1986 bombing of Tripoli.

One of Hawamda's attorneys, Russell Gaspar, said in an interview that "we deny on behalf of Hawamda involvement in any sort of assassination plot." He said he and Hawamda's other attorney, Ray Hanna, would seek to have their client released. All six were detained without bond.

Jabara also said his office has received a recent rash of calls from Arab-Americans across the nation who have been harassed by the FBI with unannounced visits to them and their neighbors that were intended to gather information about political views and activities as opposed to criminal activities.

Sue Schnitzer, an FBI spokeswoman, had no comment on Jabara's remarks. She said information about political views and activities might be sought in investigations involving, for example, foreign counterintelligence or terrorism. But she denied that the bureau would conduct an investigation that was politically motivated.

Extradition Fight Looms Over Drug King

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) — A Bolivian believed to be the world's biggest cocaine baron was behind bars today after police trudged through a jungle to one of his five ranches and arrested him as he slept, authorities said.

Robert Suarez Gomez, accused of peddling cocaine by the ton through a vast global network, will not be extradited to face drug charges in the United States but instead will serve a 15-year prison term here, the government said.

U.S. officials said they still will seek to have Suarez Gomez, 56, brought to trial in the United States.

The arrest of the debonair Suarez Gomez, who also has been accused of helping finance the bloody military coup that overthrew the civilian government in 1980, was greeted with jubilation.

"He's the biggest cocaine producer in the world. He has enormous acreage in coca plants," said Chief Assistant U.S. Attorney Richard Gregorie in Miami.

Suarez Gomez was captured Wednesday by 10 narcotics officers who trooped through tropical jungles all night and raided his El Sujo ranch at dawn, Interior Minister Juan Carlos Duran said.

Two bodyguards also were arrested and 20 automatic weapons were seized, Duran told a news conference Thursday.

Suarez Gomez was flown to La Paz from Trinidad city, Duran said. El Sujo, about 25 miles from Trinidad, is one of Suarez Gomez's five ranches in the heart of the tropical Beni region in northeast Bolivia.

Until now, Suarez Gomez has used his money and influence to buy his freedom in Bolivia. He publicly spoke of paying off political figures and policemen.

"President Victor Paz Estenssoro says he is very pleased with Suarez Gomez's arrest and that the fight against drugs is the top priority of the government," Duran told reportes.

Duran said Bolivia will not extradite Suarez Gomez to the United States because of the 15-year prison sentence handed down here by a judge earlier this year.

Suarez Gomez did not show up for his trial and was tried, convicted and sentenced in absentia on drug trafficking charges.

Duran said Bolivia has no extradition treaty with the United States, but U.S. drug officials said they would seek to try Suarez Gomez on trafficking charges in the United States regardless.

Gregorie said Thursday that an extradition request would be entered immediately.

U.S. Drug Enforcement Association spokesman Jack Hook said in Miami that Suarez Gomez was indicted in Miami in 1980 for conspiracy to peddle 854 pounds of cocaine, but that Suarez Gomez commonly deals in tons of cocaine.

Hook noted that Carlos Lehder Rivas, leader of a group of drug kingpins known as the Medellin Cartel, was sentenced in Jacksonville, Fla., on Wednesday to life in prison without parole.

"I think the Carlos Lehder case goes to show countries that if they arrest traffickers, here (in the United States) there are jails that can hold them, there are courts that will try them and most definitely will sentence them," he said.

Suarez Gomez's son, Roberto Suarez Levy, was extradited from Switzerland to Miami in 1981 on drug trafficking charges. He was found innocent and after his release from a Miami jail was welcomed as a hero in Bolivia.

While independent of the Medellin Cartel, Suarez Gomez allegedly associated with the Colombia-based organization on some enterprises, said Hook. But his own smuggling ring was self-contained.

"His operations consist of growing coca leaf, manufaturing cocaine and shipping it to the United States," said Hook.

"He could be considered one of the pioneers involved in growing, manufacturing and trafficking cocaine to the United States," he said.

The DEA says Suarez Gomez operated from one of his ranches. Planes would fly cocaine paste from the Chapare region to the south for processing at his labs before shipment to Colombia, the U.S. drug agency alleges.

In 1980, the Bolivan Human Rights Association says, Suarez Gomez helped finance the military coup that overthrew the civilian government of Lidia Gueiler Tejada, the interim president, and installed a government that hired Italian, German and Argentine mercenaries to undertake a campaign of terror.

Under that right-wing government, headed by Gen. Luis Garcia Meza, drug traffickers operated with impunity and left-wing political figures and labor leaders were killed, tortured or exiled.

The mercenaries went after opposition figures and provided protection to traffickers. Human rights activists said Suarez Gomez was the main player on behalf of cocaine traffickers.

Fire Drama: Crew Barely Escaped Firestorm

RAIL ROAD FLAT, Calif. (AP) — Firefighter Tim Moyles tried to save a home but wound up on a hot seat — literally — when his pumper truck roared out from beneath a firestorm.

"I've never felt anything like it. I've never been that hot," Moyles said Thursday as firefighters got the upper hand on twin blazes that have burned 12,500 acres in rural Calaveras County. Crews hope to contain them tonight.

Moyles, 27, and three other members of a California Department of Forestry pumper truck crew sped out of a crashing wave of flame that swallowed a home near this old gold-mining town, 150 miles east of San Francisco.

Moyles jumped on the open back of the truck and pulled a heat-resistant blanket over himself, but the oven-like temperatures melted the vinyl seat under him into lumpy rivulets surrounded by blisters.

"When you pull the cover over, you can't see anything, I didn't know what was happening," he said. "My main concern was just to make sure I didn't fall off the back of the truck."

Arson is suspected as the cause of the blazes that began Tuesday and have razed six houses. Authorities estimate losses and the cost of fighting the fires at $4.3 million.

In Wyoming, firefighters made progress on a wildfire covering more than 17,000 acres in the Bridger-Teton National Forest and crews in Oregon fought a 150-acre blaze out of control in the Umatilla National Forest.

The Calaveras flare-up was typical for this summer's fast-moving blazes that have thrown flaming debris far ahead of them in rugged drought-parched terrain thick with timber and brush.

Moyles and Dan Miller, the 34-year-old captain of CDF Engine No. 4481 of Valley Springs, were chasing spot fires on a ridge when they saw gas ignite from a propane tank next to the home a quarter-mile away. A pumper crewed by volunteers fled, out of water.

"I saw the structure was still standing, so we went down to save it," said Miller, who lives in Angels Camp. "But just after we got there, the house exploded into flames."

"The wind shifted and the fire blew down on us," he added.

Miller shouted at his crew to board, and they roared down the road as "the wind turned the flames into a furnace," said Moyles.

"We were a little concerned about Tim on the back (on the truck)," but Moyles was unhurt when they pulled over a few hundred yards away at a wide spot in the road, Miller said.

"If we had stalled, we'd have lost the engine," he said. "I thought we would have real burn damage to the engine, but I guess we didn't stay long enough."

"A couple of engines have gotten so hot the (insignia) seals and paint have peeled," he said.

Russ Hasemeier, 22, the third member of the crew, jumped into the cab with Miller.

"I never guessed a structure could go up like that," Hasemeier said.

The crew took refuge in a large barren area cleared by a bulldozer. The firefighters waited while the fires swept past, feeling safe by comparison with their earlier scrape.

When Miller got on the radio, word of the escape spread like wildfire. "When something goes out on the air, everybody finds out," he said.

The fourth member of the crew, who was off when the fire started Tuesday and has since joined his comrades, was disappointed.

"I missed all the real good fireworks," Frederick Lewis said.

Pro-Abortion Nuns Side With 'Women'

By JANE M. ANDERSON
Associated Press Writer

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Two pro-abortion nuns have elected to resign from their order and "stand with women" rather than side with a "patriarchal" Roman Catholic church.

"We aren't nuns anymore," said Barbara Ferraro and Patricia Hussey said Thursday, announcing an end to their long battle with the Vatican over their right to support abortion.

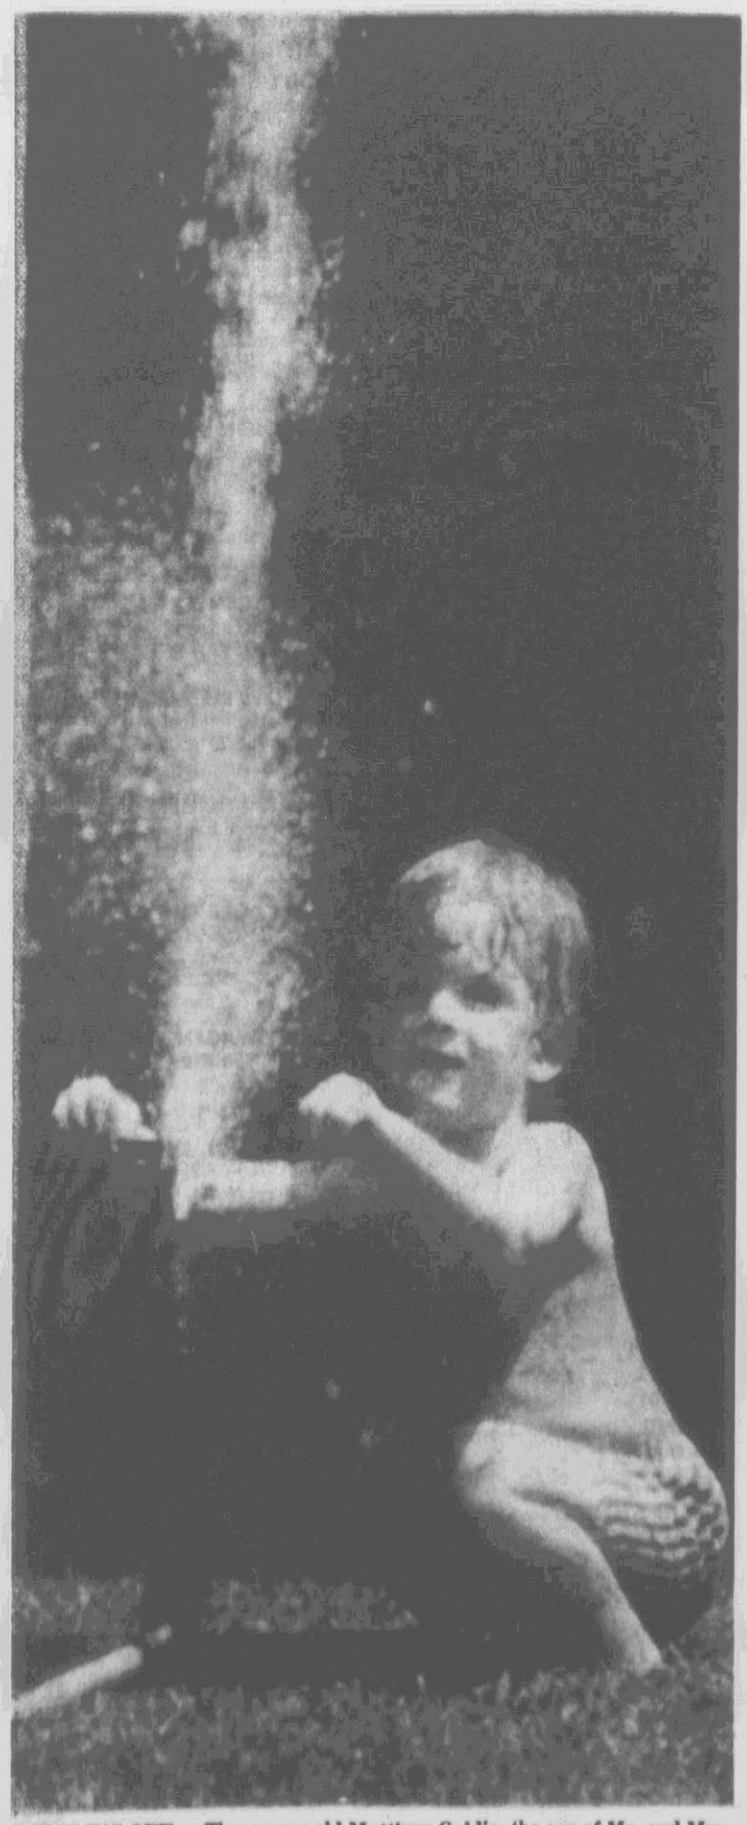

"For us to stand with women, we need to renounce the differences, privileges and even limitations that are part of membership in a religious community in a patriarchal church," they said in a resignation letter.

The two said they will remain in the church.

Six weeks ago, the Sisters of Notre Dame de Namur decided to drop expulsion proceedings against Hussey and Ferraro.

The two have been at odds with the order since Oct. 7, 1984, when they and 94 other Catholics, including 22 other nuns and four priests, signed a statement published in The New York Times saying there is a diversity of opinion about abortion within the church.

Catholic leaders threatened the priests and nuns who signed the statement with dismissal if they didn't recant their statements.

Audience For Religious Books Growing Rapidly

NEW YORK (AP) — Because either they're more appealing or more keenly needed, Christian books these days are commanding a swelling audience that's looking for help in living.

That's the assessment of William R. Anderson, president of the Christian Booksellers Association, whose international convention in Dallas this week staged one of the nation's biggest trade shows.

It involves a $2 billion annually retail industry, doubled since 1980.

"The volume is growing steadily," Anderson said in a telephone interview. "The market has expanded beyond the pew, partly because the product appeal is broader and also because of sociological trends.

"There's a renewed interest in religion in general, an acute awareness of the spiritual side of life, a return to Judeo-Christian values."

About 11,000 people were registered for the trade show, buyers from about 5,200 Christian bookstores across the nation placing orders with about 350 exhibitors spread over 275,000 square feet of the Dallas Convention Center.

As part of it, about 20 educational workshops were offered on such things as finance, marketing and management.

In size, the affair is in the top 1½ percent of the 8,000 trade shows that take place annually in this country, as rated by the Trade Show Bureau.

Statistical extrapolations indicate the Christian bookstores sell about 80 million volumes annually, with best sellers often selling two or three times more than books on secular best-seller lists.

Anderson said readers especially want "self-help kind of books" on difficult issues of life and "understanding of them on a spiritual plane," both for themselves and their children.

"Publishers are dealing with hard issues that were skirted a decade ago, books on AIDS, child abuse, putting a broken marriage together, death and dying, life-related issues that everybody faces.

"We're selling information about life, how to change, how to determine values, what the Scriptures have to say about it."

He said there also is big demand for books for young parents wanting "quality products" focused on nurturing children in values of honesty, integrity, respect for parents and other authorities.

"There's more recognition of the role of parents, and a conservative value swing in terms of Judeo-Cbhristian values."

Anderson, 40, whose organization is based in Colorado Springs, Colo., and whose glossy trade monthly, Bookstore Journal, has 8,000 subscribers, said books make up about 45 percent of Christian bookstore sales.

An increasing proportion, now about 18 percent, is music tapes, with Christian singers such as Amy Grant, Sandy Patti and others gaining popularity and producing hits that cross over into the secular field.

"Christian music is one of the fasting growing areas of our stores," Anderson said. He noted that the stores also handle a variety of other merchandise, gifts, greeting cards, video and church supplies.

"They've really become department stores of Christian products," he said. "That's part of the story of what's happening. The variety of products allows selection according to the media people want to use.

"It also provides a variety in levels of complexity, from kids to adults, according to education and theological depth, from simple to the more educated and knowledgeable."

Studies by John Dessauer, director of the Center for Book Research at the University of Scranton in Pennsylvania, project Christian book sales will reach $3.6 billion annually by 1990.

Anderson said store managers have become more professionalized and sophisticated in their approach, and also younger, their average age dropping from 54 to 37 in the last 20 years.

"It's viewed more as a viable career from the front end rather than as a post-retirement kind of career," he said.

He said the present demand for self-help books reflects the pragmatic American streak to find a "quick fix" in a "society more success oriented."

Having Older Parents Has Disadvantages

By BETH ANN KRIER
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

When they were kids, some of them feared they would awaken to find that one of their parents had died in the night. One woman was so afraid her parents would die in their sleep, she visited their bedroom to check that they were still breathing.

More commonly, these adults cite such standard childhood embarrassments as hearing a waiter in a restaurant say to their parents, "Oh. I see you brought your grandchildren."

And for some offspring of older parents, the pressures only intensified with time.

Debra McKee, 33, a hairdresser-graduate student from Whittier, Calif., who has lost touch with her father and whose mother died a year ago, recalled: "My mom was 39 when I was born and my father was 50. They were already grandparents by the time they had me.

"When I was 20, my mother was on Social Security and becoming more dependent on me. I thought I'd have to hurry up and have my kids so they could have time with her and she could enjoy them before she died."

Yet other children of older parents cherish the reality that their parents differed from the norm. "They had their act together," David Wilson, a 38-year-old actor and television host, said of his mother (39 when he was born) and recently deceased father (50 at his birth).

"They were very healthy and fairly fit. Their wiseness and stability were real advantages."

Sociologist Monica Morris calls individuals such as Wilson and McKee "last-chance children." And in her controversial new book ("Last-Chance Children, Growing Up With Older Parents"; Columbia University Press), the author describes research that may rock couples who are deferring parenting until their late 30s and beyond. Already, she acknowledged, she has been accused by some older parents of stirring up trouble where none exists.

Among Morris' findings: While there are many benefits to being the child of older parents, about half the grown children in her survey also perceived painful disadvantages.

And while the subject of late-parenting has been explored repeatedly in social research and the popular press, Morris claims her book offers one of the first investigations of children's perceptions of what it means to live with older parents.

A sociology professor at the California State University at Los Angeles, Morris was intrigued by the numbers of women postponing childbirth and talking only of how wonderful this would be for their offspring. How nice it would be, that view held, that those babies would be born into households that were ready for them, economically and emotionally.

Increasing numbers of Americans have decided in favor of the option; the U.S. Census Bureau has charted a dramatic increase in mothers bearing children at age 35 or later.

Martin O'Connell, chief of the Bureau's fertility statistics branch, said there was a 71 percent increase in births to women 35 and older between 1975 and 1985. (Though such births are still in the minority, they grew from about 4.6 percent or 143,356 of the recorded births in 1975 to about 6.5 percent or 245,832 of the births in 1985.)

Although no official vital statistics exist for the years since, O'Connell said unofficial "survey data" collected by the Census Bureau suggests the trend continues.

Because Morris felt it would be extremely hard to gather a truly random sample of children born to older parents ("birth records are just not kept this way,") she decided on "a phenomenological approach." She told people she was looking to interview children of older parents , and wound up interviewing 22 children whose parents were at least age 35 when they were born.

After 22 separate, one- to five-hour interviews with men and women aged 17 to 54 (all Americans reared in six different states save for one who grew up in Britain), Morris found her subjects almost evenly divided on the issue. Half the "late babies" found the experience positive or unaffecting; the other half said their parents' ages "affected their lives deeply and usually negatively."

And when Morris asked her subjects if they would choose to have children at relatively advanced ages – or would recommend late-parenting to their friends, only two wholeheartedly endorsed the practice.

Morris, a London native and now a Hollywood resident and U.S. citizen, is in her 50s and had her own children in her 20s and early 30s. She is careful neither to recommend nor condemn late parenting. "If they want to have children, who am I to say what they should do? People must do what they must do, but they should be aware of the (possible) disadvantages to the child," she said.

The most often cited disadvantage of the now-adult late-children, Morris said, also was the least serious. Her subjects repeatedly told her that as children and teen-agers they were embarrassed their parents looked so old, so different from the parents of their peers.

The next, most-cited disadvantage was extremely serious: "The (children's) fear that they would have to be responsible for their aging, ailing parents while they were still young."

Other disadvantages the subjects described included having parents unwilling or unable to participate in sports, having parents who were more likely to die when they were still young, and experiencing a "double generation gap" between themselves and their parents.

On the plus side, the children most often cited the advantage of having parents who were more settled financially and emotionally. Some subjects also perceived that their older parents were wiser and more patient than younger parents. And a few of the interviewees also believed their parents' marriages to be more stable than those of younger parents.

Morris conceded that her research is unsettling to many of today's older parents. They typically tell her that the advantages they offer their children far outweigh any disadvantages.

"What they say is that things are different now," she said. "We eat better. We exercise. They really think they're going to live forever."

Morris also said that some older parents react defensively when they encounter her findings. "Some people will not really read what you write," she lamented. "They see only the part that upsets them."

In the academic world, the reaction to "Last-Chance Children" has been mixed. Ed Zigler, Sterling professor of psychology at Yale University , described Morris' findings as making "good sense."

But he cautioned, as does Morris, against stereotyping older parents on the basis of age. "The fact is some older parents stay young until they're 85, some are middle-aged by the time they're 25," he said. "But by and large, I'm rather impressed with what she's done. She has much too small a sample to draw any conclusions, but she knows that. What you lose in numbers, you make up in depth."

Elaine Gordon, a Santa Monica, Calif., developmental psychologist who specializes in fertility and alternative-parenting options, noted that today's older parents are hardly the same as those a generation or two ago.

"We do live longer nowadays. An older parent of 20 years ago is not what an older parent is today," said Gordon, who with her clinical psychologist husband, Edwin Greenberg, adopted a daughter 3½ years ago when she was 38 and he was 46.

Health Care System Critical

By DEBORAH SEWARD
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Room 890 in the intensive care unit of the Banacha Street hospital is spacious and clean. Its neurological unit has four new heart-monitors and state-of-the-art respirators.

But it has not had a patient in the last two years.

"We have equipment worth tens of thousands of dollars, but we don't have the zlotys to pay the nurses so the equipment goes unused," said Dr. Andrzej Friedman, a neurologist at the hospital.

Around the corner, other rooms in the hospital are so crowded that critically ill stroke patients are kept on beds in the corridor, a sight typical in many Polish hospitals.

Forty years after the communist government promised its citizens free and adequate health care, the system itself is in critical condition.

Poles must pay at every stage for decent care.

Shortages of supplies requires, for example, the re-sterilization and reuse of disposable needles, intravenous plasma units and catheters.

At the same time, Poles in general aren't careful about their own personal health. They are among the world's heaviest smokers and drinkers and their diet is high in animal fat.

The state-run health service, however, puts a low priority on preventive medicine.

"The main difficulty now is the organization of the system and the enormous bureaucracy. We are short of everything but we could do better with what we have if the system were better organized," said Dr. Zofia Kuratowska, a health adviser to the banned Solidarity trade union.

The problems start with hospital buildings. Three-fourths are more than 50 years old, according to a 1987 World Bank study, which concluded that half of the oldest hospitals should be replaced because they cannot be modernized.

One government solution has been to invest in such huge, modern showcases as the Health Center for the Polish Mother in Lodz, a polluted industrial city in central Poland whose residents are among the country's least healthy.

The center's attractive working conditions have drained doctors and nurses from other facilities.

"They (the government) are making these monument buildings that are a real idiocy because they will serve only a few people," said Friedman.

Diagnosis appears to be one of the weak links of the health system. CAT-scans to assess brain damage can take two weeks to process and X-ray film is often faulty.

"In our hospitals the machines only work a few hours a day," said Kuratowski, the Solidarity adviser. "People wait weeks for simple procedures, blocking beds in the hospital, and sometimes it's very dangerous."

She heads the Social Foundation for Workers' Solidarity established by the union to help administer a $1 million grant it received last year from the U.S. Congress. The foundation hopes to establish three diagnostic clinics in Warsaw, Gdansk and Krakow, but plans have been delayed because the government has yet to officially register the foundation.

Being a doctor or nurse is not financially rewarding. At mid-career a doctor earns about 30,000 zlotys ($69) a month and nurses 18,000 zlotys ($41), less than the national average of 42,000 ($97).

"Because of the salary a lot of doctors are trying to emigrate or thinking about it," said Kuratowska. "A young doctor does not make enough money to create a stable life for his family."

As a result, some take money on the side, she added.

"People in hospitals must pay for just about everything and very often, unfortunately, the doctors take money as a bribe."

The cost to patients often runs high.

Admission to some Warsaw maternity wards is 100,000 zlotys ($232); complicated cancer or heart operations can cost 500,000 zlotys ($1,162).

And once a doctor has made a diagnosis, the patient must try to find medicine, which though inexpensive by Western standards is in chronic short supply.

The government allows private or cooperative clinics to take some of the pressures off on the state system, but treatment is expensive. A tooth extraction in a private clinic can cost 15,000 zlotys ($34), more than one-third of the monthly wage.

Although the government plans to reform the health system, it appears reluctant to endorse reforms that ideologically would threaten the concept of socialized free medicine.

Kuratowska believes Poles should be allowed medical insurance so they can recover some of their costs.

That, she said, would make things more equitable in a free-health system where people must pay anyway.

Home Attracts Birds

By PAUL NOWELL
Associated Press Writer

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Elizabeth and Eddie Clarkson's fairy tale life together began on a rather inauspicious note.

"We had just pulled up in front of the house from our honeymoon," Elizabeth recalled. "Eddie couldn't find the key, so he had to jimmy that window over there and push me through."

Once inside, she realized the two-story white house her newlywed husband had built for her was just like she planned it — except for one thing. It stuck out like a sore thumb in the middle of red clay fields.

"I started grubbing in the dirt the next morning," she said.

That was April 1927, two years before the Great Depression. By the time she was finished with her gardening, three acres of barren North Carolina clay fields had been transformed into lush gardens and a bird sanctuary the Clarksons decided to name Wing Haven.

Today, Mrs. Clarkson is a striking woman of 84, four years younger than her husband. They still live in the same house and they host bird lovers from all over the world, although they have turned over Wing Haven's day-to-day operation to a non-profit foundation to ensure its preservation.

Perhaps the most remarkable thing about Wing Haven is its location, smack in the middle of residential Charlotte, which has been growing rapidly in recent years.

Situated in a neighborhood of large homes with expansive yards of their own, Wing Haven does not stand out. But when visitors reach the lush gardens behind the house, the senses are bombarded by roses, azaleas, dogwood, crinium, crape myrtle and hundreds of other plants and trees.

Then there are the birds.

The Clarksons have attracted nearly 150 different species to their urban sanctuary. They go through more than 3,500 pounds of birdseed a year.

When Mrs. Clarkson takes her daily walks, she always carries a pink container of mealworms to feed the cardinals, towhees and other wild birds by hand.

Not unexpectedly, there has been more than one winged house guest. The most famous was a bluebird named Tommy, who never slept outside and took his baths in a bowl in the Clarksons' bathroom.

The little bluebird liked to entertain the Clarksons and their friends by grabbing a flower or a piece of tissue paper and flying back and forth across the living room. Mrs. Clarkson remembers him preening himself in front of a mirror for hours.

At Wing Haven, in the middle of a city of more than 300,000 people, birds seem to feel at home. Wood ducks, catbirds, herons and other wild birds have returned year after year.

It has a similar effect on people.

"There's a feel about Wing Haven that if you become attracted to it you can't get away from it," said curator Wanny Hogewood. "It's such a fragile situation to have such lovely gardens and a bird sanctuary together. That's why we can't do a lot of things here that you'd see in a public garden. The birds need cover for their nests."

In many ways, Wing Haven is a testimony to the human spirit. As young newlyweds back in the late 1920s, the Clarksons began giving each other gifts of bird baths, garden plaques, bench swings — and bricks.

"We've got 347,000 bricks at Wing Haven — enough to build 10 houses," Clarkson said proudly. "We'd give each other 1,000 bricks on our birthdays, or Christmas ... enough to build another path or another 30 feet of a wall."

Mrs. Clarkson designed the gardens, starting with a sprig of honeysuckle and a cutting from her mother's pink rosebush back in her native Texas. The bush is now enormous as it spreads across the front entrance to the gardens.

The Clarksons still wear matching roses from the bush on their lapels every day. "My mother planted that bush back in 1888," she said.

As his wife labored in her beloved gardens, Clarkson's self-appointed task was to see to it that Wing Haven could grow. In the 1930s, he used his skills as a successful real estate developer to purchase some adjacent property so the gardens could be expanded to their present size.

Wing Haven is now a respected bird sanctuary, attracting birds and bird lovers alike from all over the world, including artists Roger Tory Peterson and the late Dorothy Doughty.

In 1970, the Clarksons created the Wing Haven Foundation, a non-profit organization, to ensure the preservation of the gardens and protection for the bird sanctuary. At the Clarksons' insistence, there will never be a charge to tour their gardens.

The Wing Haven Foundation also offers educational programs and raises money to maintain the grounds. Its annual operating budget is about $100,000.

Last year, the foundation's membership doubled to 1,200 members. In addition, $400,000 has been raised to pay for renovations to the two houses on the property and a much-needed parking area.

Personal War On Drugs Is Powerful Message

By JOHN KING
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTA (AP) — The semicircle of children eyed Kitty Dukakis intently as she talked about peer pressure, about accepting an amphetamine from a friend — and about 26 years of addiction that followed. "The words I want to say to you are 'don't start,'" she said.

She also spoke of the fear — and eventual joy — that came with her successful effort to end her dependence on stimulants.

"I gave credit for everything good that happened to me to the pills because I didn't think I could do anything without them," she said, describing the steps that led to her decision to seek treatment in 1982.

"Life is so much sweeter now," a beaming Mrs. Dukakis told the children as her husband Michael stood by her side.

The children hearing the story were gathered Wednesday outside a community center in Conyers, a predominantly black community near Atlanta. They could have been anywhere in America.

As Dukakis crisscrossed the country in his successful quest for the Democratic presidential nomination, he made anti-drug efforts a major issue and his wife his top spokeswoman for the cause.

He talks of tough law enforcement but also compassionate drug education; she speaks of dramatic mood swings and skipping from doctor to doctor to gain a new prescription for the pills she took each morning from age 19 to 45.

"I couldn't stop using them and I became dependent," she told the children in Conyers.

When asked how she kept getting new prescriptions, she said, "I think most physicians and people in the country didn't think they were dangerous."

She then detailed how she hid her addiction from her husband, who met his future wife seven years after she began taking amphetamines to lose weight, and her decision to enter a Minnesota treatment clinic in 1982 in the middle of her husband's successful campaign to regain the governorship he had lost four years earlier.

"I was very scared," she said. "I was afraid because for 26 years, every morning, I had taken a pill, a mind-altering pill."

At that time, Dukakis said his wife was receiving treatment for hepatitis. When she disclosed her addiction at an emotional announcement last year, Dukakis defended his decision to lie about his wife's condition in 1982.

Mrs. Dukakis, in a recent interview, said the decision was made to keep her treatment private because "at that time, I could not handle the public scrutiny. I was embarrassed and vulnerable and afraid."

But now, her victory over drug dependency has become a powerful message of her husband's campaign.

"I feel strong and confident in myself and what I have done," she said. "And secondly, and as important or more important, one of the tenets of recovering is helping other people."

Husband Is Overbearing

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My husband makes all the decisions in this household — major and minor. For instance, he is the only one to adjust the thermostat, car radio, windows, window shades, draperies, etc. He will not take kindly to any suggestions made while he is driving. For example, advising him that the coast is clear when he wants to pass a car or turn is a no-no. Any opinion that is not his own is resented.

It is much easier for me not to make waves than to speak up and have an argument.

He doesn't like my choice of TV programs, and criticizes them to such an extent that he ruins them for me and I turn them off (which he hopes I will, of course). Fortunately, we have three TV sets in the house.

We are retired, as you have probably surmised. Hope you can help me. — ANONYMOUS IN FLORIDA

DEAR ANONYMOUS: Was he this way when you married him? By giving in to him because you didn't want to make waves, you have encouraged his tyrannical behavior. Perhaps if you had made one big wave when he first exhibited such selfish behavior, you wouldn't find yourself in this helpless position in your twilight years.

The likelihood of teaching this old dog new tricks is small. Be glad you can afford three TVs. I hope there's a marriage counselor near you who specializes in women and men who have kept their mouths shut for more than 30 years in order to avoid an argument, because there is a great need for one.

DEAR ABBY: I have been married for 20 years. My husband has an older sister who lives in another state. He and his sister keep in touch by telephoning each other.

When Sister phones and I answer the telephone, she says, "Hello, is Louie there?"

I would expect something like, "Hello. This is Agnes. How are you? May I please speak to Louie?"

Abby, am I expecting too much? Sign me ... LOUSY VIBES IN JERSEY

DEAR LOUSY: No. And your sister-in-law isn't the only one who needs to see this.

DEAR ABBY: This is about that older lady who didn't want her apartment sprayed for bugs because she lived alone and couldn't handle the job of clearing and restocking her cupboards. A man wrote in and asked if there wasn't some kind of volunteer organization that would send somebody out to help her.

You said, "Any volunteer organization that provides that kind of service deserves to be thanked publicly. Who and where are they?"

Abby, may I remind you about the Boy Scouting program? For the rank of Star Scout — that's two ranks below Eagle, the highest rank — a Scout is required to serve his community by volunteering four to six hours. For my Star project, I helped an elderly lady with a yard-cleaning project that was too much for her to handle alone.

Even if a Scout is not working toward a project, our slogan is: Do a good turn daily. I hope this answers your question. — TOM VOS, EAGLE SCOUT, CRYSTAL LAKE, ILL.

DEAR TOM: You've answered my question, and you've also done your good deed for today.

Boat Sinks, 115 Missing

BEIJING (AP) — Rescuers worked frantically today to locate more than 100 people missing from a boat that sank after hitting a rock in a southwest China river, an official report said today. It said four people were killed.

Sixteen crew members and 132 passengers were rescued after the accident Thursday, China News Service said in a report appearing in Hong Kong newspapers.

The survivors included 129 men and 19 women, the news service said in a report from Chengdu, the capital of Sichuan province, about 930 miles southwest of Beijing. Six people required hospitalization.

Sichuan government officials were quoted in the report as saying rescue work was difficult because the accident occurred in a remote area and the river's tide was high.

The boat was heading north from Yiban city to Leshan when it struck the rock and sank at about 4:30 p.m. Thursday in Qianwei County, about 116 miles south of Chengdu, the report said.

The news service did not say how fast the boat was going and did not give the depth or width of the river at the site of the accident.

Many people got on and off the passenger boat along the route, making it difficult for officials to determine the exact number of passengers on board when the vessel sank.

The boat's capacity was 324 and initial estimates placed the number of people on board at about 260, China News Service said. The report said it was not clear if the boat was carrying passengers from outside China.

The Leshan Foreign Affairs Office, contacted by telephone from Beijing, said that Sichuan Governor Zhang Haoru and Vice Governor Ma Lin had gone to the scene but that no details were immediately available.

A Chongqing Central Shipping Administration official, also reached by telephone from Beijing, said the boat belonged to the Leshan branch of the Chongqing Shipping Co.

Smith Joins The Democrats

"Martin, at least to my knowledge, has not made the effort to ease the friction," Martin said. "And look what happened at the Democratic convention in Atlanta. (Democratic presidential nominee Michael) Dukakis was willing to take people at both ends of the party and work together."

Smith said he had not initially supported state GOP Chairman Jack Hawke, but once Hawke was elected he was willing to cooperate for the good of the party. But Smith said Hawke and other moderate Republicans were not willing to work together.

"My impression was Mr. Hawke and others don't forget people who have opposed them in the past, so there is really no cooperation," Smith said.

Smith said he remains a conservative, but he believes there is a place for him in the Democratic Party.

"I feel like one of the major unheard of constituencies in the state is the conservative Democrats," he said. "I am now one of them"

Smith said he will support Democratic candidates in the November election, including Robert Jordan, who is running against Martin for governor.

Smith said he is supporting the Democrats for philosophical reasons, and not because he has been promised any position or appointment. "There has absolutely been no quid pro quo — no promises. My reasons for doing this has been made on principle."

Candidates Open Race

George Bush and the Republicans."

They were visiting three of the four largest states, each of which loom as crucial showdown states: California, the largest with 41 electoral votes; Texas; and Pennsylvania, the fourth largest with 25 states.

"They're all important states that we intend to contend for," Duncan said.

The concluded four-day convention had a heavy focus on the South and Texas, with Texans wielding the gavel and delivering the keynote speech — and with Bentsen joining the ticket for a "Boston-Austin" axis that had Democrats reminiscing about John F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson in 1960.

"This is a truly national ticket, with a national message that can win in November and will not allow the Republicans, as they have in the past, to take any state for granted," Duncan said.

After his speech and a display of unity with former rival Jackson and other Democrats, Dukakis made the rounds of parties celebrating both his triumph and the euphoria Democrats felt over the party unity they managed to achieve.

In his acceptance speech, Dukakis declared the Democrats the party of the American dream and himself a product of that dream, and said his candidacy represents the hope of extending opportunity beyond "the privileged few."

"Because it's time to raise our sights, to look beyond the cramped ideals and limited ambitions of the past eight years, to recapture the spirit of energy and of confidence and of idealism that John Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson inspired a generation ago," he said.

Dukakis touched the broad themes of his campaign, declaring "this election isn't about ideology — it's about competence."

He paid tribute to Jackson, whose conciliatory actions permitted the Democrats to present a united front entering the general election race.

Dukakis called Jackson "a man who has lifted so many hearts" with his campaign, "a man whose very candidacy says to every child, aim high; to every citizen, you count; to every voter, you can make a difference."

Dukakis also offered a reminder of Bush's criticism of President Reagan's economic program, before Bush became Reagan's vice president.

"It's time to rekindle the American spirit of invention and daring, to exchange voodoo economics for can-do economics," he said.

Food Prices Soar

—Prices for infants' and toddlers' clothing were off 1.0 percent, followed by a 0.8 percent drop in the costs of women's and girls' clothing and a 0.1 percent dip in men's and boys' clothing.

—Housing costs rose 0.3 percent, the same as in May and April.

—Medical care expenses were up 0.4 percent, less than in recent months but 6.4 percent greater than at this time last year.

—New car prices rose 0.3 percent, faster than the 0.1 percent gains of April and May.

The government's monthly inflation reports are attracting growing attention as the financial markets worry about the impact of rising prices on the strength of the economy.

Factories last month operated closer to capacity than at any time in eight years, raising fears that strong demand will free manufacturers to raise prices. Meanwhile, unemployment fell to 5.3 percent, a 14-year low, and heightened concern that workers will be able to demand higher wages.

Remark

tempt. It's ridiculous to make a statement like that. To — even as a matter of prosecution strategy — group the attorney general with these people is beneath contempt."

In Washington, Justice Department spokesman Patrick Korten said, "We have asked the U.S. attorney's office in New York to check to see whether Mr. Little is quoted accurately. If such remarks were made, we would consider them to be inappropriate, unprofessional and, not least, flatly wrong."

Korten declined to comment on whether Little might be subject to disciplinary action, saying, "The first thing we want to do is determine precisely what he said."

Meese has been under scrutiny for some time because of his Wedtech connections, but a special prosecutor in Washington, James C. McKay, determined there was insufficient evidence to charge Meese with wrongdoing. However, McKay questioned the attorney general's ethics on several issues.

Meese, claiming he was vindicated by the McKay report, has announced he will leave office later this summer.

U.S. District Judge Constance Baker Motley denied a defense request during the trial to call Meese as a witness, saying his actions had nothing to do with the guilt or innocence of those on trial.

Three men, including Meese's former personal lawyer, E. Robert Wallach, and his ex-financial adviser, W. Franklyn Chinn, are to go on trial Jan. 3 for allegedly extracting payoffs from Wedtech to influence Meese and others.

Meanwhile, the California State Bar said Wednesday it is investigating Wallach's activities involving Wedtech and Meese, as well as Meese himself.

Richardson Back After 2-Year Exile

NEW YORK (AP) — Micheal Ray Richardson says his two-year NBA exile for cocaine use was an ordeal, although it may have ultimately saved his life.

"It seemed like five years, but today made it all worthwhile," Richardson said Thursday after his right to play in the NBA, or in Europe, was restored. "The first year was real tough, but the second year I was striving for something, which was to be reinstated."

Richardson said he was angry at the time of his banishment, "but I wasn't bitter because I brought it on myself. What they did probably saved my life."

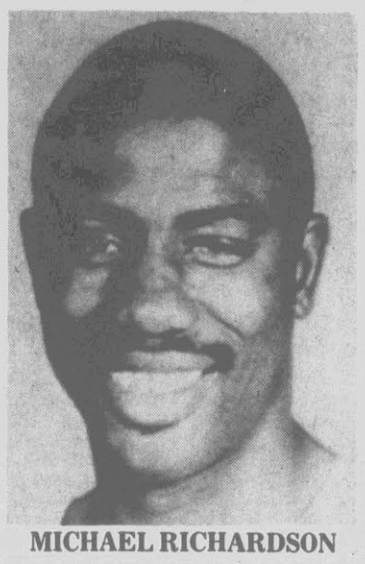

Richardson was banned from the NBA on Feb. 25, 1986 after testing positive for cocaine. His reinstatement cleared his return to the NBA, but the action also will allow him to honor a two-year guaranteed contract to play with Bologna of the Italian League.

Richardson's attorney, Ed Milstein, said an antidrug agreement between the NBA and FIBA, the international governing body for basketball, blocked Richardson from playing in Italy until he was officially reinstated.

"Of course, I would love to play in the NBA again, to vindicate myself and prove to myself that I could do it," Richardson said at Milstein's office in Englewood, N.J. "But something drastic would have to happen now" to keep him in the United States.

"He will honor that contract," Milstein said after Richardson was reinstated by NBA Commissioner David Stern and the players association.

The contract with Bologna calls for $400,000 per year, plus room and board and a car.

"At this point, he needs that guarantee," said Charles Grantham, Richardson's ex-agent and an official of the players association. "His career can be extended overseas. Financially, he can play three or four years over there at figures comparable to $500,000 or $600,000 here. He's in a situation where he needs that."

"I probably could've gotten a deal like that with an NBA team, but this deal was in front of me, a definite deal and I had to take it," Richardson said. "I got a deal so good I couldn't pass it up."

Decathlon Winner

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Tim Bright, already a member of the U.S. Olympic track and field team in the decathlon, was pole vaulting for fun.

Mary Decker Slaney, also on the team in the 3,000-meter run, had a different goal in mind.

"What do I have to lose?" asked Slaney, the fastest qualifier Thursday night; driven by the desire to break her own American record at 1,500 meters.

She'll get the chance on Saturday, the final day of the Olympic trials.

Florence Griffith Joyner, who set a world record in the women's 100 last week, also has a chance to become a double-winner on Saturday and was entered in today's first-round heats in the 200.

Also among today's events were the first round of the men's 110 high hurdles, with 1984 Olympic silver medalist Greg Foster making his first appearance since breaking his left arm earlier this month; and the qualifications in the men's discus, with an expected showdown between former Olympic champion Mac Wilkins and 41-year-old John Powell, trying to make the U.S. Olympic team for the fifth time.

Slaney was the fast qualifier in the 1,500 at 4 minutes, 4.27 seconds, the fastest time by an American this year. But it was almost seven seconds off the American record of 3:57.12 she set five years ago.

"I'm already on the Olympic team. I would like to run it (1,500) at the Olympics, but that's not the one I'm concentrating on," she said.

"It felt good. Saturday, if I'm not atrocious, I think I can set an American record," Slaney said. "I just hope we get decent (weather) conditions."

Bright was second in the decathlon after setting an American and Olympic trials record in the decathlon pole vault at 18 feet, 4½ inches. Immediately after the decathlon windup, he competed in the regular pole vault, finishing fourth at 18-8 after 12 hours of competition for the day.

"Why not?" Bright said of his efforts in both events. "I'm extremely exhausted, but I felt good after my first jump. I started to get going and felt motivated."

He indicated he wouldn't have vaulted at the Olympics even if he had placed among the top three at the trials.

"I told myself I would be a decathlete this year; next year I'll vault," he said.

The pole vault was won by Kory Tarpening, who set a meet record with a leap of 19-3¾, but failed in an attempt to break Joe Dial's American record of 19-6½.

Earl Bell, bronze medalist at Los Angeles in 1984, was second at 19-0, and Billy Olson was third at 18-8.

Bright, who had more misses, would "probably be one of the top three vaulters in the world if that's what he concentrated on," said Gary Kinder, who won the decathlon.

Tarpening said his three attempts at the record were only "respectable."

"I was real tired. I ran out of

Maltbie To Keep Putter For Now

CROMWELL, Conn. (AP) — Roger Maltbie may decide to keep his latest putter, at least through the finish of the $700,000 Sammy Davis Jr.-Greater Hartford Open.

The affable Californian, using a three-day-old putter, regained his touch Thursday on the rain-softened greens of the Tournament Players Club of Connecticut, shooting a 64 to take a one-stroke lead over three other golfers after one round of play.

Maltbie, a 13-year-veteran, holed six birdie putts of more than 10 feet on his first nine holes, including a 20-footer on No. 17.

It was the first time in more than a month that Maltbie has putted to his own satisfaction.

"I've been playing pretty well, but my putting's been horrible," he said. "I can't even say lousy. It's been really lousy.

"All of a sudden today I made a few putts. I could have made some more, but I was happy with the ones I made."

With just one bogey in his 7-under round at the par-71, 6,786-yard course, Maltbie entered today's second round with a one-stroke lead over Donnie Hammond, Brad Faxon and Joey Sindelar.

Ronnie Black, Mark Brooks, Ken Green, Steve Lowery, Jay Delsing and Clark Burroughs were two strokes back at 5-under 66. A group of 16 players, including Lee Trevino and Mark Calcavecchia, was at 67.

The opening round was twice delayed by downpours, pushing play about two hours behind schedule and forcing the late starters to finish at dusk.

The generally low-scoring course, parched by this summer's drought, absorbed the rain well. There was no wind with which to contend.

"If the wind doesn't blow, it's going to probably take a 20-under-par to win it," said Faxon, a fourth-year player who tied for 11th place in last week's British Open. "If somebody gets hot, the winning score may be lower than that."

Sindelar, one of just two golfers among the top 10 money-winners in the field, feels like he could do just that.

"It's the first year I've come out of the starting blocks with a swing I have confidence in," said Sindelar, who won the Honda Classic in March.

Maltbie, whose best finish this year was fifth place in the Andy Williams, is without a victory since going wire to wire in the World Series of Golf in 1985.

He's missed the cut eight times this year.

First-Round Leader

Liselotte Neumann is all smiles at the the 15th hole in the first round of the 43rd U.S. Women's Open golf championship at the Baltimore Country Club Thursday. Neumann shot a 67 to take the lead and break the old record for lowest first round total. (AP Laserphoto)

Neumann Takes U.S. Open Lead

BALTIMORE (AP) — To at least one tour veteran, Liselotte Neumann of Sweden is not just a rookie with a record first round at the 43rd U.S. Women's Open.

The 22-year-old native of Finspang, Sweden shot a four-under-par 67 in Thursday's rain-interrupted first round. That gave Neumann a two-shot lead in the most prestigious event in women's golf to go with some respect she'd already earned this year.

"She's a fine striker of the ball," said JoAnne Carner, a two-time Open champion tied for second at 69 with Sally Quinlan.

"She's not anyone you can fool around with," Carner added.

Colleen Walker, one of six players tied at one-under-par 70, said Neumann played "a great round, especially on this course and especially in the Open."

Tied with Walker at 70 were Dottie Pepper Mochrie, Shirley Furlong, Vicki Fergon, Patty Sheehan and Amy Benz.

Neumann, a five-time winner in Europe who has yet to post a top 10 finish in her first LPGA season, was the youngest of the seven golfers to break par on the first day over the 6,232-yard, par-71 Five Farms course at the Baltimore Country Club.

"I've really been playing good the last two weeks," Neumann said. "... When I came out this morning I had a par round in my head. I thought if I could shoot par it would be a great round and a good start in the U.S. Open. But this is better."

Neumann hit 15 greens in regulation and needed only 29 putts on greens softened by overnight rains. She made five birdies and a bogey en route to the lowest opening round in Women's Open history.

For Carner, the opening round went a little differently. "I got a headache I was working so hard," said Carner, who finished second a year ago.

Carner, at 49 the oldest player in the tournament, bogeyed the first two holes and was one over through nine before making four birdies over the next five holes. She finished with a bogey on 16 and, after the rain delay, two pars.

"I'm happy to be in the red (under par)," said Carner, who had six birdies and four bogeys. "It could've been worse, but I finally got it going out there. I had a good stretch there."

Fifty-seven of the 153 golfers — including Carner and Quinlan — were still on the course late Thursday afternoon when play was halted for 43 minutes by lightning and a brief thunderstorm.

Scuffle With Manager Leads To Suspension

BOSTON (AP) — One week into his new job, unbeaten Boston Manager Joe Morgan wanted his players to know he was the boss. So, veteran Jim Rice was suspended for three days for an altercation with him.

Rice said he's sorry, and Morgan expects no lingering effects. But the manager said he had no choice but to recommend the suspension without pay.

"It's the way business should be conducted on any team," Morgan said. "I'm running the club."

Rice, expected to lose about $30,000 in salary, will be eligible to return for Sunday's game against the Chicago White Sox. He said he won't appeal the suspension.

The incident occurred in the eighth inning of Boston's 9-7, 10-inning victory over Minnesota on Wednesday night. With Ellis Burks at first base and Boston ahead 5-4, Rice, the designated hitter, was lifted for pinch hitter Spike Owen.

Back in the dugout, Rice, 35, grabbed Morgan, 57, by the shoulders and pulled him into the runway leading to the clubhouse.

"I grabbed him and I can't defend that," Rice told The Boston Herald. "But I only grabbed him to say, 'Hey, Joe, listen to me. I can do the job.' I didn't grab him to hit him or hurt him."

Owen fouled off the first pitch on a hit-and-run, then sacrificed Burks to second. Boston didn't score in the inning but won the game in the 10th on Todd Benzinger's three-run homer.

The incident apparently resulted from a misunderstanding. Second baseman Marty Barrett said he heard Morgan tell Owen that if Burks got on base, Owen would hit for Rice and try a hit-and-run.

Rice said that Morgan said, "If Burks got on he (Morgan) was going to play hit-run on the first pitch. I never heard him mention Spike.

"I can't hit-run?"

When Burks walked, Rice left the on-deck circle and headed for home plate but was called back. He slammed his bat and helmet and grabbed Morgan.

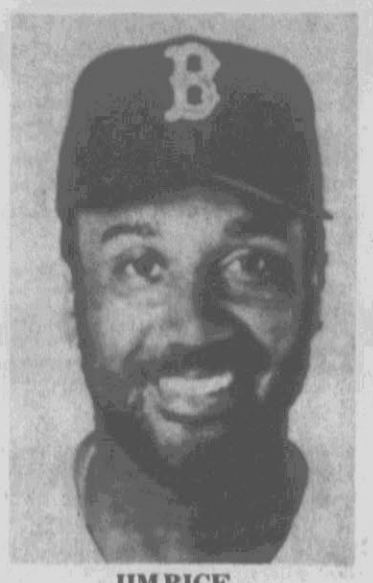

"I was upset at being taken out of the game and I'm human, but that was no excuse," Rice told The Herald. "I do not defend what I did and I regret the incident very much. I've never given any of my managers any kind of hassle and there was no way I was ever going to strike the man."

Rice also was angry when he was informed by General Manager Lou Gorman before Thursday night's 6-1 victory over Chicago that he was suspended. He stormed out of the meeting after about a minute.

Gorman said that after reporters left the clubhouse following Wednesday night's game, "Joe shut the door (to his office) and said 'I've got a problem. ... I feel the club should defend me and take some action.'

"It's tough to suspend anybody," Gorman said. "I have great respect for Jim Rice, but you can't have anybody physically intimidate or question a manager's authority."

"We couldn't condone the action so we had to" suspend Rice, Morgan said. "I've never had any trouble with Jimmy. I've been a booster of his, but we couldn't let it go."

JIM RICE

Rice, the third leading home-run hitter in club history, had surged since July 14, when Morgan succeeded the fired John McNamara.

Rice, who was hitting .258 before Morgan took over, has gone 10 for 22 since to raise his batting average to .272. He has only four homers after starting this season with 364 homers and a .302 batting average.

The club also has surged, winning all eight of its games under Morgan to close from nine to 4½ games behind American League East leader Detroit.

"I recognize it (the suspension) hurts the ballclub, but that shows you how serious we thought it (the incident) was," Gorman said. "We felt his (Morgan's) authority was being challenged before the entire ballclub."

Earlier Wednesday, Morgan got another boost when Gorman announced that he would be the manager at least until the end of the year and no longer serve on an interim basis.

The altercation "not only affected me, but the rest of the team and they have to know what can't be done," Morgan said.

"I know how Joe feels," Rice told The Herald, "but I have feelings, too, and nobody knows how I feel inside."

Benzinger said Rice "has got a lot of pride in his ability."

"It'll be no problem accepting him back. We need him."

"I guess they felt they did what they had to do," Owen said. "Whether it's right or wrong, it's not for me to decide."

Rice said he would apologize. Morgan doesn't expect any continuing problems.

"I don't expect any trouble from Jimmy," Morgan said.

Hornets Looking At Pacers' Gray

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Charlotte Hornets vice president Carl Scheer said Thursday he had discussed a deal with the Indiana Pacers that would bring 7-foot center Stuart Gray to Charlotte, but the Pacers must resign Gray if there is a chance to seal the deal.

Scheer said said a deal was discussed last month with the Pacers which would exchange Gray for Michael Holton, a 6-4 guard, who was acquired from the Portland Trail Blazers through the expansion draft.

But the trade talks were interrupted July 1 when Gray became a free agent. Under the current NBA collective bargaining agreement, a free agent such as Gray cannot be the subject of such trading.

Scheer said he feels certain if he offers Gray a contract, the Pacers will match it and ship Gray off to some other team in reaction to the Hornets' bid. Scheer said a trade appears the most likely route for Gray to become a Hornet.

Gray's agent, Joe Glass of Long Island, would not discuss the Pacers' chances of re-signing Gray. Glass said only that while Gray wouldn't be against joining an expansion team, he sees no special attraction in the Hornets just because they would likely increase his playing time.

The Hornets, which are loaded with guards, have only two players over 6-8 — 6-11 Dave Hoppen and 6-9 Earl Cureton, an unrestricted free agent who came to terms this week.

Gray, who has never averaged more than 3.0 points or 10.9 minutes in four NBA seasons, came highly recommended by Hornets coach Dick Harter, a Pacers assistant the last two seasons.

"Dick is really high on him," Scheer said. "He's a 7-footer, a really hard-nosed kid, and Dick thinks his future's ahead of him. It's a case of an assistant coach feeling something for a particular player."

Pirates Trade Coles For Wilson

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Pittsburgh Pirates, who have been seeking a power-hitting outfielder all season, traded Darnell Coles to the Seattle Mariners on Thursday night for former All-Star outfielder Glenn Wilson.

The deal was announced by Pirates General Manager Syd Thrift minutes after the Pirates closed to within one-half game of the National League East lead by beating Los Angeles 3-2, their 12th victory in 13 games.

The trade was the second of the day for Seattle, which is in last place in the American League West. The Mariners earlier dealt veteran designated hitter Ken Phelps to the New York Yankees for outfielder Jay Buhner, pitcher Rick Balabon and a player to be named later.

Thrift said the Pirates have wanted Wilson, 29, for two years, but the Philadelphia Phillies wanted too much in return for him last season. The Phillies wound up trading Wilson to Seattle last winter in the Phil Bradley deal.

Wilson has been a disappointment in Seattle, batting .250 in 78 games with three home runs, 17 RBI and 52 strikeouts in 284 at-bats. He hit .275 with 14 homers and 102 RBI for the Phillies in 1985.

"He has a great arm, has led the league in assists and can drive in runs," Thrift said. "He gives us a very solid defensive outfield with (Andy) Van Slyke and (Barry) Bonds. He's a veteran player and he really wants to be here. He wanted to be here last year."

Thrift said the Phillies wanted either pitcher Doug Drabek or Brian Fisher and another player for Wilson, who drove in 240 runs for the Phillies from 1985-87.

"His problem in Seattle was he didn't want to be there," Thrift said. "He wants to be here."

The Pirates obtained Coles, 26, from the Detroit Tigers last August for infielder Jim Morrison. Coles was batting .232 with five homers and 36 RBI and had struggled at the plate since being given the Pirates' right field job two months ago.

"We'll miss D.C. (Coles), he's made a major contribution to this club," said Pirates manager Jim Leyland. "But everyone knows how much I like Glenn Wilson. I managed him at (Triple-A) Evansville. He was a complete player in Philadelphia and we just think he's going to help our ballclub."

Ryan Continues To Amaze

By HILLEL ITALIE
Associated Press Writer

Nolan Ryan is too modest to say it, but teammate Bill Doran doesn't hesitate: The 41-year old right-hander is something special.

"You always hear someone every game, whether it's an umpire or an opposing player, say that he is amazing," Doran said after Ryan pitched a three-hitter Thursday night to lead the Houston Astros to a 2-0 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies. "He is a remarkable person and a remarkable athlete."

Ryan achieved several milestones with the win. His 268 career victories tie him with Jim Palmer for 27th on the all-time list. The shutout was his first in more than four years and the 55th of his career, tying him with Bert Blyeven for second among active pitchers.

The Astros have won four straight games and nine of 11 to move into sole possession of second place in the National League West, five games behind the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Padres 3, Cubs 1

Ed Whitson won his sixth straight decision as San Diego snapped an eight-game losing streak at Wrigley Field.

Whitson, 9-5, allowed eight hits in eight innings-plus. He was relieved by Lance McCullers after giving up singles to Shawon Dunston and Damon Berryhill to start the ninth.

McCullers earned his seventh save by getting pinch hitter Jody Davis to ground into a double play and retiring Mitch Webster on a fly ball to right.

Jamie Moyer, 5-9, allowed 11 hits in seven innings. He walked one, struck out one and fell to 0-6 this season at Chicago.

Expos 3, Reds 2

Dennis Martinez scattered seven hits in seven innings and Tom Foley's RBI single capped a three-run sixth inning as Montreal snapped a four-game losing streak.

Martinez, 11-7, walked three and struck out three. Tim Burke, the third Montreal pitcher, worked one inning to earn his seventh save.

The Expos trailed 2-0 through five innings, but Tracy Jones, Tim Raines and Hubie Brooks singled to score one run in the top of the sixth and chase starter Tom Browning. Frank Williams, 0-1, walked Tim Wallach, and Nelson Santovenia singled to tie the game.

Pirates 3, Dodgers 2

Doug Drabek allowed five hits in eight-plus innings and R.J. Reynolds had three RBI, including a tiebreaking two-run double in the sixth, as Pittsburgh won for the 12th time in 13 games.

The victory moved the Pirates within a half-game of the National League East-leading New York Mets. Los Angeles has lost three in a row.

The Pirates beat Dodgers' ace Orel Hershiser, 13-5, for the third time in four decisions while winning their third in a row.

Drabek, 8-5, won his third in a row by striking out seven and walking one. Jim Gott relieved after Mike Marshall led off the top of the ninth with his 14th homer and earned his 15th save, striking out two.

Cardinals 6, Giants 4

Willie McGee drove in the go-ahead run with a two-out single in the seventh inning and Terry Pendleton followed with a three-run double as St. Louis won three straight for the first time since June 3.

Vince Coleman started the Cardinals' winning rally off San Francisco reliever Joe Price, 0-4, with a two-out bunt single. Price then walked Ozzie Smith before McGee singled. Pendleton's double, which gave him four RBI for the game, came off Scott Garrelts after Tom Brunansky walked to load the bases.

Danny Cox, 3-5, won for the first time in six starts since April 24. He allowed 10 hits, walked two and struck out three but needed relief help from Dan Quisenberry in the top of the ninth after giving up singles to Bob Brenly and Jose Uribe to start the inning.

Stillwell Makes Up For Early Miscue

By The Associated Press

Kurt Stillwell made a mistake. So did Claudell Washington.

At least Stillwell got a chance to make up for his error. Washington never did.

The Kansas City Royals rallied for three runs with two outs in the ninth inning Thursday night for a dramatic 6-5 victory over the New York Yankees. The Royals, who once trailed 4-0, tied it on Washington's three-base error and Stillwell's run-scoring single.

After Bill Buckner's double in the ninth had scored Frank White, who singled, to make it 5-4, pinch hitter Pat Tabler faced Cecilio Guante. Tabler lined a shot to center field.

George Brett had a two-run homer for Kansas City. Rickey Henderson led off the game with a home run for New York, the 35th he has hit leading off a game in his career. That tied Bobby Bonds' major-league record.

Red Sox 6, White Sox 1

Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd was perfect for 6 1-3 innings as the Red Sox won their eighth straight since Joe Morgan was named manager. The victory was Boston's 13th straight at Fenway Park.

Boyd, who had won just one of his last six starts and was 2-5 in his last seven decisions, tied his season high with six strikeouts. Steve Lyons, who once played for Boston, got the first hit, a single in the seventh.

Brewers 6, Rangers 1

Rookie Don August continued Milwaukee's sensational pitching, carrying a shutout into the ninth inning and throwing his fourth complete game. August, 5-3, lowered his earned run average to 2.42 on a staff that leads the AL in that department.

Jeffrey Leonard hit a two-run homer and Robin Yount had a single, triple, two walks and scored twice for the Brewers.

Mariners 6, Blue Jays 2

Steve Balboni had a three-run homer, while Jim Presley and Dave Valle hit solo shots to support Scott Bankhead and Mike Schooler. Toronto had only four hits, one of which was a two-run homer by George Bell.

Bankhead, 5-4, got his fourth win in his last five starts. The right-hander yielded two first-inning runs before holding the Blue Jays scoreless over the next six innings. He struck out six and walked three in seven innings before Schooler relieved and retired all six batters he faced, faning three, for his seventh save.

gas physically and mentally," he said.

Tarpening said Bright "is incredible. He put on a display of strength and stamina I've never seen before. It's just beyond me."

The three qualifiers in the decathlon will be going to Seoul not only for medals but also for some more exposure for their little-noticed efforts, said Kinder, a first-time Olympian.

"The decathlon has very little recognition in the United States. We take pride in what we do. We can't help it if our name isn't Jenner," he said, referring to American record holder and 1976 Olympic champion Bruce Jenner.

Kinder, 25, who helps support his year-round training as an assistant track coach at the University of New Mexico, was last in the final event Thursday night, the 1,500-meter run, but his earlier lead gave him the overall victory by six points over Bright.

Kinder totaled a personal-best 8,293 points; Bright had 8,287, and David Johnson finished with 8,245. Bright, 12th in the 1,500, would have won the decathlon by finishing the final event one second quicker.

HENDERSON — The North State Little League All-Stars scored two runs in the eighth inning Thursday to defeat Roanoke Rapids 7-5 in the Area II baseball tournament and advance to the finals to meet the Tar Heel Little League All-Stars.

Dyron Langley led off the eighth inning with a walk for North State and then moved to second on a wild pitch. Sean Gordan advanced Langley to third with a sacrifice and Langley then tagged home with the first run of the inning following a Roanoke Rapids error. Jacob Zonn punched across the final run of the inning later with a fielder's choice RBI.

Chris Grover led the way for North State at the plate in the game with a 2-3 performance, including a triple. Grover also scored a pair of runs in the game.

North State opened the game with with a pair of runs in the first inning off of singles by Dante Daniels and Langley.

North State added another run in the third inning for a 3-1 lead thanks to a single by Grover and three consecutive walks issued by Roanoke Rapids.

Roanoke Rapids got a strong performance from Matt Merritt in the defeat. Merritt went 3-4, scored two runs and belted a homer in the contest. Paul Dickess was 2-4 for Roanoke Rapids with a homerun and a double.

North State is scheduled to play the Tar Heel All-Stars today at 5 p.m. in Henderson. If North State wins the game, the two will play again Saturday at 3 p.m.

USOC Sending Cash To Needy Athletes

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — American athletes forced to balance their time and money between jobs and training should be getting some relief soon.

The U.S. Olympic Committee said Thursday that it plans for the first time to make direct cash payments to top American athletes to help offset training costs. Previously, financial aide for top athletes came through their clubs.

"It would be a big help, words can't describe how much help," Connie Price, women's discus winner at the U.S. Olympic Trials, said of the proposal. "I had a job, but I quit in February because of the stress. We made enough to survive."

"Right now, my husband is a coach at a junior college and we both have part-time jobs," said Ramona Pagel, another Olympian in the discus. "Between us, we have three jobs, and we're still on a poverty level. There's not a lot of money coming in. I get a little help from my club, but not a lot."

That kind of hand-to-mouth existence is what the USOC proposes to alleviate.

"It is simply no longer possible for a world class athlete to compete successfully and at the same time earn a living in a full-time job," USOC president Robert Helmick said.

"Our ultimate goal is to provide our top-level athletes with sufficient support for living and training expenses so that they may spend the time necessary to train and compete internationally."

The direct payments are part of a $25-million proposal that includes job and scholarship programs for athletes. Money would come from sales of 1988 Olympic coins.

The national governing bodies of individual sports would determine which top athletes receive the direct payments. But the payment itself would come directly from the USOC, spokesman Mike Moran said.

"They (governing bodies) can stretch the money as far as they want," he said. "They can select 20 people or 200 people."

Melody Scott Says 'Nikki' Has Grown Up

MELODY SCOTT THOMAS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Melody Thomas Scott says that in nine years on CBS' "The Young and the Restless" her character has grown up and undergone changes.

"When I began, Nikki was very poor, lower-class and troubled," she said. "She's still troubled, but now she's rich."

Scott also grew up on the show. Three years ago she married the executive producer, Edward Scott, and they are expecting their first child at Thanksgiving.

Although she was a teen-ager when she began the daytime serial, she was already a veteran performer. She had worked with Clint Eastwood twice as well as Kirk Douglas, John Wayne and Geraldine Page.

Her character, Nikki Reed Newman, has also packed a lot of living into her years on "The Young and the Restless."

"She's gone through many marriages, many phases," said Scott. "She's been a stripper, a model, a member of a cult and chased by a psychotic killer. In my first story on the show my father tried to rape me. I don't think that went over well with the audience. I hit him over the head, he died and that was the end of that.

"Now I'm married to the Howard Hughes of Genoa City. It's not a happy marriage. We had a storybook romance and wedding. My wedding gown cost $25,000. It was wonderful for a while. We still live together, but we live separate lives. Now that I'm pregnant I'm hoping he will change his mind."

Her husband on the show is Victor Newman, played by Eric Braeden.

"I'm very happy with the show," said Scott. "In my opinion it's the best medium for an actress who wants to have a family. The hours for a prime-time show are horrendous. I wouldn't want to be running around the world on location. I usually don't go in until noon. I'm usually through by 6 o'clock. It works out very good for me."

Although the soap has about 25 regular characters, the main storyline follows Nikki and her husband. The story began about 2½ years ago when "The Young and the Restless" began to challenge ABC's "General Hospital" for the ratings leadership among the daytime serials. In the current season, it is ranking first in the Nielsen daytime ratings.

Scott was born in Los Angeles and started her career at age 3 as one of "The Meglin Kiddies." Ethel Meglin, who recently died, had started such other performers as Shirley Temple and Judy Garland. The Meglin group put on musical performances around California.

"I was raised by my grandmother, who always talked about Jane Withers," she said. "She was one of my idols." Withers, probably best known to current generations for her "Josephine the Plumber" commercials several years ago, was a major child star.

Scott also appeared in commercials and did guest spots on such shows as "My Three Sons" and "Ironside." At 8, she played Tippi Hedren's daughter in "Marnie." She was a regular on "The Tammy Grimes Show."

"I never thought much about doing the shows," she said. "When you're that young you don't think about it. I thought all kids did it."

When she was in junior high school she read in a trade paper that director Don Siegel was looking for "a chubby little girl" to appear with Clint Eastwood and Geraldine Page in "The Beguiled." She stuffed herself to gain weight, then rented a Civil War costume and auditioned for Siegel. She got the role, and later when Siegel directed Eastwood in "Dirty Harry" he remembered her and put her in the movie.

She was also in "Posse" with Kirk Douglas and such TV movies and miniseries as "Studs Lonigan," "Moviola" and "Secrets." She had a recurring role on "The Waltons."

"I played the sweet little girl in that," she said. "I had a scene with John Wayne on a streetcar. It was a thrill to do that."

She met her husband while doing "The Young and the Restless."

"He's been producer about 12 or 13 years," she said. "For many years we had just a working relationship. Then we became friends and we got married three years ago."

She has a 5-year-old daughter, Alexandra, from an earlier marriage, and her husband has a 15-year-old daughter, Jennifer.

ELTON JOHN

John Plans 'Garage Sale'

LONDON (AP) — The public will get a preview of pop star Elton John's "garage sale," in which he plans to sell 2,000 personal items, including some of his trademark zany costumes and fancy spectacles.

The Victoria and Albert Museum here, the state museum of fine and applied art, will exhibit 500 of the objects Aug. 9-23.

The exhibition will include art nouveau and art deco furniture, jewelry and painting by such artists as surrealist Rene Magritte, as well as designer clothes and bizarre sculpture, ceramics and glass that caught John's eye in 15 years of collecting.

All 2,000 items will be auctioned Sept. 6-9 at Sotheby's in London, which hopes to realize about $5 million from the sale. Sotheby's is paying the cost of the museum exhibition, said museum spokesman Graham Wiffen.

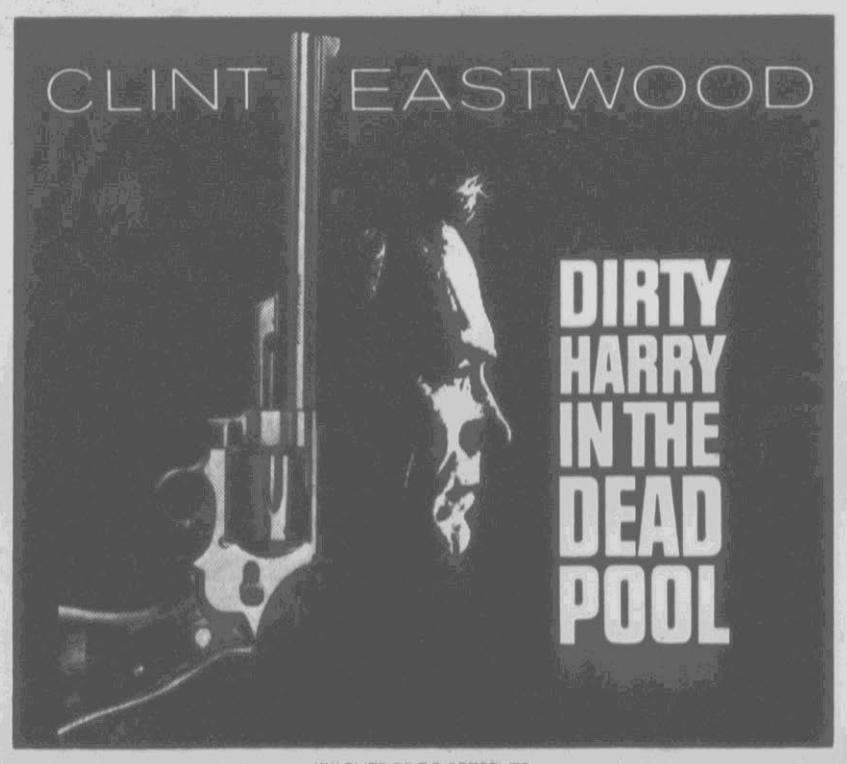

John said in January that he wanted to move from his 10-bedroom mansion near Windsor to a more rural location in southern England and that selling some of his art and furniture would enable hiin to make changes in his collections.

Which is the more skillful game, bridge or chess? Great argument has raged for many a year, but you know where our bet lies. We need only cite this historical reference. About 150 years ago, a Frenchman named Guillaume le Breton Deschapelles was regarded as both the best chess player and whist player of his day. He remarked that, within a few days of learning chess, he was able to defeat the reigning world champion, and that thereafter he never found anything new to learn about the game. Whist, however, always presented new challenges, and he felt he would never completely master it.

Now whist is a forerunner, and simpler version, of bridge. A coup discovered by Deschapelles, and bearing his name, is still one of the most dramatic defensive plays available. It involves the sacrifice of an unsupported honor to force an entry to partner's hand.

The auction is a nightmare, but that doesn't mean that three no trump is an easy contract to defeat after West's lead of the king of diamonds is taken by East's ace. With routine defense, declarer can take four spades, four clubs and the ace of hearts. Not even a low heart at trick two will do—West's queen loses to dummy's ace and, since West has no entry, declarer will waltz home with nine tricks.

The winning defense is the Deschapelles Coup. East must switch to the king of hearts at the second trick, and declarer has no counter. Whether or not he wins immediately, West has an entry and the defense will take seven tricks before declarer can utilize his clubs.

Sending Norris Lake Water Should Help Nuclear Plant

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — The transfer of cold water from Norris Lake down the Tennessee River should enable Sequoyah Nuclear Plant to help meet peak electricity demands for the rest of the summer, says a Tennessee Valley Authority official.

"Unless there is an extended heat wave late in the summer or an absence of any cooling rain, we should have no trouble keeping the river water cool enough for the plant," Dr. Ralph Brooks, a TVA vice president, said Wednesday.
