Reagan Bows Out But Vows To Keep Active

By MERRILL HARTSON
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — President Reagan, with a thanks-for-the-memories farewell to the Republican National Convention, ceded center stage to George Bush, voicing hope that history will find "we had a vision."

From the time he entered the cavernous Louisiana Superdome on Monday to take his seat in the presidential box until he left more than three hours later, he was showered with affection.

He returned the favor with a vintage speech extolling America's virtues.

Before passing the symbolic torch of Republican leadership today to his vice president at an airport ceremony and heading for his California ranch, Reagan exhorted Bush to "make it one more for the Gipper." He pledged to do all he could to make Bush his heir, while acknowledging that "this office is not mine to give."

Reagan's speech brought tears to longtime loyalists on the convention floor. It capped a day in which both he and his wife, Nancy, talked of relinquishing the political spotlight to Bush and his wife, Barbara.

"There are times to enter, times to stay and times to leave," Mrs. Reagan told friends at a luncheon given in her behalf.

"Today, the curtain begins to close on the Reagan era of the Republican Party," she said. "We've had a wonderful run. But the time has come for the Bushes to step into the political leading roles — and for the Reagans to step into the wings."

That same theme dominated Reagan's convention address, preceded by a documentary about the Reagan years and heralded by trumpets blaring "Hail To The Chief."

Standing before the 2,277 convention delegates and thousands of others in visitors' and alternates' seats, Reagan declared he still would be heard, even in retirement.

"When I pack up my bags in Washington, don't expect me to be happy to hear all this talk about the twilight of my life," said Reagan, 77.

"Twilight? Not in America!"

But Reagan also made clear that he doesn't desire to command the party, saying, "I'll leave my phone number and address behind just in case you need a foot soldier."

Convention delegates frequently interrupted his speech with applause, waving banners and cheering. Reagan even got applause a few times for things he said in the filmed narration of the Reagan years.

The delegates stood for several minutes and clapped their hands as he arrived at the podium, and Reagan basked in the glory.

Bush Set To Claim Party Reins

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — George Bush took off today for a Republican convention ready to launch him on an uphill struggle for the White House and eager to learn the still-secret name of his running mate.

Bush, waving to onlookers and accompanied by family members, left Andrews Air Force Base near the nation's capital, heading for a brief public meeting with President Reagan outside New Orleans and then a rousing welcome in the convention city.

By the time of his arrival, Bush should have decided who will fill the No. 2 spot on the ticket, aides said. However, they predicted he will not immediately reveal the name, keeping the pot boiling perhaps until Thursday.

Speculation centered on Sen. Bob Dole, his wife Elizabeth, Sens. Dan Quayle, Pete Domenici, Alan Simpson, Atty. Gen. Richard Thornburgh, former White House chief of staff Howard Baker and Rep. Jack Kemp. Also churned up by the rumor mill were the names of Sens. John Danforth and Christopher Bond of Missouri.

Bush, after watching the convention on television in Washington, was flying here to pick up the torch from Reagan. Trailing in the polls, Bush pledged to "do my level best to fill those big shoes of President Ronald Reagan."

Reagan and Bush, political partners for nearly eight years, were crossing paths at a military airport, pausing together for photos and then traveling their separate ways — Reagan on his way out of town en

26 Cities Set Heat Records

By The Associated Press

Football coaches cut back on training, utilities from Maine to Virginia cut back on power, and the homeless sought shelter in air-conditioned buildings as record high temperatures were set in 26 cities.

Grain and soybean futures posted their strongest gains in a week Monday in response to predictions that crops in the drought-weary Corn Belt would bake for most of this week.

In New York City, Monday's record 97 degrees caused Consolidated Edison to impose a brownout on at least 250,000 tenants, leaving them without air conditioning and no way out — elevators to their high-rise homes were shut down.

At least 10,000 other tenants suffered a blackout, scores of businesses without power had to close and two hospitals voluntarily switched to backup power.

Monday's record high temperatures for the date included 104 degrees in Des Moines, Iowa, breaking a 102-year-old mark by two degrees; 97 in Louisville, Ky., and Wilmington, Del., respectively breaking 114-year-old and 93-year-old records by a degree.

All 48 contiguous states had

Trade Deficit Swells

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. trade deficit suffered a major setback in June, swelling to $12.5 billion, the government said today. The deterioration followed three straight months of improvements.

The growth in the trade balance — a sharp 28.5 percent worse than the May imbalance of $9.8 billion — was likely to jolt financial markets.

June's trading shortfall was the worst since February's $14.4 billion deficit, which triggered a 100-point plunge in the Dow Jones industrial average when it was announced in April.

The June deficit, as reported by the Commerce Department, was substantially worse than had been expected. Most economists had anticipated a deficit of around $10.9 billion as analysts expected that a rise in imports would be partially offset by continued growth of exports. However, exports fell by 2.4 percent in June to a seasonally adjusted $26.8 billion while imports surged to an all-time high of $39.4 billion.

The deterioration pointed up the problem facing U.S. policy-makers, who have struggled for most of this decade to find ways to reduce soaring trade deficits.

While U.S. exports have shown improvements because of a substantial decline in the value of the dollar, imports have stayed at stubbornly high levels despite the fact that a weaker dollar is now making foreign goods more expensive for American consumers.

The 5.7 percent jump in imports in June was laid to a sharp rise in imports of clothing, office equipment and heavy machinery.

County Board May Ban Smoking In Pitt Offices

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Cigarette smoking may be regulated to some extent in Pitt County government offices if the Board of County Commissioners takes action on a policy recommended by the Board of Health.

Dr. Tim Monroe, director of the health department, told commissioners Monday that the health board, at its Jan. 21 meeting, adopted by a vote of 5 to 1 a recommended policy which would ban all smoking in the health department by employees, clients or visitors at any time. The policy would also apply to county-owned vehicles operated by health department employees.

But the consensus among board members seemed to be that if any smoking policy is adopted that it should be for all county buildings and be something less than a total ban.

Monroe, in presenting the proposal to commissioners, said the health board action stemmed from a petition signed by more than half the health department employees which asked that smoking be restricted.

"Because this is a health agency" designed to promote and protect health, Monroe said, "people who do not wish to be exposed to smoke should not have to be exposed to smoke."

According to Monroe, 25 to 30 per

Homeowner Balks At Plane Noise

By JOHN BARE
Reflector Staff Writer

Charles Gooding of 203 Haw Dr. in North River Estates says airplanes landing at Pitt-Greenville Airport fly so close to his 4-month-old house that it seems he could toss a rock in the air and hit one.

Gooding and more than 150 people turned out at Wellcome Middle School Monday night for the first of three informational meetings to be conducted by the city of Greenville's Department of Development and the airport authority

The meetings were set up to allow residents to ask questions about the airport's land-use plan, which describes methods the city and airport authority can use to ensure that land development around the airport is compatible with air traffic.

Gooding, who moved four months ago from Jacksonville to the new home he built in North River Estates, said he would not have moved to Greenville if he had known how close planes would be flying overhead.

Someone should have told him that his home off N.C. 33 was directly in the landing approach for Runway 19, he said, and someone should have also told him airport officials plan to expand that runway 1,000 feet.

"I would not have bought a home," Gooding said. "It's like the plane is coming into your house. It's tremendous. They fly directly over the top of my house."

Gooding said the noisy flights begin about 8 a.m. and continue off and on until about 11 p.m., and the planes literally shake the house enough for him to feel the vibrations.

"I've been calling the airport and putting in complaints, but nothing is being done about it," Gooding said.

"I'd like to have (the airport authority or the city) buy my house, pay me for damages — time, pain and suffering," Gooding said.

He and more than a dozen others — most from North River Estates, Greenfield Terrace and Oak Grove Estates — complained that future airport development would decrease the value of their homes, then residents would be trapped unless the city, the state or the airport authority bought their home.

Several people at the meeting also accused the city and the airport authority of presenting inaccurate information and pushing through a plan that would take away their rights as homeowners.

In The Area

Property Stolen

Investigators said six thefts, ranging from a wreath and nine crates of soft drinks to jewelry and center wheel caps from a car, were reported to Greenville police Monday.

Officer M.J. Nobles said nine crates of drinks were taken from the Eppes Recreation Center at Fourth and Nash streets in a break-in reported at 10:13 a.m., while Officer D.R. Wyrick said $500 worth of jewelry — four gold chains with pearls, a cameo and oval locket — were taken from 2813 Jackson Drive in an incident reported at 10:33 a.m.

Officer H.D. Hines said a wreath was taken from the front of 25D Stratford Arms Apartments in an incident reported at 12:22 p.m., while Officer T.E. Nevelle said four center caps valued at $719 were taken from a car parked at Parker's Barbecue on Memorial Drive in an incident reported at 3:07 p.m.

Officer Alexander Batts said two skirts and four key rings were taken from Stuart's at Carolina East Mall about 4:32 p.m. by a juvenile who was turned over to the department's juvenile division, while Officer B.E. Lewis said a watch was taken from 407 Deck St. in a break-in reported at 5:11 p.m.

WOW Dinner Session

Lodge 218, Woodmen of the World Life Insurance Society, will have a Dutch dinner meeting Thursday at 6 p.m. at Tar Landing Seafood.

Chapters Honored

The Martin County Red Cross chapter received highest honors Monday night during a recognition dinner for chapters and military installations served out of the Greenville location of the Tidewater Region of the American Red Cross Blood Services.

Chapters honored for achieving 100 percent or more of the 1987-88 blood collection goal were Martin County, Beaufort County, Rocky Mount-Nash, Camp Lejeune and Cherry Point. The Overall Achievement Award went to the Martin County chapter.

Roanoke Rapids chapter was recognized for attaining the highest increase in blood donations.

The guest speaker, Dr. Erle H. Austin III, chief of cardiac surgery at Pitt County Memorial Hospital, addressed the use of blood for pediatric and adult heart surgery.

The 21 chapters and two military installations served by the Greenville location collected 41,875 units of blood during 1988-89 and provided blood and blood products to 17 hospitals in the region.

Fellowship Program

Dr. Mohammed A. Ahad of Greenville has participated this summer in a postdoctoral fellowship program in applied gerontology of the Gerontological Society of America.

Ahad, who has conducted a study of the visiting nurse services in Seattle, was to develop and test a method for classifying home care patients according to the degree of care they require.

Ahad has been on the faculty of the East Carolina University School of Nursing for the past 12 years and teaches in the school's graduate program.

He recently has been admitted as a founding fellow in the multinational Nightingale Society headquartered in Carmel, Calif., and appeared on a panel during its annual meeting. His topic was "Crosscultural Utilization of Nursing Theory: Implications for Worldwide Professionalization of Nursing."

NARFE Meeting Set

The National Association of Retired Federal Employees will meet at noon Wednesday at the Three Steers Restaurant. The meeting is open to all retired federal employees and their spouses.

Certificates Earned

Two persons from Martin County and one from Pitt County have received certificates of competency as wastewater treatment operators.

Gaining certification were Charles R. Harris of Greenville, Robert L. Grimes Jr. of Robersonville, and James C. Hopkins Jr. of Williamston. The recipients took a three-hour exam in accordance with requirements of the North Carolina Occupational Licensing Board rules. They completed their training at Martin Community College, Williamston.

Program Participant

Joseph T. Rhea of Greenville is one of 27 college students from the United States and Canada picked to participate in the American Sociological Association Honors Program at the national convention Aug. 23-28 in Atlanta.

Rhea, a senior at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, is majoring in sociology and history. He has been studying in England this summer as the winner of the UNC-CH Class of 1938 scholarship.

The honors program is a forum for outstanding college seniors and graduate students in sociology to present their research while evaluating the research of others, and to encourage academic dialogue in education and sociology.

FSU Alumni Chapter

A newly formed alumni chapter of Fayetteville State University will meet today at 6:30 p.m. at the home of Roscoe Locke. For information on attending the meeting call Locke at 830-3746.

Mental Health Board

The August public meeting of the Pitt County Area Mental Health, Mental Retardation and Substance Abuse Board will be held at 4 p.m. Wednesday in the conference room of the center.

Rhonda Jordan will present information on the parent education component of the Children's Pre-Enrichment Program.

Teachers In Program

Amy S. Ennis and Jean S. Porter, both teachers at Elmhurst Elementary School, recently participated in the program, "Developmental Approaches to Science, Health and Technology," developed by Francis Pottenger of the University of Hawaii.

Community Meeting

Greenville Mayor Edward E. Carter will conduct the first of a series of community meetings for the general public Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. at Sadie Saulter School on Fleming Street.

The meetings, to be held in different locations throughout the city, are designed to enhance community awareness and to develop a team approach in dealing with problems such as drug abuse and crime.

Balloon Society

The Down East Balloon Society will hold its monthly meeting today at 7:30 p.m. at the library/recreation complex on Cedar Lane in Greenville.

Solicitation Permit

The Greenville Police Department has issued a solicitation permit to the Kiwanis Club of Greater Greenville to sell balloons for the purchase of hospital equipment.

The permit will allow approximately 40 Kiwanis volunteers to solicit house to house throughout the city from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Sept. 1-26.

Foundation Gift

North Carolina Power recently donated $1,000 to the Pitt County Educational Foundation.

J.P. Rothnie, NCP district manger, presented the check to Betty Speir, executive director of the foundation. The money will be added to the endowment fund, she said, and the interest will be used to fund small grants to teachers for innovative classroom projects.

Convention Canceled

The Northeast Original Free Will Baptist Conference annual Sunday school convention scheduled at Selvia Chapel Church in Greenville Saturday has been canceled.

For more information call Herbert Atkinson at 830-1958 or Delphine Parker at 830-1970.

County Board Cites Volunteers' Service

Pitt County commissioners recognized 44 individuals and five organizations nominated for the Governor's Awards for volunteer service at a program Monday afternoon.

Winners of the Governor's Awards, which will be presented at a program in Greenville on Sept. 13, include: Ray Dinson, a volunteer at Ayden-Grifton High School in the school volunteer category; Jean Weaver (a Pitt County Memorial Hospital volunteer) and Dr. Jasper Lewis Jr. (a school volunteer who provides dental care to needy students) in the community service category, and the D.H. Conley High School Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps in the volunteer organization category.

Nominees in the community service group, who were also recognized Monday, included: Richard "Ric" Miller, William Scott Alford, Greg Epperson, Dr. David Duckett, Katalin Szucs, Jill Camnitz, Rosa Bell, Jessie Williams, Kim Furstenberg, Brenda Whitehurst, Thomas Council, Carr Tucker, Stan Barone, Paul Hunsucker and Ronald Evans.

School volunteer category nominees were: Cathy Bullock, Camilla N. Godwin, Jo Ann Haddock, Connie Bond, Judi Orbach, Mary Ways, Eleanor Booker, Mickey West, Linda Langley, Ed Seidel, Priscilla Seidel and Susan Frazier.

Other school volunteers receiving certificates were Bill Frazier, Kathy Pittman, Margaret Cone, Ray Harris, Gary Oppenheimer, James Adams, Elaine Ippock, Richard Leggett, Edwina Bailey, Glenda McLawhorn, Dottie S. Blades, Annie C. Coble, Sandi Tripp and Ann Bennett Maxwell.

The volunteer organization nominees included: the North Pitt High School Library Club, Pandora's Box, the Greenville Public Works Department and the Greenville Fire-Rescue Department.

Charter Night

The Air Force Association, Eastern Carolina Chapter, will hold its charter night dinner at 6:30 p.m. Wednesday at the Greenville Country Club.

Chapter president Dennis Biggs said the group will be officially recognized by the Air Force Association with over 75 charter members. Anyone who wishes to affiliate with the local group as a charter member can do so at the dinner.

Reservations can be made through Wednesday noon by calling Graydon Tripp, 756-4422.

The local chapter's jurisdiction covers a four-county area comprised of Pitt, Martin, Beaufort and Pamlico counties.

The AFA has a membership of over 240,000 men and women, military and civilian, active and retired, and persons in other categories.

ECU Profs Help Recover Warship

By The Associated Press
Two East Carolina University professors have been caught in the crossfire of a battle that began 124 years ago with the sinking of a notorious Confederate raider in the English Channel.

It all began Sunday, June 19, 1864. Historians describe the engagement between the Alabama and the Kearsarge, a Union warship, on that date, as one of the most unusual naval encounters of the Civil War.

"It was probably the last engagement between wooden ships fighting in the ocean," William Still, an ECU professor and an expert in Civil War naval history, said in an interview.

The battle attracted an estimated 17,000 spectators. Some watched from boats while others viewed the confrontation from the nearby French port of Cherbourg. As the ships prepared for battle, a French band played "Dixie."

But it didn't help the Alabama. A cannon blast downed the Confederate ship in nearly 200 feet of water. When French divers announced last year they had found the Alabama, another battle began over ownership of the wreck.

"The people involved with the Alabama don't like to use the word 'dispute,'" Still said. "But regardless, it seems to be one."

France says it owns the wreck because it's in French waters. Cherbourg officials want to build an Alabama museum to attract American tourists who visit the Normandy beaches.

England says it owns the Alabama because the ship was built there.

The United States, and particularly the state of Alabama, want the vessel because it was a Confederate ship, and as many as 25 Southerners died in the battle.

Still and his ECU colleague, Gordon Watts, are the only foreigners who were asked by the French to help in the initial study of the wreck earlier this summer.

WHAT TO DO IF YOU SMELL GAS.

Call Greenville Utilities immediately. Anytime day or night. We'll get a serviceman to your home or location to correct the problem. While you're waiting for him to get there, open a window, make sure you use no electrical switches. Extinguish any open flames and evacuate the area. If you don't know what natural gas smells like, stop by our office and pick up a scratch and sniff leaflet. Because even though natural gas contains no poisonous ingredients, a leak can become hazardous if combustible gas pockets are allowed to form, which makes it important for you to know what natural gas smells like.

*Note: If the leak is located in the customers piping or appliances, a service charge will be billed on the following monthly utility bill.

Farm Agencies Seek Central Office

Pitt County farmers may have "one-stop shopping" for agriculture-related services — the Agricultural Extension Service, the Soil Conservation Service, the Agriculture Stabilization and Conservation Service and the Farmers Home Administration — if an idea brought before the County Commissioners Monday becomes a reality.

Representatives of the three U.S. Department of Agriculture agencies — the ASCS, SCS and FmHA — met with the board to suggest the creation of one Pitt County Agricultural Center to house those federal agencies and the county's agricultural extension service office.

The county extension office is now located in the county office building on West Fifth Street while the FmHA office is at 1411 S. Evans St. The other two agencies are housed in the federal building at 215 S. Evans St.

But spokesmen for the federal agencies suggested that one center housing all four groups would make it more convenient for them to work together as well as more convenient for farmers.

Mitch Smith, who heads the county extension service office, in a letter to commissioners, said "I believe that a new facility would not only improve the effectiveness of our organization but would also better serve the clientele of Pitt County."

"It would be best if we could all be together," Albert Coffey, of the SCS, told the board.

Commissioners, who voiced support for the idea, agreed to look into the availability of buildings to house the agencies — or possibly building a facility.

Officials of the federal agencies said Monday that the three pay a total of $71,416 a year in rent at the present time, suggesting that if a building large enough to house the four agencies were built by the county, the rent money could help pay for the structure.

Bush Stepping In

route to a long vacation in California and Bush heading for a triumphant welcoming rally in this colorful convention city.

"George, I'm in your corner," Reagan declared in an emotionally charged valedictory speech to a Superdome audience packed to the rafters. "But George, just one more personal request: go out there and win one for the Gipper."

Sounding one more time a battle cry for conservative causes, Reagan said, "We can never let the fire go out or quit the fight, because the battle is never over."

Delegates were prepared to give Bush a conservative platform on which to challenge Democrat Michael Dukakis.

Awaiting approval today — probably unanimously — was a 40,000-word platform that pledges no tax increases, calls for a constitutional amendment to ban abortion and promises "rapid and certain deployment" of the Star Wars missile defense plan, also known as the Strategic Defense Initiative.

The document embraces Bush's campaign proposals by endorsing child-care tax credits for low-income families, increased spending on Head Start and a new "merit schools" program, and tax-free savings bonds to pay for college. There was not a single dissenting report for the full convention to debate.

Criticizing the platform offered by the Democrats, Mrs. Dole told GOP delegates that the other party's document was long on platitudes and short on specifics. "We're not running against Bentsen and Dukakis, we're running against Bentsen and hedges," she said.

For his part, Dukakis remained at home, shrugging off attacks from New Orleans. "I don't think it's going to do any political damage," the Massachusetts governor said. "In the last analysis, people are going to be looking at me and Mr. Bush and they are going to be looking at which one of us has the leadership."

The GOP wasn't the only party in this town. There were evening cruises on the Mississippi River, performances by jazz trumpeter Al Hirt, and scads of brunches, buffets and open bars at all hours for delegates and hangers-on.

The biggest guessing game here — the only one, really — was whom Bush would put on his ticket. Bush's staff already has chartered a campaign plane for the unknown nominee and has assembled a speech-writing staff to produce "generic" remarks that can be tailored at the last minute to fit the man or woman picked.

Dole, the tart-tongued minority leader of the Senate, surprised some people Monday by criticizing Bush's drawn-out selection process. "I don't care for it, frankly," Aides quickly said Dole was not criticizing Bush.

Some candidates played up their hopes, others played them down.

Emphasizing that he doesn't consider himself in the running, Simpson said: "I've said it clearly as I can. I guess they want me to jump on a chair and make an obscene gesture or something."

On the other hand, Kemp told his supporters, "I was a good second-string quarterback and I can be a good second-string quarterback for George Bush." Quayle said that if Bush picks him, "I'll be there with bells on."

Overnight, the huge Superdome was spruced up, workmen removing the thousands of balloons that cascaded down after Reagan's farewell to a party that twice put him on the road to landslide White House victories.

Acknowledging the tumultuous reception that embraced this New Deal Democrat turned Republican, Reagan declared, "Nothing could be hotter than the spirit of the delegates in this hall, except maybe a victory celebration on Nov. 8."

To the "Where was George?" taunts of Democrats in Atlanta, Reagan assured Republicans that Bush was a valuable adviser. "George was there," Reagan said.

The delegates immediately seized on his remark, chanting "George was there. George was there."

Reagan recalled the "economic chaos" he inherited eight years ago, recounted the change wrought by his administration and warned against letting the Democrats back in power. "Without George Bush to build on those policies, everything we have achieved will be at risk," he said. "All the work, sacrifice and effort of the American people could end in the very same disaster that we inherited in 1981."

"Don't we know that, if they're elected, their answer will be the one they have relied on in the past — and that is higher taxes," the president said.

Heat Records Set

temperatures of 87 degrees or higher and 100-degree temperatures were registered in 22 states and the District of Columbia, the National Weather Service said.

Today's forecast called for much of the same, with temperatures above normal from central New England across Georgia and west through the Plains.

In Pierre, S.D., where the nation's record high temperature was a staggering 114 degrees Monday, a big concern was for livestock. With the heat expected to continue today, the weather service's livestock safety index was predicted to reach the emergency category across most of the state through this evening.

In Minnehaha County, people who needed to find relief from the heat could call a hot-line number to get a ride to a shelter.

In New Hampshire, where air-conditioners have been sold out across the state for a month, ice skating spelled relief. Concord's Recreation and Parks Department is giving residents a chance to get back into the cold tonight by offering free ice skating.

The Salvation Army in Atlantic City, N.J., which runs an overnight shelter for the homeless, said they have started to allow people to stay during daytime hours because of the heat.

"We've had an increase in the number of people we're serving this summer," Cadet Scott Kelly said. "Normally summer is our slow time but we've been pretty busy."

At least 10 elderly residents with heat-related complaints had to be carried down from New York City high-rises by police and paramedics, but most of the tenants seemed to have concerns for food spoiling in rapidly defrosting refrigerators.

One woman in a posh East-Side building said she'd hiked up and down 23 flights of stairs twice. The woman, novelist Barbara Szold, said her leg muscles were sore, but her main concern was for her appliances. Her microwave, her personal computer and her answering machine were all kaput, she said.

Deficit Goes Up

The report said that shipments of foreign capital goods shot up by $900 million in June while shipments of consumer goods rose up $700 million.

The weakness in exports reflected declines in shipments of American capital goods, agricultural products and autos.

Even with the deterioration, the U.S. trade deficit for the first six months of the year was running at an annual rate of $140 billion, down sharply from the record deficit of $170.3 billion set in 1987.

America's foreign oil bill declined slightly in June to $3.6 billion, compared to $3.9 billion in May, as the average price per barrel fell to $16.19, down 21 cents from May. An average of 7.36 million barrels of oil were imported daily, down from 7.76 million barrels daily in May.

As usual, the largest overall deficit was with Japan, an imbalance of $4.4 billion, up from $4.1 billion in May.

The deficit with Canada, America's largest trading partner, climbed to $1.40 billion. The deficit with the countries of Western Europe rose to $1.9 billion while the deficit with the newly industrialized countries of Taiwan, South Korea, Hong Kong and Singapore rose to $2.7 billion in June.

The Reagan administration is counting on export growth to continue and contribute fully half of overall economic growth this year. The administration, mindful of the presidential election, is predicting the overall economy, as measured by the gross national product, will increase by 3.5 percent this year, the best performance since 1984.

Smoking Ban Eyed

cent of the department's 79 employees are smokers.

Saying the board may not wish to institute a total ban on smoking because Pitt is one of the leading tobacco producing counties in the United States, Monroe suggested three other options might be considered for the health department.

One would allow smoking only in designated lounge areas. A second would ban smoking in any patient-client service area, but allow smoking in designated lounge areas and in offices as long as employees sharing office space do not object.

The third option — the most lenient — would ban smoking from patient service and general use areas, but allow it in other areas, such as offices and work areas.

In other business Monday commissioners gave formal approval to a new emergency operation or "multihazard" plan to be used in case of natural or man made disaster situations and awarded contracts for the purchase of four open top solid waste containers, a stationary solid waste site compactor and a landfill compactor.

Commissioners appointed Ruth Trevathan to the county Solid Waste Management Task Force, replacing Ruth Moskop who requested she be removed because of her appointment to the Greenville Recycling Committee and named D.A. "Andy" Whitlock as a regular member of the Winterville Planning and Zoning Board and James Little as an alternate member.

Residents Complain Of Noise

Aiport Director Jim Turcotte said he agrees that someone — like the city or a real estate agent — should have told Gooding, and others, that their proposed homes were close to the airport, but no zoning had been created north of the airport to discourage development and no study existed to ensure the surrounding land was not developed for incompatible uses.

One reason residents are complaining is many of them do not yet understand the intent of the land-use plan, Turcotte said.

The plan, developed by the city of Greenville, was not created to move people from their homes or to pave the way for jet service to Greenville; the plan is designed to prevent future instances like the one Gooding is facing, Turcotte said.

"If we don't do anything, there's nothing to stop these airplanes now," Turcotte said. "The plan can be killed, but the airport is still going to operate."

The current problems exist because the land has been developed in the past so that it is not compatible with air traffic, Turcotte said.

The land-use plan did not create the existing problems; instead, the plan should prevent unwise development in the future, he said.

As for the expansion, the airport already owns enough land to extend the airstrip north 1,000 feet toward N.C. 33, Turcotte said. The end of the runway is projected to be about 900 feet from the highway.

North of the highway, the land-use plan recommends a corridor of open land to provide pilots with enough space to make approaches for landings.

The approach area, called a clear zone, is required by the Federal Aviation Administration to be free of buildings, trees, television antennae and other obstructions.

Lynne James, strategic projects coordinator with the city, said current airport data shows the only area where noise is considered unacceptable for development is the area immediately surrounding the runway, which is entirely on airport property and should not affect residential areas.

Unacceptable noise levels should not reach neighborhoods unless jets use the airport, Ms. James said, and neither the state Department of Transportation nor local officials anticipate commercial jet service in Greenville.

Many in the audience laughed and objected to the data, and expressed fear that the runway extension will cause noise to increase and planes to fly even lower in order to reach the longer landing strip. "Right now it's ridiculously noisy," Gooding said.

But John L. Caldwell, with the state Department of Transportation, said by 1991 the FAA will require all jets to have new, quieter engines, therefore jet service should not bring added noise.

Caldwell, a civil engineer with a master's in regional and city planning, also said pilots can begin their approaches farther away from the runway, and by flattening out the landing pilots can avoid flying closer to homes.

If residents can substantiate claims that they are experiencing a problem and the current noise data is inaccurate they can request the FAA conduct a noise impact study, Caldwell said.

The FAA can re-route air traffic away from homes or raise approach levels to decrease noise, Caldwell said.

The FAA will even buy homes and property from residents hampered by noise that cannot be prevented, Turcotte said, but independent FAA engineers would have to conduct the testing and gather data.

The FAA must see that there is a pressing need before it will conduct the noise study, and Turcotte said the current noise data would not show a need.

Caldwell also said he has never seen airport development cause land values to decrease in North Carolina; the land value actually increases as it becomes suitable for industrial or airport projects.

Most of the people attending the meeting were black, and some voiced concern that Greenville's black population continued to take the brunt of development and the land-use plan was aimed at harming blacks.

Caldwell, who is black, said the plan was not aimed at blacks; in this case there just happened to be black neighborhoods near the airport. He said whites in Gastonia and Asheville have expressed the same fears and concerns in other local projects.

Airport On Move

Improvements Will Mean Safety

Pitt-Greenville Airport has moved another step toward modernization with bids for a new Instrument Landing System.

Airport officials were pleased with the lower than expected bids they received since the full cost of the system is being borne by state and local funds.

The ILS uses radio waves which provide communication to pilots for landing in poor weather conditions. Use of the equipment will allow more reliable commercial airline schedules and improved safety. Because bids are lower than expected the airport expects to improve other equipment used in landings.

Gradually the local airport, which was vitually unused by commercial aircraft only a few years ago, is modernizing.

The parking area was improved and it is one of the few commercial airports in the state which still does not charge a fee for long-term parking.

The city and county governments have appropriated funds for an expansion of the terminal which will provide more space for passengers, ticket agents and better baggage-handling facilities. The airport authority is also looking at the extension of one runway.

All of that should provide a better airport, and particularly a safer one for passengers who leave and arrive here.

Good commercial air service is essential to the economic development of Greenville and Pitt County. With the improvements coming up, PGV's future as a commercial facility seems assured.

The Berlin Wall

It Is Still A Symbol Of Shame

The Berlin Wall, the symbol of shame for the communist world that had to erect a barrier to keep its people from fleeing to the west, seems almost forgotten in this era of change in the Soviet Union.

Nevertheless the Wall is still there and last weekend it observed its 27th anniversary. It was not a pleasant occasion. West Germans threw eggs and tomatoes at East German guards. Police on the communist side dispersed protesting youth.

There was no question of the Wall's purpose when it was constructed Aug. 13, 1961. East German refugees were flowing across the border from communist Berlin to West Berlin. Officially the reason for the Wall was given as deterring a threat of attack from the west. Any military strategist would say that the Wall could be breached by an armed attack in a matter of hours. Clearly the Wall was built, not to forstall a military attack, but to keep East Germans in.

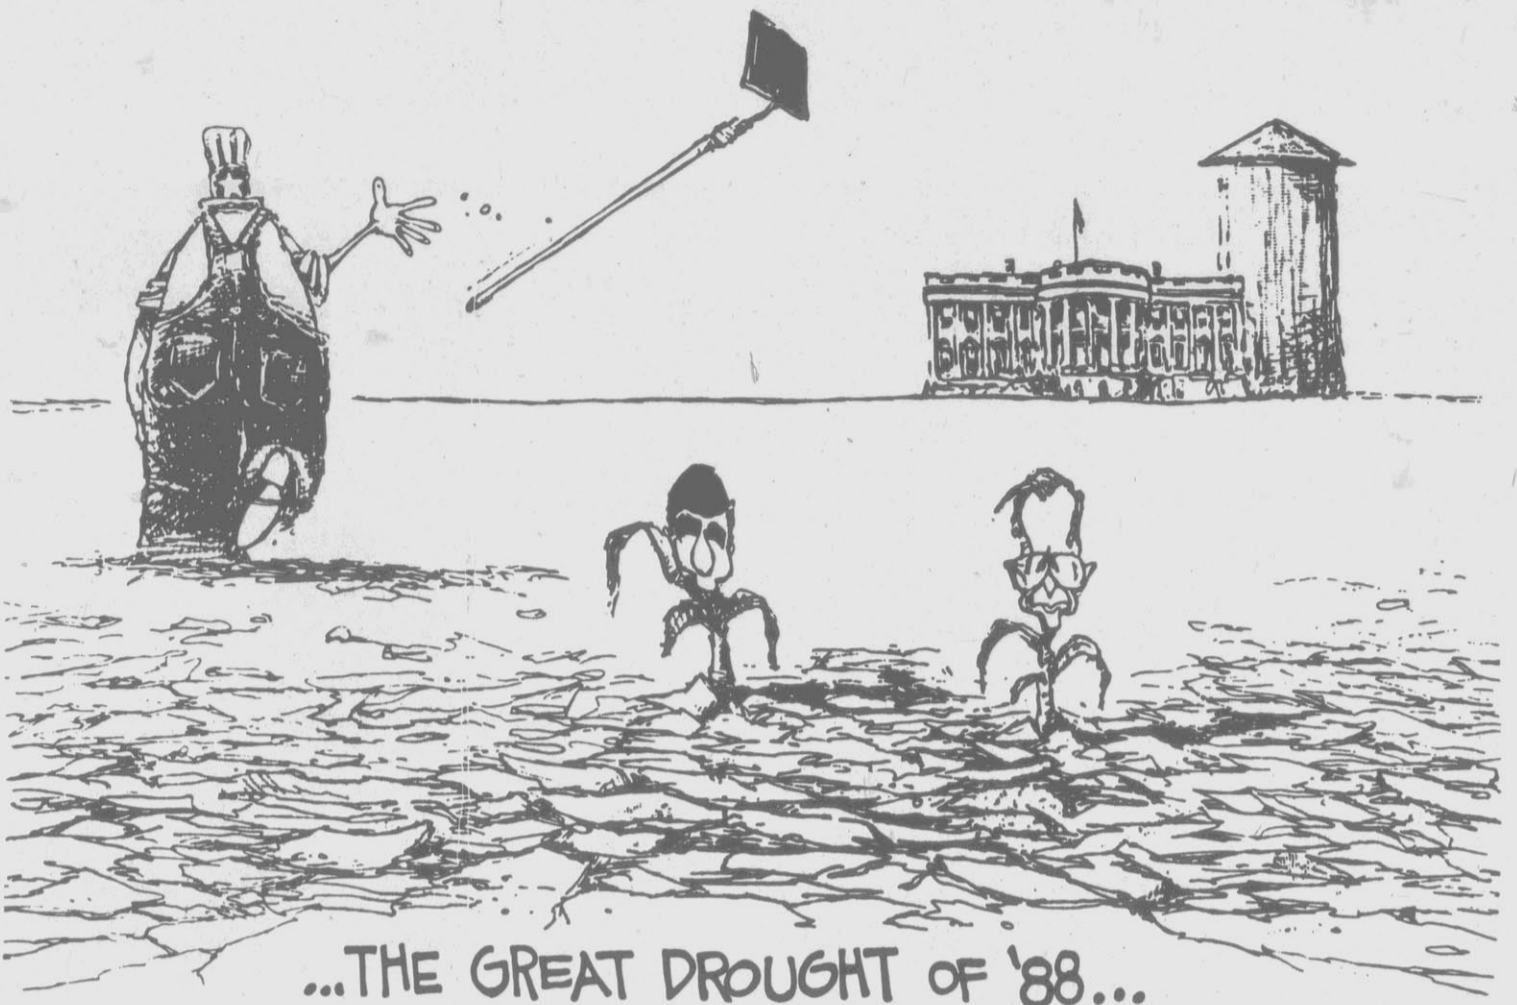

After 27 years there still can be no other reason for the Berlin Wall. It is a clear definition between a controlled state and a free democracy. If that were not so the Wall could be knocked over tomorrow and the divided Germans could visit back and forth.

There are young adults living on both sides of the Wall who have never known it to be any other way. They know that their own people, perhaps relatives, live on the other side but they are not free to cross over and see them. There have been few comparable barriers to the citizens of any nation throughout the world's history.

We don't doubt that there has been some improvement in individual rights in the Soviet Union under the Mikhail S. Gorbachev regime and it would seem likely that Soviet satellite states will eventually follow that lead. When East Germany becomes serious about the rights and freedoms of its citizens, however, it will have no further need for the Wall. It will be torn down as a relic of an unpleasant era.

There is no sign that will be happening in the near future. Consequently we know that the Wall is still necessary to keep in unhappy East German citizens. It is a shame.

'Today, I Am My Own Man'

Bush's closest supporters have expressed doubts that the vice president, so long the consummate team player, can demonstrate the boldness of leadership that would electrify the convention.

WASHINGTON — Vice President George Bush, after 18 years of faithful service in the shadow of others, faces the formidable task this week of casting a shadow of his own.

Republicans, anxiously wondering whether Bush can prove to his party and the nation that he is a leader, will measure his success by two critical events: his choice of a running mate — his first major public decision in years — and his acceptance speech, when the vice president at last speaks to a convention for himself.

"This week will give the vice president repeated opportunities to establish ... and portray his political identity," said campaign press secretary Sheila Tate.

"At New Orleans, George Bush moves out on his own."

But Bush's closest supporters have expressed doubts that the vice president, so long the consummate team player, can demonstrate the boldness of leadership that would electrify the convention. And although his most gifted writer has spent weeks crafting a speech to establish his political identity and call Republicans to his colors, his performance as a campaigner has raised questions about whether he can rise to the moment.

Such questions were also raised about the Democratic nominee, Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis. But even before his convention performance, which received smash reviews, he strongly asserted his command of his party with the surprise choice of Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, a conservative Texan, as his running mate.

Now, Bush and his high command are hoping to wring every bit of suspense from his vice presidential choice. Yet unless Bush nominates a woman or a black or someone unconventional — such as baseball commissioner Peter Ueberroth — it is difficult to see how he can match the political effects of the Dukakis surprise, which are still echoing across the campaign landscape. Dukakis balanced his ticket geographically and ideologically, challenged Bush on his home turf of Texas, and was perceived as having blunted the power of the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

Bush was under pressure to make his choice before the convention, Tate said. But he apparently is determined to keep his choice to himself until the last moment. With the help of his pollster, Robert Teeter, and advice from members of Congress, party leaders, his family and former Department of the Treasury counsel Robert Kimmitt, Bush has been searching methodically for a running mate, insisting that he wouldn't make a decision until this weekend.

Judging by those who have been contacted by Kimmitt, and the opinions of experts, the leading candidates seem to be Senate Republican Leader Robert Dole of Kansas; Rep. Jack Kemp of New York; Sens. Alan Simpson of Wyoming, Pete Domenici of New Mexico, Dan Quayle of Indiana, John Danforth of Missouri and Bill Armstrong of Colorado; and former Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander.

And while choosing a vice president and managing the announcement may be one indication of Bush's leadership ability, his performance in his acceptance speech will be his climactic opportunity to place his mark on the party and take command of the forces that could elect him to the presidency.

Peggy Noonan, who helped Bush in New Hampshire and wrote several of Reagan's most memorable speeches, has sought in the acceptance speech to help the vice president say, in effect, "Today, I am my own man."

Baker is determined to bring a sharp focus to Bush's campaign. At his urging, Bush told reporters that from the moment of his nomination, "I become more the candidate, more the standard-bearer of this party and less the vice president of the United States."

Tate said Bush intended to "differentiate" himself from the president, without differing. He is out to try to make the convention understand, she suggested, that he cannot truly follow Ronald Reagan for "they are two different men."

Noonan has traveled with Bush to watch him on the stump. She has asked his family what ought to be in the speech and, with the vice president, she has pored through his old files to pull out from his background those moments that might illuminate him. But there is concern among his advisers about his delivery, since he regularly flubs, changes or steps all over his best applause lines.

One source said New York media adviser Roger Ailes has teased and lectured Bush on how not to kill a good line. Others have coached him to stay with the text as written, speak more slowly and refrain from waving his arms and letting his nasal voice soar too high.

Bush, as he prepared to go to New Orleans, spent hours going over drafts of his speech and the techniques of reading from a Tele-Prompter. Bush's campaign leaders, as well as his supporters, will be watching to see if he can persuade a skeptical party that there is life beyond Ronald Reagan.

Standing In The Shadow

The strategic challenge facing Bush in 1988 is one that Truman could appreciate. He needs to maintain the winning coalition assembled by Ronald Reagan in 1980 and strengthened in 1984.

Party, particularly between the Eastern internationalist wing he represented and the Midwestern isolationist faction led by Sen. Robert A. Taft of Ohio. The second was a commendable aversion to pledging himself to commitments that would make it difficult for him to govern once he became President. It is a strategy that Dukakis seems to be pursuing for basically the same reasons.

Is Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis another Dewey, and is he pursuing a course that has ominous parallels to Dewey's aloof high-road campaign of 1948? There are some remarkable parallels between the two candidates of the party out of power.

Both Dewey and Dukakis enjoyed the image of being well-scrubbed reformers. Dewey had been a racket-busting district attorney before coming to the governorship of New York. A reserved — some said cold and unfeeling — man, Dewey pursued a classic front-runner's strategy. He mouthed platitudes and refused to be nailed down to specifics. His elusiveness stemmed from two sources. The first was his desire to avoid positions that would open old wounds in the Republican

The strategic challenge facing Bush in 1988 is one that Truman could appreciate. He needs to maintain the winning coalition assembled by Ronald Reagan in 1980 and strengthened in 1984. Truman needed the New Dealers who had been mobilized by Roosevelt but he also faced the challenge from his party's left wing, led by former Vice President Henry A. Wallace, and a bolt on the right from Southern conservatives, led by South Carolina Gov. J. Strom Thurmond. Truman's approach was to position himself slightly to the left politically where he thought most voters were located in 1948. Bush's strategy appears to be to position himself slightly to the right in 1988 based on the same kind of calculation about the contemporary electorate.

But if the defections that beset the Democrats in 1948 are more serious than the faint rumblings of discontent this year among Republican conservatives, Truman enjoyed one advantage that Bush does not possess. As President, he could use his incumbent powers, including the extraordinary stroke of calling the Republican-controlled Congress into special session to present them with a list of items he wanted passed but at which they would surely balk. He could then assail them with devastating effect as a "do-nothing Congress."

Dukakis has an even less enviable challenge than that facing Dewey: Convince a prosperous country at peace that change is warranted. Dewey overestimated the public's desire for novelty and its disenchantment with the Democrats. His conservative tactic of muting specifics led Administration mouthpiece Harold Ickes to label him "Elusive Dewey, the candidate in sneakers."

It may well be that Bush will prove less appealing a campaigner than Truman, and that Dukakis will spurn the loftiness of Dewey. But, if on election night, the early edition of the newspaper comes out with the premature headline "Dukakis Beats Bush," hold onto it. It could become a valuable collector's item.

Angola: An Increasingly Costly Stalemate

Now that the United States has succeeded in arranging a truce between South Africa, Cuba and Angola, there is likely to be a renewed focus on the Soviet role in the negotiations.

Many will argue that Moscow's cooperation in the talks, combined with a more accommodating posture in Afghanistan and Cambodia, indicate that Soviet "new thinking" has finally been applied to foreign policy. Such "new thinking" includes a downgrading of the importance of the Third World to Moscow and a lessened commitment to Third World allies. In light of this, it will be tempting to advocate that Washington demilitarize its approach to the Third World and focus on more cooperative efforts with the Soviet Union to end regional conflicts.

While there's much to be said for this view, the Angolan talks do not bear it out. The breakthrough in Angola came about not so much through American cooperation with the Soviet Union, but through a forceful resistance of Soviet goals. Moscow, on the other hand, achieved all that it did by increasing its commitment to Angola, not by lessening it.

The talks mediated by the United States succeeded in establishing a cease-fire in Angola and Namibia. In Angola, the Soviet and Cuban-backed government had been fighting against the American and South African-backed rebels of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, or UNITA, since 1975. In Namibia, also known as Southwest Africa, rebels supported by Angola fought to achieve independence in a territory that South Africa governed in defiance of U.N. resolutions. As part of the agreement, South Africa would grant independence to Namibia and Cuban forces would leave Angola. Although much has to be worked out before the agreement is final, that this much has been achieved is a major accomplishment.

The agreement did, in part, represent a departure for the Soviet Union. Moscow was clearly trying to reduce its involvement. Soviet diplomats played a key role in pressuring Cuba and Angola to be flexible and declared that their conciliatory posture was due to an effort to lessen, as part of Gorbachev's "new thinking," their participation in Third World conflicts.

What is important, however, is not that the Soviet Union is cooperating with the United States in ending the conflict, but the reasons why Moscow is doing so now. The answer is that the Soviets, as well as the other warring parties, have come to the collective conclusion that they could not dictate a military victory and that continued fighting would produce an increasingly costly stalemate.

While it is regrettable that the United States had to indirectly associate itself with South Africa, it is undeniable that both countries' aid to UNITA pushed Moscow to seek a settlement. This became especially clear following a major defeat of the Angolan and Cuban forces by a combined South African-UNITA force in October, 1987. The defeat convinced Moscow that a military solution was unreachably, making a diplomatic settlement more attractive.

Moscow's desire to settle the conflict was, however, contingent on receiving honorable terms — both for itself and for its Cuban and Angolan allies. In particular, an agreement that called for Cuban withdrawal from Angola without first securing Namibian independence would be seen as an abandonment of an ally. Especially in light of the Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan, Moscow would not want to be perceived as an unreliable patron pursuing a general geopolitical retreat.

Just as it had been persuaded to seek a diplomatic settlement, the Soviet Union and its allies applied the same pressure on South Africa. Under Gorbachev, assistance to Angola increased to $1 million in military equipment in 1987. Moreover, the Cuban contingent was raised from 40,000 to 57,000 men and Soviet combat advisers went down to the brigade level. These steps proved devastatingly effective when the Cubans badly bloodied South African forces in fighting on June 27. The realization that continued fighting would be fruitless set the stage for the productive talks.

The willingness of the Soviet Union to become involved in Third World conflicts has lessened, but this is largely because the United States and others have raised the costs of Soviet adventurism. That Moscow will not engage in wars it has no chance of winning is not so much "new thinking" but "smart thinking" in response to a new Western assertiveness.

High Anxiety

WASHINGTON — The failed bid by Senate Democrats for a cease-fire in the domestic political war over aid to the Nicaraguan Contras has resulted in an escalation of hostilities that could further strain relations with the White House, snarl final work of the 100th Congress and spill over into the fall campaign.

As dust was settling from the Senate's angry Contra-aid showdown Wednesday, winners were hard to distinguish from losers and recriminations were still flying, including a charge by Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., that the White House has lost all credibility — "what little it had" with Congress.

By mustering a partyline vote of 49 to 47, Democrats passed their own plan to continue humanitarian aid to the anti-Sandinista rebels and set up procedures for a vote next month on up to $16.5 million in military aid if President Reagan requests it, as he is expected to do.

But, when the White House characterized the plan as only "minimally acceptable" and many Republicans vehemently opposed it as no more than a damage-control operation by Democrats, the Senate GOP minority balked en masse and the Democrats were denied even a semblance of bipartisan support.

Democrats gained some political cover with their wide-straddle position on the issue that seems to satisfy Democrats who oppose Contra aid as well as those who enthusiastically support it. But a GOP blessing would have given them a lot more.

And Republicans, by holding out for military aid and losing, can now try to blame any battlefield disasters for the Contras on the Democrats' unwillingness to arm them with more than "beans and Band-aids," as some Republicans put it. But they lost their chance to accuse Democrats, as they have before, of "leaving the freedom fighters to starve in the jungle."

Minority Leader Robert J. Dole, R-Kan., got caught in the crossfire as he attempted to pull the parties together, a less-than-commanding position from which to bid for the job of Vice President Bush's running mate at the Republican National Convention next week. He was willing to support the Democratic plan if the White House would endorse it in writing. The White House, divided on the issue, refused to do so and Dole was left "hanging out to dry," in the words of one Dole sympathizer.

The Democratic ticket got an "umbrella," as Republicans derisively called it, that was broad enough to shelter both presidential nominee Michael S. Dukakis, a foe of military aid, and his running mate, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Tex., who favors it. But Republicans, by rejecting the umbrella's shelter, remain free to try to poke holes in it, as they were cheerily doing again Thursday.

However, for many lawmakers, the minutes outweigh the pluses in what Sen. David L. Boren, D-Okla., called a "tragically lost opportunity" to provide for an orderly, politically defused resolution of the issue.

"Politically I don't think there are winners or losers," said Sen. Daniel J. Evans, R-Wash. "To the extent this shows we still have real divisions on the issue, the real loser is our policy in Central America."

The only certainty, according to weary lawmakers, is that the issue itself is no closer to solution or political accommodation than it has been for most of the nearly eight years of the Reagan administration.

"In reality, there can be no true agreement on the substance of this issue because the differences are too profound," said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., in an assessment that was shared by some of his conservative foes.

But Wednesday's resumption of partisanship on the issue means that Congress may have to tangle with the issue again in much more polarized atmosphere, according to lawmakers of both parties. It will go next month to a House-Senate conference as part of a defense appropriations bill for next year, and House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Tex., indicated the House will go along with it. But the House is also considered likely to load up the defense bill with arms-control provisions opposed by Reagan and a veto fight is expected.

When and if that is resolved, Reagan could submit a military aid request that will prompt another fight. If, as House leaders say is likely, the House rejects military aid, the issue could figure prominently in an end-of-the-session fight over a catch-all continuing resolution.

While the three-week recess that began Thursday may allow tempers to cool, Byrd's unabating fury indicated that relations between the Congress and Reagan at the end of his term may be rocky at best. "It's all take and no give with this White House," Byrd told reporters this morning. "Its credibility — what little it had — must be gone by now. It left the Contras high and dry."

"There are Democrats who feel they were used badly and that it's impossible now to work any bipartisan relationship on this issue," said Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn.

But there were mixed views about whether the issue could turn into a potentially decisive one in the presidential campaign. Most lawmakers interviewed Thursday said it was unlikely to do so unless "there is a real blunder" by Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega, as a senior Democratic aid put it.

"The issue does not have the political intensity in the country that it once had — or that it has here" in Congress, said Sen. George J. Mitchell, D-Maine.

But it could have that kind of intensity if exploited, said Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind. "After all, who ever heard of Quemoy and Matsu?" he asked, referring to two obscure islands off the Chinese coast that suddenly cast a larger-than-life shadow over the Nixon-Kennedy campaign in 1960.

(c) 1988, The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — From Angola to Afghanistan, from Kampuchea to Korea, some of the world's bloodiest regional conflicts appear to be heading toward a peaceful resolution.

Soviet affairs experts say this remarkable shift in the past six months has been spurred by Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev's decision to reduce East-West confrontation by withdrawing Soviet troops from Afghanistan and using that pullout as a model for resolving other conflicts.

They say that Moscow is in the midst of a global retrenchment, which reflects Gorbachev's changed priorities and in particular his drive for economic and political reform at home.

Arnold Horelick, a scholar with the Rand Corporation, a California think tank, said the Soviets had decided to do a "cost-benefit analysis" in the Third World, and decided to "liquidate or dampen regional conflicts that don't pay off."

The Reagan administration officials, however, credit the progress to its show of resolve in sending sophisticated arms to anti-government forces in Afghanistan and Angola and expanding the U.S. military presence in the Persian Gulf.

John Whitehead, the deputy secretary of state, wrote in the Washington Post two weeks ago that seeds sown by Reagan, nurtured by "toughness, firmness and a clear vision of American principles" are now bearing fruit. "American commitment and American action," he said, have brought "important advances in America's interests ... around the globe."

But in fact, just as every regional conflict has had unique local origins, the context for movement toward resolving the conflicts differs from case to case. Superpower willingness to end confrontation makes a big difference, but local factors such as battle fatigue, economic deprivation, manpower attrition and a sense of futility about the chances of a military victory also determine the outcome.

The Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan, which Gorbachev announced in February, may well provide a model of how disputes will be resolved, according to Michael Mandelbaum, a Soviet affairs expert at the Council on Foreign Relations in New York. It is an example of a conflict in which the Soviets are either losing or paying a higher price than they find acceptable, it has interfered with the focus on internal reform that Gorbachev seeks, and it is a case of acquiring a "client" government that is "impoverished, unstable and interferes with relations with other countries that are important — such as the United States, China and Western Europe."

The decision to withdraw from Afghanistan may have influenced the Soviet policy in Angola, State Department officials said. "If they are cutting and running from Afghanistan, which is on their border, they certainly won't continue supporting a war 11,000 miles away in an area which is marginal to their interests," said the senior State Department official.

In the Gulf, where Iran and Iraq have now agreed to a cease-fire ending their eight-year war, the United States and Soviet Union have cooperated at the United Nations to persuade the two parties to end the fighting.

And here, according to State Department and Pentagon experts, the principal factor is the fatigue of both warring parties. "Both sides are tired of this war," said a senior Pentagon analyst. "The Iraqis were really helpless; they desperately wanted a cease-fire. The Iraqis also wanted to end the war."

The official said that Iraqi bombardment of Iranian cities, which weakened the will of civilians in Iran, and Iraq's strong defense against Iranian regular troops and revolutionary guards who occupied Iraqi territory, were critical factors. In addition, he said, the expanded U.S. military presence in the gulf made clear that "every time Iran did something, they would be hurt."

And although the United States refused to cooperate with a Soviet proposal for an international military presence in the gulf, the general warming of relations between Washington and Moscow added to the Iranians' sense of isolation, western diplomats said.

The other regional disputes and confrontations have patterns all their own. In Kampuchea, formerly Cambodia, the Soviets have encouraged Vietnam to withdraw its 100,000 troops. But there is a very serious question troubling the Soviets and the West on how to prevent the Khmer Rouge, who carried out a mass slaughter of Kampuchean and who still are supplied by China, from fill-

In divided Korea, the Soviets have actively encouraged the communist North Korean government to begin talks with the South Koreans, and U.S. officials said they believe parliamentary delegations will meet soon.

GAO Says FAA Failing To Check Military Airspace

By NORMAN BLACK
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Aviation Administration is doing a poor job of tracking the extent to which the military uses restricted airspace, making it difficult to judge demands for even more such "special use airspace," congressional investigators say.

The FAA also has not offered its regional offices any guidelines to follow for reclaiming restricted airspace that isn't being used, the General Accounting Office says.

"We acknowledge that some improvement in the administration of special use airspace has recently occurred, but believe that serious and longstanding problems continue to affect the program," the GAO wrote in a report released Monday.

"The FAA is not effectively managing special use airspace to ensure its efficient and appropriate use."

The GAO study, conducted over an 18-month period, was requested by Sen. Jesse A. Helms, R-N.C. The congressional watchdog agency cited Helms' state of North Carolina as well as California as two areas where the conflict between military and civilian use of the skies is becoming particularly sharp.

In recent years, organizations such as the Denver-based Western Solidarity and the Washington-based Rural Coalition have banded together to fight expansion of military air-training corridors and to demand strict enforcement of rules governing such things as direct flight paths over ranches and farm homes.

According to the GAO, "special use airspace consisted of 556,152 square miles, or about one-fifth, of the airspace within the continental United States" as of September 1987. The agency said that total excludes special use areas off the coastlines, but still represents a 22 percent increase in square mileage compared with 1978.

There are various categories of special use airspace, the agency continued, ranging from a few "prohibited areas" that are off-limits to all aircraft to "restricted areas" from which civilian aircraft are barred to "alert areas," in which civilian pilots are simply informed there is a high level of flight activity occurring.

The biggest problem with the current system is the FAA does not require the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps to disclose in some standardized way how frequently they use the airspace set aside for them, the GAO said.

That failure is particularly important given the results of a Navy study conducted last year, the GAO continued. That study focused on 191 special use areas and found that during a two-month period, they were utilized by military aircraft only about a quarter of the available hours.

"Seven restricted and three military operations areas were not utilized at all during the period," the GAO said.

That Navy study also "revealed that (restricted) airspace was sometimes used for other than its intended purpose;" for example, for "non-hazardous activities" such as basic flight training.

"If the FAA is to effectively manage special use airspace, it needs to know where, when and how airspace is being utilized," the GAO concluded.

Making matters worse, "even if the FAA had the data necessary ... it has not established guidance for its (regional offices) to reduce or eliminate special use airspace that is inefficiently or inappropriately used," the GAO asserted.

The FAA, in a written response to the GAO dated June 13, "generally concurred" with the findings and said it would begin trying to collect "actual usage reporting data."

The agency said it also would "take appropriate action to periodically review the usage reports and ensure that the airspace is being used for the designated purpose."

The Pentagon, in a separate response, said it was pursuing development of a computerized airspace management system that automatically would provide the FAA with the information it needed.

Assistant Defense Secretary Gordon A. Smith warned, however, that low levels of usage don't always mean that airspace restrictions can be dropped.

"The military has requirements for special use airspace that may be used as little as three or four times a year," Smith wrote.

"It is in the nation's interest that the DoD continues to determine the requirements for special use airspace. Only the DoD can accurately and properly assess its needs in support of national security."

Legislator Has Spot In Limelight

By JOHN FLESHER

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — She had only two minutes and 13 seconds, but Theresa Esposito took full advantage of her moment in the spotlight at the Republican National Convention by heaping praise on her idol, Elizabeth Dole.

The Salisbury native and former U.S. transportation secretary "has set the pace for American women in public service," Mrs. Esposito said in a speech Monday introducing Mrs. Dole for a stint as temporary convention chair. "Her achievements and her commitment to making a difference ... are truly inspirational."

The speech was a dream come true for Mrs. Esposito, a state legislator and longtime Republican activist who got the word about three weeks ago that she had been chosen to introduce her fellow North Carolinian.

She spent hours preparing for her prime-time appearance. "They had everything mapped out, right down to the colors I wear."

Her height and the strength of her voice were also matters of utmost importance to convention planners, who prepared to adjust the podium level and microphone for maximum effect.

She also received instructions about makeup and jewelry and had to learn to read from a TelePrompTer, though she had a prepared text handy in case of a foup. But the speech went off without a hitch.

"This Phi Beta Kappa from Duke University, this Harvard Law School-educated daughter of the South, did not duck the issues, making safety and transportation her highest priority," Mrs. Esposito said.

"Thousands of lives have been saved due to her strong initiatives in air, rail, maritime and highway safety."

Mrs. Esposito, 57, also is special events chairwoman and rally coordinator for the North Carolina delegation. In the latter capacity she acts as a kind of cheerleader, making sure the Tar Heels cheer, applaud, and wave their signs at the right times.

Mrs. Esposito said she thrives on politics — a passion from her youth in the political mecca of Washington, D.C., where she earned a degree as a practical nurse. When she lived in Washington, residents of the nation's capital could not vote in national races, so her activism began in earnest after moving to North Carolina with her husband in 1973.

She became involved in the local chapter of the Federation of Republican Women and now is the group's national public relations chairwoman. President Reagan appointed her to the National Commission on Children in June.

In her first bid for elective office, Mrs. Esposito won a seat in the state House of Representatives in 1984 and was re-elected last year. Thanking her for her introduction, Mrs. Dole said she was confident Mrs. Esposito could look forward to "victory in November."

She has gained a reputation for hard work and displays of righteous indignation at the hardball tactics of the leadership in the overwhelmingly Democratic House.

IN THE STATE

President

RALEIGH (AP) — James B. Hyler Jr., a 40-year-old accountant newly installed at the helm of First Citizens Bancshares Inc., is the youngest president among North Carolina's major banks, officials say.

Hyler, a First Citizens executive vice president and chief financial officer, was elected president of the bank company and its major subsidiary, First Citizens Bank, at a special meeting of the bank's board of directors on Monday. He replaced F.P. Bodenheimer Jr., who was fired.

The Raleigh bank company is the state's fifth largest with assets of $3.1 billion.

Coke Find

MOREHEAD CITY, N.C. (AP) — About 80 pounds of uncut cocaine with an estimated value of at least $8 million has been found at Portsmouth Island in Carteret County by National Park Service rangers.

The cocaine, wrapped in 30 watertight bundles about the size of cigar boxes, was found last week and turned over to federal and state investigators.

Freeman said it was not clear whether the cocaine was brought to the island by sea or air, or whether it was lost or abandoned. He said the find is the largest seizure of pure cocaine ever in Carteret County and could be the largest in eastern North Carolina.

AIDS Cost Alarms Medical Officials

CHARLOTTE (AP) — More and more of the cost of AIDS care will come out of taxpayers' pockets because two of the fastest-growing categories of people with AIDS sufferers — intravenous drugs users and prostitutes — rarely have health insurance, authorities say.

"It's a real problem," said Dr. Jared Schwartz, president of the Mecklenburg County Medical Society and head of the state medical society's AIDS task force. "Places like New York are already running into terrible problems."

New York City officials estimate that 400,000 residents — 1 in 18 — are already infected with the human immunodeficiency virus, which is believed to cause AIDS. Authorities have estimated that 25 percent to 50 percent of that city's hospital beds will be occupied by AIDS patients in three years.

"We haven't seen this yet in North Carolina," Schwartz said. "Right now, it is only a crisis for certain individuals. Before long, it's going to be a community crisis."

Faced with an average cost of $50,000 to care for AIDS patients from diagnosis to death, North Carolina medical officials are asking who will foot the bills.

"Who's going to pay for AIDS?" Schwartz asked. "We're all going to pay for it."

The question is how the burden will be distributed among taxpayers, employers, employees and AIDS patients, The Charlotte Observer reported Monday.

If insurance companies cover the growing cost of AIDS care, premiums will rise for employers and employees, Schwartz said. The bills of people who don't have insurance often are paid through the federal government's Medicaid program or through local taxes set aside for care of the poor and indigent.

What frightens many hospital officials, doctors and AIDS activists even more than the current number of reported AIDS cases — 576 in North Carolina and 70,206 nationwide — but future predictions.

Federal officials estimate 1 million to 2 million Americans have been infected with the AIDS virus, although many of them don't know it. And scientists have predicted that, unless a treatment is found, the virus will kill almost everyone it infects.

Steve Morrisette, senior vice president of the N.C. Hospital Association, said every North Carolina hospital has probably seen AIDS patients by now.

"We know that a large portion of AIDS patients are not going to have any sources of payment," he said. "We've already got an ever-growing proportion of indigent patients coming into the hospital now. This just makes a bad situation worse."

Both hospitals and private doctors complain that, even when it does pay for services, Medicaid doesn't cover their costs entirely.

In North Carolina, Morrisette said, Medicaid reimbursement for hospitals is based on the cost of an "average" patient.

Conservative Delegates Want One Of Their Own For No. 2

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer
NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Conservatives will not desert George Bush if he selects a moderate running mate, but they might embarrass the certain nominee with a public show of disapproval, some North Carolina Republicans warn.

"We're outnumbered by a long shot, but we're going to let people know how we feel," Bill Garrott, a Charlotte sales representative and member of the state's delegation to the Republican National Convention, said Monday.

Garrott said up to a dozen North Carolinians backed New Hampshire Sen. Gordon Humphrey's call for a rules change to require a roll-call vote on the vice presidential nomination, enabling those unhappy with Bush's choice to dissent in public.

"We'd create some skirmish," said Garrott, 36, who supported Pat Robertson for president. "Why lay down when we've had a conservative administration and let it drift away without a fight?"

Gov. Jim Martin, who said he had no preference for the vice presidential nominee, said he opposed changing convention rules to allow a roll-call vote.

"If they can get enough strength to force a roll-call vote, then they get to do it," he said. "If they don't ... why should they have one?"

As the guessing game continued over whom Bush would choose, an overwhelming majority of the state's representatives appeared ready to support his decision. Most delegates and alternates interviewed Monday said Bush should not be shackled by an ideological litmus test, but should not ignore the concerns of conservatives.

Their comments mirrored those of delegates from across the nation surveyed by The Associated Press, most of whom said Bush should choose the person he feels can bring in the most votes.

"It's a question of who is best able to help the ticket," said former Sen. Jim Broyhill, chairman of the North Carolina delegation. "When you start insisting that everybody be 100 percent pure, it will be difficult to find anybody to run with you."

Bush "has to win before he can do anything, and his vice president has to help him do that," said alternate Leo Daughtry of Smithfield.

But David Funderburk, former U.S. ambassador to Romania who lost to Broyhill in the 1986 GOP Senate primary, said it was essential for Bush to satisfy "hard-core conservatives" who never have fully embraced him.

"Conservatives will support Bush over Dukakis, but they need a strong conservative on the ticket to fire them up," Funderburk said, adding that he also backed Humphrey's initiative. "They expect someone who passes the test on the issues."

Sen. Bob Dole, his wife, Elizabeth Dole, Howard Baker and Jack Kemp were the most popular candidates among the North Carolinians interviewed, though members of the party's arch-conservative wing said the Kansas senator and Baker were deeply flawed.

Dole's past willingness to support tax increases as budget-balancing measures "would be something the Democrats would play up, just like we play up the inconsistencies between Dukakis and Bentsen," said Steve Rader, 1st District GOP chairman.

Baker's support of the Panama Canal treaties is a sore point with conservatives, who consider him "a real turnoff," Funderburk said.

Howard Clement, one of the delegation's few blacks and a member of the Durham City Council, favored Elizabeth Dole, saying the Salisbury native would help the GOP ticket in North Carolina and attract women's support.

"She certainly would help Mr. Bush overcome the gender gap, which is one of his biggest problems," Clement said. "She's not an ideologue, appeals to the great middle America."

Most of the North Carolinians were enthusiastic about Mrs. Dole but said Bush should choose her only if convinced she can run strongly outside North Carolina. Bush should not select her or another woman to appeal to women, the delegates said.

"It's hard to measure the nation's response to a woman candidate," said state Rep. Betsy Cochran of Advance. "I don't think Geraldine Ferraro was a true test because that ticket just wasn't going anywhere regardless. Some people might not be ready for a woman vice president."

Martin Gives His Support To Bush

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Arriving late at the Republican National Convention, Gov. Jim Martin quickly made up for lost time by ripping into his Democratic foe and pledging unqualified support for George Bush.

"I don't need to be here to generate news and name recognition," Martin told reporters at a reception in his honor at a French Quarter bistro Monday, responding to Democratic charges that he is attending only two days of the convention to avoid close association with Bush.

Martin charged that his re-election opponent, Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, had been more active at the Democratic convention last month because he was insecure.

"He made a big push to get to speak to the convention, was embarrassed when they turned him down," Martin said. "I don't have to prove anything. I don't have to sell off all my foreign cars and get a truck driver's license and wear an ultra-suede jacket, stuff like that," Martin said. "I feel comfortable with who I am."

Martin attended a luncheon honoring Nancy Reagan and was on the floor for the evening session highlighted by President Reagan's farewell speech.

Martin planned to return to North Carolina today to deliver a speech in Winston-Salem. He will come back to New Orleans on Wednesday but will be in Durham for a fund-raiser Thursday night, when Bush will deliver his acceptance speech.

Sen. Jesse Helms also is skipping the convention to undergo hernia surgery in Washington.

Test Can Show Risk Of Low IQ By Age 3

ATLANTA (AP) — A test of how long infants look at patterns and faces can help identify children at risk of showing mental disability by age 3, a researcher says.

Early identification of high-risk children allows concentration of medical resources on the youngsters who need them, and a way to quickly measure the impact of attempts to help a child's development, said researcher Joseph Fagan.

The test should not be used on infants in general, but only those considered at risk, said Fagan, of Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland.

Such children include those who were treated in neonatal intensive care, who suffered a breathing difficulty called respiratory distress syndrome, or who were born well past their due dates.

Fagan described research on the test Monday at the annual meeting of the American Psychological Association. Other researchers said the test has not yet been rigorously compared to other methods for predicting mental difficulties, and that it is not perfectly accurate.

The Fagan Test of Infant Intelligence relies on the fact that most babies look longer at new images than at familiar ones. That shows they can remember and discriminate between the images, reflecting two key abilities important for later life that are tapped by IQ tests, Fagan said.

The test presents infants with pairs of images, either faces or abstract designs. One is familiar, the other new. The time the infant spends looking at each image is precisely measured.

Infants who tend to look at each image in a given pair for about the same amount of time are considered at risk for later mental difficulties.

Fagan cited research in which the test was given to infants 3 months to 7 months old who had been considered at risk. The predictions of the test were compared to the children's IQ levels at age 3.

Of the 104 children predicted to be normal, 101 had normal intelligence at age 3. Of the 24 infants predicted to be at risk for mental difficulties, half had low IQ at age 3.

Fagan said most children who take the test because of some risk factor will receive a prediction of normality. So the test is valuable in relieving needless anxieties of parents, he said.

The test also will help research into whether exposure to certain substances early in life causes later mental troubles, because it shortens the time between exposure and detection of those troubles, he said.

Fagan said he receives a royalty on test kits sold by the corporation that markets the test.

Claire Kopp of the University of California, Los Angeles, said

Fagan's test has not yet been systematically compared for accuracy to other predictive techniques that focus on a child's environment and parents, or development in such areas as language and perception.

Robert McCall, director of the University of Pittsburgh's office of child development, said he and Fagan agree the test should not be used as the sole means of diagnosing a problem. Rather, it should be part of a continuing process of observation by a professional, he said.

Some Grow Weary Of Bush's Delay In Making Veep Choice

By EVANS WITT
AP Political Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Speculation continued to generate new names to answer the Republican convention's lone riddle — George Bush's choice for a running mate — but one contender grew fed up with the prolonged process and said so.

"I don't care for it, frankly," said Sen. Robert Dole.

Bush aides suggested he might use his arrival here today to announce that he has settled on running mate, but withheld the name until later.

The rumormongers were having a field day guessing, but no one in New Orleans could say they knew whom Bush will tap this week.

"We didn't need rumor control," said aide Rich Bond. "It is more like curiosity control."

The names on the rumor mill: Dole, his wife Elizabeth, Sens. Daniel Quayle, Pete Domenici, Alan Simpson, Atty. Gen. Richard Thornburgh, former White House chief of staff Howard Baker and Rep. Jack Kemp.

New names introduced by no one in particular were Sens. John Danforth and Christopher Bond of Missouri.

"I am not running around trying to get it," said Domenici. "But frankly, if it will help keep the momentum of the past few years going...I guess it is fair to say I'd do about anything."

Quayle began to have second thoughts.

"From a personal standpoint, if I had a time in my life to be vice president, I wouldn't choose this time," he said. "If George Bush thinks I can offer the most to the ticket ... Dan Quayle will sign up immediately."

Baker, a former Tennessee senator, continued to deny he is under consideration: "My name's not on that list. ...I've made it perfectly clear, I've no desire to be vice president."

Bush, in a well-orchestrated telephone call to campaign manager Lee Atwater on the convention floor, did raise the possibility he will unveil his choice a day ahead of schedule on Wednesday. Atwater said Bush wanted to "just leave it on Thursday ... but flexible."

For one hopeful, the selection procedure has already dragged on too long. Dole said he thought it might have been more valuable for Bush to choose a running mate last month and not give Democratic nominees Michael Dukakis and Lloyd Bentsen a head start for the fall campaign.

Aides to the Kansas senator rushed to say he was not criticizing Bush.

But the vice president had already heard of the comments from the politician known for a sharp tongue.

Dole said he suspects Bush "has already made up his mind."

"If you asked the question, I think that's not an unlikely thing for him to say," said Bush deputy campaign manager Rich Bond on the convention floor.

In the Superdome, the hopefuls began their parade to the podium with the opening of the convention Monday.

First up were Kemp of New York, the choice of hard-line conservatives, and former Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole.

Hopeful Worshipers Find Their Miracle

By WENDY E. LANE
Associated Press Writer
LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — More than 10,000 people came to St. John Neumann Catholic Church hoping for a miracle, and after a dramatic evening Mass during the Feast of the Assumption, most weren't disappointed.

Shortly after Monday's mass began, some worshipers gasped and pointed skyward. Others looked and began shouting, "It's Jesus, look!"

As the excitement brought the Mass to a halt, scores of pilgrims cried and applauded, claiming to see apparitions of Jesus and the Virgin Mary.

"I knew there would be a miracle, I just knew it," said Mamie Fertitta of Beaumont, crying and pointing to the sky.

She said she saw the sun pulsating and then saw Jesus.

A dozen priests standing on a rooftop altar and 600 Eucharist ministers turned their backs to the crowd to look at the sky and wave. After minutes of silence, the pastor, Monsignor Joseph James, facing the West where people were pointing, began to sing "Amazing Grace."

People in the audience whipped out cameras to photograph the clouds and light.

Paula Mitchell, 13, of Dallas, said she saw Jesus and Mary as the sun burst through the clouds.

Jesus "had a grayish-white beard and he's got some kind of cape on.

Mary's wearing a crown," she said.

"I saw baby Jesus for an instant in the sky," said Koreth Vargahese of Houston.

For the estimated 12,000 people, the pilgrimage was prompted by reports that a miracle would occur on Monday's Feast of the Assumption, the day Catholics celebrate Mary's assumption into Heaven.

The charismatic parish has been the focus of national attention after three parishioners began reporting receiving messages of peace and hope from the Virgin Mary this spring.

While many cried and pointed skyward, not everyone saw an apparition in the sky.

"I didn't see anything, but some of the other priests did," said

Deacon Joe Richard.

Before the Mass, thousands streamed onto the church grounds despite temperatures in the high 90s as busloads brought pilgrims from around the country.

Many of the worshipers were handicapped, who came seeking healing.

Rosaries were said throughout the day in Spanish, English, French, Portuguese and Vietnamese.

Lubbock Bishop Michael Sheehan had originally planned to preside over the feast day Mass, but decided not to following the publicity about the messages. He has urged people to treat the messages with caution and has not endorsed the happenings at the church.

Breakaway Baptist Church Leader Says Others Coming

BILOXI, Miss. (AP) — The leader of a breakaway Baptist church says his new congregation is the first of what will be a growing split between moderate and fundamentalist Southern Baptists.

"We have taken the first step," the Rev. Bill Jenkins said. "We are the first church aligned with the Southern Baptist Alliance that is not a part of the Southern Baptist Convention."

Alan Neely, executive director of the Southern Baptist Alliance and a professor at Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary in Wake Forest, N.C., also said Jenkins may be the first U.S. case of a pastor making a public break because of recent denominational events.

The Southern Baptist Alliance is a national group made up primarily of moderate Baptists. Moderate members have dissented publicly against the denomination's fundamentalist leaders. The Southern Baptist Convention is the denominational unit that manages the educational and missions programs of about 36,000 churches. It is the nation's largest Protestant denomination and has an estimated 15 million members.

Jenkins resigned as pastor of Biloxi's Bay Vista Baptist Church last month because of policy disagreements with Southern Baptist Convention leadership.

He said about a dozen Southern Baptist families met for services in a rented Gulfport hall last week.

Each Southern Baptist church operates autonomously. But the churches finance national programs through the convention's boards and agencies.

Since 1979, fundamentalist-backed candidates have been elected president of the convention. They have the power to influence the appointment of trustees to convention boards and agencies.

The new congregation, called Alliance Baptist Church, will issue papers on theology and other church matters.

"The basic question is this: Will the real Baptist please stand up? I believe that I am a real traditional Baptist," said Jenkins.

Jenkins said his key points of disagreement with the Southern Baptist Convention include inerrancy, or the literal interpretation of the Bible.

Ferraro Son Serves Term In Top Style

NEW YORK (AP) — Geraldine Ferraro denied that her son is living in luxury while serving a four-month prison term under house arrest for selling cocaine.

The New York Daily News on Sunday reported that John Zaccaro Jr., 24, is staying in a $1,500-a-month luxury apartment with maid service and cable TV in a building designed for expense-account business people on short assignments.

"It's not true," the former Democratic vice presidential candidate told the New York Post. "He doesn't have a maid. They give you clean linens once a week and they vacuum."

Vermont Gov. Madeleine Kunin on Monday asked for a review of the program that has allowed Zaccaro to serve his term in the Burlington, Vt., apartment.

Zaccaro was convicted in April of selling a quarter-gram of cocaine to an undercover officer while a student at Middlebury College in 1986.

He was deemed eligible for the program, under which non-violent convicts can find their own housing while under close supervision by corrections officials. The program is designed to ease prison overcrowding.

"This guy is a drug felon and he's living in conditions that 99.9 percent of the people of Vermont couldn't afford," said Addison County State's Attorney John Quinn, who prosecuted Zaccaro.

"It's absolutely ridiculous — it's outrageous," Ferraro was quoted as saying in today's Post. "I go up for weekends and come home and I'm crazy. It's better than being in jail, but ... he's by himself, he does his own cooking."

Ferraro said her son took that particular apartment because "this one was the only one furnished."

"Burlington is not a market like New York City," she told the newspaper. "You take what you can get."

"We can't apologize for it — we had to get him housing," Ferraro said. "I won't apologize for it." Louis Berney, a spokesman for the governor, said it was important to remember Zaccaro "does not have freedom in any sense of the word."

"He works most of the time, and is restricted to his apartment for the rest of the time, with the exception of one hour a week in which he has to go grocery shopping," Berney said. Zaccaro works at a community youth center.

"He gets a personal visit a day and two phone calls a day from an officer. He is very closely monitored," the spokesman said.

U.N. Assembly To Hunt Funds For Gulf Peace Pact

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The General Assembly today begins raising from members the $74 million needed to support the 1,300 personnel who are to monitor a cease-fire between Iran and Iraq for a first six months.

The cash-strapped world body scheduled emergency sessions on the matter for today and Wednesday.

On Monday, a U.N. report said the assembly should assess its 159 members a total of $74 million to finance the truce-monitoring effort for six months.

The Security Council created the U.N. Iran-Iraq Military Observer Group one week ago after Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar announced that Iran and Iraq agreed to observe a cease-fire beginning Saturday.

The belligerents are to begin direct peace talks on Aug. 25 in Geneva.

Preparations also are under way for the first U.N. naval force, which would patrol the disputed Shatt al-Arab waterway, the area where the war broke out in September 1980. Iraq invaded Iran after weeks of border skirmishes.

The United States, which is assessed one-quarter of the U.N. budget, is expected to be assessed about $23 million for the Persian Gulf peacekeeping operation.

But Washington wants Arab nations and Japan to donate extra funds to the force, since they are major beneficiaries of peace in the region. Japan buys most of its oil from the region.

In April, Japan pledged $20 million to the United Nations for peacekeeping forces, half to be used in the Gulf and half in Afghanistan.

The United Nations is facing its worst financial crisis because of debts by its members — especially the United States, which owes $467 million of the $602 million in unpaid dues to the regular budget.

The United States also owes $70 million in assessments for peacekeeping forces.

Washington has been withholding its dues in an effort to compel the United Nations to reform its budget, cut personnel and improve efficiency.

U.N. officials said the organization faces insolvency next month if money is not forthcoming. About $44 million in U.S. funds approved by Congress for this year have not yet been released by President Reagan.

About 350 members of the Iran-Iraq observation group will be unarmed military observers, 615 will be military personnel and about 350 will be civilian staff.

The nations contributing officers to monitor the cease-fire are Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Ghana, Hungary, Indonesia, India, Ireland, Italy, Kenya, Malaysia, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Poland, Senegal, Sweden, Turkey, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

Iraq, meanwhile, accused Iran on Monday of bombarding its troops with artillery and mortar fire. Iraq made its accusations in a letter from the Iraqi mission to the United Nations. It did not mention casualties or damage.

Iran denied a similar accusation last week. In the latest letter, Iraq said Iranian gunners fired from Saturday through Monday in army sectors that include the Iraqi southern port city of Basra and the southern Faw Peninsula.

Israelis Wound Arab Teen-Ager

BUREIJ, Occupied Gaza Strip (AP) — Soldiers shot and critically wounded a Palestinian teen-ager today, 75 Arabs were treated for beating injuries and the army maintained a two-day-old curfew confining 650,000 Gazans to their homes.

A military spokesman confirmed that troops wounded a Palestinian in the West Bank town of Tel during a clash with Arabs throwing stones and bottles. The spokesman said he was checking the hospital reports of beating injuries in the Gaza Strip.

Israeli news reports said soldiers beated up patrols in Gaza, fearing further clashes despite a curfew imposed Sunday night after a firebomb attack on Israeli civilians in which an 8-month-old was seriously burned.

The curfew has denied reporters entry to Gaza except under military escort, although Jewish settlers were allowed into the Israeli-occupied seaside strip and armed supporters of Rabbi Meir Kahane launched patrols on a highway leading to Jewish settlements in Gaza.

United Nations food trucks also were barred from entering Gaza to distribute daily rations of flour, rice, milk, sugar and oil to refugee camps, said Rulf Van Uye, a spokesman for the U.N. Relief and Works Agency.

But there were no reported food shortages, Uye said. Dozens of Palestinian youths defied the curfew Monday by hurling stones and burning tires on roads and darting out from behind street corners to shout "We want a state," witnesses said.

Demonstrators also burned tires in Khan Yunis, while in Gaza City children broke curfew today by playing basketball and soccer in the streets and fleeing when soldiers were spotted, an Arab witness said.

Clashes erupted in several areas, including Jabalya refugee camp in northern Gaza, where soldiers fired tear gas to disperse stone-throwing demonstrators, Arab news reports said.

In Gaza City's Sheikh Radwan neighborhood, an official at local Shifa Hospital said soldiers beat 75 Palestinians in the head, arms and legs with sticks Monday night.

Yonkers Again Rejects Racial Housing Package

YONKERS, N.Y. (AP) — City Council early today rejected a federal court-ordered housing desegregation plan, despite the imposition of potentially bankrupting fines issued after it voted the same way two weeks ago.

Opponents of the plan far outnumbered supporters at the meeting, which began Monday night and ran past midnight to allow all 80 people who signed up to speak five minutes each.

On Wednesday, the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals will hear arguments on contempt against the city issued two weeks ago by U.S. District Judge Leonard Sand.

On Aug. 1, the Council voted 4-3 to reject the affordable housing plan that would integrate the state's fourth-largest city. The plan was in accordance with a federal court order, which calls for 200 units of low-income housing and 800 units of moderate-income housing.

Sand subsequently held the city and the four council members who voted against the plan in contempt. He also issued heavy fines against the city. The fines had accumulated to $25,600 when the federal appeals court ordered them temporarily halted last week.

The court also ordered the council to meet once a week to cast another vote on the housing plan. Monday's meeting was the first.

Mayor Nicholas Wasicsko, who supports the desegregation plan, expressed disappointment over today's 4-3 vote.

"I think the councilmen have had an opportunity to make their political statements," he said. "They have had their publicity, their national exposure. This would have been an opportune time for them to come out as far ahead as they can publicity-wise ... and not do any real harm to the city."

Much of the crowd filed out as the mayor spoke. Some sang "good night, mayor" to tune of "Good Night, Ladies."

But Councilman Nicholas Longo, one of the four opponents, got a standing ovation when he called the plan "a plain disaster for the city of Yonkers."

It's "a planning disaster and no one should force it on the taxpayers of this city," he said.

Funeral Turns Into Protest

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — A funeral procession for a former president who was three times deposed by the army turned quickly into a peaceful protest against Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, the country's de facto ruler.

Without their usual fear of repression by the general's soldiers and police, Noriega's opponents gathered in the plaza in front of the Metropolitan Cathedral on Monday for a requiem Mass for Arnulfo Arias Madrid.

Arias Madrid, who would have been 87 on Monday, died of a heart attack last Wednesday.

As the service ended and Arias Madrid's coffin was placed atop a bright orange firetruck for the trip to the Garden of Peace cemetery, a great, seemingly spontaneous cry went up from the throng in the plaza.

"Justice," they shouted.

The crowd followed the cortege out of the plaza, through the narrow, brick streets of the old section of Panama City and onto the capital's main business artery. With each block, the procession grew until it filled the four-lane street for nearly a mile.

"Noriega must go," the marchers shouted. "Arnulfo president, Noriega delinquent."

The Panamanian government is dominated by Noriega, who commands the country's 15,000-member Defense Forces. He was indicted by two federal grand juries in the United States in February on charges of narcotics trafficking.

Noriega's soldiers and police, who have crushed dozens of protests in the past 14 months, did not interfere with the funeral.

Club Members Spread The Buckle-Up Gospel

By STEVE FEICA
Associated Press Writer
HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Being "saved" and giving personal testimony of the experience are terms usually associated with born-again religious zeal, but they also apply to members of the Saved By the Belt Club, who reflect on life-saving, rather than life-changing, experiences.

The club, sponsored by the Connecticut Safety Belt Coalition, is made up of some 200 people who have been involved in car accidents and believe that their safety belts either saved their lives or reduced their injuries. Members agree to make public-speaking appearances on their experiences to encourage use of seat belts.

"I got into a head-on collision with another car ... both cars were totaled. I was just shook up, no cuts or bruises. He (the other driver) wasn't wearing a belt and went halfway through the windshield," says Paul Cosgrove, of Windsor Locks.

Cosgrove was 17 when the accident occurred in Windsor Locks on April 10, 1987. He said he's worn safety belts since he started driving.

Sharon Lea Sperling of West Hartford jokes now about being a "smashing success," but she is quite serious when crediting buckling up with her surviving two accidents.

In Sperling's first accident, her car was being hit while she was about to get onto Interstate 84 in West Hartford, and spun completely around.

"I remember thinking that my mom had just died the year before and I was thinking, who would tell my father I died," Sperling recalled. Sperling was in the hospital for five days following that accident, with bruises and a damaged disc.

Her second brush with mortality occurred last May 23, when her car collided with another. She says if she hadn't been wearing her belt, she could have gone through the windshield. She walked away with some strained muscles.

Richard McLeod, a teacher at Renbrook School in West Hartford, has been a buckle-up believer since October 1983, when he and his wife survived after their car was hit broadside and smashed into a utility pole, which then fell down onto the car.

He is so outspoken an advocate for safety belts that his name has become synonymous with the belt for some.

"One kindergarten student asked me, 'Mr. McLeod, did you invent the seat belt?'"

Michael Whyte, director of the Connecticut Safety Belt Coalition, says the Saved By the Belt Club was kicked off in January 1986, when use of seat belts became mandatory in the state.

The coalition is an educational group founded in 1984 by two doctors and a businessman from Blue Cross-Blue Shield. It is funded by automobile manufacturers, which began promoting seat belt use when the U.S. Department of Transportation raised the specter of mandatory air bags.

"We use survivors as spokespeople from the heart instead of just spitting out statistics all the time," Whyte said. But, he said, the statistics are also impressive.

"Connecticut is one of the highest states for use rates. On interstate highways about 80 percent of the drivers buckle up. Serious-type accidents are down by 30 percent. Deaths are even down by 20 percent," Whyte said.

Whyte says the reduction isn't just the result of safety belt use, but a combination of belt use and police crackdowns on speeders and drunken drivers.

"Nationally, 2,400 people have been saved and 100,000 avoided serious injuries," he said.

According to Whyte, although Massachusetts repealed its mandatory seat belt law, 32 states and the District of Columbia have such laws and the remaining states are leaning toward them.

"I feel I owe my life first to God, second to Governor O'Neill for signing the bill and third to the Connecticut Safety Belt Coalition," said Sperling.

Carole Pompano of East Haven has always used seat belts. Even before they were standard equipment, she had them installed in her car.

She credits safety belts with surviving a 17-car collision during a snowstorm in White River Junction, Vt., 12 years ago.

"I was wearing my seat belt and I credit it with keeping me in the car and also allowing me to retain control," Pompano said.

"The last thought I had was that I wasn't going to see my children again," Pompano said, adding that surviving such an accident "makes every year a bit more precious."

Golden Arches Receive Praise

DEAR ABBY: All airport terminals, bus and train depots are required by law to have ramps for wheelchairs, but the lavatories in planes, buses and trains cannot accommodate people in wheelchairs!

Knowing this, four members of our family (we are all retired) decided to see America by car. My husband is wheelchair-bound. Ted has had both legs amputated above the knee, but he's able to transfer himself from wheelchair to commode (unaided) if he can just get through the bathroom door. We stayed in a brand-new motel in Las Vegas, but the facilities to accommodate the handicapped were not yet completed. After hearing our problem, the manager had the bathroom door removed for us. Most motel builders would do an enormous favor for people in wheelchairs if they would just add six inches to the width of the bathroom doors.

However, the answer to all our eating problems from Florida to California was MC DONALD'S. We knew that Ted would be able to get into the bathroom in any McDonald's in the country, so we had breakfast, lunch and dinner at a McDonald's every day!

Please print this, Abby. I believe in giving credit where it is due. You may use my name, and I hope you do. — EILEEN LOEF, GEORGETOWN, FLA.

DEAR EILEEN: So do I. Here's your letter.

DEAR ABBY: I'm 14 years old,

Dear Abby Abigail Van Buren

and I guess I'm physically mature for my age. Well, the other day I brought a summer dress home. It was like the ones they wear in Hawaiian movies — strapless with a wraparound skirt.

My problem is my mother. She won't let me wear it in public. She says it wasn't made for a 14-year-old. I think she is being old-fashioned and outdated. Do you think she's right, or do you think she should be more modern and open-minded, and let me wear it in public?

She told me to write to Dear Abby and whatever you say goes. — TIMES HAVE CHANGED

DEAR TIMES: I agree with your mother. Times have changed, but the standards of appropriate attire for 14-year-old girls have not. Trust your mother's judgment, honey. She will never steer you wrong.

DEAR ABBY: I have a beautiful 1-year-old son. His father ("Boyd") and I were high school sweethearts — but never married. We broke up after Greg was born. Boyd went into the Army right after he finished high school.

I have met a wonderful man ("Chuck") and we plan to marry soon. I gave Greg his father's last name because I thought it was the right thing to do. Although Boyd pays child support, he never calls or sends his son a card at Christmastime or his birthday. The boy does not even know this man.

Chuck is crazy about Greg and wants more than anything in the world to adopt him. Boyd says, "No way — he is my son."

Abby, how can a man be so cruel and mean? He wants nothing to do with his son, but doesn't want another man to have anything to do with him either. I need your advice. — CALIFORNIA QUESTION

DEAR CALIFORNIA Q.: The state of California will very likely grant adoption under these circumstances after you and Chuck are married. So go ahead with what I hope will be a happy life. If Boyd resists the petition for adoption, you are fairly safe in assuming that his objections will be overruled. Please see an attorney, and let him or her handle it.

CONFIDENTIAL TO 'TACTLESS IN BOZEMAN': Tact cannot be taught. It's a combination of sensitivity, consideration and good manners. O.A. Battista said, "It's the ability to make a person see the lightning without feeling the bolt."

Don't put off writing thank-you notes, letters of sympathy, etc. because you don't know what to say. Get Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send a check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054 (postage is included).

Leave Hospital For A Good Motel

Isn't it time we all smartened up about hospital care?

Where else in the world do we check into a facility with a bed next to someone we have never seen before, put up with a steady stream of strangers who take our blood and our urine and are never seen again, and pay $200 a day for the privilege? At those prices, you would think we would get to talk to the chef instead of a nutritionist.

Most of the beds in hospitals are occupied by people who are recuperating. The crisis is over and they are just getting their strength back. My proposal is simple.

A good hotel room in Los Angeles costs around $200 a day. For this, I get a room with a television and bathroom to myself. No one coughs in the middle of the night. No one watches the ball game when I want to watch "Masterpiece Theatre." None of their relatives come to spend the day and use "our" bathroom.

At Wits End Erma Bombeck

The hotel room comes with a continental breakfast and a newspaper. It also comes with a fluffy bathrobe that covers my entire body.

There is valet parking for people who come to visit me. (How many of you have had people visit you in the hospital who had to circle around until the new parking garage was finished?)

There are deck chairs and a swimming pool, and when I don't eat everything on my plate, no one cares. I can read until I go to sleep, and no one wakes me out of a sound slumber in the middle of the night to ask if I need a sleeping pill.

If my vital signs are up to it, I can walk to Rodeo Drive and read price tags. Or, if I am lonely, I can sit in the lobby and watch people argue over their bill.

If I have a burning desire to see my doctor, there is a putting green nearby where we can meet and maybe have something cold to drink while I tell him what Reader's Digest says about my condition.

I've been thinking about this for a long time. It has a few bugs to work out, but by and large you have to admit that if you're lucky enough to recuperate in the summer months, you could get some real bargains at Palm Springs or the ski slopes at Vail.

Not convinced? What if I told you that for the price of a ride in an ambulance, you could fly first-class from New York to London?

Lawyer Says Mandela Has TB

By DAVID CRARY
Associated Press Writer
JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Jailed black nationalist Nelson Mandela has tuberculosis, his lawyer said today after visiting the African National Congress leader at a hospital.

Ismail Ayob, the lawyer, said Mandela's family was urging President P.W. Botha to allow an independent medical examination of the 70-year-old prisoner, South Africa's best-known black leader.

Calls for Mandela's release have intensified since he was transferred Friday from Cape Town's Pollsmoor Prison to nearby Tygerberg Hospital. The ANC accused prison officials of "callous neglect" in responding to Mandela's ill health prior to the hospitalization.

Doctors say Mandela has an inflamed left lung and is in satisfactory condition following removal of a drainage tube from the lung. They have not confirmed publicly that Mandela has tuberculosis, but Ayob said doctors confirmed the diagnosis during his visit today.

Ayob was accompanied to the hospital by Mandela's wife, Winnie, and youngest daughter, Zindzi. Several hundred people who gathered outside the hospital cheered and gave clenched-fist salutes as the three emerged.

They made no statement at the time, but returned to Johannesburg, where Ayob made his announcement to a crowd of reporters at Jan Smuts Airport.

"Mr. Mandela is very thin, but he is on his feet," Ayob said. He declined to speculate on whether Mandela's life was in danger.

"It is clear that his condition has been deteriorating for some time," Ayob said. "He had been in bed for a number of days, since the 3rd of August. He was short of breath, he had a persistent cough, his speech had been impaired and by last Friday he had lost his voice completely."

After entering the hospital, Mandela had three liters of fluid removed from his left lung, Ayob said.

The lawyer also complained that one of the doctors attending Mandela had avoided questions from Mrs. Mandela and apparently had dismissed a complaint by Mandela that there was blood in his saliva.

Tuberculosis, which causes fatigue, fever, weight loss, coughing, hoarseness and chest pain, is a contagious bacterial infection that can be disabling or fatal. It responds to treatment with drugs. Relapses of latent infections often occur among older people.

A statement was issued today on behalf of the Mandela family asking Botha to allow them to choose a team of doctors to "conduct an independent examination in order to remove any doubts which the family may feel regarding the nature, cause and cure of Mr. Mandela's illness."

There was no immediate response from Botha.

Earlier today, the ANC said Mandela "was lying in bed unable to eat and exercise and had difficulty speaking for a whole week" before being hospitalized.

"Although prison authorities were obviously aware that he was ill, nothing was done until his condition had deteriorated to the critical point where he had to be rushed to the hospital," the ANC said in a statement from its Lusaka, Zambia headquarters. "All our people and the international community are entitled to know what was the purpose behind this callous neglect."

The prison service, asked for comment, requested the full text of the statement by the outlawed guerrilla movement and said it was preparing a response.

South Africa's health minister, Willie Van Niekerk, has said Mandela is receiving the best possible treatment.

Mandela, who has been in prison since 1962, is serving a life term for sabotage and conspiracy to overthrow the government. Surveys have shown him to be the most popular leader among the black majority, which is disenfranchised under South Africa's system of racial segregation, known as apartheid.

Two Johannesburg newspapers today joined the renewed appeal for Mandela's release, saying the government should avoid the possibility that he might die in jail.

"Living in jail, he is a symbol of resistance," said Business Day. "Dead in detention, no matter how natural the causes, he would be a martyr, a flame to ignite the fires of anger, condemnation and anti-South African action around the world."

The Star, the country's largest-selling daily, said Mandela's illness offers the government "a face-saving opportunity... to start the process of dealing with Mandela the man, rather than Mandela the unknown and fearful myth."

To 1-0 Victory Over Giants

Trade Talk Spurs Dodgers

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Maybe it just takes news of an impending trade to spur the Los Angeles Dodgers' pitching staff to victory.

As word spread that Los Angeles was trading power hitter Pedro Guerrero to St. Louis for pitcher John Tudor, Tim Lincecum won his fifth consecutive decision and combined with Jesse Orosco for a six-hitter that gave the Dodgers their 13th shutout of the season and a 1-0 victory over the San Francisco Giants.

Franklin Stubbs, who would take over at first base if the deal goes through, hit a fourth-inning sacrifice fly to drive in the Dodgers' only run. He got the start Monday night after Guerrero took himself out of the lineup.

The trade reportedly hinges on the Cardinals' ability to sign Guerrero. It was expected to be completed today or Wednesday.

The victory kept the Dodgers 2½ in front Houston in the National League West. The Astros beat San Diego 7-3. Atlanta beat Pittsburgh 4-3 in the only other game Monday night.

"Belcher pitched superbly and made the run stand up," Los Angeles manager Tommy Lasorda said. "And as long as Orosco can keep getting them out, he'll keep going out there."

Orosco, who earned his seventh save, retired all five batters he faced. He was in a much better frame of mind after this appearance than he was earlier in the week, when his working relationship with Lasorda was deteriorating because of the way Orosco was being utilized.

"Tommy and I have been talking about it," Orosco said. "We have no hard feelings over it. We both want to win and there's no use having hard feelings because that's not going to help anybody."

Belcher, 9-4, is undefeated in eight starts since June 12. He gave up six hits in 7 1-3 innings, including three to Bob Melvin. Belcher struck out three and walked one.

"I don't know if I made that many good pitches, or if they were worn out from swinging their bats yesterday," said Belcher, alluding to the Giants' 15-run attack Sunday. "After that thumping yesterday, this was a big win for us."

Mike Marshall singled with one out in the fourth, took third on John Shelby's single and scored on Stubbs' fly ball to right.

Stubbs, who has started 32 games at first, is hoping the proposed deal goes off.

"I've been waiting on it all year," he said. "You look for a chance to play every day, and I hope this is it."

Don Robinson, who in his last start pitched a one-hitter against Houston for his first shutout in eight years, allowed five hits before he was pulled for a pinch hitter in the eighth. Robinson, 4-3, struck out three and walked none.

The Giants, who lost three of four games in their latest series with the Dodgers, fell 4½ games back in the National League West.

Braves 4, Pirates 3
Ken Oberkfell doubled and scored in the sixth, then put Atlanta in the lead with a two-run triple in the seventh inning as the Braves rallied and beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 4-3.

Charlie Puleo, 3-3, pitched 4 2-3 scoreless innings, allowing four hits and striking out five. Ed Olwine got the final out for his first save since Aug. 21 last year, also against Pittsburgh.

Bob Walk, 11-9, lost his fifth consecutive start since July 20, allowing six hits in 6 1-3 innings as Pittsburgh fell 5½ games behind idle National League East leader New York.

"This club was not ready to play, and I'll take the responsibility for that because that's the manager's job," Jim Leyland of the Pirates said. "There was absolutely no excuse for that. I can tolerate anything, but I can't tolerate not being prepared to play."

"I hope everybody remembers this game, because some games you get beat and some games you beat yourselves, and this was a game we beat ourselves," R.J. Reynolds said. "We didn't have any life. We've got everything to gain, and these are the games we can't let get away."

"I'm sure it's a tough loss for the Pirates, but we're just trying to beat anybody we can right now," said Oberkfell, who is 18-for-38 against the Pirates this season.

Andy Van Slyke was 2-for-4 with a double, triple, two stolen bases and an RBI.

Astros 7, Padres 3
Gerald Young snapped a 3-3 tie in the seventh and Terry Puhl hit another two-run single later in the inning.

Nolan Ryan, 9-10, won for the first time in four starts since July 27. He allowed nine hits in seven innings, striking out two and walking two. Danny Darwin finished with two innings of two-hit relief.

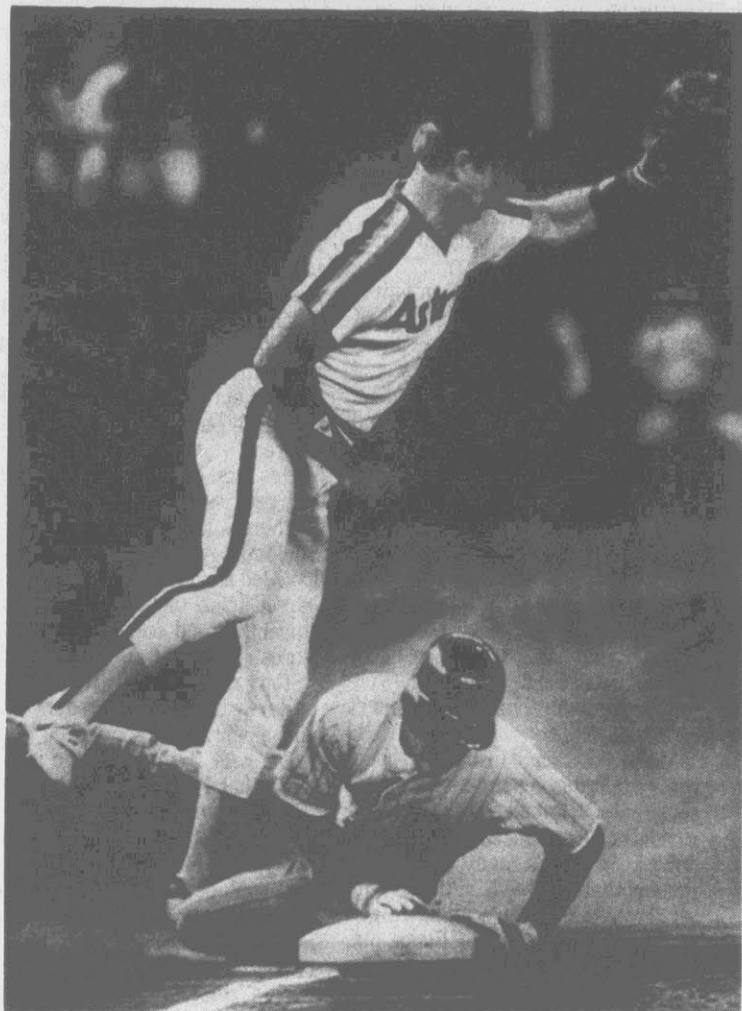

With the score tied 3-3, Denny Walling opened the seventh with a single off Andy Hawkins, 10-10. Rafael Ramirez singled, Craig Biggio sacrificed and pinch-hitter Craig Reynolds was intentionally walked, loading the bases.

Young, in a 4-for-22 slump, broke the tie with his his two-run single, chasing Hawkins.

"A bases-loaded situation is a hitter's dream," Young said. "I was shaking in my boots when I was up there but I came through in a pressure situation."

"A slump is like a cold," Young said. "It seems to last two weeks. The hits are nice, it's a good stepping stone to breaking the slump."

After Casey Candaele grounded out, Puhl hit a two-run, single off Dave Leiper.

Fenner Expected To Make Move

By The Associated Press
Speaking of a possible "second chance" for Derrick Fenner, officials at Gardner-Webb said they hope for a decision today on whether the former North Carolina football standout will transfer to the NAIA school.

Fenner met for two hours Monday with head football coach Woody Fish, offensive coordinator David Dowd and Dick Franklin, vice president for student development.

"There's a lot hinging on this, so we've got to be careful," Fish said. "We've worked hard to get this program to where it is now, and we want to keep it that way."

"We may have some alumni to call and not be particularly fond of what we're doing. But I can live with that. I had a guy to call today and chew me out. He said this was an embarrassment. But I think if we all didn't have a second chance, a lot of us would be an embarrassment."

Fenner told The Charlotte Observer on Monday that he had made no decision on whether he would attend Gardner-Webb, which will begin football practice Sunday.

He said the school was recommended to him by Lawson Holland, his position coach at North Carolina in 1986 and currently a Wake Forest assistant.

"If they want to sign me, I'll probably call him and my parents and make a decision," Fenner said.

"I just want to play football and put my past behind me. I'm really anxious to do that."

If Fenner signs with Gardner-Webb, the grant will be dependent on his earning at least a C in a correspondence course he is taking at North Carolina. Fish said Fenner has a B-plus grade and could take his final exam Friday.

Fenner would have two years of athletic eligibility at Gardner-Webb, including this season. He would not be eligible to play at an NCAA Division I or Division II program until the 1989 season.

Fenner has not played since the 1986 season, when he was an All-Atlantic Coast Conference running back as a sophomore at North Carolina. He led the ACC in rushing with 1,250 yards and set a league single-game record of 328

Gastineau On Sidelines

By The Associated Press
Mark Gastineau, a three-time NFL sack leader, has been sacked as a full-time player by the New York Jets and doesn't like it a bit.

Gastineau, without a tackle or sack in two straight exhibition games, was relegated to part-time status Monday by Coach Joe Walton.

Meanwhile, the cold war between Gastineau and the media got a little colder.

Twice on Monday, Gastineau cursed at reporters who questioned him about his second straight subpar performance, in Saturday's 24-21 loss to the New York Giants, and Walton's decision to have him split time with Tom Baldwin at left end.

Originally, Gastineau said he would speak with one reporter, and told the others, "I have nothing to say to you guys."

However, when the reporter told Gastineau that if he talked to him he would have to talk with everybody, Gastineau replied: "I'm fed up. I'm not talking to anyone ever again."

Gastineau has been the center of attention because of his performance and the circus atmosphere surrounding his relationship with actress Brigitte Nielsen.

Last Friday, he scheduled a noon press conference to announce their engagement, but gave reporters who regularly cover the team a starting time of 1:30 p.m.

When the reporters came in after the conference was over, he said: "I lied to you guys."

Gastineau, a Pro Bowler from 1981 through 1985, has had just 6½ sacks the last two years and has been under fire in the media. He makes $825,000 a year.

On Saturday night against the Giants, Gastineau was consistently controlled by Karl Nelson, an offensive tackle who had been struggling on the field during his recovery from Hodgkin's disease and shoulder surgery, and rookie John Elliott.

Jets defensive coordinator Bud Carson said Gastineau's game has deteriorated in the last few seasons because of liberalized pass-blocking rules.

"The corner is a lot wider now," Carson said. "In the past, the tackles had to block with their forearms. Now, they can extend their arms and push him to the outside."

Quarterback Jim Plunkett, at 40 the league's oldest player and MVP in the 1981 Super Bowl, was released by the Los Angeles Raiders, apparently ending a 17-year professional football career.

Plunkett, the 1971 Heisman trophy winner at Stanford, was the first pick in the NFL draft that year by the New England Patriots. He played for New England and San Francisco before joining the Raiders in 1978. Plunkett led the Raiders to Super Bowl victories after the 1980 and 1983 seasons.

But he had been beset by shoulder problems in recent years and didn't play at all last season. This year, he was competing with Steve Beerlein, a first-year man, 32-year-old Vince Evans and Rusty Hilger, the starter at the beginning of last season.

"This was no big shock," Plunkett said after first-year Coach Mike Shanahan told him he didn't fit into the Raiders' plans. "I just didn't think it would be this quick. It's unfortunate, because I really wanted to be a part of this club."

In his NFL career, Plunkett has 1,943 completions in 3,701 attempts for 25,882 yards with 164 touchdowns and 198 interceptions.

MAKING MOVES

Hoping to fill a major void at backup center, the Giants signed 34-year-old Joe Fields, released by the Jets last winter.

Missing holdout All-Pro tight end Mark Bavaro, the Giants acquired seven-year veteran Tim Sherwin from the Indianapolis Colts for a future, undisclosed draft choice.

Sherwin caught 76 passes for 1,002 yards during his years with the Colts. Sherwin's best season was in 1983, the year before the Colts moved from Baltimore to Indianapolis. He caught 25 passes for 358 yards. Sherwin, a graduate of Boston College, was the Colts' fourth-round draft pick in 1981.

The San Francisco 49ers added three veterans to their roster as holdout cornerbacks Tim McKyer and Don Griffin signed one-year contracts and offensive tackle Bubba Paris returned from a 13-day visit to a diet center.

McKyer and Griffin showed up in the afternoon with agent Steve Weinberg and signed contracts believed to be for $300,000 each, plus incentives.

The Phoenix Cardinals signed two-time Pro Bowl kick returner Vai Sikahema, in the option year of a two-year contract that paid him $70,000 last season. Sikahema signed a two-year extension, the terms of which were not disclosed. His agent, John Maloney, had previously said the contract he was negotiating was for $175,000 this season and $200,000 next season.

The 5-foot-9, 191-pound Sikahema, a 10th-round draft pick in 1986 from Brigham Young, ranks second on the Cardinals' all-time list for punt returns (87) and yardage (1,072). On Dec. 21, 1986, Sikahema became the fifth player in NFL history to return two punts for touchdowns in one game in a 21-17 victory over Tampa Bay.

MOVING OUT

Aside from Plunkett, other big names were cut on Monday. Released were quarterback Robbie Bosco, the former Brigham Young star, cut by Green Bay, and safety Tony Lilly, who started for Denver in last January's Super Bowl.

Bosco, a third-round draft choice in 1986, spent his first two years on injured reserve.

In addition to Lilly, the Broncos cut veteran nose tackle Tony Colorito and fullback-tight end Bobby Micho.

AROUND THE CAMPS

Detroit Lions quarterback Chuck Long will make his preseason debut against Cincinnati if his right elbow stays pain-free the rest of the week, Coach Darryl Rogers said.

Long sat out the Lions' exhibition losses to Cleveland and Seattle and hasn't faced a live defense in more than two weeks because of tendinitis in his right elbow.

He threw briefly without pain on Friday, Saturday and Sunday before going up against the Lions' defense Monday afternoon.

Indianapolis coach Ron Meyer announced that quarterback Gary Hogeboom, injured the past two weeks, will start Saturday night against New Orleans.

Viola Wins 19th, But His Aim Is On Western Title

DETROIT (AP) — Frank Viola has his opponents' number this season, but his primary concern is dialing another divisional championship.

Viola tossed a seven-hitter Monday night to become the first 19-game winner in the major leagues as the Minnesota Twins beat the Detroit Tigers 2-1.

Despite talk of his individual play, however, Viola couldn't help but note the world champion Twins are eight games behind the Oakland Athletics and aren't going to rest on their laurels.

"Why should we? We had never won it before last year," he said. "We know what it's like to lose, and it stinks. We're not going to take one season for granted. Who's to say what can happen the rest of the way. At least we're going to give ourselves a shot."

One thing's for sure. Winning the Cy Young Award isn't on Viola's mind.

"That doesn't mean anything right now," he said. "I'll take it at the end of the season. If I look back and I say, 'Hey, I did pretty good,' then that will come into play."

"What do individual honors mean in a team concept?"

Viola, 19-4, struck out seven and walked one in lowering his American League-leading earned run average to 2.36. It was his sixth complete game and third victory over the Tigers this season, including two wins over Jack Morris. He has allowed Detroit only four runs.

"Viola is a master," Tigers manager Sparky Anderson said. "He knows how to pitch, and he can throw his changeup for a strike any time."

"He's got to be the best lefty in the league," Twins manager Tom Kelly said. "He kept them off balance."

Elsewhere, in a limited schedule, Kansas City routed Texas 12-3 and Milwaukee defeated Baltimore 4-1.

The Tigers, who pounded out 19 hits in an 18-6 romp over Boston and Roger Clemens on Sunday, got their only run against Viola on Chet Lemon's RBI single in the first inning but were shut down the rest of the way.

"That's baseball," Tigers first baseman Ray Knight said. "We're a fastball-hitting ballclub. Roger is obviously a power pitcher. Viola was throwing some changeups and it's very difficult to hit a changeup and he's got a good enough fastball that he can get in on you."

The Twins tied it in the third on Kent Hrbek's sacrifice fly and won it on John Moses' solo home run in the seventh, his second of the season.

"I thought it was gone when I first hit it, then all of a sudden I looked up and I thought it was going to hit the wall and I almost stumbled," Moses said. "It wasn't my best turn around first base. But fortunately, it went out."

"I don't hit them often enough to get a home run trot."

Moses also had three singles to finish 4-for-4 and raise his average 21 points to .316.

"This is by far the best night I've had," Moses said. "Fortunately, we won."

Walt Terrell, 6-10, yielded nine hits in his ninth complete game. He is now 35-11 lifetime at Tiger Stadium and 18-31 elsewhere in the league.

"Viola pitched outstanding, he deserved to win," Terrell said. "They've pretty much kicked our butts most of the time. They've got pretty good pitching, play good defense and hit the ball very well."

The Twins beat the AL East-leading Tigers for the sixth time in seven games this season. Last year, Minnesota defeated Detroit in five games in the playoffs. The loss cut the Tigers' lead to three games over Boston and 3½ games over New York.

Royals 12, Rangers 3

Willie Wilson hit a triple and two doubles and George Brett had a two-run homer as Kansas City beat visiting Texas.

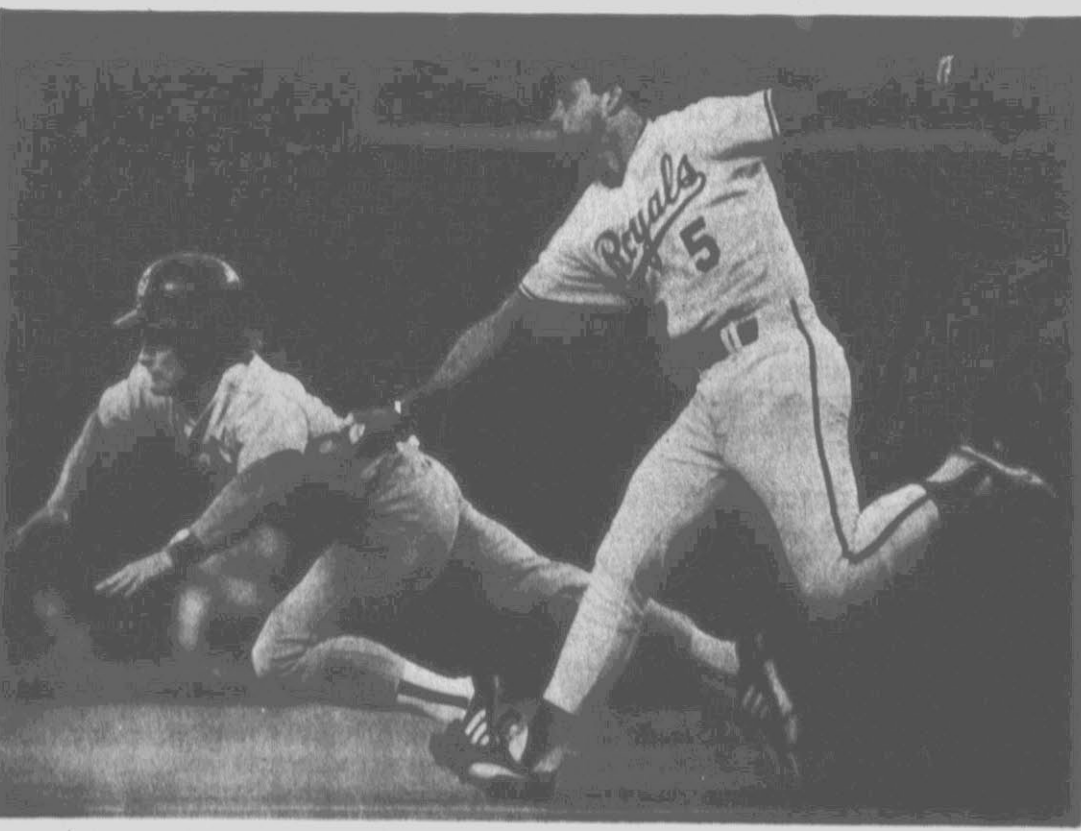

Danny Tartabull, Frank White and Kurt Stillwell added two-run doubles. Brett got his 20th homer and the Royals had six doubles in a 11-hit attack.

Charlie Leibbrandt, 7-11, allowed seven hits in seven innings. Paul Kilgus, 9-11, was the loser.

Brewers 4, Orioles 1

Teddy Higuera pitched eight strong innings and Jim Adduci hit a two-run double that led Milwaukee over Baltimore.

Higuera, 9-8, gave up five hits, struck out nine and walked none. Dan Plesac got his 28th save.

Sports Notes

Walsh Leaves Pirate Football Squad

Junior quarterback Brad Walsh announced Monday that he was leaving the East Carolina football team for personal reasons.

Walsh, a 6-0, 180 pounder, was second on ECU's depth chart behind starter Travis Hunter. The Summerville, S.C., native played in four games in 1987. He completed one pass, threw one interception and was sacked twice in his four appearances.

"We are disappointed that Brad has decided to leave the ECU program," Baker said. "At the time he was listed second on our depth chart."

Freshman Jeff Blake, along with sophomore Darren Bynum and junior Charlie Libretto will be considered for the backup role.

Byner, Baker Suffer Knee Injuries

From Staff and Wire Reports

Former East Carolina running backs Ernest Byner and Tony Baker, now with the Cleveland Browns, are both hobbled by knee injuries, team officials announced.

Byner, a starter for the Browns, has a sore knee and is questionable for Thursday's game in Montreal against the Jets.

Baker, a two-year veteran, will be out six to eight weeks with a strained ligament in his left knee.

Baker finished his career as the second-leading rusher in school history with 2,825 yards, while Byner, who played from 1980-1983, is ninth on the career-rushing list with 2,049 yards.

ECU Opens Soccer Practice For 1988

First-year head coach Bob Lust welcomed 32 hopefuls to the first day of practice for the 1988 soccer season at East Carolina University Monday, school officials announced.

"I told them we would have to live and die together to improve on last year's 3-13 mark," Lust said.

ECU opens with scrimmages against Mount Olive and St. Andrews and begins the season against Colonial Athletic Association foe Richmond Sept. 4.

"I was surprised by the skills of some of the freshman we have on the team," the coach said. "Our returnees reported in good shape, and that is a plus."

ECU returns eight players from last year's team. Lust expects to have a good defense, as a solid nucleus returns in goalie Mack Kendall and backfielders Matt Richter and Andy Britton. Kendall and Richter are seniors and Britton is a junior.

"I plan to make defense our strong point," Lust said. "Right now the positions of midfield and forward are up in the air."

The leading returning scorer from last year's team is Steve McCarthy, who had a goal and two assists in 15 games. Two potential leaders for the team transferred in the offseason, Roy Anders going to Maryland and Mike Doran to North Carolina State. The pair combined for two goals and an assist on a team that had only 12 goals all year.

The Pirates will play a 20-game schedule with one match against each of the CAA foes.

Hawks, Malone Reportedly Close To Deal

ATLANTA (AP) — The Atlanta Hawks and Moses Malone's agent refused to confirm news reports that the three-time NBA Most Valuable Player will join the Hawks next season.

Both KRIV-TV of Houston, where Malone lives, and The Atlanta Constitution were quoting unidentified sources as saying the deal would be announced today.

The Constitution, in a story today, said the free-agent center was believed to have agreed to a three-year contract with a base salary of $1.17 million per year and bonuses that could raise the total to near $1.5 million.

Hawks President Stan Kasten and Malone's Washington-based agent, Lee Fentress, declined comment.

KRIV-TV quoted a source close to the negotiations and The Constitution attributed its report to "reliable sources close to the situation." The newspaper said the final details were worked out Monday night.

Malone joined the NBA in the 1976-77 season after spending two years in the American Basketball Association. He was named league MVP twice — in 1979 and 1982 — during his six-year stay in Houston, then was voted MVP again in 1983 after his trade to Philadelphia.

The Bullets, with whom he played for the last two seasons, announced this summer they would not try to sign the 10-time All-Star to a new contract.

Houston bowed out of the bidding last week.

Malone is an unrestricted free agent, so the Bullets will not be compensated for his loss.

The 6-foot-10, 255-pound Malone has led the NBA in rebounding six times, most recently in 1985. In his career, he has averaged 22.8 points and 13.7 rebounds per game. His figures last season were 20.3 points and 11.2 rebounds.

The Hawks' starting center last season, Tree Rollins, averaged 4.4 points and six rebounds per game. Rollins recently signed a contract with the Cleveland Cavaliers as a free agent.

The Hawks' front office had promised to pursue scorers at both guard and center. The first goal was met with the acquisition of Reggie Theus in a trade with Sacramento.

Minor Injuries Set Back Tigers

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — A rash of minor injuries slowed the progress of Clemson's two-a-day workouts as 22 players sat out Monday afternoon's drills.

"It's hard to get it going with that many players out," Coach Danny Ford said. "Many of the guys that didn't practice today are experienced players so it was hard to develop any consistency. The injuries are giving the other guys a chance to learn, but they are keeping us from being as far along as we would like to be at this point."

Although most of the injured players will be back in action within the next couple of days, a few will miss more time. Tight ends James Coley and Jerome Williams are both sitting out with kneecap problems.

Redshirt freshman quarterback DeChane Cameron underwent arthroscopic surgery on his knee Monday to have cartilage repaired. Freshman Marc Taylor and Marc Shirley are sitting out with dislocated elbows.

The Tigers will hold a controlled scrimmage Tuesday and undergo the final day of two-a-day workouts on Wednesday.

Kallam, Taylor Lead Open

NORTH MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. (AP) — Defending champion Mike Kallam of Greenville and amateur Walker Taylor of Wilmington, N.C. both shot 5-under-par 67 on Monday to claim a share of the first-round lead in the Carolinas Open.

Taylor is seeking reinstatement in the Professional Golfers Association.

The winner of the 54-hole tournament gets $4,500 of the $45,000 purse.

Hugh Gill of Calabasas, N.C. shot 3-under-par 69 on Monday to gain sole possession of third place.

Two amateurs, Steve Larick of Elon College, N.C., and Michael Christie of Greenville, were among a group of players tied at 2-under-par 70. The others were John Smunk of Bluffton, Steve Forrest of Monksville, N.C., Terry Florence of Isle of Palms and Rick Lewallen of Greensboro, N.C.

Wallace Maintains Points Lead

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Rusty Wallace maintained his slender lead in the NASCAR Winston Cup points standings following Sunday's race at Watkins Glen (N.Y.) International.

Wallace, a native of St. Louis, Mo., finished second to winner Ricky Rudd of Chesapeake, Va., in the event but picked up no points on Bill Elliott of Dawsonville, Ga. Elliott finished third in the race but his bonus points for leading the most laps in the event kept him even with Wallace.

Elliott trails Wallace in the Winston Cup standings by 11 points, 2,693-682, as the circuit heads to Michigan International Speedway on Sunday. Qualifying for the race is set for Saturday at the two-mile oval.

Dale Earnhardt, a three-time Winston Cup champion, remained third in the standings. Earnhardt has 2,635 points, 58 behind Wallace and 47 in back of Elliott.

Ken Schrader is fourth with 2,470 points, followed by Terry Labonte, 2,423; Geoff Bodine, 2,336; Phil Parsons, 2,302; Sterling Marlin, 2,267; Darrell Waltrip, 2,236; and Bobby Hill, 2,183.

Rudd, who became the 12th different winner of the Winston Cup season's 18 races so far, moved to 11th in the standings with 2,110 points. The modern day record for different winners in a season is 13, set in 1986.

Advice To Bruce: Don't Dive

By Scott Ostler
(c) 1988, Los Angeles Times
Don't dive, Bruce.

No, this is not part of the petition drives, campaigns and crusades that have been launched in Florida to prevent Bruce Kimball from diving in the U.S. Olympic trials, which start Wednesday at Indianapolis.

It's just the feeling of one outside observer. Bruce shouldn't dive. Even though this Olympics was to be the grand finale of his glorious career, even though he has been neither tried nor convicted of a crime, even though he has served as a symbol of athletic excellence and courage, Kimball should pack his bags and go home.

Kimball is due Tuesday to make an announcement, presumably on his decision whether he will compete in the trials. Or, if he doesn't dive, whether he will hang around town as a glorified cheerleader for his diving buddies.

Go home, Bruce. As quietly as possible, out of respect for the dead and wounded.

Two weeks ago, Kimball drove his sports car at high speed down a dead-end street in a small town in Florida, according to police reports. Charges filed against Kimball indicate that he was legally intoxicated. His car crashed into a crowd of teen-agers gathered at the end of the street. Two were killed, two seriously hurt, four others injured.

It was over as quickly as a dive from the 10-meter platform.

Because Kimball is an athlete, the tragedy became a sports story, and the big question became this: Would Bruce still dive in the Olympic trials?

The national governing body of the sport said: It's up to Bruce.

Of course it is. This is still the United States, and sports bureaucrats have not been given the powers of criminal judges and juries.

The question now is: Should Bruce dive?

And the advice here is: Don't dive, Bruce.

If Kimball were to make the Olympic team and dive in Seoul, he would be the focus of intense media and TV attention. The grieving family and friends of the two dead teen-agers would also be dragged back into the spotlight. Come September, it will be difficult to ignore the Olympics. The horror would be stirred up all over again.

Kimball has no right to pursue his dream of personal glory at the expense of extending the suffering. If the parents of the dead teen-agers object to Kimball diving, he shouldn't dive.

Also, Kimball and his father should realize that this is a time for extreme sensitivity. Kimball's father, diving coach Dick Kimball, said recently, "I don't know if he's ready to dive in a meet of that nature (U.S. trials) with all the harassing he's going to get. But I would never rule Bruce out, because he's been taught since he was a little boy never to give up."

I wonder whether the parents of the dead teen-agers read those statements, too, and thought about what lessons they tried to impart to their children, lessons that no longer mattered. I wonder if those parents care at this time to hear what a doggedly competitive fellow Bruce is.

One 17-year-old boy struck by Kimball's car had a leg severed. It was surgically reattached and is now held together with metal plates. The boy was a high school athlete whose sports career is most likely over. His parents probably don't have time right now to admire Bruce Kimball's never-give-up attitude, or to relate to Dick Kimball's fatherly pride.

All this is not to ignore the tragedy of Bruce Kimball. Two years ago, he had his body mangled and his face broken to pieces when a drunk driver crashed head-on into his car. Bruce battled back with incredible courage, and this year he was rated a decent shot at upsetting the legend, Greg Louganis, in the Olympics. This was to be the moment for which Kimball has trained a lifetime.

Some would argue that Kimball is wracked with enough personal torment and guilt, and for him to take himself out of the competition would not bring back the dead or heal the injured.

This has become an emotionally charged issue in the Tampa area. Mothers Against Drunk Drivers and Students Against Drunk Drivers have led a campaign to have Kimball barred from the trials. High school students stand outside convenience stores and collect signatures on "Stop Bruce" petitions. Angry callers have bombarded radio phone-in programs.

The heat from the public is so intense that Kimball has been barred from training at the area's two top diving facilities. There is even some fear for his life, as some segments of the populace seem bent on revenge.

This seems like a lot of malevolence to lay on a person who, until one recent night, had done nothing worse in life than pile up a record for reckless driving. Punishment should be meted out by a court of law, not by a segment of society that has taken on some aspects of a mob.

But if I'm forced to choose between feeling sorry for Bruce and feeling sorry for the family and friends of the dead, the choice will be easy.

And if Kimball has to choose between lessening his own suffering and easing the grief of the mourners in Florida, the choice will be extremely painful but crystal clear.

Don't dive.

Bruce Kimball

USOC Won't Bar Kimball

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Bruce Kimball, facing alcohol-related manslaughter charges facing in Florida, is not barred from competing in the U.S. Olympic diving trials, a U.S. Diving official says.

Kimball, widely considered to be second only to two-time Olympic gold medalist Greg Louganis in platform diving, scheduled an afternoon news conference today and was expected to announce whether he would pursue a spot on the U.S. Olympic squad.

Barb McLaughlin, assistant executive director for U.S. Diving Inc., said Monday that the sanctioning body has no rule that would disqualify Kimball because of the Aug. 1 traffic accident that left two teen-agers dead and six others injured in Brandon, Fla.

"We haven't learned anything new," she said. "At this point, the judicial process will have to run its course and, depending on the outcome, U.S. Diving will act accordingly."

McLaughlin said U.S. Diving could not comment on the charges filed against Kimball because the group was unable to independently confirm the court action in Tampa.

Kimball, who won a silver medal in the 1984 Olympic Games after recovering from a serious traffic accident, is in Indianapolis for the Olympic diving trials at the Indiana University Natatorium. The competition will run through Sunday.

Authorities in Tampa charged him Monday with two counts of driving under the influence-manslaughter, a second-degree felony, and three counts of driving under the influence with serious personal injuries, a third-degree felony.

Arraignment was scheduled Aug.

26 before Hillsborough Circuit Judge Harry Lee Coe.

Kimball could be sentenced to 45 years in prison if convicted on all five counts, authorities said.

Kimball admitted drinking at least four beers before the accident, which happened when his speeding car crashed into a crowd at a popular hangout for teen-agers, sheriff's deputies said.

State Attorney Bill James of Tampa has declined to release results of blood-alcohol tests on Kimball, saying that would be professionally irresponsible. However, the charges indicate Kimball's blood-alcohol level exceeded 0.10 percent.

The accident prompted a letter-writing campaign by the Tampa chapter of Mothers Against Drunk Driving and a petition drive by Brandon teen-agers who hope to prevent Kimball from becoming an Olympian. About 2,000 signatures have been collected, and an estimated 50 letters are being sent to the U.S. Olympic Committee, organizers said.

"The message is that Kimball must be responsible for his own actions. It's got to be the bottom line," Tom Satterly, MADD chapter director, said Monday.

Officials in Florida and in Kimball's home state of Michigan said the former University of Michigan star has a record of driving problems. From 1983 to 1986, he received six citations for violations including speeding, disobeying traffic signals and improper passing.

Michigan officials suspended his license in 1986 after sending him two warning notices. The license was reinstated in May 1987 and Kimball had not been cited since.

Kimball won a silver medal in platform diving in the 1984 Olympic Games at Los Angeles after recuperating from the car accident that left him with broken leg and facial bones and an injured spleen that had to be removed. He finished second to Louganis in platform and eighth in the 3-meter springboard event in the recent U.S. Diving Championships at Irvine, Calif.

Fenner..

yards against Virginia.

Fenner was suspended from the Tar Heel team for academic reasons before the Aloha Bowl meeting with Arizona in December 1986.

Fenner was arrested June 2, 1987 and charged with first-degree murder in a drug-related shooting in Hyattsville, Md. He spent six weeks in jail before being released on bond. The charges were later dropped. He pleaded guilty in April to one count of cocaine possession in Maryland and was placed on three years probation.

Fenner had hoped to re-enroll at North Carolina and rejoin the Tar Heel football team, but he was told earlier this year by Athletic Director John Swofford that he would not be allowed to do so because of the drug conviction.

Fish said if Fenner joins the Gardner-Webb team, he will be placed on probation.

"I can assure you there will be some stringent restrictions on him that would not be on all our players," Fish said. "One example is our drug tests. The first time he tested positive, he'd be gone. Our other players undergo rehabilitation the first time and are gone if there's a second time. But this is his second chance. He'd be getting a second chance. He had his first chance."

Fish said Fenner "made a favorable impression" during Monday's interview.

"He looks you in the eye and he talks to you. We both liked that," Fish said. "He said he could live by our restrictions on him and that he's going to make a turnaround, and he was convincing. Of course, when you're kind of grabbing for straws, lots of times you'll say anything. I've got to be aware of that. I've got a bunch of good kids in this program I've got to look out for."

A concern both sides stressed was whether Fenner could adjust to a slower lifestyle in Boiling Springs, a Cleveland County town of fewer than 2,000 people. Gardner-Webb's on-campus enrollment is less than 1,500. Fenner grew up in Oxon Hill, Md., a suburb of Washington.

"Could I exist here?" Fenner said. "Basically, I want to play football. If this is the best situation for that, I can. But it is small. Maybe I could make it big."

Charlotte Shows It Can Hold Its Own Vs. Triangle

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Charlotte may already be on the map for professional sports, but the Carolinas Invitational showed that North Carolina's largest city can hold its own against the Research Triangle area in amateur events, officials of the event say.

"Raleigh was proud of what they did, Chapel Hill, Durham, the whole Triangle area, and we are also," Carolinas Invitational spokesman Steve Luquire said, referring to the U.S. Olympic Festival, which the Triangle hosted in 1987.

The three-day Invitational featured the men's and women's U.S. Olympic basketball teams, the men's and women's gymnastics teams and a cycling exhibition. The baseball and women's basketball teams from Cuba provided competition in those respective sports, and a group of stars from the NBA challenged the men's basketball team in two games over the weekend.

"We've had a little taste of it now. I think the future is bright for Charlotte," Luquire said Sunday.

The three days got off to an auspicious beginning on Friday morning, when the 20-ton, $1.2 million scoreboard crashed to the new Charlotte coliseum playing floor just moments before the women's basketball teams were to start practicing, and nine hours before they were to meet in the opening event.

Coliseum crews worked feverishly throughout the day to clear the debris from the floor, and replace the new playing surface with the floor from the old coliseum. Basketball went on Friday night slightly behind schedule and the gymnastics exhibition was held as scheduled on Saturday.

"Somebody asked me what did I think when the scoreboard fell. I said there's not much I could do about it," Luquire said. "Just try to get behind the crew and see what we can do to help. That turned out to be what everybody did."

"I think that kind of gave us a little momentum and kind of drew people together in the community," Luquire said.

Financially, Luquire said it was too early to determine how the Invitational performed. Although the baseball games were sellouts, the basketball games did not fill the 23,500-seats as anticipated by some.

"We exceeded ... what he had projected in terms of sales," he said. "We were under in some events and over in others."

Back Problems Sideline Clemens

NEW YORK (AP) — Roger Clemens, the key to Boston's pennant hopes, will miss a start for the first time in three years because of a back problem, The Associated Press has learned.

A source close to the two-time Cy Young winner confirmed the Red Sox plan to rest Clemens for about 10 days. Instead of pitching against Oakland during the weekend, Clemens would face California early next week, possibly on Wednesday.

Clemens, 15-8, endured the worst and shortest outing of his career Sunday against Detroit. He gave up eight runs in 1 1/3 innings and lost his third straight start for the first time ever.

After the game, team doctor Arthur Pappas said Clemens had a slight muscle strain in the left side of his back. Pappas said it was not known how Clemens hurt himself and that he would be given muscle relaxing medication.

"It's day-to-day," Pappas said Monday, an off-day for the Red Sox. "He won't go on the disabled list."

Boston manager Joe Morgan thought Clemens' next outing would be delayed, but not by much.

"I just have a hunch he may have to be pushed back a day or two," Morgan said. "I don't know for sure, but I have a feeling he might miss one."

But sources said Clemens would be held out of the rotation for at least a week. The target date for his next start is Aug. 24 at Fenway Park against the Angels.

Clemens takes his turn in the Boston rotation for every start since the 1986 season. He missed the final month of the 1985 season because of surgery on his right shoulder.

The Red Sox, trailing Detroit by three games in the American League East, need Clemens for the team to stay close in the stretch. Clemens has lost twice to the Tigers and once to Milwaukee in his last three appearances.

In his last 14 2-3 innings, Clemens has given up 18 runs and walked 11. Clemens, recognized for his control, had walked only 37 in his previous 197 innings.

Pappas said Clemens' back trouble is affecting his control but not the velocity on his fastball. Clemens has tried to adjust but has overcompensated, Pappas said.

Clemens leads the major leagues with 242 strikeouts and seven shutouts. He is sixth in the AL with a 2.86 earned run average.

Clemens went 2-4 and led Boston to the World Series in 1986 and was 20-9 last season.

The 26-year-old right-hander started out well this year, although there was speculation around the All-Star break that he was tired. Clemens threw a total of 310 pitches in his last two victories, beating Texas 2-0 on July 25 with 14 strikeouts and five days later defeating Milwaukee 3-2 with 13 strikeouts.

But on Aug. 4, Clemens was pounded in Detroit 11-6.

Hall Hopes To Be Part Of The Action In '87

CHAPPELL HILL (AP) — Jonathan Hall spent the 1987 football season on the sidelines charting plays for the North Carolina coaches, but this year he hopes to be part of the action.

Hall's status remained in doubt even after Mack Brown took over the Tar Heel program in December. When spring practice began, Hall was out and redshirt freshman Deems May was soon the No. 1 man at quarterback. And as preseason drills approached, Hall still was considered the team's biggest question mark.

"Jonathan didn't even start throwing again until the end of June," Brown said Saturday before the Heels' first official practice. "He's had to start very slow and fight through the soreness."

"Obviously, we'll have to watch him closely. We'll have to evaluate him like a freshman," Brown told the News and Observer of Raleigh. "After a year off, he's obviously lost an edge in his conditioning, and he didn't do anything in the spring. We'll know more in a few weeks — see how he handles the licks and the pressure."

But a few minutes later, Hall bounced into the room and pronounced himself fit, saying he has fired off as many as 300 passes a day.

"My arm's as good as it ever was," the junior quarterback said. "I'm not worried about it. I'm taking better care of it and it feels fine. I've been throwing once a day this summer — throwing 'til I get tired."

"I'm just anxious to get out there and get going again."

For Hall, it has been a long, agonizing wait since December 1986, when an Arizona lineman crashed him to the AstroTurf in the final moments of the Aloha Bowl. Surgery soon was performed to correct a separation of his right shoulder, but the shoulder continued to slide out of its socket.

Hall spent time with Dr. Frank Jobe in Los Angeles, seeking the specialized shoulder treatment Jobe had given UNC's Mark Maye a few years ago when Maye's career seemed at an end. But the pain persisted in the spring of '87, and Hall turned to arthroscopic surgery to remove a fibrous band that was impeding the movement of a tendon.

Hall, like Maye before him, had to endure a rehabilitation period filled with self-doubts as painful as the shoulder burns. There was the constant paranoia that he would one day pick up a football and not be able to fling it across a room, much less 30 yards down field.

"But I never gave up hope," he said. "I knew I'd be back."

By the end of June, Hall had received clearance to limber up and give it a try. The shoulder was sore, as expected, but the passes soon were crisp.

"I've also gotten in a little contact work," Hall said with a smile. "Messing around and wrestling with my roommates. Taken a few licks."

And so Hall will try to reclaim the starting position at quarterback he held during parts of the 1985 and '86 seasons. He's back to compete with May, just as he did with Maye, and Kevin Anthony before that.

"I've always played better with competition," he said. "When Kevin was the starter (in '85) and the coaches said he was vulnerable and I had a shot, I played my best. When Mark came back (in '86) after the arm injury, I beat him out."

"Sometimes, I can get lazy. Competition keeps me from getting that way," he said. The way I look at it, I'll just do the best I can, Deems will do the best he can, and we'll have a good quarterback either way."

Cardinals To Obtain Guerrero From L.A.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The St. Louis Cardinals, still trying to replace departed slugger Jack Clark, reportedly will get Pedro Guerrero from Los Angeles for left-hander John Tudor, whom the Dodgers need to replace the injured Fernando Valenzuela.

"It's not a rumor, it's fact. It's true. I don't know how it got out," agent Tony Attanasio told the Long Beach, Calif., Press-Telegram.

The newspaper reported today that the trade hinges on the Cardinals' ability to sign Guerrero.

The 32-year-old outfielder, a .309 career hitter, is said to be seeking a three-year contract for an estimated $5.5 million. The Cardinals are ready to pay that, according to the St. Louis Post Dispatch. The newspaper said the trade could be completed today.

"We'd like to have Guerrero, but we've got to sign him first," Cardinals manager Whitey Herzog said. "But the big thing is we've got to get a premier power hitter."

The Cardinals had hoped to replace Clark, who opted for free agency with the New York Yankees, with Bob Horner. But Horner, signed two weeks after Clark left, has played only 60 games and hit just three homers with 33 runs batted in.

The oft-injured Horner is out for the rest of the season following shoulder surgery.

The Dodgers had been shopping for a left-handed starter since former Cy Young Award winner Valenzuela went on the disabled list last month with a shoulder injury.

"I would say we've had serious discussions," general manager Fred Claire said when asked about the Dodgers' attempt to fill the void left by Valenzuela's first trip to the disabled list in eight major league seasons. "If we can improve our club and our pitching staff we won't hesitate to do it."

Neither Claire nor his St. Louis counterpart, Dal Maxvill, would confirm the deal Monday night. But Guerrero and Los Angeles manager Tom Lasorda seemed resigned to the trade.

Guerrero, 32, has missed 59 games this year because of a pinched nerve condition in his neck. He's hitting .298 but with only five homers and 35 runs batted in.

"I don't know how they felt about that (two months on the disabled list), but I know that when I was out they played good," Guerrero said. "As a matter of fact, they were about seven games up without me, and when I came back, they went down. But I don't think it was just because of me."

"The good thing is that we're still in first place. I don't know if I should say we or they."

"I kind of feel bad about it because of the years that I played here," Guerrero said after Monday night's

1-0 victory over San Francisco. "For a while, I really felt that I would probably end my career here, but this is all about business."

Tudor, a 34-year-old left-hander, is 6-5 with a league-leading 2.29 earned run average. He missed the first three weeks of the season with knee and shoulder problems and then the flu.

Tudor is 101-65 in 10 seasons. He was 10-2 last season despite missing more than three months with a broken bone in his right knee. In 1985, he was 21-8 and led the Cardinals to the National League pennant.

"Sometimes you lose players you love very, very dearly," Lasorda said. "It's been over the years where that has happened to me and it hurts you see players you think the world of and players who have been with you a long time leave."

Guerrero's, whose five-year, $7-million contract expires at the end of the season, was told of the trade by the Dodgers on Monday afternoon. Guerrero didn't play against the Giants.

"I didn't think I was ready for the game tonight," he said. "There were so many things going around, and I didn't want to go out there thinking about it and probably mess up the game. So I just felt the best thing to do was just sit down for the night. I felt bad all day and all night," he said. "I probably won't get to sleep tonight. But like I say, you know, there's things that have to happen and this is. I mean it's all business."

"It's a disappointment to him," Attanasio said. "He's going from a first-place club to a last-place club. He was semi-shocked by it all. The Dodgers have meant a lot to him and he wanted to end his career with them. Now I guess that won't happen."

The Dodgers do not need to negotiate with Tudor. He's under contract for 1989, at the same $1.1 million he is being paid this season.

Tudor's agent, Steve Freyer of Boston, declined to comment on the proposed deal other than to say that Tudor has not changed his mind about retiring from baseball following the 1989 season.

The Dodgers had been shopping for a left-handed starter since former Cy Young Award winner Fernando Valenzuela went on the disabled list last month with a shoulder injury.

In the 15 games Guerrero has played since returning from the disabled list, he is batting .241 with two homers and five RBI. Last year, after coming back from a knee injury that sidelined him for virtually the entire 1986 season, Guerrero hit .338 with 27 homers and 89 RBI. He ranks third on the L.A. Dodgers all-time home run list with 171.

Aikman May Be UCLA's Saving Grace In 1988

By BERNIE WILSON
AP Sports Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — UCLA coach Terry Donahue might really be cringing if it weren't for Troy Aikman.

As it is, the Bruins lost 14 starters from the 1987 team, the most in the Pacific-10 Conference.

But among the eight returnees is Aikman, one of the top passers in the nation.

"We're going to build the team around Troy Aikman," Donahue said. "I believe he's one of the four or five best quarterbacks in the country."

"Generally, the last four or five years we've had a lot of players back, except the quarterback. This year it's just the opposite. The quarterback is established, the other pieces are not established."

But Aikman "is a good enough player that he can bring the others to a different level," Donahue said.

Last season as a junior transfer, Aikman had the Bruins moving toward their fourth Rose Bowl appearance this decade. But rival Southern Cal shocked UCLA 17-13 to earn a tie for the Pac-10 championship with a 7-1 league record and take the Rose Bowl berth.

UCLA beat Florida in the Aloha Bowl to finish 10-2 overall, and was No. 9 in the final poll.

Aikman threw for 2,354 yards and 16 touchdowns during the regular season. After leading the nation in passing efficiency for much of the year, he finished second to Don McPherson of Syracuse. McPherson had a rating of 164.3 to Aikman's 163.6.

"His talent is phenomenal, and he has the kind of arm that comes along only once in a while," Donahue said of the 6-foot-3½, 217-pound Aikman. "And the thing which is so impressive is that he's so much better now than he was when he came to UCLA."

Aikman was Oklahoma's starting quarterback in 1985, but broke his leg in the fourth game and was finished for the year. As it turned out, he also was finished as a Sooner. Oklahoma switched from the I-formation backfield to the wishbone to accommodate Jamelle Holieway, and Aikman headed west.

"He has a total grasp of the offense now and is seasoned. He knows the checks to make, knows what to do when he's blitzed," Donahue said. "The game experience has helped him tremendously."

"I know we'll build around Troy. But we're a young, inexperienced team. We're a little unsettled in the preseason. Only about seven or eight players have won positions."

Among the skill-position players who graduated were Gaston Green, UCLA's career rushing leader with 3,884 yards (1,155 yards, 11 touchdowns in '87) and receivers Willie Anderson and Paco Craig.

Either senior Eric Ball or sophomore Brian Brown will replace Green, but neither has won the job. The Bruins also have highly regarded freshman Kevin Williams of Spring, Texas, coming off a pulled hamstring.

"We had 13 guys taken in the NFL draft," Donahue said. "I'm not sure we can rebound from that kind of loss and not feel that it's important to replace the speed we lost. We lost two of the fastest players we ever had here."

"We've got a lot of inexperienced wide receivers."

The Bruins lost six of their top nine receivers from last year. Anderson caught 48 passes for 903 yards and Craig had 29 for 520.

Flanker Mike Farr, who caught

24 passes for 294 yards, is the only returning wide receiver with more than four catches. Tight ends Charles Arbuckle (22 for 246) and Corwin Anthony (14 for 125) return. Arbuckle started six games last year, but he had two arthroscopic knee operations in the last year and missed spring ball.

Donahue said the Bruins need to find a third-string tight end, and he's concerned about lack of depth in the secondary and offensive line.

"We have players who have been at UCLA waiting for an opportunity," Donahue said. "Now that it's here, we'll see if they can do it for us."

The Bruins lost inside linebacker Ken Norton, but have Chance Johnson on the inside and Carnell Lake, the Pac-10's top sacker with 13, on the outside. Another defensive returnee is left cornerback Darryl Henley.

Donahue hopes Eric Smith can return to form at outside linebacker. He started in 1986 but missed last year with a back injury.

Placekicker Alfredo Velasco and punter Harold Barkate also are back.

By winning the Aloha Bowl, the Bruins tied Georgia Tech and Alabama with six consecutive postseason victories.

"That's a great challenge and opportunity for us," Donahue said. "No team in the history of college football has won seven consecutive bowl games. That's hard."

"Before that, though, we better win some games to get to a bowl game."

Bruno Confident In His Abilities To Top Tyson

WEMBLEY, England (AP) — In boxing terms, Frank Bruno's challenge to heavyweight champion Mike Tyson might be considered a classic David and Goliath confrontation. In this case, however, David is four inches taller and about 15 pounds heavier than Goliath.

"I know I have a lot of knockers but I know my capabilities," the 6-foot-3 Bruno said Monday during his first news conference since the Oct. 8 fight against Tyson was announced. "I have been watching videos of Tyson and I have spotted quite a few weaknesses."

The fight is to take place at Wembley Stadium, and a capacity crowd of 60,000 is expected. Gate receipts are estimated at $7.65 million, making the fight Britain's most lucrative sporting event.

During a visit on Monday to Cleveland, Tyson said he had firmly committed to the fight, although it appeared only the purse amount was in question.

Bruno, who makes up for suspect mobility with a powerful knockout punch, has halted 29 of his 30 victims. His two defeats were by knockout against Tim Witherspoon, who stopped him in 11 rounds two years ago in a previous world title bid, and James "Bonecrusher" Smith.

Bruno said he had improved considerably since the defeats and had found the force to take away Tyson's titles.

"People are making Tyson sound like a monster," Bruno said. "But no man is unbeatable and I am a stone (14 pounds) heavier than him. This fight is all about power."

Bruno's handlers were just as excited about the fight, which took several months to nail down after a series of delays and cancellations.

"In no way will Frank Bruno be a lamb to the slaughter," John Morris, secretary of the British Boxing Board of Control, said. "It is definitely not outside the bounds of possibility that we could have the biggest boxing upset of all time here."

Terry Lawless, Bruno's manager who has guided four of the challenger's countrymen to world titles, said his man was not simply fighting for the money. Reports have estimated that Bruno will receive $1.7 million. Tyson is expected to gross a minimum of $4 million.

"It would be very easy for any fighter to go in and take the money against Tyson," Lawless said. "But Frank has desperately wanted to fight Tyson since they first met. I have never known anyone so desperate to fight someone. It's a pride fight for Bruno."

Bruno, at ringside to watch Tyson's last fight, a 91-second demolition of previously unbeaten Michael Spinks in June, insisted he would not be going the same way.

"He's going to get murdered, not me," Bruno said.

The Briton said he had the advantage of having sparred with Tyson several years ago.

"I'm the only one who's actually been in the ring with him. All his other opponents had only watched him on TV," Bruno said. "He doesn't scare me."

Bruno, rated the No. 1 challenger by both the World Boxing Council and World Boxing Association, will not have fought for a year when he steps into the ring at midnight local time to face one of the most awesome champions in boxing history.

He said the time lapse didn't worry him.

"I fight better when I've been out for a long time," Bruno, 26, said.

"I've been training every day for this fight."

Bruno said he didn't want to get involved in too much pre-fight hype, and preferred to just get on with the job.

"Tyson is a human being, a respectable man," the challenger said. "But this is a hard business, a tough business. I just want to take away his titles."

Mickey Duff, the fight's co-promoter, predicted Bruno would perform better than any of Tyson's previous opponents.

"To make him a certainty would be living in dreamland," Duff said. "But he's in the right frame of mind, has the right attitude and, most important of all, he has more ability than anyone Mike Tyson has fought to date."

Baker To Have Surgery For Clot

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Three months and several races ago, stock car racer Buddy Baker apparently developed a blood clot on his brain in a crash. He plans to have the clot removed today, one day after detection, and he calls himself lucky.

"All the indications are the clot has been there for some time," since the crash at the Coca-Cola 600 at the Charlotte Motor Speedway in May, Baker said. "So I guess I'm as lucky as a man in this situation can expect to be."

"The clot is on the right front lobe of the brain on the outside, not down in the brain. So, again, that's lucky for me."

Dr. Jerry Petty, a Charlotte neurosurgeon and medical advisor at Charlotte Motor Speedway, is scheduled to perform the operation at Charlotte Memorial Hospital. He said he is optimistic about a full recovery for Baker, 47.

"The clot is serious to a degree, but everything is tremendously in Buddy's favor," Petty told the Charlotte Observer Monday. "The clot is between the covering of the brain and the brain."

"I'd say it's urgent that it be removed."

Baker learned of the clot in an examination Monday morning. "My head had been hurting some, and I was experiencing some loss of balance and the nausea I'm told goes along with it," he said. "I also thought I noticed some speech irregularities, but my crew guys and friends say that isn't the case."

"I'd pretty much traced it to the after-effects of what I thought was only a slight concussion I'd received in the 600."

Baker was involved in a five-car crash in Turn 2 on the 244th of the 400 laps. He crawled from his car and collapsed on a nearby grassy area and rescue crews placed a neck brace on him. He was examined at the infield hospital and released.

"Then, last Thursday I got in my Olds to practice at Watkins Glen (N.Y.). I was going down the backstretch and all of a sudden I was second guessing myself about what to do. I knew right then that something was bad wrong and I shouldn't drive the car in the race on Sunday."

"I came in, got out of the car and started making arrangements right then to get Morgan Shepherd up there to fill in as driver for me. Thank goodness I was not foolish enough to think I could race Sunday," Baker said.

Baker has raced seven times since the 600 on May 29, with a best finish of sixth in the Firecracker 400 at Daytona (Fla.) International Speedway. He challenged strongly two weeks ago in the Talladega (Ala.) 500, running as high as fourth late before finishing 10th after the fire extinguisher in his car went off, temporarily blinding him.

Baker has 19 victories in a career dating to 1959 and including 682 starts. He is seventh on the all-time list with 17 superspeedway victories. He has career winnings of $3.79 million.

Linebacker John Roper May Hold Key To A&M's Defense

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Texas A&M's defense of the Southwest Conference football title it has won the last three years begins with defense.

And the Aggies' defense begins with linebacker John Roper.

Roper, an All-American last season as a junior, led the SWC with 15 quarterback sacks and 26 tackles for losses in 1987.

"It's hard to describe the tangible benefits of a great player that goes on the field and practices the way he does," Coach Jackie Sherrill says. "He makes plays during practice and during games. He's a great player."

Roper is one of seven returning defensive starters, but the four losses all were four-year lettermen. Gone are linemen Guy Broom and Sammy O'Brient and safeties Chet Brooks and Kip Corrington.

Replacing O'Brient at nose guard will be especially difficult, Sherrill says.

"For the last 3½ years, all we've had to worry about at the nose was finding a backup," Sherrill says. "Now we've got to find a player."

Finding defensive replacements isn't Sherrill's only worry. The Aggies face possible NCAA sanctions, a rugged early season schedule and the struggle of trying to win a fourth straight title.

Finding a quarterback won't be hard. Sherrill has three, the same as last season. Choosing a starter is not a problem.

"That's more of a media problem, it's not our problem," Sherrill says. "We demonstrated that last year."

The Aggies won their third straight SWC title last season with the quarterbacking trio of true freshman Bucky Richardson, senior Craig Stump and redshirt freshman Lance Pavlas.

"We utilized all three of them last year and all of them had something to do with our winning the Cotton Bowl game," Sherrill says.

Richardson and Pavlas return and Chris Osgood, a transfer from Mississippi, replaces the graduated Stump.

Richardson and Pavlas finished 1-2 in the voting for outstanding offensive player in the Aggies' 35-10 Cotton Bowl victory over Notre Dame. Richardson rushed for 96 yards in 13 carries and scored two touchdowns in winning the offensive honor.

Pavlas engineered an 80-yard drive to ignite the Aggies in the second quarter.

Although Osgood is a newcomer, Sherrill won't hesitate to use him.

"Chris will help us somewhere in the season," Sherrill says. "We won't have any problems using any of them."

The Aggies have responded to a list of 31 allegations involving the football program but the investigation isn't a factor in preparations for the Aug. 27 opener against Nebraska in the Kickoff Classic.

"We're going to line up and play and we'll still be on television," Sherrill says. "The players aren't involved in it. They're just getting ready to play."

The Aggies lost five offensive starters, including four-year linemen Louis Cheek and Matt Wilson. Running back Keith Woodside also was a key loss.

Guards Richmond Webb and Jerry Fontenot return and so does split end Rod Harris, who averaged 14.8 yards on 19 receptions and led the team in punt returns.

Stump was a four-year letterman and the team's punter.

After the Kickoff Classic, the Aggies play at LSU, at home against Alabama and at Oklahoma State before starting defense of their SWC title against Texas Tech. Sherrill sees the tough schedule as an honor rather than a burden.

"We weren't asked to play (in the Kickoff Classic) because we didn't deserve to play; we earned it," Sherrill says. "If you ask Nebraska, some of their coaches probably didn't want to play us. I know some of our coaches didn't want to play Nebraska. It's so early, and the big concern is you'll get someone hurt."

A victory over Nebraska would help the conference, Sherrill said.

"We're already eight-point underdogs, so what else is new? But it gives you the opportunity to do something for your football team and for your conference."

Plunkett's Release May End His Career

OXNARD, Calif. (AP) — Ten years ago, the San Francisco 49ers released quarterback Jim Plunkett, a move which seemed to signal the end of the 1970 Heisman Trophy winner's NFL career.

What it turned out to be was a beginning. The real end came Monday when Plunkett, at 40 the NFL's oldest player, was released by the Los Angeles Raiders.

After being let go by the 49ers, Plunkett was picked up by the Raiders in September 1978. He was selected the NFL's Comeback Player of the Year in 1980 and was named the Super Bowl MVP for his performance in the Raiders' 27-10 victory over Philadelphia in January 1981.

Three years later, he was at the controls when the Raiders overpowered the Washington Redskins 38-9 in the Super Bowl.

"If history books are written, certainly Jim Plunkett will be a part of the history of the National Football League, the great history," said Al Davis, the Raiders' managing general partner.

FORECAST FOR WEDNESDAY Aug. 17
ARIES (March 21 to April 19): You are able to sit down with outside partners and come to a better understanding with them. Use charm to get better results.
TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Handle your activities precisely, and get the approval of others, especially superiors. Be more cooperative with co-workers.
GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): It is an ideal day to show your talents to those who can help you be a success. Relieve any tensions and anxieties that you may have.
MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): If you are more thoughtful and considerate of family members, you can create the situation at home that you want.
LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): If you praise your associates more today, you may improve those relationships and get more accomplished. Take little trips with friends.
VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Someone who understands your ambitions will offer you good advice, so listen carefully and then follow it. Be wise.
LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Try to contact those people who can assist you in gaining your personal wishes. State your aim, and impress them with your true friendship.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Study your private ambitions, and plan how best to make them realities. Find a better way to show your affection to your mate.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Try to be with as many friends as you can, and get many good suggestions from them. Be courteous to those you are most fond of.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): You can accomplish a great deal in the business world today, so get out early, and bring your talents to the attention of your superiors.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Contact those you have known for some time who are far away but can be mutually helpful. Apprise them of your own activities.
PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Your intuition is strong now, so use it to your benefit. If you have something special to do with your mate, this is the right day to do it.

 The bidding:
 North East South West
 Pass Pass 4♥ Pass Pass Pass
 Opening lead: Queen of ♠
 Even monarchs are mortal. How often has the cry rung out: "The king is dead. Long live the king"? It is the story of this hand.
 In first or second position, we would open the South hand with a demand bid even though it might be a point or so light. It has only four losers and we would want to alert partner to the fact that, if he holds two aces, we are in slam territory. In fourth seat, though, we would settle for an opening four-heart bid. First, it's odds-against partner holding two aces. Secondly, even that might not be enough.
 Against four hearts West leads the top of his spade sequence. A careless declarer wins in hand and then finds that he has no entry to dummy. He bangs out the ace-king of trumps, but when the queen fails to drop the contract is irretrievably lost. Declarer must play everything from hand, and he ends up surrendering a trick in each red suit and two clubs.
 A more careful declarer realizes that his only entry to the table is the ace of spades, so he will rise with that card at trick one, squandering the king under it. He will then use the entry for the trump finesse. That succeeds, but when West shows out on the next trump, declarer must still concede a trump trick and the contract.

 The expert foresees that his best chance for the contract is to find East with the ace of clubs. After winning the first trick in dummy, he leads a club to the king. When that works, he is home. If it loses, he can still try to drop the queen of trumps for his 10th trick.
 So one king had to be sacrificed for the other to reign supreme. Long live the king!

Downey Faces Assault Charge

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — A man is pressing an assault complaint against talk-show host Morton Downey Jr. after being grabbed and pulled by the shirt during a confrontation in which the man's sister slapped Downey.

Sunday night's scuffle occurred during a forum, modeled after Downey's show, which attracted 2,000 people.

Paul Bass, 28, executive editor of The New Haven Independent, and his sister, Sharon Bass, battled verbally with Downey again Monday when they appeared on the "Sally Jessy Raphael" TV show.

"I was foolish enough to think I could have an intellectual debate with him," Bass said Monday.

Playing the peacemaker, Raphael had Bass shake hands with an apologetic Downey. Downey hugged Bass and gave his still visibly angry sister an unwanted kiss on the cheek.

TOGETHER — Phyllis Frelich, left, the actress who won a Tony by originating the role of a young deaf woman who refuses to work in "Children of a Lesser God," appears with Marlee Matlin, the actress who won the Oscar for the screen version of the same vehicle. The actresses will perform together in a television movie titled "Bridge to Silence." (AP Laserphoto)

Networks Brace For Ho-Hum News Flow At GOP Session

By JILL LAWRENCE Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The three major television networks grumbled after the Democratic convention and cut the staff brought here, but they nevertheless are reserving prime time all week for the Republicans — and praying for news.

The biggest sure-fire story was President Reagan's farewell speech to the party he led for eight years. But that was Monday, and the rest of the week loomed with two hours to fill each night. Sometimes more.

The networks are making a good-faith effort to appear gung-ho, with much talk of democracy and responsibility and how things aren't really so boring.

There is, after all, The Unanswered Question of whom George Bush will select as his running mate. NBC anchor Tom Brokaw labels the suspense ersatz, but the question remains.

And then there are the questions about Bush himself. How will he acquit himself? Will he emerge from Reagan's shadow? Will the convention give him the boost he needs?

"There's lots of news going on here," said Lane Venardos, executive producer for CBS News special events. "Just because something isn't big news doesn't mean it isn't news."

CBS is leading the campaign for prime-time convention coverage, boring or not, with NBC not far behind.

"Some things in television are more important than ratings, even more important than money. Coverage of the political conventions is one of them," CBS anchor Dan Rather said in a "My Turn" article published this week in Newsweek.

Rather derided a suggestion by "one television executive," after the Atlanta convention with its disastrous ratings, that the parties and maybe the networks should "come up with something more appealing to the American people."

No way, wrote Rather. "Not everything about democracy is exciting. Some things are simply important. That is reason enough to cover them."

ABC anchorman Peter Jennings said the comment, by ABC News President Roone Arledge, was taken out of context. "Roone was exhibiting a certain frustration which all of us feel that more Americans do not participate in the process," he said.

Arledge went further than any other network executive in openly speculating that ABC might cut its coverage in New Orleans.

The prospect so worried the GOP that "we were very adamant" with the network, said Mark Goode, hired by the Republican National Committee to produce the convention. "We felt it was unfair to change the rules in the middle of the game. We told them it could hurt them if they did it."

Jennings said he was unaware of any pressure on ABC and added: "I can't imagine the party would act in such bad taste." He also said there was "never any doubt in my mind or in any correspondent's mind that we were going to cover this exactly as we covered the convention in Atlanta."

With their high-profile anchors and correspondents, their trailer encampments the size of small towns, their glass skyboxes visible in the convention hall, the networks remain a dominating presence even in their lean new incarnation.

"You cannot put in all this effort, all these people, all this money, and say you're going through the motions," said Lloyd Siegel, senior producer of NBC's coverage.

Siegel said much of what goes on at the conventions is "not of national interest." But he added, "It's two weeks every four years when people stop to consider how the country should be run. Who will be the next president? There's no bigger story than that."

Faithful Assembled To Honor Presley

By WOODY BAIRD Associated Press Writer

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Elvis Presley's ever-faithful fans filed slowly past his grave in a candlelight procession, and sent stands of flowers shaped like guitars and hearts to mark today's 11th anniversary of his death.

"Elvis, we miss you tonight. We will love you today, tomorrow and forever," June Klein of North Lewisburg, Ohio, said during a memorial program that began a late-night procession past the singer's grave at his Graceland mansion.

The stands of flowers lined a walk beside the grave. Many of the dozens of Elvis fan clubs around the country traditionally schedule their floral arrangements to arrive on Aug. 16, the day Presley died.

The procession, which began at 10:30 p.m. Monday, was expected to draw more than 5,000 participants. Police estimated a crowd of 3,000 at the Graceland gates waiting for the affair to get under way.

Laurie Cousins of Winnipeg, Canada, arrived at the gates at noon Monday to be first in line. She said the long, hot wait in the 99-degree temperature was worth it.

"It's an honor to be first, and to look back and see all those candles lit is just unbelievable," she said.

Also in the crowd were Ray and Angela Campione of New York, and their 5-year-old son, Paul Elvis Cam-pione, who wore a white, bejeweled jumpsuit and struck Elvis poses to the delight of the other fans.

Asked why he's an Elvis fan, the child replied, "He's a nice man, and I like his music and he gives to the poor children."

Presley died of heart disease at Graceland in 1977, and the faithful return by the hundreds each year to mark the anniversary.

The graveside procession is the largest event of a nine-day celebration called "Elvis International Tribute Week," organized and promoted by managers of Graceland. More than 35,000 people are expected to tour Graceland during the week.

With Elvis recordings playing in the background, the fans queued up to touch candles to a torch lit by an eternal flame, and to walk single file up a winding, 200-yard driveway past Presley's grave beside the Graceland swimming pool.

"It helps keep his memory alive," said Gene Carothers of Gnadenthten, Ohio, who sported an Elvis pompadour and a 6-inch-wide leather belt with dangling loops of chain.

Lulu Expecting Second Child

LONDON (AP) — Pop singer Lulu is expecting her second child, but concedes that having another baby at age 39 is a "daunting" prospect.

"I'm surprised because really we had given up hope," said Lulu, born as Marie McDonald McLaughlin Lawrie.

She and her husband, hairdresser John Frieda, have an 11-year-old son, Jordan.

"We waited for a long time after Jordan was born before we thought seriously about adding to the family and now we're delighted," she said Monday. "It is daunting being a mum again at 40 but I feel better and more comfortable as I get older."

Lulu, whose birthday is Nov. 3, is starring in the musical "Peter Pan" in west London's theater district. But she said the baby, due in April, means she will have to pull out of a fall tour.

Fess Is Out

LOS OLIVOS, Calif. (AP) — If the coonskin hat fits, wear it.

But while Fess Parker, one-time "king of the wild frontier," said he is pleased about Walt Disney Studio's "Davy Crockett" television revival, he won't play in the series.

Parker, who starred in the 1954-56 TV show, said Monday that the new series "is a compliment to the man."

"He's durable, he's fun, he's exciting, and I hope they do him justice," the 64-year-old actor said. "He stands for some very strong American values."

Parker, who would have played an elder statesman in the remake, declined to say why he refused a role.

The show is based on the life of Crockett, an expert frontiersman and marksman and a colonel in the Tennessee militia. Crockett also served in the Tennessee Legislature in the 1820s and 1830s.

CUSTOMER SERVICE IS OUR #1 PRIORITY
The Lowe's Commitment

GREAT PRODUCTS & PRICES
10% Low Price Guarantee Policy:
Lowe's guarantees our everyday low prices. If you find an identical advertised item at any retail competitor currently priced lower than ours, simply bring us written proof of that price. We'll match that price PLUS give you an additional 10% of the difference between the two prices when you buy from us. It must be an identical in-stock item. Closeout, discontinued and other clearance type sale items are excluded from this offer.

Satisfaction Guarantee Policy:
Lowe's guarantees that you will be satisfied with your purchase. If you are not completely happy with your purchase, simply return it along with your original sales receipt to any Lowe's store. We'll repair it, replace it, or refund your money.

Lowe's Raincheck Policy:
If an advertised item is temporarily out-of-stock, we will gladly issue a raincheck (except for items marked limited quantities, discontinued or closeout). When we restock you will be notified so you can buy at the previously advertised price. Some stores may not stock all advertised items; however, every item shown can be ordered for you.

Lowe's Fair Purchase Policy:
In order to provide fair purchase opportunity to all our customers, Lowe's reserves the right to limit quantities sold to individual customers. No dealers, please.

UP TO $1,000 INSTANT CREDIT

Apply For Your Handy Lowe's Credit Card!
Over one million satisfied customers use Lowe's Credit Card. Shouldn't you? Just present your Visa, American Express, MasterCard or Sears card and you may qualify for up to $1,000 instant credit on a new Lowe's card. (Even without these cards, your application will be processed with minimum delay.) Stop by Lowe's today for complete details and an application.

Finance Major Purchases Of Up To $5,000 On Our Low Monthly Payment Credit Plan:
Our Low Payment Plan offers you an easier way to make those major home improvements and larger purchases, by letting you finance purchases of $250 to $5,000 for up to five years. So apply today. You may qualify for up to $1,000 instant credit when you present your Visa, American Express, MasterCard, Sears or Lowe's Card. Complete details are at Lowe's.

Warranty And Financing Details:
Details on product warranties & Lowe's financing policy available in store.

Lowe's Low Payment Plan — Terms Of Repayment:
Your credit must be satisfactory. No down payment required. The monthly payment includes sales tax of 5% and finance charges. If sales tax differs in your area, the monthly payment may vary slightly. The monthly payment has been estimated and may vary depending upon state laws and charges. Insurance is available upon request. The APR is as follows:
