Quake Death Toll To Climb

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP) — Rescuers searched through debris today for victims of an earthquake that ravaged one-third of this country's territory and parts of India, killing at least 650 people and injuring thousands.

The death toll was expected to climb from Sunday's pre-dawn quake on the India-Nepal border, which triggered landslides and floods and was the mountainous region's deadliest in 38 years.

Officials in both countries said they had yet to receive reports from the remote Himalayan areas hardest hit by the temblor, which knocked out power and communications and was said to injure at least 3,000 people.

Niranjan Thapa, Nepal's minister of state for home affairs, told a news conference at least 450 were dead and up to 1,000 injured. He said officials expected the numbers to climb.

Indian officials reported at least 200 people dead and more than 2,000 injured, most by debris from collapsing buildings.

The quake, centered almost on the India-Nepal border, registered 6.5 on the Richter scale.

Indian television today showed the devastation in the Indian state of Bihar: crumbled buildings, makeshift morgues lined with rows of bodies wrapped in white shrouds, damaged hospital wards packed with survivors.

Medical teams in India carried medicine and other supplies to overcrowded hospitals and the army was deployed to help search for victims.

But the monsoons, which hit the subcontinent in late June and usually last through September, hampered relief operations.

Nepal's Thapa told a news conference that "the rains have been a great hindrance in carrying out rescue works. Access to some areas of this mountain country is impossible."

He said 21 of the kingdom's 75 districts suffered extensive damage. The hardest hit appeared to be Dharan, a sparsely populated border region where Thapa said at least 131 people died.

Bir Bahadur Shahi, secretary of the home affairs ministry, flew to eastern Nepal on Sunday. He said 50,000 to 60,000 houses were destroyed in the Dharan district alone.

"Ninety percent of the remaining houses are cracked," Shahi said, adding that most of the damage was to modern houses of stone and older houses from mud and bricks. Wooden houses were not affected, he said.

Many people were given shelter in schools, guesthouses and public buildings, "but most of the people do not want to leave their homes," Shahi said. He said water supplies were still adequate and there were no reports of disease breaking out.

Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi flew to Bihar to tour some of the hardest hit areas. The government said it would release a detailed report after he returned to the capital tonight.

Prime Minister Man Singh Shrestha of Nepal visited some of the victims at Bir Hospital in his capital, Katmandu.

STUNNED VICTIMS — Residents of Bhaktapur stand before some of the debris left Sunday by the deadliest earthquake to hit eastern India and Nepal in 38 years. The quake roused people from their sleep in Bihar and nine other Indian states and central and eastern Nepal. It lasted about a minute and aftershocks continued for about an hour.

Rail tracks sank into the soggy ground and bridges over rising rivers cracked, paralyzing train service and road travel in many parts of the devastated areas.

Parts of northern Bangladesh and the capital, Dhaka, also felt the tremor. There were reports that 50 people were injured, most by jumping from their houses during the quake.

Witnesses in Darbhanga, an Indian city of 800,000 about 45 miles south of the epicenter, said the only warnings were hissing sounds, rattling doors and cracking windows. Women began blowing conch shells, following an ancient tradition believed to appease the weather gods.

More than 25,000 houses were flattened in Darbhanga, as well as the districts of Munger and Madhubani, Indian officials said.

In Madhubani, the Bhootahi Balan River jumped its banks and flooded nearly 50 villages. Officials said at least 45 people died, but it was not known whether the

Polish Strike Grows; 400 Take Shipyard

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — About 400 workers carrying Polish flags and chanting "Solidarity" seized control of the Lenin shipyard today, joining a wave of strikes that poses the most serious challenge to communist authorities since 1981.

The Lenin shipyard became the 13th enterprise in a week to go on strike for higher pay and government recognition of Solidarity, the trade federation that was suppressed under martial law in 1981.

At least 10 coal mines in southern Poland and transit and dockworkers in Szczecin remained on strike on the seventh day of the labor unrest, which has idled more than 76,000 workers.

Some Gdansk port workers also were striking as of today, according to reports from Western journalists. A Solidarity spokesman, Jacek Kuron, said 3,000 Gdansk dockworkers were on strike.

Aside from the shipyard, which employs 10,000 people, no new strikes were confirmed by authorities today. But there were many opposition reports of labor unrest nationwide.

Activists in Warsaw reported an attempt to start a strike at the 14,000-worker Ursus tractor plant outside the city. A rally at the plant was dispersed by police during the morning shift, resulting in three detentions, said activist Maciej Jankowski. But he said workers laid down tools in some departments.

A management spokesman at Ursus who did not give his name confirmed an unsuccessful attempt to strike at the plant, but made no mention of police and said work continued normally.

In southeastern Poland, Solidarity organizer Ewa Kuberna said workers rallied at the 18,000-employee Stalowa Wola steel mill and heavy machinery plant, and a strike was launched by 2,000 of the workers.

Government spokesman Ryszard Straus said people might be standing around at Stalowa Wola but it did not necessarily mean a strike.

Opposition spokesman Wojciech Maziarski also reported new strikes or partial strikes at the Cegielski turbine works in Poznan, the Huta Warszawa steel mill in Warsaw and the Railroad Construction Enterprise of Szczecin.

A spokesman for Huta Warszawa mill, technical director Stanislaw Zalesny, said about 50 people tried to mount a strike but it failed. Straus said he had no information about any stoppages at Cegielski or the Szczecin railroad enterprise.

There was no police interference as workers marched around the Gdansk shipyard carrying Polish national flags and took over the main gate at 8:35 a.m. Late this morning, however, riot police cordoned off approaches to the shipyard.

Strikers chanted Solidarity slogans and posted strike banners on the shipyard fence, helping some supporters who had been locked out to scramble over the gate.

A short time later, Solidarity national chairman Lech Walesa arrived.

"We must fight for reforms. We must fight for Solidarity. There is no other way," Walesa exhorted strikers in a 20-minute rally at the gate.

"Everything is closed and the whole shipyard is on strike," Walesa said later by telephone from his Gdansk home.

He said the enthusiasm of the young strikers surprised him. "This youth we have there is just incredible."

Two Men Are Held

SNOW HILL — An escapee from the New Hanover County jail has been charged with murder and a second fugitive is being held and questioned in connection with the death of a young male whose body was found by law enforcement officers in Greene County Sunday.

Johnny Ray Braswell, 24, has been charged with murder and is being held in the Pender County Department of Corrections, according to Greene County Sheriff Early Whaley.

A second suspect, John McNeil, 23, is being held in the New Hanover County Department of Corrections, Whaley said. Both men escaped from the New Hanover Department of Corrections Aug. 1.

The body of a young male was discovered in a wooded area in Greene County Sunday morning by officers. Identification is being withheld pending confirmation of the cause of death.

Whaley said the body, which was badly decomposed, is undergoing an autopsy by the regional medical examiner in Greenville.

A phone call, Whaley said, provided officers "information that gave us leads in the case."

Bush: 'I've Got To Take The Heat'

By MERRILL HARTSON
Associated Press Writer

Dan Quayle reasserted today that he broke no rules nor did anything unfair to get into the Indiana National Guard during the Vietnam War.

Appearing on two television talk shows, Quayle also said he did not think it was hypocritical for him to strongly back the war effort and opt to join the Guard at the same time.

And he said he is convinced the furor will die down and can't wait for that to happen.

"Right now, I just sit there and answer questions," Quayle said on ABC's "Good Morning America."

Asked about "the question of hypocrisy," Quayle said:

"I don't think it's hypocritical. There were a lot of people that were in the National Guard in my National Guard unit that supported the goals of fighting communism in Vietnam, but were in the National Guard."

On NBC's "Today" show, Quayle said, "I don't even know what my (draft lottery) number was" at the time he joined the Guard.

During that time, in 1969, young men who had drawn high lottery draft numbers were not likely to be drafted.

George Bush, the Republican presidential nominee who selected Quayle to run with him, says he is confident Quayle will surmount the flap over his National Guard duty, but that in the meantime, "I've got to take the heat."

Bush said Sunday that he remains upbeat about his election prospects despite questions about the extent to which family influence helped Quayle avoid being drafted and got him into law school even though he didn't meet admission requirements.

Democratic nominee Michael Dukakis is responding to the controversy by noting that the qualifications of his own vice presidential choice, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, have not come under attack. Otherwise, Dukakis has kept to his own cam-

Schools' Program Prepares Them For LIFE

By CHERIE EVANS
Reflector Staff Writer

Preparing them for LIFE — living, independence and future employment — is the goal of a program being piloted this year for developmentally disabled students in the Pitt County schools, its coordinator said.

"That's what we're planning for, making them more self-sufficient," Jean Averette said. She is the exceptional children's coordinator for the school system.

Project LIFE was recommended by a vocational educational task force created during the 1986-87 school year to focus on the need for an educational-vocational program for the most severely developmentally disabled students in the Pitt County schools.

"Handicapped children were having a difficult time gaining access to vocational training," Don McLane, program director, said. "The skills, developmentally, required bringing something these kids didn't have."

The task force focused on realistic graduation requirements of these students and the scheduling of their classes.

A provision of the state Basic Education Program says handicapped learners have completed their educational experience when they meet the requirements of graduation or by attaining the goals set forth in an Individual Education Program, or both.

About 100 middle-grade students are participating in the program this year and can be categorized into three levels, McLane said.

Students in the first level may be expected to meet graduation requirements and can be mainstreamed into some classes as appropriate modifications are made. For example, in an automotive class, the students may work on a module to learn the same skills that would be taught on a motor.

Students in level two would require (See PROGRAM, Page A-10)

First Day 'Smooth'

East Carolina University students moved smoothly into class routine on the first day of instruction for fall semester according to Gil Moore, ECU registrar.

And for many students, today's class was the first in a brand-new classroom building. The onset of the fall semester marks the first full academic year ECU's yet-named classroom building, located in the heart of campus, will be in operation.

The $10.5 million structure, which was placed into use for part of the spring 1988 semester, is the single largest classroom building on campus. It has 65 classrooms plus a number of office spaces.

The building houses the ECU School of Business, the departments of English and foreign languages, and cooperative education. In addition, the BB&T Center for Leadership Development and the Office of International Studies and Scholarships are located in the building.

At mid-morning, Moore reported classes were proceeding "extremely smoothly." "There have been no indications of problems, no confusion," he said.

Official registration figures for fall are not yet available, but Moore said "enrollment is expected to be right around the projected 15,300 figure."

Three Arrested On Drug Charges

Greenville police arrested three people Sunday morning on a variety of charges, including conspiracy to traffic and trafficking in cocaine.

Officers assigned to the department's special investigations section said Trechia L. Suggs, 16, Jackie D. Suggs, 32, and Dennis R. Suggs, also 32, of 1917B Kennedy Circle, were all charged with conspiracy to traffic and trafficking in cocaine in connection with an 8:32 a.m. search of their apartment.

Both Jackie Suggs and Dennis Suggs were also charged with maintaining a dwelling for the storage of cocaine.

In addition, investigators said, Dennis Suggs was charged with the malicious throwing of acid and damage to city property after sulfuric acid damaged a police department uniform after officers entered the Kennedy Circle home.

Universities Losing Salary Game

RALEIGH (AP) — Competition among universities for highly regarded professors is nothing new, but it is attracting national attention as schools become more unabashed in their recruiting tactics, educators say.

For example, more and more schools are offering double salaries. Others promise jobs for husbands or wives.

Some lure their big fish with perks such as additional research assistants or help in finding a new home.

The reasons for such aggressive approaches are many.

Gillian Cell, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, attributed the keener competition for professors to a drop in the number of students pursuing doctoral degrees, a trend she said started in the early 1970s when college teaching jobs were scarce.

Others attribute the scholar-chase to the fact that many of the nation's professors are nearing retirement age. Future-minded schools are hiring now so as not to be caught short in the coming decade.

Perhaps most compelling, professors with national reputations are seen as magnets for top graduate students and lucrative research grants. Both boost a school's reputation and, at least in theory, produce higher-quality classroom teaching.

Yet since 1980, faculty salaries at UNC-CH and N.C. State University have fallen behind those offered by major research campuses in many other states, research shows.

In 1980, the American Association of University Professors' annual salary study ranked UNC-CH in the top tier of major research universities.

Since then, it has fallen to the association's second tier.

During the 1986-87 school year, the average salary for a full professor was $52,800 at NCSU and $53,200 at UNC-CH — roughly $4,000 and $6,000 less than the average professor's pay at Duke and the University of Virginia.

This summer, North Carolina legislators approved an average pay raise for UNC system faculty of 4.5 percent, of which 2.5 percent is to be awarded according to merit.

That's not enough, say educators.

"How much merit can you give when you have 2.5 percent?" asked Lawrence Gilbert, chairman of the biology department at UNC-CH. "At a private institution they can always find the money."

State's Hospices Accepting Their First Insured Patients

DURHAM (AP) — The 70 hospices for the terminally ill in North Carolina are starting to accept their first patients who are covered by Medicaid and the state employee health insurance plan.

The non-profit and public hospices have relied largely on Medicare reimbursements or private and public money to provide services to people who are terminally ill.

Medicaid, the federal insurance program for the poor, and the state's health plan for employees recently began offering coverage for hospice care to terminally ill patients, the Durham Morning Herald reported Sunday.

State employees who have the base plan can receive hospice care, and the three health maintenance organizations with state contracts are required to provide similar coverage to employees.

Few insurance companies provide hospice coverage as an option, but many have begun to examine the service more closely as a cost-effective measure, said Carol Minton, executive director of Triangle Hospice in Durham.

Blue Cross and Blue Shield of North Carolina in Durham does not provide hospice care coverage, except to some self-insured groups including the state health plan, said Kathryn Higgins, company spokesman. The company is in the process of acquiring contracts with hospices to offer the benefit to large employee groups, she said.

Charge Made

Delbert Junior Mooring, 30, of 1020-2 Legion St. was arrested on breaking, entering and larceny charges in connection with one of two thefts reported to Greenville police early this morning.

Officer P.W. Worthington said Mooring was charged in connection with a break-in at Harris Super Market on N. Greene Street where four cartons of cigarettes, six beers, a package of cookies and seven packs of batteries were taken.

In an unrelated incident Officer W.E. Davis said a quantity of change was taken from three coin operated machines at the Wash House on 10th Street in a break-in reported at 1:21 a.m.

Weekend Thefts

Investigators said 10 thefts, — among them $1,000 in cash from a car, a lawn mower and a 1986 Nissan Maxima — were reported to Greenville police over the weekend.

Officer J.A. Bartlett said a purse was snatched from the hands of a woman in a parking lot at Carolina East Mall in an incident reported at 9:17 p.m. Saturday. Officer R.C. Stroud said $1,024 worth of fishing equipment was taken from a carport at 1115 E. Wright Road in an incident reported at 10:56 p.m.

Officer Stroud said $300 in cash was taken from 1008 Chestnut St. in an incident reported at 12:11 a.m. Sunday. Officer W.T. McCarter said a purse was taken from a car parked at Harvey's on Memorial Drive in an incident reported at 3:12 a.m.

Officer S.D. Hilliard said a 1986 model Nissan Maxima was taken from Collindale Court in an incident reported at 3:31 a.m. Officer A.J. Dennison said a license was taken from a car parked at 1506 Mill St. in an incident reported at 9 a.m.

Officer M.A. Jordan said a John Deere riding mower was taken from 3309 S. Evans St. in an incident reported at 6:20 p.m. and a bicycle taken from 47 Village Green Apartments in an incident reported at 9:27 p.m. Officer J.A. Bartlett said $1,000 in cash was taken from a car parked at 102 University Inn on Memorial Drive in an incident reported at 6:26 p.m.

Officer J.W. Isenhour said two television monitor-receivers valued at $750 each were taken from 3219 2A Landmark St. in a break-in reported at 8:06 p.m.

Gardner Here

Jim Gardner, the Republican candidate for lieutenant governor, was scheduled to hold a press conference at Pitt-Greenville Airport at 12 noon today to highlight a part of his plan for combating drug abuse among the youth of North Carolina.

The Greenville stop was one of three press conferences scheduled today by Gardner. The first was at 10 a.m. at State Republican Headquarters in Raleigh, while the final conference was scheduled from 2:30 p.m. in Wilmington.

Farm Scene

By MITCH SMITH
 Pitt Extension Chairman

Tobacco farmers who are counting the days until school opening and presently have empty barn space may be considering the use of yellowing agents on this year's tobacco crop.

Yellowing agents were introduced in the late 70s as management tools used to assist growers in better scheduling of barn facilities. These chemicals stimulate ethylene production in the leaf which accelerates the breakdown of chlorophyll.

Test results conducted on the use of these products have not always yielded consistent results.

In many situations, unseen factors may effect the successful use of these products. Use in the field usually results in decreased yield due to the early removal of the crop.

Tests conducted on these products being used in the barn have found to decrease the time needed to cure during the yellowing stage but does not usually result in a monetary savings to the producer.

A large portion of the curing cost is still required during the leaf and stem drying stage.

Determining the proper time to use a yellowing agent is the most difficult decision facing a tobacco producer. Application of these products to mature tobacco may cause leaves to exhibit a greater degree of orange color than normal.

Immature leaves which have received this treatment will not yellow properly and may result in an extra application. Application costs average about $25 per acre. It should be noted that these chemicals are yellowing agents and do nothing to mature tobacco.

Growers who are considering the use of these products should first obtain a test kit from available sources and spray a few plants to determine the effect on the crop.

After a few days, one can determine if these chemicals will yellow existing leaves. Plants of different varieties should also be sprayed to observe the effect on different maturities. Yellowing agents are simply management tools and correct usage will determine the successfulness of these products.

Eight Die In Weekend Wrecks

By The Associated Press

Traffic accidents killed eight people on North Carolina roads this weekend, including three people from South Carolina whose car skidded on a rain-slick road, the state Highway Patrol reported.

Jean Harps Grant, 36; Evangeline Grant, 10; and Oscar Davis, 65, all of Mullins, S.C., were in a car that skidded into the path of another on U.S. 20 near Asheboro in Randolph County on Saturday night, the patrol said.

The car carrying the Grants and Davis was struck broadside, and all three occupants were killed, troopers said. Four other people were injured.

In another accident, Jean Powell Plurin of Camp Lejeune was killed about 7 p.m. Friday when his motorcycle struck a car at a stop sign on a rural road just south of Jacksonville, troopers said.

At 2:20 p.m. Saturday, Richard Dean Wiles, 25, of Mocksville, was killed when a car crossed the center line on a rural road in Davie County and struck his motorcycle, the patrol said.

About 7 p.m. Saturday, Brent Jeffrey Howell, 20, of Pikeville, died when his vehicle skidded on a rural road in Wayne County east of Pikeville and struck an oncoming vehicle, troopers said. Three people were injured.

At 7:46 p.m. Saturday, a car traveling on N.C. 186 in Northampton County struck a puddle of water near Seaboard and overturned, throwing 10-year-old Farrah Tamara Fitchett of Queens, N.Y., from the car and killing her, troopers said. Five other people were injured.

About 11:20 p.m. Saturday, Leslie Clark Morgan of Macesfield died when the car in which she was a passenger ran off the road, struck a ditch and overturned. The accident happened on N.C. 124 west of her hometown. Two other people were injured, troopers said.

The accidents bring to 919 the number of people killed on North Carolina roads this year, compared with 966 at the same time last year, the patrol said.

Health-Care Costs Said 'Out Of Control' Again

RALEIGH (AP) — Hospital administrators and health care analysts are upset about accelerated health care costs that have caught many by surprise because of a slowdown in costs during the past few years.

"Health care costs are out of control again," Jack Owen, executive vice president of the American Hospital Association, told members of the N.C. Hospital Association recently at their summer meeting.

Many working people will feel the increase most directly in the health insurance premiums they pay each month.

Blue Cross and Blue Shield of North Carolina has estimated that its premium increases for 1988 will average as much as 40 percent by the end of the year. In some parts of the country, Blue Cross premium increases have soared as high as 70 percent.

Blue Cross and Blue Shield of North Carolina says it is increasing its premiums to cover a big jump in the amount it has paid out in claims. From November 1987 to March 1988, the average amount paid in claims per subscriber jumped $117 — equivalent to an annual increase of 19 percent.

"The lid's about to fly off again," said Daniel Butler, senior vice president for health affairs for Blue Cross and Blue Shield of North Carolina. "It's beginning to look like the worst (medical) inflation cycle we've ever had."

"It's happening all over the country," Butler said. "It's not just North Carolina."

Hospitals say they are raising patient charges to make up for insufficient payments they get from the federal government for Medicare patients.

The Medicare program, which pays medical bills for people over 65, established a cost-control system called prospective payment in 1983. Under the system, hospitals are paid a flat fee for performing medical services according to the patient's diagnostic and treatment category.

"Prospective payment, when it came in, promised it would keep up with cost-of-living increases," said William Erwin of the N.C. Hospital Association. "The federal government hasn't kept its part of the bargain."

Government studies report, however, that some hospitals have made profits from the new Medicare payment system. The Health Care Financing Administration reported in January that hospitals earned an average profit of 9.6 percent on their Medicare patients in the year 1986-1987.

"Hospitals have argued that the government report used an artificial accounting system to compute profits that were not real. There are a few hospitals that are making money on Medicare, and many more hospitals that are losing money," Erwin said.

Hospitals also say they are getting inadequate payments from Medicaid, the government program for poor people, and are losing money from bad debt and charity care. The hospitals are raising their charges to other patients to make up for this.

A shortage of nurses and other hospital workers has driven salaries much higher, some increasing as much as 25 percent.

"That also puts pressure on (hospital) charges to catch up this year," Erwin said.

Hospitals and health insurers may have kept their charges low for a few years to fend off competition from health maintenance organizations, but competition has now slowed. HMOs or health maintenance organizations, provide medical services in return for a prepaid monthly premium.

"The health insurance premiums were restrained because ... of the rivalry," said I. Glenn Wilson, professor of social and administrative medicine at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. "They (HMOs) were running around offering high benefits and low premiums."

But some HMOs found they were paying out more in claims than they were collecting in premiums, Wilson said. Maxicare, a nationwide HMO, has lost $225 million over the last year, he said. Other HMOs are increasing their premiums to stay financially sound.

"Now traditional insurance plans are raising premiums to catch up with costs," Wilson said.

Dr. Robert Bilbro, an internist and president of a health maintenance organization called Carolina Physicians' Health Plan, said the HMO has had to increase its premiums by about 20 percent to 25 percent this year.

Hospitals have learned to perform some medical services on an outpatient basis to save money, only to find that the outpatient services began to generate more money too.

"We've got this illusion that when we transferred services from the hospital to the outpatient, we lowered costs," said Wilson. "We may have just transferred the cost."

Experts from many fields — doctors, health insurers and policy analysts — agree the biggest reason costs have gone up is that people in the United States expect more, and better, health care.

CHILDREN AND CONTACT SPORTS

If your children play any contact sport, be sure to have a mouth protector made for them. A custom or semicustom fitted one is best. Insist that it be worn at all times during play. A chipped front tooth is a lifetime damage, or a tooth can be killed or knocked out.

By the way, if a "permanent" tooth is completely knocked out of the jaw accidentally, the tooth can be cleaned, sterilized, reimplanted, and secured into place. It then stands a fair chance of recovery or retention. Tell your young sportsman that

Official Questions Practice Of Granting Right-Of-Way Work On State's Roads

RALEIGH (AP) — The practice of granting highway right of way work is being questioned by at least one Martin administration official, who believes the system of political patronage may be costing taxpayers money.

James Trotter, Gov. Jim Martin's general counsel, said he would like to see such legal work awarded based on competitive bids.

But right of way work has been part of the grease that has oiled the state's political machines for years. By controlling the right of way work, governors and attorneys general have been able to reward supporters in hundreds of communities across the state.

Some 300 politically connected lawyers, mainly supporters of Democratic Attorney General Lacy Thornburg or Martin, a Republican, have received $836,787 in legal fees for highway right of way work over the past three years, published reports say.

Among those lawyers were 20 state legislators.

The recipients included such prominent Democrats, or their law firms, as Sen. Tony Rand, D-Cumberland, the Democratic nominee for lieutenant governor; Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville; former state Rep. Paul Pulley of Durham and former Attorney General Rufus Edmisten, The News and Observer of Raleigh reported Sunday.

Notable Republicans, or their firms, who have received legal fees for such work include Robert Bradshaw Jr., chairman of Martin's reelection committee; Robert Hunter Jr., chairman of the state Board of Elections; Senate Minority Leader Laurence Cobb, R-Mecklenburg; and William Graham, state banking commissioner and state chairman of Vice President George Bush's presidential campaign.

Thornburg said he sees nothing wrong with having his supporters handle the right of way.

"It is partisanship in the sense that if I — or anyone else in my political office — think my friends can do the job, I'm not going to go out and hire my enemies to do it," he said.

"Under no circumstances has the public suffered from that," Thornburg said. "Obviously we have competent Democrats who practice law just as we have competent Republicans."

Concerned that Republican lawyers were not sharing in the political spoils, Trotter met with Thornburg and told him governors have traditionally been able to control half the right of way fees. Thornburg agreed to split the patronage starting in 1986.

Trotter said he thinks the system of awarding right of way work is a hold-over from an earlier political age and should be modernized.

In a letter to the N.C. Bar Association earlier this year, Trotter suggested a new system dividing the state into regions, possibly the 14 state highway divisions, and allowing lawyers specializing in real estate work to bid for the work in each division.

On His Own

Bush Begins Run For White House

Becoming the presidential nominee for either of the major political parties of the United States is a long and tortuous path which usually involves years of preparation and months of heavy campaigning.

All that is only to obtain the privilege of running against the candidate chosen by the opposition party. Thus still more months of campaigning are ahead.

It could be said for George Bush, though, that he has been in training for the Republican Party presidential nomination, which is now his, all of his adult life.

Bush's roots stretch from Massachusetts, where he was born with Ivy League credentials, to Texas where he obtained wealth and then went to Congress. Along the way there was an education at Yale University and combat duty in World War II.

There were many moves for his family as he devoted his life to public service: two ambassadorships, CIA director, GOP chairman and for the past eight years the nation's vice president.

With all that exposure there is still rightfully a school of thought that the public does not truly know him.

His detractors call him a wimp, a term belied by his combat service in World War II. When he was chosen as Ronald Reagan's vice presidential candidate, he was seen by the Republican right as a liberal.

In seeking the respect of the Republican right he has sought to offset that liberal (by their standards) image.

Probably the best assessment of George Bush's views on issues is that he is unpredictable. He keeps his counsel until he is ready to make a decision, and likely that is the way he would perform as president. That would not be so surprising since most president make decisions differently once they are faced with the restraints of the office. In addition, he has shown he can be extremely combative, especially when challenged.

At any rate George Bush is now center stage in Republican and national affairs. He is the party's nominee for president and in January it will be either he or Michael Dukakis who takes the oath of office.

Probably more so than any recent presidential race this one will be won between now and November. There are large numbers of voters who remain to be convinced as to who will make the better president. If George Bush is to be president he clearly must do it now on his own.

Not Over

Don't Forget, The Heat Can Kill

"Hot enough for you?" was the stock question between friends last week as 100 degree-plus temperatures created the worst conditions of the summer.

The state got a reprieve today as temperatures edged only into the 80s and humidity eased down, relieving the stickiness of the weekend.

The heat may have been less severe today but in this area it may not be over for the year.

As with cold weather, most of us stay in air conditioning and manage to survive the heat. It is not universally true, however, that everyone can make it through extreme heat.

Dr. Stan Harris, regional forensic pathologist at Pitt County Memorial Hospital said there was one death here last week due to the heat and six deaths in a 25-county area. That fortunately was a low figure considering the temperatures, but it tells us that extreme heat is of considerable danger to some people.

And even one heat-related death is too many. The community should be aware of the fact that heat places those most vulnerable under extreme stress. High temperatures cause dehydration, heat stroke and ultimately, death. But that is a fate that, with care and planning, can be avoided.

The aged, those with diabetes and those taking major tranquilizers are among those who need checking on from time-to-time, particularly if they live alone.

Some disabled people keep windows and doors locked even in non-air conditioned homes because they fear intruders. When heat builds up inside the house it can become unbearable and a person who is already weak might not be able to get help.

We have long been conscious that those who are elderly or disabled can freeze in unheated homes. There can be an equal danger in a closed home during a heat wave such as we saw last week.

Check on your friends and loved ones during such times. You could save a life.

There is a nice little lesson in history playing itself out here in our little county right now. It may be that on the surface, it pales in significance when compared to more international movements, but it is important to look at it for what it is and try to see how it may pertain to the greater whole.

It is the lesson of how a focused and organized minority can dictate to the majority too busy to react. The group, with petition in hand accounting for 8 per cent of the population, is moving with apparent success to dictate to the 92 percent majority what is fit for that majority to see.

Now the majority says, "Ah, I wasn't going to see it anyway, what with movies costing so much and my VCR handy. It isn't important."

Well, fueled by it's success, the minority will be back. Next time maybe they'll hit the library, or the book store. Why not — success breeds movement. A little censorship here, a little book banning there. A small group of insecure reactionaries take heart, maybe hold a rally, gather a little more support, still the majority passes them off as radical fringe until one day liberty is eroded in concrete, unavoidable ways and things turn ugly.

Now this is overly brief and overly simplified, but that is just how tenuous freedom can be. When 8 percent of the people can move the liberties of the other 92 per cent, only trouble can come of it. You take away one ounce of a man's freedom, you won't hesitate to take more in the name of your own brand of right. No matter how microscopic it might be, when we forget or ignore history — we do indeed repeat it.

This is in reference to cafeteria workers all across Pitt County who work very hard in the Pitt County Schools to serve a healthy lunch to students which is rich in nutrients, tastes good and is high quality.

Our hours have been cut each year. This year tops the cake, a big 10 percent across Pitt County.

Of course this year there is a 4.5 percent raise. Big deal! Again the person on the bottom stays there.

You ask why? They say Pitt County Schools have to go by a budget. The budget is spent so in order to stay within a budget cafeteria workers' hours are cut once again.

They are expected to do the same amount of work, expected to keep a sanitation grade of "A" and are expected to be proud to work in a Pitt County school cafeteria.

My question is what about Dr. West and the rest of them at the county office. Did they get cut?

We as cafeteria personnel of Pitt County have rights just as everyone who is sitting at the county office making these cuts.

The article, "Homeowner Balks at Plane Noise," in the Aug. 16 issue, provokes some questions and comments.

Mr. Charles Gooding claims that the noise is unbearable, starting about 8 a.m. and continuing until about 11 p.m. How could he have failed to notice this noise before he purchased the property?

The article says that the FAA would, indeed, "even buy homes and property from residents," but Mr. Turcotte says, "current noise data would not show a need." Rather than continue a campaign blaming local government, why not go after FAA involvement and see if FAA "facts" support the residents or the air port manager. Or, if FAA will not come in, independent engineers could study the situation.

In any case, it is unproductive and morally wrong to ignore whatever scientific facts are available and simply try to put the "blame" on any one person or agency, as if anyone had "planned" to hurt black citizens in the area around the airport.

All of us like convenient thoroughfares and convenient air service. A little less shouting and blaming and a lot more study and research of the facts could help move us farther toward the kind of harmony that our local governments try to promote.

— George Will —

No Intellectual Feast Here

NEW ORLEANS — In 1904 the New York Sun, setting a standard for concision, endorsed Teddy Roosevelt for President in a five-word editorial: "Theodore! with all thy faults..." In a mood much like that, Republicans convened here to make George Bush, at long last, something more than a derivative person, someone whose stature no longer derives from holding offices dispensed by others.

Bush arrived here determined to shed his image as someone forever in someone else's shadow, someone deficient in dignity and accident-prone. For two days he did that.

Most people find Ronald Reagan's presence a tonic. Bush found Reagan's absence invigorating. He seemed to swell in the vacuum created by Reagan's retreat to the ranch. Bush the tenor became Bush the baritone as he gained gravity from the presence at his side of the bubbly Dan Quayle. Then the bubble burst.

It is frequently said that conventions no longer matter now that they are merely ratifying bodies rather than deliberative, deciding bodies. In fact, conventions are more important now than they were in the days when they occasionally decided things. They are important precisely because of the attribute so often disparaged. It is their scripted nature, their role as the instrument of the winner's will. They deserve close scrutiny because they express, in a small space and short span, the nominee's strategic thinking and tactical deftness. Bush's convention was superbly choreographed to communicate his themes until...

By the afternoon of Thursday, a dramatic day in American political history, Bush was locked in a cruel, lose-lose dilemma. Quayle was not being as forthcoming as he will have to be about his past, and a journalistic feeding frenzy was devouring Bush's convention. Bush could not drop his running mate without communicating panic and chaos to the country. But by going forward with Quayle he remained, at least for a while, as he has too long been — with his fate tethered to someone else.

This Quayle episode, with undertones of unjustifiable privilege, brings in by the back door the Democrats' favorite issue: "fairness." It has been largely expelled from today's politics by two factors: the budget deficit that restricts programs of distributive justice, and skepticism about such programs in the aftermath of the Great Society.

Furthermore, the Quayle episode undermines (the Republicans richly deserve this consequence) the dreary Republican reliance on an ersatz patriotism issue. Speaker after speaker here harped on the fact that Michael Dukakis vetoed, for defensible constitutional reasons, a law requiring recitation in schools of the pledge of allegiance to the flag.

Bush's "generational" appeal, using Quayle, may gall Michael Dukakis, who thinks he has cornered the market on parallels with 1960. Then, as now, two cautious presidential candidates were trying to sell themselves as agents of change in a complacent nation. Kennedy made much of his membership in a generation that was (as he said in his Inaugural address) "born in this century." Bush, who has a son older than Quayle, introduced Quayle as someone born after the second world war. Time flies.

What does not fly is the notion that membership in a generation — not a demanding achievement — is a politically potent fact.

The 78 million Americans born between 1946 and 1964 comprise the largest generation in American history. They are approximately 60 percent of the eligible electorate this year. Between the end of the war and 1984, young voters were the most reliably Democratic voting group, other than blacks.

Suddenly, in 1984, voters under 30 became the Democrats' biggest problem. Among those voters, Mondale ran 18 points below his national average. But the fact that in 1984 the oldest man ever elected President did as well with under-30 voters as the youngest man ever elected (Kennedy) should convince us that a candidate's age need not be a decisive factor.

The real parallel with 1960 is indicated by the flatness of Dukakis' labored attempt to look appalled by what he calls the "Swiss cheese economy." By that phrase he means to say that there are holes in the pattern of prosperity. But his metaphor concedes the pattern. As Pat Caddell has noted, 1960 was one of the few elections in which the White House changed from one party to another without the outcome being determined by economic conditions.

Remember the prominence in 1960 of such "issues" as getting America "moving," improving American "prestige," closing the "missile gap" and protecting Quemoy and Matsu islands? Today Dukakis is droning on about his "competence" and "good jobs at good wages." Bush is praising the pledge of allegiance to the flag and promising to electrocute drug "kingpins" (and, perhaps, people who do not sufficiently love the pledge). And attention is riveted on the search for a "smoking telephone call" two decades ago to the Indiana National Guard. Nineteen eighty-eight may make 1960 seem like an intellectual feast.

Some Served; Some Resisted; Some Used Connections

NEW ORLEANS — Among the printable Vietnam war protest slogans was the chant, "Hell no, we won't go." Millions of young Americans shouted it. They believed that the war was wrong and took a stand against it.

During that era, the nation's most divisive since the Civil War, 8,744,000 Americans served on active duty in the armed forces, voluntarily or by answering a draft summons, and 58,021 died in Vietnam. Their stand was not so much the rightness or wrongness of the war. It was simply serving, willingly or otherwise.

Sen. Dan Quayle's problem, the one that threatens George Bush's presidential prospects and is not likely to pass like some summer gulf storm quickly dissipating over the bayous, is that he might represent a third Vietnam-era group: those who avoided active-duty military service through privilege and powerful connections.

The two problems here are simple and stark. First, Vietnam was a war that took its greatest toll on ordinary Americans, especially the poor and blacks. Second is the question of Quayle's credibility should he become president and commander-in-chief with power to dispatch military personnel into combat.

He, after all, is a candidate who presents himself as a defender of the Vietnam war, a hawk on defense who boasts, as he did at a news conference here, that "I know perhaps as much about national security as anybody, with few exceptions," a strong anticommunist and supporter of military aid to the Contras.

Yet his record raises questions that suggest his strongly expressed views are hypocritical.

Quayle's fumbling attempts to explain how and why he chose to avoid active service by getting into the Indiana National Guard have compounded his problems and transformed the Republican National Convention from a celebration for Bush into another political ordeal for a presidential nominee. At his news conference Wednesday with Bush after being selected and during interviews that night with the television networks, Quayle made remarks that continued to create problems for the ticket.

He concedes that "phone calls were made" on behalf of his admission to the Indiana Guard when, as a college senior, he faced being drafted. He claims not to remember details or who made the calls, although he acknowledges that he let it be known that he was "very interested" in becoming a guard member. That was not then an easy prospect or path normally open to the less well-connected.

If it's demonstrated that Quayle escaped active duty through the influence of his powerful and wealthy family, probably the most influential in Indiana, further controversy inevitably will result, and he and Bush will be dogged by daily questions.

Beyond these points, the Quayle episode represents much more than a political dilemma for Republicans. It forces attention on the great, defining issue that divided a generation of Americans and left a legacy of bitterness among those who opposed the war, those who fought it and those who actively managed to avoid it.

Only in recent years, as passions subsided and after the thoughtful and moving explorations of such books as "Dispatches," a grim account of war, and such films as "The Big Chill," with its theme of dying young, has the Vietnam generation begun to come to terms with that experience. The degree to which welcome common ground has been found can be seen at any hour of day or night at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington. The crowds gathering solemnly before the names of the dead carved into that slab of gray marble sunk into the earth comprise all segments of the Vietnam generation. By their daily presence, they offer mute testimony that the wounds are healing.

The Quayle situation threatens to reopen them. Politically, it almost certainly will ignite fresh debate about professed superpatriots in the Reagan era who talk tough but never heard a shot fired in anger, never served on active duty and in many cases never wore the uniform. It also brings to the forefront questions about class and wealth, influence and privilege, "haves" and "have-nots" and winners and losers of those same Reagan years. These are underlying themes of this presidential election, and the Quayle controversy underscores them.

Something else emerges. In selecting a 41-year-old as his running mate, Bush made much of the notion of generational politics.

Quayle was the fresh, new face that supposedly would appeal to the so-called "baby boomers" assuming leadership positions in every area of American life, not least in politics.

That may prove so but not because the baby boomers think as one. The Vietnam war was the shaping political event for that generation, which led a majority of that group to oppose that war even as many accepted a call to service. The Quayle episode reminds us that the personal agony that so many faced and that so divided American society won't go away.

A Respectable Debate Over Third-World Aid

NEW ORLEANS — There is a painful gap in the Reagan foreign policy legacy of militant anticommunism. The element missing is a commitment to social justice, and its absence casts a shadow over the gains recorded and promised in the Reagan years.

In his presidency Ronald Reagan fairly demonstrated that anticommunism is not inconsistent with a search for peace and nuclear sanity, that it can lower the level of violence in the world and is not bound to lead the country into wasting wars and that it can produce not only valuable strategic gains but also real improvements in the lives and peace of mind of individual people.

But anticommunism remains an incomplete agenda. Strategically and morally it is necessary, since militant communism represents the principal threat to the interests and values of the United States in our time. But there must be more to a great nation's foreign policy. Much of mankind goes to sleep hungry and poor and miserable every night. In many places conditions and prospects have worsened in the past decade. This is wrong.

The cause of social justice remains something of a cripple of the Cold War. As an internationalist ideology it has yet to recover from leftist political abuse of some of those who embraced it too innocently. But many people, liberals if you will and surely some good Republicans, too, harbor a continuing concern for the cause and are ready to endorse some political vehicle that comes along committed to it.

Precisely here enter the Republicans with their nomination on the social justice and development ticket: the free market. They have taken advantage of the undoubted full-blown crisis of world socialism and the West's faltering confidence in state welfarism to argue that free enterprise is the engine to pull any society smart enough to hook up to it.

Republicans take a pride bobbing somewhere between the splendid and the insufferable in the universality and portability of our economic model. The Reagan gloss makes of free enterprise not merely a doctrine of privilege but a gospel of worldwide development.

But there are a few hitches, starting with the mundane question of whether it is the magic of the market or the American government's massive borrowing that deserves the main credit for the advances of the American economy in the Reagan years. The Chinese and Soviet experiments are in an early stage. Leaving aside the matter of how the United States will work its way out from under its mountain of debt, most countries in distress don't have anything like the access to credit that has fueled at least some part of the American boom.

It requires a certain leap of faith, moreover, to look at the people who have been left behind in the American advance and to conclude that although the free market soaks up poverty imperfectly in this country, it will soak up poverty more efficiently, or efficiently enough to settle the political volcanoes anyway, in foreign lands.

No doubt there is good economic value in Republican lessons of austerity and discipline, but these lessons are being preached to societies that lack our plush cushions of resources and subsidies, not to mention our well-woven social safety net.

It is possible that also if Republicans can end up doing more good than committed Democrats. But it would be easier to believe in the international relevance of the American example if it came accompanied by an attitude more, well, compassionate toward the less advantaged, starting with the less advantaged in America.

There is a respectable debate going on over whether traditional foreign aid is the best measure of Western interest in the Third World, but too many conservatives have a tendency to use sophisticated arguments, and sometimes not so sophisticated arguments, to disguise real narrowness. It is cruel, for instance, for Reagan and George Bush to cut off crucial American support to the family-planning programs of other governments' choice.

At home the Republicans tend to divide between those who would broaden the party, make it more inclusive, and those who would draw a line between conservatives and liberals and force the difference between them. The party has a similar choice between a more inclusive outlook and a more ideological one as it takes up the formidable next-phase task of moving beyond anticommunism to a deeper concern for the quality of international life.

Veep: An Increasingly Important Title

If the test of the vice presidential nominating process is that it produce candidates who, should the need arise, would be competent presidents, then this week's controversy over the fitness of Indiana Sen. Dan Quayle, the Republican nominee for vice president, suggests a bright future for the American vice presidency.

Not, to be sure, because of Quayle, whose inexperience, lack of legislative distinction, and partial veracity about his service in the National Guard raise serious questions about his own qualifications to hold the nation's highest office. But rather because these alleged weaknesses are matters of controversy that some believe might reduce George Bush's chances of being elected president.

What a contrast to the first century of our history, when political ticket-balancing of the most craven sort was not only the prevailing practice, but passed without comment.

Vice presidents of the 19th century constitute a rogues gallery of the highest order. Because the office was so weak and unappealing, an unusual number of the politicians who could be enticed to run for it were old and in bad health. Six died in office, all of natural causes. Some were embroiled in financial, others in personal, scandal. Several did not bother to live in Washington — one actually left for home to run a tavern; another took the oath of office in Cuba and died there shortly thereafter.

The price for a poor vice presidential selection process — admittedly small at a time when Washington was home to the least important level of government in the nation — was paid whenever a 19th-century vice president succeeded to the presidency, which four of them did. In the most recent round of historians' rankings, Andrew Johnson was rated a failure, John Tyler and Millard Fillmore as below average, and Chester A. Arthur as average. None of them was nominated, much less elected, to a term as president in his own right.

In comparison, the vice presidency has come a long way in this century. Since 1948, the vice presidential candidate, as often as not, has been the more experienced member of the ticket in high government office, including Walter F. Mondale in 1976, Bush in 1980 and Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, the Democratic nominee, in 1988.

Why is vice presidential selection in the 20th century so much better than it was in the 19th century? The answer lies less in the vice presidency (although its resources and informal duties have grown somewhat) than in the growing prominence and importance of the presidency.

As Americans have increasingly come to regard the presidency as the central institution of the political system, they have also become increasingly concerned that the vice president who stands the proverbial "heartbeat away" from that office be competent to step in literally at a moment's notice. This has been especially so since the explosion of the atomic bomb in 1945, which plunged the world into a situation so perilous that inept leadership could bring about the virtually instantaneous destruction of the world.

As voters have come more and more to judge vice presidential candidates by their fitness to be president, most presidential candidates have learned that when it comes to filling the second slot on the ticket, they can do well politically by doing good governmentally. Or, as Hamilton Jordan put it in a 1976 memo to his candidate, Jimmy Carter, "the best politics is to select a person who is accurately perceived by the American people as being qualified and able to serve as president if that should become necessary."

By the same token, the presidential candidate who pays insufficient attention to competence in choosing a running mate is likely to suffer for it in the campaign. A recent study indicates that vice presidential candidates are most likely to make the front page for bad things such as scandal or blunders. To select a running mate whose competence is less than certain is to invite such coverage. It also hands the other party a potent issue. A Democratic commercial in 1968 displayed the words "(Spiro T.) Agnew for Vice President?" over a sound track of rising laughter. The sport ended with a voice intoning, "This would be funny if it weren't so serious."

Differences among the qualifications of the vice presidential candidates now are likely to be made manifest in the televised vice presidential debate that has become a regular feature of the fall campaign. Ultimately, the price of neglecting competence when choosing a running mate is votes: Surveys from various elections indicate that a poor vice presidential candidate can harm a ticket's chances on Election Day.

For all of the improvement in the vice presidential selection process, there still is no guarantee that competence will be served by every nomination. For one thing, politicians, like most everyone else, sometimes fail to see their own interests clearly. Nixon was too clever by half, for example, when, acting on the theory that a relatively unknown running mate would have few enemies and cost the ticket few votes, he chose Agnew, the Maryland governor. An exhausted Sen. George S. McGovern, the Democratic presidential nominee in 1972, picked Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton in a setting of haste and confusion because of his ties to Catholics and organized labor, then dropped him from the ticket when it was revealed that Eagleton had undergone treatment for mental illness.

Even a reasonably careful background search on a prospective vice presidential nominee might not reveal everything. After questions were raised by the press about whether Quayle had pulled strings to get into the National Guard during the Vietnam War, Bush aides realized that they still had more checking to do. The controversy revived painful memories for Democrats, who faced a similar problem four years ago when information was uncovered about the family finances of their vice presidential nominee, Rep. Geraldine R. Ferraro.

Preaching Children Returning To School

MARION (AP) — Dozens of angry parents were expected to confront the street-preaching Strode children and their parents on the first day of school today, school officials said.

McDowell County Schools Superintendent David Ricketts said because of the Strode family and the children's preaching about "whoremongers" and "fornicators," the first day of school is something he and other school officials "sincerely dread."

Ricketts and Eastfield Elementary School Assistant Principal Shirley Ramsey say they're concerned about the Strode children's effect on other children at the school, especially kindergarten students, who on their first day of school will be confronted by yelling children and parents.

They're urging parents to stay calm.

"We're hoping the citizens of the county will be understanding and realize we are doing everything we can as fast as we can," Ricketts said.

In the McDowell News last week, an editorial counseled parents to ignore the Strodes. Beside letters to the editor about the Strodes from Kentucky and Montana was an editorial headlined: "Keep Peace. First School Day Deserves Dignity."

The last line of the editorial: "The nuts in the yard should be left to the squirrels."

But the Strode children will be at it again today when classes resume, Robin Strode said Sunday.

"They're not going to be yelling and screaming like other kids who yell and scream on the way into school," Mrs. Strode said. "My kids are going to yell and scream the scripture back and forth. They're going to preach from the school's gate ... but when they get to the school doors, they're going to stop and go inside."

Mrs. Strode said a friend will escort her children the school's gate to the front door. On the way, the three children, Duffey, 11, Matthew, 6, and Pepper, 7, will alternate shouting Bible verses — the style of street-preaching they learned from their father.

"We hope that the Strodes will not repeat what they've done and force some sort of issue," Ricketts said. "We cannot go through another year like we did last year."

NEW OWNER — Robert Rubino stands in front of his new home in Tega Cay, S.C. It used to be the home of PTL founders Jim and Tammy Bakker. The New Jersey businessman bought the home from PTL in June for $685,000 and plans extensive renovations. He says his taste is not the same as that of the lavish Bakkers. (AP Laserphoto)

New Owner Planning Renovations To Bakker's Former Tega Cay Home

TEGA CAY, S.C. (AP) — Robert Rubino says he is completely redecorating the former home of Jim and Tammy Bakker, changing it from an elegant, if sometimes gaudy, showplace to an open and airy California-style home.

And Rubino says he hopes one day, the infamy over the former parsonage will die down.

"It's just a house and it happens to be a little famous," Rubino said of the 10,266-square-foot house he bought on Lake Wylie for $685,000.

He said a lot of curious people still stroll down his driveway to look at the house that once belonged to the PTL founder.

The gold-plated swan bathroom fixtures and the green carpet that covers most of the house will be removed, and a 19-by-22-foot closet will be changed into a bedroom.

The house he bought in June has four bedrooms, five bathrooms, a 36-foot-long swimming pool, a boat dock, a marble foyer, an exercise room, a music room and a kitchen full of appliances.

Some of the furniture and appliances were included in the sale of the house. Rubino said that he will keep most of the appliances, but the Bakkers' furniture is just not his taste.

"This house just eats furniture," Rubino said in reference to its sheer size. He has brought some of his own furnishings and moved others around, but can't seem to fill the rooms.

The dining room now has three dining tables. Rubino will get rid of them and replace them with one larger table, which may have to be custom-made.

The decorators will soon be knocking out walls, tearing up carpet and paneling and creating the relaxed atmosphere Rubino wants.

"I looked at the house and it was just what I wanted," he said. "I am going to make it into a very upbeat California look."

The living room is huge, but dark. Rubino hopes to brighten it by removing some of the brick on one wall and perhaps even doing away with some or all of the paneling.

As part of a tour of the house, Rubino notes the secret room built in the basement. Hidden behind a bookcase, the narrow room is crudely built with shelves and a metal door leading to the outside.

How They Voted

Roll Call Report
WASHINGTON — Here's how area members of Congress were recorded on major roll call votes in the days before the ongoing summer recess.

HOUSE
TIP O'NEILL LIBRARY By a vote of 158 for and 239 against, the House rejected a bill to provide a $12.2 million taxpayer contribution toward construction of a Boston College library dedicated to former House Speaker Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill, a Massachusetts Democrat.

The bill (HR 3661) sought to forgive the remainder of a federal library construction loan received by the college in 1981, before it announced it would name the library after O'Neill and accept his papers.

Supporter Silvio Conte, R-Mass., said, "This a worthy bill. It is not pork."

Opponent Thomas Petri, R-Wis., said the bill is "pure pork, and it's the wrong way to establish a memorial."

Members voting yes wanted to provide Boston College with $12.2 million for construction of the Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr. Library.

Voting yes: Walter Jones, D-1, Charles Rose, D-7. Voting no: Tim Valentine, D-2, Martin Lancaster, D-3, David Price, D-4, Stephen Neal, D-5, Howard Coble, R-6, W.G. Hefner, D-8, Alex McMillan, R-9, Cass Ballenger, R-10, James Clarke, D-11. Not voting: None.

TO SANCTION PRETORIA By a vote of 244 for and 132 against, the House passed and sent to the Senate a bill to tighten U.S. economic sanctions against South Africa in response to that country's apartheid.

The legislation (HR 1580) goes far beyond existing sanctions, which penalize South Africa mainly by banning new U.S. investment and excluding most of its major exports from U.S. markets.

The new measure requires the withdrawal of virtually all private American investments and loans from South Africa, prohibits imports except for publications and certain strategic minerals, orders retaliation against allies that seek to replace American trade discontinued by the sanctions and bans most U.S. exports to South Africa but permits farm exports to continue.

Supporter Sam Gibbons, D-Fla., said "this bill comes as close to economic warfare as you can put two nations."

Opponent Dan Burton, R-Ind., said economic woes caused by the bill could trigger "a violent, bloody revolution that the blacks will not be able to win because they do not have the military power to do so."

Members voting yes favored tougher economic sanctions on South Africa.

Voting yes: Walter Jones, Valentine, Lancaster, Price, Neal, Rose, Hefner, Clarke. Voting no: Coble, McMillan, Ballenger. Not voting: None.

GOP PLAN The House rejected, 155 for and 236 against, a Republican amendment to soften the South Africa sanctions bill (above).

Under the amendment, a president could have waived the bill's economic penalties against Pretoria if West Germany, Italy, France, Britain and Japan fail to impose similar sanctions. Those countries are South Africa's other major economic partners.

Author William Broomfield, R-Mich., said his amendment would correct the bill's "hasty, ill-considered and unilateral approach to the problems in southern Africa."

Opponent Stephen Solarez, D-N.Y., complained that the amendment would give America's allies a veto over U.S. policy toward South Africa.

Members voting yes supported the amendment.

Voting yes: Lancaster, Coble, McMillan, Ballenger. Voting no: Walter Jones, Valentine, Price, Neal, Rose, Hefner, Clarke. Not voting: None.

SENATE

MILITARY DEPENDENTS ABROAD By a vote of 36 for and 59 against, the Senate refused to freeze the number of military dependents overseas at the current level. America has 413,000 dependents and 450,000 troops abroad.

The cap had been urged as part of a proposal limiting U.S. troop strength in Europe and elsewhere in order to force allies to spend more on their own defense.

That "burden sharing" proposal — stripped of its reference to dependents — was approved later by the Senate when it passed the fiscal 1989 defense appropriations bill (HR 4781). The $282.6 billion spending bill was sent to conference with the House.

Supporter Bennett Johnston, D-La., said "let us stop this trend which has increased dependents by 80,000 since...1974."

Opponent Phil Gramm, R-Tex., said limiting dependents abroad would undermine the quality of volunteers.

Senators voting yes favored capping the number of military dependents abroad.

Voting yes: Terry Sanford, Dem. Voting no: Jesse Helms, Rep.

Going In Style

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Formal wear and limousine renters said it was the kind of business usually reserved for a ballet or symphony, but rarely for performances by a popular artist.

But when Frank Sinatra came to the new Charlotte Coliseum on Friday for a concert, people wanted to dress up and go in style.

"We were really surprised when people came in and said they were going to Frank Sinatra in tuxedos," said Dawn Phifer of Mitchell's Formal Wear in Charlotte. "We asked if there was an invitation or something that said black tie, and most of them said 'no,' they just wanted to dress up."

"With Sinatra being who he is and this being the first concert in the Coliseum," said a worker at VIP Formal Wear, "people are making a big deal about it."

The concert goes snapped up all of Charlotte's approximately 60 limosines.

Controversy Brews

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A controversy is brewing over the AIDS education that will be offered for the first time for Charlotte-Mecklenburg's 32,000 students in grades seven through 12 this year.

School board member Sharon Bynum almost two weeks ago questioned the proposed use of the FOCUS teen-age drama group, especially since county commissioners voted in June to stop funding Planned Parenthood's educational component, which includes FOCUS.

"I'm opposed to their whole philosophy," Bynum said of Planned Parenthood.

Bynum said she and other citizens opposed to the use of FOCUS will question Superintendent Peter Relic about the AIDS curriculum at Tuesday night's board meeting.

She complained that parents should have been involved in developing the curriculum and parents and board members should be able to screen the presentations before they're made to students.

Pat Morrow, a FOCUS director, said her group has been asked to portray, through improvisational drama, the emotional and psychological repercussions of AIDS. It will not deal with prevention of AIDS or medical aspects of AIDS, she said.

Roof Leaking

WASHINGTON, N.C. (AP) — A leaking roof at a Washington junior high school that has left parts of a ceiling with exposed asbestos may force officials to spend up to $200,000 to fix a building they plan to raze in two years.

The asbestos was found Friday in the seventh-grade building at P.S. Jones Junior High during a state-mandated inspection.

The school is scheduled to open Aug. 29. The school board is expected to decide Tuesday whether to delay the opening.

Grant Awarded

DOBSON (AP) — Faced with the rising cost of opening new high-tech landfills, five North Carolina counties have received a federal grant to study ways to better manage and prolong the life of existing landfills.

The money is part of a grant of almost $60,000 from the Appalachian Regional Commission to the five counties in the Northwest Piedmont Council of Governments, said Joe Matthews, the council's executive director.

He said Winston-Salem-Forsyth County will receive $37,585; Surry, $9,151; Stokes, $5,065; Yadkin, $4,348; and Davie, $3,848.

Margaret Besette, the council's planning director, said part of the money also will be used for a regional study of solid-waste management. But most of the money will be spent by the counties on studies dealing with their own landfills.

New regulations have pushed up the cost of developing new sanitary landfills. High-tech, double-lined landfills with special systems to collect contaminated liquid cost $50,000 to $150,000 an acre.

Chavez Ends Hunger Strike

DELANO, Calif. (AP) — An emaciated Cesar Chavez broke bread to end his 36-day fast at an outdoor Mass but urged thousands of cheering supporters to continue his battle against California table grape growers.

The 61-year-old union leader appeared gaunt and drawn Sunday as he was assisted to the Mass with his arms draped around the necks of his sons Anthony and Paul.

"Today, I pass on the East for Life to hundreds of concerned men and women throughout North America and the world who have offered to share the suffering," said Chavez in a statement read by his eldest son, Fernando.

"The fast will go on in hundreds of distant places and it will multiply among thousands and then millions of caring people until every poisoned grape is off the supermarket shelves."

After the Mass, Chavez, who lost 33½ pounds or 19 percent of his 174 pounds during the water-only fast, was taken from the union compound in this community 150 miles north of Los Angeles to an undisclosed location.

He was to be put on a liquid diet, including light broth and non-citrus juices, that will last up to 10 days, said one of his physicians, Dr. Marion Moses.

It was not known if he would suffer long-term complications from the fast, which began July 17 and was his longest, but there were no plans to place him in a hospital, said Moses.

Chavez, a vegetarian, began the fast in good health and remained mentally sharp throughout, she said.

He endured stomach cramps, dehydration, vomiting, dizziness and other ailments in his effort to bring attention to the United Farm Workers' 4-year-old boycott of California table grapes. The union said workers and consumers face a greater risk of cancer from the five pesticides used on California table grapes.

But grape growers and grocers have said Chavez and the union have unduly frightened consumers about the safety of table grapes in an effort to fight a political battle.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson, who sought this year's Democratic presidential nomination, began a three-day fast as Chavez ended his. Other politicians and celebrities, including actors Martin Sheen and Robert Blake, have promised to fast for two or three days as well.

"I'm here in a great tradition because Bobby Kennedy would have been here, Martin Luther King would have been here. They can kill the dreamers but they can't kill the dream," Jackson said.

When the grape boycott began in 1984, Chavez accused the state Agricultural Labor Relations Board, which governs farm labor elections, of becoming a tool of Republican Gov. George Deukmejian.

Chavez raised the pesticide issue in 1986, and called for Captan, Dinoseb, Phosdrin, methyl bromide and Parathion to be taken off the market.

About 6,000 supporters attended the Roman Catholic Communion service under a giant white tent, an event reminiscent of the end of Chavez's 25-day fast in 1968 to protest escalating violence in the fields and gain recognition of the fledgling union.

Seven Die In Blaze Of Suspicious Origin At A New York Club

NEW YORK (AP) — A suspicious fire at a crowded social club killed seven and injured more than 30 as panicked patrons clawed against the walls and doors trying to flee, leaving those who escaped "one step from death."

Between 60 and 100 people were in the Bronx club known as El Hoyo (The Hole) when the blaze ignited shortly after noon Sunday, said John Mulligan, a fire department spokesman.

Five bodies were found inside the gutted club and two people died later, making the blaze the city's deadliest this year, fire officials said.

Screaming patrons in the basement club fought for the lone exit, up a stairway where the fire apparently started, authorities said. Some broke through a rear wall and were pulled to safety by firefighters.

Some who escaped joined bystanders in rushing back in to try to save others, getting in the way of firefighters and even grabbing their tools, firefighters said.

"It was sheer panic," said firefighter Dennis Fennell. "It looked like people tried to claw out all of the walls."

"We had to break a door to get to the first floor. ... Then we had to break in the gate and some people helped from outside to open the gate," said Luis Done, one of those who escaped.

"I was one step from death. I feel very lucky."

"All of a sudden I saw the flames come from the bar area. There was a lot of flames. It was very fast. All of a sudden, whoosh," said another patron, Francisco Delarosa, 32.

Investigators were testing material from the basement for the presence of flammable liquid, according to Mulligan, who said the fire was suspicious because it spread rapidly.

Up to 150 firefighters battled nearly three hours to bring the fire under control.

"There was so much fire blowing out into the street that water didn't have any effect on it in the initial stages," said fire Capt. James Gallagher.

The club was in a low-ceiling, 50-by-75-foot basement of a row of stores and divided into smaller rooms.

The bodies of four men and one woman were found toward the front of the club, Gallagher said.

House Panel: Influence Carried Weight With VA

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House panel says the Veterans Administration made numerous errors as it hurriedly processed disability claims but had time to give special treatment to applicants who "had the ear" of influential lawmakers.

A House Government Operations Committee report, released Sunday, described two separate systems for handling claims.

Applicants without "pull" had their cases rushed to judgment by error-prone managers trying to win pay bonuses for meeting production quotas, the report said.

But the panel said the Bureau of Veterans Appeals — the court of last resort for claimants whose benefits were denied — "maintained a list of congressmen who should be brought to the BVA chairman's attention if they inquire about an appeal."

At a hearing last February by the panel's subcommittee on human resources, a former appeals board member, Daniel J.B. Bierman, was asked whether there was preferential treatment when a lawmaker on the list intervened.

Bierman replied, "It is difficult for me to say, but I suspect that to be the case, sir. Otherwise, there would be no reason for it (the list)."

"The BVA ... showed favoritism to claimants who had the ear of certain influential members of Congress," the committee concluded. The VA said in a statement it "has not been provided with a copy of the committee's report and is obviously disadvantaged by the fact that it was released to the media before it came to us. We intend to review it thoroughly when it is received."

VA officials refused to reply to the panel's specific allegations.

Addressing the appeals board's quota system, the report said, "The Board of Veterans Appeals ... was so caught up in an unreasonable production quota standard, that some members were deciding cases at the rate of one every eight minutes."

The committee noted that earlier this year, the VA ended production-based bonuses and preferential treatment after both practices were publicized in subcommittee hearings and challenged in a lawsuit filed by Vietnam Veterans of America.

The report suggested that Congress end a 55-year-old prohibition and allow veterans who are denied benefits to appeal their cases in federal court. In 1987, veterans won less than 13 percent of the time under the now-abolished quota system at the VA appeals board.

Olympic Funds Favored

NEW YORK (AP) — A broad majority of Americans favor federal financing for Olympic training, something the government and the U.S. Olympic Committee long have resisted, a Media General-Associated Press poll has found.

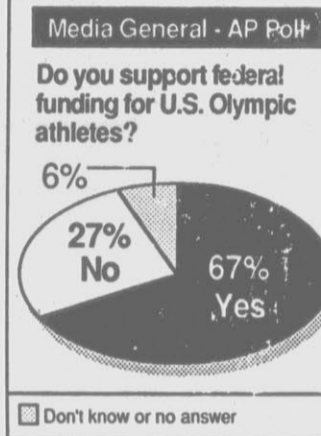

Sixty-seven percent of the 1,223 adults polled supported federal money for U.S. Olympic athletes, while just 27 percent were opposed. The team receives no money from the government.

With the Summer Games to begin in Seoul, South Korea, in three weeks, the national survey also found sharply divided opinion on the participation of professional athletes in some sports. A plurality, four in 10, wanted no professionals, but nearly as many favored allowing professionals in all Olympic sports.

Most respondents viewed the Games as a contest among nations as well as among athletes. Six in 10 said it was of some importance or great importance to them that the U.S. team wins more medals than any other nation's team.

But rivalries between nations notwithstanding, and despite political boycotts of the Games in recent years, 76 percent said they believed the Games encourage international cooperation, the stated goal of the Olympics.

Among other findings: —Six in 10 said they believed judged events, such as gymnastics, are scored fairly; 26 percent believed they are scored unfairly; the rest weren't sure. Of those who said judging is unfair, 90 percent said it was influenced by political considerations.

—By 85 percent to 11 percent, respondents favored continuing to hold the Games at a different city every four years, rather than at a fixed location.

—Ninety-two percent said they plan to watch some of the events on television.

The U.S. Olympic Committee raises most of its money by allowing businesses to display the Olympic logo on their products for a fee. But the poll found respondents split about evenly on whether the Olympics had become too commercialized, 50-46.

The committee's budget is $149 million for the current four-year cycle, far less than the $320 million suggested by a 1978 study commission. Some critics have suggested greater money could help develop a U.S. team that could fare better against state-supported athletes, particularly those of the Soviet Union and its allies such as East Germany.

Mob Trial Concluding After Nearly Two Years

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — The trial of 20 alleged mob associates is nearing an end after 22 months during which a prosecutor twice became a father, one defense attorney was elected mayor and another died.

The trial, believed to be the longest federal criminal trial in U.S. history and expected to go to the jury this week, has heard from 89 witnesses and has produced a 5½-foot-thick file containing 40,000 pages of transcripts and 850 exhibits.

During the U.S. District Court trial, one defendant attended court for a time in a hospital bed until his moaning interfered with the proceedings. One passed out from a too-full bladder.

One prosecutor became a father twice. A defense attorney who had been commuting from Florida died of cancer.

"It's a nightmare," said defense attorney Miles Feinstein.

The case is United States of America vs. Anthony Accetturo, et al.

The 20 reputed members and associates of the Luchese organized crime family are charged with racketeering and, variously, loan sharking, illegal gambling, credit card fraud and drug dealing.

"No one imagined when we took this case in November 1986 that we'd still be here," said Michael Critchley, a defense lawyer whose closing arguments lasted five days.

Critchley, who leads the defense, represents Michael Taccetta, charged as the group's New Jersey boss. Accetturo is the reputed Luchese family captain who allegedly acted as the ultimate authority from his home in Hollywood, Fla.

The group allegedly operated out of the Hole-in-the-Wall luncheonette in Newark, where pictures of Al Capone, Meyer Lansky and Charles "Lucky" Luciano decorated the walls.

Witnesses testified about kisses of respect for the boss, "tribute" payments to mob superiors, "sit-downs," where disputes were resolved, and visits to hangouts by manicurists to do the nails of defendants.

The Administrative Office of the Courts in Washington, D.C., says the trial is the longest federal criminal trial ever, according to courtroom Deputy Clerk Lisa Horton.

One of the longest trials in history, a state lawsuit in Belleville, Ill., against a chemical company, ended in 1987 after 3½ years.

Jurors here have been paid more than $175,000. Court-appointed attorneys have received an estimated $3 million.

PLANTER STAINS

Got a call from a distressed homeowner the other day. Seems she'd watered her lovely potted plant which was placed in a decorative basket. Couple of days later she discovered the stain from the basket was now on her new nylon carpet—her $28.00 per yard nylon carpet!

Now, I realize I'm supposed to be an expert. I realize I'm supposed to have all the answers; but there are some things which go beyond any expert's "expertise". So it is with most planter stains!

My profound advice to this distraught homeowner? "Don't let it happen in the first place." Impressive, huh? Remedy once it happens? Carpet repair by a qualified technician.

How can this frustrating situation be avoided? First, let's look at the cause. When water is in contact with any stained material, such as wood (especially redwood) or clay planters, eventually that stain is going to transfer to the carpet (got to be something in Murphy's Law covering this phenomena). Then, if that stain transfers to fibers which are easily contact dyed (nylon, wool)...Voila! Permanent discoloration.

An Ounce Of Prevention
"Well," you say, "I'll just use a protector under my plants which can't transfer color to the carpet." Great start, but that isn't the whole solution. You see, if you don't also exercise care when watering, and somehow water gets under your colorfast planter holder (Murphy's Law again?), then bacterial action with the water will cause dye loss in the carpet.

With a little extra care, your plants and carpet can live together for years without one being sacrificed for the other.

Baton-Swinging Police Charge Czech Protesters

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — Baton-swinging police fired tear gas and charged demonstrators after 10,000 people took to the streets on the 20th anniversary of the Soviet-led invasion that crushed the "Prague Spring."

The size of Sunday's spontaneous protest, the biggest against the invasion since 1969, took foreigners and residents by surprise. Witnesses saw at least eight people detained around the city, including Jan Urban, spokesman for the human rights group Charter 77.

The marchers chanted demands for freedom, the withdrawal of Soviet troops and support for Alexander Dubcek, the ex-Communist Party leader who pioneered the reforms of 1968.

In Moscow, troops charged hundreds of demonstrators and pushed them out of a central park Sunday when the protesters began chanting "Prague, Prague, Prague!" in memory of the invasion.

No injuries were reported among about 500 demonstrators and onlookers, or among the 500 national guard soldiers and police.

Several dozen people, some shouting "Fascists!" at police, were taken away. Two activists reported separately that 30 of the protesters were punched and kicked at a nearby militia station after the demonstration.

More than 100 of the protesters were detained, said activist Alexander Podrabinek. Four people were sentenced to 15 days in jail and 40 others were fined, he said.

About 100 demonstrators held a second rally later Sunday along Moscow's Arbat shopping mall, but police chased them away and arrested an unspecified number, said Alexander Chuyev, a member of the Democratic Union, an unofficial group that wants Soviet troops out of Eastern Europe.

The protests marked Aug. 20-21, 1968, when Soviet-led troops led an invasion of this nation of 15.5 million people.

In the spring of 1968, the Czech reformists under Dubcek declared their intent to create a democratic socialist system that would guarantee free speech and assembly, introduce secret ballot elections and economic reforms.

Sunday's police response suggested Czech authorities will not tolerate renewed protests against the invasion, which Soviet leaders continue to insist was "justified."

The anniversary march through

Prague began after several hundred people milled around in Wenceslas Square, the site in 1968 and 1969 of bloody protests against the invasion.

Peace activists collected hundreds of signatures Sunday on a petition demanding a Soviet troop withdrawal, free elections, abolition of censorship and the release of political prisoners.

Police kept careful watch on the crowd and, in the early evening, protesters began to chant "Freedom, Freedom!" and about 10,000 marched toward the Old Town Square, a traditional rallying point.

About 8,000 began heading toward the Vltava River, apparently hoping to cross to Hradcany Castle, the official residence of President Gustav Husak, who became party leader in 1969 and was himself replaced in December by Milos Jakes.

Dubcek, 67, was expelled from the party in 1970 and given a minor forestry job in Bratislava. Now retired, he said last week that he planned to spend the invasion anniversary quietly at his country cottage.

After police blocked three bridges across the river, the march dwindled to about 1,000 people. When the smaller crowd tried to march back to the square, helmeted police moved in with batons, tear gas, and dogs. They beat at least two people and dragged others away.

The state-run news agency CTK issued a brief report on the protests, saying "disturbing actions" were mounted and that "the considerate and decisive action of the police prevented riots."

Earlier Sunday on Wenceslas Square, 200 people walked behind two representatives of the Charter 77 movement, Eva Kanturkova and Tomas Hradilek, who tried to lay flowers by the statue of King Wenceslas.

Uniformed police pushed back the two activists and others who tried to lay flowers in memory of countrymen killed in street violence after the invasion.

Three Charter 77 spokesmen were detained Saturday as they walked to the Soviet embassy to deliver a statement appealing to the Kremlin to tell the truth about the 1968 invasion. They were later reported released, but were not seen at Sunday's demonstrations.

Witnesses also said one person was detained when eight people tried to lay flowers at Czechoslovak state radio, also the scene of fierce fighting in 1968.

Koreans Are Deadlocked After Third Set Of Talks

PANMUNJOM, Korea (AP) — South and North Korea were deadlocked today after a third round of talks on a non-aggression agreement and the Olympics, with no word on whether negotiations will resume.

During their two-hour meeting the two sides again refused to make any major changes in their positions and blamed each other for blocking progress.

The communist north is demanding to be a co-host of the Olympic Games, while the south insists the north drop its demand and take part in the Games in Seoul, which begin next month.

Park Joon-kyu, the South Korean chief delegate, indicated there may be no further talks until after the Olympics. He said that after the talks he asked for a private meeting with Chon Kum Chol, head of the North Korean delegation, to try to resolve the differences.

"If there is no hope we will postpone the next meeting until after the Olympics," he told reporters before the North Koreans failed to respond to the south's request for the meeting.

North Korea's delegation withdrew to consider Park's proposal but did not respond by the set deadline and the South Korean delegation returned to Seoul.

The five-member delegations of lawmakers from each side met in the North Korean building at the Panmunjom truce site straddling the Demilitarized Zone dividing the two sides.

Earlier meetings were held Saturday and Friday. Chon accused the south of blocking progress.

"South Korea's attitude is anti-unification. Their direction and way of thinking is mistaken," he told reporters.

South Korea called for urgent talks to be held in the North Korean capital of Pyongyang from Aug. 29 to focus solely on trying to resolve the Olympic issue while there was still time. The Olympics begin Sept. 17 and Sept. 2 is the entry deadline for athletes.

The two Koreas, technically still at war, are arch-enemies with hundreds of thousands of troops poised along the 150-mile border in a state of constant tension.

North Korea is demanding to co-host the Olympics, and wants immediate talks involving the full legislatures of both sides to draw up a non-aggression declaration.

South Korea, which has said co-hosting of the Games is impossible, wants talks involving select parliamentary delegations. The south also wants to discuss a larger range of issues.

Thatcher Rejected Calls To Jail IRA Guerrillas

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher rejected calls by Protestant leaders in Northern Ireland for guerrilla suspects to be interned without trial following the IRA killing of eight British soldiers, news reports said today.

The Times of London quoted unnamed government sources as saying she ruled out demands for 60 to 80 known Irish Republican Army guerrillas to be interned.

The British Broadcasting Corp. said Secretary of State for Northern Ireland Tom King, the Cabinet member responsible for the British province, is convinced reintroduction of internment would be counterproductive.

The mainly Roman Catholic IRA is fighting to end British rule in Northern Ireland. It wants to unite the predominantly Protestant province with the overwhelmingly Catholic Republic of Ireland under socialist rule.

Legislator Ken Maginnis of Northern Ireland's Protestant Official Unionist Party said after a meeting with Mrs. Thatcher Saturday: "If the courts fail to bring these people (the guerrillas) to justice, then surely you must consider internment."

Internment without trial was introduced in Northern Ireland on Aug. 9, 1971 by the government of Conservative Prime Minister Edward Heath. Following worldwide criticism, it was abandoned by the government of Labor Prime Minister Harold Wilson in December 1975.

King met with security chiefs in Northern Ireland today. A major security review has been ordered following the IRA bomb attack Friday night on a bus carrying members of the First Battalion of the Light Infantry.

The bomb, hidden in a car, blasted the unmarked military bus carrying the soldiers from Belfast Airport, where they arrived from furlough in mainland Britain, to their barracks at Omagh 50 miles west of Belfast. Seven soldiers, aged 18 to 21, died in the attack on the cross-country road nine miles from Omagh. An eighth died Saturday of his injuries. A total of 27 were injured.

The attack was the IRA's deadliest since 1982 and brought to 26 the number of military deaths in a summer blitz on Northern Ireland, mainland Britain and continental Europe.

Heath said in a BBC radio interview Sunday that his government quickly realized after the introduction of internment in 1971 that the policy had been a major mistake.

He said: "The people who were interned really bore very little resemblance to those who were out to cause damage. The way in which they were arrested ... caused reaction ... throughout the United States and the rest of the world, which was very damaging to us."

"Thirdly, it gave the IRA a means of recruiting from amongst people who were interned and of training them which proved impossible to stop," he said.

Critics of internment said many of the hundreds of people rounded up were innocent, that many of the internees were brutally treated and that the policy discriminated against Roman Catholics.

In 1978, in a case brought by 12 former internees subjected to in-depth interrogation, the European Court of Human Rights ruled that Britain had been guilty of inhuman and degrading treatment.

Report Says Afgan Government Backs Terrorism

WASHINGTON (AP) — Afghanistan's Soviet-backed government was responsible for repeated attacks on civilian targets in Pakistan in 1987 and carried out well over half of all incidents of state-sponsored terrorism worldwide in that year, a State Department report said today.

The report, titled "Patterns of Global Terrorism: 1987," was completed before the incident last Wednesday in which a Pakistani C-130 crashed, claiming the lives of President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq, U.S. Ambassador Arnold L. Raphel, Brig. Gen. Herbert M. Wassom and 27 others.

Pakistani officials believe terrorists were responsible and a U.S. official said Afghan agents have to be "among the suspects" because of the stepped up campaign Afghan authorities are alleged to be carrying out against Pakistan.

The conflict between the two countries stems from Pakistani support for Afghan rebels based in Pakistan who are fighting the Kabul government and Pakistan's role as a haven for millions of Afghan refugees.

State Department spokesman Charles Redman said Sunday that any comments on the cause of the crash would be speculative because investigators, including U.S. experts flown to Pakistan, are just beginning their work.

Redman spoke at Andrews Air Force, where the remains of Raphel and Wassom were flown and a ceremony was held that included remarks by Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci.

Acting Pakistani President Ghulam Ishaq Khan said Saturday his government suspects last Wednesday crash was the result of sabotage.

"Judging from the circumstances of the tragedy ... enemies of Pakistan are actively posing a threat to the security of our country," Ishaq Khan said.

Paul Kriesburg, a senior associate at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, said it would be a mistake to assume automatically that Afghan agents were responsible for the crash because Zia had many other enemies. They included some from within the Pakistani military and others who were alienated by his authoritarian rule.

The State Department report said Afghan agents carried out 127 of the 189 incidents last year attributable to state-sponsored terrorism.

Iran was second with 44 and Libya followed with seven, the report said. All told, there were 832 international terrorist incidents last year. "When the Pakistani numbers are subtracted, the number of incidents in the rest of the world declined by almost 10 per cent from 1986 statistics," it said.

The report said the Afghan campaign had been largely limited to the northwest part of Pakistan where rebel forces are based but spread to major cities last year.

Florida Man Has Museum Of Funeral Memorabilia

By A.J. DICKERSON
Associated Press Writer
HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — People touring Fred Hunter's historical museum can't get death off their minds.
Old-time embalming tools, an award-winning 1917 Ford Model-T hearse that once doubled as an ambulance, intricately woven wreaths of human hair and a 1,500-pound glass casket are some of the memorabilia in Florida's first funeral museum, one of just a few in the United States.

"If we can teach a little to a student, and help families understand the history, that death is natural ... this helps them understand there's a heritage to this process. The whole funeral process is a part of growing, of letting go," said Hunter, president of National Selected Morticians.

A third-generation funeral director, antique enthusiast Hunter inherited some displays from his father and grandfather. After buying a large collection in 1986, there no longer was enough space to show them off at his business. The museum opened last year next to Hunter's funeral home here.

The 1,200 visitors have included bereaved family or friends, out-of-town tourists and students from local high schools or community colleges.

"A lot of times, people sitting here will see the museum and we'll open it for them. It answers a lot of questions," said Steve Pleiscia, grief counselor at Hunter's.

Learning funeral history is a good way to brace for the future, said Roberta Halporn, director of the Brooklyn-based Center for Thanatology Research and Education, a non-profit group that studies dying, death and grieving.

"This is a death-denying culture. So when it happens, the pain is almost double. People without experience tend to want to eliminate everything — no funeral. But each part of the ritual has significance," she said.

"When these rituals are established and practiced, it starts the bereavement process going in a healthy way," said Halporn, whose group displays gravestone rubbings and photographs of tombstones.

For Hunter, the museum reflects American culture.

"The way funerals changed mirrors the way families changed," he said.

Around 1900, funerals were still family reunions. Morticians visited homes to prepare the body, often laid out in parlors, and built made-to-measure coffins.

"On the day of the funeral, he would come again with his coffin and put the body in it and go to the church," Hunter said. But as people moved to cities, wakes moved out of houses and funeral homes were born.

Symbols of grief and tools of the trade have also changed.

For example, old-fashioned coffins were tapered on the ends, and their inner metal liners were soldered. Caskets are not tapered and now have self-sealing rubber gaskets. And as embalming became the norm, ice-cooled caskets with glass windows over the body's face became obsolete.

During the Victorian Era, wreaths were fashioned from tiny braids of hair, generally that of the deceased, and a family might spin a huge multi-hued wreath over several generations. Or the deceased's hair might be made into brooches given away as funeral souvenirs.

Another change is that hearses no longer double as ambulances. That ended with regulations that ambulances be painted white, hardly appropriate for a hearse, said Hunter, stroking his gleaming black Model-T, which won first prize — as an ambulance — at the Antique Automotive Club of America's 1982 show.

Displayed nearby is a restored 1932 hearse built for the first funeral home in the United States, Kirk & Nice Funeral Home of Philadelphia.

Not all industry innovations caught on, like the solid-glass casket touted as everlasting.

"You take the 1,500 pounds and add another 175 pounds and we put that in a Model-T hearse and you've just flattened the tires," said Hunter. "It's like one giant Coke bottle."

Besides Halporn's collection, other funeral museums around the nation include a small display owned by T.J. Beggs and Sons Funeral Home of Madison, near Tallahassee, and a traveling museum run by the Illinois Funeral Director's Association of Springfield.

Hunter believes his is the most varied. His museum here also houses a mini-library of 1900-era anatomy books for student morticians, advertisements, yellowing bills and complete issues of trade journal "The Casket," dating back to 1892.

A 1903 ad for the Frigid Fluid Co. claims its embalming products helped a widow whose husband would never pose for a photograph. But the widow got the last word when her embalmed spouse was posed with her for a picture, the ad said.

MUSEUM ATTRACTIONS — Fred Hunter, owner and operator of a funeral museum in Florida, poses among some of the items he displays. Included are a 1917 Ford Model-T hearse which doubled as an ambulance, a body removal basket and a child's casket circa 1900. (AP Laserphoto)

Miss Vaughan Is Wed

DURHAM — The Durham Memorial Baptist Church was the scene of the Saturday 4 p.m. wedding of Donna Kim Vaughan of Durham and Joseph Russell Davenport of Chapel Hill. The Rev. Marty Childers conducted the double-ring ceremony.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Cecil G. Vaughan of Hillsborough and Mr. and Mrs. James E. Davenport of Greenville.

Pianist Shirley Shelburn and vocalist Suzy Donovan presented a program of wedding music.

Melissa Childers of Turberville, Va., was honor attendant for her sister. Bridesmaids were Joyce Davenport of Greenville, sister-in-law of the bride, and Dell Frye of Durham.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers were Lathan Mills of Greenville and David Priestley of Boston.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a tea-length apricot dress of ivory lace over taffeta. The dress was fashioned with a square neckline, three-quarter-length sleeves and a full skirt. She carried a bouquet of peach gerbers, sonia roses and ivy.

Each of the attendants wore an apricot tea-length dress. Following the ceremony, a reception was held at the church.

After a wedding trip to Nassau, Bahamas, the couple will live in Chapel Hill.

The bride is employed by Morgan Dodge-Jeep-Eagle in Durham; the bridegroom by the University of North Carolina. She attended Southern High School in Durham and he attended J.H. Rose High School in Greenville.

Man of Half-Truths Is Poor Marriage Choice

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I've been dating a man for nearly a year. We are extremely attracted to each other, enjoy each other's company and generally have a lot of fun. He's a great guy in most respects and has professed his love for me. We have even talked about marriage. The problem: There are discrepancies between his actions and his words. Some examples: He told me that he was dating only me, and I found out that he had been dating others. His excuse: "I was dating a lot of girls when we met, and I had to let them down easily."

He told me he was going to work out at his health club one evening. I later learned that he and his old girlfriend went to her mother's house for dinner.

He told me he was going to a football game with "some guys." I found out he took his old girlfriend. (He keeps telling me that the relationship with her is strictly platonic, but I'm not so sure.)

He can't understand why I don't trust him. He accuses me of being insanely jealous and in need of counseling.

I'm 30 years old and have had two long relationships — one for two years, and the other for six years. Both men wanted marriage, but I wasn't ready — or in love enough.

I love this man I'm dating now enough to marry him, but I'm having problems with his "platonic" friend and his propensity for half-truths. I would appreciate your advice. — WHAT TO DO?

DEAR WHAT: You already know what to do: you are just looking for someone to tell you to quit kidding yourself — and do it! Since I am a woman of very few words, the words are: Say goodbye. The only situation that is more miserable than dating a person who can't be trusted is being married to one.

DEAR ABBY: I need your advice about something — sales clerks. I can't stand them! They aggravate me beyond belief. Sometimes I even leave the store if they really get to me. I try not to ask for their help because when I do, they stick to me like glue until I leave the store. If I go to try something on, they will be waiting for me to tell me how good I look.

Abby, when I try something on, I like to look at it alone and think about buying it, not feel like I'm pressured for time to get out of the change room. If sales clerks want to sell something, they have to give the customer space and privacy.

In the meantime, do you know of a way to tell these salespeople that their help is appreciated, but you would like to be left alone? Sign me — TOO MUCH ATTENTION

DEAR TOO MUCH: You have answered your own question. What's wrong with saying, "I appreciate your assistance. Now I'd like to be left alone so I can make a decision?"

And while we're on the subject, a first-rate salesperson will approach a prospective customer with: "Please take your time, look as long as you wish, and if you need any assistance, please let me know. My name is 'Maggie.'"

CONFIDENTIAL TO TALKS TOO MUCH IN OMAHA: Commit to memory this wise advice, credited to Sen. Ed Muskie: "Do not speak unless you can improve the silence."

What teen-agers need to know about sex, drugs, AIDS, getting along with their peers and parents is now in Abby's updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." Send your name and address, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

more modification of programs, but potentially, could meet graduation requirements, McLane said, while students in level three "cannot realistically be expected to complete graduation requirements," but would be expected to complete their Individual Education Program.

Project Life begins at age 6 and is designed to teach students through age 21, if necessary, he said. "It has increasing periods of time out of the school setting such as through job shadowing and unpaid apprenticeships until they make the transition. They literally work themselves out of school."

Specific objectives of the program are vocational training — work, job skills, time and money management, tools, relationships; recreation-leisure — physical training, arts and crafts, community recreation and motor skills-stamina; community mobility — local transportation, map reading, schedule reading, driver training, menu reading and safety.

Domestic training — shopping, cooking, sewing, budgeting, childcare, gardening, applied science to home; personal awareness — human relations, health and physiology, family relations and self-concept building, and academics — money, time, measurement, communication skills, reading (including civics, geography and history), and scientific principles as appropriate.

Other agencies will be involved in implementing Project Life, Ms. Averette said.

The Pitt County Committee for the Employment of People with Disabilities, established by the Pitt County Commissioners, will help with orienting the business community into the program, while the Pitt County Association of Retarded Citizens will help with parent and community services such as support groups. The Eastern Carolina Vocational Center will help with vocational assessments, she said.

The program currently is being supported by a $29,970 grant from the North Carolina Council on Developmental Disabilities "with the expectation that the school system will take it over" in the future, Ms. Averette said.

McLane said he now is working on applying for the grant for next year's program.

The money pays for teacher workshops, supplies, part of the director's salary and substitute teachers. The nine teachers participating in the program are exceptional educational teachers within the school system.

The program will be implemented in A.G. Cox, Ayden Middle, Farmville Middle, Greenville Middle, E.B. Aycock, Wellcome Middle and North Pitt High schools.

Campaign Starts Heating Up

paigned themes and today was visiting northeastern Massachusetts, a region he often cites when discussing his record of economic development.

Bush had a speech scheduled to a Veterans of Foreign Wars convention in Chicago.

Bush was clearly unhappy Sunday with the intense scrutiny of Quayle's background and with Democratic criticism of his own decision-making. He said he's sticking with Quayle, with "no hesitancy," but that the Indiana senator needs time "to get his act together" before campaigning on his own.

Bush, who conducted joint appearances with Quayle in the Midwest over the weekend, said Quayle will begin campaigning alone "as soon as he can get squared away" with a staff and a schedule of appearances.

Quayle stumbled during initial news conferences and interviews after being selected by Bush last week, and Bush aides are spending the early portion of this week trying to prepare him for his first solo campaign appearances, scheduled to begin Wednesday.

Throughout their appearances in Indiana and Ohio, questions continued to be raised about the circumstances of Quayle's enlistment in the Guard at the height of the Vietnam War in 1969. He was 22 then, and described himself at the time as a supporter of the war.

Quayle has said that before his student deferment from the draft expired, he discussed with his family his desire to join the Guard. A former top newspaper employee of the family said he interceded with the Guard on Quayle's behalf.

Questions also are being raised about Quayle's law school admission. The Cleveland Plain Dealer reported Sunday that Quayle did not meet the academic requirements of Indiana University law school but got in anyway after meeting with the admissions dean, a Republican judge in a city where Quayle's family owned the local newspaper.

The Plain Dealer quoted Quayle's father, James C. Quayle, as saying his son met with the dean after being initially rejected by the law school. "He talked his way in," the elder Quayle said.

Bush dismissed questions about the law school admission by saying, "I don't see that there's an enormous demand from the public to learn this guy's high school grades."

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., appearing on NBC-TV's "Meet The Press," said Bush campaign chairman James A. Baker III had told him that he believed the military issue was "pretty much behind them." But Dole said his own opinion is that "it's going to last awhile."

Dukakis said over the weekend that people should notice how few have questioned the qualifications of Bentsen to serve as vice president.

Other Democrats were quick to challenge Bush's decision-making ability.

"Why did George Bush pick Daniel Quayle? That's got to be the question," House Democratic Whip Tony Coelho, D-Calif., said on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation" program. "His first presidential decision was Dan Quayle. Michael Dukakis' first presidential decision was Lloyd Bentsen."

Dukakis campaign manager Susan Estrich, also on CBS, said that if Quayle is not qualified to be vice president, "at that point, the real issue is not Dan Quayle. It's George Bush and his judgment."

Bush, speaking with reporters on Air Force Two, said no thought had been given to asking Quayle to withdraw, that the 41-year-old senator had not offered to step aside, "and he shouldn't."

"I want him out campaigning," Bush said. "He will have a tremendous appeal to young people, and he'll help with that gender gap. He's been thrown into a hornet's nest, but you know, I've been there," the vice president said. "I've got to take the heat. I made the decision. The buck stops right here. I have no hesitancy about it."

Bush said he could see nothing wrong with Quayle asking a member of the family to help him get into the Guard, or into college, for that matter.

"I had help from my dad, and I expect that Lloyd Bentsen did and Michael Dukakis did. Is it that unusual that a parent would help his son?"

Discussing his admission to the Guard when many other young men were being drafted and sent to combat in Vietnam, Quayle said, "I got in fairly, no rules were broken."

He received a warm reception over the weekend in his hometown of Huntington, Ind., where the crowd boomed reporters' questions about his military record, but he also has run into some criticism already on the campaign trail, including chants of "Quayle, who went in your place?" and signs reading "This Quayle is a chicken."

Strike Spreading In Poland

Walesa blamed the strikes on authorities, whom he said have refused to engage in dialogue with workers.

"I wanted to avoid strikes," he said. "We shouldn't be striking. We should be working. But there was no other choice. ... We are still waiting for serious talks."

None of the shipyard's towering cranes appeared to be operating, and a foreman speaking through a fence stated that all departments were shut down.

Workers could be seen strolling, taking naps or perching on fences and walls around the yard. Straus confirmed that the government considered the shipyard on strike.

"If you work only eight hours a day, you make 40,000 zlotys ($89) a month, and that's not enough to make a living," said one man in his mid-20s, asked why he joined the strike.

The shipyard, where Solidarity began eight years ago this month, also was the scene of a strike in May that ended inconclusively. In Poland, striking workers generally go to their plants but do not work.

Not since the labor unrest that led to the 1981 military crackdown on Solidarity have authorities had to confront strikes on such a scale. Wages are lagging far behind 60 percent inflation, which is aggravated by average 40 price increases.

The government-controlled media has called the strikes illegal and stressed their rising cost to the economy. Coal is Poland's leading export and a major source of hard currency to service its $39 billion foreign debt.

The government, which has refused to negotiate with Solidarity, has not stated how it intends to deal with the strikes.

Solidarity, only independent labor federation ever allowed in the Soviet bloc, was founded in the Gdansk shipyard in 1980 after a nationwide strike wave. It was outlawed in October 1982.

Labor unrest stemming in part from government price increases have three times toppled governments in communist post-war Poland: in 1956, 1970 and 1980.

Quake

deaths were due to floods or collapsing houses.

It was the worst quake to strike the region in 38 years. A tremor rumbled through the Indian state of Assam on the India-China border in August 1950. Official accounts said more than 1,500 people died, but seismologists said their records showed 30,000 were killed.

The Richter scale is a gauge of energy released by an earthquake, as measured by ground motion recorded on a seismograph. Every increase of one number means the ground motion is 10 times greater. A quake of magnitude 6 can cause severe damage in populated areas.

Faster Pace Keys Allison

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) — Like the tortoise that got the jump on the hare, Davey Allison took his time winning the Champion 400. As a result, the 27-year-old Allison not only won his first Winston Cup race of the season Sunday, he did it in record time.

Allison pushed his Ford Thunderbird around the two-mile oval at Michigan International Speedway at an average speed of 156.863 mph, exactly three mph faster than the old track mark by Darrell Waltrip in 1984.

The race was held up by two caution flags which affected 12 laps. "When we came in here this week I had cold chills," Allison said. "I knew we were in good shape. I just got that feeling and said we don't have to be in any hurry."

"I had many thoughts running through my mind all day about engine problems, driver problems, all kinds of things. Yesterday, I taped a note to my dash that said, 'Think, dummy.'"

The victory, by 4.43 seconds over Rusty Wallace's Pontiac Grand Prix, was an emotional one for Allison, whose father, Bobby, remains in a Birmingham, Ala., hospital with serious injuries from a June crash in the Miller 500 at Long Pond, Pa.

"I'm going to miss the flight home, but I'll be anxious to get back to see him," Allison said, his voice cracking with emotion. "I dedicate this race to my father, my family and all those loyal race fans who are the reason we keep racing every week."

Allison, who earned rookie of the year honors with two Winston Cup wins last year, also ended talk of the so-called sophomore jinx.

"This win here sure cured the sophomore jinx," Allison said. "As far as I'm concerned, there ain't no such a thing."

"I think this is what it takes to turn things around. But we can't stop now. This is what it takes to get things rolling for next year."

Allison took the lead with 23 laps remaining and pulled away from Wallace and Bill Elliott, who finished third.

Richard Petty, the sentimental favorite who was making his 500th consecutive Winston Cup start, had distributor problems and withdrew his Pontiac after 136 miles.

"I ain't been lucky for 500 times, have I?" Petty said. "It was running pretty decent. We had moved up to sixth or seventh. Then this deal with the distributor. Seems like everything doesn't cooperate with me when I want it to on the same day."

Allison, from Hueytown, Ala., grabbed the lead after a chaotic pit stop in which Sterling Marlin's Oldsmobile Cutlass caught fire. It was the 22nd lead change among 10 drivers in the race which took 2 hours, 33 minutes to complete.

Marlin's gas man, Gerald Oakley, sustained third-degree burns on his left wrist in the blaze, which crew members said started from the exhaust. He was to be treated after returning home to Chapel Hill, N.C.

Elliott, who started on the pole in his Thunderbird, had won six of the previous nine races at Michigan, including the last three August starts. He was running a close third before the final pit stop.

But Elliott, after changing four tires, took off before all the lug nuts were tightened and had to be called back in.

"The 44 car (Marlin's) was pitting right in front of us," Elliott said. "When the 44 car's fire broke out, in all the smoke and confusion, the jack got dropped an instant too soon."

"Ernie told me on the radio that all the lug nuts hadn't been put on the left-front tire and I said, 'This is a major screwup.' So I had to come back in, which put us way behind at the restart. I just ran as hard as I could to get to where I got."

Elliott's jack man, Tommy Cole accepted the blame.

Bowden Is Hoping History Holds True

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Football Writer

Coach Bobby Bowden, whose Florida State Seminoles have been ranked No. 1 in the Associated Press preseason college football poll, doesn't mind opening against defending national champion Miami.

History is on his side.

Since the AP took its first preseason poll in 1950, only four preseason No. 1 teams have failed to win their opening game. Nebraska lost to UCLA 20-17 in 1972, the Cornhuskers were tied 6-6 by LSU in 1976, Michigan lost to Wisconsin 21-14 in 1981 and the 1984 Auburn team lost to Miami 20-18 in Kickoff Classic II. Miami was the defending national champion that year, too.

"We've got to play them sooner or later," Bowden said of the Seminoles' visit to Miami on Saturday night, Sept. 3. "Let's find out what we've both got."

Although Miami is No. 8 in the preseason rankings, Bowden said that "to me, Miami is No. 1. They ended up No. 1 last year (Florida State was No. 2) and nobody's beaten them yet."

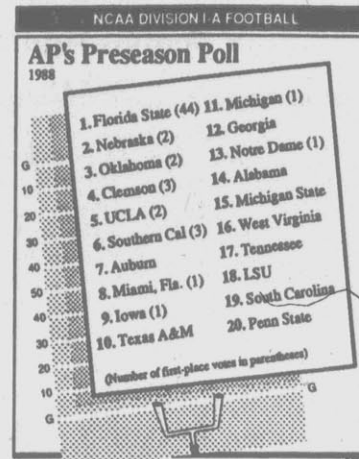

The Florida State-Miami game originally was scheduled for Oct. 29, but was moved up at the request of CBS, which will televise the game nationally.

Bowden called the early meeting of last year's 1-2 teams "an ideal move." But the Seminoles have anything but an ideal September schedule.

After returning home to play Southern Mississippi on Sept. 10, they visit Clemson, the defending Atlantic Coast Conference champion, on Sept. 17 and play host to Big Ten king Michigan State the following week.

"We could be in it or out of it this September," Bowden said. "You have to play every second — that's the price you have to pay to be ranked No. 1. Every Saturday you have to play your best because everybody wants you bad. It's a dangerous position, but one we're flattered to be in."

This is such an important game that Bowden has closed his practices, something he rarely does.

"We've never opened with Miami before," he said.

At least not since Bowden arrived in Tallahassee in 1976. Florida State, under Coach Bill Peterson, opened with Miami in 1963 and 1964, winning 24-0 and 14-0. Miami won last year's early-October meeting 26-25.

With 10 teams receiving at least one first-place vote, Florida State was a runaway preseason choice for No. 1 over Nebraska. The Seminoles received 44 of 60 first-place votes and 1,161 of a possible 1,200 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters.

It's the first time Florida State has ever been ranked No. 1. The previous high was last year's runner-up finish, as well as a No. 2 ranking in the final 1980 regular-season poll.

Nebraska, No. 6 last year, received two first-place votes and 952 points. The Cornhuskers open against 10th-ranked Texas A&M in the Kickoff Classic next Saturday night.

Oklahoma was a close third, followed by Clemson, UCLA, Southern California, Auburn, Miami, Iowa and Texas A&M.

The Second Ten consists of Michigan, Georgia, Notre Dame, Alabama, Michigan State, West Virginia, Tennessee, LSU, South Carolina and Penn State.

Olympians' First Defeat Doesn't Worry Thompson

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — John Thompson doubted only to look at his collegiate program to erase any doubts about the 1988 men's U.S. Olympic basketball team after their first loss.

"I never went undefeated at Georgetown and losses in December never bothered me anyway. The tournament is played in March," Thompson said Sunday after the Olympic finalists lost to a group of NBA players 90-83, their first loss in five games against teams of professional players. "We have a goal at the end."

The goal, of course, is the gold medal in Seoul. Thompson was quick to point out how important the loss could be in that pursuit.

"That was more beneficial to us than winning by 10 or 30," Thompson said two days after the Olympians beat another team of NBA players by 33 in Richfield, Ohio. "They were very physical and I was glad to see that. We have to find out about these guys. You can't go in with a lot of clay heroes."

Apparently Thompson and his staff know which 12 of the 14 remaining players will be on the final roster for Seoul, but he wasn't telling anybody.

"We pretty much know, they don't know" Thompson said of the players. "There are injuries to worry about and things within the system."

Mitch Richmond, who scored 14 points on Friday night, did not play on Sunday after suffering a toe injury in a hotel room accident.

"The pace wasn't good for him today," Thompson said. "I thought another day would make things a lot better."

Things couldn't have gotten much better for the five members of the Detroit Pistons who played against the Olympians in the first game played in the 21,000-seat Palace of Auburn Hills, the new home of the Pistons.

"We lived up to our reputation, we're the bad boys," Detroit's Isiah Thomas said after scoring 15 points and handing out 10 assists before a crowd of 16,435. "We wanted the win. The first thing I told the guys when we came in is they embarrassed the team the other night. ... I wasn't about to be embarrassed. We as Pistons wanted to win. We wanted to make our first game here a victory."

The NBA players came out with an extremely physical style, and Thompson was glad about that even though his team was outbounded 42-30.

"Those guys are trying to help us," Thompson said. "I talked to Chuck (Person) and asked him to be a little aggressive. It makes a difference when you're passing if you're being pushed out of bounds. They were physical but never dirty."

The NBA team led 47-34 at halftime and opened the second half with a 12-3 run over the opening 5:25 for a 59-37 lead, the largest of the game.

Reggie Miller, who plays for the Indiana Pacers and led all scorers with 20 points, had four points in the run as did Thomas, who also had a nice assist in the run on a pass to Pistons teammate Dennis Rodman, who finished with 12 points and 11 rebounds.

"We wanted the win, I'll be honest with you," Pistons coach Chuck Daly said after leading the select team. "Maybe we can help our country just by not letting them think they're a better team than they really are."

The Olympians, who made just two of 12 3-point field goals and at 45 percent had their second-worst performance from the field, got within seven points four times, but never closer.

"I was pleased with the way we scrapped and came back," Thompson said. "Now, we can work on our fullcourt defense. The players will tend to listen a little more after a game like that and it will be interesting to see them respond and how they come back."

Thompson will find out quickly as the team faces another collection of NBA players tonight in Oklahoma City.

The tour continues in Denver and Las Vegas, Nev., and concludes with a game in Los Angeles against Athletes In Action.

2 ECU Golfers Set For Event

By TIM CHANDLER
Reflector Sports Writer

Two East Carolina University golfers, Paul Garcia and John Maginnes, begin play in the United States Amateur Golf Tournament Tuesday.

Garcia, a junior from Weston, Mass., and Maginnes, a sophomore from Durham, recently qualified for the tournament, which is being played in Hot Springs, Va. at the Upper Cascades Country Club.

The tournament format is two 18-hole rounds of medal play. Following the first two days, the field will be cut to the low 60 golfers for match play, which begins Thursday.

"We're proud that two of our golfers will be representing ECU in the most prestigious amateur golf tournament in the country," said ECU head golf coach Hal Morrison. "I think it speaks well of our program that golfers like Paul and John could qualify for such an event."

Both golfers arrived at the tournament site Sunday and are participating in practice rounds today.

Maginnes didn't compete for the Pirates last year due to academic reasons, but is set to begin play for the Pirates this fall.

Garcia's best finish last fall was 34th at the Old Dominion University/Seascape Invitational. Garcia had a two-day total of 152. He also placed 70th at the John Ryan Memorial last year at Duke University with a 160.

Jeffrey Pulls Off A Diving Surprise

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — It was no surprise that Bruce Kimball was controversial, or that Greg Louganis made the team, but the U.S. Olympic diving trials did have some unexpected finishes.

One of them came Sunday in the 10-meter platform when Patrick Jeffrey, taking advantage of a difficult diving program and a well executed performance, earned a spot on the Olympic team behind Louganis.

Jeffrey's performance and a last-day rush by Mike Wantuck ended the dream of Kimball, who was competing despite facing charges in connection with the deaths of two teenagers in a Florida traffic accident earlier this month.

Kimball, a silver medalist in the last Olympics, finished fourth Sunday, and also finished sixth earlier in the springboard competition.

Louganis, the defending Olympic gold medalist in both the platform and springboard events, was an easy double winner at the trials, and brought the sellout crowd to its feet Sunday when he narrowly missed a perfect dive.

His inward 1½ somersault pike drew six 10s and a 9.5 in the third round. Louganis has had two perfect 10s with the same dive, once in 1982 and again in 1984.

Joining Louganis and Jeffrey on the men's team was Mark Bradshaw, who finished second in the springboard competition.

4th-Place Finish Ends Kimball's Try

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Bruce Kimball got the opportunity, but not the result he wanted, at the U.S. Olympic diving trials.

Kimball, an Olympic silver medalist in 1984, finished fourth Sunday in his best event — the 10-meter platform — after finishing sixth in springboard.

In an emotionally charged news conference last week, Kimball announced he would compete despite facing charges in connection with an Aug. 1 auto accident in which two people were killed and six others injured.

"I'm glad he came because he got his chance," said his father, Dick Kimball, who spoke for his son after the competition was over. Kimball declined to talk to the media after making his statement Tuesday.

His father gave Kimball a familial reward, a hug after his final dive Sunday when he was unable to overtake second-place finisher Patrick Jeffrey.

"I just gave him a hug and told him I loved him and told him I was proud of him," said the elder Kimball, who was himself the object of hugs of consolation by many of those in the diving community.

One of those was U.S. Olympic coach Ron O'Brien, who embraced his old friend after the competition.

"I cried on his shoulder," O'Brien said. "He's got a tough road to go. It made me sad."

The competition will not end the

MacKenzie Earns 2nd At North-South

PINEHURST — Will MacKenzie recently took second place in the 12-13 year-old division at the North-South Junior Amateur Championship in Pinehurst. MacKenzie shot a 79-76-74 during the three-day event to earn the second-place finish. This was the first year that MacKenzie, a rising eighth-grader at E.B. Aycock Junior High School.

Johnson Beaten Again In The 100

COLOGNE, West Germany (AP) — World record-holder Ben Johnson may not like it, but he is quickly finding out that Carl Lewis is not the only person who can beat him at 100 meters. The Canadian star was defeated for the second straight time in the 100 Sunday, losing to Americans Calvin Smith and Dennis Mitchell at the Cologne International track and field meet. Racing into a cold headwind, Smith was timed in 10.16 seconds, a third of a second off Johnson's 1987 world-record time. Mitchell ran a 10.27, edging Johnson's 10.29. Johnson shot ahead of the field at the start, but Smith pulled in front at about 70 meters and Mitchell followed. Johnson seemed to run out of steam in his last few strides. "The gear just wasn't there," he said, referring to his effort to accelerate at the end. For his part, Smith said his own strategy had succeeded, but that he had expected more difficulty from Johnson.

Carpenter Clears 1st Hurdle In Quest

HOUSTON (AP) — Now that Ken Carpenter has made the U.S. Olympic cycling team, he has to prepare himself mentally and physically for the biggest test of his career. The work begins this week for the 23-year-old national match sprint champion, who knows he faces an uphill battle to win a medal in Seoul. East Germany's Lutz Heschich is the favorite to win the gold in Carpenter's event, and the Soviet Union's Nikolai Kovche and Canada's Curt Harnett are among the others who could impede Carpenter's bid for glory. "Frankly, I think I'd have to have a truly outstanding day to beat Heschich, and I would have to have an equally outstanding day to beat Kovche," said Carpenter, who defeated 1984 gold medalist Mark Gorski during the track trials and national championships that ended Saturday. "But I'm confident that with my coach, Andrzej Bek, I'll be at my physical best when I come to that," he added. "That's all you can do." Carpenter and others who peaked to give themselves the best chance of qualifying for Seoul will have just over three weeks to get even better.

Falcons Obtain Hester From Raiders

SUWANEE, Ga. (AP) — The Atlanta Falcons announced Sunday the acquisition of wide receiver Jessie Hester of the Los Angeles Raiders in exchange for an undisclosed 1989 draft choice. The 5-foot-11, 170-pound Hester was the No. 1 pick for the Raiders in the 1985 NFL draft. The former Florida State player has caught 56 passes for 1,327 yards and 10 touchdowns during his pro career; he averaged 27.5 yards per catch in 1986, leading the league and setting a team record. "Hester is a big-threat wide receiver with tons of speed," Atlanta coach Marion Campbell said. Hester is expected in the Atlanta camp on Monday.

Parker Back On The Field For Oakland

BOSTON (AP) — Outfielder Dave Parker, sidelined since July 3 with an injured right thumb, was activated by the Oakland Athletics Sunday before a 5-4 victory over the Boston Red Sox. Parker is batting .261 with nine home runs and 37 RBI. To make room on the roster for Parker, the A's placed catcher Matt Sinatro on the 15-day disabled list because of a right wrist injury. Sinatro, 3-for-8 with Oakland this season, was called up from the minors last Thursday.

Crable To Undergo Surgery

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. (AP) — Bob Crable, the New York Jets' starting right inside linebacker, will undergo arthroscopic knee surgery on the right knee Monday to determine the cause of an injury that has bothered him for the past three weeks. The injury, sustained just before the opening exhibition game with Philadelphia, was originally diagnosed as a sprain. A Jets spokesman said that Crable will miss an additional 2-3 weeks if no further surgery is needed. If it is, he will miss 4-6 weeks more. Crable, a seven-year veteran, underwent major surgery on his left knee in 1984 and missed most of the 1984 and 1985 seasons.

Taylor Involved In Traffic Argument

NEW YORK (AP) — New York Giants linebacker Lawrence Taylor kicked the door of another motorist's car, doing $300 in damage, according to a police accident report filed in a traffic incident that Taylor said "was nothing." The accident report, filed in Morristown, N.J., by Lawrence Gross, said Taylor cut him off in his Porsche at about 11:50 p.m. EDT Wednesday, after the Giants curfew. The report said Taylor got out of his car, dented the door of Gross' Chevrolet Blazer, then punched the window. Although Taylor refused to comment directly on Friday, a statement issued by Taylor through the Giants said the other car cut him off and when Taylor got out of his car at a traffic light to speak to the other driver, he rolled up his window. Taylor kicked the door in frustration, the statement said. "I can't believe he filed a report," Taylor was quoted as saying in the New York Daily News.

Kimball Is Out

(Continued from B-1) controversy surrounding the Kimball family. Bruce Kimball is free on $10,000 bond and charged with five felony counts of driving under the influence pending his Aug. 29 arraignment. The elder Kimball — who will be going to Seoul as the coach of Olympic diver Wendy Lucero — talked of wanting a few days of peace with his family after a competition in which his son was the focal point of controversy and some protesters. Kimball said his son has hopes of finishing his college work at Michigan, but there are still legal questions pending. It was Bruce Kimball's final meet and he still had a chance to achieve his goal as he held second place through the eighth of 10 rounds in Sunday's competition. But having a lower degree of difficulty in his dives and inspired performances by Jeffrey and Mike Wantuck bumped him to fourth and out of a trip to Seoul. Kimball had three 10s and four 9.5s in the second round, but never put himself in a comfortable spot in the early going, then was hurt by the more difficult programs of the other divers. He got three 7.5s and four 8s on his final dive, not enough to catch Jeffrey or Wantuck. "He knew when he hit the water that he wasn't on the team," Dick Kimball said. There were no vocal outcries

Sindelar Rolls To International Win

CASTLE ROCK, Colo. (AP) — Golf purists, scorning the Stableford scoring system, insisted that Joey Sindelar deserved to win the inaugural International tournament two years ago. On Sunday, Sindelar won the International, no matter what scoring method you cared to use. Hitting the ball prodigious distances and wielding a hot putter, Sindelar fired an 8-under-par 64 that translated to a tournament-record 17 Stableford points and a 4-point victory over Dan Pohl and Steve Pate. "Today I learned you don't need to hit it perfect when the putter is working," Sindelar said. "The cup just kept jumping in the way of my ball. My game was good, but my putting was A-plus." Sindelar had nine birdies, 11 one-putt greens and just 25 total putts in a round that earned him a $180,000 check and vaulted him ahead of Chip Beck into first place on the tour's money list with $672,212. It was his second victory of the season and fifth of his five-year career. "This is the biggest win by far of the five I have," said the stocky, 30-year-old Sindelar. Of his No. 1 money ranking, he said, "Playing on the Asian tour six years ago, I could never have imagined this." Sindelar, who lost out to Ken Green in this event in 1986 despite having the lowest 72-hole medal score, had the best medal score this year of 15-under 273. He also would have won on the basis of cumulative Stableford points (38), although points don't carry over from day to day under this format. Sindelar also made it to the final day last year and had the third-best medal score. "You're never due," he said. "Don't ever think that in the game of golf. But it's an awful lot of fun when it happens." Pohl and Pate, playing in the first of six three-somes on the final day, set a feverish pace that left the late starters gasping. "Dan and Steve set the pace and the rest of us just kind of drafted," Sindelar said. "I honestly didn't realize my score was 64. I knew Dan was playing really good, and I was just trying to keep up. "I felt like I was fighting an uphill battle the whole round. I wasn't making much progress. I was passing a few people, but not Dan, who kept adding points. I was shocked to see he had double-bogeyed the last hole." Pohl birdied five of his first eight holes to move quickly to plus-10 under a scoring system that awards 5 points for eagle, 2 points for birdie, zero for par, minus-1 for bogey and minus-3 for double bogey or worse. After a bogey at No. 9, Pohl added birdies at the 12th, 13th and 14th holes to take command at plus-15. He bogeyed 16 but birdied the par-5 17th to go to plus-16. At that point, Sindelar, Pate and Mark Wiebe were at plus-13. Then came the fateful 18th, where Pohl's tee shot was blown far off course by a brisk wind, winding up unplayable amid tall grass and scrub oak. Pohl needed seven strokes to get the ball in the hole, finishing at plus-13. "I play a left-to-right shot and that's the direction the wind was blowing," Pohl said. "I couldn't make myself aim it far enough left."

Inkster Wins LPGA Tourney In Playoff

SOMERS POINT, N.J. (AP) — Playing 27 holes was more than Beth Daniel could endure, but it was the 28th that kept her three-year winless streak intact. Juli Inkster came from out of nowhere with a tournament-best 6-under-par 65 Sunday to force a playoff with a worn-out Daniel, and then parred the first extra hole to capture the $225,000 LPGA Atlantic City Classic. Making the victory even more improbable was that Inkster at one point trailed Daniel by 10 strokes with 14 holes to play at the Sands Country Club. "I was fortunate," Inkster said after her second victory of the year and 10th of her career. "You just never know in this game. You get on that momentum train and it can carry you in the right direction." It certainly carried all of Inkster's shots in the right direction after a bogey on the third hole. The Rancho Murieta, Calif., resident rolled in seven birdies ranging from four to 15 feet the rest of the way, including stretches of four in a row and five in six holes. "I was making a lot of birdies out there, but the last time I looked at the scoreboard Beth Daniel was 10 under par," Inkster said. "So I was playing for second." What Inkster didn't know was the Daniel was hurting and tiring under the strain of playing 27 regulation holes — including the back nine of her second round, which was suspended by darkness Saturday. It might have not been a problem in any other year, but Daniel was sidelined from March to late June because of mononucleosis and had not played more than 18 holes on any day since. "I ran out of gas," said Daniel, who had tears in her eyes throughout a news conference. "I think I did. I was hurting about the sixth tee (of the afternoon round)." It showed. Daniel frequently sat on her golf bag during the final round and occasionally rubbed her face with a towel on the hot, muggy day. Daniel came close to reaching her goal and would have won for the first time since 1985 had she done it. She had a 1-over-par 72 and finished regulation play at 7-under 206. Daniel made the turn at 9-under, four shots ahead of Inkster, who birdied the fifth through eighth holes. Inkster, who was playing two threesomes ahead of Daniel, then birdied the 10th, 13th and 15th to go 7-under, while Daniel came home with three bogeys and a birdie to finish in a tie.

Jeffrey Surprises

(Continued From B-1) Olympic silver medalist Michele Mitchell won Saturday's women's platform competition, followed by reigning national indoor and outdoor platform champion Wendy Lian Williams. The women's team also includes Olympic silver medalist Kelly McCormick, who won in the springboard, and Wendy Lucero, who came in second. "If we get five medalists we'll be doing a good job. Anything over that will be phenomenal," said Ron O'Brien, who will be the team's head coach. "We've got a combination of veterans and some with limited international experience. But I don't think that is going to be much of a factor. If they can survive this (the trials) they're tough and ready to go." "Pat might be considered a 'mild' surprise and Wendy Lucero, might be a mild surprise, but not a big surprise." O'Brien predicted that the women would face the strongest test, particularly from the Chinese. Jeffrey, who was the 1988 NCAA champion in three diving events and who has won one international competition in Austria, made his way on the team after a tight duel in which he was fifth and trailing the third place Kimball by 18.59 points going into the final round. Kimball, who had three 10s and four 9.5s in the second round Sunday, fell victim to the greater degree of difficulty by Jeffrey and Wantuck. "I thought we still had a chance going into those last two dives, but he would have needed 9.5s and 10s," said Dick Kimball, Bruce's father and coach. "He knew when he hit the water after his dive that he wasn't going to make the team." "I just gave him a hug and told him that I loved him and told him that I was proud of him." Jeffrey, of Madison, N.J., was fifth with four dives remaining, but less than eight points separated the second, third, fourth and fifth divers after the eighth round. The Ohio State University student moved into second in the ninth round, and his final dive was enough to hold off any challenger. Vince Panzano, Jeffrey's coach, noted his pupil's tenacity as well as degree of difficulty. "He's a hell of a competitor. He never gave up today," Panzano said. Jeffrey said he felt Sunday might be a special day even before the start of the final competition.

Morris Continuing Pitching Rebound

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

Jack Morris is pitching easy and making it hard for anyone to catch the Detroit Tigers in the American League East.

Morris, struggling for most of the season, threw a two-hitter for his 21st career shutout, leading the Tigers to a 5-0 victory over the Chicago White Sox Sunday.

"That's his best game this year. He threw all the pitches he wanted to," Manager Sparky Anderson said after Detroit completed a four-game sweep at Tiger Stadium. The Tigers extended their lead to four games over Boston and six over New York.

Morris, 11-12, won for the third time in four decisions. He struck out eight, including the side in the ninth inning, and walked none.

"My mechanics got better. I wasn't jumping around as much. It almost became easy. My body was in control," Morris said.

Morris has worked seven straight starts in which he went at least six innings and allowed three or fewer earned runs. Only two of his 12 starts before the All-Star break were that effective.

Morris' fifth career two-hitter gave him two shutouts and eight complete games this season. He is 3-0 against Chicago, the team he pitched a no-hitter against in 1984.

Darrell Evans and Matt Nokes drew two-out walks from McDowell in the third. Luis Salazar followed with a single, and the ball bounced past center fielder Ken Williams, letting both runners score.

Detroit made it 5-0 in the seventh. Gary Pettis doubled and scored on Pat Sheridan's single. Dave Bergman hit an RBI double, Alan Trammell singled and Evans had a run-scoring grounder, clinching the Tigers' eighth victory in nine games against Chicago this year.

Athletics 5, Red Sox 4

Mark McGwire tied the score with his 25th homer and Luis Polonia singled home the tie-breaking run as Oakland rallied in the eighth inning to win at Boston.

The Athletics stopped a three-game losing streak and took the finale in a three-game series.

McGwire's leadoff homer in the eighth against Bob Stanley, 5-2, made it 4-4. Carney Lansford got an infield hit, Ron Hassey sacrificed and Polonia met Lee Smith with a sharp single.

Mariners 4, Yankees 2

Scott Bankhead gave up five singles in seven innings at Yankee Stadium and Seattle sent New York to its third straight loss.

The Yankees lost for the ninth time in 13 games and fell six behind Detroit, their biggest deficit of the season. The Mariners won three times in the four-game series at Yankee Stadium.

Bankhead, 7-7, struck out eight and allowed two runs, only one of them earned. He had gone 21 innings without giving up an earned run.

Mike Schooler, the fourth Mariners pitcher, worked the ninth inning for his ninth save. With the bases loaded, he retired Rickey Henderson on a grounder to end the game.

Rick Rhoden, 7-10, lost his fourth straight decision. He gave up nine hits in his second complete game, his first since opening day.

Twins 12, Rangers 2

Kent Hrbek's two-run double sparked a six-run first inning and Bert Blyleven won his 253rd game as Minnesota beat Texas.

The Twins, who scored just four runs in losing the first three games of the series at the Metrodome, won by combining eight hits, nine walks, three hit batsmen, four errors and two passed balls.

Blyleven, 9-11, tied Carl Hubbell for 35th place on the all-time victory list. He won his second straight start since coming off the disabled list.

The Twins got five hits in the first against Charlie Hough, 10-14. Tim Laudner had an RBI single and added a three-run homer in the eighth.

Blue Jays 8, Brewers 2

Ernie Whitt hit a three-run double and Jesse Barfield homered during a seven-run third inning that carried host Toronto over Milwaukee.

Jimmy Key, 8-3, allowed two runs on six hits in eight innings. It was just the second time in six starts that Key has survived the fifth inning.

Barfield led off the third with his 12th home run and Whitt's double finished Don August, 7-6. Tony Fernandez had a run-scoring grounder and added an RBI single in the eighth.

Royals 3, Indians 1

Mark Gubicza won his career-high 15th game and Kansas City scored twice on balks in Cleveland.

Gubicza, 15-7, pitched a six-hitter, walked one and struck out four. He won at least 10 games in his first five seasons and was 14-10 in 1985.

Willie Wilson scored all three runs for the Royals. He singled and came home on a balk by Rod Nichols, 0-4, for a 2-1 lead in the sixth inning.

Angels 3, Orioles 2

Willie Fraser pitched seven strong innings and Jack Howell hit an RBI double as California stopped Baltimore's three-game winning streak.

Fraser, 10-10, won his fourth straight decision. He gave up one run on four hits. Sherman Corbett finished for his first major league save, allowing three hits.

The visiting Angels broke a scoreless tie in the sixth against Jay Tibbs, 4-11. Chili Davis walked with one out, Jim Eppard singled, Howell hit his run-scoring double and Thad Bosley had a sacrifice fly.

Joe Orsulak led off the Orioles' sixth with his third home run. Fraser has allowed 31 homers, most in the majors.

Leary, Dodgers Roll To Win

By The Associated Press

Tim Leary and the Los Angeles Dodgers are putting together two rather surprising comebacks this season.

Leary, 14-8, pitched a six-hitter and struck out a career-high 12 batters Sunday as Los Angeles beat Montreal 4-0 to sweep a three-game series against the Expos and win their seventh straight game.

The victory kept the Dodgers 5½ games ahead of Houston and San Francisco in the National League West. Last season, fourth-place Los Angeles finished 17 games behind the Giants.

Leary, who was 3-11 in 1987 for the Dodgers, has found his fastball again and is also winning games with his bat.

He went 1-for-3 against the Expos and scored the winning run. He is batting .315 (17-for-54) for the season with nine runs batted in, and also has three game-winning RBI, including one as a pinch-hitter.

"The biggest key all year is not walking people," said Leary, who has walked 39 in 186 innings. "I get ahead with my fastball and get them swinging earlier in the count. I've got good arm speed with my split-fingered fastball. I can locate my fastball, and that's like having two or three pitches right there."

Leary, the New York Mets' No. 1 pick in the June 1979 draft, now leads the NL with six shutouts.

Leary singled with two outs in the fifth and scored on Steve Sax's double into the left field corner for a 1-0 lead. Sax took third on Tim Raines' error on the play, then scored on a passed ball.

"He's improved his forkball very well, and he's got more confidence," Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda said. "Last year he'd get to the fifth or sixth inning and make a bad pitch. Now he's been very, very consistent. That's why he's altogether a different pitcher. He believes in himself more."

Leary was a top prospect for the Mets, but hurt his arm in 1983. They traded him to Milwaukee in a six-player, four-team deal in 1985 and the Dodgers got him from the Brewers for first baseman Greg Brock on Dec. 10, 1986.

Giants 6, Phillies 3

Atlee Hammaker pitched seven strong innings as San Francisco completed a three-game sweep at Candlestick Park and sent the Phillies to their eighth straight loss.

Last Tuesday, Hammaker lasted 1-3 of an inning against New York and allowed six hits and seven earned runs.

Astros 2, Pirates 1

Gerald Young's two-out, run-scoring single in the 14th inning lifted Houston over Pittsburgh at Three Rivers Stadium as reliever Juan Agosto improved to 9-0.

Pinch-hitter Billy Hatcher drew a walk from reliever Bob Kipper, 2-5, and moved to second on a sacrifice. One out later, Kevin Bass was intentionally walked and Young singled to center.

Padres 1, Mets 0

Andy Hawkins and Mark Davis combined on an eight-hitter as San Diego shut out visiting New York for its fifth straight victory.

It was the Mets' fourth consecutive loss and eighth in their last 11 games, but New York maintained its 3½-game lead in NL East over second-place Pittsburgh.

Cardinals 7, Reds 1

Scott Terry pitched a five-hitter and got the game-winning RBI as St. Louis defeated Cincinnati at Busch Stadium.

In his last three appearances, Terry has allowed only one run in 18 2-3 innings.

Braves 1, Cubs 0

Rookie Pete Smith pitched a five-hitter for his second shutout of the season and Gerald Perry drove in the only run with a sacrifice fly in the first inning as Atlanta beat Chicago at Wrigley Field.

Smith, 6-12, walked three and struck out six en route to his third victory in his last four starts.

Gannon Makes The Most Of His Longshot Chance

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — Rich Gannon, the longshot in the three-way battle for the Minnesota Vikings' starting quarterback job, made the most of his chance to show what he can do.

Gannon came off the bench to throw a fourth-quarter touchdown pass and then directed his team quickly downfield for Chuck Nelson's game-winning 23-yard field goal with 48 seconds remaining in overtime as the Vikings beat the Phoenix Cardinals 19-16 in an NFL exhibition game Sunday night.

"With the other two guys — Wade Wilson and Tommy Kramer — I know I'm not going to play all that much, so I've got to make the most of it," said Gannon, a second-year pro who completed 5 of 12 passes for 130 yards. "There was a lot of pressure on that last possession. But I had confidence in myself and we got some breaks."

Minnesota's Tim Newton recovered a fumble by Phoenix backup quarterback Cliff Stoudt at the Vikings' 47-yard line with 1:48 left in overtime.

Gannon hit Greg Richardson with passes of 22 and 26 yards to set up Nelson's game-winning kick.

"Rich played very well. I didn't think either Wilson or Kramer played very well," said Vikings coach Jerry Burns. "I haven't decided on a starter yet. That won't come until after the exhibition games are over. Rich Gannon is still in the hunt. It's going to be a horse race going right down to the wire with all three of them."

Wilson started the game and completed 6 of 10 passes for 45 yards and Kramer hit on 6 of 15 for 66 yards.

Defensive end William Gay had saved Minnesota from defeat earlier by blocking a 43-yard field goal attempt by Phoenix's Al Del Greco 5:45 into overtime. The ball landed about a foot short.

"He nearly made it, but we had enough opportunities to win the game besides that play," Cardinals coach Gene Stallings said. "But we had a lot of turnovers (five), a lot of penalties (eight for 71 yards) and a lot of dropped passes — some in the end zone. You can't win with that many mistakes."

The Vikings led 6-3 at halftime on Wilson's 20-yard touchdown pass to Anthony Carter 2:52 into the second quarter after cornerback Issiac Holt intercepted a pass at the Minnesota 47-yard line.

Nelson's extra-point try bounced off the left upright. He also was wide left on a 45-yard field goal try 3:54 before halftime.

Del Greco kicked a 21-yard field goal with 19 seconds remaining in the half after Phoenix stalled at the Minnesota 4.

Nelson's 19-yard field goal with 8:17 to go in the third quarter gave the Vikings a 9-3 lead. But Phoenix cut the gap to 9-6 on Del Greco's 23-yarder with 30 seconds left in the third quarter.

Minnesota, 2-1, went ahead 16-6 on Gannon's 32-yard touchdown pass to rookie wide receiver Reginald Ward with 11:01 left. When the conversion snap was low, Nelson flipped the ball to Gannon, who calmly ran into the end zone.

The Cardinals, 0-3, forced the overtime on Stoudt's 1-yard touchdown pass to rookie running back Tony Jeffery with 1:57 left and Del Greco's third field goal — a 47-yarder with seven seconds to go.

Cardinals starter Neil Lomax, who was 2-of-11 for 25 yards with two interceptions in the first quarter, wound up 12-of-30 for 128 yards with three interceptions before being relieved by Stoudt late in the third quarter.

The game drew 46,429 at 72,000-seat Sun Devil Stadium.

Scorsese Says Film's Critics Have Misinterpreted Scene

MARTIN SCORSESE

LONDON (AP) — Director Martin Scorsese says critics of his film, "The Last Temptation of Christ," have misinterpreted the scene in which Jesus imagines making love to Mary Magdalene.

Some conservative Christian leaders have denounced the film, saying it reinterprets the Bible. Thousands of people protested when "Last Temptation" opened two weeks ago to packed houses in seven U.S. cities and two in Canada.

Scorsese said the film's most controversial scene, in which a crucified Jesus hallucinates having sex with Mary Magdalene, should not offend viewers when taken "in context." "That is the very last temptation of Christ, to forego his divinity and become merely human. In the dream, Christ imagines a full human life with a marriage to Mary Magdalene and a family of children," Scorsese said in an interview published Sunday in The Observer newspaper.

"The temptation is not to have sex, but to get married, make love to your wife and have children like an ordinary man," he said.

In the film Jesus rejects this final temptation.

'Sesame Street' To Begin 20th Year

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The 20th season of PBS' "Sesame Street," beginning this November, will lead up to the birth of a baby for Maria and Luis, two of the characters who married last season.

This season will also mark the 20th anniversary of two of the show's charter cast members — singer-actor Bob McGrath and Carol Spinney, the man inside Big Bird.

They recalled their beginnings on the now historic PBS children's series at a recent news conference.

"When I first heard about it, I didn't think I wanted to be involved with a new children's show, because there was nothing that exciting in terms of children's shows at that point," said McGrath, who had been featured on the Mitch Miller show and joined "Sesame Street" in 1969. "But when I saw some of the film and animation that Jim Henson and some of the other people had done, I knew this was really something quite out of the ordinary from what had been on television before."

The producers of the show expect to add new graphics and use more films, including ones by director Jonathan Demme and photographer-artist William Wegman, this season, a likely response to the trend toward multimedia kids' shows like "Pee-wee's Playhouse."

Guest stars will include Lily Tomlin, Tracey Ullman, Susan St. James, Rhea Perlman and James Galway, among others.

One of the major episodes last season was the wedding of characters Luis and Maria. This season's finale will be the birth of their baby, the producers hope to see the baby grow up on the show. Producer-director Lisa Simon said a search is on for expectant parents who would be willing to let the show follow their child's growth.

Big Bird has become the show's biggest star, but he didn't start out that way, said Spinney.

A peripheral character in the early episodes, he was sort of "the village idiot," Spinney said.

"One day, I realized he was really a child," said Spinney. "One of the scripts said he had to go to day care or something. So I said, we really should play him as a child."

Big Bird came to embody "all the fears of children and things they have to learn — a wide-eyed view of the world," said Spinney. "He gradually learned to read and write and so he grew from 4, which I felt he was the beginning, to 6½, which is where he stays."

Spinney carefully protects Big Bird's real identity from little children, but admits when he sees a child toting one of the big yellow dolls, "I keep wanting to say, you know, (he goes into Big Bird's high voice) 'Hey, I do that!'"

Spinney had been into puppeting since he was a child. McGrath had intended to have a career entertaining adults as a singer, but when rock music began to take over the business, he decided he would have to take another path.

Both men said the rewards of working for children are great, though the task is sometimes exasperating.

BETWEEN TAKES — Ryan White, 16, of Cicero, Ind. is in Statesville filming a movie about his struggle to get back into school three years ago. Though White does not play himself in the ABC-TV movie, he does portray an older youngster afflicted with AIDS. (AP Laserphoto)

'Frank's Place' Earns Praise, But Can't Grab Good Ratings

LOS ANGELES (AP) — When CBS' "Frank's Place" picked up an award from the Television Critics Association as best comedy of the season — an honor shared with ABC's "The Wonder Years" — it was recognition from the one group "Frank's Place" doesn't need to win over.

A cheer went up in the room when the award was announced at the recent television critics convention here. But what "Frank's Place" needs now is viewers, not more accolades from the press, and there have been plenty of those. Despite them, "Frank's Place" hasn't found a very large audience, because it's the kind of non-formula show that takes a while to build, and it has been in six different time periods in its one season on the air.

It isn't on CBS' fall schedule. CBS Entertainment President Kim LeMasters said he couldn't find a good enough time slot for it. Instead, it's being held as a midseason replacement.

Meanwhile, there are some awards being given out this Sunday that could translate into viewers for the stylish, sophisticated, warm-hearted series. Its cast and crew were surprised and delighted when it was nominated for nine Emmys, including best comedy.

"It was wonderful," said series star Tim Reid, who was nominated as best lead actor in a comedy. "I felt very ..."

"Yahoo!" interrupted his wife and co-star, Daphne Maxwell.

"Yeah," said Reid. "Yahoo! is about the only way I can explain the feeling I felt."

Reid is co-executive producer of the series with Hugh Wilson, who produced the critically praised "WKRP."

Wilson sees similarities between the two shows, because "WKRP" never got high ratings during its network run. It's now a popular syndicated series in reruns. "We just had to keep doing shows they're embarrassed to take off the air, even though the ratings are no good, and that's been the angle with 'Frank's Place,'" said Wilson.

"Frank's Place" is set in the unusual but zesty milieu — a New Orleans Creole restaurant. Reid plays a Boston professor who inherits the restaurant, Chez Louisianne, known affectionately as "the Chez," from his late, estranged father, a legend in the community.

"It's not your normal, spoon-fed television," said Maxwell. "You have to listen to 'Frank's Place' or you miss it. It's no doggie-biscuit-cookie 'OK, we're going to laugh now,' or 'It's time to be real quiet now.'"

"It's just an incredibly different show," she said. "It's more, I would

TV Movie About AIDS Victim Filming In State

STATESVILLE (AP) — Teen-age AIDS victim Ryan White says his small role in a biographical television movie reinforces the message that the fatal disease can't be transmitted through casual contact.

"It tells the story, plus it helps educate people about AIDS and the hardships people go through," he said in an interview Friday.

"He's a natural," said Linda Otto, co-executive producer of "The Ryan White Story," an ABC movie starring George C. Scott which is being filmed here through Sept. 9.

"It was the right thing to do — it felt right," she said. "It was not only great for Ryan and his family, but it makes the point that you can't catch AIDS by sharing kitchen utensils or a bathroom."

Ryan will appear as Chad, an older hemophiliac, who like Ryan contracted AIDS from a blood transfusion.

"He didn't have a very positive outlook," Ryan said about his friend who died from the disease. The film will not depict Chad's death.

The role of Ryan is being played by Lucas Haas, who starred opposite Harrison Ford in "Witness." Judith Light of "Who's the Boss?" stars as Ryan's mother, Jeanne. Scott plays the part of the family's attorney.

The softspoken Ryan insists it hasn't been difficult to work on a movie about his struggle with AIDS and the anguish his family went through in 1985 when residents of his native Kokomo, Ind., wanted to keep him from entering school.

"It's kind of weird seeing someone else playing my life," he said with a smile Friday at the Iredell County Courthouse, where the court scenes depicting the Whites' legal battles were being filmed.

"It's kind of funny and embarrassing," he added. "I can remember all of the different things that happened."

Mrs. White said she didn't try to stop her son from acting or assisting as a consultant to the film crew. "Ryan has always done what he wants to do," she said.

Ryan is 16 but looks younger because of his small size.

"He never feels sorry for himself," Ms. Otto said. "And he doesn't want anyone else to feel sorry for him. I've learned so much from being around him."

The movie will describe some of the legal and other battles the family went through since Ryan contracted AIDS in 1984. It follows his attempts to return to school, a controversy that divided the residents of Kokomo and forced the Whites to eventually leave town.

The film ends with Ryan's first day of classes at Hamilton Heights High School in Arcadia, Ind. Ryan was scheduled to fly back home to Cicero early in the week so he can be ready for the start of school.

Until then, he will continue to hang around the set.

"The crew is in love with him," Ms. Otto said.

While the movie's focus is a young boy with a fatal disease, it also is a testimony to his vigor and spirit.

"This is not a story about a boy dying of AIDS," Ms. Otto said. "It's the story of a boy living with AIDS and how a town was polarized by it. It's a microcosm of what it was like in this country three years ago, and, to some extent, what it's still like now."

"This is not a movie about a family's tragedy," she said. "It's a family miracle. I'm totally inspired by having known the Whites."

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

"PJ soloed on the sliding board!"

FORECAST FOR TUESDAY Aug. 23

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): See to it that you know just what is expected of you by those in authority, and then proceed wisely. Be steadfast and dependable.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Someone whose lifestyle is different from yours can bring out a talent in you which can help you become more successful in the future.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): If you confide in a family member about a plan you are working on, you will gain their assistance, alacrity, and enthusiasm.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Be sure to help a superior who may need assistance, and show you are thoughtful and kind. Go over the details of a contract.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Study your activities, and if you are not getting positive results, handle them differently. Get suggestions for advancement from a superior.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): It's a good day to bring your abilities to the attention of someone in authority. Make plans early for recreation in the evening.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): A serious conference with family members will improve conditions at home. Don't invite guests to your house this evening.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Tell those you deal with regularly just what to expect in the days ahead. If a favor is needed, ask a friend early, and you will get it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Go over your accounts very carefully before you ask someone for support on a project. You may be able to handle it yourself.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): You understand what to do to best make a venture become a reality. Try to get the information you need to relieve some of your worries.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Go to an expert for the advice you need to become more proficient at your work or business. Try not to divulge information you shouldn't.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Get involved early in some activity that will help in your advancement. Don't try to interest others in something they don't care for.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠KJ873 ♥AQ72 ♦AQ ♣83
 The bidding has proceeded:
 South West North East
 1 ♣ Pass 1 NT Pass
 2 ♥ Pass 3 ♣ Pass
 What action do you take?
 A.—Partner has a weak hand with a broken club suit and little else. With 11 points or more, he would have responded two clubs initially; and had his club suit been good, he would have bid two clubs and then three clubs. Therefore, you have little chance of making three no trump—you have no source of tricks. Pass.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠K87632 ♥5 ♦Q83 ♣762
 The bidding has proceeded:
 West North East South
 1 ♥ 3 NT Pass ?

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠A9863 ♥Q7 ♦AQ6 ♣Q95
 The bidding has proceeded:
 South West North East
 1 ♣ Pass 2 ♣ Pass
 What do you bid now?
 A.—Avoid rebidding a weak five-card major suit if there is any alternative, and don't bid two no trump with an unstopped suit, either. Since you don't want to bid a diamond fragment, by a process of elimination you arrive at a raise to three clubs.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠K102 ♥K95 ♦J6 ♣AJ1043
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♣ Pass 2 ♣ Pass
 3 ♣ Pass ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—The double fit has improved your hand considerably, but for the moment be content to show your spade support by taking a preference to three spades. This is a forcing action. If partner has a magic hand, you could have a slam. The next move, however, is up to him.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠KQJ872 ♥K5 ♦872 ♣K7
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♦ Pass 1 ♣ Pass
 2 ♣ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—Obviously, you have no intention yet of supporting partner, so it's simply a matter of how many spades to bid. Two spades would be discouraging, and your hand is too good for that; but neither your hand nor your suit is quite strong enough for four spades. That leaves the invitational bid of three spades, which seems to fit the bill perfectly.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠72 ♥83 ♦AKJ6 ♣AK982
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♣ Pass 2 ♣ Pass
 2 ♣ Pass 3 ♦ Pass
 3 ♣ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—Monotonous of partner, isn't it? Although he surely has at least a partial heart stopper, don't even think about three no trump—unless you can take four fast spade tricks, there is no way you'll come to nine. With at least an eight-card fit (partner must have six or seven spades), four spades is the place to play, so bid it.

Case Against FCX, Banks Was To Open Before A Jury Today

RALEIGH (AP) — A jury in U.S. District Court in Raleigh today was scheduled to begin hearing a civil case of financial deception against two of the nation's largest farm banks and top officers of the largest farm cooperative in North Carolina and South Carolina.

Observers say the trial is expected to last several weeks.

At stake is the payment of $7.2 million to 1,700 investors who bought bonds from FCX, the Raleigh-based farm cooperative, between 1981 and 1985, when FCX filed for bankruptcy.

Attorneys for the investors contend FCX, a supplier of farm goods, and two banks — The Columbia Bank for Cooperatives in Columbia, S.C., and Central Bank for Cooperatives in Denver — failed to disclose the cooperative's financial troubles when it sold the bonds.

"They were selling (bonds) even as they financial information showed they were going to hell in a hand-basket," said attorney L. Bruce McDaniel, who is representing investors in the class-action lawsuit. "FCX sold two million dollars in the two-and-a-half months before it filed for bankruptcy."

McDaniel said the two banks, with assets totaling $4.4 billion, controlled the cooperative by approving loans made by the cooperative and helping set terms for the sale of the bonds.

Lawyers for the banks, however, are expected to argue that while the Columbia bank was a major lender to FCX, it was not responsible for the cooperative's sale of bonds. The Denver bank, in turn, bought FCX loans from the Columbia bank, but also claims not to have been involved in the bond sales.

The investors each purchased an average of $2,500 in bonds, McDaniel said.

"They (the investors) are older people, rural people and uneducated people," he said. "They had trusted FCX through the years. ... There is nothing wrong with selling debentures for a financially troubled company, but you have to show its financial conditions."

Before filing for bankruptcy in 1985, FCX had been losing money for three years, blaming its troubles on high interest rates, low farm prices and debt-burdened farmers.

Nearly half of the cooperative's $7.5 million loss in the year before it went bankrupt was the result of bad debts, the cooperative's officers have said. The debts were owed by farmers who could not repay FCX for purchases of sales and equipment they received, the officers said.

Since the bankruptcy filing, most of FCX's assets have been sold to repay creditors. But the cooperative still owns stock that is scheduled to be sold. The first $5 million in proceeds from those sales is to be paid to the investors who bought the FCX bonds.
