COLLISION DAMAGE — A collision on Greenville Boulevard Northeast Monday caused heavy damage to this car and truck. Trooper J.R. Letchworth said the truck, driven by Bobby Dale Damouth of Washington, N.C., was headed east on rural road 1529 when it pulled across the four-lane highway, colliding with a northbound car driven by Alice Marie Pittman of Bethel. The truck overturned. The trooper said Ms. Pittman and three passengers, Annie Pittman, Carolyn Pittman and Lorie Pittman, all of Bethel, were injured. Letchworth said Damouth, who was slightly injured, was charged with failing to yield the right of way in the 3:50 p.m. wreck. (Reflector Staff Photo By Thomas Forrest)

Booming Grocery Store Tabs Push Inflation Upward

By MATT YANCEY
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The steepest grocery store increases in 4½ years pushed consumer prices up 0.4 percent in July as the effects of the summer-long drought reached consumers, the government said today.

The 1.4 percent gain in grocery store prices was led by a 9.6 percent jump in egg costs, a 7.4 percent boost in poultry costs and a 4.7 percent gain for fresh fruits and vegetables.

July's overall gain, if it persisted for 12 months, would amount to a yearly inflation rate of 5.2 percent.

The department noted in today's announcement that the food price gains "reflect rising input prices, at least partially due to the adverse summer weather," and showed that, except for food, price gains were moderate.

Excluding food and energy costs, consumer prices rose 0.3 percent last month, slightly less than the average monthly increase posted in the first half of 1988.

Energy costs were up 0.3 percent, largely due to a 0.7 percent increase in gasoline prices. Still, gasoline is slightly cheaper than in December and 28.1 percent under its price peak of March 1981.

Housing costs rose at a 0.3 percent pace for the sixth straight month as declines in home heating oil and electricity costs offset higher charges for natural gas.

Clothing prices dropped 0.6 percent after falling 0.3 percent in June; those prices had risen 3.8 percent in the first five months of 1988.

The Labor Department said that larger than usual end-of-season price reductions in women's clothing were responsible for most of the declines.

Medical care costs jumped 0.7 percent to a level 6.6 percent above where they had been a year ago. Hospital expenses were up 1.0 percent while the cost of prescription and over-the-counter drugs gained 0.9 percent.

Transportation expenses rose 0.4 percent after a 0.2 percent rise in June. The higher gasoline prices were largely to blame.

New car prices were unchanged while automobile financing costs gained 0.2 percent. Used car prices were up 0.5 percent — their second consecutive increase — but were still below their level at the end of 1987.

Tobacco prices were up 2.7 percent, the steepest gain for any major segment of the monthly price compilation.

Despite the food price increase, meat costs overall declined slightly as pork prices dropped 2.2 percent and beef and veal prices rose just 0.1 percent as farmers trimmed herds.

Cereal and bakery product prices gained 1.1 percent while cooking oil posted a 1.0 percent price increase.

Food costs overall rose 1.0 percent for the month as slower advances of 0.5 percent and 0.4 percent, respectively, were posted for restaurant meals and alcoholic beverages.

The July increases brought the consumer price index to 118.5, meaning that a hypothetical selection of goods costing $100 in 1982 would have cost $118.50 last month, 50 cents more than in June and $4.70 more than a year ago.

Peace City

By TONY CZUCZKA

GENEVA (AP) — The Iran-Iraq peace talks starting Thursday are only one set of negotiations that bolster Geneva's century-old tradition as a city of peace.

A day earlier, Greek and Turkish factions from Cyprus open two days of meetings in a new attempt to resolve the political future of the island divided by war.

Both sets of talks are brokered by the United Nations, which has its European base at the former League of Nations building.

The Palace of Nations hosts about 8,000 meetings a year, helping make Geneva the world's conference capital.

The heavy U.N. focus is likely to overshadow a third major meeting on the city's neutral ground: a U.S.-Soviet review of the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty, whose outcome could attract superpower arms reduction talks.

The "Geneva spirit" saw a renaissance this year with the completion of a U.S.-Soviet treaty scrapping intermediate-range missiles and the signing of a U.N.-backed accord setting a Soviet troop pullout from Afghanistan.

Those agreements took years to complete, a fate that may befall the Iran-Iraq talks, called to settle points of conflict after both sides accepted a cease-fire in the 8-year-old Persian Gulf war.

International negotiations have marked Geneva's history for 116 years, since the settlement of a controversy arising from the U.S. Civil War.

At dispute in 1872 were heavy losses inflicted on 22 Union ships by a British-equipped Confederate frigate, the Alabama. The United States and Britain agreed to international arbitration and a Geneva tribunal ruled Britain should pay the United States $15.5 million in damages.

Nine years earlier, Henry Dunant, a Geneva native, launched the idea for the Red Cross. The International Red Cross today is based in Geneva.

Hopes were high in 1919 when Geneva was chosen to be the host of the League of Nations. But in the 1930s, the League could do little to prevent Adolf Hitler's rise to power in Germany or Italy's war in Ethiopia.

It collapsed in World War II.

The United Nations made Geneva its European center in 1946. Most U.N.-affiliated agencies have headquarters in the city, including the World Health Organization and the Black Officers' Rep Says Pitt Concerned

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

An official with the National Black Police Association (NBPA) was in Greenville on Monday to talk with Sheriff Ralph Tyson about a number of complaints he said the association has received about the Pitt County department.

But, admitting that he had not made an appointment, Ronald Hampton said Tyson was "not here today," and unavailable to talk.

Hampton, a Washington, D.C. policeman for 17 years and director of national affairs for the NBPA, said officials of the 35,000-member organization have received letters, newspaper clippings and complaints for the past year.

He said the complaints included such things as the lack of minorities, in the department, lack of promotions for minorities, the assignment of black officers (and) discriminatory policies.

"We were here to ask some questions," Hampton said, but "we haven't gotten any answers. We've been talking back and forth with the officers and we wanted to try and work with the sheriff."

Hampton, who is assigned to community relations and crime prevention programs in Washington, said options available to address Pitt County complaints include negotiations, with "the final option ... to go into court and seek legal redress to the problems."

"I'm a police officer myself. If we have to go to court, we're not afraid of it," he said. But, he added, the best plan is "to negotiate some sort of agreement."

Since he did not talk with Tyson on

Will C. Sign Gets A Red Suit

By GREG LAUDICK and STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writers

Will C. Morgan has a new red bathing suit. It replaces the small, flesh-colored suit which brought criticism of three billboards in the Greenville area from some who said the character appeared to be nude.

Meanwhile, an official from the company represented on the billboard and an advertising agency representative complained at Monday's City Council meeting about the circumstances surrounding the controversy.

Naegel Outdoor Advertising Companies last week covered up the billboards for the Carpet Bargain Center on Dickinson Avenue which featured Morgan's smiling face connected to a nearly nude man's body which was obviously not his.

Now the billboards have returned. But this time, the body sports bright red briefs.

"The guy had a bathing suit before, but it was hard to see," said Don Pierce, manager of Naegel's Raleigh office.

Nationwide attention resulted from the original ad, as wire services and USA Today reported that passersby had complained to city officials.

According to Pierce, the company decided to change the signs after talking with the advertiser and the French Agency.

"We agreed," Pierce said, the new sign "will be more appropriate."

Morgan, a New Bern television announcer, has been doing Carpet Bargain Center television ads for about a year, according to Jeff French, spokesman for the French Advertising Agency. French said those who have seen Morgan know that the body isn't his.

"It's supposed to be done in humor, comedy," French said. "We don't want anybody first off to look at it with a pornographic eye."

French and Carpet Bargain Center Manager Barbara Puryear told members of the Greenville City Council their feelings about the incident at Monday's council workshop at City Hall.

"I had 30 or 40 people telling me they wanted me to come down here (to City Hall) and defend that sign because the 16 or 30 people (who complained) do not represent everybody in the city of Greenville out of 40,000 people," Ms. Puryear said.

"It is not the place of the city of Greenville to judge, chastise, criticize, or otherwise comment on the merits or demerits so long as no law was broken," she said.

"It caused us to lose the company's right of freedom of speech, it caused us to lose a valuable property right," she added. "The act of censorship received nationwide publicity in USA Today. Because of poor judgment on the part of the city, I resent it."

Jeff French told the council the agency received 15 calls through a three-day period complaining against the billboard, while a petition drive organized by a local radio station and signed by original billboard supporters collected 300 signatures.

Mayor Pro-Tem Lorraine Shinn said she believes the city overstepped its boundaries.

"I think the city attorney or city manager should say that the billboard was either legal or illegal

Storm Fizzles

MIAMI (AP) — A tropical depression in the Caribbean fizzled and was downgraded today to a tropical wave, while two other depressions brewed in the Atlantic as peak hurricane season approaches.

"We were expecting this one to have really picked up steam by now, but that just hasn't materialized," forecaster Bob Case said of the tropical wave about 300 miles south of Kingston, Jamaica.

The system, which at its strongest had winds of nearly 30 mph, was still producing widespread showers and thunderstorms over the Caribbean. The system will continue to be watched, but regeneration is unlikely, the National Hurricane Center reported.

Meanwhile, the newest tropical depression formed Monday in the middle Atlantic Ocean, east of the Lesser Antilles. The westward-moving system's highest sustained winds were near 35 mph around a loose center roughly 150 miles east of the island of Dominica, forecasters said in a 6 a.m. advisory today.

Poland To Study Economics

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The communist government today announced a special parliament session would be held Aug. 31 to review its economic policies and said it would continue measures to stem the worst strikes since the 1981 imposition of martial law.

Authorities earlier announced a curfew tonight on Jastrzebie, the city at the center of strikes that began a week ago and spread to coal mines, factories, ports and transportation facilities employing 100,000 people.

Interior Minister Czeslaw Kiszczak, saying at least 20 illegal strikes have threatened anarchy in the country, announced Monday that law enforcement forces would secure major industrial facilities and that he had empowered provinces to impose curfews in the Katowice, Szczecin and Gdansk areas.

Government spokesman Jerzy Urban, who announced the date of the parliament meeting at a news conference today, said the session would consider the entire economic situation and perhaps make adjustments in national price and income policies.

Strikers have demanded higher pay and reinstatement of Solidarity, the outlawed independent trade federation.

Quake Toll Nears 700

BIRATNAGAR, Nepal (AP) — Rescue workers coped with aftershocks and heavy rain today in an effort to reach remote regions of the Himalayas to help victims of an earthquake whose official death toll neared 700.

Rumors predicting another large quake sent thousands of panic-stricken people fleeing from their homes in India and Nepal.

Sunday's pre-dawn quake registered 6.5 on the Richter scale and claimed at least 497 lives in Nepal and 200 in India, government officials said.

Officials in both countries said they expected the death toll to climb when reports arrived from regions difficult to reach even in good weather.

The quake injured at least 2,000 people in India and 1,000 in Nepal, officials said.

In Biratnagar, a city near the Indian border 150 miles east of the Nepalese capital Katmandu, residents poured into the streets before dawn today as men ran from houses to house, shouting that a message came from Katmandu that a new quake was expected before dawn.

Smith Arrested

Greenville police said Monday that William Alton Smith, 20, of 1604 Henry St. was arrested last week on common-law robbery and first-degree burglary charges. Detective D.R. Best said Smith was charged in connection with an Aug. 8 incident at 800 Howell St., where a woman was knocked to the floor of her home by an intruder who took $115.

Assessment Needed

Students beginning kindergarten this year must have a health assessment completed, Arlene Ferren, pupil services coordinator for the Pitt County schools said.

"The assessment, which must include a medical history and physical examination with screening for vision and learning, is to be made between the first of January prior to school entry and the 31st of December after school entry," she said.

State legislation requires the results of the assessment be recorded. After the first 100 days of school, the school system must file a status report with the North Carolina Department of Human Resources.

"It is the parents' responsibility to secure the health assessment for their child from the local health department or from a private health provider," Ms. Ferren said. "Parents are also responsible for seeing that the health assessment form is sent to the appropriate school and pay any costs involved in getting the health assessment and any recommended follow-up medical evaluations and medical interventions.

Health assessment forms are available at schools, the health department and doctors' offices.

Choir To Practice

The Senior Choir of Arthur Chapel Church will practice Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

Open House Planned

The Gymnastics Club will have open house Saturday from 1 p.m. to 6 p.m. Registration is open through Aug. 31 from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m.

The club is in suites four and five of the Leon Fornes Insurance Building, 2408 S. Charles St.

For more information, call April Butler at 752-9432 or 355-3232.

Pork Vote Nears

Pork producers nationwide will vote Sept. 7-8 on the 100-percent Pork Referendum. In Pitt County, producers can vote at the Agricultural Extension Office on the second floor of the Pitt County office building, Phillip Rowan, agricultural extension agent, said.

The Pork Referendum is a 100-percent, national checkoff passed by Congress in 1985 for promotion, research and consumer information about pork. The checkoff rate is 25 cents per $100 on all hogs and pigs, and on all imported hogs and pork products.

About 70 percent of the checkoff funds are spent on promotion consistent with producers' priority direction. Funding is coordinated by elected producer leaders.

The referendum will be held in county extension offices in all 50 states. Absentee ballots may be obtained by writing the state extension office before Friday. Producers must vote in the county in which they live, no proxy voting allowed.

For more information, call the county extension office at 830-6373.

Community Night

In an effort to explain details of the Community Improvement Association, Greenville Mayor Edward E. Carter will conduct the second of his planned "community nights" Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. at the Rotary Building, 809 Johnston St.

The series of discussions is aimed at providing an overview and generating interest for the city's newly-formed project.

Carter said the association will include representatives of business, industry, religious groups, public agencies and neighborhood organizations. It is intended to help find solutions to problems which undermine Greenville's quality of life such as drug abuse, the lack of affordable housing, care and safety of the elderly and youth unemployment.

Approximately 35 people attended the first "community night" Aug. 18 at Sadie Sauter Elementary School.

The third community night is Aug. 31 at the Church of Christ, 264 Crestline Place.

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Jim Gardner, Republican candidate for lieutenant governor, said Monday he intends to make the war on drugs the top issue in his campaign.

At a noon press conference at the Pitt-Greenville Airport, Gardner proposed incentives for businesses providing employee drug-education and treatment programs.

Earlier, he endorsed creating a new, $20-million state agency to help stop drug trafficking, establishing tougher penalties for drug dealers and expanding the Drug Abuse Resistance Education program into every school in the state.

"Billions of dollars are lost every year in our country because of the abuse of drugs by working adults," Gardner said. "Not only is productivity affected, but the costs of worker time off, injury and compensation are tremendous."

"When elected lieutenant governor," Gardner said, "I will introduce legislation to provide incentives to North Carolina businesses that develop comprehensive employee assistance programs which provide ongoing drug education programs for the employees, and provide treatment programs for those who have been identified as having a drug problem.

"The cost of these programs," he added, "would be far less than the costs to business and society of continued drug abuse in the workplace."

"It's time for those who won't take serious action to take a back seat," he said. "I will take serious action against the problem of illicit drugs."

At a similar press conference in Raleigh on Monday, Gardner said he doesn't support mandatory drug testing for state employees. But, he added, "If someone steps forward and says they have a drug problem, then we should be in a position to help."

"The number one priority is the war on drugs in this state," Gardner said.

Alumni Leadership Conference Planned

ECU News Bureau

The East Carolina University Alumni Association will hold its annual Leadership Conference from 10 a.m. to 3:45 p.m. Sept. 3.

The conference will end just in time for a tailgate party at the Harrington Field parking area prior to the season's opening football game against Tennessee Tech University at 7 p.m.

The Leadership Conference is a training and information session developed for alumni who hold leadership positions with the university. Those attending will learn how to become better leaders and about ECU's current programs and activities.

Staff members from ECU's Division of Institutional Advancement, School of Medicine, Cooperative Education and Athletics will address alumni leaders in morning and afternoon sessions.

A conference highlight will be the presentation of ECU's first class of honorary alumni. Members of this Class of 1988 are C. Donald Langston of Winterville, Clauda Pennock

"Sweetheart" Todd of Greenville, William R. Roberson Sr. and his wife Frances Morgan Roberson of Bath, Donald B. Boldt of Kinston, Otha S. Rountree of Suffolk, Va., and A.A. "Des" DeSimone of Annapolis, Md.

"These special individuals deserve to be recognized for the time, effort and resources they have given for the betterment of the university," said James L. Lanier, vice chancellor for Institutional Advancement. "Because these individuals did not attend ECU, their exceptional devotion is especially admirable."

The seven were selected by the Alumni Association Board of Directors and will receive framed certificates designating them as honorary members of the ECU Alumni Association.

Also presented during the luncheon will be the Chapter of the Year and Volunteer of the Year Awards. The chapter award is based on representation at board meetings, special events and other activities. The volunteer award is presented each year to the individual providing the most service, time and support for the Alumni Association.

Dr. Richard R. Eakin, ECU chancellor, will present a welcome at the luncheon, begins at 12:45 p.m. at Greenville Country Club. Eugene B. Horne Jr., president of The Pantry Inc. and a 1964 graduate of ECU, will deliver a keynote address.

The conference is open to all alumni and friends of the university. For reservations or more information, contact Audrey Strickland, Office of Alumni Affairs, Taylor-Slaughter Alumni Center, East Carolina University, Greenville, N.C., 27858, 757-6072.

To reserve game tickets, call the Athletic Ticket Office at 1-800-435-7328 or 757-6500.

Agriculture Cost Share Program for Nonpoint Source Pollution

The program pays 75 percent of the average cost for each of the approved conservation plans for protecting water quality, such as conservation tillage, stripcropping, animal waste management and conversion of cropland.

Cost-share allocations are based on which counties contribute the greatest share of nonpoint source water pollution and on the availability of technical assistance from the district office.

Auctioneer Competes

Jimmy R. Hudson of Chocovinity will compete with more than 50 professional tobacco auctioneers Sept. 17 in Danville, Va., at the 8th annual World Tobacco Auctioneering Championship.

Contestants will be judged on the basis of their chants, their ability to see and interpret bids, their pace and salesmanship during a mock tobacco sale.

Property Is Stolen From Cars

Investigators said nine thefts — five involving property stolen from parked vehicles — were reported to Greenville police Monday.

Officer B.W. Lewis said $12 from a cash register and $30 in change from a coin operated machine was taken from Bill's Used Tires in a break-in reported at 8:28 a.m., while Officer R.L. Smith said $20 worth of plants were taken from T4 Wilson Acres in an incident reported at 8:35 a.m.

Officer S.A. Bass said a radio-tape player was taken from a car at Eastgate Motors on Greenville Boulevard in an incident reported at 9:13 p.m., while Officer J.K. McCarthy said a radio-tape player was taken from a car parked at 211 N. Elm St. in an incident reported at 2:52 p.m.

Officer B.M. Highland said $180 worth of tools and a $320 tool box were taken from a garage at 302 Stanwood Dr. in an incident reported at 4:12 p.m., while Officer E.L. Butts said $50 worth of tools and a $50 radio were taken from a truck parked at The Plaza mall in an incident reported at 6:45 p.m.

Officer R.C. Allbrook said a bicycle was taken from Shawn's Grocery on Broad Street in an incident reported at 7:14 p.m. and a purse containing $10 was taken from a car parked at 505 Mumford Rd. in an incident reported at 8:23 p.m., while Officer R.J. Brewington said a set of binoculars were taken from a truck parked at The Plaza mall in an incident reported at 9:32 p.m.

City Council Forms Panel To Study Incentives For Fire-Rescue Squad

By GREG LAUDICK
Reflector Staff Writer

The Greenville City Council unanimously agreed Monday to form a council subcommittee to study existing incentives for various members of the city's fire-rescue squad and to conduct a comprehensive study of the department's advanced life-support service.

Council's decision to form a subcommittee followed a presentation at the workshop session by various Greenville fire-rescue employees who claim incentives do not currently exist to maintain emergency medical technicians at an advanced intermediate (AI) level.

Fire-rescue employee Leonard Sawyer told the council the department has 14 AIs but that number could drop, in part because of inadequate financial compensation.

"We're going to extra schools, we're pulling hours each month to keep our certification and we're doing a lot of extra studying because you're talking about peoples lives," Sawyer said.

"We're just not getting compensated for it."

The eight other fire-rescue employees with Sawyer agreed.

"The problem is, there is no money in it," Sawyer said. "That's why there are no AIs. If you'll put some money in it, you'll get people interested in it."

Sawyer claims the city currently has qualified EMTs, but without financial incentives, there is no reason for those employees to try to increase their level of certification.

"They're not going to do the extra studying, go to extra classes because there's not that money going into the hip pocket," he explained.

Currently the city has several classifications of rescue employees. EMTs can administer first aid while EMT intermediates are certified to draw blood.

An EMT advanced-intermediate, or AI, can operate a medical fibrillator (often used for emergency heart problems) and administer certain drugs. The department has no employees authorized to operate as paramedics.

"I've been employed with the city for 13 years now," Sawyer said. "I've never seen the city take second place in anything, and now we have other (rescue squads in the county) getting above us when we could be doing better."

The new subcommittee will include council member Nancy Jenkins, Mayor Pro-Tem Lorraine Shinn, two representatives from the fire-rescue department, an appointee from the city's finance department and Dr. Kathleen Cline, East Carolina University assistant professor of emergency medicine.

Dr. Cline, who also attended the workshop, told the council the city should also consider whether it wants to develop a paramedic unit system.

"You need to look at what it takes to train the current AIs up to paramedic level, but also what it takes to provide a good paramedic coverage for the entire city."

"There are many different ways to provide good paramedic coverage for a large area that can be done creatively and fairly economically," she said.

"I do realize we have a problem and I realize we are going to have to address it," Mrs. Shinn said. "We do have some men who have gone above and beyond and gotten additional training and they are not being reimbursed for that."

Council member Inez Fridley agreed that the issue is important and stressed the subcommittee should move quickly in forming a recommendation to the council.

Mayor Ed Carter inquired as to why the salary for AIs was not considered in last year's pay study by the Arthur Young organization.

Personnel Director Gerry Dail said salary levels were considered in the study, but that the past year has seen an "explosion" of salary levels for emergency medical service employees across the state.

Hatcher Protests Probe In Robeson

RALEIGH (AP) — An American Indian accused of taking up to 20 people hostage at a Robeson County newspaper has begun picketing the Executive Mansion in Raleigh to protest an investigation of alleged corruption in county government.

Eddie Hatcher marched up and down the block across the street from the mansion Monday after getting a permit from the city.

"That's state property over there, so I have to apply to the state for a permit," Hatcher said of the brick sidewalk that surrounds the walls of the mansion. "That will take a couple of days, so I got a city permit to picket over here."

Hatcher carried a sign reading "Who Are You Protecting, Jim? Are You Involved?" on one side and "Unsolved Murders? Corrupt Officials?"

Major Drug Deals? Where Was Jim?"

A 10-hour siege at The Robesonian newspaper Feb. 1 ended after Gov. Jim Martin agreed to form a state task force to investigate the hostage-takers' charges of corruption in local law enforcement agencies.

But the task force, headed by Martin's chief of staff, Phil Kirk, said in an interim report it had found little evidence to back up the charges.

Hatcher, 30, and co-defendant Timothy Jacobs, 20, have said the task force did not perform a thorough investigation of their charges.

Hatcher, who is free on bond and living in Raleigh while awaiting his trial, said his city permit allows him to picket from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. every day through Friday.

Candidates Sign NAACP Accords

CHARLOTTE (AP) — State NAACP officials, carrying a six-year-old crusade with businesses into the political arena, have reached agreements with 10 statewide and congressional candidates to spend more campaign dollars with blacks.

The one-page Fair Share agreements, reached with the candidates' campaigns, generally pledge the campaigns to a "moral commitment" to use more black campaign managers and consultants, advertise with black media and increase purchases from black businesses.

It is the first time the NAACP has initiated Fair Share agreements with political campaigns, NAACP officials said Monday.

"If you look at the hundreds of millions of dollars that are spent in elections, it makes sense," said Rodney Sumler, spokesman for the state NAACP. "The black vote is a crucial part of the campaign. It's only fair that a candidate spend money in the black community."

"Equity should know no bounds," said state NAACP President Kelly Alexander Jr.

The NAACP says it has 36,000 members in North Carolina.

Seven Democrats and three Republicans signed the agreements. The state Republican and Democratic parties also signed.

The Democrats included gubernatorial candidate Bob Jordan; state Sen. Tony Rand, running for lieutenant governor, and state auditor Ed Renfrow, running for re-election.

Also signing agreements were four Democratic congressional hopefuls: Rep. Stephen Neal of Winston-Salem; Rep. Charlie Rose of Fayetteville; Tom Gilmore of Julian, and Mark Sholander of Pineville.

Sholander faces 9th District U.S. Rep. Alex McMillan, a Republican, in the fall. McMillan made no agreement.

Republicans pledging to Fair Share agreements were: John Carrington, running for secretary of state against Rufus Edmisten; Ed Garner Jr., who will face Renfrow for state auditor, and N.C. Court of Appeals Judge Robert Orr.

One who didn't sign: Gov. Jim Martin, running for re-election.

"I don't have any problems with the objectives and I feel we're meeting those," said Martin campaign manager Kevin Brown, who said the campaign was using black businesses and would buy advertising in black media.

"As a matter of policy, we keep personnel and other considerations like that within the campaign," Brown said.

Law May Change On Fetus Disposal

RALEIGH (AP) — The executive director of the N.C. Civil Liberties Union says the discovery in Chicago of fetuses from North Carolina could bring a change in state law regarding the disposal of fetuses.

"Any laboratory should make provisions for humane disposal, just as a matter of taste and propriety, and out of respect for the volatility of the issue," Jim Shields said.

"Tissue from humans ought to be disposed of in a humane way, and I'm not suggesting burial or a religious ceremony. I would not be surprised if this is setting up the state of North Carolina for legislative action on a humane disposal statute."

Shields said one task being undertaken by the ACLU's reproductive rights project was seeing that medical remains were handled with respect.

State Needs More Adult Drivers But Schools Apparently Will Open

By DENNIS PATTERSON
Associated Press Writer

A year after federal officials sent North Carolina educators into a panic by declaring that all school bus drivers would have to be at least 18, state officials say they are pleased at their progress in hiring adults.

"It was really scary to see we had to come up with 4,000 (adult) drivers, but the local units have done a good job of recruiting," said Norfleet Gardner, director of transportation for the state Department of Public Instruction.

Gardner said there are about 500 driving jobs yet to be filled in the final weeks before all the schools in the state open.

"All told, we're fairly pleased, considering where we were last year at this time," he said.

A year ago, the U.S. Labor Department announced it would not renew an exemption which had allowed North Carolina to use teenage bus drivers. The exemption had been granted every year since 1967.

The Labor Department originally ruled the state must put adult drivers in all buses by Dec. 31, 1987, then extended the exemption until April 15 and finally June 15.

The state had already stopped using 16-year-old drivers, but had more than 4,000 17-year-olds among its 13,000 drivers.

The Legislature this summer approved increased funding that raised basic bus driver pay from about $4.90 an hour to $6.10.

"There's no question that the extra money has been some help," said Dave Hinson, transportation director for Cleveland County, where schools opened Monday. "Any time a little extra money comes in, it always helps."

"It's hard to get somebody to drive a bus for an hour or two in the morning and an hour or two in the afternoon when they can work at a fast-food restaurant making about the same money with twice as many hours," he said.

Hinson said Cleveland County has 196 drivers in the county school system and the two city systems at Shelby and Kings Mountain. About 10 of the drivers for the county system are teachers.

"The superintendent has said he wants to eliminate teachers driving buses, so we need to keep what we've got and add a few more," Hinson said.

Davidson County schools, which open Wednesday, have enough adults to drive the county's 233 buses, but need some more substitutes, said Thad Hartley.

"We have sufficient drivers to begin school," Hartley said. "We don't have a great number of substitute drivers, but we feel like we have enough to begin."

Hartley said the increased state money has helped, as has $100,000 in local funds used for a driver incentive package.

"We're paying about $100 extra a month in a local supplement, mainly in the form of an incentive package," Hartley said. "That generally requires the driver to be on the bus every day, maintain a clean bus and keep an accurate, regular schedule."

"That has been the primary key in attracting adults to drive," he said.

"We've encouraged principals, wherever possible, to employ part-time custodians, cafeteria personnel and any other part-time personnel as bus drivers because the bus driving could give them enough hours to make a full-time job," Hartley said.

"With enough hours to qualify as full-time, they then get a benefit package including health insurance and so on."

"For some people, driving a few hours a day is attractive, but the majority of people want a full-time job," he said.

Eldridge Braswell of the Johnston County school system, which opens Sept. 6, said school officials there are encouraging part-time employees to drive buses.

"I think that's probably the better way to go," Braswell said. "That way, we'll have people here if we need them in an emergency."

Braswell said he had enough drivers for his 225 buses, but was still recruiting substitutes.

"We think we've got enough," he said. "Of course, you never know. Some adults we have certified might back out at the last minute."

He said the county is offering no supplement, but "I've been a little bit surprised at the quality of the people we got. I had some concerns initially, but we've attracted some good people with the higher pay."

Thornburg Argues Death Penalty OK

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina's death-penalty laws are constitutional — in contrast to Maryland's — because prosecutors must prove "beyond a reasonable doubt" that the penalty is warranted, state Attorney General Lacy Thornburg says.

"Under North Carolina law, if jurors agree that there are mitigating circumstances, but cannot unanimously agree upon them, the death penalty is not arbitrarily imposed as under the Maryland scheme," Thornburg said Monday in arguments before the N.C. Supreme Court.

"In North Carolina, the state must yet prove unanimously and beyond a reasonable doubt that the aggravating circumstances are sufficiently substantial to warrant the death penalty."

The Maryland law was ruled unconstitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court earlier this summer. But Thornburg said Monday North Carolina's death-penalty law differs significantly from Maryland's in the way it deals with aggravating and mitigating factors.

Aggravating factors are those which would tend to support the death penalty, while mitigating factors are those that would tend to make life imprisonment a more appropriate sentence. In both Maryland and North Carolina, juries must unanimously approve each aggravating or mitigating factor.

The hearing Monday was called by the state court to determine whether the U.S. Supreme Court ruling affects North Carolina's death penalty law.

The court will consider the oral arguments, as well as legal briefs filed by both sides, before ruling on the law.

Agency Faces Auditor's Probe

RALEIGH (AP) — State Auditor Edward Renfrow said his office will conduct a "full-blown audit" of the Office of Administrative Hearings because of "extravagant" furniture purchases and questionable out-of-state trips, Edwar

The audit, which will begin next month, follows a financial review that Renfrow said had found numerous instances of inadequate records concerning travel costs and purchases of furniture and office equipment.

"Some of the items we found, such as chandeliers, a mahogany desk and state seals to hang on the walls, were extravagant," Renfrow said Monday.

"The state budget manual says when you spend state money, you spend it like it was yours," Renfrow said.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

First Step

Combat Drugs Candidly, Actively

The challenge has been issued, but will the battle be fought as candidly and aggressively as the call to arms?

When Greenville Mayor Ed Carter stood on a street corner in a major narcotic trafficking neighborhood and declared war on drugs, he dealt the first blow in the community's fight to rid itself of an escalating crisis. Awareness and willingness to face an unpleasant problem head-on must come before effective action.

Drug use and trafficking is a noxious, pervasive disease. Although those who live in poor neighborhoods often feel and see the most poignant effects, the affliction knows no street boundaries and does not recognize black or white. For that reason, any effort to combat it must be community-wide.

Mayor Carter's Community Improvement Association brings together key persons and good minds — and focuses those resources on problem-solving. That approach is laudable, but it won't work if the group doesn't recognize growing drug use as a symptom of a larger crisis. To effectively diminish drug trafficking and the ills it brings to a community, the source of the scourge must be neutralized.

Statistics on arrests don't lie — drug trade is established here. Greenville, because of growth and convenient location, has become, for eastern North Carolina, a center of drug trade. The problems that produces — increased crime, for one — is a high price paid for urbanization and good geographic placement.

But more than growth and convenience prompt these troubles. Demand and profit feed the drug business, and these two issues must be fought aggressively by the community. That means active prosecution of drug traffickers and proactive drug education and prevention programs in schools and churches in every segment of the community.

Most significantly, the causes of drug trade and use must be addressed, and that process may be a painful recognition for Greenville. Drug abuse is a symptom of economic and social disenfranchisement. Those who traffic have not or cannot find their way into the mainstream of the community's economy. Those who use have not or cannot integrate themselves into existing social structure — the institutions such as family, school and church are not relevant.

To fight drugs, law enforcement must cut off the supply.

To fight drugs, accessible mental health and drug abuse treatment programs are essential.

To fight drugs, a community must stress an education system that teaches useful, pertinent skills and develop a diverse economy — one that can offer a broad range of jobs.

To fight drugs, families and churches must face the problem without blinking — not turn away from it simply because it is discomforting or it's not visible in their neighborhood.

The Community Improvement Association is a meaningful first step toward these goals. But to do its job, the group must honestly identify the complex and unpleasant causes of the drug crisis. It must then work, without flinching, to dissolve them.

He Knows, He Just Doesn't Understand

WASHINGTON — There is something rather attractive in George Bush's awareness that he has serious political shortcomings. The problem is, he never quite understands precisely what they are.

The result is that he keeps trying to balance his self-perceived weaknesses and succeeds only in canceling himself out.

That, for me, is the intriguing thing about his selection of Dan Quayle as his running mate.

Bush knows that he has a "gender gap," but, not quite understanding why, imagines it has to do with the inadequacy of his sex appeal. So he turns to Quayle, young and certifiably good-looking (though more like TV's Pat Sajak than Hollywood's Robert Redford, to whom he is endlessly compared) to deliver the women's vote.

It seems not to have occurred to the vice president that his looks have nothing to do with his gender gap. His problem is that he has been unable to persuade women that he shares their interests, their priorities, their view of reality. He has come down too often on the wrong side of women's issues.

Quayle does nothing for him on those issues, having voted against the Equal Rights Amendment and the Civil Rights Restoration Act and having established himself as a solid anti-abortionist.

I don't mean to suggest that all women endorse what is supposed to be the woman's point of view on these matters. But to the extent that they qualify as women's issues, Bush winds up on the wrong side.

The interesting thing is that Bush was no hard-line opponent on any of these issues. He was ambivalent on abortion rights and ERA, and a reluctant 11th-hour supporter of President Reagan's veto of civil-rights restoration. He might have been able to finesse these issues as ones on which reasonable minds might differ. Instead, he chose Quayle, and thereby underscored his lack of sympathy with women's issues while insulting (as frivolous) the very people he was trying to win. He canceled himself out.

The one unarguable fact of Bush's long and varied career is that he was a legitimate war hero. And while he's not given to personal boasting, he might have arranged to let his war record speak for itself.

But by choosing Quayle, who seems to have joined the Indiana National Guard in order to avoid the Vietnam-era draft, he has managed to raise doubts even among his supporters in the hawkish right. Again, he has canceled himself out.

Bush's aristocratic origins and demeanor cast doubt on his ability to relate to the more modestly born, the have-nots and the ethnic minorities. But here is a man whose son married a Hispanic, a fact that might have gone a long way in ameliorating his aristocratic image.

Again, instead of letting the obvious speak for itself, he chose to make public-relations hay of his son's marital choice.

Couldn't he have trusted us to see the complexion of his grandchildren? But by calling attention to "the little brown ones over there," he succeeded only in planting the notion that he was trying to exploit their mixed ethnicity for his own political purposes. His effort to gain simpatia with Spanish voters may have succeeded in alienating many of them. He canceled himself out.

Not all of what has happened to Bush in the past several days is the result of such ham-handedness. Some of it is just plain bad luck.

Take the business of Quayle and the National Guard. There's hardly any way Bush could have known that the rich and well-connected Quayle had relied on family influence to keep him out of Vietnam.

Quayle could have minimized the damage with a little candor: "Look, I was a scared kid at the time. As it seemed to me, I had three choices: to risk my life in a no-win war, to run off to Canada, or to find an alternative way of serving my country. I chose the last. Looking back, I wish I had done things differently, but please try to understand my choice in the context of the times."

Instead, he has tried, with transparent hypocrisy, to make it appear that he positively wanted to serve in the dear old Guard, and that Vietnam had nothing to do with it.

And now Bush is stuck with two unattractive alternatives: either to defend Quayle's resort to moneyed privilege and hope that no new unsettling disclosures are forthcoming or to dump him if the news gets worse.

Either way, he runs the risk once again of canceling himself out.

Open Up, Let The Public Know

RALEIGH — When legislative candidates shuffle into editorial offices looking for newspaper endorsements this fall, they may hear a few lectures on openness in state government.

The legislative affairs committee of the N.C. Press Association plans an aggressive lobbying campaign for stronger open records and open meetings laws in 1989 and, as NCPA's lobbyist said, there's no better time to start lobbying than when candidates are looking for endorsements.

"We are going to quit being merely defensive and go on the offensive," Hugh Stevens, NCPA counsel and lobbyist, told editors during their annual summer meeting at Kiawah Island, S.C., recently. "When politicians come to see you... (during the campaign) hold their feet to the fire. Ask them hard questions about open meetings and open records. Ask them why North Carolina should not have the most open government in America."

Although the state's open meetings law was strengthened two years ago, Stevens said that NCPA feels it could still be greatly improved.

For example, the number of reasons which public bodies use to go into executive session should be reduced, Stevens said. Public bodies are increasingly using a meeting with the city attorney as an excuse to close their doors.

NCPA also wants minutes kept of executive sessions so that they can be inspected later, and it wants state law to prohibit the adjournment of an executive session at one point and its continuance at another.

The open meetings law should also apply to the legislature, NCPA says, and to the legislative Services Commission. The Council of State, which has met openly during the administration of Gov. Jim Martin, should also be covered by the law.

North Carolina needs stronger public access to public records. Stevens said NCPA is calling for legislation that would guarantee that all settlements of lawsuits involving public bodies be made public.

Stevens said that NCPA will also want greater public access to portions of the personnel files that should be public information.

Finally, NCPA will seek repeal of North Carolina's criminal libel law. South Carolina's criminal libel law was recently used to jail a newspaper editor who sought to expose corrupt county officials, and that jailing has raised a national effort to eliminate criminal libel. Such a move would not effect the state's civil libel laws.

NCPA will be striking just when the issue of openness is hottest. Gov. Jim Martin has made the issue one of his strongest over the past four years, and Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, his Democratic opponent, has tried to lead legislative reforms. Candidates would have been under political pressure for more pledges of openness next sessions, anyway. NCPA's actions will only add to the momentum.

In The Oval Office, Dan Quayle Would Be A 4-F

WASHINGTON — Dan Quayle is a fortunate man. Born rich and handsome, he now has his credentials for the vice presidency questioned because he ducked the draft during the Vietnam War. For Quayle, this is the luckiest break of all. It obscures how unqualified he is for the office he seeks.

At 41 years of age, Quayle is in his second term in the U.S. Senate where he is known for very little. In the House, where he served previously, he passed through that body like a servant emptying ashtrays at a party: No one noticed him. "Down deep," a member of the House told me, "this man is superficial."

For Quayle, this performance was characteristic. At DePauw University, his professors recall someone who challenged the laws of physics: a near perfect vacuum. "He was as vapid a student as I can recall," said Michael Lawrence, who attempted to teach both constitutional law and American government to Quayle. Another of Quayle's teachers offered a similar assessment. "Dan Quayle was a crashingly mediocre student," said Robert Sedlack, who taught him English.

So what qualifies Quayle for the vice presidency? Everything. The office is the Founding Father's little joke — often a political purgatory for men, like George Bush, who would place their ambition before their principles.

But what of the presidency? That's a different matter — in fact, the heart of the matter. After all, the Vice President is the President's understudy, the constitutional next of kin who gets the first call. Here the qualifications of Dan Quayle are appallingly absent.

The choice of Dan Quayle shows that George Bush has a Marie Antoinette side to him. Quayle is his version of let-them-eat-cake — a thumb in the eye to both history and good judgment. This is not an example of a presidential candidate crassly balancing the ticket — John Kennedy choosing Lyndon Johnson or, more recently, Michael Dukakis picking Lloyd Bentsen. Those men were senators of stature and, indeed, had sought the presidency on their own.

No, Quayle represents Bush at his worst — a view of the GOP and, ultimately, the White House as a stogy law firm. Based on background and connections but not on merit, Bush has made Quayle a junior partner — a hearty fellow who presumably knows the ingredients of a good martini. Bush passed over Bob Dole, Jack Kemp and — also in Indiana — Richard Lugar, because he is uncomfortable in the presence of strong men and sought youth to balance his ticket. He forgot his own rhetoric. When it came to Quayle, adoption was always an option.

No person is immortal. Accidents can happen and Quayle could be President a day after Bush takes the oath of office — assuming he wins in November. In that case, the United States will have a President whose colleagues know him as shallow, whose teachers recall him as mediocre — who leads no constituency, no wing of his party and whose administrative experience was mostly as assistant publisher at a newspaper owned by his old man.

Worse, Quayle has shown in the last few days that he lacks both character and candor. There is a bit of the Richard Nixon in him. He turns legitimate questions about his National Guard service into an attack on the press and talks of his reserve duty behind a typewriter as if it had been winter at Valley Forge. He turns aside inquiry by noting the irrelevant: He is small-town boy; he has a wife; they have children. He stoops to demagoguery — the assertion that guardsmen everywhere have been sullied. His defense of National Guard service has been one long Checkers speech. Will he soon produce a dog?

Ever since George Bush wrapped up the GOP presidential nomination (right after the New Hampshire primary in February) he has promised us a vice-presidential candidate in his own image: someone with the standing to walk into the Oval Office and say what's on his mind. But it takes the willing suspension of disbelief to imagine Quayle barging in on Bush and telling him to reverse engines.

Can anyone imagine Bush listening to Dan Quayle? Based upon what? Quayle's experience? His towering intellect? His well-documented candor and good judgment? His standing in the party or his leadership of a constituency group?

Nothing Dan Quayle has done in the last week even approaches presidential. Indeed, he has been discovered for what he is: a chest-pounding defender of the Vietnam War who, when his time came, had daddy arrange a different version of flat feet. That, though, could only work once. For the presidency, there is no National Guard. In the Oval Office, Dan Quayle would be 4-F.

Pace Of Development In Arab-Israeli Conflict Accelerates

TEL AVIV, Israel — According to the conventional wisdom, impending elections in Israel and/or the United States are supposed to move the Arab-Israeli conflict into the diplomatic doldrums. In fact, the pace of events in the past few weeks has been almost frenetic, and more developments are likely before Israeli and American voters go to the polls in November.

No agreements are now being discussed, and peace is clearly not at hand. Still, there is a sense that something really significant is happening — the first faint glimmerings of a Palestinian political dialogue with Israel — and it could constitute a decisive turning point in the conflict.

Palestinians have communicated with Israel for a long time. But most of that time the dominant message was rejection and the primary medium was violence. After 1967 the Palestine Liberation Organization was responsible for most Palestinian signaling; a second channel was opened by residents of the West Bank and Gaza last December when they launched a prolonged and widespread uprising against Israeli rule — the "intifada."

The Palestinians effectively communicated what they rejected — Israel in general and the occupation in particular and what they wanted, a state of their own — but they rarely made clear what, if anything, they were willing to give in return. Their behavior implied a desire to solve the Israeli-Palestinian conflict without Israel, and their method was to impose unilateral concessions on Israel, either directly through violence or indirectly through pressure on third parties (the Arab world, Europe, the United States) that would then force Israel to surrender.

It is also true that there were occasional messages of a more conciliatory nature, but these were so hesitant, ambiguous and lacking in authority that they were picked up only by those few in Israel who closely followed Palestinian debates. The political antennae of most Israelis are much more attuned to dangers than to opportunities, and Israel responded to Palestinian negativism with a negativism of its own: no negotiations with the PLO, and no Palestinian state.

The events of recent weeks, however, suggest that all this may be about to change. In late June, Bassam abu Sharif, senior adviser to PLO chairman Yasser Arafat, issued a statement acknowledging Israel's right to live in security and calling for direct Israeli-Palestinian negotiations. At the end of July, King Hussein renounced any claim to the West Bank, thereby taking Jordan out of the diplomatic equation. In early August, someone leaked a discussion paper seized by Israeli security forces in the East Jerusalem office of Faisal Husseini's Arab Studies Center that had been circulating among West Bank intellectuals and activists identified with the PLO; the document called for the declaration of a Palestinian state, whose provisional government would negotiate a peace settlement with Israel. And just recently, Abu Iyad, deputy leader of Arafat's Fatah organization, called for mutual Israeli-PLO recognition and suggested that the Palestine National Council revise those parts of the national covenant calling for the destruction of Israel.

It is not altogether clear what led to these developments. Perhaps the PLO felt that continued rigidity would permit semi-independent forces in the West Bank to assume primacy in the Palestinian movement; perhaps Palestinians in general began to fear that failure to present a reasonable political platform after the violence related to the intifada had peaked in the spring would cause potential opportunities to be frittered away, as has so often happened in the past.

Whatever the reasons, some Palestinians are beginning to address themselves directly to Israelis in terms that not only demand Palestinian rights but also couple these demands with the vision of a more peaceful, secure future for both peoples. In other words, some Palestinians have apparently decided to adopt what well-intentioned bystanders have long argued is the only realistic Palestinian strategy — to play a more positive and constructive role in the Israeli political process, including the elections.

Furthermore, there are some signs that the message may be starting to resonate in Israel. The so-called "Husseini Document" did not arouse the emotional uproar presumably anticipated by those who authorized its release. And Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, the Labor Party leader who contemptuously dismisses most signs of possible PLO moderation, reacted to Abu Iyad's statement by agreeing, subject to some stringent preconditions, to direct negotiations with Palestinian representatives, thus endorsing an idea that his party had consistently rejected since it was first proposed in the 1970s.

Of course, none of these developments are sufficient to guarantee serious negotiations, much less a peaceful settlement of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. The Palestinians are still far from providing the authoritative and unambiguous reassurance needed to make a real impact on Israeli public opinion. And too many hopes have already been dashed by some terrorist outrage or by Arafat's slipperiness and indecisiveness for anyone now to predict that the PLO will not disappoint once again. Moreover, for many Israelis the intifada has led to a hardening of attitudes toward the Palestinians. Likud leaders, including Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, are as determined as ever to discredit the PLO and prevent a Palestinian state, and some politicians are advocating more extreme measures, like unilateral annexation and large-scale deportations.

Family Ties Contribute To Success

When Westerners look for the driving force behind Asia's remarkable economic ascendancy, they usually point to the highly centralized, state-led economies of Japan and South Korea. Largely obscured, however, has been the economic emergence of powers of a very different kind, the more than 46 million-strong Chinese diaspora.

Wherever they have settled, from the suburbs of Los Angeles to balmy Singapore, overseas Chinese have created vibrant, fast-growing entrepreneurial economies. Over the last decade, the economies most closely associated with the Chinese diaspora — Hong Kong, Singapore, Taiwan — have experienced annual growth rates upwards of 10 percent, among the highest in the world.

In Hong Kong they have constructed one of the world's pre-eminent business centers, complete with the Pacific's largest container port and second leading financial center. In Taiwan, the largest center of Chinese business activity, they have created arguably the most successful newly industrializing nation of Asia, with a per capita gross national product 50 percent higher than South Korea. And where South Korea's giant-dominated economy remains burdened with close to $50 billion in foreign debt, Taiwan sits on rising foreign exchange reserves of more than $76 billion, among the largest such caches in the world.

The power of those economies is particularly in their trade relations with the United States. By 1985, the overseas Chinese-dominated economies of Asia, reaching from Taiwan to Indonesia and Thailand, accounted for bilateral trade nearly equal to U.S.-Japan trade just five years earlier. And since 1983, Taiwan and Hong Kong have ranked first and sixth as the fastest-growing markets for U.S. exports.

This powerful international presence grew largely from the dispersion of millions of Chinese throughout the Pacific Basin over the course of 150 years. Escaping from famine, revolutions and economic chaos, these Chinese, most from the southern provinces of Guangdong and Fukien, often started out as manual laborers, working the gold mines and railroads in California as well as the plantations of Southeast Asia. Soon some also opened small businesses such as restaurants, laundries, trading companies and factories.

As these businesses began to flourish early in this century, the overseas Chinese began to become known as "the Jews of Asia" — both for their prowess at business ventures and their alleged clannishness. And, like their European counterparts, the transplanted Chinese retained much of their national culture and language, even while emerging, as a key component in the economic fabric of their host countries.

Similarly, their successes also sparked several violent pogroms, including some in the Western United States. For many countries, particularly in Southeast Asia, the

'Wherever they have settled, from the suburbs of Los Angeles to balmy Singapore, overseas Chinese have created vibrant, fast-growing entrepreneurial economies.'

Chinese play the role of middlemen or small shopkeepers and landlords, who often feel the brunt of an indigenous population's resentment. Strong patterns of anti-Chinese discrimination still persist in places like Indonesia and Malaysia.

In isolation, the overseas Chinese developed a highly self-sufficient, family-centered economic outlook in stark contrast to the centralized perspective of the Koreans and Japanese. "The Japanese state had an enormous stability that allowed them to identify with larger entities while all that was left to the Chinese was the family concept," notes Wellington P.K. Chan, professor of Chinese history at Occidental College in Los Angeles and a leading expert on Chinese business history. "The Japanese deeply care about the corporate house or the country, not so only the blood relationships. But the Chinese could trust only the family."

Although a few of these family operations — such as Y.C. Wang's Formosa Plastics Group and the Y.K. Pao shipping empire — have grown into large multibillion-dollar concerns, the Chinese diaspora economy remains dominated by small, family-oriented operations. Taiwan, for instance, has less than half the population of South Korea but boasts nearly three times as many registered companies.

This individualism is even more pronounced in Hong Kong, a free trade haven where Chinese businessmen operate under economic conditions even Adam Smith might have seen as a "natural system of perfect liberty." By 1980 there was one business establishment for every 20 people, a rate of entrepreneurship twice that of the United States. More than 95 percent of those companies had under 100 employees and received all their financing from family and friends.

Yet despite their small size, many Chinese diaspora companies have proven highly adept at international trade. For instance, one mid-sized company, the Chung Cheong group, with only $100 million in sales, controls business ventures that sprawl from Beijing and Hong Kong to Los Angeles.

To discover reality, follow the money. Over the past year Hong Kong entrepreneurs, who are funneling an estimated $1 billion annually into the United States, have emerged as leading purchasers of properties and businesses in San Francisco. Diaspora Chinese, mostly from Taiwan, now control upwards of two dozen banks in California. Often backed by capital from back home, Chinese immigrant entrepreneurs have established more than 230 high-technology enterprises in the state, including such prominent companies as AST Research, Everex Corp. and Solectron.

Yet even as more and more overseas Chinese cluster in California, their influence is also growing within China itself — as much as three quarters of the direct investment in China's booming Guangdong Province. Indirect two-way trade between China and Taiwan, once unthinkable, is expected to top $2 billion this year, up from $1.5 billion the year earlier.

Secure at bases in the United States, Canada and other stable democracies, overseas Chinese businessmen are also serving an important role as middlemen in dealings between the People's Republic and overseas commercial interests. With China itself developing into one of the world's leading economic powers, the entrepreneurs of the diaspora are likely to emerge as ever more central players in future developments on both sides of the Pacific Basin.

Crucial to the success of the Chungs and other similar organizations has been the presence of family members within numerous key countries. Chung family members, for instance, hold citizenship in eight nations, including China, Great Britain, Hong Kong, Switzerland, the United States, Canada, Singapore and Thailand. Using far-flung relatives as an informal intelligence network, the family trades in a staggering array of products ranging from Thai tobacco and Chinese tea to U.S.-made software packages. Its factories produce everything from sports shirts and cigarettes to multiuser computer systems.

Yet with all that complexity, the Group continues to run in the traditional family-oriented manner, with no formal board of directors or chain of command, under the leadership of octogenarian founder K.S. Chung. "Nothing we do really makes sense unless you see it in the context of the family," explains Los Angeles-based Wing, No. 3 son and probable heir to K.S. Chung. "Like any family, things here get done on an ad hoc kind of basis. Everyone sort of does a little bit of everything. You can't chart it out on a piece of paper."

Wing's presence in Los Angeles, where the family retains growing computer and garment operations, reflects the increased number of diaspora entrepreneurs in the United States, particularly in California.

Guard Shot

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A Queens College security officer is in good condition at Charlotte Memorial Hospital after being shot by intruders with his own weapon.

Mark W. Karriker, 25, is recuperating from a bullet wound of the abdomen from the shooting, which occurred about 3 a.m. Monday.

Karriker told police he was overpowered by two or three men. A college spokesman characterized the shooting as an "isolated incident."

Queens is a private Presbyterian college that becomes co-educational with the fall semester, which begins Thursday.

Sentenced

RALEIGH (AP) — A former Brunswick County physician, described by her lawyer as a champion of the poor and needy, has been sentenced to three years in prison and a suspended term on 76 counts of defrauding Medicaid and Medicare, the state Crippled Children's Fund and a private insurance company.

U.S. District Judge W. Earl Britt said Monday he had structured the sentence so Dr. Karen Paine, who was convicted in June, would serve a year in prison before parole. She then will begin a five-year probationary sentence.

Britt also ordered her to repay $7,471 to the programs and to pay $3,300 in fines.

In a sentencing memorandum, a prosecutor had told Britt that Ms. Paine, who practiced in Shallotte, had obtained a much larger sum through fraud.

Landmark Burns

DURHAM (AP) — The 8-foot-high dollhouse in front of Mary and Russell Barringer Jr.'s home had been a Hope Valley landmark for more than 45 years.

On Sunday, someone intentionally set the dollhouse on fire, an investigator said. The fire destroyed the inside and much of the exterior.

The dollhouse was given to Mrs. Barringer for her fifth Christmas in 1940 by her father, Hubert Teer. The dollhouse is a scale model of the house she grew up in.

The Barringers have always left the dollhouse open so neighborhood children could play inside. At Christmas, the dollhouse is decorated.

Recruits

CHAPEL HILL (AP) — A dozen recruits are undergoing a 15-week training course at the Institute of Government in Chapel Hill, where they are taking classes in juvenile law, pursuit driving and covert activities.

But the recruits aren't police officers; they are training to become wildlife officers. The classes are among more than 40 topics offered in the program, which started in May.

"Wildlife officers don't learn only those things related directly to wildlife law enforcement," said Lt. Mike Lambert. "They have to learn about electrical and hazardous materials, radiological monitoring and controlled substances, and they have to train with riot gear and tear gas, although it's not a frequent task of the wildlife officer."

Survey Indicates Most Moderate Baptists Want To Change Support

DECATUR, Ga. (AP) — About two-thirds of the "most militant moderates" within the Southern Baptist Convention want to reduce or eliminate their support of the nation's largest Protestant denomination, according to a survey by a newspaper aligned with a moderate faction.

But about one-third of the more than 800 respondents to the SBC Today survey wanted to leave intact their relationship with and support of Southern Baptist.

Editor Jack Harwell said he was surprised the number favoring the status quo was so high because "these readers of SBC Today are considered the most militant moderates. If we've got a radical group on the left, it would be our readers."

"About one third of our respondents said 'Don't do anything, just say like we are,'" Harwell said. "About two-thirds say 'Do something.'"

The denomination has been split by a decade-long battle between fundamentalists and moderates. The key difference between the two factions rests on the way they view the Bible: fundamentalists maintain the Bible is without error in any area, including history and science, while moderates allow room for interpretation, even on some theological questions. Fundamentalists also oppose the ordination of women and divorced people.

Fundamentalists, who typically demand theological agreement, have won the presidency of the SBC for the last 10 years and have gained control of Southern Baptist institutions through the job's significant appointive powers.

Harwell said the survey of 6,500 of its readers was taken at the urging of the Southern Baptist Alliance, a moderate faction within the 14.7-million-member denomination, to help gather information in preparation for a meeting in Nashville, Tenn., next month.

The newspaper, published in Decatur, is not directly connected to the alliance, although it is mailed to all SBA members.

"The statistics confirm my impression that among moderates there is still a wide diversity of opinion of what should be done," said SBA President John Thomason, pastor of a church in Jackson, Miss.

Jacksonville, Fla., won election by 692 votes out of 30,916 cast.

Harwell agreed, adding that the conflict has remained mainly a battle among the clergy.

"Many, many of our lay people see this as purely a vanity struggle between ministers — a bunch of preachers fighting over who's going to be the president and who's going to be on the boards," Harwell said Monday.

Fundamentalists have claimed the 2-year-old SBA is a front for the beginnings of a new denomination, but 36 percent of the respondents to the SBC Today survey say they want to remain "as loyal opposition, making no changes in affiliation, working to elect officers who will represent all Southern Baptists."

Siler City Puts Limits On Water

SILER CITY, N.C. (AP) — The Chatham County town of Siler City has placed limits on the amount of water residents and industries may use, and officials say without full cooperation, residents could face stricter restrictions in coming weeks.

"We might not be able to avoid layoffs," City Manager Ben Shivar said Monday after the restrictions took effect. So far, no area businesses have had to cut back on production because of the water crisis, he said.

But without rain, "We have to look at the potential of closing industries or reducing water use substantially," he said. "I just hope that's a remote possibility."

As the restrictions in Siler City and western Chatham County took effect Monday, the Orange Water and Sewer Authority invoked mandatory restrictions on its 57,000 customers as water officials braced for the return of students to the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

This is the third consecutive summer that Siler City has had to deal with a severe water shortage. The city already is pumping water from a private lake in nearby Alamance County and plans are in the works to obtain water from farm ponds.

Shivar said it will be up to the town's 4,500 residents and about 1,500 more residents of the county to follow the 20 percent reduction called for in the water allocation policy.

"The public understands what we've been through in the past," he said. "We can't monitor residential use, but they have a responsibility to reduce consumption."

The restrictions were necessary because of a recent drop in the level of the main reservoir that supplies the city and some parts of Chatham County with water, Shivar said.

The reservoir has dropped to a level more than six feet below normal, he said, reducing the town's available water supply to about 44 percent of normal.

If customers continue to use water at the current rate of about 2.2 million gallons a day without substantial rainfall, the city could run out of water in about 41 days, Shivar said.

Preaching Children Draw Suspension On First Day

MARION, N.C. (AP) — Duffey, Matthew and Pepper Strode's first day of school at Eastfield Elementary after the summer vacation lasted less than a minute.

At the school gate, Duffey, 11, and Matthew, 6, began to shout Bible verses and Pepper, 7, yelled "Repeat."

Before they had gone five steps, the three children ran to their parents waiting outside the gate.

"We were there to welcome them to school," said Eastfield Principal Jim Gorst. "Duffey stuck his Bible in my face and he said, 'You go to hell.'"

"I have trouble when a child says that to an adult and an authority figure," Gorst said.

All three children were suspended repeatedly last spring when they stood behind the school screaming Bible verses and refused to enter the building when asked. Their favorite verse is Hebrews 13:4: "Marriage is honorable in all and the bed undefiled. But whoremongers and fornicators God will judge."

The Strode children's return to school Monday attracted the attention of more than 30 TV and newspaper reporters and photographers. And at least two lawyers.

N.C. School Boards Association attorney Richard Schwartz was at the school Monday morning, advising McDowell County schools officials.

In Chicago, the Caleb Campaign, a non-profit Christian civil rights organization, agreed to intercede on behalf of the Strodes.

The school system "has basically violated these people's civil rights," said Caleb Campaign President Dan Rodden. "Although their methods are offensive to many people, I think the school system has overreacted."

"We have an attorney who is working on this case and we're paying their legal fees," he said. "We're not trying to bring a lawsuit, although we will if we have to."

McDowell Schools Superintendent David Ricketts responded: "I'm ready. Let 'er rip. I've had it with this thing. It's getting on my nerves."

Ricketts on Friday notified the children's parents, David and Robin Strode, that they would be barred from the school grounds Monday morning.

So the Strodes brought Duffey, Matthew and Pepper to the school gate where family friends Barry and Dianna Over were to escort the children to the front door.

At the gate, Gorst told the Weavers they wouldn't be allowed on the school grounds and that he and Ricketts would take the children to class.

A McDowell County sheriff's deputy approached. Duffey held Matthew's hand. Pepper began to cry.

Duffey says he turned to Gorst and said: "You'll go to hell."

"That's it," Ricketts said. "You're suspended."

Gorst said Duffey told him: "You go to hell."

"When Duffey came on the campus, we were there to welcome him," Gorst said.

Bush Feels Heat Over Quayle But Gains In Polls

By ROBERT GREENE
Associated Press Writer

George Bush basked in the warmth of a post-convention poll showing him ahead of Democrat Michael Dukakis but continued to feel the heat over running mate Dan Quayle and his military record.

Dukakis, meanwhile, met Monday at his home with CIA Director William Webster and other lawmakers and officials involved in intelligence for a briefing on national security and foreign affairs.

Bush and Dukakis carried out long-distance attacks on foreign policy and defense, but the debate was drowned out by the noise over Bush's vice presidential choice.

In the first survey done entirely after the end of last week's Republican National Convention, Bush and Quayle led Dukakis and his running mate, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, by 46 percent to 40 percent.

The CBS News poll of 1,221 registered voters across the country had a margin of error of 3 percentage points. Candidates typically receive a boost in the polls after their party's convention.

But half the respondents did not believe Quayle, 41, has the experience to be a good president, and 28 percent were unsure. Thirty-nine percent wished Bush had chosen someone else.

Quayle, facing questions about whether he used his wealthy family's connections to enter the National Guard and avoid being drafted into combat in Vietnam, found a split jury in the poll.

Forty percent said phone calls made to the guard on his behalf represented "an unfair attempt" to ease his admission; 40 percent said such calls were acceptable and 20 percent were unsure.

Reservations about Quayle were also expressed Monday by Bush supporters, although they rejected suggestions he be dropped from the ticket.

"I think Quayle should assess and if he feels like he's hurting the ticket, he ought to be man enough to step aside," Tommy Thomas, chairman of the Bush steering committee in Florida, said Monday.

"I want to get to know a lot more about him," said New Jersey Gov. Thomas Kean, who delivered the keynote at last week's convention in New Orleans.

Gov. John R. McKernan of Maine said that when Quayle's name first surfaced at the Republican National Convention as a possible Bush choice "I said I thought it would be a mistake. ... And, unfortunately, I've been borne out to be right."

But Bush went all out to defend Quayle at a convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, telling the audience of about 4,500 in Chicago that the Indiana senator "did not go to Canada and he did not burn his draft card and he damn sure didn't burn the American flag."

Bush was scheduled to tour a steel plant in Seattle, Wash., here today before flying to Portland, Ore., and Sacramento, Calif. He has a joint appearance scheduled with President Reagan on Wednesday before returning to Houston, his adopted hometown.

Quayle, in a hastily arranged appearance before the VFW, said no influence was used to get him into the National Guard and none was needed because there were vacancies at the time.

"My National Guard unit was never called up to active duty, but let me say that after these last 72 hours no one can say I've never faced combat," he joked.

He continued to face questions about the Guard and other issues. The Daily News of Los Angeles today quoted two former lawyers for one-time lobbyist Paula Parkinson who said the woman told the FBI in 1981 that Quayle had propositioned her during a 1980 trip to Florida.

The lawyers said Parkinson told agents she refused the advance, allegedly made during a golfing trip in which Parkinson, Quayle and two other congressmen shared a cottage.

Quayle has denied a relationship with Parkinson and said when asked about her during a press conference last week in New Orleans, "That has been covered and there's nothing to it."

In his speech to the VFW, Bush again hit Dukakis as weak on defense.

"I plan to negotiate strategic arms reductions with the Soviets," Bush said. But, he added, "I will not do what my opponent has suggested — get rid of the MX, the Midgetman, the B-1 bomber and two carrier battle groups. I will not make such unilateral cuts in our defense."

Dukakis countered at a news conference. "How anyone who sat there and did nothing while we sold arms to the ayatollah can seriously talk about leadership in the Persian Gulf is beyond me."

The Democratic candidate was continuing his two-day annual visit of northern Massachusetts today, meeting with regional newspaper executives, teen-agers involved in an anti-drug program and local law enforcement officials. Dukakis also answered allegations by a Republican congressman that he obtained a deferment until he finished Swarthmore College during the Korean War.

Dukakis said he asked to be drafted immediately after graduation, and he spent 16 months in the demilitarized zone in Korea after the fighting had stopped.

"I'm very proud of that service and very proud of the opportunity it gave me to serve my country," said Dukakis.

Quayle, who makes his first solo campaign tour on Wednesday, is getting coaching from former Reagan aides with experience in presidential politics. The new campaign staff was assembled by aides to Bush.

The Des Moines Register, an influential newspaper in the farm belt, called today for Bush to replace Quayle because the senator would, the paper said, remain "a distraction from the issues throughout the campaign."

"It's tough to admit a mistake, but a willingness to see an error and to rectify it is a far better quality in a would-be president than a refusal to do so," the newspaper said in an editorial.

Reagan Signs Massive Trade Bill

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan today signed landmark trade legislation and told an audience at this bustling West Coast port the new law will keep America riding on a "global wave" of prosperity.

He said he was signing the bill despite misgivings over some of its provisions.

"We're here to sign a piece of legislation that will help our economy continue to grow and compete," Reagan said in remarks prepared for a signing ceremony at the Port of Long Beach, one of the world's 10 busiest computerized cargo ports.

Port officials say 60.6 million metric tons of cargo crossed Long Beach piers last year, the most ever recorded at a West Coast port.

The legislation authorizes U.S. participation in current world trade talks, streamlines procedures for retaliatory import curbs against unfair trade practices and makes many other changes in trade laws.

"Our administration and Congress have come together in an effort to ensure open markets around the world," Reagan said. "It hasn't been easy, but I have never doubted our ultimate victory, because we're riding a global wave."

"Country after country is recognizing that free trade is the key to a more prosperous future and that protectionism protects no one, not even the special interests that want it so much."

Reagan, who had objected to what he said were protectionist features in earlier versions of the legislation, said there are still "some things in this bill I don't like."

He said the law could lead to an import fee that would be illegal under international law and "inconsistent with our goal of moving toward free world trade."

He said the bill also appears to require executive branch officers to negotiate with foreign countries on specified trade topics, which he argued is "inconsistent with our constitutional principles."

He also objected that the bill purports to require the International Trade Commission to conduct investigations in response to a resolution passed by just one House or Senate committee.

"And so, in signing this bill I am specifically noting that it will be implemented in a constitutional manner," the president said.

The signing climaxes months of negotiation between the administration and Congress over the bill, which Reagan vetoed when it was first sent to him because it contained a provision requiring a 60-day notice to employees of plant closings and layoffs.

Congress, however, promptly passed the advance-notice provision as a separate bill, and Reagan — trying to minimize its importance as a Democratic election-year issue — then let it become law without his signature.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas and his party's vice presidential candidate, said over the weekend that the administration had resisted the plan "every inch of the way."

Bentsen, the Texas senator who was the bill's prime sponsor, said in a radio speech that "this administration has been a reluctant partner. They have clung stubbornly to the status quo, ignored the mounting deficits and resisted a trade policy every inch of the way."

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, asked whether Bentsen's key role on the bill put the president in an awkward position, replied, "Bentsen did a good job on this. He worked on it a lot of years and so did we. And everybody who worked on it gets credit."

The bill authorizes U.S. negotiators to reach agreements in international trade talks, streamlines the system of import curbs to protect American business and provides for retraining of those left jobless by foreign competition. It also contains a potential $2.5 billion in export subsidies for agricultural products and repeals the 1980 windfall profits tax on oil industry earnings, which has not produced any revenue since oil prices plunged three years ago.

Soldiers Join Firefighters As Yellowstone Flames Ebb

By The Associated Press

Dying winds and 1,200 soldiers flown in to bolster weary firefighters in Yellowstone National Park have helped slow the blaze that was threatening two Montana towns at the park's northeast end.

"The threat to Cooke City and Silver Gate is essentially over," Fire Operations Chief Steve Frye said today.

"With the break in the winds the last two days, firefighters have had an opportunity to make some significant headway" against the Yellowstone fires that have blackened at least 350,000 acres in Wyoming and Montana, Frye said in an interview on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America."

Although winds of up to 70 mph over the weekend have died down, Frye said the burning acreage in the northeast Clover-Mist section of the park had increased to 215,000 acres, a jump over the 157,000 acres reported burning over the weekend.

In Idaho, National Guardsmen were called out to help attack a 700-acre fire.

Cooler temperatures and relatively light winds Monday helped firefighters battle the 37,000-acre Warm Springs Creek forest fire, southeast of Helena, Mont.

The 2-week-old fire, which damaged 13 homes and threatened scores of others, was the U.S. Bureau of Land Management's No. 1 priority Monday, said Jack Wilson, the agency's top official at the Inter-Agency Fire Center in Boise, Idaho, which coordinates firefighting resources nationwide.

The blaze in the rugged Elkhorn Mountains was burning in only a few spots inside the fire lines Monday evening, and crews hoped to contain it by tonight, said fire information officer Bob Krepps. A fire is contained when it is surrounded by a fire line.

Some of the 2,900 firefighters might be sent home today, he said, while those remaining would continue mopping up by dousing hot spots that could flare if winds kicked up.

The infantrymen at Yellowstone, who arrived Monday from Fort Lewis, Wash., would work to keep the fires from spreading into commercial areas of the Shoshone National Forest and into Montana's Custer National Forest, said park spokeswoman Joan Anzelmo.

"At this point, having fresh help and able-bodied help is very important," she said.

"Things are generally quiet, which is a good sign," she said. "But the forecast is calling for warmer temperatures, drier conditions and a potential for higher winds."

Despite help from the weather, Yellowstone's south entrance remained closed Monday, forcing visitors to travel about 150 miles to the west entrance. Three other entrances also remained open, officials said.

Several spots near the southern entrance were closed, including the Grant Village area, which contains a hotel, campground, visitor center and park staff facilities; the Norris, Madison and Lewis Lake campgrounds.

The Pebble Creek campground, on the northern edge, also was closed.

In western Yellowstone, flames from the 91,700-acre North Fork fire destroyed 10 power lines on Sunday, and crews spent Monday wrapping power lines with protective material, removing excess fuels and hosing down buildings around Norris.

Don Martin Is A Family Farmer — One Of Few

By JULES LOH
AP Special Correspondent
CLAY CENTER, Kan. (AP) — Last year a flood tore up 240 acres of Don Martin's good bottom land. This year drought parched his pastures and withered his hay. Too much feast and too much famine.

"Every year, every season, farming is a gamble," Martin says. "There's no other way to farm."

And in Martin's optimistic view, there is no better way of life than farming. If a family's own farm is not the Promised Land, he believes it is at least the land of promise.

He believes that in his soul, even though in recent years holding to that belief has come close to splitting up his family and sending him to the poorhouse.

Among the nation's 2.2 million farmers, Don Martin is one of the disappearing few who fit the category agricultural statisticians call family farmers. He is not a corporate farmer or an absentee farmer or a part-time hobby farmer but a farmer for whom farming is his only livelihood. Fewer than 380,000 of that endangered species remain in America today.

Farming is a gamble, all right. But it must seem to most family farmers that the deck is stacked against them.

After six years of one of America's worst-ever economic farm disasters, survivors like Don Martin finally could see a small measure of prosperity returning. Across Clay County, pickup trucks, some even new, had begun reappearing in front of coffee shops. A sure omen.

Now, capriciously across the land, comes the worst drought since the wretched days of the Dust Bowl.

Pictures on the evening news show not amber waves of grain but scorched and stunted stalks. It has been scarcely more than a year since they were showing pitiful pictures of foreclosure sales.

At least one farmer in north-central Kansas, Don Martin, has so far survived both. He beat foreclosure by the skin of his teeth and the drought by the grace of God. So far, anyhow.

"It's been chancy," he was saying the other day, stooping at the edge of a cornfield to adjust gates on an irrigation pipe that would pump water down every other row at the rate of 1,200 gallons a minute. In 12 hours that flow would equal a 1-inch rain.

"I got my wheat in. The best crop I've had in three years because the weather was good and dry when I cut it. Wheat was planted last fall, of course, and got good moisture right up until the start of the drought, when it matured.

"Actually, that improved both its yield and quality. You have more trouble with a wheat harvest in wet weather than in dry. This year, around here, it worked out just right."

Some other American farmers were just as fortunate. Even reduced 13 percent by the drought, worse in some areas than others, the nation's wheat harvest was not all that bad.

Growing corn is something else. When the final tally is in, agriculture experts are predicting the nationwide yield will be half the $22 billion national average.

That's bad enough, but compared to last year's harvest, when financially strung-out farmers could smile again at an 8.3 million bushel yield, the guess for this dry year is 3 million bushels at best.

Comparisons, averages, don't begin to tell the story of the individual farmer's gamble, every year, with every crop.

Corn, for instance, is persnickety in its reproductive habits. Its sex life is brief.

"You have only four or five days in June when the corn is tasseling to make a crop," Martin explains. "The tassel is the male part. It drops pollen on the silk of the ear, the female part. Each silk is a tube that leads to one kernel. The pollen has to get to the kernel to fertilize it or it won't develop. If it's too hot the whole system shuts off.

"I have good wells and six miles of irrigation pipe and I can control the water and make good stalks. But I can't control the temperature. If it's too hot and the corn won't pollinate all I'll be watering will be cobs. It's happened to me before.

"This year, just as the corn was tasseling, the temperature was up above 100. Way too hot. Then, at just the right time, we got a shower that cooled everything off. Thank God."

Martin's pastures dried up, however, along with his farm ponds and hayfields. His Clay County neighbors are in the same fix — alfalfa down 55 percent, pasturage down 60 percent.

Martin mowed and baled his wheat stubble and, with permission, mowed the roadside grass. But he will still have to buy winter feed for his cattle that he otherwise would have grown himself.

He figures he will be able to manage that owing to better-than-average prices wheat and corn are bringing, driven up in large part because of the nationwide drought; one farmer's weal from another farmer's woe.

"In other words," Martin says, "I ought to just about break even." Considering the current state of the family farm, breaking even is like winning, and considering the wringer family farmers have gone through for nearly a decade, Don and Lois Martin surely have earned at least one lucky roll of the dice even if somebody else has to lose.

Both Don and Lois were born on Kansas farms. Both are college graduates. They met in 1958 when Lois was teaching school in Clay Center, a town of 5,000 then and now, with a prairie heritage and a prairie pride. Its pioneers once circled the wagons in Clay Center against an Indian attack.

Lois says that if she hadn't married a farmer she would have gone ahead teaching. Don says he considered being a veterinarian but what he really wanted to do was farm.

They took the $4,700 put aside for Don's college education — which he didn't have to use because he went to Kansas State on a football scholarship — and bought a used tractor and put a down payment on 240 acres of rich land on the Republican River with a house on it more than 100 years old.

The day after their wedding, in 1960, they drove to the auction barn at nearby Manhattan, Kan., and spent what was left of the money, and what was left of their honeymoon, buying calves.

They were on their way. And they were productive. Francis arrived in '62, Scott in '63, Angela in '66, Steven in '67, Melanie in '68, Tim in '70, and all the while they managed to grow enough grain to feed not only their children but also their burgeoning livestock herds, and to add, on average, 160 acres a year to their life's investment. They did not miss a single payment for 20 years.

"We never had a savings account, and still don't," Don Martin says. "We have always felt that putting our money into good land was the same thing as a retirement plan."

Over the next two decades the "savings account" grew to 2,600 acres. The six Martin children also grew, and accomplished, and festooned an entire den wall with 4-H Club medals and athletic trophies and academic awards.

Good times. Well, not always.

At every season a farmer is at the mercy of some crop disaster or another. There are always the hailstorms, floods, droughts, frosts and freezes at the wrong times. One year it rained so much that Don Martin couldn't get into his sodden fields to harvest his corn, what was left of it, until it was time to plant again.

These setbacks farmers accept stoically. Like chinch bugs, all you can do is deal with them as they arise.

Then there was that bitter cold February night in 1967. Lois, nine months pregnant, was complaining to Don, who was preparing some sows who were equally close to delivery, that the used washing machine they had just bought wouldn't work.

About that time something, maybe a coyote, spooked the cattle. They broke through the feed lot fence and scattered across the prairie.

Don left the sows, and Lois, and took after the steers on foot. By the time he had chased them home in the frigid darkness, one of the sows had delivered 14 piglets who lay beside her frozen to death.

Exhausted, Don went to the kitchen, sat down, and had a heart attack.

None of those episodes, though, were as much a test of the human spirit as the six years America's family farmers went through beginning in 1980, the year, as one farmer, put it, when "They slammed the brakes on inflation and everybody went through the windshield."

Including Don Martin. America's farm exports had soared during the '70s from $8.2

billion to $43.8 billion and Martin, along with very nearly every other farmer, was doing exactly what the secretary of agriculture advised: plant fence row to fence row and borrow, borrow, borrow.

What happened when that wave crashed on the beach, in 1980, is a well-documented agricultural debacle and now, in the fondest hope of its survivors, history.

The bank foreclosed on Martin, who was $2 million in debt. They took half his land, 1,080 acres, and all his machinery, some of which he bought back at auction using money put aside for his children's college tuitions. He hung on, spending more time in government offices, banks, law offices than he did in the fields.

Across the nation more than 200,000 family farmers went broke. Don Martin's brother was one.

Across Clay County suicides increased, divorce increased, alcoholism, child abuse, aberrations strange to rural America.

At the Martin farm, nerves were stretched, as if by a violin screw, to the snapping point. Don's hired man quit because he couldn't stand all the screaming going on around there.

"I cried myself to sleep many nights," Lois said.

On one of those sleepless nights in 1984 Don conceived of a plan and put it into action the next morning.

He leased all his land, all his equipment to his sons, who became Martin Brothers, who thereupon legally hired Don as manager of the company. The ploy kept the banks at bay, giving him more time.

"And that," Lois said, "is how we saved our farm."

Now, by the grace of a brief shower of rain at just the right time during the course of a searing drought, the corn is in and Don and Lois Martin have hung on another year.

The sweet corn, in fact, was never sweeter.

Pack Rat's Clipping Proves Slow Mail

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My family calls me "Pack Rat" because I save everything, to which I reply, "You never know when it might come in handy."

Well, after reading your column in the Wenatchee World, in which you asked if anyone can top the story about the valentine that took 45 years to get from Idaho to Connecticut, I went straight to a newspaper clipping I had saved since 1964 while I was living in Peru. Here it is:

"AREQUIPA, Peru (UPI) — Postal authorities said they had found a 164-year-old letter in a stack of mail marked 'undelivered due to insufficient postage.' The letter was dated July 8, 1800. It was addressed to the president of the Tribune of Justice in Arequipa — the second-largest city in Peru."

"Abby, you be the judge. Have a sunshine day! — PATRICIA L. WINTERMEIER, CASHMERE, WASH."

DEAR PATRICIA: Your pack-rat ways paid off. The 164-year-old letter in transit topped them all. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: I don't know if it's true that it took a valentine 45 years to go from Idaho to Connecticut, but I still have the postcard that Fordham University sent to me in 1951 (just before I graduated), which reached me in California in 1969. By that time I was a married woman with seven kids.

The postcard bears both the 1951 and the 1969 postmarks, but I never did find out where it had been for 18 years! — ANN MAFFEO FURIA, SHERMAN OAKS, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: I think this will top the 45 years it took a valentine to get to East Haven, Conn., from Boise, Idaho. This item appeared in the Harrisburg (Pa.) Patriot-News on Feb. 16, 1988:

In 1907, Joseph Gabner mailed a postcard from Atlantic City, N.J., to his family in Steelton, Pa. It arrived 80 years later in son William Gabner's mailbox.

William Gabner, a retired Bethlehem Steel Corp. crane operator, received the postcard with a letter from Harrisburg postal inspector C.M. Macho, which said: "Please accept our apologies for the late delivery."

It didn't explain where the postcard had spent the last 80 years. — GEORGE MARTER, SUN CITY, ARIZ.

DEAR ABBY: I desperately need an answer to this question. I am due to have my first baby soon. If we have a boy, my husband wants him to be a "Junior." I am all for it, but there is a problem. My husband does not have a middle name, but I would like for our son to have one. Would our son be considered a "Junior" if we gave him a middle name even though his father had none? — LADY IN WAITING

DEAR LADY: No. In order for your son to be a "Junior," his name must be exactly the same as his father's.

Rock Music Not For Skunks

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

PINETOP, Ariz. — A funny thing happened on our way to a two-week vacation to blend with nature. We discovered a family of skunks already "blending" under our cabin, and my husband's foot fell through the front deck. Now, these two incidents don't seem to be related, but bear with me.

Skunks do not like remodeling. The noise makes them nervous. I'm not crazy about it either, but I don't go around smelling up an entire town like a lawn mower that just pulverized a 2-month-old boiled Easter egg in the front yard.

My personal reaction to the skunks can only be described as emotions usually reserved for a person approaching his final days on earth.

DENIAL: It probably wasn't a skunk at all. It was probably a panda. Yes, that's it. It was one of those cute things they sent President Nixon from China.

ANGER: Why me, God? We made a deal. You told me if I didn't watch "The Thorn Birds" during Holy Week, nothing bad would happen to me.

BARGAINING: Suppose I said that I would do without creme rinse my entire two weeks? Give up chocolate? Clean the oven? OK, this is my last offer: I'll watch the Morton Downey Jr. Show.

DEPRESSION: I saw two more skunks today. Babies. I say we sell!

ACCEPTANCE: On the other hand, they're probably a nice family passing through on their way to Disneyland to break into show biz. We'll just keep the noise to a minimum and who knows? We may get to be friends.

My husband told me to relax and enjoy myself. He had seen two segments of "This Old House" on PBS and had a feeling for wood, and besides, our two sons were coming up to help construct the new deck.

The first morning I awoke to sawing, whirring, hammering, thumping, drilling, buzzing and a lot of ripping as the old deck fell. And there was another sound I could not put my finger on. I had heard it only once before. It was in Nassau, I believe, when I heard a Concorde take off.

If that didn't bring up the tail on a skunk, nothing would. I ran to the door and shouted, "What IS that!"

"Just guitar music," said my son. "We're not talking Roy Clark here, are we?"

Propped up in the bird feeder was a cassette player. From that day on, the hills were alive with the sounds of Van Halen, Megadeath, Kingdom Come, Poison, Whitesnake and Iggy Pop.

About two days into the new deck, I saw the skunks at dusk leaving their condo under the house and heading for the woods. I would have given you my creme rinse to go with them.

Hut To Palace, Paan's Favored Chew

By DILIP GANGULY
Associated Press Writer
NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Marco Polo observed it 700 years ago. Genteel Englishwomen were said to have fainted at the sight of it. Today it is a $500 million-a-year business in India.

It is the ancient custom of chewing "paan," or betel pepper leaf. It is the most visible Indian habit; millions across the country relentlessly chew the conical-shaped leaf and spit out its reddish residue.

The paan leaf is wrapped betel nut, quicklime and a score of other flavorings geared to individual tastes. Some are mildly narcotic.

The practice gives many Indian taxi drivers bright red grins, leaves unsightly splashes on streets, sidewalks and other public places, and sometimes upsets tourists when the stream of betel juice comes too close.

From the humblest hut to palaces of former maharajas, paan is part of Indian life. Elegant hostesses serve coffee and cigars after dinner, but reserve paan for the finale.

"No Indian meal is complete without a paan. It would be like having dinner in Paris without wine," said B.K. Jha, a 66-year-old journalist and paan connoisseur who has been chewing it for 50 years.

"Paan has become an essential accessory to the Indian life, associated with leisure, valor, cuisine and ritual."

Indeed, paan is among the few things that seem to bind rather than divide India, where adherents of the seven recognized religions and speakers of the 16 official languages are often at odds.

For addicts, paan can be an all-day habit, but it is normally taken after meals.

In an Indian home after a rich meal, a guest is offered his or her choice of "sada" (plain), "mitha" (sweet) and "tamaku," which has a narcotic stimulant.

Flavorings include camphor, cardamom, clove, coconut, cinnamon, saffron, nutmeg, almond, melon seeds and aniseed. About 12 different types of stimulants or tobaccos can be added.

A first-class paan can have a "vark," a layer of beaten silver or gold on the leaf that adds a touch of beauty and is chewed with the other contents.

Custom demands that you pop the full paan into your mouth and spit the first juice out. Depending on the quality, it takes from two minutes to half an hour to finish one paan.

In homes, cuspidors are provided for guests, but since by custom the cuspidor is ornamental, the first reddish gush is exuded on the road outside.

Om Prakash Lalwani runs India's best-known paan shop, the Prince Paan Bhandar in Old Delhi. He took over from his father, who opened the shop as a refugee from Pakistan in 1949. The shop now sells paan to more than 5,000 people a day and has a staff of 50 who travel across India to set up special stalls at marriages, birth ceremonies and funerals.

Paan is priced according to the contents and which of the 35 varieties of leaf is used. The most famous leaf is the "benarsi," named for the Hindu holy city of Benares and said to be kept buried for months to eliminate any raw taste.

The cheapest paan at Lalwani's shop sells for 14 cents and the deluxe beaten-gold variety for $1.75.

Lalwani says he can wrap a paan to last up to 48 hours and has customers who take them as gifts to friends in Europe and the United States.

In a more ordinary shop, paan can cost as little as 30 paise (2 cents).

Altogether, paan cultivation, marketing and sales provide employment to 5 million Indians.

Now, too, there is packaged paan, which comes in foil envelopes and is advertised in newspapers and magazines in much the same way as cigarette ads elsewhere. The government issues warnings — though not on the package — that paan can cause mouth cancer.

It doesn't seem to stop Indians, however.

Even some foreign visitors try it, a far cry from the days when British gentlemen were said to have fainted at the first sight of a paan chewer, mistaking the red spittle for blood.

It is not clear how and when paan came to India. Some say it was brought in spice-laden boats from Southeast Asia in A.D. 300. Betel is chewed in other parts of Asia, but the ritual approach is India's own.

References to paan are found in Hindu scriptures.

In the 13th century, the Venetian traveler Marco Polo visited Kayal, now Madurai in southern India, and wrote: "All the people of this city as well as the rest of India, have a custom of perpetually keeping in their mouth a certain leaf. ..."

In the 18th century, an anonymous Sanskrit-language poet noted that paan has 13 qualities "unobtainable even in heaven."

That thought may be behind the practice in eastern India, where a paan is placed in the mouth of the dead before the funeral pyre is lit so the departed soul can travel to heaven chewing.

Geneva

International Telecommunication Union.

Superpower efforts to ban all chemical weapons and nuclear tests have gone on for years in Geneva.

Washington and Moscow often have extolled the Geneva spirit after the first summit between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev in 1985 signaled a new phase in superpower relations.

In April, the superpowers signed the U.N. agreement on Afghanistan after six years of negotiations.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze returned to Geneva a month later to settle final details of the intermediate-range nuclear forces treaty, which was signed in Washington in last year. U.S.-Soviet talks on cutting long-range nuclear arsenals are continuing.

detentions by police nationwide in connection with the strikes, most of them "preventative."

Solidarity leader Lech Walesa today again appealed for talks between authorities and his union.

"Solidarity remains steadfast in its search for dialogue despite the growing social tensions," he said on a tape brought out of the strikebound Lenin shipyard in Gdansk where he spent the night. "The present situation in the country has become extremely serious. The just protest of the workers must not be ignored."

Urban told reporters talks with Walesa were impossible while strikes were going on.

New strikes began at two coal mines Monday night and there was a brief work stoppage today at the Nowa Huta steel mill near Krakow, authorities said.

The state-run news agency PAP reported that workers voluntarily ended a strike today at a railroad car factory in Wroclaw. Solidarity sources in Wroclaw said earlier that the strike was continuing.

said they received no such message.

"I have tried to tell them they are making a mistake, but no one will listen to me," said Dabal Singh, an inspector.

Anonymous telephone calls with similar rumors roused hundreds of people in Katmandu, also before dawn. Sunday's quake was felt in the capital, but no deaths or serious damage were reported in the city.

In Patna, India, thousands of people huddled in the rain in open courtyards Monday as rumors swept the city that another quake was imminent. Patna is the capital of Bihar state, the worst hit area in India.

A quake registering 5.1 on the Richter scale shook eastern Nepal late Monday afternoon, but there were no immediate reports of new casualties or damage.

In general, however, the intensity of aftershocks has lessened.

"Compared to the ones on Sunday and Monday, they have been declining," Madhav Prasad Pandey, senior seismologist at Nepal's Department of Geology, said in Katmandu. He said most aftershocks had declined to a reading of 1 on the Richter scale.

Sheriff

Monday, Hampton said he would "forward correspondence" to the sheriff and hoped to meet with him later.

Hampton said the complaints of discrimination in the sheriff's department are not unique to Pitt County.

"It happens often in small departments," Hampton said.

Tyson, who said today that he was in a meeting away from the courthouse Monday, said he would be glad to meet with Hampton in the future.

"Oh, sure," Tyson said, "We'd be glad to meet with anybody."

The 80 people employed by the sheriff in the sheriff's department, jail and communications center include 67 whites. Of the 13 blacks, eight are sworn deputies.

Beginning Oct. 1, when the 911 emergency telephone system begins operations and the communications center becomes an independent county department, Tyson said he would supervise 71 employees, including 13 blacks.

Chapter In AFA

The East Carolina Chapter of the Air Force Association (AFA) officially became a part of the AFA this week when it received its charter in ceremonies at the Greenville Country Club.

The group works with the East Carolina University Air Force ROTC unit, assists science and math teachers to promote interest in Young Astronaut programs, speaks at area clubs and service organizations, and promotes the need for aerospace defense.

Celebration Planned

BURLINGTON — The Association for Retarded Citizens-North Carolina will honor the 20th anniversary of Special Olympics at its second annual Celebration of Caring at 1 p.m. Sept. 10 at Burlington Athletic Stadium.

The Celebration of Caring recognizes dedication, work and service to persons with mental retardation throughout the state.

Eunice Kennedy Shriver, chairman of the board of Special Olympics, will be mistress of ceremonies and keynote speaker. More than 500 people are expected at the event, which will feature Special Olympic demonstrations, recreational activities, a barbecue dinner and a dance.

If it rains, the celebration will be held in Graham Recreation Center in Burlington. For information on buying tickets or registering for the event, call 919-782-4632.

Ground-breaking

The Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce recently assisted in the ground-breaking ceremony of Sandi Villa's.

Sandi Villa's, behind the Sheraton, will have 38 two-bedroom and 12 one-bedroom units when completed. Special emphasis has been put on livability, aesthetics and competitive market rates.

Owners of Sandi Villa's are Bobby Ray and Sandra Harris of Goldsboro. The developer is WIMCO, a Washington, N.C.-based firm. The Wingate Agency, owned by Judi Wingate House, will be pre-leasing and managing the Sandi Villa's units. Area dignitaries participated in the ground-breaking ceremonies.

Student Selected

Kelly Jones, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Jones, has been selected an "Outstanding College Student of America" for her academic and extracurricular accomplishments.

A graduate of J.H. Rose High School, she is a junior business major at East Carolina University where she is vice president of the Student Government Association.

Chestnut Installed

Dr. Dennis E. Chestnut of the psychology faculty at East Carolina University was installed as the 20th president of the Association of Black Psychologists at its annual convention in Washington, D.C.

Chestnut, a member of the ECU faculty since 1974, said he would spearhead a national program focusing on: identifying and documenting mental health programs that have proven effective in dealing with issues of black mental health; the recruitment, retention and progression of black college students in higher education, and the black family and the teaching of values to black children.

Chestnut, a native of Tabor City, also serves as director of minority affairs and chairman of the Committee for Ethnic and Cultural Understanding and as a director of the Association for Humanistic Psychology.

Truck Fire

A gasoline truck driven by Linton Fleming from Crewell Oil Co. of Roper escaped major damage Monday when a wheel assembly caught fire one mile west of Ballards Crossroads in Pitt County. Bell Arthur firemen said the truck's wheel bearings overheated, causing the brake pads to catch on fire.

The truck was carrying 8,500 gallons of gasoline at the time.

Completes Training

Camilla Taft II of Greenville has completed training in Washington, D.C., as a U.S.-2, a short-term mission volunteer for the United Methodist General Board of Global Ministries.

The program places adults between the ages of 20-30 in projects related to the national division of the mission agency in this country for two years.

Ms. Taft, who graduated from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill in May, is assigned to the Shady Hills United Methodist Church in Shady Hills, Fla. She will work with youth and community in establishing basic needs programs. In addition, she will assist in a Mexican self-help agriculture group in Dade City, Fla.

Irish Way Program

Teresa Lambe of Greenville participated this summer in a five-week Irish Way program, learning about the culture and history of Ireland.

She was one of 144 students from 26 states who took part in the program sponsored by the Irish American Cultural Institute.

As part of her stay, Miss Lambe studied Ireland's history, literature, language and folklore; took field trips and a tour of the country; stayed with an Irish family for a close-up view of modern Irish life; played in sports matches against Irish teen-agers, and learned some traditional Irish dances.

Final Four In Charlotte?

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Charlotte's new 23,500-seat arena makes the city a potential candidate to host an NCAA basketball championship, the chairman of the Division I men's basketball committee says.

The Charlotte Coliseum is seeking the 1994 Final Four, despite the recent trend to hold the event in domed stadiums that can seat more than twice the capacity of the new coliseum.

"Charlotte has been a great supporter of the NCAA tournament," said Cedric Dempsey, the University of Arizona's athletic director and chairman of the basketball committee. "Now it has to be considered a potential Final Four site."

The old coliseum was a frequent host of preliminary tournament rounds, but with just 11,222 seats it could not compete for a Final Four. The new Coliseum, which opened Aug. 11, seats 23,500 for basketball, though capacity for Final Fours is usually 1,000 to 2,000 less than normal once space is set aside for the media.

A decision on Charlotte's bid, one of many expected by the NCAA, will not come until the committee's summer business meeting next July. Dempsey said Final Four hosts for the 1994 and 1995 tournaments, the next ones for which sites are to be selected, may be chosen then.

Center Of Controversy

New York Yankee All-Star first baseman Don Mattingly, shown here making a play on the bag, recently criticized the team's management, but he has received the support of his teammates and New York fans for his comments. (AP Laserphoto)

Yankees And Their Fans Agree With Mattingly

NEW YORK (AP) — Many New York Yankees not only agree with Don Mattingly's criticism of owner George Steinbrenner. They wonder why it hadn't been voiced a long time ago.

"I think all of us have talked about it at some point amongst ourselves," relief pitcher Dave Righetti said. "I think it needed to be said by somebody."

Before Monday night's 9-2 loss to the Oakland Athletics — the 10th in 14 games for the Yankees — Mattingly said he didn't regret a word he said a day earlier. He also had a closed-door meeting with manager Lou Piniella, who said Mattingly's outburst was the result of personal frustration.

"I wasn't trying to start anything," Mattingly said. "I never intended on saying anything. It just came out. But it's been in my heart a long time. It's been building over the years."

Saying he was not provoked by a recent event, Mattingly lashed out at Steinbrenner's "disrespectful" treatment of the players.

"There won't be many in here who would disagree with that," third baseman Mike Pagliarulo said. "But he's the owner and I guess he can do whatever he wants."

Co-captain Willie Randolph, the longest-standing every-day player on the club, said, "We don't enjoy playing baseball here day-in and day-out. It's pretty much been that way since after '81. And Donnie's right, it won't change. It doesn't matter what you say, you can't change it. But Donnie has a right to blow off steam. He plays hard every day."

Righetti called Mattingly at home earlier in the day, "to make sure Donnie was all right and let him know I was behind him, that we all support him. He was just scared that it looked like he was complaining."

Both Mattingly and Righetti signed three-year contracts before the season.

"We talked about our feelings when we both signed," Righetti said. "We knew what to expect here. I've seen the good and the bad in this organization, and I've probably seen more of the bad than Donnie. But, above all, I'm happy where I'm at. It's a great place to play if not for the distractions. But you could deal with the distractions when you're winning. Winning is the only thing that matters around here. Winning is the best time to be around here."

Following Sunday's 4-2 loss to Seattle, Mattingly said Yankee players "get no respect around here. They give you money, that's it. Not respect. Money is not respect."

Although Mattingly did not mention Steinbrenner by name, the owner was clearly the target of his outburst.

Steinbrenner, referring to himself as "The Boss" said in a statement Monday that he was confused by Mattingly's criticism because "I'm not making errors on the field, I'm not leaving men stranded in scoring position time and time again. I'm not carrying a 5.30 ERA since the All-Star break, and I was 2,000 miles away when we lost three out of four games to the Seattle Mariners, of all people."

"Contrary to many opinions, I'm not managing the ballclub, either, and I'm sure as hell not making millions of dollars a year for playing a game. But as usually is the case, who else can we blame without getting a teammate Po'd at us or getting the

Opportunistic 'D' Keys Dallas Victory

IRVING, Texas (AP) — For the first time since 1985, the Dallas Cowboys have won two consecutive NFL preseason games and they've done it with opportunistic defense.

The Cowboys turned six Chicago miscues into a 17-9 exhibition victory over the Bears on Monday night, upping their favorable turnover ratio to 14-3 in three games.

"Our defense is young, but they hustle and that's how you win games, getting turnovers," Dallas Coach Tom Landry said.

Manny Hendrix was the unlikely hero.

Relegated to third-team defensive back, Hendrix made the Cowboys rethink their cut list by returning a Jim Harbaugh pass 34 yards for a touchdown with 39 seconds left.

"I have to perform every time I go out," Hendrix said. "I know it's cut time."

Hendrix, a third-year veteran, was a basketball player at Utah. The touchdown was his first in professional football.

"I had to pinch myself when I saw the goal line coming up," he said. "I figured I had to be dreaming."

Hendrix said he had been "walking on egg shells" worrying about today's cut to 60 players.

"I think I proved tonight I can play," Hendrix said.

Starting Dallas quarterback Steve Pelluer suffered a concussion after linebacker Dante Jones hit him in the second period.

Danny White played all the second half for the Cowboys.

White said he doesn't feel he is competing against Pelluer.

"I'm competing against myself to become the best I can be," White said. "Steve will probably start but I'll be ready. I desperately needed the work. I was rusty."

White hit 14 of 20 passes for 106 yards.

Dallas recovered four fumbles and intercepted two passes in the victory.

Veterans, Rookies Among NFL Cuts

By The Associated Press

The San Francisco 49ers won't have Ray Wersching to kick around anymore.

Wersching, the placekicker who ranks ninth among the NFL's all-time scoring leaders, was granted an unconditional release Monday at his own request along with running back Joe Cribbs.

They were among dozens of players released as NFL teams moved to meet the league's requirement of a 60-man roster by today. Among the others released was Dave Rimington, the Cincinnati Bengals' veteran center who failed to pass his physical after a long holdout.

"Ray asked for his release and we acceded," 49ers Coach Bill Walsh said of Wersching. "He met with me Sunday and asked for an appraisal of the situation, and I told him that it was extremely competitive. I said he would have to judge for himself whether or not he would make the team."

Like Wersching, Cribbs also asked to be released. "Today was important for both Wersching and Cribbs because it gives the rest of the NFL an opportunity to see who is available," Walsh said.

Wersching, who turned 38 on Sunday, apparently decided that 24-year-old Mike Cofer, who joined the 49ers this summer as a free agent, is in line to take over the job Wersching held for 11 seasons.

Wersching holds most of the team's placekicking records. He broke into the NFL in 1973 with San Diego and has a 15-season total of 1,122 points in regular-season games.

Cribbs, 30, an eight-year pro, rushed for 890 yards during his two seasons with the 49ers.

"He felt that he needed a decision from us as much as Ray did, and told us that he wanted to continue playing," Walsh said. "He said he needed to have some kind of commitment from us."

UNC And Temple Part Of Tourney

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — With two weeks to go before the college football season begins, three of the nation's top basketball coaches met in Charlotte to talk about a December tournament for which tickets have already been gobbled up.

The Tournament of Champions will mark the beginning of a new era of college basketball in Charlotte. It will feature North Carolina, Arizona, Temple and Missouri in its inaugural year at the 23,500-seat Charlotte Coliseum. During a news conference to announce the tournament, North Carolina's Dean Smith, Temple's John Chaney and Missouri's Norm Stewart talked about what a success the event has become.

The event is "what I would consider to be the best tournament in the country," said Chaney, whose Owls were ranked No. 1 most of last season.

Temple remembers its last visit to North Carolina, when it invaded the Smith Center and hung an 83-66, nationally televised loss on the Tar Heels. The next time the Owls met a team from the state, Duke ended Temple's hopes of a Final Four berth with a victory in the finals of the East Regionals.

"The kids had me on a merry-go-round last year," Chaney said. "And in hindsight, I almost come to tears thinking about the effort they put out and the good kids they were."

Chaney said his players must have the right perspective, especially after their 34-2 season. "We got tremendous exposure for the university, reaping a rippling effect such as an increase in enrollment, which is what athletic programs should do," he said.

Temple likely won't return as the nation's No. 1 team in the 1988-89 season, and that suits Chaney fine.

"I had bad nerves and my sciatic was all out of whack," he said. "I had to become an innkeeper, policing the players, giving them a lot more scrutiny, giving them new rules. It was hectic."

Tar Heel Coach Dean Smith has two chances for payback in this tournament, which has national cable coverage and a title sponsor. North Carolina reached the Final Eight in the West Regional at Seattle, then dropped a 28-point decision to Arizona.

But Smith also notes the glitter that might be associated with the field.

"All three of those teams could be in the preseason top 10," Smith said.

Missouri Coach Norm Stewart used the news conference to needle Fred Barakat, Atlantic Coast Conference supervisor of basketball officials, about the possibility of getting a break from the officials.

"I told (Chaney) there's no problem," Stewart said. "It's a neutral site, right? And so what if I saw Dean and Fred riding over here together."

The title sponsor, Diet Pepsi, announced at the news conference that it would serve in that role through 1992.

North Carolina and North Carolina State will alternate as host for the tournament, a variation on the old North-South Doubleheaders of the 1960s and early 1970s. In the tourna-

Olympians Rebound With Win

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — After the U.S. Olympic men's basketball team lost for the first time, Coach John Thompson said he wanted to see how well his club would respond.

It took 24 hours to get an answer.

The Olympians, playing the pressing, pesky kind of defense Thompson employs at Georgetown, smothered their NBA opponents early and then coasted to a 91-79 exhibition victory Monday night.

Thompson, though, only got to see the first half due to what Georgetown publicist Bill Shapland said was a mild case of food poisoning. Assistant coach George Raveling directed the team after intermission, then met with the media while Thompson recuperated at the team's hotel.

"Our shot selection was very good, and I thought we were very aggressive at both ends of the floor," Raveling said. "And we did a good job of rebounding on the defensive boards."

They also did a pretty good job of smothering the NBA players, who showed the effects of very little preparation and summertime shape. The NBA turned the ball over 24 times, 15 of those in the first half when the Olympians opened as much as a 22-point lead.

Temps flared on several occasions in the first half, and Dennis Rodman of the Detroit Pistons picked up a technical foul when he threw a punch at Danny Manning.

"Up in Detroit, Chuck Person (of the Indiana Pacers) came in the locker room and talked to the kids about being more physical, being more aggressive," Raveling said.

"I thought that maybe sometimes we might have overreacted. But most times I don't think coaches will fault youngsters for their aggressiveness, particularly as long as it's clean aggressiveness."

"We're just going out trying to hold our ground," said Manning, who scored 14 points.

The game featured a 17-point effort by Charles Smith IV of Georgetown, and also the re-emergence of Hersey Hawkins as an outside scoring threat.

Hawkins, the former Bradley star, has struggled of late due in part to the amount of time he has spent working on his defense.

"I just have to relax," said Hawkins, who made all three of his 3-point tries and finished with 10 points. "I don't know where I was the last two nights. I wasn't concentrating on playing like I should play."

Smith scored 15 of his points in the first half. Smith scored five points and Manning had four as the Olympians took an early 11-3 lead. They stretched it to 15-4 by the 15-minute mark of the first half, and the closest the pros came thereafter was 19-13 with 11:45 to go before intermission.

The NBA team cut a 57-38 halftime lead to 77-66 with 6:57 remaining, but could get no closer.

Mills Added To Pirate Hoop Staff

From Staff Reports
Griff Mills, a recent graduate of Depauw, has been named as a graduate assistant coach on the East Carolina University basketball staff by head basketball coach Mike Steele.
Mills will take over the duties of Scott Lewis, who was promoted to full-time assistant coach to replace Dan Bell, who resigned to become the head basketball coach at Northwestern (La.) State.
Steele coached Mills during the last three years of his tenure at Depauw before moving on to take the job at ECU.
"I've been looking for a graduate assistantship since January," Mills said. "He knew I was looking and was trying to help. He called when Coach Bell left. I was in the right place at the right time."
Mills, a native of Terra Haute, Ind., was a reserve at Depauw, playing both point and off-guard during his career.
"He (Steele) is a real personable person to work with, no matter if you are a player or you work for him. He's very loyal."

Yow Says Team Needs More Work

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. (AP) — U.S. Olympic women's basketball coach Kay Yow says her team has a lot of work left to do before going to Seoul, South Korea.
"I'm pleased with the effort our players are giving," she said. "But every once in awhile we have moments of lapses."
Having made her final cuts late last week, Yow now faces what may turn out to be an equally tough task — deciding who is going to start.
All 12 players scored Saturday in the U.S. team's 105-72 victory over Cuba at Socastee High School. Cindy Brown and Cynthia Cooper each scored 14 points to lead the Americans. Six players scored in double figures for the United States, which pleased Yow.
"It's very possible that we won't have the same person as high scorer in each game," said Yow, who also is the head women's basketball coach at North Carolina State. "I see a lot of versatility on this team."
Yow played several different combinations of players Saturday.
The starting five set the tone inside early, getting high percentage shots inside and rebounding. Other times during the game, Yow substituted quicker lineups that could press the ball and force the tempo of the game.
Both type teams fared well against the Cubans. The United States outscored Cuba 43-30 and forced 21 turnovers.
With a number of players performing well, Yow said naming a starting five may not be that important.
"I don't think we've counted out maintaining the team system," Yow said. "I'm sure we'll be seeing a lot of all of our players."
Yow's decision won't be an uninformed one. She has seen a lot of these U.S. players. She coached nine of the players on the FIBA World Championship team in 1986, eight in the Goodwill Games that same year and seven in the 1987 Pan American Games. All were gold medal-winning squads.
With the final cuts out of the way, Yow can start putting in different and more difficult aspects to the offense and defense.
"We still haven't gotten any full-court defense or any situations where we extend ourselves over the entire court," she said. "We want to be able to do that."

Bennett To Join Jefferson Pilot Team

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Former Duke quarterback Ben Bennett was named Monday as color commentator for Jefferson-Pilot Teleproductions' 1988 Atlantic Coast Conference regional football package.
Bennett, who was recently named the Arena Football League's player of the year, will join Kevin Slaten in the broadcast booth. Slaten, who has broadcast NFL games for NBC since 1986, will handle the play-by-play duties.
Slaten has also broadcast Big Eight Conference football and basketball games the past three years.
Bennett, the ACC player of the year in 1982 and 1983, worked ACC games in 1985.
Jefferson-Pilot will produce 14 games this season, beginning with the Virginia Tech at Clemson contest on Sept. 3, and will feature every conference school at least once.

Mack Won't Be Back At Georgia In 1988

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — Toney Mack has been scrubbed from the University of Georgia's basketball team following failure to qualify for readmission to the school after he was declared academically ineligible last year.
The school announced Monday that Mack, who had been expected to lead the Bulldogs next season, had not met the requirements for readmission.
Mack, who has had academic problems his entire college career, was declared academically ineligible last March but played in all 36 games.
The school said in a statement Monday that the 6-foot-5 senior forward from Tampa, Fla., had not satisfied requirements for re-admission, and would continue to be ineligible for the 1988-89 season.
"I'm disappointed that I won't be back at Georgia this fall," Mack said in a statement released by the school. "I want to work this fall to earn the credits I need to be able to get back. I hope to be back by the next quarter."
Mack was the team's leading scorer when he was dropped from the team last season, averaging 15.3 points and 5.1 rebounds per game.
Coach Hugh Durham said he is optimistic some of the newcomers can fill the hole left by Mack's departure.
"We're disappointed that Toney won't be with us this year," Durham said. "He's experienced and his scoring punch will be missed. This creates a challenge for our new players to fill in this offensive void."
Mack also missed 12 games in the 1986-87 season because of academic problems.

Foreign Team Has American Flavor

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. (AP) — Dhahran is a lot closer to Mecca than the United States, but Little League coach Cornell Seymour says his team is as American as apple pie.
"We love Saudi Arabia ... but our blood is red, white and blue," said Seymour, a Brunswick, Ga., native whose team is the European entry in the Little League World Series for the second consecutive year.
Of the 14 players on the team, 13 are American and one is British. All are sons of Arabian American Oil Co. employees.
Seymour is a chemical engineer for the company, known as Aramco, and Manager Mark Tucker is a land surveyor for the firm.
Coming from a town in the Middle East causes some confusion for American fans, though, Tucker said.
During a consolation game in last year's Little League World Series, fans for the South Region started chanting, "U-S-A, U-S-A."
"We thought they were rooting for us," Tucker said.
Little League does have to make some concessions to the Saudi Arabian climate. Fields in the Middle Eastern country have hard clay infields instead of grass, and practice is often held in temperatures over 100 degrees, said Tucker, from Grand Rapids, Mich.
Saudi Arabia has made the Little League World Series four times, but never won it. Last year, eventual champion Hua Lian, Taiwan, defeated Dhahran 7-0 in the opening round.
Dhahran opens Wednesday against Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, the only other team repeating from last year's Series.
Tucker thinks his team is the sleeper of the eight-team, single-elimination tournament.
"I'm confident we're going to go all the way. You can quote me on that. We're going to take this place by surprise," said Tucker, 31, who has coached for only two years.
If Dhahran does win the Series, it would overcome some tall odds.
The Far East has won 17 of the last 21 Series, while the European entry has never won it. And this Saudi Arabian team draws its players primarily from the 2,000 American families living in three Aramco-built towns.
Tucker said he and Seymour culled Dhahran's 14 all-stars from five teams with only about 50 players.
"It's just like a small town in America," Tucker said.
But, he added, "Players we have come from a winning tradition."
Only one Saudi has even played on a Dhahran's all-star team, which is the town's entry in the European tournament.
Last year, Wassim Baswari was a substitute outfielder on the team, but he didn't play in Dhahran's loss to Taiwan.
Other foreigners play in the Little League in Dhahran, though, including Pakistanis, Indians, Filipinos, Jordanians and Egyptians, said Juan Ortiz, a Laredo, Texas, native who is commissioner of the Saudi league.
Seymour, who is 36 and has been coaching for six years, said being far from home may be an advantage for his players.

Bears, Vikings Tops In Central

CHICAGO (AP) — The Chicago Bears have their sights set on a fifth straight divisional title. But this time, they're going to have to work for it.

The Bears have breezed to the Central Division championship of the National Football Conference with virtually no opposition the last three years.

That was understandable when the Bears went 15-1 in 1985 and 14-2 in 1986. Last year they were 11-4 and still finished three games ahead of the 8-7 Minnesota Vikings, whose strike replacement team was 0-3.

But this time, it could be different, with the Vikings coming on and the Bears fading gradually. After winning the Super Bowl following the 1985 season, they have been eliminated in the first game of the playoffs in each of the last two years.

The Vikings advanced to the conference championship game last year by eliminating New Orleans and San Francisco before losing to eventual Super Bowl champion Washington Redskins, 17-10.

But if Minnesota hopes to wrest the divisional title from the Bears, they'd better count on beating the Bears twice. Splitting their regular season games in Soldier Field Sept. 18 and at Minnesota Dec. 19 might not be enough to dethrone a team that has a 29-2 edge over divisional rivals since 1984.

Chicago has a different look this year.

Linebacker Wilber Marshall defected to the Redskins and wide receiver Willie Gault was traded to the Los Angeles Raiders. Walter Payton and safety Gary Fencik retired.

Tackles Jimbo Covert, Keith Van Horne and Paul Blair will remain on the injured list when the Bears open the regular season against the Miami Dolphins Sept. 4.

Mike Ditka, whose 50-13 regular-season coaching record is the best in the NFL in the last four years, doesn't dwell on the loss of players. "I can go to war with these guys," he likes to say of his available players.

Nor does he seem concerned about the threat presented by the Vikings or the other three divisional opponents — the Green Bay Packers, the Tampa Bay Buccaneers or the Detroit Lions.

Ditka does want to see improvement in takeaways and giveaways.

Rooney's Health Worsens

PITTSBURGH (AP) — As Pittsburgh Steelers chairman and founder Art Rooney Sr. remained in a coma following a stroke, his doctor described his condition as "grave" and his prognosis "poor."

Although he appeared to be improving during the weekend, he deteriorated Monday afternoon, said Dr. Theodore Gelet, a longtime Rooney family doctor.

The 87-year-old Rooney was listed in critical and unstable condition in the intensive care unit of Mercy Hospital in Pittsburgh early today. His condition was downgraded Monday from critical but stable when he developed increased cerebral swelling.

"Right now I'm the most pessimistic I've been about the outcome," Gelet said during a brief news conference at the hospital late Monday. "He's exhibiting evidence of increased pressure on the left side of his brain ... and he has decreased respiration."

Rooney was hospitalized Wednesday after becoming dizzy at the NFL team's offices at Three Rivers Stadium.

The Bears last year had 24 takeaways to 44 giveaways, the worst plus-minus ratio in the entire NFL and the opposite of the situation that led them to a 29-3 regular-season mark in 1985 and 1986.

"We've got to create turnovers," said Ditka. "We also have to improve our nickel situations. We gave up too many big plays on third down."

Aside from the injuries in the line, the offense appears sound. Quarterback Jim McMahon is healthy and did not miss a snap in training camp. His goal is to start every game this season. If something happens, Mike Tomczak and Jim Harbaugh will be ready to fill in.

Neal Anderson led the team in rushing and with Payton gone, he can return to his regular tailback position. Even without Gault, the receiving corps looks good. Dennis McKinon, Ron Morris and Dennis Gentry are back and rookie Wendell Davis shows a lot of promise.

Viking Coach Jerry Burns will have to make a decision sometime on whether his No. 1 quarterback is Tommy Kramer or Wade Wilson. But Burns is enjoying the predicament. He has alternated the two as starters in the pre-season games and both have been effective.

The receiving corps, headed by Anthony Carter and Leo Lewis, is splendid and Darrin Nelson remains the key running back.

Burns laughs when he is told the Vikings are favored over the Bears but he admits, "The challenge is there."

"The players have shown they have ability. They just have to do it every week against all opposition," he said.

The improving defense, led by defensive linemen Chris Doleman and Keith Millard, moved up to 10th in the league last season and the 26 interceptions were fourth best. "The top priority on offense is our inability to score from inside the 5-yard line," said Burns. "Last season we were pitiful."

So were the records of the other three teams in the division. The Green Bay Packers finished third at 5-9-1 and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers and the Detroit Lions both were 4-11.

Lindy Infante, formerly offensive coordinator at Cleveland, is the new head coach at Green Bay. His mission is to choose a quarterback from a long list that includes Marc Wilson, Don Majkowski and Randy Wright. "Nobody has jumped out there and grabbed the position by the throat," Infante said.

The Packers' offensive line is strong and they added No. 1 draft choice Sterling Sharpe to their receiving unit of Phillip Epps, Walter Stanley and Frankie Neal.

Defensively the Packers allowed only 300 points, fifth best in the league.

"I like the way the defense played last season," said Infante. "To be competitive, we need to be in the upper third in NFL defense."

There is no question about the quarterback at Tampa Bay. Vinny Testaverde takes the spotlight.

To make sure, Coach Ray Perkins traded away Steve DeBerg, the team's leading passer last season.

"Vinny showed me all the qualities I thought he had," said Perkins, who started Testaverde in the final four games of a season that went from 4-3 to 4-11 with eight straight defeats. "He has great poise and exceptional feel for the game. He needs to refine some mechanical things and continue to gain experience."

To protect Testaverde, the Buccaneers made Paul Gruber, a 290-pound tackle from Wisconsin, their No. 1 draft pick.

"Gruber is one of the best big athletes I have ever seen," said Perkins. "He should be one of those rare rookies who can play in his first NFL season."

The Buccaneers are building gradually.

"We have a good nucleus, a good foundation," said Perkins.

There is optimism in Detroit, mainly because the Lions won two of their last three games, defeating Tampa Bay 20-10 and Atlanta 30-13 but sandwiched a 17-14 loss to Minnesota in between.

"We want to build on our finish," said Coach Darryl Rogers.

And quarterback Chuck Long is the foundation on which to build. Long completed 232 passes in 416 attempts for 2,598 yards and 11 touchdowns. He must cut down on his 20 interceptions and should be operating behind an excellent offensive line.

The Lions focused their attention in the draft on defense, 24th overall. They made safety Bennie Blades of Miami their No. 1 choice and linebacker Chris Spielman of Ohio State No. 2.

Rogers is concerned over the defensive line and the defensive secondary. Jerry Ball had a strong rookie year at nose tackle, but Rogers wants a better performance from defensive end Reggie Rogers, the No. 1 draft pick last year.

NFL Teams Make Big Cuts

During his years with the 49ers, Werschling scored 979 points, surpassing Tommy Davis' club record of 738. He also was the leading active scorer in the NFL. Werschling also set 49er records with 190 field goals and 409 extra points.

Cribbs was acquired in a trade with the Buffalo Bills before the 1986 season, started in the 49ers' backfield most of that season and was used mostly as a backup last year.

Neither player was available for comment Monday, but veteran guard Randy Cross said Werschling's departure didn't surprise him.

"You become fairly perceptive about what's going on," said Cross, a 49er since 1976. "The higher you get on that seniority list, the sooner it's going to happen to you."
Rimington, 27, a contract holdout who has missed all of preseason training, finally signed with the Bengals over the weekend. But on Monday, Rimington failed his physical and was released.

The 6-foot-3, 288-pound Rimington had been with Cincinnati since 1983, when he was the team's first-round draft choice. Last year, he was an assistant player representative to the NFL Players Association and was critical of Bengals' management during the players' strike.

Center Bruce Kozerski has excelled in Rimington's absence and appeared to have won the starting job.

Meanwhile, the Los Angeles Raiders released 10 players, including place-kicker John Lee, the fourth-highest drafted kicker in NFL history.

Lee, 24, signed as a free agent with the Raiders after being released by the then-St. Louis Cardinals in training camp last year. Lee was drafted on the second round in 1986 from UCLA, where he set an NCAA record for field goal percentage.

Lee was expected to push 35-year-old Chris Bahr for a position this year, only to come up short, primarily because of the length of his kickoffs.

"I thought John kicked well in camp," Raiders coach Mike Shanahan said. "Chris just had the strong leg, which is a tremendous advantage on kickoffs. I still think John will be a kicker in the NFL."

The Detroit Lions waived 11 players, including veteran Ricky Smith, who came to training camp as the club's starting right cornerback.

Smith started the first two preseason games against Cleveland and Seattle, but was unimpressive and was replaced in the starting lineup by incumbent Bruce McNorton for last week's 24-7 loss to Cincinnati.

The New Orleans Saints cut nine players, including 10-year tight end Paul Coffman and three draft choices.

Coffman came to the Saints this summer after 10 years with Green Bay and Kansas City. During his years with the Packers, he had three 50-catch seasons.

Also cut were sixth-round draft choice Bob Sims, a guard from Florida, and two draft choices out of San Diego State: cornerback Clarence Nunn, the Saints' No. 9 choice, and quarterback Todd Santos, who went in the 10th round.

The Indianapolis Colts waived quarterback Mark Herrmann, who was re-obtained from San Diego last winter. Herrmann, an 8-year veteran, played for the Colts in 1983-84 before being traded to the Chargers.

The Cardinals waived 13 players including linebacker Tim Moore, their eighth round pick this year.

Denver waived eight players including running back Mel Farr Jr. and journeyman offensive lineman David Jordan.

Kansas City cut 12 and put 14 on injured reserve, including Mark Adickes, their starting right guard the past three seasons.

Bob Crable, the New York Jets' most experienced linebacker, will be lost for the season with a knee injury. After arthroscopic surgery Monday, it was determined that he would need reconstructive surgery on his right knee.

Crable was one of 11 players placed by the Jets on injured reserve, as was backup tight end Rocky Klever, who has a back injury. They also cut 12 players, including veteran quarterback Tom Flick.

TRADES

The New England Patriots, whose linebacker corps has been weakened by injuries and retirements, moved to strengthen that position by acquiring two-year starter Thomas Benson from San Diego. The Patriots sent an undisclosed 1989 draft choice to the Chargers.

Benson, a second-round draft pick by Atlanta in 1984, "has very good credentials as an experienced linebacker, inside and outside, and has played a lot of football games," New England Coach Raymond Berry said.

The Buffalo Bills traded two-year starting defensive end Sean McNamie to the Phoenix Cardinals for a future draft choice. They also traded Mark Traynowicz, a fourth-year guard, to the Philadelphia Eagles for a conditional draft choice in the 1989 draft.

RETURNED

Tackle Chris Hinton ended a four-day walkout from the Indianapolis training camp. Hinton, a four-time Pro Bowl selection, left camp Thursday, reportedly unhappy that some veterans had received signing bonuses with new contracts while he did not.

The Colts did not say whether the team had renegotiated the new contract signed by Hinton last year.

Elsewhere, the New York Giants signed Pro Bowl punter Sean Landeta. His signing left tight end Mark Bavaro and linebacker Carl Banks as holdouts.

Mattingly-Steinbrenner

manager and coaches upset with us. Who else is there to blame?"

Steinbrenner also criticized Mattingly for attacking him in the media instead of confronting him personally.

"He should have said it to me man to man like we agreed — but then we wouldn't have sold those thousands of newspapers and kept all you guys secure in your employment, would we?" the owner said.

The events have designated hitter Jack Clark, who signed a two-year, $3-million contract last winter, second-guessing himself.

"Maybe the Big Apple is not for a lot of people. It's borderline with me right now," said Clark, who left the National League champion St. Louis Cardinals to sign with the Yankees last Jan. 6.

"I am and have been feeling very drained and I haven't been here five, six, seven, eight, 10 years," the Westchester Rockland Newspapers quoted Clark as saying. "It's only one season for me. I don't care whether you pay me five dollars or five million dollars. I can't change the way I feel."

When Clark joined the Yankees, he praised principal owner George Steinbrenner for having the courage to break the free-agent freeze and sign him. But he is critical of Steinbrenner now.

"He has given people the best money can buy, but that's where he it should be left. Now let the manager and players go on without the side-show that goes on," Clark said.

Clark, like Mattingly, believes Steinbrenner and the front office are guilty of a damaging impatience.

"You've got to stay with your team. You've got to stay with your people. You've got to believe in them," Clark said. "Instead, as soon as a guy makes one bad pitch they get rid of him or change his role. Guys come over here doing one thing and all of a sudden they're doing something different."

Twins Top Tigers For Ninth Straight Time

By The Associated Press
The Minnesota Twins keep bagging Tigers.

Allan Anderson led the Twins to their ninth consecutive victory over Detroit, 7-0 Monday night. "They've been beating up on us all year," Detroit manager Sparky Anderson said. "It's not anything new. Every club has a club that they beat up on and every club has a club that beats up on them. Look at Texas, they came in here and won three out of four. We've been killing Texas. It's not that unusual."

Minnesota beat the Detroit Tigers four games to 1 in last year's American League playoffs. The Twins only lost to Detroit since then was on May 13, when Doyle Alexander beat Anderson.

"I have to think it has something to do with the playoffs," Al Newman of the Twins said. "After that, we knew we could play with them."

"I can't really put my finger on it," said Kirby Puckett, who had his fifth four-hit game of the season and the 25th of his career.

Anderson, 12-7, won his sixth consecutive decision, pitching eight shutout innings. He gave up six hits, struck out none and walked one, raising his record to 11-4 since May 29.

Puckett and Brian Harper drove in two runs each against Alexander, 11-9.

"If they played against the rest of the league like they do against us, they'd be way ahead," Alexander said.

The loss snapped Detroit's four-game winning streak and cut its lead over Boston in the AL East to three games. Despite their second straight victory, the Twins trail AL West-leading Oakland by eight games. "You beat Detroit four in a row and then lose to Texas three in a row and now beat Detroit again, what can you say?" Harper said.

Athletics 9, Yankees 2
Glenn Hubbard's two-run double highlighted a six-run third inning and Curt Young and Gene Nelson combined on a four-hitter, sending New York to its fourth consecutive loss and 10th in 14 games.

Young, 8-7, gave up three hits in seven innings. He retired the final 13 batters he faced and Nelson finished with one-hit relief.

Charles Hudson, 6-4, activated from the 21-day disabled list earlier in the day after tendonitis in his right shoulder, gave up five runs in 2 2-3 innings.

Red Sox 6, Angels 2
Bruce Hurst won his sixth consecutive decision since coming off the disabled list and improved to 11-1 in Fenway Park this season.

Hurst, 15-4, allowed four hits in seven innings, striking out five and walking one. Hurst left after feeling an arm problem and Mike Smithson finished with two-hit relief.

Ellis Burks hit a two-run double and Mike Greenwell a two-run triple off Terry Clark, 5-2, who allowed eight hits and walked six in 6 2-3 innings.

Blue Jays 6, White Sox 3
Dave Stieb struck out a career-high 12 batters to match Toronto's club record and pitched a five-hitter as Chicago lost its fifth straight game.

Stieb, 12-8, pitched his fifth complete game of the season and improved his career record against the White Sox to 16-4. He tied the Toronto strikeout record set by Pete Vuckovich in 1977 and matched by Jim Clancy this year.

Sal Butera snapped a 2-2 tie in the fifth inning with a two-run homer, his first of the season and the eighth of his career. Two outs later, Jesse Barfield hit his 13th homer.

Jerry Reuss, 9-8, gave up eight hits and all six runs in 4-2-3 innings.

Mariners 7, Orioles 3
Bill Wilkinson, 1-2, pitched 4 2-3 innings of scoreless, one-hit relief and Mickey Brantley and Darnell Coles drove in two runs each for Seattle, which won its fourth straight game.

Seattle scored twice in the fifth to take the lead. Brantley tied the score with a run-scoring single off Oswald Peraza, 5-6, and Coles hit an RBI groundout.

Brewers 7, Indians 3
Dale Sveum drove in three runs, one with a go-ahead double in a four-run sixth.

Mike Birkbeck, 9-6, gave up nine hits in six innings to beat Cleveland for the first time in his career. Chuck Crim pitched three innings for his seventh save.

John Farrell, 13-8, allowed nine hits and all seven runs in 5 2-3 innings.

Rangers 9, Royals 5
Jeff Kunkel's two-run single in four-run fifth inning gave Texas the lead and the Rangers won for the fifth time in seven games.

Oddibe McDowell had three hits and Kansas City pitchers walked eight batters, four of whom scored.

Jose Guzman, 11-10, gave up seven hits and four runs in six innings. Ed Vande Berg pitched three innings, getting his first save for Texas. Floyd Bannister, allowed four runs and nine hits in 4 1-3 innings. His is 2-7 over his last 12 starts since May 21.

Jackson Blanks Pirates For Cincy Win

By The Associated Press
Danny Jackson might be the only one who doesn't think he's ready to win the Cy Young Award.

Pete Rose is convinced. So are the Pittsburgh Pirates, who were blanked 2-0 by the left-hander Monday night. It was Jackson's eighth straight victory as he became the National League's first 18-game winner.

Jackson, 18-5, was traded by Kansas City to Cincinnati last winter after going 9-18. As the Reds' ace, he has a league-leading 12 complete games, including four in a row. He's allowed only two runs and 19 hits in those four games and his five shutouts are second to Tim Lear's six.

"I don't think about the Cy Young at all," Jackson said. "I don't consider personal goals at this point of the season, that doesn't do any good. I'd just like to see us get a little bit closer to (NL West-leading) Los Angeles."

The Reds did Monday when the Dodgers' seven-game winning streak was snapped by the Mets, 7-1. That left Cincinnati, which is fourth in the West, 8½ games behind.

"I can't imagine who else you would vote for," Reds manager Pete Rose said of Jackson's Cy Young chances. "If every pitcher in the league were like him, the batting champion would bat .250."

"We faced the guy who's the hottest pitcher in the league, the best pitcher in the league right now," Pittsburgh's Andy Van Slyke said. "He's got a lot of movement on his pitches. He's tough."

Jackson, 11-1 in his last 13 starts, said he's not pitching that much better than he did last season when the Royals scored only 37 runs in his 18 losses.

"I'm getting a lot of breaks this year that I didn't get last year," Jackson said. "If I had gotten the number of runs I've gotten this year, my record would have been turned around."

Mets 7, Dodgers 1
At Los Angeles, the Mets snapped their four-game slide minus Manager Davey Johnson, who was with his mother in Texas before she underwent leg surgery. Dwight Gooden pitched an eight-hitter for his first complete game in seven starts and Keith Hernandez and Kevin McReynolds homered.

It was the fourth straight victory against Los Angeles for Gooden, 15-6, who is 7-1 against the Dodgers lifetime. He has a 0.34 earned run average in six career starts at Dodger Stadium, where he is 4-0 with only two earned runs allowed.

The six runs were twice as many as the Mets scored during their losing streak.

Astros 9, Cubs 7
At Chicago, Houston won the second official night game at Wrigley Field as Craig Biggio's first major league home run, broke a tie in the 10th as Gerald Young singled and scored on a three-base error by center fielder Mitch Webster. Glenn Davis then singled in the ninth run.

Damon Berryhill had a three-run homer and a two-run shot for Chicago. But reliever Rich Gossage blew the lead, allowing two runs in the top of the ninth and Biggio's homer.

Juan Agosto lifted his record to 10-0, but had trouble ending the game. He allowed one run in the 10th on a two-out balk that erased a flyout that would have ended the game. But he then got Shawon Dunston to ground out.

Houston starter Mike Scott was the subject of a glove search by umpire Terry Tata in the bottom of the third. Vance Law asked Tata to check the ball and Tata apparently found a scuff mark. He went out and also checked Scott's glove, which caused a brief argument between Tata and Houston manager Hal Lanier.

Giants 3, Expos 2
At San Francisco, Rick Reuschel, 17-6, pitched a five-hitter, struck out a season-high eight and walked none. Reuschel retired the final 12 batters.

Ernest Riles hit a pinch-hit, three-run homer off Bryn Smith in the seventh inning as the Expos' losing streak reached nine games, their longest since 1977.

Mike Aldrete led off in the seventh with a single and Matt Williams got a bunt single down the third-base line. After Bob Melvin struck out attempting to bunt, Riles pinch hit for Jose Uribe and homered to right.

Montreal's Tim Lincecum had tripled to score the first run, and Andres Galarraga made it 2-0 with a sacrifice fly.

Braves 5, Cardinals 3
At St. Louis, Ron Gant had three hits, including a home run and a double, and scored three runs.

Gant hit his 15th home run to lead off the third and tie the score 3-3.

An error by St. Louis second baseman Jose Oquendo on Terry Blocker's grounder leading off the fifth helped Atlanta score two runs.

Pitcher Tom Glavine attempted to sacrifice but hit into a forceout, Gant doubled to left and Lonnie Smith walked to load the bases. Glavine scored on Joe Magrane's wild pitch and Gerald Perry drove in a run with a groundout.

The Cardinals scored their runs on four hits in the first, highlighted by Tom Brunansky's two-run double.

Phillies 6, Padres 5
At San Diego, the Phillies ended their eight-game losing streak with four unearned runs in a five-run seventh inning.

Darren Daulton and Steve Jeltz had run-scoring singles in the inning, helping the Phillies tie the score 4-4. The go-ahead run scored on a throwing error by Lance McCullers after he fielded a bunt by Bob Dernier.

The Padres had scored three runs in the sixth to take a 4-1 lead and chase Phillies starter Mike Maddux. Greg Harris, 4-4, shut down the rally by getting the final two outs, while Steve Bedrosian worked the last two innings for his 22nd save.

Musselman Named To Coaching Spot

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Bill Musselman, who achieved success at the University of Minnesota in the early 1970s but may be best remembered for an on-court brawl and off-court NCAA violations reportedly will be named coach of the NBA expansion Minnesota Timberwolves.

The Timberwolves, who begin play in the 1989-90 season, called a press conference for today and all speculation centered around Musselman, 48.

Both daily Twin Cities newspapers, the Star Tribune of Minneapolis and the St. Paul Pioneer Press Dispatch, say in today's editions that Musselman "will be named" Timberwolves coach this afternoon.

"No comment," Timberwolves president Bob Stein said.

Musselman's telephone was answered by a machine, and calls were not returned.

Musselman coached Ashland College in Ohio to a 129-30 record from 1965-71 and then took over a Minnesota team that was 11-13 in 1970-71. He guaranteed that his team would contend for the Big Ten title in his first year and he produced, coaching the Gophers to their first outright conference championship in 53 years.

Midway through that 1971-72 season, however, a huge brawl broke out in a Minnesota-Ohio State game. Gophers Corky Taylor and Ron Behagen were suspended for the rest of the season and three Buckeyes had to be hospitalized. Musselman was accused of not trying to stop the brawl.

He went on to compile a 69-32 record in four seasons at Minnesota, and his .688 winning percentage is the best in school history. But after he left, more than 100 NCAA rules violations were uncovered during his tenure, resulting in a three-year probation.

He left Minnesota in 1975 to coach the old American Basketball Association's San Diego entry. He also coached Virginia in the ABA and Reno in the defunct World Basketball Association.

His one association with NBA basketball was a disaster. Musselman took over the Cleveland Cavaliers in 1980-81 and went 25-46 before he was moved up to the front office. He came back briefly the next season to post a 2-21 mark. He was a scout at Cleveland in 1982-83.

While Cavs coach, he was given power to make trades and he dealt four No. 1 draft choices to the Dallas Mavericks for the likes of Mike Braatz, Jerome Whitehead, Richard Washington and Geoff Huston.

The trades made Dallas the model expansion franchise — one Stein says the Timberwolves hope to emulate — and guaranteed the Cavaliers more losses than victories for years to come.

Musselman said the fact that he had only a one-year contract put undue pressure on him to win. He also said others had a say in the trades.

Beginning in 1983-84, Musselman went to the minor-league Continental Basketball Association. He is the only person to coach in four different pro leagues.

He coached Sarasota, Tampa Bay, Rapid City and Albany in the CBA, and his teams won the last four league titles.

Stein said he was happy to name a coach about 15 months before the team plays its first game.

Film Director Uses TV To Tout Glories Of Old Movie Classics

By JOHN HORN
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — The best place to discover old movies isn't on "The Late, Late Show" anymore. It's on "CBS This Morning."

Every Thursday on the CBS program, director Peter Bogdanovich praises classic films available on videocassette. Through the five-minute pieces, "CBS This Morning" viewers have been presented with the works of George Cukor, Howard Hawks and Preston Sturges.

Tom Cruise and Eddie Murphy, so far, have been left alone.

"I don't think a film is an old film just because it was made many years ago," Bogdanovich said. "If it's a good picture, it's still new for those people who haven't seen it before. There are so many films that I wish I could be seeing again for the first time. ... Part of the impetus for doing this is the need for another small voice out there helping people enjoy themselves and see something good."

The director of "The Last Picture Show," "Paper Moon" and "Mask," Bogdanovich has spent much of his career discussing film history.

"I've always been interested in the tradition of Hollywood and the past. I've always written about all the directors, and that was something I was interested in before I ever started directing."

As Bogdanovich looks at it, today's filmgoers have been blanching by a stream of mediocre movies and empty television shows. Furthermore, films from Hollywood's golden era now are considered old-fashioned and, therefore, avoided.

"I think this whole generation — people in their teens and early 20s — doesn't know about old movies at all," Bogdanovich said. "Kids don't like things that their parents like. So asking somebody to watch a black and white movie is as though we're asking them to listen to Glenn Miller or something."

Given the choice between Ernst Lubitsch's 1942 film "To Be or Not to Be" and Alan Johnson's 1982 remake, which one will most video shoppers choose? "The new one, because it's in color and stars Mel Brooks," Bogdanovich said. "Nobody knows who Carole Lombard and Jack Benny are."

When a movie is seen on a television screen, not in the theaters, the film's impact is reduced, Bogdanovich said. "There is a tremendous difference between seeing a movie on video and seeing it on a big screen. But I guess it's better to see a reproduction of a painting in a book than to never see the painting at all."

"What I have been trying to do is convey to the consumer when he walks into a video store and is confronted by all these titles, 'How do I know what to get?' It's tough to know. If you see a shelf of John Wayne pictures, there's 'Rio Grande' and 'The Searchers' and 'Tall in the Saddle.' So how do you know if 'Tall in the Saddle' is as good as the others?"

Bogdanovich finds that television has certain advantages over magazine columns, his usual forum for film criticism.

"At some point, early on, it struck me that while five minutes on television isn't much, five minutes in a movie is a long time. So I've been approaching these as five-minute movies. I try to use the visual — the video clips — and the audio as two separate things. The visual gives you information that I am not repeating in the audio. So you are getting twice as much information as you normally get."

Bogdanovich does not devote each "CBS This Morning" segment to one director. He has also looked at political films, screwball comedies, Oscar losers and MGM musicals.

Two contemporary directors — Elaine May and John Cassavetes — have been profiled.

Which is not to say, though, that Bogdanovich is swept away with the contemporary cinema; he said "there is no question" that it's far inferior than movies of the '40s and '50s.

"I'm not saying there are not some good picture makers around," Bogdanovich said. "But ... since the early '60s, the golden age of American film has ended as I see it."

If, as Bogdanovich hopes, he returns to feature film production, he may no longer have time for his "CBS This Morning" series. Bogdanovich said he plans to direct "Texasville," Larry McMurtry's sequel to "The Last Picture Show," next spring, with a cast that includes Cybill Shepherd, Jeff Bridges, Cloris Leachman and Eileen Brennan. Until then, he'll look to the past.

Peppard Says He Has Things In Common With Hemingway

CHICAGO (AP) — They've been unlucky in love and had their problems with booze, but George Peppard and Ernest Hemingway found each other, and now Peppard is bringing Hemingway back home.

The 59-year-old actor, known as Hannibal Smith of television's "The A-Team," has brought his one-man play "Papa: The Legendary Lives of Ernest Hemingway," to Chicago's Royal George Theater, 10 miles from Hemingway's suburban Oak Park birthplace.

The play is set in Cuba and depicts a day in the life of Hemingway when he was 58, three years before his 1961 suicide.

The play, produced by Peppard's Lime Tree Productions, ends its run here Aug. 28 before heading to San Francisco, and then possibly Broadway.

"Papa," written by John De Groot, struck Peppard when he first read it, the actor said in a recent interview. "Something like this happens once in a career, something this good, this literate," the actor said.

Reviews have been mixed. But Peppard said people who knew Hemingway, author of "For Whom the Bell Tolls" and "The Old Man and the Sea," have told him his portrayal brings Hemingway to life.

Hemingway was married four times, drank too much, and played out dangerous and exciting real-life roles — an ambulance driver in World War I, a big-game hunter, a deep-sea fisherman.

Peppard also has married four times and has had his own problems with the bottle, though he said he has been off alcohol nearly a decade.

"It makes a big difference (in the character portrayal) that I drank too much for 25 years," he said.

He noted that many of his mother's siblings died young, and his own father died when he was 22. "Death has always been a presence in my life," he said.

"Both Hemingway and I have been exposed to the vicissitudes of fame, so those things lent some real kinds of perceptions into a character that is very complex."

The demise of "The A-Team" two years ago came six months' after Peppard's separation from his fourth wife, Alexis Adams.

Valerie Denies She Tried To Control Show

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Valerie Harper denied she tried to gain control over the TV series "Valerie" before its producers fired her for allegedly violating her contract, testifying, "I wasn't trying to be Genghis Khan."

"I wanted to have participation, early knowledge of stories so I would be in a partnership on the show," she testified Monday, her 48th birthday.

Ms. Harper, who was to continue testifying in Los Angeles County Superior Court this afternoon, was called to the stand by Lorimar, which is suing her for alleged breach of contract. She is countering, contending that Lorimar wrongfully fired her a year ago.

Lorimar replaced Ms. Harper with Sandy Duncan and renamed the NBC-TV show "The Hogan Family."

Lorimar attorney Donald Engel on Monday sought to show that Ms. Harper was aware of all aspects of her 1985 contract, and tried to renegotiate it because she craved more money and total control over "Valerie."

Ms. Harper denied this, saying she left business matters in the hands of her husband, Tony Cacciotti, and left the contract to her agent and lawyer, whose advice she later came to doubt.

Horoscope From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR WEDNESDAY Aug. 24
ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Get involved in practical activities, show reverence, and get good results. A morning discussion can bring you valuable cooperation.
TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Take beauty and health treatments that can make you look and feel great. Make plans to see your friends tonight, and have fun.
GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Consult an expert who can help you become more prosperous in the future. Don't be forceful with anyone, or you could get in trouble.
MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): A project you may start today appears promising, but in the long run it could bring you a big loss, so study it further.
LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Be mindful of all the details connected with your most important activities, and get the results you want. Plan a party for the coming weekend.
VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Make plans wisely so you can enjoy the recreations you like much more in the days ahead. Listen to what your mate wants, and try to please.
LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): If a family member irks you, try to control your temper, and avoid trouble. The morning can be happy, especially if friends drop by.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): You have the ability to make constructive plans and then follow them through. Discuss your goals with the people you see daily.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): You can handle business activities well but need to do them more carefully. Stop taking yourself so seriously, and enjoy life more.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Concentrate on exactly how you want your life to be in the future, and start working in that direction. Don't upset your friends.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): You think you've solved a personal worry, but look out for some new aspect that may come up. Handle an annoying job carefully.
PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Get suggestions from an elder or an expert on how to achieve your greatest wishes, and be sure to follow the advice later.

to concede a diamond trick for down one.
 The loss of that trick could be avoided only by negotiating a second endplay, and for that to work one of the defenders—specifically East on this deal—would have to have started with a doubleton king of trumps. So declarer cashed the ace and exited with a low trump.
 In with his trump trick, East experienced great agony—he was faced with a number of losing options. A black-suit return would be the transportation to all the winners in dummy. But a diamond would be no better—declarer would run that to the queen and lose no more tricks.

Walkaway Ends Trail In Luxury

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — A young convict tried a first-class getaway, fleeing a work detail in a chauffeured limousine before being recaptured at a luxury hotel 60 miles away, authorities said.

Derrick Stillwell, 21, was arrested Monday at the AMFAC Hotel near Albuquerque International Airport a few hours after he walked away from the work detail in Santa Fe and into the Cadillac limo, officials said.

Authorities arrested three other people found hiding behind curtains on the balcony outside the seventh-floor room where Stillwell was found, police said. Stillwell was traced through a tip to Crime Stoppers, which pays rewards for tips on crimes, said police Sgt. Ray Sandoval.

Stillwell was back at the prison today. The minimum-security inmate is serving an 18-month sentence for fraud at the Penitentiary of New Mexico near Santa Fe, said state Department of Corrections spokesman Kevin Jackson.

The three others were identified as Lillie Garcia, 18; Carl Duckworth Jones, 24, and a 17-year-old girl, authorities said.

Ms. Garcia and Jones were booked for investigation of harboring a fugitive, according to jail records. Information on the juvenile was not immediately available.

Stillwell was one of seven prisoners assigned to a work detail at the district headquarters of the state Highway and Transportation Department next to state police headquarters in Santa Fe, said Jackson. One guard was assigned to the crew when the escape occurred.

"A dark blue limousine pulled up and the inmate expeditiously leaped into the vehicle and was driven away," Jackson said.

The guard alerted corrections officials and roadblocks went up.

Stillwell's chauffeur "had no inkling he was an inmate," Jackson said. "I believe the driver thought it was a business-as-usual pickup."

The driver, Phillip L. Pacheco, told officials his passenger said he planned to catch a flight to Los Angeles, then Seattle, the spokesman said.

"We believe there might have been tickets left at the airport," he said.

Pacheco also said his passenger asked him to stop briefly at a home in Albuquerque before going to the airport, Jackson said. The driver said Stillwell talked to a person there briefly, then got back into the car and yelled out as he was leaving "not to worry, he would write."

Stillwell, a native of New York City, had earned time off for good behavior and had been scheduled for release in December, Jackson said.

Shuttle Crew Says Space Rewards Outweigh Risks

By LAURA TOLLEY
Associated Press Writer
SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — The dangers in returning Americans to space flight are overshadowed by the rewards, says one of five astronauts scheduled to fly on the first shuttle mission since the Challenger disaster.

"There are certain things in life that the importance really transcends any danger that's involved or risk that's involved," Marine Lt. Col. Dave Hilmers said Monday at the last news conference he and fellow Discovery crew members will hold before their flight.

"The sense of privilege that I have in being a part of this and the purpose very much overshadows any fear that I have."

Discovery's launch, expected during late September, will mark the nation's return to manned space flight. On Jan. 28, 1986, Challenger exploded 73 seconds after liftoff, killing its crew of seven.

Navy Capt. Rick Hauck, who will command the veteran crew on Discovery's four-day mission, said the flight is important to establish confidence in the space program.

Although safety is important, Hauck said he was concerned about people who believe all risks should be avoided.

If the United States becomes afraid to take any risks then "we need to find out who's going to lead the world and follow them," he said.

The mission will be a test flight,

Hauck said, noting that the shuttle has undergone 210 modifications since the Challenger tragedy. Although mechanical failures could occur, he doesn't believe any will be life-threatening.

"We clearly could not afford to lose another vehicle, much less another crew," Hauck said. "I don't think the manned space flight program could withstand another Challenger on STS-26 (his flight)."

"That's high stakes, but I'm not concerned that that's going to happen. In the last year and a half, I've seen how we've modified that machine and how we've done business. So I feel very comfortable with the flight."

Officials of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration have been hesitant to set a date for the often postponed launch because engineers still are grappling with two problems that developed during a test firing of Discovery's engines on the launch pad at Cape Canaveral on Aug. 10, Hauck said.

But, he added, "I'm not aware of anything that might get in the way of a late September launch."

One problem a small leak of hydrogen gas detected in an area where the orbiter is joined to the external tank. The other is the apparent sluggishness of three gaseous oxygen valves in the fueling system.

Although NASA officials have said they don't think either problem is serious, they still wanted to test both systems. They hope they can announce resolutions and a launch date this week.

The astronauts' main goal will be to deploy a communications satellite. They also will conduct 11 science and technology experiments.

The other crew members are Air Force Col. Richard Covey, the pilot, and mission specialists George Nelson and Mike Lounge.

In addition to the changes in the orbiter, there were 50 modifications to the shuttle booster rockets. The Challenger disaster was blamed on a faulty joint in one of two solid-fuel booster rockets.

Widow Settles Damage Suit Over Challenger Booster

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — The widow of the space shuttle Challenger's pilot has reached a tentative and undisclosed settlement on a wrongful death suit with the manufacturer of the rocket booster that exploded in the nation's worst space disaster.

Details of the agreement were not disclosed Monday by the attorneys for Morton Thiokol Inc., the manufacturer, and Jane J. Smith, whose husband, Beaufort, N.C., native Navy Capt. Michael J. Smith, was one of seven astronauts killed when the Challenger blew up on Jan. 28, 1986.

"We've resolved the matter subject to working out some details," said William F. Maready of Winston-Salem, who represented Mrs. Smith.

John Adler, an attorney for Morton Thiokol, said the parties would request that the settlement amount remain confidential.

Mrs. Smith, a Charlotte, N.C., native now living in Virginia Beach, Va., initially sought $1.5 billion in damages from the federal government and Morton Thiokol when the suit was filed last year in federal court in Orlando, Fla.

But damages were not specified when the case was transferred to Virginia earlier this year because of a backlog in the Florida court.

The families of the other six

Challenger victims have accepted undisclosed financial settlements from the company, which built the solid-fuel booster rocket blamed for the explosion shortly after the shuttle lifted off from Cape Canaveral.

Four victims' families also received settlements from the government. But U.S. District Judge Patricia Fawcett of Orlando rejected Mrs. Smith's claim against the government, because her husband was on military duty assigned to NASA at the time of the explosion.

U.S. District Judge Robert R. Merhige Jr. of Richmond, who received the case from Florida, had set aside six days for trial in September.

But Merhige also appointed former U.S. Sen. William B. Spong of Virginia as a special "settlement master" to try and work out a compromise. Spong said Merhige pushed hard for an agreement before trial.

Merhige met in chambers with attorneys Monday before a scheduled hearing on summary judgment motions, and two hours later the lawyers said they had reached the tentative accord.

Maready and Adler said they expected their clients to accept the settlement and would make an announcement about the case Tuesday.

"Hopefully we can get these details worked out," Maready said.

Adler said the question of fault by Thiokol was not an issue in the settlement. Mrs. Smith initially had sought to bar the company from supplying NASA with any more booster rockets, but that portion of her suit was dismissed by the Florida judge.

B-1 Could Cost Another $8 Billion

L.A. Times-Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Air Force proposals for correcting flaws in the troubled B-1 bomber and improving its ability to penetrate future Soviet defenses could cost as much as $8 billion, according to a new congressional report released Monday.

The proposals for countering future Soviet threats, ranging from improving its communications systems to improving its ability to confuse Soviet radars, were revealed publicly in detail for the first time in the Congressional Budget Office study.

The report also stressed that, despite Air Force improvements to existing B-1 systems, the $28 billion penetrating-bomber program is still years from meeting requirements to counter current Soviet threats.

"We have to decide first if it's worth it to fix the B-1's problems," said Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee and a vocal critic of the bomber. He requested the CBO study.

"And then we have to decide what, if anything, to do about the expected Air Force requests for enhancements. To get more billions for the B1, the Air Force is going to have to make a very strong case, indeed," he said.

An Air Force spokesman said that the $8 billion in proposed bomber improvements for combating future Soviet threats is a "shopping list" of suggestions and that the Air Force is uncertain how many of the improvements it will request.

The Air Force has programmed about $500 million for enhancements to the bomber to meet future threats. That does not include money that will be needed to fix the critical electronic countermeasures system, which is supposed to protect the craft on bombing missions into the Soviet Union under existing defenses.

Congress said this year that the Air Force will receive no more money for improvements to meet future threats until it fixes the plane's inability to deal with existing Soviet defenses.
