RAGING WATERS — What is left of a merry-go-round is dragged by the raging waters of the Santa Catarina River down a normally dry riverbed in Monterry, Mexico, that was the site of soccer and baseball fields, and basketball courts. Officials said about 200 people were feared drowned when passenger buses were trapped in the rising waters and overturned. (AP Laserphoto)

200 Feared Drowned In Monterrey, Mexico

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — About 200 people were feared drowned Saturday after a river swollen by Hurricane Gilbert's heavy rains surged over its banks, sweeping away four buses and flooding scores of homes, authorities said.

The raging Santa Catarina River swallowed cars, crushed houses and flooded large areas of this industrial city of 3 million about 110 miles from the Texas border. Much of Monterrey was without power and drinking water late Saturday and the airport was closed.

Gov. Jorge Trevino declared the state of Nuevo Leon a disaster area.

"It was a terrible thing, the worst thing that could have happened here," said his spokesman, Geraldo Castro. "This disaster is unprecedented in the state."

The hurricane, the strongest on record, was downgraded to a tropical depression Saturday after leaving 100 others dead across the Caribbean, Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula and Texas.

Castro confirmed early police estimates that at least 200 were feared dead in Monterrey alone. "There may be even more," he said.

He said there were at least 200 people aboard the four buses. "I don't think many of them could have escaped," he said.

Castro said at least 20,000 people in the state were homeless, 12,000 of them in Monterrey. In the suburb of San Pedro-Garza Garcia, about 200 houses were swept away.

"We all left with only the clothes on our backs," Victorio Cruz said as he picked through mud, gravel and the cement blocks where his two-room house had stood.

Red Cross spokesman Adelberto Salas said only 13 of the estimated 200 passengers on four buses overturned by the surging river in Monterrey were saved.

By Saturday afternoon, at least 32 bodies had been recovered. Twenty bodies were pulled out of the river in Monterrey and another 12 or 13 downstream in Juarez and Cadereyta, according to coroner's offices in Monterrey and nearby Guadalupe.

"The current carried more bodies but we don't how many there are," said Guadalupe Coroner Juventio Guerrero. "A lot of bodies cannot be recovered because they are in the river."

Four policemen were swept to their deaths trying to rescue the passengers, said Comandante Antulio Alejo, commander of the Cobra police unit. The National Civil Defense System in Mexico City said two volunteers helping the police officers were missing.

Alejo also said that at the same spot "There are several cars buried there also and we understand that some bodies are still in some of the cars."

As the water began to subside Saturday afternoon the wheels and chassis of one overturned bus could be seen. The vehicle was buried up to the wheels by mud and rocks.

Nearby and partially buried by mud were construction machines and other vehicles that had been carried by the raging waters into the river.

Eduardo Pichardo, an employee of Transportes Frontera in Monterrey, said about 64 people were aboard the two buses from his company. He said one bus was en route to Monterrey from the border city of Nuevo Laredo and the other was on a run from Monterrey to Mexico City.

Police said the buses were coming from the direction of Saltillo, about 55 miles west of Monterrey. Saltillo, a city of about 450,000, is the capital of neighboring Coahuila state. Police said the buses probably had been diverted from their original routes because of flooded roads.

Sanchez said rising water stranded the buses on a low-lying stretch of road parallel to the river. As a special police unit, the Cobras, tried to rescue the passengers, the current increased, the water rose and the buses overturned.

Downstream from Monterrey, bodies were being recovered from the river, police said.

Namphy Ousted In Coup

By MICHAEL NORTON
Associated Press Writer

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Military ruler Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy was ousted in a military coup Saturday night and escorted under guard to the international airport, a government spokesman said.

The government reported Namphy's ouster several hours after shooting broke out at the main plaza in front of the presidential palace. The gunshots sent dozens of people fleeing for cover in what appeared to be fighting between army factions, witnesses said.

"Namphy was arrested and escorted to the airport," at about 8:15 p.m. in a convoy of military vehicles led by a armored personnel carrier, Frantz Lubin, director of information, told The Associated Press.

Lubin said that possible members of a new military junta are Foreign Affairs Minister Brig. Gen. Herard Abraham, Presidential Guard Commander Gen. Prosper Avril, Infor-

Radon No Problem In Eastern N.C.

By STUART SAVAGE
Reflector Staff Writer

Radon — a naturally occurring invisible, odorless and radioactive gas — could be causing lung cancer, killing 20,000 people a year in the United States, the Environmental Protection Agency and the Public Health Service said last week.

But Dr. Tim Monroe, director of the Pitt County Health Department, said Friday that residents of Pitt and other eastern North Carolina counties have little to fear.

"It's not a problem in this state," Monroe said, explaining that "radon gas is a byproduct of the natural radioactive decay of uranium.

"There are higher concentrations in some areas than others. It's much higher in areas where the underlying geology is dense rock formations. In the mountains and Piedmont of North Carolina there is more uranium in the geology."

But in the eastern Coastal Plains, the "underlying geology is primarily marine sediment," Monroe said, resulting in the concentration of radon being "very low."

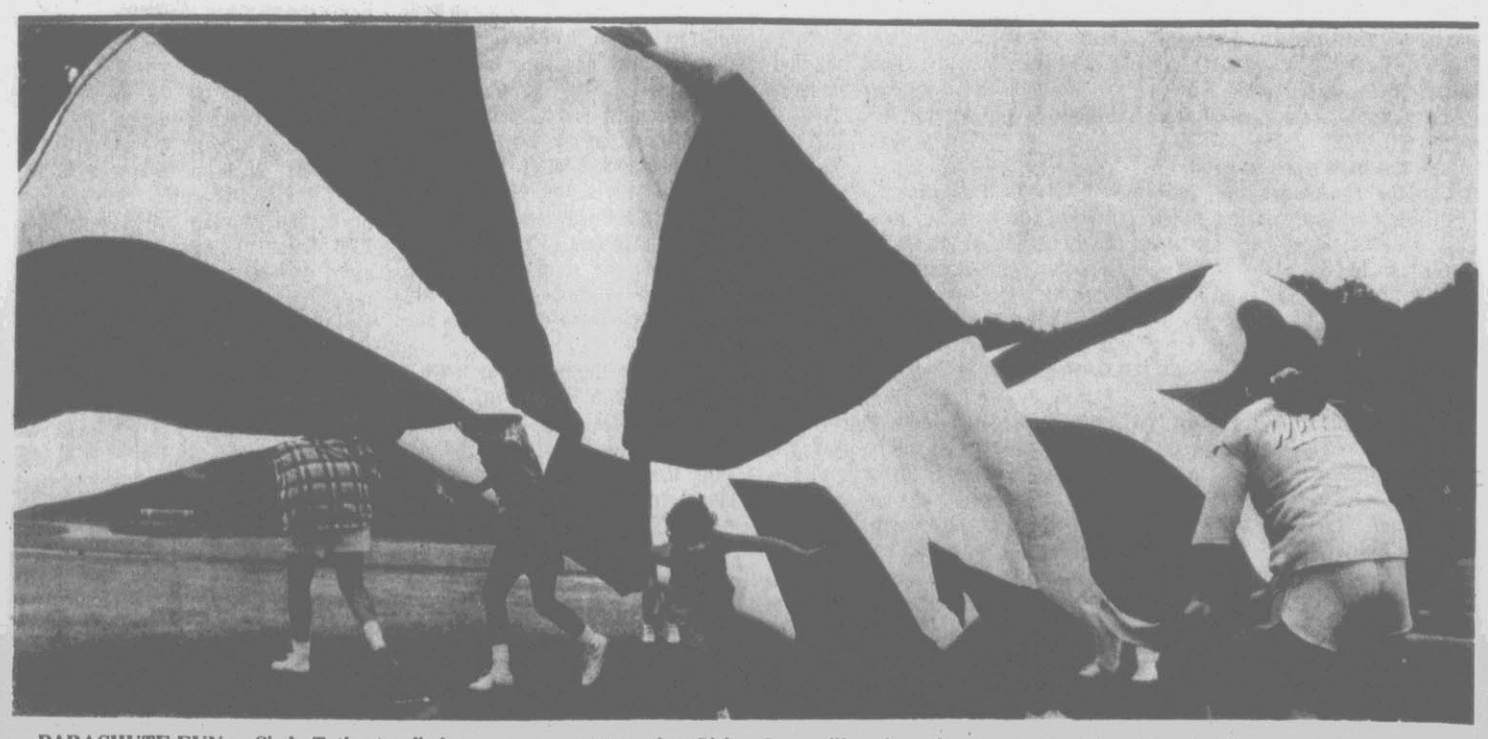

Citing the results of a survey of all 100 counties in the state 18 months ago, Monroe said radon levels in Pitt County were in the "very low risk category," with all levels more than 75 percent below the level at which the EPA suggests "something needs to be done.

"There is very minimum concern in this area," Monroe said. "The mountains and Piedmont are much more affected by radon that the Coastal Plain."

The gas, which seeps into homes through water systems, through masonry or woodwork, "can be concentrated in closed homes." Those with poor ventilation are especially conducive to radon buildup, Monroe said.

Radon's effects? "It increases the incidents of lung cancer. The combination of radon gas and cigarette smoking produces a significantly higher risk," according to Monroe.

He said the best way to reduce the problem in areas where radon is a problem is by "increasing ventilation to reduce the concentration."

Bentsen Focus: Southern Voters

By JOHN BARE
Reflector Staff Writer

Democratic vice presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen tried to lasso Southern voters at his campaign rally in Greenville on Friday, delivering a speech campaign staffers say he is to repeat in several key Southern states in an effort to lure conservative Democrats back to the party.

"The South is coming home to the Democratic party," Bentsen said, standing on a stage on the steps of the Pitt County courthouse along with three U.S. flags, two North Carolina flags and eight red, white and blue banners.

With staffers handing out miniature American flags and campaign posters, Bentsen, 67, a U.S. Senator from Texas, responded with a 30-minute speech peppered with patriotic pledges, promising fiscal responsibility and singing the praises of the South.

"I've been looking for some old friends that kind of wandered away in recent years," he said. "I've talked to Reagan Democrats, asking them to come home, and they are responding.

"We need to win North Carolina ... No Democrat has been elected president in modern times without carrying North Carolina. And we mean to do it.

"The Democratic Party of 1988 is a symbol of Southern success. We're an America working together ...," he said, "working to restore integrity to government and leadership to this world of ours."

More than 2,000 people and 10 television cameras set up along Evans Street in downtown Greenville to receive Bentsen's message, which began at 1:30 p.m., about an hour behind scheduled.

About 30 state officials joined Bentsen, his wife, B.A., and Ten-

MASH Unit To Be Activated

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Greenville's new Mobile Surgical Army Hospital (MASH) is set to be activated Sunday in a ceremony at the Brody Medical Science Building at Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

The 350th MASH unit will be operated by the 120th United States Army Reserve Command and directed by Col. Richard Merrill.

After a public activation ceremony set for 2 p.m., people will be allowed to tour the unit and hear an explanation of the medical equipment brought in for demonstration purposes by the 312th Medical Evacuation Hospital based in Greensboro.

Col. Jack D. Medlin, commander of the 312th, along with 31 members of his Medical Evacuation unit, spent Saturday and Sunday morning setting up generators, mobile surgery units, mobile X-ray units, mobile pharmacy and laboratory units and hospital tents.

The components of the field hospital are identical to those which the 239-member Greenville-based MASH will use. The items are modular units set on tractor trailers, with needed equipment stored inside.

Recruiters will be present Sunday to talk to anyone interested in joining the new MASH group. Recruiters will consider people with prior military service and those with none, and folks with or without medical experience, Merrill said.

He said doctors, nurses, pharmacists, operating room technicians, emergency medical technicians and other medical specialists will be needed, but so will cooks, ambulance drivers, radio operators, chaplains, litter bearers and other support personnel.

The unit is expected to contribute about $1 million per year to the local economy in salaries and other expenditures.

When completed, the 350th will be

Namphy Ousted In Haiti Coup

Gunfire was still heard at 10:30 p.m. in the city. An explosion shook the Lalue district about a half-mile from the main plaza.

A usually reliable source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said an army major told him that a group of officers detained Namphy after preventing him from entering the palace at 4:30 p.m.

Sources said the fighting involved army factions and members of the Tonton Macoutes, dreaded agents that terrorized Haitians during the 29-year-old dictatorships of the Duvalier family.

A source close to the military who spoke on condition of anonymity said top army officers had been meeting in the Presidential Palace since noon.

He said military leaders were considering creating a junta to replace Namphy, who took over after President Jean-Claude Duvalier fled to exile in France on Feb. 7, 1986.

Richard, a 41-year-old car mechanic who refused to give his last name, told The Associated Press that around 5 p.m. at Casernes Street, near the plaza, he saw a white pickup truck speed by carrying about 10 men wearing dark sunglasses shooting in the air, scaring people away.

Tonton Macoutes traditionally wore sunglasses.

He said when the shooting started there were several automobile accidents on Jean-Jacques Dessalines Boulevard, the main downtown artery, as panic-stricken motorists attempted to flee the area.

"It seems to me and other people I spoke to in the street that they — the different army factions and the Macoutes — want to scare the common people out of the streets and settle their business among themselves," he said.

A French diplomat who spoke on condition of anonymity and Radio Metropole said the shooting, including automatic gunfire, broke out Saturday around 5 p.m. on the Champ-de-Mars Plaza, in front of the Presidential Palace and near the army general headquarters and Dessalines Barracks.

The French diplomat, in a hotel beside the plaza, said the shooting was still going on by 7 p.m.

Several dozen people were seen running away from the plaza along John Paul II Avenue in the Turgeau district.

Residents in Turgeau contacted by telephone said the shooting in the area of the plaza was still going on at 7 p.m.

There were no reports of injuries or deaths.

A speech by Namphy that had been scheduled for Friday was abruptly canceled and replaced with a short evening communique expressing sympathy for the victims of Hurricane Gilbert. It was unknown what was the topic of the speech.

On Sept. 11, about 20 thugs invaded the St. Jean Bosco Roman Catholic church during a Mass being said by the Rev. Jean Bertrand Aristide, a critic of the military government.

The thugs, armed with guns, machetes and knifes, killed 13 people and wounded 77 and then set fire to the church as soldiers watched from across the street.

Sunday night five men and a woman boasted on government television that they took part in the massacre and on Monday thugs burned down a second Catholic church.

Some people in the St. Jean Bosco church during the attack said they recognized several City Hall employees among the assailants.

Namphy's government said it "regretted" the killings. It has made similar statements after earlaier killings but no arrests were announced.

Namphy returned to power after ousting the four-month-old elected government of civilian President Leslie Manigat on June 19. Namphy previously ruled for two years following the Duvalier's flight to France.

Namphy said he removed Manigat and his government because the president illegally ordered the transfers of several officers, including Paul, commander of the feared 700-man unit assigned to the Dessalines Barracks that is located behind the Presidential Palace.

Manigat had tried to reassign Paul to the army general headquarters.

Lieutenant's WW1 Letter Found After 70 Years

WILMINGTON (AP) — It was Aug. 5, 1918, somewhere in the trenches of World War I Europe.

A young second lieutenant named Edward Hardin sat in his tent writing his mother in Wilmington about his brush with death just hours earlier.

"Dearest Mamma, I have had an experience tonight which I don't care to repeat any time soon, for it was the narrowest escape from death I have ever had," he wrote.

The soldier had come to take for granted the sound of shells bursting around the "hole-in-the-ground" that was his company's base. But that night, the explosions came so close that Hardin and his commanding officer, whom he referred to as "Capt. Gause," were literally knocked off their feet.

"Gosh! I thought my last minutes had come," Hardin wrote, still partially deaf from the concussion he received in the attack.

Somehow, that first-hand account of a soldier's experiences in World War I wound up in a desk at the Cape Fear Chapter of the American Red Cross. Beki Summers, who recently took over as director of services to military families, was cleaning out a drawer when she came across the fragile, yellowed pages.

Ms. Summers hopes to return the 70-year-old letter to Hardin, if he is still alive, or his family.

"Nobody knows how we got ahold of it," she told the Wilmington Morning Star.

Written in pencil, the eight-page letter chronicles the different aspects of Army life, from encounters with the enemy to the second lieutenant's more mundane duties, which included compiling reports for his captain.

Addressed to Mrs. John Hardin, the soldier's letter told of the frequent casualties suffered by his unit, and how he looked forward to the much-needed rest his company was expected to receive soon.

In addition to the horrors of battle, there were other unpleasantries associated with war.

"Mamma — whisper it — I have had 'cooties,'" Hardin wrote, explaining that the dugouts and shelters used by the troops abounded with the pests.

He also told his mother how much her letters meant to him. "If you only knew, my dear, how those letters are appreciated," he wrote. "They are the particular bright spots in the otherwise 'rotten days.'"

Part of Hardin's letter didn't make it home to the states. Military censors — two of them, identified by the numbers 5113 and 6437 — took the scissors to a paragraph that perhaps hinted at the location of Hardin's unit or contained other sensitive information.

Nowhere in the letter was there a mention of where Hardin was, though he had enclosed a sampling of French currency.

He also talked about his salary, which amounted to about $150 a month. The Army charged him 42 cents a day for rations.

composed of 239 Army Reserve soldiers who will be trained to provide medical care for soldiers during wartime, Merrill said, including resuscitative surgery, medical treatment, and both pre- and post-operative intensive care for up to 60 patients within a combat zone.

A MASH is rarely used for natural disasters or any emergency other than a wartime one, he said.

The Medical Evacuation unit from Greensboro helping with the demonstration of equipment was activated during the Vietnam War. On May 13, 1968, the group received orders for Vietnam and stayed there 10 months, often treating as many as 350 soldiers a day.

The guest speaker for the activation program will be Judge Malcolm J. Howard, former civilian aide to the Secretrary of the Army for North Carolina.

Maj. Gen. Jackson Lee Flake Jr., commanding general of the 120th U.S. Army Reserve Command out of Fort Jackson, S.C., will also speak, as will Merrill. The 108th Division Band will provide music for the program.

Merrill comes to the 350th from a 1,000-bed Army Hospital based in Durham. He is an associate professor in the East Carolina University School of Medicine and a 26-year veteran of the U.S. Army and U.S. Army Reserves. He has a medical degree from Boston University School of Medicine.

The Greenville MASH unit will be one of 95 units in a region that includes five Southeastern states and is headquartered in Fort Jackson, S.C.

Guard Reunion

A reunion of Battery A, 113th Field Artillery of the North Carolina National Guard will be held Sunday at 1 p.m. at the Western Sizzling on East 10th Street.

The National Guard unit of 132 men, mostly from Pitt County, was activated Sept. 16, 1940, said to be serving a year. World War II began and most served five to six years and were dispersed throughout the U.S. Armed Forces, said Jimmy Davenport, a member of the group.

He said about 63 people — members, spouses and widows of members — will gather Sunday for an annual reunion which began in 1980. Some will come from as far away as Georgia, Ohio and California, he said. Many still live in Pitt County.

The alumni chapter of Fayetteville State University will meet Tuesday at 6:30 p.m. at the South Greenville School on Howell Street.

Balloon Launches Seen As Threat To Sea Life

WILMINGTON (AP) — Outdoor balloon launches have gotten some folks so stirred up they want them stopped.

"Releasing balloons is pretty traditional," said Jonathan Washburn, a Wilmington real estate lawyer who never thought of himself as an environmentalist until he saw a picture of what a sea turtle looked like after it ate a ballon.

"Actually, it's littering. The balloons go up. They've got to come down and they come down in the ocean. The sea turtles eat those and they die. Everybody loves sea turtles," Washburn told The Wilmington Morning Star.

Washburn said he has been examining littering laws and has begun talking to local lawmakers and city officials about curbing the practice of outdoor balloon launches.

"It's not a major political issue, but it could be," Washburn said. "Plastics in the ocean is becoming a major topic."

A few weeks ago, a balloon launch marked the official beginning of restorations to City Hall-Thalian Hall in Wilmington.

On Friday, National POW-MIA Day, 60 balloons were launched in New Hanover County to honor 60 North Carolinians listed as still missing in action. The launch was sponsored by the local Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Washburn said he called the commander of the VFW to ask whether they could do something else to honor the veterans, say a 60-gun salute.

"There's nothing I can do about it," Jim Williamson, commanding officer for the VFW chapter, said hours before the ceremony Friday.

Of Washburn's call, Williamson said, "I think he's just a wacko on the telephone. I've never found a fish with any rubber in them."

Andy Wood, a naturalist at the N.C. Aquarium at Fort Fisher, said he has been warning people about the danger of outdoor balloon launches for 10 years, but with little success.

"Virtually every time I walk the beach I find balloons," Wood said. He records and catalogues the trash and debris he finds washed ashore and balloons account for "no small percentage," he said. And, like all plastics, they do not go away.

During last year's Beach Sweep, in which volunteers collected and catalogued trash along the beach, balloons had their own catagory, Wood said.

"It's a problem. It's a real problem. We do know that animals have died eating this stuff," he said.

Particularly vulnerable are land and sea turtles and some duck species. "There's something about the texture of a balloon that wood ducks like," Wood said.

When released to the wind, balloons can travel for days, across hundreds of miles. Wood said he once found three balloons on North Carolina beaches that had been launched three days earlier from Terre Haute, Ind.

"Wherever they come down, they are a problem," he said.

Today, the Naval Fleet Reserve plans to launch 201 balloons from the Battleship North Carolina to celebrate the 201st anniversary of the Constitution — one balloon every minute at the sound of the ship's bell.

Wood said he will try to have today's 4 p.m. balloon launch canceled.

Del Herrmann, secretary of the Wilmington Fleet Reserve Association, said he doesn't buy the balloon scare. An animal may die if it swallowed a balloon by freak accident, he said, "but that wouldn't stop me from launching a balloon."

The national bicentennial committee recommended that every town and city across American launch balloons every year to celebrate the nation's Constitution. "We think that's a mighty fine idea," Herrmann said.

"It flies in the face of common sense," Wood said, who acknowledged that since the balloon industry has its own Washington lobby, opponents of outdoor launches are probably outspent in getting lawmakers to see things their way.

"The big part is just trying to turn people's opinion around. Most people oppose litter. These people are receptive," Wood said. The next step would be to convince lawmakers to go along with the public, he said.

Council Workshop Monday

A council subcommittee recommendation relating to special and permitted uses in the Medical District is one of the items to be discussed by members of the Greenville City Council at a workshop session Monday.

The workshop is set for 6 p.m. in the third floor council chambers of City Hall.

At the council's July 25 workshop session, Mayor Ed Carter appointed a four-member subcommittee to study and formulate a recommendation regarding a planning commission recommendation that almost all non-medically related special uses be deleted from the MD-2 zoning district.

That planning commission's recommendation suggests the council delete all non-medical related special uses from the MD-2 zoning district with the exception of "office building: professional and business."

The commission's recommendation suggests maintaining the "professional office" special use in the MD-2 district with the recommendaton that at least 50 percent of the gross floor area per building be occupied by uses permitted in the MD-2 zoning district. Currently the requirement states that 50 percent of the total operations within a building or project be occupied by those permitted uses.

The council subcommittee appointed by the mayor to study the planning commission's recommendation consists of Mayor Pro-Tem Lorraine Shinn, council member Nancy Jenkins, planning commission Chairman Dr. Wallace Wooles and commission member Ric Miller.

In other matters Monday, the council will consider an interim report from the Citizens Advisory Committee on Cable TV.

The report of the citizens' committee recommends the city should hire a consultant to assist in the process of cable TV refranchisement and the city should proceed with a refranchising process with the intent to award a non-exclusive franchise to the present franchisee under improved franchise requirements.

Members of the Citizens Advisory Committee unanimously approved the interim report on July 7.

The council is also slated to discuss whether to adopt a single, biweekly payroll system for all city employees. Currently 163 of the city's workers are paid weekly, while the remaining are paid biweekly.

A previous audit study indicated that by eliminating the weekly payroll system and switching all employees to a biweekly system would "yield a significant savings and data processing cost and create additional time for more effective utilization of accounting department personnel."

A payroll committee was formed by the council to study whether to implement the transition and to propose a plan to minimize negative consequences caused by any transition.

That committee included staff of the city's personnel and finance departments, public works and parks and recreation departments and council members Rufus Huggins and Inez Fridley.

Other items scheduled for discussion Monday include an architectural contract for renovations to Guy Smith Stadium, a computer study proposal, a report from Planning and Zoning Commission members on historic properties; an Agreement for Use between the City and the Greenville Jaycees; a resolution requesting exemption from bidding procedures for acquisition of natural gas; an agreement regarding the Patrick Arthur Homeplace; scheduling of dates for the council's October workshop meetings; a report from council liaisons on boards and commissions, and a report from City Manager Greg Knowles.

COMMITMENT

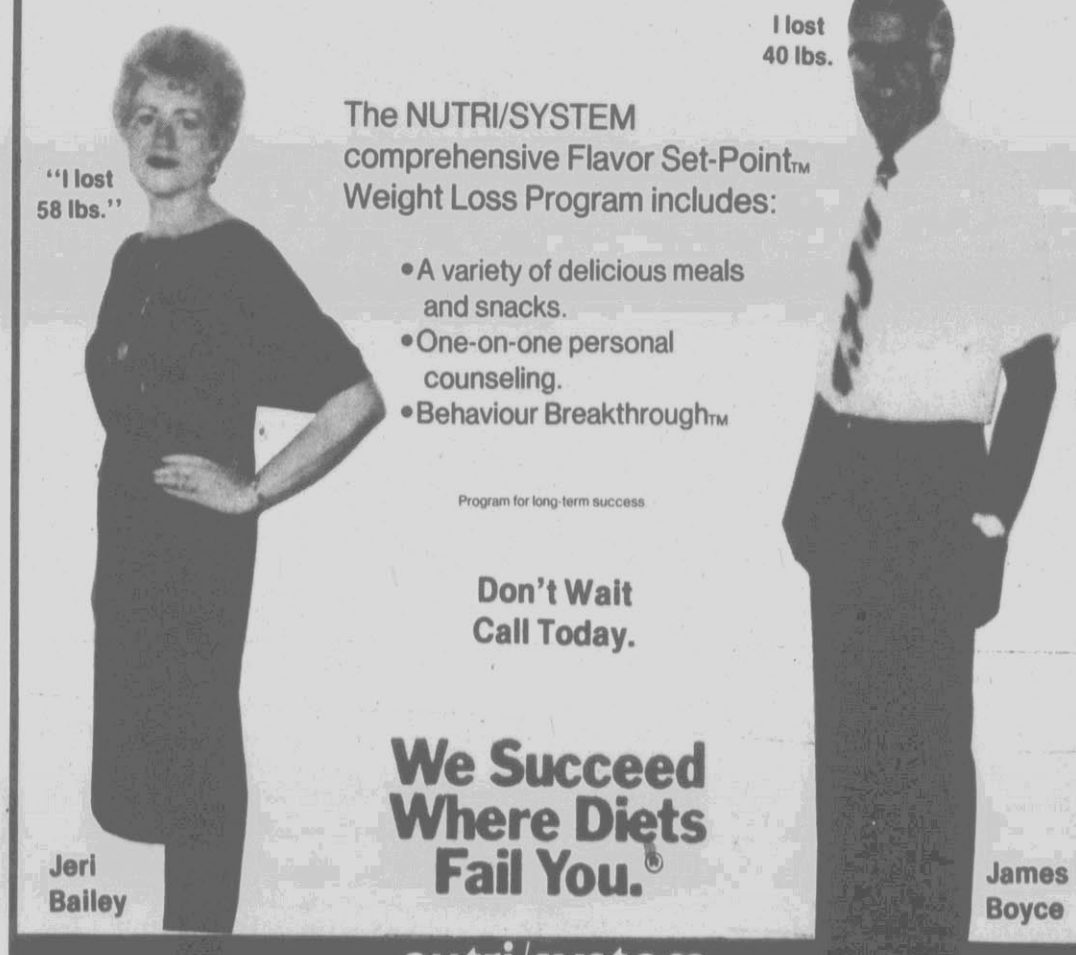

Webster defines commitment as the "act of pledging or engaging oneself." Many people fear a commitment to anyone or anything. There's too much at risk. Too many times in the past commitments to relationships, a career, or a humanistic philosophy have resulted in disappointment and frustration. It is painful to have faith in someone or something that doesn't meet your expectations.

At Trinity Free Will Baptist Church we realize that the only safe and satisfying commitment is a commitment to God. We find that in pledging our lives to God's care we gain an awareness and fulfillment that is unmatched by any vain philosophy or lifestyle. Why not join us this Sunday to learn more about the process.

B.A. Bentsen: Quintessential Candidate's Wife

By PRISCILLA BROWN
Reflector Staff Writer

Beryl Ann Bentsen was tucked into a corner office of the Pitt County Courthouse awaiting 15-minute interviews scheduled as tightly as stops on a campaign trip. Staff members hurried from office to office, herding reporters, photographers and a make-up man into their assigned spots.

Yet she sat stately in the standard government-issue chair as though it were her own. If she was graceful, those around her were not. Soon, it became too much.

"How about taking that call somewhere else," she snapped. "I can't answer questions and listen to all this at the same time."

With a turn, she was elegance anew. Despite the flight into Kinston, the drive to Greenville, the hot September sun and a parade of unfamiliar politicians, B.A. Bentsen was the quintessential candidate's wife.

Pitt County was a blur on the campaign trail. But, she said, she had a strong impression of the area.

"This is a wonderful area," she said, "and a beautiful city. I think about coming into places like this and I am struck by how huge our country is, how much there is to be covered."

Mrs. Bentsen is used to covering large areas in short amounts of time. She has been at her husband's side since he ran for a county judgeship in Texas in the late '40s. He was 25.

The race for vice president, she said, is just another stage in his political career.

"We've been in politics for such a long time that it's another step in the process," she said. "To me, if it's what he was meant to be, I'm not going to stand in his way."

But being a politician's wife means more than stepping aside while he takes the spotlight. It means pitching in.

"Certainly, I have to like people," Mrs. Bentsen said, "and I do.

"I have to have a lot of stamina, and you do have to have lots of patience. You're given a schedule and you have to go along with it — but that's for good reason. You can't run a campaign without it."

B.A. Bentsen is not above altering the schedule to fit her need for time alone. She knows when she's had enough of being the candidate's shadow.

"Sometimes, I won't make a trip with him," she said. "I'll take off somewhere and get away, go antiquing for the day.

Sharing in the campaign seems to come easy. Mrs. Bentsen said she rarely disagrees with her husband's stance on issues. They've been married quite a few years, she pointed out, and they feel very much the same on the questions that have faced him.

But she wouldn't be shy about disagreeing, she said. What if she did?

"I would say so," she said. "I don't think you have to make that sort of choice when you're a candidate's wife.

"You don't have to give up who you are."

She hasn't. A former model, Mrs. Bentsen is a native of Lufkin, Texas, and the only child of Burl and Ann Longino. Though her name is Beryl Ann, friends call her "B.A."

She and Bentsen were married in 1943, while he was in training with the Air Force. They had met in college and, Mrs. Bentsen said, her husband seemed to have it all.

"Even today, you can see that he was a handsome young man," she said, smiling. "He was intelligent, popular, president of his fraternity — easy to fall in love with."

The pair returned to Hidalgo County, where Bentsen was born and reared. He opened his law practice with a friend and soon found himself in politics.

Now, the couple has three married children and five grandchildren, but their time in Texas is limited because of his campaign and his duties as a senator.

Mrs. Bentsen said her children have kept things going at home. "They've picked up the banners I enjoyed," she said. "And I'm proud of what they're doing."

Those banners represented the Houston Symphony, the Museum of Fine Arts and the YWCA. In Washington, Mrs. Bentsen moved into other areas. And one, in particular, will continue to be her cause if Bentsen is elected.

"I am particularly interested in small children," she said, "and I have been working with the March of Dimes. They are doing some marvelous research into birth defects.

"I'm also concerned about prenatal care for young teen-age pregnant mothers."

Clearly, though, she's concerned about politics, too. She served on the National Democratic Committee for 3½ years, and her impressions of Friday's rally went deeper than wondering whether the speeches were well received.

"I hope the people who heard us will remember what was said. My husband and Mike Dukakis cannot do it by themselves.

"I've heard my husband say that democracy is not a spectator sport," she added. "As we move around, I have the concern that people will go home and forget what they've seen and heard.

"I'm hoping it was a lasting meeting," she added. "I hope they'll get involved."

Just One Debate

The Oct. 29 debate in Winston-Salem will be sponsored by the N.C. Association of Broadcasters, which had offered to provide facilities and broadcast another televised debate in early October. The Martin campaign wanted two debates, but Jordan's campaign notified the association Friday that it would only agree to one.

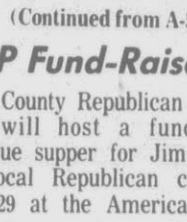

John C. Crumpler, Jordan's campaign manager, said voters "will have their fill" of debates before the election.

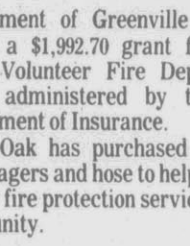

"We feel it's in our best interest to have one debate," Crumpler said Friday. "The reason for that is that the closer to the election that the debate falls, the more likey the voters are to focus on the substance of the debate rather than the spectacle of the debate."

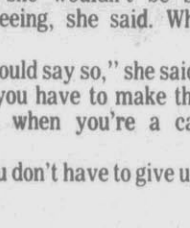

Martin said Jordan was "uncomfortable debating him.

Bentsen Appeals For Southern Voter Support At Greenville Rally

nessee Sen. Albert Gore on the stage.

"I could remember a time when you'd have a national ticket come through and the local officials would find a reason to be out of town," Bensten said, citing the importance of party unity.

Bentsen also threw spears at Republican presidential nominee George Bush.

"(Democratic presidential nominee) Michael Dukakis and I have a message ... a message of fiscal responsibility," he said.

While Dukakis has balanced 10 straight Massachusetts budgets as governor of the state, Bentsen said the Reagan-Bush administration has not balanced one.

Bentsen criticized Bush's record as vice president, and he also poked fun at Bush's running mate, Indiana Sen. Dan Quayle.

"When George Bush talks about a balanced budget, it's like Dan Quayle talking about his resume — there's just not much to talk about," he said.

"If you ran your life or your business like this administration has run the country, you'd either be broke or in jail," he said.

Bentsen generated some cheers and some laughs from the crowd when he said he and Dukakis would practice "can do economics," not the "voo doo economics" of Reagan, and he even took a slap at the current administration as he complimented the East Carolina University band, which performed at the rally.

"That's more harmony than I've heard out of the White House in eight years," he said.

Bentsen also criticized Bush for forgetting the correct date of the Pearl Harbor attack in a recent speech and for not voicing opposition to Reagan's dealings with Nicaraguan leader Manuel Noriega and the president's arms-for-hostages deal with Iran.

"When it comes to strong leadership, George Bush has got a bad case of laryngitis," he said.

As for defense issues, Bentsen said he and Dukakis support the cruise missiles, the stealth bomber and research into strategic defense possibilities.

Dukakis has strongly opposed Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative — or Star Wars — but Bentsen did not specifically say he supported more research into Reagan's proposed system. He also said the country needed improved tanks, guns and conventional weapons.

Other top items he said the Dukakis administration would focus on would be ensuring everyone an opportunity to attend college by providing adequate grant and scholarship money, providing adequate health care and day care for low income families and improving environmental management.

The event was also a time for hand-shaking and back-slapping for many top state Democrats. From Bensten to Greenville Mayor Ed Carter, Democrats at the rally took turns endorsing one another and complimenting the party.

Prior to Bentsen's 1:30 p.m. arrival, Carter welcomed the state officials to Greenville, and Pitt Democratic Party Chairman J.B. Spilman introduced local elected officials seated on stage and thanked party officials for helping set up the event with just four days notice.

When state Democratic Party Chairman Jim Van Hecke introduced Lt. Gov. Robert Jordan, candidate for governor, the crowd let go with chants and applause in support of Jordan.

Jordan used the opportunity to align himself with the national ticket. "I'm proud to be running with that wonderful Dukakis-Bush team ... that helps bring the kind of leadership we need at the helm of America."

Gore, who droped out of the presidential race in March, introduced state Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham to the crowd. And Graham, who removed his trademark cowboy hat to speak, drew applause with his animated arm-waving speech praising Bentsen.

Graham said he enjoyed an intimate friendship with Bentsen, and he said the senator was born and reared on a farm and has a thorough understanding of the tobacco, peanut and cotton industries, which should be important to North Carolina voters.

Gore, who campaigned in Greenille in March during his own run for the White House, said he is now working full-time to get Dukakis and Bentsen elected.

"I'm back here to pick up where I left off: to end eight years of Bush and Reagan and put a Democrat in the White House this year," Gore said.

Gore repeated a popular theme from his own campaign, claiming the country needs a leader to put government "back on the side of working men and women."

He drew cheers from the crowd when he stated that Dukakis and Bentsen favored a law to require companies to notify workers 60 days in advance of any plant closing, a measure Reagan has staunchly opposed.

Gore also put in a political plug for Jordan's bid to unseat Republican Gov. Jim Martin, saying former Democratic Gov. Jim Hunt helped make the state part of the "new South," and Jordan would put the state at the forefront of the country and "help build a new America."

Firefighters Like Snow Forecast

By ELLEN HADDOW
Associated Press Writer

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) — A forecast for up to 6 inches of snow gave firefighters prospects Saturday of reinforcing battle lines against fires that have burned for nearly three months.

"This forecast is music to our ears," said Ken Dittmer, one of Yellowstone's area commanders.

But high winds preceded the storm, with more than 40 mph gusts in some areas. Firefighters fought a fire that threatened Roosevelt Lodge because of the winds.

"I hope this thing decides to take a nap soon," said Capt. Ron Goetzinger, who heads a team of firefighters from Brainerd, Minn. "The snow should take care of it. We sure hope so."

The storm, forecast to swing into Yellowstone sometime Saturday night, was expected to leave much of its moisture on the northern sections of the country's first national park, Dittmer said.

Fires burning in northern Yellowstone, including the 335,300-acre North Fork blaze, have been the most active in recent days and got the least moisture from a front that passed through the park a week ago, according to the commander. That previous rain represented about the first significant moisture in the park since spring.

ANNOUNCING A RADICALLY DIFFERENT CD FOR CONSERVATIVE INVESTORS.

The Wachovia Convertible CD Gives You The Flexibility To Switch To A Higher Rate, Without Penalty, If Interest Rates Rise.

Until now, when you invested in a certificate of deposit you had to stay with a fixed rate for the term of the certificate or incur penalties. Now, Wachovia introduces a new and innovative CD that lets you take advantage if a better rate comes along. The Wachovia Convertible CD.

Convert Without Penalty

The term is one year. But after three months, if interest rates rise anytime during the remainder of the term, you can switch to another one-year Convertible CD at the higher rate. Or to a non-convertible CD of one year or longer. All without incurring a penalty.

... And Keep On Converting

You can continue to convert to a new one-year Convertible CD as long as interest rates rise. All we ask is that you wait at least three months between conversions.

Safe And Secure

Like other Wachovia CDs, the rate on the Convertible CD is guaranteed for the term of your certificate, unless and until you decide to switch to a higher rate. Your new rate is also guaranteed for the full term. So it can't go down if interest rates fall. And the current opening rate on the Convertible CD is 7.85%, with an annualized yield of 8.165%.* So it's a good deal right from the start.

Convert To The Convertible

If you have a CD maturing, or you're considering a new deposit investment, the Convertible CD is a smart, safe way to catch interest rates on the rise. It's available only from a Wachovia Personal Banker℠. Because a better way to invest has always been The Wachovia Way.

THE WACHOVIA WAY

It's more than what we do. It's how we do it.℠

Two New PTL Bidders On Trustee's Agenda

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — PTL bankruptcy Trustee M.C. "Red" Benton is considering at least two new bids for the ministry's assets this weekend as he prepares to recommend a buyer to U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Rufus Reynolds.

"I hope we can finish it up by Monday," Benton said Friday night.

And in a separate development, ministry officials said they were suspending some outreach programs at the ministry to save money.

Benton said Peter Thomas, the Vancouver, British Columbia, businessman who had previously offered $113 million, is a possible buyer. "I think Peter Thomas is still right in there."

He said one new bidder is a Toronto, Ontario, businessman, but would not reveal his name.

Sources told The Charlotte (N.C.) Observer that the man wants an option on the assets until Dec. 31. If he then bought the property, he would pay $115 million, of which $50 million would be cash.

Another bid came from a group of private investors from the New York and Washington areas, Benton said. Sources told The Observer they offered about $200 million, $50 million in cash.

Benton said that if he could not make a recommendation by Monday, he would request another deadline extension to accept bids.

PTL has been in bankruptcy proceedings since June 1987, three months after founder Jim Bakker left amid a sex-and-money scandal. Judge Reynolds has said that if PTL isn't sold by Oct. 1, he will order it closed.

Reynolds has given Benton until Sept. 27 to choose a buyer or liquidate PTL's assets.

Benton and Don Edwards, interim president of Heritage Ministries, Inc. also said Heritage Ministries officials have suspended the operations of their home for unwed mothers, adoption services and dormitories for homeless, drug-addicted and troubled men.

The suspension will save the ministry $3,000 a day in operating costs, said Edwards.

Edwards said he and Benton decided on the suspension earlier this week to save money. Donations to Heritage ministry services, which include the home for unwed mothers, had dropped from about $80,000 a day in April and May to $15,000 to $20,000 a day in recent weeks, Edwards said.

Edwards attributed the decrease to the IRS's April decision to revoke PTL's tax-exempt status and to Bakker's attempt to buy back the ministry.

"That's had a substantial, unfavorable effect," he said of Bakker's attempt.

The Herald newspaper of Rock Hill reported the cost-cutting decisions would result in layoffs for 17 people.

The decision to suspend the two services was made "in the context of being good stewards and also to show the judge a good faith effort to cut costs and to further tighten our belts," Edwards said. "But no one will be put out on the street."

The ministry had already found homes for the two girls who lived at Heritage Home, which was designed for 24 unwed mothers, Edwards said. The ministry expects it will take 10 to 30 days to find apartments and other treatment programs for the men at Fort Hope.

Thirteen men are staying in the dormitories, which can hold up to 18, Edwards said. He added that 14 adoptions now in progress will be completed.

"We're not closing our operations, we're suspending them," he said Friday night. "And assuming we recover the lost income, we'll come back into these areas."

Edwards also said the last 1988 performance of the "Heritage Passion Play" will be Saturday, two weeks earlier than scheduled. The end of the play's season will further trim PTL's expenses by 99 workers, he told The Herald.

"We're planning for all activities to resume next year," he said. "But we have no idea what the new owner will do."

Hiring Freeze

RALEIGH (AP) — The court system's chief administrator said Saturday he has put into effect a special provision that allows him to order a hiring freeze to save money to pay for increasing costs and court programs that the General Assembly approved but did not fund.

The Administrative Office of the Courts received $6 million of a $6.4 million request for the indigent person attorneys' fee fund, said Franklin Freeman, director of the office.

That money came from the expansion budget, he said. Most of the expansion money had to be budgeted for a 4.5 percent salary increase for state employees.

"They didn't have a lot of expansion left (after paying for the salary increase)," he said. "I think they felt $6 million out of $64 million was our share. But I knew we had these other needs. So I asked the General Assembly for a special provision that would allow for this year to use lapsed salaries to meet these needs that I saw developing in the spring of next year and that special provision was enacted. Historically, we generate $2.5 million to $2.6 million annually in lapsed salaries."

Freeman said the money was needed to cover witness and jury fees, increased postage and printing costs, and the costs of keeping the libraries of the state Supreme Court and Court of Appeals operating.

The courts must also find money to pay for higher salaries for emergency judges (retired judges who fill in for regular judges) and an additional district court judge in Robeson County, the memos say.

The General Assembly gave Freeman the authority to use money saved on unfilled positions to pay for other programs. So, Freeman says in one memo, all full-time positions — other than those of elected officials — must be left vacant for 45 days after they become open. A second memo says that 65 temporary positions will have to be eliminated at the end of this month. Freeman hopes to save about $800,000 out of the $2.4 million budgeted for temporary jobs.

"The average vacancy is 30 days anyway," he said. "All we have done is extend the average from 30 days to 45 days."

Freeman said he believed that after four months the office would "be able to return to normal procedures for filling vacant positions."

As clerks, assistant district attorneys, secretaries, victims assistance workers, public defenders, juvenile court counselor and others leave, their positions will remain open for 45 days. The economy measures do not affect bailiffs, probation officers or other court workers whose salaries are not paid by the administrative office.

Complacency A Worry To Coastal Officials

By The Associated Press

Long Beach Police Chief Walt Workman knows what would happen if a hurricane the size of Gilbert hit the North Carolina coast.

"We wouldn't survive Gilbert," Workman said.

Legendary Hurricane Hazel destroyed all but five of 387 homes on Long Beach in 1954, with wind gusts of less than 100 mph. A hurricane like Gilbert, with winds as high as 175 mph, could level whole coastal communities — and devastate towns for miles inland.

Carolinas coastal officials say they aren't worried so much about the physical damage a hurricane like Gilbert could do — that's beyond their control. But because no major storm has hit the Carolinas coast for 30 years, they're concerned that coastal residents and tourists have become complacent — that they might not evacuate in time.

And some worry that because the coast has been so built up, even if people try to leave they might be forced to weather a storm in a traffic jam.

"It's asinine," David Stick, an Outer Banks historian, told The Charlotte Observer. "It's as absurd to be talking now about evacuating all tourists from the Outer Banks in a hurricane as it was to talk about putting everyone in shelters to guard against atomic bombs 30 years ago. It's impossible."

The Outer Banks are low-lying and access is limited to ferries or two-lane bridges. W.A. Hoggard, town manager of Kill Devil Hills, said evacuation has been well-planned and rehearsed. But because of unprecedented development, there likely would be unprecedented destruction, he said.

If a hurricane popped up quickly, he concedes that Outer Bank residents could be trapped in their cars as some were during the minor Hurricane Charley in 1986.

It's storms like Charley that have Tom Ditt, spokesman for the N.C. Division of Emergency Management, worried.

"We've only had three minor storms in the past three years, and a lot of people say, 'I rode out Charley. I rode out Diana. I rode out Gloria,' and apathy sets in," Ditt says. "And when I look at our maps and see what would be under water in a Category 5 storm, it scares me. The entire Outer Banks, several sections of Hyde and Dare County would be completely under water. Many areas inland would be flooded — Washington and New Bern because they're on rivers."

A Category 5 storm has winds greater than 155 mph, barometric pressure less than 27.17 inches and a storm surge higher than 18 feet. Gilbert is one of only three Category 5 storms in the Western Hemisphere since weather officials began keeping detailed records. The others were the 1935 Labor Day hurricane in the Florida Keys, and Camille, which hit the Mississippi coast in 1969.

Hazel is the hurricane by which all other hurricanes are measured in the Carolinas. It hit in mid-October 1954 at high tide. Though winds in the Carolinas were less than 100 mph, it measured 113 mph in New York City and caused $281 million in damage along the East Coast.

Tornadoes spawned by hurricanes, capable of winds of 200 to 300 mph, could strike inland cities.

"In uptown Charlotte," said Dr. Charles Mitchell, professor in the UNC Charlotte School of Architecture, "there are lots of low, small buildings with flat tops and gravel roofs."

In storms, the gravel and other debris could become airborne.

"How would you like to be in a glass building with someone throwing rocks at it?" asked Mitchell.

On the ocean side of the Intracoastal Waterway, buildings must be designed for 120 mph wind. The standard drops to 110 mph for areas such as Charleston and Wilmington, slightly inland.

Farther inland, the standards drop more. For example, it is 80 mph in Charlotte and 75 mph in Greenville-Spartanburg.

"We could come through OK with the 120 mph they're forecasting for Gilbert," said Willis Stancil, New Hanover County building inspection chief. "However, if you get a Category 3, 4 or 5 storm, with the 20-foot wall of water it would be pushing in front of it, nothing is going to come through it."

Ultimately, Smits and Mitchell said, cost dictates design.

"You try to predict and be a realist," Smits said. "We design for 110 mph. You can rest assured it wouldn't withstand 200 mph. But there have been only two other Category 5 hurricanes this century. You can't design for the extreme."

Along the coast, "we've had tremendous growth and the key in all this is that we've not had a tremendous hurricane since Hazel in '54," Ditt said. "All the response people make is based on past action."

He said the state is more prepared than ever. It has computerized data, based on a three-year coastal study, that can forecast the effect of storms, depending on such factors as size, location and intensity. Officials can now predict such things as what areas will flood and how great the surge of water will be.

The biggest unknown is the reaction of residents and tourists.

"We did a behavior sampling," Ditt said. "We found that there are 20 percent who will evacuate, no questions asked. There are about 20 percent who will stay, and that middle 60 percent are the ones who concern us. You really don't know exactly what they're going to do. ...

Takeoff Concerns

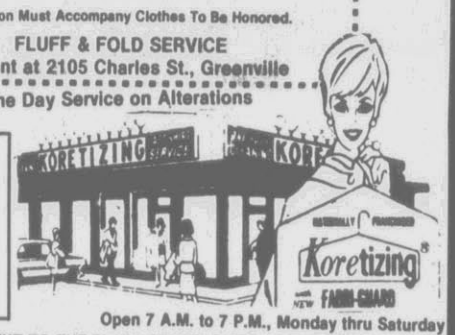

SUMTER, S.C. (AP) — In the wake of this week's F-16 crash, a Sumter County Councilman says he expects to meet soon with Shaw Air Force Base officials to discuss changing takeoffs at the base.

Ed Everett said he wants to avoid "quick turns over residential areas" and said his discussions with council members and people living near the base indicate a growing concern about safety.

"I've already fielded six or seven calls concerning jets circling close to residential areas in Cherryvale (the community where the crash occurred)," Everett said.

"One person even suggested a petition campaign," he said. "I don't think we need to go that far — we have a good, close relationship with the base, and I look forward to working something out with them."

Meanwhile, Shaw officials have expressed their regrets over the death of a man who was severely burned in this week's crash.

N.C. Poll Indicates Dukakis, Bush Are Running Even Among Voters

CHARLOTTE (AP) — North Carolina voters are evenly split between Republican George Bush and Democrat Michael Dukakis, a poll by The Charlotte Observer shows, mirroring gains for Bush in national surveys taken since he won the nomination last month.

"I think his message is getting across," said Steve Schwartz, executive director of Bush's N.C. campaign. "He's fine-tuning his message to targeted groups and he gave one hell of a speech in New Orleans. He's on his own now."

The poll shows 48 percent of likely voters supporting or leaning toward Bush and 47 percent supporting or leaning toward Dukakis.

That's a bigger following for Bush than he had in a similar survey in May, while Dukakis' support is virtually the same as in May.

In making his gains, Bush overcame Dukakis' lead in the Piedmont, which accounts for more than half the state's registered voters. There, he holds a 51 percent-44 percent edge among likely voters.

Bush also enjoys strong backing among whites and affluent voters.

Among Dukakis's strongest supporters are blacks and voters in the east and the west. And he also is recapturing many of the so-called Reagan Democrats — a group considered crucial to Dukakis, particularly in the South.

The poll shows Dukakis winning 32 percent of Democrats who say they voted for President Reagan in 1984. On Friday, the party's vice presidential nominee, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, underscored the push for such conservative Democrats with a visit to Greenville in Eastern North Carolina.

"I am encouraged by your numbers that show that Democrats are coming home," said Paul Sullivan, Dukakis's N.C. manager. "I think that trend will increase. ...

"I think this state will probably remain too close to call for several weeks. Both the Bush and the Dukakis campaign have targeted North Carolina as a battleground state. And I think your poll in fact reflects that this is going to be a tough battle here."

The telephone survey of 802 registered voters was conducted Sunday through Wednesday by the marketing research division of The Charlotte Observer. The sampling error for such a survey is plus or minus 3½ percentage points.

The results were weighted to reflect a "probable electorate" based on questions about the respondents' voting history and intention to vote in November.

Among the larger pool of registered voters, the poll shows Bush and Dukakis each with the support of 46 percent. A similar poll of all registered voters by The Observer in May showed Dukakis leading 46 percent to 40 percent.

About four out of 10 supporters of each candidate in the new poll of the probable electorate say there is a slight or strong chance they could change their minds by election day.

The poll suggests that Dukakis has not persuaded N.C. voters that he's the best candidate to create jobs, fight drugs and reduce the deficit — three of his campaign's main themes.

Bush, on the other hand, apparently has been effective in persuading voters he won't raise taxes.

By 46 percent to 40 percent, voters believe Bush would be most likely to create jobs. And they give no clear edge to either candidate on the question of reducing the deficit and the drug problem.

By nearly 2-1, voters believe Bush less likely to raise taxes — and one of every five Dukakis supporters agree.

However, the poll suggests that Bush's running mate, Sen. Dan Quayle of Indiana, is a potential liability.

Nearly three of 10 voters say they're less likely to vote for the GOP ticket because of Quayle, 41, whose background and qualifications have drawn fire.

That compares with one in 10 likely voters who say they'd be less likely to vote Democratic because of Bentsen's presence on the ticket.

While nearly half the voters surveyed support the GOP ticket, only one in four consider Quayle more qualified than Bentsen to be president.

The poll also shows:

— While 29 percent of likely voters have an unfavorable impression of Bush, one of three hold a negative impression of Dukakis.

— While Dukakis has a 51 percent to 43 percent edge among women, Bush has a 54 percent to 42 percent advantage among men. That appears to represent a widening of the male "gender gap" in Bush's favor and a narrowing of the split among women.

Among registered voters, Bush enjoys an 11-percentage point lead among men — compared with a 1-point edge in May. On the other hand, Dukakis's 12-point advantage among women has shrunk to a 10-point difference since May.

— While Bush holds a 56 percent to 39 percent lead among whites, Dukakis leads among blacks 87 percent to 9 percent. Dukakis has strengthened his support among blacks since the Democratic convention.

Open-Meeting Law

By JOHN FLESHER
Associated Press Writer

WRIGHTSVILLE BEACH, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina's open-meeting law should be strengthened by imposing fines on government officials who conduct public business in private, Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan said Saturday.

"I would favor fines of a magnitude that it would cause them to obey the open-meetings law," Jordan, the Democratic gubernatorial nominee, said in an interview after a speech to the North Carolina Associated Press News Council. "You have to have some teeth in the law."

He said he also would support a law invalidating official actions taken in violation of the open-meeting statute. A bill to that effect was introduced by Rep. George Miller, D-Durham, in 1987 but was not approved.

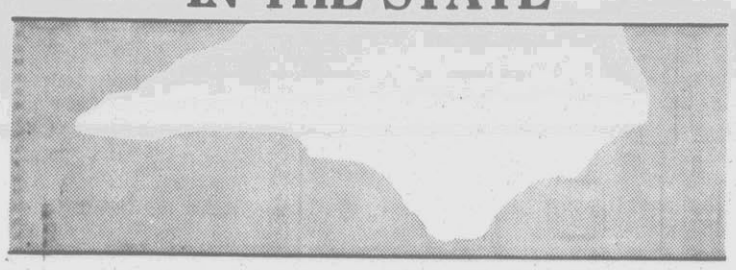

The open-meeting law requires state and local governmental bodies — except for the General Assembly, which is exempt — to do business in public meetings. But there are more than a dozen topics that may be discussed in private, such as personnel matters and property transactions.

In response to a question, Jordan said he would favor tougher sanctions for violators, apparently unaware that the law has no penalties. But when told it did not, he said he would favor adding them.

Jordan, who in his speech accused Republican Gov. Jim Martin of promoting secrecy in the state budget process, said the state Senate was more open than it had been under Jordan's predecessor, former Lt. Gov. Jimmy Green.

Jordan said if elected governor he would continue pushing the Legislature to be less secretive. The state House rejected Senate proposals to pass laws requiring open budget meetings in 1987, but he said he would not let the issue die.

IN THE STATE

Injunction Sought

RALEIGH (AP) — Attorneys representing the state have indicated they will try on Monday to obtain a stay of a preliminary injunction that allows the fired director of the state motor fleet to return to work.

The ruling Friday allows Rilla M. Woods, who was fired in August, to return to her post until a trial on her lawsuit challenging the dismissal. State attorneys indicated they would take the injunction to the state's appellate courts.

Judge Robert Farmer of Raleigh sharply criticized Ms. Woods' dismissal, which followed her refusal to rescind a letter to a prominent state official ordering him to return a state-owned car assigned to his agency.

But Farmer's ruling will not bind the judge or jury at the trial.

Release Efforts

RALEIGH (AP) — Justine Finch Bush of Raleigh has spent the last week talking with Liberian officials in hopes of securing the release — or at least an early trial — for her husband, one of two Americans charged with treason.

"I have been pounding the pavement and sitting in offices," said Mrs. Bush in a telephone interview with the News and Observer of Raleigh from Monrovia, the capital of the west African nation.

The Liberian government charges that Mrs. Bush's husband, James H. Bush Jr., 41, was part of a small group of men who crossed into Liberia from the Ivory Coast intending to overthrow the government of President Samuel Doe. Bush and another American, Curtis Hayes Williams of New Jersey, were arrested July 13 and charged with treason on Sept. 2.

"I have met with several people," she said. "We are negotiating, but I am not a lawyer."

Although she was not able to meet with Doe, she has met with ministers of justice and defense. "We have agreed we will move the trial up as soon as possible," she said. No trial date has been set.

Low Lake Levels

BURLINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Lakes that supply drinking water for Burlington, Mebane and Graham remain well below normal levels, despite substantial rainfall in the past few weeks.

Officials in Mebane and Graham, as well as those in Chapel Hill, continued Friday to ask residents to conserve water.

And in Burlington, where the main reservoir contains 60 percent of its normal capacity, officials have discussed asking residents to conserve water voluntarily.

"What we're waiting to see is what the weather pattern will be," said Steve Shoaf, Burlington's utilities administrator. "Hopefully, we'll have a full lake again soon."

At Lake Cammack, the reservoir for Graham and Mebane, water levels this week are 7 inches below the Aug. 17 level, when officials called for voluntary curbs on water use, Graham City Manager Ray Fogleman said.

In Chapel Hill, officials still are asking for voluntary curbs on water use as University Lake, west of the Orange County city, hovers at 27 inches below its normal level.

In Siler City, the Chatham County town that rationed water last month, officials say a new spillway and substantial rainfall have ended chronic water shortages at the Rocky River reservoir.

Award Winner

WRIGHTSVILLE BEACH, N.C. (AP) — Barbara Blake of the Asheville Citizen-Times won Saturday the Thomas Wolfe Award for outstanding writing.

The annual award was created in 1985 by the North Carolina Associated Press News Council to encourage excellence in writing among members of the News Council. The council is a group of editors whose newspapers subscribe to AP.

Ms. Blake's winning entry was "The Moving Wall," a feature story about the replica of the national Vietnam War monument on exhibit at the Asheville Veterans Administration Center.

Jacksonville Weighs Lejeune Annexation

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — City officials are considering a proposal to annex inhabited areas of Camp Lejeune — a move that would double the city's population, making it the seventh largest in the state.

City Manager Jerry Bittner said he was preparing an annexation plan to present to the city council next week.

"I received directions from the council to look into new revenue sources," Bittner said. "With this proposal, we could minimize and possibly reduce city property taxes."

The annexation could increase city coffers by $2.7 million annually but would take nearly $1.8 million away from Onslow County government.

County Manager Rick Leary said Friday that if the annexation occurs, the county Board of Commissioners will have to explore other options for raising revenue or consider reducing some county services.

Leary said the county would stand to lose money brought in from sales taxes because such tax funds are distributed on the basis of population figures. If Camp Lejeune's population is added to Jacksonville's figures, the county's share of tax revenues would be reduced proportionately.

"Whether or not the county can absorb such a loss remains to be seen," he said. "We'd have to evaluate our budget to determine whether reduction in services can occur. Or, the county would have to consider alternatives to raising funds to make up for the loss we would incur."

Jacksonville Mayor George Jones said the proposal offers significant potential for the city. "We owe it to the citizens, not only of this city but the whole county, to look at our options and weigh out the possibilities of this annexation," Jones said.

The Joint Public Affairs Office at Camp Lejeune confirmed Friday that annexation procedures have been received by military officials.

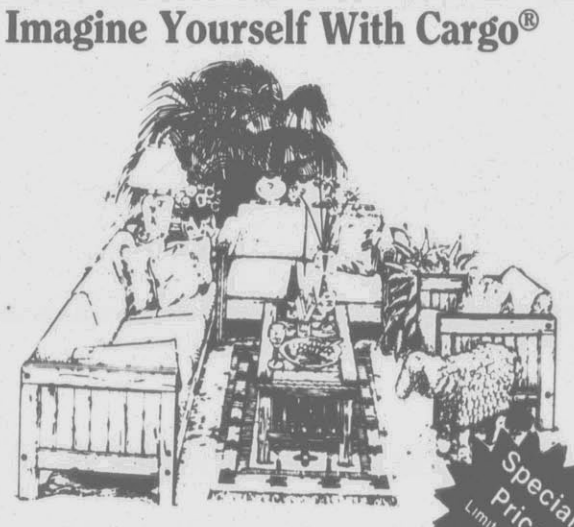

"The annexation issue has been proposed to the base, and we have forwarded the proposal to Marine Corps Headquarters, where it now resides," said Maj. Stuart Wagner of the Joint Public Affairs Office. "We expect guidance on the matter, but I have no feel for the time."

The annexation proposal would more than double the population of Jacksonville to nearly 70,000 — making it the seventh largest city in the state, Bittner said. If the plan works as presented, it would begin immediately and it would be as late as 1991 before it is complete, Bittner said.

"Cooperative efforts with Camp Lejeune and the New River air station would become even more intertwined to our mutual benefit," Bittner said.

The City Council will vote on whether to proceed with the plan at its regular meeting Tuesday night.

Groups Work To Make Coast Attractive To Wildlife

COROLLA, N.C. (AP) — The population of ducks on the Currituck Sound has declined dramatically in recent years, due to international trends and development, but wildlife groups are trying to reverse the trend by giving nature a much-needed boost.

"In the '70s, you could turn up a flock of 500 pintail ducks at any time," said David Greer, a lawyer from Norfolk, Va., and a director of the Back Bay Restoration Foundation.

"Of course, the snow geese just covered the area. A flock of 1,000 would take flight and look like starlings."

On Thursday, Greer and others sank aluminum pipes into position along Big Ferbee Creek on Swan Island to help flood woodland in fall and winter, encouraging the growth of bullrushes, which waterfowl eat. The island is one of the coast's wintering stops for ducks, geese and swans.

The waterfowl have all but disappeared from Swan Island and the surrounding 9,000 acres of marshes and scrubby woodlands that sprawl into Currituck Sound from back of sand dunes about six miles south of the Virginia line.

"Historically, this is a very, very important waterfowl area," said Bill Hegge, manager of Mackay Island National Wildlife Refuge and a caretaker of the Swan Island tract that is now part of the Currituck National Wildlife Refuge.

"It is one of the few remaining naturally productive wetland areas left between Virginia Beach and Currituck Sound," he told The Virginian Pilot and The Ledger-Star of Norfolk, Va.

The crew, which totaled as many as eight, installed two 600-pound aluminum water-control structures in a drainage way for Big Ferbee Creek.

"This is not a big, expensive project," Hegge said. "It costs only $5,000 or $7,000, but all things being equal, it should attract birds."

The work was financed and done by a coalition that included the Back Bay Restoration Foundation, a non-profit group of environmentalists and sportsmen, the Swan Island Hunt Club, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the U.S. Coast Guard.

The foundation put up about $1,700. The hunt club helped with labor. The federal agency coordinated three wildlife refuges — Back Bay, Mackay Island and Alligator River — to supply equipment. And the Coast Guard furnished a helicopter and crew to deliver the two drainage pipes into the remote area.

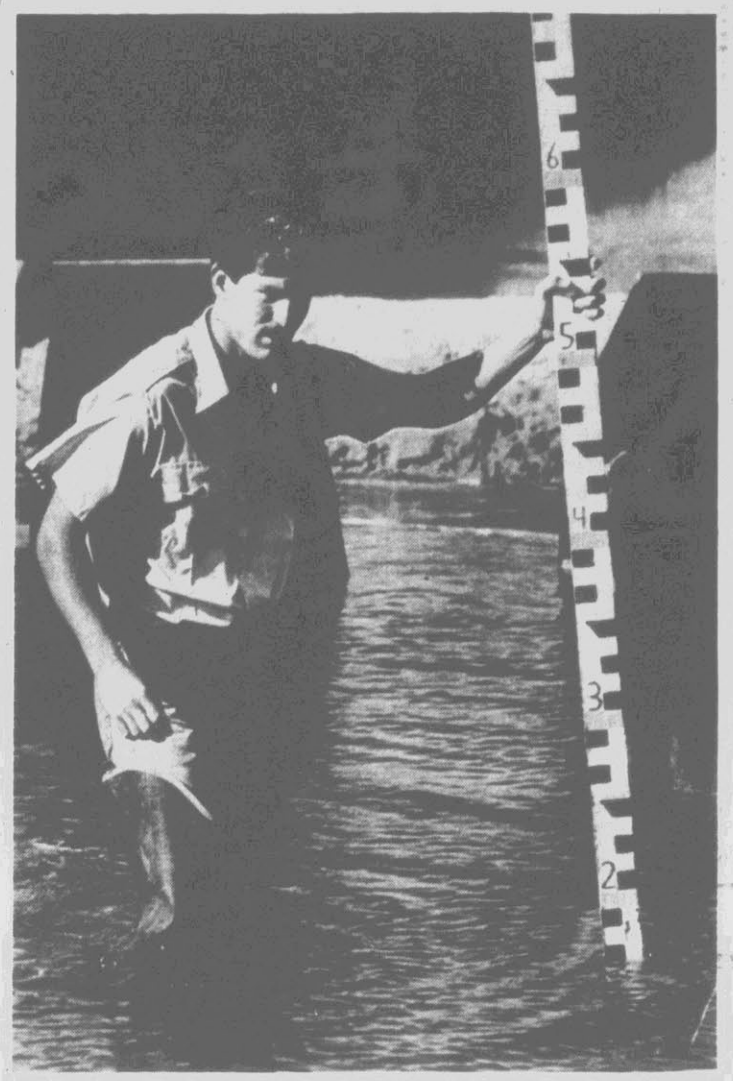

Such coalitions of volunteers and government agencies are at the heart of the 1986 North American Waterfowl Management Plan, which includes far-ranging plans for reversing the dramatic declines of waterfowl populations and habitats in the United States and Canada by the year 2000.

This fall's migrating duck population will be the second lowest on record, according to predictions by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the Canadian Wildlife Service.

The long-range decline of waterfowl populations and habitat has been dramatic. The pintail duck, for example, declined from 10 million in 1955 to 4 million today.

The plan puts a high priority on preserving habitat in Virginia and North Carolina coastal areas, crucial to the Atlantic path followed by migrating wildfowl. A proposal to more than double the Back Bay refuge is among the most grandiose components of that plan.

"One of our concerns is that once an area is left by waterfowl or loses natural value, you lose the traditional population that came there," Hegge said. "Once a species uses an area, it tends to hone in on that area year after year."

N.C. Cities To Turn Sludge Into Usable Soil, Fertilizer

LEXINGTON, N.C. (AP) — New rules that severely restrict disposing of sludge in landfills has forced some North Carolina cities to turn the sludge into usable fertilizer or potting soil.

The city of Lexington has applied for a $933,000 federal grant. Last week the city sold $967,000 in bonds to build a $1.9 million composting system that will mix the sludge, which is rich in nitrogen and other nutrients, with sawdust or wood chips and let nature take its course.

'Really, a composting system is probably the most basic of all systems. It's a natural way of controlling the sludge," Donald T. Garbrick, the city's engineering consultant, told the Winston-Salem Journal. "This costs more than taking it to a landfill, but you get a product that can be reused."

Or as William C. Holtzman, Davidson County's agricultural extension agent, put it: "It's got to be moved someway, and if it can be used as a fertilizer or a soil conditioner, that would be better than not using it."

Last spring the environmental health section of the state's Department of Human Resources pushed cities into recycling their sludge by making it almost impossible to continue dumping it in their landfills.

Some cities have already found alternative ways of getting rid of their sludge.

Greensboro burns about 21 tons a day in a special incinerator. Winston-Salem and High Point spread theirs directly over area farms. Morganton composts. And Hickory is beginning a composting program.

The new rules say that wastewater-treatment sludge may be used in only the final 2 feet of cover over a landfill, effectively banning its disposal in them.

Stephen T. Reid, a spokesman for the environmental agency, said that, without the restriction, the sludge could seep into groundwater.

The sludge is what's left after bacteria have digested the sewage and neutralized most of the bad smells, and the water has been returned.

Experts say that the biggest technical problem facing industrial cities such as Lexington is making sure that the sludge is free of heavy metals and other industrial wastes.

Carl D. Hennessee, the director of utilities in Morganton where he designed a composting system 10 years ago, said: "You have to consider that the compost must be usable and not be made toxic by industrial discharges. The secret to that is a good pre-treatment process."

At his plant, workers mix two parts of pine bark from local sawmills with one part of waste, let the mixture sit for 21 days over air vents, age it for another 21 days, and push it through a screen to remove any excess bark.

What's left is a fine, dark gray mulch that also adds nitrogen to the soil, smells slightly of pine, and sells for $5.50 a cubic yard. "In the spring during planting and landscaping season, there are trucks backed up here, taking it directly," Hennessee said.

Experts say that the compost can't replace other fertilizers, but can be used to condition soil, to replace lost organic material or as a mulch.

Day Care Program

HIGH POINT, N.C. (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin has proposed a pilot program to pay the cost of day care for some children whose parents are receiving training under the Job Training Partnership Act.

"In order for an individual to use Job Training Partnership Act funds for child day care parents must be enrolled in a JTPA program, ..." Martin told the state Family Commission Conference. "The very criteria for JTPA participation will ensure that we reach the children who need it the most."

Martin's proposal would offer "enriched" day-care services to about 160 in a pilot program. The enrichment will involve pre-school reading instruction and developmental lessons in existing day-care centers.

Martin said state figures indicate that about 2,250 4-year-olds who are eligible for subsidized day care are not currently receiving it because of funding constraints or administrative reasons.

Monster Hurricane Became A No-Show

By SCOTT McCARTNEY
Associated Press Writer

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Officials predicted disaster and talked of fingerprinting those who stayed behind to identify their bodies. Gulf coast residents from Grand Isle, La., to this tip-of-Texas town boarded up their windows and fled.

But in the end, it was Gilbert, "the storm of the century," who stayed away — turning out to be too big to turn north, too gracious to blast the U.S. coast.

"We were waiting for the storm, but it never showed up," said Francisco Garcia as he used a crowbar to pry plywood off his family's barbecue hut. "Some people are mad a little bit that they spent money and the hurricane never showed up."

Meteorologists' predictions that Gilbert, like past hurricanes, would turn north toward Texas or Louisiana and strengthen after battering Mexico's Yucatan Penninsula proved wrong. Gilbert hardly strayed from its west-northwest course.

"He was so large it was too hard to veer," said Greg Flatt of the National Weather Service here. "It was controlling the weather pattern. The weather pattern wasn't controlling it."

Said Neil Frank, former director of the National Hurricane Center and now weatherman for KHOU in Houston: "This storm was so big it just did its own thing and charged right into Mexico."

Gilbert dumped up to 6 inches of rain on areas and spun off deadly tornadoes that destroyed a few homes, damaged roofs and shattered windows. Across the Rio Grande in Mexico, as in Jamaica and Haiti, the damage was widespread and severe.

"I don't think anybody's going to feel this was the wrong thing to do," Corpus Christi Mayor Betty Turner said of the evacuation in her town, where thousands of residents crowded into shelters.

"This isn't new to South Texas," said Corpus Christi police chief Robert Olson. "People know what hurricanes can do. I think that should another one arise, they'll respond just as well."

On Galveston Island near Houston, several hundred miles from where Gilbert hit, an evacuation order was under fire. And some in poor neighborhoods of this border town complained about the expense of hurricane preparations.

But when the sky cleared, most said they held no hard feelings over the no-show hurricane.

"I'd rather be safe than sorry," said Rosbel Villarreal, who boarded up the home he recently bought here and took his family, including three young children, to a motel in McAllen. "I spent probably $150 but I didn't want to take a chance."

"Sometimes they hit here, sometimes they don't. You never know," said Jeni Hinojosa as she swept up fallen leaves and branches from her yard.

Guadalupe Longoria remembers more brutal storms here like Allen and Beulah. But she stayed in her home alone, praying, all Friday night.

"I was expecting whatever the dear Lord sends us," she said.

By Saturday morning, a steady stream of cars and campers returned to wind-whipped Brownsville and the city that had gone into hibernation returned to life. Lines formed at bakeries, and crews began picking up the fallen palms and branches.

For five days reports on Gilbert's brute force prompted coastal residents to batten down the hatches and prepare for a fierce storm that made its mark on history with the lowest recorded barometric pressure in the hemisphere.

Thousands of residents evacuated, but most stayed, saying either they felt safe in their own homes and would tough it out, or they feared looters.

Plywood shot up to $15 a sheet in some areas. There were long lines at grocery stores, and hotels hundreds of miles away took in Gilbert escapees.

"You've got to do it," Garcia said. "The meteorologists made a mistake, but anybody can make a mistake. You never know with hurricanes."

Thankful Evacuees Return To Homes

By DAVID SEDENO
Associated Press Writer

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Broken trees and traffic lights littered city streets Saturday, but many residents were just happy to have homes to return to.

More than 5,000 people left shelters around town early Saturday after the main force of Hurricane Gilbert passed through Mexico about 100 miles to the south.

"I'm kind of glad to be back home. I didn't know what I was going to find. My house is 80 years old and I thought it was going to be blown away but it wasn't," said Odilon Gracia, 75.

He said he waited out the storm at an elementary school with a leaking roof and wet floors. "I feel a little better in my house than at that school," he said.

While the shelters emptied, the city grew congested. Restaurants and food stores closed for two days opened their doors again. Cars lined up at gas stations.

Residents pried protective plywood from windows and doors and mopped up water that had leaked in. Others cut up fallen trees and hauled them away.

Despite wind still gusting at more that 30 mph Saturday, work crews were out picking up dangling traffic lights and downed power lines that caused some temporary outages Friday.

Southern Texas was spared the 120 mph wind that whirled around the eye of Gilbert, but was battered by rain, high wind and tornadoes spun off by the system.

"I thought it was going to be worse, but thank God it wasn't," said Gloria Zapata, 40, while she and her family picked up garbage strewn in their yard by the wind.

"I'm thankful it wasn't as hard as it probably could have been or else everything here would have been blown away."

Rosalinda Delgado and her three children spent the night in a shelter, and were relieved to find their home in good shape.

"I was scared, the children were scared, that we weren't going to have any furniture left when we got back. But everything seems to be OK," Ms. Delgado said.

Jamaica Begins Painful Recovery

By ROBERT GLASS
Associated Press Writer

KINGSTON, Jamaica (AP) — Tourists are flying out and medicine, plastic tents and food are pouring in at Jamaica's two international airports as this island nation struggles to recover from the fury of Hurricane Gilbert.

Little by little, Jamaica, home to 2.3 million people, is struggling back from the worst disaster in its history. But it's going to be a slow and painful process.

The confirmed death toll of 26 was low in comparison with Hurricane Charlie, which hit Jamaica in 1951 and killed more than 150 people. But Charlie caused less physical damage. Prime Minister Edward Seaga has estimated losses at $8 billion and called Gilbert the worst disaster in the nation's history.

The government say 500,000 people, or two-fifths of the population, have been left homeless after the hurricane roared down the spine of the 144-mile-long island on Monday. Four out of every five houses were either damaged or destroyed as Gilbert's 145 mph winds tore away zinc roofs as if they were plastic sheets.

Ninety-three percent of the island still had no electricity Saturday, although power was restored in the northern coast city of Montego Bay, the main tourist area.

The power failure cut off fresh water supplies to most of the island, including Kingston, a city of 750,000 people, because the pumping and filtration plants run on electricity. Power was not expected to be fully restored to the capital for at least two weeks.

Crowds gathered around water hydrants and burst mains in 90-degree heat, filling plastic buckets and old milk containers. Reports from the countryside said people were taking water from muddy streams, despite the hazard of contamination.

Radio stations carried a taped message every half hour from the health minister, Dr. Kenneth Baugh, warning people to boil drinking water, and millions of water purification tablets were being airlifted in from around the world.

Looting of stores, warehouses and supermarkets in the first days after the hurricane forced the government to impose a night curfew, which was still in effect at the end of the week. People who failed to stock up before the storm rushed supermarkets and gasoline stations, forming long lines outside both. Armed soldiers were seen regulating the flow of shoppers in and out of a supermarket outside Kingston.

On Thursday, Seaga declared a 30-day state of public emergency, ordering stores and gasoline stations to reopen and giving security forces "full" but unspecified power to ensure that they did.

The emergency order also gave the government the right to seize transportation and heavy equipment to distribute supplies arriving from around the world.

The loss to agriculture is severe. Government officials said the poultry industry and this years's crop of bananas and coffee were wiped out.

Seaga told reporters Friday that he would discuss the disaster with world bank officials next week, but had no plan to ask for a rescheduling of Jamaica's $4 billion foreign debt.

The disaster hit just as Jamaica was showing signs of recovery from economic distress brought on by a worldwide slump in the value of bauxite, sugar and other commodities.

In addition, tourism — now the nation's biggest foreign exchange earner at $550 million a year — had staged a remarkable recovery as a result of an intense campaign to rid the island of its reputation for political violence.

200 People Drown

The bodies of an elderly woman, a small boy and two men, all unidentified, were found in the town of Juarez 14 miles east of Monterrey, said federal police spokesman Felipe de Jesus Banda Martinez.

In Cadereyta, 20 miles east of Monterrey, a police spokesman said another "eight or ten bodies have been pulled out of the river."

At noon EDT Saturday, the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla. issued its final advisory on Gilbert.

It said the center of the storm was near latitude 25.5 north and longitude 101.0 west or about 220 miles west southwest of Brownsville, Texas, and 45 miles southwest of Monterrey.

Maximum sustained winds were estimated to be near 35 mph and the storm was expected to weaken further. But rainfall of 10 to 15 inches were forecast, with up to 20 inches in some areas.

It was the second time in three days that Gilbert slammed into Mexico.

The storm hit the Yucatan Peninsula on Wednesday and killed at least 29 people after leaving 69 people dead in the Caribbean.

Gilbert, which turned into a hurricane Sept. 10, killed 26 in Jamaica, 30 in Haiti, five in the Dominican Republic and eight in Honduras.

The storm at one point packed sustained winds of 175 mph and had gusts of more than 200 mph. It was the most intense storm on record in terms of barometric pressure, which was measured at 26.13, breaking the 26.35 inches recorded for the 1935 hurricane that devastated the Florida Keys.

The storm left 500,000 homeless and caused $8 billion in damage in Jamaica. In Haiti, the military government declared a state of emergency in three southern regions, where 50 to 60 percent of the agricultural production was destroyed.

The storm left the eastern Yucatan resort of Cancun in shambles. About 300,000 people were homeless in Yucatan state and 10,000 more homeless in Campeche, on the west coast of the peninsula, said Notimex, the Mexican news agency.

Gilbert stranded 8,000 tourists in Cancun and Cozumel, left much of the peninsula without power or communications and caused hundreds of millions of dollars in damage.

Government relief planes began ferrying food and medicine to the stricken resorts Friday and tourists began leaving.

Gilbert came ashore again Friday afternoon along a sparsely populated stretch of the Gulf of Mexico coast south of Matamoros.

It quickly began to dissipate into torrential rains and high winds that drenched the northeastern states of Tamaulipas, Nuevo Leon and Coahuila.

The Santa Catarina cuts through downtown Monterrey near the main business area. The river was straightened and channeled years ago as part of an urban development project and its wide, flat bed became a recreational area with soccer fields, basketball courts, tennis courts and jogging trails.

The storm passed directly over Santa Rosa and Santa Cruz, two small villages a few miles north of La Pesca, Mexico, where ocean tides coursed over two miles of flatlands and into the town.

In Texas, heavy rains fell on Brownsville, with gusts up to 82 mph recorded at nearby Padre Island, but the vulnerable coastal area escaped the worst of the storm.

A woman was killed Saturday morning when a tornado hit her mobile home in Bexar County, Texas. A second person died in San Antonio when a utility pole crashed into a house.

Toll Mounts In Haiti

By MICHAEL NORTON
Associated Press Writer

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Hurricane Gilbert killed at least 30 people when it swept across Haiti's southern peninsula last week, the Haiti Disaster Preparedness Office reported Saturday.

An agronomist said the storm destroyed huge tracts of crops in the south and predicted a faminie.

Radio stations, which earlier reported 10 people died when their boat sank during the storm, broadcast the new government figures Saturday.

"It seems that 50 to 60 percent of agricultural production in the south has been destroyed. This means that we can expect a famine in that region within two months," Jacques Edouard Alexis, an agronomist and former dean of the Agronomy School, said Saturday.

The military government has declared a state of emergency in the three southern departments, where there is extensive damage to homes and heavy losses in livestock and fruit trees.

Coastal roads were flooded and power lines blown down.

The Canadian government has offered $50,000 in emergency relief to be channeled through the Roman Catholic Order of Oblate Fathers.

The U.S. Embassy announced a gift of $25,000 to the Haitian Red Cross for relief work.

Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy, president of the military government, expressed sympathy for the victims of the hurricane Friday night.

"The military government is conscious of its responsibilities and duties towards the nation and cannot be insensitive and indifferent to the misfortune which has befallen us," Namphy said.

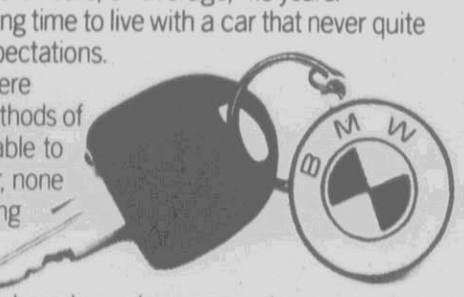

At least one political leader questioned why Haiti hadn't better spent money it has received in the past for hurricane protection measures.

"After all this time that Haiti has been subject to the possible ravages of hurricanes ... and millions and millions of dollars have fallen into the hands of its rulers, with what structures of protection has the country been endowed?" Gerard Phillipe-Auguste asked in a statement distributed to the press.

TWENTY MINUTES IN A BMW COULD SAVE YOU SEVERAL YEARS IN A BORING CAR.
People own their cars, on average, 4.6 years.
Which is a long time to live with a car that never quite lives up to your expectations.
And while there are numerous methods of comparison available to the new car buyer, none is more enlightening than a test drive in a BMW.

A car whose legendary responsiveness and exhilarating performance led the pundits at Motor Trend to declare "once a knowledgeable and experienced driver has driven a BMW, any BMW, nothing else feels quite as good as it did before."
If you're open to such enlightenment, then stop by for a thorough test drive.

Backing Urged For Research Using Fetal Tissue

By JERRY ESTILL
Associated Press Writer

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — Leapfrogging questions over the morality of abortion, a federal advisory panel has concluded that federally backed medical researchers should be allowed to use fetal tissue in their quest for effective treatment for Parkinson's and other diseases.

The leaders of a National Institutes of Health special panel convened to consider the topic complimented their colleagues Friday for focusing on questions put to them by top officials of the Department of Health and Human Services.

Left unresolved was whether a proposed White House ban on using the remains of fetuses intentionally and legally aborted in such experimental treatments will be upheld during the waning months of the Reagan administration.

Also unanswered was whether President Reagan is throwing his personal political weight behind the proposal, which was circulated for private review by administration health officials.

The NIH panel voted late Friday — 19-0, with two abstentions — to "recommend that research proceed."

Retired federal appellate Judge Arlin M. Adams of Philadelphia, the special committee's chairman, indicated at a news conference that he and some other panel members personally were opposed to abortion but did not let that enter into their decision to recommend that the government not stand in the way of using legally obtained fetal remains for research.

Defending the panel against allegations from anti-abortionists that the makeup of the panel was stacked in favor of allowing the research, Adams told reporters that an examination of his opinions as a judge would show that he was "very concerned about abortion" himself.

"I didn't know how I was going to vote until I had heard the testimony," said Adams, who was one of the 19.

Dr. Kenneth J. Ryan, head of the department of obstetrics and gynecology at Bringham and Women's Hospital in Boston, acknowledged that the fundamental question of the morality of abortion was a factor.

"It seemed to me that the abortion question was in the background, hovering over us all the time," said Ryan, chairman of the scientific issues portion of the committee deliberations. "But I thought the panelists were so intellectually honest with themselves that they made every effort to divorce the abortion question ... wherever possible from the question of whether you could use the product of abortion.

"I think that was really the key of the entire three-day discussion: Could you divorce the two. Some people think you cannot.

"I suspect that most of the people on the panel believed honestly ... that you could, with necessary safeguards, make a cleavage between the two questions."

Sensitive to those concerns, the committee extensively discussed what type of safeguards should be recommended. Indeed, the discussion ran so long, the panel will meet again before completing its work and forwarding its formal, written recommendations to a standing NIH advisory committee by Dec. 1.

It did agree that "a pregnant woman should not be induced to terminate pregnancy in order to furnish fetal tissue for transplantation or medical research."

It said the mother's decision to have an abortion should be kept separate from her decision to allow the fetus to be used for research and that guidelines must be drawn to avoid commercialization of fetal tissue.

As part of those fundamental safeguards, it said anonymity should be maintained between the donor and recipient so there would not be a temptation for a woman to have what was referred to in discussions as a "custom pregnancy" and abortion in an effort to provide tissue that might be implanted in a relative with Parkinson's or some other disease.

The committee members responded cautiously to reports that White House adviser Gary Bauer, a staunch opponent of abortion and distributor of the draft executive order that would ban fetal tissue research, has suggested that Reagan might make a decision that runs counter to the committee's recommendations, perhaps even before they are finalized.

"Because it's an election year, I think it's very difficult to comment on why people do what they do," said Ryan.

Nonetheless, he said, it would "fly in the face of the usefulness" of appointing the committee in the first place if a decision was to be made before it made its recommendations.

NRA Flexed Muscles Over Gun Control

By LARRY MARGASAK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Ken Gray says that in his southern Illinois district, support for the National Rifle Association is almost as strong as for the Pledge of Allegiance.

So when the NRA told Gray's constituents to make sure he voted against a waiting period for handgun purchases, they responded.

A week ago, they surrounded his car in the district and virtually kept him prisoner inside until he promised to help strip the waiting period from an anti-drug bill.

They repeated verbatim all the NRA arguments — especially the fear that this was the beginning of the end of gun ownership.

Last Thursday, the Illinois Democrat was part of the 228-182 majority that voted to eliminate from an anti-drug bill a seven-day waiting period for handgun purchases and an optional background check of the buyer. The House substituted a requirement that the Justice Department develop a system for gun dealers to check whether buyers are convicted felons.

Gray's case, more than almost any other, shows just how powerful the tug of the NRA can be.

He has no fear of defeat, because he's not running for re-election due to health reasons.

He said he personally supports a waiting period and believes his constituents were "brainwashed by the NRA."

And he had an emotional reason to support the waiting period, since two of his longtime friends and former constituents are Jim and Sarah Brady.

The waiting period is symbolically named after Jim Brady, the presidential press secretary who was shot along with President Reagan in the March 30, 1981, attempt on Reagan's life. Sarah Brady is the vice chair of Handgun Control Inc., which joined the nation's major law enforcement organizations to lobby hard for the waiting period.

So why did Gray vote with the NRA?

In his district, Gray said, "after the Pledge of Allegiance, the NRA comes next. If I'm their spokesman, I'm not going to pull a holier than thou routine. I'm sitting here as a hired hand."

The tug of the NRA wasn't as direct on all House members, but it was there nonetheless.

Rep. Helen Delich Bentley, R-Md., is a strong-willed lawmaker who would never be called a wimp by her colleagues. A co-sponsor of the drug bill that contained the Brady language, she said she told NRA backers "I supported Brady and leave me alone."

Ms. Bentley said in an interview she was not pressured by the NRA. But when the voting began, she watched the NRA supporters pile up an increasing margin for their substitute language.

When the pro-NRA count reached a majority, she decided she couldn't be of help to the waiting-period forces. Bowing to the inevitable, she inserted her electronic card into a slot that cast her vote for the NRA's position.

"I wanted to see what would happen," she said. "I told Sarah Brady a long time ago I would support her amendment. But I made a decision to vote depending on what was on the table. When I voted, the Brady amendment was gone."

It was not the first time the 3-million-member NRA won a gun control fight, though the opposition this time was more formidable.

The opponents matched the NRA's zeal, but the gun control forces could not match the NRA's financial resources, said Dewey Stokes, the president of the Fraternal Order of Police.

David Conover, an NRA lobbyist, attributed his group's victory to hard work, good strategy and some last-minute luck.

The gun group, as it has many times before, mobilized its 21 field representatives across the country and thousands of activist volunteers.

When the Brady language appeared ready for a vote two weeks ago, the NRA count estimated only a narrow 10-vote victory.

Then, the vote was postponed for a week.

"We got lucky," Conover said, because the postponement allowed thousands of NRA members to receive their latest issue of either American Hunter or American Rifleman — the NRA magazines. Although prepared in August, the publications contained an ad urging members to call members of Congress to vote against the waiting period.

"People saw in the magazine it still was not resolved," Conover said, and apparently turned a steady stream of contacts with lawmakers into a last-minute flood.

Dukakis Takes A Swipe At Bush's Claim To Be An Environmentalist

By RICHARD L. VERNACI
Associated Press Writer

Democrat Michael Dukakis ridiculed Republican George Bush's claim to be an environmentalist, accusing the vice president Saturday of flip-flops on the issue of offshore oil drilling and comparing him to former Interior Secretary James Watt.

The Massachusetts governor, speaking to campaign workers in Anaheim, Calif., also said he would elevate the Environmental Protection Agency to a Cabinet-level department.

"The first secretary of the environment is going to be as committed to protecting the environment as George Bush has been to neglecting it," Dukakis said.

Dukakis was attacking Bush on one of the issues the Republican presidential nominee has staked out for himself, having declared last month at an appearance in Michigan that he was a lifelong environmentalist.

"The next thing you know, we'll be hearing that James Watt and Anne Gorsuch (Burford) and Rita Lavelle are environmentalists too," Dukakis said.

Watt, who served as President Reagan's first interior secretary, was a favorite target for attack by environmental groups because of his support for opening up previously protected land for commercial use. Mrs. Burford was in charge of the EPA until 1983. Ms. Lavelle, who headed the agency's toxic waste cleanup program, served three months in jail for lying to Congress.

"The sight of George Bush campaigning on the coast and talking about his commitment to clean water reminds me of the old saying from television detective shows: They always return to the scene of the crime," Dukakis said.

Bush, meanwhile, on Saturday was wooing the immigrant vote often sought by Dukakis, who seldom fails to mention his Greek-born parents.

The vice president spoke briefly to a group of 174 new citizens from 62 countries at a naturalization ceremony in Washington. Bush stood in for Reagan at the event, staged by the Commission on the Bicentennial of the Constitution to commemorate the 201st anniversary of the signing of the Constitution in Philadelphia.

"We Americans have always thought of ourselves as special, as a light shining out to the world," Bush told the new citizens after they were given the oath of citizenship by former Supreme Court chief justice Warren E. Burger. "All of us, from the newest citizen to the oldest, must participate in the running of this country."

Bush's remarks were low-key and non-partisan, but the event gave him a chance to appear before television cameras flanked by the flag and a replica of the Liberty Bell and to recite the Pledge of Allegiance, which has become a mainstay of his campaign.

In California, Dukakis accused Bush of standing by and doing nothing while the administration tried to dismantle the Superfund program for cleaning up toxic wastes. He also said Bush supported Reagan's veto of the Clean Water Act and has "done more somersaults than an Olympic gymnast" on the question of offshore drilling.

Bush also came under attack Saturday for his role in leading the administration's efforts to stem the flow of illegal drugs into the United States. He has said that he would appoint his vice presidential running mate, Sen. Dan Quayle of Indiana, to a similar responsibility if the Republican ticket wins the election.

Speaking to a partisan crowd in the Florida panhandle, Democratic vice presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen said Bush "wants to pass the torch of failure on to the junior senator from Indiana."

But the strongest attack came from Rep. Ron Coleman, D-Texas, who delivered the Democrats' response to Reagan's weekly radio address with pointed references to Quayle's decision to serve public information officer in the Indiana National Guard during the Vietnam war.

Coleman questioned Quayle's fitness to lead the nation's war on drugs.

"How can he be put in charge of this war when he wouldn't fight in the last one? We still haven't forgotten the last time he was given the opportunity to carry a rifle for his country," Coleman said. "This is a fellow who sat out the last war typing press releases in Indiana."

Gallup Firm Is Purchased

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP) — The Gallup Organization, known for its polls and surveys, has been purchased by a private market research firm in a merger that probably will not bring major changes to Gallup's work, officials said.

Selection Research Inc. of Lincoln, Neb., bought Gallup for an undisclosed price, officials said.

"We know that the Gallup name is synonymous with a tremendous amount of integrity," said SRI vice president Gale Muller. "It will help us to get a lot more reliable information."

Alec Gallup and George Gallup Jr. will remain co-chairmen of the board of the Gallup Organization, which conducts polls and surveys for businesses and institutions.

SRI, with headquarters in Lincoln, is an employee-owned company with about 1,000 workers.

The companies have worked together since 1985 on hospital research, and SRI acquired part ownership of Canadian Gallup Poll Ltd. of Toronto in 1986. Those moves led to the merger, said Andrew Kohut, Gallup president.

"The (acquisition) will allow Gallup to be part of a larger network of resources," Kohut said in a telephone interview.

'Non-Combatant?'

WASHINGTON (AP) — George Bush has been "non-combatant" as the Reagan administration's point man in the war on drugs and the grim toll has climbed, with "more deaths, more wasted lives, more shattered families," a Texas Democrat said Saturday.

"While George Bush was in charge, he himself said the nation is losing ground in the war on drugs: That's because he's used only one weapon in the war: hot air," Rep. Ron Coleman said in the Democratic response to President Reagan's weekly radio address.

Coleman accused the vice president of supporting funding cuts to enforcement and drug treatment programs, slashing personnel and leading an ineffective border interdiction system that even the head of the Drug Enforcement Administration recommended be abolished.

Bush Shook Underdog Label

By TOM RAUM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — George Bush has dropped a line from his stock campaign speech: the one about being the underdog and liking it.

Little more than a month ago, the vice president was trailing Democrat Michael Dukakis in national public opinion polls by double digits. Now, most polls show Bush has seized the agenda and is either leading Dukakis or is even with him.

Political professionals offer differing explanations for Bush's rapid rise. But most suggest a combination of factors: his well-received convention address, a series of speeches that put Dukakis on the defensive, and the failure of questions over running mate Dan Quayle's military record to stick as a major liability.

Some analysts also cite quick damage control on the part of Bush's campaign team, led by campaign chairman James A. Baker III, in minimizing possible embarrassments — such as the quick resignations last week of Bush operative Frederic Malek and six members of an ethnic coalition after allegations of anti-Semitic activities surfaced.

Bush himself says he's doing a better job now in "getting through to the American people," both in terms of personality and message and that "there's a good sense the campaign is on the move."

The speed of the vice president's rally was welcomed by campaign officials.

"All of us had a lot of confidence in him and a lot of confidence the campaign would start moving in the right direction. But all of us were surprised how fast it did," campaign manager Lee Atwater said.

Atwater credits Bush's convention acceptance speech — in which he appealed for a "kinder, gentler nation" and moved out from the shadow of President Reagan — as decisive in Bush's surge.

Private analysts agree the speech was important but suggest other factors for Bush's rise, including a major miscalculation on the part of Dukakis strategists on the impact of the Quayle controversy.

"There is an old political axiom: never murder anyone when they're committing suicide," said Norman Ornstein, a political analyst with the American Enterprise Institute. "There was a tactical judgment in the Dukakis campaign to lay low for a few weeks or play presidential."

"But that didn't work very well," since the Quayle episode "hasn't done the damage to George Bush that one might have imagined," Ornstein said. "Then, they (Dukakis campaign) were flat-footed when Bush went aggressively on attack."

Quayle aside, Bush roared out of New Orleans with a series of speeches that depicted Dukakis as a liberal who is soft on crime and quick to raise taxes. The Dukakis campaign did little to respond.

Some Republicans said the furor over reports that Quayle used family influence to join the Indiana National Guard during the Vietnam War era may have actually worked to the ticket's advantage.

Republican consultant David Carmen said, "People were very sympathetic to Quayle and didn't understand what all the fuss was. They were getting no news about Dukakis and there was a lot of sympathy for this guy."

Democratic consultant David Garth disagreed and said the selection of Quayle "was without doubt the dumbest move the Bush campaign has made. It was dumb to pick him and dumb to stick with him."

"My feeling is that, had Bush picked anybody else but Quayle, the election would be over today" — with Dukakis the loser, Garth said.

He said Bush's rise in the polls reflected "a very good speech at the convention" and what he contended were misleading polls that showed Dukakis ahead of Bush earlier in the summer.

Dukakis appeared to be ahead only because of "a false bump" he got from public attention to his lengthy primary battle against Jesse Jackson. "Then the only question left was whether Jackson would cause trouble at the Democratic convention. And when he didn't, it gave another spurt to Dukakis," Garth said.

Other analysts suggested that Dukakis' lack of movement in the polls reflects a common political phenomenon, a problem that in fact affected Bush in his 1980 presidential bid: A relatively unknown candidate gets a big surge in the polls from winning primaries, then sees it evaporate as voters get to know more about the candidate and lose their initial curiosity.

Athletes Saluted

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan saluted U.S. Olympic athletes Saturday and urged Americans to "remember, win, lose or draw, how much we have to be proud and thankful for."

The president devoted most of his weekly radio address, delivered from the presidential retreat at Camp David in Maryland's Catoctin Mountains, to the Games that began Friday in Seoul, South Korea.

NASA Sets Sept. 29 Discovery Launch Date

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — More than 2½ years after Challenger and its crew of seven disintegrated in a cold, blue sky, America is ready to return to space.

Discovery, the faults repaired, is poised on shuttle Launch Pad 39B. Five astronauts, all veterans of earlier shuttle flights, are trained and eager, aware of the risks. Launch and flight control teams are set for liftoff Sept. 29.

Success would take a great psychological burden off the back of the space agency and the country. Another failure could devastate the space program.

"We clearly cannot afford to lose another vehicle, much less another crew; I don't think the manned space flight program could withstand another Challenger," said Frederick "Rick" Hauck, the 47-year-old Navy captain who commands Discovery's crew.

Hauck said he believes everything possible has been done to make the shuttle a safe vehicle.

"Flying into space never will be risk free," he said. "It's a matter of reducing the risks to a minimum and balancing the risks that are involved with what we are trying to accomplish."

The other crew members are Air Force Col. Richard O. Covey, 42, the pilot, and three mission specialists, George D. "Pinky" Nelson, 38, John M. "Mike" Lounge, 42, and Marine Lt. Col. David C. Hilmers, 38.

During four days in orbit, they are to deploy a $100 million communications satellite, a twin of one lost in the Challenger explosion; conduct 11 science and technology experiments, and test design changes made to the orbiter.

NASA on Friday announced the Sept. 29 launch date. The launch was set for 9:59 a.m. EDT but could come at any time in the following three hours.

Covey reported the flight will be less complicated than most previous missions because NASA has elected to take a conservative approach. "We're not breaking any new ground," he said.

But Covey said that because of hundreds of modifications made to the orbiter, "we'll practically be flying a shakedown flight of a new spacecraft. There probably will be some surprises, but overall we'll have a safer vehicle."

On launch day, the crew will remember the Challenger astronauts and in orbit they plan a special memorial.

"If we ever do forget what happened to Challenger, it's going to be a sad day, because we might just become complacent once again," said Hilmers.

"But we can't dwell on it," he added. "We have to look to the future."

More than a half-million people are expected to jam roadsides, river banks and other viewing areas to watch Discovery's fiery departure; more than 3,000 news media representatives from around the world will be here — many of them kept at a spot several miles from the press site because of NASA's new concerns about the possibility of an accident during launch.

There has not been this much excitment over a manned space flight since astronauts rocketed to the moon two decades ago.

There were large crowds for the first shuttle launches in 1981, but after 24 successful missions, interest had waned. Only 600 news people were on hand for Challenger's launch, and that was more than had shown up for the three previous flights because of passenger Christa McAuliffe, a high school teacher who was to have taught lessons from orbit. Of the national television networks, only Cable News Network carried the disastrous launch live.

Space flight had become routine, ho-hum. NASA was so confident in its machine that it had flown a Saudi prince, a congressman, a senator, civilian scientists and industry engineers.

The bubble burst on that frigid winter day on Jan. 28, 1986, when Challenger erupted into a giant fireball more than eight miles above the Atlantic 73 seconds after liftoff.

Americans were shocked. Before the day was out most had seen the endless television replays of the world's worst space disaster that had claimed the lives of five men and two women. Millions of schoolchildren who had planned to view McAuliffe's lessons were badly shaken.

Most of the nation's citizens had taken space flight and America's leadership in it for granted. It had, after all, been going on for a quarter century. Though NASA did lose three astronauts in a launch-pad training exercise in 1967, it had launched 55 manned vehicles with a total of 196 people on board, and all came back, some from the moon, with nary a scratch.

What had gone wrong?

The Rogers commission that investigated the accident for President Reagan said the direct cause was a leak at a joint between segments of one of Challenger's two solid fuel booster rockets. Superheated gases and flames shot past two syththetic rubber O-rings and touched off an explosion of the large external fuel tank.

The commission report said cold weather, 36 degrees at liftoff, contributed to the accident by stiffening the O-rings, preventing them from sealing the joint properly. Some engineers had argued with lower-level managers against launching in the cold, but their concerns never were relayed to the top managers who made the launch decision.

The report found troubling lapses in judgment, expertise, communications and management within the space agency. It said some NASA engineers had feared for years that trouble lurked in the rockets, with documents showing prior instances where soot was found on recovered boosters, indicating they had leaked in their two minutes of flight.

It said agency officials had accepted growing risk "because they got away with it the last time."

Within months, NASA had a new administrator and other top officials, the directors of three major field centers involved with the shuttle left, and all those involved in the decision to launch were replaced.

There were wholesale resignations and duty changes at Alabama's Marshall Space Flight Center, which oversees the booster rocket contract, and at Morton Thiokol Inc. in Utah, which builds the boosters. NASA established a new safety and quality control office.

Astronauts and former astronauts were placed in key decision making positions, as recommended by the commission, to give the flight crews a larger voice in what was happening.

Rear Adm. Richard Truly, a former astronaut who made two shuttle flights, now heads the shuttle program. Robert Crippen, who has made four flights, now heads a new Mission Management Team and it will be he who makes the final go-no go decision to launch in the waning minutes of the countdown.

Engineers at Marshall and Morton Thiokol redesigned the rocket joint, adding a third O-ring, better insulation, a heater and a capture lip to prevent a gap opening under the pressure of ignition.

NASA also took the time to redesign parts that it said needed improvement on the orbiter, the external tank and the main engines. In all, 56 major changes and more than 400 lesser ones have been made to the vehicle. The program to redesign all three shuttles so far has cost about $2.4 billion.

Reagan ordered a replacement shuttle for Challenger, at a cost of $2.8 billion, and the new craft is starting to take shape at a Rockwell International facility in California.

Among the changes to the orbiter is the addition of an emergency escape system featuring a blowout cabin hatch and a 12-foot aluminum and steel telescoping pole. The hope is that in case of a problem during a landing attempt while the shuttle is in gliding flight, the astronauts could slide down the pole and then parachute to safety. The system would not be of use in a Challenger-type accident.

NASA had hoped to launch Discovery last February, but technical problems and delays in testing new systems slipped the date to June, then to August and September.

Said Forrest S. McCartney, director of the Kennedy Space Center: "After the Challenger, everyone was encouraged to go back and look at everything they could think of and see what could be done to reduce the risk. They did a very thorough and comprehensive job of that. The stigma of another Challenger is one that everyone is very conscious of.

"So the reason it's taking us so long to get back to flying again is that we're doing everything we know to reduce risk to the minimum," he said. "We've initiated more checks and balances than we ever had before."

Motorists Are Painter's Clientele

By JOYCE A. VENEZIA
Associated Press Writer

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Sam Donovan, ace billboard painter, is juggling paint brushes and cans on a narrow board that dangles high above a swampy bog.

"You won't believe this, but I'm scared to death of heights," said Donovan, 36, who has acquired a reputation for creating portraits that loom many times larger than life.

Donovan's life work is art usually seen at a great distance in a fleeting glance from a car window. Instead of an appreciative museum audience, he can hope to impress only the myriad of passing travelers, such as casino tourists and truckers.

His labors may last only a few days before being covered by the next advertisement. But the affable artist says he doesn't mind.

"I enjoy looking at it for a couple of weeks. If I really like it, I'll deliberately pass it every day on my way to work just to see it," Donovan said.

Billboard painting requires a combination of the agility to climb rickety planks leading to the billboard, the talent to translate a tiny photograph into a mural hundreds of times larger and the pluck to endure rain, snow, sleet and heavy winds.

Donovan says he will paint almost anything on a billboard, but he especially enjoys assignments involving portraits.

One day recently, he spent six hours painting Frank Sinatra's face, right down to the famous blue eyes.

"With an older person like him, you have a lot more wrinkles and that's more time-consuming," he said, wiping the paint off his hands and onto his splattered flannel shirt and jeans.

"When I painted Miss New Jersey last week, her face was a lot easier because it's smooth," he said. "But she had all that red hair."

The job started on a whim. After majoring in biology in college, Donovan grew restless and took a job painting small signs 10 years ago. Eventually, he started painting billboards for the R.C. Maxwell Co.

He began doing portraits slowly, reading art books and practicing with watercolors at home.

Now an independent billboard painter, Donovan is considered "the best," said George Harvey, general manager of R.C. Maxwell's office here.

"He showed great promise early on," Harvey said. "He expanded his talents so well and so quickly. He soon was thirsting for more intricate layouts."

Donovan acknowledges that good billboard painters are hard to find.

"Very few people set out to say, 'I'm going to be a billboard painter,'" he said. "There aren't that many of us because you have to be good to get a job, and there's no place to learn this."

A job begins with Donovan charting out the photograph on a sheet of graph paper, which he then copies in pencil onto his giant "canvas." He next fills in the colors, a tricky process that involves compensating for the changing light at different times of the day.

During the process, he'll climb down the narrow planks quite frequently to walk several hundred yards away and evaluate the billboard through binoculars.

Unlike billboards that are simply made of paper pasted onto the wood, a hand-painted billboard can last several years if varnished, Donovan said.

Donovan recalls only one instance in which he almost fell off a billboard. The pulleys gave way, and he scrambled for a line to catch.

Sheepishly, Donovan also admitted that a few paint cans have escaped his grip.

"I've dropped paint on the Boardwalk on a brand new awning, and I've even hit a few mink stoles, but they probably never knew where it came from."

Corvette Stingray Creator Dead

BLOOMFIELD HILLS, Mich. (AP) — William L. Mitchell, creator of the now-classic Corvette Stingray and a former General Motors executive, has died of heart failure at the age of 76.

Ranked as one of the top 10 auto designers of all time by Car and Driver magazine, Mitchell was a winter resident of North Palm Beach, Fla. He died Monday in Michigan and was buried Friday in Bloomfield Hills.

A vice president of design at GM for 19 years, Mitchell molded the appearance of hundreds of car models, including the 1963 Buick Riviera and the 1970 Camaro. His designs were transformed into more than 72.5 million automobiles, according to GM.

The Stingray was introduced in 1963, when the Corvette was about 10 years old, and quickly became the dream of sports-car lovers.

Aquino Says U.S. Must Respond To Gorbachev's Pullout Proposal

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino said Saturday the United States must decide whether to accept a Soviet offer and close its bases here in return for a Soviet pullout from a strategic garrison in Vietnam.

On Friday, Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev offered to abandon its naval facilities in Cam Ranh Bay if the United States removed its six military installations from the Philippines.

"That is for the two superpowers to discuss and to talk about," Mrs. Aquino told reporters. She gave no indication whether her government will make any recommendation to Washington over the Soviet offer.

Other Filipino officials also reacted cautiously to Gorbachev's offer, which was part of a seven-point plan for reducing tensions in Asia.

Gorbachev's proposal came during growing opposition to the bases here and against the backdrop of deadlocked U.S.-Philippine talks over the future of the installations, which include Clark Air Base, Subic Bay Naval Base and four smaller installations.

Talks between the United States and the Philippines over the final two years of the 1947 Military Bases Agreement have stalled over compensation and other issues.

On Thursday, U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz said in Washington that the United States wanted to keep Clark, Subic and four other installations in the Philippines but that Manila's demands for more money were too high.

Shultz met this week in Washington with Filipino Foreign Secretary Raul Manglapus to discuss the impasse but neither side announced any progress.

The United States pays about $180 million a year for use of the six bases. Manglapus has said the Americans have offered about $502 million in compensation, but he said the Philippine demand for $1.2 billion a year would be a "reasonable" figure.

The agreement expires in 1991, and Mrs. Aquino has refused to ay whether she will allow the bases to remain after that.

In a statement to reporters, Sen. Leticia Shahani, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said Soviet and U.S. military facilities were not comparable and that the Clark and Subic bases were "far bigger complexes" than Cam Ranh Bay.

Two other senators, Heherson Alvarez and Rene Saguisag, welcomed the Gorbachev proposal but warned that the issue would require careful study.

In other developments, the government announced Saturday that Mrs. Aquino ordered the cancellation of the passport of the founder of the outlawed Communist Party of the Philippines after the military claimed he had resumed leadership of the rebel movement.

The statement released by the presidential palace said Mrs. Aquino issued the order Friday against Jose Maria Sison, whom she freed from prison in 1986. Sison left the country six months later and is believed to be in Western Europe.

The military said Sison has been soliciting funds for the rebels abroad.

Sison founded the Maoist party in 1968 and was arrested in 1977. He was among about 500 political prisoners released by Mrs. Aquino in March 1986, one month after a civilian-military uprising toppled Ferdinand Marcos and propelled her to power.

The party and its armed wing, the New People's Army, have been waging a 19-year insurgency to establish a Marxist state in the Philippines.

Elsewhere, the military said suspected rebels led by a fugitive Roman Catholic priest ambushed a government jeep in the southern Philippines, killing five people.

Col. Rogelio Villanueva, regional army commander, said the attack occurred Friday in the coastal town of Cortes in Surigao del Sur province about 510 miles southeast of Manila.

Villanueva said about 30 guerrillas opened fire on the National Irrigation Administration jeep as it passed by on an isolated strip of the national highway.

Villanueva quoted the survivors as saying the rebel band was led by renegade priest Frank Navarro, one of the best known clerics who have joined the rebellion.

U.S. Said Pondering Changes In Its Gulf Convoy Procedures

By NORMAN BLACK
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration has approved in principle its first change in Persian Gulf convoy procedures as a result of the Iran-Iraq cease-fire, defense officials say.

Assuming the changes are finalized, U.S.-flag tankers in the waterway will be kept within a "defensive zone" by American warships and always under surveillance, but won't be accompanied every step of the way as is now the case, the sources said.

"The best way to describe it is in basketball terms, by saying you're going from a man-to-man defense to a zone defense," said one official.

The change will allow only a slight reduction in the number of warships deployed to the Persian Gulf — probably one fewer ship — but will increase the flexibility of the task force commander and allow the Navy's ships to operate at a lesser alert level, the officials added.

The sources, who agreed to discuss the matter only if not identified, said the change in procedure had been tentatively approved by the Pentagon and White House, but would not be ordered until allies with warships in the region and certain Mideast countries were consulted.

The Defense Department declined to discuss details of the plan on Friday but acknowledged in a statement:

"The administration is considering additional steps which ... (could be described as) modest modifications of our present method of providing protection to U.S.-flagged shipping in the gulf.

"The modifications currently under consideration do not involve any significant reduction in force levels. We are continuing to consult with our friends and allies."

The United States has 26 Navy ships assigned to its Joint Task Force Middle East, including 17 inside the Persian Gulf itself. As of Friday, the Navy had conducted 85 convoy operations since the summer of 1987, when the escorts began.

With the exception of the departure of one cruiser, the USS Vincennes, the naval force has not changed in size despite last month's end to hostilities between Iran and Iraq.

Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci has said repeatedly the United States will not reduce its military presence in the region until it is absolutely convinced the cease-fire will hold and that American merchant ships aren't threatened.

According to the sources, Carlucci has approved the idea of "providing flexibility" to the Navy on convoys.

"You keep your warships nearby, always close enough to act, but drop the continuous, side-by-side presence," explained one source.

"The Navy vessels deploy in what amounts to a picket line up and down the gulf, ready to pick up a merchant as it moves within a particular range," said another.

The sources said the plan called for the Navy to directly escort merchants through the narrow Strait of Hormuz, the sole entrance to the Persian Gulf, but to use the picket-line approach for the remainder of the trip.

"This is the first important response to the cease-fire," said one source. "If this works out OK, then we can consider additional steps."

The United States mounted its escort operations in 1987 after President Reagan approved a request by Kuwait to reflag 11 of its tankers under the American flag. Kuwait, a key ally of Iraq in the 8-year-old war, had seen its ships become a special target of Iranian forces and wanted to obtain U.S. military protection.

For more than 40 years before the escorts, the Navy's normal Persian Gulf presence consisted of four to six ships.

Polls Favor Social Party

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Final pre-election polls indicated Sweden's Social Democratic Party stands a good chance to stay in office, but the environmentalist Greens may win seats and a role as a legislative power broker.

Sweden's high taxes and welfare system and the non-socialist opposition's ability to govern were chief issues in a television and radio debate Friday that analysts said could tip the balance in Sunday's election.

Ten percent of voters questioned this week said they were still undecided.

Young Greens supporters demonstrated outside the television studio hall because their party was excluded from the broadcast debate. Swedish public television said it was open only to incumbent parties.

The Greens failed to clear the 4 percent minimum for legislative representation in the two previous elections they contested, but this summer's ecological disasters and general discontent among young voters have boosted their chances for seats — and perhaps a role in a coalition government.

The five parliamentary party leaders all stressed the environment in opening statements, but in the ensuing debate concentrated on calls for more housing and improved retiree, health and child-care benefits.

A poll by the Swedish Institute of Public Research, or SIPO, forecast that Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson's Social Democrats and the small Communist Party would win a combined 46.2 percent of the vote.

The three non-socialist parties polled a total 44.6 percent in the survey of 1,094 people taken from Monday through Thursday.

Israeli Troops Conducted A Sweep For Guerrillas

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli forces and allied Lebanese militiamen withdrew to the Israeli-occupied security zone today after launching a 24-hour search operation for guerrillas in southern Lebanon, police said.

The sweep involved about 250 Israeli troops and militiamen of the South Lebanon Army in 29 tanks and armored vehicles, authorities said. They pulled back to the security zone before dawn after searching a 24-square-mile area for guerrillas.

The spokesman said the Israelis and their allies "did not face any resistance during the operation" which was carried out just south of Syrian army lines in the western sector of Lebanon's Bekaa valley.

Five Lebanese citizens were wounded during the sweep and at least 15 houses sustained severe damage from shelling in the villages of Mimess and Ain Ata, the spokesman said. The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, did not say how the five were injured.

The search was launched Friday hours after an Israeli army patrol foiled an infiltration attempt inside the security zone, killing three guerrillas.

Talaat Yacoub's pro-Syrian Palestine Liberation Front claimed responsibility for the attack in a communique released in the southern port city of Sidon.

The attempted infiltration Friday was the second abortive attempt in six days to cross the six-to-10-mile security zone established by Israel.

A week ago, Israeli soldiers captured four guerrillas after seriously wounding one of them in the zone.

Israel set up its security zone after withdrawing the bulk of its occupation army from southern Lebanon in June 1985 after a three-year occupation. The zone is intended to serve as a buffer against cross-border raids.

The strip is patrolled by about 1,000 Israeli troops and an equal number of militiamen.

In another development today, unidentified gunmen shot and wounded three Ghanaian peacekeepers serving with the U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) in the southern town of Abbasiyeh, a U.N. spokesman said.

The U.N. spokesman, who refused to be named, said the gunmen chased the U.N. jeep and opened fire after it had an accident with a civilian car.

"The attackers escaped and civilians evacuated the three wounded Ghanian soldiers to a hospital" in the southern port city of Tyre, the spokesman said.

Summit In Works?

BEIJING (AP) — Premier Li Peng said today that a Chinese-Soviet summit can be held if lower-level meetings bring the two sides closer together on issues such as Cambodia.

He also denied that the leadership is split over how to proceed with troubled economic reforms and said that reports of major resistance to reforms are groundless.

The premier, meeting with The Associated Press board of directors and executives, said improved relations with Moscow were in the interests of China and world peace and would not threaten China's ties with Japan and the West.

It was the most favorable Chinese response yet to the Soviet Union's repeated invitations for a summit meeting to end a quarter-century of estrangement between the communist neighbors.

Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev renewed the invitation in a speech Friday in Siberia in which he said he was ready to begin summit preparations without delay.

Soldiers Surrender As Protesters Occupy Building

By SEIN WIN
Associated Press Writer

RANGOON, Burma (AP) – Armed Buddhist monks and students took over a government building Saturday, forcing 24 soldiers to surrender in the latest escalation of unrest threatening to topple the authoritarian government.

The occupation of the Ministry of Trade building in downtown Rangoon was believed to be the first in which a government office in the capital was taken over by protesters fighting to end 26 years of repression under the Burma Socialist Program Party.

The soldiers first opened fire on the protesters and slightly wounded three people. They later surrendered and were disguised as protesters with red headbands and allowed to escape, witnesses said. Mobs outside the building had threatened to behead the guards.

The shooting was believed to be the first time soldiers fired on demonstrators since the Aug. 8-12 rioting that ousted hard-line President Sein Lwin and left 112 people dead by the government's count. They previously shot only at escaping prisoners and mobs of looters.

Elsewhere, three people accused of offering poisoned water to protesters two weeks ago were beaten to death by a mob and beheaded after the monks released them from custody, witnesses said.

Up to 500,000 demonstrators, including striking government workers and policemen, took part in peaceful marches in Rangoon, carying placards that said, "If we don't get it (democracy), we will hit out."

Western-educated lawyer Maung Maung took over Aug. 19 as the first civilian leader since the 1962 military coup, but protesters have rejected his plan for the ruling party to supervise a general election under a multiparty system. They have demanded an interim government be formed to conduct the polling.

Witnesses said the troops guarding the ministry building opened fire after a surging group of protesters surrounded the building and threatened to set it ablaze.

Clambering over adjacent rooftops, students entered the top floor of the four-story structure. Twenty-four soldiers inside surrendered to monks, who drove them away after seizing a submachine gun and several semi-automatic weapons.

Protesters also ringed the City Hall and Central Bank buildings nearby and shots were heard, but there apparently was no bloodshed. After reinforcements arrived, about 100 soldiers were posted at both buildings.

Security forces have sided with protesters in towns including Victoria Point in the southernmost province of Mergui. On Sept. 9, 500 servicemen joined protest marches in Rangoon in the first major military defections.

State-run Radio Rangoon Saturday urged army personnel to return to their duties and work toward "consolidating sovereignty, national unity."

Opposition leaders, who were believed to be negotiating with the government on formation of an interim administration, have tried to prevent violence.

On Friday, leading dissident Aung Gyi defused a potentially bloody confrontation between soldiers and 100,000 demonstrators moving on the heavily guarded Ministry of Defense compound with spears, swords and knives.

Aung Gyi, a former army brigadier, told the crowd, "We cannot blame these soldiers for the faults of some of their commanders."

Street protests have persisted despite a series of concessions by Maung Maung's government.

The latest, announced by Radio Rangoon Friday, said all military personnel and civil servants must resign from the ruling party and not become members of any future political parties.

It said the decision was made at the recommendation of the commission that is to supervise the elections, which may occur in October. Two-thirds of the 2.5 million party members come from military and civil service ranks.

Many government workers said Saturday they would not heed a government warning to return to work by Sept. 26 or face punishment. Virtually all the workers have been on strike since Aug. 8, paralyzing the adminstration.

One effect of the strikes has been the price of rice, the staple food, has tripled in recent weeks. The U.S. Embassy said Saturday it would donate $500,000 to religious organizations to buy rice for needy residents.

With the political instability, most embassies have evacuated dependents of their diplomatic staffs and non-essential personnel.

A number of Japanese were evacuated Saturday to Thailand after the embassy in Rangoon urged the remaining 108 Japanese there to leave. About 100 Americans had left earlier.

Security forces killed scores of people in quelling student-led protests in March and June. That set the stage for the July 23 resignation of Ne Win, who had ruled since he staged the 1962 coup.

More protests flared after Sein Lwin succeeded him. The government said security forces killed 112 people in Rangoon before Sein Lwin resigned Aug. 12 after 17 days in power, but Western diplomats said the death toll may have been much higher.

Guerrillas Free Jailed Comrades

By TOM WELLS
Associated Press Writer

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Left-wing guerrillas firing automatic weapons burst into a federal court building in the town of Buga Friday and freed five of their comrades being held for trial, police reported.

They said a judge's administrative assistant was taken hostage by the gunmen and his body was found with a bullet in the head beside a highway near the town 160 miles southwest of Bogota.

Two of the guerrillas freed by the attackers were captured after an hour-long pursuit, the police said. They did not report any other casualties or give further details.

In other developments, leftist rebels freed 22 government soldiers and policemen captured in a raid last month and also released two Colombian geologists seized in another attack, the government and military announced.

The soldiers and policemen freed Friday had been taken prisoner Aug. 23 by guerrillas of the People's Liberation Army and the Colombian Revolutionary Armed Forces during a joint attack on the northwestern town of Saiza.

A statement from the office of President Virgilio Barcos said a one-day cease-fire had been arranged so the captives could be released in the Uraba region, about 300 miles northwest of Bogota.

Two of the government troopers had been wounded in the rocket and mortar attack on the police station in Saiza, Gen. Jesus Arias said in an interview with the radio station RCN. He did not list their conditions or elaborate.

The two geologists released Thursday were among five who worked with coal companies and were kidnapped Aug. 20 by rebels of another guerrilla group, the National Liberation Army, or ELN.

Rebels freed the two geologists in an arranged meeting with a group of reporters in the city of Bucaramanga, 200 miles northeast of Bogota.

An ELN communique said the three other geologists would be released soon, but declared the guerrillas would launch an offensive against foreign coal-mining companies.

Exxon and the Colombian state company Carbacol are partners in a $3 billion surface mine near Colombia's Caribbean coast.

ELN guerrillas have attacked oil pipelines and oil installations operated by Occidental Petroleum Co., Shell Oil and the Colombian state company Ecopetrol 46 times this year, according to the government. It placed the damage at $300 million.

A Defense Ministry communique released Friday said 1,174 people have been killed this year in guerrilla attacks and battles between rebels and security forces.

It listed the slain as 499 guerrillas, 378 civilians and 297 policemen and soldiers.

The ministry has reported 2,037 people were killed last year in fighting involving rebels, government forces and civilians caught in the violence.

Bangladesh Fighting Diseases In Aftermath Of Killer Floods

By HASAN SAEED
Associated Press Writer

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Pneumonia and eye and skin diseases have broken out in Bangladesh in the aftermath of floods that claimed at least 953 lives, doctors and officials said Saturday.

"Over 3,500 medical teams working in the flooded areas are not fully equipped to handle these new diseases," said one Health Ministry official. "Most of them are not carrying enough medicines for these ailments."

The government's toll of 953 from the flooding, which inundated about 80 percent of the country, is considered low. Newspapers put the toll in excess of 2,000.

The government's figures include 211 deaths from diarrhea, caused by the disruption of pure water supplies when floodwaters washed away pumps and inundated wells. Most of the other deaths occurred from drownings, and a lesser number from bites by poisonous snakes.

Flooding is an annual disaster in Bangladesh, where the 110 million people earn an average per capita income of $150 per year. Last year, floods during the monsoon season killed at least 1,500 people.

One doctor in Dhaka said an "unusually large number" of patients from flood-affected areas are suffering from eye ailments and skin diseases.

"The daily average of such cases has increased four- to six-fold in the last one week," said the doctor, Abdur Rahman. "A week or 10 days back, the daily average of such patients was about 10. Now it is between 50 and 60 every day."

At least 51,792 cases of diarrhea have been reported from flooded areas, where victims had little or no way to boil water. A government effort to bring water purification tablets to the countryside has been largely unsuccessful.

The reports of the disease outbreaks come as the levels of major rivers in the low-lying country begin to recede.

"By next Friday, most of the water will recede, except from the low-lying areas close to the rivers," said one official at the Flood Control Center.

The floods have inundated 53 of the country's 64 districts. But government efforts to get relief to an estimated 40 million people have been hampered by lack of communications and resources.

Many outlying areas remain inaccessible by road, and there is little dry land for the few helicopters.

But resumption last Friday of rail traffic between Dhaka, the capital, and Chittagong, the country's main port, was expected to boost relief work.

Iraq Spurns Inquiry

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Iraq has rejected a U.N. bid to send a team of experts to investigate allegations it used poison gas against Kurdish rebels, many of whom have fled to neighboring Turkey.

"The response was negative," Iraq's Acting U.N. Ambassador, Ali Mahmoud Sumaida, told reporters Friday after meeting with Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar. "We declined to receive such a mission because there is no basis for evidence (for such a mission)."

At least a dozen nations, including the United States and Britain, have urged Perez de Cuellar to send a team to look into charges that Iraq was using chemical warfare against its Kurdish minority.

Sumaida said reports by a Turkish team of experts and the Turkish Red Crescent — Turkey's equivalent of the Red Cross — did not provide sufficient evidence to warrant dispatching a team of investigators.

Scary Mistake

No Such Thing As Too Careful

The blood was safe, so why worry?

Because confusion over whether donated blood is infected with AIDS or hepatitis or any deadly virus is frightening, that's why. And because when blood donors test positive for these viruses, their blood should be discarded. Period.

It doesn't matter if that result was a false positive or not. The system that keeps the nation's blood supply safe demands meticulous adherence to rules and procedures.

And what's most disturbing about last week's news that blood from donors who tested positive for AIDS or hepatitis or another virus — blood which according to policy should have been destroyed — is the fact officials don't know exactly how the blood got into recipients' veins.

It probably was not tainted. Likely none of the recipients will get ill, so hysteria is misplaced. But the specter of mistake-making looms larger than the threat of contamination and sickness.

The nation's blood supply is an important resource that must remain plentiful. But as the incidence of AIDS increases, so does the threat to an adequate, non-contaminated blood supply. Not because a real physical danger exists, but because public confidence in the donation process can easily be undermined by incidents like the one last week.

The system is, for the most part, safe. Stringent testing eliminates the possibility of deadly diseases being spread by blood transfusions. But to remain protected, precautions must be uncompromising. The nation cannot afford any standards but the highest.

Although the incident reported last week likely did not harm anyone, the implications of a real situation where tainted blood reaches donors are unthinkable. A nationally contaminated blood supply would be a horror.

The where and how surrounding the improper release of blood should be probed and concrete answers found. A proper explanation of the mishap could ease the public discomfiture prompted by the incident.

Donors should not be discouraged from giving blood. Neither should recipients worry about the quality of the blood transfusions. But if more incidents where blood is improperly released occur, doubts could grow strong enough to warrant some caution.

As risks increase, precautions should intensify. Careful handling of the blood supply is the key to a successful donor program.

What Is Gore Running For?

ELECTION 88

By Mary C. Schulken

Reflector Analysis

Al Gore woke up some Yaller Dawgs sleeping in the Democratic sunshine Friday, and he roused some window shoppers too.

A political metamorphosis isn't an uncommon phenomenon, but when a hollow facade becomes an impassioned expositor in six months, eyes blink, ears perk and heads turn.

Those Pitt Countians who saw Gore's Prince-Albert-In-A-Can performance at a campaign stop here before Super Tuesday during his unsuccessful presidential campaign had to be amazed at the vigorous, passionate man that addressed Democrats in Greenville Friday at a rally for vice presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen.

Gone were the phrases carefully packaged to please Southern moderates. Gone was the rich boy hesitancy that said "I don't really know who I am or why I'm running for president." Gone was the reserve, the snobbish demeanor of the young, affluent senator from Tennessee. In its place was energy, vitality and a new willingness to roll up sleeves and get to work.

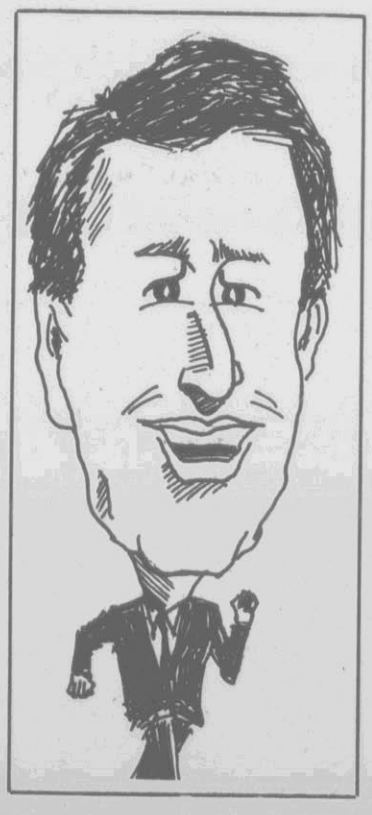

There was fire in the hole. Here was a Democrat with some desire.

Gore's voice ricocheted off the courthouse steps and the sharp report of his words was exciting. He fired shots at environmental issues, he took aim at education. He drew a graphic and convincing comparison between a White House dependent on Republican Dan Quayle and one with Bentsen in charge.

Not that Gore stole the show from Bentsen. But he could have if he'd kept on talking. Bentsen's rhetoric was competent, predictable and written for the Reagan Democrats, the middle-aged Southern males that strayed from the party. In his words, he was "looking for some old friends who've wandered away." His message was safe, without specifics and was delivered like what it was — a soft shoe sales pitch for a party ticket trying to please everyone.

Yaller Dawgs aside, many in the crowd that came to see Lloyd Bentsen Friday didn't come with minds made up. They were there to make up their mind. Some might have, but there just wasn't much persuasive stuff offered.

But the crowd might have gotten a glimpse of things to come. Al Gore was running for office Friday, and his campaign was exciting. The Democrats offered "Bentsen for Sale" in Greenville but the crowd wasn't sure it was buying.

Gore's tub-thumping hit home with the crowd. He woke up the Dawgs, he made the Reagan Democrats pause, and surprisingly, he even drew response from the young professionals (not yuppies, just young professionals) who were window shopping for a message at the rally.

His seemingly unrehearsed, extemporaneous remarks delivered with fervor drew a response from those who were quietly tapping their feet to jazz artist David Sanborn and rock group Inexcess before the politics began.

What happened with Gore? Was his earlier candidacy for president so carefully orchestrated to win Southern moderates his real talent was stifled? Did the primary campaign battles in New York and Michigan suddenly make him a seasoned politician? Did he have a bad day back in January when he breezed through eastern North Carolina? Does he want a Dukakis cabinet post very, very badly?

Or has he reached deep down and found some real leadership, some righteous anger and mixed it with a little maturity?

The Democrats better hope he has done just that. If he has, the party might get a few window shoppers to come in the store.

Beating Costs

Eleven Years Of Energy Management

Greenville Utilities became involved early in load management with its Beat-the-Peak program.

It pioneered with the installation of radio operated switches on home air conditioners and water heaters. When summer electric loads hit a peak — the most expensive electricity — the switches are activated and the units are turned off for a limited period of time. By eliminating the peaks in its own loads GUC saves money. The customer also benefits through a rebate program during the summer months.

That and other load management projects have saved GUC $5.83 million since 1985. There are now 8,842 switches on water heaters and 9,177 on air conditioners — and there is a waiting list of customers wanting to participate.

Now GUC sees a way to drop peak loads in the wintertime. It plans to offer a Beat-the-Peak program to households with heat pumps. In this case the switches will be installed on heat strips in the systems. By turning off the switches selectively by radio for brief periods of time, GUC will be able to reduce the surge of electrical usage on a cold night which sends wholesale electric costs skyrocketing.

Obviously the Beat the Peak programs benefit customer by reducing Greenville Utilities' wholesale electric cost. On a broader scale it means the nation's power generating resources are more efficiently used. If this is done on enough electric systems inefficient power plants won't have to be pressed into use during extreme heat or cold. And, while not much is heard about energy shortages these days, we can be sure the possibility is never far away.

The nation must be energy conscious and we can take some pride in the knowledge that Greenville Utilities began its conservation program in 1977.

Sunday Morning Notes

One of the miracles of the last 30 years for audiophiles has been the progress made in sound equipment and recording processes. From records which played at 78 revolutions per minute we went to 45 rpm and 33⅓ rpm.

Then there were eight-track tapes, then cassettes and now CDs (compact disc players, for the uninitiated.) Along with them have come huge strides in stereo equipment and speakers so that more sound is delivered than the human ear can absorb.

The advancements went right along in the automobile, so that now we have stereo radios that work and cassette players that are reliable. While some may wonder why all this quality is wasted on modern popular music, it should be noted that the new technology has been applied to recordings made many years ago. Not only have many old recordings been transferred from 78s and 45s, but through electronics the original recordings have been enhanced to present day quality.

All this is to report that your columnist picked up an Andrews Sisters cassette recently. Pop it in the car cassette player and the songs that each once took up a whole side of a 78 record now play endlessly until you stop them.

It is superb for trips.

The Andrews Sisters were popular during the World War II years and after. No trio has been more in harmony before or since. They sang the songs of a nation at war. They brought pleasure to streets in every city and byway of America where most families had someone off to war and more than a few had known the sorrow of receiving that telegram which announced a loved one was dead, injured, captured or missing.

The Andrews Sisters style was, well ... jivey, and this at a time when most popular music was soft and dreamy to contrast the madness that was going on throughout the world. They had a reputation for being sensuous, but this was at a time when risque words would never make it in popular music. They would never be played on the nation's radio stations ... and without radio there was no hit record.

The Andrews Sisters also didn't project such a visual image as Marilyn Monroe did a decade or so later. They were not, after all, visual. Mostly their music was heard on radio and juke boxes. They were only seen occasionally by the American public in the shorts that followed the movies. So their sensual projection was due mostly to their voice style which had a way of making any number seem sexy.

Their most explicit lyrics were in "Drinking Rum and Coca Cola" which had its setting in Trinidad. Even in those uncomplicated times most everybody knew what these words meant: "Both mother and daughter, working for the Yankee dollar."

Of course there were many other hits like "Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy", "Bei Mir Bist Du Schon", "Don't Sit Under The Apple Tree" and "Beat Me Daddy, Eight To The Bar."

Anyway at that time the entire nation was being uprooted by the war. We were seeing the first changes of a Victorian society. Perhaps the Andrews Sisters were at the forefront of the musical and social revolution which swept the nation in the decades following the war.

Certainly no one could dream then that their hits, which would have made a stack of 78 records, would be compacted on a tape which could be held in one hand. Nor could it have been predicted that the cassette could one day be played in the automobile — if the automobile of today could have been envisioned.

The Andrews Sisters helped make it possible for a generation to bear up under a war. Their unique style is still available to us in better form than ever before.

Pro-Choice Or Pro-Life: Wobbling On The Plank

Ellen Goodman

BOSTON — It was enough to make the anti-abortion shock troops impale themselves on their pickets. George Herbert Walker Bush, the great white hope of the right-to-lifers, was saying that abortion shouldn't be a political litmus test.

The direct descendant of Ronald Reagan had passed just such a test in the primaries. He'd come out aggressively in favor of a constitutional ban against abortion. The Republican platform itself had passed the same test with flying colors: "The unborn child has a fundamental individual right to life which cannot be infringed."

But now the candidate was sounding dangerously open-minded. Talking about abortion, he said: "Nobody in our party takes a litmus test that says that everybody has to agree on every issue."

This was anathema to the gang that spends days trying to break up rallies for Michael Dukakis. And many of them were already a touch suspicious of the gentleman from Kennebunkport. After all, his politics were conceived in the days when conservatives like Barry Goldwater didn't believe in government intrusion.

Bush had gotten on the constitutional bandwagon in 1980. But now, eight years later, he was admitting, perhaps even bragging, that some of his best friends and key supporters are pro-choice. The campaign's co-chair, Rep. Lynn Martin, is one. So is Deborah Steelman, his domestic policy adviser.

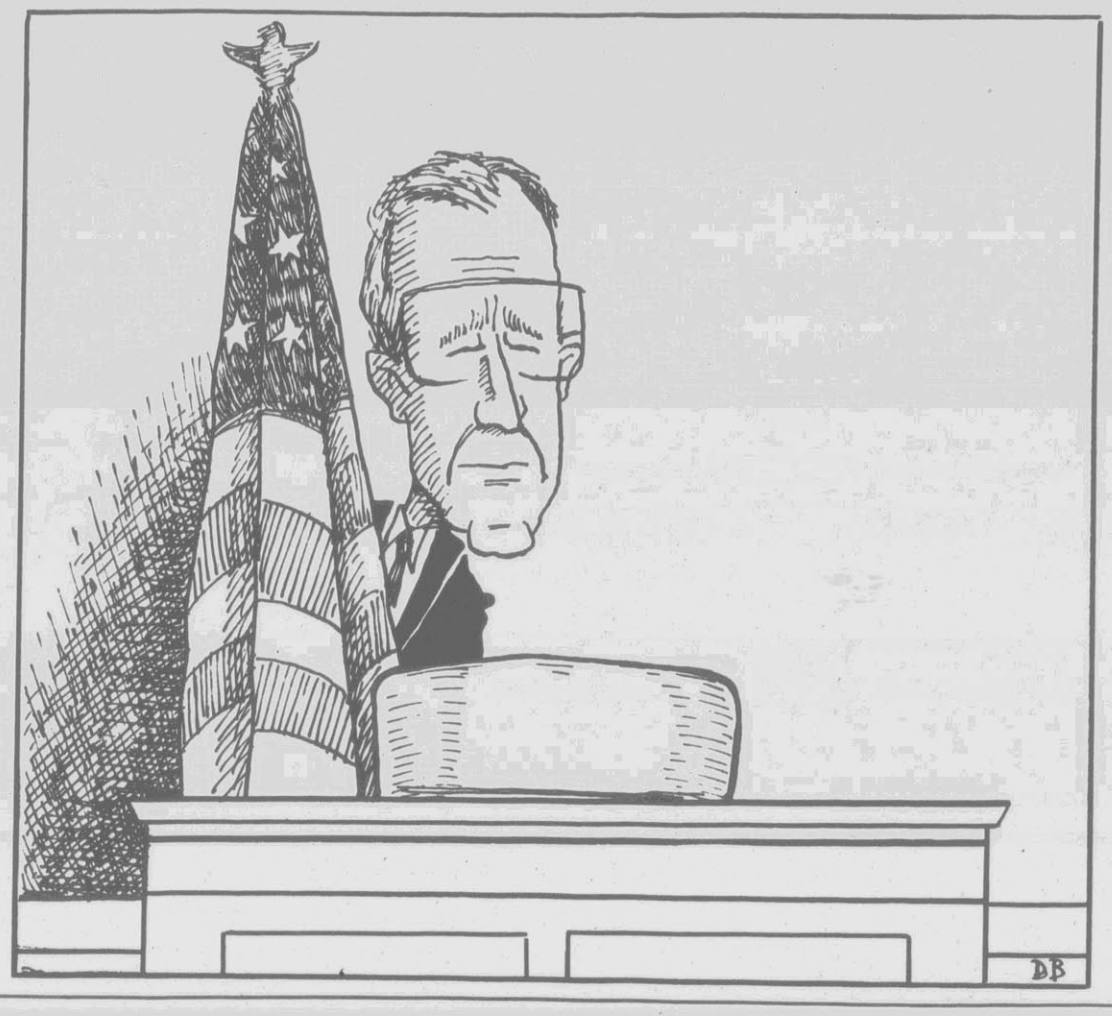

More to the point, the Republican was wobbling on the platform which banned abortion with no ifs, ands or buts; with no dispensation for cases of incest, rape or the health of the mother. In the same interview, Bush suggested that he favored these exceptions.

Was there a waffle afoot? Should the right-to-lifers insist on a urinalysis to see if George would still pass?

What we are into is phase two of the Bush campaign. In phase one he whacked; in phase two he welcomed. He went from immolating Dukakis with the American flag to making commercials calling for a gentler, kinder nation. He went from feeding red meat to the right, to proffering a well-balanced meal to the middle.

The pragmatic patrician can, you see, read numbers. On the matter of abortion, the public attitude is quite clear. Only 10 percent of Americans believe we should ban them all. Even among Republicans, 73 percent believe that abortion should be a private matter between a woman and her doctor. The swing voters both candidates are wooing are solidly pro-choice.

Bush already has the right-to-life voters in his pocket, no matter how itchy they may feel in there. What he wants to do is to appear just moderate enough to appeal to Reagan Democrats. Republican pollster Linda Divall once said that the party goal was to have Democrats say, "Now there's a Republican I can vote for."

Is it enough that Bush has retreated from the rigid right? Kate Michelman, the head of the National Abortion Rights Action League, says no. "We aren't being asked to elect his staff or the majority of Republicans," she says. "We are being asked to elect George Bush, who opposes abortion and favors adoption." This week NARAL endorsed Dukakis.

The bottom line is that Bush believes Roe v. Wade, the Supreme Court decision upholding choice, should be overturned. As the President, the man who chooses judges, he could pretty much assure that it would happen. The part of the Republican platform he hasn't criticized calls for "the appointment of judges at all levels of the judiciary who respect...the sanctity of innocent human life."

Under this rubric, Ronald Reagan has appointed half of all the federal judges now sitting. We are beginning to see those results. In one circuit court this year, an ideological bloc of Reagan judges upheld a law forcing pregnant girls to search out and notify both parents before getting an abortion.

Now the Supreme Court, with three Reagan appointees, hangs uncertainly. The next President will surely have more appointments to make.

So I am delighted that Bush includes pro-choice people in his inner circle. But the question isn't whether there's a litmus test for politicians. It's whether this politician has one — a familiar hand-me-down one — for the courts.

Tension Due To Strategy, Not Personality

Ron Walters

The post-convention conflict between Jesse Jackson and the Democratic Party presidential candidate that occurred both in 1984 and 1988 has not been caused by a quirk of Jackson's personality.

This kind of analysis, all too frequent, not only puts the onus for the conflict unfairly upon Jackson himself, but obscures the more important fact that is the major reason for its recurrence: The two dominant parts of the party coalition at this point have substantially different strategies for winning that undermine any attempt at real unity.

'Since the adoption of key Jackson campaign staffers by Dukakis would symbolically help to knit the party coalition together, their absence is one piece of evidence that the coalition is in trouble.'

This tension is of long standing. The Democratic Party has historically had difficulty keeping the white South within its coalition because of its adoption of a strong civil rights posture. More recently, its aggressive overtures toward the South have destabilized the party's progressive base.

Blacks have been a powerful part of the voting base of the Democratic Party but not of its real leadership, until Jackson mounted credible presidential campaigns both in 1984 and 1988 and further institutionalized progressive politics within the party. The Jackson campaign of 1988 built an effective national political organization that was deployed in every primary and caucus state and that persuaded nearly 7 million people to vote for Jackson. This is a substantial accumulation of political power, which neither Jackson nor his lieutenants want to turn over to Michael S. Dukakis without a quid pro quo. In the normal course of American politics, such alliances wouldn't happen under any other circumstance.

Speaking of lieutenants, in building this political force, Jackson has attracted the usual cadre of staffers and political advisers, and it is also normal that he should attempt to deliver something to them. The "something" has traditionally been a role in the presidential campaign or in the new administration, but, thus far, Dukakis has resisted including them at highly visible levels within his campaign. Since the adoption of key Jackson campaign staffers by Dukakis would symbolically help to knit the party coalition together, their absence is one piece of evidence that the coalition is in trouble.

Another symptom of this problem is the genuine malaise that exists within the black community over the Dukakis campaign. Because black and progressive leaders have not been brought sufficiently into the Dukakis campaign to energize the constituencies they represent, Jackson is in danger of not being able to show very much for his efforts.

This was the logic of the "understanding" between Jackson and Dukakis that was reached at the Atlanta convention but that is now in considerable disarray. The Dukakis campaign appears not to understand that the means of binding the progressive constituency to the party coalition is fulfilling his pledge of "shared management" of the campaign. However, Dukakis may be loath to do this because of the negative signal it would send to "Reagan Democrats."

What this reveals is the fact that the problem of holding together the traditional Democratic Party coalition has come into conflict with Dukakis' presidential campaign strategy of competing head-on with the Republicans for the existing electorate in conservative (mostly white) strongholds. The Jackson alternative has been to suggest the strategy of expanding the base of the party through a massive voter registration program among minorities and progressive whites. As the nominee, Dukakis has a right to choose the strategy that he feels could win, but prudence requires that it conform to the polling data and make full use of the party's natural strengths.

With the black community fully mobilized, an average white vote of about 35 percent would be needed for victory, especially in the South. In 1976, Jimmy Carter's average white vote was more than 40 percent in the South, and the blacks who voted Democratic provided the rest of his winning coalition. This "new math" of Southern Democratic Party politics was validated in 1986 when the same winning coalition returned control of the U.S. Senate to the Democrats. By having previously rejected Jackson's help in registering voters in these states, Dukakis apparently wants to concentrate on increasing the white vote, feeling that the black vote has no option but to go along.

The conflict between Dukakis and Jackson, then, is no simple rub of personalities, but may be expressed as the difference between the strategies of the dominant parts of the party. At present, the Democratic Party's presidential campaign appears poised to carry out both strategies: to compete for Reagan Democrats at the same time it is gathering a $50 million "Victory Fund," most of which will supposedly initiate a national voter registration drive.

It may work, but the hope of doing so is for party leaders to return to the Atlanta understanding between Jackson and Dukakis and to adopt "shared management" of the campaign. If the Democrats lose, what will have caused it, in part, is the attempt of party leaders to follow this schizophrenic strategy — amounting to trying to get the progressive vote for free, while adopting "me-too" Republicanism. Whether this strategy is successful or not, it should be seen as having a decisive impact on the maturing conflict over the future composition and direction of the Democratic Party coalition.

Ron Walters, is a professor of political science at Howard University in Washington, D.C., and was an adviser to the Jackson campaigns this year and in 1984.

About Nothing

William Raspberry

WASHINGTON — The nearer we get to November, the clearer it seems to me: This election isn't about anything.

It is not about peace. Both George Bush and Michael Dukakis promote a strong national defense as a necessary backdrop for progress toward international peace. Both insist that we ought to be ready to defend freedom wherever it is threatened, but neither advocates military intervention in any particular place.

Nor is there much evidence that their peace-through-strength programs would differ much one from another. Even on the controversial "Star Wars," there's hardly a vote's worth of difference between them. Bush is liking it a little less, Dukakis a little more.

The election is not about prosperity. Both candidates promise more services, decent jobs and a balanced budget, all without a tax increase. But neither has put forward anything that could be called a plan for achieving that miracle.

Indeed, they seem to agree that the economy is in pretty good shape right now. The difference between them, as far as I can discern, is that Bush (representing an incumbent administration) says it's in good shape because of Republican policies, while Dukakis (governor of a state with an unusually robust economy) says things will get still better with him at the helm.

It is not even about ideology — at least not in any recognizable form. Bush's vague conservatism is hardly distinguishable from Dukakis' vague liberalism, and both are moving toward the moderate middle as fast as they can without alarming their more ideological supporters.

Both are environmentalists (though their records evoke little evidence of the fact), both adore Hispanics; both respect blacks, though neither seems particularly comfortable around blacks they don't know; both are committed to education, Israel and "competitiveness."

But what do they really stand for that offers a voter a basis for choosing between them? What are the policy proposals that set them apart? Do they have different senses of the limits on what government ought to try to do? Do they have different visions of what America is, and ought to be?

I confess that a part of the reason I don't know the answer to that question is the way the media (particularly television) cover the campaign. But the more serious reason has to do with the candidates themselves. Instead of trying to force the media to pay attention to real issues, both candidates devote their efforts to trying to score under the present rules of the game.

As a result, the electorate is titillated by things that make little real difference: the Jesse Jackson problem, the wrong date for Pearl Harbor, Dan Quayle's stint in the National Guard, the prison furlough that tragically backfired.

But are voters expected to believe that Bush who fought in World War II is less aware of its significance because he blew the date of Pearl Harbor? Are we supposed to believe that Dukakis' veto of a mandatory pledge of allegiance means that this virtual personification of the American Dream is less than loyal?

How would these men govern? What sort of people would staff their administrations? What would be their paths to peace or prosperity or fiscal soundness? What are these candidates about?

The questions may not matter to committed partisans who, unless they are given some reason not to, will always vote for their party's candidate. But for the rest — perhaps the majority, given the tenuousness of partisan loyalties — they matter a lot. And the candidates are doing precious little to provide us with good answers.

It is like watching the school-figure segment of an ice-skating competition where the point (or so it seems to me) is not so much to win as to avoid losing. Reporters and pollsters keep track of points, no matter how irrelevant the manner in which they are scored. The competitors surge ahead or fall behind for reasons hardly anyone can fathom.

When the final tally is taken, someone will be ahead, but it's hard to imagine that it will matter very much which one it is.

Maybe the whole election will turn less on the candidates themselves than on our assumptions about what sort of crowd each would bring to power, or the sort of federal judges and Supreme Court justices each would appoint.

That's important, too, of course. But I can't shake the impression that, at its heart, this election isn't about anything.

Report Says Japan Made Chemical Weapons

By WILLIAM C. HIDLAY
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Japan operated a secret chemical weapons factory during World War II, bombed China with poison gas grenades and tested poison on prisoners of war, including Americans, a new report charges.

The report in the October issue of the Chicago-based Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists also contends the U.S. government knew about Japan's use of chemical weapons but failed to prosecute Japanese officers at the Tokyo war crimes tribunal in 1946.

The report's author, Yuki Tanaka, speculated the U.S. government decided against prosecuting because it wanted to learn from Japan's knowledge of bacteriological warfare.

"The use of chemical weapons (by the Japanese) was covered up by the U.S. government," Tanaka said Saturday in a telephone interview from his home in Australia.

Tanaka, a lecturer in Japanese at the University of Adelaide in Australia, drew on newly discovered Japanese war documents, his own interviews and previously published material to piece together the account, said Len Ackland, the Bulletin's editor.

"I think what you have here is the first full story of Japan's poison gas enterprise and its grim results both on the Chinese and on the Japanese workers," he said Friday.

Tanaka said his research was prompted partly by the Japanese government's long-time insistence that it never used chemical weapons in World War II. Japan signed the 1925 Geneva Convention that banned use of such weapons.

Tanaka said his research showed that Japan built a factory for chemical weapons on Okunoshima, one of dozens of tiny islands in the Inland Sea. To help keep the factory secret, Tanaka contends, the Japanese government erased the island from maps in 1939.

The factory operated from 1929 until the end of World War II, when it was destroyed at the direction of Allied officers. The plant manufactured a variety of chemicals, including mustard gas, lewisite, nausea gas and hydrocyanic acid gas for use against China, Tanaka's report said.

Neither the Japanese nor U.S. governments would respond to the report in the Bulletin, a monthly magazine founded in 1945 and supported by scientists concerned about the implications of nuclear weapons development.

The Japanese foreign ministry would not make an official comment despite repeated calls from The Associated Press. But a Ministry of Education official said, "We have not gathered enough evidence to specify it as a historical event."

The U.S. Defense and State departments also declined comment on the report through several public affairs officers, all of whom refused to be identified.

Atrocities committed during the Japanese invasion of China, which began shortly before World War II, have long been a source of controversy between the two countries. Chinese army records allege that at least 2,000 Chinese were killed and 35,000 injured by Japanese chemical weapons, Tanaka's report said.

Tanaka wrote that in 1983, researchers from Keio University obtained a two-volume report on Japan's experiments with bacteriological and chemical weapons on Chinese, Soviet, American and Polish prisoners in the early 1940s.

The article gave no detail on the tests on Americans but said Chinese were subjected to mustard gas attacks and it quoted research notes on the resulting damage to their skin.

In another test, Chinese prisoners had to drink a liquid form of the chemical; in a third, some of the liquid was dropped in the eye of a prisoner, Tanaka reported. Documents do not say what happened to the prisoners.

In his article, Tanaka contends that U.S. Col. Thomas Morrow, a law officer assigned to investigate Japanese war crimes, uncovered evidence of Japan's use of chemical weapons and wrote two reports about it.

But Tanaka said Morrow "was summoned home abruptly" from Tokyo in the early stages of the war crimes trials, "and the issue was dropped, possibly because the U.S. government was interested in keeping information relating to biological and chemical warfare for its own use."

"My intention was to warn of the danger of chemical weapons," Tanaka said. "So I hope the U.S. and other major countries which are producing chemical weapons will reconsider."

The report also said medical specialists from Hiroshima University have tracked nearly 5,800 former employees of the chemical weapons factory who suffered lasting injuries from working with the substances.

"Cancer of the respiratory organs is particularly high, suggesting a direct link with the inhalation of poison gas," the report said.

One worker "recalled in an interview that the factory was so contaminated that workers had to keep an eye on caged parakeets, which dropped dead when gas leakage rose," the report said.

Paper Says Government To Seek Marcos Indictment

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Federal officials have overcome major legal obstacles in their case against Ferdinand Marcos and it is now likely they will ask a federal grand jury to indict the former Philippine president for fraud, the Los Angeles Times reported today.

However, the indictment is expected to deal only with accusations of wrongdoing after Marcos left office in February 1986, the newspaper said.

The case was narrowed to overcome doubts about whether U.S. law could apply to the deposed president's alleged efforts to misappropriate billions of dollars in Philippine taxpayers' funds, according to anonymous sources cited by the newspaper.

The indictment, anticipated for months, has been delayed by a number of circumstances.

Acting Associate Attorney General Francis A. Keating II expressed reservations at one point about the quality of the case when draft charges were brought before him.

The investigation is now focusing on allegations that Marcos and his wife, Imelda, conspired with Saudi Arabian financier Adnan Khashoggi and others to violate U.S. district court injunctions. They allegedly secretly transferred ownership of hundreds of millions of dollars in stolen art and Manhattan real estate bought with Philippine government funds.

Court records in related civil lawsuits allege that Marcos took control of the funds while he was still in power but used elaborate schemes involving front companies and agents to hide his ownership and liquidate properties after he went into exile in Hawaii.

The inter-agency Police Review Group, which became more prominent in the wake of the diplomatically embarrassing attempt to prosecute Panamanian strongman Manuel A. Noriega on federal drug charges in Florida, helped settle problems with the legal case early in the week, the Times said.

U.S. Attorney Rudolph W. Giuliani in New York, along with his staff, outlined details of proposed criminal charges against Marcos at a White House meeting of the review group Tuesday, The Times said. President Reagan did not attend.

Intelligence advisers are expected next week to offer their opinions on how the case could affect foreign relations.

In a statement issued from the Philippine embassy in Washington, D.C., Severina Rivera, general counsel for his government's Presidential Commission on Good Government, said:

"There has been considerable skepticism in Manila about President Reagan's willingness to approve the indictment of Mr. Marcos. ... If he approves it, Filipinos everywhere will applaud Mr. Reagan and the American system of justice that applies the full force of the law to corrupt dictators who violate U.S. laws."

However, some concern has been expressed that Marcos may flee to Mexico or another country because the indictment is imminent, a source told The Times.

Union Head: Government Softening On Solidarity

By DEBORAH G. SEWARD
Associated Press Writer

CZESTOCHOWA, Poland (AP) — The government said Solidarity has a future in Poland but refused to lift a 6-year-old ban on the East bloc's first independent union federation, a union leader reported Saturday.

"They clearly said, 'Give us time,'" said Wladyslaw Frasyniuk, describing a meeting Friday between Solidarity chief Lech Walesa, Interior Minister Czeslaw Kiszczak and 22 other people from the government, Solidarity and the church.

Walesa meanwhile traveled to this southern city Saturday for an annual workers' pilgrimage and to report to other Solidarity leaders about prospects for legalizing the union.

Walesa agreed to end a wave of strikes last month after the government agreed to talk to Solidarity about legalization. The labor unrest posed the strongest challenge to the communist government since it crushed Solidarity in the 1981 martial law crackdown. The union was banned in 1982.

Frasyniuk, Solidarity leader in in the southwestern city of Wroclaw, met with a small group of reporters early Saturday.

He said Kiszczak informed Solidarity members Friday that Solidarity has a future but told union activists that he could not take a decision on legalizing it now because his hands are tied.

He said alternate Politburo member Stanislaw Ciosek told the meeting the police and army are resisting the push to legalize Solidarity because they "fear this symbol."

"Can we call this a great success? I think not. Success will occur when Solidarity has the right to return to legal activity," Frasyniuk said.

But he said the union "cannot involve itself in interminable discussions, because the people we represent expect concrete effects."

Frasyniuk said Solidarity decided to continue talks even without a firm commitment because it did not want to be seen as being the first to break off the process of negotiation.

After the meeting, Solidarity members had "a feeling of victory," he said. "You could see that the problem of Solidarity was the dominant one, and nobody directly attacked Solidarity."

"We now see that the legalization of Solidarity isn't one single act to grant or not. It is a process," said Zbigniew Bujak, a Warsaw Solidarity leader.

Newspapers on Saturday carried a brief government communique about the meeting and listed those who attended. But there was no confirmation of Frasyniuk's account.

In an unusual move, the Politburo of the Polish United Workers' (communist) Party held a meeting Saturday to review "the current problems of the socio-political situation of the country," the state-run news service PAP said. It gave no further details. The Politburo normally meets only on Tuesdays.

The talks at a government villa outside Warsaw marked the first time a national delegation of Solidarity activists met with authorities and the official trade union alliance OPZZ, which was set up after Solidarity was banned.

Although their union remains illegal, Solidarity members wore union pins during the meeting and were treated with respect by the officials present, Frasyniuk said.

But Andrzej Stelmachowski, a pro-Solidarity law professor who served as a mediator to set up the meeting, said "some bitter things were exchanged" during the six hours of talks. He did not elaborate.

The meeting was to discuss terms for large-scale talks on Poland's future, including the subject of Solidarity and trade union pluralism. The sides agreed that the talks would convene in mid-October.

He was to attend a workers' pilgrimage that annually draws tens of thousands of Solidarity supporters. It was begun by the pro-Solidarity priest the Rev. Jerzy Popieluszko before his murder by police agents in 1984.

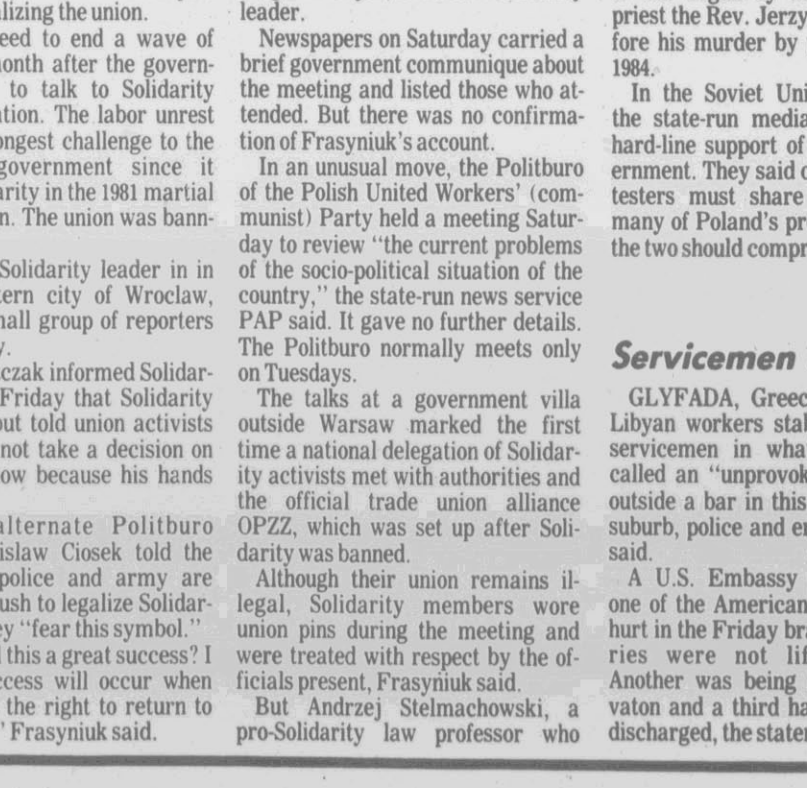

In the Soviet Union, meanwhile, the state-run media softened their hard-line support of the Polish government. They said officials and protesters must share the blame for many of Poland's problems and that the two should compromise.

Servicemen Stabbed

GLYFADA, Greece (AP) — Two Libyan workers stabbed three U.S. servicemen in what U.S. officials called an "unprovoked altercation" outside a bar in this Athens seaside suburb, police and embassy officials said.

A U.S. Embassy statement said one of the Americans was seriously hurt in the Friday brawl but his injuries were not life-threatening. Another was being kept for observaton and a third had already been discharged, the statement said.

Missed Chances Doom Bucs, 17-0

By TIM CHANDLER
Reflector Sports Writer

COLUMBIA, S.C. — East Carolina's football team did the one thing it couldn't do Saturday if it wanted an opportunity to beat South Carolina — it missed scoring opportunities

The Pirates squandered chance after chance to put points on the scoreboard all game long and, simply put, that's what made the difference as 14th-ranked South Carolina defeated East Carolina 17-0 in a game that turned out to be much closer than the final score would indicate.

The Gamecocks, unlike the Pirates, cashed in on the few scoring chances they were allowed by the ECU defense.

And early in the third quarter, the Gamecocks, now 3-0 for the season, struck it rich with one big play, courtesy of a Pirate miscue.

Trailing 3-0 at the outset of the second half, the Pirates, who fell to 1-2 on the season, drove from their own 12 to the USC 6-yard line before Reggie McKinney fumbled on a fourth and one play. Cornerback Stephane Williams jumped on the ball, giving the Gamecocks possession at the 3.

USC quarterback Todd Ellis, who completed 14 of 24 passes for 235 yards in the game, then connected with freshman Robert Brooks on a scoring pass for paydirt. Collin Mackie added the PAT to give USC a 10-0 lead with 9:25 to play in the third quarter.

ECU had managed to move all the way to the USC 6-yard line thanks to the running of quarterback Travis Hunter, fullback Tim James and wingback Reggie McKinney.

James, who gained 82 yards on 18 carries for the day, broke the big play of the drive when he got loose up the middle for 32 yards. McKinney, who totaled 89 yards on 14 carries, added gains of 13 and 12 yards on the drive, while Hunter kept the drive alive with an 11-yard pickup on a third and 5 play at his own 17-yard line.

"I guess (defensively) it was one of those bend, but never break kind of days," South Carolina coach Joe Morrison said. "We didn't slow them down much until they got close to the goal line, plus they missed some field goals for us."

Indeed. In all, sophomore placekicker Robb Imperato came up empty on three attempts for the day, the last of which was a 35-yard attempt at the 13:32 mark of the fourth quarter. The miss negated a 62-yard drive by the Pirates.

Take away the 97-yard touchdown pass by the Gamecocks and the Pirates dominated play in the game. The Pirates racked up 24 first downs and 336 yards in total offense, while USC moved the chains only 14 times and were limited to 284 yards. Other than the 97-yard scoring strike, USC's longest drive of the day was a mere 42 yards.

The Gamecocks managed to tack on an extra touchdown in the waning seconds of the game when Ellis hit Robert Brooks for a 6-yard touchdown with 30 ticks left on the clock. The score was set up after Mike Conway had picked off a pass by ECU backup quarterback Charlie Libretto.

"I wouldn't call it the prettiest win ever, but it was a victory," Morrison said. "Going in to the game, we wanted to control the football...it didn't work out that way for us. But we're happy to get this one in the win column."

The Pirates came out seemingly poised to go for an upset when it held the Gamecocks on the game's first possession.

Following a 31-yard punt by USC, ECU started at its own 48. The Pirates moved to the Gamecock 30 before sending in Imperato to attempt a 47-yard field goal. Imperato's kick came up short leaving the game scoreless.

The Pirates stymied the Gamecocks next drive and took over at their own 11-yard line. ECU once again drove to the USC 30-yard line before stalling. Imperato was sent in once again and his 47-yarder on the first play of the second quarter came up short.

"The decision to go for the field goals felt good at the time," ECU head coach Art Baker said. "But in hindsight, it doesn't look so good. It would have been a big plus for us to go up 6-3 at the half instead of being down 0-3. Imperato has his confidence shattered after today. We'll have to take a look at our kicking situation next week in practice."

Following the second miss by Imperato, the Gamecocks moved in for the only score of the first half as Collin Mackie was true on a 51-yarder with 11:42 to play in the first half.

Ellis helped get South Carolina in position for the score when he hit Carl Platt for a 25-yard pass reception during the drive.

USC moved to the Pirates' 30 once more in the half on a 16-yard pass reception from Ellis to Platt. Platt, however, coughed up the ball and ECU defensive end Mike Applewhite recovered it.

Soviet Woman Wins 1st Gold

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The U.S. men's volleyball team began defense of its Olympic title by rallying to overpower Japan, and the Soviet Union got rolling Sunday as the Seoul Games offered their first medals.

Irina Chilova won the Games' first medal event, the women's air rifle, as Soviets took the gold and bronze.

The curtain rose Saturday on Asia's first Summer Games in 24 years, and while the Soviets captured the first act, a U.S. medal was almost sure to follow closely.

Michele Mitchell of Boca Raton, Fla., and Wendy Williams of Bridgeton, Mo., were in excellent shape to win medals in women's platform diving going into the final round Sunday.

The leader was a tiny Chinese who boldly chose the most difficult dives of Saturday's preliminaries for her three-story plummet to possible stardom.

Janet Evans of Placentia, Calif., favored to win three gold medals here, won her qualifying heat in the women's 400-meter individual medley in 4 minutes, 43.04 seconds, but she had only the third-fastest time in the preliminary heats.

Noemi Lung of Romania had the best time of the day, 4:41.96.

Japan led the favored United States, playing without setter Jeff Stork, rallied from a 10-6 deficit in the first game to beat Japan 15-13, 15-2, 15-2. The Americans seemed to take a little time getting used to Stork's replacement, Ricci Luyties.

The winning shot came on a kill by Steve Timmons, one of the most feared spikers in the game.

Chilova won the women's air rifle with 498.5 points after 10 shots, followed by Silvia Sperber of West Germany with 497.5 and another Soviet, Anna Maloukhina, at 495.8. Launi Meili of Colorado Springs, Colo., was sixth with 493.3 points.

This bustling Asian metropolis of 10 million came to a virtual standstill as the Games were declared officially under way at Saturday's opening ceremonies, a rich blend of Oriental proverbs and high-tech glitz that ushered in the first Oriental Olympics since 1964 in Tokyo.

"There are no people in the streets," Lee Jun-kyu, a student at Seoul National University, said. "They're all at Olympic Stadium or watching television. It's never been this quiet."

Arlene Limas of Chicago won a gold medal for the United States, albeit in the demonstration sport of taekwondo. Three South Koreans also won golds.

Platform diving and shooting were two of five events offering medals on Sunday. A men's shooting medal also was up for grabs, along with one each in cycling and weightlifting.

Also on Sunday:

— The favored U.S. men's basketball team moves into action against Spain, shining the spotlight once again on Danny Manning, who led Kansas to the national collegiate championship last April.

— America's two best swimmers, Janet Evans of Placentia, Calif., and Matt Biondi of Moraga, Calif., begin competition — Evans in the 400-meter individual medley and Biondi in the 200 freestyle. Both are preliminary heats.

After eight preliminary dives, 14-year-old Chen Xiaodan of China led the group of 12 into the finals, using the three most difficult-rated dives of the preliminaries from the 10-meter high platform. Mitchell was second and Williams fourth.

Chen took over the lead with her sixth dive, an inward 3½ sommersault from the pike position, and the warning was plain for both Americans to see.

"The Chinese divers are doing a lot harder dives than they did in '84," said Mitchell, a silver medalist in Los Angeles. "We have to dive consistently and hope they miss harder dives."

China, the United States and Soviet Union held the top six spots in the competition. None of Saturday's scores carries over to Sunday. They only served to determine which 12 of the 20 divers would advance.

In basketball Saturday, Brazil, which beat the United States for the men's basketball gold at the Pan Am Games last summer, beat Canada 125-109 and China defeated Egypt 98-84.

State Defense Keys 14-6 Win

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

RALEIGH — With inclement weather making it tough on both offenses, North Carolina State's defense did something it wouldn't have done a year ago, — it rose to the occasion against Wake Forest.

It was a performance which would prove to be the catalyst of the Wolfpack's 14-6 college football win over the Demon Deacons Saturday night.

'I think we are definitely a better defensive team than we were a year ago," said N.C. State coach Dick Sheridan, whose team dropped a 21-3 decision to the Deacons last year en route to a 4-7 season.

In the first half, the defense bailed out an offense plagued by turnovers and in the closing minutes of the game, strong safety Jesse Campbell saved a touchdown by intercepting a Mike Elkins pass in the end zone with one minute remaining to preserve the Wolfpack's win.

"We're very disappointed," said Wake Forest coach Bill Dooley. "We had our opportunities to put points on the board. Even there at the last, I thought Ricky Proehl was open, but it's just one of those things."

"I had Proehl man to man," said Campbell, a former West Craven star from Vanceboro. "I knew they were going to go to him because he's their money man. I knew if I didn't intercept it it was a touchdown."

And those types of defensive plays were necessary as the Wolfpack missed on four field goal attempts, including getting two blocked.

That left only the big play for N.C. State and quarterback Preston Poag provided it en route to a career-high 254 yards passing.

Early in the third quarter, Poag hit Chris Corders with a 63-yard pass that gave the Wolfpack a first and goal at the Wake Forest four, but the Deacons held on three plays. Bryan Carter then missed the first of his three field goals (with one being blocked) in the second half.

But Poag got the Wolfpack in the end zone with a 70-yard bomb to Danny Peebles with 13:49 remaining in the game. The pass hit Peebles in stride as he beat A.J. Greene, the Deacons' All-Atlantic Coast Conference cornerback. Carter added the point after to put N.C. State ahead, 14-6.

The rain affected N.C. State at the outset as the Wolfpack lost two fumbles in the first half.

"We were just concerned about execution," Sheridan said. "We were inconsistent throwing the ball because of the weather conditions. Preston (though) made two perfect strikes to Chris and to Danny.

"Offensively, we were still not able to sustain our blocks long enough to have a running game."

Wake Forest took the opening kickoff and drove for 58 yards in eight plays for a 41-yard field goal by Wilson Hoyle.

The drive was keyed by a 40-yard pass from Elkins to Proehl on a second and eight at the Wolfpack 20 on the third play of the march. Mark Young followed that with 13 yards up the middle to put the Demon Deacons

Miami Rally Nips Michigan

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Carlos Huerta kicked a 29-yard field goal with 43 seconds left, capping an incredible 17-point comeback in the final 5½ minutes as top-ranked Miami, Fla., beat No. 15 Michigan 31-30 on Saturday.

The Hurricanes trailed 30-14 after Michigan's Michael Taylor threw his third touchdown pass of the game, 16 yards to Chris Calloway with 10:32 remaining. But they rallied behind the sensational passing of Steve Walsh, who completed 11 of 18 passes, including touchdowns of seven yards to tight end Rob Chudzinski with 5:23 remaining and 48 yards to fullback Cleveland Gary with 2:58 left.

Walsh's two-point conversion pass to Dale Dawkins, after the first of those two passes, made it 30-22. But Michigan cornerback David Arnold intercepted at the goal line when Walsh tried a two-pointer that would have tied the score after Gary's touchdown.

Gary also scored on a 49-yard pass from Walsh in the opening period and on a 1-yard run in the second quarter.

Trailing 30-28, Huerta lined up to kick off in place of Edgar Benes, Miami's usual kicker. Huerta squibbed an onside kick which was tipped in the air and recovered by Bobby Harden at the Michigan 47.

After an incomplete pass, Walsh hit Andre Brown for 14 yards and Gary for 18 at the Michigan 15. Three rushes gained three yards and set up Huerta's game-winning field goal.

Miami, 2-0, extended its winning streak to 14 games, and its regular-season unbeaten run to 34 games, with its 20th consecutive victory on the road. Miami hasn't lost away from home since Michigan beat the Hurricanes 22-14 four years ago.

Michigan, a 19-17 loser at Notre Dame last week, is 0-2 for the first time since 1959.

The Hurricanes, who also were ranked No. 1 when they committed eight turnovers in their 1984 loss here, coughed the ball up four times on Saturday. Michigan turned the miscues — two fumbles and two interceptions — into a touchdown and two field goals.

The other turnover, the first of strong safety Vada Murray's two third-period interceptions, halted an 87-yard Miami drive at the Michigan 12 when the Hurricanes were about to regain the lead.

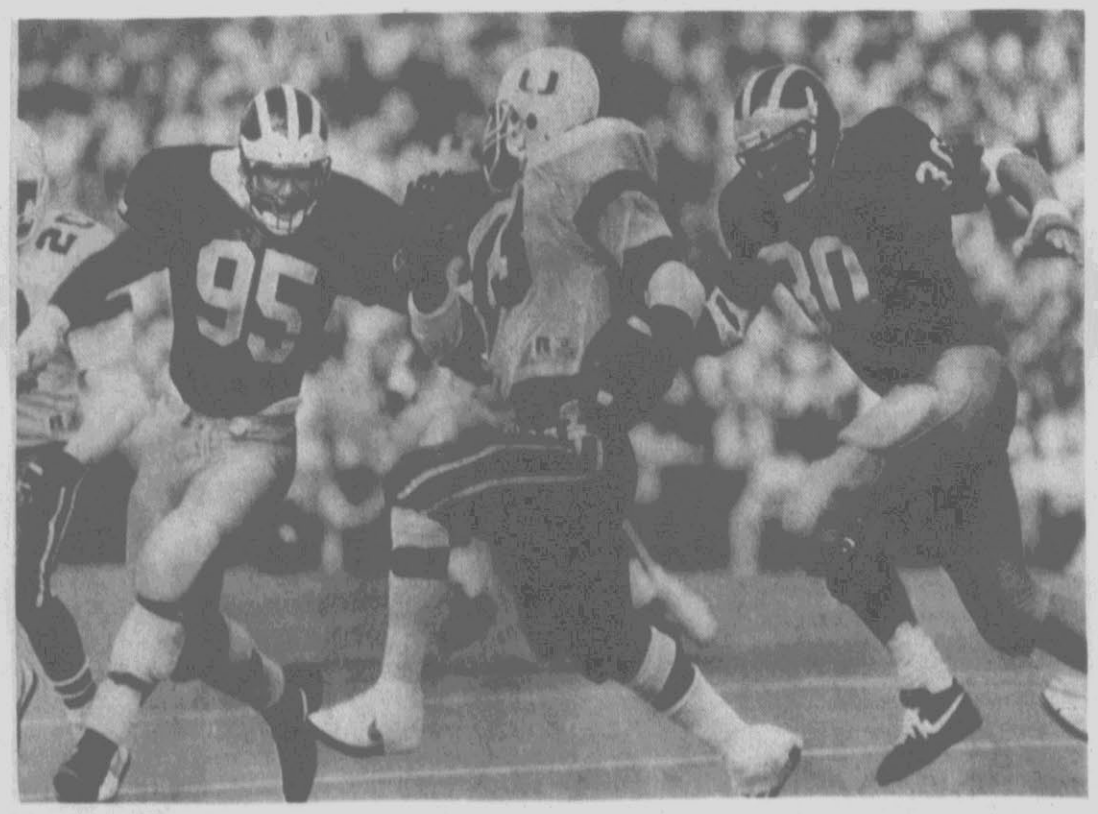

Taylor, who won the quarterback job from incumbent Demetrius Brown in preseason practice, lobbed a 5-yard pass to tight end Jeff Brown with 57 seconds left in the first half to pull the Wolverines within 14-12.

It came shortly after Taylor had to be assisted from the field following an 11-yard run to the Miami 6. He missed only one play, however.

Flanker John Kolesar, who injured an ankle against Notre Dame last week and was listed as doubtful for this game, made a diving catch of Taylor's 18-yard pass in the end zone 33 seconds later and Chris Horn ran for a 2-point conversion that gave Michigan a 20-14 halftime lead.

Michigan made it 30-14 on Mike Gillette's third field, a 29-yarder late in the third period, and Taylor's 16-yard pass to Chris Calloway with 10:32 left in the game.

Pirates Win First Soccer Match

FLORENCE, S.C. — East Carolina's soccer team claimed its first win of the season Saturday in the consolation round of the Francis Marion Soccer Tournament, downing the hosts, 1-0.

East Carolina went into the tournament without the services of number one goalie Mac Kendall, out with cracked ribs suffered in last weekend's James Madison game.

Chris Wall, moved into the goal against Campbell, allowed four first half goals while recording four saves. At halftime, Coach Bob Lust put Austin Batse into the goal and he held the Camels scoreless the rest of the way with five saves.

Saturday Batse had nine saves and recorded the first ECU shutout of the year. ECU's lone goal came in the second half on a shot by Andy Britton, assisted by Clark Payne.

"The team was physically beat going into the Campbell game and we played as well as could be expected," Lust said. "But I'm very happy for the team to get its first win of the year. I'm also glad to have a week's rest before playing (nationally-ranked) American."

Both Batse and Britton were named to the all-tournament team.

The Pirates, now 1-5, play host to American on Saturday and Navy on next Sunday.

Lady Pirates Split Volleyball Matches

The Lady Pirates bowed to Tech, 15-8, 15-5, 15-3, then came back to down Davidson, 15-13, 15-9, 15-9.

FSU Fakes Out Clemson

By RICK SCOPPE
AP Sports Writer

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — The play's called "Punt Ruskie" and it will live in infamy at Clemson.

Florida State used the play — a fake punt — to set up Richie Andrews' 19-yard field goal with 32 seconds left to lift the 10th-ranked Seminoles past No. 3 Clemson 24-21 on Saturday.

The snap came to Dayne Williams, who was one of two up men on the punt. Williams placed the ball between LeRoy Butler's legs and then took off to the right. After waiting 1.5 seconds — he was supposed to wait 3 seconds — Butler went left, racing 76 yards before being tackled at the 1 by Donnell Woolford.

"This was the most pressure that I've ever had in my life," Butler said. "Nervous ain't the word. I didn't have butterflies, I had lizards. I had everything in my stomach. I knew the game depended on me."

Bowden said he put the play in this week and had planned to use it against Clemson.

"We were liable to use it any time in the second half," Bowden said. "We were just waiting for the right opportunity.

"All our offensive coaches, we decided that we were gonna use it now," he said. "If we miss it, they're gonna hit a field goal and win. I just wanted somebody to win the game."

The gamble worked, although Coach Danny Ford said the Tigers were aware the play was in the Seminoles' arsenal.

"The fake punt was a nice call — a good gamble and very successful," Ford said. "We knew they had it, but I'm not sure our people were warned about it this particular time. They were told about it earlier."

The field goal came less than two minutes after fullback Tracy Johnson carried a Seminole defender into the end zone for a 19-yard TD run with 2:32 left. Rusty Seyle added the extra point to pull Clemson even.

But moments later the record crowd of 82,500 stood silent and stunned as the Seminoles pulled off a bit of razzle dazzle to win the first meeting between two top 10 teams in the 46-year history of Death Valley.

The previous attendance high was 82,492 in 1986 when the Tigers took on arch-rival South Carolina.

Florida State is now 2-1, while Clemson suffered its first loss in three games.

The Seminoles were outplayed in the first half and trailed 14-7 after being held to 71 yards total offense to 232 for Clemson.

But Deion Sanders, a three-sport athlete, brought the Seminoles back. Using the speed that brought him MVP honors at last year's Metro Conference track meet, Sanders returned a punt 76 yards to tie it at 14-14 with 11:30 to go in the third period.

After forcing Clemson to punt again, the Seminoles drove 77 yards in five plays to take their first lead on fullback Dayne Williams' 1-yard run with 8:27 left.

Quarterback Chip Ferguson hit three of three passes for 80 yards in the drive, including a 36-yarder to Bruce LaSane. The 6-foot-4 LaSane outjumped 5-10 cornerback Donnell Woolford for the ball at the 1 to set up the go-ahead score on a rainy afternoon.

Florida State finished with 368 yards total offense, led by Ferguson, who hit 18 of 28 passes for 241 yards and one TD.

Clemson ended up with 364 yards, but managed just 132 yards in the second half.

Tailback Terry Allen had a game-high 77 yards rushing, but the Tigers were hurt by quarterback Rodney Williams' inaccurate arm. Williams hit on just seven of 24 passes for 96 yards, including only two completions in 14 attempts in the second half.

The Tigers used their running game to control the ball in the first half, putting together an impressive 99-yard, 17-play drive to take a seven-point halftime lead on Williams' 7-yard run with 2:45 left.

In the drive, which took 7:45, Clemson converted four straight third downs and one four-and-one after Butler downed the ball at the 1 for the Seminoles following Tim Corlew's 40 yard punt.

In all, Clemson converted eight of 12 third downs in the first half, but it took a hook-up between two receivers to get the Tigers on the scoreboard.

Wide receiver Chip Davis took what looked like an end around and turned it into a 61-yard TD pass to flanker Gary Cooper with 5:10 left in the opening period. Cooper beat free safety Dedrick Dodge, who fell down on the wet turf.

The Tigers gained just five yards on their next two possessions, but it wasn't until early in the second period that the Seminoles managed to dent the Clemson defense.

ECU Second In Seahawk

WILMINGTON — East Carolina's men and women both finished second in the Seahawk Invitational Cross Country meet held at UNC-Wilmington Saturday.

N.C. State won the women's event with 18 points while ECU finished second with 69. Coastal Carolina took third with 82, followed by UNCW with 88 and Baptist College with 117.

Sooners Top Arizona By 28-10

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Quarterback Jamelle Holieway rushed for one touchdown and threw a 43-yard scoring pass to Eric Bross to lead fourth-ranked Oklahoma to a 28-10 victory Saturday over Arizona.

Holieway completed 3 of 7 passes for 73 yards and rushed for 75 yards to move into second place overall in total offense in Sooners history.

Leon Perry scored on a 1-yard run and Holieway added a 5-yard touchdown run as the Sooners, 2-0, built a 14-3 halftime lead.

Arizona's Pete Russell recovered Holieway's fumble at the Sooners' 45-yard line on Oklahoma's first drive of the second half, and the Wildcats scored six plays later on Mario Hampton's 9-yard run to cut the score to 14-10.

But Holieway, who played most of the second half when Charles Thompson left the game with a back injury, scampered 34 yards down the right sideline on third-and-two to the Arizona 45. Two plays later Holieway lofted his scoring pass to Bross, who slipped behind two Wildcat defenders and caught the ball at the 5-yard line.

The Sooners' final score came midway through the fourth quarter when Kevin Thompson intercepted a pass from Ronald Veal and returned it to the Arizona 18. Anthony Stafford scored three plays later on a 5-yard run.

Arizona, 2-1, scored on its first drive of the game on Doug Pfaff's 38-yard field goal.

Arizona missed a scoring opportunity late in the first half. Reggie McGill's 48-yard run brought the ball to the Oklahoma 32, but Pfaff's 27-yard field-goal attempt moments later sailed wide to the right.

Louisiana State.....34
Tennessee.....9

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Tommy Hodson passed for 246 yards and three touchdowns as ninth-ranked Louisiana State downed Tennessee 34-9 in a Southeastern Conference football game Saturday.

Hodson, who completed a school record-tying 12 passes in a row at the start of the game, hit Alvin Lee for two touchdowns on passes of 27 and 3 yards and also threw 5 yards to Eddie Fuller for another.

LSU, 2-0 overall and 1-0 in the SEC, extended its regular-season winning streak on the road to 14 games and ended an 0-9-1 jinx with its first victory in Knoxville.

Tennessee fell to 0-3, the Volunteers' worst start since they dropped their first four games of the 1962 season. It was the second SEC setback for the Vols.

The Vols, who crossed midfield only once in the first half, avoided a shutout with a touchdown and field goal in less than two minutes late in the third quarter.

The touchdown came on Jeff Francis' 16-yard pass to Mark Adams with 3:57 left in the quarter, and Chip McCallum added a 27-yard field goal with 2:08 left after Mark Moore recovered Slip Watkins' fumble on the kickoff at the LSU 13.

LSU's other scoring came on a 1-yard run by Watkins and field goals of 22 and 31 yards by David Browndyke.

Hodson, who completed 21 of 31 passes, tied the school record of 12 in a row set by Alan Risher against Tulane in 1981 and tied by Jeff Wickersham against Rice in 1985.

Notre Dame.....20
Michigan State.....3

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Linebacker Michael Stonebreaker returned an interception 39 yards for a touchdown and quarterback Tony Rice scored on an 8-yard run to lift No. 8 Notre Dame to a 20-3 victory Saturday over Michigan State.

Reggie Ho kicked two field goals and tailback Mark Green ran for 125 yards on 21 carries to lead the Fighting Irish's option attack.

Michigan State took a 3-0 lead in the first quarter on John Langeloh's 39-yard field goal, but Ho tied the game 3-3 early in the second period with a 31-yarder.

Tailback Tony Brooks rushed for 37 yards on Notre Dame's first play of the second half, Green carried for 8 and 12 yards, and Brooks added a pair of 3-yard runs to set up Rice's 8-yard scoring run.

Cavs Rally Past Jackets

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Mark Inderlied, who had missed on four of five previous field-goal attempts this season, said the odds finally caught up with him Saturday against Georgia Tech.

"You can only miss so many," Inderlied said after his 35-yard field goal with nine seconds left rallied the Cavaliers to a 17-16 victory over mistake-prone Georgia Tech in the Atlantic Coast Conference opener for both teams.

Thomas Palmer had given Georgia Tech its only lead of the game at 16-14 on his second 47-yard field goal of the game, this one with 47 seconds to play.

But the Cavaliers' Tyrone Lewis returned the ensuing kickoff 41 yards to the Yellow Jacket 49, and Virginia needed only 38 seconds to go 32 yards in four plays to set up the winning score. Wide receiver Derek Dooley, son of Georgia coach Vince Dooley, had receptions of 18 and nine yards in the brief drive.

Inderlied, whose previous misses included one from 40 yards late in the third quarter, had to wait to attempt the winning kick after Georgia Tech called a timeout, during which the Yellow Jackets taunted him from across the line of scrimmage.

"I didn't pay attention to any of that stuff," Inderlied said. "I knew it was good as soon as I hit it. But it was probably closer to the right cross bar than it was to the center."

Virginia coach George Welsh said it didn't matter.

"I'm not greedy," he said. "I'd like us to be a little better, but we're not."

Quarterback Shawn Moore ran for one touchdown and threw for another and John Ford, Virginia's all-time receiving leader, went over the 2,000-yard mark in career yardage as the Cavaliers improved to 2-1 overall.

"We're struggling to get better," Welsh said. "This could help us if we use it right."

Georgia Tech, which has not beaten a Division I-A opponent since November 1986, fell to 1-1 with its ninth straight loss on the road. The Yellow Jackets lost two fumbles, had one pass intercepted, missed one field goal and were penalized nine times for 80 yards.

Coach Bobby Ross said his Yellow Jackets "didn't do everything perfectly, and I thought we stopped ourselves some of the time when we have should have gotten things going."

Moore capped Virginia's second possession of the afternoon with a 5-yard scoring run after a six-play, 45-yard drive.

Georgia Tech, which began four of its eight first-half possessions in Virginia territory, managed only a 32-yard Palmer field goal and trailed 7-3 at intermission.

On the Yellow Jackets' first possession of the second half, Virginia's Ron Carey forced a fumble that was recovered by teammate Phil Thomas, his second of the game.

Georgia Tech moved 35 yards in four plays later in the quarter, with quarterback Todd Rampley hitting Greg Lester on a 24-yard scoring pass that made it 14-10 Virginia.

Palmer's first 47-yarder came with 7:50 to play and cut the Yellow Jackets' deficit to 14-13.

"I told our kids I was proud of them," said Ross, who is in his second season at Georgia Tech. "I thought they played hard and showed a lot of fight. That's what I want our kids to show. I think we finally have that now. I want us to be fighters, and we were that."

Tim Chandler

COLUMBIA, S.C. — East Carolina head football coach Art Baker said at the beginning of the football season that he felt the 1988 club had the potential to be as good as the 1983 team that went 8-3.

Baker may have picked up a believer or two Saturday when the Pirates fell to 14th-ranked South Carolina, 17-0, in Columbia.

The Pirates beat the Gamecocks nearly everywhere except on the scoreboard. Statistically, the game had ECU written all over it. But as Baker said following the game, statistics don't win ball games, points do.

The Pirates have shown now that they indeed can play with a team ranked in the top 20, not just for a half, but for an entire game.

The next goal is to turn the corner and not just be competitive but to win against a nationally-ranked opponent.

The Pirates of 1983 had the same problem. Although they battled Florida State, Florida and Miami to the wire, they were unable to pull out the victory.

The first step is to develop consistency within inside the scoring zone. To pile up over 300 yards of offense in a game and come away without any points is almost a sin.

Once the consistency is developed, the major upset isn't out of the question. And once you get the first upset, the second, third and fourth ones seem all the more easier.

South Carolina's junior quarterback sensation continued to pile up records in the Gamecock record book. Saturday's 97-yard touchdown not only gained a spot in USC's record book but also in the Pirates.

The 97 yard touchdown pass from Ellis to freshman Robert Brooks was the longest pass completion in South Carolina history. The previous record was 83 yards. The pass completion was also the longest play ever against the Pirates.

Ellis completed 14 of 24 passes for 235 yards and a pair of touchdowns Saturday. He has now surpassed the 200 yard passing mark in 21 of his 26 career games.

Ellis also moved into the top position for career touchdown passes thrown Saturday. His two against the Pirates gives him 35 for his career, surpassing the mark of 34 set by Tommy Suggs from 1968-70.

For the year, Ellis has completed 50 of 81 passes for 712 yards and five touchdowns. With no interceptions this season, Ellis may finally be turning into a signal-caller worthy of claiming a Heisman Trophy.

W. Virginia Rips Terps

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. (AP) — Major Harris passed for a touchdown and ran for another score as No. 12 West Virginia, down 14 points only four minutes into the game, rallied to beat Maryland 55-24 in college football on Saturday.

Maryland, 1-1, stunned the Mountaineers with two Mike Beasley touchdown runs, the first for 11 yards after Anthony Brown's fumble on the opening play of the game and the other a 74-yard sprint after a West Virginia punt.

The Mountaineers, 3-0, rallied for 17 straight points while holding Maryland to just five first-half first downs to climb back into the game.

After taking over at the Maryland 41 after a punt late in the first quarter, West Virginia scored in four plays, the last Undra Johnson's 4-yard run. The Mountaineers tied the game 14-14 with a 66-yard drive in nine plays, capped by Harris' 20-yard pass that Keith Winn wrestled from Maryland's Irvin Smith in the end zone.

Charlie Baumann's 39-yard field goal gave West Virginia a 17-14 lead in the second quarter, but Maryland quarterback Neil O'Donnell capped a 72-yard drive with an 8-yard draw for a 21-17 lead with 49 seconds left in the half.

Harris directed an 80-yard drive in five plays and scored untouched from the three to put West Virginia up for good with eight seconds left in the second quarter.

"Florsheim Comfortech® is so comfortable, I might walk to the next game."
John Madden

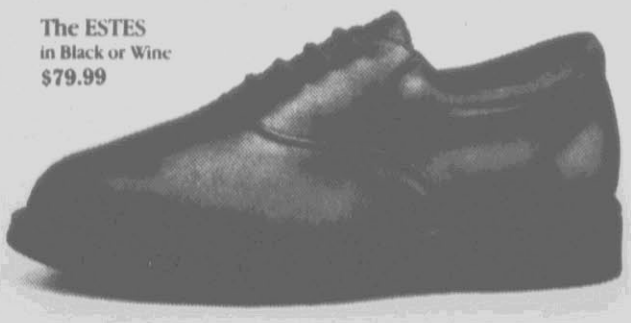

"When it comes to shoes, I'm not the easiest guy to fit. I wear size 14 and I like my comfort. So when they fitted me with a pair of Comfortech shoes, I said this is a whole new ball game. The difference is Florsheim custom-contours these shoes so they follow the natural curve of your foot. And they put in a special insole that cushions every step you take. The bottoms also have millions of tiny air bubbles which means you're literally walking on air. With Comfortech, I'm as comfortable as a 21-point lead with ten seconds left to play."

Auburn Blasts Kansas, 56-7

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — The sixth-ranked Auburn Tigers, picking up where they left off last year, blasted Kansas 56-7 Saturday night as Reggie Slack threw for 290 yards and four touchdowns.

The junior quarterback did all of his damage in the first half, completing 12-of-16 passes. He spent nearly all of the final two quarters on the sidelines as Auburn coach Pat Dye emptied his bench.

The defending Southeastern Conference champions improved to 2-0, while Kansas of the Big Eight fell to 0-2 with their 18th loss in their last 20 games.

The Tigers' domination was complete. They outgained Kansas 680-189, passing for 371 yards and running for another 309. The Jayhawks helped out by losing two fumbles and throwing an interception.

Auburn, which beat Kansas 49-0 last season, wasted little time destroying the Jayhawks again, scoring on its first four possessions.

On the second play of the game, Slack hit a wide-open Lawyer Tillman down the left sideline and Tillman raced the rest of the way for a 57-yard touchdown.

Auburn added three more touchdowns in the opening quarter. Slack threw an 85-yard scoring pass to James Joseph, Alexander Wright hauled in a 35-yard scoring pass, and Joseph ran 76 yards for a touchdown.

The scoring barrage slowed a little in the second quarter. Vincent Harris went over from the 3 and Slack hit Walter Reeves with a four-yard touchdown pass to give Auburn a 42-0 halftime lead.

The Jayhawks' misery continued in the second half. Arnold Snell fumbled the opening kickoff and Auburn capitalized quickly as Harris scored from the 8 for his second touchdown of the night.

Dilweg Leads Duke In Romp

DURHAM (AP) — Anthony Dilweg passed for three touchdown and a career-high 410 yards to lead Duke to a 41-17 victory over The Citadel Saturday in the Blue Devils' home opener.

Dilweg, who completed 19 of 31 passes and threw one interception, broke his previous high of 353 yards set in the Blue Devils season-opening 31-21 victory over Northwestern.

Duke led 20-10 at halftime and broke the game open with two third quarter touchdowns after The Citadel pulled to within 20-17.

Dilweg completed a 5-yard scoring pass to running back Walter Jones to give the Blue Devils a 27-17 lead. On Duke's next possession, Dilweg threw a 65-yard touchdown pass to Keith Ewell with 1:39 left in the period for a 34-17 lead.

Citadel had pulled to within 20-17 after the Bulldogs blocked a Dilweg punt on Duke's first possession of the second half. David Brodsky recovered at the Duke 41-yard line and Vernon Jones completed the drive with a 2-yard touchdown run.

Duke is 3-0 while the Bulldogs dropped to 1-2.

The Citadel took a 7-0 lead after David Matherly intercepted a Dilweg pass in the end zone. Adrian Johnson scored on a 1-yard run to complete an 80-yard, 14-play drive.

Duke tied the score after driving 74 yards on four plays, including a 47-yard pass from Dilweg to Clarkston Hines that kept the drive going. John Rymiszewski scored on a 2-yard run.

The Blue Devils took a 10-7 early in the second quarter on a 24-yard field goal by Doug Peterson. The Citadel tied the score on a 41-yard field goal by Hank Burriss.

Duke went 91 yards in nine plays after the field goal to take a 17-10 lead on a 2-yard touchdown run by Roger Boone. Dilweg threw a 53-yard pass to Hines to set up the touchdown.

Peterson added a 22-yard field goal with three seconds left in the half.

State Defense...

A fumble on its first possession killed N.C. State's first drive at its own 35, but the Wolfpack defense was able to stop the Deacons on a fourth-and-two at the 27 as Campbell stacked up Tony Rogers for no gain.

Later in the quarter, Wake Forest drove into scoring position but lost a fumble, turning the ball over to the Wolfpack at the N.C. State 12.

N.C. State moved out to the 16, but Poag fumbled after keeping for nine yards on a third-and-eight and Warren Belin recovered for the Deacons.

Wake Forest took over again but failed to move the ball. The Deacons had to settle for a 51-yard field goal by Hoyle for a 6-0 lead. The kick was a career best for Hoyle.

N.C. State got its offense going in the second quarter and drove for the only touchdown of the first half.

The Wolfpack had moved to the Deacon 30 early in the second-quarter, only to lose the ball when Poag was intercepted by Brad Benson, who returned the ball to the Wolfpack 48.

But again, State's defense came through, stopping the Deacons on four plays, including a fourth-and-one situation at the Wolfpack 39.

Given new life, Poag connected with Worthen for a 39-yard gain on which Worthen picked up the last 15 with three spinning moves.

Poag eventually got the score on a keeper on the right side from four yards out with 5:17 remaining.

N.C. State had another chance to score late in the half, taking over with 1:19 to go at its own 25. Montgomery came in for Poag and drove the Wolfpack down to the Wake Forest 21, but Mark Fowble's 32-yard field goal attempt was blocked.

"I thought our missed field goals were a factor," Sheridan said. "We couldn't pull away."

Offensively, the Deacons had problems. They rushed for only 41 net yards. Elkins threw for 200 yards, but hit on only 14-34 attempts.

"There were a couple of things that kept us out of the end zone," Dooley said. "We just didn't execute at times. But we also did some good things to keep N.C. State out of the end zone."

Tailbacks Mark Young and Tony Rogers both came into the game averaging over 100 yards rushing. Young managed nine yards on 13 carries while Rogers had 23 yards on three carries.

"Going into the game, we were concerned about their two tailbacks," Sheridan said. "We felt we had to hold them to 100 yards between them and not let them run wild."

The game was the ACC opener for both teams and left the Wolfpack at 2-0 while Wake Forest falls to 2-1.

N.C. State travels to Maryland next Saturday while Wake Forest is at Michigan.

Mississippi St.....35

STARKVILLE, Miss. (AP) — Tailback Tim Worley ran for four touchdowns, including a go-ahead score with 17 seconds to play, to let No. 7 Georgia escape Mississippi State 42-35 in a Southeastern Conference football shootout Saturday night.

Trailing 14-7 after Mississippi State touchdowns on back-to-back possessions, Georgia reeled off 21 straight points and led 35-21 with 8:40 to play before Mississippi State, a 14-point underdog, tied it on the gutsy passing of Tony Shell.

Georgia improved to 3-0 overall and 2-0 in the SEC, while Mississippi State fell to 1-2 and 0-2.

Worley, who rushed for 162 yards in 21 carries, rambled 26 yards on a third down play for the winning touchdown as Georgia was trying to set up a field goal attempt.

Worley also scored on runs of 7, 13 and 16 yards and his 30-yard burst to the Mississippi State 3 early in the fourth quarter set up a touchdown that gave his team a 35-21 lead.

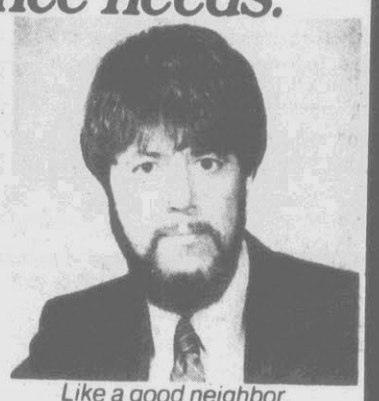

But Shell, playing in his first college game, threw 25 and 16 yards to Jerry Bouldin for touchdowns in a little over four minutes and Mississippi State had a 35-35 deadlock with 3:15 to play.

In all, Shell finished 17 of 29 passing for 266 yards and four touchdowns.

Bosox Win, Tighten Hold On 1st

BOSTON (AP) — Dwight Evans homered to lead off the eighth inning and Bruce Hurst outpitched Charles Hudson as the Boston Red Sox strengthened their hold on first place in the American League East with a 3-1 victory over the New York Yankees Saturday.

The Red Sox increased their lead over New York to 5½ games with their 10th victory in 13 game and second straight over the Yankees. Detroit and Milwaukee both started the day five back.

Hurst, who has lost just once in 14 decisions this season at Fenway Park, allowed only three hits, struck out nine and walked two in improving his overall record to 18-5. He had six complete games in 30 starts.

Hudson, 4-4, was a last-minute replacement for Tommy John, who had a virus. Hudson had allowed only two hits before the home run, but then gave up a one-out double to Todd Benzinger and left with a 3-2 count on Ellis Burks.

After failing to score in a wild fourth that included a walk, two wild pitches and two errors, the Red Sox took a 1-0 lead in a controversial fifth.

New York manager Lou Piniella was unable to see the catch from the dugout, but argued that Reed should not have been allowed to score because third base umpire Ted Hendry had called fan interference.

When his protests were rejected, Piniella announced he was playing the game under protest.

New York came right back to tie the score as Henderson led off the sixth with a double to right-center. He moved to third on Willie Randolph's sacrifice and scored as Don Mattingly grounded out to first.

Greenwell stole second and continued on to third on catcher Don Slaught's throwing error. Then, with Benzinger up, Greenwell broke for the plate.

Benzinger stepped back and Greenwell was trapped. He turned, raced back toward third and was tagged, but Slaught dropped the ball for an error.

Benzinger then walked and took second on a wild pitch. However, Hudson got out of the jam by retiring Burks on a grounder to first and Parrish on a fly to right.

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Terry Steinbach hit a two-run homer and four Oakland pitchers combined on a seven-hitter as the Athletics reduced their magic number in the American League West to four with a 3-2 victory over the Kansas City Royals Saturday.

A combination of four Oakland wins and Minnesota losses will clinch the division for the A's, who lead the Twins by 10½ games.

Eric Plunk, 7-2, who replaced starter Dave Otto with none out in the fourth, allowed four hits and both Kansas City runs in 3 1-3 innings. Dennis Eckersley allowed no hits and struck out four in two innings for his 41st save, keeping him one ahead of Minnesota's Jeff Reardon for the major-lead lead.

Mark McGwire led off with a single and Steinbach connected one out later for his eighth homer. With two outs, Walt Weiss walked, stole second and scored on Luis Polonia's single to give the A's a 3-0 lead.

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Jeff Reardon became the first pitcher in baseball history to save 40 games in both leagues and Allan Anderson won for the 10th time in his last 13 decisions as the Minnesota Twins beat the Chicago White Sox 3-1 Saturday.

Anderson, 14-9, allowed five hits in eight innings, struck out a season-high eight and walked two. Reardon pitched the ninth for his 40th save in 47 opportunities. In 1985, he saved 41 for the Montreal Expos.

DETROIT (AP) — Alan Trammell, returning to the Detroit lineup after missing five days, snapped a tie with a two-run single in the seventh inning Saturday night, leading the Tigers past the Baltimore Orioles 7-3 and keeping their slim hopes alive in the American League East.

Detroit remained five games behind Boston and moved into second place, one-half game ahead of the New York Yankees, who lost to Boston 3-1.

Chet Lemon blew open the game with a three-run homer in the eighth off Doug Sisk, Lemon's 13th this season.

Mets Closing In On East Flag

NEW YORK (AP) — Len Dykstra hit a leadoff home run in the first inning Saturday and the New York Mets reduced their magic number to five with a 6-2 victory over Montreal that eliminated the Expos from the National League East race.

Dave Martinez hit two solo home runs and went 3-for-3 against winner Ron Darling, 15-9, but it was not enough as the Mets won despite getting just seven hits off Bryn Smith and Jeff Parrett.

New York has won four in a row overall and seven consecutive games against the Expos. The Mets can win the division with any combination of victories or losses by second-place Pittsburgh totaling five.

The Expos, using a makeshift lineup that did not include Tim Raines, Tim Wallach or Hubie Brooks, got nine hits off Darling. Raines has an injured shoulder and will miss the rest of the season.

Smith, 11-10, allowed three hits in six innings.

Darling walked one and struck out one in eight innings before leaving with a back spasm. He gave up two hits in each of the first three innings but then settled down. Randy Myers closed.

Martinez, traded from the Chicago Cubs to Montreal in midseason, hit his first two homers for the Expos in 137 at-bats. He connected in the first and sixth innings, giving him six homers this year.

Martinez also drew a one-out walk in the eighth as Darling avoided giving him anything good to hit. Martinez stole second but was thrown out trying to steal third by catcher Barry Lyons, ending the inning.

Dykstra hit several fouls before homering on Smith's 10th pitch. It was Dykstra's seventh homer of the season and seventh leading off the first in his career.

Wally Backman opened the fourth with a walk and Gregg Jefferies reached on second baseman John Paredes' error. Darryl Strawberry singled to center for his 90th RBI and later scored when Dave Magadan's grounder resulted in a rundown.

Kevin McReynolds hit his 23rd homer, a three-run shot, in the eighth.

HOUSTON (AP) — Rick Reuschel scattered 11 hits to win his 19th game and Will Clark drove in his 100th run of the season as the San Francisco Giants beat the Houston Astros 4-2 Saturday for their fifth straight victory.

Reuschel, who has lost just eight times, walked none and struck out two for his fifth complete game. He won 20 games for the Chicago Cubs in 1977.

Robby Thompson led off the fourth with a single against Jim Deshaies, 10-13, and went to second on a wild pitch. Clark followed with an RBI double and scored on Candy Maldonado's single to give the Giants a 2-0 lead.

CHICAGO (AP) — Darrin Jackson drove in three runs with two solo homers and an RBI double as the Chicago Cubs beat the St. Louis Cardinals 6-4 Saturday.

Jackson, starting in place of the injured Rafael Palmeiro, hit his fifth homer in the first, and connected again in the sixth for the first multi-homer of his career.

Jeff Pico, 6-7, replaced starter Jamie Moyer with none out in the sixth and shut down the Cardinals on four hits.

The Cubs scored twice in the sixth to snap a 4-4 tie. Doug Dascenzo led off with a single to left against reliever John Costello, 4-2, and took second on left fielder John Morris' fielding error.

ATLANTA (AP) — San Diego right-hander Eric Show limited Atlanta to five hits over six innings, and Tony Gwynn established a new club career hit record as the Padres defeated the Braves 9-4 in the first game of a twi-night double header Saturday.

Show, 14-11, struck out one, walked one and got the game's first hit with two out in the third inning. The single was the first of four straight hits that produced three runs off Atlanta starter Pete Smith, 7-14.

After John Kruk singled, both runners scored on a double by Roberto Alomar who then scored on Gwynn's triple.

CINCINNATI (AP) — Kirk Gibson's run-scoring single in the ninth inning gave the Los Angeles Dodgers a 4-3 win over the Cincinnati Reds Saturday night.

Coupled with Houston's 4-2 loss to San Francisco earlier in the day, the Dodgers reduced their magic number to seven to win the National League West.

The Dodgers, who lost 1-0 Friday night to Tom Browning's perfect game, jumped on Ron Robinson for two runs in the first inning, chasing the Reds' starter.

Alfredo Griffin and Steve Sax singled, Kirk Gibson walked and John Shelby hit a two-run single.

Kal Daniels retaliated with a solo home run for Cincinnati, ending the Dodger pitchers' string of 31 innings without allowing an earned run.

Cincinnati tied the game at 2-2 in the third when Ron Oester scored on a double play. Oester had singled and took second on Jack Armstrong's bunt single. Barry Larkin then bunted safely down the third base line before Chris Sabo grounded into a double play, allowing Oester to score.

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) — Eddie Johnson's punt block with 1:46 to play set up Ray Tarasi's 37-yard field goal a minute later and 16th-ranked Penn State beat Boston College 23-20 in college football on Saturday.

Johnson's punt block gave Penn State the ball at the Boston College 27-yard line. After gaining six yards on three running plays, Penn State, 2-0, called on Tarasi to kick his third field goal of the game. He scored from 30 yards in the first period and 22 in the third.

Boston College, 1-2, an eight-point underdog, tied the game 20-20 with 6:45 remaining in the fourth period on a 12-play, 72-yard drive capped by Mark Kamphaus' 19-yard pass to Tom Waddle. BC's drive was aided by a pass interference penalty and a personal foul, which allowed the Eagles to retain possession in a punting situation.

Tom Bill completed passes of 16 and 26 yards to set up Tarasi's first field goal. Boston College, 1-2, took the following kickoff and drove 67 yards on six plays, the last 37 coming on a Kamphaus pass to Marcus Cherry with 9:02 left in the first period.

BC boosted its lead to 10-3 on Brian Lowe's 43-yard field goal nine seconds into the second quarter. Penn State tied it 10-10 with 7:45 left in the half on a five-play, 64-yard drive, with Gary Brown bolting 43 yards for a touchdown.

Army.....17

SEATTLE (AP) — Vince Weathersby ran for two touchdowns and Chico Fraley returned a pass interception 72 yards for the clinching score with 1:10 left Saturday as 17th-ranked Washington beat stubborn Army 31-17.

Fraley's interception came with Army trailing 24-17 and the Cadets facing third-and-6 at the Huskies' 33. Receiver Pat Mangin got his hands on the Otto Leone's pass at the Washington 28, but it bounced out of his arms to Fraley, a redshirt freshman, who sprinted untouched down the right sideline for the game-clinching touchdown.

Army, a three-touchdown underdog, cut Washington's lead to 24-17 with 1:25 gone in the fourth quarter on a 6-yard touchdown run by Calvin Cass. On their next possession, the Cadets, 1-1, had a chance to tie but lost the ball on downs at the Washington 2 when Leone was stopped on fourth-and-1 with 11 minutes to play.

Pittsburgh.....42
Ohio State.....10

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Adam Walker ran for 179 yards and three touchdowns, two in the first six minutes of play following Ohio State mistakes, as Pittsburgh routed the 18th-ranked Buckeyes 42-10 Saturday night.

Walker, a junior who played sparingly last season behind All-American tailback Craig "Ironhead" Heyward, scored on first-half runs of 4, 23 and 2 yards as Pitt took a 28-3 halftime lead.

Pitt sophomore quarterback Darnell Dickerson, constantly beating Ohio State's defense to the outside on option plays, scored two touchdowns and rushed for 88 yards on 11 carries as the Panthers beat Ohio State for the first time since 1952. The Buckeyes had won seven of the last eight meetings, including three in a row.

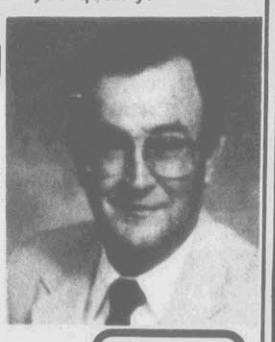

Pitt's 42 points were the most scored against Ohio State since the Buckeyes' 49-42 victory over Illinois in 1980. The loss was Ohio State's worst since a 40-7 defeat to Washington in 1986.

Colorado.....24
Iowa.....21

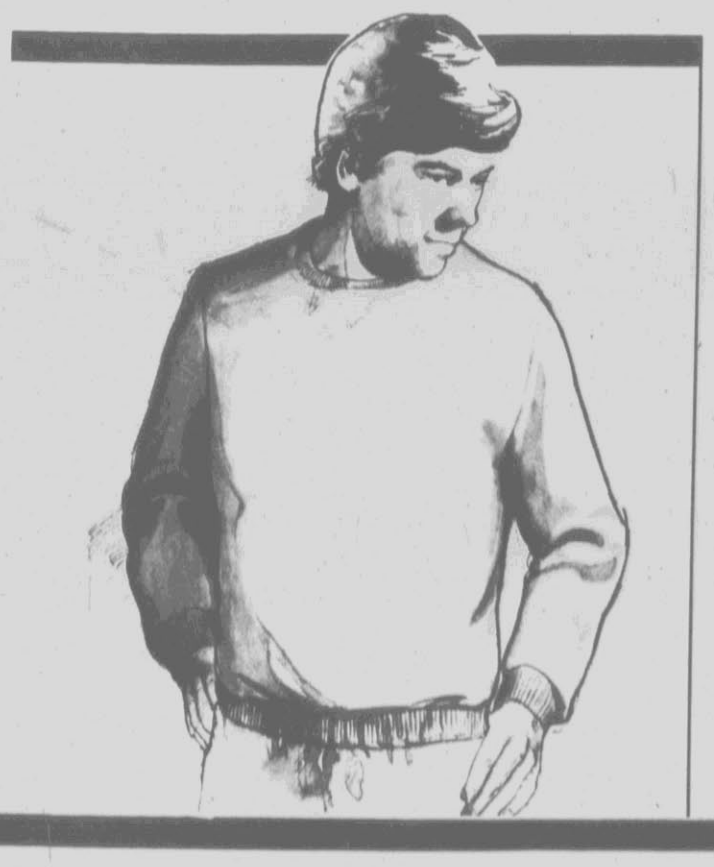

IOWA CITY, Iowa (AP) — Eric Bieniemy rushed for 153 yards and quarterback Sal Aunese ran for two scores, including the go-ahead touchdown, to lead Colorado to a 24-21 college football upset of No. 19 Iowa.

Colorado, 2-0, handed Iowa, 1-2, its first loss in a home opener in six years.

Iowa led 21-17 and was threatening to score with about six minutes to play when Hawkeyes quarterback Chuck Hartlieb fumbled when blindsided on the Colorado 10. Alfred Williams recovered for the Buffaloes on the 15 and Aunese directed his team on an 85-yard, 11-play scoring drive with about 5:30 left to play.

Chargers Race Past Pack, 41-21

By TOM MORRIS
Reflector Sports Writer

WASHINGTON — When Ayden-Grifton went backwards on its first two plays from scrimmage, Charger coach B.T. Chappell was more than a little concerned, but before long his worries were put beside him.

The 2-A Chargers rolled over 3-A Washington, 41-21, thanks largely to a 34-0 halftime lead, in a non-conference high school matchup Friday night.

After taking the opening kickoff, Ayden-Grifton gained nothing on a run up the middle on first down and lost a yard on second down. But quarterback Darryl Moye hooked up with Kelvin Ellison for 14 yards and a first down on the next play and the Chargers proceeded to drive 71 yards in 13 plays to score on a five-yard run by Aaron Harper, who also added the two-point conversion run.

"They scared me those first two plays," Chappell said. "We tried to run a straight power and they stopped it. Then on third down we passed the ball (for a first down) and then we went outside and had some success. The outside running game helped us a lot."

Tony Reeves got around the end twice in the first half, scoring on runs of 65 and 59 yards en route to a 164-yard rushing performance. Reeves also caught a nine-yard scoring pass from Moye. His backfield mate, Harper, also scored two touchdowns and had 107 yards rushing.

"Coach (Chappell) told us if the line did a good job blocking and the backs did a good job running that we'd do well," Reeves said. "The end, Kelvin Ellison, did a good job of blocking (on the two long runs). I have to credit my whole line."

Harper set the tone for the offense on that first drive, which consumed the majority of the first quarter, by rushing for 36 yards on five carries.

"The key was Coach Chappell psyching us up. He told us we had to play four quarters of football," Harper said. "When I saw the ball the first time, I just went off — boom."

After Washington failed to move the ball on its initial possession, Ayden-Grifton was back in business. On a third-and-two from his own 35, Reeves took a pitch left from Moye and went right down the sideline for the score. The conversion pass failed but Ayden-Grifton still led, 14-0.

Washington again went nowhere on its next possession and then faked the punt and tried to run for the first down, but Tyron Lodge lost a yard on the play, turning the ball back to the Chargers at the Washington 37.

Eight plays later, Harper was back in the end zone, this time scoring form three yards out. The conversion run failed leaving the score at 20-0.

On its next possession, Reeves broke around end for a 59-yard scoring run. The conversion attempt failed to leave the Chargers ahead, 26-0.

Washington quarterback Brian Jones was intercepted by Kenny Spruill on the Pam Pack's next play from scrimmage and that led to the nine-yard scoring pass from Moye to Reeves. James Woodard ran in the two-point conversion to close out the first half scoring.

"I wish I knew," Hanna said. "We just got beat. They won the line of scrimmage on both sides. That told the tale. They sealed the ends and did a good job reading their blocks. Their speed and quickness caused problems for us defensively."

The Pam Pack had failed to even get a first down until the final two-and-a-half minutes of the half and by then the matter was almost academic.

But Washington improved its play after halftime, as the Pam Pack took the second-half kickoff and drove 65 yards for a four-yard scoring run by Damien Moore.

But Ayden-Grifton countered with a long scoring drive of its own on the next possession, with Moye getting the touchdown on a two-yard keeper. George Fuller added the point after to make it 41-7 with 3:07 remaining in the third quarter.

Moore added a one-yard scoring run midway through the final period and Washington closed out its scoring with a nine-yard touchdown pass from Davis to David Williams with 5:47 remaining.

Washington tried to get the ball into the hands of speedy wide-receiver Joe Randolph, who had over 100 yards rushing and receiving last week, but other than a 24-yard reception late in the game and a 55-yard punt return for a score that was called back, he was held in check.

"They were trying to mix it up," Chappell said. "You look at what's happened to us. Conley beat us on one long pass play. Wallace-Rose Hill set up a touchdown with a pass play. Maybe they felt we were weak defensively. I thought (defensive backs) David Dixon and Kenny Spruill both did a good job. They had thrown it to him five or six times."

Students In Riot

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Riot police dispersed and beat radical students who staged an anti-Olympic protest in the heart of Seoul Saturday and about 20 protesters were arrested.

Students later held a rally at Korea University in the north of the city and burned an effigy painted with an American flag in the shape of a nuclear bomb.

Some 200 students shouting anti-Olympic slogans tried to march through Seoul's main shopping district toward Myongdong Cathedral to protest the opening Saturday of the Games. The brief protest was held about 10 miles (16 kilometers) from the Olympic venues.

Scores of riot police charged the march after it had gone about 150 yards and roughly dispersed the protesters.

Riot police punched and kicked protesters and arrested about 20 who were forced into a bus and taken away. Others protesters fled as police chased them.

It was the first protest staged in the city center in several weeks. Protesters did not attempt to fight police.

About 300 students later staged an anti-U.S protest at Korea University. They denounced the South Korean and U.S. governments and demanded the Olympics be shared with communist North Korea.

Sunday Notes:

HTS Is A Valuable Commodity For ECU

East Carolina will have five of its football games broadcast on a tape-delay basis this season by Home Team Sports, but the package is more exposure-oriented than financially rewarding.

And for a team that needs all the exposure it can get, there is no discounting the value of this deal.

As it is now, ECU gets very little coverage in its own state. Each week, fans of the state's ACC teams get to see a game of the week in addition to the national coverage by ABC, CBS, NBC, WTBS and ESPN.

There is no discounting that the Bucs' sub-par record has had a great deal to do with this. But that's what makes the HTS telecast that much more important: teams with not-so-stellar records still get some TV exposure.

The last time ECU appeared on a major network was Thanksgiving evening 1986; the Bucs lost at Miami 36-10. Other than the HTS, the only way to get a glimpse of the Pirates has been to buy a ticket.

"You are talking about 1.2 million subscribers," said Dave Hart, director of athletics at ECU. "Any realization of dollars would be nominal. We don't see any revenue (from the broadcasts), but we are interested in the exposure."

ECU also is involved with HTS through the Colonial Athletic Association. HTS. These games are not on tape-delay. Each broadcast generates approximately $30,000 for the conference. In addition, HTS has allocated six minutes of commercial time on each basketball broadcast to the CAA to sell in the way it sees fit.

A Week Off For The Heels

While most of the area college football teams headed into action Saturday, North Carolina had the weekend off before taking on Louisville at home Sept. 24.

The Tar Heels are 0-2, coming off losses to nationally-ranked South Carolina (31-10) and Oklahoma (28-0). It's hardly the stuff dream seasons are made of, but the team isn't in bad shape.

First-year head coach Mack Brown appears to be on the right track after replacing Dick Crum.

He inherited a team short on experience or depth. Add in a late recruiting start and a tough early-season schedule (Oklahoma, USC and Auburn in the three of the first four weeks) and it's clear that the new coach wasn't in the best of situations.

Still, the Tar Heels aren't in that bad of shape. Their inexperience showed in the two losses, but even in the Oklahoma game, there were encouraging signs.

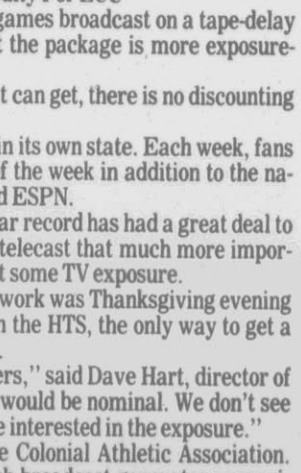

First, the offense, when Jonathan Hall is in the game, shows a true option attack. Hall, who ran for 44 yards on 10 carries, is still recovering from shoulder surgery which forced him to miss all of last season, so if his passing comes around the offense could be in good hands.

In addition, the Tar Heels also showed something that was sorely lacking in year's past — innovation. They opened the game against the Sooners in a three-wide receiver formation and also used a one-back set and moved tailback Torin Dorn into a wingback spot.

Defensively, UNC showed a lot of movement along the defensive line, shifting in and out of the gaps, trying to give the opposition a new look. Sure, they had their problems. They suffered a great many missed assignments and often looked helpless against the Sooners' wishbone offense. They'll have two weeks to work out some of the kinks. If they can, success is possible.

If they can't, there'll be a lot of empty seats in Kenan Stadium in November.

Another encouraging site at the game was the high school coaches section. Brown brought it back after it was done away with during the Crum era. Brown has a task trying to re-establish a positive link with the prep coaches. It was an area which haunted Crum during the end of his tenure.

Mack Brown

For the last few years, Clemson and USC have been able to consistently sign some of the state's top prospects. That seems to be changing now. With Bill Dooley at Wake Forest, Dick Sheridan at N.C. State and now with Brown, the ACC schools are trying to regain the state as its own recruiting pool.

But all things aside, the real test for UNC lies just ahead.

With the first two games out of the way, the Tar Heels now have a second season. After Louisville, UNC has a road game at Auburn before starting the ACC season against Wake Forest Oct. 8.

By then, the only determinant of success or failure will be on the field.

'Bama, A&M Postponed

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Texas A&M has agreed to postpone Saturday's game with No. 13 Alabama after the Tide said it would not come to Texas, an A&M spokesman said.

Aggies coach Jackie Sherrill talked with Alabama officials on Friday afternoon after Alabama athletic director Steve Sloan announced the postponement without A&M's knowledge earlier in the day, citing travel problems caused by Hurricane Gilbert.

Sherrill was unsuccessful in changing Alabama officials' minds.

"During my conversation with coach Bill Curry and athletic director Steve Sloan, they said it was their decision not to bring their traveling party due to advice from experts and the advice of Delta Airlines," said a prepared statement from Sherrill, who also is A&M's athletic director.

But the statement also indicated Sherrill thought the Tide should have made a stronger effort to play the game as scheduled.

"Our experts and our meteorologists have different opinions than Alabama's," Sherrill said. "I'm sitting here looking at blue skies, and I tried to take steps to bring Alabama's team into College Station today, and then if the weather should take a turn for the worse — if the situation should become dangerous — we would cancel the game."

Officials from both A&M and ESPN, which had planned to televise game, were upset at Alabama's decision because chances of rain had greatly diminished when the hurricane's path didn't turn toward the north, said an A&M source, who asked not to be identified.

Scores of Tide fans and some Alabama sportswriters, already in College Station, were checking out of hotels and preparing to leave.

"They're pretty upset," Killian said. "They've come all this way and have nothing to do."

The game has been rescheduled to Dec. 1, a Thursday. ESPN said it would show the rescheduled game live.

"There is significant risk involved in getting our people in and out of College Station," Sloan had said in announcing the postponement earlier. "As much as we would like to play, we cannot guarantee that the hurricane will not veer in our direction and endanger the lives of our student-athletes and travel party."

The storm, which earlier was one of the most powerful on record, was heading toward landfall late Friday.

The Dec. 1 date is six days after Alabama plays cross-state rival Auburn in Birmingham, and seven days after the Aggies play state rival Texas.

Viking Defense Sparks 13-0 Win

Whoa, There!

Farmville Central's Mack Davis grabs the jersey of D.H. Conley runner Tyrone Turnage (14) as Jaguar Reggie Barrett (85) closes in to help make the tackle Friday night at Farmville. Turnage rushed for 116 yards as the Vikings took a 13-0 victory in the game. (Reflector Photo by Shannon Wolfe)

FARMVILLE — When D.H. Conley's offense couldn't drive the ball into the end zone Friday night, the defense gave it to them up close for a touchdown and two field goals as the Vikings topped cross-county rival Farmville Central, 13-0.

The Vikings spent a lot of time during the evening on Jaguar ground, but never were able to push the ball in without help from the defense.

A blocked punt led to the only Conley touchdown, a two-yard plunge by quarterback Scott Seymour, while Andy Fassett's two field goals, of 22 and 32 yards, were set up by a fumble recovery at the Jaguar eight and a pass interception run back to the 18.

Otherwise, Conley was all over the scoring zone, but just couldn't get past its own mistakes.

"We were in control of the football game for a change," Viking coach Steve Craft said. "Farmville Central has a good, solid team that was well-prepared, and I'm not taking anything from them.

"But we stopped ourselves. The outcome should have been much different but for our own mistakes. But I'm happy with the win. We're young and that's the kind of stuff we have to expect."

Craft said that the Vikings needed the win.

"Young kids don't take criticism well," the coach said. "But when you win, you are able to point out their mistakes easier. I think we improved tonight and that's all I ask."

Not that Farmville didn't have an opportunity or two itself. Although they penetrated only to the Conley 46 in the first half — their only venture past midfield — the Jags had the ball at the Viking 38 in the final period, trailing only 10-0 with plenty of time left, only to be intercepted. Later, they drove to the Viking 14 before fumbling the ball away.

"I thought we made a courageous effort out there," Farmville coach Dixon Sauls said. "Conley played well and took advantage of our mistakes."

Farmville, which has already been plagued with injuries, added more to its list tonight. Second string quarterback Mack Davis, who started the game, went down early, as did fullback Billy Hardison. Third string quarterback Jeff Tyson was already running at tailback so fourth-stringer Lamont Parker came on to take the reigns, completing three of five passes in the second half.

"We've got a lot of people hurt but that's no excuse," Sauls said. "We just have to try to do the best we can. We still had the chance to win the game but make mistakes in our protection. Still I have to give Conley credit."

Craft was upset over Conley's six fumbles, three of them lost, and five penalties that totaled 62 yards, but he blamed that on the youth of the team.

Nevertheless, they served to kill Conley scoring opportunities.

Conley's first possession saw the Vikings march from their own 35 to the Farmville 37 before they failed to pick up a first down.

Then, after getting it back on a punt at their own 38, Conley immediately got into good field position once more when Tyrone Turnage went around his left end for 50 yards to the 15. On the next play, however, Conley fumbled it away.

Conley held once more and the defense gave it back when Junior Farrow led a charge that blocked Kevin Wade's punt, turning it over to the Vikings on the two-yard line.

On the first play, Seymour sneaked over for the score and Fassett's kick made it 7-0 with 3:47 left in the half.

A poor punt gave Conley one more chance before halftime. Taking over at the Farmville 38, Conley got 16 yards from Turnage before fumbling it away once more at the 18.

Conley got the ball back early in the second half on another fumble recovery at the Viking 47. Seymour hit Hal Conger for 35 yards on a quick toss over the middle from the 36 (after a penalty), carrying to the Farmville 29. Turnage added 17 more to the 12 and a penalty pushed it five more to the seven.

But once again, Conley fumbled it away, only to get it back two plays later on another Jaguar fumble.

Taking over on the eight, Conley gained four, then was penalized 15 yards for a personal foul. Conley got back to the five on third down, and elected to go with Fassett's foot and he made the 22-yarder good with 3:14 remaining in the third for a 10-0 lead.

After an exchange of punts, Farmville had the ball in great position at the Conley 38, but Parker was intercepted by Terry Williams who returned it to the Farmville 18, setting up Fassett's second kick, a 32-yards. Conley just missed a touchdown when Seymour hit Conger all alone, but he was ruled to have stepped out of the end zone's side before making the catch.

Conley then led, 13-0, with 5:54 left in the game.

Farmville suddenly began to hit on the pass and marched from its own 47 following a 37-yard kickoff return by Anthony Foreman. But once again, Farmville fumbled it away after reaching the Conley 14.

Turnage led the Conley ground attack with 116 yards on 12 carries.

The Vikings open Coastal Conference play at home against Havelock on Friday, while Farmville travels to South Lenoir to open its conference slate.

BETHEL — North Pitt scored two touchdowns in the second quarter to take the lead for good and then held off a late charge by Roanoke to gain a 22-14 non-conference high school football victory Friday.

North Pitt took the lead early on when Billy Hardison scored from six yards out in the first quarter and Reggie Daniels added the two-point conversion run for a 8-0 lead.

Roanoke's Bernard Hudgins one-yard scoring run later in the period pulled Roanoke within 8-6, but North Pitt then took control of the game in third quarter.

Hardison connected with William Morning on a 17-yard scoring pass and Dave Sawyer's kick made it 15-6.

Roanoke pulled within 15-14 midway through the third quarter when halfback James Williams lateraled to Bob Harris who hit Joseph Floyd for a 36-yard scoring pass.

North Pitt added an insurance score late in the period on an eight-yard run by Malcom Wiggins that provided the final margin. Sawyer again added the point after.

Roanoke had the ball at the North Pitt 17 but misfired on three consecutive pass attempts in the final minute.

Michael Blow had 13 carries for 80 yards to lead North Pitt. Pender Locke had 81 yards off of nine carries to top the Redskins.

North Pitt moves to 2-2 on the season and returns to action Sept. 30 against Ayden-Grifton.

CHOCOWINITY — North Edgecombe, led by the running of Larry King and the passing of Orlando Whitaker, rolled up a 52-0 Tobacco Belt Conference football victory over Chocowinity Friday night.

King scored three times while Whitaker passed for two touchdowns as the Warriors established themselves as one of the favorites in the TBC race.

North Edgecombe completely throttled the Indians, holding them to only eight yards in total offense.

Whitaker got the action started in the first period with a 25-yard touchdown pass to Duane Underhill. King then added the first of his touchdowns on a 24-yard run. Kelvin Lyons kicked the PAT following each score for a 14-0 lead at the end of the opening quarter.

North Edgecombe added three more scores in the second period, running its lead out to 33-0 at intermission. King scored on runs of three and 12 yards to account for two of them. Martin Williams added the other, returning an interception 51 yards.

SNOW HILL — Williamston High School, which came up on the short end of the score in its first two outings, upset Greene Central, 7-6, in a non-conference football game Friday night.

The Tigers scored midway through the second quarter and made good on their extra point, then watched the Rams come right back and have the chance to tie it up, only to fall short.

After that, it became a defensive struggle.

Greene Central had the first scoring opportunity in the game, recovering a fumble at the Tiger 19 shortly after the opening kickoff. But the Rams failed to pick up a first down and turned it back.

Early in the second period, Williamston took over at the Tiger 37 after a punt and drove in nine plays. A holding penalty gave the Tigers one first down and Guy Spruill ran 15 yards on the longest play of the series.

Finally, with 7:25 showing, Spruill went over from eight yards out and Chris Coudriet kicked the extra point for a 7-0 lead.

Following the kickoff, the Rams barreled back in just 10 plays, marching 70 yards. Quarterback Kris Radford completed a 25-yard pass to Wes Suggs on fourth and five at the 29 to set up Anthony Dupree's four yard touchdown run with 2:30 remaining in the half.

On the extra point, a bad snap forced a scramble and a pass attempt fell short.

Neither team threatened again in the game.

Reds' Browning Has Perfect Game

CINCINNATI (AP) — Tom Browning didn't think about his earlier brush with a no-hitter when perfection was within his grasp.

There was no time to dwell on either the past failure or future fame.

The Cincinnati Reds' left-hander blocked out the distractions and threw a high fastball past pinch-hitter Tracy Woodson to complete the 14th perfect game in major-league history Friday night, a 1-0 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

The fast-working Browning had come within two outs of a no-hitter in San Diego on June 6, only to have Tony Gwynn break it up with a single. It stood as one of six no-hitters broken up in the ninth inning in the majors this season.

"That was way back. I didn't think about it," Browning said. "I threw the ball much better tonight than in San Diego.

"I knew I had a no-hitter going into the eighth. I just kept talking to myself, saying what I need to do ... to maintain my composure, to move the ball in and out."

He did that all game long, and he did it perfectly.

"His concentration was intense the entire time," pitching coach Scott Breeden said. "He had the type of control that he could put the ball where he wanted. As a result, he didn't make any mistake pitches."

"You kind of just want to sit and watch. It's really something to dream about," said Dodger pitcherr Tim Belcher, who threw a three-hitter but lost on an unearned run. "Sure I wanted to watch it. I'm a great baseball fan and it's a part of baseball history."

Baseball history will show Browning's effort was the first no-hitter in the majors since Milwaukee's Juan Nieves beat Baltimore on April 15, 1987. The last perfect game was by California's Mike Witt against Texas on Sept. 30, 1984.

The last perfect game thrown in the National League was by the Dodgers' Sandy Koufax on Sept. 9, 1965, a 1-0 victory over Chicago. Browning's perfect game was the first in the Reds' 119-year history and the first no-hitter since Tom Seaver's on June 16, 1978, against St. Louis at Riverfront Stadium.

Browning had trouble grasping the magnitude of his accomplishment.

"It hasn't sunk in yet. It's hard to believe it happened," he said, champagne dripping from his hair. "It's hard to believe nobody got a hit."

Nobody even came close to getting on base on this night, which started ominously.

The game was delayed for two hours, 27 minutesd by rain. The showers lifted, and Browning opened the game by retiring Alfredo Griffin on a fly out — one of only nine balls hit into the outfield.

Browning, 16-5, struck out seven and didn't go to three balls on any batter. He threw 21 first-pitch strikes to the 27 batters he faced.

"He had great stuff tonight," Manager Pete Rose said. "He threw it where he wanted, when he wanted. He was in total control."

He didn't need any close plays to save him, either. The only ball that required an out-of-the-ordinary effort was a chopper down the third base line in the fifth by Mike Marshall. Chris Sabo backhanded the ball and threw Marshall out by a half-step.

"It wasn't that close," Sabo said of the play. "I had it all the way. As soon as it was hit, I thought I could get it."

For a while, Browning was locked in a no-hit duel with Belcher, 10-5, who allowed just one walk over the first 5 2-3 innings. Barry Larkin doubled into the right-field corner with two out in the sixth and scored an unearned run when Sabo grounded to Jeff Hamilton and the third baseman's throw to first was in the dirt, eluding Mickey Hatcher for an error.

It was the first run allowed in three games by the Dodgers, who haven't given up an earned run in 30 innings.

"When I lost my no-hitter, I said to myself, 'There's a lot of time left,'" Belcher said.

Browning wasted no time in nailing down his eighth victory in his last nine decisions. He coasted into the ninth, and got Rick Dempsey on a fly out to the warning track in right field to open the inning.

Steve Sax then grounded up the middle to Larkin, and the shortstop easily threw him out.

The crowd of 16,591 stood and screamed as Browning went to a 2-2 count on Woodson, who brought an 0-for-11 streak to the plate. Catcher Jeff Reed then called for an inside fastball, Browning's 102nd pitch of the game.

"He wanted a pitch in. I just let it do," Browning said. "I didn't want to get it down the middle."

No. Ones Roll In Friday Games

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

Playing its second game in a week, top-ranked Garner grabbed a firmer hold on first place in The Associated Press 4-A football poll with a 25-14 victory over Cap Nine rival and eighth-ranked Raleigh Millbrook Friday night.

Garner's triumph was the closest game of those played by the No. 1 teams in this week's polls. In the 3-A poll, No. 1 Burlington Cummings outran High Point Central 51-31 Thursday night. Wallace-Rose Hill trounced South Robeson 51-7 to help maintain its hold on the 2-A top spot, and Murphy went out of state to keep its No. 1 position in 1-A, claiming a 24-0 victory over Union Co., Ga.

Chris Dorman scored three touchdowns and Garner executed the old hook-and-ladder play for another score to lead the undefeated Trojans, also the reigning state chanpions, to their 19th straight victory.

Dorman scored on runs of 10, 14 and 2 yards and quarterback Levi Beckwith completed eight of 13 passes for 142 yards. Beckwith's pass to Henry Bagwell was lateraled to Robert Hinton for a 41-yard scoring play in the first half.

A key to the game, however, was a defensive play midway through the fourth quarter, when a power dive by Millbrook's Scott Fuchs was stacked up by Garner's Keith Evans at the Garner 20. Evans was considered doubtful for the game because of a shoulder injury.

"To me, that was the biggest play of the game," Garner coach Hal Stewart said. "Everybody knows that they have a great passer and if they could have gotten a little, it would have been tough. Stopping them there was the game."

The game was marked by a lot of penalty flags. Garner was hit with eight unsportsmanlike conduct or personal foul penalties and Millbrook had three. Garner was penalized 16 times for 182 yards and Millbrook was flagged 11 times for 110.

"This team is like their coach," Stewart said. "I ain't pretty and neither was this game. But the win was a very big one for us. The kids played hard. Millbrook is an excellent team, but we found a way to win."

Mac Stout kicked a 27-yard field goal with eight seconds left to give Page another one of its patented last-second victories. Stout got his chance at the heroics when Chad Southall made a diving catch of Lemont Cheek's desperation pass, a 39-yard play that helped set up the field goal.

"He said 'Coach, I know I can do it! I know I can do it.' I told him I knew he could, too!" Page coach Marion Kirby said. " ... I could see he was hitting it pretty well in warmups. I knew he was going to make it."

Richmond County scored 27 points in the second quarter to roll to its fourth victory. Mike Thomas scored one touchdown and passed for another, the latter an 82-yard play to Keith Altman.

Scott Melton threw a 13-yard halfback option pass to Brian Craig 31 seconds before halftime and Jimmy Sziksai kicked a 39-yard field goal in the fourth quarter to help raise Reynolds to 4-0.

Melvin Smith rushed for 73 yards and three touchdowns to pace McDowell to its fourth victory this season. Smith's 12-yard touchdown run with 4:38 left before halftime helped McDowell rally from an early 12-point deficit to take the lead for good.

Fayetteville Smith, Greenville Rose and Kannapolis Brown all had the night off.

In 3-A, No. 2 High Point Andrews defeated Reidsville 35-7, fourth-ranked Havelock knocked off seventh-rated Tarboro 27-14 and fifth-ranked East Rutherford defeated Gastonia Huss 27-20. Washington, which entered the poll for the first time this week, lost a 41-21 decision to Ayden-Grifton.

No. 8 Central Cabarrus took a 35-0 shutout from South Iredell and the teams tied for ninth split their outcomes — Bertie endangered it spot as it lost to Hertford County 26-12 and East Lincoln strengthened its position as it downed West Lincoln 33-0.

South Iredell got 112 yards rushing from T.J. Davidson in its victory over Central Cabarrus. A fumble recovery for a touchdown by Marcus Moore, and a pair of touchdown runs by Chauncey Harris highlighted a 21-point second quarter. Ayden-Grifton ran away from Washington by taking a 34-0 halftime lead.

Tarboro dropped to 1-2 as Ledel George returned an interception 52 yards for a touchdown on defense.

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — First the hosts made the playground sacred, adding a thoroughly modern beat to the bang of the Dragon Drum. Then the nations of the world danced across it as though the party could go on forever.

South Korea, which little more than four decades ago was freed of Japanese oppression, lit the Olympic torch Saturday, serving to illuminate its own march onto the international stage as well as the competitors who journeyed to Seoul.

In an opening ceremony embracing the Oriental concept of Yin and Yang — opposite forces coming together — the host nation produced an at-once celebration of past and future, East and West. Greek nymphs performed an ancient dance in sheer white tunics as jets spewed multi-hued contrails overhead. Somehow, it came together.

Sohn Kee-chung, a 76-year-old Korean who won the marathon at the 1936 Berlin Games but tasted bitter victory because he was forced to accept it under Japan's flag of the Rising Sun, carried the torch into Olympic Stadium and passed it to Lim Chun-ae, 19, the nation's top female athlete.

Finally the flame was entrusted to a trio of youngsters who carried it aloft to the soaring Olympic cauldron, igniting huge tongues of fire against an azure heaven.

"I'm glad the sky is high and so blue. I believe God is blessing my country for its years of hard work and preparation for this Olympic Games," said Yuk Hee-Jin, 17, a student at Sukmyung High School.

"I'm really proud of my country," he added. "The whole world will now know more about Korea."

It began with a boat parade down the Han River, a huge Yong-ko-san, or Dragon Drum ship, leading a flotilla of nearly 500 vessels towards the throng of 100,000 filling Olympic stadium.

Inside, computer-generated pictures tracked its progress on a scoreboard that makes the Astrodome's look like a Watchman.

Koreans have long believed the site of any ceremony must be spiritually cleansed beforehand, and the opening of the Olympics was no different.

But in contrast to the solemn meditation customary in some regions of this rugged mountain peninsula, the organizers of these Games chose loud music and merry-making.

It proved infectious. The athletes of 160 nations — the most ever to attend any Olympiad — marched behind 300 women wearing white, knee-high go-go boots and many did so with soul in their step.

The Soviet men were among the best-dressed, wearing winter-white, double-breasted suits set off by scarlet red ties. Those from Swaziland were the least-dressed, showing bare chests and spotted loin cloths.

The Canadian threw Frisbees, those from the Netherlands carried orange parasols, and everybody threw kisses. Athletes from the two Germanys paraded in succession, closer than they have likely ever been save for a boxing ring.

By sheer numbers, the hatless American delegation, dressed in blue and white, dwarfed them all, with 611 competitors and another 160 officials, one carrying a sign, "Hi Mom, I'm Here," and countless others mugging for the cameras.

"It was a wonder, a great way to start the Games," said Jody Campbell of Long Beach, Calif., a member of the 1984 silver medal-winning water polo team who will represent the U.S. again at Seoul. "The crowd was a lot quieter than in Los Angeles, but you get the same inspiration coming into the stadium."

Enveloping the athletes' procession, the music and costumes and dancers evoked the 500-year-old Yi dynasty as well as Las Vegas showgirls.

Parachutists fell from the sky, 2,400 doves took off from the ground and it all came to an end with Saudis in traditional headdress and Americans in square-dancing outfits — 60 nations in all — dancing to the distinctly Western theme "Hand in Hand" and waving to the crowd.

Let the Games begin.

Olympics Owe Great Debt To City Of Los Angeles

By Scott Ostler
(c) 1988, Los Angeles Times

SEOUL, South Korea — The sun was shining, the sky was falling, doves and Frisbees were flying, and the world finally got its crazy act together in the city where the morning calm meets the midday kong hae (smog).

It's official: We're rockin' in the ROK (Republic of Korea).

America's athletes meandered proudly into Olympic Stadium Saturday morning, the most undisciplined marchers in the parade, the most animated characters of the Opening Ceremony of the Olympic Games, with the possible exception of the Frisbee-flinging Canadians.

The Americans waved and mugged for the TV cameras, held up funny signs and hotdogged it to the hilt.

Then, some minutes later, the Soviet team marched in, its ranks nicely aligned, its athletes more solemn and subdued than the Americans but no less proud and spirited.

As soon as the last Soviet athlete emerged from the north tunnel into sunlight, I broke out in goose pimples and a cold sweat. I wanted to jump out of my seat and scream:

"Somebody slam the gate and lock the lock! We finally got everybody together for an Olympics. Lock everyone in before some government breaks a treaty or invades a neighbor and half the teams here take their javelins and swim goggles and go home in a snit."

I wanted some big-shot official to grab the stadium public-address microphone and announce, "Ladies and gentlemen, nobody gets out of here until the Americans find out what a Sergei Bubka is and the Russians find out what a FloJo is. These Games will not be over till they're over."

The world is supposed to come together every four years for an Olympic Games, but some touchy country or bloc always gets its feelings hurt and we wind up with a semi-Olympics, a contest that is about as global as the World Series or the America's Cup.

This time, I think we've got it.

We can thank the Koreans for their generosity, planning, preparation and hospitality. But the world must also tip its hat to Los Angeles, because that's the city that made all this possible.

Every 50 years or so, the world hands the Olympic Games to Los Angeles, like a broken toy.

The project seems hopeless, but Los Angeles hammers and saws and adjusts and oils, then hands the Olympics back to the world and says, "Here. Try not to screw it up again. Damn thing is hard to fix."

If the '32 Olympics in Los Angeles hadn't been a surprise roaring success, the Olympic movement would have been laid to rest.

If the '84 Games in Los Angeles had bombed — literally, figuratively or financially — the concept of an athletic competition among all nations would have died faster than the leisure suit.

Los Angeles takes its twice-a-century responsibility in stride. To Los Angeles, the Olympics is just another Shriners' convention. We're already on the map; we have nothing to prove.

In '84, Los Angeles painted the Coliseum, hung some pretty flags and scared everyone into car-pooling for two weeks. We enjoyed the show, marred by the Eastern boycott, made a monstrous profit, reaffirmed the validity and potential of the Olympics, then went back to business of being a big-time city in a big-time country.

The full impact of what Los Angeles did in '84 wasn't felt until Saturday morning, when the Koreans took the torch from Los Angeles, symbolically speaking, and ran with it. It was a smooth handoff, bordering on glorious.

Seventy thousand proud Koreans sat back and munched the ballpark food — smoked squid and seaweed rice balls, washed down with peanut tea — as a cast of thousands marched, ran, danced, sang, broke boards with their feet and parachuted into the Olympic Stadium.

"I consider myself a messenger from heaven who is coming down with wishes for good luck for the Seoul Olympics," said Chon Myong Sun, one of the few female skydivers among the 76 who filled the sky and dropped in on the ceremonies.

So far her message is getting through. But I won't believe it until I see Jackie Joyner-Kersee settle into the blocks and exchange cool glances with Heike Drechsler, or until I see Danny Manning isolate Arvidas Sabonis out on the wing and their nose-tips touch.

Striped Bass Future Is Optimistic

The future of the Roanoke-Albemarle striped bass fishery is more optimistic this year because the flow of the Roanoke River has been regulated and water quality conditions have improved.

According to Dr. William T. Hogarth, director of the N.C. Division of Marine Fisheries, "The Roanoke River is the principal spawning area for the Albemarle Sound striped bass. Proper river flow and environmental conditions are critical for growth and survival during the early life stages of the striped ball."

Hogarth said adult striped bass spawn near Weldon, then egg and larval fish are totally dependent on river flow for their transport during the 100-mile trip from the spawning grounds to the nursery areas in the Roanoke River delta and western Albemarle Sound.

Roanoke River flow, which is regulated by three dams (Kerr, Gaston and Roanoke Rapids), affects water quality conditions in the entire western Albemarle Sound, supplying approximately two-thirds of the inflow to this nursery area. Hogarth explained that the magnitude and duration of flow affect the timing distribution, abundance and growth of the young striped bass and their food sources.

Hogarth added that the planned withdrawal of 60 million gallons of water per day from Lake Gaston for use by Virginia Beach will have a significant long-term negative impact on striped ball in the Roanoke River-Albemarle Sound area.

In a recent letter to the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Hogarth requested a full Environmental Impact Statement to determine the existing, proposed and cumulative effects of water withdrawal on striped ball.

The Division of Marine Fisheries strongly objects to the withdrawal of the water from Lake Gaston and feels it will severely limit current and future natural resource management options throughout the Roanoke River-Albemarle Sound system. Hogarth said DMF has managed this system as a multi-species fishery to protect the livelihood of the fishermen who use the Albemarle sound Estuary.

The striped bass population is monitored constantly by DMF and actions are taken to reduce fish mortality. During the 1988 spawning season, the Roanoke River flows were maintained at a more biologically acceptable level. As a result, the July sampling by DMF biologists yielded the highest number of juvenile fish found since 1976.

"Since the Roanoke River is the sole major spawning river for striped bass in North Carolina, it is critical that the flow not be diminished," Hogarth said.

Earlier this year, DMF participated in a Roanoke River Flow Committee, which recommended a more favorable spring flow by lake management changes. Through cooperative efforts by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and Virginia Power, the recommended flows can normally be maintained.

Natural production of striped bass has remained at historically low levels for 11 years before this season.

"A striped ball stocking program, along with severe restrictions on commercial and recreational harvest, has helped to maintain the population," Hogarth said. "The increased number of young fish this year is evidence that the present striped ball population can provide sufficient reproduction for recovery, if proper river flow and environmental conditions are available.

"Continued harvest restrictions will be necessary to protect the 1988 year class until they spawn or until natural production reaches a consistently acceptable level."

Quail Unlimited Donated Money

The Down East Chapter of Quail Unlimited as donated $1,240 to the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission for quail research.

Buck Buckman, chairman of the Washington, N.C., chapter, said the money is only a portion of the total collected to help fund quail research projects across the state and the nation.

Representing more than 100 members of the Down East chapter, Buckman said that area farmers are the key to increasing quail populations. Members of the chapter sponsored a farm symposium in Washington last February to teach farmers quail management techniques, such as leaving edges in fields to provide excellent quail food and cover.

"We had about 50 farmers attend the symposium," said Robert E. McClure, treasurer and past chairman of the chapter. "We encouraged them to leave ditch banks overgrown and to use prescribed burning practices."

Hal Atkinson, chief of the Commission's Division of Wildlife Management, said that Quail Unlimited now has 14 chapters in the state that are contributing part of their fund-raising proceeds to the Commission for quail research and management.

Bath 48
Jamesville 14

BATH — Bath High School broke open an 8-8 tie with Jamesville and romped to a 48-14 Tobacco Belt Conference football victory Friday night.

Bath scored three times in the second period and added three more in the third before allowing Jamesville one final touchdown in the final period.

Marcus Lacy got the Bath scoring started in the first quarter, scoring on an 18-yard run. Jay Evans ran over the conversion for an 8-0 lead.

But Jamesville came right back with Alex Moore racing 60 yards to the end zone. Keith Bassnight ran over the PAT to tie it at 8-8.

That, however, only served to fire up the Pirates.

Bryan Tuten scored on a one-yard run to give Bath the lead again, 14-8, and Bill Ambrose then scored twice, on runs of 29 and four yards to run the lead out to 26-8 at intermission.

Lacy scored his second touchdown on a 20-yard rip in the third quarter. Keith Boyd added a 17-yard scoring reception from Tuten and Steven Waters scored on a 42-yard run. Evans ran over one PAT and Pooh Woolard took a conversion pass from Boyd for the final Pirate points.

Cartrette Construction Company

Cartrette Construction Company, in seven years, has become a well known name in the Greenville-Pitt County area. Cartrette penetrates the market in residential, multi-family and commercial construction, handling both custom and speculative work.

The President of Cartrette Construction Company is Myles Cartrette. A third generation builder, Myles has been actively involved in construction for ten years. He is active in the Greenville-Pitt County Home Builders Association, having served as State and National Director, Local Board of Directors, and currently as 1988 President. Myles is an East Carolina University graduate and is active in church and local affairs.

Quality and detail are bywords of Cartrette Construction Company as seen in the authenticity of Williamsburg design and construction of Parliament Place Office Complex. The same detail and attention can be observed in his other projects, both residential and multi-family.

Cartrette states, "I feel that we as builders in the Pitt County area have realized how fortunate we are to be in an area where progress is a daily occurance. In this market, which I find to be more and more competitive every day, it pays to be on top of what is occurring in the marketplace. Home Builders Supply, over the last seven years, has been a friend as well as a major supplier for Cartrette Construction Company. I find it a pleasure to do business with Home Builders, and feel that when I need good materials at a fair price the place to go is Home Builders Supply Company."

Home Products For The Disabled Becoming Big Business Resource

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

If you're making do with a chair you can't get out of, a faucet you can't turn on or any number of home products that don't make allowances for an aging body, hang on.

American industry may be coming to the rescue in the forseeable future, and 1988 may eventually be known as the year attitudes began to change towards physical disability.

Several recent examples indicate growing interest in harnessing technology to permit an active lifestyle, even for those with disabilities. Products such as sports equipment, wheelchairs, crutches and ingenious utensils were shown this year in a museum exhibition and a product catalog.

While the current beneficiaries of specialized products are those with disabilities, ultimately there can be substantial benefits for the non-disabled population, says Cara McCarty, curator of "Designs for Independent Living," a recent exhibition at the Museum of Modern Art.

In the meantime, indications are that there is a growing acceptance of an active lifestyle for those with physical impairments.

The IBM Corp., for example, reports increasing use of a toll-free telephone number offering information on new technology for those with impairments.

IBM received more than 19,000 phone inquiries in 1987, after setting up the clearinghouse at the end of 1985, said Rita Black, a spokesman who added that an estimated 36 million Americans suffer some form of disability.

While the gradual aging of the American population may be one factor in what some authorities see as a greater acceptance of disabilities, another motive is that "businesses have become aware they are losing a tremendous resource by not accommodating themselves to people with disabilities," Black said.

According to Jordan Bienenstock, co-founder of Maneuverability, a Brooklyn-based retailer of "self-help" housewares, the number of special home products available for those with disabilities appears to be on the increase.

Some of the 90 or so products featured in the company's mail-order catalog include a voice activator which works off household current to turn on and off lamps and home entertainment components, easy-grasp cutlery and a variable-height sink.

Peter Axelson, a designer of wheelchairs and ski equipment, said that many new products and techniques make it possible for even a severely disabled person to live an active life.

A little over a decade ago when he wanted to renew an active life after an accident resulted in amputation of his limbs, he found he had to design the equipment he wanted.

"In the past 12 years there have been substantial improvements: lightweight wheelchairs made mobility easier; health care techniques made us healthier; computers have enhanced the ability to work and sports equipment has made recreation possible. We are now at the point where the technologies are available, but we need rehabilitation services to assist people," he said.

"The biggest problem of many individuals who want to be more active is gaining access to information and training in the use of the new products and in finding the money to pay for them," added Axelson.

One indication that this issue is about to enter the mainstream is the recent exhibition mounted at the Museum of Modern Art, "Designs for Independent Living."

Instead of thinking of disabled individuals as people who must lead a sedentary life, the emphasis now is on designing environments to help them be as active and independent as possible, according to curator McCarthy.

Approximately 45 products for use in the home were shown including mobilty equipment such as wheelchairs and walkers, communication aids, clothing and household items, including sculpted cane handles and eating utensils and gadgets for people with limited hand strength.

McCarthy said the exhibit was a natural outgrowth of the increase in aids for the disabled. "There has been a definite change since the early 1980s when products tended to be makeshift and unsuited to mass production."

Today, by contrast, professional industrial designers are getting involved in new-product development for this growing market segment, she said.

One of the most dramatic changes in thinking about disabilities is in the area of mobility, according to McCarthy. "Instead of thinking of the wheelchair as a seat, we think of it as a means of transportation."

The change began in the 1970s when the rules for wheelchair sports were modified to permit greater design latitude in the chairs. Using bicycle technology in some cases and spurred on by athletes who wanted a more competitive vehicle, designers were able to produce faster, lighterweight and more portable and maneuverable wheelchairs which in turn influenced the design of everyday wheelchairs, added the curator.

McCarthy sees it as a hopeful sign for everyone that designers are now studying human needs before they formulate product prototypes.

On The House

By ANDY LANG

A patio that is provided with a roof is likely to get far more use than one which has no protection from the sun and the rain. The end of the summer is a good time to work on the construction of such a roof because the work need not be done in hot weather.

There are many building materials which will make a satisfactory roof for a patio. Fiber glass panels are a good choice when it is desired to filter the sunlight but not block it.

Regardless of the material used for the covering, the framework that supports it is basically the same. Although there are some minor differences, it usually is best to support the main part of the structure with 4-by-4 wooden uprights or vertical posts. It is advisable to use wood that has been treated in some way with a preservative, whether or not the wood is a type that naturally resists decay and insects.

When the patio floor is concrete, the bottoms of the posts can be secured to noncorroding metal bases. A masonry bit will be needed to drill into the concrete for the setting of noncorroding screws. If the patio has a wooden deck, the posts can be anchored directly to the wood. If the floor is brick, enough bricks must be dug out to seat precast concrete blocks for the anchoring of the posts. Concrete footings must be used below the frost line in areas where the problem of frost exists. Where there is no such problem, the posts can be set into the dirt at least 2 feet deep, but the soil must first be impacted to make it very firm.

Remember that some communities provide specifications for the construction of a patio roof. Check with local authorities to see where there are such restrictions and what they are. For instance, local codes often specify the size and type of the fasteners that must be used to anchor part of the roof framework to the side of the house.

For most roof frameworks, the 4-by-4 posts will support 4-by-6 beams which, in turn, will support the outer ends of 2-by-6 joists usually 8 feet long. Remember that the joists must have a slight pitch to allow for drainage.

Select the fiber glass panels you plan to use before you begin putting up anything. The width of the panels will determine how to space the rafters, 2-by-4s running from the house to the front end of the framework. If the panels are 24 inches wide, for example, space the rafters so that the panels exactly overlap over them. The joints then will be easier to make, stronger and hidden from view. These joints are held together with special mastic as well as nails. The nails are equipped with leakproof washers. If you are very careful, you can nail into the fiber glass directly. But because of the possibility of chipping or cracking the panels, it is best to predrill holes in them to accept the nails. These holes should be just a fraction of an inch smaller than the diameter of the nails. When you buy the panels, you should purchase special flashings and other materials to insure tight fits and prevent the passage of water under the seams.

There are many other interesting roofs that can be used for patios, including those made with plywood, hardboard and almost any other material. One very interesting patio roof recently seen had overhead wooden slats with spaces between them to provide partial shade. Some roofs made of boards spaced farther apart give a special decorative appearance to patios. In one case, a homeowner constructed such a roof, then decided that too much of the sun's rays were coming through. At first, he planned to add extra boards to cut down on the size of the spaces, but after some thought, he placed hanging plants on the structure. Not only did it give a landscape effect to the scene, it provided enough additional shade to accomplish the main objective of blocking some of the sunlight.

Here's The Answer

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — I read an article you wrote recently about providing extra storage space inside a garage. Which is fine if you have a garage. We don't, but would like to build a carport. It's a job I am sure I can handle. Am I correct in believing that it will cost less than a garage?

A. — Yes, assuming it will be a simple extension of the house roof. Of course, it is possible to build a spacious carport with all kinds of extras that will make it almost as costly as a garage. If the carport is meant mostly to keep your car out of the sun and rain, with perhaps a portion of it devoted to storage and occasional use as an entertainment area, it definitely will not cost as much as a garage.

Q. — I once repaired a garden hose, but it was made of rubber. The two hoses I have in this house are plastic. One of them looks as though it may need a repair soon. There is a tiny damaged section that I would like to cut out and then bring together the two ends with a coupling. Is this done the same way as with a rubber hose?

A. — The same way, but not with the same coupling. Tell the dealer where you buy the coupling that it is to be used on plastic and he will sell you the proper type. There are several different kinds, so you will have to make your own choice after you receive his assurance that it will work on plastic.

Q. — I am planning to paint the outside of my house in a couple of weeks, but I am completely confused about what I read about using a primer. In one place, it says that a primer must be used, but in another, it says it is not necessary. Which is correct?

A. — It sounds as though the two statements were taken out of context. It depends on conditions the writers were discussing. If it is an unfinished surface, a primer most certainly is required. If a previously painted surface, the old coat, is still in good condition and without any breaks in it, a primer is not required. But there are many ifs, ands and buts to that general advice. For instance, if the old paint has stains on it that might bleed through the paint, a primer is needed. There are conflicting opinions among some authorities as to whether a primer is required if latex paint is used over oil paint. In any case, whether you use a primer or not, remember that the new finish will be only as good as the old. Imperfections eventually will show through, even if the new coat appears at first to have covered everything well. Also, new paint doesn't adhere well to a glossy surface, so some sanding may be in order, especially if you are going to put on only one coat. Textured or rough surfaces are difficult to cover with one coat. And be sure not to spread the paint too much, a common mistake with latex. The label on the paint you buy usually will include instructions for controlling the spread.

(All aspects of painting the interior and exterior of a house are included in Andy Lang's booklet, "Paint Your House Inside and Out," which can be obtained by sending 75 cents to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, N.Y., 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column.)

Garden Clinic

Q: How can I make my garden a haven for wildlife?

A: Three major things make an area attractive to wildlife — shelter, food and water. Shelter means protection from cold weather, protection from predators or a place for nesting and raising young. Shelter can be an evergreen in a snowstorm, a birdhouse, a tangle of vines, a hedge, a den tree or a fence row. Food can come from feeders or from trees, shrubs and other plants. Food can also mean grubs, worms and insects. Water in the garden allows wildlife to drink or bathe. If there is not a stream, spring or branch in the area, a birdbath may be an oasis to bring birds and other wildlife to your garden.

Q: Last fall a neighbor brought home over a dozen plants - some that he could not find anywhere else — from a plant give-away sponsored by the Friends of the N.C. State University Arboretum. He said the plants were given to members of this group. He could not find the mailing address, however. Could you tell me more about this group and how to become a member?

A: The Friends of the NCSU Arboretum encourages and supports N.C. State University in establishing a first-class arboretum to enhance teaching and research programs in horticulture, and to serve the public as well as nursery and landscaping industries as a place of learning and inspiration.

Membership benefits include a newsletter published three times a year with information on plants, new acquisitions, plant evaluations, books, news and sources of rare plants. A benefit you have already mentioned is the annual plant distribution of plants propagated from the arboretum. The distribution always includes rare and unusual plants not available in the nursery trade. (The distribution usually takes place in October, so there is time to become a member and take part in this year's give-away.)

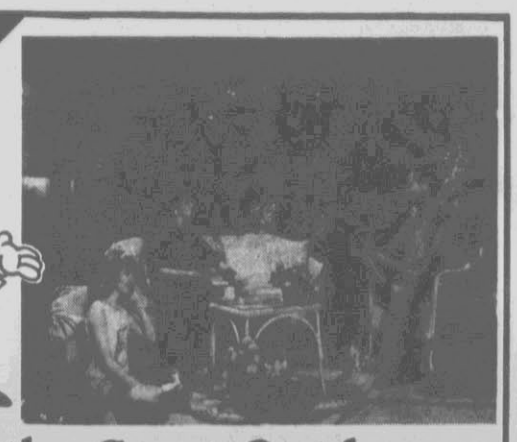

Another benefit is getting to hear evening slide shows and lectures on topics relating to gardening, landscaping and gardens of the world.

Individual membership in the Friends of the NCSU Arboretum costs $15 per year. Family memberships cost $20 per year. Lifetime memberships cost $250. Make checks payable to the NCSU Agricultural Foundation for Friends of the NCSU Arboretum, Dept. of Horticultural Science, Box 7609, North Carolina State University, Raleigh, N.C., 27695-7609. Memberships and donations are used for construction of new facilities, purchasing new plants and maintaining the arboretum.

The trendiest carpet colors this year are white, gray and beige, says Axel Venn, color consultant for ICI Fibres. He says they combine well with soft, "cosmetics-influenced hues" that he says will be the color palette for the '90s.

Venn says light colors are popular now because of new carpeting resistance to staining and soiling.

Budget Crunch Could Translate Into OAS Layoffs

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Organization of American States, facing the worst financial crisis of its history, may be forced to lay off as many as 300 of its 1,000 employees over the next few months, according to OAS sources.

The crisis is based largely on the Reagan administration's decision to reduce its 1988 contribution to the OAS by $10 million and by the same amount next year. Compounding the problem is the failure of several other major contributors, including Chile and Venezuela, to keep their payments current, the sources said.

The impending layoffs have generated gloom and uncertainty among OAS employees, most of whom are Latin Americans who are faced with the prospect of the immediate loss of their U.S. visas if their jobs are eliminated.

"The staff is terribly worried," said Arturo Garzon, a Mexican who is president of the OAS staff association.

He noted that many of the employees are longtime residents of the Washington area and would have to start from scratch if forced to return with their families to their native lands.

"They are facing a terrible family situation," Garzon said.

The OAS, whose origins date back 99 years, is designed to enhance cooperation among the United States and more than 30 other countries in Latin America and the Caribbean.

In its heyday, the OAS was seen by successive U.S. administrations as a vital tool for combatting communism in the hemisphere but the United States has largely ignored the organization in recent years. This is partly because the anti-communist consensus among member states has eroded over the years.

President Reagan bypassed the OAS in October 1983 when he decided to join forces with several other Caribbean countries in toppling the leftist government of Grenada.

Neither the United States nor Nicaragua has looked to the OAS as an appropriate forum for achieving a settlement to their long-running dispute.

The United States, with 85 per cent of the combined gross national product of OAS member states, has a quota of about $40 million, or 66 per cent of the organization's annual budget of about $65 million.

The money is used to pay for programs in such fields as human rights, education and drug abuse, among others.

But the Reagan administration, faced with its own budgetary woes, informed the OAS last May that it was reneging on $10 million of its 1988 quota. The money was reallocated to cover a foreign exchange shortfall that U.S. diplomatic missions in Europe had experienced as a result of the declining value of the dollar.

The OAS sources said the second blow came more recently when the United States decided to cut $10 million from its 1989 quota.

"We have to decide every month which bills we'll pay," said one OAS official, insisting on anonymity. He predicted the layoffs would be announced around January 1 after decisions are made on which programs should receive priority.

Joao Baena Soares, a Brazilian who has served as OAS secretary general since 1984, was unavailable for comment on the crisis. But he told one interviewer recently that the situation "is so serious the essence of the organization is in danger."

Said Garzon, "We have dedicated our lives to the benefit of the hemisphere. But we are disposable."

Rate Increase Foes Want Tougher Ruling

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Carolina Power & Light Co. and two opponents of its recent rate increase request want the state Public Service Commission to render a tougher decision on the cost overruns the utility incurred to build a North Carolina power plant.

The PSC ruled that CP&L had spent $440 million too much to build the Shearon Harris Nuclear Power Plant near Raleigh, N.C.

Nucor Steel and the state Department of Consumer Affairs this week petitioned the commission to increase the amount they barred the utility from recovering from South Carolina customers.

"We felt there was a lot of evidence to support an imprudence finding of $880 million," Nucor attorney Garrett Stone said.

Raleigh-based CP&L argues the commission found no imprudence in the construction of the plant and should allow total plant costs to be recouped from customers.

Commissioners must decide by Oct. 3 whether to reconsider their Aug. 16 decision, which allows the utility to increase annual revenues by nearly $25 million.

CP&L sought an additional $47.8 million, which it said was needed to recover a portion of costs for the 960-megawatt Harris plant.

Fuel Economy A Real Gasser For NHTSA

By TIM BOVEE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's automakers, their regulators and their critics agree on this: There is more to fuel economy than saving gasoline.

On a single mile per gallon, to hear the interested parties tell it, hangs the U.S. trade balance, the ability of the domestic auto industry to compete, the nation's energy independence, thousands of highway traffic deaths, even the capacity of the Earth's climate to support humankind.

A welter of comment offered at hearings this past week lead to those assorted conclusions. It now falls to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration to weigh those competing interests and issue a decision on where fuel consumption standards ought to be set in the future.

In many respects, fuel economy is a 1970s issue hitching a ride on the concerns of the 1980s and the 1990s.

Beginning in 1972, oil producing nations, mainly in the Middle East, raised oil prices dramatically. Congress in 1975 responded with legislation to reduce the nation's reliance on foreign oil by forcing Detroit to build more fuel-efficient cars.

The law phased in a minimum gas mileage each manufacturer on average must attain. The corporate average fuel economy — shortened to CAFE and pronounced like a small eatery — is calculated on the basis of gallons of gasoline used by a maker's domestic car production over the estimated life of the vehicles.

The CAFE standard in 1985 reached 27.5 mpg. The next year it was lowered to 26 mpg by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration after some of the automakers argued that, for technological and commercial reasons, they could not meet the stricter standard.

The standard was scheduled to revert to 27.5 mpg with the 1989 model year. NHTSA in August proposed setting the CAFE standard through 1990 somewhere between 26.5 mpg and 27.5 mpg.

General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. oppose setting the standard at the higher end of the range. They said they could live with a 26.5 mpg standard, but the question is one of trade and jobs.

To meet a 27.5 mpg CAFE standard, the two largest U.S. automakers said they would have to restrict production of large cars.

The result, they said, would be layoffs at large-car assembly plants. The job losses would cascade through the manufacturers' suppliers and into the general economy, ultimately numbering in the hundreds of thousands.

Analysts buy the argument that the stricter fuel-economy standard would pinch GM and Ford.

"I think you would have more problems, because Americans want to buy horsepower and big cars," said David Healy, an analyst with the New York brokerage house Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. "It probably wouldn't be a disaster; it would be more of a pain for the companies than it is now."

A pain for GM and Ford would be a boon for the foreign automakers, particularly the Japanese, and detrimental to the U.S. balance of trade, both the automakers and analysts said.

Large and luxury cars accounted for about 19 percent of the 5.2 million domestic cars sold in the United States this year through August, according to industry reports.

All but one of those models were made by GM and Ford. Chrysler makes one big car. Most imported cars are smaller vehicles.

Even if the U.S. makers restricted big-car production, they would still make some of the high-profit vehicles, thereby diluting the average gas mileage of their fleets.

To offset that production, "they have to have a lower performance (small) car than the importers, because the importers don't have to balance their small cars aginst the higher fuel-usage cars," said Thomas O'Grady, president of Integrated Automotive Resources Inc. of Wayne, Pa.

Therefore, even buyers of small cars would tend to gravitate to higher-performance imported vehicles.

Against that bread-and-butter question lie other issues, some divorced from the orginal conservation intent of the law.

Some want CAFE loosened to lower the highway death toll. The Competitive Enterprise Institute, a free-market advocacy group, argued that setting the standard at 27.5 mpg would lead to between 2,200 and 3,900 additional deaths over the life of 1989 cars because people are more likely to be killed in crashes involving smaller vehicles.

Others want the mileage standards tightened in order to protect the environment. The Energy Conservation Coalition, a group of 20 environmental and conservation grups, argued that loosening the CAFE standard, by putting more carbon dioxide into the atmosphere, would accelerate the greenhouse effect, a warming of the atmosphere caused by a trapping of the sun's heat, with disastrous effects for world's food-growing ability in the next century.

The Department of Transportation, GM and others point to gasoline prices averaging 97 cents per gallon, far lower than forecast during the height of the oil crunch, and say the law has outlived its original intent and should be scrapped.

Still others, such as the Center for Auto Safety, a consumers group often critical of the auto industry and its regulators, say the conservation issue is still important, with oil imports standing at 38.1 percent this year, against 36.8 percent when the CAFE law was passed. A new energy crisis, they argue, is something for which the nation should be prepared.

The CAFE decision, the conflicting comment suggests, is a question of public priorities, a balance between the economic health of the auto industry and broader political, safety and environmental concerns. A ruling is expected within a few weeks.

In other business and economic news this past week:

—The government said the U.S. merchandise trade deficit showed the biggest improvement in almost six years in July, shrinking to $9.53 billion from a revised June deficit of $13.22 billion. Another report showed a broader measure of U.S. trade, figured quarterly, narrowed sharply from April through June.

—Other government economic reports evidenced a slowdown in growth. Industrial production rose a modest 0.2 percent in August, while retail sales declined 0.2 percent during the month. The industrial operating rate for August showed little change, and business inventories were reported up just 0.3 percent in July.

—Agriculture Department officials held to an earlier prediction that consumer food prices would rise an average of only 3 percent to 5 percent this year, with about 1 percent of the rise attributed to the summer drought.

—Sales of U.S.-made cars and trucks fell 9 percent in early September, but last year's incentives continued to color the year-to-year comparisons.

Analysts said the new "bus," or data pathway, killed for good the idea that IBM would control the standards for the next generation of PCs.

STATE PORT — The port at Wilmington is seen in a photograph taken in August. Noel Painchaud, state ports director, says his goal is to improve North Carolina's ports by bringing in more cargo and more shipping lines. (AP Laserphoto)

Ports' Chiefs Have Shared Common Problem

(Part One in Series of Three)

WILMINGTON (AP) — In the past 10 years, the state ports at Wilmington and Morehead City went from a seemingly endless string of year-end losses to peak in 1982 at a record profit of $2.27 million. This past year, the ports returned to the loss column by $116,000.

Also in the past 10 years, the N.C. State Ports Authority has had three executive directors, each with different backgrounds, levels of experience and philosophies.

But all have had to deal with the same problem: How to make the

NOEL PAINCHAUD

North Carolina ports more valuable to the state.

Noel Painchaud, 55, joined the SPA in January as deputy executive director after serving as head of the port of Providence, R.I. By August, he was in charge of the ports following the resignation of William Edwards.

In those few months, Painchaud already has become known for his penchant for public relations and particularly for marketing — an area he considers a major weakness in the SPA's overall battle plan.

He demonstrated his flair during a recent SPA board of directors meeting by using colorful graphics and a laser pointer to brighten the historically dull financial report. The public relations staff has been told to concentrate on getting more stories about the ports into the press, which resulted in a recent release about a shipment of ice cream carts to the Seoul Olympics. And Painchaud's staff has put together a series of sales pamphlets on the ports — including color aerial photos — that are personalized with the names of the shipping lines the SPA is hoping to lure to the state's docks.

Those are among the most visible signs of the Painchaud difference. What may make his most lasting impression is being formulated behind the doors of the marketing division.

"There has never been a comprehensive marketing plan done here," Painchaud told the Wilmington Morning Star. Rather, he said, the effort to bring more cargo and shipping lines to the ports has been more like an unaimed shotgun blast.

Painchaud said he and marketing director Jack Wilson have taken aim at specific targets for the short term and are working on a long-range marketing strategy. Among those areas in the gunsight are both coasts of South America, the Far East and the Mediterranean and at least 13 shipping lines that could serve them through Wilmington or Morehead.

"Word is getting out to other ports that we're doing this — like backyard gossip," Painchaud said. "They never heard of this kind of thing from us before. When they heard Wilmington, they said, 'So what?'"

Unlike his two predecessors, Painchaud did not come to the ports after retiring from a military career. He has nearly 27 years of maritime and shipping experience and a master's degree in transportation management.

Painchaud spent a year and a half in Rhode Island as managing director of the Narragansett Bay Ports and executive director of the Port of Providence, which make about $2.2 million a year in revenues. Painchaud was in charge of six berths, while a stevedoring company leased the landside facilities.

Major cargoes there include steel, lumber, automobiles and scrap metal.

Jo-Anne Call, marketing director at Naragansett Bay, said Painchaud's duties included leasing, scheduling ship arrivals and general operation. "He handled a little of everything from top to bottom," she said.

Painchaud also previously worked as general manager of the Niagara Frontier Transportation Authority, a port on the St. Lawrence Seaway. He was executive director of the Cleveland-Cuyahoga County Port Authority, president of the Great Lakes International Stevedoring Co., director of harbors and airports for the Port of Cleveland, Ohio, and special assistant to the executive director of the Toledo, Ohio, Port Authority.

Painchaud has not had much time to become accustomed to his new post at the North Carolina ports. He often defers to staffers on questions about events that predate him.

Nevertheless, he has determined his goal is to improve the North Carolina ports by bringing in more cargo and more shipping lines. Profit is not a major motive.

"I get the impression there was (pressure) to show a profit" at the North Carolina ports, Painchaud said. "I wasn't in town long before that's the impression I got. And I don't know where it came from or exactly when, but there seemed to be this syndrome ... to show a profit or else. Never mind servicing the exporters and importers and steamship lines and the hundreds of other things we do for North Carolina businesses. Just make a damn profit or hit the road.

"In all my years in this business, no one has ever directed me to make a profit. Our return on investment is to provide a service to North Carolina manufacturers so they can reduce costs. That's one of our main missions in life. One of the dividends (of having ports) is to make dividends for companies."

When William Edwards became SPA executive director in 1985, he publicly announced that profits, while important, would be secondary to serving the needs of the state's shippers.

Now president of Carolina Atlantic Transportation Services, a barge line offering container service to Puerto Rico, Edwards said he believes that the state ports should be self-sufficient.

"They should pay their own way, but that's all they should do," Edwards said. The state should pay for any expansions or major improvements.

"The ports shouldn't be a burden on the taxpayers, except for those major capital outlays," Edwards said. "As the ports expand, business expands and the state benefits."

It was during Edwards' three-year tenure that the General Assembly approved a $36 million development package for the Wilmington and Morehead state ports. About $26 million is being spent to build a 900-foot wharf extension at Wilmington and to buy two new container cranes.

While that's good news for the port, it could be bad for the SPA's bottom line, Edwards said, because it will mean larger deductions against the ports' revenues for higher depreciation costs.

It was the paper costs for depreciation and other non-cash items that led to the reported loss in the past year of $116,000. The ports actually had a positive cash flow of about $2.9 million.

Edwards joined the SPA in 1975 after retiring as a lieutenant commander with 23 years in the Navy. Ironically, most of his military experience was in air traffic control. It wasn't until after he got the job at the authority, he says, that he found it didn't own any airports.

Nevertheless, by 1978 Edwards was promoted to Wilmington port manager. He was promoted again in 1983 to deputy executive director, moving up to the top slot two years later.

William M.A. Greene resigned after eight years as executive director under the Hunt administration in 1985. Members of the SPA board of directors, newly appointed by the Republican Martin administration, seemed to think of Greene as a political appointee, he says — a charge he denies.

"They said they wanted me to retire," Greene said. "I said I wasn't about to retire, but I had my letter of resignation ready."

Greene joined the SPA soon after retiring from the Navy as a rear admiral. He has a bachelor's degree in business administration and a master's in international affairs, with concentration in foreign diplomacy and commerce. During his 30 years in the Navy, Greene held a command at sea, had various administrative and management positions and was a publisher and editor for the U.S. Naval Institute.

Greene maintains he was not under pressure from the Hunt administration to show a profit. "I didn't feel any pressure other than what I put on myself," he said.

Greene said he believes a port can serve the state and still make a profit. Before he left in 1985, he said, the SPA paid for a third container crane and bought a former Texaco oil terminal in Wilmington out of revenues and still made $1.9 million in profits.

"It should be a profit-making entity," Greene said. "It is a corporate business owned by the state. Any other port you talk to would say, 'We're in here to make money or we'll change the people.' The General Assembly should only appropriate funds to those parts of a seaport that can't make money but are a service to the state."

Major developments should be handled in-house, Greene said. The current $36 million expansion being funded by the state involves a number of projects — including the berth extension — that would have been handled by a $32 million bond issue proposed in 1982. But the proposal was delayed "somewhere in the state government" until bond interest rates were too high, he said.

"What's happening now was my vision of Wilmington," Greene said. "But they're doing it late and with state appropriations rather than bonds. We still could have sold bonds six months ago."

Signs Of Slowing Economy Don't Faze Markets

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — In the effort to revive the sagging securities markets of Wall Street, the U.S. economy certainly has been doing its part.

Early this year, when stocks were weighed down by fears of a recession, the economy put on a burst of impressive growth.

Now, amid worries about inflation and tighter credit, business activity appears to be obliging by slowing down to a safer, more sustainable speed.

But the traders and money managers who make the markets go still seem unsatisfied. And that has left many observers wondering just what it is the markets want.

Consider the government's latest report on international trade, which read like a prescription specifically written to cure the markets' ills.

The Commerce Department figures, issued on Wednesday, showed a much larger than expected narrowing in the U.S. trade deficit, to $9.53 billion in July from $13.22 billion in June.

In the prevailing view of things on Wall Street, the deficit was headed in the right direction for the right reason — an 8.9 percent drop in imports, while exports continued to increase.

The implication was that the worldwide markets for goods produced in this country remained strong and that domestic demand was slowing enough at the same time to cool inflation worries.

The stock market did indeed rally on the news, but the advance had a half-hearted ring to it. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials closed Wednesday with a gain of 17.60 points.

By the next day, the market was back in the sluggish, drifting pattern that has predominated since midsummer.

"The initial reports on the economy's health in August were unexpectedly weak," said Maury Harris, economist at PaineWebber Inc. "But one month is not a trend.

"The erratic course of monthly data suggests it is premature to conclude that the economy is registering the slowdown from above-average growth which is a prerequisite for lower interest rates."

Similarly, Donald Straszheim, economist at Merrill Lynch, said any conclusion about slower growth is "probably premature."

The latest trend in data on unemployment claims, Straszheim observed, "suggests that employment growth will pick up in September and that the unemployment rate will decline."

Growth in the gross national product isn't likely to slow until late this year, he said, and even then it will probably be stronger than the Federal Reserve wants to see in its campaign to restrain inflation.

"Recent indicators have delayed the next tightening by the Fed," he conceded, "but the Fed is still likely to tighten further."

In the face of such restraining comments, the Dow Jones industrial average settled for a 29.34-point gain to 2,098.15 in the past week.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index rose 1.97 to 152.79; the NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market climbed 2.31 to 383.91; and the American Stock Exchange market value index was up .77 at 298.22.

Volume on the Big Board averaged 165.38 million shares a day, against 138.17 million the week before.

Should the economy begin a sustained slowdown that Wall Streeters accept as the real thing, will that mean clear sailing for the markets?

Perhaps, analysts say. But there is also the distinct possibility that investors will begin to worry in earnest about the possibility of a recession.

At some point, more and more investors are likely to question whether the Fed and other central banks can engineer an anti-inflationary economic slowdown without bringing on a more serious slump.

Judges OK Higher Fees For Lawyers

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal appeals court said lawyers who handle so-called public interest cases at low rates can charge the government the higher "prevailing market rate" for their work if they win in a suit challenging federal policy.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, in an 8-3 decision Friday, ruled that public interest lawyers are entitled to collect fees at the often-higher, prevailing rate when they successfully challenge federal government policies.

Under federal laws, the government must pay the legal fees of the winning side in a variety of challenges to federal statutes, a system designed to encourage private initiatives to enforce the law. The government, however, has challenged the size of the fees.

Judges dissenting from the appellate decision asserted that the ruling overturns a rational and efficient method for determining fees, established by a ruling in 1984, and will "create an enormous administrative burden for this court."

A former assistant U.S. attorney who was involved in establishing the rule that the government would reimburse lawyers at the rate normally charged by their law firms said the ruling would create chaos.

"How can you determine what the market price is?" he asked, speaking on condition that he not be identified. "Every law firm charges a different hourly fee."

The case arose after four lawyers successfully sued the Interior Department, challenging laws that they said allowed huge mining companies to skirt environmental standards. The lawyers represented Save Our Cumberland Mountains Inc., a citizens group based in Tennessee.

A U.S. district judge awarded them just under $200,000 in legal fees for the four-year legal battle, according to one of the lawyers. The government appealed.

A three-judge appellate panel ruled that the two lawyers should be compensated at a lower rate of $100 an hour, finding that the district court judge had erred in using the prevailing market rate to determine the legal fees.

TOYS SEIZED — Thousands of hazardous imported toys have been seized nationwide in what it being called "Operation Toyland '88." Federal agents have seized baby rattles, chalkboards and other toys at the Charleston, S.C., ports alone. The agents are looking for toys that break easy and could cause choking. (AP Laserphoto)

Loosey Litter Reminds: Don't Litter

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Loosey Litter likes attention. But for all the paper and aluminum she wears, her purposes are sterling. She isn't dressed gaudily just because she likes the limelight — she wears pop bottles and hamburger wrappers to remind us all what our throwaway mentality is doing to our roadsides, our beaches, our planet.

She's seeking to raise people's consciousness about the litter that's marring our lands and seas, killing our wildlife and wasting our resources.

Once the major component of her body was a castoff — a dress form sold at a yard sale.

Today thanks to the ingenuity and the sustained enterprise of members of the Greenville Garden Club, she's making frequent public appearances. She was a showstopper at the Pitt County Fair last fall and she'll be there again this year, probably accompanied by her friend Sylvia Wheless in whose house she lives between outings. She was a hit at the Community Beautification Seminar held by the Keep North Carolina Clean and Beautiful Seminar in Kinston recently. And she's visited several Pitt County schools and will visit a few more, possibly with Mrs. Wheless or some other member of the Greenville Garden Club along.

Loosey's not an original. She's patterned after "The Littered Lady of Lake Toxaway" who made her first appearance in May, 1985. Littered Lady could talk. She was a human — a member of the Toxaway Falls Garden Club dressed in litter. She said, "What you see here is the same stuff that litters our roadsides. It is the kind of growth that only gets better by picking it.

"Many of the roadside growths of the Genus Disgustingalis litteroffal are familiar. There are many of these growth species. They are free. Just stoop over and pick them."

Loosey gives her address as "The Streets and Roads of Greenville and Pitt County, N.C." She poses the question, "Did you contribute to my outfit?

She's a prize winner, too. The Greenville Garden Club has been cited at the district level with a blue ribbon for its public awareness program centering around Loosey. And she warranted the club's keeping of a silver bowl from the Garden Club of North Carolina for a year. In engraving on this bowl, the Greenville Club is cited for having received the state organization's Durham Council Litter Control Award.

The Greenville Garden Clubbers say it's fine with them if other groups create their own Loosey or reasonable facsimiles. They want to get the word out — Don't Litter.

Pitt Is Lagging in State's Adopt-A-Highway Program

By CAROL TYER
Reflector Staff Writer

Tomorrow through Friday is one of two weeks each year that the North Carolina Department of Transportation emphasizes roadside cleanup, recycling and beautification.

A locally assigned highway official says he is hoping that Pitt Countians, who have lagged behind citizens of other counties in enrolling in the DOT's Adopt A Highway Program, will use this week to join in the effort or start looking at whether they would like to join.

The DOT will this week devote 12-15 people in each of the state's counties to litter pickup. And the Greenville Community Appearance Commission has gone on record encouraging the public to enter into the effort voluntarily.

Gov. Jim Martin has proclaimed September "Clean Sweep Month" and his wife, Dottie, has urged officials and citizens to organize cleanup activities and to adopt highways. The Keep North Carolina Clean and Beautiful organization and the DOT have pledged support, supplies and certificates of appreciation for anyone willing to take part in the effort.

A major part of this week will be enrollment in the state's Adopt-A-Highway Program. So far, in Pitt County, there is zero participation.

Statewide, more than 250 organizations and businesses have joined the program and pledged to keep 600 miles of highway litter-free for a year. DOT division engineer Rick Shirley said there has been enthusiastic participation within this eight-county district — upwards of 50 miles of highway adopted, so far — but none is in Pitt. Beaufort, Lenoir, Craven and Carteret county groups have been the most active so far, he said.

He invites groups or individuals who would like to join the program to contact the office of district engineer Fred Edwards, 830-3142. What is asked of each organization participating is that litter be picked up for a specified distance (usually two miles or more) at least four times a year. The group can choose the section of highway it wishes to clean. The DOT will supply training for each group and will install a sign declaring that the group is the adopter of that section of road.

Shirley said the DOT has specified safety guidelines for each group and provides trash bags and pickup of those bags at designated times and places.

Of course, those who wish can separate their aluminum cans and their glass containers and take them to the Bell's Fork Recycling Site, be paid for them and know that they'll be recycled instead of added to the glut at the Pitt County Landfill.

A "Clean Sweep" is also held each year in April. Mrs. Martin said that last spring more than 32,500 volunteers participated in efforts throughout the state that saved the state $1 million. During April, May and June, she said, almost 1,000 community service workers picked up roadside litter, which could have cost the state $76,500.

In Pitt County, since April when the Community Service Work Program started supplying five to six workers per weekend to the Department of Transportation, some 526 man-hours have been used for litter pickup, Tammy Kernen, Community Service coordinator said.

Mrs. Dan K. Moore, chairman of the Keep North Carolina Clean and Beautiful organization said, "The benefits of beautification lie, not only in the immediate improvements of our roadsides and communities, but in the long-term awareness of the destruction caused by thoughtless people who continue to litter."

Grandparents Often Must Function As Parents

By DAVID LARSEN
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

LONG BEACH, Calif. — It was just before Easter, and the voice of the 9-year-old boy rang out in the semi-darkness of the apartment bedroom:

"My mother's never going to get well, is she?"

The boy was lying on his favorite sleeping place, a pad on the floor near the bed of his grandmother, Patricia Phelps, 75.

"No, honey, she's not," the woman in the bed said. "And we have to accept that."

She and her grandson had just said their prayers together, and had bade each other good night, when the nocturnal conversation began.

"And my father can't take me back either," the boy continued, with resignation.

"No, not as long as he's with the other woman," she replied.

There was a pause.

"But I've got you, Grandma?" came the hopeful young voice.

"Yes, you do, honey," she assured him.

At an age when they least expect it, when they had other plans on how to spend their sunset years, an increasing number of grandparents are finding themselves being recycled, finding themselves again rearing young children.

"They don't have the patience, the stamina, the energy they had when they were younger," Sylvie de Toledo said. "But they are all committed to raising these children regardless of how difficult the struggle. They love the children too dearly. And sometimes they may feel some guilt as to how their own child turned out."

De Toledo is a licensed clinical social worker at the Psychiatric Clinic for Youth, a non-profit clinic in Long Beach. Last year, partly because of what she had observed there, partly as a result of personal experience and partly as a result of an informal survey, she formed a therapy support group, Grandparents as Parents.

The group has grown to the point where about 15 grandmothers participate for two hours each Monday, and as many as 15 more show up each Thursday. The number on any given day varies because of illnesses, work schedules and lack of transportation.

Although no grandfathers belong at present, thought is being given to including them. The grandmothers range in age from the early 40s to the late 70s. The majority of the clinic clients are charged on a sliding scale based on their income.

There are many reasons for this surprise responsibility falling on seniors: death, neglect, abandonment, involvement with drugs and-or alcohol, incarceration, physical and-or sexual abuse, mental illness.

"The usual alternative for the kids is foster homes, and none of the grandparents wants that," De Toledo said. "The often-sudden situation is occurring in all ethnic groups and at all socio-economic levels."

Social workers say they detect a trend, when court action is involved, toward placement of young children with grandparents, to keep things in the family.

Acco Martin O'Connell, chief of the Fertility Statistics Branch of the U.S. Bureau of the Census in Suitland, Md., statistics show that as of March 1986, the nation had 63 million family households. An estimated 1.7 million of those households contained people 55 or older who were possibly living with their grandchildren.

The stress of the usually unforeseen development on the seniors isn't just emotional and mental. "The majority have worked all their lives and have saved for their retirements," De Toledo said. "Now they are ending up having to use this money for food, clothes, shelter, medical bills and so forth for the children."

Another factor that sometimes is brought up at the therapy support sessions is that these substitute parents "feel cheated out of the traditional role of being doting grandparents. And the children, for their part, are deprived of having doting grandparents. The word grand has been taken out of the experience.

"Most of the women would prefer being grandmothers, rather than being mothers again. Of concern to them is the fact that things have changed from the time when they raised their own children, or even when they themselves were children."

Children at the vortex of this unreal whirlwind can find themselves resentful, feeling guilt, sometimes insecure, grasping at hope.

"Sometimes they feel resentful because the person or persons taking care of them is so much older than the parents of other kids," De Toledo said. "For example, maybe they don't get taken to the park to play ball."

The guilt feelings, she went on, sometimes come into the picture when the youngster believes that if he or she had somehow been "a better child," the parent or parents would still be with them. "Some feel that it is their fault, and that they are to blame for their present situation," the therapy support group founder said.

Then there is insecurity. "Kids are perceptive. They know. They feel insecure when the grandparent taking take of them becomes sick," De Toledo said. "What runs through their minds is: If this grandparent leaves me through death, who will take care of me? This time there might not be another grandmother or grandfather. It's a scary thought for a kid.

"They become very attached to the grandparent taking care of them. A lot of times the first thing such a child does in the morning is check on the physical presence of that person, to make sure they haven't left during the night."

With everything else, though, there always is hope. "They never give up the fantasy, the hope, that their real parents will change and some day come back and take care of them," the social worker said. "Although they love their grandparents, and even if they had been mistreated earlier, there is that tight bond that never vanishes."

"The minute my married daughter walked through my door, I could see that her days were numbered," Sonya Jarred tearfully recalled. "She had come out from Wisconsin with her four children, leaving behind a husband who drank, and she said she was sick."

That was in July 1986. The elder Jarred, a nursing assistant, took the young woman to an Orange County hospital, where she was diagnosed for cancer of the cervix. In February 1987, at age 28, she died.

Two of her children had been placed in a foster home here, the other two were staying with the grandmother. The next month, Jarred went to court and got custody of all four. "Two months later my best friend died," she said. "The next month my husband left me."

And that same month, now on her own and with four young children to care for, her car gave out. Since then, her limited budget has forced her to travel by bus.

"I have a 10-year-old boy, a 9-year-old girl, an 8-year-old boy and a 4-year-old boy. I had to give up working because all my time has been consumed with my grandchildren," the 52-year-old Jarred said.

The five of them live in a one-bedroom duplex in Long Beach. "There is hardly any privacy. The oldest boy likes to sleep in the closet with the door open. The other three kids sleep in our bedroom. In the mornings, there is a line outside the bathroom."

The grandmother makes do on the $753 she receives monthly as Aid to Families With Dependent Children. "Believe me, we cut corners," she said. "There are never enough vegetables or fruit in the refrigerator. The clothes are either hand-me-downs or something from a thrift shop.

"At Christmas, there sure wasn't much money, but the Eagles brought us a turkey and some canned food, and an outfit of clothing for each of the children. Two of the county social workers brought toys for the kids.

"None of them has ever been to Disneyland or Knott's Berry Farm. We can only go to things that are free."

Jarred tries her best to cope with her new lot in life, but said: "I feel I'm going backward instead of forward. I don't know where I get the energy from any more."

Erma Searches For Laughnost In Russia

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

MOSCOW — By now, the entire world knows that Russia has been glasnostized and perestroiked.

It's been summited by the Reagans, invaded by pay toilets and pizza parlors, and dazzled by Donahue and Billy Joel.

But to really know a country, you have to know what its people laugh about, or cry about. Last March, I joined eight other American women on a seven-day trip to Moscow. It was sponsored by Woman's Day magazine and Peace Links, an exchange program started six years ago by Betty Bumpers (wife of Arkansas Sen. Dale Bumpers) to promote peace.

Six of us were to engage the Soviets in a dialogue to find solutions to our common problems with respect to our differences. Me? I was in search of "laughnost." Was laughter keeping pace with the openness of their new society?

The Soviet women had requested six "average Americans" whom they would match with their professional counterparts. They included: Ellen Levine, Englewood, N.J., editor in chief of Woman's Day; Dr. Ethel Klein, New York, associate professor of political science, Columbia University; Rita Wilson, Barrington, Ill., regional vice president, Allstate Insurance Co.; Dr. Mary Jo Bane, Cambridge, Mass., Harvard University, Kennedy School of Government; Ann Huseman, Lenexa, Kan., housewife and mother; and me. Between us we had five husbands and nine children. Observing were Evelyn Grant, New York, executive editor, Woman's Day; Colette Shulman, New York, interpreter, senior staff associate, School of International Relations, Columbia University; and Mary Lou Weisman, Westport, Conn., author and reporter for Woman's Day.

Across the table from us were 16 "average Russians." They included six Ph.D.s, a poet, a magazine editor and an engineer.

Just your basic ring-around-the collar seminar.

I didn't feel well. Someone suggested it was the eight Reese's cups and six Milky Ways I had brought to pass out to Soviet children ... and ate myself the first night. It got worse. As I slid out of my coat before the first meeting, I adjusted my hip-length pink wool sweater and pushed up the sleeves on the matching cardigan. As I turned, I thought I was looking into a mirror. Rita Wilson was wearing the same sweater set. I suggested to her that we test the Russians' humor by telling them, "We are twins. Mama always dresses us alike." Rita is beautiful, six inches taller than I am, 20 years younger, and black. She said, "Don't push."

Everyone's counterpart showed up but Russia's Erma Bombeck. I was informed she was out of town, and they promised to produce another humorist. But someone had done a nice story on her in a magazine I could read. Other than the fact that Clara Novikova was not a housewife, or a writer, or a humorist, we did have something in common: She played to women. She was a comedienne who took her protest on the "dullness and unhappiness" of the lives of Soviet women to concerts around the country. The Soviet women loved it.

The dialogue opened around a long table in the Soviet Women's Committee offices in Moscow, and we were asked to introduce ourselves. I told them I wrote a humor column about children, housework, and a husband who sat in front of the TV set every weekend watching anything that carried a ball, stick or bat. At that moment, the chairman became excited and interrupted with, "Mrs. Bombeck, that is a global problem we all relate to. How do you solve it?"

I said, "I had my husband declared legally dead and his estate probated," and waited for the translator to interpret it. In unison, the entire side of the table fell apart. We had found some common ground. They promised to keep looking for my counterpart.

Most humor is sired by a father of frustration and carried by a mother of discontent. The cry of their infant is small at first, but becomes bolder and louder as its confidence grows.

"The basis of most Russian humor," said a magazine editor, "has one theme: The women are beautiful and the men are bad." Translation: Soviet women focus a lot of their humor on men-bashing.

Television Offers Unrealistic Image

By CRISPIN Y. CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Television programs fail to show teen-age girls taking the steps necessary to achieve productive lives, focusing instead on obsessions with shopping, grooming and dating, says a women's advocacy group.

"These images create the impression that one can magically jump from an adolescence of dating and shopping to a well-paid professional career," said Sally Steenland, author of a report, "Growing Up In Prime Time."

The study of more than 200 episodes of 19 network television programs featuring adolescent characters was sponsored by the National Commission on Working Women of Wider Opportunities for Women. The non-profit group seeks to improve women's status in the labor market.

"Week after week, viewers see teen-age girls with no visible skills, no favorite subjects in school, no discussion about college majors or vocational plans," Ms. Steenland said in prepared comments as the study was released Tuesday.

"TV's teen-age girls are portrayed as poised for professional careers and productive adulthoods without clues to the steps necessary to achieve those goals," the report said.

The report found:

—Girls' looks are shown to count more than their brains. Some episodes portray intelligent teen-age girls as social misfits.

—Adolescent girls, who outnumber their male counterparts on television, are more passive than male characters.

—Weekly plots are lacking in serious conversations with parents, teachers or peers about school matters, academic interests, career goals or future plans.

—Ninety-four percent of teen-age girls on television are middle-class or wealthy.

The honor attendant wore a two-piece, tea-length pastel pink silk ensemble with floral imprint. It was styled with a straight skirt, with top ruffles over the waistline. She carried a silk nosegay of pink and mauve carnations, gladioli and daisies tied with pink and mauve ribbon. Bridesmaids wore silk two-piece mauve dresses with floral imprint. Their flowers were similar to the honor attendant.

After a wedding trip to South Carolina, the couple will live in Greenville.

Broadway Musical Based On Her Life

PATTERSON, Ohio (AP) — Annie Oakley (1860-1926), the celebrated sharpshooter who appeared in Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show, was born Phoebe Anne Oakley Mozee.

She began shooting at the age of nine and became an expert marksman with a pistol, rifle and shotgun. On one occasion, she shattered 4,772 glass balls out of 5,000 tossed into the air.

Known as "Little Sure Shot," the five-foot tall Oakley challenged vaudeville star Frank E. Butler to a shooting match in Cincinnati and won. They were later married and joined Buffalo Bill's show in 1885.

Women Need Fewer Calories

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — Women need fewer calories than men but not fewer nutrients, according to a food industry scientist.

"Years ago, before modern conveniences, women performed more physical labor than they do today," says Dee Graham of Del Monte Foods USA. And, it wasn't unusual for women to require 3,000 calories a day.

By contrast, Graham said, today's average woman needs only about 2,000 calories a day, but she needs the same amount of other nutrients.

Book Lists Best Companies For Women

By KAY BARTLETT
AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — It's not a book an unreconstructed male chauvinist will run out and buy, unless perhaps he's a CEO. It's written by women for women, working women, a guide to the companies where they are most likely to succeed.

Two avowed feminists, one a psychologist and business consultant, the other a journalist and author, spent almost three years in their quest to find the best U.S. companies for women. They came up with a list of 50.

"It is possible that we missed a great company," says the journalist, Lorraine Dusky of Sag Harbor, N.Y., "but I doubt it."

The researchers sent letters to 76 executive recruiters, 72 professional women's groups and 15 researchers and asked for nominations. They came up with over 200 nominations. Some companies appeared on every list.

Dusky and co-author Dr. Baila Zeitz, a psychologist who practices in New York City and Teaneck, N.J., then sent out a six-page questionnaire to the companies and requested permission for an on-site visit to interview female employees.

They followed that up with private telephone interviews with the women, who were allowed to remain anonymous if what they had to say might jeopardize their jobs.

The result is "The Best Companies for Women," published this summer by Simon & Schuster. It lists the 50 best companies, representing 22 industries, and gives profiles of each.

The authors offer specific pros and cons, be it maternity leave benefits or the whereabouts of the much-discussed glass ceiling that women can only look through.

"We found that often those with terrific benefits for maternity leave had a glass ceiling so low that you couldn't stand up straight without bumping into it," Dusky says.

"We also found that the attitude of the CEO had a great deal to do with the way the company treated women."

In addition, the authors list 60 additional companies worth considering by women in the job market, but which they did not profile, for various reasons.

"Some companies that maybe should have been on the list refused to see us, because there was some dirt going on," Dusky says. One company who turned them down cold despite recommendations was found to be in the midst of a sexual harassment suit.

In one of the anecdotes in the book, which reflect the slow progress of the women's movement in the workplace, Sara Dickinson, who got her engineering degree from the University of Illinois in 1976, tells how she had no trouble setting up a job interview. But she was appalled that the interviewer did not want to know about her engineering skills. Instead they talked about the climate, the prices of apartments in the city and how long it would take to establish a credit line to buy a car.

"They must have wanted me for some quota," she told Dusky.

Only Hewlett-Packard threw a transistor circuit at her and told her to analyze it. So she took that job. Nonetheless, she did get a chance to look at the recruiter's summary. It read: "Pretty good for a girl."

She is still there, has been promoted about every two years, and is currently a research and development laboratory manager.

The authors point out that working in an engineering company is really working in a man's world and there is a lot to overcome, but with a little humor, the women say it can be done.

Wall Street, the authors note, has been notoriously tough on women and the only Wall Street entry is Salomon Brothers. That's because of one man, John Gutfreund, the CEO.

"If he gets interested in an account, he doesn't care if you're a zebra or someone from a small area of Tibet, you're the person he'll call if anything gets screwed up or he's got an idea he wants you to think about," said one woman who wished to remain anonymous. "And if you need to find him, you just walk over to his desk, you don't have to go through a secretary. He is colorblind and sex blind. He's not interested in you personally, he's only interested in what you are doing to make money from your accounts."

Essentially, they say, the old boy networks are too entrenched and women rise for the first eight or nine years and then are told it's time to face reality. That's the end of the trail as far as upward mobility.

As determined by the authors, the top 50, in alphabetical order, are: American ExpressShearson Lehman Hutton; American Telephone & Telegraph; Avon Products; Barrios Technology; Bidermann Industries; CBS; Children's Television Workshop; Citizens and Southern; Cognos; Conran Stores; The Denver Post; Digital Equipment Corporation; Drake Business Schools; Federal Express; Fidelity Bank; First Atlanta; Gannett; General Mills; Grey Advertising; GTE; Hallmark; Hearst Trade Books.

Herman Miller; Hewitt Associates; Hewlett-Packard; Home Box Office; Honeywell; International Business Machines; Levi Strauss; Lotus; Manufacturers Hanover Trust; Merck; Mountain Bell; Mount Carmel Health; Neiman-Marcus; Northwestern Bell; Payless Cashways; PepsiCo; Pitney Bowes; Procter & Gamble; Recognition Equipment; Restaurant Enterprises Group; The Rowland Company; Saks Fifth Avenue; Salomon Brothers; Simon & Schuster; Southern New England Telephone; Syntex; Time Inc., and U.S. West Direct.

What Does It Cost To Move?

WILTON, Conn. (AP) — A survey of people recently involved in a company move shows three-quarters of them expressed a need to know beforehand the cost-of-living in the destination area.

According to a survey made by PHH Homequity Inc. of 1,000 employes recently involved in a group move, 75 percent of them strongly preferred getting local cost-of-living information on items such as food and housing before making the decision to move.

Of the respondents who did get cost-of-living information, 43 percent indicated a high value for this service.

The percentage of female doctors increased from 10 percent in 1970 to 18 percent in 1986.

Working At Drive-In Conjures Up Memories

By MARIANNE DAY DUBOSE
The Sun Herald

GULFPORT, Miss. (AP) — Randall Wetzel wheels into the Sonic Drive In stall wearing blue jeans and a smile. Shirt and shoes were discarded after class.

This 24-year-old is one laid-back customer, sitting in his paint-splotched van with the big gray heart on one side.

"I'm gonna jack it up a little bit and paint it blue and put '60s on the back," Wetzel said. "Make it like a party van."

Oh yeah.

As he shovels down fries smothered in extra ketchup, he trades jabs with a fellow in a metallic blue sports coupe and then continues to check out the scenery.

Yes, he has noticed that the carhop is a pretty redhead who "seemed nice and eager to help."

He has one suggestion, though: Bring back the skates.

This opinion is shared by all customers interviewed in their parked cars at Biloxi's Sonic one recent afternoon.

Sure, they love being waited on by cute, bubbly carhops who deliver burgers and shakes on trays and, at the push of the Order-Matic button, return with extra mustard. That's part of the fun.

"The customers do kind of look you over," says Tracy Mitchell, a 19-year-old in khakis, pearls and bright red lipstick.

But, remember just a few years back.

Zoooom.

How did they do it?

"I'd like the girls rolling around on skates again," Wetzel says, breaking into a bad-boy grin. "And short mini-skirts or something long and sexy. That's enough to bring ya back to the '50s."

Richard and Toni Williams, who are dining in their spiffy '72 Nova, pause from their "date" to add a word about Sonic skaters.

"I never saw anybody fall," says Williams.

He turns the radio down and takes a bite of his "NiftyFifties" special — a burger, fries and a soft drink.

"The carhop is kind of innocent," says Toni Williams. "Like when you think about the simple things in life. I don't think there's enough of it."

Customers do say the foot-long coneys, homemade onion rings and root beer floats are a trip back to the Annette-and-Frankie era. In fact, a Frankie image in a V-neck sweater stares dreamily from the Sonic menu.

Still, it's the carhops — one of the last remnants of the carefree '50s — that evoke old memories of high school crushes, drive-in movies, curfews, fast cars and flirting.

One carhop says flirting is alive and well in the '80s.

Chris Lutkins, an 18-year-old with a ponytail and a spontaneous giggle, can testify to that.

"The guys will start it," she says. "They usually say something like 'Woo!' or they'll whistle or ask for my phone number. I tell them I'm married. I play hard to get."

This method has gotten her roses a few times. "From a customer," she says. "I don't know who."

Would she trade her white sandals for skates?

"A lot of people expect us to be on skates," Lutkins says. "I'd do it, but I'd probably fall."

Debbie Dodd, 36, a Sonic regular from way back, recalls all the talent it required to skate and serve. "It took skill coming out on skates with a tray in your hand," she says. "They never missed a beat."

The two Mississippi Highway Department inspectors who arrive for their daily dose of Sonic say skates would bring back adventure, but they have no complaints about tight jeans, shorts and plain ol' tennis shoes. And the service is great.

"With carhops, I think it's more personal," says Steve Simmons, 23. "It's not rush, rush. ... And I like looking at them, the girls."

"That's our job to notice things," jokes Anthony McFarlin, 25. "We work for the state. We take in our surroundings."

"Me? I walked into a pole," she says. "There were a whole bunch of cars here. I was walking, not paying any attention. I was in such a hurry. I ran smack dab into a pole with the tray. People laughed like 'Look at her.'"

The Orange Grove Sonic Drive In tried out three skaters last summer for a '50s celebration.

"They did pretty well," said manager Steve Nelson, a former carhop himself. "Every now and then they'd slip and get a banana split or a sundae on them. ... The people would laugh; the girls got red in the face."

Worse things have happened, though, even without the skates.

Once a woman hurled a dripping milk shake at a carhop, cursed at her and then drove off. Most of it landed on Mitchell, who was just passing by.

"I didn't even know what happened," Mitchell said.

Sometimes, it's the customer's apparel that causes a stir at this old-fashioned drive in spot. Pajamas are regular sights at night. Bare-chested men are pretty common.

But Mitchell's boss, a former carhop, has a story that can outdo either of these.

"One lady who came in, she was topless," said Paula Graczyk. "That's it. Shorts and no top. I couldn't believe it. ... I thought she had a halter top on. It wasn't a halter top."

Graczyk, manager at Biloxi's Sonic, says carhopping is like performing on stage. The minute you leave the kitchen area, all eyes follow your every move.

"I have been flashed, whistled at and cursed at," she said.

On skates?

Not her.

"I heard a lot of stories, though, about how fast they went," she said.

Tim Esskew, manager of the Sonic in D'Iberville, would love to get his carhops back on skates. But he already knows their reaction.

"My girls would probably say 'No way,' because of the fear of falling," he said. "A lot are very cute, too self-conscious. If they fell, it would just kill them."

'Moon Pie' Eater Is In Training

By HOYT HARWELL
Associated Press Writer

ONEONTA, Ala. (AP) — The "Rambo of Moon Pie eaters" made it clear: he is in serious training to try to become the first man to repeat as the world champion Moon Pie wolfer.

"I've been practicing," said Rodney Frazer, a stockman at an Oneonta discount store. "I've been eating a Moon Pie every time I go on break."

His boss, John Love, describes him as "270 pounds of rompin', stompin', genuine, 100 percent Alabama Moon Pie-eating country boy who loves Moon Pies like a hawg loves slop."

Frazer, befitting a titleholder, will arrive at the fourth annual contest Oct. 8 in a limousine, wearing a tuxedo set off by a Moon Pie T-shirt.

He ate 15 of the sweet treats within the 10-minute limit a year ago to unseat — or unstomach — high school football player Michael Carr, who downed 13.

Moon Pies, made in Chattanooga, Tenn., are composed of a thick slab of marshmallow cream surrounded by soft cookies coated in banana, vanilla or chocolate.

"I like the banana ones best," Frazer said. "You could mix 'em up in the contest but I don't know how good they'd taste."

A year ago he fasted a couple of days to get ready and consumed a bunch of Rolaids after the Saturday eating bout. "I was feeling all right by Tuesday," he said. "They make you feel like you've got little bricks in you."

The contestants are allowed soft drinks — organizers will import some RC's — or water to help them down the pies.

"We'll go to Spout Springs at the foot of Straight Mountain and get them some good spring water," Love said.

Frazer said if he has to, he believes he can handle 17 pies this time.

"I hope they can find me some competition," he said. "They're working on it. Some people don't want to enter again, for some reason."

After his victory, he said, he received calls from several states.

"One disc jockey wanted to know whether you eat them, or sit on them or throw them or what," he said, "and I said, 'Well, you eat them.' He was one of them Northerners. Everybody in the South knows what they are."

Oneonta, located in Blount County about 25 miles north of Birmingham, "is known as the Moon Pie Capital of the civilized world," Frazer said. "Oneonta is to Moon Pies what Wimbledon is to tennis."

There are two contests, one for people less than 15 years old and one for adults. Three people tied at nine pies each in the younger division a year ago. There were 51 contestants in all.

First place brings $100, second place $25 and third $15.

Although a rescue squad was on hand last year and will be again this time, "nobody choked," Love said. "A few got sick and a few didn't wait until they got away from the table. It got pretty messy right there at the end."

Frazer, Love said, "took the world championship real serious. He's challenging everybody in the world. He is the Rambo of Moon Pie eaters."

Love started the contest four years ago after he and another store official both placed orders for Moon Pies without the other knowing it.

"We ended up with 21,000 Moon Pies," he said. "We tried all kinds of ways to sell those things and we ended up inventing the contest.

"I started making a lot of crazy announcements, telling people what all they were good for — impressing their neighbors with boxes in the back seat of the car; saying they didn't actually make a person more intelligent or better looking, that they just made you feel that way because they were so good."

Love said the contest is not the only thing for visitors to Oneonta.

"They will enjoy our colorful covered bridges and perhaps a side trip to Spoonhandle, Blow Gourd, Lick Skillet or a shopping spree in downtown Bug Tussle."

Frazer said that if anyone dethrones him, "I ain't going to sit there and pout about it. I'll just try again next year."

Woman Is Sole Possessor Of Age-Old Atsugewi Language

By CHARLES HILLINGER
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

MONTGOMERY CREEK, Calif. — Tiny, frail Medie Webster, 87, is the sole remaining possessor of an age-old language.

She is one of just 200 Atsugewi (at-su-gay-we) Indians, whose ancestors for centuries hunted and gathered food in what is now Lassen Volcanic National Park, 180 miles northeast of San Francisco. And she is the only Atsugewi who speaks fluently the tribal language.

"Sometimes I think about the old days when I was a little girl and all of us Atsugewis spoke our own language. We took life for granted and thought we would always be here living as our people did from the beginning of time," sighed the old woman.

She told how her generation was "sent to the white man's school and forced to learn the white man's language and to forget the Indian ways. I only went as far as first grade. As I grew older I learned English but I kept speaking Atsugewi as well."

Gradually, all the other older members of the tribe who spoke the language, including Medie's husband of 60 years, Daniel, have died. Daniel Webster died in 1979 at age 87. Two years ago, when Ramsey Blake, in his late 80s, died, Medie was left as the only Atsugewi fluent in the tribal language, although other tribe members know some native expressions.

She lives with her grandson, Warren Conrad Jr., 24, in a modest cottage built 50 years ago by her husband on the edge of this hamlet at the end of a mile-long dirt road. Her home, 61 miles northwest of Lassen Park, is the only dwelling on the road.

"She talks to me in Atsugewi all the time," Conrad said. "I have to interrupt her and say: 'Gram, I don't understand what you are saying. Please speak English.'"

Conrad said that his grandmother "is like a person of another time. She tells me stories about the wagon days before cars, about old-time medicine men, about what it was like when she was a little girl, about the old ceremonial dances no longer performed. She sings to me in Atsugewi."

Meanwhile, other tribe members try to keep their culture alive. For example, every summer for 16 years Medie Webster's niece, Lillian Snooks, 61, has presented a program about the Atsugewis twice a day, five days a week, at the natural amphitheater behind the information center at the Manzanita Lake entrance to Lassen park.

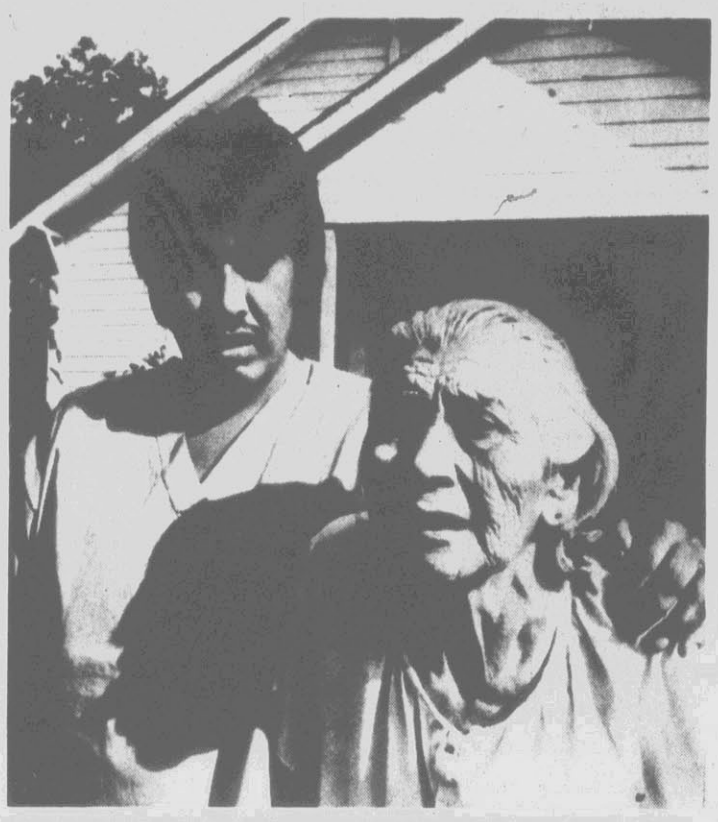

She always mentions the Atsugewi language. Snooks and her sister, Laverna Jenkins, 58, have been National Park Service rangers since 1972.

"The old Indian ways of the Atsugewis are dying fast. That is why I give the programs about my people, a little-known Indian tribe, to help perpetuate what is still known about them before all is lost," Snooks said.

She said that Atsugewi means pine tree people, a name that comes from the forests where the Indians have always lived.

The lakes and mountains in Lassen park, she says, were the spiritual lakes and mountains of the Atsugewi. There were an estimated 2,000 Atsugewis when non-Indians first came to this area 150 years ago.

"We are losing our Indian ways so quickly. Another generation or two and the last traces of Atsugewi culture may well vanish from the face of the Earth," Snooks said.

What Is Remarrying Success Rate?

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Three years ago I divorced a man who had little time for me and our 2-year-old daughter.

The one serious relationship I had since my divorce recently dissolved, and now my ex-husband has been avidly pursuing me. He patiently waited for me during my love affair, and was there to pick up the pieces. Now he wants to remarry me. He's been to counseling and is sure that we can make a go of our marriage if he has another chance.

My question: What is the success rate of your readers who have remarried the spouses they once divorced? I am very much interested in the response this may draw from your readers. Please inquire. It would mean a lot to me. — PERPLEXED IN BETHLEHEM

DEAR PERPLEXED: I'll try. Readers, if you remarried your "ex," how did it work out? Please let me hear from you.

DEAR ABBY: I am engaged to be married soon. Irving (not his real name) is 21 and I am 22. He is a virgin, but I don't think I am. We have talked about sex, and Irving confided that he is apprehensive about his "performance" due to his lack of experience. I have not told him that I may not be a virgin because if he knows this, he will be even more self-conscious about his performance.

It happened on a band trip when I was in high school. It happened only once, and neither one of us knew what we were doing — that's why I can't say for sure whether I'm a virgin or not.

I feel guilty getting married to a man who thinks I'm 100 percent pure, when I may not be. Should I tell him?

Sign me, "Ivory" — or ... 99 PERCENT PURE

DEAR IVORY: Don't volunteer any confessions — 99 percent pure is pure enough.

DEAR ABBY: You recently praised a father for teaching his young son to save money. This is commendable, but equally important as teaching a child to give to charity.

Giving to others is one of the deeply satisfying experiences we can teach our children. — TAUGHT TO GIVE

DEAR TAUGHT: How true. As far back as my memory can take me, every Jewish home had a little blue-and-white box in its kitchen. It was called a "pushkeh," and whenever a family member had good luck, he or she would drop 50 cents or a dollar in the "pushkeh" — for charity. What a wonderful way to celebrate a happy event or good fortune, and what better way to establish the habit of giving!

DEAR ABBY: Thank you from the bottom of my heart for appearing before the Maryland State Legislature last March to plead for a bill to end the use of live animals for testing cosmetics and household products. Even though that bill didn't make it, it was close, and it got national attention because of your celebrity status.

Is there a list of companies that use live animals to test their products? Also, is there a list of companies that do not test their products on live animals? If so, it would be wonderful if you could publish both lists.

DEAR JESSICA: Space in my column is much too limited to publish either list, but both lists are available. Write to: PETA (People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals), P.O. Box 42516, Washington, D.C. 20015.

Send a stamped, self-addressed, long envelope. PETA is a non-profit organization, so please be a dear, and enclose a buck.

What teen-agers need to know about sex, drugs, AIDS, getting along with their peers and parents is now in Abby's updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." Send your name and address, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

FACTS ABOUT VENEERS

Years ago, some people were against using wood furniture with veneer construction. But with improved manufacturing methods and materials, veneered furniture can actually give you more economy, beauty and strength than ever before.

In veneering, slices of grained wood are sandwiched together with the grain of each ply going crosswise to its neighbor, actually making it much stronger and less apt to warp.

Much veneer used in furniture is "five ply", although three and seven ply panels are sometimes used. The most costly woods are often used for veneers. It enables manufacturers to use scarce and beautiful woods in a more efficient and economical way.

The greatest advance in the use of veneers took place when new glues and adhesives were perfected to produce a more secure bond essential to aircraft and marine construction. This process was then applied to furniture construction.

Perhaps the greatest advantage of veneers to the furniture user is that it makes possible more beautiful graining of wood at a popular price.

Meanwhile, to see beautiful furniture of all kinds, we invite you to come in and browse with no hurry and no obligation. We'll look forward to seeing you.

Mobile Mammography Unit available to area women
For Appointment Please Call
Toll Free 1-800-456-9998

According to the American Cancer Society, one out of ten women in the United States will develop breast cancer sometime in her lifetime. It is currently estimated that over 41,000 women die each year as the result of breast cancer.

Ninety percent of breast lumps are found by women themselves. Women who are diagnosed with a cancer large enough to feel have a 50 percent five year survival rate. For women with tumors detected when less than one centimeter by mammography, the 5 year survival rate is almost 100% and the 20 year survival rate is 95%!

Breast disease does not have to be a killer!

The American Cancer Society has established guidelines for mammography in asymptomatic women. (Women who have no symptoms of disease).

Those guidelines have been adopted by the American Medical Association, The American College of Radiology and others.

A screening mammogram is an x-ray of the breast using extremely low dosages of radiation and designed to find very early cancers.

A female technologist who is highly trained in mammography will perform the examination.

Appointments are recommended.

Blue Canoes Serve As Lifelines

By SUE CROSS
Associated Press Writer

ABOARD THE MV LeCONTE (AP) — The tugboat man is in the aft bar, telling tales of giant waves and rolling barges.

Families are homesteading the port side passenger lounge, staking out seats with backpacks and grocery sacks, sleeping on blankets spread in the aisle.

Up on deck, a tourist aims her videocam at sea otters splashing in the kelp, as the ferry thrums past them at a steady 14 knots toward the rock-lined passage of Sergius Narrows.

It's another night on the MV LeConte, one of the nine "blue canoes" of the Alaska Marine Highway System. For 25 years the blue-and-white ships have served as taxis and tour boats to the water-bound towns of Alaska's island regions.

But the system is struggling with increasing demand at all points. Car decks are filling more quickly as passengers come aboard in larger cars, campers, trucks and buses, and the increase in walk-on passengers is even greater.

George Davidson, director of the Marine Highway since 1986, hopes to persuade the federal government to pay for several high-speed ferries, at a cost of $5 million to $15 million each. A long-term plan for the ferry system is being drafted as part of that campaign.

The ferries sail around the clock along a 3,500-mile route, from Seattle up Alaska's Inside Passage and out a separate run across Prince William Sound and along the Aleutian Islands chain.

They carry more than 370,000 people a year and 96,000 vehicles, from tractor-trailer rigs to grocery vans and motorcycles, kayaks and bicycles.

They keep many towns in milk, meat, fresh lettuce and fruit.

They carry villagers to their doctors in larger towns; high school athletes to their rivals' gyms; winter-bound residents on weekend joy rides.

Babies have been born on board; people have died.

"You never really know what will happen," says Bill Unkel, the LeConte purser. "It's basically the same things you have anywhere else — it's just concentrated on a ferry."

The 235-foot LeConte is one of five "village boats" that serve as lifelines to the smaller logging and fishing towns and carry mostly local residents.

Four larger sister ships, the "mainliners," make the longest runs to and from Seattle and Prince Rupert, British Columbia.

Together they're one of Alaska's biggest tourist attractions, a money-saving alternative to the cruise ships that share their scenic routes. The longest trip, a 63-hour voyage from Seattle to Haines, costs $200 for an adult. A 1½-hour run from Homer to Seldovia, the shortest, costs $12.

On the 408-foot Matanuska, 112 staterooms and hundreds of tourists create the atmosphere of a floating hotel. Outfitted with binoculars, passengers line the windows to scan for humpback and killer whales.

But their holiday enthusiasm doesn't disguise the no-nonsense nature of this public transportation. Ferry life is one part whale-watching cruise and one part city bus.

Passengers seeking the gourmet buffets of cruise ships find instead cafeterias reminiscent of school lunch lines. Sailors double as parking attendants when the ferries are in port.

And amid the stern safety warnings on the car deck, a sign instructs passengers they shouldn't wear their sheath knives on board.

"Some of our back-to-the-future gentlemen come aboard with big Bowie knives," says Matanuska Purser Charles Bredehoft. "We do have a dress code."

The ferries stop at 31 communities, visiting most of them at least every few days.

They run according to the tides and politics.

What town gets which ferry and when is a perennial battle at Marine Highway headquarters and within the Alaska Legislature. Lawmakers control the ferry budget, and thus can sway its management.

As the system celebrates 25 years of service, the state also faces long-range questions about the future of its aging fleet.

Some want to replace the slow-but-steady diesel ships with speedier catamarans. Others say the fleet should be trimmed, that the state can't keep a $64 million-a-year ferry system afloat.

Boosters argue that the state's subsidy — about half the total cost — is small change compared to tourist business generated by the ferries.

And yet others say tourism is overshadowing the ferries' first purpose: providing a highway where roads can't be built.

Davidson says basic transportation is the system's most important service.

It is understandable people would peg tourism development on the ferry schedule, but they stand the risk of losing a crucial ferry if there's more demand elsewhere for local residents' use, he says.

Skagway learned that lesson last year. The tourist town has been trying to build its winter business, but was foiled when a weekend ferry from Juneau was canceled so residents on Prince of Wales Island could get to Ketchikan more often.

Some ferry workers question the life span of the current fleet. Three ships — the Malaspina, Matanuska and Taku — have been in service since the Marine Highway's first year of operation, 1963.

The Chilkat is even older. The territorial government bought it in 1957 to replace the area's first ferry, a war surplus Navy landing craft that was privately run beginning in 1949.

The youngest ferry is the Aurora, built in 1977.

Ferry officials also are considering changing the system's southern terminus. Alaska ferries now dock in downtown Seattle, but Bellingham and Tacoma are vying for a new contract to be signed next year.

One of the big complaints of the system's 850 employees is the lack of doctors on board. Pursers trained as emergency trauma technicians have to handle whatever injuries occur until the ferries can get to port.

Bill Unkel, the LeConte purser, says his biggest hassle is calming tourists when a ferry is delayed by loading problems or weather.

"The tourists think they're on a tour boat. They don't understand our main job is to get from point 'A' to point 'B'," Unkel says.

No. 2 on his headache list are the ferry runs crowded with children. The ferries sell 10,000 tickets a year to Alaska students bound for Little League games, swim meets, music competitions and other activities in their neighboring towns.

Most passengers say it is the pleasure of a ferry ride that makes them take the Marine Highway instead of an airplane.

Chapter To Observe Annual Women's Day

American Business Women's Day will be observed by the Pirate Charter chapter of the American Business Women's Association Tuesday starting at 6:30 p.m.

Janice Faulkner, director of the Regional Development Institute, East Carolina University, will be keynote speaker. Her topic will be "Moving In, Moving Up and Moving Out: Leadership in the Corporate Setting."

Ms. Faulkner is chairperson of N.C. Humanities Council, vice president of the state board of the N.C. World Trade Association, and president of the Coastal Plains chapter of NCWTA.

Members of other ABWA chapters have been invited to the buffet which will be held at the Comfort Inn in Greenville. Special guests will include presidents of other business women's organizations in the area.

Reservations for the buffet are required. For further information contact Jean Verdick, chapter president, or Nina Redditt, chapter secretary.

The U.S. Postal Service released its program for next year amid much fanfare and publicity, but with little detail regarding specific designs. The general public, and philatelists in particular, are being teased with only a smattering of information about upcoming issues.

Let's see what's been announced so you can mark it on your calendar.

One of the highlights will be World Expo '89, the first stamp exhibition sponsored by the USPS. For this event there will be a new series consisting of stamps and stationery items. The exhibition will be held simultaneously with the November 1989 meeting of the 20th Congress of the Universal Postal Union in Washington, D.C.

The Expo issues will include a single stamp honoring the exhibition, plus two sets of four designs in different formats, each appearing as a block of four and as a sheetlet. A third sheetlet, several post cards, and an aerogram honoring Montgomery Blair are on tap for the UPU-related series.

Also on the agenda for 1989 will be a tribute to those famous old chugging steamboats. A commemorative booklet of five steamboat designs will feature the steam-powered ships that plied America's rivers and the Great Lakes during the nation's early expansion of settlement and industrial development.

And look out for the dinosaurs, the largest land animals of prehistoric time! A block of four 25-centers showing the famed reptiles common to North America millions of years ago come to life on the designs of the forthcoming stamps.

There will be a commemorative in the American Sports Series honoring Lou Gehrig. Another stamp, in the Black Heritage Series, will hail labor organizer A. Philip Randolph. Conductor Arturo Toscanini, maestro of philharmonic orchestras for many decades, will be spotlighted in the Performing Arts Series.

The Constitution Series will recognize the bicentennials of North Carolina, the House of Representatives, the Senate, the Executive branch, and the drafting of the Bill of Rights. The centennials of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana and Washington state will be duly observed.

A commemorative will honor America's letter carriers, while philanthropist Johns Hopkins will be seen on a Great Americans Series stamp. A joint issue with France will salute the French Revolution.

Of course, the annual Christmas adhesive and the continuing "Love" series should prove popular again on the stamp parade.

The USPS has new postal cards honoring Georgetown's Healy Hall, the Land Run and Oklahoma Territory, plus new items in the America the Beautiful Series.

Some of these upcoming stamps have been previously mentioned, and more will be added to the varied and viable schedule. We'll keep you "posted" as to dates and first-day cancellation opportunites as they become available.

On the Summer Olympics stamp front, the West Indian island nation of Antigua and Barbuda has issued a set of four stamps.

The 40-cent depicts a male gymnast; the 60-cent shows a weightlifter lifting a set of barbells; the $1 illustrates a water polo match; and the $5 pictures two boxers in action. A $5 souvenir sheet shows a female track athlete running with the Olympic torch to ignite the ceremonial flame that starts the Games.

The Marshall Islands, which has no athletes participating in the Olympics, has released its first Olympic set. It features a strip of five vertical 15-cent stamps depicting a young Marshallese male in various stages of throwing the javelin. Another strip of five vertical 25-cent stamps pictures a Marshallese female athlete in a track event. Even though the Marshall Islands does not have a team, it calls these stamps a "Tribute to Future Olympians."

The Maldives, an archipelago of tiny islands and atolls in the Indian Ocean, hails the Olympics with a set of four stamps.

The 15-laura shows a male athlete preparing to toss the discus; the 2-rufiya depicts two men in the 100-meter dash; the 4-rufiya illustrates two gymnastics events — the side horse vault and the rings; and the 12-rufiya features two equestrian competitors in the steeplechase event. A souvenir sheet of 20-rufiya denomination has a male tennis player making a backhand return.

Soviet Gospel Singers

By JOE EDWARDS
Associated Press Writer

DICKSON, Tenn. (AP) — Two Russian gospel singers are spreading a message of Christianity and speaking out against communism, which they say drove them from the Soviet Union.

Nikolai Pankratz and his brother Peter are leaders of the six-member, gospel-rock band Ruscha. The slick, hard-driving group is on the road doing 150 concerts a year, playing mainly for youngsters who hear 90 minutes of rousing music and then 15 minutes of religious and patriotic messages.

"We are cruising across America, grabbing people by the neck and saying, 'Wake up. You've got it good but you are taking your freedom for granted and you shouldn't do that. One day you may wake up and be under persecution yourself,'" said 31-year-old Nikolai.

"People don't believe that will happen," he said. "But we grew up under communism, and we have a very great fear of it spreading across the world."

The brothers said their family was persecuted in the Soviet Union for being Christians and attending underground churches. In 1963, they said, the Soviet secret police came to their house and took their grandfather away.

"He was dragged out in the deep snow in his pajamas," said 29-year-old Peter. "He pointed toward heaven, meaning he'd see us again. That's the last time we saw him. He arrived in a casket two months later. He had frozen to death in Siberia."

The two said their family of eight, after four years of negotiation, paid $3,000 a person to leave the country in 1974 and relocate in Bonn, West Germany, where an aunt lived.

"There's no way to leave unless you sell everything you have," Peter said. "We sold the only cow we had, the chickens we had, the pigs we had. We sold our house and other people pitched in and helped us financially."

From Germany, the brothers came to the United States on student visas, Nikolai in 1978, Peter a year later. Learning English without formal lessons, they studied at the Word of Life bible institute in upstate New York for a year. They then enrolled at Jerry Falwell's Liberty University in Lynchburg, Va., where they received undergraduate degrees.

"He really helped us out," Nikolai said about Falwell. "We didn't know anything about America. He kind of took us under his wing. Our whole life in this country started right there. We sang in his church and on his TV show. He financed an album and got us into his school."

The two have since decided to make their home in Dickson, about 40 miles west of Nashville.

They first began performing under the name Russia but learned that the name had a bad connotation in the United States. Because of the name, their touring bus was vandalized several times.

"We got fed up and did something about it," Peter said. "Americans don't realize there could be good Russians."

They changed the spelling to Ruscha.

The two-year-old band now consists of the brothers plus Americans Andy Denton, Michael Jackson, Billy Williams and Scott Beck.

Their debut album, "Come Alive," was released earlier this year. Their first single is "Come Home," which has been No. 1 on the gospel-rock charts in many cities.

Their concerts are mostly in auditoriums and some in churches.

"We play some places no one else goes," Nikolai said. "People are getting to know us. That's pretty good.

"We want to get a message across through our music. It's a vehicle. We try to tell the American people that people don't know what it's like under communism. Also, we'd like to educate them that it's a dangerous thing and that there is an answer to life: God.

"What we are trying to do is what a lot of people of America are failing to do: be able to grab kids' attention and say, 'Don't be a lazy bum. Support your government. Support your country. Stand up for the rights of America.'

"If we're able to change the young people's attitude toward the country, change their lifestyle away from drugs and alcohol and sex and homosexuality, then I think we've done a whole lot more good than 99 percent of the churches in America."

The brothers are not U.S. citizens, but this is a goal. "We'd love that more than anything else," Peter said.

Low Profile Maintained By Noted Canadian Writer

By JEFF BRADLEY
Associated Press Writer

MONTREAL (AP) — Hugh MacLennan secured a place in Canadian letters, and the nation's political lexicon, when he explored the cultural schism between French and English Canada in his evocative 1945 novel, "Two Solitudes."

The title became a code word for the linguistic divide, and MacLennan was credited with almost single-handedly creating "Can Lit," a new wave of writing set in Canada that also spelled success for Margaret Laurence, Robertson Davies and Margaret Atwood.

In a conversation at his makeshift office in an old YMCA building, MacLennan, 81, said "Two Solitudes" is "a book a French-Canadian couldn't have written. They couldn't even do it now. They're too close to it."

Questions draw a stream of observations from a man hooked on history and the classics and has Thomas Wolfe and Gabriel Garcia Marquez on his shelves and praises Hemingway as "the American Byron."

In quick succession, he says Canada is a nation founded by losers but that's no bad thing; cites Aristotle's maxim that "drama depends on the familiar"; theorizes that the fall of the Roman Empire was due to currency devaluation, and praises Harry Truman's fluency in Latin.

Now collecting thoughts for a book of memoirs, MacLennan keeps a surprisingly low profile for a man the Reader's Guide to the Canadian Novel calls "a writer of unique stature."

In a voice retaining the Gaelic lilt of his native Cape Breton, as well as the rasp of a chain-smoker, MacLennan says he never made much money from "Two Solitudes" after sacrificing royalties to get it published. "I only got 40 percent — still do."

Seldom interviewed or mentioned on radio and TV, MacLennan has published only seven novels and one book of essays in half a century. "I endlessly rewrite," he explains.

But five of those novels won the country's highest literary prize, the Governor General's Award, and "Two Solitudes" has been translated into at least eight languages.

Critics reserve their highest praise for later books such as "Each Man's Son" and "The Watch That Ends The Night," but it is "Two Solitudes" that struck the strongest chord in both English and French and was made into a movie.

Built around French-Canadian aristocrat Athanase Tallard and his son, Paul, the novel describes the clash between French Quebec, with its almost medieval Catholicism, and the mercantile English who once ran the province.

"I remember my publisher thought it would be too gloomy a title, but I said no, leave it," said MacLennan, who recently reread the book for the first time in years and concluded, "It's better than I thought."

The title came from a letter written by the German poet Rainer Maria Rilke who said that even in love, there were two solitudes.

MacLennan met an icy critical reception when he returned to the subject of Quebec in his prophetic 1967 novel "Return of the Sphinx," which predicted separatist violence in the province with fathers and sons on opposite sides.

Three years later, he was vindicated when revolutionary violence erupted, changing Quebec politics forever.

"I feel sympathy for these people," he says, referring to the one-in-four Canadians who speak French at home. "This continent is never going to start speaking French."

He didn't anticipate the dramatic advances French-Canadians would make by the 1980s, taking political and economic control of their province, embracing the entrepreneurial spirit and breaking the shackles of the priests.

"It was like lightning. They started going to college and became more prosperous," says MacLennan, who arrived in Montreal in 1935 to teach Latin and Greek at Lower Canada College boy's school and has never left.

He credits an old Montreal friend, former Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, with keeping the country together during Quebec's separatist explosion and having the vision to build a more tolerant, bilingual nation.

"Pierre was the only man who could have handled that situation when it came. He's absolutely without peer," he says, adding with a chuckle that Trudeau is also a mysterious fellow who in his youth liked to drive around Montreal on a motorcycle wearing a German helmet.

The son of a Presbyterian doctor, the young MacLennan knew more about Hitler's Germany and Stalin's Soviet Union than he did his own country after going to Oxford as a Rhodes scholar and using the opportunity to travel across Europe.

"It was the best education I could ever have. For about a year I thought I was a Communist but it didn't last long," he says, echoing a theme explored with great understanding in his 1958 novel, "The Watch That Ends The Night."

He recalls disillusionment on a Moscow visit in the 1930s when commissars tried to claim that since the revolution, cows could be milked four times a day.

MacLennan met his American first wife, Dorothy, on the ship back from Oxford and credits her with shaping his career. "She really woke me up to the fact that Canada was a different country than the States."

Her slow death from heart disease is also the heroine's fate in "The Watch That Ends The Night," which MacLennan completed as she was dying.

After his first two novels were rejected by publishers — "They said he doesn't write like an American, and he doesn't write like an Englishman" — MacLennan found his voice in 1941 with a story set in Canada.

"Barometer Rising" is a World War I saga based on a harrowing moment in MacLennan's childhood, the Halifax explosion of 1917. He narrowly escaped death when a French munitions ship filled with explosives collided with a freighter in the harbor. It was the largest non-nuclear explosion in history and killed more than 1,600 people.

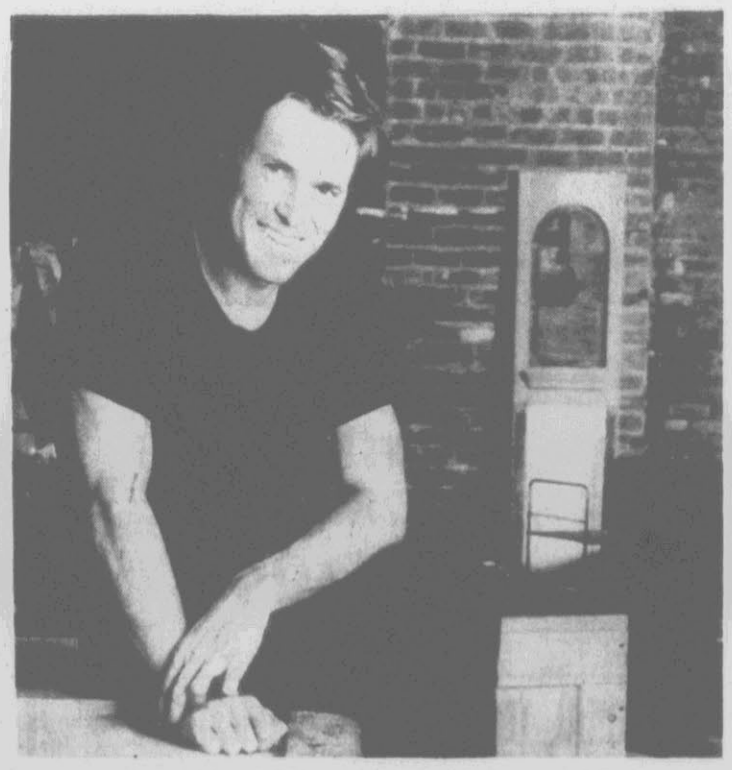

"I was this far away from being beheaded," said the author, cupping his hands 2 feet apart.

It's eight years since the book MacLennan swears will be his last novel, "Voices in Time," which links Nazi Germany, separatist Quebec and the world after a cataclysmic future conflict dubbed "the Destructions."

"I spent 12 years writing it. I was lost in it. I finally came to the conclusion that the most lethal people in the world are politicians."

WEEPING ICON — Worshipers approach the icon that appears to be shedding tears at St. Nicholas Albanian Orthodox Church on Chicago's northwest side. The painting of the Virgin May first appeared to weep in 1986 and continued for seven months. Last week a parishoner noted the phenomena had started again and since them thousands have stood in line for hours to see the miraculous sign. (AP Laserphoto by Walter Kale)

SURPRISED BY PROTESTS — Actor Willem Dafoe poses following an interview at New York's Performing Garage, home of the Wooster Group, an experimental theater company of which he is a member. Dafoe, who plays the title role in the controversial film, "The Last Temptation of Christ," says he was a little surprised by the fierce protests the movie has drawn from some religious groups. Kansas Group Fosters Trees For Life Program In India

By DILIP GANGULY
Associated Press Writer

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Holy men in their traditional saffron robes will hand over 4 million guava saplings and papaya seeds to Hindu pilgrims at a religious fair in January in a unique effort to get people to plant trees as a way of saving their land and improving their livelihood.

The idea is that of an American volunteer group called Trees for Life in Wichita, Kan.

"It is something very new, very original, very challenging," said Deepak Nirula, the Indian representative of the organization, which aims to plant 5 million tress in poor countries to provide food and fuel for needy people.

The group is headed in Wichita by Balbir Mathur, who was born in India but is now a naturalized American. Mathur plans to raise $15 million in small contributions in the United States to finance the effort.

The organization is hiring Indian holy men and volunteers to distribute the saplings and seeds at Kumbh Mela, a three-week fair to be held in Allahabad in central India, beginning Jan. 14. The religious fair is held every 12 years and attracts more than 10 million Hindu pilgrims who bathe in the holy Ganges River during a particularly auspicious configuration of the planets, the sun and the moon.

"We figured out that if we can give it a holy touch to the tree plantation drive, it can work," Nirula said in an interview.

"The saplings and seeds will be part of the holy offering which no Hindu ignores, so we hope when they go back to their respective villages they will plant the saplings and the seeds," said Nirula, who runs a chain of fast food restaurants in New Delhi.

"We may be accused of exploiting the religious sentiments of the people, but it is for a good cause."

Trees for Life is one of the 175 organizations in India trying to save the fast depleting forests. Each year, the country loses a total of 3.7 million acres of forest.

"It is a very serious problem," said Joyce Shankaran, a director at the National Wastelands Development Board, the official body that oversees the work of the volunteer organizations.

It is estimated that at the current rate of deforestation, India will lose nearly 10 million acres of woodlands, an area equal to the size of Switzerland, in the next five years.

Until a few years ago, the Indian government was saddled with misleading statistics from forest guards that all was green. It was thought that 22 percent of the country's 812-million-acre land mass was under forest cover. Ecologists say that the ideal forest cover should be 33 percent of the land mass, but 22 percent was considered acceptable in a nation of 800 million people.

From satellite photographs of India, however, the government determined that only about 10 percent of the land mass was under good forest cover.

The entire Himalayan ecosystem is threatened as a consequence, with snow lines moving higher and perennial springs drying up because of lack of precipitation.

Vanishing forests also affect wildlife. Government reports say that some of the 350 species of mammals, 1,200 species of birds and 2,000 species of insects in India are threatened. Some may have been lost already.

"Government alone can't save the forest; it has gone beyond the control of any government," said Akhil Chander, a volunteer working in New Delhi.

"There has to be a massive people's movement including individuals, voluntary organizations, schools and private and public institution," Chander said.

The Trees for Life group is working in five Indian states. The most visible project is in Allahabad where the group is planting papaya saplings.

"Our aim is 700,000 papaya tress in Allahabad; we have already planted 200,000," Nirula said. The group wants to plant 2.7 million trees and set up 800 beehives in India by the end of 1989.

"This will mean an extra 13.5 million tons of fruit, fuel and fodder; 88,000 pounds of honey, and save 5,000 tons of wood from being used as fuel for cooking," Nirula said.

The need for firewood and fodder, or coarse food for cattle, in India is about 133 million tons a year, but only 36 million tons are available in state-run stores. The rest comes from illegal felling of trees, government investigations indicate.

The Trees for Life group spends about $3 for planting a fruit tree.

"Our message is very clear and loud," Nirula said. "Plant fruit trees and you will not go hungry.

"A $3 apple tree produces 10,000 pounds of apple in its lifetime. ... Can you imagine going to your grocer and asking him to give you 10,000 pounds of fruit for $3?

"The grocer can't, but Trees for Life can."

A FANTASY VINE GARDEN — Kudzu, a tough, fast growing vine often used to help control erosion, has a habit of having its own way in covering large areas if not controlled. On the outskirts of Snow Hill in Greene County, kudzu has created a fantasy vine garden, transforming bushes and trees in its path into shapes that resemble some rather strange sculptures in vivid green. In September, the deep purple flower clusters of kudzu emits a strong, sweet fragrance that almost overpowers one's senses. (Reflector Photo by Jerry Raynor)

Plantation Recreates 19th Century Life In The Mississippi Delta

By JOE ROGERS
Jackson Clarion-Ledger

GREENWOOD, Miss. (AP) — Florewood River Plantation State Park is a living anachronism. While the rest of the world exists in the present, Florewood transports visitors to the Mississippi Delta of the 1850's.

"This is not only a historical park, it's living history," said manager Ed Lucic. "There's no more quite like it in the Southeast.

That's because Florewood doesn't just show history, it tells it. Seven interpreters, portraying roles from tutor to blacksmith, explain what life was like on a Delta plantation before the Civil War.

The effect is not unlike what might be achieved with a time machine. Whenever possible, Lucic even has some of the staff cook up an old-fashioned meal to share with the tourists — complete with biscuits, greens, okra, squash, and other goodies from the park's garden.

"It gives a better idea than just saying, 'This is the kitchen, and this is what they would have done,'" Lucic said.

"Visitors love it. Especially those from up North who've never seen any Southern cooking or sampled it."

That's a prime purpose for Florewood — luring those Yankee tourist dollars from folks who missed the good fortune to actually be Southern.

But it isn't the only aim. Florewood also plays host to thousands of Mississippi school students every year, giving them a glimpse of a way of life long gone.

A way of life Florewood re-creates. Or replicates. Florewood was not an actual plantation.

But in 1972 the Legislature provided for the purchase of just over 100 acres of land by LeFlore County, which then deeded the land to the state for the park.

In 1976 Florewood opened complete with a planter's mansion, smokehouse, blacksmith shop, grist mill, sawmill, church-school, overseer's house and other buildings that would have made up an actual plantation covering about 1,000 acres.

Visitors can begin their exploration at the main office, which also houses the Cotton Museum, gift shop and snack bar. From there a tram runs to the mansion, where they receive a guided tour. Don't expect a Natchez-size antebellum dwelling — people didn't have that kind of money in the Delta back then. But the antique furnishings are real, including a bed owned by Confederate Gen. Nathan Bedford Forrest.

From there visitors are on their own to walk the grounds at their own pace, assisted by an informational guidesheet and map.

About 27,000 people found their way through in the fiscal year just ended, including all those who came for special events. Two of the most special are the annual fall harvest and Christmas tours.

Fall harvest is the next special event, occurring Oct. 22. It is centered on the making of cane syrup from cane raised on the plantation, and includes cotton-picking and corn-shucking contests, squaredancing and the like.

In November there is usually a Civil War encampment and mock battle, featuring about 80 mock soldiers. This year's is tentatively set for Nov. 12 and 13.

And the first weekend in December annually marks the end of the full-time park tours, with the highlight a candlelight tour on Saturday night.

From then until March 1 the park operates on a limited basis, with only three interpreters and the tour limited to a tram ride through the grounds.

TAKE A LITTLE ADVICE FROM YOUR POWER COMPANY. DON'T BUY THIS HOUSE.

The house is absolutely gorgeous. The craftsmanship, from the foundation to the finest detail of the molding to the wiring, is first-rate.

But it does not meet North Carolina Power's energy-efficiency standards. So it can't be called an Energy Saver Home.®

That means you could be stuck paying through the nose for utilities for the next 30 years.

IF YOU FIND A HOME THAT'S MORE ENERGY-EFFICIENT THAN AN ENERGY SAVER HOME, THEN BUY IT.

Chances are, you won't find a home that saves you on heating and cooling bills like a North Carolina Power Energy Saver Home. Energy Saver Home standards are some of the very highest among builders and contractors. They're even higher than the original standards set over a decade ago during the energy crisis.

ONLY A NORTH CAROLINA POWER ENERGY SAVER HOME COMES WITH A GUARANTEE.

You actually receive a written warranty that spells out what it means to own an Energy Saver Home. While there are plenty of "energy-efficient" homes out on the market, only an Energy Saver Home guarantees that every part of it must meet these strict standards set by North Carolina Power. If a part of your new home fails to meet those standards, then adjustments will be made at no cost to you.

AN ENERGY SAVER HOME IS INSULATED IN PLACES YOU'D EXPECT, AND IN PLACES YOU NEVER DREAMED OF.

An energy-efficient home needs a good air infiltration package to keep out both airborne contaminants and unwanted moisture. This package on an Energy Saver Home is better than most. An air infiltration package also seals the cavities surrounding doors and windows where most air leakage occurs. Energy Saver Homes also feature rigid insulating sheathing outside of stud walls to reduce heat transfer.

Look at it this way, an Energy Saver Home is not unlike a thermos. It is built to keep the atmosphere you want inside—and the heat, humidity or cold you don't want outside. To do this, it has been constructed to some very exacting standards.

BUY AN ENERGY SAVER HOME AND YOU COULD QUALIFY FOR A LARGER MORTGAGE.

Since you'll be spending less money on heating and cooling, you can spend more money on a home. Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae lending institutions recognize the cost savings of energy-efficient homes and therefore allow for far more flexibility in qualifying for a mortgage. This is especially important for people trying to get into their first home.

IMAGINE HOW NICE AN ENERGY SAVER HOME WILL LOOK TO PROSPECTIVE BUYERS.

Prospective homebuyers will appreciate the money that an energy-efficient home will save them. They might, in fact, be willing to pay a little more for it. In today's competitive home market, you might need all the help you can get if you decide to put your house on the market.

Remember, if the house you want to buy doesn't have an Energy Saver Home sign, don't buy it. Call your builder, realtor or local North Carolina Power office for more information about Energy Saver Homes.

China And Russia Move Closer Together In Border Areas

MANZHOULI, China (AP) — The clatter of freight trains has replaced the crackle of gunfire and the whoosh of combat jets in this town on the Soviet border.

Criss-crossing the rolling grasslands of Inner Mongolia and Siberia, the trains provide noisy testimony to improving relations between China and the Soviet Union.

While officials in Beijing and Moscow still haggle over political matters, businessmen in Manzhouli and dozens of other towns along the 5,000-mile border are eagerly cementing closer economic ties.

"The Russians are very easy to deal with," said Zhang Chengbin, a businessman from a state-run firm that sold $31.4 million in meat to the Soviets in the first six months of this year. "They're like the Americans, they don't worry too much about prices."

"Now's the time to get in on the trade," said Zhang Wei, a private businessman in Harbin, provincial capital of Heilongjiang. "In the next couple of years it will explode. The Soviets don't have enough things and they like Chinese goods."

In Manzhouli, connected to Russia by rail since 1901, Soviet trucks, chemical fertilizer, wood, steel, iron ore, electrical generators and bulldozers cram freight cars, moving south into the Chinese heartland.

Soviet railway workers and trade delegations walk freely around the town of 30,000, dotted with traditional Russian houses, their log-cabin walls painted yellow and blue.

"It's fascinating to be here," said Andrev Vedernikov, a Russian railway worker, as he strolled down Sino-Soviet Road, the town's main street. "Manzhouli is like a small museum of Russia 50 years ago."

Across the border in Zabaikalsk, freight cars packed with Chinese meats, fruit, vegetables, grains, television sets, radios and thermos bottles fill the station.

"You think there are many trains here?" said Vadim Evdokimov, another railway worker, as he looked out over Manzhouli's cluttered freight yard. "Zabaikalsk is even busier."

Chinese press reports say that in the first six months of this year, trade between the Soviet Union and China reached $1.3 billion, a 32 percent jump when compared to the same period last year. But Chinese businessmen said the real amount could rival China's trade with the United States, which hit $10 billion last year.

Indeed, on Aug. 29, the official Xinhua News Agency reported that combined trade in the border provinces of Heilongjiang and Xinjiang had hit $707 million in the first half of 1988, or about 800 percent above their total for all of 1987.

After two decades of tense relations, China and the Soviet Union started trading again in the early 1980s. It began with barter. This year, it expanded to include purchases with currency from a third country, usually American dollars, and the export of Chinese labor to the Soviet Union. In a further twist, Chinese officials in Heilongjiang said privately they expect Soviet technical advisers to return soon to China.

"In the 1950s, we traded because we were friends," said Xing Wenzhao, an official in Heilongjiang's Bureau of Foreign Trade. "Now, we do it because we need to. That is a healthy development."

Chinese officials say labor export could become the most important part of Sino-Soviet trade. Several said that China could easily supply the manpower to develop Siberia.

In its report Aug. 29, Xinhua said about 10,000 Chinese workers were expected to head to the Soviet Union over the next year for construction and farming.

Labor export began in July when more than 100 Chinese construction workers went to Zabaikalsk to build a gymnasium, several dormitories and a dining hall. Earlier in the year, 77 Chinese peasants were given 1,071 acres to grow cucumbers and watermelons in the Soviet Union north of Vladivostok across the border from Suifenhe, another important trading post.

"We gave the Russians half and then sold them the rest," said a Chinese official in Harbin who worked on the contract. "We're looking at it as a model for future deals. It makes perfect sense because we have a huge work force and they have a lot of land."

For their part, Soviet officials in Manzhouli said they were interested in China for its consumer goods and food.

"Our agriculture and our light industry are weak," said a Soviet businessman, who spoke on condition of anonymity. "China for us is like a big supermarket. Their stuff is generally good and inexpensive."

In the early 1950s, the Soviet Union sent thousands of Soviet technical advisers to China to help set up factories.

But relations soured in the late 1950s as China embraced a development model that emphasized people over machines, radically different from the Soviet plan.

By 1962, all Soviet advisers had left China. Several years later, as China moved farther left in its Cultural Revolution, firefights broke out periodically along the border. In 1969, Soviet and Chinese troops fought pitched battles on Damansky Island, or Zhenbao in Chinese, on the Ussuri River. Clashes spread to Inner Mongolia.

"At night, gunshots would echo all around the valley," said Wen He, a 59-year-old railroad worker, who sent his three sons south for a year to protect them. "In the daytime, their jets and ours would fly above the town. We were all scared."

Ties began improving slowly in the late 1970s, after Deng Xiaoping took power and instituted a series of reforms to open China to the West. They have improved further since Mikhail S. Gorbachev became Soviet Communist Party chief in 1985 and began to reform his country.

"Now all you hear at night in Manzhouli are train whistles," said Guan Lancheng, a 54-year-old coal miner, as he strolled to his house on a bluff overlooking the hills of Siberia. "It is very peaceful."

Economic relations have not proceeded without glitches. The Chinese complain that the Soviets give them only their worst timber and charge that Soviet business practices are not flexible enough.

The Soviets accuse the Chinese of trying to cheat them. They also complain that China's poor railways and road network are hampering trade growth.

Soviet officials have provided some help to the Chinese transportation system, floating Beijing a $180-million loan earlier this year to recommence work on a railway to connect China's far west to Soviet Central Asia.

Both countries have moved to further relax trade restrictions.

As of Aug. 13, the two countries dropped visa requirements for businessmen. More border trading posts have opened. And in July, China announced that local governments — not only those in border provinces — would be allowed to cut deals with their Soviet counterparts.

"From that point on it's been very busy in Manzhouli," said Xue Guiyuan, vice chairman of Manzhouli's Committee for Foreign Trade. "Everyone is coming here to talk to the Soviets. Our hotels are packed. We're a hot spot, which is kind of odd for such a little town."

A Warm Welcome

By JOHN POMFRET
Associated Press Writer

MANZHOULI, China (AP) — At the Crying Deer Restaurant on Sino-Soviet Road, chef Sun Zhaomin cracks a toothless grin and runs to the back to grab two plates of his famous salad.

"Soviet friends, you've returned," he shouts. "Soviet friends, we welcome you."

Andrev Vedernikov and Vadim Evdokimov, railway workers in this town on the Soviet border, have come back for another meal.

Down the street, at the International Guest House, members of the Soviet Friendship Delegation from Zabaikalsk dance the night away with their counterparts from the Manzhouli Sino-Soviet Friendship Committee.

At the close of the evening, under revolving green and red disco lights, Xue Guiyuan, a Chinese trade official, waxes melodramatic.

"Two great nations are becoming friends again," he says. "Two peoples are moving closer together."

On train No. 390, heading east from Manzhouli, Ira Shamrett, 48, and her son, Kostya, 19, are off to see relatives in Harbin, the provincial capital of China's Heilongjiang province.

"We come from Siberia," announces Mrs. Shamrett in rusty Chinese, learned in the five years she spent in Harbin as a youngster. "It's been more than 30 years since I saw my brother."

"I hope to learn about kung-fu," said her son. "It's becoming very popular back home."

Just as trade has blossomed between China and the Soviet Union, so have contacts between Chinese and Soviets. Since last year, China has allowed Soviets to return to its border provinces to visit relatives who stayed after relations between the two countries deteriorated in the late 1950s. The Soviets have done the same for Chinese with family in Siberia and Soviet Central Asia.

Both countries also have dropped visa requirements for businessmen.

Vedernikov, 30, and Evdokimov, 29, who work on Soviet freight trains between Manzhouli and Zabaikalsk, studied Chinese for five years at the Chita Pedagogical Institute, about 180 miles from the Chinese border.

Now they handle freight and mail, which have both increased markedly as trade between the countries rises.

"I had a choice between a job as a teacher or work on this train," said Evdokimov, speaking a mixture of Chinese and English. "The job is boring, but I wanted to see China. It fascinates me strongly."

Vedernikov hopes to parlay his excellent Chinese into a job as a businessmen.

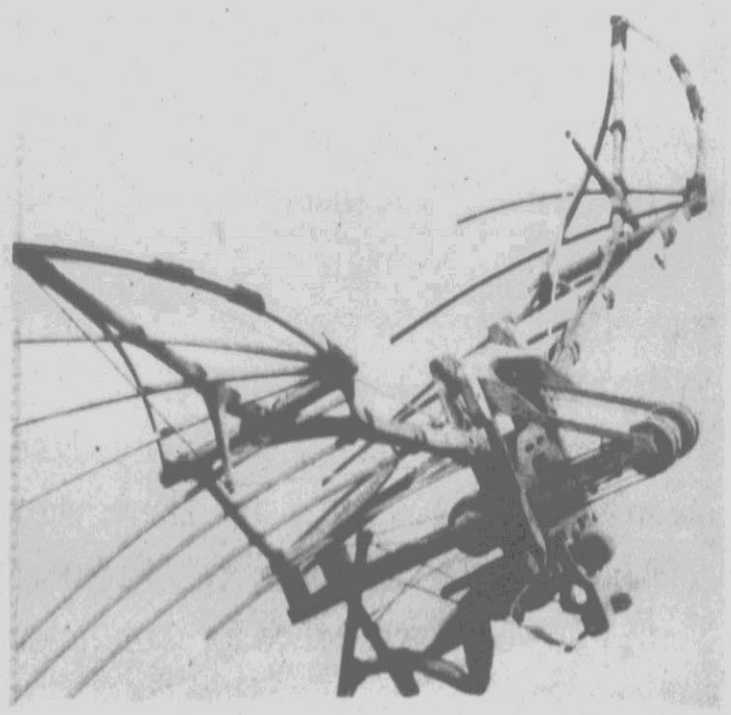

"I was trained to be a translator, but when I finished school in 1980 things were still bad between our countries so there were no jobs. Now there's much possibility," he said.

The two men said they were impressed at the economic growth in China, especially at the relative abundance of vegetables and consumer goods. They also noted the increasing number of private businesses, of which the Crying Deer is one.

"Private or cooperative businesses in the Soviet Union are just beginning, but here they've been going on for about five years now," said Vedernikov. "I think they can teach us very much."

Sun, a 61-year-old former member of China's famed Eighth Route Army and regarded as the best chef in town, agrees.

"I say open the borders wide and we'll show them how to make money," he said. "That would be a twist."

Trio Changes Concert Site

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Hurricane Gilbert stole the show from Frank Sinatra, Liza Minnelli and Sammy Davis Jr. in Texas this weekend, and the trio announced they will begin their national concert tour in Arizona instead.

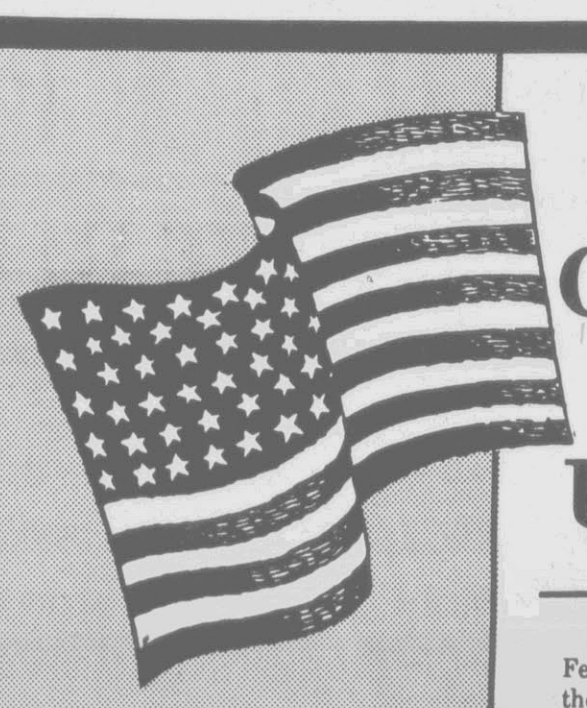

The three had been scheduled to open Saturday at Houston's Summit Arena but uncertainty over the storm's direction forced them to shift to a show Sunday at Arizona State University in Tempe, spokeswoman Susan Reynolds said Thursday. The Houston appearance was rescheduled.

Sinatra has performed with Miss Minnelli and Davis, but all three have never performed together, Ms. Reynolds said.

The trio have been rehearsing at Davis' California home for several days.

"They're having a lot of fun together," she said.

"History," said Henry Ford, "is more or less bunk."

Tokyo, Broadway Of The Orient

By MONIKA JAIN
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — Step aside noh and kabuki, and make way for the Metropolitan Opera, Zubin Mehta and "42nd Street."

Those familiar names in such Western culture capitals as London and New York are finding homes in Tokyo.

"Japanese people are internationalizing," said theater critic Kenichiro Shirahama. "From the destruction of war, the country has rebuilt itself and now become a glittering show business market."

The lineup of summer goodies lends weight to the claim, with Rudolf Nureyev, La Scala and the New York City Ballet among the many heavyweights bound for Tokyo to appease local hunger pangs for foreign theater.

"It's 'event heaven' here," said Shirahama, who has also published several books on Japanese theater.

For star performers, a Tokyo engagement usually is more than just stage appearances. Many are given plum TV spots plugging sponsor products in their contracts.

"We even get requests from foreign artists to sponsor them in Tokyo," said Norio Takahashi of the Japan Performing Arts Corp. "They've recognized the clout Japan holds and the need to succeed here."

For giant corporations, doubling as sponsors for the eager artists "is a way of polishing the company name," Takahashi said, though they rarely make profits because of the astronomical costs and heavy taxes involved.

Asahi Breweries paid dearly when it sponsored a recent Met tour: It picked up a tab of $3 million to put the company on stage. But the amount is small compared to the estimated $17 million needed to transport Milan's 500-member La Scala opera in September.

Hefty door prices are inevitable to offset the production costs. But for the yen-strong Japanese, who still buy if the price is high, money is no obstacle.

Peter Brook's "The Mahabharata," for example, was sold out months in advance despite the $270 ticket price for the nine-hour play. Choice box seats for two were tagged at $615 each.

"Japan is an affluent society," said Toshiko Kuronuma, director of Japan Arts Corp. "People can afford the high prices for the tickets."

She also said the Japanese people are no longer satisfied with home productions of opera and ballet and now want to see "the real thing."

"Their tastes have gone up," Kuronuma said.

Language is also no handicap for the Japanese audience. The shows make sure to cater to every need.

During its tour, the second to Japan but the first in 13 years outside North America, the Met projected Japanese subtitles on a small screen above the stage. "42nd Street," meanwhile, made do with simultaneous interpretation.

But "The Phantom of the Opera" went one step further and was both translated and adapted for a local theater group, as were other musicals, including "Cats," "La Cage aux Folles" and "Les Miserables."

As for "The Greatest Show On Earth," which made its international debut last month in northern Sapporo, the singing American ringmaster is pulling in crowds with shouts of "subarashii zoo-san, okashii piero" ("amazing elephants, strange clowns") — after a two-month Japanese-language crash course.

In order to accommodate the flood of imported productions, concert and theater halls have been sprouting up all over Tokyo. In less than three years, more than a dozen have opened their doors, while about eight more halls will be inaugurated next year.

Probably the most ambitious to date has been the Tokyo Globe Theater, a pinkish gray 650-seat structure built at a cost of $15.4 million. It was inaugurated with a performance by the Royal Shakespeare Company in April. Across town, the Casals Hall, dedicated to the late cellist Pablo Casals, opened last December.

The sleek, new Suntory Hall was the site for the Israeli Philharmonic Orchestra conducted by Mehta. Seating over 2,000, it was among the first of the modern music halls to open its doors to imported artists two years ago.

The rise in foreign theater has definitely influenced interest for new halls. "It's a good feeling to listen to music in pleasant surroundings," Kuronuma said.

She dismissed criticisms that the Japanese interest in foreign productions was merely a boom, and said it was even likely to replace noh and kabuki as the major theater form.

"Noh and kabuki appeal to the older generations," Kuronuma said, "but opera, ballet and the like attract a bigger group of people, including the young crowd.

"With them the trend is toward internationalizing." Japanese theater, she added, is "too traditional."

Kingsley Returns To The Theater

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — After his once-in-a-lifetime role as the saintly Indian leader in "Gandhi," Ben Kingsley faced the issue of what to do with the rest of his career.

He solved it by returning to his roots in the theater. Now, five years after his Academy Award, he has completed five film projects in a year. The roles range from Shostakovich in "Testimony" to Lenin in an Italian miniseries to Dr. Watson in "Without a Clue" (with Michael Caine as Sherlock Holmes).

Kingsley's current release, "Pascali's Island," has drawn critical praise for his carefully shaded portrayal of an informer on a Turkish-held island in the Mediterranean early in the century.

The British actor was here for the opening of "Pascali's Island." He is a slight, semi-bald man whose diffident manner belies the onstage electricity he can generate as Hamlet or in his one-man show about the English actor Edmund Kean.

The character of Basil Pascali is full of complexities — loyalty vs. betrayal, sexual ambiguity. How does Kingsley explain him?

"Wow," he exclaimed. "I hope I have explained him in my performance. I'm always hesitant to explain. It's like an artist who paints a portrait, and then he bores you by saying how he painted it and why. The painting should speak for itself.

"Pascali is a very complex character; he's hard to talk about. He exists on several levels: he's a spy; he loves a woman, and that love is unrequited; he's a man who thinks in Turkish and speaks in English; he's a man who has a very private ambition and a private dream that no one knows about. That's four levels already.

"It was easier to play the whole, composite man. You know the story of the ant and the centipede? Where the ant says to the centipede: 'How do you walk with all those legs?' And the next day the ant finds the centipede on his back, counting his legs. He'd never thought about it before. I think acting is a bit like that."

Kingsley researched his role with customary thoroughness. That included the Turkish language.

"Apparently it is impeccable, I'm happy to say. There were some Turks around the location (on Simi, near Rhodes). Between takes they would come up to me and speak fluent Turkish. I had to apologize and say, 'I'm sorry but I can only speak the 17 lines that are in the screenplay,'" he said.

"I had a very good teacher in England, and I had eight lessons of one-hour long and learned it by ear, like a musical score. I did know what I was saying, but I learned it phonetically."

"Pascali's Island" is directed by James Dearden, the man who wrote "Fatal Attraction," and co-stars Charles Dance ("The Jewel in the Crown") and Helen Mirrin ("Mosquito Coast"). It was a reunion for Kingsley and Dance.

"When I was in the Royal Shakespeare Company 12 years ago," Kingsley recalled, "I did a play called 'Hamlet,' and I played Hamlet and Charles played Fortinbras. We became good friends. Theater companies do bind people together. It's like a little army of people, and we go over the top every night."

Born in Lancashire, Ben Kingsley started in the theater at the top, in the Royal Shakespeare Company. No spear-carrying, no repertory. He found himself performing among the most distinguished actors of the English theater. After four years, he moved to the Royal Court, then the National Theater. In 1980, Richard Attenborough chose Kingsley, who is part Indian, for the epic "Gandhi."

After the Oscar, Kingsley devoted himself to "Kean" and other plays, declining some heavy offers from Hollywood.

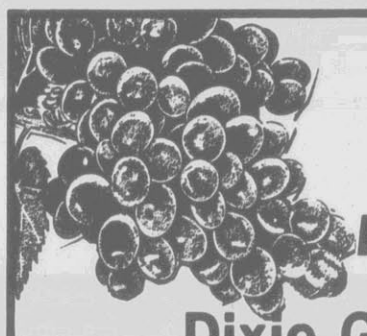

"When I won the Academy Award, I was not too well acquainted with the community here," he explained. "I'm a little bit more so now, and I'm very fond of it. But it does have an energy of its own that can rush you down a certain path, and you can get stuck.

"I have very good advisers in London, New York and Los Angeles who work for the same company. They field most of the things, and they advise me very carefully. So I find that I didn't burn myself out, that five years later I can still present a variety of work.

"I think what keeps me less crazy — because it's all relative — is my life in the theater and going out on the stage night after night after night and being dependent on concentration, a loyalty to the play and a loyalty to my fellow actors, without whom you can achieve nothing.

THE HUMAN SIDE — Actor Tom Berenger, who starred in the film "Platoon" and others in which he plays a bad guy, says he enjoys bringing out the human side of the bad-guy roles he's played. (AP Laserphoto)

Dreams Of A Manmade River To Water Arid Libya

By FRANCES D'EMILIO
Associated Press Writer

BREGA, Libya (AP) — Despite sagging oil revenues, Libya is pushing ahead with Col. Moammar Gadhafi's dream of piping fresh water from deep under the Sahara Desert to the shores of Tripoli and other thirsty coastal areas.

Gadhafi maintains his Great Manmade River Project will transform a nation that is 95 percent desert into a "Garden of Eden" abloom in fruits, vegetables and grain.

One underpinning of the project is U.S. technology, reportedly in place before January 1986, when the Reagan administration ordered American companies to stop doing business in Libya on grounds that Libyans were behind terrorism aimed at Americans and other Westerners.

Gadhafi, riding in a beat-up Range Rover behind Bedouins on horses, came here Aug. 26, 1986, to inaugurate the factory that makes the concrete-and-steel pipes for the "river." Since then, about 280 miles of the planned 12,500-mile pipeline have been laid in a trench cut through sand and underlying rock.

The first stage, estimated to cost $4.5 billion, calls for 1,180 miles of pipeline to carry half a billion gallons of fresh water daily from wells in east central Libya to a reservoir at Ajdabiya near the coast on the Gulf of Sidra for distribution to areas near Sirte and Benghazi.

In 1986, officials predicted the first stage would be completed in 1989. But factory manager Osman Jaouda estimated recently it would be finished in 1991.

The South Korean construction company Dong-Ah is cranking out the pipes and digging through the desert to lay them down. Jaouda said the Koreans' inexperience with desert terrain and weather caused the delay.

With current lower market prices, Libya's oil revenue is sharply down from the boom years of the late 1970s and early '80s. In 1980, oil revenue was $22 billion; by 1987, it had plunged to $6.6 billion.

Diplomatic and business sources in Tripoli say Libya has cut back drastically on such projects as highway, school and hospital construction and is concentrating its resources on its oil industry, the military and the Great Manmade River.

"Every single Libyan is waiting for water," Jaouda said, leading a tour for foreign journalists flown on a government plane from Tripoli to Benghazi to see the project.

The pipeline's first part slices through bleak terrain, broken only occasionally by brush and date palms near oases, where camels and goats graze.

Gadhafi comes to the desert frequently to check on progress, Jaouda said.

The U.S. order against American operations in Libya caused a few hectic months without consultants but did not delay the project, Jaouda claimed.

The firm of Root and Brown Inc. of Houston, Texas, turned over its duties to its subsidiary in England, and Britons and Canadians have taken the place of the estimated 300 Americans who were working on the project, Jaouda said.

He added that the first water to flow will irrigate 247,000 acres of farmland near the Mediterranean city of Benghazi, Libya's second largest city.

Other stages call for water to be tapped from wells in central west Libya and be delivered to Tripoli and for a pipeline to connect the Libyan capital, Tripoli, with Sirte. Eventually a pipeline is to run out to wells in Kufra, deep in the south, and the final phase will pipe water as far east as Tobruk, near the border with Egypt.

Jaouda declined to give even the roughest estimate for completion of the entire project but that contracts will be awarded for stage two by the end of this year, a few months behind an earlier timetable.

Businessmen and technicians here, including those who have worked on irrigation projects, express doubts that the project will guarantee that Libya can grow all it needs to eat.

They cite the competing demands by major cities, where most of Libya's population lives, for more and better drinking water. They predict political pressures will dictate that more and more water transported by the pipeline will be diverted from agricultural to urban use.

They also say that the project is counting on enthusiastic cooperation from farmers to see that the irrigated land is most efficiently farmed. But they add that state cooperative farms generally yield much less than possible because the workers won't make any more profit if they work harder or better.

As an example, a European construction executive, who is directing a small-scale irrigation project in the desert, said the project failed because the farmers preferred to put in their extra work into private lands, not the state-run irrigated fields.

Jaouda said water from the project will be used for both state and private lands.

He estimated that the Great Manmade River's water, pumped up from natural wells 1,150 feet below the ground, will last 50 years.

The pipe segments, each weighing 72 tons, and measuring 23 feet long and 13 feet in diameter, will probably outlast the water, he said.

Nile River Floods Break Severe Drought

By NEJLA SAMMAKIA
Associated Press Writer

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Nile River floods that brought death and devastation to neighboring Sudan have flowed into Egypt but in more benign and beneficial ways. They have broken a severe drought and removed a threat of power blackouts and water shortages for 54 million Egyptians.

Egyptian officials who had been considering urgent measures to curb power consumption now talk optimistically of bringing electricity to 20 percent of Egyptian villages that still don't have it.

Desert development experts look forward to greening more fields and growing more crops.

Not so fortunate were the Sudanese to the south. Floods triggered by more than 8 inches of rain there Aug. 4-5 killed at least 96 people, displaced 1.5 million in the Khartoum area alone and inundated tens of thousands of acres of some of country's richest farmland. Some experts have estimated damage at about $200 million.

But the Egyptians have the Aswan High Dam on its section of the Nile, and so far it has done its job of harnessing floodwaters that in past times washed wastefully over the land.

Before the floods hit Sudan, however, Egyptians were worried.

They watched with concern as the level of the dam's Lake Nasser steadily dropped. In July the water level was just over 495 feet at the dam, 46 feet below full operating capacity. The generating capacity of its 12 turbines were cut in half. A drop of 10 more feet would have shut them down.

But the waters have risen since the floods upriver, and by mid-August, Maher Abaza, the minister of electricity and power, was able to report: "We are well on our way out of the crisis. It would have been a disaster had the level dropped to 147 meters (482 feet)."

At the end of August, the Lake Nasser level was close to 525 feet at the dam, enabling the turbines to operate at 75 percent capacity. Full turbine performance is possible at 541 feet, and the highest level ever recorded was 577½ feet, in 1977.

Abaza and other officials stress that Egypt's fortunes will not be clear until October, after the rainy season upstream, by which time the waters would have stabilized along the Nile.

Under normal conditions, the dam 590 miles south of Cairo is supposed to supply 30 percent of Egypt's power.

Since its completion with Soviet help in 1970, the High Dam already was credited with saving Egypt from drought in 1972 and flooding three years later.

The current drought, which began in 1979, parched the entire Nile River Valley and starved thousands of Ethiopians and Sudanese upriver.

Thanks to the 1,335-square-mile Lake Nasser, however, Egypt had enough water stored to irrigate the 6.4 million acres in its Nile Valley agricultural heartland and to supply an electricity demand increasing by 20 percent a year.

Then, as unusually heavy rains came in Ethiopia and Sudan for the first time in nine years, the 333-foot-high, rock-filled High Dam prevented the floods in Sudan from spreading through Egypt.

The rising Nile now means officials won't have to restrict the planting of crops like rice and sugar cane that require a lot of water.

Egypt's share of the Nile waters is restricted by treaty, and government policy is that irrigation needs must be met. Since generating electricity consumes more water than required for irrigation and drinking, electricity production would have suffered had the drought continued.

In his May Day speech, President Hosni Mubarak warned that hundreds of Egyptian villages might be plunged into darkness. Government television jingles and newspaper campaigns urged cautious use of water and electricity.

"If there had been no flood, the effect would have been on the electricity supply next May, June and July," said Essam Radi, the minister of ir-

A Tall Obelisk Monument To A California Skinflint

By CHARLES HILLINGER
L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

TUTTLE, Calif. — A 68-foot obelisk rising out of fields of tomatoes and bell peppers on a huge farm in this Central California hamlet is a mystery to hundreds of motorists who pass it every day.

The granite shaft stands on a massive concrete base containing 13 steps on each of four sides. Carved in the side of the obelisk are two decorative scrolls and the inscription: "George Hicks Fancher. Born New York State February 9, 1828. Died in California March 30, 1900."

Who was Fancher? Is he buried under the obelisk? Why is a monument out there in the middle of the tomatoes and bell peppers?

To get the answers to these questions and more, motorists on their way to and from Yosemite National Park on California Route 140 often turn to Janice Brooklin. Brooklin, 53, who runs Jan's Market, a country store across the highway, has lived in this community (population 20) east of Merced all of her life. Her mother, Jennie Earl, who died last year at age 99, knew Fancher.

"Mr. Fancher was a wealthy banker and farmer who owned all the land for miles around. Mom told us that when Mr. Fancher died all kinds of stuff he valued as part of his life was buried with him under his monument, like the limbs of fruit trees, books and his favorite furniture."

Catherine Julien, 38, historian and director of the Merced County Courthouse Museum, maintains a file of old newspaper clippings reporting Fancher's death and the 10-year court battle over the $25,000 he left for "proper interment of my remains in a suitable monument."

"George Hicks Fancher was not a big spender during his lifetime," noted Julien. "He had a reputation of being a skinflint who scrounged away his money and spent little on himself. The obelisk is his monument to himself."

Fancher moved to California from upstate New York in 1850 to prospect for gold. He was a gold miner for six years, farmed in Stockton for 13 years, then moved to Merced in 1869, where he amassed a fortune as a farmer and banker.

Never married, Fancher left an estate valued at $608,000 when he died at age 72. Except for the money for his memorial, he left it all to 17 heirs — brothers, sisters, nephews and nieces.

After Fancher's death, a local schoolteacher, Robert Gracey, filed suit to stop erection of the monument and calling for using the $25,000 instead to build a public library in Merced. The teacher saw a library as a more fitting tribute to the pioneer.

But Fancher's heirs said no — the money had to be used to build the monument he requested.

It took 10 years and two trips to the appellate courts before the heirs were finally granted permission to build the obelisk. When completed in 1911, Fancher's fanciful legacy was reportedly the largest tomb for an individual in California.

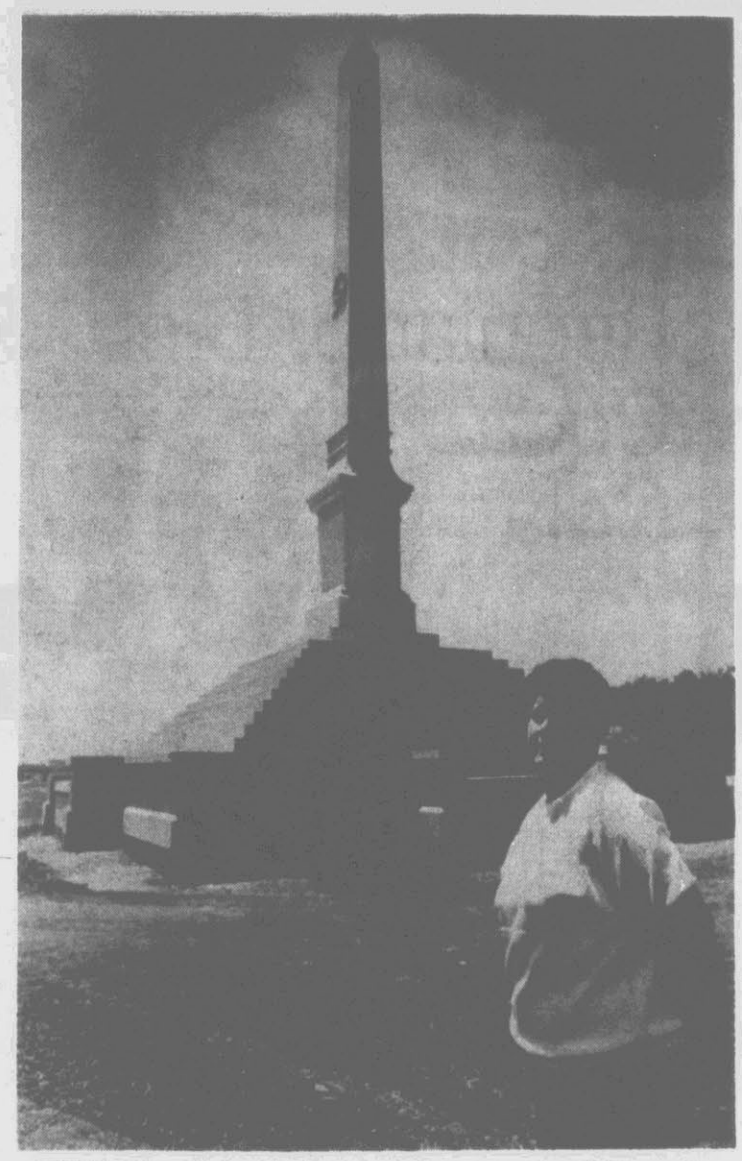

Fancher established a $1,000 trust in his will, the earnings of which were to be used for the care and maintenance of the monument.

The remaining descendants of Fancher's brothers and sisters have no interest in maintaining it, so the task of administering the trust fund has fallen to an attorney in San Jose, Calif., Robert Loehr, '40, who took over the job from an attorney friend who died.

Loehr would just as soon do without the honor. He would like to present the trust to an individual or group in Merced County to take care of the tomb. So far he has no takers.

"The earnings from the $1,000 trust fund are only enough to pay the annual property taxes for the acre on which the monument stands," explained the attorney.

"The monument is a big mystery to most people," said Julien. "We get calls all the time asking what it means. It would be nice if there was a plaque on it explaining who Fancher was and that he left a big chunk of money to build the monument to himself."

Cuban Immigrant Created Engraved State Seals As His Thanks To America

By KEVIN McGILL
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Fifty shimmering squares of glass sit in a display case on the ground floor of the federal building here, each delicately engraved with the official seal of one of the United States, beginning with Alabama, ending with Wyoming.

Eighteen years of research and labor went into the project, said Joseph Medina, the Cuban-born artisan who crafted the squares as a giant thank you card to the nation on behalf of his immigrant parents.

Medina's mother and father fled Fidel Castro's Cuba in 1961, he explained, with nothing but the clothes on their backs. A middle class family frightened by the suppression of Castro's dictatorship, they were allowed to bring none of their possessions with them when they asked to join their son in the United States.

"They decided to leave everything behind," Medina recalled.

Medina, who learned to engrave glass in Cuba in the 1940s, had immigrated in 1948, honing his skills in New York before heading south and eventually setting up shop in New Orleans with his wife Lesbia in 1959.

The federal government helped his parents immigrate two years later. They lived in a federally funded housing project and, because of their advanced age, the government paid some of their medical expenses.

His parents were ever mindful, Medina said, that they were being helped by federal tax dollars paid by people all over the country. They asked their son to find a way to express their gratitude.

"To thank everybody," Medina said, "you had to do something that would be recognizable by everyone in each state."

In 1970 the Medinas set to work trying to find pictures of each state seal. They found that some reference materials had innacurate reproductions, so they wound up writing to the secretaries of state in many capital cities seeking official copies of the seals.

As they acquired accurate copies, Medina began etching the patterns on squares of glass measuring 26½-by-26½ inches. Each weighed about 16 pounds.

In the engraving process described by Medina, the glass is held against a a "sand wheel," a thin brick-colored disk made of stone-like material. It whirls at high speeds on an electrically driven machine resembling a small lathe.

The meticulous work progressed slowly but surely. But there were disappointments along the way.

Medina's father and mother died in the early 1970s. They never saw the finished product.

A few years later, Medina injured his shoulder in a boating accident. After several operations, he couldn't raise his right arm high enough to do the work. He had to abandon the task with almost 90 percent of the work done.

Lesbia Medina, a Dominican Republic native who had learned the craft from her husband after they married in 1951, took over the project.

It is painstaking work, Mrs. Medina said as she demonstrated the process by engraving letters and designs on a drinking glass.

"If you are troubled, you make mistakes. So you must block it out," said the woman, who took over the bulk of the engraving work in the couple's shop after her husband's accident.

When the state seals were completed in 1987, Medina said, Rep. Lindy Boggs helped the couple donate the glass seals to the federal government.

Now, in a custom-made case of black granite, brass and chrome, the seals are on permanent display on the ground floor of the New Orleans federal building named after Mrs. Boggs' late husband, Rep. Hale Boggs.

The Medinas are especially proud of the centerpiece of the display, the Great Seal of the United States etched into a very old piece of pink glass, slightly smaller than all the others. Medina acquired the rose-tinged glass square many years ago when a woman brought it into his shop.

"I saved that glass," he said, "for something special."

Artifacts Storage Area At Harvard Is Upgraded

By BRIAN MURPHY
Associated Press Writer

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — 75-567847 is quite comfortable at Harvard University.

For nearly six centuries, the wool doll fashioned in the form of a weaver rested in a cool and dry Chanchay Indian crypt on the central coast of Peru.

It now bears a catalog number and sits on a metal shelf in the climate-controlled attic of the Peabody Museum of Archaeology and Ethnology.

Although the nearly 2 million artifacts that fill the Peabody's back rooms are rarely viewed by the public, museum curators from around the world have become fascinated by the transformation of the storage areas from musty chaos to a state-of-the-art sanctuary.

"This is the way it used to be," said assistant ethnology collections manager Kathy Skelly, gesturing toward a rack of boxes containing an unrelated assortment of relics. "It was a mess."

The boxes, however, are the final link with the Peabody's cluttered past.

A nearly completed 10-year project to renovate and modernize the museum's storage areas has led to precise and innovative preservation tactics.

Large artifacts are kept in rooms where temperature and humidity are tailored to protect various materials. Small items are encased in acid-free mounts, which allow researchers to view but not touch objects. The tile floors are spotless. Motion alarms and sprinklers hang from the ceilings.

"People have the impression that the back rooms of museums look like their attics at home," said collections manager Una MacDowell. "That was somewhat true in the past, but I think what you see at the Peabody will be the trend in the future."

In mid-October, about 30 curators and executives with the New England Museum Association toured the Peabody's storage facilities, said M[illegible]. Curators from around [illegible]d regularly inquire about its [illegible]ervation efforts, she added.

"I tell them the key is funding," said MacDowell. "A lot of developing countries are interested in trying to improve the way they store artifacts they see as an important part of their national heritage.

"It's just not possible if you do not commit the funding."

The approximate $2.5 million upgrading of the Peabody's storage rooms, funded by Harvard and the National Science Foundation, is one of the most comprehensive efforts at artifact preservation, said assistant director Rosemary Joyce.

Joyce said similar programs have been sponsored at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C. and the Bernice Bishop Museum in Honolulu.

In a building older than some of the objects it houses, the problems of preservation were compounded at the Peabody, said MacDowell.

In the summer, the attic was stifling. Objects stored in the basement levels were plunged into a chill throughout the winter, she added.

"We finally achieved a stable environment for our collection and that is very important," said MacDowell.

"Put it this way," said assistant archaeology collections manager Susan Bruce, "We're happy and the artifacts are happy."

Bruce led a team of experts which examined the Peabody's collection of nearly 1,000 pre-Columbian Andean textiles.

The textiles, once stacked like the wares of a rug merchant, are now layered between specially treated paper.

"Very few museums have anything close to this," said Bruce. "It's something that the public doesn't see, but it's a vital part of what a museum should be about."

In a nearby room, with a climate modified for wood and leather objects, Skelly walked up an aisle studying the collection.

She passed Plains Indian feather headdresses and clubs from South Pacific islands. Across the aisle, dozens of 85-year-old Chinese figurines were arranged to depict a funeral procession.

"And here is one of our treasures," said Skelly, stopping at a carved wood stool beaten by New Guinea tribal leaders during important decrees.

MacDowell later banged on a metal table top.

"We're finally moving into the 20th century," she said. "It's exciting."

New Curator At Duke

DURHAM — Dorie Reents-Budet, Ph.D., has been named new curator of pre-Columbian art at the Duke University Museum of Art. She is an adjunct professor in the art history department.

Reents-Budet received her BFA from the University of Northern Colorado and her PhD from the University of Texas. During her work as a graduate student four years ago, she studied the hieroglypic inscriptions on pottery in the Duke museum's collection.

Before returning to Duke this fall, she worked at the University of California at Santa Barbara, Harvard's Dumbarton Oaks Center, and Johns Hopkins University.

The museum's Mayan pottery collection, which comprises the pre-Columbian collection's largest single group from one culture, is one of the largest outside Mexico and Guatemala, according to Reents-Budet.

Nile River Flood

rigation. "It would have made no difference to irrigation."

Egypt's early summer marks the period when the Nile is at its lowest, before the arrival of runoff from Ethiopia's summer rains that provide 84 percent of the Nile's flow.

Faced with a possible disastrous shortfall in electricity, the government scrambled to build four thermal and gas-fired power stations at a cost of about $250 million.

Mubarak's government, however, isn't letting Egyptians forget how close they came to disaster this year, partly through advertising campaigns urging water and electricity conservation.

Starting in August, each apartment had to have a water meter rather than relying on a collective one for a building. The idea is that a more accurate reading of usage will increase water bills, thereby inciting families to keep down consumption.

Additionally, the government has been considering a fee for irrigation water, so far distributed without charge.

"We should not forget the drought," said Adly Bishai, head of the Desert Development Center at the American University in Cairo. "It can happen again. We must be prepared.

"My worry is that the first area affected would be the desert. ... If there's a power cut, or if there's weak electricity, pumps can't function."

The government has reclaimed 1.5 million to 2 million acres of land, mostly in the desert between the Nile and Libya, and it plans to cultivate an additional 750,000 acres.

But officials also have their eye on a new possible threat — locust swarms.

"There is more vegetation in the desert now," said Samir Nessim, head of the Agriculture Ministry department responsible for locust control. "This will increase locust breeding, but we don't know by how much."

Crickets And Worms Bait Farm Supplies Many Fishermen

By J. MICHELLE YONCE
Rome News-Tribune

ROME, Ga. (AP) — Barbara Burnes plunged her well-manicured hand into the black soil and pulled out a clump of tangled, writhing worms.

"It's business," she said. "You can't afford to be squeamish when it's how you make your living."

She and her husband, Charles, own Tuggle Bait Farm with his three brothers and do most of the managing of the farm. It is the largest such operation in northwest Georgia and keeps fishermen supplied even in adjoining states.

Lee Tuggle, who founded the farm, and Burnes' father were good friends. When Tuggle got ready to sell the 25-year-old bait farm, Burnes and his three brothers, David, Meredith and Woody, bought it.

So seven years ago, the couple moved to the bait farm from Auburn, Ala., where Burnes had just finished up his chemical engineering degree at Auburn University and Mrs. Burnes was working in real estate.

Their friends in Auburn were baffled, Burnes said.

"They looked at us like we'd just bought the Brooklyn Bridge," he said.

The Burneses raise crickets — millions upon millions of them. Tuggle Bait Farm also buys nightcrawlers, pinkworms, redworms, jumpers and mealworms in bulk for sale as fish bait. And, the farm buys and sells a special kind of carp used for gobbling up unwanted plant life in ponds.

When they arrived, Mrs. Burnes said, "We didn't know much about it." Now, Burnes manages the bait farm while Mrs. Burnes takes orders and coordinates the delivery routes.

The best way to get into a business, Burnes now believes, is "whether you know anything about it or not, just jump in and try." Burnes said his brother, David, also works at the farm, helping run it and also handling the jobbers, who buy from Tuggle Bait and resell to bait shops.

Woody and Meredith Burnes opted not to work there, but instead build houses — Woody in Rome and Meredith in Florida.

The farm consists of five buildings on about 300 acres of land. It has 12 delivery trucks and seven employees, most of whom deliver the bait and work in the crickethouses, Burnes said.

Four of the five buildings are used to raise crickets from eggs to gnat-sized babies to adult crickets, some of which are sold and some of which are used for reproduction to replenish the cricket "crop," he said.

Crickets die a couple of weeks after reaching maturity, and reproduction further shortens their life span to a week or five days afterward.

Usually all five of the buildings are used as cricket houses, Mrs. Burnes said, but "the drought's hurt us so bad that we shut down one building."

"It's been a rough year, very rough," she said. "There's not enough water and the fish never started biting. It's too hot for people to sit out on a lake and fish." When Southerners don't fish, they don't use crickets and worms.

Said Burnes, "We'll wait and see if it's going to be better."

Tuggle Bait has had up to 25 employees in the spring and summer, but with the drought this year, fewer were needed, Mrs. Burnes said.

Burnes said the cricket-growing business is extremely competitive, because each farm in Georgia and surrounding states has its own hush-hush methods of raising crickets, involving matters such as feeding them and allowing some to reproduce while preventing others from reproducing so they can be sold as fish bait.

"It's the most secretive bunch you've ever seen. They're petrified someone will find out what they're doing," Burnes said of the older generation of cricket growers. They've done such things as cutting holes in the tops of each other's cricket houses to see how their competition grows the insects, he said, and have been known to run their trucks early on their competition's routes.

Burnes has even heard tales of cricket growers hiring their competition's help away so they can learn the enemy's methods of cricket-growing. Someone offered a cricket grower in Tennessee $10,000 to share his secrets, he said.

When a cricket-grower in Mississippi was asked to share the methods he had worked for years to perfect, Burnes said, the grower replied, "It's cost me about $350,000 to learn how. If you're interested, come on over, bring your pocketbook, and tell me how much you want to know."

There are many tricks of the trade, Burnes said, that can be learned only by years of raising the chirping insects, such as the right temperature and humidity, changing feed at the right time, and finding the right mix of feed.

"Very few make it that try it," he said. "Lee (Tuggle) did all the scratchwork. We still try some different things. Some work, some don't."

The crickets, which take from 28 to 60 days to raise, are grown in cardboard boxes, about 5,000 to 6,000 per box, with a strip of slick tape placed just inside the edge so they can't escape.

However, Burnes remembers the day about 3 million did. It happened after they had run out of room at the farm and rented a building closer to Rome to grow a houseful of crickets. They threw up make-do racks to hold the cardboard boxes of crickets.

"As the crickets grew, the boxes got heavier," Burnes said, and the make-do racks collapsed. "We had more than 400 boxes, close to 3 million crickets, on that floor," he said.

With crickets going for about $14 per thousand, that was about $42,000 in crickets running free in the house. So, everyone from the cricket farm went over and worked well into the evening scooping up crickets.

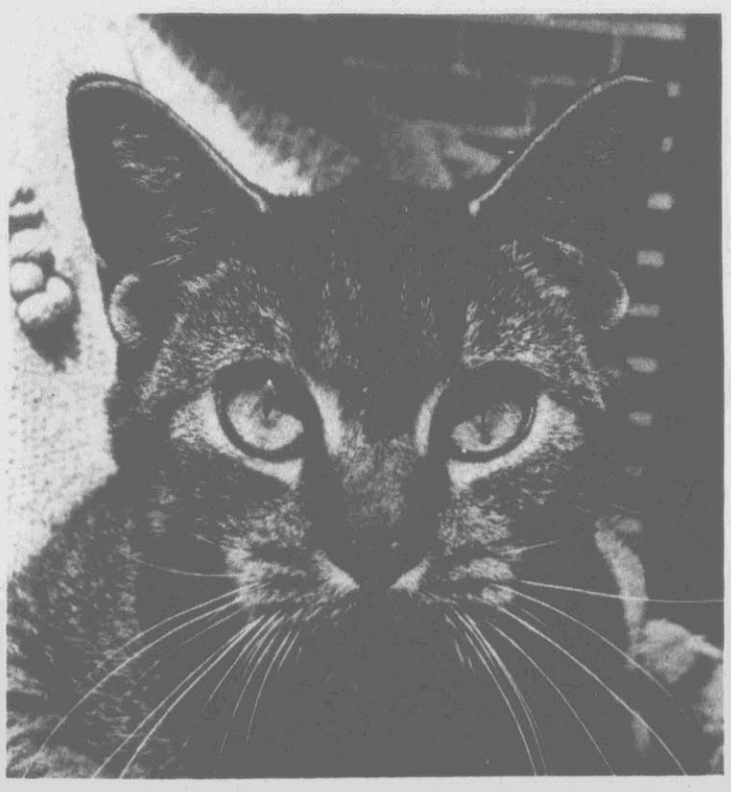

In a good year, Tuggle Bait sells from 25 million to 30 million crickets, Burnes said, but "it varies so much depending on the weather."

Sharp Division On The Fate Of Pandas

EDITOR'S NOTE — A new survey suggests there may be more giant pandas in the wilds of China than previously thought, but wildlife experts say they are becoming increasingly endangered by humans encroaching on their turf. An international debate is also raging over China's practice of loaning the animals to American zoos.

By KATHY WILHELM
Associated Press Writer

WOLONG, China (AP) — Scientists and conservationists who rallied to save the rare giant panda when its favorite food ran out are sharply divided over what to do next.

The World Wildlife Fund, a conservation group and China's main foreign partner in panda research, recently turned to the U.S. courts to determine if Chinese panda loans to American zoos are exploitative, as it says, or educational, as China says.

Some Chinese and Western experts say China should do more to breed captive pandas, while others say the only solution is to move humans from panda reserves.

Even the size of the panda population is under debate. The World Wildlife Fund is preparing to release survey results that put the number of pandas in the wild at 1,100 to 1,500, startlingly higher than previous estimates.

A 1977 Chinese survey put the figure at 1,000, and the population is known to have dropped since then due to poaching and a shortage of the panda's favorite food, bamboo.

Ken Johnson, a University of Tennessee zoologist who led the survey, says the earlier count was sloppy and too conservative.

But Zhou Shoude, the deputy director of China's largest panda reserve, the 800-square-mile Wolong Nature Reserve near Chengdu in Southwestern China, discounted Johnson's figures, which were based largely on a count of panda nesting areas and droppings.

The experts agree, however, that the panda is steadily decreasing in number and that five years after an international alert went out to save it, the outlook is grim.

"There are more pandas than we expected," Johnson says, "but they are more critically endangered than we expected."

Pandas, black-and-white bear-like animals that some say are related to the bear and some say to the raccoon, are native only to China. Experts believe their ancestors lived 20 million years ago, contemporaries of the mastodon and other extinct species.

A few hundred years ago, pandas still roamed the lowlands. But humans gradually pushed them into the mountains of western China's Sichuan, Gansu and Shaanxi provinces, the only places they now live in the wild.

World attention was drawn to their plight in 1983 when their dietary staple, arrow bamboo, flowered and died as it does every 40 or more years. The World Wildlife Fund collected more than $4.1 million toward saving the animal, and the Chinese government and citizens contributed millions more.

More than 62 animals starved before the bamboo began growing again a few years later.

That crisis over, experts are looking more critically at China's conservation program. They acknowledge China's limited resources, praise its good intentions and press for more action — without agreeing on the best course.

"Except for the pandas, there's not a lot that's black and white about it," Ken Cook, a spokesman for the World Wildlife Fund, said in a telephone interview from Washington.

China is dealing sternly with one obvious problem — poaching. Its highest court last year ordered panda killers be given long prison terms or even the death sentence.

China has been less decisive, however, in dealing with another human problem — ordinary peasants. Their encroachment on the rare animal's turf, including inside China's 12 panda reserves, advances steadily. More than 4,000 peasants live in Wolong, which became a showcase for panda conservation in 1980 when the World Wildlife Fund helped build a breeding center there. The peasants' terraced corn and potato crops climb high up the slopes of mountains roamed by pandas.

Johnson believes the peasants must be moved — if not from Wolong, then from other reserves.

"They've already destroyed Wolong, essentially," he says. Human settlements have marooned the pandas in small groups on mountain tops, preventing them from mingling in the mating season and creating the danger of localized inbreeding, he says.

Johnson's solution is to move humans from critical areas and plant corridors of trees and bamboo between panda habitats so they can roam freely and mate naturally — something he said pandas have no trouble doing in the wild.

Chinese officials, while agreeing in theory, show no signs of acting. Wolong's deputy director, Zhou, says he tries to "educate" the peasants in the hope they will leave voluntarily, but he has no fallback plan if they don't.

Johnson dismissed breeding centers, artificial reproduction and Chinese efforts to develop test-tube pandas, saying, "We don't have that much time."

However, other scientists believe wild pandas cannot be saved in adequate numbers, and that breeding centers are needed to re-populate the forests. Here, too, China's program falls short.

"You need one person who knows exactly where all the pandas are and their histories," says Devra Kleiman, assistant director of research at Washington's National Zoo.

Captive pandas, kept mainly in pairs in zoos, should instead be kept in large breeding centers where they would have greater chances of finding compatible mates, she says. At a minimum, she adds, zoos should cooperate in breeding their pandas.

William Conway, director of the New York Zoological Society and designer of the Wolong breeding center, agreed on the need for two or three national breeding centers where pandas could be carefully managed in an accelerated propagation program.

But Chinese zoos cooperate little. The Forestry Ministry, in charge of conservation, said it does not even keep count of how many pandas are in captivity in China. Official media reports say there are more than 80.

Wolong, with eight captive pandas, puts males and females together only for the brief spring mating season, as do many zoos. Then, relative strangers and unable to act out their elaborate mating rituals of the wild, the pandas are notoriously uninterested in romance.

According to Chinese count, captive pandas worldwide have produced fewer than three dozen surviving cubs.

"I don't think anyone is pleased with the progress that has been made in captive breeding," Cook says. He said the fund was disappointed that the breeding facility it helped build in Wolong had only produced one panda, born in 1986.

Wang Menghu of the Forestry Ministry says breeding has suffered from too little equipment and trained staff.

But he says China's efforts compared well with other countries, noting that few Western zoos with pandas have been able to produce surviving offspring.

It was breeding and money that dragged the panda into the U.S. courts.

In a suit still pending, the World Wildlife Fund and American Association of Zoological Parks and Museums accused the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service of allowing commercial exploitation of pandas on loan to U.S. zoos from China.

Six U.S. zoos have borrowed separate pairs of pandas for short periods, paying China up to $500,000 and in turn reaping millions in ticket and concession sales. Dozens of other zoos are hotly competing for pandas.

"Our concern was that the number of loans was increasing sharply," Cook says.

The lawsuit failed to stop the loan of two Wolong pandas to the Toledo, Ohio, zoo in May. However, the Fish and Wildlife Service refused to let another panda pair be shown at the Michigan State Fair, saying it would disrupt their breeding in China.

It also suspended consideration of future panda loans, including one planned for the Atlanta Zoo for September, while it works out a new policy. Among other things, the service said it wants proof China uses the fees it gets for conservation.

China's government has not responded, but its Association of Zoological Gardens announced a ban on panda loans where foreign organizations might profit, implying the commercialism was on the other side.

Wang, of the Forestry Ministry, said the halt in panda loans was America's loss. "It makes no difference to us," he says. "It's not as if China goes around saying, 'Will you take a panda?'"

But Cook says he hopes the suit will make a difference, by ending China's loans of breeding-age pandas and requiring U.S. zoos to use panda revenues for conservation.

"We are not optimistic about the species right now," he says.

WOMEN IN BUSINESS

NEW YORK (AP) — Women are starting and operating their own businesses in growing numbers.

The most recent government statistics show that women now own 3.7 million businesses, generating $65 billion a year. That is almost one-third of all firms in the United States. A decade ago, women owned 700,000 companies.

Traditionally, women-owned businesses were mainly in retail services. But this is changing. In a "Women of Enterprise" awards program organized by Avon Products Inc. and the U.S. Small Business Administration, the winners included female owners of a construction company, janitorial service, oil production company, management consulting firm and a sausage-making firm.

FEATURES

SOMEWHAT UNCOMMON — In the byways and fields of rural Pitt County, the beautiful purplish flowering heads of iron weeds are not seen as frequently as other species of wild flowers. The showy flowers grow on a tall, rank tough plant that likely accounts for its iron weed name.

When a little moisture makes a big difference

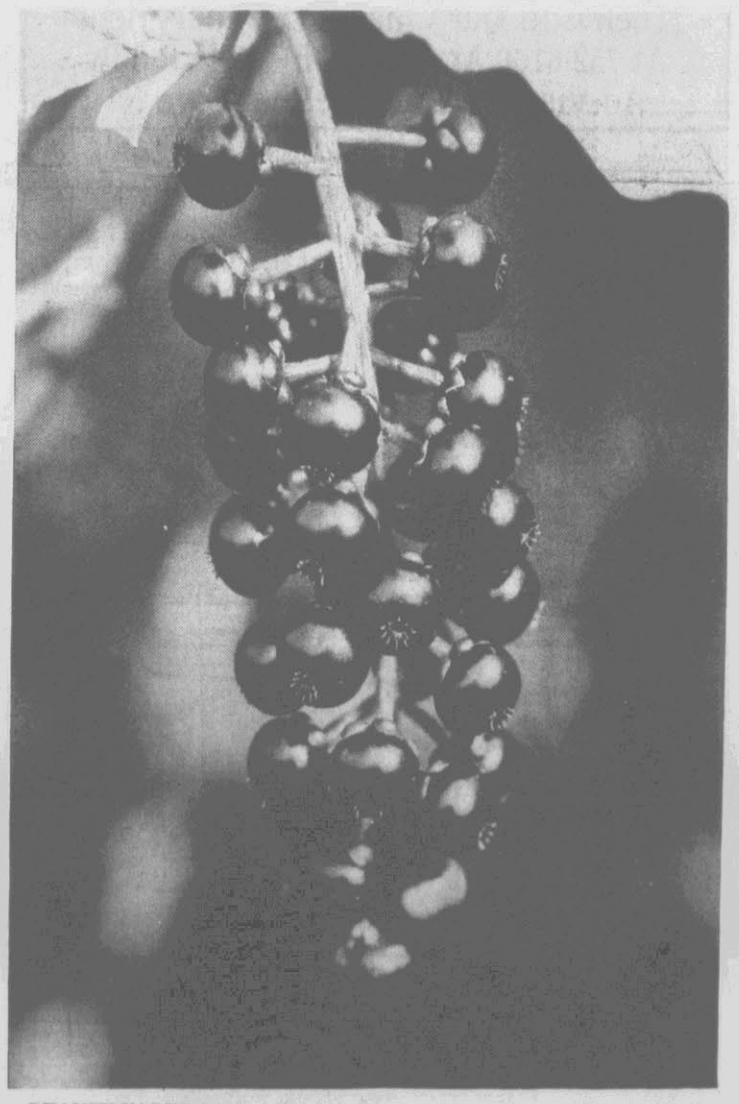

TRANSFORMED — The downy white heads of ragweed is transformed by a coating of dew into shapes that could easily inspire designers of contemporary jewelry. When sunlight dries the ragweed fruiting filaments, they will soon be dispersed either by a breeze or a bird or insect alighting on the supporting stem.

DEW ON DOG FENNEL — Dewfall in the night and early morning hours brightens the dark ferny fronds of dog fennel in the first morning hours of sunshine. A rank weed, dog fennel nonetheless has a pleasant pungent odor, sways gracefully in each breeze, and after frost ripens in color to a lovely golden tan.

Revelations Of Pitt County Nature On A Dew-Laden Morning In September

Text And Photographs By Jerry Raynor

BEAUTY IN BERRIES — Poke (or poke berry) plants are bountiful in Pitt County, often growing to a height of six or seven feet. A mature plant is generally heavily festooned with clusters of shiny deep burgandy colored berries beneath leaves that have turned pale yellowish-green.

An early morning excursion into ditch areas and field borders of weeds, wild flowers and last summer's overgrown gardens is something everyone should try at least once on a misty September morning in Pitt County.

It's an amazing experience, incredibly lovely, unexpectedly revealing, an echo of what the songwriter had in mind when he penned words to the hymn, "I come to the garden alone, while the dew is still on the roses."

Other than in an exceptional circumstance, roses in September will not be encountered in these areas of fully matured weeds and autumn wild flowers.

Nevertheless, the rewards of venturing into these places soon after sunrise on a misty or foggy early autumn morning are many.

Slanted sun rays bring to glittering life a mantle of temporary watery gemstones in nature: necklaces of dew drops on the fern-like fronds of dog fennel; the transformation of snowy white heads of ragwood into crystal clusters; the decoration of open cups of morning glory flowers with globular droplets of moisture, and rivulets of moisture gliding down the curves of unharvested peppers and tomatoes half hidden by tall grasses.

The colors of September's wild flowers, berries, butterflies and other winged insects are spectacular, as brilliant as Joseph's legendary cloak of many colors.

There are stands of lady fingers (also called knotweek and pinkweed) with delicate pink spikes of tiny flowers; bouquets of golden evening primroses — in full display despite the evening name; sprays of early goldenrod; the first modest show of pale lavender gerardia flowers, and the blossoms of jewel weed in orange and its close cousin, the yellow pale jewel weed, both nearly hidden beneath dense green foliage.

The most prevalent, and for many the most glorious of all September flowers are morning glories. These range from thumbnail size white or tangerine flowers through much larger flowers in an astonishing palette of sky blue, dark blue, white, pale and deep purple, rose — interwoven around and atop weeds as well as in surrounding fields of corn and soybeans.

In drier areas, one might discover rough tall stalks bearing sprays of purplish iron weed flowers. Where they have escaped cultivation, there may be a few spikes of obedient plants, a great favorite of bees and larger butterflies.

Ditch banks and relatively open moist areas are the best habitats for clumps of golden flowers that enliven September green — ox-eye, wild sunflower and coreopsis.

Where summer gardens planted in the borders of fields have been abandoned after harvesting, overtaking grasses and weeds surround the last wrinkled tomatoes and smooth peppers, green and ruby. The yellow flowers of remaining cantaloupe and cucumber vines summon battalions of small yellow, white, orange, pale purple and multicolored butterflies, dancing from flower to flower.

Green jeweled grasshoppers, their late-in-life colors burnished with touches of bronze, mate to perpetuate their population in the coming year. Moths, wasps and a whole catalog of smaller insects can be seen, sometimes entrapped in spider webs that sparkle with a network of dew diamonds.

The most arresting fruit of autumn wild plants is the dark burgandy clusters of poke berries festooning plants that are often six or more feet high. These are said to be suitable for making pokeberry wine — although that seems to be a lost art.

While some of September's wild flowers and insects can be viewed as the day advances, many of the flowers close their bright petals as the day warms, as the moisture of dew or mist burns away.

Nothing quite compares with the revelation of nature at its most fascinating in the early hours of autumn daylight, when the dew adds its special dimension of silvery beauty.

SURVIVAL RITUAL — During September, grasshoppers can be seen in the mating ritual to ensure the survival of their species. At this time of year, the emerald colors of these insects take on a touch of bronze coloration.

GATHERING NOURISHMENT — A small creamy-yellow butterfly (perhaps a moth) gathers a tiny bit of nourishment clinging in an upside down position to a thumbnail-sized tangarine-hued morning glory.

Opening lead: Five of ♡

Before reading on, cover the East-West hands and decide how you would play four spades after the lead of the five of hearts. Then see how a world champion handled this problem in the Spingold Team Championship at the recent Summer North American Championships in Salt Lake City.

If the bidding seems a little strange, it is because North-South were playing weak no-trump opening bids. North's first two bids, therefore, described a balanced hand of 15-17 points.

There's a bridge maxim that states: "Eight ever, nine never!" In other words, with eight trumps missing the queen, you should always finesse. The first problem is that you can take the finesse either way. If you do finesse, which defender are you going to play for the queen? Secondly, the one thing we have learned in a long career of writing about bridge is never to use the words "never" or "always."

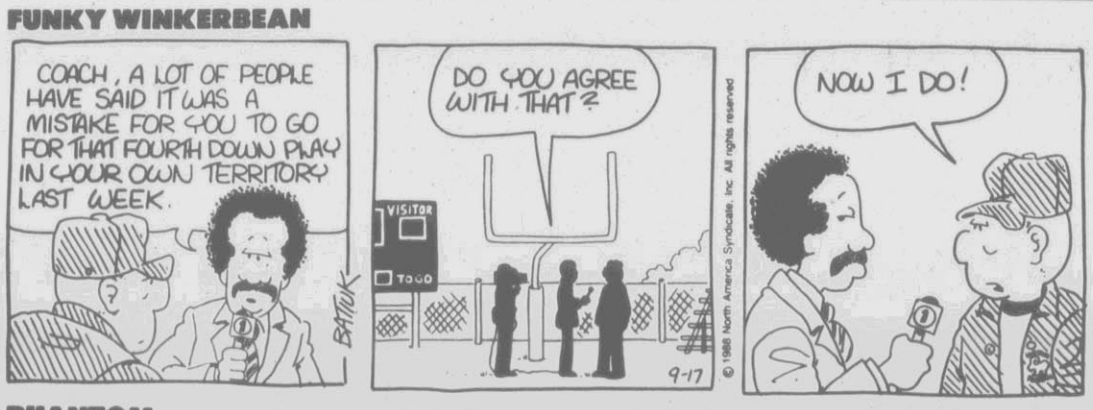

Suppose you take a losing finesse for the trump queen. The defenders will almost surely be able to score three diamond tricks for a one-trick set. Is there a better line? Yes, by combining your chances. Cash the ace-king of trumps in an attempt to drop the queen. As the cards lay, and as the hand was played, that resulted in two overtricks.

Switch the queen and eight of spades, so that the lady does not appear. Now play two more rounds of hearts, discarding a diamond from hand. Then start on the clubs. As long as the player with the long trump has at least three hearts and two clubs, you will get two diamond discards from hand and can lose no more than two diamond tricks and a trump.

Four Featured In New Washington Show

IN NEW SHOW — "Spring Garden," a painting by Bettie B. Cooper, is on view in a new exhibition at the Beaufort County Arts Council and Washington Civic Center in Washington, N.C. The show also features work by Ben Goodman of Wilson, Dianne Ford of Raleigh and a display of shells by Jerrny Frye Worrall of Washington.

WASHINGTON, N.C. — Washington artist Bettie B. Cooper is one of three artists featured in a new exhibit at the Beaufort County Arts Council and Washington Civic Center, the old train depot on Main and Gladden streets, downtown Washington.

Exhibiting with Mrs. Cooper are Ben Goodman of Wilson and Dianne Ford of Raleigh. The show also includes a display of shells collected by Jenny Frye Worrall of Washington.

• Mrs. Cooper's interest in painting began after she received the B.S. degree in vocational home economics from East Carolina University. While teaching in the Charlotte schools, she studied with Esther Skeen.

Her paintings have won several awards and are represented in private collections.

Mrs. Cooper's art reflects a love of landscapes, of familiar local scenes and wildflowers in watercolors and oils.

• Ben Goodman moved to Wilson from the Midwest where he was active painting, teaching and exhibiting art in Missouri, Illinois, Texas, Arkansas and Tennessee.

After early retirement in 1967, Goodman began painting full time. His oils and watercolors are in private collections and galleries from coast to coast. In the Washington show, his work includes landscapes, boats, old buildings and wildlife.

• Ms. Ford, a largely self-taught textile artist, has created quilts since 1979. Her work has progressed from traditional patchwork to contemporary, original design which are hand dyed using cold water procion dyes on cotton muslin.

She received a B.S. degree in biology from Wake Forest University. Her work has been shown in many shows. Her quilts are in private collections and she has received numerous awards.

• An avid shell collector, Mrs. Worrall has collected from varied sources for the past 50 years, through trading and in correspondence with collectors in Guam, England, the Philippines and Greece. Another favorite source of her shell collecting is along the east coast of the U.S. She is a charter member of the N.C. Shell Club.

Mrs. Worrall donated a collection of North Carolina and international shells to the A.C.D. Noe Library in Bath in memory of her husand, Wallace R. Worrall. She is a retired school teacher who taught at Bath High School for 24 years.

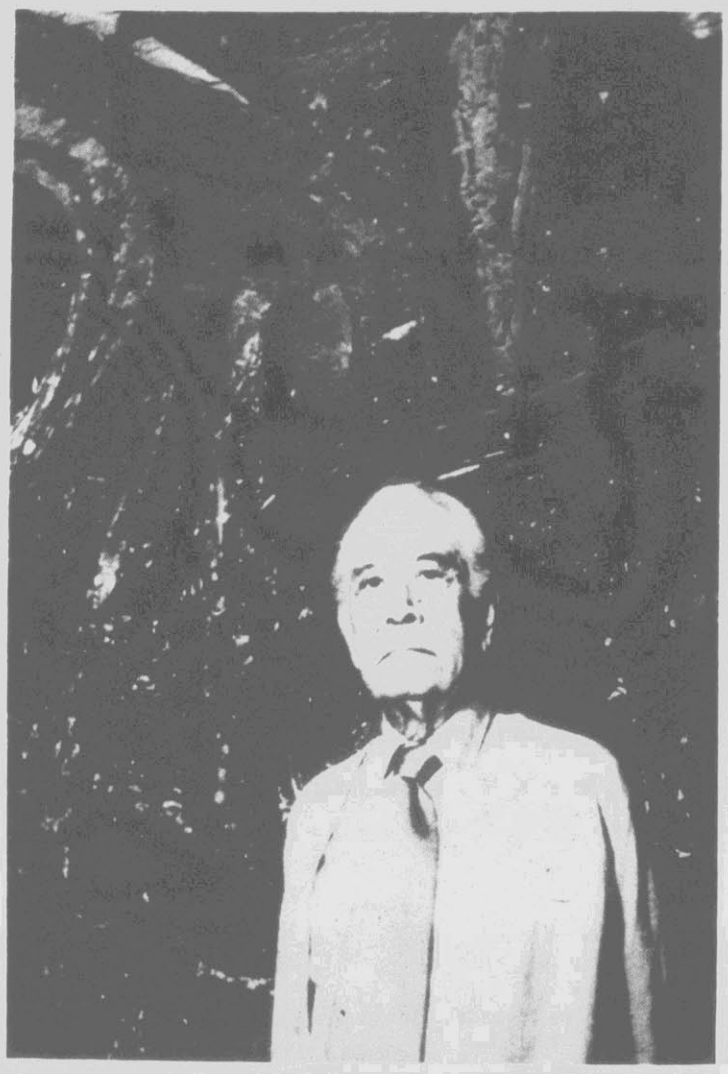

A reception for the artists, free and open to the public, will be held from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. on Oct. 2.

TUSCAN DRAWINGS

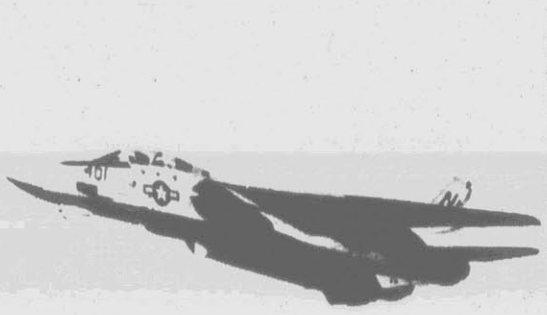

DETROIT (AP) — A loan of 100 rare drawings from the Uffizi Gallery of Florence, Italy, will be on view at the Detroit Institute of Arts Oct. 16, 1988-Jan. 8, 1989.

The museum says "16th Century Tuscan Drawings" is a "panoramic view of a supreme movement in Italian art, when drawing was considered the parent of architecture, sculpture and painting." The drawings also "offer an insight into the passionate collecting of the Medici dynasty, which ruled Tuscany for more than two centuries."

THE UNIVERSE — Mexican artist Rufino Tamayo poses in front of his stained-glass mural titled "The Universe." The 600-square foot, 3.8 ton window is the lone work of art in a specially designed museum, the Universe Pavilion in Monterray, Mexico. The work took Tamayo nearly a year to complete. A Modern Israeli Battleground Reveals Old Biblical Conflicts

By NICOLAS B. TATRO
Associated Press Writer

AFIQ, Israeli-Annexed Golan Heights (AP) — With the thud of modern artillery in the background, archeologists are uncovering evidence that the Golan Heights was as fierce a battleground in biblical times as it is today.

"The battles between the Arameans (of ancient Syria) and Israelis were governed by the same geopolitical considerations as today: Whoever holds the high ground has a strategic advantage," said archeologist Moshe Kohavi, head of a Tel Aviv University expedition excavating four sites in the Golan Heights with the help of American, Japanese, Finnish and Israeli volunteers.

The sites are the Leviah Enclosure, a wedge-shaped promontory over the Sea of Galilee with gorges on three sides and high walls on the fourth; Tel Hadar, where a large royal "winter palace" has been unearthed on the eastern shores of the Sea of Galilee; Tel Soreg, a hilltop town on the Ein Gev river; and Rogem Hiri, which has been nicknamed the "Stonehenge of the Golan."

Afiq, a kibbutz where the archeologists are based, preserves the name of the biblical Aphek, the 9th century B.C. battleground where the Israelite King Ahab's chariots and foot soldiers defeated the army of Ben Haddad, the Aramean king, who had conquered much of Israel after sweeping across the Golan.

"Ahab fought for the same advantage as we do," said Kohavi, alluding to Israel's battles with Syria for the Golan in 1967 and 1973. Israel annexed the 42- by 15-mile territory with its 20,000 residents in 1981.

Although ancient sites dot the map of the Golan, most are unexplored. The Syrians put the area off limits as a military zone and foreign expeditions have for the most part avoided it since 1967 because it is still disputed.

"There are more ancient sites than modern ones," said Matti Zohar, a Hebrew University of Jerusalem archeologist working with Kohavi's expedition.

Evidence to support the Golan's historical status as a battlefield comes mainly from the cities' construction, especially the high walls.

An iron arrowhead was found at Tel Hadar and a dog-shaped bronze finial, the top of a standard, was found at Tel Soreg.

"Weapons and armor were precious because they were made of metal," Kohavi said. "It was very expensive and was not left lying on the battlefield. What is found is usually discovered in caches or in tombs but this is rare."

City walls, the main entrance, private houses and public buildings at Leviah indicate it was a city spread over 20 acres rather than a fort or large cattle pen as previously believed. The emphasis on walls and natural defense gives insight into life during the Bronze Age, 3,000-2,000 B.C.

"The people lived in large cities, probably war-like ones, and they chose their sites for strategic reasons," Kohavi said of a half-dozen similar sites in the Golan. "There was apparently no major power to pacify the area."

"These were large fortified cities that probably fought each other like the Greek city states," he said, standing on the ancient city's stone gate and sweeping his hand toward three large squares stretching across about 100 yards, where Israeli students from the Technion University in Haifa were digging out rows of stone that were the walls of ancient houses.

Leviah was an exciting find, Kohavi said, because it "proves that the Golan was a thriving population center" as early as the 4th century B.C. "and not a fringe area as had been believed." The pottery and building style also indicated links with ancient Lebanon.

Only a few miles from Syria, the distant rumble of tank and artillery could be heard as Israeli troops conducted maneuvers. "We can't escape from what's going on in today's Golan," said Kohavi.

Throughout the Old Testament period the Golan Heights, a volcanic plain 1,650 feet above the Sea of Galilee, was the focus of a power struggle between the Kings of Israel and the Arameans who were based near modern-day Damascus.

Its importance was recognized by King David, who sought to neutralize the power of the ruler of the Land of Geshur, as the Golan was known, by marrying his daughter Maacah. Their son Absalom later led a rebellion against David.

Kohavi, seeking the first archeological evidence to confirm the biblical stories, believes one seat of Geshur government may have been Tel Hadar, which was in a no-man's land between Israeli and Syrian armies before 1967, and sits on a rise surrounded with weeds and barbed wire near a crowded summer resort.

Archeologists have unearthed a large royal "winter palace" there on the eastern shore of the Sea of Galilee. The palace, which covered two acres next to what is now an amusement park, was destroyed by fire at the end of the 11th century B.C. The most visually striking aspect of the dig are granaries in the palace's basement. An archaeologist bent and picked up pieces of burnt grain more than 25 centuries old to show a reporter.

A bulldozer helped remove large basalt stones from around the entrance to the ancient palace. Among the finds were two delicately carved legs to a basalt stoneware pot and a perfectly preserved long-necked beer jug that was twisted and partially melted by the intense blaze.

At Tel Soreg, midway between the Sea of Galilee and Afiq, volunteers sifted the remains of the settlement that was continuously inhabitated for 2,000 years and is believed by some to have been the biblical Aphek, a possibility Kohavi discounts because it was too small to match the biblical descriptions.

The Golan's battles even touched Tel Soreg, though it was out of the path of armies marching across the plateau two miles away. "When the Arameans and Israelites were fighting, the residents of Tel Soreg built a high wall for defense," in the 9th and 8th centuries B.C., he said.

Zohar is trying to unravel the mystery of Rogem Hiri, which the Druse Arabs have named the "stone heap of the wild cat."

The four concentric circles of stone walls with a 6½-yard-high mound of stones in the middle has been likened to Stonehenge, the Neolithic stone circle in England. Like Stonehenge, it may have been an astronomical observatory; the entrance marks the point of sunrise on the longest day of the year.

IN WORKSHOP — Blanche Kammer-Monroe is shown teaching techniques of the art of marbling to public school teachers. The instructional workshop was held Saturday at the Greenville Museum of Art.

Demonstration In Marbeling For Area School Teachers

A marbeling workshop for art teachers in the Pitt County/Greenville public schools was presented by artist Blanche Kammer-Monroe Saturday at the Greenville Museum of Art, 802 South Evans Street.

Marbled paper has been traced back to at least as early as the beginning of the 12th century in Japan. Until well into the 19th century, the craft of marbeling was a mystery to most artists and precautions were taken by practictioners that its secret remained in the hands of a select few.

Due to the learning process which involves considerable time and the difficulty of obtaining materials and tools, few artists today practice this craft.

Ms. Kammer-Monroe studied the techniques of marbeling at the Penland School of Crafts.

The Saturday workshop was geared to public school teachers in hopes that they can in turn learn and teach some of the techniques to their students.

The workshop is a part of the Greenville Museum of Arts's teacher-training education program. It was made possible with the help of a grant from the North Carolina Arts Council.

Wildlife Photographs Show

BEAUFORT — The top 100 photographs from National Wildlife magazine's 1986 Photo Contest are on exhibit at the North Carolina Maritime Museum through October 8th. The museum is lcated at 315 Front Street in Beaufort.

Over 8,000 entries were submitted by almost 2,300 amateur photographers in the contest.

National Wildlife editors selected first-place winners in five catagories: wildlife, people in the outdoors, landscapes and plant life, humor in nature, and underwater life. In addition, six photographs received merit awards and 89 others were selected to round out the exhibition.

The exhibition was organized by the Leigh Yawkey Woodson Art Museum, Wausau, Wisconsin, in cooperation with the National Wildlife Federation.

The showing at the N.C. Maritime Museum is part of a two year national tour funded in part by the Wisconsin Arts Board. Following the national tour, these photos will be added to the wildlife art collection of the Woodson Art Museum.

The Friends of the North Carolina Maritime Museum are sponsoring the exhibit.

The maritime museum is open weekdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Saturdays 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Sundays 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. There is no admission charge.

MAJOR DEGAS EXHIBITION

"Degas" will include paintings, pastels, drawings, monotypes, prints, photographs and sculpture representing every aspect of the career of the versatile artist.

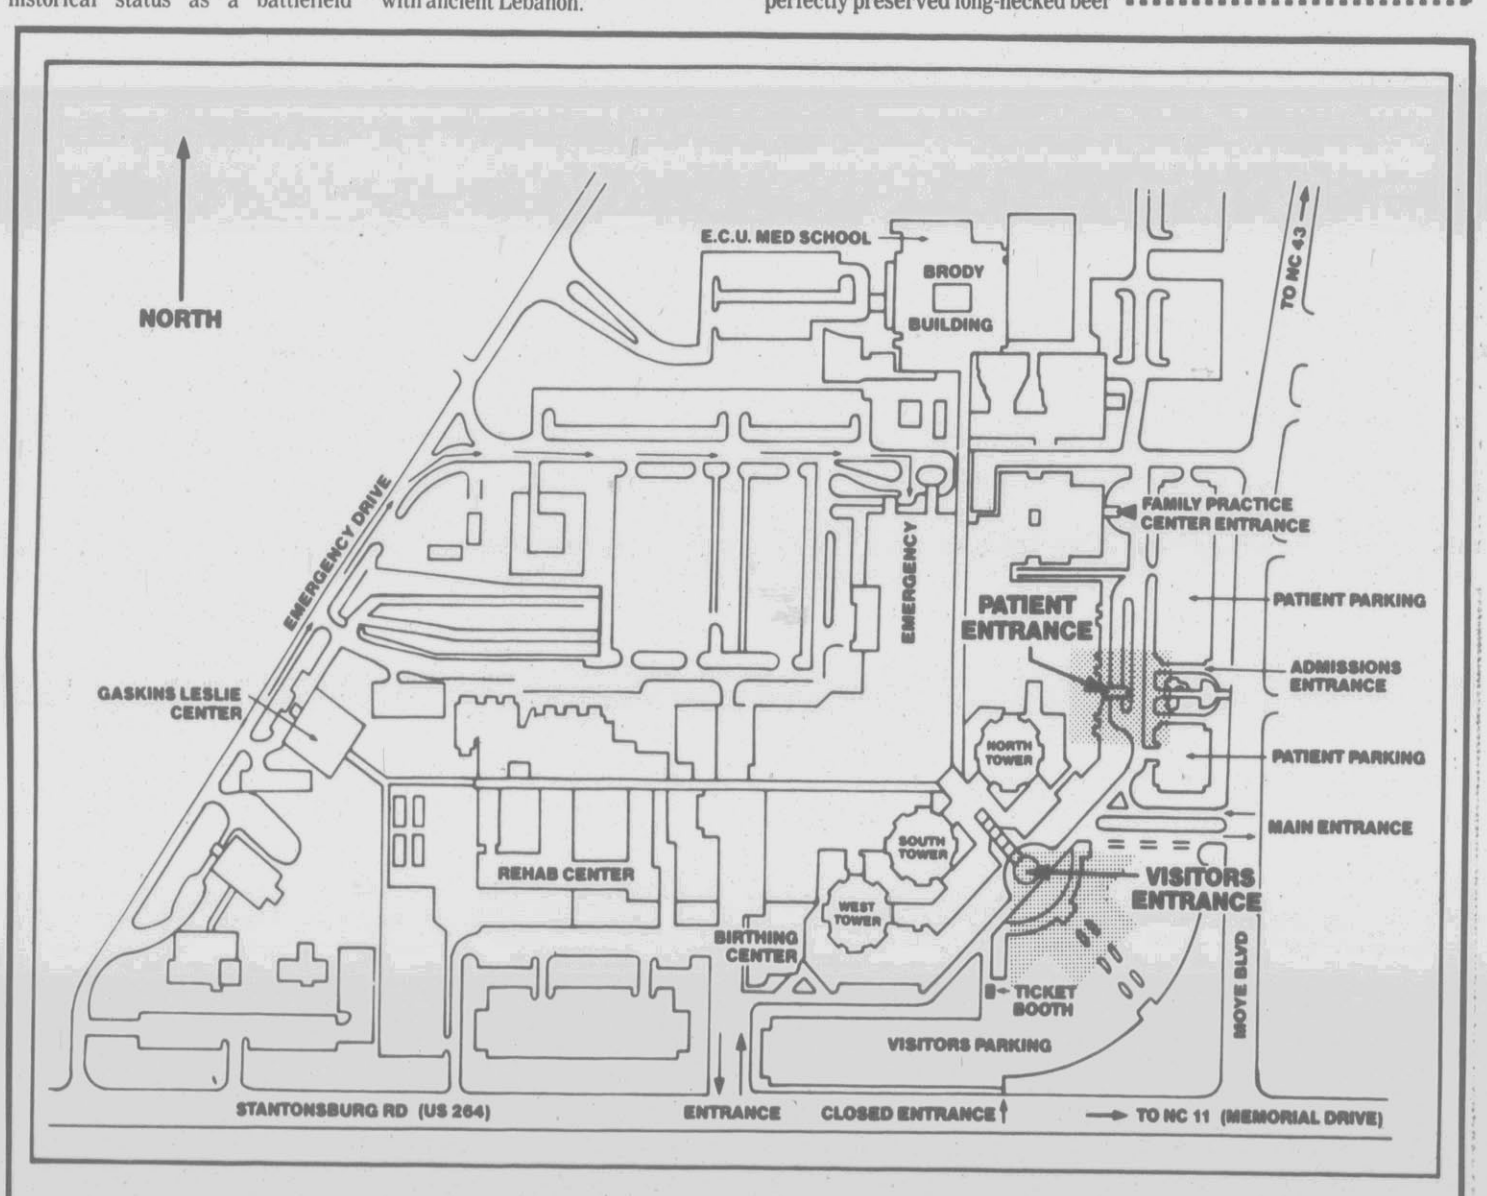

The museum says, "Degas' lively depictions of racetrack scenes and jockeys, his ballet pictures and his series of laundresses, milliners, brothel scenes, landscapes and bathers will all be represented."

The exhibition first opened at the Grand Palais in Paris and then traveled to the National Gallery of Canada in Ottawa.

The soap operas, "As the World Turns" and "The Edge of Night," made their premieres on CBS television in 1956.

We've Opened New Doors for Healthcare in Eastern North Carolina

September 15, 1988 marks the opening of a new admission entrance to Pitt County Memorial Hospital. All inpatients and outpatients will use the new entrance, and will have easy access to the facility with ample parking adjacent to the building. Visitors will continue to use the existing main entrance.

The new admissions area is located more conveniently to the areas where many patients receive diagnostic tests during the admitting procedures. Also included in the expansion is a new Laboratory Medicine Department and a new Medical Records Department.

The emergency entrance to Pitt County Memorial Hospital will remain in its previous location on Emergency Drive off of Stantonsburg Road. Emergency patients, obstetrical patients and patients with appointments at the Magnetic Resonance Imaging Center will continue to use the emergency entrance.

This project is a part of the multi-phase development at Pitt County Memorial Hospital which represents the mission of the hospital as an academic medical teaching center.

Roanoke Museum In Plymouth Is Planned

PLYMOUTH — The Washington County Historical Society, in cooperation with the Town of Plymouth, has announced details of its plan to develop the "Port O' Plymouth Roanoke River Museum" here.

"The State is predicting that travel and tourism will be North Carolina's number one industry within the next decade," said Michael Swearingen, president of the historical society.

"We want to attract and project more of this visitor traffic into Plymouth and all of the Roanoke River counties on a mutual promotion basis."

The overall scope of the project is to enhance local and regional economic development and historical preservation. Plymouth is near the center of the Historical Albermarle Tour area. The group also plans for the museum to become a part of that mutual promotion organization.

The Roanoke River Basin in North Carolina extends from Lake Gaston west of I-95 near Roanoke Rapids to the Albermarle Sound. Counties along the river include Bertie, Halifax, Martin, Northhampton and Washington.

The museum will highlight regional historical attractions, people, business and industry and the river's environmental system.

Exhibits will include Native American, Colonial, Civil War and African-American historical artifacts, and displays on agriculture, forest products, fishing, shipping, ship building and other aspects of Roanoke River heritage.

The museum will be located on a 3.3 acre site owned by the Town of Plymouth, and will include more than 6,000 square feet of space when completed. The town has recently built public access parking and a covered pier into the river at the site. A boardwalk boatdeck will be completed there this fall.

The exterior scene of the museum is being designed to resemble a "train at the station" in a landscaped riverfront park. An on-site 1920's brick railroad depot is to be renovated into exhibit space.

Donated railcars will be renovated into museum and Chamber of Commerce offices, interpretive center, open-air concert deck, gift shop, public restrooms and museum workshop/storage space.

The final phase of the project will be acquisition and renovation of the 1887 Roanoke River Lighthouse, now a private residence in Edenton.

A Reflector Review

A Look At Naval History In WWII

SOUTH TO JAVA. By William P. Mack and William P. Mack Jr. Baltimore. The Nautical and Aviation Publishing Company. 460 pages, $19.95.
(Available locally at Waldenbooks)

Vice Admiral William P. Mack, former Commandant of the U.S. Naval Academy, contributed to this account of Navy action in Southeast Asia early in World War II. His son, William P. Mack Jr., wrote the book. For a first effort at writing, he did a credible job.

The Pearl Harbor attack found the United States Asiatic Fleet totally incapable of holding back the Japanese move south. This story is based on the experiences of a dozen Navy destroyers as they courageously fought a holding action from the Philippines to the Dutch West Indies.

Vivid descriptions of night actions against the Japanese along with the personality traits of its officer and enlisted crews bring the events close home to the reader.

The personalities are fictional, but for those who have served in the armed forces, they prove to be similar in many respects to the real men who served their country in the Pacific during World War II.

The ships themselves were mostly outdated and ill-equipped to resist the onslaught of the more modern Japanese fleet.

Lt. (JG) Ross Frazier is portrayed as a better than average career naval officer whose encounter with the daughter of a Dutch captain adds suspense and needed distraction from an otherwise day by day life of operating and trying to keep afloat a small ship built for action in World War I, not for World War II.

Admiral Mack and his son have, for those surprisingly large number of persons interested in World War II history, created an enjoyable reading experience particularly in an area about which relatively little has been written.

Aycock Harvest Day

FREMONT — Herb preparation, herbal teas and samples for all will be among highlights of the annual Harvest Day at Aycock Birthplace State Historic site near Fremont on September 25. Admission is free.

Fremont is located nine miles north of Goldsboro. From Greenville the shortest route is via U.S. 264 to Saratoga, then via N.C. 222 to Fremont, a distance of of about 45 miles. The site is one-half mile off U.S. 117 just south of Fremont.

From 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. staff and volunteers in period dress will demonstrate mid-19th century farm activities such as open-hearth cooking, natural dyeing, gardening, rope making, candlemaking and spinning.

During his term in office, 1901-1905, accomplishments included the building of almost 3,500 schoolhouses, the lengtening of the public school term, the increasing of teachers' salaries and declining illiteracy in North Carolina.

The birthplace, a typical 19th century family farm and homesite, includes the modest house, a separate open-hearth kitchen, corncrib and smokehouses.

An 1870s one-room schoolhouse on the ground underscores Aycock's lifeling dedication to edcuation.

Book News

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Mj DAUGHTRY

Young children feel understandably proud when they've learned to recite and recognize the alphabet. And so do their parents! As a parent reading the alphabet to your child, you've probably already discovered that there are a host of alphabet books on the market. But have you ever felt that you might scream if you saw one more ABC book that began with "'A' is for Apple?"

At the Sheppard Memorial Library, we come to your aid with a large assortment of clever and unusual alphabet books that will challenge and entertain both your child and you.

Lots of silly, good-natured fun comes your way in Susan Gretz's "Teddybears ABC." Here we find those irrepressible bears "finding fleas in their fur," "keeping kangaroos in the kitchen," or "tickling in a tent."

"Have You Ever Seen?: An ABC Book" by Beau Gardner uses silly combinations of objects and animals to pose questions like "Have you ever seen an alligator with antlers?", "a spaghetti sandwich?".

Also guaranteed to raise a smile is the book "Certainly, Carrie, Cut the Cake," by Margaret Moore. This book of funny and sweet poems each features a letter of the alphabet.

Norma Farber's "This Is The Ambulance Leaving The Zoo" takes the alphabet into the city with a cummulative tale introducing city scenes in alphabetical order from Ambulance to Zoo. Another book that captures the very pulse of city life is Rachel Isadora's "City Seen From A to Z."

For a change of scenery, try "Hullabaloo ABC," by Berverly Cleary. This ABC book chronicles the adventures of two children having a wonderful time on a farm in the country.

Sometimes the letters of the alphabet themselves come to life in 26 surprising anf unusual ways. In "Action Alphabet," by Marty Neumeier, the letters drip, fall, jump, and orbit off the pages. "Alphabatics," by Suse MacDonald, was awarded a Caldecott Honor medal. Each letter of the alphabet magically transforms itself into the object it represents. Thus, "A" tips over the water to become an Ark, "M" melts to become a Moustache, and so on. Chris Van Allsburg's highly creative "The Z was Zapped" depicts how "A" was caught in an avalanche, "B" was badly bitten, "C" was cut to ribbons and the other letters of the alphabet suffered similar mishaps.

"A, B, See!" is another of Tana Hoban's highly successful ABC concept books for children. In stunning black and white photographs of familar objects in silhouette, Tana Hoban proves once again that wonder and beauty are all around us.

We end our tour of ABC books with an offering by Anita and Arnold Lobel. You can buy almost anything from the peddlers "On Market Street." But have you ever bought gloves from a peddler made of gloves?, or noodles from a lady made of noodles? Or even, yes, apples form a man made of apples?

The Moscow Circus Arrives In The U.S.

THE CIRCUS IS IN TOWN — Moscow Circus bear trainer Zolkin holds up Masha, a two and one-half-year-old Russian brown bear, at Boston's Faneuil Hall. The Boston appearance was a preview of five days of performance in Worcester, Mass. (AP Laserphotob by Carol Francavilla)

By DANA KENNEDY
Associated Press Writer

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — Backstage at the Worcester Centrum, a few hundred yards from the hastily constructed ring where in a few hours the Moscow Circus was to begin its first American tour in a decade, Slava Zolkin leaned near a cage and kissed one of his 12 dancing brown bears between the eyes.

Immediately, the other bears emitted jealous growls of protest until Zolkin came by and stroked each one.

"I love them a lot and they love me," said Zolkin, 39, a former tightrope artist who began teaching bears to perform after he fell off the wire and broke his back in four places.

Zolkin, who wears a bear keychain around his waist and hands out bear pins to visitors, said through an interpreter that he never uses force to train his bears to dance and juggle with their feet. He chooses his bears as cubs and they live with him, his wife and daughter in their three-room apartment in the Soviet Union, until they grow too big.

Zolkin's dedication to his bears is typical of the members of the Moscow Circus, considered on a par with the finest theater, opera and ballet in the Soviet Union.

"It's not your typical American circus; it's an art form," said Steven E. Leber, the U.S. producer of the Moscow Circus. "These people have dedicated their entire lives to it."

Leber traveled to the Soviet Union to choose 11 of the best circus acts from the hundreds of performers associated with the state-run circus, a revered institution in the country.

The first professional circus school was established in the late 1920s. Students are trained for four years in different fields and also create their own acts. Once their act has been approved by the Circus Board, students graduate to professional careers and are guaranteed 20 years employment plus a full pension upon retirement.

The Moscow Circus last performed in the United States in 1978 and just began a 15-city tour that will wind up at the Cow Palace in San Francisco Jan. 1.

"These are the superstars of the circus in the Soviet Union, the real headliners," said Leber.

Included in the circus are the bears, Sumatran tigers, clowns, jugglers, aerialists, trapeze artists and horsemen.

One of the most spectacular acts is called "The Flying Cranes," which consists of 10 aerial artists who combine a quadruple somersault and other daring acts with the choreography of a ballet as their movements tell their story of the soldiers who died in World War II, their souls becoming like those of "cranes."

"When I appear in the arena, I immediately forget about everything else," said Lena Golovko, 24, who with her husband, Vilen, is a star of "The Flying Cranes."

"Our life is in the circus where we work. But one cannot say that it is ... that it is just work. It is our way of life. Because all of our thoughts are with our work."

The "Cranes" had its premiere in 1985, and creator Petro Maestrenka said it will be performed "until we are absolutely sure there will be peace."

Another notable performer and trainer is Tamerlan Nugzarov, who oversees the 12 horses and horsemen who perform breathtaking stunts. Nugzarov, a short, powerfully-built man with a fierce demeanor, is from a circus family. He comes from the Caucasus mountain range in the Soviet Union where both men and the horses they ride are known to be fearless.

Nugzarov and the other Cossack riders need courage. At times, all 12 horses gallop at full speed in the ring. Sometimes the riders are on the top of the horses, at other times they are beneath them. Sometimes they are beside them, with their arms and torsos dragged on the ground, both men and horses jumping through hoops surrounded by knives.

"A lot of the tricks have a method to it," said Nugzarov, speaking through an interpreter a few hours before the show. "There is this myth and legend to everything we do."

The act is dangerous but Nugzarov said there have been few injuries.

"They have not been major," he said. "After all, the hardest injuries are those to the soul."

Equally daunting to watch is Nikolai Pavlenko as he steps into the cage with his 17 wild Sumatran tigers and coaxes them into performing without ever using a whip.

"My attitude about my work is dictated by my attitude toward them," he said. "Animals should be allowed to show their character. They should not be oppressed nor made to think like we think."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A group of 21 postwar American art works selected from the Norton Simon Museum are on view at the Los Angeles County Museum of Art.

Annessa Cotterman will be seen in the role of Dorothy. She is accompanied on her quest by three faithful companions, Jay Brumbleloe as the Scarecrow, Eric Shine in the role of the Tin Woodman, and Michael Culp as the Cowardly Lion.

Along the way they meet both the benevolent Sorceress of the North, played by Mary Morrison Dixon, and the Wicked Witch, played by Etsil Mason.

Willa Bullock plays Aunt Em; Dillon Watson is Uncle Henry; and Jim Hinson is the Wizard.

According to director Kenneth Ginn, one of the interesting challenges to this production was utilizing the strengths of both the play and the movie versions, which differ slightly.

"In some respects the play is better. More comedy is displayed and several dance sequences and vocal numbers are added. Illusions and special effects are in abundance.

"Only a live performance can capture this kind of excitement," Ginn said.

The talents of Sue Ann Culp as the musical director, and Dot Dee Slaughter, the production's choreographer, aid Ginn in successfully materializing the magical land of Oz.

One Performance Of 'Evita' Set At ECU

ECU NEWS BUREAU

The national touring production of "Evita," the Tony Award-winning musical by Andrew Lloyd Webber and Tim Rice, will be presented for a single performance at East Carolina University Thursday at 8 p.m. in Wright Auditorium.

The performance is a "special added attraction" to ECU's 1988-89 Performing Arts Series.

Tickets to "Evita" are on sale at the ECU Central Ticket Office in Mendenhall Student Center for $20 each for adults and $15 for youths. Telephone ticket orders may be placed with major credit cards by dialing the ticket office at 757-6611 on weekdays from 11 a.m. until 6 p.m.

Based on the life of Eva Peron, second wife of Argentine dictator Juan Peron, "Evita" is a romanticized biography of the young girl from the Argentine backwater who succeeds in her determination to get to Buenos Aires and gain power and position.

As mistress and later wife of the military dictator Juan Peron, Evita was noted as the most powereful woman ever known in Latin America. She was tremendously popular — almost regarded as a living saint — by the Argentine masses, the "descamisados," shirtless ones, at the time of her death in 1952.

It is unlikely that even the beloved and glamorous Eva Peron could have sustained her level of popularity for long had she not died at age 33; Juan Peron himself lasted only a further three years in power. He did make a brief comeback from exile in Spain as president in 1973, a remarkable achievement which unfortunately did little to solve Argentina's serious economic and political problems.

His third wife, Isabel, succeeded him as president after his death in 1974, but she is not part of the "Evita" story, which ends with Eva's death.

The traveling company presenting "Evita" includes a 15-member cast and live orchestra. The musical received seven Tony Awards, including best musical and was voted best musical by the New York Drama Critics Circle.

The show's collaborators — Webber and Rice — are also noted for their musicals "Cats" and "Jesus Christ Superstar."

"EVITA STARS" — Madeleine Homan and Steven Snow are starring in the 1988 National Tour presentation of the musical, "Evita," to be presented for one performance only at 8 p.m. Thursday in Wright Auditorium on the ECU campus. Tickets, now available, are priced at $20 for adults and $15 for youths.

Seeking New Plays

MARS HILL — The Southern Appalachian Repertory Theatre (SART) is looking for new plays. Having premiered 23 new works in its first 14 seasons, SART, aided in part by a grant from the N.C. Arts Council, Theatre Arts Section, wants to establish a continuing source for new plays by assisting playwrights to develop scripts.

To be considered for the conference, a playwright must: (1) Have had at least one major play produced by a recognized theatre, professional, college or university, or community; or (2) have had at least one major play published by a recognized publishing company, and (3) submit an example of his work. It may be the script of a play previously produced or published, or a play-in-progress.

Playwrights who meet the above requirements are invited to submit the script they wish to explore at the conference no later than January 1, 1989 to: Ms. Jan W. Blalock, Assistant Managing Director and Business Manager, Southern Appalachian Repertory Theatre (SART), P.O. Box 53, Mars Hill, N.C., 28754.

Up to five playwrights will be selected and invited to attend the Southern Appalachian Playwright's Conference. In addition to the participating playwrights, the conference will include the managing director of SART, other directors and producers, actors, and invited guests.

It will be held on the campus of Mars Hill College, 20 miles north of Asheville.

Q Jackie Onassis is still going around with Maurice Tempelsman, the jeweler. But what has happened to her kid sister, Princess Lee Radziwill? Who is she dating?—Yvonne L., Passaic, N.J.

A Interior decorator Lee Radziwill, 55, has been dating choreographer and director Herbert Ross ("The Turning Point," "California Suite"). Widower of ballerina Nora Kaye, Ross, 63, recently finished directing Sally Field, Dolly Parton, Shirley MacLaine and Olympia Dukakis in the film "Steel Magnolias," shot on location in Natchitoches, La.

Q During the Democratic National Convention in July, Gov. Bill Clinton of Arkansas gave a 32-minute speech nominating Michael Dukakis for President. Four of us were watching on TV when one friend, weary of listening to Clinton, blurted out, "Someone should tell Bill Clinton what happened to President William Henry Harrison." What did happen to Harrison?—C.D., Tulsa, Okla.

A Prior to Ronald Reagan, the oldest man to be elected President was William Henry Harrison (1773-1841). Despite his 68 years, Harrison insisted on delivering his inaugural address outdoors. March 4, 1841, was a cold and blustery day, but Harrison declined to wear a hat, gloves or overcoat. He spoke for one hour and 40 minutes, giving the longest inaugural speech in Presidential history. Subsequently, he came down with a cold that developed into pleurisy. On April 4—exactly one month after his inauguration—President Harrison died. He was succeeded by Vice President John Tyler.

Q Is Liz Taylor by chance a hypochondriac? Every few months, it seems, she's in some hospital recovering from obesity, drug abuse, pneumonia or something.—T. Mills, Lawrence, Kan.

A In her 56 years, Elizabeth Taylor has been hospitalized for a variety of illnesses. Last month, she spent time in St. John's Hospital in Santa Monica, Calif., recovering from a compression fracture of a vertebra. As to possible hypochondria, there is no evidence that she is abnormally concerned about her health or obsessed by fears of succumbing to one ailment after another.

Q On July 17, you wrote that Princess Di had never posed as a centerfold model for a men's magazine. You may be surprised to learn that in a "Playboy" magazine called "The Parody," Di appears in the foldout, exposing more than her pearly white teeth.—Mike Belk, Indian Trail, N.C.

A To the many readers who have written us about that nude photo of Diana in "Playboy" magazine, here are the facts: In the winter of 1983, a magazine titled "Playboy—The Parody" was published by Taylor/Shain Inc., which is not the company that publishes "Playboy." It carried the cover line "Our Reigning Playmate—Lady Di—A Right Royal Spread." Moreover, the centerfold revealed Di as "Miss Wales," in all her pristine nakedness. What it did not reveal was that the photo was a composite, consisting of Diana's head superimposed on some other young lady's curvaceous body.

Zanuck and Grable: Incomplete passes didn't faze him

Q Did Darryl Zanuck, head of 20th Century-Fox studios, try to force Alice Faye and Betty Grable out of the movies because they refused to succumb to his sexual advances? Isn't that why he secretly destroyed nearly all the master negatives of their films, so that the Betty Grable and Alice Faye motion pictures are not available on videocassettes?—Jack Biringer, Berkeley, Calif.

A Darryl Zanuck (1902-79) was a womanizer of insatiable sexual appetite. He made a pass at virtually all the actresses under contract to his studio, including Alice Faye and the late Betty Grable. When rebuffed, however, he took the rejection in stride and moved along to the next possible conquest. He never blacklisted Grable or Faye or destroyed the master negatives of their films. Few of them currently are available on videocassette, but Fox says it does plan to market its older films.

Q On a recent TV talk show, the host and his guests were unanimous in contending that the warmth and friendliness which Oprah Winfrey projects on her talk show are spurious. They said that when the TV cameras are off, Oprah becomes "Miss Iceberg." Truth or sour grapes?—Burns Whitaker, Valparaiso, Ind.

A In our opinion, a modicum of both. Oprah Winfrey's talk show may lack the chemistry of newness—and Oprah may not generate the warmth and enthusiasm she once did—but "spurious" and "Miss Iceberg" do not accurately reflect her behavior pattern.

A SPECIAL REPORT

WHY DO SOME PEOPLE SURVIVE AIDS?

BY BERNARD GAVZER

STEVE CALLAHAN ARRIVED HOME in the Castro district of San Francisco on the evening of Jan. 13, 1983, and found that the door locks had been changed. No one would answer his knock. A few days later, he discovered that everything he had ever touched had been thrown out—clothes, books, bedsheets, toothbrush, curtains, carpeting. Even the wallpaper. Trashed.

Only a few days earlier, Callahan had told his housemates—whom he also regarded as his friends—that the sickness he'd had since October 1982 had been diagnosed as Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, or AIDS. Tests had showed that he suffered from Kaposi's sarcoma, a form of cancer which is one of the disorders used to define AIDS.

Dan Borris

"People were hysterical," says Callahan. "AIDS was equated with instant death. Overnight, I had no friends. I slept on park benches. I stole food. I passed bad checks. I was literally the first person in San Francisco, maybe in the entire country, living on the streets with AIDS that winter. No one would come near me. I was told that I had 14 weeks to live."

Nearly six years have passed, and Callahan, once a high school English teacher, still ambles the same streets where he was scorned. But he is no longer isolated. He is now the co-director of New Friends of San Francisco, a nonprofit support group. The feisty Colorado-born Irishman has beaten the odds.

The odds: Once an individual is diagnosed with AIDS, his or her probability of surviving for one year is 50 percent, according to a study done in 1987 for the New York City Department of Health.

Rob Levine

"I concentrate on the possibilities of living rather than the probabilities of dying," says Cristofer Shihar, 37, of Los Angeles, who has been in remission since 1984.

Andy Levin

And so the portrait of the AIDS epidemic has been one of doom and gloom. No question about it: The toll has been devastating. Since the start of the epidemic in 1981, 69,366 persons in the United States have been reported with AIDS (as of Aug. 1, 1988). Almost 39,000 of them—more than half—have died.

Then there are those like Steve Callahan. In mid-1985, there were only 14,603 documented cases of AIDS in the United States. Fifteen percent of them, or about 2000 Americans altogether, remain alive and active today. These individuals, and any others who have survived at least three years, are classified by the federal Centers for Disease Control (CDC) in Atlanta as long-term survivors.

How have Callahan and the others managed to survive?

"Frankly, we do not know how or why they've survived," says Dr. Ann Hardy, the CDC epidemiologist who is tracking long-term survivors. "It may be something we just can't measure. But it is important for us to find out."

The survivors described in this report have had AIDS or ARC (AIDS-Related Complex) for at least three years. They are not being kept alive on respirators or by some heroic means. They are active, appear to be in good health and, in some cases, claim to be in remission. Some were diagnosed with either AIDS or ARC four, five or six years ago.

But they are living with AIDS.

These long-term survivors have a number of things in common, according to Dr. George F. Solomon, a pioneer in the field of psychoneuroimmunology at UCLA. His research investigates how the mind and emotions impact on the immune system. Dr. Solomon and researchers at the University of California at San Francisco have found these characteristics among long-term AIDS survivors:

- They are realistic and accept the AIDS diagnosis but do not take it as a death sentence.
- They have a fighting spirit and refuse to be "helpless-hopeless."
- They have changed lifestyles.
- They are assertive and have the ability to get out of stressful and unproductive situations.
- They are tuned in to their own psychological and physical needs, and they take care of them.
- They are able to talk openly about their illness.
- They have a sense of personal responsibility for their health, and they look at the treating physician as a collaborator.
- They are altruistically involved with other persons with AIDS.

Andy Levin

Changing risky behavior is one of the keystones of a monumental education program undertaken by the U.S. Public Health Service in the hope of stemming the spread of the infection. Under the direction of Dr. Robert Windom, U.S. Assistant Secretary for Health, Understanding AIDS, an easily understood brochure aimed at everyone in the nation, was compiled. Dr. C. Everett Koop, the U.S. Surgeon General, wrote the introduction. Millions of copies were put into the mail. Part of the brochure's nononsense message is:

"There are two main ways you can get AIDS.

"First, you can become infected by having sex—oral, anal or vaginal—with someone who is infected with the AIDS virus.

"Second, you can be infected by sharing drug needles and syringes with an infected person."

Most researchers say AIDS begins with the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) entering the body through semen, blood or vaginal fluid. It's the first stage in a spectrum illness—that is, having no symptoms at all on one end and deathly illness on the other. The virus attacks the immune system, the body's defense against most disease. It can progress from an HIV infection to AIDS-Related Complex, with such symptoms as persistent diarrhea, swollen glands, fatigue and thrush.

Once an individual is diagnosed with AIDS, his probability of surviving for one year is 50 percent, according to the most recent study

The Centers for Disease Control says it becomes AIDS when the immune system breaks down and creates an "opportunity" for other infections. It is AIDS when any one of many opportunistic diseases or of several cancers develops. The most common of the opportunistic diseases is pneumocystis carinii pneumonia, which is the most life-threatening AIDS disease. The most common cancer is Kaposi's sarcoma, whose sufferers have a longer survival history than those with pneumonia.

The battle against AIDS is being waged on three major fronts: (1) the search for an effective treatment to kill or at least neutralize the human immunodeficiency virus; (2) efforts to find some way to protect or rebuild the body's immune system, particularly in raising the number of white blood cells; and (3) the search for a way to protect the nervous system and the brain from attacks by HIV.

Only one drug—AZT, also known as zidovudine—has been approved by the Food and Drug Administration for treating AIDS and ARC. It is an antiviral drug, but it can cause anemia.

The long-term survivors PARADE talked with have explored every way of combating AIDS. Some created guerrilla clinics to get unapproved drugs from Japan, Mexico and France; some endured chemotherapy and radiation; some opted for acupuncture, some for macrobiotic diets, some for vigorous exercise and health regimens; some turned to religion or to ancient healing. Whatever they did, in whatever combinations, those who survived beyond expectations had one compelling trait: grit.

"I was abandoned, but I didn't abandon myself," says Steve Callahan, who describes himself as Case 91 in San Francisco Health Department records. "I told myself the disease would not kill me. I made up my mind to live with the disease."

Ed Kashi

Cristofer Shihar, 37, of Los Angeles, was diagnosed with Kaposi's sarcoma in 1982. He remembers a time "when all I would hear was that I was going to die." He adds: "I just behaved like a kid who is told to wear his galoshes or put on a hat. I'd do just the opposite."

"Spite is what made me hang on at the beginning," says Michael Leonard, 42, a floral designer in New York City who was diagnosed as having ARC in August 1985. "That came about when I first told my father that I was gay, and he said to me, 'I hope you get AIDS.' I hated him for that. Then, when I did get AIDS, I hated him even more. But I made up my mind to live just to spite him."

There is more to it than just grit and determination, of course. There is a lot of pain and misery and worry too. There is dealing with public hysteria and, for gays, with powerful prejudice against them. It makes staying alive awfully hard.

Judy Benjamin

Louie Nassaney, 33, Los Angeles, Calif. AIDS diagnosed: 1983.

"You felt like you wanted to die because there was so much hysteria," says George, a young Southerner who doesn't want his family name used. "My God, police in Washington, D.C., wore rubber gloves to arrest gays at a demonstration. And what about the little AIDS baby in that California town? The baby was choking, and the volunteer fire department wouldn't come. And those three Florida kids, the brothers with hemophilia who were kept out of school for testing positive?

"I don't think firemen or police or the people in that Florida town were intentionally cruel. They're victims of the hysteria too. That hysteria has made a lot of us crazy. We'd run everywhere looking for a cure, for some kind of miracle drug or miracle answer. Sometimes you felt you should die so that the police and firemen wouldn't have to act that way."

One of the early drugs employed to rebuild the immune system was alpha-interferon, an antiviral compound that had some toxic side effects. Louie Nassaney, 33, of Los Angeles, was part of a UCLA program exploring its use. He was diagnosed with Kaposi's sarcoma in 1983.

"I was on alpha-interferon for seven months," says Nassaney, "and had a lot of bad side effects—loss of hair, fevers, sleeping all the time, depression, taking 16 to 24 Tylenol every day. My body was wasting away. I didn't want to stay alive this way. Then I learned about Louise Hay and attended her therapy sessions. I read her book You Can Heal Your Life. I stopped hating myself for being gay. I started deep meditation for two to three hours. I started praying to God. I began body-building." He has built himself up by pumping iron.

As Nassaney talks, he moves a pencil eraser back and forth across a lesion on his well-muscled leg. "This is the way I get rid of my lesions," he explains. "It's part of visualizing making them disappear." Does it work? "Well, in 1984, UCLA did a biopsy of an old lesion, and it was nothing but scar tissue."

Louise Hay conducts workshops that attract up to 700 persons at a time. She is celebrated as a person who allegedly rid herself of a cancerous tumor by a healing process of, as she puts it, "learning to love myself."

Cristofer Shihar also was in an alpha-interferon program at UCLA, getting intravenous doses of 93 million units a day and enduring dreadful side effects for most of 1983 and part of 1984. "I dealt with it by doing cocaine," he says. "Everyone knew, but they couldn't stop me. Then I quit the program. I stopped everything. Everything." Soon after, Shihar learned that he was in remission.

Shihar says his "spiritual turnaround" began when he met Sally Fisher, a woman who developed AIDS-mastery workshops in conjunction with a New York support group, Northern Lights Alternatives. Shihar is now Western regional director of Northern Lights. He still gets checked at UCLA every six months and says there has been no recurrence of Kaposi's sarcoma. "I learned how to concentrate on the possibilities of living rather than the probabilities of dying," he says. "I've been in remission longer than I've had AIDS. Isn't that nice?"

George R. Kish, 54, a senior program analyst for IBM in Atlanta, says that part of staying alive lies in doing constructive things such as appearing in the play Higher Ground: Voices of AIDS, which had a brief run. Many of the 28 persons in the play had AIDS.

Andy Levin

"I was gay and in a seminary studying for the priesthood," Kish told audiences in Higher Ground. "I was urged by the clergy and psychiatrists to forget the priesthood and get married. They said that would cure my illness of homosexuality." Then he told more of his own story.

Kish did get married, became a father and now has three grown sons. In 1979, his marriage ended and he "came out"—that is, he revealed himself as gay. At about the same time, he fell ill. In 1982, he was diagnosed as having a condition called Gay-Related Immune Deficiency, or GRID (later labeled ARC). "I had three devastating bouts of parasites," he says. "In 1987, I got tuberculosis." He was treated with AZT and other experimental antiviral compounds. Lately, he has been using aerosol pentamidine to prevent lung infections.

"But you know what else keeps me alive?" he asks. "It's my volunteer work. I just know I've got to stay alive to help others. Also, being able to be open about being gay has made me the happiest in my life. And my boys," he says proudly, "all live down here—and all accept me."

Kish was featured in a recent article in IBM's employee publication, Think, praising him for his tireless zeal in making hospital visits and working in AIDS support groups.

No therapeutic drugs for Gary Brown, 41, of Wichita, Kan. Diagnosed as having Kaposi's sarcoma in September 1984, he decided from the first day that he would shun medications, chemotherapy and radiation. He is on a modified macrobiotic diet, which means that, in addition to meals of vegetables, grains and beans, he occasionally eats chicken or fish. He runs two miles every other day, lifts weights and exercises regularly. "I have only one small lesion, on my toe," he says. "And—would you believe it?—I've gained 15 pounds."

Those who've survived still have to deal with public hysteria and the powerful prejudice against gays. It makes staying alive awfully hard.

All of those mentioned—Callahan, Leonard, Shihar, Kish, Nassaney and Brown—are in the high-risk group of gay or bisexual males. The Centers for Disease Control says 63 percent of all its adult AIDS cases are from this group.

The second-largest AIDS group is the intravenous (IV) drug users, those who inject heroin or cocaine into their veins. Many are black or Hispanic. Very few were found among the long-term survivors tracked by PARADE. Other risk groups include people who got AIDS through blood transfusions or treatment for hemophilia, heterosexuals who had infected partners and infants who were infected by their mothers as embryos or at birth.

"One reason you're not going to find many black or Hispanic IV drug users among long-term survivors is because, by the time our people get to the doctors or clinics, they are lucky if they can just hang on to life," says the Rev. Carl Bean, head of the Minority AIDS Project and pastor of Unity Fellowship Church in Los Angeles. "So many Latinos are undocumented—they are non-people and are afraid of the system. All of them use over-the-counter pills when they get sick. You can have fine brochures, but what good does it do if people can't read?

"The fact is, among our people, treatment for AIDS begins when they reach the emergency room in the county hospital, when it's already too late."

The survival rate of infants who became infected as embryos or at birth is probably the worst among all groups. Dr. James Oleske of Children's Hospital in Newark, N.J., was one of the first to identify the tiniest of people with AIDS, establishing that they got the disease from their mothers.

"The wolf is at the door," says Dr. Oleske. "Infants who are infected at birth frequently develop pneumocystis carinii pneumonia and die. Not many survive. I would say that 10 percent of our children have survived five or six years with this disease. It doesn't mean they're cured, just that they're functioning. We've had to work very hard to accomplish that."

Another group of children is under the special scrutiny of Dr. Thomas Mundy of Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles. These are children who were infected with AIDS by transfusions during the period from 1980 to March 1985, after which the nation's blood supply reportedly became much safer.

"About one-third of our children who were infected during the 1980-85 period are doing quite well," says Dr. Mundy. "Another third could be described as a little sicker than other 6-year-olds, with more colds or fevers. And the other third are significantly ill." AZT has been the mainstay of Mundy's therapy.

Rob Nelson

Heterosexuals who are not IV drug users form another small-risk group. The case of Niro Asistent, a 43-year-old Belgian-born blonde who lives in East Hampton, N.Y., typifies the heterosexual experience. Asistent fell ill in August 1985 and subsequently was diagnosed as having ARC. Her male companion also became ill, and she discovered that he had been bisexual and was the source of her infection. He was treated with many of the drugs and nostrums available but died.

"When I was first tested, and it was positive," Asistent recalls, "I couldn't believe it and demanded another test. It also was positive. I was very sick. I had a terrible urinary infection, candida, extreme diarrhea, exhaustion, night sweats and terrible mood swings. Beljeving that I was under a death sentence, I decided to lead a richer, fuller life until the end. I began eating natural, healthy food. I made new friends and began walking every day. I am happy to say I tested negative in May 1986. I am tested every three months, and I am still negative."

While the reports of long-term survivors are encouraging, Dr. James Curran, director of the Centers for Disease Control's AIDS program, says AIDS remains an extremely important health problem because there are at least 1 million and possibly 1.5 million people who have the human immunodeficiency virus. "We do not have precise figures," says Dr. Curran, "but those are our best estimates. Studies indicate that up to half of these people will develop AIDS within 10 years of the infection, and a majority of the others will have symptoms of other related diseases."

Still, there is a sense among people with AIDS and others associated with them that long-term survival for many, rather than just the exceptional few, is within reach.

"I think credit must be given to gay activists," says Dr. Alan S. Levin, a San Francisco immunologist who heads Positive Action HealthCare, the nation's first private outpatient AIDS clinic dedicated to early intervention.

"The gay activists really forced the government to pay attention to this crisis. They did a masterful job of marshaling information and of making an undeniable case for relaxing federal restrictions on new drugs and prophylaxes. They've practically stopped the spread of the HIV infection in the gay communities. And they have invented hotlines that provide people with very solid, reliable information. That has never happened with diabetics or arthritics or people with heart conditions."

Indeed, the Gay Men's Health Crisis in New York City epitomizes the kind of education and service organization that has mushroomed as our society has begun to develop a concern and compassion for those with AIDS. There are dozens of such groups (see next page). Their services range from providing low-cost drugs to helping a person with AIDS pay the rent to providing support by energetically spreading the message that AIDS is not an automatic death sentence.

"People are still being constantly told, 'You get AIDS, you're going to die,'" says Tom O'Connor, 42, the author of Living With AIDS: Reaching Out, who was diagnosed with ARC in November 1980. "I say: 'Look at me. I've had AIDS-Related Complex for nearly eight years.' There are other people doing as well, if not better. I won't say it's a huge number, but it's like doing the four-minute mile. People said no man could do it. But one did. Now there are probably tens of thousands who've done it. There'll be tens of thousands of survivors too."

WHERE THE NUMBERS COME FROM

Statistics used in this report are from the Centers for Disease Control (CDC), the federal agency in Atlanta. The figures are based on reported diagnosed cases, rather than interpolations or speculative or estimated numbers.

There is controversy regarding almost every aspect of the AIDS epidemic. For example, the CDC statistics on AIDS victims do not include persons infected with the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) or AIDS-Related Complex (ARC). Yet deaths have occurred from these illnesses, so the AIDS figures, admittedly, are not complete. No one is certain of the true number of dead or infected or long-term survivors, except as reflected by the CDC case reports.

PARADE has included some persons with ARC among the long-term survivors because (1) they regard themselves as having AIDS and/or (2) they consider that their status as having ARC, and not AIDS, may be due to either early diagnosis or early intervention.

AIDS HOTLINE: 1-800-342-AIDS

This is the free national hotline number for anyone with a question about AIDS. It functions 24 hours a day, every day, in every state as well as U.S. territories.

The information specialists are well-trained and courteous, respect privacy and clearly are attuned to the needs of callers. They can direct callers to appropriate sources among the more than 8000 entries in the hotline data base. The hotline is operated under the direction of the American Social Health Association, headquartered in Durham, N.C., under a contract with the Centers for Disease Control.

THE PEOPLE WHO ARE HELPING

The AIDS epidemic has given rise to many grass-roots volunteer movements, which augment state, county and municipal health departments and similar agencies. Many of the volunteer, nonprofit, private organizations focus on direct services to those who have been diagnosed as having AIDS or who are ARC- or HIV-positive. They range from guerrilla clinics that supply therapeutic drugs—approved and unapproved, generic and pirated, legal and illegal—to education programs designed to stop the spread of infection. In all, more than 3000 agencies and organizations may be involved. Here are some of the major groups (all are nonprofit):

Sigourney's Gorillas

Adventure, animal story, romance, character study... Gorillas in the Mist is a great-looking, terrific movie about Dian Fossey, a fiercely determined Kentucky woman who spent close to 20 years in Central Africa studying the mountain gorilla and—despite revolution, witchcraft, poachers and a reluctant government—devoted her life to saving them from extinction. We watch Sigourney Weaver develop and change in an astonishing performance as the single-minded anthropologist whose sometimes violent obsession with protecting "her" gorillas earns her dangerous enemies. Fossey was murdered in 1985.

Hanks Gets Mean

Columbia Pictures

Field and Hanks: These are comedians?

Tom Hanks daringly risks his Mr. Nice Guy persona and hits big playing a bitter and angry comic who doesn't give a hoot for the other struggling performers at a New York City club in Punchline. It's an offbeat dark comedy with virtuoso turns by Hanks and Sally Field, who—while she's not so willing to risk not being liked—isn't afraid to look frumpish and sometimes foolish as a housewife who uses her $500 cookie-jar stash to buy jokes and defies her husband to go after her dream.

• And check out Dead Ringers, about identical twin gynecologists (played by Jeremy Irons) who become involved with the same actress (Genevieve Bujold), with frightening consequences. Although inspired by the real-life story of twin doctors, this is fiction.

By eating too many foods with high cholesterol you may increase your risk of disease, cancer or stroke. But what does this mean? As you can see in the drawing below, cholesterol can build up in your arteries and slowly, unknown to you, cause serious risk of major disease.

"What Can I Do?"

But by decreasing the amount of food you consume that contains high levels of cholesterol, you may stop this deadly build up and save your arteries and your life. THE CHOLESTEROL COUNTER is a simple and straight forward list of thousands of foods so you can know how much cholesterol you are eating. For instance, did you know that a piece of chicken with a batter can have 142 mg of cholesterol and that same piece without skin or batter—93 mg. Or that a popular fast-food breakfast contains 285 mg of cholesterol but a bowl of cereal with low fat milk could contain as little as 2 mg of cholesterol.

Two In One Counter

This very handy pocket size cholesterol counter contains over 3000 foods—generic and name brands in a clear alphabetized list. In addition to simple explanations of what your cholesterol level should be and guidelines for intake Every Listing Also Has a Calorie Count. So if you are interested in saving your arteries—order THE CHOLESTEROL COUNTER today. Only $4.95.

Q. What is Cholesterol?
A. Cholesterol is a waxy fat-like substance that is part of every cell in your body. Cholesterol is needed by the body, but when there is too much it can be deposited on the artery wall, narrowing it and interfering with the blood flow.

PARADE'S SPECIAL

Intelligence Report

Because of volume of mail received, Parade regrets it cannot answer queries.

Permissive Sex

Society's attitudes on sex are overly permissive. So declared 68% of the 50,000 women recently surveyed by Woman's Day magazine. About 30% of the respondents admitted, however, that while single they had participated in an affair with a married man, and 28% confessed to having engaged in an affair while married.

The typical woman who responded to the survey is 40, well-educated, married with children and holds a paying job.

Preferably Oxford

Members of the Japanese royal family apparently prefer British to American universities. Prince Aya—a grandson of Emperor Hirohito and third in line to the throne—is in England studying the language before he enters St. John's College at Oxford next month to begin graduate work in the field of zoology.

Prince Aya, 22, is the second son of Crown Prince Akihito and Crown Princess Michiko. Their first son, Prince Hiro, 28, also studied at Oxford, entering Merton College in 1983 for graduate studies in commodity transportation. Both princes completed their undergraduate work at Gakushuin University in Tokyo.

If the Power Fails...

If your freezer should stop functioning because of a power shortage or for any other reason, you can prevent your food from spoiling if you: 1) keep the freezer door closed, 2) move food to a locker plant, 3) add dry ice or 4) can the food if possible.

The University of Maryland Cooperative Extension Service advises that food may stay frozen for up to 48 hours after the electricity goes off if the freezer door remains closed. Dry ice, which is frozen carbon dioxide, will keep foods frozen for several additional days. And a freezer which is full will stay cold longer after the power has stopped than will a freezer which is only half full.

Life is best for Annika Davidsson, Miss Sweden (l), and good for Courtney Gibbs, Miss U.S.A., but conditions for a woman in Bangladesh (r) were rated the worst in the world

The five best countries in which a female can be born, reared, educated, employed, married and spend her life are: 1) Sweden, 2) Finland, 3) the U.S., 4) East Germany and 5) Norway.

The five worst, in order of unfavorability: 1) Bangladesh, 2) Mali, 3) Afghanistan, 4) North Yemen and 5) Pakistan.

These are some of the findings of a major new study that ranks the status of women in 99 countries, representing 2.3 billion women (92% of all the world's females). Titled "Country Rankings of the Status of Women: Poor, Powerless and Pregnant," it was conducted by the Population Crisis Committee, a private, Washington-based organization that advocates voluntary family planning.

Herewith statistical extracts comparing the status of women in the highest and lowest ranked countries and the U.S.:

Better Than Ever

BY DAVID HALBERSTAM

Bob Nelson

RED BARBER IS 80 and still broadcasting. Next year will mark the 50th anniversary of the moment when he first arrived in Brooklyn and began broadcasting in a style that seemed utterly foreign to its citizens. He began slowly but steadily, converting the restless natives to his vision of both baseball and its language. All of that is now history. The Brooklyn Dodgers have long since fled to Los Angeles, and there is a housing development where Ebbets Field once stood. New York is a different city, and baseball is a different sport. But the memory of Barber's voice—distinctive, with its sharp, clear cadence and his Southern aphorisms—remains remarkably fresh: Because of him, and because of radio's importance then, we remember the messenger as distinctly as the message.

In some ways, his voice sounds better than ever. Each Friday, about 3.5 million people hear his conversations with Bob Edwards, the host of National Public Radio's Morning Edition. The segment is the show's most popular feature, drawing by far the most mail. "People respond to him," says Edwards, "because he is real, because there is nothing faked. Most personalities you see and hear these days in broadcasting are plastic ones—hyped-up personalities worthy of game-show hosts. What people understand immediately about Red is that it would be impossible for him to be anything but what he is."

The connection to NPR came about somewhat by accident. In December 1980, Elston Howard, the first black to play for the Yankees, died. A young woman at NPR named Ketzel Levine was looking for someone to do a brief essay on Howard. Her father had grown up listening to Barber in Brooklyn, and she felt steeped in his legend, knowing her basic Barberisms—that when all the ducks were on the pond, for example, the bases were loaded. She located Barber in Tallahassee, Fla. Barber himself takes great delight in telling the rest of the story: "She called and said that Elston Howard had just died and asked if I could give my impression of him. I told her that if they had their equipment ready, I could give it to her right then." They did, and it was a success. So much so that Barber was asked to become a regular commentator. In 1981, at age 72, he went back to work.

He broadcasts from his house. He has insisted that the broadcasts be live, because he thinks they are more human. On Fridays, he gets up at 6 a.m. and dresses carefully because, home or no, it seems wrong to broadcast in his pajamas. Then he feeds the Barber Abyssinian cat, Arwe (the name, he notes, means wild beast in the ancient Ethiopian language), has a cup of tea and a glass of juice. The Tallahassee paper is delivered at 6:30, and he quickly scans the sports pages to make sure that nothing transcending has happened overnight. Then he says—as he said every day before he went to work in his broadcasting life (he is a lay preacher and, in his own words, "a Book of Psalms man")—the last verse of the 19th Psalm: "Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be always acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength, and my redeemer."

These are not so much sports reports as visits with Red Barber. Often, he begins with a report on the flora and fauna of Tallahassee.

"Robert," he began once, "the crepe myrtle is blooming, and there is an old adage around here that when the crepe myrtle blooms, the watermelons are ripe."

"I've never heard that saying," says the bemused Edwards, perfect in his role as straight man. Another time, Barber mentions a story he has seen in The New York Times about an Abyssinian cat who has done some kind of heroic deed.

"Not again, Red," says Edwards.

"Robert, that is a famous cat," says Red.

Red Barber—Walter Lanier Barber, to be more exact—was as much the reflection of an era as any politician, writer, actor or, for that matter, baseball player.

The country was different then. The home as theater was as yet unimaginable: Television was in its embryonic years, and there were few possibilities for entertainment, particularly free entertainment, for young people and grownups alike. As such, baseball seemed to hold an importance that defied logic. It reigned supreme in the world of sports, more real than life itself. It was the place to which ordinary people could escape.

Do not be deceived, says a friend. Red is a very tough man—if you define toughness as a factor of will and spirit.

AP/Wide World

Barber covered the Brooklyn Dodgers—a funky, occasionally erratic, always exciting and increasingly talented team, the most prized possession of a community in search of itself. Some of his phrases made it into the language. A rhubarb was a violent verbal confrontation between players and umpires. Someone in a favored position was in the catbird seat. Many of his most faithful listeners were the children of immigrants, raised in homes where in the beginning there was no knowledge of the village green from which the game had come. Their descendants were using baseball as the most elemental part of the process of amalgamization; as they listened and cheered, they became more American, less foreign, more a part of the whole.

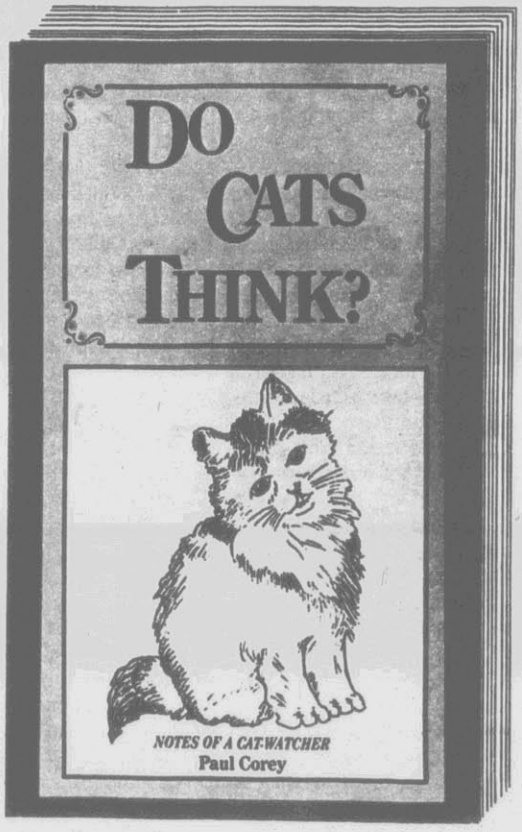

The city changed, of course. The neighborhoods changed. Walter O'Malley took his team West. Baseball was played more and more at night. Red Barber left the Dodgers and did a tour with the Yankees. In time, that powerful organization weakened and, like his longtime colleague, Mel Allen, Barber seemed to take the blame for the weak teams. Some 22 years ago, he left New York and daily sports broadcasting.

Recently, I went to Tallahassee to see Red Barber. I am finishing a book about baseball in the late 1940s, and I wanted to interview him. I told him over the phone how much I had enjoyed his broadcasting when I was younger. "It sounds like you're going to ask for something," he said, not unpleasantly and not even warily. He was right, but I had caught something immediately—that rare combination of old-fashioned courtliness mixed with the flintiness of the utterly independent man. In some people, more aggressive, that manifests itself as territory. With Barber, because he is so civilized, it manifests itself as dignity. He does not lightly bend to fashion. If fashion is important, he seems to be saying, it will come my way.

Do not be deceived, says one old friend. Red is a very tough man—if you define toughness as a factor of will and spirit. He has a sense of his own value that is absolute. He once knowingly walked away from the most cherished job in sportscasting, that of broadcasting the World Series.

He and Mel Allen had done it regularly, befitting the nation's two top broadcasters. The problem was that Gillette,

Cats remember. Cats communicate. Cats learn. And cats think …as every devoted cat-owner knows. And cats can make known their thoughts and feelings to anyone who cares enough to observe their behavior…and knows what to look for.

Here, in an absolutely fascinating book, the author shares his insights and observations, and most delightful anecdotes from over four decades of cat-watching. Behind their charming antics, he reveals, cats are surprisingly similar to us…and are fully capable of experiencing all the emotions we are. As proof, he shares example after example of intelligent behavior he has personally observed in the many cats he and his family have lived with over the years.

What is Your Cat Trying to Tell You?

You'll find out all about how cats communicate, from the "silent meow" and subtle body movements to the three distinctive "meow" sounds cats make and the occasions for each…and about how they learn, both from older cats and from humans. Along the way, many long-held myths about cats get debunked and the record set straight—cats can be trained, and they do give and receive affection.

Every cat-lover who has ever sat watching his or her pet and wondered what the cat was thinking will want a copy of this delightfully entertaining book. Order your copy of DO CATS THINK? today.

which owned the broadcasting rights, also had the right to pick the broadcasters. Craig Smith, who handled broadcasting for Gillette, took great delight in paying sportscasters minimal fees because he knew how badly they wanted the job. In 1953, though, Barber announced that he would negotiate the fee through his agent, knowing that it was an act of suicide as to his ability to do any future Series. Craig Smith was furious. "You'll get what you got last year—take it or leave it—and that's it," he said. Barber came back home that night and turned to his daughter Sarah, whose 16th birthday it was, and said, "Sarah, I've just given you the greatest present I can give. I gave you back your father's self-respect." He never did another national network World Series. "But I'm prouder of that than the 13 I did broadcast," he says.

So one approaches him carefully. He does not want to be flattered, or flattered too quickly, by someone he does not know. The terms will be his. I arrived at his and Lylah Barber's house on an early Sunday afternoon, ready to listen but not to presume.

He is smaller now, and what remains of the famous red hair is more of a fringe on the sides of his head. But the voice, the voice has not changed. It is still magical, as vibrant and controlled and authoritative as ever.

With Barber I phrase my questions carefully. I watch my adverbs. I do not pretend that I was a bigger fan of his and the Dodgers than I was. But if he is guarded at first, he is also wonderfully courteous. The season I am writing about is 1949. He challenges me on this. The great season, he says, is 1947, because that is the year that Jackie Robinson entered the major leagues. Robinson was a luminescent presence, a man whose physical abilities were matched by his intellectual and spiritual ones. Barber—born in Columbus, Miss., raised in Florida—had been told of Branch Rickey's intention to sign a black player long before almost anyone else. He had been jolted by the news, for he was a product of his background, and that was a completely segregated world. Rickey, he decided much later, had told him so early on because he knew Barber would need time to become accustomed to the idea. The first night he had gone home, wondering whether he should quit or not. "Well," said Lylah Barber, "even if you quit, you don't have to quit tonight. Let's have a martini and think about it."

"The more I thought," Barber recalls, "the more I saw myself clearly, and the more I realized that I had no more control over being white than he had over being black. And I thought to myself: Why am I so proud of something over which I have no control and was in no way a matter of achievement? It was all a matter of chance." With that, the fog cleared. "Do you know that I never said he was black? Never once. He was a baseball player, and I reported on him as a baseball player, which was my job."

We talk for a moment of the manager, Leo Durocher. He is oddly fond of Durocher. I say oddly, because Barber is in all things proper—religious, civil and courtly—and Durocher was, in almost all things, the very opposite of that: violent and coarse, seeking the most primitive kind of confrontation. What intrigues Barber about Durocher is his elemental sense of justice, based on the laws of baseball—whoever was better should play, regardless of his background. Rickey wanted Durocher to be Robinson's first manager, because he would have fought "tooth and toenail" for Robinson.

There had been a taste of what might have been. The Dodgers were training in Panama, and Durocher got wind of a Dodger players' strike against Robinson. "The news reached Durocher after he had undressed to go to bed," Barber says, "and he understood immediately what it meant. He lay in bed thinking about it for a while, and he did not decide as others might have—to deal with it the next day, which might have been one day too late. Instead, he got dressed immediately and called a team meeting. 'If you do this, if you have this strike,' he told them, 'you can…'" There is a moment of silence for Durocher's unuttered expletives. "'He's a fine ballplayer, and he'll put money in your pocket and in my pocket, and he's going to play. And furthermore,' he said," and Barber adds emphasis, "'he's just the first. Just the first. They're all going to come, and they're going to be hungry, damn hungry, and if you don't put out, they'll take your jobs.'" Then, of course, Durocher was suspended for other reasons, and Burt Shotton, one of the least confrontational men in baseball history, took over. "If Leo had done it," says Barber, barely able to control his glee, "there would have been a lot more singing and slow walking. There would have been a lot more brushbacks, a lot more confrontation."

Then Barber is back to the present. The 80th birthday thing, as he puts it, was very demanding. It brought all sorts of ceremonial things—lunches, honors from people in the state government. There was not a lot of contact from the world of baseball—a phone call from PeeWee Reese and from Peter O'Malley. But there was a special broadcast on NPR with tributes from announcers Vin Scully, Ernie Harwell and Mel Allen.

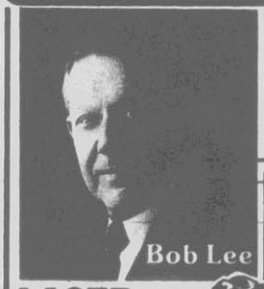

Near the end, Bob Edwards had asked if Barber had any secrets to leading so full and rich a life, and he answered, quoting his cousin Eula from Boston, Ga., "Do a little plowing every day because, if you stop, you're a goner." Then, just as Edwards was about to end the segment, Red Barber said he would like to add one more thing, the last line of the 39th Psalm. He did: "O spare me a little that I may recover strength before I go hence and be no more."

Victoria Principal

DOES PAM EWING MISS DALLAS? "How can you miss getting up at 4 or 5 every morning?" said Victoria Principal, the sleek, sexy star who left Dallas a year ago at the top of her celebrity in what some people thought was a mistaken attempt to broaden her acting career. Larry Hagman was not one of those critics. "I don't worry about that girl one bit," he told me. "Whatever she sets her mind to do, she'll do. You watch."

Maybe Larry was right. Victoria has two big TV movies coming up, both delayed by the long writers' strike. In Inadmissible Evidence, she plays what she calls a "Jagged Edge kind of role" and will co-produce (which means she shares both the cost risk and the potential profit). Then comes Obsession, which she'll also co-produce. This sounds like a steamy one. "I'm obsessed by another woman," she told me. "No overt homosexuality, but women can get crushes on other women, just like boys do at school with other boys, star athletes. But when it crosses the line into obsession, it gets dangerous."

She also has written two screenplays, one of which she sold to CBS, then bought back. She was asked to star in Nuts on the London stage, doing the role Barbra Streisand did in the film, but can't clear the dates. And last year she did a one-woman show in Spain. "I wanted to be Ann-Margret for a week," Principal said. "I think I had more fun than the audience."

But how does she really feel about Dallas? "I miss the people," she told me. "We were like family. I was closest, I guess, to Ken Kercheval. From the day we started filming, we bonded. I admire Linda's [Gray] work. I saw Larry recently. There's a man who has run the gamut in show-biz. He's so thoughtful, so generous. I don't want this to sound like sour grapes. I don't miss being on Dallas—just the people. I was ready to leave. Like a divorce, long before you go, you're emotionally gone. I'd already mourned before I left."

But would she go back? "Wait a minute," said Victoria. "I can't believe this. Just last week, they asked me to come back. I was flattered, but the answer is still 'no.'"

One last thing. Did she ever really believe the "dream sequence" in the shower, where husband Bobby Ewing [Patrick Duffy] was brought back to life? Victoria laughed. "I never for one minute believed it. You know, to maintain tension and secrecy, we always shot multiple endings. That was just one of them. I never thought it was serious. And I'll tell you why. They hadn't even arranged for wardrobe. That nightgown I wore was one of my own."

BORN: Jan. 3, 1950, in Fukuoka, Japan.
PERSONAL: Married to Christopher Skinner, 1979-81; married Harry Glassman in 1985.
FILM DEBUT: The Life and Times of Judge Roy Bean, 1972.
FILMS: Include The Naked Ape, 1973; Earthquake, 1974; Vigilante Force, 1976.
TV SERIES: Dallas, 1978-87.
AUTHOR: The Body Principal, 1983.

Victoria Principal proves there is indeed life after "Dallas." Since she stopped being Pam Ewing, she has been writing screenplays, producing and will soon be back on TV in two starring roles.

BRADY'S BITS

Victoria lives with her second husband, Dr. Harry Glassman, in Beverly Hills. The daughter of a career soldier, she was born in Japan, went to school in England, became a model and did her requisite tour as a jet-set playgirl. Then she settled down to acting and even worked as an agent. A long, passionate love affair with young Andy Gibb ended tragically. It still hurts Victoria to talk about Gibb's death. "It hit me so hard and the press hit me so hard," she said. "So private and so painful. I know I did everything possible to avert it [his death]. The end result is you can only do so much for someone. People in the end have to do things for themselves."

Ask Marilyn

BY MARILYN VOS SAVANT

A frog fell into a well 32 feet deep. Each day he jumped two feet up the side wall and slid back down one foot each night. How many days did it take the frog to jump out of the well?

—Iris D. Girolamo, South Orange, N.J.

I'm aware that my answer is going to drive everyone crazy, but I'm going to risk it anyway: It will take him 30 days. To explain, let's suppose that the well is only 2 feet deep. How many days will it take him to jump out? Less than one, because he can land at the bottom, then jump up to the edge and climb right out without sliding back at all. If the well is 3 feet deep, however, he'll jump up 2 feet and slide down one during the first 24-hour period, then jump out when the next day arrives, with only one full day behind him. If the well is 4 feet deep, it'll take him two days, and so on...the number of days always being two less than the feet.

I think we're a bunch of hypocrites! If not, why do people always say, "Money isn't everything," when, in reality, money is all that seems to concern today's society?

—N. Stevens, Youngstown, Ohio

I think people who don't have money say it because they hope it's true, and people who do have money say it because they know it's true.

Why aren't the world's ablest people in leadership positions? It's dismally gloomy to witness so many countries' governments, including ours, composed of persons of mediocre mentality.

—K. Chinn, Oakland, Calif.

Many countries don't have an alternative—leadership is determined by force. Here, however, where we do have a choice, elections often become popularity, not ability, contests.

Cover Story....

"The Best Of SCTV"

By Robert DiMatteo

Fans of "SCTV" know that the late-night series from Canada lovingly lampooned the cheesiest aspects of television and was the haven for the most consistently sharp, off-the-wall comedy ever to reach the tube. Now fans as well as the uninitiated will be able to see "SCTV" regulars John Candy, Eugene Levy, Martin Short, Catherine O'Hara, Andrea Martin, Joe Flaherty, Rick Moranis and Dave Thomas in their classic sequences as well as a "wraparound" segment reintroducing some of the original characters in "The Best of SCTV" (ABC, Sept. 21), a two-hour compilation special offering highlights from the TV series. For those fans who can't get enough, cable's Nick at Nite is rebroadcasting episodes of "SCTV" weeknights.

The cast of "SCTV" (for Second City Television) was a Toronto-based offshoot of the original Chicago improvisational comedy troupe. The original (and lasting) format of "SCTV" took us behind the scenes of a down-on-its-luck TV station in fictitious Melonville — the sort of low-budget, low-inspiration operation that limits itself to lousy imitations and rip-offs of other people's TV shows. While showing us this fake station's poor excuses for local programming, the "SCTV" troupe — all of whom played a variety of characters — came up with brilliant parodies of existing TV programs. The station was populated by a variety of miscreants, lowlifes and ne'er-do-wells.

There was slimy station owner Guy Caballero (played by Joe Flaherty), wheelchair-bound for effect because he could stand when he needed to. His assistant, Edith Prickley (Andrea Martin), was a vision in her leopard-skin jacket and hat and rhinestone glasses. The news was delivered by the dumb Earl Camembert (Eugene Levy) and alcoholic Floyd Robertson (Flaherty), who moonlighted as Count Floyd, host of a grade-Z horror-movie show.

"SCTV" (which aired from 1977 to 1983) was the first TV show to be about television — sort of a meta-TV show. The physical center of the "SCTV" troupe was Candy, a rotund comedian who used his prodigious range to skewer the medium, whether it was as Johnny LaRue, the hustler who could just as easily host a kiddie show as an exercise program, or as William B, the fawning sidekick on "The Sammy Maudlin Show," a "Merv Griffin" sendup.

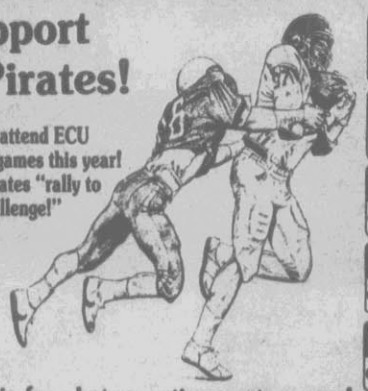

As one watches some of the great moments ABC has culled from "SCTV," one is left with the dispiriting feeling that none of the troupe has been as brilliantly funny on his or her own since the series ended. O'Hara had a few terrific moments in this year's "Beetlejuice," but they were only moments, and she deserves better. So does her equally inventive colleague, Martin, who failed last year with "Roxie," a short-lived CBS sitcom. Even Candy and Short, arguably the most successful of the troupe on their own, have not fulfilled their comic genius in recent film roles. What seems to have happened with "SCTV" is similar to the spontaneous comic flowering that took place on Sid Caesar's "Your Show of Shows" and the original "Saturday Night Live" cast. The right comic talents were brought together at the right time, resulting in a collaboration greater than any of the participants. That confluence of genius is only reinforced by watching this ABC special and the Nick at Nite repeats. It's clear that "SCTV" 's playfully irreverent scrutiny of the medium was — and remains — timelessly refreshing.

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

Dear Michele: I'm a big fan of Melissa Gilbert's. Please list her date of birth, age and any other credits besides "Little House on the Prairie." — KRISTI HOOK, OLATHE, KANS.

Gilbert was born May 8, 1964, in Los Angeles. She was 9 years old when she landed the part of Laura Ingalls in the TV movie that launched the long-running "Little House" series (1974-83).In 1979, she received an Emmy nomination for her role as Helen Keller in the NBC TV-movie remake of "The Miracle Worker." Gilbert has appeared on stage in "Bus Stop," "The Glass Menagerie" and "A Shayna Maidel," and was also featured in the theatrical film "Sylvester" (1985). But she is best known as a small-screen star whose TV-movie credits include "The Diary of Anne Frank" (1980), "Splendor in the Grass" (1981), "Choices of the Heart" (1983) and "Blood Vows: The Story of a Mafia Wife" (1987).

Dear Michele: During the period of Rita Hayworth's illness and death, I read much about the care and concern of her daughter, Yasmin. I recall when Hayworth was married to Orson Welles, she had a daughter, Rebecca. I have never seen her mentioned in connection with her mother. Why not? Is Rebecca living? — B. GROSSMAN, DALEVILLE, ALA.

Rebecca Welles, born in 1944, is the daughter of Hayworth and Welles. Yasmin, born in 1950, is the product of Hayworth's marriage to the late Prince Aly Khan. During her mother's lengthy illness, Rebecca lived in Tacoma, Wash. Meanwhile, her mother lived in a New York City apartment with adjoining quarters to Yasmin. Rebecca, far removed from the day-to-day care and decisions concerning her mother, virtually left total responsibility to Yasmin. Rebecca did, however, visit her mother whenever she was in town, and attended her 1987 funeral.

Dear Michele: Charlton Heston is still one of my favorite actors! What is he doing these days? — FRAN KNIPLING, VICTORIA, TEXAS

Heston has just finished filming a new production of "A Man for All Seasons," which will air later this year on TNT, Ted Turner's new basic-cable service.

Dear Michele: I recently saw the movie "Marnie" with Tippi Hedren, and thought her performance was excellent. I haven't seen Hedren in anything since, and was wondering what happened to her? — MARIA READ, ARCADIA, CALIF.

Hedren, a former fashion model whose career was launched by Alfred Hitchcock in his films "The Birds" (1963) and "Marnie" (1964), was born Nathalie Hedren in 1935 in Lafayette, Minn. Her other films credits include "A Countess from Hong Kong" (1967), "Tiger by the Tail" (1970) and "The Harrad Experiment" (1973).

More recently she appeared in the 1985 NBC movie, "Alfred Hitchcock Presents," which updated classic episodes from the old Hitchcock series. Hedren, married and divorced twice, is the mother of actress Melanie Griffith ("Something Wild"). Since 1971, she has resided at Shambala, a 180-acre California ranch and animal preserve, where she raises lions and tigers. She has written about her hobby in the book "The Cats of Shambala."

Dear Michele: I think I might have seen "Cheers" bartender Woody Harrelson in the movie "Wildcats" with Goldie Hawn. Am I right? — ELLEN SANTOS, BENSALEM, PENN.

Cheers to you — you're right on target! Harrelson appeared as Krushinski in this 1986 feature, which marked his professional acting debut. Before the film wrapped, Harrelson had auditioned for, and won, the role of bartender Woody Boyd on the hit NBC series "Cheers."

Dear Michele: Will you kindly tell me what became of Peter Breck and Richard Long, the two actors who were so convincing in "The Big Valley"? — REBECCA HARTMAN, KNOXVILLE, TENN.

Long died of a heart ailment in 1974 at age 47. Breck runs the Breck Academy, an acting institute in Vancouver, British Columbia.

Williams, once the star of "Laverne and Shirley," plays the wife of a murdered man; Post, who stars on the NBC comedy "Night Court," plays a prostitute who was having an affair with him. The two women team up to find the murderer.

TV Chatter

By Frank Sanello

Tim Daly's sister Tyne co-starred in "Cagney & Lacey," and his father, the late James Daly, starred in "Medical Center." This fall, the 32-year-old actor will finally get his shot at series stardom. In CBS's "Almost Grown," Daly and Eve Gordon play a couple viewed over a 25-year span. The pilot shifts between the '60s and '70s, then back to the present. The passage of time is depicted-by changing the music and hairdos of the actors. Daly says the time traveling isn't confusing. "When we were shooting, they tried to have only one time period per day," he says. "That helped. We weren't doing the '60s one scene then jumping into the '80s in the next."

Of the three periods dramatized in the series, Daly says his favorite is the '70s. "I like the middle period, the long hair. It's the only period I've experienced. The '60s were too early for me," says the 32-year-old actor. "In the early '70s I was a foot off the ground the whole time because the music was so great."

Kristy McNichol, who made a splash as teenager "Buddy" Lawrence in the late-'70s drama "Family," returns to series TV this season as the co-star of NBC's "Empty Nest." In this "Golden Girls" spinoff, she plays a policewoman and daughter of a newly widowed pediatrician (Richard Mulligan). McNichol says she was nervous doing her first comedy series. "It's the first time before a live audience," she says. "But I was so excited I realized there was nothing to be scared about."

McNichol says she was happy to be back on the small screen. "I missed the closeness of being with the same people week after week," she says. "You don't get that on films. A TV series gives you a very secure feeling in such an insecure business."

Also returning to series TV is Lou Gossett Jr., who will star in "Gideon Oliver," one-third of the new "ABC Saturday Mystery Movie." (The other two series feature Peter Falk reprising his "Columbo" role, and Burt Reynolds in a still-untitled detective drama.) But when ABC first asked Gossett to do another series, he said "No way." "I'd been burned in the past," he says, referring to his short-lived 1979 medical series, "The Lazarus Syndrome" and the 1982 sci-fi flop "The Powers of Matthew Star." Gossett agreed to risk the vagaries of episodic television one more time when ABC told him he would only have to do the show once every three weeks.

Gossett says he was intrigued by the character of Gideon Oliver, a globe-trotting, adventure-seeking anthropology professor not unlike Indiana Jones. Gossett isn't denying the similarities. "What are the differences? My last name is Oliver," he jokes. Gossett says Oliver will be a "thinking person with enormous curiosity."

Soap Scoop

The Nicolas Coster plot will thicken on 'AMC'

By Connie Passalacqua

"All My Children" originally signed Nicolas Coster for only the summer to play Andrews, the kidnapper of Travis Montgomery (played by Larkin Malloy). But an additional 13 weeks were recently added to the contract, and he'll return to the show as Dave Gillis, who is really Andrews in disguise. Gillis will turn up in a Pittsburgh boarding house living across the hall from the recently separated Mrs. Travis Montgomery, a.k.a. Erica Kane (played by Susan Lucci). Erica, of course, is hiding out from Andrews, who kidnapped Baby Montgomery, a.k.a. Bianca, as well as daddy.

Coster is an all-time soap favorite, having played romantic leads on at least eight soaps. Most recently, he played Lionel Lockridge on "Santa Barbara," and he was nominated for Best Supporting Actor this year for that role.

For months, the conventional wisdom at "AMC" has been to keep Erica and Travis peacefully together because the audience loved the pairing. But there's an old soap opera adage that a happy soap couple is a boring soap couple. Yes, La Erica did deserve a bit of happiness after 18 years of manchasing. But enough is enough! Break 'em up and let us watch them act.

This is a particularly good opportunity for Malloy, a strong actor (as he proved for years as Sky Whitney on "Edge of Night"), whose business mogul characters tend to turn wishy-washy in the face of the strong female characters they are usually paired with. Remember how Kim Zimmer's Reva Shayne emasculated Malloy's Kyle Sampson on "Guiding Light"? (The character's last name said it all.)

Because soap operas are a women's medium, Malloy's talent has often been wasted. An acting match-up with Coster is just what the doctor ordered.

• Hillary Bailey Smith, who ostensibly left soaps and her role as Margo Hughes on "As the World Turns" with the birth of her second child early this summer, has decided to return after all. Also returning is Daniel Pilon, who has been signed for 20 appearances as Max Dubujak on "Ryan's Hope." That will strengthen the newly revived love triangle of Max, Siobhan (played by Barbara Blackburn) and Joe (played by Roscoe Born). But wait, hasn't that been Pilon, sans his French-Canadian accent, subbing for an ill Chris Bernau as Alan Spaulding on "Guiding Light"? For now, he'll be doing both roles.

FRIDAY OLYMPICS

American runner Carl Lewis (above) faces a showdown with long-time rival Ben Johnson, the Canadian runner, at the men's 100-meter final. It airs Friday, Sept. 23, as part of NBC's Olympics coverage.

Sports Roundup

SUNDAY, SEPT. 18
Olympics (NBC)

NBC's coverage begins in earnest with about 13 hours today, interrupted for the NFL and the news. Today's action will include men's gymnastics, basketball, baseball, weightlifting, diving and boxing, men's and women's swimming finals, women's gymnastics and basketball.

Olympic boxing is quite different from what American fight fans are used to seeing. We asked Dr. Ferdie Pacheco, NBC's "Fight Doctor," to elucidate. "The quickest way to characterize the difference is that it's the difference between fencing and bludgeoning with a broadsword," says Pacheco. "Amateur boxing is predicated on tapping or punching with the white part of the glove landing-flush. The intensity of the punch doesn't matter." As a result, he explains, "Olympic boxing can go either way; a man can forfeit the obvious possibility of landing a lot of tippy-tap punches andgamble on going for the knockout to win so that the judges don't have anything to say about it."

NFL Football (CBS, NBC)

Week 3; CBS has the doubleheader.

MONDAY, SEPT. 19
FRIDAY, SEPT. 23
Olympics (NBC)

MONDAY, SEPT. 19
Football (ABC)

Indianapolis Colts at Cleveland Browns. Some folks think this game might be a preview of the AFC title matchup. However, with problems on the Colt offensive line, even Eric Dickerson might have trouble running the ball. If Chris Hinton is back and Ron Solt is happy, the Colts have a shot.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 24
Olympics (NBC)

We spoke recently with Abel Kiviat, the oldest living American medalist. At the 1912 Games in Stockholm, Kiviat won a silver in the 1500 meters. He painted a vastly different picture of the Games of 76 years ago. "We went over on a small boat, only 19,000 tons," he recalls, laughing, "Imagine what that is today — a rowboat!" There was no Olympic Village; the Americans lived on the boat itself. "They laid a track on the boat," says Kiviat. "You couldn't race on it and only at certain hours could we use it." At other times, the athletes gave way to the boat's paying customers. "They had to take on other passengers to defray the cost of our passage," Kiviat explains. Compare that to the heavily subsidized U.S. team now.

Two Hours Of News

ABC has moved "The Health Show" from Saturday to Sunday mornings, creating a Sunday-morning lineup comprised of "The Health Show," "This Week with David Brinkley" and "Business World." The schedule change, which went into effect last Sunday, Sept. 11, gives ABC two hours of public-affairs programming that includes news, health and business. NBC's 90-minute "Sunday Today," with a similar blend, has drawn strong ratings on Sunday mornings.

Leith Olds Nissan's

1st Time Buyer's Program.

We are pleased to announce Nissan's new purchase program, good for a limited time only, just for people who've never bought a car before! You see, we believe your first car-buying experience should be as exciting (and as easy) as possible!

If you:
- Have a permanent job,
- Have lived at the same address for 1 year,
- Have an income sufficient to make your payments,
- Have no credit (or a satisfactory rating),
- A valid driver's license, and
- A social security number, then you're eligible to buy one of the cars above! Perhaps with no cash down!

The requirements, as you can see, are quite basic and easily met. In fact, we're willing to bet you're eligible and didn't even know it!

Just think, you could be cruising down the highway in your brand-new Nissan—much sooner than you've ever dreamed possible! And by beginning with Nissan quality, dependability and value, you've already made your most important step: getting the right car.

Simply cut out the credit application we've provided below. Fill it out and bring it to Leith Olds/Nissan. We'll be ready to start you on the road to your new car! And when you use your manufacturer's rebate, with absolutely no cash down!

LEITH Olds/Nissan "The Deal Kings" We Deal in Volume...Not Price!

HOMER VALUES COUNT UP

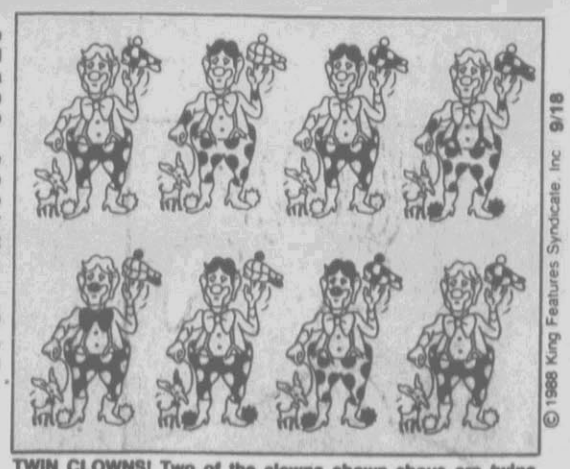

A bonus clause in the contract of a baseball slugger entitles him to a sum of money for each home run he hits up to and including his 25th.

Home run values are reckoned as follows: One cent for the first; two cents for the second; four cents for the third; eight cents for the fourth; etc., doubling each time.

In round figures, then, what will be the value of the player's 25th home run? And what potential value has the bonus overall?

P.S.: It's sizeable.

TWIN CLOWNS! Two of the clowns shown above are twins. Which two? Study subjects carefully before you answer.
