Deaver Gets Suspended Term, $100,000 Fine

By JAMES ROWLEY
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) — Michael K. Deaver, once one of President Reagan's closest aides, was given a suspended three-year sentence today and fined $100,000 for lying under oath about his lobbying activities after he left the White House.

U.S. District Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson, saying he doubted a prison term would deter others from committing what he called "the crime of opportunity," also ordered Deaver to perform 1,500 hours of community service.

In addition, the judge directed Deaver to refrain from lobbying the federal government during the term of his suspended sentence.

After the hearing, Deaver told reporters, "It was a very fair sentence, if I had been guilty."

Outside the federal courthouse, Deaver said he has proposed to the court that he fulfill the community service requirement by counseling alcoholics.

Although Jackson said he did not doubt that Deaver had given false answers to questions about his lobbying, the judge said imprisonment would not be the correct way to rehabilitate Deaver.

Jackson, referring to Deaver's fight against alcoholism, said that "such rehabilitation as is needed, as he well knows, must come from within himself."

In pleading for leniency, Deaver, once Reagan's deputy chief of staff, said that the investigation "has taken a terrible toll on me and my family and my friends and my business."

But Deaver said, "I can take comfort in the fact that I have had the support of friends and family in coming to grips with the worst demon that I faced, and that was alcoholism."

His realization that he had a problem with alcoholism "changed my life dramatically," Deaver said before the sentence was announced.

Talking to reporters later, Deaver said that alcoholism "is a disease that affects many parts of your body and your emotions and certainly your judgment. To this day, I don't recall making some of those phone calls when I was in the hospital, sedated."

In explaining the sentence, however, Jackson dismissed a defense argument that Deaver's memory was clouded by alcoholism when he lied under oath to a House subcommittee and to a grand jury.

The judge said there was "no physiological explanation and excuse for the incorrect answers he gave."

The judge said Deaver's "motives were not entirely mercenary." He said Deaver lied about his lobbying because "he knew his new occupation was not worthy of him."

The judge gave Deaver suspended concurrent three-year sentences for each of the three perjury convictions.

Shuttle Fever Hits Florida's Coast

By IKE FLORES
Associated Press Writer

TITUSVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Green bows will sprout from the lapels of businessmen, schoolchildren and tourists next week as Florida's Space Coast pins its hopes for continued economic boom times on the launch of Discovery.

"Every day, there is a little more excitement and a little bit more tension. You can feel it," said Dr. Bruce Rafert, acting executive director of the Space Research Institute at Florida Institute of Technology. "Space is our business and people here understand the extreme significance of what success and failure means."

The Challenger explosion 32 months ago was a blow to the Space Coast, where launching rockets has been both a business and a personal adventure for almost three decades. It meant the loss of thousands of jobs for engineers, technicians and others at aerospace companies and with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

To the surprise of many, however, the local economy weathered the disaster quite well.

"We've done a lot better than people thought we would do," says Joe Catrambone, executive director of the Titusville Chamber of Commerce. "On an overall basis, the business climate was up over the past two years. Maybe not as much as we would have wanted, but it was still growth."

His words are echoed by econom-

Ortega Cancels U.N. Talk

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega canceled plans to speak before the United Nations next week because of charges the United States illegally put off issuing visas to members of his delegation.

U.S. officials said the problem arose because the Nicaraguans submitted their request late.

Speaking Thursday night when he announced cancellation of Ortega's trip, Deputy Foreign Minister Victor Tinoco said at a news conference, "This arbitrary and illegal attitude constitutes a denial of Nicaragua's rights."

The cancellation of the trip came two days after House Speaker Jim Wright revealed a covert CIA operation to destabilize the leftist government.

Drug Arrests May Bring Long Prison Terms

By JOHN BARE
Reflector Staff Writer

Four people arrested Wednesday in one of the largest drug raids ever in Greenville could each face prison sentences ranging from 65 years to 110 years and fines totaling hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Greenville police and Pitt County sheriff's investigators confiscated more than $23,000 in cash, 3,723 vials of cocaine-based crack worth more than $93,000 and various drug paraphernalia in a series of arrests that began Wednesday afternoon and continued into the early morning hours Thursday.

The four arrested — three Jamaican men from New York and a Greenville woman — are to appear in Pitt District Court on Oct. 7 for a probable cause hearing. All four are being held in the Pitt County Jail on bail ranging from $950,000 to more than $1.3 million.

The four made their first appearances Thursday afternoon in Pitt District Court before Chief District Court Judge E. Burt Aycock Jr.

Courtney Lodine Fuller, 33, who police said moved to 1306 W. Sixth St. in Greenville from Bronx, N.Y., about six weeks ago, is charged with eight drug violations and one charge of possessing a stolen firearm.

Four of the drug violations filed against Fuller are trafficking counts, including charges of manufacturing more than 200 grams of cocaine and conspiring to traffic more than 200 grams of cocaine.

His bail is set $1,352,000, and he could face up to 110 years in prison and a $300,000 fine if convicted on all counts. Aycock initially granted Fuller's request to appoint a lawyer to represent him, but Aycock changed his mind upon realizing Fuller signed an affidavit stating he had about $7,000 in a bank account.

Fuller said the money is in a joint account and is to be used to pay rent and other bills, but Aycock refused to appoint an attorney for him. Fuller asked to be allowed to call relatives in New York, and Aycock asked the bailiff to see that Fuller was allowed to place the call.

Angerette Daniels, 23, of 1306 W. Fourth St. in Greenville is charged with six drug violations and could face up to 65 years in prison and a $150,000 fine if found guilty of all charges.

Three of the drug violations are trafficking charges, in which Ms. Daniels is accused of possessing, manufacturing and conspiring to traffic more than 28 grams of cocaine.

Aycock appointed an attorney from the Pitt County Public Defender's Office to take Ms. Daniels' case. Her bail is set at $950,000.

Aycock repeated instructions several times to Malcolm Encarnacion, 29, and Leslie Lee Thomas, 29, both of the Bronx, N.Y., concerning the possibility of their receiving court-appointed attorneys.

Both men said they thought they could afford to hire their own lawyers, but neither would sign a statement waiving rights to a court-appointed attorney. They said relatives may send money within a few days and they wanted to be free to hire someone other than an appointed attorney.

Encarnacion, who is charged with five drug violations and possession of a stolen firearm, could face up to 100 years in prison and a $400,000 fine if convicted on all charges. Four of the drug violations are trafficking charges in which he is accused of manufacturing, transporting, possessing and conspiring to traffic more than 200 grams of cocaine.

Encarnacion said he has contacted a local attorney who agreed to take his case for $3,000. His wife or brother may send him the money, he said, but he would not sign a statement waiving his right to court-appointed counsel. His bail is set at $1,302,000.

Thomas also said he felt he could get the money to hire his own attorney, but he too refused to sign the agreement waiving his right to court-appointed counsel.

Crash Leaves 1 Dead

VOIRON, France (AP) — A train traveling at 70 mph slammed into a truck at a rail crossing today, killing an engineer aboard the train and injuring about 50 passengers, one of them seriously, police said.

Several cars of the train traveling between Grenoble and Lyon derailed on impact but did not roll over, officials said.

The high-speed train was slowing as it neared the station in this town in the Isere region, near Grenoble, said Jacques Couvert, regional director of the state train authority.

The drivers of the Italian truck and a car that was accompanying it turned themselves into police two hours after the accident, said the French news agency, Agence France-Press.

The truck, which apparently stalled on the tracks, was transporting a transformer weighing several tons, officials said.

Everett Re-Elected PCC Trustee Chief

Car Hits Trooper

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — A Highway Patrol trooper suffered minor injuries early today when he was struck by a car driven by a motorist being pursued at Fort Bragg, the patrol said.

Trooper W.R. Hines suffered torn ligaments in his shoulder but no serious injuries, said Sgt. C.A. Price of the patrol.

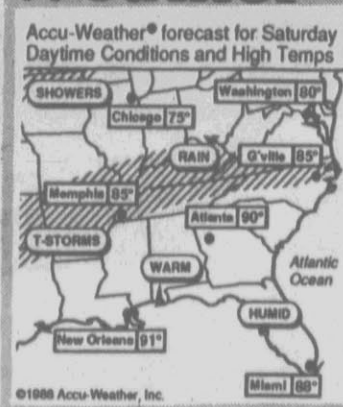

Price said the trooper tried to stop the motorist, but the driver fled and the trooper gave chase. The suspect's car ran into a fence, and the trooper stopped and got out of his cruiser to approach the car.

"As he approached, the person got the car off the fence and started toward the trooper and tried to run over the patrolman with the vehicle," Price said. "The side of the vehicle hit the trooper. The trooper drew his service revolver and fired at the vehicle...once striking the driver in the arm."

Price said Hines got back in his patrol car and chased the suspect, who was stopped by several troopers on N.C. 210 at Fort Bragg.

The motorist, identified only as a soldier from Fort Bragg, was taken to Womack Army Hospital with a gunshot wound in the arm.

Absentee Deadlines Set For Primary

Pitt County election officials say Tuesday at 5 p.m. will be the deadline for applying for absentee ballots that have to be mailed for the second Democratic primary Oct. 11 in County Commissioner Districts 1 and 2, which make up Consolidated District A.

The deadline for walk-in absentee voting by qualified registered District A Democratic voters who will be out of Pitt County during voting hours will be 5 p.m. on Oct. 7.

Any qualified registered Democratic voter in the two districts may vote by absentee ballot if they are unable to vote in person on election day because they are physically unable to enter the voting place, if they are ill, disabled or feeble due to age, or if they will be out of Pitt County during voting hours.

A near relative may apply for ballots to be mailed to a voter, or the voter may send a signed, written request.

Only registered Democratic voters will be eligible to vote in the race between James H. Dupree of Bethel and D.D. Garrett of Greenville. There will be no Republican ballot in this primary.

Questions should be directed to the Pitt County Elections Office, at 830-4121.

Soviet Official Says Bush Involved In Top-Level Talks

By DONNA CASSATA
Associated Press Writer

George Bush, heavy-eyed from a late-night campaign flight, met today with a top Soviet official who said the vice president had been closely involved in top-level U.S.-Soviet negotiations. Michael Dukakis began his day with a low-key game of catch with the Boston Red Sox center fielder.

Both Democrat Dukakis and Republican Bush were to spend most of the day deep in preparation for Sunday night's first presidential debate.

Bush, who has said his foreign policy experience would be an asset if he is elected president, met early today with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze and Secretary of State George Shultz.

After the meeting, Bush told reporters, "If my eyes look a little heavy, I got in at 2 o'clock this morning from Texas." He had attended a GOP fund-raiser in Houston Thursday night.

Shevardnadze said of Bush, "He has been involved in all high-level discussions here in Washington and our talks with the president."

Dukakis also made an early morning appearance, tossing a baseball with Boston's Ellis Burks outside Dukakis' Brookline home.

"A little warm up here," said Burks, whose team begins an important series of baseball games tonight in New York. "Warm up the governor for the campaign, warm me up for the series."

"Burn one in there," a reporter shouted to the governor.

"Not 'til Sunday," replied Dukakis, wearing a blue dress shirt and khaki slacks.

As he went inside, Dukakis was asked what he was doing today to get ready for the debate.

"I just warmed up," he replied.

Meanwhile, in Boca Raton, Fla., President Reagan said in remarks prepared for a fund-raising brunch that he and Bush brought the Soviets to the nuclear bargaining table "because they knew we meant business."

In the election, he said, "the choice this year is between the policies of accommodation and retreat, or the policies of America's political mainstream."

A day earlier, Dukakis lashed out at Bush's record on crime as the Republican nominee ventured into his rival's backyard to pick up a police union endorsement in Boston.

With the first of two nationally televised debates just two days away, Dukakis and Bush cleared their schedules today to pore over briefing books and confer with staff and advisers on Sunday's showdown.

Dukakis was to engage in a mock debate and meeting with New Jersey Sen. Bill Bradley. Bush was spending the day cramming at the vice president's residence.

Negotiators for the two candidates reached agreement Thursday on the final logistical obstacle to the debate — the composition of the panel. Jim Lehrer of public television's MacNeil/Lehrer NewsHour will moderate the debate in Winston-Salem, N.C., and the panelists will be ABC News anchor Peter Jennings, Anne Groer of The Orlando Sentinel and John Mashek of The Atlanta Constitution, the bipartisan commission on debates announced.

While the two presidential candidates limited their appearances, Republican vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle did the same, spending the day in Washington tending to Senate duties.

Democrat Lloyd Bentsen was campaigning in three crucial states — Illinois, Ohio and Pennsylvania where he was expected to reiterate the ticket's stands on Social Security, trade and health care.

The Democrats received some encouraging news from a national poll that put the race at essentially a dead heat, but found a slight dip in Bush's support since the week after the Republican National Convention.

The NBC News-Wall Street Journal survey of 2,630 likely voters found Bush leading 45-41 percent compared with last month's poll showing Bush ahead 47-40 percent.

specialists in other parts of Brevard County.

"There were cuts in space center jobs at first, and overtime was curtailed significantly, but it didn't take too long before they (NASA and shuttle contractors) were back up to normal," said Hank Taylor, assistant director of the Brevard Economic Development Council, based in Cocoa. "The numbers (of workers) are greater today than at the time of the accident."

Tourism, too, has increased at a steady pace. And commercial activity — retail stores, hotels, restaurants — has been healthy for much of the past two years after suffering a sharp dip in the first months following Challenger.

The Spaceport USA visitors center has recorded record attendance in each of the past 20 months and is now Florida's fourth most popular tourist attraction, following Disney World, Sea World and Busch Gardens. Attendance for 1988 is expected to reach 2.7 million visitors.

Enthusiasm for the launch, scheduled for Thursday, has been heightened by a "green-for-shuttle" campaign spearheaded by Brevard County's three chambers of commerce in Titusville, Cocoa Beach and Melbourne.

Spokesmen for those groups say they expect more than half a million visitors for launch, about half of those in Titusville, which is directly across the Indian River from the launch pad.

The chamber campaigns include the sale of thousands of green lapel bows that residents and visitors will begin wearing five days before launch. Businessmen have ordered them by the hundreds, at 40 cents apiece, and the county school board has purchased 56,000 of them for grade schoolchildren.

"The green bows are symbols that visibly demonstrate our interest, enthusiasm and support for the space program," said Julie Jones, tourist director for the local chamber.

The 7,000 employees of Lockheed Space Operations Co., which processes the shuttle for launch, will get personal letters and commemorative medallions with the Discovery mission insignia from their boss, Lockheed President Doug Sargent.

Lockheed, which laid off close to 2,000 workers in the months after the Challenger accident, is back at full strength and "extremely excited about the program resumption," said spokesman John Williams.

"Each time we've hit a milestone in the processing flow, enthusiasm has built. Now, our people are feeling we're almost there," Williams said. "Discovery is a good bird. Everybody's confident."

Besides the immediate impact of the 26th shuttle mission, Space Coast people are counting on a new national commitment for commercial launches and space activity.

Since the shuttle has now been designated primarily for military and governmental cargo, sharp increases are expected in the use of medium and heavy unmanned rockets for commercial satellites and private-industry research in space.

Aerospace executives are working with NASA, Gov. Bob Martinez and other state and local officials on a "Spaceport Florida" concept, providing a private-sector highway to space. The policy encourages other commercial initiatives in the space program.

"There is a huge pent-up demand for research and development in space because of the moratorium on launching," said Rafert.

Hearings Set In Drug Arrests

He is charged with four counts of drug trafficking — including manufacturing and transporting more than 200 grams of cocaine — and could face up to 80 years in prison and a $400,000 fine if found guilty on all counts. His bail is set at $1.2 million.

Aycock asked the clerk of court to include in the record that Encarnacion and Thomas said they felt they could afford to hire their own attorney, but refused to sign the waiver because they were not sure the money was available.

The men may still choose to ask for appointed counsel at a later date.

When informed of their bail — which was initially set by Magistrate W.E. Whitehurst — all four defendants told Aycock that it was too high. But Aycock said he was not very familiar with the case, and he would let the bail stand. He said once the defendants acquire counsel, the lawyers could ask for a bond hearing at any time.

Law enforcement officers made the arrests after a tip Wednesday from Crime Stoppers, Greenville Police Sgt. J.R. Teel said. Sheriff's deputies and police officers cooperated in the investigation, he said, and the amount of drugs and cash seized is among the largest ever in Greenville.

Fuller, Encarnacion and Thomas were all arrested at the Econo Lodge on Memorial Drive, and officers found 2,600 vials of crack and more than an ounce of powdered cocaine in the motel room.

A search of the car Encarnacion and Fuller were riding in turned up a stolen .38-caliber pistol and 200 more vials of crack, and police seized the vehicle.

Officers searched a room Fuller rented at the Arbogate Motel on Memorial Drive and found $23,000 in cash, 919 vials of crack and 75 bags of marijuana worth $375, Teel said. At Ms. Daniels' Fourth Street home, officers found four vials of crack and $600 in cash.

The investigation also uncovered electric scales, baggies, 2,000 new vials and crack manufacturing items. Teel said the total value of all drugs seized is about $99,000.

Power Line

FRANKLIN, N.C. (AP) — The North Carolina Utilities Commission will hold public hearings Dec. 6 on Duke Power Co.'s proposed $30 million, 230-kilovolt power line that will link Duke with Nantahala Power & Light Co, Duke officials said.

Opposition to the proposed power line route, primarily from property owners in the Lake Toxaway area and from environmental groups, has prompted the Utilities Commission to bar Duke from beginning construction and has left the fate of the line up in the air until after the hearings.

hurt by feelings if you elect another chairman."

On a similar note, Todd Hathaway, president of the Student Government Association at PCC, was presented the oath of office as an ex-officio member of the board. Hathaway may attend the trustee meetings and participate in discussions, but will not be able to vote, Everett said.

The board approved the final amended budget resolution for fiscal year 1987-88 at just over $11 million, and it approved the 1988-89 budget of $10.6 million. Of that, $8.2 million will be state funds, $864,979 will be county funds and $1.5 million will come from institutional funds such as the print shop.

The board also agreed to participate in a budget workshop, which will be scheduled by PCC President Charles Russell.

A Community Service Program plan was adopted by the board that estimates the amount of funds that will be used and the number of people that will be served through the programs.

Russell said funds for the community programs, which include arts and crafts courses, are no longer allotted on the full time equivalency of the college but are presented in block grants.

PCC has been allotted $112,000 for the community programs, and will keep receipts from the $25 charged for the courses.

Lyn Jacobson was approved as the clinical coordinator in the new associate degree Medical Sonography curriculum, while Dotsy Davis was promoted to program coordinator for the sonography program.

Marsha Perkins Hemby was approved as the program coordinator of the new associate degree medical assistant program, and educational leave was approved for Angela Buck.

Trustee A.B. Whitley, Building Committee chairman, reported that the brick panel for the Whitley Building has been chosen, and the master building plan for the PCC campus will be presented during the board's next meeting.

An Alpha Micro AM100 computer system donated by Greg Freshwater of Cody, Wyoming, was accepted by the board. It will be used in the electronics lab.

In his remarks to the board, Everett noted that Pitt County Commissioners refused the trustees' request to buy the Tice property adjacent to the PCC campus. About half a million dollars was requested for the property.

Dr. Edgar Boyd, dean of students, reported that PCC's fall enrollment increased by 5.2 percent from 1987's figures. Declining enrollment in the cosmetology and heating and air conditioning programs were credited for a 10.3 percent decrease in the vocational area.

Initiatives to promote the benefits of vocational education include distributing career publications in the middle and high schools and creating a publication for high school students in Pitt County that will focus on vocational opportunities in the area.

Charles Dettor, the assistant dean of instruction, reported that the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools has established changes in the criteria for institutional effectiveness to provide an ongoing process of evaluation of the colleges' programs.

Improvement?

State SAT Scores Far Too Low

Those looking for good news might find it in the fact that North Carolina students gained in Scholastic Aptitude Testing for the fifth consecutive year in 1988.

The abysmally bad news, however, is that North Carolina still ranks 49th among all the states in average SAT scores.

The College Board reported that national SAT averages lost ground in 1988 — an occurrence that hasn't happened for eight years. Minority students made gains, a trend that has continued for the past decade.

North Carolina's average was 841 compared to the national average of 904. (A score of 1,600 would be perfect). The state was followed in its dismal ranking only by neighboring South Carolina with an average score of 838. Last and next to last are not spots of distinction for the two Carolinas. In fact, those positions are spots of dishonor.

Pitt County, with an average of 840, was in line with the state average, but being "in line" is not the ideal place to be when that spot is next to last in the nation. Thus, Pitt County's average is not one to be satisfied with. The county should set its sights on higher scores — steady improvement should be the goal of the school system.

Additionally, North Carolina's improvement in SAT averages is pleasing, but being 49th among all the states is not. State education officials say rapid change won't come in this type of testing but some kind of betterment is mandatory. The state prioritizes education in funding and development. It should therefore expect a better position than the bottom.

The scores show the state has a problem in relation to other states. It is difficult to believe North Carolina students are less capable than those of other states. Granted, a larger number of students takes the test in North Carolina than in other high-scoring states, but that gap is closing. The bad performance proves the state must improve our educational system, along with educational opportunities for its young people.

With it all comes the recognition the SAT is taken by young people considering further education. It does not reflect those who have dropped out without ever completing high school. There is also the knowledge that the SAT, no matter how important, can be, as all tests, quite arbitrary. It can contain cultural bias. Nevertheless, it is the standard by which universities measure students. Performance on the test is a major criteria for admission.

North Carolina has a monumental task ahead to restructure education. It will require innovation and funds. The state must provide the education that young people need to make a success of life. It must look at every phase of its public education programs.

Likewise, Pitt County has to keep its SAT scores on the rise. Consistent with a state average that ranks at the rear of the nation is not the place for a county that prides itself on its education system while touting quality and excellence.

Be Nice To Your Kids, Seniors

WASHINGTON — Maybe they should put it on the front of the insurance policies they sell to older people. Caution: The United Seniors Health Cooperative has determined that the nursing home insurance you've been spending good money on may not be worth a darn when you need it.

The fear that the need for long-term care will wipe out their life savings and assets, forcing them to spend their final years as paupers, has led growing numbers of older Americans to invest in private long-term-care insurance policies.

But according to a report issued this week by United Seniors, most of these policies are a waste of money. At best, the benefits paid under the plans are likely to prove so inadequate as to merely postpone impoverishment. And more alarming: Six out of ten policyholders won't collect a dime, even if they enter nursing homes.

The reason is the restrictions included in most of the estimated half-million policies now in force. James P. Firman, president of the Washington-based United Seniors Health Cooperative, and William T. Weissert, director of the program on aging at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, analyzed 77 "typical" long-term health-care policies offered by 21 different companies and found two key barriers to collection.

The first, found in 77 percent of the plans, requires that the insured person must first be hospitalized for the condition that necessitates nursing-home care in order to collect the benefits. The second, included in 40 percent of the policies, stipulates that beneficiaries must first receive skilled-level nursing-home care before they can qualify for lower levels of nursing-home care.

The problem is that most nursing-home patients — 54 percent — do not come directly from hospitals, which means they can't collect under the first restriction. And nearly half — 46 percent — will not have had skilled-level nursing-home care, which means they can't collect under the second restriction.

There are two issues that must be considered in setting public policy. The first is the requirement that prospective long-term care patients must first exhaust their savings and other resources (excluding their homes and, under recent Medicare revisions, a small amount of additional resources) before they are eligible for Medicaid benefits.

The second is that the insurance to cover the shortfall tends to be more expensive than most older people can afford.

The solution, says Firman, is either a much better mix of private and public insurance than presently exists or, his own preference, making nursing-home care a part of a universal health-care plan that is available to everybody.

What would Firman recommend for his own mother? "The truth is, I haven't found a policy I would recommend to her. I've told her what I tell others who ask: You're better off self-insuring — putting the money in the bank."

"If you knew that you would enter a nursing home in, say two or three years, the best thing would be to give your assets to your children."

"The only other thing I'd suggest is: Be nice to your kids. They'll probably wind up taking care of you."

Gun Lobbyists Are Good Shots

As soon as word got around that the Brady Amendment on gun control had been defeated, everyone at the Wounded Knee Bar and Grill began to celebrate. The drinks flowed and customers took turns shooting out the stained-glass windows.

"Congratulations," I told Crazy Jesse, a Saturday night special gun lover. "If the Brady Amendment had passed, a person would have had to wait seven days before he could get delivery on a weapon. Your people know how to give Americans instant gratification."

"We couldn't have done it without Congress," Crazy Jesse admitted modestly. "How did you get Congress to go along?"

"We paid them," he replied. "We have this fund that we spread around when it looks as if someone is going to try and make you wait a week for a gun. Congress is pretty hungry for money during an election year."

"How wonderful to know that Congress voted with its heart."

"You can't have good government unless you give them some money. Of course we didn't buy everyone. There were a few members who voted against the amendment because of their convictions."

"How did you deal with those people?"

"We gave them money, too."

"I'm pleased that the gun lobby doesn't discriminate. I guess the police chiefs who wanted the Brady Amendment are very unhappy that you managed to defeat it."

"The police don't know anything about firearms. All they are trying to do is prevent themselves from being killed. If they had their way, no one could buy a handgun in America."

"The fools," I spat out. "Handguns are the very things that are keeping us from becoming savages."

"The Brady Amendment is finished," Crazy Jesse said. "And if you don't drink to that I will put a hole through you."

"Aw, come on, Jesse, you're only kidding."

"Try me."

"Is it true, Jesse, that you were recently discharged from the funny farm?"

"Something like that. That's why I prayed so hard they would defeat this amendment. The bill was aimed at people like myself who couldn't afford to wait seven days to get a pistol."

"If the Brady Amendment had passed, it would have been very unfair. After all, you're just as entitled to be part of the American dream as anyone else," I told him.

"I'm glad you said that. If you hadn't, I might have blown your head off."

"Don't worry, Crazy Jesse. As long as the gun lobby has the clout, I'm on your side. After all, the Brady Amendment could only have slowed down the killing, not eliminated it. I'll take an Uzi submachine gun over a bad firearms law any day."

Jesse took another shot of booze. "They will never take my gun away," he vowed.

"How are you going to stop them?"

"I'm a lifetime member of the gun lobby. We're a major force for moderation in this country."

Stakes Higher For Dukakis Going Into Sunday's Debate

WASHINGTON — As Sunday's televised presidential debate nears, three of every four voters in a Washington Post-ABC News poll say they have made a firm choice between George Bush and Michael S. Dukakis and are unlikely to shift before Election Day on Nov. 8.

The Republican vice president and the Democratic governor of Massachusetts are running dead-even among those who say they cannot imagine themselves changing their minds. Bush's 50-to-46 percent advantage in the overall sample lies wholly among the shaky partisans who are potential switchovers.

These swing voters are obviously the prime target for both men in Sunday's encounter in Winston-Salem, N.C. Who are the voters and what do they have on their minds?

Their single-most striking characteristic is that they feel a need to know a lot more about Dukakis before they can make their choice. Nine out of 10 shaky Dukakis supporters and more than eight out of 10 shaky Bush backers say they need to hear more from the Democratic contender. By contrast, only half the shaky Bush backers and two-thirds of the shaky Dukakis supporters feel they lack sufficient information on Bush.

A quarter of each man's shaky supporters now have a favorable impression of his opponent. But while only one-sixth of the shaky Dukakis supporters say they don't know enough about Bush to rate him, one-third of the shaky Bush backers express a need to know more about Dukakis.

These findings tend to underline that the stakes in Sunday's debate, while high for both candidates, are far greater for Dukakis than for Bush. The impression Dukakis makes — positive or negative — could change many more minds.

The uncertain voters are — according to The Post's analysis of interviews with 1,267 likely voters completed Monday — literally people in the middle. They are self-described moderates of middle-income, more likely to be living in the Middle West or the East than the South or the West. Those shakily for Bush tend to be under 40; those provisionally for Dukakis fall mainly among those between 40 and 60; relatively few are of retirement age.

They are people whose tentative judgment of Republican vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle is highly unfavorable. Half the shaky Bush supporters have some impression of the senator from Indiana, and exactly as many of them rate him unfavorably as favorably. Only four of 10 shaky Bush supporters have a view of the Democratic vice presidential candidate, Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, but their impression is 3-to-1 favorable.

'The uncertain voters are — according to The Post's analysis of interviews with 1,267 likely voters completed Monday — literally people in the middle. They are self-described moderates of middle-income ...'

Bentsen actually has a higher favorability score among shaky Bush supporters than Quayle does — 31 to 23 percent. By contrast, shaky Dukakis supporters are 6-to-1 favorable to Bentsen and almost 3-to-1 unfavorable to Quayle, with large numbers having no impression.

The most important issues to those who are shakily in the Bush column are drugs, crime, maintaining family values and dealing with the budget deficit, with the issues of taxes and jobs just a bit behind. The Strategic Defense Initiative is less important to shaky Bush supporters than to his strong adherents; dealing with the deficit and providing access to college, more important.

For the shaky Dukakis supporters, too, drugs and crime lead the list of issues, with jobs, the deficit and family values bunched behind them. But the shaky Dukakis backers attach less importance to the jobs issue, college access and child care than do those firmly in his column, suggesting that his emphasis on those issues may not be the best tool for cementing those wavering supporters.

Bush's strongest weapon with these swing voters lies in the area of defense and an anticommunist foreign policy. Shaky Dukakis supporters rate Bush over Dukakis by almost 2 to 1 as better qualified to maintain a strong defense, and split over which candidate would do a better job of keeping international communism in check.

On the other hand, when it comes to helping the poor and the elderly, shaky Bush supporters give a clear edge to Dukakis, and the Democrat is at least breaking even in that group when it comes to the environmental issues.

The sharpest differences between each man's most and least committed supporters are found in these same areas. While almost eight out of 10 firmly committed Dukakis voters say their choice would be better to keep the peace, barely half of those who might switch to Bush agree.

On a dozen other issues tested in the poll, each man's shaky partisans rate him better than his opponent, but the difference in their scores suggests other areas of vulnerability in the debate. Bush has clear advantages among the swing voters on overall leadership ability, keeping the peace, controlling inflation, holding down taxes and avoiding a nuclear war. Dukakis has a clear edge in this group on protecting Social Security, curbing unemployment, reducing the deficit and improving education.

The swing voters rate them about even on combating drugs, maintaining high standards of ethics in government and improving America's competitive position in the world economy.

A separate study released Thursday by the Gallup Organization for the Times Mirror publishing company offered a different way of identifying the swing voters in the election. The Sept. 9-14 survey of 2,001 registered voters gave Bush a 50-to-44 percent lead over Dukakis but classified 32 percent of the respondents as swing voters.

Of those now predominantly in the Dukakis column, those most likely to switch are "God and Country Democrats" and "New Dealers." The first group is an older, economically disadvantaged set of voters with strong religious and patriotic sentiments. The second is made up of older, blue-collar voters, with loyalties going back to New Deal days, supportive of social programs but intolerant on social issues and rather hawkish on defense.

Blacks Should Give The GOP A Chance To Work

Analysis

WASHINGTON — As far as the politics of black Americans are concerned, the Congressional Black Caucus' "legislative weekend," which ended last week, represents the continuation of a stubborn and of late, fruitless, allegiance of black people to the Democratic Party dating to Franklin D. Roosevelt.

All of the caucus members are Democrats. Their agenda is essentially the Democratic platform, plank for plank, with emphasis on civil rights and other charity programs of nebulous long-term value.

It seems to me that the time has come to bury, quietly and quickly, this paternalistic approach to the welfare of black people and go with the entrepreneurial ideas of the Republican Party.

It's not just because the way the Democratic Party leadership has treated Jesse Jackson, either. I am simply tired of black leaders advocating the same old approaches, always seeming like they are begging for a handout if not bartering for crumbs from some kind of economic pie in the sky.

Look at us over the past week, financially unable to throw our own parties. I say down with galas and receptions made possible by guilt money from cigarette manufacturers and liquor distillers.

This is no time to party, anyway.

Instead, black people should be about shaking off their plantation and welfare mentalities. Black people should be about building confidence, self-esteem and savings accounts.

Listen to Joshua Smith, the black millionaire president of the Rockville, Md.-based Maxima Corp.: "There is something that I rarely hear black preachers and black politicians talk about that I hear white people talk about all the time. It's called business. Economics," he told a group of black politicians and preachers gathered at a "political summit" at the Shiloh Baptist Church in Northwest Washington. "We don't talk about economics. We talk politics. Yet politics without economics is lunatics."

Smith noted that at the Urban League Convention last year, only one of 50 workshops was devoted to economics. Of roughly the same number held at this year's Congressional Black Caucus braintrusts, there were only two workshops — one called "Doing Business With the Federal Government" and the other "Minority Financial Institutions and Opportunities."

This is not nearly enough attention, given the reality that misunderstanding money is the greatest obstacle to black advancement in this country. It is the root of our education, housing, employment and drug problems.

Why, asked Smith, does black America — which earns $250 billion a year — own only about one-tenth of one percent of the assets in this country?

"It makes no sense that a people with the combined resources of the eighth or ninth largest country in the world, has no assets."

Something else makes no sense, either.

"We are the only ethnic group in America in which 90 to 95 percent of its people will vote for anybody in that 'other' party regardless of whether their policies will help us or not," he said.

There are, Smith said, five major factors in an election: organization, finance, issues, candidates and votes.

"Blacks have the votes," he noted, "but that is last on the list. And until we get our organization and finances together, that's where we'll stay."

The time has come for black people to drive a stake through the demon of Democratic paternalism that saps our will. At least some of us must begin to assert ourselves economically, begin to pool and transform our resources like all other prosperous people have done.

This requires an attitude change and, frankly, it is the Republican Party that embodies it. The evidence is irrefutable: This warped, one-party loyalty is failing black people miserably. During the past eight years, we were left out in the cold.

The way black people are losing economic ground, there is not much time — say about six weeks before the November elections — for us to act, or risk losing it all.

Needs & The Ballot Box

For some of us, election campaigns offer a time to reconsider priorities, to listen to ideas and ponder the promises of those who seek high office. For others, though, it is a time of silence and hopelessness. Citizens with mental retardation have scarcely had a voice in local, regional or national affairs. It is essential that this unfair status be addressed.

It was not until the 1970s that many obstacles were removed, allowing citizens with retardation to vote. The development of a "handicapped vote" stirred some attention from political candidates, but by most accounts this bloc did not include individuals who carried the label of retardation.

The major problem is the misperception that people with retardation are not capable of making informed choices about situations directly affecting their lives. Even well-intentioned advocates who have sought to make the right decisions for people with retardation, without consulting the individuals directly affected, are unwittingly acting within a paternalistic framework.

This is not to say that citizens with retardation, like the rest of us, could not benefit from assistance in trying to understand the more subtle nuances of political palaver. However, assistance in the guise of teaching people effective ways to process information that is pertinent to their lives is significantly different from telling people what they should do.

Advocating for people with retardation, rather than helping them advocate for themselves, was intrinsically unhelpful in achieving political gains. It reduced people's motivation to cast their own votes, a fact well recognized by politicians who have generally ignored this group.

To arouse the attention of political candidates, what's needed is an active, vigorous voting bloc. There are an estimated seven million U.S. citizens with some degree of retardation; it's evident that greater respect would be given to their needs if larger numbers were registered to vote.

Approximately 80 percent of people with retardation are in the "mild" category. These individuals mainly hold jobs, pay taxes, go to restaurants and engage in the sorts of activities you and I do. Many follow news accounts of politics as closely as anyone else; they may process the information more slowly, but are nonetheless fully capable of comprehending the facts. A small percentage of people with retardation are unable to make informed decisions. But they are legally adjudicated "incompetent" and through a court proceeding are allotted guardians who make decisions for them. People who have legal guardians are barred from voting.

Some may argue that citizens with retardation are easily led, or that they will vote on a single-issue agenda — such as who will promote higher Medicaid payments. But voting preference based on specific issues is common in this country — abortion, Medicare allotments and level of military spending, to name a few recent examples.

People with retardation are certainly no different when it comes to expecting candidates to deliver on what is most significant to them.

This is not to criticize voters who have upheld their constitutional right to vote. The point is that all citizens, including those who happen to live with some degree of mental retardation, should get out and state their preferences. It is only when this particular group begins to assert its own needs through the power of the ballot box that they will receive the attention and services they need to enjoy the array of opportunities everyone deserves.

James Levine is a clinical social worker at the Westfield, Mass., Mental Health Clinic.

Ford Says Caution Needed In Debate

By PAUL NOWELL
Associated Press Writer
CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — Former President Gerald Ford, who slipped up in a presidential debate 12 years ago, has some advice for George Bush and Michael Dukakis in the upcoming presidential debate: be careful, and take your time.

"You need to be prepared, but there's always the chance of being overprepared," Ford told reporters before giving a speech Thursday at the Charlotte Motor Speedway. "I would advise those who are debating that they should not be too quick in responding to a question."

"Sometimes a rapid answer gets you in trouble," Ford said. "You can get off track, so you need to be cautious in handling the tough questions."

Ford ran into problems himself during one of his three debates with Jimmy Carter in 1976 when he insisted that Eastern Europe was not dominated by the Soviet Union.

Ford rated the debate an even contest, with the victor reaping enormous political spoils.

"There is no doubt they are very important," he said about the two upcoming debates. "These are two new faces, so to speak, and they have to prove themselves to the American people."

Ford recalled the days leading up to a presidential debate and said the coaching that is going on in the Bush and Dukakis campaigns is an "arduous process."

Ford said Republican candidate Bush should take a cue from President Reagan and show his human side during the debates, the first of which will be on Sunday in Winston-Salem.

"He should be relaxed and show that he's got a sense of humor," Ford said. "Reagan used several quips during the 1984 debates that devastated (Walter) Mondale."

On another subject, Ford said he felt the media had unfairly attacked GOP vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle following his nomination.

"I think the press has learned a lesson," he said. "It was much too bloodthirsty."

Ford said he thinks Quayle comes to the campaign with the same level of experience as former president John F. Kennedy and Richard Nixon. Quayle has served four years in the House of Representatives and eight years in the Senate from the state of Indiana.

"When President Kennedy ran, he had 14 years of experience in Congress," Ford said. "President Nixon also had 12 years."

Ford, who said he is campaigning for 19 congressional candidates, came to the speedway to address a meeting of the C.B. Drug Co. of Harrisburg. He planned to fly to New Jersey Thursday night for another political appearance.

Gardner, Rand In Dead Heat

RALEIGH (AP) — A new poll indicates that Democrat Tony Rand and Republican Jim Gardner are in a virtual tie in the campaign for lieutenant governor, but the most popular choice was "undecided."

The poll showed Gardner with a statistically insignificant lead over Rand, 33 percent to 31.2 percent. That advantage is less than the poll's 3.5 percent margin of error.

Of the 806 likely voters questioned, 35.8 percent said if the election were held when they were questioned, they didn't know whom they would support.

Gardner, a former congressman and twice an unsuccessful candidate for governor, is trying to become the first Republican in the state's second-highest office since 1901.

Since their primary victories, both candidates have been busy trying to raise money, a low-profile activity that has resulted in a relatively uneventful campaign.

"It's going to boil down to who has the advertising dollars to get their message across," Gardner said.

Rand, the Senate majority leader who is making his first race for statewide office, said his Republican opponent was better known because of his previous political campaigns.

"He does have a lead over me in name identification," Rand said. "But we feel very comfortable that we will be able to get our message out between now and Nov. 8. The public really hasn't begun to focus on this race yet."

The poll was conducted Sept. 11-13 by Independent Opinion Research & Communications Inc. of Wrightsville Beach for The News and Observer and The Raleigh Times.

Pit Bull Attacks Elderly Woman

ROXBORO, N.C. (AP) — A 94-year-old Person County woman was the victim of a dog attack Wednesday evening, the second pit bull attack in the county in two days, authorities said.

Emma Noell of Timberlake was attacked by four pit bulls around 6 p.m., Person County Sheriff Ernest Dixon said.

Mrs. Noell was walking from her home to her son's house nearby when the attack occurred, Dixon said.

Her great-grandson, 14, found her while riding an all-terrain vehicle in the area. He attempted to kick the dogs away and was unsuccessful, but revved the motor on the vehicle and scared them off, Dixon said.

The teen-ager placed Mrs. Noell on the vehicle and carried her home.

She was treated and released from Person County Memorial Hospital for a severe leg bite.

Cocaine Arrest

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A 41-year-old man from Taylorsville was arrested by the FBI on Thursday and charged with conspiring to distribute less than 500 grams of cocaine, authorities said.

Garrett Lee Icenhour was arrested without incident at a trailer in Morganton, according to Paul V. Daly, special agent in charge of FBI operations in North Carolina.

Icenhour was later turned over to U.S. marshals in Asheville, Daly said.

Daly said Icenhour, if convicted, faces a prison term of not less than 10 years or more than life.

Bodies Found

HAVELOCK, N.C. (AP) — The bodies of a man and woman were found Thursday in an apartment in Havelock, and police say they were the victims of a murder-suicide that occurred Tuesday.

A 2-year-old child was found unharmed in the apartment.

Murder weapons included a kitchen fork, a pistol and a 12-gauge shotgun.

Police said neighbors heard screaming but didn't investigate.

The identification of the victims has not been released pending notification of relatives.

Caseload

GREENSBORO (AP) — For the first time in its 18-year history, the Guilford County Public Defender's office is having to farm out some of its work to the local bar because of growing caseloads and a concern that staff lawyers don't have enough time to prepare cases.

W. Douglas Albright, resident Superior Court judge for the 18th Judicial District, has ordered that private attorneys be appointed to represent indigent defendants in all misdemeanor and juvenile cases and in many of the less serious felony cases through Dec. 1.

Fatal Fire

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — A Chapel Hill woman was killed and her husband was critically injured in a fire at their Chapel Hill home Thursday.

Charlotte Kress, believed to be in her early 60s, was found dead in her home after firefighters brought the fire under control. Paul Kress, a former professor of political science at UNC, is in critical condition in the burn unit at N.C. Memorial Hospital.

Chief Everett Lloyd of the Chapel Hill Fire Department said firefighters arrived at the residence at about 1:30 a.m. and found the wooden one-story house engulfed in flames.

Lloyd said the fire is under investigation. He would not speculate about the cause. "We don't suspect foul play at the present time, he said.

Kress was a professor at the University from 1970 to 1983. The couple had lived in the house for about 15 years, a neighbor said.

Inmate Hanged

RALEIGH (AP) — An inmate in the Wake County Detention Center hanged himself with a bath towel Wednesday night, authorities said.

Charles Edward Bagley, 36, apparently committed suicide by attaching a towel to a clothes hook about 6 feet off the floor in his cell, said Ronald E. Avery, director of detention services.

Bagley had been arrested and charged Wednesday with assault on a female. He had been brought to the jail on the fifth floor of the Wake County Courthouse about 7 p.m. and was being held on $500 bond.

I-40 Strip Opens West Of Durham

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Thanks to dry weather, a stretch of Interstate 40 linking Durham and Orange counties opened six months early, and Gov. Jim Martin says if the weather holds, the highway could be linked to Interstate 85 by early November — 10 months ahead of schedule.

"With this new highway, we forge another link in the highway stretching from Barstow, California, to our port city of Wilmington," said Martin, who tooted the tuba in a rendition of "God Bless America" with the Orange High School band as the 7.5 mile stretch of highway opened Thursday.

"After many unpaved promises, I-40 will be a highway to link the North Carolina mountains to the coast," he said.

The stretch between Chapel Hill Boulevard in Orange County and New Hope Road in Durham County was named the Harriet Morehead Berry Freeway, after the longtime Chapel Hill and Hillsborough resident.

Ms. Berry was a leader in efforts to get better roads in the state and in the North Carolina Good Roads Association, which led to creation of the State Highway Commission in 1921.

The 7.5-mile segment opened Thursday cost $32.4 million and the next 4.2 mile segment, carrying the interstate to I-85, will cost $62.6 million. Some 27,000 autos are expected to travel the route each day.

The previous section from the Research Park up to U.S. 15-501 was completed in 1985.

Martin called for Transportation Secretary Jim Harrington to request up to $6 million in reserves from the State Highway Fund for work on 13 projects across the state, all a part of the "Strategic Corridor Highway System."

The money will pay for preliminary engineering and environmental studies on the projects.

Harrington said he would submit the proposal to the state Board of Transportation at its Oct. 14 meeting. He said an estimated two years will be needed to complete the preliminary studies because of the size of the projects.

If the board approves the transfer of money, the state by 1991 will begin to gather the rights of way for the 13 projects. Without the stepped-up funding, it may be 1995 before acquisition can begin, Harrington said.

The projects identified by the governor are Interstate 26 from Mars Hill to the Tennessee line; the New Bern, Jacksonville, Rockingham-Hamlet, Greensboro and Wilson bypasses; U.S. 421 in Wilkes and Yadkin counties; U.S. 321 in Caldwell County; Interstate 77 in Mecklenburg County; U.S. 441 in Macon County, and U.S. 17 in Chowan County.

"The steps I am proposing today will mean that motorists will be able to drive on these roads two to five years earlier than would be possible otherwise," Martin said.

The system was adopted by the Board of Transportation last year, selecting routes for their high traffic volume and their economic potential.

The corridors were targeted because officials say they will relieve traffic and spread economic development into the rural areas of the state.

Once the strategic corridors are complete, 92 percent of the state's residents will live within 10 miles of the 4-to-6 lane highways, Martin said.

Lottery Players Get Reprieve

By The Associated Press
State Attorney General Lacy Thornburg said he has no plans to prosecute North Carolina residents who cross the state line to buy tickets in Virginia's new state lottery.

Thornburg said the State Bureau of Investigation does not have the manpower to become involved in wholesale prosecution of misdemeanors and he feels that any legal action against lottery participants probably would be more the reponsibility of counties and their district attorneys.

"We have plenty to say grace over" without pursuing lottery players, Thornburg said in an interview.

Reports from Virginia indicate hundreds of North Carolinians are crossing the state line to buy lottery tickets, and one North Carolina resident has won $5,000 in the first playoffs.

State Officials Deny Mailing Delay Hurt Tourist Industry

By The Associated Press

Tourism interests responded angrily to news that the state Division of Travel and Tourism failed to answer inquiries from more than 90,000 potential visitors before this year's peak season ended.

The delay — as much as six months in some cases — may have cost the state as much as $10 million in lost tourism business, officials say. State officials blamed it on a shortage of workers to handle the inquiries and the 1988 General Assembly's failure to approve additional funding.

"I'm appalled," Capt. Frank Conlon, director of the Battleship North Carolina, said Thursday in an interview.

"This is absolutely intolerable. This lack of response has hurt every tourism organization, every attraction in the state," Conlon said. "When you think about it, it has hurt every filling station, every Burger King, every drugstore that sells suntan lotion, every ski boot place — just about every business in North Carolina."

"The N.C. Division of Travel and Tourism is the first point of contact for most of the people interested in coming to this state," he said. "That agency makes the first good or bad impression. The individual attractions can't possibly overcome it if they are alienating potential visitors."

But state officials said there was no way to determine if those potential visitors came anyway.

"It's not as cut and dry as if you don't get the packet, you ain't coming," said Sam Taylor, spokesman for the N.C. Department of Commerce.

The packet-mailing was completed earlier this month as summer vacation season neared an end, although Taylor said most were sent out in August. The state used prison labor to help clear the backlog of inquiries, some up to six months old.

"The majority of visits to the state occur in the May through August time frame," said Richard Myracle, vice president of McKinney & Silver, the advertising firm that directs the state's annual $2.7 million tourism ad campaign. "That's the peak period."

McKinney & Silver discovered in July that the state Division of Travel and Tourism had failed to send information kits to 93,221 people who had requested them.

More than 70 percent of the requests were more than two months old and some dated back to February, according to a July 18 memo Myracle wrote to the travel division.

"Every one of those 92,000 inquiries represented potential revenue to North Carolina," Myracle said in the memo. "Every one of those 92,000 inquiries has now been left with the impression that we are not interested in their business."

"If we were to assume that only 25 percent (of those making inquiries) would actually visit, we may have forfeited over $10 million in tourism revenue," the memo said, estimating that each party would have spent $440.

Myracle said travelers like to have vacation information well in advance. "Our industry research indicates that people plan a vacation anywhere from one month to six months in advance," he said.

High Morton Jr., director of travel and tourism, said the backlog was "no-body's fault" and that it did not cost anyone anything.

"There is no evidence that even one family didn't come here because we waited until July to answer a reader service card that came in in February," Morton said. "That would be purely conjecture to say that the state lost any money at all. Now it's possible, but we don't have any evidence."

Taylor said there had been a 9.23 percent increase in total inquiries — from 398,200 in 1986-87 to 435,200 in 1987-88.

In addition, there was a 23 percent jump in telephone inquiries to 129,000, a subcategory of the inquiry total, Taylor said.

"Our argument ... was we'd taken those inquiries without any increases in staffing or resources," Taylor said. "Sooner or later, when you're in a situation like that, you're going to run out of people and equipment to do the work. That's one of the big reasons we had a backlog this year."

Republican Gov. Jim Martin, who controls the Department of Commerce, said the General Assembly's refusal to appropriate money for extra help in the travel division had contributed to the snafu.

The commerce department, however, did not seek budget transfers to hire additional help. Martin wouldn't say if he thought that was a mistake.

"You can always second guess someone," he said. "I'm not going to pretend that I can do everybody else's job better than they could."

Morton said the backlog resulted from his decision last year to divert a secretary from her normal duties — working on a statewide calendar of events — to help out from "time to time" with telephone inquiries because the General Assembly had not given him the help he needs to get that job done.

Developers Say Coastal Rules Unfair

WILMINGTON (AP) — Three developers who were appointed to a coastal commission by Gov. Jim Martin say efforts to identify and protect the state's most pristine waters have placed an unfair financial burden on developers.

New commissioners Kent Mitchell and Tim Thornton spent part of their first meeting of the N.C. Coastal Resources Commission Thursday picking apart efforts to implement one of the main planks of Martin's Coastal Initiative.

Mitchell and Thornton joined Commissioner Ronnie Watson, who criticized the way state officials have approached a key part of Martin's plan to develop the coast with an environmentally sensitive hand.

Saying the CRC should act carefully and deliberately to avoid rash decisions, Thornton and Watson sought to delay a CRC committee's consideration of the pollution controls until the commission's next meeting in December.

When the delay effort failed, the three took their criticisms to a two-hour committee debate about how the CRC should regulate development and other activities around waters that win the state's Outstanding Resource Waters designation.

The state Environmental Management Commission this month — at Martin's suggestion — nominated 12 areas for the special ORW designation. The status, if approved, will give the sounds, bays and tidal rivers special protection against pollution.

The EMC's action imposed immediate, temporary restrictions against high-density development along the nominated waters' shores. The restrictions will stand for at least the next nine months, while the state conducts a series of studies and hearings to determine whether the areas qualify as ORWs and to help write special rules meant to keep the waters clean.

Mitchell, whose family is developing Bald Head Island off the Brunswick County coast, criticized the EMC for nominating some of the waters, saying he doubts some are clean enough to fit the ORW designation.

"I believe ORWs are necessary," he said. "But they ought to be the very best waters in the state."

Martin recommended the areas Sept. 1, nine months after the EMC began debating which waters deserve the special protection.

Hatcher Ends Hunger Strike

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — After a visit from a doctor, accused hostage-taker Eddie Hatcher has ended a three-day hunger strike intended to protest his treatment by the government, jail officials say.

Hatcher is charged with taking up to 20 people hostage at a Robeson County newspaper Feb. 1.

After refusing to eat since he was brought to the Cumberland County Jail late Monday afternoon, Hatcher ate chicken for dinner Thursday, authorities said.

Earlier Thursday, Hatcher, in a statement delivered to The Associated Press through defense attorneys, said he had been placed "in an environment of pure psychological warfare" at the Cumberland County Jail. Hatcher said the government was trying to control the lives of him and his family.

NAACP Plans Membership Drive

CHARLOTTE (AP) — The NAACP will stage a nationwide radiothon Saturday, part of a drive to double its membership to 1 million, officials said.

Kelly Alexander Jr. of Charlotte, president of the North Carolina NAACP chapter, says he hopes the radiothon will double his state's nearly 36,000 membership.

"When something happens now," he said, "even to those people who don't carry NAACP cards — when they feel the hot breath of discrimination breathing down their neck, we are there for them to turn to."

The recruiting effort includes a three-hour program at 4 p.m. Saturday on stations nationwide.

The new effort comes as the civil rights organization acknowledges a problem attracting younger members, including college-educated black professionals who were children during the civil rights struggles of the 1950s and '60s.

Gunman Kills Four People Before Officer Kills Him

CHICAGO (AP) — An unemployed beautician bent on killing "everybody I see" shot to death an auto parts store owner and its manager, a school custodian and a policewoman before a wounded officer struggled to his feet and killed the gunman.

Clemie Henderson, described by friends and relatives as a man who had been emotionally disturbed since serving in Vietnam, died Thursday as he stalked a West Side school near the store.

"He's a genuine hero," police Superintendent LeRoy Martin said of Officer Greg Jaglowski, the 14-year police veteran who put an end to the rampage.

Henderson, 40, had been charged at least nine times between 1971 and last month for such offenses as battery, marijuana possession and disorderly conduct, Martin said. Family members said Henderson had been on medication for a psychiatric illness he developed in Vietnam, the Chicago Tribune reported today.

Edward Wodnicki, the chief of detectives, said police found medication for depression in Henderson's home. Relatives said Henderson had stopped taking the medication and was experiencing difficulties as a result.

"People ... knew about him. He was always in trouble," Wodnicki said.

Armed with a .38-caliber revolver and nearly three dozen rounds of ammunition, Henderson walked into the Comet Auto Parts store Thursday morning and opened fire, Martin said.

The store's owner, John Van Dyke,

41, and manager, Robert Quinn, 26, were killed. Henderson missed a third worker, who pretended to be hit and fell to the ground.

Henderson, who served as an Army combat infantryman in Vietnam, lived in the neighborhood and had been unemployed for two years, said David Finke, a friend of Henderson's and chairman of the Midwest Committee for Military Counseling, a Chicago agency.

"I think it is fair to say he carried his disturbance from the Vietnam era into the present," Finke said. "I think Clem had a great deal of anger. I always sensed he was working very hard to be under control."

He said Henderson, a cosmetologist, had worked as a teacher for Selan's Beauty School until he quit about two years ago, complaining of being "burned out."

Soviets Call For Limits On Weapons

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev is proposing that interim limits be placed on the most potent U.S. and Soviet long-range nuclear weapons to keep arms control momentum going, U.S. officials say.

Gorbachev's proposal was sent to the State Department before Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze began talks Thursday with Secretary of State George P. Shultz on a wide range of arms control measures, human rights and regional problems.

The U.S. side is willing to consider the proposal, but will emphasize that any limitations on nuclear weapons must be reinforced with strict verification measures to guard against violations, the officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Thursday.

These include assurances there will be no interference with the monitoring of test flights of the strategic nuclear missiles that carry the warheads and have ranges of 3,500 miles and beyond.

After a session today with Vice President George Bush and another round with Shultz concentrating on problems in the Middle East, southern Africa and Southeast Asia, the Soviet foreign minister had a session scheduled at the White House with President Reagan.

A joint statement was to be issued then "to mark the progress that's been achieved," and Shultz and Shevardnadze were to hold separate news conferences in the evening, a U.S. official said.

It was not clear whether an agreement on temporary ceilings could be reached during the two-day visit. The Soviets did not raise the proposal in the first sessions on Thursday, the U.S. official said.

The United States and the Soviet Union set goals for limiting warheads at the summit last December. Gorbachev wants to put those limits into effect on an interim basis, separate from other arms issues.

These would include a ceiling of 10 warheads on U.S. ground-launched MX missiles and eight on submarine-launched Tridents, while the Soviets would be held to 10 warheads on their SS-18 and SS-20 missiles, the official said.

Shevardnadze carried a range of other arms control proposals to Shultz along with a letter from Gorbachev to Reagan.

"The agenda is very broad, but we have little time," Shevardnadze told reporters.

He singled out two obstacles to a Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty (START) as included in the "full-scope negotiations" he was holding with Shultz. They involved restrictions to be imposed on the range of non-ballistic cruise missiles that can be launched by bombers and warships and ways of verifying that any agreed-upon cutbacks on their number are not exceeded.

Shultz met with Shevardnadze for 6½ hours and afterward described their discussion of arms control issues and human rights as "very constructive and very detailed."

House OKs Toughened Drug Laws

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House adopted legislation that could make Americans pay dearly for possessing a single marijuana cigarette or a small bag of cocaine, and the Senate must decide whether to follow suit.

The drug-fighting bill passed the House on a bipartisan 375-30 vote Thursday, after minority Republicans molded the legislation to target drug users for special punishment.

Those who consider themselves recreational users could, under the bill: lose student loans, public housing and other federal benefits; face civil penalties of up to $10,000 for each drug possession violation; and have their drivers' licenses suspended if their states participate in a proposed drug enforcement grant program.

"Up to now, the war on drugs meant a war on the drug pushers, the drug kingpins," said Rep. Mickey Edwards, R-Okla., author of the $10,000 civil penalty. "What we did ... was to declare a war on the use of drugs in America."

The Senate, eager to quit to campaign for re-election, is still trying to write a bill for introduction, and will have to race the adjournment clock to pass legislation in time to work out any differences with the House.

The Senate's wide-open debate, usually without time limits, could work against completion of the bill this year. Only the pull of an upcoming election might cause senators to break into a trot on the bill.

The legislation pursues many avenues of combatting illegal drugs, and would authorize the addition of more than $2 billion in spending to the nation's current $3.9 billion anti-drug effort. If all the money is actually appropriated, the amount could be a factor if overall spending levels force across-the-board, automatic budget cuts.

The House's most liberal members refused to support that chamber's bill after it emerged laden down with harsh GOP-inspired penalties. One of their number, Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., said "Americans will be less free" under the legislation, which he called "a shameful, excessive, election-year disgrace."

The bill introduced in the House two weeks ago included increased money for state and local law enforcement, requirements for drug-free workplaces by government contractors, and grants for education, treatment and rehabilitation, among other provisions.

It emerged with the severe penalties for drug users, along with constitutional procedures to permit the federal death penalty against anyone who kills during a drug-related crime.

The drug bill's hardliners suffered their only defeat Thursday when the House refused to support withholding of highway money from states that refused to suspend drivers' licenses of convicted drug offenders.

But they still won half a loaf, when lawmakers adopted a substitute that turned the penalty into an incentive program. Lawmakers voted 281-119 to authorize $125 million over three years to states willing to enact laws suspending or revoking drivers' licenses for those convicted of any drug offense.

The bill received support from 207 Democrats and 168 Republicans, while all 30 votes against the legislation came from Democrats. But supporters of the overall bill had problems too.

Japanese Prayerful

TOKYO (AP) — Hundreds of well-wishers huddled under umbrellas today at the Imperial Palace to pray in the rain for ailing Emperor Hirohito, and thousands more signed get-well registries around Japan.

His condition remained stable today after he received his fourth blood transfusion since Monday, palace officials said. The 87-year-old emperor, the longest reigning monarch alive, vomited blood Monday from intestinal hemorrhaging, and he has been in bed ever since.

Crown Prince Akihito, who took over imperial duties temporarily on Thursday, today presided over a Palace ceremony attended by Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita to mark the autumnal equinox, a national holiday.

About 500 people with umbrellas and cameras lined up in front of the Palace gates today and waited to take up calligraphy brushes and put their names in a registry wishing the emperor a speedy recovery. Some chanted Buddhist prayers.

Palace officials said 23,000 people signed registries placed in 12 locations around the country Thursday. Today, officials were setting up outdoor tents with more lists in front of other government offices.

The resident, who identified herself only as a worker for the state broadcasting authority Gostelradio, said soldiers were patrolling the streets of Stepanakert, the region's main city, in tanks and armored personnel carriers. Asked how many troops were patrolling, she said: "There are more of them than us."

Food was in short supply because of the strike, the woman said. "There's nothing in the stores except dairy products and bread. There's no meat or anything else," she said.

A man who identified himself as another worker at the radio station said the soldiers were insulting people and drinking. "These are fascists. They are animals," he said.

Troops Take Up Posts In Armenia

MOSCOW (AP) — Armenians stayed away from work and school in two southern republics today and food was running out in one area as tanks and soldiers patrolled to prevent further escalation of a bloody ethnic dispute.

In the republic of Armenia, hundreds of soldiers were deployed throughout the capital, Yerevan, said the deputy director of Armenia's official news agency, Armenpress.

"There are troops and tanks. I don't want to say the whole city is surrounded, but at Lenin Square and other areas where there are government buildings there are hundreds of soldiers," said the Armenpress official. He spoke on condition of anonymity in a telephone interview.

Many businesses were closed by the strike, said the deputy director of Armenia's official news agency, Armenpress. He said the subway, airport and railroad were running but many buses were not.

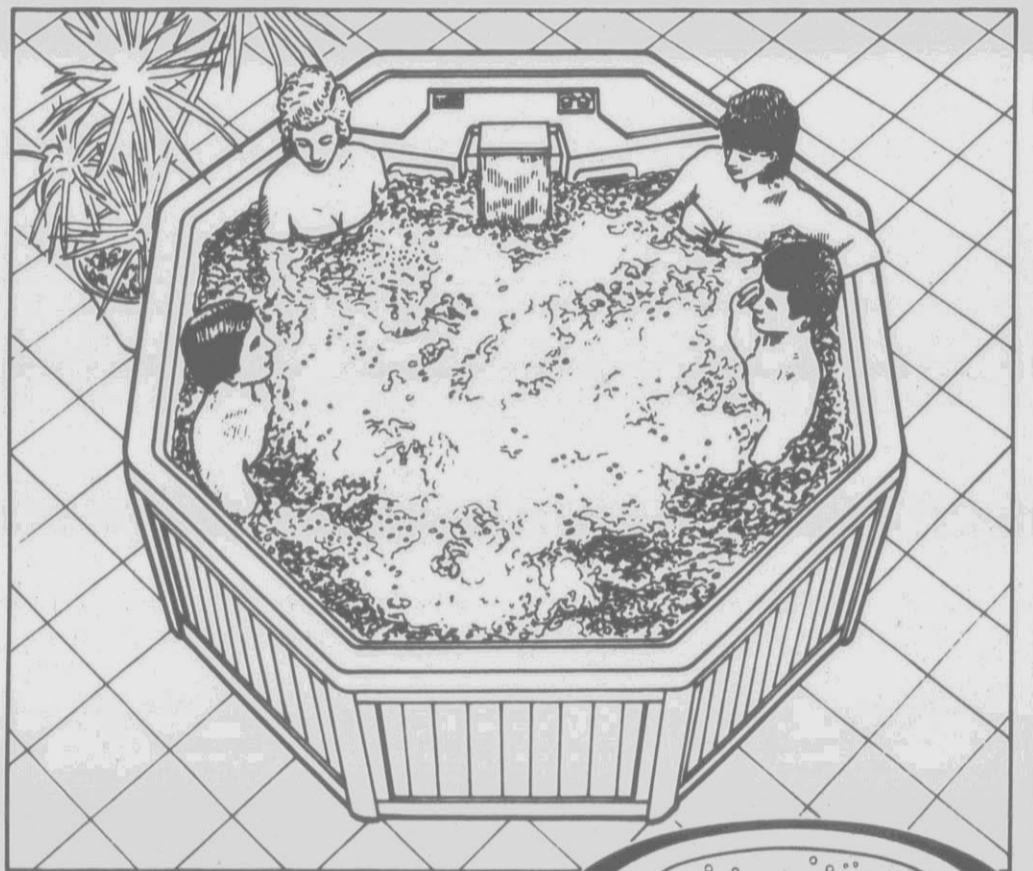

The Armenians are demanding that Nagorno-Karabakh, a mountainous enclave in neighboring Azerbaijan that is primarily Armenian, be made part of their own republic.

In Nagorno-Karabakh today, factories and schools were closed in a strike and a curfew was in effect, a resident said.

ANCIENT POLITICAL RIVALS IN THE BIBLE!

THE POLITICAL POLICIES WERE THE GUIDING LIGHT IN THE LIVES OF THE LEADERS OF THE GOVERNING PARTY BOTH IN ISRAEL AND JUDAH—RELIGION WAS ONLY FOR THE PRIESTS AND PROPHETS! HOWEVER, IF A STRONG PROPHET, SUCH AS JEREMIAH, STIRRED UP THE PEOPLE, THEN THE GOVERNING LEADERS TOOK NOTICE—IN JEREMIAH'S CASE THEY PUT HIM IN JAIL! (JER. 37: 15, 16). WHEN JEREMIAH'S PROPHECIES CAME TRUE AND THE POLITICAL LEADERS, THAT PUT THEIR HOPES IN EGYPT OVER THE BABYLONIANS, HAD TO FLEE THE COUNTRY, JEREMIAH WAS RELEASED FROM PRISON BY THE BABYLONIAN CONQUERORS AND TREATED KINDLY BY THEM, OF COURSE! JEREMIAH ELECTED TO STAY AT MIZPAH UNDER THE PROTECTION OF GEDALIAH, A PRINCE OF JUDAH, WHO WAS PLACED IN CHARGE BY KING NEBUCHADNEZZAR OF BABYLON. GEDALIAH, WHO WANTED TO WELCOME ALL JEWS BACK TO THE COUNTRY, DIDN'T BELIEVE THOSE WHO WARNED HIM THAT CERTAIN LEADERS, ISHMAEL IN PARTICULAR, WOULD SEEK TO SLAY HIM, IF THEY GOT A CHANCE! (JER. 40:15,16) SO, GEDALIAH, A GENEROUS MAN, WELCOMED BACK ISHMAEL, OF THE SEED ROYAL, WHO BROKE BREAD WITH HIM, A HOLY SIGN OF PEACE, AND FOR THIS CONFIDENCE WAS MOST TREACHEROUSLY MURDERED!! (JER. 41:1,2).

Teen-Ager Teaching Sixth Graders Seeks Full Life

BY NOBLE SPRAYBERRY The Daily Citizen-News DALTON, Ga. (AP) — At 19, most people are only beginning to decide where their future will lead. For Jovanna Rhyne, however, those decisions are far behind. While many of her peers are just entering college, Rhyne holds a bachelor's degree in dance pedagogy and a master of education degree and teaches 6th grade English, reading and science at West Side Middle School. "I am really a very strange person,

I just have always been determined to finish everything as quickly as possible," she said.

A Ringgold native, Rhyne left her home for the Alabama School of Fine Arts at the age of 13. At age 15, she attended Brenau College at Gainesville, and later she went on to Brenau graduate school.

Though she has completed at 19 what most people finish at 24, she does not feel she missed any part of her life because of her schedule.

She has danced the lead in the Nutcracker Ballet, toured the Soviet Union, Denmark and Sweden, and, during her last year in college, was the dorm mother to 72 freshman girls.

"Everyone asked if I have missed out, but I have done so much they have not done," she said. "I am not missing out on life and I do not want anyone to think I am missing out."

"I have always been impatient to accomplish what I set out to do and reach my goals," Rhyne said. "I know since I rushed the terrible part of school, I will have time to do the nice things in life."

"Sometimes I think people consider me a freak but I am not," she said. "I have done everything they have, I just did it faster."

The youngest of three children, Rhyne credits her parents, Larice and William Rhyne, with much of her success.

When her elementary school burned, she stayed home for the remainder of fourth grade and was taught by a tutor. Re-entering public school the following year, she was unhappy and decided to continue her education at home.

She completed 6th, 7th and 8th grades in one year through a correspondence course from the University of Tennessee.

The State Board of Education stipulated that in the 9th grade she had to return to public school, where she found herself failing biology. She quickly turned to her mother for help.

"My mom grabbed a chicken out of the freezer, and boiled it," she said. "When I needed to learn about bones we looked at the chicken's and when I needed to study the brain ..."

"My mother was a very, very special lady," Rhyne said.

Family support instead of pressure carried Rhyne through school.

"They never pushed me; if anything I pushed them," she said. "I was so determined to reach my goals."

Leaving home at 13 to attend boarding school, Rhyne faced living with a 16-year-old roommate and adjusting to life away from home. She said this experience prepared her for college, and though only 15, she found few problems adjusting to life with older students.

She said teaching allows her to gain valuable work experience impossible to attain in school.

Bill Hargis, assistant superintendent of Whitfield County Schools, said he could not remember anyone having a master's degree at 19.

"Some might question whether she is mature enough to teach but after speaking to this young lady there is no question," he said. "She will make us an excellent teacher."

"At first people are curious about my age, but once they get to know me no one seems to pay attention to the age difference," Rhyne said.

Life is not slowing for Rhyne as she teaches, contemplates her doctorate degree and dreams of owning her own dance studio.

"I want everything I possibly can out of life," she said.

Estate Puzzles Widow

DEAR ABBY: I am a 75-year-old widow. My husband died last year, leaving me fairly comfortable, but not rich.

I have five children and five grandchildren. Three of my children have children, and two have none by choice, and I am reasonably certain that they will never have any.

Do you think I should distribute my estate equally among my five children? Or should the three with children receive more? All my children are equally dear to me, and my grandchildren have done much to brighten my life.

What would you do if you were in my situation? — PERPLEXED

DEAR PERPLEXED: I would leave each of my children an equal amount. I would then leave each of my grandchildren an equal amount.

DEAR ABBY: For years, I used to shoot birds — just for sport. I am closing the poem that convinced me to give up that sport. Some people may think the poem is "corny," but it had a powerful effect on me.

I came across it in the Chronicle, in Crested Butte, Colo. It was written by Gem Ward Cristfield, M.D. — DISARMED IN WISCONSIN

Dear Abby Abigail Van Buren

A HUNTER'S POEM

A hunter shot at a flock of geese That flew within his reach. Two were stopped in their rapid flight And fell on the sandy beach. The male bird lay at the water's edge And just before he died He faintly called to his wounded mate And she dragged herself to his side. She bent her head and crooned to him In a way distressed and wild Caressing her one and only mate As a mother would a child. Then covering him with her broken wing And gasping with failing breath She laid her head against his breast A feeble honk ... then death. This story is true though crudely told I was the man in this case. I stood knee deep in snow and cold And the hot tears burned my face. I buried the birds in the sand where they lay Wrapped in my hunting coat

And I threw my gun and belt in the bay When I crossed in the open boat. Hunters will call me a right poor sport And scoff at the thing I did. But that day something broke in my heart And shoot again? God forbid!

DEAR ABBY: I am a 15-year-old boy and a sophomore in high school. I have many friends and I recently heard a rumor about one I care for. Someone told me that he is homosexual. I really don't want to be swayed by rumors, but I don't know how to ask him if it's true.

I have nothing against gay men, but I don't want to make the mistake of giving him the idea that I am interested. What should I do? — TROUBLED IN TUCSON

DEAR TROUBLED: In answer to your question, I will tell you what not to do: Don't ask him any questions concerning his sexuality, don't believe rumors — and never repeat them.

Philippines Educational Standards Was Shocking

By MIGUEL C. SUAREZ
Associated Press Writer
MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Of the 2,684 law school graduates who took the bar exams this year, only 480 passed. The result left many Filipinos in shock and dramatized the state of the country's American-inspired educational system.

Once a model for Asia, it has slumped into mediocrity.

The results of the bar exams announced by the Supreme Court in May were the lowest in the history of the Philippines Bar.

"It is an indication of the deteriorating quality of the education we have, especially in the preparatory courses," said Emilio Rebuena, a lawyer who has administered the exams for the last 11 years. "A lot of them (examinees) could not even express themselves."

In July, President Corazon Aquino told the nation that unless the decline in educational standards was checked, generations of Filipinos would be doomed to "a future of rampant functional illiteracy."

Critics attribute the decline to low teacher salaries and a lack of classrooms, books and other teaching aids. They also cite outdated curricula, poorly trained teachers and inefficient use of funds, already scarce.

Many of those who graduate from public high schools cannot afford to attend elite private colleges or are unable to compete for places at the state-run University of the Philippines because of inferior secondary education.

They wind up in privately-owned "diploma mills," which churn out thousands of teachers, nurses and other professionals who cannot qualify for jobs when they graduate.

After the bar-exam results were announced, Ernesto Jaurigue, director general of the Professional Regulation Commission, reported a similar decline in examination results for other professions, such as medicine, engineering and nursing.

It was not always that way.

Amado Dizon, secretary general of the Coordinating Council of Private Educational Associations, recalled that several decades ago, the quality of education was so high that a sixth-grade student could qualify as a substitute teacher for the lower grades.

Today, education officials acknowledge that many teachers, especially in the countryside, are not qualified to teach and serve only to pass on their own ignorance to their students.

When the United States colonized the Philippines at the turn of the century, it introduced a public school system patterned after its own and shipped in thousands of American teachers.

In a few decades, the demand for higher education was so strong that the handful of existing private and state colleges could not cope. Private schools flourished.

The Philippines still claims one of the highest literacy rates in Asia at 89 percent. But many question the figure because it includes people who can read and write only their names.

Dr. Victor Ordonez, undersecretary of education, attributes the slide to lack of money, neglect of the education sector during the 20-year rule of the now-deposed President Ferdinand E. Marcos, and on the system's own inflexibility.

"Our country has had so many dramatic turns in its history ... but our education system has remained the same as when the Americans introduced it," he said in a recent interview. "It continues to move in the same fixed direction and it may fall off the cliff of irrelevance. We are giving our children the tools of the past."

"How many of them, after school, will need to diagram a sentence or solve a real-life problem with simultaneous algebraic equations, or to remember a date (in history)?"

The Philippines' system emphasizes rote drills at the expense of analysis or group discussions, which experts say enhance problem-solving skills. Classes of 50 or more pupils are common.

Even during the Marcos years, education officials recognized the problem. With a $100-million loan from the World Bank they launched a program in 1980 to reform the public elementary school system. The program ends this year.

A $200 million program, financed by grants from various countries and loans from the Asian Development Bank, is to be launched next year to upgrade public high schools.

Both programs involve intensive retraining of teachers, rewriting books and revamping curricula. Elementary curricula were reorganized to emphasize basics — reading, writing and arithmetic.

Public school teachers' salaries have also been increased recently. The national average salary for a new teacher was increased this year to 2,400 pesos ($120) a month from 1,500 pesos ($75).

This has increased the prestige of the teaching profession, and applications for teachers schools have increased threefold. Ordonez said many of the applicants have graduated from "quality schools."

According to Ordonez, the effect of the reforms will not become apparent until 1994, when students who entered the first grade in 1980 begin graduating from four-year colleges.

Ordonez said results of achievement tests indicate that progress is being made. Filipino public school students normally spend six years in elementary grades and four in high school.

Engagement Announced

CAROL JOAN FRANCK — is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Patrick Franck of Greenville, who announce her engagement to Charles Hassell Manning Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Manning Sr. of Wilmington. The wedding will take place Oct. 15.

New Bern Festival Set For Mid-October

NEW BERN — The New Bern Chrysanthemum Festival will be held Oct. 14-16. Events will include a street fair and car show.

Gardens at Tryon Palace will be open from 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Oct. 14 honoring senior citizens. The N.C. Highland Regiment will be at the palace the following day. Palace craftsmen — blacksmith, spinner and weaver, basket weaver and candlemaker — will be demonstrating during the three days.

Fred the Horse will greet the public at the New Bern Firemen's Museum during the festival. A festival balloon ballet will be presented by 24 hot air balloons Friday evening. They will rise from riverside Lawson Creek Park. Oktoberfest will be held in downtown Farmers Market and will feature the Little German Band and Dancers.

Beach music will replace Germanic singalong on Saturday at the Farmers Market when North Tower plays from 7 p.m. to 11 p.m.

A pedestrian mall will be held on Middle Street Saturday and Sunday. The street fair will include children's activities, food, arts and crafts booths and continual entertainment. The Second Marine Airwing Band from Cherry Point, Raleigh's Mango Jam and the Shriner's Hillbilly band will be included.

Sinbad and his pirates will invade the downtown Trent River waterfront Sunday afternoon.

An antiques show and sale will be held at the former Kress Building and will feature over 20 antique dealers.

The entire festival is sponsored by Swiss Bear, Inc., downtown New Bern's revitalization group, and Historic Tryon Palace Restoration and Gardens Complex.

'Bad Guy' Now Trying To Do Something Good

By BILL KACZOR
Associated Press Writer
EGLIN AIR FORCE BASE, Fla. (AP) — Martin Lewis says his motto since being sent to prison on drug charges is to "have the bad guys do some good."

The 67-year-old former Miami businessman says trying to live up to that credo has helped him cope with a stiff 27-year sentence he is serving at the Federal Prison Camp on this Florida Panhandle air base.

It also has paid off for some Kentucky and Florida children who are mentally handicapped or have learning disabilities that make reading difficult.

Lewis, known to the children as "Uncle Marty," uses his clear, resonant voice to make tape recordings of stories and texts on a variety of subjects the children can listen to at school or home.

His prison file is filled with letters and commendations about the recordings. They are made during free time after his regular prison job at the base education office, where he does everything from cleaning chalkboards to making consultations for an Air Force volunteer tutoring program.

"These tapes have been so beneficial to our poor readers and have enabled them to keep their grades up in science," wrote principal F.L. Fuller and teacher Judi Walton of Ruckel Junior High School in nearby Niceville.

They praised Lewis' work in an April 1 letter to R.W. Applegate, base education superintendent.

"Marty's expressive voice and intonation keep the students interested and involved with the material," the letter continued. "They have also learned new vocabulary and improved reading levels as they listen to Marty."

Lewis said in a recent interview that he wants to expand his work to include making tapes for the blind.

He began the recordings in 1985 while at the Ashland, Ky., Federal Correctional Institution, a high-security prison where he was sent because of the length of his term and seriousness of his crimes.

Lewis was one of about 35 people, most from Texas, arrested in 1983 in the "Snow White" case out of Dallas.

He pleaded guilty to conspiracy to distribute cocaine and the use of a telephone to facilitate distribution of cocaine.

A Brooklyn, N.Y., native, Lewis had been a swimming instructor and pool and cabana manager in South Florida before he started a towel-and sarong-making company that went out of business after he was imprisoned.

Lewis said he never used drugs or even smoked cigarettes, but got involved in the narcotics trade because "I had friends. Friends wanted this. Friends wanted that."

Although admitting guilt, he was shocked by the severity of his sentence. He cannot qualify for parole until he has served a third of it.

"I made up my mind I was going to keep busy," Lewis said.

At Ashland, prison officials credited Lewis with turning around the struggling inmate Jaycees chapter. A music buff, Lewis made tape recordings of his personal record collection for the prison library.

In 1985, Johnda Holbrook, a special education teacher at Summit Elementary School in Ashland, learned about pioneer programs in Missouri, Texas and Arizona that utilized inmates to make recordings for children with reading problems.

She approached prison officials at Ashland, who agreed to help. Lewis volunteered his voice and the prison Jaycees provided tape recorders for the students.

Before getting the recordings, Ms. Holbrook said, her students had so much trouble reading that subjects heavily dependent on texts such as science and social studies were virtually inaccessible to them.

The children then began writing dozens of letters to "Uncle Marty" and he has answered every one of them. Since being transferred to Florida, he has continued to correspond with Ms. Holbrook and make recordings for her class.

He made similar tapes for a Tallahassee school when he was sent to the medium-security federal prison there in November 1985 and then for Ruckel when he again was transferred last year to Eglin, a minimum-security facility.

Lewis believes his efforts to do good were responsible for his moves to lower security institutions closer to home. He would like to get closer yet to Miami, where his daughter lives.

Stock And Market Reports

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices headed lower today as interest rates rose in the credit markets. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks slipped 3.73 to 2,076.28 in the first half hour of trading.

Table of stock prices including columns for symbol, price, and change. Lists various stocks such as Alstair, AmBrans, Amlyn, etc.

Volume on the Big Board came to 18.16 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

Prices of long-term government bonds fell about $5 for each $1,000 in face value this morning, increasing their yields to the 9.10 percent-9.15 percent range.

Analysts said bond and stock traders were a bit unsettled by the Commerce Department's report that new factory orders for durable goods increased 6 percent in August.

That higher-than-expected figure didn't jibe with other evidence that economic growth had been slowing of late.

Brokers said it raised some questions about the popular idea that the Federal Reserve wouldn't have to tighten credit any further in the near future, having apparently achieved its mission of cooling off the economy.

Zweig Total Return Fund led the active list, trading at $10 after an initial public offering of 52.5 million shares at that price.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks dropped .40 to 151.68. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .03 at 298.28.

On Thursday the Dow Jones industrial average dropped 10.49 to 2,080.01.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 8 to 5 on the NYSE, with 539 up, 866 down and 528 unchanged.

Mota Wins Marathon; Lewis On Stride In 100 Warm-up; Cagers Roll To Easy Victory

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Watch the clock and check the record book: Carl Lewis is in high gear with a 9.99-second warm-up for Saturday's 100...

The spotlight shifted to track and field Friday at the Summer Games. Though a doe-eyed Soviet teen became the new queen of gymnastics, thrilling fans with a perfect 10 to gain the crown and Olympic gold...

It was also a day of easy triumphs for the American men's basketball and water polo teams, elimination for the soccer team against the Soviet Union, and a fifth straight U.S. boxing victory.

gold in the 400 intermediate hurdles. Sped to easy victory in his first heat but left the stadium furious about race conditions.

"It was chaos at the start," he said. "There was no chance to warm up, with people running all over the track."

Joyner-Kersey is on a pace to become the first woman to crack the 7,000-point barrier in the Olympic heptathlon, a grueling series of seven events whose winner is often dubbed "the world's greatest woman athlete."

Joyner-Kersey, the only woman to go over 7,000 points in any heptathlon, won a silver in 1984 and is three events away from a gold this time. She set an Olympic record of 12.69 seconds in the 100-meter high hurdles, then high-jumped 6 feet, 1.4 inches...

the day with 4,264 points, an Olympic record for the first day. East German Sabine John and Anke Behmer were second and third with 4,083 points and 3,986 points, respectively.

Mary Slaney, America's best middle-distance runner, had a frightening flashback to her 1984 Olympic collision with Zola Budd that knocked her out of the 3,000.

This time in the 3,000 qualifier, someone clipped her heel near the finish "and my mind went back to 1984," Slaney said. She stayed up, though, and crossed the line in fourth to make the finals.

"It was a little scary," Slaney said. "It just made me think of Los Angeles for a second."

The only violence at the boxing arena Friday was, appropriately, between the boxers after five Korean officials were banned for Thursday's attack on a New Zealand referee.

Bad Leap In High Jump Slows Heptathlon Leader

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Bad mechanics in the high jump left Jackie Joyner-Kersey with a sore knee and 103 points shy of her record pace.

But she still had a big lead after four events Friday in the women's heptathlon, and that was enough for her.

"My main goal is to win first in hopes of breaking the world record," Joyner-Kersey said after racking up 4,264 points on the first day of the two-day, seven-event competition.

"I'm not counting it (a world record) out, but I'm happy I'm healthy and leading," said the 26-year-old from Long Beach, Calif. "I can't get caught up in a world record and maybe not win."

Joyner-Kersey's harvest was the second-highest one-day total of her career. She had 4,367 at the same point when she set the world record of 7,215 points in the U.S. Olympic trials in July.

"I am concentrating on winning," said Joyner-Kersey, who had set a world record as her goal before the Olympics. "Coming out winning is the only thing. The world record is not important."

In spite of her brief battle with pain, Joyner-Kersey was far in front. She had the fastest times in the 100-meter hurdles and the 200-meter dash, equalled the top high jump mark, and the second-best mark in the shot put.

Behind Joyner-Kersey was Sabine John of East Germany with 4,083, and Anke Behmer, also from East Germany, with 3,986.

Joyner-Kersey twisted her left knee during the high jump, and the injury hampered her during the next event, the shot put. By the end of the day, however, she said she wasn't too bothered by it.

"I didn't have any time between the high jump and the shot put. My physical therapist taped the knee up, but it hurt throughout the shot put, but then the tendon began to loosen up."

Joyner-Kersey said a tendon in her left knee tightened up on her first attempt at 6 feet, 2 1/4 inches in the high jump. She missed her next two tries badly.

"My physical therapist says that when I don't do the correct mechanics I'm bringing it on myself," she said. "He was rubbing my body, all the sore spots I've picked up over my career, and the knee (problem) wasn't there."

The high jump proved the biggest reason she came up short of her one-day total at the Olympic trials. She cleared 6-1 1/4 on her second try, but could go no higher. That gave her 1,054 points in the event, 91 shy of the 1,145 she got when she cleared 6-4 at the Olympic trials.

Three other heptathletes also cleared 6-1 1/4 — Corinne Schneider of Switzerland, Marjon Wijnsa of the Netherlands, and Yiping Dong of China.

Joyner-Kersey, the only woman ever to surpass the 7,000-point plateau — she's done it four times — posted one personal best as she appeared certain of clearing 7,000 again.

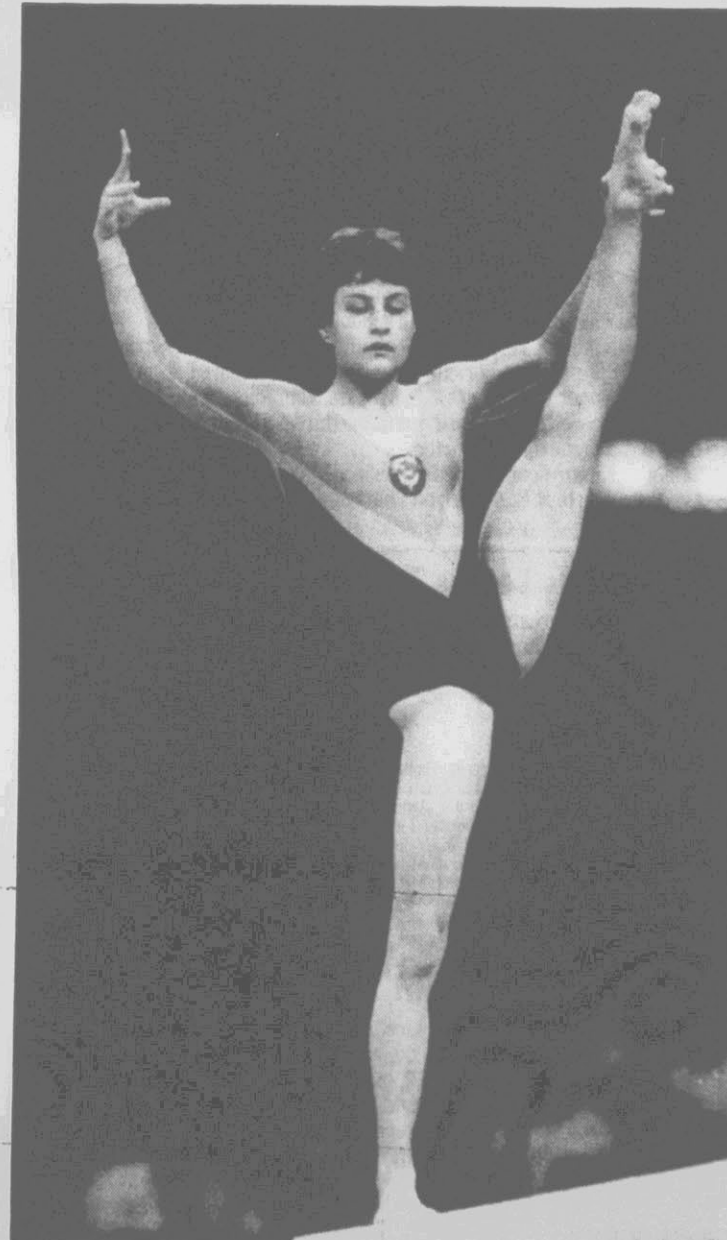

In the shot put, Joyner-Kersey posted a mark of 51-10, earning 915 points. That's nine more than she got with her heave of 51-4 1/4 at the trials, but shy of her personal best of 52-6, set at the 1987 world championships.

John was the only competitor to surpass Joyner-Kersey in the shot put. She had a heave of 53-3 for 943 points.

Joyner-Kersey opened the competition with a personal-best mark of 12.69 seconds in the 100-meter hurdles, earning 1,172 points.

Her previous best was a 12.71, the clocking she posted her world-record performance at the Olympic trials in July.

Joyner-Kersey finished up with the fastest clocking in the 200 meters, a 22.56 for 1,123 points. She ran a 22.30 for 1,150 points at the Olympic trials.

Pirates Host Golden Eagles

By WOODY PEELE Reflector Sports Editor

Two weeks ago, when East Carolina traveled to Blacksburg, Va., there was what appeared to be a motivational factor and the Pirates came home with their tails between their legs, whipped 27-16 by Virginia Tech.

But this Saturday afternoon in ECU's Ficklen Stadium, there should be no motivational problem for the Pirate coaching staff. If there is any one team on the 1988 schedule that the Pirates would be inspired to play against, it would be this week's Ficklen guest, Southern Mississippi.

The two independents go against each other before a Parents' Day crowd at 1:30 p.m.

Two years ago, on Southern's last visit to East Carolina, the Pirates led by 21-20 with only eight seconds left. But on the first play after the kickoff, Southern threw a hail-Mary pass that was caught by Lyneal Alston, who dragged a tackler inside the 15 yard line before he lateraled off to a teammate who went into the end zone.

However, the officials charged Alston with a forward lateral and gave the Eagles an up-timed down after the clock had run out. Rex Banks then kicked a 31-yard field goal to give the Eagles a 23-21 victory. East Carolina coaches argued in vain that Alston had been downed before he lateraled the ball, and game and television films showed that to be true. The head of the Southern Independents Officials Bureau later admitted that the officials had erred in their call and the game should have ended before the field goal, but nothing could be done after the fact.

Then, last year, kick return specialist James Henry carried back not one, but two punts for touchdowns against the Pirates as the Eagles held East Carolina off for a 38-34 victory. That loss kept ECU from having its first winning season since 1983.

"It still makes my hair stand up on end when I think about it (the 1986 loss)," Pirate coach Art Baker said. "We won the game two years ago and didn't get credit for it, and then last year's loss kept us from having a winning season."

"So I'm looking forward to the game, and I think that our players will be, too," Baker said.

East Carolina will have to content with another standout quarterback in Brett Favre. Favre, only a sophomore, is only one touchdown pass away from tying the USM career record of 19. He is already in the top 10 in yardage, completions and attempts. Against Virginia Tech last week, he completed 11 of 17 for 148 yards and three touchdowns. He has thrown a touchdown pass in nine of the 13 games he has played at USM.

Too, the Golden Eagles will have a little bit of an East Carolina flavor with them. Ellis Johnson and Mark McHale, both former ECU assistants, are now on the USM staff.

Southern runs its offense from the I formation, while ECU will continue its use of the run-and-shoot, with some I-look formations in the run-and-shoot scheme. Defensively, ECU will use an eight-man front, while Southern Miss uses a five-man front.

The game traditionally has been a close one between the two schools. Of the 13 games, six have been decided by a touchdown or less, including the four of the last five. Southern has shut out the Pirates on three occasions, 40-0, in their first meeting in 1950, 65-0 in 1968, and 27-0 in 1985. ECU has posted two shutouts, 13-0 and 48-0 in 1973 and 1976, respectively.

Several ECU records have been set in the series. ECU's Butch Colson set the single game mark of 41 carries for 170 yards in 1969. Henry's 81-yard punt return for a touchdown last year is an ECU opponent record.

The Pirates' offensive attack will be led by quarterback Travis Hunter, who has completed 19 of 35 pass attempts for 263 yards and three touchdowns. Hunter has added 65 yards rushing.

The junior signal-caller is moving toward the top-10 in career records. He stands 243 yards short of the currently number 10, Theodore Sutton, who had 2,730 yards. He is also 92 passing yards short of fifth place, trailing Kevin Ingram, who has 1,976 yards. He needs 11 completions to reach fourth place on that list. Ingram is currently fourth with 147.

Slotback Reggie McKinney, the second leading rusher on the team with 192 yards, should pass the 1,000-yard mark for his career in the game. He currently has 988 yards. Tim James is the leading rusher for the season with 199 yards.

Receiver Walter Wilson, who leads the team this year with eight catches for 114 yards, is approaching the top 10 career group, too. He is 10 catches shy of Jimmy Adkins and Stefan Adams, both of whom had 47. He needs 63 yards to catch number 10 Vic Wilfore in reception yardage. Wilfore closed his career with 721 yards.

The Southern Mississippi game is the first of three straight home games for the Pirates, who face Southwestern Louisiana on Oct. 1 and West Virginia on Oct. 8.

Southern Mississippi-East Carolina
The Site: Ficklen Stadium, Greenville.
The Time: 1:30 p.m.
Records: Southern Mississippi 2-1, East Carolina 1-2.
Significance: Southern Miss has won the last four games of the series. East Carolina sees this as a "must" game if the Pirates are to have a winning season.
Last Time: Southern Mississippi won, 38-34, in Hattiesburg, Miss.

Fenner's Eligibility Is Revoked

BOILING SPRINGS (AP) — Derrick Fenner had his eligibility at Gardner-Webb revoked Thursday after a meeting of the South Atlantic Conference faculty athletic representatives, according to a statement released by Gardner-Webb officials.

Paul Jolley, the school's faculty athletic representative, made the decision after a clarification of conference rules concerning eligibility for transfer students. The decision was supported by Gardner-Webb president Chris White, the statement said.

Fenner transferred to the NAIA school after experiencing academic and legal difficulties while at North Carolina. He was the Atlantic Coast Conference's leading rusher as a sophomore in 1986, but did not play in the Aloha Bowl that season after being suspended from the team for academic reasons.

He did not play at all in 1987 after being jailed in Maryland on a murder charge that was later dropped. He was also convicted of a drug possession charge in February.

Rose Boys Top Rocky Mount

Rose High School's boys' cross country team shut out Rocky Mount Thursday, taking a 15-50 win.

Rose won the first six places in the race for the effective shutout. David Jolley took first place with a time of 19:48, while Mike Jolley came in second in 20:20. He was followed by Jeff Jones in 21:20, Mark Taylor in 21:56, and Craig Kirkland in 22:06 to round out the scoring.

Other Rose finishers included Brian Poust, sixth in 22:23 and David Thomas, ninth in 23:43.

There was no girls' meet. Rose is now 3-1 in Big East competition and will be at home against Washington on Tuesday.

Junior High School Football Roundup

SNOW HILL — A.G. Cox Middle School rolled up a 20-6 football victory over hosting Snow Hill Thursday.

Lamont Staton scored twice for Cox, on a 68-yard run and a 55-yard interception return. Anthony Edwards threw a 43-yard touchdown pass to Tucker Moore and also ran for the lone PAT in the game.

Stuart Brock led the Cox defense with 16 tackles.

Now 2-0, Cox travels to Chicod on Thursday.

Farmville-E.B. Aycock

FARMVILLE — Farmville Middle School gained a 32-12 football victory over E.B. Aycock Junior High School Thursday.

Farmville opened the scoring when Reggie Tyson passed to Tony Lang for five yards. Shaft Parker then got a tackle in the end zone to add two more points to the Farmville score.

Michael May added a four yard run to the lead to 14-0. Farmville's other scoring included a five-yard run by Brandon Terrell, a six-yard run by Edwell Tyson and a two-yard run by Parker. Reggie Tyson passed to Terrell for two PAT.

Aycock scored on a 20-yard run and a 64-yard pass.

Terrell led Farmville's offense with 127 yards rushing.

Ayden-Woodington

KINSTON — Ayden Middle School rolled up a 34-6 football victory over Woodington Thursday in junior high school action.

Andrell Roundtree returned the opening kickoff 80 yards to put Ayden into the lead. In the second period, Orlando Peterson scored from the one and Deshawn Gardner went in on a 45-yard pass from Alico Dunk.

Carl Artis scored on a 10-yard run in the third period and Peterson scored on a 60-yard run in the fourth quarter.

Lamont Graham scored Woodington's only touchdown on a 10-yard run.

Ayden travels to E.B. Aycock on Thursday.

Kinston Tops Rose In Soccer, 2-1

KINSTON — Kinston scored twice in the final six minutes to slip past Rose High School, 2-1, in a Big East soccer match Thursday.

Rose, which outshot Kinston 23-7, led 1-0 at the half on the strength of a Marty Measamer goal, assisted by David Leisten.

At 34:19 of the second half, however, Mike West scored an unassisted goal and with just over two minutes left in the game, William Boswell scored the game-winner.

Route Claibourne, John Bolen and Jason Bizzaro led the defensive effort of the Rampants, according to Coach Charlie Harvey.

"I find it hard to believe that they got off as many as seven shots," Harvey said. "We just didn't capitalize on our opportunities. we can't afford to lose games like this."

Rose is now 4-4 overall and 3-1 in Big East play. The Rampants are home Tuesday to Wilson Fike.

Player After Sixth Senior Victory

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Defending champion Gary Player will be looking for his sixth Senior Tour victory this season as the PaineWebber Invitational gets underway today.

In 16 official events on the tour this season, Player has finished in the top three 10 times. He also has won the Volvo Seniors British Open.

"That's amazing to hear that," Player said. He is also second on the money list, having won $404,339. Bob Charles is first, at $419,779.

Player, 53, is coming off his worst finish of the year, tied for 28th last week at Richmond, Va., where Arnold Palmer won.

But that could change this week. Player shot 66 on Wednesday and 68 Thursday in the pro-am.

The PaineWebber boasts 24 of the top-25 Senior Tour money winners in its field. That includes four-time winner Orville Moody and Bruce Crampton, who has won three tournaments this year.

Chi Chi Rodriguez was a last-minute withdrawal from Wednesday's first round of the pro-am, nursing an inflamed tendon and muscle strain in his left shoulder.

He played in Thursday's pro-am and is expected to play Friday.

Missing from the field are Billy Casper, Al Geiberger and 1984 champion Peter Thomson.

Casper is suffering from a recurring nerve problem in his back.

Geiberger has not played on the Senior Tour since his 2-year-old son died in late August in a swimming pool accident.

Thomson has a commitment in Europe.

Wallace's Big Run Earns Pole

MARTINSVILLE, Va. (AP) — Rusty Wallace used a record-setting run to win only the second pole of his five-year Winston Cup career and keep alive his bid for his first season points title.

"We're a very confident team," Wallace said Thursday after he broke the track qualifying mark and earned the top starting position for Sunday's running of the Goody's 500 at Martinsville Speedway.

Wallace led the Winston Cup points standings before misfortune struck the St. Louis native late last month at Bristol, Tenn. Wallace barrel-rolled his Pontiac in a practice run at Bristol, and after having to get a relief driver during the race the next night, he slipped to second place in the standings.

Two weeks later Wallace fell to third in the points chase when a second-lap wreck at Richmond left him 35th in the 36-car field.

Going into Sunday's 500-lap race on Martinsville's 526-mile oval, Wallace remains in third place. With six races left in the season, he is 139 points behind leader Bill Elliott and 12 in back of two-time defending Winston Cup champion Dale Earnhardt.

Three of the remaining races are on tracks of one mile or less in length, and Wallace had hoped to take advantage of that factor to gain on Elliott, who traditionally has run better on superspeedways.

But Elliott has worked hard in recent years to improve his short-track performances, and he was one of several drivers to test last week at Martinsville. His practice paid off Thursday when he took the outside starting spot on the front row.

"I thought this was Elliott's weakest track, but he qualified second," Wallace said. "He's like a bad dream that just won't go away."

Elliott, whose best finish at Martinsville was a third in 1984, said he was "more concerned with running well here than I have been, and not just because of the points, but because I've never run that good here. All I can do is keep digging, keep struggling."

Wallace, the Winston Cup circuit's top rookie in 1984 whose only previous pole came last year at Michigan, posted a fast lap of 91.372 mph on the low-banked Martinsville layout.

"I'm not usually a good qualifier," said Wallace, who has six career victories, including two this year. "I concentrate on the car's handling. I just do the best I can that way, and it worked out today."

Wallace eclipsed the track mark of 91.355 mph set by Morgan Shepherd in the spring of 1987, and the old Goody's qualifying record of 91.218 set last year by Geoff Bodine.

In addition to Wallace and Elliott, 18 other drivers earned starting positions Thursday. The remainder of the 30-car starting grid was to be determined in time trials today.

Bodine will start on the inside of the second row. Neil Bonnett, who qualified fourth, and Terry Labonte, with the fifth-fastest qualifying time, were the last of the drivers to break the 91-mph mark.

Earnhardt will start 10th after a fast lap of 90.664 in his Chevrolet.

"It's a good starting position," Earnhardt said. "No worry. I've started worse here and won the race. No worry. We had the wrong gear in there so we just didn't go fast enough."

The Goody's 500 is to get the green flag at 12:40 p.m. EDT Sunday, and will be televised live by ESPN.

Thursday's top 20 qualifiers for the $32.20 Goody's 500 NASCAR Winston Cup race at the 3/8-mile Martinsville Speedway, with driver's hometown type of car and qualifying speed in mph, positions 21-30 for Sunday's 500-lap race will be filled in time trials Friday.

1 Rusty Wallace, St. Louis, Mo., Pontiac, 91.52 track record, old record 91.355, Morgan Shep-herd, 1987.

2 Bill Elliott, Dawsonville, Ga., Ford, 91.192.

3 Geoff Bodine, Chemung, N.Y., Chevrolet, 91.104.

4 Neil Bonnett, Hueytown, Ala., Pontiac, 91.069.

5 Terry Labonte, Corpus Christi, Texas, Chevrolet, 91.029.

6 Alan Kulwicki, Greenfield, Wis., Ford, 90.977.

7 Michael Waltrip, Owensboro, Ky., Pontiac, 90.964.

8 Brad Trogue, Johnson City, Tenn., Ford, 90.916.

9 Greg Sacks, Mattituck, N.Y., Oldsmobile, 90.840.

10 Dale Earnhardt, Kannapolis, N.C., Chevrolet, 90.664.

11 Lake Speed, Jackson, Miss., Oldsmobile, 90.560.

12 Mark Martin, Batesville, Ark., Ford, 90.551.

13 Brett Bodine, Chemung, N.Y., Ford, 90.499.

14 Ricky Rudd, Chesapeake, Va., Buick, 90.493.

15 Rick Wilson, Bartow, Fla., Oldsmobile, 90.210.

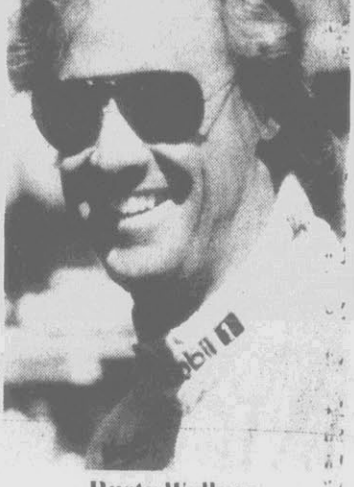

16 Harry Gant, Taylorsville, N.C., Chevrolet, 90.201.

BETHEL — Lamont Forbes scored three touchdowns to lead North Pitt's junior varsity football team to a 33-26 victory over North Edgecombe Thursday night.

Most of the scoring came in the first half when North Edgecombe built up a 26-20 lead in the game.

Milton Shaw scored on a six-yard run in the first period with Harvey Pittman passing to David Kearney for the PAT and an 8-0 lead. North Pitt came back on a nine-yard run by Chris Sheppard to cut the lead to 8-6.

The two continued the pattern in the second period. Larry Stokes scored on a 31-yard pass from Pittman for the Baby Warriors, but Forbes scored on a 31-yard run by Sheppard to tie it at 14-14. Shaw scored on a 50-yard run, but Forbes countered with a two-yard run to make it 20-20. North Edgecombe then closed out the first half with a 48-yard pass from Pittman to Kearney to take a 26-20 lead.

But Shon Daniels scored on a four-yard run in the third with Chris Sawyer adding the PAT kick to give North Pitt a 27-26 lead. Forbes then scored from the four in the final period to make it 33-26.

Shaw finished the game with 31 carries for 232 yards for North Edgecombe. Forbes led North Pitt with 15 carries for 186 yards.

Now 3-1, North Pitt plays at home against Ayden-Grifton on Thursday.

Rose 28

Northern Nash 0

Anthony Love ran for 103 yards and Columbus Grice added another 91 yards on the ground to lead Rose to a 28-0 win over Northern Nash in JV high school football action Thursday.

Rose opened the scoring in the first quarter when Love ran it in from 31 yards away to make it 6-0. The run for the two-point conversion failed.

In the second quarter, Melvin Moore scored on a 51-yard run and Columbus Grice threw a two-point conversion pass to Grant Harmon to make it 14-0.

Grice had a 33-yard run off a keeper to add another score. Harmon kicked the point after to make it 21-0.

Rose's final score came in the third quarter again courtesy of Grice who kept for a 47-yard touchdown run. Harmon again added the point after to make it 28-0.

Rose moves to 2-1 overall and 1-0 in the conference.

D.H. Conley 14

Havelock 6

HOLLYWOOD — Anthony Barratt ran for 128 yards and the go-ahead touchdown as D.H. Conley's JV football team handed Havelock a 14-6 loss Thursday.

Conley took the early lead as Stuart Roach returned a punt 50-yards to open the game's scoring. The point after touchdown failed and Conley led 6-0 in the first quarter.

Havelock tied the game in the second quarter, but Conley came back to get the winning touchdown in the fourth period.

Barrett scored from two yards out and Brian Smith passed to Derrick Cox for the two-point conversion.

It was the 14th straight win for the Vikings, who are 4-0 this year. Conley returns to action Thursday at West Carteret.

B.C.'s Tough Greens Not A Big Problem

ENDICOTT, N.Y. (AP) — There was plenty said about the rough condition of the greens during the opening round of the $500,000 B.C. Open, but a look at the scoreboard suggested nobody really minded.

"You have to put it out of your mind," said Jim Simons, one of four golfers who shot 6-under-par 65 Thursday at En-Joie golf course.

"Who knows, the ball may roll over all that junk and go in, or it may hit something and end up in the cup anyway," Simons said.

The summer of unrelenting heat experienced across the country burned up the greens at En-Joie and left them susceptible to fungus. Course members had to use temporary greens while the permanent ones were being resodded and refurbished and the course wasn't completely reopened until only two weeks ago.

Simons and the other leaders offered unsolicited comments about the improved, but still choppy greens.

"It was in bad shape — not unlike other places this summer — but you just have to adjust," said Dave Rummels, who joined Simons, Ed Dougherty and Roger Maltbie in the top spot with a one-stroke lead.

Nearly half the 148-man field seemed able to adjust.

After 18 holes, 67 golfers were below the course par of 71, while another 15 were at par.

"It's the story of the week. Most every course we've played in the Northeast was affected by the heat," Maltbie said. "We appreciate what they (local organizers) have done, but you still have some putts that hop around and get off line."

"Some people get lucky and some don't," Maltbie said.

Dougherty was the first off the course at 65. At one point he birdied four out of five holes, before suffering a bogey on the par-4 13th when he couldn't recover after hitting a tree with his second shot.

Simons and Maltbie followed Dougherty in the morning session. Simons moved into a share of the lead with a two-foot putt on his final hole. Maltbie sank seven birdies but, like Dougherty, hurt himself with a bogey on a par-5 hole.

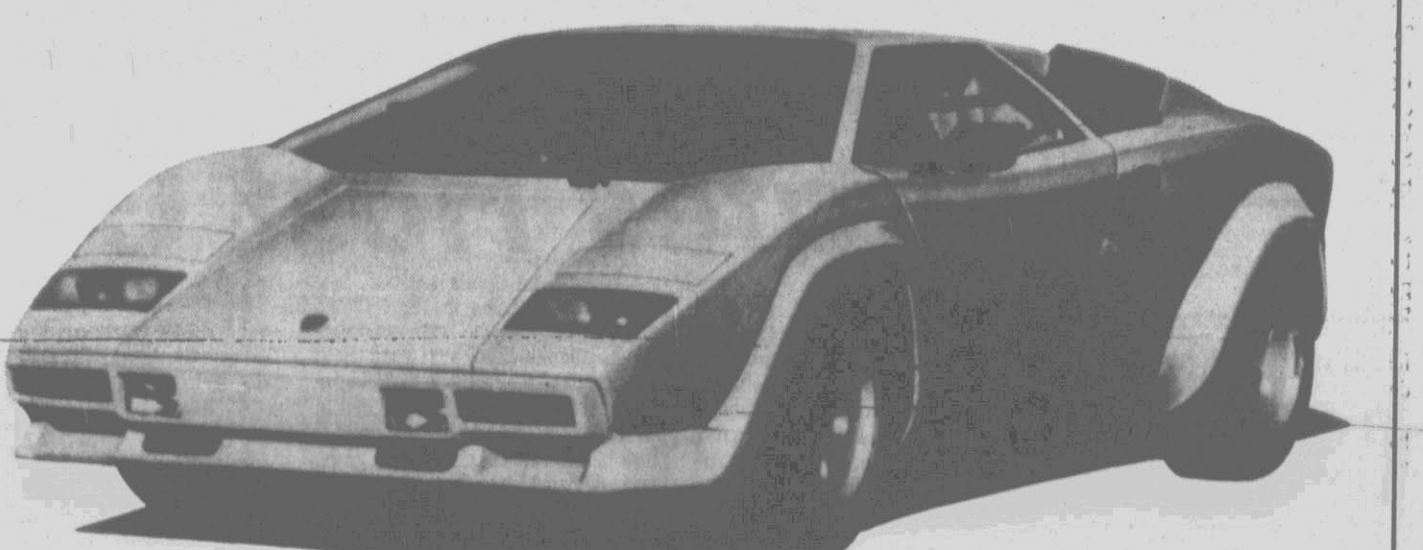

Rummels, who teed off in the afternoon, finished with a flourish, scoring birdies on four of his last six holes, including an incredible 70-footer on No. 7.

A stroke behind the leaders were Ken Green, Bill Glasson, Lance Ten Broeck, Mark Wiebe, and Wayne Levi.

Levi and Glasson shared the lead briefly at 6-under-par, but both were undone by bogeys on the 47-6 yard par-4 15th hole.

Nine golfers were at 68 and a dozen, including defending champion Joey Sindelar and Howard Twitty, were four strokes behind the leaders.

Morris Still Leading The Crowd

Woody Peele

Tom Morris continues to pull away from the rest of us in the early going of the 1988 football season, but we can take heart in that the season is still young.

This week, with several games which could go either way, the opportunity may be there for a little shakeup in the order of things.

Morris leads the way with a 31-4 record while Vickie Spivey is still second at 29-6. Tom Baines is in third place at 25-10 while I'm one behind him at 24-11. Tim Chandler is fifth at 23-12, while Joe Jenk...whoops. Greg Laudick is last at 21-14.

First off our high school picks.

All we can say about last week is "Ouch!" All we saw were upsets — and a couple of coaches, B.T. Chappell at Ayden-Grifton and Steve Craft at Conley, have asked me to continue to pick against them. They've each won all the games I picked them to lose.

Well, Craft is "lucky" this week but Chappell isn't, as you will see.

At any rate, last week, I turned in only a 2-3 record which brings me to 17-10 on the year.

Friday night, Farmville Central travels to South Lenoir. The Jaguars, banged up and hurting, have been shut out their last two games after winning their first two. But they should get back on the winning track this week. They have their quarterback back although they are still missing others. However, it should be enough. Farmville to win, 21-6.

Havelock visits Conley in a key Coastal Conference game. The Rams have won twice and tied strong Bertie. Conley moved the ball well against Farmville last week, but had trouble getting it into the end zone. If Craft can win with my picking Conley to lose, then it's a victory for the Vikings. The pick is Havelock, 28-12.

Surgery Is Next Hurdle In Life Of Doug Williams

By Tom Friend

L.A. Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — As Redskins quarterback Doug Williams' stomach throbbled Wednesday night, he placed a telephone call to his 65-year-old father, sitting in a wheelchair back home in Zachary, La.

Robert Williams Sr. has no legs, a victim of an arthritis infection some six years ago, and his household duty is to sit by the telephone, just in case it rings. He used to hunt and fish, and he once grew a garden laden with flowers. Now, he answers the telephone.

"So, he was the first to hear his 33-year-old son speak."

"I'm going to have an operation, Daddy," Doug Williams said. "Need I say anything else?"

If there is a thing or two Robert Williams has taught his son, it's to hold a heavy head high, no matter what. Doug Williams has had a life-long need for that sort of guidance. His wife died of a brain tumor. He was involved in a bitter dispute with his first team, the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, and jumped to the U.S. Football League, which folded in a heap. He has had five knee operations, losing all semblance of cartilage from his scarred left knee.

On a scale of 1 to 10 then, his father said losing an appendix is probably a "3," a "1" being not all that bad. Robert Williams said his son is saddened he won't quarterback the Washington Redskins in Phoenix Sunday, but worse things could have happened.

"Doug is strong," Robert Williams said Thursday. "It didn't worry him too much. He was raised like this, I guess. You can't worry about something if there's no help for it."

"You think this is unfair? I don't feel that way. Everybody has ups and downs in life. Way life is."

Doug's little daughter Ashley, 5, has not yet adopted this philosophy, although her somewhat tragic legacy is bound to settle in someday as she ages. She never knew her mother, who died months after delivery with a brain tumor. If she is somewhat sheltered, the Williams' have preferred to keep it that way, for they figure news of misfortune can wait.

Thursday morning, Doug Williams telephoned her in Louisiana as she dressed for school. He told her, "Daddy's sick. He's had an operation."

According to Robert, little Ashley wasn't sure what an operation was or what it all entailed or that it meant she couldn't see her daddy on TV this Sunday.

"She didn't understand it too much," Robert said. "She doesn't have a handle on it all yet. She's not mature yet. I told her, 'Daddy's in the hospital and needs an operation.' She asked, 'What's an operation?' and I didn't know how to explain it. I said he's sick."

On the day of the surgery, he hadn't seemed ill in the least, answering a myriad of media questions prior to practice. "Are you playing poorly? ... Do you think the team's struggling? ... Is Doug Williams the problem with this team?"

For an offensive player, he was a tad defensive, saying, "At no time has Coach Gibbs told me I'm not playing well." At least he was responding. Half of his teammates weren't available to be interviewed. He always is.

Williams has said one of the worst hours of his life came prior to January's Super Bowl when a group of reporters, mostly white, asked him to describe life as a black man.

"I was under the microscope, being the first black quarterback there," he said recently. "There's only so many questions you can ask about being a black quarterback, but everybody found a new way of making me darker. What does it mean being black? What does it mean being black and being in the Super Bowl? Do you think you have to carry all of black America? What do you think black people will say? Do you look at yourself as Jesse Jackson? Do you look at yourself as Martin Luther King? Do you know Jesse Owens? ... That was the worst thing any individual can go through."

What about losing his wife? He talks about it more easily now, as if it has truly been accepted as over and done. A picture of Ashley in his locker is a reminder. She has her mother's eyes. What about losing a league? Tampa Bay, his original team, spurned him, offering millions to unheralded quarterback Steve Young instead. He found a new league, the USFL. He was an Outlaw — an Oklahoma Outlaw.

Next thing he knew, the league folded, and he was perfectly willing to coach for a living, though the arm still worked. One team phoned, the Redskins, and they asked him if he could be content as a backup to Jay Schroeder. He said sure.

He negotiated his own contract, though he forgot to ask for a signing bonus. He knocked again on General Manager Bobby Beathard's door and said, "Is there any chance..."

Beathard and owner Jack Kent Cooke said yes.

For the entire 1986 season, he threw one pass, dropped by the receiver. Schroeder went to the Pro Bowl; Williams went to the coach and asked for a trade. The coach thought better of it.

When Schroeder went down in a heap, Williams jogged in and made himself at home. A comeback victory over Philadelphia ensued, another against Detroit. He won a starting job, but — typically — he had back spasms before a critical game with the New York Giants. Unable to play, he watched Schroeder take the game and his job. He left Redskin Park in tears one night, his heavy head down for a change.

But he reigned in the Super Bowl, of course, and Schroeder was traded this fall. The Redskins were his Redskins. Owner Cooke gave him a million dollars. Gibbs gave him a mighty supporting cast. And then something gave his appendix a fit.

As Williams left Redskin Park for the hospital Wednesday, a young boy, wearing a Jay Schroeder T-shirt, asked for an autograph. His head up, Doug Williams signed.

Tigers Win Third Straight; Tie Yanks For Third Place

BALTIMORE (AP) — Because the rest of the division had the night off, there was no reason for scoreboard watching. But the Detroit Tigers insist things won't be any different to-night when there is a full schedule of games.

"There's no sense in watching the scoreboard," insisted Tom Brookens, whose two-run double keyed a four-run fourth inning as the Tigers beat the Baltimore Orioles 7-4 Thursday night.

"It doesn't matter what Boston does, we just have to win."

The Tigers, who have won three straight games, moved into a tie for third place in the American League East with New York, 4½ games behind the idle Red Sox. Milwaukee is in second place, four games back.

Minnesota beat California 6-2 in Thursday only other AL game.

"We have to win every day," Tigers manager Sparky Anderson noted. "If we win 10 in a row, and they (the Red Sox) go 5-5, the best we can do is tie, so we have to win them all."

The first of those 10 games was a struggle against the last-place Orioles.

"This wasn't nearly as easy as it looked," Anderson said. "They were one step away from totally blowing it open. (Reliever Paul) Gibson saved us, and (Dwayne) Murphy saved Gibson."

Gibson relieved Ted Power, 6-7, after the Orioles had opened the seventh with three straight singles, loading the bases and bringing Mickey Tettleton to the plate, representing the tying run.

Tettleton singled to center, driving home one run and leaving the bases loaded. "Tettleton fought off a good pitch," Gibson said. "Then I was fortunate enough to get (Brady) Anderson to pop up for a bizarre play."

What Gibson called a pop-up was a fly ball to Chet Lemon in straight away right. Lemon caught the ball and threw a strike to the plate. Orioles third base coach John Hart had sent Cal Ripken from third, but Ripken retreated to the bag after Lemon's strong throw.

Eddie Murray, who had tagged at second, was caught between bases and a good throw to second by catcher Matt Nokes completed a strange double play.

Gibson still wasn't out of it, though. Rick Schu hit a liner to center and Murphy had to make a diving grab to end the inning.

"I had moved over expecting him to pull the ball," Murphy said, "and instead he hit it the other way. When I got close I knew I had a chance, but I wasn't sure when it was first hit."

Power replaced starter Frank Tanana in the third and allowed one run on six hits in 3 2-3 innings. Mike Henneman, the fourth Detroit pitcher, worked 1 2-3 innings for his 21st save.

The Orioles had 15 hits, four by Murray, but left 10 runners on base.

"We got enough hits tonight to win three games," Orioles manager Frank Robinson said. "When we get enough hits, we don't get them at the right time."

The Orioles didn't help their cause with three errors. Two came in the first and led to a pair of unearned runs against starter Dave Schmidt, 8-5.

Center fielder Ken Gerhart made one in that inning, throwing to an unconverted base after catching a sacrifice fly by Fred Lynn. Gerhart was charged with another in fourth when his throw from center skipped past the cutoff man, the catcher and the pitcher and went to the back stop.

Robinson shifted the blame for that one off Gerhart. "That ball shouldn't go all the way to the backstop," he said.

The errors might have been the effect of the pressure of playing contenders, as close as the Orioles get to being in this year's pennant race. But the Tigers are staying calm.

"There was more pressure on us when we were in first," Gibson said. "We're loose now. All we have to do is win. The Red Sox were written off when we were ahead by four games, and now people are writing us off. We're just gonna finish it out, and let the chips fall where they may."

Twins 6, Angels 2
Allan Anderson won for the ninth time in his last 11 decisions and Brian Harper had three hits and two RBI.

The Twins improved their road record to 41-37, assuring them of their first winning season on the road in nine years. Minnesota won the World Series last year despite finishing 29-52 on the road during the regular season.

Anderson, 15-9, allowed seven hits, walked none and struck out three in eight innings. Jeff Reardon closed.

Minnesota jumped into a 3-0 lead in the third against California starter Terry Clark, 6-6.

U.S. Basketball Dealing With Its Minor Injuries

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The early part of the preliminary Olympic schedule was the toughest for the U.S. men's basketball team. The way minor injuries have been piling up, that was a blessing.

After beating 1984 silver medalist Spain, upset-minded Canada and Pan Am Games gold medalist Brazil, the United States was to get a break with China and Egypt closing out the schedule leading to the quarterfinals.

Instead of breaks, it got sprains and bruises.

The U.S. team did clinch the top spot in its six-team pool Friday with a 108-57 victory over China and improved its record to 4-0. It plays Egypt on Saturday, then the fourth-place team from the other pool when the quarterfinals open on Monday.

Friday's game started with Coach John Thompson opting to hold out J.R. Reid and Stacey Augmon, both injured against Brazil, and ended with Hersey Hawkins, Willie Anderson and David Robinson on the nagging injured list.

"I don't think it's anything major," Thompson said of the injury situation after the China game. "You're certainly worried about injuries but there's only one way to play ... certainly we're concerned about injuries."

All five players said they were OK and that they could play if needed against Egypt, although that's doubtful.

The United States beat Spain by 44 points in its opening game. Spain beat Egypt by 43 two days later.

"I think we have to sustain concentration," Thompson said. "I felt we would get sloppy at times today and I cautioned the kids against that."

The team left the arena after the game for practice.

"We'll just generally review and deal on specific things, based on who we will be playing," he said.

The problem won't be who the United States is playing against but who is playing for the United States.

Reid and Augmon said they were waiting for the trainer's permission to play on Saturday.

Anderson said he turned his ankle when he landed on another's players foot after driving to the basket and being fouled.

"I don't think it's bad," he said. "I'm going to be prepared to play tomorrow."

Hawkins was injured on the defensive end just 46 seconds prior to Anderson going down.

"Jeff Grayer collided with me after one of the Chinese players hit him and Jeff fell on my knee."

Hawkins said. "It feels fine now because it has been on ice. I'll see how it feels later."

Robinson said he suffered a bruised hip during the game. He flipped the ice pack he had been using to Anderson when he limped to the bench.

Is Thompson starting to become concerned about the injuries because of the tournament conditions?

Mets Knew The Title Was Theirs

By The Associated Press
 The New York Mets didn't think they would win the National League East for the second time in three years. They expected it.

"We always knew we were going to win it. We just had to keep telling ourselves we would," captain Keith Hernandez said.

"We seemed destined to win, but it wasn't exciting enough," Howard Johnson said. "We never really lived up to expectations."

They finally finished their roll to the top Thursday night with a 3-1 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies behind Ron Darling's six-hitter.

The Mets have won eight straight, 13 of 14 and 23 of 28, blowing away the Pittsburgh Pirates and all other challengers.

"The last couple of years, they've learned how to make a run when they have to," Phillies manager Lee Elia said. "They work hard. Good pitching, good offense, make the plays when they have to."

"I really never doubted it," Johnson said. "When the chips are down, the cream rises to the top."

In other games, San Diego beat Los Angeles 5-4, Cincinnati beat San Francisco 3-1 and Houston beat Atlanta 3-2.

Darling, 16-9, struck out four and walked one in his fourth straight victory and his seventh complete game.

Philadelphia took the lead in the fourth on Von Hayes' sacrifice fly, but the Mets tied it in the fifth on Gregg Jefferies' run-scoring ground-out. The Mets went ahead in the sixth when Darryl Strawberry walked, went to third on a single by Kevin McReynolds and scored on a wild pitch by Don Carman, 10-13. McReynolds added an RBI single in the seventh.

"This was sort of anticlimactic," Hernandez said.

Padres 5, Dodgers 4
 Carmelo Martinez hit a pair of solo home runs and Eric Show won for the eighth time in nine decisions as Los Angeles' magic number remained at three.

Martinez homered in the sixth to give the Padres a 4-3 lead, but John Shelby tied it in the bottom half with his ninth homer. Martinez hit his 17th homer in the eighth off Alejandro Pena, 5-7, who relieved Tim Leary to start the inning.

Show, 15-11, won his fourth straight, giving up 11 hits. He struck out seven and walked one.

Reds 3, Giants 1
 Jack Armstrong allowed two hits in six innings. John Franco got his 35th save in 37 opportunities and Lenny Harris snapped a seventh-inning tie with a two-run single.

Armstrong, 4-6, has won both of his starts since his recall from Class AAA Nashville of the American Association on Sept. 2.

Don Robinson, 8-5, gave up nine hits and all three runs in 6 2/3 innings.

Van Snider hit a sacrifice fly in the first and Will Clark tied it in the fourth with his 28th homer.

Astros 3, Braves 2
 Craig Biggio homered and Bill Hatcher hit an RBI single as Houston rallied for two runs in the seventh inning and sent Atlanta to its 99th loss.

Biggio led off the inning with his third homer of the season on a full count pitch from Tom Glavine, 7-17.

Jim Deshaies, 11-13, gave eight hits and both runs in seven innings. Dave Smith pitched the ninth his 26th save.

Foster Continues U.S. Streak With Second-Round Knockout

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Todd Foster ran the American Olympic winning streak to six fights Friday night by knocking out Khalid Rahilou of Morocco with a tremendous right hand in the second round.

Foster, who had already knocked Rahilou down twice, connected with an overhand right to the side of the head that put Rahilou flat on his back on the canvas. The referee didn't bother to count him out as the fight ended at 2:19 of the round.

"It's all downhill from here," said Foster, who was fighting for the first time in his 139-pound division.

Earlier, Romalis Ellis also won for the U.S. team, opening his tournament by decisively beating a South Korean fighter in a 132-pound match.

Russian fighters, meanwhile, remained perfect with two more wins as the Olympic boxing competition sailed through its halfway point on a day that — in contrast to the previous day — featured only a few minor controversies.

The Soviet Union team is now 13-0 and has advanced 10 fighters in the tournament, which ends a week from Sunday after a marathon 428 fights.

Foster, who was scheduled to fight a fighter from Zaire, instead got the Moroccan after a redraw was forced in the division when another fighter couldn't make weight.

The switch seemed to make little difference, as the Great Falls, Mont., fighter knocked Rahilou down with left hooks in the first and second rounds before applying the finishing blow.

"It doesn't matter, I'm going to fight five countries anyway," Foster said of the redraw.

Ellis, in his match earlier Friday, landed punch after punch to the head of bloodied South Korean Lee Kang-suk to take a 5-0 decision and quiet the largely Korean crowd at the Olympics boxing arena.

"I was very scared it might go the other way," said Ellis. "We knew we had to go out there and take control. The crowd is a factor in the judging and there is so much controversy out there."

The win came a day after enraged Korean coaches stormed the ring and attacked a New Zealand referee they thought robbed their fighter. And like so many bouts at this Olympics, Ellis' did not come off without a spat.

American officials held things up for awhile because they thought a disqualified South Korean coach was at ringside, and American coach Ken Adams accused the referee of giving Lee time to rest by wiping his bleeding nose.

The American 132-pounder said he was prepared for the worst all along. He took the crowd out of the fight when he forced Lee to take two standing 8-counts in the second round and bloodied the Korean's nose.

He appeared to have won when he knocked Lee down late in the round, but the referee ruled it a slip.

The win was so convincing that even the Korean coach applauded when the decision was announced.

"After the first 8-count, I knew I had him," Ellis said. "After that, there was no doubt in my mind."

It was the second U.S. win in as many fights against a South Korean; the first was Michael Carbajal's narrow win over Oh Kwang-soo — one of several decisions that infuriated the South Koreans.

American officials were a little upset before Ellis' fight when they mistakenly thought one of the five South Koreans booted out of the Olympics after Thursday's wild melee was working the corner.

And Adams said of the referee's repeated stopping of the fight to wipe Lee's bleeding nose:

"It took him forever to get his gauge out, wipe the Korean's nose and then restart the fight. He was continuously giving him a lot of time. I was yelling at the referee about it because I was concerned at the time."

Adams was also unhappy that U.S. fighters weren't allowed to sit in an officials' section adjacent to the ring from which they had earlier cheered on other American fighters.

"We figured it was another tactic they used," he said. "We're not going to be flustered by that."

With the Ellis and Foster victories, the American team is 7-2 overall and has 10 fighters still in the tournament. The Korean team, considered one of the stronger teams going into the Olympics, has lost five of 12 fights.

Singer's Former Valet Stays Close

By GARRY MITCHELL
Associated Press Writer

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — Willis "Be Bop" Edwards goes wherever blues great B.B. King travels. The two men have been inseparable since 1952 when King got into Edwards' taxi in Houston, Texas.

"I'm right there with the band every day. I'm writing a book, 'B.B. King, Then and Now,'" Edwards said in an interview at his home in Mobile. King is 64. Edwards, a great-grandfather of four, will be 65 in November. Neither plans to retire soon.

"He stays polished," Edwards said. Edwards, now the singer's road manager, began as his valet.

"I was driving a taxi cab for a studio. This guy that owned the cab line owned a couple of recording companies. He had me go to the hotel and take King to his lawyer's office to sign the papers to start recording."

Edwards parked his cab that day and left with King. "From that date to this one, I've been with him."

King started in the early days playing black clubs around the country.

"That was from the '50s until the early part of the '60s," Edwards said. "King's fortunes changed when he guest-starred with Eric Clapton, Jimi Hendrix and Janis Joplin at Fillmore West (in San Francisco). When he made the record, 'The Thrill Is Gone,' that was the major change."

"The crowd now is 75 to 80 percent white. Deep South, the crowd is more black," Edwards said. "It varies with the territory."

Edwards moved to Mobile 25 years ago and began operating restaurants and nightclubs. Everything was called "Be Bop's" — record shop, social club, chicken shack and lately his tamale plaza.

"We sell hot tamales and boudin (a Cajun sausage with rice). The tamales come from Mississippi, the boudin is from New Orleans," he said.

When he gets the call from Polly Walker, King's secretary in Memphis, Tenn., Edwards goes on the road. Her husband, Cato, who died this summer, was King's long-time bus driver, and her two daughters worked for King. She said they all have been friends for life.

"I grew up across the street from King's house in Memphis," Mrs. Walker said.

Edwards has been with King the longest of his co-workers. He takes his wife, Lillie, with him on concert trips when possible. Bus driver Barnett Fogg has been with them 11 years, and tenor sax Eddie Synagal has nine years with the group.

The King show has made two European trips this year, in March and July. Edwards said they hit 29 cities. "Every day it was a different language, different money, different food," Edwards said.

"I've been going to Europe for the last 20 years. I'm going twice again before Christmas."

Edwards doesn't play any instrument. "I don't handle nothing but money and writing checks. But I know music, I've got to know music to hire and fire."

King, he said, is all blues: "If B.B. King sang the national anthem, it would be bluesy."

King, who lives in Las Vegas, Nev., rose to fame from humble beginnings in Indianola, Miss. With a New York agent, his performance itinerary runs nearly year-round.

"He's got people, family all over the United States," Edwards said.

He said King's favorite place is his home in Las Vegas, but King recently purchased a new bus manufactured in Belgium. "It took them nine months to make it to B.B. King's specifications. The same thing that's in a Stouffer's hotel is in that bus."

"When we're traveling down the highway, people take pictures of it from their cars," Edwards said.

The group does as much flying as bus travel. That's all in stark contrast to the early days, when the band got around in a few station wagons and a Cadillac. Back then, they were worried about being able to use public restrooms because they were segregated and black people were not permitted to use them.

Edwards said he has kept Mobile as his home base because of his family and business interests. He has stayed despite the lack of major entertainment — blues or jazz.

"The people here are not ready for it," he said. "They won't support it. A lot of people notice it, but it's the less supporting entertainment city in the world. For what reason, I don't know."

A Review 'Bodywatching' TV Special Goes Cold

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS might as well come on the air Saturday night and announce, "Hey, Bonehead! The Olympics are on NBC! Why aren't you watching!?"

Instead, the network offers a remarkably lame study in the obvious. "Bodywatching," based on the Desmond Morris books on body language.

Did we know that the facial expression for joy is the same in every culture — a smile? Did we know that hands express emotion? Did we know that hello is good-bye reversed?

Of course, we did! We're not stupid! Get to the sex!

The special actually reveals — stop the presses — how men's bodies are different than women's. But this is network television, so don't expect to see the good parts.

"Bodywatching" starts off by examining the body language of door-to-door salesmen. Rap pleasantly on the door, one vacuum merchant suggests to another. Talk your way in the door. Make the vacuum cleaner look easy to use.

This is scientific?

Eventually, "Bodywatching" slinks up to the subject it constantly suggests, first with a woman who designs brassieres. She says her job is not unlike designing a suspension bridge. "You have to somehow get the bust up!" "Push-up bras create curves that are highly sexual!" gushes narrator Burgess Meredith, whose body language is thankfully unseen.

On to a beach in Brazil — hairy chests, string bikinis. "Simply put, it's really about mating!" Meredith squeals.

For some reason, much of the first half of the special is taken up with following a blind sculptor to Italy where he gets to feel Michelangelo's masterpiece, "David." This is rather, er, touching, but it doesn't seem to have much to do with body language. "Remember, Michael is blind!" Meredith exclaims irritatingly several minutes into the piece. Apparently the writers think the viewers are, too.

The best body language for "Bodywatching" is turning the channel.

Old U.S. Shows Find Boom In Japan

By ERIC TALMADGE
Associated Press Writer
TOKYO (AP) — Captain James T. Kirk of the starship Enterprise looks skyward from a lonely, wind-blown planet and says: "Entapuraizu. riku kara tenso shite kure."

For those listening to the English version of "Star Trek," Captain Kirk would have said "Enterprise, beam me up."

Dubbed in Japanese, "Star Trek" is just one of many vintage American TV programs boldly exploring the late-night Tokyo airwaves.

During a typical week, insomnia-stricken viewers in the Tokyo area can watch "Burke's Law," the 1960s adventure show starring Gene Barry as a debonair Los Angeles police chief; Rod Serling's "The Twilight Zone," the acclaimed science fiction series; "Bonanza," one of television's longest running Westerns, starring Lorne Greene; "The Beverly Hillbillies," the antics of a backwoods family in Los Angeles' elitist neighborhood; "Mission: Impossible," the acclaimed Bruce Geller adventure series; and "The Addams Family," a sitcom based on Charles Addams' bizarre magazine cartoon characters.

"I don't have any statistics on this," said Yoshihiro Mishima of the TV Tokyo network, "but we think the people who stay up to watch these programs are looking for a bit of the good old days, when they might have been too young to watch the original broadcasts."

Mishima said the viewers are mainly college students or adults in their 30s. "It's part of the 'retro boom,'" he said, referring to a recent trend among some Japanese to seek out things from the past.

But American TV shows are nothing new to the Japanese audience. "There have been American programs on Japanese TV for decades, going back to 'Ben Casey' and 'Rawhide,'" Mishima said. "They've lost popularity to domestic programming, but people still watch them to get a look at America."

Yuji Tagami, an editor with TV Station magazine, added, "They can develop devoted fans, but ratings for late-night American programs in general are not very high."

Limited viewership did not stop the Tokyo Broadcasting System from putting the "Nostalgic American TV" series on its schedule last October. Since March, the series has included: "Surfside 6," a '60s detective series set in Miami Beach, starring Troy Donahue and Van Williams; "Combat!" the longest of the World War II adventures, starring the late Vic Morrow; and "Superman," starring George Reeves.

"Ratings aren't a good way to judge late-night television shows' popularity. In that time slot, viewership is small and more personal. Viewers are more attached to what they watch," said Masato Ueda, TBS producer of the series.

To young viewers, the appeal of the rejuvenated old programs is in their "newness," Ueda said. "We decided to go with the series when we went on the 24-hour broadcasting schedule, and though the 'retro boom' was a part of the decision, we wanted to give young people something completely new, which to them these programs are."

Many of the American programs also feature bilingual broadcasts, with the original English-language dialogue simultaneously aired on a subchannel available on specially equipped TV sets.

Story Behind 'Diamond Trap' Film Almost As Intriguing As Mystery

By RICHARD DE ATLEY
Associated Press Writer
LOS ANGELES (AP) — "The Diamond Trap," which leads off the season for the "CBS Sunday Movie" on Sept. 25, has career risks, corporate intrigue, tragedy and triumph. And a lot of it took place before the cameras rolled.

The movie stars Brooke Shields, Twigg, Howard Hesseman and Ed Marinaro, but the gold stars for putting it all together go to the executive producer, Jay Bernstein.

Bernstein, a former publicist and top Hollywood agent who boosted the careers of such performers as Linda Evans and Farrah Fawcett, is not likely to produce "The Mother Teresa Story."

It would be too easy. Big script, big stars, lots of easy production money.

Instead, Bernstein took a regulation thriller based on the novel "The Great Diamond Robbery" from mystery novelist John Minahan and insisted on Miss Shields and Twigg as the female leads for the script, which had been revised eight times over 2½ years by writer David Peckinpah.

Bernstein claims one of the best industry records for television movies, with the seven he has done so far averaging a 33 share, and none lower than a 31 share, the term used by A.C. Nielsen to describe the percentage of the overall TV audience viewing a particular show.

He knows how to hit the right audience buttons or, in his words, "Put the sizzle in the steak." But wanting Miss Shields for the part and getting her were two different things.

He made a point of going to this year's "People's Choice" awards to put the script in her hand. The role for Miss Shields was that of a gallery employee who is part of a plot to steal $12 million in jewels, but the police, including Twigg as a Scotland Yard detective, persuade her to help them foil the crime.

The part of the sophisticated 30-year-old would be the first adult role for Shields, a 23-year-old Princeton honors graduate. She wanted it.

But not everyone wanted her. She had to read for the role, for Bernstein, for director Don Taylor, for CBS and for Columbia, an unusual demand on someone who has already commanded major film roles.

"Certain people involved in the production were so worried about how to deal with a, quote, 'movie star' on a 22-day shooting schedule that the final compromise was to put part of my salary in escrow," said Bernstein in an interview. "If there was a problem, the first money to be lost would be mine."

"I told Brooke I was going to do this and she said, 'Don't worry, I won't let you down,'" he said.

"Not only did she not let me down, she made me very proud. She is one of those people ... who everybody waits for to fail. And she's succeeded," said Bernstein. He called Miss Shields "easy to work with and able to turn in a fine performance, even with all this pressure on her."

There were other perils. The project came to CBS just as the network leadership was going through a shakeup, with CBS Entertainment President Donald Grant leaving the network and Kim LeMasters replacing him.

"It was about to be caught between the switches," said Bernstein. "There was something CBS wanted from me, and it was hard to give, but I went in and gave it to them," said Bernstein. He didn't identify the sacrifice, but most likely it was a different movie or series project.

"And then I asked them for a favor afterward. 'Please let me do this and I won't let you down.' And now it's their leadoff movie," Bernstein said.

But even after getting a green light, there was the matter of financing.

"The problem was the picture was too expensive to make," Bernstein said. "This picture was filmed in Los Angeles, New York, Bristol, Bath, Wales and London, with four major stars, each of whom could be star of their own TV movie."

In the midst of grappling with finances, Bernstein's father, Jerome, died of complications from a heart condition April 17. Bernstein has dedicated the movie to his father.

Actor Says He's Suppressed Over 'Temptation' Uproar

By HILLEL ITALIE
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Willem Dafoe is a modest man, but he couldn't help thinking the time was right to play the title role in "The Last Temptation of Christ."

"It made all the sense in the world," he said. "I thought, 'Yes, of course. Perfect. It's a good role. I feel right for it right now.' I'm just at the point in my life where I'm concerned with some of the things he's speaking about. The struggle between the body and the spirit is something I'm interested in."

Few films have generated as much controversy as Martin Scorsese's "The Last Temptation of Christ." Based on the novel by Nikos Kazantzakis, it depicts an angst-ridden Jesus, torn between desires of the mind and body. In a dream sequence, he is spared the cross, sleeps with Mary Magdalene and has children. The movie has drawn fierce protests from some religious groups.

"I was a little surprised," Dafoe said. "I knew there was some resistance. ... I never thought it would be to this extent and take this kind of shape."

However, the publicity generated from the protests has helped the movie at the box office.

"It's always a terrific thing for a publicity campaign," Dafoe said. "But it colors everything in a negative light. Maybe that's a trade-off to the publicity."

Dafoe was eager to work with Scorsese, the director of "Mean Streets," "Taxi Driver" and "Raging Bull."

"He just gave me a certain kind of confidence and authority. He kept me on the track. He makes you feel comfortable; he gives you that room. You feel totally unencumbered, free, yet you feel a guiding hand."

Dafoe also enjoyed working with the cast, which included Barbara Hershey as Mary Magdalene and David Bowie as Pontius Pilate.

"There was a real sense of purpose," he said. "Marty commands a lot of respect. There was very little money, and the actors were doing it for scale. Everyone wanted to be there. A real ensemble feel."

Although Dafoe had seen other biblical movies, he had no interest in repeating others' performances.

"I really didn't concern myself with what kind of Jesus I was going to be — the responsibility of playing that role, all the associations, all the information. I thought I would find a place to scrub myself clean of all that and really start out from a wonderfully innocent place."

Dafoe's confidence was helped by his faith in Scorsese: "I would not be cowed by the role. It was a very risky thing. If you're going to be in a situation like that, you might as well be with Martin Scorsese."

The intensity of his performance in "Last Temptation" can be measured by his eyes, which rarely blink on camera.

"No matter what you do, it has mythic proportions," he said. "When you're speaking, no matter the context, there is some kind of concentration that's not of this world."

"The general tendency is to look as deeply as you can into the back of someone's brain and deeply understand with every cell in your body what you're saying."

The 33-year-old actor talked about his career at the Performing Garage, home of the Wooster Group, an experimental theater company. Dafoe is a member and does business there.

He was born July 22, 1955, in Appleton, Wis., and was early attracted to the stage. "Simply moronic reasons," he said, smiling. "It's fun, it's enjoyable. I like pretending."

As he grew older, his feelings for acting deepened.

"In the end, it's for its own sake — for beauty's sake. A lot of professions, you're tracked. You do this, you get that. In acting, you become the canvas. It totally goes back to you," he said.

"You're constantly questioning why you do what you do. You're constantly evolving. It's a healthy way to live, but very difficult."

He became a full-time actor at 18, and in 1977, he saw the Wooster Group give a performance of "Rumstick Road."

"It was just unlike anything I'd ever seen," he said. "The event was so extraordinary. It touched my heart. There's no accounting for it. I couldn't identify it. It had that kind of manic energy and this really fluid transformation."

Dafoe joined the Wooster Group but also pursued a career in film. After appearing in a few minor films in 1983, he began to attract attention with "Streets of Fire" in 1984 and "To Live and Die in L.A." in 1985.

His big breakthrough came the following year with "Platoon," Oliver Stone's Academy Award-winning film about the Vietnam War. Dafoe's portrayal of the sympathetic Sergeant Elias earned him an Oscar nomination for supporting actor.

Despite film work, he has continued his involvement with the Wooster Group. "The whole desire to play around with forms is a liberating thing for an actor," he said.

Horoscope From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR SATURDAY Sept. 24

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Rise to a new adventure which looks good despite the worry over money. Your thoughts on change at home and future travels move forward.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Don't let your friend's complaining affect your time alone. You are in a quiet frame at work and in recreation. Bury the hatchet.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Worrying about finances won't change the situation. Cut back, and avoid costly recreation. Good conversation costs nothing.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): It's not the time to beat the drum. Quiet time can be useful if you put some energy into self improvement. Read a how-to book.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Plan to stay with a satisfying project you are involved with. Take a broader view of your situation, and concentrate on the good aspects.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Running around catching up on errands exhausts you. Eat properly and get sufficient rest. You have burned the candle at both ends, so slow down.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Reach out for others. It's time to upgrade your life. Avoid those who zap your energy. You are surrounded by a positive element.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Try to relax and bend a little. Things are not as bad as you sometimes feel. Use a gentle response to get your way.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): It's not the time to gamble even though you think that things are going well. Your luck is a result of your own efforts. Timing pays off.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): There is another person just like you, possibly a mate, who may challenge you. Use good sense in solving problems.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Trying to find excitement today may be disappointing. Stick with tried and true activities to stimulate yourself.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): You are pleased with a friend who helped you, and now you want to return the favor. Say "thank you" with a personal call.

3 NT	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	6 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Five of ♥ Never give up hope. If the obvious line fails, see if there isn't some other way you can squeeze out the necessary tricks.

It is not easy for South to stay out of slam once his partner has opened the bidding, even though he is void in opener's suit. Not that the slam is all that bad, as South proved.

Since he could not lead an unbid suit, badly as he may have wanted to, West chose to attack with a heart. Declarer saw at once that if trumps split evenly, he could almost claim his contract. A priori, however, that was against the odds. Another hope was that Q-J of clubs were bare.

There was no point in delaying matters. Declarer won the opening lead in hand, cashed another high heart and ruffed a heart. Next, he drew three rounds of trumps. One heart died when East discarded a diamond. Declarer crossed to the king of clubs, and another chance went by the boards when no honor appeared.

There was still one last possibility—that the player with the long trump also started with exactly four hearts and three diamonds. Declarer discarded a club on the ace of diamonds and ruffed a diamond. The king of clubs served as the entry for another diamond ruff. When West followed to the queen of hearts, the contract was home. Declarer had scored three trump tricks and three ruffs, three hearts, two clubs and a diamond. The defender's club and trump trick had been telescoped into one!
