Polls Show Bentsen Wins, But Quayle Says 'Great'

By Terence Hunt
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Michael Dukakis and George Bush, picking up where their understudies left off, are arguing about the fitness of their running mates for the nation's highest office after a vice presidential debate that focused on doubts about Dan Quayle's background and qualifications.

Democrats hoped the debate had dramatized their contention that Quayle was too inexperienced to step into the presidency on a moment's notice and they drew cheer from the first flash poll suggesting much of the public was going along with that view.

In the only debate scheduled between the two of them, Quayle and Lloyd Bentsen clashed over protecting the environment, Social Security, Contra aid, taxes and campaign reform.

An ABC News poll rated Bentsen the clear winner. Six debate judges who scored the encounter for The Associated Press also picked Bentsen unanimously as the victor.

Nevertheless, Republican Quayle said he did "great" in his prime-time encounter with Lloyd Bentsen. Democrat Bentsen said, "I think I did fine and I enjoyed it. I had fun."

In a 90-minute meeting where neither candidate made any big mistakes, the most electric moment came when the boyish-looking, 41-year-old Quayle was defending his qualifications and said he had as much experience as John F. Kennedy when he sought the presidency.

It was a comparison he has made often.

Bentsen shot back, "Senator, I served with Jack Kennedy. I knew Jack Kennedy, Jack Kennedy was a friend of mine. Senator, you're no Jack Kennedy."

With an icy stare, Quayle interrupted to say, "That was really uncalled for, senator." Bentsen replied, "You are the one that was making the comparison, senator ...

and I'm the one who knew him well."

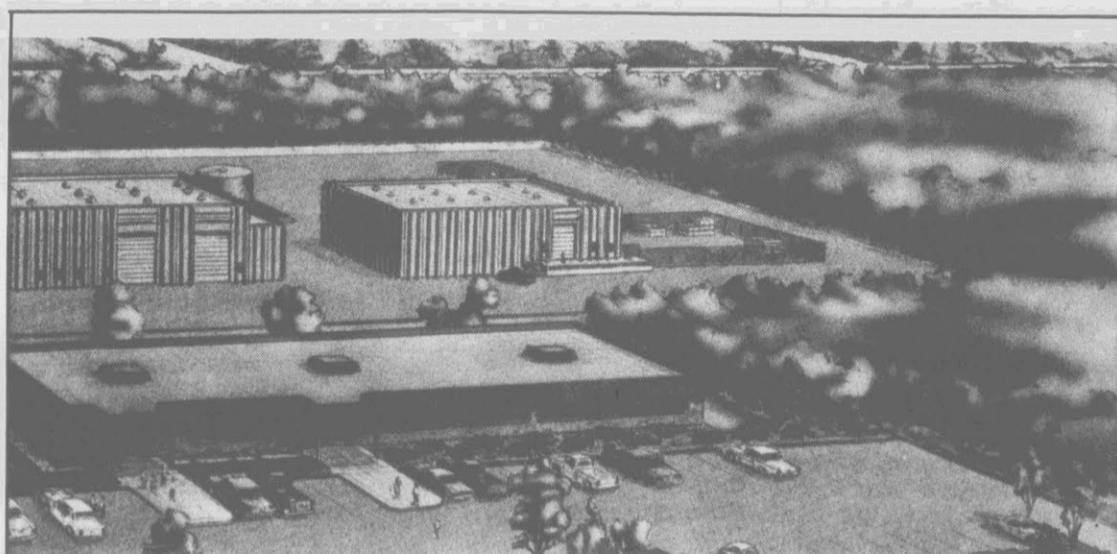

Bush pollster Robert Teeter said today that Bentsen had made "a clever remark," but he added, "While it may have been a memorable line for a day or two, it will not really dominate the debate."

Democrats suggested that Quayle appeared to be reciting prepared remarks throughout the debate — New York Gov. Mario Cuomo said today Quayle "looked like Johnny Carson playing Karnac; he started with the answers and looked for the questions" — and that he seemed unusually subdued.

James A. Baker III, Bush's campaign chairman, acknowledged Quayle didn't show the exuberance he shows on the stump, "but then of course one of the knocks people are putting on Senator Quayle is that he's not substantive enough or serious enough or frankly mature enough, and I certainly thought he came across on all those counts last night."

The Selling Of A Waste Dump

By Greg Laudick
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Representatives from the two companies involved in the bidding process to build and operate a low-level radioactive waste disposal site in the state took their proposals for the project to the public Wednesday.

Officials from the two firms, Westinghouse Electric Corp. and Chem-Nuclear Systems Inc., attempted to convince approximately 60 people at the Willis Building that their firms could do a better job of offering greater safety and experience relating to the planned facility.

Chem-Nuclear proposed a total cost of $41.8 million, all of which would be paid by the generators of the waste.

Westinghouse projected a total cost for the facility of $34.7 million.

Officials of both companies said operating the facility would offer various benefits to the community selected to host the waste site.

The presentation, sponsored by the N.C. Low-Level Radioactive Waste Management Authority, was the first of three to be conducted in locations across the state.

The presentations are part of the

MIA Team Finds Human Remains Near Wreckage Two Tar Heels Arrested

HANOI, Vietnam (AP) — A team of U.S. and Vietnamese investigators found two sets of human remains and debris from a wrecked aircraft during an unprecedented search for the airmen missing in the Vietnam war, officials say.

Four Americans, meanwhile, floated dollar bills down the Mekong River in Laos today to spread news of a $2.4 million reward for prisoners of war they say still may be alive.

The group also said it would direct a remote control toy boat to the Laotian shore to carry offers of the reward.

Two other Americans were arrested on a similar mission and were believed still being held Wednesday by authorities in Laos.

One set of remains located by the U.S.-Vietnamese search team was found at the Lang Son province bordering China with the remains of Vietnamese, and probably is not American, U.S. investigators said.

But Bill Bell, a U.S. team leader, said searchers found areas where other remains might be buried and recovered pieces of aircraft wreckage. They finished their eight-day search through five provinces near Hanoi on Tuesday.

The U.S. specialists left Wednesday for Bangkok, Thailand, but planned to return to Hanoi on Friday to discuss their findings and the possibility of more joint work, including excavations of crash sites.

The teams trekked through steep mountains in pouring monsoon rains to reach sites where six airmen were shot down during the war, which ended in 1975.

Villagers led investigators to two sets of remains, in Lang Son and Ha Nam Ninh provinces, said Nguyen Can, head of Vietnam's Office For Seeking Missing Personnel.

Can said the remains will be given

DOE Cites Safety Loss At Savannah

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — The Savannah River Plant's isolated management undermines safety and deviates from "practices common to well-run nuclear plants," an internal Department of Energy report concludes.

The 50-page draft report obtained by The State in Columbia and outlined in today's editions is among the most critical to date of the way DOE and its prime contractor, Du Pont, manage the only U.S. facility that produces weapons-grade plutonium and tritium.

It recommends a host of changes to improve safety at the aging facility and to counteract "less than precise and out-of-date operating practices."

Meanwhile, SRP officials blamed equipment failure for the release of less than .01 millirems of tritium gas from the plant at 7:40 a.m. today. Plant spokeswoman Becky Craft said a routine chest X-Ray totals about 20 millirems, and no employees at the work site were evacuated.

"The tritium... was released into the atmosphere from the facility's stack," a statement issued by the plant's management said. "The accidental release occurred as the result of equipment failure during

Large Turnout Could Be Boost For Garrett

By John Bare
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

If voting in the second primary runoff for a Pitt County commissioner seat holds along racial lines — as one candidate claims it did in the first runoff — a strong showing from black voters could ensure victory for D.D. Garrett.

Voters in Consolidated District A will have a chance to return to the polls Tuesday for a second primary runoff, as Garrett of Greenville and James H. Dupree of Bethel look to settle a battle that began more than five months ago.

Garrett, who is black, lost the May 3 primary, but he apparently won the May 31 runoff against Dupree, who is white, by two votes. But after hearing evidence that ineligible voters participated in the all-Democratic runoff, the state Board of Elections ordered the new runoff.

Garrett claimed black and white voters supported the candidate of their color, and he has said the voting will likely be along racial lines again Tuesday. And Garrett claims he will have the advantage.

If the turnout is high for both sides, records from the Pitt County Board of Elections show Garrett could win big: there are more than twice as many registered black Democrats as registered white Democrats in District A.

In seven of the 10 precincts in District A there are more black registered Democrats than white, according to election records. In all, there are 6,767 black Democrats and

Racing Monkeys Get The Banana

By Cherie Evans
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

An inquisitive fairgoer or a fan of horse racing may wonder about the act called "Banana Derby" featured at the Pitt County Fair this year.

After all, the names of horse derbies mean something. The Kentucky Derby is in Kentucky, the English Derby is in England, the Irish Derby is in Ireland — so what's the Banana Derby about?

Monkeys.

The jockeys in this animal act are stump-tailed macaque monkeys, each weighing 25 pounds — except for Too Fat Pat. She weighs in at about 30 pounds.

Instead of cash winnings and roses, the winners receive a bucket of oats and bananas. Otherwise the Banana Derby is much like any other horse race.

At the start of the event, the jockeys parade on their ponies around the 80-foot oval track winning the hearts of curious onlookers. Once the march is complete, they line up in the starting gates, the bell rings and they're off.

Susie Sitten Tight riding Racey Tracy takes the lead, followed closely by Gi Gi Garcia on Johnny On The Spot. Bringing up the rear is Too Fat Pat on Jetaway Julie.

But, as they come down the final stretch, Too Fat Pat throws her weight around and makes her move from the rear of the pack. It's Too Fat Pat on Jetaway Julie winning in an upset victory.

The Banana Derby is in its first year on the fair circuit, the brainchild of Patty Rivers of the Rivers family in Ocala, Fla. The family has been known for animal acts on the fair circuit for 40 years, said Piper Chadwich, a worker of the show.

Early Polls List Bentsen As Clear Winner In Debate With Quayle

Teeter commented on "CBS This Morning," Cuomo on NBC's "Today," and Baker on ABC's "Good Morning America."
After the debate, Dukakis seized on the question of competence, telling a Boston rally, "The most important qualification for the vice president is that he's ready at a moment's notice to assume the presidency of the United States. Tonight Lloyd Bentsen demonstrated that he was the only one on that stage who's ready."

In Fort Worth, Texas, Vice President Bush said Quayle hit a "home run" right from the start of the debate and wasn't fazed by the questions about his fitness.
Bush said that Quayle "under tremendous pressure ... came through with flying colors. Now people can see what I've seen all along."

With just 33 days remaining before the election, Bentsen was teaming up with Dukakis today at a rally in Longview, Texas. Quayle was heading for stops in Missouri, Florida and Tennessee, while Bush campaigned separately in Texas and Arkansas.
The third and final debate of the campaign will be held late next week in Los Angeles when Dukakis and Bush square off for the second, and last, time.

In a presidential race that is virtually a tossup at this point, polls indicate that Quayle is costing Bush support, with many voters uneasy about his readiness for high office.
It was the first question put to Quayle on Wednesday night, and he replied, "I have more experience than others that have sought the of-vice of vice president." He said that on national security and arms control, education and jobs and the deficit, "I have more experience than does the governor of Massachusetts."

The 67-year-old Bentsen was never challenged on his qualifications, but he pointed out that he had served in combat, was a businessman and a farmer as well as a senator.
"What we are looking at today is trying to judge once again the breadth of experience and the maturity of someone taking on this kind of a task," Bentsen said.

Bentsen accused the Republicans of attempting to slash Social Security and said Quayle voted eight times to cut benefits. Quayle accused him of distorting the record and said the Democrats were trying "to scare the older people of this country."

Long Walk

Children & Highways Don't Mix

A child has no business on the shoulder of a busy highway.

Even with an adult nearby, that's a dangerous spot for a youngster. And it's certainly no place for an unsupervised kid to walk to school.

Arbitrary state regulations should not force students — primary and elementary age students — to walk 1½ miles from their homes to Belvoir School. These regulations place the children in peril and conflict with the concept of providing safe transportation for students. The Pitt school board is correct to ask North Carolina to exempt its rule and provide bus service for the families whose youngsters must navigate N.C. 33 and state roads 1417 and 1414 to get to school.

An early-morning walk down these roads Wednesday demonstrated the route students must take to and from school is not easy even for an adult. The shoulders of the state roads are narrow, and at the hour school takes in, traffic is steady and frenzied. On N.C. 33, the shoulder is better, but large trucks whiz by at highway speeds. Their force can alter the stride of a grown-up. It could topple a young child. Or at the least, frighten them substantially. The kids might easily be so rattled by the time they reach school they couldn't concentrate on learning.

If parents were always available to drop kids off at school and pick them up, the students' predicament would be less severe. But many parents have jobs, and their ability to safely transport kids to school is constrained by workaday hours. That leaves the children at the mercy of drivers, some careful, some not-so-careful, as they make their way toward the public education to which they are entitled.

The state, when it began providing transportation for public school students, did so with a commitment to safety. Now policies have diminished this obligation. Yes, there is a need for regulations. Lines have to be drawn. But there are often strong arguments for exceptions to these rules. For the children who must tip-toe along slender road shoulders and flinch when cars fly by, there can be no better reason than protection and propriety.

The county should be firm in its fight for bus transportation for these youngsters. The state must be made to feel the dilemma of a child, still-startled by roaring traffic, trying to learn. Both entities should act now, before a tragedy occurs.

Public Forum

To the editor:

North Carolina law states that the possession of a lottery ticket is a misdemeanor and carries a maximum fine of $2000 and six months in prison. State officials say the law is being strictly enforced, especially now that the state of Virginia had a lottery go into effect recently.

A state lottery would benefit everyone, especially the state. I believe the residents of North Carolina should protest such a ridiculous law.

I believe that the legislators should put the matter of whether North Carolina has a lottery to improve its roads or enhance the educational opportunity of its children to a vote of the people. And I believe that the legislators should rescind the law that prohibits North Carolinians from participating in the lotteries of other states.

To the editor:

Even in a presidential election dominated by carefully controlled television commercials bits of the truth have a way of reaching the American public. The recent "debate" at Wake Forest University was skillfully managed, but viewers had the opportunity to see the meanness behind George Bush's smiling face.

Despite his claim to want a "gentler America," the vice president twice attacked not his opponent but the American people. First, when he called for criminal penalties for women who choose to have abortions, Bush declared that millions of Americans were criminals for following their consciences. Second, when he mocked the accent of people from Massachusetts, Bush demonstrated a kind of bigotry that has no place in American politics. Do only those who believe, sound, and think like George Bush have a place in his gentle America?

Perhaps if the vice president would unwrap himself from the American flag he would see that this country works best when its citizens and leaders recognize and respect the diversity of its people.

JFK Lifeline Leaves Quayle Dangling

OMAHA, Nebraska — The ghost of John F. Kennedy came alive Wednesday night in one of the most dramatic moments of the 1988 campaign — invoked by Indiana Sen. Dan Quayle as he struggled to show his qualifications for being a heart-beat away from the presidency and then thrown back in his face by his rival, Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen.

As a result, the "Quayle factor" in the 1988 presidential race now is charged with the emotions of America's last hero-president, and its impact on the outcome Nov. 8 could be all the greater.

Republicans here are hoping the voters will agree with them that Democratic vice presidential nominee Bentsen's remark was a "cheap shot" at a young man who had his hands full fending off an aggressive panel of press questioners.

Democrats said they think the comparison — which Republican vice presidential nominee Quayle has used on the stump — drove home to voters already worried about Quayle's qualifications that their concerns are all too well-justified.

Whichever proves correct, there can be no doubt that one of the indelible moments of an otherwise lackluster campaign came an hour into the 90-minute debate when Quayle was asked for the third time what, exactly, he would do if he had to assume the duties of the presidency.

His previous answers, as cruelly summarized by Susan Estrich, campaign manager for Democratic presidential nominee Michael S. Dukakis, had been that "he would say a prayer, call a meeting and know all the Cabinet members' names so they wouldn't need name tags."

The 41-year-old Republican took refuge in the comparison he has often used on the stump, saying his 12 years in Congress showed he had as much to recommend him "as Jack Kennedy had when he sought the presidency."

Dropping the avuncular manner he had employed through most of the debate, the 67-year-old Texas Democrat at the adjoining lectern swung a hard punch: "Senator," he said, "I served with Jack Kennedy. I knew Jack Kennedy. Jack Kennedy was a friend of mine. Senator, you're no Jack Kennedy."

Quayle, stony-faced, said, "That was really uncalled for, senator." "You're the one who made the comparison," Bentsen shot back. "And... I did not think the comparison was well-taken."

Senate colleagues of the two men who flooded the press room after the debate took predictably partisan views of the exchange.

"Quayle knocked himself out," said Sen. Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn.

David Broder

"An unfair shot," said Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., who had played Bentsen in Quayle's rehearsals.

The important verdict is the one from the living rooms, and separate groups of voters in Missouri and New Jersey who watched the debate with Washington Post reporters said their immediate reactions to Quayle's performance were highly negative. Several of the voters said the Indiana senator's presence on the GOP ticket is likely to cost GOP presidential nominee George Bush their vote.

An ABC poll of 637 registered voters who watched the debate said Bentsen won by 51 to 27 percent, with 22 percent calling it a tie. Asked whether Bentsen was qualified to be president, 87 percent said yes, 12 percent no. Asked the same of Quayle, the results were 48 percent yes, 49 percent no. A similar poll taken the night of the first presidential candidates' debate suggested Dukakis had done better than polls taken several days later.

day night shared that assumption, focusing their questions about "qualifications" almost exclusively on Quayle.

Quayle encouraged a possible sympathy reaction among viewers by calling himself "the most investigated person ever to seek this office," invoking memories of the journalistic firestorm that greeted his selection in August and then zeroed in on his entry into the National Guard and his academic record.

Quayle did nothing to clear up either subject Wednesday night, but Bentsen did not press him.

Instead, the veteran Texas politician ticked off point after point — largely un rebutted by Quayle — designed to raise doubts about Quayle among the blue-collar Democrats and swing voters who hold the election balance.

He worked over Quayle's Senate votes against veterans benefits, child nutrition programs, and environmental measures as assiduously as Quayle went after Dukakis' actions as governor of Massachusetts.

Republicans said afterward that Quayle had done all that they hoped in reminding voters that Bentsen was at odds with his more liberal ticket-leader on such issues as aid to the Nicaraguan contras, the death penalty and gun control. Richard G. Darman, the former Reagan administration official who was part of ner pharmacist, with a store of experience as deep as his baritone voice, Quayle looked like the senior class president of his high school or college.

His first answers were clearly right out of the briefing book, and the television lights, glinting in the corners of his bright blue eyes, enhanced the sense that he was reciting from memory. As the debate went on, he relaxed a bit, but his earnest expression and rigid posture were more reminiscent of the "ice man" stance of Dukakis which apparently bothered many viewers of the first presidential debate.

Quayle also was disadvantaged by the vocal derision of the Democrats in the audience, who ignored moderator Judy Woodruff's pleas and hooted loudly at such assertions as Quayle's boast that "I have a very strong record on environmental issues."

In the end, however, Quayle managed to turn that form of heckling back against the Democrats, saying that the Dukakis "supporters sneer" when he quoted his grandmother's advice that "you can do anything you want to, if you just set your mind to it, and go to work." "They sneer at common-sense advice, midwestern advice."

But this was not so much a debate about issues or assertions as it was a test of Quayle's ability to present himself as a plausible standby for the presidency.

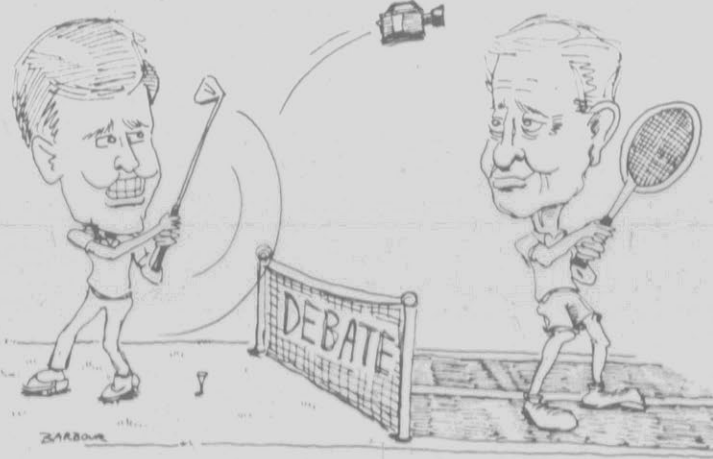

Bentsen never faced that question, though he was no better known to the public outside Texas than Quayle was to non-Hoosiers when he was named. Bentsen had a Senate committee chairmanship, three full terms of State service, a successful business career, and the silver hair, weathered skin and canny expression that spoke to his experience.

Packwood said Quayle passed the test by showing "he knew the issues and could take the pressure of pretty relentless questioning."

But he had difficulty with a question asked three different times about what he would do if fate suddenly cast him into the presidency. "I'm prepared," Quayle insisted, but the reporters kept asking as if they were not quite convinced.

The third time Quayle decided to reach out to JFK as his lifeline — only to see Bentsen swing a verbal axe at his line of support.

The reaction here was that the intensity of the exchange over Kennedy — exceeding anything in the earlier debate between presidential rivals Bush and Dukakis — maintains a focus on Quayle that so far has been an unwelcome intrusion in the carefully scripted Bush campaign.

Pre-debate polls showed that voters who have an opinion on the subject expressed a clear preference for Bentsen over Quayle and rated the Texan far better qualified than the Hoosier to take over — if.

Clearly, the press panel Wednesday the Quayle briefing team, said Bentsen "abandoned any effort to defend Dukakis' positions" on these issues. "He was protecting Lloyd Bentsen's position in the Texas Senate race, not his partner, and that was fine with us," Darman said.

But the larger question, going into the debate, was whether Quayle would appear strong and self-confident enough to erase the doubts voters have been expressing.

Physical impressions worked against him. While Bentsen looked like the stereotypical "good old doc," the reliable, white-haired cor-

Quayle Withstands Tough Test But Democrats Apply Fresh Heat

Walter Mears

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dan Quayle withstood his mid-term exam, but the Democrats aren't relenting in their campaign to flunk the Republican vice presidential nominee.

In 90 minutes of pressurized debate with Democrat Lloyd Bentsen, Quayle held his own. There were no significant blunders by either man in the running mate debate. An ABC News poll immediately after the debate found 51 percent thought Bentsen had won, 27 percent said Quayle, and 22 percent thought it a tie. The margin of error in the survey of 637 people was 4.5 percentage points.

Republican Quayle faced the more difficult debate assignment because he is the candidate found by public opinion polls to be a drag on his ticket. He has come under constant campaign attack. And he faced the tougher set of sometimes repetitive debate questions.

Bentsen fills a more traditional No. 2 role. He isn't an issue. He is, rather, a bridge between Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis and his party's more conservative branch.

At the start of the Omaha, Neb., debate, Quayle was asked to defend his credentials and qualifications for the vice presidency and, if need be, the presidency itself. That meshed with the theme Bentsen came to stress — that the debate really dealt with the presidency itself, and whether he or Quayle is the better man to take on the job if necessary.

He and Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis argue every day that the answer on Quayle is no. And the debate had hardly ended before Dukakis repeated that theme, telling a Boston rally that Bentsen had proved again he could take over the presidency if he has to, while Quayle could not.

That points to a campaign theme that is sure to be part of the Democratic litany until Nov. 8. Post-debate comments, predictably, fit that pattern.

Neither scored a knockout, but Lloyd Bentsen looked and sounded more presidential," said Democratic Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois, a former candidate for his party's prize.

Quayle clearly had done his homework for the debate test. When the first questioner recited criticism of his military and academic records, and disparaging comments by Republicans, Quayle said the question behind it all was of his qualifications to be vice president "and in the case of tragedy, whether I'm qualified to be president."

The Indiana senator, 41, said it isn't a question of age but of accomplishments and experience, insisted that he has both, especially on national security, jobs and education, and the federal budget.

"On each one of those issues I have more experience than does the governor of Massachusetts," he said. And repeatedly, "I am prepared ... to lead this country" if the GOP ticket wins and that becomes necessary.

Quayle stuck to that line all night.

The panel of questioners, three television and one print journalist, went back to the topic repeatedly, three times by asking what first step Quayle would take if he ever became president. That's an unanswerable question, since no vice president could know what he'd do without knowing the circumstances of his succession. It was not asked of Bentsen.

Each time, Quayle went back to his formula, claiming strength on the big three issues.

But he varied it enough to trigger the debate's sharpest exchange, saying that he has as much experience now as John F. Kennedy had when he ran for president.

"Senator, I served with Jack Kennedy. I knew Jack Kennedy, Jack Kennedy was a friend of mine," said Bentsen. "Senator, you're no Jack Kennedy."

"That was really uncalled for, senator," an angry Quayle retorted.

Kennedy had served 14 years in Congress, eight in the Senate before he became president in 1960. Quayle has been a senator for eight years, and served four in the House.

Bentsen took a share of sharp questions, on his political fund-raising tactics and also about his differences with Dukakis on such topics as aid to the Nicaraguan Contras, the death penalty and gun control. The Texas senator favors the first two, opposes gun control. Dukakis holds opposite positions. Bentsen said they agree on most issues, then changed the subject.

Quayle tried to make an issue of that, saying he wouldn't try to defend a liberal like Dukakis, either.

But he remained the focus. And he is certain to remain a prime target in the five weeks until election day.

No Drooling, But Success Debatable

Paul West

WASHINGTON — Dan Quayle didn't drool. He didn't commit a fatal gaffe. And when last night's sometimes brutal vice-presidential debate ended, he even managed a smile.

By those standards, his showing before a national television audience was a success and seems unlikely to damage Republican chances in next month's election. If, as some political analysts had suggested, the only test he had to meet was to stand on the same stage with Sen. Lloyd Bentsen for 90 minutes, he probably got out with a gentleman's C.

But the Indiana senator's uneven performance almost certainly will keep alive questions and doubts that have followed him and Vice President George Bush almost from the moment he was chosen for the 1988 Republican ticket.

Quayle appeared at times defensive and confused by the questions from a panel of reporters and the attacks by his Democratic rival, Bentsen. Quayle often retreated quickly into prepared responses that largely ignored the questions asked.

Rather than projecting an image of strength, he sometimes appeared tentative and ill at ease. At the close of the debate, Quayle began his final, two-minute statement with a deep, audible sigh that may have generated sympathy or provoked fresh concern, depending on the viewer's leanings.

Bentsen, in what will surely go down as one of the memorable moments of this year's campaign, appeared to bring Quayle up short when he took umbrage at his 41-year-old counterpart's comparison between himself and the young John F. Kennedy.

"Senator, you're no Jack Kennedy," Bentsen said, glaring.

Quayle replied, weakly, "That was really uncalled for, senator."

"You're the one who made the comparison, senator," Bentsen said dismissively, in an encounter that better than any other dramatized the gap in age and experience between the two men.

A large segment of the electorate, polls indicate, tuned in Wednesday night with serious doubts about the capacity of Quayle, the first baby boomer on a national ticket, to step into the presidency if necessary.

Four times Quayle was offered a chance to put those fears to rest, as he was repeatedly asked to defend his qualifications and explain what he would do if fate were to thrust him into the nation's highest office.

The first time the question arose, Quayle said he would "say a prayer for myself and for the country," then assemble Bush's advisers "and talk." Offered repeated opportunities to explain further, he fell back on a prepared answer that contrasted his years of experience with past vice presidential nominees and with Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis.

Bentsen, in his replies, also sought to focus the debate on Quayle's qualifications to be president, using phrases like "experienced, tempered, capable leadership" to underscore his point.

Decked out in aviator glasses, the Texas senator still looked every bit his 67 years. Somewhat stiff at the outset, he managed to strike a more statesmanlike pose than his younger rival and probably won the encounter on debating points. But such things rarely matter in political debates of this sort.

While Bentsen was a bit halting at times and tried to duck questions about his differences with his own running mate and his $10,000 "breakfast club," the focus of the evening was squarely on Quayle.

The Indianan got off to a good start, using his answers to pound away at the Bush campaign's central theme: that Dukakis' liberal leanings are out of the political mainstream of the country.

Looking into the camera, he tried to reassure those with questions about his qualifications by listing pieces of legislation he had worked to pass and reciting defense jargon, such as "megatonnage, throw-weight and encryption" to bolster his credentials as an arms-control specialist.

He recovered smartly when the loudly pro-Bentsen portion of the audience jeered one of his answers about America's image in the world.

"Some of Sen. Bentsen's supporters laugh at that," he said, deftly reinforcing his argument against the Democratic ticket. "I can tell you that the American people think the United States is the envy of the world." The Quayle partisans in the crowd responded with strong applause.

But he also stumbled badly, as when NBC anchorman Tom Brokaw asked him about his votes to cut aid to poor children. "The biggest thing we have done for poverty in America," Quayle responded, is to get the poor "off the payroll, off the taxpaying payroll." He meant tax rolls.

Bush strategists had warned that, if Quayle performed poorly Wednesday night, they were prepared to revive a tactic that helped them stop the political bleeding when questions were raised in August about his service in the National Guard: attack the reporters for unfairly attacking Quayle.

Near the end of the hour-and-a-half, Quayle fired what may have been the first volley in that coming GOP fusillade.

"I am and I stand before you tonight as the most investigated person to seek public office," he said, perhaps demonstrating some of the hyperbole that panelist Jon Margolis of the Chicago Tribune had tried to question him about. Following the event, Bush campaign aides reacted sharply to the panel's often tough questioning of Quayle.

"It's obvious that they were trying to badger him," said David Prosseri, the Quayle campaign press secretary. He declined to predict how voters would react, however.

Bush campaign manager Lee Atwater termed Bentsen's remark about Kennedy "a cheap shot" and said that repeated attention to Quayle's experience "was over-worked tonight."

Not surprisingly, both sides claimed victory, with Dukakis campaign manager Susan Estrich declaring: "This was a very good night for us. Dan Quayle is a bigger problem for George Bush now than he was 90 minutes ago."

Both men appeared well-prepared, handling the questions without a serious blunder. Each used the event to promote his party's presidential nominee, and to take subtle jabs at his opponent.

Bentsen said he had "no quarrel with Sen. Quayle's military record," while repeatedly noting his own service in World War II as a bomber pilot. Quayle served in the Indiana National Guard during the Vietnam era.

Quayle used a question about his environmental views to get in a dig at Dukakis' problems in cleaning up Boston Harbor. He also rebutted strongly Bentsen's charge that he had voted to cut Social Security eight times by pointing out that both Bentsen and Dukakis had adopted similar positions themselves.

Forced to defend his receipt of more contributions from special-interest political action committees than any other senator this year, Bentsen quickly turned the issue on Quayle. Quayle, Bentsen noted, had collected over a quarter-million dollars in honoraria for speeches and public appearances.

Bentsen, who refuses to accept honoraria, reminded Quayle that "You could spend it on golf club dues." It was a subtle jab at the Republican Party's "country club" image from a Democrat who himself ranks as one of the wealthiest senators.

Judge Rejects GOP Effort To Block Judicial Elections

RALEIGH (AP) — A federal judge has rejected the state Republican Party's attempt to stop the November election of seven Superior Court judges, saying he did not know whether the party ultimately would win its suit challenging statewide judicial elections.

The Republicans, who claim that statewide elections keep GOP candidates from winning, had asked U.S. District Judge James C. Fox to enter a preliminary injunction to stop the statewide election of judges for seven districts and to order district elections there instead.

The Republicans said those were the districts where Republican candidates had a good chance of winning if the elections were by district. They included districts in Wake, Guilford, Forsyth, Alexander, Davidson, Davie and Iredell counties.

Marshall Hurley, a GOP attorney, said in a telephone interview from his Greensboro office Wednesday that he had not read the decision. After being read excerpts, however, he said, "The first and most significant thing that strikes me as I now understand it, is that Judge Fox ... does not foreclose ultimate success by the Republican Party" in the lawsuit.

"The (upcoming) elections will repeat the same pattern of discrimination against Republicans that we've seen for the last 86 years," Hurley said. No Republican has been elected a Superior Court judge in this century.

He said he "certainly wouldn't rule out" an appeal of the order to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, Va., before the November election. The decision whether to appeal will not be made until the order is reviewed, Hurley said.

In denying the injunction, which would have been an interim order pending the suit's outcome, Judge Fox, a Republican, said he took four factors into account:

—The suit raised such "a multitude of issues" that he was unable to tell whether the Republicans were likely to win the case when it is tried. The central legal issue is whether the state must elect judges by district to give a political group the opportunity to elect candidates of its choice, Judge Fox wrote.

"As plaintiff's counsel suggested, the issue in this case is on the cutting edge of recognition of the rights of groups under the Constitution," the judge wrote. "At this time the court perceives the likelihood of plaintiff's success to be imperceptible."

—The Republican Party would not be irreparably injured by the denial of the injunction. If the party wins its suit, "appropriate relief can be fashioned," Fox wrote.

—Plaintiffs identify no urgency requiring immediate resolution, other than their desire, not for partisan judges, but for the opportunity to elect judges possessing a judicial philosophy compatible to their own. Whether judicial philosophy will manifest itself at all, and if so, the nature and immediacy of such manifestation to the benefit of plaintiffs is not at all discernible."

—County elections boards already have planned and incurred expenses for the elections, and their efforts would be wasted by delay. A second, district-wide election would inconvenience local officials and throw legal provisions on elections into disarray, Fox wrote.

—The public has an interest in holding the elections as scheduled.

"If the election were enjoined, ... some confusion on the part of the public could certainly arise as to the judicial authority of judges holding over beyond their existent term," Fox wrote. Also, he said, some voters already have cast absentee ballots.

"Furthermore, any alternative method of election hastily fashioned would not provide an opportunity to candidates to determine their interest in running, their chances of winning or their ability to organize campaigns," he wrote.

N.Y. Police Holding Five On Gun Charges

NEW YORK (AP) — Police say they arrested five North Carolina men in Manhattan and charged them with possession of more than 20 guns, some of which had been reported stolen.

Plainclothes officers observed the five men in a car at Broadway and 40th Street at around 1:30 a.m. today "acting suspiciously," said a police spokesman, Sgt. Edward Burns.

The car then ran a red light, "and as the officers approached the car, they noticed a weapon on the back seat," he said.

A search of the car and its occupants turned up two submachine guns, five automatic rifles, 12 revolvers and four automatic pistols, Burns said.

Several of the guns had been reported stolen in North Carolina, he said.

Those arrested, who are all from Jacksonville, N.C., were Reginald Beatty, 21; Andrae Arnold, 20; William Sidberry, 18; Thomas Hayes, 17, and James Boswell, 17.

All were charged with criminal possession of weapons, criminal possession of stolen property and a traffic violation for running the red light, Burns said.

Gov. Martin displays super collider plaque as ex-UNC Chief Bill Friday looks on

State Has Last Scheduled Pitch For Collider Project

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin has made his last scheduled pitch to lure the Superconducting Super Collider to North Carolina, rejecting reports that the state's prospects are dimming.

"North Carolina has as good a chance as anybody," Martin told reporters after meeting for 90 minutes Wednesday with U.S. Energy Secretary John Herrington.

Martin and a dozen other state leaders made their final formal presentation for the project, just as leaders of the other six contending states have done in recent days.

The Energy Department is scheduled to select a site for the $4.4 billion project in late November, and President Reagan will decide whether to approve the choice in December or January.

Published reports have suggested that Illinois and Texas are the leading contenders for the super collider. Physicist Paul Frampton, North Carolina's former project director, said last month that the state's chances were "about 2 percent," although other physicists disagreed.

"There are lots of rumors floating around" regarding which state has the inside track, Martin said after the meeting.

"We don't know whether some of those rumors come from some of the states that would seem to be favored by them, or whether they're coming from other sources. ... We believe we're in the top three," Martin said.

Studies say the super collider would generate 9,000 new jobs in North Carolina, along with increased traffic and congestion in Durham, Person and Granville counties, where the facility would be located.

Martin said he told Herrington that local opposition to the project has subsided somewhat because the state has assured area residents that the super collider would create relatively little pollution and require comparatively little condemnation of private lands.

Martin said the state would provide funds to hire 60 new professors specializing in high-energy physics at public and private colleges to take advantage of the proton-smashing facility if North Carolina is chosen.

He disagreed with speculation that Texas has a particularly good chance because it is the home of several high-ranking politicians, including the speaker of the U.S. House and Vice President George Bush.

Herrington "reassured us that power politics would not be involved in the selection," Martin said. North Carolina's congressional delegation is poised to fight for the needed funding in a somewhat skeptical Congress, even though the state has only one member — Rep. Bill Hefner of Concord — on the important House Appropriations Committee, Martin said.

Those meeting with the governor and Herrington included Sens. Jesse Helms and Terry Sanford; Reps. Hefner, David Price, Tim Valentine, and Alex McMillan; former University of North Carolina President William Friday; Duke University Chancellor William Anlyan; N.C. Central University Chancellor Tyronea Richmond and Duke Power Co. chairman William Lee.

Report Says Illiteracy's Cost Rising

WASHINGTON (AP) — Education in the South has improved, but the costs of illiteracy continue to climb in the region because of increasing competition from low-wage labor in the Third World, a new report says.

"The South's response to the literacy problem is seriously inadequate," says the report, which was written by MDC Inc., a non-profit research group based in Chapel Hill.

"Barely 1 million of the 18.7 million adults in the South without high school credentials are in the process of upgrading their literacy skills and seeking a high school degree or equivalency," the report says.

Congress must help local governments if the situation is to improve, says the report, which was conducted for the Sunbelt Institute. The institute is a bipartisan, Washington-based organization of government leaders from the South and Southwest.

The effort was co-chaired by Rep. David Price, D-N.C., who already is touting it as he campaigns for re-election next month.

The report, obtained by The Raleigh Times, concludes that "educational attainment in the South has improved substantially over the course of this century," but "the costs of inadequate literacy in the South continue to mount — the result of rising skill demands brought on by automation and increasing competition from low wage labor in the Third World."

Spending more money on existing programs is not the answer, the report says. Rather, it says, the federal government must:

—Improve existing adult literacy programs by providing more and better "data, program research, training, effective use of technology, support for alternative literacy providers and accountability."

—Promote more public-private literacy programs in the workplace.

—Heighten public awareness of the problem, which will result in greater financial support.

The report says head counts of illiterate adults are virtually impossible, partly because "America has no standard definition of literacy."

Rand Says Agitated Over Report

RALEIGH (AP) — Tony Rand, the Democratic nominee for lieutenant governor, says an allegation by a supporter of Republican Jim Gardner that Rand withheld evidence in a drug probe 10 years ago is "beneath contempt."

"What we have here is an attempt to use the press to direct attention away from Jim Gardner's campaign — a campaign that has no issues, no record of achievement and no sense of values, a campaign that is morally bankrupt," Rand said Wednesday, so agitated at times that he had trouble speaking.

But Gardner's campaign manager, Paul Richardson, said former Assistant U.S. Attorney Herman Gaskins acted on his own and was not involved with the campaign.

"I had to send for a copy of his statement to see what he was talking about," Richardson said. "We had nothing to do with it."

Rand, a state senator and Fayetteville defense attorney, called a news conference outside the Legislative Building shortly after Gaskins made his allegations outside the Federal Building in Raleigh, where he worked from 1976-78.

In 1978, Gaskins said, he learned of an impending shipment of marijuana from Miami to Wilmington. The boat was seized, but members of the smuggling ring were tipped off and fled the Wilmington hotel where they were staying, Gaskins said.

One of the alleged smugglers asked his attorney, Rand, by telephone to close out the account on the room and pay the bill, said Gaskins, now a defense lawyer in Washington, N.C.

Rand said he was too busy to handle the matter and asked another attorney, James L. Nelson of Wilmington, to do it. Nelson, who joined Rand at his news conference, said he went to the hotel, paid the bill and took items the occupants had left behind.

According to court transcripts Gaskins distributed, the items consisted of $76.09 in cash, some socks, cigarettes, a pair of shoes, a dart gun and a citizens' band radio. Nelson said he picked up the items at the hotel desk and never entered the room.

Nelson said a Coast Guard agent later asked for the items but Rand declined to release them until the authorities obtained a court order.

They later did so and were given the items — but not before Gaskins threatened to subpoena Rand to appear before a grand jury. "I said, 'you do what you want to,'" Rand said. "It was obvious that Mr. Gaskins and I didn't get along too well at this point."

He said there was nothing unusual about an attorney taking such actions for a client. "As an attorney, you do what your client asks you to do as long as it's not illegal or unethical," Rand said.

Gaskins said the personal items might have been helpful in pinpointing the smugglers' identity. Rand "became the target of a federal investigation as a possible conspirator or an accessory after the fact in this case," Gaskins said.

A grand jury looked into the matter but the probe was halted after Rand's law partner, U.S. Rep. Charles Rose, talked by telephone with then-U.S. Attorney George Anderson, Gaskins said. Anderson, who also attended Rand's news conference, heatedly denied that Rose had asked him to stop the investigation.

"I resent the fact that he would bring this up at this time to attempt to dishonor the office of the United States Attorney," Anderson said. He said he planned to write Gaskins and demand a retraction.

Democrats hang 'Welcome Quayle' sign in front of their Raleigh headquarters

Martin Will Pass Up Quayle Visit For Two Football Games

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The state Democratic party hung a banner "welcoming" Dan Quayle, and aides to Gov. Jim Martin said the state's top Republican plans to be attending two high school football games when Quayle comes to North Carolina for the first time since becoming the Republican vice presidential nominee.

"I would like to join Senator Quayle and in fact have invited him to join me on Friday," Martin said in a prepared statement Wednesday. "But our schedules simply could not be worked out for us to appear together."

Democrats gloated at the news, saying Martin was afraid to be seen with Quayle because the Indiana senator was a political embarrassment. Martin denied it.

The state Democratic Party hung a banner reading, "North Carolina Democrats Welcome Dan Quayle," outside its state headquarters in Raleigh.

"We feel like he is another good reason to vote for the Democratic ticket," party spokeswoman Margaret Lawton said.

Quayle will attend a late-afternoon rally Friday at North Carolina State University in Raleigh and a private gathering at the Bush state headquarters.

Also Friday, Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis will address a party gathering in Asheville.

Democrats nationwide have attacked Quayle as unqualified to be president if called upon to assume the office. Polls have suggested that most voters view him as less qualified than the Democratic vice presidential nominee, Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen.

It's the second time that Martin, who is seeking reelection, will have failed to appear with a member of the GOP's national ticket.

He did not show up for a George Bush appearance in Charlotte last July, saying his staff had not notified him of it until too late.

Martin's spokesman, Tim Pittman, said the governor expected Democrats to accuse him of ducking the national ticket.

"We're prepared for the onslaught," Pittman said. "But the governor feels that we have a schedule and he's committed to attend these events and he ought to abide by his commitments."

Martin will be in western North Carolina on Friday, beginning the day with a Democrats for Martin breakfast in Asheville and concluding with a high school football game in Elkin. He will be attending a volunteer recognition ceremony in Morganton and a rally in Surry County while Quayle is in Raleigh.

"Every time one of these guys comes to town it's a scheduling problem," said Phil Wells, spokesman for Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, who is running against Martin. "We've got a scheduling problem too, but you can bet we'll be in Asheville on Friday for Mike Dukakis."

Meanwhile, the Rev. Jesse Jackson campaigned for Dukakis at North Carolina Central University, criticizing Bush for his attacks on the American Civil Liberties Union.

"(Joseph) McCarthy used the same approach," Jackson said. "He saw anyone who disagreed with him as subversive. ... Hitler saw Jews as subversive. The FBI saw students as subversive. That approach blocks our civil liberties. ... It is a threat to our progress and growth."

About 200 students registered to vote at the rally in Durham.

In another development, Southern Baptist leaders warned congregations not to distribute a "scorecard" printed by the American Freedom Coalition of North Carolina that ranks Bush and Dukakis.

State's Infant Death Rate Climbs For First Time In Five Years

RALEIGH (AP) — More babies died in their first year of life in North Carolina last year, increasing the state's infant mortality rate for the first time in five years.

"So many people are not getting prenatal care," said David Flaherty, secretary of human resources, at a news conference Wednesday. "Some of it is because they don't have money for it. Some of it is because they don't know how important it is."

The 1987 death rate rose 4.3 percent, from 11.6 to 12.1 deaths per thousand births. The rate for black babies — already almost twice as high as for whites — worsened more dramatically than it did for whites.

There were more births to women who received limited prenatal care, to teen-agers and to women who had less education and were not married. All these factors are associated with increases in premature births and infant deaths.

"We will not get a handle on this problem until all infants and pregnant women receive early and high-quality prenatal and infant health care," Flaherty said.

In 1986, North Carolina had one of the worst infant-mortality rates in the country, ranking 45th among the 50 states. More recent national data are not yet available.

The total number of babies who died before their first birthday in North Carolina was 1,134 in 1987 — 85 more than the previous year. There were 93,481 babies born in the state during 1987.

The increase in infant deaths comes despite a recent expansion of Medicaid benefits to pregnant women. The expansion provided health-care coverage for more pregnant women too poor to afford medical care but previously unable to qualify for Medicaid, the government-funded program that pays medical bills for poor people.

State health officials struggled

Wednesday to explain why fewer women are receiving prenatal care despite the Medicaid expansion. Among the factors they cited:

—Fewer doctors are delivering babies in rural areas. Many family practice doctors have stopped serving prenatal clinics in 21 of the state's 100 counties because of soaring malpractice premiums and the risk of lawsuits associated with complicated deliveries.

—Some low-income, working women may not have health insurance to cover the cost of prenatal visits. Dr. Ron Levine, state health director, said he was hearing anecdotal reports that more women have jobs that do not provide health benefits.

—Some women may not be aware of the importance of prenatal care.

"There were people who had the money that just weren't aware of the significance of it," Flaherty said.

IN THE STATE

Indictment

ST. LOUIS (AP) — A grand jury, acting on information obtained from a sting operation, has indicted an imprisoned North Carolina man accused of concealing nearly $1.4 million in assets from a drug smuggling operation.

J.P. Kiser, 48, of Charlotte, N.C., already imprisoned at Ashland, Ky., could face up to 10 more prison years and $500,000 in fines from the new charges, federal authorities said Wednesday. Information against Kiser was developed through a storefront money-laundering operation known as "Operation Hydra" that was carried out by undercover Internal Revenue Service agents, they said.

Assets forfeited by Kiser as a result of the IRS investigation include more than $600,000 cash, $750,000 from the sale of real estate and $38,000 from the sale of Kiser's Mercedes automobile, the U.S. attorney's office said.

Sheriff Resigns

CAMDEN, N.C. (AP) — Camden County Sheriff R.F. Berry has stepped down after being told to resign or face a grand jury hearing, in the wake of the State Bureau of Investigation probe, officials say.

One deputy also resigned Tuesday, and more are expected, said J.C. Rountree, chairman of the county board of commissioners.

District Attorney H.P. Williams asked Berry to resign after an SBI investigation showed that Berry may have obtained property through false pretenses from Anna Farms, a multi-million-dollar hog operation he had been ordered to guard during bankruptcy proceedings. The Virginian-Pilot and The Ledger-Star reported Wednesday.

The alleged felony carries a three- to 10-year prison term, a fine, or both.

Interstate 40

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — U.S. Transportation Secretary Jim Burnley has approved $114.1 million in federal interstate discretionary funds to accelerate construction of the Interstate 40 bypass in Winston-Salem, Gov. Jim Martin announced Wednesday.

Martin and N.C. Transportation Secretary Jim Harrington flew to Winston-Salem Wednesday from Washington, D.C., after receiving news of the funding approval.

At a news conference, Harrington and DOT staff members outlined plans to expedite the bypass project, which Martin said now would be completed five to six years sooner than expected.

The bypass is a key link in "an eastwest interstate highway that is going to keep North Carolina moving down the road to economic prosperity."

Father Held

SANFORD, N.C. (AP) — The father of a 26-year-old Sanford man who was shot Tuesday was in jail Wednesday charged with first-degree murder, officials from the Lee County Sheriff's Department said.

Roger Phillips was arrested around 10 p.m. Tuesday and originally charged with assault with a deadly weapon in the shooting of his son, Kenneth Phillips.

The charge was changed to first-degree murder after the younger Phillips died at 12:30 a.m. Wednesday, said James Estes, administrative assistant with sheriff's department.

Liquor Vote

GIBSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Gibsonville residents gave narrow approval to having a liquor store in town Tuesday, passing an Alcoholic Beverage Control measure by a 23-vote margin.

The final outcome was 207 votes in favor of having an ABC store in town and 184 votes against.

The 391 people who cast ballots represent about 38 percent of the town's 1,514 registered voters.

Sentenced

WILMINGTON (AP) — Fayetteville lawyer Benner Jones III, convicted in July of federal charges involving Veterans Administration-backed housing loans, was sentenced to five years in prison with all but 179 days suspended and was fined $60,000, officials said.

Jones was sentenced by U.S. District Judge James C. Fox in federal court in Wilmington. Fox also barred Jones from practicing law before any agency in the federal government, Assistant U.S. Attorney Peter Kellen said.

Kellen said Jones is free pending his appeal to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, Va.

Jones will apparently be allowed to practice law in state courts pending the appeal.

Suspension

RALEIGH (AP) — The state Board of Education plans to review an in-school suspension program in light of a report that said the program, which costs $14 million a year, is playing only a secondary role in reducing school dropout rates.

A study of eight schools, including four where dropout rates are high and four where they are low, raised questions about whether in-school suspensions "actually deterred dropouts," said Barbara Tapscott, chairman of the board's program committee.

Barry Kibel of Research and Evaluation Associates Inc., in Chapel Hill, conducted the study for the General Assembly and reported the agency's recommendations to the program committee Wednesday.

In-school suspension plans are designed to help students having behavior problems without sending them out on the street, said Theodore Drain, assistant state superintendent for support services.

The state spends about $27 million to prevent students from dropping out of school and about half of that money, $14 million, goes to support in-school suspension programs in every high school, Drain said.

Likely New PTL Owner Is Ordained Rabbi Known For His Conservatism

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Stephen Mernick, the likely new owner of PTL's assets, is an ordained rabbi, a composer of religious songs and an avid worker in the movement to return Jewish young people to their religious roots.

He is so strict in his observances that he won't drive a car on the Jewish Sabbath, which lasts from sundown Friday to sundown Saturday.

"So if there is a Sunday youth program somewhere in Pennsylvania, he'll drive all night Saturday to be there in the morning, just to be with the kids and try to help motivate," said Frank Diamond, executive vice president for B'nai B'rith of Canada.

Mernick wrote a song for children, called "Shefti Bevet Hashem," or "I Have Returned to the House of the Lord."

Mernick hasn't spoken to the news media since his attorneys in Charlotte announced Tuesday that PTL trustee M.C. "Red" Benton had accepted Mernick's $115 million offer to buy the assets of the bankrupt evangelical Christian TV ministry and retreat south of Charlotte.

He refused to talk to a Toronto Star reporter who showed up at his suburban home Tuesday night.

Mernick's wife, Judy, who is from Memphis, did speak briefly, The Star said. She asked the reporter to move his car, because the Mernicks didn't want it on the street during the Simchas Torah religious holiday.

The newspaper also quoted her as saying the publicity over the PTL purchase made her concerned for the safety of the Mernicks' five preschool-age children.

People who know Mernick said his aversion to publicity masks a charming, witty personality.

"The key word about him is 'charismatic,'" Diamond said in an interview with The Charlotte Observer. "I would say he's the only person who's ever managed to mesmerize me."

"When you see Steve, you would never, never put the figure of $115 million next to him. He dresses very modestly; he doesn't put his wealth on his body."

Although Canadian sources estimated Mernick's net worth at substantially more than $50 million, he only recently moved from a modest house in the suburb of North York to a more imposing, newly built home a block away.

"His home is large because he has lots of guests who come and spend the Sabbath with him," Diamond said.

Acquaintances said Mernick has also bought a Jaguar to replace the conservative sedan he used to drive.

The Mernicks' rabbi, Yitzchok Kerzner of Clanton Park Synagogue, said Mernick has for years helped send Jewish teenagers to schools of religious education.

"All these things are done in a very quiet, unassuming way," Kerzner said.

Diamond said Mernick paid the salary for two years of a staff worker for the B'nai B'rith youth organization.

"He never wanted any publicity, no tributes to him," Diamond said, "and we're talking about quite a generous donation."

Mernick's businesses include a travel agency, a landfill, a garbage collection service and a company that imports high-tech equipment from Israel.

But his main business interest is real estate development, said his Toronto attorney, Aaron Grubner.

Mernick's father, Frank, who died several years ago at age 55, was involved in real estate, primarily apartment buildings, one source said.

Agency Refuses To Open Records

RALEIGH (AP) — Officials of the Microelectronics Center of North Carolina have refused to open records on how $18 million of state money is being spent to acquire and house a supercomputer — records that Attorney General Lacy Thornburg says should be made public.

But W. Holt Anderson, secretary-treasurer for the Microelectronics Center, said Wednesday that a meeting would be held tonight, and that he would say Friday what had been decided with regard to the records.

Other center officials also said they would ask the General Assembly in January for $47.2 million in the next two fiscal years, including $14.2 million for staff and maintenance necessary to operate the supercomputer.

But House Speaker Liston Ramsey said Wednesday that lawmakers were unlikely to approve that request if the Microelectronics Center continued to withhold its records from the public. It already has received more than $106 million in state funds.

Microelectronics Center officials said Wednesday they would not release the records because they were continuing to review the opinion by Thornburg with their legal counsel. They said they followed scrupulous procurement procedures to acquire the computer.

"I guarantee you, if it ever becomes public, you will see one of the most incredible, pristine processes in getting a procurement that I have ever experienced," said Richard Fair.

Fair said the attorney general's opinion was non-binding — that is, the center does not have to adhere to it.

Cayton Opens 3rd Furniture Warehouse Gallery

Cayton Furniture, Inc. is expanding operations with its planned Warehouse Gallery concept.

The newly created store at 1012 Dickinson Avenue is the third in a planned series of satellite stores to open in eastern North Carolina. This marketing concept will offer the advantage of having a full line furniture store with merchandise priced well below the normal discounts given by many large big city operations.

The marketing concept is to operate from clean, neat Spartan buildings to reduce overhead. Furniture is displayed in a neat and orderly fashion making the best use of all square footage and allowing the consumer to see, feel and measure the actual piece. Room settings are displayed by visual methods being developed by Cayton to let the customer see how it will look when they get it home.

National name brands are featured throughout the line, and furniture grades range from medium to high. Prices are well below some promotionally priced furniture offered by regular furniture stores. Companies like Broyhill, Kincaid, Kingsdown, Craftique, Fancher, Barcalounger, Lane, Berkline, Jamestown Sterling, Crestline, Madison Square, Stanton Cooper, and many more lead the parade of famous names.

The mission of Cayton Furniture is value, price and service. Joe Ellis, a famous Wall Street retail analyst recently said, "Any format that boasts low cost structure and merchandising acumen to provide consumers with value has a long term future." The Cayton Warehouse Gallery concept does just that.

Immediate gratification is an attribute of the Warehouse Gallery. You can take it home now. Satellite stores will draw from the Washington Warehouse to fill orders for displayed merchandise and many more items offered in Cayton's in-stock catalogue. Additional fabric selections and wood finishes are offered from vendor sources for those who wish to special order.

There is an appendage to the warehouse gallery operation called the Design Center. This center is staffed with decorator consultants to assist customers in putting together affordable elegance. Most major brand names found in the American market can be custom ordered in Cayton's Design Center at savings of 30% to 40% off the manufacturer's suggested retail price. The custom order upholstery fabric selection consists of over 5000 fabric samples from which the customer may choose.

Because Cayton has a residence and office in High Point, NC, the company is able to take advantage of many special buys on floor samples and overstocked items from all major manufacturers. This allows the warehouse gallery to offer savings of up to 60% off the suggested retail price.

Cayton's price guarantee is one of its strongest selling points. They guarantee that if you buy any home furnishings item from them, and within thirty days from the date of purchase find the identical item elsewhere for less, they will cheerfully refund the difference.

Customers are encouraged to CALL CAYTON COLLECT and check out their prices on any piece of furniture they find before making a final selection.

Financing is available, even at these discounted prices.

There is a 90 day cash plan that allows the customer to defer payments until a later date with no interest. Cayton offers its own charge card which allows its customers to utilize a revolving plan with payments as low as $50.00 per month for up to $1800.00 worth of furniture. There is no charge for the card, and it carries normal bank card rates of 18% per year. VISA, MasterCard, Discover and American Express are welcome. Extended financing is also available for larger purchases.

Cayton offers free delivery on its own trucks with regularly scheduled routes throughout eastern North Carolina.

Fair Animals

Frank Davis of Greenville carries his sons, Frankie III (front) and Eric, through the animal exhibit at the Pitt County Fair.

Big Turnout Could Help Garrett

2,944 white Democrats registered in the district as of Sept. 27.

The consolidated district — made up of regular county commissioner Districts 1 and 2 — was created by county commissioners in accordance with the Voting Rights Act of 1965. The district, approved by the U.S. Justice Department, is designed to give minorities a chance at winning in a county where no black county commissioner has ever won office.

But even with the mathematical advantage, Garrett's winning margin was slim in the first runoff. More than 40 percent of the white Democrats in the district voted, but only 18 percent of the blacks participated.

Garrett is out of town and unavailable for comment, but his son and campaign manager, Michael Garrett of Greenville, said the redistricting has put some pressure on members of the black community to prove they can win an election.

"I think we're all watching that clearly," Michael Garrett said. "It will be very disappointing if we don't get this win, of course. We had to go through the Department of Justice to get this (districting) arrangement."

"There is a lot of watching and vigilance," he said. "It will be a test as to whether or not we have really educated black voters as to the importance of their vote. It's going to be a tough test."

But Michael Garrett said if black voters do not turn out in large numbers, it will not be due to lack of campaign effort. "We've done everything possible," he said.

Since the May 31 runoff, the Garrett campaign has sent letters to every black voter in the district, set up a door-to-door effort to get voters to the polls, planned a rally for Sunday and established a phone bank to take calls from people offering help and place calls to voters on election day.

The guest speaker scheduled for the rally on Sunday, Kelly Alexander Jr. of Mecklenburg County, is an ironic choice. Michael Garrett said Alexander, state president of the NAACP, is leading an effort to drop runoff elections in North Carolina because they have historically kept blacks from winning office.

That was not the case with D.D. Garrett, who lost the original primary but landed more votes in the runoff. Michael Garrett said he too opposes runoffs because black candidates have had little success with them in the past, but, in this case, he feels his father's organization is strong enough to break the pattern.

Area voters, both in and out of the precinct, have been especially supportive the past few weeks, Michael Garrett said. "People have a passion for this election."

Fund raising is on the upswing. Michael Garrett declined to say specifically how much money the campaign had raised since the first runoff, but he said he raised $1,000 last week alone. The money is paying for printing, mailing and advertisements on radio and in newspapers.

"We hope that we have a better organization this time," Michael Garrett said. "We have no doubt (the black turnout) will be much better this time."

D.D. Garrett and Dupree have publicly dealt with the election in different ways.

D.D. Garrett has twice accused the Pitt Board of Elections of racism, and he has said the chairwoman of the county board, Nelson B. Crisp, has been influenced by political ties between her family and Dupree's supporters.

He also said he has requested that the U.S. Department of Justice send officials to Greenville to monitor how the new runoff is conducted. Justice officials said they will review the request, and any decision to send monitors would be announced the day before the election.

While Dupree has turned down interviews and politely declined to answer questions from the media during the five-month campaign, D.D. Garrett has often talked to the media, saying once he plans to "beat the socks off this guy."

Efforts to reach Dupree for comment on Tuesday's election were unsuccessful and telephone calls to his office and home were not returned.

Both Garrett and Dupree had attorneys to guide them through hearings before the county board and state board, and the publicity concerning the election has often focussed more on election irregularities than what either man might want to do if elected.

Still, the two candidates have seemed to get along well in public, always speaking to each other at hearings and meetings. Michael Garrett said he and Dupree and Dupree's attorney happened to be at a United Way function Wednesday, and there was no conflict.

"I must give them credit for running a clean, dignified campaign," Michael Garrett said. "It has not been a personal campaign at all. ... They have been gentlemen. We have been able to interact with them on a personal basis."

"It has not polarized people like it could have, and that has come from the candidates," he said.

Students Have Activities

Pam Finch and Kim Jessup, teachers at G.R. Whitfield School, recently took their second graders to visit Procter & Gamble to correlate a social studies unit on communities, factories and businesses. After visiting the company, the class had lunch at Hardee's.

Karen Worthington's eighth-grade social studies class presented the play "A Fight for Land" in celebration of Indian Heritage Week. The play, which was designed, written, performed and directed by the class, told the story of native Americans' first encounter with early European settlers.

Ann Cannon's second and third graders completed a unit on clowning with two guest speakers. Toddlers the Clown demonstrated putting on clown make-up, and Frank Coburn demonstrated twisting balloons.

Winston-Salem, N.C. was formed from the towns of Winston and Salem in 1913.

Firms Bid On Waste Facility

process of selecting an operator for the regional waste disposal facility that will be built on a yet-to-be-decided location in North Carolina.

During the program Wednesday, the two firms bidding on site, design, build, operate, and ultimately close the waste facility were allowed 45 minutes to present proposals. A question and answer session followed the presentations.

Chem-Nuclear, the organization which operates the regional waste disposal site in Barnwell County, S.C., was chosen to make the first presentation following the flip of a coin.

David Ebenhack, company vice president and general manager, said his firm is the most experienced in the country in the handling, packaging and disposal of commercially generated low-level radioactive waste.

"We currently take care of all the generators in the southeast," he said. "What that means is we have a terrific experience base. We know the customers, we know the transportation routes, we know the methods in which they pack the material and we know the characters of the material."

Ebenhack said that unlike Westinghouse, Chem-Nuclear specializes in low-level radioactive waste disposal.

"It's our only business, it's our reputation, our company is on the line because that's all we do. If we didn't do it very well, then we wouldn't be in business," he said.

But the coalition from Westinghouse also indicated its experience was an asset to be considered in selecting a bidder.

Westinghouse project manager Bob Howard said for example, his company has been involved in the construction of 24 nuclear plants and has recently been awarded a contract by the Department of Energy to operate one of its largest facilities on the Savannah River in South Carolina.

In addition, he said the company was selected to construct and operate the waste site for the Central Midwest Compact to be located in Illinois.

Howard described Westinghouse's strengths as its size, experience base and technological depth.

He said Westinghouse, with its North Carolina subsidiary, S&ME, and its prime subcontractor, Bechtel National Inc., would make the site in North Carolina the "best state-of-the-art facility in the world."

Both spokesmen discussed details of their respective facility designs, each assuring those in attendance that site specifications would meet state licensing specifications and conditions, as well as meeting public concerns about health safety and environmental protection.

The said their firms would provide various benefits to the host communities.

Howard said Westinghouse would bring to the host area new jobs and training for local people; compensation for lost taxes, scholarships, and also utilize local suppliers.

Ebenhack said Chem-Nuclear would also provide scholarships and jobs. He said the Barnwell facility provides jobs for more than 235 people and an annual payroll of $5 million, most of which is spent on local goods and services.

Ebenhack said he felt his company's cost proposal was higher, because it considered in its proposals a "worst case scenario," in terms of all the protection barriers necessary.

"Their costs reflected on the screen looked lower but in reality I don't think they will be," he said.

Tenney J. Deane Jr., chairman of the Waste Management Authority, said according to the timetable mandated by state legislation one of the two proposers must be selected by Jan. 31, 1989, while a preferred site location for the facility will be selected in November 1990.

The other two presentations, sponsored by the authority will be held today in Raleigh at the N.C. Archives and History Library and Tuesday at the campus of the University of North Carolina at Charlotte.

In Fashion World

Men's Tastes Echoing Female's

By Catherine Cook
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

The standard joke in the menswear industry used to be that any shift in direction in women's fashions wouldn't cause even a ripple in the men's market for at least 10 years. The pervasive influence of today's media — especially music videos, in addition to men's greater interest in fashion, is changing all that. Today many styles are hitting both markets simultaneously.

"Now, when new colors come out, men accept them a lot faster than they did five or 10 years ago," says Edward Steinberg, owner of a men's store.

The same bright colors popular with women for fall are showing up in men's casual clothing. Black and white remain the best sellers, but poison greens, mustards and rich purples are the newest accent colors. Other similarities to the women's market echo in shoulders that are less exaggerated, jackets that are slightly more constructed, and shirts not nearly as oversized as was the rage a year ago.

Even details such as quilting, which turned up in the Perry Ellis and Anne Klein lines for women, were used for fall by menswear designers such as Bill Robinson, whose poison-green quilting decorates the inside, rather than the outside, of a jacket.

By far the best-selling new item this fall is the cardigan. According to Joseph Dolak, a menswear buyer, the cardigan, worn over a mock turtleneck or T-shirt, has replaced last year's printed woven shirt as the focal point of the casual wardrobe.

Bryan A. Levitt, director of operations for a clothing store, says that the cardigan tops off a layered sweater look.

Steinberg says that one reason for the cardigan's success is that it's a "great piece to throw on for dinner out on the weekend when you don't want to wear a jacket. For years people only wore a crew neck or V-neck sweater and thought cardigans were only for old people. But not anymore.

"Clothing goes through a cycle every 15 or 20 years. These aren't the cardigans I wore as a kid in high school; they're a little longer, more oversized, in neat colors like black or gray to wear with jeans or corduroys."

Sweaters in general are weaving themselves into men's wardrobes. Louis Goldbloom, vice president of a men's clothing store, says: "Ten years ago one would have felt uncomfortable going out to dinner without a jacket, but now men realize they can look very nicely dressed with slacks and a shirt and a good sweater. Now I wouldn't wear one to a fancy restaurant on Saturday night, but there are lots of neighborhood restaurants where I would."

Brian Loeffel, co-owner of a men's store, says a line of beefy, brightly colored sweaters from Australia is doing well at his store, despite the warm temperatures. "They mix red, yellow and teal on a darker background," he says.

V-neck sweaters are gaining ground on crew necks, Dolak says. Cotton is increasingly popular because it permits easier maintenance and brighter colors, Levitt says. And to ensure warmth on even the coldest days, sweaters and trousers are lightly lined.

As for the bottom half of the fashion picture, one of the most successful lines of trousers in Dolak's stores, he says, are those from Z. Cavaricci. "It's a very detailed look with oversized thighs and narrow at the bottom, with lots of gadgets and gizmos: wide belts, flaps at the waist, button detail and tabs on the hip." Popular colors have been khaki, olive and black.

Overall, men are taking a dressier approach to their weekend wear, most retailers say.

"Today I don't think everybody wants to run around in jeans," says Loeffel. "They want a look. They want to be casual, but show a little style."

TV's Big Mouth Causes A Sick Stomach

Television is like a spoiled child at the dinner table. When it's hungry, it grabs everything in sight and devours it until there is nothing left. When you try to feed it something new, it rolls it around in its mouth for maybe 13 weeks — then spits it out. It's hungry all the time.

In our city, we have 33 channels. You can turn on the TV at 5 a.m. for Gospel Bill and watch it until 4:30 a.m. the next day when "Father Knows Best" flashes on the screen.

Lately I've been worried about the eating habits of television. There isn't enough entertainment, news, sports, business, weather, drama, politics or music to fill it up.

We have sportscasters interviewing one another and weatherpersons

At Wits End Erma Bombeck

staging contests to predict the first snowfall. There's a station that telecasts Congress in session. (I'm amazed this is sold without a prescription from your doctor.) One station does nothing but roll by TV schedules. During the political conventions, we watched five minutes of a limo with a flag on the fender parked in a garage.

There are millions of people out there every day ripping off society, fighting over custody of children, climbing mountains and protesting. We're breaking our bones trying to manufacture enough news to satisfy the appetite of television, but it's not enough.

How many rhinos mating in the wild can you build an hour around? How many people can Charles Kuralt find who play a chain saw with their nose?

But mostly what concerns me is the future of talk shows. Where are tomorrow's guests coming from? After Joan, Kathleen and Jane tap the pool of interesting guests in the morning, we have Phil, Oprah, Sally Jessy, Regis, Kathie Lee and Gary beating the shrubbery for more. This is followed by more talk with Larry, Barbara, Johnny, David, Jay, Bob, Geraldo, Morton and Ted.

So why was everyone surprised recently when a professional actor admitted to bopping around from one show to another posing as a walking crisis? It was inevitable. There are only so many people in this country who are willing to sit around and talk about their first sexual experience.

Which brings us to another shortage: topics. We're getting to the point where hosts are scrambling for "themes" that will grab a viewing audience. Any day now we'll be down to "Oversexed Nazi Nuns," "Racism in the Plant World," "Citizens Against Clean Air" and "My Stomach Implant Was a Big Mistake."

Television needs better food. Reruns are just empty calories.

Bad Marriage Causes Guilt

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have a problem loving my 15-year-old daughter, "Lisa." Since the day she was born, I've had to force myself to show her any affection. I don't have this problem with my 13-year-old son.

When I hug Lisa, I feel embarrassed and a little hypocritical. Why? She is a very happy, outgoing girl and a wonderful daughter — always helping me around the house because I work full time away from home.

I am afraid she's beginning to notice my attitude toward her. Maybe it's my guilty conscience. Every day I tell myself that tomorrow will be different. But it never is. The truth is, I really do love her; it's just hard for me to show it. I would like to have a close mother-daughter relationship so she will come to me if she ever needs me. (I never had this with my own mother.)

Abby, I was 17 and pregnant with Lisa when I married her father. His parents never liked me. I never should have married him. It was a miserable marriage. We're divorced now. Do you think that has anything to do with the way I feel about my daughter? Help me, please. — FEELING GUILTY

DEAR FEELING: I think you've found the first piece of this puzzle. For years, you have unconsciously blamed your daughter for your miserable marriage because you couldn't bring yourself to blame yourself. Get professional help to bring your deeply buried feelings to the surface where you can examine them for what they are. And then forgive yourself. Once this is accomplished, you will be able to express your love to Lisa without feeling hypocritical. Good luck, mother.

DEAR ABBY: I have a problem. Although not of major importance, it's driving me and my loved ones up the wall!

I was recently informed that there is a word to describe numbers that are the same backward as they are forward, i.e. 1881. I have contacted TV stations, radio stations, colleges, libraries, friends and relatives, but to no avail.

Please let me know if such a word exists. — DON

DEAR DON: The word you are looking for is "palindrome." My Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary defines it this way: "Palindrome: a word, verse or sentence (as 'Able was I ere I saw Elba'), or a number (as 1881) that reads the same backward or forward."

DEAR ABBY: I would like to respond to "Rather Be Parentless in Indiana," who wrote: "My father is rude and disgusting. And if you think he's bad, you should meet my mother."

I, too, was not very proud of my parents. When my father wasn't killing himself stoking the boiler on a railroad locomotive platform to feed, clothe and put a roof over the heads of his wife and children, he sat around in his undershirt and stocking feet. Sometimes he even drank beer right out of the bottle in the living room. His grammar was atrocious, as he had to leave school at an early age. I was embarrassed to have my friends see him, so I'd meet them elsewhere to avoid him. He died of a stroke at 52.

My mother was country to the bone. She was even less articulate than my dad. She never learned anything but how to cook, clean and have babies. What an embarrassment! She never traveled out of the state in which she was born. My mother has Alzheimer's now, and doesn't even know who she is, let alone her children.

Wake up, kid, before you find yourself tearfully kneeling before a grave marker wishing you could start all over again. Sign me ... PARENTLESS IN ALABAMA Problems? Write to Abby. For a personal, unpublished reply, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Abby, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. All correspondence is confidential.

Don't put off writing thank-you notes, letters of sympathy, etc. because you don't know what to say. Send a check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

To Professor Jim Kaler Stars Are Old Friends

By Rebecca Mabry
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Jim Kaler is one of those fortunate people who likes to go to work in the morning — or evening.

In fact, if he didn't make his living studying the stars, he would probably be scouting the skies just for fun.

Kaler has been crooking his neck, looking up since he was about 6 years old. That's when his grandmother pointed out a bright yellow star that he later learned was called Arcturus.

As a teen-ager, he saved enough money to buy a telescope. He studied the constellations and educated himself in basic astronomy.

Today, he's a professor of astronomy at the University of Illinois and an internationally known expert.

Yet, he's an admirer first, a scientist second.

"To me, the sky has always been the most beautiful thing that there is," he said. "Just nothing has ever equaled it in terms of aesthetic beauty."

On a clear night, Kaler likes to lie outside in a lawn chair and admire the constellations, which he says are like old friends.

"He's loved astronomy since he was a little boy," said Kaler's wife, Maxine. "There was never anything else he wanted to do."

She recalls Kaler pointing out the heavenly sights to each of their four children. His mother now lives with them in Champaign and she frequently goes outside to admire the night sky with Kaler by her side.

Kaler has been a member of the university faculty since 1964. His research has focused on old stars and how they die.

A colleague, astronomy professor John Dickel, said Kaler is one of the world's leading experts on planetary nebulae, clouds of material thrown from stars as they get old.

"Anybody who studies planetary nebulae — anybody in the world — would know Jim and respect him," said Dickel. David Bright, acting dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences and a longtime friend of Kaler, said he also is known as a good teacher.

"His reputation in general is that of being a very intense and excited and stimulating undergrad instructor," Bright said.

Kaler has written an astronomy textbook, and another book on stars is coming out this year. Yet another book about astronomy for lay people is in the works.

His reputation earned him a call from national magazine reporters earlier this year, when everyone was talking about Nancy Reagan's interest in astrology. He told the reporters, unequivocally, that he thinks astrology is bunk.

He's also sure UFOs are the product of atmospheric phenomena and ignorance — and not spaceships from another world. It irritates him, he admitted, to think of all the money the UFO and astrology promoters make.

But Kaler said he would like to know if there is life in other worlds.

"I suspect it's going to be a long time before anybody finds out," he said. "The universe is just too large to test — so it's possible and conceivable that there is a civilization like us somewhere."

Bright said Kaler has become sort of "a popular guru" in astronomy, doing most of the public speaking for the department, answering media questions and initiating a stargazers' telephone hotline that gets about 80 calls a week from people wanting advice on the best nighttime sights.

Bright said the hotline fits Kaler's view of his job.

"He's not only doing it in the normal scholarly sense, but he really enjoys sharing it with the layman," Bright said. "He's someone who really takes what may seem like a very arcane field of scientific study and makes it more accessible to people who might otherwise be unable to make any sense out of it at all."

Kaler said his work is full of adventure because it offers so many opportunities for discoveries.

"It's no different than being an explorer," he said, "going out in the wilderness and seeing what you can find."

Hobo King Is Going To Retire

By Jack Hicks
THE KENTUCKY ENQUIRER

LUDLOW, Ky. — Even a hobo can get too old for his profession.

Harry Messer, "the king" of the Ludlow Hobos, is abdicating. He's going to kick back and take life even easier.

Messer, 71, has been king, or top hobo, of the Ludlow Hobo Club for 23 years.

"They appointed me king for as long as I could prove myself worthy," he says. Soon, another hobo will get that chance.

In the main, the Ludlow hobos are knights of the road in spirit only. They come from all walks of life, many of them holding blue-collar jobs. Their common thread is the fellowship found at Hobo Springs.

Since the mid-1960s, when Messer and the late Duke Botkin founded the hobo club, the leisure-hour hobos have been coming to the springs to have a few brews, maybe some homemade soup or barbecue and carefree talk.

The club, nestled in this Ohio River town in Kenton County, has about 150 members, some being non-active membership card holders.

In a ravine, and within earshot of passing trains, the springs attracted hobos and drifters in decades past and provided water for Ludlow during the 1937 flood.

It's the steep climb out of the ravine, whether by concrete stairway or up the banks, that pushed Messer into retirement. A former bartender and cook who traveled as a hobo some, Messer said his health is in decline, and his doctor has recommended he avoid climbing.

Winning A Banana

"We try to get good ponies that don't run real fast, and the monkeys are good riders. They naturally hang on," she said.

During the race, a worker stands in the middle of the track to monitor the speed and safety of the race, Ms. Chadwick said.

The three monkeys used in the show generally are kept in cages, approved by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, she said. "When people aren't around, we let them play around so they don't have to stay in the cages 24 hours a day."

The monkeys eat vegetables, fruit and Monkey Chow. Ms. Chadwick said. "One of our monkeys doesn't like bananas. They're all different, just like people."

The six ponies eat horse feed and hay. Five of them are used in the race with three racing in the first round and two others plus the winner of the first round competing in the second. The sixth pony is a backup.

The race is performed at 6:30 p.m., 8:30 p.m. and 10:15 p.m. each day.

Attendance was good at the fair Wednesday, while rain kept fairgoers away Monday and Tuesday, said Elvy Forrest, fair manager.

"We had a real good night last night. It wasn't great, great like we were hoping it was going to be. It got kind of cool later in the evening," he said.

"Monday was almost completely rained out. It was about 90 percent. Tuesday we had a fair crowd under the weather conditions but it was nothing like last year."

The fair will continue through Saturday on the Pitt County Fairgrounds.

President Lyndon B. Johnson stunned the country March 31, 1968, by announcing he would not seek re-election.

to the United States after preliminary analysis by Vietnamese forensic experts. He said Vietnam does not have equipment for identifying the teeth, the key part of both sets of remains.

It was the first time Vietnam allowed U.S. experts to probe the countryside and because it may resolve some cases Washington considers top priority among the 1,757 missing in Vietnam.

Meanwhile, a private group of searchers believes missing servicemen are alive in Laos, Cambodia and Vietnam.

The four Americans threw $25 to $30 into the river, which flows on to Cambodia and Vietnam, as a "test" and planned to drop more than $2,000 in American and other currencies Friday from the Thai shore.

The boat, donated by a Florida toy manufacturer named Jim Rambo, is to be remote steered to the Laotian shore and left there. The speedy, 2.5-foot boat is festooned with a flag reading "You (missing in action) are not forgotten."

"We are absolutely steadfast that this reward effort will work," said Bruce Adams, of Laramie, Wyo., whose brother was listed as MIA in Laos 22 years ago.

The other members of the group are Ted Sampley, a former Green Beret from Kinston, N.C.; William Sullivan, of Jacksonville, N.C., a Marine Corps veteran of the Vietnam War, and Lynn Hampton, of Winter Haven, Fla., a nurse during the war.

The group is the National Steering Committee for American War Veterans.

Laotian authorities Sunday arrested two other members of the group, Donna Long, 45, of Jacksonville, N.C., and James Copp, 43, a Vietnam veteran from Hampstead, N.C., after they crossed the Mekong River and landed in a Laotian village.

Long and Copp carried about $3,000 as well as other currency. Each bill was stamped with the reward offer.

Ross Petzing, the U.S. Embassy spokesman in Bangkok, said Tuesday that Long and Copp were being held at Ban Sing Samphan in the southern Laotian province of Champasak. He could not confirm whether they were still in the village or had been moved to the capital, Vientiane.

routine operations inside the Tritium Facility."

Also today, The New York Times reported that a study by a consulting firm of the plant's operations from 1971-1987 shows that chronic equipment failure and poor operating procedures caused nuclear reactors there to shut down unexpectedly nine to 12 times a year for nearly two decades.

That rate is twice that of the civilian nuclear power industry, and Richard W. Starostecki, DOE's chief safety operator, told the newspaper that civilian reactors with the same number of forced shutdowns would have had their operating licenses revoked.

And an internal memorandum about a May 10, 1965 accident at SRP said a supervisor had to stop a foreman from taking action that could have turned a leak of cooling water into a catastrophic accident, The Times reported from Aiken, S.C., near where the plant is located.

"One trained man stood between us and disaster," said the memo written by a Du Pont engineer, Frederick B. Christensen, in 1981 when he took early retirement.

Christensen had been in the reactor control room when the incident occurred.

A technical supervisor at the plant, Gerald F. Merz, told The Times in an interview Wednesday that this was "a premature conclusion."

The report obtained by The State was written by a nine-member committee of senior DOE officials and representatives of companies that operate the department's nuclear weapons facilities, including Du Pont. The committee was created in response to a request from Paul W. Kaspar, DOE manager at Savannah River, after following the aborted attempt to restart the P Reactor in August.

A spokesman for Du Pont said company officials had not yet seen the report but have moved to correct some of the

Oakland Tops Boston, 2-1 A's Handcuff Wade Boggs With Runners On Base

BOSTON (AP) — The Oakland Athletics respect Wade Boggs, Boston's five-time batting champion. They just didn't show it in a flirtation with danger Wednesday, edging the Red Sox 2-1 in the opening game of the American League playoffs.

"I hope that's the last time we see that," Oakland manager Tony La Russa said after Boggs went to bat three times with eight runners on base.

With a .356 lifetime average and .361 with runners in scoring position, Boggs was handcuffed by the Athletics despite a leadoff single in the first inning and a sacrifice fly that drove in Boston's lone run.

He struck out against starter Dave Stewart with the bases loaded to end the second inning. He hit a sacrifice fly with the bases loaded and one out against Rick Honeycutt in the seventh, then struck out against Dennis Eckersley with runners on first and second to end the game.

"It's over, it's over," said the All-star third baseman, who struck out only 34 times during the regular season en route to a fourth consecutive batting title.

"I'm not going to go home and pout or sit on it and then come up to the plate tomorrow night and think about striking out today," he added.

During the season, Boggs met repeated challenges and overcame the embarrassment of a $6-million palimony suit filed by a former traveling companion.

But, the human batting machine, the only player this century to get 200 hits in six consecutive seasons, has had a rough time against Oakland this year. The A's won nine of 12 meetings with the Red Sox.

Make that 10 of 13 with the victory in the opener of the best-of-seven series for the AL pennant.

Boggs said the "fun part of baseball" is the "one-on-one confrontation between you and the pitcher."

"If you get a hit you win, if you strike out you lose," he said. "As long as you play this game, you're going to have disappointing days. There's no two ways around it, but naturally you don't want to have them in the playoffs."

Turning philosophical, Boggs said "there's a master plan. You can't change fate. Whatever is gonna be is gonna be."

His failure to come through in the clutch was the key to the Athletics dashing Boston's hopes of winning the first two games at Fenway Park before the teams head for Oakland. The A's have beaten the Red Sox in 14 of the last 15 games at the Oakland Coliseum.

Jose Canseco, the AL home run champion, gave Stewart a 1-0 lead by hitting southpaw Bruce Hurst's 3-2 pitch into the screen in left-center for a homer to start the fourth.

The Red Sox tied the score on a walk, a hit batsman, Rich Gedman's infield hit and Boggs' sacrifice fly in the seventh.

Hurst, 18-6 overall and 13-2 at home during the regular season after losing 1-0 on an unearned run against Toronto on Sept. 28, gave up the deciding run on consecutive pitches by two former Boston teammates in the eighth.

Carney Lansford looped a double down the left-field line leading off and scored as Dave Henderson grounded the next pitch to right for a single.

While the Red Sox talked about pulling even with Roger Clemens, 18-12, facing Storm Davis, 16-7, in Game 2 tonight, the Athletics began thinking of taking a 2-0 lead.

"I'd like to win, but I'm not going to predict it," Canseco said. "If we get Roger Clemens to get the fastball down, we have a chance. If we take two here, then they're in big trouble when we go to Oakland."

"No way they can get two now," Davis said. "We can get two. Then they have to come to the Coliseum where they haven't won (0-6) all year."

"Beating Hurst was nice, but now we've got Clemens," La Russa said. "These games are going to be like this one, coming down to the last play of the game."

"It's not too tough to remember that against these guys you do not relax until there are three outs. You do not relax with two outs against the Red Sox."

Boston's Joe Morgan, managing for the first time in the postseason, said he thought Boggs' sacrifice fly was the key play.

"Boggs' line drive went right at their left fielder," he said. "A little bit either way ... that was the ballgame right there."

Asked if he felt the Red Sox had to win the opener, Morgan quipped: "We'll find out later."

And, with Clemens pitching in Game 2, Morgan was asked what he thought of Boston's chances?

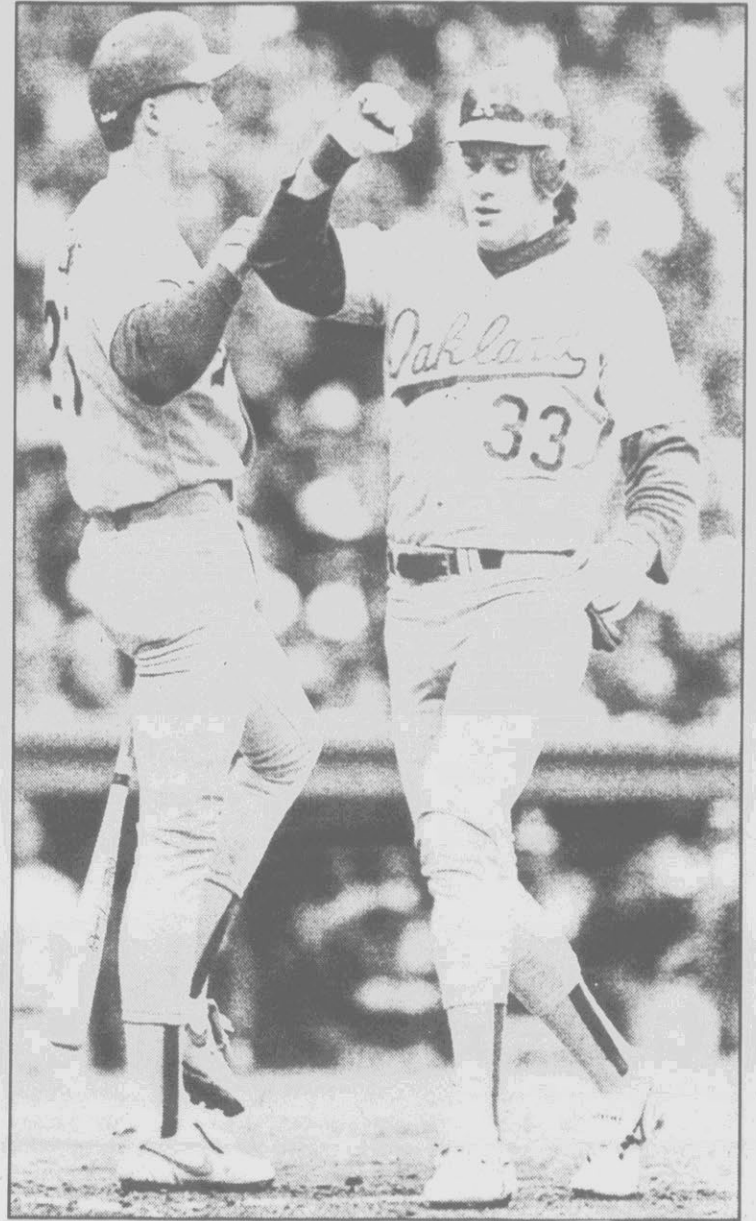

"Outstanding," he replied.

"We were down 1-0 in 1986 and won the championship series," Hurst recalled. "But we can't look back or too far ahead. If we were down 3-0, then I would say it is a must game, but not down 1-0."

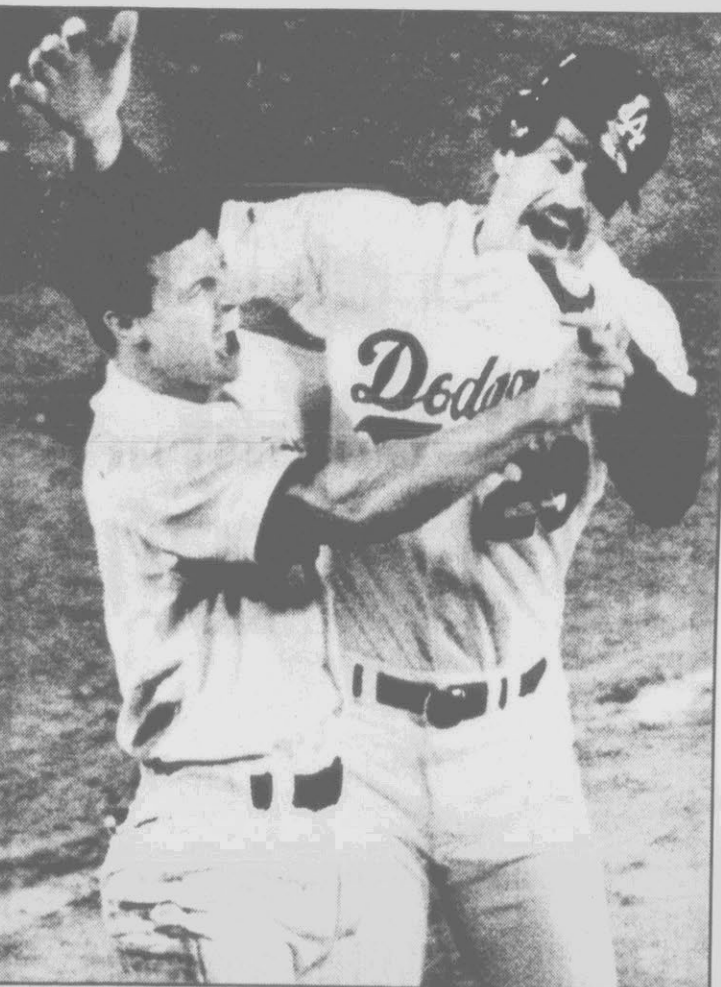

Todd Benzinger, Boston's young first baseman noted for saying what he feels, called tonight's game "very important."

"It comes close to being a must-win situation," he said. "We have Bruce and Roger on the mound at home. If we go 0-2, it will seem like we've pretty much exhausted our big guns and going into Oakland everything would be against us."

"It would take a dramatic comeback from a 2-0 deficit because all they'd have to do is win two out of three there. Judging from what we've done there in the past, they'd have to be very confident."

Cone Columnn Fires Up L.A. Dodgers Pound Mets' Hurler In 6-3 Win; Series Even

LOS ANGELES (AP) — With an assist from New York pitcher David Cone, the Los Angeles Dodgers finally found a way to beat the Mets, although what's happened so many times before almost happened again.

Cone is doing more than just pitch in the National League playoffs — he's writing a column for the New York Daily News. If his article in Wednesday's paper is any indication, he's got a lot to learn about tact.

His remarks concerning Tuesday night's opener of the playoffs, won by the Mets 3-2, found their way to Los Angeles and, understandably, infuriated the Dodgers.

They responded by scoring five runs in the first two innings off him Wednesday night before hanging on for a 6-3 victory to even the best-of-seven series at one game apiece.

In his column, Cone said Los Angeles reliever Jay Howell looked "like a high school pitcher" in the ninth inning of Game 1. Cone also said Dodgers starter Orel Hershiser had been "lucky" to shut out the Mets for eight innings.

Nobody was calling anybody lucky after Game 2.

"We have to give them (the Dodgers) credit," Mets first baseman Keith Hernandez said. "We could have put the hammer down with a win tonight. But he (Dodgers pitcher Tim Lincecum) threw a good game. Heck, give him credit."

After a day off for travel, the series shifts to Shea Stadium on Friday night for Game 3. Dodgers left-hander John Tudor, 10-8, will oppose Ron Darling, 17-9. Tudor skipped a start in Game 2 because of spasms in his right hip.

Tudor's replacement Wednesday night, rookie right-hander Belcher, was brilliant before tiring in the top of the ninth. That's when the Mets, who rallied for three runs in the ninth to win Tuesday night, threatened to make it two last-gasp victories in a row.

Finally, with the bases loaded and two outs, Gary Carter, the hero in the opener, stood in against Alejandro Pena representing the go-ahead run. But Carter flied harmlessly to right, and the Dodgers were winners.

"My thoughts were 'Please, Lord, let them go out, I don't want my wife to be a widow and my children not to have a father because too many more of these and they're going to sing a eulogy over me,'" Dodgers manager Tom Lasorda said.

Belcher had allowed only three hits and two runs while walking three and striking out a career-high 10 entering the ninth. He left after a double by Len Dykstra, an infield out and a run-scoring single by Hernandez.

Jesse Orosco, a former Met, relieved Belcher and gave up a single by Darryl Strawberry. Pena then came on and got Kevin McReynolds on a popup before walking Howard Johnson to load the bases. Carter hit the first pitch in the air to right and the game was over.

"We needed this game very bad," Lasorda said. "It would have been difficult going back to New York 0-2. It was a big, big ballgame."

Counting Tuesday night's game, the Dodgers were 0-7 at home against the Mets this year, scoring just eight runs. They weren't much better in New York, winning just once in five games.

Belcher said Cone's story fired up his teammates.

"You kind of want to let sleeping dogs lie," said Belcher, who was 12-6 with a 2.91 earned run average this season. "He had some pretty sharp things to say about some of the guys on the club."

"It's OK to have an opinion, but I think it backfired. Sometimes little things like that will add a little fuel to the fire and fire some guys up, and it happened tonight."

The article was posted in the Dodgers' clubhouse and several players were visibly upset.

"As far as the column goes, everything I said in there was meant in a facetious manner," Cone said. "For me to belittle a fine pitcher like Jay Howell, who has been an all-star, is not right, and it wasn't meant like that. The comments were made after a very emotional game. I don't plan to hide. I plan to take total responsibility for it."

Rose Fights Against Mental Letdown

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Rose High School football coach Chip Williams isn't as worried about this week's opponent Wilson Beddingfield as he is getting his team mentally ready to play the Bruins.

The reasons are obvious. The Rampants have jumped to 5-0 overall and 2-0 in the Big East Conference with league wins over both Northern Nash (52-21) and Rocky Mount (24-6).

Beddingfield, on the other hand, comes into Friday's matchup with a 2-3 record overall and a 0-2 conference mark after dropping contests to both Rocky Mount (29-6) and Northern Nash (35-6).

"I'm very concerned about a possible letdown," Williams said. "Often times we come into games like this and have a lot of penalties and sloppy play. But if we want to be where we planned to be at the end of the year, and that's to win the conference championship, then we've got to battle every week and get better and better."

Beddingfield's hopes of making post-season play are already dimming for this year, but Williams feels like an upset win would enable the Bruins to forget about the past two weeks.

"Beddingfield is going to come into the game and play very strong," Williams said. "If they knock off Rose they'll probably feel like they've done the next best thing to winning the conference championship. Their coach (Clark Harrell) is a competitor and I know he'll have them ready to try and knock us off."

The Bruins' leader offensively is quarterback Al Langston. He is backed up in the backfield by a pair of 6-1 running backs, Charles Howard and Lyn Melton.

"They've got good size," Williams said. "Langston does an excellent job of evading the (pass) rush and making a play happen."

Williams hopes to get the same performance from his team this week as he did against Rocky Mount last Friday, especially offensively. Last week, tailback Timmy Moore and fullback Tony Williams both rushed for over 100 yards and quarterback Jamie Brewington passed for 73.

"Last week we had a very balanced offensive attack," Williams said. "You've got to credit our offensive line with that. They did an outstanding job. They seem to be getting better and better each week."

"Defensively, our linebackers covered Rocky Mount receivers very good and our pass rush led by (Carlester) Crumpler and others was good also. We'll have to be as effective again this Friday."

Williams credited the return of linebacker Malcolm Wilson following a knee injury and the improved play of defensive back Eric Morris as big keys on the defensive side last week.

D.H. Conley

D.H. Conley, coming off a 34-9 victory over West Carteret last Friday, must continue to improve offensively as they head into their Coastal 3-A Conference matchup against North Lenoir Friday, according to head coach Steve Craft.

Both teams enter the game sporting 3-2 marks. The Vikings are 1-1 in the conference, while the Hawks are 0-1 in the league thus far.

"I'd like to see us develop more consistency on offense," Craft said. "Last week we came back late in the game (after scoring 20 first quarter points) and got moving again on offense. It was our first time this season where we were really controlling another team. We've got to practice at winning just like anything else. On our last drive we moved downfield for a score and ate up 7:50 of the clock."

The Vikings also got a big boost in last week's contest from freshman tailback Anthony Barrett. Barrett rushed for 102 yards and a trio of touchdowns on 26 carries in the game.

"I was real pleased with Anthony Barrett," Craft said. "He runs with his eyes real well and he will continue to improve with experience."

The game was the first varsity game for Barrett who was moved up from the junior varsity squad after rushing for over 500 yards in the team's first four games.

But the offense is not the biggest concern for Craft as he prepares for the Hawks, who run out of a T-formation offensively.

"They've got two excellent running backs in (sophomore) Jeffrey Sutton and (junior) Tim Smith," Craft said. "Their quarterback, Tyrone Bright, is also very dangerous. When you've got three players capable of getting the job done with the ball it makes it awfully tough on your defense."

Victory Revitalized Arnold Palmer

CLEMMONS (AP) — There have been a couple of British Opens, and four Masters titles and the 1960 U.S. Open and 61 PGA Tour titles.

But the victory three weeks ago in the Seniors' Crestar Classic "was as important as anything can be," Arnold Palmer said.

That victory, his first in three years, revitalized the 58-year-old Palmer and rekindled some of the old-time desire.

"It certainly extended my desire to play a little longer," Palmer said before teeing off today in the first round of the $1-million Vantage Classic, the richest event on the Seniors' PGA Tour.

"I'd been playing so poorly, I was beginning to think it was getting close to the time to cut back on the number of competitive events I play, to cut back sharply.

"But winning, well, it encouraged me to go on and play some more," said Palmer, perhaps the most popular player the game has produced.

"I got to thinking about it," he said. "And as many mistakes as I made and still won, I was thinking if I could eliminate some of those mistakes, it might really get to be fun again.

"That's what I'm trying to do. And there's a little encouragement. I really think I'm playing better, and I have a little more confidence in the putter," he said.

Palmer faces a 72-man field, including 12 men over 60 in the separate but simultaneous Super Seniors competition.

The Super Seniors, with Mike Fitchick as the defending champion, play 54 holes with a total purse of $100,000.

The Seniors are chasing $900,000, with left-hander Bob Charles of New Zealand and Gary Player of South Africa the leading contenders for the $135,000 first prize.

Both Charles and Player have won five times this year and Charles leads the Seniors' money-winners with $473,404.

Other major challengers are Orville Moody, who has won four 1988 titles, along with Dave Hill and Bruce Crampton, each a three-time winner this year.

Al Geiberger, grieving and distracted by the accidental drowning death of his 2-year-old son five weeks ago, is the defending champion.

"Obviously, it's a hard time for me right now and I'm sure my concentration will suffer. But my wife and I have to start to try to put our lives back together again," Geiberger said.

Portions of the final two rounds Saturday and Sunday will be televised nationally by ESPN.

Chicod Takes Two Volleyball Matches

CHICOD — Chicod Middle School took a pair of volleyball matches from E.B. Aycock Junior High School Wednesday.

In the A team game, Chicod won 15-2, 15-4, led in service by Jennifer McAllister. In the B team match, Chicod also won, 16-14, 15-12, paced by Wendy Beacham's service points.

Junior Tennis Team Tops Kinston

The Greenville Recreation and Parks Department's junior girls tennis team downed Kinston Wednesday, 5-4.

The Greenville team is now 2-3 on the year and will play at home against Ridgecroft Academy today.

Summary:

Singles: Laura Edmondson (K) d. Kathryn Womack, 8-5; Allison Willett (K) d. Tracy Moldin, 8-1; Amie Thompson (G) d. Tiffany Kirby, 8-6; Megan Schmidt (G) d. Christy Shingleton, 8-5; Morgan Bright (G) d. Mary Ann Sparrow, 8-3; Amy Shider (G) d. Katie Oliver, 8-0.

Kyle Petty Gets New NASCAR Ride

CONCORD — Kyle Petty officially has a new NASCAR Winston Cup ride for the 1989 season.

Petty's agreement to race Pontiacs for the newly-formed SABCO team was officially announced at a news conference held Wednesday at Charlotte Motor Speedway.

The team is owned by Charlotte businessmen Felix Sabates and Ted Conder. Sabates also is a minority owner in the Charlotte Hornets National Basketball Association expansion team.

NASCAR veteran Gary Nelson will serve as director of racing for the team. His duties will include heading the crew that will work on the cars Petty will drive in 15 races plus The Winston in 1989. Peak Antifreeze will be the team's major sponsor.

Petty has been driving a Ford for the Wood Brothers for the last four Winston Cup seasons. Neil Bonnett is moving into that car next season.

The Winston To Return To Charlotte

CHARLOTTE (AP) — NASCAR's version of an all-star game will return to Charlotte Motor Speedway next May 21, but The Winston will greet drivers with a new time-trial format.

The Winston pits the 19 most recent winners on the NASCAR Winston Cup tour, and a "wild card" driver, to be determined from the winner of the Winston Open, scheduled as the opener of the May 20 doubleheader. The Winston's race-day format will remain the same, with the chase divided into increments of 75, 50 and 10 laps with 10-minute breaks between them. The winner will receive $200,000.

Qualifying for the feature event will cover three laps. After either the first or second lap, the drivers must make a pit stop for right-side tires, then resume their race against the clock.

Total elapsed time will determine the starting positions for the $600,000 race. The Winston itself pays $200,000 to the winner of the 202.5-mile race, plus an additional $20,000 to the winner of the first 75-lap segment and another $20,000 to the winner of the second 50-lap portion.

"This is the most controversial qualifying format in the history of auto racing," Charlotte Motor Speedway president and general manager H.A. "Humpty" Wheeler said Tuesday. "It will now require as much of a team effort to win The Winston pole position as it takes to win the NCAA's Final Four.

"If a driver can win the pole and lead the entire race, it's possible for him to earn $290,000," speedway president H.A. "Humpty" Wheeler said. "Charlotte Motor Speedway will come up with another $10,000 to make it an even $300,000 if that happens."

Sterling Marlin won the 1988 Winston Open and finished less than a second behind Winston winner Terry Labonte.

"This gets the pit crews involved," said Jeff Byrd, spokesman for the race's sponsor. "Whoever makes the best stop and develops the best strategy probably will win the pole. It's going to make qualifying a lot more fun for the spectators."

Other previous winners of The Winston besides Darrell Waltrip and Labonte were Bill Elliott in 1986 at Atlanta and Dale Earnhardt in 1987 at Charlotte.

To make it worthwhile for the competitors, a special time-trial purse of $68,500 has been established, including $50,000 for the team that takes the pole.

"A lot of pressure will be on the crews. It'll be a 50-50 deal now with the driver, who usually has all the pressure during qualifying," said Jeff Hammond, crew chief for Waltrip, the 1985 winner at Charlotte. "It wouldn't surprise me to see some teams hiring good tire changers and jackmen for just that day away from teams that aren't eligible for The Winston."

Waltrip, like Geoff Bodine a member of the Hendrick Motor sports Chevrolet team, won the inaugural running of The Winston held at Charlotte in 1985. Waltrip earned $200,000 in that race but still isn't a proponent of the race's unusual three-segment format — especially the final 10-lap shootout.

"I'm not a big fan of this race, but whatever razzle-dazzle they want to do in qualifying is OK by me," Waltrip said. "As for having a shot at $200,000 for winning the race, qualifying doesn't mean a whole lot."

Mountaineers Hope For Repeat

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A year ago, West Virginia was stumbling along with a 1-3 record when East Carolina rolled into Morgantown, W. Va., for a collegiate football game.

By the time the evening sun set over the Monagahela River, the Mountaineers had crushed the Pirates, 49-0, and turned the season around.

From there, the Mountaineers went on to post a 6-5 record and earn a spot in the Sun Bowl against Oklahoma State. The Cowboys won that game, 35-33, but it was the springboard for West Virginia to move into the national rankings this year.

Saturday, West Virginia pays a return visit to Greenville, where it will again be a heavy favorite to spank the Pirates of East Carolina. The Mountaineers are 5-0 on the season and ranked seventh on the Associated Press poll. They've beaten Bowling Green (62-14), Cal State Fullerton (45-10), Maryland (55-24), Pittsburg (31-10) and Virginia Tech (22-10).

Against Tech, the Mountaineers suffered six turnovers, playing one of their poorer games. East Carolina coach Art Baker pointed out that traditionally, West Virginia plays one of its poorer games the game after they face their arch-rival, Pittsburgh.

Over their last 13 games, which go back to the ECU game of last year, the Mountaineers are averaging 38.2 points per game. This year, in the five games thus far, they are averaging 43 points a game. That stands fourth among Division I-A teams.

Thus far in the season, West Virginia has racked up 1,514 yards — an average of 302.8 per game — and a fine 5.2 yards per play. And that's just rushing. Overall, they're picking up 487 yards a game, eighth in the nation. Their rushing average is fourth.

Tailback Anthony Brown put together back-to-back 100-yard performances, picking up 110 against Pitt and 191 against Virginia Tech. Averaging 104.8 yards a game, he stands 17th in the country in rushing. But the key man in the cog is quarterback Major Harris, a 6-1, 207-pounder in only his second year of collegiate play. He's being touted as a possible Heisman Trophy candidate and is featured this week in Sports Illustrated in an article on that magazine's top 10 candidates for that award.

Harris has rushed the ball 45 times for 259 yards thus far this year, scoring two touchdowns himself.

Through the air, he has completed 36 of 64 attempts with 672 yards and three touchdowns. He's had five picked off.

Top targets have been flanker Reggie Rembert, with 12 for 230 yards and two scores while split end Calvin Phillips has pulled in 10 for 280 yards and a touchdown.

The backfield has two other rushers with at least 200 yards. Fullback Craig Taylor has rushed 39 times for 214 yards and four touchdowns, while Brown's backup, Undra Johnson, has 53 carries for 214 yards and five touchdowns.

Kicker Charlie Baumann has 53 points to lead the scoring, while Brown had 36 and Johnson, 30. Baumann, 26 of 27 for PATs, had kicked nine of 10 field goals.

And while the Mountaineers have a potent offense, they are just as strong on defense. West Virginia is allowing 124.8 yards a game passing and 111.2 rushing, ranking them among the national leaders in both categories.

Cornerback Alvoid Mays has three interceptions while strong safety Bo Orlando has two, returning one 56 yards for a touchdown. Overall, the Mountaineers have intercepted nine passes by their opponents.

The Mountaineers will be attempting to extend their string of victories over the Pirates to seven in a row. ECU has never beaten the Mountaineers, although they came close two years ago when the game was last played in Greenville.

Two years ago, ECU led 21-17 with just over a minute to play. But quarterback Mike Timko hit Harvey Smith in the end zone on a 10-yard pass with just six seconds left to give West Virginia the win.

For East Carolina — it would appear to be a familiar scenario.

Kickoff Saturday is set for 2 p.m. in Ficklen Stadium as the Pirates observe Homecoming.

Mackerel Tournney Gets Underway

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. (AP) — Four thousand fishermen will be competing for $350,000 in prizes as the 12th annual Arthur Smith King Mackerel Fishing Tournament begins along the Grand Strand with the number of entries down from last year.

"We're really pleased with it ... we're not concerned with getting the same number of boats," tournament founder Arthur Smith said. "We're just pleased with that which we have and are looking forward to having a good fishing tournament."

The official entry list totaled 827 boats, down from 1,000 last season. "That equals about 4,000 anglers here, and we can't be disappointed with that," Smith said Wednesday at the captain's meeting at Briarcliffe Mall.

The fishermen were scheduled to depart from Little River inlet, Murrells Inlet and Winyah Bay in Georgetown today and Friday.

They will be facing northeast winds up to an estimated 25 knots with seas as high as 6 feet, according to Smith, but that should not stop most anglers from fishing.

"We're not really concerned with the small craft advisories. Those fishing in small boats are few, so there's not a lot of people in the tournament that will not be fishing because of the weather," Smith said.

Aside from the grand prize — $28,500 in cash and merchandise — for the largest king mackerel, prizes will also go to the overall champion fishing team and the largest kings caught from the three inlets. Daily prizes will also be awarded.

The tournament avoided the threat of being canceled by the impending closure of the king mackerel fishery.

On Tuesday, lawyers for the Secretary of the Department of Commerce agreed to a motion requiring at least five days notice before closing the king mackerel fishery.

The king mackerel fishery would close once the Atlantic region poundage limit for kings is reached.

The tournament might be moved to earlier in the year to avoid any future problems with the fishery closing, Smith said.

"We very definitely are talking about it," he said. "We will be meeting with the council in November to talk about the tournaments. The socio-economic impact they have is very important."

"We think a certain percentage of the catch should be set aside for tournaments," Smith said. "If it's not possible to do that, then of course we'll have to move it (the tournament) up."

The total poundage limit of king mackerel is 7 million pounds — 4.4 million pounds for recreational fishermen and 2.6 million pounds for commercial fishermen.

The amount of king mackerel caught recreationally as of July 31 was 2,788,231 pounds, which is 63 percent of the limit.

"We've got thousands of people here from different states and Japan and Korea," Smith said. "Had the limit been reached and they closed it, we certainly would have abided by it. We're just as conservation-minded as anyone else. But this is an important tournament to us and to the state."

Forbes magazine reported in its

May 16, 1988 issue that the 1987 tournament brought in $18.6 million for the Grand Strand. Last year, 1,000 boats were registered and 4,502 fish-participated.

To The Sports Editor:

First I would like to say that I do not feel the booing at the Southwestern Louisiana game was meant for Travis Hunter and I sincerely hope Travis does not let it bother him. There has been and will be booing in every stadium in the United States and Ficklen Stadium is no exception.

Second, the fans have a right to boo just as much as they have the right to cheer. I hope Coach Baker will remember that it is the fans who pay the bills including scholarships and salaries. I also think that it was outstanding to have 18,000 fans in Ficklen on Saturday, especially after 4 1/2 losing seasons. Remember, no fans, no football!

Third, as far as booing not being a part of a class program, I want Coach Baker to think about his actions during the booing before he talks about class. I don't think throwing down drinks and headsets or waving fists at the fans is very classy!

Finally, the fans that support the Pirates have no other way to show their frustration so what's so terrible about letting it out in the form of boo's? I know Coach Baker is frustrated and I know that the players are frustrated, but please don't take it out on the Pirate fans that are still left. Take it out on West Virginia Saturday. Go Pirates!

Belcher Aids In Cone's Early Demise

LOS ANGELES (AP) — New York Mets pitcher David Cone took a shot with a typewriter, then Dodgers rookie pitcher Tim Belcher took a shot with his .071 batting average. Belcher won. Belcher hit a two-out single and scored in the four-run Los Angeles second inning that chased Cone on Wednesday night in Game 2 of the National League playoffs. Los Angeles won 6-3 to even the best-of-seven series at one game apiece.

Belcher lasted 8 1-3 innings, giving up five hits and striking out a career-high 10 batters.

In a column he is writing for the New York Daily News, Cone made disparaging remarks about the Dodgers after the Mets won the opening game 3-2 Tuesday night.

"I can't believe he'd even agree to write something like," Belcher said of Cone, who gave up five of the Dodgers' six runs. "I can't understand what was going through his mind to belittle our players."

"It just put gas on the fire. We could have come into the clubhouse today and been flat. But we all had copies of what he said. All of these things have an effect, and I'm sure he will think twice before he sits down in front of a typewriter again."

Belcher, 12-6 during the season, said the rally gave him the opportunity to pitch with a fairly comfortable lead.

"The early run support was the whole key," he explained.

Belcher's .071 batting average during the season was the worst on the Dodgers' staff.

With Jeff Hamilton on first after being hit by Cone, Belcher singled up the middle and scored on Steve Sax's single up the middle.

Utilityman Mickey Hatcher then pulled a Cone pitch down the third-base line for a two-run double.

Hatcher said it was a triumph for the Dodgers' bench.

"It was one of those things where we needed key hits in the game," said Hatcher, who played first base. "I was happy to come through with two runs with two outs."

Sax, who scored on the double by barely beating the throw to Mets' catcher Gary Carter, said Hatcher's hit meant "everything, man, it scored a couple of runs."

"It psyched us up. I was on first and I just hoped it would go fair," Sax said. "I put my head down and ran."

Dodgers manager Tom Lasorda said Hatcher "gets us fired up. It's kind of a contagious thing."

"This was a big win for us tonight, after a horrendous loss last night," Lasorda said. "We talked about it this afternoon. Scoring runs early made a big difference tonight."

Mike Marshall finished the rally with a single that scored Hatcher.

"They bunched some hits together, it was that simple," said Cone, who claimed his comments about the Dodgers were facetious. "The only bad pitch I really made was a hanging slider that Hatcher hit for a double. Other than that, and hitting Hamilton with the pitch, I didn't think I pitched too poorly."

Belcher gave up a two-run homer to Keith Hernandez in the fourth inning, then started the ninth by allowing a double by Lenny Dykstra. He was pulled after Hernandez singled in Dykstra.

After returning to the dugout, Belcher slammed a bat into the bench. "I was disappointed ... I didn't get two pitches in on Dykstra and Hernandez and they got hits. Those two pitches and the pitch Hernandez hit the home run off of really were the only glaring mistakes I made."

Cone, though, had several mistakes, Mets manager Davey Johnson said.

"This was really an outstanding game by Belcher, no doubt about it, you've got to give him credit," Johnson said. "It was just a great game. As for my guy, this was just his worst outing all year. He didn't settle in."

"This is what happened with Cone," Johnson added. "He threw down the middle to Hatcher, but they called it a ball and that upset him. Then he had the balk, which unraveled him further. He really got out of sync, and started over-throwing and made a lot of bad pitches."

Belcher was motivated even without Cone's comments.

He was still angry about the loss Tuesday night, in which the Mets scored their three runs in their final at-bat.

"I was more mad than anything," Belcher said. "The way we lost in the ninth inning (Tuesday night) took away some of the butterflies."

The last thing Belcher wanted to see was another Mets comeback.

"The Mets don't go up there and swing at bad pitches or make mistakes," he said.

Thursday Notebook

Duke Finally 5-0 Again

It had been 31 years in the making, but once Duke knocked off Vanderbilt Saturday in Nashville, Tenn., the Blue Devils were off to a 5-0 start in football.

The last time Duke accomplished the feat was in 1957. The 5-0 start by the Blue Devils that year propelled the team into the 1958 Orange Bowl. This year, the 5-0 start Duke attained Saturday with the 17-15 victory hasn't even put the team in the top 20 polls yet, but in two weeks, the Blue Devils can catch everyone by surprise if they pull out a victory in Death Valley against Clemson.

The main reason for the undefeated start by the Blue Devils is their high-scoring offense led by the passing of senior quarterback Anthony Dilweg and junior flanker Clarkston Hines.

Dilweg, in the first five games, is currently tied for the national lead in touchdown passes with 12 and he leads the nation in total passing yards with 1,814. He ranks second in the nation in total offense with 357.4 yards per game and is eighth in passing efficiency.

All in all, Duke, as a team, ranks third nationally in passing offense with 363.2 yards per game and stands in seventh position in the country in total offense with 493.6 yards a game.

Hines, on the other hand, leads the nation in receiving yardage with 563 and is 11th overall in receptions. For the season, Hines has hauled in 32 catches, scored five touchdowns and averaged 17.6 yards per catch.

Even though to date the Blue Devils have yet to make an appearance in the Associated Press top 20 poll, they did garner 35 points in this week's poll, putting them in the 24th spot.

The win at Vanderbilt probably will send media representatives from across the country scurrying to Durham to get a glance at the high-powered offensive attack.

Don't count Duke out for a big bowl opportunity once the season winds down. It may be premature, but a look down the Blue Devils schedule shows only Clemson as a possible stumbling block the remainder of the way.

Not bad for a team everyone was picking to finish at the bottom of the ACC standings in pre-season. No wonder head coach Steve Spurrier raised such a fuss about it.

Scott Wins In Triathlon

East Carolina University senior Barry Scott took first place this past weekend in the Fayetteville Triathlon with a time of 1:20.04.

The time posted by Scott in the event topped his closest competitor by over 3:30.

Scott, a physical education major at ECU, was the only finisher in the top five from the state of North Carolina in the event, which was made up of a 17-mile biking portion, .6 mile swim and a four-mile run.

Over 300 persons were entered in the event.

Tripp Suffers Knee Injury

North Carolina red-shirt sophomore nose guard Dennis Tripp will be sidelined indefinitely after suffering ligament damage in his knee during the first quarter of the Tar Heels 47-21 loss at Auburn last Saturday.

The injury sidelines Tripp, a former Farmville Central High School standout and Daily Reflector Athlete of the Year, for the Tar Heels' game against Wake Forest game Saturday. But officials at the university say surgery will not be needed for the injury.

This marked Tripp's first year as a starter for North Carolina after having been used a special teams player last year.

The Tar Heels may also be without the services of wide receiver Kurt Green and tailback Aaron Staples this weekend against the Demon Deacons. Green suffered a twisted knee and Staples was treated for a sprained ankle. Both are listed as questionable for Saturday.

In all, a total of 21 players were treated Sunday morning for injuries sustained at Auburn and will be limited in practice.

Campbell Pushing For Rookie Award

North Carolina State University's red-shirt freshman strong safety Jesse Campbell is putting in a strong bid for ACC Rookie-of-the-Year honors as well as a place on the league's all-conference unit.

The 6-3, 208-pound West Craven High School product has proven to be a nice addition for the Wolfpack through the first four games of the season. In all, Campbell has three interceptions and 28 tackles. Campbell has also broken up a pair of passes and three of his tackles have been stops behind the line of scrimmage.

His second quarter interception of a Georgia Tech pass and 64-yard return for a touchdown last Saturday dived the Wolfpack to a 14-6 victory. Later in the game, Campbell made a diving interception in the end zone to help preserve the win.

Campbell has now collected at least one interception in each of State's last three games.

West Virginia Should Thank Pirates

East Carolina faces a stiff test Saturday when seventh-ranked West Virginia enters Ficklen stadium. The Mountaineers come in sporting a 5-0 record, while the Pirates are reeling at 1-4.

Last season, West Virginia came into the game against the Pirates with a 1-3 record and seemingly headed nowhere. They seemed to do everything right in that outing though as they raced to a 49-0 win over ECU.

After that, the Mountaineers won four of their next five games and garnered a bid to face Oklahoma State in the Sun Bowl, where they were defeated 35-33.

Junior Mountaineer quarterback Major Harris seemed to come into his own in last year's game against the Pirates. After suffering through the first four games, Harris totaled 106 yards in total offense to spark him to an impressive showing for the season, which saw him pass for 1,200 yards and rush for 615 more.

East Carolina's defensive players know it's going to be a tough task to stop Harris. ECU's defense has yielded 93 points and over 1,100 yards in total offense in the last two weeks in losses to Southern Mississippi (45-42) and Southwestern Louisiana (48-36).

"He's going to tough. It's going to be like playing Todd Ellis (South Carolina's quarterback)," said ECU cornerback Junior Robinson. "They've got to try to maintain them up front and give us enough time to play their receivers and make them throw the ball, I think that would be better than letting them run. If we can keep him in that pocket and not let him scramble, I think we'll have a pretty good chance."

Flutie Named Player Of Week

NEW YORK (AP) — Former Heisman Trophy winner Doug Flutie, whose fourth-quarter heroics sparked the New England Patriots to a 21-17 victory last Sunday, was named the AFC offensive player of the week.

Flutie, who entered the Patriots' game against Indianapolis with the score tied at 7-7, connected on 12 of 16 passes for 132 yards and scored the winning touchdown on a 13-yard run with 23 seconds remaining.

Rampettes Take Win Over Northeastern

Rose High School gained a 7-2 tennis victory over Elizabeth City Northeastern Wednesday.

The match had been postponed from Tuesday because of rain.

Northeastern bested Rose in the number two and number four singles, but Rose's Tina Williams fought past Shelley Lane in three sets in the number five singles to give Rose a 4-2 lead going into the doubles, which the Rampettes swept.

Rose is now 9-1 overall and 8-1 in Big East Conference play. Rose will play at home against Northern Nash today.

Craft, however, does feel like his defense made improvements against West Carteret.

"I saw some good, positive things defensively Friday," Craft said. "But we're still lacking depth there. We're pretty much at the bottom of the barrel of defensive players. I don't think we're quite ready to get into a scoring duel with anybody right now."

Kulwicki Captures Pole For Oakwood 500 Race

CONCORD (AP) — Alan Kulwicki's top finish in qualifying for the Oakwood Homes 500 NASCAR race keeps alive his quest to catch Bill Elliott in the race for the most poles of the 1988 season.

"I knew I had to go banzai in the first lap and I saved nothing for the second," Kulwicki said after shattering Davey Allison's track record of 173.594 mph in a Ford Thunderbird.

Kulwicki grabbed his fourth pole of the Winston Cup season Wednesday by roaring to a track record 175.896 mph at Charlotte Motor Speedway.

Elliott, who will start on the outside of the front row Sunday after qualifying at 175.587 mph, is the season leader in poles with five.

Rusty Wallace, who is trying to catch Elliott in the Winston Cup points championship, ran third Wednesday with a top speed of 175.575 mph.

"When I saw Rusty's time I thought that would be awfully hard to beat," said Kulwicki, of Greenfield, Wis. "Then when Bill beat him, I said, 'Man, that's going to be tough to beat.'"

"But we gave it our best shot," he said. "I just buried it in for the first lap."

Kulwicki said the track was in great shape because of Wednesday's cool temperatures and the rain that fell earlier in the week.

"It was a combination of weather, tires and getting the car handling right," he said.

"I'm a perfectionist and I know there's no such thing as a perfect lap," Kulwicki said. "But this was as close as it could be."

"I ran so good in the first and second (turns) that I had to catch my breath coming down the stretch," he said. "It was an excellent lap, not perfect."

The times were so fast Wednesday that the top 10 qualifiers broke the existing track mark. Finishing fourth was Mark Martin at 175.120 mph, followed by Geoff Bodine at 174.661 mph.

Mike Alexander came in sixth with a time of 174.239 mph, followed by Ken Schrader at 173.835 mph, Harry Gant at 173.779 mph, Sterling Martin at 173.773 mph, and Darrell Waltrip at 173.600 mph.

On Thursday, qualifying will continue to determine positions 21 through 40 for Sunday's race.

Kulwicki said he expects the race to be wide open, with any one of about 10 drivers coming out on top.

"Bill (Elliott) will be tough on Sunday, but it's anyone's race," he said. "At least 10 drivers could win, including Rusty, Bill or Dale (Earnhardt)."

Earlier Wednesday, Ken Ragan suffered extensive injuries when his Ford Thunderbird hit the wall in the first turn during practice.

Ragan, who was transported to the hospital by helicopter, suffered a broken neck and other injuries in a 1985 ARCA race at the Alabama International Motor Speedway in Talladega, Ala.

Hospital officials said Ragan would remain in the hospital at least overnight.

Here are the top 20 qualifiers for Sunday's Oakwood Homes 500 NASCAR stock car race at Charlotte Motor Speedway, including driver, hometown, make of car and top speed. Positions 21 through 40 will be determined on Thursday.

- 1 Alan Kulwicki, Greenfield, Wis., Ford, 175.896 mph.

Yarborough Officially Retires From Winston Cup Racing

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Cale Yarborough has made the unofficial official with his announcement that he is retiring, but the veteran NASCAR driver's decision still shocked his fans.

"It's a sad day in racing," said Rick Gilley, who has a $300 painting of Yarborough in his den in his Chesapeake, Va., home. "I think if he had a top-notch car, he could still go out and roll with anybody on the track today."

"A lot of those older drivers don't have it any more, but Cale won the last time he was capable of winning," Gilley said.

Yarborough, the only stock car driver to win three consecutive Winston Cup titles, announced he was retiring Tuesday at a news conference at the Charlotte Motor Speedway. But Yarborough, 48, of Sardis, S.C., said he will continue to field a Winston Cup entry as a car owner.

While Yarborough had cut down on the number of races he ran in recent years and had hinted he would soon retire, his announcement still left many of his fans sad and remembering bygone days.

"I'm getting upset just thinking about it," said Carol Bruce, president of the 750-member Cale Yarborough Fan Club. "I'm glad I wasn't there (for the announcement). I would have boo-hoo-hooded all over."

Jim Lynch remembers Yarborough when he was a youngster and was the best football player at Timmonsville (S.C.) High School. He also remembers when the young Yarborough raced on every dirt track in eastern South Carolina and how Yarborough did some of his best running off the tracks.

"Cale won the Soap Box Derby when he was a kid and he's been racing ever since," said Lynch, who grew up with Yarborough in Timmonsville. "Back then, he outran the highway patrol and every police car in the county."

Betty Lewallen, who is in the same garden club as Yarborough's wife, Betty Jo, said she was glad Yarborough was retiring.

"He's done everything he can in racing, and I'm scared something's gonna happen to him," she said. "He's too important to people around here for that."

Yarborough, a 31-year veteran of stock car racing, has 83 Winston Cup victories, placing him fourth on the all-time list. He has won 50 superspeedway victories, and also is fourth on that all-time list.

He won Winston Cup titles in 1976, 1977 and 1978, and is the only Winston Cup champion to start and finish all races in a single season, which he did in 1977.

He has 48 superspeedway poles, second on the all-time list, and he won 14 Winston Cup poles in 1980, a modern day record for the most poles in one season. He is a five-time winner of the Southern 500.

In 557 Winston Cup races, Yarborough has won $4,991,066, placing him sixth on the all-time Winston Cup winnings list. He became the first Winston Cup driver to exceed $500,000 in a season's winnings twice, accomplishing that in 1978 and 1980.

Yarborough will race in the Oakwood Homes 500 on Sunday at the Charlotte Motor Speedway, and in the Atlanta Journal 500 on Nov. 20 at the Atlanta International Speedway.

In 1986, Yarborough bought the former Race Hill Farm operation and formed Cale Yarborough Motorsports.

Bobby Allison Visits Friends At Charlotte Motor Speedway

CONCORD (AP) — Racing legend Bobby Allison, who suffered severe injuries in a June 19 crash at Pocono, paid a surprise visit to his fellow Winston Cup drivers at the Charlotte Motor Speedway.

"It feels really good to be back in the garage area and to see all my friends," said a smiling Allison, who walked with the aid of a cane.

Allison's visit Wednesday came just one day after he was released from Lakeshore Hospital in Birmingham, Ala.

All in all, Allison was hospitalized for 108 days after wrecking his car in the first lap of the Miller High Life 500 at Pocono International Raceway in Long Pond, Pa.

Allison told reporters at his first news conference since the accident on Monday that he still suffers from short term memory lapses and double vision.

His doctors said his recuperation has been remarkable considering the extent of his injuries, which included a cerebral concussion, a broken leg, fractured ribs and a fractured shoulder.

"He has very minor residual damages from the head injury," said Dr. Gregory Miller, medical director of Lakeshore Hospital. "I don't see why he couldn't race again in the future, but that decision is up to him."

In Allison's left leg and hip are orthopedic pins. In his skull, doctors placed a permanent shunt — or tube — to alleviate excess fluid and sustain normal pressure.

Allison will have to return to the hospital on an outpatient basis three times a week for three-hour therapy sessions.

During his quick visit to the garage area of CMS Wednesday morning, the 50-year-old Allison gave proof he hasn't lost his sense of humor.

"I think I need some earplugs, this noise is too loud," he joked as drivers, including Richard Petty, took a break from their practice for Sunday's Oakwood Homes 500 NASCAR race to chat with their old friend.

"He sure parked the whole garage area," said his son, Davey Allison, who also races on the Winston Cup circuit.

"I think he lifted everyone's spirits," said the younger Allison. "I know he sure lifted mine."

It is anticipated that Allison, who owns a condominium overlooking the first turn at the Charlotte track, will remain in town for the race weekend.

Hatcher Made Most Of His Playoff Start

LOS ANGELES (AP) — When Mickey Hatcher drew a walk from David Cone in the first inning, he ran down to first base and he didn't stop running until the game was over.

In baseball parlance, Hatcher is a hustler.

Hatcher, a utilityman, drove in two runs and scored twice as the Los Angeles Dodgers beat the New York Mets 6-3 Wednesday night to even the best-of-seven National League playoffs at one game apiece.

Franklin Stubbs started at first base for the Dodgers in Game 1 and struck out two times in three at-bats.

Hatcher has been a sparkplug for the Dodgers all season, and they certainly needed a boost after the Mets rallied for three runs in the ninth inning to win Game 1.

"I felt great," Hatcher said. "You come to the park and not expect to play, then you see your name in the lineup and get excited. That's what happened to me today."

"I'm just happy to play. I don't want to be a superstar. I just want to be a ballplayer that hustles. I've always played that way and I'm not going to change."

It's not uncommon to see Hatcher sliding headfirst into second on a ball hit off the wall or diving for popups in the stands.

After he walked in the first, Hatcher moved to second on a balk and scored in a cloud of dust at the plate when Mike Marshall singled.

In the second, Hatcher doubled home two runs and scored another.

"It's a new series," Hatcher said. "It shows you what kind of team we have. All the games we've played this year (with New York) have been close ones."

"It took me nine years to get to the playoffs and I'm excited. I'm not going to sleep tonight, because I won't be able to."

Hatcher, 33, was drafted by the Dodgers in 1977 and traded to the Minnesota Twins in 1981. He was released by the Twins in 1987 and signed by the Dodgers.

"It was great to be back in the Dodgers' organization and this (the playoffs) makes all the struggle worth it."

Hatcher hit .292 for the Dodgers this season with one homer and 25 runs batted in. He led the Dodgers with 12 pinch hits and hit .358 with runners in scoring position.

Dodgers Take Anger Out On Met Pitcher

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Pitcher David Cone, who had a spectacular season for the New York Mets, is trying his hand at sportswriting. One of his early efforts brought him a lot of attention, but probably not the kind he wanted.

Cone, writing a column for the New York Daily News during the National League playoffs, infuriated the Los Angeles Dodgers with his remarks after Tuesday night's opener, which the Mets won 3-2 by scoring three runs in the ninth inning.

The Dodgers took out their anger on Cone on Wednesday night, scoring five runs in the first two innings off the Mets' right-hander en route to a 2-2 victory over New York, evening best-of-seven series at one game apiece.

Cone wrote that Los Angeles reliever Jay Howell "reminded us of a high school pitcher" during the ninth inning Tuesday night. Cone also wrote that Dodgers' starter Orel Hershiser was lucky to have shut the Mets out for the first eight innings of the game.

Before Wednesday night's game, Dodgers catcher Rick Dempsey said Cone would pay for his words. And, as it turned out, Cone did pay, and dearly.

"Those are some pretty cocky statements for someone who hasn't been in baseball very long," Dempsey said. "You can tell that his success has gone to his mouth a little bit."

When asked why Cone would make such statements, Dempsey said "Stupidity. That's all."
"When you put your peers down like that, all you can do is create animosity," Dempsey said. "His day will come. He's gonna hit the ground pretty hard some day and nobody's going to be around to pick him up."

When asked if that might happen Wednesday night, Dempsey said, "I don't know. I hope so."

Cone never got the chance, because he was replaced by a pinch-hitter in the top of the third inning, before getting a chance to swing. It was his shortest outing as a starter this season.

Cone, in his second full big-league season, was 20-3 with a 2.22 earned-run average, second to the Cardinals' Joe Magrane in the NL.

"As soon as we got Orel out of the game, we knew we'd beat the Dodgers, even after Jay Howell had struck out Ho Jo (Mets' infielder Howard Johnson)," Cone wrote. "We saw Howell throwing curveball after curveball and we were thinking: 'This is the Dodgers idea of a stopper.' Our idea is Randy (Myers), a guy who can really blow you away with his heat. Seeing Howell and his curveball reminded us of a high school pitcher."

"I think it's as weak as it comes," Howell said of the column, which was posted on the Dodgers' clubhouse door. "I don't think that he's got any right to rub a win in our faces like that. I don't think there's any call for that. No class. I think the comment speaks for itself. He should know better than to do that."

In his column, Cone demeaned Hershiser, who entered the playoffs with a 59-inning scoreless streak.

"Hershiser was lucky. Doc (Gooden) was good... We knew about Orel's 59 zeroes, but none of us thought he was invincible. Shoot, Doc pitched a much better game. Trouble is, Orel was lucky for eight innings."

Cone said after Wednesday night's game that everything he said in the column "was meant in a facetious manner."

"For me to belittle a fine pitcher like Jay Howell, who has been an all-star, is not right, and it wasn't meant like that," Cone said. "The comments were made after a very emotional game. I don't plan to hide. I plan to take total responsibility for it."

Jay Lucas, the Dodgers' assistant director of publicity, said the team received a copy of the article Wednesday morning from a fan in New York.

"We brought it to Dave Anderson, the player representative," Lucas said. "He decided he wanted some copies and would pass them out to the players."

"It got us a little fired up," Anderson said. "We came out and scored five runs early. If that was the difference, that's great. It sure didn't hurt."

Several Dodgers agreed with Anderson.

"Cone's going to learn that you just don't say things like that," said Mickey Hatcher, whose two-run double highlighted the Dodgers' four-run second inning off Cone. "He's got to learn to pitch with his arm and not with his mouth."

"We were fired up," said Steve Sax. "I think it gave us a little momentum, but that's what's great, he can write whatever he wants. I don't think guys were angry. I think they read it, put it aside, and said 'OK.' Maybe he learned something out of this."

"When you read something like that, it wakes everyone up, for sure," Dodgers first base coach Manny Mota said.

Former Bosox Have Final Say

BOSTON (AP) — Jose Canseco and Dave Stewart answered the taunts of the hometown fans convincingly. But it was former Red Sox heroes Dave Henderson and Dennis Eckersley who had the final say.

After Henderson gave Oakland a 2-1 lead Wednesday with an eighth-inning single, Eckersley closed out the American League playoff opener with an exclamation point. With the count 0-2 on Wade Boggs, he threw a high fastball past the fifth-time batting champion to leave the potential tying and winning runs stranded.

It was Eckersley's sixth save in as many tries against Boston this year, but he didn't enjoy it.

"It's special afterward — it's not fun during," the major leagues' save leader, with 45 in the regular season, said of his triumphant return to Fenway Park.

"Hey, this is pressure," he said.

Eckersley didn't respond as well in his only previous experience with postseason tension. He gave up nine hits and five runs in 5 1-3 innings for the Chicago Cubs in losing to San Diego in the 1984 National League playoffs.

Another playoff veteran, Henderson, furthered a reputation for clutch October hitting with his 10th RBI in 13 postseason games. The other nine came with Boston in 1986, including a pennant-saving homer against California with the Red Sox one strike from elimination.

"Any hit is a good hit," said Henderson, shrugging off its significance.

Boggs could have staved off defeat with a two-strike, two-out hit in the ninth. Instead, he struck out for a rare second time on what he called "a real bad swing."

"If you get a hit, you win. If you strike out, you lose," said Boggs, shouldering the blame for the loss. "There's a master plan. You can't save fate."

Boggs struck out on another high fastball, this one from Stewart, with the bases loaded in the second. It was the first time he'd been fanned by the A's right-hander in 33 career plate appearances against him, including 11 walks.

Stewart said he "just went right at him." He sarcastically credited the Red Sox fans who yelled "nasty" things about him losing the 1987 AL Cy Young award to Boston's Roger Clemens and about his publicized mixup with a transvestite several years ago.

"Warming up I felt nothing," Stewart said. "Then in the bullpen some Boston fans started to heckle me real good. That motivated me. I want to thank them."

Canseco, too, heard razzing about an allegation he denies that he used steroids to bulk up his 6-foot-3, 230-pound frame. The jeers turned to noisy chants after he homered into the left-field screen in the fourth off loser Bruce Hurst, and Canseco later teased the fans in right field.

"That was kind of fun," he smiled.

"I was flexing out there and fooling around. I don't really think that they mean anything — any harm."

Oakland manager Tony La Russa called the fans' comments a "cheap shot." But he was more concerned about the A's giving Boggs a crack at eight baserunners, even though he knocked in only one.

"That's not a good way to have to beat the Red Sox," he said. "I hope that's the last time in this series we have to go through that."

Boston manager Joe Morgan thought Boggs' bases-loaded sacrifice fly in the seventh could just as easily have fallen in.

"We were unlucky when Boggs' line drive went to the left fielder," he said.

Kiam Liked Pats So Well...

BOSTON (AP) — Football fans probably won't believe it until the final "i" is dotted and the final "t" is crossed. But after three years of broken deals and broken promises, the New England Patriots have finally been sold... tentatively.

The NFL team was purchased Wednesday for a reported $85 million by Remington Products owner Victor Kiam II, who says he'll play a discreet role in the team's future.

The sale came three years after the team was first offered and following several unsuccessful deals.

"I'm very pleased that the deal has been completed, and I'm very pleased that the league has given it their tentative agreement," Kiam said in a prepared statement.

The sale was approved unanimously by NFL owners meeting in Dallas, along with the sale of the Seattle Seahawks, pending the receipt of documents by the league office within 10 days.

NFL officials anticipated no problems with the deal, although the Patriots said in a release "that it could take anywhere from two to three weeks for all the finances to come together."

William H. Sullivan, owner of the Patriots since the team's inception as an American Football League franchise in 1960, had made several fruitless attempts to sell the team in recent years.

"It's more than a relief; it's a feeling of joy," he said. "With all the bickering and all the false starts, the fans were the victims. It's a tremendous feeling."

The deal was completed Wednesday morning by attorneys for both sides and forms a partnership of Kiam, Sullivan and Fran Murray, Patriots spokeswoman Joan Bishop. The team did not release terms of the sale.

"Owning the Patriots will be a labor of love. My goal is to win and winning means bringing home the Super Bowl trophy," Kiam said. "I'm not going to be one of those owners who second guesses or tries to give the coaches plays."

The Patriots finished second in the American Football Conference East Division last season and have a 2-3 record this year.

Bishop said a decision on whether the Patriots will remain in Foxboro, Mass., depends on whether Kiam acquires Sullivan Stadium.

"He has indicated he will be putting in a bid in on the stadium at a later point," she said.

Kiam will be the majority owner of the club, and Sullivan and Murray will be minority stockholders, Patriots officials said. Sullivan will remain in his capacity as president and Patrick Sullivan will remain as general manager," Bishop said.

In Dallas, NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle said he was pleased that Sullivan would remain active with the Patriots.

"He's been an important part of the league," Rozelle said. "He's very happy with the terms, and that makes us happy."

"He (Kiam) sounds like an exciting addition to the league," Dallas Cowboys president Tex Schramm said.

Murray is a Philadelphia entrepreneur who purchased an option to buy the Patriots on Dec. 31, 1986. In two years, Murray formed several groups which were unable to buy the team. He filed suit in January in an effort to gain control of the team.

Kiam is the owner and chairman of Bridgeport, Conn.-based Remington Products and is best known for his television commercials hawking electric razors.

NFL owners had conditionally approved sale of the Patriots to Reebok Chairman Paul Fireman in Miami Beach on May 25.

The Fireman negotiations fell through in July after intricate talks over the purchase of Sullivan Stadium from federal bankruptcy trustee Stanley Miller.

Miller is trying to get the best possible arrangement for creditors owed some $52.6 million from Chuck Sullivan's Stadium Management Corp. Chuck and Patrick Sullivan are sons of William Sullivan.

The Sullivans announced July 28 they were selling the team to Kiam after discussions with numerous other potential buyers failed to produce an agreement.

Kiam had advanced the franchise approximately $3 million over the past two months to help meet operating costs. His chief fiscal officer, Bob Romano, has been in the Foxboro area to oversee a fiscal reorganization of the franchise.

Winless Tar Heels Seek To Stop Slide Vs. Deacs

By Tom Foreman, Jr.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Three teams looking to end losing streaks will take their search into Atlantic Coast Conference action this weekend when winless North Carolina goes to Wake Forest and Virginia tries to snap a lifetime slide against No. 11 Clemson.

The Tar Heels have lost all four games under new head coach Mack Brown, and have a losing streak that stretches back through the final three games of last year, all losses to ACC opponents. Wake Forest has lost its last two games and had last weekend off.

On top of it all of North Carolina's troubles, Brown says the team is trying to regain its confidence; the Tar Heels were so down after losing to Auburn that Brown called off Monday's practice, and he even went so far as to disregard the statistics of the four games and consider Saturday a new beginning.

"I really didn't know how losing would affect our players, how hard they would take it," Brown said. "But the depression has been a lot bigger and deeper than I anticipated."

Brown said one problem he will have to overcome is the lack of emotion from his team.

"I know we need to have some fun playing. We've been too uptight, too tentative," he says. "You can't be reckless and fly around when you're worrying about all the bad things that might happen."

On the other hand, Wake Forest Coach Bill Dooley feels his team should be unbeaten.

"We felt that we had the opportunity to win both at N.C. State and at Michigan and are disappointed that we did not," Dooley says, adding that he thinks the ACC title race appears to be "wide open."

"We can still have a very successful season if we can improve during the upcoming weeks," he says.

Virginia hasn't beaten Clemson in the 27 times they have met. Coach George Welsh says both sides have a keen interest in the streak.

"There's certainly enough motivation on their side," Welsh said, noting that this year's Clemson team doesn't want to be the first to lose to the Cavaliers. "It makes them harder to beat."

Clemson Coach Danny Ford, who has beaten 79 ACC teams in his tenure, doesn't want this time to be the end of the streak.

"I hope our kids are aware of it and want to win," Ford said, adding. "Everything runs out sometime. Nothing lasts forever."

Georgia Tech goes to Maryland in the other conference action, and N.C. State has a revenge match at home against East Tennessee State.

The Yellow Jackets have a streak of their own that they will have to try and break on the road. Last Saturday's loss to the Wolfpack means Georgia Tech hasn't beaten a Division I-A team in 14 tries, and Coach Bobby Ross hasn't won an ACC game in 10 contests.

Maryland and Georgia Tech are meeting for the first time, and it's Ross' first trip to College Park since he left the school in the wake of the controversy over the death of basketball star Len Bias and surrounding problems.

Cone...

Cone shouldn't have had much difficulty making his deadline Wednesday night, even with the late start (7:10 p.m. PDT). After going 20-3 with a 2.22 ERA during the season, he was roughed up and finally removed for a pinch-hitter in the top of the third. His didn't have a shorter outing as a starter all year.

Like they did Tuesday night, the Dodgers took a 1-0 lead in the first inning of Game 2 on an RBI single by Mike Marshall. This time, it came after a one-out walk to Mickey Hatcher, a surprise starter at first base for Los Angeles, and a two-out balk which moved Hatcher to second.

The Dodgers broke the game open by scoring four runs in the second inning. As it turned out, that gave them enough offense to win the game.

The key to the inning was a two-out single by Belcher, an .071 hitter during the season. That put runners on first and second. Steve Sax then singled to drive in Jeff Hamilton, who had been hit by a pitch with one out.

Hatcher followed with a double down the left-field line to drive in Belcher and Sax. After Kirk Gibson was walked intentionally, Marshall singled to right to score Hatcher and make it 5-0.

Hernandez followed a leadoff walk to Gregg Jefferies in the top of the fourth with a homer over the right-center field fence, making it 5-2.

The only scoring after that until the Mets' ninth came in the bottom of the fifth when Alfredo Griffin grounded into a forceout with the bases loaded to drive in Marshall, who led off the inning with his third single of the game.

"This was really an outstanding game by Belcher. You've got to give him credit," Mets' manager Davey Johnson said. "It was just a great game. As for my guy (Cone), this was his worst outing all year. He didn't settle in."

Johnson said wasn't too concerned about the article and pointed to some other problems that untracked the usually cool Cone.

"This is what happened with Cone," Johnson said. "He threw down the middle to (Mickey) Hatcher but they called it a ball in the first inning and that upset him. Then he had the balk, which unraveled him further. He really got out of sync, and started overthrowing and made a lot of bad pitches."

Exchange Over Kennedy Image Sparks Strong Partisan Reaction

By Donald M. Rothberg
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The heated vice presidential debate exchange over Dan Quayle's invocation of John F. Kennedy is drawing strong partisan reaction, with Democrats denouncing the "audacity" of the Indiana senator and backers of the Republican ticket accusing Lloyd Bentsen of "a cheap shot."

Politicians followed party lines in their reaction to Wednesday night's confrontation between the hand-picked candidates for vice president.

Backers of Democrat Michael Dukakis declared Bentsen a landslide winner, while supporters of Republican George Bush were equally effusive about Quayle's performance.

Debate coaches gave the edge to Bentsen, with one calling the Kennedy exchange the point that turned the clash in the Texan's favor.

Melissa Maxcy Wade, the director of forensics at Emory University and a member of a panel of experts who judged the debate for The Associated Press, said "I thought Quayle really held his own until we got to the John Kennedy question. It was like a father putting down a child. I thought the momentum turned then."

The dramatic highlight of the 90-minute debate occurred at the midpoint when Quayle said his qualifications for high office were equal to those of Kennedy when he was elected president in 1960. Like Kennedy, Quayle has served eight years in the Senate.

"Senator, you're no Jack Kennedy," Bentsen snapped.

"That was really uncalled for," Quayle retorted.

Replied Bentsen: "You're the one that was making the comparison, senator ... and I did not think the comparison was well taken."

"Dan Quayle has the audacity to compare himself to John Kennedy," said Buie Seawell, chairman of the Colorado Democratic Party. "You saw Lloyd Bentsen throw a right cross that dropped him to the canvas."

"I think it was a cheap shot," Republican Sen. Alan Simpson of Wyoming said of the Bentsen jibe. "That was very unbecoming of Lloyd Bentsen."

Arne Carlson, Minnesota state auditor and the state's highest ranking GOP official, praised both debaters.

"Bentsen is obviously mature, well informed," he said. "Quayle came across as quite bright, alert. I think he did an excellent job of dispelling concern people had over his candidacy."

Carlson said Bentsen "made a terrible mistake with the jab on John Kennedy. I think most people thought that was unnecessary and quite rude."

"It threw a chill over the whole debate, a sour note," said Atlanta-based pollster Clairbourne Darden. "It changed from then on, the way you looked at Lloyd Bentsen."

California pollster Mervyn Field also used the man-boy analogy, to describe the Kennedy exchange.

"Bentsen came through as the man and Quayle came through as the boy," he said.

Field said he thought Bentsen did so well people might wish he were at the top of the Democratic ticket rather than Dukakis.

"It may be a mixed blessing to the Democratic ticket," he said.

Darden took a similar view.

"Bentsen is much better than Dukakis as a communicator and as a leader," he said. "Bentsen makes Michael Dukakis look weak."

Steve Teichner, a California pollster, said he saw no clear winner.

"Because of the low expectations for Quayle, the polls will probably show that Quayle probably won," said Teichner. "As for whether the debate will help in the overall race, I think it's a wash."

Merle Black, a political scientist at the University of North Carolina, said "I think Bentsen did a better job. I think the Dukakis ticket ought to be helped by his performance."

But he also praised Quayle who, he said, "performed well enough that the Bush campaign will not have to engage in extensive damage control after tonight. But I think he was out-debated by Bentsen."

Nancy Neuman, president of the League of Women Voters, called the debate a draw.

Issues That They Talked About

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

When they weren't sparring over who was qualified to be a heartbeat away from the presidency, Dan Quayle and Lloyd Bentsen also locked horns over Social Security, environmental protection, campaign finance and other issues in their sole face-to-face campaign showdown.

Here is a look at some of the major issues they argued over in Wednesday night's debate:

QUALIFICATIONS

Quayle asked to be judged by his experience on "the three biggest issues that are going to be confronting America in the next presidency ... national security and arms control, jobs and education, and the federal budget deficit."

He said his work in Congress, including his authorship of the Job Training Partnership Act of 1983, has established his credentials. "On each one of those issues I have more experience than does the governor of Massachusetts," said the 41-year-old Quayle.

But when the Republican said he was no younger than John F. Kennedy when he ran for president, the 67-year-old Bentsen said he knew Kennedy and "Senator, you're no Jack Kennedy."

SOCIAL SECURITY

Bentsen said Quayle had "voted eight times to cut the benefits on Social Security."

"That's wrong," said Quayle.

Bentsen said the Reagan administration had tried repeatedly to make deep cuts in Social Security, and Vice President George Bush cast a tie-breaking vote in 1985 to freeze benefits. "When you talk about Social Security the people that are going to protect it are the Democrats who brought forth that program," he said.

But Quayle said Bentsen himself had voted twice to delay the Social Security cost-of-living adjustments, and Dukakis had supported a freeze at the national governors' conference. He said what the Democrats "try to do time and time again is to scare the old people of this country."

ENVIRONMENT

Quayle, asked why he had voted "two-thirds of the time" against environmental protection legislation, said, "I have a very strong record on the environment in the United States Senate." He said he voted for the Superfund and to override a Reagan veto of the Clean Water Act.

Quayle also blamed Dukakis for Boston Harbor's being "the dirtiest waterway in America."

Bentsen derided the "late conversion" to environmentalism and charged, "it was this administration, their administration, that cut out the money early on to be able to clean up ... Boston Harbor." He said the Democrats were responsible for the Superfund and the Clean Air and Water acts.

POVERTY

Asked why he had voted for cuts in school nutrition and against expanding the childhood immunization program, Quayle said, "This administration and a George Bush administration will be committed to eradicating poverty. Poverty hasn't gone up in this administration. It hasn't gone down much either, and that means that we have a challenge ahead of us." He said tax reform had taken 6 million working poor families off the tax rolls.

"The poverty program we are going to concentrate on is creating jobs and opportunities," said the Indiana senator.

Bentsen charged Quayle was "of no help at all" in the recently passed overhaul of welfare laws.

CONTRA AID

Bentsen acknowledged disagreeing with his running mate on military aid for the Contra rebels in Nicaragua, but Bentsen said he and Dukakis both support the Arias peace plan for Central America.

The United States Holocaust Memorial Museum

The Associated Press

Cornerstone of U.S. Holocaust Memorial is unveiled by President Reagan on Wednesday

Reagan Dedicates Holocaust Museum

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan issued a challenge to anti-Semitism at home and abroad as he dedicated a Holocaust museum in the face of protesters who called the memorial un-American and anti-Christian.

In a speech at a cornerstone ceremony near the Washington Monument, Reagan on Wednesday said the Holocaust Memorial Museum, scheduled for completion on the site in 1992, "will examine the nature and meaning of the continuing curse that is anti-Semitism."

"I think all of us here are aware of those, even among our own countrymen, who have dedicated themselves to the disgusting task of minimizing or even denying the truth of the Holocaust," he said. "This act of intellectual genocide must not go unchallenged."

Reagan referred to groups that dispute the generally accepted account of the murder of about 6 million Jews and other persecuted people in Nazi death camps during World War II.

"And yet, just as we must challenge it here at home, so too we must challenge anti-Semitism abroad," the president said, accusing the United Nations of "intellectual infamy" and the Soviet Union of "the subtler forms of anti-Semitism."

"We know that the United Nations, whose peacekeepers were honored only last week for their service to the world, has yet to repeal its infamous resolution equating Zionism and racism," he told his audience. "We know where such intellectual infamy can lead. The world has learned that when the truth is turned on its head, holocausts become possible."

"And there are subtler forms of anti-Semitism," Reagan added. "There are still tens of thousands — maybe even hundreds of thousands — of Soviet Jews who wait to leave the Soviet Union so that they may live free as Jews. And here, as we lay this cornerstone and vow that the Jewish people will never stand alone against tyranny, I want to ask the Soviet leaders a question: Where are those exit visas?"

This and other remarks of the president were greeted with warm applause by the invited audience of about 1,500. The president, assisted by Harvey M. Meyerhoff of Baltimore, chairman of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Commission, pulled a gold cord to reveal the chunk of pink North Carolina granite that will stand at the corner of the museum.

As the president's motorcade approached the site, however, it passed a scattering of pickets carrying signs. One read, "Stop Un-American Holocaust Museum on Our Historic Mall."

Another attacked the museum as "Anti-American, Anti-Christian, Anti-Truth."

Saudi Drive Causes Oil Prices To Drop

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

BONN, West Germany — Saudi Arabia, determined to wrest back buyers in world oil markets in the wake of the Iran-Iraq conflict, has launched a full-fledged price and output war that has driven prices to their lowest levels since the free-fall of 1986.

The Saudis, who are the world's largest oil exporters, have raised their own planned output by about 15 percent in the last month in an effort to enforce discipline within the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

The Saudi's daily output of 5.5 million barrels — well above their official OPEC quota of 4.3 million barrels — adds to supplies that already were excessive, and has pushed prices for some Persian Gulf crudes to less than $10 a barrel this week. OPEC's official target price is $18 a barrel.

The Saudis' goal is to cause so much pain to other OPEC members that they will feel obliged to negotiate seriously and reach a lasting output-sharing agreement in place of the flimsy accords that have emerged from every OPEC meeting since 1986, when prices were about $8 a barrel.

Under an effective agreement, other members of the 13-nation cartel would stop nibbling away at the Saudis' share of the world oil market. The Saudis and their Kuwaiti allies want to nail down a firm market share for themselves before next year, when Iraq and Iran are expected to expand their export capacity in hope of boosting oil revenues to finance postwar reconstruction.

In an unusually blunt statement Monday, the Saudi government said that it would raise its own production to protect its market share unless other OPEC members began restraining their output.

"The Saudis and Kuwaitis are playing the same game that they did in 1986, forcing down prices to a level where other members have to take action," said Mehdi Varzi, an experienced oil analyst who is a research director at the London investment house Kleinwort Benson Securities.

A source familiar with official Saudi thinking said the Saudis have "drawn the line" on overproduction by OPEC members. "The Saudis are going to protect their market share, and do whatever it takes no matter where the market goes," the source said.

In seeking to put pressure on Iraq as well as other OPEC members, the Saudis have made a significant policy shift.

During its war with Iran, Iraq received substantial financial and diplomatic support from Saudi Arabia and Kuwait. Iraq was viewed as a major bulwark against the spread of Iran's brand of radical Islamic fundamentalism.

But with the war now over, the Saudis now are driving the message home that it cannot continue to produce oil at the very high levels that the Saudis tolerated when Iraq needed every available dollar of revenues for the war effort.

Iraq, which used the war as an excuse to refuse to abide by OPEC agreements, is producing 2.7 million barrels a day. That is more than 1 million barrels a day above the ceiling that OPEC asked it to accept. Next year, Iraq hopes to boost its daily export capacity to more than 3.5 million barrels.

Contraceptive Vaccine Proves Effective In Guinea Pig Tests

NEW YORK (AP) — A vaccine that makes the body attack sperm was 100 percent effective in tests with female and male guinea pigs, the first demonstration of contraception without fail from a vaccine, scientists reported today.

The study, which also found the effects of the vaccination temporary, raises the prospect that a similar vaccine might work in women and men.

But "there are many things about it that would have to be changed or improved to make it a useful method for either agricultural animals or humans," said researcher Paul Primakoff.

The vaccine is designed to prevent fertilization, which may make it more widely acceptable than another vaccine already in human testing that stops development of the embryo, other scientists said.

Primakoff and colleagues at the University of Connecticut Health Center in Farmington, Conn., reported the experiment in the British journal Nature.

None of the 25 female guinea pigs that were vaccinated before mating had litters, nor did the mates of the six immunized male guinea pigs. Animals that received sham immunizations for comparison purposes remained fertile.

Eleven of 24 females tested had regained fertility by nine to 11 months after the immunization, and all four of the longest-studied group had delivered litters by 15 months. Among males, four of six had regained fertility by seven months after the immunization.

In a telephone interview, Primakoff said his team has since produced contraception in 17 other male guinea pigs.

The vaccine is designed to make the body's disease-fighting immune system attack a protein found in guinea pig sperm. The details of just how that blocks fertility in guinea pigs are not known, Primakoff said.

But immune system proteins called antibodies, taken from the immunized females, prevented sperm from binding normally to guinea pig eggs in the test tube. That suggests the vaccine blocks fertilization within vaccinated females, Primakoff said.

In males, the vaccination triggered an invasion of the testicle by immune system cells. That is "not something you would want going on in your body" because of the potential for long-term harm, Primakoff said.

So to produce a human male vaccine, researchers would have to find a way to trigger just the antibodies without the rest of an immune system reaction, he said.

No evidence indicates the guinea pig vaccine would work in humans, nor is there any assurance that human sperm contains a suitable protein target for a similar vaccine, he said.

No Releases Expected

WIESBADEN, West Germany (AP) — Officials see no sign that other American hostages in Lebanon may be freed in the wake of a captive's release earlier this week, a member of the U.S. State Department said.

The U.S. official, who came to this city with a State Department team to debrief the freed hostage, also said Wednesday the Reagan administration assumes the kidnappers are financed by Iran.

Doctors here said freed hostage Mithleshwar Singh, a 60-year-old Indian citizen and resident alien of the United States, was in good spirits. However, they said he faces tremendous stress as a result of his 20-month ordeal.

U.S. Air Force spokesman Master Sgt. Charles Fick said today that Singh, was resting at the Air Force's Wiesbaden hospital had decided not hold a press conference.

The debriefing team arrived in Wiesbaden, about 25 miles from Frankfurt, shortly after Singh was flown from Syria early Wednesday. Debriefing began that day. The group hopes to gain new information from him on the status of nine Americans missing in Lebanon.

After arriving in Damascus, Singh said three American educators abducted with him and remaining in captivity were "OK."

Local Cast Gives 'Carnival' Boost Into 'Just Right' Spot

If ever Greenville's city fathers come up with a plan to designate living treasures, the drama department at East Carolina University should be at the very top of the list.

Whether it's productions of the Summer Theater, the dance department or the East Carolina Playhouse, as in Wednesday night's opening of the musical "Carnival," everyone connected with the ECU Drama Department continues to astound and delight eastern North Carolina audiences.

Watching "Carnival" on stage at McGinnis Theater, it's hard to remember that the cast is not a highly polished professional group, but instead consists mostly of ECU students with a couple of slightly older ones on hand.

The question arises — when is it necessary to bring in outside talent when it is undeniably apparent that the university has a rich pool of diverse talent of its own? The answer: seldom ever.

In the case of "Carnival," it helps that the basic material is so good. The book by Michael Stewart, based on material by Helen Deutsch, has super ingredients for an appealing plot combining the magic of make believe, innocence, romance (with happy endings) and touches of humor. Bob Merrill's music and lyrics bring to full theatrical realization the possibilities of all these factors.

It's been said before, but must be said again, that in the choreography for musicals at ECU, Mavis Ray keeps right on astonishing us. Hers are dances that are not only innovative, but are vibrantly alive with the physical beauty and story telling quality that can be projected with the human body moving to music. (My viewing companion, who speaks only limited English, could not constrain himself from repeatedly shouting 'ole' in chorus with thunderous applause that greeted spirited dance sequences — "Sword, Rose and Cape"; "Humming"; "Tanz Mit Mir," and the rousing, many-faceted "Carnival Ballet.")

Some personal bouquets: To Nina Blanton, totally believable, altogether a warm young innocent, beautiful to look at and wonderful to listen to. She brings sighs to the heart in "Love Makes The World Go Round," and cheers in the intricate patterns of "Yum Ticky."

To Stuart Maxwell. This young man dazzled audiences with his athletic macho performance earlier in "Diamond Studs." Performing a contrastingly different role as Paul Berthalet in "Carnival," he tugs at our heartstrings, giving a performance that strangely has echoes of a pouting Peter Pan, plus that of a physical cripple wanting but afraid to be loved. And such a fine singing voice.

Divorce Petition

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Comedian Whoopi Goldberg wants to end her two-year marriage to Dutch cinematographer David Claessen, citing irreconcilable differences.

Details of the divorce petition Miss Goldberg filed Tuesday weren't disclosed by her spokeswoman, Lee Solters, Claessen, 29, and Miss Goldberg, 33, met during the filming of a documentary on the homeless.

A Reflector Review

To Janice V. Schreiber, faculty member in the drama department, truly incomparable as The Incomparable Rosalie. Her "Humming" scene with Schlegel is possibly the most challenging (and rewarding) scene in "Carnival," and she unabashedly (and rightfully) played it to the hilt — with gusto balanced by pathos.

To Billy Sharpe, as Jacquot, Berthalet's long suffering friend and with Maxwell, the talking and singing voices behind puppets Carrot Top, Horrible Henry, Renardo and Marguerite. Incidentally, the quartet of puppets are assigned the best comic dialogue in "Carnival," designed by Dee Braxton (also an orchestra member), the puppets are captivating.

Mentioning the puppets brings to mind an important consideration, "Carnival" is entirely suitable for viewing by children.

A collective bouquet to all the others in this large cast of three dozen, including Jeffrey S. Hargett as Marco the Magnificent, Vandy Behr as Mr. Schlegel, the vigorous Rousabouts, the glamorous Bluebird Girls and everyone else. Without exception, each added luster to the entertainment.

Last but not least, a special bouquet to veteran director Edgar R. Loessin; musical director Barry Shank; the carnival candy-colored world of Robert Alpers' set and Maria Costa's brilliant circus costumes, all effectively showcased by Susan Van Dyke's lighting.

"Carnival" is a fortunate choice for the first of the season Playhouse offerings — its color is a just right musical reminder of nature's almost-here glory of autumn.

'Simon & Simon' Opens New Year In Flip-Flop TV Career

By Jerry Buck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Since 1981, CBS' "Simon & Simon" has led a charmed life, or a star-crossed one, depending on how you look at it.

It's the eighth season for this odd-couple detective series. The show's been up, down and around. It was a flop its first time out, and CBS renewed it only at the eleventh hour. Then it became a hit, until it ran into "The Cosby Show" and NBC's Thursday night juggernaut.

There was even a brouhaha a few years ago when CBS tried to move the show's locale from San Diego to Los Angeles. San Diego, still smarting over the loss of "Harry O.," mounted a postcard campaign that caused CBS to back down.

"They've been beating on us for eight years," said Gerald McRaney, who co-stars with Jameson Parker as brother detectives. "They can't get us down for the count. I think the show has survived for the most part because we've got good scripts. And we don't take ourselves too seriously."

"The relationship between the brothers and the notion of a family make it work. That would have worked in Elizabethan theater. Loyalty and integrity. People like to see those values reaffirmed."

"Simon & Simon," which returns Saturday, tells the story of two brothers who are unlike, yet supportive of each other. McRaney is Rick, rough, eccentric, laid back, who'd rather pluck his guitar and have fun. Parker is A.J., conservative, a snappy dresser, whose ambition and hard work keeps their detective agency on track.

"A lot of detective shows steer clear of comedy," said McRaney. "That makes us one of the few one-hour comedy shows on the air. We do a few serious episodes. But we have a sibling rivalry, and that's what makes it fun."

"From the beginning, Jameson and I participated in shaping the show. We weren't just hired help. The creator, Philip DeGuere, wanted us to be a part of it. I've directed five shows and written one. We read through the scripts every week and our suggestions are listened to seriously."

The show was originally set in Florida and was called "Pirate's Key." That was before "Miami Vice," and neither Universal Television nor CBS was too keen on filming it in Florida. The locale was changed to San Diego, although most of the show is filmed in Los Angeles.

Mary Carver, who plays mother to the pair, is still with the series. But other cast members have come and gone as the show has changed through the years. Jeannie Wilson and Eddie Barth from the original cast have left, as has Tim Reid, who was Detective Downtown Brown. Reid stars in "Frank's Place" on CBS.

This summer, McRaney worked on two TV movies. "The People Across the Lake," a Gothic mystery co-starring Valerie Harper, was shown on NBC this past Monday.

He also took a small role in the CBS movie "Where the Hell's the Gold?" so he could spend some time with his fiancée, Delta Burke of "Designing Women." The Western comedy also stars Willie Nelson and Jack Elam.

"We shot it in southern Colorado and northern New Mexico," said McRaney, who has a second home in Telluride, Colo. "We used a narrow-gauge railroad which runs through some beautiful country. My ambition is to rob the Durango & Silverton Railroad from horseback. My partner and I want to take a dollar from the engineer."

McRaney is also at work creating a new comedy series for himself for that day when "Simon & Simon" finally does come to an end. He also has a script for himself and Miss Burke for a lighthearted mystery set in New Orleans. They spent a month in New Orleans this summer and spent a week on the Mississippi Queen riverboat.

Wedding plans are indefinite, but Miss Burke, who's from Florida, and McRaney, from Mississippi, do want to tie the knot in an old Southern plantation house.

If it won, declarer would be on a diamond finesse for an overtrick. If it lost, all the trumps would be out and West would find himself in an unenviable position. A diamond lead would be into declarer's tenace; a heart or club lead would permit a ruff-suff. Either way, the slam would be in the bag.

Pinchet Loses For Power

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — President Augusto Pinochet's military government conceded defeat today in a vote he hoped would extend his 15-year rule until 1997. The referendum cleared the way for democratic elections next year.

Interior Minister Sergio Fernandez pledged to respect the results of Wednesday's balloting but also to enforce a 1980 constitution the political opposition wants changed.

Under terms of the constitution, Pinochet, who seized power in a bloody 1973 coup, remains in power until 1990.

When definitive results became known in the early morning, a noisy caravan of automobiles formed at a downtown traffic circle, with drivers beeping their horns and shouting. "He's going to fall."

Police reported few incidents of violence, and traffic was normal later in the morning.

Jubilant opposition leaders promised to pursue national unity as they seek a speedy return to democratic government.

"The country delivered its mandate... (and is) on the way to a transition to an authentic democracy," said Patricio Aylwin, president of the centrist Christian Democratic Party and leader of a 16-party opposition coalition, told cheering supporters.

The coalition said some opposition leaders were contacting the government this morning to agree on a place and date for a celebration rally, probably held over the weekend.

Fernandez, Aylwin and Roman Catholic Cardinal Francisco Fresno also hailed the peaceful reaction a sign of Chileans' maturity and civic responsibility. Patricio Hales, Communist Party spokesman, said the party took measures to keep people quiet "and prevent disorders that could have been used by the government as a pretext for repression."

A convincing majority of Chileans, voting simply "yes" or "no," rejected a proposal by Pinochet and other military chiefs that he remain in office until 1997.

With 15,960 of the 22,248 voting tables reporting, the Interior Ministry announced that "no" ballots totaled 2,754,805, or 53.3 percent, while "yes" ballots totaled 2,290,972, or 44.3 percent. There were 121,400 ballots that were blank or voided for being wrongly marked.

The margin of victory was even greater according to a count by the opposition coalition, which waged an effective grass-roots campaign.

Its returns, also partial, showed, 2,771,995 "no" votes for 57.6 percent, and 2,022,031 "yes" votes, or 42.2 percent. It gave no specific count of blank or voided ballots.

Fernandez formally conceded defeat early today after an emergency meeting with Pinochet, the four-man military junta that serves as a legislature, and the 15-member Cabinet.

"We abide by the results already known to the people," Fernandez said, reading from a text.

His expression grave, he added that the government "reiterates its unbreakable resolve to comply with, and have others comply with, the constitution and laws."

Sandinistas Boost Ortega's Powers

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The Sandinista party has pushed through a law that grants President Daniel Ortega sweeping powers to make arrests and silence news media during a state of emergency.

Also Wednesday, the government banned Nicaraguans from receiving any type of official U.S. aid.

The new Emergency Law went into effect immediately after it was approved by the leftist Sandinistas' 61-seat majority in the 96-seat National Assembly. It allows the president to declare a state of emergency and restrict civil liberties for reasons of war, economic crisis or national disasters.

In a statement, the opposition

Popular Social Christian Party decried the law as "an unrestrained concentration of extraordinary powers" that could render Ortega "an absolute dictator."

A National State of Emergency decree was in effect from March 1982 until shortly after a Central American peace plan was signed by the region's presidents in August 1987.

Under the new law, the president can declare a state of emergency that permits the government to temporarily confiscate privately-owned businesses and vehicles. It empowers the executive to suspend broadcast and print media and communications services "when necessary to maintain public order."

Drought Could Affect Consumer Prices For Still Another Year

By Don Kendall
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new Agriculture Department analysis of this summer's drought-induced rise in wheat prices says consumers might feel some effect at grocery stores at least through 1989.

"Past movements suggest that the drought's influence on farm prices of wheat will be felt for about a year at the industrial (wholesale) level and for a year and a half or more by consumers," the report said.

The study was done by Ronald A. Babula of the department's Economic Research Service, and David A. Bessler, Texas A&M University, and reported in the current issue of Agricultural Outlook magazine.

Babula said Wednesday in a telephone interview that he and Bessler are not forecasting how food prices will behave in the coming months. Prices of various items could decline but still leave some impact from the 1988 drought.

"We're not predicting anything," Babula said. "We're showing how things have moved in the past... and some of the things that we might expect to see happen in the future."

A statistical computer model was used to show how prices of wheat at the farm, wholesale prices and retail prices have moved together in the past.

The model was then "shocked" with an increase in the farm price of wheat to simulate the 7.7 percent average monthly boost during May, June and July, when the effects of the drought were first reflected in the market.

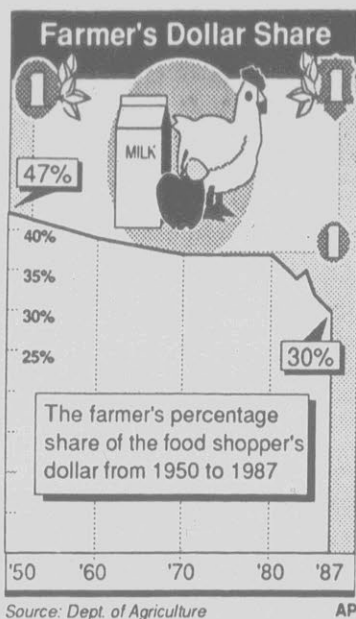

"When the farm price shock occurs, processor (wholesale) prices for wheat rise immediately, peaking a month after the rise in the farm price," the report said. "At their highest, processor prices increase less than half of the 7.7 percent increase in the farm price. Processor price increases are felt for about a year, but the impulse generally declines in strength through time."

On the other hand, the 7.7 percent average increase in the farm price of wheat "generates gradual, not immediate, increases in consumer prices of wheat-related goods," the report said.

Delivery, sale and consumption of flour, bread, cake mixes, pasta and other wheat-related foods occur throughout the year and are not as closely tied to the wheat crop cycle as processing, which includes the flour milling and baking industries.

"So, the consumer price effects last more than a year," the report said. "Consumer price rises peak at seven months, but prices stay relatively high until 17 to 20 months after the initiating farm price shock. The increase in consumer prices is smaller but more enduring than the jump in processor prices."

Report Says Water Rules Not Enforced

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal and state governments took legally required enforcement action for only 2.6 percent of more than 100,000 violations of the Safe Drinking Water Act in fiscal 1987, a conservation group said today.

It is the policy of the Environmental Protection Agency to permit 23 months to lapse before even considering enforcement actions such as fines, lawsuits or administrative orders, the National Wildlife Federation said in releasing its findings.

The federation said the nation's water systems or states notified customers of only 6 percent of the violations instead of every single one as the law requires.

The federation said it examined 15,000 pages of EPA records covering the 1987 fiscal year and found that 36,763 public water systems committed 101,588 violations of the act. The affected water systems serve about 40 million people.

Peter Cook, deputy director of EPA's Office of Drinking Water, said he was at a loss to explain how the federation arrived at its figures. He said his office recorded about 2,800 systems with "significant" violations in 1987, and 15,500 systems with violations EPA believed minor, a decline from 4,500 and 17,000, respectively, the year before.

"All regulatory agencies must have enforcement discretion," Cook said. When EPA finds a violation, "It is our position that it need not be an enforcement action" that follows.

Sixty-four percent of water systems serve fewer than 500 people, with 73 percent of significant violators and 83 percent of minor violators that small or smaller, Cook said.

Small systems may have difficulty raising money for the best equipment, he said. "It may take some time for this community to float a loan. ... You're talking about years. It doesn't make a lot of sense, if you have a cooperative community which is moving ahead, to beat them over the head with penalties that they can't afford anyway."

Senate Says No 'Price Gouging' Prices Go Up, But With 'Restraint'

By Mike Robinson

WASHINGTON (AP) — Price gouging at the nation's supermarkets, a concern raised by lawmakers as drought crept over U.S. croplands, has not materialized despite some unexplained cost increases, congressional investigators say.

"The bottom line is that there has been restraint," Patrick J. Leahy, D-Vt., said Wednesday at a Senate Agriculture Committee hearing on food prices in the wake of the summer drought.

At the hearing, the General Accounting Office unveiled a report showing retail pasta prices rose 10.4 percent, cereal 7.1 percent and white bread 8.2 percent from January through June.

Forty-three percent of the pasta and cereal increases, as well as 57 percent of the rise for white bread, came before June, when the drought emerged as a serious problem for U.S. agriculture, according to the report.

But pasta, cereal and white bread prices rose more between June and August than they did in the same period last year, the report said.

Some of the worst damage from blazing sun and scarcity of rain came in the northern Plains, where durum wheat used in the making of pasta is produced.

Farm prices for durum as well as hard red spring wheat, a primary ingredient in white bread, increased this year in comparison with 1987, but that alone would not be enough to explain the price rise.

Livestock feed also came into short supply as a result of searing heat, prompting producers to step up cattle sales and driving down prices. Consumers, however, enjoyed no cost savings, GAO officials told the panel.

They said there was no clear explanation of just why prices of wheat-based products exceeded levels explainable by the drought alone.

"Prices of packing of food products went up significantly this year," Mary Kenney of the GAO told the committee. She suggested that might furnish at least part of the explanation.

"There could have been some labor cost increases. ... We don't know if there were," said John W. Harman, associate director of the GAO's resources, community and economic development division.

The one group that should not be blamed for food price increases is the farmers, said Steven D. Maurer, director of the Ohio Department of Agriculture.

"The farmer's share of the good market dollar has remained relatively constant," he said.

The price of farm commodities on average accounted for 30 percent of the price of food at the supermarket last year. The rest went to transportation, packaging, advertising and other marketing costs.

Sen. Kent Conrad, D-N.D., also said farmers should not be blamed. In addition, he rejected the notion that price increases before June could not have been related to the drought.

He said he had expected "a hot, dry summer" and the food industry might have done the same in view of its "excellent sources of intelligence."

"Conclusive evidence of price gouging has not been found," Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, told the panel, "but there are indications out there that it could develop next year."
