Rumors Keep Mideast Abuzz Over Hostages Waite May Be Freed Soon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The release of an Indian hostage prompted a flurry of reports today about a secret U.S.-Iran deal to free more captives and about the imminent release of a British hostage.

But Secretary of State George P. Shultz has denied reports that Washington is negotiating with Iran to release hostages and said that "anyone who tries to cut across our policies should butt out."

Lebanese kidnapers warned on Thursday that two American hostages may be in danger if U.N. troops are sent to Lebanon to oversee presidential elections.

Sixteen foreigners, including nine Americans, are missing in Lebanon. Most are believed held by Shiite Moslem extremists backed by Iran.

On Monday, the Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine freed Indian hostage Mithileshwar Singh after 20 months of captivity. Singh, a professor of finance at Beirut University College, is a legal resident of the United States.

In Jerusalem, the new English-language weekly The Nation reported today the United States struck a deal with Iran to free U.S. hostages in Lebanon, including the supply of arms and spare parts to Tehran through South Korea.

The unattributed report said the U.S. government agreed to pay $7 million in ransom to the militants holding the hostages but refused the group's demands for immunity from prosecution.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the report was "not true."

Two Beirut publications reported today that Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite, missing in Lebanon for more than 20 months, will be freed in 72 hours.

One report was carried by the conservative daily Al-Anwar, based in Christian east Beirut. It has no record of authoritative reports on the hostage issue, and there was no way to confirm the report.

Ash-Shiraa, based in Moslem west Beirut, said Waite and two other British hostages will be released.

Shultz Says 'No Deals'

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz has sharply denied reports that Washington is secretly negotiating with Iran for release of American hostages in Lebanon.

Shultz said that anyone who claims to be a U.S. envoy to such negotiations is lying. "Anyone who tries to cut across our policies should butt out," he added.

His remarks were reinforced by Iranian Foreign Minister Ali Akbar

Velayati, who denied categorically at a separate news conference Thursday that the United States and Iran had opened talks on hostages or any other subjects.

Shultz made his remarks Thursday at a news conference during his visit to New York for the fall session of the 43rd U.N. General Assembly. He was reacting to a spate of recent reports that the United States is involved in secret negotiations for the release of hostages.

Quayle Says He Can Stand The Heat, Will Keep Going

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Republican vice presidential nominee Dan Quayle said today he was not worried about new television ads aimed at him by the Dukakis campaign because "they obviously don't have anything bad to say about George Bush."

Quayle was asked by reporters as he toured a technical school whether he had become the key issue in the campaign.

"We can stand the attention. We can stand the heat. We're going to stay in the kitchen," Quayle said. "George Bush is going to be the next president of the United States. The voters will vote for him."

Quayle was greeted by a group of about 75 protesters as he toured Chattanooga State Technical Community College. Some carried signs reading, "We will all pray if Dan becomes president."

During a tour of the school's robotics lab, Quayle was asked by reporters about ads the Dukakis campaign unveiled Thursday aimed at driving home the idea that Bush had picked an unqualified man as his running mate.

"I haven't seen them. I've heard about them. They obviously don't have anything bad to say about George Bush and that's fine with me," Quayle said.

Quayle has shrugged off polls indicating voters believe he lost the vice presidential debate and doubt his qualifications.

Despite that rhetoric, Quayle acknowledged to reporters Thursday that he could have answered more fully questions from debate panelists about what he would do if he became president.

But the Indiana senator focused his efforts Thursday on attacking Democratic counterpart Lloyd Bentsen, saying he "waffled, shuffled, ducked and dived" questions about his differences with ticketmate Michael Dukakis.

Quayle was campaigning today in Chattanooga, Atlanta and Raleigh, N.C., before returning to Washington.

Business Leaders Expect Strong But Safe Growth

HOT SPRINGS, Va. (AP) — The nation's top business leaders today offered an optimistic view of economic prospects, predicting growth will slow enough next year to avoid a severe acceleration of inflation.

The Business Council, composed of 62 chief executives of the country's largest corporations, predicted that the economy, as measured by the gross national product, will grow 4 percent in 1988, the best in four years.

"We are living in a continued strong economy," said John S. Reed, chairman of Citicorp, the nation's largest bank. "We are very close to full employment, and the inflation numbers ... are generally felt to be in pretty good shape."

The new GNP prediction, reflecting the consensus of the chief economists of about 20 member corporations, is 1.6 percentage points better than the prediction last May when the executives last gathered for their semi-annual retreat at this resort town in the mountains of western Virginia.

Some economists in the spring still were worried about lingering aftershocks from the stock market crash of October 1987. Growth proved to be stronger than nearly anyone anticipated, and now the concern is that it is too vigorous and likely to fuel inflation.

But the Business Council's economists are projecting GNP growth of 2.5 percent next year and less than 2 percent in 1990, in line with what the Federal Reserve Board considers necessary for a "soft landing" of the economy to a sustainable, non-inflationary expansion. The economists were expecting more inflation, an increase from a 4.2 percent rate this year to 5.1 percent next year, but "no one expected a return to the high inflation rates of the late 1970s and early 1980s," their report said.

Schools Give Job Rolls Boost

WASHINGTON (AP) — Civilian unemployment fell 0.2 percentage point to 5.4 percent last month as payrolls grew by 255,000 jobs, 100,000 of them in education with the opening of the fall school term, the government said today.

The decline erased an August gain and returned joblessness to July's level.

With only one more jobless rate to come before the Nov. 8 election, economists said they did not expect the reports for September and October to help Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis. The October jobless figures will be reported only four days before the election.

Across private industry, the job gain was just 142,000. It was the second straight month of little expansion after average monthly increases of 300,000 over the first seven months of 1988, the Labor Department said.

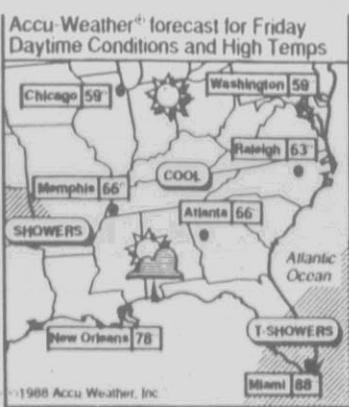

Assembly-line manufacturing jobs fell by 19,000 atop a loss of 18,000 jobs in August. That reversed an upward trend that had persisted for 1 1/2 years. Oil and gas industry employment also fell for the second month in a row after edging up gradually across the previous 12 months.

Together, those industries had averaged a monthly job gain of 65,000 from January through July.

Adult men accounted for nearly all of the decline in the overall rate last month, with joblessness falling from 4.9 percent in August to 4.5 percent last month.

Senate Axes Bills To Boost Child Aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate today effectively ended all chances for action this year on a triple-barreled family package promising child care assistance, parental job leaves and a crackdown on child pornographers.

It voted 50-46 to restrict debate and get on with the measure, but 60 votes were needed to do so. Congressional leaders hope to adjourn next week.

The vote capped two weeks of intense political and parliamentary maneuvering in which Democrats challenged Republicans to put their votes behind their pro-family rhetoric and Republicans countered that they were being railroaded into a massive package with little opportunity to propose alternate approaches.

Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., sponsor of two of the three measures in the package, accused his colleagues of "a filibuster by silence; nine days of stalling; nine days of total inertia." He said a losing vote meant the business community, the chief opponent of the parental leave section, had prevailed.

"Never in the history of American politics has there been a constituency so popular but with so little political clout as the American family," Dodd said.

But Sen. Thad Cochran, R-Miss., who led the effort to block the package, said senators needed more time to discuss alternatives such as tax incentives to encourage businesses to give leaves to parents with new or seriously ill children.

"I don't really think we've had an opportunity to analyze this with the care that we really need to," Cochran said.

Dodd's original bill required employers of over 50 people to offer workers at least 10 weeks of unpaid, job-protected leave when they have newborn, newly adopted or sick children, or have serious medical problems themselves.

The Senate unanimously voted to join the bill with a measure creating new crimes and punishments for those who possess, sell or distribute child pornography or obscene materials.

Former ASCS Chief Critical Of Quayle

A former national administrator for the Agriculture Stabilization Conservation Service who watched Wednesday's debate between the two vice presidential candidates spoke harshly Thursday of Indiana Sen. Dan Quayle.

Horace Godfrey, an ASCS administrator during the administrations of John Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson, claimed at Pitt County Democratic headquarters in Greenville that Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen was the clear winner in the debate.

"People have asked what I thought of the debate. I say 'what debate?'"

"I saw two gentlemen there and I saw one stating some facts and the other one rambling," Godfrey said.

"Senator Bentsen I thought did an excellent job and Senator Quayle did his usual job," he said.

Godfrey, who was in the area to speak to a civic organization in Simpson, said he has known Quayle since he was elected to the House of Representatives.

"He's never been a supporter of agricultural programs, never been a supporter of Social Security, or a supporter of a clean environment," Godfrey said. "In fact, I don't know what he's done in Washington except play golf."

Godfrey, who works as an agricultural consultant, also seized the opportunity to bash Gov. Jim Martin and to urge North Carolinians to vote Democrat in the November elections.

Godfrey distributed copies of a list he compiled which he said reflected Martin's voting record from 1973 to 1983 in matters pertaining to agriculture.

"He voted 12 times against farmers, and three of those times he voted against the other members of the Republican Party from North Carolina who voted with the Democrats from North Carolina," Godfrey said.

Students Recognized

Each six weeks of the school year, members of the J.H. Rose High School faculty nominate students who make significant contributions to the academic and extracurricular activities of the school.

Clear Win

Bentsen Plucks Quayle's Plumage

Both Democrat Lloyd Bentsen and Republican Dan Quayle danced around the issues Wednesday in their vice presidential debate.

There was one important distinction, however. Bentsen danced better and with more experience. The vice presidential debate was a victory for Bentsen, whose cool confidence and depth outshone Quayle's superficiality. But it was not a resounding victory. It could have been had Bentsen talked specifics and utilized his deftness at spontaneous debate more readily. Had he challenged Quayle as vigorously on other issues as he did when the Republican likened himself to John Kennedy.

Bentsen failed, however, in two respects. First, he did not challenge Quayle's insistence on debating presidential candidate Michael Dukakis instead of Bentsen, the man he was supposed to argue issues with. Quayle sounded like a well-programmed R2D2 as he continuously railed Dukakis' views. It was a ridiculous approach to professional debate and one which Bentsen should not have tolerated. The Democrat should have called the young senator from Indiana on his behavior, and questioned why Quayle wasn't discussing Bentsen's record, or his own. By doing so, he could have controlled the debate, since it wasn't clear whether Quayle knew anything else to talk about.

Second, although the benefits of Bentsen's years in the U.S. Senate clearly showed in his arguments, he failed to address issues specifically. He was quick and confident, but disappointingly vague — no surprise in this presidential campaign, but still troubling.

Nevertheless, Bentsen was the stronger of the two candidates. His maturity made Quayle's lack of substance and experience apparent.

Quayle is the largest liability the Republican party has in 1988 and he did nothing but reinforce that assessment onstage Wednesday. While he was well-coached, he was no better prepared for the debate than he is for the highest office in the nation. Evidence of presidential mettle was negligible, and his qualifications for the office he seeks showed up no better.

The choice of a running mate is an important decision for a presidential candidate. It reveals his depth and his judgment. And in 1988, Bentsen is a better choice than Quayle.

No Boos

Hazing Pirates Isn't Sportsmanlike

No more boos for the home team, please.

East Carolina University's fans have another chance Saturday at homecoming in Ficklen Stadium to prove they're mature enough and sportsmanlike enough to deserve a college football team to cheer. Fans have an opportunity to make up for the troubling and inappropriate booing of the Pirates last week.

Boo birds are a part of football obviously. They boo the referees; they boo the opposing team and sometimes they even boo what they consider to be poor decisions by their home team coach.

But the low point in local booing must have come in last Saturday's East Carolina University-Southwest Louisiana football game. The boo birds booed when quarterback Travis Hunter was sent in to give Charlie Libretto a rest.

No doubt the boo birds would argue that they were booing Coach Art Baker's decision, but the effect is the same for a young man who has performed well for ECU. It is also the same for his teammates.

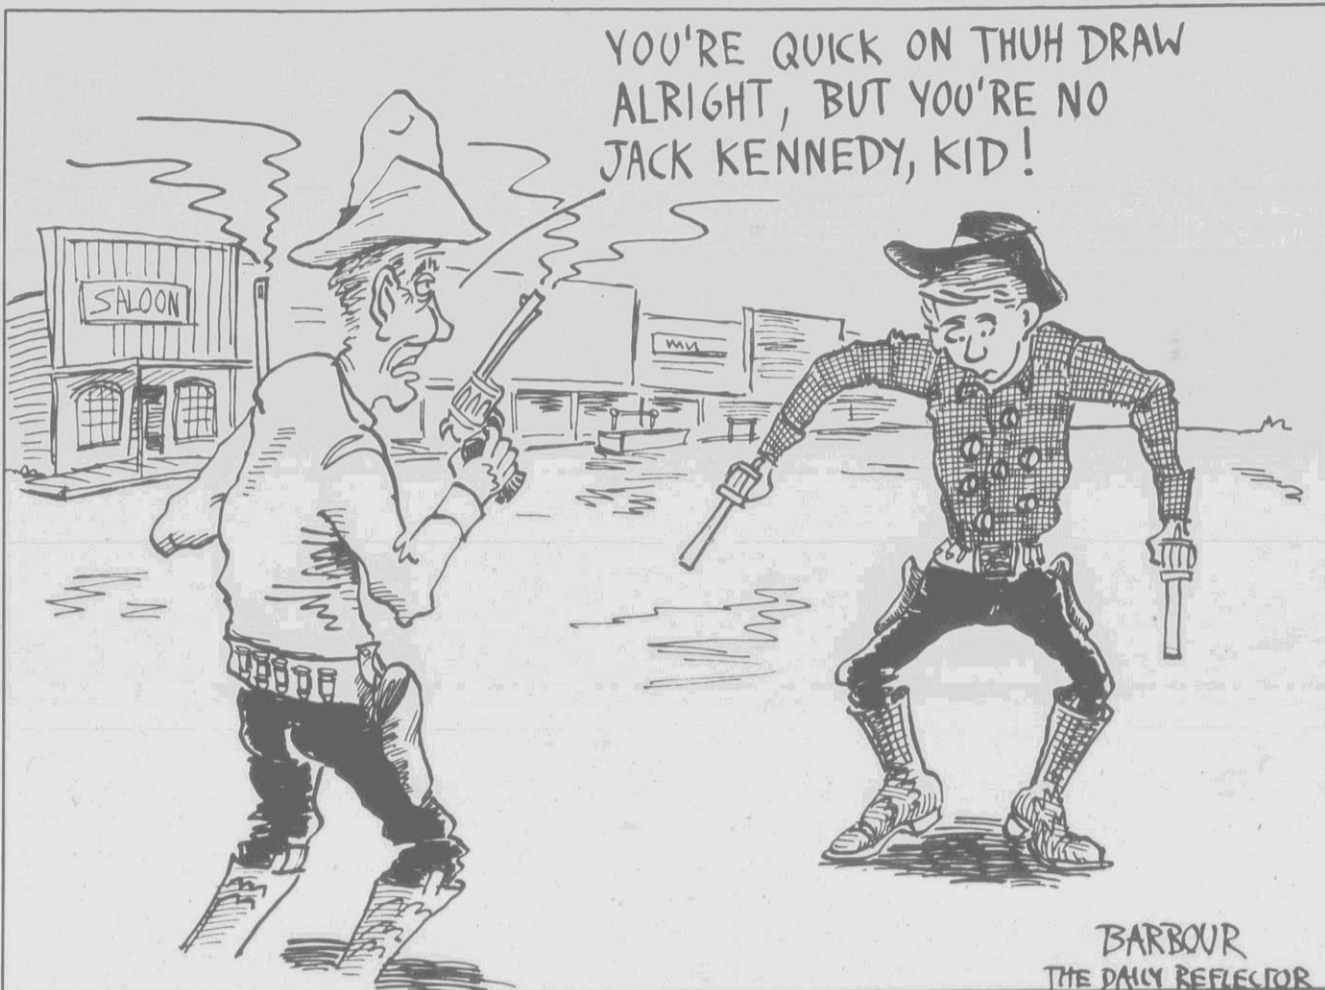

The players, including Libretto, were appalled; the coaches were appalled and so was everybody else concerned with fair play.

The fact is that East Carolina has two pretty good quarterbacks and they are putting points on the scoreboard — nearly enough in the last two games to win. Neither of them, or for that matter any of the team, deserves boos from the home crowd.

Chicago Bears players are pros and make big money. College players only receive an athletic scholarship which can lead to a college degree. Making the pros is a very long shot for practically all of them.

So-called supporters of East Carolina football got the team run out of Carter-Finley Stadium with post game antics last season. This season such supporters seem bent on destroying the team's morale.

College football is, after all, just a game, folks. Fans can cheer good plays and even hoot the refs when they think the calls are bad. Somebody needs to explain to the irresponsible few, however, that it is reprehensible to boo when a good and proven quarterback is sent in the game. It shouldn't happen again in Ficklen Stadium.

Quayle: Wisps Of Ideological Lint

WASHINGTON — Since that memorable August moment on the New Orleans riverboat, when George Bush made of Dan Quayle a gift to the country and Quayle overflowed with gratitude, the question has been: Can Quayle, who seems so energetic in body and so indolent in mind, temper his enthusiasm with lucidity? The answer came when Quayle clambered onto the Omaha stage with a cutlass clenched between his teeth, eager to shed blood and vindicate Bush's nomination of him, in defiance of the maxim "Ne Puerto Gladium" (never give a child a sword).

Did he prove himself presidential? No, he stayed in step with the top of the ticket. From Boston Harbor to Belgian endive, Quayle touched on — no, tromped on — the themes the Bush campaign considers neat-o. Quayle was so over-programmed it seemed that someone backstage.

'His handlers, who doubtless fancy themselves clever fellows because they work so well with papier-mache, tamped into Quayle lots of itsy-bitsy slivers of ideas ...'

armed with a remote-control wand, was operating a compact disc — a very compact disc — in Quayle's skull. His handlers, who doubtless fancy themselves clever fellows because they work so well with papier-mache, tamped into Quayle lots of itsy-bitsy slivers of ideas — notions, really; ideological lint.

Having had the audacity to begin his most curdled stuff (about how Dukakisites despise the common sense of Midwestern grandmothers and sneer at the idea that America is the envy of the world), it is a wonder that Quayle had the sense to stop. Stop he did, but not before confirming the suspicion that his conservatism is less a creed than an absorbed climate of opinion, absorbed in a golf cart.

George Will

Back in the backward 19th century, when, unlike today, democracy was imperfectly understood and inelegantly practiced, it was considered unseemly for national candidates to campaign. As late as 1896, McKinley spent the autumn on his front porch, refusing to campaign because speaking involved an unpleasant undertaking: "I have to think when I speak." Most of today's candidates recognize no such requirement and are emancipated by public tolerance from any such expectations.

It was not surprising that Quayle was not smooth as silk, or even as polyester. And Bentsen was unusually awkward when recurring unnecessarily to his "breakfast club" fund-raising, and when lamely defending it as "legal."

Then Bentsen with the syrup of his voice seasoned with vinegar, said Quayle is no John Kennedy. (Quayle had said that he has as much experience in Congress as Kennedy had when he ran for President.) Then a questioner (ABC's Brit Hume) made a point that Quayle was perhaps too stunned to make: Quayle is running for Vice President with more experience than Bentsen had when he ran for President in 1976.

Democratic voters who participated in the 1976 nomination process should have been spanked and sent to their rooms without dinner: They spurned two fine presidential candidates, Scoop Jackson and Bentsen. Bentsen's performance in Wednesday's debate was, on balance, sufficient to establish him as the most presidential of the four men on the two tickets.

He gave Dukakis a lesson in how to cope with the Democrats' intractable problem — prosperity. Looking like a 19th-century mural of Integrity Reproving Folly, Bentsen said, in effect: Seventy months of economic expansion? Of course. Any fool can slash taxes, give the Pentagon a blank check, finance it all with $200 billion deficits and wind up with a hyper-Keynesian stimulus. But we are storing up trouble down the road. And meanwhile Reagan's deficits — it took him less than five years to double the national debt — is costing every American man, woman and child $640 a year in interest charges.

Three opportunities were not enough for Quayle to come up with a counterpuncher's answer to the question, What would you do first if you had to replace President Bush? The answer is: I would continue with the Bush policies because I agree with the man at the head of my ticket, which is more than Bentsen can say. What would Bentsen have said if asked a similar question? "The first thing I would do is resume contra aid, which Dukakis considers criminal and I consider vital."

Let's be blunt. If Bush is elected, Quayle will not matter as long as Bush has a heartbeat. Quayle will not be trusted to handle even the more serious foreign funerals. If Dukakis is elected, Bentsen will matter because Dukakis knows next to nothing about Washington, or national security, or about how little he knows. If Dukakis wins, the crucial question will be: How good will he be at changing his mind? If the education of Dukakis becomes necessary, Bentsen had better be nearby.

Wrinkles Beat Freckles Hands Down

BOSTON — Until the two men stood on the same stage — 10 feet and 26 years apart — I had almost forgotten the original game plan. Dan Quayle had been picked because he had a fresh face to compare with Lloyd Bentsen's lived-in look. He was there for the babyboom vote.

This was, as scripted, a generational battle. On one side, an aggressive young man trying to knock off the older guy in his way. On the other, an elder statesman putting down the kid who had the nerve to compare himself to Jack Kennedy.

The younger guy kept laboring to prove that he was up to the job, that he knew what throw-weights were and read actual books on his summer vacation. The older guy had to prove that he was still the wiser and not wizened.

There was no such age division among the viewers or voters. The babyboom voters didn't appear to rally to their contender's corner.

Ever since Bush reached down and picked this boomer up by the scruff of his neck, I have been struck by the intensity of ridicule leveled at Quayle by those the demographers call his cohorts. Traveling around the country, I have been talking to the very people he was supposed to attract. Those born in his "century" have been even harsher in their assessment of his qualifications than older Americans.

The generation assembled under one label just doesn't see itself as one voting bloc. More to the point, they don't see Dan Quayle as one of them.

The babyboom generation is unlike its predecessors. The Depression generation went through something together, a bleak, transforming experience. The World War II generation of Bush and Bentsen also shared a communal event of such proportion that it still elicits a set of shared emotions. But there really hasn't been any such experience for the 78 million Americans born in those years after the war.

Vietnam? To this day it is a polarizing experience, not a unifying one. Some Americans went. Some protested. As for Quayle, he opted out.

Ellen Goodman

The Counterculture? Half of babyboomers identified with it, a quarter were hostile to it. Quayle passed it by in an Indiana fraternity house.

One generational tale, the changing roles of men and women, belongs more to Marilyn than Dan. It is Marilyn who trained to be a lawyer and ran into the work-family crunch. Marilyn who uneasily put her professional life on hold while her children and her husband's career grow.

Ironically, the thing that babyboomers do share — besides their birthdates and the background music of their youth — is a strong sense of independence. These are not people who have brand-name loyalty or party loyalty. Nor do they have age loyalty. They value independence in themselves and in others.

When asked his most pivotal life experience, the Indianian responded with a grandmother's homily: "You can do anything you want to if you just set your mind to it, and go to work." At that point, I thought of what a 40-year-old Reagan supporter in Florida had told me: "Quayle reminds me of the son every father wished he'd had in the '60s." It was not meant as a compliment. Even in the '80s, Quayle appears less like his own man than like the boss's son.

But the poor impression babyboomers have of this son doesn't necessarily reflect on the boss, George Bush. When he chose Quayle, the Vice President was transformed from Reagan's Junior Partner to Dan's Father Figure. In the flap that ensued, Bush came across less like an executive who'd made a disastrous decision than like a father protecting the son he'd brought into the firm.

The senator from Indiana is a pretty good case study for anybody making a pitch for the babyboom vote. If there is one thing this generation of individualists is collectively wise about, it's packaging.

Up there on the stage, side by side, matched grey hair to brown, wrinkles against freckles, Lloyd Bentsen came across as a man who knows himself. Dan Quayle as a man who knows how to do what he's told. What the babyboom generation cares about isn't age. It's authenticity.

Facts Fail To Bear Out Many Debate Claims & Charges

Sara Fritz
& Tom Redburn

WASHINGTON — As often happens in a heated political debate, the truth was sometimes lost or obscured during Wednesday's televised confrontation between Democratic vice presidential nominee Lloyd Bentsen and his GOP counterpart, Dan Quayle.

Quayle, focusing on Democratic presidential nominee Michael S. Dukakis, sometimes misstated the Massachusetts governor's record while overstating his own achievements.

Similarly, Bentsen demonstrated a tendency to exaggerate the failures of the Reagan-Bush administration. Following are some of the subjects on which discrepancies emerged.

Massachusetts:
Debate: Quayle charged that Dukakis had raised taxes five times in Massachusetts. Bentsen claimed that Dukakis had lowered the tax burden in his state from one of the highest in the country to one of the lowest.

Facts: Shortly after taking office for the first time in 1975, Dukakis supported a large income tax surcharge and other tax increases, arguing he had to abandon his no-tax-hike campaign pledge because of fiscal problems inherited from a Republican predecessor.

To help balance the state's budget this year, Dukakis signed another measure raising taxes by $180 million. Dukakis supported two other tax increases that were rejected by the state legislature.

On the other side of the ledger, Dukakis supported business and personal tax cuts totaling more than $500 million since 1983. The overall tax burden in Massachusetts is a more complex matter, partly because of a property tax reduction that Dukakis opposed. The Dukakis campaign points out that the tax "revenue" burden in the state has gone from 16th in the nation to 35th. The Bush campaign cites evidence that "total state taxes," computed as a percentage of personal income, have increased, moving the state from 18th in the nation to 13th.

Budget:
Debate: Quayle charged that Bentsen had voted against the original Gramm-Rudman law aimed at eliminating the federal deficit within five years.

Facts: On a key vote in October 1985 Bentsen supported Gramm-Rudman. But he also voted earlier in favor of a competing measure sponsored by Senate Democrats, and later voted against a debt bill that included the Gramm-Rudman provision. After the Supreme Court threw out the Gramm-Rudman measure, Bentsen was chairman of a conference committee that produced the new version of Gramm-Rudman last year.

Foreign Investment:
Debate: Bentsen charged that the United States had become the world's largest debtor nation, is losing its economic independence, and said foreigners have bought 10 percent of the manufacturing base and own 46 percent of the commercial real estate in Los Angeles. Quayle said that foreign investment is a sign of confidence in the U.S. economy and adds jobs.

Facts: Experts differ over the impact of foreign investment in the United States, with some supporting Bentsen's argument and others defending Quayle's. The United States is not a large debtor nation in the sense that such Third World nations as Mexico and Brazil are. That is because U.S. foreign obligations are in its own currency and because American investment abroad, at current values, probably still exceeds foreign investment in the United States.

Specifically, an estimated 5.7 percent of U.S. manufacturing assets are owned by foreign companies, according to Department of Commerce statistics. Other figures compiled by private sources, however, contend that firms headquartered abroad control about 9.5 percent of U.S. manufacturing. Foreigners own about 46 percent of the commercial real estate in downtown Los Angeles; a much smaller percentage of the total commercial real estate in Los Angeles is owned by foreigners.

Environment:
Debate: Quayle claimed to have "a very strong record" in the Senate on environmental issues.

Facts: Thursday, the League of Analysis

Conservation Voters said that Quayle voted with environmentalists on only two of 10 key votes during 1987 and 1988 — giving him a poor 20 percent rating. Bentsen's record was 40 percent.

Debate: Quayle blamed Dukakis for allowing Boston harbor to become "the dirtiest waterway in America" and added that the Massachusetts governor had applied for a license to dump Massachusetts sewage off the shore of New Jersey.

Facts: While Boston harbor is one of the nation's dirtiest bodies of water, Dukakis and the Massachusetts legislature have created a public authority to undertake a $6 billion cleanup of the harbor. Massachusetts sought, but never received, approval from the Reagan administration to use a dumping site 106 miles off the New Jersey shore.

Poverty:
Debate: Quayle said that poverty "hasn't gone up in this administration," although "it hasn't gone down much either." In enumerating "what we have done for the poor," he listed the McKinney Act providing funding for homeless programs and the Tax Simplification Act of 1986. He asserted that the government is spending more on the poor today than when the administration took over.

Facts: The poverty rate rose from 13 percent in 1980 to 13.5 percent last year — representing an increase of more than 3 million people. Reagan opposed enactment of the McKinney Act and Quayle opposed it until the final vote, when it passed the Senate overwhelmingly. The tax simplification bill did eliminate income taxes for poverty-level families, and funding for poverty programs has increased, but funding is down in real dollars.

Quayle's Record:
Debate: Quayle claimed he went to Geneva "many times" during the talks on the U.S.-Soviet medium-range missile treaty, and added that he had met British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl. "I know them; they know me."

Facts: The visitor's schedule kept by U.S. officials in Geneva lists only one visit by Quayle during the INF talks, according to a wire service report. Quayle's office recalls the senator met Kohl at a dinner in Munich and attended a dinner with Mrs. Thatcher in Washington.

Supreme Court Limits Public Suits On Privacy

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Although there are other legal principles on which people may file suit for true but embarrassing disclosures made by the media, the North Carolina Supreme Court has ruled that people may not collect damages on the basis of invasion of privacy.

In a precedent-setting decision Thursday, the state's highest court declined to establish "public disclosure of private facts" as a legal basis for suing newspapers, other publications or broadcasters.

Any benefits from creating such a "constitutionally suspect" basis for lawsuits do not justify a policy that "punishes defendants for the typically American act of broadly proclaiming the truth by speech or writing," the court said.

The ruling was a victory for The Salisbury Post, which published the story that was the subject of the case, and numerous print and broadcast news organizations including The Associated Press, which filed briefs on the Post's behalf.

It overturned a decision by the North Carolina Court of Appeals, which had reversed a Rowan County Superior Court judge's decision to throw out the lawsuit against the Post.

The disputed stories related a couple's search for a child they had given up for adoption 17 years earlier. The woman who adopted the child and the child herself filed suit, claiming the stories — although true — had caused them mental and emotional distress.

The Supreme Court said its reasons for disallowing damages for true but embarrassing disclosures were the same as for an earlier ruling that barred courts from using invasion of privacy as a basis for awarding damages against publications that place someone "in a false light in the public eye."

In short, the court ruled that there already are legal principles on which people may file suit in such cases. For example, people can claim intentional infliction of emotional distress, trespassing or "intrusive invasion of privacy," Associate Justice Burley Mitchell wrote.

"In almost every instance in which a North Carolina plaintiff could establish a claim under the private facts tort, the same plaintiff could more easily establish a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress," Mitchell wrote.

Thus, "it would seem that recognition of the private facts tort by this court would deliver nothing of any real value," he added. "Tort" is a legal term for a wrong committed against a person that creates the basis for a civil lawsuit.

Secondly, allowing damages for publication of truth might run afoul of the U.S. Constitution's guarantee of a free press and free speech, Mitchell wrote.

The seven-member court's decision to dismiss the lawsuit against the Post was unanimous. But Associate Justices Henry Frye and Louis Meyer disagreed with the majority's decision not to create the additional invasion-of-privacy principle.

"While public figures give up some of their rights to privacy in the public interest, I do not believe that the media should be given a license to pry into the private lives of ordinary citizens and spread before the public highly offensive but very private facts without any degree of accountability," Frye wrote.

The Post stories, published in 1984, dealt with the search by Lee and Aledith Gottschalk for Mrs. Gottschalk's daughter. The story told of Mrs. Gottschalk's previous marriage to a carnival barker, their "abandonment" of the child when she was 4 months old, Mrs. Gottschalk's remarriage and her return to Rowan County after 17 years to search for her child.

A subsequent article reported that the Gottschalks had found the daughter with help from people who responded to the first story.

The adoptive mother, Mary Hall, and the daughter, Susie Hall, said the publicity had caused them to flee their home and that they obtained psychiatric help for emotional and mental distress.

Water Death

BURLINGTON, N.C. (AP) — The death this week of a 6-year-old Alamance County boy forced to drink a large amount of water has led to the arrest of the boy's mother and her boyfriend on manslaughter and felony child-abuse charges.

Christopher Michael West of Burlington died four months after his mother and her boyfriend were accused of physically abusing the boy and his younger brother and sister, according to arrest warrants and other court documents.

Citing insufficient evidence, Alamance District Attorney Steve Balog in August had dismissed the misdemeanor abuse charges against Angela Clayton West, 29, and Jonathan Crawford, 32, both of Burlington.

The pair were arrested Thursday morning for the boy's death and held in Alamance County Jail on $100,000 bond.

AIDS Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., says he's playing "hardball," blocking efforts to complete a major AIDS bill until the Senate votes to confirm Gastonia lawyer Richard Vorhees and two other North Carolina judicial nominees.

"I won't do anything until these judges are confirmed," Helms said he told the bill's sponsors.

On Thursday, Helms exercised a senator's privilege to prevent the naming of conferees to meet with House members and resolve differences in the House and Senate versions of the AIDS bill.

The legislation, a priority for several lawmakers, calls for spending more than $1 billion to fight AIDS.

Shipwreck Law

BEAUFORT, N.C. (AP) — Sport divers and treasure hunters say that tough restrictions on diving at shipwreck sites could lead to looting and the loss of historic artifacts.

Speakers at a public meeting Thursday told state and federal officials that new guidelines for managing shipwrecks should encourage participation by private divers through incentives, such as allowing shipwreck finders to keep most of the items they recover. Denying access to the shipwrecks, they said, would discourage divers from reporting their discoveries and create a black market for the goods recovered.

Divers, salvage operators and archaeologists gathered at the N.C. Maritime Museum in Beaufort to discuss guidelines the National Park Service is preparing for abandoned shipwrecks. A federal law passed last year removed shipwrecks in state waters — usually the water up to three miles at sea — from maritime law and gave the states authority to manage the sites.

Waste Complaint

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin said Thursday he will write to Navy Secretary William Ball to express his concerns about Navy waste material washing ashore in North Carolina.

Martin said he was assured by Admiral Frank Kelson that the Navy would strictly enforce rules against discarding waste including medical waste in such a way that it might reach shore. But Martin said because more Navy waste appeared after the military first tightened its rules he would tell Ball "that North Carolina will explore and consider all the options that are available for the protection of our people and our environment."

Resignation

BOONE, N.C. (AP) — Paul Combs has announced he will resign as dean of Appalachian State University's John A. Walker College of Business on June 30 and return to his faculty position in the economics department.

Combs said it was a good time to step aside because the college faced no major crises or problems.

Oyster Season

MOREHEAD CITY, N.C. (AP) — The 1988-89 oyster season will open statewide Oct. 15 for hand harvest and Nov. 1 for dredges, the director of the Division of Marine Fisheries announced.

Bill Hogarth said the limit for oysters will be 50 bushels per vessel. Oysters can be taken from sunrise to sunset. On Sunday only, fishermen are limited to one bushel per person, not to exceed two bushels per vessel.

Fraternity Thefts

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — The student attorney general at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill is investigating whether four UNC students who were charged with possession of stolen property should also be charged with a violation of the student honor code.

The students, who were described as pledges of the Beta Theta Pi fraternity, were charged by Chapel Hill and university police on Sept. 23 with being in possession of stolen license plates, a chair and a lawn table. The theft of the items was described by police as a fraternity pledge assignment.

Charged in the incident were Frank Harris Lewis, 18; Stephen Chase Hemphill; Brian David Moore, 18; and Mark Phillip Garside.

The incident has been turned over to the student attorney general, David Fountain, to see if there is a violation against the honor code, said Lee Marks, assistant to the dean of students at the University.

Prosecutor's Display Of 'Grotesque' Slides Prompts Order For New Trial

RALEIGH (AP) — A prosecutor's use of numerous "grotesque and macabre" color slides and photographs kept a Fort Bragg soldier from getting a fair trial in the slayings of a Cumberland County woman and her two daughters, the state Supreme Court says.

In a 5-2 decision Thursday, the state's highest court granted a new trial to Timothy Baily Hennis, who was sentenced to death in July 1986 for murdering Katherine Eastburn and her two young daughters in Cumberland County. He also was given a life sentence for raping Ms. Eastburn.

The court accepted the defendant's contention that the jury was prejudiced by the introduction of 35 color slides of the victims' bodies, which were projected onto the courtroom wall above Hennis' head.

While introducing photos of the bodies usually is acceptable, the repetitive nature of the presentation this case went too far, the court ruled. Past a certain point, "these photographs — grotesque and macabre in and of themselves — had potential only for inflaming the jury," Associate Justice Harry Martin wrote for the majority.

In a dissent, Associate Justice Burley Mitchell sharply contended that the number of victims justified the high number of photographs introduced as evidence.

"The fact that numerous photographs and slides were required ... was a fact established by the murderer when he chose to kill and mutilate the woman and her young children and not the responsibility of the trial court, the state or the witnesses," Mitchell wrote.

In other cases, the court upheld two death sentences, relying on a ruling last month that rejected a challenge to the constitutionality of North Carolina's capital punishment law.

In 5-2 rulings, the court affirmed the death sentences given Timothy Lanier Allen and Jerry Ray Cummings. Allen was convicted of shooting a state Highway Patrol trooper while Cummings was found guilty of murdering an elderly man.

In both cases, the defendants had challenged the validity of the state's capital punishment law based on a U.S. Supreme Court ruling that overturned Maryland's death penalty statute.

But the state Supreme Court ruled Sept. 7 that the Maryland law was different than North Carolina's and that the U.S. Supreme Court ruling did not apply in this state.

The dissenting votes in the Allen and Cummings cases were cast by Chief Justice Jim Exum and Associate Justice Henry Frye, who also disagreed with last month's ruling.

In the Maryland case, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that it was unconstitutional to require juries to recommend the death penalty if they find "aggravating" factors but no "mitigating" factors stemming from a murder.

Aggravating factors are circumstances that would enhance the seriousness of the crime and justify capital punishment — for example, a finding that the murder was particularly cruel and heinous.

Mitigating factors — a defendant's cooperation with authorities, for example — would make the jury less inclined to recommend death.

North Carolina's law, unlike Maryland's, does not require a jury to recommend death if it finds aggravating factors but no mitigating factors. But critics say this state's law is still flawed because it requires juries to agree unanimously that a mitigating factor exists before considering it.

In a dissent to the state court's Allen ruling, Exum noted that the U.S. Supreme Court recently ordered the state Supreme Court to review a case in which the defendant challenged the North Carolina law because of the unanimity requirement.

Allen was charged with shooting to death Raymond E. Worley, a trooper who had stopped two vans on Interstate 95 in Halifax County.

Allen and three others had committed a break-in before Worley pulled them on May 14, 1984.

Cummings was convicted of killing a neighbor, 77-year-old Jesse Ward of Robeson County, after an argument over a dog.

In other cases, the court: — Reduced the sentence of Jon Lee Benson from death to life imprisonment. The court ruled that capital punishment was out of proportion with the punishment usually assessed for crimes similar to the one Benson committed.

Benson pleaded guilty to shooting the manager of a Jacksonville restaurant as he made a night bank deposit Aug. 20, 1985. The victim was shot in the legs but died of heart failure.

— Upheld the conviction and sentence of James Curtis Darden for murdering a Wayne County store employee and stealing hundreds of dollars on Aug. 13, 1985.

Darden was sentenced to life in prison plus 40 years.

— Upheld the 90-year prison sentence given Dennis Ray Haynes for the murder of an elderly Wilkes County man and the kidnapping of his wife in a break-in at their country store.

Prosecution Ending Hostage Trial Case

RALEIGH (AP) — A defense attorney says he will ask a judge to dismiss federal hostage-taking charges against Timothy Jacobs and Eddie Hatcher today, when the prosecution is expected to rest its case.

Attorney Lewis Pitts of the Christie Institute-South also said Thursday that U.S. District Court Judge Terrence Boyle has agreed to hear defense arguments over whether the government should be forced to reveal any evidence it has of drug-dealing by law enforcement officers and other corruption in Robeson County.

The defense has argued that any information on official corruption uncovered by a drug task force could be critical to their case.

"The government overreached to take jurisdiction of this case," Pitts said. "It raises serious questions in my mind why they overreached so far unless they were trying to squelch the messengers of this bad news."

The defense team has argued that prosecutors have tried to downplay the extent of drug trafficking in the county for this case, while at the same time gathering information for a large number of grand jury indictments.

"We don't want to do anything that would jeopardize the government's good-faith effort to investigate drug trafficking in that area," Pitts said.

"But at the same time, we have an obligation to aggressively defend Mr. Jacobs," he said. "The government might have to elect whether it wants to go forth with this prosecution and forego its drug investigations, or pursue those and give up this prosecution."

In testimony Thursday, the editor of the Carolina Indian Voice said that she emphatically agreed with Eddie Hatcher when he told her during the hostage-taking incident at the Robesonian newspaper that he would not be taken to the Robeson County Jail.

Farm-State Solons Challenge Export Plan For Tobacco

By Mike Robinson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Farm lawmakers are turning political heat on Agriculture Department officials over a tobacco export program marked by abuses that have become the focus of a Justice Department investigation.

"I think this is the worst disaster for an agriculture program that I have seen in my eight years in the Congress," Rep. Charles Rose, D-N.C., said Thursday at a hearing of his House tobacco and peanuts subcommittee.

At the heart of the controversy is a program providing exporters with credit guarantees assuring they will get their money for American agricultural products they send overseas even if the foreign buyers fail to pay.

More than $30 million in such guarantees have been provided for tobacco shipments alone this year by USDA's Foreign Agricultural Service. But farm lawmakers are upset by an array of abuses and other problems besetting the program.

The Justice Department is investigating allegations that 14 companies obtained guarantees for exports by saying their shipments consisted entirely of American tobacco when they actually were a foreign and domestic blend.

Lawmakers are irked by a Foreign Agriculture Service policy that provides guarantees for exports of blended foreign and domestic tobacco, although only for the American portion. They say the program is supposed to help farmers by spurring exports and thus should be limited to 100 percent American shipments.

The Foreign Agricultural Service also stands accused by lawmakers and congressional investigators of not finding fraud even when the service was warned specifically about it two years ago.

And Rose on Thursday clashed with service Administrator Thomas O. Kay, saying his claim that guarantees always were provided for the American portion of blended shipments was the opposite of what he told the panel four months ago and at variance with investigative findings.

The question is a sore point with tobacco-state lawmakers who contend that a policy revision from Kay last month opens the door to credit guarantees for blended shipments for the first time.

"This is a coverup, Mr. Kay," Rose said.

"I resent that," Kay replied.

"I don't care if you resent it or not," Rose said. "You were covering up a fraudulent practice in the Foreign Agricultural Service."

Initial reports of blended shipments covered by guarantees emerged from Iraq in 1986, bringing congressional demands for an investigation.

At the time, the service dismissed the concern as unfounded. Followup by the inspector general, however, determined that tobacco exports consisting of blended foreign and domestic products had been covered by guarantees as if they were 100 percent American.

"It makes my blood boil," Rep. Robin Tallon, D-S.C., said.

Kay said he was "infuriated" by the disclosures, but added that he had seen no reason to question the assurances of exporters. He said the Iraqi report was put down to a rumor started by a rival exporter.

The chairman then called on witnesses from the inspector general's office and the General Accounting Office, an investigative arm of Congress, who had testified earlier and were still among the spectators.

Officials of the inspector general's office of the congressional General Accounting Office told the hearing that their investigation indicated guarantees were provided only for exports that were 100 percent American. They said they were told that the only exception was for a type of baby food that contained a small amount of oil not produced in the United States.

Kay told the panel the baby food example indicated that "the possibility existed" that blended exports could receive credit guarantees.

Activist Says MIA Arrests Surprising

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A POW activist who is trying to obtain the release of two American MIA activists arrested after they crossed a river into Laos says he was surprised that the two North Carolinians entered the country, but he adds that they are non-violent.

"This was a political action," said Ted Sampley. "Donna (Long) and Jim (Copp) were over there giving their people money. If there are no live POWs in Laos, what are the Laotian officials worried about?"

Sampley, a Kinston resident who spoke to the Jacksonville Daily News Wednesday in a telephone interview from Thailand, said he thought Ms. Long and Copp had planned only to dump money stamped with reward offers into the Mekong River, which separates Thailand and Laos.

"I had no idea of any plans to cross the river. It wasn't in any of the plans for this trip," said Sampley, chairman of the National Steering Committee for American War Veterans.

Ms. Long, 45, of Jacksonville and James Copp, 43, of Hampstead continued Thursday to be held captive in Laos after their arrest Sunday. They had planned to distribute literature and money advertising the reward offer.

Reports indicate that Ms. Long and Copp have been moved from the village of Ban Sing Samphan in the southern Laotian province of Champasak and are being held in Vientiane, the capital of Laos.

Sampley planned to visit the Laotian embassy in Bangkok to make inquiries about the two missing

American activists. He and three other volunteers will then go to Ubon, where they plan to dump an additional $2,000 in currency into the water.

Margaret Nevin of Homecoming II, an independent organization that accumulates and distributes information on the POW issue, reported Thursday that Laotian officials have denied holding the two Americans.

"They told Ted that they had never even heard of Donna Long," Nevin said.

Sampley, chairman of the National Steering Committee for American War Veterans, and fellow volunteer Bill Sullivan, a Marine Corps veteran of the Vietnam War, held a news conference Wednesday in Bangkok.

"Speculation here is that (Laos officials) are going to let them go," he said.

When the group arrives in Ubon, they plan to follow the steps that Ms. Long and Copp took prior to crossing the river. Sampley said he hopes he can recover any personal items left behind by the two in their room at the Phatum Rat Hotel, including possible videotapes of currency dumping.

The currency that is being floated down the river offers a reward of $2.4 million to anyone who can deliver a live American POW to the International Red Cross. The money was pledged by 21 congressmen and the American Defense Institute, a private group concerned with the MIA issue.

The volunteers are scheduled to return to the United States on Saturday.

Schools Short Funds For Drivers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

North Carolina school systems say they're having trouble making the financial transition from student bus drivers to adults and that they are short $6.2 million needed to pay benefits to the adult drivers.

Norfleet Gardner, director of transportation with the Department of Public Instruction, said the state promised to pay benefits for some adult drivers. But he said it slipped up by not setting central standards saying how much an employee had to work to earn benefits.

Legislators expected the cut-off to come at eight hours a day for full-time employees, and appropriated money based on that assumption.

But many systems, trying to attract more drivers after the wage skirmish, have set full-time status as low as four to six hours a day. That made employees working as little as two or three hours daily eligible for partial benefits in many systems.

"Of course if they do that, it's going to put just about everybody where they qualify," Gardner said.

That's why the Legislature underestimated, by 4,100 positions, the number of bus drivers who would earn paid sick leave, holidays and vacation with permanent part-time status, and why they came up more than $6 million short in what they've appropriated, Gardner said.

Gardner said the State Board of Education next year set minimum guidelines about who receives state benefits.

"The main thing will be clearing up for the local boards what the state is willing to do," Gardner said. "You've got ones saying six, seven or eight hours (for full-time), and the state is covering all of it. That's not fair to the one that said eight hours. There's no consistency to it."

Local administrators have heard that such standards might be coming. But many still hold the state responsible for paying this year's debts.

"The state's the one that promised the benefits, and we feel it's the state's responsibility to come through with it," Ed Carroll, director of transportation for Guilford County, said of the estimated $400,000 his system needs to pay benefits.

High Point City Schools also will use $20,000 of local cash to cover the cost. But many others cannot stretch dollars, such as Rockingham and Alamance counties, which together need an estimated $95,000.

"We are not alone in this," Ira Trollering, superintendent of Rockingham County Schools, told his Board of Education earlier this week.

Nun Spokesman Speaks To Reporters At Monastery

Nuns Set Up Barricade Protesting Liberal Rules

MORRIS TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — Five nuns remained barricaded today in their monastery, fighting a church relocation order prompted by their objection to the introduction of such modern amenities as television and music systems.

Fearing they would be evicted from the monastery because their conservative views clashed with the new wave of liberalization, four nuns locked themselves in the infirmary of the Monastery of the Most Blessed Virgin Mary of Mt. Carmel on Tuesday. A fifth nun joined them Wednesday.

The nuns are members of the Order of Discalced Carmelites. They say the first intrusion began just over a year ago when a new prioress brought in a television set.

Other trappings of the outside world slowly found their way behind the white walls of the monastery: music systems, sweets and a modern lighting system in the chapel.

"It just became a gradual breakdown (of traditions)," said Sister John of the Cross.

"These sisters are keeping a vigil, they are not protesting," Doreen

Ercolano, the sibling of one of the nuns, Sister Maria, said Thursday. "They are fearful that if they leave the infirmary they'll be physically forced from the monastery."

Sister Eliane, who has been at the monastery the longest time among the 13 nuns, said the dispute is a "conservative-liberal issue."

"They do not agree with some changes made here," she said. "They are scared to death."

Tim Manning, a spokesman for the Roman Catholic Diocese of Paterson, said there are no plans to physically evict the nuns, but the church will try to talk them into ending the protest.

The conservative nuns say the diocese threatened to evict them from the monastery because of their adherence to their religious order.

"We were told we are too strict," Sister John said Thursday in a telephone interview from the monastery's locked infirmary. "We were always encouraged to be conservative. But in the last year every aspect of our lives has changed."

The Carmelite order was founded in 1562 by St. Teresa Avila of Spain.

Its followers try to remove all intrusions of modern life and dedicate themselves to contemplation and prayer. Although there is no vow of silence, the order is expected to keep speech to a minimum.

The Monastery of the Most Blessed Virgin Mary of Mt. Carmel was built in 1926 when this community 30 miles west of New York City was remote and rural. Today, the Spanish architecture stands in contrast to a suburban backdrop of gleaming office buildings and service stations.

The dispute began with the arrival of a new prioress, Mother Teresa Hewitt, who brought television, music and other modern conveniences to the monastery, angering the more conservative nuns who complained to the Vatican.

Mother Hewitt refused comment Thursday. Vatican officials in Washington did not return telephone calls.

The church had tried to settle the matter by offering to move the more conservative Carmelite nuns to another monastery. But the conservative nuns refused to move.

More Arrests Of Anti-Abortionists Follow Appeal For Larger Protests

By John A. Bolt
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA (AP) — Leaders of this week's "Siege of Atlanta" begged for more people to attend today's demonstrations during the final day of anti-abortion protests after a dramatic drop in attendance.

The pleas apparently paid off, because about 50 people were arrested today in two waves of protests at the Midtown Hospital.

The Rev. Joseph Foreman, regional director of the New York-based anti-abortion group Operation Rescue, told about 40 people at a rally Thursday night to gather early today for a private strategy session.

"We've gotten predictable," Foreman said earlier at a rally at St. Jude the Apostle Roman Catholic Church.

Atlanta police first arrested 33 demonstrators early today for blocking clinic entrances, as some patients had to be taken over police barricades to get inside, according to witnesses. Later, about 20 more demonstrators were taken into custody.

Police did not show the force this morning that they have used this week, instead asking the protesters to walk to police buses "like gentlemen and ladies." When the demonstrators refused, they were carried — but not dragged — off the clinic property and into the buses.

Several dozen supporters stood on the sidelines singing hymns.

The demonstrations, part of a week of protests dubbed "The Siege of Atlanta," began Tuesday, when 343 of an estimated 800 protesters were arrested. Since then, participation both in the daytime demonstrations outside the clinics and nighttime rallies has fallen steadily.

Only 14 people were arrested Wednesday and 11 Thursday. The rallies have dwindled from 1,000 people Monday to fewer than 250 Thursday.

Speakers at Thursday's rally repeatedly begged for more people to attend the demonstrations, either to risk arrest or provide "prayer support."

"I'm pleading with you before the Lord to come with us tomorrow whether you plan to 'rescue' or not," Operation Rescue head Randall Terry said Thursday. Terry and other leaders say they are not demonstrating, but are "rescuing" fetuses from being killed before they are born.

Despite the shrinking numbers, protest leaders maintain they are shutting down clinics temporarily and preventing abortions from being performed. Clinic operators deny that claim, saying the only disruption has been in some rescheduled abortions.

Protest leaders also have complained about police brutality, mainly during Tuesday's arrests, and charge that police are deliberately preventing protesters from getting out of jail.

But many of those arrested have refused to give their real names, calling themselves instead Baby Jane Doe or Baby John Doe, officials said.

That identification tactic was used in earlier protests, with demonstrators saying they were expressing solidarity with what they called the anonymous victims of abortion. Authorities have refused to release protesters who don't give their real names.

Of the 368 arrested during the first three days, police said Thursday that 30 had made bond, which was set at $650.

To combat the demonstrations, Atlanta's seven clinics that perform abortions have cooperated by shifting patients from one clinic to another, or helping provide escorts through the demonstrators.

Members of Operation Rescue first appeared in Atlanta during the Democratic National Convention in July, and stayed in town for much of the summer. Since the protests began, more than 1,100 anti-abortion protesters have been jailed, mostly on trespassing charges.

The Most Rev. Eugene Marino, archbishop of Atlanta, has endorsed the group's efforts.

In San Francisco, a federal appeals court Thursday refused to overturn an injunction prohibiting anti-abortion activists in Portland from physically intimidating patrons of a health clinic or yelling loud enough to disrupt business inside.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said that the injunction by a U.S. District Court magistrate in Portland does not abridge First Amendment rights of free speech and is not too vague.

Advocates for Life, a non-profit corporation that engages in abortion protests, appealed the ruling.

Massachusetts Bans Smoking Firemen

BOSTON (AP) — At Massachusetts fire stations, they're talking about smoking, not smoke.

A new state law, the first of its kind in the nation, forbids all newly hired police officers and firefighters from smoking cigars or cigarettes, on or off the job.

The statute, enacted last year, took effect Thursday and met with huffs and puffs of resentment across the state.

"This is going to get jammed up in the courts, probably the very first time they try to enforce it," said Lt. Edward M. Merrick Jr., a lobbyist for the 15,000-member Massachusetts Police Association.

The association and other unions contend the law — intended to cut disability pension costs — infringes on their members' private lives and may be unconstitutional.

State legislators agree that the law is virtually certain to be challenged, but they maintain it can withstand constitutional scrutiny because it affects only new recruits.

All of the 21,300 policemen and 23,500 firefighters in Massachusetts are exempt. They can go on smoking as long as they like.

But new state and municipal officers will be told that abstaining from smoking is a condition of their employment. If they violate the ban at any time in their careers, they could be fired.

Rank-and-file officers in several communities said they did not object to the purpose of the law, but felt it went too far.

"It's like the seat belt thing," said Patrolman Paul Goyette of the Lowell Police Department, referring to the state's mandatory seat belt law, which was repealed by voters two years ago. "It's good for you, but I believe in free choice. I think you should be free to kill yourself if you want."

The answer from legislators, in effect, was that killing yourself is one thing, but asking the taxpayers to pay for it is another.

The law's primary author, Rep. Kevin P. Blanchette, D-Lawrence, defended it as a compromise with unions to help shore up the Massachusetts' pension system.

Under the state's so-called heart law, any heart ailment a policeman or firefighter develops automatically is presumed to have resulted from job-related stress.

Firefighters enjoy an additional presumption for lung disease because they frequently inhale smoke and dangerous fumes.

Rowan Says City Leaders Tried To 'Extort' Favorable Publicity

WASHINGTON (AP) — Syndicated columnist Carl T. Rowan says the District of Columbia mayor and other city officials tried to "extort" favorable newspaper columns by suggesting weapons charges against Rowan could be dropped.

Rowan claimed Thursday that Mayor Marion Barry and other senior city officials had suggested they could influence the highly-publicized weapons case against him if he stopped denouncing corruption in city government.

Barry denied the charge.

"Unfortunately Mr. Rowan made some extreme charges. However, I am too disciplined emotionally and have too much dignity to get into a debate with Mr. Rowan," Barry said.

"My son reported to me immediately that Reid had told him that the mayor's public posture on the gun issue would improve if I would 'lower my voice' about corruption in the city," Rowan said.

Reid flatly denied the charge Thursday, calling it a "bald-faced lie."

Rowan also alleged that Barry — who had criticized Rowan publicly for the shooting — called his son June 28 to say that Corporation Counsel Frederick D. Cooke, the city's top attorney, could not make a decision to prosecute the case without his input. Cooke refused to comment on the matter.

In addition, Rowan claimed that on July 29, after the charges had been filed against him, Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., called his wife at Barry's request and left her a number where Rowan could "call Barry and perhaps get him to drop the charges."

"I never called Barry because I feared that he would claim that I telephoned him trying to 'cut a deal,'" Rowan said.

Conyers confirmed making the call, but Julian Epstein, Conyers' spokesman, said the congressman was unaware of any possible ulterior motives by Barry.

Rowan frequently criticizes the district government in his columns.

"None of us can be proud to live in a city that wallows in incompetence," Rowan said.

On Wednesday the city announced it would not seek to retry Rowan, who has called in his column for tougher gun control, on charges of illegal possession of a handgun and ammunition. A two-day trial on the charges last week ended in a hung jury.

During a poolside press conference at his home — where he had used the gun last June to wound a teenage intruder — Rowan said he was pleased that the city had decided not to try the case again.

He claimed, however, that the entire episode was "a malicious, political prosecution from day one."

But Barry countered: "The fact of the matter is, we have a very strong gun control law in Washington. If you possess an unregistered handgun, as Mr. Rowan did, it is a case that should be discussed between the Corporation Counsel, judges and juries, which is the way this case was handled."

The columnist alleged Thursday that Herbert O. Reid, one of Barry's closest advisers, had contacted Rowan's son, Carl Jr., after the shooting.

Grand Jury Says Teen-Ager Made Up Story Of Gang Rape Lawyers Face Ethics Investigation

By Mitchell Landsberg
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y. — The state attorney general is asking for ethics probes of the lawyers who advised Tawana Brawley after a grand jury concluded the black teen-ager concocted her story of abduction and rape by a gang of white men.

The girl's advisers — lawyers Alton Maddox and C. Vernon Mason and the Rev. Al Sharpton — told her not to cooperate with the investigation on the grounds it was part of a racist criminal justice system. They also accused some public officials of participating in the alleged rape and others of covering up what happened.

With Thursday's release of the 170-page grand jury report, Attorney General Robert Abrams asked a judicial grievance committee and a judicial disciplinary panel to investigate Mason and Maddox for possible disciplinary action, which could include suspension or disbarment.

"Their outrageous, irresponsible actions have increased the atmosphere of tensions between the races, not only in New York, not only in Dutchess County, but throughout the nation because of the celebrated nature of this case," Abrams said. "Mr. Maddox and Mr. Mason have made every effort to prevent the criminal justice system from uncovering the truth of what happened to Tawana Brawley."

In a 10-page letter, Abrams detailed 19 statements he said Mason and Maddox made knowing they were false. "Is there anyone left in America who believes them?" Gov. Mario Cuomo asked Thursday evening.

Although Abrams did not formally recommend action against Sharpton, he said his actions were "deplorable, disgraceful, reprehensible, irresponsible," and said the activist is under investigation by his office and possibly that of U.S. Attorney Rudolph Giuliani of Manhattan.

The report summarized a seven-month investigation that cost the state at least $620,000, Abrams said.

"We have the facts. We have solved the case. The allegations she had made are false," Abrams said.

The grand jury provided no reason for Miss Brawley to lie, but its report noted that she was beaten by her mother after spending a weekend away from home in May 1986 and punished by her mother's live-in boyfriend, Ralph King, for coming home from a party at 5 a.m. shortly before her disappearance.

There was "no evidence that any sexual assault occurred," the report said. Microscopic examination of physical evidence, including fibers from her jeans, boots and blouse, suggested that she had been in her family's former Wappingers Falls apartment the four days she claimed she was held captive.

The report said Miss Brawley apparently burned a hole in her own pants, scrawled the word "nigger" on her shoe, smeared dog feces on her body and clothing, and stepped into a plastic garbage bag in front of the vacant apartment in the town 75 miles north of New York City.

Miss Brawley was found Nov. 28 in the plastic bag, covered with dog feces and with "KKK" and "nigger" written on her body. She told police she was abducted and raped by six white men, one of whom showed a badge.

Two officials whom the advisers accused of taking part in the attack — Assistant District Attorney Stephen Pagones and former Fishkill Police Officer Harry Crist Jr. — were exonerated in the report.

"I've been saying right along that I have nothing to do with Tawana Brawley," said Pagones, who has threatened to sue the advisers.

Crist killed himself shortly after Miss Brawley was found, but the report said there was no evidence that the suicide had any connection with the case.

The advisers stuck by their version of events.

"What should we expect from 21 whites from Dutchess County?" said Mason, referring to 21 whites on the panel of 23. "It is clear they never intended to arrest and prosecute those people who did this to Tawana Brawley."

Sharpton told a rally of about 200 people outside The New York Times on Thursday night that the report contained contradictions and that Miss Brawley would give her reaction at a press conference Saturday in Chicago. The Times had reported on the grand jury's findings last week.

Miss Brawley refused to talk to reporters Thursday as she left her new Virginia Beach, Va., home for school.

Prosecutors Say Texas Company Tried To Oust Postmaster General In $400 Million Bid-Rigging Scheme

By James Rowley
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON (AP) — The replacement of Postmaster General Paul N. Carlin was part of a Texas company's unsuccessful plot to rig bids on $400 million worth of postal automation contracts, prosecutors charged in an indictment.

Recognition Equipment Inc. and two of its top executives — chairman William G. Moore Jr. and vice president Robert W. Reedy — engineered Carlin's replacement in 1986 with the help of Peter E. Voss, vice-chairman of the Postal Service's Board of Governors, according to the indictment returned Thursday by a federal grand jury.

REI and its two executives were named in a seven-count indictment charging an elaborate kickback scheme that included obtaining through Voss confidential information about competitive bids and board discussions about contracts.

The indictment charged that Voss, an indicted co-conspirator, manipulated a Postal Service decision over procuring sophisticated optical-character scanning equipment for sorting mail.

In 1985, Voss persuaded the Postal Service board of governors to conduct a competition between REI and ElectroCom Automation Inc., on development of the equipment.

After the procurement scheme came to light in 1986 with Voss' guilty plea to kickback and embezzlement charges, the Postal Service suspended the competition and ultimately gave the contract to ElectroCom.

If REI had won the contract, it would have been in a position to obtain contracts worth $4.6 billion over five years, said Postal Service spokesman James Van Loozen.

According to the indictment, Voss received $19,000 in kickbacks and $4,000 in free airplane tickets from a Detroit public relations firm that he told REI to retain as a consultant.

In addition, he was to receive a quarter of 1 percent of any revenues REI earned from Postal Service contracts, the indictment charged.

Voss, who co-chaired President Reagan's Ohio campaign in 1980, received a four-year prison term and is cooperating with the investigation.

John R. Gnau Jr., head of the Detroit firm and chairman of Reagan's Michigan campaign in 1980, also is cooperating with the investigation and received a three-year sentence for his guilty plea to paying an illegal gratuity to Voss.

The indictment charged that William A. Spartin, president of Gnau & Associates, Inc., used his position as head of an executive placement firm to "insinuate himself into the confidence of high-level USPS and board officials."

Concealing his relationship with Voss, Gnau and REI, Spartin was able to influence "the selection, placement and termination of certain high-level Postal Service officials, including the Postmaster General," the indictment said.

Voss persuaded fellow board members to replace Carlin with Albert V. Casey, who had been recommended to Spartin by REI, Moore and Reedy.

Spartin persuaded Casey to give him a contract to find a replacement for James V. Jellison, a deputy postmaster general also regarded as hostile to REI, the indictment said.

There are no allegations of any wrongdoing by Casey, who served eight months as postmaster general.

Spartin and Sharon Peterson, Voss's former aide, are listed as unindicted co-conspirators. They are cooperating with the investigation, according to sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

REI, as well as Moore and Reedy, both of Dallas, were charged with conspiracy to defraud the government, theft of Postal Service property, mail and wire fraud and aiding and abetting.

Moore, 49, and Reedy, 46, each face maximum possible prison terms of 33 years and fines of more than $1.5 million if convicted. The company could be fined more than $3 million if convicted.

Jenny Barker, a spokeswoman at REI's headquarters in Irving, Texas, said, "Neither the company nor Mr. Moore nor Mr. Reedy have done anything wrong. We do not believe the indictment should have been brought by the U.S. attorney."

"The company, Mr. Moore and Mr. Reedy intend to defend this matter to the fullest extent. We are confident we will be exonerated," she said.

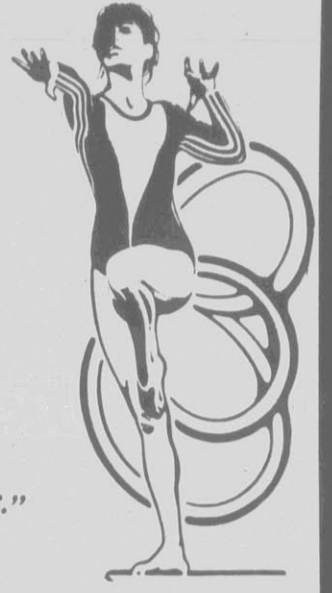

U.S. Attorney Jay B. Stevens said in a statement: "This indictment represents our commitment to prosecute aggressively and vigorously those who seek to strike at the heart of fairness in the procurement process by corrupting the machinery of government for personal financial gain."

The installation of sophisticated character readers is part of a long-range plan to save $900 million a year by automating mail sorting operations, Van Loozen said. The procurement scheme delayed the installation of the latest equipment by 14 months, he said.

In sentencing memos filed in the earlier cases, prosecutors estimated the procurement scheme cost the Postal Service hundreds of millions of dollars the agency hoped to save through automation.

The procurement scheme began to slowly unravel when some postal inspectors aboard a commercial airline noticed Voss traveling in coach.

Worst Of Negative Political Ads Still To Come

By Jill Lawrence
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Presidential television ads took a new and negative turn this week as Democrat Michael Dukakis unleashed multiple attacks on rival George Bush and his running mate, Indiana Sen. Dan Quayle.

Dukakis is about six weeks behind the vice president, who has been on the television warpath with attack ads since midsummer.

And couch potatoes be warned: The worst is yet to come.

"Fasten your seat belts," Dukakis spokesman Mark Gearan said. "It's going to be a rough ride."

The Dukakis campaign this week introduced two tough sets of ads — one aimed at Bush's handlers and the other at Bush himself. Two more entries, scheduled for network exposure by the end of the week, take double aim at Bush's judgment and Quayle's qualifications.

Scenes of vice presidents Harry Truman, Lyndon Johnson and Gerald Ford taking their presidential oaths flash across the screen in a spot called "Oval Office," as a narrator says one in five vice presidents has had to rise to the presidency.

"For this job, after five months of reflection, George Bush made his personal choice — J. Danforth Quayle," the ad says. "Hopefully, we will never know how great a lapse of judgment that really was."

The other ad, part of a "Packaging of George Bush" series, shows actors playing cynical Bush handlers complaining about Quayle's debate performance against the Democratic vice presidential nominee, Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen.

"We've got a disaster on our hands," one handler says.

"Suddenly the words 'President Quayle' even make me nervous," says another.

"Bentsen looked great," a third says.

"You know, what if ... this is too crazy," says a fourth. "Is it too late to drop him? Bring in Bob Dole?"

"You're right, it's too crazy," says the second.

"It's not that crazy," says the first.

The Bush campaign, meanwhile, is airing tough ads criticizing Dukakis' prison furlough program, tax hikes and other aspects of his record as Massachusetts governor — and spending about $4 million this week to do it on national, local and cable television outlets.

While the Bush campaign won't discuss its TV spending, the opposition reports that Bush has bought or plans to spend between $1.2 million and $1.5 million of national network time for each week up to the Nov. 8 election, and spent $2.5 million on local and cable outlets this week.

The Dukakis campaign says its spending is comparable to the GOP outlay, which reportedly includes a 5-minute network slot on Monday night. Bush also is planning a half-hour program the night before Election Day. Dukakis is still weighing election-eve options, Gearan said.

The Dukakis campaign's "packaging" series shows handlers discussing alleged Dukakis strengths and alleged Bush weaknesses in the areas of health, the environment, drugs and crime, in addition to the Quayle question.

Many observers scorned the approach, calling it creative but potentially confusing to voters. The ads were joined quickly by another series — this one direct hits against Bush's record on drugs, the environment, Social Security and education.

The 30-second spots are as straightforward as the packaging ads are subtle. A narrator derides Bush's personal record on each issue and asks viewers if they really believe he has converted to the cause. Each ends with the line, "The best America is yet to come."

The Bush campaign continues to hammer at big spender and soft-on-crime themes. One ad airing nationally this week says Dukakis vetoed the death penalty and mandatory sentences for drug dealers, and charges his "revolving door" prison furlough program let out murderers who are still at large.

Another, in spot markets around the country, accuses Dukakis of imposing "the largest tax increase in Massachusetts history" and spending "at a greater per capita rate than any other governor in America."

Both spots end, "And now he wants to do for America what he's done for Massachusetts. America can't afford that risk."

Another spot ad features complaints about Dukakis from bona fide Massachusetts residents, according to Bush advertising aide Janet Mullins. "We got them off the street, literally," she said.

"Michael Dukakis should be called Michael Tax-akakis," a man says. "Dukakis has made one mess out of Massachusetts," says a woman. "I'm a Democrat. I've never voted Republican before, but this time I'm voting for George Bush."

Bush started running negative television ads on Dukakis' environmental and crime records in July. Observers say the Dukakis offensive comes late but could still prove useful.

"They should have been on the attack coming out of the convention (in July)," said Kathleen Hall Jamieson, author of three books on presidential ads, debates and campaigns in the TV age. "These ads would have been much more effective if they had gone on the air six weeks ago. It's always easier to shape attitudes than to reshape them."

Larry Sabato, an author and government professor at the University of Virginia, has railed against the increasing negativity of campaigns in general. But he said Dukakis "should have been on this track a month and a half ago."

"In real politics you do have to fight fire with fire," Sabato explained. "Bush has been hitting him very hard."

Dukakis Raps Bush's Judgment; Bush Still Strong On Quayle

By Donna Cassata
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Democrat Michael Dukakis added a new twist to his claim that Republican George Bush's selection of running mate Dan Quayle reflects poor judgment, questioning whether the GOP nominee should make future Supreme Court appointments. Bush reiterated his praise for the embattled Quayle.

"There are, as we know, going to be major changes in the Supreme Court," the Democratic presidential nominee told a Memphis, Tenn., audience Thursday night. "Do you want the man who selected Dan Quayle to be making those appointments?"

When the 41st president takes office in January, three of the justices will be over 80 — William J. Brennan, Thurgood Marshall and Harry A. Blackmun. Bush has said the next president "will very possibly appoint two or three justices to the Supreme Court, where they'll sit well into the next century."

Dukakis pressed his direct attack on Quayle — an indirect criticism of Bush's decision-making ability — with new television commercials portraying the Indiana senator as unfit for the vice presidency.

Bush, who barely mentioned Quayle during campaign appearance earlier in the day Thursday, told an evening rally in Little Rock, Ark., that Quayle proved himself in his Wednesday night debate with Democratic vice presidential nominee Lloyd Bentsen.

"He did an outstanding job and he has been unfairly pounded by my opponents," Bush said. "And last night, last night, the country saw what I have seen all along — a young, knowledgeable, experienced American and I am proud to have put my trust in a whole generation of young people."

Bush's best known surrogate — President Reagan — repeated his contention that Quayle turned in a strong debate performance.

"I think he handled himself very well," Reagan told reporters who questioned him at a state dinner for President Moussa Traore of Mali. "I really think that Quayle actually, just by the whole nature of the event, headed off, or should have headed off, all this picking on him that has been going on."

The Bush campaign was emphasizing its efforts to solidify Electoral College strength — and downplaying the debate — as the vice president was campaigning in Xenia and Medina, Ohio, and Lee Summit, Mo. Ohio, with its 23 electoral votes, and Missouri, with 11, are two tightly-contested states Republicans hope to add to their win column.

Quayle was touring schools in Chattanooga, Tenn.; Cherokee County, Ga., and Raleigh, N.C.

Dukakis was traveling to Wellston, Mo., and Asheville, N.C., while Bentsen sought to capitalize on his debate success in his home state of Texas. The Democrats are trailing in the Lone Star state, which holds one of the biggest electoral prizes with 29 votes.

A second poll released Thursday supported the Democrats' contention that Bentsen outshone Quayle in their debate. An CBS News survey of 412 debate watchers found 50 percent believe Bentsen won the debate to 27 percent for Quayle.

The result was almost precisely the 51-27 percent split in an ABC News poll taken immediately after the debate ended.

The CBS poll also found that half the voters still doubt Quayle's qualifications to serve as president, if the need arose. Quayle was rated as qualified to be president by 47 percent while Bentsen was rated as qualified by 78 percent.

The Republicans tried to focus on electoral votes as Bush campaign manager Lee Atwater said the ticket has solid support in the South and Rocky Mountain states with a base of 210 to 220 of the 270 electoral votes needed to win.

On the debate, Atwater said: "You're going to see this debate won't make a difference. The focus of the race is going to be between two gladiators," Bush and Dukakis.

Quayle, arriving in Chattanooga, told reporters that "we're on the march toward victory."

In his first appearance in Fort Worth, Texas, Bush failed to mention Quayle's debate performance. Instead, the Republican nominee proposed doubling the nation's spending on new prison construction and instituting a Justice Department anti-gang unit to work with local jurisdictions.

Bush also lashed out at rival Dukakis for Massachusetts' prison furlough program in which felons have been released on weekend passes. In his speech, Bush noted the famed line of actor Clint Eastwood — "Make my day."

"My opponent's answer is slightly different," Bush said. "His motto is 'go ahead, have a nice weekend.'"

Dukakis used the day to hail Bentsen's debate effort and criticize Quayle.

The Democratic nominee described Quayle's performance as "programmed beyond belief," and said the Indiana senator seemed "extremely insecure." Dukakis told Bentsen, "Great work, again."

The Dukakis campaign, meanwhile, released a pair of television ads belittling Quayle. One commercial notes that one in five vice presidents have been thrust into the presidency while an announcer says, "After five months of reflection, George Bush made his personal choice — J. Danforth Quayle. Hopefully, we will never know how great a lapse of judgment that really was."

In the second ad, part of the "Packaging of George Bush" series, so-called Bush campaign advisers discuss the selection of Quayle. "We've got a disaster on our hands," says one adviser. Another wonders if the ticket can still dump Quayle and "bring in Bob Dole."

Gimmicks Find Their Way Into Political Campaigns

WASHINGTON (AP) — Drawings and cash prizes may sound like "Let's Make A Deal," but the gimmicks have found their way into a pair of election races this year.

A Pennsylvania congressional candidate said Tuesday he is raffling away $10,000 to "a lucky taxpayer," and a New Yorker is offering $100 to reporters who can get Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., to answer a question about taxes.

The Pennsylvania ploy was hatched by Republican Ed Howard, a former state senator who is challenging Democratic Rep. Peter Kostmayer in the 8th Congressional District of suburban Philadelphia.

Howard said he is buying full-page newspaper ads asking voters to reply to 20 questions comparing Kostmayer's and Howard's records. The ads attack Kostmayer's voting record on crime, education, taxes and other issues.

"Simply give us your opinion on twenty questions ... send your answers to us ... and we'll enter your name in a drawing," the ad says. "If your name is chosen, we'll send you the $10,000."

The ads will cost Howard about $20,000, he said.

Only registered voters can participate in the raffle, and they have until Oct. 28 to clip out and mail their coupons to the Howard campaign.

A Kostmayer statement suggested Howard was running for "a Hollywood game show host," but Howard countered that the raffle was meant to counter the free mailing privileges and other advantages that stack the election odds in favor of an incumbent.

The raffle does not run afoul of state lottery-sweepstakes law because the contest does not require participants to make a contribution to qualify, Howard campaign manager Ann Brackbill said.

Added Federal Election Commission spokesman Fred Eiland. "In general, there is nothing in the law that would deal with this type of thing."

The New York campaign stunt is focused more on the media than the public.

Republican Bob McMillan first offered $100 to any New York reporter who "successfully reached Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, himself, by telephone and asked him about any issues of the campaign and received coherent answers."

When a reporter claimed the prize, McMillan offered a new $100 reward to a reporter who could get Moynihan to explain a series of votes that McMillan claimed raised New Yorkers' tax burden.

Clergyman Tries To Put Drama In Worship

CINCINNATI (AP) — The Rev. Clarence Rivers wants to pump life and music into Roman Catholic services, which he says have become boring rituals that parishioners endure rather than enjoy.

"What's wrong with enjoy? It's a perfectly good word," he said.

One of two blacks among about 250 priests in the Archdiocese of Cincinnati, Rivers said he seeks to inject some of the livelier feeling and music of black churches into the celebration of Mass.

A liturgist, musician, dramatist, lecturer and teacher of English literature, he emphasized that he is not advocating doing away with traditional Catholic rituals.

"I'm not an anti-traditionalist," Rivers said in an interview. "I'd keep everything." A demonstrative man with an easy laugh, he added:

"I try to explain to people, if you're not entertained, you're bored. To entertain them doesn't mean you're standing on your head, spitting nickels.

"When I was first ordained, I noticed that ushers were the greatest watch-watches in the world. If the service was longer than it was supposed to be, the ushers were the first in the congregation to go (look at their wristwatches).

"They don't do that at a ballgame. If it goes 14 innings, they don't get up and say, 'It was only supposed to go nine innings.'"

The bearded priest, clad on a hot day in shorts, unbuttoned shirt and high-top sneakers, has founded a non-profit organization called Stimuli, based in his home, to push his efforts to enliven church services.

A veteran of 10 years as a parish priest after his ordination in 1956, he no longer is assigned to a parish, but is financially supported by the archdiocese — although not to the extent he would like.

Rivers, 56, who also has pursued studies in Europe, said the black community has something to contribute to worship services in what he refers to as "the European church." In a 1987 interview, he told The Community News, an inner-city neighborhood newspaper in Washington, D.C.

"I am interested in transporting to the Catholic Church some small part of the black spirit. The Catholic Church has good rituals and ceremonies, but they are done without style, without beauty and without grace....

"In the Western world the word 'churchy' means dead, but if blacks say 'we had church' it means they could have partied all night long."

Rivers, a native of Selma, Ala., moved to Cincinnati as a child and stayed. He was ordained there in 1956 and has since traveled widely to study, lecture, and produce and oversee plays and musical presentations.

His credits include founding and directing a theater company that specialized in Shakespeare.

He said the clergy needs to learn techniques of acting to convey messages to the congregation while entertaining them and holding their attention. He said that message wasn't lost on the ancient Greeks, whose dramas that formed a foundation for today's theater took on the fervor of religion.

Unfortunately, the clergy is not often trained in the performing arts, Rivers said.

"You'd probably do much better if you got a Hollywood producer who 'n' about worship," he said. "People don't realize that worship is drama. It's very difficult for people to accept that."

Rivers proposes to instruct the clergy in acting and drama as well as enlivening worship music.

He said he is disappointed that the archdiocese has not financially supported his ideas to liven up the Mass. Rivers said a Hollywood agent once asked him to come to Los Angeles and market his ideas in search of support.

Facts About The BIBLE BY JOHN LEHTI

JEPHTHAH'S DAUGHTER!

JEPHTHAH, WHO JUDGED ISRAEL FOR SIX YEARS, WHEN HE WENT TO WAR WITH THE AMMONITES, MADE A VOW UNTO THE LORD THAT SHOULD HE BE VICTORIOUS HE WOULD SACRIFICE, FOR A BURNT OFFERING, WHATEVER FIRST CAME TO HIM OUT OF HIS HOUSE, ON HIS RETURN TO IT, AFTER THE VICTORY! (JUDGES 11:30,31). IT WAS HIS ONLY CHILD, HIS DAUGHTER, WHO RUSHED OUT TO GREET HIM ON HIS RETURN. HIS DAUGHTER AGREED THAT HE HAD TO KEEP HIS VOW, BUT ONLY AFTER SHE HAD TWO MONTHS TO BEWAIL HER VIRGINITY IN THE MOUNTAINS. THIS BECAME A CUSTOM, DOWN THROUGH THE YEARS, FOR THE ISRAELITE MAIDENS TO GO INTO THE MOUNTAINS, FOUR DAYS A YEAR, TO LAMENT FOR THE DAUGHTER OF JEPHTHAH, THE GILEADITE! (JUDGES 11:40).

Milan Bares Fashions In Show

The Associated Press

Black and white polka-dotted outfits were modeled in Milan.

By Daniela Petroff
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MILAN, Italy — The thigh-baring mini skirt is gone, but the sexy look survives on the Milan runway with bare midriffs and more during this week's spring-summer 1989 Italian ready-to-wear presentations.

It is true that the overall impression of the five-day showings, which ended Thursday, is calm and relaxed, with long skirts and loose pants replacing the hip-hugging, super-short items which shook the fashion world last fall.

But it is also true that some of the more candid above-the-waist shots, favored by the almost all-male crew of fashion photographers, could never appear in a U.S. paper.

The boldest of these, a full-front of the tiny-breasted Icelandic model, Brynja, at the Gianni Versace show wearing a sheer chiffon blouse with nothing underneath, was widely published in the Italian press, including the prestigious Milan daily, Corriere della Sera.

But bare breasts are everyday fare in this country, where topless sunbathers lie side-by-side with picnicking families on beaches, television puts few veils on its dancers in variety shows, and family magazines display nudity on the cover.

Most torsos were not as boldly bared as Brynja's, but the nude look of the 1960s is certainly making a comeback.

Many designers — including Gianfranco Ferré; Keith Varty for Byblos; Moschino; and of course hot-blooded Versace, champion of the tightest version of last year's miniskirt — bared the flesh.

Some presented bolero jackets over a nude midriff, others cut their tops so short that they did not cover the essential, and others still dipped below the waist to bare the navel, while they covered the bosom in bandeau bras.

At times, the nude look passed for ethnic, as in the many outfits which drew inspiration from the tropics. At others, it was less innocent, as in the Ferré and Versace evening wear, where it was very definitely intended for disco drama.

The bared midriff is sure to offer consolation to the male population, which judging from the comments heard off the Milan runway, are bemoaning the demise of short skirts for next year's warmer weather. However, whether women will be as easily seduced by the new look remains to be seen.

Grandmother Likes To Get Cash Gifts

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Maybe it's a little early to be mentioning Christmas shopping, but maybe not. I am a widow in my 70s, and I have enough scarves, sweaters, colognes and dusting powders to last me a lifetime, but let me tell you what most people my age would really appreciate for Christmas. Cash!

Please don't think me greedy, but I enjoy going out for a nice lunch once a week, and it would be nice to be able to treat a friend. Also, if I had a few extra dollars, I would be able to buy something I really need. It would also come in handy when I want to send someone a nice card.

Perhaps your readers will appreciate this suggestion. It would save them racking their brains, wondering what to give an older person for Christmas. And they need not be concerned that a cash gift of $4 or $5 would seem small. It would please me more than a $10 gift for which I had no use. — ARKANSAS GRANDMA

DEAR GRANDMA: Thank you for a suggestion that will be appreciated by gift-givers as well as recipients. P.S. How about a gift certificate to a nice restaurant?

DEAR ABBY: I am 65 and so is my husband. While I am still working outside the home to make ends meet, my husband is gambling away a big part of our income in state, national and international lotteries. He doesn't buy just one lottery ticket; he buys 100 to increase his chances of winning.

He enters "contests" that require sending money and more money every time he "wins" a round. He orders merchandise and magazines we don't need in order to win something. He subscribes to cheap-looking newsletters that promise to send him the "secrets" of how to pick winning numbers.

Abby, we could get along very well with our combined incomes if he didn't gamble, but he denies that he is gambling! He says gambling is going to the races or playing the numbers.

Please check with Gamblers Anonymous and ask them if what my husband is doing is gambling. Answer soon, I fear for our future. — TIRED WIFE

DEAR TIRED: Regardless of how your husband tries to justify his spending money in order to "win" money, the name of this game is "gambling." You don't indicate where you live, but if there is a Gamblers Anonymous near you, urge him to go. It would be well worth the investment in time. He would soon learn what "gambling" is, and how to control it.

The facts about drugs, AIDS, how to prevent unwanted pregnancy are all in Abby's new, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send your name and address, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Postage is included.

Arthur Getz Adds A Distortion Touch

By Helen Miles
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SHARON, Conn. — During 50 years as a cover illustrator for the New Yorker magazine Arthur Getz has made good use of his artistic license.

"Doing a thing just the way it is doesn't make half as good a picture as if you cheat a little bit," says Getz, who has sold 253 cover designs to the New Yorker.

Starting with his first New Yorker cover on July 23, 1938 — a painting of yachts in Long Island Sound — Getz's hallmark has been the ordinary, with something extra.

By slightly shifting the grouping or altering the direction of light, Getz makes the simple into the unforgettable.

His early covers depict music halls, cafes, cabaret acts, dancers, strip-tease artists and New York street scenes in the 1940s and 1950s.

A scene of Washington Square Park in New York City's Greenwich Village at night shows a pair of chess players and their spectators huddled in rapt attention around a chess board illuminated by the purplish haze of a street lamp.

"In his chosen area he is one of the masters," says Lee Lorenz, art editor at the New Yorker since 1973, who works closely with Getz on the sketches he submits.

"His ability to evoke a mood not only of the moment, but what led to the moment and what will flow from the moment is what is very special in (Getz's) subject."

Getz, who sports a shock of gray hair and a bushy beard, describes his first covers as documents of the past, recording the whole spectrum of New York City life.

"One reflects one's environment," Getz, 75, said in an interview at his Sharon home, which doubles as a studio. Getz lived in New York City from 1931 to 1969 before he moved to Sharon.

Now he tends to paint country things, replacing the hustle and bustle of the city with sedate landscapes and interiors.

All the colors of fall are captured on the front of an October issue. For a January cover Getz has drawn people skating on a frozen pond by the light of a huge bonfire.

Getz says his recent covers have a "fresh sketchiness" compared to the "old painterliness" of his early covers.

Other things have changed, too. Getz received $200 for his first cover. Today he gets close to $6,000 each.

Each cover takes Getz anywhere from two hours to two months to complete. He says he once drew a picture 100 times before he decided the 23rd version was the best.

Red Chinese Stay In America For The Green

By John Pomfret
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — In the tumultuous days of China's cultural revolution, Grace King was exiled to the provinces to work on a farm. Today, her income is in the "six figures" and she owns an apartment on Manhattan's fashionable East Side.

Not surprisingly, she has no plans to return to her homeland.

"Going back would close off all our possibilities," Ms. King said. "It would be too much of a sacrifice."

Still, Ms. King remains a citizen of China, one of a growing number of Chinese who have chosen to seek their fortunes in American businesses and at American universities.

Sons and daughters of high-ranking Communist Party members, and even party members themselves, the Chinese came as students, part of Deng Xiaoping's program of modernization.

Some are taking jobs to round out their American education, gaining practical experience that will better enable them to contribute to China's development once they return home. Others have become enamored of the United States and have decided to settle here.

The largest group of all, however, don't know where they will end up, torn as they are between appreciation of American freedom and ties to their homeland.

Ms. King, 32, arrived in America nine years ago from Beijing. After graduating from Columbia University with a master's degree in business administration in 1984, she took a job with Merrill Lynch as an investment banker.

Ms. King, the daughter of two high-ranking Communist Party members, saw her family ripped apart by the ultra-leftist Cultural Revolution of 1966-1976. Her well-educated parents were purged from the party, lost their jobs and were kicked from their apartment.

As part of Chinese leader Mao Tse-tung's program that forced intellectuals to do physical labor, Ms. King herself was sent to the countryside to farm. During those years, she spent much of her spare time in political meetings, hearing harangues against the capitalism and imperialism of China's then-enemy No. 1, the United States.

But then came a rapprochement between the United States and China, and educational opportunities in America. Ms. King jumped at her chance.

"I'm really happy that I came," she said in a recent interview. "It gave me a chance to see a different world."

Like many of her countrymen who've decided to stay, Ms. King says she's here for her career.

"In China, advancement still doesn't depend so much on talent and results," she said. "There are other things, like your attitude, and your political ideology. I can't tolerate that."

Leo Orleans, a China scholar at the Library of Congress who is writing a book on Chinese students in the United States, estimates that at least 22,000 of the 62,000 who have come here as students since 1979 have decided to stay.

That fact, he believes, prompted Beijing to consider slashing drastically the number of Chinese students allowed in the United States. Official Chinese documents seen in New York in March indicated that China has debated cutting the number from around 18,000 in 1987 to 600. But those plans, it appears, have not been put into place.

Jerome Cohen, an expert on the Chinese legal system and modernization drive, sees the mainland Chinese generation in America as crucial to the country's modernization — regardless of whether they return.

"These people will help their country no matter where they are," he said. "It's difficult for a Westerner to understand the depths of their patriotism."

In addition, he said, "it's vital that the Chinese have people who know the practice as well as the theory" — and that is not only true in business.

Hu Quing, a 27-year-old postdoctoral fellow in physics at the University of California, Berkeley, says the kind of experience he's getting would be unattainable in China.

"Experimental physics requires a lot of equipment and supplies, and China just doesn't have the resources," said Hu. "Certainly if I go back I will disappear from the world of academia."

Ms. King and Hu say that even if they did return, China, a poor country with 1 billion people, wouldn't be able to use their skills.

Liu Ting's father, former Chinese Premier Liu Shaoqi, was the main target of the Cultural Revolution and died imprisoned and alone in a hospital in western China in 1969.

Ms. Liu, 36, came to this country eight years ago and in 1984 became the first woman since Communist China was founded in 1949 to graduate from Harvard Business School.

"The Chinese leaders say they want us to give our lives to help the country grow," said Ms. Liu, 36, who works for Rockefeller Associates. "But haven't we given enough? I can see compromising to help one's country, but never sacrifice."

Ms. Liu says she plans on settling here. "But I may change," she said. "If China continues to open to the West, I may go back."

Orleans predicts that in the future, more Chinese will try to stay.

Fall Horizon Fashion Show Benefits Pitt Cancer Society

By Rosalie Trotman
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Music with an upbeat tempo set the mood for this year's Fashion Headlines Fall '88 Horizon held Wednesday night. The show provided $11,850 for the Pitt County Unit of the American Cancer Society.

The show, sponsored by Belk, was dedicated to the late Joseph E. Downing, associate dean of instruction for curriculum programs at Pitt Community College, Greenville.

Banks, Belk manager, introduced the show and said, "Welcome to a contemporary fashion show."

Sweaters, slacks and skirt combinations were featured. The skirt lengths ranged from above the knee to mid-calf and even longer. A look for both men and women was double-breasted jackets. Some of the pencil-slim skirts had back slits. Accenting accessories included hats, gloves and large gold earrings and bracelets.

Bold plaids and a lot of red and white and red and black combinations were introduced by the models. Other fashion colors included forest green, off-white, white, blush, gray, tan, beige, brown and shocking pink.

The fashions were headlines for areas including real estate, travel, sports and leisure, finance, cultural events, people and places and the society page.

A champagne reception was held for the patrons prior to the show. The audience was invited backstage to meet the models and have refreshments following the show.

East Carolina University Chancellor and Mrs. Richard Eakin were honorary chairpersons. Members of the steering committee included Banks, David Brown, Brenda Colombo, Barry Gaskins, Barbara J. Hall, Rose Richards, Dorson White, Barbara Woods, Harvey Sharp Wooten and Frances R. Young.

"The fashion extravaganza was well worth the months of hard work and long hours it took to plan for it," said Ms. Wooten, president of the Pitt County Unit. "I was very proud to have been a part of such an exciting evening and I know I speak for everyone associated with it."

"To know that the fruits of hard labor are going to such a worthy cause as the Cancer Society makes it more special," she said.

"For a moment there, you could have almost forgotten that you were in Greenville," she said. "This show certainly had the dynamics of what you would expect in a large city."

"The show proceeds were raised through the sale of patron and ticket sales," said Ms. Richards, executive director of the Pitt County unit. "The attendance was doubled this year. We will plan future shows to be bigger and better."

Mrs. Woods, a member of the publicity committee, said, "We hope this will become the social event of the year. There was certainly a variety of people attending this year — from so many professions and areas."

"I was very pleased and felt good about the show. It was a good night of entertainment," Mrs. Woods said.

Faison Ice
FAISON, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina Agriculture Secretary Jim Graham chipped off a ceremonial chunk of ice Thursday at the groundbreaking of a project that will produce 5 million pounds of ice to cool local produce and improve prices come summer.

With luck, the resulting iceberg behind Southern Produce Distributors will give Duplin County the biggest piece of ice in the state and help growers by keeping produce longer.

Last summer in Faison, peppers sold for about $6 a bushel.

Stock Market

NEW YORK (AP) - The stock market staged a rally today on news of smaller-than-expected employment growth last month.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 23.12 to 2,130.87 by noon on Wall Street.

Gainers outnumbered losers by nearly 2 to 1 in the overall tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 854 up, 434 down and 496 unchanged.

Before the opening the Labor Department reported that the unemployment rate dropped to 5.4 percent in September from 5.6 percent the month before. But the agency said nonfarm payroll employment grew by 255,000 jobs, a bit less than the consensus estimate on Wall Street.

Wall Street took the news as an indication that a widely discussed resurgence of strong economic growth might not be taking place, leaving the Federal Reserve in a position to hold off on any further tightening of credit.

Dr. Shafeek Hatem Dies In China

By Jerry Raynor THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Dr. Shafeek "George" Hatem, who spent his childhood and young adult years in Greenville, and who made China his home for more than half a century, died at age 78 Sunday in Beijing, China. He was born in Buffalo, N.Y., but moved to Greenville as a young child.

He is survived by his wife, Zhou Sufei, a former well-known movie star and now a film director in Beijing, two children, four grandchildren, all living in China, and a sister, Shafia Hatem of Roanoke Rapids.

Miss Hatem, who operates a flower shop in Roanoke Rapids, said "I am the last of the four children since Shafeek has died. I don't plan to attend the funeral in China at this time, but I do plan to go to a memorial service for him next May.

"One of my nephews, Dr. Joseph Hatem of Wilmington, or George or Gregory Hatem of Raleigh, will be going with me."

She said that "there were four of us who grew up in Greenville. My sister Frieda and brother Joe are also both dead.

"I visited Shafeek and his family in China in 1973," Miss Hatem said, "and we have kept in close touch through the years. His wife, Zhou, is a lovely person."

Beside his long visit to North Carolina in 1978, including time spent in Greenville along with his wife for a special dinner by his 1927 Greenville High School graduates honoring him, Dr. Hatem has made short periodic trips to Roanoke Rapids to visit his sister and to see old friends from Greenville who visited there.

The most recent trips were in the summers of 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Among these friends seeing him in Roanoke Rapids were Sam Underwood.

"When I saw Shafeek this past summer, he was in poor health and traveled with a Chinese doctor named Dr. Wu. Shafeek told us then this might be the last time we would see him, but he was in his usual good spirits. Some of us, his 1927 classmates, were planning to have him come to Greenville again this summer, but Shafeek said he was too weak to face something like that. He already had plans to go to Boston and Buffalo while in the U.S.

"One thing I was happy to be able to do was to take him a transcript of his high school grades," Underwood said. "It was sealed. I told Dr. Wu I suspected it would reveal that Shafeek made all A's or at least some A-minuses.

"When Shafeek opened the transcript, sure enough, it proved he was an all A student. He always had a sharp keen mind. He was most appreciative of getting the transcript after all these years."

Another longtime Greenville friend, George Saad, recalls Hatem as "always very energetic, with a good sense of humor. I've been planning for the last five years to visit him in China, but something always came up so that I was not able to go. Shafeek very much wanted me to visit him, and I regret that I couldn't. He was faithful to the friends of his childhood and made special efforts to keep in touch with them."

Saad mentioned that "one of the things very few people were aware of is that for the past two years Shafeek had established a China Leprosy Foundation devoted to efforts to eradicate leprosy there. Some of us here and his friends in other places have been able to give him assistance. He was very grateful for that."

After graduating from the old Greenville High School in 1927, Hatem completed his premedical studies at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and earned his doctor's degree in medicine from the University of Geneva, Switzerland, in 1932.

At the time of receiving his doctor's degree in 1932, America was in the midst of the Depression. So rather than return to America, he made a decision to travel, encouraged by a mutual friend, writer Edgar Snow.

His travels took him to Shanghai, China, where he set up a practice, concentrating primarily on working with patients with venereal diseases.

In 1936, he and Snow journeyed to the province of Yanan in northern China, where he became acquainted with Mao Tse-tung, leader of the Communist takeover in China.

Following the consolidation of the Communist regime in China, Hatem was instrumental in organizing China's first public health effort.

This effort encompassed a campaign against venereal disease in China, which was declared as eliminated by 1964. This campaign he waged with native doctors who had little training and scant supplies.

Because of his dedication and success, his marriage to a Chinese woman and establishing his permanent home in China, Hatem became

A beloved medical father figure in China, much honored by the Chinese for his services to the nation. Hatem also was recognized by other nations, including the United States. One of the American honors he received was the prestigious Albert Lasker Public Service Award in recognition of his work which was compared in importance "to the eradication of yellow fever and bubonic plague."

Like so many others of China's intellectual and public leaders, Hatem was denounced as a bourgeois lackey during China's Cultural Revolution. For a time he was not allowed to practice medicine. A proud and devoted grandfather, each year he prepared and had published a booklet of photographs of his family, grandchildren and neighbors which he sent each Christmas to friends worldwide.

Bucs Host Mountaineers

No. 7 Team Visits For Homecoming Game

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

It's Homecoming week at East Carolina, and the Pirates will have a tough nut to crack if they are to entertain the home fans with a victory.

Coming into Ficklen Stadium for the 2 p.m. contest is seventh-ranked West Virginia, a team that ripped East Carolina, 49-0, last season.

That game turned out to be the hallmark for the Mountaineers, who were only 1-3 coming into the contest. But after that, they went 5-2 the rest of the way and earned themselves a berth in the Sun Bowl. There, they bowed to Oklahoma State, 35-33.

The Mountaineers came into the 1988 season highly regarded, and they've done nothing in their five games to date to tarnish that image. Well, maybe it got a little tarnished last week when West Virginia only squeezed past Virginia Tech, 22-10.

However, East Carolina football coach Art Baker noted that West Virginia has a traditionally down game following their highly emotional contest with Pittsburgh. The week before the Virginia Tech game, the Mountaineers had downed the strong Panthers, 31-10.

West Virginia opened the season with a 62-14 victory over Bowling Green, a team ECU will face next fall, and then added a 45-10 romp over Cal State Fullerton. After that, West Virginia broke open a tight game at halftime and rolled past Maryland, 55-24.

West Virginia will be the second straight undefeated team to come into Ficklen Stadium and the third unbeaten the Pirates have faced this year. Southwestern Louisiana came into last week's game with a 3-0 record and held off the Pirates, 48-36, for their fourth. South Carolina is currently 5-0 on the season, having beaten ECU in Columbia, S.C., 17-0, three weeks ago.

The Mountaineers are also the second of four currently ranked teams to face the Pirates. Upcoming are Florida State and top-ranked Miami of Florida.

"It's not a very good team to have to make a comeback against," Baker said. "They are very talented and very physical."

Leading the pack for the Mountaineers is their sophomore quarterback Major Harris. He's rushed for 259 yards and passed for an additional 672, moving him close to the 1,000-yard mark for the season. Only 69 yards short, it would seem inevitable he will pass that this weekend.

"He is only one of a group of outstanding athletes (they have)," Baker said. "He started his ascent last year against us. He's probably got the strongest arm we've seen since (Vinnie) Testaverde (of Miami)."

Baker added that the defense is a dominating, intimidating unit.

"They didn't play up to par against Virginia Tech, but they did not allow a touchdown on offense," Baker said. Tech's lone touchdown came on a blocked punt, and they added a field goal.

"We're going to have to play so much better on defense than in the last two games," Baker said.

Indeed, the last two games, the Pirates have allowed 93 points and 1,098 yards in total offense. West Virginia has averaged 487 yards a game and 43 points a game.

"We're not facing the same animal this week. We've played two pretty good teams (Southern Mississippi and Southwestern Louisiana) but this is one of the best teams in the country," Baker said.

East Carolina's offense has not been the culprit in the last two outings. The Pirates have scored 78 points in the last two games — usually enough to produce a victory. Charlie Libretto came off the bench against Southern Mississippi and led the Pirates to two scores and the lead before the defense crumbled on the Golden Eagles' final drive for the win.

West Virginia

Mountaineer quarterback Major Harris (3) in action against Rutgers.

Against Southwestern, Libretto played all but one series on offense and again performed well, scoring three touchdowns on the ground and passing for another. Libretto has

Oakland Rallies By Boston Red Sox Fearing Worst After Loss

By Howard Ulman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON (AP) — Trailing 0-2 in the count or 0-2 on the scoreboard didn't stop the Oakland Athletics. The Boston Red Sox hope a similar deficit doesn't mean their days are numbered.

The A's took a commanding 2-0 lead in the best-of-seven American League playoffs with a 4-3 comeback victory Thursday night, their second straight win at Fenway Park.

After winning games started by Boston aces Bruce Hurst and Roger Clemens, the A's return home where they were 6-0 against the Red Sox this season. Games 3 and 4 are set for Saturday and Sunday. If the A's don't win both, they'll have another shot in Oakland on Monday.

"They play just really tough there," Boston first baseman Todd Benzing said. "We go down 3-0 (and) we're in deep, deep trouble."

The A's play tough baseball anywhere. They were 54-27 in Oakland, the best home record in the American League. Their 50-31 road record was the best in the majors.

They also may have lead the majors in determination. They needed it Wednesday, when they broke a 1-1 tie in the eighth inning for a 2-1 victory, and again on a chilly Thursday night.

Boston scored the game's first two runs in the bottom of the sixth. Oakland had just two hits and eight strikeouts at that point.

"I thought we were a shoo-in," Boston manager Joe Morgan said. "The way Roger was throwing the ball, I felt no way they were going to do anything with him."

"It's easy to give up with Roger Clemens on the mound," said Oakland reliever Dennis Eckersley, who saved both games. "It just shows a lot for our team, coming back like that."

In the top of the seventh, Jose Canseco followed Dave Henderson's leadoff single with his second homer of the series. It came on an 0-2 pitch and tied the score 2-2.

"I've worked on that in spring training," Canseco said. "I've chased too many bad pitches with two-strike counts. I've found I'm strong enough to hit two-strike homers."

In the top of the ninth, with the score 3-3 and two outs, rookie shortstop Walt Weiss delivered the game-winning single against Lee Smith, 0-1 in the playoffs. It also came on an 0-2 pitch and made

Andy Fassett Could Be Best Kept Secret In East

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

HOLLYWOOD — Andy Fassett could very well be the best kept secret in eastern North Carolina.

Area fans may not be familiar with Fassett, a 6-2, 170-pound junior kicker for D.H. Conley High School's football team, but mark his name down because he could be heard from in the future.

Fassett, a soccer-style kicker, hasn't posted big numbers for lengthy field goals thus far, but that may be due to the fact that the Vikings, 3-2 for the year, haven't been in the situation this season to give him the chance.

"It's been one of those crazy years where we haven't had the chance to let him kick too much," Conley head coach Steve Craft said. "But we won't hesitate to line up and let him kick from 45 yards out. We feel he's about 75 percent accurate from there."

Fassett is 3-3 in field goal attempts so far this season with his longest being a 32-yarder. That kick occurred during the Vikings' 13-0 win over Farmville Central in a road game earlier this season, a game in which he also nailed a 22-yard attempt.

"People were praising him for hitting a 32-yarder," Craft said with a slight laugh. "But that's nothing more than a chip shot for him."

Anyone observing the kicks Fassett has made thus far can attest to that. On kicks such as the 32-yarder, according to Craft, the ball cleared the goal posts easily and landed on the track surrounding the football field.

In fact, during practice, Fassett is true on kicks of 40-45 yards nearly every time the ball leaves his foot.

"I'm very confident that I can hit anything from 45 yards on in," Fassett said. "Any time I've got a shot at one inside 45 yards I don't think I should miss. If I do, and I had a good snap and spot, I know it's just a mistake on my part."

Craft and Fassett should both have confidence in trying a 45-yarder. Last week in practice Fassett sent a 60-yard attempt through the uprights.

And Fassett said that kicking in game situations is almost like lining up and booting the ball in practice.

"It's no different for me to go out there and kick during the game," Fassett said. "I just look down at the tee and when I see Scott's (Seymour, Conley's holder on kicks) hand go up I move in to kick. I don't ever even see the line blocking or anything. That's how you get your kick blocked — if you look up then you're not concentrating on kicking the ball."

What makes Fassett's story different from most other players is this year is his first attempt at organized football. Last year, instead of being on the sidelines waiting to handle the kicking chores, he was perched in the stands banging on a set of drums with the Viking marching band.

"I just thought I would give it (playing football) a try," Fassett said. "I felt like I could kick just as good as anybody else."

Acting on his impulse, Fassett attended the Conley coaches' summer

Oakland Rallies To Win...

reliever Gene Nelson a winner in his first series appearance.

"When one guy hits a home run and another guy gets a hit (with 0-and-2 counts), it's tough to justify that they were good pitches," Boston catcher Rich Gedman said.

"We work to cut down our swing and get hits" with two strikes, said Weiss, who is better known for his defense. "I was just looking for anything close to swing at because earlier in the game I took a called third strike from Clemens."

He wasn't the only one. Four A's looked at third strikes from the fireballing Clemens in the first six innings as he dueled with Oakland starter Storm Davis. Each team had just one hit through five innings.

But the starters finally weakened. Oakland ended up using four pitchers and Boston three. The Red Sox would like to use only Mike Boddicker on Saturday in a ballpark better suited to pitchers than Fenway Park.

"I don't change anything according to the park," said Boddicker, who will face Bob Welch. "I try to be consistent. Oakland has big guys in the lineup and they could hit the ball out of Yellowstone."

A little guy hitting the ball out of the infield won Thursday night's game. Ron Hassey hit a one-out single and took third on Tony Phillips' single after Mark McGwire flew out. Smith, who led Boston with 29 saves this season, then faced the 175-pound Weiss, who batted 250 with three homers and 39 RBI on a slugging team. Against Boston he hit .389.

"It's just coincidental," Weiss said. "I try to look poised out there. I try to be mentally tough in those type of situations."

With the 0-and-2 count, Weiss hit a low liner to center field. Ellis Burks charged in, dived, but couldn't come up with the ball as Hassey scored. Eckersley then retired the Red Sox in order in the ninth.

Oakland Manager Tony La Russa said he didn't consider pinch hitting for Weiss.

"Boston has respect for him," La Russa said. "You saw how many breaking pitches they threw him."

"I gave it my best shot and that's all you can do," said Smith, who got out of a two-on, one-out jam in the eighth in relief of Bob Stanley.

Boston's hitters haven't gotten in their best shots. They led the American League with a .283 batting average but have just 10 hits in the two games against Oakland.

"It's easy to criticize and say we haven't come up with the big hit when we had to," said Boston cleanup hitter Mike Greenwell, hitless in five official at bats. "But they've made the big pitch when they had to."

Boston had taken a 2-0 lead in the sixth. Dwight Evans drew a two-out walk, went to second on a walk to Greenwell and scored when center fielder Henderson dropped a low line drive by Jim Rice for an error. Burks singled home Greenwell.

After Canseco's homer tied the game, McGwire singled home Oakland's third run later in the seventh off Clemens. It followed a single by Dave Parker, who was forced out at second on Carney Lansford's grounder. Lansford advanced on a balk and a wild pitch by Clemens.

Gedman's homer off Greg Cadaret, his first off a left-hander since July 25, 1987, tied the game in the seventh.

"I thought we had them after that," Gedman said.

Instead, the A's have the Red Sox where they want them — in Oakland and in a very deep hole. Only two of the previous 12 teams to trail an American League playoff 2-0 have come back to win the series.

"We can't get too excited about this," Eckersley said. "We came in here and weren't supposed to win two games. Anything can happen."

"We haven't been overconfident all year and we're not going to start now."

"We've got to start fresh," Benzing said. "We can't let what happened to us the last two games affect us. It's tough enough as it is."

High Scores No Surprise

CLEMMONS (AP) — Relatively high scores in the $1 million Vantage Championship came as no surprise to Lou Graham.

"I told my wife Wednesday that a score around par for four rounds will be right there to win it — or it sure would scare it."

"Par is going to be very close to getting it," Graham said after he shot a 2-under-par 68 to tie Dave Hill for the first-round lead Thursday in the richest event on the PGA Seniors Tour.

Only three other men — Dick Rhyhan, Chick Evans and Ben Smith, all at 69 — were able to break Tanglewood's par 70 in the chilly, breezy weather.

"The greens are terribly fast, the fastest I've putted on the Seniors' tour — maybe the fastest in the country," Hill said.

PIG PICKING

Land owners and other friends of the Swift Creek Hunting Club Community are invited to our annual pig picking.

Saturday, October 8 4:00 p.m.

Swift Creek Hunting Club

Vickie Spivey continues to lead the pack after last week's picks, but there's been quite a shake-up behind her.

Spivey, who went 8-3 this past week, heads the group with a 45-13 record, while Tom Baines has taken over sole possession of second place at 43-15. I turned in an 11-0 mark last time around to climb into third, 42-16, while Tim Chandler and former leader Tom Morris are now tied for fourth at 41-17. Greg Laudick continues to hold down the final spot with a 36-22 record.

Joe Jenkins, in understand, has dropped by Greg's desk to offer him his expertise. No word on whether Greg has — blindly — accepted this offer of help. (Is help the word I'm looking for here?)

At any rate, this week could provide a little more shaking up among the members of the panel.

First off, a look at this week's high school games. Last week's 6-2 record brings me to 30-14 on the year. Greene Central plays at home against North Pitt. The Panthers nearly pulled off a victory over ranked Ayden-Grifton last weekend, and Coach Stuart Ennis says that the Panthers learned from their loss. Greene Central has been up and down, but has won its two previous starts in the league. This is a pivotal game for the playoff hopes for both teams. And it has all the promise of a tight contest. North Pitt must stop Kris Radford to win, and that may be hard to do. My pick is Greene Central, 19-15.

Conley travels to North Lenoir. Both teams come into the game with 3-2 marks overall, while the Vikings are 1-1 in conference play and the Hawks sport a 0-1 league record. Conley got a big step up with its win over West Carteret last weekend, and needs this game to continue its quest for a playoff berth. North Lenoir will prove too much, however, taking a 28-14 win.

Rose travels to Wilson Beddingfield and must guard against a mental letdown after wins over two of its toughest rivals. Beddingfield is a better team than it has been in the past. Rose could be ripe for a plucking in this one, but I look for them to prevail, 21-6.

In other area games, it will be Jamesville over Matamusket, 22-7; Roanoke Rapids over Roanoke, 14-7; Edenton over Williamston, 35-12; and Washington over West Carteret, 42-14.

In our high school game of the week, Farmville Central travels to Pamlico. The Jaguars bounced back strong against Charles B. Aycock last week for a victory to give new life to their hopes. Pamlico scored a lot of points against Greene Central, but it wasn't enough as the Hurricanes fell to 1-5. The panel unanimously goes with the Jaguars in this one, and I see the score as 22-12.

East Carolina plays host to West Virginia. The Pirates have had trouble these past two week handling teams that haven't been ranked. Now they're hosting the number seven Mountaineers. In the eyes of the panel, there's no question here. All six go with the Mountaineers, and I pick it at 48-17.

Our other consensus picks: Clemson over Virginia; Wake Forest over North Carolina; Louisiana State over Auburn; Syracuse over Rutgers; Louisville and Tulsa, a toss-up; Maryland over Georgia Tech; N.C. State over East Tennessee State; Notre Dame over Pittsburgh; and Hawaii over Texas El Paso.

Rose, Vikes Post JV Wins

Anthony Love scored the go-ahead touchdown with less than three minutes remaining to lead Rose to a 22-14 win over Wilson Beddingfield in high school JV football action Thursday.

Love's three-yard touchdown run late in the fourth quarter broke a 14-14 tie and gave Rose the lead 20-14. Love then added the two-point conversion to complete the game's scoring.

Rose took an early 14-0 lead with two scores in the first quarter as Columbus Grice ran it in from 15 yards and Grant Harmon added the conversion for a 8-0 lead. Grice then hit Melvin Moore with a 19-yard touchdown pass late in the quarter for a 14-0 lead.

Beddingfield tied the game up with scores in the third and fourth quarter.

Rose moves to 3-2 overall and 2-1 in the Big East. The Rampants return to action at home against Kinston Thursday.

Conley.....14
North Lenoir.....0
HOLLYWOOD — D.H. Conley's junior varsity football team continued to roll along unbeaten, taking a 14-0 win over North Lenoir Thursday night.

Stuart Roach scored both of the Conley touchdowns. The first came in the opening period, on a seven yard run, and the second came in the second quarter, this time on a three-yard run. Kenny Haddock added a two-point conversion for the final 14-0 margin.

Roach finished the game with 132 yards rushing. Wayne McCullough and Charles Bell sparked the defense for Conley, now 6-0 overall, 3-0 in the Coastal Conference.

Conley travels to West Craven on Thursday.

connected on 31 of 55 passes for 523 yards and five touchdowns. He's had five interceptions. Travis Hunter, for whom Libretto took over, has hit on 24 of 50 passes for 329 yards and four scores with five interceptions, also.

Libretto has rushed 31 times for 132 yards while Hunter has 95 yards on 32 carries.

Tim James, who returned to action Saturday after a foot injury, is the top rusher for the Pirates, with 255 yards on 50 carries. Reggie McKinney has 232 yards on 39 trips, while Jarrod Moody, who played some at fullback last week, has 164 on just 19 carries.

The top receiver for the Pirates is Al Whiting with 11 catches for 189 yards while Walter Wilson had 177 yards, also on 11 catches.

One of the most pleasing aspects of the game for the Pirates has been the punting of John Jett. He's averaged over 40 yards a kick for the last two weeks and has raised his season average to 39.5 yards.

Robb Imperato, the Pirate placekicker, is tied with Libretto for the scoring lead, each having 30 points. Imperato missed his first point after try last week in 16 attempts. He's five on nine on field goals.

Following this weekend's game, the Pirates take to the road again to face strong Florida State on Oct. 15 at Tallahassee, Fla.

The Rampettes had little trouble in gaining the victory, never losing more than four games in a set, and then only once.

Rose is now 10-1 overall and 9-1 in the Big East. Rose travels to Rocky Mount on Tuesday.

To The Sports Editor: Each week as I have attended the ECU football game, I have been more and more surprised by the lack of sportsmanship by the "fans." The actions of the "fans" at the Oct. 1 game were both appalling and embarrassing. What if you, your son or your daughter was booed by fans?

Any "fan" who says he or she supports the team should support all the members of the team, all of the time, win or lose.

Whether you are a student, staff, faculty, Pirate Club member of general public, if you are going to attend the games, support the whole team!

Murphy Back Tops Honors

CHAPEL HILL (AP) — Murphy running back Benny Smith has become the first player to win the NCHSAA-Drug Emporium high school football player of the week award twice this season.

Smith carried the ball 31 times for 254 yards and three touchdowns as the defending 1-A state champions downed Cherokee 32-21 last Friday night. On defense, Smith was in on 11 tackles, had a quarterback sack and a pass interception.

The 4-A award went to sophomore running back Curtis Johnson of Greensboro Smith as he set a school rushing record with 265 yards in his team's 26-7 victory over Asheboro.

Junior High School Football Roundup

WINTERVILLE — A.G. Cox rolled up a 20-0 victory over E.B. Aycock Thursday in junior high school football.
Lamont Staton scored twice for Cox, on runs of 15 and 26 yards. He also added a two-point conversion. The other Cox score was by Terry Turnage on a 14-yard run.
Cox, now 4-0, plays at home against Farmville on Thursday.

FARMVILLE — Farmville Middle School romped to a 60-0 junior high school football victory over Chicod Middle School Thursday.
Farmville was led by Edwele Tyson, who scored three touchdown runs of 12 and 19 yards and a 53-yard interception return. Tony Lang added two scores on runs of eight and 20 yards.
Brandon Terrell returned the opening kickoff 77 yards and Tyson added the first of two PAT runs. Eric Deans scored on a recovered fumble in the end zone, and Shaft Parker scored on a 36-yard interception return. Reggie Tyson, Michael May and Parker all scored PATs.
Terrell led the defense with eight tackles.

Bertie handed E.B. Aycock a 14-12 loss in junior high football action Thursday.
Aycock took the early lead in the second quarter when Dwight Sheppard scored on a three-yard run for a 6-0 lead.
Bertie came back to make it 8-6 as the first half closed.
In the fourth quarter, Bertie scored again to make it 14-6.
Aycock rallied to within 14-12 when Aaron McKinney connected with Charles Evans on a 35-yard touchdown pass, but the conversion failed.
Aycock moves to 1-1 and returns to action Thursday at home against Jacksonville.

AYDEN — Ayden Middle School rolled over Bethel Wellcome, 40-6, in a junior high football game Thursday.
Deshawn Gardner scored two touchdowns, on a 52-yard run and a 23-yard run both in the first quarter. Orlando Peterson also scored twice, one on a 14-yard run and the other on a 22-yard run.
Carl Artis caught a 52-yard pass from Alico Dunk for Ayden's final score.
Ayden moves to 4-0 and returns to action at Chicod Thursday.

Northern Nash Tops Rose Kickers

Northern Nash scored early and held off Rose High School to claim a 1-0 soccer victory Thursday.
Northern's Andrew Stephenson scored off an assist by Chris Peacock after Peacock's shot hit the goalpost and rebounded to Stephenson with 15 minutes gone in the game.
From there on out, it was a defensive struggle.
Rose outshot Northern, 18-5, but Chris Struss recorded 12 saves. Rose goalie Scott Thomas had five saves.
"We're not playing together right now," Coach Charlie Harvey said. "Our problems are more mental than physical. We're not playing well away from the ball. The basics are missing."
Rose falls to 6-5 overall and to 5-2 in the Big East. Rose plays against league-leading Northeastern on Monday in a make-up game.

Isiah Thomas Now Highest Paid

WINDSOR, Ontario (AP) — Isiah Thomas says it took "voodoo economics" to make him the highest-paid player in Detroit Pistons history.
Thomas, 27, the 6-foot-1 whirlwind who led the Pistons to the seventh game of the NBA finals last season, agreed Thursday to a contract that will pay him a reported $16 million over the next eight years.
"It is all the money in the world," Thomas said. "But for me to say $800,000 or $900,000 isn't enough to live on is ludicrous. I think what it got down to was principle. I think they wanted to pay me like the other main guys."
Thomas, who had been trying for months to restructure his old contract that called for him to make $750,000 this season, said the new agreement was reached after an all-night bargaining session that ended only hours before the team opened training camp at the University of Windsor.
The contract does not contain a no-trade clause, Thomas said.
Pistons general manager Jack McCloskey said there never was any question that Thomas deserved a raise. The problem was finding a way to give him the money he wanted while remaining within the NBA salary cap of $7.232 million.
The agreement still has to be approved by the NBA, McCloskey said.
NBA rules prevent any team from exceeding the salary cap to sign a player already under contract. The Pistons' payroll, already well over $6 million, didn't leave much room to accommodate Thomas without some bargaining.
"It took some very creative minds to get the deal done," Thomas said. "We were up all night trying to find a way to do it."
Thomas praised Bill Davidson, the Pistons managing partner, for his role in the negotiations.
"I'm grateful, because it's something they didn't have to do," Thomas said, adding that "had we not gotten the deal done, I still would have shown up for camp."

Modest Fisherman Leads Tournament

MYRTLE BEACH, S.C. (AP) — Cliff Blackburn says he doesn't know how to fish using live bait and his tackle was rusted. And he says he thought the big fish on his line during the opening day of the Arthur Smith King Mackerel Fishing Tournament was a shark.
But the modest fisherman from North Myrtle Beach, trolling with live mullet Thursday, hooked and landed a 36.83-pound king mackerel — the biggest of the day.
Leading the overall pounds category in the two-day tournament is Earl Clewis, of Southport, N.C., whose catch weighed in a total of 78.59 pounds.
Blackburn, along with Ralph Hellmer, Basil Boggs and George Boggs — all of North Myrtle Beach — were fishing aboard Blackburn's boat, the Glen-Beau, about 10 miles offshore when he caught the big mackerel.
"Live bait is what we used. I usually don't fish that way. I don't know how," Blackburn said during a news conference Thursday night.
It certainly didn't take Blackburn and his crew long to rig up the right combination, although that fishing rig left a lot to be desired, he said.
"The hooks were rusted. It was a three-hook rig and one was rusted off, so I just used two of them," said Blackburn. "But as soon as we got out there we started fishing. We had been fishing about 20 minutes when we hooked the fish."
Fighting rough, 5- to 8-foot seas as well as the fish, Blackburn didn't know what he had hooked.
"I thought it was a shark when I first saw it. I had to play him and play him — line in and out, in and out. By the time we got it to the boat, he was ready to give up," said Blackburn.
Fishing was scheduled to continue today.
This year, 829 boats with more than 4,000 anglers are participating.
Kenneth Vick, of Wilson, N.C., leads the Little River Inlet category with a 35.02-pound king mackerel and Earl McCall, of Bennettsville, fishing aboard the Reliance II leads the Murrells Inlet category with a 28.24-pounder.
Danny Clay, of Fallston, N.C., fishing aboard the Panacea II leads the Georgetown category with a 30.17-pound king mackerel.
The largest king mackerel caught out of each inlet receives cash and prizes.

Conley Falls; ECP Tourney Set

HOLLYWOOD — D.H. Conley split a pair of Coastal Conference volleyball matches and apparently has lost the league's championship for the first time ever.

In the Conley-West Carteret match, Wendy Nelson led service with six straight while Stacey Kyle had five straight for the Lady Patriots.

Conley was led in service by Eileen Evans with seven straight against Havelock, two of them aces. Tracy Stencil and Evans both led in passing while Virginia Hall, Dee Barbee and Renee Tuten led the Valkyries on the attack.

Conley is now 20-6 overall, 8-2 in the conference. West Carteret, barring an upset on Tuesday, will clinch the championship.

Conley closes out the regular season on Tuesday, hosting Washington.

South Lenoir.....2
North Pitt.....0

DEEP RUN — South Lenoir swept a pair of volleyball matches from North Pitt Thursday to win the regular season Eastern Plains Conference championship.

Lori Howard led North Pitt's service in the first match with four points while Tracy Salter had 10 to lead the Lady Blue Devils. Amy Heath had 18 hits for North Pitt while Donna Leggett added 14. Tracy Nichols led in assists with 30.

In the second match, Melissa Harrington led North Pitt with six service points while Heath had five. Leggett led in hits for North Pitt with 10 while Heath had nine. Nichols again led in assists with 18.

South Lenoir finishes league play with a 10-0 record while North Pitt is second at 8-2.

Ayden-Grifton.....2

Colts Are Compounding Their Problems

Odom Leaves Team After Being Demoted To 2nd Team

By Chris Dahl
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Indianapolis Colts may be losing more than two No. 1 draft choices and $4 million over five years as a result of their trade for linebacker Freddie Young.

Eager to get Young on the field, the Colts have decided to bench Cliff Odom this week against the AFC East-leading Buffalo Bills, thus angering their defensive captain so much that he's left the team.

"I want to get this youngster on the field and see what he can do, period," Coach Ron Meyer said. "And that means a good football player unfortunately has to sit down for a while."

Odom, who has finished either first or second in tackling over the past four years and leads the 1-4

Colts in solo tackles this year with 39, walked out of a practice session Wednesday.

Vic Morriss, Odom's Texas-based agent, told The Indianapolis News that the eight-year veteran wants to be traded.

"Cliff is really hurt right now. Our whole point is, he's not being benched based on performance," Morriss said. "It's obvious this decision came from the top ... It's unbelievable to me that you bench your captain just because you made a bad trade."

In other games Sunday, it will be Kansas City at Houston, Miami at the Los Angeles Raiders, the New York Jets at Cincinnati, Seattle at Cleveland, Chicago at Detroit, the Los Angeles Rams at Atlanta, Tampa Bay at Minnesota, Washington at Dallas, Denver at San Francisco, New England vs. Green Bay at Milwaukee, New Orleans at San Diego and Pittsburgh at Phoenix.

On Monday night, the New York Giants play at Philadelphia.

Odom's, walkout and subsequent trade demand is the latest episode in a season of discontent for the Colts that has pitted players vs. management in near-weekly confrontations.

Last week, All-Pro offensive guard Ron Solt ended a long holdout, but was traded Tuesday to the Philadelphia Eagles after blasting owner Robert Irsay in a news conference earlier this week.

Pro Bowl lineman Chris Hinton and veteran quarterback Gary Hogeboom also have been critical of management since the season began in contract and playing time disputes.

The Colts acquired Young from the Seattle Seahawks earlier this season for a pair of No. 1 draft choices and immediately cut seven-year veteran Johnny Cooks, a first-round pick in 1982. The club rewarded Young with a five-year contract worth in excess of $4 million.

Young originally was tried at left outside linebacker, a position now manned by 10th-round draft pick O'Brien Alston. In last Sunday's loss to New England, Young played on only 20 of 71 defensive snaps.

Odom returned to the complex Thursday, but left again after meeting with Meyer.

"I told Cliff we are not going to waive you and we are not going to trade you unless we think it could help the team," General Manager Jim Irsay said.

Irsay said Odom is being fined $1,000 a day and that if he doesn't return within five days it will be considered a breach of his contract.

Meanwhile, Solt, who has been holding out for a renegotiated contract since his trade to Philadelphia, is on the Eagles' roster at least for now, team president Harry Gamble said.

The Eagles gave Indianapolis their 1989 first-round draft choice and other undisclosed draft picks for Solt, a Pro Bowl offensive lineman.

When Solt held out, Gamble said provisions of the deal called for a return of the draft picks.

Bickering the last couple days hasn't been limited to owners, coaches and players.

Armen Terzian, the instant-replay official who admitted making a mistake by not reversing a safety call Sept. 18, resigned after NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle suspended him for two games. The safety was the margin of victory when the New York Giants beat the Dallas Cowboys 12-10.

"I felt when I took the heat off everybody by saying it was my mistake, I sure as hell didn't want to be treated like a little kid and be suspended," Terzian said.

Redskins-Cowboys

Mark Schroeder? Doug Williams? Jay Rypien is making Redskins followers forget the two better-known players who have occupied the team's quarterback position until two games ago.

Project Rypien's stats from his first two NFL games over a 16-game season, and the rookie quarterback would throw for 4,680 yards and 40 touchdowns. He has compiled a quarterback rating of 101.7, which would put him third in the league if he had enough attempts to qualify.

But Rypien, thrust into the starting role after Schroeder was traded and Williams underwent an emergency appendectomy, is interested only in the numbers that reflect the results of his initial two games — 0-2.

"Numbers are great when you're in college and trying to make it to the NFL," he said. "But once you get here, there's only one thing, and that's winning football games."

Jets-Bengals

New York Jets coach Joe Walton isn't surprised that the undefeated Bengals have grown claws in the season's first five weeks.

"They've been on the verge of the last couple of years of being a great football team," Walton said. "They've taken their lumps. They've learned how to play."

Coach Sam Wyche said, however, that the Bengals, 5-0, can no longer take other teams by surprise.

"When the Jets come in here, they're going to be playing what is for them a big game against the undefeated Cincinnati Bengals," Wyche said.

Patriots-Packers

If Doug Flutie can avoid Green Bay's defenders, the Packers' first victory may elude them for a sixth straight week.

Coming off a performance against the Colts in which he completed six straight passes and ran for the game-winning touchdown, Flutie has been awarded his fourth NFL start this week for New England, 2-3.

"He's at his best, many times, when he's running around with the ball," said Packers coach Lindy Infante, who remembers the former Boston College star from his United States Football League days.

Bears-Lions

Chicago travels to Detroit, hoping to improve a near-perfect defense.

By holding the Buffalo Bills to no yards rushing and 218 passing in their 24-3 victory last Sunday, the Bears' retained their standing as the No. 1 defensive team in the league.

"Sure, we held them to zero yards rushing but we gave up 218 passing," middle linebacker Mike Singletary said. "That's not good."

Singletary's idea of a perfect game defensively is to hold the opposition to no first downs and "between 80 or 90 yards on total offense."

Broncos-49ers

It's Denver's defense — not Chicago's — which owns the only shutout of the season. But John Elway and the Broncos' offense have gone six consecutive periods of play without getting a touchdown.

The team's goal on Sunday will be to put things together against San Francisco, which stands 4-1. The Broncos, who lost only four times last season, are off to a 2-3 start.

"Naturally, we will work toward correcting the things that prevented us from getting the ball into the end zone," Coach Dan Reeves said.

Petty Remains A Constant

By Luann Laubscher
THE CONCORN TRIBUNE

RANDLEMAN (AP) — Richard Petty and racing.

Now matter how you twist it, turn it, rephrase or say it, the two cannot be separated.

An American hero — when Petty smiles at you, you smile back — you have to.

The toothy grin shining under the dark sunglasses and familiar cowboy hat is contagious.

After 40 years of being involved in racing, several spectacular wrecks, taking 200 checkered flags, and reaching phenomenal popularity, Petty is still just plain Petty.

Reclining in an executive chair Wednesday in his Randleman office, the 51-year-old Petty talked candidly about what life is like with Racing's Royal Family.

"There's a difference between being famous and notorious," Petty said while toying with lighting a cigar — one of his favorite props.

"I still don't see myself as famous. I'm just doing a job. I didn't set out to be famous. It seems to happen a little at the time," he said. "You got to remember that when I started out in racing there wasn't anybody famous in it."

Spending most of his time on the road traveling on the racing circuit, Petty said there is no room for hobbies or other interest, except maybe politics.

An avid reader, he keeps up with Newsweek, U.S. News & World Report and several newspapers.

"If I read a book, it's always about history or a biography," he said. "I like true stuff. Novels and fiction, I don't waste my time. I don't figure I can learn anything from them."

"When I read a newspaper, I read the front page first then the sports page then I go right to the comics," Petty said, laughing.

But when the topic turns to politics, a more serious side of the celebrity surfaces.

"I've always been a conservative Republican," Petty said.

A Randolph County commissioner for the past 10 years, Petty said he became involved in county government because of a lack of zoning laws in Randolph County.

"When people couldn't do what they wanted to in Guilford County because of the zoning laws up the road from here, they would come to Randolph to do it," he said.

And with the lack of zoning, Petty said, Randolph was being abused by some industries and businesses, he said.

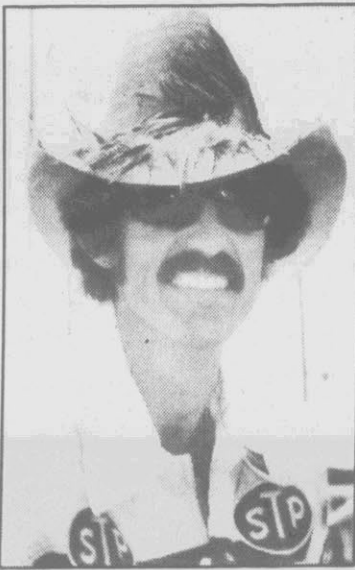

"We finally got a zoning ordinance in place. That was the big issue for me," he said.

With two years left in his term, Petty will not commit to running for another.

When asked about future political ambitions, Petty said, "I have no plans right now. I'm not looking for a second vocation."

As with any other county commissioner, Petty said he receives phone calls at home, complaints, from county residents.

"Most of the calls I get are about emergency services, ambulance service and fire departments. It just happened that way, you know what I mean? It seems like every commissioner has their own thing that people call them about."

Tall and thin, Petty doesn't watch his diet, never exercises, has no regular sleep pattern and yet, is an athlete.

"I don't do anything at a regular time," he said. "Just whatever. I don't work on a schedule at all on a personal or professional level. I just roll with the punches, you know what I mean?"

"I see order as confusion. This is a normal life for me. I feel like I'm normal, it's all those other cats that are out of step," he said, laughing.

While Petty says his life is not normal — at least for other people — his family is very mainstream America.

The Pettys have family meals together on a regular basis and when everyone is in town, they enjoy backyard barbecues with a lot of toned-down talk about racing.

"When we're together at home we talk about everything and everybody," Petty said.

"We try to keep race talk in the background, but every once in a while Kyle and I will get off in a corner to ourselves."

While at home, Petty said he hardly ever ventures out.

Part of the reason for the seclusion is the inconvenience of being recognized and also simply because he is away from home so much due to his job.

"I do get recognized a lot," he said. "But that's part of it. It's flattering to have someone respect you enough to be interested in what you do."

And that is why Petty is so patient with fans — something he is most famous for.

"Somewhere down the line those people are supporting my lifestyle. Without them I would not have the money to do what I want to do," he said.

Petty still expresses some confusion at people being so interested in him.

"I just never had heroes or anybody I'd stand in line to get their autograph," he said.

When asked about the future: "What will we see Richard Petty doing in 10 years?" he replies, "Racing. It will be closer to that than anything else I could tell you."

"I just keep on truckin', I'm afraid to look back, afraid it might catch up with me."

"If I retire from racing, I retire from life."

Tudor Again An Obstacle For Mets

Darling To Battle Tudor In Game Three Of Series

NEW YORK (AP) — John Tudor once was an obstacle in the New York Mets' road to the National League East title. Now, he's an obstacle in their path to the World Series.

Tudor, 8-5 against the Mets in his career — but tougher than his record suggests — pitches tonight for the Los Angeles Dodgers against Ron Darling as the NL playoffs move to Shea Stadium for Game 3. The best-of-seven series is tied at one victory each.

Tudor, 10-8, was scheduled to pitch in Game 2, but was pushed back because of spasms in the right hip that forced him out early in his final regular-season start for the NL West champions. The left-hander, 0-2 with the Dodgers against the Mets, was a combined 8-3 against New York while pitching for St. Louis and Pittsburgh in the NL East.

His matchup against Darling, 17-9, is especially interesting because the Mets' right-hander was 14-1 at home this season. But Darling, who established a career high in victories, can't account for his success at Shea Stadium.

"I don't feel any better at home. I don't feel any more comfortable at home. That's why I think it's coincidental," he said. "I don't feel any special aura or power when I'm out there at home as opposed to when I'm playing on the road."

In Tudor, the Dodgers have a well-seasoned post-season pitcher, but he sees that as being no factor. He was 5-4 in postseason games with St. Louis in 1985 and 1987.

"I have playoff and World Series experience, but as far as I'm concerned you can take all that and throw it out the window," Tudor said. "It's not going to do you any good."

After Fernando Valenzuela was disabled with shoulder problems in late July, the Dodgers were looking for a left-handed starter. On Aug. 17, they got Tudor from St. Louis for Pedro Guerrero.

The Mets have had trouble against left-handers at times. Curveballs give New York batters a lot of problems. Those left hooks send them reeling.

"Both their two big guys, (Keith) Hernandez and (Darryl) Strawberry, are left-handed, but they handle the bat well against left-handed pitching," Tudor said. "If I have confidence in my game, I can get anyone out, just like they can hit anybody when they have confidence in their game."

The Mets come home from a 1-1 split in Los Angeles with an 11-2 record against the Dodgers this year.

Some Los Angeles players have criticized what they believe is arrogance among some Mets, especially after David Cone's newspaper column demeaned pitchers Orel Hershiser and Jay Howell.

Darling thinks the teams have much in common.

"Their most resounding quality is they're battlers," he said. "They've been able to battle back."

"They've had a lot of times where they've had teams come close to them all year and they've been able to win some big series and play some good ball when they had to, and that'll make them tough."

For Darling, Kirk Gibson and Mike Marshall and Steve Sax are the keys.

"Kirk is their best player, but Marshall is probably swinging the bat as well as anyone for them. You got to take care of those big hitters. Don't let them hurt you and you'll be fine. Sax has always hit me pretty well. Every time I've pitched well against them, I've kept him off the bases."

Darling came back to New York a

LSU-Auburn One Of Weekend's Top Matchups

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — When he talks about Auburn, Verge Ausberry doesn't sound much like a young man who enrolled at Louisiana State University on an academic scholarship.

"They're a physical team, and I like to play against physical teams," Ausberry said. "That's my game, running and hitting."

Ausberry, 6-foot-1 and 220 pounds, leads LSU's defense with 51 tackles from his inside linebacker spot.

He'll be challenged early and often Saturday when Auburn, No. 4 in the nation and defending Southeastern Conference champion, sends in an offense that averaged 510 yards a game and 40 points an outing in rolling over its first four opponents by lopsided scores. LSU is 2-2, coming off losses to Ohio State and Florida.

The game will be televised nationally over ESPN with the kickoff at 7:15 p.m. EDT.

Ausberry was an invited walk-on at LSU and spent his first year on an academic scholarship. He didn't earn a football grant until midway through his redshirt freshman season.

"He has meant an awful lot to our defense," LSU defensive coordinator Pete Jenkins said. "Thank goodness we have him."

"He's a guy with a big heart. He's worked so hard to get where he is. You know he's always going to give you his best effort."

LSU Coach Mike Archer said it's going to take the best efforts of a lot of people to stay in the game with Auburn.

"There are no glaring weaknesses," Archer said. "You look at film of the people you're going to play, and you find things you think you can attack on offense and defense."

"We've looked, and I'll be honest with you, we haven't found much. We're going to have to play probably the best we've played in the four years I've been here to win this football game."

"You watch Tracy Rocker (left defensive tackle) take an offensive tackle at North Carolina who's 290 pounds and pick him up and throw him aside. That's impressive to me," Archer said.

"You look at Lawyer Tillman (receiver) the few plays he's had and the catches he made, you look at film and see him outrun three people on a reverse, and that's impressive."

Tillman and tailback James Joseph, both hobbled by injuries, were expected to practice this week and play for Auburn on Saturday. "We're preparing as if we won't have them. If they're able to play, that will be a bonus," Auburn Coach Pat Dye said.

Dye said the lopsided victories so far have been valuable in giving some of his younger players some game experience, but could be deceiving.

"We haven't played a real quality football team yet," he said. "You don't know how you're going to match up against a real quality team like LSU."

"Their people are as good as ours are. I don't think we've got a clear-cut advantage on either side of the ball."

In other games involving Top 20 teams, it's Oregon State at No. 2 UCLA, No. 18 Oregon at No. 3 Southern Cal, No. 5 Notre Dame at Pitt, Georgia Southern at No. 6 Florida State, No. 7 West Virginia at East Carolina, No. 8 South Carolina at Virginia Tech, No. 9 Nebraska at Kansas and No. 10 Oklahoma vs. Texas at Dallas.

Also, No. 11 Clemson at Virginia, Mississippi at No. 12 Alabama, No. 13 Oklahoma State at Colorado, Memphis State at No. 14 Florida, Vanderbilt at No. 15 Georgia, No. 16 Wyoming at San Diego State, Michigan State at No. 17 Michigan, No. 19 Washington at Arizona State and Texas Tech vs. No. 20 Arkansas at Little Rock.

No. 5 Notre Dame at Pitt
After fumbling away leads of 14, 11 and 12 points last week in an upset loss to Boston College, Pittsburgh needs to get its confidence back quickly in a game against fifth-ranked Notre Dame.

While the Panthers have beaten Notre Dame in three straight meetings, the Irish are a different team this time around and eager to avenge last year's 30-22 loss at Pittsburgh.

Notre Dame, 4-0, has outscored its first four opponents by an average of 23.

"I don't see many weaknesses," Pitt coach Mike Gottfried said. "They look like one of the top five teams in the country."

"They've been in only one close game (a 19-17 victory over Michigan), and Michigan will be in the top five by the end of the season. This may be the best football team we'll face."

Georgia Southern at No. 6 Florida St.
Florida State's football team is spending more time in the trainer's room than on the football field lately.

"The challenge for us against Georgia Southern is surviving ... not getting anyone else hurt," said Coach Bobby Bowden, who is preparing his sixth-ranked Seminoles for Saturday's game against the Division I-AA Eagles.

"We haven't started the same unit on the offensive line twice this season," he said.

Bowden has been forced to practice a couple of weeks this season without contact because of the inordinate number of injuries, but he said the team can't afford to continue practicing without pads.

"We've got too many things to work on," he said. "Gosh, I just hope we don't get any more players hurt."

Bowden will be without several starters Saturday, including All-American cornerback Deion Sanders.

No. 8 South Carolina at Virginia Tech

Virginia Tech's punt-blocking prowess is causing more concern this week for undefeated South Carolina than its offense. Tech's offense hasn't scored a touchdown for three games, but the Hokies have run two blocked punts into the end zone.

"Knowing that they do rush affects you a lot," punter Rodney Price said. "You have to worry about getting it off, and you have to put it out of your mind that they're coming."

Virginia Tech sophomore Archie Hopkins attributes his blocking of the two punts to "a guy missing his assignment."

Coach Frank Beamer knows, however, that the Hokies will have to do more than show on blocked punts to keep from falling to 1-5.

"Defensively, they just fly around," Beamer said. "They play man-to-man coverage. They dare you to throw the football. They say their pressure's going to get you ... and a lot of times they're right."

No. 9 Nebraska at Kansas

Coach Tom Osborne, whose ninth-ranked Cornhuskers are a 49 1/2-point favorite in their Big Eight opener against winless Kansas, says the game "might not be the cakewalk some people think."

In assessing the conference schedule, Osborne called Oklahoma State, the Cornhuskers' opponent Oct. 15, a great team, and said Colorado, Missouri and Oklahoma will be difficult.

"We're capable of winning all those games, and we're capable of losing any one of them," he said.

The offensive performance Saturday against Nevada-Las Vegas, Osborne said, was Nebraska's worst in two or three years.

No. 11 Clemson at Virginia

All good things must come to an end unless, of course, you're talking about the Clemson-Virginia rivalry in which the Tigers have an NCAA record 27 consecutive victories.

"I don't want the streak to end by no means," Clemson coach Danny Ford said. "I hope our kids are aware of it and want to win. Everything runs out sometime. Nothing lasts forever. Nothing's permanent. I just hope we're still good vs. them."

Virginia's Joel Dempsey, a fifth-year senior tight end, takes a different attitude to the Cavaliers' past failures against Clemson.

"Most of us are taking the approach that we're playing the top team in our league ... not a team that has beaten us 27 times in a row," Dempsey said.

No. 13 Oklahoma St. at Colorado

Colorado coach Bill McCartney can hardly contain himself when talking about Oklahoma State's scoring punch.

"This is an awesome offensive football team," McCartney said. "They're loaded. They just have no weaknesses."

OSU, 3-0, leads the nation in six offensive categories this week, as well as having the top turnover margin (plus-11).

Junior tailback Barry Sanders leads the nation in rushing, averaging 213 yards a game, all-purpose running (309 yards per game), scoring (22 points per game) and kickoff returns (37.25 yards per return).

Quarterback Mike Gundy is No. 1 in passing efficiency with a rating of 182.5, and the Cowboys also are the top scoring team, averaging 53.3 points per game.

Memphis St. at No. 14 Florida
Memphis State, 2-3 and a three-touchdown underdog to unbeaten Florida, has relatively simple goals.

"We've been watching Florida, so we know what we have to do ... Hopefully we can come down there, run three plays, not fumble the ball and punt," Coach Charlie Bailey said. "Then maybe we can play a little defense."

Bailey was only joking. But with Florida playing defense as well as it has the past five weeks, who could be sure?

The Gators, ranked first in the Southeastern Conference in total defense, have yielded just 204.6 yards per game, shut out over three of five opponents and are riding a streak of 13 consecutive quarters in which Florida has not allowed a touchdown.

'Saturday Night Live' Begins 14th TV Season On Saturday

By Kathryn Baker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Al Franken was trailing the candidates with a satellite dish on his head; Dana Carvey and Kevin Nealon were Austrian weightlifters Hans and Franz — “We want to pump you up!” Dan Aykroyd made a surprise appearance as Bob Dole.

NBC's “Saturday Night Live” had just hit stride last spring when the Writers Guild strike brought everything to a halt.

Executive producer Lorne Michaels hopes to get back on track soon — the show begins its 14th season Saturday — but laments missing seven shows that would have culminated in a nostalgic season-ender with Gilda Radner and Bob Dylan.

“If there had been a strike in 1985, I wouldn't have minded it so much,” said Michaels in an interview in his NBC office. “But we were in such good rhythm. Our ratings were going up every week. ... I just thought we were doing very good work. It was an election year, the writing was there, the cast was there.”

Michaels launched the show in 1975, and with it the careers of Radner, Aykroyd, Chevy Chase, John Belushi, Jane Curtin and Bill Murray. Michaels left in 1980 to produce movies, but returned in 1985. A rushed-together cast spent an unhappy season under crushingly negative reviews.

In 1986, the show rebounded with a new cast that has remained intact for three seasons. This group seems to have shaken off the ghosts of the now-fabled originals.

Aykroyd played Dole off Nora Dunn's edge-of-hysteria takeoff on Congresswoman Pat Schroeder. Dana Carvey did a brilliant Robin Williams opposite Williams himself, as his own father, Phil Hartman, who can do everybody from Jimmy Swaggart to Phil Donahue, perfected Barbara Bush.

Michaels said he had felt out of touch with the late-night audience when he came back in 1985 and unwisely heeded advice to target the show to some nebulous notion of a new and younger audience.

“And so you start putting on stuff you don't think is funny or that you're not comfortable with or a musical group that happens to be hot at that moment, booking from the charts instead of from your tastes,” he said. “And it's disorienting, because if you fail that way, as I did, you go, well, where's the satisfaction? There's no satisfaction. So after that season, I went back to, I'm going to put on the things that I think are good and hopefully I'm not that out of step.”

Michaels, 43, now oversees a staff of writers who in some cases were in junior high school when SNL premiered.

“You know, there's a certain point where you're sitting in a room, and it's 2 o'clock in the morning, and you're saying, ‘I don't think it will work,’ words that as you hear them coming out of your head, you realize these people, and sometimes those people are 25 or 26, and they're looking at you, and you think, ‘They're thinking, he's old and annoying.’ And you know that you think it won't work because you wrote it three times, you produced it eight times, and it didn't work any of the 11 times. They're thinking, ‘He just doesn't get it.’”

Michaels produced the Emmy Awards show for Fox this summer, living up the proceedings and keeping the show mercifully short. He says it's an experience he feels he needs only once in his life, though.

Now, besides shepherding SNL, he is helping launch two new shows: —“Sunday Night,” a variety show that premiered on NBC last Sunday, will feature an eclectic assemblage of musical guests. David Sanborn and Jools Holland are co-hosts. Comedian Kevin Meany is a regular. —“Kids in the Hall,” an HBO series featuring a young comedy troupe from Michaels' home town of Toronto.

“There is a time in people's careers which is more interesting for me to be working with them ... to watch people come into their own and just blossom,” Michaels said.

“I think this season will be a great season,” he said. “And I haven't said that the last three years.”

ABC Claims Marital Strife No Problem For 'Head Of Class' Star Robin Givens

By Diane Halthman
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

HOLLYWOOD — Despite the publicity and controversy surrounding the marriage of heavyweight champion Mike Tyson and actress Robin Givens, it has been business as usual on the set of Givens' ABC television series, “Head of the Class.”

Michael Elias, co-executive producer of the show, said that Givens has not missed any tapings or rehearsals since the show went before the cameras in late August.

“Whatever's going on in their personal lives has not affected her ability to perform on the show,” Elias said.

A spokeswoman for Warner Bros. Television said that this week's script readings and rehearsals had taken place without incident, and that Givens appeared cheerful during conversations on the set.

Givens plays perfect-student Darlene Merriam, one of a group of superbrain students in a high school class whose teacher is played by Howard Hesseman.

The studio spokeswoman said that audiences for the most part had not expressed any special interest in Givens because of her marital troubles. She added that Friday night tapings of the show, which began Aug. 26, have proceeded as scheduled and that the studio has received no calls, letters or questions asking for information about the dispute between Givens and Tyson.

The well-documented Givens-Tyson fight was news again this week with newspaper reports that Tyson had gone on a rampage at the couple's New Jersey home following comments made by Givens and the actress' mother, Ruth Roper, in an interview with Barbara Walters on ABC's “20-20” series. Tyson was said to be angered by their description of him as having an “extremely volatile temper.” Givens told Walters that life with Tyson had been “torture ... pure hell ... worse than anything I can possibly imagine.”

The new conflict followed months of reports of violent outbursts and erratic behavior on the part of Tyson, including a New York Post story that said that Tyson had chased Givens and Roper around their hotel room during a visit to Moscow with “Head of the Class” when the series filmed episodes there in September.

Elias said that he had not seen Tyson exhibit any unusual behavior in Moscow.

“What happened at the hotel, we have no knowledge of,” Elias said. “As far as Rich (Eustis, the other executive producer) and I were concerned, the guy was great the whole trip.”

He described Tyson's accompanying the show to Moscow as “a positive experience” and said that the producers “would be happy to have him along any time we're on location.”

20th Century Fox Charged With Contempt

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp. has been charged with contempt of court for allegedly forcing some theaters to book unpopular movies in exchange for the right to show popular films.

An indictment returned Thursday by a federal grand jury in New York accuses the company and an employee of violating the terms of a 1951 antitrust order in booking movies, including the blockbuster “Aliens,” from 1984 to 1987. The alleged “block bookings” were made by Leila J. Goldstein, who managed Fox's Indianapolis-Milwaukee branch office, the grand jury said.

Fox, a subsidiary of Rupert Murdoch's News Corp., denied wrongdoing.

The action was brought under a consent decree settling a 1930s-era antitrust battle in which the government broke the big movie studios' control of the nation's theaters. Among the practices barred by the consent decree is block booking, or requiring a theater to agree to show one or more movies, often unpopular films, in exchange for the right to show a successful movie.

The grand jury accused Fox of violating a provision against block booking in a 1951 consent decree the company signed that stemmed from the antitrust case, according to an announcement by the U.S. attorney's office in Manhattan that was released in Los Angeles.

The indictment alleged that Fox and Ms. Goldstein improperly entered into distribution agreements with theater companies for several hit movies. The announcement did not name the theater companies involved.

The indictment alleged that from January to July 1985, exhibition of “The Flamingo Kid” was conditioned upon theaters also taking the less popular “Johnny Dangerously”; from July 1984 to January 1985, “Cocoon” was “block booked” with “Prizzi's Honor”; from July 1985 to January 1986, “Aliens” was paired with “Space Camp” and “Big Trouble in Little China”; and from March 1987 to June 1987, “Mannequin” was booked with “Black Widow.”

Fox said it has a program to ensure compliance with the consent decree that includes employee education.

“Even the alleged offending conduct is, as the charge itself demonstrates, confined to only a portion of a single Fox branch involving a limited number of films,” the company said in a news release.

In 1966, the United States recovered a hydrogen bomb it had lost off the coast of Spain.

Correct technique is for South to win the first spade trick with the ace. Since only four trumps in the West hand threatens the contract, declarer should next lay down the ace of clubs. Despite the bad news, the contract can still be made if declarer guesses the distribution.
 Assuming that the two of spades lead indicates a four-card suit, declarer must overtake the queen of spades with the king and ruff a spade. He gets back to the queen of hearts and ruffs another spade. After cashing the ace-king of hearts and ace of diamonds, declarer overtakes the queen of diamonds with the king.
 West and declarer are now down to three trumps each. Declarer leads a diamond and ruffs with the queen of trumps! Whether West overruffs or not, he can score only one trump trick. Try it!

Army Will Review Back Records For Bias In Awarding Of Medals

No Blacks Have Received Medal Of Honor

By Kim I. Mills THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A lawmaker says the Army will review records of black World War I heroes to determine whether any were denied high honors because of their race.

The study was initiated after Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci acknowledged that racism could have played a role in the awarding of combat medals. Rep. Joseph DioGuardi disclosed in releasing letters from Carlucci and one of his aides.

Assistant Defense Secretary Grant S. Green Jr., in a letter released Thursday by the New York congressman, said the review could take more than six months, partly because many records were destroyed in a 1973 fire at the National Personnel Records Center.

"I assure you, however, that the Army will be as objective and fair as possible in their research and conclusions," Green said in the letter to DioGuardi.

Carlucci, in a separate letter released by DioGuardi, agreed late last month to undertake the study, after prodding by congressmen seeking posthumous Medals of Honor for two black servicemen.

"It is clear that unjust discrimination existed during World Wars I and II that could well have extended to individual decisions leading to the awarding of medals in recognition of heroic actions," Carlucci wrote on Sept. 30.

"As you know, while there were a number of instances where black World War I and World War II service members were recognized by individual awards for heroism, none was awarded the Medal of Honor," the Carlucci letter to DioGuardi said.

Some 1.5 million blacks served in the world wars.

DioGuardi and Rep. Mickey Leland, D-Texas, have led the quest for Medals of Honor for the black servicemen: Army Sgt. Henry Johnson of Albany, N.Y., who served during World War I; and Navy Seaman Dorrie Miller, of Waco, Texas, who died in World War II.

The congressmen introduced legislation last October that would have waived the five-year statute of limitations governing the awarding of Medals of Honor, but only for the Miller and Johnson cases. Because of Army and Navy objections, the bills stalled in the House Armed Services Committee.

Carlucci emphasized in his letter that the Defense Department "does not support a symbolic award" of the Medal of Honor, the nation's highest military honor. He also reiterated the department's objections to bills singling out Johnson and Miller "when many other individuals might have been equally deserving."

"Nevertheless, I am willing as a result of your expressed concern to conduct further research to examine the conditions existing in the past concerning award of decorations and medals and the extent to which racial discrimination might have been part of those conditions," the secretary wrote.

The Army research will cover servicemen from the all-black 92nd and 93rd Divisions during World War I and will attempt "to ascertain why Sgt. Henry Johnson, a member of the 93rd Division, was not recognized by the U.S. Army for his actions in combat and for wounds received in action," Green wrote.

The Army will also try to identify any black World War I soldiers who were recommended for the Medal of Honor but were disapproved or received lesser awards, he said.

In a handwritten footnote, Green said he has asked the Navy "to report back to us on the magnitude of doing something similar for WWII."

Johnson, who served in France, was on sentry duty one night when he killed four German soldiers, rescued a wounded comrade and captured a stockpile of weapons, despite being severely wounded himself. He received the Croix de Guerre, France's highest military honor.

House OKs VA Cabinet Status

WASHINGTON (AP) — Elevating the Veterans Administration to full Cabinet status will involve only changing a few signs outside the building, proponents said after the House voted overwhelming support of the change.

Rep. Sonny Montgomery, D-Miss., said the cost of the change approved Thursday by the House will come to less than $1 million in 1989 and will give the nation's 27 million veterans direct access to the White House.

The Congressional Budget Office has estimated that converting the VA into a Cabinet department would cost $33 million over five years.

The House vote sent the compromise bill, making the VA the government's 14th Cabinet department, to the Senate, which was expected to add its approval. President Reagan backs the move, and it was his public announcement of support last summer that gave impetus to the legislation.

House approval came on a voice vote, overriding objections from opponents who called the move an act of election-year pandering that will result in increased future costs for veterans programs.

"This is an act of great hypocrisy," said Rep. John Porter, R-Ill., who said he had heard numerous colleagues complain privately that the legislation should not be adopted.

"Why does Congress do things like that? We do it because of special interests," Porter said. "Members are in craven fear of retribution at the polls. I think the American people are looking to have people of courage to govern them. You can't serve every special interest in our country without ever adding up the bottom line."

The new Department of Veterans Affairs, which would go into effect in March, would represent the fifth new Cabinet department since 1960. Opponents pointed out the irony of it receiving support from Reagan, who began his presidency promising to eliminate two Cabinet departments — Education and Energy — an idea he later abandoned.

The Veterans Administration, according to supporters of the legislation, already has the fifth-largest budget among federal agencies and merits being put on par with other Cabinet departments to ensure that the money is properly administered.

"This says to the millions of men and women who've worn the uniform of our armed forces that we care," said Rep. Frank Horton, R-N.Y. He said placing a veterans' advocate at the table with the president and other Cabinet members will give greater voice to their needs.

Hirohito's Illness May Not Prompt Surge By Military

By Larry Thorson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — The government is dismissing worries that the flood of sympathy for ailing Emperor Hirohito will trigger new demands that Japan revive its military might.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Yoshifumi Matsuda said Thursday the illness of the world's longest-reigning monarch will not create pressure to change the post-war constitution, which forbids use of military force.

"There will be no such general voices coming up towards that direction or to think about the constitution or a change of course," he said.

The official sought in particular to discredit what he called the "strange opinions" of conservative author Hideaki Kase. The writer's remarks to the Foreign Correspondents' Club of Japan last week were reported by some journalists as portending a surge of nationalism during a post-Hirohito transition.

Rightists, including some members of Parliament from the governing Liberal Democratic Party, would like to change the constitution to restore some of the emperor's traditional status and allow Japan to be more of a military power.

The 87-year-old emperor, who took power in 1926, has been bedridden since internal hemorrhaging caused him to cough up blood Sept. 19. He is being fed intravenously and has received daily blood transfusions.

Hirohito remained in stable condition today.

Rightists have worked quietly behind the scenes to increase public sympathy for Hirohito since he fell ill. The effort has been led by Shizuka Kamei, a member of Parliament and leader of the Liberal Democratic Party's Fellow Thinkers Council on Fundamental National Issues.

Kamei spearheaded the drive to set up nationwide registries for people to sign and wish Hirohito a speedy recovery.

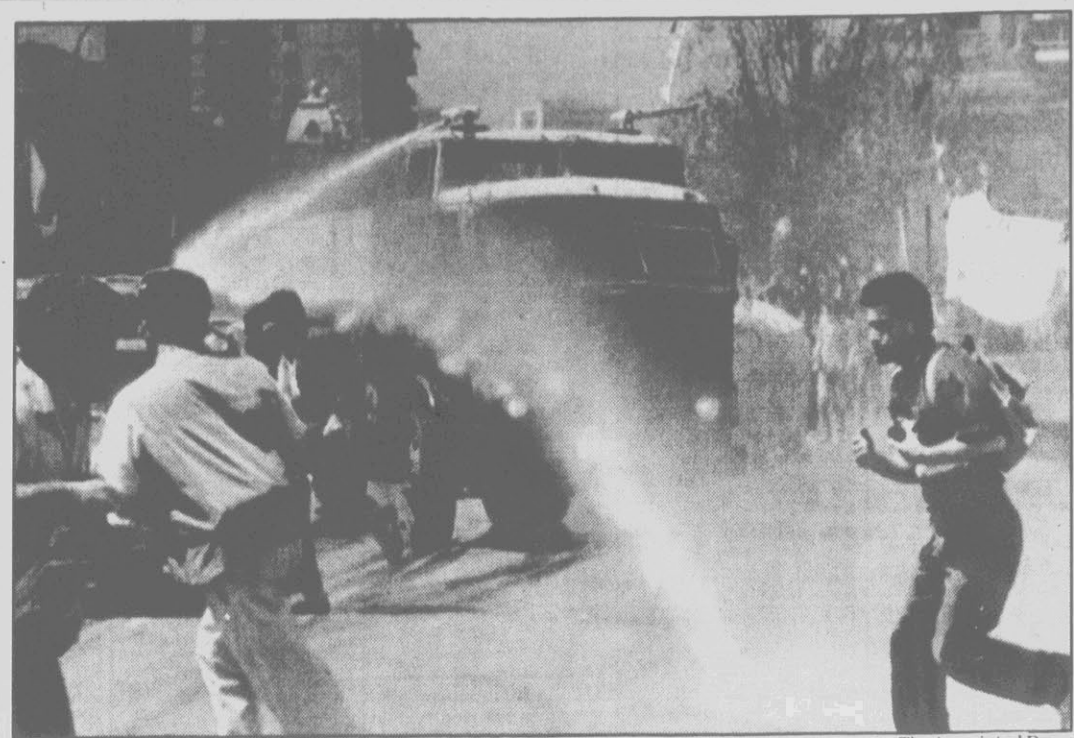

"It's not nationalism or revisionism," Kamei has said. "The emperor is like our father, and he is sick."

Kamei is in favor of revising the constitution. Earlier this year, he and his group supported a Cabinet minister who was forced to resign for saying Japan was not an aggressor in World War II but was simply fighting to protect itself "at a time when the white race had turned Asian into a colony."

Leftists have criticized both Kamei and the government, saying they are creating an unwarranted mood of mourning with such things as the registries and the many cancellations of trips by Cabinet members.

Mainstream newspapers and some governing party members also have criticized the government for overreacting to Hirohito's illness. Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita has said government business should go on normally as much as possible.

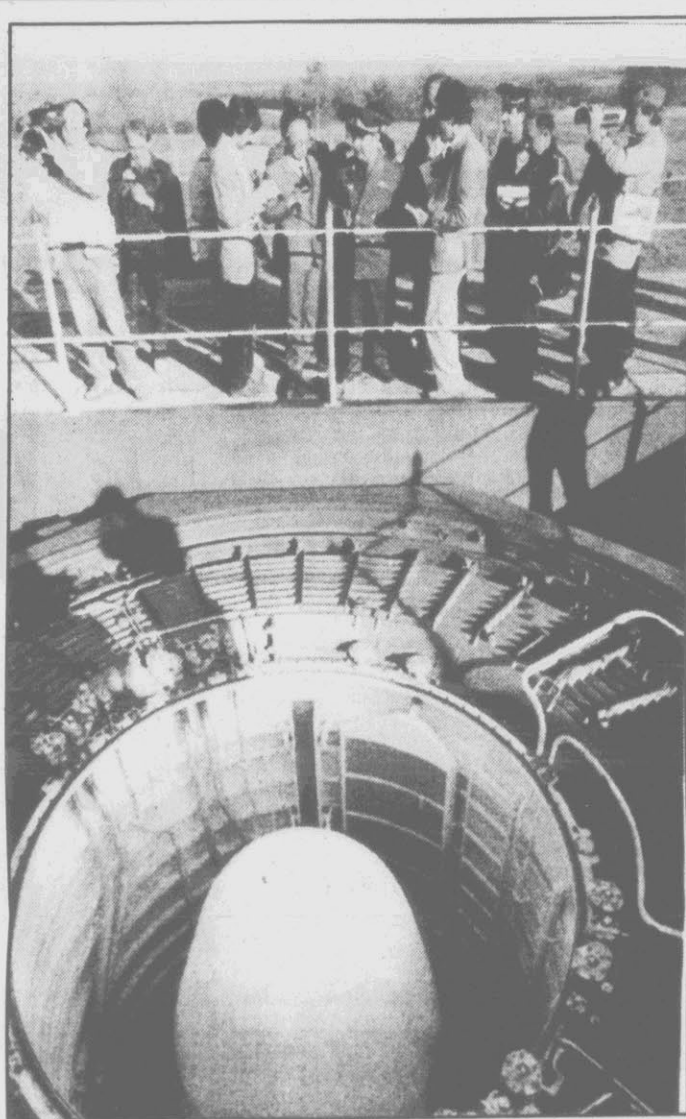

Asked at Thursday's weekly briefing for foreign journalists if rightists would be able to open debate on revising the constitution in view of the outpouring of sympathy for the emperor, Matsuda replied, "Absolutely not."

Street Violence

Chilean police use tear gas against demonstrators in Santiago celebrating the defeat of Gen. Augusto Pinochet's bid for eight more years of power. Protesters have demanded his immediate resignation, but Pinochet says he will stay in office until his term expires in 1989.

Provincial Leaders Quit In Yugoslavia

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Communist party leaders in a troubled province were ousted after thousands of protesters stormed their headquarters in the worst violence in three months of ethnic unrest. The shake-up boosted Serbia's drive for greater control over two provinces.

At least 100 people were injured Thursday when an estimated 30,000 people in Novi Sad, capital of Vojvodina province, surged toward riot police guarding party headquarters, state-run media said.

The demonstrators threw rocks and broke about 20 windows during the 30-hour siege. The state news agency Tanjug said two firecrackers caused a fire that was quickly extinguished.

Fourteen policemen were among the injured, two seriously, it said.

Six people were hospitalized and four were reported arrested before the crowds were dispersed.

The 15 members of the Communist party's Politburo in Vojvodina province pledged to step down after the demonstration.

Tanjug reported later Thursday that the party's Central Committee in the province voted 87-10 to dismiss the Politburo, the region's highest political body.

The mass resignation in Vojvodina is a major victory for Serbian Communist party leader Slobodan Milosevic, who has led his republic's Serbian drive for more control over Vojvodina and a second province, ethnically troubled Kosovo.

The Communist party leaderships in both provinces had resisted the Serbian drive for more control. The Kosovo leadership is now expected to come under pressure to step down.

The shake-up came two days after national Communist party chief Stipe Suvar, faced with the mounting unrest, promised sweeping personnel changes in the ruling national Politburo and policy-setting Central Committee at or before a Central Committee meeting scheduled for Oct. 17.

Vojvodina provincial leaders had promised to resign after meeting with Serbian party leaders in Belgrade, the nation's capital 40 miles to the south.

Tanjug quoted the Serbian party as saying: "The Vojvodina leadership has been deaf to the demands of the working class and other citizens. A serious split has occurred between the Vojvodina leadership and the people."

Provincial party leader Milovan Sogorov said a 10-member provincial group would be established while new leaders were chosen for Vojvodina, a flat region that produces most of the nation's grain.

Tens of thousands of Serbs have rallied almost daily for three months in support of Milosevic's effort to assert more authority in the provinces.

Most demonstrations have supported the cause of Serbs in Kosovo. A largely Christian minority, they claim harassment by predominantly Moslem ethnic Albanians, who make up 90 percent of Kosovo's 2 million people. The southern province borders on Albania.

The latest protesters sang Serbian nationalist songs but also shouted complaints about low wages and declining standards of living. State television said an informal poll it conducted of demonstrators in Novi Sad showed that most cited the bad economic situation as the main reason for demanding change.

Algerians Line Up For Bread Rations

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — Algerians formed long lines for bread today as the capital returned to calm after three days of widespread rioting over government-mandated price increases.

An overnight curfew apparently was widely obeyed, with occasional gunshots breaking the early morning silence. It was not clear whether the shots were fired at groups of protesters or were warnings fired to chase away the few people in the streets.

More than 30 people seriously injured in the clashes were admitted to Mustapha Hospital in Algiers, according to medical sources speaking today on condition of anonymity. They said the worst injuries occurred in battles Wednesday night.

President Chadli Bendjedid proclaimed a state of emergency on Thursday and ordered a curfew from midnight to 6 a.m. to halt the violent protests against rising prices forced by a government austerity program.

The army was given responsibility for public order for the first time since Algeria won independence from France 26 years ago.
