N.C. State Fair

"Goodness Grows in North Carolina" is the topic of the 1988 N.C. State Fair under way in Raleigh. An estimated 16,000 exhibits utilize the theme to tell agriculture's progress and growth in North Carolina's third century.

One of the two midways can be seen here revealing the rides and game booths. The 121st state fair will run through Sunday.

30 Feared Dead In Rome Crash

By Mary Beth Sheridan
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROME — A Uganda Airlines jet with 52 people aboard crashed, broke into pieces and burned early today while trying to land in heavy fog at Rome's main airport. Officials reported 30 people were killed.

All of the surviving 22 people on Flight 775 from London's Gatwick airport to Entebbe, Uganda, via Rome, apparently were injured, said Carlo Iovinella, director of the airport police.

The Boeing 707 tore through the side of a wooden house, clipped a garage, demolished an unoccupied brick house and then barreled through the parking lot of a rental car agency.

At that point, an engine and part of a wing fell off and the impact started a fire that destroyed about 75 cars.

The rest of the plane slid across a road, through a fence and knocked down trees before it broke into pieces and burst into flames about a half-mile south of the runway at Leonardo da Vinci airport, 15 miles southwest of Rome.

One man in the wooden house, Carlo Satta, 30, suffered minor injuries when the roof collapsed.

"I was awake and heard a ringing sound. Two seconds later it sounded like the gas cylinders in the house had blown up. A few seconds later all the cars were in flames," said the injured man's father, Luigi.

Passenger John Harigye, a former Ugandan ambassador to the Vatican who was hospitalized in good condition with burns, told the Italian news agency ANSA that the plane aborted one landing attempt because of the fog and tried again about 15 minutes later.

"It was at this point that one heard a very violent collision and immediately afterwards the flames burst out," he said. "My seat was upside down, but I released my seat belt, opened the emergency exit and got out with the woman sitting near me. We began to run and we heard a second explosion on the airplane."

The commander of Rome Province's fire department, Guido Chiucini, speculated the pilot and the control tower might have had a "misunderstanding" about the landing.

Wellcome Researchers Awarded The 1988 Nobel Prize In Medicine

By Arthur Max
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — American researchers Gertrude Elion and George H. Hitchings won the 1988 Nobel Prize in medicine today for discoveries leading to drugs that treat AIDS and herpes.

Sir James W. Black of Great Britain shared the award for research that led to a drug for peptic ulcers.

The Americans' research also led to the development of drugs for the treatment of leukemia, malaria, and to fight the rejection of transplanted organs, said the Nobel Assembly of the Karolinska Institute.

Elion, 70, a New York City native, and Hitchings, 83, born in Hoquiam, Wash., are affiliated with Wellcome Research Laboratories in Research Triangle Park, N.C. Black, 64, works at King's College Hospital Medical School at the University of London.

The institute cited the researchers "for their discoveries of important principles for drug treatment."

The work of Elion and Hitchings broke new ground in finding the difference in nucleic acid metabolism between normal cells and cancer cells, protozoa, bacteria and viruses, the institute said.

Knowing those differences allowed researchers to attack disease-causing organisms by interfering with their replication, the announcement said.

Among the drugs developed from their ideas is azidothymidine, or AZT, which has had the best

Campus Rioting Blamed On Warm Weather, Alcohol

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. CLOUD, Minn. — Warm weather, the party atmosphere surrounding homecoming weekend and increased alcohol consumption have been blamed for two nights of rioting at St. Cloud State University.

"The catalyst for this whole thing was a lot of young people with a lot of booze in them," Assistant Police Chief Jim Moline said Sunday. "They're not experienced enough with alcohol and they just go kind of crazy."

Things were quiet Sunday night, authorities said.

But the previous night, police clad in riot gear clashed with students and others who burned furniture and a trash bin that had been dragged into the street. Sixty people were arrested, including 34 students, police said. On Friday night, two people were arrested.

At least six people, including a police officer, were treated at a hospital for minor injuries suffered Saturday night and early Sunday, said hospital nursing supervisor Patricia Anderson.

Students set off firecrackers and some played the Beatles' song "Revolution" on a stereo as police swept through the crowd, estimated at about 700 people, Saturday night. Other people tore down street signs and jumped on cars, or threw beer bottles and pieces of lumber.

In all, as many as 1,500 people converged on a four-block area both Friday and Saturday nights, Moline said.

U.S.-Pakistani Report Says Zia Crash No Mishap

By Kathy Gannon
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — The plane crash that killed President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq, the U.S. ambassador and 28 others was not an accident, according to a U.S.-Pakistani report. But officials said the exact cause may never be known.

Pakistan air force Cmdr. Abbas Mirza, who released a summary of the report Sunday, said the Aug. 17 crash of the Hercules C-130 transport plane may have been caused by a small explosion or the pilots may have been drugged or intentionally crashed the plane.

But the lack of a black box voice recorder and the inability to perform autopsies on the bodies of the pilots is hampering investigators from concluding just what caused the plane to go down, he said.

The 365-page report ruled out mechanical failure, said Mirza, who gave a 27-page summary to reporters at a hastily called news conference.

"After a thorough analysis of the available evidence, the board has been unable to substantiate a technical reason for the accident," said the report by four Pakistani investigators and six U.S. Air Force officers.

"In the absence of the technical reason, the only other possible cause of the accident is the occurrence of a criminal act or sabotage leading to the loss of aircraft control and the (crash)," it said.

In Washington, U.S. State Department spokeswoman Nancy Beck said U.S. officials received a copy of the report and "we are studying it." She made no further comment.

All 30 people aboard the plane were killed, including U.S. Ambassador Arnold Raphel; a U.S. defense adviser, Brig. Gen. Herbert M. Wassom; and five top Pakistani generals.

Mirza said eyewitness reports and a test of debris ruled out the possibility the plane was hit by a surface-to-air missile or suffered a powerful mid-air explosion. But he said a smaller explosion remained a possibility.

He said witnesses reported the aircraft pitched violently for about two minutes before making a nosedive.

Mirza also said lab tests of the debris showed unusually large quantities of chemicals used to make explosives, including phosphorus, chlorine, potassium, antimony and pentaerythritol tetranitrate.

He said investigators assembled a detonator from the same chemicals found in the debris. The report noted phosphorus was found on mango seeds in the wreckage. Earlier reports speculated an explosive device was hidden in a box of mangos offered as a gift and placed aboard at the last minute. Mirza did not comment on the theory.

Report Says First Lady Didn't Report Outfit Loans

By Merrill Hartson
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Nancy Reagan has borrowed expensive clothing and jewelry for more than six years without reporting the loans as required under an ethics law, according to Time magazine. A White House spokesman today denounced "these attacks" on the first lady.

The magazine also said in its Oct. 24 issue that Mrs. Reagan has kept and failed to report numerous dresses and matched outfits loaned to her by designers.

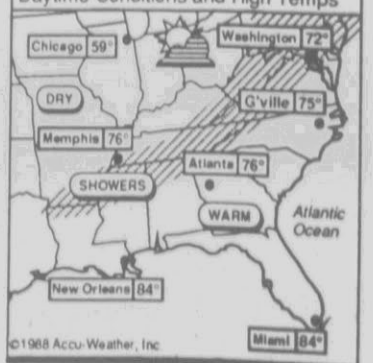

Expensive clothing given as a gift to Mrs. Reagan must be reported on financial disclosure forms required under the 1978 Ethics in Government Act. White House lawyers agreed in 1982 that any dresses considered as loans would be reported.

Time said neither the disclosure forms nor Reagan tax returns from

Shellfishermen Report Oysters On Scarce Side As Season Opens

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SHALLOTTE POINT, N.C. — Oysters were small and scarce on the first day of the season as buckets filled slowly, shellfishermen agreed as they bent over mud flats.

"There ain't nothing here to get," said D.W. Kersey, who had scouted the flats Thursday for a good spot. "This is the sorriest I've ever seen."

His friend John Henry Ward, of Shell Point, agreed.

"It's pretty bad," he said. "They just ain't here. They ain't grown."

Kersey said he thinks the red tide may have affected this season's oyster crop. The toxic algae choked the North Carolina coast last winter, closing 200 miles to shellfishing during the height of oyster season.

Shellfishermen had more than one theory on the small size and supply of oysters. Some jokingly talked of leaving the mud to take their baskets and buckets elsewhere.

Linwood Hewett, snugly dressed in fatigues over thermal underwear in the 35-degree weather, said he might do better buying oysters instead of picking them.

"I think it would pay me to take $16 and go buy a bushel," he said.

Others were optimistic about what could happen between the opening day — which began at 7:17 a.m. Saturday — and Thanksgiving.

"They don't really grow until the weather cools," said David Hobbs of Shallotte Point. "We'll see how they grow in the next month."

By 8 a.m., the sun was high enough to warm men as well as small birds that were picking at cracked oyster shells. More and more shellfishermen used mallets and hammers to separate oysters and to pry off other shells.

But even as the sky grew lighter, the parking lot at Holden's, usually filled on opening day, held only five boat trailers.

Shellfishermen said an early tide — it was low at about 5:30 a.m. and expected to be high by 9:30 a.m. — kept some away.

"If the tide were at nine, you could walk across people," said Jeris Hewett. "You'll probably see them this evening. It goes low again at about 6 p.m."

Hewett had promised to bring his wife enough oysters for dinner. He found a good spot and in less than half an hour collected a full pail.

Boats along the Lockwood Folly

River in Varnamtown were covered, and barely a soul stirred, said Marlene Varnam. Mrs. Varnam's husband, Carson, runs a clam and oyster house in Varnamtown. "It's dead," she said. "We ain't seen an oyster all day. There weren't no tide enough for anyone to go from here to the other rivers."

The Lockwood Folly River has been closed because of bacterial pollution since August. No portion of the river purged itself in time for oyster season's opening day.

The air was clear over Varnamtown, she said, on a day when it's usually filled with the smoke of oyster roasts by afternoon.

Mrs. Varnam said she and her husband got "about 100 calls" from people wanting oysters, but they had none to offer that morning.

Book Recounts Bizarre Murders

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — A recently published book about the bizarre deaths of nine people in Kentucky and North Carolina in 1984 places some of the blame on what the author alleges was the "incompetence" of North Carolina investigators.

"Bitter Blood," written by Jerry Bledsoe and published by E.P. Dutton, investigates the gangland-style slayings of Delores and Jane Lynch at their sprawling Oldham County home in July 1984.

It relates the bizarre story that unfolded as investigators pursued the case for 10 months that left seven people dead in North Carolina.

Lt. Dan Davidson, a veteran Kentucky State Police investigator who was stumped by the Lynch murders until early June 1985, when three people related by marriage to the Lynches were found dead in their North Carolina home.

Davidson began working with North Carolina investigators who believed a bitter child-visitation battle tied the two cases together. But a week later, as police attempted to arrest the man they believed was responsible for the murders, they were thwarted by an event so bizarre that Davidson says he still can't believe it happened.

A Chevrolet Blazer that the man, his girlfriend and her two sons were riding in erupted in a fiery explosion. Fritz Klenner and his girlfriend, Susie Lynch, died in the explosion. Autopsies showed that the 9- and 10-year-old boys — grandsons of Delores Lynch — had been poisoned with cyanide and shot in the head.

Three months later, an Oldham County grand jury found Klenner, 32, and Susie Lynch, 39, responsible for the murders of Susie Lynch's mother-in-law and sister-in-law, Delores and Jane Lynch.

North Carolina investigators had already determined that Klenner, who was also Susie Lynch's first cousin, was responsible for the Greensboro-area deaths of her parents and grandmother.

In his book, Bledsoe, a reporter for the Greensboro News & Record, argues that Kentucky investigators would have solved the Lynch murders shortly after they happened if it hadn't been for the "incompetence" of the North Carolina State Bureau of Investigation.

When the Lynch murders were discovered in July 1984, Davidson working with Oldham Detective Lynn Nobles and now-retired state police Sgt. Sherman Childers, began a lengthy and frustrating investigation.

In August 1984, Davidson requested a check on Susie Lynch from the North Carolina State Bureau of Investigation. Susie Lynch had been married to Delores Lynch's son, Tom Lynch, a New Mexico dentist. The check showed that a camping trailer was jointly registered to her and Fritz Klenner.

Davidson then sought a check on Klenner and was told that he was a doctor and had no criminal record.

After the explosion, police in North Carolina and Kentucky learned that Klenner had never attended medical school, despite a wide belief among people in his hometown of Reidsville, N.C., that he was a licensed physician.

Police also found an arsenal of guns and explosives at an apartment near Greensboro that Susie Lynch and Klenner shared as well as at the home of Klenner's mother.

According to the book, a month after the explosion, State Bureau of Investigation officials revealed that they should have known about Klenner's unusual tendencies. The bureau had a detailed file on Klenner compiled after someone complained that Klenner was practicing medicine without a license.

In the file, a bureau agent described Klenner as a survivalist "gun nut" who was masquerading as a doctor. The file said Klenner was "paranoid and spent all of his money on exotic military weapons that he carried wherever he went."

Bledsoe believes that Davidson would have focused on Klenner immediately — had he gotten the file when he requested his intelligence check. The 49-year-old Davidson, who retired from the state police last year, agrees.

"If I had been told at that time that Klenner was a gun fanatic posing as a doctor, I would have wound up doing exactly what I did after the (Blazer) explosion.

connection with the theft of $95 worth of clothes from A7 Glendale Court in a break-in reported at 5:17 p.m.

Allsbrook said Peterson was also charged with hit and run driving in connection with a collision on N.C. 11 South, near Ayden, after the break-in was reported.

Officer D.R. Wyrick said a juvenile was taken into custody at the Farm Fresh Store about 11:05 p.m. Saturday in connection with the theft of a number of hair care and other items, while Officer S.D. Hilliard said Gene Raymond Peterson, 33, of 405 Bonners Lane was arrested on auto larceny charges about 6:32 p.m. Sunday in connection with the theft of a 1970 model Ford Mustang from the intersection of Eighth and Cotanche Streets on Oct. 6.

Views On Dental Health

HEALTHY GUM AND BONE

You probably care about your dental health or you wouldn't be reading this column. One of the keys to good dental health is to have healthy gum and bone and do whatever you can to protect them. This is not as easy to achieve as you might think. Also, appearances can be deceiving. For example, when you look into your mouth you may think your teeth and gums look healthy. You may see no signs of decay in your teeth, and your gums don't seem to be giving you any problems. They may not be as healthy as they look, however, if bacteria have already started to work to destroy your teeth and gums.

If you have a dental problem, it usually starts on a tiny, microscopic level. Tooth decay, for instance, usually begins when bacteria produce acids that dissolve the crystalline portion of a small area of enamel. When bacteria attack your gums, they cause tiny ulcers to form in your gum lining. A lot of damage may already have been done before your gums begin to bleed.

Board To Consider Annexation Items

Two annexation requests are among the items the Greenville Planning and Zoning Commission will consider at its monthly meeting Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Council Chambers of City Hall.

The commission will consider recommending to the City Council a request by Derek P. Dunn to annex 20.06 acres off Cedarhurst Road, south of Westhaven Section 8, and known as Westhaven Section 9, Phase I. The area is contiguous to the city.

The board will also consider a request by James M. Moye Jr. to annex five acres south of Stantonsburg Road, east of Johns Hopkins Drive, known as Park Place, Block A, Lot 1. The area is contiguous to the city limits.

The commission will also consider approval of two preliminary plats.

Scheduled for review is the preliminary plat of Park Place on the proposed Arlington Boulevard south of Stantonsburg Road. Three development lots and 1,785 lineal feet of street are included in the 58.31-acre tract.

Also to be considered is the preliminary plat of Reedy Branch Apartments on 10th Street, north of the Wright Road intersection. The plat involves 40 multi-family dwelling units on a 3.21-acre tract.

Commission members will consider an amendment to the Bufferyard Ordinance. Now, developments coming within 500 feet of adjoining property lines are exempt from bufferyard requirements. The amendment would reduce that distance to 250 feet. The amendment would also reduce bufferyard requirements for developing land that adjoins vacant RA-20 (residential/agricultural) property that Greenville's Comprehensive Plan recommends for non-residential purposes.

The commission will also consider an amendment to Article X of the Zoning Ordinance, Sections 32-145 and 32-146, concerning withdrawal of rezoning petitions.

Nobel Prize In Medicine Awarded To Wellcome Researchers

documented results in the treatment of AIDS, the institute said. AZT is the only federally approved drug for treating acquired immune deficiency syndrome in the United States.

The discoveries of Elion and Hitchings in the late 1940s began to produce a variety of drugs, like 6-mercaptopurine in 1951 for leukemia patients.

They also developed azathioprine, which was for many years the only drug available to prevent the rejection of transplanted organs.

Another breakthrough in applying their research came in 1977, when the first effective drug was developed for treating herpes virus infections.

The drug, acyclovir, does not cure genital herpes, but it makes outbreaks of sores less severe and makes them heal faster. It can also suppress flareups of the disease in some people.

Black developed a drug called propranolol in 1964 used in the treatment of heart disease, the institute said.

The institute said Black "realized the great pharmacotherapeutic potential of receptor-blocking drugs."

In 1972, he discovered a group of histamine receptors, a finding that led to the development of the drug cimetidine. The drug introduced "a new principle in the treatment of peptic ulcer," said the institute's announcement.

Receptors are specific places to which drugs and natural substances attach themselves to produce their effects.

The three winners will share a cash award of 2.5 million kroner, or about $390,000, which they will receive at an awards ceremony Dec. 10.

The prize was approved by a ma-majority vote of the institute's 50-member Nobel Assembly on the recommendation of a five-member committee which studied hundreds of research briefs. Normally about 250 researchers are nominated for the prize each year.

Hitchings received a bachelor's degree from the University of Washington in 1927, and a doctorate from Harvard University in 1933.

He taught at Harvard from 1928 to 1939 and was a senior instructor at Western Reserve University from 1939 to 1942, when he joined Burroughs Wellcome Co., a pharmaceutical firm. Wellcome Research Laboratories is the research arm of Burroughs Wellcome.

Hitchings became Burroughs Wellcome's research director in 1955. He also was a director of Burroughs Wellcome from 1968 to 1984.

He has held a number of academic posts including an adjunct professorship at Duke University and a professorship at Brown University, 1968-80.

Elion has worked at Wellcome Research Labs since 1944 and as a senior research chemist since 1950. She has been a scientist emerita at the laboratory since 1983.

Elion also has been a research professor of pharmacology at Duke University since 1983.

She earned her bachelor's degree from Hunter College in 1937 and a master's degree from New York University in 1941.

Black received a ChB, or a bachelor of surgery, and an MB, or a bachelor of medicine, from University of St. Andrews in Scotland.

The medicine prize is the first of four Nobel prizes to be announced this week. On Tuesday, the laureate in economic sciences will be named, and prizes in physics and chemistry will be awarded Wednesday.

The Nobels were first awarded in 1901, five years after the death of Alfred Nobel who made a fortune on his invention of dynamite.

No U.S. researcher won the medicine prize until 1933. In the last 20 years there have been 30 U.S. laureates, and 19 from all other countries.

Last year's winner was Susumu Tonegawa of Japan, who conducted his study of the body's immune system at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The Nobel Peace prize went this year to the U.N. peacekeeping forces patrolling the world's trouble spots. The literature prize was won by Egyptian novelist Naguib Mahfouz, the first Arabic-language laureate in the 87-year history of the Nobels.

Uganda Airlines Jet Crashes In Fog

Police said one of the dead was identified as a Ugandan. Twelve Ugandans and three Britons were among the injured, but the nationalities of the others aboard were not immediately available.

Workers had recovered the remains of at least 28 victims at the crash scene, and two others died at hospitals, officials said. Other bodies were thought to be hidden in the wreckage.

While firefighters raked through the debris at dawn, the charred hulk of the airliner lay smoking. Two bodies covered with sheets lay near the wrecked aircraft. Seat cushions, boxes, a makeup case and a twisted doll were scattered in the mud nearby.

Renato Ubasi, an aviation authority official, said searchers had found the cockpit voice recorder. ANSA said police recovered a flight data recorder.

In Kampala, Uganda, Osende Odoi, general manager of the airline, said the aircraft had been modified to reduce noise and was returned to service earlier this year.

Airport director Raffaele Casagrande said in a statement that 45 passengers and seven crew members were aboard the jetliner when it crashed at 12:31 a.m. He said 24 injured people were taken to four hospitals. Officials said two died later.

Iovinella said the cause of the crash was not been determined.

ANSA said the tower gave permission for the plane to land and reported a visibility of 4,920 feet. It said the tower called the plane again when it didn't respond. Moments later, it said, workers reported a fire at the end of the runway.

The last airline disaster in Italy was the crash of the domestic airline ATI turbo-prop near Lake Como that killed all 37 aboard Oct. 15, 1987. The plane crashed moments after take-off from Linate Airport in Milan on a flight to West Germany.

Crash No Accident

Among the scenarios Mirza suggested were that the flight crew was drugged, causing them to lose control. But he said that due to the condition of the bodies no autopsies could be performed to test that theory.

The drugs could have been hidden in a gift package or beverage cans, Mirza said.

Mirza said the phrase "criminal act" referred to the possibility that the pilot or co-pilot could have disrupted cockpit controls intentionally, causing the crash in an open field.

Because there was no voice recorder aboard the aircraft, he said, it was impossible to determine what the crew said before the crash.

The plane originated in Islamabad and flew to Bahawalpur, where Zia watched a demonstration of the U.S. M-1 Abrams battle tank. The four-engine turboprop crashed after takeoff on the return flight from Bahawalpur, 330 miles south of Islamabad.

Zia, 64, was a military strongman who imposed eight years of martial law during his 11 years in power.

The Soviet Union and Afghanistan objected to his support of rebels fighting Afghanistan's Marxist government.

India fought three wars with Pakistan since the subcontinent was partitioned in 1947.

Pakistan is committed to holding elections Nov. 16 for a new leadership.

Loans Questioned

1982 through 1987 listed loans or gifts of dresses to Mrs. Reagan.

Her press secretary, Elaine Crispin, said last week that Mrs. Reagan told her she has bought all the clothes she has worn since early 1982, according to the magazine.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said today that "I have nothing to add to that." But he described President Reagan as "upset with all these attacks on his wife."

When asked whether an internal inquiry had been commenced in the White House counsel's office to determine the validity of the assertions about Mrs. Reagan's use of clothes, Fitzwater replied, "No. At this point, I don't know that there's any need for one."

Los Angeles designer David Hayes said Mrs. Reagan has borrowed 60 to 80 made-to-order outfits during the past eight years. She returned more than half and kept the others, he said.

"We think of it as loans. It's wonderful," Hayes told Time. "She has been a sensation for my business."

Historic Move

City Should Play Role In Preservation

A landmark home, the Patrick Arthur House at 14th and Charles Streets, will be saved from demolition, through an agreement by the city to accept ownership of the structure.

The city will also provide $5,000 of the $25,000 cost to move the house from the present location, which has been rezoned for commercial development.

The rest of the moving cost will be paid by the owners and the developers.

The city expects to place the house on a city-owned lot and then put it up for sale.

The house was given to the city by the owners on condition that it be removed from the property.

After a period in which many old homes were demolished in redevelopment work, the community has become more interested in preserving such homes. Two examples are the Humber home at Fifth and Washington Streets, now occupied by the Archives and History office of the N.C. Department of Cultural Resources, and the Fleming home at Third and Greene, which was restored and used as offices by the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce.

Even though much of our architectural heritage has been destroyed, Greenville has some fine examples of early 1900 architecture. We should do what we reasonably can to preserve some of these old homes for future generations.

There may be other offers of homes to the city for preservation. It would be timely to develop guidelines for the future. A clear goal would be for the city to encourage preservation and use of old homes at little or no cost to the taxpayers. It may be that private funds can be established to assist in such efforts. Realtors may be able to assist in finding buyers who are prepared to move old houses and restore them for other uses. A lot will depend on how successful the Arthur home project is as a financial venture.

Local growth is exciting, but it sometimes means that architectural gems become threatened. There won't be much public money available for preserving old homes which may be facing demolition, but the city government should do what it can to encourage preservation.

Why Reconsider The Ruling?

Jerelyn Eddings

Why has the Supreme Court decided to reach 12 years back and reconsider a case that has been long accepted as a valid tool in the struggle against racial discrimination? Nobody asked it to, and it is hard to imagine what the benefits of this exercise could be.

The ruling being reconsidered — and on which the court heard arguments last week — is Runyon v. McCrary, a 1976 case that involved suits by black parents against two all-white private schools. The Supreme Court based its decision in favor of the black parents on an 1866 statute guaranteeing all persons the same right "to make and enforce contracts."

The Runyon case became a key element in a series of court rulings, based on Reconstruction statutes that had not previously been enforced, that prohibited racial discrimination in all kinds of private transactions. It transformed the 1866 law into a powerful weapon for people who sue to redress discrimination in areas such as employment and housing.

The ruling is long established and was not questioned even by defendants in the case now before the court, Patterson v. McLean Credit Union, which prompted five of the nine justices to vote to reconsider the 12-year-old decision.

The defendants did not challenge Runyon, or suggest it was a bad decision, or ask the court to re-examine its validity. Instead, they argued that the Civil Rights Act of 1866 did not apply to racial harassment, as the plaintiff had claimed. The court's decision to look at Runyon again was unsolicited — and shocking to people who see no reason to shake up the body of laws that have changed this nation for the better.

The Reagan administration, often the culprit in attempts to reverse civil-rights decisions, didn't ask for this. Solicitor General Charles Fried chose not to participate in the case on any level. He didn't file a brief and offered no public comment.

Congress certainly wasn't interested in having the issue of Runyon reopened. A bipartisan group of almost 200 members, including two-thirds of the Senate, filed a brief urging the Supreme Court not to overrule the 1976 decision.

The lawmakers said that they had "an institutional interest in the stability of statutory precedents," especially those that affect Congress' role in "enacting legislation to eradicate the evils of racial discrimination," and especially in a case in which the court was questioning the validity of its interpretation of a law "long after the Congress has accepted that interpretation and acted affirmatively to build upon it."

They said that "overturning Runyon and forcing the Congress to revisit this area would not only impose significant, unnecessary burdens on the legislative process, but could threaten the repose that the nation has obtained on the issue of racial discrimination."

In other words, the nation has spent a long time getting this stuff fixed. Don't break it and force us to go through the hassle of trying to fix it again.

A separate brief on behalf of Runyon was filed by 47 of the 50 state attorneys general, and another — prepared by the American Jewish Council and coordinated by the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights — was filed by 110 civil-rights and civic groups, including the American Bar Association.

Yet another brief was filed by a group of historians, experts in the Reconstruction era, who believe that the court properly interpreted the will of the 1866 Congress — which apparently is the point of contention for the justices who wanted to take another swing at Runyon.

But what is the point of this affair? Does it mean that the court, with its three Reagan appointees, will be pursuing a conservative agenda and reversing decisions of the past three decades dealing with civil and individual rights? Will we now go back to re-examine Brown v. Board of Education and other landmark cases that have helped to make America a fairer, more just nation?

Ralph Neas of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights said earlier this year that a Supreme Court decision overruling Runyon would be an assault to "the millions of Americans for whom civil rights is not just an abstract legal principle but rather an armor in the battle against prejudice."

It would be that, and it would also be a frightening omen for those of us who don't want to see America moving backward.

The Artful Populist Does Battle For All

David Remnick

MOSCOW — Through the artful use of television, Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev has cast himself this week in the role of a populist who, against all odds and bureaucrats, is fighting for the aspirations and comforts of the common man.

For the first three years of his rule, Gorbachev staged a revolution mainly of ideas, returning a measure of dignity to the country's academics, journalists and artists and introducing a comprehensive list of reform plans. Some of those plans have been put into effect, but most remain blueprints, and the problems that grate on ordinary people — housing, food, medical care, ecology and working conditions — persist and are growing worse.

After his six-week vacation in the Crimea, Gorbachev has begun a new political season with a trip to the heartland, the Siberian cities of Krasnoyarsk and Norilsk. For the past three days, the evening news program "Vremya" has shown extensive footage of Gorbachev touring factories, grocery stores and neighborhoods, working the crowds, listening to and answering the plaintive and sometimes desperate complaints of workers.

Gorbachev, who will reportedly deliver a major domestic-policy statement this week, has clearly begun a campaign to win over ordinary people the way he did intellectuals in his first years in power.

At one point in Krasnoyarsk, Gorbachev said the people were "at my throat ... and they are right." But Gorbachev did not seem bothered, apparently sensing that he can gain politically by allowing people to vent their frustrations.

The complaints ranged from air pollution to the lack of sausage in the stores. "We don't even have any hot water," one woman told Gorbachev in a village outside Krasnoyarsk.

As a political and television performer, Gorbachev is his own best director, and he has taken this Siberian trip as an occasion to show that he will not overlook the country's most persistent problems. The lengthy excerpts broadcast on "Vremya" these past three nights, with their unfocused shots and botched camera angles, had the random feel of cinema verite, but they comprised a well-conceived morality play in which Gorbachev was the populist leader finding truth among the simple people.

Even when people on the street were making their comments, the camera usually stayed fixed on Gorbachev, beaming to tens of millions of households an image of sympathy and understanding at the head of the Communist Party.

Time and again, Gorbachev emphasized that the only proper conclusion was that all these problems require the most radical and immediate sort of reform, changes that will tax the energy and thinking of a people who have grown used to a centralized, dictatorial system. In essence, Gorbachev was trying to break the message to the people gently: if you want better lives, it will take time and you will all have to make decisions and exert tremendous effort.

"Oh, if we could only do things in an instant — right, comrades?" he said. "Everybody wants everything to be solved right away."

Gorbachev said Wednesday night that the Soviet leadership could no longer act dictatorially as it did in Stalin's days. "You have to decide things for yourselves, too," he said, emphasizing the need for political democratization to a group of factory workers.

Another populist gesture is the way that, in meetings with local officials, Gorbachev made himself the tribune of the people's complaints. He often used the officials as foils, demonstrating for the television audience how bureaucrats need to change their way of thinking and working in order to improve the Soviet living standard.

When one official began talking about how target levels for meat production are being reached, the Soviet leader broke in, saying, "Your calculations say we have almost reached the right figure. But the people are laughing." Afterward, the official appeared crestfallen and his voice began to crack.

Gorbachev also has used the broadcasts to defend some of his most controversial reforms. After one woman in a synthetic-fiber plant complained that young workers were leaving state enterprises to work for more money in various co-operatives, Gorbachev was once more the patient friend.

He emphasized with people's complaints about the prices charged by co-operatives — "sometimes I've seen them charging five times the state price" — but then tried to explain co-operatives' long-term value. Gorbachev said that because of modernization, more than 10 million people would be laid off by the year 2000, "and these people need to be employed. After all, under socialism, we don't allow unemployment."

Gorbachev has also strongly defended his most radical agricultural proposal — the rental of farm land to individual families. He tried to allay the widespread fear that such a policy could, as it did under Stalin, lead to a purge of successful farmers who do not work on the traditional Soviet state and collective farms.

Although he has never shown any inclination to yield much power, Gorbachev tried to emphasize that he alone cannot improve the farms and factories. "People keep coming to me and say, 'Mikhail Sergeevich, do something,'" he told an audience of Siberian party officials. "But it is time to abandon czars and dictators."

Until last year, the official best known for his populism was Moscow party chief Boris Yeltsin. But while Gorbachev joined in Yeltsin's ouster, the Soviet leader has decided to go through with one of Yeltsin's most controversial promises: doing away with perks for party officials. This week the government closed down one of the main stores reserved for the party elite in Moscow, just a block from the Kremlin.

In Krasnoyarsk Gorbachev also said a new building originally designed for party offices would instead be used for public-health-care facilities.

A Rare Privilege For This Father

Art Buchwald

A group of us was having lunch the other day when Beeman came hurrying in. He was flushed with what seemed like victory.

"I think I've got it," he exclaimed. "What is that?"

"I just made an appointment with my daughter. I haven't been able to see her for two months, but she informed me that she could fit me in at 6 o'clock on Thursday."

"That's neat," I said. "How did you do it?"

"It wasn't easy. I kept leaving messages at her dorm saying that I would be grateful to simply meet with her and talk over how things were going."

"The first time she turned me down was because she was going to Vermont to look at the leaves. The second time she actually made a date with me, but then canceled it as she had been invited to wash her boyfriend's car. And three weeks ago, she called to say that she couldn't see me on her birthday because she wanted to enter a 26-mile marathon where you could meet a lot of neat guys."

"How can you be sure that she will show up for the appointment she's made now?" I wanted to know.

"She sounded as if she was serious. But it's not firmed up yet. There is some talk about her floating down the Delaware River in a rubber tube or going to Ohio for a touch football game with the League of Women Voters — but I'm optimistic that she'll keep the date with me."

"You're a lucky man, Beeman," one of the group said. "I haven't been able to arrange a meeting with my son for two years. He's one busy fellow."

"They all are," Beeman said. "And you can't fault them for refusing to put us on their calendars. You know what's really funny. I wanted to talk to George Shultz the other day, and it was arranged in an hour. I called Lee Iacocca and he said he would see me as soon as I arrived. It's been like that all month. The only one I am unable to make contact with is my own flesh and blood."

"What are you planning to talk about when you do see her?" I inquired.

"I am going to ask her if she loves me. And if she says she does, I'll start to wonder why she doesn't answer the calls I leave on her answering machine. I'll try to find out if I'm the father she really wanted."

"I wouldn't do that," one of the men said. "You'll only make her feel guilty."

Beeman remarked, "If I could make her feel guilty I would consider our meeting a big success."

"Don't get so upset. There are five of us at this table and, if you added it all up, we haven't seen our children for a total of 90 years."

Beeman said, "I'm sorry, guys. I don't want you to think I've got it made. Just because my daughter gave me this appointment doesn't mean she'll give me another one. If she gets a better offer she will cancel this date just like that."

"If she did, would you take away her school allowance?"

"Of course not. What kind of father takes away his daughter's allowance just because she doesn't return his calls?"

It's Becoming A Habit For The Democrats

Walter Mears

WASHINGTON — It was a simple, stinging campaign ad — a pair of hands tearing up a Social Security card.

That was 24 years ago, and Barry Goldwater still recalls it with anger, saying in his memoirs that it was "a repellent lie" for the Democrats to charge he would have destroyed Social Security if he had been elected president in 1964.

There's a somewhat milder reprise of that television ad in this campaign, as Democrat Michael Dukakis tries to cast Vice President George Bush in the Goldwater role.

It shows a Social Security card with pieces disappearing while Republican Bush is accused of favoring benefit cuts. "Vote for the man you know will protect Social Security and make sure it's there when you need it," the Dukakis campaign commercial urges.

The issue is back, with the volume relatively low so far but with the Democrats likely to turn it up in the waning days of the campaign. A push on Social Security hardly would qualify as an October surprise. It has become an October habit.

Dukakis raised the Social Security flag in his first debate with Bush on Sept. 25, asserting that "if he's serious about what he's saying, then the only place he can go to balance that budget is to raid the Social Security trust fund and he tried that in 1985 and I think he's going to try it again."

The topic came up again as Bush and Dukakis met in their second and final campaign debate.

Both presidential nominees have declared Social Security off limits in budget-cutting efforts. Bush specifically exempts it from his proposed "flexible freeze" budget plan. But that fits the tested Democratic theme, which is to argue that Republicans always say they are solidly behind Social Security before the election, and renege afterward.

Democratic Sen. Lloyd Bentsen spelled that out in the vice presidential debate. "I know too well what their track record is ... and we should be concerned about that kind of an effort once again after the election is over."

Bentsen accused Sen. Dan Quayle, Bush's running mate, of voting eight times to cut Social Security benefits. Quayle replied that what he'd voted for, and what Bentsen himself had twice voted for, was to delay cost-of-living increases.

Bush voted in 1985 to break a Senate tie and impose a one-year freeze on increases in Social Security benefits. In the end, nothing was frozen.

Dukakis supported a 1985 National Governors' Association policy statement that included a freeze in Social Security cost-of-living increases. The Dukakis campaign says the Massachusetts governor first voted for an amendment that would have exempted Social Security, but his side lost. None of it was binding anyhow.

So there is enough history, and enough ambiguity on both sides to push most other topics off the campaign agenda. Not this one.

Bush is trying to anticipate, and undercut, the long-tested Democratic issue by calling it more of the same. "Here again, my opponent is using what can only be described as irresponsible scare tactics — the same shopworn ones his party trots out every time they fall behind, usually about three weeks before an election," he said in Seattle on Monday.

It may look shopworn, but is also is shop-proven. After the Republicans lost control of the Senate in 1986, Sen. Bob Dole of Kansas blamed the loss of the majority he had led on the Democrats' chorused campaign on the Social Security issue.

The Republican administration had sought to slow cost-of-living increases, and had recommended reductions in ancillary benefits, rearming Democrats on the issue. It has been a troublesome topic for President Reagan since he came to national politics — after calling Social Security the flagship of the liberal cause and siding with 1964 Goldwater suggestions that it be made voluntary.

Writing about his own campaign in his new book, "Goldwater," the former Arizona senator said the point he tried to make was that Social Security was not actually sound, a point Reagan repeated during his 1976 and 1980 Republican campaign. That argument was better mathematically than politically.

Goldwater also warned that Social Security taxes would inevitably escalate and would one day rival the burden of federal income taxes for many Americans. That seemed improbable in 1964, but not now.

President Ford took on the issue in 1975, proposing ceilings that would have curbed Social Security cost-of-living increases by almost half, and telling Congress that it would have to restrain that and other transfer payments, programs in which the government makes payments to individuals. He got nowhere.

A month ago, Robert Strauss, co-chairman of a bipartisan commission that will offer economic advice to the incoming president, said that if deficits really are to be eliminated "we have to go to Social Security, Medicare and entitlements generally," along with defense spending curbs. Strauss is a veteran Democratic campaigner and fund-raiser, and a former party chairman.

He later said that wasn't a commission idea but, rather, his own view of the cold, hard truth.

The hard political truth is that neither candidate is going to permit, let alone propose, any talk of significant curbs or changes in Social Security. It's a given.

Quayle made that point after accusing debate rival Bentsen of trying to scare the elderly on the issue.

"This program is not a Republican program, it's not a Democratic program," Quayle said. "It's a program for older Americans that program is actually sound to the turn of this century."

The Associated Press

The Packaging Of George Bush

Catherine Woodard

To convey his confidence in his running mate, George Bush summoned the press to join him in watching the first few minutes of the vice presidential debate.

"Full face," Bush said as Sen. Dan Quayle came on stage and turned toward the television cameras. "That's good. Full face, that's a very important thing to learn."

It's evident from Bush's own campaign that he has thoroughly learned the techniques of political packaging. He is relying on the same techniques that Republicans have honed in the last two decades. His message is focused, access to him by the press is tightly controlled, and his events are carefully scripted to provide good television. Media maestro Roger Ailes has even taught Bush to lower the pitch of his voice.

But as the two presidential candidates prepared to meet in their second and final debate Thursday night in Los Angeles — one of the few opportunities for a spontaneous exchange between them — the packaging of the Bush campaign was threatening to become an issue in itself.

Dukakis is trying to make it one. He is running a series of television commercials that attack the packagers as well as the package. Portrayed by actors as cynical hacks, Bush advisers sit around in shirt sleeves and plot strategy. The close is a question: "They'd like to sell you a package. Wouldn't you rather choose a president?"

Quayle himself gave the issue new visibility this week. Angered by reports that some Bush aides believe he is a liability to the ticket, Quayle said he is fed up with being portrayed as a programmed candidate. "There's not going to be any more handler stories because I'm the handler," he said.

Wednesday, Bush press secretary Sheila Tate said that Bush shares his running mate's annoyance and "doesn't like any of these handler stories."

But as yet there has been no indication that Bush or Quayle will stop listening to the advice of their coaches, many of whom are veterans of the Reagan White House and at least two presidential campaigns.

"What is the message?" is the first question Bush campaign chairman James A. Baker III asks when he convenes a 7:30 a.m. strategy session with six key aides, all of them Reagan veterans. It's the same question he asked as White House chief of staff in Reagan's first term.

The concept for governing and campaigning is identical: Focus the message. Make sure it looks good on television. Minimize distractions. See that subordinates are clear on the execution.

Keeping the candidate focused means eliminating as much as possible questions or off-the-cuff comments that could displace the campaign's vision of the television sound bites and newspaper headlines. Bush has held only three news conferences in the eight weeks since the Republican Convention.

"Press conferences can be very disruptive things in the middle of a week when we're trying to take our message directly to the voter," deputy press secretary Mark Goodin said.

During the summer that message became increasingly negative. Aides, however, disputed the assertion that the vice president has been transformed by handlers or political expediency from a poodle to a pit bull. Aides said it was clear by late April — and Bush agreed — that he would attack the Massachusetts governor on a controversial prison furlough program and his 1977 veto of a law that would have fined teachers for not leading their classes in the Pledge of Allegiance. The only question was timing.

"I don't believe it is negative to try to clarify the distinctions, honestly and hopefully fairly, with one's opponent — that is the business of a political campaign," said Bush last week as he sought to justify the attacks.

When Bush spent several days last week describing the "kinder, gentler nation" he called for at the convention, aides characterized the speeches as a carefully timed if pleasant detour from the real work of portraying Dukakis as a risky liberal.

Bush has been the most aggressive, and started to climb back in the polls, since he left the convention in New Orleans. Some observers said Baker, who became campaign chairman that week, is given too much credit for the comeback. The strategy of attack had been mapped out for months; the afterglow of the Democratic Convention was fading for Dukakis, and Bush had the nation's attention for the first time.

But many political observers agreed that Baker, who resigned as Treasury secretary, has added a new measure of discipline to the campaign. During the primary and early summer, decisions were made by consensus among a handful of equals. Baker, as Bush strategist Lee Atwater aptly described, is "numero uno."

Dear Friends:

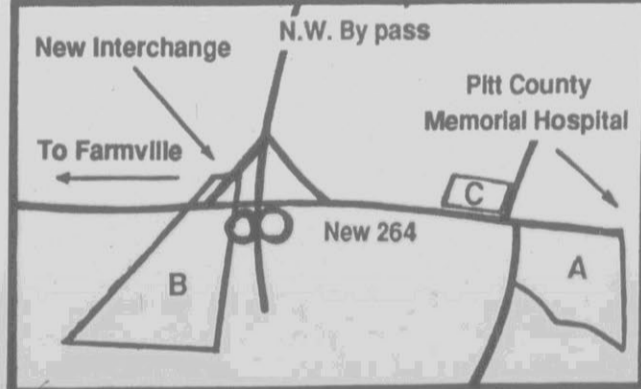

Despite two days of rain and four nights of unseasonably cool weather, the 1988 Pitt County Fair will go on record as the second largest in our 69 year history. It was surpassed very slightly by the 1987 fair when we had 6 days of perfect weather. Thursday, October 6th was the biggest day in the history of the Fair and estimated attendance was in excess of 70,000 people for the week. To those of you who attended, participated in, and supported the 1988 Fair, we would like to say a grateful "Thank You".

To all of you, and to those of you that could not be with us this year we would like to extend an invitation to attend and participate in the 1989 Fair which is already in the planning stages. We promise to make every effort to make it the biggest and best Eastern North Carolina has ever seen. Next year's fair is tentatively scheduled for Oct. 2-7, 1989.

PTL, Bakker Hearings To Resume This Week

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, S.C. — U.S. Bankruptcy Court hearings this week could help decide the future of PTL and give founder Jim Bakker a chance to defend himself in the $52 million lawsuit against him, his wife, Tammy, and a top aide.

Motions from creditors to immediately liquidate PTL's assets were to be heard today by Judge Rufus Reynolds.

The afternoon hearing will begin the second half of the trial in PTL's lawsuit against the Bakkers and former aide David Taggart. PTL claims the Bakkers mismanaged the ministry and dipped into ministry funds.

Reynolds will hear two motions to convert the Heritage USA case from Chapter 11 bankruptcy to Chapter 7, meaning Heritage USA and other ministry assets would be sold by an immediate auction rather than by an arranged sale.

Reynolds said at a September hearing he would hear the motions to convert to Chapter 7 if no buyer had been found for Heritage USA. Canadian millionaire Stephen Mernick has signed a contract with PTL Trustee M.C. "Red" Benton to buy Heritage USA for $115 million.

PTL attorney Brad Leggett said a motion by Benton asking Reynolds to approve Mernick as the buyer will be heard in November.

Leggett said PTL would file proposed amendments to its plan to reorganize Heritage USA before the hearing.

Stumping Criticized

LEXINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Davidson County Sheriff Paul R. "Jaybird" McCrary has made something of a name for himself stumping for Democratic politicians.

McCrary, safely into his fourth term in Davidson County, is known for his political base at home and his influence with the state's 81 other Democratic sheriffs.

But his campaigning has brought some criticism from Republicans, who say the sheriff should spend his time upholding the law rather than politicking.

"I feel certain he uses his deputies and his organization as an extension of his political influence," said Jerry C. Dockham, the county Republican Party chairman. "All you have to do is look at election day and you'll see deputies at all the election polls."

In an interview with the Winston-Salem Journal, McCrary said politics comes with the territory.

"We try to choose people who will first of all do the job, but also people who people like and who can influence," he said. "It helps us politically, and it helps us solve crimes."

This year McCrary is helping Tony Rand, the Democratic candidate for lieutenant governor, and Attorney General Lacy Thornburg, who is running for re-election.

PTL attorneys Tom White and Leggett presented PTL's case during the first half of the trial from Sept. 12-16.

PTL entered into evidence financial records from Bakker's time as leader of PTL and took testimony from PTL officials and an Internal Revenue Service agent that PTL claimed showed Bakker had mismanaged the ministry.

Among the items admitted as evidence during PTL's presentation were receipts for extravagant purchases by the Bakkers, including installing a water slide at their Tega Cay home.

PTL also presented IRS documents that the Bakkers and Taggart received compensation and bonuses far in excess of accepted IRS guidelines.

Ryan Hovis, Bakker's attorney, said in his opening statement during the September hearings that he intended to show that the problems of debt suffered during Bakker's administration are common to all television ministries.

Hovis said in September he planned to call Bakker to the stand to explain how PTL's problems developed and how most expenses attributed by the IRS to the Bakkers were in fact PTL expenses.

Leggett said that Mernick's proposed purchase of Heritage USA will not affect PTL's suit against Bakker because the lawsuit is one asset that is not for sale.

"We have excluded from the list of assets to be sold any lawsuits pending or lawsuits to be filed," Leggett said.

Leggett said a monetary award granted to PTL in any lawsuit would be distributed among the case's creditors.

Bill Hendon Blasts U.S. Handling Of POW Issue

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ASHEVILLE — A former congressman is criticizing the "outrageous behavior" of U.S. government officials he says are ignoring evidence of living American servicemen in Vietnam while searching old crash sites for their bones.

"I've been working on this issue on a daily basis for almost eight years," said Bill Hendon. "I've been into Asia a dozen times, into some very sensitive situations, negotiating for the release of the men in Laos and Vietnam, and I've made enough trips to the Oval Office. I've sat through innumerable hearings and studied thousands of pages of intelligence reports."

"But I've never seen anything that even comes close to this, as far as outrageous behavior on the part of the bureaucrats handling this issue," he said.

Hendon told The Asheville Citizen officials have been allowed to tour the countryside looking for the wreckage of airplanes that crashed 20 years ago. But they turned their backs on evidence some American POWs still live in communist prisons.

"From press reports, it's clear that on the way to the crash sites the U.S. team almost stumbled over one of Vietnam's newest and most secure prison facilities, where the U.S. government has eyewitness accounts and volumes of intelligence showing American POWs being held there well into the 1980s," Hendon said.

A Department of Defense spokesman said reports of Americans being held in Vietnamese prisons have never been proved.

In an unprecedented joint investigation of crash sites last week by U.S. and Vietnamese government specialists, teams searched in five provinces, visiting the sites of downed U.S. planes and interviewing villagers about six lost airmen.

Hendon, a former Pentagon consultant and former head of the POW Policy Center of the American Defense Institute in Washington, for years has charged that the government has covered up information about POWs — partly in fear that the return of live American years after the Vietnam War would be an embarrassment to four presidential administrations.

Hendon said Vietnamese prisons "are all over the place. No matter where they go — south, north, inner city, country — no matter where they go, they're stumbling over prisons, and they know it."

The DOD official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said he has "probably 70 linear feet of files on the Vietnamese prison system that describes very accurately not only facilities, but inmate population, prisoners' daily routines and that kind of thing. The only Americans that have been held in that system are those who returned in 1973, Americans arrested over the years for violating Vietnamese territorial waters, a few involved in some narcotics trafficking."

The official accused Hendon, who is coordinating a $2.4 million reward pledged by 21 congressmen for the return of a live prisoner, of blocking government efforts to determine whether Americans are alive in Vietnam.

"What troubles me is that the American public is going to begin looking upon this issue as an issue of fruits and nuts, and it's not," he said. "It's a very real issue, and it's solvable. But they're holding the whole issue up to ridicule."

— In Uganda, about one-third of a group of long-distance truck drivers surveyed were infected.

IN THE STATE

Moral Obstacles

RALEIGH (AP) — A Research Triangle Park company that provides technical help to developing countries threatened by AIDS is finding it difficult to hurdle governmental and moral obstacles.

The problem goes beyond just the reluctance to talk about the disease, said Dr. Peter Lamptey, director of Family Health International's AIDSTECH program.

"It's a highly political, highly emotional disease," he told The News and Observer.

In Africa — a continent of more than half a billion people and nearly 50 countries — the dimension of the AIDS epidemic dwarfs that of the United States.

— In Kenya, nearly 90 percent of a group of prostitutes studied were infected with the AIDS virus. Four years ago, their infection rate was 4 percent.

— In the capital of Burkina Fossa — a small country in west Africa — almost 20 percent of patients hospitalized for other reasons were infected with the AIDS virus.

— In Kinshasa, Zaire's capital city, 40 percent of a group of prostitutes surveyed were infected, as was 8 percent of the general adult population.

Study Recommends 'No Fault' Libel Trials

By Guy Darst
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A major study of libel laws today recommended sweeping changes designed to resolve disputes quickly through "no fault" trials deciding the truth of disputed statements.

No damages would be awarded in such trials.

The changes were proposed by the Washington-based Annenberg Washington Program of Northwestern University in Evanston, Ill., after a study begun last winter by 11 lawyers, judges, journalists and others.

"Libel suits tend to drag on interminably, are enormously costly for both sides and very seldom clearly resolve what ought to be the heart of the matter: the truth or falsity of what was published," said the report of the Libel Reform Project.

A major change from current law in the proposal would be elimination of the requirement that public figures suing for libel prove that defamatory statements about them were published with "actual malice," that is, with knowledge that they were false or with "reckless disregard" of whether they were false or not.

Newton W. Minow, director of the Annenberg Washington Program, summed up the advantages of the new procedures this way:

"The plaintiffs in a no-fault trial get a quicker verdict on whether they were defamed or not and, if they win, get their attorney's fees paid by the other side, but they give up a shot at money damages.

"The news media on the defense get relief from the chilling effects of huge, emotionally based damage awards, but they give up the Times vs. Sullivan protections that have restricted libel rulings."

Times vs. Sullivan was a 1964 case in which the U.S. Supreme Court refused to award damages to a public official without a showing of malice.

As it stands now, "the present law is not adequately protecting the reputations of people who have been defamed. And it's not protecting journalists' freedom to report — vigorously and fairly — the truth as they can best determine it," Minow said.

Here are the main changes from current law incorporated in a model statute recommended to the states and federal government:

—No suit for defamation could be filed unless the plaintiff had been refused a prompt retraction or chance to reply. Retractions or replies for candidates for office would have to be made before a coming election.

—All such suits would have to charge that the defendant made a false factual statement that was defamatory — tended to injure the plaintiff's reputation. Such a lawsuit could not be smuggled into court under another name, such as invasion of privacy.

—No one could sue over statements of opinion, such as an editorial cartoon. In determining what is fact, courts could consider the extent to which a statement could be proved objectively and the extent to which exaggeration for rhetorical effect was intended.

—Most trials would be for "declaratory judgment," with the loser paying the legal costs of the winner. Such trials would have to begin within 120 days. The only issue would be the truth, according to the judgment of the jury or, if the parties agree, the judge.

—A conventional trial for money damages could not be held unless both sides agreed, and even then damages would be limited to the plaintiff's actual loss — there could be no punitive damages. However, the loss might not be all financial — a plaintiff could be compensated for humiliation, for instance.

—The plaintiff would have the burden of proof — the duty to show by "clear and convincing evidence" that the disputed statement was false.

—The mere repetition of statements about matters of public interest could not be the subject of a lawsuit if the originator were identified, and there could be no inquiry into the state of mind of the defendant. This would be a major change from current law, which generally treats repetitions like original statements.

—There would be no distinction between slander, which is oral defamation, and libel, written defamation. There would be no distinction between news media or other defendants.

—The current exemption for statements made in official legislative, judicial or administrative proceedings would be retained.

European Vehicles Still Beefier

By Frederick Standish
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DETROIT — More American-made cars are packing power under their hoods, but like bullies on the beach, a handful of European sports cars can still kick sand in their grilles.

BMW, Ferrari, Jaguar and Porsche — nameplates long associated with motoring muscle — are marketing a half-dozen cars in the 250-320 horsepower range. The top U.S. offering is Chevrolet's Corvette coupe with 240 horsepower.

Top speeds of the European six range from 140 to 168 mph — better than twice the maximum speed limit in the United States.

Corvette can hit 150 mph and the other two U.S. contenders, the Pontiac Firebird GTA and Ford Mustang GT, with 225 horsepower, can reach 140 mph. All three have 5.7-liter V-8 engines.

The Corvette carries a $31,545 price tag, less than half that of the muscular Europeans. The Mustang has a base price of $13,672 and the Firebird GTA goes for $20,339.

The most expensive of the beefy U.S.-made cars, at $56,533, is the Cadillac Allante, which comes with a 200-horsepower, 4.5-liter V-8 engine capable of a top speed of about 135 mph.

Partly because of some no-speed-limit roads, such as the West German Autobahn, Europeans have been making beefier cars for years.

The European cars — the BMW M6 and 750iL, Ferrari 3.2 Cabriolet, Jaguar XJ-S and Porsche 911 Turbo and 928 S4 — have a variety of engine designs and sizes, and are aimed at the rich.

Jaguar says the top speed of its XJ-S, with a 5.3-liter V-12 engine, is 140 mph. However, says spokesman Tom McDonnell, "Some people say it will go 150. But we are incredibly conservative."

The European muscle cars don't keep showroom doors revolving. A limited number are shipped to the United States. They are sold to those willing to pay the price of a new house for tiny, leather padded sitting rooms that can move very fast.

They sell for $70,000-plus. Auto analyst Ron Glantz of Montgomery Securities Inc. in San Francisco says powerful-car buyers fall into three basic groups.

"You have real car buffs who like machinery. Then you have... people who will not take advantage of what the cars can do, but like people knowing that they own something that can do incredible things," he said. "The third group of people are those who want their friends and neighbors to know they can afford to buy these cars."

"It's an image statement. Better that a person be known as a car buff than a proctologist."

Nikki Bacon of North Miami Beach, Fla., who bought a Jaguar XJ-S a month ago, falls into a fourth category.

"It's a beautiful car," she said. "I would have preferred if it weren't that powerful."

Household incomes of buyers of the cars exceed $100,000. Buyers usually are in their 40s, mostly men. And they generally know cars.

"They're very no-compromise people, very clear on what they want," said Tom McGurn, a spokesman for BMW.

The West German car maker's 750iL, at 296 horsepower, has a top speed of 155 mph with all 12 cylinders working hard.

"What the V-12 gives you is a smoothness in addition to the power," he said. "Cruising at legal speeds on interstates is effortless."

The Porsche 928 S4, with a 5.0-liter V-8 engine and 316 horsepower, has a top speed of 168 mph.

The speedy six have federal fuel efficiency ratings ranging from 10 mpg in the city to 22 mpg on the highway.

The most exotic design among the six is the Ferrari 3.2 Cabriolet, powered by a 3.2-liter V-8. Low and wide, some say it resembles a flattened roller skate. It has 260 horsepower with a top speed of 150 mph.

Whale Rescuers Need Some Luck

BARROW, Alaska (AP) — With time running out for three young whales trapped in Arctic Ocean ice near Point Barrow, rescuers Sunday anxiously eyed an offshore wind as they awaited the arrival of a huge ice-breaking barge.

The barge wasn't expected until Tuesday and the wind could blow away any hope for the California gray whales stranded more than a week ago.

"This whole operation depends on the weather and the ice," said Geoff Carroll, a wildlife biologist with the North Slope Borough. "If there is not an open lead out there, our efforts are for nothing — there's no place for them to go."

The whales were bleeding and battered after bashing against the jagged ice, and their condition seemed to be worsening, said Ron Morris of the National Marine Fisheries Service.

"They seem lethargic compared to yesterday, not as spunky," he said. "Two of their noses are down to bare bone, they've lost all the tissue and skin from where... our noses would be."

Morris said he was unsure how long the whales can hold out.

"Who knows? As a biologist I don't mind making a ballpark guess, I do it for a living. But we just don't have anything to compare this with. It would seem that this cannot go on for a long period of time. But I just don't know."

Rescuers were rushing to move the barge from Prudhoe Bay 250 miles away before any wind-driven shifts in the ice could eliminate what seemed the whales' best way out. Morris said he flew out to the whales Sunday and saw "big, big, big areas of open water," six to seven miles from the animals.

The whales were trapped about 18 miles northeast of this Inupiat Eskimo village. They were in 45 feet of water only a few hundred feet offshore. They have been surfacing for air in two tiny holes in the ice.

During the weekend, rescuers labored in freezing temperatures with chainsaws to enlarge the breathing holes.

"The breathing holes had become quite small," Carroll said. "There was hardly even room for all three whales to come up to the surface."

He said rescuers managed to enlarge one hole, to 20-by-24 feet.

"It seemed to take a lot of stress off the whales," Carroll said. "There's a current in there, and they weren't able to rest. With a larger hole they could come up and rest."

At Prudhoe Bay, Veco Inc. workers Sunday were preparing a 185-ton ice-breaking Hovercraft-type barge for the rescue attempt. The craft had been in storage for years at the oil industry complex.

Dukakis Says GOP Premature In Popping Corks

By Dinna Cassata
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Michael Dukakis and George Bush cautioned against overconfidence in the presidential race as the Democratic nominee, facing an uphill struggle, promised victory on Election Day and the Republican candidate vowed to stick to his campaign course.

The vice president, buoyed by polls showing him widening his lead over Dukakis, said Sunday that his presidential transition team, headed by former Navy Undersecretary Chase Undermyer, is already at work and that he will be ready to name his Cabinet quickly.

"He has drawn up wiring diagrams, what we should do if we win," Bush said. "You have to hit the ground running."

But the GOP nominee, in his first news conference in more than two weeks, dismissed suggestions that he has already decided on the Cabinet members he would choose.

"I can't let myself think about that

... I'm not going to do something that dumb and shift gears," Bush told reporters in Denver where he said his campaign will "keep on with our original game plan, keep working hard, keep traveling to key states... keep moving forward."

"All I know is to just drive down to the wire," he said.

Dukakis, encouraged by a warm reception from hometown supporters in Boston's historic Faneuil Hall, described himself as the campaign's underdog, but warned Republicans about boasting success three weeks before the election.

The GOP is "already celebrating; they're popping champagne corks in their penthouses," the Massachusetts governor said. "But I've got news for those Republicans; we're going to be the ones celebrating on Election Night."

Dukakis was campaigning today in four cities — Euclid, Dayton, Northland, and Columbus — in Ohio, a crucial state in the fight for Electoral College votes with 23.

Bush was touring a defense plant in Denver, before traveling to Skokie, Ill., to visit a Holocaust Memorial.

Democratic vice presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen was seeking votes in Texarkana, Texas, and La Jolla, Calif. Bush's running mate, Dan Quayle, was traveling to Flint, Mount Pleasant, Traverse City and Gaylord, Mich.

On Sunday, Bush promised to follow his campaign strategy with the focus on Election Day — not Inauguration Day, and deflected questions about his presidential agenda.

"I can tell you I've been encouraged — certainly not one scintilla of overconfidence," said Bush.

Questioned about possible budget cuts to reduce the deficit and additional aid to the Nicaraguan rebels, Bush responded: "I'm having trouble with these questions because they are putting me beyond where I want to be. So if I don't answer some of them from here on in it is because I'm focusing on November 8 and I don't want to be dragged beyond that because things seem to be going well now."

On the budget question, Bush said that he will work it out with Congress when the time comes. "You have to sit down and know the facts at the time," he said.

And on aid to the Contra rebels, Bush said, "I can't give you what I'll do after I become president, but I'm a strong believer that we made a big mistake, the Congress did, in not supporting the resistance."

Meanwhile, the vice president picked up the editorial support of four newspapers — the St. Petersburg (Fla.) Times, which recommends candidates, rather than endorses them, and three Ohio newspapers — The Columbus Dispatch, The Cincinnati Enquirer and The Elyria Chronicle-Telegram.

In his Sunday appearance, Dukakis cast the election as a battle between the work ethic of the middle class and the rich Republicans who support Bush.

"I believe in the value of work," the Democratic nominee said. "(Bush) saw nothing, said nothing and did nothing while his Republican colleagues in the Congress used every trick in the book to keep the minimum wage at poverty level."

"Ask Mr. Bush," Dukakis added, "if he can look a woman in the eye who scrubs floors for a living to support her family on $3.35 an hour."

Dukakis described himself as an "underdog, fighting for the values I believe in."

Aides to the Democratic candidate denied a story in The Washington Post that said Dukakis would concentrate his efforts on 17 states and the District of Columbia with 272 electoral votes — two more than the number needed for election.

The list included New York, California, Michigan, Ohio, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Vermont, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Maryland, West Virginia, Iowa, Wisconsin, Oregon, Washington and Hawaii.

"It is not (accurate)," said Susan Estrich, Dukakis campaign manager. "We are not writing off whole regions of the country."

In Vermont, Bush held a one-point lead over Dukakis — 43 percent to 42 percent — in a telephone survey of 502 registered voters interviewed Oct. 6-10. The poll, conducted for the Sunday Rutland Herald and Barre-Montpelier Times Argus, had a margin of error of four percentage points either way.

In Ohio, a poll published Sunday in The Akron Beacon-Journal showed Bush leading Dukakis 47-36 percent among 1,062 likely voters surveyed Oct. 3 to Oct. 13. The survey had a margin of error of plus or minus three percentage points.

To add to the Dukakis campaign's woes, a gas leak Sunday forced the evacuation of about 200 workers from the Boston headquarters of the Democratic nominee.

Officials later determined that the leak was outside the building.

Protesters Arrested At Seabrook Children Among 84 Taken Into Custody

By Charlene Fu
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEABROOK, N.H. — Eighty-four demonstrators, including at least two children under 10, were arrested Sunday in a protest against the long-delayed Seabrook nuclear power plant.

Those arrested had climbed a fence with handmade ladders or had blocked plant gates during the finale of a two-day protest against possible low-power testing of the $5.6 billion plant later this year. Attendance Saturday was more than 300, and the Sunday figure was about 200.

Marie Benedum, 88, of Sanbornton, who had four generations of her family at Sunday's protest, wanted to go over the fence, but held back because of a bad knee.

"If I didn't (have the knee problem), I would have gone over the fence," she said.

"This is a very decisive time," she said. "There is so much at stake. They want to start the low-power testing, and I don't believe in that."

Police said nine juveniles among those arrested were not charged. They said the other 75 were charged with criminal trespassing, a violation comparable to a speeding ticket, and released.

The first arrests Sunday occurred when about 39 protesters used homemade ladders to scale the 10-foot fence and sat inside plant grounds. Some walked with police officers to a waiting school bus, while others went limp and had to be dragged away.

During the fence scaling, more than 100 other demonstrators, including women with infants in strollers, stood outside the fence chanting and beating drums to support those who went over.

The protesters also clamped several huge padlocks and chains onto a plant gate, and police brought out a heavy duty bolt cutter to get them off.

Seabrook has been a target of protests since before construction began in 1976. It was completed in 1986, but has been unable to get a federal operating license. Federal regulators have yet to approve evacuation plans for surrounding communities, including some in Massachusetts, and sort out the financial problems of owners, including main owner Public Service Company of New Hampshire, which filed for bankruptcy protection in January.

The protesters marched peacefully from nearby Hampton Beach on Saturday, then held an all-night candlelight vigil outside the gate. In terms of arrests, the protest was the largest since May 1987 when 130 people were arrested at the gates. The biggest was in 1977 when 1,414 people were arrested.

Seabrook is close to winning a low-power license following recent Nuclear Regulatory Commission decisions. Plant officials hope to start the reactor for low-power tests for the first time later this year.

Three people were charged with trespassing Saturday when they joined a tour of the plant being conducted by the pro-nuclear Coalition for Reliable Energy. The three sat in at the plant's reception center and refused to leave at closing.

Plant officials had a low-key reaction to the protest.

"We agree with the rights of this small group of demonstrators to their protest; we disagree with their position that Seabrook is not safe," spokesman Ron Sher said. "The fact is, Seabrook has consistently received high marks from federal evaluators."

Straight To Jail

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A man driving a stolen car led police in four cruisers and two helicopters on a chase he ended at the jail parking lot, authorities said.

The end of early Sunday's chase came after the driver put the car in reverse and rammed a police car near the downtown jail, said police Lt. Carl Wilhite.

Will It Be Harvard Or Yale?

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — President John F. Kennedy, Harvard class of 1940, couldn't resist some good-natured teasing when Yale awarded him an honorary doctorate in 1962.

"As General de Gaulle occasionally acknowledged America to be the daughter of Europe, so I am pleased to come to Yale, the daughter of Harvard," Kennedy told graduates assembled in the courtyard of Yale's Old Campus on that sunny June day.

"It might be said now that I have the best of both worlds — a Harvard education and a Yale degree," Kennedy said.

This year's presidential campaign has elevated what is perhaps the oldest, most intense and most snobbish rivalry in America to a new height.

For the spoils of this contest will go either to a Yale man or a Harvard man — only the second time in 200 years that graduates of the two schools have vied for the presidency of the United States.

And the only other time it happened, in 1912, the Harvard man, Theodore Roosevelt, and the Yale man, William Howard Taft, both lost to a Princeton man, Woodrow Wilson.

While Kennedy was a master at exploiting his Harvard education for political advantage, Republican George Bush, Yale class of 1948, has tried to turn Democrat Michael S. Dukakis' Harvard connections into a campaign liability.

Bush, scion of a wealthy Greenwich, Conn., family, accuses the Massachusetts governor, the son of Greek immigrants, of having a "Harvard boutique" mentality tainted by "liberalism and elitism."

Campaigning Saturday in Modesto, Calif., Bush said, "I don't want somebody from Harvard telling me what I can do and what I can't do."

Asked about that statement at a news conference Sunday, Bush said he did not want to take on the institution itself, asking "How can I, a nice guy from Yale, feel that way about Harvard? Now come on."

"I'm talking about a handful of people that have served in (recent) Democratic administrations that come out of the same liberal philosophy. And they know who they are," he said. "There's an elite inside the elite there."

Dukakis, in turn, has tried to stay out of the Harvard-Yale debate, saying his 1960 Harvard law degree and teaching stint at Harvard's Kennedy School of Government don't make him a Harvard man at all.

"I'm a Swarthmore guy," Dukakis says, referring to the liberal arts college in Pennsylvania where he received his undergraduate degree.

But Bush's Harvard line held little sting given his own Ivy League connections. And it probably was lost on most Americans, who view both Yale and Harvard as elite Eastern universities for the wealthy.

Couple Marries Sunday

On Sunday afternoon at 4 p.m. in Landmark Baptist Church, Treva Larease Woodley and Troy Lynn Fleming, both of Greenville, were united in marriage. The Rev. John T. Woodley, father of the bride, and the Rev. Ralph Messick conducted the double-ring ceremony.

The Rev. and Mrs. Woodley and Mr. and Mrs. James R. Fleming, all of Greenville, are parents of the couple.

Pianist Rita Staton and vocalists Jolly Dail, Judy Bowen and Millie Mackey presented wedding music.

Michelle Sue Dail of Winterville was honor attendant. Bridesmaids were Sharon Donnell Glisson of Cary, Deborah Hendrix of Annandale, Va., Renee Ellis of Ramseur, Suzanne Coleman of Bassett, Va., and Karen Powell of Robbins. Jessica Harrell of Winterville was the flower girl.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers were Michael Walsh, Mike Kinley and Marion Crisp, all of Greenville, Jeff Fleming of Roanoke, Va., brother of the bridegroom, and Terry Smith of Fayetteville.

Eric Britton of Greenville was the ring bearer.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a floor-length gown with a chapel-train of silk taffeta with alencon lace. The fitted alencon lace bodice featured a Victorian neckline with an illusion yoke, leg o'mutton sleeves and natural waistline. Scalloped lace motifs etched with pearls and sequins outlined the neckline and applied the sleeves. Bridal buttons fastened the back. Scattered lace motifs applied the skirt. A shirred Victorian-style bustle accented the back of the skirt. Garlands of scalloped lace bordered the hemline of the skirt and train. ## Reader Scorns Tasteless Plan

DEAR ABBY: This concerns "Making It Legal," the woman who had been living with her boyfriend for 11 years, had two children with him and a third on the way. She said she had always dreamed of a big church wedding, but her family thought a quiet, intimate wedding with family and friends would be more appropriate under the circumstances. You agreed with her family.

Then you were bombarded with letters saying, "You were wrong — why shouldn't she have the kind of wedding she's always dreamed of?" So you flip-flopped. You blew it, Abby — you were right the first time!

The sad fact is, we are living in a tasteless society. People accept invitations and don't show up. Others fail to RSVP, then show up bringing extra guests! Also, there's a new bit of comedy at the wedding dinner — the bride and groom grind wedding cake in each other's faces. (Shades of the Three Stooges!) I don't fault the clergy for performing these farces in their churches. They probably hope that some of their errant flock will return to the fold. But, if sanctifying their marriage in the presence of God was what couples such as "Making It Legal" have in mind, they should confine their weddings to family members and intimate friends.

Dear Abby

I suspect that what they really have in mind is showing off, and garnering wedding gifts, such as they would have received had they done it right in the first place.

These "after-the-fact" weddings are reminiscent of the old vaudeville days when the big, boffo, hilarious skit consisted of the bulging bride, her white satin gown straining at the seams, followed by Pappy with his shotgun. It was a burlesque of the rites of holy matrimony. It still is. Do you have the courage to print this? — PATTY IN PITTSBURGH

DEAR PATTY: Yes, and it will probably please you to know that many other readers wrote to berate me for my "ultra-liberal" flip-flop regarding who should be entitled to marry in a church. I stand by my answer — the second one.

Certified Carpet Inspector
BULLET-PROOF CARPET?...

Remember when manufacturers were proclaiming the permanence of the new Teflon finish applied to frying pans?... Question: still have that first one you purchased? I think I know the answer, but even if you do still have it, is the finish holding up; did it last "forever?" Similarly, the hottest feature on the carpet market today is the new stain-resistant finish applied by carpet mills. Unfortunately, by the time the excited distributor or retailer begins selling face-to-face with his customer, stain-resistant suddenly becomes stain-proof!

Before we proceed, better ask why a professional cleaner is discussing this subject; in other words, how is he effected by this remarkable improvement? Valid question!... Answer: I'm delighted! I get nothing but advantages from this breakthrough. You see, anything, no matter how stain resistant, gets soiled eventually; thus the need for cleaning. Consider such surfaces as stainless steel sinks or glass windows. Regardless of surface durability, they still get dirty, and that means cleaners stay in business! The professional cleaner's biggest problem is with stains that literally dye the carpet. Short of carpet repair procedures, I can't get many of them out... sort of wounds my professional pride, you might say. So, the more stain-resistant the carpet, the better my cleaning job looks.

Moreover, abrasive soil, if not removed through routine cleaning, will scratch the stain resistant finish on fibers — just as abrasives did on your Teflon-coated frying pan — causing the carpet to lose its protection, especially in traffic areas.

Actually, the disturbing issue is the unrealistic claims and expectations to which the consumer is subjected when purchasing new-generation carpet. No matter how excited the salesman is — and he has a right to be excited about this substantial improvement — if you don't exercise normal care and attention, your new stain-resistant carpet will not only soil more rapidly, but it can be stained permanently.

Remember, stain-resistant it is; bullet-proof it ain't!

Monday Notebook:

East Carolina's Pirates did it once again. They went up against a much stronger opponent, played reasonably well, but once again came up short.

The Pirates moved the ball fairly well. They scored 21 points against the number five team in the country. A bad snap negated the opportunity to score three more, and the Florida State defense foiled another chance.

Still, by and large, the Pirates played well offensively. Defensively, the Florida State Seminoles were able to move with a certain amount of ease. The Pirates did come up with several interceptions and fumbles, but once the score was tied at 14-14, FSU wasted little time in opening up a 14-point gap once again.

Like the South Carolina game, however, the final score does not indicate the game. Both teams scored in the final 10 seconds of the contest via the pass.

Generally, most opposing coaches see that as running up the score. South Carolina's Joe Morrison has been castigated for doing in against the Pirates, making a 10-0 game a 17-0 final.

Saturday, Florida State scored with six seconds remaining on a pass play raising what should have been a 38-21 finale to 45-21.

One always has the argument that you can't tell kids not to score — and that's true. But it's generally accepted that you do it on the ground, a more time-consuming process.

At any rate, the Pirates fell for the sixth straight time. They weren't supposed to win this one, but they came away with a good performance at least.

Still, this has been an "if only" season. It's more realistic to imagine the Pirates at 4-3 now than 1-6.

It gets no better Saturday when the Pirates open a two-game home stand that will close out their Ficklen Stadium year. Syracuse, which was highly ranked last year, pulled off a major upset this past Saturday, defeating Penn State on the Nittany Lions' home field.

Certainly, that's a feather in the Orangemen's cap as they strive to regain national prominence.

And there is little danger of their looking past the Pirates. They have an open date, followed with a game against Navy, another team that, like East Carolina, is suffering this year. Their next game of real importance isn't until Nov. 12 when they face Boston College.

Still, it's probably the best chance the Pirates have to pull a major upset this year. Ahead lies Miami of Florida — sure to lose its number one ranking after falling to Notre Dame Saturday. Fortunately for the Pirates, they don't face the Hurricanes this week — Cincinnati gets that dubious honor.

The Pirates, realistically, do have the chance for some redemption in their final two games of the season, against Cincinnati and Temple.

But, they will have to continue the level of play they've had against these top-ranked teams — and not go back to the way they played in the three games they did have a chance to win.

Orel Hershiser celebrates win with his catcher Mike Scioscia

L.A. Wins Again

Hershiser Pitches A 3-Hit Shutout

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Put up another "0" for Orel Hershiser. And put up two for the Oakland Athletics.

Hershiser pitched a three-hit shutout Sunday night, and the Los Angeles Dodgers beat Oakland 6-0 to lead the best-of-seven World Series two games to none.

Hershiser did everything, including sweep up, and the heavily favored A's now go back to Oakland a lot less favored.

"I never thought we could beat a team that won over 100 games in the first two games of the Series," Dodgers Manager Tom Lasorda said.

The only hits Hershiser allowed were three singles by Dave Parker, while he had three hits himself, including two doubles, an RBI and a run scored. He went from first-to-third on a single in the Dodgers five-run third inning, and, despite a rare fall heat wave, worked a complete game on three days' rest.

"I was extremely tired," said Hershiser, who asked for ammonia salts and wet towels in the dugout in the third and fourth innings. "It wasn't like I had a tired arm. I was winded from running the bases so much."

He ran the A's right out of town with consecutive losses and Oakland now faces a must-win situation in its first game at home Tuesday night. Oakland will send former Dodger Bob Welch, 17-9, against left-hander John Tudor, 10-8, after the day off.

"I told the guys to be disappointed but not discouraged," A's Manager Tony LaRussa said. "Nobody said it was going to be easy."

The A's lost the first game 5-4 when Kirk Gibson hit a two-out, two-strike pinch homer in the ninth inning to erase a 4-3 A's lead. Gibson, hobbled by a bad hamstring and a sprained knee, wasn't in the starting lineup for Game 2 either, but the Dodgers didn't need him this time.

Mike Marshall hit a three-run homer in Los Angeles' five-run third inning, and Hershiser didn't need any more support.

"I didn't want to let the club down and come out with a split. That was my burden," Hershiser said. "If I get more than three runs, I really feel like I should win."

Lately, he hasn't needed that many. He finished the season with 59 consecutive scoreless innings.

A's Should Have Gotten Their Wish

By Scott Ostler
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — Now, the Oakland A's really want the New York Mets. They want out of this bad dream, badly. They want to climb out of this rabbit hole, back out of the looking glass, and back to reality.

Down 2-0 in the World Series, the A's want no part of the Los Angeles Dodgers, especially the Orel Hershiser part.

Sunday the A's had their bats stuffed back in their rack by Hershiser, a shrunken-chested guy who used a computer and a cheat-sheet, barely broke a sweat, pushed Art Nehf aside in the record book, and in the postgame interview sessions not only used the word "repertoire," but pronounced it correctly.

I was waiting for Hershiser to ask for a Perrier and a croissant with Brie. Hershiser, a pretty good pitching hitter, allowed three hits and collected three hits himself. That's the ideal yin and yang, a well-balanced night.

Two of Hershiser's hits were doubles. He has as many extra-base hits as the Oakland Bashers have in the entire Series.

Want an even more complete night? OK, Hershiser's parents threw out the

Wallace Takes Win Edges Bodine At The Finish

NORTH WILKESBORO, N.C. (AP) — Rusty Wallace momentarily forget driver's etiquette, nudging Geoff Bodine's Chevrolet and slipping past Phil Parsons to win the $353,360 Holly Farms 400 at North Wilkesboro Speedway.

Wallace had given up his lead earlier Sunday when Bodine bumped his car from behind entering the second turn. Wallace momentarily lost control, and Bodine went inside to take the lead on the backstretch.

Entering turn three of the 3/8-mile track, Wallace repaid Bodine, regained the lead and went on to his fourth victory of the season. He won with an average speed of 94.192 mph and earned a winner's share of $47,000.

"He gave me a tap, and I gave him one back," Wallace said. "I thought he would say something to me about it after the race, but he waved at me when I passed him on the victory lap and that was it."

"I'm not complaining," Bodine said after the race. "He slowed up and I bumped him, but there are two ways to bump people. I bumped him once and let off. I'd say he bumped me more than once in the third turn, but I'd have to look at the tapes to be sure."

"What's so bad about it is that we finished third, not second."

Terry Labonte finished fourth and Bill Elliott fifth.

Wallace's victory, his second straight after winning last week in Charlotte, trimmed 20 points off Elliott's lead in the Winston Cup point standings. With three races remaining, Wallace now trails Elliott by 89 points.

Two-time defending Winston Cup champion Dale Earnhardt, who finished sixth Sunday after a run-in with Ricky Rudd on lap 360, lost five points to Elliott and now trails by 188 points.

"This is going to be a hard-fought championship down to the end," said Wallace, who's recorded nine top 10 and eight top five finishes in his past 10 starts. "May the best man win. I don't know what's going to happen, but if Bill Elliott wins I'll shake his hand and come back and try again next year."

Elliott posted his 14th straight top 10 finish Sunday, and he's finished in the top five in 10 of the past 14 events.

"Anything can still happen and it probably will," Elliott said. "But any time you finish in the top five, you have to look at it as a good day."

Wallace's only finish out of the top 10 since late July at Pocono, came in the Sept. 11 race at Richmond. Bodine ran over Wallace in that race, and Wallace ended up 35th.

Errol McCorvey

A Fresh Beginning

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., — When East Carolina took on fifth-ranked Florida State in football Saturday at Doak Campbell Stadium, the familiar face of Errol McCorvey, a former Pirate player, looked on from the stands.

McCorvey, now a Seminole, would like to have participated in the game, but considering the circumstances of his past, he was just glad to be at the game — period.

McCorvey transferred from ECU to Florida State in mid-August after a Pitt County Superior Court jury found him guilty of assaulting a female. He served a two-day jail sentence and was ordered to pay a $200 fine and $239 in medical costs.

Even though his jail sentence was only a couple of days, McCorvey says he still has nightmares about it and is thankful the sentence wasn't longer.

"I felt really bad when that jail door shut behind me," McCorvey said Saturday after the Seminoles had handed the Pirates a 45-21 defeat.

"I said to myself, 'Hey, you're a football player and you're trying to make something out of yourself, but you're in here with everybody else that missed out somewhere.'"

Mack Brown

A Tough First Year

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

North Carolina celebrates its 100th year of football this season, but that milestone has been overshadowed by an 0-6 beginning under first-year head coach Mack Brown that is the worst in the school's history.

Following a 48-3 loss to North Carolina State Saturday, things look anything but positive for the rest of the season for the Tar Heels.

"It's obvious to all of us that we have a long way to go," Brown said. "We have to do everything right to win a football game, which we haven't done yet. We've got a million miles to go and you can only look to one place and that's me. I'm the head football coach and we haven't been in a game yet."

Part of the problem has been a defense that was inexperienced to start with and has had to deal with the loss of two injured starters, linebacker Mitch Wike and noseguard Dennis Tripp, a former Farmville Central standout.

Presently, the Tar Heels are starting five players who are basically in their first year of playing regularly and two others who have played sporadically in the past. Only outside linebackers Antonio Goss and

Bills-Jets In Key Matchup

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Call it a tale of two secondaries.

The Buffalo Bills and New York Jets meet tonight in an AFC East game that is as pivotal as any could be in the seventh week of the NFL season. The Bills are 5-1, 1 1/2 games ahead of the Jets.

If New York is to stay in the division race, it will need to beat Buffalo. To do so, the Jets must get the kind of performance from their inexperienced secondary that was provided in the team's four-game unbeaten streak. They do not need a repeat of their last effort in a 36-19 loss at Cincinnati.

The Bills, meanwhile, shored up their secondary by acquiring veteran safety Leonard Smith from Phoenix last month. But Smith is stronger against the run and Buffalo ranks just 24th in pass defense. That ranking is not the fault of the front seven, led by All-Pro end Bruce Smith and standout linebackers Cornelius Bennett and Shane Conlan.

"We have to be very disciplined against them," Bills safety Mark Kelso said. "They have a lot of looks. I'll have to keep good vision on all of them."

Jackson Keys L.A. Win

Helps Raiders Take a 27-17 Victory Over Chiefs

By Barry Wilner
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

See Roger run. See Reggie romp. See Bo go.

See the San Francisco 49ers tie an NFL record with their 11th straight road victory. See the only unbeaten team in the league, the Cincinnati Bengals, taste defeat. And see Bo Jackson return to Kansas City — where he is employed as a baseball player — as a Los Angeles Raider.

The 49ers beat the Los Angeles Rams 24-21 Sunday and haven't lost a road game since the opening week of last season. Roger Craig led the way with his best pro game, rushing for 190 yards and three touchdowns.

New England, which gave Green Bay its first victory last week, turned around and ran past Cincinnati 27-21. Reggie Dupard carried the ball just five times for 32 yards, but he scored twice as the Patriots controlled the clock, holding the ball eight minutes more than the Bengals.

Bo helped draw the biggest crowd in Chiefs' history, 77,078, rushed for 70 yards and scored a TD as the Raiders took Kansas City 27-17. After his touchdown, Jackson tossed the ball high into the stands.

Elsewhere, it was Denver 30, Atlanta 14; New Orleans 20, Seattle 19; Miami 31, San Diego 28; Cleveland 19, Philadelphia 3; Green Bay 34, Minnesota 14; Indianapolis 35, Tampa Bay 31; Washington 33, Phoenix 17; Houston 34, Pittsburgh 14, and the New York Giants 30, Detroit 10.

49ers 24, Rams 21

Craig has been considered one of the league's best all-around backs for most of his six-year career. But the focus usually is on his pass-catching.

Not on Sunday, when Craig was too much for the Rams to handle.

"We couldn't contain Craig, and possibly that was the key," understated Rams coach John Robinson.

"It makes the offensive line look awfully good when you've got a guy who can run as inspirationally as Roger ran today," center Randy Cross said.

The road victory tied the pro mark set by the AFL's Chargers from 1960-61 and offset a fine performance by Rams QB Jim Everett, who passed for three TDs.

Patriots 27, Bengals 21

New England picked off four Esiason passes in the first half — Boomer had been intercepted just three times all year. New England, 3-4, capitalized on two of the interceptions for a 14-0 halftime lead.

"Any time you turn the ball over as much as we did today," Esiason said, "I don't care how bad the team is that you're replacing, they're going to beat you."

So the league's only unbeaten team got beat. "We had a letdown," Bengals coach Sam Wyche said. "If I have to throw a live hand grenade in there and jump on top of it to let them know that something's up, I'm going to have to do it."

No Record But Pavin Happy Anyway

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The PGA Tour's all-time 72-hole scoring record escaped Corey Pavin.

It mattered not at all. "That's all just big bonus stuff," Pavin said after scoring what he called "my most meaningful win," Sunday in the Texas Open.

He won it by a whopping eight-shot margin with a bogey-free final round of 66 and a 259 total, 21 shots under par on the Oak Hills Country Club course.

The score has been bettered on the tour only once, by Mike Souchak's 257 in the 1955 Texas Open on a different course, Brackenridge Park.

It has been equalled only three times, by Byron Nelson in the 1945 Seattle Open, by Chandler Harper in the 1954 Texas Open and by Tim Norris in the 1982 Greater Hartford Open.

"I knew what the record was," Pavin said. "I had a putt on 16 to have a chance at it. When it missed, I knew the record was gone."

But the victory was there, and that was the important thing, said Pavin, who had fought a slump since winning the 1987 Hawaiian Open.

"When you play so bad so long, gosh, this means so much. It's been a year and a half, the longest I've gone as a pro, longer than I think I should go. So many questions go through your mind," Pavin said.

"It was just getting back to old habits," he said after scoring the seventh victory in five years on the tour.

And it was getting back to his old teacher, Bruce Hamilton.

"I got away from him when I moved from Los Angeles to Orlando. I had different people, different thoughts," Pavin said.

"I have an unorthodox swing. He's probably the only person in the country who can look at it and see what needs to be done."

"He came in for two days early in the week and it made all the difference."

"That's probably the best I've ever played," Pavin said after collecting the winner's check of $108,000. It more than doubled his previous earnings for the year.

He scored two eagles — including a hole in one — 18 birdies and a single bogey for the week.

Over the last 18 holes, no other player really had a chance. Tom Kite once closed to within four shots, but Pavin responded with birdies on three of the next four holes, led by eight strokes at the turn and cruised home in warm, windless weather.

Quarterback Club To Meet Tuesday

The East Carolina Quarterback Club will meet Tuesday night at 5:30 p.m. in the Pirate Club building.

Game films of the Florida State-East Carolina game will be shown at 5:30 with dinner served at 6:30. Weekly player awards and the coaches' talks will begin at 7 p.m.

The meeting is open to all wishing to attend.

East Carolina Kickers Fall To VMI

Virginia Military Institute rallied to defeat East Carolina 2-1 Sunday in the second round of the Roanoke College Soccer Tournament.

East Carolina had taken a 1-0 lead on a first-half goal by Andy Britton. The Keydets rebounded later in the half to tie it 1-1.

They took the lead for good early in the second half.

East Carolina outshot VMI 20-11 and Pirate goalie Mac Kendall had eight saves.

"We have two major problems on this team," Coach Bob Lust said, "youth and experience — too much of one and not enough of another."

The Pirates fall to 1-11 on the year and will visit Averett College in Danville, Va., on Wednesday.

Hornets Top Knicks To Win First Game

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Charlotte made history Sunday night at the Carolina Coliseum with its first victory in its short NBA life — and the Hornets did it in their first appearance in the Carolinas.

Kelly Tripucka scored 22 points, making all 12 of his foul shots, and Tim Kempton chipped in 20 as the Hornets defeated New York 126-113 in a preseason game.

While the two ex-Notre Dame stars were the top scorers, the biggest crowd reaction was reserved for the smallest player on the court — 5-foot-3 Tyrone "Muggsy" Bogues.

The former Wake Forest player, who didn't start, scored 15 points and had a game-high eight assists. Time and again, the speedy Bogues led the Hornets' fast break, bringing roars from the crowd of 6,446 at the 12,401-seat arena.

"Carolina has always been a great place to play basketball. I had a good college career," Bogues said, "and I hope to continue it at the professional level."

The game was the second preseason game for the Hornets, who lost the first one Friday to New Jersey. The Hornets came to Columbia for their second game in the franchise's history because the team feels it's important to have the support of fans in both Carolinas for the border franchise.

Some Coaches See 2-Team Race

By The Associated Press

Wake Forest coach Bob Staak says the Atlantic Coast Conference basketball race this year could be the "Big Two, Medium Six," with Duke and North Carolina dominating the eight-team conference.

"The rest of us are looking to make a breakthrough somewhere," Staak told the News and Observer of Raleigh.

But North Carolina coach Dean Smith and Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski remain predictably non-committal.

"I think the league can have six NCAA teams," Smith said. "That doesn't indicate a two-tier conference to me. I've seen State and Georgia Tech ranked in most of the early Top 20s, and I could think of a good case for a couple of others in the league. To me, that sounds like balance."

Led by Olympian J.R. Reid and 6-foot-11 Scott Williams, Smith's Tar Heels will feature the league's biggest and most experienced starting five.

Guards Jeff Lebo and Kevin Maden and 6-7 wing forward Steve Bucknall joined Reid and Williams in a starting unit that took the Tar Heels to 27 victories and to the NCAA Tournament quarterfinals.

Duke still has 6-10 Danny Ferry, last season's ACC player of the year, 6-4 Robert Brickey, 6-7 John Smith, 6-9 Alaa Abdalnaby, 6-10 Clay Buckley and 6-6 Greg Koubek, along with some talented newcomers.

"We should have a lot of options," Krzyzewski said. "I think we'll have the capability of playing several different styles. But those things, alone, don't make you a great team."

Duke, which finished 28-7 last season, could have the potential "to punish" some opponents, Krzyzewski said, but he said N.C. State, Wake Forest and Clemson are capable of upsetting the two favorites.

But he also noted that graduation and attrition took a substantial off-season toll on the ACC.

"We lost two excellent leaders and producers in Kevin Strickland and Billy King," Krzyzewski said. "When you break it down, I'm not sure another team lost two more valuable players."

Jim Valvano's N.C. State

Wolpack, which finished 24-8, also suffered losses. Gone are top scorers Vinny Del Negro and Charles Shackelford and the two former top backcourt reserves, Kelsey Weems and Quentin Jackson.

Shackelford and Weems left with one remaining season of eligibility. Shackelford opted for a hardship entry into the NBA and Weems dropped out of school three weeks ago.

After finishing 18-13 and earning an NCAA Tournament invitation in his second season, Maryland coach Bob Wade appeared to have the bulk of his rebuilding task behind. But sophomore center Brian Williams transferred to Arizona, senior playmaker Rudy Archer failed to meet academic eligibility requirements, and Teyon McCoy, Archer's backup, decided to skip the 1988-89 season.

Staak's Demon Deacons finished eighth with a 3-11 league record in 1988-87, and Clemson was only one game better in seventh place. Both expect improvements this season.

"We're going to be better," Staak said. "I don't have much reservation in predicting that much."

A's Need Mets Now

ceremonial first pitch, in this case pitches. They were strikes. Sinkers, low and away.

Bulldog Hershiser, up-pedigreed Sunday night to Pit Bull, is playing baseball about as well right now as it has ever been played.

He has pitched 19 2-3 consecutive scoreless innings, going back to the National League playoffs, and his two doubles and a single in three at-bats were the first three-hit game by a Series pitcher since Nehf in 1924.

"This is the best stuff I've taken into a pressure game," Hershiser said, not specifying whether he meant his pitching stuff or his hitting stuff. "This was the best stuff in my last three big starts."

Not only does Orel throw a three-hitter, but he doesn't even use his "A" material.

"I really didn't want to expose everything," Hershiser said. "You gotta have some repertoire left against this outstanding team."

"I went with my best stuff early, but after we got ahead I threw a few more change-ups, other things. Oakland won't know what to look for in Game 5."

I think Orel meant that more modestly than it sounded, but you can almost hear the moaning over that announcement in the City by the City by the Bay. Don Baylor, the A's speaker of the house, who struck out as a pinch hitter Sunday, might want to take a cut at that Orel pitch.

Dodger catcher Mike Scioscia, told that Hershiser said he started saving his best stuff once the Dodgers got a lead, said: "Bull. He didn't go away from his best stuff. Orel can do a lot of things."

Like run the bases. He sprinted from first to third on a single in the third inning, and ran out his two doubles. Isn't that a lot of running for a pitcher?

"He's in tremendous shape," Scioscia said. "If I was doing that much on the bases, it might be a problem."

Don't worry about Orel. He has all the answers. Has 'em written on a cheat sheet, in fact.

On his way to the mound at the start of the game he stopped by home plate, pulled a piece of paper out of his back pocket and showed it to home plate umpire Durwood Merrill.

It was a scouting report, written by Orel and sealed in plastic. It's bad enough the man preps for the game by referencing his personal computer, but how can you expect to get more than three singles off a pitcher who has the answers before the exam?

"It was my little cheat sheet," Hershiser said. "I showed it to the umpires because I didn't want 'em to think I'm cheating out there when I pull something out of my pocket."

There was no pine tar on the cheat sheet, so the umpires gave Orel the OK.

Hershiser, as it turns out, was in such command that he only used the cheat sheet two or three times. For all the trouble he had with the A's, he could've taken a Masked Marvel comic book out to the mound.

And Orel didn't once feel the need to get on his cellular dugout phone and call his astrologist or guru.

By the fourth inning, when Hershiser struck out the side, finishing the job by fanning Jose Canseco, it was becoming clear that the A's, like the entire National League before them, were falling victim to an Orel Hex.

Twice Dave Parker led off an inning with a single and twice he became the front man on a double play. The other Dodgers, as if sensing the greatness emanating from the mound, responded with their best defensive effort of the post season, especially from Steve Sax on double-play pivot, and helped the Dodgers score five runs in the third inning.

The only question now is how many more times Hershiser can pitch in this series. There's no game Monday and he'll probably take Game 3 and 4 off, then go Thursday in Oakland.

How about a Game 7, if necessary?

"Yeah, I think he could do that," Scioscia said. "He's pitched on two days rest before."

Was Orel tiring at all, even a teenie bit, at the end of Sunday's game?

"No," Scioscia said, shaking his head vigorously.

In fact, Hershiser indicated that his biggest problem might come if he gets too much rest between starts.

"Your mechanics can get out of whack if you're too strong," he said, "you can take that power in a bad direction." He makes the game look and sound easy, but Hershiser insisted he was nervous at the beginning.

"That's definitely the most pressure I've felt in a long, long time," he said. "You've got the hopes and dreams of all the fans, and your teammates. I just realized how to deal with the energy level, it was a whole lotta fun to-night."

Hershiser worked harder after the game than during. He met with groups of reporters in several clubhouse locations, then went back on the field to work his way down a line of television crews waiting for interviews.

He probably stopped on his way home from the Stadium at a Jack-in-the-Box and explained to Jack how he worked Canseco.

It was the kind of performance worth talking about.

"I've never seen anything like it," Mike Marshall said. "He's gone into the realm of Wayne Gretzky and Michael Jordan. He's like that."

He's like Sandy Koufax, who once pitched a routine 15-strikeout shutout for the Dodgers, then disappeared from the clubhouse.

"Where's Koufax?" the reporters inquired.

"He's been called up to a higher league," a teammate said.

Orel's not going anywhere yet. He's still got some repertoire left to show.

L.A. Takes 2-0 Lead

breaking Don Drysdale's major league record of 58 in 1968, and he led the National League with eight shutouts. He finished the season with a 23-8 record, then shut out New York 6-0 in Game 7 of the NL playoffs. The A's didn't come close to scoring off him Sunday night.

Parker twice led off innings, the second and fifth, with singles, but was gone in double plays started by Mark McGwire ground balls. Thus, Hershiser faced the minimum number of batters until the seventh inning when Carney Lansford reached on an error.

"He pitched a masterful game," Dodgers catcher Mike Scioscia said. "He had tremendous location with his pitches and that really set up all his pitches. To shut out a lineup of that magnitude is a tremendous feat. He was in control all the way."

Lasorda was even more impressed with Hershiser's consistency. Since Aug. 30, Hershiser has allowed only three runs, and those came in Games 1 and 4 in the NL playoffs.

"To continue that kind of pitching for so long, under so much pressure is just unreal," Lasorda said. "When you think of the length of time and what he has done, it just makes you stop and wonder."

The A's scored all four of their opening-game runs in the second inning on a Jose Canseco grand slam, and they now have gone 16 innings in the World Series without a run.

Canseco was 0-for-4 with a strikeout against Hershiser.

The A's might be a little rusty after beating Boston in four and waiting a week to play Los Angeles.

"We had the week off. We couldn't score any runs here," Parker said. "We just have to carry on. I haven't seen anything exceptional out there from the Dodgers."

The Dodgers started their big third inning against Storm Davis with one out when Hershiser lined a two-strike pitch up the middle for a single. Hershiser then ran all the way to third on Steve Sax's single to right and scored on a single by Franklin Stubbs, sending Sax to third.

"A lot of pitchers would have stopped at second base," Hershiser said, "but this is the World Series."

Lasorda said he saw Hershiser in the dugout later with the towel on his head.

"I told him, 'It wasn't like you ran a mile. I don't want to see you hanging your head around here,'" Lasorda said.

A single by Mickey Hatcher scored Sax, and Stubbs went to third. Hatcher went to second on the play when Oakland center fielder Dave Henderson tried to throw out Stubbs at third.

That brought Marshall, the Dodgers' cleanup hitter, to the plate with first base open. He never thought he'd be walked intentionally.

"I don't get too many intentional walks," he said. "They like to go for the strikeout in that situation, and I think that's what Davis was trying to do."

Davis got two strikes on Marshall, and his intent was to throw a fastball high and tight. Instead, it was over the plate, and Marshall sent it over the wall, arcing into the air like a mortar shot and landing in the seats with an explosion of cheers from the crowd.

Player Of The Week

Although offensive players have dominated Daily Reflector Player Of The Week honors this season, it's hard to ignore the performance of D.H. Conley defensive back Paul Merritt in the Vikings' 40-13 win over Coastal Conference foe West Craven Friday.

Merritt, a junior, intercepted three passes and caused a fumble to key a strong defensive effort by the Vikings. His first interception set up a one-yard run by quarterback Scott Seymour that tied the game at 7-7 and the Vikings rolled from there.

Prep Honor Roll

- Greene Central quarterback Kris Radford: Radford passed for 331 yards and two touchdowns to wide receiver Ken Jones in a 36-14 loss to Ayden-Grifton.
- Ayden-Grifton running backs Aaron Harper and Tony Reeves: Harper, a junior, ran for 144 yards and two touchdowns, a two-point conversion and also returned an interception for a score in a 36-14 win over Greene Central. Reeves, a senior, ran for 114 yards with one touchdown and one two-point conversion in the Chargers' win.
- D.H. Conley running back Anthony Barrett: Barrett, a freshman, overcame a sore ankle and ran for 94 yards in the Vikings' win over West Craven.

- Washington wide receiver Joe Randolph: Randolph, a senior, scored two touchdowns, one on an end around and the other on a 57-yard pass, to help the Pam Pack defeat North Lenior, 39-8.
- Jamesville running back Keith Basnight: Basnight, a senior, ran for over 100 yards for the third straight game, this time gaining 194 yards in a 66-26 win over Belhaven.
- Chocowinity running back Julius Smith: Smith ran for 118 yards and also caught two passes for another 102 yards in a 35-0 win over Columbia.
- Farmville Central quarterback Morris Foreman: Foreman ran for 63 yards with one touchdown and passed for another 47 on offense and also returned a fumble 40 yards for another score to lead the Jaguars to a 12-0 win over North Pitt.
- Rose High defensive end Carlester Crumpler: Crumpler had a fumble recovery and an interception in the Rampants' 41-0 win over Kinston. The interception came in the shadow of the Rose end zone on the final play of the first half.

Bengals Lose Their 1st

Raiders 27, Chiefs 17

Bo came back and the Raiders' offense took off. Jackson reported to the Raiders last Wednesday after hitting 25 home runs and batting .246 for the Royals. He didn't miss a beat in playing most of the game and the fans rarely booed him.

"The fans were great," Jackson said. "I think last year, because of the circumstances I was in, they had some things to get off their chest. The crowd was wonderful. I think I only saw one baseball."

Jackson was roundly booed and pelted with baseballs at Arrowhead Stadium last year.

Broncos 30, Falcons 14

Denver lost John Elway to a sprained right knee and ankle, but the injuries were not as severe as first thought. And Gary Kubiak replaced him to throw a 68-yard TD pass to Steve Sewell as the Broncos, 4-3, won their third straight game to tie the Seahawks for the AFC West lead.

Elway passed for 235 yards and a touchdown and Rich Karlis kicked three field goals at Denver. Atlanta, 1-6, suffered its fourth straight loss.

Saints 20, Seahawks 19

Dave Waymer scored the first touchdown of his nine-year career, picking up Gene Atkins' block of a field goal and romping 58 yards. The Saints won for the ninth straight time on the road and took over sole possession of the NFC West lead at 6-1.

It was the first blocked field goal returned for a touchdown against the Seahawks in their 13-year history.

Dolphins 31, Chargers 28

Dan Marino had his first big production of the season, throwing for 329 yards in hitting 26 of 45 passes. The host Dolphins, 4-3, won their third in a row by rallying from a 28-17 fourth-quarter deficit to hand San Diego, 2-5, its third consecutive loss.

Marino, in his sixth NFL season, has 27,300-yard games, one more than Johnny Unitas and behind only Charger Dan Fouts with 51.

Browns 19, Eagles 3

Randall Cunningham, coming off the best game of his career, was sacked nine times by the ferocious Cleveland pass rush. Philadelphia got past the Browns' 40 only once.

Don Strock, the Browns' fourth quarterback this year, passed for two touchdowns, made his first start since 1983 and threw two second-half touchdown passes. Strock, 37, signed by Cleveland a month ago, connected on a 15-yarder to Webster Slaughter and an 18-yarder to Reggie Langhorne. But Slaughter broke his forearm in the fourth quarter and will miss at least eight weeks.

Packers 34, Vikings 14

At Minneapolis, the Packers won their second in a row after five straight losses. Don Majkowski passed for 243 yards, Max Zendejas tied a club record with four field goals and Tim Harris recorded a safety, blocked a punt for a touchdown and had two sacks.

Minnesota, 4-3, penalized 15 times, had almost twice as much penalty yardage (129) as rushing yardage (67) and committed five turnovers.

Colts 35, Buccaneers 31

Vinny Testaverde led a stirring Buccaneers comeback in the fourth quarter that fell short at Indianapolis. Testaverde passed for 202 of his career-high 469 yards in that period, hitting Bruce Hill for a 16-yard score. Don Smith and Lars Tate had short scoring runs, but the Colts, 2-5, held on.

Eric Dickerson rushed for two touchdowns and Eugene Daniel returned an intercepted pass 41 yards for another TD for Indianapolis, which held a 35-10 lead.

Redskins 33, Cardinals 17

At Washington, Mark Rypien continued his sizzling play, throwing for four touchdowns and 303 yards as Washington moved into a three-way tie with the Giants and Cardinals atop the NFC East. Rypien hit Art Monk for 19 and 46-yard scores, and found Gary Clark on 19 and 60-yarders.

By the time he left the game with bruised ribs, Rypien had assured the end of Phoenix's four-game winning streak.

Rypien had never taken an NFL snap before he replaced Super Bowl MVP Doug Williams, who underwent an emergency appendectomy on Sept. 22.

Oilers 34, Steelers 14

The Oilers handed the Steelers their sixth straight loss — including three at home to their AFC Central rivals Houston, Cleveland and Cincinnati. The losing streak is the longest since a 13-game skid in 1969.

Warren Moon, out five weeks with a fractured shoulder blade, returned to throw for two touchdowns — Ernest Givins for 43 yards and Drew Hill for 24.

Bears 17, Cowboys 7

Not even two rookies in the lineup could slow Chicago's defense, which had five sacks of Danny White after it knocked Steve Pelluer out of the game with a concussion. Rookie free safety David Tate had two interceptions, two tackles and two deflected passes. First-year linebacker Dante Jones had seven tackles, two assists and shared a sack with Steve McMichael.

Giants 30, Lions 10

New York's struggling defense found the right tonic in the Lions, who have lost six straight since winning their opener. The Giants were ranked dead last in league defensive statistics, but they came alive by holding Detroit to 113 yards, just 13 in the second half. They had been surrendering 391.2 yards a game.

Kentucky's Problems Mounting; New Violations Are Uncovered

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — College basketball's winningest program is facing one of its biggest battles.

The University of Kentucky was notified by the NCAA last Friday that it found 17 new allegations of wrongdoing, ranging from improper recruiting to unethical conduct, bringing the total to 18 against the school's famed basketball program that has won 1,453 games in 85 seasons.

The university was notified of one allegation on July 2 — that assistant coach Dwane Casey sent $1,000 to the father of recruit Chris Mills. Casey has denied sending money and the Millses have denied receiving any.

Among the latest allegations, the NCAA said:

— A recruit was promised a monthly allowance of $300 from the time he signed a letter of intent until leaving the school; an automobile at the time of signing and opportunity for a different automobile when he leaves; and financial support for his mother.

— An athlete "gave false and misleading information to university and NCAA enforcement staff" and "the university violated NCAA rules by certifying the student-athlete's eligibility for competition."

— The basketball staff "acted contrary to NCAA principles of ethical conduct by demonstrating a knowing and willful failure to comply with NCAA regulations and by providing false and misleading information to NCAA investigators."

The university will have until Dec. 12 to formulate a written response to all the allegations.

"If violations of NCAA regulations are judged to have occurred, the institution must accept responsibility," UK President David Roselle said at a news conference Saturday. "We will not jeopardize the institution or its athletic program by doing otherwise."

James Park Jr., who heads the university's ongoing investigation, recommended to Roselle that names mentioned in the allegations not be released because of possible litigation.

"Some of the information in the allegations and questions from the NCAA may be inaccurate," he said in a letter to Roselle. "If any such information is inaccurate, persons identified in the official inquiry could possibly be defamed or placed in a false light."

Asked how many people were mentioned in the charges, Roselle replied: "I'd guess more than 10."

Basketball coach Eddie Sutton said he was relieved that the allegations had been received.

"I have told many people that we have, in effect, been on probation since April," Sutton said in a release from the sports information office.

UNC Facing A Tough Road

John Reed, along with safety Dan Vooletich saw regular action last season.

Free safety Terrance Fedd, defensive tackle Roy Barker, linebacker Dwight Hollier and left cornerback Doxie Jordan are all in their first year. Linebacker Bernard Timmons is only a sophomore. Reserve nose tackle Chris Jacobs has only been a part-time player in four years while junior tackle Cecil Gray is in his first year of starting regularly.

And N.C. State exploited those weaknesses with a hurry-up offense keyed by quarterback Shane Montgomery that put 27 points up on the board in the first half alone.

"I'm glad we went with the two-minute offense. We had a great game plan. Carolina has a young defensive team, especially in the skill positions at linebacker and in the secondary," Montgomery said.

And for three quarters, Montgomery did his best to exploit those areas. He had 261 yards passing, hitting on 24 of 35 attempts with one interception.

"It's disappointing," Vooletich said. "We're just trying to keep our heads up. We haven't played well in the first quarter this season. I think we're close. It's just a yard here or there and that's why it's so frustrating.

"Montgomery did a nice job. He hit the open man. I expected them to run the ball more early, (but) they did a nice job with their game plan."

UNC, meanwhile, could muster only a field goal in the opening two quarters.

"(It) was the worst offensive performance I've ever been around as a head football coach," Brown said. "I think some of that was because we were so far behind."

"I think we tried very, very hard to play well today, but offensively, we didn't prepare our guys well enough in the key positions to win the game."

UNC has struggled offensively this season as quarterbacks Jonathan Hall and Deems May have alternated as starters and both have had their problems. May, a redshirt freshman, is inexperienced. Hall, a junior, did not play a down last year due to a shoulder injury from which he is still recovering.

In addition, the Tar Heels have only one veteran wide receiver in Randy Marriott. Freshman Eric Blount, a former Ayden-Grifton standout, has stepped in to a starting spot, but the ranks are still very thin.

"Losing Mitch Wike and Dennis Tripp on defense and not having experienced players on defense and at quarterback makes it very difficult to win," Brown said.

This season is living proof.

McCorvey Is Starting Over

"I wake up in a sweat at night sometimes thinking of something worse happening and maybe having to stay in there for six months or so. It was something that could have happened," he said. "I sometimes dream that the judge is handing me a six-month sentence and I quickly try and block it out of mind, but it keeps coming back."

"I just thank God I was only in there 48 hours and I'm glad I now have the chance to continue playing football and to also continue my education."

That's thanks mainly to ECU head coach Art Baker.

"Without coach Baker's help I really wouldn't have had the opportunity to come down here," McCorvey said. "Everyone was looking at me like I was a bad kid or a troubled kid."

"Coach Baker informed the people down here that I was a good kid, that I had just got caught up in a bad situation and that he knew I'd work my way out of it."

It was a case where Baker felt McCorvey deserved a second chance.

"I've always felt real good about Errol," Baker said. "He's a fine young man, and we knew that when we recruited him, and we knew it when he got in trouble, and that's why we stuck with him, and that's why (FSU head coach) Bobby Bowden took him here in their program."

"He made a mistake and had to pay a severe penalty for it," Baker said. "But nevertheless, I'm real proud of him because he's back here working on his degree and he's getting in a good football program and he'll probably end up helping them before it's all over."

The 6-0, 175-pound defensive back will not be eligible to play for the Seminoles until next year in accordance with NCAA regulations applying to transfers.

McCorvey was convicted of sexually assaulting a female last February in a campus dormitory. Two other ECU players, Lewis Wilson and Ernest Pendleton, were also involved in the incident, but Wilson was found not guilty and charges against Pendleton were dismissed in District Court.

Following the conviction, McCorvey said he felt it would be in the best interest of everyone if he transferred back to his home state. He is a native of Pensacola, Fla.

"I felt that there was a lot of pressure on me if I had stayed up there," McCorvey said. "The incident that happened brought about a lot of negative influence on the team and towards me."

"I thought it would be best if I left and tried to get a fresh start while I was still young instead of staying up there for a year or two and then realizing that I couldn't take the heat and leaving then and just messing up an opportunity for myself."

Even so, that doesn't take away the hurt when he sees his old teammates on the field playing.

"(Watching ECU play) hurts a lot knowing I should be out there playing like everybody else instead of watching as a spectator," he said. "It hurt me to leave ECU because I left some good friends up there."

According to McCorvey, the two-day sentence issued by the judge wasn't the hard thing for him to handle; it was getting used to what people thought of him once news of the incident spread.

"I guess they (the people in the Greenville area) thought I was a bad kid and that East Carolina didn't really look at the attitudes of the people they recruited, but I didn't look at myself that way," he said. "I was just caught up in a situation where I was in the wrong place at the wrong time and I admit that I made a mistake, but I also realize that many people could have made the same mistake, but unfortunately it was me."

ECU may wish he had never departed. Baker had good reason to be high on McCorvey when he was recruiting him.

Dooley, Dunne Team Up For HBO's 'Lip Service'

By Kathryn Baker
AP TELEVISION WRITER

NEW YORK — Gil, a veteran newsman whose role model was Edward R. Murrow, still yearns to say something important, even if it's just on a local morning talk show that nobody watches. Gil has been given a new co-host, Len. Len is on an '80s fast track, having just moved up to the small East Coast network affiliate from an independent station in Utah. Len is quick. Len is funny. Len is now.

They make a perfect team — Len's head is as wooden as Gil's delivery.

Paul Dooley as Gil and Griffin Dunne as Len star in the wicked bit of fun "Lip Service," a one-hour HBO Showcase presentation premiering tonight, with additional playdates Oct. 20, 23, 26 and 29.

The film was adapted by Howard Korder ("Boys' Life") from his play. The project is the first television venture by the producing team of playwright-screenwriter David Mamet ("The Untouchables," "Glenngarry Glen Ross") and Mike Hausman. It was directed by W.H. Macy, a stage actor and colleague of Mamet.

Gil, well aware he's being edged out, monosyllabically fends off Len's guileless attempts to make him a mentor. Len tries to engage Gil in discussions of deep subjects such as "the fame thing" or "the career-personal life thing." Len goes through the motions of stabbing his co-anchor in the back — pitching new ideas to the producer behind Gil's back, making fun of Gil on the air — but seems blithely unaware of the inevitable effect.

"The trap would be to make him a very one-dimensional son-of-a-bitch, (that) he's got an ulterior motive from the very beginning," said Dunne in an interview. "He's a guy that really idolizes Gil, he's not a guy who's just out to get his job. He just thinks the guy is the greatest man in the world, and he's always loved his work — even though he doesn't even know his work. He's just an old guy who's been in the industry for a long time, and he must have interviewed Nixon, and he must've done all that serious journalistic stuff, and his (Len's) idea of what the media's supposed to do and Gil's are quite different, but he goes into it so innocently.

"His shallowness, the nice thing you can say about it is it's sincere.

That's what I loved about the part. The guy did crack me up."

"Lip Service" is a satire on the TV biz, but its clash of values could apply to any milieu. Reassuringly, if perhaps not realistically, Gil triumphs in the end.

Dunne, who starred mostly recently in "After Hours" and "Who's That Girl?" is a movie producer as well as an actor. He and Amy Robinson produced the current "Running on Empty," the critically praised film starring River Phoenix as the son of '60s radicals on the run from the FBI.

Dunne's first production was the 1979 Joan Micklin Silver-directed "Chilly Scenes of Winter," originally released as "Head Over Heels."

He, Robinson and another underemployed actor friend, Mark Metcalf, had loved the Ann Beattie book. "We thought it would make a great movie. We optioned it and for some reason never doubted that we'd get it made. Because that's how much we knew about making movies, we actually thought we'd get it made, that's how much we knew."

Dunne and Robinson produced "After Hours" and have a new project with Swedish director Lasse Hallstrom ("My Life As a Dog") starring Holly Hunter ("Broadcast News").

Paul Dooley, a veteran of Robert Altman movies, is probably best known for playing the dad in "Breaking Away." He currently stars in the CBS sitcom "Coming of Age."

"He's a hilarious man, as a comedic actor and also as a clown. I mean like a clown in the true sense," said Dunne. "He knows everything about juggling. He taught me how to fall up the stairs. He knows all that stuff."

Revolutionary TV

NEW YORK (AP) — Roseanne Barr, situation comedy mom of the 1980s, has taken the role a long way from the days of a willowy June Cleaver of "Leave It to Beaver" or Laura Petrie of "The Dick Van Dyke Show."

"I put in eight hours a day at the factory, and then I come home and put in another eight hours. ... And you don't do NOTHING!" she tells her husband, played by John Goodman, on the new ABC-TV program, "Rosanne."

On the show, Ms. Barr plays a mother who works in a Midwestern plastics factory, then comes home to slave over three children and chastise her husband for doing the dishes once in three years.

Parker Role Was Great Challenge For Whitaker

By Hillel Italie
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — For Forest Whitaker, playing Charlie Parker didn't just mean looking or sounding like the great jazzman. It meant making sure everything fit.

"I was nervous. I was scared," admitted Whitaker, who stars in "Bird," Clint Eastwood's critically acclaimed film biography of the late jazz saxophonist.

"I was going into areas I hadn't really dealt with. It was a most challenging role. As a person, I felt really honored to bring the character to life. It was so fortunate that it happened."

Parker, who died in 1955 when he was just 34, moved into musical areas that few touched. With such musicians as Dizzy Gillespie, he revolutionized jazz in the 1940s, helping create the style called bebop. A brilliant and troubled man, he was no less overwhelming as a person.

"I think he embraced life," Whitaker said. "He took whatever pleasure he could find in it. He wasn't afraid to do that. It held a lot of bad consequences for him, but he did that and that's where he hurt himself."

Where Parker primarily hurt himself was by a heroin addiction that plagued him for much of his life.

"He was trapped and he started very young," Whitaker said. "I think it has to do with his particular way of life. He was very sensitive about a lot of things. I think he knew it was destroying him. He didn't want other people using it."

Whitaker, awarded this year's prize for best actor at the Cannes Film Festival, gives a performance that should get Academy notice.

He was born in Longview, Texas, and grew up in Los Angeles. He attended the University of Southern California and originally studied opera. But he became interested in acting and began appearing in local equity productions. His involvement with movies came later.

"I was probably going to go to New York and work on stage and that was it," Whitaker said in an interview. "It just so happens I was working on a play and it turned into an opportunity to do a film."

Whitaker beat Paul Newman at pool in "The Color of Money," and played Robin Williams' protegee in "Good Morning, Vietnam." He has been directed by Martin Scorsese, Oliver Stone and Eastwood.

"They all have a very keen sense of focus, although their focuses are different. Some go out in a circle and encompass everything. Some just focus on this little tiny thing."

Whitaker had not even met Eastwood when he was given the part.

"I didn't know he had any interest in jazz whatsoever. I didn't have any preconceived ideas about him. I never expected to see Dirty Harry walk into that meeting. He turned out to be a real jazz aficionado and really easy to work for."

Whitaker is something of a rarity in Hollywood, a successful black actor. He had always been aware of the difficulties in getting good parts, but was not deterred from going into films.

"I'm fortunate because I never wanted to do film. I'm real fortunate that I never really thought about it. That fear wasn't there because there wasn't a great need at first," he said. "A lot of the roles I've played have not been written for black actors."

As part of his research for "Bird," Whitaker talked to those who knew Parker, including the jazzman's wife, Chan. He discovered that no one really "knew" Parker.

"It seemed they didn't know what was going on with him. That helped me immensely to understand where he was coming from," Whitaker said.

"What did he really say to them? What did they really know about his fears, how he felt about this? When they told me what they knew, it was more important what they didn't know. Someone would say he had no fear and that would tell me how much they knew."

Parker was true to the spirit of his music, spontaneous and emotional, given to extreme highs and lows. Understandably, Whitaker was drained by the effort to sustain those feelings.

"There are scenes in the latter part of his life when he's closer to death, when he's lost almost everything. He's walking around like a lost soul, the only thing that's moving him around is a little pilot light," the actor said.

"That was difficult to understand, trying to find that place where you're still alive but you have nothing left."

But how well could anyone really understand Parker? "Bird has disintegrated into pure sound," a musician once said. Was Parker beyond words?

"He was pushing towards sound," Whitaker said. "The sound was totally coming from emotion. More than words can express. I think that was something he felt, understood and put in his music."

But Whitaker believes he shares an important philosophical goal with Parker.

"I think he had a quest for understanding, openness. I believe I have that, trying to figure that stuff out, being open to all kinds of different things."

Excerpts Of Burton Diary Are Published

NEW YORK (AP) — Richard Burton wrote in his diary that he'd love Elizabeth Taylor until he died, and recounted that she once bought her a $1.1 million ring after he told her her hands were "large and ugly and red and masculine."

The late Welsh actor also wrote that he was "as thrilled by the English language as I am by a lovely woman or dreams."

In the journals, he analyzed his relationship with Taylor, detailed the fairy-tale life they lived, and fretted about the financial cost of diamonds and the physical cost of drinking.

Excerpts from a biography, which quotes from Burton's journals, are published in November's Life magazine. The book, "Richard Burton: A Life 1925-1984," by Melvyn Bragg and Sally Burton, whom Burton married in 1983, will be published by Little, Brown in February.

"I have been inordinately lucky all my life, but the greatest luck of all has been Elizabeth," Burton wrote on Nov. 19, 1967. "She is a prospectus that can never be entirely catalogued, an almanac for Poor Richard. And I'll love her till I die."

Burton lamented that he had insulted Taylor one night by telling her that her hands were "large and ugly and red and masculine." The next morning, Taylor replied that Burton would have to buy her a diamond ring of 69 carats to make her hands less ugly. "That insult last night is going to cost me," Burton wrote. He ended up spending $1.1 million for the ring.

Burton worried about Taylor's drinking and his own. "It would be frightful to live the rest of our lives in an alcoholic haze, seeing the world through fumes of spirits and smoke."

Comfort On Stage

NEW YORK (AP) — Nancy Marchand, who played the patrician newspaper publisher Mrs. Pyncheon on television's "Lou Grant," says she loves to act on the stage. The problem is when she comes down from it.

"As a person, I'm kind of afraid of people," she said in an interview published Sunday in The New York Times. "I'm kind of afraid of people. I feel a lot more comfortable walking down Broadway ... than if I'm at a cocktail party."

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠84 ♥QJ73 ♦Q9 ♣KJ982
 The bidding has proceeded:
 West North East South
 1 ♠ Dbl Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—When partner makes a takeout double of a major, he guarantees the other major or a very powerful hand. Therefore, you should respond in your four-card major rather than the five-card minor. And two hearts is an underbid—make the invitational jump to three hearts.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠AQJ76 ♥Void ♦A10843 ♣KQ5
 Partner opens the bidding with one heart. What do you respond?
 A.—You jump shift only with one of two types of hand. Either you have a self-sufficient suit of your own, or excellent support for partner. Neither is the case here, so simply respond one spade. You can show your power with a jump shift or high reverse into diamonds at your next turn.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠AQJ76 ♥Void ♦A10843 ♣KQ5
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♥ Pass 1 ♠ Pass
 2 ♥ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—You should choose the high reverse of three diamonds. That is forcing, so there is no need for you to jump. Besides, your only makeable game could be three no trump. Don't bypass it!

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠J63 ♥Q7 ♦K82 ♣AQ1076
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West

1 ♦ Pass 2 ♣ Pass
 2 ♦ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—Some number of no trump looks right with our balanced hand and honor card in every suit, but we just can't bring ourselves to make that bid without a sure stopper in either major! We'll settle for the unimaginative raise to three diamonds, and hope partner can move.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠A963 ♥AQJ962 ♦72 ♣Q
 The bidding has proceeded:
 West North East South
 1 ♦ 1 ♠ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—For his vulnerable overall, partner must have a reasonable hand. Therefore, you want to communicate to him that you have a powerful hand in case big things are in store. Tell him of your strength by cue-bidding two diamonds. Note that that doesn't promise control of the enemy suit.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠K ♥K7 ♦KJ1092 ♣AK754
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♥ 2 ♠ ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—Don't make a cue-bid in the enemy suit before you know where you want to play the hand! Simply plan to bid both your suits. Start by bidding three diamonds, which is a game force here, with the intention of showing your clubs next.

Anti-Clotting Drug Tested On Dead Man's Heart

By A.J. Hosteler
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA — Doctors said they kept a dead man's heart beating for an hour in a successful test of a drug designed to prevent blood clots, but an ethicist is questioning the experiment's technique.

"It raises such fundamental issues that it needs to be explored before we can call it right or wrong," said ethicist and physician Dr. John La Puma of Lutheran General Hospital, Park Ridge, Ill. La Puma's editorial accompanies the medical report in the current issue of the Annals of Internal Medicine, published in Philadelphia.

blood from clotting during the hour-long experiment.

The drug, called 7E3, also did not cause excessive bleeding, one possible side effect of two commonly used anti-clotting drugs, heparin and warfarin.

Researchers put a portion of a single-cell antibody to block the clotting. Such antibodies are often called a "magic bullet" because they seek out a specific cell.

Blood clots can cause strokes or heart attacks, such as when they travel to the brain or pulmonary arteries.

The experiment was conducted on a 78-year-old man at the Stony Brook hospital by researchers led by Barry Collier, a hematologist at the university on New York's Long Island.

Relatives of the man, who had been in a coma from a brain hemorrhage, and the hospital's Institutional Review Board gave permission for the test. The man had been placed on a respirator so that his heart would continue beating during the experiment.

"The advent of a specific treatment such as the antibody, without causing side effects, would be a very welcome and important addition to available therapies," Dr. Hamid Al-Mondhry, a hematologist at the Penn State Milton S. Hersey Medical Center and a researcher in anti-clotting agents, said in a telephone interview.

In his editorial, La Puma wrote that the experiment was "ethically questionable," and added that the report did not outline details regarding informed consent that he considers essential. He noted the researchers received consent from the hospital and were not the ones to contact the patient's physician to ask for consent.

The newly dead should be considered for such experiments only when the work is of value to physicians treating patients, rather than basic biological research, said La Puma.

La Puma said he found three reported instances of scientists experimenting on newly dead patients this century.

Collier said using a newly dead patient allowed the investigators to study the effects of several doses of the treatment. Using live volunteers would have increased the time necessary to complete the study, he said.

"In our setting, the experiment provided us important information that was potentially useful in benefiting humans, without exposing a living human to harm," Collier said in a statement.

The experiment will also provide data for prospective volunteers in clinical studies, the article said.

Collier said the patient's physician notified the researchers that the patient could be eligible for the study.

Collier said nine years of prior research at Stony Brook, Massachusetts General Hospital and the University of Wisconsin had shown that the agent 7E3 prevented blood from clotting in test tubes, monkeys and dogs, and models designed to simulate impending strokes and heart attacks in humans.

Drug Buyers Cooked Own Goose

PORT ANGELES, Wash. (AP) — People kept calling to buy cocaine, the folks answering the phone kept saying come on over, and the arrests kept mounting.

Callers learned later that they had been talking to Jefferson County sheriff's detectives, who raided a home in Quilcene early Friday. Detectives found less than a pound of cocaine and loaded firearms, and arrested two people when the raid began.

By the time it ended Saturday afternoon, 10 people were arrested, and more than $2,500 and five vehicles were confiscated, said Sheriff Mel Mefford.

While detectives were searching the house, the phone kept ringing, so they answered and told prospective buyers, "Well, sure, come on down," Mefford said.

"I suppose if we had stayed there, we could have been (making arrests) there for days," he said.

'Mikki Maus' Big Hit In First Moscow Appearance

By John Thor Dahlburg
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Here he's called "Mikki Maus," and the 60-year-old American has surprisingly good rapport with Soviet youngsters for an international film star making his first live appearance in the Soviet Union.

Sunday evening at Moscow's 2,500-seat Rossiya Theater, with a police cordon worthy of a minor head of state outside, the first Soviet festival of Walt Disney animated classics opened with a showing of "Fantasia" and a visit by Mickey Mouse himself.

Standing about 5 foot, 6 inches in his clunky black patent leather shoes, Mickey, played by Gabriella Spieth from Walt Disney's West German office, strolled waving down the theater aisle to the strains of "Heigh Ho, Heigh Ho. It's Off to Work We Go."

In a juvenile version of the Moscow superpower summit, Mickey was given a big hug and a keg of honey by Misha the Bear, mascot of the 1980 Moscow Olympics.

The lights dimmed, and the Rossiya's screen filled with the image of Donald Duck in the 1941 short subject "Donald's Crime," in which he purloins the contents of a piggy bank to finance a nightclub outing with Daisy, then suffers pangs of conscience.

In a Russian-language voiceover, minus the squawking tones in which Donald usually speaks in English, French and other Western languages, the duck concluded: "Crime does not pay."

There was delighted laughter and applause from the audience, which included Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady I. Gerasimov and many other Soviet VIPs and their families.

As well as "Fantasia," which was first released in 1940, the Disney animated films "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," "Bambi" and "101 Dalmatians" will be shown to children and their parents in Moscow, Leningrad and Tallinn.

Mickey is accompanied by a contingent of executives from The Walt Disney Co. here to investigate the business possibilities created by President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's economic and social reforms, which have also loosened controls on the media and the movies.

"Fantasia" is almost 50 years overdue in coming to the Soviet Union," Roy E. Disney, vice chairman of the Disney company and nephew of its founder, pioneer animator Walt Disney, told the audience.

"Through the universal language of animation ... I feel we are taking one more step toward bringing our countries together," he said.

Disney and other company executives played down the business end of their trip, but the Tass news agency said they were talking with the Soviets about cooperation in making and distributing films and in jointly building a "Wonderland," a Disneyland-style theme park already planned for Moscow.

The Soviet Union is virgin territory for the Disney company and its enormous stocks of cartoons, feature films and television shows. Characters like Mickey, Donald, Chip and Dale and other Disney creations that are childhood companions of hundreds of millions in the West mean nothing to many Soviets. "I don't know what Mickey Mouse is; I have never seen him," said Dmitri Bogdanov, 3 1/2, who was brought to the Rossiya by his mother, Varya, only because she had seen Disney cartoons on videocassettes and at a Moscow movie theater that specializes in cartoons.

Although Mickey, Donald and their friends may not have instant name recognition in the Soviet Union yet, their faces adorn T-shirts, badges, children's clothing and hundreds of other items made by cooperatives or sold on the black market.

Mickey's creators do not get a single kopeck in royalties for such exposure.

According to Sovetskaya Rossiya, the first Disney cartoons were shown in the Soviet Union at the first Moscow film festival in 1935. The cartoons, which included "The Three Little Pigs" won an award.

Sovetskaya Rossiya, a Communist Party organ that commonly devotes its news columns to weighty matters like the national grain harvest, said, "Disney is a remarkable master and a genius second to none."

"Who does not know, for example, his hero, a little mouse named Mickey who really became the first 'star' of the world screen, or his inseparable friends — the shy cow Clarabella with the langorous eyes, a hot-tempered but handsome little duck, Donald; a muddle-headed dog named Goofy, or a careful doggy named Pluto?"

Europe On Verge Of Expanded Television With Astra Satellite

By Raf Casert
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LUXEMBOURG — This small bucolic nation hopes to change the television landscape in Western Europe with the launching of its Astra satellite on Dec. 9.

An Ariane rocket of the European space consortium is to send Astra into orbit and if the project is successful millions of viewers will need only satellite dishes the size of an umbrella to receive TV broadcasts without paying for the service.

Astra, the project of Luxembourg's Societe Europeenne des Satellites, will be the first one capable of beaming a package of 16 channels directly to homes in the most densely populated areas of Europe.

Programming scheduled so far is to be financed through advertising revenues.

Low-power satellite signals now require big and expensive dishes. These signals are primarily distributed by cable networks that charge the viewers, limiting the audience.

But the medium-power Astra will beam channels directly to homes that will require only a dish costing about the same as a video recorder.

"A medium-power satellite was most suited to mass market TV, and Astra will be the first of its generation," Prime Minister Jacques Santer said in an interview with The Associated Press.

"In the early 1980s we realized much was happening in the audiovisual media," he said.

At that time the broadcast monopolies of European governments began to fade with the advent of cable TV and the prospect of continent-wide satellite broadcasts.

"We took our chances to push through innovations," Santer said of the Astra project. "All of Europe is still virgin territory for television."

The Luxembourg government initiated the Astra project in 1983. It has a 20 percent share in the Societe Europeenne des Satellites, which has $85 million in capital, and has agreed to cover risks of up to $125 million.

Eight of the 15 other shareholders are Luxembourg companies and the satellite's control center is in Betzdorf, 13 miles east of the capital.

Santer hopes Astra will generate income for the nation from new TV productions.

"A satellite is only a transmission tool. We must also produce programs. That's the second important factor," he said.

Parliament is expected to enact a law soon giving tax breaks for audiovisual enterprises to set up shop in this nation surrounded by Belgium, France and West Germany.

Santer expects this will lure producers of situation comedies, variety shows and other projects that are cost-efficient and carry relatively little commercial risk.

With Astra and its related TV production initiatives, Luxembourg has its sights set on 1992, when the 12-nation European Economic Community plans to forge a single European market for its industries.

The EEC has estimated satellite television will generate $11 billion in business for makers of reception dishes, decoders, other equipment and advertisers over the next five to seven years.

"Why can we not succeed where the Americans were so successful?" said Santer. "Europe must put a greater effort into TV technology and programming."

Despite such lofty European ideals, Astra is a U.S.-made RCA-4000 satellite and the Luxembourg company has signed its first contract for four channels with media tycoon Rupert Murdoch, an American citizen.

Through Astra, Murdoch will target a market of over 80 million homes in Western Europe. It will give areas not served by cable companies and limited to only a few national networks more choice.

Astra's key markets are Britain, West Germany, France, Austria, Switzerland, northern Italy, Denmark, the Netherlands, Belgium and Luxembourg. Viewers in many other nations will be able to tune in, but with a larger dish.

While many competitive satellite projects are still on the drawing board, Astra is to begin transmissions in early 1989.

The organization has signed a 10-year contract with Murdoch for his entertainment unit Sky Channel and movie, sports and news channels.

U.S. media magnate Ted Turner is negotiating for a channel, sources said on condition of anonymity.

Beijing Opens First VD Treatment Unit

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Beijing has opened its first venereal disease treatment center to handle the rapid rise in VD cases, the official China Daily said today.

The report said the capital will grant $13,500 to the Western District Venereal Disease Prevention and Treatment Center and plans to set up other district centers to combat the growing health problem.

It said 427 Beijing residents last year were diagnosed as having gonorrhea, syphilis and other types of VD.

VD is said to be most serious in southern Guangdong province, one of China's most open areas bordering Hong Kong. The province recorded 5,600 cases last year, triple the previous year.

Venereal disease was a scourge of 20th century, pre-revolutionary China, especially in the cities, where prostitution and opium trafficking ran rampant.

After the communist takeover in 1949, Chinese doctors launched a campaign to cure venereal disease — placing prostitutes in re-education camps and treating victims.

By the 1960s, China claimed to have virtually wiped out the diseases. But the problem returned in the 1980s with the nation's opening to the outside world. Lack of education about the diseases, and lax enforcement of the ban on prostitution, are also blamed for the spread of VD.

The daily said the Beijing center opened with an exhibition of pictures and videos focusing on the symptoms, means of infection and harm caused by VD, and on sex and family life. About 100 people, mostly in their 20s and 30s, visited the exhibition during its first two days.

Soccer Fans Riot

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Rioting broke out among hundreds of gate crashers at an overcrowded soccer game that had been blacked out on local television. One person was killed and 50 injured, police said.

Police fired tear gas to disperse fans Sunday as they tried to force their way into Cairo Stadium, which was already filled over its 100,000 capacity for a match between the Al-Ahli and Tersana teams, both of Cairo.

Police said most of the fans who attempted to crash through the gates were supporters of the Al-Ahli team, which is leading the 12-team national soccer league. Tersana is 5th in the standings.

Despite the violence, the game was played and Al-Ahli won 3-1.

U.S. Soldiers Brawl

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEOUL, South Korea — About 40 U.S. soldiers brandishing jackknives and broken bottles brawled with rock-throwing South Koreans in the capital's shopping district. An American and a South Korean were hospitalized, officials said today.

News reports said one American and three Koreans were injured in the clash early Sunday, and one of the Koreans was in critical condition.

According to a military press release, the incident in the nightclub section of Itaewon was sparked by a verbal altercation between a Korean taxi driver and an American soldier. The argument escalated into an assault involving four Americans and a number of Koreans.

Itaewon is a shopping district close to the U.S. Forces Korea Headquarters in Seoul.

South Korean police officials said the four Americans suddenly began cursing at the taxi driver, Lee Ok-Chul, 51, and kicked his cab on a street corner. Lee was quoted as saying that when he got of his car and protested, the Americans punched him in the face and some even climbed on top of his car.

The officials said about 40 Koreans rushed to Lee's aid. The Americans then fled, br ndishing empty beer bottles and throwing rocks at the pursuing crowd.

When Korean passers-by jeered at the fleeing Americans, police said about 40 other American soldiers joined in and brandished jackknives and broken beer bottle at the Koreans, who countered by throwing rocks.

The Koreans, whose number had swelled to about 200 by then, shouted "Yankee go home," in front of a nightclub into which the Americans had fled, the officials said.
