Typhoon Blasts Philippines; At Least 13 Dead

By Eileen Guerrero
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANILA, Philippines — Typhoon Ruby roared across the Philippines today with heavy rain and winds topping 100 mph, causing mud slides and tidal surges that left thousands homeless. Officials said at least 13 people died.

The military reported another 30 people were missing and feared dead in a storm-related bus accident and that an inter-island vessel with 481 passengers and crew was missing in stormy seas.

The coast guard said the missing vessel, the Marilyn, reported engine trouble en route from Manila to Tacloban City and could have taken shelter in an isolated harbor. It was last reported about 200 miles southeast of Manila.

The government warned of more flooding as the storm approached

Manila. At 4 p.m., the storm sustained winds of 102 mph and its center was moving northwest at 16 mph toward densely populated central Luzon Island.

"This is one of the worst typhoons this year," said Juanito Lirios, deputy weather service director. "Manila is in great danger. Let us not take chances. If we do not take care then there could be a great loss of lives."

Some flights were canceled and schools were closed in Manila. The U.S. military's television network reported wind gusts up to 140 mph. All six U.S. military bases in the Philippines were put on maximum storm alert.

States of emergency were declared in some areas of the southern Mindanao Island, and thousands of people were evacuated.

Ruby is the 18th typhoon or tropical storm to hit the Philippines this year and the second in four days. There were conflicting reports on casualties because the storm knocked out communications in the affected areas.

Rodrigo Roldan, civil defense director on Panay Island, said at least five people were killed today when a bus carrying about 90 people careened off a bridge during heavy winds and rain and plunged into a river.

The army said another 30 passengers were missing and presumed dead. The state-run Philippines News Agency said most of the passengers were sleeping when the accident occurred and were unable to escape.

Roldan said at least 19 people were rescued.

Simeon Licayan, executive secretary of Cagayan de Oro, said seven people, mostly children, were killed Sunday when tornados prompted by the advancing typhoon struck remote villages near the city 500 miles south of Manila.

Licayan said a state of emergency was declared for Cagayan de Oro, a Mindanao Island port city of 230,000, and that about 250 houses and a major bridge had been washed away.

Whales Airlift Weighed

By Bruce Bartley
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BARROW, Alaska — Soviet flotillas churned toward Barrow to offer help for two trapped whales as rescuers tried to lure the mammals to freedom, but biologists said they may have to airlift the animals to open water.

"We're having a net built right now" to carry them, David Withrow of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's Marine Mammal Laboratory in Seattle said Sunday.

He emphasized that an airlift was the least preferred alternative, to be used only if rescuers fail to coax the California gray whales to open water through a series of freshly cut air holes in the ice.

A third whale, the smallest and the youngest of the mammals trapped in moving ice more than two weeks ago before they could migrate south, disappeared Friday and was presumed dead.

A pontoon-mounted ice auger known as an Archimedes screw tractor was delivered during the weekend by a huge Air Force C-5A cargo plane and was reassembled Sunday.

The device was to begin work today on the outside edge of an ice pressure ridge that stands between the whales and freedom.

"That's the next big project for us," said NOAA biologist Ron Morris, coordinator of the rescue.

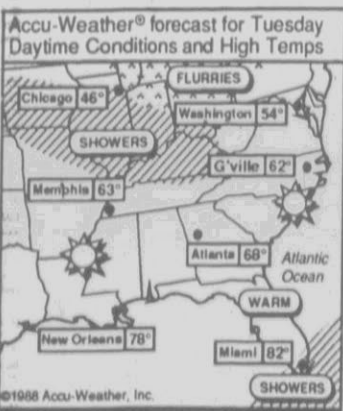

NOAA asked the Soviet Union for help, and America's Arctic neighbor ordered the icebreakers Admiral Makarov and Vladimir Arseniev to Barrow, said NOAA Rear Adm. Sigmund R. Petersen, director of the Pacific Marine Center in Seattle.

The ships were 140 nautical miles from the Barrow area, the Soviet news agency Tass reported today.

Another flotilla unloaded equipment for a Soviet station at the North Pole before heading immediately for Alaska, Tass said.

Police Say Group Designated To Get Pictures Of Hostages

By Piero Valsecchi
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MILAN, Italy — Police said today a U.S. organization was the intended recipient of the photographs of American hostages in Lebanon that were found in a Lebanese woman's luggage at Milan's airport.

The woman was supposed to deliver the pictures and a handwritten letter bearing hostage Alann Steen's name to an Italian arms trader, Aldo Anghessa, police said. The photographs were of Steen, American reporter Terry Anderson and a third man.

"Anghessa acted as a go-between, between the two parties. One party was a Lebanese organization," said Achille Serra, head of Milan's anti-terrorist police.

He said the other group was American, but refused to elaborate on the identity of either organization or say if the U.S. government was involved.

The newspaper Il Giornale of Milan reported without attribution today that Anghessa was to give the photos and letter to U.S. diplomats, but the arrest of the woman spoiled the operation. The U.S. Embassy declined comment on the report.

Serra said police do not know if Anghessa was part of an effort to free the hostages, as Italian media has speculated.

Anghessa, who has been linked to Italian and Swiss secret services and was at the center of an international arms scandal last year, was questioned by police after the woman's arrest Thursday after arriving at Milan's Linate Airport from Beirut. Anghessa was released, but police planned to interrogate him again, Serra said.

The Lebanese woman, identified as Aline Ibrahim Rizkallah, 36, was jailed and charged with carrying $1,000 in counterfeit U.S. bills and 50 grams of heroin, police said.

The woman said Anghessa was not connected to the drug shipment, police said.

The Rome daily La Repubblica reported Sunday that Anghessa had ties to the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration.

Mayor Told About Threat

Greenville Mayor Edward E. Carter said today a phone caller told him over the weekend that his life is being threatened by an unknown person or groups of persons.

Carter said the anonymous caller, supposedly concerned about the mayor's welfare, told him Saturday that there has been issued "a contract out" on his life.

"I am not convinced that that's the case," the mayor said today. "But we're having the police take the necessary precautions. We don't want to play this lightly."

Carter said he believes the alleged threat might somehow be an indirect result of heightened pressures placed on criminals as a result of recently initiated anti-drug and enforcement campaigns including the introduction of the city's Community Involvement Association.

"I knew that when we organized these efforts that we would be stepping on some toes, so I can't say I'm totally surprised," Carter said.

Greenville Police Chief Jerry Tesmond said the department is currently following up on the allegations, utilizing normal police procedures in investigating the matter.

Freighter Captain Is Charged

By Helena Smith
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PIRAEUS, Greece — The captain of an Italian freighter that collided with a Greek cruise ship appeared before a court today on manslaughter charges and was ordered detained pending an inquiry.

Two Greek crewmen died in Friday's accident off Piraeus harbor near Athens. A 14-year-old British girl and a teacher are missing and presumed dead, the merchant marine ministry said.

Capt. Flavio Caminale, 45, of Genoa, Italy, faces counts of manslaughter through negligence, causing serious injuries, causing a shipwreck and ignoring shipping regulations.

"I'm innocent," Caminale said during a 30-minute hearing in Piraeus.

"I'm sorry for the death of these people ... I'm not sorry about the ship ... you can make new ships but you can't make people," he said later.

Caminale was arrested Friday after the cruise ship Jupiter collided with the freighter Adige and went down as the cruise ship was leaving Piraeus harbor.

District attorney Antonis Roussos and investigating magistrate Telemachus Flezouras ordered the captain detained pending a court appearance Wednesday in which he will be questioned and the charges formally recorded.

Under Greek judicial procedure, a defendant must be presented with the charges in a court the next working day after his arrest. In a subsequent hearing, he is questioned at length and the magistrate revises the charges if necessary before formalizing them.

Hooker Bridge Opens

Following a routine inspection by city engineers, the Hooker Road Bridge across Green Mill Run opened today.

Workers finished their final efforts over the weekend, placing guard rails along the sides of the concrete box culvert.

Construction on the $193,000 project began July 15.

City Engineer Glen Whisler said the old bridge was considered to be structurally deficient and was subsequently selected to be improved under the federal bridge replacement program.

"It's general condition was such that it met the criteria to be replaced," Whisler said.

He said the federal program, which is administered by the state DOT, pays 80 percent of the replacement cost with the city paying the remaining 20 percent.

The Wilson-based S.T. Wooten Construction Company was the contractor for the project.

Whisler said the new bridge will require little maintenance and will accommodate the future widening of Hooker Road.

He estimated approximately 5,000 cars will travel on the new bridge daily.

Rejuvenated Miriam Threatens Salvador

By Marcos Aleman
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — The government declared a state of emergency and evacuated residents from flood-prone coastal areas in the path of a tropical storm that re-energized in the Pacific today after killing 111 people as an Atlantic hurricane.

In Nicaragua, the storm killed at least 50 people and left 300,000 homeless as it crossed the Central American isthmus, its 125 mph winds weakening to tropical storm status along the way.

But the storm gained strength over the warm waters of the Pacific. Forecasters gave what had been Joan a new name, Miriam, and said it could become the first Atlantic hurricane to gain the same status in the Pacific.

"We are ready for it," declared Interior Minister Edgardo Beloso Funes as rains began falling in southeastern El Salvador. He said a hurricane last struck El Salvador in 1934.

At 5 a.m. EDT, Miriam's center was just off the coast about 25 miles southeast of San Jose, Guatemala, with maximum sustained winds near 55 mph, said the National Weather Service in Miami.

It said the storm was centered at latitude 13.7 north, longitude 90.6 west and was moving west-northwest at 10 mph. It was expected to continue in that direction for the next 24 hours.

Tropical storm warnings covered the Pacific coast of El Salvador and Guatemala. Flash flood and mud slide warnings also were in effect in both countries.

"As soon as it got over the water offshore, it started to strengthen again," said weather service forecaster Randy Lascody in Miami.

Officials closed the international airport in El Salvador on Sunday and ordered all oceangoing vessels to remain in port.

Gen. Carlos Vides Casanova, the defense minister, said residents of flood-prone coastal areas in the eastern provinces of La Union, San Miguel and Usulután were being moved inland. Armed forces units were on alert to assist the evacuations, he said.

Heavy rains fell in southwestern Honduras along the Gulf of Fonseca Sunday morning before tapering off, weather officials there said. The government reported no flooding or evacuations.

The Honduran Red Cross said one fisherman was reported missing in the gulf, which is shared by El Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua.

Hurricane Joan left 21 dead in Costa Rica, four in Panama, 25 in Colombia, and 11 in Venezuela on its six-day rampage along the Caribbean coast and then across Nicaragua to the Pacific Ocean.

In Nicaragua, authorities labored to restore communications and care for the homeless. The Sandinista government said it would make a full evaluation of the destruction today and appealed for international aid.

Cuban planes carrying doctors and the first shipments of food and medicine arrived in Managua and the devastated Caribbean port of Bluefields on Sunday.

Bluefields' mayor, Henningston Omeir, appealed for urgent aid while in London Sunday, saying the economy was already in trouble before the storm.

Nicaraguan officials said 21 died in and around Bluefields, 180 miles east of Managua. The city of about 38,000 was 90 percent destroyed

Harris said investigators were told that one of the men — allegedly the brother of the other — got out of the car and walked off, then the woman was assaulted by the other.

The detective said the victim, following the attack, jumped out of the car near the intersection of Charles and Greenville Boulevards, returned to the ECU campus and reported the incident to police about 4:28 a.m.

Farm Scene

By Philip Rowan

As the weather gets cooler and cool-season grazing is not available, many livestock producers will turn to hay as the primary winter feedstuff of their cattle. Extension agents are often asked how much hay is needed to meet the nutrient requirements of cattle or horses. There is no direct answer to that question because it all depends on the quality of the hay.

While one can visually estimate the quality of the hay, the most practical way to determine the nutrient content of the hay is through chemical analysis. This can be done by sending a sample to the NCDA forage testing lab in Raleigh. The lab tests forages for dry matter, protein, TDN, net energy, calcium, phosphorus and other minerals. With this knowledge of the nutrients in hay or forage, a producer can feed the correct amount of hay and supplement or other needed feeds.

The hay that is generally of the optimum quality is one that is cut early (before blossom or heading). Hay that is cut in the seed stage may yield high but will be of poor quality and very stemmy.

When judging hay visually, look for hay that is leafy, very soft and pliable. Harsh, brittle hay that is stemmy is usually high in fiber and low in digestibility for livestock. Hay should be of the natural green color of the crop from which it was cut. Brown or black hay has most likely been rained on or has been out in the weather too long. Hay should have a clean, "crop odor," and not be moldy, overly dusty or musty. It should be free of trash weeds, dirt and other foreign material.

Livestock producers should also remember that hay quality deteriorates with storage, especially if stored outside in the open. When hay is stored outside, it should be on a well-drained site and up on pallets if possible. If covering is not possible, stack hay bales so they will shed water.

Rand Sees Parallels In Legislature, Practicing Law

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

THOMASVILLE, N.C. — For the typical politician, it's an asset to have a successful career away from government — to be regarded as a good businessman or educator or lawyer.

But not always. Consider state Sen. Tony Rand, the Democratic nominee for lieutenant governor. A defense attorney from Fayetteville, he's under attack from the political opposition for representing drug dealers, sex offenders and other sordid characters.

And he doesn't appreciate it.

"People don't like lawyers until their kid gets charged with something and then they want the best," he said. "I've defended a lot of bad guys, yeah. I've always felt the system doesn't work unless both sides do a good job. Depending on how well you perform, you can affect someone's life in a rather drastic way."

Rand, 49, sees parallels between the courtroom and the halls and committee rooms of the Legislative Building, where his influence has grown rapidly in the seven years since he became a senator.

"I'm interested in human nature, what motivates people to do things," Rand said. "Nowhere do you see that — in a raw sense — more than in the courts, and the Legislature is that way, too."

"And then, so much of criminal law is negotiating, trying to arrive at a consensus, and that's the essence of legislating."

The son of an electrical contractor from Garner, Rand was appointed to fill a Senate vacancy in 1981. It was the fulfillment of a dream spawned nearly 30 years earlier when, as a 13-year-old student he spent nine weeks as a state House page.

His fascination in politics dovetailed with his interest in practicing law — "the only thing I remember wanting to do after I gave up on being a cowboy." He attended the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. A classmate was future law partner and congressman Charlie Rose.

To a degree, Rand is a paradox. A protege of Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan, he's a leader of a younger generation of Democratic senators who have pushed to open the Legislature and spread the power.

Yet he's a member of the "super-subcommittee" — the eight-member leadership group that in past years has assembled the state budget in private — and is a skillful backroom operator.

"Tony has the image of the rough-and-tumble insider," said Sen. Charles Hips, D-Haywood, a close friend.

He also has a knack for making the right connections.

As a legislative page, he struck up a friendship with newly elected legislator Tom White, who would become a powerhouse. White took Rand under his wing — "taught me some valuable lessons," he said.

As a freshman senator, Rand caught the eye of colleague Bob Jordan, who was elected lieutenant governor in 1984. Jordan gave Rand the prized chairmanship of the Base Budget Committee. In 1987, Rand succeeded another mentor — Sen. Kenneth Royall, D-Durham — as majority leader.

Not surprisingly, some of Rand's biggest legislative achievements have involved criminal law. What has surprised some observers is that the bills have made life tougher, not easier, for lawbreakers.

He sponsored measures to allow convening of special grand juries to investigate drug trafficking, to allow telephone wiretaps in drug probes, and to abolish early release of drug traffickers. He promises if elected to fund 50 more prosecutors, 250 additional local law enforcement officers and six more judgeships.

Rand is supported by 31 of North Carolina's 36 elected district attorneys, but he was criticized by a former federal prosecutor this month for having a drug dealer's property removed from a Wilmington hotel room in 1977. An enraged Rand said he had done nothing improper and that the former official, a Republican, was politically motivated.

A stocky six-footer, Rand has black hair with a touch of gray and a beefy face. He wears wire-rimmed glasses. In a concession to the political image makers, he's abandoned the Dutch Masters cigars that were his trademark.

He's not a polished speaker in front of television cameras, and admitted disappointment with his uneven performance in an Oct. 2 debate against Republican nominee Jim Gardner.

But in conversation, his dry sense of humor and booming laugh can be captivating.

On a recent day on the campaign trail, Rand related how he was born Sept. 1, 1939 — the day Germany invaded Poland and launched World War II. His uncle, a physician, delivered Rand while listening to the latest radio news bulletins.

"He tried to get my mama to name me Adolf," Rand said with a short burst of mirth. "Funny guy. Would've done wonders for my political career."

Rand travels in an Oldsmobile that has taken him from coast to mountains in quest of the state's second-ranking office. On a particular day, he's en route from Raleigh to Republican-leaning Davidson County.

His wife, Karen, is in the front seat. A first-grade teacher, she is on leave to help with the campaign — particularly in the education community.

Rand has the backing of the 47,000-member N.C. Association of Educators and has promised if elected to seek better teacher pay, continued funding of the Basic Education Program and other school initiatives.

He also has outlined a 10-point plan for a more open Legislature, a highway construction agenda featuring a $1 billion bond issue, and a $31 million anti-drug program.

He spends the morning dashing to all five schools in the Thomasville system, shaking hands with teachers and administrators and talking politics with an eighth-grade civics class. He asks for opinions on the federal deficit and is greeted with blank stares. "What's that?" a girl asks.

On the local community college, where Rand gets a friendly reception from faculty members. He gobbles a hamburger in the cafeteria, chats with students and places telephone calls, one to a Raleigh reporter who informs him that Gardner has accused him of opposing tougher anti-drug laws because he's a defense attorney.

"That just burns me up," he says as he strides toward the car, fists thrust into his pants pockets. "For him to demean the profession that way ... it's just outrageous."

Rand tours a Baptist day care center and children's home. Inside the nursery, someone hands him a baby. "Don't cry, son; you'll blow the whole campaign," Rand draws as newspaper photographers snap pictures.

After rushing back to the community college to address a local NCAE chapter meeting, Rand heads for nearby Lexington. He has an appointment with Paul "Jaybird" McCrary, the soft-spoken but politically savvy Davidson County sheriff.

McCrary accompanies Rand to a $25-per-couple reception at a local beer distributorship. About 200 people, many just getting off work, pack into an office suite to meet the candidate and enjoy a sumptuous spread — crabmeat, grilled sausages, raw vegetables, melons.

It's getting dark as the reception ends, but the campaigning isn't over. Rand, McCrary and their wives head for the county fair, where they spend the next three hours working the crowds — "grip-pin and grinnin'," politicians call it.

Rand is in high spirits as the Oldsmobile heads toward Raleigh, even though it's nearly midnight. He munches popcorn and swaps courtroom war stories with his driver, a retired federal marshal. But Gardner's salvo is still on his mind.

"That's why people don't want to run for public office," Rand says reflectively. "You just shouldn't have to put up with that."

Gardner: Losses Taught Him A Lesson

JIM GARDNER

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOUNT AIRY, N.C. — Jim Gardner says he's less "cocky" than in the 1960s, when he burst onto the political scene by upsetting a 30-year congressional veteran and nearly became North Carolina's first Republican governor this century.

The reason why is no mystery. Over the past two decades, the Republican nominee for lieutenant governor has embodied the old adage that what goes up must come down.

He rocketed to success in business as co-founder of the Hardee's hamburger chain and owner of the Carolina Cougars professional basketball team. Then his financial world collapsed in the 1970s. The gasoline crisis hit just as he was pouring money into a new hotel chain and real estate ventures, which flopped.

He acknowledges he's still paying off debts but won't disclose how much he owes or his net worth.

On the political side, Gardner — who some viewed as a budding GOP superstar in the 1960s — dropped out of sight after two unsuccessful bids for governor.

Now he's on the comeback trail. His only business is a chain of 11 mesquite barbecue restaurants, which he says is doing well.

And polls show him ahead in his bid for the state's second-ranking office.

"I'm a competitive person," Gardner said. "I love to win but I know how to lose. You get in there and go as hard as you can and then you accept the decision. ... That's what losses in politics and the hard business knocks taught me — life won't end if you lose."

Some of Gardner's former creditors have forgiven him and support his candidacy, but his Democratic rival, state Sen. Tony Rand, isn't so charitable.

"If you're not able to handle your own affairs ... it does say something about your skills," Rand said. He and others contend that Gardner cannot be trusted to help compile North Carolina's $10 billion annual budget — one of the lieutenant governor's main tasks.

Despite Gardner's problems, state GOP leaders have welcomed his return to the political arena. Indeed, without their entreaties he probably would not have run.

He says he was preoccupied with his barbecue business when a longtime friend and GOP activist, Rudolph Jones, telephoned to urge Gardner to enter the race.

"I told him I wasn't even remotely interested," Gardner said. But when he attended the 1987 state GOP convention to second the nomination of his longtime friend, Jack Hawke, for state party chairman, "it seemed like everybody was coming up and asking me to run for lieutenant governor."

His wife, Marie, didn't like the idea but eventually gave in after Gardner became convinced that "if I didn't do it, I'd sit around the rest of my life wondering if I could have won."

Gardner formally entered the race Jan. 14 with a blistering attack on the Democratic "powerbrokers" who run the General Assembly. His statement set the tone for his campaign, which has portrayed him as a reformer waging the people's battle against an entrenched, self-serving clique of Democratic bosses.

The man who railed against the press in the 1960s has become an outspoken advocate of open government. Gardner says if elected he'll push for all General Assembly committee meetings to be open. He calls for dismantling the system under which legislators are awarded thousands of dollars for projects in their districts, which critics deride as "pork barrel" spending.

He has called for stricter punishment of drug dealers and for a new state law-enforcement agency devoted entirely to fighting drug trafficking.

Gardner repeatedly spoke of drugs as he toured two schools in Winston-Salem this month during a long day of campaigning.

"It's a bad thing and those are very bad people," he told about 35 fifth-graders at Kimberly Park Elementary School.

Gardner's distinguished appearance serves him well. He's of medium height and slim, with white hair and a year-round tan, and speaks with a soft Southern accent. He often delivers speeches without prepared text or notes.

"He's got more charisma than I've ever seen on the stump, bar none," said former Gov. Jim Holshouser, who upset Gardner in the 1972 Republican gubernatorial primary.

Like many North Carolina Republicans, Gardner grew up a Democrat — influenced by his father, a dairyman who started in business during the Depression.

Gardner switched to the GOP in 1963, convinced the Democratic Party was drifting leftward. In 1964 he ran for Congress in what then was the 4th District, inspired by Barry Goldwater, whom Gardner still calls a hero. He was an early disciple of Ronald Reagan and seconded his last-minute presidential nomination at the GOP Convention in 1968.

Gardner lost to Democratic Rep. Harold Cooley in 1964, but sent shock waves through state political circles by defeating Cooley two years later. Any hopes of a lengthy career in the House were dashed when the Democrat-dominated General Assembly redrew the state's congressional district map, moving Gardner into a district with popular Rep. L.H. Fountain.

"I couldn't believe they'd do that," he said. "I thought the American system was you give the people a choice and don't try to overrule their decision."

Deciding he couldn't beat Fountain, Gardner decided to run for governor. He spent little time in Washington thereafter, an issue Rand has raised in television commercials pointing out that Gardner missed 56 percent of the roll-call votes in 1968. Gardner says his frequent absences were justified because he spent lots of time in his district, where he opened several new offices.

He made a better showing than Republicans had been accustomed to in the gubernatorial race, but still lost by 4 percentage points to Democrat Bob Scott.

It appeared that Gardner's prospects might improve in 1972, with Richard Nixon seeking re-election. But although he finished first in the GOP primary, Gardner was shocked in the runoff by Holshouser, who went on to become North Carolina's first Republican governor this century.

It was no laughing matter at the time, but Gardner jokes about his loss now as he warns audiences to take nothing for granted.

"I was all ready to go to the Governor's Mansion and I did — but only to pour punch at Holshouser's reception," he said.

Gardner's political career was over — or so it appeared. He decided to devote full time to business. That's when the trouble started.

He and a partner, Leonard Rawls, had purchased a hamburger restaurant from Wilbur Hardee in 1962, launching what would become a fast-food giant. Gardner sold his interest in the company in 1970 and launched Family Inns of America, a chain of budget motels along Interstate 95.

But the gasoline crisis put a dent in the travel industry, and the venture failed.

Gardner says he believes voters won't reject him because of his past failures.

Which of These Children Will Fall Victim to Drugs?

They're nice kids from a family like yours, but one in six will soon try cocaine, crack or pot.

Let's force the politicians in Raleigh to stop playing games with our children's future. Bill Dansey is committed to a seven-point program to remove drugs from our streets.

- Increase the number of SBI agents fighting drugs to at least 100.
- Double the money available for undercover and sting operations by state and local agents.
- Impose mandatory life sentences for drug trafficking.
- Restore funding to build a new state crime lab.
- Abolish parole and gain-time credits for convicted drug traffickers.
- Make drug trafficking one of the aggravating factors a jury should consider in recommending the death penalty for first-degree murder.
- Pursue and prosecute habitual drug users as felons.

It's time for a change in Raleigh. The children are counting on us. Elect Bill Dansey to the North Carolina Senate.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Unacceptable

Adequate Jail Space Is Basic

There are many reasons for overcrowding in a jail, but none of them are acceptable.

Neither are the symptoms of overcrowding — disorganization, disorder and dirt. All these things add up to diminished security, and that's what's most discomforting about the problems of the Pitt County Jail.

The jail is jam-packed with inmates. The statistics prove it. The facility holds 84. On a typical day last week 109 prisoners were housed in it. And that's normal.

In addition, when a grand jury toured the jail last week, it found dirt, inadequate lighting and no place to store housekeeping essentials like mops and brooms. Used meal trays are often left in the aisles, and inmates track leftover food through the facility. These are all tangible reasons for Pitt's county commission to put construction of a law enforcement center — complete with new jail — at the top of its agenda.

While county leaders should be recognized for the attention placed on the jail's problems in the past six months, and commended for renovating the satellite jail at the county office building for additional cell space, it should be noted the jail's predicament did not occur overnight.

The facility is essentially the same facility built in 1964. No major renovations or additions to jail space have been made. Pitt simply let the growth of the community — and a consequent growth in crime and lawbreaking — get ahead of planning. The community is a great deal larger, the legal and law enforcement systems are, by requirement, a great deal more vigorous than they were 24 years ago.

Yet jail space has remained unchanged. That oversight is clearly inadequate, and now Pitt's prisoners and criminal justice system are paying the price. Soon, the taxpayers will be asked to pay, too. They'll pay the cost of getting years behind on expansion.

Incarceration is the foundation on which the criminal justice system rests. Those accused of crimes must be detained until trial. Lawbreakers must be punished, and society must be protected from those committing dangerous and violent crimes.

But prisoners deserve decent conditions. Certainly, cleanliness and organization are two of the basics. Overcrowding can compromise the physical security of the jail by encouraging dissatisfaction and disruption. It can also create behavior problems which consequently prompt security worries.

Pitt's situation is simply not acceptable. Neither are short-term solutions. Spending tax money on a jail isn't the kind of fancy project that draws a lot of attention. It isn't the kind of capital expenditure most citizens point to with pride and boast about. But it's a basic, and in Pitt County, it has to be done.

Redirect Energy

Neighbors Can Learn By Example

There are all kinds of reasons why industry won't come to eastern North Carolina. Right?

Wrong. We know that is incorrect because Kinston and Lenoir County, faced with stagnant growth for a period of time, have gotten busy and attracted several prime industries of late. The most recent announcement involves the location of Lenox, Inc., makers of fine china in a 45,000 square foot building which was constructed to attract industry.

Kinston and Lenoir leaders were determined to improve their image as a place to live and work. They won All-America cities designation this year and clearly have been hard at work in industrial procurement.

That is only positive for eastern North Carolina. Kinston took nothing away from neighboring cities. Instead it is adding payroll which never existed. There will be direct economic benefit to Kinston and Lenoir counties, of course. But also the new jobs will increase the economic base of all eastern North Carolina.

Eastern North Carolinians are expert at hand wringing over the futility of improving our economic plight. Kinston is showing us that if we use some of that handwringing energy to improve our economy we can work wonders. We like to believe we are excluded from the political power centers of the state, but we can elbow our way in if we but use our resources.

We have the leadership to attract industry and improve our economic outlook. Kinston is showing its neighbors what can be done when the situation calls for it. It's neighboring communities can learn by example.

To the editor:

How sad that, not only you missed the "real message" in your editorial comment about the life of David Thompson, but also all those persons who read only your editorial after having missed the news article by Cherie Evans have also missed it.

Your editorial titled "The Story: The Lesson's in the Ending" totally failed to give the story. However, Ms. Evans' article did contain the story ... in the fourth and fifth paragraphs from the end.

The "real message" which eluded your grasp is that David Thompson most likely would still be in prison or in the grave or still ingesting drugs and nearing his grave, had he not accepted Jesus Christ into his life.

How can I say this? Because I know that I would be one of those places had I not accepted Christ as the "real message" of my life.

To the editor:

I read this recently and would like to share it with Reflector readers:

If the world were a global village of 100 people, 70 of them would be unable to read and only one would have a college education. Over 50 would be suffering from malnutrition and over 80 would live in what we call substandard housing.

If the world were a global village of 100 residents, six of them would be Americans. These six would have half of the village's entire income and the other 94 would exist on the other half. How would the wealthy six live "in peace" with their neighbors? Surely they would be driven to arm themselves against the other 94 ... perhaps even to spend, as we do, more per person on military defense than the total per-person income of the others.

An Equal Obligation To The Truth

WASHINGTON — Of Nancy Reagan and her dresses I can summon no indignation. In a world of famine and drought, poverty and war, her gowns are a trivial matter and, moreover, the fact that the First Lady is a clothes horse is not new. What is new is that she did what she said she would not do and the White House tried to trivialize what she had done.

"She set her own little rule and she broke her own little rule," Mrs. Reagan's press secretary said. We see. Women, like children, cannot always be expected to tell the truth.

Had that statement not come from a woman, Elaine Crispin, and the press secretary to the first lady of the land at that, it would have been denounced as sexist. It's the sort of thing men sometimes say — a belittling way of speaking about women that presumes they don't have the brains to recognize a breach of ethics. Why silly of me. Did I borrow those dresses?

But Mrs. Reagan knew precisely what she was doing. Having promised in 1982 to report such gifts or loans on the Reagans' financial disclosure statement, she broke her word. Some of the gowns were worth an estimated $15,000 — about as much as a car — and the loan of them needed to be disclosed, the White House counsel told Mrs. Reagan in 1982.

Think of what would have happened had a male government official, having promised never to borrow cars from, say, GM or Ford went ahead and did so. Time magazine, which broke the story, says it has over 300 pictures with Mrs. Reagan wearing expensive gowns. Time calculated their value. If Mrs. Reagan looked like a million bucks it's because the gowns were worth about that.

The designers surely benefited from having Mrs. Reagan wear their costly creations. But we are not talking about missile systems or huge payoffs. Galanos, Adolfo and others who, like Prince and Fabian, have no last name are not about to do business with government agencies — nor will the average woman be beating down their doors. Their creations are what the British call "dear" — what my mother would call "real drop-dead dresses." Mrs. Reagan sang "Second Hand Rose" some Gridiron Dinners-ago, but used, pre-owned or just plain secondhand, this stuff would require a second mortgage.

No. The issue is candor, honesty and even entitlement. About Mrs. Reagan's candor we now have cause to wonder. She said she would list the dresses borrowed. She didn't. She says she returned them all. Some of the designers say that's news to them. And she suggests by what she did that she has an elephantine sense of entitlement — that as first lady these goodies are due her no matter what anyone thinks or she once said.

Mrs. Reagan's sense of entitlement is apparently so great that she would break her word to get what she thinks she deserves. The gowns may be gorgeous, but they are not worth her good name.

Ironically, it took Mrs. Reagan to vindicate the sexism of her old nemesis, Donald Regan. It was her husband's former chief of staff who suggested women didn't have the brains to understand arms control issues ("throwweight" was beyond them) and they would resent South African sanctions if it deprived them of their diamonds. That characterization of women as ninny who can't tell the important from the trivial has been borne out in this case. Break your word for an evening gown? The first lady has done it — unable, it seems, to just say no.

At the heart of the feminist movement is a truth: that women and men are not the same, but equal. That means that women and men have an equal obligation to tell the truth — and it applies even to the question of age. Mrs. Reagan, establishing a pattern, was coy about her age, forgetting a year or two when it suited her purpose. That's her womanly prerogative, we were told. Nonsense. When Gary Hart did the same thing he was criticized for it. Speaking just for myself, I cannot take seriously a woman who lies about her age.

True to form, the Reagan White House now wonders if the dark hand of partisan politics did not slip Time magazine the story. "The fact that we're still reading about this in 1988 makes me think about political timing," Crispin said. Alas, nothing about the Dukakis campaign leads us to believe it would have either the imagination or the brass to leak such a story. But it does not matter how Time got the story — just that it's true.

As the polls indicate, the Reagan administration has never been considered anything more than tolerant towards the aspirations of women. But the worst rebuff to the women's movement has not come from a policy decision but from the first lady. Through her spokeswoman, she has all but proclaimed that women do not have to tell the truth.

I'll think about that tomorrow.

Firm Ties Behind Bluster

G.H. Jansen

DAMASCUS, Syria — The close and continuing cooperation between the United States and Syria on Lebanon is a fine example of how, in diplomacy, there can quite deliberately be a wide gap between illusion and reality, between declaratory policy and action policy.

The general impression — the illusion — is that the United States and Syria are — and have been — at loggerheads for some time; at one point the U.S. Embassy in Damascus was shut down and at another the U.S. ambassador was withdrawn. After all, Syria is still on the U.S. list of "terrorist" governments.

The perception is that the Soviet Union is Syria's best and most important friend on the international level. In terms of action policy, the reality is very different indeed. Discreetly, almost underground, the U.S. Embassy here has always had a useful and friendly relationship with the Syrian regime — that is to say, with the Foreign Ministry and, more important, with the office of President Hafez Assad.

What divides the United States from Syria, of course, is Israel. Syrian leaders and the Syrian media never cease denouncing Washington as the main supporter — actually the main client — of Israel. The principal source of Syrian hostility to "the Zionist entity," as they call it, is that Israel seized Syrian territory in the Golan Heights in 1967 and holds it today. Syrians profoundly doubt that the United States would ever exert enough pressure on the Israelis to make them vacate the territory. Yet whenever there are anti-Israel demonstrations in Damascus, during which anti-U.S. slogans may be shouted, the demonstrators are kept well away from the U.S. Embassy. Damascus is one of the few Arab capitals where that favorite target, the premises of U.S. Information Service, have not been attacked.

The U.S.-Syrian balancing act

about Lebanon began in 1976. In the course of the Lebanese Civil War, a combination of Arab nationalists, Moslems, Druse and leftists were on the point of defeating the pro-Western, pro-Israel Maronite Christians. Fearing victory by the militants — erstwhile allies — Syria totally reversed policy and sent its army into Lebanon to defeat recent friends and rescue former enemies.

But since there are no permanent enemies, Washington and Damascus having been working hard and closely in the past six months to work out a Lebanese consensus on a presidential candidate to succeed Amin Gemayel. These joint efforts — Syrians advising the Moslem-leftist coalition and Americans managing the Maronite Christians — have not succeeded. Now there is no president in Lebanon but there are two prime ministers and perhaps two parliaments. There has also been some mutual recrimination about which side was responsible for the failure.

There have been further recriminations. The Syrians once again seemed stubborn and unknowing while they accused the Americans of failing to keep their side of the Daher bargain. Syria was supposed to quash militant Shias and Palestinians, which it did. The United States was to "deliver" Maronite acceptance of Daher, which it didn't.

The most encouraging factor in this gloomy situation is that the "terrorist" Syrians and the pro-Israeli Americans are still working together to have a consensus candidate elected as president of Lebanon. Now they are letting the Lebanese pick; the United States and Syria will then try to sell that choice to their respective clients.

The partnership is essential because the Lebanese at long last recognize they can't get themselves out of the mess they themselves have made.

Defense Of Decisions Must Be Well-Planned, Not Static

Kenneth Jost

WASHINGTON — The liberal Supreme Court justices who were so agitated this spring when their conservative colleagues moved to reconsider recent precedents expanding Reconstruction-era civil rights laws are rallying around a legal doctrine that is in large part a myth. It's called stare decisis in Latin — the doctrine that the Supreme Court doesn't change its mind, that a decision once made isn't reversed just because some new justices come along.

The truth, however, is far different. The Supreme Court has been reversing itself ever since 1810, and the number of about-faces has increased dramatically over the past few decades. In fact, since 1961 the high court has issued some 163 decisions that overruled its own precedents, either explicitly or in effect. That comes to almost six times a year — not an everyday occurrence, certainly, but often enough to belie the dire predictions of legal chaos if precedents are subject to periodic reconsideration.

The liberal justices who are raising the cry of stare decisis so loudly are running a greater risk than that of historical inaccuracy. They open themselves to a charge of rank hypocrisy, since they have often voted to overturn precedents they disagree with. And they may be misleading themselves and their supporters outside the court into believing that important precedents expanding individual rights and promoting social equality can be preserved without a full defense of them on their merits.

Indeed, judicial liberals — those who recognize a strong governmental role in policing the economy and a vital role for the courts in promoting individual rights and social equality — have been the winners in most of these recent reversals. In the late 1930s and 1940s, the court swept away legal roadblocks to full use of the federal government's powers under the Constitution's Commerce Clause and arbitrary restrictions on the taxing power of state and federal governments alike.

At the same time, the court became more responsive to arguments for religious freedom. The 1943 Pledge of Allegiance case that the country is debating so vigorously this year was a reversal of a ruling just three years earlier. In the same year, the court reversed itself in a rare reargument of a case and struck down a state license tax for dissemination of religious literature.

The Warren Court precedents establishing constitutional guarantees for racial equality and due process rights for criminal defendants are well known. Less well known perhaps is the fact that the liberalization continued in some respects during the Burger Court years — admittedly often over the dissent of Chief Justice Warren Burger and the man who now leads the court, Chief Justice William Rehnquist.

It was the Burger Court, for example, that barred states from automatically exempting women from jury duty — a 1975 ruling that overturned a 1961 Warren Court precedent. And it was the Burger Court that in 1986 forbade prosecutors from excluding potential jurors solely because of their race — reversing a 1965 Warren Court decision.

True, the pendulum has been swinging mostly against liberals in recent years on such issues as criminal procedure, free speech, antitrust policy, and state-federal relations. The individual decisions may be subject to debate, but it is hard for liberals to deny the wisdom of the late Justice William O. Douglas speaking as a member of the court in 1949 that stare decisis "must give way to the dynamic component of history."

Moreover, many of the high court's reversals have involved corrections of rulings that, with the passage of time, came to be recognized as legal mistakes. In 1986, for example, the court narrowed a ruling of just five years earlier that could have allowed every jail inmate in the country to turn a slip-and-fall case into a federal court suit. And earlier this year the court, by a unanimous vote, overturned a 53-year-old ruling that had been universally condemned for complicating the handling of suits brought simultaneously in state and federal courts.

William N. Eskridge Jr., an associate professor at Georgetown University Law Center who has documented the court's recent reversals of statutory rulings, argues strongly that the justices should actually give less deference to precedent and place greater weight on being right. He points to the court's 1922 decision giving antitrust immunity to professional baseball as a clear mistake that remains on the books today solely because of a misplaced reliance on stare decisis.

A more realistic approach to stare decisis doesn't mean that the conservative justices who want to narrow the 1866 civil rights law are right. The arguments for the 1968 and 1976 rulings applying that law to private racial discrimination are strong: the law is open to that interpretation, the congressional debate at the time is inconclusive on the point, and the new interpretation clearly accords with national policies embraced by presidents, Congress, the Supreme Court itself and the public at large. So as the high court considers the issue, stare decisis ought to be kept in its proper perspective as one reason for adhering to previous decisions, but no bar to a contemporary re-examination of legal rulings that might or might not have stood the test of time. That attitude will be important not just for this case but for cases to come. The conservative majority on the Rehnquist Court — even if it's not fortified by new allies in coming years — will have many opportunities to reconsider the expansive rulings on individual rights and social equality of the past 50 years. Justice Antonin Scalia, in particular, has shown no hesitation in urging reconsideration of precedent, and his keen intellect ensures that the arguments for overturning old rulings will be carefully marshaled and effectively presented to his colleagues.

In that context, it's important that the justices who are defending controversial decisions such as Miranda or Roe v. Wade do more than mechanically invoke a hoary legal doctrine.

Electronics Advances Key To Cheaper Star Wars

By Bryan Brumley
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Engineers in the Star Wars program say progress in miniaturized electronics is central to the Pentagon's recent estimate that the first phase of an anti-missile defense system would cost $69 billion rather than a previously forecast $115 billion.

To illustrate the point, John P. Peller of Rockwell International removes his tie clip and shows visitors that it is actually an "accelerometer," a measuring and computing device that 20 years ago would have filled a small room.

"We feel that we will have achieved success when we can bring all the hardware in the program in our tie tacks," said Peller, a Rockwell vice president in charge of the company's program to develop space-based weapons designed to smash enemy missiles.

Dozens of engineers and scientists involved in Star Wars, formally known as the Strategic Defense Initiative, made similar points, showing off tiny devices that are a fraction of cost, size and weight of earlier generations of technology.

Mass producing them in the quantities needed for Star Wars would drastically cut costs, the same way it has cut the prices of consumer electronic devices such as computers and stereo systems.

Among the cost and size reductions cited by Peller were an inertial measurement unit, down from 40 pounds and $70,000 to six ounces and $8,000, and a rocket thruster down from 19 pounds and $150,000 in the 1960s to one-tenth of a pound and $20,000 today.

Reduced weight means that a system is easier and cheaper to launch and keep in orbit.

And in an era of tight budgets, a $69 billion program may be easier to sell than one costing twice that.

But the drop in the estimated price has not calmed Capitol Hill fears that Star Wars will not work.

Rep. John M. Spratt, D-S.C., of the House Armed Services Committee said he was unsure that "costs can be cut by half without eroding performance."

"This system might actually be more fragile" than the earlier, costlier system, Spratt said during an Oct. 6 hearing at which SDI officials explained the change.

Furthermore, deployment of space-based defenses would break the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty, and unless it is part of a detailed arms control framework, would unleash a new round in the arms race as the superpowers hurried to deploy defensive as well as offensive weapons.

Reagan administration officials say SDI research, funded at $4.1 billion for fiscal 1989, will allow a decision in the mid-1990s on whether to develop an anti-missile defense, with deployment in the late 1990s or early 21st century.

Kremlin leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev has acknowledged that the Soviets are working on a parallel program. Pentagon analysts say that the Soviets are spending billion of rubles annually on anti-missile defenses, and are ahead in such areas as laser development.

After President Reagan launched SDI in March 1983, public debate centered on whether exotic defenses such as lasers could form a defensive umbrella to protect the continental United States from Soviet missiles.

The $69 billion system outlined by scientists and engineers is considerably less ambitious, and has the goal of knocking down about 30 percent of the Soviets' more than 10,000 warheads, denying them the certainty of being able to destroy the U.S. nuclear arsenal in a "bolt from the blue" attack.

Scientists and engineers at the national weapons laboratories, Rockwell and other defense contractors are hard at work developing a two-tier system which would include one layer of anti-missile missiles based on the ground and another parked aboard satellites in low orbit, less than 180 miles high.

Edward Teller, the atomic physicist credited with planting the seed of SDI in Reagan's mind, was initially skeptical of the so-called "kinetic kill vehicles" which destroy warheads by running into them. He had originally called for a space-based defense using more exotic technology, in particular the X-ray laser, powered by nuclear weapons exploded in space.

But now Teller is leaning toward a kinetic, or collision, system which would rely neither on nuclear weapons nor on nuclear reactors in space.

"Progress in miniaturization, in the development of good sensors, and in the realm of advanced computation, this made it possible to make the kinetic energy component small and less expensive," said Teller, 80, known as the father of the hydrogen bomb.

The Pentagon's current plans for a Phase One deployment, Teller said in an interview, would be an important "gateway" to a more complete and advanced system later.

The first elements of the system to go into orbit will be about 10 Boost Surveillance and Tracking Systems (BSTS). Air Force satellites costing about $400 million apiece. Starting in the mid-1990s, these satellites are expected to perform a variety of reconnaissance and communications missions not immediately linked to Star Wars, said Mel R. Brashears, head of the BSTS program at the Lockheed missiles and space company in Sunnyvale, Calif.

If Congress and the administration agree to deploy an anti-missile system, more BSTS satellites can be added to give early warning of Soviet rocket launches, said Brashears.

On The Road Again Migrants Pull Up Stakes

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FAIRFAX, Va. — Hundreds of migrant workers who spent the summer living in tents near the nation's capital are pulling up stakes as campground closings force them back to the high unemployment of their home states.

Officials, meanwhile, hope to find housing alternatives before next summer's anticipated crush of workers seeking the region's plentiful construction jobs but who can't afford its expensive housing. Rental units in Fairfax County average $662 a month.

"This problem is not going away," said Rep. Bob Wise, D-W.Va., who met this summer with West Virginia constituents living in a northern Virginia park.

"I strongly feel that the problem has to be a shared responsibility with the private sector," said Verdia L. Haywood, deputy executive for human services in Fairfax County.

The migrants, mostly from West Virginia but also from Ohio, Kentucky and Texas, spent the summer on the move because of a Fairfax County rule that requires campers to vacate a campground for at least four days after a maximum seven-day stay.

Linda Nolan said she, her boyfriend, her 17-year-old daughter and her 3-year-old grandson moved 33 times in seven months to comply with the regulation.

They will move a 34th time — back to West Virginia's hills — when the Burke Lake Park campground closes for winter next weekend.

She said she faces a winter of mostly unemployment or low-paying jobs back home, but at least her rent will be $100 a month.

Fairfax Vice Chairwoman Martha Pennino said she wants the county to create a Citizens Shelter Committee, which would report back to the Board of Supervisors with a plan in three months. She wants the business community involved in the committee and has proposed placing residential trailers at construction sites where many of the workers are employed. She also proposed relaxing the seven-day camping limit, which is aimed at discouraging people from living in the parks.

Some help has materialized. One builder offered reduced rent if migrant workers would help him renovate a house; families also were "adopted" by churches, said Linda Crouch, a Department of Social Services worker.

Nolan, 38, said she will miss her job at Betty's Azalea Ranch and her $5.30-an-hour salary after she returns to Burton, W.Va. She said she worked seven days a week as a laborer "to get every penny I can."

She's had her fill of eating her meals on picnic tables, but proud that doing so has enabled her to repay a bank loan.

"We don't have that hanging on us now," she said. "It was worth it."

At Integon, We Measure With Very Small Scales

1988 has been an important year in the career of Integon Life's Waighty Scales.

Waighty earned the Chartered Life Underwriter (CLU) designation this year — a designation that is awarded only to those life insurance professionals who can pass a series of rigorous exams attesting to their knowledge of the industry.

Waighty was also named — for the eighth time in the nine years since entering the life insurance industry — as a member of the Million Dollar Round Table, the industry's most prestigious achievement club. He adds this honor to the eight times he's received the National Sales Achievement Award and the seven times he's earned the National Quality Award. He was named Integon's only representative to Insurance Sales magazine's All-Star Honor Roll in 1986.

In July, Waighty clinched the honor of being one of the top three — among a field force of 1,100 — Integon representatives in the country. The honor earned him the title of Inner Circle Second Vice President, and represented the fifth time in as many years that Waighty has qualified for the Company's highest honor club, the Inner Circle. Less than one-half percent of the Company's field force qualifies for this honor.

On August 1, Waighty marked another milestone in his already impressive career — he assumed full responsibility as the General Agent for the Scales Agency. Not only will Waighty continue to help the citizens of Greenville develop sound insurance plans, he will now successfully run the business started by his father more than 40 years ago.

Integon Life is a leading provider of insurance to people across the country for many reasons. But one of the main reasons is Waightstill Morehead "Waighty" Scales III, CLU.

Bush Courts New England; Dukakis Heads West

By Robert Greene
THE ASSOCIATES PRESS

WASHINGTON — George Bush was hoping to distract Michael Dukakis in New England while the Massachusetts governor went after California's bounty of 47 electoral votes and his supporters claimed GOP campaign tactics were tinged with racism.

The vice president began 15 days of nonstop campaigning today with a trip to Waterbury, Conn., Portland, Maine, and Burlington, Vt.

Although the states are relatively poor in electoral votes, Bush campaign officials say he leads in all three states and his presence in the Northeast will force Dukakis to devote time and resources in an area that should otherwise belong to him.

"We're taking his base away from him," said Bush spokesman Mark Goodin.

Dukakis was spending the entire day in California, including stops in Los Angeles and San Francisco, in pursuit of that crucial state's 47 electoral votes.

Republican vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle was going to be accompanied by his mother, Corrine Quayle, during his first stop in Missouri. He was going on to Kentucky.

Democratic vice presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen was campaigning in Michigan, Missouri and Arkansas.

Dukakis, stopping Sunday night in Eau Claire, Wis., attacked the Republican ticket for what he called its "steady stream of distortion and misrepresentation."

Although Dukakis didn't mention it, campaign vice-chairman John Sasso said the candidate agreed with assertions by Bentsen and black leader Jesse Jackson that there were racist overtones to some Bush tactics.

Bentsen told a television interviewer he thought the Bush campaign was making a racist appeal by focusing on Willie Horton Jr., a black convicted murderer who escaped in 1986 from a Massachusetts prison furlough.

In 1987, Horton stabbed a white Maryland man and raped the man's fiancée. Horton is currently imprisoned in Maryland.

Asked on ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley" if use of the Horton case constituted "an element of Republican racist appeal," Bentsen replied: "When you add it up, I think there is, and that's unfortunate, and I just don't want to see this election won on that kind of packaging and that kind of distortions."

In Boston, Jackson avoided the word "racist" but said the Horton case was one of several "rather ugly race-conscious signals" sent out by the Bush campaign.

"There have been a number of rather blatantly race-conscious signals that have had the impact of instilling ungrounded fear in whites and alienation from blacks," Jackson said after a 90-minute breakfast he and other black political leaders had with Dukakis.

Goodin, the Bush spokesman, said that for Bentsen and Jackson "to insinuate that the furlough issue has racial overtones is absolutely ridiculous and stems from desperation politics."

Dukakis' meeting with the black leaders was the first such gathering since the Democratic convention, said Dukakis spokesman Mark Gearan. A session with Hispanic leaders was planned for Wednesday.

Jackson emerged from the meeting pledging to work harder for Dukakis, and on Sunday night in Atlanta, he delivered a speech calling Bush "one who runs against civil liberties, civil rights, women's rights, the poor and the homeless."

In other developments, a new poll conducted for the Dallas Morning News and the Houston Chronicle showed the Bush-Quayle ticket led the Dukakis-Bentsen ticket among likely Texas voters by 52 percent to 42 percent.

The survey of 776 potential voters, conducted between Oct. 17 and Oct. 20 had a margin of error of plus or minus four percentage points.

A poll by the Milwaukee Sentinel showed support for Dukakis slipping in Wisconsin. He was backed by 47 percent of the likely voters, compared with 45 percent for Bush. Dukakis had led 50-39 in August.

The telephone survey Oct. 14-18 of 687 likely voters had a four-point margin of error in either direction.

Nebraska's largest newspaper, The Omaha World-Herald, today endorsed Bush over Dukakis. The editorial cited Bush's experience as well as his stands on the issues.

Vincennes Comes Home To A Simple Welcome

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A "regular old homecoming" was planned to celebrate the return of the USS Vincennes less than four months after it mistakenly shot down an Iranian airliner, Navy officials said.

The Vincennes was slated to end its 180-day deployment by docking at its home port here today.

"It's going to be a big story, and we understand that, (but) it's a regular old homecoming we're planning," said Senior Chief Petty Officer Steve Hiney.

"Excited family members will be on the pier and excited sailors on the ship," Hiney said. "New fathers are going to be seeing new kids for the first time. The wives and girlfriends, mothers and fathers are going to be there."

The welcoming for the cruiser's 400-member crew was to include a Navy band and remarks by Rep. Bill Lowery, R-Calif., and William Rose, mayor of Vincennes, Ind. The city, like the ship, was named for a Revolutionary War battle.

Navy officials wanted to ensure that the crew's return from an extended deployment wasn't perceived by the public as "one of those Vietnam things with the ship coming in at midnight," said Navy spokesman Cmdr. David Dillon.

"We're inviting people to watch," he said. "People understand this was an arduous deployment. The sailors have a lot of public support."

Ending the Vincennes' tragedy-marred deployment with a "normal" greeting is the best way to smooth the sailors' reunion with their families and society, said Dr. Thomas Rusk, a clinical associate professor of psychiatry.

"These people did the best they could. It's terrific that they are being welcomed home just like anybody else," said Rusk, who also works with police officers involved in shootings and counseled Air Force personnel while in the service.

The Vincennes, equipped with the Navy's modern Aegis combat control system, accidentally downed the Iranian civilian aircraft over the Persian Gulf on July 3, killing all 290 people aboard.

The official Pentagon report concluded the crew mistook the airliner for an Iranian F-14 fighter jet and said crew members misinterpreted computer and radar data because of stress in their first combat situation. At the time, the Vincennes, was engaged in a firefight with several Iranian gunboats.

Lowery organized a volunteer effort that gathered 10,000 signatures and sent the messages of support to the crew in the Persian Gulf after the tragedy.

"I empathized with how low the crew, the officers and the skipper (Capt. Will Rogers III) were feeling," Lowery said. "I just wanted to let them know that we understood."

Special Scales

Waightstill Morehead "Booger" Scales Jr.

At Integon Life, Booger Scales has set the standard that other agents aspire to achieve.

In his 40 years with Integon, Booger has been one of the top three leading producers 32 times, the number four producer once and the number one producer 18 times — which represents more times than any other Integon agent in the history of the Company. Booger has been named a member of the industry's most prestigious honor club — the Million Dollar Round Table — 34 times. And he is the only agent at Integon to be named a Lifetime Member of the Inner Circle, the Company's highest honor club.

Part of an Integon agent's commitment to his clients is expressed in his commitment to his community. And Booger has proven that commitment many times. He has raised more than $5 million for various community and civic organizations in Greenville. He is the only person in Greenville to receive all four of that city's top community awards, and was recently named the Greenville and Pitt County area's best all-around citizen in a recent contest. He has a street named in his honor, the East Carolina University field house is named for him and, just this year, "Booger Scales Day" was declared.

On August 1, Booger Scales retired from Integon after 40 years of loyal service — loyal service underscored by the fact that during all those years, he never placed a policy with a company other than Integon.

Although officially retired, Booger is far from inactive. He continues to work with his son, Waight, as a consultant for the Scales Agency. And he has not slowed down in his efforts to make Greenville a better community for all.

Integon is not losing its number one agent, number one cheerleader, number one supporter.

On September 1, President of Integon Life Jerry Stovall, CLU, and Booger Scales entered into a lifetime contract agreeing that Booger will spread his message of Company loyalty — and the rewards from that loyalty, both personally and professionally — to Integon agents across the United States.

Integon Life is built on a firm foundation of strength, stability and innovation. And the cornerstone of that foundation is Waightstill Morehead "Booger" Scales Jr.

A federal commission may finally close the 126-year-old Fort Douglas military facility.

Politicians Won't Fuss If Aging Fort Is Closed

By Michael White
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SALT LAKE CITY — A U.S. commission looking to close obsolete military bases may be about to play taps for Fort Douglas, and politicians say they may be ready to surrender the post built in 1862 to protect stagecoach routes.

Members of Utah's congressional delegation consider the picturesque fort and its Civil War-era buildings a likely target in the Pentagon's quest to shut about two dozen bases.

They say they'll have to acquiesce if it can be shown that the move would save money, but some are skeptical that any real savings can be had.

"Our main concern is that they operate from up-to-date, accurate data," said Democratic Rep. Wayne Owens, whose district includes the fort.

"If the data is accurate and there's no indication of unfairness, then I don't know what I can do. You can't be for closing down everybody else's things, and not be willing to look at your own."

Congress this month approved legislation that calls for a Pentagon-appointed panel to recommend by Dec. 31 a list of bases to be closed. Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci would have until Jan. 15, five days before leaving office, to accept or reject the entire list. The law aims to save up to $5 billion a year.

Fort Douglas is among a small group of bases that critics have long contended contributes little to the nation's defense.

Built in 1862 in foothills between Salt Lake City and the Wasatch Mountains, the fort was named at President Lincoln's suggestion after his Illinois rival, Sen. Stephen A. Douglas, who died the year before.

Ostensibly built to protect stagecoach routes from Indian attacks, the fort's first commander, Col. Patrick Conner, acknowledged that he chose the foothills overlooking the city so he could keep an eye on Brigham Young's Mormon pioneers. He said they were too friendly with the Indians.

At one point, Conner sought to have Mormon merchants sign a loyalty oath to the United States before allowing them to sell goods to the fort.

In this century, the post housed prisoner-of-war camps in both world wars.

Politicians may be more willing to accept the closure now because the move probably would cost only a fraction of the 414 civilian jobs at the post. And the University of Utah is eager to absorb 112 buildings should the Army declare them surplus, officials say.

Nevertheless, Owens, who suggested the fort be closed two years ago, later decided after a visit it would be cheaper to maintain.

A 1981 congressional study requested by Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, after the Army announced plans to close the fort reached the same conclusion. It said that although the Army would save money by closing the post, heavy use by military reserve groups made Fort Douglas cost effective overall.

Garn said that conclusion still may be valid, and he said he would seek another independent study if the commission recommends closure.

Fort Douglas is home to 3,300 Utah reservists from the Army, Navy and Marine Corps, as well as headquarters for the 96th Army Reserve Command that oversees about 24,000 reservists in seven western states.

The fort also houses the office that disburse paychecks to reservists in 14 states, recruiting commands for the four services and a military examination center.

In contrast, the fort's headquarters command consists of only five active duty military and 62 civilian personnel.

If the fort were closed, the reserve units would remain and continue to require active-duty support, said post commander Col. Fred Hillyard.

"Fort Douglas accomplishes that in a very cost-effective manner and to do it another way might prove more costly," he said.

The fort's tenants pay only $2 a square foot for space, and they would almost certainly pay more anywhere else in the Salt Lake City area, said Maj. Bill Auer, an Army Reserves public relations officer.

Jim Abbee, spokesman for the Commission on Base Realignment and Closure that is studying military bases, said the panel will look at reserve activities when it reviews Fort Douglas. But he said there is no list of closure targets yet and one of the 12 commission members still must be appointed.

Study Cites B-1 Problems

By Tim Ahern
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Air Force's B-1 bombers are grounded with maintenance problems far more than the aging planes they are supposed to replace, says a congressional study.

The General Accounting Office study said the time that B-1s weren't available at Dyess Air Force Base in Texas due to maintenance problems ranged from 47 percent to 66 percent.

For systems that have been flying longer, such as the FB-111 and the B-52, the Air Force expects that the total of "not mission capable" rates won't exceed 25 percent of the available hours.

The Air Force responded to the figures by saying it won't have enough experience with the B-1 until 1994 to consider the plane "mature," as the FB-111 and B-52 are now considered.

Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, disagreed. "When the GAO suggested standards by which to judge the reasonableness of breakdowns, they were told the plane isn't mature yet. But its maturity is being pushed back further by breakdowns," he said.

Young Designer Working To Make Her Own Mark

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — With this week's start of the 1989 spring fashion shows, such names as Blass, Lauren, Trigere and Klein will be setting the look for the new season.

So will Sasso. That's Josephine Sasso, one of a legion of young fashion designers who work in New York City's pulsating garment district. She will gross almost $1.5 million this year. That's peanuts for the biggies, but it's triple her 1987 gross.

Ms. Sasso is a 26-year-old designer just beginning to break into one of the most competitive businesses in the world. She's no beginner, but neither is she a star — yet.

This year she'll show 30 new spring fashions. "I don't do runway shows because the cost is so prohibitive," she said. "I believe in building a sound business before spending a quarter of a million dollars for models, set designers, music, space and choreography for a full blown show."

Building a sound business means spending 10 hours a day in the office and waking in the middle of the night with an idea for a dress or with a question about the business itself.

"When I go out at night I get inspiration from seeing how women appear and represent themselves. They are my greatest inspiration because they are my customers."

"At Carnegie Hall, Lincoln Center, Au Bar, Canal Bar, Mortimers, a designer picks up a mood. With that in my head, I sit down and sketch."

Josephine Sasso puts her fashion philosophy this way: "The essential ingredient that makes a fashion statement is glamour — making someone feel good about themselves. One has one's everyday life and then one has a night life or going out life."

"Dressing up to go out gives people a chance to express themselves. Whether it's a luncheon, a dinner, going to the theater, a ball, or a party ... going out is all about romance.

"I design for a woman like myself who has a full workday as well as a full life outside work. I need dresses and suits that can take me from work to a luncheon or dinner, the theater or opera."

This is Josephine Sasso's third year in the turmoil of New York fashion. After art school in Rome and New York, she started designing in 1985. By 1987, she was doing $500,000 worth of business a year. Her payroll includes three to nine people, depending on the time of year.

Now her clothes are sold in 350 stores nationwide, including Saks Fifth Avenue, Neiman-Marcus and Lord & Taylor — right alongside Blass, Lauren, Trigere and Klein.

Young Push Candidates For Answers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Drug abuse, the quality of education, the economy, the homeless, nuclear war. All are on the minds of voters in this presidential election year. They are also on the minds of our nation's children.

Boys ages 7 to 11, as readers of G.I. Joe magazine, were asked what their No. 1 question would be if they could address George Bush and Michael Dukakis.

But some of the boys, rather than asking what the candidates would do to combat these problems, wanted to get a fix on the candidates' motives.

Bobby Mercer of Borger, Texas, and Matthew P. Tobias of Watertown, Wis., came right to the point: "Why do you want to be president?"

Ray Anthony Quiambao of El Paso, Texas, was likewise forthright: "Dear Candidates," he wrote, "Do you trust the Soviet Union?"

Danny Lane of Fort Meade, Fla., wrote: "I am 10 years old ... What do you plan to do to make our country a better and safer place to live when I am an adult?"

One youngster, whose letter had no return address and an illegible signature, asked a question covering both education and the economy:

"Why do you think that the teachers should get paid?"

Fall Color Bursts Out In Nation's Capital

By Henry Mitchell
LAT/WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Now should be just about the best time of the year for fall coloring of leaves in Washington, even though the rich amber oaks and smoldering beeches are still green.

The most dazzling of all American trees for fall color are the sour gums (or tupelos), which are members of the genus Nyssa. Their leaves are on the small side, oval and glossy. They turn brilliant crimson and "ripen," as you might say, into vermilion. The color is uniform. You may wonder, as I do, why they are so rarely planted.

The sweet gum is more variable. It is our paint-pot tree, and boasts purple and yellow on the same tree, along with tomato red and no telling what else. Individuals vary more than in sour gums or most other trees famous for fall coloring.

One of the commonest trees is the Norway maple, which turns a luminous canary yellow with a hint of green. When sunlight filters through this tree in October the result is magical. As this tree is often planted near houses, the reflected glow on interior white walls is well known to many.

The hickory is surprising in color, a deep tawny yellow, sometimes with brown streaks. Often if you examine a hickory leaf you will say it is rich in a way but not brilliant, and you would not expect it to show up well in a woodland. But no tree in a forest is more compelling in the fall, and few color effects are richer than hickories mixed with pines.

The hackberry is not a common tree, and some say it looks like a poor cousin of the elm. And often its leaves just turn dry rather than colorful. In some years, though, it turns an acid greenish yellow, chartreuse, and when that happens you may think it as beautiful as any tree in the world. The hackberries I knew personally only did this about one year in five.

The ginkgo turns solid yellow and the leaves drop all at once; that is, in two or three days. One afternoon the tree is glorious in golden leaf and the next morning almost bare. This endears it to people who sweep leaves. The tree remains in beauty for some days before the sudden leaf fall.

Formerly rare in gardens and now relatively common, the sourwood develops its fall beauty slowly. Just now it is rather a subdued crimson, ornamented with six-inch tassels from the faded flower clusters that are (at least remotely) like lilies of the valley. But these rich dull crimson leaves brighten a great deal and become brilliant, rivaling those of the wild persimmon, which can range into vermilion.

The sassafras, usually thought of as running about in low thickets, though it can make a substantial tree of 40 feet or so, has yellow and rosy purple in its mitten-shaped leaves. Again, this is a tree in which individuals vary in coloring (though the individual bears the same colors every fall).

In swamps to the south the bald cypress is beautiful at all times, and turns a kind of rust in the fall, usually not showy at all but agreeable in its way. Its cousin, the metasequoia (from China), turns lighter, a fawn color, sometimes with a hint of pink. Some have called it apricot color, but that suggests greater brilliance to me.

Among maples, none is more flashy than the sugar maple, which turns yellow and red and which seems to specialize in branches of a fiery tomato color. Equally beautiful is the red or swamp maple, which often colors a week or so later than the sugar maple.

The Japanese maples have been selected and propagated in several hundred garden varieties. None is more fiery than "Osakazuki," which turns solid uniform vermilion. The Japanese like to group these small trees in groves, and so do Westerners if they have the space.

The wild dogwood of eastern America, so famous for its white blooms in April, is crimson in October. If birds have not eaten the fruit, the scarlet berries at tips of the twigs are an added brightness.

Our native Virginia juniper, or red cedar, associates beautifully in its sober green plumes with all fall coloring, and if something darker and giving more striking contrast is wished for, the ordinary yews will serve.

Reassure Children If Marriage Ends

DEAR ABBY: As a divorced parent who was given joint custody of two children, I could write a book about what to do and what not to do, but I'll condense it:

- First, the Do's:
- Do allow your child to ask questions about your divorce. It's unfair to make the child feel like an outsider.
 - Do answer all their questions about your divorce as truthfully as possible, without making the other parent the "heavy."
 - Do remember that your children need the love of both parents.
 - Do assure your children that they are not to blame for your divorce.
 - Do encourage your children to talk freely about their feelings — even if it's painful to you. Bottling up emotions is even more damaging to children.
 - Do have a special place for the child's toys and belongings during visiting time. It will make the child feel more at home.
- Now, the Don'ts:

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

- Don't bad-mouth the other parent to your child, or to anyone else in the presence of your child.
 - Don't send messages to the other parent through the children.
 - Don't ask children to keep secrets from your ex-spouse.
 - Don't try to pump the children for information about your ex-spouse.
 - Don't be overly generous (or less strict) in an effort to win your child's approval.
 - Don't tell your children what to think or feel. They are entitled to their own thoughts and feelings.
- Sign me ... BEEN THERE IN ST. LOUIS

DEAR ABBY: The extent to which this younger generation thinks only of itself was demonstrated most painfully to me last week. My 28-year-old son announced that he was marrying a girl he had known for two years. I was very happy until he said he didn't want me to come to the ceremony. They wanted to be alone!

Since he is my only son, I suggested that it would be very meaningful for me to be there — that I didn't care how they got married, whether they had a large wedding or a small one, I just wanted to be there.

To my everlasting shame, my son told me that this was their business, and I wasn't to be present! I said nothing, nor have they called me since.

Am I stupid to be hurt? Somehow, I expected his fiancée to be more understanding of a woman's point of view, but she didn't say a word. Can you enlighten a stupid mother? — CRUSHED

DEAR CRUSHED: I am just as "unenlightened" as you about this mysterious affront. You say your son told you that he didn't want you to come to the ceremony — they want to be alone and this wedding was "their" business. One wonders why your son bothered to tell you he was getting married. Something is terribly wrong here.

There must be a reason for your son's cruel behavior. Should you find out why he behaved as he did, please enlighten this curious columnist.

President Daniel Ortega, asked whether the United States should send aid, replied, "The best humanitarian aid the United States could give us would be to stop its terrorist policies against Nicaragua."

Citing its civil war with U.S.-supported rebels, the Sandinistas recently enacted a law banning aid from the United States, but one official said the law would be waived for badly hit areas.

In Costa Rica, authorities said the storm destroyed 1,500 homes, severely damaged six hospitals and health centers forced the evacuation of 55,000 people. Schools and universities were to remain closed today.

Panamanian officials said 2,000 were left homeless and the Pan-American Highway remained closed in Panama for a third day Sunday because of mud slides.

Tass did not say how many ships were in the second group.

It was unclear what good the icebreakers could do in the shallow water near the whales. The ships need 39 feet of water to operate, Tass said, and the whales were trapped in water 12 to 25 feet deep.

Even if the icebreakers cannot reach the whales, the ships could help clear a path to open water about 200 miles away, Petersen said.

As high-tech heavy equipment poured into this whaling village during the weekend, Eskimos used chain saws and muscle to make the most progress toward freeing the animals.

"We're marching out to the lead with Inupiat (Eskimo) power," said Morris. "The whales are responding to the holes."

The breathing holes extend more than 1 1/2 miles from where the whales were first trapped.

The Eskimos connected several holes, converting them into a narrow pool 250 feet long to give the whales more room to rest. They made a similar slot in the ice over a shoal about 5 feet deep. The shoal apparently deterred the whales from moving farther toward open water.

The whales appeared to be in good health, although a patch of skin torn off one animal's snout appeared to be worsening, said Jim Harvey, Withrow's colleague.

Wallace Rallies In The End To Take 3rd Win In A Row Trying To Overtake Elliott For Winston Cup Title

ROCKINGHAM, N.C. (AP) — Rusty Wallace may be a long shot to overtake Bill Elliott for the NASCAR Winston Cup championship, but he's intent on giving it his best shot.

Wallace, in a Pontiac, came from two laps behind Sunday to win the AC-Delco 500 race at North Carolina Motor Speedway, beating Ford-driving Ricky Rudd by 12.3 seconds.

"We've won three in a row," Wallace said. "We can't do any more but lead the race and win them. I'm doing all I can do. I'm driving as hard as I can drive."

Wallace won the Oakwood Homes 500 two weeks ago in Charlotte, N.C., and the Holly Farms 400 last week in North Wilkesboro, N.C. He earned $52,150 for the win. The winnings made him the eighth driver in NASCAR history to win more than $1 million in a single-season. Wallace has $1,003,910.

The victory, combined with Elliott's fourth place finish, allowed Wallace to move to within 79 points of the lead in the season-long Winston Cup driving competition. Elliott has 4,198 points to Wallace's 4,119 with two races remaining.

There are two races left in the season — Nov. 6 in Phoenix, Ariz., and Nov. 20 in Atlanta.

Elliott can win the championship by finishing eighth or better in the final two races even if Wallace should win both.

Terry Labonte finished third and was the final driver on the lead lap.

Two-time defending Winston Cup points champion Dale Earnhardt was fifth, one lap down. He lost 10 points to Elliott in the season-long chase and trails by 198 points.

"We just need to run as good as we can the next two races and whatever falls, falls," Elliott said. "I don't want to give any points up to Rusty, but today, the best we could have done was second or third."

"If we have bad luck, we're history, and we know that. If he has bad luck, we're in the driver's seat. Man, he's had some flat good luck the last four races, though."

Misfortune struck Wallace twice in the first 126 laps. He lost a lap in each of two green flag pit stops due to flat tires.

Wallace got one lap back on lap

Same Old Story Prevails For The Pirates

Saturday afternoon, it was the same old story. East Carolina's defense was not up to the task of stopping the opposition while the offense, which moved the ball well at times ended up shooting itself in the foot more often than not.

The Pirates proved unable to stop their opponent again until it was too late. And on offense, they moved within the shadow of the goal post on a number of occasions, only to come up dry once more.

To be sure the opponent was Syracuse, ranked 19th in the country by the Associated Press. And the Orangemen was the fourth of five ranked teams on the schedule. One more remains — formerly number one ranked Miami of Florida which took its frustrations out on Cincinnati, another ECU upcoming opponent.

The month of October has been dubbed ECU's October Death March and that's what it's been: four straight games with ranked opponents.

The Pirates have put on a respectable front, but they've let opportunity after opportunity go past the board.

With Miami out of the way after next Saturday, the Pirates have two remaining games to play, each with teams they would seem to have a chance to beat, Temple and Cincinnati. Both will be played on those teams' home field. Whether the Pirates can do the job is another question.

At any rate, the vultures are beginning to collect on the goal posts. This is the final year of Coach Art Baker's contract, and the way things are going few Pirate fans are now questioning what the outcome will be.

I have long been a fan of Art Baker, since I met him back in the Southern Conference days when he was the head coach at Furman. He impressed me then, and he was always a thorn in the side of the Pirates in games he coached against them. He built a program at Furman that still carries through today, two coaches later. The man who followed him there was Dick Sheridan, who now is building a winner at N.C. State.

Baker has brought a great deal of class to the ECU program, but class doesn't win football games and that is the bottom line.

This past summer and in the early weeks of the fall, people asked me if I thought Baker would be back next year.

At that time, my expectations were that the Pirates had a legitimate chance to win at least six of their 11 games. But it was not to be.

Now, when people talk with me about the ECU program, the question is not whether Baker will return. Instead, they ask who I think the new coach will be.

Perhaps Baker will survive the situation, but one has to expect that he will not.

Whoever is coaching East Carolina will certainly face a somewhat easier schedule next year. Two of this year's powerhouse teams will be missing from the slate, Florida State and West Virginia. They will be replaced by one national power, Pittsburgh. Tennessee Tech and Southwestern Louisiana and the other open date will be replaced by Bowling Green of the Mid-American Conference, and two Division I-AA schools, Illinois State and Louisiana Tech.

Magee Takes Win Tops Byrum For Pensacola Title

GULF BREEZE, Fla. (AP) — Andrew Magee credits Tom Byrum, who he overtook on the final round, with indirectly offering advice that helped him win his first golf tournament on the PGA Tour.

Magee won the $400,000 Pensacola Open with a final round 6-under-par 66 Sunday to edge Byrum, who had a four-stroke lead after 54 holes, Ken Green and Bruce Litke by a single stroke.

He said he read a newspaper interview that Byrum gave after posting a tournament- and career-best round of 8-under-par 64 Friday on the 7,033-yard, par-72 course at Tiger Point Golf and Country Club.

"I putted terrible" on the first two rounds, Magee said. "I read in his article that he putted really good on Friday because he squared his stance up and he did this and did that. So I went and squared my stance up Saturday and Sunday and I putted super. So I owe a little bit to reading that article."

Magee, 26, said the $72,000 first prize couldn't have come at a better time because his wife, Susan, is expecting a baby in about four weeks.

"I'm still in shock," said Magee, who played loose and relaxed all week.

"It hasn't really sunk in yet," he said, then joked, "Of course, they all say that."

Magee, who entered the tournament in 64th place on the money list, saw his earnings for the year climb to $240,354 and his lifetime winnings to $480,023.

The University of Oklahoma graduate's previous best finish was a tie for third in March at the Hertz Bay Hill Classic in Orlando, Fla.

A four-year pro, Magee finished with a 17-under-par 271.

He sank eight birdies, offset by two bogies, on the final round. He said the key to his victory was sinking a 12-foot put on the 17th hole to preserve par.

Raines To Stay; Others May Leave

NEW YORK (AP) — Tim Raines is staying in Montreal. But Jim Clancy, Doyle Alexander, Rich Gedman and Ernie Whitt may be allowed to leave their teams.

The Major League Baseball Players Association has asked arbitrator George Nicolau to give players involved in the second collusion case "new look" free agency.

"New look" free agency is what allowed Kirk Gibson to leave Detroit for the Los Angeles Dodgers last winter.

Donald Fehr, executive director of the union, said Sunday he expected Nicolau's decision would be issued today.

Using the criteria developed by arbitrator Thomas Roberts in the first collusion case, only those players who have not had a chance to again become free agents since the 1986-87 offseason would be eligible. Of the 79 free agents that year, 11 meet those requirements.

Raines was another, but on Sunday he agreed to a three-year, $6.3-million contract with Montreal with an option year at $2.1 million in 1992 that the Expos must decide to

QB May Key Chicago Hopes

CHICAGO (AP) — Jim McMahon will be the starting quarterback, and that's one of the reasons the Chicago Bears are slightly favored over the San Francisco 49ers tonight in a game that features the NFL's top offense against the No. 1 defense.

The game will be played on Bear turf in Soldier Field, but that's not necessarily an advantage against the 49ers, who will be aiming for a league-record 12th straight road victory.

Revenge also could be a factor since the Bears were embarrassed 41-0 last year by the 49ers in a nationally televised Monday night game. Although the Bears have been playing down the revenge motive, it is sure to surface if the Bears, 6-1, are successful against the 49ers, 5-2.

Quarterback Joe Montana, who has had elbow and rib injuries, will start for the 49ers. He also started last year's rout but was injured in the first quarter and backup Steve Young directed the attack by throwing four touchdown passes, three to Jerry Rice.

With Roger Craig leading the league with 764 rushing yards and 1,036 yards from scrimmage, the 49ers average 415.7 yards per game, best in the NFL.

"This will be the ultimate challenge," said Bears coach

Giants, Eagles Rally Back Both Come From Behind To Win In Final Minutes

By Barry Wilner
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Dan Marino, the New York Giants and the Philadelphia Eagles hit the comeback trail. Only Marino didn't make it.

While the Eagles and Giants came from behind for last-minute victories Sunday, Marino's near-record passing performance wasn't enough to lift the Miami Dolphins over the top in the NFL.

Marino threw for 521 yards, 34 short of the league mark set by Norm Van Brocklin in 1951. And Troy Stradford dropped a long pass in the end zone in the waning moments that would have given Marino the record.

But Marino, who completed 35 of 60 passes — the most he has thrown in a game — also was picked off five times and the Dolphins were beaten 44-30 by the New York Jets. Rookie Erik McMillan had three of the interceptions, including a 55-yard return for a touchdown.

"We knew we would have to score a lot in the second half and would have to throw the ball to do it," said Marino after Miami fell behind 30-10 at halftime. "We were in the game, but didn't quite do it. I felt we were going to win. I think everybody felt it. But we had the interceptions at the end, and that did it."

The Giants also had the interceptions at the end of their game with Atlanta, and they turned it around. New York trailed 16-9 when Carl Banks hit Falcons quarterback Chris Miller as he passed and Harry Carson made the theft. That led to Otis Anderson's 1-yard TD run.

Hugh Millen, who replaced Miller after the starter injured his elbow on Carson's interception, then threw directly to Banks, who ran 15 yards for the winning points in a 23-16 decision.

"We can't live like this all season," Banks said.

"We can't wait until we need it to do something. I'll be the first to admit that I haven't played well, but I'm not looking back. I'm going forward, and we're going forward as a team."

The Eagles trailed 20-0 in the first half, then marched forward to close within 23-17. That's when Randall Cunningham led them on an 85-yard, 16-play drive that included a pair of fourth-down completions. Cunningham found Anthony Toney with a 2-yard TD pass with four seconds remaining.

"... I knew that in the second half something would click," Cunningham said. "Maybe in the past we would lose these games, but these guys have confidence now."

Elsewhere as the NFL reached its midpoint, it was Indianapolis 16, San Diego 0 as Eric Dickerson went over 9,000 career rushing yards; Cleveland 29, Phoenix 21; Washington 20, Green Bay 17; Pittsburgh 39, Denver 21; Buffalo 23, New England 20; the Los Angeles Rams 31, Seattle 10; Minnesota 49, Tampa Bay 20; Cincinnati 44, Houston 21; New Orleans 20, the Los Angeles Raiders 6; and Detroit 7, Kansas City 6.

Tonight, San Francisco is at Chicago.

Jets 44, Dolphins 30

The visiting Jets scored 24 points in the second quarter and never were caught. But Marino sure tried.

"Our guys were unbelievable today," Marino said of his supporting cast — Mark Clayton caught 10 passes for 153 yards, Mark Duper caught six for 132. "Duper and Clayton were getting open against single and double coverage. Unfortunately, we hurt ourselves early with some mistakes that put them in position to score. We also hurt ourselves with the interceptions."

The most damaging were McMillan's 55-yarder and an end zone pickoff by Carl Howard with the Jets ahead by seven points.

"He had a great passing day," McMillan said of Marino. "He is going to get his, whatever he does, but we got the interceptions because we are a great secondary. We figured Marino out before we came here. We knew their formations and who he was going to throw to."

Giants 23, Falcons 16

The Giants didn't seem to know much of anything about Atlanta, but they got the breaks at the end of their uninspired effort. The Falcons, 1-7 and losers of five straight, reached the New York 1 on the final play of the game.

"It's hard to believe we lost," said Miller, who was returning from an ankle injury. "We can grow from this loss, but it's hard to keep growing from all these losses."

"We controlled the ball all day, but to lose like this is heartbreaking. We're a better football team, but we're not going to get better until we win."

Eagles 24, Cowboys 23

Dallas seemed to be in excellent shape until Cunningham got the Eagles going. Cunningham connected with Jimmie Giles for 10 yards and Greg Garrity for 13 on fourth downs in the winning drive.

Cunningham hit 26 of 53 passes for 298 yards and two TDs. The Cowboys self-destructed with 16 penalties for 138 yards.

"We had a good chance to win this game," Dallas coach Tom Landry said. "We played well in the first half. Penalties broke up our continuity and killed us."

Colts 16, Chargers 0

Dickerson, the AFC's leading rusher, ran 30 times and pushed his career total to 9,135 yards. It was the 49th time he has gone over 100 yards in a game, and he also had four pass receptions for 30 yards.

"I like carrying the football as long as I'm healthy, and I'm healthy right now," Dickerson said. "They gave us some big lanes today."

The Colts defense gave San Diego nothing — the Chargers got as far as the Indianapolis 25 just once. It was the Chargers' second shutout at home — they lost 12-0 to Denver on Oct. 2.

Dean Biasucci kicked three field goals.

Browns 29, Cardinals 21

Bernie Kosar came back from an elbow injury that sidelined him in Game 1. He wasn't rusty.

Kosar completed 25 of 43 passes, including 20 of 28 for 224 yards in the first half, for three touchdowns and 314 yards. His 25-yarder to Reggie Langhorne provided the winning score.

"Bernie's started two games this season for us and he's 2-0. That's all that counts for me," Coach Marty Schottenheimer said.

Cleveland, 5-3 and with the NFL's best pass defense, intercepted backup quarterback Cliff Stoudt twice in a three-minute span late in the fourth quarter, then sacked him for a safety. Stoudt replaced Neil Lomax, whose arthritic hip sidelined him in the third quarter.

Redskins 20, Packers 17

Another star QB returned as Washington's Doug Williams, the MVP of the Super Bowl, came back from an appendectomy that benched him for five weeks. Williams completed 25 of 43 passes for 225 yards and Kelvin Bryant has 210 yards total offense.

Max Zendejas, who was criticized by his former teammates when he missed five field goals and five extra points while with the Redskins in 1986, missed a 24-yard field goal with 11 seconds to go.

"This is a sign of a good team when we win one we probably should have lost," Williams said.

Steelers 39, Broncos 21

The Steelers responded to recent criticism about their conservatism with a varied attack that included a no-huddle offense, halfback option passes and reverses. They also got a club-record six field goals from Gary Anderson — he connected twice from 30 yards and also from 32, 21, 37 and 22.

Rodney Carter, who had carried only once this season, ran for 105 yards and two touchdowns and the Steelers picked off three Gary Kubiak passes. Kubiak subbed for the injured John Elway.

The victory broke Pittsburgh's six-game slide, its longest since 1969.

"He was the glue that kept it all together," tackle Tunch Ilkin said of Coach Chuck Noll, who took the brunt of most of the criticism. "A lot of teams would have gone south and thrown in the towel, but Chuck didn't let that happen. He was the catalyst."

Bills 23, Patriots 20

Scott Norwood's third field goal, a 33-yarder with 13 seconds remaining, was decisive for Buffalo, which leads the AFC East by 2½ games at 7-1. Buffalo overcame four turnovers and was helped by New England kicker Teddy Garcia, who missed three field goals and a conversion.

"It's something all kickers have gone through," said Norwood, who had made eight consecutive field goals. "You just have to put it behind you to be successful."

Rams 31, Seahawks 10

Jim Everett continued to sparkle for the Rams, 6-2 and a game behind New Orleans in the NFC West. Everett had his third straight three-touchdown performance, completing 20 of 27 throws for 311 yards.

His 19 touchdown passes thus far is tops in the NFC and also is one more than he threw in the entire 1986 and 1987 seasons combined.

"We're starting to try different things on offense, and that gives us more dimensions than just a running attack," Everett said. "The young people on this club are starting to take charge."

Despite the loss, Seattle, 4-4, remained tied for the AFC West lead with Denver.

Vikings 49, Buccaneers 20

At Tampa, the Vikings picked off Vinny Testaverde six times — he leads the league with 22 interceptions. Brad Edwards returned one of the interceptions 37 yards for a touchdown.

Wade Wilson, replacing Tommy Kramer in the starting lineup, passed for 335 yards and three touchdowns. Wilson completed 22 of 30 passes to ignite an offense that had produced only 28 points in the Vikings' three previous games.

Bengals 44, Oilers 21

James Brooks sparked a 28-point first quarter, the fastest start ever for Cincinnati. Brooks, playing with a brace on his broken left hand, scored two touchdowns in the period and got another touchdown in the third quarter.

"It's been tough on me," said Brooks, who has missed one game and been slowed in others because of the fracture. "I feel like I need to be out there and doing my part, and I couldn't do it because I was handicapped. I was really mad about that."

Cincinnati, 7-1, leads the AFC Central by two games.

Saints 20, Raiders 6

Craig Heyward, the Saints' 260-pound rookie fullback, ran 73 yards for a touchdown on the first play of the third quarter, igniting a second-half rally for New Orleans' seventh successive win.

"It was a play designed to get you into the secondary, and after that it's up to you," Heyward, a first-round draftee, said after he broke two tackles. "That's what separates the great backs from the average backs."

Bo Jackson started at running back for the Raiders, gained 25 yards on his first carry, 20 on his second, then went to the sidelines with a pulled hamstring muscle. The Raiders also lost guard Charley Hannah with a broken left ankle.

Lions 7, Chiefs 6

The two weakest offenses in the league did as expected. Rusty Hilger threw a 14-yard touchdown pass to Jeff Chadwick in the second quarter, just enough to offset a pair of field goals by Nick Lowery. Detroit had lost six consecutive games since opening with a win, while the Chiefs fell to 1-6-1.

The first three plays of the second half were typical of the game. Albert Lewis intercepted Hilger's pass on the first play. Then Herman Heard fumbled and Bennie Blades recovered for the Lions.

James Jones fumbled on the next play after a gain of 10 yards and Deron Cherry recovered for the Chiefs.

Mike Ditka. "They can hurt you in so many ways. If you defense Craig, then you get hurt with the receivers and the quarterback. I don't think anybody has ever shut out Rice, and I don't think anybody is going to shut him out."

The 49ers offense will run into a Bear defense that is No. 1 despite numerous injuries. The Bears have had to use rookies at key linebacking and secondary positions, but still lead the league in yielding only 245 total yards and 64.6 rushing yards per game.

No back has rushed for 100 yards against the Bears in the last 29 regular season games. Eric Dickerson, then with the Los Angeles Rams, did it in 1986 when he gained 111 yards.

The Bear defense has allowed but 74 points, lowest in the NFL. But the Bears will have to rely heavily on McMahon if they hope to win.

"His stability and his ability to understand what's going on defensively should help us," Ditka said of McMahon, who will be making an eighth straight start for the first time in his injury-riddled career. "Besides playing well, he's still our inspirational leader on offense."

San Francisco coach Bill Walsh is aware of what McMahon means to the Bears, since he quarterbacked Chicago's last two victories over the 49ers, 13-3 in 1983 and 26-10 in 1985.

"The Bears were hurting against us last year," said Walsh. "Richard Dent was playing injured, McMahon didn't play. This is a totally different Bear team. McMahon is playing at his best. To stop the Bears, we can't give up the big plays."

The 41-0 defeat was the worst the Bears have suffered under Ditka.

"No revenge," said Ditka. "We'll try not to make the mistakes we made last year."

Defensive tackles Steve McMichael and Dan Hampton summed up the feelings of the players.

"If that game doesn't get you ticked off, nothing will," McMichael said of last year's defeat.

"It was like a horror movie," said Hampton. "Revenge is a strong word, but I think it will be emotional. We have to atone for that disaster."

Bears-49ers Set To Go

Player Of The Week

Player of the Week honors for this week go to Greenville Rose flanker Eric Morris.

Morris caught four passes for 95 yards, including two touchdown catches in the Rampants 26-0 Homecoming win over Wilson Fike Friday night. Morris' touchdown catches were 62 and 10 yards respectively.

Morris also recovered a fumble in the endzone from his defensive back position in the second half to lead the Rampants.

The win by the Rampants kept them unbeaten for the year at 8-0 and in first place in the Big East Conference.

For the season, Morris has hauled in 18 receptions for 416 yards and six touchdowns to lead all Rampant receivers.

For the season, Moore has 1,086 yards rushing and has scored 13 touchdowns.

- Ayden-Grifton quarterback Darryl Moye completed 6-9 passes for 147 yards, including a 75-yard bomb to tight end David Dixon in the Chargers' 25-0 win over Farmville Central Friday.

Edenton Holds Off Roanoke By 20-14

EDENTON — Edenton Holmes High School held off a late drive by Roanoke's Redskins to preserve a 20-14 football victory Saturday night.

The Aces scored midway through the final quarter to break at 14-14 tie when Eddie Wilkins got his second touchdown of the night. But the Aces missed their PAT kick to leave the door open for the Redskins.

Roanoke came back to drive to the Edenton 34, but a second down sack threw the 'Skins back and two passes fell incomplete, ending the threat.

Edenton took the lead in the game with two first period scores. Melvin Dixon ran in from 30 yards out and Ben Miller kicked the PAT. Wilkins then scored on a four-yard run with Miller again kicking for a 14-0 lead.

But Roanoke rallied for a pair of scores in the second quarter to tie it up. Bernard Hudgins scored on a one-yard plunge, then raced in from 29 yards out. Jimmy Brown hit Joseph Floyd for a two-point conversion pass on the second.

Hudgins finished with 24 carries for 140 yards for Roanoke, while Wilkins led Edenton with 19 carries for 118 yards.

Roanoke falls to 2-6 overall and 1-4 in the Northeastern Conference. The Redskins play at home against Belhaven in a non-conference game Friday.

People don't have any trouble believing LA's other champs, the NBA Lakers. They have Magic Johnson. The Dodgers just have magic.

People are happy to believe the

NHL Kings. They have Wayne Gretzky. The Dodgers just have Wayne

Newton, or at least his picture, hanging in the Hollywood gallery on Manager Tom Lasorda's office wall.

People certainly are delighted to believe hotshots UCLA and USC in a college football duel for the Heisman Trophy. They have quarterbacks

Troy Aikman and Rodney Peete. The Dodgers just have aching backs —

and knees and elbows and ham-strings.

People believe fantasies in LA,

which was, after all, the birthplace of Mickey Mouse. The Dodgers also have a Mickey, only his name is Hatcher.

And if you believe that gray-haired role player was the leading hitter in the World Series, why then, you'll believe anything.

This unlikely mixture of spare parts, coaxed and cajoled by Lasor-da, rules baseball today and the more talented A's still aren't quite sure why.

Chalk it up to destiny. It is the only reasonable explanation for how

Los Angeles beat Oakland in the World Series. Sometimes those things happen, like the Mets in 1969.

You just accept them and go on.

That is the challenge for the A's, who came in as heavy favorites and after losing in five games, probably would be favored again if the Series were starting over today. This is a talented, young team, a team that promises grand things for the years ahead, a team that simply came up empty at the wrong time and must forget this strange adventure.

Think about it. Who do you want in your lineup, 40-40 man Jose Canseco or utilityman Danny Heep? Strapping

Mark McGwire with 32 home runs this year and 84 in barely more than two major league seasons of Mickey Hatcher with 35 in his 10th year career?

The answer is simple.

Orel Hershiser.

Hershiser spent the last seven weeks of the baseball season operating in some uncharted territory. It was if he sat down one day and wondered what would happen if he simply stopped letting the other team score.

He finished the regular season with a record 59 consecutive scoreless innings constructed on five straight shutouts and 10 innings of scoreless ball in his final start.

exercise after the 1990 season.

In agreeing to the new contract, Raines waived his rights to a second chance at free agency. Andre Dawson of the Chicago Cubs and Lance Parrish of the California Angels already signed contracts covering next season that waive their "new-look" rights.

In the group of those likely to be given the second chance agency are three pitchers — Alexander, Clancy and Ron Guidry of the New York Yankees. Four catchers would be eligible — Gedman, Whitt, Alan Ashby of Houston and Bob Boone of California.

The lone infielder in the category is Willie Randolph of the Yankees. Among the outfielders would be Brian Downing of California, Jim Dwyer of Minnesota and Claudell Washington of the Yankees.

Bulls Win Over Hornets Once Again

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Michael Jordan scored 23 and Brad Sellers had 16 of his 20 points in the third quarter as the Chicago Bulls took a 115-99 victory over the expansion Charlotte Hornets.

An eight-point run and cold Charlotte shooting in the first quarter helped the Bulls win their second exhibition game in four outings Saturday. The Hornets, also beaten badly on the boards, lost their second exhibition game in three contests.

Bill Cartwright broke a 14-14 tie with a driving basket at 4:24 of the first quarter. Horace Grant followed with successive baskets and Sellers ended the run with a layup on a pass from Cartwright.

Chicago expanded its 28-20 lead at the end of the first quarter to 46-32 late in the second quarter with a six-point spurt in which rookie Jack Haley scored a pair of layups. The teams traded 3-point field goals at the end of the period and Chicago held a 53-46 lead.

Rickey Green pulled Charlotte to within 55-51 on a jumper at 10:03 in the third quarter. But Sellers led the final charge, scoring 16 of his points in the next six minutes to give the Bulls a 76-61 lead with 4:35 left in the period and putting Charlotte out of reach.

John Paxson had 14 points, Cartwright scored 12 and Anthony Jones 11 for Chicago.

Michael Holton led Charlotte with 17 points. Robert Reid had 16, Kelly Trupucka and Tyrone Bogues scored 15 apiece and Earl Cureton had 10 points.

Cavs' Wilson Undergoes Knee Surgery

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Virginia tailback Marcus Wilson has undergone arthroscopic surgery to remove torn cartilage in his left knee.

Wilson injured the knee during the Cavaliers' 34-14 victory Saturday over Wake Forest in Winston-Salem, N.C. School officials say it is uncertain how long the red-shirt sophomore will be out of action.

Sunday's surgery is the second time this season Wilson has had a knee operation. On Sept. 8, he underwent arthroscopic surgery to remove torn cartilage in his right knee, which was injured during a practice the day before.

Wilson, of Rochester N.Y., missed Virginia's games with Penn State and Georgia Tech before returning to action against Duke on Sept. 24.

Wilson led the Cavaliers in rushing last season and is the team's leading rusher through the first seven games of this season even though he has played in just five games. He has carried the ball 88 times for 426 yards and two touchdowns this fall. Wilson also has seven receptions for 25 yards and one touchdown. Last year, he carried the ball 172 times for 692 yards and seven touchdowns and caught 18 passes for 134 yards.

Virginia, 3-4 overall and 2-2 in the ACC, plays at Virginia Tech on Saturday.

Bossy Reportedly To Announce Retirement

GARDEN CITY, N.Y. (AP) — New York Islander star Mike Bossy will announce his retirement from hockey today, according to newspaper reports.

The Islanders said a press conference with a "major" announcement would be held at noon today.

Both The New York Times and Daily News ran stories of Bossy's impending retirement in their Monday editions. However, Bossy denied the reports in an interview with The Associated Press.

Bossy, sixth on the NHL's career goal-scoring list with 573, has not played for the Islanders since the 1987 playoffs because of a back ailment. He had played in pain since the first day of the club's 1986 training camp.

The 31-year-old right wing, a fixture on the Islanders' four Stanley Cup-winning teams, appeared in 63 games in the 1986-87 season and was the team's co-leading scorer with 38 goals.

It was his 10th and last season as an Islander and the only one in which he did not achieve the 50-goal mark. Bossy rested the entire summer of 1987, hoping for a training-camp comeback, but on Oct. 5, 1987, announced that he was still unable to play.

He underwent physical therapy and said he wouldn't return to the ice unless he could perform up to his own standards.

Tide Waiting On Humphrey Report

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Alabama could soon find out whether injured running back Bobby Humphrey will be able to play football again this season.

Dr. Les Fowler, the team's orthopedic surgeon, said Saturday that Humphrey's injured left foot will be x-rayed today to determine how well it is healing.

Same Old Story

With the number of players returning who have added experience next fall, the Pirates would seem to have a shot at winning seven or more of those games.

But one thing is certain. If Baker is to be replaced following the Nov. 19 season-ending game against Cincinnati, East Carolina's athletic officials must move with all due haste to avoid placing a new coach in a no-win situation as far as recruiting for this fall is concerned.

There will be talent on hand, certainly, but ECU cannot afford to lose a year of recruiting.

Notre Dame Stops Air Force's Attack

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Notre Dame's size and speed shut down an Air Force wishbone offense that had led the nation in rushing.

"We were just too strong for them in the second half," Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz said.

The second-ranked Irish remained unbeaten in seven games with a 41-13 victory over Air Force Saturday, holding the Falcons scoreless in the second half. Air Force, which had averaged 432 rushing yards and scored at least four touchdowns per game, gained only 170 yards on the ground with one touchdown.

"Their defense is tough to read because they move around a lot," Air Force quarterback Dee Dowis said. "Their linebackers are very fast. (Michael) Stonebreaker is very quick and he hits real hard."

Stonebreaker led the Irish with 12 tackles, including a sack. "I believe the most improved part of the Notre Dame program is their defense," Air Force coach Fisher DeBerry said.

Notre Dame quarterback Tony Rice, who threw for two touchdowns and rushed for one, said: "We're big and they're small. (The coaches) just wanted to pound it to them."

Air Force's first three drives stalled in Notre Dame territory, the first ending in a fumble recovery by the Irish. Steve Yarbrough kicked a 22-yard field goal after the Falcons failed on a third-and-goal attempt, then made a 37-yard attempt after Dowis was thrown for a loss and threw two incomplete passes to Steven Senn at the goal line.

"We should have put the ball in the end zone twice in the first half, but we settled for field goals," DeBerry said.

"We wanted to run the ball outside and try and get around the corners because we knew what kind of size they have in the middle," said Dowis, who rushed for 44 yards and passed for 46 on five completions.

Notre Dame's first score came on a 7-yard run by Mark Green in the first quarter. Rice ran 4 yards for a touchdown in the second quarter, and with 2:41 remaining in the half, Anthony Johnson rushed 12 yards for a touchdown that gave the Irish a 20-13 halftime lead.

"We had to go out in the second half and make something happen," DeBerry said. But the Irish got three quick first downs, then Rice threw to Tony Brooks for a 42-yard scoring play.

"If we could have stopped them and gotten the ball, it would have given our team the momentum it needed," DeBerry said.

Instead, Air Force gained only 39 yards rushing with three first downs in the second half.

"At halftime we made a few changes on defense, a few adjustments, and came out in the second half and played error-free ball," Holtz said. "We played more aggressive."

"In the first half, we overpursued," linebacker Wes Pritchett said. "In the second half, we played much better."

Bird Leads Celtics In McDonald's Open

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Larry Bird scored eight points to lead a 22-5 fourth-quarter surge and the Boston Celtics brought their winning tradition overseas, beating tournament host Real Madrid 111-96 Sunday in the championship of the McDonald's Basketball Open.

The Celtics, 16-time NBA champions, were playing in the first major NBA-sponsored event outside the United States. In a consolation game played earlier Sunday, the Yugoslavian national team beat Italian-league champion Scavolini Pesaro 100-91.

Bird showed the form that has made him a three-time Most Valuable Player in the NBA, leading all scorers with 29 points, adding 12 assists and contributing a key steal during Boston's fourth quarter streak.

Real Madrid, which had beaten Scavolini Pesaro on Friday to advance to the championship, outscored Boston 30-24 in the third quarter to pull within eight points, but quickly faded.

In a very physical game, the Celtics managed only nine free throw attempts to Real Madrid's 45, but outshot their opponents from the field 54 percent to 37 percent.

A partisan crowd of 10,000 saw Real Madrid go ahead 3-2 on guard Drazen Petrovic's 3-point goal, but it turned out to be the Spanish team's only lead of the day.

Wallace Wins 3rd

154 during a scheduled green flag pit stop by Elliott on tires and fuel.

Wallace got his second lap back on lap 237 when his pit crew sent him out ahead of leader Elliott during a caution period brought out by Sterling Marlin's blown engine.

"When you get two laps down it's tough," said Wallace, who also was two laps down prior to winning in Charlotte two weeks ago and trailed by one lap before winning at North Wilkesboro last week. "But I knew it was a long race."

"I wasn't happy with the way the car was handling. Once we got the laps back we had some things we could go to, some things in the chassis setup. We didn't want to work on the chassis until after we got the laps back."

Wallace's misfortunes put Elliott in command. He led 150 of the first 246 laps. He led 207 laps in all, but a flat tire on lap 334 cost Elliott his chance of victory. Clinging to his dwindling points lead, Elliott lost a lap in the pit during a tire change and never got back on the lead lap.

Wallace got one of his laps back on lap 154 when Elliott had a routine pit stop scheduled for fresh tires and fuel. He returned to the lead on lap 237 when he beat Elliott out of the pit during a caution period stop for debris on the track, and he took first place on lap 304 when his pit crew got him out first during a caution flag stop.

After losing the lead to Rudd for seven laps at the beginning of a series of green flag pit stops, Wallace took the lead for the final time on lap 459 when Rudd pitted. Wallace had opened an eight second lead over Rudd prior to the final round of pit stops.

Lithuanian Group Calls For Greater Autonomy

By Andrew Katell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VILNIUS, U.S.S.R. — At the inaugural conference of a Lithuanian nationalist mass movement, delegates endorsed greater autonomy after heated debate over whether their republic should demand the right to secede from the Soviet Union.

The conference in the republic's capital ended Sunday after 20,000 Lithuanians sang nationalist songs and shed tears of joy at a Mass to celebrate the government's return of a 14th-century cathedral to the Roman Catholic church.

The Lithuanian Movement for Restructuring, claiming 180,000 active supporters, softened a draft resolution that said the republic "reserves its right to withdraw from the Soviet Union ... by constitutionally acknowledged means."

The final version, approved Sunday by an overwhelming margin of the more than 1,000 delegates, was nearly a carbon copy of the Communist Party's position. It said Lithuania's "relations with other Soviet republics should be based on Leninist principles of federalism, national equality and self-determination."

The conference also approved measures calling for control of the republic's economy, establishment of diplomatic ties with foreign countries and freedom for Lithuanian political prisoners.

The two-day conference of the movement known in Lithuania as Sajudis was the first since the group formed in June.

Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev is pressing for wide-ranging economic and political reforms, but has warned against attempts by national groups to redraw the country's boundaries.

Secession is one of the most sensitive issues for Lithuanians and their Baltic neighbors, the Estonians and Latvians.

The Soviet Union incorporated the three republics in 1940 under a secret pact with Nazi Germany and some groups in the region say the agreement should be renounced.

Several speakers during the weekend conference received standing ovations for suggesting the group label the Soviet takeover of Lithuania an "occupation."

Tempers in the Vilnius Sports Palace flared after one delegate, Rolandas Paulauskas, said Lithuania should demand the right to secede from the 15-republic Soviet Union. Some of the delegates heckled Paulauskas.

"The speech we just heard should be considered a provocation. We have to be realistic," said writer Vytautas Petkevicius, a leader in the restructuring movement.

Lithuania's reform-minded Communist Party chief, who sat through much of the debate and was warmly received at the conference, advised caution.

"Some of the speeches from this fine stage saddened me, or rather have raised a lot of thought," said

Algirdas Brazauskas. He urged delegates to carefully consider the consequences of their demands and act in a "rational, business-like" way.

But Brazauskas, appointed the republic's party leader just four days earlier to replace a conservative, said Lithuania's leaders would "systematically evaluate and solve as many problems as possible." The audience cheered.

The Lithuanian government has agreed to several nationalist demands including declaring Lithuanian the official language and lifting a ban on display of the flag that flew in Lithuania during its independence between the two world wars.

The first Mass in 30 years at the Vilnius Cathedral was conducted outdoors Sunday to accommodate the worshippers, who gave thanks both for the return of the cathedral and the rapid changes sweeping this Baltic Republic of 3.6 million people.

The Vilnius Cathedral was a center of Christianity in the Middle Ages and its confiscation by the officially atheist Soviet government had angered many Lithuanians, of whom nearly 2 million are Catholics.

The government converted the cathedral into an art gallery in 1950 and paintings line its walls instead of religious symbols.

In an indication of recent changes in Lithuania, police who once would have massed in threatening numbers around the crowd at Sunday's Mass directed traffic instead. Lithuanian television broadcast the service live.

Men, women and children carried the once-banned yellow, green and red Lithuanian flag and sang nationalist and religious hymns, led by the first Lithuanian cardinal of modern times, Vincentas Sladkevicius. The cardinal was appointed by the Vatican five months ago.

Japan's Trading Scandal Takes On New Direction After First Arrest Made

By Larry Thorson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — An insider trading scandal is revealing plenty of intrigue: top politicians' aides buy stock, a hidden camera captures an apparent attempt to bribe a lawmaker, and a key man says he would rather die than talk.

The politically sensitive Recruit Scandal is named after the Recruit Co., a high-flying conglomerate whose offices in Tokyo's glittering Ginza district were raided Wednesday.

The raid, filmed for television as prosecutors carted away about 1,500 boxes of confiscated documents, was followed by the first arrest since the scandal went national in July.

Hiroshi Matsubara, 47, a former top aide to the head of Recruit-Cosmos Co., a real-estate subsidiary, was charged Thursday with offering a bribe to Yonosuke Narazaki, member of Parliament for the opposition United Socialist Democratic Party. Narazaki is a persistent driver of Parliament's probe of the scandal.

With that arrest the probe is moving on two fronts, with investigations by prosecutors and the Diet, Japan's parliament, backed by aggressive reporting from some news media.

"At long last, the scandal has come under criminal investigation, at least in part," the Asahi Shimbun, which made the first revelations of the scandal's political bearing in June, said in an editorial.

But the liberal-leaning newspaper, while praising the display of independence by the Tokyo District Prosecutor's Office, expressed worry that the criminal investigation could "give some Diet members a perfect excuse for calling for a slowdown in the Diet probe."

The alleged bribe was a flagrant example of the so-called "money politics" that underlie the Recruit scandal, with reverberations to the top of Japanese politics and in the stock market as well.

A camera, hidden by Nippon Television Network with Narazaki's permission, showed Matsubara asking the opposition parliamentarian to help save the Recruit company and offering an envelope full of cash, saying "We intend to support you for the rest of your political career."

Narazaki said Matsubara, who resigned his Recruit position as soon as the video was shown on national television Sept. 6, visited him three times offering $38,000.

Matsubara's former boss, Hiromasa Ezoe, has been hospitalized reportedly suffering from depression. But on Oct. 12 several members of the Diet questioned him about Recruit's having sold shares in Recruit-Cosmos at bargain prices to top political aides before the company went public in 1986.

The shares leaped in value when open trading began, yielding fat profits, and it is widely assumed the money went to finance political activities of the governing Liberal Democratic Party.

The lawmakers quoted Ezoe, who founded the parent company Recruit, as having told them he was sorry for having caused trouble to people whose names had been revealed as having benefited.

"I cannot bear to see any more people resign or be inconvenienced. I would rather kill myself than disclose their names," Ezoe was quoted as saying from his hospital bed.

Nonetheless, the plot's next unfolding revealed the biggest name so far on the list of Recruit-Cosmos beneficiaries — that of Finance Minister Kiichi Miyazawa. Previously it was said an aide to Miyazawa bought Recruit-Cosmos shares.

The finance minister, also deputy premier, denied purchasing the shares himself and apologized for being lax in supervising an aide who he said let a third party use Miyazawa's name to buy the shares.

Still to be heard from are all the political aides who are said to have actually held and sold the Recruit-Cosmos shares.

Until Friday, news reports said 76 people received shares, but the Asahi Shimbun quoted "informed sources" as saying Ezoe sold shares to 140 people.

No authoritative complete list has been made public yet, but the politicians who have confirmed their aides held shares include Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita, former Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone and former Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe, now secretary general of the ruling Liberal Democrats.

All have denied personal wrongdoing. The transactions were not illegal but the scandal called sharp attention to political ethics and intimate links between business and politics.

The opposition and ruling parties all need money to run election campaigns, constituency affairs and parliamentary activities, and big business has always been a major source of cash. In Japan's rapidly expanding economy, new companies like Recruit-Cosmos have become a source of political money through the device of selling shares at bargain prices before they go public.

But never before has the practice made so many headlines or administered such a jolt.

The opposition Japan Socialist Party demanded Miyazawa's resignation, but the finance minister has refused. Takeshita, who needs Miyazawa to quarter-back a tax-reform package through the Diet, has said Miyazawa bears an "ethical responsibility" but resignation was not called for.

Soviet Lawyers Studying ABA Before Forming Legal Group

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Soviet lawyers are looking to the American Bar Association as a possible model for a Soviet legal organization as reforms in their country give them more independence, a law journal reported today.

A delegation of lawyers from the Soviet Union met with their counterparts at ABA offices in Washington and Chicago in the last two weeks, according to The Daily Journal.

Delegates discussed problems concerning the Soviet legal system and the effects of Soviet Leader Mikhail Gorbachev's policy of perestroika, or restructuring, on the legal profession.

"We have to have perestroika in the essence of our law," said group leader Venyamin Yakovlev. "And because advokati (lawyers) know the practical realities that perestroika can have on the practice of law, it is important to have an independent union of lawyers that can push for change."

The delegation included a justice of the Latvian Supreme Court, district judges from Moscow and Leningrad, law professors, several private attorneys, procurators — similar to U.S. prosecutors — and police investigators.

"They're interested in our structure as they restructure," said ABA President-elect Stanley Chavin. "They're beginning to envision the practice of law as a free-standing institution of its own."

Heroin Pipeline

NEW YORK (AP) — Plans for a $50 million-a-month heroin pipeline from Mexico were foiled with the arrest of two Mexican police commanders who officials say boasted they could close airports in their home state to help the smuggling.

Pedro Guillen, 39, and Margaritan Villagrana, 42, commanders from the state of Guerrero, which includes Acapulco, were to be arraigned today, authorities said.

Economic Ties Top Agenda For Kohl, Gorbachev Talks West Germany Eyeing Joint Ventures

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Chancellor Helmut Kohl today began a four-day visit that is to include talks with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the official Soviet news agency Tass said. Economic ties were expected to top the agenda.

Other items to be discussed included European disarmament, East-West relations, ties between West Germany and Moscow-allied East Germany, and the treatment of some 2 million Soviets of German ethnic origin.

Kohl was met at Vnukovo airport on Moscow's southwest by Soviet Premier Nikolai I. Ryzhkov, Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze and other top Soviet officials, Tass said.

Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, Defense Minister Rupert Scholz and other Cabinet members were in the delegation that accompanied Kohl on the flight from Bonn.

West German businesses are seeking to profit from what they say are growing opportunities created by Gorbachev's economic and political reforms.

Projected joint ventures range from the development of the mineral-rich Nola peninsula in the north western part of the Soviet Union to the construction of factories in various parts of the communist nation.

On Oct. 14, the West German Embassy in Moscow said Gorbachev and Kohl would sign an accord on "scientific cooperation in space." The embassy gave no details.

The embassy also said the two men would sign agreements on agricultural cooperation and environmental protection and that "other agreements will be signed by private firms with Soviet agencies."

Kohl last met with Gorbachev in Moscow in March 1985 when he attended the funeral of the man Gorbachev succeeded as Communist Party general secretary, Konstantin U. Chernenko.

Relations between the former World War II enemies have gradually warmed since.

With intermediate-range nuclear missiles being eliminated under a treaty signed by President Reagan and Gorbachev, the West Germans are looking for an improved political climate in central Europe. That, Bonn hopes, ultimately will translate into the willingness of communist East Germany to relax barriers the have kept family- and friends apart since Germany was divided just after World War II.

Chancellor Kohl has praised Gorbachev's reforms, advocated Western economic assistance for the Soviets and stressed the importance of having good relations with the Kremlin.

Improving ties with the Soviet Union has been a major theme at many of Kohl's public appearances this year.

Some Americans fear Gorbachev may be trying to drive a wedge between West Germany and the other nations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. But Kohl says his efforts are in line with the overall trend of improved Western ties with the Soviets.

Jaws Takes A Punch

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — A surfer who was attacked and badly gashed by a 7-foot shark during a weekend competition said today that he eventually turned the creature away by repeatedly punching it in the snout.

John Wonham's right leg required 31 stitches after Saturday's attack, which the surfer said would not keep him from returning to the ocean.

Horoscope By Bil Keane

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR TUESDAY Oct. 25

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): You could get into hot water if you jump into a situation without testing it. Romantic impulses are pushing you from your usual base of operations.
TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Social and marital interests begin a rewarding phase. Close relationships are accented. Be ready to drum up a little romance.
GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Mixing business and pleasure can be like mixing oil and water. This can arouse some peculiar feelings of loyalty, so keep them separate.
MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): You have been searching for a hard-to-find item with no success. Try again today or tomorrow, when the time is more favorable.
LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): A hitch is developing over plans contemplated for a future time. Take a wait-and-see attitude for now. Work on home improvements.
VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): You have the spirit to forge ahead but remain in a short-term rut. Avoid a bogus arrangement at work which offers you no advantage.
LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): You may be feeling a little under par due to lack of stimulation and exercise. Mental relaxation and good health habits give you energy.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Blaming yourself for troubles and irritation caused by another will not solve the confusion. Lay your cards on the table with cool confidence.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): A strange misunderstanding strains relationships and produces tension. Squabbles require modification of a financial position.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): You are absorbed in family affairs. A reunion of friends from a distance accents social activities. Close relationships will develop today.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Transportation difficulties have you pulling your hair out. You get hit with unplanned expenses. Flexibility is essential now.
PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): A romantic rendezvous promises to be almost more than you can handle. Try not to push expectations beyond sensible limits.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠Q94 ♥QJ ♦J109 ♣QJ874
 Partner opens the bidding with one no trump. What do you respond?
 A.—If you only count points, you have a maximum raise to two no trump. However, you have a reasonable five-card suit and excellent intermediates, which make your hand worth more like 11 than 9. Jump to three no trump.
Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠AKJ952 ♥Q93 ♦7 ♣A62
 The bidding has proceeded:
 South West North East
 1 ♣ Pass 1 NT Pass
 What do you bid now?
 A.—Be careful. Partner might have been forced to respond one no trump with a singleton spade. You have a six-loser hand, and unless partner can bid again voluntarily, chances of game are slim. Be content with a two-spade rebid.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠KQ10 ♥K93 ♦865 ♣AQJ6
 Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?
 A.—Whether you play four or five-card majors, you should have four-card support for a jump raise of partner's suit. Thus, under either circumstance, you should make a waiting bid of two clubs, then jump raise spades at your next turn.
Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠K54 ♥KQ95 ♦KJ42 ♣AK
 The bidding has proceeded:
 South West North East
 1 ♦ Pass 2 ♦ Pass
 What do you bid now?
 A.—You have 19 high-card points, a balanced hand and stoppers in every suit. Partner has shown a minimum of 7 for his raise, so you should have enough for game. Jump to three no trump. Don't bid 2 NT and invite partner to do what you should have done yourself.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠A5 ♥A87 ♦AQ8 ♣109862
 Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one heart. What action do you take?
 A.—You could have the best hand at the table, but there's nothing you can do. You can't make a takeout double without spades, and your club suit is nowhere near good enough for an overcall.
Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠A5 ♥A87 ♦AQ8 ♣109862
 The bidding has proceeded:

East South West North
 1 ♥ Pass 1 ♣ Pass
 What action do you take?
 A.—Little has changed, except for the fact that you have learned that the enemy probably has the balance of power. A double of two hearts here would be penalty-oriented (you could have doubled one heart for takeout), and any bid could be inviting the enemy to hand your head to you on a silver platter.

Kraft Rejects Takeover Bid By Philip Morris

By David Rocks
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GLENVIEW, Ill. — Kraft Inc. stepped up the bidding for its future by rejecting an $11 billion takeover offer from Philip Morris Cos. and proposing to borrow billions to boost the value of its stock to more than $13 billion. The food maker's recapitalization plan entails a one-time distribution of cash and securities to shareholders designed to boost the value of its stock to $10 a share or $13.5 billion, said chairman and chief executive John M. Richman.

That would exceed the $90-a-share cash offer made a week ago by Philip Morris, the cigarette, food and beer giant. A merger of the two companies would produce the world's largest maker of consumer products. "We should take action to maximize shareholder value rather than accept an inadequate offer," Richman said in a statement Sunday. "We strongly believe the $90 takeover bid (by Philip Morris) ... undervalues Kraft." In addition to taking on a huge debt load, Kraft's plan would require the sale of some of its businesses.

Philip Morris spokesman Tom Ricke, reached by telephone in New York late Sunday, said he could not comment immediately on Kraft's move. But the company has a large amount of cash on hand plus big borrowing capabilities to finance Kraft with a higher bid.

Richman left open the possibility that the board could accept another bid. "If someone comes forward with a transaction that would be more desirable than the restructuring plan, we will negotiate and your board will give full consideration to such a transaction," he said.

The New York Times quoted Richman as saying the board would negotiate with Philip Morris if it made an offer that "reflects the full value of Kraft." The Times also reported last week the leveraged buyout specialist Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co. might be offering its services to Kraft management.

New York-based Philip Morris indicated last week it was ready for a fight. It sued in U.S. District Court in Chicago to challenge Kraft's "poison pill" anti-takeover defense, which would make a hostile takeover prohibitively expensive.

Kraft's response was the latest twist in the takeover mania that has gripped the food industry. Late last week, senior managers of RJR Nabisco Inc. offered to take the company private in a debt-financed $17.6 billion buyout. Earlier this month, Grand Metropolitan Plc of Britain offered to buy Pillsbury Co. for $5.2 billion.

Under Kraft's recapitalization plan, shareholders would receive cash and securities worth about $98 a share and retain a common stock interest that the company values at about $12, Richman said. Kraft has about 123.6 million shares of common outstanding.

To finance the distribution, Kraft would borrow more than $6.8 billion from banks and make a public offering of $3 billion in debt, he said. The company also would have to sell some of its businesses but would retain core brands representing about 80 percent of its profits.

Kraft has begun negotiations on some of the transactions, and Goldman Sachs and Co. has said it is confident it can place the debt, Kraft said.

Richman said the plan would be presented to Kraft's board of directors soon, and then submitted to stockholders at a special meeting. Kraft stock closed at $92 a share in New York Stock Exchange composite trading Friday.

The fact that Kraft stock has risen above $90 is "a clear signal that investors see the (Philip Morris) bid as low," Richman said.

A takeover of Kraft would decrease Philip Morris' heavy dependence on profitable but slow growing cigarette sales.

Philip Morris, best known for Marlboro, Virginia Slims, Benson & Hedges and Merit cigarettes, took over General Foods Corp., the maker of Jell-O, Maxwell House, Kool-Aid, Shake 'N Bake and Oscar Mayer, in 1985 for $5.7 billion.

Kraft's brands include Velveeta, Thousand Island dressings, Cheez Whiz, Breyer's Light 'n' Lively, Sealtest and Frusen Gladje.

Spinach Grower Finds Method That Outshines in Other Nature

By Robert Lee Zimmer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DEKALB, Ill. — A company is harvesting a steady year-round crop of spinach from seeds germinated in tiny polyester blankets, unaffected by the vagaries of the weather and nourished without soil or sunshine.

This spinach feeds on a stream of liquid nutrients and grows during the night under the light of 1,000-watt bulbs. The manufacturer says its method works better than Mother Nature.

"It is a quality product and it commands a quality price, but it has no competition after you've tasted it," said Kevin Wallick, plant scientist for the manufacturer, Phytoforms of America.

Rain or shine, the company's 50,000-square-foot production center turns out a weekly crop of 10,000 pounds of spinach, along with smaller quantities of lettuce, basil, dill and the expensive and nutty-flavored arugula.

These products of hydroponics — agriculture without soil — are shipped to gourmet restaurants and supermarkets from Washington state to New York and from Texas to Canada.

The produce is more tender than the field-grown variety, Wallick said. It's also clean and safe because it has never been in soil or sprayed with pesticides, he added. There's a dependable harvest every weekday of the year.

As a result, customers pay five times the price of conventional greens for the company's crops, Wallick said.

A four-ounce bag of the company's Kitchen Harvest spinach, its main product, retails for $1.98. One Illinois grocery store was offering garden-variety spinach for 89 cents a pound.

General Mills built Phytoforms' plant in 1978 for about $10 million. Noel Davis, a pioneer in the design of agricultural growth chambers, directed the project and then bought the business in 1982.

Company officials believe the concept will attract growing interest from consumers worried about pesticide residue and regions where the weather is adverse for conventional agriculture. Inquiries have come from Canada, Japan and the Soviet Union, the officials say.

Officials say the plant produces 100 times the volume of lettuce per acre as conventional agriculture, and nearly six times as much produce per acre as a greenhouse.

The lights come on at 10 p.m. each night at the center. "The plants don't grow according to their own physiology, they grow in response to utility rates, which go down at night and go out of sight during the day," said Davis.

The center located 60 miles west of Chicago has 15 growth chambers, each covered on all sides by shiny silver shades.

Seeds are nestled in soft blankets that absorb water and placed in small plastic cubes, about an inch square. After the seeds germinate, the cubes are placed over an opening in a conduit that carries liquid nutrients to the plants' roots.

Each patented light bulb is surrounded by a water-filled globe that captures the heat and keeps the crops from getting scorched. In winter, the captured heat is redistributed to warm the building, greatly lowering energy costs.

Cole Porter's 'Can Can' Set For London Opening

By Matt Wolf
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — The Paris of the 1890s is high-kicking its way across the London stage, as a new production of Cole Porter's "Can-Can" furthers Britain's love affair with the American musical.

"You can't get better music than Porter, (and) you certainly can't get better lyrics than Porter," producer Lovett Bickford said of the show whose songs include "C'est Magnifique," "Allez-Vous-En" and "I Love Paris."

He added in an interview that the musical's name was one of its primary virtues. "Can-Can" refers to the spirited and rowdy dance women performed in Paris nightspots, involving high kicks and flirty exposures of lacy undergarments. The musical takes place at the Montmartre nightclub, Le Bal du Paradis, presided over by the musical's heroine, Mme. Pistache.

The production, budgeted at just under $1.7 million, opens Oct. 26 at the Strand Theater. It's one of a wave of American musicals to recently play the West End, following "Kiss Me, Kate," "Annie Get Your Gun," "South Pacific" and "Brigadoon."

Donna McKechnie, who originated the role of Cassie in Broadway's "A Chorus Line," stars as the leggy Pistache, who is romantically pursued by the same judge who wants to close Le Bal du Paradis for being "immoral."

Milo O'Shea and Bernard Alane head the supporting cast. Janie Dee plays Claudine, the role that launched Gwen Verdon to stardom when "Can-Can" made its Broadway bow in 1953.

David Taylor directs, with choreography by Kenn Oldfield. The show was seen in London in 1954 and revived on Broadway, to mixed reviews, in 1981. A road company version, starring Chita Rivera and The Rockettes from Radio City Music Hall, is currently touring the United States.

However, Bickford said his version was less a revival than a complete revision. "For all intents and purposes, this is a new show," he said.

He has hired lyricist Julian More of "Irma La Douce" and "Expresso Bongo" fame to rewrite the book by the late Abe Burrows, the musical's original director.

"We've strengthened the romantic element, lessened the comedy," he said. "We're trying to make a comment about hypocrisy — moral hypocrisy, sexual hypocrisy, business hypocrisy — that is as applicable today as it was in the 1890s."

McKechnie called the show "a bit-tersweet love story, with a happy ending, naturally."

She was approached by Bickford to do "Can-Can" when she was on tour in Boston last year with the Bob Fosse musical, "Sweet Charity."

The 47-year-old Detroit-born performer said she had few qualms about inheriting a role often played by genuine Frenchwomen. Shirley Maclaine had the part in the 1960 movie, which also starred Maurice Chevalier, Juliet Prowse, Frank Sinatra and Louis Jourdan.

"We don't use the French accent; we don't do 'allo, allo,'" she said. "It's American, but I say things with the lilt of a French feeling."

McKechnie made her Broadway debut in 1961 as a dancer in Abe Burrows' "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying." She said she was pleased, almost three decades later, to be working again on one of his shows.

"It's another full circle," she said. "I adored Abe. He was the first director that really encouraged me."

"Can-Can" marks her fourth appearance on the West End stage, following runs in "Promises, Promises" and "Company," and a short engagement in 1977 in "A Chorus Line."

"The theater business is London and New York, and we're doing a lot of shows together," she said. "London's like a second home to me. It's very close now."

The role itself also appeals to McKechnie, who has been associated almost exclusively with "A Chorus Line," the longest-running Broadway show ever. She originated the part of the anguished hooper Cassie, and was briefly married to the show's director-choreographer Michael Bennett, who died last year of AIDS.

"This is a very important part for me," she said. "It opens a whole other genre of roles — the kind I used to think of as a young dancer on Broadway, when I'd look up at the big stars hoping to grow into those roles, if I can last."

Actresses Save Real-Life Dramas

NEW YORK — You can tell things are getting slow when actresses such as Bernadette Peters and Julie Christie start turning up in made-for-TV movies.

Peters in "David" on Tuesday and Christie in CBS' "Dadah Is Death" next Sunday and Monday are the best things going for the two dramas, both based on real-life stories.

ABC's "David" is the better of the two movies, the story of David Rothenberg, the boy whose father set him on fire in a custody dispute. Peters is excellent as Marie Rothenberg, the spunky mother determined to give her son a normal life despite his severe physical and emotional scars.

John Glover is also notable as Charles, the boy's father. Glover gives him a wide-eyed helplessness that exasperates the police who are dying to despise him.

While avoiding outright sensationalism — the movie was directed by Emmy winner John Erman — there seems to be no real sense of mission here. "David" should aspire to be an uplifting story of surviving pain, but it spends too much time in excruciating suspense leading up to the horrible event everyone knows is going to happen.

Nevertheless, its heart is in the right place.

"Dadah Is Death" has more problems, since it never provides any good reason to watch it other than Christie's superb performance, also as a spunky mom. This mother is a blue-collar Australian determined to save her ne'er-do-well son from a death sentence for smuggling drugs in Malaysia.

CBS is running "Dadah Is Death" in two parts. Four hours is too long by at least two, if not four hours. After struggling through this incredibly slow-paced downer, there's not even an emotional payoff at the end.

Neither is there a hero, except for Christie as the mother. Even then, it's difficult to root for her, absent any sympathy for her son, and Kevin (John Polson) just doesn't generate any. Whatever the real Kevin was like, the TV Kevin comes off as an inevitable loser. For instance, we're supposed to cheer him when he invites vicious prison guards to fight him fair and square after they've beaten the stuffing out of his cellmate. Of course, they beat Kevin up, too.

The miniseries was shot in Australia and Malaysia, but even the location scenery is not used to advantage, and there has to be something to distract viewers from the boring plot and wooden dialogue. As often troubles movies based on a true story, the filmmakers are determined to show every nuance of the tale whether viewers need it or not.

Granted, this is a tragic tale, but from the unwitting television viewers' point of view, "Dadah Is Death" will take on new meaning.

Staying In Touch
NEW YORK (AP) — George Burns, who for years urged his wife and partner in comedy Gracie Allen to "Say goodnight, Gracie," still has something to say to her 24 years after her death.
At 92, he has collaborated with ghostwriter David Fisher on the book, "Gracie: A Love Story," due out next week.
"I have to be honest. I was a lousy lover," Burns writes. "But Gracie married me for laughs, not for sex. Of course, she got both of them — when we had sex, she laughed."
In 1964, when the heart disease that had plagued her for years finally took Gracie's life, Burns was inconsolable. For a time, Burns says, "things were very, very bad for me. My life was Gracie."
Things eventually turned around, but he still visits her grave monthly in Glendale, Calif., bringing flowers and conversation.
"I talk to her," Burns says in this week's issue of People magazine. "I tell her what I'm doing."
