Fire Damages Powerboat Plant

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

WASHINGTON, N.C. — Fire destroyed a portion of one of five buildings housing Fountain Power Boats Inc. Thursday, but boat-building continued today, a plant official said.

A blaze was reported at 11:45 a.m. in the lamination area of one of the manufacturing buildings at the plant on Whichard's Beach Road near Washington.

Beaufort County Emergency Management Coordinator Daden Wolfe said six fire departments fought the blaze, as did a specially equipped firefighting helicopter loaned by the Weyerhaeuser Co. The fire departments taking part were Washington, Bunyan, Chocowinity, Clark's Neck, Blount's Creek and Old Ford.

Wolfe said the work of the helicopter supplied by Weyerhaeuser speeded the extinguishing of the fire. The pilot, Charles Lewis, was able to dip large quantities of water from the Pamlico River near the plant and dump it into the heart of the blaze.

Two firefighters were reported treated for smoke inhalation at Beaufort County Hospital.

Ken Bornstein, an executive vice president of the company, said the plant's 340 employees met at 8 a.m. today. None will be totally laid off during the partial down time until the building portion and molds can be replaced, but some will work fewer hours.

It appears now that insurance will cover the damage to the building and equipment, Bornstein said. He had no estimate of the value of the loss.

He said many of the plant employees will resume working as soon as the insurance adjusters give the go-ahead to rebuild the damaged facility and replace equipment. In the meantime, he said, some boat-building can continue. "Two months' worth" of boats in stages of development other than lamination were not damaged and work on those is under way, he said.

Morrell Company Hit By $4 Million Fine By OSHA

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Occupational Safety and Health Administration today fined John Morrell & Co. $4.33 million, the largest fine ever against a single employer, for what the agency said were hundreds of "willful safety and health violations" at the meatpacker's Sioux Falls, S.D., plant.

OSHA said Morrell knew as early as 1984 that working conditions at the plant were causing "serious and sometimes disabling cumulative trauma injuries" but did nothing to change those conditions.

The company's own injury and illness records showed that 880 of 2,000 employees at the plant sustained such injuries, caused by long periods of repetitive motion, from May 1987, to April 1988, the government said.

"This case involves an employer who knew about a serious health hazard, saw the tragic toll on its workers and chose to ignore it," said Assistant Labor Secretary John A. Pendergrass.

OSHA officials said ergonomics specialists from the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health found during an inspection begun six months ago that 722 employees were being exposed daily to a significant risk of cumulative trauma disorders from repeated hand, wrist and arm motions. The most common form of the affliction, officials said, is carpal tunnel syndrome.

Pendergrass said the incidence of cumulative trauma disorders among workers at the Sioux Falls plant was nine times greater than the meatpacking industry average of 4.8 per 100 full-time workers per year and 600 times the rate for all U.S. industries.

Morrell said in a statement that it considered the fine "grossly unfair and totally unjustified." The company hinted that it might take the matter to court.

Pendergrass said that many of the disorders could have been easily prevented.

"The design of knives, for instance, can reduce trauma," Pendergrass said, adding that the biggest improvement needed was a change in the "attitudes of management."

Under the law, Morrell has 15 days to pay the fine or appeal it to a Labor Department review board.

In its statement, Morrell said it was considering seeking an injunction "to stop OSHA from singling us out for penalties and imposition of arbitrary standards for what is clearly a national, multi-industry safety and health problem."

Morrell also said that its on-the-job safety record had improved dramatically this year.

Morrell said injuries needing to be reported to OSHA, expressed as injuries per 1,000 full-time workers, had fallen from 70.5 in January to 16.75 in October.

The company's statement also maintained that "the simplest and most reliable method" of avoiding excessive repetitive motions" was varying workers' daily routines. But, the meatpacker said, "union work rules and the grievance process have often been used to block" such changes.

Soviets To Test Space Shuttle

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — A Soviet space shuttle that looks much like the U.S. version is set for an unmanned test flight this weekend, a belated Soviet acknowledgement that a shuttle is a good idea after all.

The shuttle named Buran, Russian for snowstorm, is scheduled for launch at 6:23 a.m. Moscow time Saturday (11:23 p.m. EDT Friday) from the Baikonur Cosmodrome on the Central Asian steppes of Kazakhstan.

A Soviet TV announcer has indicated the launch time could be pushed back because tests of systems may take longer than anticipated. A Tass dispatch late Thursday from the launch site said "final operations are under way."

For years, the Soviets wouldn't admit they were developing their own shuttle, or "chelnok," even though Western specialists date the program back to 1982.

In June 1980, 10 months before the United States launched the Columbia, the chief of cosmonaut training said Soviet officials "consider that the employment of these spacecraft is not justified for Soviet research because present tasks can be solved with the well-tested methods in an economical way."

Former cosmonaut Konstantin P. Feoktistov, writing in 1984 in a Soviet newspaper, praised the American shuttle as "an impressive engineering achievement." But, he added, "this system is not sound economically and technologically."

Soviet officials appeared to become believers after settling on a different focus for their shuttle than the one NASA chose.

The U.S. shuttle was designed primarily to ferry satellites into orbit. But Alexander I. Dunayev, the head of the Soviet space agency Glavkosmos, said in 1987 that shuttles are not as economical as single-use rocket boosters for placing satellites into orbit.

In the clearest hint of the Soviet shuttle's purpose, he said such craft are valuable for servicing space stations and satellites and recovering objects from orbit.

The reasoning seems sound because ever since they pioneered space flight with the 1957 launch of Sputnik, the Soviets have forged a proven track record for launching satellites on single-use rockets. They put up more than 150 satellites a year, more than any other country.

In addition, the Soviets have concentrated on maintaining a perma-

Time Goes Back An Hour Sunday

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — An American family ritual comes around again this weekend: the changing of the clocks.

This is the weekend most folks get an extra hour to sleep, or carouse, or whatever it is they like to do in the wee hours of the morning.

Of course, that means it's also the weekend some people get stuck working an extra hour — factory workers and convenience store clerks, bartenders, police and even some news reporters.

For most people, though, it simply means having to remember to set the clock back — that's right, back — an hour before retiring Saturday night.

Technically, the change occurs at 2 a.m. local time, which becomes 1 a.m., and an hour is repeated.

Or, in the words of the Uniform Time Act which set up the system of switching between daylight and standard times, clocks are "retarded" an hour at 0200 on the last Sunday in October.

The move to standard time means that darkness will come earlier in the evenings now, with that hour of light shifted back to the morning hours to get the nation off to work on the right foot.

Clocks will be "advanced" to daylight time next April 2, reports the Department of Transportation, which is responsible for keeping track of the semiannual switches.

That's the agency in charge of the time change because the system of uniform time zones was originally established, more than a century ago, to simplify time keeping for the nation's railroads.

Two other federal agencies share time keeping responsibilities for the nation, however.

The U.S. Naval Observatory in Washington is in charge of telling us what time it is, at any given time.

That's because knowing the exact time is important for navigators trying to determine their position by looking at the stars.

The observatory started giving the time out publicly in 1845, by dropping a red ball from a flagstaff daily at noon. That gave sailors something by which to set their watches.

Police Expand Halloween Area

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Greenville police have developed plans to help ensure this year's downtown Halloween festivities go on in an orderly and safe manner.

Included in the plans to handle the expected crowds for Monday's holiday is an expension of the restricted automobile traffic area and the strategic placement of manned checkpoints along downtown streets.

Downtown Greenville has in recent years become a central point for costume-clad Halloween partygoers from throughout North Carolina and even as far away as Virginia and South Carolina.

Last year approximately 20,000 ECU students, local townspeople and visitors filled the streets of Greenville on Halloween night dressed in outrageous outfits, celebrating the annual end-of-October ritual.

Football Player Cleared Of Trespassing

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

An East Carolina University football player charged with trespassing on campus was found innocent Thursday in Pitt County District Court.

ECU Campus Police arrested Ernest L. Pendleton, 19, of 213-A Scott Hall on Sept. 30 after finding him in Cotten Hall, an all-female dormitory, at 1:55 a.m., according to Officer M.S. Wheeler. Curfew was 1 a.m.

Pendleton was banned from all residence halls on March 2 after he was charged with assaulting a female in a campus dormitory. Pendleton told Judge James E. Ragan of Oriental that he had every reason to believe the ban had been lifted once he was found innocent in March of the assault charge.

"I was led to believe by the football coaches that the ban had been lifted," Pendleton, who defended himself, said on the witness stand. "I was banned from campus until after the trial."

Pendleton said he understood from the coaching staff and Ronald Speier, vice chancellor of student services at ECU, that the status of the ban depended on the outcome of the trial. He also presented Ragan with a letter from ECU head coach Art Baker explaining the situation.

Ragan and Assistant District Attorney Elizabeth Warren, who prosecuted Pendleton on Wednesday, were both involved in the two-day trial in March in which Pendleton was cleared of the assault charge.

Speier testified that he met with Pendleton March 2 and gave him 24 hours to move out of Scott Hall and indefinitely banned him from entering any campus residence hall. According to university policy, Speier said, only the person that institutes the ban is authorized to lift it, and he never lifted the ban.

Speier said he was never told by university officials that the ban was to be lifted, and no one ever asked him to allow Pendleton to move back into campus housing.

"If I had been asked, I probably would have lifted the ban," Speier said on the witness stand. "But, I was never asked."

Pendleton said he moved back into a dorm after being acquitted and lived in a dorm during the summer. He also lives on campus now, and he said Speier and other housing officials have seen him often on campus.

Speier said it is not unusual for a campus resident to have limited privileges, such as being banned from all dorms except the one in which they live. Pendleton testified that Speier once said the arrest was an "administrative slip-up," but Speier did not address that comment.

Under cross examination from Ms. Warren, Pendleton said Speier never told him the ban was lifted. In a sharp exchange, Ms. Warren also asked Pendleton if he got into trouble before by being in the wrong dorm room. Pendleton said no.

As for being in a female dorm after curfew, Pendleton said that is a violation of university policy, not state law.

Ragan agreed, saying, "I feel like he has a valid point in that regard. I feel like the university can deal with that. I'm going to find him not guilty."

In a telephone interview today, Speier said the university did take action against Pendleton for violating curfew, but he declined to say what was done.

But Speier said the first time a student violates visitation hours, the student is usually give a warning — if the violation occurs within one hour of curfew — and visitation privileges may be taken away on a second violation. If the violation occurs later, the penalty is usually stiffer.

The penalty is also more severe if the person is not a student, or if there are other factors involved such as alcohol, vandalism or harassment of the campus officer.

Dialysis Training Center Wins Permit For Facility

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Operators of a kidney dialysis training center were given permission to operate a facility within a shopping center located west of Pitt County Memorial Hospital by the Greenville Board of Adjustment.

Board members voted Thursday to grant a special use permit to Pitt Internal & Renal Medicine Associates Ltd. to operate the center in Stanton Square Shopping Center at 2430 Stantonsburg Road.

The permit was required to allow the medically-related use on property zoned for MD-4 (medical district shopping center) use.

A representative of the center, Dr. Thomas Burkhart, told the board that a major reason for selecting the property to locate the facility was the amount of available space at the shopping center.

"The dialysis population has grown quite a bit and at the present time we are in a space crunch and our present facility is not adequate, in our opinion, to meet the needs of these patients," he said.

Several petitioners scheduled to present requests to the board Thursday opted to continue their requests to a later date as only eight of the 10 voting board members were in attendance. A request requires eight affirmative votes from the board to be approved.

Agenda items continued included requests by: Gary Nobles for a special use permit to operate a dermagraphic studio at 106 E. Fourth Street; Eddie Yarrell for a special use permit to operate a trucking company on the north side of William Tingen Road (State Road 1420), approximately 230 feet east of the intersection of William Tingen Road and SR 1441; Hostetler's Tennis Shop for a variance from the Zoning Ordinance to allow the placement of a free-standing sign at 218-C Arlington Boulevard, and by Autumnfield of Pitt County for a special use permit to operate a rest home on the west side of Williams Road (SR 1135), approximately 368 feet south of Dickenson Avenue Extension.

The board will conduct a special session at 5:30 p.m. Monday in the council chambers of City Hall to hear the request from Autumnfield of Pitt County.

In other matters Thursday the board denied a request by Bobby Dixon for a special use permit to construct 112 multifamily dwellings under land-use intensity development standards on a 6.2-acre lot, located on Shenandoah Circle between Toabacco Road and Rollingwood Cluster Homes.

Among the criteria by which the board denied the request were safety concerns caused from expected additional traffic from the proposed development, and the location of an access street onto Tobacco Road, which was proposed on a curved stretch of the corridor.

City Planner Jack Simoneau said land-use intensity development standards allow the development of a property regulated by a specific number of square feet of total building per acre rather than conventional standards which regulate development at a certain number of units per acre.

A special use permit was issued to Rose-Mary Hill Glover to operate a beauty shop in her home at 2115 S. Village Drive

The board renewed special use permits to continue the operation of two local nightclubs — Ollie's Tavern at 720 N. Greene St. and Unlimited Touch, 1311 W. Fifth St.

Conley Student Faces Sentencing In Assault Case

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A D.H. Conley student, accused of possessing a loaded sawed-off shotgun at Rose High during summer school, was found guilty Thursday of three counts of assault with a deadly weapon in connection with a separate incident Sept. 10.

District Court Judge James E. Ragan of Oriental found Ehyin Mohamod Youssef, 16, of 2106 S. Charles St. guilty of assaulting three Farmville residents by attempting to run over them with an automobile.

Each charge is a misdemeanor and carries a maximum penalty of two years, but Ragan delayed the sentencing until Nov. 7 when he is scheduled to be back in Pitt District Court. Ragan said he would consider a presentencing report on Youssef before handing down the punishment.

In addition to the assault charges, Youssef was tried on two counts of injuring personal property. The charges should be treated as two separate incidents, Ragan said, and he found Youssef innocent of damaging the personal property of Chevalier Jefferson of 211 Cameron St. in Farmville and Samuel Saunders of 102 Allen St. in Farmville. The two claimed Youssef intentionally ran into their automobiles, causing several hundred dollars worth of damage.

Youssef was also scheduled to be tried this week in Superior Court on charges of possessing a weapon of mass destruction — which is a felony — and possessing a weapon on school grounds, but prosecutors have not called Youssef's case for trial. There has been no continuance date set.

He is accused of having the gun in a gym bag on the Rose High campus on Aug. 2, the last day of a countywide session of summer school. The felony charge is punishable by up to five years in prison.

Saunders, Reginald Suggs of 105 Taylors Turn and Iris Jefferson of Farmville testified Thursday against Youssef regarding the assault charges. Ms. Jefferson is the mother of 5-year-old Damian Jefferson, who was walking along Cameron Street with Saunders and Suggs when Youssef allegedly swerved a green Cadillac he was driving to within inches of the right curb, forcing the pedestrians to jump to the sidewalk and jerk the child from the road.

Saunders and Jefferson testified that they quickly got into their cars and followed Youssef to Greenville, where they said he stopped in the turn lane on U.S. 264 west of Greenville Boulevard and backed up into their cars.

Youssef denied ever seeing the walkers as he drove drove from Farmville, but he said Saunders approached him in Farmville and tried to "start something."

After Youssef left Farmville, he said he spotted the two cars driven by Saunders and Jefferson following him, and he said people in the cars passed sticks to one another. He was afraid, he said, and slowed several yards short of a stoplight hoping it would turn green so he could move away from the cars.

Youssef testified that one driver pulled in front of him and another in back, and Saunders, Suggs and Jefferson got out the cars with sticks. Pinned in, Youssef said he had to back into one car to make room to leave.

Ragan said he had more confidence in Youseff's testimoney about the incident on the highway. The court is designed to protect innocent people, Ragan said, and people that drive from Farmville to Greenville in a "posse" or "mob" fashion do not need protection.

But Ragan found Youssef guilty of assault. "I frankly don't believe what the defendant said about the first incident," he said. There was clearly a conflict in Farmville, he said, because it led to the second incident.

Rand, Gardner Backers Trade Campaign Blows

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

State Republican Party chairman Jack Hawke rented a 26-foot boat and had it hauled to GOP headquarters in Raleigh to help illustrate his charge that Democratic lieutenant governor nominee Tony Rand is too cozy with drug dealers, whom he has represented as a defense attorney.

Surrogates for Rand, meanwhile, released a thick stack of documents Thursday recording judgments and lawsuits entered against Republican nominee Jim Gardner over the past two decades, charging that his history of business troubles raised questions about his fitness to serve.

The candidates themselves were on the campaign trail — Gardner accompanying GOP vice presidential nominee Dan Quayle in Charlotte and Rand stumping in Fayetteville.

Jack Hawke, the Republican state chairman, climbed aboard a 26-foot yacht outside the state GOP headquarters in Raleigh for a news conference. Republicans hung a banner on the yacht reading "Rand's Navy" and listing the names of three alleged drug dealers, saying he had represented them or their cohorts.

Hawke said the boat was similar to one that Rand received from a client who was charged with drug smuggling. Rand has said the man gave him the boat, which Rand later sold, as payment for services rendered.

"Mr. Rand would have us believe as he talks about representing drug dealers that he does it because ... everybody has a right to have an attorney when they go to court," Hawke said. But he said Rand was "a friend and associate of drug dealers."

"He takes boats from them, gifts from drug dealers," Hawke said. "There is a connection here ... that weighs heavily on a person who is going to be in the second most important office in this state, a heartbeat away from the governorship. Do we want the governor ... to be given gifts by drug dealers?"

Local GOP organizations are buying space in newspapers across the state for an advertisement showing a photocopied address book that allegedly belonged to drug dealer Dennis Carl Cable, one of Rand's former clients. The book contained Rand's name and phone number.

"It is no wonder that a drug kingpin would keep Tony Rand's phone number handy," the ad says. "Before he sought public office, Rand was a favorite defense attorney of drug smugglers."

At the state Democratic Headquaters, Rand finance chairman John Bode said Republicans were trying to divert attention from Gardner's record of business failures and his attendance record during his U.S. House term from 1966 to 1968.

Gardner missed more than 50 percent of the recorded House votes in 1968, when he was running for governor.

Bode released a thick stack of documents outlining 28 recorded judgments and suits entered against Gardner over the past two decades. The latest was a suit filed Tuesday in Wake County Superior Court. It alleges that Gardner's barbecue restaurant business reneged on a lease deal in Raleigh and is "unlawfully" holding $70,000 worth of another businessman's equipment.

"It is not a record, in my judgment, of business achievement," said Bode, a corporate attorney.

Asked whether Gardner's business problems made him unfit to be lieutenant governor, Bode said, "You know his public service record doesn't qualify him. I don't think this (his business record) qualifies him. I don't know what else it is about him that would make him capable of leading the North Carolina Senate."

Most of the judgments stemmed from Gardner's highly-publicized motel and real estate ventures in the 1970s, which suffered a series of reverals that he has blamed on the energy crisis and soaring interest rates.

They will be looking for nurses, physical therapists, occupational therapists, clinical laboratory specialists as well as graduates from a variety of other therapy and service programs at ECU.

The program is 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. in the Carol Belk (Allied Health) Building.

Local ECU Health Careers Day participants include Pitt County Memorial Hospital and Beaufort County Hospital in Washington.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Past, Future, Irrevocably Linked

Is Greenville destined to be a city without a history?

If architecturally historic properties like the Patrick-Arthur house continue to fall victim to development, the community could become devoid of landmarks that represent its past. And when a city doesn't place much value on its past, that raises a question of whether this city can effectively come to terms with its future.

There must be some way for Greenville and developers to resolve differences and save the Patrick-Arthur house from demolition. The fate of that house has focused attention on the plight of historic properties in Greenville but efforts to save it haven't worked.

Public and private entities negotiated an agreement on cost-sharing to pay for moving the structure when the City Council rezoned the property the house sits on to allow a shopping center to be built.

But the deal fell through last week when the city discovered it had only seven, not 14, days after the land changed hands to complete the move. That means the city must obtain a housemover, notify utilities and cable companies and find a place to park the structure in just one week.

That is not a reasonable amount of time to complete those responsibilities. And if the city proceeded with moving plans before the land changed hands and the other parties backed out of the deal, taxpayers would be stuck with the financial liability of the agreement. That kind of vulnerability is unacceptable.

But neither is abandoning the structure — one of the last Gothic-influenced Victorian farm houses of the 19th century in Greenville — to the wrecking ball. Few of the city's historic houses remain — the Fleming House and the Humber House are two notable exceptions. Their renovation and use has been significant to the community.

While public entities shouldn't dabble heavily in the business of spending taxpayer money on preservation, they should encourage efforts by example-setting and reasonable financial participation. Lines have to be drawn.

The lines appeared correctly drawn in the case of the Patrick-Arthur house. Surely some compromise on liability can be worked out. Surely Greenville — which agreed to pay a moderate $5,000 while the developer and owners of the house pay $20,000 to move it — can negotiate to save it.

Being a city sans history, a city with little visible evidence of its past, is not an attractive prospect. A lack of heed for the past doesn't bode well for the future.

Fun, Danger

Make Sure All Tricks Are Treats

Halloween is a fun time. The National PTA is urging, however, that the fun and festivity be had without risk to health and safety.

"Children can become so excited about a special time like Halloween that they lose sight of the potential dangers, said Manya Ungar, National PTA president. For the National PTA, Halloween will kick off the third annual Child Safety and Protection Month.

Kids will be moving about neighbors on Monday night as the trick or treat tradition is re-enacted. They will range from tiny tots to teen-agers.

The PTA urges that adults accompany children and unfamiliar neighborhoods or homes be avoided.

Other good ideas include:

•Children should walk on sidewalks and older kids without adults should travel in groups.

•Never use candles, use flashlights.

What is important is the safety of children on Halloween night.

In Greenville Halloween has another dimension. It is a festive time for college aged students and young adults. Thus it is a time for safety and care for them, too.

Those attending the various parties around town should have fun. But they should not drive while drinking alcohol. The designated driver — one who stays sober — is a must.

Halloween fun is fine, but it also a time of danger. If safety comes first, however, a night of tragedy can be avoided.

Isn't it rather ironic that the Democrats are now crying loud and long about a dirty, negative campaign. They seem to object to hearing about Willie Horton, the Boston Harbor and the little Duke riding in a tank where he looks like a squirrel peeking out from under a chamber pot. The Duke did let Willie out. He is the Governor of Massachusetts and his TV crew took the tank pictures and ran them on TV.

On Nov. 8 about 8 p.m., the Duke, Jesse, Teddy Boy and Jimmy are going to get their answer, "George in in the White House."

To the editor:

President Reagan came to North Carolina in an effort to bolster the chances of GOP candidates. But he came to the wrong state. North Carolina's state motto is "To be rather than to seem." And during the past eight years, Reagan and George Bush have exalted appearance over substance.

They claim to be strong opponents of crime. But Ed Meese and a hundred other Reagan appointees have had to resign their positions under clouds of criminal wrongdoing, while Bush tried to prevent drug indictments against Panamanian strongman Manuel Noriega.

They claim to support a strong military posture. But they paid blackmail to terrorists, thereby guaranteeing further hostage-taking.

They claim to have created a prosperous economy, and the wealthiest five percent in the nation have seen an increase of over 35 percent in real income over the past 10 years. But the incomes of the poorest 10 percent among us have fallen by 10.5 percent, and the vast majority of middle-class voters have also lost ground. Home ownership is down for the first time since 1940. And the largest creditor nation in the world has become the large debtor nation, increasingly in the financial grip of foreign interests. Meanwhile, the nation's annual deficits continue to spiral upward. $200 billion a year in rubber checks may create a Republican illusion of prosperity, but only an illusion.

Finally, they claim to be environmentalists. But Reagan believes trees cause pollution, and an environmental group gave George Bush's environmental record a "D" — a grade only "General" Quayle could be proud of.

Given his many years in Hollywood, Reagan can perhaps be forgiven his confusion of illusion and reality. But Bush has no excuse for his efforts to sell myth as fact. The voters shouldn't be fooled.

To the editor:

We shouldn't lose sight of the fact that whoever is finally elected as our President, that is, whosoever floats to the top of this political cesspool will have a whale of a job on his hands.

Bush in all of his nerdy, preppie, Ivy League glory has pushed "The Duke" around in an attempt to look "tough." He'd like to be seen as "presidential," even distinguished. Unfortunately, what he appears to be is a grownup nerd trying to shed his nerd-skin like a snake sheds a snakeskin. He's so dull (and has been nothing more than a shadow of his boss)! He has no record to run on because he's done nothing of importance (at least nothing presidential). So he scowls, growls and damns the liberals.

Mr. Dukakis doesn't strike me as a preppie or as a nerd. He does strike me as dull, however. Not that calm and reserve equal dull, mind you. I mean, in a tight spot, in a pinch — wouldn't you rather have Bush scowling and voice raised two octaves stammering and bungling at our mutual adversary (whomever it might be)? Why have a calm, cool, logical guy like "The Duke" representing us? Forget the labels — conservative, moderate, liberal. We have to elect a leader and our choices are limited. If you are undecided, just say "President Quayle" — it surely scares me!

To the editor:

I read with total disbelief the article in the Reflector regarding some parents' concern over the 6th and 8th grade state writing test being administered the day after Halloween.

Do these parents of 6th and 8th graders allow their children to go around town with a big feed sack and stay out until all porch lights go out? Do these same parents allow their children to then gorge on their treats before they go to bed until they become physically sick and hyperactive?

Traditionally, Halloween has been an evening for young children to "trick-or-treat" early in the evening. Moreover, because of increased vandalism, damage to personal property, etc., on Halloween night, recent emphasis is being placed on restricting youngsters to their own neighborhoods.

It appears to me that these parents have misplaced priorities. The educational needs of all students should not be juggled around to accommodate a select group of parents. It is both the parents' and school system's responsibility to put education first. Parents, it's time we exercise that responsibility.

Too Busy Defending The Orthodox

William Raspberry

WASHINGTON — When I first met him, Paul Pryde was a protest-marching liberal. Today, he is one of a growing band of black conservatives.

And yet, Paul Pryde is the same man I have known all these years: smart as a whip, an astute economic and political analyst, with a keen eye for opportunity disguised as disadvantage.

Pryde, less interested in political labels than in social and economic change, has managed to avoid the paralysis that has changed America's once-proud liberalism into the whispered "L word."

"The distinction between the liberals of today and the liberals of yesterday," says the 46-year-old economic consultant, "is that today's liberals are no longer innovators. They are the defenders of the orthodoxies. The innovators of today are likely to be the people we call neoconservatives."

But many of the programs and policies the liberals feel pressed to defend are under increasing attack as wrongheaded, ineffectual or too expensive. Wide-scale busing-for-integration schemes have lost the support of perhaps a majority of black parents, who prefer better schools to integrated ones. The notion that welfare mothers ought to be free to choose whether to work or stay home with their children has run up against the reality of middle-class mothers who have no choice but to work. The rehabilitative model of prison reform is less enticing in light of the slim evidence that it works.

Such concepts as affirmative action (at least to the degree that it means racial preference) and comparable worth divide even liberals. The easiest-to-defend legacies of the liberal movement are today's orthodoxies, with no party-line distinctions and no respectable opposition: voting rights, open housing, fairness in employment, nonracial access to places of public accommodation.

The result is a sort of ideological stalemate which, Pryde believes, accounts for the shrillness of the presidential campaign.

"In terms of what is called the black agenda, it won't matter much which one is elected. I mean, what's on that agenda? Civil rights legislation, increased social spending and the appointment of blacks to high office. Well, there's no legislation that is all that critical or likely to pass; the deficit precludes any major increases in social spending, and the differences in appointments, whether Bush or Dukakis is elected, will be minuscule. The only difference I can see is in the sort of people who might be appointed to the Supreme Court."

But is Pryde suggesting that conservatives are bubbling with innovations that would redound to the advantage of blacks?

"There are," he explains, "two groups of conservatives: those who don't want to do anything, and those who want to do things differently. That second group includes people like myself; it includes Republicans like Jack Kemp, Democrats like Doug Wilder and Chuck Robb, who say that some of the things we have tried haven't worked very well and that we need to try something different. It even includes Jesse Jackson, who for years has been preaching an essentially conservative message of personal responsibility and economic participation.

Perhaps the hardest thing for liberals to acknowledge, says Pryde, is that many of the landmark victories of the 1960s weakened black institutions. That is because "the institutional framework of the reforms was outside the black community. The changes were institutionalized and bureaucratized — a good thing in one sense, but it undercut the black community organizations, the black churches, even black families.

"I'm not saying we should have objected to the 1960s agenda on the ground that it would weaken black institutions. That would have been simple-minded and wrong. But I am saying that, now that we know what has happened, it makes sense to try to devise innovative ways of revitalizing those institutions.

"One excellent case in point happened just this week: the transformation of the Kenilworth-Parkside public housing complex in Northeast Washington to tenant ownership and control."

But that transformation, soon to be repeated in several cities, was led by conservatives — frequently against the opposition of liberals who, as Pryde suggests, were so busy defending the orthodox they missed the chance to be a part of what at an earlier time would have amounted to a liberal breakthrough.

From Welfare Recipients To Homeowners, Via Conservatives

Stuart Butler

Analysis

WASHINGTON — For the more than 1 million Americans living in federal housing projects, homeownership has long been, at best, a distant dream. Yet, thanks largely to the efforts of conservative lawmakers, this dream is about to become a reality for more than 1,000 such families — and, in the future, perhaps for many more.

Tuesday officials of the Reagan administration cut the ribbon on one of the most remarkable real estate deals of the century. The ceremony at the 464-unit Kenilworth-Parkside housing project here in Washington marked its sale to an association of tenants for $1. Later this year, the 658-unit Carr Square housing project in St. Louis also will be sold to a tenant-management organization.

'Despite the strong support of public housing tenants for the ownership proposal, it was conservative Republican lawmakers, not liberals, who introduced and backed legislation to turn tenants into homeowners.'

These are similar terms to the many "homesteading" programs around the country, under which young professionals buy run-down and vacant buildings for $1 and then renovate them. Only this time the buyers are mainly former welfare recipients. Over a five-year transition period, the tenant-owners will continue to receive government housing assistance. Meanwhile they will seek financial support from corporations and foundations for community services and as seed money for their own commercial activities, such as maintenance firms and project supermarkets. After the transition period, the projects will become private cooperatives or be turned over to individual residents.

The change of ownership is taking place not because a group of liberals, out of their professed concern for the poor, campaigned for the legislation that made it possible. On the contrary, conservatives first introduced the idea of selling projects to tenants. Conservatives labored with the tenants to develop the idea into a workable proposal. And conservatives fought side-by-side with tenants to push legislation through Congress.

The origin of these sales to tenants can be traced to the merging of two powerful movements, one in Britain and one here in the United States. The British component was a program, begun in the early 1970s and greatly expanded in 1980, that allows public housing tenants to buy their homes at a substantial discount. So far this very popular program has resulted in well over 1 million Britons' buying their homes. In 1984 a revised version of the British model, under which entire projects would be sold, rather than individual units, was proposed in this country by the Heritage Foundation.

The U.S. component was the remarkably successful tenant-management movement. Tenant management generally has been a last-hope experiment when "expert" professional managers cannot control a deteriorating, crime-ridden project. Yet these experiments often have led to a dramatic turnaround. At Kenilworth, for instance, a 1982 tenant-management agreement has led to enormous savings in maintenance costs, a dramatic decline in the vacancy rate, and the creation of more than 100 jobs for residents in project-based enterprises and maintenance slots. Thanks to this job creation and tough, no-nonsense management by the tenants, welfare dependency has plummeted from 80 percent in 1982 to just 2 percent today.

Spearheading the fusion of self-help tenant management and British-style tenant ownership was Robert Woodson, president of the National Center for Neighborhood Enterprise. Woodson, a black scholar and community activist, had long been critical of the government as-permanent-crutch philosophy of most black leaders. Like the tenant managers he worked with, he saw ownership as the logical extension of tenant management — providing the poor with the same ownership incentives to improve their neighborhood that homesteading gives to middle-class urban pioneers.

Despite the strong support of public housing tenants for the ownership proposal, it was conservative Republican lawmakers, not liberals, who introduced and backed legislation to turn tenants into homeowners. One of the first was Ronald Reagan. Another was Jack Kemp, a longtime supporter of grass-roots free enterprise. Not only was it a long time before liberals, such as D.C. Del. Walter Fauntroy, offered their support, but many liberal "advocates" for the poor actually opposed and delayed the plan. For instance, the AFL-CIO, and liberal stalwarts such as Rep. Bruce Morrison, D-Conn., bitterly attacked the proposal. Even black liberal organizations, such as the National Urban League, gave no political support to the tenants. It was persistence only by conservatives, and by Fauntroy and a handful of liberals, that led to victory in Congress last December.

While liberals talk endlessly about their concern for the poor, the public housing tenants of Washington, St. Louis and many other cities know better. They know it was the liberals who either sat on the sidelines or actively opposed this example of economic empowerment for the poor — and they know it was conservatives who stood by them when they wanted to become independent homeowners.

By Paul Nowell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Republican vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle accused Michael Dukakis of refusing to discuss issues, but Quayle could not say what programs a George Bush administration would offer on education.

"I haven't sat down and talked with George Bush on this, so I can't tell you how we're going to go in and do it," Quayle said at a news conference Thursday after a speech in Asheville.

When pressed on his contact with Bush — who has said he wants to be known as the "education president" — Quayle said, "I've talked to him about education issues in general terms and we've talked about the importance of education.

"I can tell you he's committed to it but we haven't sat down in a detailed legislative analysis to see specifically what programs that we're going to put forward," Quayle said.

Quayle later flew to Charlotte, where he shouted over hecklers as he characterized Dukakis as "tax-hike Mike."

Quayle, addressing about 2,000 students at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte, seemed to enjoy taunts from about 50 vocal Democrats carrying placards with such messages as "Sissy little rich boy" and "What was your golf handicap during Vietnam?"

"I guess if I had to support Michael Dukakis, I'd yell too," he said, drawing a large ovation from supporters bearing such signs as "Nuke the Duke."

"Our opponents think they can come from behind," Quayle said. "I understand Michael Dukakis is going to Independence, Missouri tonight, the birthplace of Harry Truman. I don't know Michael Dukakis and I've never served with Michael Dukakis but I know one thing. Mike Dukakis is no Harry Truman."

"They don't have anything to say, so they babble a lot," he told his supporters. "They don't want to talk about ideas because they don't have any. They don't invite Michael Dukakis here because he has nothing to say."

In his 15-minute appearance, Quayle gave several names to the Democratic presidential candidate, including "tax-hike Mike," "Mr. Polluter," "Mr. Furlough Man" and "Mr. Weak-On-Defense."

Also appearing at the rally were GOP Gov. Jim Martin and 9th District Rep. Alex McMillan, who are both seeking re-election. Quayle also appeared at the Mallard Creek Barbecue, an annual GOP gathering.

In his Asheville speech, Quayle said Dukakis has tried to conceal his ideology from the American people in a "cynical political move."

Quayle told several hundred supporters at the Grove Park Inn that Republicans are "the party of the future ... we're the ones that are out there talking about ideas." While Dukakis has focused on competence, Quayle said, "I can tell you ideology is important. Ideas are important, and to think you can fool the American people by not talking about ideology was a cynical political move that will not work."

Keeping up the Republican strategy of portraying the Massachusetts governor as a liberal out of step with mainstream America, Quayle said, "Liberalism is a philosophy of the past. It is a philosophy that failed."

On another subject, Quayle told reporters in Asheville that homelessness in America is not due to a lack of low-income housing.

"I would guess that there's adequate low-income housing in the country today, but that doesn't mean that is the only answer or the solution to the problem. That's one of them, and if we can find out it is not adequate low-income housing we'll have to see what we can do about it," Quayle said.

"It's a problem that we're going to have to identify. First, who are the homeless? What are their needs? Are they on the streets because they don't have adequate housing?"

State Officials Say Waste Cleanup Could Be Costly

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Cleaning up the known hazardous wastes sites in North Carolina could cost $50 million, and that's just a fraction of the potential expense, state officials say.

The state has identified about 200 hazardous waste sites, but the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has estimated that there may be more than 700 such sites in North Carolina.

Only 21 of the sites qualify for cleanup under the federal Superfund program. The legislature passed an "orphan dump" law in 1987 aimed at cleaning up the others, but the program operates on $500,000 a year.

State officials told the Environmental Review Commission on Thursday that they might ask for $1.2 million for the program in 1989, but the co-chairman of the legislative panel said that wasn't enough money.

"We'll never get it done if we start out with just $1 million a year," Rep. Joe Hackney, D-Orange, said after the meeting. "I've always looked at it as a decade- or two-decades-long project. Fifty million dollars isn't that much money over 20 years, or even 10."

Earlier this month, the state Solid Waste Management Section spent $344,000 on its first cleanup — a battery site near Asheboro.

"We don't have much of a track record, but the average cost will probably be about $250,000," section chief William Meyer said after the meeting. "Some might be around $50,000; others might be $2 million."

The state has the authority to recover costs from responsible parties, but officials said reimbursement is unlikely in many cases because the owners have either gone out of business or cannot afford it.

"When there is a bankruptcy, it basically falls back on the taxpayers," Hackney said.

The legislative panel plans to explore other ways to pay for cleanups, he said, but the options are limited.

"There are two extremes," said Linda Little, executive director of the Governor's Waste Management Board. "One is to put the whole burden on industries, or the responsible parties. The other extreme is to put it on as broad a base as possible, to institute some kind of tax.

"We're looking for a good answer. It's not going to be easy."

The cleanup site near Asheboro is a good example of that dilemma. State officials said they plan to seek cleanup costs from the owners of the battery site, but aren't sure how successful they will be. The site is on land owned by Glenn Hoskins of Ulah.

"We gave those folks the opportunity to clean it up," Meyer said. "The man said, 'I can't. I don't have the money.'"

"They just threw the batteries against this tree and allowed the lead salts to run out across the ground," said Lee Crosby, head of the Superfund program for the Solid Waste Management Section. "This is where we found the highest concentration of lead."

Lead was found in the soil in concentrations as high as 144,000 parts per million, she said. The metal is poisonous to humans, causing nervous and hearing disorders in lower concentrations.

"Anything above 500 parts per million total lead is considered a direct-contact hazard," she said. The county health department discovered that three children who lived at the site had unsafe levels of lead in their blood, including a 4-year-old with a serious case of lead poisoning.

The state spent 18 days on the cleanup, hauling about 2,000 tons of contaminated soil to the GSX Chemical Services Co. landfill in Pinewood, S.C.

"There is lead left out there at that site, but it is not at levels that we consider a problem," Ms. Crosby said.

Lancaster Denies Base Is Closing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Reports that Seymour Johnson Air Force base in Goldsboro might close were probably based on outdated information, says Rep. Martin Lancaster, whose district includes the base.

"I just don't think there is anything that suggests that Seymour Johnson is a likely candidate, if you take out the possibility that someone looked at old information which indicated more outdated and obsolete equipment than what is here," said Lancaster, a Democrat.

Seymour Johnson, where more than $2 billion worth of weapons are based, was alerted by a story in the Oct. 24 issue of U.S. News & World Report which said it was one of 44 installations being considered for closing by unidentified officials. An independent commission is reviewing which of the nation's 3,800 military installations could be closed to save money.

"They are worried," Lancaster said. "I'm worried. I don't want it to happen."

Lancaster said the base has received a new Air Force tanker aircraft that can refuel jets and bombers while flying, and is scheduled to receive F-15 Eagle fighter jets to replace its fleet of 72 F-4E Phantoms.

And, he said, the base is strategically located on the East Coast for refueling operations and controls a 46,000-acre bombing range in Dare County.

Congress recently passed legislation that authorized a 12-member commission of retired lawmakers, defense specialists and business leaders to recommend which bases should be closed. The non-partisan panel was created to avoid political intervention that had occurred during past efforts to close bases the military considered unnecessary.

When the commission's recommendations are released by Dec. 31, Congress may veto the entire list, but cannot act to protect individual bases.

The U.S. Department of Defense has 18 installations in the state, from small radar units to five major training bases. The largest are Seymour Johnson, Pope Air Force Base near Fayetteville, Fort Bragg Army base near Fayetteville, Camp Lejeune Marine Corps base near Jacksonville and the Cherry Point Marine Corps Air Station in Havelock.

Wesleyan Chief Says College Not For Sale

By Dennis Patterson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Officials at North Carolina Wesleyan College say they would like to pursue exchange programs, but the college is not for sale to Japanese looking for a school to buy or to anyone else.

"While we would be happy to explore the possibility of establishing an exchange program with the Japanese university, that would be the limit to any interest on our part in a relationship with the Japanese university," Wesleyan President Leslie Garner Jr. said Thursday.

John T. Henley, president of the N.C. Association of Independent Colleges and Universities, said this week he has had two inquiries from an unidentified Japanese university wanting to buy a private college or university in the state.

Henley said the Japanese wanted to acquire a financially strapped private college, increase the enrollment of Japanese students and start a faculty and student exchange program.

Garner said N.C. Wesleyan is "in a strong financial position. We are affiliated with the United Methodist Church. If we would be approached we will make it clear that Wesleyan is not going to be sold and is not going to change its relationship with the Methodist church."

The school's board of trustess has not been approached directly by the Japanese, but "only received the same generic letter of inquiry from the Japanese that aparently was sent to other private colleges in the state."

But if the Japanese were successful in acquiring a North Carolina college, it could lead to even better trade relations, a state commerce official said.

"Anything that would increase the knowledge between the Japanese and American peoples would be good," said Steve B. Stevenson, director of the international division of the state Department of Commerce.

"The Japanese are much more foreign to us than Europeans because we are not as capable in their language and they are not as much a presence in our society as Europeans," Stevenson said.

Such an arrangement "could be very good, or it could be a disaster," said Noriko Nagai, an assistant professor of Asian languages at Duke University. "It all depends on who is acquiring it."

She said the American university system is admired in Japan.

"Much attention has been given to Japan's very good secondary schools," she said, "but compared to the United States, their university education is very easy.

"And it is very, very expensive to send a student to a Japanese university," she said.

Wall Street Firms Join Challenge Of RJR Takeover

NEW YORK (AP) — Two powerful members of the Wall Street establishment have joined forces to challenge Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co.'s proposed $20.3 billion buyout of RJR Nabisco Inc.

The investment firm Salomon Brothers Inc. said late Thursday it was joining Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc. and a group of top managers at RJR Nabisco who are considering a challenge to Kohlberg Kravis for control of the Atlanta-based cigarette and food giant.

"The combination of Salomon Brothers and Shearson Lehman Hutton forms a team with extraordinary capital strength and capabilities," F. Ross Johnson, the president and chief executive of RJR Nabisco, said in a prepared statement.

Johnson leads the group of managers who last week announced they were considering offering to buy the company for $17 billion in cooperation with Shearson. He said "numerous" other firms had expressed interest in supporting a bid.

RJR Nabisco's stock fell $2.75 a share to $82 on the New York Stock Exchange on Thursday, before Salomon's entry was announced.

The price decline indicated doubts about the cash value of the Kohlberg Kravis $90-a-share tender offer as well as broader concerns about the health of the takeover business.

Kohlberg Kravis, which launched its tender offer Thursday, said in a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission it was "extremely confident" it could raise the money to complete the bid.

Kohlberg Kravis has lined up some big-league Wall Street backers of its own. It said in its SEC filing that Morgan Stanley & Co., Wasserstein, Perella & Co., Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. and Merrill Lynch Capital Markets were assisting it in structuring and financing the buyout offer.

Analysts said they believed Kohlberg Kravis could raise the money, but said that because the offer was not all cash, it actually was worth less than $90 a share.

RJR Nabisco's stock price had been inflated by expectations that a higher bid might be forthcoming.

Roundup Over

BEAUFORT, N.C. (AP) — A roundup of wild ponies on Carrot Island was completed Thursday, when cowboys and wranglers herded 19 of the animals and shipped them to the mainland.

The process went "very smoothly," said Don Follmer, a spokesman for the North Carolina Department of Natural Resources and Community Development. "No ponies hurt. No people hurt. No riding horses hurt. Everything went real well."

The 19 ponies were rounded up Thursday morning, making a total of 36 that were taken off the island. Seventeen were rounded up Wednesday night, and 19 ponies were left on the island.

The herd is being thinned to prevent overpopulation and starvation, which killed 19 horses in 1987 and left another 10 missing and presumed dead.

Forests Praised

NEW BERN, N.C. (AP) — The chief of the U.S. Forest Service, speaking at a groundbreaking ceremony at Croatan National Forest, said national forests in North Carolina rank among the best in the nation.

"You really are a leader in forestry and you really have a lot of great things going," F. Dale Robertson said during ceremonies for a new 2,830-square-foot ranger office building.

Robertson said the 52-year-old Croatan forest is one of four national forests in North Carolina, giving the state a cross section of mid-South woodlands. Croatan encompasses 157,500 acres in Craven, Carteret and Jones counties, and it is the only national forest in which the Venus flytrap, a carnivorous plant, lives. Stands of pine in the forest are home to the red-cockaded woodpecker, an endangered species.

Sentenced

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — A teen-ager charged in connection with the shooting death of a Fayetteville man last March was sentenced Wednesday to 90 days in the Cumberland County Jail, officials said Thursday.

Anthony Tremayne Saunders, 18, of Fayetteville pleaded guilty in Cumberland County Superior Court to failing to report a felony in the death of 25-year-old Terry Smith, also of Fayetteville.

Judge J. Milton Read Jr. sentenced Saunders to two years in prison, suspended for three years, with three years of probation. One of the terms of probation requi res Saunders to serve an active 90-day sentence in jail.

Read also ordered Saunders to pay $2,200 to Smith's family to cover funeral expenses and to perform 72 hours of community service.

Sex Charges

GREENSBORO (AP) — The adult supervisor of a Greensboro group home for problem adolescents is facing three charges stemming from an alleged sexual encounter with a 17-year-old resident.

Bruce E. Gibson, 27, of Siler City, is charged with a crime against nature, sexual activity by a substitute parent and providing liquor to an underage person, following allegations that he got two of his female charges drunk and then had sex with one of them Oct. 4.

Gibson and the two women were alone at the Act Together house in Greensboro at the time, according to police.

The house, a temporary shelter for troubled teens with problems at home, is operated by Youth Care, a private non-profit agency that operates seven other group homes in Greensboro and offers other counseling services.

Gibson had worked as a house parent at the Act Together house for three years but is no longer employed by Youth Care, Charles Hodierne, Youth Care's executive director, said Thursday.

Sister Says U.S. Should 'Cut A Deal' To Save Hostage

By Kiley Armstrong
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The sister of Terry Anderson, saying "it is OK to cut a deal," called on the United States to make concessions that could free the longest held hostage and others abducted in Lebanon.

Peggy Say, speaking at one of several ceremonies to mark Anderson's 41st birthday Thursday — his fourth as a hostage — also said reporters should not look for impropriety in negotiations to free hostages.

"I am not saying, 'Give in to their demands.' I am saying, 'Engage in dialogue.'" said Mrs. Say. "Iran offered us a deal. They said, 'Release our frozen assets and we will use our influence to bring your hostages home.' We turned our back on it. We cannot afford to do that."

Mrs. Say and journalists met with U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, who condemned the hostages' captors as perpetrators of "a crime against humanity."

"He did say he had some hope that something might develop before Christmas, maybe one, maybe two hostages. He did not go into it, but he said he was hopeful," said David Aikman of The Journalists' Committee to Free Terry Anderson.

Mrs. Say, of Cadiz, Ky., told reporters at a news conference: "Send the message to this administration that it is OK to cut a deal. Never has a hostage been freed without concessions being made."

The Reagan administration repeatedly has said it will not negotiate with those holding the hostages. It says that making deals with captors only encourages further hostage-taking.

At the news conference, a poster-size birthday card was unveiled. It was drawn by Garry Trudeau, Anderson's favorite cartoonist, and was signed by more than 1,000 journalists from 30 organizations.

Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, was abducted in Beirut on March 16, 1985, by the pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem faction called Islamic Jihad, or Holy War. He has been held the longest of the 14 foreign hostages abducted in Lebanon.

"I watched with desperation the coming of his birthdays as a hostage," freed French journalist Jean-Paul Kauffmann said through an interpreter at the news conference. "We ask today whether Terry even is aware that it is his birthday."

"You should know that at this moment, as I speak to you, Terry is in chains. His eyes are blindfolded. He doesn't see the sun or the light of day. "Terry suffers physically. The most terrible thing, though, for him, and I can tell you this because I was also a hostage ... is the feeling of having been abandoned. And I think he is right," said Kauffmann.

In other events marking Anderson's birthday:

—In Lorain, Ohio, where Anderson was born, friends and relatives tied new yellow ribbons to City Hall flagposts and planned a party in his honor.

At a luncheon of the Committee to Protect Journalists, Mrs. Say said the print and broadcast media should play a more active role in publicizing the plight of the hostages so they will be freed.

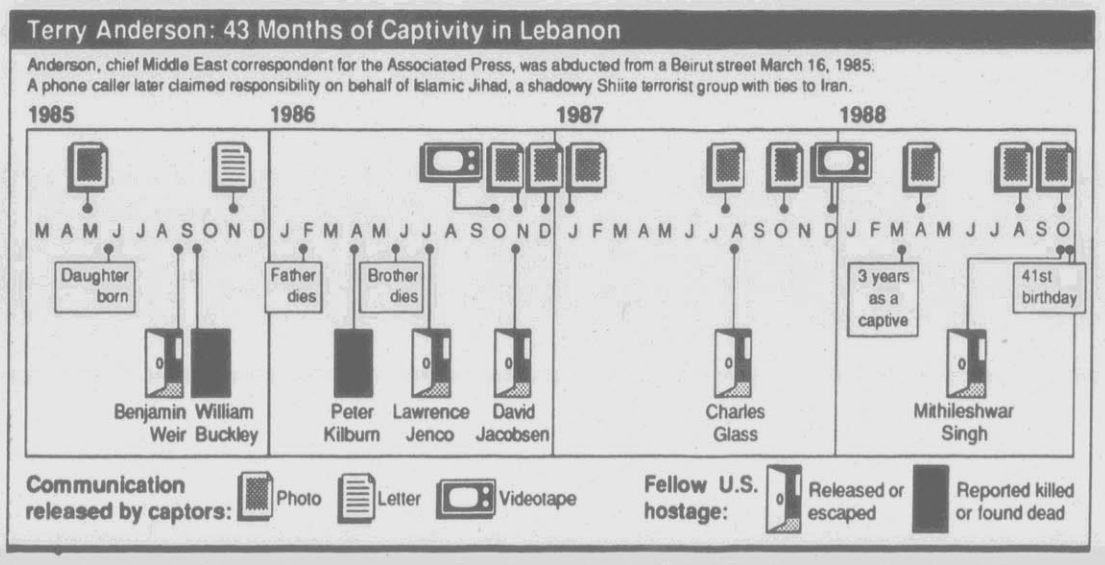
She said the presidential candidates have an "unwritten agreement" that Anderson's captivity not become an issue. "I'm afraid (the election) will come and go and Terry will still be there," she said.

Kauffmann told the luncheon group that constant coverage by the French press and public opinion caused the French government to seek his release.

"Governments say that talking about hostages raises the ransom," he said, "but it's not true."

Also Thursday, the militants holding Anderson denied any links to a woman who was arrested in Italy carrying a photograph of him.

The New York news conference was sponsored by the Journalists Committee to Free Terry Anderson, and No Greater Love, a non-profit support group for hostages' families.



FAA Tells Airlines To Replace Over 7,000 Rivets On Older 737s

By Laura Parker
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — The Federal Aviation Administration on Thursday ordered replacement of 7,200 rivets in every older Boeing 737 jetliner to guard against a possible repeat of an accident last spring in which an Aloha Airlines jet lost a third of its roof in flight.

The far-reaching and costly order affects the 291 oldest Boeing jets and requires that the work be completed within three years. In the meantime, airlines are required to electronically inspect rivet holes for signs of cracking, and until the inspections are completed, the jets are restricted to flying no higher than 26,000 feet. Flying at lower altitudes reduces stress on the fuselage by limiting the amount of pressurization and depressurization of the cabin.

The order is the first since the FAA required emergency inspections of older 737s immediately after the Aloha accident April 28. Two weeks ago, a 30-inch-long series of cracks was discovered on a 19-year-old Continental Airlines 737 while the plane was in Los Angeles for routine painting.

"I would look at this as the first of a number of things to come," said Anthony J. Broderick, the FAA's associate administrator of aviation standards. "I would hope this is atypical, as it is expensive and burdensome. But if you're going to keep an airplane a long time and use it up to and beyond the estimated lifetime, you're going to have to expect to spend money to keep it to the high level of safety that air transportation demands."

Broderick said the FAA is reviewing every structural bulletin it has issued requiring modifications in older aircraft.

The rivet replacement on each 737 is estimated to require 2,016 hours of work, at an estimated cost of $800,000, on each plane. Approximately 177 of the jetliners are flown domestically, and of them, 77 have had some rivet work since the Aloha accident, Broderick said.

After one flight attendant was swept to her death and 61 others injured when the Aloha Airlines jet's top peeled back during an April flight, the FAA ordered rivet replacements for each 737 before it made 80,000 flights.

The FAA now is proposing that the oldest 737s — those that have made 70,000 or more flights — be repaired within six months. The repair time schedule for the other planes is spread out incrementally, with the requirement that the youngest planes — those that have made 40,000 flights — be repaired within three years.

The rivets are located along the overlapping sections where two pieces of fuselage are spliced together. The government is requiring that the type of rivet be changed to one with a protruding head, which is less likely to contribute to cracking.

The order involves only the first 291 of the popular Boeing jets because the first aircraft were assembled with a cold-bonding adhesive that was found to be suseptable to corrosion or cracking. Boeing changed its adhesive in later models.

Flynt's Attorney Says Hitman Report Really Practical Joke

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — A $1 million check written by Hustler magazine publisher Larry Flynt, purportedly for the contract murders of singer Frank Sinatra and three publishers, was really just a practical joke, Flynt's lawyer says.

"The allegations are totally unfounded," Flynt's attorney, Alan Isaacman, said Thursday. "Back in November 1983 Larry Flynt had a dinner party and gave out, as a joke, million-dollar checks to about half a dozen people."

But Los Angeles County Sheriff Sherman Block said he was taking the matter seriously.

"I've been led to believe that Larry Flynt has a propensity to try to harm people he sees as his enemies, whether (over) business arrangements or whatever," Block said Wednesday.

No charges have been filed. Sheriff's Capt. Robert Grimm said an investigation is continuing.

Authorities allege Flynt wrote the check on Nov. 14, 1983 to Mitchel L. WerBell for the slaying of Sinatra, Playboy Publisher Hugh M. Hefner, Penthouse Publisher Robert Guccione, and former TV Guide Publisher and U.S. Ambassador Walter Annenberg.

"I think he was just a little crazy," said Guccione, who added he does take the threat seriously. "It was a very irrational act because neither Hefner nor I compete with his magazine ... And if you factor in Annenberg and Sinatra, it becomes even more irrational. For me, I just put it down to Flynt's obvious dislike for me."

Said Hefner: "When you're a celebrity and controversial, you wind up on one of those crazy lists with Reagan, Sinatra and the pope."

Sinatra's publicist, Susan Reynolds, said the entertainer had no comment.

A secretary at Annenberg's Radnor, Pa., office said he was unavailable for comment, as did a member of Annenberg's house staff who answered the telephone at his Rancho Mirage estate. Neither woman would give her name.

"This period of Flynt's life was described as a painful period when he was using narcotics," Grimm said.

Isaacman acknowledged Flynt's drug-induced behavior during the fall of 1983, but said, "The kinds of things he said then had nothing to do with harming other people."

WerBell, head of a Georgia private security center called Sionics Inc., was among those who received a check at the party, said Isaacman, "and there wasn't any talk of killing anyone. That was someone else's idea."

WerBell described himself as a retired lieutenant general in the Royal Free Afghan Army. A soldier of fortune, former international arms dealer and one-time counterterrorism school operator.

Whales Get Into Trouble Again As New Channel Freezes Over

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BARROW, Alaska — Two whales slowly wending their way through arctic ice encountered new trouble as a channel cut by two Soviet icebreakers began to freeze over. Rescuers said they would make one last-ditch effort to free them.

As night fell Thursday in subzero temperatures, rescuers left the California gray whales in a breathing hole just 330 yards from the open sea, a distance that federal whale biologist David Withrow called "essentially one long dive."

Twice Wednesday, the giant mammals traveled more than 300 yards under the ice to reach new breathing holes, he said. But they appeared reluctant to traverse the distance Thursday.

Rescuers said they would make one final effort to free the whales by cutting a second pathway through the ice off the northern Alaska coast to open sea. After making two or three runs, the Soviet icebreaker Vladimir Arseniev and its companion ship, the Admiral Makarov, were to depart for their home port of Vladivostok.

The whales' condition appeared worse after they struggled through the slush and ice left in the icebreakers' wake Wednesday night and Thursday. Both bled from multiple but superficial cuts.

Rear Adm. Sigmund Petersen of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration said the icebreaker likely would move to within 10 to 20 yards of the whales.

"This should free them," said Ron Morris, the rescue coordinator. "Hopefully the whales will see the opportunity to leave."

Petersen said the Soviet crews were "ready to go home." Their ships had been at sea for nearly six months and were diverted for the last three days to assist the whale-rescue effort.

Weather permitting, Morris said, he would fly out to look for the whales today. If they remained in difficulty, he said, another plan would have to be developed.

"We're here until those whales depart from the area," Morris said. But he said that if it was evident the whales had reached open water, then "that's all we're going to do ... the whales are on their own."

The whales were caught in the arctic ice for nearly three weeks by an early freeze, halting their annual migration to their winter home off Baja California. A third trapped whale disappeared last week and is presumed dead.

The mammals' plight triggered a massive rescue effort involving chain saw-wielding Eskimos and the Soviet icebreakers that captured worldwide attention. The effort has cost an estimated $1.3 million.

Rescuers thought that after the icebreakers broke a channel to open water Wednesday the whales would resume their migration. But the pair lingered and parts of the channel refroze.

The eventual fate of the creatures may never be known because scientists turned down the option of attaching radio transmitters to them. Some rescuers said they'd rather not know what happens to them.

The temperature hovered at minus 15 degrees Fahrenheit Thursday night, quickly refreezing escape channels cut by the Arseniev. The plunging temperatures also were beginning to put a glaze of ice on the open water to which rescuers were trying to lead the whales.

National Weather Service ice analyst Gary Hufford said the whales had shown an ability to break newly formed ice, so he remained optimistic they could survive if they got beyond the remnants of the pressure ridge crushed earlier in the week by the Soviet icebreakers.

When rescuers found the whales early Thursday, they were maintaining a small breathing hole about 1½ miles from where they were last seen Wednesday night.

Concerned with the whales' inability to negotiate the partially refrozen channel, Eskimo laborers cut more than three dozen new breathing holes in a path toward open water. The whales followed dutifully, and were resting in the last breathing hole when darkness fell.

The Eskimos were prevented from moving further because the ice was unstable as a result of the icebreakers' earlier efforts.

Coast Guard Bids For New Icebreaker

By Matt Yancey
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — For years the U.S. Coast Guard has wanted to buy a new icebreaker, but the Reagan administration balked at spending $300 million and just this month scrapped the proposal again. Then came the whales. Then came the Russians.

The use of two Soviet icebreakers in a bid to save two whales trapped off Point Barrow, Alaska, is prompting a renewed request by the Coast Guard to bolster the U.S. icebreaking fleet.

The Coast Guard now has only three saltwater icebreakers and one of them is scheduled for decommissioning in January. The service is resubmitting its request for money to build a new one to the White House budget office, sources said Thursday.

The sources, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said the White House Office of Management and Budget earlier this month turned down the Coast Guard's proposal to include $300 million for a new icebreaker in the administration's proposed budget for fiscal 1990.

The Coast Guard's commandant, Adm. Paul A. Yost Jr., declined to confirm or deny that his agency was asking the White House to reconsider, saying only that the administration has never asked Congress for the money despite the annual pleas of his agency dating back to President Carter's administration.

But Yost said the trapped whales, the role of the Soviets in saving them and the world attention focused on the Herculean effort "have definitely been a positive impetus toward us getting a new icebreaker."

"Congress has directed that we build a new icebreaker, and now it's just up to the Coast Guard and the administration to see if we can fit one into the 1990 budget," he said.

Congress in 1986 ordered the construction of two new icebreakers by 1990 after a study by the administration concluded that the Coast Guard should have a minimum of four — and better yet five — in its fleet.

But nothing has happened since then because of federal budget deficits exceeding $150 billion each of the past three years and bickering over whether the Coast Guard should build a new ship or lease it from private companies as part of the administration's "privatization" goals.

Over the past two years, the Coast Guard has spent $2 million designing a new icebreaker. The agency estimates the cost of construction at $300 million for one and $500 million for two, if they are ordered at the same time.

Even then, a new icebreaker will take a minimum of seven years to build, Yost said.

Meanwhile, Crowley Maritime Co. of San Francisco, which now provides icebreaking services for oil companies operating on Alaska's North Slope, has offered to build, lease and operate an icebreaker crewed by civilians but commanded by Coast Guard officers for $40 million a year.

"The Coast Guard was initially interested in our proposal two years ago and it fit in perfectly with the administration's privatization goals," said Tim Mills, a Washington attorney retained by Crowley to push the venture. "But then the Coast Guard changed its mind. We've quit working on it."

Kurt Oxley, the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee's counsel for Coast Guard and navigation issues, said the panel would prefer that the Coast Guard build and staff the ship.

But Oxley and Coast Guard officials said all sides on the issue are rethinking their positions in light of the rescue of the two whales.

"The whales trapped in the ice have raised the spectre of what's wrong with the American icebreaking fleet, and the answer is everything," Oxley said. "With only two, we have to use them sparingly. With four or five we could spread them out more evenly and possibly have had one up there."

The United States now has three icebreakers: two 399-foot sister ships — the Polar Star and the Polar Sea — built in the 1970s and based in Seattle, and the 43-year-old Northwind based at Wilmington, N.C. The Northwind is scheduled for decommissioning in January.

In the 1960s, the United States had eight icebreakers, all of World War II vintage.

The Polar Sea is now in drydock in preparation for a resupply mission to Antarctic in January. The Polar Star is off Nova Scotia en route back to Seattle through the Panama Canal after it was unable to break through the ice-clogged Beaufort Sea west of Prudhoe Bay two weeks ago. It had to head east through the Northwest Passage following the rescue of two ice-stuck Canadian ships.

Yost said the United States probably would have called on the Soviet Union's ship for help in any case, since it was only 300 miles away and had open water most of the way to where the whales were trapped.

"No icebreaker — not ours, the Russians' or the Canadians' — could have broken through from the West or East where the Polar Star was," he said. "And our Seattle icebreaker was 3,500 miles away."

With one, two or even three new icebreakers, the United States would remain well behind the Soviets, which has a fleet of 16 including four powered by nuclear reactors, according to the Coast Guard.

"The Soviet Union is an Arctic nation; they need that many," Yost said. "We don't need that many, we're not an Arctic nation. But we do need at least four polar icebreakers. I think one will be all we can afford next year. Maybe we'll get another one in the years beyond that."

Pilot Did Not List Medicine

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The pilot of Delta Flight 191 was flying illegally when his jetliner crashed during a thunderstorm at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, killing 137 people, a federal offical said.

The medical certification of Capt. Edward M. Connors was invalid because the pilot failed to list prescription drugs and hospital stays on his application for certification, Audie W. Davis, a Federal Aviation Administration medical certification officer, testified Thursday.

Delta Air Lines attorneys contend the testimony about Connors' use of prescription drugs is useless because the co-pilot, who also was killed, was at the controls when the plane crashed attempting to land during a 1985 thunderstorm.

The applications are submitted after pilots take required physical examinations at six-month intervals, Davis said.

His testimony came in a non-jury trial of a lawsuit filed by Delta against the government. The airline claims government employees, such as air traffic controller and weather forecasters, did not notify the crew of the doomed airliner that a severe thunderstorm was located in their landing path.

Davis, manager of the Aeromedical Certification Branch of the FAA in Oklahoma City, spent two days on the witness stand.

School Boards' Study Urges Leniency For Youngest Pupils

By Lee Mitgang
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Pushing elementary-age children into rigorous study in the name of reform is doing more harm than good, warns a new report that lays part of the blame on global economic pressures that have aroused competitive fervor.

Recent reforms aimed at making students more accountable and diligent may make sense for high schoolers, but often produce only short-term gains when applied to younger children and may actually burn them out, said the report being released today in Chicago at the annual convention of the National Association of State Boards of Education.

The study, "Right From The Start: The Report of the NASBE Task Force on Early Childhood Education," urges states instead to encourage formation of "early childhood units" catering to the special developmental needs of 4-8 year-olds.

"The legitimate concern about the link between our economic future and the quality of schooling has fostered a competitive mentality for our educational enterprise, with unfortunate consequences for early segments of schooling," the report said.

"If education is seen as a contest that pits children against their peers, or a race against our foreign competitors, we risk teaching very young children the wrong academic tasks before they are ready, and we stimulate fears and pressure among parents," it added.

The 26-member task force that produced the report was chaired by NASBE president Richard Owens. It met throughout 1988, holding hearings and visiting schools in Atlanta, Boston, Chicago and San Francisco.

"This report may rattle the bushes a little, but what we're saying absolutely makes sense," Owens, a member of the Georgia Board of Education, said in an interview with The Atlanta Constitution.

"Preschool and early school years are crucial for children and their parents," he said. "Not everybody at this time is ready to jump full force into prekindergarten programs, but I think many of them are looking."

In a forward to the 55-page report, Owens said: "We heard disturbing testimony about the harmful effects of increased testing on young children, about class sizes of 33 children in kindergarten programs, and about the difficulties Head Start parents encounter as they seek to continue active involvement in their child's education in the public schools."

"We were equally concerned about reports of low salaries for early childhood teachers, staff turnover rates averaging 40 percent nationally in child care centers, and limited, uneven public funding for early childhood services."

The report lends fresh support to the growing chorus of concern over increased standardized testing, ability tracking and rigid academic demands on elementary school children in some parts of the country. It echoes similar concerns raised during the past year by groups including the National Association of Elementary School Principals and the National Association for the Education of Young Children.

The report didn't single out any states or districts for criticism. But Georgia, for example, now requires kindergartners to pass a test to advance to first grade, as does Minneapolis.

"In many instances these tests lead to labeling children as failures at earlier and earlier ages, rather than finding and building upon their strengths," the report said.

Such "heavy-handed" measures, the report charged, represent "an obsession with producing short-term, trivial results rather than developing long-term intellectual and social capacity."

In one sense, it said, the stress on academics and standardized testing means schools are expecting too little of elementary-aged children because, "using more appropriate methods and materials, children can deal with richer and more sophisticated learning tasks than those dictated by worksheets and drill-and-practice pedagogy."

Research suggests that children in that age group learn best "by actively exploring their environment, using hands-on materials and building upon their natural curiosity and desire to make sense of the world around them." The proposed special units for children aged 4-8 might be entirely separate from existing elementary schools, or else schools could choose to designate a separate early childhood unit director responsible to the school principal. Elementary schools might also set up a team of one or more lead teachers.

Such units, the task force said, should aim to foster strong parent-school partnerships, coordinate its services with other community agencies serving youngsters, provide training and support for teachers and administrators, and respect students' cultural and linguistic diversity.

The units "will supply the element missing in the school reform — a focus on how children learn and develop," the report said.

New Test Proposed For Starting Teachers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The nation's leading testing organization has announced plans for a high-tech teacher licensing test that would give schools a more comprehensive tool to judge the competence of beginning teachers.

The test, as yet unnamed, won't be available until 1992, but is eventually expected to replace the National Teacher Exam, the multiple-choice test currently used as a licensing tool in 30 states and taken by some 200,000 teacher candidates a year, according to the Educational Testing Service.

The new test will use computer simulations of classroom situations and other technologies expected to allow for more thorough evaluations of beginning teaching skills than paper-and-pencil tests, said the Lawrenceville, N.J., testing organization.

Teacher testing has been a thorny issue since a landmark federal report, "A Nation at Risk," charged in 1983 that "too few academically able students are being attracted to teaching."

As more states responded by turning to licensing tests to help weed out incompetents, teacher unions objected that existing tests do not fairly assess classroom skills, while others worried that disproportionate numbers of minority candidates were failing them.

"There is a widespread and growing concern about the preparedness and effectiveness of beginning teachers, and we believe that breakthroughs in research and technology make possible a new kind of assessment that will provide greater assistance, fairness and accuracy," said ETS president Gregory R. Anrig on Thursday.

"We're trying to heed criticisms of the tests, capitalize on advances in technology, and give a way for students to demonstrate their strengths," he said.

Mary Hatwood Futrell, president of the National Education Association, the nation's largest teachers union, also applauded ETS's plans. "We are very pleased that they are calling for a multi-faceted assessment," she said, adding she was pleased that the testing firm had sought the advice of teacher unions and other education groups.

Carolyn Trice, associate director of educational issues for the American Federation of Teachers, said that while the union isn't ready to endorse the new exam, "I'm glad to see this kind of test development.

"The problem with paper-and-pencil tests is they just don't assess what teachers know. When you get into human interaction and how you motivate students to learn, a pencil and paper test cannot predict whether a teacher will be successful," she said.

The new exam would evaluate teacher candidates at three different stages in their training. The first test would use a computer to evaluate reading, math and writing skills during or after the second year of undergraduate study. The second would assess a candidate's grasp of subject matter and teaching principles after completion of teacher training.

The final test would involve classroom observation and evaluation of teaching performance, and would make use of computer simulations of classroom situations.

"The evaluation may extend over a period of time for a prospective teacher, giving states a much better sense of professional development," said Carol Dwyer, an ETS senior development leader who created the test. "The method also allows the student to find out early whether he or she meets the prerequisites needed to teach while there is still time to improve or make other career plans."

Safety Panel Hears Proposals On ATVs And Lawn Dart Ban

By Randolph E. Schmid
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Two of the chief consumer safety controversies of recent years were before the federal Consumer Product Safety Commission today, a proposal to ban lawn darts and another setting voluntary standards for new all-terrain vehicles.

Both issues have attracted widespread attention in recent years with reports of deaths and injuries, congressional hearings and commission investigations into the dangers of the products.

The commission planned to ban the manufacture and sale of lawn darts today, spokesman Dave Shiflett said Thursday. The action would finalize a decision announced in July regarding the large darts, which have been blamed for some deaths and an estimated 5,000 serious injuries to children.

Action on the proposed ban coincided with an unfolding drama in Tennessee, where an 11-year-old McMinnville girl was kept comatose after undergoing eight hours of emergency surgery to remove a lawn dart from her skull. The accident occurred as the girl was playing the dart game at a neighbor's house.

Safety standards for all-terrain vehicles are the latest step in a long and complex process which already has seen the banning of future sales of three-wheeled ATVs.

The standards under consideration would set rules for four-wheel vehicles.

These vehicles are small, one-rider machines that have become popular for use on beaches, in woods and for other off-road activities. There are more than 2.4 million of the vehicles in use in this country and federal officials have blamed them for 1,000 deaths and up to 300,000 injuries in recent years.

Prolonged negotiations involving the Safety Commission, Justice Department and several manufacturers resulted in a consent agreement approved in April by a federal judge.

More attention, in the last few months, has focused on lawn darts — long darts, usually metal tipped, which are used in a tossing game similar to horseshoes.

David Snow of Riverside, Calif., whose young daughter was killed when one of the darts pierced her brain, has led the campaign to drive the product from the marketplace.

Federal regulations issued in the 1970s banned sales of the darts to children and in toy stores, but they are still allowed to be sold as sporting goods to adults.

In many cases, however, the darts are included in game sets with badminton racquets and volleyball nets, and often get into the hands of children.

Initially the safety commission had proposed to ban darts that "have the potential for causing skull puncture injuries."

However, on Oct. 21 Congress, reportedly responding to a broadcast news story on the danger, passed a bill calling on the commission to ban lawn darts that can cause any puncture injury, not just skull punctures.

Students Hold Rally To Promote Civility

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AMHERST, Mass. — More than 2,500 University of Massachusetts students clasped hands in a mile-long cordon against racism on the second anniversary of a racial clash that began as a fight between baseball fans but set off two years of unrest.

"I'm so proud. We did it," said Lori Edmonds, president of the Afrik-Am Society, as she ran along the line of students Thursday, hugging friends with tears streaming down her cheeks.

Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young praised the "Hands Across UMass" demonstration but said overcoming racism is not a one-day affair.

"This atmosphere of civility has to be more than just holding hands with each other once a year," he told 600 students in an evening speech.

"Ethnic insecurity is not something that you overcome just by getting educated," he added, urging students to make an effort to get to know others with different ethnic, religious and geographic backgrounds.

The line of students, most of them white, stretched more than a mile diagonally across the campus in this western Massachusetts town, from dormitories on the northwest side to dormitories on the southwest.

It was in the southwest sector that fights broke out between black New York Mets fans and white Boston Red Sox boosters after the Mets' victory in the 1986 World Series.

Employee Premiums May Rise By 20 To 30 Percent Next Year, Experts Say

By Malcolm Gladwell
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Employers nationwide will be hit with 20 percent to 30 percent increases in the cost of employee health insurance premiums next year, according to health care officials and industry experts.

Fueled by everything from the use of new and expensive medical technologies to the increasing health care needs of an aging population, health insurance inflation will be in the double-digits in 1989 for the second consecutive year. The increase will bring the total health care bill of the United States, already the highest per capita in the world, to more than $500 billion.

The anticipated increases have sent employers scrambling for new ways to contain the costs of providing health insurance, and could result in decreased coverage and increased out-of-pocket costs for employees covered by company health plans.

The projections also raised the question of whether the campaign to limit health costs — which began in earnest almost a decade ago — has failed.

"I would say we're looking at a good 10 years before this begins to come under control," said David Brenneman, vice president of the benefits consulting firm Noble Lowndes.

Health care experts lay the blame for the surge in health care costs on several overlapping trends.

First, the aging U.S. population means Americans are using more health care services than ever before. And because of the increasing use of sophisticated technology and rising labor costs, those services are becoming more and more expensive.

At the same time, 40 percent of the health care offered to Americans is paid for by the government's Medicare program, and those payments haven't kept pace with the cost of providing care. To make money, hospitals and doctors are increasingly forced to increase their prices to privately insured patients to make up for losses on government-insured patients. This cost shifting, according to the Chicago-based health care consulting firm Hewitt Associates, will account for about 30 percent of the projected rise in the cost of medical coverage during the next few years.

The inflationary trend is exacerbated by the fact that many insurance companies are giving their rates an extra boost this year to compensate for disappointing financial results last year.

"1987 was a year of record losses for the commerical insurance industry," said Jon Gabel, associate director of research and statistics for the Health Insurance Association of America in Washington. "The health insurance industry has been overly optimistic about its ability to control costs, and they fell behind in their pricing. Now they're trying to catch up."

But while insurance companies will be able to bring their costs in line with their revenues in a relatively short time, health care analysts don't see improvement in the root causes of medical inflation for years.

"Given the deficit, there's not much chance Congress will increase funding for Medicare any time soon," said Larry Leisure, a health care analyst with Towers, Perrin, Forster and Crosby consulting firm in New York. "So we know that cost shifting is going to continue. We know that new technology is not going to stop coming. We know people are going to live longer, and we know physicians aren't going to stop aspiring to make more money. The underlying conditions behind this, in other words, aren't going to go away."

This prospect of a sustained bout of medical inflation has raised serious concerns among many employers, some of whom are still reeling from the last round of health care increases in the early 1980s. The average American corporation spends $2,200 annually per employee to provide health benefits, which many executives consider an unacceptably large figure considering that average profit per employee generated by U.S. firms is $6,600.

Copters May Have Collided

YUMA, Ariz. — Two Marine helicopters that crashed at night, killing 10 servicemen, apparently collided less than 200 feet above the Arizona desert, officials said.

The Boeing CH-46 and Bell UH-1N helicopters were on a training mission when the crash occurred Tuesday. A memorial service for the nine Marines and one Air Force officer killed was set for this afternoon at the chapel of the Marine Corps Air Station here.

Investigators continued searching Thursday for clues in the crash, said 1st Lt. Mary Baldwin, a Marine spokeswoman. She said she was unsure how long it would take to complete the investigation.

At the time of the accident, the CH-46, which was stationed at the Marine Corps Air Station in New River, N.C., and the UH-1N out of Camp Pendleton, Calif., were taking part in a training exercise. Both were from 100 to 200 feet off the ground at the time of the accident,

Survey Shows U.S. CEOs Are Best Paid Business Managers In World

By Linda Williams
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Chief executives of U.S. companies are the best paid in the world and have the greatest purchasing power, according to a new survey of top business managers in 20 industrial nations.

The survey, conducted by a unit of the New York management consultants Towers Perrin, ranked U.S. executives first both in cash pay and total compensation, including bonuses, benefits, long-term incentives and perquisites. Managers in Switzerland and Japan were second and third.

A typical chief executive of a U.S. company with sales of $100 million is paid $311,000 cash, according to the survey. That is 19 percent more than his Swiss counterpart, who earns $261,000 and 45 percent more than Japanese or West German executives, who earn $216,000 and $215,000 respectively, the survey showed. South Korea ranked 20th with $59,000.

The study also found that U.S. executives did better overall in net pay than those in other countries when taxes and other required deductions are considered.

The survey also looked at the cost of living in the countries surveyed and ranked nations according to the goods and services that could be purchased at the compensation level found in each country.

In terms of the purchasing power of their wages, U.S. executives again ranked first. But the Swiss dropped to sixth, the Japanese fell to 16th and the West Germans dropped from fourth in cash compensation to 12th in purchasing power. Venezuela, ranked 17th in cash compensation, moved up to second place in purchasing power.

The Towers Perrin survey results are similar to findings of other surveys comparing pay in the United States with that in other countries, said Chip Thomas, a Los Angeles-based consultant with the Sibson Co. management consulting company. "We have found that in the U.S. (compensation packages) are higher in terms of base salary and bonus opportunities. U.S. executives are more likely to receive stock options than in Europe."

In analyzing total compensation packages, the Towers Perrin survey showed that bonuses and profit-sharing make up a higher percentage of executive income in Venezuela (40 percent) than any other country. In the United States, bonuses accounted for 35 percent. The elements in total executive compensation in different countries "are significantly influenced by tax policies and local customs," the Towers Perrin report said.

However, in the United States the high percentage of contributed by bonuses is not related to tax questions but to a different compensation philosophy, management consultants said. "We have found that U.S. firms have been more progressive in adopting pay for performance as a management philosophy," Thomas said.

In Japan, he said, compensation is based more on a philosophy of lifetime employment. "Pay is designed for security," he said.

In Japan, bonuses make up 20 percent of income. In Switzerland and Australia, they were found to contribute 18 percent and 15 percent, respectively, but were said to be no factor at all in South Korea. Among other countries surveyed, France ranked fifth in total cash compensation followed by Belgium, the Netherlands, Canada, Italy, Spain, United Kingdom, Brazil, Argentina, Singapore, Hong Kong.

Soviet Legislators Debating Budget That Would Run $58 Billion Deficit

By Ann Imse
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Legislators today resumed debate on an $804 billion budget that would slash central economic planning, close inefficient state-run businesses and encourage the economy to become more consumer-oriented.

The 1989 spending plan, unveiled Thursday and expected to be approved late today, bears the marks of President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's program of radical economic reform. It also runs a $58 billion deficit.

The budget offered grounds for sharp debate, including the first deficit ever acknowledged by the Soviet leadership and a radical switch in spending priorities.

The Supreme Soviet, the national legislature considering the budget, was told Thursday reform was needed because of cramped housing, food rotting en route to stores and new equipment unused on factory floors.

The body's 1,500 deputies usually hear hours of dull speeches on the success of the current Five-Year Plan during their annual two-day budget sessions. But this year's unusual candor about the slumping state of the economy contained some new information.

Deputies were told the deficit was caused by both inadequate revenues and unexpectedly high expenses. Specifically noted were a $65 billion tax shortfall since 1985 due to an anti-alcohol campaign and a $65 billion decline in revenues from oil sales, due to low world prices.

The official Tass news agency said legislators discussed the spending plan "at times, very sharply."

"The debates were comprehensive and profound," Boris Kachura, chairman of the planning and budget commission, told Tass.

Legislators found possibilities for producing more consumer goods, thus increasing government revenues by almost $2.4 billion.

As part of the plan, several hundred factories manufacturing machines and equipment will be retooled to produce consumer goods. Most of the increased revenues will be allocated to reducing the deficit.

In the public session, deputies have sat quietly listening to speeches. Many read the country's two main newspapers, the Communist Party paper Pravda or the government organ Izvestia, though a few rummaged through a packet of budget documents.

The session mirrored past meetings of the Supreme Soviet, which concluded with unanimous approvals of the leadership's program.

He described it as "a problem that has not emerged just now, but is a result of the unbalanced economy, of the policy of extensive subsidizing and huge losses, of all that was brought about by extensive methods of economic management, parasitic attitudes and a passive financial policy."

Gostev said drastic changes are necessary. Among those on his list was the possibility of bankruptcy, a device of capitalism that will be new to Soviet society.

"A number of enterprises are on the brink of being eliminated," because they are incapable of operating without massive losses, he said, and some state-owned businesses may even be turned over to private cooperatives.

Yuri Maslyukov, head of the state planning committee, promised dramatic improvements as the government shifts from its traditional emphasis on heavy industry to improving the living standard.

Maslyukov said farms will have two years to straighten out their operations before facing "elimination."

Central planning will be reduced by limiting the powers of planning ministries, he said.

This year, the state bought and redistributed 86 percent of production. It plans to cut that to 25 percent in the next budget year and everything else must be sold on an open market subject to consumer demand.

Gostev promised increases in pensions and payments to low-income families and pledged that price reform would not lower the standard of living.

"Maintaining the personnel of the army" will cost $32.8 billion in the next fiscal year, the same as in the last budget, Gostev said.

Western experts say the military budget is many times that figure because the armed forces also receive money allocated for science, industry and other purposes. The CIA estimates the total at 15 percent of the Soviet economy.

French Say Distribute Abortion Pill

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — Health Minister Claude Evin today ordered a pharmaceutical company to resume distribution of an abortion pill in the interest of public health, and the ministry said the company will comply.

The firm, Roussel Uclaf, announced Wednesday it was pulling the drug off the market in response to an "outcry of public opinion at home and aboard" and a threatened boycott of its products.

The Health Ministry statement was issued after Evin met with executives of the company, which manufactures the RU 486 pill, also known as Mifepristone.

On Thursday, a Roussel Uclaf vice president, Pierre Joly, said the company had not abandoned hopes of distributing the drug.

Roussel Uclaf is part of the giant West German chemical group Hoescht, which has the majority share. The French government has a 36 percent share.

The ministry said Evin summoned Joly to his office to express displeasure with the company's decision. It said Evin reminded him that while the company could make its own decisions, Evin was responsible for public health.

It said the 1975 law legalizing abortion in France must be applied and that voluntary abortions "constituted a right for women in this country."

"RU 486 is an advance because it does not involve use of an anesthetic. The precautions for supply of this drug, solely in specified (abortion) clinics, provides for all the required indispensible guarantees of security," the communique said.

U.S. Space Shuttle Was Never Intended For Unmanned Trip

By Howard Benedict
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The U.S. space shuttle was never equipped for an unmanned test flight like the one planned tonight for the Soviets' look-alike orbiter. At the time, the program was behind schedule, money was tight and the technology was not well developed.

NASA, however, says it had confidence that its design would work the first time when the shuttle Columbia made its debut more than seven years ago.

Despite the striking resemblance of the two spacecraft, there are numerous other differences between them.

The Soviet shuttle's main engines will be on the Energia rocket instead of on the reusable orbiter. The craft has small jet engines that give it greater maneuverability for landing. And it has liquid-fuel booster rockets instead of solid-fuel boosters like the one that destroyed Challenger in January 1986, grounding the American program for 32 months.

The Soviet Union announced Wednesday that its shuttle would be launched at 11:23 p.m. EDT today, or 6:23 a.m. Moscow time Saturday. The shuttle is named Buran, Russian for snowstorm.

Soviet officials said Buran's first flight would be pilotless to avoid deaths in case of an accident like the Challenger explosion.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration said its decision to have two astronauts pilot the first U.S. shuttle reflected engineers' confidence that it would work the first time, but only if humans were aboard.

Spacecraft in the earlier Mercury, Gemini and Apollo programs underwent extensive unmanned testing before men flew them.

But the shuttle program was running three years behind schedule and financial pressure on NASA was rising.

Flying the shuttle without astronauts would have required extensive and expensive changes to allow the automatic pilot to respond to radio commands.

Officials also noted that the American shuttle was built with the technology of the early 1970s, when it would have been more difficult to develop an automated landing system for so complex a craft. The Soviets, coming along a decade later, could take advantage of the latest developments.

As a precaution, the U.S. shuttle included ejection seats for the two pilots who flew early shakedown missions. But there was room for only two such devices, and they were removed when crews expanded.

The Soviet shuttle will be boosted into orbit by the new Energia rocket, which can lift a 220,000-pound payload. That rivals the power of America's huge Saturn 5 rocket, which was scrapped for economy reasons after taking six Apollo crews to the moon.

The liquid-hydrogen, liquid-oxygen booster has had only one test flight, in May 1987. The Soviets called the test a success, even though the payload failed to reach orbit. Several other technical problems cropped up during the flight, and engineers worked for months to correct them.

The Soviet shuttle's main engines are attached to the Energia, meaning they will be jettisoned and cannot be reused. On the U.S. shuttle, the main motors are part of the orbiter and can be reflown up to 55 times.

By not carrying its engines, the Soviet shuttle can haul more cargo than its U.S. cousin, about 66,000 pounds compared with 55,000 pounds. The disadvantage is that new, expensive powerplants have to be built for each launch.

Assisting the Soviet craft into space are four strap-on rockets, also powered by liquid hydrogen and liquid oxygen. The U.S. vehicle has two solid-fuel strap-on motors.

After descending from orbit, the American shuttle becomes a powerless glider. If it were unable to reach its runway, or if high crosswinds or something else spoiled its final approach, the crew would have to bail out and leave the vehicle to crash.

The Soviet craft's two small jet engines would enable it to make its final approach at a safer, shallower angle and allow greater maneuverability, including the possibility of a second landing attempt.

NASA considered using jet engines for landing, but abandoned the idea because of cost, weight and technical tradeoffs.

NATO Ministers Say West Must Keep Nuclear Arms

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

THE HAGUE, Netherlands — NATO defense ministers today said the Western alliance needs to maintain nuclear weapons with a variety of ranges in Europe to "take account of the scale and quality of the threat."

The statement released at the end of talks by the defense chiefs of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization made no mention of Belgium's refusal to endorse a report on the need for short-range nuclear forces.

NATO's secretary-general, Manfred Woerner, said the ministers' private talks were "an occasion for full and frank discussion, and this meeting was no exception." He told reporters, "No decision on specific weapons systems are required now nor have they been taken."

U.S. Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci said, "We are moving forward on a modernization program on a step-by-step basis... We're very satisfied with the way the meeting progressed."

Belgium's defense minister, Guy Coeme, expressed concern about deciding now on the controversial issue of modernizing short-range arms. "Assuming any commitment now would be premature," he said at a separate news conference.

NATO's short-range arsenal has gained the spotlight of critics since the United States and the Soviet Union signed the Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces treaty in December. By the end of 1990, the treaty will eliminate all U.S. and Soviet land-based missiles with ranges of 300 miles to 3,400 miles.

Short-range weapons generally have a range of less than 300 miles.

In their statement, the ministers said, "Our step-by-step approach, under which decisions will be taken when necessary, will ensure that NATO's nuclear forces continue to provide a credible and effective contribution to the alliance's strategy of deterrence."

It said the ministers "agreed that for the foreseeable future NATO requires diversified, survivable and operationally flexible nuclear forces in Europe across the entire spectrum of ranges, which take account of the scale and quality of the threat."

The officials, the statement said, were "encouraged by signs of change in the policies of the Soviet Union and some of its allies." But, it added, "We have seen as yet no relaxation in their military efforts."

"In particular," it said, "Warsaw Pact superiority in conventional forces, with the capability this provides for surprise attack and large scale offensive action, constitutes a basic source of instability and tension between East and West."

As a result, the ministers said they were determined to take necessary actions to maintain alliance security and "maintain the credibility of our deterrent forces, conventional and nuclear, which will be kept up-to-date where necessary."

The High Level Group report sought support for the concept of continuing to rely on short-range nuclear weaponry as a pillar of Alliance defense.

Israelis Round Up Reporters, Unionists

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Israeli authorities rounded up more than a dozen Palestinian journalists and trade unionists in what appeared to be a security sweep before next week's general elections, Palestinian witnesses said today.

Army and police officials said they were checking the report.

Hanna Siniora, editor of the pro-PLO Palestinian newspaper Al Fajr, said nine activists from Jerusalem and five from the West Bank were arrested overnight.

Siniora did not know on what charges the men were being detained. Many are pro-PLO activists, and Siniora described them as "part of the budding local Palestinian leadership."

"It's a security sweep before the Israeli elections," Siniora told The Associated Press.

The nearly 11-month-old Palestinian uprising in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip is a major issue in Tuesday's parliamentary elections.

Among the most prominent Palestinians detained in the reported sweep is Saman Khouri, one of the leaders of the Palestine Journalists Union. Khouri was released in May after being held five months without a trial.

Khouri's wife, Anita, said five agents of the Shin Bet secret service and five riot policemen arrested her husband at his Jerusalem home at about 1 a.m. today.

Would You Eat This Diseased Crab from the Pamlico?

If You Leave Tom Taft in the North Carolina Senate, You May Have To.

After years in the North Carolina Senate, Tom Taft, through inaction, leaves dead fish floating on the Pamlico and diseased shellfish and crabs beneath the surface. He flip-flopped his position on the Phosphate Ban, while his appropriations committee refused to approve funds for a much-needed coastal environmental study.

This year, send a man to Raleigh who will clean up our environment and has the clout to get things done. Bill Dansey pledges to:

- Create a state-level Department of Health and Environment to coordinate all environmental regulatory activities.
- Develop cost-effective alternatives to solid-waste disposal landfills.
- Appropriate funds for much needed coastal projects.
- Work closely with industry for a cleaner environment.
- Impose tighter controls on disposal of hospital/medical wastes.
- Adopt state-wide standards for watershed protection.
- Improve programs for protecting coastal waters and the fishing industry.

Elect Bill Dansey to the North Carolina Senate.

Prosecutor Calls For Quick Bail For Imelda

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Bail for Imelda Marcos must be set quickly to ensure that she and her husband do not try to flee the country, a federal prosecutor says.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Charles LaBella argued Thursday that the wife of the former Philippines president, Ferdinand Marcos, be brought to New York for arraignment on racketeering charges.

LaBella made his pitch when U.S. District Judge John F. Keenan agreed to delay her husband's arraignment after defense lawyers presented letters from three doctors saying Marcos was too ill to travel the 5,000 miles from the couple's Hawaii home.

In a related development, a newspaper reported today that federal agents have obtained an arrest warrant for Saudian Arabian financier Adnan Khashoggi.

Khashoggi, who was indicted last week on racketeering charges along with the Marcoses, is accused of acting as a front for Marcos to help divert assets and hide Marcos' ownership of real estate and valuable art.

The Los Angeles Times, citing unidentified sources, said officials believe Khashoggi won't surrender to face the charges. It said the warrant was issued in an effort to find Khashoggi before he relocates to a country without formal extradition agreements with the United States.

In New York, Keenan agreed with prosecutors that the physicians' letters left out important details but said he would delay Marcos' arraignment until a government physician could examine him or review his medical records.

But the judge refused to delay the arraignment of Mrs. Marcos, who was indicted with her husband and eight others for an alleged scheme that looted the Philippines of more than $100 million.

Mrs. Marcos was ordered to appear Monday before Keenan, who said he would allow her to return to Hawaii after setting bail.

Despite pleas from Marcos' attorney, Richard A. Hibey, about the expected "circus atmosphere" outside Manhattan's federal courthouse and the lengthy flight to New York from Honolulu, Keenan said: "If the defendant was in New Jersey, the defendant comes to New York to be arraigned. Hawaii is an American state. I don't see any reason why she can't be arraigned here in New York."

LaBella opposed a Honolulu arraignment, claiming the FBI was having difficulties keeping tabs on the couple, who are under 24-hour surveillance, at their Honolulu compound.

He said "the Marcos entourage has done things to neutralize the surveillance. They have collected five or six or seven cars inside the compound and released them at once, many of them with smoked glass.

"It's the government's position that bail conditions must be set at least for one of the defendants quickly so we can pull off this surveillance and be sure the Marcoses will remain in the United States pending these criminal proceedings."

Police Use Gas To End Prague Rally

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia — Police fired water cannons and hurled tear gas today to disperse about 5,000 people who defied a ban on a rally marking the 70th anniversary of Czechoslovakia's independence.

Helmeted police wielding batons swarmed through Prague's Wenceslas Square to break up the crowd, which chanted "Gestapo!" as the police charged.

Earlier, police arrested about 70 dissidents throughout the country in one of the biggest raids on independent activists in years.

At least 20 arrests were made in Wenceslas Square, and some of those detained were beaten by police or had their arms twisted by plainclothesmen as they were taken to buses and driven away.

Authorities banned the independent rally, called a week ago by the Charter 77 human rights group and four other independent organization.

But people came to Wenceslas Square at the rallying hour of 3 p.m.

Hundreds of people in the center of the square began singing the Czechoslovak national anthem when police gave the first order to disperse, and thousands of onlookers joined in.

Thomas Garrigue Masaryk was the founder and first president of the democratic republic of Czechoslovakia founded Oct. 28, 1918.

Police moved down the square, hitting with batons onlookers who refused to move.

Communist authorities held an officially sanctioned independence rally Thursday and repeatedly warned people not to attend today's ceremony.

Also Thursday, President Gustav Husak declared a limited amnesty that could free a handful of political prisoners, said Anna Sabatova, a member of the independent Committee for the Unjustly Prosecuted.

The country's general prosecutor, Jan Pjescak, was quoted today by the Communist party daily Rude Pravo as saying the amnesty was the biggest in years. About 7,000 prisoners are expected to go free and 160,000 other people will have charges dropped, he was quoted as saying.

The action seemed intended to pardon first-time offenders convicted of many kinds of crime and many people who have left the country illegally. It could provide a chance for thousands of emigres abroad at least to visit their homeland if they have not engaged in political activity in exile.

Ms. Sabatova estimated, however, that only eight political prisoners whose cases are followed by her group would be released.

Light Quake Hits Japan

TOKYO (AP) — An earthquake registering 5.0 on the Richter scale shook the Tokyo area today but there were no immediate reports of damage or casualties. The Central Meteorological Agency said the tremor was minor and was unlikely to trigger a tsunami, or tidal wave.

The meteorological agency said the quake's epicenter was 50 miles under the sea off Chiba, southeast of Tokyo, shaking buildings in Chiba and Yokohama, and to a lesser extent Kofu, Utsunomiya, Choshi and Mito in the Tokyo metropolitan area.

The Richter scale is a gauge of the energy released by an earthquake, as measured by the ground motion recorded on a seismograph. Every increase of one number means the ground motion is 10 times greater.

A quake of magnitude 2 is the smallest normally felt by humans. A quake of magnitude 5 can cause considerable damage in populated areas, and the highest, a quake of magnitude 8, is a "great" earthquake, capable of tremendous damage in populated areas.

Soldiers Punished

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Five of seven soldiers assigned to Fort Bragg's 18th Airborne Corps Non-Commissioned Officers Academy who were charged last month with "wrongfully buying stolen property" have been punished, post officials said Thursday.

The other two soldiers were found innocent, officials said.

The goods allegedly were stolen from parked cars on Fort Bragg by two civilians between November 1987 and May 1988, Ennis said.

How to measure
If installing inside window frame, measure width and length.
If installing outside window frame, add desired overlap, such as molding width, to inside width. If there is no molding, recommended overlap is ¼" per side. For example, if you are installing inside a window frame that measures 23½" wide and 56½" long, select the package marked 23" to 23⅞" wide x 64" long. Blind lengths can be shortened at home.

Student Nails Up His 'Theses'

RALEIGH (AP) — In the tradition of Martin Luther, an indignant Donald Yates Gordon, a divinity student, marched to the doors of Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary's Binkley Chapel Thursday and drove a thumbtack through his "59 Theses."

Gordon's theses are 59 objections to the board of trustees' increasingly conservative influence on the Wake Forest seminary.

He got the idea from his hero Martin Luther, who, distressed over a Christendom that cared more about selling indulgences than saving souls, nailed his 95 Theses to the door of All Saints church in Wittenberg, Germany, on Oct. 31, 1517.

The stroke of Luther's hammer unleashed a fight that led to the Protestant Reformation.

Who are the Lutherans?

Lutherans trust in Jesus Christ as God and Savior. The name comes from a great leader, scholar, and theologian, Martin Luther.

Through years of spiritual struggle, after long hours of prayer and searching Bible study, Luther concluded that the truth spoken by Christ had been tragically distorted during the centuries.

Luther's concern that pure New Testament truth should again be known gained wide attention when he nailed 95 theses or statements for debate to a church door in the university town of Wittenberg, Germany, on October 31, 1517.

Within twenty years Luther's rediscovery of New Testament Christianity had set hearts aflame throughout the western world. His unveiling of long forgotten Christian truth was accepted across most of northern Europe.

Today around the world Lutherans number millions of people of every race and language on every continent and island.

Largest of all Protestant churches with over seventy million adherents, the Lutheran Church continues to proclaim to all persons that Christ is the Way, the Truth and the Life.

Are you without a church home? Then you are invited into our fellowship. Are you a Lutheran? You may wish to refresh your awareness and appreciation of the faith.

To obtain directions for knitting the Fiesta Jacket, send your request for Leaflet No. Z-102388 with $2 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler Crafts, The Daily Reflector, P.O. Box 419148, Kansas City, Mo. 64141.

Or you may order Kit No. K-102388 by sending a check or money order for $17.95 to Pat Trexler Crafts at the same address. The price includes shipping charges, full instructions and multicolored acrylic yarn.

Dear Pat: Years ago, I learned from your column how to make tubular knitted cords, which I attached to caps and helmets for my children. Now I have grandchildren and would like to do the same for them but can't for the life of me remember how to do them. I believe you call them "Idiot's Delight." Please tell us again how to make these. — Ellen W., East Newark, N.J.

Dear Ellen: To make these cords, you need two double-pointed needles. (Note for beginners: Double-pointed needles are straight needles with a point on each end.) Cast on three stitches. After you knit one row, slide the three stitches to the opposite end of your needle, pull your yarn tight and knit three again.

Every row is knitted and you always slide the stitches to the opposite end of the needle, pulling the yarn tight for the first stitch of each row. Give a gentle tug to your cord each time you slide it to the other end.

There are many uses for this cord. It makes a great corded trim around knit or needlepoint pillows, for example. Or make a long cord in a contrast color and swirl it in an interesting design to add a special touch to a basic sweater, sweastshirt or dress. Make three or four long cords — each in a different color — and braid them for a belt.

You also can make a flat piece of tubular knitting suitable for belts, scarves or even pillow covers. To do this, cast on any even number of stitches. Step 1: Knit 1, bring yarn to front of work. Step 2: Slip 1 stitch purlwise, take yarn to back of work. Repeat Steps 1 and 2 across row. Work all rows in this manner.

To use this for a belt, after desired length is reached, slip the odd stitches (first, third, etc.) to a stitch holder and the even stitches (second, fourth, etc.) to another holder. Insert a strip of belting in the tube. To close the tube, knit together the first stitch on each holder; knit together the second stitch on each holder; slip the first stitch over the second stitch, thus binding off one. Knit the next two stitches together and again bind off one. Continue in this manner until all stitches are bound off. If you do not want the tube closed, bind off each side separately.

Still another alternative is a "double-knit" stitch with a different color showing on each side. You must use double-pointed needles for this stitch:

With Color A, cast on an even number of stitches. With Color B, work Row 1 as follows: Step 1: Knit 1, bring yarn to front. Step 2: Slip 1 stitch, take yarn to back. Repeat Steps 1 and 2 across row.

Row 4: Do not turn work, but slide it to other end of needle, pick up Color A and work in same manner as Row 1, beginning with Step 2. Repeat these 4 rows in sequence for desired length.

Keep track carefully of the rows worked, and be aware that Rows 1 and 3 are begun by turning your work while Rows 2 and 4 are begun by sliding stitches to the opposite end to start the row.

Kaleidoscopes More Than Meet The Eye

Teacher Discovers Math And Science In Their Beauty

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

EUGENE, Ore. — Dorothy Marshall made her first kaleidoscope when she was tutoring learning-disabled students.

She wanted to boost their confidence by teaching them something their classmates couldn't do.

As a teaching tool, the kaleidoscope exceeded her expectations. It taught her a new way to make a living.

For the next 10 years, Marshall created handmade kaleidoscopes in her Eugene studio, supporting herself with one-of-a-kind artworks that sold for up to $250 each. She turned down offers from national gift catalogs because she didn't think she could fill all the orders.

Then the kaleidoscope pieces started to shift, and Marshall's vision changed.

"I got interested in the math and science of kaleidoscopes," she says. "I didn't feel interested in those subjects in school, but through kaleidoscopes, I started to get interested in them."

The result of her interest is "Kaleidoscopes: Reflections of Science and Art," an exhibit that opened at the National Geographic Museum in Washington and will travel to museums from Boston to Los Angeles through 1992.

"We have terrible problems in our schools because people are afraid of math and science," Marshall says. "I want people to find out that learning is fun, that it's not scary. In its ideal form, this show should make complex concepts accessible to people. They should be able to walk up and say, 'Oh, I get it.'"

Marshall's transition from unique kaleidoscopic art to exhibit pieces strong enough to survive the twists and turns of a million viewers has been gradual. In 1985, she began teaching the art of making kaleidoscopes once again as an artist-in-education for the Lane Regional Arts Council.

"You are bound to learn when you teach," she says. "I learned a lot about what people do and don't understand. I began to realize how much science and art come together."

Marshall wrote to the Smithsonian Institution with a proposal for a traveling exhibit that she would develop in collaboration with the Willamette Science and Technology Center in Eugene.

In March 1987, the National Science Foundation designated $70,000 for the project. The Smithsonian Institution Traveling Exhibition Service added $10,000 and Lane County supporters contributed more funds.

In designing the show, Marshall talked to mathematicians, biologists, optometrists, glassmakers and pre-schoolers. In addition to deciding what scientific concepts to present, she needed to make certain that the kaleidoscopes were durable, entertaining, attractive, optically designed to overcome common vision problems and low enough to be reached by children.

The exhibit introduces the concept of kaleidoscopic reflections with hinged mirrors that a visitor can adjust to create reflections. By placing geometric pieces of colored plastic on the table in front of the mirrors, a simple kaleidoscope is created.

Other displays demonstrate what happens when the angles or planes of mirrors in a kaleidoscope are changed and allow viewers to experiment with the effect by adjusting some pieces themselves. Other exhibit items invite viewers to walk inside a kaleidoscope, or to look at their own reflection bouncing back at them from two or three dozen different angles.

"Mainly, I just want people to like the exhibit and not be frightened of it," she says.

While waiting for a response to her proposal, Marshall developed a kaleidoscope kit that could be produced to her specifications, but without her personal supervision.

"I realized this exhibit would take more time than I could imagine and that I'd never be able to keep up with the one-of-a-kind kaleidoscope orders, too," she says. "I didn't want to start a factory, so this seemed like the perfect thing."

The kit sells for $28 in museum gift shops and department stores.

Bones Are Big Business

By Michael L. Graczyk
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GATESVILLE, Texas — Old Dr. Frankenstein would think he died and went to heaven if he could visit two small buildings in central Texas: a leg here, an arm there, a shelf full of hearts and skulls and skeletons by the dozen.

But it's not something out of a Halloween horror movie; it's the big business of bones. Medical Plastics Laboratory Inc., which claims it is the only U.S. company to make life-size reproductions of skeletons, says the product rakes in millions of dollars.

Wiring Bones Together

Thousands of the skeletons are used by doctors, hospitals and medical schools around the world. The bones also have made their way into rock music videos by the Grateful Dead and props for the "Miami Vice" TV series.

"There's really no one we can't sell to," Jerry Smith, director of special projects, said recently. "We have something for everybody."

Medical Plastics, now in its fourth decade, claims it is the first company in the world to take a human skeleton, make molds and duplicate it completely.

Until 1985, real skeletons were imported from India. But that source was lost when the Indian government, concerned about grave robbing, halted such sales.

"Right now, there is a market simply because there are no longer human bones available," said Joe Herndon, Medical Plastics' national sales manager. "So people have no choice. They have to buy a plastic or reproduction of a skeleton. And we feel we produce the one that has the greatest detail."

In the past two years, sales of skeletons and other Medical Plastics products such as first-aid training mannequins have doubled to $3 million, and should approach $5 million a year, Herndon said.

"Our biggest competitors are companies in West Germany," he said. "To my knowledge, we are still the only people in the U.S. who do this, who make a life-size reproduction of a human skeleton."

The company, which employs 125 people, was started in 1949 by two Gatesville physicians and a dentist who grew tired of waiting for months and months to get a model of a skull.

According to Herndon, the three were booted out of their homes by their wives because the plastics they were experimenting with smelled so bad. They finally produced their first skull in an old chicken coop.

Conserve Energy In Mobile Home

By Karen Edwards

The expense of operating your mobile home affects not only your budget but your comfort as well. There are several steps that can be taken to save energy and money at the same time and make your mobile home more comfortable during the winter months.

If you have just purchased, or are considering the purchase of a mobile home, there are two important energy-saving issues to address: siting and landscaping. The proper orientation on the site can help keep you cool in the summer and warm in the winter. The long axis of the mobile home should be sited along an east-west line, and the side with the largest window area should face south. Utilize shrubs, trees, etc., to serve as windbreaks along the north side of the mobile home.

As in any building, storm windows help reduce the flow of heat to the outside. If your mobile home does not have storm windows, it is advisable to install them either inside or outside. Remember that it is extremely important to have a tight fit. Installing 6-mil plastic sheeting over the windows will also serve well for conserving heat loss.

Air leaks and cracks increase the cost of heating and cooling a mobile home. Caulk cracks and openings around windows and doors, moldings, joists, roof vents and other places where air may pass through. Install weather-stripping around windows and doors to help keep the heat in and the cold drafts out.

Enclosing the space between the mobile home and the ground is known as "skirting." Skirting adds in insulation by decreasing heat loss through the floor and helps to keep the pipes under the home from freezing. When installing, be sure to allow for about six 8-by-16-inch inch vents in the skirting for ventilation.

The success of these weatherization efforts depends largely on the mobile home occupants. Even the most energy-efficient mobile home can have poor energy usage if the occupants do not make an effort to close doors and windows, wear additional clothing and lower the thermostat to the lowest comfortable setting.

Halloween Sweeps

Robert Gift, right, cleans out a chimney with the help of fellow sweep Allison Morehead by the light of a harvest moon earlier this week on the roof of a home in southeast Denver. As the cold weather arrives, more and more homeowners will be calling on sweeps to clear their chimneys for the coming firewood season.

Hairdressers' 'No Shows' Are Costly Appointments

Dear Abby: I have a problem I've never seen in your column. I am a hairdresser and today I was stood up again. People call and make appointments but never call to cancel, and the time I've booked for them is wasted unless I get a walk-in. I'm especially mad right now because this guy was booked for a perm, which takes twice as long as a regular set, so I'm really out two appointments.

I am very accommodating. I've come in early and stayed late, and even come in on my days off for some clients. Some people are so inconsiderate. It's maddening. I've had women come in half an hour early while I'm eating my lunch, and they expect me to hurry up so they can get out early.

Sorry, I got so carried away. Abby, I just want to know how other hairdressers handle no-shows. Some physicians have started charging patients if they don't call and cancel 24 hours ahead of time. I would love to do something like that.

How do other hairdressers handle this problem? — Getting Uglier

Dear Getting: It all depends. The busy hairdressers who are always booked can afford to be independent. They can and do charge a "no-show," and I think they should. In fact, a "no-show" should insist on paying the hairdresser for the time wasted.

However, the average hairdresser lacks the courage to charge for the hole in his book — which also puts a hole in his pocket. It's not fair, and this is a plea for women to be a little more considerate. No-show? Pay the dough.

Dear Abby: Every time you advise someone to seek professional help, I cringe. I don't think you realize that even with "sliding fees," the cost is still out of reach for some people.

My daughter, who is 16 years old, desperately needs psychiatric treatment. Our insurance covers up to 30 visits a year, and the psychiatrist says she needs at least two visits a week, or three years. He offered me a special rate of $50 per session. Abby, I make $275 a week, and I can't afford even one session a week.

When will insurance companies realize that mental illness is just as serious as physical illness? My daughter's problems are not going to go away if left untreated, but I am powerless to help her. Her father deserted us, so I am alone. Poor Working Mom

Dear Mom: A great tragedy in these enlightened times is that some still fail to recognize that emotional illness is just as important as physical illness. Please don't give up because you cannot afford the professional help your daughter needs. Contact your county or state mental health services. The United Way will make referrals for free or low-cost mental health care. There is low-cost counseling available through some local YWCAs. Treatment within your ability to pay is available. Good luck.

Mrs. Jordan Pays Visit To Farmville

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

FARMVILLE — Sarah Jordan came to Farmville on Thursday night promoting two organizations — one to raise money for her husband's gubernatorial campaign and one to bring "love and support" to her.

She invited the women attending the Democratic fund-raiser buffet dinner to take part in both Pine Needles, a fund-raising group for the Bob Jordan for Governor campaign, and a group she has dubbed "Sarah's Straight Line."

Membership in "Sarah's Straight Line," she said, requires no monetary contribution. Joining declares that one wants to convey love and support to her now as the candidate's wife and later as the first lady, she said.

Mrs. Jordan said that when she becomes first lady, the group will evolve into "a listening board" for people to convey ideas for the betterment of North Carolina.

Carol Tyer/The Daily Reflector

Mrs. Jordan, left, talks with Farmville resident Gray Baker

The wife of the lieutenant governor for 30 years, she said they met when a blind date for him was set up with a friend of hers. Six months later, she said, he came courting her with an armful of holly, a gift his mother urged him to bring along. A Raeford native, she was teaching in Charlotte at the time. Within a year she was Mrs. Jordan, living in his hometown of Mount Gilead and supporting him in building his lumber business and his community service activities. She said her husband was a trustee of the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill by the time he was 28.

"There's never been a time in his adult life," she said, "when Bob hasn't devoted himself to serving the people of North Carolina."

Having traveled the state for several months campaigning for her husband, she declared that she is not tired. "How could I be tired?" she said. "I'm having such a good time meeting so many wonderful people."

To preface her appeal for members of Sarah's Straight Line, she quoted California philosophy lecturer Leo Buscaglia saying, "The opposite of love is not hate. It's apathy."

She requested that those present not be apathetic, but declare themselves in favor of improvement of the lives of North Carolinians. People's lives will be improved, she said, when her husband is elected.

Counselor Teaches Children And Adults How To 'Just Say No' To Peer Pressure

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Nancy Reagan's goal is to get children to "just say no."

Scott, a professional counselor and social worker from Dallas, says the First Lady's campaign has coined "a beautiful slogan. It is an excellent theme. It creates awareness. But it is not teaching a skill. It is not teaching children how to say 'no.'"

Scott says she identified a need to teach children how to deal with negative peer pressure while she was director of the Dallas Police Department's Youth Services Program. There, she found that most first offenders were not bad kids but were pressured by friends into breaking the law.

Since then, as head of her own counseling firm, she has taught more than 100,000 adults and youngsters ways to cope when someone asks them to do what they would rather avoid: drugs, alcohol, cigarettes, sex, theft, truancy.

The technique, which she calls peer pressure reversal, uses three basic steps — check out the scene, make a good decision, act to avoid trouble — without, she says, losing friends.

"I teach them how to get out of traps as lightly as possible," she adds.

Checking out the scene teaches skills in identifying potential trouble. Making a good decision is understanding whether it is time to stay or leave. Acting to avoid trouble means splitting, either physically or mentally.

"There are 10 response choices to avoid trouble," says Scott. "Say no, leave, pretend you didn't hear, make an excuse, act shocked, change the subject, make a joke, try flattery, offer a better idea, return the challenge.

"The most common choice is making an excuse."

It can be truthful: "I'm grounded." "I have to meet my parents." It can be tongue-in-cheek: "I have to rearrange my sock drawer." "I have to brush my dog's teeth."

If all else fails, Scott says, just say, "I have to go to the bathroom," and walk away.

"Kids today are expected to make decisions at an earlier age," she says. "For example, people who are 35 years and older were offered their first drink at age 17 or 18. Today, the average age is 11½."

Time

Today, atomic clocks keep the correct time, and callers can get it by telephone by dialing 1-900-410-TIME. The call costs 50 cents.

The National Institute of Standards and Technology — formerly the National Bureau of Standards — is in charge of defining time.

That is, setting a standard for the exact length of time in a second, minute and so forth.

While the official switch to standard time covers most of the nation, a few states have taken matters into their own hands and exempted themselves. Since those places didn't spring forward to daylight time last spring, they won't fall back this weekend.

Included in the nonconformists are Arizona, Hawaii, the part of Indiana located in the Eastern time zone; Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and American Samoa.

Police Expand Blockade For Halloween

manage this year's activities, several traffic barricades will close off a portion of the streets of downtown Greenville at 6:30 p.m. Monday.

"Basically, the traffic will be detoured off the adjacent streets where there will be a lot of walking traffic," Nichols said.

Last year's crowd was so large, Nichols said, that it spilled beyond the confined area that police were maintaining and new barricades had to be established farther out.

This year the police are closing off that enlatged area at the start of the evening.

In addition to traffic barriers, the police will locate several checkpoints to form an "inner-perimeter" to confine the potential crowds.

"These checkpoints will enable officers to be on the lookout for any item or person that we feel would be a potential hazard or problem like people carrying weapons, or something of that nature, into the crowd," Nichols said.

Among the items which will not be permitted in the inner-perimeter are glass bottles and containers.

"Glass is our main concern because, with that many people there, it's likely to be dropped on the street and a lot of people for some reasson walk around barefooted downtown on Halloween so there is a big potential for people being cut," Nichols said. "And if someone gets agitated and throws a bottle, that's a lot more dangerous than if someone throws an alunminum can."

Nichols said the police are attempting to enlist others to help minimize the potential for injury.

"We are trying to get the cooperation of the local bar owners and convenience store people who are selling the beer to not sell it in glass," he said.

According to Nichols, the police currently intend to implement their Halloween plans on Monday only.

"In our initial planning session we met with various law enforcement agencies, university officials and student government representatives and it was expressed at that time that the students felt like and it was their wishes to have Halloween festivities on Halloween night," he said.

But in case large crowds should develop on either Friday or Saturday nights, Nichols said the police will be prepared to respond as the situation demands.

Assisting Greenville police will be the Pitt County Sheriff's Department, the state Highway Patrol, state Alcohol Law Enforcement officers and military police, to handle any problems created by members of the armed services. East Carolina University police will also be monitoring the campus.

Nichols said although Greenville police recorded only seven arrests at last year's festivities, Alcohol Law Enforcement officers made over 100 arrests, most of which were connected with underage drinking.

Shuttle Test Set

nent manned presence in space aboard the orbiting space station Mir. While Soviet officials have not said whether the shuttle is capable of doing so, the shuttle might be able to ferry supplies and cosmonauts to Mir.

The Soviets have repeatedly criticized the military use of the American shuttle, and the next U.S. flight, of the Atlantis scheduled for late November, is a mission for the Pentagon.

As with the American shuttle, the Soviets might use the Buran for military missions. The U.S. Defense Department says the Soviet shuttle could be used to deploy anti-satellite and ballistic missile defense weapons.

Soviet officials say the first flight of their shuttle was designed to be pilotless to avoid danger to cosmonauts. They point to the Jan. 28, 1986, explosion of the Challenger when its crew of seven was killed as an example of the hazards they are trying to avoid.

It isn't clear whether the Soviets will offer the shuttle's services to foreign customers, as they have done with their Proton rocket boosters. If foreign customers are sought, competition will come not only from the United States but from Western Europe.

The Buran clearly has advantages over its American cousin. Its separate booster rocket, the Energia, is powered only by liquid fuels, which can be extinguished in an emergency. It has no solid-fuel boosters like the one that failed on the Challenger.

Recruiting Tough On Bucs

Tough Schedule Necessitated That ECU Bring In Talented Athletes

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Recruiting is the lifeline of any college football program and East Carolina faces a constant battle in its efforts to bring in the needed players to compete on its schedule.

At all four of North Carolina's Atlantic Coast Conference schools, coaches Dick Sheridan at N.C. State, Mack Brown at UNC, Steve Spurrier at Duke and Bill Dooley at Wake Forest have made recruiting in-state a priority.

"I'm not saying we're better than they are, but it is very hard for them to go head to head with North Carolina or State get one of the better players in the state," said Mike O'Cain, a former ECU assistant during the 1985 season who is now the offensive backfield coach at N.C. State.

"The most highly recruited players they have not been able to get. They go into Florida and they've got some good players, but it's hard when you have to go out of state (for the majority of your recruiting). It's been difficult. There is a lot more talent now (at East Carolina) than in 1985 when I was there."

ECU football coach Art Baker said there are two things that would directly benefit ECU's recruiting.

The first is an improvement of facilities in Greenville. That will come to pass this spring with the completion of the new sports medicine building at ECU that will include new lockerrooms, a weight room, a strength center, a letterman's lounge and football offices.

But it may be too late for Baker. He is in the final year of a four-year contract and this year's 1-7 record has done nothing to guarantee him any job security. ECU officials have maintained that they will review his status at the end of the season.

It has been speculated that Baker will resign during the off-week before the final game of the season against Cincinnati.

Regardless, Baker said ECU it would be a boost to the school's

ECU Coach Suffers The Losses; Praises His Players

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Richard Bell came to East Carolina early this spring with high hopes of building a competitive defense. But his dreams are turning into an inner sickness as the Pirate defensive coordinator begins to realize his stay at ECU is, perhaps, almost over.

Pirate fans entered the season looking for, and expecting, a winning record. A 1-7 mark through the first eight games have left many mumbling for the resignation of current head coach Art Baker.

"I read the papers and hear the reports on television," Bell said. "From the way it sounds, the decision (to hire a new football coach) has already been made. I don't think it's the right decision, but it's not for me to decide."

For now, with distractions continually swirling around him, Bell is trying to keep his mind on getting the Pirates through their final three games with as much success as possible.

"I don't let it (the decision) affect me that much. I've learned to live with it and I'm not bitter about it," Bell said. "Not that I like losing, because I don't. My stomach has ached for the last six weeks. But I made a commitment when I came here to East Carolina and to Art Baker to do the best job I could and I'm not going to stop working hard until after the final whistle at Cincinnati (Nov. 19). After that we'll

By Ed Schuyler Jr.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Mike Tyson wants to promote fights with Don King, while Donald Trump wants $2 million from the heavyweight champion to be spread among charities as payment for services rendered.

Trump said he considers the donation to be Tyson's payment for having helped the champion reduce the percentage Bill Cayton got from his manager's and personal services contracts.

"I don't want to answer any questions," Tyson said Thursday after announcing at a news conference, "Me and Don King have made a deal."

"He'll be working with me as my associatie and partner," said King, who also has another deal with Tyson — a four-year contract to exclusively promote his fights.

King declined to discuss the specifics of the deal that made Tyson his promotional partner.

Tyson's first venture will be the lightweight championship fight between Julio Cesar Chavez and Jose Luis Ramirez on Saturday night at the Las Vegas Hilton.

The Hilton is negotating to get Tyson's scheduled Jan. 14 defense against Frank Bruno, which was originally to be held in London and has been postponed three times while Tyson has undergone personal problems ranging from injuries to divorce.

"I have every reason to believe the fight will be held January 14 at Las Vegas, with Mike Tyson's approval," Cayton said by telephone from New York.

Bucs Face Final Top-20 Challenge

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

While some folks might look at Saturday's East Carolina-Miami, Fla., football game as the last of the so-called "October Death March," Coach Art Baker and the Pirates look at it as the last chance to knock off one of the big boys this year.

And it's also the last chance they'll have to impress the home folks. Saturday's 1:30 p.m. game is the final home game of the season for the Pirates.

Many, too, believe it will be the final appearance of Baker as head coach of the Pirates. Baker is in the final year of his contract, and rumors have flown all season long that he will not return. Now, it is believed that Baker will resign by season's end, and credit is given to a report that he will resign during the Pirates' open date week, Nov. 7-12.

The Pirates do have two more games remaining following the contest with Miami, but both are on the road. They travel to Temple on Nov. 5 and to Cincinnati on Nov. 19. In both games, the 1-7 Pirates will be facing teams which are also struggling to find ways to win.

Miami, currently ranked fourth on the Associated Press poll, held the number one position after the second week of the season until two weeks ago when the Hurricanes were knocked off by Notre Dame, 31-30. The Hurricanes beat the pre-season and first week's number one team, Florida State, 31-0, in the season's opener. They then rallied to beat Michigan, 31-30, in the second game of the year, then waltzed past their next two opponents, Wisconsin, 24-3, and Missouri, 55-0.

Following their loss to Notre Dame, the Hurricanes thrashed Cincinnati, 57-3, last weekend.

East Carolina, following a 52-13 win over Tennessee Tech, a Division I-AA team that has won only one game this year, was upset by Virginia Tech, 27-16, and lost 17-0 to nationally ranked South Carolina — the first of five nationally ranked teams on the Pirate slate this year.

That was followed by two close contests, both of which the Pirates came up short in. Southern Mississippi rallied for a 45-42 win and Southwestern Louisiana held off ECU, 48-36, after trailing in the game.

Then came October and four straight games against Top Twenty teams. West Virginia took a 30-10 win, followed by Florida State, a 45-21 winner. Syracuse topped the Pirates, 38-14, last weekend.

Now, the Pirates face one last Top Twenty challenge, the Hurricanes and their outstanding quarterback Steve Walsh. Walsh, against Cincinnati, tied a school record by throw-

Powell Wins Regional

Rose High School's Paige Powell, who is actually still a ninth grader at E.B. Aycock Junior High, captured the Region One singles championship of the North Carolina High School Athletic Association in Wilson Thursday.

Powell, who advanced to the semifinals on Wednesday with two shutout victories, defeated Sandy Williford of Goldsboro, 6-1, 6-3, in the semifinals. Then, in the championship match, she beat Caroline Vincent of Goldsboro, 6-3, 6-4.

Powell, who was unbeaten this year in 18 singles matches, is ranked first in the state by the North Carolina Tennis Association in the 14-and-under age group. She is also ranked eighth in the 16-and-under age group. Rankings are from last year.

Powell is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. Howard Powell of Greenville. She will enter the NCHSAA's state tournament in Chapel Hill on Wednesday.

Linebacker Scott Gardner has been a key for Farmville

Gardner Leads Jags

Hard Work Has Keyed His Success

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

FARMVILLE — Scott Gardner isn't the fastest or the biggest player on the football field, but that hasn't stopped him from being one of the top linebackers in the Eastern Plains Conference.

At 5-9 and 180 pounds, Gardner seems to be more the size of a running back or a defensive back. But he is the force in the middle of the Jaguars' defense.

"I enjoy it as a sport. I like the hitting," Gardner said. "I like to hit folks a lot, ever since I've been playing midget football. Coach tries to tell me to be more under control. If I get beat on the field I take it as a personal insult."

Despite his lack of size, Gardner hopes to be able try and play football at either Chowan College or Elon College. Once there, he hopes to study sports medicine and work toward becoming a coach.

If the past is any indication, that shouldn't be any problem. Gardner has never let a a lack of size slow him down. He merely overcame it.

"He's overall small in stature," said Farmville coach Dixon Sauls. "He does extra well with his size. His eagerness to play hard and do well has made up for it."

The Rampants won the title for the fifth straight year, ending this season with a 12-2 league record. Northeastern, which would have won with a victory, ends up second at 10-3-1.

Leisten scored his first goal at the 66 minute mark on an assist from Patrick Joyner, tying it at 1-1. With just 4:15 left, Toure Claibourne got John Bolen's throw-in to Leisten, who scored from 18 yards out with the game-winner.

In the second period, Anthony Love went in from two yards out and Grice passed to him for the PAT. Before the period was over, Joe Rowe blocked a Hunt punt and Keith Roberts recovered it in the end zone for the touchdown. Grant Harmon's kick made it 23-0.

Now 5-3 overall and 4-2 in Big East play, Rose travels to Northeastern on Thursday for its final game of the year.

Mitch Jones put Aycock on the scoreboard in the first quarter with a one-yard run. Aycock scored twice more in the second period. Dwight Sheppard scored from three yards out and Jones ran over the PAT. Melvin McLawhorn then scored on a 20-yard run to make it 20-0 at the half.

Mike Aldridge scored on a one-yard run in the third period and Germaine Williams scored from 15 yards out. In the final period, Troy Clemons scored from the 15 and Williams took a pass from Sheppard for the PAT. Andre Williams closed out the scoring with a 10-yard run.

Now 4-1, Aycock travels to New Bern Barber on Thursday.

Bob Lohr Leads Disney Tourney

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — The Walt Disney World Classic is golf's version of a 400-meter dash — it's hard to tell who is ahead until the competitors near the finish.

The Disney doesn't have staggered starts, but it does use three courses. And the golfers still waiting to play the long Magnolia course — including leader Bob Lohr — dominated the leader board after Thursday's second round.

Lohr was 15 under par after following his opening-round 62 with a 67 on THursday and he held a three-stroke lead over Robert Wrenn. Fuzzy Zoeller was third, four shots behind the leader, after a 69 at Magnolia.

"I don't think you'll have a leader until (Friday) night, after all the golfers have played all three courses," Zoeller said. "Then you'll have an idea what's going on."

Among the 14 golfers with the lowest scores, eight had yet to play Magnolia, which has produced the highest scores in the $700,000, 72-hole tournament.

"Playing like I'm playing right now, I'd say they're pretty good," he said. "If I shoot another good round, I'll be in a position where I can control my own destiny."

Lohr, 27, had six birdies and one bogey on the Lake Buena Vista course for a 129 total that broke the tournament record for the lowest score at the halfway point. The previous best was Chip Beck's 130 in 1984.

"I'm driving it really well," Lohr said. "The tee ball has set up the whole game."

Wrenn was at 132 with Magnolia still to play as he shot his second straight 66 Thursday despite missing three birdie putts of 6 feet or less.

Dixon Named New Gamecock A.D.

By Rick Scoppe
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Interim Athletic Director King Dixon was named South Carolina's permanent AD on Thursday and vowed to help "steady our course" as the university tries to recover from allegations of drug use by some former football players.

Dixon, a Phi Beta Kappa graduate and a star athlete in the late 1950s at South Carolina, will head up an athletic department that was rocked last week by an article in Sports Illustrated about the use of steroids and other drugs by former football players.

Dixon, who was named interim AD Oct. 3, compared the situation he faces with a joke about a man who got into a bed that caught on fire.

"I feel like that guy when they ... asked him what happened," he said. "He said the bed was on fire when he got in it. I think that's kind of an analogy of the situation I'm in right now."

University President James B. Holderman, who announced Dixon's selection during a meeting of the Intercollegiate Activities Committee of the board of trustees, also joked about the school's latest controversy while saying that Dixon was up to the challenge brought on by that controversy.

"King we welcome you aboard at a very calm time in the history of the department," he said, "and we know it will stabilize under your leadership and will continue to grow and flourish like we all want us to."

Holderman said Dixon, the fourth AD this year at the university, was the leading candidate for the job all along.

"He was the obvious choice. We considered a few other people, but literally he was out front from the beginning," Holderman said. "King was head and shoulders above any other potential candiates."

Holderman said there were "a few" other candidates considered but would not identify them.

Dixon was named interim AD after Dick Bestwick resigned six months after taking the job, citing unspecified health problems. Bestwick replaced acting athletic director Johnny Gregory, who took over when Bob Marcum was fired in early March following a task force report that was highly critical of the school's drug-testing program.

Chaikin, who played for the Gamecocks from 1983 to 1987, said in an article in Sports Illustrated that he took steroids for three years, that half the 1986 football team did as well and that players used other drugs such as cocaine and LSD.

The State Law Enforcement Division is conducting a preliminary probe into the allegations.

"Now is the time for us to take a look inside out and do what we need to do, and we'll be looking at that very carefully," Dixon said. "As far as my reservations about stepping into that, no, I had no reservations to take it head on."

Earlier this week, Dixon said he expected some changes in the athletic department in the wake of Chaikin's allegations. But he didn't say whether the changes would be in policy or personnel.

"Right now," Dixon said, "we're reviewing our organization, we're reviewing our personnel. I don't plan any changes whatsoever at this time.

"We're trying to steady our course. We're trying to take it one day at a time. We're trying to get a better understanding of what we're all about. ... My concern is to do damage assessment ... (and) try to turn a very negative situation into a positive and plan for the future."

At his request, Dixon will not operate under a contract. Instead, Dixon will be treated as university employees who are at his level, according to Holderman.

Historically, ADs — and coaches and other athletic personnel — have been under contracts that run for a certain length of time and must be renewed. A university employee in Dixon's category becomes a permanent employee after a six-month probationary period and can't be fired except for cause, spokeswoman Debra Allen said.

"Quite refreshing to me — and I think to everybody else with whom I've talked — is King Dixon does not want a contract," Holderman said. "That had nothing to do with his selection.

"He wants to be treated as other senior university personnel who are vice presidents of the university, which is a title that would perfectly fit that of athletic director. He operates at the same level as a vice president of the university. They operate without contracts, and so will Mr. Dixon."

Holderman said Dixon's salary will be in line with other vice presidents, but he said his exact salary hasn't been set. Marcum was making about $89,000 when he was fired.

"We're asking state human resources people to develop a salary range. This is historic in a sense. I don't think anybody's every done this before," Holderman said. "They'll have to study the job and make recommendations."

ECU vs. Miami

Perhaps the most amazing statistic on Walsh is that he has yet to be sacked this year.

The game will be the seventh in the series between the two teams, all of which have been won by Miami. The closest the Pirates have come to winning was in 1983 when Miami held off ECU for a 12-7 victory. In that game, the Pirates dropped a potential game-winning pass in the end zone on the final play of the contest. Miami went on from there to win the national championship.

For East Carolina, it will be Senior Day, and 17 Pirates will be playing their final game in Ficklen Stadium. They are Shannon Boling, Bill Carver, Kyle Condry, Andre Fields, Don Gaylor, Rodney Glover, Bryan Haywood, Tim James, Craig Losito, Flint McCallum, Reggie McKinney, Billy Michel, Jarrod Moody, Tim Orr, Wade Perry, Roswell Streeter and Glenn Willis.

Several Pirates are injured and their status is undetermined for Saturday. McKinney, a slotback, is listed as questionable, while offensive guard Stewart Southall is listed as doubtful. Linebacker Robert Jones and offensive guard Billy Michel are both listed as probable, while corner Ed Brogdon and offensive tackle Tod Creech will both miss the contest. Brogden, who underwent knee surgery this week, is out for the season.

James, the starting fullback, will be seeking to become the second Pirate to pass 1,000 career yards this year. McKinney accomplished that earlier this year. James now has 991 yards for his career.

East Carolina is expected to again start Travis Hunter at quarterback. Hunter is the number two man in total offense for the Pirates with 762 yards, including 561 through the air. Charlie Libretto, who started two games, leads the team with 827 yards, 645 of them through the air.

The top receiver is Walter Wilson with 308 on 17 completions while Al Whiting has 13 catches for 213 yards. Jarrod Moody has 12 grabs for 140 yards.

Spivey Has Three Game Lead On Pack

Woody Peele

Vickie Spivey has built up a three-game lead in the race to be the best this year among our panel of pickers.

Spivey has a 69-25 record for the year, while the Toms, Tom Morris and Tom Baines are tied for second place with 66-28 records. I have moved back into fourth at 62-32, while Tim Chandler is fifth with a 61-33 mark. Greg Laudick is making a move to get out of the basement, where he's been all year, closing to 58-36.

I've tried to pick out games that have a good chance of splitting the panel, but sometimes it seems like we all go with the same team — and we either all win or lose.

Meanwhile, my high school picks last week posted an 8-1 record. That brings me to 49-19 on the season.

North Pitt travels to Charles B. Aycock. The Panthers are on the horn. They must keep winning these last two weeks to have a shot at another playoff berth. Charles B. Aycock is, baring some miracle, out of the playoff picture. But that doesn't mean that the Falcons can't pull off an upset, especially if the Panthers approach the game as they did against Farmville Central. But I'm sticking with the Panthers, 21-14.

Ayden-Grifton travels to South Lenoir. The Chargers seem to have a lock on the Eastern Plains Conference championship, but can't afford a letdown. South Lenoir upset Farmville Central when the Jaguars were struggling with their injuries, so the Blue Devils can be lethal. Still, unless something unexpected happens, Ayden-Grifton will win, 35-0.

Farmville Central plays host to Greene Central in a game that could also have a lot to do with the playoff picture. The winner has a good shot at making it while the loser is just about out of hope. This should be quite a game, but I'll go with Farmville to pull it out, 14-12.

Finally, Rose travels to Wilson Hunt. This is a game that could also have a big effect on the playoffs. Hunt, with two losses. has to win to have a true shot at a playoff berth. Rose can lock up a playoff berth with a win. But the Rampants cannot look past Hunt to next week's game with Northeastern, which will decide the conference championship. Rose will pull it out, but it will be a battle, 14-7.

In other area games, Chocowinity will beat Princeton, 21-16; North Edgecombe will top Jamesville, 35-14; Roanoke will top Belhaven, 24-8; and Williamston will beat Roanoke Rapids, 14-7.

The other area high school game pits D.H. Conley against Washington. The Pam Pack can ensure second place in the Coastal Conference with a victory, while Conley, with a win, must watch the rest of the league to see what happens and may still need a win against East Carteret a week from now to advance. It's Washington's final game of the year — and could be its final game in the Coastal. The Pack, although appealing, has been placed in the Tar Roanoke Conference for next year.

The panel is picking the Vikings by a 4-2 margin. Tom Baines and I are going with the Pack — which, according to Coach Steve Craft, should ensure a Conley win. I see it as a Pam Pack win, 22-17.

Finally, East Carolina completes the "October Death March" against fourth-ranked Miami. The Hurricanes have a powerful passing attack. East Carolina hasn't been that great in pass defense. It's the home finale for the Pirates, and may also be Art Baker's swan song in Ficklen.

The panel goes down the line with Miami, and I pick it 42-14.

Our other consensus picks: Duke over Georgia Tech; N.C. State over South Carolina; Clemson over Wake Forest; Louisiana State over Mississippi; Texas over Texas Tech; Maryland and North Carolina, a toss-up; Virginia over Virginia Tech; Iowa and Indiana, a toss-up; Southern Mississippi over Memphis State and Washington over Stanford.

While It's Good Year, It's Not Quite An Ellis Year

By Rick Scoppe
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Statistically, South Carolina quarterback Todd Ellis is having his worst season since donning the garnet and black. Not a bad season. Just not quite a Todd Ellis season.

Through seven games, the 6-foot-3, 203-pound junior has thrown for half as many touchdowns and for about 300 yards less than he did over the same span as a freshman. And after not throwing an interception in the first three games of the season, he's caught up with his pickoff pace he set the past two years.

Does that mean defenses have Ellis' number?

"No, I don't think they have caught up with me," Ellis said.

Then what's the problem? Or, is there a problem? Ellis doesn't think there is major problem, just a lot of little things.

"I need to do a better job under snappy situations, either eating the ball or throwing it away," Ellis said in a recent interview. "You know, that's not the easiest thing to work on. So, I would think that's something I still need to grow on a great deal, learn to eat the ball more and take the sacks."

Ellis said early in the season he wasn't getting the pressure he has faced during the past few games. Part of the problem is the Gamecocks' running game has been wracked by injuries, leaving Ellis and his offensive line to often face a defensive front that can focus on getting to the quarterback.

"I think it doesn't take a genuis to know that if you have pressure on the quarterback the entire game, you're going to get to him," Ellis said. "I don't think teams are saying we can beat Todd Ellis or the offense with pressure.

"Georgia tried it on many downs, and we burned them several times," Ellis said. "We have burned a lot of teams. I don't think that's the case at all.

"I think teams have gotten us into situations where it was easier for them to call defenses than for us to call offense plays, and we've gotten in too many second-and-longs and third-and-longs, where our ability to mix up our play calling is drastically changed.

"To me, getting yards on first down is the biggest thing that we need to do, and we did that in our first four or five ballgames."

Indeed. The 17th-ranked Gamecocks began impressively, winning their first six games, including a 23-10 victory over Georgia that wasn't that close. The Gamecocks outscored their first five foes 144 to 29 before running into trouble against Virginia Tech. The Gamecocks struggled to beat an average Virginia Tech team 26-24.

Then two weeks ago, South Carolina suffered a stunning 34-0 loss to Georgia Tech, which was 1-4 at the time and had not beaten a I-A team since 1986.

As the Gamecocks have struggled, so has Ellis. He's had 13 interceptions in his last four games, giving him 59 for his career compared to 37 TD passes. Overall, the Greensboro, N.C., native has completed 134 of 246 passes (54.5 percent) for 1,661 yards and seven TDs.

Certainly not a bad year. In fact, many a coach — including South Carolina's Joe Morrison — would be happy to have a quarterback like Ellis and numbers like that.

But compare Ellis' stats this year to his first two seasons when he was running out of the run-and-shoot instead of the newly installed pro set. Through seven games as a red-shirt freshman, Ellis had hit 130 of 217 passes for 1,967 yards and 14 TDs along with 14 interceptions.

As a sophomore, Ellis had completed 158 of 273 passes for 2,181 yards and eight TDs along with 15 interceptions.

Still, Ellis remains on target to become the NCAA's all-time leading passer, a record now held by San Diego State's Todd Santos who threw for 11,425 yards. Ellis has thrown for 7,887 yards in his 30-game career. He also holds 25 school records.

But Ellis, an intelligent and personable athlete who is involved in the state attorney general's anti-drug program, knows he has room for improvement. And he also knows playing quarterback at a school like South Carolina isn't like playing any other position.

"We hear all kind of things. The people of this state and the fans have a tendency to turn things around and ask questions, 'Why? Why? Why?' when you lost a ballgame like that (to Georgia Tech), or when anything goes wrong. They tend to point the finger, which I guess is human nature.

The Gamecocks, 6-1, are coming off an open date as they prepare for North Carolina State, which is also 6-1 after beating Clemson 10-3 a week ago.

Gardner Keys Jags

"It's tough on me to read plays," he said. "I just have to flow with the play and see where the play is going. A lot of times I over pursue and miss where the running back is going."

Not that often though. Gardner has been the leading tackler in six of the of the nine Jaguars' game this season. He missed two games with a shoulder injury. For the year, he has 94 total tackles with 71 solos.

Gardner has been on the varsity squad for four years and had what his coach called an inauspicious beginning.

"He was what we fondly call a member of the apple dumpling gang," Sauls said. "He played with about 10 freshman on our championship team."

That was back in 1985 when Gardner was a 5-1, 160-pound ninth grader.

"They called us the Apple Dumpling gang because they didn't think we'd amount to anything," he said. "That's when I got my nickname Squat.

"There were a lot of people to look up to like Dennis Tripp and Johnny Eastwood. I saw how they did things and I learned that you had to work hard to win. I try to work hard in practice and do the best I can because if I don't then the other fellas won't want to do it either."

The year turned out to be a good learning experience. The Jaguars went undefeated in the Eastern Plains Conference and advanced to the second round of the playoffs.

The following season, he saw some playing time and by his junior year he was a starter at defensive guard and center. This year, he has played center, guard and linebacker.

He's been a leader for a Farmville team that is battling for a playoff spot despite an injury bug that seemed to put just about the whole squad on the sidelines during the early part of the season.

"Scott is a tremendous young man," Sauls said. "I don't want to use too many cliches but he is the epitome of the high school athlete. He's bright. He works hard. He's enthusiastic and eager to do the things he has to in order to become a good player.

"He is our leader, spiritually, vocally. He calls our defensive signals. He is an outstanding center who has moved to play guard to help the team."

Farmville began to recover from its injuries at midseason and rebounded with a 12-0 win over North Pitt that put the Jaguars back firmly into the EPC playoff race. It was a game Farmville had to win if the team had any desire to make it to post-season play.

"We knew if we wanted to win the conference championship, we would have to beat North Pitt," he said. "We went to a 6-3 wide defense and I played outside linebacker. Usually I play inside. It was easier to read the plays outside but you have to stay home and I kept wanting to go to the flow of the ball."

As a two-way player, Gardner doesn't get a whole lot of rest on the field, but he said fatigue is as much mental as it is physical.

"The most tired I get is at the beginning of the second quarter," he said. "After that I just get numb. You just keep your mind on the game and you don't think about getting tired.

Tonight, Gardner leads the Jaguars, 5-4 overall and 3-2 in the EPC, into action against Greene Central.

Chicago Promises To Be Ready For Flutie Sunday

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAKE FOREST, Ill. — Doug Flutie wasn't with Chicago long enough to get many grass stains on his jersey. His stint with the Bears still irks some of his former teammates and they promise to be ready for him Sunday when they play his current team, the New England Patriots.

Some reporters have taken to calling the matchup "Bambi meets Godzilla," a reference to the nickname "Bambi," which the 5-foot-10 quarterback was given while in Chicago, and a 1960s cartoon in which the animated deer meets the fabled monster.

Flutie will have enough problems just facing the Bears defense, which is rated the best in the NFL. The Patriots are 3-5 while the Bears have lost just one of eight games.

Still, some of his former teammates say they're looking forward to lining up against Flutie, who has started the last three games, winning one. He has completed 56 percent of his passes this season, throwing for two touchdowns and suffering four interceptions.

"I think everyone wants to squash him and eliminate him," Bears tight end Emery Moorehead said. "We'd like to put him down early and get someone else in the game."

"I don't have anything against Doug Flutie as a person," Bears quarterback Jim McMahon said. "I think what I said when he came here I still stand by. I didn't feel we needed him at the time, and since then we let him go.

"So how important was he to our team?"

Defensive lineman Steve McMichael said: "I don't remember him being here. I wipe bad times out of my memory."

With McMahon bothered by injuries, Flutie was acquired by the Bears at mid-season in 1986, mostly as a backup to Mike Tomczak. But other members of the team looked on the 1984 Heisman Trophy winner from Boston College as coach Mike Ditka's pet project, and they were upset at what they perceived as Flutie's preferential treatment.

Flutie completed 23 of 46 passes in four games during the regular season. Against Washington in the playoffs, he started and completed only 11 of 31 passes as the Redskins won 27-13.

He never played another down with Chicago.

"A lot of that was pressure from the front office on Coach Ditka after we lost the playoff," Flutie said. "They drafted Jim Harbaugh against (Ditka's) wishes."

"I'm a fan of Doug Flutie, sure," Ditka said. "I have a lot of feelings for him. Doug's a good kid."

McMahon, noting Flutie's height, recently referred to him as "America's midget," but said it was only a joke.

"I just blew it off as Jim being Jim," Flutie said. "His word isn't law to me."

Flutie said the only resentment he sensed from the Bears was the fear that he might take McMahon's job.

"That's Jim's team, no doubt about it," he said.

"I thought he was great guy," said center Jay Hilgenberg. "I don't have any bad feelings about him except for his golf swing. I lost some money playing against him."

West Virginia Season On Line

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

All West Virginia has on the line Saturday is an undefeated record and a shot at a major bowl invitation. And all they have to do is beat Penn State.

On all counts, it will not be easy for the seventh-ranked Mountaineers.

West Virginia's 7-0 record is its best start since 1955. Since then, it is 1-30-1 against Penn State and 8-44-2 in the series, including 13 shutouts.

West Virginia's last five victories in the series were by a total of 24 points, including a 21-7 "romp" in 1955. The Nittany Lions have won 28 of the last 29 meetings with West Virginia.

West Virginia's last victory over Penn State came in 1984, when the Mountaineers won 17-14 at home. Before that, the Nittany Lions had won 25 consecutive games.

"This year, West Virginia has much better personnel. We have potentially good personnel, but we're a year or two away at least. They're there. They're there right now," Penn State coach Joe Paterno said.

"A lot of people don't know about West Virginia, and the first thing they ask is 'Why did you choose that?'" senior wide receiver Calvin Phillips said.

The Mountaineers are coming off a 59-19 rout of Boston College. Penn State, 4-3, has dropped two straight, scoring only one touchdown while losing to Syracuse 24-10 and Alabama 8-3.

"I think it's probably the best offensive team we've ever played against," Paterno said of the Moutaineers.

The Mountaineers' attack is led by quarterback Major Harris, who has completed 59 of 97 passes for 1,095 yards and seven touchdowns. He has rushed 72 times for 371 yards and five touchdowns.

"If we can beat Penn State and just get over that hump, it should be clear sailing the rest of the way," said Harris, a redshirt sophomore.

In other Top Twenty action, No. 1 UCLA hosts Washington State, No. 2 Notre Dame visits Navy, No. 3 Southern California is at Oregon State, No. 4 Miami, Fla. visits East Carolina, No. 5 Nebraska hosts Kansas State; No. 6 Florida State is idle, No. 8 Oklahoma hosts Kansas, No. 9 Auburn visits Florida, No. 10 Wyoming visits Colorado State, No. 11 Arkansas hosts Rice, No. 12 Oklahoma State is at Kansas State, No. 13 Louisiana State hosts Mississippi, No. 14 Michigan is at Northwestern, No. 15 Clemson visits Wake Forest, No. 16 Syracuse is idle, No. 17 South Carolina visits North Carolina State, No. 18 Georgia hosts William & Mary, No. 19 Alabama visits Mississippi State and No. 20 Arizona State visits Oregon.

West Virginia is averaging 43.4 points a game and have more than just Harris. A.B. Brown has rushed for 526 yards and six touchdowns and Undra Johnson has 491 yards and eight touchdowns.

"We haven't beaten Penn State in a few years, but we sure are on a roll now," Harris said. "Everything is rolling in our favor. I think we're good enough to go undefeated."

An undefeated season for the Mountaineers could mean a bowl bid to either the Fiesta, Sugar or Orange. Their last major bowl appearance was in 1953, a 42-19 loss to Georgia Tech in the Sugar.

Penn State is trying to continue its NCAA record of 49 consecutive non-losing seasons.

The top two passers in the country go head-to-head as No. 1 UCLA takes on Washington State. State's Timm Rosenbach is rated No. 1, not the Bruins' Troy Aikman. But Aikman has repeatedly said he would rather see his team be No. 1

Army was smart enough to drop the Irish; when will Navy learn? One of the nation's longest intersectional rivalries continues indefinitely, with Navy trailing 51-9 and losers of the last 24.

"We're going to bring everything we've got," Holtz said. "I have too much respect for their coaching, too much respect for Navy, too much respect for how they play. They will play us a difficult game, make no mistake about it. Hopefully, we can play up to our potential."

The last time Southern Cal lost in Corvallis (1967) they also won the national championship. History may repeat for the Trojans as far as the national championship, but things look bleak for Oregon State in Corvallis.

The Nebraska Cornhuskers have been on a roll since UCLA blew them away early in the season. They have a five-game winning streak, the closest a 63-42 victory over Oklahoma State in which they led 35-0 after one period.

Clemson has scored 110 points in its three televised games, 66 in the other four. This one's not on the tube.

Recruiting Was Uphill Battle

recruiting if it could schedule any of the ACC schools in the state.

"Until we get to the point where we're playing some or all of the (Division I-A) schools in North Carolina it's like we're an outcast," he said. "We need that so badly. Look what it would mean to attendance if every other year, N.C. State, North Carolina or Wake Forest would play in this stadium. You just can't say that the fact that you are playing a national power is going to fill the stadium.

"You have to have a winning football team. Then the competition needs to be varied — with some teams you can beat and some teams that you play for the exposure, money or recruiting.

"Their reasoning (the other ACC schools) for that — and I have to be careful with this — is for the last four years I think we could have competed very well in the ACC and they know that. What do they have by playing us? They have everything to lose and nothing to gain. Even North Carolina State has taken on that attitude."

ECU and N.C. State used to play every year, but the series has been discontinued recently due to fan violence at the game in 1987. It has not been renewed because of ECU's request that the series be home and home.

During ECU's most successful years in the late 1970s and early 1980s, the eastern part of the state was its main recruiting ground. During those years they also used to play at least two of the four ACC schools.

But ACC schools have begun to recruit harder in eastern North Carolina. Add to that the inception of proposition 48, an NCAA bylaw that set minimum entrance requirements for incoming freshman student athletes, and things have changed.

"I think the whole recruiting process has changed," said Les Herrin, a former ECU assistant who is now at North Carolina. "People are on more of a national scale. Everybody is spreading out.

"The Notre Dames, the Michigans, they come into North Carolina because of the different signing situations. There are no more open signing dates. There are more recruiting surveys. There are articles in which names appear and they (college recruiters) are going everywhere.

"There isn't an area now that anybody can say no one comes in there. Everybody is trying to find the best football players. It has changed some areas for the good and some for the worse."

In the last few seasons alone, local players such as Jesse Campbell (West Craven, N.C. State), Eric Blount (Ayden-Grifton, North Carolina), Dennis Tripp (Farmville Central, North Carolina), Gary Dunn (Northern Nash, Auburn) have all gone elsewhere.

"The most frustrating thing for me has been that eastern North Carolina players (have gone elsewhere)," Baker said. "We lose too many good ones in this area. I thought we would be able to recruit better than we have. Winning is going to attract top recruits better than schedules.

"The effects of proposition 48 have had an impact. Back in 1985, we played Miami and we had some players who did some great things (in a 27-15 loss) and you go back and check their SATs and they are quite a bit below proposition 48 (standards)."

In fact, the last blue chip North Carolina recruit East Carolina brought in was Anthony Thompson out of Wilson Fike in 1987 and he was a proposition 48 casualty. He is now a junior at a starter at linebacker.

This past year ECU brought in 23 players and all of them qualified under proposition 48 standards. Only five were from North Carolina, though.

Baker said things have improved greatly in terms of academics for the football team. "We went from upperclassmen in study hall with below a 2.0, 30-40 to just three or four. Progress has been made in some areas but not the most visible areas that you can see.

"I'm a football coach and I know you are judged on wins and losses," he said. "It has been a very frustrating situation for me, particularly this year."

ECU's record this year has been the result of a number of problems, not the least of which is a young defense which has given up an average of over 400 yards a game.

"Our talent level has gone up, but the biggest factor was we lost four or five players from spring practice that would have been starters or close to starters," Baker said.

Lost to the team were defensive end Willie Powell (academics), defensive tackle Walter Bryant (discipline), linebacker Ken Portis (academics), defensive end Joe Holmes (discipline) and defensive back Errol McCorvey (discipline, transferred to Florida State).

That has forced a number of younger players into starting positions earlier than coaches might have liked.

"When you take into consideration that of the 18 seniors that we presently have, only seven of those are fifth year seniors," Baker said. "Eight of those are walk-ons, six of whom we put on scholarship. Three are junior college transfers and one is a fourth-year senior.

"The only way East Carolina is ever going to be able to compete at the level we want to compete at is to end up with close to 30 fifth-year seniors who are starting or in backup roles. There are only seven seniors starting on this team — five on offense and two on defense."

Baker has refused to comment publicly on his contract situation all season long, but he did say that he felt the situation has been a detriment to recruiting.

"It will hurt East Carolina's recruiting and it was a point I tried to make clear last January to anyone who would listen," Baker said.

With the recruiting period reopening Nov. 1, talk of Baker's contract could again adversley affect ECU's recruiting for the 1989 season.

Johnson Signs New Contract To Manage New York Mets

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Johnson signed a three-year contract Thursday, a year after Cashen told him his contract would not be extended beyond 1988.

"Davey will complete his contract, but he will relinquish the managerial post after next season," Cashen said on the final Saturday of the 1987 season. "This is being done at his request."

Johnson said during the winter that he wanted to return and after the Mets won the National League East with a 100-62 record, Cashen decided to let him. And decided to apologize.

"I would certainly have not had that public discussion about Davey's future. It was the wrong time to discuss it," Cashen said. "That misunderstanding that occurred was certainly my fault. I apologized to Davey. Davey was saying one thing. I was understanding he said something else."

Cashen and Johnson could not, or would not, recall exactly what their differences were

"We haven't figured that out yet," Cashen said. "If we did, we would never have had the misunderstandings we had."

Johnson's contract will begin at around $430,000 a year. The Mets have an option for 1992.

"I don't think there is a more difficult challenge in baseball than managing the New York Mets," Johnson said. "I want the biggest challenge. But if it wasn't meant to be, I would have survived."

Johnson angered Cashen with his brash manner, but was more relaxed at spring training this year. The Mets went 100-60 to win the National League East before losing to Los Angeles in a seven-game playoff.

Bell May Be Looking For Work

The Pirates' game against Cincinnati will most likely bring Baker's four-year career as a head coach at ECU to an end.

"Life's not always fair," Bell said of the probable dismissal of Baker. "But in this business I've seen it happen so many times before. The best decision often would be to stay with the man who has been building the program, but there are those that think making a change will make everything all right.

"The fingers are being pointed at him, and I think that's totally unfair. Art Baker hasn't been given the credit he deserves. He's done exactly what was asked of him when he took the job," Bell said. "He's recruited quality athletes to come here. Regardless of what is said about East Carolina, the players here are generally a very good group of young men and they're really not deserving of the negative things that have been said about them.

"There's not one proposition 48 player in this group. The standards have been raised and more of the kids are graduating. No one anywhere has a greater concern for the total development of a player not only as an athlete, but also as a human being than Art Baker does.

"And nobody in America could have come in here and won with the schedule and the personnel and the amount of time he was given to work with at the beginning."

Bell said he had spoke with Baker about the dangers he might encounter with the ECU job four years ago before he was hired to replace Ed Emory.

"Art talked to me before he took this job and he told me who he'd be playing if he accepted," Bell said. "I told him then he'd be fortunate in his first three, possibly four years to go 2-9. I think he needed at least five years."

ECU's schedule does get more reasonable next year with games against Southern Mississippi, Bowling Green, Cincinnati, Illinois State, Louisiana Tech, South Carolina, Virginia Tech, Syracuse, Miami, Temple and Pittsburgh dotting the list.

Even with the odds facing the Pirates this year, Bell said Baker and the entire Pirate staff have worked as hard as they could to try and compete against the 1988 schedule, which consisted of top-20 teams South Carolina, West Virginia, Miami, Syracuse and Florida State.

"I'm continuing to fight," Bell said. "It (knowing your job is in jeopardy) does hurt, I want very badly for East Carolina to be successful. Regardless of what might occur, we're trying to find the key to get better, to overcome the problems we do have."

Bell came to ECU early this spring after having served the last five years as defensive coordinator and assistant head coach at Duke University. For the past 17 years he has served as a defensive coordinator except for the 1982 season when he was the head coach at South Carolina. He has also served at Texas Tech, where he and Baker were both assistant coaches.

Though the wins haven't come the Pirates' way as Bell hoped when we he first stepped onto the ECU campus, he still feels progress has been made this year.

"It's obvious that we haven't accomplished the goals we set out to at the beginning of the year," Bell said. "But you've got to look beyond the scoreboard. Look at the kids we had this year. They came out here and gave everything we asked of them. They've been out-talented but they in no way have been outworked."

Taking over the reins of the Pirate defense was, indeed, a tall order for Bell. Gone from a 5-6 team of 1987 were six defensive starters (Ellis Dillahunt, Vinson Smith, Bubba Waters, Medrick Rainbow, Ron Gilliard and John Williamson). Then in spring practice, ECU also lost defensive end Willie Powell (academics), linebacker Ken Portis (academics), defensive tackle Walter Bryant (discipline) and safety Errol McCorvey (discipline, transferred to Florida State). All would have been probable starters.

"The defense hasn't played as well as I thought they might," Bell said. "But I'm not the type of person to pass the buck. I'm not going to look back and blame it on the players or anyone else. It's my responsibility."

The impending removal of Baker as the head coach also means Pirate assistant coaches will be looking for work. But according to Bell, finding another job shouldn't be that hard.

"There is an awareness on the national level of what has occurred down here," Bell said. "They know what Art set out to do and they know the progress that he has made. Everybody in football circles across the nation has known the suicidal schedule East Carolina plays."

No matter what winds up happening or who is the coach next year the players will remain in the ECU program. Yet it's the players that Bell is most concerned about, not his own future, he said.

"I hope the players that have suffered through this will look back on college football as a positive experience in their lives," Bell said. "It's hard when you walk into the locker-room and see that they're hurt. You want them to have the same love and values for the game as you do. I hope later in life they will look back at what they accomplished here and realize that it was a positive experience for them."

"I plan to stay in coaching," Bell said. "Hopefully my years in the business have indicated the type of coach I am. A lot of factors go into a situation like we've had this year, such as the schedule, I don't see it as a detriment."

Bengals, Browns Clash Sunday

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Bengals, 7-1, play the Browns, 5-3, on Sunday at Cleveland in their most important game of the season. After 36 meetings, the series is tied 18-18, and the outcome will be critical to determining the AFC Central Division champion.

The Browns lost at Cincinnati 24-17 a month ago, but Cleveland played without quarterback Bernie Kosar, who had a sprained right elbow. Kosar returned last week and the Browns beat the Phoenix Cardinals 29-21.

"They understand the Cleveland Browns," Wyche said. "I don't think Cleveland week, Houston week or Pittsburgh week ever are a motivational problem with the veterans. All you have to do is alert the younger players."

If the Browns need any motivating it might have come this week from some of the Bengals — some of the younger Bengals.

Some of the Bengals bragged about their defense a couple of weeks ago when they were still undefeated and the Browns were three games behind.

Cincinnati cornerback Lewis Billups was the most vocal of the Bengals, naming their secondary the "SWAT Team."

The SWAT Team, Billups said, is better than Cleveland's "Dawg" secondary, which includes Pro Bowl starters Hanford Dixon and Minnifield.

"Minny-who?" Billups said.

"I don't fault him for what he said," Minnifield said. "I pull for all defensive backs. It's like a fraternity. I'm a fan of the SWAT Team. I'll never say anything bad about a defensive back. He's just trying to draw attention to himself and to his team."

"They have two great cornerbacks (Dixon and Minnifield)," Esiason said. "They truly are some of the finest cornerbacks we play against. It's always a dogfight between their cornerbacks and our receivers, and it's always the best matchup to find out how good our receivers are."

The Browns' pass defense is ranked first in the NFL, and their overall defense is ranked second. The Bengals are ranked ninth against the pass, 10th overall.

Wyche said he doubted Billups' statements could have much impact on a rivalry that is already intense.

"I don't think you can get this game riled up any more than it already is," Wyche said.

"The reason is, our owner is Paul Brown," Wyche said. "He created the Cleveland Browns. He gave the Cleveland Browns the tradition they now have pride in."

The pressures of a Bengals-Browns game are apparent at both ends of Ohio. The last time Cleveland owner Art Modell fired a coach was in 1984, hours after Sam Rutigliano lost to the Bengals. Modell also once fired Brown.

This is no friendly rivalry.

"The pressure does not come in a direct ultimatum," Wyche said. "You don't have to look beyond the spring in his (Brown's) step when it's Cleveland week to know that it's more important than the other games. When you walk into that cavernous stadium in Cleveland, you want to make sure you win because you know it means so much to PB."

Winning on Sunday will also mean a lot to Steve Beuerlein who has replaced Jay Schroeder as the Los Angeles Raiders' starting quarterback.

"Right now I believe the best direction to go for us is Steve Beuerlein," Raiders coach Mike Shanahan said. "That's not to take anything away from Jay."

Beuerlein was a fourth-round selection of the Raiders in the 1987 NFL draft. The former Notre Dame star spent his entire rookie season on injured reserve, but started the first three games this season despite never having taken a snap from center in an NFL game.

Schroeder was acquired by the Raiders early on Sept. 5 — several hours after the club beat San Diego 24-13 in its season opener — from Washington in exchange for offensive tackle Jim Lachey and two draft choices.

Schroeder, 27, has started the last five games for the Raiders and often had his problems. He was intercepted four times each by Cincinnati and Miami and then relieved by Beuerlein in the second half against Kansas City and New Orleans.

The Raiders, who play host to Kansas City, have a 3-5 record, but are just one game out of first place in the AFC West behind Seattle and Denver.

Testaverde Gets Rest; Won't Start On Sunday

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TAMPA, Fla. — Coach Ray Perkins thinks Vinny Testaverde can use some rest and Tampa Bay's struggling quarterback is inclined to agree, even if he doesn't think a sore back would affect his performance against Miami on Sunday.

"It's the coach's decision and if he feels I need a rest, he's the one that makes the decisions and calls the shots," the second-year pro said Thursday after it was announced veteran backup Joe Ferguson will replace the 1986 Heisman Trophy winner in the starting lineup.

"Whatever he says I'm going to go by. If I didn't agree with it or I didn't like it, I really have no control over it," Testaverde added. "So I might as well agree with it, take it for what it is, keep good spirits and practice hard to prepare for the game."

Perkins said the decision to start Ferguson, a 16-year veteran who hasn't played since the Bucs' first preseason game, was based in part on a back injury Testaverde suffered in the shower Tuesday.

Another factor was Testaverde's play in recent weeks, including a six-interception, one-fumble performance in a loss to Minnesota last Sunday that was the third in a row for the Bucs and dropped them to 2-6 halfway through the season.

The first pick in the 1987 NFL draft, Testaverde has started Tampa Bay's last 12 games and has thrown a league-high 22 interceptions in eight games this season. He has completed only 49 percent of his passes for 2,062 yards and eight touchdowns, and his quarterback rating of 50.8 is the lowest in the NFC.

Kirk Douglas Life Story 'Frank, Combative'

By Bob Thomas
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Kirk Douglas' autobiography, "The Ragman's Son," has spent weeks on non-fiction best-seller lists, a position generally accorded such female stars as Lauren Bacall, Shelley Winters and Ingrid Bergman.

How did Douglas make the magic list when other actors have failed? The secret may be that his book is just as frank, intense and combative as the public's image of Kirk Douglas over the past four decades.

Douglas has never walked away from a fight. Many a producer, director and co-star can recall scars acquired in encounters with Kirk. He turned his back on a seven-year contract from Hal Wallis at a time when most actors would grab it. He defied the industry powers by hiring the blacklisted Dalton Trumbo to write "Spartacus."

As revealed in "The Ragman's Son," he romanced a wide range of Hollywood's glamour queens, including Joan Crawford, Gene Tierney, Marlene Dietrich, Ann Sothern and Rita Hayworth.

Douglas seems to be a man who got everything he wanted. But he had two great frustrations. He was madly in love with Pier Angeli, but despite their engagement, he could never escape her ever-present parents. He starred in "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" on Broadway but could never make a movie deal. He became too old for the role, and son Michael co-produced the film, which won an Academy Award for Jack Nicholson.

Douglas, a vigorous 69, recently reminisced about his life and times at the Beverly Hills offices of Bryna Productions, named for his mother. He told of the inception of his autobiography.

"I was driving to Palm Springs one day, and I saw a sailor hitchhiking. I had been in the Navy, so I picked him up. When he got in the car, he looked at me and said, 'Do you know who you are?'

"Well, I thought about that, and it's an interesting question," he said.

The actor's search for Kirk Douglas led him to Issur Danielovitch, the son of illiterate, Russian-Jewish immigrants in Amsterdam, N.Y. The father was a cold, distant, brawling alcoholic whose love neither Issur nor Kirk could achieve.

"It's a terrible thing for a young kid who has a father who's so physically strong," said Douglas. "You think, 'My God, I can never be that strong, I can never be that big.' My father was a rag man, yet to me he was somebody. So living with my six sisters and my mother, I had no identity.

"When my father left, I thought, 'Why am I not with my father? I'm a boy! Why am I with the women?'"

Young Issur escaped the "suffocating" female atmosphere to attend St. Lawrence College, and he never went home again, except for brief visits. He discovered acting in college, went on to New York where his looks — like carved granite — and intense style attracted Hollywood offers. And he went on his own terms.

"From the very beginning, I was always independent, a maverick," he remarked. "I didn't belong to any studio. There were good things about that, but there were bad things, too. It was lonely. Everybody else belonged to studios, and they were going to singing and dancing lessons.

"There were a lot of good things to be said for the oldtime studio system that I did not belong to. They developed stars and got parts for them in movies. I wasn't part of that. I was sort of outside."

Douglas' film career has been marked by an affinity for forceful heroic roles, from his part as a calculating boxer in 1949's "Champion" to his depiction of Vincent Van Gogh in 1956's "Lust for Life." Both films earned him Academy Award nominations.

In "Spartacus," perhaps Douglas' greatest role, he starred as the leader of slaves rebelling against Republican Rome. At the same time, Douglas has shown a flair for the comic, especially as a sharp-tongued inmate in the 1970 movie "There Was a Crooked Man."

His first film role came in 1946's "The Strange Love of Martha Ivers," and his last appearance was in the 1987 NBC production of "Inherit the Wind." Douglas has been known for his frankness, and he had these evaluations about some of his friends and colleagues:

John Wayne: "One of the most remarkable men I ever worked with. We never got along, though we did four pictures together. Politically we were complete opposites."

Burt Lancaster: "I like Burt. He's quite different; for example, he's a great lover of music and opera. Most people would never expect that of Burt. If I ever need Burt, I call him; if he needs me, he calls me. It's a wonderful relationship."

Barbara Stanwyck (who starred in his first film): "She was pretty tough with me at first. I was new, didn't know anybody, and she sort of ignored me for two weeks. But I always forgive any slights like that when I see talent and a professional attitude."

Robert Mitchum: "Never my kind of guy. I always kidded him about those stories he'd tell about being a hobo; they seemed to change every time he told them. But obviously he is a talented guy, and listen, he's had a tremendous career."

Michael Douglas: "The nicest thing I can say about Michael is what I put in a note some time ago; he told me it's the only note of mine he has kept. I said to him, 'Michael, I'm more proud of how you handle your success than I am of your success.' And I think we'll still be hearing a lot from him."

Kirk Douglas: "Kirk Douglas ... Issur Danielovitch, the ragman's son. I've taken 450 pages to try to explain who I am. And I'm not sure I know yet.

"The best way to sum it up would be in the character of McMurphy in 'One Flew over the Cuckoo's Nest,' the role I so desperately wanted to play on the screen. McMurphy tries to lift this piece of machinery and fails. They're all looking and feeling sorry for him. He turns to face them and says, 'But I tried. Dammit, I tried.'"

Fiddler Charlie Daniels still on the go

Charlie Daniels Has Hard-Driving Album

By Joe Edwards
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Firebrand fiddler Charlie Daniels called the devil a nasty name in his million-selling record, "The Devil Went Down to Georgia." He also told the Russians where they could go in his song, "In America."

"It's what we are," he said. "Hard driving music."

The rollicking album is the 18th in 17 years for the irrepressible five-piece rock-country band that has performed in all 50 states and several foreign countries.

In it, Daniels plays a blazing fiddle to the flash point in "Boogie Woogie Fiddle Country Blues," a hit single. He plays rousing guitar licks on other songs, and sings sassy, gritty vocals on still others.

The LP is a turn away from his last album, "Powder Keg," which he described as the most rock-oriented LP he has recorded.

"It didn't do too well at all," Daniels said in an interview. "It's still selling, but it never really got off the ground."

"It was time for a change. The new album is a career move."

He and his band are best known for their Grammy-winning 1980 hit, "The Devil Went Down to Georgia," the story of a feverish fiddle contest between the devil and a boy named Johnny in which he called the devil a mild obscenity. The single sold 1.6 million copies and the "Million Mile Reflections" album that contained it sold 2.3 million.

"It had mass appeal," Daniels said about the song. "I guess the lyrics of the song were responsible for 70-75 percent of the popularity and the fiddle and the novelty value had a lot to do with it."

The blunt lyrics in that song were similar to the ones in his "In America," in which he issued his memorable directive to the Soviets amid a burst of American pride.

Musicians Taking Ecology Concerns To Soviet Youth

By Michael Parks
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

MOSCOW — Some of the West's best rock music of the past five years will be introduced to the Soviet Union early next year by the environmental group Greenpeace to encourage greater public involvement in ecology issues here.

"We have been looking for a way to make a breakthrough in the Soviet Union, to get our message to Soviet youth particularly," David McTaggart, chairman of Greenpeace International, said in an interview here, "and a rock album seemed a sensational way to do it."

The two-record album, "Breakthrough," compiled for Greenpeace and featuring 25 groups and individuals, will be the first released here with so much recent Western rock.

"Grateful Dead, U2, Bryan Adams, the Eurythmics, Sting, Sade — they may be almost legendary in the West, but they and most of the others on this album are almost unknown in the Soviet Union," Ian Flooks, the album's executive producer, said. "A few fans in the Soviet Union undoubtedly know about these artists and have heard their music, but this album is going to make them available to millions for the first time.

"The Soviet Union has been largely closed to Western rock," Flooks added. "Aside from a few old songs of the Beatles, Jethro Tull and the Moody Blues, almost nothing has been released here, certainly nothing current. ... Some of the reasons are ideological, I suppose, but others stem from the Soviet Union's reluctance to pay royalties in hard currency."

Among the other artists, all of whom donated the use of previously recorded songs to Greenpeace for the album, are Belinda Carlisle, INXS, Dire Straits, Talking Heads, Simple Minds, Peter Gabriel and John Cougar Mellencamp.

"Not all the songs were top hits, but they represent the best of the artists' work," said Flooks, a London booking agent. "And rather than something from a few of the biggest, we went for everything we could find. This album, as a result, is really a 'Who's Who' of rock music, and many of the numbers are classics."

Although many of the artists do not usually agree to participate in compiled albums such as this, they were persuaded by the opportunity to have their music heard in the Soviet Union for the first time on a broad scale, Flooks said.

Four million copies of the album will be released in February by the Soviet record company Melodiya simultaneously with its release in the West, and they are expected to sell out within a few days. Melodiya, in another innovation, is planning a Western-style promotion campaign that will bring a number of the artists to the Soviet Union.

With each album will come a booklet, prepared by Greenpeace, explaining the threats posed by various ecological problems and the worldwide need for conservation. About 10 million copies of the album will be distributed worldwide, Flooks said.

"There is a lot of lyric content about the environment, too," Flooks said. "This is a record of unity, of concern, of commitment. The title 'Breakthrough' sums it up. ...

"Music is a truly international language that has great credibility with youth. They know that the content of these songs is not controlled by any government. And there is definitely a message for Soviet youth and for the youth of the world — pollution doesn't respect international borders."

Greenpeace expects to earn the equivalent of $6.8 million, according to McTaggart.

A Reflector Review

The best bargain in entertainment in Greenville at this time is a two-act play, "Figment," on stage in the auditorium at the Recreation and Parks Administrative Building, 2000 Cedar Lane.

The play, which opened Thursday night, is scheduled for three more performances, tonight and Saturday at 8:15 p.m. and a Sunday matinee at 2 p.m. Tickets are $5. Due to the limited seating capacity of the auditorum, early reservation of tickets is advised (telephone 830-4567).

"Figment" is the first full-length play of a young Greenville playwright, Brett Hursey, with collaboration from Jeff Jones, and is receiving its premiere as a production of the newly established Actors' Theater Southeast.

Given the fact "Figment" is the first-time effort of two very young writers, I was quite frankly prepared to being confronted with a work possibly adequate as a first effort, but nothing more rewarding.

The plot is focused on the day by day life of a psychiatrist struggling valiantly to maintain his sanity. The character, bachelor Dr. Thomas J. Rodgers, is both tense and intense. He has reached a point in life where he remains capable of helping others straighten out their inadequate lives while, at the same time, he is obviously helpless to stem the tide of his own chaotic existence as he relies more and more on alcohol.

Greg Watkins' performance as the psychiatrist is outstanding, certainly his best to date. He sweats (literally), vacillates between periods of articulate self-control and a stumbling sufferer — and earns our caring and sympathy. His philosophy, expressed to his secretary Rhonda (Marilyn Molloy) early in the play when she insists on how to deal with his mail is to "ignore the important stuff, and forget the rest."

Dark-eyed, slender Ann Secord is totally convincing as Carol, the woman in his life. We have all encountered this type of character, grimly determined to have their way. She connives to channel their three-year affair into the "safe" path of matrimony. Marriage to her would be "safe, even if we had fights, we'd be safe though empty." Her gimmick in each renewed effort to entrap the doctor into marriage begins with "We need seriously to discuss something."

The three patients we see on stage are believable — real people, each cut from a different pattern. No stereotypes here.

The familiar energy Anita Brehm gives her roles is most fitting in her portrayal of Mrs. Rita Hill. Ultimately, she comes to the conclusion she's had more than enough of her husband, whom she describes as a silent partner who "sucks his teeth and wears ugly ties." After years of overeating and having sex with any available man, she opts for divorce and vows to "hire a lawyer, a mean and vicious one."

The zaniest — and most pathetic character — in the play is patient Stanley Clayburn. At first, I thought that Don Biehn was perhaps overacting as he lumbered from a cowed, mumbling wreck of a man to a strutting, aggressive individual imagining he was Julius Caesar. In retrospect, however, Biehn's portrayal seems valid.

The role of the sanest of the three patients, Emily Moore, is beautifully realized by veteran Hazel Stapleton. Charming, witty in an old-fashioned way, more than any other she brings a little sunshine into the psychiatrist's dark path. Her one hangup is that of having an imaginary friend, George. Much to the chagrin of Dr. Rodgers, she insists he actually exists. When she dies, she wills "one George" to the doctor.

The reality, or non-reality, of George is the one factor in this finely constructed drama that gives me pause to doubt — whether to accept him as a symbol or as Emily Moore's mysterious friend made incarnate. After all, he does use the doctor's toothbrush and eat peanut butter and marshmallow sandwiches. It is George who has one of the most insightful lines in the play — "people without any friends make the best friend."

There's a harvest of zestful, singing-out dialogue in "Figment." I could not help equating the dialogue to the comic-serious lines of Noel Coward. At times, the dialogue amounts almost to a bit too much cleverness — yet the undeniable intelligence that threads throughout is most welcome, and bodes well for the talent of this young Greenville playwright.

Helen V. Steer, retired veteran of the ECU Drama Department, has provided a clean, cohesive direction to the play.

Judd Hirsch's Career Is Faring Better Than Acting Characters

By Jerry Buck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Judd Hirsch is having better luck than the characters he plays on the stage and screen.

In his Tony award-winning role in Broadway's "I'm Not Rappaport," he was a man going ungracefully into old age and contemplating suicide.

In NBC's "Dear John," touted by some as the biggest hit of the fall season, he's a schmuck whose wife has run off with his best friend. He seeks comfort in a singles group that reminds you of Bob Newhart's therapy sessions.

The series, like his previous hit "Taxi," sought out Hirsch. The man behind "Dear John," and "Taxi" before that, is Ed Weinberger.

"When this came along I wasn't available," Hirsch says. "I was on stage and doing a couple of movies. I was getting very cautious about going back to television unless I found something as good as 'Taxi.'

"This looked good. It's based on a successful English show, so you don't have to agonize over getting it into shape.

"Most actors don't have this opportunity. Most get into situations with doom written all over them. I'm not immune to that, but I've been lucky."

Also in his favor, the show is scheduled between two perennial ratings winners, "Cheers" and "L.A. Law."

In "Dear John," which made its debut earlier this month, Hirsch plays a New Rochelle, N.Y., English teacher named John Lacey who gets a goodbye letter from his departing wife. Unable to cope with being suddenly alone, he joins a singles group.

"I think of him as a very capable hapless man," says Hirsch during a lunch break in his dressing room. In one corner is a piano. Next to it is a handmade "one-man band" instrument.

"That's the one I play," Hirsch says in an aside as he sits down behind his desk. The sleeves of his green-and-white striped shirt are rolled up and he's wearing black horn-rim glasses.

"You'd expect him to take care of himself, but he can't," he continues. "He thought he was happily married for 10 years. He suddenly finds himself totally alone. He's a fish out of water."

This is the fifth series for Hirsch, although his first was so brief it didn't make the record books. He twice won Emmys as best actor in a comedy series for "Taxi."

"The first television I did I thought was the best series ever made," says Hirsch, referring to NBC's "The Law" in 1974. "It became the best series never made."

In "The Law," which won an Emmy as the best TV movie of 1974, Hirsch played a public defender. The attempt to turn it into a series foundered when NBC insisted that he become a private attorney. Hirsch says several shows were made, but he doesn't know what happened to them.

TV Turns 'Dirty Dancing' Into Talkative Plot Line

By Kathryn Baker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The makers of the CBS version of the hit movie "Dirty Dancing" can at least brag that they have successfully adapted a simplistic, cliche-ridden movie into a simplistic, cliche-ridden television series.

The movie, a variation on the worn rich-girl-falls-for-sexy-boy-from-wrong-side-of-tracks plot, was a hit thanks to hot dancing, great early '60s music and two charming stars, Jennifer Grey and Patrick Swayze. The TV series has some good music and dancing, and at least one charming star — Melora Hardin in the Grey role as Baby.

In the movie, the plot was an excuse for loads of scenes of sensuous dancers writhing to hits from the '60s. On TV, choreography is money, so there's less dance, more talk.

To allow for a continuing plotline, the series has the option of going beyond summer vacation, since Baby (Hardin) is no longer the daughter of a vacationing doctor but the daughter of the divorced owner of the resort, Max Kellerman (McLean Stevenson).

Hardin has a winning presence, but Patrick Cassidy has a long way to go to live up to Patrick Swayze in the role of Johnny. Swayze managed to give the guy some depth despite the movie's ankle-deep plot.

Cassidy's Johnny is a self-centered, humorless dunce who dances around alone in his room rubbing his body. Granted, Cassidy didn't write or direct such scenes, but Swayze didn't exactly have "Macbeth" to work with, either.

Johnny drops his partner and ogles Baby. Dad stumbles in and gives Baby the job of talent coordinator — Johnny's job — for the resort's stage show. Johnny is miffed. Conflict No. 1, with many more to come.

Dad is suspicious about Johnny's secretive rehearsals. But Baby, good sport that she is, persuades him to let the dancers continue, pleading, "Dad, you've got to give them a chance!" There are a lot of lines like, "Dad, you've got to give them a chance!" and "All I know is you can't give up!"

After Dad departs, Baby brags that she has taken ballet, so Johnny sets her up to make a fool of herself by insisting she join the dancers. He eventually convinces her that her only purpose in life is to defy her father and dance in the stage show, so they sneak around at night to practice.

Meanwhile, Penny (Constance Marie), Johnny's jealous Latin dance partner, fumes, and Baby pretends interest in Neil (Charles Stratton), the lifeguard her father approves of. Mandy Ingber replaces the obnoxious sister of the movie as Baby's witless cousin, Robin.

Choreographer Kenny Ortega has done a good job with the dancing. Too bad there isn't more of it. And too bad the writers and director Tony Bill did not more effectively build the rudimentary suspense that fuels the central cliche in the premiere — the opening of the big show and Baby's surprise appearance.

By the end of the opener, everything seems to be tied up quite nicely, but this is weekly television where concepts must be run into the ground.

Will Dad come to terms with Baby's new-found independence? Will Baby and Johnny get it on before Penny gets Baby?

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — "ABC World News Tonight with Peter Jennings" will launch a new nightly segment called "American Agenda," starting Nov. 14. The 3-to-3½-minute segments feature 12 correspondents who "will cover six areas of major importance to Americans today: family, the environment, health, education, money and drugs."

Sheilah Kast, one of two correspondents handling the money assignment for "Agenda," will be replaced at the White House for the nonce by Jeanne Meserve, now on the State Department beat. Like all the network news divisions, ABC News will look at permanent assignments again sometime between the election and Inaugural Day in January.

Krantz Novel

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Judith Krantz' fifth novel, "Till We Meet Again," is being turned into a six-hour miniseries for CBS. All of Krantz' previous books were also made into miniseries: "Scruples," "Princess Daisy," "Mistral's Daughter" and "I'll Take Manhattan."

Opening lead: King of ♠

As the years go by, we like to dwell increasingly on some of our favorite moments of bygone days. This hand, from a rubber bridge game at the Golden Gate Bridge Club in San Francisco some 20 years ago, still brings a smile. Your job is to decide which trick declarer lost while fulfilling his slam, and when he lost it.

We really can't fault the bidding. We were taught at our mother's knee never to put a solid eight-card suit down in dummy—with that type of hand, we declare. In this instance, six hearts might be a better contract but, as the cards lie, a club lead would have proved fatal.

Move to the top of the class if you decided that declarer lost a club trick, and that he lost it at the very first trick! The declarer was Bob Bruno, now living in New York City. He saw that there was no legitimate way to make his contract, since the opening lead was about to remove his only entry while the heart suit was blocked. So he made the beautiful deceptive play of allowing the king of clubs to win the first trick.

When East signalled encouragingly with a high club at trick one, West, who did not have the foggiest idea about what was going on, innocently led another club. On dummy's ace of clubs declarer jettisoned his ace of hearts. Next came the king-queen of hearts, on which declarer discarded his two spade losers. Now, it was a simple matter to draw trumps and claim the rest of the tricks.
