India, U.S. May Aid Tiny Island Maldives Come Under Siege

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka — About 150 foreign gunmen trying to overthrow the Maldives government today seized several top government officials and battled loyalist troops, and at least 12 people were killed, officials said.

The Press Trust of India news agency said India "is rushing" paratroopers to assist the Maldivian government and has three warships "ready to sail," but it said the planes that will carry the paratroopers hadn't left India.

Indian government sources in New Delhi and Colombo also told The Associated Press the paratroopers had not left.

President Maumoon Abdul Gayoom was safe and appealed to the United States and neighboring India for assistance, according to Indian and U.S. diplomats. U.S. officials said they were reviewing the request.

The attackers arrived in Male, capital of the archipelago nation, by boat before dawn and attacked the presidential palace.

Ahmed Abdullah Aziz, the Maldivian high commissioner in Sri Lanka, said the government had beaten back the attackers, whom he described as "dark-skinned invaders." He said, "The government is in full control of the situation."

However, residents of Male, a city of 55,000, said sporadic gunfire continued through the day.

A Sri Lankan government official in Colombo said at least 12 people were killed and 22 injured in clashes after the attack. The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said he received the information from the Sri Lankan High Commission in Male.

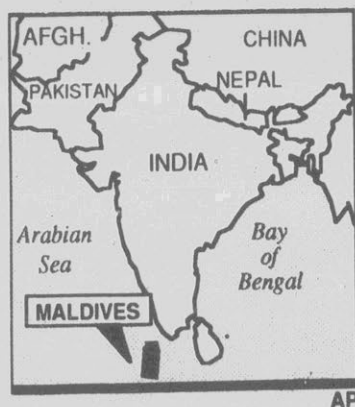

Western diplomats in Colombo, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said loyalist troops were in control of the capital, but they said attackers held the radio and television station.

An Indian Foreign Ministry spokesman in New Delhi said reports from the Indian High Commission in Male indicated the attackers were Sri Lankan.

The official said the attackers captured several senior Maldivian officials, including two members of Gayoom's Cabinet. "The situation is still sketchy," he said.

Long Orders Premiums Reduced 1.4% On Auto Liability Insurance

By Dennis Patterson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Insurance Commissioner Jim Long today ordered a 1.4 percent reduction in auto insurance rates effective Jan. 1, rejecting an insurance industry request for an overall 6.4 percent increase.

Long said a five percent underwriting profit and contingencies factor sought by the industry, when combined with investment income, would produce a return on equity of more than 33 percent.

"Thirty-three percent profit, when compared to other businesses with comparable risks, is a rate that is clearly excessive," Long said.

Long said the rate reduction would amount to about $3.50 a year for the average driver across the state. The increase sought by the industry would have increased the average rate about $17. Rates vary according to the driver's record, the type of car and the area where it is driven, among other factors.

It is the first time in 20 years that a rate reduction has been ordered for liability insurance, which every driver in the state is required to carry. It is the second time in 9 months that Long has ordered a rate rollback.

In February, he ordered an overall 3.9 percent reduction in auto rates after the industry had requested a 3.5 percent increase.

The North Carolina Rate Bureau, which represents the insurance industry in rate filings, is required to submit filings every year, but can seek no increase if it chooses. Long said that might be safer for the industry than seeking increases which are then turned into decreases.

"If there's a message there, I hope they're reading it loud and clear," Long said.

The Rate Bureau has appealed Long's last two rate orders, but no rulings have been made on those appeals.

"As far as the Rate Bureau is concerned, we're very disappointed that the commissioner did not approve the rates we filed," said John Watkins, executive director of the agency. "We felt the rates were fully supported and justified."

The auto industry can implement a rate increase while it appeals through the court system, but the increase must be refunded if the appeals fail.

Watkins said the Rate Bureau has 30 days to decide whether to appeal the ruling.

"I suspect it will take us longer to make a decision on his order than it took him to make the ruling," Watkins said.

Long, who is seeking re-election, denied that Tuesday's election influenced his ruling, which came less than a week after a hearing on the rate increase ended.

"This ruling was based on the evidence presented at the hearing," Long said. He said pre-filing of testimony has speeded up the ruling process.

Indecisive Israeli Elections Could Pose Problems For Next President

By Ruth Sinai
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Both George Bush and Michael Dukakis have promised vigorous attempts to revive stalled Arab-Israeli peace talks, but the next president will face either a hardline Israeli government or a stalemated one.

ment than the Labor Party of Foreign Minister Shimon Peres.

Likud is trying to form a coalition government with a bloc of religious and ultra-nationalist parties. If that doesn't work, Likud may invite Labor to join the government as a junior partner, replicating the current government which has been paralyzed by internal conflict.

Either way, the elections, which were viewed as referendum on the future of the Israeli-occupied territories, failed to give the liberal Labor Party a clear-cut mandate to negotiate peace with the Arabs. Peres, backed by the United States and moderate Arab governments, campaigned on a platform of relinquishing some lands in return for peace.

"The Israelis have obviously circled their wagons," said Fouad Adjami, a scholar at the School of Advanced International Studies of Johns Hopkins University. The 11-month Palestinian uprising in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip pushed voters to the right, precluding an opening for peace, he said.

Likud spokesman Binyamin Netanyahu, formerly Israeli ambassador to the U.N., rejects such bleak predictions. Speaking from Israel on NBC, Netanyahu appealed to the next American president to support direct talks between Israel and the Arabs on autonomy for the 1.3 million Palestinians in the occupied territories.

Likud leader Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir "is sensitive to U.S. desires and he will try to offer some ideas for peace talks," said Middle East analyst Joyce Starr.

"But this won't succeed in the long run because he's not willing to consider giving up lands for peace," she added. Starr is a researcher at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, an independent think tank.

Southern Democrats Open Regional Tour Supporting Dukakis

By Sonya Ross
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Southern Democrats today launched a seven-state election stump to wipe a little dirt off the "L word" and drum up grassroots voter support for presidential nominee Michael Dukakis before Tuesday's election.

"A lot of people have been convinced by the Republican ticket that this contest is just over with," said Sen. Al Gore, D-Tenn. "I think what you have seen in the last few days is Mike Dukakis taking off his coat, rolling up his sleeves and breathing fire into this campaign."

Gore predicted that Dukakis would pull off a "Harry Truman-style, come-from-behind victory" in the Nov. 8 election.

The Democrats also charged that Republicans have dirtied the "C word" in an effort to pollute the liberal tradition, creating a twisted conservative philosophy that waves the American flag while worshipping foreign dollars and rewarding the rich at the expense of the middle class.

"In our part of the country, we don't believe it is conservative to borrow $500 million every 24 hours," said Gore.

"George Bush was part of an administration ... that cut 1.8 million young Americans out of college scholarships and loans," said Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton. "Is that traditional American values? I don't think so."

Clinton also said the Republican ticket cannot say it represents traditional values when vice presidential nominee Dan Quayle voted to tax benefits of Vietnam-era veterans.

"Look at Quayle. Is this traditional American values?" Clinton asked. "I owe it to every veteran who did have to go to Vietnam to spend the rest of my public life taking care of them. That's what my traditional American values tell me my responsibilities are."

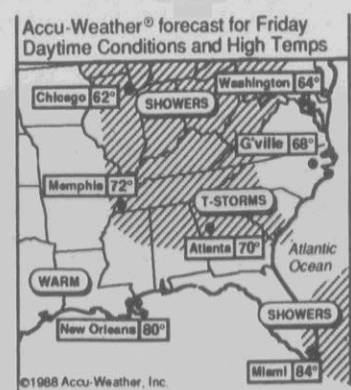

The Democrats also discounted recent polls that have given Vice President George Bush a substantial lead over Dukakis. Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young said the polls "really don't decide who's going to win this election."

The campaign group planned to travel to Columbia S.C.; Raleigh, N.C.; Louisville, Ky.; Nashville, Tenn.; Little Rock, Ark.; and Gulfport, Miss., later in the day.

Beside Clinton, Gore and Young, the delegation included Sens. Dale Bumpers and David Pryor of Arkansas; Gov. Joe Frank Harris, Sens. Sam Nunn and Wyche Fowler and Rep. John Lewis of Georgia; Gov. Wallace Wilkinson and Sen. Wendell Ford of Kentucky; Gov. Ray Mabus of Mississippi; Sen. Terry Sanford of North Carolina; and Lt. Gov. Nick Theodore and Sen. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina.

Warehouse Trial Witness Faces Pitt Drug Charges In January

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A key witness who has agreed to testify for federal prosecutors concerning the 1986 Liberty Warehouse fire in Wilson is scheduled to face drug charges in Pitt County in January.

Ronnie Lee Stocks of Route 2, Box 175, Ayden, is being held in the custody of U.S. marshals pending his testimony in federal court against two Greenville men, John Thomas Worthington, an owner of the warehouse, and his son John "Tommy" Worthington Jr., the warehouse manager.

The Worthingtons were named Aug. 31 in a 66-count fraud indictment and are accused of helping torch the warehouse to receive insurance money.

In June, Stocks pleaded guilty in federal court in New Bern to charges of conspiring and cooperating to burn the warehouse.

Stocks has six charges of possession, sale and delivery of marijuana and three counts of possession of stolen property pending in Pitt County in connection with 1987 and 1988 cases. He failed to appear Tuesday in Pitt Superior Court, but Assistant U.S. Attorney Kieran J. Shanahan was present and informed the court that Stocks is in the custody of the U.S. Marshal Service and is being held in a county jail.

Stocks also failed to appear for July 19 and Aug. 30 court dates, and on Aug. 30 Judge J. Herbert Small of Elizabeth City revoked Stocks' bond and issued an order for his arrest. Shanahan said Stocks missed the court date due to a lack of communication between federal and local authorities.

Stocks was in protective custody of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, he said.

According to Pitt District Attorney Tom Haigwood, Shanahan said Tuesday the Worthington case is set for federal court later this month and Stocks should be through with the trial and should be sentenced for his part in the crime by the end of the year. Small, presiding over the case again Tuesday, continued Stocks' local cases, to the first setting of court in January.

Haigwood has said he has no plans to drop the local charges in lieu of Stocks' cooperation with federal authorities.

"Judge Small continued the case for the defendant and the United States attorney until the first time in January," Haigwood said, "with the condition that the United States government would turn Mr. Stocks over to us at that time."

Haigwood said he plans to file a detaining order this week with federal authorities to ensure that Stocks is not transferred to a federal prison outside of North Carolina or entered into a federal witness protection program without facing the pending charges.

With Stocks now behind bars, Haigwood said he is satisfied that Stocks is actually in custody, and no law enforcement officers will move to serve the arrest warrant.

"They've used this word 'custody' very loosely in the past," he said. When Stocks missed the Aug. 30 court date, Haigwood said he was upset because Pitt residents had reportedly seen Stocks operating a store in Black Jack, even though he was supposedly in custody of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

"He was operating a store down in Black Jack, apparently. That was

School System's P.M. Team Fends Off Major Problems

Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The P.M. Team doesn't solve crimes like television's "A-Team," but its job is just as important.

The Pitt County schools' Preventive Maintenance Team works throughout the system preventing and repairing the "little" mishaps that could become major problems at the various facilities.

When the job is finished, "you know the children will have a comfortable place to learn," said Carl Koonce, a P.M. Team member.

Koonce serves as the electrician of the team, while Jay Parker is the carpenter and Luis Ochoa works with air conditioning and heating.

They spend about a month at each school making fire doors easier to open, repairing students' desks, checking for electrical shortages, cleaning air conditioning and heating units for maximum efficiency, changing light bulbs — the list goes on.

In operation since January, the team has visited all the schools in the J.H. Rose attendance area except Agnes Fullilove School and is currently working in the Farmville attendance area at H.B. Sugg School.

A renovated school bus houses the tools and equipment for the team and provides transportation.

"When you come on this bus, there's know how," Koonce said, referring to the average of 10 years experience of team members.

"You don't have to call a serviceman while we're working on a school," Ochoa said.

Parker said one of the best advantages of the team is "having the opportunity of working on your own" on projects that need upgrading, while Ochoa said "the greatest satisfaction is knowing that we're doing something that hasn't been done."

The P.M. Team is part a preventive maintenance program being implemented by the schools' maintenance department, supervisor Carl Grantham said.

"The concept is as personnel and assets become available we're going to keep developing these teams about one a year" so that there will be a preventive team for each attendance area. Another team is expected to be in operation in January.

Using the bus for transportation and to house equipment and tools was a concept developed by the men in the department, Grantham said.

"It's proven to work pretty well. The good part about that is you conserve so much time on the road running around picking up parts."

The ideal P.M. Team consists of the carpenter, electrician, air conditioning specialist and plumber.

"They're chosen based on the recommendations of the department foremen and their ability and personality," Grantham said.

Panel Will Search For Vice Chancellor

ECU NEWS BUREAU

Dr. Robert E. Schellenberger, a professor of decision sciences in the school of business at East Carolina University, will chair a six-member committee to conduct a reopened national search for the vice chancellor of academic affairs at ECU, according to Chancellor Richard Eakin.

Schellenberger is one of three committee members chosen from a list of five faculty members nominated by the Faculty Senate.

Others named include Emily S. Boyce, professor, department of library and information studies; Dr. Henry Ferrell, history professor; Dr. Lilla G. Holsey, education professor, and Sandra Babb of Raleigh, secretary of the ECU Board of Trustees and chairwoman of the trustees' committee on academic affairs.

Eakin said Dr. Mary Ann Rose, professor of nursing and special assistant to the chancellor, will serve as secretary and as a non-voting member of the search committee.

Eakin said he would convene the search committee at an early date to begin the selection of candidates for the post vacated in July 1987 by Dr. Angelo A. Volpe, who became president of Tennessee Tech University in Cookeville, Tenn.

In the interim, Dr. William A. Bloodworth, professor and former chairman of the English department, has served as acting vice chancellor for academic affairs.

A search committee appointed in the fall of 1987 recommended two candidates for the university's top academic administrative position but no contractual agreement was reached. Eakin said the search would be reopened with a new committee this fall and that it is planned to fill the position by July 1.

Would You Eat This Diseased Crab from the Pamlico?

If You Leave Tom Taft in the North Carolina Senate, You May Have To.

After years in the North Carolina Senate, Tom Taft, through inaction, leaves dead fish floating on the Pamlico and diseased shellfish and crabs beneath the surface. He flip-flopped his position on the Phosphate Ban, while his appropriations committee refused to approve funds for a much-needed coastal environmental study.

Don't let this record of tragic neglect continue.

This year, send a man to Raleigh who will clean up our environment and has the clout to get things done. Bill Dansey pledges to:

- Create a state-level Department of Health and Environment to coordinate all environmental regulatory activities.
- Develop cost-effective alternatives to solid-waste disposal landfills.
- Appropriate funds for much needed coastal projects.
- Work closely with industry for a cleaner environment.
- Impose tighter controls on disposal of hospital/medical wastes.
- Adopt state-wide standards for watershed protection.
- Improve programs for protecting coastal waters and the fishing industry.

Helms Puts Emphasis On Issues

Dr. Marshall Helms of Greenville, a candidate for a District 9 seat in the N.C. House of Representatives, says his campaign focuses on several basic beliefs.

Helms said he believes the family needs to be restored as the cornerstone of American life. "I believe that the family in the U.S.A. is seriously threatened by laws, trends, and measures wrongly adopted in expectation of helping hypothetical persons, including children," he said.

Helms said he believes schools have suffered from centralized control and that society needs to attack the use, users and purveyors of alcohol and other drugs.

The candidate said he favors reducing waste and recycling waste materials, even at costs, promotion of free enterprise in the American economy, and alerting American people to the ongoing struggle between Marxist communism and western democracy.

A Republican who says he is a conservative, Helms is running for one of the two House seats held by Democratic incumbents Walter B. Jones Jr. and Ed Warren.

DR. MARSHALL HELMS

Helms, a Salisbury native, was a professor of physics at East Carolina University for 24 years. He and his wife, Christine Wilton Helms, who also retired from teaching at ECU, live in the Brook Valley section of Greenville.

A World War II veteran, he has served as commander of both American Legion Post 39 of Greenville and American Legion District 3, the latter for four terms. He was named in 1986 as the Most Outstanding North Carolina Legionnaire.

Long a member of the Luncheon Lions Club of Greenville, he serves First Presbyterian of Greenville as a deacon, elder and teacher.

Gardner Stresses Openness

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Jim Gardner of Rocky Mount, Republican candidate for lieutenant governor, said Wednesday in Greenville he would like to shine light on the state's budget process.

"I am committed to open meetings in this General Assembly," Gardner said in an interview after speaking less than five minutes to a chilled crowd of about 50 supporters gathered at the Town Common for a 5:30 p.m. rally.

"I not only want to have open meetings, I plan to have regular press conferences," he said. "I want to bring the committee chairmen in to meet with the press, so that everybody in this state — through the press — knows and understands exactly what we're doing in this General Assembly."

"We're spending a lot of the taxpayers' dollars, and I think they are entitled to know what's going on."

And if a tight group of Democrats puts together the budget in secret meetings?

"If they do, they're going to have a lieutenant governor who goes out every day and meets the press and tells them what's going on," he said.

As lieutenant governor, Gardner would serve as the president of the Senate and appoint senators to chair budget committees, a job that Democratic lieutenant governors have controlled for nearly 100 years.

The Daily Reflector/Shannon Wolfe

Jim Gardner, GOP candidate for lieutenant governor, speaks to supporters in Greenville

If Gardner wins office and holds the party line on committee appointments, that would knock Democratic Sen. Tom Taft of Greenville out of contention for chairmanship of the Base Budget Committee or the Expansion Budget Committee, the two top Senate panels.

Taft, who is seeking re-election to the Senate representing the 9th District, has GOP opposition from Bill Dansey of Greenville.

Gardner's opponent, Democrat

Tony Rand of Fayetteville, said in July that he might choose between Taft, Sen. Marc Basnight, D-Dare, and Russell Walker, D-Randolph, to head the two committees.

Taft has campaigned publicly for Rand, even hosting a fund-raiser for him at his home, and he has said it is important for Greenville and Pitt County to have a local senator chairing a top budget committee.

But if Gardner wins — and some polls show him with a narrow lead — Taft's name may be scratched from the list of possible chairmen. Still, Gardner said choosing committee heads and opening up the budget process should not cause political friction.

"I think the majority of the Democratic members are very fair-minded people," he said. "I think they don't like what's been going on any more than I do — the secret meetings they are not part of, the excessive pork barrel going to a handful of people, of which they don't get any of it."

"I think if I extend the hand of compromise, and I'm willing to sit down and work with these people, that we can have a very productive four years in the North Carolina Senate. That's going to be my job to see that we do that."

"I'm going to make that effort right after the election, to go talk individually to all 50 senators, Democrat and Republican, to let them know that I want to take politics and leave it outside the Senate chambers, and concentrate on the problems facing this state," Gardner said. He cited education, roads, economic development and the state's prison system as areas he would work to improve.

The Pitt GOP has registered about 2,000 additional voters since the Super Tuesday presidential primary in March, according to Pitt GOP Chairman Gordon Walker, raising the party total in Pitt County to more than 11,000.

Pitt Democrats still hold a large advantage in the number of registered voters, but Republican Gov. Jim Martin won 48 percent of the Pitt vote in 1984 and is claiming he will carry the county in Tuesday's general election.

Gardner is looking for conservative Democrats to also pull the lever for him.

"I would hope (Democrats) think I would be the man who can best lead the North Carolina state Senate, and I'm a very fair person. I've campaigned on the issues. I've talked about legislative reform."

At least seven firemen and six Greenville police officers were on hand as the private helicopter landed.

Jordan Tells PCC Group He's 'Angry'

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

While stressing his commitment to education, Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan told approximately 125 people at Pitt Community College today he has become an "angry" candidate in his final week of campaigning for governor.

Teachers, students and political supporters jammed the lobby of the Clifton W. Everett Building to hear the Democratic candidate emphasize that "what we're talking about more than anything else in this campaign is education."

"Never before has the choice been clearer for people who are interested in education in North Carolina," he said of Tuesday's election.

Jordan said his experience in education includes serving on the Board of Governor's of the University of North Carolina System, the Community College Statewide Board and the State Board of Education.

He cited his past efforts at increasing teachers' pay, saying that while North Carolina has risen to 30th in the nation in that category, "We still have a long way to go."

"We're going to have the kind of victory that's not a victory for Bob Jordan. We're going to have a victory for the community colleges that we're right here part of today," Jordan said.

"When we get up on the morning of November ninth, we're going to see a bright, sun-shiny morning that says good things for the people who go to school, the children who need help, and the working people of this state."

Jordan attacked his opponent, Gov. Jim Martin, who Jordan accused of trying to cut $12 million out of the community college system in an attempt to balance the state budget in 1988.

"This governor is not supportive of the basic educative plan. He has been one that we have had to fight to get the funds for, in spite of him, for the community colleges," he said.

Jordan said Martin designated 1987 as the "year of the reader," while in the same year he recommended cutting $6.6 million from literacy training for the community colleges.

"It is a little ironic that someone would name 1987 to be the 'year of the reader,' and while we are trying to help recover the 850,000 North Carolinians who cannot read and write, would then recommend that we cut funds out of that," he said.

Jordan said that as the campaign is drawing to a close, his disposition has changed.

"I'm angry because we have a governor who is trying to be something he is not and trying to fool the people," Jordan said.

"They told Harry Truman, 'Mr. Truman, it looks like you're giving them hell.' Well, Harry's response and my response are the same thing — I'm not giving 'em hell, I'm just telling the truth and it sounds like hell," Jordan said to rousing applause.

Jordan said he is angry at Martin's attempts to paint himself as the candidate who cares most about the environment.

"The trees are dying on Mount Mitchell, the fish are dying in the Pamlico, and the medical waste is washing up on the shores of our coast. Yet this governor runs an ad saying that he is an environmentalist governor," Jordan said.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Mind Boggling

Can College Education Be Imported?

Can a church affiliated United States college be purchased by foreign interests?

We only have to look as far as North Carolina Wesleyan College in Rocky Mount to consider the possibility.

Speculation centered on Wesleyan after it was learned that John T. Henley, president of the N.C. Association of Independent Colleges and Universities had reported inquiries from a Japanese university about the possibility of purchasing an American college. Reportedly the Japanese would send Japanese students to the school and develop an exchange program for faculty and students.

Wesleyan's chairman Phil Carlton said such an offer would be considered but the chances of such a deal are "terribly remote."

Wesleyan President (and Greenville native) Dr. Leslie H. Garner, Jr. later said the college is not for sale. "Wesleyan is not going to be sold," he said.

Experts say that the Japanese want to learn more about the United States' higher education system. Even though the Japanese consider their secondary school system to be superior to ours they admire our system of higher education.

Any college which received a sale offer no doubt would want to know more about the buyer and attempt to determine if the move would be in the college's best interest, as well as the best interest of its students, faculty and supporters.

In this period of foreign investment in American industry the university purchase deal is mind boggling. Yet it might make sense as business and industry become more international. Major American universities have maintained branches in foreign countries where students can spend a year and learn about another culture. But a Japanese absorption of an American college? The idea is so revolutionary that we can only anticipate further details.

Courting Votes

Eastern Support Is Significant

Democratic candidates for Council of State offices, visiting here recently, say that the eastern North Carolina vote will be crucial in Tuesday's election.

John Brooks, the state's Commissioner of Labor and a Pitt native, cited the first congressional district vote as giving Terry Sanford a large percent of his statewide margin. Sanford won election as United States senator and Brooks said "That's how important it is (the eastern vote)."

Campaigning has become intensive in the east and party officials say the campaign has moved generally from the western part of the state to the east. Intensive effort is expected by both parties in the two weeks remaining before the general election.

It is obvious that neither party is taking the eastern vote for granted these days. While registration is heavily Democratic in the east no one can predict with certainty how individuals will vote. If Democratic candidates are to win, an overwhelming Democratic vote will be necessary in the east. That means the party will have to do all in its power to turn out the Democratic registered voters and then hope that they don't defect.

Republican candidates, on the other hand, know that to garner votes in the east they will have to win over Democratic registered voters. They also know that they must have a considerable share of the eastern vote in order to win.

There was a time when eastern voters were virtually ignored in general election campaigns. It was well known how they would vote and both parties' candidates concentrated their efforts elsewhere.

No more. Our votes in the east count and those wanting election to statewide office are seeking them.

Public Forum

To the editor:

I recently returned from Massachusetts where I visited my daughter and her family.

I was surprised to see how uncomplimentary the Worcester Gazette was to Michael Dukakis and his job as governor of the state.

Under Dukakis, the state debt has risen to $18.9 billion. They also mentioned that he was trying to borrow $225 million in short-term funds to meet expenses of the fiscal year started in July of '88.

Needless to say, the people were outraged. Taxes on real estate in Massachusetts make me glad I'm in North Carolina.

Having lived in Massachusetts during Dukakis's first term as governor and having voted in every election for the past 50 years, I think I'm entitled to something better for President than the Duke.

I won't say I'm happy with Bush either.

To the editor:

It would be nice if you'd print this for your letter writer Ray Masten. The Democrats are right that it's been a dirty, negative campaign.

The American people are pretty shocked about this. The issues of Horton, the Boston Harbor, and "the Little Duke" are very controversial. That means these "charges" may not be true. Doesn't matter what party you're for, dirty is dirty. It must be contagious, and since when is stature the measure of a man? He may be standing taller than the other one.

Has Mr. Masten forgotten that to call someone a nickname not of his own choosing is "name-calling," (But to call someone a squirrel is dirty and low.) How about I call you a goat? I didn't say you were one. It is not unfair to say George wasn't there if he really wasn't and that's not a guess, as George said he wasn't there. And he wasn't. He didn't know anything either, and he was the vice-president!

On Nov. 8 about 8:05 p.m., Mr. Masten may have a red face. Overconfidence lost it for the Governor of New York when Truman got in or are you old enough to remember?

Wimps & Bullies Are The Same

WASHINGTON — Where is the wimp of yesterday? Gone, we are told. In its place is George The Bold, knight of the GOP, slayer of liberals and the only man standing between sleeping women and furloughed convicts. The wimp is gone. Hooray. Long live the bully.

It hardly takes a psychologist to tell you that the fervent desire of the wimp is to become a bully. This Bush has done. He has changed his image from one who would not fight to one who is all too willing to fight dirty. It's hard to say that this is an improvement.

I happen not to be someone who ever thought Bush was a wimp — if the word is supposed to say something about manliness. Combat pilots and Oil Patch entrepreneurs have earned the right to occasionally use awkward phrases like "deep doo-doo."

But the word "wimp" did have its utility. In Bush's case it suggested a slight vessel who could be blown this way and that by the will of stronger men.

It suggested someone who was once a moderate Republican and then, almost instantly, an ardent conservative; who took jobs mostly because they were offered; who as GOP national chairman played the piano in Richard Nixon's bawdy house and seemed to be the last person in Washington to understand the true business of the place. After losing a Senate contest in Texas, he told an Episcopal priest that he had taken positions in which he did not believe. Later, he joined the Reagan administration, advocating programs he had once labeled "voodoo economics."

It's interesting to contrast Bush with two previous GOP presidential candidates. The first is Richard Nixon, an amoral man capable of saying almost anything because, to him, truth was valued only if it advanced his political fortunes. The second is Ronald Reagan. His simplicities and banalities were of a different order. He believed them.

Not so Bush. He constantly signals that he knows better. He promises the high road and then takes the low one. He seems to flinch from his own words, suggesting that he is doing only what's necessary to win the election. Unlike Nixon, he knows right from wrong. Unlike Reagan, he knows fact from anecdote.

Give him the Oval Office, he seems to say, and he will throw the switch to bathe his presidency in a thousand points of light — a blinding candor, a dazzling intellectual honesty and then (drumroll, please) the emergence of the Real George Bush. But his career suggests otherwise. He will always find a reason to be something other than he is. The vice president is a political Scarlet O'Hara: He will become his own man tomorrow.

Given Bush's nature, it's not surprising then that we have been treated to one of the nastiest and least honest campaigns on record. Take the Willie Horton furlough. It should be an issue. It represents much that is troubling about Michael Dukakis — his tenacious self-righteousness, his klutzy political touch, his insularity from the concerns of ordinary people, his reluctance to come out of the closet as a liberal and, now, his inability to admit a mistake. (He says he amended the program, but he did so, really, after he was given no choice.)

But that is hardly the way Bush has used the furlough. Instead, he characterized Dukakis as soft on crime, as a virtual menace. He has taken a routine and good program (imperfectly excused in the case of Horton) and made it seem unique, a Massachusetts experiment in wishful thinking — not a routine fixture of American penology. He has done something similar with the Pledge of Allegiance, the flag, the American Civil Liberties Union and the way he all but combines the word "liberal" with spittle.

These tactics have been effective, but they have also been divisive and dishonest. If he was in danger of missing a sales quota, I would not buy a used car from George Bush.

This sorry excuse for a campaign is stumbling to a close. Somehow a nation of 230 million people faces a choice between opportunism and arrogance. But whatever Dukakis' faults, he has run an essentially honest campaign — even down to his admission that he might, just might, have to raise taxes. In contrast, Bush vows repeatedly that he would never raise taxes. Do you believe that? I'll tell you who doesn't: corporations signing up Washington lobbyists in anticipation of a tax increase. Read their lips.

The polls say Bush will win the election. Given Dukakis' campaign, maybe the American people are to be congratulated on their wisdom. But we will have elected a man of uncertain ideology and confused self-image, a moderate turned conservative, a softie turned mean. We now think we know who Bush is but, really, he has learned more about us than we have about him. We believe there's a difference between a wimp and a bully. George Bush proves they're one and the same.

Paul O'Connor

RALEIGH — There was considerable frustration in the voice of Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan after his joint appearances with Republican Gov. Jim Martin at the State PTA convention in late October.

"Every time I tell the truth about what we have done, he puts up a smoke screen and says he did that," Jordan said to reporters. "Then if I call the governor a liar, then that insults people because he is governor."

Three days later, Jordan decided to take that risk and he started calling the governor a liar. This time, the issue wasn't teacher salaries, but the environment. It was the final gasp in a month long effort to convince the voters that Martin has been taking credit for legislative achievements that Jordan and other Democrats spearheaded, and which Martin sometimes opposed.

Hardly a day passes that this reporter doesn't receive a large envelope from the Jordan campaign with another installment of "truth serum." These packages usually include Martin claims with rebuttals by Jordan. On issues ranging from aging to the environment, Jordan's staff provides press clippings in trying to show that the governor's claims are exaggerated.

There appears to be at least some basis for Jordan's frustration. This reporter, for example, has investigated two Martin claims. One that he developed the idea for the N.C. Teaching Fellows program, and, two, that he has proposed higher teacher raises than the General Assembly has provided.

Martin is clearly wrong on both.

But the Jordan message seems to be having little impact with the voters, as state polls show Martin with a comfortable lead.

"Education is his most vulnerable area and now he is trying desperately to claim some credit" for what the legislature has done, Jordan continued.

The Democrats have been trying to paint Martin as ineffective since the first day of this campaign. That's why they ran ads showing Martin on vacation while the legislature was still in session. Martin, however, has been boasting of accomplishments and, at the same time, been lamenting areas where the legislature frustrated him. Therefore, he's argued both sides. He has claimed to be effective, and, on the other hand, run against the Democratic legislature for making him ineffective.

The race for lieutenant governor is somewhat similar. Democrat Tony Rand, speaking in Smithfield, said it is "distressing to me to hear those kind of claims." He was speaking about Martin's claims and charges from Republican Jim Gardner that Rand will be weak on drug law enforcement because Rand is a defense attorney. Rand, as a senator, has sponsored bills aimed at toughening drug law enforcement.

Jordan has a bigger problem than Rand. He needs to be able to take credit for what the assembly did in the past four years. As lieutenant governor and president of the Senate, he has some right to do so. But Martin beat him to the punch.

To this point, Jordan just has not made the case clear to the voters, and it will probably show on Election Day.

World War II Became Formative Event For Bush's World-View

David Hoffman

Forty-four years after it happened, George Bush recalls the day he was shot down in the Pacific during World War II as if it had just occurred. In the middle of his presidential campaign this year, he paused to write a private letter to the niece of a Navy flier, Jack Delaney, who was one of two men killed in his plane in September 1944. The event, he said, "is still very vivid in my mind."

"I felt badly then and I still feel badly now about Jack's death," Bush wrote, recalling that one of the crew members was seen jumping from the burning plane, but his parachute never filled with air. "I have no proof, but I suspect that was Jack," he said. "I know in my heart of hearts that I did all the right things to help him get out of our plane." He added, "Just understand that your Uncle Jack, though only a kid then, was a wonderful, warm human being. I loved the guy."

A few weeks after Bush penned these recollections to Delaney's niece, a sophisticated United States Aegis cruiser in the Persian Gulf, the U.S.S. Vincennes, mistakenly fired two missiles at an Iranian civilian jetliner, killing 290 people. Under attack by Iranian gunboats at the time, the Vincennes captain and crew believed wrongly that the airliner was a hostile warplane. The next day, Bush was asked by a reporter how the high-technology ship could have confused the big A300 Airbus with a smaller Iranian F-14.

"Have you ever been in combat?" Bush snapped back, his voice sure and taut. "Combat is quite different than in the laboratory. Everything will be examined in terms of the machinery, what worked and what didn't work. But when a ship is engaged in fighting and then another threat appears and the threat is warned seven different times, why it seems to me the captain acted properly."

Every president comes to see the nation he leads through the prism of his own life experiences; they influence his decisions and his goals. For Bush, the decade of the 1940s was a formative one-breaking away from his childhood of privilege, risking his life in a distant theater of war and returning with a profound belief in America's pre-eminent role in the world, a view unshaken in later years by the trauma of Vietnam.

"Every generation is a secret society," writes Samuel Hynes, author of "Flights of Passage," a memoir of the Pacific flying war that Bush has praised as an accurate rendition of his own experience. "The secret that my generation — the one that came of age during the Second World War — shared was simply the war itself. We grew up on active duty. I entered Navy Flight School when I was 18 ... The years that in peacetime we would have spent in college, we spent instead first learning to fly, and to fight a flying war, and then in fighting it. Our secret made us different than those who were older or younger than ourselves, or who were not in the war."

In the aftermath of the Vincennes episode, President Reagan apologized to Iran and eventually approved payment of compensation to the victims. But Bush, who like Hynes came of age in World War II, instinctively identified with the seamen and captain on the Vincennes. He said he would not apologize for the Iran airplane shutdown. "I will never apologize for the United States of America!" he frequently declares in his campaign speeches.

That is typical of Bush's view of the country he proposes to lead. He exhorts in the nation as he finds it today and has no grand plans to alter it. "We don't need to remake society," Bush said when he began his campaign last year. "We don't need radical new directions."

Early in the campaign Bush struggled over questions about whether he had a "vision" for the country. The reason the questions nettled him, according to senior advisers, is that Bush never accepted the need for an overarching vision. Rather, he believes he possesses the right training and the intuitive sense to make correct decisions as problems come his way.

He is the embodiment of pragmatism: self-confident about his ability to find solutions without holding to a master blueprint.

The declaration that "I am that man" in his acceptance speech in New Orleans was more than a slogan; it was a distillation of his philosophy that history is shaped by the character and judgment of leaders. "What it all comes down to, after all the shouting and the cheers, is the man at the desk," Bush said.

"I am a man who sees life in terms of missions," Bush said in his acceptance speech, "missions defined and missions completed. When I was a torpedo bomber pilot they defined the mission for us. Before we took off, we all understood that no matter what, you try to reach the target ... The most important work of my life is complete the mission we started in 1980" with Ronald Reagan's election to the presidency.

And yet, this patrician New Englander, a product of the best private schools and a family tradition of comfort and public service, is most unlike Reagan, the son of an alcoholic n'er-do-well and a religious woman who grew up poor in small-town Illinois. Their different life experiences created different outlooks, and different views of the nation.

Beginning at the convention, Bush began to spell out some of those differences. He now promises more aggressive action to clean up toxic waste and acid rain, two environmental problems that languished in the Reagan years. And while Bush headed a task force during Reagan's first term that proposed easing the federal rules on poisonous lead, he now trumpets progress in getting lead out of the environment as a great achievement.

Bush seems to envision a kind of big-sky environmentalism, of mountains to be hiked and streams to be fished, not of invisible carcinogens to be controlled. He frequently invokes Teddy Roosevelt to describe his views of environmental policy, apparently thinking of Roosevelt's efforts to preserve a legacy of land, forests and water.

But characteristically, in Bush's America there must be — and can be — compromises. The one-time oilman has called for drilling in the Alaska National Wildlife Reserve, in areas not environmentally sensitive. He used to quip that the Alaska oil pipeline was an aphrodisiac for the caribou who rubbed up against it — and had more caribou. In other words, both the caribou and the pipeline could be accommodated.

Analysis

Bush's vision of the country reflects the impact of a privileged childhood in which he was drilled with the importance of "giving back" to society some of the good fortune he inherited. Bush was only 5 when the stock market crashed; the Great Depression is not even mentioned in his autobiography and apparently did not intrude on his tight-knit family, headed by the stern Prescott Bush, an investment banker and later U.S. senator. "Dad taught us duty and service," Bush recalled.

At Phillips Academy in Andover, Mass., Bush was president of the Society of Inquiry, a service club which raised money for charity and which had a banner year when Bush was in charge. The yearbook pictures "Poppy" Bush, as he was nicknamed, putting up a poster for a club event. To this day, he seems motivated by this sense of noblesse oblige.

In Bush's America, many of the social problems of education and poverty could be alleviated if he, as president, could inspire more citizens to volunteer to help the disadvantaged. "I want our affluent to help our poor," Bush said last month in unveiling his proposal for a new domestic Peace Corps. He said he envisioned that children with $40 jeans and $50 sneakers and "more good food than they choose to eat" would give something back to society by working in the urban ghettos. "I want the young men and women of our tree-lined suburbs to get on a bus, or the subway, or the metro, and go into the cities where the want is," he said.

In his campaign, Bush has spent very little time himself in places "where the want is." He doesn't frequent inner-city neighborhoods or schools. But last spring, while the vice president was campaigning for the Republican presidential nomination, Barbara Bush secretly visited shelters for the homeless in the evenings, shunning any publicity for her effort, according to two informed sources. Motivated by the same sense of "giving back," Mrs. Bush, the daughter of the president of the McCall Publishing Co., has sometimes been "the conscience" of her husband on social issues, according to one of these sources. Last spring in an interview Bush acknowledged that Barbara "had been telling me I had to do more (about the homeless), I think she's right, I think I have to convey what I feel about it...."

Dukakis May Be Facing Bleak Future In South

By Trip DuBard
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Michael Dukakis shifted his attention from the South long ago and his embrace of the liberal heritage will not hurt him further in the largely conservative region, political analysts say.

The Democratic presidential nominee has been trailing in polls throughout the region, and University of South Carolina political scientist Earl Black says he'll be surprised if Dukakis is able to win any Southern state.

"I think the Democrats have implicitly conceded the South," Black said.

With the poor showing already,

Black and Michael Giles, chairman of the political science department at Emory University in Atlanta, said Dukakis' comments did nothing to help him, but also little to hurt him in a region he appears destined to lose anyway.

"I think the race is so lopsided to begin with, it's not going to have much of an impact," Black said.

While campaigning Sunday in California, Dukakis said he was a liberal in the tradition of former Democratic presidents Franklin Roosevelt, John Kennedy and Harry Truman.

His aides predict the approach will appeal to both the nation and the South, where the 11 former states of the Confederacy carry 138 electoral votes, more than half the 270 needed for election.

But in a conservative region where the word "liberal" is frequently used as political mud, Republicans now are crowing that the comment marked the end of a Southern strategy initially geared around conservative Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, they said.

"I think that really was, as much as anything else ... a concession speech to the South," Bush campaign manager Lee Atwater said.

Michael Ansara, a Dukakis campaign Southern regional coordinator, argues the Dukakis declaration should actually play well in the South.

"Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Harry Truman, Lyndon Johnson. If that is the tradition he's in, that's an acceptable tradition throughout the West, throughout the South," Ansara said. "Governor Dukakis made it perfectly clear that he's not some kind of kooky liberal. He's a guy very much a part of the mainstream."

Giles, though, sees the statement as an implicit acknowledgement of the campaign's failure in the South.

"If he thought he was going to be able to compete well in the South, I don't think he would have said it," he said. "But with the South already gone, I think he felt free to say it."

Dukakis chose Bentsen as his running mate for what many thought was not only his experience and ability, but also his anticipated ability to win the key state of Texas and possibly influence other Southern states.

"The signal that it gave was that he was open to the moderates, that he was willing to talk," Giles said. "It gave him an opening to compete in the South."

"The question was would he exploit that opening," he said. "I would say he didn't ... They may have assumed it was lost going in."

So far, Dukakis' South Carolina campaign manager Det Bowers said he has not been asked about Dukakis' embrace of the political label, indicating the comment had little impact.

But Bowers concedes Dukakis will lose unless trends change before Tuesday's general election.

"I don't think he'll win the South. I just don't think the numbers are there for him to win the 11 states of the Confederacy," Bowers said.

Most polls show Dukakis trailing in those states: Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Texas, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Arkansas.

A poll taken Oct. 1 through 7 for the Oct. 9 combined editions of The Atlanta Journal and The Atlanta Constitution found Bush leading in 15 Southern and border states by 12 percentage points. The poll contacted 2,102 voters and carried a margin of error of 2 percent.

Dukakis campaign deputy Lois Ann Porter insists the race is "neck-and-neck" in Arkansas, Georgia and the border state of Kentucky.

North Carolina, Tennessee and Louisiana are also "winnable" she said.

But missing from Ms. Porter's list are the South's sweetest-smelling political flowers, Texas and Florida, with 29 and 21 electoral votes respectively.

South Carolina Gov. Carroll Campbell, Bush's Southern campaign chairman, says he remains concerned in only three states, Kentucky, Arkansas and Texas. "We're ahead in all of them," Campbell said, but not as much as he would like.

The Dukakis campaign is running an increasingly energized campaign, and national polls have recently shown growing support for the Democratic nominee.

But Campbell says that movement isn't reflected in the Southern polls he's seen lately.

"We haven't seen any real erosion," he said. "We haven't seen it. It's just not there."

Poll Shows Tar Heels Give Education Prime Priority

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

North Carolinians think education should be the next governor's highest priority, while drug addiction was the second most cited problem, followed by the environment, a new poll indicates.

A poll of 842 people between Oct. 12 and Oct. 25 conducted by North Carolina State University pollsters found that 65.8 percent of the respondents said North Carolina should increase spending on education even if it means higher taxes. Almost 26 percent said education was the biggest of 56 problems identified. Drug addiction was the next most often cited problem, followed by the environment.

Respondents said drug addiction was the greatest problem facing the nation, followed by AIDS and the nation's education system.

On the campaign trail Wednesday, legislative Democrats accused Gov. Jim Martin of taking credit for programs that he opposed, but a Martin aide said it was the Legislature that blocked many of Martin's good ideas.

"Jim Martin and the Republicans who are campaigning for office have opposed almost every constructive and good piece of legislation considered by the General Assembly during the last four years, and then after it was passed, he has taken credit for it," House Speaker Liston Ramsey said at a news conference with Democratic House members and senators in front of the Legislature.

"Jim Martin talks a lot about better schools, better roads, better jobs and a better environment," Ramsey said. "The facts are plain. He has flunked on all four issues."

State Sen. Kenneth Royall, D-Durham, said Martin violated state law and the Constitution by submitting a budget that was out of balance. Martin's budget was based on revenue projections that later proved to be too optimistic.

"The governor could have stayed within the law and Constitution if he had not turned his nose at the North Carolina Advisory Budget Commission, a pillar of North Carolina's budgetary structure for the past 63 years," Royall said.

Royall said Martin had shown an "arrogant disregard for sound budgeting procedures" this year by ignoring the ABC, a committee of legislators which in previous years had quietly reshaped Martin's budget before it arrived at the General Assembly.

"Mr. Martin has nothing but contempt for the legislative branch of government," Royall said. "He unleashes mean-spirited criticism at the Legislature at every opportunity and seems to rank the Legislature somewhere between Satan and Sherman."

Royall said Martin had practiced "pure chicanery" by demanding the Legislature do things that were unreasonable and then portraying himself as fighting an obstructionist Legislature when they refused.

Martin, meanwhile, told Republicans at a luncheon in Mitchell County he hoped to get both a second term and a Republican lieutenant governor for the next four years. Current Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan is running against Martin.

"I want better roads and schools, but I also want a better lieutenant governor," Martin said in Spruce Pine. "Jim Gardner will be someone I can work with."

Jordan toured a textile plant in Rockingham County Wednesday and said Martin had not joined the fight to save the industry.

"His idea about what good for North Carolina's jobs is a little different from mine," Jordan said after shaking hands with workers at the factory gate during an afternoon shift change.

Both Jim Gardner, the Republican candidate for lieutenant governor, and his Democratic opponent, Sen. Tony Rand, unleashed a new flurry of television ads Wednesday.

The Rand campaign began broadcasting three new commercials about a series of failed business ventures by Gardner.

The Gardner campaign began airing four new commercials. One is biographical and the other three center on Rand's career as a defense attorney and legislator, raising questions about his representation of accused drug dealers and $3 million in "pork barrel" that the Gardner camp claims Rand took home to his district last year.

Brokers Say RJR Shareholders Accepting Offers To Sell Stock

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WINSTON-SALEM — Many North Carolinians who hold shares in RJR Nabisco Inc. are apparently waiting to see how the company's board responds to a $90-a-share offer, but brokers say some people are taking profits as the stock hovers around $85 a share.

Stockbrokers in several North Carolina cities are competing for the business offered as thousands of RJR Nabisco shareholders consider selling. Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co. of New York has offered $90 a share.

Three brokerage companies have run newspaper ads to attract about 9,000 shareholders in Forsyth County, who have seen their stock value jump by as much as $34 a share and are believed to control more than $1 billion worth of stock.

Morrison W. Divine III, the resident manager of the Winston-Salem office of Smith Barney Harris Upham & Co. Inc., said the company ran an ad three days after RJR Nabisco officers said they might offer $75 a share for the stock.

"The response we saw from a grass-roots level was the greatest response that I have ever seen to any newspaper ad that I have run in the 20 years that I've been in the business," Divine said.

He said the response was mostly from curious customers who didn't intend to sell. But several chose to sell some of their stock to take profits while prices were high, holding the rest to see what happens with a buyout.

Divine said a member of the RJR Nabisco board told him that, at high sale value of possibly $100 a share, the stock in Winston-Salem could easily be worth $2 billion.

Half of that stock, Divine estimates, is in the hands of individuals. The rest is in the hands of the Wachovia Bank trust department and the foundations that RJR Nabisco operates, including the company employees' 401-K plan.

A former RJR Nabisco executive estimated that about 9,000 registered shareholders live in Winston-Salem. About 22,000 people are registered shareholders in North Carolina.

Saving The Family Farm Is Everybody's Business.

North Carolina farm crops brought in more than $4 billion last year ... an increase of $40 million in just one year. Beyond the tremendous impact agriculture has on our economy, farming is the bedrock of our traditional family values. That's why all North Carolinians should be concerned with agriculture. And that's why Governor Jim Martin has made protecting our state's family farms a major part of his program of balanced economic growth.

Jim Martin's record as Governor is one of delivering solid help for farmers. The results of his leadership include:

- Saving the Flue-Cured Tobacco Stabilization Corporation from collapse by accomplishing the buy-out of its surplus stock, which has led to the reduction of assessments and the first increase in tobacco quotas in 13 years.
- Stemming the tide of family farm foreclosures with new credit and loan programs instituted by his Task Force on Farm Finance.
- Increasing employment opportunities in rural areas, with 68% of new manufacturing jobs last year going to communities of less than 10,000 people.

- Gaining financial aid for farmers by having 81 North Carolina counties designated as agricultural disaster areas following the 1986 drought.
- Getting the Republic of China to agree to buy an additional $63 million worth of North Carolina agricultural products.

Governor Jim Martin knows that saving the family farm involves more than dollars and cents. For generations, those living on farms have served as models of traditional family values. Our farm families are a direct tie to our heritage and the values they embody are a stabilizing force in today's changing society.

Governor Martin knows that to help keep farm families together and preserve our traditional values there must be increased employment opportunities in rural areas.

That is why Governor Martin is working to bring more and more new job opportunities to rural North Carolina. Governor Jim Martin is leading the fight for farm families as he works to maintain a healthy balance between agriculture, travel and tourism, and manufacturing. Let's keep a good thing going.

Rare Malady

GREENSBORO (AP) — A Greensboro internist's study of a rare disease has resulted in an even more unusual distinction for his city — it now has a disease named after it.

William B. Herring of Moses Cone Memorial Hospital did an exhaustive study of a patient's anemia. The study led to an article in "Blood," the journal of the American Society of Hematology, where the disease was identified as "pyruvate kinase Greensboro."

"This is not an earth-shaking discovery," said Herring, who specializes in blood disorders and cancer and who is a professor of medicine at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill School of Medicine. But Herring said he could not recall a medical disorder ever named for Greensboro.

Pyruvate kinase is one of a series of enzymes or protein molecules that speed up chemical reactions. They are vital to helping turn glucose — a kind of sugar — into a source of energy for almost all living cells.

Driver Charged

MARSHVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A Union County high school senior is being held without bond after being charged with murder in the stabbing death of a 16-year-old student at the same school.

James Barrino, 19, who attends Forest Hills High School, was charged Wednesday in the slaying of Danny Allen Tuesday. Barrino also faces assault charges in the stabbing of a 15-year-old student whose name was being withheld.

Allen died from wounds he received on a bus ride home from school. Barrino drove the bus.

"The best we can determine, some type of confrontation broke out between these students in the last week or so and broke out again yesterday which resulted in the stabbing death of Allen and the cutting of the 15-year-old," Marshville Police Chief Jeff Haney said.

GREENSBORO (AP) — The former chief executive of Blue Bell and his wife have given Guilford College $1.75 million to help build a telecommunications complex that will link students' rooms by personal computer to professors' offices, the campus media center and the campus computer center.

The gift from Edward and Vivien Bauman — the second largest in Guilford's history — caps the college's four-year fund-raising campaign and puts the total at $13.2 million, nearly twice the goal.

A second major gift to the college — from Greensboro land developer J. Van "Jack" Lindley — will finance a new main entrance to the campus.

College officials said Lindley, 79, asked that the amount of the gift not be disclosed.

SILER CITY, N.C. (AP) — The state Wildlife Resources Commission is looking into the dumping of chicken carcasses on Chatham County gamelands off Devils Tramping Ground Road.

Hal Atkinson, chief of the division of Wildlife Management, said someone has dumped what appears to be chicken carcasses in the area, which is privately owned but leased by the state.

Atkinson said he did not know when the dumping occurred or how long it had been going on. It also isn't known where the chickens came from, he said.

State Alters School Building Standards

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The State Board of Education on Wednesday decided to change mandatory building standards to recommendations, thus allowing local school districts to retain some control over how they build their schools.

"You will get renewed enthusiasm not because of substantive changes but because of home rule," said State Treasurer Harlan E. Boyles, an ex officio member of the board.

Panel Says Ports Need Freedom

MOREHEAD CITY, N.C. — A legislative committee looking for ways to boost business at state ports has voted to recommend that the General Assembly eliminate the state commerce secretary's authority to hire and fire the port authority's executive director and other port workers.

The committee also directed its counsel Wednesday to work with the state attorney general's office to develop a way the State Ports Authority can remain accountable to taxpayers while avoiding the state's purchasing procedures. The slow procedures — triggered every time the SPA buys or repairs equipment or hires a contractor or consultant — have caused the ports to lose business to other states, port officials say.

The slow procedures — triggered every time the SPA buys or repairs equipment or hires a contractor or consultant — have caused the ports to lose business to other states, port officials say.

Both recommendations are an effort to streamline SPA authority, which now is fragmented between the SPA's board of directors, the Commerce Department and the Department of Administration, which oversees contracts and purchasing. The proposals would give virtually all authority over the ports to the SPA's board and executive director.

Committee members believe fragmented authority hampers the SPA's ability to operate like a business in the rapidly changing shipping industry.

"I feel strongly that if an organization is trying to set policy and yet does not have control of who its employees are ... then that's bad policy," said Rep. Alex Hall, D-New Hanover, a committee co-chairman.

Haworth presented the plan to the board Wednesday after a daylong hearing in which local school and government officials attacked the building standards for being excessive, expensive and inflexible. They also expressed concern about losing control over how they build their schools.

Haworth's plan, which the board readily approved, would make the standards for buildings and their furnishings recommendations rather than requirements for one year, probably beginning next February.

The board also directed Department of Public Instruction school planners to make the building standards less detailed. The board will vote on revisions next month and then take its plan to the Joint Legislative Commission on Governmental Operation in January for approval.

The building standards defined the size of school sites and the dimensions for school classrooms, closets, laboratories, art rooms, libraries and other school spaces.

Report Shows Merit Pay Plan Improving Scores By Teachers

RALEIGH — Students whose teachers have been taking part in a merit pay plan have improved their scores on national tests more rapidly and dramatically than their peers in similar systems, a new report shows.

The study, prepared by the N.C. Department of Public Instruction, indicates that students in the school systems where career development is being tested were quicker to improve low scores on the California Achievement Test and slower to drop high scores than a comparison group of students.

"They ought to be similar in performance, but yet, that's not what we've seen," David Holdzkom, director of personnel for the state education agency, told the Greensboro News & Record. "There is some improvement going on in the match units, but it is not as radical or as rapid."

Members of the committee said the report, which will be made to the full board today, provides enough evidence to move the career development plan out of the trial stage and into classrooms across the state next year.

"As long as we see data and accomplishments like this, I think we're going to have to move aggressively," said Harlan Boyles, state treasurer.

TAFT SUPPORTS DANSEY!

North Carolina General Assembly
Senate Chamber

Raleigh, 27611
March 12, 1985

SENATOR THOMAS F. TAFT
9TH DISTRICT

The Honorable James G. Martin
Governor of North Carolina
State Capitol
Raleigh, North Carolina 27611

RE: W. E. Dansey's candidacy for East Carolina University Board of Trustees

Dear Governor:

Please accept this letter as my recommendation and support for W. E. Dansey's candidacy for membership on the East Carolina University Board of Trustees. I know of few citizens in Eastern North Carolina who have demonstrated the loyalty and commitment to the progress of that University as has Bill Dansey.

A successful businessman, dedicated father, active civic leader, Bill has the character and willingness to work that is so important to the community and so necessary for a successful trustee.

Probably the most important measure of a candidate's potential value to a university board of trustees is his vision for the future. Bill has always been an individual who looked to the future and was not afraid of change so long as it promoted positive and beneficial goals. Too often, trustees are merely caretakers or administrative overseers. Bill will bring to that Board of Trustees a willingness to ask pressing questions about what the University's community role is now and in the future. He is absolutely unafraid to make difficult decisions and to take an unpopular position if he believes in the correctness of his position.

If you trust my own character and commitment to North Carolina's future based upon my record in public and private service, then Bill Dansey will be one of your most serious contenders. The decision is certainly yours, but you can make no better choice to serve East Carolina University, North Carolina and the ideals of your administration.

Sincerely yours,
Tom Taft

Even his opponent recognizes Bill Dansey as a successful businessman who is committed to basic values and has a keen vision of the future!

MEET THE CANDIDATES

Vote... November 8, 1988

Prepared by the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce Public and Governmental Affairs Division

QUESTIONS FOR STATE SENATE AND HOUSE CANDIDATES:

1. North Carolina's illiteracy and high school dropout rates adversely impact the state's economic progress. How can state government effectively respond to this crisis?
2. Roads are essential to the economic development of our state, particularly in eastern North Carolina. What new funding sources do you propose to improve our highway system and how do we ensure that our region receives its fair share?
3. North Carolina faces an impending crisis in the disposal of its hazardous waste, and potentially that of its neighboring states. Given the existing shortcomings of the decision making process, how do you propose to deal with this issue?
4. Drug abuse and enforcement is a growing problem in eastern North Carolina and the State. What specific legislative measures do you propose to deal with this situation?

N.C. Senate District 9	 BILL DANSEY Republican, Greenville Education: East Carolina University, Degree in Accounting. Career: Teacher at Pitt Community College, Owner, WEDCO Enterprises. Past Member of Greenville City Council. Honors: Greenville Jaycees Distinguished Service Award, N.C. Jaycees Freedom Guard Award.	A. Place increased emphasis upon community colleges' role in directing literacy programs. B. Strengthen high school tutorial programs to reduce dropouts among students having difficulties as well as: C. Establish pre-school education for the disadvantaged to provide a strong foundation for reading, writing and arithmetic. D. Increase emphasis upon vocational training in high school for those not going to college.	A. Stop the General Assembly's practice of raiding the highway fund for non-construction purposes, e.g. funding clean-up of commercial underground storage tanks and the highway patrol. B. Use bond issues financed by existing revenues to stretch highway construction dollars without raising taxes. C. Governor Martin changed highway construction priorities to give our region more. I'll encourage him to continue this.	The General Assembly plays politics with the hazardous waste program and voted to locate a hazardous waste site by itself. We must take all environmental agencies and consolidate them in one department thus giving the Executive branch the expertise it needs to make these decisions. Then, give the Governor the authority he asked for to locate this site.	My opponent and the General Assembly ignored the Governor's plea for tougher drug enforcement laws in 1988. Drug traffickers must receive mandatory life sentences without parole or gain time. We must increase SBI salaries and the number of SBI drug agents from 25 to 100. We must double the money available for undercover operations and expand school drug education programs.
	 TOM TAFT , Incumbent Democrat, Greenville Education: Duke University; University of North Carolina School of Law Career: U.S. Army Reserve; Attorney-At-Law, North Carolina State Ports Authority; State Senator 1985-Present. Honors: 1979 Outstanding Young Men In America, 1976 Distinguished Service Award, 1959 Eagle Scout.	We can identify with 95% certainty potential dropouts by age three. We must develop public school programs and curriculum for three and four year olds that are at risk and create incentives for school systems and reward school systems for reducing their dropout rates. Lastly, we must have additional resources to monitor and help these students through to graduation.	We must develop multi-pronged efforts to fund $1 billion in annual construction. This means moving the Highway Patrol from Highway Fund to General Fund, building some toll bridges and toll roads, obtaining at least amount of federal interstate highway dollars, send to Washington, and a combination of road bond issues and possibly some small additional gasoline tax.	We must encourage programs like our Pollution Prevention Pays Program that successfully reduces amount of hazardous waste. By encouraging recycling, reprocessing, compaction, etc., both toxicity and volume of hazardous waste is dramatically reduced, lessening the amount of material that must be finally disposed. We must take politics out of the siting process and insure only good science and best technology is utilized.	Aggressive public education, stricter criminal penalties, and innovative programs for addicts are necessary. Specifically, we must establish drug education as early as elementary grades, tighten penalties for dealers parole criteria. We must insure adequate "drug buy" money for SBI and local law enforcement, and insure that we have an adequate number of SBI agents available for undercover work.

(Retired); Farmer (Retired); Town Commissioner Bethel; Mayor, Bethel (6 years); Pitt County Commissioner (26 years); N.C. Senate (4 years)	State Government is responding to illiteracy through the Basic Education Plan, the Community College Programs, the Teaching Fellowships, the State Building Program, the Career Development Plan, and many other programs designed for this purpose. These programs will be continued and expanded in the coming sessions of the General Assembly.	A Legislative Transportation Committee is doing a very extensive study on Highway needs, present and future, and revenue sources to cover these needs. I am very supportive of this study and would support some additional revenues from their recommended sources. I will not support any bill that does not ensure a fair share for Eastern N.C.	A Legislative Study Committee is doing an in-depth study of Hazardous waste in North Carolina 95% of which is handled on site. This committee will make recommendations to the 89 session of the General Assembly. I will probably support the study committee's recommendations and continued efforts to reduce Hazardous Waste at the source.	Support measures for Education which are being put into place in our schools, stricter enforcement of drug laws and very severe penalties for drug violations.

Legionnaire of the Year, 1960 (American Legion)	My entire life has been spent in Education. I am appalled by the trend toward centralization and uniformity in our school system. I would decentralize and give opportunity for parallelism as opposed to the present single-track mode. I would seek State financing of schools by a new kind of Literacy Fund which was used earlier.	An efficient versatile transportation system is vital to the cultural and economic health of any people. Our transportation includes roads, rails, planes, pipes, cables and some waterways. I would seek a unified overview of the system. Since transportation is vital infrastructure to our society, not all of the expense of highways should be derived from tax.	Disposal of waste is coming to be a governmental problem much as education and transportation are. None of the deal with what is left. Specific recommendations from producers, scientists and authorities in the field, as well as from the general public, need to be solicited in order to make decisions for responsible and safe disposal of hazardous waste.	Alcohol is still our major drug. Our Society has little concern for it as witness its advertising and its use in typical gatherings. Use of other drugs by the individual begins and develops in the same manner as use of alcohol. While Society still frowns upon these drugs, we must be more effective in punishing both traffickers and users.
	 WALTER B. JONES, JR. Incumbent Democrat, Farmville Education: Hargrove Military Academy; N.C. State University; Atlantic Christian College Career: N.C. House of Representatives, now seeking fourth term; self-employed businessman	Our Basic Education Program will help bring equal education opportunity to every county in our state. The addition of counselors at the elementary school level, along with retention programs in place, will help prevent dropouts. Lifelong learning through ABE and GED programs in our community colleges and through voluntary literacy groups need to be re-emphasized for those who have already dropped out.	A variety of new funding sources are being explored by a Legislative Study Commission. The 1988 Session of the General Assembly will be considering the recommendations of the Commission which are expected to include bond issues, toll roads, recycling of asphalt and other materials, along with other sources of revenue. The 1987 General Assembly passed legislation that should help the East get its fair share of highway revenues.	We must examine the producers of hazardous waste and determine if the production of the waste can be stopped or reduced. By stopping or reducing the amount of hazardous waste, we can more effectively deal with what is left. Specific recommendations from producers, scientists and authorities in the field, as well as from the general public, need to be solicited in order to make decisions for responsible and safe disposal of hazardous waste.	I feel that the 1989 General Assembly will continue to seek strong laws to deal with the drug problem and those who deal in drugs. We must give law enforcement the tools they need to fight the problem and then insure that their dedication and hard work are upheld by severe and harsh penalties to those found guilty and that the offenders serve maximum sentences imposed by the Court.

WARREN , Incumbent Democrat, Greenville Education: B.A. Degree, Atlantic Christian College; M.A. Degree, East Carolina University; Duke University Career: Education for 26 years; self-employed businessman; Pitt County Board of Commissioners; N.C. Representative.	NC requires teachers to use the look-say method in teaching reading. This method was developed for the deaf and many times produces learning disabilities and illiteracy for the normal child. The schools that use basic phonics and drill usually do not have these problems. The state government should allow teachers the freedom to teach basic phonics.	I support Governor Martin's effort to improve roads without raising taxes. Present funds should be allocated on the basis of actual need - not given to them if it treats Eastern North Carolina fairly, on the other hand, if it does not I will not support the legislation I need for our section of the state is not given due consideration.	Governor Martin should appoint a panel of scientists drawn from the eastern as well as the western part of the state to make a study of safe sites for disposal. Then there should be a drawing to choose the final site and the chosen county should be compensated for potential economic loss.	Our young people should be protected from drug pushers and I support Governor Martin's proposals for severe treatment of persons convicted of selling drugs. I recommend that money from "pork-barrel" spending by Democrat power bosses be transferred to pay for tripling the number of state drug agents.
	 C. JOE STURZ Republican, Greenville Education: Degrees in psychology from San Diego State University and East Carolina University Career: Former captain, U.S. Air Force; Member of the Governor's Advisory Council for persons with disabilities	State Government needs to concentrate on dropout prevention programs that would focus the resources of the State on those children most likely to drop out of school. Identify these students at an early stage and provide counseling where needed. Implement and/or expand summer school programs geared for potential dropouts.	A Study Commission was appointed by the 1988 Legislature to study the State highway system. This Commission will make recommendations for additional highways and the most feasible way to fund new highways and maintain the ones we have. This report will be presented to the next legislative session. As a member of the Appropriations Committee, I will insist that the East receive their fair share.	The 1988 General Assembly enacted legislation that will have a major impact on waste management including a moratorium on siting the State's comprehensive hazardous waste treatment facility, and establishing a permanent Environmental Review Commission that, among other duties, will evaluate actions of all boards, commissions, departments and other agencies dealing with environmental matters.	I believe that we need stronger laws dealing with drug abuse - particularly the "drug pushers." The laws which have already been ratified should be enforced very stringently. I would propose additional law enforcement personnel, where needed, to deal with this growing problem. We need to develop strong, accessible programs dealing with drug abuse in the schools and in the work place.

I would favor this as one measure. Also the five and one-half hour day is spread rather thin with a broad range of curricula offerings. A more concentrated effort in a core curriculum program in the early grade probably would aid in attacking illiteracy.	The Study Commission on Roads I believe will make in their report and subsequent legislation a plan for road improvement all across our state. I will support their plan if it treats Eastern North Carolina fairly, on the other hand, if it does not I will not support the legislation I need for our section of the state is not given due consideration.	Hazardous waste disposal is a very sensitive issue and one that deserves a great deal of consideration. Incentives for locating hazardous waste disposal plants has proven to be less than effective. Two other options may be feasible: securing the treatment of hazardous waste by another state or using strictly scientific approaches to site selection.	Drug education may make the greatest impact on the problem and a good bit of that is going on in the schools and among our law enforcement agencies (D.A.R.E.). In addition, stronger enforcement laws and stiffer penalties will be needed to assist with the problem.

QUESTIONS FOR COUNTY COMMISSIONER CANDIDATES:

1. What is your position on waste recycling and disposal issues within your respective jurisdictions?
2. What is your position on growth for Greenville/Pitt County?
3. What do you consider to be the leading agricultural issue in Greenville/Pitt County and how would you approach that issue?
4. What is your position on employment opportunities for the unskilled?

County Commissioners District 1	 FARNEY A. MOORE Democrat, Greenville Education: B.S. Degree, Education, Elizabeth City State University; attended Columbia University; New York City; Shaw University; M.A., Administration and Supervision, East Carolina University Career: Served as principal, Nichols School; Vice-Principal, North Pitt High School; Assistant Minister, Cornerstone Missionary Baptist Church and Macedonia Missionary Baptist Church	It is imperative to recycle waste and properly dispose of that waste that cannot be recycled. There are many opportunities for recycling waste. If there are planned sites designated for this purpose, even those on the low economic scale may find employment. This may assist some of those who are idle and desire gainful employment. The County Commissioners could adequately research this and follow through in an effective manner.	Growth for Greenville/Pitt County is heartily welcomed. If, of course, should be planned, orderly growth that the present and future generation will be benefited and not hampered due to improper planning.	I consider the leading agriculture issue in Pitt County is "Tobacco and its Future in Pitt County." Inasmuch as it has been a major money crop for many generations and popularity seemingly due to some outside and inside pressures. Allowing the tobacco farmers, the agricultural experts, and all other personnel directly involved and knowledgeable regarding tobacco and its production have proper and adequate input as to tobacco's future is the wisest and most feasible manner to a positive and workable solution.	The unskilled should be efficiently trained to be gainfully employed. Anything less welcomes potential catastrophe.
	 JIM ROUSE Republican, Greenville Education: American Institute of Banking, Marketing and Business Management, Customer Relations, Fisk University, Nashville, Tennessee; New York School of Advertising Career: Publisher and Editor of the "M" Voice Newspaper; Radio Announcer; General Sales Manager/Account Executive. Presently WOOV Announcer and Sales.	First of all, NO nuclear waste disposals should be stored in Pitt County; secondly, all waste should be subject to inspection to allow all recyclable material to be extracted and development of an incineration disposal unit should be implemented to avoid further landfill disposals. A safe and clean waste disposal is essential.	I support quality and orderly growth for Pitt County. This support primarily includes: 1-Pitt-Greenville Airport expansion, 2-Pitt County Convention Center development, 3-Sollicitation of clean, safe "high-tech" industries to relocate to Pitt County and 4-to develop greater harmonious contacts with ECU and PCC to reach and retain qualified blacks to work in the black community and increase its development.	Because tobacco has meant so much to the development of the county and this county and state, a most vigorous approach should be implemented to help save our farmers and this commodity. I further support involvement from the University to assist in handling the agriculture question (i.e., fish farms, cotton allotments, etc.)	As Pitt County becomes more than just an agrarian county, we must have prepared and skilled youths to accommodate industries that will be located to Pitt County. One sure way to address the matter is through increased vocational opportunities in our high schools and PCC; another would be the development of an Opportunity Industrial Center for the county and stronger encouragement for Headstart in our communities for children (and adults).

County Commissioners District 2	 JEAN J. DARDEN Unaffiliated, Greenville Education: Hampton Institute and East Carolina University Career: Retired from Pitt County Schools as a Vice-Principal	The disposal issue should encompass both long range and short range approaches. One immediate goal should be education and mandatory implementation of recycling of all refuse collections both public and private. Long range solutions could include recycling research and construction and Legislative passage of State-wide Laws to address uniform disposal standards.	Growth for Greenville/Pitt County should be carefully planned. Extensive input from citizens living in affected areas should be mandatory in both planning and implementation. The present Sunburst Pattern of development from Greenville outward should be examined and development of an incineration satellite development throughout the County to assure equal access to goods and services to all citizens.	When evaluating the issues impacting agriculture in 1988, several key topics come to mind. Some of these are water quality, revitalization of rural America, competitiveness and profitability of agricultural commodities. It is felt that the main theme that currently challenges agriculture is the need for a greater awareness between the agricultural and the urban sector. As the farm population continues to decline, the urban population must be oriented toward the contribution of agriculture if it is going to continue to receive domestic support and especially Federal Funding of programs.	Employment opportunities that offer a comfortable standard of living for the unskilled are almost nonexistent in Greenville/Pitt County. Most unskilled jobs are in the minimum wage service areas. Tax payers eventually have to fill in the gaps with additional services for those citizens. County government must offer training opportunities and generate employment projects that are pinpointed where unemployment and poverty are high.
	 EUGENE JAMES Incumbent Democrat, Greenville Education: B.S. M.A. from N.C. State University Career: County Commissioner, four years.	The issue of waste recycling and disposal has been one of the most important issues to affect the citizens of Pitt County. I took an active role in the fight against a chemical waste disposal site in neighboring Edgecombe County, believing the issue of the health of Pitt County citizens could be affected. Presently, I am a part of the Regional Waste Management Task Force exploring alternatives for waste disposal and recycling. I believe the burden of waste disposal should be on those who produce the waste.	I am in favor of balanced, well-planned economic growth. Greenville City and County Commissioners must work together to ensure that the quality of life of its citizens is improved through any growth. "Bigger" is not always best.	The leading agricultural issue is tobacco. Having farmed all my life and taught agriculture in the public schools for over thirty years, I know of the economic benefits of tobacco in Pitt County. As County Commissioner, I have little to do with this program, but offer the farmers my full support. We must continue to support the Farmers Market and encourage people of Pitt County to use it.	I believe one of the most important ways to provide opportunities for the unskilled is through training. I would encourage working with Pitt Community College, social services, Pitt County Schools and others to assist the unskilled in learning a trade. I would also continue to work with the development commission in bringing new industry to Pitt County.

County Commissioners District 4	 LINWOOD E. MERCER Democrat, Farmville Education: University of North Carolina Career: Former Mayor of Farmville and Member of Pitt County Education Foundation.	My position on waste recycling and disposal not defined is impossible to state. Regardless of the type of waste, I would want to be thoroughly knowledgeable of the environmental and economic impact of any method of disposal to be considered within my jurisdiction or countywide.	Never has Pitt County been in a better position to be attractive to the elements that affect growth. Our transportation system, land availability, support services, etc. all positively impact this potential. The responsibility we must uphold is that of planning and managing growth in order to live up to this potential and become a flagship area in our state.	The leading agricultural issue facing us is the diminishing tobacco industry and the mechanization of farming in recent years. Diversification of products which will require both education and marketing can help stay under political attack. Cotton is strengthening; however, I believe that food crops, processed in total co-ops, is the long range option. The small operation, as in other industries, may find the going tough right on.	The diversification of farm products could provide an opportunity of employment to unskilled workers as mentioned above; yet, training of our unskilled citizens and our youth through the public schools and community college is a responsibility we must address and promote as skill requirements become increasingly necessary in our area.

Consolidated District A	 D.D. GARRETT Democrat, Greenville Education: Graduate, Greenville Industrial High School and North Carolina College for Negroes, North Carolina Central University Career: Owner/Operator, D.D. Garrett Agency Real Estate; Public Accounting, Notary Public.	My position on recycling is, I think it is very positive when you can take an item that has served the good that is intended and develop the same item into another very useful item. As it relates to disposal items, I would like to see all communities take care of all of its garbage and other waste items.	I would like to see Greenville and Pitt County experience a steady, orderly growth without affecting the quality of life for any of its citizens.	In my opinion, the leading agricultural issue in Greenville and Pitt County is the projected decline in the tobacco industry. I would recommend that we here in Pitt County look for a more diversified economy from catfish farms to Christmas Trees.	It is my opinion that the unskilled are between a rock and a hard place, therefore, the system must provide for the unskilled by increasing the hourly wage of labor, expanding more on welfare benefits, or paying the cost of maintaining the incarcerated. The alternative and long range to this, is begin now to educate and train the unborn.

Consolidated District B	 CHARLES P. GASKINS Democrat, Greenville Career: Farming and Real Estate, Retired Oil-Field Manager of Oil Corporation, 20 years as County Commissioner, Veteran of World War II Honors. Former Chamber Citizen of the Year	To recycle waste is the most logical and complete means to dispose of solid waste. A solid waste recycle program has been established in the county and must be pursued vigorously and aggressively. Joint ventures in carrying out waste disposal, by recycling and by other methods, within regions, as well as acquiring landfill in such manner, must be accomplished.	The growth of Greenville/Pitt County is inevitable. It must come about through proper controls as a result of cooperative preparation and planning by the county and municipalities therein.	The protection of the soil and water. This should be approached through education, regulation and funding assistance through the Federal Department of Agriculture.	Strong vocational training programs should be made available to students. Job training and On-The-Job training programs should be offered after school. Concentration and full effort taken to locate blue collar jobs within the county by the Development Commission and the Chamber of Commerce.
	 STUART M. SHINN Republican, Greenville Education: East Carolina University; Extension courses at North Carolina State University. Career: Contractor, Two terms, Greenville City Council; Two Mayor's Advisory Boards; Volunteer Fireman and Rescue Squad.	I believe a multi-county facility in cooperation with our neighbors, will need to be developed. After recycling, all possible compaction and incineration leave very concentrated residues that will require a State sponsored disposal site. Since no one wants a site of this sort in their area we may have to leave final disposal to divine providence.	Continued growth in the county is fine as long as you keep a handle on it. Kinston, Tarboro, and other areas are outstripping us in capturing new industries. I hope eventually we can pick up a few clean diversified industries that can pay their way up front recycling, rather than increasing the taxpayer burden.	The leading agricultural issue is making a living! Tobacco has seen some relief with stabilization assessments less of a burden, but the tobacco industry is going to stay under political attack. Cotton is strengthening; however, I believe that food crops, processed in total co-ops, is the long range option. The small operation, as in other industries, may find the going tough right on.	The employment opportunities of the unskilled are slim or none. The "college for all" concept is not coming up the dropout numbers. We have got to fund increased industrial/trade/craft education beginning in the seventh grade, or we need to teach plumbing in college. If we can teach them solid arithmetic by the sixth grade, we may make an important member of a service industry from a possible dropout.

Consolidated District C	Photo Not Available WILTON R. DUKE Democrat, Farmville Education: Gold Sand High School, Franklin County Career: Owner/Manager, Duke Buick-Pontiac, Farmville (Retired); Two terms Town of Farmville Commissioner; Mayor Pro-Tem, Farmville (1975-1979)	County government should make available convenient means for the public to dispose of waste so it can be recycled. Each household and business should be educated and encouraged to separate its waste into recyclable and disposable waste. The County should explore the development of an incinerator-generator facility to turn this liability into an asset.	Growth should be encouraged and Pitt County will continue to grow at a steady average rate for the foreseeable future. This growth should be in a controlled, orderly fashion and county-wide zoning should be implemented.	The leading agricultural issue is the conversion of prime farm land from farming purposes to residential and industrial development. This problem should be approached through zoning. The County should also encourage alternative farm crops and enterprises to supplement declining tobacco incomes.	Industrial development is the best employment opportunity for the unskilled. Pitt County should encourage industrial development. In addition, the Commissioners should support Pitt Community College in their efforts to educate and train the unskilled through technical and vocational programs and through apprenticeship.

Doris Duke Leads Life Of Recluse Despite Headlines

By Todd Richissin
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HILLSBOROUGH, N.J. — Doris Duke, the tobacco heiress who is posting $5 million bail for former Philippine first lady Imelda Marcos, inherited so much money from her father she was once known as "the richest girl in the world."

"If you're going to live, you have to be a part of life," Miss Duke, now 75, told The Associated Press in a 1944 interview.

"She leads a fruitful and enjoyable life," said her attorney, Donald Robinson. But she refuses interviews and maintains her privacy even when she ventures outside her walled 2,700-acre estate here in rolling hills about 45 miles west of New York.

The 6-foot-tall Miss Duke, whose wealth is estimated by Forbes magazine at $800 million and by her former business manager at $2.5 billion, has become largely a recluse, though friendships are important to her.

"It was Miss Duke's idea to help (Mrs. Marcos)," Robinson said after a bail hearing in federal court Wednesday. Mrs. Marcos, who is charged along with her husband, former Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos, with racketeering, made the trip to New York from the couple's home in Hawaii last weekend aboard Miss Duke's lavishly appointed private jet.

Robinson said Miss Duke and Mrs. Marcos are old friends.

"She's embarrassed at the mistreatment of the Marcos family by the United States who invited them to come into the States several years ago, and then at least one prosecutor turns around and calls them criminals," Robinson said in a telephone interview Wednesday afternoon.

Miss Duke "doesn't believe that should be part of the American justice system. All I can tell you is they're dear, dear friends," he said.

Robinson said Mrs. Marcos and Miss Duke met through mutual friends in Manhattan, but he declined to be more specific.

Miss Duke first drew widespread publicity in 1926, when she was 14. Following the death of her father, tobacco and electric power magnate James Buchanan Duke, the teenager sued her mother and other trustees of the estate for title to the family's assets here and in Manhattan.

By the time the estate was settled in 1934, most of it going to Miss Duke, the holdings were worth about $133 million, what one newspaper account at the time said was more than one-third of the entire national income at the height of the Great Depression.

DORIS DUKE

Society pages called her "the richest girl in the world" as they reported her attendance at events such as opera openings.

In 1944, Miss Duke very publicly completed training as a $1-a-year worker for United Seamen's Service, helping America's merchant seamen deal with wounds and the trials of war.

She also endured two thoroughly chronicled divorces, the death of a day-old premature daughter and the accidental killing of a long-time companion who was crushed to death by a car Miss Duke was driving. She retreated to her extensive land holdings in New Jersey, Newport, R.I., Honolulu, Manhattan and Charlotte, N.C.

She goes to great lengths to avoid the news media. During a land dispute with New Jersey in 1987, Miss Duke would only answer written questions from reporters through her attorney.

Robinson said Miss Duke remains at her Hillsborough estate, staying active in the background in fights for animal rights and preserving farmland.

A book published last year by her former business manager, Patrick Mahn, said her father nurtured that activism.

"J.B. fostered her love of animals and nature and he told her that every animal had a soul," Mahn wrote in an unauthorized biography co-written by Tom Valentine, a former friend of Miss Duke.

Her father amassed his fortune by building the American Tobacco Co. from a small tobacco crop overtaken by Yankee forces during the Civil War, and from Duke Power Co. His contributions to small Trinity College in North Carolina caused it to be renamed Duke University in 1924.

Heiress Says She's 'Disgusted' With U.S., Pays Marcos' Bond

By John M. Doyle
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Tobacco heiress Doris Duke says she put up Imelda Marcos' $5 million bail because she is "disgusted, embarrassed and ashamed" with the way the U.S. government has treated the former Philippine first lady and her husband.

"I have always believed that an accused person is innocent until proved guilty. I wish the rest of America agreed with me," Miss Duke, 75, said in written response to questions submitted by the Daily News.

Miss Duke, once called "the richest girl in the world," said she would gladly testify as a character witness for the Marcoses, whom she said she considers her "dear friends." The couple is charged with looting the Philippine treasury of more than $100 million.

"I am disgusted, embarrassed and ashamed of my country's mistreatment of Imelda and her ailing husband, Ferdinand," Miss Duke wrote. "Why should America spend millions and millions of dollars prosecuting two people who for a generation have been our closest allies, including our Pacific outpost against communism?"

A lawyer for Miss Duke, Donald Robinson, said Wednesday the wealthy recluse posted the bond "because she knows that Mrs. Marcos didn't commit any crimes."

Miss Duke, who has a 2,700-acre estate in New Jersey, pledged more than $5 million in municipal bonds on behalf of Mrs. Marcos. A lawyer for Mrs. Marcos said she planned to visit with Miss Duke through the weekend even though she would be free to return to Hawaii as soon as the bail paperwork was completed.

U.S. District Judge John F. Keenan loosened travel restrictions for Mrs. Marcos — previously confined to the New York area — allowing her to travel between New York City and Newport, R.I., where Miss Duke has a mansion.

Once the bail documents are signed, Mrs. Marcos will be allowed to travel anywhere in the United States. Her husband, however, cannot leave the island of Oahu without permission of the Justice Department, under a prior restriction.

Lawyers said Miss Duke's bonds would be worth between $5.3 million and $5.4 million depending on market fluctuations. The exact types of bonds were not revealed.

"It was Miss Duke's idea to help," Robinson said after Wednesday's hearing conducted by Keenan.

Mrs. Marcos, 59, who has been staying in an $1,800-a-day suite at the Waldorf Towers, did not attend the hearing.

"Like President Reagan, Miss Duke regrets the indictment," the lawyer said, referring to the president's comment after the Marcoses' racketeering indictment was announced last month.

"Mrs. Marcos is extremely grateful and was tearful when she learned of the offer," Robinson added.

Offers To Testify For Imelda

Mrs. Marcos flew to New York from the couple's home-in-exile in Hawaii aboard Miss Duke's lavishly appointed private jet.

Prosecutors said the bail documents would have to be signed by Miss Duke, Mrs. Marcos and a clerk of the court as well as Keenan.

Mrs. Marcos attorney John J. Tigue said his client "plans to visit with Miss Duke this weekend in New Jersey and perhaps in Newport. She then will return to her ailing husband."

Marcos, 71, remained in Hawaii, where the couple have lived since their ouster in a popular uprising in 1986. Defense attorneys argued last week that he was too frail to make the 10-hour flight. Keenan postponed

Marcos' arraignment pending an examination by a government physician.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Charles LaBella said the examination was completed Monday but the physician's report is not ready.

In a statement issued Wednesday through an aide, Marcos blasted the way the press has covered the case. The media, he said, have "declared President Ferdinand Marcos guilty of several charges filed against him. Whatever happened to the time-honored legal maxim that anyone is presumed innocent unless proven otherwise?"

The Marcoses are charged with racketeering, accused of plundering $103 million from the Philippine treasury.

Contestants Report Sex Questions Asked

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LIHUE, Hawaii — Three contestants in the Mrs. America pageant have complained they were exploited by being forced to fill out a survey concerning their sexual practices.

According to Mrs. Alabama Diane Gamble, Mrs. Wisconsin Gale Coleman and Mrs. North Carolina Connie Hedrick, the survey included such questions as "Can you make love with two men at the same time?" and "Outside of the bedroom, where is the most unusual place you have had romance with your husband?"

Pageant president David Marmel said he had not seen the survey, adding that they were used in the past to find out types of products used by contestants for the product-marketing purposes of pageant sponsors.

Marmel said the women were not obliged to answer the questions.

The three contestants also complained Tuesday about the use of bikinis, saying the skimpy attire was degrading for a pageant featuring mothers and professional women.

"How is it going to look for my fellow workers to see me bumping and grinding in a bikini on national television? It's demeaning," said Mrs. Gamble, a marketing director for an engineering firm.

Only single-piece suits were used in state contests leading to the national pageant, she said.

Jennifer Kline, 21, of Minnesota, won the pageant that ended Sunday and was televised Tuesday by ABC.

Foreman Of Jury That Found Man Guilty Now Defends Him

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — The attorney representing a man in his third capital murder trial brings unique insight to the case — he was the foreman of the jury that convicted the man and sentenced him to death nearly 10 years ago.

"At first blush, I said he can't do that," attorney Wes Hocker said after State District Judge Woody Densen appointed him Tuesday as attorney for John Charles Zimmerman.

"But after I thought about it and asked some legal scholars about it, I found I really don't have a conflict of interest," Hocker said. "I've never heard of such a thing, but there's no impropriety."

Hocker served as jury foreman in Zimmerman's second trial for the kidnapping, rape and fatal stabbing of his 10-year-old niece. The verdicts in the first and second trials were overturned.

Zimmerman, 41, had written a letter asking the court to name Hocker to represent him.

"A defense attorney's function is to protect every one of his client's rights regardless of guilt or innocence," Hocker said. "It's not the judge's or the lawyers' place to judge. It's the jury's."

Hocker said Zimmerman approached him through his law partner, Robert Morrow, who worked with one of Zimmerman's attorneys in the 1979 retrial.

During that trial, prosecutors presented letters Zimmerman wrote to his wife, Sherry, in July 1977 while he was held on charges of killing Ramona Ann Abner of Jacinto City on March 24, 1977.

Zimmerman's mother-in-law found the letters, in which he described committing the crime, and secretly sent them to the slain girl's mother, who gave them to investigators.

In April, the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals threw out Zimmerman's conviction and ordered a new trial, ruling that the letters were confidential communication between husband and wife and should not have been admitted as evidence.

Hocker said his role as a juror may give him an advantage in defending Zimmerman in the trial, which is scheduled to begin next year.

"I've sat in judgment of him with 11 others," the attorney said. "Maybe I can find some insight into what the jurors are thinking. I've heard what they thought while back there (deliberating). I'll have that little something."

Dukakis Steps Up Offense As Bush Fights To Avoid Stumble

By William M. Welch
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Michael Dukakis is blasting Republican handling of the war against drugs and pledging not one dime of foreign aid for countries that resist anti-drug efforts. George Bush poked fun at Dukakis and declared, "I represent the mainstream."

With the race for the White House down to less than a week, the candidates were focusing predictably on the major industrial states of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois and New Jersey.

The Democrats were in a hurry-up offense; the Republicans, with polls bringing only good news, were trying to avoid a stumble.

Republican national chairman Frank Fahrenkopf said GOP tracking polls suggested Dukakis was running below what he called a 40 percent national "base Democratic vote," and said a landslide victory for Bush is possible.

Recent nationwide polls show the GOP nominee holding a solid double-digit lead.

President Reagan was planning a final weekend return visit to help his vice president. He campaigned in Wisconsin and Ohio on Wednesday and scoffed at Dukakis' claims to be ing a Democrat in the Harry Truman mold.

"If he's Harry Truman, I'm Roger Rabbit," Reagan said.

Dukakis, in Chicago, assailed the Republicans' claim on Truman's memory. "Have they no shame?" he asked.

With Democrat Dukakis taking full advantage of national television interview invitations, Bush tossed another barb loaded with "the L word," or liberal label.

"It seemed like he appeared on every television show except 'Wheel of Fortune,'" Bush joked. "You see, he was afraid that Vanna might turn over the L word." Vanna White is hostess on the popular game show.

Still, Dukakis' television appearances prompted Bush to accept several of his own, including 30 minutes live on NBC's "Today" show today.

The campaign grew more heated for the vice presidential candidates. Democrat Lloyd Bentsen blasted Bush for selecting Dan Quayle as his running mate. The choice, Bentsen said in Illinois, showed "a real disdain, disregard for our country."

Quayle found himself caught up anew in a controversy over abortion.

While he ardently opposes abortion, even in cases of rape, Quayle told questioners he had no quarrel with a medical procedure known as dilation and curettage, or D-and-C, and said it would prevent conception if performed soon after rape.

The medical procedure is considered by many in the field of gynecology as a means of terminating a pregnancy.

Questions about abortion have hounded Quayle in recent days, particularly following his suggestion to a 12-year-old girl that she should go ahead and give birth in a theoretical situation in which she was raped by her father and became pregnant.

Dukakis, with fatigue from his frenetic pace showing in his voice, campaigned with Jesse Jackson in Philadelphia late Wednesday night where the former Democratic candidate received a rousing reception.

Dukakis, introduced by Jackson, sparked the crowd at Martin Luther King High School when he stressed his anti-apartheid theme.

Nelson Mandela is still in jail and Manuel Noriega is still running Panama. It's time that changed," Dukakis said.

Dukakis has been drawing huge and wildly enthusiastic crowds, with 10,000 people in Chicago's Daley Plaza.

Navy Denies Dolphins Abused During Training

By Dennis Georgatos
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN DIEGO — The Marine Mammal Commission said it would look into allegations that Navy trainers beat and starved dolphins in a classified surveillance program, but a Navy spokesman denied the animals were mistreated.

"We don't punish mammals or any of the animals for not performing tasks, but we reward them (with food) for satisfactory performance," said Lt. Ken Ross, a Navy spokesman at the Pentagon. "We aim to keep them as healthy as possible because they are very valuable to us."

Ross was responding Wednesday to allegations by dolphin trainer Rick Trout, who this week told a meeting of marine animal trainers that he witnessed "incidences of abuse, weight loss, corporal punishment and damage to animals after transport."

Trainers also use "very negative methods, including food deprivation, corporal punishment and other aversive techniques," said Trout, a civilian hired to work with the dolphins in San Diego, where they are trained by the Navy to help detect mines or enemy frogmen.

Ross insisted that the program operated out of the Naval Ocean Systems Center was "running smoothly," but he said an investigation will be conducted to ensure the animals are being cared for properly.

"Those are allegations we are checking," Ross said. "Our primary concern is the health and safety of the animals, and the treatment of all our animals is well within the Marine Mammal Protection Act. We never have and never intend to do anything that could bring harm to the animals."

A veterinarian is always either present or on call during training, he said, adding that the Navy considered the program's dolphin mortality rate of 5 percent to be better than the species' mortality rate in the wild.

Trout, who no longer works for the Navy, made his comments in an appearance before the International Marine Animal Trainers Association meeting in San Antonio, Texas.

The Seattle Post-Intelligencer, citing unidentified sources, reported Wednesday that four of the Navy's three dozen dolphins have died during the past 18 months and that an undetermined number of others were blinded or crippled by abusive handlers.

John Twiss, executive director of the Washington-based Marine Mammal Commission, said the Navy's dolphin training center "met or exceeded all standards published by the animal and plant health inspection service of the Department of Agriculture" in 1986.

Nevertheless, he said the commission, which advises federal agencies on the handling of marine mammals, wants to find out if there is any truth to the allegations.

"We'll try to find out what is actually happening. We're certainly not going to disregard a story like this," Twiss said.

Navy officials said they were aware of two dolphin deaths within the program in recent months and were checking the reports of additional deaths.

Grape Grab Costs $600.40

JACKSON, Mich. (AP) — A man convicted of a felony for munching on grapes at a grocery store was ordered to pay 40 cents in restitution and $600 in court costs.

Eli Bradley Jr., 52, could have been imprisoned for up to four years on the charge of larceny from a building. But Jackson County Circuit Judge Russell E. Noble on Wednesday delayed the sentence and said he would consider removing the conviction from Bradley's record if he stayed out of trouble until Oct. 4, 1989.

"I'm going to appeal this because I'm not guilty of no felony," Bradley said after the hearing. "Any felony on your record works against you for the rest of your life. If they can do what they did in this court, nobody is safe in the courts."

Bradley was arrested March 4 while leaving a grocery store. Security guards testified during his trial that they saw Bradley eating several handfuls of grapes while shopping.

Bradley testified that he ate no more than two or three grapes to be sure they were seedless before buying more than 1 1/2 pounds of grapes along with other groceries for $13.25.

Prosecutor Joseph Filip offered in June to reduce the charge to misdemeanor shoplifting. Defense lawyer Richard L. Wilkins chose to go to trial on the felony charge, which he considered easier to defend. A jury convicted Bradley in September. "This matter, in my opinion, could have been handled with much less expense as a misdemeanor, not a felony," the judge said Wednesday.

Assistant prosecutor Donald Ray said his office probably would oppose removal of the felony conviction next year even if Bradley stayed out of trouble.

Filip said the September verdict showed the community agrees that "we don't want people stealing from stores."

In the Republican prosecutor's re-election campaign, his Democratic challenger, Paul R. Adams, has chided him as having "made the county safe for grapes."

Texas Executes Convicted Killer

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HUNTSVILLE, Texas — Donald Gene Franklin, whose appeal halted executions in the state for more than nine months, was put to death early today for abducting and murdering a nurse 13 years ago.

Franklin, 37, made no final statement before a lethal injection was administered at the Texas Department of Corrections' Wall Unit.

Franklin stared at the death chamber ceiling and coughed several times as drugs flowing through needles inserted into his arms took effect. He was pronounced dead at 12:30 a.m., six minutes after doctors began administering the injection.

Franklin was the second person executed this year in Texas, which leads the nation with 28 executions since the U.S. Supreme Court restored capital punishment in 1976. He was the 102nd person executed in the United States since then.

Franklin spent 12 1/2 years on death row, and had three trials and at least five execution dates. His own attorney once described him as the most hated man in San Antonio, where Mary Margaret "Peggy" Moran, 27, was slain in July 1975.

"I'm very thankful it's over," her mother, Patricia Crawford, said today. "I feel really relieved. I feel I can be at peace and Peggy can be at peace."

At the time of the execution, she said, she was looking at a picture of her daughter.

"It's been a long hard day," she said. "It's been a very, very long 13 years."

Franklin's hopes for a reprieve were blocked late Wednesday when the U.S. Supreme Court voted 7-2 to refuse him a stay.

The nation's highest court had granted Franklin a stay in October 1987 to consider his challenge of Texas' capital punishment law.

Mother Pleads For Lost Baby

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Fighting back tears, a mother pleaded publicly to an unknown kidnapper to return her premature infant, as authorities warned that the baby's life may be in danger and offered a $13,000 reward for his return.

About two dozen detectives were working against time today to find the woman who posed as a nurse as she kidnapped Christopher Michael Jones from his mother's room at Doctors Hospital. Doctors said Wednesday a lack of proper medical care would endanger the 6-day-old boy's life.

"The baby's blood sugar can get very low and we were watching it carefully in the hospital. If it gets too low it can cause seizures or even death within a relatively short period of time," said Dr. Whit Hall.

The baby, born Saturday, weighed 4 pounds and must be fed every three hours and kept warm because he is small, Hall said.

Christopher's mother, Annette Jones-Thomas, 32, was ushered into a news conference in a wheelchair

Wednesday with her husband, Willie Jones, 39, at her side, and delivered an emotional plea to her baby's kidnapper.

"Please, if you have my child, please return him," she said, fighting back tears as her hands fiddled nervously with a sheet of paper from which she haltingly read her statement.

"He needs medical attention and if you have him for the reason of taking his as your child and raising him and loving him, do what a good mother would do. Bring him to the hospital and let him get help."

Mrs. Jones-Thomas, a secretary for the Arkansas Education Association, and her husband have two daughters, ages 8 and 5. The younger girl has cerebral palsy, according to co-workers and a neighbor.

The mother said a young black woman dressed in a white pleated skirt and a white sweater entered her four-floor room Tuesday night and said she needed to weigh the baby. The child hasn't been seen since.

Lyng Says He'll Stay On Until Next Year

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng has passed the word that he intends to stay on the job until the next administration takes over on Jan. 20.

Senior staff people were told that Lyng "has some unfinished work" to do concerning trade talks and that he and U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter will be busy tidying up those affairs over the next few weeks, regardless of how the Nov. 8 presidential election turns out.

A special meeting of the 96 member countries of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, at which agriculture will be a central focus, is scheduled to begin in Montreal on Dec. 5, for example.

Cuban Film Smuggled By Defector

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Theft is so rampant at state enterprises in Cuba that "1 million police" couldn't stop it, according to a secret documentary produced by Cuban security forces for the island nation's leaders.

Copies of the crime documentary and another on the alienation of Cuba's young people were smuggled out of the island by a defector.

A screening of the two documentaries, produced by the National Revolutionary Police in 1986, was held Tuesday evening under the sponsorship of Freedom House, a New York-based human rights group.

The second documentary concludes that many of Cuba's young people are alienated, lack revolutionary fervor and complain that recreational facilities are often run down, non-existent, off-limits or inaccessible.

In Search Of Integrity To Wynton Marsalis, It's A Matter Of Technique

By Priscilla Brown
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Tom Mallison calls Wynton Marsalis a student of jazz, a scholar. Mallison, who is "Tom the Jazz Man" on WTEB-FM, says Marsalis prides himself on taking a serious, business-like approach to his music.

"You won't ever hear him say, 'Louie Armstrong,' for instance," Mallison says. "As far as Wynton is concerned, the man's name is Louis. He deserves respect."

"Wynton's whole approach is serious." Indeed, when Marsalis went onstage Tuesday night in Wright Auditorium, he was all business. Joined by the other members of his sextet, the no-nonsense Marsalis swung into his music without prelude.

Wearing a tweed jacket and slacks, he looked like a young financier who happened to play the horn. But as a sell-out crowd would attest, the show was pure Marsalis — pure eight-time-Grammy-winning, trumpet-playing Marsalis.

The man may wear a suit, but his music is hardly close to the vest.

"I feel so glad to be a musician," he said earlier in the day. "I'm having so much fun ... when I die, I'm going to be mighty sad."

When Marsalis arrived in Greenville on Tuesday afternoon, he stepped in front of another audience at East Carolina. About 150 students and teachers waited in Hendricks Theater for Marsalis to lead a master's class in jazz.

They came expecting scales and riffs, harmonies and technical advice on chording. But that's not what they got. Instead, they got, yes, more vintage Marsalis. Outspoken, confident, philosophical Marsalis.

"The problem we have nowadays is that music is seen in objective terms," he said. "Music has been reduced to wallpaper — a commodity."

"That destroys the conception of quality," he said. "And why should anybody subject themselves to the frustration and the pain of hours of practice if nobody is paying attention to quality?"

But it is quality, Marsalis said, that brings excellence. And practice — those horrible lonely hours of struggling with technique — is the only path to the top.

Dressed casually in sneakers, a sweatsuit and a motorman's cap, Marsalis leaned back on the stage and explained that discipline is key to a musician's ability to bare his soul.

"You may have heard people say, 'Oh, he's all technique and no soul.' Well, if you're a student, you don't know soul," he said. "Technique is the first level of morality in a musician. Technique shows your attention to detail."

"The deeper somebody feels about something, the more they know about it."

Marsalis paused, then spoke again. "You might say, 'But let's talk about how I feel.' Right. I'll tell you to have confidence in practicing. There is no other way to get to the music but by practicing."

"There is no other way."

Marsalis has been compared to jazz greats, lifted aloft with the likes of Armstrong, Ellington, Strayhorn and Monk. But he is adamant about building his work on the shoulders of jazz tradition. Because in art, he said Tuesday, "the weight of history is on your back."

"Art lets you know the ways of people," he said. "When you study art, you study tradition. Music is the same."

"You say you want to be an individual? Well," he said, "the problem of individuality is that it is always earned with an historical backdrop."

Marsalis at 27, raised in New Orleans, is well aware of that backdrop. His father was a musician, Al Hirt gave him his first horn. He has practiced, daily, he said, since high school. "If I don't practice on my horn every day, I deal with music, write, transcribe off records or work at the piano. But there is still a lot I don't understand."

"I listen to some of Duke Ellington's music, and I realize I don't have a chance of understanding it."

When Marsalis downplayed some avant-garde jazz artists as needing more development, a student asked whether he was fully developed. "No," Marsalis responded with typical candor, "I'm still learning how to play the blues."

"My message is not, 'I am the one who has the way,' but that 'this is the method that will lead you in the way.'"

Technique, technique, technique, he said. Only by becoming fluent in a language can one become a poet. "Anything can come out of your mouth," he said, "but it ain't goin' come out of your horn."

"A lie sounds like a lie," he added. "... there is a sound that integrity has. And in this era, integrity is laughed at — but not by everybody. 'It's worth the struggle.'"

Historic Hamilton Plans Walking Tour

HAMILTON — A walking tour of Historic Hamilton on Saturday is being held in conjunction with the celebrator of nearby Fort Branch Days of the Civil War fort site.

One of the most colorful events of the day will be a parade of 26 mounted cavalymen who will march with 385 Civil War enactors in the big parade at 4 p.m.

The Historic House Tour will begin at 11 a.m. and continue until 3 p.m.

Headquarters and starting point for the tour will be the Visitor's Center at the Town Hall, where visitors will find a tour program and can purchase tickets at $3 each for the guided tour. Visitors can also secure a schedule of events at Fort Branch for both Saturday and Sunday.

Properties to be visited on the Historic Tour are mostly of the 19th century, with a few 20th century buildings of particular interest included.

Selections from among the more than four dozen sites to be included in the tour are listed below:

- St. Martin's Episcopal Church, 1879, enclosed by magnolia trees.

- Gladstone-Waldo House, 1880, a typical triple A frame house.

- Hamilton House, 1840, a Greek Revival temple-form building listed in the National Register of Historic Places.

- Bryant-Haislip House, 1885, Gothic style frame house.

- Slade House, 1870, a one-story house enlarged to a two-story home.

- Hickory Hill, 1848. This is an architectural landmark blending three different architectural styles.

- Weathersbee-Anthony House, 1850, an example of Greek Revival style.

- Baker-Ballard House, 1888, a fine example of the Queen Anne style.

- Hamilton Cemetery, 1880. Located in park-like ground with Victorian tombstones and a gazebo.

- Hamilton Methodist Church, 1903, a distinctive Gothic style frame church.

- Upton-Pippin House, circa 1825. One of the oldest houses in town.

- Conoho Masonic Lodge, 1850, a two-story Greek Revival meeting hall.

- Larchmont, 1840, a house virtually unaltered.

- Purvis House, 1795. The two-story house is possibly Hamilton's oldest.

Other homes, old cemeteries, commercial buildings the town's wharf area as well as Sherrord House, 1815, located a short distance outside Hamilton, are included in the 51 sites listed on the program.

Activities in addition to the walking tour include an 1860's fashion show to be held from 3 to 4 p.m. in the fellowship hall of Hamilton Baptist Church.

At 4 p.m. members of the 1st North Carolina Regimental Parade will form at St. Martin's Church and march down Front Street to the Old Methodist Cemetery for a memorial service and dedication of a plaque.

Master Craftsman Builds His Ornate Clocks In The Shadow Of A Huge Browning Factory

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MAYSVILLE, Ky. — Next door to the multi-million dollar Browning Manufacturing plant, an east Maysville craftsman builds at his own pace.

His recent masterpiece stands 8 feet tall. The ornate grandfather clock is the fruit of three years of labor and is the sixth full-sized clock built by Eugene Glascock.

"I made every piece of it," Glascock says. As he moves knowingly about his small workshop filled with lathes, drills and other power tools, there is no doubt he did.

The design of the timepiece is his own, as are some of the tools he created to produce its intricate woodworking. Part of the solid wild cherry wood he used to build the frame was salvaged from an Ohio tobacco barn.

"I got to messing around with woodworking before I retired, and then I got interested in building clocks," Glascock says.

With a lot of time on his hands after retiring, the 76-year-old set up his workshop and filled it with tools he had been collecting for 25 years.

The hardest part about building the 8-foot grandfather clock was the design, he says. Glascock first made a full-scale drawing of the clock, showing the thickness of the cuts, and then built the clock from the blueprint.

"I have built some (clocks) from kits, but it is as hard to build from kits as it is from scratch," he says.

Most of the other grandfather clocks he has built have been distributed among family and friends, but this special clock is destined for Glascock's living room.

The clockworks — the gears, hands and movement — were bought, but the other things, such as the specially made brass hinges or the distinctive columns, he had to construct himself.

Inexperience Threatens Mountain-Hiking Tourists

By Dennis Patterson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Sometimes, the hardest thing about running an outdoor outfitting business in the mountains is keeping from laughing out loud when flatlanders show up for a hike, says Jeff Wahoo Stanley.

"The things we see would amaze anyone who has a basic knowledge of the outdoors," said Stanley, owner of Wahoo's Outdoor Adventures in Boone. "They come in with the wrong shoes, the wrong socks, everything wrong."

"Or they may come in with the right shoes and socks, but tight blue jeans like you'd wear to a nightclub or something," he said. "And they may or may not be wearing underwear. Now when you're hiking in the mountains with no underwear and tight blue jeans, you're likely to get rubbed in some mighty precarious places."

"We just try to keep a straight face and suggest that maybe they'd like to go back to their motel and change clothes," said Stanley, who has been an outfitter for nine years. "Keeping a straight face is sometimes hard to do."

Ill-prepared as they might be, hikers who seek help from outfitters are a step ahead of other mountain tourists who set out on their own with little training, equipment or experience, say rescue officials who sometimes have to rescue them.

"In this area, we've got a lot of people going into the woods for hiking and camping who are getting lost, injured or whatever," said Tom Collins of the Watauga County Emergency Management Office. "There have been several fatalities in the last several years, mostly with inexperienced people."

"This time of year, exposure can get you right quick," Collins said, "even with the temperature at 30 to 40 degrees. And you do not have to get far out of the city limits of Blowing Rock or Boone until you're in some desolate terrain."

"If you're not from around here, it's easy to get turned around," Collins said. "I've been in these mountains all my life, hunting at night and everything else, but I've been lost before."

Collins said the completion of the Blue Ridge Parkway around Grandfather Mountain has brought more tourists into the county, including some who decide to wander among the majestic rocks and ridges.

"We had one fella not too long ago who saw a rock spire and thought it might be a good place to do a little free climbing," Collins said. "Well, he got halfway up and got stuck with no rope. The only thing he could do was wait until somebody came along and spotted him who did have a rope."

"People just don't stop to think," he said.

Don Weaver, the emergency management coordinator for Clay County, said visitors often don't realize that the beauty around them can be dangerous.

"They haven't been educated to know what the dangers are," Weaver said. "It doesn't take but a little turn of a rock and you could end up with anything from a minor injury to a death on your hands."

"I can understand people going out and getting turned around," he said. "That can happen even to people who are from here. But most of the people who end up in trouble are the ones who just don't stop and think."

"If you have enough experience, you know that if you follow water downstream, eventually you're going to cross a road or come to where somebody can help you," he said. "If you don't panic and just work it out real slow, you'll be all right."

"The worst thing people can do is panic," Collins said. "If somebody is turned around and it's getting dark, the best thing they can do is bed down right where they're at and wait until daylight. If you just stay still, people will be able to find you, or you'll be able to walk out when it's light."

"But people get to wandering around in the dark, and that's how they walk off of cliffs," he said.

"The first lesson you get is not to deviate off the trail," Stanley said. "You're heading for trouble when you do."

"And nobody should go out in the woods under any circumstances without a pocket knife, lighter, water and some kind of first aid kit," he said. "A lot of times, you have Joe Yuppie who has gotten the right clothes and equipment, but goes off up the trail without a first aid kit."

"After a while, his wife has rubbed a blister on her foot," he said. "But they don't have a Band-Aid to put on it, and pretty soon it gets so bad she can't walk any more. So he ends up carrying her back out."

Stanley said the best tool anyone can have is ordinary common sense.

"What we see a lot of times is people who are leaving their good common sense at home," Stanley said. "The long and the short of it is, it's really a jungle out there."

Time Has Come To Forgive Dad

Dear Abby: I am a 40-year-old, happily married woman with three children. I've been married for 20 years. My parents divorced when I was 10 years old because my father ran around and left my mother many times for other women. Mom finally divorced him and he moved out of state.

Now, after 30 years, Dad has come back into my life. He has told me how sorry he is for his past actions, and I believe he is sincere. He says he wants to know his grandchildren before he dies. We've been keeping in touch lately. He still lives out of state and has never remarried. He's almost 70 now and is not in the best of health.

My mother found out, and she blew up. She wants me to promise that I will never speak to him again. I've tried to explain that Dad is sorry, and I do care about him. Mom says she feels betrayed and hurt. I don't want to hurt her, but why can't I be friends with both of them? Or shouldn't I be friends with my father because of the way he treated Mom and me?

Please help me with this heavy problem. — Caught In Between

Dear Caught: Your mother is understandably hurt, but she's unfair to demand that you never speak to your father again. You have the right to be friends with your parents, and I commend you for forgiving your father and allowing him to know his grandchildren.

If your mother chooses not to be friendly with you, it will then be her decision, but she should not force you to choose between your father and her.

How much happier your mother would be if she, too, would put aside her bitterness. People do change, and should not be punished a lifetime for mistakes they may have made during their younger and more thoughtless, selfish years.

Dear Abby: My father drowns himself in cologne after he shaves. He insists that cologne and aftershave lotion are the same thing, and he applies cologne by the handful!

My brothers, sisters, our mother and I have spoken about this, and believe me, we didn't mince any words. Dad is a high-level retail manager, and I'm sure his supervisors are too polite to tell him he stinks and his subordinates are afraid to.

Perhaps if you print this, Dad will see it and cut back on the cologne. — Holding My Breath In Tennessee
Dear Holding: Here's your letter.

I hope it clears the air.

Dear Abby: Regarding the subject of inheritance and all the problems it can cause, I have informed my mother to spend it! Why should parents sacrifice vacations or certain material things they have wanted in order to leave money to their children?

I say, if you don't do what you want in this lifetime, when are you going to do it?

If my mother wants to leave me something, I'll take her nicked-up, well-used family dining table, or my grandmother's handmade quilt she gave my mother. No amount of money can replace these items that hold so many childhood memories. — Joy In Fairfield, Ohio

Dear Joy: Beautiful! (You were aptly named.)

She Teaches Good Eating

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — She has no credentials as a nutritionist, but she has slimmed down film, music and television stars and made them devotees of healthy eating.

Yolanda Bergman is a lithe, blonde California type who hails from the New York City borough of Queens. She's a former professional dancer, a former trainer at Jane Fonda's Workout studios, and a former personal trainer.

It was while she was a personal trainer that she became a refrigerator reformer — teaching her clients not only how to slim down and feel better by working out but by eating right.

"I'm not a fad, I'm not a diet," she says. "From the time I was dancing, I was interested in the body, in nutrition."

At first, Bergman would just raid clients' kitchens, dumping all the food she considered nutritional no-no's and telling them what to buy: healthy snacks, lots of fruit and vegetables, whole grains and lean proteins such as fish and poultry.

Soon, she began doing their shopping — and cooking, delivering complete meals to their doors.

Now she has a staff of eight in a kitchen in Sherman Oaks, Calif., turning out scores of entrees, salads, snack foods and desserts each week for her faithful followers.

The service is as high in price as it is in nutrients — upwards of $250 per week.

And since Hollywood types spend a lot of time eating out, she performs yet another service. She will call the restaurant in advance and order judiciously from the menu.

"You can eat healthy in any restaurant," she says, emphasizing "any."

In a fast-food restaurant?

"Sure, eat the hamburger," she says. "But remove half the bun and all the other stuff except the lettuce, tomato and mustard. Chef's salad? Remove the ham and cheese."

What other bits of advice for people who are starved for more than a poached chicken breast and lettuce with lemon juice?

"Eat Chinese food," she says, "but not the stuff with MSG in it. Instead of butter and sour cream, put tofu in a blender with garlic and herbs and a little cornstarch and put it on your baked potato."

She also says she uses apple juice or pineapple juice as sweeteners, and to bind meatloaf she uses shredded carrots and zucchini rather than processed dry bread crumbs.

For a refreshing drink, she suggests mineral water mixed with fruit juice.

"I'm ahead of my time," Bergman says, "but the rest of America is catching up. They're beginning to read labels, and by shopping carefully you can buy prepared foods that are healthy. You can buy canned soup without salt and baked instead of fried snacks."

Paul Stanley, lead singer-guitarist for the rock group KISS, is among Bergman's followers. In a recent issue of Self magazine, he said Bergman's regime had lowered his cholesterol 30 points. ◊ one of the reasons I was upset," Haigwood said. "I certainly wanted to bring him to prosecution if he was out and about the community."

 The Worthingtons face a long list of charges, including arson, conspiracy to commit arson, mail fraud, wire fraud, bank fraud and check kiting.

If convicted, the younger Worthington could be sentenced to a maximum of 24 years in prison and more than $10 million in fines, Shanahan said, and his father could face a maximum of 174 years in prison and up to a $9.5 million fine.

The late Harvey Bowen of Ayden, who died in March, allegedly paid Stocks $8,000 to burn the warehouse in October of 1986. Stocks is accused of then paying Edmund Wayne Hart, also of Pitt County, $2,000 to set the fire. Hart also pleaded guilty in June to setting the fire and is in protective custody, Shanahan said.

Shanahan said the investigation into the fire revealed that a few days after Bowen told Stocks to burn the warehouse, he allegedly called Stocks and said to wait because the "insurance wasn't right."

At the same time, Shanahan said Tommy Worthington received a notice that insurance on the warehouse had been canceled. Once the new insurance was purchased Bowen ordered Stocks to set the fire, Shanahan said.

The Associated Press reported that Lloyds of New York Insurance Co. paid $2.3 million to cover the loss of the tobacco in the warehouse, and the owners have attempted to collect additional insurance.

Maldivians Seek Help In Coup

 home to 190,000 people, the Maldives are 400 miles southwest of Sri Lanka and India. India is the regional power and does not want to see the current balance upset. It has thousands of troops in Sri Lanka to try to quell a war by militant Tamils.

Edward Moss, deputy chief of mission at the U.S. Embassy in Colombo, said Maldivian officials contacted the governments of the United States, Britain and other countries for help.

He did not say if the request included appeals for military intervention.

Aziz said the raiders spoke Tamil but that he did not know who was behind the attack. Tamil is not spoken by Maldivians. It is the language of ethnic minorities in Sri Lanka and India.

A Sri Lankan military official said former President Ibrahim Nasir was believed to be behind the attempt to overthrow Gayoom, who defeated

Nasir in the 1978 election and won a third five-year term on Sept. 23.

The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Nasir sent an agent to Sri Lanka to recruit Tamil militants to stage a coup. He said Nasir moved to Singapore after 1978 and his followers tried in 1980 to overthrow Gayoom.

A Sri Lankan pharmacist in Male said she had rushed medicine to a government hospital to treat people injured in the attack.

Electricity was cut off in Male and no civilians were on the streets, she said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The Maldives' airport was closed and all flights were turned back, according to officials in Sri Lanka and the Maldives.

"Male is like a dead city," said Sri Lanka's high commissioner in the Maldives, Mohammad Ali. He said the trouble began about 4:30 a.m. with a loud explosion, followed by exchanges of gunfire.

Several residents of Male said they were staying off the streets because of uncertainty.

The first reports to reach the outside world said the gunmen had captured the presidential palace and taken Gayoom prisoner, along with National Security Minister Ilias Ibrahim and Presidential Affairs Minister Abbas Ibrahim.

Gayoom, 50, has charted a course of non-alignment for the remote republic.

The Maldives consist of 1,200 tiny, coral-studded islands, but only 200 are inhabited. The economy depends mostly on fishing, tourism and shipping.

Residents of the capital said Radio Male went off the air at 10 p.m. Wednesday and had not resumed broadcasting more than 15 hours later. Many telephones were not working in the remote nation.

Gayoom had been scheduled to visit New Delhi two days ago for a three-day visit, but his trip was canceled late last week without explanation.

U.S. May Face New Problems confrontations," said Martin Indyk, director of the Washington Institute for Near East Policy, a Washington think tank.

Whichever candidate comes to power in Washington, clashes with a Shamir administration are virtually certain in view of a Likud promise to 'quash the Palestinian uprising once and for all.'

That "means more brutality, more Palestinians killed, more — probably — expulsions, perhaps even the idea of some attempt at a mass transfer of Palestinians out of the West Bank and Gaza," said Edward Said, a professor of political science at Columbia University and a member of the Palestine National Council, which is the PLO's parliamentary arm.

The Reagan administration has repeatedly chastised Israel for its harsh tactics against the Palestinians. Massive expulsions or a higher Palestinian death toll are unlikely to be tolerated in Washington, said Indyk.

How They Voted

WASHINGTON — Turnout for House roll calls dropped sharply in the final two weeks of the 100th Congress as dozens of normally attentive members chose to return home for politicking rather than stay in Washington for the less exciting task of casting yeas and nays.

Building A Program Will Take Time

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Two potential candidates for the East Carolina head football coaching position say the next coach will need more time to build a program than the four years former coach Art Baker received in 1984.

Gary Stevens, offensive coordinator, assistant head coach and quarterback coach at the University of Miami (Fla.), and Frank Orgel, linebacker coach at South Carolina, have both expressed interest in the ECU coaching position, but have not yet been contacted by anyone connected with ECU.

Outgoing coach Art Baker, who resigned Monday effective at the conclusion of the season, said in retrospect he would have asked for a contract longer than the four.

"My only regret in coming to East Carolina in 1985 was asking for a four-year contract rather than a six year," Baker said during a press conference Monday where he announced his resignation. "It was a six-year job rather than a four-year job and I realize that now too late."

Both Stevens and Orgel said a plus-four year contract would be a benefit to any new coach, especially in terms of recruiting.

"I'd have to have a commitment that they'd give me a chance to build a program," Orgel said. "Art was doing that. He was building a program. They played us a heck of a game down here (in a 17-0 USC win Sept. 17)."

Orgel coached at ECU from 1974-79 under Pat Dye. He joined the Gamecocks prior to the 1986 season and helped mold a Gamecock defense that ranked among the top 10 nationally in all four defensive categories a year ago.

"I'd like to see the program win," Orgel said. "I'd like to recruit kids in Eastern North Carolina and I'd like to have a five-or-six-year contract to put the best possible football team on the field."

Since recruiting is the lifeline of any college football program, Stevens said it is important for any new coach to have at least four of his own recruiting classes to establish a program upon.

"A four-year contract is good, but at this time of year you have to have five," he said. "Hiring a coach in middle of December, you're getting a late start on recruiting. It's hard to do that."

"You'd need four full recruiting years. You'd have to bypass this year and get a five-year pact. That's what I think. But you have to recruit your state first. You've got to get the kids out of North Carolina."

Emory Wants To Be Considered

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Former East Carolina football coach Ed Emory says he'd like to return to the Pirates as a replacement for his successor, but school officials say they aren't interested.

Coach Art Baker, who succeeded Emory, resigned Monday, effective at the end of this season. "I never finished the goal that I went to East Carolina for — to make the Pirates one of the top teams in the country," Emory told The Charlotte Observer on Wednesday. He compiled a 26-29 record at East Carolina from 1980-84 and now lives in Myrtle Beach, S.C.

"I'd be honored and thrilled if I could be considered," Emory said. "I'd probably go back and work for three hot's and a cot."

That, said Emory, is "three hot meals and a place to sleep."

Emory said he felt he would have a chance at the job if new athletic director Dave Hart and Chancellor Richard Eakin "have an open mind."

Hart, however, said Emory is not a likely candidate.

"I will not be contacting Ed Emory," Hart said.

Powell To Finals Wins 3 Straight-Set Matches

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Greenville Rose's Paige Powell, a ninth-grader at E.B. Aycock Junior High, had three straight set wins in action from the North Carolina High School Athletic Association 4-A women's tennis championships.

Powell opened the first round with a 6-0, 6-2 win over Lian Gandar of West Charlotte.

In the second round, Powell defeated Emily Nanney of Charlotte Myers Park, 6-2, 6-2. She followed that up with a 6-2, 6-2 quarterfinal win over Claudia Campbell of Fayetteville Terry Sanford.

Powell moves into the semi-finals today against Jenny Boon of Raleigh Broughton. If she wins there, she advances to the finals. The four remaining girls are the four top seeds in the tournament.

Defending state champions Daniela Marx and Lee Worrell of Goldsboro earned a pair of straight set victories Wednesday to move into the semifinals.

Marx and Worrell defeated Laura Wagner and Mandy Saharic of Durham Jordan 6-3, 6-2 in a quarterfinal doubles match after defeating Traci Caroway and Heather Manry of Morganton Freedom 6-0, 6-0 in the second round.

In singles play, the top four seeds advanced to the semifinals. Top-seeded Scotti Thomas of Durham Jordan defeated Raleigh Sanderson's Julie McCarthy 6-3, 6-4 in the quarterfinals. Thomas will meet third-seeded Cara White in the semifinals. White was a 6-3, 7-5 winner over Goldsboro's Caroline Vinson.

Rampants Hold Off New Hanover

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

J.H. Rose High School's soccer team turned on the afterburners on defense Tuesday night at Percy Daniels Field to record a 1-0 win over Wilmington New Hanover in the first round of the state 4-A playoffs.

The win vaults the Rampants into the second round of the playoffs and marked their eighth consecutive win. For the year, Rose stands at 14-5. Their next action will come in the second round of the playoffs next Tuesday at 7 p.m. at Daniels Field. The Rampants will take on the winner of the Northeastern-Eastern Wayne first-round matchup.

The Wildcats, winners of 12 of their last 14 matches entering the contest ended their year with a 14-8 mark.

With the match only 3:40 seconds old, the Rampants scored what proved to be the game-winning goal when midfielder John Bolen fed Jason Bizzaro an assist on a corner kick.

From there, the Rampant defense took control of the game.

"We played excellent defensively tonight," Rose head coach Charlie Harvey said. "We made some strategy changes with our defense at halftime after we had seen their style of play and I think that helped us a lot."

The Wildcats continually moved inside the scoring zone in the second half, but time after time, came up empty.

Overall, New Hanover outshot the Rampants 19-9. But 10 saves by Rampant goalie Stephen Higdon and several key blocks by backfielder Toure Clairborne thwarted the Wildcats' threats.

"We had our opportunities, but things just didn't go our way," New Hanover coach Bill Rhodes said. "We kept the pressure on them with our offense, but we just couldn't get the shots in."

In the final three minutes of the contest, the Wildcats missed a flurry of scoring opportunities. With just under three minutes remaining, Wildcat midfielder Patrick Perez fired a shot which caromed off the upper portion of the goal's medal framing. Backfielder Dan Southerland then fired the rebound which was blocked away by Higdon. Miguel Bordo then gave one final effort, which was covered by Higdon.

The Wildcats got one last chance in the final minute of play to score when the Rampants were whistled for an obstruction violation. However, midfielder Scott Fernandez's kick sailed to the left of the goal ending any hopes for New Hanover.

CAA Brings In 2 New Coaches

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — The Colonial Athletic Association welcomed two new coaches to its basketball tipoff meeting Wednesday, and promptly put them on the spot.

For "newcomer" Lefty Driesell, who took over this year at James Madison, the spot gave him plenty of room for improvement.

For Ernie Nestor, who took over the reigns at George Mason, the spot was the big one.

Media attending the tipoff selected George Mason as the preseason favorite in the CAA race, while Driesell's Duke were relegated to last place.

Driesell joked that he had nowhere to go but up with only two seniors "one of whom probably won't play much" and one junior on the team.

Nestor, however, is blessed with the return of Kenny Sanders, the CAA's Player of the Year in 1987-88.

Oddly enough, the coaches' choice to win the race was American University, which the media voted second. Coach Ed Tapscott, who was co-coach of the year last season, returns a number of veterans, and a strong inside game.

UNC-Wilmington was picked for third, but that anticipates the return of Larry Houzer, an all-conference selection who recently underwent arthroscopic surgery to remove bone chips from his knee.

Selected for the fourth spot were East Carolina's Pirates, the eighth place team in the league last year. All-Conference Gus Hill returns along with

Owls Complete Rebound

Switch Back To The I-Formation Keys Late Success

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

For six weeks this season, the Temple Owls struggled long much like the East Carolina University Pirates, their foe this weekend in Philadelphia.

But last Saturday, Temple put it all together and upset Rutgers, 35-

30, winning only their second game in seven starts.

The Owls were paced in that contest by sophomore quarterback Matt Baker, who passed for 313 yards and three touchdowns. Baker's yardage tied a school record, and he only threw one pass in the entire fourth quarter.

The three touchdowns doubled his output for the whole year, giving him six on the season. He also tied his career high of 17 completions.

For his efforts, Baker was named Co-Player of the Week by the ECAC. Temple hosts the Pirates in a 1 p.m. contest Saturday at Veterans Stadium.

The game will be the seventh in the series, one of the few among the 1988 opponents in which East Carolina leads, 4-2.

East Carolina won last year's meeting, in Greenville, 31-26. The series includes one forfeit victory awarded the Pirates this year after it was discovered that former Owl Paul Palmer had signed with an agent prior to his senior year.

Temple opened the year with a new offense, the multi-bone. But two weeks ago, the Owls return to the more traditional I formation, with a little wishbone mixed in and it resulted in an improved showing for Temple.

Against the University of California, the Owls had what was at that time their best offensive output of the year, but were done in by six turnovers in a 31-14 loss.

Baker completed 17 of 29 passes in the game. Two of his touchdowns went to split end Rich Drayton, who went 67 yards with one and 74 yards with the other. He finished the game

Rose Is Ready For Title Showdown

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The long-awaited showdown for the Big East Conference title has finally arrived.

J.H. Rose High School will battle Elizabeth City Northeastern High School for all the marbles Friday night at Percy Daniels Field.

The Rampants enter the game 9-0 overall and 6-0 in the league, while the Eagles are 8-1 on the year and 6-0 in the conference.

The Rampants will be without the services of starting tailback Tim Moore, who has rushed for over 1,100 yards this season, and starting fullback Tony Williams. Both received first-half injuries last week in a 30-14 win over Wilson Hunt.

"We'll miss a competitor like Timmy," Rose head coach Chip Williams said. "(Backups) Maurice (Hines) and Billy (Carr) will need to be consistent like they were Friday night."

The two backs combined for over 130 yards last week and a touchdown when they came off the bench to spell the injured Moore and Williams.

"Our offense will have to be pretty much like last Friday," Williams said. "We'll need to be well-rounded on offense. We'll need to run well and pass well to be successful."

"They're (Northeastern) a good team," Rose head coach Chip Williams said. "They wouldn't have the record they do if they weren't. They always seem to start slow and play well at the end of the season. Last year (in a 3-7 year) they played us as hard as anyone. We won with a kickoff return (21-14)."

Williams said he felt the kicking game could once again be the deciding factor in the game.

"It'll probably be the turning point," Williams said. "I think we're capable of winning, we're just going to have to come through. Last year they went down in for a score on their first drive and had the momen-

William and Mary Rolls Over ECU 4-0

William and Mary handed East Carolina a 4-0 defeat Wednesday that closed out the Pirates' regular season at 2-15-2 overall and 0-7 in the Colonial Athletic Association.

William and Mary moves to 10-4-4 and 4-1-2 in the CAA. ECU was outshot 35-4. ECU goalie Mac Kendall had 18 saves for the Pirates.

Small Gets 4-A Prep Football Honor

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Running back Sebastian Small of E.E. Smith High School in Fayetteville has been named the North Carolina High School Athletic Association Drug Emporium 4-A football player of the week for his performance against Douglas Byrd.

Small ran for 275 yards in 29 carries, including a 97-yard touchdown run, and scored a total of three touchdowns as Smith defeated Byrd 31-14 Friday. Quin Slade of Western Alamance was named the 3-A player of the week for leading his team to a 37-21 victory over Bartlett Yancey to wrap up a playoff spot. He carried 29 times for 250 yards and scored three touchdowns just days after racking 234 yards in a postponed game the Monday before.

In the 2-A slot, Freddy Burlson of Mitchell was named for his two-way performance in his teams 28-16 victory over Madison. As a running back, he carried for 175 yards and scored touchdowns on runs of 57 and 27 yards. From his linebacker spot, he was in on 10 tackles, recovered a fumble and had two quarterback sacks.

Wide receiver Keith Lee of North Moore put his name in the unofficial state record book by catching four touchdown passes in North Moore's 40-14 victory over Union Pines. He was named the 1-A player of the week for catching six passes for 164 yards, setting a school mark with his four touchdowns in a single game, punting for a 41.5 yard average and returning a punt 40 yards.

Cureton Recovers, Makes The Final Roster

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — The Charlotte Hornets filled the 12th spot on their regular-season roster with a familiar face Wednesday.

Power forward Earl Cureton recovered sufficiently from a hamstring pull that the Hornets reversed their decision to place him on injured reserve.

Hornets coach Dick Harter said Tuesday that Cureton would join Ralph Lewis and Dell Curry on an injured list that would keep Cureton out the first five games. However, Cureton practiced Tuesday and Wednesday at close to full speed, according to team trainer Terry Kofler. That prompted the turn-about, though Kofler said Cureton is still questionable for Friday's opener here against the Cleveland Cavaliers.

With Cureton on the opening-day roster, the Hornets have filled out their 12-man NBA limit. So if the Hornets want to acquire a player off the waiver wire, they would have to cut a player or place one on injured reserve.

That's not an immediate problem since Hornets vice president Carl Scheer said none of Wednesday's cuts aroused his interest.

However, on Nov. 13, Lewis, who has a bruised thigh, is expected to return from injured reserve. If no other player qualifies for injured reserve at that point, the Hornets will be forced to reconsider their lineup.

Lewis and Cureton have guaranteed contracts, as do 10 other Hornets. The only two players on the active list without guaranteed deals are Robert Reid, the starting shooting guard, and Brian Rowsom, a 6-10 power forward who will probably back up Kurt Rambis Friday.

Then, in December, Curry returns from a broken wrist. Curry, the Hornets' top pick in the expansion draft, will force the Hornets to make another deal whether it be waive or trade.

Marathon Oil Edges Past N.C. State

RALEIGH (AP) — Todd May's rebound basket with 18 seconds left lifted Marathon Oil to a 104-103 exhibition victory over North Carolina State Wednesday.

May, a Pikeville College graduate, finished with a team-high 24 points and led a furious second-half rally that saw Marathon Oil erase a 25-point deficit. The 6-foot-9 May scored inside to put the Oilers ahead 102-97.

Wolfpack guards Chris Corchiani and Rodney Monroe made consecutive 3-point baskets to give the Wolfpack a 103-102 lead with 33 seconds left.

After May's basket, Wolfpack center Avie Lester missed a jumper from 18 feet as time expired.

N.C. State shot 61 percent from the field in the first half and took a 57-44 halftime lead. A 15-3 spurt at the start of the second half gave the Wolfpack a 72-47 lead with 16:40 left.

The Oilers charged back and cut the deficit to 14 points with 14:07 left. Marathon Oil kept chipping away and took its first lead of the game at 90-88 on a three-point play by May with 6:53 left.

Chucky Brown led the Wolfpack with 22 points.

Raleigh Group Wants University Games

RALEIGH (AP) — The Raleigh City Council has given its backing to a local group's effort to woo the 1993 World University Games to the Triangle.

H. Hill Carrow Jr., president of North Carolina Amateur Sports, told the council Tuesday that the group hopes to be selected as the U.S. nominee and then to compete against international cities for the right to host the event. NCAS organized the 1987 U.S. Olympic Festival, held in North Carolina.

"I think we have a good chance as any to prevail," Carrow told the council before it approved a resolution of support.

Seven thousand athletes and officials from 130 countries would take part in the World University Games, which would require the facilities of eight Triangle universities. The games would include events in 11 sports, including basketball, swimming, gymnastics, and diving. The 1987 World University Games, held in Zagreb, Yugoslavia, attracted 5,500 athletes from 121 nations.

Carrow told the council that NCAS would take its bid to the U.S. Collegiate Sports Council next month. That group would then select a U.S. city which would compete with cities from other nations for the chance to host the games.

Minneapolis-St. Paul and Buffalo also are vying for the U.S. nomination, Carrow said.

Top-Seeded Cavs Open ACC Soccer Tourney

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Regular-season champion Virginia will have a first round bye in the second Atlantic Coast Conference soccer tournament, which begins Thursday at Clemson.

The first round of the single-elimination tournament will feature No. 2 seed Wake Forest against No. 7 Duke, No. 4 North Carolina State against No. 5 Maryland and third-seeded North Carolina versus No. 6 Clemson.

Virginia will meet the winner Friday of the N.C. State-Maryland match, while the winners of the other two matches Thursday will battle in the nightcap Friday.

The championship match will be held Sunday afternoon. North Carolina won last year's inaugural tournament in Durham, N.C.

McMahon May Be Back In Four Weeks

CHICAGO (AP) — Chicago Bears quarterback Jim McMahon may recover from an injury to his right knee sooner than expected and be ready to play within four or five weeks, team officials say.

"The knee still hurts, but he feels better," Bears trainer Fred Caito said Tuesday after McMahon was examined by team doctor Clarence Fossier. "He can go to work immediately. He should be able to start swimming and working on the stationary bicycle in seven to 10 days."

Originally, doctors feared McMahon would be out for the rest of the season, but the prognosis has improved.

Walt Weiss

Oakland's Weiss Named American's Top Rookie

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAKLAND, Calif. — Walt Weiss hated his label as a rookie all season. Now, the slick-fielding shortstop has something to show for it.

Weiss followed in the sizable footsteps of Jose Canseco and Mark McGwire on Wednesday in becoming the Oakland Athletics' third straight winner of the American League Rookie of the Year award.

It's an honor the 24-year-old Weiss never gave a thought to in spring training. After all, he reasoned, Canseco had hit 33 home runs and McGwire 49 in their first seasons.

"I really didn't think about being rookie of the year early in the season," said Weiss, standing next to life-size cutouts of the two A's sluggers at the Oakland Coliseum. "I was saying 'If they are the standards for rookie of the year, I ain't got a prayer.'"

As it turned out, he was the answer to the prayers of A's executives. They had gambled last December that he was good enough to justify trading away Alfredo Griffin in the deal that landed pitcher Bob Welch from the Los Angeles Dodgers.

He anchored the best fielding team in Oakland history — the A's fielding percentage of .983 was third best in the majors — and had a streak of 58 straight errorless games in the second half of the season. He also hit .281 over the final two months to finish at .250 with three homers and 39 runs batted in, and had some spectacular plays and a game-winning hit in the playoff sweep of Boston.

"With all the good things he's done this season, sometimes I forget he's just a rookie," veteran third baseman Carney Lansford said at the end of the A's AL pennant-winning season. "He sure doesn't play like a rookie, he plays like a 10-year veteran."

Weiss was a runaway winner in the voting by members of the Baseball Writers Association of America. He received 103 points and 17 first-place votes from a panel of 28 writers, two from each AL city.

Right-handed pitcher Bryan Harvey of the California Angels was second with 49 points, one ahead of infielder Jody Reed of the Boston Red Sox. Right-hander Don August of Milwaukee was a distant fourth, followed by outfielder Dave Gallagher of Chicago and right-hander Melido Perez of the White Sox.

"I had a good idea the whole time that Weiss was going to win it," Harvey, 25, said in a telephone interview with The Charlotte Observer from his mother-in-law's home near Newton, N.C. "He played short, and it's a hard position. ... so did Reed at Boston."

"I thought it was going to be between those two guys," Harvey said.

The award made the A's the only AL team ever to have three consecutive winners since the inception of the award in 1949. In the National League, the Los Angeles Dodgers had four in a row from 1979-82 with Rick Sutcliffe, Steve Howe, Fernando Valenzuela and Steve Sax.

Oakland also is only the second team since the start of divisional play in 1969 to have won a pennant with a rookie playing shortstop all season. The Cincinnati Reds were the first with Dave Concepcion in 1970.

"He has gone through pressure that neither Canseco nor McGwire had to go through," said A's general manager Sandy Alderson.

Terps, Pack And Tigers Resume Run For ACC Grid Championship

By Tom Foreman Jr. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The three-way chase for the Atlantic Coast Conference title — and an apparent two-team run at the Florida Citrus Bowl — resume this weekend with No. 17 Clemson, Maryland and North Carolina State all gunning for the prize.

All three teams are 4-1 in ACC play coming into the stretch run. The Tigers and the Wolfpack have chances at improving those marks on Saturday while the Terrapins face Penn State.

In the race for the Florida Citrus Bowl, the league berth will be awarded to the highest ranked team in the event of a tie for the championship. Of the three, Clemson is the only team appearing in the top 20 this week.

Clemson, 6-2, meets North Carolina in Death Valley, and Coach Danny Ford doesn't want to relax as his team tries for another league title.

"All you got to do is watch their people," Ford says of the Tar Heels, 1-7 and 1-3.

Ford also thinks the Tar Heels are playing the type of football they used under former Coach Dick Crum.

"It seems to me that they've gone back to more of the Coach Crum philosophy of running the football and trying to mash you and trap you inside," Ford said. "They try to come off the football and smush you."

For the Tar Heels to generate any offense Saturday, they will need to get as much out of tailback Kennard Martin as possible. Torin Dorn, who shares time with Martin, took a helmet in the lower back in the loss to Maryland and will not make the trip to Clemson.

North Carolina safety Dan Vooletich has back and neck injuries and linebacker Chuck Sledge has a strained neck muscle and are doubtful for the game. In all, 23 players are injured.

"We're in the worst shape we've been in all season," said Crum's successor, Mack Brown. "All we did Monday was watch film of Clemson, and that might have been a mistake, too."

N.C. State goes to Virginia intent on snapping a two-game losing streak in the series, and Wake Forest is at Duke in other league action. In addition to the Maryland-Penn State game, Virginia Military Institute is at Georgia Tech.

The Wolfpack, 6-2, had a shot at the 1986 ACC title before reaching Charlottesville, where Virginia ended their hopes with a 20-16 victory. Last year, the Cavaliers ran up a 24-0 lead before winning 34-31. This weekend, Coach Dick Sheridan says the Wolfpack must achieve two things, and one of which will be to dismiss the 23-7 loss to No. 15 South Carolina.

"It's very important to out it behind us. We can't let the outcome of the last game affect the outcome of the next one," Sheridan says.

"The Virginia game, practically speaking, has more importance. Hopefully, what the game means will bring out the best in us. We'll need to be at our best in all facets of the game," he said.

Virginia is clinging to dreams of a winning season. The Cavaliers are 4-4 and 2-2, getting back to a .500 record overall by downing Virginia Tech 16-10.

Wake Forest dropped to 4-4 after losing a 38-21 contest to Clemson and is 2-3 in the ACC. Duke snapped a two-game losing streak in front of a

Elkins Hopes To Scare Secondary On Saturday

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — On Halloween, Mike Elkins showed up at a costume party masquerading as Freddy Krueger, the frightening figure in the movie "Nightmare on Elm Street." He did it for some much needed levity.

This weekend, the Wake Forest quarterback will try to be himself again and continue to scare opposing secondaries. As Elkins will attest, November is a make-or-break month for the 4-4 Deacons.

"We've played so up and down, up and down, and we've just made big mistakes that have kept us out of ball games," Elkins says. "But we can still reach our goals."

"They are to have a winning season, and no Wake team has had back-to-back winning seasons since (1970-'71). We also wanted to equal or better last season's record (7-4). And if we can win our last three games, I think we would have a better shot at getting a bowl bid than we did last year, when we were passed over. But our backs are to the wall."

The Demon Deacons have followed a pattern of winning two, losing two, winning two and losing two and now stand at a crossroads with Duke, Georgia Tech and Appalachian State remaining.

Ditka's Status Is Up In The Air

Next Few Days Will Determine When He Will Return To The Sidelines

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAKE FOREST, Ill. — Doctors say the next several days will tell how soon Mike Ditka will be allowed to resume his coaching duties after suffering a mild heart attack at the Chicago Bears' training facility.

Nursing supervisor Joan Miteff said early today that Ditka's condition remained unchanged from Wednesday — serious but stable.

But Ditka's wife Diana told reporters, "he's doing fantastic," after she left Lake Forest Hospital Wednesday afternoon. "He's too ornery," she said.

"Barring anything unforeseen, we expect him to recover nicely," Dr. Jay Alexander, a cardiologist, said Wednesday. "The next several days will tell us how quickly we'll let him get back on the field."

Ditka, 49, complained of chest pains early Wednesday after his daily workout, assistant coaches said. They brought Ditka to the hospital, and he was alert and conscious when he got there shortly after 8:30 a.m., Alexander said.

"He is very stable and doing extremely well," the cardiologist said.

Ditka will require hospitalization for at least five to seven days, Alexander said. He said the coach was given medicine to open a blocked artery, and the chest pains stopped when the medication was given.

Alexander said the area of Ditka's heart involved in the attack appeared to be extremely small and confined to the bottom wall of the heart.

"And if that stays approximately the way it is, the prognosis is very good," he said.

The cardiologist also said he did not believe Ditka's workout caused the heart attack.

"It would have happened anyway," he said.

Bears president Michael McCaskey said he would name an acting head coach later in the week.

In keeping with his reputation for being headstrong — both as an NFL coach and player — McCaskey said Ditka resisted the first attempts by the coaches to get medical attention, but finally agreed to go to the hospital.

Ditka also indicated he hadn't lost his sense of humor when he and Alexander were checking out an ultrasound monitor that shows the heart rate, the Chicago Tribune reported today.

"Gee, I see my heart," Ditka said. "A lot of people don't think I have one."

But co-workers, family members and team players all said they hoped Ditka would be back on his feet soon.

"Mike Ditka has been the person that brings this team together," said Emery Moorehead, who plays Ditka's old position of tight end. "Obviously, we want to have a big win on Sunday ... and show coach Ditka that we can win the game the way we should have done last week."

The Bears, 7-2 after a 30-7 loss to the New England Patriots last weekend, host the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, 2-7, on Sunday.

"Our prayers are going to be with coach Ditka right now," said linebacker Mike Singletary. "The No. 1 factor and priority for him is to get well."

McCaskey said a game plan for Sunday was nearly completed. Ditka increasingly has turned over play-calling responsibilities to offensive coordinator Ed Hughes and his defensive counterpart, Vince Tobin.

Alexander said he will not let the often excitable Ditka watch the contest on television.

Club spokesman Bryan Harlan said Ditka was getting dressed to make an appearance at a rally for George Bush at Stevenson High School in nearby Prairie View when he suffered chest pains.

Assistant coach Johnny Roland said Ditka had suffered similar pains Monday, but apparently did nothing about them. But Roland and another assistant, Steve Kazor, insisted they would take him to the hospital Wednesday.

"It hit me when he said 'chest pains,'" Kazor told the Tribune.

"Johnny and I were a little adamant by that time."

Ditka has spent 27 years in pro football, and was inducted into the NFL Hall of Fame earlier this year.

Ditka began his pro career as a tight end with the Bears in 1961, when he was named rookie of the year. He went on to win selection to the next five Pro Bowls.

He was traded to the Philadelphia Eagles in 1967 and then to the Dallas Cowboys, where he finished his playing career after 12 years.

The native of Aliquippa began his coaching career with the Cowboys and stayed there nine years before being named head coach of the Bears in 1982.

He led the Bears to the Super Bowl in 1985 and entered this season with a 61-27 mark, including seven postseason appearances.

The cardiologist who treated the Chicago Bears coach following a mild heart attack Wednesday said both factors — Ditka's always-in-a-hurry personality and his quick-release temper — could help ensure that Ditka's recovery will be as complete as it is quick.

SLED Investigators Continue To Look Into Chaikin Controversy

By Rick Scoppe
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Investigators have questioned past and present South Carolina football coaches and players in their probe into allegations of drug use by former players, Solicitor James Anders said Wednesday.

Meanwhile, the attorney representing former South Carolina football player Tommy Chaikin says he's going to meet with Anders on Friday to discuss a State Law Enforcement Division probe that stems from allegations by Chaikin.

Chaikin, who played at South Carolina from 1983 to 1987, said in a recent article in Sports Illustrated that he used steroids for three years and other players used steroids and other drugs, such as cocaine and LSD.

"We're interviewing people presently, students, ex-coaches, all sorts of people," Anders said in an interview. "And, we should be finished ... with our interviews I think sometime next week so we can get everybody updated on where we are."

Anders said both present coaches and players were being interviewed, but he declined to identify them.

"I'd rather not say," Anders said. Based on the probe at this point, Anders said he wasn't sure how serious the steroid and drug problem might have been on the football team.

"It's hard to say. The problem certainly exists, but I'm not certain it exists to the degree that Mr. Chaikin has stated. And, of course, he at this point has still not voluntarily talked with us," Anders said.

"So, I think the fact that he has not come forward is indicative of something, I'm not at this point quite sure what. But he's certainly not anxious to talk to us," Anders said.

Chaikin's attorney, Lawrence Richter of Charleston, said he would travel to Columbia on Friday to talk to Anders and other officials involved in the investigation.

"Decisions will be made about what Mr. Chaikin's position will be after that," Richter said during a telephone interview. "Tommy Chaikin wants to do what's right and is going to do what's right."

"We have to look at all the facts to determine where right lies exactly. If that makes any sense to you."

Richter said he plans to meet with Chaikin in Washington after talking to Anders. "Probably by the middle of next week," he said, "we'll be in a lot better posture to know what's what about it."

Last week, Chaikin told The Greenville News he would cooperate with the SLED investigation. But Richter declined to say specifically whether Chaikin still was willing to be interviewed.

"In all seriousness, he only wants to do what's right. And he's wanting for me or someone else to help him understand how this process works and what is fairly required of him," the attorney said.

"But I'm not able to commit for him one way or the other right now," he said. "He hasn't decided what he's going to do."

SLED Chief Robert Stewart announced Oct. 20 that his agency was going to conduct a preliminary inquiry into Chaikin's allegations. At the time, Stewart said he expected the probe would take about two weeks.

The probe, which was begun at Anders' request, has taken longer than was expected partly because of the number of people interviewed, according to the solicitor.

"It is taking longer than I expected," Anders said. "Of course, we had to go as far away as Texas and other places to interview people. We've been doing extensive interviews."

"We want to be fair all the way around. If it's a major problem, we want to take care of it. If it's not a major problem, we don't want to disrupt the entire university. We want to do what ever is right under the circumstances."

Anders said the "ultimate decision" is his on whether to expand the preliminary inquiry into a full-blown investigation. But Anders said Stewart and his investigators would share in the decision.

with six receptions for 184 yards, the yardage a Temple record.

Temple was also helped along by fine kickoff returns by Mike Pals and Fred Gunter. Pals is averaging 25.2 yards a return, while Gunter has a 23.0 average.

For the season, Baker has connected on 60 of 114 passes for 858 yards with five interceptions.

Drayton is the leading receiver with 17 for 310 yards and two touchdowns. Pals, the flanker, has 13 catches for 297 yards while end Maurice Johnson has caught 11 for 127 yards. Back Ventres Stevenson had 10 for 76 yards.

The leading rusher for the Owls is halfback Todd McNair with 109 carries for 343 yards and two scores. Halfback Nelson Herrera had 60 carries for 245 yards while Stevenson had 37 carries for 147 yards.

Punter Ed Liberati has also done a good job for the Owls this fall, averaging 39.5 yards a kick.

The leading scorer is kicker Bill Wright with five of 11 field goals and nine of nine extra points, a total of 24.

Overall, the Owls are rushing for 113.3 yards a game and passing for 161.6. They have allowed 381.4 yards a game rushing and 211.9 passing.

Temple and East Carolina have played only one mutual foe this season, Syracuse. The Owls fell to the Orangemen, 31-21, in the opening game of the season, while East Carolina fell to Syracuse, 38-14.

D.H. Conley

D.H. Conley is in need of gut-check as it heads into its final regular-season football contest against East Carteret.

The winner of Friday's game at Beaufort gets a bid to the state 3-A playoff as the Coastal Conference's third-seeded team, while the loser packs up the bags and calls it a year.

Both teams enter the game with 6-3 overall records and 3-2 marks in the contest.

The Vikings dropped to 3-2 in the conference last Friday with a disappointing 14-6 loss to Washington. In the loss, the Vikings penetrated inside the Pam Pack 25-yard line seven times and managed to score only once. Head coach Steve Craft is hoping his team can bounce back in time for the regular-season finale.

"We've got to come back and get mentally ready to play," Craft said. "We're going to need a super week of preparation."

Craft also hopes to re-establish a rushing attack this week. Last week, the normally potent running game of Conley was held well under 100 yards on the night.

"One of the big things we want to do this week is establish a running game," Craft said. "We feel like we're going up against the top defense in the conference, so we're going to need our running game, passing game and every bullet in the gun and then some."

"The team was way down emotionally following the loss last week," Craft said. "But they're so young that we're looking for them to bounce back this week."

Celts, Knicks Showing New Looks

By Bill Barnard
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Boston Celtics, under new leadership, and the New York Knicks, with some new muscle in Charles Oakley, help the NBA open its 1988-89 season Friday night.

The game at Boston pairs the Celtics, winners of the Atlantic Division for five straight years, and new coach Jimmy Rodgers against the Knicks, who won 60 percent of their games in the second half of last season and made the playoffs for first time since 1984.

"I look for it to be a smooth transition," said Rodgers, who is replacing K.C. Jones as Boston's coach. "The system we use will be similar because I was one of those who put in that system."

Oakley was traded to New York from Chicago, where he had more rebounds than any player in the NBA the last two seasons. To get the 6-foot-9 Oakley, the Knicks gave up Bill Cartwright, who was Patrick Ewing's backup center.

"When I realized we had a chance to get him, I was so excited I couldn't sleep," Knicks coach Rick Pitino said of Oakley. "We now have two fear-

"I like hitting people," Oakley said. "I've never been afraid of contact. I'm getting more respect around the league all the time, and one of the main reasons is because I play hard. You get respect in this league by playing hard every night."

Other opehers include Atlanta at New Jersey, the Los Angeles Clippers at Philadelphia, Cleveland at Charlotte, Milwaukee at Indiana, the Los Angeles Lakers at Dallas, Detroit at Chicago, Houston at Denver, Seattle at Utah and Phoenix at Portland.

Charlotte will be playing its first game ever, while Miami will play host to the Clippers in its expansion opener on Saturday.

Rodgers said that he plans to use more transition in the Celtics offense and to give more rest to his veteran starting lineup of Larry Bird, Kevin McHale, Robert Parish, Danny Ainge and Dennis Johnson.

"It's not that we didn't run before, but you have to recognize that there is more of an emphasis on transition around the league," Rodgers said. "But you'll still see a team-oriented Celtics style."

Inexperienced and injury-plagued Eddie Lee Wilkins is Ewing's No. 1 backup now, although Pitino plans on occasion to use a small front line with 6-9 Sidney Green at center.

The Detroit-Chicago game pairs the Eastern Conference champion Pistons and the Bulls, who hope that Cartwright will give some scoring help inside to two-time scoring champion Michael Jordan. Second-year man Horace Grant will replace Oakley at forward.

"I don't know if we're better than the other teams, but I think we're deeper," said Pistons coach Chuck Daly, who added Darryl Dawkins and rookies Fennis Dembo and Mike Williams to an already deep team. "But having depth can create problems with the starters who want to keep their minutes."

Chicago coach Doug Collins said Cartwright will add another benefit besides points.

"Cartwright is great at drawing fouls and getting the opposing big man in foul trouble," Collins said.

The Lakers-Mavericks game is a rematch of the seven-game Western Conference final, Los Angeles won that series beating Detroit in seven games for their second straight championship.

The Lakers have added free agent Orlando Woolridge and rookie David Rivers to their formidable cast, giving Coach Pat Riley a chance to give his veterans a rest, especially 41-year-old Kareem Abdul-Jabbar in his 20th season.

"For eight or nine years, we have been a seven-man rotation team," Riley said. "With the addition of Orlando Woolridge, the development of Tony Campbell and drafting David Rivers, this could be the deepest bench the Lakers have had in nine years."

Dallas coach John MacLeod also is looking forward to the season.

"This group is becoming mentally tough, and winning four road games in the playoffs was an indication of that," MacLeod said. "Roy Tarpley, Detlef Schrempf and Derek Harper are three players who still have their best basketball ahead of them. At the same time, we have Mark Aguirre, Rolando Blackman, Brad Davis, James Donaldson and Sam Perkins who are reaching the prime of their careers."

Lukas Is Hoping For More Success

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — It's D. Wayne Lukas' quantity vs. Shug McGaughey's quality in Saturday's Breeders' Cup.

Lukas, who had 36 entries in the first four installments of horse racing's equivalent of a championship tournament, put 12 more names into the entry box for five different races as 78 horses were entered Wednesday for the seven races.

That gives him 30 more starters in the five-year history of the Breeders' Cup than runner-up Charlie Whittingham.

But McGaughey, who has had just four entries in the four previous Breeders' Cups, has three of the seven favorites among his five entries, two of them odds-on.

"You never know in this game, they may all tumble over a fence together," said McGaughey, whose best previous Breeders' Cup finish was a fourth by Classy Cathy in the 1986 Distaff.

"But right now, I feel like the luckiest guy in the world."

McGaughey's star is Personal Ensign, who is unbeaten in 12 starts and is trying to become the first American race horse in 80 years to finish her career unbeaten. She will be 2-5 on the morning line in the 1 1/8-mile Distaff, where her main challengers should be Lukas' Winning Colors, this year's Kentucky Derby winner and Whittingham's Goodbye Halo.

Beyond retiring unbeaten, the 4-year-old Personal Ensign will have another incentive — a battle for Horse of the Year honors with the 1987 Kentucky Derby winner Alysheba, who is the 6-5 favorite in the day's finale, the $3 million Classic at the classic distance of 1 1/4 miles. A victory for Alysheba, winner of six of eight starts this year, would put him past John Henry, the all-time leading money winner with $6,591,860.

McGaughey has another odds-on favorite in Easy Goer, 2-5 in the 1 1/16-mile Juvenile for 2-year-olds and his Mining is the early 2-1 favorite in the 6-furlong, $1 million sprint, despite breaking from the No. 13 post position. McGaughey's other two are the entry of Seeking The Gold and Personal Flag, full brother to Personal Ensign, who are 6-1 in the Classic.

Lukas has had his share of misfortune during his rise to the top of the racing world, like the sudden death of spectacular 2-year-old filly Landaluce in 1984.

But he is the undisputed ruler of the racing world — his more than $9 million in earnings this year is three times that of any other trainer and Winning Colors' Derby victory this year filled in the last major blank on his training record.

However, he has only one favorite Saturday ... or, make that five, his entry of five 2-year-olds in the $1 million Juvenile fillies, which was made 3-5 by oddsmaker Mike Battaglia "on sheer volume alone."

and that's the way we wanted it," Harvey said. "We'd rather for their shots to come from around the 40 like they did tonight. When you let a team get shots inside the 18 — like the three near the end were — then some are going to go in because the goalie just can't cover every angle."

New Hanover scored what would have been the tying goal in the contest just after time had expired in the first half. Midfielder Chris Turner knocked in the shot, but the officials ruled that the clock had run out.

"I don't argue with the call at all," Rhodes said. "We had our chances to win and we just didn't make it happen."

Contract Could Be A Key

was just one of the things necessary in building a winning tradition, but he added that he couldn't comment directly on ECU's situation since he hadn't talked to anyone from the school.

"I don't know that because I haven't talked to them yet," he said. "I know what it takes to get the job done. Maybe they have that. I know what tools I need to get a job done."

"Number one, you have to pay coaches. You have to have the money to go out and get the players. They have the facility. They are building a new (sports medicine) building. The money has to be there for the program in terms of teaching aids, equipment. It all comes down to dollars."

Stevens has been a quarterback coach at Miami for the past eight seasons and during that time has tutored the likes of Jim Kelly, Bernie Kosar, Vinny Testaverde — all starting quarterbacks in the National Football League — and present UM star Steve Walsh.

He said he was interested in the ECU position and felt there was a lot of potential within the program.

"I think they have a nice program there," he said. "They're building a new facility (sports medicine building). Basically, they have all the tools that you would need."

"It's what you have to offer academically. It takes work and bringing in football players. You have to sell the school, the program and the coaches. You just work at it and bring in better and better players each year."

"If you want to win with the leaders in country, you have to recruit the better ballplayers. They have a lot to offer. You just have to work at it. If it's done right it can be done anywhere."

Orgel said ECU has enough positives to be successful.

"I think you can compete. It's an attractive schedule," he said. "They're upgrading the facilities. Given the necessities that you have to have to recruit I think you can compete with any school in that state. They've got a good academic school."

"All the positive things that you need to have an outstanding program are in Greenville. When I was there we had a very successful program. I'd like it to be there."

Others considered in the running are two former ECU assistants, Auburn assistant coach Wayne Hall, who coached under Pat Dye, and University of Missouri defensive coordinator Carl Reece, who coached under Clarence Stasavich, Mike McGee and Sonny Randle.

Other assistant coaches that are possibilities are Oklahoma offensive coordinator Jim Donnan, a Burlington native, and Jerry Sandusky and defensive coordinator at Penn State.

Three head coaches at Division I-AA schools, Marshall's George Chaump, Appalachian State's Sparky Woods and William and Mary's Jimmy Laycock, are rumored to be candidates. All three, however, said they couldn't comment on any other jobs during the season.

South Carolina Claims To Be Clean Of Steroids Now

By Rick Scoppa

COLUMBIA, S.C. — No athlete has tested positive for steroids since the University of South Carolina instituted its new drug-testing program in April, officials said Wednesday.

However, officials would not say how many athletes have been tested for steroids under the "Wellness Program," which was put in place after a task force's report in March that was highly critical of how the old drug-testing program was run.

Poles Give Warm Greeting To Margaret Thatcher Visit

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WARSAW, Poland — Margaret Thatcher, treading a delicate path between Poland's Communist leaders and restive opposition, was applauded warmly by a crowd of Poles today as she began a program of sightseeing and official talks.

The first British prime minister to visit this Soviet bloc country, Mrs. Thatcher was greeted with spontaneous applause by several hundred Poles after she laid a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Victory Square.

She was heading for her official car, but turned and went back to the crowd to shake a few hands before heading on to meet government officials.

Mrs. Thatcher was to have her first talks with Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski later in the day.

On Wednesday, the communist party chief issued a veiled warning to his British guest not to interfere in Poland's tense politics.

In the Baltic port of Gdansk, where Mrs. Thatcher planned to travel Friday for a meeting with Solidarity leader Lech Walesa, nearly the entire 10,000-member workforce of the Lenin shipyard rallied on Wednesday.

The workers vowed to fight the government's decision, announced Monday, to close the yard where Solidarity was born during a 1980 strike wave. Walesa even said his banned free trade union movement would work for the first time with its government-backed rival.

Mrs. Thatcher will be the first Western leader to make the symbolic trip to meet Walesa at his headquarters in Gdansk.

The government said Monday it planned to close the Lenin shipyard on Dec. 1 for economic reasons, though Walesa called the move an attempt to weaken Solidarity. The yard would be the first large enterprise shut down in a new government attempt to revive a limping economy.

Mrs. Thatcher, 63, was to tour the capital this afternoon, visit the grave of a pro-Solidarity priest murdered by secret police in 1984, and later attend a state banquet hosted by Jaruzelski.

The Conservative Party prime minister has been hailed by Poland's Communist leaders for her rigorous economic policies and by Solidarity for her outspoken anti-Communist views.

In a British television interview shortly before she flew to Warsaw on Wednesday, Jaruzelski said: "I hope Mrs. Thatcher will allow us to tackle our own problems in a sovereign way, using our own methods and instruments."

Mrs. Thatcher has indicated she would not interfere, but remains determined to encourage liberalization moves, a British official said.

In a meeting late Wednesday with the head of the Roman Catholic church in Poland, she told Cardinal Jozef Glemp she wanted "to encourage those wanting to move down the road to freedom, while not interfering in the internal affairs of Poland," said the British official. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

On Wednesday, after her arrival, she discussed Poland's dire economic problems with Prime Minister Mieczyslaw F. Rakowski. Mrs. Thatcher also met privately with academics and businessmen who are pressing for a greater role for private enterprise. State enterprises dominate Poland.

In brief public remarks afterwards, Mrs. Thatcher described the meeting at the British Embassy as "absolutely wonderful."

In Gdansk, Walesa appeared to rule out a protest strike over the announced shipyard closing, saying it "would only make matters worse."

Solidarity activists said the union, which in August backed Poland's worst strike wave since Solidarity was crushed in a December 1981 military crackdown, wanted to avoid a confrontation that might jeopardize the Thatcher visit.

U.N. Says Iran Stepped Up Executions As War Ebbed

By Peter James Spielmann
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — A U.N. report on human rights in Iran says "a renewed wave of executions" occurred about the same time the country's Islamic fundamentalist government agreed to a cease-fire with Iraq.

A copy of the report to the General Assembly, obtained Wednesday, calls for continued scrutiny of Iran's human rights practices, citing executions of political dissidents and other reports of abuses.

The first secretary of Iran's U.N. Mission, Amir Hossein Zamaninia, said the mission had seen the report and had no comment.

U.N. special representative Reynaldo Galindo Pohl of El Salvador said in his report, "A large number of prisoners, members of opposition groups, were executed during the months of July, August and early September 1988."

The cease-fire putting at least a temporary halt to a war that since 1980 has left at least 1 million dead and injured was signed Aug. 20 by Iran and Iraq.

Most of those executed since mid-summer were said to be members of the People's Mujahedeen, an outlawed opposition group, but the report said about 20 belonged to such other opposition groups as the Tudeh party, a Marxist organization, and the People's Fedayeen.

It did not say how many people had been put to death, but mentioned groups of executions cited in Iranian and other media from July through September that included 1,140 political executions and others for common crimes.

The Washington office of the People's Mujahedeen said there has been "a dramatic rise in political arrests, torture and executions in Iran" since September.

"Specifically, in the last three months alone, more than 10,000 persons have been arrested and thousands executed on the charge of opposition" to Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's regime, said a statement by spokesman Aladdin Touran distributed at U.N. headquarters.

The U.N. report notes that the executions followed a July 25-28 raid into Iran by National Liberation Army, the armed wing of the People's Mujahedeen.

It said persecution of Bahai worshippers appears to have decreased, although Iran's attitude toward members of the faith has not changed. Bahais are denied the right to practice their faith in Iran, and cannot obtain higher education or work for the government.

"By July 1988, a number of Bahais including some prominent members of the Bahai community who had been arrested, allegedly because of their faith, were released from prison and some prison sentences were reduced," the report said.

Galindo Pohl interviewed seven Bahais and nine sympathizers of the People's Mujahedeen who formerly lived in Iran in addition to obtaining written accounts and information from Iranian media, his report said.

The report noted Iran's contention that Islamic law may not match every tenet of international law and its disagreement with the principle that "adherence to international law is a must for every state."

Students Use Rocks, Bombs During Clash With Police In Seoul

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEOUL, South Korea — Thousands of radical students pelted riot police with firebombs and rocks today in Seoul and other cities, and demanded the arrest of former President Chun Doo-hwan on corruption charges.

It was the worst political clash in Seoul since major anti-American protests last summer. Many police officers and students suffered cuts and other injuries from firebombs and rocks, but there were no overall figures.

Police did not say if any protesters were arrested. In Seoul, about 3,000 students fought police in four areas near Chun's house in a fashionable residential suburb. Clashes were also reported in several provincial cities.

"Arrest Chun Doo-hwan. Punish (President) Roh Tae-woo," students in Seoul shouted as they hurled firebombs and repeatedly charged police despite a dense fog of tear gas.

About 9,000 police were posted along streets and alleyways leading to Chun's house to repel the protesters. Police used tear gas whenever students tried to break through their lines.

Traffic came to a standstill and most shops in the areas were closed as the fighting persisted for several hours. Many pedestrians wore gauze masks or put handkerchiefs over their noses to filter out the acrid tear gas.

In front of Sogang University at the center of Seoul clashes, about 700 students, brandishing hundreds of firebombs, repeatedly charged about 500 riot police who were blocking their march. Police retaliated with tear gas.

Firebombs exploded in showers of orange flames near or amidst columns of police, who deflected the missiles with shields and put out blazes with hand-carried extinguishers.

Several blocks away, near the house of opposition leader Kim Dae-jung, another group of 500 students battled police with rocks and firebombs. Kim's house is about eight blocks from Chun's.

In the southern city of Kwangju, about 2,000 students held campus rallies or took part in street protests to demand Chun be punished for alleged corruption and human rights violations.

In Chunchon and Ansung in eastern and central South Korea, dozens of students also attacked with firebombs a police station and a government party office. No injuries or major damage was reported.

News reports said thousands of students had held anti-Chun rallies on their campuses to prepare for a march on Chun's house. Fighting erupted at some schools as students tried to march out.

Anti-government demonstrations have been escalating in recent weeks as radical students organized "save-the-nation suicide squads" and threatened to raid Chun's house to press for his arrest and punishment.

The anti-Chun march was part of anti-government strategies by radical students, who are also calling for an ouster of President Roh.

They argue that hte Roh government is dragging its feet on a probe of alleged corruption and other scandals involving the ex-president, his family members and associates.

Roh and Chun, both former army generals, have been close friends since they were classmates at Korea Military Academy in the 1950s. Roh succeeded Chun, who stepped down following protests at the end of a seven-year term in February.

Chun has come under public fire for his alleged misuse of power during his tenure. One of his brothers, Chun Kyong-hwan, has been sentenced to seven years in prison for taking bribes and embezzling millions of dollars worth of official funds.

The bidding:

 2♥ Pass 2 NT Pass
 4♥ Pass Pass Pass

Opening lead: Four of ♥

By and large, it makes little difference whether you lead the four or the six of a suit. But once in a while it does matter, as this amusing hand illustrates.

South's opening two-bid was strong, although our heart opening has been a simple one heart opening. However, the final contract of four hearts was pretty close to par. It was just a pity that the only values in the North hand were wasted.

West had an unattractive choice of opening leads. He did not want to lead from any of his honors, so he decided on a trump. Had he selected the six of hearts, this hand would never have seen the light of day. Declarer would have had to play everything out of his hand and, as long as West rose with the ace of clubs on the first lead of the suit, the defenders would make a spade, a club and two diamond tricks for down one.

Unfortunately, West led his low heart. Dummy's five was played perforce, and to everyone's surprise declarer found he was on the table. All was not yet well. Declarer led the jack of diamonds, and when East played low he was faced with a guess—should he run the jack or go up with the king.

There was one slight pointer to the winning play. Since declarer could easily have a singleton king of diamonds, East might have risen with the ace if he held that card. Relying on his judgment, declarer played low, and he was delighted to find West had to win the trick with the ace.

Declarer ended up losing just one trick in each side suit. Have you ever noticed how often it is that when someone gets a lucky break, he succeeds in cashing in on it?

Turner TV Network Opens Film Study With Westerns

By Jerry Buck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — The Western put Hollywood into the movie business and kept it there, consistently pulling audiences into theaters over the decades. It's therefore fitting that "The Story of Hollywood," a new series starting Saturday on Turner Network Television, opens with homage to Western and gangster films. Future episodes will look at war movies, B movies, blockbusters, the coming of sound, Hollywood and sex, the communist scare of the 1950s, "the dream factory" and Hollywood today. In 1903, only two years after the real event, "The Great Train Robbery" celebrated Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid in a 12-minute movie, the longest motion picture ever. In 1969, "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid," starring Paul Newman and Robert Redford, enhanced the legend and won four Oscars. It was another Western, "The Squaw Man" in 1914, that settled the movie industry in Hollywood. The Cecil B. de Mille feature not only brought other filmmakers west but for the first time also gave the Western a seriousness beyond the Saturday morning shoot 'em ups. Burt Reynolds is host of the Hollywood history series, which was produced by the British Broadcasting Co. in association with TNT. TNT is the new cable network started by entrepreneur Ted Turner to showcase the huge library of MGM movies he owns, plus original movies and specials made for the network.

Gangster films, which cast such stars as Edward G. Robinson, James Cagney and Humphrey Bogart as anti-heroes, were a reflection of "the cynicism and desperation" of the Depression era of the 1930s, the series says. Later, with the repeal of Prohibition, the G-man became the new hero. Movies like "The Naked City" in 1948 brought realism to crime films, while "Bonnie and Clyde" was the first anti-establishment crime movie and "The Godfather" used the world of crime as a metaphor for American life. Hollywood, fearing the loss of its European market, held off supporting the Allies in World War II until Pearl Harbor. Thereafter, the film industry threw itself wholeheartedly into support of the Allied cause. Movies backed the war effort at the front, at sea, in the air, behind enemy lines, and at the home front. The series also looks at the rise of the director as the dominant figure in filmmaking, the crumbling of the big studios, the communist scare of the 1950s, the new generation of school-trained moviemakers and the soaring costs of making feature films. From the beginning, Hollywood battled the censors. Sex attracted audiences, but it also attracted moralists determined to keep sex out of the movies. A 1903 epic called "Dolorita's Passion Dance" was the first movie to come under attack by the censors. Mae West's ribald comedies are credited with saving Paramount from bankruptcy, but they also inspired formation of the Roman Catholic Church's League of Decency. The studios were forced to set up their own system of self-censorship through the Production Code. The industry adopted more lenient movie ratings with a new age of permissiveness in the late 1960s.

If some of the movie titles seem unfamiliar, it's because BBC has used the English titles. "Ride the High Country," for instance, is called "Guns in the Afternoon." The series will unfold over five consecutive Saturdays, with each episode divided into two one-hour parts. This Saturday, the story of the Western is followed by one on gangster films. It's an affectionate, largely uncritical survey. It offers more old footage than insight, but whether you're a movie buff or just a casual viewer, it's worth a look. It includes a lot of historical film, plus generous clips from movies and interviews with moviemakers. Director Richard Brooks, for instance, explains how gangster films evolved from melodramas to dramas. "The difference," he explains, "is that if you point a gun at someone and it misfires, that's melodrama. If you point a gun at somebody then can't pull the trigger, that's drama." The first all-talking picture was "Lights of New York" in 1928, in which a chorus girl became involved with gangsters. The reviews called it "primitive" and "crude," but it has historical relevance.

Robinson Honored For Songs

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Singer-songwriter Smokey Robinson received the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers Founders Award for his prolific career that produced such hits as "You've Really Got a Hold on Me." Previous winners of ASCAP's highest award, which was presented Wednesday, include Bob Dylan, Stevie Wonder, and Jule Styne. Many of Robinson's most familiar hits were written for himself or other artists at Motown, where he was one of the key hitmakers during the 1960s. ASCAP President Morton Gould called Robinson "one of the most prolific and influential figures in pop music." Among the hit songs that Robinson wrote, and in some cases, performed, are "Shop Around," "My Girl," "The Tracks of My Tears," "My Guy," "Ooh, Baby, Baby," and "The Way You Do The Things You Do."

'L.A. Law' Actor Larry Drake Learns From Lessons Taught By Character

By Diane Haltham
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

HOLLYWOOD — When Larry Drake was cast last season as "L.A. Law's" mentally retarded office boy, he befriended a 29-year-old retarded man who lives in a board-and-care home in nearby Malibu. Through observing him, Drake was able to add a dose of reality to his portrayal of the sympathetic Benny Stulwicz, the voice of honesty, warmth and common sense in the slick, upscale world of MacKenzie, Brackman, Chaney and Kuzak. Gentle Benny went on to become a surprise favorite on the NBC drama — so much so that Drake becomes an "L.A. Law" regular with a four-year contract this season. In the season premiere Thursday night, Benny will try to vote for the first time.

The role also netted the 39-year-old actor an Emmy Award and an official commendation from the Association for Retarded Citizens.

But Drake and the young man are not friends anymore — and therein lies a lesson that Drake hopes will also find its way into the series. Although Drake and his friend at first were a popular interview team as the Benny character began to take off, Drake said that the man reacted badly when the press began to lose interest in him and focused on Drake alone. The actor said that because of the man's mental handicap, Drake was unable to make him understand that Drake could not be responsible for bringing him back into the spotlight. The man continued to call him as often as five times a week, Drake said, and so he regretfully ended the friendship.

In a recent conversation, the Oklahoma native said he hoped that telling of the rift would not brand him as "too much of a creep," but would serve to illustrate that mainstreaming the mentally handicapped is not quite as easy as it looked last season on the show.

"I honestly think that this stuff has to be dealt with on the show," Drake said. "They (the retarded) are not easy. They're worth it, but they're not easy."

Now that Benny has been warmly received by TV audiences, Drake hopes that the "L.A. Law" writers will use the character this season to show the not-so-sunny side of life with the retarded.

"They're still segregated from society — mainstreaming does not happen enough, and I hope it will happen," Drake said. "But frankly, I don't think it's going to be what people expect. I don't think it's going to be as easy as it looks (on 'L.A. Law')."

Last year, Drake said, both he and the "L.A. Law" writers had no choice but to make Benny "a little like Jackie Robinson trying to make the Major Leagues — he had to be just a little too perfect sometimes because it was the first time around."

"But I hope that they don't miss the third dimension, which is Benny being a little bit difficult," Drake added. "They have four years to explore this guy, and my deepest wish is that they not idealize him."

The "L.A. Law" writers did give Benny a few flaws toward the end of last season. In one episode, he was unkind to his date, impatient because she was more severely retarded than he and afraid she might embarrass him in front of his sophisticated law firm buddies.

And the lawyers' attitude toward Benny was put to the test when Benny was charged with rape and, because he did not understand the charge, confessed that he had "done something bad." After being prodded to discuss it by one of the attorneys, the terrified Benny explained that he had merely looked at a woman in a peep show.

Drake believes that just raising the issue of sexuality among the mentally handicapped was an act of daring. He hopes it will not stop there.

"I think sometime within the next few years, they're going to have to explore the issue in a more normal, everyday vein, what he actually does about it," Drake said. "Right now, I think he's just scared of it. The incident has probably made him avoid the whole issue for awhile."

A UNIVERSAL RELEASE

Guitarist John Fogerty, Record Firm Square Off

By Bob Egelko
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — A lawyer accused a music company executive of filing a plagiarism suit in revenge against guitarist John Fogerty, whose 1985 solo album originally included two songs that the executive says libeled him.

In a heated session Wednesday before a U.S. District Court jury, music executive Saul Zaentz called the accusation of retaliation a lie.

He said he filed the plagiarism lawsuit against Fogerty after Doug Clifford, another member of Fogerty's Creedence Clearwater Revival band, came to him in January 1985 with a copy of Fogerty's newly released solo album and an earlier Creedence song.

Fantasy Records, Creedence's label from 1967 to 1972, is suing Fogerty over "Old Man Down the Road," the lead single on his comeback "Centerfield" album of 1985.

The lawsuit contends the melody of "Old Man" was copied from "Run Through the Jungle," a 1970 Creedence song written by Fogerty to which Zaentz's Fantasy Records owns the rights. Damages could reach $2 million based on sales of the single and album.

Twice in Zaentz's brief testimony, he was accused by Fogerty's lawyer of filing the copyright suit in revenge against Fogerty for including one song originally titled "Zanz Kant Danz" and one called "Mr. Greed" on the 1985 album.

Zaentz has filed a $142 million libel suit over the two songs and public statements by Fogerty. The suit is pending in Los Angeles.

Fogerty changed the title of the first song to "Vanz Kant Danz" and later dropped the song from subsequent pressings of the album. Outside court, Malcolm Burnstein, a lawyer for Fantasy Records, said Clifford and another former Creedence member, Stu Cook, had been "a little irritated at John for cutting into their record royalties by stealing the song."

Cook and Clifford still get royalties from continuing sales of Creedence records, but Fogerty gave up part of those royalties in a contract agreement, Burnstein said.

Zaentz, also a successful movie producer, and Fogerty, lead singer and songwriter for Creedence, have been feuding for more than a decade over royalties from the group's songs and other financial and personal matters.

Bush, Quayle Turn Down Bids For TV Interviews

By John Carmody
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — The Bush campaign Wednesday notified CBS News that "due to scheduling conflicts," the Republican presidential candidate would be unable to accept a longstanding invitation to appear live on "CBS Evening News With Dan Rather."

Vice President George Bush appeared on CBS Aug. 13, on the eve of the Republican convention, in a 22-minute taped interview with Rather, but relations between the Bush camp and CBS have never been good since the fractious Bush-Rather interview in late January. More recently, media adviser Roger Ailes has been the point man in registering repeated allegations of CBS bias against his candidate with CBS News president David Burke.

GOP vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle, meanwhile, has turned down an invitation to appear Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press."

Democratic candidate Michael Dukakis was interviewed for 14 minutes by Rather on the Oct. 27 "CBS Evening News" telecast, while vice-presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen did an eight-minute interview the night before. The network had extended similar invitations to Bush and Quayle. Bush was seen Monday on "NBC Nightly News" for five minutes in a taped interview with Tom Brokaw and will have a full 18 minutes on the "Today" show Thursday morning, starting at 8:30.

"ABC World News Tonight" anchor Peter Jennings will tape interviews with both Bush and Dukakis Friday for that night's program, giving each candidate about five minutes' airtime. "Good Morning America's" Charles Gibson is excerpting recent interviews with both candidates all this week.

Actor Told To Support His Child

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HACKENSACK, N.J. — Roscoe Orman, who plays the father figure "Gordon" on "Sesame Street," has been ordered by a judge to pay support for a child he fathered out of wedlock, a lawyer said.

Orman, 42, of New Jersey appeared last week before Superior Court Judge Conrad Krafte, who ordered the actor to repay $5,000 for welfare support the child received in Oregon, where she lives, said Mitchell Steinhart, a lawyer for the Bergen County Board of Social Services.

A judge had told Orman in April to pay $200 a month in child support after blood tests confirmed he was the father of the girl, Steinhart said.

Orman's lawyer, Barry Zotkow, described him as a devoted family man who had "a moment of indiscretion" three years ago. He said his client arranged last spring to pay the support, and he blamed computer problems for the delayed payments.

The girl's mother was a masseuse at a licensed massage parlor and met Orman in 1985 after he requested a massage during a promotional tour for the popular PBS show, Zotkow said.

Concert Fire

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — A minor fire was extinguished by automatic sprinklers in the hotel room of rock star George Michael, but the singer apparently wasn't there at the time, authorities said.

The fire broke out in the bathroom of the 15th floor room at the Pensacola Hilton early Tuesday, about four hours after Michael finished a concert across the street at the Pensacola Civic Center, said Fire Capt. Barney Beasley.

He said it was unclear what caused the fire and that no damage estimate was available.

Reynolds To Display Home Area

JUPITER, Fla. (AP) — Actor Burt Reynolds plans to do a good deed for Palm Beach County, where he grew up, by setting episodes of a new series here in a move that could boost the local economy.

Reynolds, who lives in this Palm Beach County resort town, plans to return to prime-time television in "B.L. Stryker," a series of six two-hour episodes.

Reynolds plays a Vietnam veteran and retired New Orleans vice cop who returns to his home in West Palm Beach. He and Tom Selleck, of the old "Magnum, P.I." series, are the executive producers.

With each of the episodes budgeted at $4 million, the county economy could get a hefty infusion during the next six months.

"We hope to leave a lot of that (the series' budget) here," he said Tuesday. "There are an enormous amount of vehicles that we have to lease, there's always greenery you have to get, there's furniture you have to rent. ... The list goes on and on."

Director Leaving

NEW YORK (AP) — Zubin Mehta says he is tired of his administrative duties as music director of the New York Philharmonic and will leave the job when his contract expires in three years.

Mehta, who has held the post since 1978, said he wants to pursue "other artistic endeavors" that require less administrative work.

Mehta, 52, who is also music director of the Israel Philharmonic, announced his decision Wednesday to the 106-member orchestra after pondering his contract renewal for several months.

Stephen Stamas, president of the orchestra corporation, said he regretted Mehta's decision. "The search for a successor will begin shortly," he said.

Shirley Temple Black Wants To Head USIA

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Former child star Shirley Temple Black, who has served Republican administrations in several diplomatic posts, says she wants to be head of the U.S. Information Agency if George Bush is elected president.

The one-time darling of Depression-era movie fans auditioned for the part on a television interview broadcast today, saying her years in films and government have prepared her to run the United States' main voice abroad.

"I haven't told George Bush this yet, I should tell him before I tell you. But I would like to be the director of the United States Information Agency," Mrs. Black said in a taped appearance on the CBS News "Nightwatch" program.

Mrs. Black, 60, lit up the dark days of the Great Depression as the nation's top box office star between 1935 and 1938. Her career began at age 3 and her curly hair and adorable smile brought her world fame and an Oscar by the time she was 6.

She told an interviewer she wanted "to sell you on this" by pointing to her years in Hollywood and the second career she has built in Washington.

She was a U.S. representative to the United Nations under President Nixon and was Chief of Protocol and U.S. ambassador to Ghana under President Ford.

"I've had 57 years of the communications business, with all parts of the media. And I've had 19 years of government service in international relations and I would do a super job for you ...," Mrs. Black said she would tell Bush.

Mrs. Black, interviewed in Washington, said she has been helping train ambassadors due to for overseas posting by the State Department under President Reagan. She has also contributed "a little" money to Bush's Republican campaign effort.

'Star Wars' May Cost More Than Vietnam War

By Mark Bomster
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

The cost of "Star Wars" could far exceed the $300 billion America spent fighting the Vietnam War from 1965 to 1972.

Or the bill for a fully developed shield against ballistic missiles could total no more than $207 billion.

It all depends on who is doing the estimating in this never-ending numbers game.

At a congressional hearing Oct. 6, top Department of Defense officials placed a price tag of $69 billion on the limited first phase of the Strategic Defense Initiative, the formal name of Star Wars.

Conceivably, Phase One could be deployed around the year 2000. But it would be just the beginning.

For $69 billion, the nation would receive only limited protection from ballistic missiles: enough to help deter an attack, advocates say, but hardly the leak-proof shield envisioned by President Reagan when he launched SDI in 1983.

more, the Pentagon concedes, although officially the Department of Defense refuses to estimate how much.

However, an unofficial maximum figure of $207 billion can be arrived at as follows, according to a top SDI planning official:

At least three phases of Star Wars are envisioned.

The first phase centers on kinetic energy weapons: space-based and ground-based rocket interceptors that would destroy missiles simply by smashing into them.

The next two phases would involve futuristic directed-energy weapons, starting with high-powered lasers and following up with devices known as "neutral particle beams."

Current plans call for each phase of the system to cost no more than the previous one.

Therefore, the maximum cost for deploying a complete, three-phase system would be three times $69 billion—a total of $207 billion.

Some non-government estimates are much higher.

A complete system capable of protecting the United States and its allies from all invading long-range missiles and aircraft could cost $770 billion, according to a study published by the Johns Hopkins Foreign Policy Institute.

Another study critical of SDI was published by the Council on Economic Priorities, a New York-based non-profit research organization. The council's report says that the eventual cost of Star Wars could exceed:

—The $250 billion tab for a brand-new interstate highway system.

—The $300 billion cost (in 1987 dollars) of U.S. involvement in the Vietnam War at its peak from 1965 to 1972.

—The $650 billion total (also in 1987 dollars) of American defense spending for the Korean War.

According to the Hopkins study, paying for a full-fledged Star Wars system would require a tax increase of $70 per year over 10 years for every family with an annual income of $30,000 to $50,000.

"There's really nothing that's ever been on this scale," says Barry M.

Blechman, a fellow of the Hopkins institute and co-author of the Star Wars study. "The only thing it can compare to is the major entitlement programs."

Experts at the Pentagon reply that widely publicized cost estimates by civilian groups have been premature and overblown.

"Our plans show considerably reduced costs from these early estimates," says Richard Bleach, director of program planning for the Strategic Defense Initiative Organization. "It's not anywhere near what those estimates were earlier."

Another trigger for hot debate on SDI is the level of protection the system would provide.

Star Wars planners concede that the $69 billion initial system would not offer blanket protection for U.S. citizens against a nuclear attack.

But SDI will not survive politically unless it incorporates some sort of population defenser, Blechman insists.

"If it's going to be funded, it's going to have to be politically protected, and protecting missiles is not something that excites people," he says.

Blechman's study says that the most expensive system would cost $44 billion a year over the peak 10 years of the program, "roughly 1 percent of the nation's resources for a sustained period of time."

That would boost defense spending by more than 15 percent, requiring tax increases or cutbacks in federal programs, the study suggests.

"It's not going to come for free," Blechman says. "You're going to have to give up something for it—either you or your grandchildren."

He and other critics argue that cost alone will be enough to limit or prevent deployment of Star Wars; even now, pressures to cut federal spending are squeezing the defense budget, Blechman points out.

"I'd bet anything there will not be any space-based element deployed in this century," Blechman says. "There's no money for it."

Since mid-1987, the Pentagon has been trying to shave the cost of Star Wars.

First, the Joint Chiefs of Staff set the still-secret requirements for how effective the first phase of SDI must be. That action led to the development of actual cost estimates by the Defense Acquisition Board.

The board said that Phase One would cost $75 billion to $145 billion.

That was too high for the program's overseers. In June this year, SDI's brass came up with modifications that cut the cost to $115 billion.

And Oct. 6, the cost was cut again, to $69 billion.

For that price, the program managers offered a system with three different kinds of sensors to detect and track nuclear missiles; space- and ground-based interceptors; and a battle management network.

The savings came mainly by cutting to fewer than 200 the number of orbiting "garages" housing space-based interceptor rockets that would kill ballistic missiles. The reduction amounted to about 50 percent.

SDI officials said that the scope of the system was not being cut back. Each of the remaining interceptors would be made more capable.

Man Who Rescued Woman Was Convicted Drug Dealer

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A convicted drug dealer who skipped his sentencing a year ago and lived as a fugitive was caught when his "good Samaritan" instincts led him to aid a neighbor who was being beaten and robbed, officials said.

Clovis Fearon, 31, gave police a false name, Anthony Dixon, after he killed one attacker and injured another with his unlicensed gun early Wednesday in Brooklyn, rescuing 43-year-old Gertrude George.

But after he was arrested on a gun possession charge, police learned his real identity and found an outstanding arrest warrant against him.

help Ms. George when he heard her screams from his apartment early Wednesday morning. Ms. George lived on the same street but said later she did not know Fearon.

"I was just screaming, 'Don't kill me,' because I thought that was what they were going to do, kill me," Ms. George said. "At one point I thought I was going to die."

Ms. George said Fearon was "the only one who came to my assistance."

"His actions, of course, were not criminal in any way in my mind — except for the possession of the gun," police Inspector Edward Cappello said before Fearon's true identity was revealed.

Fearon's gun was found by police inside his apartment. The inspector said Fearon, whose car was recently burglarized, complained to police at the scene about crime in the area.

At his arraignment Wednesday night before Brooklyn Criminal Court Judge Joseph Silverman, Fearon pleaded innocent to the gun charge and bail was set at $500. But he remained held on the outstanding warrant.

Fearon had pleaded guilty Feb. 9, 1987, to third-degree criminal sale of a controlled substance, punishable by up to seven years in prison, said Assistant District Attorney Starlet Jones.

He failed to appear for sentencing and a warrant was issued on March 23, 1987, the prosecutor said.

Timothy Lewis, 25, of Brooklyn, one of the men shot by Fearon, was arrested for robbery, assault and criminal possession of stolen property. The other alleged bandit, Raymond Plowden, 25, of Brooklyn, was found dead a block from the scene clutching Ms. George's jewelry in his hand, said Cappello.

Lewis escaped but was arrested a short time later when he arrived at Brookdale Hospital for treatment of his gunshot wound, police said. He was in stable condition there.

Plowden had been arrested five times, including three times for robbery, and was wanted on a bench warrant at the time of his death; police said. Lewis had three previous arrests, two on drug charges, police said.

Ms. George, a longtime resident of the Flatbush neighborhood, was attacked while she was returning home from her job as a nurse, one of two jobs she holds, police said.

Fearon, a chef, came out of his house with a .38-caliber handgun and fired three shots, hitting each man once in the back as they stood over Ms. George, Cappello said.

"It could have been me dead," Ms. George said. "The guy that died showed me no mercy. He was very, very rough. He jumped me from the back. He squeezed me by the throat, burst the chain off my neck while the other man was searching my pockets."

How To Get Started With The University College

The University College functions to serve the needs of the non-traditional or adult student. Recognizing that adults have job responsibilities, family obligations, or may reside some distance from the campus, the University College attempts to assist adult students in overcoming these barriers. At the University College, we are here to assist students in planning and fulfilling their educational goals. We take pride in the informal, interpersonal, "people-centered" atmosphere we convey. We strive to provide educational opportunities for the non-traditional student which will be pleasant and rewarding.

Programs

The University College offers flexible scheduling of DAY and/or EVENING courses. Schedules may normally be arranged to accommodate job and family responsibilities and commuting distances from campus. Evening credit classes are an integral part of the University's academic program and are taken by full-time day students as well as University College students. It is possible to complete degrees in a variety of programs by attending the University as an evening student.

The following degrees may be completed through evening courses:

- Anthropology
- Business Education/ Administrative Services
- Computer Science
- Driver and Traffic Safety
- Economics
- English
- Geography
- History

Minors in several areas, including Business Administration, are available in the evenings. In addition, the General Education requirements for other baccalaureate degrees can usually be completed through the University College. Certificate programs in Business and Technical Communication and Alcoholism Counseling are also available. University College students may enroll (if their schedules permit) for day degree programs.

Services

The University College provides many services to the non-traditional student. The extension of operating hours during registration periods provides an opportunity for adults to register, pay fees, purchase books and supplies and secure other services. On-line registration permits individuals to register quickly, either by phone or in person. Information on admissions and registration procedures, degree programs and requirement can be obtained from the Office of The Coordinator, University College (757-6488). Materials on housing, financial aid, child care, health service, etc., may also be obtained from this office. Guidance is available to assist applicants in determining their needs and interest and to help plan the course of study that should be followed.

Counseling is an important aspect of successful entry or re-entry into the University. Students are encouraged to take advantage of the counseling services available through the University College. Counseling is available during normal working hours, 8:00 AM to 5:00 PM, Monday through Friday. As a convenience to University College students, evening counseling sessions will be available on November, 14, 28 and December 7 from 6:00 PM to 9:00 PM. Appointments are necessary for these sessions and may be scheduled by calling 757-6488. Counseling at times other than those listed above is also available by contacting the University College office.

Admission and Registration Procedures

Given the diverse educational background of the non-traditional student, the University College has an admissions policy based upon performance and maturity rather than upon standardized tests scores or class rank. Consideration is given to those whose high school class graduated three or more years ago. In addition, the non-traditional student should:

1. have acquired a high school diploma or GED.
2. have a "C" average and be eligible to return to the last college or university where they were enrolled (if applicable). Exceptions to the "C" average may be made for individuals who have not attended any college or university in the past three years or by the University Admissions Committee. In all cases, students must be eligible to return to the previous college or university where last enrolled.
3. complete an application, statement of residence, pay a $15.00 application fee, and submit official copies of high school and college transcripts.

Former East Carolina University students who desire to re-enter the University as a part-time day or evening student may apply for readmission through the University College.

Registration for the Spring Semester will be conducted on January 5 from 7:00 AM to 5:30 PM on the second floor of Erwin Hall. Late registration will be conducted on January 6, 9 and 10 from 8:00 AM to 4:00 PM. Counselors will be available to assist students with course selections and the on-line registration process.

University College students may enroll in any course listed in this schedule provided they have satisfied the required prerequisites as stated in the 1988/90 East Carolina University Undergraduate Catalogue. The University College can assist students with questions concerning course selections, degree requirements, and University requirements and regulations. With this opportunity comes a responsibility: University College students are required to adhere to academic standards, policies, procedures, details and regulations which apply to all students of the University.
