State's Effort To Attract Collider Criticized

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — In rejecting North Carolina's bid for the superconducting Super Collider, the federal government sharply criticized the state's effort to attract the $4.4 billion project.

The 113-page Department of Energy report was unusually blunt in blaming the weaknesses in North Carolina's bid on state and local officials, although it mentioned no names. By contrast, the main complaints against the other five states that lost out to Texas usually centered on geological matters.

The report, written by the Energy Department's site selection task force, cited the state government's failure to defuse local opposition, to distribute information about the project and to devise a plan for relocating people who would have been forced off their land.

The report gave North Carolina the only poor rating for "institutional support" among the seven contending states, The News and Observer of Raleigh reported.

"Project support from some of the local officials does not appear to be strong and, in some cases, may be eroding," the report said of the state's bid.

"The state resources allocated to support the program appeared to be the minimum," the report said. "The state provided only basic information and demonstrated limited understanding of administrative support requirements" for the SSC project.

"The local university system did not play an effective role in the institutional program," the report added.

The report said North Carolina had proposed an "inadequate number" of state employees to handle land acquisition, which would include condemning private lands and relocating the residents.

"The acquisition plan is poorly developed and there is no relocation plan," the report said, adding that many landowners in the proposed site north of Durham strongly opposed the SSC.

At a press conference in Raleigh, Gov. Jim Martin took issue with the federal government's accusations about the state's bid.

"(If) we were no better than what they say in the report, I'm surprised we are on the best-qualified list," he said.

But the task force report said North Carolina faced "strong organized opposition" to the SSC, and partly blamed the Martin administration.

Much of the opposition came from residents of the area where the collider would have been built in northern Durham, Granville and Person counties.

The report said the bid "was developed by the state with very little involvement from local governments or communities, which in part may have contributed to the development of strong, organized resistance, primarily by affected homeowners."

"The state's approach to institutional problems is reactive" — that is, officials responded after complaints were made rather than trying to head off problems early, the report says.

Without referring specifically to North Carolina, U.S. Energy Secretary John Herrington said geological considerations were the most important factors in determining the final site, but local opposition was taken into account.

"There was no local opposition in the state of Texas," Herrington said at a Washington news conference. "Most of the states did not have local opposition."

He said the site choice was based on six major criteria. In descending order of importance, they were: geology; regional resources, including ac-

Employees Of City Get $1,000 Pay Adjustment

By Greg Laudick
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Greenville City Council on Thursday approved a $1,000 across-the-board "market adjustment" for all city employees.

The council voted 5-0 to approve the ordinance, which revised the city's Pay and Classification Plan effective Dec. 31.

Salary adjustments will be reflected in paychecks issued Jan. 20, according to a memorandum from City Manager Greg Knowles to be forwarded Monday to all city employees.

"A different approach has been used this year to adjust our pay plan," says the memorandum. "Instead of increasing each pay plan step by the same percentage increase, each step will be increased by the same dollar amount across the board in the form of an increased hourly rate. Each employee will receive $1,000 to be paid throughout the calendar year 1989."

"For biweekly employees, the salary adjustment will be reflected in an increased hourly rate of 48 cents. For weekly employees, an advance of $300 will be issued on January 13, the first Friday in the conversion from weekly to bi-weekly payroll. The remaining $700 will be paid during 1989 in an increased hourly rate of 34 cents," the memorandum indicates.

By adjusting the pay plan with a flat rate rather than an across-the-board percentage increase, the result is that lower-paid employees receiving a greater percentage increase in pay compared to their higher-paid counterparts.

For example, a $12,000 per-year employee receiving a $1,000 adjustment will receive a 8.3 percent pay hike while an employee making 36,000 per-year will see an increase of 2.7 percent.

Veterans Day Marks Armistice Anniversary

By Jerry Raynor
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Today, Veterans Day 1988, marks the 70th anniversary of the signing of the Armistice in France ending World War I. The three major Allied Powers of that time, the United States, France and Great Britain soon after the war declared Nov. 11 as a day to honor the men and women killed in that war.

The day continues to be commemorated in these countries. After World War II it came to be recognized in all three nations as a day to pay honor to the dead of World War II as well.

Then in 1954, after the end of the Korean War, Nov. 11 was officially designated as Veterans Day in the U.S., a day set aside nationally to honor American military personnel, men and women, of all U.S. wars.

In Canada, observance has become known as Remembrance Day, and in Britain, the Sunday nearest Nov. 11 is celebrated also as Remembrance Sunday.

Traditionally, Americans observe Veterans Day with parades, speeches and the placement of floral tributes on servicemen's graves and at memorial sites.

Today also marks a nostalgic event related to Armistice Day. It was on Nov. 11, 1938, in a commemorative service for the 20th anniversary of Armistice Day, that singer Kate Smith on a national radio hookup presented to Americans Irving Berlin's now much beloved song, "God Bless America."

In Greenville, two retired military personnel commented on their feelings about the observance of Veterans Day in the U.S.

"I think the celebration of one day for all who have served their country is a great idea," said Colonel Dean Painter, Sr., who retired in 1968 after 30 years in the Army. "In one sense, things have been fragmented too much with so many service organizations, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Veterans of Vietnam, an organization for disabled and paralyzed veterans."

"But in recent years, the observance of Veterans Day has come to mean more to so many who served, not only the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps, but men from the Merchant Marines, and even civilians who served in wartime, some of whom saw more actual combat than myself or many others."

Painter said one of the attitudes he finds heartening "is that Americans have finally come around to recognizing and honoring veterans of Vietnam."

"For so long, those who served in Vietnam were to a great extent looked on as dumb Vietnam dodos," he said, "while men who evaded service by going to Canada often were accorded the status of heroes."

City Gets Favorable Ruling On Lawsuit

By Greg Laudick
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A judgement filed Thursday in Pitt County District Court found the city's annexation of the Colonial Mobile Home Park valid and enforceable.

The co-owners of the mobile home park, J.P. Reddington and his wife Eunice, filed legal action against the city in an attempt to force the city to conform to various state statutes relating to proper annexation procedures.

The City Council on Sept. 8 approved the involuntary annexation of a 218-acre area which included the 274 mobile homes of the park. The area is north of Greenfield Terrace Subdivision, west of N.C. 11, and south of Wellcome Middle School.

The Reddingtons argued to the court that the city did not intend, upon the annexation date, to provide city services such as water and street maintenance to the park on substantially the same basis and in the same manner as provided within the rest of the city. The Reddingtons also claimed several technical procedures in the annexation report preparation were completed incorrectly and that various statutory requirements were not met.

The order, signed by Judge Charles Winberry, concluded differently. "The Petitioner has failed to show by competent and substantial evidence or any lesser measure of the evidence a failure on the part of the City to meet the statutory requirements necessary to proceed with this annexation as adopted by the city or, any irregularity in the proceedings which materially prejudice the substantive rights of the Petitioners," the order indicated.

"We are very pleased with the judge's order," said City Attorney Mac McCarley today. "We tried very hard in completing the plans of the annexation to comply with all the requirements of the law and we're glad that the court upheld our annexation."

Under North Carolina law, the petitioner has 10 days from the filing of the order to appeal the decision to the North Carolina Court of Appeals.

If the Reddingtons do not appeal, the annexation will be effective on Nov. 29, McCarley said.

"That means on Nov. 29, we would begin to provide all municipal services to Colonial Mobile Home Park and the rest of the annexed area," he said. "Such municipal services include police, fire, garbage collection and rescue service."

McCarley said if the petitioners do appeal the matter, the effective date of the annexation will be automatically stayed until the resolution of the appeal.

Reddington said today he is considering whether to appeal.

West German Parliament Chief Quits Over Speech

By Kevin Costellow
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BONN, West Germany — The president of parliament resigned today under attack for saying — on the 50th anniversary of the Kristallnacht pogrom against the Jews — that many Germans initially found Hitler's rule "glorious."

Parliament President Philipp Jenninger's speech also called the early years of the Nazi's Third Reich a "triumphal procession."

In his resignation statement, Jenninger, who also condemned the Nazi pogrom in his address Thursday, said he was misunderstood.

Nevertheless, his speech was criticized throughout the country and abroad.

"This event shows us how the darkest chapter of German history is still a present-day thing," Hans-Jochen Vogel, leader of the opposition Social Democratic Party, said after Jenninger's resignation.

"We must now work even harder with others to learn how to live and worthily deal with this challenge," Vogel told reporters.

The leftist Greens Party said in a statement: "The background of what happened is the inability of many Germans to stand up to their own past. We hope ... a discussion about guilt and responsibility for this recent history will take place."

The furor overshadowed West Germany's carefully organized ceremonies marking Kristallnacht, the night of terror against the Jews that signaled the start of the Holocaust.

Communist East Germany's official news agency ADN called the Jenninger speech "a scandal." Israel's Foreign Ministry called the incident "unacceptable and unfortunate."

"It's a scandal, it's a shame," said Frankfurt Jewish community spokesman Michel Friedman, a member of Jenninger's party, the Christian Democrats.

Jenninger said he was misunderstood. "My speech was not understood by many listeners the way I had intended it to be," the 56-year-old politician said in a written statement announcing his resignation. "I am deeply sorry and I am very hurt, if I have offended the feelings of others."

His speech, at a special session of the Bundestag, or parliament, caused a walkout by about 50 lawmakers and calls for his resignation.

He added: "During my whole po-

Kendell Arrested

Greenville police arrested Rodney Kendell, 23, of 495C Fleming St. late Thursday night on armed robbery and kidnapping charges in connection with a hold-up at the Econo-Lodge motel on Memorial Drive before dawn Thursday.

Detective D.R. Best said one armed robbery count against Kendell resulted from the theft of cash from the motel about 4:10 a.m.

Best said the second armed-robbery charge and the kidnapping charge came after a night clerk at the motel — Raymond Bodie — allegedly was forced, at gun-point, to walk from the motel to the intersection of Village Drive and Memorial Drive, where an undetermined amount of cash was taken from the clerk.

Four Thefts Reported

Investigators said four thefts, including $360 worth of property from a parked car, were reported to Greenville police Thursday.

Officer R.S. Sawyer said a calculator, radar detector and an assortment of art supplies were taken from the vehicle parked at 700 Cotanche St. in an incident reported at 2:49 p.m., while Officer S.A. Person said a bedspread and pair of curtains were taken from Tri County Mobile Homes at 807 Greenville Blvd. S.W. in a break-in reported at 11:12 a.m.

Officer R.C. Stroud said a radio-tape player, $96 in bills and $20 in change was taken from 1521 W. Greenville Blvd. in a break-in reported at 4:45 p.m., while Officer L.E. White said $82 was taken from a purse at 604 Ford St. in an incident reported at 8:40 p.m. Both Stroud and White said juveniles are suspected in both of the cases.

Honor Students Initiated

The Lambda Chapter of Gamma Beta Phi honor society inducted 145 East Carolina University students during an initiation ceremony Monday in ECU's Hendrix Theater.

Society membership is based on academic achievement and a commitment to excellence in education, character and service.

Gamma Beta Phi has more than 75 active campus chapters, with an overall membership exceeding 20,000. Dr. Kathleen Dunlop, professor of history, is ECU faculty advisor.

The new ECU Gamma Beta Phi members include students from 27 North Carolina counties and from Connecticut, Delaware, Maryland, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and Virginia.

Local students inducted are: Beaufort County, Belhaven — Samuel Price; Pinetown — Melanie Bowen; Pitt County, Greenville — Stacy Emerson Hume, Leah Lassiter, Stanley Brian Mills and Brett Scott Nover; Grifton — Drew Covert.

count by 11 p.m., Mrs. Hardee said. Wilson county also used the machines and had a smooth night, she said.

Pitt County experimented with a few Shouptronic machines in the May 31 primary runoff, but the county opted not to purchase them.

With Shouptronic machines, voters press buttons beside the name of the candidates for which they wish to vote, and the machine records all votes on a paper tape inside the machine. At the end of the night, a total is available almost instantly.

Voting with paper ballots not only slows the process, it creates high printing costs and the need for a great amount of storage space for used ballots, Mrs. Hardee said.

The Airmac machines machines also could not record how many people voted a straight party ticket Tuesday, an interesting statistic as the Republican party gains strength across the state.

She said it would be difficult to estimate the cost of Tuesday's election, but in 1984 the county paid $19,000 just to print ballots for the general election.

This year there were more ballots printed, and the county must also pay for personnel, machine repair, new ballot boxes and the renting of 11 additional ballot machines.

With election night often carrying well into the morning in Pitt County, Mrs. Hardee said it is also difficult for the county's political parties to find people willing to work the polls.

Many of the pollworkers are retirees, she said, and they must be at the polls at 6 a.m. and cannot leave all day. The long hours are tough and they discourage folks from working the polls, she said.

Recount Would See Elections Board Sorting Through Batch

By John Bare

THE DAILY REFLECTOR

If Republican Court of Appeals Judge Donald Smith of Raleigh calls for a recount of his race against Democrat John B. Lewis of Farmville, Pitt election officials could be searching for a few pins in a haystack of ballots.

With all precincts reporting, Lewis holds a lead of about 18,000 votes, a margin that appears to be small enough to allow Smith to seek a recount. The race for a court seat is a statewide contest, therefore all 100 counties would have to tally.

Pitt County used nine different ballots to accommodate all of the races in Tuesday's election, and there were more than 400,000 ballots distributed countywide.

Used ballots are stored by precinct, not by contest, Pitt elections Supervisor Margaret Hardee said Thursday, so if there is a recount election officials will have to sort through every ballot to find those cast in the Court of Appeals race.

Officials would need to go through the entire batch at least twice to make sure they find all the ballots needed — and no one in the elections office Thursday ventured a guess as to how long that would take.

Once officials retrieved all of the ballots, then they would have to feed them through ballot-counting machines or tally the votes by hand.

There were 31,006 ballots counted in Lewis' race in Pitt County, but most likely, hundreds more were distributed. In many races, some voters did not vote or voted improperly, and their vote was not counted. Those ballots must also be accounted for.

Mrs. Hardee described the recount scenario Thursday, emphasizing again how badly the county needs electronic brand Shouptronic voting machines, which would eliminate ballot printing, storage and hand counting.

In a repeat of the 1984 presidential election, Tuesday turned into an all-nighter, with Winterville precinct officials reporting their totals just before 6 a.m.

Long after CBS anchorman Dan Rather had predicted the winners and closed up shop, Pitt election officials were still counting.

"At 4 a.m. we sent a team from the elections office out to Winterville to assist with the machines so the precinct workers could do the paper work," Mrs. Hardee said.

The county's Airmac voting machines — which electronically read the paper ballots and tally the votes — malfunctioned in Winterville, failing to sort the properly marked ballots from the improperly marked ballots. The machines should have been sorted them into an outstack.

More than 30,000 ballots had to be sent back through the machines for counting, and election officials sent three additional machines over to Winterville to speed up the process. Some folks, who had to be back at the elections office in a few hours for a full day of work, did not get home until well after 6 a.m., Mrs. Hardee said.

But Winterville was not alone. At least four other precincts also experienced machine problems, and several of the county's 25 precincts reported after 2 a.m.

"There's no way you can handle it any better with what we've got," Mrs. Hardee said. "But, with other equipment, I think we could, if we had enough of it."

She estimates the county would need about 100 Shouptronic machines to modernize the voting process. The equipment would cost about $450,000, but could be offset by the sale of existing equipment and savings realized from very few printed ballots, she said.

Lenior County, which used Shouptronic machines for the first time Tuesday, completed their election

Planning Boundary Plan Gains Council Approval

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Greenville City Council on Thursday approved a planning boundary agreement between Winterville, Greenville, the Greenville Utilities Commission and Pitt County.

The proposed agreement culminates discussions with Winterville to determine a boundary line as well as water and sewer service guidelines for future growth areas, said Ron Kimble, assistant city manager. As proposed, White Road (SR 1708) would serve as the planning boundary from N.C. 11 to the Tar Road (SR 1700), with Greenville serving the area north and Winterville serving the area to the south.

The boundary then moves south along Tar Road (with Winterville having all rights for planning and providing utility service to areas west of the boundary) to a creek flowing into Fork Swamp, then east along the creek to Fork Swamp and south along Fork Swamp to a point 100 feet south of Worthington Road.

Greenville's southern boundary then continues east paralleling Worthington Road to a point east of County Home Road (SR 1725). The boundary then turns north and runs 2,000 feet east of the County Home Road to N.C. 43.

The agreement requires the formal adoption of all entities involved.

The Pitt County Commissioners approved the agreement Monday. The Winterville Town Board is scheduled to consider the agreement Monday while consideration by the GUC commission is scheduled for December.

The council also approved two annexation requests totaling approximately 25 acres

Approved was a request by Derek P. Dunn to annex 20.06 acres of Westhaven Section 9, Phase I, off Cedarhurst Road just south of Westhaven Section 8 and a request by James M. Moye Jr. to annex five acres of Park Place, Block A, Lot 1, south of Stantonsburg Road, west of Pitt County Memorial Hospital and east of the proposed Arlington Boulevard.

The council approved the sale of three Disposal Parcels in the South Evans Community Development Project: Parcel 42-H-1A for $5,700, Parcel 42-H-1B for $3,000, and 42-J-2A for $28,000.

In other matters Thursday, the council approved the sale of surplus city property including 12 vehicles; the appointment of Development Director Bobby E. Roberson as the city's representative in 1989 to the Mid-East Commission Board; an ordinance changing the street name of "Boxwood Lane" to "Baywood Lane"; a bid of $92,495 by North Carolina Equipment Company for a 6.7 cubic yard, industrial-type street sweeper, and budget amendments decreasing $192 appropriated to the Family Violence Center in 1988-89 and an increase of $71,250 in appropriations for the Rental Rehabilitation Program.

The council also approved the appropriation of $3,969 from fund balance to purchase bus engine parts; a Municipal Agreement with the North Carolina DOT for a section of the Evans Street widening project from Howell Street to Greenville Boulevard which includes provisions for the DOT to perform water and sewer relocations and adjustments for GUC on a reimbursable basis; an amendment to the Zoning Ordinance preventing a petition from being continually withdrawn from Planning and Commission and City Council meetings, and the release of $6,745 in state funding to the Mid-East Commission for technical assistance.

Consent Agenda items approved Thursday included consideration of sections of Tiffany and Wellons Drives for permanent city maintenance and the release of $1,133 in taxes.

High School Students in 'ECU Bowl'

ECU NEWS BUREAU

Teams of students from eight eastern North Carolina high schools will participate Nov. 19 in the first "ECU Bowl" at East Carolina University.

The event is a project of the Pitt County chapter of the ECU Alumni Association.

The ECU Bowl will match teams against each other in rounds of questions about arts, science, literature, music, current events, sports and other areas. The format is patterned after the televised "GE College Bowl" program, with points awarded for correct answers.

The eight participating schools, randomly selected from schools who responded to invitations to apply, are Bertie High School, Windsor; Conley High School, Greenville; Greene Central High School, Snow Hill; North Lenoir High School, La Grange; Southwest High School, Jacksonville; Tarboro High School;

Washington High School and Williamston High School.

The team winning the single-elimination competition will receive a total of $500, consisting of four $100 awards to individual team members to be used for purchase of college textbooks and a $100 donation for the school's library. Certificates and commemorative prizes will be given to all participants.

The free bowl competition will run from 1:30 p.m. to 5 p.m. in 244 Mendenhall Student Center.

The competition schedule is:

- 1:30 p.m. to 3:20 p.m. - Preliminary rounds: 1. Conley vs. Tarboro, 2. Williamston vs. Southwest, 3. North Lenoir vs. Washington, 4. Greene Central vs. Bertie); 3:30 - 4:20 p.m. - Two rounds matching preliminary winners.
- 4:30 - 5 p.m. - Championship match.

Guided tours of the campus and lunch for teams and coaches will precede the event. An awards ceremony and reception will follow the championship match.

Local corporate sponsors are Burroughs Wellcome, Carolina Telephone and Telegraph Co., University Book Exchange, Wachovia Bank, Carolina Dairies and WDLX-FM Radio, Washington.

"We hope to build a strong foundation this year for the ECU Bowl to become one of our finest traditions, and one that eastern North Carolina will look forward to each year," said John Anema of Greenville, president of the Pitt County chapter of the ECU Alumni Association.

"One of the best features of a tradition is that they get better with age and we are hopeful that the first annual ECU Bowl will be the beginning of a great one," he said.

Anema, a New Jersey native, said the ECU Bowl is patterned after the Rutgers Bowl, a televised, statewide competition in New Jersey, which involves 32 schools each year. The ECU Bowl is the only comparable competition held in the southeast, he said.

"Our goal is to televise ours, and to involve more schools throughout the eastern region," he noted. "Our long-term goal is to award college scholarships to each member of the winning teams."

Christine Waters, a Conley teacher and bowl coach, said she was pleased that her school was selected to participate this year.

"These competitions are wonderful for motivating the students," she said. "It's a learning activity that's also a lot of fun. We believe involvement in this kind of competition fosters a well-rounded student."

once in a thousand years?" Jenner asked.

"For the fate of the Germans and European Jews, Hitler's successes were perhaps even more fateful than his crimes and misdeeds," Jenner said.

"The years from 1933 to 1938, even from a distant retrospective and in the knowledge of what followed, still are a fascinating thing today, since throughout history there was hardly a parallel to Hitler's triumphant procession during the first years."

Some listeners sobbed when Jenner read an eyewitness account of the murder of concentration camp victims in 1942.

"Blood was running over the shoulders of almost everyone," he read. "Some of those shot were still moving, some lifted their arms and turned their heads, to show they were still alive."

Social Democratic chairman Hans-Jochen Vogel said in a letter to Jenner that the Parliament president showed a "disturbing lack of judgment."

World Jewish Congress President Edgar M. Bronfman called Jenner's remarks "reprehensible."

But a leader of West Germany's Jewish community defended Jenner's speech, saying he could not understand calls for his resignation.

"I welcome that the parliament president described in full clarity what was happening in Germany between 1933 and 1938," said Michael Fuerst, a deputy chairman of the Central Council of Jews in West Germany.

Starting with the Kristallnacht of Nov. 9-10, 1938, the Nazis made clear their intentions to wipe out European Jews. On that night, Nazi thugs destroyed Jewish homes, businesses and synagogues, sending 30,000 Jews to concentration camps and killing 91 Jews.

Shattered glass covered the streets and the Nazis, mockingly, named it Kristallnacht, or Crystal Night. The Nazis killed 6 million Jews and many others during Hitler's rule from 1933 to 1945.

Read-A-Thon

Floretta Graham's sixth-grade language arts class at Greenville Middle School will have a read-a-thon this month, aiming for 1,000 of reading.

Each day minutes spent reading will be tallied and part of a rainbow will be colored. When the rainbow is completely colored, the class will watch an educational video Dec. 2.

The event is in conjunction with National Children's Book Week, Monday through Nov. 20, and American Education Week, Sunday through Nov. 19.

College Fair Day

The Public School Forum of North Carolina and the North Carolina Teaching Fellows Colleges invite high school students, parents and teachers to attend a College Fair Day, 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturday at Greenville Middle School.

Representatives of several colleges and universities, including Appalachian State, East Carolina, N.C. A&T State, N.C. Central, N.C. State, Western Carolina, Meredith, Elon, and the Universities of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Asheville, Wilmington, Greensboro and Charlotte, will be available.

Student groups also are encouraged to participate. Information about the Teaching Fellows Scholarship Program will be available. That program entitles selected students to receive all-expense-paid, four-year educations provided they agree to teach in the state for four years.

Scouts Launch Project

Pitt County Boys Scouts of America are participating in the nationwide project, "1988 National Good Turn: Scouting for Food."

On Saturday, the scouts will deliver plastic bags to the homes of Pitt County residents, who are urged to place five cans of food in the bags and leave them on the front porches for pickup late evening Nov. 18 or early morning on Nov. 19.

The canned foods will be stored at the Salvation Army and distributed among the needy and agencies in the area who serve them.

Residents not visited by scouts may contribute by donating canned goods at Harris Supermarkets, WNCT-TV or the Salvation Army.

Mack Claims Senate Seat; MacKay Plans Challenge

By Dan Sewell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Republican U.S. Rep. Connie Mack III was making plans for his transition to the Senate today as Rep. Kenneth "Buddy" MacKay and Democratic Party officials considered a legal challenge to Mack's narrow victory.

MacKay refused to concede Thursday even after absentee ballots gave Mack a clear victory, saying he and his attorneys were discussing voting "irregularities" that he might challenge.

Mack's victory decided the last of this year's 33 Senate races. It means the Democrats will have a 55-45 majority, a gain of one seat, in the new Senate.

Mack, who replaces retiring three-term Democratic Sen. Lawton Chiles, declared himself the winner when the absentee votes were announced.

"It's very exciting," said the 48-year-old grandson of the Baseball Hall of Fame manager. "It's been long; it's been tough. But I felt all along that my message of more freedom, free markets, freedom from taxes, freedom as an objective of our foreign policy, would come through clearly."

President Reagan, who did a television satellite feed for Mack's campaign Monday, called the Cape Coral congressman to congratulate him.

The AP's latest tally showed Mack with 2,044,575 votes, or 50 percent, to MacKay's 2,014,924 votes, also 50 percent. That gave Mack a margin of nearly 30,000 votes, more than enough to avoid an automatic recount that would be triggered if the difference was less than one-half of 1 percent. About 5,000 absentee votes still were out in Bay County, a Mack stronghold in the Panhandle.

"We may have to ask the 'fat lady' for an encore," said MacKay campaign manager Greg Farmer. "Something's screwy with those numbers."

MacKay, 55, estimated that up to 170,000 Senate votes may be missing in the state's four largest counties. He said there were more votes in those counties for the secretary of state and insurance commissioner races than for the Senate.

MacKay told reporters his lawyers would study possible challenges to the vote, such as a court-ordered statewide recount or a manual count of a random selection of ballots in the four counties.

"We don't intend to drag this out," he said at his Ocala home. "I regret this has come up in this campaign, but I do feel that I owe it to those people whose votes were not counted."

Farmer said the way races were listed on the ballots may have confused voters in some counties, or there may have been computer problems.

"There are some some irregularities out there right now we can't explain right now," said state Democratic Party Chairman Charles Whitehead. "We've talked to some people who are very knowledgeable in the way this is done who agree with us."

Mack said he wasn't worried about legal challenges, and he said he wanted to "reach out to Buddy MacKay."

"Nobody should be put through what we've had to experience," Mack said. "They ran a tough campaign and they've got to be disappointed."

Mack also wasn't worried about relations with Democratic U.S. Sen. Bob Graham, who during the campaign labeled Mack "an ideological wacko."

"Bob is a professional and he's very good at what he does. I'm confident we can work together," said Mack, who in October 1987 launched what appeared to be a long-shot campaign to fill Chiles' seat.

Veterans Honored

I'm glad to see a saner balance in American attitudes that has come about in recent years."

"I can understand some of the reasoning that lay behind the attitude of distaste that followed not only the Vietnam War, but that in Korea," Painter said. "World War II was different, the nation was drawn together by the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. But in the case of Korea and Vietnam, we let our politicians get us involved in unpopular wars, without providing the military the means to win them."

Painter saw duty in the Philippines, Panama, Europe, Hawaii and "early in Vietnam while the French were still engaged there and at a time when ostensibly Americans had no servicemen there."

A Navy veteran living in Greenville, Howard A.I. Sugg, retired in 1964 with the rank of commander following 24 years of active duty.

"It seems to me," Sugg said in commenting on the observance of Veterans Day, "that the change from Armistice Day to Veterans Day has not met with quite as much enthusiasm as before. I will remember that before the change was made there was a much greater sense of patriotic celebration."

"However," Sugg added, "although these changes of attitudes may at first seem strange, I think it has much to do with American attitudes on wars in general. I get the feeling that many people are not as fully concerned, do not have the respect we once had for those who sacrificed so much, in many instances making the ultimate sacrifice."

Like Painter, Sugg attributes this lessening of concern "essentially to Vietnam. But I feel the distaste Americans showed for war was strong even earlier, when a stalemate was reached at the 38th parallel in Korea."

"All in all," Sugg said, "despite the sense of frustration that for years was so strong, it is my opinion that Americans are once again finding more meaning in a day to honor the efforts, the sacrifices of so many in our four major wars in the 20th century. I find this heartening. I realize too that it might be a bit too much to have four separate days of honoring our veterans, that the one day to honor all is more realistic."

Sugg served "the whole of World War II in the Pacific, from Alaska south, at Guadalcanal, New Guinea, Okinawa. In fact, my Pacific service ribbons carries stars for 13 engagements."

When Sugg retired, he took up his studies again, and earned a doctorate in international relations. "I taught political science at East Carolina University until my second retirement in 1978."

Planning Agreement First Of Many

Pitt County will undoubtedly see more planning boundary agreements such as the one approved by the Pitt County Commission this week.

The agreement establishes boundaries between the Greenville and Winterville planning districts. It was developed by a joint subcommittee which included representatives of the municipalities and the county planning board. The agreement has been approved by the Greenville City Council and must be approved by the Winterville Board of Aldermen to become effective.

The agreement should resolve the confusion of nearly a decade over where Greenville's planning jurisdiction ends and Winterville's begins. Since the area in between is one of the county's fastest growing population areas the question became meaningful. It involves planning for new subdivision, water and sewer service and future annexation of the property.

The boundary generally follows White Road to Tar Road, runs just south of Worthington Road to a point near the County Home Road and then runs north to N.C. 43.

The area is the maximum reach of Greenville Utilities sewer service and approximates Greenville's one mile extra territorial planning and zoning jurisdiction.

The agreement could set the pattern for future agreements as Pitt County municipalities bump against another's zoning territories. It could be Winterville and Ayden's turn to consider such an agreement in the near future. As growth accelerates west of Greenville, then Farmville and Greenville could be looking at a territorial agreement.

Such a cooperative relationship between government entities could eliminate squabbling over turf like the misunderstanding between Winterville and Greenville that prompted the new planning boundary. Circumventing hard feelings can replace conflict with progress, and that's good for both towns and the citizens caught in the crossfire.

It is likely that rapid growth will continue for Pitt County. The municipalities must now plan for that growth and that planning includes an understanding of where one planning territory ends and another begins.

Huge Price

Mitchell's Death A Sad Reminder

There are some times Americans would just as soon forget. One of them is the Watergate era of the Richard Nixon presidency which resulted in top administrative officials going to jail and the unprecedented resignation of a president of the United States.

It all developed because the executive office couldn't be honest with the public about a botched break-in of the Democratic headquarters in the Watergate office complex.

Forgetting will be impossible, however. While there have been executive scandals there has been nothing like this one in which a president resigned. No president, in fact, had ever resigned for any reason.

The sad memories flood back with the death of John Mitchell, the U.S. attorney general during Watergate. Mitchell served time after his conviction in 1975 of conspiring with chief of staff H.R. Halderman and domestic counselor John D. Ehrlichman to cover up the White House role in Watergate. The so-called White House tapes — regular recordings of Oval Office conversations — brought down Nixon, Mitchell and much of the White House staff.

Following his release from prison Mitchell followed a career in private life and was seldom in the public eye. His final public attention came Wednesday when he collapsed on a Washington street. Found by a passing youngster, he was dead of a massive heart attack by the time he was taken to a hospital.

Mitchell reached the heights of success in the legal and business world and then went to the top in the federal government. Prior to the Watergate travail his worst problem was his second wife, Martha, who called reporters to offer comments on how things were going in government. They eventually parted and Mrs. Mitchell died in 1976.

The nation can view John Mitchell with more compassion now. He paid a huge personal price for his part in Watergate, and with his death, his record becomes a part of history. Perhaps the benefit of his ordeal will be that national leaders who follow him will learn to be always open and honest with the public.

Public Forum

To the editor:

In an article published in your Nov. 3 newspaper, "Grape Grab Costs $600.40" on Page A-12, Mr. Eli Bradley Jr. of Jackson, Mich., was convicted of a felony for munching on grapes at a grocery store and was ordered to pay 40 cents in restitution and $600 in court cost.

This really burns me up. I go to the grocery store at least twice a week and notice children eating fruits such as grapes and candy that their parents "open" for them. What happens to them? Do the employees just close their eyes or what? I know that children probably don't know any better, but their parents are right there watching them and I know when the parents go up to the checkout counter, they don't tell the cashier that their child had eaten a few grapes or a piece of candy.

Eating a few grapes is not a felony charge. Everyone at one time or another has eaten something at a grocery store while shopping. Sure, you can look at it as stealing, but a felony?

I would like some kind of answer or input from someone on this matter, so at least I can understand.

To the editor:

On Wednesday Nov. 2, another story appears in the Daily Reflector concerning the possible remains of MIAs in Vietnam. The Vietnamese government once again has decided to turn over remains of United States soldiers. This time the number is set at 21. As long as the Vietnamese government continues to hold this ace card against the United States, the remains continue to be produced.

Every few months we read this in the paper. Doesn't it sound realistic that they could bring them all forth at one time?

Getting tired of the run-around from both the U.S. government and the Vietnamese government. We all know the real story.

The Courtship Begins Now

WASHINGTON — The challenge for George Bush now is to prove that his character is a match for his ambition. Having beat Michael Dukakis in a dirty campaign, he comes jogging into the presidency lacking a clear mandate. He is where he always wanted to be, but a squatter in the White House, unpacked and moved in while anxiously we await his character references.

A look at the numbers (and what they mean) shows that the Bush presidency has had a perilous birth. He dominated the South, where voters supported him by a margin of 3 to 2, but in much of the rest of the country Bush ran about even with Dukakis. He lost the black vote, the female vote and the Jewish vote. He lost the union vote and the votes of many Democrats who four years ago voted for Ronald Reagan.

Bush is not the President of the poor or of liberals and he is faced with a Congress that remains as Democratic as ever, some of whose members still seethe about how he conducted his campaign. Maybe most ominous, Bush lost the confidence of millions with his choice of a running mate. Red of cheek and empty of head, Dan Quayle does for many citizens what the battlefield does for soldiers: He drives them to prayer.

Bush probably won on the twin themes of peace and prosperity. No amount of Dukakis rhetoric could deny the obvious: Unemployment is low, inflation down and the Kremlin is down on its luck and more willing to deal. Any Democrat would have had difficulty under those circumstances, but Dukakis proved to be a hapless campaigner. In a campaign where Bush unfairly flayed Dukakis as the criminal's pal and a reluctant patriot, he had the Massachusetts governor nailed as a man detached from the average American. The issues Bush raised were both unfair and irrelevant, but they were nevertheless potent. Dukakis sat on the tracks reading while the Bush express bore down on him.

Now what? New Presidents generally are accorded a honeymoon period. But Bush's courtship of the voters was so mean that he comes into office with the nation already weary of him. Unlike the amiable Reagan, Bush's campaign points to no program, no policy changes. His broad emotional themes — the Pledge of Allegiance, death penalty, prison furloughs — amount to rhetorical circuses, true diversions from the real issues. As policy statements, they are laughable.

Will Bush now end the federal prison furlough system? Doubtful. Will he require the pledge, say, before every state dinner? Not likely. Will he champion the death penalty willy-nilly so that his stomach sickens? Probably not. Will Bush even be able to honor his promise not to raise taxes? Maybe. But given the pressing needs of the country he will be able to do so only if he ignores the problems he says so trouble him — the inner city, for instance.

No, the challenge for Bush is not programmatic, but internal. We detect in him an inner dialogue, an argument between self-proclaimed good intentions and the tendency to act opportunistically. He must prove to the millions of Americans who rejected his candidacy (and those who simply favored him as the lesser of two evils) that he is a person of character. The issue is not whether he is man enough to bomb some Third World country but whether, when faced with tough choices, he can demonstrate actual convictions.

Bush's opponent from here on is reality. His opposition is not a man but a budget deficit, a trade deficit, the Third World debt crisis, corroding inner cities and the changing nature of the Soviet challenge. These problems will not be amenable to character assassination, to demagogic pronouncements or false sincerity — to a plasticity of character that has always served Bush's careerism, a man for any job, loyal to his ambition but to no discernible set of principles. The problems require solutions that cannot be provided by Lee Atwater or Roger Ailes.

In his post-election press conference, Bush struck just the right note. He was thoughtful, organized, decent and appropriately humbled by the task that awaits him. But for all his evident fatigue, the morning after victory glows with comfort and assurance. The presidency itself, though, can be much like a campaign: Things can get desperate.

If, under pressure, Bush reverts to the malleable man of the campaign, if he is alternatively mean and gentle, if indeed, he confuses toughness with meanness, if he feels compelled to prove his conservative bona fides because in his heart he knows he is not right, then his presidency will be an extension of the campaign. A Democratic Congress will not play "Mike Dukakis" to George Bush.

For those who voted against Bush or only reluctantly for him, talk of a presidential honeymoon is premature. They have yet to get the courtship.

Layoffs At The Sleaze Factory

Art Buchwald

The election was over and all the campaign staffers had been laid off. I stood by the gate as they poured out of sleaze headquarters holding their pink slips.

"What are you going to do now?" I asked a dazed worker.

"I don't know," he replied. "I've been offered a job making cheap shots for the private sector."

"You manufactured cheap shots for the presidential campaign?"

"I was the best. I took plastic ACLU cards and turned them into Saturday-night specials."

"It was a winner," I said. "Were you the one who polished up half truths to produce the specter of crime in the streets?"

"I ran the whole assembly line. They gave me a $100 bonus for inventing a faster way of making unsubstantiated charges. I also designed the 'L' word which scared the hell out of the South. No one ever did understand what the big 'L' really was, but it became a more important symbol than burning the American flag."

"I'm surprised that they fired you. Won't the candidate need cheap shots when he gets into office?"

"Apparently not, but in my opinion he is going to miss the sleaze factor, especially when he doesn't get what he wants want from Congress."

A second man came up. "Did you make cheap shots also?" I asked him.

"No, I was in charge of taking the low road. Whenever the political campaign decided to take the low road, I produced something to enable them to do exactly that. For example, we leaked the story that an opponent had suffered from mental illness. Then we had our headquarters say they had nothing to do with releasing it, which gave the story a further shove. We followed that up by announcing we could neither confirm nor deny the story, and so were unable to comment on it."

"Is that the furthest you sunk?"

"No. I think the lowest was when we sent the press a photo showing the girlfriend of their candidate secretly doing Jane Fonda exercises."

"Did you have permission?"

"When you make cheap shots you don't need permission."

"Whatever they paid you wasn't nearly enough."

"It was a living. But now I'm out on the street. Nobody cares about a mudslinger once the fighting is over."

"I wouldn't be too sure. There are a lot of talk shows like Morton Downey's that could use somebody as low down as you."

"I never thought of television."

By now hundreds of people were pouring out of the factory. One lady said, "We've risked our health manufacturing negative charges and then they dump us out in the cold."

"There is just so much sleaze you can produce in an election campaign," I reminded her.

"I didn't make sleaze. I wove scurrilous lies."

"You did? Such as?"

"I invented the one which said that, if elected, our opponent would shoot any gray whale which had escaped from the Arctic Circle."

"I heard that one but I didn't believe it," I said.

"I was also in charge of distorting the opposition's stand on defense. When it came off the production line it looked like a Polish sausage."

"You shouldn't have lost your job," I remarked.

"I guess it's part of the game. You lie, cheat and steal for the candidate, but then when he wins he doesn't know you and goes around telling everyone he is really a kinder, gentler person."

The Voter Mandate: This Is No Time For Change

Paul West

WASHINGTON — With voter turnout this week falling to its lowest level since the 1920s, not even President-elect George Bush was willing to claim that he had gained a mandate to govern the nation.

But there appears to have been a mandate of sorts in the 1988 election. Although barely 50 percent of those eligible to vote took part, those who did sent a loud message: at a time of relative prosperity at home and peace abroad, America wants more of the same.

Incumbency, not ideology, was what the election was about, from the presidential level on down. While choosing Ronald Reagan's protege to be his successor, voters strengthened the Democrats' hand in Congress.

Bush and his vanquished rival in post-election comments Wednesday both drew clear and strikingly similar conclusions about the vice president's impressive 40-state victory and his solid 8-point margin in the popular vote.

"I don't know whether I want to use the word 'mandate,'" Bush said at a news conference in Houston. "I would simply say the American people have spoken. The verdict was clear."

That verdict, he said, was to keep the Reagan economic expansion going and continue to pursue further reductions in tensions with the Soviet Union.

Election-day exit polls found that while issues played little part in determining the outcome of the presidential race, the vast majority of Americans want the new president to tackle the federal budget deficit and seek new arms reductions with the Soviet Union.

Third Try

Walter Mears

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the ashes of a lost Democratic presidential campaign, Jesse Jackson heads toward the next one strengthened by new rules and a new role.

Next time, Jackson will begin as the Democrat to beat — which is what somebody almost certainly will do. The odds weigh heavily against the nomination of a black man in 1992, in a party that at times shrank from the word "liberal" during the campaign just ended.

Jackson said he doesn't fear that a liberal can't be elected. "Reaching out, making room, that's liberalism."

There surely will be ample competition, with Democratic names like Bradley, Cuomo, Nunn, Gore and Gephardt and more on the early list of possible entries for 1992. Even as Gov. Michael Dukakis conceded his loss to President-elect Bush his supporters were chanting "ninety-two, ninety-two."

Whatever the field, the standing Jackson won in 1988 and the rules concessions he gained from Dukakis at the Democratic National Convention will make him more formidable next time.

The first step already has been taken. It was a late campaign sprint in behalf of Dukakis. With it, Jackson guarded against any finger-pointing suggesting that he'd done less than his best for the Democratic ticket.

That involvement flows inexorably toward a third quest for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1992.

Delegate selection rules have been amended to Jackson's potential advantage in 1992. In a convention peacemaking deal with Jackson, the Dukakis camp agreed to rules that will award future nominating votes strictly on the basis of proportional representation of the popular vote.

Presidential campaigning has become all but permanent, and defeated candidates go offstage quickly. The new Democratic cast will be auditioning before long.

And Jackson will be looking for a lead role. "Our charge today is to learn well the lessons from this campaign and build upon it as the vision for the next campaign," he has said.

Not lately. He made that observation last summer, at the Atlanta convention, before the general election campaign for the White House even began.

Walter R. Mears, executive editor of The Associated Press, has covered national politics for more than 25 years.

Dukakis, in Boston, also said he saw no Bush mandate.

"Not when the House of Representatives has increased its Democratic membership and the Senate has increased its Democratic membership," he said. "What the American people are saying is that they want continuity, but they also want a government in Washington that will be an activist government."

One of the most dramatic findings in the exit polls was the wide margin by which voters said they would be willing to pay higher taxes, if necessary, to provide universal health insurance and adequate day care for working families and to protect the environment. While Dukakis had pushed these "progressive" ideas in his campaign, many of those who agreed with him voted for Bush anyway.

"People were more willing to accept the continuity and minimal change that Bush offered rather than the riskier change that Dukakis offered," said Harrison Hickman, a Democrat pollster. Like many others, he attributed this to the effectiveness of the Bush campaign in stirring negative feelings about the Democrat.

Bush signaled his intention to carry his successful campaign over into his administration by appointing pollster Robert Teeter, one of his top political strategists, as co-director of his transition team. Teeter is widely expected to assume a major role in a Bush White House.

One secret of Bush's political success, his aides point out, has been the fact that his adversaries have repeatedly underestimated him. The low expectation that many in Washington have for his presidency may be one of the best things the new president has going for him, they add.

At least in his public statements since the election, Bush has gone out of his way to adopt a conciliatory tone. He gave relatively short shrift to the right-wing social agenda and refused to set an anti-abortion litmus test for his judicial appointments.

Soft-pedaling conservative ideology would appear to be a prudent course in light of Tuesday's election, in which individual candidate strengths appeared to matter more than anything else at all levels. The theme of continuity benefited incumbent candidates regardless of their political persuasion.

For example, Bush swept conservative Ohio by landslide proportions. But his victory margin paled beside that of Democrat Howard Metzenbaum, perhaps the most liberal member of the Senate, who won reelection easily over Cleveland's popular Republican mayor.

With voters picking and choosing their way down the ballot, ticket-splitting may well have reached an all-time high.

Well over 90 percent of incumbent congressmen and senators were re-elected. With few exceptions, those who were unseated had been tainted by scandal in some way since the last election.

Cigarette Suits On Back Burner After RJR Buyout

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENSBORO — The Tobacco Products Liability Project, an anti-tobacco group whose office wall is adorned with a "Sue the Bastards" sign, was hopping for joy five months ago as it celebrated the first victory in a cigarette lawsuit.

The mood is quieter these days. Only one lawsuit has been filed since the widower of lung cancer victim Rose Cipollone won a $400,000 judgment against Durham cigarette maker Liggett Group. The number of outstanding lawsuits continues to fall.

And as RJR Nabisco forges ahead with a plan that could turn its R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. into a stand-alone business, the issue of litigation has received remarkably little attention.

Richard Daynard, a Northeastern University law professor and leader of the tobacco litigation group, says he's been getting few calls from reporters or industry analysts.

"I think this point has sort of been lost," he told The Greensboro News & Record in an interview in Boston. "They're totally ignoring the litigation side."

A committee of RJR board members, apparently working to maximize shareholder value, is reviewing several options, including hearing takeover proposals from a management group and two buyout firms.

How it will sort out is unknown. But it is likely that RJR's profitable cigarette business, based in Winston-Salem, will be divorced from most or all of its food holdings, which include Nabisco, Del Monte and Planters LifeSavers.

That could end a diversification into food products that began 25 years ago, a year before the landmark Surgeon General's report that marked the beginning of rougher times for tobacco.

Would an independent Reynolds — and owners of bonds and securities used to finance a deal — be more vulnerable to catastrophic losses from litigation than well-endowed, diversified RJR Nabisco?

Daynard says yes. Stock analysts say no.

It's hardly a new issue. Analysts long have been bullish on tobacco stocks. Daynard has long predicted court losses. And stock in Atlanta-based RJR has long been depressed in relation to other successful consumer products companies, partly because of the specter of losses.

The price discrepancy disappeared Oct. 20, when RJR disclosed the proposed buyout, effectively turning RJR from a lackluster tobacco stock to a more speculative takeover target.

RJR stock closed Thursday at $89.38, up $1.25 on the New York Stock Exchange. Before the buyout announcement, it traded at $55.88.

For the most part, suing tobacco companies has been a losing cause. Of the estimated 338 lawsuits filed against the industry since 1954, plaintiffs have won just one: Cipollone's.

And that was a muted victory. While the jury awarded the spouse $400,000, it gave nothing to Rose Cipollone's estate — meaning a smoker has yet to win a dime from the industry. The jury also turned back claims of a conspiracy among tobacco companies.

Marc Edell, lead attorney in the Cipollone case, estimates he has invested $2 million in eight cigarette lawsuits before getting the relatively small Cipollone award, which Liggett is appealing.

Says John C. Maxwell Jr., an analyst with Wheat, First Securities in Richmond, Va.: "You don't need to have a Harvard business school education to know if you invest $2 million and get $400,000 back, you haven't made a very good investment."

From the industry's perspective, cigarette litigation has been anything but cancerous. Reynolds says the number of cases facing the industry has fallen from a peak of 147 in March 1987 to 85 this month. Reynolds says it is a party to 50 cases, half the level of the earlier period.

For the immediate term, bad news on the litigation front also seems less than likely because cases set for trial are subject to legal delays.

"There are two or three cases scheduled to go to trial in 1989, but I wouldn't bet my last dollar on them going to trial in the next year," Daynard said.

But for the long haul, Daynard insists the industry is vulnerable. He defends the limited victory in Cipollone as an important building block. He also draws parallels to asbestos litigation, where it took nearly a decade between the first victory for a plaintiff and the first multimillion-dollar award, made in 1980.

Still, industry opponents aren't forecasting imminent demise of tobacco companies.

"I don't think in the near future these cases are going to have a significant impact on their financial stability," Edell said.

His associate, Cynthia Walters, says she hopes cigarette companies eventually will leave the business because of declining consumption, not litigation.

"I don't think the lawsuits will put them out of their business," she said. But Daynard said he thinks it's just a matter of time before a jury scores a big verdict. And he says a privately owned Reynolds, burdened with high debt, could be more vulnerable.

Securities to finance a buyout, he says, could be "the junkiest of junk bonds" because of the double whammy of huge debts and the specter of litigation losses.

Analysts disagree. Wheat First's Maxwell notes Reynolds is such a strong and consistent generator of cash its securities could prove a bet ter bet than many other junk bonds.

For some observers, including Maxwell and Neal Kaplan at Interstate-Johnson Lane in Charlotte, litigation simply isn't a relevant issue for Reynolds. Kaplan doesn't expect the industry to lose. But even if companies do lose, he says, it is easy enough for them to raise prices a notch, effectively passing on those costs to their customers.

Health Care Improvements Urged By AIDS Task Force

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The N.C. AIDS Task Force is finishing a report that urges better coordination of outpatient, hospice and nursing home services and stronger anti-discrimination laws to protect people infected with the AIDS virus.

The report, which also urges increased state funding to help people with AIDS pay for drug therapies and health insurance premiums, will go next month to state Department of Human Resources Secretary David Flaherty.

In a draft report to Flaherty, the task force warns that "failure to make adjustments in the provision of health care for this epidemic will result in large amounts of care being provided in hospitals, especially tertiary-care hospitals — the most expensive place to provide care — and the health care system's ability to provide care for other patients will be impaired."

By 1991, North Carolinians dying from AIDS or infected with the virus may need as much as $112 million worth of hospital care a year, the report says. The document adds that the expense could be offset by better coordination of services.

State handicap law already protects people with AIDS from discrimination in jobs, housing, transportation and public accommodations. But the law is less clear on whether similar protection is afforded people who are infected with the virus but show no symptoms of the fatal disease.

Almost 78,000 cases of AIDS have been reported nationwide since 1981. Officials said 631 cases have been reported in North Carolina, and the number is expected to double or triple in the next three years. The Greensboro News & Record reported.

As people with AIDS lose their jobs and their health coverage because of discrimination or increasing illness, they must turn to Medicaid to pay for health care that too often emphasizes costly hospital services.

The task force, a panel of health-care experts who advise Flaherty on how to control the AIDS epidemic and provide cost-efficient care for people with AIDS, recommends that state money be targeted for less-expensive outpatient services, including care in hospices, nursing homes and group homes.

The group also recommends that the Department of Human Resources encourage hospitals and nursing homes to set aside beds specifically for hospice and nursing home care of people with AIDS.

In its draft report, the task force also proposes a team approach to caring for people with AIDS that would eliminate the fragmentation of medical services. An ombudsman would oversee and coordinate a variety of services for the patient.

Other task force proposals include:

- Educating state lawyers about the special legal needs of people with AIDS and encouraging a referral network that specializes in AIDS litigation.

- Encouraging the General Assembly to appropriate $1.5 million in 1990 and 1991 to supplement federal monies and help needy patients to buy AZT, a costly drug that provides some relief and extends lives.

- Asking the Department of Human Resources to spend about $500,000 in 1990 and 1991 to help volunteer AIDS services organizations hire full-time staff.

School Bond Issues Gained Support From N.C. Voters

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — North Carolina voters are supporting bond issues to build new schools because they see deteriorating, often overcrowded facilities, educators say.

"I think people are seeing that indeed we have reached a critical point and that action has to be taken," said Earl Watson, superintendent of the Greene County school system.

Voters showed a strong willingness to build new schools in Tuesday's elections by easily passing school bond issues in six counties, giving the state the most bond money for school construction in its history.

Bond issues passed in Caswell, Chowan, Greene, Northampton, Orange and Tyrrell counties, the News and Observer of Raleigh reported Thursday.

Combined with 10 issues approved earlier this year, a total of $333 million in bond issues has been approved since the beginning of the year. That is more than twice the $163 million in bond issues approved two years ago — the state's previous high.

North Carolina is raising the most money for school construction in its history this year, said Darrell Spencer, assistant state superintendent for school planning.

"We may very well be second in the nation in terms of total school construction for public schools," said Spencer. Only Florida is spending more, he said.

Northampton County residents approved their first school bond issue in the last 25 years. Unofficial vote totals showed the issue passing 4,173 to 1,384, said Superintendent Willis B. McLeod. The $7 million in bond money will be combined with $3 million provided by the state to build a 450-student middle school and a new 600-student high school.

Orange County voters Tuesday approved a $22 million bond issue by a vote of 25,000 to 9,486. The county school system will spend $9 million to build a 650-student elementary school, expand and renovate two other elementary schools, add air conditioning to a high school and remodel two junior high schools. The Chapel Hill-Carrboro school system will spend $13 million to renovate and add classrooms to a high school, two junior high schools and two elementary schools.

Caswell County residents voted 4,926 to 2,303 in favor of a $9 million bond issue to build two 600-student elementary schools by 1992.

Residents in Green County voted 4,010 to 1,203 for a $4.5 million bond issue to build a 750-student middle school.

Thurmond Honored

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — South Carolina Sen. Strom Thurmond sounded a familiar note as an Alabama veterans group cited him for his outspoken support of a strong defense and veterans' affairs.

"The only thing dictators know is power, military power," the Republican said Thursday. "When you've got military power, then you can back up a strong foreign policy. Military power keeps a country free."

Thurmond, 85, was presented with the third annual Patriot of the Year award by the Mobile Bay Area Veterans Day Commission.

He was also cited for his 34-year career in the Senate. He is a longtime member of the Armed Services Committee and also serves on the Veterans Affairs Committee.

"I don't know of any quality stronger, hardly, than to be called a patriot," Thurmond said. "If you're a patriot you believe in the country where you live, you believe in the flag and what it stands for, and you believe in keeping that country prepared."

Thurmond fought in World War II and received 18 decorations and awards. Before running for the Senate, he served as governor of South Carolina and ran for president in 1948 as the nominee of the Dixiecrats who broke away from the Democratic Party.

Also attending Thursday's ceremony were Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala.; Rep. Sonny Callahan, R-Ala., former Sen. Jeremiah Denton, R-Ala.; and Mobile Mayor Arthur Outlaw.

"He's a legend in the South, he's a legend in the U.S. Senate," Heflin said of Thurmond. "He's one of the most remarkable individuals I have ever known."

Pit Bulls In Dog House

GREENSBORO (AP) — Cissy, Angel and Buster are back in the dog house — sedated, locked up and lonely because their owner hasn't built one that satisfies county authorities.

The three Greensboro pit bulls, who made headlines last summer after mauling to death a neighborhood puppy, were tranquilized by sheriff's deputies Thursday night and hauled to the county animal shelter following what authorities described as the repeated refusal of owner Keith Bradley to confine the dogs in accordance with county regulations.

Arrest warrants charging Bradley and his girlfriend, Carolyn Harrison, with failure to properly confine the dogs have been issued, but they were not served. Neither was at the house when the dogs were seized from the fenced back yard about 5:30 p.m.

Under the ordinance, adopted by the health department after the pit bulls mauled the beagle puppy July 27, the dogs were required to be confined in an escape-proof 5-foot-by-15-foot cage with a chain link cover and a concrete floor.

The pit bulls, frequent targets of complaint by neighbors, broke open a gate to attack the 9-month-old puppy after it approached their pen looking to play. Since then, Bradley had built a wood and chain-link cage, but neighbors continued to complain that the animals were roving the entire back yard.

Dear Pitt County Citizens:

My Family, the Committee to Elect Farney Moore, and I sincerely thank you, the Citizens of District One and all Pitt County for your untiring and diligent support of my candidacy for Pitt County Commissioner. It was our victory of, by, and for the People. I will ever try to be worthy of your trust.

Respectfully,

Farney Moore

Democrats: GOP Success No Mandate To Reform

By John Fleisher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Democratic state lawmakers say they don't interpret the results of Tuesday elections as a mandate to overhaul the legislative process, even though Gov. Jim Martin, Lt. Gov.-elect Jim Gardner and many of the 13 new GOP lawmakers attacked the system.

Rep. Joe Hackney, D-Orange, said circumstances were different in each of the districts where a Republican unseated a Democrat.

"The message the voters are sending varies greatly from district to district," Hackney said Thursday.

"I assume that in those areas where incumbents were displaced that some sort of message could be read into that. It wasn't the case in my area."

"I just don't see it as a blanket indictment of the General Assembly," said Sen. Richard Conder, D-Rockingham, who hopes to be the Senate majority leader for the session that begins in January.

But Alan Pugh, one of Martin's political advisers, said the Democrats might continue suffering at the polls if they believe the voters do not want change.

"Surely the Republicans who beat Democratic legislators were campaigned on things like pork barrel and the veto," Pugh said. "A lot of these Democrats just barely survived this time. We could have elected another 10 or so."

The message from the voters was "to stop lobbying shells at each other and cooperate," he said. "I'm not saying they (Democrats) have to lie down and roll over, but they have to work with the governor in a constructive way. They've got to resist stripping Jim Gardner. ... And they've got to let the people vote on the veto."

Since Martin took office in 1985 and began clashing with the Democrats, he and other Republicans have made attacks on the Legislature a rallying cry. Their litany of complaints includes erosion of Martin's power, the process through which state money is appropriated for local projects that critics call "pork barrel" spending, the secretive dominance of the budget by a small group of Democrats known as the "supersub," and the refusal to put the issue of gubernatorial veto power to a state referendum.

Gardner built his campaign on a call for abolishing secret meetings, spreading the power among rank-and-file lawmakers, and giving Martin's programs a fair hearing.

He and Martin contended that voters were fed up with what he called the Democrats' heavy-handedness. At a post-election news conference Wednesday, Gardner warned that voters would retaliate again in 1990 if the Senate's Democratic majority strips from him the power to appoint committees and refer bills.

Conder said a business group's survey had shown that the General Assembly has a high approval rating. Hackney, however, said it was not unusual for a governor to score political points by making the Legislature a whipping boy.

"Between presidents and Congress and governors and legislatures, the governor or the president is always the more popular because you have a personality versus an institution," Hackney said. "The question is, do people like or trust or approve of their individual legislators?"

Some Democrats acknowledged that there was some voter unhappiness with their tactics, but said it stemmed from lack of understanding of the legislative process. Also, the Republicans have outmaneuvered them in the public-relations arena, they said.

"There's a shortage of information out there," said Rep. C.R. Edwards, D-Cumberland. "We just haven't gotten the message out. The Republicans took credit for a lot of things we did, a lot of the good things, and blamed us for the bad."

"The Democrats need to start putting their spin on things," said Al Adams, a lobbyist and former state representative from Raleigh. "The Republicans have dominated the means of public information. The Democrats are losing on issues where they should be strong."

Surgery Lawsuit

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — The family of a Forsyth County woman who died in 1986 after surgery to repair injuries suffered in an auto accident is suing Forsyth Memorial Hospital and several doctors involved in the woman's care.

The lawsuit says that 40-year-old Mary Jo Durbin died Nov. 14, 1986, at Forsyth Memorial. The lawsuit contends that doctors misdiagnosed her injuries at the hospital emergency room on Nov. 11, sent her home and then botched surgical procedures after she was admitted to the hospital the following day.

The wrongful death lawsuit was filed by Sonja Durbin, the administrator of Mrs. Durbin's will. The lawsuit names as defendants Forsyth County Hospital Authority Inc., Forsyth Emergency Services, Winston-Salem Anesthesia Associates and five doctors — Clinton R. Soriano, a surgeon; George D. Lynch and Richard L. Fireman, emergency room physicians; and Margare F. Carter and Sara J.T. Jones, anesthesiologists.

The lawsuit asks for compensatory and punitive damages of more than $10,000 against each defendant. State law prohibits such lawsuits from listing the actual amount of money sought, so the damages requested could be considerably higher if the case goes to trial.

Guilty Plea Entered

STATESVILLE (AP) — A Davie County teen-ager charged with first-degree murder has pleaded guilty to first-degree burglary and armed robbery.

Thomas Mark Adams, 18, of Cooleemee pleaded guilty in Iredell Superior Court, where his murder trial continued Thursday.

The murder, burglary and robbery charges were filed against Adams in connection with the death of Mildred Hendrix Foster, 70, of Cooleemee. She was found dead at her home on Dec. 13, 1987.

The woman had been stabbed several times and a small amount of money had been taken from her home.

Suspended Sentence

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A 16-year-old West Charlotte High School student was given a six-month suspended sentence and 200 hours of community service after pleading guilty to carrying a gun at a junior high school.

Sean Wesley Jones was charged with carrying a loaded .22-caliber sawed-off rifle on the Cochrane Junior High School campus on Oct. 18. The crime is a misdemeanor.

Charlotte-Mecklenburg school board chairwoman Ashley Hogewood attended the sentencing hearing Tuesday to express the board's concern about firearms in the school. It was the first time a board member attended such a hearing, part of a new plan to curb this year's sharp increase in the number of guns found in schools.

Mecklenburg County District Judge William Scarborough gave Jones the six-month jail sentence, suspended for five years on the condition that he stay off all Charlotte-Mecklenburg school grounds until he's no longer expelled.

He also was ordered to destroy the weapon and perform the community service "at the hardest labor they can find him," Scarborough said.

Expensive Operations

DURHAM (AP) — A consulting firm "significantly underestimated" the cost of providing open heart surgery at Durham County General Hospital, which has resulted in a 50 percent increase in proposed charges for the procedure, according to hospital officials.

Officials determined the cost of providing cardiac surgery would be nearly $1 million more than anticipated after reviewing an estimate developed by Khi Systems, a health care consulting firm.

The hospital corporation board approved on Wednesday a revised budget of $1.27 million for the cardiac surgery program, pending approval by the state Certificate of Need Section of an increase in the proposed rate structure. Khi Systems projected in 1986 that the cost of starting an open heart surgery program would be $325,000.

The original cost projections did not fully consider the impact of an open heart surgery program on the intensive care unit and other services, said Bill Major, the hospital's vice president of finance. The unit and other related services will need to be expanded, and the estimated cost of equipment and renovation of the surgical unit for heart surgery were low, he said.

'Empire-Building'

GREENSBORO (AP) — Consumer advocate Ralph Nader says the proposed buyout of RJR Nabisco is "sheer empire-building" that will hurt the economy.

"Where's that going to come from?" Nader said of the $20 billion price tag for RJR Nabisco.

Nader spoke Wednesday to about 230 people at the N.C. Conference of the Bank Administration Institute, an organization of bank administration and operations executives. The program focused on customer services at banks, but Nader expanded the session to include the proposed buyouts of large corporations.

Pointing to the Philip Morris Co. bid for Kraft Inc., Nader said corporations no longer buy other companies to manage them more efficiently. They expand simply to keep up with their American competitors, he said, and forget that smaller foreign companies have often outdone the United States giants.

"All the trains are heading for a crash," Nader said. He predicted that the combination of "wide-open government" and merger mania would be disastrous for the economy.

Bandit Strikes Again

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Winston-Salem police are investigating another attack by the so-called "Blue Light Bandit" after a woman was forced off the road.

The woman, who asked that she not be identified, called the Winston-Salem Police Department about 11:15 p.m. Tuesday and said that she was followed from Old Walkertown Road to Northampton Drive by a black Chevrolet Blazer with a blue light flashing on the dashboard.

The woman told police she sped off when she saw the blue light, but the vehicle pulled alongside her on Northampton Drive. When the Blazer was parallel to her car, the driver forced her off the road and into the front yard of a home.

COLUMBIA, S.C. — A U.S. Bankruptcy judge cited the doctrine "God is not mocked" and ordered Jim and Tammy Bakker and a former top aide to repay $7.7 million to PTL for reaping undeserved profits from the TV ministry.

Judge Rufus Reynolds said he determined that the Bakkers and former PTL vice president David Taggart were overpaid during their last four years at the ministry.

Reynolds said in his order filed Thursday, "In conforming with the religious overture of this case, this court observes that James Bakker either overlooked or ignored parts of the Bible, including 1 Timothy 6:10 ... 'For the love of money is the root of all evil; which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith and pierced themselves through with many sorrows.'"

Reynolds said Galatians 6:7 should be applied to the PTL case: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

Solon Seeks Beach Money

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NORTH CHARLESTON, S.C. — A state lawmaker has proposed a 1-cent increase in the accommodations tax in coastal counties to pay for the cost of renourishing South Carolina's eroding beaches.

"We have to do something. If someone else has a better idea how to do it, then I'm open to it," Lenoir Sturkie, R-Lexington, told about 90 leaders of coastal communities at a workshop Thursday.

Sturkie has proposed the accommodations tax increase as a way of financing a state beach renourishment trust fund.

"It seems to me beach renourishment is the only feasible long-term method to best enhance the beaches of South Carolina," he said, adding, "I know the accommodations tax is a very difficult issue for you folks to have to deal with."

"I've never voted for a tax increase that I'm aware of. If I did, it was in my sleep and that would have had to have been a nightmare," he added.

Sturkie has drafted a bill to introduce in the legislature in January that would create the trust fund and a committee to oversee its operation.

He said it was unlikely the state legislature would continue providing money in bond bills for beach renourishment, although lawmakers did approve $10 million this year.

The new tax levy would generate approximately $5 million next year for renourishment, Sturkie said.

Judge Says Bakkers, Top Aide Must Repay PTL $7.7 Million

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PTL, now under administration of the bankruptcy court, sued the Bakkers and Taggart last Feb. 1 for $52 million, alleging they grossly mismanaged the ministry by taking huge sums for personal use between 1984 and 1987, while PTL couldn't pay its bills.

Reynolds heard the case in September and October in U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Columbia.

During the suit's trial, which ended Oct. 20, PTL dropped its claim to all but $7.7 million. Reynolds's judgment is the first time any court has ruled that Bakker or other PTL leaders used PTL donors' money improperly.

In the order, Reynolds said Jim Bakker, who founded PTL and left in March 1987 after admitting to a tryst with former church secretary Jessica Hahn, must pay PTL $4.9 million. Tammy Bakker, his wife and former co-host of the PTL Club television show, must repay $677,397, and Taggart must repay $1 million.

Judge Says Bakkers, Top Aide Must Repay PTL $7.7 Million

PTL attorney R. Bradford Leggett of Winston-Salem, N.C., said, "I think the judge's opinion made a clear suggestion that when people contribute to support a ministry, there is a trust involved that must be dealt with in good faith."

Reynolds, in his 50-page explanation for the judgments, said the expenditures at PTL under the Bakker administration were "unbelievable" and a "waste of PTL's money." He also accused the administrators of "gross mismanagement" and "total disregard for reality."

Reynolds also said it appeared the PTL board of directors was never informed that the ministry and Christian theme park near Fort Mill was in "any kind of precarious financial position."

Bakker and Taggart, Reynolds said, "approached the management of the corporation with reckless indifference to the financial consequences of their acts."

The judge rejected Bakker's attempts during the trial to justify the $6.6 million in salary and bonuses he and his wife collected between 1984 and 1987.

"We plan to appeal," said Ryan

Hovis, a Rock Hill attorney representing the Bakkers. Hovis said he could not comment on Reynolds' order but said Bakker could not repay the ministry because "he doesn't have anything."

Hovis said Bakker is "obviously disappointed, as I think anybody would expect him to be."

A secretary at the Bakkers' new organization, Jim and Tammy Ministries in Pineville, N.C., said Bakker will not comment until he reads the order.

Taggart's attorney, Ben Cotten of Washington, could not be reached for comment in telephone calls to his home and office.

A federal grand jury in Charlotte has been investigating Bakker and other former PTL officials for more than a year.

Last month, Bakker and several former PTL associates were notified they are targets of that investigation, which focuses on possible mail and wire fraud, conspiracy and criminal tax violations.

Leggett said that although the Bakkers and Taggart have the right to appeal Reynolds' judgment to U.S. District Court, PTL intends to begin trying to collect from them.

Michael Dukakis now turns his attention to Massachusetts

For Vanquished Presidential Aspirants, Life Must Go On

By Harry F. Rosenthal
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — After a presidential election, the winner gets to live in the the White House. The loser doesn't, but life goes on — even political life.

"I'll be working with the people of Massachusetts," said Michael Dukakis, who would have preferred to work with the people of the whole country. He is one of the majority of losers in recent years who either had a political home to return to or who wasted no time finding another one.

Quick now, name the losers of presidential campaigns in the last 40 years and their fate after failing to get the big prize.

For the record, they were Republican Thomas E. Dewey in 1948; Democrat Adlai Stevenson in 1952 and 1956; Republican Richard Nixon in 1960; Republican Barry Goldwater in 1964; Democrat Hubert Humphrey in 1968; Democrat George McGovern in 1972; Republican Gerald Ford in 1976; Democrat Jimmy Carter in 1980, and Democrat Walter Mondale in 1984.

With the exception of Ford and Carter, who occupy a special place because they lost after being in the White House, and Mondale, each of the losers continued on in public service. Mondale may yet run for the Senate again in 1990.

Harry Truman, who chose not to run for a second elected term, once described the fate that awaits former presidents.

"Most people never stop to think about what happens to a man who has been president of the United States," he wrote in "Mr. Citizen." "The day he is elected president he suddenly finds himself at the top of the world, where he sits for a while, holding the destinies of millions in his hands, making decisions that change the course of history, conferring with rulers and the leaders of nations.

"Then just as suddenly he is again at the level of John Jones, who lives next door."

Carter became the man next door by moving back to Plains, Ga., but not as a peanut farmer. Instead, he took up woodworking, traveling, meeting with world leaders, climbing Mount Kilimanjaro, becoming a visiting professor at Emory University and devoting time to the Carter Presidential Center where he hosts international conferences.

Ford went straight from the White House onto the golf course — he played in the Bing Crosby Pro-Am Tournament the day after Carter's inauguration — and has lived the easy-going life ever since.

He also turned into a one-man corporation, lending his name to boards of directors, lecturing for fees of $15,000 and more, entering into a partnership to buy radio stations and receiving $1 million for his memoirs.

Ford opposed Ronald Reagan's 1980 bid for election and encouraged other challengers, toyed for a time with entering the race himself, and for one day at the Republican convention looked as if he might be Reagan's choice for vice president.

Mondale's disappearance from the spotlight has been so complete that Democrats rarely mention him.

"Oh, I miss it a little," he said in Atlanta during the Democratic National Convention, but added: "You know, I had my say, and I don't miss the 18-hour days."

Mondale practices law in Washington and Minneapolis and there's been some talk — not from him — that he may try to reclaim his Senate seat from Minnesota in 1990.

The other presidential losers took their lumps and started anew.

After his second consecutive defeat for president, in 1948, Dewey said, "I have been graduated at a comparatively early age to the role of elder statesman, which someone has aptly defined as a politician who is no longer a candidate for any office."

A year later he wrote a friend: "Nothing could arise now or in the future that would lead me to be the nominee of our party in 1952. My decision on this matter is as certain and final as death and the staggering New Deal taxes."

After more such disclaimers, he ran in 1950 for his third term as governor of New York and won. Dewey died in 1971.

Stevenson, the eloquent but reluctant Democratic candidate in 1952 and 1956, was appointed by President John F. Kennedy to be U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, a post he held until his death in 1965.

When he lost the second time, Stevenson recalled the Lincoln line that he felt like a little boy who had stubbed his toe in the dark: "Too old to cry, but it hurt too much to laugh."

After losing to Kennedy in 1960, Nixon returned to California to practice law and pressures began to build on him to run for governor in 1962.

"The real problem was that I had no great desire to be governor of California," he wrote of his defeat in that race. And yet, he was bitter enough about losing that he snarled at reporters: "You won't have Nixon to kick around anymore, because, gentlemen, this is my last press conference."

It wasn't, of course, and Nixon spent the next six years earning the Republican chips that he would cash in to be elected president in 1968.

Goldwater cooled his political heels for four years after his loss to Lyndon Johnson, then was re-elected to the Senate without the seniority he had built up in the previous two terms.

He remained the voice of conservatives, once characterizing a Carter presidential announcement of plans for recognition of China as "10 minutes that lived in infamy."

Humphrey, who had been vice president for four years when he lost to Nixon in 1968, spent a little while as a professor at Macalester College and the University of Minnesota, then won back his Senate seat in 1970. He ran again for the Democratic nomination in 1972 but withdrew in the face of overwhelming odds at the party's convention. He died of cancer in 1978.

McGovern, the South Dakota senator who won that nomination, stayed in the Senate until 1980 when he lost his seat. He made a third try for the presidency in 1984 in a primary campaign that lasted less than six months before he dropped out.

Tone Of Bush White House Will Differ But Policies May Not Vary Much From Era Of Ronald Reagan

By Terence Hunt
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — George Bush will bring to the White House a more pragmatic, less ideological brand of leadership than Ronald Reagan and almost assuredly will get more involved in the day-to-day operation of the presidency, political analysts predict.

Reagan saw the presidency as a pulpit for setting a national agenda. Bush seems more interested in the mechanics of governing and in management.

It was clear on the day Reagan was elected that he would do: freeze government hiring, cut taxes and spending and build up the Pentagon.

Bush, on the morning after he was elected, said he would use the 73-day transition to the presidency to set the priorities for his administration.

While the policies of Reagan and Bush administrations may not vary much, there will be a different tone in the White House come Jan. 20.

Bush, who promises a kinder and gentler nation, says the stillness of the White House will be broken by the sound of 10 grandchildren laughing and crying.

The jelly bean jars in the Reagan White House probably will be replaced with stacks of cracklin' pork rinds, Bush's favorite snack.

Reagan's favorite magazine was "Human Events," a conservative political journal. Bush's favorite is "Bassmaster," a fishing journal.

Bush, 64, is left-handed. He likes country music, vodka martinis and Mexican food. He jogs several times a week, covering two miles in about 18 minutes.

For fun, he races his Cigarette boat off the chilly waters of Maine. He's an avid tennis player and fisherman and also likes to play horse-shoes.

An Episcopalian, he attends church regularly with his wife, Barbara. They've been married 43 years. They have five children, all adults now, and dote on their 10 grandchildren.

Bush will take over from a popular president who charmed the nation with his easy-going manner, wit and polished communications skills.

Bush readily acknowledges he's different.

"I may not be the most eloquent, but I learned early that eloquence won't draw oil from the ground."

Bush said last summer. "I may sometimes be a little awkward but there's nothing self-conscious in my love of country. I am a quiet man but I hear the quiet people others don't."

On another occasion, he said, "My leadership might not be the most charismatic but I'm not sure that we need a lot of razzle dazzle. There's probably enough drama in the world already."

Conservatives are worried that Bush, although he took a hard line during his presidential campaign, will turn into a moderate in the White House.

Indeed, his political leanings have drifted over the years. Bush was a Goldwater Republican in 1966 when he was first elected to Congress, a Rockefeller Republican in 1980 when he ran for president and has been a Reagan Republican ever since.

"I suspect that George Bush will want a staff that includes sort of credentialed experts as opposed to ideological soul mates around him," said Republican consultant David Keene, who once worked for Bush.

"The difference between the styles of (Reagan and Bush) is that Bush is out of an intellectual and political tradition in which the emphasis is on finding the right people in public service, seeking their advice and believing that goals come out of having the right people in the right places," said Keene.

As a onetime envoy to China and the United Nations, as well as chief of the CIA, Bush has a solid foundation in foreign policy. Reagan in his first year in office practically ignored foreign policy, devoting his attention to budget and tax cuts. Bush says he wants a NATO summit conference and an early meeting with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Stephen Hess, a senior fellow in governmental studies at the Brookings Institution, said that Reagan "is the most hands-off manager of the modern presidency. I suspect that George Bush will be not nearly as hands off...."

Echoing that theme, Lyn Nofziger, who was Reagan's first political director in the White House, said Bush would be "probably more involved in the presidency and the day-to-day operations (but) probably not a hell of a lot more. He's not a Jimmy Carter or Michael Dukakis." Both Carter and Dukakis are known for their attention to detail.

Hess said Bush "certainly seems to share Reagan's disdain for the press. He, too, doesn't see being too close to the press as being in his interest."

Though Bush has promised to stay the course set by Reagan, Hess said

"each president wants to do things differently than the person he succeeds."

"What kind of president he'll be will depend largely on things that happen in the next four years that are largely out of his control — whether the Iranians take over the U.S. Embassy in Tehran or something like that," Hess said. "There are going to be some things that happen in the next four years in which the mettle of the man will have to be assessed."

On that very point, Bush told an audience recently that the Oval Office was a place for "the moments that cut through the expected and the everyday and force us, through action, to define ourselves."

Bush's Son Will Testify

DENVER (AP) — Neil Bush, son of president-elect George Bush, has been called to testify about his role as an officer of an insolvent Colorado savings and loan in a suit filed by homeowners.

Bush wasn't named as a defendant in the lawsuit but he served as a director of Silverado Banking Savings and Loan, which made loans to The Township, a financially-troubled, 82-unit townhouse project in suburban Denver.

Four homeowners sued Silverado last year, alleging they should have been told when they bought their homes in 1985 that Silverado was preparing to foreclose on the developer, Meridian Land Corp.

The homeowners also allege that Silverado exercised substantial control over the project, which is only half finished, and that Township units suffer from a number of construction problems.

Bush was a director of Silverado for three years, but stepped down in August, citing a potential conflict of interest with his father's presidential campaign.

Silverado reported a $245 million loss on real estate loans the same month.

Chuck Torres, attorney for the Township homeowners, said he wants Bush to explain Silverado's "policy of making high-risk loans."

He said Silverado's lending practices led his clients to invest in "a financially unsound development."

Jim Nesland, attorney for Bush, said the Denver oilman will answer questions, but he added the subpoena amounts to "harassment."

Tunnel Blast Dead Likened To 'Canaries In Cages'

By James A. Carlson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MILWAUKEE — Three workers killed in an explosion while checking gas levels in a sewer tunnel were acting as guinea pigs, says a safety advocate who calls the project's fatality rate the nation's worst per dollar spent.

"I'm absolutely convinced that this particular tragedy is inexcusable and absolutely avoidable," Joseph Kinney, executive director of the National Safe Workplace Institute in Chicago, said of Thursday's accident. "It did not need to happen."

A city official defended safety procedures, and said investigators did not know what triggered the blast.

In all, six workers have died since 1986 in the $2.1 billion deep-tunnel sewer project, the largest public works project in Wisconsin history. Last March, the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration cited the contractor for inadequate ventilation.

The explosion occurred around 9 a.m. after the three went into the tunnel to check a high level of methane, a gas formed by natural decomposition, officials said. The methane had caused workers to evacuate.

Rescue workers, who had to clear explosive fumes and remove twisted wreckage while contending with poor lighting and knee-deep mud, took eight hours to remove the bodies.

"It was a mess," said fire Capt. Bert Bemann. "It was like hell."

The victims were identified as Ronald Kohne, 49, a tunnel superintendent from Big Sandy, Tenn.; Rick Sochacki, 34, a safety officer from South Holland, Ill.; and Tony Bell, 25, of Sturgeon Bay, a shift foreman.

Autopsies were scheduled for today to determine what killed the men. District Attorney E. Michael McCann began an investigation, saying the number of deaths on the project had concerned him earlier. OSHA also sent an investigator to the site.

"It seems to me that the three men were the modern-day equivalent to canaries in cages in the old coal mines. If a canary died, the miner knew to get out.

Kinney questioned why remote-controlled monitoring equipment could not have been used instead of sending the men back into the tunnel after a methane problem had already caused workers to evacuate it.

Kinney said the project has the worst death rate per dollar spent of any such waste water or heavy construction project in the nation. His non-profit institute, which is funded by foundation grants and contributions, compiles statistics on workplace safety.

But Shelia Payton, chairwoman of the Milwaukee Metropolitan Sewerage District, defended the project's safety policies.

"These were inspectors. These were trained people," Payton said. "They went in there with the proper equipment to check the gas levels."

The connector tunnel is to carry water into a deep tunnel designed to serve as an underground reservoir for sewage at times of high flow and to prevent overloading of district sewage treatment facilities.

Payton said sensors on a drilling machine initially detected a pocket of methane. The work crew was evacuated and the tunnel was ventilated. After 15 minutes, the three men went in with detectors to see if work could resume.

"Everything went according to the procedures that had been laid out beforehand," she said.

Payton said officials would adjust procedures to prevent a recurrence once they determined the explosion's cause.

S.A. Healy Co. of McCook, Ill., the connector tunnel contractor, has a good safety record, she said.

However, OSHA spokesman Gerald Cunningham said his agency fined the company $620 for inadequate ventilation in part of a tunnel last March. That violation and lesser ones were immediately corrected, Cunningham said.

None of the three previous deaths on the project involved gas. One worker fell in an air shaft, another was hit by a falling rock and the third was crushed in a conveyor system.

The 11-year project, which is about half completed, is the result of a federal lawsuit by Illinois over the occasional flow of raw sewage into Lake Michigan when Milwaukee's treatment plants become overloaded by heavy rainfall.

Payton said the project is critical to protecting the metropolitan area's water quality. "This project must go on," she said.

FBI Moving Carefully In Investigating 'Virus'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — FBI Director William Sessions says the agency expects to finish within a few weeks the first phase of a criminal investigation of the computer "virus" that attacked and disabled computer networks nationwide last week.

Sessions said Thursday the bureau is examining a wide range of possible criminal violations.

A 23-year-old Cornell University graduate student has told friends he created the virus, a tiny program that spreads throughout computer networks and disrupts them.

Sessions, however, told reporters "there has to be a very careful and deliberate look at it before I would ever go out and suggest that a person had actually committed a crime."

"You have to move carefully, and I think we've done it properly in this case," he added.

Sessions said investigators are trying to determine whether statutes concerning wire fraud, malicious mischief or unlawful access to stored communications may have been broken.

Earlier this week, the FBI said it was focusing on a federal law that prohibits fraud or related activity in connection with computers, the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act of 1986.

Cornell student Robert T. Morris Jr. has told friends that he created the computer virus that disabled thousands of computers last week, but didn't intend for it to spread as it did.

"We often look at intent as being knowing and intentional doing of an act which the law forbids and knowing that the law forbids it to be done," Sessions said. "But we also have other statutes which deal simply with knowingly doing something."

The malicious-mischief statute to which Sessions referred carries a maximum 10-year prison term for anyone who willfully interferes with the use of any communications line controlled by the U.S. government.

The unlawful-access law makes it a crime to prevent authorized access to electronic communications while they are in electronic storage. It carries a maximum six-month jail term if malicious destruction or damage is not involved.

Independent Palestine Expected To Be Declared By Legislature

By Mona Ziade
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALGIERS, Algeria — Palestinian leaders meeting this weekend as a legislature in exile are likely to declare an independent state in the Israeli-occupied territories, senior PLO officials said.

The 450-member Palestinian National Council, at a three-day meeting that begins Saturday, could make its most important decisions since the Arab League created the organization 24 years ago.

The move could have a profound effect on stalled Middle East peace efforts.

But gains in last week's Israeli elections by the right, which opposes giving up any of the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, lend new uncertainty to the Palestinian issue.

Senior officials of the Palestine Liberation Organization said the council will endorse a PLO call for an independent state in the occupied territories, which Israel captured from Jordan and Egypt in 1967 and are home to 1.5 million Palestinians.

They said PLO plans to establish a provisional government probably will be delayed and the timing left to the Palestinian National Council's 70-member Central Council, which oversees resolutions. The National Council includes non-PLO Palestinians.

Pragmatists in the PLO and such moderate Arab states as Egypt and Jordan say declaring independence will be little more than symbolic unless the National Council produces a realistic political program that can gain international support.

PLO leaders have considered a declaration of Palestinian independence for years, but the idea has gained impetus during the 11-month Israeli uprising, during which at least 310 Palestinians and 10 Israelis have been killed.

The rebellion has won widespread sympathy and forced PLO chairman Yasser Arafat to make hard political decisions he had postponed for years or risk losing the leadership of increasingly frustrated Palestinians.

Arafat got another jolt July 31, when King Hussein of Jordan cut legal and administrative links with the West Bank, which Jordan governed from 1950 to 1967, and Palestinians in the Gaza Strip.

Hussein's action left the PLO little choice but to assume responsibility as the sole representative of the Palestinians, a status endorsed by years of Arab summits.

An important question to be answered in Algiers is how far the National Council will go toward recognizing Israel.

Declaration of an independent state will have its legal basis in U.N. General Assembly Resolution 181 of 1947, which proposed splitting Palestine into Jewish and Arab states.

Basing the declaration on the resolution could be interpreted as implicit recognition of Israel, but that is unlikely to satisfy conditions Israel and the United States have set for dealing directly with the PLO.

Once Scorned Revolutionary Honored On 70th Anniversary

By John Daniszewski
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WARSAW, Poland — Communist authorities have resurrected Marshal Jozef Pilsudski, the enigmatic revolutionary with the huge moustache who restored Polish statehood 70 years ago and deposed the government eight years later.

Once consigned to Stalinist oblivion, Pilsudski is increasingly being honored by those same authorities who once scorned him as a reactionary dictator.

The government also is mounting a gala celebration of the anniversary of the birth of the prewar republic. A parliamentarian has asked that today — Nov. 11, the main national holiday before World War II — be officially restored as a state holiday.

A 15-minute nationwide TV news show Thursday featured segments on a school near Wroclaw where a painted-over pre-World War II mural of Pilsudski has been uncovered. Warsaw authorities renamed a park in Pilsudski's honor Wednesday.

Earlier this week, Krakow authorities named a street for Pilsudski and a Warsaw newspaper launched a drive to set up a museum for the marshal in the house he owned in Sulejowek, outside the capital.

The cult of Pilsudski has never quite died out in Poland. Go into the home of nearly every supporter of the banned Solidarity trade union movement and you see on the wall next to the Solidarity emblem and photographs of Polish-born John Paul II the bushy moustache and fiery eyes of Pilsudski.

In recent years the communist party, stressing its role of guarantor of the nation's existence, has begun to embrace popular national symbols such as Pilsudski. But historically, Pilsudski is harder for communists to swallow.

Although he started out as a socialist, he abandoned most leftist trappings soon after taking power.

One of his most-quoted remarks was, "I rode the red streetcar of socialism, but got off at the stop called 'Independence.'"

Pilsudski's orientation was anti-Russian. He dreamed of creating a multinational Central European state that would be large enough to resist both Soviet and German hegemony.

One of his first acts was invading the Ukraine, capturing Kiev. Polish forces eventually were forced to retreat by the Red Army, which in turn seemed on the verge of crossing Poland and spreading communism to Germany in 1920.

But the Poles' brilliant counteraction in mid-August 1920 handed the Red Army a humiliating defeat, still remembered in Poland as the "Miracle on the Vistula."

Lenin sued for peace, giving up large chunks of previously Russian territory that remained in Poland's hands until the Soviet Union took it back at the start of World War II. Pilsudski and "White Poland" were deemed "class enemies."

Pilsudski is considered a hero because he united the country and defended its independence at the end of World War I.

Poland had been erased from the minds of Poles during the previous 123 years, having been partitioned by Prussia, Austria and Russia. World War I and the Bolshevik Revolution saw the collapse of all three partitioning powers, allowing Poland to regain independence.

At the start of World War I, Pilsudski had raised a Polish army and put it in the service of Austria against Russia. But he was imprisoned by Austria's ally Germany when he refused to put his legions under German command.

When German ranks collapsed in a general panic at the end of the war, Pilsudski was freed from the castle where he was held.

After arriving in Warsaw on Nov. 10, 1918, local citizens gave him the title of commander. He ordered the disarmament of remaining German troops and declared the Polish Republic restored. Power was legally transferred to his government Nov. 11 from a Regency Council set up by the Germans.

But his reputation lost some luster in 1926 when, impatient with discord in the elected government, he came out of retirement to stage a military coup in which 300 people were killed.

Although nominally out of power, he became Poland's behind-the-scenes dictator until 1935 when he died and was buried in Krakow's Wawel Castle alongside Polish kings.

His senior officers, calling themselves the "Sanitation" regime, continued to rule until German and Soviet invasions in 1939 again wiped Poland off the map.

Postwar Poland saw a new social order, dominated by communists supported by the Soviet Union. Institutions such as Warsaw University, which had borne the name of Pilsudski, were renamed. Nov. 11 was treated as an ordinary work day.

But 40 years later, the pendulum has swung back, with Pilsudski restored to the status of national hero.

Party and government officials laid flowers on his grave Thursday.

"The most outstanding leader of the independence movement," a TV newscaster intoned.

Synagogue Work Scheduled

A large gathering was on hand Thursday for the symbolic laying of the foundation stone of the synagogue on East Berlin's Oranienburger Strasse, slated for reconstruction over the next few years. The building, which used to be one of the biggest synagogues in Europe, was torched by Nazi hordes on Nov. 9, 1938, and hit by bombs during World War II.

Gayoom Begins Third Term

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — President Maumoon Abdul Gayoom of the Maldives was inaugurated today for a third five-year term after weathering a coup attempt on the Indian Ocean island chain last week, the government said.

"In view of what happened last week, the ceremony was simple. There was no fireworks, no celebrations," said Ahmed Saleem, a Foreign Ministry undersecretary contacted by telephone from New Delhi.

Saleem said 1,200 guests, including delegates from the United States and India, attended the ceremony in Male, the Maldivian capital.

On Nov. 3, an estimated 150 Sri Lankan mercenaries officials tried to overthrow the government but fled the next day when hundreds of Indian paratroopers arrived at Gayoom's request.

At least a dozen people died in fighting between Gayoom's lightly armed militia and the mercenaries, who officials say were hired by a former Maldivian leader who lost to Gayoom in a previous election.

Six other people were killed aboard a cargo ship on which some mercenaries tried to flee, only to be intercepted by the Indian navy.

During the inauguration, Saleem said, "We observed a one-minute silence in memory of those who died while defending their motherland."

The ceremony took place as scheduled in an open-air stadium, despite earlier reports it would be moved to the presidential palace for security.

The 50-year-old president won a third five-year term Sept. 23 in a yes-or-no referendum. About 90 percent of votes cast supported him.

The Maldives is a chain of 2,000 tiny coral islands in the Indian Ocean. Male is about 370 miles south of India's southern tip.

Draft Bills OK'd

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BUDAPEST, Hungary — The communist government approved draft bills to permit other political parties and adopted a resolution allowing conscientious objectors to perform alternative military service, a spokesman said.

The government will present draft bills on the right of association and assembly to parliament next month, government spokesman Gyoergy Marosan said Thursday.

According to the official news agency MTI, Justice Minister Kalman Kulcsar said the right of association bill would allow individuals and legal entities to set up "political parties, trade union, interest representations and other social organizations."

However, he said another law still being drafted would regulate the establishment of political parties, the news agency reported.

This law will determine the status of political parties and will probably be included in the new constitution, the agency said. The new constitution is not expected to be ready before 1990.

There has been extensive debate in Hungary in recent weeks over what some communist leaders and political analysts in Hungary see as the inevitable development of a multi-party system.

The media have carried comment by a wide variety of people on how viable a multi-party system would be under certain conditions.

Prosecution Allowed

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — In a stinging ruling, the state Supreme Court said parents have no right to "make martyrs of their children" by placing their physical health entirely in the hands of faith healers.

The court Thursday allowed the involuntary manslaughter prosecution of Laurie Walker of Sacramento, a Christian Scientist whose 4-year-old daughter died of meningitis in March 1984, 17 days after being taken to a faith healer.

The court rejected arguments that a parent cannot be prosecuted for choosing prayer rather than conventional medical treatment for a child when the choice is made in accordance with church beliefs.

Mrs. Walker's lawyer, Thomas Volk, said he would appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court if the state court refuses to reconsider its decision.

"Spiritual healing is an indispensable part of Christian Science religion," Volk said. Allowing the prosecution of a sincerely believing church member for resorting to spiritual healing "threatens the very heart of Christian Science," he said.

Volk had argued that parents would be protected from prosecution by state law and constitutional freedom of religion.

Deputy Attorney General Clifford Thompson declined to comment on the case.

 BILL & DELORES WINDER

Bill and Delores are laypersons who travel full time in a teaching, healing, evangelistic ministry. Wherever they go, they minister God's healing power with a warm, gentle love and with real authority. Their aim is to restore the healing ministry to the church and to equip clergy and laypeople to minister within their own congregation.
 Delores personally knows what it means to be healed by God. She spent 19 years in constant pain eased only by a tight fitting bodycast and by surgery to sever the nerves in her spinal cord. Near death in 1975, she was completely healed at a Kathryn Kuhlman service of the osteoporosis of the spine, and her severed spinal cord was restored. It was soon after her healing that God called her and Bill into the healing ministry.
 The Winders have a testimony book, Jesus Set Me Free, and teaching tapes available.

Facts About The BIBLE BY JOHN LEHTI

Copyright © John A. Lehti, Distributor: League Plus, Madison, N.Y. NATIONAL SALES REPRESENTATIVE: Dal Advertising Service, 2702 E. Ash St., Goldsboro, N.C. 27530

This is a dramatized version of facts taken from the book of I Samuel intending to show some of the customs of these ancient and traditional times.

SAMUEL AND SAUL

AS SAMUEL AWAITS A SIGN FROM THE LORD TO GUIDE HIM IN CHOOSING A KING FOR ISRAEL, KISH, THE FATHER OF SAUL, APPOINTS HIM TO A TASK....

WHATEVER THOU SAY, THAT SHALL I DO, MY FATHER!

OUR BEASTS OF BURDEN ARE LOST AND WANDERED OFF! TAKE THOU A SERVANT WITH THEE AND GO FIND THEM!

AND SAUL WITH A SERVANT GOES IN SEARCH OF THE LOST ANIMALS!

THEY SEARCH THE LAND THROUGH MT. EPHRAIM, AND THROUGH THE LAND OF SHALISHA, AND THE LAND OF SHALIM— NO WHERE CAN THEY FIND THE LOST ANIMALS, FINALLY...

WE HAD BETTER CEASE LOOKING AND RETURN HOME OR MY FATHER WILL FEAR THAT WE TOO ARE LOST!

BEHOLD THERE IS IN THAT CITY A PROPHET OF GOD— SURELY HE CAN TELL US WHERE THE ANIMALS ARE!

Next Week THE MAIDENS!

Plucky Wife, Big Family Join Bush In White House

Barbara Bush Never Afraid To Be Herself

By Joan Mower
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Barbara Bush seems to have been preparing to become first lady for the 43 years since she married George Bush, her prep-school sweetheart and the first man she ever kissed.

The wife of the president-elect, with her familiar halo of white hair and a trademark pearl choker, has a mind of her own and doesn't shrink from expressing her views to her husband — in private.

"I tell George what I think, and nobody else," she says.

But she made clear she won't be a first lady in the highly visible style of Rosalynn Carter, who participated actively in White House debates with her husband, President Carter. "I leave the public part of it to public officials," she says.

In fact, Mrs. Bush says a certain independence has been her secret to a happy marriage. "We have shared but we have not interfered in each other's life," she said.

If she and her husband differ over a political issue, she won't talk about it publicly anymore. In 1980, she told an interviewer that her husband "has always been against gun control" while she had favored gun control for years.

Asked about that remark today, she replies: "I must have been younger and more foolish in 1980."

Interviewed on a flight to a welcome-home rally in her Rye, N.Y., hometown a few days before her husband's election, Mrs. Bush said it will be "a tough go" living at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, with the inevitable public scrutiny and criticism of her family.

She's disappointed, too, that she'll have to abandon those early-morning walks in her bathrobe with her springer spaniel, Millie, which she enjoyed on the spacious, secluded grounds of the vice president's residence at the Naval Observatory.

Despite her trepidation over being first lady, Mrs. Bush, 63, says "the pluses outweigh the minuses."

She says it will give her a chance to travel, meet world leaders and promote her favorite causes, chiefly literacy and involving the private sector in Head Start and other educational programs for poor children and their families.

She won't be another Nancy Reagan, rail-thin, smooth-skinned and perfectly coiffed.

Mrs. Bush prefers a lacquer-free style, wears the lightest of makeup, eats heartily, laughs boisterously and enjoys a joke, often at her own expense.

Asked if she'll accept dresses loaned by American designers — a practice that landed Mrs. Reagan in hot water — Mrs. Bush replied:

"Listen, if anyone ever offered me anything, I would be beside myself with excitement. ... You know they don't offer them to people my size."

She says she sticks to three or four designers because it's too much trouble to shop for clothes elsewhere.

The vice president, who calls his fun-loving wife "Bar," credits her with helping him win the election.

"She's become a star out there,"

Mrs. Bush says she'll miss early morning

The Associated Press

Bush said recently. "She's very natural and people identify with her." He said her advice to him is the same she gives everyone: "Be yourself. Don't try to be someone you're not."

Mrs. Bush insists she hasn't really changed since she married Bush in 1945, and "I don't think I'm going to change" in the White House. "I've always run the house, taken care of the children, taken care of my grandchildren and worked hard for the causes I'm interested in," she said.

Over the years, the Bushes have lived in 17 cities and 28 homes as her husband moved from Yale University student to Navy pilot, Texas oilman, congressman, U.N. ambassador, Republican national chairman, U.S. envoy to China, CIA director and president.

Along the way, they raised five children, four sons and a daughter, and lost a 3-year-old girl to leukemia. All the Bush offspring are grown and married. The youngest is 29.

There are 10 Bush grandchildren, one of whom lives close enough to visit frequently. She is Marshall, 2, daughter of son Marvin Bush and his wife, Margaret, of suburban Alexandria, Va.

Reared in the bosom of privilege, the former Barbara Pierce grew up in Rye, a well-heeled suburb of New York City, as daughter of the head of McCall Publishing Co.

The third of four children, she met her future husband at a Christmas dance at Rye. She was 16 and home for the holidays from Ashley Hall, a posh private boarding school for girls in Charleston, S.C. He was 17, a student at Phillips Academy at Andover, Mass., whose home was in nearby Greenwich, Conn.

While Bush served as fighter pilot in the Pacific in World War II, Barbara Pierce attended Smith College. Mrs. Reagan's alma mater. She dropped out after two years to get married.

Like Mrs. Reagan, she is fiercely protective of her husband and reacts harshly to criticism of him.

She terms "very hurtful, sick" and "asinine" a rumor floated publicly by a campaign aide to Democratic nominee Michael Dukakis that Bush had a sexual affair with one of his assistants. The Dukakis aide resigned over the remark.

Mrs. Reagan spent about $1 million refurbishing the public rooms of the White House in 1981, and Mrs. Bush has no plans to change anything when she moves in next January.

"The china has just been changed so that is not a worry for the next president and his wife," Mrs. Bush said. "I'm not planning to leave my mark, the mark is there."

Children, Grandchildren A Tightly Knit Clan

By Joan Mower
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — George Bush's immediate family — kids, spouses and grandchildren — is so big they've got enough for a football team and a baseball team at the same time.

With four sons and a daughter, Bush has one of the largest families of any president in recent times. All his children are married, and they have produced 10 grandchildren for Bush and his wife, Barbara.

Bush, 64, himself one of five children, openly boasts about his kids, who have scattered across the country to pursue their own careers in business and politics.

The vice president once said the thing that made him most proud in life was that his "children still come home."

The Bushes are a tightly knit clan, though the president-elect acknowledges they come out of a somewhat "conservative tradition" in which people tend to be reserved about displaying affection publicly.

Jeb Bush, 35, Bush's second son, once said their father was away a lot when the children were growing up but "if anything ever went wrong in my life, Dad would be right there to help."

"Mom was always the one to hand out the goodies and the discipline," said Jeb, a real estate developer in Miami, and, until recently, Florida's secretary of commerce. "In a sense, it was a matriarchal family."

Mrs. Bush, a full-time homemaker, devoted herself to running the house and raising her children.

Though Mrs. Bush handled family matters, Bush has said that his office aides always knew "when any of the kids called, no matter what I was doing, they should be put through." He said he spent time with the children individually on weekends, and he and his wife always considered their responsibility as parents their top priority.

Bush promised at the Republican National Convention in August to show the American people "how much my great, strong, big family means to me." But he was also ridiculed for referring to three grandchildren as "the little brown ones." Their mother, Jeb's wife, Columba, was born in Mexico.

After the convention, Bush's children, George Bush Jr., 42, of Midland, Texas; Jeb; Neil, 33, of Denver, Colo.; Marvin, 32, of Alexandria, Va.; and Dorothy LeBlond, 29, of Cape Elizabeth, Maine, spread out to campaign fulltime for their father's presidential election.

George Jr., a Harvard Business School graduate and independent oil operator in Midland, was a top strategist in his father's campaign. Married and the father of 6-year-old twin daughters, George Jr. once waged an unsuccessful campaign for Congress in Texas. He was a pilot in the Texas Air National Guard during the Vietnam War.

Jeb, a fluent Spanish speaker and a former Dade County Republican chairman, has frequently courted Hispanic voters. Trained as a banker, he once worked for Texas Commerce Bank in Caracas, Venezuela. His children are George, 12, Noelle, 11, and Jeb Jr., 5.

In the footsteps of his father and oldest brother, Neil is in the oil business in Denver. A graduate of Tulane University, he and his wife, Sharon, have two children, ages 2 and 4, and are expecting a third early next year.

Marvin, who graduated from the University of Virginia, is the only child who has stayed nearby his parents in the 1980s. An investment consultant, Marvin and his wife, Margaret, have a 2-year-old girl.

Dorothy LeBlond — "Doro" to her family — is married to a businessman, William LeBlond, and the mother of two children, Samuel, 4, and Nancy, 2. A graduate of the Katherine Gibbs School in Boston, Dorothy has frequently worked on her father's campaigns. This year, she traveled around the country; in 1980, she answered telephones at her father's headquarters when he ran unsuccessfully for president.

Dorothy was not the only daughter. The couple's other daughter, Robin, born in 1949, died of leukemia when she was three. In his autobiography, "Looking Forward,"

Bush wrote that the death had a profound impact on him. He said his faith helped sustain him.

Wigs Regain Popularity With Career Women

By Nancy Rivera Brooks
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — In the 1960s, they were heavy, hot, unnatural looking and incredibly popular.

But for the wig industry, the late 1970s brought hair-raising disaster as customers, in quest of more natural looks, tossed their wigs and falls in the back of their closets.

Now, it appears, wigs and other hair accessories are gaining favor with a new generation of consumers and sales are springing back like the never-say-die curls of today's synthetic wig fibers.

"There is a resurgence in the wig industry," said Josef Scigliano, executive vice president and designer for Los Angeles-based Eva Gabor International, the world's largest wig company. "It's really changed. We see a lot of career women coming in to buy wigs."

However, just as demand for wigs begins to grow, a wig shortage complete with rising prices and shipping delays has developed, some manufacturers contend, that has them tearing out their — well, you get the idea.

At the root of the problem are increasing labor difficulties in South Korea, where most of the wigs sold in the United States are made. But the manufacturer of the synthetic fiber that goes into the majority of wigs thinks the severity of the shortage may be overstated.

Nonetheless, it comes at a time when the industry could use all the supplies it can get.

From January to July of this year, wigs, toupees, chignons and other hair accessories with an import value of $43.7 million entered the United States, up 19 percent from the same period last year, according to U.S. Census Bureau statistics. That is on top of a 23 percent increase in 1987 from the year before.

Manufacturers credit technological advances in wig structure and a spurt in popularity of hair "add-ons" — ponytails, braids and assorted lengths of synthetic hair attached to banana clips and combs — which have attracted a younger clientele, which then has become interested in full wigs.

"It's only the bad ones you see. The good ones look natural," said Alan M. Smiley, president of Revlon's Miami-based General Wig subsidiary. Today's wigs are much lighter and hold their style better those of the 1960s and early 1970s.

"I have a demonstration I like to do," Smiley said. "I take a wig, roll it into a ball, step on it and unroll it. It comes out 99 percent perfect."

"What good is it for a woman to buy a wig in a wig shop from a stylist if she can't make it look good at home?"

About 80 percent of the wigs sold today are made of a synthetic fiber called Kanekalon, produced by Kanegafuchi Chemical Industry of Osaka, Japan, said company spokeswoman B.L. Ochman.

The modacrylic fiber, which is available in 150 colors and different thicknesses and curl patterns, is used in a variety of products from paint brushes to fake fur coats, she said. The largest use is for hair for Barbie dolls.

"Kanekalon has gotten better and better and now it looks like human hair," Ochman said.

Only a relatively small percentage of wigs are made of human hair anymore, and they are much more expensive than synthetic wigs and are more difficult to style. A pound of human hair costs $600 in New York while a pound of Kanekalon costs $20, Ochman said.

The wig industry is fairly small, with U.S. retail sales between $300 million and $350 million, Smiley estimated.

It is dominated by Eva Gabor International and General Wig, with several small importers competing fiercely for the rest of the market. The importers sell to department stores, wig shops and hairdressers.

In recent years, buyers primarily have been older women and people who need to wear wigs for medical reasons.

"Until two years ago, the overwhelming majority, better than 90 percent of the wig sales, were on a need basis rather than a fashion basis," Smiley said. "The growth that we're seeing is occurring for fashion."

When Eva Gabor's Scigliano, who is known professionally as Josef of Rome, recently appeared on "The Oprah Winfrey Show," callers expressing interest in wigs flooded the switchboard after Winfrey innocently asked if wigs were dead. Scigliano recalled.

Consumers Enjoying Ease Of Drive-In Postal Service

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ARCHBALD, Pa. — The idea of a drive-in post office in this Lackawanna County community began as a joke.

One day, workers in the post office were talking about express mail, large mail and the other programs they'd incorporated to improve their services.

"One guy in here said, 'Why not have a drive-up window?'" recalls postmaster Louis Scombordi. "And we figured, 'Why not?'"

That was last July. It wasn't until Sept. 19 that it became a reality — and a rarity — on a trial basis.

The postal service headquarters in Washington says there are 21 drive-up windows nationwide, the oldest in Peoria, Ill., since 1957. A recent survey was so well received that a study is underway to create more drive-throughs for the customers' convenience, says Sharon Hamilton, media-relations representative for the postal service.

"On a whole, the concept is a workable concept in a lot of places," she says. "We'll probably see more in the future."

New windows have to be established through local management, added on to existing buildings or built as small, detached units.

"The clearance is what took time," says Archbald postmaster Scombordi.

Renovations were few. For $200, the post office bought a piece of wood for a countertop, a window, a bell and a sign.

With a little imagination — and elbow grease — employees did most of the construction work.

The idea, however, is taking time to catch on in this community of 2,500 households and almost 150 box-holders.

The window, averaging only 20 customers daily, handles the same services as inside the lobby, Scombordi says, "except for what can't fit through the window."

Response during the four-month trial period which ends in January will determine whether the post office will drop the service, keep it or possibly expand it, according to Scombordi.

"I'm from the old school," he says, "and I think you shouldn't make a large investment without a trial basis first."

Some of the customers think it's just a matter of time before the innovation takes off.

"Things take time to get started around here," says Dave Hansell, using the drive-in window for the first time.

Bob Speicher, who was glad he didn't have to park and walk for just two stamps, says he thinks the drive-through will be more popular in winter and will especially benefit the elderly and the handicapped.

"We've had more handicapped people than anyone else," Scombordi says. "That's one benefit we didn't expect."

Korea: The Forgotten War

Dear Abby: Today, on Nov. 11, America will honor her veterans. I would like to ask your readers to consider a special group of men and women who fought a war that has become "the forgotten war."

Thirty-eight years ago, on June 25, 1950, the North Koreans crossed the 38th parallel of Korea and invaded South Korea. It was called a "police action" and the United Nations responded by sending troops to Korea. Besides the South Koreans, the majority of fighting men were Americans.

When a truce was finally called that ended in a stalemate on July 27, 1953, 5.5 million men and women had fought directly or indirectly in this "conflict." Of these 5.5 million, 103,000 were wounded, 54,263 were killed and 8,177 were classified as missing in action or prisoners of war.

There has been much publicity about the Vietnam Memorial, but the military personnel who fought to secure the freedom of South Korea have only the TV series "MASH" to remind people that we were there.

I lost my beloved husband of eight months when he was shot down over North Korea on his first combat mission. His remains have never been returned to me. Who will remember those who gave their lives in the Korean War?

Who will remember:
1. That when they returned, there were no welcoming parades — only apathy?

2. That in 1953 they had to live with their own silent hell of wartime memories, as "post-traumatic stress disorder" was unknown then?

3. That their feats were chronicled in only a few paragraphs in history books, and they have all but been ignored by the media?

At long last, Congress has finally approved a long-overdue memorial for the Korean War vets. It is to be situated across from the Vietnam Memorial.

Dear Abby

Six million dollars are needed. Hyundai Motor Corp. in South Korea has contributed $1.2 million in gratitude.

Abby, you have espoused many worthwhile causes in the past. I hope you will consider this one. Our ranks are diminishing with age, and time is of the essence.

If any of your readers would like to make a small tax-free donation, it would be gratefully appreciated. Checks can be made out to: The Korean War Memorial Fund, P.O. Box 2372, Washington, D.C. 20013-1372. — Kathleen Cronan Wyosnick, San Jose, Calif.

Dear Kathleen: I am sending my check today, and I hope readers will come through with contributions. If everyone who reads this sends $1, we should have that memorial paid for in a matter of months. Readers?

Exchange rates for P.I.K. certificates were steady and ranged from 96 to 98 1/2 percent of face value.

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices were broadly lower in early trading today, pressured by a weak dollar in overseas trading.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell 14.57 points to 2,100.11 at 10 a.m. EST, 30 minutes after the opening bell, after briefly dipping below the 2,100 mark.

Declining issues lead advancing almost 4 to 1 on the New York Stock Exchange, with 739 issues down, 186 up and 448 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board totaled 16.47 million shares.

The NYSE composite index was off 0.89 at 153.20. At the American Stock Exchange, the composite index fell 0.94 to 293.69.

On Thursday, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials declined 3.55 to close at 2,114.69 after drifting in a narrow range.

Volume on the floor of the NYSE came to 128.92 million shares, down sharply from 153.14 million in the previous session.

Surviving are her husband, James Teel Sr.; three sons, Hubert Teel of Winterville, James Teel Jr. of Roper and Curtis Teel of Greenville; three daughters, Brenda Glasper of Raleigh, Delores Jones of Fayetteville and Wanda Teel of Greenville; her mother, Mary Badger of the home; a brother, Allen Smith Jr. of Louisville, Ky.; and 12 grandchildren.

The family will receive friends from 7 p.m. to 8 p.m. Saturday at Wells Chapel Church of God in Christ and at other times will be at the home, 400 E. Gum Rd. Arrangements are by Flanagan Funeral Home of Greenville.

Williams
 FALKLAND — A funeral for Mr. Clayton Williams will be conducted at 3 p.m. Sunday in the Hemby Memorial Funeral Chapel in Fountain by the Rev. Allen Vines. Burial will be in St. John's Cemetery in Falkland.

A native of Pitt County, Mr. Williams was a World War II veteran.

Surviving are his wife, Hattie Lee Williams; four daughters, Lillie Mae Williams of Stamford, Conn., Hattie Louise Gaylor of Newark, N.J., Daisy Gay of Norwalk, Conn., and Barbara Hopkins of Farmville; a stepdaughter, Ann Chappell of Norwalk, Conn.; four sons, James Taylor of Falkland, Ronnie Williams and Jerry Williams, both of Fountain, and Michael Williams of Norwalk, Conn.; 30 grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

The family will receive friends from 7 p.m. to 8 p.m. Saturday at Hemby Memorial Funeral Chapel in Fountain and at other times will be at the home near Falkland.

cessibility by road and air; institutional and community support and the nearby industrial base; environment; setting, including the ability to obtain the needed land promptly; regional conditions, including climate; and utilities.

The task force gave Texas the highest rating — "outstanding" — in first four major categories and "good" in the other two.

North Carolina and Arizona were the only states that failed to get an "outstanding" rating in any of the major categories. North Carolina was rated as "good" in all major categories except that of setting, where it got a "satisfactory" score.

Election Canvass Changes A Few Totals was also close locally. Republican Jim Gardner of Rocky Mount, a former U.S. Congressman, won the office statewide, but lost Pitt County.

In the canvass, Gardner picked up two votes, but Democrat Tony Rand, a Fayetteville attorney, held on to Pitt County with just over 51 percent of the vote.

Another tight statewide race, which still may be go to a recount, involved John B. Lewis of Farmville. Lewis, who was trying to unseat Republican Court of Appeals Judge Donald Smith of Raleigh, won Pitt County with 64 percent of the vote. There were no changes Thursday in the Pitt totals involving that race.

A special Superior Court judge, Lewis' term expires at the end of the year. Smith was appointed to the appeals court by Martin to fill a vacancy.

In the race for a Superior Court judgeship in District 6-B, in the northeastern part of the state, Democrat Cy A. Grant held a narrow 20,000-vote lead over Republican James D. Riddick III with 99 percent of the precincts reporting. In the canvass, Grant picked up 100 votes in the Grimesland precinct, and the additional votes could help him avoid a recount.

Candidates in several other contests won or lost a few votes Thursday, but none were significant enough to affect the outcome of the races.

The slight changes in the official counts, election officials said Thursday, usually come from someone recording the wrong number on election night, reading the wrong number from the machine tape or adding incorrectly.

The report rated the state's "community resources" as outstanding. It said the North Carolina site offered "very good housing availability and proximity; excellent variety of housing styles and mix of settings. Outstanding access to employment opportunities for family members as well as to research institutions."

Pay Is Adjusted

One organization which recently opted with the percentage increase format for market adjustment was Greenville Utilities, whose commissioners on Monday approved a 4.5 percent raise for all employees effective Dec. 21.

Abstaining from Thursday's vote was Council Member Nancy Jenkins who commented, "I cannot in good conscience vote yes." (A vote to abstain counts as an affirmative vote)

Council member Bill Hadden had originally voted against the ordinance, but changed his vote after being assured by the city manager that the vote does not bind the city to flat pay increases in years ahead.

"This is a one time change of the (pay) scale," Knowles said.

In the course of the discussion, Hadden alluded to a recent consultant study on the city's compensation system by the Arthur Young organization.

The consultant conducted market surveys and suggested wage structures, which the city later voted to implement.

The study also made recommendations for maintaining pay policies — recommendations which did not include the implementation of a flat market adjustment.

"Hadden said the Arthur Young study insisted that an across-the-board pay raise was not proper procedure.

"I myself said Arthur Young was right."

But Mayor Pro-Tem Lorraine Shinn said if she had had her way, she would have burned the Arthur Young Study when it hit her desk.

Irish Narrow Bowls To Orange, Fiesta

Bowls Begin Scramble To Line Up Attractions; Fiesta Might Move To Jan. 3

By Barry Wilner
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Everybody wants the Irish to visit on New Year's weekend. The folks in Tempe or Miami will get their wish. Notre Dame, the nation's top-ranked team, has narrowed its postseason possibilities to the Fiesta and Orange bowls.

Notre Dame is idle this weekend, but it will firm up its bowl plans while other contenders for the national title try to avoid disaster. The Irish then have games with Penn State and No. 2 Southern California.

If Notre Dame, 9-0, goes to the Fiesta Bowl in Tempe, Ariz., on Jan. 2, it wants to play fourth-ranked West Virginia, which is at Rutgers on Saturday and still must play No. 15 Syracuse. Florida State, ranked fifth, also is a possible opponent in the Fiesta.

Going to the Orange would mean a game against the Big 8 champion, either No. 7 Nebraska or No. 8 Oklahoma.

The Phoenix Gazette reported that the Fiesta Bowl may be moved to the night of Jan. 3 to accommodate a Notre Dame-West Virginia matchup, as it did for Penn State-Miami two years ago. That game was moved from Jan. 1 to Jan. 2.

Don Meyers, the Fiesta's selection committee chairman and legal counsel, said if Notre Dame and West Virginia remain undefeated and are ranked Nos. 1 and 2 after the regular season, he would favor moving the Fiesta to prime time. It is shown nationally on NBC right now, directly opposite the Rose Bowl, which has moved to ABC.

Of course, if Notre Dame falls in either of its final two games, that would scramble the rankings and, quite possibly, eliminate a national championship matchup.

But if the Irish go to the Fiesta, defending national champion Miami, Fla., will stay home to play in the Orange Bowl. If Notre Dame heads to Miami, look for the Hurricanes in the Fiesta.

The official invitation date is Saturday. But most of the 17 bowls — the Bluebonnet was scrapped this year — have their teams already Wyoming, the Western Athletic Conference winner, has a spot in the Holiday Bowl, where No. 14 Oklahoma State will be the opposition. Arkansas, like Wyoming unbeaten, has clinched the Southwest Conference and the host berth in the Cotton Bowl, against either Florida State or UCLA. Southern Mississippi goes to the Independence Bowl, but no opponent has been set.

Southern Cal still must play Arizona State this Saturday, then UCLA and finishes with Notre Dame. If they don't win the Pac-10 crown, the Trojans will go to the Sugar Bowl against the Southeastern Conference titlist. That could be LSU, Auburn or Georgia. If Southern Cal is in the Rose Bowl as Pac-10 champ, UCLA would head to the Cotton and Florida State would be in the Sugar.

After its champion goes to the Sugar Bowl — and Georgia will go if it beats Auburn on Saturday — the SEC has cut a three-way deal with the Gator, Sun and Hall of Fame bowls.

The winner of Saturday's Florida-Kentucky game will go to the All American Bowl against Duke, if the Blue Devils beat North Carolina State on Saturday. If N.C. State wins, the Wolfpack goes to the Peach Bowl to play Iowa.

Hershiser Wins NL's Cy Young

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Another honor, more fame, more public attention.

Orel Hershiser is learning about it as a celebrity.

"The biggest pressure so far has been on my parents, wife and friends," the Los Angeles Dodgers' pitcher said Thursday after it was announced he was the 1988 National League Cy Young Award winner.

"Today we ran an errand to buy Quinton (his 3-year-old son) some clothes and people were stopping me and I couldn't help Quinton get things."

"Things have changed that way and I hope things calm down."

Hershiser, who already had collected the NL playoff and World Series Most Valuable Player awards, pitched still another shutout in the NL Cy Young balloting. He became the first pitcher in three years to be voted the honor unanimously.

Hershiser accepted news of the latest award in his typically humble fashion.

"It's amazing for that all to happen to one individual and for our ball club to be in the right spot at the right time and for me to be in the position I was," he said. "To say it was something of my doing was wrong."

"I worked hard with the talent I was given and everything just worked out perfect... My career will go downhill from here.

"It's easy to be humble now. I'm humbled by everything that happened," Hershiser added. "Being humble is not something I work at. I'm just blah by nature."

The Cy Young capped an amazing year for Hershiser, who was baseball's most dominant pitcher over the final two months of the season and whose playoff and World Series heroics led one magazine to tab him "The New Mr. October."

But the postseason had no bearing on the Cy Young voting; that balloting was conducted before the playoffs began. Hershiser got all 24 first-place votes and 120 points in balloting by two members of the Baseball Writers' Association of America in each league city.

Cincinnati's Danny Jackson, who had an identical record to Hershiser, was second with 15 second-place votes and 54 points. David Cone, 20-3 for the New York Mets, was third with nine second-place votes and 42 points.

Hershiser's record streak of 59 scoreless innings to end the regular season locked up the award for him. He wound up 23-8 with a 2.26 earned-run average for the Dodgers.

He is the 12th unanimous Cy Young winner, the first since Roger Clemens of Boston and Dwight Gooden of the New York Mets in 1985. Minnesota's Frank Viola, named Wednesday to win the AL Cy

Aussie Race May Lose NASCAR

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Developments have surfaced that possibly could lead NASCAR to withhold its cooperation in the staging of a stock car race at Australia's Thunderdome track on Dec. 8, a Charlotte newspaper reported.

The Charlotte Observer learned this week that promoters at the 1.25-mile speedway near Melbourne plan to replace tobacco company advertising signs with those from the Victorian Health Promotion Foundation, which has begun a "quit for life" campaign aimed at smokers.

R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., through its Winston brand of cigarettes, is the primary sponsor of NASCAR's big-time Winston Cup Series.

"The Thunderdome isn't on our top 10 list of tracks right now," said Jeff Byrd of RJR's special-events department. "We're concerned, and we plan to relay that concern to NASCAR later this week."

The sanctioning body obviously already is aware of the conflict. An official who asked not to be named said "plans have been put on temporary hold" to send at least three officials "Down Under" to help direct the December race.

"I'm sure the show will go on down there whether they're involved or not," he said.

NASCAR gave nominal blessing to the Thunderdome's opener last February, the Goodyear 500K, and sent several officials to aid in the running and scoring of the race, the first on a superspeedway in Australia.

Practically the entire field was made up of drivers from NASCAR's Winston Cup and Winston West divisions. Winston Cup driver Neil Bonnett won the race.

Both Byrd and the NASCAR source said no pressure would be applied to prevent U.S. drivers from running at the Thunderdome in December.

About a dozen Winston Cup regulars have indicated they plan to go, including Kyle Petty, Dave Marcis, Morgan Shepherd, Sterling Marlin, Mike Waltrip, Jimmy Means, Rodney Combs, H.B. Bailey and Mike Potter. Among the West Coast entrants are Roy Smith, Ron Esau and Mark Gibson.

Bonnett had hoped to return, but apparently can't because he's committed to critical Ford tests of the new Thunderbird that weekend at Daytona International Speedway.

Duke-State Winner May Go To Peach

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DURHAM — The winner of Saturday's Atlantic Coast Conference showdown between Duke and North Carolina State may be headed to the Peach Bowl, the bowl's executive director says.

Robert Dale Morgan told the Durham Morning Herald that the bowl plans to scout 11 games, including three ACC contests: Duke-N.C. State, Virginia-North Carolina and Clemson-Maryland.

"Right now, we have a very strong interest in a matching a Big Ten team vs. an ACC or SEC team or an independent," he told the newspaper.

The Peach Bowl also plans to scout Auburn-Georgia, Illinois-Michigan, Ohio State-Iowa, Michigan State-Indiana, South Carolina-Navy, Kentucky-Florida and Pitt-Penn State.

"That may change," Morgan said. "It's changed three times this week."

The All-American Bowl also plans to scout Duke-N.C. State among seven games. Its payout is slightly less than the Peach Bowl, about $700,000 to the Peach Bowl, about $800,000, but it has a better television package. The All-American Bowl will appear on ESPN on Thursday night, Dec. 29, while the Peach Bowl airs at 1 p.m. on Dec. 31 on Mizlou.

"Obviously we feel at somewhat of a disadvantage television-wise," Morgan said.

The Peach Bowl has signed a contract with ABC for next year.

Morgan added that the Duke-N.C. State outcome might not be "mutually exclusive," suggesting that the loser could still be in the running for his bowl if that team won next week. State hosts Pitt in the season finale, while Duke hosts UNC.

Clemson, meanwhile, has the inside track on the ACC's automatic berth in the Florida Citrus Bowl, needing only a win at Maryland Saturday to clinch. The Big Eight runnerup, UCLA, Syracuse or Miami are likely opponents.

Virginia and Maryland are among four teams, including Army and Penn State, under consideration to face front-runner Washington State in the Eagle Aloha Bowl in Honolulu.

THE DAILY REFLECTOR

No matter how much people doubt J.H. Rose High School quarterback Jamie Brewington's ability, he continues to be a winner.

Brewington, a 6-3, 175-pound senior quarterback, listened to skeptics in the preseason say he wasn't good enough to be a starting quarterback. He also heard others say this year's Rose team couldn't repeat the 10-0 regular-season feat the 1987 team did.

But in both cases the prognosticators were wrong.

Not only are the Rampants heading into the state 4-A playoffs unbeaten at 10-0, but they are doing so thanks, in part, to the guidance of Brewington's play at quarterback.

During the regular season, Brewington completed 49-119 passes for 853 yards and a dozen touchdowns. He also tallied three TDs rushing. That means Brewington accounted for, in some form, 1.5 touchdowns per game this season for Rose.

"There were a whole lot of people that thought this year's team wasn't all that good," Brewington said. "It's true that we don't have as many great athletes as last year, but we've got a lot of good athletes on the team and I think we have more 'want' than last year."

The athletes may not be as good, but most of the senior players on the 1988 Rose football team have only lost one football game since they've been in high school. During Brewington's sophomore season, the junior varsity squad went undefeated, while the only loss last year was a 7-6 setback to Jacksonville in the second round of the playoffs.

"The simple fact of the matter is Jamie just doesn't lose," Rose head coach Chip Williams said. "You can check all his records back to the pee-wee leagues and you'll see he's a proven winner. I couldn't tell you his record in baseball, but last year they (the Rose baseball team) went to the state championships (and finished second in the state with a 27-2 record) and it was the same when he was back in the Babe Ruth League. He's just simply a winner."

Brewington set his goals on being the starting quarterback this season once last year ended. He traveled to New Jersey during the summer and attended a football camp at Glassboro State University to sharpen his skills.

"When he came back it was like an improvement from night to day," Williams said. "He was really throwing the ball well then. He had always been able to throw, but they worked on his accuracy and timing."

"They (the camp directors) helped me with my dropback," Brewington said. "They taught me how to use a sprint back setup to throw."

Practice during the off-season is nice, but all the practice in the world doesn't take the place of performing when the chips are down in a crucial game situation. And Brewington has shown he can do that also.

"I think the biggest thing that got Jamie going was the Jacksonville game (in the second week of the season)," Williams said. "In the waning minutes of the first half, they (Jacksonville) scored to take the lead. When they were kicking off he came up to me and grabbed me and said we're gonna score."

"He went out there and called the plays and led us in for a touchdown before the half and then we went on to win (26-13)," Williams said. "And I think that's what set him up for the rest of the year."

Brewington's performances have also been timed up by the running of tailback Tim Moore, who has amassed well over 1,000 yards rushing the season.

"I think he's why I have progressed as much as I have," Brewington said. "The defenses key on him because he's so dangerous when he gets the ball and that opens up the passing game for me. And if we get the passing game going, the linebackers have to drop back to try and stop that and that leaves big holes for him to run through."

Another reason for the improvement Brewington has made this year can be credited to his father, Jim Brewington, who just happens to be the Rampant defensive coordinator.

"He keeps me in my place," Brewington said. "He's taught me a lot and has kept me from getting a big head from winning."

"When we're out there at practice sometimes he'll put me with the second-team offense and then put the first-team defense against us," Brewington said. "He runs all sorts of stunts and stuff to see if they can get to me."

The elder Brewington's accomplishments in athletics also serves as a motivational factor for Jamie.

"I go back and look at the old newspapers and see things he's accomplished and it makes me want to do good too," Brewington said. "He (Jamie's father) played at (North Carolina) Central and was an All-American in basketball and football."

Those are nice achievements, but Jamie would be happy with just winning the state championship and gaining a spot on the Big East All-Conference team.

"As far as a personal goal, I'd like to make All-Conference this year," Brewington said. "At the beginning of the year, Coach (Robert) Langston (quarterback coach) said he knew I had a lot of heart but he wasn't sure if I had the ability. He knows now that I can do it. And I know that I can do it."

No doubt.

State Ban On King Mackerel Maintained

Recreational fishing for king mackerel will remain closed for now — and probably for the remainder of the fishing season, Danny Spitsbergen of the North Carolina Marine Fisheries Division said Thursday.

WITN-TV, channel 12, erroneously reported that the recreational season would be reopened this week, but Spitsbergen said it was not so.

"What happened was that we were talking about the double-attributed catch and (the reporter) got the facts mixed up," Spitsbergen said.

The king mackerel season in North Carolina was recently closed because the federal government said that the fish quota for recreational fishing had been met — for the first time ever in the state.

At the time, fishermen argued that the figures were inaccurate and some of the catches had been counted twice, both under recreational and commercial fishing.

"What we had were fish which had been taken by recreational fishermen, who caught more than they needed. When they came ashore, they sold these fish, and they were also counted under the commercial count," Spitsbergen said. "It was decided that since they were originally caught under recreational rules, they should only be counted there. Our recommendation was to add to the commercial quota, leaving that season open a little longer."

Spitsbergen said that was little likelihood that the recreational ban would be lifted for the remainder of the season.

Student Pickup Ticket Plans Set

Several changes have been made in the guidelines for student pickup of tickets for the upcoming East Carolina basketball season.

Students may pick up their tickets with a validated ID and activity card on the day prior to a game from 8 a.m. until 5 p.m. at the Minges Coliseum ticket office. For Monday games, tickets will be available on Friday.

Tickets for games during the Thanksgiving break (Nov. 26) may be picked up on Nov. 23. For games during the Christmas holidays (Dec. 27, 30), tickets may be picked up on Dec. 23.

Students may also purchase one guest ticket at half-price, with any additional tickets at full-price. After the supply of guest tickets is exhausted, all tickets will be full-priced.

Student sections in Minges are colored purple, gray and green. Purple and green sections are floor level and gray are on the second level.

For more information, contact the ticket office at 757-6400.

Soccer Day Set At Wellcome Middle School

Wellcome Middle School has scheduled a Soccer Play Day for Saturday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Brickey Leads Duke Blue-White Scrimmage

CHERRYVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Robert Brickey scored 21 points and Danny Ferry added 18 to lead the white team to a 64-60 victory over the blue team in a Duke intrasquad scrimmage Thursday.

The blue team overcame a 14-point second half deficit to tie the score at 58 with 1:30 left on a layup by Crawford Palmer. Alaa Abdelnaby's jumper put the blue in front for good at 60-58.

Phil Henderson led the blue team with 26 points. Freshman Christian Laettner added 13 points.

Corchiani's 23 Highlights Scrimmage

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Chris Corchiani scored 23 points and made four free throws in the final minute Thursday to lead the white team to a 76-63 victory over the red team in a North Carolina State scrimmage at Carver High School.

The white team took a 37-20 halftime lead but saw the red team pull within eight points, 68-60, on two free throws by Rodney Monroe with 1:30 left.

Red-shirt freshman Byron Tucker scored 16 points, junior Avie Lester scored 14 and Winston-Salem native Brian Howard added 10.

Strange's Unique Round Good For Lead

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — It was, said Curtis Strange, one of the best rounds of golf he had ever played.

It was even better, he said, than a 62 at the Old Course at St. Andrews, Scotland last year.

"The quality of the shots, where they went, the feeling of being in total control ... probably as good a round as I've ever played," Strange said after a spectacular 64 provided him with a three-shot lead Thursday in the first round of the season-ending $2-million Nabisco Championships of Golf.

He did not make a bogey. He did not have a "5" on his card. He scored five birdies on putts of five feet or less. He also found the cup with a 131-yard, 8-iron shot for an eagle-2 on the 11th.

"I'd have to go back a long, long way to think when I played a better round," Strange said after an 8-under-par effort on the picturesque Pebble Beach Golf Links.

"Under the conditions," he said, "this was a better round of golf" than the 62 at The Old Course last year.

"Obviously, I'm very pleased with the state of my game," he said. But, he added, a great deal remains to be done over the final three rounds of golf's richest event.

"I can't even think about the other 29 guys here. I've just got to think about Pebble Beach. It can jump up and grab you at any time," Strange said.

"I've just got to get my birdies where I can, back off when I have to and play smart."

Strange's remarkable effort put him in command of the event that offers $3 million in prize money — $2 million in the tournament purse and $1 million in bonus money — and brings to a close all the major seasonal races.

Strange is involved in two of those, for the money-winning title and for the Player of the Year award. He needs to win this tournament to accomplish either.

Langer Taking Advantage Of The Field

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — With most of the PGA Tour's biggest names entered in this week's Nabisco Championships, what's Bernhard Langer doing in the Centel Classic?

The 1985 Masters champion began play in the $500,000 event at Killearn Country Club on Thursday because the PGA asks that golfers play a minimum of 15 tour tournaments a year.

Injuries that slowed the West German early in season are the main reason he found himself one tournament shy of meeting the requirement before Centel, the 72-hole event that concludes the 1988 tour.

"I always enjoying playing in Florida, but I usually don't play over here (United States) at the end of the season," said Langer, who shot a first-day 66 to trail opening-round leader Lance Ten Broeck by one stroke. "Because of my injuries early, I didn't get in 15 events before now."

Langer said lower back problems that affected his play have improved. Although he's experienced some neck pain recently, he doesn't think it's serious. He missed the cut in last week's Tucson Open but played better Thursday after seeking advice about his swing.

"Peter Kostos met me in Boca Raton and helped me with my swing. It made a difference," Langer said after a round of seven birdies and one bogey on the par-72, 7,098-yard Killearn course.

"I played very steady from tee to greens," he added. "I also putted fairly decent."

Ten Broeck, playing the tour full-time for the first time since 1985, fashioned his round-leading 65 with seven birdies and no bogeys.

Like Langer, he had a reason to enter the Tallahassee tournament other than the $90,000 first-place check. As the tour's 139th-ranked money winner, he may need a top-five finish to assure himself exempt status.

Meanwhile, he enjoyed the slim lead over Langer and Beau Baugh, who also shot 66 but noted 35 other golfers will start the second round within four strokes of first place.

"It's nice to shoot a low score, but you look at the leader board and there are a lot of people up there," he said. "Leading is obviously good, but I've led before" and lost.

USC Steroid Probe Grows

By Rick Scoppe
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, S.C. — The investigation of Tommy Chaikin's allegations of steroid use at the University of South Carolina grew Thursday as officials announced a joint federal and state probe into the charges made by the former Gamecock football player.

The joint probe follows the end of a preliminary inquiry by the State Law Enforcement Division into Chaikin's allegations of the use of steroids and other drugs — including LSD and cocaine — by football players.

"We asked the United States government to join with us because it is more than just a 5th Circuit problem," Solicitor James Anders said during a news conference at SLED headquarters. "It's a problem that exists throughout the country."

Neither Anders, who asked SLED to conduct a preliminary inquiry, nor SLED Chief Robert Stewart would comment on what his agency's probe uncovered or if it had substantiated or discredited Chaikin's allegations.

"We talked to enough people to determine that there is more than a problem than the one that had previously existed at the University of South Carolina," Stewart said.

Anders said the university isn't "the focus" of the joint investigation. The solicitor said there had been problems with steroid use at the school in the past, but he said a newly instituted drug-testing program had corrected those problems.

But Anders insisted he wasn't taking the "heat" off the school.

"You misunderstand me. We're putting the heat on everyone that's involved in the trade of steroids, every person distributing, every person involved with steroids," Anders said. "The heat is on. It's not being taken off anyone or any organization."

"There is presently not a problem, a major problem, at the university," he said. "There has been a problem in the past. We're still looking into that. We'll continue to focus on the problem until the U.S. government and the state of South Carolina are satisfied that's all we can do."

The university said in a statement issued later Thursday it was "pleased" that the present athletic program has been given a clean bill of health by the solicitor.

Anders said the joint probe will focus mainly on steroids, although he previously had said he would not have asked SLED to look into the allegations had they not included the use of drugs like LSD and cocaine.

But Anders said Thursday the allegations regarding the use of cocaine and LSD was "the first thing that gained my attention." Anders said as he found out more about steroids he became more and more concerned about them.

"I had no idea about the widespread use of steroids," he said. "I had no idea the terrible effects that it has upon the human body. After educating myself further, I'm quite alarmed at the question of steroids."

Anders was told by U.S. Attorney Vinton Lide of a nationwide investigation by the U.S. Department of Justice that had been going on since 1985. The probe was focusing on the manufacture and distribution of anabolic steroids and androgenic hormones.

Lide said the joint state probe will be conducted in conjunction with the national investigation.

"In my analysis, this man Chaikin or any other name you want to mention is only a small part of the problem," Lide said. "We want to look at the overall problem of illegal steroids in this district."

"We have national problem, and there's no reason to believe that South Carolina is immune from that."

Lide said he wasn't sure how long the joint probe would take.

"I don't think it should take that long," he said. "I would prefer in an investigation like this to get in, get the job done properly and get out."

"There's no way of telling at this time (exactly how long it will take.) But common sense tells me we got to be talking about several months. I would hope no longer than that."

SLED will be the lead agency in the joint probe but will be assisted by the Food and Drug Administration and, if necessary, the Drug Enforcement Administration, Lide said.

In a recent article in Sports Illustrated, Chaikin, who played at South Carolina from 1983 to 1987, said that he used steroids for three years and that about 50 percent of the 1986 team used them as well. He also said some players used other drugs such as cocaine and LSD.

Anders said he is still trying to talk with Chaikin. He said he's talked with Chaikin's father and the three attorneys Chaikin has had since the article broke.

"But he doesn't seem to be present when I call," Anders said. "I can assure you that at some time in the future we will be discussing with him his allegations."

Ditka Returns To Practice Field

LAKE FOREST, Ill. — Coach Mike Ditka returned to the Chicago Bears eight days after suffering a mild heart attack and just hours after his release from the hospital, and said he wouldn't miss Sunday's game against the Redskins for anything.

Ditka on Thursday talked to his players, held a news conference and took a telephone call from President-elect George Bush. He was released from the hospital late Wednesday after recovering from his Nov. 2 heart attack.

Running far ahead of schedule, Ditka said he also would go with the team to Washington on Sunday.

"RFK is one of my favorite stadiums. I wouldn't miss it for anything," said Ditka, 49.

He said his doctors approved, but added he wouldn't do much more than observe the game from the press box.

"He looked very well," said linebacker Mike Singletary. "It means a lot to the team to have him back, knowing everything is OK."

"I was surprised — I think a lot of people were surprised," he said.

"Nobody thought he'd be here today, but when you think about his personality, it isn't surprising," said tight end Emery Moorehead.

"He's a strong-willed young man," said running back Neal Anderson.

The call from Bush surprised most everybody.

"Hello Mr. Vice-President, er, Mr. President," said Ditka.

"I'm happy for you. Now you have the weight of the world on your shoulders and I'll keep praying for you," he said, congratulating Bush on his election.

"Nothing against the other candidate. I was praying for you."

Ditka suffered his heart attack a week ago Wednesday at Halas Hall, the Bear's training headquarters at Lake Forest College. He was taken to Lake Forest Hospital, where doctors said he had suffered a mild heart attack. After tests Wednesday at Lutheran General Hospital in Park Ridge, where he had been moved, Dr. Jay Alexander told Ditka he could go home.

"It was something that was supposed to happen," Ditka said Thursday at Halas Hall. "I was very lucky. I had good doctors. You don't realize a lot of things about life until you get into a certain position."

He appeared tired, but said, "I feel confident and optimistic. I'm in good shape. There is no blockage and the arteries are completely open."

Ditka said he didn't know what caused the heart attack, which struck after one of his early-morning workouts.

"It was just something that happened. It changes the way I'm going to live and work ... I won't be working out at 5:30 in the morning."

Ditka said he will modify his lifestyle, cutting down on his many activities.

"When it's time to go home, I'll go home," he said. "If I don't feel well, I'll lie down."

Ditka said he talked to the players before practice and told them "we had put together something that was pretty sound. If you take out one piece, be it a player or a coach, it will still work."

Ditka said he had no plans to get out of coaching.

"That's a silly way to look at it," he said. "People who quit are losers and I'm not a loser."

"But it is important that when you get a warning, you listen. But I can't walk away from something I've done for 28 years."

Ditka, who has two more years on his contract with the Bears, said he planned to fulfill the contract and even go longer.

"I never said I wanted to coach more than anybody else or set an amount of victories. You do what you love to do if you have your health, and I have my health. The job is not as stressful as some people say it is."

Recalling last week's attack, he said, "When it hits you, you have a feeling of what it is and you say 'It can't be that. Not me.' It (the pain) becomes unbearable, then you rationalize."

"What I experienced most was embarrassment. You think, 'How could this every happen to me?'"

"Then you know ... You realize you are mortal. Believe me, it is very humbling."

Ditka spoke warmly of the cards and letters he has received from people across the country.

"You really appreciate it a lot," he said. "There were people who sent letters and told me they had the same thing when they were 32 or 37 and lived to be in their 70s and 80s."

Hershiser...

Young, was one vote short of unanimous.

Hershiser, a 30-year-old right-hander, had been one of the best and most consistent pitchers in the major leagues for his first four full seasons. Yet this year, he raised himself to a new level, combining magic and magnificence in drawing comparisons with the all-time greats.

"I think my life will be classified in two sections now — before 1988 and after 1988," he said after becoming a World Series hero.

He led the league with eight shutouts and 267 innings. His ERA ranked third, he was seventh with 178 strikeouts and opponents batted just .213 against him. Hershiser allowed two or fewer earned runs in 23 of 34 starts and his 23 victories were the most for the Dodgers since Sandy Koufax won 27 in 1966.

In his last start of the regular season on Sept. 28, Hershiser pitched 10 scoreless innings against San Diego to break Don Drysdale's mark of 58 set in 1968.

Hershiser was equally brilliant in the postseason. He set a playoffs record by pitching 24 2-3 innings — giving up three earned runs — winning once and getting a save as the Dodgers upset the heavily favored Mets in seven games.

Hershiser won both of his starts in the World Series as the injury-ravaged Dodgers beat heavily favored Oakland. He shut out the Athletics on three hits in Game 2 and clinched the championship in Game 5 by beating Oakland 4-2 on four hits.

By the end, Hershiser had allowed just five earned runs in his last 101 innings.

Hershiser's regular-season scoreless streak will continue in 1989, although it will be listed as a separate record covering two years.

During the offseason, he will be working on a new contract. He made $1.1 million last season and is seeking a five-year, $10-million contract, which the Dodgers will be reluctant to pay. Hershiser could become a free agent after next season.

He emphasized again Thursday that he wants to stay with the Dodgers, but that he must look at options as a businessman would.

And, also looking ahead, he figures he's going to be a target for other clubs since he's become successful.

"I know everyone will be out gunning for me, like we've been gunning for Mike Scott and Dwight Gooden," he said.

In the meantime, he's learning that it's difficult to escape stardom, even thousands of miles from Los Angeles. While in Japan on the major league exhibition tour, he was mobbed by Japanese fans.

"It as like being a rock star," he said. "People were surrounding me everywhere."

Spivey Ups Lead To Five Games

Woody Peele

Vickie Spivey continues to make monkeys of us men-folk on our panel of experts as the season begins to wind down.

Spivey increased her lead over the pack to five games last week, improving to 86-32 for the season. Tom Morris, who held the lead at the start of the season, is her closest rival, having moved by Tom Baines into second place. Morris currently stands 81-37.

Tim Chandler, with two fine weeks in a row, has moved into third place, also passing Baines, with an 80-38 record. Baines is fourth at 79-37, followed by me at 77-41. Greg Laudick still brings us the rear in the tradition of ... of ... What was that guy's name again?

Anyway, Greg is at 74-44. This is the first week of the high school playoffs, and the panel will deal with the Rose-Pine Forest contest, which leaves us five to take care of.

Our record in the final week of the regular season was 6-1, which brings us to 61-22 for the season.

Two of our Pitt County teams are involved in the playoffs, North Pitt and Ayden-Grifton (in addition to Rose).

Ayden-Grifton, which won the Eastern Plains Conference title, plays at home against Wake Forest-Rolesville in the battle of the hyphens. The Chargers are missing several key people because of injuries. Whether there is enough left to pull it out is the question. With everyone healthy, there would be no question here, as the Chargers would be heavy favorites. But without them, the game could be very close.

Still, I'm going to stick with the Chargers in this one, 14-12.

North Pitt will be at home against Edenton. The Aces started slow, but have come on strong in recent weeks, even giving 2-A state leader Hertford County a good game in the finale. In recent history, the Eastern Plains has dominated the Northeastern. This is the battle of the number two teams in each league, and I'm picking Edenton to pull this one out, 21-15.

In the other games involving area teams, it will be Perquimans over Jamesville, 28-8; Hertford County over Greene Central, 42-14, and Washington over Southern Durham, 21-20.

Turning to the panel, with the Pirates facing Open Date — a sure win — the panel looks closest at the Rose-Pine Forest game.

The Rampants survived one of their biggest scares of the season against Northeastern last weekend and now face another strong team. Pine Forest's third place finish in the Mid-South does not mean the Trojans are so-so. In fact, with a couple of breaks, they could have won the league title.

Having the game at Daniels Field may be the biggest factor in the game, although Rose does have Tim Moore and Tony Williams back, although the latter will not start.

The panel is sold on the Rampant chances, going 6-0 in their favor. I look for a 21-7 victory.

Our other consensus picks: North Carolina over Virginia; Wake Forest over Georgia Tech; Arizona over Oregon; Mississippi over Tennessee; Wyoming over Houston; Clemson over Maryland; N.C. State over Duke; Texas and Texas Christian, a toss-up; Texas A&M and Arkansas, a toss-up; Indiana over Michigan State; and Washington State over Oregon State.

Giants, Cardinals Battle For NFC's Eastern Lead

By Barry Wilner
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The New York Giants were supposed to be there. The Phoenix Cardinals decidedly were not.

On Sunday, the Giants travel to Arizona for the first time. The winner of the NFC East battle takes the division lead — New York is 7-3, Phoenix 6-4.

"This game is awfully important to us," Cardinals coach Gene Stallings said. "We have four games in the East left, two against New York. I don't see it as an advantage to play them twice. I'd rather play somebody else twice and I'd feel more comfortable being 7-3 right now."

"But if you told me in training camp we'd be 6-4 going into the 11th week and playing the Giants for first place, I'd have taken it."

The Giants will take their 7-3 record, especially since they have struggled through much of their current four-game winning streak. Those victories came against weak sisters Detroit (twice), Atlanta and Dallas.

Stallings isn't buying any talk of the Giants being subpar — even with cornerback Mark Collins and All-Pro linebacker Lawrence Taylor hobbled.

"They won the Super Bowl a couple years ago. You don't do that without having something special and New York still has that," Stallings said. "They're a tough team and this will be a tough game."

It could be a tough one for New York if Taylor's strained right shoulder hinders him — LT has been a particular nemesis of Cardinals quarterback Neil Lomax.

"Let me tell you," Taylor tells you, "I'd rather have an injured leg than this shoulder. I can always move, even if I'm hurting. But this restrains me."

The Phoenix heat also might restrain the teams. But the Cardinals, who moved there from St. Louis in March, seem to have become acclimated to the heat, winning three of their last four home games. That includes last week's dramatic 24-23 victory over San Francisco, a game in which the Cardinals trailed 23-0.

"It was a steambath," said Cardinals' special teams star Ron Wolfley. "You could see it taking its toll on the 49ers' faces. We've become climitized to it by now. But the 49er guys, their faces looked like melting candles."

The other NFC East contenders, Super Bowl champion Washington, 6-4, and Philadelphia, 5-5, face varying tests. The Redskins are home to the Chicago Bears, whom they've knocked out of the playoffs the last two years. Chicago has the conference's best record, 8-2. The Eagles are at intrastate rival Pittsburgh, which is 2-8.

Also, it's Minnesota at Dallas, Cincinnati at Kansas City, Indianapolis at Green Bay, New England at the New York Jets, San Diego at Atlanta, Tampa Bay at Detroit, the Los Angeles Raiders at San Francisco, New Orleans at the Los Angeles Rams, Cleveland at Denver and Houston at Seattle. On Monday night, it's Buffalo at Miami.

As if the Bears needed added incentive against the Redskins after the last two playoffs, they'll have Coach Mike Ditka watching from the press box. Less than two weeks after he was felled by a heart attack, Ditka said Thursday he'll accompany the team to Washington.

"RFK is one of my favorite stadiums," Ditka said. "I wouldn't miss it for anything."

On the other side, Wilber Marshall, who became the first major NFL free agent to change teams when he left Chicago for D.C., faces his former team for the first time.

"This game will mean a lot to me because a win could help us get into the playoffs," Marshall said. "Beating them will be just like anybody else."

Redskins offensive line coach Joe Bugel doesn't think Marshall will be so blasé Sunday.

"There's no doubt he'll be fired up," Bugel said. "We'll just kick start him in the locker room and send him through the tunnel. He'll be smoking."

The Pennsylvania rivals haven't met since 1979, when the Steelers were the dominant team and the Eagles were struggling. Philadelphia pulled off a 17-14 upset, which didn't slow down the Steelers' march — they went on to their fourth NFL title.

This time, the Steelers are going nowhere and the Eagles are seeking the consistency that might lift them into playoff contention.

"We just beat the Rams (30-24), and that says something," quarterback Randall Cunningham said. "We beat the Giants. I think we're an up-and-coming team and we know how much potential we have. All we have to do is execute."

"We're taking the attitude we're 5-5 now and we have to win the rest of our games. If we do that, we feel we can go to the playoffs. It has to start this week. It started last week against the Rams and this week it starts against Pittsburgh."

Ted Williams Finally Begins To Mellow At 70

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — At age 70, "The Kid" is mellowing. He jokes with old-time sports writers, the ones he used to castigate. And he's even donned a tie, of sorts.

Ted Williams, a brash youngster in his first spring training with the Boston Red Sox in 1938 who went on to the Hall of Fame in an often tempestuous career, hit a grand slam on Thursday in a unique welcome home.

More than 28 years after hitting his 521st major league home run in his final at-bat in 1960, No. 9 took a well-deserved bow, permitting a testimonial in his honor.

"I'm honored as hell. I hope I'm deserving of all this," Williams said solemnly before greeting old friends and 4,000 fans who paid from $35 to $200 a ticket.

"It took a lot of persuasion to get me here," Williams said. "I ducked it for a long time, but I'm delighted."

Illini Said USSR Pick

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — A University of Illinois official says the school has been contacted about the possibility of playing a football game in the Soviet Union in 1989.

However, Karol Kahrs, interim athletic director for internal affairs, said no deal has been made yet.

"We received ... promotional information about a month ago," Kahrs said Wednesday. "We've had some discussions but I think now that the waters are being tested for the possibility of putting a game together."

Kahrs comments followed a report in the Los Angeles Times that it was likely Illinois would play Southern California in the first Glasnost Bowl in Moscow on Sept. 2, 1989.

"It would be a great opportunity for our institution and our football team but right now, we're more concerned about our games with Michigan and Northwestern," said Kahrs.

The game in the 50,000-seat Dynamo Stadium would be the result of a long-term joint venture between Raycom International of Charlotte, N.C., and the Soviet Ministry of Sports and Culture.

USC is scheduled to play at Kansas on Sept. 2, but the Times reported that Kansas is willing to let the Trojans out of that commitment. Illinois has no game scheduled on that date.

However, the game would count against the teams' schedules, meaning Illinois would have to drop Cincinnati, Colorado or Utah State in 1989 in order to play USC in Moscow.

Long noted for his preference for open-neck sport shirts, Williams made the ultimate concession. He wore a string tie given him long ago by a friend who made the ties as a hobby.

Old friends flew in from California, Florida and other points to join in the tribute to Williams, baseball's last .400 hitter with a .406 mark in 1941.

"He was a devastating hitter, he was feared," said New York Yankees Hall of Famer Joe DiMaggio.

"Ted Williams was the greatest hitter I've ever seen, without a doubt," said Tom Lasorda, manager of the World Series champion Los Angeles Dodgers.

"There aren't enough superlatives to describe him," said Dom DiMaggio, brother of Joe and a longtime Williams teammate with the Red Sox.

"He was outstanding, just great," said Johnny Pesky, who, with Dom DiMaggio, set the table for Williams as the first two batters in the Boston lineup for many years.

The affair, to benefit the Jimmy Fund, the fund-raising arm of the Dana Farber Cancer Institute, was billed as "An Evening With Ted Williams — No. 9 — and Friends." There was a small reception for those who bought top-dollar tickets, but no dinner.

Williams, who turned 70 on Aug. 30 and still is associated with the Red Sox as an instructor a half-century after being purchased as a teen-ager from San Diego of the Pacific Coast League, wanted as much money as possible to go to his favorite charity. And baseball fans young and old packed the Wang Center, a plush old movie house.

Joining the salute were Hall of Famers Bobby Doerr, an old teammate, and Bob Feller, the strikeout king of the Cleveland Indians; recently retired slugger Reggie Jackson; U.S. Sen. John Glenn, one of the original Mercury astronauts who was a Marine Corps pilot with Williams in the Korean War; former House Speaker Thomas P. "Tip"

O'Neill, television personality David Hartman, sportscaster Curt Gowdy, and author Stephen King.

"Ted is tickled to death. He considers this one of his top thrills in 50 years, and he's had quite a few," said close friend Bud Leavitt, sports editor of the Bangor, Maine, Daily News.

"I've been associated with the Jimmy Fund for a long time, since it was founded after World War II, and I've got 10,000 times more credit than I deserve," Williams said.

"I don't like to go these affairs. I'm scared to death, but not as much as I used to be. As for not wanting to have something like this in the past, the biggest reason was I didn't think I'm deserving of something of this importance and magnitude."

Touching on baseball, Williams said "the Red Sox surprised me" in coming from nine games back to win the American League East this year.

"It was a super, super effort," he said. "There was tremendous togetherness when Joe Morgan took over (from fired manager John McNamara on July 14). It was a great tribute to Joe. I worked with him for more than 10 years in the minor league camp in spring training and knew what he could do. He got an opportunity and he did a tremendous job."

Other Williams comments included:

— "I'd pay to see Reggie Jackson play. The big thing was he always tried to better himself. I admire that."

— "Tommy Lasorda, there's no one I admire more. A great manager, a super guy in this game of ours. When they were looking for a new commissioner, Tommy Lasorda was my candidate."

— "Joe DiMaggio could do everything. He had more style than any player I ever knew."

Asked about Williams' comment on the commissioner's job, Lasorda grinned and said: "I don't think so. I'd have to take a 'pay' cut."

Bowls Looking...

Here's how things look heading into the weekend:

Fiesta — Notre Dame vs. West Virginia.

Cotton — Arkansas vs. Florida State or UCLA.

Orange — Nebraska-Oklahoma winner vs. Miami. "No coach in America would play them (Miami) again if he had a choice," Oklahoma's Barry Switzer said.

Rose — Big Ten champion (probably Michigan) vs. Pac-10 champion (Southern Cal or UCLA).

Sugar — SEC champion (Georgia, LSU, Auburn or Alabama) vs. Southern Cal or Florida State.

Florida Citrus — Atlantic Coast Conference champion (Clemson or Maryland) vs. the Nebraska-Oklahoma loser.

All American — Florida-Kentucky winner vs. Duke or a Big Ten also-ran.

Aloha — Washington State vs. Houston, but Hawaii could wind up hosting the game.

California — Western Michigan vs. Big West champion (probably Fresno State).

Freedom — Brigham Young vs.

Saturday's Arizona-Oregon winner or Colorado, with Penn State a possibility if the Nittany Lions beat Pitt on Saturday.

Gator — SEC vs. a Big Ten or Pac-10 team, or, perhaps, Colorado, which could get shut out of the bowls for the second year in a row.

Hall of Fame — SEC team vs. Syracuse, which also is being sought by the Gator Bowl but appears to be leaning toward the Hall of Fame. In either bowl, the Orangemen could wind up with a rematch of last year's distasteful Sugar Bowl tie (16-16) with Auburn.

Holiday — Wyoming vs. Oklahoma State.

Independence — Southern Mississippi vs. Texas-El Paso if the Miners beat San Diego State on Saturday.

Liberty — Indiana vs. South Carolina.

Peach — Iowa vs. North Carolina State, if the Wolfpack beats Duke. Otherwise, an ACC, Big Ten or Pac-10 team.

Sun — SEC team vs. Army, if the Cadets beat Vanderbilt on Saturday; otherwise Pitt, if the Panthers beat Penn State.

Chievous Making A Name For Himself

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — Houston Rockets rookie Derrick Chievous is being touted for stardom with just four NBA games under his belt.

In the Rockets' 106-99 victory over the Utah Jazz on Thursday night, Chievous came off the bench to score 27 points in 35 minutes while replacing starting small forward Buck Johnson.

"The guy's fantastic," Houston coach Don Chaney said. "He wanted the ball badly. He reminds me of John Havlicek. Things happen for him and he's still maturing. Without a doubt, he's going to be a star."

In Thursday's only other game, Denver beat Portland 135-115.

Chievous, the Rockets' first-round pick from Missouri last year, seems to exude confidence both on and off the court.

"My background makes me good enough for this league," Chievous said. "I played against guys who should be here. I'm here so I must be in the same class as the other NBA players."

Houston center Akeem Olajuwon, who led the 2-2 Rockets with 35 points, 19 rebounds and five steals, also is a believer in Chievous.

"He can get it done because he's sure of his game and he can deliver," Olajuwon said. "Definitely, he will be a star in the NBA."

The effect of Chievous in a 19-6 run by Houston in the second half wasn't lost on Karl Malone of the Jazz, who scored 25 points along with 10 rebounds.

"Akeem and Chievous took over the game," Malone said. "They ran their offense well down the stretch and came back after we were up 81-71."

The victory was especially nice for Chaney, trying to mesh Chievous and seven other new players. The downside of that adjustment had been second-half collapses in two games.

"We picked it up toward the end, unlike some other games this year," Chaney said. "It's important for our bench to be capable of contributing. We played like we wanted to win."

The game was especially physical as both Malone and Utah center Mark Eaton fouled out. That was the tonic Olajuwon needed to take over as he poured in 17 points in the fourth quarter.

"Anytime Eaton is in the game, there's not much you can do," Olajuwon said. "When he's out, there's room to work. Our defense and our bench did the job for us tonight."

Utah coach Frank Layden felt that fatigue was a problem.

"It appeared to me our first unit got tired," Layden said. "We're a little thin on players right now."

Thurl Bailey, who paced 1-2 Utah with 31 points, felt it was execution that doomed the Jazz.

"We started walking through some plays and turned the ball over and the Rockets got momentum because of our mistakes," Bailey said.

Of course Chaney was very pleased with Houston's overall play and especially the performance of Chievous.

"I thought it was a very good, competitive game," Chaney said. "I loved the spark Eric Chievous gave us off the bench. I'm very proud of the way he played tonight."

Nuggets 135, Trail Blazers 115
Michael Adams scored 29 points as Portland lost in Denver for the 12th consecutive time over five years.

Adams made 10 of 20 shots and five of five free throws. He made four 3-pointers and has made at least one in an NBA-record 47 consecutive games.

"We gave Adams some of his threes because we just lost him and didn't pick him up quickly enough,"

Portland's Mike Schuler said. "We talked about staying on him, but you relax a second and you're off a step and all of a sudden it's in the basket."

Portland never led but pulled to within four points early in the third quarter. Terry Porter scored two consecutive baskets to open the fourth quarter and pull the Trail Blazers to within 96-90, but Denver then went on an 11-4 run.

Alex English scored 30 points for Denver. Clyde Drexler led Portland with 32 points.

Hockey For Women Too

Becomes First Women To Play For USC Club Team

By Lonnie White
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — Ice hockey is generally considered to be a man's sport, but Jennifer Plott is out to change that.

Plott, 20, loves to play hockey and last season became not only the first woman to play on UCLA's hockey club, but also the first to play in the Southern California Collegiate Hockey Association.

Plott, a 5-foot 8 1/2-inch Beverly Hills native, carries a double major in biology and psychology and hopes to attend veterinary school someday.

But hockey is her passion.

"I just love to play hockey," Plott said. "I can never get enough of it. If I haven't been on the ice for two or three days, I feel as if I am cheating myself."

Plott got off to a late start and did not actually play organized hockey until her junior year in high school. She had started out in figure skating at 10 but always had her eye on the sport played with sticks and pads.

"I was somewhat a tomboy when I was young," Plott said. "When I was figure skating, I always wanted to play hockey because I would see the fun the boys had playing."

Her interest in hockey did not come as a surprise to her parents.

"She always loved to skate and she always loved athletics," said her father, Thomas Plott. "She used to jump horses, and she competed in track in high school. We just think it is great, now that she is into hockey."

On the East Coast, Plott's hockey life style would not be out of place, because women's hockey programs are plentiful, from elementary school to the Ivy League. In Los Angeles, however, hockey was given short shrift before the arrival of Wayne Gretzky last summer, and certainly it was not what most women aspired to.

Plott had her own ideas, though. After graduating from Beverly Hills High School in 1985, she decided to enroll at Colby College in Maine because of the school's women's hockey program.

"My first season at Colby was frustrating," she said. "I was a defenseman, and I did not play much because the other girls were better than me."

But as the season went on, Plott played more.

"Jennifer was always a good athlete," said Rob Pfeifer, Colby hockey coach. "She just did not have the necessary skills to play when she first arrived, but she improved with practice."

After a year at Colby, however, Plott decided to return home and assist her parents, who were involved in the construction of convalescent hospitals.

"I figured that there could be no better time to repay them for putting me through school, but my return home turned out to be a blessing in disguise," Plott said.

Her blessing turned out to be Jack White, the UCLA hockey club coach, whom she met while attending his hockey clinic.

White, 40, is credited with developing many of the top players in the area. From his junior national team, which finished third in 1983, three players have been drafted by National Hockey League teams and are playing on the Division I level in college.

"Jack White is just an amazing guy," Plott said. "He conducts a different program than most, because his drills help you improve your handling of the puck, agility and get you to constantly move on the ice."

Plott began practicing full time under the supervision of White and his assistant, Pat Brisson. She began taking classes at UCLA last fall and became the hockey club manager last season, then wound up playing.

"She was always around, working out with the team," said White, "so we just started letting her play, and everyone took to her well. Her strong point is that she is willing to push through and work hard to get better."

Plott said she did not have many problems mixing in. "The guys took to me pretty well. A couple gave me some problems with some negative remarks, but that stopped soon after I started playing."

It helped, of course, that Plott could play. When a new UCLA goalie contended that women do not belong on the ice with men, for instance, Plott made him eat his words during a one-on-one drill when she scored on her first attempt against him.

"Yeah, that really shut him up pretty quick," Plott said, smiling.

She also takes hockey's rough moments in stride.

"Against USC, I was hit real hard," she said. "I had broke up a play real nicely, and when (a USC player) returned to the ice on the next shift, he really hit me."

Plott plans to return to Colby in December and wanted to play for UCLA again until then. But because she did not enroll in time for classes this quarter, she is not eligible.

Even so, she works out with the Bruins and is excited about returning to Colby, although she will miss the team's first six games.

"I cannot wait to get back there," she said. "I want to just show them how much I have improved. I will have a definite advantage from playing with guys all of this time."

Pfeifer also is awaiting Plott's return. "She just needed more ice time," he said.

Plott figures, however, that she still has room for improvement.

"I still have a long ways to go," she said. "I have to work on keeping my knees bent at all times and my head up, but if I continue to practice, I think I will be able to reach my goal."

Plott's goal is to play international hockey. She got a taste of it last summer, when she played in France for three months.

"I want to make the U.S. international team, and if women's hockey is an exhibition sport in the '92 Olympics, I want to be on the U.S. team," she said.

NCAA Rules A Maze Of Words

By Hal Bock
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The sentence begins rather directly: "The term 'financial aid' as used in By-law 6 includes all institutional funds such as scholarships, grants, loans ..."

Then it winds its way through a maze of parentheses, dashes and other grammatical paraphernalia, eventually ending just as directly as it began:

"... available to all students and administered on the same basis for all students, shall not be considered accountable financial aid."

That clause in the section of the NCAA Manual dealing with limitations on financial aid awards, consumes 180 words, some of them well chosen, some of them not so well chosen, all of them in a single sentence that sags under their weight. Abraham Lincoln needed only 268 for the Gettysburg Address and he had the good sense to separate them by a series of periods, not to mention occasional paragraphs.

When Dr. Charles Knapp moved from scandal-scarred Tulane into the president's office at the University of Georgia, he was asked about the sea of NCAA rules and regulations. Knapp eyed the ominous Manual and called it, "The most complex, convoluted book I've ever read."

Give the man credit. At least he had the patience to read this foreboding tome that runs better than 400 pages. Dr. Wilford Bailey, president of the NCAA and chairman of the committee that has restructured the book, suspects the Georgia president is in the minority. "Most places, they just put it on the shelf and then call the NCAA staff if they have any questions," he said.

Bailey and the staff hope that changes when the streamlined, easier-to-understand Manual makes its debut in January. He expects it to be embraced enthusiastically at the NCAA convention because the new version makes a sincere effort at being comprehensible, something that did not always concern its predecessor.

"The Manual had to be revised," Bailey said. "In the last decade, it had become unwieldy because we've adopted a lot of new rules."

Regulations sometimes crossed from one article to another and from one by-law to another. The language often was arcane — deliberately so, some suspected — and frequently schools that transgressed, blamed the book for their various misdemeanors. That excuse has been eliminated now.

"Historically, the Manual was written in legal jargon," Bailey said. "People who worked with it every day managed it. But the average recruiter or coach had difficulties with it. Maybe that's why so many institutions use law school professors as faculty athletic advisors."

Three years ago, Bailey was appointed to head a committee of five charged with making the Manual more responsive to the average administrator's needs. The other committee members were Clayton Chapman of the ECAC, Prentice Gault of the Big Eight Conference, David Price of the Pac-10 and Donna Lopiano of the University of Texas. Their task was something like trying to translate ancient Egyptian without benefit of the Rosetta Stone.

"It was far harder, much more difficult than we had anticipated," Bailey said. "Over a 36-month period, we met 27 times covering 64 working days. It was a monumental project."

There was, for example, the existing language on eligibility, no small bit of business. "There were two by-laws dealing with the subject, one on individual eligibility, the other on NCAA Championship eligibility," Bailey said. "But the by-law on membership conflicted with that. The answer was there, but to get to it, you had to travel a circuitous route. Everything in there seemed that way."

Bailey and his helpers hope they have changed all that, presenting the same rules and regulations in simpler language that is easier to locate in the master Manual. As an adjunct, the NCAA will publish separate volumes on specific areas of legislation. So now a recruiter can be equipped with a pint-sized version that deals only with recruiting and no longer will he have to fight his way through pages of verbiage that do not apply to his specialized activities.

Will that make recruiters follow the rules more carefully?

Bailey's committee can't guarantee that, but progress always comes in small steps. The simpler Manual is a tentative first one.

Navy, USC Playing Similarly Of Late

By Rick Scoppe
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Navy, which has won three games in 1988, is nobody's version of a football power.

But then neither is South Carolina — at least recently.

The Gamecocks have been outscored 93-0 in two of their last three outings. A 34-0 loss to Georgia Tech on Oct. 15 was a shocker. But at least the game was in Atlanta.

South Carolina was not so lucky on Saturday against No. 5 Florida State. The Gamecocks were blown away 59-0 in a game televised by ESPN from Williams-Brice Stadium. The loss dropped South Carolina from the top 20 and a shot at a major bowl.

The Gamecocks will try to rebound on Saturday when they close out their home schedule against Navy, which has lost four straight and is 3-6 overall. South Carolina, which defeated North Carolina State 23-7 in between its two shutout losses, is 7-2.

Game time is 1:30 p.m.

"I would have to say after last week's performance, no matter who we play it would appear to be a powerhouse," South Carolina coach Joe Morrison said. "I think we certainly have to get ourselves ready to play."

Navy can appreciate the Gamecocks' problems. The Midshipmen have been outscored 123 to 34 in their last three games against Pittsburgh, Notre Dame and Syracuse. The Orangemen beat Navy 49-21 last week.

"I had a long talk with our players about the Syracuse game," Coach Elliott Uzelac said. "I told them they will have to play with pride and intensity this week."

"I know they're tired of losing, but they are beat up physically and mentally. It's hard to get up for so many big teams in a row. When you give a lot of effort, you need some rewards, you need a win."

Uzelac, in his second year at Navy, said he is especially worried about playing the Gamecocks after what Florida State did to them last week.

"I think last week really woke them up," he said. "I told our kids that we're going to get South Carolina's best shot."

Navy comes into the game without its captain, quarterback Alton Grizzard, who tore a ligament in his right knee in a 49-21 loss to Syracuse last week.

Grizzard, who was operated on Monday, has rushed for a school-record 571 yards on 114 carries this year, breaking his own mark of 514 yards set last season.

Sophomore Gary McIntosh, who is still recuperating from an ankle injury, will start in place of Grizzard. McIntosh has completed 29 of 61 passes for 439 yards and two touchdowns this year. He hasn't thrown an interception.

Adding to Navy's woes is the fact flanker Carl Jordan, who has a team-high 25 receptions for 468 yards, suffered a scratched retina in practice Tuesday and is listed as questionable.

"We're running out of people," said Uzelac, who is considering activating several freshman to fill out the Midshipmen's roster. "The kids are trying to play their best, but they can't play to their full potential because they're hurting, and it doesn't get any easier this week."

Defensively, Navy is led by defensive back Bob Weissenfels, who has 94 tackles and two interceptions.

Navy has played the Gamecocks tough over the years and are tied in the series 3-3. The last time the two teams met was in 1985 when the Gamecocks won 34-31.

"Navy presents a different type of problem. A wishbone football team, one that we haven't seen in a long time," Morrison said. "So it's going to pose some problems for our defensive team."

"Defensively, on film, they look like they have good speed."

The Gamecocks are led by junior quarterback Todd Ellis, who threw for just 79 yards last week — the first time in his career he has not gone over 100 yards.

Ellis has thrown 15 interceptions in his last five games after he threw just one in his first four. Overall, Ellis has completed 156 of 291 passes for 1,912 yards and eight TDs.

Tailback Harold Green, who has been hampered by an ankle injury for much of the season, leads the ground game with 478 yards and four TDs.

Defensively, South Carolina is led by free safety Ron Rabune, who has 91 tackles.

Despite his team's performance against Florida State, Morrison is not looking to make any major changes on either side of the ball.

"I don't see us making any big changes," he said. "We just need to eliminate the mistakes and do the things we do and do them better. We've won seven ballgames, and I think sometimes people tend to forget that."

Graf Close To Perfection During The Past Season

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Nobody's perfect. But Steffi Graf has come close.

The world's No. 1 female tennis player lost two matches to Gabriela Sabatini in Florida last spring. Since then, she's been faultless.

Her list of 1988 accomplishments is longer than George Bush's resume.

The first Grand Slam since 1970. The first Olympic gold medal in women's tennis since 1924. Ten tournament titles. A 71-2 match record. A 45-match winning streak.

And she's only 19.

"It's been an amazing year," Graf said Thursday at the draw for next week's Virginia Slims Championships at Madison Square Garden. "Everything I wanted to happen has happened."

The West German can complete her wish list with a victory at the season-ending $1 million Slims tournament, which features the top 16 singles players and top eight doubles teams in the point standings.

"You always like to end the year with a victory," Graf said. "Sure, I don't have to prove anything. But that doesn't change the way I play. I always want to win."

When she beat Sabatini in the U.S. Open final, Graf became the first player since Margaret Court to sweep the four Grand Slam tournaments in the same year. A few weeks later in Seoul, she beat Sabatini again to win the gold medal.

But Graf's fondest memory of the year was the Wimbledon final, where she halted Martina Navratilova's bid for a record ninth singles title.

"I think it was because I played the best I could in the last two sets," she said. "And because of the atmosphere on Centre Court. It's a very special place."

Graf also enjoyed her Olympic experience despite a rough start. When she arrived at the Seoul airport, Graf needed bodyguards to protect her from a mob of reporters, photographers and fans.

"It was kind of scary," she said. "I had never been to Korea, and I didn't know I was so popular there. I was hoping to spend a few quiet days before the tournament started, but it didn't work out that way."

Back home in Germany, Graf attracts crowds wherever she goes.

"It gets very difficult sometimes," she said. "When I was in Hamburg recently, I tried to go out on a Saturday. I walked about 20 meters, but there were so many people following me that I went back to my hotel."

While most teams struggle in Philadelphia, the Calgary Flames have turned the Spectrum into their home away from home.

Joe Nieuwendyk scored on a deflection 1:29 into overtime Thursday night and Calgary continued its success streak in Philadelphia by beating the Flyers 3-2.

The Flames have won only two of seven road games this season. Both were overtime victories in Philadelphia. Calgary has not lost in Philadelphia since Dec. 11, 1986.

Nieuwendyk, who scored 51 goals as a rookie last season, got his ninth goal when he tipped a shot by Gary Roberts.

"The goal I scored wasn't the prettiest, but I'll take it," Nieuwendyk said. "I was really trying to get one the whole night."

"I was just in front and tried to deflect it home," he said. "I was basically going to the net and hoping for the best."

In other NHL games, Los Angeles beat Hartford 7-2, Pittsburgh defeated Toronto 5-1, Washington downed Quebec 4-1 and Minnesota tied St. Louis 5-5.

Philadelphia tied the score at 2:2 when Derrick Smith scored with 5:13 left in the third period. But Nieuwendyk's goal gave the Flyers their second loss in two nights.

"We knew they would be tough to match up with, but we went after them," Flyers coach Paul Holmgren said. "We just came up short."

Tim Hunter deflected Al MacInnis' slap shot from the right point past Philadelphia goalie Mark LaForest at 17:58 of the second period to give Calgary a 2-1 lead.

Calgary took a 1-0 lead early in the first period when Jamie Macoun beat LaForest to the glove side with a slapshot at 4:50.

Philadelphia tied the game at 1-1 on Tim Kerr's power-play goal at 10:17. The goal came five seconds after Calgary's Jiri Hrdina was penalized for hooking.

Kings 7, Whalers 2
Luc Robitaille's two goals helped Los Angeles win at home against Hartford.

The Kings won their third straight game while the Whalers are in an 0-3-1 slump.
Wayne Gretzky had two assists. He set up Doug Crossman's goal 1:39 into the game and Los Angeles went on to lead 5-1 after two periods.

Penguins 5, Maple Leafs 1
Rob Brown scored twice and had an assist, leading Pittsburgh past visiting Toronto.

Mario Lemieux, the league's leading scorer, played for the first time since missing two games because of a sprained right wrist. He worked only on the Penguins' power play and had no points.

The Maple Leafs lost their fourth straight game.

North Stars 5, Blues 5
Dave Archibald and Neal Broten scored power-play goals in the third period and Minnesota rallied to tie in St. Louis.

Dino Ciccarelli scored two goals and had an assist for the North Stars, who are 0-6-2 on the road. Minnesota's 2-11-2 record is the worst in the NHL.

Mike Bullard's power-play goal early in the third period put the Blues ahead. But Archibald scored at 7:19 and Broten tied it at 10:49.

Capitals 4, Nordiques 1
Dale Hunter scored a goal and set up two others as Washington beat visiting Quebec.

The Capitals outshot the Nordiques 44-19 and sent Quebec to its ninth loss in 11 games.

Hunter scored a power-play goal late in the first period and assisted on power-play scores by Larry Murphy and Geoff Courtnall.

Junior High Champions

Horoscope From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR SATURDAY Nov. 12

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): A situation involving jealousy needs tactful handling. Insecurities are at the root of the problem. A small, thoughtful gift may clear things.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Keep your feet on the ground. New associations and contacts have you flustered. Romantic advances may be rejected or have a backlash.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): You are nearly exhausted today. Reorganize to get your priorities in order. Frustration exists because you have too much going at once.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Something you have always wanted is within your reach. Settle on your own needs. Avoid runaway gift giving, and save money.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Flattery is bestowed on you. Control your sensitivities and temperament. A romance is fueled, so let it work to your advantage.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Maintain a low profile at work. Being overly optimistic can lead to disappointments. Use a plan to achieve your objectives.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Draw up contracts, and tend to legal affairs. Cheer someone up. Drop in on a sick or needy friend. Start out on a trip earlier than planned.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Catch up on errands and everyday tasks. Shopping will get you a good buy. Ignore criticism from a cranky companion. Friends may drop in.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Plan a short getaway trip with your mate. Home, family and friends play a role in deciding your upcoming social activities.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Cash flow is a temporary problem, calling for prudent use of your paycheck. Plans for the day drag. Family members are uncooperative.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Make use of a relaxed and pleasant day with your mate. A short break from normal weekend activities will recharge your batteries.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): A relaxed day lies ahead. You will find time spent with children rewarding. Outdoor, nature-oriented activities will relax your nerves.

 One of the first play techniques written up in the Official Encyclopedia of Bridge is "Avoidance." It is also one of the first techniques declarer should master.

North had a difficult rebid—he held a good hand with a relatively poor six-card minor suit. His jump rebid of his diamonds was an equitable compromise, and South's conversion to three no trump has the approval of this department.

West led his fourth-best heart, and we would hazard a guess that the contract would be defeated 90 percent of the time. Declarer would win and cash the king-ace of diamonds, and only when West showed out on the second round would declarer's plight dawn on him. He would have to surrender the lead to East to set up the long diamonds, and a heart return would then allow the defenders to collect five tricks.

The careful declarer should realize that he needs only five tricks from the diamond suit to secure his game. Also, he should know that he cannot afford to let the danger hand, East, gain the lead, because he cannot stand a lead through his heart tenace.

With these facts available, the winning line should become obvious. After winning the first trick with the ten of hearts, declarer must cross to dummy with a spade and lead a low diamond, and simply cover any card East produces. If it is an honor, declarer must win and cash his high cards, hoping that East did not start with four diamonds headed by the J-10. When East follows low, however, declarer inserts his nine. West is welcome to win an unexpected trick, but the contract would now be impregnable.

Debut Is A Happy Homecoming

Maestro Lorin Maazel Back With Pittsburgh Symphony

By Marcia Dunn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PITTSBURGH — Maestro Lorin Maazel is returning to his musical roots to direct the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, which he first joined in his teens as a full-time violinist and apprentice conductor.

Maazel was to make his debut Thursday night as music director of the 100-member orchestra, filling a vacancy created by the departure of Andre Previn more than four years ago.

It's a happy and much-heralded homecoming for Maazel, 58, who has worked with orchestras in West Germany, England and France.

"I enjoy being here. I am an American and I feel my place is in this country even though I've conducted so much abroad," he said during a rehearsal break Wednesday.

Maazel's presence on the podium Thursday night was to be his first public appearance as the symphony's music director. He had been serving since 1984 as music consultant for the symphony, considered to be among the nation's best orchestras.

Orchestra officials are counting on Maazel to be the symphony's ticket to greater international recognition and renewed financial success. The symphony has a projected 1987-88 loss of $1.5 million, its largest ever.

Officials say the orchestra's financial problems stem from fewer anticipated grants, rising operating costs and the opening of the Benedum Center for the Performing Arts. The new hall lured away the local opera and ballet companies, resulting in lost rentals.

Managing Director Gideon Toepflitz said a $3 million grant from the Vira I. Heinz Endowment helps make Maazel one of the highest paid conductors in the nation. He declined to provide specifics.

"I can guarantee to you if we would have paid less to somebody, the quality would have gone by ... much faster than the money would," Toepflitz said.

Maazel said his first priority is to make the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra more visible worldwide.

"It's a question of presentation and projection," he said. "Now, because of my appointment, people are thinking about Pittsburgh and discovering the values that they've had all along."

He said classical music is on an upswing in America.

"We're rediscovering values like the family, homegrown apples and with it, I think, will come a heightened awareness of classical music," he said.

Maazel's formal, high-brow style contrasts sharply with that of Previn, who shocked local audiences when he suddenly shed his tuxedo for a black vest and open white shirt near the end of his reign in Pittsburgh.

Maazel, born in Paris to American parents, moved to Pittsburgh as a youth to study violin under Vladimir Bakaleinikoff. He attended Pittsburgh's Peabody High School and the University of Pittsburgh, where he studied literature and philosophy.

Maazel's mother, Marie, recently retired as head of a local youth orchestra.

In 1984, Maazel had resigned amid controversy as director of the Vienna State Opera, a post he held for nearly two years following 10 years with the Cleveland Orchestra.

quite like a Hollywood sound stage. Nothing except maybe Cape Canaveral right before a shuttle launch. Bathed in nervous energy fed by the unnatural intensity of the lights, the sound stage is a magic portal from which our imaginations leap out onto distant worlds.

If Hollywood is your mecca, you will have no trouble finding good movies about making movies. Here are my favorites:

"Sunset Boulevard" (Paramount, 1950), "The Stunt Man" (CBS-Fox, 1980), "Hooper" (Warner, 1978), "Day of the Locust" (Paramount, 1975), "S.O.B." (CBS-Fox, 1981), "Singin' in the Rain" (MGM-UA, 1952) and "A Star is Born" (Warner, 1954).

Directed by Billy Wilder, "Sunset Boulevard" stars Gloria Swanson and William Holden, with Jack Webb, Nancy Olson, Erich von Stroheim and Cecil B. DeMille in supporting roles.

It is one of those carefully scripted, luxuriously mounted melodramas that Hollywood seems incapable of making anymore. Holden plays a screenwriter running out of luck and Swanson plays a gloriously demented ex-matinee idol who gradually takes over his life.

In addition to gathering 11 Oscar nominations (and winning three — best original story, best screenplay and best music), "Sunset Boulevard" also provides the answer to the film trivia question: Which picture starts off with the narrator floating dead in a swimming pool?

"The Stunt Man" also uses the premise of a luckless, shallow hero who falls in with a bunch of Hollywood types. Directed by Richard Rush, "The Stunt Man" stars Peter O'Toole as a mysterious and manipulative director, Steve Railsback as a fleeing felon and Barbara Hershey as a beautiful young starlet drawn to Railsback.

It is an original, nasty movie with plenty of surprises and solid acting throughout.

"Hooper" also is about a stunt man and was probably the last good Burt Reynolds vehicle.

Directed by former stunt man Hal Needham, it stars Reynolds and Sally Field, with Robert Klein, Jan-Michael Vincent, Brian Keith, James Best and Adam West in supporting roles. It is a fun, lightweight comedy with some great stunts and a fine performance by Reynolds as an aging, battered pro egged on by a youthful comer played by Vincent.

Based on a genuinely mean-spirited and unfortunately all-too-accurate novel by Nathaniel West, "Day of the Locust" was brought to the screen with mixed results by John Schlesinger. It stars Donald Sutherland, Karen Black, Burgess Meredith and William Atherton. It is an OK film, but the book is better.

"S.O.B." is a strong, sexy, surrealistic, quasi-autobiographical farce by Blake Edwards. It stars William Holden, Robert Preston, Julie Andrews and Richard Mulligan, with Robert Vaughn, Shelly Winters, Loretta Swit and Larry Hagman in supporting roles.

It is a strange picture that is definitely worth seeing, if for no other reasons than it was Holden's last film.

Of all the inside-Hollywood pictures, "Singin' in the Rain" is surely the most pleasant. Directed by Gene Kelly and Stanley Donen, it stars Kelly, Debbie Reynolds, Donald O'Connor and Cyd Charisse. Jean Hagen almost steals the film with her characterization of a screechy-voiced movie idol who is content to let Reynolds do her singing for her.

Finally, you have your choice of three versions of "A Star is Born." The 1937 original is directed by William Wellman and stars Frederic March, Janet Gaynor and Adolphe Menjou.

The 1954 version is the best known and deservedly so. Directed by George Cukor, it stars Judy Garland and James Mason (There is a restored version of this available, inquire at your video store).

The most forgettable version was made in 1976. Directed by Frank Pierson, it stars Barbra Streisand and Kris Kristofferson. Enough said.

'Karate Kid' Tryouts

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The makers of "The Karate Kid Part III" are looking for a new challenger for star Ralph Macchio, but they say you've got to be young, tough and handsome.

The new male challenger must look no older than 18, be muscular and athletic.

Winger, Nolte Set For Mystery Movie

WILMINGTON (AP) — Debra Winger and Nick Nolte will star in a mystery movie written by playwright Arthur Miller, the movie's producers announced.

The film, "Everybody Wins," will be shot in eight weeks in and around Wilmington and at N.C. Film Studios, production manager Tim Bourne said Thursday. He described the story as "a murder mystery set in a small New England mill town."

Miller, author of "Death of a Salesman," wrote an original screenplay for the film, Bourne said.

The independent production will be by Jeremy Thomas, the British producer of "The Last Emperor," which won nine 1988 Academy Awards, including best picture, Bourne said.

It will be directed by Karel Reisz, a British director whose credits include "Sweet Dreams," "The French Lieutenant's Woman" and "Who'll Stop the Rain?"

Ms. Winger starred in "Betrayed" and "An Officer and a Gentleman." Nolte, whose credits include "Down and Out in Beverly Hills," filmed "Weeds" in Wilmington in 1986.

Isaac Stern Named

DANBURY, Conn. (AP) — Violinist Isaac Stern will be the honorary chairman of a committee to hand out awards named after opera great Marian Anderson and aimed at furthering the careers of young American singers.

The Marian Anderson Celebration Committee will seek to raise $500,000 for a permanent fund to finance the annual awards. Seed money of $25,000 has been provided by the Greater Danbury Arts Council, the Charles Ives Center for the Arts announced Thursday.

Other members of the committee include Harry Belafonte, Lloyd Richards, Kitty Carlisle Hart, and Vladimir and Wanda Toscanini Horowitz.

PBS' 'Nature' Celebrates Australia's Bicentennial

By Jean-Claude Bouis
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The male image gets something of a lift in a PBS series starting Sunday night, "The Nature of Australia," showing the animal world Down Under as more than just koalas, kangaroos and crocodiles.

The six one-hour shows on the PBS series "Nature" are its way of celebrating Australia's bicentennial.

Take for example the leafy sea dragon, one of several creatures that practice a form of male pregnancy to protect their offspring. This cousin of the seahorse lives off South Australia and is named for its camouflage of leaf-like outgrowths that make it look like a piece of kelp. It hatches its young — up to 200 of them — in individual capsules that form soon after the female lays the eggs on the male's tail.

Then there's the marsupial frog, a rain-forest dweller whose hatchlings wriggle onto their father's flanks and push their way into pouches that have formed there to complete their development.

Brooding also is a male task in the Great Barrier Reef among the Australian pike fish, a long, thin speckled species that, after an elaborate courtship ritual, takes the eggs from the female into its pouch until the young emerge.

And another resident of the reef off the northeastern coast of Australia is the yellow-striped cardinal fish which incubates hundreds of eggs clustered in a sticky ball — in its mouth.

Male pregnancy "fascinates us because we're used to thinking of females as the bearers of young, but of course that seems to be only so among the higher mammals," said John Vandenberg, executive producer and writer of "The Nature of Australia" and author of the companion book for the series.

"We tend to take a fairly species-centric view of evolution and the world about us. Most creatures in the world tend to reproduce in very, very different ways from the way we humans and most of the higher mammals do. We probably are an exceptional group rather than the other way around," Vandenberg said in a telephone interview from Melbourne, Australia.

"It fascinates us because it's at such a variance with the way we look at things. It all makes perfect sense; it's all logical for sea horses and those kinds of animals to organize their reproduction in that way," said Vandenberg, a long-time producer of documentaries on the environment for the Australian Broadcasting Corporation.

The series episodes are "A Separate Creation," how Australia's wildlife came to be so different; "Seas Under Capricorn," where the male sea dragon gives birth; "The Making of the Bush," for fans of man-eating crocodiles; "The Sunburnt Country," Australia's outback; "Land of Flood and Fire," with crocodile-eating men; and "The End of Isolation," how conservationists are trying to bring parts of the continent back from the brink of man-made devastation.

"Until not so very long ago, the idea most Australians had about the environment was of a very rugged, harsh and alien kind of place that you sort of had to conquer. There was a lot of fear and loathing of what we call the bush among the early settlers. And the only good tree was a tree that was cut down; the only good tree was a dead tree," said Holland-born Vandenberg, 48, who emigrated to Australia when he was 15.

"That attitude obviously has changed dramatically over the last few years," he said. "We have such a unique environment, absolutely unique plants and animals in many ways. It's a kind of repository for things that have disappeared in the rest of the world, and we still have the chance to keep many of these things."

Vandenberg also said he hopes the series will change attitudes about marsupials, mammals that raise their young in pouches.

"People tend to dismiss kangaroos, and marsupials generally, as rather second-rate animals because they organize their reproduction in what seemed for a long time as a kind of primitive way; an intermediate step between reptiles and birds who have eggs and mammals like us who bear live young," he said. "One of the things we've been able to do in this series is to demonstrate just how very intricately marsupial reproduction is organized, how very precise the various facets of this reproduction are tailored to this particular environment and how well that reproduction is orchestrated."

Newest Acting Dynasty Could Be The Irons Clan

By Matt Wolf
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. MARGARET'S, England — After the Redgraves, the Carradines and the Douglases, what acting clan could be next?

Try the Ironses, as the British star Jeremy Irons joins his son and his father-in-law on-screen in a new film.

"It's like a professional home movie," he said during a break in filming "Danny, the Champion of the World," a $3 million feature due for release in Britain next Easter and in the United States at a time yet to be decided, either in theaters or the Disney Channel on cable-TV.

The movie is based on Roald Dahl's best-selling children's story about a father and son bonded together in a morality tale which sees good winning out over evil. Gavin Millar directs from John Goldsmith's screenplay.

The movie brings together for the first time three generations of this-pian talent. Ten-year-old Sam Irons, in his film debut, plays the resourceful and protective Danny, who lives with his father, William, in a Gypsy caravan in the country.

Jeremy Irons, Sam's real-life father, plays his on-screen one. The veteran Irish actor Cyril Cusack, Sam's grandfather and Irons' father-in-law, plays the eccentric village doctor, Spencer, who tends William's foot after it is injured in a trap for pheasant poachers.

On the set, the young Irons scampers about in baggy gray shorts, demonstrating a pocket calculator to his stand-in, Simon

Spaull, and asking excitedly whether it's lunchtime yet.

The boy seemed outgoing and voluble, but his 40-year-old father adamantly shielded Sam from the press. He prefers to leave all dynastic queries to the senior family members, who are accustomed to such questions.

The 77-year-old Cusack said he disliked the term "dynasty" to describe a family almost universally smitten with the desire to perform.

But with four daughters — all of whom are actresses — he acknowledged such career decisions are often inevitable.

"I think it's not so much an inheritance from the genes but an environmental influence that persuades children," Cusack said in an interview at Twickenham Studios in the West London suburb of St. Margaret's.

His daughters are seen regularly on the British stage.

Nineteen-year-old Catherine is touring England in a theater adaptation of Emile Zola's novel, "Germinal." Niamb, 28, is appearing in London's West End opposite Rex Harrison in J.M. Barrie's "The Admirable Crichton."

Sorcha, 38, ended a one-woman show, "Baglady," in London on Oct. 1. Sinead, 39, Irons' wife, appeared on Broadway in 1985 with the Royal Shakespeare Company and this summer in an acclaimed London production of Brian Friel's "Aristocrats."

Cusack spoke fondly of his grandson's entry into the profession, which technically began in Stratford-upon-Avon in 1986 with a bit part alongside his father in Shakespeare's "The Winter's Tale."

"To begin with, I thought, 'Well, what are we going to have here (on the film)?" Cusack said. "Then I noticed the way Sam reacted to everything. He seems to take acting quite in his stride, without any stress."

Jeremy Irons said acting opposite his son afforded a kind of shorthand: "The emotions are unspoken, unplanned, in everything you do together. That is the plus, I think."

He hopes the movie will be "a little jewel," the kind of family film too rarely seen nowadays.

"I know as a parent it's pretty hard to find films to take kids to," said Irons, who is winning raves in the current psychological drama, "Dead Ringers," a movie distinctly not meant for children with its themes of gynecology, sex, emotionally disturbed twins and drug abuse.

"We've been through the Spielbergian fantasies, and certainly my lot are getting bored with them," said Irons, referring to the movies of Steven Spielberg.

"Danny" is that rare film I think parents will enjoy as much as children," he said.

Irons said he hoped "Danny" wouldn't push Sam toward being a full-time actor: "I don't think you ever wish upon a child a life that requires you to cope with so many rejections, so many uncertainties."

Cosby Is Coming Back

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bill Cosby, star of the highest-rated show in television history, will return to NBC for a sixth season of "The Cosby Show."

"I will work even harder to ensure that people get what I consider to be quality," Cosby said in a statement announcing the deal Thursday. "I love my job and take great pride in doing it."

Since its debut in 1984, "The Cosby Show" has been almost single-handedly responsible for NBC's dominance in the Nielsen ratings. The situation comedy chronicles the minor domestic dilemmas of the Huxtable family.

"The Cosby Show" has been the symbol of success and quality at NBC for the past five years," said Brandon Tartikoff, president of NBC Entertainment. "Knowing that it will return for the 1989-90 season allows an entire company to sleep better at night."

CLASSIFIED DISPLAY: Triad Health Care Center Of Greenville. We know the kind of special people it takes to work in a Long Term Care/Geriatric Setting. Long Term Care Nurses give of themselves to the patients and work hard. They deal with aging and confused patients, elderly people who are frustrated at being unable to care for themselves and patients who are so ill they are unaware of the care they need. The special people that work in this environment are rewarded in a much grander way than the competitive wages & benefits we offer. If you are that special person (RN, LPN, NA) that can give of yourself, then you are the person we are looking for to compliment our staff. Give us a call at 758-7100 or send resume to DNS - Triad Health Care Center of Greenville, Rt. 1, Box 21, Greenville, N.C.
