Tornadoes Rip Through, N.C. Counties; 5 Killed

RALEIGH — Tornadoes today ripped through a department store, destroyed mobile homes and churches and flattened apartment buildings, killing five people and sending at least 143 to hospitals, authorities said.

Three people died in Wake County, which contains Raleigh. Two deaths were reported in Nash County, said Gov. Jim Martin. The victims' names were not immediately released.

"We were pretty calm. It just sort of happened real quick. The building started shaking, glass shattered from the windows," said Lisa Saylor at Cooper's Pond Apartments in north Raleigh, where four three-story buildings were flattened.

"The bed started sliding," Ms. Saylor said. "It was over was pretty quick and the rest was picking up pieces and rumbling through the rubble to try to make it out."

Martin said three storm systems had been identified, and 15 tornado touchdowns were reported in seven North Carolina counties, starting in Raleigh at about 1:15 a.m. The last tornado strikes were around 5 a.m., near Bayboro in Pamlico County and near Manteo in Dare County, both on the coast.

The other counties hit by tornadoes were Franklin, Halifax and Northampton, Martin said.

The tornadoes hit hardest in parts of Wake, Nash and Franklin counties, and power outages were common. In north Raleigh, a K Mart department store was flattened, and at least three employees were trapped inside, according to Sgt. J.D. Everett of the Raleigh Police Department.

As of 10:30 a.m., two of the five victims had been identified. They were Janet Barnes, 8, of Raleigh, and Pete Fulghum, 14, of Raleigh.

Joe Dean, secretary of the N.C. Department of Crime Control and Public Safety, flew in a helicopter over Wake County at about 9 a.m. today.

"Except for Vietnam, I've never seen anything like this, not in the United States," Dean said.

Dean said it appeared that the tornado wreaked havoc over a 10-mile area of Wake County. "It was amazing — one house was standing, and the one right next to it was completely destroyed."

Roger Friedenson of the Insurance News Service said it appeared that damages could be as serious as tornadoes that struck southeastern North Carolina in 1984. Those storms caused about $65 million in damage to North Carolina, he said.

Raleigh officials said at about 9:45 a.m. that 84 people had been treated at hospitals in the city. Some 132 houses were damaged, and at least one-third of those were destroyed, City Manager Dempsey Benton said.

Benton and Raleigh Mayor Avery Upchurch said their main concern was dealing with about 500 homeless people.

Bad Weather Spares Area

By Cherie Evans
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Thunderstorms and heavy rains lit the dark skies and soaked Greenville and Pitt County early this morning but did not cause any major problems, local officials said.

"We didn't have any problems from what passed through the area," Roger Jones, director of Electric Systems at the Greenville Utilities Commission, said.

A breaker at one of the stations along Highway 33 "operated twice and closed back," possibly as a result of lightning striking, he said. "Other than that, we haven't had any problems to speak of."

Leaves saturated during the storm are blocking the catch basins in Greenville, Mayo Allen, director of the Greenville Public Works Department, said. But, "that's nothing unusual."

With the tornado warning that was issued this morning, "we're keeping our eyes open just in case."

Most of the department's efforts today were directed at catching up after the Thanksgiving holiday, Allen said.

"We're running about one to one and a half days behind schedule," he said. "We're doing our very best to be caught up by Friday."

Problems in the catch-up process stem from equipment failure, Allen

Oil Ministers Approve Cuts

By Sally Jacobsen
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VIENNA, Austria — OPEC oil ministers today approved a new production accord that will sharply cut their output and raise crude oil prices.

Saudi Arabia's oil minister, Hisham Nazer, emerged from a session of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and said the deal was formally completed.

All 13 members of the cartel signed the accord, which sets a target price of $18 a barrel although crude has been selling at $14 a barrel and less.

Saudi Arabia had tried to set a minimum price of $15 in the accord, but that effort met resistance.

Analysts have said the agreement, which goes into effect Jan. 1 and runs for six months, could send crude prices climbing by $1 or $2 a barrel.

Each $1 rise in the price of crude oil theoretically means an increase of 2.5 cents a gallon in retail gasoline prices, although oil companies do not always pass along the full increase.

The agreement sets the cartel's total production at 18.5 million barrels a day in the first six months of the year. It currently is running at 22.5 million barrels a day.

The ministers' aim is to curtail their production in an effort to reduce the glut on the market and lift sagging prices.

Nazer said late Sunday the Saudi proposal was designed to prevent prices from falling below $15. But other ministers said the minimum price could become the ceiling price.

Barkeshli said Sunday the Saudi proposal was "a major divergence from OPEC resolutions so far" and could "totally sabotage the agreement."

"Iran is not going to accept this type of idea," he said.

Under the accord, each country

East Ruling Said Minor Setback

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BALTIMORE — A ruling that blocks the widow of Sen. John East from divulging the contents of four medical documents that were given to her mistakenly is only a minor setback in her $10 million wrongful death lawsuit, her lawyer says.

"It really doesn't affect our case," attorney James Hourihan told The News and Observer of Raleigh. He said he expects to bring his case against the federal government to trial next year.

East, a Republican elected to the Senate in 1980, committed suicide at his Greenville, N.C., home in June 1986.

Mrs. East originally sought $3.5 million from the federal government in an administrative claim that was rejected.

She filed the suit a year ago, claiming that doctors at Bethesda Naval Hospital repeatedly failed to diagnose the senator's hypothyroidism, a severe thyroid malfunction that can cause depression, despite several symptoms that should have alerted them.

Mrs. East's lawsuit says the doctors' negligence led to emotional and physical injuries that "directly caused" East's death.

Lawyers in the U.S. Attorney's office in Baltimore, where the suit was filed, are defending the government.

The suit already has raised questions about the quality of care at Bethesda Naval Hospital, where members of Congress and other top government officials often are treated. In a 1987 letter, Hourihan urged Navy officials to settle out of court, warning: "The Navy can ill afford the significant bad publicity regarding its medical facilities, which this case is certain to generate."

In preparing the suit, Mrs. East's lawyers in 1987 filed a request under the Freedom of Information Act with Navy officials, seeking documents regarding the senator's treatment at Bethesda.

"The Department of the Navy inadvertently released certain documents" that should have remained private, government attorneys said recently in court documents. They argued the four documents were privileged because they dealt with a "medical quality assurance program" that is, by law, confidential.

In court pleadings, Mrs. East's lawyers have said the Navy documents contained "damaging concessions ... that strongly indicate that even the Navy is aware of the seriousness of Mrs. East's claim." They said the documents helped justify Mrs. East's claim of $10 million in damages.

The four documents have been sealed by court order, and lawyers for the government and for Mrs. East declined to discuss them. But court records indicate they dealt with an internal "medical quality assurance investigation" conducted at Bethesda after malpractice was alleged in East's case.

U.S. District Judge Walter Black Jr., who will decide the East suit if it goes to trial, ruled in May that he should not see the four documents until a federal magistrate decided whether they would be admitted as evidence at the trial. The magistrate, Deborah Chasanow, ruled earlier this month that Mrs. East's lawyers may not use the documents.

It remains unclear, however, whether Mrs. East still can seek $10 million in damages. Her lawyers argued in a February motion that even if the documents were ruled confidential, "there is absolutely no prohibition upon Mrs. East's revising her monetary demand to reflect the information she derived from those documents."

The government argues Mrs. East cannot increase her claim of damages from the $3,540,449.47 she sought in the original administrative claim filed against the Navy. Mrs. East's lawyers had cited three reasons for increasing her claim:

The $10 million figure in the lawsuit reflects "the injuries suffered more accurately than did her original good faith settlement demand" made in the administrative claim that was denied," Mrs. East's lawyers say.

Chamber Plans Boat Show

By Greg Laudick
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Greenville Chamber of Commerce today announced that it would sponsor an annual regional boat show early in the spring.

Chamber officials said at a press conference this morning that the first Eastern North Carolina Boat Show will be held March 2-5 at the New Greenville Warehouse.

Chamber President Ed Walker said the show has been conceived as a regional exhibition event and designed to draw boating enthusiasts interested in the latest boat models and designs, boating accessories and fishing equipment.

Walker estimated the four-day show will draw approximately 30,000 people and pump nearly $1 million into the local economy.

Up to 45 exhibitors will be present at the show, representing manufacturers of sailboats, canoes, powerboats, skiing equipment and saltwater fishing gear.

"Greenville and Pitt County is not only the hub of one of the nation's most important boating manufacturing areas, our location is in the midst of the fabulous water recreation areas of the Albemarle and Pamlico Sounds," Walker said.

"What's more, the Atlantic Ocean and the Outer Banks are no more than a couple of hours away from anywhere in our area. What could be more natural than for us to have a boat show here in Greenville-Pitt County?" he added.

Walker said the show would be the first of its kind in eastern North Carolina, attracting the owners of approximately 27,000 licensed boats in Pitt and surrounding counties. Currently four major boat shows in the state are held during the year — in Raleigh, Fayetteville, Greensboro and Charlotte.

Gary Clay, who heads the small business division of the chamber, will be 1989 boat show manager. He said initial response from regional boating manufactures and vendors has been very positive, adding that approximately 25 percent of the exhibiting space has already been sold.

To help ensure the show's success, the chamber has enlisted the assistance of a professional advertising organization.

Outdoor billboards, newspaper and regional magazine advertising and direct mail will be among the marketing tools used to promote the show, Walker said.

Four Dead As Plane Falls In A Swamp

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOLINO, Fla. — A small airplane crashed into a swamp during a thunderstorm Sunday, killing all four people aboard, authorities said.

In Port Lavaca, Texas, a single-engine airplane crashed into a house during a heavy fog, killing the pilot and injuring the passenger. Those in the house escaped injury.

Florida rescue crews were searching for a second aircraft after eyewitnesses reported different locations for the crash site, suggesting the possibility of a collision, officials said.

"They're just checking to make sure there wasn't more than one plane," said Robert Bullard, an Escambia County emergency medical technician who was the first to arrive at the crash site.

The single-engine Piper Cherokee had taken off near Tampa Bay, Fla., and was bound for Mobile, Ala., said Jack Barker, regional spokesman

Six Thefts Reported

Investigators said six thefts were reported to Greenville police over the weekend.

Officer L.C. Overby said a trailer and riding lawnmower were taken in an incident reported at 5:50 p.m. Saturday; change was taken from a coin operated machine at the Plaza Video Arcade at The Plaza mall in an incident reported at 6:14 p.m., and $200 worth of clothes were taken from Cato's at The Plaza in an incident reported at 7:52 p.m. Officer R.L. Forrest said items were taken from a construction trailer behind Parker's Barbecue on Greenville Boulevard in a break-in reported at 6:50 p.m.

Officer M.J. Nobles said a quantity of wine, beer, tobacco products and food items were taken from Bell's Grocery at 602 Bonner's Lane in a break-in reported at 9:18 a.m. Sunday, while Officer D.R. Wyrick said a purse was taken from Ryan's Restaurant on Memorial Drive in an incident reported at 3:02 p.m.

Ground-Breaking Set

A ground-breaking ceremony will be held for the new Taco Bell restaurant at 659 Memorial Drive at 9:30 a.m. Wednesday.

Scheduled to attend the event are N.C. Rep. Walter Jones, Greenville Mayor Ed Carter and County Commission Chairman Charles Gaskins.

North Carolina native Tom McLean is the owner of this 80-seat restaurant, which is scheduled to open in late December. McLean owns the other Taco Bell restaurant in Greenville and another location in Goldsboro.

Taco Bell Corp., a division of PepsiCo., is the leading Mexican quick-service restaurant in America with over 3,000 locations worldwide.

Specialty Items Sought

The Williamston High School Keywanettes are asking area merchants donate items advertising their businesses for the Carolina District Keywanette Convention, April 7-9, at the Greenville Ramada Inn.

Day Of Prayer

A day of prayer and reflection for senior Catholics will be held at St. Peter's Church in Greenville from 10:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. Friday.

The Rev. Joseph R. Jones, pastor, will celebrate the opening Mass and a dialogue homily.

The primary grades of St. Peter's School will host a luncheon in the school hall. Mike Hamer will provide dulcimer music and song.

The Rev. Xavier Hayes, pastor of St. Gabriel's and the Rev. Paul Vaeth, chaplain of the Newman Center on the East Carolina University campus, will speak during the afternoon. A scripture and candle-lighting ceremony, with lay participation, will be led by Gerard O'Brien of St. Elizabeth's Church in Farmville. The Rev. Alban Harmon, associate pastor of St. Peter's Church of Greenville, assisted by other priests, will conduct a Hands On Blessing. Reconciliation will follow.

Reservations for participation are necessary and may be made by phoning St. Peter's Rectory, 757-3259.

Reward Day Held

Third Street School held "All School Reward Day" last week, recognizing winners of "Books for Bucks," Best Bus Buddies and Expression Page. Kindergartners presented a Thanksgiving play, and food boxes were received for needy families in the school.

Fifteen students have been recognized as Students of the Month at the school, while Saturday was clean-up and beautification day. Parents, grandparents and staff raked, trimmed and prepared beds for bulb planting. Students will plant daffodil bulbs Friday.

Third grade students recently visited River Park North to view health exhibits. And Capt. Nelson Stator of the Greenville Police Department visited the students and discussed the responsibilities of a detective.

"Kids on the Block," which educates children about various disabilities was presented, sponsored by the Pitt County Association for Retarded Citizens.

Earline Coghill, cafeteria manager for the school, treated kindergarten students to a Thanksgiving tasting party.

Students Study Coast

Fourth grade social studies classes at Chicod Elementary School recently participated in the presentation "Coastal North Carolina," given by Richard Stephenson of East Carolina University's Department of Geography and Planning. Stephenson emphasized the Outer Banks, their history and changes which have occurred there in the last 25 years.

Teen Injured

A Greenville 17-year-old was reported critically injured in a Thanksgiving Day collision at N.C. 11 and State Road 1129 near Ayden.

Investigating officer J.E. Tomer said Francesca Cox, 17, of Greenville was taken to Pitt County Memorial Hospital following a collision at 3 p.m. between the car she was driving and a car driven by Laura Jan Smith, 20, of Route 3, Ayden. He said the car driven by Miss Cox, traveling west on State Road 1129, apparently pulled into the path of the Smith car, which was headed south on N.C. 11. He said no charges have been filed.

Tornadoes Leave Raleigh Residents In State Of Shock

By Michael Hobbs

RALEIGH — Tony DeVita still clutched his "tornado pillow" hours after killer storms ripped through Raleigh and counties to the northeast today killing five and injuring more than 100 people.

The tornadoes struck without warning, swirling along a five-mile path through heavily populated northern suburbs of North Carolina's capital city before leaping to neighboring counties.

Along the way, the tornadoes ripped up DeVita's townhouse.

"It sounded like a rush of water, followed by a bunch of shaking," DeVita said. "The roof was totally gone, the patio doors were gone and every window was smashed. The carpet was rolled up like someone was going to replace it."

DeVita, 34, grabbed a pillow and got behind his bedroom door. He still held the pillow during an interview at a shelter in a central Raleigh school.

"I had to dig my way out (from the corner of the room)," he said. "I was kind of buried in rubble. In fact, I later found plaster in my ears."

"If you felt a big, hot hair dryer blowing by you and the whole place was shaking apart and if this (pillow) was the only thing that protected your face, you'd hold onto it," DeVita said, calling it his "tornado pillow."

Forty-six people stayed at the shelter after the storms hit between 1 a.m. and 2 a.m. No tornado warnings had been issued by the National Weather Service before the storms hit, officials said.

City officials said 500 people were homeless because of the twisters. Of the 132 houses damaged, a third were destroyed, said Mayor Avery Upchurch. Eighty-four people were treated at Raleigh hospitals.

DeVita left his townhouse wearing only pajamas, no socks or shoes. He borrowed clothes from neighbors — a pink jacket from one, gray sweatpants from another, and socks from someone at the shelter. He still was without shoes.

Residents of the complex were told to evacuate because of a gas leak. Raleigh City Manager Dempsey Benton said three gas lines were broken, but all were repaired by mid-morning.

DeVita's car was parked just feet from his front entrance. He said it was untouched.

would be given a production quota, or ceiling, within the total limit of 18.5 million barrels a day.

Many OPEC countries need more money from their oil sales. Iran and Iraq want additional revenues to rebuild their economies, which were badly damaged in their eight-year war. They agreed to an August cease-fire.

Under the new agreement, Iran and Iraq each will get the same quota of 2.64 million barrels a day.

Iraq had been demanding an equal production ceiling with Iran, which repeatedly said no.

Under the new accord, Iran will retain its production share at 14.27 percent of the cartel's total output. Other countries would give up some of their share to bring Iraq up to the same level as Iran.

Saudi Arabia maintains the largest share at about a quarter of OPEC's total output.

Under the current accord, Iran has a cap of 2.4 million barrels a day. Iraq was given a ceiling of 1.5 million barrels but ignored it. Analysts estimate its production at 2.7 million barrels a day.

OPEC members are Algeria, Ecuador, Gabon, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Libya, Nigeria, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates, and Venezuela.

for the Federal Aviation Administration in Atlanta.

Two men and two women were killed by the impact of the crash about 20 miles north of Pensacola, Bullard said. The plane apparently lost its wings during a thunderstorm and its nose hit first, he said.

The airplane, which was passing over Pensacola, had been in routine contact with the control tower before the crash, Barker said.

"Then at 12:35 Central time they lost contact with the plane 10 miles north-northwest of Pensacola, near Molino," Barker said.

The plane went down in a swampy area near this Florida panhandle town, hindering recovery efforts, said Escambia County Sheriff's Department spokesman John Harper.

Rescuers had to travel by boat part of the route and took over two hours to reach the site, he said.

The victims' names were not immediately available, Barker said.

Port Lavaca Police Chief Joe Pena said Basil Blevins and his wife were watching television in the den of their home about 11:30 p.m. Saturday when the two-seater plane plowed into the master bedroom.

The pilot, Allen Abildstrom of Houston, 32, was killed. Passenger Gregory Hicks, 22, of Houston, was transported in satisfactory condition to Sharpstown Hospital, where he was being treated for eye injuries, authorities said.

The plane was removed from the house early Sunday.

"I didn't feel a thing," Blevins said of the crash. "It got the front bedroom, the hallway, the bathroom, the closet and then the master bedroom."

"They locked out," Pena said of the couple. "They were in the den area when it crashed. It came through the roof and the engine was lodged into a closet and bathroom of the master bedroom."

School Dropout Program Impresses N.C. Officials

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ORANGEBURG, S.C. — The recent turnaround of the Orangeburg high school system, which has received national recognition, will serve as a model for North Carolina education officials battling high dropout rates.

The Charlotte-Mecklenburg school plan, incorporating some of Orangeburg's success, sets up programs from preschool to an alternative high school. It was unveiled Nov. 1 and is expected to be considered by the board Dec. 13.

"Orangeburg is doing significantly better than we are," says Charlotte research specialist Chuck Dulany.

Officials estimate 5 percent of Charlotte-Mecklenburg's ninth through 12th graders dropped out last year. In 10th grade, the rate was 7.5 percent.

"There's a real sense down there that they can do something about their problems," says Calvin Wallace, newly appointed deputy superintendent to Charlotte-Mecklenburg's schools. He also chairs a 26-member dropout-prevention task force. "It's a whole concept of caring about students."

Most of Orangeburg-Wilkinson

High School's 1,800 students are considered at-risk — 80 percent are minority and 70 percent are poor enough to qualify for free lunch. But last year less than 3 percent of the student body dropped out. In 1985, that figure was 9 percent.

The improvements at Orangeburg-Wilkinson did not come cheaply or easily, though. As little as five years ago, the school had more than its share of discipline and academic problems.

Orangeburg schools were desegregated in 1970, but many whites fled to private academies. Between 1969 and 1972, 1,200 students left the system.

But things began to change as the education-reform movement hit South Carolina, and more resources and stricter standards came with the state's Education Improvement Act of 1984.

In 1986, Orangeburg-Wilkinson got a tough, new principal, Melvin Smoak, who reasoned that academic success would breed a more dynamic student body and a lower dropout rate.

He pioneered a $200,000 computer-assisted remediation program to improve academic performance. The school paid for most of the equipment, although it did receive some help through donations and grants.

This year, 1,000 students — more than half the student body — are in some sort of remediation.

Smoak, now the district's assistant superintendent, took other measures to encourage students to stay in school: a tough discipline policy, strict tracking of attendance and a support system of teachers and other adults to encourage students to stay in school.

"There's always the perception that if you come from a poor background, you can't make it," says Smoak, 37, son of a truck driver and a cotton-picker. "But I told the students, 'If you think you can, you can.'"

In 1987, 68 percent of 10th graders passed the state's basic skills exam in math, compared with 44 percent in 1985. In reading 71 percent passed in 1987; 58 percent passed in 1985.

Nine years ago Orangeburg voters defeated a bond issue to build a new high school.

But schools Superintendent James Wilsford found a loophole in the law, the school district issued bonds without a vote and the school was built anyway.

Today, Orangeburg-Wilkinson is a sprawling $8.5 million testimonial to success against the odds. And it has attracted national attention, including a Newsweek magazine cover story in May about its program.

The red-brick building is almost as spotless as when it opened four years ago. The spacious student lobby is brightened by trees, a cabinet filled with trophies and a red, blue, yellow and white incentive-award banner.

Among Orangeburg-Wilkinson's offerings is a $60,000 writing lab serving students who read at or below a fifth-grade level. The lab looks more like an office than a classroom, with sleek chairs, eight IBM personal computers and four laser disk machines attached to computers.

"It helped me learn about some letters I didn't know nothing about," said 10th-grader Patrick Austin, who failed his basic skills reading test the first time he took it but passed it after a semester in the lab. "It was fun, challenging and exciting."

"Our philosophy is that all students can learn if they are paired with resources and motivation," says Principal Harold McClain. "The technological approach to remediation has provided students with some self-motivation."

Doctor Going Back To Vietnam

By Paul Nowell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A North Carolina doctor who founded a non-profit medical organization in Vietnam during the war will return to the communist nation in about a week to take up where he left off.

"It was time to go back to Vietnam," said Jim Turpin, an Asheville doctor who has written two books about his experiences entitled "Vietnam Doctor" and "A Faraway Country."

Turpin, who founded Project Concern, spent seven years as a medical missionary in the jungles of Vietnam. Besides treating the poor, he and his staff trained dozens of local Vietnamese and Montagnards in medical techniques.

Turpin and the other American doctors and nurses were forced to leave Vietnam by 1972, when it became too dangerous.

"We left reluctantly," he said in a telephone interview Wednesday from his home in Asheville. "We had been secure because everyone knew we were non-political. We treated anyone who came in, no questions asked."

Turpin, 60, now an occupational medicine consultant for several companies, recently learned that one of two hospitals established by the San Diego-based Project Concern organization in Vietnam is still operating.

He also learned the hospital is being run by a villager who trained under him in his Village Medical Assistance program in the 1960s.

"As bad as the situation was during the war, the Vietnamese government is willing to admit now that it's worse," he said. "They're willing to say they need our help."

So they turned to Project Concern. "We built up a lot of trust over seven years," Turpin said. "They also know we don't spend government money and we're a non-political organization with a multi-racial and multi-international staff."

"I guess we'll have to call this one 'The Vietnam Doctor Returns,'" he said.

This time, Turpin wants to train local health workers in the latest techniques in the area of child survival. The government of Vietnam has ranked child survival as its top priority, he said.

"We will stress a technique known as ORT — or oral rehydration therapy," he said. The technique is used to treat starving children who are badly dehydrated, he explained.

Turpin and his wife, Wrenn, will fly to San Diego on Dec. 1. He will fly on to Hanoi three days later and spend two weeks visiting hospitals and villages.

"It will be great to see some of my friends I've worried about for the last 16 years," he said. Turpin founded Project Concern after working with the poor in Mexico in 1959. One year later, he gave up his successful family practice in San Diego and moved to Hong Kong, which he described as the "refugee capital of the world" in 1960.

"I had always wanted to be a medical missionary," he said. "But I never realized that I needed them as much as they needed me." While working at a clinic in Hong Kong, Turpin met a doctor from New Zealand who told him about the numbers of starving children in Vietnam.

"He showed me pictures," Turpin said. "We had malnourished children in Hong Kong, but they weren't starving." Within weeks, he was on a plane to Saigon.

"Once I saw the people, I knew I was hooked," he said.

Report Claims World Religion Generally Ignored In Schools

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Religion is neglected as a subject in North Carolina classrooms, and that void is depriving students of other knowledge, including the history, literature and art of other countries, a report says.

Religion rarely surfaces in the state's social studies curriculum or textbooks, and it probably hasn't for at least a generation, a 10-member committee of the state Board of Education says.

Students cannot fully understand Western history, the abortion debate or turmoil in the Middle East without knowing about Judaism, Christianity, Islam and Catholicism, the committee's report says.

"We believe strongly that the current situation only prolongs existing ignorance, confusion and prejudice," the committee says in a nine-page report that it will present to the state Board of Education on Wednesday. "We need better textbooks, better educated teachers, and a more informed citizenry."

The committee — appointed by the board and chaired by Burton F. Beers, an N.C. State University history professor — recommends that the state train teachers how to teach the role of major religions in history, geography and economics courses.

It also recommends that the state examine whether religion is neglected in other subjects such as literature and biology and that publishers be urged to include more about religion in textbooks.

"There were no substantive disagreements among members of the committee," Beers, author of the nation's best-selling high school world history book, told the News and Observer of Raleigh.

Teaching about religion in school will likely be controversial, committee members said. But most people would not object, according to a Gallup Poll two years ago. The poll showed 79 percent of those surveyed would not oppose teaching about major religions in school.

The influence of religion should be taught throughout the social studies curriculum, particularly in middle and high school grades, the committee's report says. Details would be left to state curriculum specialists, but the report provides some examples of how religion could be infused into history courses.

In American history, for example, the report suggests students could be taught the role of holy men among Indians, the influence of religious beliefs on the Salem witch trials, religious arguments for and against slavery, religion's role in the civil rights movement and the religious reasons a Quaker would have for refusing to go to war.

The report appears to be "a real good attempt to try to expose North Carolina children to diversity," said Cathy J. Rosenthal, executive director of People for the American Way in North Carolina. The Raleigh-based group has 5,000 members and is affiliated with a national organization created in part to fight the influence of the religious right.

If the board decides to adopt the committee's recommendations, its biggest challenge will be making sure teachers carry it out without violating the Constitution, Ms. Rosenthal, who is a lawyer, said in a telephone interview.

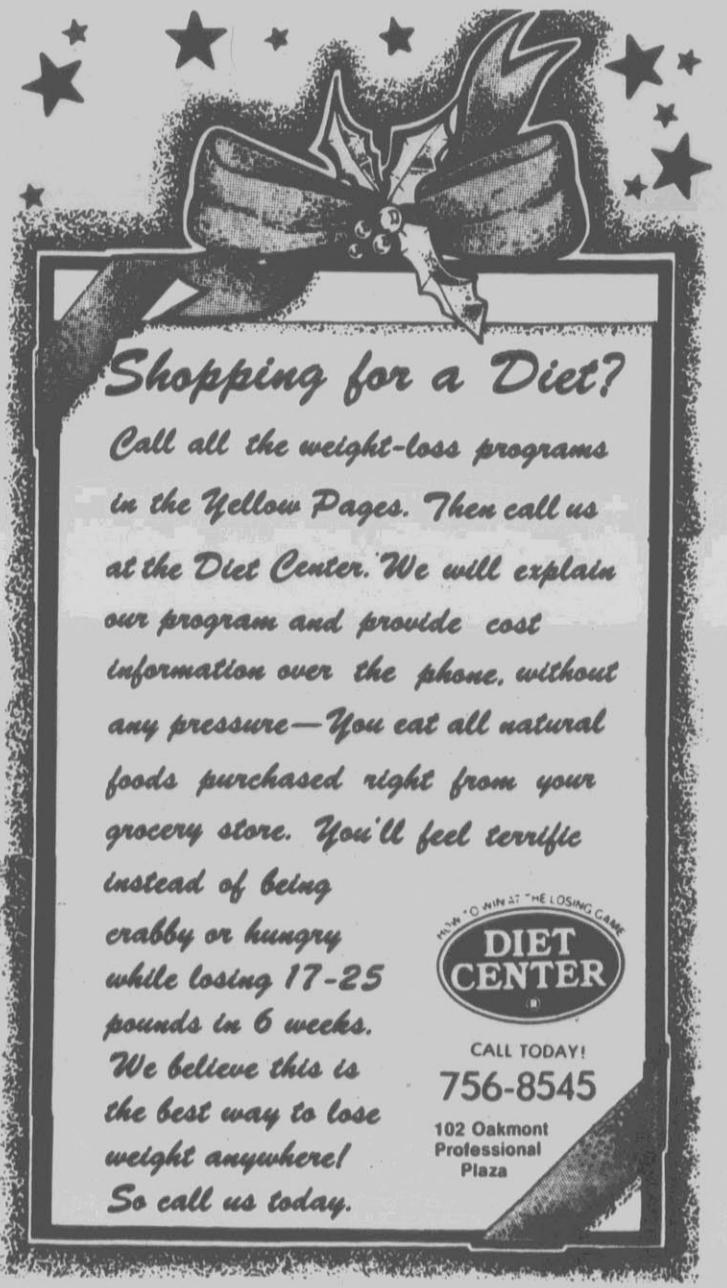

Courts have ruled schools may teach about religion, but they cannot promote religion without violating the First Amendment. But, like Ms. Rosenthal, the committee expressed fears that not all teachers would understand that distinction.

"We are particularly concerned about the impressionability of all students and the potential for proselytizing — whether intended or not," says the report.

Because of that potential, the committee recommends that teachers be informed about the legal constraints on religious instruction and that such lessons focus on older, more mature and less impressionable students. Many teachers also need to learn more about religion, said John D. Ellington, member of the committee and director of the state Department of Public Instruction's social studies division.

"Most of us just don't know about religions other than our own," Ellington said.

Department Of Environment Sound

To keep its environment in order, North Carolina might have to put its house in order.

And a proposal to consolidate state environmental and health agencies into a state Department of Environment, Health and Natural Resources could be the first step. A legislative study panel has recommended this move, and the concept is sound.

The state's environmental programs are currently under the jurisdiction of numerous departments, a situation that creates unnecessary red tape and stagnates effective progress. The North Carolina Department of Natural Resources and Community Development oversees about 80 percent of the programs, with the rest scattered from agency to agency. Under this system, the programs are fragmented, inefficient and unresponsive to public needs.

While the merits of the plan suggested by the panel must be thoroughly debated before they can be assessed, that proposal could be a starting place for housing environmental programs under one administrative roof.

Clearly, spreading out programs has not worked to the benefit of either resources or businesses. Industries must obtain permits from a multitude of agencies. That procedure is cumbersome and blocks quick and efficient response to requests. It also unfairly drags industries with valid, permissible requests through a quagmire of unnecessary red tape.

Fragmenting the state's environmental programs also diminishes accountability. Officials can simply point fingers at the other guy when mistakes are made. Bad decisions can be blamed on another department and inertia on ineffective bureaucracy. That kind of structure makes tangible, responsive reaction to environmental crises very difficult, and in a state so dependent on its natural resources for its livelihood, that is unacceptable.

In addition, citizens with environmental problems can easily be confused by the disorganization. They may not know which department to go to for assistance and face a maze of uncertainty when asking questions. That confusion simply isn't in the best interest of the public.

Although the state's two political parties disagreed on structure, both Democrats and Republicans expressed support for consolidating environmental programs. When the 1989 General Assembly convenes in January, the issue should be one that body gives careful consideration.

The state can't afford to make environmental mistakes and blame them on bad housekeeping. It's time to recognize environment and health as the major issues they are, and creating a department to oversee those vital areas is a good beginning.

Thanks To The Little People

Art Buchwald

You see them on television holding their fingers in the air and sticking their tongues out, and you wonder where they come from. They're the fans that the cameras pan to between football plays. They are the people who make everything about TV sports worthwhile.

"How do sports fans qualify for a sound bite at the football game?" I asked Bill Pearson, whom you probably saw in the final quarter of the Redskins-Bears game. Aw, come on, don't say you've forgotten him. He was the fellow in the Redskins knit hat, who waved his arms up and down and yelled, "Hi, Mom" into the camera. Everyone was talking about it the next day.

I accidentally ran into Bill on the corner of 16th and K streets in Washington, D.C., where he was mobbed by autograph seekers. "You were fantastic," I told him. "I thought that the fans were going to go crazy when you jumped on to your seat to declare that the Redskins were Number One."

Bill blushed modestly. "Everyone was great. You can't do a good job on TV without the little people behind you — the directors, the cameramen and the scriptwriters. I'd also like to thank my grandmother Quayle who told me many years ago, when I revealed to her my dream of appearing on TV, 'You can do anything you want, if you just put your mind to it.'"

"You were lucky to have had such a wise grandmother," I told him. "But in the long run you were the one who did it. What gave you the idea to declare that the Redskins were Number One?"

"I'd been thinking about doing it for some time. In the game before the Bears I had noticed that the number three camera was panning closer and closer toward me. So it dawned on me last week that I better be prepared just in case. I had several options, including waving my Redskins banner or even my hot dog. But I decided to fool them with the old we-are-number-one play. As soon as the red light went on I was ready."

"You certainly were. I never saw a football fan who was so believable on television. People are still talking about that unforgettable moment when you looked straight into the camera and yelled, 'Hi, Mom, I'll be home for dinner.' That was inspired and I don't think the viewers expected it."

"My mom's been good to me and she deserved the recognition," Bill said.

"Not only did she deserve it, but it was so real that everyone had the feeling that she was putting the roast beef in the oven. Did she know that you would be on?"

"There were no guarantees, but I did tell her to be sure and watch the last quarter. I guess when I appeared it was a bigger moment for my mother than it was for me. What's nice about it is that she called up everyone in advance so the whole neighborhood saw me."

"How great."

"The only thing wrong is that she told them I was going to be on every week," Bill said.

"Since you've been there, what would be your advice for another fan who might wind up on the TV screen?"

"Be yourself. No matter what you do, give it your best shot, whether it's yelling, making ugly faces or sticking your tongue out at the camera. Above all, don't let them see you sweat — and mind your manners. TV audiences can't stand someone who makes a fool of himself. If they decide they don't like you, they'll all get up and go to the bathroom at the very instant your big moment comes."

Good News & Bad News

Paul O'Connor

RALEIGH — Republicans may think they scored a total victory in the South this year and that their Democratic rivals should be in a completely blue funk. But one of the South's leading political analysts says that's not so. While some things went poorly for the Democrats, there were other promising signs for the once dominant party of southern politics.

Hastings Wyman Jr., publisher of Southern Political Report, a newsletter published in Washington, D.C., says the 1988 elections prove that the "easy pickings" have all been picked for Republicans. From here on, Wyman says, Republican gains will be much more difficult to come by.

First the good southern news for the Republicans. President-elect George Bush swept only one region in the country, the South. While he won nationally by 54 percent to 46 percent, his margin in the South was 59-41.

But the Bush landslide did not carry very far down the ballot. The Republicans picked up two new southern U.S. Senate seats, but lost another, for a net gain of one. The Republicans ended up with a net loss of one southern U.S. House seat.

Wyman did a little historical counting. He noted that in the 1960 election there were seven Republican congressmen "all from the mountains, and we know why that was, because of the Civil War." But while there had been little gain of southern Republican strength from the days of Appomattox to the retirement of Ike, there was a massive gain in the sixties. Republicans added 20 seats by 1969. In the seventies, the GOP added another 12 southern congressmen, and so on Election Day 1980, there were 39 Republican congressmen from the South.

When the 101st Congress convenes in January, there will be 39 Republican congressmen from the South. Although the GOP's total has been higher during the eighties, the decade ends with a net gain of zero for the GOP. In the U.S. Senate, one-half of the southern seats were held by Republicans after the 1980 Republican landslide. Today, one-third of the southern seats are held by Republicans.

The immediate future does not bode well for increased Republican strength in the southern congressional delegation.

In 1990, if all historical trends hold, Democrats should gain seats on the Republicans nationwide. They will be the out party in a non-presidential year. Even Ronald Reagan's popularity could not keep the GOP from losing congressional seats in 1982 and 1986.

Wyman is saying, therefore, that not only are the days of a solid Democratic South gone, but the days of major GOP gains may be, too, at least so far as congressional offices are concerned.

The next major gains in Republican strength in the South may come in southern legislatures and in what are known as "down-ballot" offices. In 1978, Republicans held only 13 percent of southern legislative seats. After the 1988 elections, they held twice that percentage. But Democrats still control every single legislative chamber in the South.

The "down-ballot" races include judgeships and the equivalents of North Carolina's Council of State. Prior to this election, Republicans held only one statewide office — other than governor or U.S. senator — in the entire South. That was the Louisiana lieutenant governor's office. After the 1988 election, Republican judges were elected in North Carolina and Texas, Jim Gardner was elected lieutenant governor in North Carolina and Florida Republicans won races for secretary of state and insurance commissioner.

Iron Curtain Lifts To Shows States Of Disarray

Richard Hottelet

A specter haunts Eastern Europe, not the communism Karl Marx saw stalking the Continent in the 19th century, but the spirit of freedom clanking its chains and scaring the daylight out of a communist elite so long in power.

On Nov. 7, the 71st Anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution, the same day tens of thousands of Muscovites followed the military parade through Red Square, 100,000 Hungarians invaded Austria. They came in automobiles and buses stopping other traffic dead in its tracks. They were loaded with hard currency — remittances from friends and relatives abroad or money earned on working vacations in the West.

These Hungarians, unlike those who have fled since 1956, were not seeking escape, only the freedom to buy electrical appliances, clothing or whatever else their hearts desired. For the first time since the communists seized power in 1947, the border with Austria was opened. The mine fields, electrified fences and watch towers with pointed machine guns are gone. Hungarians and Austrians no longer even need visas to cross their common border. All in all, they document a sharp turn in Hungary's affairs, to freedom of expression and of choice in politics and economics as well. The invaders all went home. There is a trend that the communist leadership is running to keep up with, one eye on Moscow and the 60,000 Soviet troops still stationed in Hungary.

'There is no dodging the fact that perestroika means hardship. Economic reform, attention to market forces, deregulation, decentralizing decisions means closing down uneconomic enterprises, dismissing superfluous workers.'

Other events in the region raise questions about control. Will it be the party rather than the state that withers away? What does seem sure is that communist leaders are trying to ride historic change as they have ridden out other crises. It is hard to see how they can succeed.

All things being equal, the communist upper class likes things as they have been. There is great comfort in the institutionalization of privilege that keeps both the ins and the outs in their place. Jobs are held out of loyalty rather than merit. Competition or reform is unsettling. Today, however, all things are not equal. The leadership is literally being driven to change.

The outline of the problem for General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev and the Soviet Union is simple and circular. He and the party want to remain in charge. But if the Soviet Union is to continue as a great power, the economic system must be drastically altered. That cannot be done without fundamental political change — in which there is no place for an omnipotent party.

The centrally directed command economy is bankrupt. Gorbachev recognizes, as Lenin did when he launched the New Economic Policy in 1921, that individual initiative must be set free.

In Gorbachev's struggle to modernize through glasnost and perestroika, openness is way ahead of restructuring. Intellectuals have happily embraced glasnost. The press is outspoken to a degree that pops the eyes of old Moscow hands. Crime, corruption, shortage and political heresy — as in the Baltic Republics — are not concealed. Dissidents circulate underground journals with the full knowledge of the state. Conversations with party professionals who never used to stray from the party line seem almost uninhibited.

Three enormous placards dominated Red Square on Nov. 7. A portrait of Lenin in the center, flanked by his 1917 call for revolution — all power to the Soviets, the land to the peasants, the factories to the workers — and flanked by Gorbachev's call for revolution today, perestroika. Holiday Moscow used to be festooned with images of the Polit-buro; this year, there were no other posted pictures — not Marx or Engels — only Lenin.

In theory, the party supervises every level of authority. Also in theory, it corrects shortcomings. Because this is manifestly not the case, Gorbachev is turning to the state, to the local councils — called soviets. The party is to stop intervening in day-to-day matters and stick to high policy.

Gorbachev is reaching far and wide for support, even abroad. He presents himself as a man of the people. He has shown consideration for the Russian Orthodox Church — and it for him in subtle ways — in this millennium year of Russia's conversion to Christianity. He appeals to youth against pollution and the rape of the land.

There is no dodging the fact that perestroika means hardship. Economic reform, attention to market forces, deregulation, decentralizing decisions means closing down uneconomic enterprises, dismissing superfluous workers. It means disentangling the incredibly thick network of the State Plan. The plan has for generations assigned production quotas in every industry, set prices that bear no relation to supply and demand, provided factories with machinery and raw materials and moved their output. This monument of inefficiency is now crumbling. How will perestroika handle the transition to something new, which itself must be improvised, in a country where everything from housing to computers is in short supply?

Last March Gorbachev visited Yugoslavia. He may, among other things, have wanted to see where decentralization leads. If so, he would have been shocked. After Marshal Tito broke with Stalin in 1948, Yugoslavia pursued its own form of communism. Industry is based on "workers' self-management" in factories.

Bush's Ascent To Office A Kinder, Gentler Transition

Robert Hunter

The president worked actively for the succession of his vice president, whose election was a referendum on the previous eight years. Indeed, several Cabinet members were reappointed. The euphoria of victory obscured the looming financial crisis, however, and the new president, who had been solicitous of his predecessor's "Kitchen Cabinet," was left to deal with the results of economic error. Thus Martin Van Buren entered the White House in 1837. And George Bush now follows in his footsteps — the first sitting vice president in 152 years to be elected to the presidency.

This comparison — the jinx that Bush had to overcome — is not just historical trivia. Two weeks into the transition from Ronald Reagan's administration, there is an uncanny quiet in Washington that hasn't been witnessed in any modern transfer of presidential power. The orderly way in which Bush is preparing to take command promises to have a significant effect, especially on the conduct of U.S. foreign policy.

The tone of any transition is set at the top. At the 1953 inauguration, Harry Truman and Dwight Eisenhower barely spoke to one another during the ride to the Capitol for the swearing-in. Eisenhower had little enthusiasm for John Kennedy, and Lyndon Johnson had no use for Richard Nixon except in a shared commitment to the Vietnam War. Gerald Ford departed in defeat, and his vanquisher, Jimmy Carter, followed suit four years later — in each case giving way to a new president who claimed a mandate to clean house that willing subordinates would implement with a vengeance.

Analysis

By contrast, since Bush locked up the GOP presidential nomination last spring, Reagan has shown an unprecedented warmth for his vice president. That behavior contrasts with the disdain — or worse — visited on most other recent vice presidents, especially those who have sought to succeed a retiring president.

For the nation's foreign policy, the most striking value of the friendly takeover can be found in continuity. While Bush has said that he will replace most current officials, he has so far not wielded a meat ax. No army of office-seekers has yet descended on Washington to validate Louis XIV's lament: "Every time I fill a vacant place, I make a hundred malcontents and one ingrate." To assert his authority, the president-elect does not need to execute a rapid purge of incumbents, nor will vital institutional memory be quickly dissipated. In fact, unlike eight and 12 years ago, the State Department has not been invaded by a transition team of political stalwarts bent on ferreting out secrets about the departing administration's failures or chastising career diplomats considered to have been too loyal to the old regime.

More important, during the past two weeks Bush has been able to work effectively with the departing president to begin a useful continuity of foreign policy. He has an office in the White House to receive visitors. When leaders of key allies — such as West Germany's Helmut Kohl and Britain's Margaret Thatcher — come to bid farewell to Reagan, Bush is grandly presented in presidential surroundings, not relegated to courtesy calls in some hotel room or seedy transition headquarters.

The teamwork of the outgoing and incoming presidents will be especially important when Mikhail S. Gorbachev comes to call in two weeks. The Soviet president's visit reflects more than a desire to display before the U.N. General Assembly a bold blueprint for international action. It is certainly not just an act of courtesy. Instead, Gorbachev will attempt to establish an agenda for East-West relations that will help him to out-compete a fledgling U.S. president in key areas of the world, especially Western Europe. That tactic might work if Washington were in turmoil during this period, or if the transition were dominated by wholesale firings and bad blood at the top.

In fact, Reagan and Bush will wisely limit contact with Gorbachev to an informal lunch, and Bush has clearly stated his unwillingness to do any U.S.-Soviet business before he assumes the reins of power on Jan. 20. He can approach Gorbachev, symbolizing both continuity and transition, without seeming to usurp Reagan's authority, but he can also keep his distance without appearing to be inadequate in comparison with a predecessor who in other circumstances might be tempted to upstage the president-elect in one last act of statesman's vanity.

As befits the quality of presidential power, Bush has refrained from assuming any executive duties before Inauguration Day. Yet the mandate is inexorably becoming his with each passing day to a degree without precedent. He has no need to conquer Washington as an outsider hostile to it, as Carter and Reagan were before him, or to battle dispossessed and perhaps bitter officials from a defeated administration. Jan. 20 will not cleave U.S. foreign policy into past and future. And those abroad who wish America well, or who depend on the consistency of its policies, will feel relief.

Cutting Losses To The South

Stephen Rosenfeld

WASHINGTON — The Nicaragua debate is over, and now we have only to determine if we are content with the results. There is no trickery here, just a plain fact. We are permanently cutting off the Contras, depositing our hopes for Nicaraguan democracy pretty much in the hands of the other Latin countries and leaving to ourselves the residual task of containing regional extensions of Nicaraguan, Cuban or Soviet power.

It's all there in two things President-elect George Bush did this week. Asked if he would favor Contra aid, he responded that as someone who had supported aid "long and hard" he was "perfectly willing to encourage the peace process if it will lead to the Sandinistas fulfilling their commitment to the Organization of American States." Thus did he avert his gaze from the spectacle of the Contras' dispersion, disarmament and imminent total collapse. Over to you, President Arias and Speaker Wright.

Then, he had a demonstratively friendly meeting with the president-elect of Mexico. This was Bush's way of indicating he does not intend to invite another four or eight years of grinding political combat over an unwinnable Central American enterprise. Rather, he is going to do what all the Latins have been begging, and what all the American critics and establishment types have been advising, namely, deal with the big Latin countries and with the economic questions that are at the center of their relations with the United States.

One thing new presidents can do is cut losses — revise the sense of what stakes are involved and move on. Michael Dukakis promised to do this. Bush is doing it.

It is much like what Mikhail Gorbachev is doing in Afghanistan. He and Bush could not have directly conspired on this score, but they are dealing similarly with their predecessors' regional investments gone sour. On each side the leadership or some significant part of the political community is perhaps comforted by an awareness that, painful as it is to admit overreaching and humiliation, the other fellow is taking a pasting too.

There is another factor. These regional situations are always being weighed not just in their own local terms but in a broader East-West context. It is one great power's perception that the other is on the global prowl that really revs up the engines in Moscow or Washington. It's what elected Ronald Reagan. At this moment, however, each country seems relatively relaxed about the other's global intentions. There is a new measure of cooperation or parallelism in regional hot spots. Each society has internal restructuring on its mind. That may make it easier for Gorbachev to contemplate frustration in Afghanistan and Bush in Nicaragua.

In both places the clock is ticking. In Afghanistan the Soviets are still taking casualties and searching grimly for a safe political place or at least a decent interval of post-Soviet survival for (some) local communists. The Soviets can certainly make things worse for their tormentors and their allies if they stay on after the agreed troop-withdrawal deadline of Feb. 15, but only by making things worse for themselves too in many disagreeable ways.

In Nicaragua, the last $27 million in "humanitarian" aid to a Contra army already mostly driven from the field of battle runs out March 31. The conservative hope, as uttered by Bush this week, is to mobilize regional pressures for democratization in Nicaragua. The liberal hope is to move into a new stage of regional economic development. Both are good causes facing a steep uphill climb.

Some people are taking a certain consolation in the prospective simultaneous retirement of both great powers from their regional misadventures. Not only do they believe the world to be a better place if the superpowers stay behind their own borders, which is at least a debatable proposition. Detecting no real moral difference between the respective interventions, they suggest that the superpowers' humiliation is good therapy for them and a deliverance for others.

But there is a difference. Soviet power was applied to narrow political choice in Afghanistan. American power was applied to widen political choice in Nicaragua. After you have sorted out all the miserable mistakes of policy that were committed in both places, this is the abiding moral distinction. It shreds the notion that both great powers deserved equally to be chastened.

Gays Claim Entrapment After Rest Stop Arrests

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BURLINGTON — It was just after midnight when a stranger standing outside the rest area men's room asked Jim Curl for the time. "He asked me what I was looking for," Curl said in an interview at his Greensboro home. "I said, 'Nothing.'"

The stranger asked for the time again when Curl sat down on a picnic table at the rest area, on Interstate 85 in Alamance County. Curl was on his way to visit a friend in Burlington, he said, when he stopped at the rest area to stretch a leg that periodically becomes numb because of recent back surgery.

Within 20 minutes, Curl realized this was no casual encounter. The stranger turned out to be undercover vice officer Hiram "Chip" Coble of the Alamance County Sheriff's Department.

On Oct. 1, Curl became one of 35 men the Alamance County Sheriff's Department has arrested since August 1987 on charges of solicitation to commit a crime against nature. All were charged after sporadic undercover busts at the two I-85 rest areas four miles west of Burlington.

An unemployed waiter and land surveyor, Curl, 27, says he spent $1,000 on legal fees to fight and win dismissal of the charge last week in Alamance District Court.

But the legal victory, he says, doesn't erase the nightmare of his arrest, taunts of "queer" from undercover officers, a sleepless night in the county jail on a cot with no mattress and vulgar and threatening telephone calls to his home after a newspaper published his name and address.

"It was entrapment," Curl told The Greensboro News & Record.

The undercover deputy, he said, told Curl he was having problems with his wife. "He said, 'I'm new at this. I don't know what questions to ask.'"

Curl is candid about his homosexuality, a fact of life he says he acknowledged at age 13. But he said he does not cruise rest areas and did not propose sex with Coble. He said he boasted of his sexual prowess only after Coble's persistent questions directed at sex.

"I can't afford to spend $1,000 on court costs for the Alamance County Sheriff's Department to play games just because I have a lifestyle they don't approve of," Curl said.

Curl and gay rights leaders call the undercover arrests gay-baiting, and Curl compared the arrests to oppression of blacks in the early days of the civil rights movement.

"They stood up, and now they don't sit at the back of the bus," he said. "That's what gays need to do — they need to stand up for their rights."

But officials with the Sheriff's Department insist they are not harassing gays.

"The rest area is not for gays, homosexuals or drug users," said Capt. Dan Qualls, who supervises the vice unit. "The rest area is for the traveling motorist. They have a right to pull into a rest area without being bothered by criminals or hoodlums of any kind."

Law enforcement officials differ with lawyers and gay rights leaders in describing the undercover tactics used by the Alamance sheriff's department.

Four Alamance lawyers who represent men charged with solicitation say the tactics amount to borderline entrapment. The lawyers say the undercover officers approach gay and bisexual men at the rest stops, start conversations and lure the men into making remarks about sex acts that are illegal in North Carolina.

"My guy was so fooled," said Graham lawyer Mitchell McEntire of one of his clients.

McEntire said his client had been sitting alone in his new car when another man, who was wearing a black tank-top and tight-fitting jeans, invited the client into the stranger's Cadillac.

"After some conversation, the undercover officer began to direct my man into the area of sex by asking him, 'What are you into?'" McEntire said. "After a good many more minutes of conversation, my man said he enjoyed gay sex."

McEntire said the officer, on loan to Alamance from the Greensboro Police Department, asked, "What would you like me to do?"

That question prompted the client to offer to perform a sex act with the officer, who promptly arrested him, McEntire said.

He said the undercover tactics may not meet legal tests for entrapment, but they pose clear ethical questions.

"The exact same solicitation — whether it was verbal or not — was committed by the undercover officer," McEntire said.

Qualls and vice squad leader Lt. Donnie Compton said undercover officers do not approach or lure men into proposing a sex act. Compton also denied his officers called Curl a queer.

"The officer always lets the suspect do the talking," Qualls said.

"I don't care what the homosexuals think. We do it according to what is legal and proper in making an arrest. We intend to continue doing it — at least as long as I'm in charge of the vice unit," Qualls said.

John D'Emilio, director of the N.C. Gay Rights Project, said the undercover law enforcement officers are harassing men at rest stops.

"That's the covert purpose of what's going on here," said D'Emilio, a history professor at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

"If what they were interested in had to do with public order, a much more effective way to deal with it is to have uniformed officers out there," D'Emilio said.

Rest areas tend to attract closet gays and a minority of openly gay men who prefer anonymous sexual contacts, gay leaders say. They also attract bisexual men.

"Many are married," D'Emilio said. "They are very good bait for this kind of harassment because they are in no position to fight it."

Auto Insurance Costs Going Up

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Although State Insurance Commissioner Jim Long has ordered the state's automobile insurance industry to cut rates twice in the past nine months, the costs for insurance haven't gone down.

Instead, drivers will be paying an average of 4.3 percent more beginning Jan. 1. It's the fourth increase in four years.

Both of Long's orders to cut rates — a 3.9 percent reduction in 1987 and a 1.4 percent cut this year — have been challenged by the insurance industry, which contends it hasn't been treated fairly in the decisions and has taken the battle for higher rates to the courts.

The standoff over automobile insurance rates is before the state Court of Appeals. The court will determine if consumers are paying too much for automobile insurance, as Long contends, or if rates aren't going up enough to keep the industry healthy, as the insurance companies maintain.

At stake in the legal battles are about $115 million in premiums being collected by the industry pending the appeals. Long's reputation as an expert on insurance regulation, and the question of just how profitable the insurance industry should be.

Last week, the N.C. Rate Bureau, which represents the insurance industry on auto rates, said it would appeal Long's latest order to cut rates and instead announced the 4.3 percent interim increase.

"Obviously the consumer is not going to be happy about (the industry's appeals), because when I have ordered a reduction of, say, 1.4 percent, (consumers) want to see that take effect Jan. 1," Long said. "I am sure they are not going to be very happy to find out that the industry has implemented a 4.3 percent increase rather than the 1.4 percent reduction."

But industry officials say that Long's rulings have left them no choice but to take the issue to court. "We don't think we are getting adequate rates," said Edward L. Jennings, controller for Nationwide Insurance Co.'s regional office in Raleigh.

"When we go in and ask for a rate increase, the commissioner not only ignores the fact that we need an increase, but says that we need a decrease. We don't see any other alternative, given the way that the rate orders are coming out," Jennings told The News and Observer of Raleigh.

Insurance-rate cases are starting to stack up in the appeals court.

Also pending before the appeals court are two auto insurance cases from 1986 and 1987. The appeals court heard arguments Oct. 25 in the first disputed auto-rate case.

The court is expected to rule on that case early next spring and attorneys on both sides say the decision could set the precedent for the other cases because they are so similar.

Tar Heels Among Major Spenders

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Through what has become known as "soft" money, political parties raised millions of dollars this year that they funneled into local committees set up to help get-out-the-vote efforts and other campaign activities.

"The money was a very significant part of the campaign in the state," state Sen. Larry Cobb, R-Mecklenburg, told The Greensboro News & Record.

In contributing money to political parties, North Carolinians joined something of a national trend this year, marking a resurgence in the large campaign contributions that had faded from the U.S. political scene after the 1972 Watergate scandals.

While federal and state laws limit the amount of money donors can give to candidates or political action committees, there are no limits on the amount of money that can be given to national political parties.

The "soft money" raised — $11.6

million by Democrats, $18.6 million by Republicans, in August, September and October alone — is in addition to $46.1 million in federal funds presidential candidates Michael Dukakis and George Bush each received through the $1 income tax check-off.

The Republican Party says 240 individuals or corporations gave $100,000 or more. The GOP released the names of five major contributors from North Carolina, or contributors with state ties:

— $100,000 from E.B. Chester's East Bay Capital of Rocky Mount.

— $80,000 from Earl Phillips Jr.'s First Factors Corp. of High Point.

— $102,000 from Jack Laughery's Hardee's Food Systems of Rocky Mount.

— $120,000 from R.J. Reynolds Tobacco USA of Winston-Salem.

— $100,000 from RJR-Nabisco of Atlanta.

Democratic Party officials say they collected $100,000 from about 150 individuals. They released the name of only one major donor from North Carolina — Durham real estate developer Clay Hamner, who contributed $80,000.

The "soft money" fund-raising provided a lot of money for use in North Carolina that might not have been available otherwise.

Ken Eudy, executive director of the state Democratic Party, called the funds "absolutely crucial" and said get-out-the-vote efforts were greatly expanded because of the money.

"The party's plans, prior to July, called for 150 telephones across the state," Eudy said of phones used for telephone banks. "This enabled us to have nearly five times as many."

The party had planned on having six or seven people doing field organizing. Instead, the party was able to have 22-25 paid staffers in the field.

"It was the most phone banks we've ever had," Eudy said. "Before we had 30. This time we had phone banks in 65 counties."

IN THE STATE

Bakker Indictment

CHARLOTTE (AP) — PTL founder Jim Bakker is likely to be indicted by a federal grand jury investigating how the ministry's leaders raised and spent millions of dollars in contributions, his attorney said.

"It's a question of when, and what the particular allegations will be," lawyer Jim Toms said.

The 23-member grand jury reconvened in Charlotte this morning.

Toms said the indictment is likely to come the week of Dec. 12.

Bakker, who resigned as PTL president in March 1987 after the revelation that he had a tryst with church secretary Jessica Hahn and paid her hush money, has denied any criminal wrongdoing, and has called the investigation "a fishing expedition."

Layoffs At RJR

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — An independent analysis of the pending leveraged buyouts of RJR Nabisco Inc. indicates R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. would be forced to cut costs by millions of dollars, possibly costing jobs in Atlanta and Winston-Salem, a newspaper reported Sunday.

An analyst, who shared his conclusions with The Winston-Salem Journal on condition he not be identified, said his work indicates Reynolds Tobacco is not in a position to increase sales dramatically and would have to cut costs to help pay off the huge debt incurred in the buyout.

"This would almost surely mean the ... dismissal of all Atlanta corporate people and additional cost-cutting in Winston-Salem operations," he said.

It also could provide a significant reduction in money for research and development and could mean the dropping of Premier, the new "smokeless" cigarette being test-marketed by R.J. Reynolds, the analyst said.

ABC Packaging

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — There's some new packaging being offered at some North Carolina package stores, but the experiment in plastic is drawing mixed reviews from buyers not ready to abandon the brown bag.

For the past several weeks, clerks in 12 of the 150 state-run ABC systems — including Orange County's — have been asking customers to state a preference for carrying their favorite beverage. The choice is simple: the more traditional brown paper bag, or a new plastic model with handles.

So far, the plastic sacks haven't fared as well as those in grocery stores.

"The clerks don't like them because they say they slow them down, and the customers aren't accepting them too well either," said M. Benton Eiland, general manager of the six-store Orange County ABC system, which is using the bags at its Eastgate Shopping Center store in Chapel Hill.

Poll Finds Doubt For Quayle As Drug War Leader

Public Opinion

Media General - AP Poll

Is the new vice president, Dan Quayle, the right man to head the federal government's efforts against illegal drugs, or not?

By Gary Langer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Americans want military patrols and a crackdown on users to combat illegal drugs, but many doubt the choice of Vice President-elect Dan Quayle to run the effort, a Media General-Associated Press poll has found.

Although George Bush made a campaign pledge to put his running mate in charge of the fight against drugs, only 32 percent of the 1,084 adults surveyed said Quayle was the right man for the job.

As many weren't sure about the selection, and 36 percent said Quayle was not the right choice to lead the drug war. Republicans were more supportive of Quayle, but fewer than half of them backed him as drug chief.

Although the bill creating the Cabinet-level drug czar prohibits the official from holding another federal post, Bush has indicated he might have the drug czar report to Quayle.

The nationwide poll's respondents far and away said reducing the federal budget deficit should be Bush's top priority as president — 10 times as many as picked drugs. Majorities backed a tax crackdown and cuts in defense spending to address the deficit.

The survey also found support for restrictions on foreign investments in the United States, and broad backing for aggressive measures to address the federal trade deficit, including higher import taxes and quotas.

On drugs, six in 10 favored drug testing of all federal employees and two in 10 favored testing some of them. The government now conducts random tests of federal workers in sensitive jobs, and has proposed testing privately employed transportation workers.

There also was support for other drug-fighting efforts. Eight in 10 said Bush should push for a crackdown on illegal drug users and as many or more backed more federal spending for drug enforcement, education and treatment.

Three-quarters said the military should patrol the nation's borders for drug smugglers. But considerably fewer, 40 percent, said the military should strike at illegal drug operations abroad.

In addressing the deficit, respondents firmly opposed most new or higher taxes. Most also opposed cuts in spending for domestic programs such as welfare or a freeze in Social Security benefits.

Strong majorities, however, supported higher taxes on cigarettes and alcoholic beverages. And a narrow majority, 52 percent, favored defense spending cuts.

The survey also found overwhelming support for an Internal Revenue Service crackdown to collect taxes, an approach urged by Democratic nominee Michael Dukakis in the presidential campaign but ridiculed by Bush.

The poll, conducted Nov. 10-20, had a margin of sampling error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.

Those polled were asked: "What do you think should be George Bush's No. 1 priority once he takes office?" Thirty-four percent said the deficit, an unusually high rate of agreement in an open-ended question.

No other category drew a response rate in double digits. Seven percent cited other economic matters, 5 percent said poverty or homelessness, 5 percent said defense and the rest were other issues.

Only 3 percent said drugs, an issue that ranked far higher in importance in pre-election polls during the summer but then faded in the fall.

Respondents gave mixed signals on how to address the deficit. Two-thirds, for example, favored higher corporate taxes — but a third of that group said they would change their minds if corporations responded by raising prices.

Opposition to other taxes was stronger: Eight in 10 opposed higher personal income taxes, three-quarters opposed higher gasoline taxes, three-quarters opposed taxing the Social Security benefits of higher-income Americans and 64 percent opposed a national sales tax.

Clock Ticking On Classified Shuttle Mission

By Howard Benedict
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The countdown began today for Thursday's launch of shuttle Atlantis, which will carry five astronauts and a secret satellite that reportedly will gather military intelligence over the Soviet Union.

The clock began ticking at 12:01 a.m. EST as NASA test director Jerry Crute issued the traditional "call to stations" that assembled more than 100 controllers at computer consoles in the launch control center four miles from the launch pad.

The call also was a signal for workers at the pad to begin servicing Atlantis' engines and removing work platforms from the base of the spaceship.

"We're pressing on; the countdown has started," said George Diller, a National Aeronautics and Space Administration spokesman.

Because the mission is classified, the Defense Department and NASA are disclosing few details of the flight, including its length and what the astronauts will be doing.

As for the launch time, sources speaking on condition of anonymity have said it should take place about 7 a.m. EST if weather and other conditions are adequate. But officials will say only that launch is scheduled for sometime between 6:32 a.m. and 9:32 a.m. Thursday. They say they will make the time public when the clock reaches the nine-minute mark.

A preliminary weather forecast for Thursday called for unfavorable conditions: overcast sky, brisk winds and possible showers.

Atlantis' crew, all military officers, planned to fly here this afternoon from their training base in Houston to make final preparations for launch. Instead of making the usual arrival comments to the news media, they have been advised to say nothing.

The crew commander is Navy Cmdr. Robert L. Gibson. The pilot is Air Force Lt. Col. Guy S. Gardner, and the mission specialists are Col.

Richard M. Mullane and Lt. Col. Jerry L. Ross of the Air Force, and Navy Cmdr. William M. Shepherd.

After Atlantis reaches orbit, NASA plans only two public statements. The first, four hours after launch, will report briefly on the condition of the spaceship. The second will be a 24-hour advance notice on when the astronauts will land at Edwards Air Force Base in California.

The silence will be broken only if a serious problem develops.

Defense Department officials contend the secrecy makes it more difficult for Soviet satellites and spy ships operating off Cape Canaveral to monitor the flight and learn its purpose.

Critics argue that such secrecy is unnecessary because the Soviets, with their intelligence capabilities, already know a great deal about the mission.

In fact, the official Soviet news agency Tass said Sunday: "The main task of the secret mission is to put into near-Earth orbit a new generation reconnaissance satellite, codenamed Lacrosse. The satellite will conduct surveillance of the territory of the Soviet Union with the help of updated radar. The Pentagon plans to deploy in the next few years four other similar spy satellites which will play the role of an 'eye' for the new strategic bomber B-2, known as stealth."

U.S. critics also say that once Atlantis' satellite is in its own orbit, the Soviets will be able to track it precisely and know what it is doing.

Much already has been published about the satellite, based on reports from sources who say it will gather extremely sharp radar images of Soviet military targets as it follows a course that covers 80 percent of the Soviet Union.

The flight will be the 27th for a U.S. space shuttle, the third dedicated totally to the military and the second since the Challenger explosion that killed seven crew members in January 1986.

The Challenger accident kept the shuttle fleet grounded for 32 months. Discovery and a five-man crew had a successful flight that began Sept. 29.

New, Safer Reactors On Drawing Boards

By Bryan Brumley
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — As engineers struggle with the aging plants that now produce U.S. nuclear weapons material, Energy Department officials are drawing up plans for two new, safer reactors expected to cost a total of $6.8 billion.

One proposed design, the smaller and more expensive of two envisioned, involves technologies that some engineers believe will lead to commercial reactors that drastically reduce the dangers of meltdown and contamination.

Building new reactors has assumed new urgency since April, when engineers just were able to safely operate the remaining three production reactors at the Savannah River Plant near Aiken, S.C.

"We feel that we can make the plants at the Savannah River Plant operate safely, although they are nearing the end of their operational lives," said Ron Cochran, head of the Energy Department office for the new reactors.

The first of the Savannah River reactors is not expected to resume production of tritium, a critical nuclear weapons material, before January. The new reactors should begin operation in about 1999, said Cochran.

However, persuading Congress to approve funding for both reactors may be impossible, given the budget deficit and the $110 billion the Energy Department says it will need to clean up the existing complex and make it safe.

An Energy Department advisory panel, in a report last July, found "that one of the challenges was to get a new production reactor built before the Savannah River Plant reactors reach the end of their useful lives," said Cochran.

The Energy Research Advisory Board recommended building two new reactors: a heavy-water reactor at Savannah River for an estimated $3.2 billion and a gas-cooled reactor at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory Reservation, an Energy Department site near Idaho Falls, Idaho, for about $3.6 billion.

"The point of having two is to provide the maximum level of assurance ... at two geographic locations, so that nothing like a seismic event could shut down production," said Cochran.

Like the three existing reactors, the new one at Savannah River would use heavy water as a moderator. It has new safety and design features, but rely on tritium extraction techniques that have been proven since 1954.

The new Savannah River reactor would be adequate to make all of the tritium needed for nuclear weapons and the gas-cooled reactor in Idaho would produce at half that rate.

Both would be built with containment vessels, steel-reinforced concrete domes like that which prevented the escape of nearly all the lethal materials from the Three Mile Island accident in March 1979. The current Savannah River Plant reactors rely instead on thick concrete walls and air-filtration systems to confine radioactivity.

Despite its smaller production capacity and higher cost, the gas-cooled reactor planned for Idaho has many advantages.

Grief-stricken flood victims weep over death of relatives

Thailand Disaster Toll Reaches 370

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BANGKOK, Thailand — Soldiers on Sunday unearthed villages buried in mud slides after a week of heavy rains that caused Thailand's worst natural disaster in recent decades, officials said.

They said 370 bodies were found, but at least 800 people are believed dead from the floods that hit 12 southern provinces, said Col. Bunchorn Chavarnsil, spokesman for the Fourth Army region.

He said 689 people were injured, 305 others were missing and thousands were homeless.

About 14,000 people have remained in emergency relief centers, down from the 60,000 people at the height of the floods, he said.

Ten helicopters and 12 boats transported the troops and rescue teams Sunday to villages in the southern Nakhon Sri Thammarat province, the worst hit area, Bunchorn said. He said planes dropped food and supplies to isolated villages.

Skies were clear in the province Sunday after heavy rains Saturday night, he said.

Half the deaths were in Nakhon Sri Thammarat's Phipoon district, where mud and logs charged down barren hillsides, slamming into homes and crushing people, Bunchorn said.

Prime Minister Chatchai Choonhavan visited the disaster areas Friday and Saturday and pledged $120 million in relief aid. He ordered the agriculture minister to investigate the uncontrolled logging and mining that had stripped the hillsides, contributing to the mudslides.

Government spokesman Suvit Yodmani said Chatchai and Foreign Minister Siddhi Savetsila hoped for aid from other countries.

Massacre Victims Found

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GUATEMALA CITY — Leftist rebels killed a civilian liaison to the military, then massacred 20 friends and relatives who went to search for him, the government said Sunday.

It said army patrols had found the bodies buried in common mountain graves in the region west of Guatemala City.

The victims included at least 12 relatives of Carlos Humberto Guerra Callejas, a civilian assigned to the military in the village of El Aguacate, the government said. Aguacate is about 40 miles from Guatemala City in Chimaltenango province.

Guerra Callejas disappeared Wednesday, and his friends and relatives organized a search Friday. The government described the search party as a group of poor farmers with an evangelical pastor, Antonio Olivares.

A few of them said they managed to escape while the other 20 fell into the hands of guerrillas belonging to the Revolutionary Organization of the People in Arms, according to the government statement.

Troops at a military base in the city of Chimaltenango, about 20 miles west of Guatemala City, also launched a search.

They found Guerra Callejas' body and fought two skirmishes with rebels before finding the bodies of the other 20 victims on Saturday night, the government said. One military officer was reported wounded in the fighting.

Civilians who work with the military like Guerra Callejas are often powerful people in small Guatemalan communities because of their military connections. They have often been accused of involvement in human rights abuses.

Economic Shakes Prompt Calls For Free Enterprise In Israel

By Eileen Alt Powell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — The near-collapse of Israel's largest industrial conglomerate, owned by the Histadrut labor federation, has forced a rethinking of the pioneering socialism on which the nation's economy was built.

Koor Industries, with annual sales of more than $2 billion, controls 150 firms and employs 27,000 people making products ranging from high-technology electronics to tires, fruit juice and refrigerators.

Koor lost $250 million last year. In October, it defaulted on a $20 million loan from New York Bankers Trust Co., and the bank demanded its liquidation.

Like the successful plan by Chrysler Corp. in the United States, Koor is trying to stave off bankruptcy with a government bailout and a court-backed reorganization plan.

But Koor's problems are symptomatic of the growing financial ills that have afflicted Israel's economy.

Even the kibbutzim, the communal farms that were the backbone of Israel's pioneering ideal of sharing work and profits, are in serious financial trouble. The Kibbutz Industries Association announced last week that its members were struggling to pay off $4 billion in debt.

The economic shakes have prompted increasing calls for a more capitalistic, free enterprise system.

"The economy has suffocated," Stef Wertheimer, a wealthy businessman, wrote in the Jerusalem Post.

Israel's tradition of "work as a source of employment rather than a source of profits" has failed, Wertheimer wrote. "The only way to save Koor is to turn it into a private enterprise."

Even Shimon Peres, leader of the left-leaning Labor Party, which controls the Histadrut and founded the socialized economy, says he favors selling off some state-owned companies.

The Histadrut and state-owned companies account for up to 40 percent of Israel's $35 billion gross domestic product, economic analysts say.

Reducing such concentration could take years, said Zeev Refua, director of the Israel Government Companies Authority, which oversees the state-owned firms. The authority has launched a program to "privatize" many state enterprises within five years.

Israel's socialized economy began even before the state was formed in 1948.

Jewish immigrants, most from Eastern Europe where Marxist philosophy was taking hold, arrived early this century with the idea that collectively they could build enterprises and recycle profits to create more jobs.

They started in construction, and their early cooperatives grew into Solel Boneh, now the nation's largest contracting firm.

Talks Reported Between Soviets, Afghan Rebels,

By Kathy Gannon
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — Afghanistan guerrillas met with Soviet officials Sunday to discuss an exchange of prisoners of war, said a guerrilla source, Afghan radio and the Soviet news agency Tass.

No further details were available on the talks in Islamabad. A similar meeting was held earlier this year in Bonn, West Germany.

Representatives of other rebel groups that belong to a loose and often fractured guerrilla alliance denied talks were held Sunday. The Soviet ambassador in Islamabad, Vladimir Vakunin, refused to comment on the reports.

The meeting was first reported by Afghanistan's official Radio Kabul, which said the talks were held with Afghan "opposition," a reference to the Moslem insurgents. The meeting was confirmed by an official with the Jamiat-e-Islami guerrilla group in Peshawar, who spoke by telephone on condition of anonymity.

Tass said the meeting "between representatives of the Soviet Embassy in Pakistan and the Afghan armed opposition forces" discussed the return of Soviet prisoners.

Hamid Gailani, spokesman for the National Islamic Front of Afghanistan guerrilla group said:

"There has been no such contact." He said Afghan officials "have been lying for the past 10 years so why not about this, too?"

A denial also came from the Afghan news agency, a rebel information center operated by members of the Hezb-e-Islami guerrilla group.

Earlier this year, Hezb-e-Islami representatives met Soviet officials in Bonn to discuss a prisoner-exchange program.

The two sides agreed to exchange one Soviet soldier for 25 rebels. However, the rebels abandoned the prisoner exchange after the United Nations negotiated an accord on April 15 in Geneva that calls for the withdrawal of all Soviet troops. Rebels say no prisoners were ever exchanged.

Also Sunday, Moslem guerrillas said they regained control of a strategic border post after a week of fighting along a highway that serves as their supply route from Pakistan.

There was no independent confirmation of the guerrilla claim.

In the latest round of battles that ended Saturday, the U.S.-supported insurgents raided several Afghan government posts along the road linking Pakistan with the eastern Afghan city of Jalalabad, said Fazle Akbar, director of the pro-rebel Afghan Information and Documentation Center.

Strike Shuts Down Occupied Territories

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Israeli soldiers wounded three Palestinians today when dozens of masked youths hurled stones at troops in the West Bank city of Nablus, hospital officials said. A Palestinian general strike shut down the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

More than 300,000 residents were confined to their homes in the occupied territories under army curfew orders aimed at curbing violence during the general strike, Arab reports and Israel radio said.

The 6,000 Palestinian residents of the Al-Amari refugee camp in the West Bank were under curfew for the 10th straight day. Curfews were reported on eight Gaza Strip refugee camps, parts of Gaza City, and the West Bank towns of Tulkarem and Qalqilya.

Palestinians disagreed over strikes called by rival groups as part of the nearly year-long uprising against Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza.

In the West Bank city of Ramallah, a leaflet signed by the PLO-backed leadership of the revolt ordered people not to observe a strike called Tuesday by a fundamentalist Moslem group and a Marxist PLO faction.

Pictures of PLO chairman Yasser Arafat were plastered to walls in Ramallah, and slogans complained of U.S. Secretary George Shultz's refusal to grant the Palestine Liberation Organization chairman a visa to address the U.N. General Assembly.

Yes, It Is Possible To Shop With Kids At The Mall

By Nora Frenkiel
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

A mother's story.
She wants to go shopping. No, make that she must go shopping. She has two children, ages 3 and 5. Too cute for words, so we will skip the description.
Anyway, it's black Friday. That is what they call the Friday after Thanksgiving in the retail business. It means that retailers go into the black because it's the heaviest shopping day of the year.
Well, this mother has her own reasons for calling it black Friday. She has something like 674 gifts to buy for her nearest and dearest plus all the people she works with and anyway she has this one day off from work to get started. And the kids have got to come along.
This is her plan: a quick trip to the mall. They arrive at noon and, after she steers the car through 20 minutes of traffic searching for a parking space, they enter near the food court. The kids begin crying immediately for ice cream. Cones in hand, they wander the mall. Drip. Drip. Drip.
Those sticky little hands — attached to her too-cute-for-words kids who are now playing hide-and-seek in the clothes racks — are making their presence felt on every counter display within grasp.
To make them happy, she searches for Santa. But when she finds him, she also finds 4,731 other parents, with the same idea, standing in line. Next time she looks at her watch it is almost 3 p.m. It is time to go home.

What a waste of time, she thinks, as she maneuvers her car through another 20 minutes of traffic. Exhausted, she arrives home, unable even to turn on her TV to watch "Oprah."
Where did she go wrong?
Some would say her first mistake was taking her kids along.
"The best advice we give," says Enid Stegner of the J.C. Penney Co., "is to leave the children at home." But a survey of retail executives plus experienced parents yields some interesting results. Namely, that you can shop with your children and maintain your sanity — but you must follow the rules.
What rules did this mother break? She chose the wrong time of day, went in at the wrong entrance, gave her children the wrong snack at the wrong time, and tried to visit Santa at peak time. Says one parent, "Start by giving kids ice cream cones on the way in, and you're not going to get out of there for anything less than a Tonka truck by day's end."
All the experts say one thing: Be realistic about what you can and cannot do with children. And then be imaginative.
If you do shop with children, shop non-peak times. Best time for suburban malls and shops: 10 a.m. midweek, except for centers in downtown areas, which are often best on midweek evenings after 6 p.m. Those are also the recommended times to see Santa. Weekends, all agree, are nearly impossible.

The best places to park vary. At most malls good parking spaces are at a premium. Arrive by 10 a.m. to claim the best spots. Usually the most crowded entrances are those close to the food courts and the anchoring stores of the mall. Parking spaces usually will be easier to find near any of the other mall entrances.
If you can, try to shop with only one child at a time. "Make it your special time with your child," advises Stegner, the J.C. Penney spokeswoman. "Sometime during the day even when you're in a rush, try to sit by a duck pond or a quiet place and try to make 15 minutes or so special for your child."
Pre-shop, and plan strategy, one mother advises. "What I usually do is call ahead to the store to be sure that the item I want is available," she says. "That way, I cut down on wasted time. I know that I can't just wander the stores with my children. I must be organized."
Focus and plan the time at the mall. "Two hours is the maximum with small children," one mother says. Adds one dad, "You can't really spend an afternoon at the mall with small children, so have a few goals to accomplish."
Immediately, upon arrival at any mall, some parents suggest, locate all the restrooms and name a central spot to reassemble if anyone plans to wander alone.
Familiarize your children with the mall and let them know what a security officer looks like, advises one mall manager.

Make your children part of the adventure. One father says that he asks his 5-year-old son to help in the selections, indicating which toys a cousin, for instance, might want.
Be prepared to bribe your children with toys, food or other treats. "There's no way you can go into a toy store without buying something for your own children. Accept this fact of life," one dad says. He sets a price limit and allows the children to select their own toys. The price can be small, only a dollar or two, but this play tends to solve many other problems.
Use food as an incentive. One mother says that she carries little healthy snacks like carrots and parcels them out every 15 minutes or so to her two young children. Near the end of the shopping trip, when nothing seems to work, she gives them the special treat she has been saving, such as chocolate.
If you do plan to feed your children at the mall, avoid peak times.
Teach your children the value of money. If your children are old enough and eager to assume responsibility, let them select gifts on their own. "When your child insists on buying a high-priced present," says Stegner, "offer a compromise by putting down the amount you'll pay and let the children make up the difference with savings or household chore earnings. When you have to say no, try to give alternatives."

Her Business Is Animals, Her Specialty, Tiny Pigs

By Robert Byrd
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ELLENWOOD, Ga. — All her life, Jama Hedgecoth has loved animals. But she never quite expected it to come to this: She sells housebroken, exotic pigs and runs an animal talent agency that represents a variety of four-legged stars.
On a 25-acre animal farm south of Atlanta, with the help of her husband, Charlie, and four children, Mrs. Hedgecoth tends to some 300 creatures: dogs, cats, raccoons, foxes, deer, goats, chickens, turkeys, ducks, geese, an ostrich, a miniature horse, one 300-pound hog and a pack of pint-size pigs.
She sells the petite porkers through Designer Pigs, one of her business ventures. As for the rest of the menagerie, some are stars represented by her other venture, The Animal Agency. Others are family pets.
"When I was a kid, we traveled all over the world, because my father is an evangelist, and we could never have animals like this," Mrs. Hedgecoth said. "When I got married 17 years ago, I told my husband, 'My dream is to live on a farm and have every animal that's feasible to own.'"

Five years ago, the Hedgecoths got their farm, along with dogs and cats.
In 1987, a friend asked her where he might find 15 cats for a cat litter commercial. What the producers feared would be eight hours in cat hell turned into a 30-minute lark — she has a knack for animal training — and a business was born.
Mrs. Hedgecoth and her partner, Bryan Hudson, began contacting advertising agencies and anybody else who might need a well-behaved animal now and then.
In less than two years, The Animal Agency has worked on about 100 jobs, half of them still-photo modeling sessions and the other half TV commercials, mostly for agencies in Atlanta.
Her Benji-look-alike dog, Amber, starred in a Honda Accord spot. Roy, a mammoth tom turkey, starred in a ham ad.

For a Reebok spot, she brought along Hickory the goat, Scarlett the black miniature pig and 81-year-old Griffin farmer James Roy Goggans and his sneaker-wearing cow, Daisy, whose stage name is Bessie.
The Animal Agency also supplied animal actors for a TV movie recently filmed in Georgia, "Dying For Love." Mrs. Hedgecoth's husband and father got bit parts.
If she doesn't have a particular animal, she'll find it — and train it.
"If you call us and say you need a white goose that will walk on a leash for a child, I'll tell you, 'You give me three days,'" she said.
Clients are charged $100 an hour and up. "What they pay for is Bryan and me, our know-how in how to work with the animals," she said.
Last year, Mrs. Hedgecoth got into the pet pig business, with rare, ugly-but-hip Vietnamese pot-bellied pigs that sell for $1,500. She also breeds an uncommon line of miniature African pigs, two inches taller but $1,200 cheaper.

Mrs. Hedgecoth and 'Olivia'

"They're real special," she said. "They love to car ride. ... And when you buy a pig from me, the little pig's housebroken and spoiled rotten."

Measure Success By Same Rule Children Use With Their Friends

Dear Abby: Thank you for your definition of success. Let me add another, by Martin Buxbaum:

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Success

You can use most any measure When you're speaking of success You can measure it in fancy home, Expensive car or dress But the measure of your real success Is the one you cannot spend. It's the way your kids describe you When they're talking to a friend. — Christy H. Richards, Fielding, Utah

Dear Abby: Your column changed my life! Through Operation Dear Abby, I met Chief Petty Officer Ken Watson, stationed aboard the USS Robert E. Peary in Pearl Harbor, Hawaii.
We corresponded for four months, then he flew to Michigan to visit me.

He took me back to Hawaii with him for a week's vacation, where he proposed to me on his birthday on a beautiful moonlit beach at midnight.
We were married in August. His two sons from a previous marriage now live with us, along with my two sons from a previous marriage!
Abby, I never knew what happiness was until I met this wonderful man. He is absolutely the best husband and father in the world. I am writing this on the one-month anniversary of our marriage.
I could never thank you enough for putting me together with the man I want to spend the rest of my life with. — Mrs. Ken Watson, Romulus, Mich.

Stock And Market Reports

NEW YORK (AP) — Stocks opened mixed today in slow trading. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks was up 4.62 points to 2,079.30 by 10 a.m. EST.

Among broader indicators, the New York Stock Exchange composite index of all listed issues rose 0.34 to 150.97. The American Stock Exchange market-value index rose 0.66 to 291.85.

Gaining and declining issues were nearly even on the NYSE, with 415 up, 414 down and 495 unchanged. Volume totaled 14.96 million shares after the first 30 minutes of trading.

On Friday the Dow Jones industrial average fell 17.60 points to 2,074.68, finishing the week with a net gain of 12.27.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 3 to 2 on the NYSE, with 513 up, 778 down and 521 unchanged.

Big Board volume came to 72.09 million shares, down from 112.01 million Wednesday and the lightest total since a 48.86 million-share day on Dec. 26, 1986.

Tornadoes Kill 5 In N. Carolina Counties

Upchurch and Benton also flew over the affected area.

"... It looked like a big bouncing ball had gone through there," Upchurch said.

Fire department personnel were combing through damaged dwellings, searching for victims.

"There could be some surprises because some of those houses were literally flattened," Benton said. He also said city officials received no notification from the National Weather Service concerning the possibility of tornadoes.

"We did not have a tornado watch nor warning before the storm struck," he said.

Martin said he had received no requests to declare a federal disaster area, and he added that officials would first have to assess the damage. He said if weather permits, aircraft would begin surveying the damage at daybreak.

Benton said the tornado hit the capital city at about 1:15 a.m. City buses transported more than 300 people to two shelters. The twister spewed destruction over a 5-mile area of north Raleigh.

"To our knowledge, all people have been accounted for," said Benton, adding that police and rescue personnel were out scouting for problems. There was an unconfirmed report of looting, said Police Chief Fred Heineman, but he wouldn't say where.

No one in the Cooper's Pond apartments was seriously hurt, said Deirdre Bolling, manager of the complex.

The first rescue workers on the scene there pulled people from third-floor windows. Several residents wandered around dazed, with visible cuts. One man was clad only in a bath towel.

"A couple of people were rushed off to the hospital, but I don't think they were hurt very badly," Ms. Bolling said. "We didn't lose anybody. We feel really lucky about that."

Residents were given temporary lodging at nearby hotels, Mrs. Bolling said. Some residents were planning to find shelters that were being opened at daybreak.

Lisa Lanier, who works and lives at the complex, said her building was untouched and that she did not realize the tornado had struck until a neighbor telephoned.

"The thunder woke me up, and I heard an extremely loud roar," Miss Lanier said. "It was like a train, like you hear people say. It was like a jet coming down too low."

The roar lasted 30 to 45 seconds and then the wind died down. "I went back to bed because I didn't know what had happened," she said. "If I ever hear that noise again, I'll dive for the bathtub."

Sonia Jones, assistant manager of the complex, said her building also was spared major damage, including blown-out windows.

"It passed right by me," she said, "I was real lucky."

Almost 50 people from northwest Raleigh apartment complexes spent part of the night at a shelter at Martin Middle School in Raleigh.

Tony DeVita, 34, of the Calibre Oaks complex said he grabbed a pillow and got behind his bedroom door when he heard a tornado hit his building. After the twister passed, he said, "the roof was totally gone, the patio doors were gone and every window was smashed. The carpet was rolled up like someone was going to replace it."

"I had to dig my way out (from the corner of the room)," he said. "I was kind of buried in rubble; in fact, I later found plaster in my ears."

He was standing in the shelter, still clutching his pillow.

"If you felt a big, hot hair dryer blowing by you and the whole place was shaking apart and this was the only thing that protected your face, you'd hold onto it," he said.

A spokesman for the Nash County sheriff's department said at least 20 residents of that county were brought to two hospitals in Rocky Mount.

The two tornado victims in Nash County were in separate mobile homes that were destroyed, authorities said. At least two houses in the county also were destroyed.

Freddy Leonard, mayor and fire chief of the Nash County town of Castalia, said he had received a report of a pickup truck lodged in a tree.

"It's terrible, and there's an extensive amount of damage," Leonard said. "I'm fearful that we may still find further (damage) once it gets daylight."

In neighboring Franklin County, about 25 people were injured, said Sheriff Arthur E. Johnson.

"We've had churches that have been demolished, some trailers and some homes," said Johnson, who added that Red Cross personnel were on their way to the county.

The K Mart employees in the Raleigh store when the tornado hit were all later rescued. One man was trapped in debris and had to be pulled out of the rubble.

"I went to the back of the store and saw I couldn't make it," said K Mart employee Michelle Jones. "I got to the toys and hid."

Bricks, cinder blocks and twisted steel girders lay in a heap with racks of clothing and other merchandise. The shopping center parking lot was filled with police, sheriff's vehicles, fire trucks and rescue vehicles.

Everett and other officers hastily dispatched many of them to surrounding neighborhoods and other shopping center to look for people in need of help and to prevent looting.

At least three shelters were opened for people whose homes were damaged, one at an elementary school and another at a city park in North Raleigh, Everett said.

"There would appear to be several tornadoes that occurred," said Joe Pelissier, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Raleigh.

In Raleigh, the storm hurled pine trees onto houses and cars and into the residential streets off Sawmill Road.

A dentist's office had its roof torn away and a child's swing set lay on its side in the middle of the street. The road, a major residential thoroughfare, was covered with debris.

Emergency vehicles negotiated the road, but few residents were visible in the pre dawn hours.

At one home, residents sat in a white van that was untouched by the storm although the one-story house was nearly demolished.

"I'm just thankful to be alive," said Betty Bell, who said she was in bed when the tornado hit. "I can remember hearing a big gust of wind like a hurricane and then I could hear the wood tearing and I thought, 'Oh God, this is it, I'm gone.' I just buried myself under the bed."

J.C. Hughes said he had been watching television in the living room and had fallen asleep when the storm struck. The force of the storm blew his easy chair over backward and hurled him into a corner, but neither he nor Ms. Bell was injured.

In Dare County, a twister ripped a path through the northern end of Roanoke Island just before daylight, damaging at least five homes and five mobile homes. But the twister didn't touch down, remaining at treetop level. No injuries were reported.

Schools in Franklin and Halifax counties were closed today.

Actor Carradine Dies

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MILAN, Italy — John Carradine, the patriarch of an American acting family who appeared in more than 500 films, has died at age 82, a spokeswoman at a Milan hospital said today.

The spokeswoman at Fatebenefratelli Hospital, who declined to give her name, said Carradine died Sunday. She said he had been hospitalized since Thursday, but she would not disclose the cause of death.

She said two of his sons, actors Keith and David, had come to Milan.

Tony Renis, an Italian pop singer who said he is a close friend of David Carradine, called The Associated Press from a Milan hotel and said, "David is here with me. He does not want to talk to the press immediately. He confirms that his father died yesterday in Milan."

Carradine appeared in such classics as "Stagecoach" with John Wayne and "Grapes of Wrath" with Henry Fonda. He also played leads in numerous B-movies, often horror, and portrayed Count Dracula three times on the screen.

John Carradine was born Richmond Reed Carradine in New York City's Greenwich Village on Feb. 5, 1906. His father was an attorney, poet and printer who became an Associated Press correspondent in London. His mother was a surgeon.

As a young man, Carradine hitchhiked his way across America, drawing sketches of people he met to pay for food, and ended up in Los Angeles aboard a banana train.

He became known as a lean character with gaunt features who strolled Hollywood Boulevard in a velvet suit and cape, reciting Shakespeare to anyone who would listen. He was known as "Bard of the Boulevard."

He made his film debut in 1930 with the talkie remake of "Tol'able David."

By 1935, he had changed his name to John Carradine, and his glorious voice attracted the attention of John Ford and other directors, making him one of Hollywood's busiest character actors.

"I never made big money in Hollywood; I was paid in hundreds, the stars got thousands," he said in a 1986 interview. "But I worked with some of the greatest directors in films, and some of the greatest writers. They gave me freedom to do what I can do best and that was gratifying."

He always returned to Shakespeare, touring the country with his own company.

He gave this advice to the four of his five sons who became actors: "Read all the Shakespeare you can. If you can play Shakespeare, you can play anything."

Holtz Waking Up The Echoes

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Lou Holtz, 'tis said, would have suspended George Gipp.

For all his greatness, Gipp was a fun-loving soul who could tinkle with the best of them. Holtz never would have tolerated his escapades. Gipp wouldn't have been late for dinner — he would have missed it completely.

Notre Dame's legends of Gipp, the Four Horsemen, the Seven Mules, seven Heisman Trophy winners, Rockne, Leahy and Parseghian have a new partner these days — Lou Holtz, a skinny, bespectacled, fast-talking — though lisping — football coach who is known for his one-liners, his magic tricks and his self-deprecating remarks. He has been described as resembling your favorite neighborhood mortician — maybe even one of the cadavers.

In his third season at college football's most storied institution, the 51-year-old Holtz has the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame at the top of the rankings with their first-ever 11-0 regular season. They are one step away from their eighth national championship, more than any other school since the Associated Press poll began in 1936.

Holtz's legend grew in stature Saturday. Not only did No. 1 Notre Dame win its showdown with No. 2 Southern Cal 27-10, but the Irish did it without their top rusher and leading receiver.

In a move reminiscent of his days at the University of Arkansas, when he suspended three players for an incident involving a female in a dormitory before the Jan. 1, 1978, Orange Bowl against Oklahoma, Holtz barred tailback Tony Brooks and flanker Ricky Watters from playing against Southern Cal because they were 40 minutes late to the team meal Friday night.

Brooks and Watters were packed off to South Bend first thing Saturday morning. Roger Valdiserri, an assistant athletic director, said Joe O'Brien, the school's business manager, told him he had never seen two players more devastated.

"It was an agonizing decision for Lou to make," Valdiserri said. "But you can't have different sets of rules."

A press release announcing the suspensions said Brooks and Watters were punished "as a result of repeated irresponsible tardiness for team meetings and functions."

Although he said it was Notre Dame policy not to say anything about disciplinary actions, Holtz said he was concerned that the suspensions "might be a divisive influence because we'd been close all year. They realize — with me — that the team has to come before anything else."

Unlike Rockne, Holtz didn't ask his boys to win one for the Gipper.

Instead, he asked them to win one without Brooks and Watters.

The only divisiveness was the opinions of some players whether it had an effect on the game.

"It had a uniting effect because we're all really close," defensive tackle George Williams said.

But according to defensive end Frank Stams, "It had no effect at all. There was a problem, and as a team we corrected it and pulled back together."

Linebacker Wes Pritchett said the action "was something the team agreed on and the coaches agreed on. I think it was a positive, motivating factor. It brought the team together."

Don't be misled by the fact that Holtz does not look like Bear Bryant, or Bo Schembechler, or whatever

Monday Notebook:

East Carolina's Pirates opened the 1988-89 basketball season Saturday night and pounded N.C. Wesleyan, 91-65.

It was not an unexpected victory. The Pirates are Division I and Wesleyan is Division III.

Tonight, the Pirates play their second game, against UNC-Greensboro, a Division II independent which is aiming at Division I status by 1991. Again, the Pirates should be the favorite in the contest.

East Carolina played well in its opener, except for a brief period in the closing minutes of the first half when they let off the gas, much to Coach Mike Steele's consternation.

"We had the chance to take a 20-point lead and put them away," Steele said Saturday night. Even so, the Pirates quickly regained their command in the second half, rolling out to as much as a 29-point lead before it was done.

Blue Edwards, after a year's time off under ECU suspension, came back and took off where he left off. After a few ragged early minutes, Edwards canned a couple of three-pointers and was off on a 34-point tear to lead all players in scoring.

Oddly enough, Steele wanted to talk about the play of Reed Lose and Stanley Love afterwards. Both were starters last year, but had lost their jobs to Edwards and junior college transfer Kevin Staples. But both came off the bench with fine performances, and Steele credited them with picking up the Pirates after they had lost their momentum.

"That's something we couldn't do last year," Steele said. "We didn't have anybody to come off the bench."

But this year, the Pirates do appear to have a bench, and they can play a number of players without a loss in ability.

Wednesday night, they'll get a real test, playing on the home court of the nation's number one team Duke. Last year, the Pirates were blown off the court, 94-45.

The Pirates are certainly an improved team over last year. Of course, they still don't have the height to battle under the boards against a team like Duke. Even though the Pirates have improved, Duke is a better team also, and the result might not show it.

Nevertheless, the Pirates can come back to Minges on Saturday with the prospects of a bright season ahead of them.

Meanwhile, the search for a new head football coach at East Carolina continues. At least two candidates were interviewed last week, William & Mary's Jimmie Laycock and ECU assistant Kevin Gilbride. Tidewater newspapers reported this weekend that Laycock had the job, but ECU officials tut-tut that, saying there are still others to be interviewed.

At least one interview is scheduled this week, according to reports. Gary Stevens, the offensive coordinator at Miami, is expected to appear before the screening committee. That could come early this week since Miami still has a regular season game left, with Brigham Young on Saturday. Stevens is considered by some to be the favorite for the position.

Meanwhile, there are also reports that Marshall coach George Champ

ECU To Play UNC-G

East Carolina's basketball Pirates return to action tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Minges Coliseum, hosting UNC-Greensboro.

The Division II Spartans bring a 2-1 record into the game with the Pirates, who opened their year with a 91-65 victory over N.C. Wesleyan Saturday night.

Blue Edwards led the Pirates in that game with 34 points while Kevin Staples added 18 points and Stanley Love had 10 off the bench.

Staples, a junior college transfer, led the Pirates in rebounding with 10 in his first start for the Pirates.

East Carolina will take to the road for the first time Wednesday, traveling to Durham to face the number one ranked Blue Devils of Duke University. ECU's Lady Pirates will also be in action at Duke that night. The women's game starts at 5 p.m. and the men's at 7:30 p.m.

Vets Come Through In Skins

Floyd Comes Out The Big Winner

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LA QUINTA, Calif. — It was a good day for the old guys. Ray Floyd won the most money, $290,000. Lee Trevino mastered his favorite hole again. Jack Nicklaus resurrected his golfing life at the Skins Game.

For 33-year-old Curtis Strange, it was a lost weekend. "I got what I deserved," Strange, the reigning U.S. Open champion, said after he was shut out of the money-winnings.

Earlier, Strange had praised Nicklaus, Trevino and Floyd as "three of the greatest players the game has known. Each has been or will be my Ryder Cup captain."

"And," he jibed, "each is old enough to be my father. After saying that, I get shut out so I guess I got what I deserved," Strange said Sunday.

Strange, the 1988 Player of the Year and the first man to go over $1 million in single-season earnings on the PGA Tour, was a heavy favorite in the two-day, four-man, made-for-television Skins Game.

But for 17 holes he didn't make a birdie and didn't win a hole. On the 18th at PGA West, he rolled in a 40-footer for birdie, but Trevino dropped a shorter one in on top of it to tie the hole and send the Skins Game into overtime.

Floyd, 46, won the first extra hole with a 15-foot birdie putt that was worth $35,000. That went with $165,000 he picked up on the 16th hole and the $90,000 he won Saturday to make him the winner in his first Skins Game appearance and assure him of a spot in the four-man field next year.

"From tee to green, that's the best I've played in several years," Floyd said. "I made several birdies and I made them at the right time. But I think the important thing was that I was in a lot of holes. It seemed like every time I was over a putt, it was to tie or win the hole," Floyd said.

With the carry-overs, he won 12 of the 18 skins. Nicklaus won five, Trevino one.

Raiders Want Share Of Lead

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — Bo Jackson, who splits his time between toting footballs and hitting baseballs, will try to help the Los Angeles Raiders regain a share of first place in the AFC West.

Jackson, who's an outfielder for the Kansas City Royals in the summer, but trades his bat and glove for a helmet and pads in the fall, set a Raiders' single-game rushing record of 221 yards and scored three touchdowns in his last Kingdom appearance on Monday night, Nov. 30, 1987. The Raiders won 37-14.

The Seahawks, who are 3-point favorites in tonight's Kingdom rematch, and the Raiders each have 6-6 records. The winner will share first place in the AFC West with Denver, which downed the Los Angeles Rams 35-24 Sunday.

First-year Raiders Coach Mike Shanahan said Jackson is just rounding into football shape after making the transition from the Royals to the NFL for the second straight year.

"It's taken him some time to get into football shape," the first-year coach said. "You don't come in in the middle of the year and react naturally. He's done as good a job as you could possibly ask."

Broncos Are Back On Top

Win Over Rams Puts Denver Back In First Place

By Bill Barnard
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Denver Broncos, who appeared to be headed for the Super Bowl to the Super Bore with seven straight scoreless quarters, are back on top in the AFC West.

The Broncos, coming off a 42-0 loss to New Orleans last week, trailed 7-0 in the second quarter Sunday before John Elway finally got them untracked against the Los Angeles Rams.

Elway threw three touchdown passes, two of them in a 15-second span in the third quarter, and ran one yard for another score as Denver beat the Rams 35-24 Sunday.

"We had to win the game to stay alive," Denver coach Dan Reeves said. "We came up with the big plays when we had to make them against a very good football team, one that was as desperate for a win as we were."

Although the Broncos' record is only 7-6, they lead their division by a half-game over Seattle and the Los Angeles Raiders, who meet tonight. The Rams suffered their fourth straight loss and fell to 7-6.

Denver's first touchdown came early in the second quarter when Elway fired an off-balance 39-yard TD pass to Mark Jackson.

Then Elway set up a one-yard touchdown run with a 21-yard scramble, diving for the goal line but coming up just short as he was hit by two defenders.

"I kind of wanted to do that," Elway said. "We had lost our aggressiveness, so I wanted to show some. I don't think you can be overaggressive. I just wanted to be a football player. I don't think I did anything unnecessary."

"It's hard to take away a guy's aggressiveness," Reeves said. "John was aggressive both running and passing. He was fired up. We're down to the part of the season where you can't worry about him getting injured. You've just got to go for it."

Leading 14-10 at halftime, the Broncos scored three straight touchdowns in the third period.

After a punt, Elway needed just one play to get the Broncos in the end zone, hitting Jackson from 58 yards away with 12:12 left in the quarter. Ron Brown fumbled for the second time on the ensuing kickoff, and on the next play, Elway hit Vance Johnson for a 14-yard touchdown with 11:57 remaining.

Bengals 35, Bills 21

Cincinnati took a 21-0 lead in the second quarter and rolled up 287 yards in the first half — 17 more than Buffalo's per-game defensive average — then held on to beat the Bills and retain sole possession of first place in the AFC Central.

Boomer Esiason completed 18 of 25 passes for 238 yards, Ickey Woods ran for 129 yards on 26 carries and scored three times and James Brooks ran for 93 yards and scored twice against Buffalo, 11-2, which already has clinched the AFC East title and still has the best record in the conference.

The Bengals, 10-3, netted 455 yards against a defense that had been giving up just 270, best in the AFC and second-best in the NFL.

Bears 16, Packers 0

Neal Anderson scored his second touchdown of the game on an 80-yard run and Chicago held Green Bay to 22 yards rushing and 167 passing.

Virginia JVs Roll By PCC, 82-64

CHARLOTTESVILLE — Tripp Zorn scored 15 points and led four players in double figures as the Virginia JV basketball team defeated Pitt Community College, 82-64.
Virginia led 48-26 at the half and built that lead up to as many as 30 points in the second half.
Prior to the game, Pitt lost three starters. Anthony Johnson and Ricky Farrow are due to academic troubles while Otis Barnes left the team due to monetary problems. Pitt falls to 1-5 and returns to action Wednesday against Methodist.

Palmer Suspended Indefinitely By Chiefs

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Paul Palmer, the Kansas City Chiefs' leading rusher, was suspended indefinitely by team officials and sent home to Kansas City before Sunday's game against the Pittsburgh Steelers.
Chiefs Coach Frank Gansz would not elaborate on the suspension, except to say it was for "conduct detrimental to the team."
Chiefs spokesman Gary Heise said the suspension was for a violation of team rules, not National Football League rules.
"He was sent home this morning," Heise said. "All Frank said was that the suspension is indefinite."
Palmer, a former Temple star, leads the Chiefs with 410 yards on 128 rushing attempts, a 3.2-yard average, with one touchdown. He also is the team's second-leading receiver with 46 receptions for 560 yards and four touchdowns.
Gansz had earlier said Herman Heard, who ran for 82 yards in the Chiefs' 27-24 victory over Seattle last week, would replace Palmer in the starting lineup against Pittsburgh.

Temple's Arians Reportedly Won't Be Back

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Coach Bruce Arians, long criticized for Temple's dismal football performance during his six-year tenure, says he will not return to the Philadelphia school next fall, according to a report.
The report, on WCAU-TV, came just 24 hours after Arians said he intended to finish the remaining year on his contract. According to the station, Arians says he has received other offers.
The Owls closed their 4-7 season with a 45-28 victory over Boston College Saturday. Since Arians took over the team, the Owls have posted a 24-44 record, counting a forfeit from Houston in 1987 and the forfeit of six victories by the Owls the previous year.
The 1986 season ended 0-11 instead of 6-5 for the Owls because running back Paul Palmer was declared ineligible for dealing with an agent before the end of the season.
Al Shrier, Temple sports information director, confirmed that Arians met with Temple officials Sunday and plans to meet with them again Monday. He declined to comment on whether Arians will return next year, saying Temple will schedule a news conference Monday.
Arians declined to return a message left on his answering machine Sunday night.
Arians joined Temple from the staff of Paul "Bear" Bryant at the University of Alabama, where he was offensive backfield coach.

Tomczak Suffers Separated Left Shoulder

CHICAGO (AP) — Quarterback Mike Tomczak of the Chicago Bears suffered a separated left shoulder near the end of the first half of Sunday's game against the Green Bay Packers.
Tomczak was making his fourth straight start in place of Jim McMahon, who is on the injured reserve list with a sprained knee.
Tomczak, who suffered the injury when he was sacked by Tim Harris, will be out indefinitely. He was replaced by Jim Harbaugh.

Coaching Situation

was in Greenville for an interview last week also. If so, that would bring to at least three who had been through the screening process, with Stevens making four.
Earlier, ECU athletic director Dave Hart said he expected to interview two to four. It's possible a fifth, South Carolina assistant Al Groh, a former head coach at Wake Forest, could also rate an interview.
Hart, while not making any promises, still expects to name a new coach sometime next week.
Published reports out of South Carolina last week had former ECU head coach Art Baker headed for the University of South Carolina as an associate athletic director. Baker would be in charge of the marketing and promotions for the athletic department, stories said.
However, a local source said that Baker has not yet accepted the job, but is seriously considering it. There are many advantages for Baker in taking the job, as far as his future is concerned. He has many more years under South Carolina's state retirement program in comparison to that of North Carolina.
Still, he must weigh the two jobs — ECU has offered him the position of director of the new Personal Development program of the athletic department — before coming to a final decision.
Baker is expected to announce his decision this week, if not today.

Wolverines Follow Gameplan; Top Oklahoma In Maui Final

By Jim O'Connell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAHAINA, Hawaii — Bill Frieder had three items in his game plan for the third-ranked Michigan Wolverines against No. 4 Oklahoma in the championship game of the Maui Classic.
His team apparently listened well because they walked off with the championship trophy Sunday night after a 91-80 victory.
"We concentrated on three things after watching films of Oklahoma," he said. "One, we had to have good swarming defense on Stacey King and we did that early. Second, we had to hit the boards and boy, did we do that. Finally, we had to handle their press and our attack against it was sensational."
In the third-place game, No. 8 Nevada-Las Vegas outlasted Memphis State 90-86 in overtime, and in the consolation bracket final, No. 16 Ohio State downed Vanderbilt 97-82.
In other games Sunday involving ranked teams, No. 11 Villanova took third in the San Juan Shootout with a 63-47 victory over Davidson, and No. 15 Florida downed Utah 77-68 in the fourth-place game at the Great Alaska Shootout.
Michigan was working on all cylinders for the first 30 minutes of the game and held a 63-55 lead when point guard Rumeal Robinson picked up his fourth foul.
Oklahoma went on a 7-0 run to get within one with 8:34 left and Frieder was left with no choice but to put Robinson back in the game.
Were there any explicit, technical instructions from coach to point guard.

"Coach said: 'Rumeal, don't get your fifth foul,'" Robinson said. Simple, but effective.
Robinson returned and the Wolverines went on an 11-5 run that was capped by a 3-pointer by Robinson, who finished with 20 points and five assists.
He fouled out with 4:28 remaining, but Michigan's lead was safe and the Wolverines made seven of eight free throws in the last two minutes.
"Without Rumeal we lost a little of our poise and we were a little tired," Frieder said. "Give them credit too. They really came at us defensively and took us out of our offense."
That seemed to be Oklahoma's problem all night.
The Sooners, who beat two ranked teams — No. 16 Ohio State and No. 8 Nevada-Las Vegas — on the way to the championship game, were 4-for-16 from 3-point range and were out rebounded by Michigan, 42-29.
"We were never in synch tonight and we never seemed able to get any control of the game," said King, who led the Sooners with 27 points on 10-of-14 shooting. "The game wasn't as physical as Nevada-Las Vegas was but I'm getting used to having two and three guys defending me. It will just take time for the others on our team to adjust."
Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs lost his voice during the game and was unable to talk after the game.
He yelled quite a bit during the game as the vaunted Oklahoma pressure defense allowed easy shots throughout the first half. Michigan

Blazers Rally Past Golden St.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORTLAND, Ore. — The Portland Trail Blazers had one for the road.
The Blazers, getting ready for a six-game, 10-day road trip, rallied behind Kevin Duckworth, who had 12 of his 18 points in the third quarter in a 109-94 victory over the Golden State Warriors.
Portland trailed 53-50 at halftime, and Duckworth, said the Trail Blazers needed a boost entering the second half.
"We picked it up in the third quarter or Golden State would have won the game," Duckworth said after the Trail Blazers won their fourth in a row. "They have a pretty good trap (defense) and they forced us to turn the ball over too, too much."
In Sunday's only other NBA game, Cleveland ripped winless Miami 109-80.
Trailing 59-58 in the third quarter,

Portland outscored the Warriors 18-4 to take command. Duckworth put Portland on top 60-59 with a baseline jumper with 8:21 to play in the quarter, and hit three straight baskets in the run. A 10-2 run to open the fourth quarter sealed the victory.
"In the second half, we moved the ball better and made some shots," said Portland coach Mike Schuler. "We had our people in the proper positions to attack their trap."
Portland hit 75 percent of its shots in the first quarter to take a 29-23 lead, but hit just eight of 23 from the field in the second quarter.
"That's the second game in a row that we've played a very poor second quarter," Schuler said. "We quit defending them."
Clyde Drexler scored a game-high 29 points for Portland, and Jerome Kersey added 21. Terry Porter had 18 points for Portland.
Ralph Sampson and Winston Garland each had 14 points in the first half for the Warriors. Garland led Golden State with 18 points and Sampson finished with 16.
"I thought we played very well in the first half but Portland really was ready for us tonight," Golden State coach Don Nelson said.
"They were more patient, they knew precisely how to handle our trap, picking off our rotation, and they made the open shots that we gave them."

The Warriors closed to within 78-72 near the end of the third quarter on a 3-point shot by rookie John Starks, but Kersey hit a 3-pointer at the buzzer to give Portland an 81-72 lead.
Cavaliers 109, Heat 80
Ron Harper scored 26 points and brought Cleveland back from an early 14-point deficit.
Harper scored five points during a 15-0 Cleveland run in the second period that wiped out a 42-30 Miami lead. The Heat, winless in its 10 games, got back within a point at halftime, but Cleveland gradually pulled away in the third quarter behind 10 more points from Harper.
Harper's steal and layup at the third-quarter buzzer put Cleveland ahead 78-64, and the Cavaliers led by at least 12 points throughout the fourth quarter. The final score matched their biggest lead.
Brad Daugherty scored 17 points and grabbed 11 rebounds for Cleveland. Larry Nance also scored 17 points.

shot 63 percent for the game, 35 of 56.
"All we wanted to was show how good a team we are and that we are together," said tournament most valuable player Glen Rice, who scored 17 points. "We knew how great Oklahoma is on the offensive boards so we made sure we didn't let that happen."
No. 11 Villanova 63, Davidson 47
Villanova, embarrassed 24 hours earlier by Southern Illinois in surrendering the most points allowed by a Rollie Massimino-coached team in 13 years, got back to playing defense to beat Davidson.
The Wildcats, lit up 102-81 on Saturday, came back with a vengeance on Sunday, limiting Davidson to only 11 field goals in 42 attempts.
Guard Doug West scored 14 of his 18 points in a five-minute span in the first half to break open a close game. The Wildcats, leading only 18-13, rolled to a 36-21 lead at halftime.
"We have to improve a lot of things," Massimino said. "Our intensity has to be better, our passing needs to get better. We're not doing anything particularly well right now."
"I was a little disappointed with our letdown yesterday, but today it was like to different teams out there," West said.

Holtz-Magic?

you think a football coach should look like. He can scream with the best of them.
"There's a line, and if you cross it ..." guard Tim Grunhard said. "I know how it sounds, but this is a school with a Christian attitude. The coach has his Ten Commandments, too, and you better obey them."
"We're all sorry for Tony and Ricky. They worked hard all season and this week. But when discipline is broken, the line is drawn. Everybody agreed. This team is not based on individuals."
"Nobody's mad at Tony or Ricky. They learned their lesson. I'm sure they'll be 10-15 minutes early for meetings at the Fiesta Bowl."
One of Holtz's first acts at Notre Dame was instituting demanding — and mandatory — winter conditioning workouts — at 5:30 a.m.
"It was the most grueling hours of conditioning I've ever spent in my life," linebacker Ned Bolcar said.

"Guys were getting sick and passing out."
"It was good for us," tailback Mark Green added. "But at the time, it seemed like the worst thing in the world."
"He's not an easy guy to play for sometimes," wide receiver Reggie Ward said. "He gets on you, and gets on you pretty good. But you can't listen to how he says it; you listen to what he says. It's like a parent-child relationship. It's like, 'He cares enough to spank us.'" Strangely, Holtz doesn't see himself as a disciplinarian. He just has the same rules for everyone.
"You don't go about establishing discipline," he said. "You set rules and enforce rules. You just tell the athlete that you expect him to do what's right, do the best he can and treat others how he'd like to be treated, and that's how we're going to operate the program."
"Everybody says I'm a disciplinarian, and I'm not. A person who won't do what's necessary isn't a bit better than one who can't."

Table of NFL game results and statistics, including scores, passing, rushing, and receiving yards for various teams like Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, and Cleveland.

Playoff Races Tightening Up

Bears with Buffalo for the best record in the NFL, was a costly one, as Chicago lost quarterback Mike Tomczak and defensive end Larry Tomczak to injuries.

The Bears clinched at least a wild-card playoff spot with a 11-2 record, while the Packers fell to 2-11 with their sixth straight defeat.

Tomczak suffered a separation of his left, non-throwing shoulder with a minute left in the first half and was replaced by Jim Harbaugh, who is expected to start next week. Dent suffered a broken bone in his left ankle early in the second half and will be out six to eight weeks.

Giants 13, Saints 12

New York, playing with two backup quarterbacks because of an injury to Phil Simms, overcame five turnovers and four field goals by Morten Andersen.

Paul McFadden kicked a 35-yard field goal with 21 seconds left after quarterbacks Jeff Hostetler and Jeff Rutledge combined to lead three scoring drives.

Hostetler, who started the game, passed for one first-half touchdown, an 85-yard scoring play to Stephen Baker. Rutledge relieved Hostetler in the second half and led a short march to a 46-yard field goal by McFadden and a 33-yard drive to the game-winning field goal.

Eagles 31, Cardinals 12

Philadelphia won its fourth straight game and stayed in a tie for the NFC East lead as Ron Johnson, who didn't have a job three weeks ago, caught two touchdowns passes and set up a third.

The Eagles boosted their record to 8-5 and dropped the Cardinals, 7-6, out of a tie for the division lead. Randall Cunningham, who completed 17 of 35 passes for 214 yards and two touchdowns, rallied the Eagles from a 14-7 halftime deficit to a 24-14 lead after three periods.

Johnson, who took over as a starter at wide receiver after injuries to Mike Quick and Greg Garry, also caught an 11-yard scoring pass in the first quarter. Philadelphia went ahead 17-14 with 7:21 left in the period on Cunningham's 8-yard TD pass to Cris Carter. The touchdown was set up by Cunningham's 40-yard completion to Johnson for a first down at the 12.

49ers 48, Chargers 10

Joe Montana threw a team-record 96-yard touchdown pass to Jerry Rice, a 41-yard scoring pass to Rice and a left-handed, underhand 2-yard TD toss to Roger Craig as San Francisco improved its playoff hopes by routing San Diego.

Craig scored three times for San Francisco with the short touchdown reception and touchdown runs covering one and seven yards.

Colts 24, Patriots 21

Indianapolis pulled ahead on Dean Biasucci's 28-yard field goal with 2:22 remaining, then watched happily as New England's Jason Staurovsky missed a 27-yarder as time expired.

It was the second missed field goal of the game for Staurovsky, who six minutes earlier missed on a 43-yard attempt that would have given the Patriots the lead.

The Colts had to punt three plays after Staurovsky's first miss, but New England's Irving Fryar dropped the ball and Colts rookie Michael Ball recovered at the 20, setting up Biasucci's winning field goal on fourth down.

Eric Dickerson scored two first-half touchdowns but was held to 45 yards rushing for the Colts, who improved their record to 7-6, same as the Patriots, in the AFC wild-card playoff race.

Browns 17, Redskins 13

Cleveland stayed close to Cincinnati and Houston in the AFC Central and nearly ended the playoff hopes of defending Super Bowl champion Washington when Earnest Byner ran 27 yards for a touchdown with 1:49 remaining.

With the Redskins leading 13-10, Byner broke tackles by Ravin Caldwell and Todd Bowles en route to the end zone on a draw play.

An interception by Cleveland cornerback Mark Harper with 41 seconds remaining sealed the victory for the Browns, 8-5. Washington, 6-7, lost its third straight game for the first time since 1981.

Chip Lohmiller's 40-yard field goal with 6:27 left gave the Redskins a 13-10 lead.

Jets 38, Dolphins 34

New York broke out of an offensive slump by setting an NFL record with 39 first downs and a team mark with 597 yards against Miami, which lost its fourth straight despite five touchdown passes from Dan Marino.

O'Brien, who was benched two weeks ago, came in when Ryan suffered a slight concussion after throwing for a career-high 341 yards in less than three quarters for the Jets, 6-6-1.

Miami, 5-8, which managed just 19 points the last three weeks, got 20 in the first 7:08 of the third quarter for a 34-24 lead.

Then O'Brien replaced Ryan and hit Mickey Shuler for a 7-yard score 51 seconds into the fourth quarter, making it 34-31.

Steelers 16, Chiefs 10

Pittsburgh won for only the second time in 12 games behind three short field goals from Gary Anderson and a 10-yard scoring run by Merrill Hoge.

The Steelers, 3-10 and headed for their worst season since they were 1-13 in 1969, stalled after three long, time-consuming drives and Anderson kicked field goals of 23, 23 and 20 yards. Hoge scored Pittsburgh's only touchdown in the second quarter.

Kansas City, 3-9-1, managed only a field goal by Nick Lowery on two fourth-quarter drives inside the Steelers' 7-yard line. The Chiefs were on the 14 when an incomplete pass ended the game.

Falcons 17, Bucs 10

Only 14,020 watched at Atlanta as rookie Michael Haynes caught a 37-yard touchdown pass while sliding on a rain-soaked turf in the fourth quarter, giving the Falcons their victory over Tampa Bay.

Washington, 6-7, lost its third straight game for the first time since 1981.

Eagles Are Winning Ugly

By Hal Beck THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA — It's a good thing for the Philadelphia Eagles that neatness doesn't count in the NFL.

The Eagles came out of Sunday's Parity Bowl against the Phoenix Cardinals with a 31-21 victory that left them tied with the New York Giants for first place in the NFC East. It was not pretty but, hey, this is not a beauty contest, you know.

You want pretty? Don't come shopping in the NFC East. This division, home of the last two Super Bowl champions, will deliver a playoff team only because the rules require it, not because any of its teams particularly deserves that distinction.

Consider that on Sunday, the Eagles fumbled four times, were sacked three times, had two passes intercepted, were penalized 10 times for 69 yards and were outgained 369 yards to 292.

And they won. By 10 points. That was because Phoenix — or as Eagles Coach Buddy Ryan referred to the visitors, "St. Louis," — were no world-beaters, either. This then, was a day for survival and in the end, the Eagles survived. They get points for that if not for the way they did it.

That great football philosopher, Al Davis, once said, "Just win, baby." And the Eagles won, which, as Davis pointed out so succinctly, is the whole idea.

Philadelphia was lucky to have the opportunity. The Cardinals were up 14-7 at halftime but it could have been worse for the Eagles. Much worse.

In the first 30 minutes, Phoenix lost a 41-yard Cliff Stoudt touchdown pass because of a holding penalty against Derek Kennard. Then Al Del Greco had a 44-yard field goal attempt partially blocked. Then Earl Ferrell lost a fumble at the Eagles' 3. Then Del Greco missed a 26-yard field goal try.

For the Eagles, it was an omen. "It shows we're blessed," said

Philadelphia defensive tackle Jerome Brown. "It's just our time. At halftime, we were lucky to be down only 14-7. We were excited. We knew then we were going to win it."

"At halftime, lot of guys got fired up," quarterback Randall Cunningham said. "We all realized it was our fault we weren't playing well."

Brown, never mistaken for a wallflower, was one of several Eagles who spoke up in the dressing room during intermission. "We all got a little emotional," Ryan said. "Everyone was pretty upset by the way we were playing."

But Brown said they were blessed and maybe he was right. Certainly, it was something to think about in a third-quarter sequence when Cunningham went down with a twisted back. After standing in the rain all day, Matt Cavanaugh came in for a third-and-6 from the Cardinals' 9 and merely threw a touchdown pass to Ron Johnson, opening a 23-14 lead.

It was the only snap he took all day. That's blessed.

Introducing the Trane XV 1500—the most energy efficient heat pump ever built.

It cools your home with twice the energy efficiency of your old unit. The results of Trane variable speed technology and a Trane commitment to build the best. It runs smoother and quieter than conventional systems. Without the wrenching jolts of on-off operation. In fact, Trane is so confident of the way it performs, they've given its compressor and coil an exclusive manufacturer's 10 year limited warranty.

And your comfort in summer is enhanced by its ability to take more humidity out of your home than conventional systems. Weathertron® heat pumps... America's #1 selling brand. Call today. Let us show you how the Trane XV 1500 heat pump can bring you a level of comfort (and energy savings) that nobody even comes close to matching.

Windy Weather Of Late Autumn Brings Out Sailboard Fanatics

Chesapeake Bay Proves A Prime Windsurfing Spot

By Angus Phillips
 LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

KENT ISLAND, Md. — The wind was coming hard enough to rock Pete Sullivan's parked van into a full-scale stationary shimmy, coming whomp-whomp-whomp across the Chesapeake from Baltimore and whipping the bay into 3-foot combers that broke in a jumbled froth on the shore.

In short, it was a fine day for a 36-year-old telephone man from Silver Spring, Md., to spend in a warm place like Angler's Bar over on the Kent Island's lee side, munching fried clams, sipping beer and listening to Randy Travis warble, "When you see me walk on water" on the jukebox.

"I do like my cold beer," Sullivan said. But first he had some walking on water of his own to attend to.

Which was why Sullivan was here, taking a half-day off work, ducking behind the van out of the bitter northwest gale to rig his littlesailboard, the one he keeps just for autumn howlers like this, the kind of day a boardsailing adventurer lives for.

Sullivan popped back in the van long enough to pull a rubber dry-suit over his longjohns. Then he was trundling down the sloping lawn into the teeth of a 30-knot gale, hanging gamely onto the board to keep it from blowing away.

"On a day like this," he shouted as waves battered the seawall and sent cold spray flying, "getting in the water is the most dangerous part." But Sullivan and his partner, boardsailing entrepreneur Bob Singer, 34, handled the entry smoothly.

Singer was away first, jumphosting his 9-foot board out of a trough, wallowing a moment, then hooking up with the wind to skitter across the whitewater at breakneck speed. He crested one wave, smacked head-on into another and went airborne, 3 feet over the wave tops, crashing down neatly on all fours to speed off anew.

Sullivan was right behind. They flew across the waves in spectacular tandem, like hankies in a hurricane, heading northeast toward the broad mouth of the Chester River. Half a mile out, Singer spun his tiny craft around and came hurtling back. But where was Sullivan?

Several of us on shore wondered, "See him?" asked one. "Nah," said another. "He probably just kept going."

After a half-hour, puzzlement turned to worry. Singer scooted back to ask if anyone had seen his mate wash up. One vehicle went off a-hunting and we were pondering a full-scale search mission when the missing one wandered back through the bushes in his form-fitting rubber suit, grinning sheepishly.

"Broke my mast," said he, bemused. "And I thought it was unbreakable."

The $200 epoxy-fiber spar had sheared three feet above the deck, victim of excess stress. A bother, but certainly no reason to quit on the best day of the season, Sullivan said. "You don't stop sailing when it's blowing like this."

Shortly he had a spare mast rigged. By then, Skip Brown, 31, a Washington freelance photographer, and Tim Murphy, 27, a doctoral student in neurological science at Johns Hopkins, had joined the fleet.

Thus they were four, and for the next three hours they put on a show that was almost as much fun to watch as it must have been to take part in, zipping across the churning maelstrom, crash-jibing, spinning out, leaping waves at prodigious speed and generally having a big time of it.

There's something wonderful about seeing awesome natural power harnessed for the sheer fun of it that way. You sense it among kayakers, who turn the unstoppable force of big water racing downhill into a tool to toy with, and among boardsailors, who do likewise with ferocious wind and roiled waters.

For these fellows, who are among the Washington area's top boardsailors, there's no such thing as too much wind.

"Remember Hurricane Gloria (three) years ago?" asked Murphy. "We were down at Kentmorr Harbor at 7 o'clock that morning, waiting for it."

And when Gloria blew through in a rush, leaving behind only 50-knot winds to play in, "It was a disappointment," Murphy said.

Singer, who operates Windsurfing Unlimited shops in Bethesda and Annapolis, thinks that with the Bay right down the road, it's a shame more Washingtonians aren't taking up the sport.

Obviously, the more people who boardsail, the more boards he sells. But he said many would-be participants labor under the wrong impression that the sport is just a summertime diversion for kids.

In fact, Singer said, the best boardsailors in the area are mostly grown men and women who are gearing up now for the best time of the year, when howling northwesterers roar in one after another. "We haven't had a day this good since April," he said.

From September through December and starting again in February (or as soon as the ice melts), Singer and his pals will watch the weather maps daily for signs of a big front approaching. When it looks imminent, they'll call friends in Wisconsin, Michigan or Illinois to find out if it's as good as it looks.

If it's howling to the northwest in Chicago on Tuesday, chances are it'll howl here on Wednesday, Singer said, and everyone who can clears his calendar.

Sarcasm Name Of The Game For 'Weekend Update' Anchor

By Bill Stieg
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Is Dennis Miller, the sarcastic, wisecracking anchor of "Saturday Night Live," too smart of a smart-aleck?

Miller's sardonic style and obscure asides are what make his humor work — but they sometimes work against him.

David Letterman, arguably the Sultan of Sarcasm, recently needled Miller for making a particularly esoteric reference.

"It's Doctor IQ, Paul — he's here tonight," Letterman sneered to bandleader Paul Shaffer.

A Chicago Sun-Times critic, while calling Miller "hip" and "brilliant," said the persistent put-downs in his recently released video "make him sound like a pompous jerk by the tape's end."

Even SNL has poked fun at Miller. Colleague Dana Carvey showed up on "Weekend Update" to do a perfect impression of Miller while sitting right next to him, flipping the hair and smirkingly calling everybody "Cha-cha."

But the style seems to be working.

This fall is Miller time. He was married earlier this year and just celebrated his 35th birthday. His stand-up routines can be bought on video ("Live from Washington ... It's Dennis Miller") or on record ("The Off-White Album") and he received three Awards for Cable Excellence nominations for his HBO special, "Mr. Miller Goes to Washington."

Then there's the regular exposure on SNL as "Weekend Update" anchor, the role originated by Chevy Chase. The fall presidential campaign provided a mother lode of material.

One jibe: "Now let me get this straight — Bush is anti-abortion, but pro-death penalty. It guess it's all in the timing, huh?"

And another, inspired by a picture of Dan Quayle holding a pumpkin: "What's the difference between these two spherical objects? One of them will eventually have a light in it."

In October, Michael Dukakis was shown in a videotape playing the trumpet — with "Taps" dubbed on the audio.

Miller, a Pittsburgh native who studied journalism at Point Park College, labored for years as a stand-up comic before being spotted by SNL veterans Al Franken and Tom Davis. Producer Lorne Michaels, putting together a new cast for the 1985 season, tapped him to anchor the "Weekend Update" segment.

"I have the luckiest life in the world. I pinch myself," Miller, sounding not the least bit pompous, said recently in his small, 17th-floor office. "I can't believe I've gotten what I've gotten from these same little jokes I used to tell and get nowhere."

On his desk, under the gaze of a large, silk-screened image of Elvis Presley, is a stack of paper scraps — notes for an upcoming "Update," jotted down whenever they strike him. He reads several newspapers and magazines and watches newscasts each day.

"When I'm off, I'm a USA Today guy. I'm like anyone else, the first thing I go for is the box scores," he said.

"But when I'm on, I read everything, I watch it during the week, I try to keep up on jargon — phrasing's important to a newscast. I try to keep up on the lexicon of America."

Although pegged to the news, "Weekend Update" often becomes Miller's stand-up act, only sitting down.

"It's obvious to everybody it's not a parody of a newscaster anymore, it's Dennis just being Dennis at a news desk," he said.

And what is "being Dennis"? "The overall tenor of it is low-key cynicism, non-threatening cynicism," he said. "I think there's a certain arrogance to it, but I don't think it's off-putting."

The sneering attitude that fuels his humor is taken too seriously, he said. When he said West Virginia "makes Mayberry look like a think-tank," the offended state was a random choice. "It's not as deep or as vindictive as people would tend to think," Miller said.

As for his fondness for obscure references, often to baby-boom pop culture, he says, "It's sometimes for the cognoscente, and I don't need everyone to get it. I don't feel elitist about that, I just write for me at some point."

Of course, he writes for others, as well, and he's clearly pleased with the album and video.

"I was more than happy to get my act out there intact," he said. "It's like a childhood fantasy if you're a comedian. I remember (the album) 'Wonderfulness' and all the Cosby things, and to think you have an album, it's a neat feeling."

Celebrities Help Raise Funds

Frank Sinatra, Liza Minnelli and Sammy Davis Jr. raised $1 million in a charity appearance of their national tour, with Davis delighting the audience with a spoof of Michael Jackson's "Bad." The money will go to the Barbara Sinatra Children's Center, which cares for sexually and physically abused children.

He's In Demand, Too

MONTCLAIR, N.J. (AP) — It was Olympia Dukakis who won the Oscar for "Moonstruck," but the award also has changed the career of her fellow actor and husband of 27 years, Louis Zorich.

Ms. Dukakis, who was considered too "ethnic" for major roles, now finds herself in demand for film work. And Zorich, who said he "did a lot of stuff, very frankly, that wasn't very good, but I had to make money," can afford to be picky in what he does.

"Because of what has happened with Olympia and the money she's making, I don't have to go out and do things (such as commercials) that I don't want to do," Zorich said. "If I find a play I would love to do and fit into the schedule, I can do it."

The couple, who helped found the Whole Theatre in Montclair, are making a rare joint appearance in its season-opener, "Better Living."

CBS Chiefs Hope Team Spirit Translates Into Better Ratings

By Diane Haitham
LAT/WP NEWS SERVICE

HOLLYWOOD — Until three months ago, the building housing the business offices at CBS Television City could be divided into two distinct parts. On one side were the writers and producers of the network's entertainment shows; on the other, the network executives who approved their product.

That arrangement changed when Barbara Corday, former president of Columbia/Embassy Television, became CBS executive vice president of prime-time programs. Corday put her office on the creative side.

"When I told Kim (Corday's boss, network entertainment President Kim LeMasters) that I would take the job, I told him it was important to be on the other side of the building, that I didn't want to be back there where he is," Corday said in a recent interview.

"There was something about going through those doors (to the management side), no matter who was in the job (of entertainment president), where it felt as though you were going to the principal's office. I needed an office where it didn't feel that way."

"I think there is a bit of, I dare say, team spirit going on here that is making it a lot of fun. People are telling me that when they get off the elevator, there is a lighter atmosphere here than there has been for a long time."

Corday, 43, knows firsthand what it feels like to be on both sides of those doors. In her extensive creative and administrative experiences, Corday was co-creator of "Cagney and Lacey" and was president of Columbia-Embassy Television.

One reason for the new team spirit that Corday describes is that now there is a team. After nine months of overseeing the troubled network's prime-time schedule — during which LeMasters said "the bags got longer and deeper under my eyes" — he decided he needed someone to fill the second-in-command slot when he was promoted to entertainment president last year.

"She has superb relationships in this town, she has unique credentials as a writer, producer and director of a major studio," LeMasters said. "Now, together, we are aggressively attracting people back to CBS."

Corday made a move in that direction by bringing with her a longtime colleague, Tim Flack, formerly vice president of talent and casting at Columbia, as the network's vice president of comedy development. A casting director may seem an unusual choice for the post, but Corday believes Flack's connections can give the third-place network a boost in attracting development deals in comedy, the network's weak area.

Corday came in too late to influence this season's shows, but she is working at changing Hollywood's perception of CBS.

"In the entertainment industry, I think perception is often more important than reality," Corday said. "What has happened is, a lot of producers think of CBS as a lot older and a lot more rural than it actually is. But CBS has begun to turn around a little bit in the areas of slightly younger, slightly more upscale, more female-oriented shows. The perception has not turned as quickly as the reality."

Corday said that current projects are intended to broaden CBS' audience base. That means following ABC's lead in developing youth-appeal shows. That is why "Murphy Brown," "TV 101" and "Almost Grown" are on this season's list.

"CBS is never going to knowingly give up its core audience, the people who watch 'Dallas' and 'Knots Landing,' but what we have to build to survive is the young, affluent viewer," she said.

New projects include a series based on the hit movie "Big" developed by Jim Brooks for 20th Century-Fox Television; another series from Hugh Wilson; a show starring Dweezil and Moon Zappa; a series with Carol Burnett, produced by Robert Altman; projects with writers from other successful series (Georgia Jeffries, award-winning former writer of "Cagney and Lacey," and Michael Weithorn, former writer-producer of NBC's "Family Ties"); and contributions from author Pat Conroy and playwright David Mamet.

Corday describes the attempt to get CBS out of the ratings cellar as "fun."

"I believe that the challenge of being No. 3 is more fun," she said happily. "I don't know if corporately that's an intelligent thing to say, but creatively, it's more fun. I think you have to be willing to take more chances."

Former NBC chairman Grant Tinker, whose GTG Productions has a multiseries development deal with CBS ("TV 101," the "Van Dyke Show" and "Raising Miranda"), sees a new attitude in a number of management changes at CBS. "Their problems aren't solved yet," he said, "but they're attacking them with all the right energy and constructive work with producers that will ultimately pay off."

"Now it's a pleasure to go over there, where it used to be like a trip to the dentist."

Though Corday may not be solely responsible for the improved mood, she is certainly part of it. Both Cor-day and many CBS producers believe the network in 1988-89 is a kinder, gentler CBS.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠7 ♥KJ93 ♦AQ10762 ♣AK
 The bidding has proceeded:
 East South West North
 1 ♠ Dbl Pass 2 ♥
 Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—There's no scientific way to probe for any of the key cards you need for game. As little as the queen of hearts or king of diamonds could be enough for game, so you might as well up and bid it. Four hearts.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠632 ♥10873 ♦954 ♣AQ9
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♠ Pass 1 NT Pass
 2 ♣ Pass ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—As responder, it's your responsibility to guide your side to its best spot. The quality of your support is not as important as the combined length of your side's trump suit. You know partner has at least five spades, but he might have only four clubs. Correct to two spades.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠962 ♥AK8762 ♦KJ9 ♣7
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♠ Pass 2 ♥ Pass
 2 ♣ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—Your side has at least an eight-card spade fit, while you do not know whether partner has any hearts at all. Since your combined assets should be enough for game, and you have an adequate fit, bid four spades.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠762 ♥854 ♦AKJ108 ♣63
 Partner opens the bidding with one no trump. What do you respond?
 A.—If you're an avid point-counter, you will claim that with 8 HCP you have enough only for an invitational raise to two no trump. That does not take into account the playing strength of your diamonds. You rate to provide four or five tricks for partner, so your hand is worth a raise to three no trump.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠QJ93 ♥AQ76 ♦J105 ♣74
 Partner opens the bidding with one heart. What do you respond?
 A.—If you and your partner play limit raises, this is an acceptable jump to three hearts. But if that would be forcing in your methods, you have to make a temporizing bid of one spade and then jump raise hearts at your next turn. That secondary jump is no longer forcing. Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

 ♠AJ98 ♥K63 ♦Q82 ♣A107
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♥ Pass 1 ♣ Pass
 2 ♠ Pass ?

What do you bid now?
 A.—You have the values for game, but don't even think about three no trump with such a tenuous diamond stopper. Since partner surely has five hearts on this auction, go straight to four hearts. Don't worry about your balanced hand—partner's holding is unbalanced.

Law Will Limit Size Of Future Presidential Libraries

By Richard L. Vernaci
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — When the last construction trucks rumble away from President Reagan's library in about three years they will leave behind perhaps the last of the epic-scale shrines to a former White House occupant.

Reagan broke ground for his library last week and former President Nixon will break ground for his library, a comparatively smaller structure, this week.

Presidential libraries are built with private funds and presented as gifts to the United States, but Congress has clamped down on this largess, saying the government can't afford to take care of them.

It now costs about $15 million annually and requires more than 200 people to take care of the eight presidential libraries currently in use, according to the National Archives, which serves as custodian of the libraries.

As presidents leave office, they want to leave behind something about themselves that scholars can examine and tourists can visit.

This practice, which began with Franklin Roosevelt, is an improvement over the tradition started by George Washington, who took his papers home with him when he left the government. He kept some, lost some and gave some away.

Roosevelt wanted his record preserved, and after the government took possession of his presidential library in Hyde Park, N.Y., he started sending over the old files from the White House during the final five years of his presidency.

The idea caught on. Harry Truman built his library in Independence, Mo., in 1957, Dwight Eisenhower's in Abilene, Kan., was completed in 1961 and Herbert Hoover's library in West Branch, Iowa, was finished in 1962. They were followed by Lyndon Johnson's library in Austin, Texas, in 1971; John Kennedy's library in Boston in 1979; Gerald Ford's library in Ann Arbor, Mich., (and a separate museum in Grand Rapids) in 1980, and Jimmy Carter's library in Atlanta in 1980.

But over time, the desire to preserve the historical record gave way to an urge to preserve the grandeur of the White House years.

"Today's system makes each former president try to outdo his predecessor and you end up with huge marble pyramids more fitting as monuments to the pharaohs," Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., complained two years ago when he sponsored a bill to limit the size of presidential libraries.

Lots of people use the word "pyramid" to describe the eight-story, angular Johnson library on the campus of the University of Texas. Visitors to the library are greeted by five stories of glass, behind which are the rows of gold-trimmed, leather-bound boxes containing the papers of the Johnson presidency and his other years in public service.

Blasted into the stone above the door is a five-story presidential seal.

Speaking at the dedication of the library, Johnson said: "There is no record of a mistake, nothing critical, ugly, or unpleasant that is not included in the files here."

Therein lies the true purpose of Johnson's library and those of the other presidents, whose memoirs tend not to add to the historical record as much as they lay out the arguments for their decisions.

Material preserved in these libraries, for example, led to the discovery that Richard Nixon was not alone in wanting to have his conversations secretly recorded.

Hoover used a stenographer to listen in on his phone calls with Roosevelt, who then was the president-elect. Roosevelt later had a taping device planted to record Oval Office discussions and so did Kennedy.

Roosevelt's "day of infamy" speech, the copy he held in his hands as he asked Congress for a declaration of war, was found just four years ago in a box of papers where it didn't belong.

It may not add much to history, but it's nice to have.

Congress recognized the impor-

ance of presidential records in 1978 with a law declaring that the papers belong to the government, not to the president.

But it also recognized the tendency that Chiles saw and now limits presidential libraries to a single building of not more than 70,000 square feet.

Although Reagan signed the bill limiting the size of presidential libraries, that was after his own was exempted from the law's requirements.

Johnson's library is more than 100,000 square feet and Reagan's library in Simi Valley, Calif., will have just a bit less useable space when it is finished at a cost of more than $40 million.

Hoover's library is about 30,000 square feet, and Nixon's library in Yorba Linda, Calif., will be more than twice as big.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The editor of the Orange County Register in California is the winner of the National Press Foundation's "Editor of the Year" award and the chairman and chief executive of C-SPAN will receive the foundation's excellence in broadcasting award.

The awards, announced Sunday, will go to N. Christian Anderson at the Register and to Brian P. Lamb at C-SPAN, the public affairs cable network.

The foundation also voted a special citation for Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, who has been held hostage in Lebanon since March 16, 1985. The two Andersons are unrelated.

Christian Anderson was honored for his role in transforming the Register from a "voice of libertarian philosophy" into one of the nation's most respected newspapers, the foundation said.

Anderson joined the Register in 1979. Under his leadership, the foundation said, the newspaper is now "nationally recognized for its layout, photos and graphics." The Register also won a Pulitzer Prize for its photo coverage of the 1984 Olympics.

The foundation described C-SPAN as "the answer to sound-bite journalism" because of its extensive public affairs broadcasting, including coverage of the House and Senate, congressional hearings, news conferences and political conventions.

Lamb helped the cable television industry organize C-SPAN, a non-profit cooperative, in 1977.

The foundation's citation for Terry Anderson said he was being honored "for his courage and inspiration to journalists around the world."

Christian Anderson and Lamb will be honored at the foundation's annual awards dinner Feb. 22
