Martin Rules Out Special Session

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Gov. Jim Martin announced today he will not seek a special session of the General Assembly to relieve prison crowding.

Martin told the Advisory Budget Commission he had been worried that under current laws designed to reduce the prison population, several hundred inmates sentenced for assaultive crimes, drug dealing or repeated drunken driving violations would be released.

Martin said the special session would not yield enough relief to justify the emergency procedure.

The governor said the problem remains a serious one, adding "the problem we face will require a more complex and balanced solution than is likely by what might well be viewed as a quick fix."

Martin said each time a cap of 17,280 inmates is exceeded, the Parole Board has had to reach further into the pool of inmates that may be released.

"The available pool of parole-worthy inmates is shrinking," he said in a prepared statement. "There are presently only 481 inmates eligible for early parole, serving sentences for nonassaultive misdemeanors involving neither DWI nor drug dealing."

He said he will call for legislation to deal with prison crowding when the General Assembly meets in January.

Medical Aid Benefits Expanding

Pitt County Adds 1,200 To Medicaid Eligibility List

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

About 1,200 Medicare recipients in Pitt County will be eligible for additional services as the first overhaul of the federal program becomes effective at the first of the new year.

The county Department of Social Services is preparing now for the increased caseload.

"Expansion of Medicare will provide additional financial protection to 32 million Medicare beneficiaries nationwide," Debbie Ryals, eligibility director for the Pitt County Department of Social Services, said in a recent interview.

Most of the additional services, provided through the Catastrophic Health Care bill, will become effective Jan. 1, with other parts of it being phased in over four years.

Currently, about 9,928 Pitt County residents receive Medicare benefits, according to Fred Lilley of the Social Security Administration.

About 2,000 residents also receive Medicaid, a state program administered through the county Social Services Department. Ms. Ryals said. The catastrophic bill will expand that number to about 3,200, if state projections of eligible county residents are correct.

The income maximum for those applying for the additional services is $384 per month for an individual and $515 for a couple. The reserve (anything that can be turned into money) limit for an individual is $4,000; $6,000 for a couple.

The number of people visiting and calling the department is expected to increase when the bill takes effect, Ms. Ryals said. On a busy day, about 100 people visit the department to apply for services.

"This could easily double that," she said.

To head off some of the traffic, department employees will visit senior citizen feeding centers in each county town in addition to adult day care centers to discuss the program and to accept applications.

"It would be better for us to go to the people to some degree," Ms. Ryals said. Three additional people will be hired to handle the program, and there will be some reorganizing in the department "to help clients move through the process more swiftly."

Once people begin applying after Jan. 1, the department will have 45 days to process the application, she said. The benefits become effective one month after the application is completed.

The bill, which represents the largest expansion of Medicare since the program began 23 years ago,

City And County Discount Discord

It's Only A 'Perception' By Public

By Stuart Savage
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Local officials suggested Tuesday night that any lack of cooperation between the Pitt County Board of Commissioners or the Greenville City Council is a "perception" on the part of the public rather than fact.

Commissioners, council members and several staff members from each of the governments met over dinner at the Ramada Inn to address the subject of cooperation and to review recycling efforts and the question of the proposed Medical Park.

"I've talked with people," County Manager Kramer Jackson said, and there is "a perception out there" that the cooperation between the city and county is not as it should be.

"We could certainly do a better job," Jackson said. But for the most part the lack of cooperation is a "perception."

City Manager Greg Knowles mirrowed Jackson's observation. He cited areas of "good to excellent cooperation," such as joint ventures in the animal shelter, Sheppard Memorial Library and the Pitt-Greenville Airport, coordination of subdivision plat reviews and the Pitt-Greenville Convention and Visitors Bureau.

The city manager also said the city has done landscaping for the county, the county has changed landfill hours to accommodate the city, the county does the city's tax billing, and the county and city worked together to establish a planning boundary between Greenville and the town of Winterville.

Knowles also acknowledged that in some areas — joint facilities, extraterritorial jurisdiction, enforcement of the city's thoroughfare plan, the medical district — cooperation may not be "the greatest, but it's not real bad," and the two governments are working to improve.

One of the areas of greatest cooperation — recycling efforts — was reviewed at the meeting.

Mayo Allen, director of the city's public works department said "recycling is something you are going to hear about a lot in the future."

According to Allen, who said city recycling efforts began with a volunteer program "three or four years ago," said recycling efforts are increasing. He also said all city sanitation trucks in the near future will display signs saying, "Landfill — No Recycling — Yes," in an effort to encourage recycling.

County Engineer Phil Dickerson, who heads Pitt's solid waste disposal efforts, said, "You don't need to talk to Mayo Allen about cooperations." But Dickerson suggested that cooperation from the general public will be needed to help reduce the cost of disposing of solid waste in the future.

Dickerson estimated that the cost of a new landfill will be $200,000 per acre," more than it costs the county now at the Allen Road landfill site. Reducing the amount of waste —

Reagan, Gorbachev Meet Set For Governors Island

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Governors Island in New York Harbor is the tentative choice for next Wednesday's meeting between Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, President Reagan and President-elect George Bush, according to U.S. officials.

The modest Coast Guard installation, which in its colorful past also has been a sheep farm, quarantine station, race track and game preserve, was recommended Tuesday by U.S. and Soviet inspectors.

On Monday they had examined the island and the only alternative choice in the running, New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art. Governors Island was picked for security reasons, said the officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The meeting will be held after Gorbachev addresses the U.N. General Assembly. It is the only superpower session planned during the Soviet leader's visit and is expected to range over several subjects, including the suspended Soviet troop withdrawal from Afghanistan. The U.S. side is seeking reassurances the

Toddler Has Five-Organ Transplant

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PITTSBURGH — A toddler's five-organ transplant was "smoother and much easier" than the only other time such surgery was performed, and she should do as well as a liver recipient, doctors say.

Rolandrea Dodge, 3, of Fruitland, N.M., was awake today and was being weaned from the respirator, said Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh spokeswoman Sue Cardillo. "She's a very bright little girl. I'm sure if she could she'd be asking what's going on."

Rolandrea was in the hospital's intensive care unit in critical condition, which is considered normal after multiple transplants.

She received a liver, pancreas, stomach, small intestine and part of a large intestine during a 16½-hour operation that ended Tuesday afternoon. Her spleen also was removed in the experimental surgery.

Weather Threatens Shuttle Launch

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Shuttle launch officials today worried about advancing storms with winds and rain threatening Thursday's liftoff of the Atlantis and five astronauts on a secret military satellite mission.

A leaking tire on the shuttle's main landing gear was less bothersome.

Air Force weather officers tracked the weather with radar, aircraft and satellites as the countdown advanced. Their readings and reports were being prepared for NASA's 21-member Mission Management Team, which has assembled to make key decisions for the launch.

Weather officials said today there was an 80 percent chance poor that weather would force NASA to postpone the launch.

A cold front carrying thunderstorms stretched from the Great Lakes to the Texas Gulf Coast today and should reach the Cape Canaveral area early Thursday, the National Weather Service said.

If the fore ast appeared hopeless, launch man gers most likely would delay the mission before technicians start pumping more than half a million gallons of liquid hydrogen and liquid oxygen into Atlantis' fuel tank. That was scheduled to start late tonight.

The military astronauts were to be kept up to date on the weather today during a series of briefings on the status of their spaceship, flight operations and the secret Defense Department satellite.

Atlantis will be commanded by Navy Cmdr. Robert L. Gibson. The pilot is Air Force Lt. Col. Guy S. Gardner.

Halloween Partygoers Going To Court

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

As the season turns from Thanksgiving to Christmas, the Pitt County courts are dealing with Halloween.

The broken beer bottles that lined the downtown streets of Greenville on Halloween night have long since been cleaned up, but those arrested or cited for alcohol violations are now having their day in court.

There were over 400 cases set for one session of District Court in Greenville on Tuesday, and Pitt County District Attorney Tom Haigwood said nearly all of the cases stemmed from Halloween incidents involving citations or arrests made by Alcohol Law Enforcement agents.

It was a drizzly Monday night a month ago when ALE agents issued over 140 citations as partygoers took to the streets in what has become an annual holiday bash for Greenville. Greenville Police also arrested at least 50 people, but those cases have been spread among several court days.

There was a price for the party.

There were more than 130 cases set for Tuesday in which 19- or 20-year-olds were charged with possessing or consuming beer or wine. The legal drinking age is 21.

The violation is an infraction which does not go on a criminal record, and many of those charged mailed in the ticket and fine, said Assistant District Attorney Joe Blick, who worked Halloween court Tuesday.

With many people mailing in the fines there were fewer cases to try and Blick finished the docket by 4:30 p.m. Continued cases were set for Dec. 13, 14 or 15.

In another 95 cases set for Tuesday, people under the age of 19 were charged with purchasing or possessing beer or wine, a more serious misdemeanor with a maximum penalty of two years in prison.

Along with underage drinkers, there were problems with fake identifications.

There were more than 25 people in court to face various charges of displaying, using or obtaining a false driver's license or other identification.

Many of those charged were using someone else's driver's license that looked like them, Blick said. Others had obtained a fictitious license from the state Department of Motor Vehicles.

Both violations are misdemeanors and carry a maximum punishment of six months in jail and a one-year loss of license.

In about 18 additional cases, people were charged with selling or giving alcohol to minors.

Most of the cases stemmed from incidents where an adult passed a beer to a friend who was underage, Blick said, and the people were often ordered to perform community service.

Law enforcement authorities focused this year on arresting people who provided minors with alcohol, Haigwood said, but there are a relatively small number of those cases because police must maintain surveillance on someone to arrest them on the charge and it is time-consuming.

Also, there were many more charges of underage people possessing or consuming alcohol, Haigwood said, because there were literally thousands of people walking the downtown streets Halloween night carrying beer, liquor or wine.

There were not actually 400 defendants in court Tuesday, because one person was often charged with more than one offense and therefore had more than one case pending against them.

But the crowd of people was so large the Halloween court had to be moved from the third-floor courtroom to the larger courtroom on the second floor to make room for all of the defendants. Still, the courtroom was full at 10 a.m. and several people waited in the hall for their cases to be called.

Search Continues

Greenville police are continuing their hunt today for at least two men in connection with a series of four armed robberies reported to the department Monday night and early Tuesday morning.

Sgt. D.A. Jackson said the first of the robberies occurred at Professional Cleaners of Farmville Boulevard about 9:12 p.m. Monday, while the second robbery occurred at Shawn's Grocery at 1200 Broad St. about 10:35 p.m. The third robbery, at the Fresh Way Food Store at 810 E. 10th St., was reported at 12:58 a.m. Tuesday, while the fourth occurred at the Kash and Karry at the intersection of 14th Street and Charles boulevard about 4:06 a.m.

Jackson said in each case a man armed with a sawed-off shotgun entered the businesses and demanded money.

Although Jackson said the amount of money taken in the robberies was "undetermined," others familiar with the thefts said a total of just over $500 was taken.

Jackson said anyone having information about any of the robberies can call Crime Stoppers at 758-7777 to give information without giving their name and could be paid as much as $1,000.

RJR Receives Three New Bids

NEW YORK (AP) — Three bidders jockeying to buy RJR Nabisco Inc. in a record takeover struggle submitted new proposals in the latest stage of an exhaustive auction conducted by directors of the food-tobacco conglomerate.

RJR Nabisco's stock shot up in frenzied trading Tuesday, the company-decreed deadline for revised bids in the takeover battle that already had pushed the price tag for the Atlanta-based giant over $21 billion.

All three bidders confirmed they submitted new proposals by the 5 p.m. EST Tuesday deadline set by the special RJR committee that convened in New York to oversee the bidding.

Neither the bidders nor the committee divulged details of the proposals, and officials of the Atlanta-based company said they expected no immediate announcement about the bids.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Right Move

Motives Wrong, But Changes Correct

Jim Gardner may feel like a stepchild — forced to relinquish his room to a sibling not of his choosing — but he would be foolhardy to buck the rule changes the N.C. Senate has endorsed.

Republicans — Lt. Gov.-elect Gardner included — gained more than they lost in the legislature through the structure changes the Democratic Senate suggested. While that body relieved Gardner of his appointment powers, it offered Republicans something more politically valuable — representation on committees proportionate to their numbers in the Senate and the power to control these appointments.

And while there is no doubt the alterations were prompted by partisanship, they offer both parties the opportunity to work constructively around a situation where political squabbling could have effectively stifled progress for the next four years. The Democrats deserve criticism for their motives, but not for the adjustments they proposed.

Traditionally the state's lieutenant governor presides over the Senate and names committee chairs and members — legislators who, in the past, wielded enormous influence over decision-making. But that was when the Democratic Senate was ruled by a Democratic lieutenant governor.

When Republican Gardner was elected in November, that presented the Senate with a political Catch-22. Should it endow Gardner with the same appointive powers given his predecessors and kill bills to retain control or should it refuse him any power? Either option guaranteed stagnation — no meaningful progress could occur in that kind of leadership struggle.

Instead of selecting one of those two dead-ends, Democratic Senate leaders changed the body's structure and rules, severing Gardner's Senate control. A president pro tem, selected by the majority party, and a Senate minority leader would make appointments from their respective parties. Both parties would have committee membership proportionate to their numbers in the legislative body.

These changes represent progress for North Carolina. They closely model the state Senate after its federal counterpart, which has functioned effectively under the system. The shifts provide fairer organization of the Senate and better reflect the principle of separation of powers between the executive and legislative branches.

For that reason, the legislators should adopt the rules and stick with them — even if a Democratic lieutenant governor is elected. Changes shouldn't be made capriciously or for partisan reasons. The proposed restructuring is a step toward more efficient operation and it should be firm.

The job of elected state officials is to govern North Carolina by the most effective means possible and in the best interest of the citizens. Period. It is not their job to make power plays for their party. That kind of political frolic is counterproductive.

Gardner may feel put upon because he must give up his traditional turf to a new president pro tem of the Senate, but the adjustments give North Carolina's two parties the ingredients for better government.

Boat Exhibit Another Travel Asset

Plans have been announced by the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce for an annual regional boat show in the spring and that is one more positive step in developing the county's travel, tourism and convention industry.

Chamber officials envision a four-day show which will attract 30,000 people and bring some $1 million into the local economy.

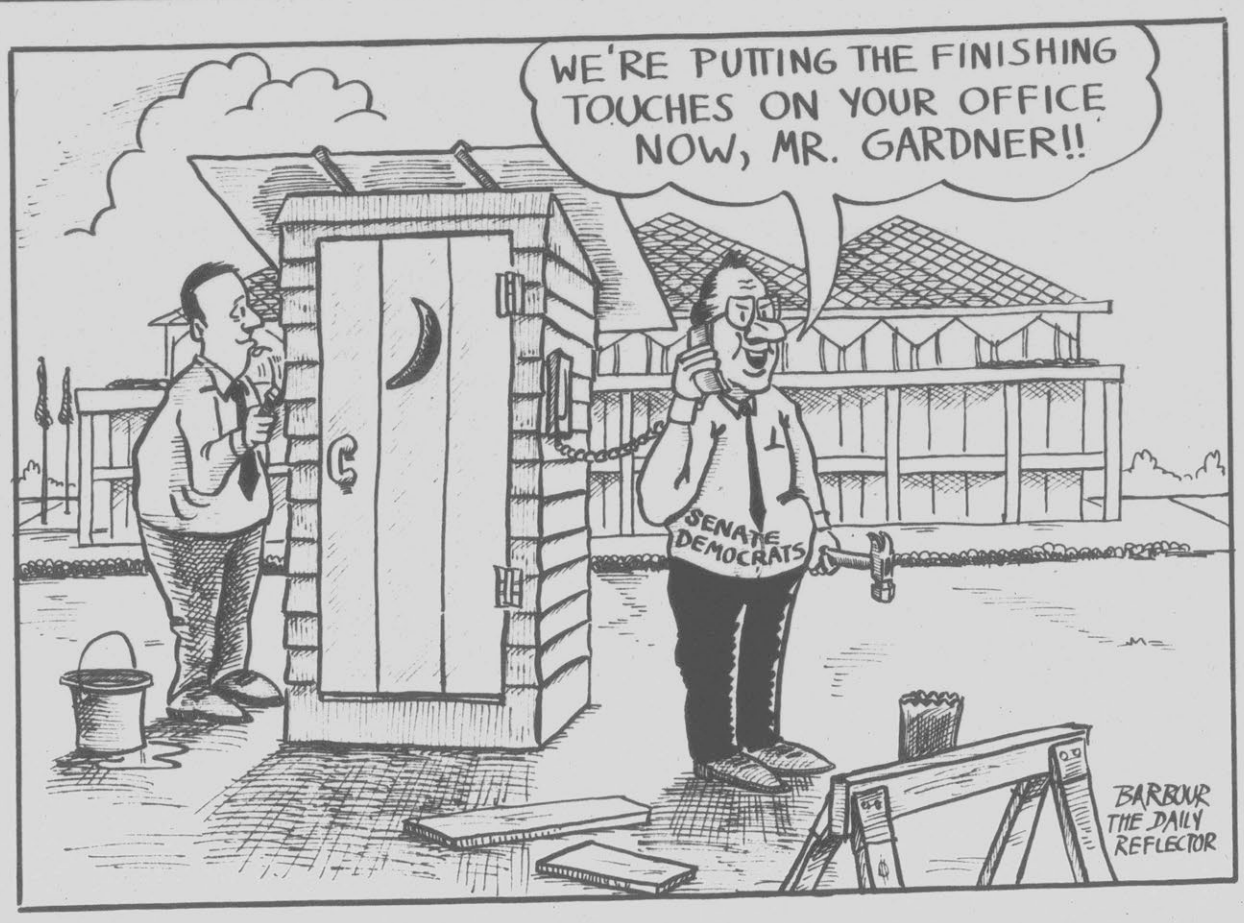
And what better event could be offered in an area where there are a number of boat builders, the public is boat crazy and there are vast bodies of water on which to operate boats?

The show will likely bring large numbers of people here and it will also provide an interesting array of craft for local people to view. The chamber expects up to 45 exhibitors to be here and the line-up will include sailboats, canoes, power boats, ski equipment and saltwater fishing gear.

Development of a boat show fits the vision of developing regional events which will keep visitors coming to Greenville.

Tourism is a lucrative industry that brings people in to become acquainted with the community. They spend money which aids the local economy — and with the travel industry, there is little concern about pollution.

Pitt County is making progress in attracting conventions, meetings and trade shows. It is all for its economic good and the concept of a regional boat show will contribute.



The Point Is To Remember

Richard Cohen

WASHINGTON — The other day in this fair city, Richard Nixon came out of a meeting with Dan Quayle and pronounced the vice president-elect not the "intellectual midget" portrayed by the press. This was one of those wonderful Washington moments — a recommendation of Quayle by the very man who had chosen Spiro T. Agnew and who escaped impeachment by resigning the presidency.

Quayle may not be an intellectual midget, but it will take more than the word of a moral midget to convince me otherwise.

But Washington does not say, "Oh yeah, sez who?" It would not even ask Quayle himself, about to be vice president and, with a sneeze on the errant breeze possibly the President, whether he thinks it fitting to confer with the only President forced to resign his office. On the contrary, Richard Nixon is almost esteemed in Washington.

The question is why? A further question is why Nixon feels free to come to Washington, confer with the high, the mighty and the just plain forgetful, while Agnew when he comes to town assumes the profile of a repo man. Occasionally, he darts into town, sees one or two friends, and then leaves. His old colleagues hardly hanker for him to pay them a call and he lives, much of the year, in Rancho Mirage, Calif. — an all-but-invisible man.

Agnew's crime was that as both governor of Maryland and vice president he accepted bribes. In the end, his prosecutors arranged a deal: In exchange for his resignation, he would only be charged with a single count of tax evasion and allowed to plead no contest. This he did and, after a gargantuan Italian meal at a Baltimore restaurant, was virtually seen no more. He is persona non grata in this town.

Why not Nixon as well? It's because Nixon's (alleged) crimes and (proven) outrages are deemed politieal. Into this basket, almost everything can be thrown. As President, Nixon engaged in a conspiracy to obstruct justice. He ran a vindictive and paranoid administration. It saw enemies everywhere and went out to get them. The administration tapped phones, opened mail, used the IRS to harass political opponents, burglarized a psychiatrist's office, had a White House aide count Jews in the Labor Department — and systematically and repeatedly lied to the American people. Nearly the entire senior staff of the White House went to jail, including the attorney general.

Nixon nearly was impeached. He almost was indicted. He accepted a pardon from President Ford. Watergate was not "a very mishandled thing," as he called it, but a mugging of the Constitution, an assault that so unnerved Washington that some officials, usually cool and rational, thought the unthinkable: Nixon might attempt a coup. As President and after, he has never had the guts or the honor to acknowledge what he did. Instead, in book after book, he examines the guts and honor of others and comes to Washington to pronounce Dan Quayle fit to assume office.

Why is Agnew unwelcome in Washington while Nixon is presumed fit to administer an IQ test to Dan Quayle? The answer has partly to do with the nature of their misdeeds — one, old-fashioned graft; the other, old-fashioned abuse of power. The former is a much more clear-cut crime. The evidence is hard, as tangible as an envelope bulging with cash. The latter oozes grayness, seeps into partisan politics, takes on the coloration of hardball politics and, with time, becomes less and less distinct until...What was it that Nixon did?

'His victim still hurts. It's an entire generation's faith in government.'

Morever, Nixon — as opposed to Agnew — was never convicted of anything. We are accustomed to juries making difficult judgments for us. Once a court rules, we feel that we no longer have to wrestle with questions of guilt or innocence, right or wrong. Nixon has made us wrestle for so long, we are just plain tired out.

But isn't it precisely the role of politicians to make these sorts of distinctions? Isn't it their role, their obligation, to sort out what confuses the rest of us, to retain in their memory the facts of the Nixon presidency and to honor the Constitution not with a mere oath of office, but by remembering those who would do it injury?

It's plain many politicians do not see things that way. President Reagan has conferred with Nixon. So has George Bush, even though, as Republican National Chairman during Watergate, Nixon made a fool of him, turned him into a political cuckold: the last to find out. Now we have the specter of Nixon passing on the qualifications of Quayle.

The point is not to hammer Nixon — to make him suffer more than he already has. The point is to remember what he did. Politicians who talk incessantly about victims' rights ought to apply their rhetoric to Nixon. His victim still hurts. It's an entire generation's faith in government.

A Past History Of Survival

David Broder

WASHINGTON — George Bush is off to a good start on building his administration. The manner of his choosing, as much as the men he has chosen, suggests that his long apprenticeship has given him the confidence and competence to take over and run the executive branch.

The heart of a presidency lies in managing the economy and national security, and establishing a mechanism for assuring the priority of the President's other objectives over those of competing agendas.

The principal players on Bush's economic team reflect his understanding that this is the place to go for quality and performance. Secretary of Treasury Nicholas Brady, Office of Management and Budget director Richard Darman and chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers Michael Boskin have the academic and business credentials and — most important — the politicalgovernmental experience to tackle the daunting problems of the budget and trade deficits, Third World debt and a liquidity crisis in the savings and loan industry.

Brady, as a former senator, and Darman, as a key negotiator on the tax programs of the first six Reagan years, have an intimate knowledge of Capitol Hill. That's an absolute essential in an area where negotiations between the President and Congress will determine if progress is to be made.

In national security, the demands are at least as great and the men at least as competent. James A. Baker, as secretary of State, is a newcomer to formal diplomacy. But he studied with the world's leaders for eight years as White House chief of staff and secretary of Treasury. He is a superlative negotiator, and he too has a network of relationships in Congress on which he can draw for both counsel and support.

Brent Scowcroft, as head of the National Security Council staff, returns to a post where his previous tenure — under President Ford — is cited as the model by almost all students of the post. Like Baker and Brady, he has a long personal relationship with Bush.

It is significant that Bush chose to name his secretary of State and his national security adviser before picking his secretary of Defense. That reverses Reagan's priority. He put his closest associate, Caspar Weinberger, at the Pentagon, then filled the State Department and NSC jobs with men less linked to him. The result, for the first six years of Reagan's tenure, was a foreign policy dominated by the Pentagon and distorted by an undisciplined NSC. This is a mistake Bush has clearly set out to avoid.

The third area, the battle for priority of other presidential initiatives, is the main work of the White House domestic staff, which is just beginning to take shape. Retiring New Hampshire Gov. John Sununu, as chief of staff, will have the major responsibility for seeing that the departments and agencies heed the President's signals and that Bush's policies and projects are sold skillfully to Congress, the public and key interest and constituency groups. But this is not a one-man job and the full team of White House legislative, public-relations, press and political aides is not yet selected.

Sununu brings both strengths and liabilities with him. Lack of Washington experience has hampered others in filling the role, but it need not be crippling. Another New Hampshire governor, Sherman Adams, functioned well as chief of staff for President Eisenhower — a man, like Bush, with his own intimate knowledge of the ways Washington works.

A governor understands how a political executive must marshall the large, but not infinite, resources of his office to advance his own objectives. As chief of staff, Sununu can help Bush define and achieve those goals — but only if he understands the environment in which he is working.

Washington is a long way from Concord. At home, Sununu shared the compact capitol with a large but poorly staffed legislature and a state administration in which few were willing, or able, to challenge his views. The Democratic political opposition was weak in both numbers and leadership. In that setting, he could command — or coerce — approval of most of his plans. Critics and even some colleagues in Concord describe Sununu as brusque, demanding, opinionated, unyielding and, on occasion, secretive and devious.

But even they acknowledge that in the Sununu years, no one out-thought him, out-worked him or out-organized him. Bush was rescued in New Hampshire last February, after a potentially crippling defeat in Iowa, in large part because Sununu brought all of his abundant energy, intelligence, discipline and guile to bear on the task at hand.

He insisted that Bush hold nothing back. Together, they broke Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole's candidacy like a stick of kindling across their knees.

Dole and his ally, Sen. Warren Rudman of New Hampshire, have spread the word among Republicans on Capitol Hill of the character of the incoming chief of staff, just as Michael Dukakis has let his fellow-Democrats know how hardball a character Sununu can be. So Bush needs to surround Sununu with White House staffers who understand the need for two-way communication, not just direction; for negotiation, not just confrontation.

But when the troubled times come, as they inevitably will, it will be no small thing to Bush that he and Sununu have stared down political ruin together in the past — and survived.

New Majority Leader Avoids Confrontation Over Taxes

Donald Rothberg

WASHINGTON (AP) — George Mitchell showed the style he brings to the post of Senate majority leader when he was asked recently how the Democratic Congress would respond to George Bush's call for a cut in the capital gains tax.

"I doubt it would be enacted," he quickly replied, adding that "to begin the struggle to reduce the deficit by making a proposal that would increase the deficit seems to me to be the wrong way to begin."

That said, he lost no time offering the Republican president-elect an easy way to avoid an early confrontation.

How much that style contributed to Mitchell's surprisingly easy victory Tuesday in the contest for majority leader was unclear. Senators jealously guard their motives in such internal matters.

But when the secret ballot was tallied, Mitchell had 27 votes compared with 14 each for Sens. J. Bennett Johnston of Louisiana and Daniel Inouye of Hawaii.

One of the things senators do best is to count votes and assess their meaning, and as soon as the first ballot total was known, Johnston and Inouye moved to declare Mitchell's election unanimous.

The Maine senator succeeds Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, a man of far different temperament and style. Out of place in an age of television, Byrd often came across as a throwback to a time when the Senate was a club ruled by elders who used their seniority and their power to dispense or withhold favors as a way of maintaining party discipline.

'During the past two decades the Senate changed markedly. Most obviously, the average age plummeted. It now is somewhere just below 50. Gone are the aged Southern monuments to the past. Many senators are in their thirties and have young children.'

"It seems to me he could logically say to those who favor that position, first we've got to get our fiscal house in order," said the Maine senator.

The message was clear, but it was delivered without rancor. It was partisan but not excessively so.

Analysis

During the past two decades the Senate changed markedly. Most obviously, the average age plummeted. It now is somewhere just below 50. Gone are the aged Southern monuments to the past. Many senators are in their thirties and have young children.

They also grew up with television and recognized its power and Ronald Reagan's mastery of the medium. Two years ago, after a decade of resistance, television entered the Senate chamber and the Democrats became more acutely aware of the need for a leader who would project well to Americans now able to watch debates from their living rooms.

Clearly, television worked in Mitchell's favor as he sought support from his colleagues.

One of the highlights of the televised Iran-Contra hearings was Mitchell's confrontation with Marine Lt. Col. Oliver North, the former White House aide who was a central figure in the sale of arms to Iran and the diversion of funds to the Nicaraguan contras.

"Please remember ... that it is possible for an American to disagree with you on aid to the Contras, and still love God, and still love this country, just as much as you do," said Mitchell.

But his ability to come across well on television was not Mitchell's only asset.

The Maine senator also displayed a talent for putting his finger on the right balance of politics and substance.

"When you begin to permit political calculations to dominate the decision-making process, more often than not you end up wrong substantively and wrong politically," Mitchell said during a recent interview in his office in the Capitol.

At the same time he's aware of the political implications of this transition period and he sent a clear message to Bush the moment he emerged from the Democratic caucus.

"The Democrats await with interest and enthusiasm the proposals of the next administration," Mitchell said.

The new administration and Congress are faced with record budget and trade deficits. The Republican president-elect campaigned on a "no new taxes" pledge, but most Democrats and many Republicans as well believe new revenues will be required to attain significant reduction in the deficit.

Still, no one wants to get out front advocating a tax increase and let the new president replay his "read my lips" line from the GOP convention.

So, Mitchell took over his new job and nodded to the president-elect and said, in effect, "After you, George."

Proving The Point

Anthony Heard

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — The murder of seven innocent black South Africans in the capital of Pretoria has led to a war of words among white politicians about the root causes of this horrifying incident.

White nationalists have blamed one another for creating the political climate in which Barend Hendrik Strydom, a 23-year-old ultra-rightist ex-policeman (and son of an ultra-rightist ex-policeman), could allegedly arm himself, don camouflage garb and hunt blacks in the center of Pretoria. Apart from the seven killed, 16 were injured.

The blame has been passing furiously. The ultra-right blames the Pieter W. Botha government's modest "reform" of apartheid that, it says, threatens the ruling Afrikaner's sense of security and causes frustration. The government blames right-wingers for creating a climate of racial excess. Using powers previously reserved for action against the left, the government has moved to restrict the activities of some, but not all, ultra-rightists.

The argument misses the basic point: Both the ruling National Party and the rightist splinter parties that see the government as being "too liberal" are to blame for creating a climate of violence.

In a sense all white South Africans must share blame, including the comfortable English-speaking commercial and professional classes that eloquently criticize Afrikaner nationalist excess but that have often looked the other way when blacks have been removed, banned, detained, whipped and bludgeoned into submission.

The incident is not being passed off as the random actions of a lone lunatic. It has a distinctly political background.

Immediate blame for the state of mind that can produce an event like this rests at the door of those who devised and executed racist laws. This has its roots largely in the old South African Republic, established by Boers who migrated north to the Transvaal to get away from English colonialism in the Cape and whose constitution in 1858 expressly declared that "the people desire to permit no equality between colored people and the white inhabitants, either in Church or State."

The process was fueled down the years by systematic apartheid, particularly since the present government came to power in 1948. Countless blacks were jailed under the now-abolished pass laws, which required them to carry documents to be in urban areas; millions of people of color were moved from their homes under statutes that decide where the races may reside; blacks could not get jobs reserved as "white."

There were numerous unfeeling comments and actions by those in power. For instance, it was once suggested from on high that blacks should be educated for manual work and not for higher pursuits. A minister of justice, since dead, delivered himself of the chilling remark that the death in police custody in 1977 of black-consciousness champion Steve Biko "leaves me cold." An Indian (ethnic Asian) golfer had to receive his trophy in the rain outside a clubhouse reserved for whites. The list goes on and on.

The process was bolstered every time a snub was administered to people of color under myriad laws designed primarily to protect whites — every time blacks lost dignity, home, job or money because they were black. These were the building blocks for the climate of violence. They dehumanized both black and white.

Sadly, further street killings could occur — unless there is a fundamental change in attitude. Racial prejudice prospers in South Africa, and little or nothing is done to tame it. The jailers of Biko got off scot-free; some were promoted. His doctors were called, mildly, to account only after sustained pressure from appalled members of the profession. Eugene Terre Blanche, the right-wing leader of the Afrikaner Resistance Movement, to this day preaches his racism unchecked — and says the government would not dare to ban his movement. Many young whites learn, consciously or unconsciously, at their mother's knee or in school to look down on their black fellow countrymen. And white men spend long periods in compulsory military service, where the enemy is axiomatically black.

The government has realized that it cannot rule without a broader base than a fragmenting Afrikanerdom, and is thus seeking to reform its policies to draw some black, and English-speaking, support. Yet reform does not go as far as giving evicted people their homes back, or paying them compensation, or even apologizing.

The government has retreated somewhat from the excesses of racial domination but, under right-wing attack, keeps in place the pillars of apartheid — separate living areas, separate state schooling, separate land allocation and separate political rights.

Perhaps the most chilling moment of the Pretoria mayhem came from a press report quoting a black bus driver saying that he had seen a white in camouflage uniform, gun drawn, chasing a black garbage collector. A white pedestrian, assuming that this was the usual thing — black thief, white pursuer — did the usual thing and apprehended the fleeing man and delivered him to the killer. It is the "usual thing" in South Africa that is on trial as much as is Strydom, the accused gunman.

In 1961, when Tanganyika (now Tanzania) was on the eve of independence, I interviewed a youngish Julius Nyerere in the State House in Dar es Salaam. He was a perfect host, even considering that I was a white South African. He chatted in relaxed mood about his country and mine. Yet his eyes turned suddenly steely when he talked about white racism. As long as whites saw blacks as hewers of wood and drawers of water, he said, there would be no peace in South Africa. Pretoria's street carnage, I believe, bears him out.

Death Row Inmates Seek Review

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Attorneys for North Carolina death-row inmates are asking the U.S. Supreme Court to overrule state Supreme Court decisions upholding the way murderers are sentenced to die, a decision that could affect as many as 80 death-row inmates.

Attorneys for Dock McKoy Jr., an inmate whose death sentence the state Supreme Court has affirmed, say a U.S. Supreme Court ruling in a Maryland case also applies to North Carolina. State officials contend that the ruling, which said the Maryland system tilted too much in favor of death sentences, does not apply in North Carolina.

The state Supreme Court, in its most recent ruling, refused Nov. 17 to set aside the death sentence of Oscar Lloyd, who was convicted in 1985 of killing his former boss at a Cherokee County laundry.

The U.S. Supreme Court had ordered the state court to reconsider Lloyd's sentence in light of an earlier ruling by the U.S. court striking down Maryland's death sentencing procedure. But the state court concluded that the Maryland ruling did not apply to North Carolina.

Now lawyers for McKoy have petitioned the U.S. Supreme Court to rule that the Maryland decision, Mills vs. Maryland, also overturns North Carolina's procedure.

"The petition says that Mills applies to North Carolina, and the reported distinctions relied on by the North Carolina Supreme Court were unavailing," said Robert Mahler, director of the N.C. Death Penalty Resource Center, which assists lawyers for death-row inmates. He said he expected the court would decide next spring whether to accept the appeal.

Similar petitions are planned on behalf of Lloyd and other inmates, Mahler said.

But a lawyer in the state Attorney General's Office said the state would urge the U.S. Supreme Court to deny the petitions. "We feel like our Supreme Court is correct, that our statute is different, and there is no reason for the U.S. Supreme Court to grant" a review, said Senior Deputy Attorney General James J. Coman. "Generally when we feel our court is correct on a position they have taken, then generally we will file a petition asking that (further review) be denied."

The state Supreme Court, in a series of 5-2 decisions, has said that North Carolina's procedure does not have the defects that concerned the U.S. Supreme Court in Mills vs. Maryland.

The U.S. Supreme Court said that in the Maryland system, jurors in a murder trial thought they had to agree unanimously on mitigating factors.

A mitigating factor is a circumstance, such as youthfulness, that tends to reduce a defendant's culpability and support a life sentence.

North Carolina is the only state in which jurors specifically are instructed that they must agree on mitigating factors.

But unlike Maryland, North Carolina does not mandate the death sentence if no mitigating factors are found. The majority on the state Supreme Court has said that is a crucial difference between North Carolina's procedure and Maryland's.

MIA Hunter Returns To Classroom

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAMSTEAD, N.C. — Jim Copp, who was held prisoner in Laos for five weeks, returned to Rocky Point Elmentary School this week, his first time on the job since late September.

"I need to get back to work. I need the money. I need the routine," Copp said in an interview from his home in Hampstead. Copp, a teacher at the elementary school, returned to the United States Nov. 18.

Students and faculty members at the Pender County school had decorated the hall outside Copp's room with yellow ribbons and a 15-foot-long banner — signed by them all — that said, "Welcome Back Home."

"Everybody got a hug, and then we went right on teaching," Copp said.

Copp, who spoke with reserve about his return to teaching, said he didn't want to get his students "involved in the controversy."

"I just told them, 'Some people tried to make me out as a Rambo, and that's not what I was,'" Copp said. "I didn't get political with them."

Copp, a Vietnam veteran, has been a teacher for eight years.

He and Donna Long, a freelance writer from Jacksonville, were arrested Oct. 3 after paying a fisherman to carry them across the Mekong River from Thailand into a remote area of Laos. They planned to distribute money marked with an offer of a $2.4 million reward to anyone who brings a living American serviceman out of Indochina.

Tar Heel Officials Hand-Delivering Request For Federal Disaster Aid

By Michael Hobbs
THE ASSOICATED PRESS

RALEIGH — State officials were scheduled to hand-deliver in Washington today a letter from Gov. Jim Martin requesting that President Reagan declare the North Carolina counties hit by tornadoes a disaster area, officials say.

"We feel confident that the final determination will be positive," said Joe Dean, Secretary of the N.C. Department of Crime Control and Public Safety.

The presidential disaster declaration would make available three kinds of aid to people affected by the tornadoes that ripped through eastern North Carolina early Monday: grants of up to $10,000, loans and housing for up to 18 months.

State officials estimated damages Tuesday at at least $100 million in nine counties.

Dean said at a news conference Tuesday night that he hoped officials with the Federal Emergency Management Agency would rule on the application within two days.

"What we will do ... hopefully within four days, is set up disaster assistance centers" in the affected counties, Dean said. "Then we will discuss with (tornado victims) what kind of assistance they can and cannot get."

Dean added that it was "impossible to know" how much aid North Carolina tornado victims might qualify for.

Joe Myers, director of the state Division of Emergency Management, was expected to make the trip to Washington.

Meanwhile Tuesday, the roar of chain saws and the smell of pine from shattered trees permeated the air as eastern North Carolina residents went about the business of cleaning up some $100 million in tornado damage and reordering their lives.

"All my damage is minor compared to some of these people," said Jeff Johnston as he and his wife, Helen, began cleanup and repairs. Their house had broken windows and a piece of log embedded in the wall; a tool shed was destroyed.

The Johnstons' next-door neighbors were worse off — the side of their house was torn off. "They'll have to move," Johnston said. "This whole neighborhood is going to change a lot."

Four people died, 157 were injured and about 850 were left homeless as the tornadoes tossed cars, houses and trees like playthings along a 200-mile stretch of eastern North Carolina.

Teams from the SBA and FEMA fanned out Tuesday to calculate the damage.

Raleigh and Wake County that surrounds it suffered the most extensive damage. Tornadoes also hit Nash, Franklin, Northampton, Halifax, Dare, Hyde, Pamlico and Currituck counties.

In two Raleigh subdivisions, the deaths of 12-year-old Edwin "Pete" Fulghum and 9-year-old Janet Barnes overshadowed the devastation of dozens of houses. Grief also was felt in Nash County, where Lee Roy and Mary Alston died in each other's arms.

Meanwhile, the Red Cross and other relief agencies were swamped with offers to help the tornado victims.

"The outpouring of support from this community has just been astounding," said Helen Sibley, nurse coordinator for the local Red Cross chapter. "It renews your faith in humanity."

More than 300 families opened their homes to those affected by the storm, she said, leaving only 17 people in a Wake County shelter.

"That's why there are not more people in the shelter," she said. "People in the city don't think other people care much about them, but when something like this happens, we come together."

Businesses, individuals and churches donated food and other supplies. A table in the school cafeteria was piled with sandwiches, fruit, snacks, candy and desserts.

Social workers sorted through a mountain of donated food and clothing.

Funeral services for the two Wake County victims are scheduled for today. A service for Janet Barnes was scheduled for 2:30 p.m. at First Baptist Church and a service for Fulghum was set for 10 a.m. at Saint Andrews Presbyterian Church.

Funeral arrangements remained incomplete for the Alstons, whose bodies were found in a thicket of sweet gum trees, where they had been thrown from their mobile home.

In Raleigh, police restricted access to damaged areas, said spokeswoman Jade Jurek. Fourteen people have been charged with looting since the tornadoes struck, according to a Wake County magistrate. Six Raleigh residents, including four juveniles, were charged Monday with looting from a K mart that was flattened by the storm.

Residents of the devastated areas were getting angry at gawkers, who started coming at daylight Monday and were out in full force Tuesday.

"I had to get out and direct traffic," said Betty Harrell. "They are just out to enjoy a ride."

Raleigh City Manager Dempsey Benton said the storm caused about $75 million in damage in Raleigh. With about 85 percent of estimates completed, he said, about 152 businesses and residential buildings were destroyed, 301 buildings received major damage and 644 buildings minor damage.

Statewide, 520 homes were destroyed, 1,234 homes were damaged and 42 businesses were either destroyed or damaged, state officials said Tuesday.

"We started handling claims yesterday and we're well underway," said John Allen, regional claims manager with Nationwide Insurance. He said 14 claims adjusters were brought in from other areas of North Carolina and from out of state.

"We're looking for us at about $3 million in claims in the state," Allen said. "Most of that is in Raleigh. Raleigh is by far the worst affected area."

He said his company has received 1,500 claims from throughout eastern North Carolina. He expected the claims to continue coming in for a week.

Spokesmen at hardware and supply firms said repair items were selling briskly.

"We've already sold a lot of repair items," said Don Goodman, a manager at a Lowe's building supply store in Raleigh.

Carolina Power & Light Co. restored service to most of its customers, but about 700 homes in Raleigh need structural repairs before power can be turned back on, said Kyle Hampton, a company spokesman.

"I can tell you that the going will be pretty slow," Hampton said. "The homes have been damaged structurally by tornadoes and the owners need to make repairs and then have them inspected and certified that it can be hooked up for service."

Recounts Set In 2 Senate Races

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — As the state Board of Elections certified results in the Nov. 8 elections, it also granted recounts for two Republican challengers in a Senate race won by Russell Walker, and in another Senate race in which incumbent R.P. "Bo" Thomas fell 264 votes short of re-election.

The board on Tuesday declared Gov. Jim Martin the official winner of the governor race, ordered new elections in local races in Duplin County, and called for a second recount in a state Senate race.

The state board's action gave final approval to most of the results of the Nov. 8 election including state voters choice of Martin, a Republican, over Democrat Bob Jordan, in the governor's race and that of Vice President George Bush, a Republican, over the Democratic nominee, Michael Dukakis, in the presidential race.

In the District 16 Senate race, in which Walker appeared to have won another term, unofficial returns show Democratic incumbent Sen. Wanda Hunt a clear winner with 50,608 votes. Walker won the second seat with 48,170 votes. The two-seat district is made up of four counties - Chatham, Moore, Orange, and Randolph.

Trailing Walker were Republicans Max Reece Jr. with 47,978 votes, and Robert "Bob" Crump, with 47,978. A recount was automatic for Reece under a state law that requires them when unofficials returns show a difference of 1 percent or less between winning and losing candidates.

But the board voted also to order a recount for Crump, who trailed Walker by 568 votes, which is also within 1 percent of the vote given Walker even though he was not the candidate "with the next highest number of votes" as provided by state law.

A recount was also ordered in Senate District 29 where Thomas, D-Hendersonville, was a third-place finisher in the two-seat district with 49,038 votes, trailing Republican C.W. Hardin of Canton, who won 49,302 votes.

The board also voted to order Macon County Board of Elections to conduct a probable cause hearing on Thomas' request for a new state senate election in that county, said N.C. Elections Director Alex Brock.

The purpose of the probable cause hearing is to conduct a legal forum at which the board decide whether to hold evidentiary hearing of the complaints," Brock said.

"They've got to consider it," he said. "That's what the order will require Macon County Board of Elections to do. Whatever they do is appealable to the state board."

Macon County election officials will decide when the probable cause hearing will be held, but it will not be held until after the recount, Brock said.

"I'm encouraged by the fact they ordered the hearing," Thomas said when reached in Raleigh Tuesday evening. "Nothing has changed, but I'm still confident that the big board will find that the Macon County elections board erred in the manner in which the electronic voting machines were programmed. I'm certain of that. It's as obvious as the nose on your face."

The state board declared Democrat John Lewis Jr., the winner over Republican Donald L. Smith for a seat on the state Court of Appeals, but withheld final certification pending a noon deadline on Thursday for Mr. Smith, who trailed by 15,858 votes, to call for a recount.

In other action, voters in Duplin County will go back to the polls again to elect two county commissioners and three school board members after the state board ruled that a programming error on voting machines had made it impossible to get an accurate count of the votes there.

The programming error resulted in some straight-ticket voters casting ballots for board members and commissioners in other districts, according to Duplin County officials.

The state board ordered the new election despite concerns that a second election would dilute the voting strength of black voters in new voting districts formed under the Voting Rights Act, federal legislation designed to protect the voting rights of minorities.

Schools' Chief Complains, 'Too Many Studies'

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — About half the children in North Carolina public schools do not receive an effective education, and aggressive leadership is needed to correct the problem, the chairman of the state Board of Education says.

"I've never been involved in an area that was more over-studied and more under-acted upon than public education," Howard Haworth said. "We keep delaying and studying and studying and studying because we don't have deep enough and ... broad-enough ... leadership to get the resources to get the job done."

In an unusual speech Tuesday to the board, Haworth said the state must expand career development programs for teachers if modernization is to continue.

"I think the reform is well less than 50 percent complete," Haworth said. He said 30 percent of North Carolina students drop out of school and 20 percent "... hold degrees that are so flimsy that when it comes to practically performing in society that their life is an enormous struggle."

Haworth, a former state commerce secretary, called for statewide implementation of a career development plan that rewards teachers for superior performance, saying, "Equal pay for excellence and mediocrity will ultimately lead to mediocrity. I guarantee it will."

He said under the Basic Education Program, designed to ensure equal education across the state, $200 million will be spent "on an unexciting, unmodernized compensation system" when it could instead contribute to the career ladder.

Haworth also proposed shifting $11 million for dropout prevention from upper grades to programs for young children.

"The majority of the problem has to do with children who arrive emotionally disconnected, children who arrive with enormous discipline problems, families that don't work ... in terms of familiness," Haworth said. "A number of people we drag through the system kind of kicking and screaming ... to the distraction of the rest of the system fit into that category."

Sending more children to summer school and implementing "way stations" for lagging students before Grade 4 also could help get the dropout rate below 10 percent within 15 years, Haworth said.

The chairman assailed the current decision-making process for public education, saying it often leads to unnecessary planning and inadequate funding.

"The ultimate decision-making mechanism for the public school agenda is inadequate, inconsistent, inefficient, and likely to create more cost and less accomplishment than desired," he said. "We kind of work on a different agenda each week depending on who brings it and how much media attention it gets.

The governor's office, legislative leaders, the public school superintendent and the Board of Education should meet once a month to make final decisions on education after receiving input from other interested parties, Haworth said.

About two-thirds of the state's poorly educated students fail to get the support they need at home, Haworth said, and bring emotional and discipline problems to schools. The state has almost 900,000 adults who are functionally illiterate, and that number is climbing by about 20,000 a year, he said.

Deputy State Superintendent Reeves McGlohon said Haworth expressed the complexity of the job facing educators and the fact that "how well we are able to do our job is to a great extent dependent upon the society in which the student resides."

Board members gave the Republican chairman a standing ovation following his speech, which State Treasurer Harlan Boyles, a Democrat, called a "fireside chat" that would mark " one of the better days for public education in North Carolina."

In an interview, board member Barbara Tapscott of Burlington, also a Democrat, called Mr. Haworth's address "the most perceptive speech that I've heard concerning public education in North Carolina in the 28 years I've been a part of it."

Later in the day, the board adopted four priorities for the coming year reflected in Mr. Haworth's speech: revising the state's confusing salary schedule for educators, expanding the career ladder program statewide, fully funding by 1992 a massive school improvement plan called the Basic Education Program, and launching experimental preschool programs for 3- and 4-year-old children.

Ailing Firm Faces Probe By SBI

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STONEVILLE, N.C. — The State Bureau of Investigation has been asked to examine allegations of fraud against Stoneville Furniture Co. after reports that the financially troubled manufacturer continued deducting medical insurance premiums from employees' paychecks although coverage had lapsed.

Thurman Hampton, Rockingham County's district attorney, asked the SBI to investigate the company, which makes mid-priced glass and metal dinette suits.

"The investigation is not being conducted right at this moment, but we have a request from the local district attorney to conduct such an investigation," said Ed Hunt, supervisor of the SBI's district office in Greensboro.

"We will take action on the request and start something very soon," Hunt said.

Stoneville Furniture Co. officials say they have had no lapse in insurance coverage. Initially, employees were covered by Blue Cross and Blue Shield of North Carolina.

Stoneville Furniture is a self-insurer — the company collects premiums and provides its own insurance coverage. Blue Cross and Blue Shield served the company in an administrative role, receiving claims and paying premiums.

Stoneville Furniture officials say they simply changed administrative agencies earlier this year from Blue Cross to Interactive Medical Systems in Raleigh.

Blue Cross officials say they canceled their contract with Stoneville in the spring after failing to receive payments. They filed a lawsuit to collect more than $250,000 they say was paid out in claims during that time.

A spokesman at Interactive said its contract with Stoneville Furniture wasn't effective until Sept. 1, which means employees of the furniture company might have been left without insurance from spring to early fall.

Some employees told The Greensboro News & Record that company officials never told them the contract with Blue Cross had lapsed.

Last week, the Stoneville Town Council considered taking legal steps to collect more than $126,000 it is owed in back and current taxes from the furniture maker. The day after, the town froze the company's assets — including checking accounts — company president Sam Swirsky pleaded with town officials to back off legal action in exchange for a payment schedule.

Meanwhile, no announcement was made Tuesday concerning the possible sale of the company.

Last week, Kenneth E. Bryan, Stoneville Furniture's vice president for manufacturing, said the company expected to announce Monday or Tuesday that a buyer had been found for the financially-plagued company.

Endowment

DURHAM (AP) — Duke University has launched a drive to create $3 million endowment to support fellowships for minority students pursuing PH.D. degrees, university officials have announced.

The first two fellowships will be named in honor of L. Neil Williams, a former chairman of the school's board of trustees. The Presidential Fellowship awards will be given on the basis of merit. University officials hope to support as many as 30 fellowships for Ph.D. students.

"This fellowship program will help the graduate school achieve goals that are very important for Duke and for higher education," Duke President H. Keith H. Brodie said Monday.

Duke Panel

DURHAM (AP) — Duke University president H. Keith H. Brodie has appointed a 12-member commission to advise him on ways to prevent and eliminate discrimination at the university.

The committee includes representatives from different groups of the university work force. Brodie promised to appoint such a committee after he heard concern about charges of discrimination in Duke's employment practices.

"We recognize that discrimination is a complex topic with numerous factors and issues to be considered," Brodie said. "For Duke to live up to its great potential as an employer and as a university, we must identify and directly address these issues."

Transferred

DURHAM (AP) — A Durham vice officer whose unmarked police car was stolen while he was working off-duty has been transferred to the police department's uniform patrol division.

Durham Police Chief Trevor Hampton did not say whether the transfer of Officer B.H. Millan, a nine-year veteran, was a result of the car being stolen. Trevor said the case had been investigated internally and "corrective action has been taken."

Millan was providing security at a home when the car, with three guns in the trunk, was stolen. The keys had been left in the car, officers said. The car was found two days later, but the guns and several other items from the trunk were missing.

Actions Defended

GREENSBORO (AP) — The federal drug enforcement chief for four Southern states, including North Carolina, says his agents don't stage drug busts or mislead the news media about their activities — contrary to allegations raised by a Houston newspaper.

Staging phony drug seizures and generating false news reports about them are counter to the aims and policies of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration, said Anthony Acri, acting agent in charge of the Atlanta division of the DEA.

The Atlanta division covers Georgia, Tennessee, South Carolina and North Carolina, including the office in Greensboro.

The Houston Chronicle reported that DEA agents in the Houston area had, on at least two occasions, directed local law enforcement agencies to seize drugs already intercepted by DEA agents, then publicize the seizures without acknowledging the prior interception or the DEA role.

Child Killed By Tanker

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CARY, N.C. — A 2-year-old boy was killed when he was run over by a truck Tuesday after he darted into a Cary street and his mother was seriously injured when she tried to save him, officials say.

Darrin Dwyane Carter was struck and killed by a tanker truck in the 600 block of East Chatham Street shortly before 12:20 p.m., said Cary Police Lt. W.J. Hunter said.

His mother, Vivian Carter Pointer, 26, was in serious condition after surgery at Wake Medical Center, a hospital spokesman said.

"He got away from her and ran out in the street when they got down close to a driveway," Hunter said. "She, of course, went on out there trying to get to him before he got hit. But it was too late."

"It's every parent's nightmare. It's just a tragic accident."

The driver of the short-bed tanker, Christopher R. Moss, 30, of Apex, tried to avoid the child. He was driving east in the truck, which is registered to Commercial Grading Inc. of Raleigh.

"He said he saw the kid and tried to swerve, but he didn't have time to do anything," Hunter said. "Even if he could have got to the brakes, I don't think he could have done anything.

"It appeared that the wheel ran over the boy."

Democrats Pick Maine Senator

By Steven Komarow
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Senate Democrats say they elected George Mitchell as majority leader to give them an eloquent spokesman. Republicans like him, too — both as someone to work with and as a liberal to attack.

"I think it's a very good choice. George is very liberal, and it will push the Senate to the left," said Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, a conservative. "Whoever won that race was destined to be the spokesman for the Democrats in America."

"It seems to me the Democrats have decided to move toward the left wing of the party and decided to do so with considerable momentum," said Richard Lugar, R-Ind. "This could make it easier for Bob Dole, as our leader, to obtain majorities.

"They are swimming against the tide of national politics," he said.

Mitchell, 55, of Maine, was elected Tuesday by the Democrats of the next Senate, handily defeating rivals Daniel Inouye of Hawaii and Bennett Johnston of Louisiana. Mitchell won 27 votes on the first ballot, compared with only 14 each for the others, and he then was declared the winner by acclamation.

The former federal judge and prosecutor emerged from the secret meeting and sounded a tone of caution and compromise, declaring that the Democrats would develop an agenda and "wait with interest and enthusiasm for the proposals of the next administration."

"We hope to move forward on a broad range of issues," he said, citing the federal deficit, health care, day care and the environment.

Mitchell planned to meet today with Senate Republican leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., a colleague from the Senate Finance Committee who was re-elected to his post by GOP colleagues on Tuesday.

"I'll be able to work with George Mitchell," said Dole, "He is a very bright, able and articulate senator."

Mitchell received congratulatory telephone calls Tuesday from President Reagan, President-elect George Bush, and Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., the vice-president elect. Mitchell and Bush discussed plans to meet soon.

As majority leader, Mitchell is in charge of the legislative schedule, a power that will put him at the center of every important issue. He'll bring to the role a far different style from that of the man he's succeeding, Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va.

Byrd, the Democrats' leader for the past decade, is known for his intricate, behind-the-scenes legislative maneuvering. Mitchell is a relative newcomer to the Senate — he was first appointed in 1980 — and is more comfortable on television and in public debate.

Senators Honor Reagan

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's Republican friends in the Senate bid him farewell with a pledge to carry on his conservative legacy and praise for a politician they described as "larger than life."

The president and his wife Nancy were honored Tuesday evening at an elaborate dinner in the Great Hall of the Library of Congress, attended by President-elect George Bush, his vice president-elect Dan Quayle, and GOP senators and their spouses.

"Soon you will leave and we will remain behind," said Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan. "We stay on to do the nation's work and also to protect your legacy, and extend it to the future."

The Senate minority leader had effusive praise for the president's eight years in office — including the first four when the GOP ran his chamber.

"We will always be ready to win one for the Gipper — and we know ... there will be times when we will have to call on you to win one more for us," Dole said. "And when we do, you will ride down out of the hills again, larger than life, ready to save the day one more time."

Reagan, in his remarks, voiced regret that the Republican Party was unable to regain control of the Senate in the past election.

But he asked the GOP members on Tuesday to give Bush "the same friendship, support and solidarity that you gave me."

Air Force Rules Out Ice In B-1B Crash

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Air Force has dismissed ice buildup on the wings as the cause of a crash Nov. 17 of a B-1B bomber in South Dakota, and says there is no need to consider adding wing de-icing equipment to the long-range aircraft.

"We do not have any evidence that icing was a contributor to the B-1B crash at Ellsworth (Air Force Base)," Pentagon spokesman Fred Hoffman said, downplaying a published report last week in the Chicago Tribune.

The report said the B-1B "may have been downed by excessive ice on its wings."

Pentagon officials, speaking on condition they not be named, told The Associated Press on Tuesday that the ice detection system on the plane did not indicate the bomber had experienced a dangerous buildup of ice.

"There was some icing," one source said. "There was ice on the wings of another B-1B that landed just before this one. But it wasn't a problem."

"Wing icing was not considered a potential problem when designing the aircraft and there never has been any operational evidence that wing icing is a problem," Hoffman added.

The $280 million B-1B, like many types of military aircraft, does not have any built-in de-icing equipment for its wings. It does, however, carry an anti-icing system for its four engines and an ice detection system for the wings.

Explosion Traced To Arson, Police Say

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A devastating chemical explosion that killed six firefighters at a highway construction site and shattered windows 10 miles away was caused by arson, police said.

Detectives questioned four people to "evaluate their alibis" in Tuesday's predawn fire that triggered the blast, but no arrests have been made, said Sgt. Gregory Mills, a police spokesman.

Fire bells tolled throughout the city for the six firefighters, who were killed when a construction trailer loaded with 30,000 pounds of ammonium nitrate exploded, ripping a large crater in the ground and virtually obliterating a fire truck.

Another explosion occurred 40 minutes later in a nearby trailer that stored 15,000 pounds of the material, which is used in highway construction projects to make dynamite explode more evenly.

"A lot of guys just find it hard to believe," said fire Capt. Owen Gilchrist. "No one wants to. Another five or 10 minutes, there could have been 20 or 30 guys down there."

Mills said investigators determined arson from the presence of two separate fires burning almost simultaneously at the site. One blaze, in a small pickup truck, started in the cab. The second began 500 feet away in the trailer containing the explosives, he said.

Police said they had no motive for the arson, but did not rule out that the fires could have been set as a prank. A special squad of six homicide detectives and one arson detective was working on the case.

Sailor Killed In Gun Mishap On American Carrier

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — A sailor on the USS Nimitz was killed today and another was injured when an aircraft gun accidentally fired and hit another warplane, causing a fire on the flight deck, military officials said.

The fire was controlled in about 20 minutes, but six aircraft parked on the deck were damaged, the officials said. The 90,944-ton, nuclear-powererd aircraft carrier continued its mission in the North Arabian Sea.

The incident occurred about 2:50 a.m. while crews were performing "trouble-shooting maintenance" on the parked aircraft, according to spokesmen in the Persian Gulf region and at U.S. Central Command headquarters in Tampa, Fla.

The identities of the casualties were withheld pending notification of family members.

Navy officials said the injured sailor was flown to a U.S. military hospital in West Germany. U.S. sources said he suffered burns over at least 70 percent of his body.

Chief Petty Officer Joe Bartlett, a public affairs officer aboard the Navy's Persian Gulf flagship, USS La Salle, said a gun mounted on an A-7 Corsair fired by accident, hitting an A-6 Intruder parked nearby.

The ensuing fire caused "major or minor damage" to six aircraft, most of them A-7s, Bartlett said. Firefighters using foam and water brought the blaze under control, he said.

The Nimitz arrived in the Arabian Sea on Oct. 29 with an eight-ship battle group to support U.S. naval operations in the Persian Gulf.

The carrier, commissioned in 1975 and based at Bremerton, Wash., carries about 80 aircraft and has nearly 6,000 people on board. In 1981, a Marine jet crashed onto the Nimitz's flight deck off Florida, killing 14 people.

The death of the sailor brought to 50 the number of Americans killed in military operations in the gulf and nearby waters in the past year and a half.

Alien Amnesty Plan Expires At Midnight

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Agricultural workers who are in the country illegally have until midnight to apply for immigration amnesty, a deadline that is passing quietly and is tainted with charges of fraud.

Federal immigration offices around the country braced for a last-minute rush as the last call is made for the illegal aliens' applications for U.S. residency.

Under a special provision of the 1986 immigration law, foreign farmhands must prove they harvested fruits, vegetables or other perishable crops in the United States for at least 90 days in a one-year period that ended May 1, 1986, to be eligible.

More than half of the applications filed for the Special Agricultural Workers Program have come from California, followed by Florida with about 10 percent and Texas with about 8 percent. Significant numbers have also been filed in the Northwest, Arizona and New York.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service had estimated that 600,000 farm workers would apply for the latest program.

GE Accused Of Defrauding Army

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA — General Electric Co., which pleaded guilty to a Defense Department fraud charge three years ago, plans to fight new government accusations that it intentionally shortchanged the Army $10 million.

In a federal indictment released Tuesday, the government charged the nation's third-largest defense contractor and two employees with hiding savings negotiated with subcontractors in a $270 million contract to make a battlefield computer system.

GE, which according to the government faces a maximum penalty of $71.9 million plus restitution, called the charges "sensationalized."

"GE has, up to now, found the government to be fair as GE has implemented this self-policing program and cooperated with governmental authorities," the company said in a statement. "But, in this ... case, where the government's indictment is both unfair and unfounded, GE intends to defend itself at trial."

The company also said that an internal investigation into the same matter showed pricing discrepancies totaling $3.69 million, which the company already has refunded.

Thomas H. Lee II, first assistant U.S. attorney, responded: "We look forward to the opportunity to have a jury judge the merits of the case."

In Washington, the Defense Department said no decisions have been made as yet on whether to suspend GE from bidding on defense contracts, worth $5.8 billion to the contractor last year.

"The allegations will now have to be reviewed by the Army," said William Caldwell, a Pentagon spokesman.

GE was awarded a $250 million contract in June 1983 to make the "decentralized automated service support system," called the DAS-3, for the Army.

The 321-count indictment charges that GE, through its wholly owned subsidiary Management and Technical Services Co. (MATSCO) in suburban King of Prussia, negotiated subcontracting costs that were lower than it anticipated and hid them from the Army.

The Army would have been defrauded of $22 million if the scheme had not been uncovered, the Pentagon said.

Hurricane Year Ends

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The costliest hurricane season to batter the Caribbean, Central and South America ends today, leaving hundreds dead and damage that will take years to rebuild.

Six hurricanes and five other tropical storms sank boats, deluged villages and blasted everything in their paths, killing more than 500 people and causing more than $5 billion in damage, according to figures compiled by the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla.

The six-month season was not that destructive in the United States.

The worst hit countries — Jamaica and Nicaragua — are still reeling in the wake of hurricanes Gilbert and Joan.

Twenty percent of Jamaica's 2.3 million people were still without electricity by early November and 40 percent of the water supply had not been restored. It will take six months to repair rural roads, Prime Minister Edward Seaga said.

If a lesson was learned, it was that "good international information and good building codes paid off," said Bob Sheets, director of the National Hurricane Center, which is responsible for forecasting storms for the region under a United Nations agreement.

"There was a continuous flow of information back and forth" from the 25 nations linked by the agreement, Sheets said in a telephone interview. "In fact, President (Oscar) Arias of Costa Rica called here four times himself." The 1988 season was the costliest in terms of damage, but not in terms of lives, said Sheets.

Hurricane Fifi made 1974 the deadliest season with more than 10,000 Hondurans killed in floods and mudslides.

Benefits Expanding

provides payment for all hospital costs after payment of an annual deductible of $564 for 1989. For those eligible, Medicaid will pay for the Medicare deductible for county residents.

The deductible will increase in subsequent years. Currently, Medicare pays for no more than 59 days a year and recipients pay a deductible for each hospital visit.

In 1990, a limit on the Medicare beneficiary's personal expenses for doctors' care will be placed at $1,370 a year. For those eligible, Medicaid will pay for some out-of-pocket expenses not covered by Medicare.

The cap will rise to $1,900 in 1993. Currently, the program pays a percentage of the costs but there is no ceiling on the patient's payments.

After a patient has spent $600 on prescription drugs in 1991, Medicare will pay half of all additional prescription bills. As the deductible increases in the next two years, Medicare's share of additional costs will reach a maximum of 80 percent in 1993.

The Medicare-paid maximum for nursing home care will be raised from 100 days to 150 days and the existing requirement for a prior three-day stay in the hospital will be eliminated. Patients will pay 20 percent of the average daily cost for the first eight days.

Seven-day-a-week skilled nursing care will be provided at least 38 days per year when ordered by a physician. Currently, Medicare patients are allowed 21 days of skilled nursing care per year, generally limited to five visits per week.

Spouses of nursing home patients will also receive benefits under the bill. In the current program, most elderly people have to decrease their earnings to the poverty level to qualify for Medicaid. The new bill will permit the spouse of someone who enters a nursing home for long-term care to keep $786 of income a month and $12,000 in liquid assets.

The bill also requires that by 1992 states must pay all Medicare premiums and related expenses for elderly people below the government-established poverty level, whether they are receiving welfare payments or not.

To pay for the expanded benefits, the plan raises the monthly premium for Medicare part B by $4 from its present level of $24.80. Also, the estimated 40 percent of Medicare beneficiaries who earn enough to pay federal income taxes will be subject to a 25 percent surcharge on their income, up to a maximum of $800 per person. The surcharge will increase on a staggered scale through 1993.

Cooperation Urged

through recycling — that is landfilled will ultimately mean savings for the taxpayer, he said.

In an effort to reduce the amount of solid waste disposed of in the present landfill, Dickerson noted that the county opened a recycling center at the Bell's Fork solid waste container site last year, and hopes to have a total of six sites — including Farmville, Ayden-Grifton, Bethel, Winterville and at the Allen Road landfill — in operation by the end of the year.

"What I would encourage the county board of commissioners and the City Council to do is set an example," Dickerson said.

As for the Medical Park plan — one area in which, officials agree, the public perceives a lack of cooperation — Jackson said, "The only problem we have is a problem of perception on the part of the public."

A city study group several years ago recommended that the 1,800-acre medical district be increased to 5,300 acres to create an East Carolina Medical Park.

But according to Jackson and Knowles no action has ever been taken by the City Council or commissioners to expand the boundary and create a medical park.

"The truth of the matter," Jackson said, is that "we have" a 1,800-acre medical park district. Beyond that we don't have one."

But the proposal by the study commission, Jackson said, gives city and county officials "something to talk about ... if one or the other boards wants to expand it."

According to Knowles, "there are those in the city that would suggest the present district is too small. We could do that (expand the district) if the City Council and county commissioners want to go ahead."

But Knowles suggested, "there is some question where the boundary should be."

Malcolm Green, general manager of the Greenville Utilities Commission, said the utility would be unable to serve all the area included in the study commission proposal with gravity sewer.

While the entire 1,800 acres now included in the park is under the planning control of the city and can be served with gravity sewer, Green said a sizable area to the south and west of the present medical district — areas outside the city's extraterritorial jurisdiction — could be served only with pump stations, which would greatly increase the cost of development.

"When you start looking at how big and where" a medical park should be, Green said, one consideration might be if the area can be served with gravity sewer.

Bobby Roberson, the city's director of development, said any expansion of the medical district would "take a joint effort to solve the problems."

County Planner Jeff Ulma agreed. "I think it does need a joint effort in planning. We need to look at it and evaluate what's happening. It's important to plan and manage what happens in the area."

Charles Gaskins, chairman of the Board of County Commissioners, who presided at the meeting, then suggested, "Let the managers look at it ... inventory what's there, how much land has been used" and how big an area might be needed for future growth, then report back to the governing boards.

Court

There were also a mixed-bag of other Halloween charges on Tuesday's calendar, such as resisting arrest, intoxicated and disruptive, consuming alcohol on an unauthorized location, creating a public disturbance, assaulting a law enforcement officer, possession of marijuana and one charge of carrying a concealed weapon.

In the most serious incident Halloween night, a Marine stationed at the New River Air Station near Jacksonville was charged with assault with a deadly weapon inflicting serious injury and failure to stop at the scene of an accident.

William J. Glester, 21, allegedly ran over the ankle of ALE agent Richard Thornell, who was trying to stop Glester's car and fell to the ground. A probable cause hearing for Glester is scheduled for Dec. 9 in Pitt County District Court.

Winter Set Introduces Cable Stitch

Aran knitting, possible the most popular form of classic knitting, is thought to have originated off the west coast of Ireland on the Isles of Aran. Fishermen wore these designs in sweaters, caps and scarves to protect themselves from the cold Atlantic winds.

This winter set — a scarf, hat and headband — uses three cables, the most easily recognized feature of Aran knitting. Directions for the tight-braided cable are given below. The braided cable is combined with a twisted cable and a twisted stitch on the scarf and headband. The hat is worked in stockinette stitch with another cable pattern, equally easy to do.

To obtain directions for the Aran Winter Set, send your request for Leaflet No. Z-111388 with $2 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler Crafts, The Daily Reflector, P.O. Box 419148, Kansas City, Mo. 64141.

Or you may order Kit No. K-111388, available in worsted-weight acrylic yarn in off-white, deep rose or royal blue, garnet or ink blue for $25.95. Send your request to Pat Trexler Crafts at the address given above. The kit price includes shipping charges, full instructions and yarn. Please specify your choice of yarn and color.

Scarf, hat and headband show Aran knitting

It is interesting to note that the first pattern stitch attempted by most beginning knitters is often a basic cable stitch, usually with great success. Unfortunately, many never progress beyond that, thus denying themselves much of the fascination of pattern stitchery.

It is seldom a lack of skill, just a lack of confidence, that prevents many from exploring the delights of more advanced knitting. By facing any pattern that is new with a "one-step-at-at-time" attitude, you can master it in no time.

A good example is one of the cables used in the Aran Winter Set featured today. To try it, cast on 18 stitches. Work Row 1 as follows: Knit 2, purl 2, knit 2, (cable 4 front) twice, purl 2, knit 2.

To "(cable 4 front) twice," work as follows: Step 1, slip 2 stitches to cable holder and hold in front of your work. Step 2: Knit the next 2 stitches. Step 3: Knit the 2 stitches from the cable holder. The word "twice" indicates that you repeat steps 1 through 3 once more.

Row 2: Purl 2, knit 2, purl 10, knit 2, purl 2.

Row 3: Knit 2, purl 2, (cable 4 back) twice, knit 2, purl 2, knit 2. The back cable is the same as the front cable except that the cable holder is held back of your work.

Repeat these 4 rows in sequence for desired leangth.

The stitch as given in the leaflet is combined with other stitches, but to keep this column from being too lengthy, I am giving only part of the directions. If you enjoy working this pattern, you will love the full pattern, which is prettier and no more difficult.

Cable holders are also known as cable needles or cable hooks. The cable needle looks like a small double-pointed needle with a curve in the center. Cable hooks resemble oversized fish hooks (without the barb of course). Double-pointed needles or even cable hooks can also be used, but the cable holders are recommended for beginners.

Few Regret Taking Early Retirement

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROCHESTER, N.Y. — People who have taken early retirement believe they made the right decision, although women find it harder to adjust than men do, according to a study for the American Association of Retired Persons.

The study of 400 men and women, retired for five years or less, was conducted by Ladd Wheeler, a University of Rochester psychologist, for the AARP's Public Policy Institute. He was assisted by the Regional Council on Aging in Rochester

Most of the men and women in the study took early retirement because their employers were cutting back on personnel and offered the employees deals they couldn't refuse, Wheeler says.

"Some people saw the employer's offer as an invitation to leave," he adds, "and thought they'd better do so when they had a good offer in hand, rather than risk a layoff or demotion later."

Stop Blushing With Self-Control

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: I am a 35-year-old single woman, and I still blush. This didn't really get bad until I was about 19 years old. I think maybe I'm afraid of people. Have you ever heard of anything so stupid?

When I'm with a crowd of people and a stranger comes up to talk to me, I get so red I could stand on a street corner and stop traffic. What is wrong with me?

If I have a couple of drinks, I get so relaxed, I can talk to anyone. I can't understand this. When I don't drink and a stranger approaches me, I get hot and sweaty and I can feel my cheeks burning, so I know I am beet-red.

I kept hoping I would outgrow this, but it seems to be getting worse. Is there any cure for blushing? — Hates The Color Red

Dear Hates: Blushing is a physical reaction to a mental stimulus. It is simply a reddening of the face as a result of experiencing shame, embarrassment, confusion or helplessness. Because it's an involuntary act, it is difficult — but not impossible — to control. Our blood pressure can be raised or lowered by our thoughts (this is called "biofeedback"), and thought-control techniques can control the emotions that cause us to blush. The fear of blushing can cause one to blush.

Instead of taking a couple of drinks to relax in a social situation, give yourself a stern order: Tell yourself firmly, "No more of this stupid blushing! I can handle this without embarrassment." And the chances are great that your body will hear your words and make them true.

Dear Abby: My husband (I'll call him John) is getting on in years, but he refuses to talk about funeral arrangements. He says he wants to donate all his organs to medical science. I think he has the idea that he will save on funeral expenses if he follows this procedure. But, Abby, when "science" is through with him, doesn't his family get what's left? I would like to get all these arrangements taken care of right now while we both have our heads on straight.

I have my plot bought and paid for because this is my second marriage and I am going to be buried next to my first husband in his family plot. But my present husband's burial troubles me.

Is it true that a person who donates his whole body to medical science gets a free burial? If you print this, please keep me anonymous. This is a small town, and I'd rather not have this known. Thank you. — Penny-Pincher's Wife

Dear Wife: When organs are donated, "what's left" is returned to the family. However, if John wishes to donate his entire body to medical science, he must preregister with the medical school nearest him.

For a list of medical schools, send a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: The Living Bank, P.O. Box 6725, Houston, Texas 77265.

Problems? Write to Abby. For a personal, unpublished reply, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Abby, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069.

Christmas Clothing Shoppers May Suffer From Sticker Shock

By Paul Farhi
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Shoppers searching for clothing bargains this holiday season are likely to find something else instead: sticker shock.

With the dollar falling, the cost of raw materials rising and inventories relatively lean, clothing prices could be up as much as 10 percent to 15 percent over last year, some retail analysts say.

The Labor Department appeared to confirm the dreary outlook for consumers Tuesday when it reported that apparel prices rose 1.8 percent in October, making it a key factor fueling the overall inflation rate. Clothing prices usually rise in September and October to reflect the introduction of fall and winter lines, but the October increase was sharper than economists had generally expected.

Although the opinion is not unanimous, some analysts say retailers should be able to avoid discounting their inventories through Christmas because many consumers, particularly women, have put off replacing their wardrobes for many months but may return to the stores now.

"If a shopper asks me for advice, I tell them, 'don't wait, buy it now,' " said Kurt Barnard, a retail industry consultant who publishes the trade newsletter Retail Marketing Report. "Chances are the items you like won't go on sale, and if they do, it probably won't be the right size or color."

Still, Barnard expects consumers to be conservative in their purchases, mostly because incomes haven't risen as sharply as clothing prices.

With so much of the world's clothing produced in the Far East and Europe, the depreciation of the dollar against foreign currencies since 1985 has increased the price of imported goods. Prices of Asian-made clothes have also risen since early 1987, when quotas were imposed on those goods. Retailers said the sharpest price increases are expected in tailored, natural-fabric lines, in part due to heavy buying of wool and cotton by the Soviet Union and China. For example, Stacy Dutton, an analyst with C.J. Lawrence, Morgan Grenfell in New York, said men's suit prices rose 8 percent to 10 percent this fall and should show further increases.

Jack Gubanc, vice president of merchandising for the 63-store Britches of Georgetown chain, said wholesale prices for some natural fabrics have risen 50 percent in the past year.

Higher prices won't necessarily translate into higher profits for retailers, unless sales volumes are up strongly. Carl Steidtmann, chief economist for Management Horizons, an Ohio retail consultant, said profits are likely to be up but largely because the fourth quarter of 1987 was dismal for many retailers.

Women Do Most Housework, Though Men Are Catching Up

By Randolph E. Schmid
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Men are wielding the mop and tending the stove more often than ever before yet still doing only half as much housework as women, a new study shows.

Women toil about two hours at home for every one hour of housework done by men, reports sociologist John P. Robinson in the December edition of American Demographics magazine.

Yet this represents significant progress in just 20 years, according to the study by Robinson, director of the Survey Research Center at the University of Maryland.

By comparison, in 1975 women spent three times as long as men on housework, and in 1965 the ratio was nearly six hours of housework for women for every hour worked by a man.

"Several important trends account for shifts in who does how much housework," Robinson reported in his study. These include declines in the share of households with children, a smaller share of married-couple households and increasing number of women in the paid work force.

Robinson compared the housework by analyzing studies of how people spend their time, done in 1965 and 1975 by the University of Michigan and in 1985 by his center.

The shift in the housework burden, he found, results from both an increase in the time spent on housework by men, and a decline in the time spent by women.

In 1985, Robinson found, men averaged 9.8 hours of housework weekly, while women put in 19.5 hours.

The 1975 study found men working 7.0 hours a week on home tasks compared with 21.7 hours for women.

And a decade earlier men spent 4.6 hours a week on housework, compared with 27.0 hours for women.

But despite the increasing male share of the load, men and women still tended to observe a traditional separation of tasks.

Women dominated in such areas as cooking, washing dishes, housecleaning, laundry and ironing. Men, on the other hand, were more likely to concentrate on household repairs and outdoor chores, while the burden of pet care, gardening and bill paying was shared.

Things have evened out somewhat, though, Robinson said.

For example, in 1965 some 98 percent of laundry and ironing was done by women, while by 1985 that was down to 88 percent. Women did 87 percent of cooking in 1965, and 77 percent in 1985.

On the other hand, men did only 32 percent of bill paying in 1965 but increased their share of 52 percent by 1985.

And men did 53 percent of the gardening and pet care in 1985, up from 33 percent two decades earlier.

Among the reasons for the change is the decline in the number of households with children, Robinson pointed out.

As any parent knows, children mean more cooking and cleaning and other housework, and the majority of that falls to mother.

Women with children under age 5 averaged 22.5 hours of housework weekly in 1985, compared with 19.9 hours for women with children over age 5 and 17.9 hours for childless women. All three figures are down from prior years.

Another ingredient is the simple fact that the share of households containing married couples has declined.

Married women do more housework than single ones.

"Twenty years ago, getting married meant that women doubled the time they spent on housework while men did about as much housework as before they married," Robinson reported. "Today, both married men and married women do about 40 percent more housework than unmarried men and women."

The studies show that getting married in 1965 increased a woman's housework time from 15.5 hours weekly to 31.6 hours. Men, on the other hand, eased their burden a bit, averaging 4.7 hours when single and only 4.5 hours after getting married.

By 1985, marriage increased the housework for women from 14.9 hours to 22.4 hours, while men worked 7.9 hours on housework when single and 11.1 hours after getting married.

Paid employment was also a major factor with more and more women entering the work force. However, in a finding Robinson termed surprising, women remaining at home cut their housework more than working ones over 20 years.

Vendors, reportedly selling lightbulbs and vitamin pills door-to-door in Pitt County to benefit disabled American veterans, are not representatives of the Disabled American Veterans, Thomas Herndon, commander of Pitt Chapter No. 37, said.

"We do not have such a program," he said in response to inquiries from potential buyers of the products.

Election Suit

CLINTON, N.C. (AP) — A group has sued the Clinton City Council and Clinton Board of Education charging the election system used by both boards cancels out blacks' voting strength and violates their right to participate in elections.

In a lawsuit filed in U.S. District Court in Raleigh Nov. 23, the group claimed the purpose and effect of the current election method is "to dilute, minimize and cancel out the voting strength of black citizens, and to deny or abridge the right of black citizens to vote on account of race or color."

The suit said these election methods were "adopted and are being maintained purposefully" to lessen blacks' ability to take part in the electoral system. It also said the election methods violate blacks' constitutional rights and their rights under the federal Voting Rights Act.

Meeting

Soviets will complete withdrawal by Feb. 15.

A U.S. official described the meeting as "substantive but not a negotiating session."

Gorbachev's meeting with Reagan in Reykjavik, Iceland, two years ago also was billed as being below summit level, but the two leaders ended up swapping major arms control proposals until talks broke down in a disagreement over the controversial U.S. plan to deploy a defense against Soviet missiles in space.

The Soviets as well as U.S. critics have charged the Strategic Defense Initiative threatens to expand the arms race to space.

Gorbachev is due to arrive in New York next Tuesday and has no appointments planned that day. On Wednesday, he will call on U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar and then address the General Assembly.

The lunch with Reagan and Bush will follow. It is the only U.S.-Soviet event planned during Gorbachev's visit.

Elaine Crispen, a spokeswoman for first lady Nancy Reagan, said there is a good chance Mrs. Reagan and Raisa Gorbachev also will meet during the visit. "Plans certainly indicate that it's a possibility," she said.

HOME FEDERAL SAVINGS
AND LOAN ASSOCIATION OF EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA
Serving Eastern North Carolina since 1906

A MESSAGE FROM YOUR LOCAL FINANCIAL INSTITUTION

Home Federal Savings and Loan Association of Eastern North Carolina is based in Greenville, North Carolina, and has branch offices in Edenton, Plymouth, Williamston and Bethel.

We are a mutually owned and independent company dedicated to the principles of thrift and homeownership. These two ideas have helped build our nation. Home Federal Savings has been in business since 1906 and we have seen a lot of changes, but some things remain the same. People still need a home and a safe place to keep their life savings. Home Federal has always operated and will continue to operate with these basic principles in mind. In today's deregulated marketplace, there are many players in the market with all sorts of gimmicks and "come ons". They are in the market for the short gain, not the long term. How are they investing your money? This is an important question.

Home Federal continues to invest directly in the local communities it serves through home mortgage financing activities. Through our expertise and knowledge of the area markets, we have built a strong, stable portfolio of mortgage loans. That is how your money works -- by helping your community and local economy grow. Home Federal has consistently provided an above average return to its depositors. We would like to thank our customers who have helped us grow steadily and profitably to over $100 million in assets.

Sincerely,

J. Larkin Little

Ferry Set For Final Year And Challenge

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Duke's Danny Ferry toyed with the idea of going hardship into the National Basketball Association last year, but he decided to return for his final year and last collegiate challenge.

Over the past three seasons, Duke, behind Ferry, has been one of the top collegiate basketball programs in the land.

"I remember him coming in as a freshman," said Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski. "To see where he's emerged makes me feel real good and real sad. In fact I was real sad last May when he was thinking of leaving. He was a lot closer than most people think about going to the NBA."

But Ferry's return has buoyed Blue Devil hopes for glory in 1988-89. Duke returns a number of key players off last year's 28-7 team, but Ferry is the focal point and a major reason why the team garnered the number-one preseason ranking.

Presently, the Blue Devils are 2-0 heading into tonight's contest against East Carolina.

"We don't duck it," Ferry said of the top ranking. "We think we can be a good team. But there are a lot of other teams that can also be good teams. We have the talent to be one of the better teams in the country, I think.

"But at the same time, if we don't get the chemistry together and mesh together and stay consistent, then we're not. That's our main goal, just to get that together. If we do that, the rest of the stuff will take care of itself."

Ferry has been a starter since his first year at Duke, when the Blue Devils advanced to the final four before falling to Louisville in the finals.

Last year, Ferry earned Atlantic Coast Conference Player of The Year honors and went on to lead the Blue Devils back to the final four where they fell to eventual national champion Kansas.

Ferry averaged 19.1 points per game last year, tops in the ACC. This year, he is averaging 20.5 points per game to again lead the team. Although he's still the center of Duke's offense this year, he feels the team will be more diversified.

"My role might change a little bit this year," he said. "I'm not really sure because we have a lot of people who are capable of scoring this year. I might score less or I might end up scoring more. It's going to be a game-by-game thing to see how people develop. My role will be similar though. I'll do all different things.

"That's the way my role has been since I've been at Duke. My freshman year, they didn't need a whole lot. So I was a passer and rebounder. My sophomore year, they needed a little more of everything so I tried to do a little more. Last year, we needed some more scoring. We'll see this year."

That versatility, year to year, has made Ferry both an appealing prospect to the professional ranks and a valuable commodity to Krzyzewski.

"That's been the funnest thing for me is the fact that I feel I have improved a lot every year," Ferry said. "I think that is due in big part due to the coaching staff. They studied my game a whole lot and it's helped me out a whole lot, not just the mechanics of my game, but the mental part.

"That's been the most exciting thing for me. If you look at my numbers, every year there's been improvement. I think there is going to be improvement this year, but I don't know if you are going to be able to tell by the numbers. I think

East Carolina's Pirates take to the road for the first time tonight as they invade Cameron Indoor Stadium in Durham to take on the top-ranked Duke Blue Devils.

Tipoff is scheduled for 7:30 p.m.

The contest is the second part of an ECU-Duke doubleheaders. The Lady Pirates take their 1-1 record into a 5 p.m. battle with the Lady Devils, as they play their third game away from Minges Coliseum. Their two previous games, a loss to Stetson and a win over South Carolina State, were on a neutral court in the Appalachian State Invitational Tournament at Boone.

Duke and ECU both sport 2-0 records.

Walsh Leads Choices

All-South Team Has 2 From ECU

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Steve Walsh, who has posted a 21-1 record as a starting quarterback at Miami, was one of eight Hurricanes named today to The Associated Press All-South Independent football team for 1988.

Walsh, who has a regular season game remaining against Brigham Young on Saturday, already owns the school record for touchdown passes in a season at 28.

The team was chosen by a panel of sports writers and sportscasters who also participate in The AP's Top Twenty poll.

East Carolina had only two player selected, both on the second team. Tim James was named as a running back on offense and Anthony Thompson was picked as a linebacker on defense.

The team was dominated by the second-ranked Hurricanes and fourth-ranked Florida State, which had five players on the first unit.

Other Hurricanes on the team were wide receiver Andre Brown, tight end Rob Chudzinski, tackle John O'Neill, running back Cleveland Gary, defensive end Bill Hawkins, linebacker Maurice Crum and defensive back Bubba McDowell.

Defensive back Deion Sanders, the nation's leader in punt returns with a 15.2 average, heads the FSU contingent that also included wide receiver Terry Anthony, tackle Pat Tomberlin, guard Jason Kuipers and middle guard Odell Haggins.

Others named to the offensive unit were guard Reid Bennett of Memphis State, center Randy Harwell of South Carolina, running back Deon Booker of Louisville and place kicker Collin Mackie of South Carolina.

The defensive unit also included end Chris Gannon of Southwestern Louisiana, tackle Horacio Moronta of Virginia Tech, linebackers Mark Sander of Louisville and Patrick Hinton of South Carolina, defensive backs Ron Rabune of South Carolina and Eddie Moore of Memphis State and punter Scott Bryant of Southern Mississippi.

FSU's Tomberlin and Sanders were the only repeaters, gaining berths on the All-South first team for the third year in a row. Tomberlin also made the All-South second team in his freshman season.

Jimmy Johnson, who steered Miami to the national championship last season, was a solid choice for Coach of the Year, but several others received votes — Curly Hallman of Southern Mississippi, Howard Schnellenberger of Louisville and Bobby Bowden of FSU.

Walsh completed 213 of 354 passes for 2,878 yards in his first 10 games.

Booker was the leading rusher among the independents with 1,011 yards and he also caught 41 passes for 391 yards and scored 12 touchdowns overall.

Gary rushed for 442 yards and five touchdowns and had 56 catches for 649 yards and four more scores.

Miami's Brown had 37 catches for 615 yards and eight touchdowns and Chudzinski 30 catches for 388 yards and five scores. FSU's Anthony caught 32 passes for 550 yards and eight touchdowns.

Butkus Award Winner Derrick Thomas in action

Thomas Earns Award

Tide Linebacker Is Butkus Choice

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ORLANDO, Fla. — Alabama's Derrick Thomas, winner of the Butkus Award as the nation's outstanding college linebacker, would like to continue to play in the tradition of the man for whom the award is named.

"He intimidated offenses, and I feel I can do that, too," the 6-foot-4, 220-pound Crimson Tide linebacker said Tuesday of Dick Butkus, a former All-American and All-Pro.

Thomas won the award in voting by a 12-member panel which named him as the fourth winner of the award. Thomas, a senior looking to go high in the NFL draft, nosed out namesake Broderick Thomas of Nebraska by two votes.

Alabama Coach Bill Curry called Derrick Thomas "one of the greatest in Alabama history."

Thomas, with 22 quarterback sacks, was recruited for Alabama by former Coach Ray Perkins, who now heads the NFL's Tampa Bay Bucs.

Perkins told reporters Monday he would like to get Thomas in the draft.

"I wouldn't mind" playing for the Bucs, Thomas told reporters in a telephone conference call from the school on Tuesday.

But if he had his choice, he said, he would rather play for the Los Angeles Raiders "because of the way they are on and off the field, their lifestyle in general."

Thomas said he had met Broderick Thomas and they had joked about who would win the award, but he said he believed Broderick would be a hard man to beat in the balloting.

Mike Stonebreaker of Notre Dame was third in the balloting, followed by Keith DeLong of Tennessee and Percy Snow of Michigan State.

ECU Has Contacted Several Coaches

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

While East Carolina officials are remaining mum on who they are talking to about the head football coaching position, contacts have been made with a number of candidates.

A number of potential candidates have been reported, but ECU athletic director Dave Hart has said all along that the school would release no names of people that have been contacted.

University of Miami offensive coordinator Gary Stevens said he is still interested in the position but has not been formally interviewed by ECU officials.

"We've had talks, but I'm wrapped up in the season and can't get into it," Stevens said in a phone interview Tuesday. "We've just had preliminary talks. Sure I'm intersted. It's a nice place, but we've got a game to go and I can't get caught up in it. Hopefully after the seoson the position will still be available."

Stevens said he hoped to talk to ECU officials after the Hurricanes conclude their season Saturday against Brigham Young. He said he would have more time to evaluate the situation during the break between the regular season's end and the Hurricanes' Jan. 2 Orange Bowl game against Nebraska.

Stevens, though, said nothing is definite.

"I don't know yet," he said. "We haven't made that committment."

William and Mary coach Jimmye Laycock said he too has been in contact with ECU officials.

A 1970 graduate of William and Mary, Laycock posts a career mark if 49-50-1. His teams have had a reputation for playing tough against Division I-A opponents throughout his tenure.

He reportedly interviewed with ECU last week and is interested in the position.

"I'm not interested in making any discussion (statement)," Laycock said in a phone interview Monday. "I have talked with them, but that's as far as I'd like to go with it. I've talked with them and that's what it is as of this point."

Another candidate is Marshall's George Chaump, who is 27-10-0 during his tenure in charge of the Thundering Herd. He has a career record of 114-36-2.

He reportedly interviewed with the committee last week, but refused to comment on the situation when contacted by phone earlier this week.

According to reports from the Huntington (W.V.) Herald Dispatch, Chaump is also under consideration for the Missouri job.

His team is 11-1 this season and presently playing in the NCAA Division I-AA playoffs.

Two other candidates for the position, South Carolina offensive coordinator Al Groh, a former Wake Forest coach, and Georgia defensive coordinator Bill Lewis were not in their office Wednesday. According to secretaries at both schools, Lewis and Groh were on the road recruiting and were not expected in their offices.

Jags Roll By 'Skins To Open Hoop Year

FARMVILLE — Farmville's season-opening 92-39 romp over Roanoke Tuesday night might have been an offensive basketball showcase, but Jaguar coach Mike Terrell felt defense was just as big a catalyst.

"I thought we played excellent on defense," he said. "Our goal was to prevent them from doing what they like to do. We were playing denial defense. Our guards did a super job."

George Burnette and Morris Foreman kept the defensive pressure on Roanoke's ballhandlers all night and came up with a number of steals that led to easy baskets and allowed the Jaguars to put the game away in the second quarter.

With Farmville leading 20-19, William Carr hit a jumper to make it 22-19. Foreman then followed Burnette on a fast break and tipped in his miss to make it 24-19. Carr added two free throws to move the lead to 26-19.

Chris Hunter came off the bench and hit a key basket to make it 28-19. A turnover led to a Foreman layup. Melvin Fizzle came up with a steal which led to a free throw by Jarvis Lang. Hunter and Foreman then added consecutive jumpers to move the lead to 35-23 with just over two minutes left in the half. By halftime, the Jaguars led 47-24.

"We came within two or three points and from there everything went sour," said Roanoke coach Clarence Atkinson. "We had turnovers. They started breaking and going in for layups. If it wasn't layups they were getting points in the paint and that makes all the difference in the world."

Burnette led Farmville with 18 points. Carr and reserve Ervin Forbes added 11 apiece while Foreman and Lang had 10 points.

"I thought our guards did a heck of a job," Terrell said. "The tend to know when to pass it and when to keep it."

The game got ugly in the second half when Farmville outscored the Redskins, 45-15.

Lang, a 6-6 junior center is Farmville's leading returning scorer. He ended up with 10 points but was the focal point of the Redskins' defensive effort.

"Everytime the ball went inside, they had two guys in his face," Terrell said. "He's going to see that this year. Last year, the emphasis was not on stopping him. This year it will. Tonight, he might have gotten a little frustrated with himself."

Farmville returns to action Friday at D.H. Conley.

In the girls' game, Farmville edged Roanoke, 59-58, as Lady Redskin guard Vicky Teel missed a free throw that would have tied the game

Charlotte Avoids Getting Burned

By Tom Foreman Jr.

CHARLOTTE — They said it was just another night, another game. Deep down, however, none of the Charlotte Hornets would have liked to face today if they had been the first victim of the winless Miami Heat.

"This was a win, the same as a win against anybody," Charlotte coach Dick Harter said of his team's third victory in 13 games, a 99-84 triumph over the Heat. "We need all the wins we can get, although I wouldn't have liked to read the papers in the morning and seen where they ended their losing streak."

Tim Kempton said the Hornets were interested in winning, not necessarily beating the Heat, who fell to 0-11.

"We felt if we came out and played hard and played to our capabilities, we would win the game," Kempton said.

Miami was close, having led midway through the second quarter and making a serious run at ending its early-season futility in the fourth period. But one of the key players in the battle of the NBA babies stepped forward and doused the Heat's flickering flame of hope.

Rex Chapman, Charlotte's first pick in last spring's draft, highlighted a fourth-period run. He scored five points in a 9-0 spurt to lead Charlotte out of a 77-76 nailbiter into an 86-76 cushion Miami couldn't overcome.

"I get more and more comfortable every game. I listen to the older guys and that helps me out," said Chapman, who had a rookie-season high of 22 points.

"Coming in cold off the bench is tough and it takes me a few minutes to get going," he said. "I'm still not shooting as well as I'd like. I'm missing easy shots."

If his eye is off, then Chapman's timing has made up for the deficiency right now. Charlotte trailed 29-26 after Dwayne Washington's 15-foot lean-in jumper with 7:50 left before halftime. Chapman retaliated, starting an 11-0 run and scoring nine points in the burst to give Charlotte a 37-29 lead with 5:50 left in the second quarter.

Washington's layup with 7:09 left to play brought Miami within 77-76 after it had trailed by as muny as 14 points in the third quarter. There was Chapman again, however. He led a 9-0 run with five points, burning the Heat once again.

"We played hard enough to stop their runs. That was the key to our victory," Harter said. "We need to do this in all of our games."

Chapman has chosen to ignore the critics who said he wasn't ready to play in the NBA. He also chose to turn his back on comparisons be-

Baker Recovering From Surgery

Former East Carolina University football coach Art Baker underwent gall bladder surgery at Pitt Memorial Hospital on Monday afternoon.

Baker had suffered from gall bladder problems since before the start of this past season, but elected to wait until the end of the season to have the surgery.

Baker said that he is feeling better now, but is still sore from the surgery.

He is expected to leave the hospital either Thursday or Friday, according to his wife, Edie.

Baker also confirmed that he will accept a post with the University of South Carolina. "They should be making an announcement of it sometime this week," he said. Baker will serve as an associate athletic director with USC, in charge of the Gamecock Club, the school's athletic fund-raising arm. The Bakers expect to move back to South Carolina sometime around mid-December, Mrs. Baker said.

South Carolina was to make the announcement this afternoon, according to the Associated Press.

Chappell Named EPC's Top Coach

Ayden-Grifton's B.T. Chappell, who led the Chargers to an undefeated conference season, was named coach of the year in the Eastern Plains Conference.

Chappell's team went 11-2 this season and advanced to the Eastern 2-A Semifinals, before falling to Hertford County 28-14.

The Chargers landed six players on the All-Conference team in tackle Terry Artis, guard James Collins, tackle George Fuller, Tackle Grod Gilbert, fullback Aaron Harper and halfback Tony Reeves.

North Pitt landed five players on the team in guard Kevin Briley, running back Michael Daniels, quarterback Billy Hardison, defensive tackle Tony Hopkins and guard Danny Wilkins.

Farmville's Brent Ellis, running back Darryl Wilkes and linebacker Scott Gardner were also chosen to the team.

Greene Central landed four players on the team, led by fullback-linebacker Anthony Dupree along with tackle Russell Gorham, quarterback Kris Radford and receiver Wes Sugg.

A.G. Cox Outwrestles Williamston

WILLIAMSTON — A.G. Cox Middle School of Winterville recorded a 60-24 wrestling victory over Williamston Tuesday.

Pins were recorded by Torrence Smith, John Howery, Shontiel Ruffin and Neal Woolard for Cox, while decision were won by Percy Rogers and Matt Leggett. Cox added five more wins on forfeits.

The two teams meet again today at Winterville.

Davidson Football May Go To Division III

DAVIDSON (AP) — Two Davidson College board of trustees committees have recommended realignment of the school's football program to NCAA Division III beginning with the 1989 season.

The action requires approval of the full board. A special meeting of the board is expected to take place within two weeks.

"We hope that this will be a good and, if not final, long-lasting solution to football at Davidson College," said Kit Morris, Davidson's athletic director.

The Executive Committee and Athletics Policy Committee cited the escalating cost of Division I football as one reason for the recommendation.

"The savings (of switching to Division III status) are not insignificant," Morris said. "You have to look at the escalating costs of Division I football these days."

Football players currently receiving financial aid will see their aid restructured but not taken away. Morris said he expected some players to transfer, but would not speculate on a number.

Morris also said that upon approval by the full board, Davidson would seek to drop its ties to the Colonial League, cancel its current 1989 schedule completely and attempt to reschedule teams "on a more regional basis" in Division III.

Currently, Guilford and Methodist are the only Division III football-playing members in North Carolina. Four Virginia schools — Randolph-Macon, Hampden-Syndey, Washington and Lee, and Emory and Henry — participate on the Division III level.

Under the recommendation, the college would be able to strengthen the competitiveness of Davidson's other sports teams, the school said in a prepared statement. The overall athletic budget would remain intact.

Davidson has fielded football teams since 1896, except for 1944 and 1945. Since 1985 the school has participated in the Colonial League, which comprises schools committed to awarding football scholarships based on need only.

By the mid 1970s, all financial aid at Davidson was awarded to football participants on the basis of demonstrated need. To date, Davidson remains the only Division I school in its region with such a policy, according to a prepared statement from school officials.

Davidson has won only two games in four seasons under Coach Vic Gatto, combining for a record of 2-39. The Wildcats were 0-10 in 1988.

The Trustees Athletics Policy met with members of the football team, Gatto, Wildcat Club President William Rikard, faculty athletics representataive J.B. Stroud and faculty advisory council on intercollegiate athletics chairman Peter Krentz, before making its recommendation.

Bowden Not Looking For A Rout

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Florida State Coach Bobby Bowden, looking ahead to a Sugar Bowl showdown with seventh-ranked Auburn, said Tuesday he doesn't expect his Seminoles to manhandle the Tigers like they did last year.

"The big thing last year was we caught them between Florida and Georgia," Bowden said after addressing the Montgomery Quarterback Club. "We caught them at an ideal time."

Last year, Auburn played Florida State the week after a 29-6 victory over Florida, with a game against Georgia the following week. The result was a 34-6 Seminole rout which knocked Auburn out of the national championship race.

Auburn, co-champion of the Southeastern Conference, will have more time to prepare for Florida State this time.

The Tigers are returning to the Sugar Bowl for the second consecutive year as the SEC representative and will face Florida State in the Jan. 2 game.

"They're probably as good as anybody in the country," Bowden said.

Florida State has played Auburn 15 times over the years and has won only twice. The game has traditionally been high scoring, but Auburn is the nation's stingiest defensive team this year, allowing about a touchdown per game.

Bowden noted that fact — "They're the best defensive team I've seen this year" — but he seems to be more concerned about the Tigers' offense, which couldn't do anything against FSU last season.

"They've got a different brand of offense than they had last year," he said. "They're two dimensional. They can run and throw the football."

As for Bowden's team, he said it's been a "funny year."

The Seminoles were blown out by Miami 31-0 in the season opener, then reeled off 10 consecutive victories to finish the season ranked fourth in the nation.

Late Free Throw Lifts Rose In OT

FAYETTEVILLE — Paul Powers hit a free throw with two seconds left in overtime to lift Rose to a 54-53 win over Fayetteville Terry Sanford Tuesday in a high school basketball game.

Powers, a 6-8 senior center, led the Rampants with 24 points. He missed the first free throw with two seconds left in the extra period but hit the second to win the game.

Terry Sanford tied the game at 51 at the end of regulartion when Tony Council hit a shot from the baseline with 15 seconds remaining.

Rose had a final shot in regulation, but couldn't convert.

Rose edged out to a 13-10 lead at the end of the first quarter, but Powers scored seven points in the second quarter to help Rose to a 29-23 lead at the half.

James Teel added 14 points for the Rampants, 1-0 on the year. Rose returns to action Friday at home against Eastern Wayne.

Kuykendall Lifts Rampettes To Win

FAYETTEVILLE — Rose High School's Sharon Kuykendall hit a basket with three seconds left to lift the Rampettes to a 47-45 basketball victory over Terry Sanford in the opening game of the season Tuesday night.

The two teams battled through an even first quarter, but Rose then went on a 14-4 tear to open up a lead in the second period. Rose finished off the quarter at 19-9 to take a 29-19 halftime lead.

Terry Sanford clipped two off that in the third period but still trailed, 40-32. The Lady Bulldogs continued their rally in the final quarter when both Tina Smith and Jenny Stoneham went to the bench in foul trouble for Rose, and the Rampette offense stalled. Sanford finally drew even with 22 seconds left at 45-45, but Kuykendall hit a 15-footer with three seconds to play to give Rose the win.

Stoneham led Rose with 14 while Kuykendall and Angie Mills each had 10. Reece led Sanford with 16 while King had 13.

Charlotte Hopes For 1994 NCAA Final 4

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Charlotte's bid for the 1994 Final Four of the NCAA tournament gets its first test today as the Division I basketball committee narrows its list of applicants.

The nine-member committee, wrapping up a three-day meeting in Denver, will select an undetermined number of arenas to make presentations in July. A final decision will be made at that time.

"Obviously, I'm anxious to hear something," said Steve Camp, managing director of the Charlotte Coliseum. "I don't know how they'll get the word out once they decide.

"We had our application in a few days before their (Nov. 18) deadline. We sent everything we had over to the Charlotte Convention and Visitors Bureau, and the bureau put together the hotel information and sent everything on."

Camp said he did not know how many arenas had applied for the 1994 event, the next one available, nor how many would be invited to the committee's summer meeting.

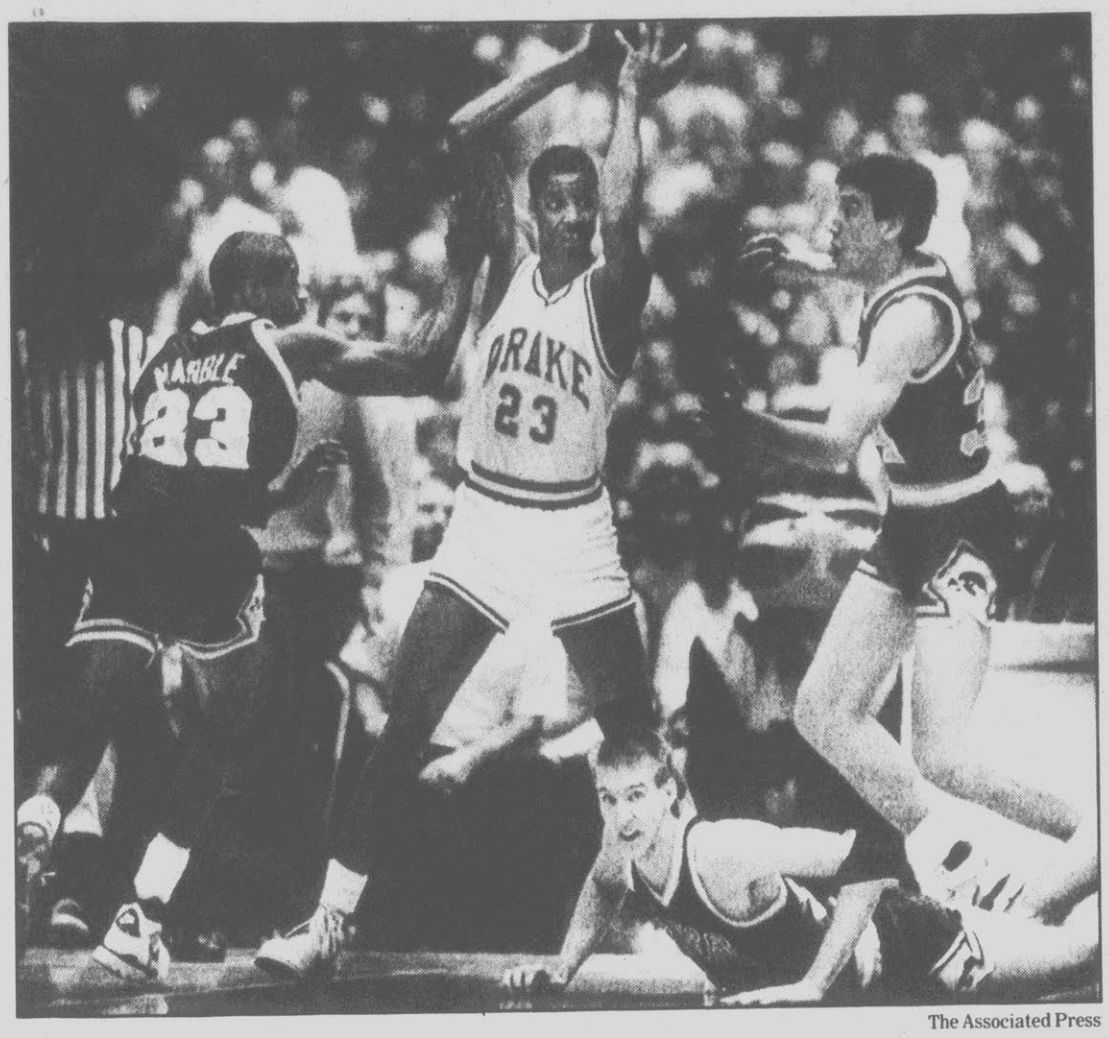
Iowa Drills Drake For 10th Time



The Associated Press

Drake's Alessandro Donaldson (23) looks for help against Iowa's Hawkeye defense

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

If you're heading on the road, you might as well start out against a team that hasn't won anywhere in eight games.

Make that nine.

Sixth-ranked Iowa had little trouble with in-state rival Drake, storming to a 96-72 victory Tuesday night. Using full-court pressure and the power of Ed Horton and Matt Bullard underneath, the Hawkeyes beat Drake for the 10th straight time.

B.J. Armstrong scored 20 of his 25 points in the first half. Horton added 19 points.

But it was the defense, which forced 22 turnovers, that made the big difference.

"I don't know how you can get much better than that," Coach Tom Davis said of the first half, in which the Hawkeyes outrebounded the Bulldogs 44-27 and forced 16 turnovers. "How much of that was Drake and how much was us, I'm still not sure myself. I did not expect that our press would be as productive as it was."

Roy Marble had 14 points for Iowa, Bullard scored 13 and freshman reserve James Moses 12. Horton grabbed nine rebounds, while Bullard and Marble each had seven.

"We looked calmer out there," Davis said. "We looked a little more mature. Maybe we just play a little better on the road."

Terrell Jackson led Drake with 19 points, 15 in the second half. Sam Roark scored 17 of his 18 points in the first half and Eric Berger added 17.

In other games involving ranked teams, it was No. 7 Illinois 86, Metro State 55, and No. 14 Florida State 100, Florida International 75.

No. 7 Illinois 86, Metro State 55

Just who is Metro State? It's a Division II school from Denver whose coach, Bob Hull, used to work for Lou Henson at Illinois.

So Henson invited his former assistant and the Roadrunners were nice guests. Four of the Illini were in double figures, led by Nick Anderson with 15 points.

"We didn't do much to hold up the price of small colleges," Hull said. "It was a good experience for me as a coach and for our team to play before a crowd like this."

No. 14 Florida State 100, Florida International 75

The Seminoles also spread the wealth with five players in double figures. Tony Dawson scored 27 points, George McCloud and Tharon Mayes added 17 each, Irving Thomas chipped in with 11 and Tat Hunter had 10 points and 14 rebounds.

Florida International puled within 66-52 early in the second half before Dawson's nine-point burst in a 14-0 Florida State run clinched it.

"We played well only in spurts tonight, but we're 2-0 and that where we wanted to be," Florida State coach Pat Kennedy said.

Florida State has averaged 116.5 points in its two games.

UNRANKED

As Larry Bird watched from the sidelines, Eddie Bird scored 27 points in Indiana State's 70-66 defeat of Texas Wesleyan at Terre Haute, Ind.

Larry Bird, sidelined for several months after surgery on both heels, signed autographs before and after the game. He sat in a reserved section on the court as he watched his alma mater play in Hulman Center for first time since he was an All-American there. He wore walking casts on both feet.

"They say I'll have to wear them about six weeks," he said of the casts.

At Minneapolis, freshman Bob Martin ignited a 19-6 rally to end the first half as Minnesota took charge for a 97-64 victory over Youngstown State. Kevin Lynch added seven of his 14 points during the spurt.

Minnesota dedicated the game to forward Richard Coffey, whose father Thomas died Sunday. Coffey, who will attend the funeral Thursday, had eight points and nine rebounds. He led the Big Ten in rebounding last year.

Youngstown, 0-2, has lost 15 straight.

At Oxford, Ohio, the Indiana Hoosiers took Miami, Ohio 87-70 as Jay Edwards had 28 points and seven rebounds. Indiana led by three at halftime, then outscored Miami 22-6. Edwards had 11 points in the streak.

At West Lafayette, Ind., another Big Ten winner was Purdue. Jimmy Oliver scored 18 points and Melvin McCants added 17 as the Boilermakers outclassed Long Beach State 100-53. Purdue forced 22 turnovers and made eight steals.

At Auburn, Ala., the Tigers held off Georgia State 74-70 as Derrick Dennison scored 19 points and Kirt Hankton had six in the final three minutes. Hankton converted a three-point play with one second remaining to seal the victory after he put Auburn ahead for good with 3:34 left on another three-point play.

At Waco, Texas, San Diego State routed Baylor 83-58. Sam Johnson scored 16 points for the visitors, 2-0, who dropped Baylor to 0-3. It was the first regular-season game Baylor played in the new, 10,084-seat Ferrell Center.

At Hanover, N.H., Dartmouth, of the Ivy League, took Boston College, of the Big East, 80-74, with Jim Barton scoring 26 of his 36 points in the second half. Dartmouth, down 41-36 at the half, fell behind by 10 points in the second half before Barton went on his scoring rampage. He added eight rebounds for the Green.

Also, Troy Bostic scored off a missed shot by teammate Anthony Cooley with two seconds remaining, lifting James Madison to a 94-92 victory over VMI.

Hornets Topple Heat

tween him and Miami's first-round draft pick, Rony Seikaly.

"Seikaly's a great player, but just had a bad night," Chapman said.

Charlotte's fourth sellout crowd of 23,388 booed Seikaly during the team introductions, when he approached the scorer's table and every time he touched the ball. It was retribution for his comments last spring in which he said he didn't want to play for Charlotte.

"This crowd really didn't bother me because I'm used to playing in front of big crowds," Seikaly said. "This is a beautiful place with a great atmosphere and super fans."

Robert Reid scored 17 points, Kurt Rambis had 13 in three quarters and Michael Holton finished with 10 for the Hornets, who won by their biggest margin this season. Kelly Tripucka, the Hornets' leading scorer, sat out the game with a strained hamstring.

Washington scored a career-high 18 points for Miami. Grant Long had 14 points, Pat Cummings scored 13 and Rory Sparrow had 10.

Celtics 100, Nets 93

After a 1-4 start, Boston has won six of its last nine, pulling to .500 Tuesday night with a 100-93 victory over the New Jersey Nets.

Robert Parish scored 21 points and grabbed 14 rebounds for Boston, which shot almost 68 percent in the first half.

The Celtics have had 61 consecutive non-losing months. The streak will be in jeopardy tonight when the teams met again in Boston Garden.

Boston made 27 of 40 shots in the opening 24 minutes and built a 61-45 edge. The Celtics led 69-50 with 9:25 to go, but then came the turnovers. Boston made 14 in the second half.

New Jersey pulled to 93-92 on a jump hook by Buck Williams with 4:03 left. The Nets missed a chance to tie when Kevin Williams was wild on a 3-pointer with 1:12 remaining and Boston then scored the final four points.

Bucks 119, Trail Blazers 114

Terry Cummings scored 29 points and Sidney Moncrief 23. Jerome Kersey scored 30 points for Portland before fouling out with nine seconds left. Kevin Duckworth added 29 for the Trail Blazers.

Milwaukee outscored Portland 41-23 in the second quarter and took a 66-49 halftime lead. The Bucks were ahead 92-81 after three quarters.

SuperSonics 109, Jazz 102

Jerry Reynolds scored eight of his 25 points during a 13-0 run at the end of the third quarter. With Seattle leading 84-78, Reynolds started the game-breaking run with two free throws and added a jumper, dunk and two more free throws as the Sonics built a 97-78 lead.

Dale Ellis scored 31 points for Seattle. Karl Malone scored 26 for Utah.

Pacers 107, Pistons 98

John Long scored 15 of his 18 points in the second half for the Pacers, who won for the second time in 13 games this season.

Indiana was 27-for-28 from the foul line, including 8-for-9 in the closing minutes.

After the Pistons took a 75-64 lead late in the third quarter, Long scored 11 consecutive points for the Pacers in an 11-1 run.

Bill Laimbeer scored 22 points for Detroit.

Warriors 109, Bulls 99

Chris Mullin scored 29 points, including 13 as Golden State erased a 10-point deficit in the third quarter and the Warriors snapped a four-game losing streak.

Michael Jordan had 26 points but failed to lead Chicago in scoring for the first time in 91 games. Brad Sellers scored 32 points for the Bulls, who lost their third straight.

Mullin had five of his eight assists in the third quarter as the Warriors, trailing 68-60, went on a 26-10 run in the final seven minutes.

Hawks 120, Spurs 104

John Battle scored seven points during a 15-2 run in the second quarter. His dunk put Atlanta ahead to stay at 25-23 with 2:42 left in the first period.

Battle capped the second-quarter spurt with a 3-pointer that gave the Hawks a 51-34 lead with 6:44 left in the half.

Suns 124, Rockets 107

Armon Gilliam scored a career-high 35 points and the Suns overcame a 13-point second-quarter deficit and took a 70-61 halftime lead.

Tom Chambers added 26 points and Mark West grabbed 13 rebounds for the Suns. Kevin Johnson had 18 points and 13 assists for Phoenix.

Trailing 35-22 with 1:47 left in the first quarter, Phoenix went on an 18-4 run, taking the lead with 10:58 left in the second quarter on Eddie Johnson's three-point play. Johnson had seven points during the run. Phoenix took the lead for good at 48-47 on Gilliam's eight-foot turnaround jumper with 8:31 left in the half.

Nuggets 139, Knicks 119

Alex English scored a season-high 41 points and Fat Lever scored 17 points, had 13 rebounds and 12 assists.

Denver led 65-64 at halftime and opened the third quarter with a 16-0 run, led by six points from Wayne Cooper.

Michael Adams scored 22 points for Denver, including three 3-pointers that extended his record NBA streak to 56 games. Patrick Ewing scored 24 points for New York.

Kings 123, Clippers 95

LaSalle Thompson scored 18 points and grabbed 11 rebounds and Kenny Smith and Harold Pressley scored 17 points each.

Eight Sacramento players reached double figures. Derek Smith scored 14, Ed Pickney, Jim Peterson and Joe Kleine 12 each and Ricky Berry 10.

Reggie Williams scored 19 points for the Clippers. Grant Gondrezick scored 17, Benoit Benjamin 13 and Danny Manning 12 with nine rebounds.

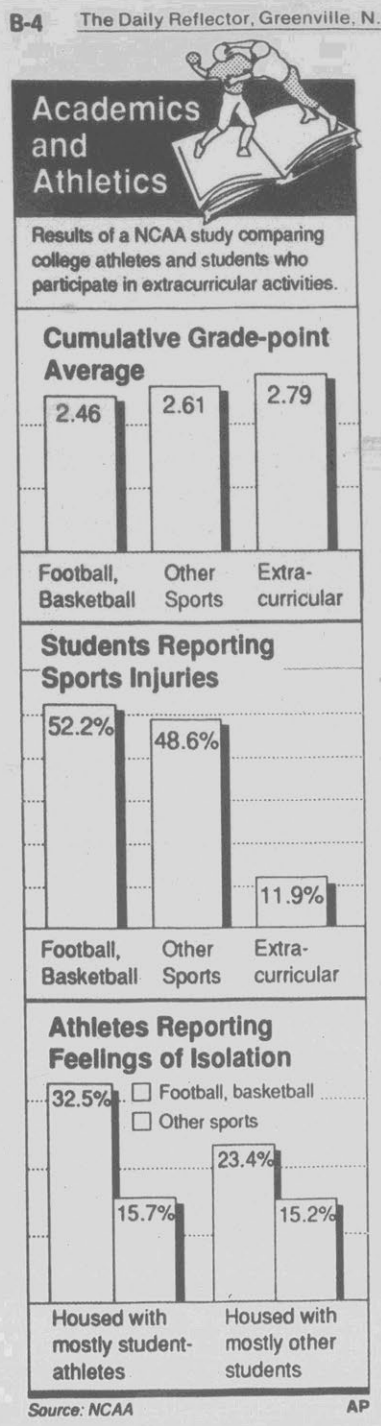
Athletes Lacking Time And Money



THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — College football and basketball players are lacking in both time and money compared to other students and do not perform as well academically as other athletes, according to a new study.

The study, commissioned by the NCAA Presidents Commission at the cost of $1.75 million, determined that most college football and basketball players devote more time to atletics than academics. Also, a majority of those athletes claim to have less money for personal expenses than other students.

"We'll be looking at the results to determine what steps the NCAA and other institutions might take in the future to address some of the findings," said Martin Massengale, chairman of the NCAA Presidents Commission, adding that the commission would hold a forum at the annual meetings in January to discuss the results.

"The main thing is, what can we do to make life more enriched or fuller for the student athlete, and how can we help them manage their time more effectively?" Massingale said. "We may need to look at spending resources on time management, because their time is obviously limited."

The study, released on Tuesday, was based on interviews with 4,083 college athletes and students who participate in extracurricular activities such as band or writing for the student newspaper.

"I do not believe there are any great surprises in these results," Massengale said. "But they will provide data for us to use in considering policy issues for many years into the future."

According to the report, college football and basketball players spend 30 hours a week practicing and playing in games when their sport is in season. In contrast, the average player uses 12 hours to study and 14 hours attending classes, and misses about two classes per week.

Even during the offseason, college athletes continue to spend more time in their sports than they do either preparing for or attending class, according to the survey. And it was learned that there are no differences in the average number of hours per week that freshmen redshirts spend in their sports as compared to freshmen athletes who compete.

The survey found that college athletes, especially football and basketball players, find it harder to get the grades they are capable of getting. On a four-point scale, the average college grade-point average for football and basketball players is 2.46, for other college athletes it is 2.61 and for extracurricular students 2.79.

Concerning financial aid, student-athletes report having less money each month after tutition and expenses are paid than do the extracurricular students. On the average, football and basketball players have about $82 after expenses each month, compared to $100 for athletes in other sports and $114 for extracurricular students.

The study found that basketball and football players who live in housing composed mostly of student-athletes are more likely to report frequent or occasional feelings of isolation than those who live in housing with non-athletes.

Among football and basketball players, 20 percent reported incidents of physical abuse and 50 percent reported incidents of mental abuse. Only 10 percent of those athletes in other sports reported physical abuse and 39 percent said they had been mentally abused.

There were varied conclusions in the topic of drug availability. Thirty-nine percent of the football and basketball players and nearly half the other college athletes reported that being in sports made it easier to avoid drugs. However, 12 percent of the football and basketball players said being an athlete made it harder to avoid drugs.

The survey covered 42 NCAA Division I schools and was conducted by the American Institutes for Research from March through July of this year.

"It is probably the most extensive research effort undertaken by the NCAA," claimed Dick Shultz, executive director of the NCAA.

A second phase of the study, centering upon black and women athletes, will be released in the spring.

Celtics Non-Losing Month Streak Is Now In Jeopardy

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The Boston Celtics aren't concerned that their nine-year streak of non-losing months is in jeopardy.

What they consider important is maintaining the consistency it took to win three NBA championships in the 1980s and play 60 consecutive months without a losing record.

"The streak is not a top priority for us with all the things that have happened that have been disruptive," Coach Jimmy Rodgers said after the Celtics improved their record to 7-7 in November with a 100-93 victory over New Jersey on Tuesday night.

The most disruptive thing to happen to the Celtics, of course, is the loss of superstar forward Larry Bird for three to four months following surgery on Nov. 19 for bone spurs in both heels.

It's no coincidence that the 60-month streak started when Bird started playing for the Celtics in October 1979.

The Milwaukee Bucks had a 52-month winning streak that started with Sidney Moncrief's rookie season in 1980. When he was injured and his teammates no longer could compensate for the absence of his skill and leadership, the streak ended last January.

But Bird's injury is not the only reason the Celtics are struggling — in fact, they were 2-4 with him in the lineup.

Guards Danny Ainge and Dennis Johnson also have missed games with injuries and the backups have not been up to the standard of three champions and a 60-month winning streak, which will stretch to 61 tonight if the Celtics can beat the Nets again, this time at Boston Garden.

Johnson, who missed Tuesday night's game with a strained Achilles tendon, said the team is aware of the streak but isn't worried about it.

"It's been mentioned a few times, but when we've had so many injuries, it's hard to have that kind of consistency," Johnson said. "That streak says a lot about how the team has been at or near the top for many years. But we can continue to have positive months even without Larry."

Rodgers said the Celtics' young players — Reggie Lewis, Brad Lohaus and rookie Brian Shaw — who have to play well for the team to win, weren't around for most of the months that built the streak. But he has to focus on them to keep it going.

"It's an incredible stretch, but we're not zeroed in on it," Rodgers said. "We have some young players who need positive experiences like winning on the road. We're not rebuilding here, we're remodeling. We're trying to get over the hump without Larry. This was a good road win for us."

Ainge said the Celtics obviously aren't the same team without Bird, "but I'm not going to say we're going to have a losing month. We're still a good team and it can get better."

Columbia Coach Calls It Quits After Accusations

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Faced with allegations of professional misconduct and demands by many of his players that he quit, Columbia football coach Larry McElreavy decided it wasn't worth it.

Doug Jackson, Columbia's offensive coordinator, last week accused McElreavy of drinking before games, missing team meetings, and said McElreavy was "reeking of alcohol" during Columbia's game against Dartmouth on Nov. 5.

McElreavy denied the charges and two doctors who treated him said he was telling the truth. The university said it believed his denials.

But McElreavy felt he could not continue amid the controversy and Tuesday announced his resignation following three seasons as head coach of the losingest football program in the United States.

"The charges are completely untrue," McElreavy said. "But I cannot subject those I love and admire to further public abuse. I have therefore decided to step down as head football coach, even though the university gave me a vote of confidence."

It was yet another blow for Columbia, the university with the worst record among Division I teams over the last 25 years, a program without a winning season since 1971.

The Lions lost the first 23 games McElreavy coached and set a record among major colleges with a 44-game losing streak that ended with a 16-13 victory over Princeton on Oct. 8. The Lions were 2-8 this season, their best record since 1978.

McElreavy, who led Columbia to a 2-28 record, said he would be paid through the remainder of his contract, which expires after the 1990 season. Columbia's new coach will be its fourth in six years.

He said he informed the school of his decision on Monday, but the announcement was delayed a day until he could meet with the team.

"He had made up his mind," said Al Paul, Columbia's athletic director. "You don't talk someone out of it when he makes up his mind."

McElreavy said he decided to quit on Sunday night when he and his family watched a television news account of Jackson's charges.

"The one thing I have never done since I've been in coaching, which is a mistake, is put my family first," he said Tuesday in his office, his voice cracking with emotion.

"It didn't take long to see that was a mistake when I looked at my wife's face, at my daughter ... My family is first. Something clicked right there."

His eyes began to water and he rocked back and forth trying to get the words out.

"They said there were some remarks made to my daughter," he said, talking about his 13-year-old, his face flinching slightly with pain. "No, it's not worth it."

McElreavy, 42, said that during the two-hour meeting with his team he "bared his soul."

"I've gone through so much that I don't think I would feel an emotion if I stepped over it," he said.

McElreavy said he probably should have addressed the allegations before Jackson went public with them last week.

Teel scored on a layup in the final second and also drew a foul from Vickie Best on the play. Her basket made it 59-58, but she missed the free throw which bounced long off the back of the rim as she collapsed in disappointment as the final buzzer sounded.

Farmville led by as much as 17 points in the third quarter and 13 points in the early moments of the final period before Roanoke rallied behind center Joyce Outlaw.

Outlaw scored nine of her 33 points in the final period, taking advantage of the absence of Farmville center Brenda Reid, who fouled out with over six minutes remaining.

Wilander The Prey

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Last year, Mats Wilander was the hunter. This year, he's the prey.

For the first time, Wilander is entering the season-ending Masters tennis tournament as the top player in the world.

"I think when you're No. 1, guys want to beat you even more than before," said Wilander.

Seven players will challenge Wilander at the $750,000 Masters, which begins tonight at Madison Square Garden. Five-time champion Ivan Lendl is seeded second, followed by Andre Agassi, Boris Becker, Stefan Edberg, Jakob Hlasek, Tim Mayotte and Henri Leconte.

NFL, ABC Seem To Have Lots Of Time On Hands

By Dave Goldberg
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

"No, of course, I didn't see the end," the guy from New Jersey said of Monday night's Los Angeles Raiders-Seattle Seahawks game.

"I have to be at work at 9, so I went to bed in the third quarter. But I heard it was a great game."

It was. Three hours and 33 minutes of it, ending at about 20 minutes to 1 EST Tuesday morning, about an hour after many sets in the Eastern and Central time zones clicked off.

Another case of the NFL and ABC shooting themselves in the foot.

As game length has increased well past three hours, the league has consoled itself with the theory that no good game is too long.

That's true. Unless it's on Monday night.

This time, the network and the league were more to blame than usual — with two instant replay delays totaling 10 minutes and commercial breaks that violated most of the guidelines the NFL has imposed to try to speed things up.

In the first quarter, the Seahawks used six minutes, 26 seconds to drive for their first touchdown. Then came a commercial, followed by a kickoff, then another commercial.

That's not supposed to happen. Four years ago, the owners told the networks to knock that off when at all possible. But it's still done. The official league position is "they have to do it if they have a long drive and get behind in their commercials."

With 15 seconds left in the quarter, Seattle's Steve Largent was stripped of the ball. Los Angeles' Vann McElroy batted it back in as it was going out of bounds and Stefon Adams fell on it.

Time out for a replay. Was the ball or McElroy in or out of bounds when the ball was batted? The crowd booed, the officials huddled, replay official George Sladky watched and watched and watched. Finally, after nearly five minutes, the Raiders got the ball.

There was 1:50 left in the second quarter when Tony Woods of Seattle sacked Steve Beuerlein, knocking the ball loose and falling on it. No, referee Jerry Markbreit said, the play was dead. Raiders' ball.

Up to the booth, where Sladky looked and looked and looked and gave the ball to the Seahawks. The crowd cheered, teams ran on and off the field.

The officials huddled, then gave the Raiders the ball back and the teams changed sides again

Supreme Court To Decide If Race Can Be Used To Shape Trial Jury

By Garry Mitchell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOBILE, Ala. — A racist murder that led to a $7 million civil verdict against the nation's oldest Ku Klux Klan group is moving to the U.S. Supreme Court for a decision on whether defense lawyers can bar blacks from juries.

Defense lawyers say they doubt the high court will review whether they can challenge every prospective black juror in order to put together an all-white panel for Klan defendants.

But prosecutors in Alabama, joined by other states, contend the issue needs to be reviewed to prevent racial discrimination and give prosecutors equal standing with defense lawyers when picking a jury in a racially oriented case.

"The argument is not whether you have an all-white jury. The argument is whether you can strike anybody because of race," said University of Virginia law associate professor Pamela Karlan.

A recent Supreme Court ruling barred prosecutors from such racially tainted jury selection tactics. The question the court might face if it decides to hear the case is whether the ruling can be extended to apply to the defense. A deadline for briefs was set for today.

Defense attorneys are allowed to use any means within the law to get their clients off and this has included striking potential jurors whom they believe would be prejudiced against their clients.

The case in question began March 21, 1981, when Michael Donald, a 19-year-old black Mobile man, was abducted at random from a city street, beaten to death and his body hanged in a tree. KKK members Henry Francis Hays and James "Tiger" Knowles were arrested in connection with the slaying.

Hays was convicted of capital murder and received the death penalty. Knowles pleaded guilty to a federal charge of violating Donald's civil rights and received a life prison sentence.

Last year, Donald's mother, Beulah Mae Donald, won a $7 million lawsuit against the United Klans of America, resulting in her acquisition of the KKK headquarters building in Tuscaloosa. She sold the building to a stockbroker. Mrs. Donald, 67, died earlier this year.

Mobile County prosecutors also filed murder charges against Hays' father, Bennie Jack Hays, and the younger Hays' brother-in-law, Frank Cox. During trial last February, the elder Hays collapsed in court, prompting a mistrial.

But before the two can be retried, attorneys want the high court to answer the question about jury composition: Can defense attorneys use peremptory challenges to strike all blacks from a jury simply because of their race?

The court has not yet decided whether to hear the question, which has roused the interest of at least 40 prosecutors nationwide, Mobile County District Attorney Chris N. Galanos said in an interview Wednesday.

In New York, a spokeswoman for Brooklyn District Attorney Elizabeth Holtzman said she filed a friend-of-the-court brief in the case Monday night. Holtzman argues that prosecutors and defense attorneys should be on equal footing in eliminating jurors, said the spokeswoman, Nancy Young.

Galanos said he attempted in pretrial proceedings, without success, to block defense attorneys from using peremptory challenges to exclude blacks from the jury solely because of their race.

In the end, the jury in the Cox-Hays trial had only one black, who became an alternate juror before the mistrial.

Galanos said the chance for a Supreme Court review could have been enhanced if Alabama appeals courts had issued opinions in the case instead of no-comment denials.

Cox's attorney, Neil Hanley, said Tuesday he had filed a one-page brief in the case, standing firm on legal precedent. He cited the case two years ago, known as Batson vs. Kentucky, in which the Supreme Court ruled 7-2 that the prosecution in a criminal trial of a black defendant could not use peremptory challenges to strike all blacks in the jury pool.

Hanley doesn't expect the high court to hear oral arguments on the jury composition question "but you never know."

Superior Court

Judge Herbert Small disposed of the following cases during the Nov. 7 term of Superior Court in Pitt County:

Christopher Eakes, 2608 Jackson Drive, embezzlement, false pretense (2 counts), larceny (2 counts), fail to deliver title, 8 years jail, pay restitution as a condition of work release or parole.

Crawling Triggers A Yearn To Know

By Sally Carpenter Hale
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORTLAND, Ore. — The 8-month-old wasn't fooled when the stopwatch that had looked so interesting was covered with a cloth. He yanked the cloth away.

But research under way around the country suggests he might not have been so savvy if he hadn't yet begun to crawl.

Parents know that children experience all kinds of new things once they begin to crawl: the taste of the cat's food, the allure of their sister's room.

But psychologists say crawling also seems to trigger a variety of developmental milestones babies reach between the ages of six and nine months. They learn that toys still exist even when hidden, heights can be dangerous and objects exist that have nothing to do with themselves.

Psychologists have attributed such advances to maturation of the nervous system. But the new research is finding that developmental changes don't occur before babies are mobile, even if crawling is delayed several months.

"It's nothing short of a psychological revolution," said Rosanne Kermoian, assistant professor of psychology at Reed College. "We're finding that not only are the changes very dramatic, they're also very broad.

"We think it's not crawling itself ... but the experiences that are associated with crawling. They have to pay attention to where they are located in space so when they go room to room they don't get lost."

The research has implications for babies delayed in crawling by handicaps or injuries, Kermoian said. They don't display the developmental changes until they begin to crawl, even if that occurs several months later than average.

Infants who aren't yet crawling but get around in a walker show more of the developmental advances than those who aren't mobile at all, and those who never crawl, but go directly to walking, display the changes when they begin to walk.

"There are certain very specific areas where they are developmentally delayed," she said. "...If we can show where, the better we will be able to develop appropriate therapeutic intervention."

The research shows that crawling also seems to trigger babies' understanding that they aren't the center of the universe, she said. "What we find is that as children gain experience crawling, they understand better what the mother is communicating about other things that are going on in the world. That's a huge change. If a mother points, the child looks to the event ... rather than looking at the mother's finger or her face."

Kermoian has a wall full of stuffed animals to test whether babies follow their parents' gazes or pointing fingers to the toys, or whether they will look only at their parents. This also translates into watching their parents' reactions to new people before responding to them.

"They're more likely to use the mother to decide what is an appropriate response...," she said. "At this age, that behavior isn't perfect, but we're beginning to see it in babies that are beginning to locomote."

Mobility also seems to teach babies wariness of heights and relationships between objects, Kermoian said.

Collaborating in the study are Robert Telzrow of the University of Washington, Joseph Campos of the University of Illinois, and Bennett Bertenthal of the University of Virginia.

Age Of The Couch Potato Produces Era Of The Obese Kid In America

By Jennifer McNulty
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — Young Americans are more overweight than ever, a "fattening of America" that one researcher blames on a generation of couch potatoes that spends as much time watching television as in the classroom.

Rates of obesity among children and adolescents went up an average of about 45 percent between 1960 and the early 1980s, said Steven Gortmaker, associate professor and acting chairman of the Department of Behavioral Sciences at Harvard University.

A key factor in explaining the rise are 1983 studies that show children spend an average of at least 25 hours a week in front of the television, said Gortmaker, who speculated that the actual number of viewing hours is higher. "Television viewing for children is now practically a full-time job equal to the time spent in school," he said, adding that television viewing is up from an average of 18 hours per week in 1968.

Diet, a general decline in physical activity, and TV commercials that reinforce the appeal of high-calorie foods contribute to the dramatic increase in overweight youths, said Gortmaker, who explained his "couch potato hypothesis" last month at an American Dietetic Association meeting. The link between TV-watching and obesity rates holds true for adults, too, he said. One study showed that adults who watch an hour of television a day or less have a 3 percent chance of being obese, compared to a 25 percent chance of obesity among adults who watch three hours per day.

Specifically, Gortmaker found that between the late 1960s and 1980, obesity rates went up 54 percent among children aged 6 to 11. Super-obesity rates went up 98 percent in the same age group. Among youths aged 12 to 17, obesity went up 39 percent and super-obesity rose by 64 percent.

Obesity and super-obesity were measured with a skinfold test that does not readily translate into percentage of body fat or other measurements, he said.

The greatest increase among males was between the ages of 6 and 11, and the biggest among females was in those aged 12 to 17. Obesity was less prevalent among blacks than whites, but that gap has narrowed recently, he said.

Obesity is equally prevalent among wealthy and poor children, Gortmaker found. The greatest number of obese youths are found in the Northeast while the fewest are west of the Mississippi River.

Obese children face health risks including hypertension, psychosocial damage, respiratory and orthopedic problems. They also tend to become overweight adults, Gortmaker said.

To counter the trend, he recommended individualized programs to target overweight youth, and school and community-based nutrition programs.

In another presentation, John Foreyt, an associate professor at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston, reported that dieting has become the norm among American women and has become common among young children.

"We have become a nation obsessed with body shape, body size. Women in particular are not satisfied with their bodies today, either size or shape," he said. "It's not uncommon to see children in second, third and fourth grade begin to abnormally restrict their caloric intake." One study revealed that a group of well-meaning parents, fearful that their infants would become obese, actually caused nutritional dwarfing in their babies by restricting their food intake.

Although the average American man would like to lose one pound, the average woman wants to lose eleven pounds, he said.

"Why is this? We today have the first generation of girls growing up whose mothers had tremendous pressures to diet."

Foreyt urged health care professionals to address the underlying psychological issues.

Du Pont Will Sell Genetically Altered Mice

By Denise Layfield
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BALTIMORE — Mice genetically altered to grow malignant tumors will give researchers a more accurate picture of how cancer develops, says a spokesman for Du Pont, which will begin selling the mice next year.

The mouse, called "OncoMouse," will be sold to government and university laboratories, the giant chemical company announced Tuesday.

The mice may enable researchers to accelerate the screening of new and existing chemicals and methods to either treat or prevent cancer, Du Pont spokeman Roger Morris said in a telephone interview Tuesday from the company's headquarters in Wilmington, Del.

Another potential use for the mice would be to test substances to determine if they cause cancer, a process that usually takes about two years and $2 million per substance, he said.

The animals were developed by Harvard University, and Du Pont has commercial rights to the animals under an agreement with Harvard, Morris said.

In April, Harvard received the first U.S. patent granted for an animal for the genetically engineered mouse, which contains a gene that makes it more susceptible to cancer.

The patent sparked debate on animal patents. Opponents of genetic engineering said they would ask Congress to outlaw patents they say could allow corporations to own new and potentially dangerous varieties of animals.

Morris said the mice may reduce the number of animals needed in cancer research because they more accurately mimic the human disease.

The mice "represent a previously unavailable animal model ... which may provide researchers a method to answer important questions leading to better cancer diagnoses, therapy and prevention," Morris said.

The mice carry activated cancer genes, or oncogenes. The gene is introduced shortly after the mouse egg is fertilized, and that gene then becomes part of the mouse and its offspring.

"This provides researchers with a model in which the cancers form naturally within the animal. Rather than insert a tumor and then try to study that tumor, the mouse is born with the tumor," Morris said.

The first mice sold will carrying a cancer-causing gene found in a variety of human cancers, particularly breast cancer. Mice carrying two other genes found in a variety of cancers are expected to be available later next year.

Du Pont said the first animals will be sold for about $50 each.

Summer Fires Expose Yellowstone's Long-Forgotten Secrets, Old Roads

By Tad Bartimus
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK — Old-timers with long memories knew it was there. Archivists gave it a special place in the history books. But millions of people passed by the wreckage without a clue it was there.

Then, in the summer of 1988, a woodcutter dropped a cigarette and started a 450,000-acre forest fire that laid bare the bones of a World War II-vintage B-17 bomber, 45 years after it went down on a frigid spring night carrying 10 young airmen to their deaths.

Besides blackening hundreds of thousands of acres in America's first national park and triggering an uproar over firefighting policy on public lands, the intense blazes in Yellowstone also revealed some of its old secrets.

"The fires exposed a lot of old road cuts, torn up culverts and bridges, and abandoned dump sites," said Tim Hudson, Yellowstone's maintenance chief and a sanitary engineer. "We vaguely knew about all that stuff, but over the years trees had grown up around it and it became hard to get to, too expensive to remove, or people forgot about it.

"Our rehabilitation efforts following the fires have also given us an opportunity to do some monumental cleanup of old junk because we have the helicopters here to help us do it."

Besides rebuilding burned-out bridges, repairing bulldozed and hand-cut firelines and fixing trails and public facilities, park crews also raced the winter to remove all debris from the crash of the B-17, tail No. 42-30260.

Ground teams carefully collected the shattered, rusted pieces of .50-caliber machine guns, splinters of practice bombs once filled with sand and dozens of bullets.

Much of the aluminum and steel already twisted by the crash was charred from the North Fork fire. The weathered metal was loaded into helicopter slings and hauled four miles north to a sorting area inside the park near West Yellowstone, Mont.

The main wreckage and the 20-foot crater created by the massive bomber when it plowed into the ground around midnight May 23, 1943, had been covered over by initial rescue crews, so Hudson's cleanup team left it undisturbed.

"The stuff we pulled out totals about 25,000 pounds," said Hudson. "We flew all the bullets out first, then dumped and burned their powder. The biggest piece we recovered was a wing tip. We also found the vertical and horizontal stabilizer on the tail section a mile from the main crash site."

Even the archivists had missed that one on their maps and charts because, in the past half century, the forests of Yellowstone had grown up around the site to create a living green shroud.

Hardly any wreckage was recognizable. Park records indicate that a few years after the crash a Yellowstone ranger salvaged enough aluminum to make a snow plane, forerunner of the snowmobile. The area also showed signs of earlier scavenging and looting. Nothing recovered this fall was deemed usable, so the park service, with Department of Defense approval, will sell it as scrap to the highest bidder.

Poking through the forest fire's ashes, park employees also found small reminders of the airmen who died.

"We found part of a leather jacket, a shoe, some pieces of belts and rings off of parachute harnesses," said Dick Bahr, Yellowstone's air operations supervisor. "There was no identifying markings on any of the personal gear so we sent it to a mortuary to be incinerated."

It was precious little to commemorate the burial ground of an airplane once hailed as "The Queen of the Skies" and singled out by the Smithsonian Air and Space Museum as the most powerful weapon in the war against Hitler's Germany.

In 1983, park service historical archivist Andy Beck collected every scrap of information he could find about aircraft No. 42-30260 and compiled it in a plastic ringbinder now kept at Yellowstone headquarters.

The plane, with 11 men on board, was flying from Marysville, Calif., to its home base at Lewiston, Mont. According to an Army Air Corps investigation, the pilot climbed to 15,000 feet above Reno, Nev., and soon hit rough air. He was flying by instruments.

Next to the line citing "Nature of Accident" was this notation: "Airplane encountered icing conditions. No definite knowledge of what happened."

Retired Yellowstone Park Ranger Tom Ela never knew the cause but he remembers the crash well.

"My wife, Betty, and I'd been to a birthday party and had just gotten home when we heard the plane go over. I went to the window because I knew it wasn't sounding right. We could hear it go into a scream as it went down."

Ela rushed to a nearby observation plateau and saw the sky alight with flame. The plane, carrying live ammunition, burned on impact.

There was confusion about the number of men aboard, so Ela was among searchers looking for survivors. On the third day, when he climbed a tree and hollered "Hallooooo" for the hundredth time, an answering call came back.

"He said his name was McDonald, he was very, very cold, and he asked 'Where am I?' because he had no idea," recalled Ela, who now lives in Santa Fe, N.M.

"When I told him he was in Yellowstone National Park he couldn't believe it. He told me he'd been sleeping right by the hatch with his parachute on. Apparently he'd had a tight squeak before on a flight and he was the only one in the crew who had his 'chute on.

"When he heard in his headphones 'THIS IS IT! THIS IS IT! GET OUT!' he just rolled out the hatch and pulled the cord. He saw the plane crash below him and knew he'd made it but didn't know if anybody else did. That was bothering him a lot."

McDonald told Ela that later, as he'd wandered alone in the woods for two days, he'd wondered if he'd had a nightmare and bailed out by mistake as his plane flew on to its home base.

The Army Air Corps listed Lt. William McDonald, bombardier, as the only survivor. After leading McDonald out of the woods, Ela helped pack out on horseback the dead men and the plane's top secret equipment.

Enchant Children On Your List With The Best In Picturebooks

REDBOOK MAGAZINE

From noodle bugs to blue-footed boobies to pop-out visitors from outer space, children's picturebooks offer holiday gift possibilities to enchant the children on your list.

A panel of judges for Redbook sifted through more than 400 children's books to pick the 10 best new picturebooks described in the magazine's current issue.

The judges were Louise Bates Ames, author and cofounder, the Gesell Institute for Human Development, New Haven, Conn.; William Cole, children's poet, book critic and anthologist, and Ronnie Krauss, producer of PBS's "Reading Rainbow."

Also Michael K. Meyerhoff, director, Education for Parenthood Information Center, Wellesley Hills, Mass.; Marion Hanes, children's librarian and member, 1987 Caldecott Award committee, and Judson Culbreth, former Redbook executive editor.

The winners of the 1988 children's picturebook awards:

How Many Bugs In A Box? by David A. Carter. This pop-up book introduces counting through pop-ups of "two polka dot bugs," "four fast fleas" and "eight noodle bugs," among others. (Little Simon, $10.95, 20 pages, age 6 and under.)

The Scarebird, by Sid Fleischman, illustrated by Peter Sis. A story of loneliness and finding friendship when you least expect it, enhanced by lovely oil paintings of horizons, cornfields and sunsets. (Greenwillow, $11.95, 32 pages, age 4 and up.)

The Incredible Painting of Felix Clousseau, by Jon Agee. When the artist in this clever, funny tale paints a duck, it quacks; when he paints a volcano, it erupts. His paintings come alive. (Farrar, Straus & Giroux, $13.95, 32 pages, age 3 and up.)

Junglewalk, by Nancy Tafuri. When a boy and his cat go to sleep in this wordless book, his cat becomes a tiger, his garden, a jungle with hippos, gibbons, zebras, lions and toucans. (Greenwillow, $12.95, 32 pages, 6 and under.)

Company's Coming, by Arthur Yorinks, illustrated by David Small. A flying saucer lands in Shirley and Moe's backyard. Out pop two visitors from outer space. Zany watercolor pictures, hilarious text. (Crown, $11.95, 32 pages, ages 4 through 10.)

The Enchanter s Daughter, by Antonia Barber, illustrated by Errol Le Cain. A lonely girl and her enchanter-father live on a mountaintop. Her father allows her to live one day as a rose, a fish, a fawn and a bird — and she takes flight. (Farrar, Straus & Giroux, $13.95, 32 pages, ages 4 through 9.)

Tail Feathers From Mother Goose, the Opie Rhyme Book. This treasury of traditional rhymes, songs and riddles is culled from the Opie Collection of Children's Literature, a selection of children's folklore and stories handed down through generations of American and British families. Illustrated by more than 60 artists. (Little, Brown, $19.95, 128 pages, all ages.)

Spinky Sulks, by William Steig. Sulky Spinky has a hard time changing his mood. (Farrar, Straus & Giroux, $13.95, 32 pages, age 3 and up.)

Like Pee Wee Or Lincoln, Bow-Tie Men Mavericks Who Work Within System

TOWN & COUNTRY MAGAZINE

Wearers of bow ties may be in the minority but they include a range of individuals from Abraham Lincoln to Pee-wee Herman.

The Men's Fashion Association calculates bow ties normally amount to 2 or 3 percent of yearly tie sales, according to an article in the current issue of Town & Country, going up to 6 or 7 percent during periodic enthusiasms among normally straight tie wearers.

A partial catalogue of bow tie wearers, past and present, sums up the nature of this minority.

They include Lincoln, Herman, Winston Churchill, artists Salvador Dali and David Hockney, Sens. Paul Simon and Daniel Patrick Moynihan, Surgeon General C. Everett Koop, attorney and Watergate special prosecutor Archibald Cox, historian Arthur Schlesinger Jr. and Dr. Alfred Kinsey of Kinsey Report fame.

A decade ago, the executive director of the Neckwear Association of America described the classic wearer as someone who "operates politely within the system but is nevertheless a maverick."

Designer Bill Blass calls bow tie wearers a cult.

Why do men opt for the bow tie? For some, it literally represents a tie to the past, to the traditions of grandfathers and fathers. Others hope it will give them a gravity the years have not yet provided, although Blass argues that a bow tie looks best beneath a craggy face.

In a vocation where a personal trademark means as much as a photogenic family, to show up even occasionally wearing anything else would have been a bad career move.

In the cult of the bow tie, tying the knot includes creative imperfections. In that way the bow tie wearer declares he is not wearing the dread pre-tied bow.

Harry Smith Settling Into Role As 'CBS This Morning' Co-Host

By Kathryn Baker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Harry Smith's arm shoots up in the air midsentence and he snaps his fingers.

"You know what it was? I'll tell you what it was! The seed was planted in high school, because I had an English teacher and we had to write a term paper. ... I couldn't come up with anything and (the teacher) John Gulassa said, 'Here's some books. Why don't you read these and see what you think?' And he gave me 'On the Road,' by Jack Kerouac.

"That was the beginning of the end for me. You know, the beginning of the end which turned out to be the great beginning."

Smith, 37, was searching his memory for the genesis of the story of how a kid from a small blue-collar town in the Midwest found himself in New York City as co-host of a network morning news show.

"CBS This Morning" celebrates its first anniversary this week. Though it is still struggling in the ratings behind NBC's "Today" and ABC's "Good Morning America," Smith and co-host Kathleen Sullivan have developed an easy-going rapport, and the network seems content to let them develop a following.

The pressure doesn't seem to get to Smith, the most likely successor to Charles Kuralt as CBS' resident laid-back philosopher.

Smith's feet-on-the-ground attitude comes from deep Midwestern roots and a strict religious upbringing. His father worked two jobs, as a policeman and a milkman. Smith was the youngest of eight children, most of whom "got married pretty young and went out into the world and got real jobs and had real lives," Smith said. "I was the youngest and kind of the surprise. I got a little bit more attention than the other ones did, had a rich fantasy life about doing something other than going to work at the Youngstown Sheet and Tool."

Most of those fantasies revolved around television.

"I used to watch Jack Paar and just used to be fascinated by characters like Oscar Levant," Smith said. "Certainly in my realm of existence there wasn't anyone real like that, and wouldn't it be interesting to meet people and know people like that?"

Despite a budding interest in literature and philosophy, Smith went to college on a football scholarship and planned to be a high-school football coach. He attended Central College in Pella, Iowa, an intellectually "dangerous" place for a young jock, he said, "because they said, 'Here are books. How would you like to read them?' And so I did, and my notions about being a football coach were short-lived."

He graduated with a degree in communications and theater. After a stint as a public TV talk-show host in Denver, he moved over to KMGH-TV, the CBS affiliate. There he anchored the noon news with another reporter, Andrea Joyce. Their courtship sounds right out of "Broadcast News."

"We were just buds," Smith said. "We worked very hard and were very career-oriented and all that sort of stuff, so professional that neither of us would have ever considered going out. We used to 'convenience date.' You know, 'I've got this thing to go to, would you go with me? Just go with me.'"

A "convenience date" to the opera led to romance and later marriage.

Smith was a Dallas-based correspondent for CBS when he was tapped for "CBS This Morning." Even though it means getting up at 4 a.m., Smith says the schedule at least is regular and has allowed for a "second honeymoon." Joyce now reports for Madison Square Garden network. They go to Central Park everyday with their wire-haired fox terrier.

Zulu War Dancing Of Johnny Clegg Is Catching On With Rock Audiences

By Paul Raeburn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — In France, audiences jam into huge halls to stomp and shout when Johnny Clegg, clad in a striped costume resembling a brightly colored animal skin, kicks his leg impossibly high in a Zulu war dance.

Getting Clegg tickets in France is like getting Springsteen tickets in the United States. The same thing is happening in Montreal, where Clegg recently drew 60,000 people to a stadium concert. And now he is bringing his Zulu rock to the United States.

He was the opening act on pop songwriter Steve Winwood's recent tour, and he has performed twice this year as a headliner in New York.

Clegg — a 35-year-old white South African, fierce opponent of apartheid and leader of the integrated band Savuka — has created a unique blend of Western rock harmonies and Zulu rhythms. He is fluent in the Zulu language and sprinkles Zulu proverbs among his lyrics, which offer biting attacks on apartheid and a vision of a better Africa to come.

All of which makes Clegg a very unusual South African. South Africans call him "The White Zulu." His familiarity with both Western rock and pop culture and with traditional Zulu culture has led him to a true Afro-rock fusion.

It is the kind of music Paul Simon might have made on his successful African album, "Graceland," if Simon had grown up steeped in Zulu culture. Simon sampled Zulu music; Clegg makes it. Clegg rocks harder than Simon, and his music — although undeniably African — is immediately accessible to American listeners. Where Simon's lyrics are cerebral and intricate, Clegg's are spare and emotionally wrenching.

Clegg paints a dark image of the cruelty of South Africa's racial division. In the song "Human Rainbow," on his latest album "Shadow Man," Clegg sings, "An angry young man draws in the air, political equations. But time corrupts the fruit they bear. And leads to more desperation. ..."

He also sings of anonymous gray computers closing files on prisoners, of faceless managers manipulating events, of South Africa's desperate failure to rise above political confusion and see the long sweep of history.

John Denver Struggles For More Time On Air

By Walter Berry
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEMPE, Ariz. — He's a singer, songwriter, actor, activist, ecologist and aspiring space traveler. But what John Denver really wants to be right now is heard on the radio again.

"We always had to struggle to get my records on the air. But when we did, I had incredible success," he said in an interview here at the start of his American tour. "One of the problems I've always had — even at the height of my career — was that I was never a radio darling. I didn't have the hype going that a lot of rock singers had. That mystique was just not part of what I was doing.

"The format at a lot of the stations now is not the kind of songs or kind of sound I'm doing. I still like to use a real orchestra, not a synthesizer or a drum machine. Real people, live music. But that's not what's going on out there right now."

The 44-year-old Denver is out with a new album — "Higher Ground" — on his own label, Windstar. The LP is being distrubuted by Allegiance Records of Hollywood, Calif. Denver left RCA Records after 25 albums, 13 of which went gold and eight platinum in the U.S. alone.

His easy-listening, country-crossover style made a string of hit singles in the 1970s: "Rocky Mountain High," "Sunshine on My Shoulder," "Back Home Again," "Annie's Song," "Take Me Home, Country Road" and "Thank God I'm a Country Boy." His greatest hits LP still ranks as the best-selling album in RCA history.

"They really took me for granted," Denver said. "I was one of the few artists on the label and I probably had the best contract they had and I was in the black. At the time I delivered my last album ('One World' in 1986), RCA had just been sold to General Electric and I was in line for a new contract. I had every right to expect as good a contract as I had, if not better.

"But the new management wanted to show a profit quickly and it was more than they wanted to spend. RCA's promotional people never supported me anyway. Radio was resistent to me and I was a hard sell, so why bother?

"One of the reasons for establishing my own label was to have the clout and the budget to say, 'This is what I want t be done' and get this record on the air."

The new LP is in the same vein as Denver's others. It's heavy on love ballads — "For You," "Never a Doubt" and "Whispering Jesse".

"I'm a hopeless romantic," said Denver, who in August married Australian singer Cassandra Delaney.

Other cuts mix Denver's vocals and acoustic guitar work with his usual introspective lyrics ("Higher Ground," "All This Joy," "Country Girl in Paris") while other songs are for causes — "Sing Australia" written for Australia's bicentennial, "Bread & Roses" for the feminist movement and "Fallen Leaves (The Refugees)" for the world's homeless.

Denver has traveled the globe for concerts and benefits in his 20-year career. He visited Africa in 1985 to call attention to the hunger problem and did fund-raising shows in 1987 for the victims of the Chernobyl nuclear power accident in the Soviet Union. In 1976, he helped establish the Snowmass, Colo.-based Windstar Foundation, which is working toward world peace and world ecology.

John Denver says he was never a radio darling

"One of the problems in the world today is most of us think the problems or the bureaucracies are so great that we can't make a difference," he said. "I want to prove that to be inaccurate. I want to demonstrate that an individual can make a difference."

Born John Deutschendorf in Roswell, N.M., and raised in Oklahoma, Arizona and Texas as an Air Force brat, Denver moved to Los Angeles to be a folk musician and wrote the mega-hit "Leavin' on a Jet Plane" in 1969.

He now is a licensed jet pilot and said he has longed for space travel since he was 10 years old, when he looked up at the stars one night and "was just enthralled with wonder of what was up there."

Denver was instrumental in the start of the Citizens for Space program and even volunteered to be the first to go.

Now that NASA has decided to put the citizen's program on hold following the ill-fated Challenger mission two years ago, Denver had considered going on a Soviet flight in December 1989.

Cohen's Musical Legacy Is Growing

By Richard Harrington
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Suzanne takes you down
To her place by the river
You can hear the boats go by
You can stay the night beside her

—Leonard Cohen

NEW YORK — Leonard Cohen, once described by Rolling Stone as "the poet laureate of outrage and romantic despair ... the aficionado of gloom," is sipping serenely at his tea in a New York hotel. There are no oranges in sight, and just now you cannot hear the boats go by.

"You go in and out of affection for old material," Cohen is saying of his most famous song, "and you'd like to be loved for things you're doing now. But it has a real place in my so-called career, and people do want to hear it. ... It can stand up."

Twenty-one years after Judy Collins' version of "Suzanne" made Cohen a semi-household name, he's still the eminence grise of art song, his legacy evident not only in the continuance of his own work, but in the folk confessions of Suzanne Vega and the angst-rock of the Smiths and the Cure. One British goth-gloom group, Sisters of Mercy, even took its name from a Cohen tune.

Like his songs and his singing, Cohen, now 53, tends to gray, from the swept-back waves of his hair and his elegant suits ("Miami Vice" once cast him as an Interpol agent) to the somber sonority of his gravelly, world-weary voice.

His manner is cool and elegant, befitting a man who's published as many books as he's made records (10 of each). Next year will bring a new collection of Cohen's poems, dating back to Let Us Compare Mythologies, published in 1956 when he was still an undergraduate at McGill University.

Cohen's latest album, "I'm Your Man," has attracted the usual accolades, and, in Europe at least, has achieved some commercial success: It sold some 500,000 copies there in the first five months of release and was No. 1 in Norway for 17 weeks. There's an annual Leonard Cohen Festival in Krakow, Poland, and he remains a legitimate concert draw on a continent where commercial success is one yardstick, but not the only one.

In North America — his native Canada and adopted States, mostly New York and California — the numbers are more modest; Leonard Cohen remains a critic's pet and a cult artist, with sadly minuscule sales.

LAT-WP News Service

Judy Collins' version of Cohen's 'Suzanne' made Cohen famous

His widest popularity came in the early '70s, particularly with his somber soundtrack for Robert Altman's "McCabe and Mrs. Miller." He's still with CBS, but "I'm Your Man" was his first album for the label in nine years; its two predecessors were done with small independents.

That made for a certain irony when CBS gave Cohen its Crystal Globe Award for sales of 5 million albums — outside the United States. At the ceremony Cohen looked calmly at the CBS troops and said, "Over the years I've been deeply touched by the modesty of your interest in my work."

And when "I'm Not Your Man" came out, he sent a letter to each member of the promotional staff, enclosing two very wrinkled dollar bills and asking them to make calls on the album's behalf. Even though the date of the letter was April 1, some of the CBS folks sent the money back.

"They're very scrupulous spirits," chuckles Cohen with the wry detachment characteristic of his songs.

It's two decades now since "Songs of Leonard Cohen" appeared and established him as the champion of griseous despair. If his ashen, artful lyrics exhibited an uncommon flair for poetic detail, it was because writing was Cohen's first calling, not music.

By 1967, he'd already published four poetry collections (including The Spice-Box of Earth and Flowers for Hitler) and two novels, 1963's The Favorite Game (about a Jewish man's coming of age in Montreal) and 1966's confessional The Beautiful Losers.

The idea of joining the burgeoning singer-songwriter movement was the last thing on Cohen's mind. He might have been the bright hope of Canadian literature, but for all the books to his credit, he couldn't get credit at a five and dime.

"I had been living in Greece during the folk renaissance in the early and mid-'60s, so I was unaware of it," he says. "I had published my second novel, but it became clear to me I couldn't make a living as a writer; even though I'd received glorious reviews, I couldn't sell any books.

"So I decided I would become a singer. I played guitar, and I'd already written songs, so I thought I'd go down to Nashville, make a country album and rescue myself. On the way down from Montreal, I stopped in New York and became aware that there was something going on here.

"And while I was staying at the Chelsea Hotel, I met Judy Collins. I sort of got ambushed in New York City and felt a great kinship with many of the singers who were around at the time, so I kept going between Montreal and New York."

In fact, Cohen was back in Montreal when he finished a song he thought Collins might like. He called her up in New York, sang "Suzanne" over the phone and Collins immediately decided to record it.

The song was a parable about the renewing powers of love and faith in a decaying world. Both Collins and Noel Harrison had hits with it, and "Suzanne" became one of the better-known ballads of the '60s.

"On the basis of that recording I was able to establish some credentials in the racket," Cohen says. John Hammond, who had already signed Bob Dylan and would later sign Bruce Springsteen to CBS, "invited me up for lunch." A contract soon followed, and at age 33, Cohen made his first record.

Hammond, for one, was not put off by Cohen's voice, an ominous-sounding instrument that has often seemed in need of tuning and general repair.

Pair Backs Up Sweet Name By Making Some Good Music

By Mary Campbell

George Merrill met Shannon Rubicam in 1976. As performers, they're known as Boy Meets Girl.

In 1988, on Nov. 26, their RCA Records LP, "Reel Life," was climbing in its third week on Cashbox magazine's best-selling chart. A single from it, the rock-pop-dance "Waiting for a Star to Fall," was No. 11 and climbing on the best-selling singles chart.

In real life, they are married and live in Venice, Calif., with their 5-year-old daughter, Hilary.

Boy Meets Girl wrote Whitney Houston's hits, "How Will I Know" and "I Wanna Dance With Somebody (Who Loves Me)."

They originally chose Boy Meets Girl as the name for their music publishing company, Rubicam says. Unable to think of a name for their duo, they called themselves Boy Meets Girl, too.

Merrill says: "Rather than find a tough name, we just back up this sweet name with some good music. I think too many situations these days are based on image and appearance."

Both are natives of Washington — she was born in Seattle, he in Renton. A K mart now stands on the site of the hospital where Merrill was born. He says, "It's kind of weird if you want to go back to your roots."

Before Boy met Girl, says Merrill, "I'd been in heavy-metal bands playing various instruments. I'd kind of settled in on keyboards. I was playing with another guy, a fantastic guitar player. He was born the same day as me, in the same hospital. We met when we were 5, started writing songs together in the fifth grade." They decided to add a third person, held auditions and hired Rubicam.

Merrill says: "The three of us did real intricate vocal harmony. We'd sit and work out things all day, intricate little vocal things, musical passages. Then he left. Shannon and I were the writing duo. Part of it, too, was our romantic involvement, I think."

The music they wrote together, she says, was rock. When each wrote alone, it tended toward pop or folk. "What we liked about writing together was it brought out something we never did on our own. I'm mostly lyrics. George is mostly the music writer. Once we've got a base to work on, we frequently cross-edit and work on the melodies together.

"George will start playing on the piano with one or two lines that I've given him. As I listen, some of what he plays will inspire some other emotion or a more detailed idea. I'll hand him another couple of lines and he'll tell me what he likes about it. It helps to keep those sparks going. You can get real crazy in a room by yourself."

In Seattle, they wrote for Thom Bell's publishing company. Merrill says: "He was the one who instilled in me the importance of making sure that the melody is as good as you can make it in a song. He helped us both be better editors of ourselves. I learned so much watching him in the studio with Deniece Williams. I played some synthesizer for them.

"He told us, just when you're flying along and you're the newest, hottest thing, all you have to do is listen to an old Beatles album and you realize there are so many things to learn and there have been some pretty great things so far in this genre of music."

Rubicam says: "The idea is to expand all the time. You might be very good at your own niche. Trying to broaden that niche is the excitement of music. But if you've had a little success it's hard to try another direction."

Boy Meets Girl moved to Los Angeles, says Rubicam, "to give it the two-year try." They toured with Deniece Williams and met Dean Pitchford through her. They wrote "I Know You By Heart" with Pitchford, which Dolly Parton and Smokey Robinson recorded.

Rubicam says: "All these connections you keep reconnecting at unknown points down the road. It is part of the network that you build. It happens by chance. It's the fun part of this business."

Writer, Artist Join To Revive 'Pogo' Possum

By Bill Maher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WAYCROSS, Ga. — It's a long way from an Illinois college campus to the Okefenokee Swamp in southeast Georgia, but for writer Larry Doyle and artist Neal Sternecky the revival of Pogo Possum may be worth the trip.

The satirical comic strip will reappear Jan. 9, and nearly 100 newspapers have already contracted with the Los Angeles Times Syndicate to run the daily and Sunday versions of Pogo, created by Walt Kelly Jr. 45 years ago.

Doyle and Sternecky, friends since they discovered a mutual love for comics at the University of Illinois student newspaper almost 10 years ago, were recently selected by Kelly's family and the syndicate to bring Pogo back to the nation's funny pages after a 14-year absence.

Doyle, who was in Atlanta to address a convention of student journalists and college media advisers, says he and Sternecky were at first unsure if they could — or wanted to — take the job.

After all, Pogo was the forerunner of political satire strips such as Garry Trudeau's "Doonesbury" and Berke Breathed's "Bloom County," and each character in the Pogo strip had viewpoints which would be difficult to recapture.

"I think we drew up the first strips just to see if we could do it," Doyle says. "When we found out the Kelly family wanted to do it just like it had been done and were not going to let the newspapers tell them it needed a laugh in every line, then we really wanted to do it."

Neither has seen the 500,000-acre Okefenokee Swamp, but Doyle says they plan to at the first opportunity. Kelly also had not seen the swamp when he first created Pogo in 1943 for a comic book. He came across it while casting through his Connecticut library for a suitable swamp setting for the character.

Kelly introduced the daily comic strip in the old New York Star in 1948 and was syndicated the following year, using Pogo and his "enchanting troupe of anthropomorphic critters" to comment on the political, social and moral ills of the century.

It was January 1955 before Kelly finally visited the swamp, tried the local stew and saw his first live opossum. He made two more trips to the Okefenokee before his death.

Pogo reached his zenith in the 1950s when the comic strip was carried daily by more than 400 newspapers. The Okefenokee — a Seminole Indian word meaning "Land of Trembling Earth" — became a household word.

"The decision to bring Pogo back was made by the Kelly family themselves," Doyle says, pointing out that some comic buffs thought the character should have died with its creator.

Doyle says the Kelly family will have editorial control of the comic strip to make sure Pogo and pals retain the integrity and quality which Kelly insisted be in each strip.

"They have veto power over anything we do," Doyle says. "They are going to be concerned all along that it stays up to quality."

Howling Winds Call Boardsailors To Choppy Waters Of Chesapeake

By Angus Phillips
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

KENT ISLAND, Md. — The wind was coming hard enough to rock Pete Sullivan's parked van into a full-scale stationary shimmy, coming whomp-whomp-whomp across the Chesapeake from Baltimore and whipping the bay into 3-foot combers that broke in a jumbled froth on the shore.

In short, it was a fine day for a 36-year-old telephone man from Silver Spring, Md., to spend in a warm place like Angler's Bar over on the Kent Island's lee side, munching fried clams, sipping beer and listening to Randy Travis warble, "When you see me walk on water" on the jukebox.

"I do like my cold beer," Sullivan said. But first he had some walking on water of his own to attend to.

Which was why Sullivan was here, taking a half-day off work, ducking behind the van out of the bitter northwest gale to rig his littlest sailboard, the one he keeps just for autumn howlers like this, the kind of day a boardsailing adventurer lives for.

Sullivan popped back in the van long enough to pull a rubber dry-suit over his longjohns. Then he was trundling down the sloping lawn into the teeth of a 30-knot gale, hanging gamely onto the board to keep it from blowing away.

"On a day like this," he shouted as waves battered the seawall and sent cold spray flying, "getting in the water is the most dangerous part." But Sullivan and his partner, boardsailing entrepreneur Bob Singer, 34, handled the entry smoothly.

Singer was away first, jumpstarting his 9-foot board out of a trough, wallowing a moment, then hooking up with the wind to skitter across the whitewater at breakneck speed. He crested one wave, smacked head-on into another and went airborne, 3 feet over the wave tops, crashing down neatly on all fours to speed off anew.

Sullivan was right behind. They flew across the waves in spectacular tandem, like hankies in a hurricane, heading northeast toward the broad mouth of the Chester River. Half a mile out, Singer spun his tiny craft around and came hurtling back. But where was Sullivan?

Several of us on shore wondered. "See him?" asked one. "Nah," said another. "He probably just kept going."

After a half-hour, puzzlement turned to worry. Singer scooted back to ask if anyone had seen his mate wash up. One vehicle went off a-hunting and we were pondering a full-scale search mission when the missing one wandered back through the bushes in his form-fitting rubber suit, grinning sheepishly.

"Broke my mast," said he, bemused. "And I thought it was unbreakable."

The $200 epoxy-fiber spar had sheared three feet above the deck, victim of excess stress. A bother, but certainly no reason to quit on the best day of the season, Sullivan said. "You don't stop sailing when it's blowing like this."

Shortly he had a spare mast rigged. By then, Skip Brown, 31, a Washington freelance photographer, and Tim Murphy, 27, a doctoral student in neurological science at Johns Hopkins, had joined the fleet.

Thus they were four, and for the next three hours they put on a show that was almost as much fun to watch as it must have been to take part in, zipping across the churning maelstrom, crash-jibing, spinning out, leaping waves at prodigious speed and generally having a big time of it.

Organization Is The Biggest Key To Successful Christmas Shopping

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS — The holiday season brings a barrage of mail-order catalogs, radio and television commercials, newspaper and magazine advertisements, all intended to generate gift ideas for the shopper and sales for the retailer.

The J.C. Penney Company, with retail stores across the nation and mail orders a phone call away, offers some advice to make holiday shopping as pleasant and carefree as possible.

— Shop off hours, midweek, and leave the kids at home.

— Shop by catalog.

— Check catalogs early and call ahead to department stores to see if specific items are available.

— Wear layered, comfortable clothing.

— Consider service gifts for hard-to-buy-for people: a facial, manicure, pedicure, massage, a day at the spa, a series of exercise classes.

Divorce Lawyer To Rich, Angry Grabs Headlines

By Howard Kurtz
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

NEW YORK — Raoul Lionel Felder, who charges $450 an hour to guide wealthy celebrities through nasty divorces, considers himself something of an expert on the female psyche.

"A woman is like a Stradivarius violin," he says. "The humidity has to be right to play it. Otherwise, they'll throw in the towel."

The bearded, soft-spoken attorney is a virtuoso when it comes to plucking this particular instrument, the grief-stricken wife (he does a few riffs on famous husbands as well). As his roster of rich clients has grown — Robin Givens, Lisa Gastineau, Nancy Capasso, Brian De Palma, Mrs. Frank Gifford, Mrs. Joseph Heller, Mrs. Carl Sagan, Mrs. Martin Scorsese, Mrs. Alan Jay Lerner, to name-drop just a few — Raoul Felder has all but eclipsed Marvin Mitchelson as the world's most prominent and well-publicized matrimonial lawyer.

Felder, 54, scored a rare triple knockout last month when he took on Givens' 15-round divorce against heavyweight champ Mike Tyson. One, Givens recruited him after unceremoniously dumping Mitchelson. Two, it was the first case for his newly formed "tricoastal" practice, a controversial alliance with attorneys in California, Florida and New Jersey. Finally, it brought Felder a new flood of headlines, and he announced a settlement in a matter of days.

That, of course, was only the beginning. Felder, who has never seen the actress in person, kept trading verbal blows with Tyson's California lawyer, and last week he filed a $125 million libel suit against Tyson on Givens' behalf. With each passing day, Felder seemed to move closer to the center of the story. And that, say Felder's detractors, is typical of this sharp-tongued lawyer whose profile is so high he employs his very own PR man.

"He is the absolute best at a lot of things," says Robert Dobrish, a Manhattan attorney who handles big-time divorces. "I don't think one of those is lawyering... Most of the lawyers who are good in this field relish the idea of going up against Felder."

"Raoul's a showman," says Peter Bronstein, another top-drawer divorce lawyer. "I don't want the kind of publicity that Raoul gets. Raoul is willing to say just about anything (in public) about his clients, and I'm not."

But Felder's adversaries treat him gingerly, perhaps with good reason. Norman Sheresky, a prominent New York lawyer, was recently quoted in a Miami newspaper as saying that Felder "pretends to be a trial lawyer when he is not. He has no familiarity with how to try a case." Felder promptly hit Sheresky with a $7 million libel suit.

Felder may be a tad defensive about his reputation in the closed, catty world of matrimonial lawyers, but for the most part he is comfortable with his persona, his nine-lawyer practice and his courtroom skills.

"I am a crackerjack trial lawyer," he declares. "If there's no beef in the hamburger, they ain't gonna buy the hamburger."

He particularly relishes opposing the blue-chip Manhattan firms, many of which have started matrimonial departments as the field has become increasingly lucrative. "They're not equipped for it," Felder says. "It's like a rhinoceros making love... They're overpaid and they overbill."

Felder makes no pretense about his own love of money. He owns 350 suits. He keeps a gray Rolls-Royce uptown and a red Porsche downtown. He has one apartment on Fifth Avenue and another atop the Museum of Modern Art, along with a home in the Hamptons that he rarely visits.

Still, he likes to say that he turns down four out of five people who want his services.

"I always tell them, 'What do you need us for?' There's no magic here ... Trial skills for the most part are not necessary. You don't have to be Justice Cardozo in this field. You're better off with a family lawyer from a neighborhood somewhere who's gonna sit with you and kvetch with you and schlep around and listen to you cry for 15 minutes."

He arrives at his 30th-floor Madison Avenue office each day about 6 a.m.; today, he's lounging around in a white cardigan with a big blue "R" on it. The spacious room is populated by a large china lion, a battalion of World War I model planes, display cases full of odd knickknacks and, neatly lined up near Felder's desk, a dozen pairs of different-colored slippers. He once kept a piranha here, but it is gone.

Felder, who owns three guns and once posed for photographers in a safari jacket and hat, seems to cultivate an image of eccentricity. While other lawyers in a recent New York Times article said it would be unethical to sleep with their clients, Felder said it wouldn't be such a bad idea because the lawyer could then promote the client's cause more fervently.

Receiving a visitor, Felder combines the erudite manner of an English professor with the storytelling charm of a Jewish shopkeeper. He loves to tell celebrity stories. How he cross-examined Peter O'Toole. How he debated Tyson's trainer on Geraldo Rivera. How he escorted Lisa Gastineau (the ex-wife of the ex-New York Jet) to Jackie Mason's book party. How, representing Robin Leach's wife, he ended up on "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous."

One reason Felder cherishes the odd cases, he says, is that so many of his clients are downright dull. When the rich split up, he explains, they tend to engage in pointless disputes about who gets the country home, the Mercedes or the Picassos, even though there is plenty of money to make both sides happy.

"There's nobody more boring than someone who's telling you a story you've heard 30 times before, and they think it's the most fascinating thing in the world... You jump out of your skin," he says.

So Felder must find other diversions. He has written two books on divorce and does a monthly column for Fame magazine. ("Today," he writes in his current column, on the legal dangers of adultery, "it seems there's only one thing left for the true adventurer: cheating on a spouse. For someone with a predilection for peril, cheating has it all — clandestine meetings, cryptic telephone calls, coded messages, risk of discovery, and even the possibility of physical danger. It is the very definition of life on the edge.") He is working on a private-eye novel and serves as a director of the Duke Ellington Fund. With little public fanfare, he also funds a Harlem clinic that treats babies born with AIDS.

Myrna Felder, his law partner and wife of 25 years, says her husband "has a great bedside manner. He has that wonderful ability to be very sensitive and supportive of people who are going through this very difficult time."

Myrna says her husband, who brags about sleeping four hours a night, derives most of his satisfaction from work. Even when she drags him to East Hampton.

"Say we arrive Friday night," she says. "Saturday at 5 in the morning, I turn over and he's already working on the work in his briefcase. He is not someone who enjoys vacation time. His mother and father were very much that type, too."

Myrna Felder, whom many call the best legal scholar in the office, joined the firm in 1971. "He sent me to law school," she says proudly, adding that her husband is "more of a Victorian than a male chauvinist." The scenario was replayed when Felder rescued another distraught client, pushed her to attend law school and then hired her at the firm. "He saved my life," says Jeanne Wilmot Carter.

Raoul Felder, who admits feeling guilty about not spending more time with his two teen-age children, says he is lucky his wife works down the hall. "My wife is my severest critic... If it weren't for my marriage, I'd be a crazy person," he says.

When Felder announced his new "tricoastal" divorce service, he didn't want the occasion to go unnoticed. So he invited 350 of his closest friends to Elaine's for a noisy celebration.

The legal establishment, however, was less enthusiastic about the venture. Some spoilsports noted that Felder is not a member of the bar in California, Florida or New Jersey and could not appear in state proceedings without permission from the judge involved.

"I'm somewhat cynical about the use of (Felder's) name in representing clients in other states, because I really don't think the clients are going to get him," says competitor Dobrish, who chairs the matrimonial committee of the New York County Lawyers Association. "Felder's got so many cases, is making so much money, that he couldn't possibly be servicing all those cases. He takes the case in and assigns it to one of his younger attorneys."

Peter Bronstein calls Felder "a man you can do business with" and says "a lot of people are jealous of him." But he cautions that "someone retaining Raoul should be careful to discuss in advance who's going to be handling the case."

Felder, complaining that lawyers are "a self-devouring breed," insists he is careful not to mislead clients. "There isn't a legal paper that goes out of here that I don't review," he says. "The clients know exactly where I'm coming from. I tell them if they want one person to handle the case, it can't be done."

Some of Felder's famous clients give him rave reviews. Eleanor Revson, ex-wife of cosmetics heir Martin Revson, credits Felder with winning her a share of the couple's $6 million Fifth Avenue apartment. "He was very sympathetic and very sensitive," says Revson, who says she hired Felder after dropping Mitchelson. "He personally attended to just about everything that was going on. I could call him at home. Sometimes we worked all weekend."

Looking for a holiday gift for a bridge-playing friend? You could do a lot worse than get him the set of 20 Kantar Lessons (available from Edwin B. Kantar, P.O Box 427, Venice, Calif. 90291-0427; $35 postpaid). The series includes both bidding and play, and is one of the most comprehensive lesson manuals available. This hand is from the section "Deception in Declarer Play."

Four hearts is a normal contract to reach. It has virtually no play only because of the wasted values in clubs, and no auction could reveal that. Kantar writes:

"East signals with the diamond seven and South plays low! South has a diamond loser in any case and, if diamonds are 3-3, South can use his fourth diamond to discard one of dummy's losing clubs. However, South must make his deceptive play early before the opponents can read his intentions.

"If South wins the opening lead and later tries to establish diamonds for a club discard, the opponents will know that South has a fourth diamond and will shift to clubs. Also, when weak in a suit it is dangerous to draw trumps immediately, as it gives the opponents a chance to signal strength in that suit when discarding on the trump suit.

"Notice that if South wins the diamond lead and draws trumps, East can signal with the seven of clubs on the second round of trumps and the cat is out of the bag. For shame!"

Look at the lessons before giving them away. You might decide to keep them for yourself and order another set for your friend!

Fall, A Perfect Picture

By Kristi Dews

When the leaves fall gracefully off the trees,
And the innocent birds fly south.
When the waves come up upon the shore,
But are much colder in the morning breeze.
Time passes so quickly as the days grow short,
And Jack Frost comes to visit, then leaves.
But the sky still remains so blue.
Clouds drift slowly across the sky
And are replaced by stars at night.
Pumpkins are cut and glow in the darkness,
And spooks drift in children's minds.
Crops are planted and harvested
And leave such a sweet smell.
Cool evenings are followed by the nip of the morning wind.
Brooks flow rapidly, but quietly.
And waterfalls drop silently into sparkling streams.
How we wait for the birds to chirp,

Kristi Dews, 11, a student at Wintergreen School wins this week's drawing contest.

Leaves, Leaves!

By Joseph Randolph

Squirrels eat nuts. Leaves begin to fall. The leaves are red, brown, orange and yellow. I like playing in the leaves. There are tat leaves, skinny leaves, tall leaves and short leaves. Leaves are fun! I play in leaves all the time!

Joseph Randolph, 6, a student at Third Street School receives special mention.

The Green Slimy Oobleck

By Shaun Cates

Once upon a time there lived a detective and his manager. The detective's name was Shaun. His manager's name was Lewis.

One day they went to an old spook house exploring. When they opened the door it squeaked and when they closed the door it squeaked. Every thing in the haunted house was old. As they walked around slowly, they thought they saw a ghost fly by. When they went into the living room to sit down on the couch they saw some green, slimy, hard stuff. They were so scared! The slime began to crawl off the couch. SPLAT! It hit the floor and began to grow. It grew red, square eyes and had a mouth full of sharp, pointed teeth. The creature crawled onto Shaun's leg and said, "How are you doing?" Shaun, the detective, said, "I am doing fine. How are you doing?"

The slimy creature said, "I am doing fine. My name is Oobleck."

Next, the detective put his hand on the floor. Oobleck crawled onto his hand. Shaun put Oobleck into his pocket and took it to his manager, Lewis. Lewis jumped and screamed. Yuck! Later, they decided to keep Oobleck a secret and not to turn him into the police. They were friends forever!

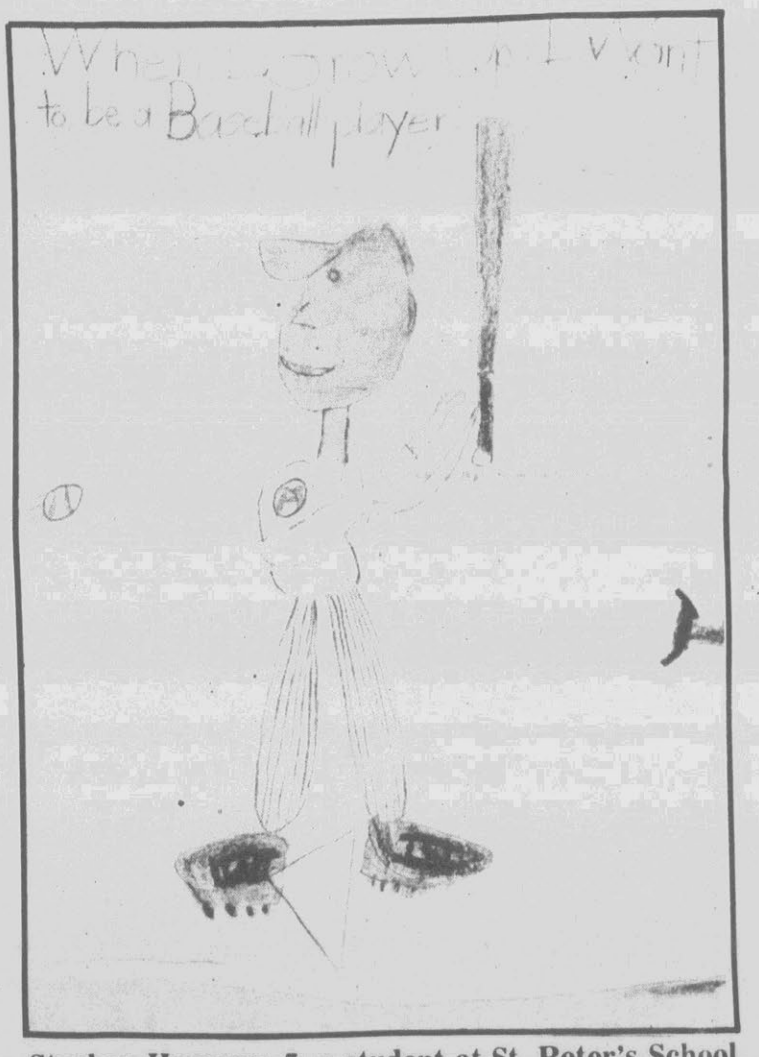
Shaun Cates, 8, a student at Sam D. Bundy School receives special mention.

An Old Witch

By Gemayel Taylor

One day my brother and I went inside a haunted house. It was an old, old rotten house. We were very scared! We saw an old witch. I ran as fast as I could. My brother found some old paint and threw it on the witch. The witch melted to the floor. My brother and I got out of the house and ran home.

Gemayel Taylor, 5, a student at Third Street School receives special mention.



Stephen Harsany, 7, a student at St. Peter's School receives special mention.

Two Fall Holidays

By Aaron Brinn

My favorite holiday is Halloween. I like it because you get candy. You get to go out at night for candy. You go up to people's doors and say Trick or Treat. Then you get your candy. What I like most about Halloween is that you get to dress up in scary costumes.

My next favorite holiday is Thanksgiving. I like to go to my grandfather's house for Thanksgiving or to my aunt's house. It is fun at my aunt's house, too. I always get the wishbone from the turkey. We have a good meal. Then we stay and talk for a while. Then we leave.

My Love For You

By Misty Smith

My love for you I'd write up above. In a sky that's blue and makes me think of love.

My love for you, I know is true. Everyday, I think of you.

My love for you is like a star. Whenever we're apart, I wonder where you are. 'Cause when we're apart, it breaks my heart.

I love you so. It's just hard to show. I'm afraid my love for you, you will never have a chance to know.

Johnny Appleseed

By Lauren Spencer

Johnny Appleseed lived on a farm. He had a lot of apple trees on his farm. He loved to eat, pick and plant apples. And that is where he got his name, Johnny Appleseed. He also loved to eat plain apples, apple pies and apple juice.

Lauren Spencer, 7, a student at Pactolus Elementary School receives special mention.

Federal Facts

Secretary Of State

The office of secretary of state is the oldest member of the Cabinet. It was established in 1775 with Benjamin Franklin as the first director. At that time, the department was called the Committee on Secret Correspondence. It was 1789 that it became known as the State Department with Thomas Jefferson as the first secretary. As with all Cabinet members, the secretary of state must be appointed by the president and approved by the Senate. The secretary of state is 4th in line and the first Cabinet member in line to serve as president in an emergency. Besides serving as a Cabinet member, the secretary of state is on the National Security Council.

Approximately 22,500 people, both in the U.S. and overseas, work for the State Department. The Department of State is to advise the president on foreign affairs and relations and to carry out foreign policy. It handles business with other countries, negotiates treaties, deals with foreign ambassadors, and speaks for the United States in the United Nations. In addition, it informs the public about the foreign policy of the country. The Secretary of State or his/her representative will often do this by a televised press conference.

The Foreign Service Office is an agency of the State Department. Its duties include issuing passports and visas, the protection of Americans while overseas, and it helps promote trade with other nations. The Peace Corps receives help from the State Department. It encourages and helps to arrange educational and cultural exchanges with people of other countries and it deals with protocol. Protocol has to do with the etiquette of the people in government and the ceremonies held. Protocol is especially important when the leader of another country is visiting the United States.

The Secretary of State must work very closely with the president and with Congress. As our world becomes smaller because of easier travel, the work of the Secretary of State becomes more difficult.

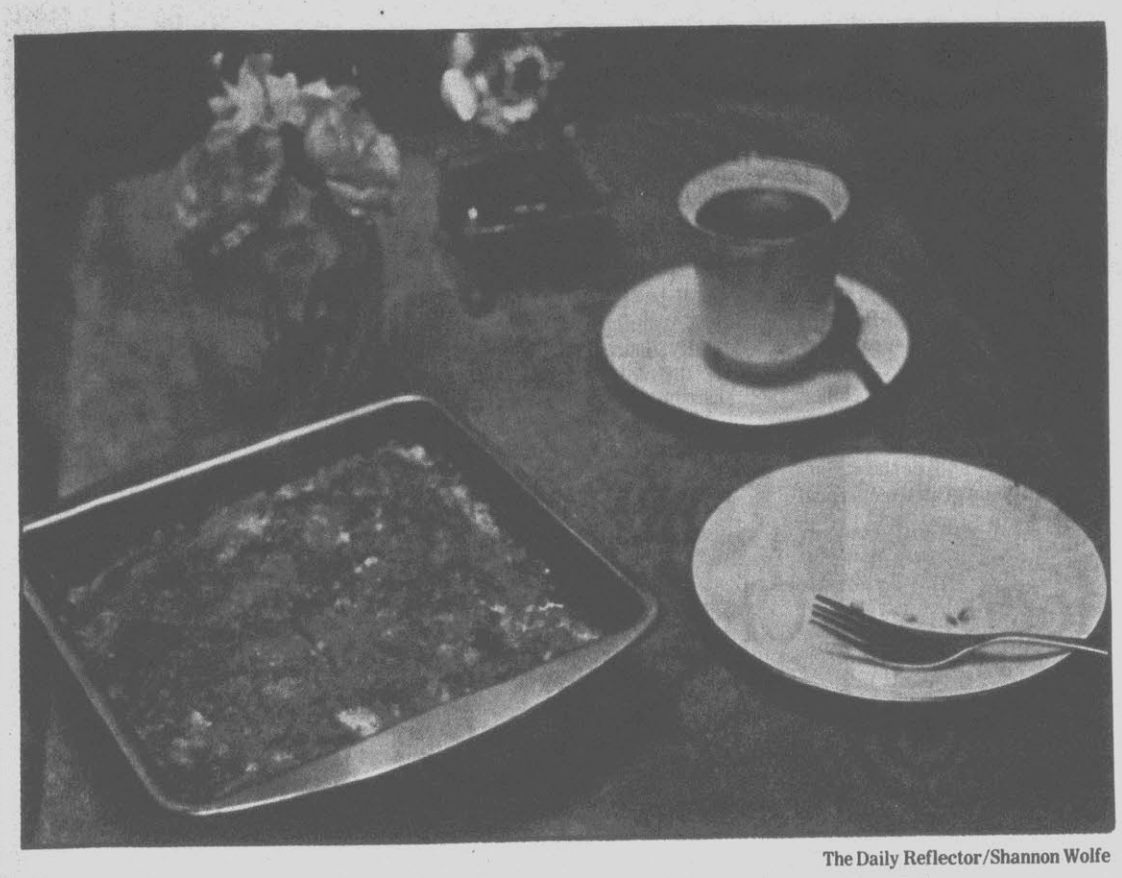
Simple, Tasty Coffee Cakes Often Fit The Occasion



The Daily Reflector/Shannon Wolfe

Apple Crumb Cake offers a great way to enjoy apples, a traditional favorite of the season

Multiple cake layers spread with rich buttercream and sprinkled with coconut, lusciously fluffy angel food, and dense devil's food slathered with a fudgy frosting, are all examples of traditional American dessert favorites.

There are times, however, when the creation of an elaborate, time-consuming masterpiece is either unnecessary or inappropriate, and you may prefer to opt for a basic cake that is both tasty and easy to prepare.

Simple coffee cakes, for instance, are a delightful addition to the breakfast table and, as an extra bonus, they also are well-suited for mid-day snacking and late-night noshing.

Typically, coffee cakes are firm-textured and are not covered with gooey frosting, which makes it easy to package individual pieces for on-the-go eating. For example, substituting a slice of the morning's leftover coffee cake for the usual sweet treat in your child's brown bag lunch (or your own) will provide an easily accomplished change of pace.

Or, for a late afternoon pick-me-up, take time out from a hectic day to relax with a cup of tea and a sliver of not-too-sweet coffee cake. As illustrated by the recipes below, which are culled from a variety of sources, assembling and baking a flavorful coffee cake can be executed easily — even by the inexperienced baker — with relatively little fuss.

Recipes which depend on yeast as the leavening agent will, of course, require additional time to allow the dough to rise. This method will result in a light, fine-textured cake which is likely to maintain its peak of freshness for a shorter period of time than a coffee cake that is made with baking powder and/or soda.

Apples are particularly evocative of autumn. The recipe for Apple Crumb Coffee Cake, reproduced from "Ida Bailey Allen's Best Loved Recipes of the American People," offers a delightful way to enjoy a traditional favorite of the season.

In Search Of Perfect Chocolate Chip Cookie

By Diane Stoneback
LAT/WP NEWS SERVICE

Chocolate chips, those lunch-box standards, after-school treats and good-night snacks, are the undisputed favorites of the cookie crowd.

Survey after survey has shown that more than 50 percent, and sometimes even 75 percent, of the people polled prefer the chocolate chip cookie to any other.

Although Americans have developed enough variations to set the Cookie Monster wild, Ruth Wakefield gets the credit for "discovering" this blue ribbon addition to American baking.

One day in 1930, when she was stirring up a batch of her "Butter Drop-Do's," she realized she was out of chopped nuts for the cookies. In a fit of what turned out to be creative genius, she broke off bits of a Nestle's semisweet chocolate bar and tossed them into the batter. Although Wakefield expected the chocolate to melt into the batter, the bits, though soft, retained their original shape. She named the new cookies "Chocolate Crispies" and served them to guests at her Toll House Inn in Whitman, Mass.

Before long, the recipe was published in a newspaper and sales of Nestle's chocolate bars climbed so much that company officials turned detective. They had to find out what was happening.

The corporate sleuths followed a trail that led right to Wakefield's door.

A few years later, Nestle bought the legal rights to use the Toll House trademark and began offering an early convenience food — little morsels of chocolate perfect for the cookies.

Plan Sensible Eating Habits Over Holidays

By Toni Tipton
LAT/WP NEWS SERVICE

The holiday season can be a time of extreme frustration for health watchers. So the American Heart Association is again offering its free recipe brochure "Holidays a la Heart" to the public.

The sixth edition of reduced fat, sodium and cholesterol recipes is designed to allow healthful eating during the holidays without sacrificing tastiness or variety.

"There's no need to face holiday feasts with the feeling that you're doomed either to major overeating or, in the name of good sense, to Spartan self-denial," said Nancy Becker, registered dietitian and chairwoman for the American Heart Association Greater Los Angeles Affiliate nutrition committee.

Among the dozen recipes in the booklet are those for holiday turkey breast, apple stuffing, Sweet Potato Cups and hot spicy cider. For dessert there's a choice of hot raisin spice pudding, Marie's peach cake or yogurt parfait.

To order a copy of the brochure, send a business-size, self-addressed stamped envelope to Holiday Menu, American Heart Association, 3550 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles 90010.

HOLIDAY DEVILED UN-EGGS

2 1/2 teaspoons prepared mustard
1 teaspoon honey

Q. Some time ago I was told it was not wise to drink beverages during a meal. It was explained that liquids cause solid food to go through the digestion process more quickly and rob the body of proper nutrition. Is this fact or falsity? J.L., Greenville.

A. Your question is a very good one. There are many customs and some beliefs about mixing food and liquids. Some parents withhold liquids from children during meals to ensure that they eat enough food. Those children often enter their adult years with that habit without understanding the reasoning their parents used. They didn't want them to fill up and not have room for vegetables! I've also known parents to not allow milk drinking until the end of the meal. Their children were milk lovers and would drink more milk, if allowed, that the food budget could stand. Some cultural food habits encourage the drinking of liquids, including wine, throughout the meal to enhance the sensations of the food. And many fad diets revolve around drinking or not drinking during the meals. And as your question indicates, some believe there is a nutritional-medical reason to avoid liquids until you have finished eating. As we have said so many times in these columns, we are all a bit different in both our habits and how our bodies react to different substances and amounts of food, ingredients and liquids. There is no one perfect answer or food habit!

Let's review how food is digested to understand why you might have been advised not to drink fluids while eating. Proper digestion, which allows proper absorption of nutrients, begins in your mouth. Many enzymes and hormones help us digest our foods properly. Fat, carbohydrates and proteins in the food are acted on by these enzymes. As the food moves through the stages of digestion, hormones are also activated to further help the process.

The longer foods are allowed to stay in the mouth, the more these enzymes can act on the foods. The salivary glands, in the mouth, secrete a watery fluid which moistens the food and begins digestion. The enzyme amylase begins carbohydrate digestion. Glands at the base of the tongue secrete lipuse which starts fat breakdown. Chewing food well helps to moisten and then break down the foods so enzymes in the saliva may act upon them more easily. Each stage of digestion (through the mouth, stomach, liver and pancreas) has it's own enzymes and hormones for further breakdown of the foods you have eaten. If you consume large quantities of fluids with meals, and if you do not allow enough chewing time, you could have some problems absorbing all the nutrients your food is providing you.

The GI tract is very intricate and for each of us it functions a bit differently. So, some may have no problem eating and drinking together. Others, for example, people who have "dumping syndrome" may need to restrict fluids while eating. A safe bet is to chew your foods thoroughly. Eat slowly to give your GI tract time to process the food. And, sip lightly, if you drink with the meal. Fluid is essential in digestion, but not necessarily in large quantities taken with the meal. Many have found by drinking prior to or after meals, their digestive functions run more smoothly.

Why not face up to the calender and its seasonal predictions. Anticipate swift-moving holiday weeks with a parade of friends and family. Whether your hospitality is perfectly planned or completely spontaneous, one fact is certain: today's busy lifestyle doesn't allow the luxury of devoting unlimited time to food preparation. So, keep this successfull strategy in mind: rely on the ease of informal buffets and tailor menus to quick-fix convenience foods. This is where the versatile cold pack cheese comes to the rescue as a classic entertainer throughout the holidays.

Perhaps you've already discovered the rich taste of distinctive sharp chedder cheese and its smooth spreadability on toast or crackers and as an ideal recipe ingredient. This season, offer guests a new taste experience that may very well compete with the tradtional large party cheese ball -- mini cheese balls. They're flavorful finger foods made from naturally aged chedder cheese and chedder marbled with port wine. Best of all, there is no recipe for these nutricious snacks because they come conveniently packaged by the dozen in local markets.

If an edible centerpiece intrigues you, mini cheese balls can be held rogether with toothpicks and arranged in circular layers, pyramid style, on a serving platter.

Expand your stock of convenience foods to include the few ingredients you'll need for a fast and fabulous Hot Crab Dip. It begins with natural sharp chedder cold pack cheese that comes in handy containers in the dairy case or by the piece in the specialty section. Reach into your freezer for frozen crabmeat and have a few other staples ready to go. Garnish the prepared dip with scallion, offering a choice of raw vegetable dippers: brilliant red cherry tomatoes, sugar snap peas and baby carrots. You'll be sure to collect a dividend of compliments.

HOT CRAB DIP

2 Tbsp. butter or margarine
2 Tbsp. flour
1 cup milk
1 cup (8 oz.) sharp chedder cold pack cheese
1/4 cup chopped green onion
2 tsp. Worcetershire sauce
1 Tbsp. parsley flakes
1 6-oz. pkg. frozen crabmeat, thawed, drained and flaked

In medium saucepan, melt butter. Add flour; mix well. Gradually add milk; cook stirring constantly, until slightly thickened. Add cheese; stir until melted. Blend in green onion, Worcetershire sauce, parsley flakes and crabmeat. Heat just until bubbly. Yields 2 1/2 cups.

Rice Pudding — Updating An Old Favorite

By Colleen Pierre
LAT/WP NEWS SERVICE

Rice pudding may have been a common dessert in earlier times, but it is now on the endangered species list.

Yet rice pudding is a good, four-food-groups food. It is made of eggs (meat), milk (dairy), rice (bread and cereals) and raisins (fruits and veggies), with some added sugar and spice for flavor.

It is not a low-calorie food, but it is nutrient-dense. That means you get a lot protein, complex carbohydrates, vitamins A, D and B-complex, iron and trace minerals for about the same calories as seven chocolate kisses.

With all those pluses, it is worth getting this old-fashioned favorite off the endangered list. And in the process, modernize your favorite recipe. For example:

—Reduce cholesterol by using egg substitute or egg whites.

—Decrease the fat content by using skim or low-fat milk.

—Reduce the sodium by eliminating salt.

—Substitute apricots or other dried fruit for raisins.

Delicious warm or cold, rice pudding can be a snack or dessert. And, it is a perfect instant breakfast. While it takes about an hour to make, once done, it offers quick nutrition all week long. If you do not have a spare hour, add cold cooked rice to instant vanilla pudding — or to chocolate pudding. Or buy it at the deli if you can afford (nutritionally) the egg yolks and whole milk.

And while you are at it, make an extra batch for the older people you know.

Foods like rice pudding, bread pudding and custard top their list of favorites. Such foods are especially beneficial for the frail elderly, who often fail to eat because modern food is unappealing or too difficult to prepare.

If you decide to make some rice pudding and you are in an experimental mood, consider trying this brown rice pudding from Jane Brody's "Good Food Book."

FRUITED BROWN RICE PUDDING

1/2 cup non-fat dry milk
1/3 cup sugar
1/4 teaspoon salt
2 1/2 cups low-fat or skim milk
2 eggs (or 2 egg whites and 1 whole egg)
3/4 teaspoon vanilla
2 cups cooked brown rice (2/3 cup raw rice cooked in 1 2-3 cups water)
1/2 cup raisins
1/2 cup dried apricots, coarsely chopped
Nutmeg

In a large bowl, combine non-fat dry milk, sugar and salt.

Add low-fat or skim milk, 2 eggs (or egg whites and whole egg) and

Coffee Cakes Perfect When Occasion Calls For Simple Desserts

APPLE CRUMB CAKE
1/2 cup sugar
3 tablespoons shortening at room temperature
1 egg, beaten
1 cup flour
1 1/2 teaspoons baking powder
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/4 cup milk
The filling:
2 cups canned applesauce
1/2 cup brownulated sugar
1 teaspoon lemon juice
1/2 teaspoon ground cinnamon
1/8 teaspoon ground cloves
Crumb topping:
1/2 cup sifted flour
1/3 cup brownulated sugar
3 tablespoons butter or margarine
1/2 cup chopped pecan meats

To make the cake, mix together the sugar and shortening; add egg. Beat well. Sift together flour, baking powder and salt; add alternately with milk to first mixture. Pour into an oiled 8x8x2-inch pan.

Combine the applesauce, brownulated sugar, lemon juice, ground cinnamon and ground cloves to make the filling and spoon it over the cake batter.

Mix the sifted flour, brownulated sugar, margarine and pecans until crumbly. Spread evenly over the applesauce layer. Bake 50 minutes in moderate oven. Serves six to 10.

The recipe for Sour Cream Coffee Cake which appears below is reproduced from Charles Patteson's and Craig Emerson's "Kentucky Cooking." The authors describe this treat as a "delicious, buttery, nut-filled coffee cake (that) has a texture rather like a moist, creamy pound cake." They recommend serving this cake warm for brunch or room temperature with coffee or tea.

SOUR CREAM COFFEE CAKE
1/2 cup (1 stick) butter
3/4 cup sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
3 eggs
2 cups all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
1 teaspoon baking soda
1 cup sour cream
Filling:
2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons brown sugar
2 teaspoons ground cinnamon

Make the cake by creaming together the butter, sugar and vanilla. Add the eggs, one at a time, beating well after each addition. Sift together the flour, baking powder and baking soda. Add to the creamed mixture alternately with the sour cream and blend well after each addition.

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Butter and lightly flour a 10-inch tube pan. Spread half of the batter in the pan and dot with half of the filling. Cover with the remaining batter and dot the top with the remaining filling. Bake for about 50 minutes, until a toothpick emerges clean. Cool on a rack for 10 minutes before unmolding. Serves 8.

The fresh flavor of Blueberry Coffeecake Scones can be enjoyed year-round if you opt to thaw and drain frozen blueberries when fresh ones aren't available. this recipe for individual cake-scones is reproduced from "Simply Scones" by Leslie Weiner and Barbara Albright.

BLUEBERRY COFFEECAKE SCONES
2 1/4 cups all-purpose flour
1/2 cup granulated sugar
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 cup unsalted butter, chilled
2 large eggs
1/4 cup milk
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1/4 teaspoon grated lemon peel
1 1/2 cups fresh or thawed, drained frozen blueberries
Crumb topping:
3/4 cup all-purpose flour
1/4 cup firmly packed light brown sugar
1/8 teaspoon ground cinnamon
1/4 cup unsalted butter, chilled

Preheat oven to 375 degrees. Lightly butter an 11-inch-diameter circle in the center a baking sheet.

In a large bowl, stir together the flour, sugar, baking powder and salt. Cut in butter into 1/2-inch cubes and distribute them over the flour mixture. With a pastry blender or two knives used scissors fashion, cut in the butter until the mixture resembles coarse crumbs. In a small bowl, stir together the eggs, milk, vanilla and lemon peel. With lightly floured hands, gently knead in the blueberries until evenly distributed.

To prepre the topping, in a small bowl stir together the flour, brown sugar and cinnamon. Cut the butter, into 1/2-inch cubes and distribute them over the flour mixture. With a pastry blender or two knives used scissors fashion, cut in the butter until the mixture resembles coarse crumbs. Sprinkle the topping mixture evenly over the dough to cover. Press crumb topping lightly into the dough. With a serrated knife, cut circle into 8 wedges. Bake for 30 to 35 minutes, until the top is lightly browned and a cake tester or toothpick inserted into the center of a scone comes out clean.

Remove the baking sheet to a wire rack to cool for 15 minutes. Using a spatula, transfer the scones to the wire rack to cool. Recut into wedges, if necessary. Serve warm, or cool completely and store in an airtight container. Makes 8 scones.

The Honey Twist recipe is reproduced from "The Culinary Arts Institute Encyclopedia Cookbook," edited by Ruth Berolzheimer. It is yeast-leavened and is quite simple to make, provided the instructions are followed carefully.

HONEY TWIST
1 cup milk, scalded
1/4 cup shortening
1/2 cup sugar
1 teaspoon salt
2 cakes yeast
1/4 cup lukewarm water
2 eggs, beaten
5 to 6 cups sifted flour

Pour milk over shortening, sugar and salt. Crumble yeast into lukewarm water to soften. Cool milk to lukewarm, add yeast and eggs. Beat in flour to make a soft dough, turn out on a floured board and knead until smooth. Place in a greased bowl, cover and let rise until doubled in bulk. When light, shape into a long roll about 1 inch in diameter. Coil the roll into a greased cake pan beginning at the outside edge and covering the bottom. Brush with Honey Topping. Let rise until doubled in bulk. Bake in moderately hot oven (375 degrees) 25 minutes. Makes 1 large twist.

HONEY TOPPING
1/4 cup butter
2/3 cup confectioner's sugar
1 egg white
2 tablespoons honey, warmed

Cream ingredients together and brush over twist before baking.

Search Is On For The Perfect Chocolate Chip Cookie

store baking aisle this fall and winter as Nestle spends the 1988-89 baking season celebrating the 50th anniversary of the semi-sweet chocolate morsel.)

Nestle ought to throw a party for these chocolate niblets. They are currently flowing out of the bags at a rate of 168 million a day and are being poured into desserts, cakes, cupcakes, muffins and breads. But the greatest number still are destined for cookies.

Although the recipe for the original Toll House cookie has been printed on more than two billion packages of Toll House semi-sweet chocolate morsels and is regarded as the "first and last word" in chocolate chip cookie recipes, it is only the beginning of the story.

The availability of mint chocolate chips, milk chocolate chips, peanut butter chips, white chocolate chips and gourmet-sized chocolate Chunks and Treasures (for those who like a little cookie with their chocolate) are part of the story.

The coming introduction of Nestle Toll House Ready to Bake Cookies (enabling consumers to bake as many or as few of the preformed scoops of frozen dough as they need) increases the possibilities for those who love the cookies enough to buy bag after bag of commercially baked chocolate chip cookies and rolls of slice-and-bake chocolate chip cookie dough but will not bake them from scratch.

But the availability of "convenience" cookies does not begin to tell the story of the thousands of people still making their own special versions in home kitchens. That is where a new book called "The Search for the Perfect Chocolate Chip Cookie" comes in. Page after page of recipes and anecdotes detail the American love affair with this cookie.

Author Gwen Steege wrote the book to chronicle a contest that began as a small promotion for a Massachusetts inn.

Word of the contest spread quickly and before long, there were entries from 38 states, Italy, Canada and Mexico.

Before the last prize-winning cookies crumbled in the mouths of some distinguished judges (including two editors from Chocolatier magazine), 2,600 entries arrived.

With every envelope opened and recipe studied there came proof that variations on the basic Toll House cookie are practically infinite.

Some recipes produced slightly different results than the original Toll House recipe simply because of differences in the kinds or proportions of shortening, flour or sugar used.

Some of the humble golden cookies had an added splash or two of coconut or almond flavoring, a combination of different kinds of chips or a hint of dried fruit or apple butter.

Cooks whose love of chocolate is insatiable stirred up recipes for chocolate-chocolate chip cookies. Still others embellished their creations with sour cream, orange or orange juice, Rice Krispies, cornflakes, marshmallows, cherry preserves and peanut butter.

"Earthy crunchy varieties" containing granola, oatmeal, whole wheat flour, bean sprouts, bee pollen, zucchini, banana, pineapple, nuts and pureed pinto beans were more than balanced out by a host of sinful entries loaded with imported chocolate, tons of butter and liqueurs ranging from Irish Mist and Frangelico to Kahlua, Grand Marnier and Tia Maria.

The Orchard's front desk staff had the initial mouth-watering task of sorting entries according to ingredients and then passed them to Heather Andrus, the resort's pastry chef.

Varieties Of Rice Offer Nutrition Choices

By Colleen Pierre
LAT/WP NEWS SERVICE

When my friends Steve and Barbara were married recently, we threw bird seed instead of rice. This trend is triggered by human safety concerns (rice is slippery underfoot) and animal safety concerns (processed white rice is low-nutrition bird feed).

All of this led me to thinking about rice in the American diet. We use very little, compared to Asians, to whom rice is synonymous with food. Jane Brody's "Good Food Book" says that the average Asian consumes 400 hundred pounds of rice each year. Per capita consumption in the United States is less than 10 pounds and that includes all products made from rice.

Should we eat more rice? Rice is one of those "high complex carbohydrate" foods that health professionals promote, and for good reason. Rice adds interest and variety to the diet, and contributes significantly to overall nutrition. Not all forms of rice are created equal, however, and the vitamin, mineral and fiber content varies with the type of processing.

Brown rice is the most nutritious. It is the whole grain, unpolished, with only the husk and a small amount of bran removed. It has a stronger, nuttier flavor than white rice, and offers both vitamin E and fiber, along with protein and B vitamins. Cooking time is 45 to 60 minutes, which may, at first glance, deter otherwise health-conscious diners who must survive on instant meals. The obvious solution is to cook the rice in advance, then reheat it for meals during the week. This is perfect for oriental-style fried rice which calls for starting with cold cooked rice.

Or you can make cold rice and bean salad — a high protein, meatless entree.

The second variety is converted rice which has been steam pressure processed before milling to force some vitamins deep into the starchy center of the kernel. Milling then removes the bran and some vitamins, and reduces the fiber and protein content. "Enriching" restores three B vitamins and some iron.

Regular-milled white rice has been fully stripped of its husk, bran, polish and germ. If you are going to use white rice, be sure to buy the enriched type. Do not make the mistake of pre-rinsing. The enriching vitamins that have been sprayed onto the kernels are easily washed off.

Instant or pre-cooked rice contains the fewest nutrients because it is the most highly processed. It, too, comes in a more desirable, enriched form. Instant rice works for busy people because preparation time is so short.

Does all this mean you have to eat brown rice? Not really, but it would not hurt to try. All enriched rice offers protein, iron, B vitamins and complex carbohydrate in an easily digestable form that is appropriate for all family members.

Rice combined with wheat, sesame seeds, or legumes such as soybeans, peanuts, kidney beans, garbanzos, blackeyed peas or lima beans produces protein equal in quality to meat, chicken or fish. The combination is naturally low in sodium, cholesterol, fat and saturated fat. When you substitute a rice combination dish for a meat-centered meal, you do your heart a favor.

COLD RICE SALAD

2 cups cooked rice
1 15-ounce can of red kidney beans (well-drained)
1/4 cup red onion, chopped
1/4 cup green pepper, chopped
1/4 cup black olives, sliced
1 tablespoon olive oil
1/4 to 1/2 cup low calorie Italian salad dressing
Freshly ground black pepper

Combine ingredients and toss with salad dressing and black pepper. Chill. Serve on romaine lettuce or spinach leaves. Add a whole-wheat roll with margarine and a bowl of tomato soup. Finish with a crunchy, red delicious apple for a well-balanced meal that offers plenty of nutrients, even if you do use white rice.

Overcoming A Fear Of New Foods

By Sujata Banerjee
LAT/WP NEWS SERVICE

Why some people stick to meat and potatoes — or venture on to Lychee nuts and Gorgonzola — is a question Marci Pelchat wants to answer.

Pelchat, an associate psychology professor at Washington College in Chestertown, Md., studies food neophobia, or fear of new foods. Through experiments in the laboratory and in student settings, she introduces novel foods to people. What she is discovering could change the ways parents get kids to eat string beans.

"A new dessert is no problem," Pelchat says. "When you get into fruits and vegetables, there's more resistance. With protein foods, such as meat and fish, you get into a lot of taboos — there is cultural baggage to begin with, and when you don't know what you are eating, it really is scary."

To find out what separates meek diners from the bold, Pelchat conducts experiments at Washington College's student dining hall. In the beginning of the school year, before freshmen know Pelchat and her motives, the professor sneaks unusual foods into the cafeteria and watches whether students pick them up. Last year, she offered servings of blue corn chips alongside regular yellow corn chips. The first third of students to come to dinner were greeted by a sign advertising "Indigo Xaz Chips." Pelchat says that she made up the name to give no clue to what the food was.

When a second group of students came through, she changed the sign to read "Indigo Xaz Chips — a good source of iron." A third group of students read only "Indigo Xaz Chips — Nine out 10 students say tastes great."

Pelchat found that students were more likely to select the blue corn chips given information that it tasted good. Information about nutritious qualities did not attract students, and in some cases decreased their interest.

"This shows people are more interested in how something tastes than whether it is good for you," Pelchat says. "It supports the conclusion that people think when something is good for you, it is bad — such as medicine."

Conventional psychology has reasoned that people avoid foods because of fear of poisoning and illness. Pelchat says that most people, unless they are in a forest or exotic food bazaar, do not believe they will be poisoned. Their fear is much simpler: that what they will put in their mouth will taste bad.

"It's not a rational behavior," Pelchat says. She says that rejections of food are either sensory affective, where someone really does not like chocolate, or done for instrumental reasons — chocolate may give them an allergic reaction or make them fat. Sensory affective desires are always stronger than goal-oriented instrumental ones.

Sensory memory plays a big role in taste aversions.

"Many people have had the experience of eating something, bouncing around in the back of a car, and throwing it up," Pelchat says. "People are rationally aware food did not cause illness, but have an aversion to the food that triggered their sickness. Taste aversions aren't reversed easily, but if they do try the food again and don't get sick, it reverses."

Pelchat says that as people grow older, they become more open to new experiences and new foods. Children mimic their parents, in eating as well as other habits.

How Teens Can Smarten Up On Trips To Marketplace

By Rose Dosti
LAT/WP NEWS SERVICE

The average supermarket contains about 20,000 items from which the consumer must choose. Is the consumer confused by the array? Are consumers making the right choices for the health and welfare of the family?

Bettye Nowlin, representative of the American Dietetic Association in Los Angeles, said that there is reason for concern.

"With seven out of 10 mothers — more than 50 percent of all married women with children — working outside the home, teen-agers have stepped in to shop for the family groceries," Nowlin said. "This concerns us because the supermarket is a confusing place to shop if you don't know what you are doing."

While teen-agers are doing a fairly decent job of shopping, knowledge and expertise are required to make nutritionally wise food choices that affect the entire family, Nowlin said. "Since many teen-agers are doing most of the family grocery shopping, they do need advice," she said.

A study conducted by the Teenage Research Unlimited in Lake Forest, Ill., indicates that in 1988 teen-agers, the prime family shopper today, will be spending $47.7 billion of the family funds for groceries and other household items, most of it in the grocery store. The study showed that teen-agers spend 1.38 hours a week shopping for the family, about 1.05 for males and 1.72 for females. The teen shoppers purchase just about every item a family might need at a grocery store, the study showed. But they may or may not be purchasing Mom's favorite brand products and they are making independent product choices.

Peter Zollo, executive vice president of Teenage Research Unlimited, said that "The studies are showing that more and more young shoppers are making major independent decisions in the supermarket and the numbers are on the increase. And they are showing a sense of responsibility. When they go to shop, they go with a generic list prepared by mothers. However, 56 percent of the shoppers are splitting their decisions between brands Mom buys and those they themselves decide upon. Only 11 percent follow Mom's shopping list exclusively.

"We're still exploring the group who does not ever purchase their parent's brand choices," Zollo said.

Teen-agers wield extraordinary influence on what is purchased, whether or not they do the shopping, the study showed. About 28 percent of the females studied have some influence over what brand detergent a parent will come home with. About 47 percent influence their parent's purchase of cookies, 32 percent of salty snacks, 55 percent of cereal, 44 percent of juice, 20 percent of soup, 72 percent of soft drinks, 26 percent of frozen dinners, 28 percent of salad dressing, 11 percent of canned pasta and 38 percent of cheese.

"The marketers need to reach teens through advertising in teen media, and develop advertising executions that appeal to teens and very few are doing it," Zollo said. "These numbers will only get higher each year. Because of mothers working outside the home we can expect more and more teens spending the family grocery budget, whether we like it or not. After all, teen-agers have the time to spend waiting in a grocery line. It's a responsibility that is being forced upon them." Also interesting, Zollo said, is that the teen population is rapidly declining, so per capital expenditure is actually higher than before. "That gives stronger meaning to the $47.7 billion they spend in the market," Zollo said.

(The teen-age population is expected to continue to decrease until 1992, at which time there will be an increase until the turn-of-the-century, Zollo said).

Teen-agers, Zollo said, are far more sophisticated shoppers than is often believed. "Our studies are showing that their attitudes toward health and important nutritional issues such as sodium intake, are as much a concern to them as their parents.

"They worry about what ingredients go into their bodies these days," he said. In fact, about one-third of the kids are more concerned in 1988 than they were last year as to whether the cereal they eat is good for them.

About 42 percent also purchased frozen meals. About 39 percent brought home salad dressing, 42 percent cheese and yogurt, 51 percent cereal and 28 percent rice.

Even though teen-oriented groceries are high on the list, they also are becoming good label shoppers.

Among the teen-oriented products strictly for their own use, the study indicated the following: 32 percent purchase cookies for themselves; 35 percent purchase potato chips; 22 percent tortilla chips; 33 percent ice cream; 5 percent buy salad dressings for their own use and 7 percent buy frozen dinners for themselves.

In an effort to help the consumer learn how to make nutritious food selections from the vast number of items in markets day, the California Dietetic Association came up with pointers for healthful "supermarket survival."

"Shopping the outer limits of the grocery store is one way to assure selecting a variety of nutritious foods from the four food groups (fruits-vegetables, grains, meats and dairy products), and avoid foods too high in fat, salt, sugar and calories," Nowlin said.

The usual layout of the supermarket places produce, meat, bakery and dairy products in the outer limits, making it easy to shop the periphery of the market for the basic four food groups before entering the inner zones, where much of the impulse buying can take place.

One way to avoid the pitfalls of impulse grocery shopping within the danger zones, is to become a label reader. "Labels will tell you which foods are high in fat, salt, sugar and calories," Nowlin said.

Here are Nowlin's tips for wise supermarket shopping:

—Shop at one or two stores to save time. "You can get in and out of a store faster if you know the layout," Nowlin said.

—Have a shopping list and save up to 20 percent on the grocery bill, Nowlin said. "Use coupons only if you would normally buy the product and know it is a saving."

—Try the less expensive generic items, Nowlin said. "Many such items are just as nutritious as the more costly brand-name products."

—When you need sound food and nutrition advice, consult a registered dietitian. Or if there is a question about food safety, call the public health department.
