Deputies Swoop Down On Plane, Van In Greene

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SNOW HILL — Greene and Lenoir County sheriff's deputies fired shots at a van Tuesday after a small plane made an emergency landing in a rural field near Snow Hill, officials say.

The plane, low on fuel, had landed about 4 p.m. in the field near a hog farm, said Greene County Sheriff Early Whaley. When deputies approached a van parked nearby, it sped away.

The deputies fired two to four shots at the van's left tire to stop the vehicle, Whaley said. The van collided with a patrol car and nearly hit a Lenoir County deputy as it sped away, he said. No one was injured.

"With (the driver) taking off at a high rate of speed and in a reckless manner, it led us to believe it was a drug situation," Whaley said. But it was later determined that the pilot of the plane and the driver "had no connections with each other," he said.

The vehicle stopped after turning into a hog lagoon, a ½-acre area where hog manure is dumped from the nearby farm.

The van was pulled by a wrecker from the lagoon of hog manure, he said.

The incident occurred about five miles east of Snow Hill and less than five miles north of the Lenoir County line.

The driver of the van, Kenneth Ralph Smith, 44, of Snow Hill, was charged with assault with a deadly weapon, possession of drug paraphernalia and obstructing and delaying a police officer in the line of duty, Whaley said. No charges were filed against the pilot, he said.

Re-Entry Snag Holds Up Soyuz

Computer Problem Mars End Of Soviets' Record Space Trek

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — A Soyuz space capsule carrying two Soviets who set a space endurance record and a Frenchman landed safely today after a three-hour re-entry delay caused by an overloaded computer, Tass said.

The official Soviet news agency said the craft, which separated on schedule from the Mir space station earlier today, touched down at 12:57 p.m. Moscow time 60 miles from the Baikonur space center in Soviet Central Asia.

"Immediate medical check-ups showed the cosmonauts are feeling well," Radio Moscow said.

The landing ended mankind's longest space mission. Vladimir Titov and Musa Manarov had been space for just under one year. Jean-Loup Chretien of France, who came down with them, spent nearly a month aboard the Mir.

The Tass news agency said Tuesday that the cosmonauts had completed one year in orbit, but editors of the news agency said today they had received incorrect information from Mission Control about the length of the flight.

Manarov and Titov left the Baikonur Cosmodrome in Kazakhstan at 2:18 p.m. on Dec. 21, 1987, making their flight about 80 minutes short of a full year.

Radio Moscow said Titov and Manarov were undergoing tests to determine how well they had endured their lengthy flight. Soviet officials have said the ability of cosmonauts to endure long periods in space is a key to a manned flight to Mars they hope will take place shortly after the turn of the century.

Titov and Manarov replaced a crew including cosmonaut Yuri Romanenko last December and went on to break Romanenko's record of 326 days in space.

The official Tass news agency said the crew switched to a back-up computer program after a fault developed in the operation of the on-board computer. The main engine fired to slow the capsule at 12:08 p.m., and the living quarters and instrument module were jetisoned, Tass said.

As expected, radio contact with the craft was lost between a height of 90 miles to 50 miles because the craft was enveloped by a plasma cloud. The capsule's parachutes opened at a height of about six miles.

Soviet television reported before today's touchdwon that "automated telementry showed an overload in the computing complex," of a system aboard the Soyuz TM-6 capsule. It provided no details.

It was not clear whether re-entry was computer-guided or if the cosmonauts switched over to manual control to guide the ship to Earth as Tass had said they might. There also was no immediate word on the exact function of the computer, or the nature of the overload.

On Sept. 7, equipment and human error delayed by a full day the landing of another Soyuz capsule that had separated from Mir. In that incident, veteran cosmonaut Vladimir Lyakhov and Afghan Abdul Ahad Mohmand ran dangerously low on food and air before landing safely.

At the time, Soviet media reported the capsule's life-support system could hold out for two days but space officials said the cosmonauts could make it stretch to a week. But today's mission carried three cosmonauts instead of the two on board the September mission.

Winter Comes, And Some Say It's Time To Find Different Locales

By Jerry Raynor
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

As winter officially arrives today, many area people have made or are planning trips to warmer climes for the holidays. Some, with different inclinations, have opted for cooler places with snow skiing opportunities.

The prediction of mild weather in the 50s and maybe even low 60s for the next few days, including Christmas Day, apparently has not been a factor in decisions to get away from Greenville for a few days or a week or two.

Spokesmen at several travel agencies in Greenville concur that the biggest travel lure this holiday season is for travel to the Caribbean area — some trips planned by cruise ship, others by air travel.

Personnel at Quixote Travels Inc., Travel Express and Greenville Travel Center all named a number of island destinations in the Caribbean as favorite holiday travel sites. Places chosen by most travelers are the U.S. Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, and the Bahamas.

Disneyworld in Orlando, Fla., is the biggest stateside holiday travel lure for area residents, with a few planning visits to Las Vegas, the agents said.

Travel packages as gifts were reported in a few instances. The spokesman at Quixote Travels mentioned a cruise gift package that was arranged for eight local travelers to the Bahamas and a gift trip for 10 to Disneyworld.

Mostly, however, holidays trips are gifts by individuals, couples and families to themselves — a chance to treat themselves to the luxury of pleasures through traveling, the agency representatives said.

All three agencies said that because of high costs and the weakness of the dollar the amount of travel to European destinations is slight — with most trips to Europe being for the purpose of visiting relatives. Very little holiday travel reservations have been made locally for trips to Pacific and Asian countries.

At the Pitt-Greenville Airport, holiday flights out of Greenville are steady but not rushed, according to manager Jim Turcotte. He said that because of the length of the combined Christmas holiday and semester break for East Carolina University students, most students have time to drive rather than fly.

"It's a far different picture from the brief Thanksgiving holiday, when the impact of numbers is very heavy," Turcotte said. "The peak of the holiday flights here at the airport will be just after Christmas when many travelers will be arriving back in Greenville at about the same time."

This year, nearer-at-home ski excursions are a popular holiday travel venture. A growing number of ski enthusiasts from the flatlands of the Coastal Plains are heading for one-day, two day or longer trips to ski resorts in North Carolina, Virginia and Tennessee, either on their own or by organized tours.

Jimmy Wynne, who heads a Winterville agency specializing in ski trips, said most of the trips he organizes are to resorts in the mountains of Virginia. These winter trips, Wynne said, should pick up in numbers in January and February following the holidays.

Warren Will Seek Limits On Session

An effort to strictly limit the length of the 1990 short session of the General Assembly will be made by Rep. Ed Warren when the Legislature convenes for the 1989 session in January, the Greenville legislator said Wednesday.

Warren said his effort to limit the length of the short session — by introducing a resolution in the House to strictly limit the items eligible for consideration during the 1990 short session — is based on the costs involved.

According to Warren, the total operating costs of the General Assembly short session in 1988 — a 40-day period from June 2 through July 12 — was about $2.65 million. Ongoing costs (to support permanent staff, the computer system and building maintenance, whether the General Assembly is in session or not), accounted for $1.09 million of the total, he said, while the additional session costs amounted to about $1.56 million.

The ongoing operating costs of the General Assembly during the period from June 2 through June 30 was about $27,000 a day for June 1988, while the ongoing daily costs for July was about $28,000. The additional daily costs for the 1988 short session, Warren said, amounted to about $39,000 a day.

According to a draft of the resolution, only bills directly affecting the state budget (bills appropriating money and changing state tax laws), bills put in conference committee during the 1989 long session (as long as one or both houses had not already rejected a conference report), bills implementing recommendations of committees (other than constitutional amendments) or noncontroversial local bills could be considered during the short session.

The resolution would also allow joint resolutions, appointments and other housekeeping action, he said.

South Korea Frees 281 Prisoners

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEOUL, South Korea — The government released 281 political prisoners today as part of a sweeping amnesty and the freed dissidents vowed to topple President Roh Tae-woo and drive U.S. forces out of South Korea.

Roh ordered the amnesty involving 2,015 "politically motivated offenders" as part of efforts to defuse nationwide furor over demands for the punishment of former president Chun Doo-hwan for human rights abuses and corruption under his authoritarian regime.

In addition to the releases, the Justice Ministry said the civil rights of 1,581 dissidents had been restored, the sentences of 92 people reduced and 61 fugitive radical students dropped from police wanted lists.

Dissident leaders charged that 300 political prisoners remained in jail and dismissed the amnesty as a government trick to perpetuate its control.

Brook Valley Zoning Sparks Controversy

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A controversial request to rezone the entrance to one of the community's most prestigious subdivisions met overwhelming opposition from the city's planning board Tuesday.

At its monthly meeting at City Hall, the Planning and Zoning Commission voted 7-1 to recommend that the City Council deny a request by Bill Clark to rezone two, two-acre tracts leading into Brook Valley. The tracts are located on both sides of Oxford Road at the intersection of N.C. 33 just east of Greenville.

Approximately 40 residents of Brook Valley attended the meeting in opposition to the request, which calls for both properties to be rezoned from RA-20 (residential/agriculture) to O&I II (office and institutional).

According to the city's Zoning Ordinance, O&I II zoning provides as permitted uses the operation of such entities as banks and savings and loan institutions, funeral homes, churches, medical clinics, libraries, museums, flower shops, and photography studios.

The request, along with the commission's recommendation for denial, will now be forwarded to the City Council for final consideration at the council's next monthly meeting Jan. 12.

Ten members of the neighborhood voiced opposition to the request during a public hearing on the matter.

Wade Harmon of Christenbury Drive described Brook Valley as a single-home, residential area and said commercial and business establishments adjacent to the subdivision would be completely out of character and contrary to all previous planning decisions.

"Certainly it might hurt property values and certainly hurt the attractiveness of the community," he said.

Julian Vainright, a 22-year resident of Brook Valley, said safety is an issue which concerned many Brook Valley residents when pondering the rezoning request.

"If a commercial venture of any kind is put there, it's going to pull more traffic through the Brook Valley area and as you all know, those streets were not designed for through traffic," he said.

A representative of the city planning staff told commission members that the staff has no opposition to the request.

Staff planner Constance Callahan said O&I II zoning is intended to serve as a kind of buffer, providing offices as a transitional use between commercial and residential uses.

She said the city has previously rezoned other entrances to residential subdivisions to O&I II, citing Lynndale, Club Pines and Belvedere as examples.

She also said the staff was not opposed to the request because Bell Branch creek acts as as a natural buffer, both tracts are not conducive to residential development and O&I II zoning along N.C. 33 will not encourage strip commercial development along that major thoroughfare.

Commission member Ruth Leggett agreed that safety is a valid concern when considering the request and said that when traveling on N.C. 33 from the east, it's not unusual to experience traffic problems at the Brook Valley intersection.

She also expressed concern that the development might increase the Hospital Trustees Approve Capital Expenditures Budget

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Pitt County Memorial Hospital Board of Trustees approved Tuesday capital expenditures of $627,000, with most of the purchases targeted for the nuclear medicine department.

Included in the expenditures are $201,000 for a large-field-of-view gamma camera, $131,000 for a small-field-of-view gamma camera, and $147,000 for upgrading computer equipment. Trustees approved $120,000 for software installations for information systems (the hospital's computer) and $28,000 for an ECG stress system for nursing-radiology.

The board endorsed the hospital nursing department's seeking a planning grant from the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation for improvement of nursing services. It was reported that the foundation expects to disperse 80 grants of $50,000 this year and 20 grants of $100,000 next year for nursing improvement nationwide. The hospital medical staff has endorsed the grant-seeking.

It was reported that Dr. Mary Raab will assume her duties as chief of staff of the hospital before the next board meeting and will start reporting at the meeting as Dr. Michael Weaver has done this year. Dr. Raab, as chief of staff-elect, has attended board meetings this year. She will be appointed to the board's joint policy committee.

The hospital's 401 K Plan with Branch Banking and Trust Co. was amended to allow entry into the plan quarterly instead of only twice a year.

Honorary life membership on the trustee board was proposed for Charles P. Gaskins, county commissioner liaison to the board whose tenure is up early this year, and for Dr. William Laupus, past East Carolina University Medical School dean-liaison member of the board. Action on the memberships will be taken later.

An education committee for the board will be nominated. It was noted that the need becomes more and more apparent for board members to be educated in hospital leadership and medical advancement.

Dave McRae, PCMH vice president, said the hospital is developing an improved packet of education material to help new trustees get themselves up to speed faster when they join the board.

The hiring of an accounting firm to study the impact of patient flow from outlying parts of the region served by the hospital was proposed. The study is expected to be done in two parts — one costing from $12,000 to $15,000 and anther from $4,000 to $6000.

David Speir, Finance Committee chairman, appealed to board members to attend meetings of the committee. He said the finances of the hospital are considered in more depth during the meetings and all trustees, not just finance committee members, need to hear what is said in thee sessions.

Gaskins reported that architects for the hospital's proposed major addition are being interviewed. He said two trailers have been given to the hospital by ECU and are being put to use.

Physician's assistant Greg Wilson, the PCMH Regional Rehabilitation Center's employee of the year, was recognized by the board.

Jack Richardson, hospital president, reported that because the review of the hospital's certificate of need for its proposed major building project took 120 days longer than had been anticipated, the hospital has asked that the timetable for the project be moved forward that amount of time.

The board members were urged by Richardson to express concern about proposed Medicaid cutbacks to members of Congress they might see during the holidays. He said the American Hospital Association is observing an erosion of support from major previous supporters of Medicaid. Its leaders feel that only by keeping Medicaid intact can the quality of health care be maintained, he said.

Dr. James Hallock, dean of the ECU Medical School, said recruitment of medical residents for next year is under way.

Tax Forms About Same

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Internal Revenue Service today previewed the new tax forms that 101 million Americans will begin receiving in the mail next week.

In presenting the 1988 tax packages, IRS officials emphasized that they contained few changes from the forms taxpayers used last year.

Last year, taxpayers for the first time filed returns that reflected the more than 2,000 changes made by the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

Despite the many changes on those forms the IRS said most taxpayers were able to file accurate forms promptly and received their returns on time. The IRS said that most of the changes this year would be so subtle that they would likely go unnoticed by taxpayers.

The change with the biggest impact reflects the final reduction in personal tax rates mandated by the sweeping 1986 tax overhaul law.

However, those reductions are incorporated in the tax tables and do not show up in the forms at all.

IRS officials said that other changes had been made to clear up confusion raised by last year's forms. One area where clarifying changes were made involves the standard deduction.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Somber Figures

Morbidity Rates Can Be Misleading

Predicting morbidity rates for hospitals is a somber exercise, and the figures should not be the sole criteria of the effectiveness of a hospital.

Several hospitals in North Carolina were cited in a Department of Health and Human Services study as having a higher-than-average death rate for Medicare patients.

Pitt County Memorial Hospital was not in that group. However, hospital officials released the figures which show that the predicted range of morbidity, or number of deaths per hundred, for Medicare patients at PCMH in 1987 was 11 to 15 percent. The actual figure of 14 percent was within that range.

Hospital officials said the figure is not surprising when considering the range of programs the hospital now offers. As a regional hospital, PCMH sees patients referred here because of the gravity of their condition. With further development in cancer and cardiac care the possibility of even higher Medicare death rates exists. Given PCMH's role, it can be expected that even more difficult cases will be treated here. While none of that is pleasant to contemplate, the positive side is the survival rate for desperately ill patients who come to PCMH.

Community hospitals which often have acutely ill patients from nursing homes can also see their morbidity rates on the high side — and that would not necessarily be a reflection on the level of care the hospital offers.

It is a certainty that some hospitals offer better care than others. But to fully evaluate any hospital, one would have to know the level of treatments it offers and the types of patients it accepts and serves. There is nothing wrong with the public having the information that this study makes available. Nevertheless there are other criteria for the making of a good hospital. Certainly proper accreditation of any hospital would be an important part of assessing its quality of care.

Public Forum

To the editor:

The West Greenville Community Development Corporation congratulates Mayor Ed Carter, the city council and the city staff for their foresight and positive action toward establishing a Historic Preservation Commission for Greenville.

It is our belief that there are a substantial number of properties that exist in the West Greenville, College View, and downtown neighborhoods that will fit into a historic property's designation based upon architectural style, endurance and value as perceived by the people of the city.

Therefore, it is our recommendation that, when commissioners are selected, that not only those persons with architectural, engineering, planning and building backgrounds be chosen to serve, but also those persons throughout the city who are native historians to the area and those individuals who have demonstrated an understanding of the value of those properties based on cultural affinities, a sense of history, as well as an appreciation for architectural style and the cohesiveness of current populations and functions in specific areas.

And finally, we anticipate that the designation of properties and districts as historic within inner-city Greenville will act as an impetus toward stability by increasing the value of properties within by making inner-city Greenville a place of worth to live, recreate, shop and exercise commerce, and hopefully by sparking the development of a cultural center for Pitt County and surrounding communities — consequently, providing us a tool for marketing our city as "A City of Progress and Cultural Diversity."

To the editor:

I congratulate the Greenville City Council for its foresight in creating the Historic Preservation Commission.

The Historic Preservation Commission can designate some of Greenville's older neighborhoods as historic districts. This designation lets citizens know that the City Council values and protects its older neighborhoods. It also gives homeowners the confidence they need to buy and restore older homes.

Because Greenville is not a Tarboro, a New Bern nor a Charleston, people complain that there is nothing historically significant to protect. Yet "in almost every town there are neighborhoods that express in wood and masonry something of the character of life during that town's formative era, or its period of greatest economic and cultural growth." Greenville's "Golden Era" began in the early 20th century and we have plenty left to mark that time in our history.

Covering George Bush

Thomas Collins

WASHINGTON — The feeling around the White House press room these days is cautiously optimistic about prospects for a good working relationship with incoming President George Bush.

The hope is that the White House press conference might even be resurrected, at least at first, from the moribund state into which it has sunk under President Reagan. And one thing seems certain: Reporters will get to see their president once in a while, in contrast to the reclusive Reagan, if Bush's accessibility during this transition period is any indication.

They may even see too much of him, which could translate into longer and harder working hours. Under Reagan's 9-to-5 schedule, White House correspondents had grown used to a relaxed, if not downright lazy, routine. Bush starts operating at the crack of dawn.

That became evident one day last month when reporters were called to the White House for an announcement. "Welcome to the wonderful world of George Bush," said Marlin Fitzwater, the White House spokesman, who will continue in that capacity under Bush. It was 7:15 a.m.

Bush also has a penchant for spontaneity. He likes to dash off to a Chinese restaurant or a movie — or announce an important Cabinet appointment — on the spur of the moment. That means he will have to be staffed almost constantly; the traditional "lids" on news, which allow people to knock off for the day, probably will be later and later. Presidential weekends at Camp David, which were scarcely staffed under a tacit agreement with the Reagan press office, now may find a pool of reporters in a constant state of ready-alert.

"The anticipation is that Bush will be harder to predict," said Mary Tillotson, a White House correspondent for Cable News Network. "You don't know when he may pop up and say something."

Reporters may also find that the atmosphere more convivial as well as informative. Reagan was never really accessible other than in the company of a noisy helicopter; he was also distrustful of the press and not well-informed about a lot of issues unless he had been carefully scripted.

Bush is well-informed, according to members of the White House press corps, doesn't need notes or cue cards, likes to think on his feet and seems to enjoy the company of reporters. During the campaign, for example, when Newsday's Saul Friedman was about to go to dinner with a couple of Bush aides, the vice president invited himself along. "It was a delightful evening," Friedman said. "He's not afraid of the press."

"He doesn't seem to think we're the enemy," Tillotson says.

The anticipation is that Bush will breathe new life back into the press conference, although the format for meeting with reporters may vary. A recent study by a Harvard University group advocated regularly scheduled press conferences twice a month during daytime hours and six televised evening sessions a year, although Bush is not expected to go that far.

"It is our view that the president, the press and the American public have not been well served by the pattern of interaction with the press which we all have witnessed during the last few administrations," the report said. "Occasional theatrical press conferences in the East Room, interspersed with questions shouted over helicopter engines, do not constitute a healthy relationship." The group called for "restoring the habit of frequent, routine and undramatic news conferences."

Bush himself, in response to questions posed by the American Society of Newspaper Editors last fall, alluded to a "mix" of options available to ensure an open administration, of which the press conference was only one. He is apparently weighing one-on-one and group interviews and satellite news conferences with regional media, as well as nationally televised addresses.

One of the things that White House regulars like about Bush is that he has been around Washington a long time. "He's a known quantity," said ABC's Sam Donaldson, who is winding up 12 years covering the White House and will co-anchor a new prime-time news program starting in April. "Some of us have covered him since he served in the House in 1967."

Whether increased accessibility will translate into more solid information about the administration is, of course, a question. Bush refuses to be pushed by reporters and is adamant about releasing information only when he is ready to do so.

"I think he has an incredible penchant for secrecy," says Helen Thomas, United Press International's senior White House correspondent. "What he calls a leak, I call information."

Nevertheless, she said, reporters like him. "He talks to them off the record, and you can get a good insight into what he wants to do."

"He'll get his honeymoon," she added, "but he has to know we'll keep pressing."

Some think that everything will be cozy until the first stories embarrassing to the Bush administration appear. "I'll be interested to see what happens when things go wrong," Friedman said.

The Basic Defense Question

John Fitzgerald

WASHINGTON — How much is enough?

That, at least since World War II, has been the basic defense question facing incoming presidents.

Finding an answer has seldom been easy, but when George Bush assumes office next month, the quest for a sufficient and affordable defense policy is apt to be more difficult than ever.

It is an era of profound change for friend and foe alike.

The United States' capacity and willingness to support the free world's heaviest defense burden has been eroded by chronic budget deficits and a deterioration of its competitive economic position.

Its European and Asian allies, once penniless among the ruins of war, are now resurgent and boast some of the fastest-growing economies in the world. Indeed, during Bush's first term, Western Europeans intend to drop age-old economic barriers and forge a megamarket of unparalleled scope.

In the communist world, changes are even more striking.

The Chinese, preoccupied with domestic reform, have slashed defense spending by half in a decade. Eastern European nations, and even republics of the Soviet Union, show signs of independence that would have been inconceivable a few years ago.

And most remarkably of all, the Kremlin appears to be in thrall to a leader who proclaims the primacy of the individual and denounces the use of force in international affairs.

"The entire framework of foreign relations is giving way," said Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, former U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, who credits "our visionary policies of the post-war decades" for the growing economic might of U.S. allies.

Meanwhile, said Joshua Muravchik, resident scholar at the conservative American Enterprise Institute: "Without undue optimism, we can believe the end of totalitarianism is in sight. ... Communism is in crisis and democracy is ascendant."

Nothing demonstrates the emerging order more dramatically than Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's announcement at the United Nations that he will cut Soviet armed forces by a half-million troops, 10,000 tanks, 8,500 artillery pieces and 800 warplanes. Fifty thousand of the troops, he said, will come out of Eastern Europe.

Some Western experts see strategic promise in the gambit and call upon the United States to ease its own fiscal distress by following suit. Paul F. Walker, co-director of the Institute for Peace and International Security at Cambridge, Mass., last week called on Bush to withdraw 20,000 troops from Western Europe in response to Gorbachev's initiative.

Walker asserts that the withdrawal would save $3 billion to $5 billion a year. "About 60 percent of (the U.S. defense budget) goes to NATO," Walker said, "so if he wants to address the budget issue in a serious way, he has to start looking at NATO."

Moreover, Walker said, reciprocation might encourage larger Soviet cuts.

Others, however, sense a nasty political trap, and urge the incoming president to resist the temptation to cut back at this juncture.

The new president's first challenge, then, will be to sift through conflicting advice and determine how much defense is enough in this brave, but uncertain, new world.

But it seems probable that U.S. reductions made in response to Soviet troop cutbacks, even if they do occur, would not be large enough to satisfy Bush's second major defense problem: budget constraints.

Confronted with a projected $148 billion budget deficit in the current fiscal year, and apparently precluded from raising taxes by Bush's pledge to veto such action, Congress appears predisposed to freeze, and maybe cut, defense spending.

Perhaps the most intriguing of the spending proposals is included in an overall transition guide advanced by former Presidents Ford and Carter. It is remarkable less for what it says than who wrote it. One of the authors is Brent Scowcroft, a former Air Force general recently named by Bush as his national security adviser.

Scowcroft calls on his new boss to depart sharply from the Reagan administration by making the Strategic Defense Initiative, better known as "Star Wars," a secondary priority, because of its enormous expense. He recommends that Bush concentrate instead on the selection of a new intercontinental ballistic missile.

Conservatives consider "Star Wars" "the Reagan administration's most important legacy," in the words of the Heritage Foundation, a Washington think tank. They will fight to keep the proposed anti-missile program at the very top of the defense priority list. Indeed, Heritage wants Bush to increase spending on the defense system from $4.1 billion this year to $6 billion next year.

Despite their differences, both Scowcroft and the conservatives emphasize modernization of strategic forces, the long-range weapons that can directly engage the superpowers. They both also suggest cutting conventional forces — troops, warships and the like — to pay for improvements to the strategic arsenal.

After Bush has assessed the shifting threat and built a defense budget that he believes is sufficient and salable to Congress, he will likely face at least one other major question: If the United States will be spending less on defense, should someone else be called upon to spend more in order to mitigate the effects of the U.S. cutbacks?

Many experts say yes. America has nursed its European and Asian allies back from the ravages of World War II, so that now some have rosier economic prospects than the United States. They all, however, continue to contribute less to the common defense than does the United States.

It is time, the experts say, to demand that our allies carry a larger share of the load.

The evolving consensus is best expressed, perhaps, by Henry S. Rowen, a professor of public policy at Stanford University: "It is no exaggeration to say the Japanese have been getting a free ride. Just as the day of the free lunch is over, the day of the free ride is over for America's allies."

Decrees A La Argentina

Jorge Ballesteros

"Argentina is a political enigma that I cannot come to terms with," said French sociologist Raymond Aron. It would take an in-depth study of Argentine history to reveal the causes of political instability the country has suffered from during the last decades, Aron stated.

Suffice it to say that political violence, from the recent military rebellions back to the dawn of independence, has been a constant component of Argentine history. After national unity was secured in 1860, with a U.S.-inspired constitution in force, the autonomy of the executive, legislative and judicial branches, as well as individual rights and guarantees, were slowly and gradually consolidated in Argentina. There were occasional social revolts, military insurrections and political disturbances of various sorts, but for almost 70 years changes in government power took place as prescribed by the constitution.

In 1930, Gen. Jose F. Uriburu, an ideological devotee of fascism then flourishing in Europe, ended this precarious republican tradition by overthrowing President Hipolito Yrigoyen and plunged the country into a state of institutional instability from which it has not emerged.

Uriburu and his successors, through the era of Juan Domingo Peron, overemphasized the state's power in Argentine society. The result has been a drastic reduction in private enterprise and in the rights and individual guarantees of citizens.

Peron added two innovations that remain today.

Inspired by the fascists, Peron — who never hid his sympathy for Benito Mussolini — incorporated a bureaucratic new brand of unionism to the provident and all-powerful leviathan state, which organizes and presides over it. The second and more lasting Peronist innovation is the creation of a gigantic propaganda disinformation machine, through control of the mass media. These Peronist contributions to Argentine institutional disorder were maintained intact through various de facto and constitutional regimes. An unquestionably "democratic" president like the incumbent, Raul Alfonsin, has developed them further and found new uses for them, instead of doing away with them, noxious as they are for the health of the republic.

Alfonsin is a lawyer who graduated with qualifications similar to those of U.S. Vice President-elect Dan Quayle. Blessed through inheritance by personal wealth, he never had to work for a living. (Some opponents say one cannot expect a man who never worked before being elected to begin working now as president.) Alfonsin has never been a professor of anything, has never carried out any academic research; his "intellectual" production consists of a small collection of articles inflated with party rhetoric. His law office, open sporadically, lacked any professional relevance. He dedicated himself to cases that benefited his political leanings.

Alfonsin has friendly dealings with the communist dictators of Cuba and Nicaragua. His pro-Soviet foreign policy is carried out by his traveling chancellor, the picturesque Dante Caputo. Alfonsin is a leader of a confused leftist ideology mixed with an inherent pragmatism of wanting to do business — more for his party than for his country — with capitalists who are either uninformed or in league with him. His efforts during more than five years in power have been overwhelmingly characterized by nepotism — about 50 members of the Alfonsin family and its many relatives hold prominent public posts, and by numerous propaganda trips abroad in company of a princely retinue, along with abundant administrative irregularities, some of which are now under investigation as possible crimes.

In a recent declaration, the Catholic bishops of Argentina summarized Alfonsin's efforts of the last five years:

"The idolatry of money in our country today leads a few toward insolent gluttony and asphyxiating consumerism, and many more, toward prostitution and shady business deals, ill-gotten gains and favors. At the same time, the scandal of misery and poverty in the large marginalized population, the unemployment, the loss of a true love of labor, the falsity of the gambling adventure, the anguish and the hopelessness of the present, the fear of the future are witnessed and ignored."

The current conflict between the military sector — much greater than that reported by the international wire services — and Alfonsin's government is the expected bitter fruit for all the citizenry of this campaign of political loss of prestige, economic degradation and moral defamation. It has been carried out during five consecutive years by the president and his closest collaborators, against the institution of the armed forces. They have used as a pretext the crimes committed by a small percentage of the military — something like 10 percent of the active forces — during the so-called "state terrorism" era of the late 1970s and early '80s.

It is clear that given his background and ideology, Alfonsin could not be content with adhering to constitutional precepts to bring members of the armed forces to justice. He has chosen instead to continue to issue decrees "a la Argentina," that is, illegally and unconstitutionally. He replaced the tribunals established by the National Magna Carta to judge the crimes committed by the military, and staged farcical trials void of meaning, a fact affirmed by eminent Argentine legal and constitutional scholars.

Jorge Ballesteros, a contributor to the Argentine dailies La Prensa and Buenos Aires Herald, is the author of several books on literature and politics. His comments were translated from the Spanish by Margarita Nieto.

Get The Medical Students To Help

Toby Cohen

With illicit drug use the nation's officially declared worst enemy, it is deplorable that our medical schools remain behind the lines as well as the times.

Few doctors are educated to spot and treat drug abuse, and training in the diagnosis and treatment of addiction has not been incorporated into the curricula of our medical schools. This probably stems from the low regard that establishment medicine had of addiction, which it viewed as a disease unworthy of serious study until recently. Yet this would both improve the quality of addiction therapy and lower its costs, thus making it more widely available. And it could be done easily and inexpensively.

For a start, a given medical school and its teaching hospital would coordinate addiction therapies — psychiatric care, detoxification, therapeutic groups — it may already run or would affiliate itself with existing treatment agencies in its neighborhood. The hub of the network would be a 24-hour walk-in clinic, a sort of emergency room for substance abusers. This would take that traffic out of the regular emergency room, which is almost certainly overworked and ill-equipped to deal with it.

Here one could come in without an appointment, whenever the urge to get help strikes.

The point would be to assist that urge before it dissipates. Nor would it make any difference in the patient's welcome whether he were new, relapsed or simply tempted. Depending on the patient's condition and his family and employment situation, he could be sent from the clinic into the hospital proper for immediate treatment or referred to any of the other programs.

Within this network, medical school students would do what they do in every other specialty or medical practice within the hospital: assume some of the doctor's duties. In most addiction treatment programs, the professionals spend most of their time educating patients about the effects of drugs and alcohol, about ways to avoid these substances and about the benefits of Alcoholics Anonymous.

Even in a hospital like Harvard University's McLean Hospital, whose addiction program is designed for addicts with psychiatric problems, the staff is mostly engaged in education. They offer lectures on the effects upon sleep of alcohol and the drugs of abuse, and on how these substances cause depression, impair work performance and disrupt families. In informal groups, patients are taught relaxation techniques to take the place of drink and drugs in stressful situations.

At other times, they rehearse what to do in situations, public or private, in which they may be offered drugs or alcohol. They learn about "budding," short for building up resistance to drugs and drink and how to recognize oncoming signs of relapse. And they are given an orientation course for Alcoholics Anonymous (or its variant Cocaine Anonymous or Narcotics Anonymous), going over AA's 12 steps to recovery as these apply to their own lives and preparing the sort of personal history they may be invited to present at AA meetings. All these activities, along with exercise classes, are done in groups led by a knowledgeable instructor.

The curriculum at McLean exemplifies the procedures followed at most treatment centers, whether inpatient or outpatient. And in most of these facilities, the bulk of such educational work is conducted by otherwise expensively trained psychologists, psychiatrists and internists. But in fact medical school students could be reliably schooled by senior faculty members to shoulder the large part of treatment that is devoted to education of patients.

Students thus trained should also be capable of staffing the walk-in addiction clinics, where they would become experienced in taking patients' histories (as they do now with hospital patients) and in making appropriate referrals among the several sorts of available treatment. In all this they would be supervised, just as they are in learning other specialties where they perform far more difficult procedures, such as cerebrospinal fluid extractions, on hospital patients.

Thus would future doctors, whether cardiologists or ophthalmologists, surgeons or pediatricians, be equipped to diagnose this variegated and deadly disorder that afflicts scores of millions of Americans of all social classes.

A pediatrician would be alert to signs of alcoholism or drug addiction in a parent; an internist would not feel uncomfortable in prescribing five AA meetings for a schoolteacher with incipient alcoholism, and a follow-up appointment to talk about them; an orthopedist would not hesitate to prescribe the same for an athlete with early signs of drug addiction. Nor, having been trained in the system, would they be at a loss where to send the patient with a more severe addiction.

This is emphatically not a recommendation that the whole field of substance abuse be taken over by medical students. Full-fledged specialists must certainly figure in treatment, and complex psychiatric care, when needed, must be given by psychiatrists. But in carrying on the basic work of most addiction treatment facilities — education and preparation of the patient for AA and the other self-help groups — medical students might in fact prove more appropriate than psychiatrists.

"For most of the treatment," says Dr. George Vaillant, professor of psychiatry at Dartmouth Medical School, "involves not sophisticated psychological explanation but saying the same simple things over and over again." The fact that medical students usually don't stay longer than three months on any service is a disadvantage on those specialties where the patients benefit from a continuous relationship with one doctor.

But in substance abuse the transience of the doctor suits the treatment because the very success of the treatment depends on getting the patient to invest his trust in such organizations as AA or CA. The knowledge that a medical student may be the doctor for only eight weeks — before he or she rotates out — may greatly help the patient to make the commitments.

Lowering the cost of substance-abuse treatment by replacing expensive and underused experts with medical students would be progress by any standard. Sowing this less expensive treatment across the country, making it versatile in both term and technique, and coordinating it through walk-in clinics near neighborhood hospitals would allow not only readier access to care but also individualized care — clear progress in medical terms.

Seventy-seven years ago, the father of American medical education, Abraham Flexner, urged that medical-school students should be trained in the public health hazards that menace their patients. By seeing to the correction of these, he said, a physician "will improve the health of his patient more than any pill or drug or knife in his pharmacopeia." It is time the medical schools applied Flexner's advice to combat addiction, a public health hazard that is a rampant destroyer of lives.

Toby Cohen is a former project director of the New York State Assembly's Medical Practice Task Force.

Lenoir Inmates Denied Hearings

Guard's Conviction Overturned In Suicide Of Grifton Prisoner

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A judge's comment that he knew ahead of time what sentence two defendants would receive if convicted "may have been inappropriate," but it did not justify a new trial or sentencing hearing, a divided panel of the North Carolina Court of Appeals has ruled.

Cornelius Cannon and David Lee Redmond were convicted of robbing the Lunch Box Cafe in Kinston of $307 on Sept. 1, 1987.

According to the majority opinion written by Chief Judge Robert Hedrick, the trial judge told attorneys for both sides before the verdict what the sentence would be if the defendants were found guilty.

In a 2-1 ruling Tuesday, the appeals court majority said the judge followed the procedure set out in the Fair Sentencing Act, conducting a hearing after their conviction and basing the sentence on evidence presented then, Hedrick wrote.

Cannon received a 35-year sentence and Redmond 30 years.

Judge Clifton E. Johnson dissented with regard to Cannon's sentence because it was exactly as long as the trial judge had said it would be beforehand. Johnson didn't disagree with Redmond's sentence because it was 10 years shorter than the judge had said it would be.

"I cannot conclude that the judge arrived at defendant Cannon's sentence solely on the basis of weighing the aggravating and mitigating factors since he had predicted the same sentence even before trial," Johnson wrote.

The three-judge panel also issued a unanimously ruling that overturned the conviction of a former Central Prison guard who was found guilty of intentionally failing to perform his duties in connection with the suicide of a prisoner.

The panel ruled that Wake County Superior Court, where former guard Bobby W. Birdsong was convicted of the misdemeanor charge Nov. 13, 1987, had no jurisdiction in the case. It should have been tried in District Court, the panel said.

State law says misdemeanors are to be tried in District Court, but there are several exceptions under which they may be heard in Superior Court, including a presentment.

Birdsong, who was a lieutenant in the state Department of Correction at the time of the incident, was tried on charges stemming from the suicide of inmate William A. Moye of Grifton, 35, who was serving a 30-year sentence for armed robbery. Guards had discovered Moye lying face down on the floor of his cell with a bed sheet around his neck. The sheet was connected to a hook on the door of his wall locker.

A pathologist testified at the trial that Moye had died of asphyxiation.

Several guards told the court that they had told Birdsong that the prisoner was lying on the floor with a sheet around his neck, but they said Birdsong waited two hours before allowing them to enter the cell. The guards testified that Birdsong had said Moye was faking a suicide and might attack them.

After his conviction, Birdsong was ordered to pay court costs of $181. The two misdemeanor charges carried a maximum two-year sentence.

In other rulings, the appeals court:

— Upheld the conviction of Troy W. Ayers, who was sentenced to life in prison for raping his 8-year-old step-granddaughter. He was convicted Dec. 4, 1987, in Guilford County.

— Granted a new trial to Hatem Hamad, who was convicted in Pitt County of cocaine trafficking June 5, 1987.

The court ruled that the trial judge erred by refusing to let Hamad's attorney cross-examine the co-defendant, Donald Clay Wells, a second time. Wells' conviction was upheld but the court ordered a new hearing on his sentence, which the trial judge set at 28 years.

Hamad's sentence was 34 years.

— Upheld in a 2-1 ruling Rodney Kemp Jeter's conviction of first-degree rape and first-degree burglary in Wake County Dec. 3, 1987.

Jeter was found guilty of breaking into the homes of two women and sexually assaulting them in April and May 1987.

— Ordered a new sentencing hearing for Bill Kemp of Mitchell County on a guilty plea to 10 counts of taking indecent liberties with a minor. He entered the plea Dec. 15, 1987.

The trial judge sentenced him to 26 years in prison but the appeals court said the judge erroneously found as an aggravating factor that the 9-year-old victim's age made her "more vulnerable than other victims of this offense."

Black Democrat Scoffs At GOP Bid For More Minority Voters

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A new Republican task force will try to convince North Carolina blacks that their staunch loyalty to the Democratic Party is diluting their strength, but a black lawmaker says the effort won't meet with much success.

"They might get a few people ... but I don't think they're going to make any widespread gains," said state Rep. Mickey Michaux, D-Durham, chairman of the Black Legislative Caucus.

"Minorities, while sometimes being ignored by the Democratic Party, still have an opportunity to lay claim to the Democratic Party and work within the ranks," Michaux said. "In the Republican Party, they'd be shut out completely."

At a news conference Tuesday, state GOP chairman Jacke Hawke said that as long as blacks stay in the Democratic Party and show no inclination to split their tickets, they "will never achieve true active participation in the political process of this state."

"When the black voters show that they can swing elections, then they will become a powerful force," Hawke said.

The GOP, meanwhile, will remain outnumbered in North Carolina if it continues "to automatically lose 20 percent of the voting public," Hawke said.

The task force chairman is David Stith of Durham, a retired official with the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development. Stith, who is black, switched from the Democratic Party to the GOP in the 1960s.

Stith said many grassroots black voters are misled by the "fat cat" leaders of black political organizations, whom he said have a vested interest in keeping nearly all black voters in the Democratic Party.

"They or their friends are going to be appointed to something" if the Democrats win, Stith said. "They couldn't care less about what's going to happen to the homeless people down in the ghetto ... or people who need Medicare some other program."

The key to recruiting blacks as Republicans, he said, is improving communication. Blacks need to be told that Republican Gov. Jim Martin's administration has increased the number of state contracts with minority-owned businesses, for example, he said.

Stith said he agreed with Martin's opposition to a 1987 bill that created a paid state holiday honoring Martin Luther King Jr. The governor's opposition was based on the cost to state government, not the idea of paying tribute to King, Stith said.

"We have to do a job to get the message to the grassroots people," he said.

Michaux said Republican opposition to the King holiday and other bills with broad minority support would continue to alienate blacks.

Nearly all GOP lawmakers opposed bills in the 1987-88 session to fund minority economic development programs and create special Superior Court judgeships in predominantly black districts, he said.

"How can they hope to achieve any real impact on the minority community with a record like that?" he said.

The task force, which will be biracial and include about 20 people, will make no effort to steer the party from its conservative moorings, Hawke said. It will target black "yuppies" and other well-educated professionals who support Republican economic and social policies, he said.

"I do not at all intend to see the Republican Party change its philosophy, change its approach, change its issues," he said. "But I think there are minority voters who agree with us on those issues. Sometimes they fail to vote for us because they perceive the Republican Party is not welcoming black voters or being almost an all-white society."

Hawke said he expected the task force's progress to be slow but said black membership in the GOP should gradually increase.

Gardner, Democrat Trade Verbal Shots Over Offices For Lieutenant Governor

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Neither Lt. Gov.-elect Jim Gardner nor Senate Democratic leader Henson Barnes has formally assumed his post yet, but each man is already accusing the other of resorting to petty partisan politics.

"We seem to be moving, unfortunately, toward a partisan showdown," Gardner said Tuesday, after Barnes criticized Gardner's plans to open an office in the state Capitol, rather than be closer to legislators, who are mostly Democrats.

"The Democrat leadership seems to be committed to an all-out program to embarrass me and the office of lieutenant governor," Gardner said.

Barnes said Gardner's plans to move into an office in the Capitol, near Gov. Jim Martin, could disrupt Gardner's communications with the Legislature.

"It's the appearance of the thing ... are you going to try to work with the Senate, the Legislature, where your main constitutional duties are, or are you going to move over to the Capitol where you have better photo ops," Barnes, D-Wayne, said at a news conference.

Gardner later summoned reporters to accuse Barnes of misrepresenting Gardner's intentions and engaging in "petty partisan politics."

It was the sharpest public exchange between the first Republican elected lieutenant governor of North Carolina this century and the Democratic nominee for president pro tem of the Senate, a post that will make Barnes, of Wayne County, the chamber's top-ranking Democrat in the 1989 General Assembly.

Under the state Constitution, the lieutenant governor is the Senate's presiding officer.

Gov. Jim Martin announced last week he had offered Gardner the spacious, two-room office in the historic Capitol being vacated by retiring Secretary of State Thad Eure.

Martin said the move would make sense because Senate Democrats have voted to make Gardner far less powerful than the current lieutenant governor, Bob Jordan. Martin said the curbing of Gardner's legislative role would enable him to be more involved in the executive branch.

Eure's successor, Rufus Edmisten, protested Martin's decision to no avail.

Although office space is at a premium in the crowded state government complex, the dispute appears to involve a more substantive question: the role Gardner will play as the state's first lieutenant governor to preside over a Senate whose majority is of the opposing party. Democrats hold 37 of the 50 seats.

Barnes told reporters that Senate Democrats wanted to work with Gardner and believed he should maintain the office arrangements used by Jordan, who has a suite of offices in the building located behind the Legislative Building.

"This is the holiday season, a time of good will," Barnes said. "In an effort to achieve peace and harmony between the lieutenant governor and the Senate, we invite and urge the lieutenant governor to remain in the Legislative Office Building."

Gardner said Barnes had erroneously implied that Gardner planned to move his entire staff to the Capitol and to work there full time.

Gardner said he planned to use the Capitol office only when the Legislature is not in session. He said his main office would be in the legislative complex — either in the suite Jordan now uses or in a smaller office in the Legislative Building behind the Senate chamber.

Barnes said if Gardner opens the Capitol office, he'll be given the smaller space in the Legislative Building but might forfeit the suite in the Legislative Office Building.

Gardner said having the Capitol office would not hamper his effectiveness. "My principal place of business will be the Legislative Building," he said.

Gasoline Prices Slightly Higher

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — North Carolina motorists will be paying an average of $1.049 per gallon for gasoline in North Carolina during the holiday season, an increase of 1 cent over last year, the Carolina Motor Club says.

In South Carolina, the average will be $1.06, an increase of 1.4 cents. But both prices compare favorably with the national average of $1.089 per gallon.

"Gas prices in both states are now down a little over 6 cents since peaking about Labor Day at over $1.11 a gallon," said Ralph Peters, president of the 415,000-member motor club.

"The recent OPEC agreement to limit production to 18.5 million barrels per day from the current over quota of almost 22.5 million will put upward pressure on gasoline prices over the next few weeks. The effect of this has on retail prices will depend to a large degree on whether or not dealers will feel a need to pass along their increased costs," he said.

The club's survey of 129 service stations shows that 45 percent of the stations checked in North Carolina and 57 percent of those surveyed in South Carolina will be open Christmas Day. On New Year's Day, 74 percent in North Carolina and 76 percent in South Carolina will be open for business.

North Carolina self-service gas prices average 91 cents per gallon for unleaded, $1.07 for premium unleaded and 87.3 cents for regular. Full-service averages $1.166 per gallon for unleaded, $1.269 for premium unleaded and $1.141 each fill-up.

Reagan Rejects Bid For Federal Cleanup Funds

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — President Reagan has rejected a request from North Carolina for federal assistance to cover cleanup and repair costs that municipalities faced after tornadoes struck the state, officials say.

Raleigh officials are appealing the decision, arguing that the city will spend $1 million to remove debris. But federal disaster officials, who dispute that figure and want Raleigh to absorb the cost without federal aid, say they don't expect to change their minds.

Officials of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, who recommended that the president deny the request to help local governments, contend that Raleigh will spend only $279,000 to clean up the debris. They also say that they have made special efforts to verify that estimate, including a second field trip two weeks ago to assess the amount of debris left.

"I know that debris stick by stick," Larry Latham, public assistance office for FEMA, told The News and Observer of Raleigh on Tuesday. "I've been out there to look at it several times."

Unless Raleigh gets $1 million in federal aid, City Manager Dempsey Benton said, the city might be forced to review other programs it had agreed to fund. He would not identify specific programs.

"I think our diligence in addressing the problem reduces the pressure for FEMA to provide public assistance," Benton said. "No roads are closed. There is not chaos."

He said he had not known until last week that the federal assistance approved by the president did not include money for local governments. "We were not given the courtesy of being told what their decision was," he said.

The presidential declaration on Dec. 2 for disaster relief included only assistance to individuals for grants, housing, unemployment, home loans and business loans. That comprised the bulk of the governor's $9.3 million request for relief.

The $718,000 that the state requested for local governments would have paid for debris removal, extra security and police assistance at the tornado sites, and damage to public facilities, such as bridges or water lines.

Raleigh can absorb its cleanup and repair costs without undue hardship, said Paul E. Hall, the federal coordinating officer in FEMA's Atlanta office, who made the recommendation to deny disaster aid to Raleigh and the other municipalities hit by tornadoes Nov. 28.

"It is not beyond the capability of Raleigh to remove that debris or recover from the disaster without federal assistance," he said in a telephone interview.

Joe Myers, director of the state Division of Emergency Management, said he and state engineers would meet with city officials today to prepare the appeal, which must be filed with the state by Jan. 1 and then forwarded to FEMA.

But Hall said that unless new information had surfaced, he would not change his position.

In other tornado-related news, the American Red Cross said Tuesday it had raised $100,000 over the estimated $750,000 the agency needs to handle last month's tornado.

"This is a big disaster," said Red Cross official Bayard Harris. "People need to understand the magnitude of the situation which still faces the community. We never know what will be enough.

"That people have said we have raised too much amazes me," Harris said. "I am baffled, absolutely astounded."

Harris said past disasters indicated that it will cost the Red Cross about $750,000 to aid the victims of the Nov. 28 tornado that roared through Wake and eight other North Carolina counties. As of Tuesday morning, the agency had raised more than $847,000 for the disaster relief project.

About $284,000 has been spent on food, clothing and shelter for victims, said Mr. Harris, chairman of the group's eastern operations headquarters in Alexandria, Va.

"But there are long-term needs that we just do not know of yet," he said. "Those assessments have been changing as our knowledge of the situation has been changing."

Even though many of the victims have had some financial resources available to them through private insurance or federal disaster assistance, the agency still has a vital role, Harris said.

"I expect we will be monitoring some peoples' needs for months, perhaps years," said Barbara Lohman, a Red Cross spokeswoman.

One man, William Atkins, remains hospitalized at Wake Medical Center in a coma from head injuries he received in the storm.

Harris said that donations received by the Red Cross specifically designated for tornado victims would be used solely for that purpose.

Plan Ready For Relief At Cherry

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A top state mental health official says steps will be taken within the next two months to ease the crowding at Cherry Hospital, a state psychiatric facility in Goldsboro.

Paul Kayye, director of the state Division of Mental Health, Mental Retardation and Substance Abuse Services, said Tuesday that a plan to deal with the problem is nearly complete and that eastern North Carolina communities would be asked to take some of the burden off the hospital.

"I don't think there's any question that we are a bit overcrowded," Kayye said in a telephone interview. "We are working with the community to get patients back in the community. We need to get that facility back to capacity."

During the past three months, the average daily occupancy in the acute treatment unit — which serves the most severely disturbed patients — was 196 people, well above the capacity of 158.

Advocates for the mentally ill decried conditions at the hospital at a news conference Monday in Goldsboro. They said that crowded conditions in the acute treatment unit create a dangerous environment for patients and staff and result in inadequate treatment for patients.

On Tuesday, John Baggett, executive director of the N.C. Alliance for the Mentally Ill, expressed skepticism about Kayye's proposal. He said what is needed is enough money to expand community programs, not stopgap efforts to reduce the population of the hospital.

"The issue is not just to reduce the population," Baggett said. "The issue is to see that people are properly cared for. I think they've taken most of the steps they can take without endangering the quality of patient care."

Kayye said state officials hoped to have the acute treatment unit, where the hospital has been forced to house five patients in rooms designed for four, at or below capacity within 60 days.

"There are obstacles that we've had to overcome, but I think we'll get there shortly," he said.

The long-term solution to the problem is a large expansion of community resources such as day treatment centers and residential treatment centers, Kayye said.

Meanwhile, he said, state officials hope to persuade local communities to do more with existing programs.

"Yes, we need to get a little bit tougher, I guess," he said. "We need to work more closely with communities."

Right whale comes up for air while swimming in Atlantic Ocean one mile off Carolina Beach

Scientists Photograph Two Right Whales Found Off Tar Heel Coast

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAROLINA BEACH, N.C. — Marine scientists were able to photograph two right whales offshore Tuesday and record information that will help scientists keep track of the mammals.

Two right whales have been seen between Carolina Beach and Kure Beach for the past three weeks. People at the beaches, especially fishermen on the piers, have seen them surface several times since the whales were first spotted in the area.

On Tuesday, the whales were sighted by beachgoers who called the N.C. Aquarium at Fort Fisher. A team of marine mammal experts took a boat out to get a closer look.

Scientists are not sure whether the two whales spotted Tuesday are the same whales that have been seen before. "Our guess is that it's the same pair," said Paul Barrington, marine mammal curator at the aquarium.

Barrington and other aquarium staffers boated within 20 feet of the whales, which are about 35 feet long. They took photographs and documented identifying marks on each whale.

The information will be sent to the New England Aquarium in Boston, where researchers are studying the migration of right whales. Inconsistencies in the migration patterns have puzzled the whale watchers, said Marty Crone, a research assistant at the New England Aquarium.

Right whales normally migrate south in the spring then begin their northern migration around February. They were given the name right whale by whalers who considered them the best or "right" whales to harpoon because they are slow and easily captured.

The two whales appeared to have no migration pattern. First reports said they were swimming north, but Barrington said the whales were headed south when he saw them.

The whales should be farther south this time of year, he said, but researchers are not sure where the whales go when they leave Nova Scotia.

Bodies Left In Van Overnight

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A Wake County deputy sheriff discovered six bodies in a van Tuesday at Gray Funeral Home in Raleigh.

The bodies were picked up Monday afternoon at the state medical examiner's office in Chapel Hill and kept overnight in the van parked behind the funeral home, authorities said.

The funeral home is under contract to cremate unclaimed bodies from the medical examiner's office. Raleigh police and the state board of mortuary science were investigating the matter Tuesday.

"As far as we can determine at this time, there isn't a criminal violation," said Raleigh Police Lt. J.A. Privette.

Wake Sheriff's Deputy Gene Lambert said he looked into the van after smelling a strong odor. The van was unlocked, the keys were inside and a window was open, he said.

"I could count five body figures," Lambert said. "They were just tossed in the back of that van in no arranged order."

Chief Medical Examiner John Butts Jr. said his office had asked the funeral home to pick up the bodies because they had run out of storage space.

David House, a spokesman for the funeral home, said the crematorium is not run at night, so the bodies, some of which were months old, were left in the van which was locked overnight. "They were not the type you would bring in the funeral home," House said.

Corrine Culbreth, executive secretary of the state board of mortuary science, said the funeral home did have the proper documentation for the bodies. But she was still concerned.

Holiday Stress May Trigger Child Abuse

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Christmas is often perceived as a season of happiness and security for children, but child abuse appears to increase around the holidays because of higher stress levels, a child expert says.

"The holiday season is a time ... that calls upon a parent's ability to cope with frustrations," said Dorothy Browne, associate professor of child and maternal health at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Those frustrations often involve parents trying to reconcile with family members or recreate the Christmas of their youth, she said.

"While these stresses may not be directly related to the child, these events often trigger child maltreatment," Ms. Browne said.

"The holidays also are a time of change, just as a long-distance move or an addition to the family is," Ms. Browne said. "How parents cope and the mechanisms they use to handle stress during this time are crucial."

She said parents should realize feelings of guilt, frustration and resentment during the holidays are normal, but when that frustration turns into abuse, both the parent and child suffer.

"Anyone can lose control," Ms. Browne said. "Child abuse isn't concentrated in any one neighborhood or socio-economic stata. But there are things that parents can do to help themselves before they lose control."

She suggests parents take time to cool off, ask a friend to watch the children, visit an emergency support center or call a crisis intervention hotline to discuss their feelings.

North Carolinians can call the Caroline hotline — 1-800-662-7030 — run yearround by the state Department of Social Services.

"During the holidays and other times of stress, parents must find out what works for them," Ms. Browne said. "The important thing is that parents develop ways to control that stress so that it doesn't hurt them or their families."

Censured

RALEIGH (AP) — A former Raleigh City Council member has been publicly censured and ordered to attend nine hours of ethics classes by a disciplinary panel of the North Carolina State Bar.

Perry R. Safran was disciplined Monday for voting to award city contracts to clients and recommending the city hire his law partner. Safran could have lost his license for the infractions.

"There is a serious question of whether Mr. Safran knew right from wrong in this case, and there is substantial question as to whether he really cared about right and wrong," said panel chairman George Hendon of Asheville. "And this gives him the opportunity to learn to live and practice by the rules that all of us do."

Safran was also suspended from practicing law for three years, but the suspension will not go into effect if Safran violates no rules or statutes governing lawyers and completes three hours of ethics courses in each of the next three years.

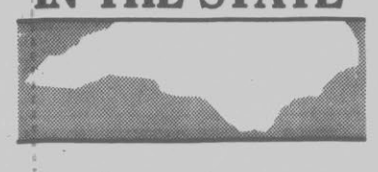
IN THE STATE



Development

CURRITUCK, N.C. (AP) — Currituck County commissioners will decide in January whether to allow for denser development along the northern tip of North Carolina's Outer Banks.

Commissioners conducted public hearings on proposals to loosen the county's current regulations that require 10-acre lots for construction in the Carova Beach area.

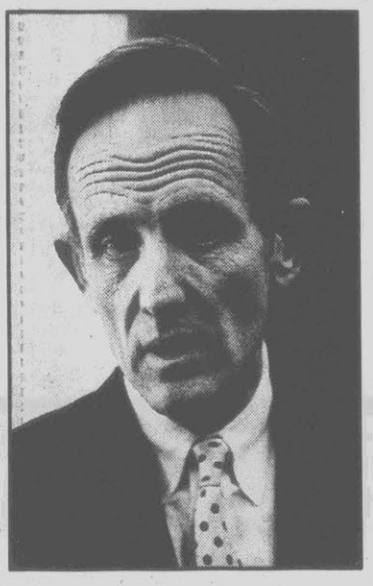
Votes on dual measures needed to accomplish the change are scheduled for the Jan. 3 meeting. Both a variance in the land-use plan, subject to state approval, and a change in the county zoning ordinance must pass to modify the 10-acre requirement.

No public road leads to the Carova Beach area. People living in the 250 houses along the stretch get to and from their homes in four-wheel drive vehicles along the beach.

Dean Named

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — John B. McKinnon, retiring president of Sara Lee Foodservice, has been named dean of the Wake Forest University Babcock Graduate School of Management, President Thomas K. Hearn Jr., announced Tuesday.

McKinnon, 54, will become dean July 1, one day after he retires from Sara Lee. He will replace acting dean Paul Dierks, who will return to teaching.



JOHN B. MCKINNON

McKinnon, a graduate of Duke University and Harvard Business School, was vice president and chief financial officer for the Hanes Corp. for six years starting in 1973. In 1979, he became executive vice president of the Hanes Group, overseeing Hanes Knitwear, Hanes Printables and the financial planning functions of the corporation.

The Babcock School, with 22 faculty members, currently has 206 students enrolled full time.

Chief Resigns

LAURINBURG, N.C. (AP) — Laurinburg Police Chief N.W. Quick will leave his job in January and become an investigator on the staff of District Attorney Jean Powell, city officials said.

City Manager Peter Vandenburg said Quick gave notification of his intentions last weekend. Vandenburg said the effective date is Jan. 15.

Powell, who will become district attorney for the newly created District 16-A on Jan. 1, said Quick would join her staff as an administrative assistant on Jan. 15. She said his job would be "primarily an investigator."

Quick has been chief for the last 16 years and a member of the department for 35 years.

Housing Plan

DURHAM (AP) — Nine Durham organizations announced Tuesday the formation of a group they hope will more forcefully make the case for a communitywide effort to provide more low-income housing in the city.

The "Durham Affordable Housing Coalition" will serve as a lobbying organization of local governments and the private sector to help secure funds needed to build more low-income housing and renovate substandard homes in the community, said John Ott, spokesman for the group.

Ott is a professor of public policy at Duke University and adviser to the Duke Homeless Project, a student organization interested in promoting low-income housing.

Martin Will Back Highway Package

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Gov. Jim Martin says he appears to be forming an agreement with mostly Democratic lawmakers to push for a $5 billion to $6 billion highway financing package, and he says he won't rule out higher taxes if other sources also are tapped.

"I intend to be supportive of what they produce, but I have asked them to put it in the form of a combination of things so all of us can support it," Martin said Tuesday, after meeting with members of the Highway Study Commission.

Martin described the luncheon session as a "pep rally" designed to ease the Democrats' concern that proposing an ambitious funding program, especially one involving tax increases, would expose them to Republican criticism.

"What I wanted to do was free them up to reach some decisions," Martin said. "In their recent meetings, they've been reluctant to reach decisions for fear that they might get too far out and I'd come pounding on 'em."

He said he wanted the committee to develop a package that would go beyond the stopgap funding measures the Legislature periodically approves, as in 1981 and 1986, when gasoline tax increases were enacted.

Martin said he was ready to propose his own plan if lawmakers preferred. But he said Rep. Bob Hunter, D-McDowell, co-chairman of the study group, had requested that Martin let the committee develop a plan in consultation with the Department of Transportation.

Hunter said the study committee intended to approve a package by Jan. 11, when the General Assembly convenes.

Sen. Bill Goldston, D-Rockingham, the other co-chairman, has proposed a plan to generate $6 billion over 12 years, using a 6 cents per gallon gasoline tax increase, license and title transfer fees and a bond issue for right-of-way acquisition.

Asked whether he was committing himself to endorse whatever the committee recommends, Martin said, "I left a little wiggle room there ... you know how politicians are. But I am trying to encourage them to take that lead and I am standing by to help."

Committee members said they appreciated Martin's approach.

But some said their ability to reach a consensus would depend on whether the package funds the entire range of highway needs, from major four-lane arteries to unpaved secondary roads, and treats all areas of the state equally.

"We're willing to contribute in any fashion we can if we're guaranteed and showed that certain roads will be built in eastern Carolina," said Sen. Marc Basnight, D-Dare, who said he was speaking on behalf of about 60 eastern legislators. "If not, governor, that group will have to go in opposition, whatever plan is presented."

Thomasville Rejects Beer

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

THOMASVILLE, N.C. — There will be no suds in Thomasville restaurants for a while.

A petition drive to let Thomasville voters decide whether restaurants may sell beer and wine ended unsuccessfully Tuesday.

"We're disappointed," said Ken Motley, one of the drive's organizers. "I'm a little bummed, but we're not finished."

Motley and Mike Sherwood, who own a Thomasville restaurant, started the drive in September. They finished about 800 signatures short of the 2,790 required. They had 90 days to get signatures from 35 percent of Thomasville's 7,971 registered voters.

Motley said they plan to start another petition drive next summer and hope to raise money to cover advertising and printing costs for that drive.

Thomasville voters approved the sale of beer and wine for off-premise consumption in separate votes in May 1980.

Panel Says Tests Need Regulation

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — As workplace drug tests gain popularity with North Carolina businesses, the General Assembly should regulate the practice to protect employee rights, a legislative study panel says.

"We've taken a big first step to allow testing in the workplace, but at the same time to have some safeguards," said Rep. Milton "Toby" Fitch, D-Wilson. A bill he introduced in 1986 to ban workplace testing led to creation of the study commission.

The group endorsed a plan that would restrict random testing and bar companies from dismissing workers simply on the basis of a positive drug test. The measure will be submitted to the Legislature in 1989.

State officials don't know how many North Carolina companies test their employees for drugs, Jeffress said.

"Only that it's more every day," he said. "There are clearly thousands of them now. It used to be hundreds."

There currently are no state restrictions on drug testing.

The proposed statute would allow random drug testing only for employees in jobs where drug use would create a health or safety risk or a security risk.

For all other employees, a company could require a drug test only if there were reasonable suspicion of drug use, such as abnormal conduct or erratic behavior while at work.

The proposed legislation also includes several safeguards in the testing procedure. A second, more advanced test on the same sample would be required if an employee tested positive on a screening test. An employee who again tested positive could request a third test at the employee's expense.

Panel Wants Less Regulation

GREENSBORO — Since 1979, a division of the state Department of Human Resources has decided how many nursing home beds are needed, when and where they are built and who can build them. But that system might be on its way out.

"I've a feeling that everyone is sick of" the certificate-of-need process, said Sen. Bob Shaw, R-Guilford.

"I personally think there are a bunch of ratty nursing homes out there," said Shaw, a member of the N.C. Study Commission on Aging. "They are not going to overbuild what the market will bear."

The study commission, a legislative panel examining the needs of the state's elderly, voted 4-3 last Thursday to recommend legislation to the 1989 General Assembly that calls for the repeal of the nursing home certificate-of-need process.

No longer federally mandated, that process also governs other medical expenditures. Major health-care construction, expansion or acquisitions must usually win approval from state officials through the certificate-of-need process.

State officials argue the process eliminates duplication of services and contains the cost of medical care. Without a certificate of need, North Carolina nursing home operators would not be licensed by the state and would not be eligible for Medicare or Medicaid reimbursement, said Lee Hoffman, chief of the Certificate of Need Section in Raleigh.

Many critics argue free enterprise and competition would bring equilibrium to nursing home bed supply and demand, The Greensboro News & Record reported.

Ernest Messer of Canton, a former legislator and Commission on Aging member, said efforts to contain Medicare and Medicaid expenditures by limiting nursing home construction have caused problems for hospitals, unable to discharge patients in need of nursing care.

Demand for nursing home care is far outrunning supply in North Carolina. As a result, elderly patients wait months to get nursing home placement, often in a facility hundreds of miles from their families.

Messer says the certificate-of-need process artificially creates a monopoly-like marketplace that eliminates competition and leaves little incentive for operators to provide quality care.

The process, which determines need, solicits and reviews proposals before approving one proposal, is subject to appeal. Often, disgruntled applicants appeal when rejected by state officials. That has meant lengthy delays in nursing home construction and widened the gap between supply and demand.

Since 1984, state officials have allocated 7,022 new nursing home beds, Messer said, and 4,267 of those have been appealed.

"The conclusion is that the CON law is just not working," he said. "It is not meeting the needs of the older people."

Hoffman, chief of the Certificate of Need Section, countered, "The law helps contain the costs of nursing home services and also helps to distribute the services across the state. If the law was repealed ... a disproportionate number of beds would be built around the major urban areas."

Hoffman acknowledged appeals have caused construction delays but said recent legislation sped up the appeals process. Appeals are now resolved within 300 days.

"In the very beginning, everyone was testing the waters," he said. "That isn't the case any longer. We don't get an appeal in every nursing home situation now."

Currently, 466 nursing beds in eight counties are under appeal.

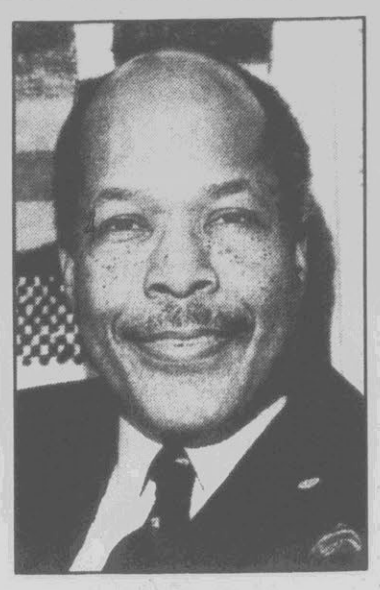
Sullivan Still Top Choice For HHS Post



LOUIS SULLIVAN

By Terence Hunt
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Black educator Louis Sullivan appears on track to be George Bush's secretary of health and human services despite a sudden uproar over his abortion views, while Chicago transit official Samuel Skinner remains on standby for appointment as transportation secretary.

Sullivan and Bush's top aides spent a lot of time Tuesday in talks with anti-abortion leaders, assuring them that Sullivan's views were in line with those of Bush. Sullivan triggered the flap by saying in an interview he supports the right of a woman to seek an abortion — a position at odds with Bush's — but opposes the use of federal funds to pay for it.

Apparently satisfied that storm had been calmed, Bush's chief of staff, Craig Fuller, invited the four television networks in late in the day for separate interviews about Sullivan.

"Our discussions with Dr. Sullivan have been ... very encouraging," Fuller said. "We feel he is a very strong candidate. I think we'd like to go forward with him and I think we're pretty close to that."

Moreover, a transition source noted that Sullivan has strong backing from Bush's wife, Barbara, a friend of Sullivan who serves on the board of Morehouse College where he is medical school president.

Meanwhile, Skinner waited again in Washington to be summoned to an announcement ceremony about the transportation post.

Skinner, chairman of the Northeastern Illinois Mass Transit Authority, was called to Washington last week for an expected announcement that was then postponed by Bush. He returned to Chicago for the weekend, then was summoned back on Monday, then told by transition officials his appointment would come on Tuesday.

Transition staffers were privately joking that Skinner's trips back and forth were giving him loads of experience with problems in the airline industry, plus paying a dividend of frequent-flyer mileage.

Amid the controversy over Sullivan, Bush canceled a planned afternoon appearance for personnel announcements, avoiding questions from reporters about the abortion dispute.

Instead, he issued a written statement saying he was putting former Nevada Sen. Paul Laxalt and former Ohio Rep. Thomas Ashley on the National Economic Commission, a panel created by Congress to find a bipartisan strategy for cutting the huge budget deficit.

The appointments put the commission at its full strength of 14 people. Bush emphasized Tuesday his opposition to raising taxes to erase the red ink.

In another development, a Reagan administration source said Patricia Diaz Dennis, a member of the Federal Communications Commission, appeared to be emerging as the No. 1 contender for the job of labor secretary.

With a self-imposed Christmas deadline for naming his Cabinet, Bush has filled eight seats and still has six to go. If he is selected, Sullivan would be the first black in Bush's Cabinet.

Bush has yet to name a woman to a Cabinet post, although he has nominated Carla Hills to be chief trade negotiator, a job that carries Cabinet rank.

While Bush's aides insisted that Sullivan was still the top candidate for health and human services, anti-abortion leaders worked furiously to derail his expected nomination.

Rep. Bob Dornan, R-Calif., said Bush "will rue the day" he picks Sullivan. Gary Bauer, a conservative leader who was President Reagan's domestic policy adviser, said the appointment of Sullivan would be "politically stupid" because it would alienate a bloc of voters that had supported Bush.

One anti-abortion group, the Ad Hoc Committee in Defense of Life, issued a statement saying Sullivan's appointment would be a "slap in the face."

Sullivan's congressional supporters on Tuesday were circulating a letter in which he said, "I am opposed to abortion except in cases of rape, incest and where the life of the mother is threatened. ... My position on abortion is entirely consistent with President-elect Bush's position."

Sullivan told the Atlanta Journal and Constitution that his pro-choice stand on abortion was a private view and that he did not intend to disagree publicly with Bush.

Deficit Commission Remains Doubtful

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President-elect Bush has made his appointments for the final two spots on the National Economic Commission, but doubts persist over how successful the panel will be in breaking a seven-year deadlock over the budget deficit.

The high-level commission was created to help the new president deal with President Reagan's biggest economic failure, huge budget deficits that have more than doubled the national debt.

On Tuesday, Bush announced he was choosing former Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., and former Ohio Congressman Thomas "Lud" Ashley, a Democrat and one of Bush's closest friends.

Under law, Bush was required to pick one Democrat and one Republican to complete the 14-member commission, which is headed by Democrat Robert Strauss and Republican Drew Lewis.

Supporters once believed the bipartisan panel represented the best hope of breaking the impasse between Reagan's opposition to tax increases and the Democratic Congress's refusal to trim domestic spending enough to tame the budget deficit.

But even with the appointments, many observers said the commission faces a nearly impossible task of reaching a consensus among panel members who have squabbled openly over such issues as taxes and the need to trim defense spending.

"What Bush has done is give the commission a renewed look of respectability, but the members are a long way from reaching a consensus on a credible plan that Bush and Congress will accept," said Michael Evans, head of a Washington consulting firm that bears his name.

The commission once had hoped to complete its work before Christmas but Lewis has said the panel may not issue its recommendations until next September.

At that time, the panel could serve as an emergency vehicle which Bush could use to throw together a compromise with Congress in order to avoid automatic spending cuts under the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction law.

But Strauss said Tuesday that he hoped the commission would try to meet a March 1 deadline specified in the law creating the panel. The law did provide an escape clause that would allow the new president to delay the report until Sept. 1.

The commission has scheduled 16 days of hearings in January and February to begin making decisions on a deficit-cutting plan even though those sessions have been clouded by a court battle over whether the commission can deliberate in secret.

During the campaign, Bush had derided the commission as a stalking horse for tax increases, something he has pledged repeatedly he will not accept.

But in making his announcements Tuesday, he tempered his earlier skepticism, noting that he had named Ashley and Laxalt one day after the Electoral College ratified the Nov. 8 vote electing him president.

"The swiftness with which I am making these appointments underscores the importance I place on the need to reduce the federal budget deficit," Bush said.

Former Black TV Anchorman Dies

Max Robinson Falls To AIDS Complications

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Max Robinson, who became the first black to anchor a U.S. network news show but soon was beset with personal and career problems, has died at 49.

Robinson succumbed to complications of AIDS, said Tonya Swanson, a spokeswoman for Howard University Hospital. A family spokesman, Roger Wilkins, said Robinson had been ill for more than a year and had been bedridden for a month.

Robinson had hoped that his death would highlight the urgency of the AIDS problem, Wilkins said in a statement issued Tuesday on behalf of the family.

"During his battle with the disease, Mr. Robinson expressed the desire that his death be the occasion for emphasizing the importance, particularly to the black community, of education about AIDS and methods of its prevention," the statement said.

AIDS is a contagious disease that attacks the body's immune system, rendering it incapable of resisting other diseases and infections. The chief victims of the incurable disease have been homosexual men and intravenous drug abusers. Health officials estimate that heterosexual contact is responsible for 4 percent of cases.

Robinson in 1978 left Washington television station WTOP, where he had won top ratings as an anchorman for a decade, to join ABC as the first black to anchor a network news show. He co-anchored the ABC Evening News from Chicago with Peter Jennings in London and Frank Reynolds in Washington.

"He made an important contribution to ABC News for which we will always be grateful," Roone Arledge, president of ABC News in New York, said in a statement. "It is tragic to see his life end at such a young age."

Ronald Townsend, president and general manager of WUSA-TV, successor to WTOP, said: "Broadcast journalism has lost a strong voice for fairness, equality and human rights."

"He had great presence on the air," said James Snyder, vice president for news for Post-Newsweek Stations, who worked with Robinson.

Snyder and others said pressures on Robinson, a moody man, as a pioneer worked against him.

"When Max went to the network, he was not as successful as he was here," said Snyder. "He had a lot of pressure, pressure from his friends. But he had the opportunity to be the first black network anchorman. He had to take it."

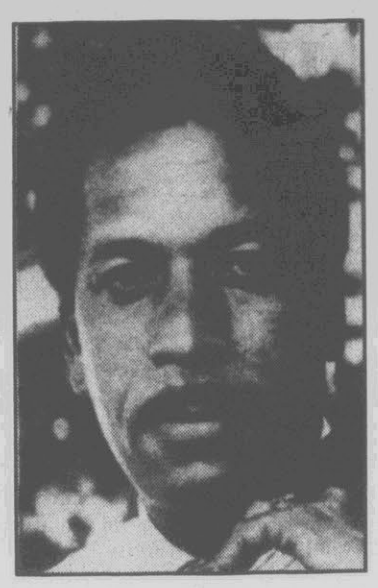
"There were personal demons he was wrestling with," said Gordon Peterson, his former co-anchor here. "I kind of wish he had stayed here. I don't think it (working at the network) worked well for him."

Robinson's tenure at ABC was troubled as he zealously waged a battle against racism at the network.

Carl Bernstein, ABC's Chicago bureau chief in 1980 and 1981, said Robinson was deliberately excluded from any decision-making related to the newscast.

"There are those, I believe, in the industry, who were either jealous or had problems with Max," agreed Dwight Ellis, head of the National Association of Broadcasters. "He was a really outspoken man."

A frustrated Robinson often complained publicly about the network and charged it with racism in a speech at Smith College in February 1981.



MAX ROBINSON

After Reynolds' death in 1983, Jennings was made sole anchor of the newscasts, and Robinson was relegated to weekend anchor stints and news briefs.

In 1984, he joined Chicago television station WMAQ. The following June he entered a hospital specializing in alcohol rehabilitation, suffering from "emotional and physical exhaustion," according to Nick Aronson, director of communications for WMAQ. He never returned to the station and did sporadic freelance work after that.

"I think one of my basic flaws has been the lack of esteem, not really feeling great about myself, always feeling like I had to do more," Robinson said in an interview with The Washington Post last May.

Robinson started his broadcasting career as a disc jockey in his hometown of Richmond, Va. He moved to Washington in 1965.

He is survived by his mother, Doris Robinson Griffin, and stepfather, the Rev. James Griffin, of Norfolk, Va.; four children, Mark, Maureen, Michael and Malik Robinson; two sisters and a brother.

English-Speaking Ministers Balk At French-Only Signs

By Herbert H. Denton
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

TORONTO — Three of the four English-speaking ministers in the Quebec cabinet resigned their posts Tuesday to protest the provincial government's decision to continue to ban languages other than French from outdoor commercial signs.

Their resignations came as anger arose in English-speaking Canada over the decision by the Quebec government Sunday to invoke rarely used powers to nullify a Supreme Court decision last week. The court had decided to strike down the sign law, saying it infringed on rights of freedom of expression of the non-French-speaking minority in Quebec.

While some suggested that a new constitutional crisis over language was brewing, bilingual Prime Minister Brian Mulroney ducked the issue, strongly defending Quebec when he spoke in French but expressing reservations when he responded to questions in the House of Commons in English.

Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa expressed regret at the resignation of his English-speaking cabinet ministers who will sit in the provincial assembly as backbenchers. "These are very difficult times for Quebec," said Bourassa, who was under heavy pressure from French nationalists to abrogate the high court decision. "I have a judgment, I have to find a solution to reconcile collective rights with (those of) individuals."

"We need the English-speaking community in this province," Bourassa said, breaking with tradition and speaking briefly in English in the legislature. "They have their place. I know it is a tough moment for them ... I had to make a decision (to protect) the French culture, which is an asset not only for Quebec but for Canada."

There are about 5.3 million French-speaking Quebeckers, 580,000 Anglophones and 90,000 others from ethnic groups for whom neither French nor English is their first language.

Bourassa continued to rush through on an emergency basis the new sign legislation which will permit the use of English along with French on commercial signs indoors so long as French is "markedly predominant." The ban will continue on English language signs outside.

The elaborately detailed legislation mandates that signs inside shopping malls and public transportation facilities such as tunnels leading to subway stations also must be solely in French.

In announcing his decision to resign, Environment Minister Clifford Lincoln said, "In my belief, rights are rights are rights. There are no inside and outside rights, rights for the tall or rights for the short.

"Rights are links in a chain of fundamental values that bind all individuals in society," he went on, and tampering with them can "be disastrous for a society whose beliefs are based on a sense of equity and justice for all." Communications Minister Richard French and Public Security Minister Herbert Marx made similar comments in announcing their resignations.

Energy Minister John Ciaccia, the only English-speaking minister to remain in the cabinet, said the government's decision "caused me a great deal of anguish" but he had decided to remain stay on "in order not to weaken our community."

Mulroney, speaking in French on Monday in the House of Commons, staunchly defended Quebec, saying the province "has no lessons to take from anyone" in the treatment of linguistic minorities. French-speaking members of his party cheered him.

But when he shifted to English, Mulroney said he found Bourassa's use of a legislative clause to override the supreme court decision to be regrettable, adding "minority language rights are not negotiable." The English-speaking members of his party cheered those comments.

U.S. Customs Finds Two Tons Of Cocaine Hidden In Freighter

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — U.S. Customs Service agents using blowtorches spent 30 hours ripping apart the belly of a Panamanian freighter before finding their version of a white Christmas: 4,792 pounds of cocaine hidden in a secret compartment.

The shipment, which was destined for holiday consumers, brought a five-day total of cocaine seized on two arriving freighters to 6,733 pounds, according to authorities, who said the shipments were from the same organization.

The amount confiscated made it one of the largest cocaine busts in U.S. history, said authorities, who estimated the drugs' street value at $50 million.

"We had a little Christmas party," Customs spokesman Michael Sheehan said.

The latest bust came Tuesday after Customs agents, acting on a tip, spent the weekend staking out the Panamanian-registered freighter Santo Domingo Express, authorities said. The 300-foot ship, originating from northern Colombia, docked at the Miami River, Sheehan said.

No one appeared to unload the vessel, and agents boarded and seized the ship after the captain tried to leave port Monday, Sheehan said.

Agents were forced to open sealed compartments in the empty vessel's hold, where they found nothing, then spent 30 hours cutting through a ballast tank holding the cocaine, which was numbered, marked and stuffed into duffel bags, authorities said.

"This shipment was designed to be brought in during the holiday season," Woodrow Kirk, a Customs agent, told NBC News.

Initial evidence suggests the two shipments are related, said Sheehan, who did not elaborate on the theory.

"I don't care what anyone says, if you take 7,000 pounds out of any drug organization it's going to make a big dent," said Sheehan. The investigation was continuing, authorities said.

The captain, who was the only person aboard at the time of the seizure, was arrested on smuggling charges. His name was not immediately available, said Sheehan.

Last Thursday, Customs agents making a similar surveillance on the Miami River boarded a Haitian freighter and discovered 1,941 pounds of cocaine concealed inside a fuel tank.

Three Colombians seen driving away from the freighter Cha Cha were arrested, as well as a Colombian member of the ship's crew, Sheehan said.

The Customs Service's Riverwatch initiative, an intensive effort to slow the flow of drugs into Miami ports, has resulted in seven seizures totaling 10,982 pounds during the past three months, Sheehan said.

Cocaine has turned up in a shipment of kidney beans on a Colombian freighter, in a load of wicker furniture from Chile and inside cans of glue from Venezuela, federal agents said.

FmHA Losses Reported At $36 Billion

NEW YORK (AP) — A federal audit found that the Farmers Home Administration, which makes loans to struggling farmers, has accumulated losses of at least $36 billion, a newspaper reported today.

The General Accounting Office said the agency would be "unable to meet its outstanding debt obligations without additional borrowings or congressional appropriations," according to The New York Times.

"People just don't realize how much money we are lending to farmers in this country," said Frederick D. Wolf, director of the GAO's Accounting and Financial Management Division. "Congress is clearly going to have to deal with this problem next year."

The agency was created more than 40 years ago to provide low-interest loans for farmers who have difficulty finding credit in the private sector.

The GAO audit, the first in the agency's history, found that the agency had total liabilities of about $91 billion, but the value of its outstanding loans was only about $55 billion, leaving a shortfall of $36 billion.

The audit was for the fiscal year ended Sept. 30, 1987.

"We've seen nothing in the past year that would reverse the loss trend," Wolf said.

Some of the loans are backed by land, but others made to help farmers buy seed and equipment are not, making recovery of those loans nearly impossible.

Farmers who can't qualify for a bank loan or a loan from the Federal Farm Credit System can come to the Farmers Home Administration as a last resort.

"By definition the borrowers are the least credit-worthy, and you better expect some losses," Wolf said.

Farm loans under the program went from $60 billion in 1982 to almost $90 billion in 1987, due to the depression in the agriculture economy. In 1987, losses grew by $22 billion.

Last year, Congress approved a $4 billion bailout for the other major farm-lending agency, the Farm Credit System. The government is under pressure to bail out insolvent savings and loan associations at a cost of about $50 billion.

Some Blacks Say Want To Be African Americans

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Some national black leaders, including the Rev. Jesse Jackson, say it's time the term "black" was replaced by "African-American."

"Just as we were called colored, but were not that, and then Negro, but not that, to be called black is just as baseless," Jackson said after a meeting of the black leaders.

The leaders met to discuss national goals and objectives and said they would meet in March to try to set a national black agenda, Jackson said.

"To be called African-Americans has cultural integrity," he said. "It puts us in our proper historical context. Every ethnic group in this country has a reference to some land base, some historical cultural base. African-Americans have hit that level of cultural maturity."

"There are Armenian-Americans and Jewish-Americans and Arab-Americans and Italian-Americans," Jackson said. "And with a degree of accepted and reasonable pride, they connect their heritage to their mother country and where they are now."

Baker Says New Administration Plans Fresh Approach For Central America

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State-designate James A. Baker III has told key congressional leaders that the Bush administration plans a fresh approach to Central American and will not make an early request for military aid to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels, informed sources said Tuesday.

While still seeking to pressure the Sandinista government to accept democratic reforms, Baker has made it clear that President-elect George Bush does not want to begin his term by igniting a confrontation with Congress over military aid like those of President Reagan's final years in office, the sources said.

Baker did not rule out an eventual request for military aid, but he appeared to be seeking advice on how to fashion a Central America policy that would enjoy bipartisan support after several years in which it has been one of the most bitterly fought partisan issues on Capitol Hill, the sources added.

The question of how the Bush administration should proceed in Central America will be examined as part of a broad review of foreign policy that Bush advisers are planning as Reagan's term comes to an end next month, the sources said. The review is intended to help Bush chart his own policies in critical areas such as Central America, the Middle East and U.S.-Soviet relations.

In mid-October, faced with opposition from congressional Democrats, Reagan abandoned his fight to win release of $16.5 million in military aid to the Nicaraguan resistance that has been held up since 1985. Congress voted in September for $27 million in non-military aid that will expire at the end of March.

Bush has long supported the Contra aid effort, and since the Nov. 8 election has renewed his pledge to help the resistance, although he has not specifically promised to seek military aid. "I just think it is essential to support those that are fighting for freedom, the quest being freedom and democracy in Nicaragua," Bush said Nov. 14.

Three weeks before the election, when Bush was asked what his approach to the Nicaraguan resistance would be if elected, he replied, "I'd simply take a hard look when I got there, see what the facts were at the time and try to help the forces that want democracy."

Baker, who is vacationing, could not be reached for comment Tuesday. Among others, Baker has talked privately with the recently elected Senate majority leader, George J. Mitchell, D-Maine, Senate Minority Leader Robert J. Dole, R-Kan., and other members of both chambers.

Mitchell and Dole would not comment on what Baker told them. Mitchell said, however, that he had urged Baker to "take a fresh approach ... and not begin with a big fight over an initiative he can't win," Mitchell said referring to military aid for the Contras who are fighting the government of Nicaragua.

Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., a member of the Foreign Relations committee who also talked with Baker late last week, said, "I sense he is looking for a fresh approach on the issue."

According to those who have talked with Baker, the decision not to seek an early renewal of military aid was based on a calculation that Congress would reject any such request. "He clearly indicated he didn't see any point of sending up a military package but he wanted to keep up pressure on (Nicaraguan president Daniel) Ortega somehow," said one senator who spoke with Baker but did not want to be identified by name.

The senator said Baker was exploring possible alternatives for keeping up the pressure on Ortega, but that the discussion was "all rather nebulous."

Another senior member of Congress said Baker has "made it clear" in talks with lawmakers over the past two weeks that he wants a compromise with Congress on U.S. policy in Central America. The lawmaker said he got the "strong impression" that Baker was not planning to make any request for military aid but that Baker did not say this explicitly. "I don't think he's there yet" in terms of a firm decision about policy details, including aid to the Contras, he added.

"He's talking about working with Central American nations, which is very much what we're interested in," the legislator continued. "If that's where he's headed, he'll get support here" on Capitol Hill, he said.

A Reagan administration official speculated that when the current allotment of non-military aid expires in March, Bush may ask Congress to extend it to Sept. 30, the end of the fiscal year.

"It doesn't seem like lethal aid is in the offing in the first nine months of this year," the official said. "It occurs to me that some sort of diplomatic initiative would be in order, but what that is, is not clear."

Lavish-Living Investment Adviser Accused Of Embezzling $20 Million

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — An investment adviser who lived for weeks in plush hotels in the Far East after fleeing Florida in August returned in handcuffs to face charges of embezzling up to $20 million from his clients, authorities said.

Henry Gherman, 52, was scheduled to appear at a preliminary hearing this afternoon on fraud and embezzlement charges before U.S. Magistrate Linnea Johnson.

Gherman was extradited Tuesday after being jailed since October in Tokyo. He was arrested and sent to Japan by FBI agents after some American tourists recognized him in a Taiwan hotel.

The fugitive, who mailed written apologies to about 50 clients before he disappeared, arrived aboard a commercial flight at Miami International Airport Tuesday night, escorted by a dozen police officers, FBI agents and federal marshals.

Family members waiting for the plane said they were hoping to talk with Gherman for the first time in four months, but he managed to share only a strained smile with them as he was led into a car and driven to Miami's Metropolitan Correctional Center.

Gherman's extradition from Japan was approved earler this month by a Tokyo court after FBI agents presented a criminal complaint charging him with two counts of fraud and five counts of embezzlement.

"I hurt for him," said Gherman's daughter, Shari Gherman Rance. "I can't believe he would intentionally hurt me or anybody."

In his letters of apology, Gherman blamed his disappearance on the impending collapse of one of his company, Financial and Investment Planning Inc.

"I have been unable to come up with any solution other than running," Gherman wrote, adding that he would try to return the money eventually. "I am truly sorry."

According to the complaint, Gherman may have been making unauthorized transfers from his client's pension plans to his North Miami Beach business since as early as 1978.

Authorities said up to $20 million was embezzled from his clients, many of whom were Miami Beach doctors.

"We've located $2.2 million so far," said Paul Miller, an FBI spokesman, adding that an investigation by the U.S. Attorney's office is continuing. "They're still checking into further records."

A court-appointed receiver now oversees Gherman's finances and that of his family and companies. Gherman also faces civil action from 12 of his former clients in addition to an expected grand jury investigation.

Santa Carries Gun, Takes Cash

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WEST HARTFORD, Conn. — Santa Claus arrived here, but instead of bearing gifts he wielded a gun and snatched more than $700,000 from two armored car guards outside a bank, authorities said.

Police and FBI officials said the straight-faced Santa took two sacks of cash from Dunbar Armored Security Inc. guards outside a United Bank branch in a shopping plaza Tuesday morning.

No shots were fired and neither guard was injured, police said. One guard was apparently inside the bank while the other was carrying the sacks of money to a van.

"This is not a joke. Get up against the wall. Give me the bags of money," the robber, between 35 and 40 years old, told the guards, according to Detective Capt. Russell Hughes.

The white-bearded robber, dressed in a Santa hat and trench coat and bearing a silver revolver, hopped into a car with another male accomplice and drove off, Hughes said.

Authorities suspect that the robbers tailed the armored car to the bank, said Terry Shumard, an FBI spokesman. He said the two bags held more than $700,000 in cash.

"It's too bad people have to use Santa Claus like that because kids look up to him," said a teller at the bank who would only identify herself as Miss Mroz. "This was really strange."

A Farmington resident who witnessed the robbery followed the suspects' car in his van for about a mile on Interstate 84 and provided investigators with descriptions of the robbers, police Lt. Anthony Duffy said.

Employees and the two or three customers inside the bank at the time were unaware the theft was taking place, according to teller Jane E. Neveu.

It was the third armored car heist in five years in the suburban Hartford community of 60,000, including the notorious 1983 theft of $7.1 million from a Wells Fargo depot, the second-largest cash robbery in U.S. history.

Quayle Fills Top Staff Positions

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Robert M. Guttman, the congressional aide who is credited with being "the intellectual keystone" behind the job training act that vice president-elect Dan Quayle wrote in the Senate, Tuesday was named Quayle's chief of staff.

The appointment of Guttman, 60, to head the vice president-elect's staff of about 100 was not regarded as a surprise and it came with assurances that Guttman will be one of about six aides who have direct access to Quayle. Aides said Quayle rejected suggestions he install an autocratic chief of staff through whom all his staff would have to report.

"He decided he wanted someone he knew well, had worked with and was comfortable with," said David C. Beckwith, whose appointment as Quayle's press secretary was announced officially Tuesday. Beckwith, 46, is a former Time magazine correspondent.

Guttman, who was born in Munich and served in the British Army during World War II, is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Harvard University who went to work for Quayle eight years ago. At the time, Guttman, who earned a law degree from George Washington University, was a manpower consultant for the Congressional Research Service.

"They were something of an odd couple: veteran and kid, liberal and conservative, intellectual and plunger. But they hit it off immediately," Richard J. Fenno Jr., a University of Rochester political scientist, wrote in a new book on Quayle. "And they established and maintained an easy working partnership of respect and trust."

Guttman played what Fenno describes as the key role in developing Quayle's Job Training Partnership Act while he served as counsel to the Senate subcommittee on labor and human resources, which the Indiana senator headed. The book says it was Guttman who shaped Quayle's decision to seek bipartisan support for the legislation, an action that upset some Republicans.

The appointments were the first announced by Quayle, and aides said they indicate that the vice president-elect has decided on the overall shape of his staff. Some additional staff appointments are possible Wednesday before Quayle leaves for a skiing vacation in Colorado.

Beckwith said Quayle talked to about eight people before deciding to offer the $77,400-a-year position to Guttman. Some of those people are being considered for other positions, Beckwith said.

Kennedy Joins Protest Of Judge

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DALLAS — Sen. Edward Kennedy, Texas Treasurer Ann Richards and other elected officials joined gay rights activists in attacking a state judge who said he gave a killer lighter punishment because his victims were homosexuals.

"The recent actions of the state judge in Dallas County violate the fundamental principle that everyone stands equal before the law. The suggestion that those who kill homosexuals deserve shorter sentences is bigotry at its worst," said a statement from Kennedy, D-Mass., read at a Tuesday night rally.

About 500 protesters, many chanting "No more Hampton" and others carrying signs that said "Bigot Resign," gathered at City Hall to demand the resignation of District Judge Jack Hampton.

"Dallas bears the shame for every day that he sits there, and the world is watching," William Waybourn, president of the Dallas Gay Alliance, told the protesters. "Dallas cannot afford the image of hate for as long as he sits on the bench.

Hampton told the Dallas Times Herald in an interview published last week that he sentenced Richard Lee Bednarski, 18, to 30 years in prison instead of a maximum life sentence on Nov. 28 because, in part, the two men Bednarski was convicted of killing were homosexuals.

"These two guys that got killed wouldn't have been killed if they hadn't been cruising the streets picking up teen-age boys," Judge Hampton said. "I don't much care for queers cruising the streets picking up teen-age boys. I've got a teen-age boy."

Richards, who gave the keynote address at the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta last summer and is considered a likely gubernatorial candidate in 1990, also issued a statement that was read at the rally.

"The constitution guarantees that when we come before our courts seeking justice, our lives will not be given less or more value than the lives of others," it said.

A statement from U.S. Rep. John Bryant, D-Texas, said: "This manifestation of hatred in the midst of the Christmas season cannot be met with silence. It must be met with outrage."

Hampton's remarks have mobilized the Dallas gay community more than anything in years, Waybourn said before the rally.

"The change is we're not sitting on our hands. We're fighting back," he said. "It's the first time we've taken the initiative in this manner in getting rid of a bigot."

The Texas Human Rights Foundation and the Dallas Gay Alliance have filed complaints with the State Commission on Judicial Conduct seeking Hampton's removal from the bench.

Robert Flowers, executive director of the judicial conduct commission, said there will be a general inquiry into the complaints and that the commission probably will hear a preliminary report on them at its Jan. 13 meeting.

The commission can dismiss the complaints or impose sanctions against the judge. It also could begin the procedure by which a judge is removed.

One Texas group, however, the Christian Voting Bloc, has supported Hampton.

"We'd work to keep him in office," said Joe Seay, chairman of the Odessa-based organization. "We need more like him."

Lens Recovered

MANTEO, N.C. (AP) — About 600 pounds of lenses and two World War II flood lamps taken from the Cape Hatteras Lighthouse almost two years ago have been recovered by the Dare County Sheriff's Department.

Sheriff's department officials said they think the nine-section "first order fresnel lenses," which were taken from the Little Kinnakeet life-saving station in February 1987, were in the marsh for about a month.

Program Helps Parents Cope With Handicaps

By Rosalie Trotman
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A couple has a premature infant or a child with a chronic illness. They need help. What to do or who to call?

Dan and Diane Pickett of Greenville and 21 other trained volunteers are available through Parents Supporting Parents. Parents involved with the program face problems such as spina bifida, cerebral palsy, mental retardation, Down's syndrome, autism, epilepsy, cancer or cystic fibrosis.

They are trained to work with parents of a newly diagnosed child or with parents who are experiencing difficulty in adjusting to their child's illness or disability. They are trained to listen and give options.

"We don't offer advice — but we do encourage parents to find a way to cope that will work for them and help their individual needs," said Mrs. Pickett.

"Some parents who are experiencing these life crises exhibit shock, confusion, denial, grief, guilt, hostility, withdrawal and rejection prior to acceptance," Mrs. Pickett said. "This is not to say that each parent goes through each stage in a particular order or at a particular time. This process is cyclical and can occur many times during certain stages of the child's development."

"Hopefully with this support system in place, the growth of parents participating in the Parent Supporting Parents program will produce a positive change in attitudes, values, capabilities, concerns and involvement," said Mrs. Pickett.

"It is the common bond of 'being there and sharing' that creates an atmosphere that draws parents close to each other, their own families and the community," Mrs. Pickett sai

"Parents all too often b ne themselves when a chronically ill or handicapped 'd is identified. Based on e, I can tell you what a comfort it is to have another couple or parent listen to your concerns and help you work through these feelings," Dan Pickett said.

"Grief, guilt and extreme anixiety are all part of the process. Grief is something a parent will carry with them all their lives because they didn't have a normal child," he said.

Referrals come to the group from professionals, such as physicians, nurses, social workers, clinics and schools. They may also come from someone seeing our brochure and individual referrals.

Sandy Steele is coordinator of Parents Supporting Parents in Greenville.

"Sandy will match the referral parent with a support parent who has a child with a similar handicapping condition. Contact is made initially by phone and frequently includes personal visits from the support parent," he said.

"Our group is different from other support groups throughout the state. We offer a one-on-one interaction instead of group sessions," Mrs. Steele said.

The non-profit group operates through legislative and United Way funding. Plans for the network originated in 1985 with a proposal to the N.C. Council on Developmental Disabilities, and plans are being made to expand the assistance into Beaufort and Martin counties.

Those interested in Parents Supporting Parents can call Mrs. Steele at the Developmental Evaluation Clinic, 757-6921. Mrs. Steele can also provide information about other agencies and resources in the area.

Wedding Guidelines

A black and white glossy 5x7 photograph is requested for engagement and wedding announcements in The Daily Reflector. For publication in a Sunday edition, the engagement information must be submitted by 12 noon on the preceding Wednesday. Engagement pictures must be released at least three weeks prior to the wedding date. After three weeks, only an announcement will be printed.

Wedding forms and pictures should be returned to The Daily Reflector one week prior to the date of the wedding. All information should be typed or written neatly.

Fitness Finesse
Offers A Month Long Clinic For Weight Reduction Through Hypnosis.
The clinic is being conducted by David Carpenter, M.A. Mr. Carpenter is a local therapist who routinely uses hypnosis in his clinical practice. He has been using hypnosis for the last several years and the last two clinically with Medical Park Associates. In the area of weight reduction, Mr. Carpenter has been very successful in helping many gain control over their eating habits and reduce weight to keep it off over the long haul.
In using this approach to weight reduction, the focus is more on altering your perceptions and thoughts surrounding overeating. This will have much more of an impact on your ability to control the amount as well as the types of food you choose to eat; thus, reducing weight. By focusing on where overeating starts (in the mind) the habits are altered and more permanent results occur.
This program has certainly helped me. No more chocolate attacks. Thanks, David Carpenter, for your help.

Simple slap stitch makes sweater easy to knit

Houndstooth Checks Accentuate A Striking V-Neck Sweater Vest

Houndstooth checks are a perennial favorite. Always in style, they bring a crisp, classic air to this striking knit sweater vest that's easy and quick.

A simple slap stitch and two contrasting colors of worsted-weight yarn combine to create the houndstooth pattern. The deep V-neck is accentuated by a wide band of ribbing and three large buttons. You'll love this fun-to-do design that carries a very reasonable price tag.

The gauge is a quick 3½ stitches to the inch, and easy-to-follow directions are written for small, medium, large and extra-large sizes with finished but measurements of 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches respectively.

To obtain directions for making the Houndstooth Vest, send your request for Leaflet No. Z-121888 with $2 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler Crafts, The Daily Reflector, P.O. Box 419148, Kansas City, Mo., 64141.

Or you may order Kit No. K-121888 by sending a check or money order for $12.95 to Pat Trexler Crafts at the same address. The kit price includes shipping charges, full instructions and yarn in your choice of navy/white, red/white or black/white.

Pat's Pointers

Pat Trexler

Sometimes I suffer a "credibility gap" when I say a pattern stitch that looks quite involved is easy to do, and the houndstooth check pattern falls into this category. That's why I like to encourage you to get out needles and leftover yarns and try a new stitch yourself.

To work this pattern stitich, you will need two colors of yarn and suitable sized needles. The vest shown today is worked with worsted-weight yarn and size 10½ needles, but for practicing, use any yarn and needles you have available. Just use needles larger than normal for the yarn chosen as the slip stitches compress your work.

With contrast color (CC), cast on a multiple of 3 stitches (any number evenly divisible by 3). I would suggest at least 18 stitches for your practice swatch. Knit 2 rows with CC before starting in pattern. You will find it easier than of you start in pattern immediately after the cast-on row.

Pattern Row 1: (right side) With Main Color (MC), Step 1 - slip 1 stitch purlwise; Step 2 - knit 2. Repeat Steps 1 and 2 to end of the row. Row 2: With MC, purl all stitches.

Pattern Row 3: With CC, Step 1 - knit 2 stitches; Step 2 - slip 1 stitch purlwise. Repeat Steps 1 and 2 to end of the row. Row 4: With CC, purl all stitches. Repeat these 4 rows for desired length.

A note for beginners: To slip a stitch purlwise, insert the tip of the right needle into the first stitch on the left needle as if you were going to purl it and pass it to the right needle without purling it.

In other directions you might be told to slip a stitch knitwise. To do this, you work in the same way except that you insert the right needle tip into the left needle stitch as if were going to knit it. As a general rule, if your directions do not specify the manner of slipping, you should slip them purlwise.

Just for fun, if you enjoyed learning the houndstooth check pattern, try this waffle stitch. Because it is based on a garter stitch and uses slip stitches, it creates a dense fabric. Use needles several sizes larger than normal for the yarn chosen unless you specifically want this dense effect.

With MC, cast on any uneven number of sitiches and knit all stitches for Rows 1 and 2. For Row 3: With CC, Step 1 - knit 2 stitches; Step 2 - slip 1 stitch purlwise, holding your yarn at the back of your work. Repeat Steps 1 and 2 to end of row.

Row 4: With CC, work the same as for Row 3, except bring the yarn to the front of your work when slipping stitches and take it to the back to knit the next stitch. Depending on the number of stitches on the needle, Rows 3 and 4 may end in a knit stitch or a slip stitch.

Grandma Needs No Thank-Yous

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: I am writing to protest the kind of giver who always has her hand out for thank-you notes. My mother used to be so rough on us kids to write thank-you notes immediately, we almost hated to get another present for fear of hearing, "Have you written your letter to thank Grandma yet?"

I am 63 years old, and as a direct result of being nagged to write thank-you notes, my own friends suffer because I hate to write letters.

How simple it would have been for my mother to have added a few lines to her own letters, saying, "Susie loves her doll, and wants me to say 'thank you' for her."

I'm a grandmother now, and I've never expected thank-you notes from any of my grandchildren, and I never got any. They love me, and I love them, and I don't need any thank-yous. I give for the joy of giving. — Don't Need Thanks In Knoxville

Dear Don't Need Thanks: Children can be taught to write thank-you notes without being browbeaten. The mother who adds a few lines to her letter saying, "Susie wants me to say thank you for her" is sending this message to Susie: "Don't bother to say 'thank you' — Mother will do it for you."

At the risk of sounding like a broken record: Children cannot be expected to know what they have not been taught, and one of the best gifts a parent can give a child is to teach that child to write a thank-you note personally — and promptly.

Dear Abby: I am a 35-year-old professional woman. Over the last several years I have been invited to numerous social occasions (weddings, bar mitzvahs, etc.) given by my colleagues. I am never asked if I want to bring a guest even though my married colleagues bring their spouses. I am dating someone special and everyone who knows me is aware of this.

Whatever happened to the social custom of extending invitations to "Mary Smith and Guest"? Would it be proper for me to ask if I may bring an escort when I receive an invitation? — Hates To Go Alone

Dear Hates: It's proper. Considerate people still extend invitations to "Mary Smith and Guest." Unless it would be a financial hardship for the host or hostess, singles (male or female) should be invited to bring a guest.

Dear Abby: I appreciate all you have done to prevent animal abuse. If you want to save millions of animals from pain and agony, you will print the following:

Three years ago, a bill was passed to protect laboratory animals from needless suffering. It was passed by a huge majority and signed into law by the president! However, because the opposition to this bill had such a powerful lobby, this law has never been enforced.

Those who want to help laboratory animals should get the names of their congressmen and senators (they are on file in the public library), then write a short letter telling them that you want the Dole Amendment to the Animal Welfare Act implemented! — Melita Mostyn, Mountain View, Calif.

Home Federal Reports Increased Assets

Home Federal Savings and Loan Association of Eastern North Carolina grew to over $100 million in assets during the fiscal year which ended Sept. 30, J. Larkin Little, president and chief executive officer, said in a year-end report to customers of the mutual association.

As a result, Home Federal's assets now total $101,613,521, Little said.

Little also reported pretax profit of $1 million for the year, compared to $1.1 million for the previous year. Lower loan volume and a decline in mortgage loan sales were attributed to the decline.

"Overall, 1988 was a solid year for Home Federal as well as North Carolina savings and loans in general, contrary to national negative reports on our industry," Little said.

"The last three years have been excellent years for Home Federal as we have continued to place major emphasis on traditional lending activities. The association's loan portfolio delinquency rate and foreclosure rate is well below national and state averages, and our goal of managing interest rate spreads has helped us achieve a solid foundation for growth in eastern North Carolina," Little said.

The association announced that Howard L. Hodges Jr., W.H. Taft Jr., Logan N. Womble III and R. Richard Miller Jr. were elected to three-year terms on Home Federal's board of directors. Other members are Billy B. Laughinghouse, Kenneth K. Dews Sr., James S. Ficklen Jr., V. Parker Overton, Dr. Allen Taylor, Charles V. Wilkerson Jr., Lester Z. Brown, and Little.

In addition to Little, officers of the association are Laughinghouse, chairman of the board; Taft, vice chairman of the board; Jerry A. Carson, executive vice president; Faye G. Adams, vice president and secretary; Carolyn B. Rollins, vice president and treasurer; Roscoe L. King, vice president; C. Hal Knox, vice president; W. Carlyle Hall, assistant vice president; Donna C. Bell, assistant vice president and assistant secretary; Barbara K. Loftin, assistant treasurer; and Grace H. Adams, assistant vice president.

Home Federal has offices in Greenville, Bethel, Williamston, Plymouth and Edenton.

potential for flooding downstream and may affect the water quality.

Dr. Wallace Wooles, commission chairman, said he agreed the rezoning does not fit with the character of the neighborhood, is an opening to strip development, and is also a safety hazard.

"I think anything that adds more traffic to that corner is going to be a serious problem in years to come, particularly if that is made a five-lane road, much more heavily traveled and at a higher rate of speed than it is now," he said.

Supporting the request was commissioner Burney Warren, who said, "I don't think it's realistic to expect this land on a five-lane thoroughfare to be developed as single-family residential. The O&I II certainly looks like a reasonable compromise."

In other action Tuesday, commissioners voted 4-3 to recommend denial of a request by the Greenville-Pitt County Convention and Visitors Bureau to amend the sign ordinance to allow the placement, subject to council authorization, of travelers information signs for food, gas and lodging near the intersection of Memorial Drive and U.S. 264.

The board voted by a 7-1 vote to recommend the Zoning Ordinance be amended to increase the maximum height limitation for buildings to 80 feet in the Medical District except in the MD-1 zoning district, where no height restrictions are recommended.

Bulldogs Hold Off Pirates

Mississippi State Claims 88-79 Victory In Contest

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

STARKVILLE, Miss. — If you could win a game playing one solid half of basketball then East Carolina might have pulled off a win in Humphrey Arena Tuesday night.

The Pirates, however, fell victim to poor play at the outset of the game and wound up dropping a 88-79 decision to Mississippi State.

The win lifted the Bulldogs to 5-2 and dropped the Pirates to 4-4.

In many ways, the Pirates came into the game against the Bulldogs with one thing in mind — winning and earning some respect.

"We've played South Carolina and Duke on the road, we don't need respect," ECU head coach Mike Steele said. "We need to play people and make them beat us."

It was obvious before the game started, however, that the Pirates weren't respected by the folks in Starkville.

The Holiday Inn where they were headquartered had a sign outside the motel which read 'Go Dogs Go, Beat E. Carolina.'

Even though the Bulldogs aren't one of the top guns in the Southeastern Conference, the Pirates were well aware that a victory over the Bulldogs would bring the program some much-needed recognition.

"We really need to play well tonight," senior point guard Jeff Kelly said on the team bus prior to the game.

Even so, the Pirates began the game with a look of intimidation and fell behind by nine, 15-6, with just over five minutes gone by in the game.

From there, things only got worse. Chancellor Nichols knocked in a jumper and a free throw with 13:28 left in the half to raise the lead to 18-6.

Following a score by Reed Lose, Greg Lockhart fired in a 3-pointer to make the lead 21-6.

The Bulldog lead found its peak at 20, 35-15, when reserve Reginald Boykin chipped in a pair of free throws with 5:28 left in the first half.

"I don't know if we were intimidated or not," Mike Steele said. "We just stood around and watched for the first five minutes. For 35 minutes, I felt like it was a toss-up game.

"You can't give your opponent too much respect and I think that's what we did with Mississippi State," Steele said. "And I don't mean that in a negative term, but you can't be awed by your opponent."

ECU then began to eat away at the margin. Scores by backup guard Jay Scherer, Lose and Brooks Bryant brought the Pirates to within 35-21 and gave the small Pirate contingent located behind the south goal something to cheer about at last.

The Pirates held their own the rest of the half as Blue Edwards, who led all scorers with 28 points, narrowed the margin to 42-28 at the half with a finger-roll layup.

"Blue, at times, played like the best player on the court tonight," Steele said. "He needs to play like that all the time. I was disappointed in the way he played the first three or four minutes."

The key to the Pirates demise in the first half came with 13 turnovers and 46 percent shooting from the floor.

In the second half, the Pirates cranked up their offensive engine and poured in 61 percent of their field goals and committed only a trio of turnovers.

It marked the second straight contest in which the Pirates have shot over 60 percent in the second half. Against Winthrop, they canned 65 percent of their second half shots.

Gus Hill, who finished with 17, gave the Pirates their first glimpse of a comeback when he scored, was fouled and converted a free throw with 11:59 left in the game to trim the lead to 10, 56-46.

After Doug Hartsfield canned a 3-pointer with 9:00 left, the Bulldogs lead was back to 17, 67-50 and the Pirate comeback was put on ice.

The battle back wasn't dead though as with 3:46 left, Edwards canned a pair of free throws to trim the lead to 72-61.

"They did the things they had to do to try and stay in the game and make it close," MSU head coach Richard Williams said. "I think we played much better than the score at the score indicated. We did some really good things tonight."

Hill brought the margin down to 10, 74-64, moments later when he buried a trey from the corner with 2:53 left.

Edwards then tacked on one of two

Chargers Get Revenge In 63-58 Victory Over Conley

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

LITTLEFIELD — Friday night, after watching his Ayden-Grifton basketball team take it on the chin against D.H. Conley, 55-32, Coach Bob Murphrey said it was one of the worst games he could recall one of his teams playing.

Tuesday night, after watching his Ayden-Grifton basketball team return the favor to the Vikings, 63-58, Murphrey called it the best game of the year for the Chargers.

"I attribute more than anything to pride and determination," he said.

Ayden-Grifton may not have dominated the game the same way that Conley had dominated the earlier one, but it was still a very sweet victory for the Chargers. "I felt like our guys had their pride hurt (by the first game) and everybody was embarrassed the other night," Murphrey said. "They did a lot of soul-searching over the weekend."

One Charger in particular didn't like the outcome on Friday — Ronnell Peterson. The Charger star was held to only six points in the first game, but he responded with 26 this time and could have had more had he not dished off to teammates on a number of occasions. He's been moved to point guard — the position he played in both games — and he's responding well there, Murphrey said.

"We're still turning the ball over too many times," Murphrey said, "but with Ronnell handing the ball, it gives us the strength to weather the storm. He was a very determined player tonight."

Turnovers were a problem for the Chargers, as they had 26 on the night, but they forced Conley into 22, so the net result wasn't too bad.

Murphrey also expressed some surprise that Conley pressured the Chargers as much as it did. "We didn't get as much in the first game and we didn't expect as much man-to-man defense, but they got behind early and needed to force the action," Murphrey said.

Ayden-Grifton quickly powered out into a 9-0 lead as the Vikings failed to find the range. They missed their first eight shots in the game while the Chargers were molding their nine-point spread. Peterson hit five of those, including one three-point bucket.

After Conley finally got moving, however, the Vikings quickly got back into it, led by four points each from J.J. Stephenson and Bershaun Thompson. That spurt cut the lead back to 11-10 before Jimmy Martin hit from underneath to end the first quarter at 13-10.

Leon Dixon, who had a bad night from the floor, made good on a basket to open the second period, 15-10, and Ayden-Grifton maintained at least a three-point lead most of the period. Conley finally cut it to one again, 25-24, on a pair of free throws by Junior Farrow with 2:11 left in the half.

The Vikings then missed a shot that could have put them ahead and Peterson made three free throws and James Woodard made a basket to run A-G back out to a 30-24 lead.

Jaguars Learn Lesson, Rip Havelock Five In 84-62 Win

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

FARMVILLE — Sometimes defeat can teach a lesson better any other form of instruction, at least in the case of Farmville Central's basketball team.

A week ago, the Jaguars suffered their first defeat of the season at the hands of Havelock (60-56), but this time around Farmville had all the answers in a 84-62 win Tuesday night.

In the first game, the Jaguars had trouble operating against a triangle and one defense, but it wasn't a problem this time around.

"I felt like we could do what we wanted to on offense," said Farmville coach Mike Terrell. "When you see a combination defense for the first time, your guys are not sure what to do. But you don't make any real changes. Our flex offense will work against that defense. You just have to run the offense and look for shots in different places."

Jarvis Lang, Reggie Barrett and William Carr were occupying most of those places, especially in the third quarter when the Jaguars broke the game open.

Farmville led 39-32 at the half, but Havelock quickly tied the game by going on a 7-0 run to open the third quarter, keyed by six points by Ledell George.

After George's jumper tied the game at 39-39 with 7:09 remaining in the period, Terrell called timeout to regroup his charges.

Morris Foreman keyed a Jaguar run with two baskets and a steal. Carr also got in the act, feeding Barrett and Lang on two straight backdoor plays as Farmville went on a 15-4 run to take a 53-42 lead with 3:47 remaining.

Havelock coach Shelley Marsh had the misfortune of losing power forward Kinnebrew Morris, his best defensive player, during the stretch.

"That was the turning point for us," Marsh said. "I was switching him to Barrett, Lang, whoever. The triangle and two (defense), they adjusted to that. We then fell apart in the man to man. We didn't beat anybody to the spots we needed to."

Jaguar reserve guard Ervin Forbes closed out the scoring in the quarter by stealing a rebound out of the hands of 6-7 Ram center Anthony Robinson and laying it in as the buzzer sounded for a 60-46 lead that had the home gym rocking.

"We had played box and one on them (on Lang) the first time," Marsh said. "This time they had two guys hurting us (Barrett and Carr) and they took it to us. We played sloppy defense all night. It was probably the worst defensive effort I've gotten from a Havelock team."

Farmville kept pouring in on the fourth quarter. George Burnette opened the period with a layup and Carr followed that by feeding Lang for a dunk with 6:59 remaining. Robinson was called for his fourth foul on the play and Lang added the free throw to make it 65-48.

Carr followed that with a backdoor pass to a wide-open Burnette to make it 67-48.

Havelock never threatened from there as Farmville rolled to the win.

Lang led the way with 23 points along with 10 rebounds and two blocked shots. Barrett had 16 and Carr added 15 for Farmville, 5-1.

George led Havelock, 2-3, with 22 points.

"We executed offensively and defensively," Terrell said. "It's hard to play better than we did tonight. This is probably the best game we've played, but we can't be satisfied. Sometimes playing this good early in the season isn't good for you."

In the early game, Havelock's Lady Rams handed Farmville a 66-52 defeat as Dee Godette scored 23 points and Marry Hill added 12.

Peach Bowl Tickets Are Selling Fast

RALEIGH (AP) — If you're thinking of a pair of Peach Bowl tickets for a last-minute Christmas gift, you'd better hurry.

On Monday, only about 450 tickets remained from North Carolina State University's allotment of 19,300, said sports information director Mark Bockleman.

The Wolfpack meets the University of Iowa Hawkeyes in Atlanta's Fulton County Stadium at 1 p.m. Dec. 31. It will be the Wolfpack's fifth Peach Bowl appearance.

Bockleman said NCSU had begun with a 15,000-ticket allotment, but requested more after early sales went well. "We're establishing a very strong reputation as a team who will carry people to a bowl game," he said.

An Atlanta travel agency bought 2,000 tickets and sold most of them to North Carolinians, he said.

The last NCSU Peach Bowl appearance drew about 23,000 State fans in 1986, when the Wolfpack bowed to Virginia Tech, 25-24.

Robert Dale Morgan, executive director of the Peach Bowl, said Atlanta was ready to welcome Wolfpack and Iowa fans.

The Peach Bowl will have a $50 million economic impact on Atlanta, he said. "I don't think there is any question that NCSU has a reputation in the bowl business, certainly the Peach Bowl."

As for State fans, he said, "They travel well."

Jordan, Wilkins Lead The Early Voting

NEW YORK (AP) — Michael Jordan of Chicago and Dominique Wilkins of Atlanta are the early Eastern Conference leaders in voting for the NBA All-Star game, the league announced.

Jordan, who leads the league in scoring with a 34.8 average, was the leading vote-getter with 181,558. Jordan was tops in votes last season with 1,121,890. Detroit's Isiah Thomas was second among guards with 81,716 votes.

Wilkins, averaging 27.5 points, leads all East forwards with 132,945 votes, followed by Philadelphia's Charles Barkley with 75,177.

Atlanta's Moses Malone, a 10-time All-Star, leads at center with 81,225 votes, followed by Patrick Ewing of the New York Knicks with 74,486.

The 39th All-Star Game will be played Feb. 12 in Houston.

Rutgers Center Declared Ineligible

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. (AP) — Rutgers University basketball center Anthony Duckett, arraigned Monday on theft charges, was declared ineligible for competition by school officials after it was disclosed that a coach had posted his $1,000 bail in violation of NCAA rules.

The loan violated the "extra benefits" clause of NCAA regulations, Rutgers director of athletics Fred Gruninger said, adding that the school notified the NCAA immediately.

The university had stood by Duckett Monday after his arrest on charges of stealing about $2,600 worth of video and telephone equipment from a Sears, Roebuck and Co. department store along with two other students on Saturday.

Strange Named Player Of The Year

CINCINNATI (AP) — Curtis Strange, the U.S. Open champion and the first man to go over $1 million in single-season PGA Tour earnings, was named Player of the Year by the Golf Writers Association of America.

Strange, who won four tournaments and a record $1,147,644, was a runaway winner in the balloting by the nation's golf writers, a GWAA spokesman said.

Sherri Turner, who led the ladies in prize money with $350,851, was named the LPGA Player of the Year and Bob Charles, the leading money-winner among seniors with $533,829, was named Seniors' Player of the Year.

Yanks Don't Offer Guidry Contract

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Yankees are saying goodbye to Ron Guidry, the last remaining player from their 1977-78 World Series championship teams.

Guidry, the team captain, became a free agent Tuesday when New York failed to offer him a contract for the 1989 season. He may be asked to come to spring training as a non-roster player, but the Yankees said that decision will be left to Manager Dallas Green.

"I spoke with Ron about it this morning," Yankees general manager Bob Quinn said. "He was very professional about it. He understood what we're trying to do, getting younger with our pitching staff. He was very philosophical about it."

Guidry could not be reached for comment. His agent, Reggie Ringuet, said that Guidry had wanted to remain with the Yankees.

Guidry had been a "new-look" free agent, but last week decided to remain on the Yankees' roster. Ringuet said that Guidry might accept a spring training invitation.

"I guess if we contact every other major-league club and they say no, maybe he would," Ringuet said. "My instructions are to get him a job."

Sheridan At Top Of List

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATHENS, Ga. — Dick Sheridan of North Carolina State apparently is at the top of the list to succeed Vince Dooley as the head football coach at the University of Georgia.

The Associated Press learned that Sheridan met with Georgia's search committee in nearby Commerce, Ga., Tuesday and later visited the campus.

The source, who asked not to be identified, said he thought the job was Sheridan's to accept or reject.

"My heavens, he impressed us," a member of the search committee told The Charlotte Observer. "He just knocked us right off our feet. He answered some questions like we've never heard them answered before. Not only should he be proud, but the entire male gender should be proud."

Jim Valvano, the athletic director and basketball coach at North Carolina State, said Tuesday night, "We expect to have a conversation tomorrow (Wednesday)."

Robert Bishop, chairman of Georgia's search committee, declined Tuesday night to say whether Sheridan had been interviewed.

"I can neither confirm nor deny that (we met)," Bishop said.

Sheridan, 47, went to the top of Georgia's list when longtime Bulldog assistant Erk Russell, the current head coach at Georgia Southern College, withdrew his name from consideration.

Dooley, 56, announced his resignation one week ago after a 25-year career in which he became only the 10th coach in Division 1-A history to reach the 200-victory plateau, reaching that milestone in a 24-3 regular-season-ending victory over intrastate rival Georgia Tech.

Dooley will coach his last game at Georgia on New Year's night when the 19th-ranked Bulldogs meet Michigan State in the Gator Bowl.

Sheridan has a 19-13-2 record in three seasons at North Carolina State, and has a Peach Bowl battle with Iowa still pending. Before going to the Atlantic Coast Conference school, Sheridan spent eight years at Furman, where he had a 69-23-2 record.

Ironically, Sheridan's last game at Furman was a 44-42 loss to Russell's Georgia Southern team in the NCAA Division 1-AA national championship game.

Russell took himself out of the picture at a morning news conference Tuesday in Montgomery, Ala., where he is one of the coaches for the Blue-Gray All-Star football game.

Russell, 62, said he thinks a four-year commitment should be a prerequisite of the successor to the retiring Dooley.

"I can't give you a reason or several reasons. At this time, I am simply not willing to make that kind of commitment to Georgia, Georgia Southern or anyone else," Russell said.

Charles Knapp, president of the University of Georgia, and Bishop denied offering Russell the job.

Russell served as the defensive coordinator at Georgia for 17 years, leaving after the 1980 season, when the Bulldogs won the national championship, to resurrect the football program at Georgia Southern. He has won two national titles at Georgia Southern and finished second in 1-AA this year, dropping a 17-12 decision in the championship game to Furman last Saturday.

Russell, asked if he was offered the position, said, "Let me say that — yes." He called the coaching position at Georgia "a football job of the highest caliber."

Meanwhile, Denver Broncos Coach Dan Reeves, a Georgia native, said he has been contacted about the job, but declined to pursue it.

Two of Dooley's assistant coaches — offensive coordinator George Haffner and defensive coordinator Dale Strahm — have been interviewed.

In addition, Valdosta State Coach Mike Cavan, a former Georgia player and assistant coach at Georgia for 14 years, was interviewed in Athens on Monday.

Sheridan could not be reached for comment Tuesday.

Sheridan has potentially a 10-year contract at N.C. State, but he would face no financial penalty if he were to leave before the contract expired.

A native of North Augusta, S.C., which is about 90 minutes from Athens, Ga., Sheridan makes an estimated $150,000 a year, including $92,000 as salary.

Dooley's total package at Georgia was estimated at $275,000.

Sheridan probably would be offered a multiyear contract at a base salary of more than $100,000 annually if he elected to replace Dooley, Georgia sources told the News and Observer of Raleigh. His total package probably would be worth more than $200,000, the newspaper said.

Farmville trailed 36-16 at the half and 54-30 after three quarters of play and never seriously threatened in the final quarter, despite 15 points by Brenda Reid in the final eight minutes of the game. Reid ended up with 28 points for the Lady Jags, 3-3.

Farmville's boys return to action Wednesday against Edenton in the opening round of the Pitt County Holiday Classic Basketball Tournament.

Brown's Patience Pays Off

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH, N.C. — It sounds like North Carolina State forward Chucky Brown learned some patience in the 17-day break the Wolfpack had between games.

"Sometimes I got frustrated in the first couple of games," Brown said after scoring 26 points to lead North Carolina State to a 109-81 victory over Alabama State on Tuesday night. "Tonight I just let the game come to me."

Brown made 11 of 12 field goals and grabbed 10 rebounds. Five other Wolfpack players scored in double figures.

"We haven't practiced very well because it's tough to build continuity through exam period," said N.C. State coach Jim Valvano. "I thought we'd come out in an up-tempo to get us going. I was very pleased with the effort. After 17 days, as long as the effort is there, I'm happy."

Rodney Monroe scored 18 points and Avie Lester scored 17 for the Wolfpack, now 3-1. Chris Corchiani added 14 points and 16 assists, Brian Howard had 15 and Mickey Hinnant had 10 for the Wolfpack.

N.C. State built an early lead of 36-12, but the Hornets scored eight straight points to close within 52-36. The Wolfpack held a 54-36 halftime lead.

N.C. State used several scoring spurt to take control in the second half. The Wolfpack opened with a 12-2 run that began on a three-point play by Corchiani. Lester added another three-point play and Brown hit two jumpers to give N.C. State a 66-38 lead.

N.C. State extended the lead to 88-53 with 11 minutes left on two free throws by Howard, which culminated a 9-0 run.

Alabama State coach James Oliver said "good, hard-nosed defense by N.C. State was the key. When you can do that, it becomes a part of your offense. And that's what N.C. State did tonight."

"I believe our guys have already gone home for vacation. Honestly, we are a better team than we showed in this game," Oliver said.

Terry Brooks scored 18 points to lead Alabama State, now 4-5. Darrin Mayo added 16 points for the Hornets, and Izy Dodson and Lemone Shaw had 15 points each.

Georgia Tech.....62
Richmond.....50

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Midway through their latest game against Richmond, it looked like business as usual for Georgia Tech's Yellow Jackets, who had lost their previous three contests against the Spiders.

"They jumped all over us early, and it looked like it was going to be a long night," Coach Bobby Cremins said after his 16th-ranked Yellow Jackets rallied from an eight-point halftime deficit for a 62-50 victory over Richmond on Tuesday night.

Senior forward Anthony Sherrod scored 13 of his 18 points after intermission to fuel the Georgia Tech comeback.

"We needed his experience," Cremins said, "and he came through. He made some big, big buckets for us."

"We owed them one," Sherrod said of the Spiders, whose earlier triumphs over Georgia Tech included a 59-55 decision in the second round of last season's NCAA Tournament.

Cremins said he was not concerned over his team's recent troubles with Richmond.

"I don't get into that stuff," he said. "I've lost to a lot of teams."

Georgia Tech, bouncing back from a weekend loss to Georgia, improved to 5-1.

"We're to the point in our season where we've got to play hard every game," said Cremins, whose team's earlier conquests came against North Carolina-Asheville, Coastal Carolina, George Washington and Baptist.

The Spiders slipped to 3-5.

"It's a shame basketball games aren't 20 minutes long," Richmond coach Dick Tarrant said. "If that were the case, we would have played a great game tonight."

Richmond opened the game by racing to a 13-2 lead, and held a 31-23 edge at intermission.

Georgia Tech turned the ball over six times in the half compared to just once for Richmond, and the Spiders held a 10-3 rebounding edge on the Yellow Jackets' end of the floor.

Nonetheless, Sherrod said, the Yellow Jackets did not hit the panic button at halftime.

"We just needed to keep playing relaxed and disciplined," he said.

Early in the second half, Georgia Tech switched from a man-to-man defense to a box-and-one zone, and the change helped the Yellow Jackets tie the score at 39 on a follow by Sherrod with 11:19 to play.

Sherrod added a 3-point goal and another follow as Georgia Tech went on a 12-1 run to stretch its edge to 51-40 at the 6:13 mark.

After that, Richmond was unable to get closer than 53-45 on a pair of Scott Stapleton free throws with 4:29 remaining.

"They were just too strong," Tarrant said of the Yellow Jackets, who shot 44.9 percent from the floor for the game and finished with a 36-28 rebounding edge. "We just physically got tired."

Georgia Tech also got 12 points from Dennis Scott and 11 each from Tom Hammonds and Brian Oliver. Hammonds also led all players with nine rebounds.

Mike Winiecki scored 17 to pace Richmond, which shot just 20.8 percent in the second half and 34 percent for the game. Ken Atkinson added 12 points for the Spiders and Stapleton finished with 11.

USC Tops Buckeyes

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Now, Terry Dozier can enjoy South Carolina's top 20 ranking.

The 18th-ranked Gamecocks made sure of that — and of keeping a spot in the top 20 — by holding off No. 12 Ohio State 74-68 Tuesday evening at the Carolina Coliseum.

The victory came less than 48 hours after the unbeaten Gamecocks made the top 20 for the first time in nearly 14 years. The victory was also the second straight win over a ranked team by South Carolina, which beat then-No. 16 Tennessee 83-81 in overtime Saturday in Knoxville.

"I'm going to enjoy it (being in the top 20) for a while now. I couldn't enjoy it after the Tennessee game because we knew we had Ohio State coming in here," Dozier said.

"But now we got a little time off to spend with our families," he said. "I'm sure my mom will be excited to see me for one thing; the other thing is us being ranked and unbeaten."

South Carolina, 6-0, led by as many as 13 in the first half and 10 in the second half before 11,375. But Ohio State, 6-2, never folded despite facing a defense that held them 22 points under their 90-point scoring average.

Ohio State, whose lowest previous scoring total this year came in a 72-70 victory over DePaul, rallied to within 37-33 at halftime behind a 13-4 run in the final 4:38 of the first half.

The Gamecocks stretched their lead to 45-35 early in the second half, but again the Buckeyes rallied. Ohio State cut the lead to 49-48 on a follow shot by James Bradley with 14:27 to go, but Brent Price made a 3-pointer and Barry Manning added a bucket to give the Gamecocks a 54-48 lead with 13:58 left.

The Buckeyes, who led only twice, both times in the first minute, again came back, tying it at 68 on a 3-pointer by Jerry Francis, a 6-foot-5 forward who's hit just three of 11 3-pointers this year.

South Carolina regained the lead at 70-68 when John Hudson made both ends of a one-and-one with 1:17 to go after being fouled by Jay Burson, who fouled out on the play after scoring 19 points.

Bucks Topple Scrappy Hornets

Milwaukee Must Come From Behind To Take Win

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MILWAUKEE — Del Harris, the coach of the Milwaukee Bucks, isn't picky about his victories but he wouldn't mind a breather here or there.

He and his team didn't get one against the expansion Charlotte Hornets, even though they got a 125-115 victory Tuesday night with a big fourth quarter and a season-high 37 points from Terry Cummings.

No time to celebrate, though. The teams are back at it again tonight in Charlotte.

"If anyone thought that Charlotte was going to be easy, they were wrong," said Harris, whose team trailed at the half and also after three quarters.

"Until the fourth quarter, we didn't have our defensive clothes on. Terry Cummings scored but it didn't do us anybody any good until the fourth quarter," he said.

Ricky Pierce scored 17 of his 28 points in the fourth quarter as the Bucks rallied with a 22-7 run to end the Hornets' upset bid.

"In the fourth quarter, we came and out and moved the basketball. We played our game," said Pierce.

"It's going to be tough to beat them two nights in a row. We can't get out of our rhythm. We heard that they have a loud crowd," he said.

The Bucks took a 40-32 lead after one quarter, then scored only 17 points in the second and fell behind by two at the half. Cummings kept Milwaukee close with 17 points in the third quarter. "I feel that I'm playing as good as I've ever been and I am having fun," said Cummings. "I love playing in front of big crowds that get me going."

He'll get a chance to play in front of another big crowd tonight, a hostile one that will be eager to see the Hornets return the favor.

"It was our game to win or lose," said Kelly Tripucka, who led the Hornets with 21 points, six more than teammate Earl Cureton. "But we didn't get it done in the fourth quarter. We didn't get any loose balls and we turned the ball over."

"I think this is our third home and home series and we have another one coming up. It might be a schedule maker's quirk. But we can't keep going into these situations 0-1. We got Milwaukee coming into our place, so we almost have to win."

Charlotte Coach Dick Harter said his team seemed to tire in the fourth quarter as the Bucks' running game got cranked up.

"We got beat down the stretch," he said. "We have defensive liabilities, but that is why people are on expansion lists."

Harris said his team will also have to play better if it hopes to sweep the mini-series.

"The arena in Charlotte will rock. It's supposed to be loud. We have to spread out more," he said. "For three quarters we weren't in our offense. We had too many people in the paint."

Bulls 116, Lakers 103

Pro basketball is a 48-minute game. The Los Angeles Lakers, however, found out what 90 seconds can mean.

"We had a real bad minute and a half with some sloppy play and failing to contain the Bulls' penetration," Los Angeles coach Pat Riley said after Chicago handed the Lakers their fourth straight defeat.

Los Angeles led 98-93 with 4:49 remaining in Tuesday night's game. But 90 seconds later the Bulls had taken a 101-100 lead.

"That one-minute breakdown where (John) Paxson hit his jumper to put them ahead for good, and the illegal defense called on us was the difference," Riley said.

The Lakers had a 100-98 l ead when James Worthy apparently stole the ball. But Los Angeles was whistled for the second time in the game for employing an illegal defense, giving the Bulls a technical free throw and possession.

Chicago's Michael Jordan sank the free throw and Paxson put the Bulls ahead to stay when he took the inbounds pass and hit a 12-footer.

"We had what we call a 'full stack' set up that left me free. Since I was open, I just fired away," Paxson said.

Then Jordan went to work, scoring six straight points during a 13-0 spurt that clinched the 116-103 victory.

In other NBA games, it was New York 141, Indiana 113; Dallas 108, Philadelphia 102; Atlanta 121, Seattle 118; Cleveland 110, Utah 94; Detroit 116, Miami 100; Milwaukee 125, Charlotte 115; Houston 105, Sacramento 104; Portland 127, Denver 124; Phoenix 128, San Antonio 110, and Golden State 113, the Los Angeles Clippers 111.

"We lost because we did not get our shots down and we fell behind early by as many as 17 points (54-37)," the Lakers' Magic Johnson said. "At the end, we just didn't score or get back for our transition defense, and it happened four straight times.

"And the final hurt was that illegal defense. They got a free throw, the ball and a jumper. We could never come back."

It is the first time since March 1979 that the Lakers have lost four straight games.

Jordan scored 13 of his 42 points in the final period as the Bulls won for the eighth time in their last 10 games. Johnson had 31 for Los Angeles.

Besides the key 12-footer, Paxson also hit four 3-point field goals as Chicago scored a club-record eight 3-pointers.

The game marked the farewell appearance at the Chicago Stadium for the Lakers' Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who was held to just four points in 10 minutes.

Pistons 116, Heat 100

Adrian Dantley scored nine of his 19 points in the first quarter as Detroit broke to a big lead early and defeated Miami. Rory Sparrow led Miami with 23 points.

With the score tied at 9, a 3-pointer by Bill Laimbeer started a 22-10 run that gave the Pistons a 31-19 lead at the end of the first quarter. Detroit led 61-45 at halftime and 87-72 going into the final period.

Mavericks 108, 76ers 102

Rolando Blackman scored 20 of his 24 points in the second half as Dallas defeated Philadelphia. Sam Perkins had 25 points and Mark Aguirre 21 for the Mavericks, who won their fifth straight road game, equaling a club record. Dallas' record on the road this year is 6-1, the best in the NBA.

Charles Barkley led the 76ers with 35 points.

Knicks 141, Pacers 113

Gerald Wilkins scored nine of his 21 points during a 23-4 second-quarter run that boosted New York over Indiana, the NBA's only winless team on the road.

The Knicks outscored Indiana 40-23 in the second period and coasted to the victory.

Chuck Person had 22 points and Wayman Tisdale 20 for Indiana.

Hawks 121, Sonics 118

Moses Malone scored nine of his 30 points in the final 5:17 and Atlanta withstood a furious Seattle rally.

Atlanta led 99-84 after three quarters, but Seattle's Dale Ellis scored 16 of his 30 points in the final period as the Sonics pulled within three.

Dominique Wilkins led the Hawks with 23 points, while Cliff Levingston had 19 points and 13 rebounds. Xavier McDaniel led Seattle with 24 points.

Cavaliers 110, Jazz 94

Ron Harper scored 32 points and Cleveland's defense sparked a 32-6 third-quarter run as the Cavaliers downed Utah. Mark Price scored 24 points and Brad Daugherty added 21 as Cleveland improved to 16-5. Its .762 winning percentage is the best in the NBA.

Chargers Win...

The half ended with the Chargers leading, 32-26.

Conley cut it to two, scoring the first four points of the second half, but Peterson led a six-point spurt by the Chargers to open it to 38-30 again. Peterson's pass to Woodard finally opened up a 10-point spread, 42-32 with three minutes remaining in the quarter.

Conley, however, doggedly pulled back, closing it to three once more, 46-43, as the period ended.

After a Peterson basket opened the final quarter, Paul Merritt hit a jumper in the lane and Jason Wing scored off a steal for Conley, cutting it to one, 48-47. Farrow then hit a jumper with 5:09 left to give Conley its only lead of the night, 49-48.

But Eric Nobles scored from underneath with 4:39 to play and Ayden-Grifton was back on top to stay. David Dixon added a basket off a steal and after another Conley basket, the Chargers pushed through seven straight points, three of them by Peterson, to put the game away. That opened a 59-51 lead with just 40 seconds to play.

"Ayden played well," Conley coach Cobby Deans said. "We made some mistakes that have been haunting us the last two or three games and they took advantage of them. They just outplayed us."

Deans said that the Vikings didn't go after the Chargers as they should have. "They played better (than Friday) at both ends of the court. We had people running away or doubling up when they shouldn't have.

"I didn't come in here expecting a 15-20 point game, but I did feel that if we played well, we could win. But I'm not surprised, because I saw how flat we were in practice. We just didn't play aggressively on defense."

Deans expressed surprise that his team only was down two in rebounding, 31-29, but wasn't surprised by the shooting.

Ayden-Grifton hit on 60 percent of its field goal attempts while Conley made only 40.4 percent. However, both made the same number of field goals — 21 — but Conley made only 13 of 18 free throws as compared to 20 of 30 for Ayden-Grifton.

Woodard added 12 points for Ayden-Grifton while Leon Dixon had 11 and Nobles had 10.

Conley was led by Thompson with 13 and Terry Williams with 10.

In the girls' game, Conley held off Ayden-Grifton for a 30-26 victory.

The game was close most of the way, but Conley opened up a good-sized lead in the final period, only to see Ayden-Grifton rally within three, but the Lady Chargers never caught up despite having a number of chances to do so.

Conley held a 10-6 lead after the first period of the game, and kept that margin with a 14-10 edge at the half.

Conley expanded that to 23-14 during the third quarter, but they had to hold on to claim the win.

Lendora Tyson and Charlene Davenport each had 10 points to lead Conley, while no one scored in double figures for Ayden-Grifton.

Ayden-Grifton's boys are now 3-2 while the girls fall to 3-2. Conley's boys are 4-2 while the girls improve to 5-1.

Ayden-Grifton and Conley both return to action in the Pitt County Holiday Tournament at Rose on Dec. 28, while the girls teams are in action at the Conley Christmas Tournament which starts next Tuesday.

Academic Exceptions Down For The UNC System Schools

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAPEL HILL — Regardless of their athletic ability, students with extremely low scores on the Scholastic Aptitude Test had virtually no chance of being admitted as freshmen to a major University of North Carolina campus this fall, reports show.

Of 192 freshmen football and men's basketball players admitted this fall at the Division I campuses, only two scored below 700 on the SAT, a standardized test commonly used for college admission. The lowest possible score on the test is 400, and the highest is 1600.

While the reports show that UNC campuses are making it tougher for athletes to get in to school, it also shows they are having mixed success in getting those athletes to graduate within five years, The News and Observer of Raleigh reported.

The reports represent the third annual batch of detailed information about the academic credentials and progress of student-athletes at the 15 UNC campuses with athletic programs.

At UNC-Chapel Hill, 33.8 percent of football players recruited in 1982 had earned degrees within five years. When players who transferred to another school or turned pro are not counted, the graduation rate increased to 50 percent.

Nevertheless, that lags behind the 71.2 percent graduation rate for all Carolina freshman who enrolled in fall 1982.

Dean Smith's basketball recruits, however, outperformed their non-athlete counterparts. All three of the recruits who enrolled in fall 1982 earned degrees within five years.

At North Carolina State University, 31.3 percent of football recruits and 33.3 percent of basketball recruits who enrolled in fall 1982 had earned degrees five years later, once transfers are deducted from the figures. That compares with a 52.4 percent graduation rate for all freshmen enrolled in fall 1982.

The most dramatic success story was at East Carolina University in Greenville, where 50 percent of football recruits who enrolled as freshmen in fall 1982 had earned degrees five years later. When players who transferred to another school or turned pro are not counted, the football graduation rate jumps to 65 percent.

That compares favorably to the 41 percent graduation rate for all freshmen enrolled at ECU in fall 1982. It also represents significant progress compared with the 5 percent graduation rate posted lat year by ECU's 1981 football recruits.

Richard Eakin, ECU's chancellor, said Tuesday that the improved graduation rates could be credited to the academic counseling services that ECU athletes receive.

"Given the special assistance that they are given, we should not be surprised that they would graduate at a rate matching or exceeding the regular student body," Eakin said.

Arthur Padilla, associate vice president for academic affairs for the UNC system, said the reports showed "some very positive trends at some of the campuses, such as East Carolina."

"There has been a dramatic turnaround in students coming in, which is certainly a tribute to the coaches down there and the new chancellor," Padilla said.

The annual reports, which give the public a look at statistics about UNC sports programs that few other state universities share, were ordered by a UNC Board of Governors committee on intercollegiate athletics in November 1985 after committee members concluded that far too many athletes were admitted as exceptions to minimum standards.

Members of the panel also found that many of those athletes failed to graduate by the time their playing eligibility expired.

For example, almost half of the freshmen football and men's basketball players who enrolled at ECU in 1985 scored below 700 on the SAT. And at NCSU and UNC-CH, the percentage of football players and men's basketball players scoring below 700 on the test was 42 percent and 41 percent respectively.

Toward that end, Eakin of ECU said he and athletic director Dave Hart had decided last year to insist on higher admissions standards for athletes.

"We simply decided that we were going to make a commitment to having a recruiting program which would recruit student-athletes who we believed had a genuine chance of completing their undergraduate education with us," Eakin said Tuesday.

He added that he felt is was "very healthy" for the UNC system to monitor the academic progress of their athletes so carefully.

"I think other states would do well to copy us," he said. "I think we're a leader in that sense."

South Korea Frees 281 Prisoners

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEOUL, South Korea — The government released 281 political prisoners today as part of a sweeping amnesty and the freed dissidents vowed to topple President Roh Tae-woo and drive U.S. forces out of South Korea.

Roh ordered the amnesty involving 2,015 "politically motivated offenders" as part of efforts to defuse nationwide furor over demands for the punishment of former president Chun Doo-hwan for human rights abuses and corruption under his authoritarian regime.

In addition to the releases, the Justice Ministry said the civil rights of 1,581 dissidents had been restored, the sentences of 92 people reduced and 61 fugitive radical students dropped from police wanted lists.

Dissident leaders charged that 300 political prisoners remained in jail and dismissed the amnesty as a government trick to perpetuate its control.

Released prisoners and supporters called for Roh's fall and the expulsion of the 42,000 U.S. troops based in the country.

Park Suk-yook, a dissident freed from a prison in the southern city of Kwangju, told supporters, "All prisoners of conscience must be freed to realize democracy ... I will fight, together with my comrades, until the military dictatorship is terminated in this land."

"Drive out the Yankees," dozens of protesters chanted in Chongju south of Seoul as they greeted Moon Boo-shik, who was serving a 20-year sentence for his part in a 1982 attack on a U.S. cultural center in the southern port of Pusan.

Kim Hyun-jang, also involved in the Pusan attack, ridiculed the amnesty. "I am sorry to be released when many comrades are still held in prison," he said.

One person died and three others were injured when the Pusan center was set on fire in an anti-U.S. protest. Dissidents contend Washington supports authoritarian rule in South Korea and demand the withdrawal of U.S. forces based in the country under a defense treaty.

A government spokesman, who declined to be named, warned the released dissidents not to engage in violent anti-government protests.

"The government will deal sternly with radicals' future actions which are seen as defying the nation's free democratic system," he said.

Justice Ministry officials said 224 "anti-state criminals" remained in jail, but said nearly all were communist North Korean spies.

Roh appealed to the nation last month to forgive Chun and promised to free political prisoners as part of a series of measures to wipe out vestiges of the Chun government.

Many South Koreans still identify Roh with his predecessor, although the new government has dismantled Chun's authoritarian controls and helped introduce widespread political reforms.

Chun, a former general who took power with military backing in 1980, went into voluntary internal exile last month after apologizing to the nation for abuses under his rule.

The opposition parties are demanding Chun appear before a National Assembly probe before the question of the pardon proposed by Roh is addressed. Roh wants Chun pardoned without further action.

Dissidents and some mainline opposition leaders hope to use controversy over Chun to generate opposition to Roh, a former general who won presidential elections last December. Dissidents have little public support, but many Koreans are angry about Chun and want some kind of action.

Prime Minister Kang Young-hoon said in a statement Tuesday the amnesty "is aimed at completely resolving the political controversy that has been going on for months over the question of politically motivated offenders."

Among those having his civil rights restored was Kim Tae-kun, a leading dissident who won the Robert Kennedy Human Rights Award. Kim, released in June, drew five years in 1986 on charges of attempting to overthrow the government and spreading pro-North Korean propaganda.

Kim claims he was forced to make a false confession under torture.

Brown Named

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin has named Kevin Brown of Claremont as his deputy chief of staff, Martin's office announced Tuesday.

Brown will assume his duties Jan. 3. He replaces Nancy Temple, who resigned in August to become the assistant secretary for parks and community resources at the N.C. Department of Natural Resources and Community Development.

"Kevin's previous experience at the state Department of Transportation as well as his most recent role in my campaign will help to equip him for new responsibilities," Martin said. "I know he will meet the challenges ahead."

Bethlehem Arabs Refuse To Join Christmas Fetes

Ban On Celebrations Honors Palestinian Uprising

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BETHLEHEM, Occupied West Bank — Vendors in the souvenir stalls around the Church of the Nativity are keeping their Christmas lights and ornaments in packing boxes this year.

In honor of the Palestinian uprising, city officials are refusing to sponsor holiday celebrations in the birthplace of Christ.

Israeli soldiers stood guard Tuesday as Israeli civilians employed by the army built a platform for a choir concert to entertain the hundreds of pilgrims who officials hope will come to worship in Bethlehem on Christmas Eve.

But Arab officials in this West Bank city have decreed that there will be no municipal decorations this year and no traditional holiday reception for diplomats or Boy Scouts on parade.

"It is a protest for those killed, injured and detained," said the town's Palestinian Christian mayor, Elias Freij. "The people are not in a mood to celebrate or rejoice."

More than 330 Palestinians have died in clashes with the Israeli army since they launched their "intefadeh," or uprising, against Israel's 21-year occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Thirteen Israelis also have died in the 12 months of unrest.

The underground leadership of the uprising has declared Dec. 24 "a national day of mourning,", calling a general strike to close shops and restaurants on the normally busy holiday eve.

For its part, Israel's Tourism Ministry has tried to maintain some semblance of Christmases past.

"Nothing has changed in the intrinsic meaning of Christmas in Bethlehem," it said in a statement. "No secular municipal action will either dampen the religious fervor of pilgrims or mar their freedom of worship in Bethlehem."

To this end, the ministry is sponsoring Christmas Eve performances by choirs from Switzerland, Spain and the Shiloh Baptist Church in Washington, D.C.

Roman Catholics, Anglicans and other Christian denominations have put out pamphlets publicizing events ranging from the Catholic patriarch's procession Saturday afternoon to midnight Masses in Bethlehem chapels.

Just how many pilgrims will travel to Bethlehem for Christmas rites is uncertain. Tourism for the year is down 14 percent, and Israel admits many potential visitors have been frightened away by the daily reports of clashes.

Peace and joy were not part of the mood Tuesday on Manger Square outside the Church of the Nativity, which covers the grotto where the Bible says Christ was born.

Israeli soldiers lounging near the undecorated municipal tree were pelted with stones by Palestinian youths, who then fled up a narrow street in the Arab market. Street hawkers complained of bad business.

The holiday sadness extends deep into the Palestinian community, including its Christians.

There are an estimated 35,000 Christian Arabs in the occupied territories and about 100,000 within Israeli borders, according to Geries S. Khoury, director of the Al-Liqa Center for Religious Studies and chairman of the religion program at Bethlehem University.

U.S. Ties Diplomatic Recognition Of Hanoi To Cambodian Withdrawal

By Norman Kempster
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration said Tuesday that it was prepared to extend diplomatic recognition to Vietnam once it pulls all of its occupation troops out of Cambodia and achieves an acceptable political settlement with that nation, but U.S. officials said that Hanoi seemed to be lagging far behind in its announced plan of withdrawing almost half of its troops by the end of this year.

The administration's explicit offer to open diplomatic relations in response to a troop withdrawal is not a radical change from earlier U.S. positions, but the tone of its announcement was far warmer to the Vietnamese regime than previous statements.

In effect, the formula sets up the same sort of process that resulted last week in an unprecedented U.S. dialogue with the Palestine Liberation Organization. When the Reagan administration agreed to substantive talks with the PLO, it was able to defuse much of the criticism by explaining that the action was an automatic result of PLO compliance with conditions established by an earlier administration.

Although the Reagan administration will be out of office before Vietnam could conceivably meet the conditions, such policies carry over from one administration to the next unless the new administation decides to change them. State Department spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley said the administration welcomed Vietnam's latest troop withdrawal, which began this week. Hanoi has said that 18,000 soldiers from six army divisions would return to Vietnam during the next few days, the most significant action since it announced in May that it would pull back 50,000 troops this year.

"While a significant number of troops are apparently being withdrawn this month, we remain skeptical that the 50,000 pledge will be met," Oakley said. "At this point, we still estimate that some 90- to 100,000 Vietnamese troops are in Cambodia.

"We continue to urge Hanoi to issue a precise timetable for the withdrawal of all Vietnamese troops in the context of an acceptable settlement for Cambodia, at which time we would be prepared to normalize our relations with Vietnam," Oakley said.

U.S. officials estimated that Vietnam's occupation force totaled 120,000 before the withdrawals began. They said that between 10,000 and 15,000 soldiers had been removed before the latest phase. Therefore, even if the full 18,000 are withdrawn this month, the total for the year would be no more than 32,000, and probably substantially fewer.

Oakley emphasized that a satisfactory settlement would guarantee that the brutal Khmer Rouge faction would not wield the power that it held before the Vietnamese invasion. That formulation, kept intentionally vague, would seem to permit Khmer Rouge participation in a coalition government while denying the faction a return to absolute power.

In recent weeks, Hanoi has sought to improve its relations with Washington by returning the remains of U.S. service personnel killed during the Vietnam war and by permitting the emigration of Amerasian offspring of U.S. soldiers.

Meanwhile, a bipartisan group of 40 authorities on Indochina led by former Sen. Dick Clark, D-Iowa, urged President-elect Bush to offer a "measured diplomatic response" to the Vietnamese withdrawal from Cambodia.

The report, issued by the Aspen Institute, endorsed the Reagan administration's offer of full diplomatic relations in exchange for full withdrawal.

Morever, the panel said, Bush should take halfway steps, such as the establishment of diplomatic "interests sections" in response to a partial troop withdrawal.

Teacher Out-Yells All Contestants

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO (AP) — A 27-year-old teacher won top honors and $400 in an annual shouting contest by bellowing a plea to a popular singer at 116.7 decibels, organizers said.

"Seiko Matsuda, give it to us straight when you will get divorced!" Ryuta Sasahara of Tokyo hollered Tuesday. Rumors that Miss Matsuda's marriage to an actor is on the rocks abound in Japan's tabloid press.

Masahiro Shoda, 20, a student from neighboring Chiba prefecture, took the "fighting spirit" award with the shout, "Tokyo Giants, try harder!" — a 115.0-decibel yell aimed at the third-place finisher in Japanese professional baseball's Central League.

Eighteen-year-old Noboru Takahashi, a student from Kanagawa prefecture, screamed an insult at Tamori, the one-eyed Japanese comedian: "Tamori, you idiot!" at 114.8 decibels to snare him the "good performance prize."

The sound of a ringing telephone registers about 70 decibels, while traffic noises reach 100 decibels, according to the organizers. One's hearing can become damaged at 150 decibels.

New Vote Rejected

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HENDERSONVILLE, N.C. — The North Carolina Board of Elections voted 2 to 1 on Tuesday to deny Sen. R.P. "Bo" Thomas a new state senate election in Macon County.

With two of its members absent, the state elections board voted to adopt Macon County Board of Elections' finding of facts in Thomas' probable cause hearing last week and to dismiss his appeal, said Alex Brock, state director of elections.

Thomas, a Democrat who fell 280 votes short of winning a sixth term in the senate from the 29th senatorial district this fall, had protested the way Macon County election officials programmed the county's electronic voting machines to accept and tabulate split-ticket votes in the Nov. 8 election

Soviets, Japanese Fail To Solve Dispute Over Control Of Islands

By Margaret Shapiro
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

TOKYO (Wednesday) — Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze and his Japanese counterpart, Sosuke Uno, ended two days of negotiations Tuesday with no progress in a territorial dispute that has prevented the two countries from normalizing relations.

Despite advance optimism about the talks, the first between the two countries in nearly three years, officials said the continued dispute over four islands that the Soviets took from Japan at the end of World War II dominated the discussions and prevented progress in other matters.

However, as a sign of a desire for improved relations, the two sides agreed to step up contacts in the coming months to lay the groundwork for a possible summit meeting between Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev and Japanese Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita.

Uno and Shevardnadze agreed to meet again next month when both are scheduled to attend a multinational conference in Paris on chemical weapons and then again in Moscow in the spring, possibly in May.

They also agreed, in a joint communique drafted after the talks, to set up a permanent working group for the first time to continue discussions on remaining "difficulties" that impede good relations between the two countries. Japanese officials view Soviet willingness to set up the permanent group as a significant development. In a press conference Wednesday morning before departing for the Philippines, Shevardnadze said the talks had improved the mood between the two countries.

"An important step, without exaggeration, has been made that opens up the prospects for Soviet-Japan dialogue," he said, while acknowledging that a "certain dissatisfaction over the state of Soviet-Japan relations ... is quite understandable, because we see how much the world around us is changing. The Soviet Union and Japan need to have more than normal relations; they need to closely interact."

Shevardnadze's visit to Japan was part of an effort by the Soviets to improve their relations with this area of the world to attract both Japanese investment and technology and bring some of the economic dynamism of the region to the Soviet Union's far eastern edge.

Japanese officials, while warning that no major breakthrough could be expected, clearly hoped that recent improvements in Soviet relations with the United States and the West would lead to greater flexibility in dealing with the territorial dispute.

Japan has long claimed that the four strategic islands north of Hokkaido that the Japanese call the "northern territories" were unfairly taken from them by the Soviets and should be returned. The two countries have never signed a peace treaty officially ending World War II because of the dispute.

At the end of the war, the Soviets initially indicated a willingness to return two of the islands, the Habomai group and Shikotan, and continue negotiations over the two others, Etorofu and Kunashir. Since 1960, however, they have maintained that Japan has no claim.

In recent months, though, Soviet leaders and scholars have indicated a willingness to discuss at least the issue and look for potential solutions, a change in attitude that Japanese officials described as significant.

But in nine hours of ministerial level talks Monday and Tuesday, those hopeful foreshadowings did not produce any change in substantive positions, Japanese officials said Tuesday night. "The two ministers had frank, serious and heated discussion" on the issue, according to Japanese Foreign Ministry spokesman Seiichi Kondo, but "neither side showed any concessions."

Japanese press reports suggested that the communique would not go beyond that issued after the 1986 talks, in which the two sides said they would continue to work toward a peace treaty but did not specifically mention the northern territories issue.

In a speech Tuesday night Shevardnadze also made it clear that the Soviets were willing to deal with "all problems of concern to either side" that have blocked the signing of a peace treaty, an apparent reference to the northern territories dispute.

He said the Soviets are interested in purusing a meeting between Gorbachev and Takeshita and that Gorbachev had communicated that fact in a letter Shevardnadze delivered to Takeshita on Tuesday. The last Japanese-Soviet summit occurred in 1973, when Kakuei Tanaka, then prime minister, met with Leonid Brezhnev in Moscow.

Argentine Army Chief Resigns

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — Argentina's army commander, Gen. Jose Dante Caridi, submitted his resignation Tuesday just two weeks after an army mutiny, deepening a serious conflict between the Argentine armed forces and the civilian government.

In return for ending their four-day insurrection in early December, the 500 rebellious officers and troops claimed to have won Caridi's pledge to step down before Christmas. President Raul Alfonsin insisted at the time that the government had made no deal with the rebels and reiterated his confidence in Caridi, the fourth army chief of staff in five years.

Alfonsin plans to address a special session of Congress Wednesday to discuss the civil-military crisis, considered by far the most serious during his tenure.

An army statement Tuesday night said that Caridi had asked to resign, along with the two other most senior army generals, Miguel Abbate and Enrique Bianchi.

Caridi said Friday that although he opposed the mutineers' methods, he shared their main goal: an end to persecution of the armed forces for alleged human rights abuses during the "dirty war" against left-wing subversion, waged by the military dictatorship from 1976 until Alfonsin's election in 1983.

At least 9,000 people were arrested and presumed executed during that period. After democratic rule was restored, civilian courts tried and jailed the five former junta members and several other senior officers for rights abuses. However, further prosecutions were curtailed after army uprisings in April 1987 and January 1988.

Local news reports said that Alfonsin would accept Caridi's resignation and appoint in his place Gen. Francisco Gasino, a staunchly loyalist officer, rather than one of the generals favored by Col. Mohamed Ali Seineldin, who led the latest rebellion.

Gandhi, China Agree To Friendly Ties

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi of India and Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping agreed today to restore friendly ties between the world's most populous countries.

"Welcome, my young friend," the 84-year-old senior Chinese leader said to Gandhi, 44, as the two leaders met in the Great Hall of the People.

"Beginning with your visit we can restore our relationship as friends," Deng said. "The two countries' leaders will become friends, the countries will become friends, the people will become friends."

"I agree and would like to thank you for your warm welcome," Gandhi said.

Deng said he knew Gandhi's grandfather, Jawaharlal Nehru, who came to China in 1954, the last Indian prime minister to do so.

"In the considerable period of time in between, there was unpleasantness with each other," Deng said. "But let us forget it. We should be looking forward."

Chinese-Indian relations were good in the 1950s but a boundary dispute led the two countries into war in 1962.

China claims 36,000 square miles of Indian land. India rejects the claim and demands China return the 15,200 square miles it took in the 1962 war.

During Gandhi's five-day visit, China and India are expected to sign agreements on civil aviation, border trade and science and technology. Consular offices in Shanghai and Bombay may also be established.

Little progress is expected on the border.

Gandhi arrived in Beijing on Monday and spent most of the day meeting with Premier Li Peng. His visit marked the first time Indian and Chinese leaders have met since 1960, when then-Premier Chou Enlai went to New Delhi.

Gandhi and Li discussed the border problem and Gandhi called for a renewal of friendship between the two nations.

"It is now time to look beyond the past," Gandhi said at a banquet Monday night. "It is now time to look forward to the future. It is now time to restore the relationship between our two countries."

In the past, India has said it would only improve bilateral ties once progress was made on the border.

Gandhi also discussed Tibet, trade and the Cambodian conflict with his Chinese hosts in talks his official spokesman described as "warm, cordial and very friendly."

On Tuesday, Gandhi met with China's president, Yang Shangkun, and again talked about China's troubled region of Tibet.

Gandhi said his country will not interfere in China's internal affairs. The issue is sensitive because Tibet's spiritual leader, the Dalai Lama, fled to India in 1959 after an abortive, anti-Chinese uprising.

Gandhi was to meet tonight with Zhao Ziyang, general secretary of the Chinese Communist Party. On Thursday, he is to fly to the ancient city of Xian and Friday he will go to Shanghai.

India was one of the first non-socialist countries to recognize Communist China soon after Beijing's 1949 revolution. In the early 1960s, relations deteriorated over the border question and political disagreements.

Relations began to improve in the late 1979s but the border remains heavily guarded. The two countries began border talks in 1981 but have made little progress in eight rounds, the last of which was held in November 1987.

China has more than 1 billion people. India, the world's largest democracy, has a population of about 800 million.

Animal Advocates Linked To Firebombs

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Authorities say animal rights groups claimed responsibility for firebomb attacks on some of Britain's leading department stores.

The attacks late Monday and early Tuesday gutted Dingles, the largest department store in Plymouth, England; started fires at Selfridges and Harrods in London and at Howell's in Cardiff, Wales; and forced evacuation of Rackhams in Birmingham, England, police said.

Bombs found at Rackhams and at the House of Fraser in London, a department store on Oxford Street, were defused.

There were no injuries. The fires, in the busy final days of the Christmas shopping season, occurred when the stores were closed. But authorities said the Dingles fire caused millions of dollars in damage.

Police in Manchester said a newspaper there received a telephone call Tuesday from the Animal Liberation Front claiming responsibility for the bombings. The caller was quoted as saying, "These incidents are part of our ongoing war against the fur trade."

"The caller claimed his group had carried out the wave of bombings which wrecked a House of Fraser store (Dingles) in Plymouth and caused minor damage at Harrods and Selfridges in London," said a spokesman for the paper, commenting on condition he was not identified.

"Among the bombs he warned about was one at Rackhams store in Birmingham, where a suspect package was found this afternoon, many hours after the call."

Coalition Worked Out By Israelis

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEL AVIV, Israel — After hours acrimonious debate, the conservative Likud bloc's governing body day narrowly approved an agreement that would again wed it with left-wing Labor party in a coalition government.

Labor's central committee was pected to endorse the agreement er today, and a unity Cabinet uld be presented to Parliament ursday.

Many Likud members had been rried their movement would lose ideological stance and a chance rule Israel according to its own ion by joining with its rival.

Party leader and Prime Minister zhak Shamir, however, stressed delegates that the unity governnt had a common enemy: the O-proclaimed state in the aeli-occupied territories.

Despite the differences, we must united against the danger of a estinian state ... and the internanal effort to push us back to the famed 1967 borders," he shouted ring a stormy 4-hour meeting that eceded the vote. Israel captured West Bank and Gaza Strip in the 67 Middle East war.

Israel's new government will be similar the one in power since 1984. t Shamir, instead of switching places with Labor leader and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, will now be prime minister for the whole term.

In Nov. 1 parliamentary elections, Likud won 40 of the 120 seats in Parliament and Labor won 39. Likud attempted but failed to form a government with ultra-nationalist and religious parties.

In today's secret balloting by 1,445 Likud central committee members at a basketball stadium in Tel Aviv, about 55 percent voted for the accord and 44 percent against, with the others abstaining, said legislator Reuven Rivlin.

Beforehand, hecklers interrupted Shamir's speech with shouted boos. Former Defense Minister Ariel Sharon, who led the opposition, repeatedly rose from his chair to bang a wooden hammer on a table and demand order.

Sharon, who has challenged Shamir's leadership in the past, said, "We need a government in which one party has a majority. Labor is a danger to Israel's future and security."

He charged that Labor was unfit for coalition because it favors withdrawing from the West Bank and Gaza.

Sharon accused Labor's Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin of "total failure" in dealing with the yearlong Palestinian uprising, which has claimed the lives of more than 330 Palestinians and 13 Israelis.

But Deputy Prime Minister David Levy, another influential figure in the party, threw his support behind Shamir and in a fiery speech.

"I believe it's a national necessity," he shouted, shaking his fist in the air.

Although today's vote was a victory for Shamir, some analysts suggested the narrow margin of approval signals his growing weakness within party ranks.

Under the coalition agreement, reached in principle on Monday, Labor and Likud will each have 10 seats in the new Cabinet.

Key policy decisions will be made by an inner Cabinet of Shamir, Peres, Rabin and Likud's Moshe Arens, who will become foreign minister. Peres will become finance minister and Rabin will continue as defense minister.

The new Cabinet's refusal to talk with the PLO may strain relations with the United States, which provides Israel with $3 billion a year in foreign aid and opened talks last week with the PLO after 13 years of diplomatic isolation.

The Palestine Liberation Organization's parliament-in-exile declared a Palestinian state at a meeting in Algiers last month.

Last week, PLO chairman Yasser Arafat last week satisfied U.S. conditions for re-opening dialogue with his organization by explicitly recognizing Israel's right to exist and renouncing terrorism.

In its first months, the new Israeli government is expected to try to devise a peace strategy of its own that is likely to be based on a limited self-rule for Palestinians.

U.S. Civilians Say Canal Zone Powers Use Them As Pawns

LAT WP NEWS SERVICE

PANAMA CITY, Panama — Civilian employees of U.S. military forces here and the Panama Canal Commission Tuesday complained that the governments of both Panama and the United States were using them as pawns in a "psychological war" and called on Washington to ease certain economic sanctions against the government here.

In a joint statement issued at a press conference, the leaders of five unions that claim to represent about 12,000 employees of the canal and U.S. military facilities, most of them Panamanian, warned that they would hold both governments responsible for any "desperate acts" by workers as a result of increasing pressures on them. They stressed, however, that they were not endorsing any job action that might affect the smooth functioning of the Panama Canal.

The statement came in response to moves by the Panamanian government, controlled by Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, to penalize Panamanians whose U.S. employers have withheld tax payments to the government in accordance with economic sanctions declared by President Reagan in March in an executive order.

The United States officially does not recognize the government that Noriega installed in February after ousting president Eric Arturo Delvalle. As part of a policy to show support for Delvalle and force the ouster of Noriega, Washington has tried to cut off funds to the government by ordering that tax and other payments owed to Panama by U.S. companies and government agencies be placed in an escrow account.

However, the policy is widely seen here as a failure.

The United States has been forced to make exceptions to its regulations, and private American companies are largely evading them anyway, U.S. officials say privately.

Many Noriega opponents who initially supported the sanctions now are demanding that they be lifted on grounds that they have hurt the Panamanian economy more than Noriega's regime.

In recent days, the government nominally headed by "acting president" Manuel Solis Palma, a staunch ally of Noriega, has stepped up the pressure for removal of the sanctions by publicly announcing legal proceedings against 19 top executives of the Canal Commission and several American companies, including Texaco, IBM and Eastern Airlines. Unless the individuals pay their income and education insurance taxes, the Finance Ministry has said, their property will be confiscated.

Among the 19 cited are 10 senior Panamanian executives of the Canal Commission, including Deputy Administrator Fernando Manfredo.

Panamanian employees of the U.S. Embassy and some American companies have not been immediately affected by these legal proceedings because their Panamanian income taxes traditionally have not been withheld. This has allowed the individual employees to quietly pay their taxes, with the embassy and the companies turning a blind eye to the regulations.

In an interview, Canal Commission Administrator Dennis P. McAuliffe said he was "very concerned" about the situation and believes that the Solis Palma government is determined to follow through with its threats to punish delinquent taxpayers.

Political Heirs To Perons Stand To Take Charge

By James F. Smith
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — A simply dressed, middle-aged woman puts her fingers to her lips, stretches out her hand and reverently rubs the plaque on Maria Eva Peron's tomb. Near tears, the mourner makes the sign of the cross.

A short while later, a different sort of pilgrim arrives to show the tomb to friends. "Horrible, horrible woman, that Evita," says the elegant visitor, her voice raw with scorn and anger. "Fortunately, she didn't live longer."

Those contrasting sentiments expressed at Eva Peron's black marble mausoleum suggest the depth of feeling still engendered by the name Peron in Argentina, 36 years after Evita's death and 14 years after the passing of her husband, Gen. Juan Domingo Peron.

More is at stake than nostalgia: There is every likelihood that the political heirs to the Perons will again take charge of Argentina next year. Carlos Saul Menem, the personable, populist governor of La Rioja, a small province in western Argentina, is leading in opinion polls for the May 14 presidential election and expects to become the first Peronist president elected in his own right who does not bear that family name.

Peronism's detractors doubt the movement's argument that it has shed the authoritarian, ultra-nationalistic and sometimes violent legacy that marked Peron's presidency from 1946 to 1955, when he was deposed in a coup, and — after 18 years in exile — his return to office from October 1973 until his death nine months later.

But others say that they are convinced that Peronism has undergone a profound transformation during the last five years, democratizing itself, fully joining Argentine political life and grappling with the problems of the late 20th century.

As they study Menem and his entourage, Argentines remain as emotionally divided over Peronism as they were in the 1940s, after then-Col. Peron, from a base as minister of labor in a military government, engineered his rise to power with the promise of a worker-based revolution. He was shrewdly assisted by an attractive, aggressive radio personality, known then and now as Evita, who became his second wife.

Evita's largess to the descamisados (shirtless ones) won her adoration, and Peron's brand of Christian nationalism made him "El Conductor." But the Perons' enemies came to see only corruption, demagoguery and violence, including ruthless assaults on his opponents and, in mid-1955, a violent confrontation with the Roman Catholic Church that ended with Peron's excommunication.

To its foes, Peronism remains mired in that past, built on personalism and state domination — and short on the realism needed to cope with complex modern problems. In a veiled reference to Menem, President Raul Alfonsin said in a recent speech that Latin America's economic problems "give rise to ideological ghosts (and) messiahs who promise future paradises but who, when the time comes, always result in authoritarian regression."

Alive or dead, in power or in exile, the Perons have exerted influence over Argentine politics for more than four decades. Juan Peron's grave, in a commoners' cemetery, remains a customary stop for Peronists every July 1, the anniversary of his death in 1974.

Peron paid $100,000 to embalm Evita after she died of cancer in 1952 at age 33. She had been at the height of her extraordinary influence as a perceived benefactor and avenger of the poor, for which some wanted her canonized. In death, her body became a national fixation, a symbol for those who adored the Perons as saviors as much as for those who abhorred them as accused populist tyrants who ruined Argentina.

After Peron was deposed in a 1955 military coup, the new rulers, fearful of the talisman of Evita's body, hid it in offices and vaults in Argentina, then moved it to a secret grave in Italy. After her body was returned to Peron in 1971, he kept it upstairs in his house in exile in Spain.

The body finally came home to Argentina on a chartered flight with bodyguards several months after Peron's own death. It was eventually laid to rest in Recoleta Cemetery in one of the city's fanciest neighborhoods, Barrio Norte, to the horror of some well-heeled residents, who had despised her as much as she had derided them. (In a speech to her followers, she had once offered to give torches to the poor to burn down the wealthy barrio.)

Many Peronist homes and offices still give pride of place to portraits of Juan and Evita Peron as defenders of the working and middle classes against the oligarchs. But in more reflective moments now, many politicians play down the impact of its founders on today's Peronist party, which is formally called the Justicialist Party. The name comes from justicialismo, a term coined by Peron from the Spanish word for justice to describe his movement's ideology.

"Juan Peron is not an issue. Evita is not an issue in Argentina today," said Juan Pablo Lohle, director of a Peronist think tank. "In the United States, people still think of Peron and Evita, but we are working to change that image."

Lohle, 40, is part of the new generation of Peronists drawn not only from blue-collar families but also from large sectors of the white-collar and professional elements of the middle class, those who see Peronism as an option that balances diverse social and economic needs. Lohle has been a strong advocate of Peronism's renovacion (renovation), the internal reform of the party.

Although the party was often barred from taking part in elections during the years after Peron's ouster, Peronism retained enormous influence in the nation's political life. And despite considerable distrust of Peronism among important sectors of the armed forces, the full inclusion of the party in 1983's elections, held after seven years of harsh military dictatorship, appeared to herald an end to the cycle of coups since 1930.

President Alfonsin's party, the nearly century-old Radical Civic Union, solidly defeated the Peronists in 1983, bringing the party's Renovadores (Renewers) to the forefront — and a new Peronism has been forged in the five years since.

In place of the back-room nomination of candidates, the party embraced open primaries and broadened participation through elected local bodies. That bruising process led to the political demise of many old-guard Peronists who were closely identified with Peron himself and who had opposed change.

Italo Luder, a former Peronist senator who lost to Alfonsin in 1983, said that since Peron's death, "personalism has stopped being a factor" in the party. Especially since its presidential defeat five years ago, he said, the party has worked hard to expand the active participation of its major elements, including women and young people. That paid off in 1987, when Peronists won 16 of 22 governorships and the party regained the share of the vote it had polled in 1973, badly demoralizing Alfonsin and his party.

The Renovadores were led by Buenos Aires provincial Gov. Antonio Cafiero, the party president, and Menem, the vice president. Cafiero — suave, articulate and silver-haired — had the support of the party apparatus and hierarchy in the July primary.

Menem, meanwhile, had virtually no party backing. Yet he traversed the country in his "Menemobile," appealing directly to the 3 million-strong rank and file.

Relentlessly energetic, an amateur race car driver and a fiery speaker, Menem turned his oratory on the oligarchs and the party apparatus. The 53-year-old lawyer argued in effect that Cafiero was no different from Alfonsin, that the ordinary people would again lose out to the vested interests. Some liken Menem to the Pied Piper — and, in fact, his posters exhort "Follow Me!"

Menem's upset primary victory resurrected long-buried ghosts and prompted suggestions that the renewal had been undone. But Menem boasted that his maverick campaign left him free to serve all Argentines, and he has worked to heal the wounds from the primary.

The return from voluntary exile last month of Maria Estela Peron, who was Peron's third wife and his elected vice president and who succeeded him in office when he died, briefly revived memories of guerrilla violence, labor strife, record inflation and social turmoil that marked her presidency until she was deposed by the armed forces in March 1976. Menem and other Peronists initially avoided the third wife, known popularly as Isabelita, and then warmed to her when she insisted that she had no interest in returning to politics.

At the same time, the economic failures of Alfonsin's government militate in Menem's favor. Under Alfonsin, the average family has experienced a drastic fall in buying power. Inflation soared to 27 percent for the month of August alone, with an annual rate well above 300 percent.

A severe new anti-inflation plan cut that rate to 5.9 percent for November, but many believe it is too late for the Radical party's candidate, Gov. Eduardo Cesar Angeloz of Cordoba province, to salvage the election for his party.

U.N. Agency Says Latin Inflation Rate More Than Doubled In 1988

By William R. Long
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

SANTIAGO, Chile — In an alarming symptom of regional economic sickness, Latin American inflation more than doubled in 1988, rising to an average annual rate of 470 percent, a United Nations agency reported Tuesday.

"Inflation increased sharply for the second consecutive year, reaching a new historical high in the region," said an annual report by the U.N. Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean. The agency is based in Santiago.

The report also said that regional economic growth slowed to an estimated 0.7 percent for the year. And economic expansion was less than population growth for the first time since a regional recession in 1982 and 1983.

Despite their generally poor performance, Latin American economies exported goods worth $102 billion during the year, up from $90 billion in 1987. "They broke the $100 billion barrier for the first time," Gert Rosenthal, the agency's executive secretary, said.

But in most countries, export growth did not keep inflation from eroding standards of living. Rosenthal said that the purchasing power of minimum wages had declined in nine of the 11 countries where statistics were available.

The worst inflation was in Nicaragua, with an estimated annual rate of 7,800 percent. Peru had 1,300 percent; Brazil, 800 percent, and Argentina, 370 percent. The regional average has climbed from 64 percent in 1986 to 199 percent in 1987 to 470 percent in 1988.

The region's combined gross domestic product declined from 3.9 percent in 1986 to 2.5 percent in 1987 to 0.7 percent in 1988. The lowest rate this decade was a minus 2.6 percent in 1983.

The only countries with economic growth of 5 percent or more in 1988 were Ecuador, Venezuela, Chile and Paraguay. Panama's economy shrank by an estimated 25 percent this year, Peru's by 7.5 percent and Haiti's by 5 percent.

Latin America's combined growth rate was most heavily influenced by virtual stagnation in Brazil, Mexico and Argentina, which together account for nearly three-quarters of the regional economy.

Rosenthal said that Latin America's bigger export earnings in 1988 did not increase economic growth because the added revenue went mainly to make payments on the region's $401 billion foreign debt. Those payments fueled inflation, he said, because most of the debt was public debt, and governments often run up inflationary fiscal deficits to make payments.

Without major debt relief, inflation and recession probably will continue to plague Latin American countries in coming years, Rosenthal said.

However, he said, a statement by President-elect George Bush "offers some hope" for debt relief. Bush, recognizing the difficulties of developing countries in meeting debt payments, said Monday that his administration would conduct a major review of U.S. policy on foreign debt.

The statement "undoubtedly signifies an advancement," Rosenthal said. But he cautioned that industrialized and developing countries are still far from agreeing on any major course of action for debt relief.

Seek No Gravy Train Of Gifts For Picky Pets

(Try Yuppy Puppy Treats Or Some Designer Sweats)

By Alice Steinbach
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

How many times have you put your heart and soul into finding just the right Christmas present for your loved ones, only to have them sniff the gift and then turn up their noses and leave without a word?

Sound familiar? Then you, dear reader, are in all probability a pet owner.

Let's say, just for the heck of it, that you own a cunning, orange-striped tabby named Max and, oh, let's say, you also have a lovable but somewhat dumb, generic-type dog named Spot. (Note: All names and descriptions are entirely made up and fictitious and bear no resemblance to any member of the author's family.) And let's say, just for argument's sake, that you've struck out every year when it comes to pleasing these two free-lance pests.

Excuse me for a second.

I'm warning you for the last time, Max. My cashmere sweater drawer is not your bed!

Where were we? Oh, yes. Choosing the right gift for those four-legged friends. Let's begin with foodstuffs, always a welcome addition to any pet's life.

For the discerning dog, you might select a "Yuppy Puppy Dog Treet Machine; The Treet Machine Your Dog Works Himself." (Remember I said your dog; Spot is in remedial machine shop class.) It's a big gumball machine with a handle on the front that looks just like a bone. The idea is to train your dog to hit the bone with his paw and out comes a rawhide treat.

Now maybe you don't have a dog but you have a friend who has a dog. Or maybe your dog has a friend who is a dog. Whatever. For that casual acquaintance to whom you wish to give just a token of your esteem, how about a doggie Christmas card in the shape of a snowman filled with crunchy rawhide? Yum, yum.

Pardon me a sec.

Out, damned Spot. Can't you see I'm working in here? Go play with your blanket.

So. Where were we? Food. How about catering to your canine's taste with a Party Platter? You can find one with rawhide snacks artfully shaped and arranged in the fashion of an elegant cheese tray. Oh, and don't forget those rawhide dog treats shaped like a lollipop and marked down for fast sale.

Moving along, think about this: There is no such thing as a pet that wouldn't welcome a new fashion item to spruce up the old wardrobe. You can buy matching owner-pet sweater sets.

Excusez moi.

Knock it off, Max. There is nothing more annoying than the sight of a cat doubled over in derisive laughter. Spot does have feelings too, you know.

Anyway, getting back to what to give the well-dressed pet, I'd like to alert all policemen, cowboys and other owners of dogs who work for a living to the following. How about something in an off-duty leisure suit for those quiet, after-work hours? "Pet Sweats," a soft flannel jogging suit may be just the thing.

Or, if you prefer the Ralph Lauren look, why not pick up their acid-washed Denim Dog Coat with detachable pile liner? It's a perfect apres ski look for that weekend in Aspen.

Warning: Do not — we repeat, do NOT — try to force your cat into any of the above clothing items unless you first secure the cat's paws with small, satin-lined velcro handcuffs. Cats, as we all know, are not apt to let you dress them up, no matter how well-tailored the outfit.

Which brings up a touchy subject: picking out the perfect gift for your finicky feline.

How about a cat toy called "Kitty Tease"? It resembles a fiberglass fishing rod with a piece of sturdy denim fabric attached at the end of the line as the bait. The "Kitty Tease" folks promise that their toy "not only induces second kittenhood in virtually all cats to 20 years old but is the perfect exerciser for that overweight cat."

One moment, por favor.

Stop sniveling and come out from under that bed, Max. No one said anything about going to the vet.

And while we're on the subject of exits and entrances, why not give your cat or dog the gift that keeps on giving all year long. We're talking two-way pet doors. The kind that allows your pet to have a life of his own, to be independent and creative in the way he uses his time away from the family.

Good news for hamster owners. The Habitrail — sort of a hamster's Hyatt-Regency — comes complete with several levels designed for happy hamster living. See the Habitrail Sky Pet House, an open-air penthouse where "your little friend loves to be petted." Get a load of the Habitrail Big Wheel House with the Super Exerciser to keep your hamster trim.

Bad news, though, for tropical fish owners. The tropical fish Christmas gift market is depressed. One suggestion, however: Get rid of that glass bowl and install those little guys in a new, architecturally elegant Designer Aquarium. Tall and graceful, it's a 4-gallon skyscraper fit for your upwardly mobile fish.

And why not pick up one of those orange plastic replicas of a fire hydrant for your dog? Or how about a lighted bow tie? Red velvet, it's attached to a velcro strip and powered by a 9-volt battery that operates the five little blinking lights.

Designer Peter Danko relaxes in his Lazy Spiral with footstool

Furniture Designer Combines Handcrafts, High Technology

By Lynn Williams
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

CLINTON, Md. — Craft is craft and manufacturing is manufacturing, but the twain do meet, happily and successfully at that, in the workshop of Peter Danko.

The furniture designer and wood crafter fits snugly into that space where handcrafts meet high tech, where the ancient harmonies of nature intersect with the streamlined ethos of the machine age, where industry and cottage industry find common ground. It's not a well-populated space, to be sure, but it offers a multitude of possibilities.

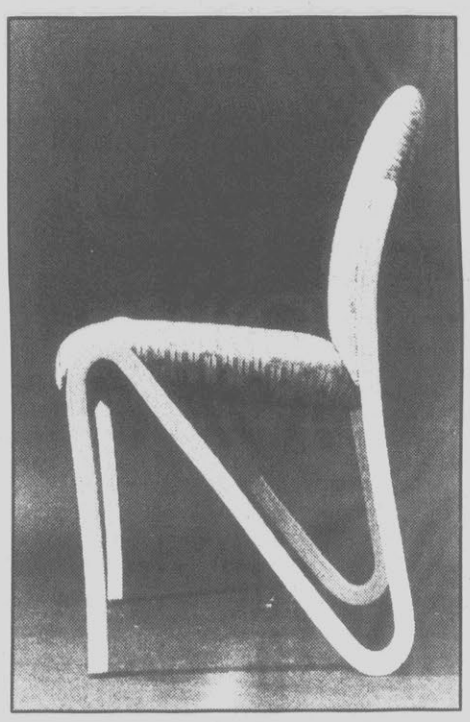
Danko's studio, in a block of warehouses in this suburb of Baltimore, is emblematic of his crossroads position. It's a big, unadorned, garage-like space, with busy artisans at their machines in one warehouse, stacks of chairs and chair-parts in another. As commercial as they come, in other words. Yet there's a feeling of very unfactorylike, but very familylike warmth here. Peter Danko and Associates Inc. is indeed a family affair; Elizabeth Danko runs the business end of the company she owns with her husband.

The company produces several lines of furniture, including love seats, dining tables and occasional tables, but is best known for its chairs, which range from versatile stackables to upholstered hand-made cherry rockers. These can be found in restaurants (including the Rainbow Room in Rockefeller Center and the new Wright Place in the Smithsonian Institutions's National Air and Space Museum), libraries, corporate boardrooms and the Museum of Modern Art - as well as in private homes.

Danko furniture, which is sold mostly through architects and interior designers, has echoes of art nouveau in its sinuous, organic shapes. Its spare, unfussy lines recall the Bauhaus "form follows function" dictum. In short, it is a synthesis of classic and contemporary stylings, clean-lined and simple enough to please modern purists, but flowing and curvilinear enough for romantics.

Although their handsome lines and wood construction might indicate otherwise, nearly all Danko products are mass-produced. And with his most famous invention, the Bodyform chair, Danko expanded into advanced technology: These chairs are produced not by the hand of man, but by a complex system of computerized robotics.

Her husband's career has, Elizabeth Danko says, progressed in a very different manner from that of many artisans. While they might turn out simple production pieces until they can afford to do the one-of-a-kind work they love, he actually prefers the challenges of mass production to the prestige of custom jobs.



Danko's bentwood design

"For every piece he makes he'll do up to 20 prototypes," she says. "All are hand-built and each one is a little bit different. To him, that's the challenge: to take a design and perfect it, so that it's beautiful and well-designed, and easy to manufacture as well. He would rather do that than just be a craftsman, and have each piece be different."

"If you're going to do something that's artistic, it's nice to be able to do it more than once," Danko adds. "I guess it comes down to this. I spend so much time getting something perfect that I could never do one of a kind. The last chair I designed took 2½ years."

When Danko entered the furniture business, he saw himself more as a sculptor than a cabinetmaker, in the tradition of 17th and 18th century craftsmen whose work involved much carving and ornamentation.

His early '70s style was distinctive. He would take large blocks made of layers of laminated wood veneers, and carve them in his own curvaceous style. His portfolio shows a variety of his work from this period: a desk that is supported on voluptuous, almost human legs; a sofa made of snakelike wooden tendrils supporting bulbous leather cushions, a lamp that's a Paul Klee squiggle.

"These are all antiques now," he says with a laugh.

One particular inspiration was the bentwood technique developed by 19th-century designer and manufacturer Michael Thonet. Danko improved on the Thonet principles by developing his own molds that take sandwiched layers of veneer and shape them under pressure into chair forms. Any number of pieces can be made from a single successful mold.

"A lot of time goes into the mold," he says. "Before you make your production mold you make your prototype molds, and keep throwing them away until you get it exactly right."

The Bodyform chair, which was designed in 1976 and first manufactured two years later, has taken Danko's process to its high-tech extreme. The chairs are made from a single sheet of plywood, cunningly cut and molded for strength and comfort.

"The neat thing about this chair also is that it's now made totally by a computerized machine station," Danko explains. "I guess 'robot' would be the word you'd use.

"After it's molded, it has all this glue oozing out, and the layers are uneven, so the layers have to be machined. So they have this computerized machine that does all the edges and levels the chair. It machines the hand-hold in the back, and if the chair will be upholstered, it drills the holes for the seat. Since this is the only chair made out of one piece of wood, it's the only chair where you can do all these operations at once."

The factory, Sauder Manufacturing in Stryker, Ohio, makes the Bodyform chairs.

While Sauder is responsible for most of the mass-produced Danko furniture, the workshop in Clinton, where Danko moved three years ago, handles smaller orders. They make the parts for the new Waveform chair, and the Lazy Spiral, a deco-influenced adjustable chair "named for our favorite neighboring galaxy."

"It's still very much a craft shop," Danko maintains. "That's kind of where I like it. If I was really big, I wouldn't be able to play in my shop anymore, and if I was really small, I'd be working all the time just to pay for my shop. There's a happy area in between, and I'm pretty close to being where I want to be."

Pianist Is Symbol Of Glasnost

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The day before Vladimir Horowitz performed in Moscow two years ago, Philipp Viardo played the middle movement of a Mozart sonata as a sound check for the TV cameras.

After the concert, Vladimir and Natalia Viardo were introduced to Horowitz as the parents of Philipp, who was then 9.

But for everybody else, Vladimir Viardo is a symbol of "glasnost." He's the first Soviet musician to receive permission to live in the United States, to have his family join him and to retain his Soviet citizenship.

At 23, Viardo won the 1973 Van Cliburn International Piano Competition in Fort Worth, the only Russian who has won it. He toured, with much acclaim, in the United States and Mexico in 1974 and '75 then wasn't allowed to return until 1988. He now has been given permission to live in Texas and pursue his career for two years. Natalia Viardo, a former teacher, was to bring back sons Philipp, 11, and Alexander, 4, this month.

The Soviet concert bureau already had fixed about 25 appearances for the 39-year-old Viardo. Ten U.S. solo recitals are scheduled for April.

"The next year is completely free. I hope it will be full. I want to compensate," he said.

He said the desire to stay in the United States came in a flash. "I was driving in a car with a friend in Texas. I thought, 'I'm missing a chance — to play concerts, meet people, attend concerts. Why should I?'"

Viardo said the reason he can stay is "glasnost." It also is timing. When pianist Vladimir Feltsman received permission to leave the Soviet Union last year, Viardo said Feltsman stayed two months, applying for an open visa that would allow him to return. When that was denied, he left and now lives with his wife and son in New York.

"He didn't want to leave forever. Russian nostalgia is a very famous thing," Viardo said.

After deciding he wanted to stay here, Viardo wrote a letter explaining "the practical and creative music reasons" to the Soviet ambassador in Washington. After "three very nervous weeks," the Viardos were invited to talk with the Soviet consul general in New York. Three weeks later he called them in again and said Moscow had given the green light.

He has "seven bloods," including Jewish, gypsy, Russian and Polish — "it's borscht," Viardo says, and his wife, whose brother lives in Chicago, is Jewish.

Viardo thought about leaving the Soviet Union forever during the 13 years he wasn't allowed to visit the United States. "I couldn't. I had a strong connection with my teachers and friends," he said.

B.B. King Is Back On Top As Blues Giant

His Career Took Off After He Appeared In 'U2 Rattle And Hum'

By Larry McShane
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — For years, playing the blues was a sure way to get them, says guitar great B.B. King.

"That has hit me pretty hard, that the blues were not popular for a long time," said King, recalling the days in the 1960s and '70s when he was more popular in Europe than at home. "It was like being black twice. But I kept working hard, kept practicing, kept playing."

He and "Lucille," his guitar, are still playing. After overcoming prejudice both racial and musical, King is now revered as a blues giant; he's just released his 52nd blues album, and he almost steals the show from U2 in their concert movie, "U2 Rattle and Hum."

"I was in Ireland, and (U2 lead singer) Bono came by," King said recently about their collaboration. "I'd always admired him and the group, and we talked about songwriting. I told him to think of me when he was writing, and he said, 'OK, I'll do it.'"

The result, "When Love Comes to Town," features King swapping vocals with Bono and playing his distinctive lead guitar over U2's backbeat — a merging of the Mississippi delta and the Emerald Isle recorded at the renowned Sun Studios in Memphis, Tenn.

King, 63, was born in Indianola, Miss., and took up the guitar at an early age. He started out playing and singing gospel, but soon began taking requests from churchgoers for more secular music. Making the guitar a career, he recalled, was a financial decision easily reached.

"I made $22.50 on a plantation driving a tractor all week. Playing guitar on a Saturday night I made $25 — understand, that's for one evening," King said. "That's when I decided."

King moved to Memphis after World War II, dubbing himself the "Beale Street Blues Boy" — later shortened to B.B. In 1951, he scored his first hit with "3 O'Clock Blues" and his career was off and running.

But during the British Invasion of the '60s and the disco craze of the '70s, King and his music slipped into the background. Despite the lack of acclaim, King never considered playing any other music.

"No, I didn't even think about it; I never felt that way," he said. "I felt bad, I felt ridiculed, looked down upon for doing this kind of music. I wished it was different, but everything I play is bluesy."

King said his instantly-recognizable guitar style was developed more because of his ears than his hands: "I can't hear lows, so I would turn the treble up. That's how it started."

But it's evolving to this day, he said before a Manhattan appearance at the Benson and Hedges Blues Festival to benefit the homeless.

"It's always changing. I'm influenced by everything. There are young people today who come up and say they idolize me — I learn from them. It's a round-robin."

Another thing that has the veteran musician smiling is the number of current artists who are acknowledging the blues "are the mother of all music." King cited Robert Cray as a particular favorite. Then he named another musician who loved the blues: the late John Lennon.

"I remember once an interviewer asked John Lennon what he'd like to being doing. And he said, 'Playing guitar, playing the blues like B.B. King,'" King said. "He never knew what that meant to me. It feels good to hear people talk like that."

Despite his advancing years, King keeps an active schedule; he estimates spending 300 days a year on the road. And he has no intention of hanging up "Lucille" any time in the near future.

"When the great creator says it's enough, that's when I'll stop," said King. "What else would I do? It's like Count Basie told me one time: My friends are around the world. If I stopped playing, how could I see them all?"

'Dead Solid Perfect' Is Out-Of-Season Christmas Present From Cable's HBO

By Kathryn Baker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Your football team punted the playoffs, relatives are descending for the holidays and network TV is cluttered with junk.

'Tis the season to give thanks that you paid your cable bill. For HBO has a nice little out-of-season movie this month, "Dead Solid Perfect," an adaptation of Dan Jenkins' novel of the same name about life on the links. What better time of year to be delivered from gray winter landscapes to the land of greens, fairways, sandtraps and perpetual short sleeves?

"Dead Solid Perfect" is dead solid funny and a nice little love story to boot. It premiered last week, but you can still catch it tonight, Friday and next Tuesday.

Kenny Lee (Randy Quaid) is a diamond-in-the-rough golfer, hustling bets on the side so he can afford to get to the next tournament.

Enter Hubert "Bad Hair" Wimberly (Jack Warden), a hustler with more money than he knows what to do with, but a nasty slice he'll never be able to buy off. So he buys Kenny, becoming his sponsor on the tour.

Exit Beverly (Kathryn Harrold), Kenny's intelligent wife, tired of hanging out with jerks like Bad Hair and dragging herself around the country to watch Kenny cuss and sling golf clubs in disgust.

Forget "Caddyshack." This is the definitive golf movie of the '80s. Director Bobby Roth, who co-wrote the screenplay with Jenkins, does for the links what Martin Scorsese did for pool in "The Color of Money." Roth and Jenkins successfully teamed on "Baja Oklahoma" for HBO earlier this year.

The music is by Tangerine Dream, and the theme song is sung by Billy Vera.

Larry Riley co-stars as Spec, Kenny's caddy, a talented golfer himself who stays in the background rather than challenge the racism of the sponsorship game. At one point, as Kenny is preparing for a big tournament, Spec warns Bad Hair, "Give him one word of advice, and I'll burn down your mansion and marry your daughter."

Brett Cullen plays Kenny's friend, Donny Smithern, a successful young pro who gets recognized in restaurants, cheats on his good ol' gal wife (DeLane Matthews) and waxes phony pious in TV interviews.

Jenkins is one of a handful of male authors around who can write realistic women. He gives his female characters a sense of humor without making them just sound like men. "Good ol' Donny," Beverly sneers at one point, "he'll always be there when he needs you."

After Beverly leaves Kenny, he takes up with Janie (Corinne Bohrer), a bimbo savant who chucks her job as a bartender to accompany him on the tour. At first, he plays well, and it's party time. But Kenny warns Janie during an R-rated romp in their hotel room. "It's not always this fun. Sometimes I play bad." "So do I," Janie says.

Kenny starts playing really badly after he gets shook up by running into Beverly and a new beau at a restaurant. Janie gamely tries to trade insults with Beverly and spews a blue streak. Observes Beverly, "Why, you didn't tell me she talked like Princess Di."

Eventually, the film veers off into a standard-issue plotline about a tumor and Kenny's big show-down with Donny on the 18th hole of the U.S. Open. But if the story is predictable, it's also satisfying, because Jenkins' characters are immensely likable, and Roth's direction is, like Kenny's play — for those brief shining moments just dead solid perfect.

Hoffman Struggled For Character In 'Rain Man'

By Stephen Hunter
LAT—WP NEWS SERVICE

NEW YORK — It's not really possible to interview Dustin Hoffman, at least not in the conventional meaning of that word. You do not ask him questions. You feed him material, then you get out of the way. It's like throwing wood on a roaring fire; he just keeps getting hotter and brighter.

Hoffman is legendary in the obscure culture of celebrity journalism for the passion and charisma he brings to even the most routine encounters of the publicity kind. On this day, for example, he has entered the lair of the press in order to discuss "Rain Man," his new movie for Barry Levinson, in which he plays Raymond Babcock, autistic savant, numbers genius, weird creature and sweetheart all in one. It's quite a common thing, the star chatting up visiting pressies, done a hundred times a year. But not like Dustin Hoffman.

He is, in truth, a rather runty fellow, not especially handsome, of features uncompelling. His hands and wrists, particularly, are smallish, darting little things, almost effeminate. He is dressed like any guy of the non-exec class, with Rockport Walkers, some sloppy, many-pleated trousers and a bland shirt so unmemorable that no clue remains to attest to its colors.

But who notices? Hoffman's charisma is like a 3,000-candlepower lamp that, blinding and unavoidable, blows everybody and everything out of the room. He doesn't just come in and sit down, but makes a thunderous entrance, still trailing hangers-on and publicity people, carrying on three simultaneous conversations, his voice a bit strained with passion. Finally plunging to the sofa with a swirl of bustle and drama, he takes charge immediately, moving straight to the chosen text.

What it has to do with, of course, is the struggle for Raymond.

Playing Raymond didn't come easily to Hoffman.

"I'd done the research for a year while we were waiting to get the project together," says Hoffman with mesmerizing intensity, dark eyes flashing. It's almost as if he has begun to sweat a little. You feel that you're alone in the room with Raskolnikov on the evening he decides to murder the old lady in St. Petersberg. "I'd talked to all the experts, I'd met many remarkable autistic savants, I'd committed to it totally. And then, first day on the set ... nothing. It's the worst work I've ever done."

Hoffman leans forward, brow knit in dark and screaming self-contempt.

"I've got nothing! Nothing! Raymond is all over the place. It feels completely phony."

It was particularly upsetting, Hoffman says, because it was his feeling for autistic savants that first initiated the project. He had seen them in a memorable segment on "60 Minutes" and been both shaken and inspired by the disorder.

"Nothing!" Hoffman shrieks.

"I went to Barry. I was going to quit. I tried to leave the picture. There was no way I could make contact with Raymond. It was like trying to be a dog or a Martian; there simply was nothing for me to build on and it was going everywhere. He can't make eye contact, so I've got nothing to feed on; I'm all by myself and it feels pretty awful."

Finally, Levinson suggested that they look carefully at the daily footage and try and determine what Hoffman was doing when he got it right, as opposed to what he wasn't doing when he got it wrong.

For Hoffman, the breakthrough came in an offhand way.

"It reminded me of a weird thing. You know how when you're talking to someone but you're really not listening, you're somewhere else? And they get ticked, and they grab you and shout, 'Tell me what I said!' And you can! You can tell them exactly what (they) said. You were recording!"

Somehow nursing that sliver of a feeling Hoffman was able to build his whole performance around it, to the point, he said, where he could snap in and out of Raymond at will.

He Studied Autistic Man To Prepare For Film Role

By Kelly P. Kissel
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. — To help prepare for his "Rain Man" role of Raymond Babbitt, an autistic man whisked from the institution where he's spent his life, Dustin Hoffman studied an autistic West Virginia man who lives outside institutional walls, thanks to support from his mother and hometown.

Hoffman was "introduced" to Joseph Sullivan, a 28-year-old Huntington man, at the UCLA Behavioral Sciences Media Lab. There he watched two documentaries that described Sullivan's life, along with 16 hours of outtakes from one of them, the 1986 documentary "Portrait of an Autistic Young Man." "That's where I met Joe, in a sense. That was my kickoff. I buried myself there for the first two months," Hoffman said last weekend at a local showing of "Rain Man" to benefit the Autism Services Center, run by Sullivan's mother, Ruth.

Hoffman finally met Sullivan face-to-face in Cincinnati while filming "Rain Man."

"We just made a film that's going to play for, you know, a month or two, or whatever, in cities around America and around the world and be put out on cassette and put on shelves and seen once," Hoffman told Huntington residents at the screening.

"You people have Joe in your community for the rest of your lives, and I would take that any day of the week. ... He is a very special person who shines through this ... magic he has."

No one is sure what causes autism, which makes some victims catatonic, some self-destructive, some uncommunicative. Some scientists believe it's caused by a chemical imbalance in the brain.

Dr. Daniel Hubert, a UCLA associate clinical professor of psychiatry and principal writer and producer at the media lab, said his role is to help victims how to function in society.

"What we try to do is control chronic problems ... and teach them to lead reasonable normal lives," Hubert said. "We try to help them avoid being institutionalized, self-destructive or being left vulnerable."

Those criteria make Sullivan a success.

"I was impressed that this guy wasn't institutionalized," Hubert said of Sullivan. "For a kid who started where he started from, he was able to do things that weren't expected of him."

Sullivan has perfect pitch and excels at math, common traits in autistics. He can, for example, come up with the square root of a number such as 4,555 in his head in just a few seconds.

Sullivan graduated from Huntington High School in 1981. He was taught through the special education program but took regular math and science courses.

Everyone at Huntington High knew Joe Sullivan, but nobody really knew him, said his teacher, Melanie Butler. Some students remained abusive toward him and few understood that in many ways he was like them.

"He would go up to girls and say, 'I'm going to touch your breasts.' All he wanted was for them to become hysterical — like little boys putting frogs down a girl's dress," Butler said.

"I told him once, 'Go ahead, if you can find them.' He said, 'No.' He was crestfallen, and he never did it again."

Sullivan now works at the Cabell County Public Library. Butler said she would like to see him move on eventually, to experience a wider slice of life. "He's still growing and changing," she said.

Mrs. Sullivan, upon learning in 1962 that her 2-year-old son was autistic, committed her life to learning more about the condition. She has fought for funding and understanding.

"Doors are just becoming open for autistic people," she said. "There's lots of mystery, and what's not mystery is misinformation."

Town's Pride Follows Choir To Inauguration

By Sandra G. Boodman
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

HARLAN, Ky. — When Enoch Foutch, principal of this town's only elementary school, interrupted classes this month with a surprise announcement over the public address system, Brannon Long, 12, and his classmates went wild.

"We were so excited we started jumping up and down and yelling," said Brannon.

In the lobby of the county courthouse, at Harlan Hardware and Undertaker, and over pimento cheese sandwiches and coffee at Jay's Restaurant, the 3,100 residents of this remote Appalachian coal town are celebrating as well: The Harlan Boys Choir has been chosen to sing at the Jan. 20 inauguration of President-elect George Bush.

"People are saying this is the best thing that ever happened to Harlan," said Roy Allison, the town's former mayor and the president of Harris Insurance Co. "To be selected out of all the groups in the whole country, well, any way you look at it, that's a real honor."

It is a singularly unexpected honor for Harlan, an insular town in the evergreen mountain forests of eastern Kentucky best known for its history of labor violence. The unemployment rate here hovers around 18 percent and a quarter of county residents are below the federal poverty line, a fact reflected in boarded-up storefronts downtown and ramshackle houses in the nearby hamlets of Crummies Creek, Chevrolet and Lenarue.

For the president-elect and Barbara Bush, the choice of the boys choir represents a break from tradition.

Entertainers at the swearing-in ceremony typically have been college choirs from a new president's home state, internationally famous singers or professional groups such as the Mormon Tabernacle Choir. Bush, according to inaugural co-chairwoman Penne Percy Korth, is striving for "something different," billing his celebration as an "inauguration of inclusion" with participants from every state.

In the case of Harlan, having well-placed friends in Washington didn't hurt.

Days after Bush's election, Michael Ruehling, executive director of the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies and a key aide to its chairman, Sen. Wendell Ford, D-Ky., submitted a memo to Bush outlining the ceremony and possible participants. Because Bush is a country music fan, Ruehling mentioned the boys choir, which bills itself as "The Singing Sons of Appalachia" and has won several national choral competitions.

Two weeks ago, after a flurry of phone calls, the Bushes selected the Harlan Boys Choir, which was founded in 1965 by English teacher David Davies, the son of a coal miner, who still directs the chorus. Last week Davies and inaugural organizers decided that the choir would sing "This Is My Country" right after the Rev. Billy Graham delivers the invocation.

More than 300 boys have been members of the choir, which boasts a loyal alumni association and supporters who raise money to finance performances outside Harlan.

Davies and accompanist Marilyn Schraeder pick the singers after auditions open to fourth- through 12th-grade boys who attend the town's two small public schools.

Racially and economically, the singers are a diverse group — the sons of coal miners and company officials, doctors and beauticians, teachers and clerks.

"They're really just everyday schoolboys, not little professional musicians you wind up and send out to perform," said Steve Howard, 34, who works for a local tire company and was a charter choir member.

The group's repertory consists of sacred music (some in Latin), patriotic songs and show tunes. "Climb Ev'ry Mountain," the Rodgers and Hammerstein song from "The Sound of Music," is a sort of theme, reflecting the struggle of Harlan and the choir to overcome formidable obstacles, Davies said.

Professor Believes We Are Bombarded By Subtle Messages

By Connie Koenenn
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — Has it ever occurred to you that:

— The Cabbage Patch doll craze that swept the United States a few years ago was not just a case of consumer fever for an expensive toy but actually represented the guilt of two-career parents who didn't spend enough time with their children?

— Today's elaborate shopping malls with their soaring levels of luxury shops, fountains and gardens are not a sign of national prosperity, but an indication of the shaky consumer economy of the 1980s and are actually designed to lull nervous shoppers into a fantasy world where spending money is OK?

— A "ring-around-the-collar" TV commercial is not just a plug for a laundry detergent but the contemporary equivalent of an ancient religious rite, in which the offending husband and wife are jeered for committing a social error and are ostracized until they seek Product Salvation in the marketplace?

Though all that may seem a strange way to look at things, welcome to Jack Solomon's world.

Solomon is an intellectual detective who goes through life seeking clues to explain what is really happening. Even the most innocent object, he says, conveys important new social information when you look beneath its surface.

"Everywhere we look, we are bombarded with hidden codes," Solomon says. "The trouble is that most people don't realize it." Solomon is busily engaged in decoding the culture because he is a student of semiotics, the social science that studies signs and symbols and the interests that lie behind them.

Semiotics, which was introduced in the late 19th century, has become a tool for scholars to analyze human cultures, literatures, linguistics, legal systems and even animal communications. The Semiotic Society of America has about 2,500 members and its official journal publishes such obscure semiotic titles as "Beowulf's Swords and Signs" and "Metaphor Recognition and Neural Process."

In short, semiotics is not exactly a household word, but Solomon, an assistant professor in the English department at the University of California, Los Angeles (he incorporates semiotics in his Critical Theory courses), wants to bring the concept from its academic shelter into everyday awareness.

"I find it very frustrating," he says. "Here we are, interpreting culture, and the culture doesn't even know it."

To bridge the gap, the 34-year-old Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Brandeis University with a Ph.D. in English from Harvard has written "The Signs of Our Times." However one describes it — as a consumer book, or a how-to book or a consciousness-raiser — it is aimed at making semioticians of us all.

That awareness is important, Solomon insists with passion, because America has become a semiotic society, moving from the era of print communications to a culture awash in visual symbols. Waves of images, launched by growing armies of advertisers, politicians, consultants, designers, publicists, manufacturers and marketers, leave the passive American consumer afloat in a cultural limbo and victim to every manipulating message that comes along, he maintains.

And, he adds, the consumer is also powerless because, while schools teach us how to read and interpret the written word, no one is taught how to analyze or even question the images that influence every waking moment.

In the face of that media-marketing onslaught, Solomon advises continual vigilence.

In the book's opening chapter, he counsels his readers to "Think of this book as a guide to the signs of contemporary American culture, one that will show you the powerful influence of signs in your life and how to spot, interpret and ultimately control them." He offers some guidelines that the semiotic student might apply to any subject to strip away its surface meaning, and he suggests that there is a single commanding reason why any one would want to think like a semiotician. The reason is short and simple:

"So you won't get hoodwinked."

And we are being hoodwinked much of the time, he insists. "For example, when you are made to feel inadequate because you don't have a lot of money, you have been duped by a culture that measures everything in monetary terms.

"When you are told that a 'woman's place is in the home,' your culture is trying to conceal a patriarchal interest behind the veil of 'nature' or 'common sense.'"

In his book, he hop-skips energetically over the contemporary landscape, fixing a semiotic gaze on the hidden messages lurking in such fields as advertising, architecture, television, food, dress and gender.

In the process he analyzes everything from the meaning of a supermarket's countless varieties of cereals, cookies, crackers and soft drinks ("America is putting an inordinate proportion of its creative energy today into the development of consumer products") to the runaway prime-time success of NBC's "The Cosby Show" ("a representation of our desires for a world that is practically the inverse of the one in which we actually live"). And he encourages readers to challenge long-held beliefs as ancient as the biblical Genesis creation story and as contemporary as the American dream of a single-family home.

"Once you do learn to read the signs that surround you," he says, "you can free yourself from their often hypnotic grasp."

Currently he is explaining semiotics and plugging his book on a dizzying round of radio and television talk shows as well as in phone interviews "everywhere from Bridgeport, Conn., to Tucson, Ariz."

He usually takes a teddy bear along on his rounds as a conversation starter, because one of the cultural signs that fascinates him is the increasing number of young adults who are buying expensive, sophisticated stuffed animals (with names like Lauren Bearcall or Douglas Bearbanks).

"We are buying these like crazy," says Solomon, who then explains why. "For one reason, toys answer the nurturing instinct of young professional couples who do not have time to raise a family. I think I'm an example. My wife, Sonia Maasik, teaches composition at UCLA, and we live in Van Nuys (a section of Los Angeles) with our three cats."

But he sees a second reason for the return to teddy bears. "They are soothing — both literally, to hold physically, and because we live in a very stressful world and these bears are icons of a pre-nuclear, pre-Freudian age, a time of Edwardian tranquillity."

Los Angeles Times/Rosemary Kaul

A Cultural Icon

As a semiotician, Jack Solomon decodes the true social information in objects as innocent-looking as Cabbage Patch Dolls. The teddy bear he is holding, he says, is a 'soothing icon of a pre-nuclear, pre-Freudian age.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Responsibilities and relationships may clash. Part of this centers around holiday plans which need to be reduced in size and scope.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Appearance counts. Shop for yourself as well as others. Don't rely on holiday gifts to spruce up your wardrobe. Your sense of style is good.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): You want to rebel against established patterns and live the way you see fit. The possibility of adventure excites you. Fear may deter you.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): You have organizational skills that can be used to your advantage. Originality will help you bring your dreams to reality.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Plans that are only dreams cannot come to pass. Take action to figure budgets. Allot time and portion out energy to accomplish your dreams.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Firm decisions are hard to come by today. Others may beat you to the punch. It is just one of those days when you can't get a word in.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Jealousy may aggravate a rivalry between friends. Entering into their affairs may put you on the spot. Spend time with children instead.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): It is so nice to fly through an easy day. You can be productive. Tackle those difficult or unenjoyable duties that have been shelved.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): You sense a new emotional freedom as moods change and you are filled with positive energy. Family schedules need attention.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Someone is getting tricky at work and playing games. Stay clear of immature behavior. Keep your kind and honest nature intact.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): A romantic rendezvous may need to be postponed for a better time. Congenial hours in the evening are conversational and productive.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Make an aggressive move toward romance, but use discretion. Feelings of love and hope abound. Be an active leader in your circle.

Opening lead: King of ♠

In the best of all possible worlds, you would be rewarded for your good deeds and punished for your crimes. In real life, unfortunately, that is not always the case.

When North could force his partner to bid at the five-level vulnerable with his repeat takeout double, South judged that his cards would all be working, so he leaped to six hearts. East's did not have a double of seven hearts, let alone six. However, his action had strange repercussions in the play.

West led the king of spades, ruffed in dummy. Declarer could think of no reason for East's double other than a trump stack. In order to hold his trump losers to two should East have started with all four trumps, declarer elected to lead the queen at trick two. That also offered a chance to make the contract should West have a singleton jack or ten.

West covered perforce, and declarer won the ace. There was still one chance for the contract—that trumps were 2-2—so declarer led a trump. West was able to take two trump tricks and two spades for down three—800 points out of thin air.

Had there been no double, declarer would have made the contract easily. The normal way to play the trump suit is to cash the ace, then lead toward the queen. Since the king would have dropped, declarer would have had no trouble in holding his trump losers to only one, so he would have romped home with his contract.

Grouchy And His Gift

By Deborah Nanney

One Christmas Eve it was snowy and cold. Santa and his elves were working in the workshop. Mrs. Claus was baking cookies. The elves made doll babies and toy trains and lots of toys for girls and boys. When the elves finished, Santa got his bags and loaded up the sleigh. He got his reindeer. He even got Rudolph and off they went with all the toys.

One of the elves went with him and his name was Grouchy. Santa and Grouchy flew by houses. Santa would slide down chimneys but most of the time he got stuck. The elf would give him a push down. He hardly made it through.

In the first house, the tree was shining. The children were in their beds asleep. He filled their stockings with lots of goodies and put gifts under the tree for girls and boys. The last house Santa went to was the Gibbly's house. They were in their beds, too. All of them were asleep. He filled their stockings, too, and put gifts under the tree. As Santa and Grouchy were leaving the house, Grouchy began to get an ugly face. He pouted and pouted. Santa asked what was wrong. The elf said, "That is my toy train you just gave to that little boy." Santa told Grouchy not to pout that he had a special gift for him

When they got back in the sleigh, Santa and the elf headed for the North Pole. Mrs. Claus was there with cookies for him. Some of the elves were asleep but Grouchy was still there waiting for his surprise. Santa pulled out a little mouse that was asleep in his pocket. The mouse was Santa's gift to Grouchy. Grouchy thanked Santa and started thinking of what to name his mouse. He named his mouse Christmas!

My Favorite Holiday

By Melanie Sicard

My favorite holiday is Christmas. It is fun decorating the tree. First, we have to pick out a good tree. We make sure it's fresh and the needles aren't falling off. Then, we go up to the musty attic and bring boxes of decorations down. Finally, we decorate the tree with ornaments and silver tinsel.

I also like to go shopping. It is fun picking out gifts for friends and relatives. You can go to big malls and little shops and all kinds of places. Then you decide what to get all the people on your list. You can get toys, books, posters, clothes and many other things. You want to pick out something they would like, not just something that you like.

Another thing I like at Christmas is the food. The cookies always smell fresh and taste sugary. Sometimes they are shaped like wreaths, Santas or even angels. There are always vegetables on the stove. They are for our Christmas dinner. When we eat the dinner, it tastes delicious. We always have a wide variety of food to choose from.

Now, you can see why Christmas is my favorite holiday.

Melanie Sicard, 11, a student at Farmville Middle School receives special mention.

A Secret Tree

By Sarah Rivell

Once there was a beautiful Christmas tree. It had the prettiest branches I had ever seen. We wanted to cut it down. So we walked up the hill and cut it with the saw. We tied it to the roof of the car. It didn't even fall off.

When we got it home we had to cut the top off because our ceiling was so low down. We decorated it with our old ornaments and colored lights. We put fake icicles on it, too. It was the prettiest Christmas tree in the whole neighborhood. We drove around the neighborhood to look at the other ones but not one was prettier. Everyone else had plastic Christmas trees. As we headed back home, I thought about my special secret. You see, since my Christmas tree was real it could talk. When I went down stairs to get a drink of water one night, I heard someting talk. I walked over to the Christmas tree. It said, Hey, Sarah." I wanted to keep it a secret so my mom wouldn't know.

The tree and I became best friends. I couldn't believe it, a talking Christmas tree!

Sarah Rivell, 8, a student at Sam D. Bundy School receives special mention.

Winter

By Sarah Davis

As I sit in front of the roaring fire, I watch the snowfall upon the brown leaves. The beautiful white blanket is falling upon the dead, brown grass. As I sit sipping hot cocoa in front of the roaring fire, I hear the shrieking winds surrounding me. I think of the past behind me and of the wonderful, beautiful, fun and snowy days ahead of me.

The Nice Snowman

By LeAnn Adams

There once was a nice snowman who was sweet to other people. He was very kind to children. He would teach the children how to do flips when no one else was around. He taught the children to stay away from strangers and call for help if they needed to. The snowman was best friends with everyone. If children needed help, the snowman would come and help them.

LeAnn Adams, 7, a student at Third Street School receives special mention.

Think Of Christmas

By Jami Jo Carraway

Some people think Christmas is just to get presents, but Christmas is more than that. It is to celebrate the birth of Jesus Christ. Some people sometimes forget the real meaning of Christmas. The real meaning of Christmas to me is celebrating the birthday of our Savior, and being with my family. I hope your Christmas will be as good as I know mine will! Merry Christmas!

Jami Jo Carraway, 9, a student at Belvoir Elementary School receives special mention.

Merry Christmas from the Newspaper In Education Department: Diane Williams and Gigi Walter.

Lightness, variety and nutritional balance accompany these holiday dish suggestions

Holiday Dining

Easy Vegetable Side Dishes Complement Main Courses

Food prepared for family and friends is part of the special holiday tradition.

While family favorites are important to the festivities, one or two new vegetable side dishes this year will update the menu. They are light, and offer variety and nutritional balance against heavier traditional holiday dishes. Also, it's an easy way to reduce calories while adding color to special menus.

Following are three easy-to-fix side dishes to complement favorite main courses and start new family traditions.

Goldenrod Asparagus is low in fat and combines onion, red pepper, thyme and egg to dress up asparagus in holiday colors. Country Lima Beans is hearty with only 94 calories per serving. And Spinach Stuffed Mushrooms, adding elegance to the holiday menu, is a good source of Vitamin A, calcium and dietary fiber.

Try the accompanying recipes.

COUNTRY LIMA BEANS

1 can (16 ounces) lima beans
1/2 cup chopped onion
1/2 cup chopped red or green pepper
1/2 cup thinly sliced celery
1 small clove garlic, minced
1/4 teaspoon thyme
1/8 teaspoon pepper
1 tablespoon butter or margarine
1/2 teaspoon sugar

Drain lima beans reserve into 1/4 cup liquid; set aside. Saute onion, red pepper, celery, garlic, thyme and pepper in butter. Stir in lima beans, reserved liquid and sugar; heat through.

Microwave directions: Drain lima beans reserving 1/4 cup liquid. In microwavable casserole, combine onion, red pepper, celery, garlic, thyme, pepper, butter and sugar; cook on high 3 to 4 minutes. Add beans and reserved liquid. Cook 2 minutes or until heated through.

SPINACH STUFFED MUSHROOMS

10 large mushrooms
1 tablespoon lemon juice
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1/3 cup chopped onion
1/4 teaspoon thyme
1 can (15 ounces) spinach, well drained
1 cup grated Swiss cheese

Remove mushroom stems; finely chop stems. Toss mushroom caps in lemon juice. In skillet, cook mushrooms caps in butter 2 minutes per side. Remove caps to baking dish. Add remaining lemon juice, chopped mushrooms, onion and thyme to skillet. Cook until tender; remove from heat. Stir in spinach and cheese. Spoon into mushroom caps. Bake at 350 degrees 15 minutes or until heated through.

Microwave directions: Remove mushroom stems; finely chop stems. Toss mushroom caps in lemon juice. In microwavable bowl, combine onion, chopped mushrooms,

Duckling Is Dressed Up For Holiday Meal

This special roast duck recipe is all dressed up for the holidays, combining two tasty dressings for interest and taste appeal. The recipe for two ducklings serves six and could easily be doubled for an elegant holiday dinner party.

One duckling is stuffed with mushroom-pecan dressing and the other with a cranberry-orange dressing, or you could choose either one for stuffing both ducklings. However you prefer to serve this delicious duckling dinner, you will certainly want to bring out the candles, holiday linens and china and prepare to enjoy a truely elegant and special dining experience.

While you are enjoying you holiday duckling dinner, think about the many other delicious possibilities for cooking and serving duckling products and send you favorite recipe to Concord Farms for consideration in their First Annual Concord National Duckling Cookoff. Recipes should include either whole duckling or any duckling parts and prepared for 4-8 servings. All entries must include the name, address and telephone number of the entrant on the first page and must be postmarked by March 1, 1989. Mail entries to Concord National Duckling Cookoff, Concord Farms, Dept. M, P.O. Box 248, Concord, N.C., 28026. Prizes to be awarded are: $1,000 first place, $500 second place, and $250 third place.

Deliver Warm Feelings With Holiday Cookies

Who doesn't get a warm feeling just thinking about fresh homemade holiday cookies? They're pure love — like Santa himself. Kids of all ages melt at the sight of them. And Santa, well, his fancy for cookies and milk is around the world. (Just leave a plateful of these cookies by the tree Christmas Eve, and see what happens.)

These fresh-from-the-oven cookies evoke all kinds of good feelings. Joy, for one. There's the joy of helping mothers, grandmothers and friends in the baking — and in the eating. There's also the pleasure of wrapping up cookies in bright, cheery containers and giving them to loved ones. Such gifts are sure to be appreciated.

Every family has its own traditional favorites; rituals make the holidays extra special. Whether you prefer traditional favorites or like to experiment, the following collection has several ideas you'll what to try.

A timeless favorite is the gingerbread cookie, and what could be more appealing than cuddly Gingerbread Bear? Kids of all ages will enjoy helping with these.

If Spritz are one of your family's favorites, try a new twist this year — combine two colors of dough for an attractive variegated appearance. Divide dough into thirds, tint one red with food coloring, tint one green and leave one white. Fill half of cookie press with white dough and the top half with red or green dough. Proceed as usual. The first few cookies will be solid white; the remaining will be an appealing combination. Decorate with colored sugar and/or candy sprinkles for a whimsical touch.

Create a new favorite this year with crisp-'n'-chewy Apricot Pinwheels or Orange Glazed Oatmeal Drops. The pinwheels are a variation of the traditional Date Nut Pinwheels and have a tangy apricot flavor. The soft and chewy, old-fashioned oatmeal cookies are chock-full of oatmeal, raisins and nuts and feature a lacy new orange glaze.

For chocolate lovers the Fudge Chip Cookies are doubly delicious; a chocolate cookie filled with chocolate chips. (It's rumored that these are one of Santa's favorites.)

Keep plenty of cookies on hand and share love by the batches this holiday season.

APRICOT PINWHEELS

1 pkg. (6 oz.) dried apricots, finely chopped
1/2 cup sugar
1/3 cup water
3/4 finely chopped almonds

A train load of holiday cookies will please every nibbler around the house at Christmas, including Santa himself

Q. I have gained a few pounds so far this holiday and a friend of mine gave me a copy of the "chemical breakdown diet" to lose 10 pounds. I suppose you will tell me it is a fad diet, but is it dangerous? S.M., Greenville.

A. There must be at least one copy of this diet for every person in Greenville based on the number of times I have seen this diet over the last two years. If you follow this diet for three days, you are not likely to harm yourself, but it is not nutritionally sound approach to long term weight loss or good nutrition.

I have seen this diet with names like the St. Joseph Hospital Medical Diet. It basically calls for grapefruit, peanut butter and toast at breakfast; tuna and toast at lunch, a small portion of meat, string beans, beets, an apple and vanilla ice cream at dinner for the first day. On the second day, a hard-cooked egg, toast and banana for breakfast; cottage cheese and crackers at lunch and hot dogs, broccoli, carrots, banana and ice cream for dinner. On the third day, crackers, cheese and an apple for breakfast; an egg and toast for lunch; tuna, beets, cauliflower, cantaloupe, and ice cream for dinner. The dieter is told to make no substitutions because it works on a chemical breakdown. This diet averages 900 calories per day. So, that is likely to lead to weight loss for most people, but I doubt it. Days 1 and 3 are low fat (26 percent calories from fat). Day 2 is a high fat diet (40 percent from fat). There are some nutrients that are very low and could be a problem if you followed this diet for more than three days. The low nutrients are vitamins B1, B6, copper, potassium, zinc, calcium and iron. There is no magic in these food combinations that I know of to create a special chemical breakdown that leads to weight loss. I've seen lots worse and lots better diets for weight loss. I keep writing to encourage us all to follow a low fat diet which will lead to weight loss and heart health and to continue to follow it routinely for life.

Right after the New Year several groups in Greenville will be offering weight reduction classes. Watch in the In the Area column of the Reflector for notices about classes at the Greenville Aquatics Center, the Eastern Carolina Family Practice Center and others. You might to want to inquire at your workplace, too. Many local industries offer wellness programs for their employees.

Plan Ahead To Eliminate Entertaining Headaches

Entertaining is as much a part of the holidays as unwrapping presents, trimming the tree or making a New Year's resolution. There are few who would not admit to being unabashedly in love with the year-end holidays even though at times they may not seem to come one all too quickly and often catch us unaware.

One easy way to maintain a healthy love affair with the holiday season is to plan ahead for expected, and unexpected, entertaining occasions. Gathering a potpourri of appetizer ideas is a good place to start.

Fortunately, our contemporary lifestyles have given the appetizer a renewed credibility in the entertaining arena. No longer is the busy holiday host mandated to create a full course meal. Appetizers now siut the bill for any occasion.

The recipes offered here feature two new, quick and unusual appetizers. The first recipe, Blue Cheese Spread, requires only 15 minutes from a busy holiday schedule. Crabmeat Party Appetizers only take slightly more preparation and cooking time.

BLUE CHEESE SPREAD

2 8-oz. pkgs. cream cheese, softened
4 ozs. blue cheese crumbles
1 tsp. dried basil leaves, crushed

Nuts Are Indispensible As Snacks For Holidays

WINSTON-SALEM — If there aren't any nuts around, it's probably not a holiday season. When festivities approach, decorative nutcracker soldiers stand as silent sentinels in homes and stores across the country. Children plunder Christmas stockings, searching for toy trinkets among fruits and nuts.

Nuts are associated with many American winter holiday traditions. Party planners, stocking stuffers and gift-box packers frequently reach for nuts. Nuts slide into savory stuffings for countless dinner menus. They're as indispensible at cocktail parties as the beverages themselves. During the season for entertaining, nuts offer a classic way to turn fundamental fare into holiday magic.

Served straight from the bag, can or jar, nuts are a popular attraction at any cocktail party or buffet, or informal gathering of friends or family. Or, a creative host or hostess can take a few minutes to give ready-to-eat packaged nuts a different twist. Nut recipes can be adopted to suit snackers who favor fiery flavor, those with a savage sweet tooth, or folks who simply savor the tastes from simpler times.

"Baking nuts" — such as pecans, walnuts and almonds — are traditionally associated with holiday dishes. But many other nuts — such as peanuts, cashews and pistachios — can also add an artful touch to holiday occasions.

Nuts tossed in a little melted margarine and then warmed in a slow oven make a mouth-watering appetizer. Oil-roasted peanuts can be warmed and sprinkled with a little chili powder, paprika and red pepper to create a spicy treat. Pistachios, cashews, almonds or pecans can be warmed and flavored with melted butter and celery salt or onion salt. Nuts also give character to cracker spreads and cheese balls.

Presenting nuts as gifts is a tradition that dates back thousands of years. For example, the Bible says that Isreal commanded his sons to carry into Egypt gifts from Palestine, including almonds. Today, simple but sweet nut concoctions make excellent snacks for guests, and holiday gifts treats for friends, neighbors or co-workers.

Peanuts stirred into melted semi-sweet chocolate and spooned onto waxed paper become special chocolate-covered peanut clusters. Similarly, mocha peanut clusters can be created by blending chocolate and coffee flavors.

Minature edible Christmas decorations can pop out of a pastry bag. Squeeze melted semi-sweet chocolate into small wreath shapes, which can be cleverly decorated with nuts and colorful chopped dried fruits.

Homemade peanut brittle also makes a festive holiday gift. Interesting variations include cashew brittle and sesame almond brittle (prepared with slivered almonds and sesame seed instead of peanuts, and with almond extract instead of vanilla extract called for in some brittle recipes).

While nuts figure frequently into party snacks and edible gifts, they've equally useful at the dinner table. Enthusiastic cooks can create memorable holiday meals by using nuts to add flavor, color and crunchy texture to any aspect of a meal — appetizer, salad, main course, or dessert.

For example, mushrooms stuffed with pecans, chopped peppers, onions and Swiss cheese make an attention getting appetizer or side dish. Or, to give rice new relish, add diced green pepper and cashews.

Vegetables can be given a festive touch by serving them drizzled with an easy-to-make orange cashew sauce. Melt two tablespoons of margarine in a skillet, add one cup of cashew halves, and stir until light brown. Blend in two tablespoons of flour, 3/4 cup of milk added gradually, and 1/4 cup orange juice. Cook and stir until mixture thickens.

Cashews can enrich main dishes ranging from exotic chicken stir-fry dinners to everyday tuna casseroles. As for desserts, there's an endless list of nutty attractions, such as fruit cakes, pies, cookies, pralines, candies and fudge.

During all the holiday gatherings and shopping expeditions, those who start lagging would do well to rech for the nuts again. Nuts are energy-packed seeds designed by nature to to nourish seedling plants. It would take eight pounds of potatoes or ten pounds of apples to equal the energy value to be found in one high-protein pound of nut kernels. Nuts usually contain calicium, phosphorus, iron, potassium and the B vitamins.

Come the think of it, nuts shouldn't be a holiday treat. With their versatility and appeal, they ought to be just as popular the rest of the year — but U.S. nut sales climb sharply during the holiday season. Ancient civilizations knew better; they treated themselves to nuts year round. An inventory of the French royal household's goods taken around 600 years ago listed only 20 pounds of sugar, but 500 pounds of almonds. Perhaps the 20th century should take a tip from the Middle Ages.

Roast Duck Is Dressed For Holiday Meal

HOLIDAY ROAST DUCKS

1 recipe Seasoned Corn Bread, crumbled
3 cups dry bread crumbs
1 Tbsp. salt
1 1/2 tsp. poultry seasoning
1/2 tsp. pepper
2 eggs, beaten
1/2 cup butter or margarine, melted
1 cup chopped fresh or canned mushrooms, drained
3/4 cup chopped peacans
3/4 cup poultry stock
1 1/4 cups fresh chopped cranberries
1/3 cup sugar
1 11-oz. can mandarin orange sections, drained
1/2 cup orange juice
2 frozen ducklings (4 1/2 to 5 lbs. each), defrosted

Combine corn bread, bread crumbs and seasoning; add eggs and butter, tossing lightly. Divide dressing in half. Add mushrooms, pecans and stock to one half of dressing; toss lightly. Mix cranberries with sugar; let stand 5 minutes. Combine cranberry mixture, orange sections and orange juice with other dressing half.

Wash, drain and dry ducklings. Rub outside and cavities of duacks with 1 tsp. salt, 1 tsp. pepper and 1 tsp. monosodium glutamate. Stuff body cavity and neck region of one duck with mushroom-pecan dressing. Stuff the other duck with the cranberry-orange dressing.

Roast, uncovered, on a rack in a shallow pan in preheated slow oven (325 degrees) 3 to 3 1/2 hours. Bake any remaining dressing in covered casserole during last 45 minutes of roasting time. Makes 6 servings.

Seasoned Corn Bread

2 cups enriched corn meal
2 cups sifted all-purpose flour
1/4 cup sugar (optional)
2 Tbsp. baking powder
1/2 tsp. salt
1 1/2 cups chopped onion
1 1/2 cups chopped celery
2 eggs, beaten
2 cups milk
1/2 cup vegetable oil

Sift together corn meal, flour, sugar, baking powder and salt into bowl. Toss onion and celery with dry ingredients. Add eggs, milk and oil; stir to moisten dry ingredients. Bake in a greased 13x9-inch baking pan in preheated hot oven (425 degrees) 25 to 30 minutes. Cool.

Remember Fruit As A Nutrition Balance

Although the holiday season has become for many of us a traditional time of overeating, too many sweets and high fat holiday treats, don't forget fruit as a happy balance in what can otherwise be a nutritional nightmare.

Fruits are bursting with fiber, yet provide natural sweetness, succulence and aroma to rival traditional sugar-filled holiday goodies. Fruits are good sources for many of the nutrients and vitamins, especially vitamin C.

The wide assortment of fruit now available at nearly every supermarket provides the ingrdients for holiday recipes that are sure to become a tradition in your home. Many formerly rare and exotic varieties, as well as seasonal fruits, are now found routinely and year-round in most areas.

Here are some simple, yet scrumptious, ideas for serving holiday fruit:

- Pineapple or mango chunks for dipping into maple syrup
- Cherries, small plums and apple chunks, strung on skewers and rolled in confectioner's sugar
- Canteloupe, watermelon and honeydew balls, tossed in a little kirsch
- Ambrosia of grapefruit and orange sections, lightly sprinkled with shredded coconut
- Grapes or strawberries, mixed with lowfat yogurt and sprinkled with brown sugar
- Baked banana halves sprinkled with lightly with chocolate shavings
- Tapioca pudding (made with skim milk) with rasberries or blueberries

Here's a simple but tasty fruit dish that contains coconut and walnuts for flavor and crunch. These two ingredients add some fat to the dish, but as long as they're used in limited amounts, go ahead and enjoy them.

MIXED FRUIT DELIGHT

1 20-oz. pkg. frozen unsweetened mixed fruit
1 cup lowfat plain yogurt
1/3 cup orange juice
3 Tbsp. coconut
3 Tbsp. chopped walnuts

Place the fruit out on a tray to partially thaw for about 30 minutes. In a blender, mix the yogurt and orange juice. Remove the yogurt and juice from the blender, and mix into the mixed fruit. Place into individual serving dishes, and top with cocnut and walnuts.

This can also be made by substituting your favorite fresh fruits for the frozen. Yields 6 servings with 4 grams fat and 100 calories in each.

Cookies Evoke Good Feelings At Holidays

2 1/2 cups all-purpose flour
1/2 tsp. each baking powder and salt
1/4 tsp. baking soda
1 cup sugar
1/2 cup butter or margarine
1 egg
1/2 tsp. almond extract

For filling, cook apricots, 1/2 sugar and water in microwave on HIGH for 4 to 5 minutes or on range over medium heat until sugar has dissolved and mixture has thickened. Stir occasionally as needed. Stir in almonds; set aside to cool.

Combine flour, baking powder, salt and soda; set aside. Creamm sugar and butter or margarine. Beat the egg and almond extract until light and fluffy. Stir in flour mixture just until blended. Divide dough in half. Place each half between two sheets of waxed paper and roll into 10x8-inch rectangle. Spred half of apricot filling on each rectangle to within 1/2-inch of edges. Beginning with 10-inch side, roll tightly. Seal edge by pinching dough together. Wrapo in waxed paper or plastic wrap and overlap with aluminum foil. Chill several hours or overnight.

'Eat Well, Be Well' Recipes Offer Healthful Eating Keys

As the winter sets in, we begin looking forward to the heart-warming foods which harken back to our childhood days. Fresh, hot whole wheat breads and muffins, as well as nutritious vegetable soups help to balance one's diet and reduce fat intake. Using whole grains and legumes such as lentils, barley, beans and oats is an inexpensive and delicious way to provide nutritious meals.

These are just four of the more 100 recipes featured in the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company's "Eat Well, Be Well" (R) Cookbook (Simon & Schuster). All of the recipes follow The Seven Dietary Guidelines for Americans issued by the U.S. Dept. of Health and Human services and the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture, based on moderation variety and balance as the keys to healthful eating. The "Eat Well, Be Well (R)" Cookbook also contains a comprehensive nutrition guide and is available in bookstores or by mailorder from Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. The cookbook is $10.45 (including mailing and handling costs).

Poultry Guarantees Good Holiday Feasting

Poultry has long been a family favorite for church socials, family reunions and holiday homecomings. A platter of fried chicken and the aroma of roasting turkey are considered necessary at most large gatherings and the deviled eggs are always the first to go when plates are being filled.

Good eating is always guaranteed when you serve up plenty of poultry. The taste and texture of poultry meats make them a favorite of young and old alike. For nutritional value, poultry is the best choice...the protein in poultry is the highest quality available for such an economical price and poultry is also naturally low in calories and saturated fat.

So, this holiday season be sure to serve poultry foods for a marvelous spread that will be the center of attention at your homecoming feast. Poultry is the best buy around for feeding a hungry crowd —— the supply is plentiful and the prices very reasonable.

GRAHAM CRACKER CAKE

1 pkg., plus 6 extra, graham crackers
5 eggs
1 cup milk
2 sticks butter or margarine
1 cup chopped nuts
1 cup coconut
1 tsp. baking powder
2 tsp. vanilla
2 cups sugar

Mix all ingredients together well. Bake in layer pans for 30 minutes at 350 degrees.

FROASTING: Cream together one 8 oz. pkg. cream cheese, 1 box powder sugar, 1 stick butter or margarine and 1/2 tsp. vanilla. Spread evenly over layers.

STUFFED BONELESS BREASTS OF CHICKEN

2 cups ready-mix bread stuffing
2 chicken breasts, (about 12 oz. each), split and boned
2 Tbsp. butter or margarine, melted
1/2 tsp. salt
1/4 tsp. pepper
1/4 tsp. garlic powder
1/4 tsp. paprika
1 can (10 oz.) cream of mushroom soup
1/2 cup dry white wine

Make stuffing, following label directions. Generously butter a baking dish, 8x8x2-inches. Divide stuffing into 4 equal mounds in baking dish. Top each with a half chicken breast, tucking meat down around stuffing to cover completely. Brush with butter, sprinkle with salt, pepper, garlic powder and paprika. Bake in moderate oven (350 degrees) for 1 hour, or until golden brown. combine soup and wine in saucepan; heat slowly, stirring constantly, until bubbly. Pour over chicken and serve.

ROAST TURKEY

Place turkey, breast side up, on rack in shallow open roasting pan. If meat thermometer is used, insert into center of thigh meat next to body, not touching bone. Place a "tent" of light weight foil, shiny side down, loosely over turkey to prevent overbrowning. Roast in 325 degree oven. Turkey may be basted. Foil may be removed during the last half hour for a final browning.

Factos affecting roasting times are variations in ovens, shape of turkeys and degree on thawing. These variations make it important to begin checking for doneness about one hour before the end of the recommended roasting time.

Turkey is done when meat thermometer registers 180 degrees to 185 degrees F., thick part of drumstick feels soft when pressed with thumb and forefinger ordrumstick moves easily. Stuffing in a turkey needs to reach 165 degrees F. to be sufficiently cooked. Let turkey stand at room temperature for 15 to 20 minutes for easier carving.

ONION-MUSHROOM GRAVY

Turkey giblets
1 bay leaf
3 1/2 cups water
1 envelope onion soup mix
8 Tbsp. turkey drippings
1/2 cup sifted all-purpose flour
1 can (6 oz.) sliced mushrooms

Combine turkey giblets (except liver) and necks with bay leaf and water in a medium sized saucepan. Heat to boiling; stir in soup mix. Simmer 40 minutes; add liver. Simmer 20 minutes longer, or until giblets are tender. Remove giblets from broth and chill to dice for soup another day. Measure and add water, if needed, to make 3 1/2 cups.

After turkey has been removed from roasting pan, remove rack, if used. Tip pan and let drippings rise in one corner, then pour off into a cup, leaving juiced in pan. Measure the 8 tablespoons drippings and return to pan. Blend in flour; cook, stirring constantly., until bubbly. Stir in the 3 1/2 cups broth and mushrooms and liquid. Continue cooking adn stirring, scraping baked-on juices from bottom and sides of pan, until gravy thickens and boils 1 minutes. Stir in a few drops of bottled gravy coloring to darken, if you wish, and season with salt and pepper, if needed.

Easy Ways To Cook Calcium Into Holidays

Christmas is coming, the geese are getting fat —— and the rest of us are trying to maintain a well-balanced diet throughout the holiday season. While visions of sugar plums dace through our heads, we remind ourselves not to ruin year-long efforts with too many Christmas cookies , fruitcakes and alcoholic beverages. We know we should hold back on the calories, go easy on the salt and moderate the sugar intake. Sound advice for a health-conscious society, but while we reduce our calorie intake, salt and sugar, we also must be mindful of maintaining calcium in our daily —— and holiday —— diet.

It's a well-know fact that lack of adequate calcium may lead to osteoporosis, a bone-crippling disease that afflicts 24 million people in America. Moreover, some experts recomment we increase calcium intake through the food we eat and not through the use of supplements.

Here a a few "calcium quickies" for the holidays and beyond —— habits to establish for making calcium a part of your daily life:

1. When entertaining, include hos d'oeuvres such as fresh broccoli with a yogurt dip.
2. At dinner, instead of serving rolls, serve calcium-rich cornbread.
3. Add a cheese sauce to your vegetables or a cream sauce to your meat or fish dish.
4. Sprinkle calcium-packed almonds on cereal, muffins, desserts, even salad. Keep some in your desk drawer for that mid-morning crunch craving.
5. Drink milk with your holiday cookies and cakes. Order milk with your sandwich or hamburger at lunch.
6. Keep your fridge stocked with cheeses (chedder, muenster, edam, swiss, parmesean) for family and friends. Allow about a 1/4 lb. for each person. Add cheeses to salads and soups, also.
7. Top off party desserts with a dollop of yogurt.
8. For a nourishing breakfast, whip up a quick breakfast shake with fresh fruit or frozen strawberries, a banana, and skim milk.
9. Warm up cool mornings with hot cocoa made with whole milk.
10. For those chilly winter afternoons, eat chili —— the kidney beans are packed with calcium. Top with grated chedder cheese.
11. Add nonfat dry milk to mashed potatoes, pudding, and other foods that contain milk. You're adding 60-70 miligrams of calcium per teaspoon —— fewer that 29 calories. Also, a few tablespoons in sauces, gravies, soups and stews add texture, body —— and extra calcium.
