Yugoslav Premier And Cabinet Resign Over Economic Crisis

By Dusan Stojanovic
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Premier Branko Mikulic and his entire Cabinet quit today in the first resignation by a federal government since the Communist Party took power after World War II.

Mikulic told Parliament he stepped down because it refused on Wednesday to pass an economic law needed to ensure continued support from the International Monetary Fund for the debt-ridden country.

In his speech, broadcast live on Belgrade television, Mikulic refused to accept blame for the country's burgeoning economic problems, including a $21 billion foreign debt, 15 percent unemployment and annual inflation of around 250 percent.

Mikulic said these problems were inherited from the previous Communist government of Milka Planinc, whom he replaced as premier in May 1986 for a four-year term.

Mikulic, 60, was under increasing pressure to resign in recent days, with leading state-run dailies calling for his immediate replacement because of his failure to tackle Yugoslavia's most severe post-World War II crisis.

On Wednesday, Parliament declined to pass a law imposing cuts on public spending. The vote defied Mikulic's declaration that Yugoslavia has an obligation to the International Monetary Fund.

Mikulic said the Cabinet met in closed session late Wednesday and decided then to resign.

He told Parliament on Wednesday the IMF insisted on the austerity measures limiting public spending before agreeing in June to grant Yugoslavia a one-year stand-by credit of $416 million. About $260 million of that credit has been used, according to official estimates.

The stand-by loan was crucial to help Yugoslavia meet payments on its foreign debt and reach separate agreements for loan rescheduling with other Western banks and governments.

The Communist Party daily Borba on Thursday quoted an unidentified Cabinet minister as saying Parliament's refusal to pass the law "destroys the stand-by arrangement with the IMF, which in turn carries a series of other consequences."

The minister gave the first hint the government might step down, saying that "if it is intelligent enough," the Cabinet would resign.

Yugoslavia has had a record number of strikes this year, with workers protesting low wages and declining living standards that now

Economic Indicators Declined

By Martin Crutsinger
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The government's chief gauge of future economic activity edged down 0.2 percent in November, after having risen in the previous month, the Commerce Department said today.

The performance by the department's Index of Leading Economic Indicators continued a sawtooth pattern which analysts said was signaling that economic growth will slow in the new year, but the country should not topple into a recession.

The index had risen 0.4 percent in October after having suffered a 0.3 percent decline in September. Since May, the index has exhibited an alternating pattern of increases and declines in each month.

Over the past 12 months, the index has risen 1.6 percent, less than half the 4.1 percent increase of the previous 12-month period.

To many analysts this suggests that economic growth will be slower in 1989 but there should be no recession. The traditional signal of an economic downturn is three consecutive months of declines in the leading index.

While the overall economy, as measured by the gross national product, is expected to climb by 3.9 percent this year, the best performance in four years, many analysts are predicting growth in the new year will slow to around 2.5 percent.

Such a slowdown would have the beneficial effect of easing inflationary fears, analysts said. With many industries already operating at close to peak capacity and with unemployment near 14-year lows, economists believe that slower growth is needed to keep the economy from overheating.

"We think a little slowdown is useful right now," said David Wyss, an economist with Data Resources Inc., of Lexington, Mass. "The economy has been growing too fast and needs to slow to a more sustainable pace."

In November, four of the available nine indicators contributed to the decline. The biggest negative factor was a speedup in delivery times on business orders. This is viewed negatively for the future because it indicates declining demand for products.

The other negative factors dragging the index down were a fall in stock prices, an increase in weekly unemployment claims and a decline in raw materials prices, also viewed as a negative because it signals falling demand.

Three indicators made positive contributions, led by an increase in growth in the money supply. Other positive forces were a rise in manufacturing orders for consumer goods and an increase in orders for new plants and equipment.

Two indicators, building permits and the length of the average workweek, were unchanged in November.

The various changes left the index at 193.2 percent of its 1967 base of 100.

The Federal Reserve has been tightening up on credit for much of this year in a move to dampen demand and keep inflation from accelerating.

Even without the credit tightening by the Federal Reserve, many analysts said a slowdown would have occurred anyway because they

Caller Threatens Additional Violence

LONDON — A caller claiming to represent the Guardians of the Islamic Revolution, which last week said it blew up Pan Am Flight 103, telephoned American news agencies today and threatened more action.

The anonymous male caller repeated the claim of responsibility and said that unless the United States deports Reza Pahlavi, son of the late Shah of Iran, "there will be another present in the New Year for America."

Speaking in a Middle Eastern accent, he read a brief statement to The Associated Press in broken English and hung up, refusing to answer questions.

"In the name of the God and Islamic revolution and Imam Khomeini, we are very pleased to succeed the Pan Am attack," he said.

"We are very concerned with the recent activities of the Reza Pahlavi in Europe and America. We demand America to throw him out of America or else there will be another present in the New Year for America."

United Press International said it received a similar call.

An anonymous male caller telephoned the AP on Dec. 22, the day after the jumbo jet crashed in southern Scotland, killing all 259 people aboard and leaving 11 missing and presumed dead on the ground. British officials later concluded that a bomb downed the plane. He said it was in retaliation for the shooting down of an Iran Air Airbus by the U.S. Navy cruiser Vincennes in July. The Navy said the plane was mistaken for an Iranian fighter. All 290 people aboard were killed.

U.S. officials and terrorism experts said it was unlikely that the group actually was responsible for the Pan Am bomb.

Reaction Mixed To Base Plans

By Stephanie Nano
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A proposal that 34 major U.S. military bases be closed brought warnings of economic woe from disheartened local officials and merchants, but there were signs of relief around installations spared the axe or slated for expansion.

"I think it will be devastating — 50 percent of our employment at least has to do with Chanute," Mayor Katy Podagrosi said in rural Rantoul, Ill., home of Chanute Air Force Base.

The training center, with 2,133 military and 1,035 civilian jobs, was one of the military bases recommended for closure in the report issued Thursday.

But church bells pealed in Enid, Okla., when officials learned Vance Air Force Base was unaffected by the plan, and officers cheered at Myrtle Beach Air Force Base when they learned it would stay open.

"Without question, we are very pleased," Enid Mayor Bruce Harvey said.

In all, the Commission on Base Realignment and Closure recommended closing 86 facilities, including 52 military housing units, partially closing five others, and revising the roles and staffing levels at 54 others.

If the plan is carried out, the commission estimated, the government would save $693 million annually and $5.6 billion over the next two decades. While 58,500 military and civilian employees would lose their jobs or be transferred, other bases would get 37,850 new jobs or assignments.

San Francisco stands to lose the city's third largest employer if the Presidio Army base is closed as recommended. The base, one of the loveliest spots in the city, employs about 3,000 civilians and 2,700 military.

"For 112 years, the Presidio has been an integral part of San Francisco. It was here before San Francisco was a city. It's been a very good neighbor ... an important part of our economy," said Mayor Art Agnos.

Under the 1972 federal law that established the Golden Gate National Recreation Area, all but 36 of the Presidio's 1,490 acres would become part of the popular park, which includes coastal land both in San Francisco and Marin County north of the Golden Gate.

"(Closure) would be bad. We get a lot of business from the base. We would really feel it," said Linda Jacobsen, manager of a Travelodge motel only a few yards from the Presidio's main gate.

"Nobody likes to see business go down the drain, and that's what's happening," said Mike Rudolph, owner of Il Forno Pizzeria, across the street from the main gate of Fort Sheridan in suburban Chicago.

The base has about 2,000 civilian employees and 2,000 military employees, including about 1,000 full-time soldiers who direct 140,000 reservists from seven states.

"Nobody likes to lose their job," said Fidel Ghini, mayor of neighboring Highwood for the last two decades. "But look ... the federal government has a job to do. It's time we put a stop to all this waste."

The mood was somber in shops around Fort Dix, N.J. The commission recommended that the Army's second-largest basic training site be reduced to "semiactive status" and that its complement of 8,300 permanent military and civilian jobs be cut by more than 4,600.

"I am very worried," said Bill Ziotas, as he leaned across the counter of the Palace Restaurant, which he has owned for 24 years. "I'd have to close down, because 65 percent of my business comes from Fort Dix. I hope our politicians will be able to do something."

But what was bad news for some communities was welcome news in others that will gain jobs as a result of the closures.

In Ingleside, Texas, a naval base being built would receive fleets previously assigned to ports in Galveston and Lake Charles, La., which were recommended for abandonment.

"I'm glad to be off the hook," said Mark Crawford, mayor of the community 20 miles north of Corpus Christi. "Ingleside will move forward in the right direction."

'Knuckles' Back At Work

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VALDOSTA, Ga. — Linda "Knuckles" Black has proven she's as tough as her nickname indicates.

A little over a year after she became Georgia's first heart-lung transplant recipient, the 41-year-old mother of two is back at work, surprising her doctors and colleagues.

Earlier this month, she returned to her job at South Georgia Medical Center, where she laughs with co-workers over her nickname. "I thought my husband called me that because when I drove the car all you could see was the top of my head and my knuckles," she said.

But her recent ordeal has left little doubt about her toughness and determination.

Before the operation, Mrs. Black's condition had deteriorated to the point in 1985 where she was unable to do little more than walk from the bed to the living room couch.

Three weeks after her July 1987 surgery at University Hospital in Augusta, she walked out of the hospital, fulfilling her vow not to leave in a wheelchair.

After some time off and a month of rehabilitation, she came back to the place where she had worked for five years.

"She was real tiny before," said co-worker Jackie Miley. "Now she looks real healthy. We're all very glad to have her back."

Mrs. Black suffered from a rare enzyme deficiency that brought about premature emphysema, which eventually developed into pulmonary hypertension — fluid in her lungs that prevented oxygen from getting into her blood. Her heart was replaced along with her lungs, to improve the chances of success.

Mrs. Black said her doctors were surprised at her fast recovery from the surgery. "Some folks never go back to work, but I asked if I could start back," she said, adding that her work has helped in her recovery.

"It gives me the satisfaction of accomplishing something," she said; she keeps an eye on the patients in critical condition in the intensive care unit of the hospital.

The 84 percent annual inflation rate he inherited from Planinc has tripled during Mikulic's tenure.

He survived a potential vote of confidence in May, when deputies from the liberal northern republic of Slovenia and from Croatia failed to gather support from the other four Yugoslav republics to vote out the government.

Mikulic's reputation has been tarnished further by a corruption scandal involving hundreds of party and government officials in his native republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina.

In addition, Yugoslavia has been wracked by unrest among its various ethnic groups.

The official Tanjug news agency said Mikulic's government will remain in power only until a new government is formed.

It was not known whether the decisive law rejected by Parliament on Wednesday would be submitted to the legislature a second time for possible passage.

The Cabinet minister quoted in Thursday's Borba said Parliament's initial decision "could endanger the rescheduling of $1.6 billion of Yugoslavia's foreign debt falling due next year," which was already tentatively agreed upon with foreign creditors.

"If that should happen, according to preliminary estimates the gross national product would decrease next year by 8 percent, thus presenting us with the possibility of declaring a moratorium," the official was quoted as saying.

Mikulic is an economist who served as a presiding member of the Yugoslav Communist Party in 1978 and 1979 under the late leader Josip Broz Tito.

Although he rejected blame for Yugoslavia's economic problems, observers said his decision to step down was at least partly intended to placate Yugoslavia's 23 million citizens, who are increasingly angered by falling living standards and the government's inability to control inflation.

This week, railway workers in Yugoslavia's wealthiest republic of Slovenia went on strike for the first time since 1945.

Although Mikulic increasingly has been accused of incompetence, Yugoslavia's complex federal system also has hindered a solution to its economic problems.

The need for unanimity by the country's six constituent republics and two autonomous provinces on all federal matters means that key decisions are often watered down to ineffective compromises.

In a bid to overcome the deteriorating situation, Parliament adopted Thursday night a new law to stimulate private enterprise as part of planned reforms to steady the economy. The law was adopted "for the first step toward market economy," the state news agency said.

The law, considered crucial for launching economic reform, allows liberal measures for the establishment of both private, mixed and state owned companies.

Radio Belgrade said the law was considered among the most important passed in Parliament since self-management laws were adopted in the early 1950s.

Criticism has grown in recent years that Yugoslavia's once praised system allowing enterprises limited independence has worsened the country's economic and political problems.

The self-management system was also seen as an obstacle to attracting sizable foreign investments in Yugoslavia.

Home Sales Show Big Dip

By Martin Crutsinger
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Sales of new homes fell 8 percent in November, the biggest decline in 18 months, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said that new single-family homes were sold at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 671,000 units last month following a 4.4 percent rise in October.

The November decline, the second in the past three months, was the sharpest since an 11.6 percent decrease in May 1987.

Analysts had been expecting a decline, in part because they doubted that the October pace could be sustained in the face of rising mortgage rates. However, the size of the November declines was more than double what many economists had been forecasting.

Many analysts believe that home sales will weaken further in the new year under the impact of rising mortgage rates.

Fixed-rate mortgages last week stood at 10.68 percent, according to a survey by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. and many economists are predicting they could hit 11.5 percent by the start of the peak home buying season next spring.

The decline in sales was accompanied by a drop in prices. The median price of a new home fell 4.2 percent to $110,200 in November. The average price was down as well, declining by 0.8 percent to $138,900.

The sales drop was led by a huge 27.3 percent plunge in sales in the Northeast, which fell to an annual rate of 72,000 units. Sales were off 7.5 percent in the South to a rate of 245,000 units and down 6.8 percent in the West to a rate of 233,000 units.

The Midwest was the only region of the country to enjoy a rise in sales in November, a 5.2 percent increase to an annual rate of 121,000 units. This region is currently benefiting from a rebounding economy as the area's manufacturing industries enjoy rising demand from a boom in U.S. exports.

Brezhnev's Son Sentenced

By Andrew Katell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — A military tribunal today found the son-in-law of former President Leonid I. Brezhnev guilty of taking bribes and abusing his office, and sentenced him to 12 years in a labor camp.

Yuri Churbanov, who served as first deputy interior minister during Brezhnev's years in power, systematically took thousands of rubles of bribes instead of enforcing Soviet laws, said the judge, army Maj. Gen. Mikhail Marov.

The verdict came a day after the Kremlin struck a further blow at the legacy of Brezhnev, accused of fostering a period of corruption and stagnation, by ordering that a memorial plaque be removed from his former home and that all factories and schools still named for him be renamed. Churbanov originally faced the death penalty in the sensational trial that began Sept. 5 on charges that he had accepted bribes of more than $1.1 million.

But during the trial the court threw out some charges and reduced the amount of bribes he was accused of taking to $145,000. Prosecutors had recommended a 15-year sentence.

The 52-year-old Churbanov, who married Brezhnev's daughter Galina in 1971, stood throughout the entire 3½ hour procedure at the Soviet Supreme Court, staring calmly at the judge and two lay assessors.

He did not react to the announcement of the verdict and sentence, and declined to talk to reporters afterward.

But his lawyer, Andrei Makarov, said the court's decision showed that the Soviet Union is on the way to a society based on law.

"You can agree or disagree with the sentence, but in substance the throwing out of most of the charges leveled by the prosecutors is indisputable," he said.

Churbanov was tried along with eight other former government officials from the Central Asian republic of Uzbekistan. One of the eight was acquitted and the case of another, former Uzbekistan Interior Minister Khaibar Yakhyayev, was turned back to prosecutors for further investigation.

Kashtimur Kakhramanov, a former deputy interior minister, who was acquitted, took a seat in the audience after the court pronounced him a free man. He broke down and cried, and nurses clad in white came to assist him.

A Mixed Bag

Growth, Disappointment, Mark 1988

The year 1988 will soon be dust on the pages of history. It is past, the events over.

But for Pitt County, the impact of the year's issues lies ahead, somewhere in the future. The key to this future is a clear understanding of the past; that is the essence of history.

The last 365 days held, for Pitt County, both dynamic growth and disappointment. The path to progress was marked by footprints of failure. While the community moved forward in most areas, it fell short in others.

For Pitt, 1988 was a year of expansion, awareness and diversity. It was not a year of dramatic change, although the effect of some of its events is very significant.

Citizens elected their first black county commissioners and watched them take office in December. While that should be hailed as a significant step forward, it occurred only after a disputed election and a flawed runoff forced a third vote between a black and white candidate. Voters were shocked to learn ineligible voters cast ballots in the election, and while the black candidate finally prevailed, the integrity of the county's election system was questioned. From the uncertainty surrounding the issue came a demand for more scrupulous operation at the polls.

The community led the region in a successful fight against a hazardous/low level nuclear waste dump in Edgecombe County, near the Pitt border. From this victory emerged two important developments. First, the community became influential outside its geographic boundaries. Counties in the region were united politically by the issue; Pitt led this movement. From the struggle and consequent success came a regional perspective and responsibility that places the community at the front.

From this issue also emerged a keen awareness of the area's natural resources. The prospect of having the waste dump as a neighbor riveted attention on the environment. Concerns over quality of life and ecology were aired as never before. The resulting heightened awareness laid the ground work for a careful look at resources.

While the three-legged platform on which Pitt County's economy rests remained solid in 1988, there were areas where the phrase "we can do better" applies. Education, industry and agriculture, the base for Pitt's prosperity, continued strong through 1988. But there were shortfalls.

While the travel and tourism trade expanded beyond expectations during the year, the county's industrial recruitment remained stagnant. Weyerhaeuser began work on a high-tech electronic sawmill near Ayden, but Pitt citizens watched as neighboring Lenoir County netted two significant industries — White Consolidated and Lennox China. The county is losing out to other areas in recruitment.

Pitt's medical industry kept growing, however, as did the resources within the walls of Pitt County Memorial Hospital and the East Carolina University Medical School. At PCMH, expansion was a multi-million dollar contributor to the county's economy. A birthing center, a new admissions office and an oncology center were completed in 1988, pouring dollars and jobs into the economy. And an urgently needed 146-bed expansion of the hospital was approved.

But while the phenomenal growth of the medical complex was occurring, the future of the proposed East Carolina Medical Park — and Greenville's medical district — was being muddled. The City Council diluted zoning in crucial areas in the medical district, then asked for a review of the entire zoning plan: By allowing a flower shop — a commercial endeavor — in the area across from PCMH, then declaring it wanted more stringent guidelines on zoning, the council sent conflicting signals. As 1988 wanes, the future of the medical district remains confused.

For East Carolina University, 1988 was a year of steps forward countered by steps back. The university's nursing graduates scored the lowest of any University of North Carolina school on the state nursing exam, a distinction that prompted a close examination of the program. In addition, ECU was the only state university whose Scholastic Aptitude Test scores for its freshman class dropped. Both rankings focused attention on academic prowess, and the need to strengthen it. But the news was not all dismal. ECU's graduation rate for its athletes improved dramatically — the most in the state. That signaled an increased emphasis on recruiting quality players and placing learning before sports.

For Pitt County, 1988 is over. As 1989 approaches, the community faces the task of building on the old year's successes while resolving its weaknesses — the continuous process of progress.

The Clean Slate, Please

Ellen Goodman

BOSTON — And now once more, in the interests of a clean slate, a fresh start and a genuinely new year, it is time for my annual Media Culpas. This has become a rite of passage for me, a cleansing confession of the errors of my way through the past year.

Mind you, these errors pale compared to mistakes others are pondering during the waning days of 1988. It was not I, after all, who told Mike Dukakis he'd look darling riding in that sweet tank. Nor did I advise Geraldo Rivera that he'd gain credibility if only he'd do a serious show on white supremacy.

It was Robin Givens, not I, who thought that openness, a kind of televised sharing, would be the perfect marital therapy for her and Michael. It was Judge Hortense Gabler who believed that permissive child-raising would breed loyalty in her little Sukhreet. And on the big screen, it was Michael Douglas who thought that Glenn Close was a good-time gal.

Nevertheless, I feel compelled by tradition and conscience to do my own true confessions:

To begin with the simple but embarrassing stuff, there were more than a few words that got abused in this space in the past 12 months. During one convention column, for example, I used the expression "awkward harbingers of the past." Well, awkward was right. You can't harbinge (I know that isn't a real verb) the past. You can only be a harbinger of the future.

Then there was the perennial parameterperimeter problem. With my own little computer I wrote about a "country that is putting parameters around drinking." Gulp and hold the Perrier. A fellow Radcliffe alumnae, class of 1921, wrote, "The increasing use of parameters for perimeters amazes and even shocks me." That is what's wonderful about Cliffies, our shock threshold remains so low. I stand corrected by Catriona White, the daughter of a man who taught English to Robert Benchley.

How do I explain the word "wifty," which appeared in a column describing Susan Sarandon's character in "Bull Durham"? In the spirit of confession, I must say that it wasn't a mistake, it was a hoax. I know this was a dastardly deed. I perpetrated this crime on the innocent public in hopes that I might create a word where none existed.

Not every paper was taken in. Some assumed it was a typo and printed nifty. Now the truth can be told. Wifty: A cross between fey, spacey and charming. Soon to be available in your local dictionary.

In a more innocent moment, I did a bit of creative fandangoing with Woody Allen. I misquoted him. He did not say, "80 percent of life is showing up." He said, "80 percent of SUCCESS is showing up."

While we are on the subject of success, a Media Culpa is due Liddy Dole. I was among those who publicly feared that she would be "wifed" into oblivion after she quit her job to follow her man down the ole campaign trail. But Ramrod and Rainbow, as the Secret Service calls them, are now in reruns as the Senator and the Secretary. Liddy is going to Labor and Bob is back doing the power-couple jokes: "It looks like TV dinners for me again, but I'll probably still vote for her confirmation."

Still, politics offers a huge number of opportunities for mistakes. I gingerly avoided the pitfall predictions of the demise of Bush and the transformation of a Quayle into an albatross. But I am credited with one blushing comment. If Bush reminded women of their first husband, I wrote, "Dukakis reminds many a woman of her second husband...the one she looked at long and hard, picked carefully with her eyes wide open." That leads me to a riddle: What is the difference between a second husband and a President? Lots.

In writing about Maggie Kuhn, the head of the Gray Panthers, I left the impression that her group was against the claims of the so-called notch babies to a bigger piece of the Social Security pie. "The notch babies," I wrote, "are the most glaring example of me-firstism among the elderly." True, but it turns out that the Panthers support their claim. My error in reporting; their error in judgment.

'It was not I, after all, who told Mike Dukakis he'd look darling riding in that sweet tank. Nor did I advise Geraldo Rivera that he'd gain credibility if only he'd do a serious show on white supremacy.'

Finally a word about Samantha, my aging and not-so-agile poodle. In a column on my geriatric canine aerobics plan, I calculated that Sam's 15 years made her 105 in human terms. Several dozen readers hastened to reproach me for my math, if not my exercise regimen. Every dog year does not equal seven human years. By a chart too complex to include here, it turns out that Sam is merely 76 going on 80. She thanks you. I thank you. And now, the clean slate, please.

Teflon & The Iron Triangle

Stop Calling It The Reagan Deficit, It's Bush's Now

Art Buchwald

As any self-respecting outgoing President would do, Ronald Reagan is spending his last weeks in office blaming others for everything that went wrong with the country's finances during his administration.

In discussing the enormous debt he is leaving behind, Mr. Reagan said that those responsible were an "Iron Triangle" consisting of Congress, the press and the Washington special interest groups. Had liberal congressmen been more responsible, and a responsible media been more vigilant, and vigilant lobbyists butted out, we would not have billions of dollars of red ink all over our hands.

White House aides have joined in the criticism. Doberman Pincher, who coined the phrase "Iron Triangle," told me that the President decided to go public about the people who wrecked his dream of a balanced budget, because he still had some Teflon left from his second term.

"It's time we pinned the deficit on the donkey's back," he declared. "You, the press, are as responsible for the trillion-dollar debt as anyone."

This got me mad, and I said, "I am only responsible for $350 billion of it. The rest of the blame goes to the liberal Congress and the special interest groups. By the way, does the President intend to accept any responsibility for the deficit?"

"Why should he?" Doberman asked. "He had nothing to do with how the money was spent while he was in office."

"I thought perhaps he might admit to his Defense Department wasting a few dollars here and there on weapons that don't work."

"The President doesn't know of any such weapons. Don't think that you can use defense expenditures as a way of making him part of the Iron Triangle."

"Why did the President include the press as one point of the Triangle?"

"Because had the press done its job and

'Had liberal congressmen been more responsible, and a responsible media been more vigilant, and vigilant lobbyists butted out, we would not have billions of dollars of red ink ...'

reported on the spending bills passed by the liberal Congress, we would not owe any money."

"We tried to report on waste in government," I told Doberman, "but every time we attempted to talk to someone, you had the whistle-blower locked up on a prison ship in the middle of the Potomac River."

"Whistle-blowers can't be trusted. They are always trying to embarrass the President."

I said, "There is still some question as to why Ronald Reagan would talk about a trillion-dollar deficit so late in his term."

Doberman answered, "The President didn't know about the debt until he cleaned out some papers in his desk. He was horrified by what he read. So he immediately called me in and asked what he could do so that history would not hold him responsible. I suggested he create an 'Iron Triangle' and blame everyone else in Washington for the mess. We included the press and the lobbyists who kept pushing a liberal Congress for bills that broke the bank."

"What about the lobbyists who helped the President get congressional funding for Star Wars and the Stealth bomber?"

"Those people were not acting as lobbyists, but rather as patriots. If there was any waste and fraud in this administration, the President didn't know about it."

"How can you be so sure?" "Because Mr. Reagan didn't know about a lot of things and the deficit was one of them. If the press had done its job, the President would have read about it or seen it on the Ted Koppel show and then taken action. As it happened, when it came to economic information, Mr. Reagan was living in a fool's paradise."

"Is there anything we citizens can do about the Reagan Deficit?"

"For starters, you can stop calling it the 'Reagan Deficit.' It is now the 'Bush Deficit' and don't you forget it."

Cuban Revolution Loses Relevance In Latin America

Jorge Castaneda

On New Year's Day, 30 years will have elapsed since Fidel Castro and his bearded "guerrilleros" made their triumphal entry into Havana, marking the beginning of what was to become the first socialist revolution in Latin America.

A measure of the revolution's success and importance is the fact that it has endured, under often extremely adverse circumstances; an indication of its difficulties and failures is the continuing doubt regarding its future and relevance to the Latin American experience. After three decades, the Cuban Revolution's standing in Latin America is ambivalent. Cuba's prospects for normalizing its turbulent relations with the United States are still uncertain.

Cuba today is closer to being a "normal" member of the hemispheric community than ever before. Talk of Cuba re-entering the Organization of American States is premature, but, at a formal level, relations with the rest of Latin America are certainly improving.

Cuba has normalized its relations with a number of Latin American nations, including, most recently, Brazil and Ecuador, following Uruguay and Argentina. Castro has attended the inaugurations of two chiefs of state (Mexico and Ecuador) in the last few months, and he may well be present at Carlos Andres Perez' inaugural ceremony next month in Caracas.

Some of the reasons for this trend also help to explain why, at least from a Cuban and Latin American point of view, there is some hope for normalization with the United States. Partly as a result of U.S. attempts to have Cuba ostracized by the international community, and partly because his domestic situation allowed him to do so, Castro has implicitly acknowledged that the human-rights situation on the island, mainly in its prisons, is a legitimate subject of regional and international concern. In order to block the United States' ill-fated attempts to obtain a United Nations Human Rights Commission vote against Cuba in 1987, the regime was forced to enter negotiations with other Latin American governments regarding fact-finding missions, reports and so forth. As a result, numerous missions, both multilateral and from the United States, have traveled to Cuba and issued reports that, while not totally favorable to Castro, clearly show that the accounts of a Cuban gulag were greatly exaggerated. The entire process has contributed to an improvement in relations with the rest of Latin America, and has heightened hopes for a rapprochement with the United States.

The agreement on Southern Africa is also a factor in this regard. The Brazzaville accords, which provide for Namibian independence and a Cuban withdrawal from Angola, were achieved under U.S. and Soviet auspices. They obviously remove a major point of contention from the U.S.-Cuban agenda, which since 1975 had been making an already difficult situation much worse.

With these significant changes in Cuba's stature, many in Latin America believe that, with a new administration in Washington, there is hope for significant improvement in U.S.-Cuban relations.

Viewed from a domestic American perspective, these hopes probably do not seem realistic. There is no constituency in the United States in favor of normalization, and there is a strong constituency against it. There appear to be intrinsic merits for normalization and obvious advantages to be derived from it — for Cuba, for Latin America and even for the United States; yet it is also true that in the latter case these are not terribly important. A U.S. administration that established diplomatic ties with Cuba, ended a nearly 30-year trade embargo and reached an agreement on the Guantanamo naval base would be applauded throughout the hemisphere and in Europe, but certainly not in Miami and probably not elsewhere in the United States.

In a sense, Cuba's tragedy as the revolution turns 30 lies precisely in this type of paradox. After so many years of having a disproportionate effect in the region and throughout the world, due largely to American hostility, Cuba no longer seems as important or as relevant as it once did. Although there is a notable intellectual effervescence in Havana's universities, newspapers and artistic circles, Castro's obvious distaste for Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's reforms place Cuba out of the mainstream of left-wing thought and action in the region. And the continuing popularity of Reaganomics among the hemisphere's ruling circles, together with Cuba's enormous economic difficulties, makes the Cuban model less attractive than ever to Latin American elites.

For the first time in Latin America, abject poverty, malnutrition and ignorance were eradicated, thanks to the Cuban Revolution. It gave the Cuban people, particularly the peasantry, a sense of dignity unknown in Latin America. But the costs grew, time has gone by, and the achievements of yesterday, while never negligible, appear less impressive today.

Fidel Castro and his revolution are not irrelevant or marginal; they are simply and sadly out of fashion.

Jorge G. Castaneda is a professor of political science at the National Autonomous University of Mexico.

Don't Deport

Doris Meissner

If the Bush administration does as it says and fashions a Central American policy that stresses diplomacy, the calculus may require changes in the treatment of burgeoning numbers of Central Americans residing in the United States.

Their importance was signaled by El Salvador's President Napoleon Duarte in a July letter to then-Senate majority leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va. Pleading for legislation that would temporarily suspend deportation of his countrymen from the United States, he asserted that the measure would be "the single most important initiative the United States can now take to help my nation (achieve peace)."

Coming from the leader of a country whose largest source of income is U.S. assistance and whose U.S.-backed election in 1983 represented the best hope in the region for democratic change, this statement is extraordinary. Congress adjourned without considering the bill he favored. But Duarte's request highlights a new form of interdependency that complicates the policy equation.

Close to 1 million Salvadorans, i.e., about 20 percent of El Salvador's population, reside in the United States. According to data developed by the Hemispheric Migration Project at Georgetown University, more than one third of Salvadoran families have one or more relatives in the United States. These relatives' earnings supply more than 60 percent of the income for their families at home. Cumulatively, migrant remittances bring more than $1 billion annually into El Salvador, constituting the third largest source of earnings for the country after U.S. aid and coffee exports.

Beyond the individual human hardship inflicted when a migrant is returned home, these figures tell a story in which migration has reached a scale where repatriation of any magnitude could threaten the economic stability of an entire country.

Because about half of the migrants are here in illegal status, the specter of deportation is real. Legal remedies are not readily available. U.S. policy has consistently viewed Salvadorans as economic migrants, despite evidence in the early 1980s of widespread death squad activity and its steady recurrence today. Nevertheless, only about 3 percent of those who seek refugee status by filing political asylum applications are approved. And the recent immigration amnesty program supplied only a limited answer because a large share of the migration has occurred since the program's 1982 cutoff requirement.

So, while immigration enforcement goals are pursued, the goal of democracy and stability in El Salvador is being undermined. Cutting away earnings from jobs in the States is a dire circumstance for a nation whose unemployment and underemployment are hovering at 40 percent. The standard of living of Salvadorans, despite substantial U.S. aid, has steadily worsened during six straight years of recession. The intensity of the civil war and political crisis that have gripped the nation is increasing, with threats now coming from both death squad and guerrilla attacks as national elections approach in spring.

The Nicaraguan story is hardly more encouraging on the migration front. An exodus of professionals and elites occurred after the Sandinistas took over in 1979, but the subsequent flow was modest. That changed this spring as a result of economic austerity measures that have sent inflation spiraling, dashed hopes following the breakdown of peace talks to end the war and the devastation of Hurricane Joan.

Current estimates are that Nicaraguan migrants will send home $60 million from the United States this year. This amounts to two thirds of coffee earnings, the country's most important export. It is only a matter of time before the economic interdependency between Nicaragua and its nationals in the United States approximates that of El Salvador.

Nicaraguan migrants have always succeeded in claiming greater sympathy from the U.S. government than have Salvadorans. Thus immigration officials in Miami, where the majority reside, decided unilaterally in 1986 to suspend deportation of Nicaraguans, and their asylum applications are being granted in the 50 percent range. Still, the sheer numbers of today's flow — an estimated 800 per week in Miami — are pushing the system beyond its limits, and pressure for new answers is mounting.

The new answers must be grounded in a commitment and strategy to conquer the deepening poverty that feeds revolution and repression in the region. The United States can only assist this process; it cannot ensure the outcome. But Central American leaders are likely to remind us, with increasing forcefulness, that repatriation threatens economic recovery in the region. The new administration may well find that changing its foreign policy points to changing its immigration policy too.

Doris Meissner is a former acting commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Officials Swallow Hard As Road Plan Outlined

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — State legislators, facing the prospect of finding $13.6 billion to meet North Carolina's long-range highway needs, continue to steer around the problem of raising the money.

James Harrington, state secretary of transportation, outlined the ambitious 12-year plan Thursday to the Highway Study Commission. But he was met with some skepticism.

"When we were talking about $6 billion, you should have seen the comments I got. Now it's $13 billion," said Sen. Bill Goldston, committee co-chairman. "Can you sell that to the people, or will they think we're smoking something down here that we ought not be smoking?"

Another commission member, I. Storrs of Charlotte, said of the comprehensive road plans, "Are we trying for a Cadillac system when we have gotten by with less?"

Harrington replied that the proposals would hardly match the pace of neighboring states.

"We're talking about roughly $1 billion a year. That's what Virginia is doing today. That's half of what Florida is doing. That's three-quarters of what New York is doing and Georgia is gearing up," Harrington said.

"There's an element of whether you want to stay up with the folks in the neighborhood."

The commission is to recommend legislation to the 1989 General Assembly that would revamp the state's method of establishing highway priorities and outline financing options on how to meet road needs projected at $728 million a year more than the state now budgets.

But comments Thursday raised questions about whether the plan is overambitious and cast doubt on the state's ability to meet the costs, the Winston-Salem Journal reported.

Rep. Bob Hunter, D-McDowell, a co-chairman, said the commission won't recommend a financing plan before the end of January.

"We're going to have to see what it's going to take to raise that kind of money," Hunter said of proposals that include a bond referendum, the establishment of a highway trust fund, a higher motor fuels tax, and toll roads and bridges.

Sen. Marc Basnight, D-Dare, said, "You have to get it out to the people and do a hell of a selling job."

Harrington's plans cite the following needs:

- $5.3 billion for primary rural and urban highways, such as N.C. 8 from Virginia to Richfield and U.S. 311 from Winston-Salem to Madison.
- $4.2 billion for a strategic corridor system that would provide four-lane highways within 10 miles of 90 percent of the state's population, including U.S. 421 through Yadkin, Wilkes and Watauga counties.
- $474 million for interstate improvement, including widening to six lanes Interstate 40 from Forsyth County to Greensboro and Interstate 85 from Greensboro to Durham.

- $1.4 billion to replace thousands of bridges in all 100 counties.
- $1.2 billion to build segments of outer loops around Charlotte, Raleigh, Greensboro, Durham and the Northern Beltway around Winston-Salem.
- $1.06 billion to upgrade secondary roads and pave more than half of the 16,560 miles of unpaved road in North Carolina, many of which are in Wilkes, Ashe and Stokes counties.

Hunter, who supports most of the proposals, said, "This would put us in the forefront of the country, enabling us to develop economically all areas of the state."

Still to be worked out is a formula that would ensure that all state highway money is distributed equitably to the 14 highway divisions in which North Carolina is divided.

Said Harrington: "In an ideal world, the Board of Transportation would address road priorities on need and fairness, but that's not likely to be accepted by a legislature that is suspicious of the executive, and vice versa, in any period that transcends two to four years."

The commission proposes to require the Department of Transportation to spend an equal amount of road money in each division, every four years.

But the source of that money remains the missing factor in the equation right now.

"It's nice to promise everybody everything, but remember, folks, it's got to be paid for," Goldston told the commission.

Prisons Lawyer Stepped Into 7-Year Court Battle

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — When Skip Capone joined the state Attorney General's office in 1981, he little realized he would spend much of the following seven years unraveling complaints lodged against North Carolina's crowded prison system.

Capone, fresh from the state Department of Agriculture, was not quite settled into his office in the state Court of Appeals building when Wayne Brooks, sitting in a prison cell 150 miles away in Union County, began scribbling 50 pages that would set the course for Capone's career shift.

Brooks' complaints bred a lawsuit that eventually covered 15 prisons in the South Piedmont. That original lawsuit sparked another one with almost identical complaints from an inmate at Craggy Prison near Asheville, and a third from a prisoner in Columbus County that eventually encompassed conditions at 49 prisons across the state.

It cost the state more than $100 million to build more prisons and hire more Correction Department employees to settle the first two lawsuits.

Last Wednesday, Capone reached a settlement with the inmates' lawyers on the third suit, subject to court approval. The General Assembly will consider spending up to $75 million this year to meet its requirements, which a judge has ordered kept secret until that decision is made.

"It dawned on me very slowly, I guess it was probably '83 or '84, before I really realized that we were in for a lot of litigation," Capone, a 1977 Wake Forest Law School graduate, told the Greensboro News & Record. "It's been exciting. I've enjoyed it because I love to litigate."

Capone said he'd like to make a career of work for the attorney general's office, though occasionally he thinks of private practice and other diversions.

Pari-Mutuel Amendment

NEW KENT, Va. (AP) — Del. George W. Grayson says he will sponsor an amendment to the state's pari-mutuel wagering law to enable counties to hold local referendums on horse track betting this spring.

The purpose of the bill is to eliminate confusion over state law that dictates when a local referendum on pari-mutuel betting can be held, Grayson, D-James City County, said Thursday.

The bill, which will be introduced next month, would allow Circuit Court judges to set the date for a special election on a referendum instead of waiting for a general election, as the law now requires.

The law enacted this year gives cities an unfair advantage, Grayson said, because they hold their elections as early as May. Counties typically hold their elections in November.

Grayson said the bill would contain an emergency clause that would make it effective before the normal July 1 date for new legislation.

The bill would benefit New Kent County, which has shown the greatest interest in building a horse racing track.

NCNB Sees Favorable Profits On Texas Bank

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — NCNB Corp. has revised its estimate of the profitability of its Texas acquisition, saying NCNB Texas National Bank will earn $153 million — 17 percent more than the Charlotte-based company projected four months ago.

NCNB revised the profit estimate after reviewing the Texas bank's operations and loans since August, said Timothy Hartman, NCNB Texas' vice chairman.

Because NCNB owns 20 percent of the Dallas-based NCNB Texas, the improved profit forecast for the Texas bank has led several bank analysts to raise their overall 1989 profit estimates slightly for the Charlotte banking giant in the past two weeks.

"The progress we have made is three to four months ahead of what we anticipated in August," said Hartman, architect of the takeover of Texas' largest bank. "We are very gratified with what we see. We're excited about the forecast for 1989 and beyond."

NCNB stock has surged from $23.375 per share to as high as $29.125 per share following the deal's announcement. It closed Thursday at $27.25 per share, up 50 cents.

Federal regulators selected NCNB among five bidders in late July to lead the rescue of First Republic-Bank Corp. NCNB agreed to put up $210 million in capital to acquire 20 percent of the bank, now NCNB Texas, and plans to acquire the rest within five years.

The bullish Texas outlook may prompt NCNB to acquire 100 percent of the Texas bank before the planned five years. Bank analysts with Robinson-Humphrey Co. of Atlanta forecast that NCNB will complete the deal in 1992, or a year earlier than expected.

But NCNB hasn't changed its plans to spread the purchase over five years, said Susan Carr, vice president for investor communications. For now, NCNB plans to increase its ownership to 51 percent at the end of 1991, 80 percent at the end of 1992 and 100 percent at the end of 1993.

The Texas bank is likely to add just 4 percent to NCNB's overall earnings in 1989. But the company and analysts believe Texas could add more than one-third to its Southeastern bank's earnings within five years as NCNB's ownership increases.

NCNB had estimated that NCNB Texas would earn $131 million in 1989, or $22 million less than its new forecast. By contrast, the Southeastern bank alone is likely to earn about $260 million next year, analysts forecast.

"In August, we were making a forecast using only public information" without reviewing First Republic Bank's loans or operations, Hartman said. "Now we've had four months. We have had a great deal more information available to us."

Ms. Carr added, "We know what Year One will look like, and it's better than what we thought."

NCNB Texas' loan portfolio will be smaller than expected because of the loss of its Delaware credit-card subsidiary to Citicorp, which outbid NCNB and others. In addition, more loans than originally expected were placed in the bad-asset pool, whose losses are suffered entirely by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Because of these changes, income from interest payments and fees is forecast to be $158 million below the original forecast. But the Texas bank's expenses are now also forecast to be much less — $180 million lower than first estimated.

"The expense savings are really everywhere," Ms. Carr said. For example, the bank will cut expenses by not operating the credit-card bank and by transferring 1,100 employees to the bad-loan pool paid for by the FDIC, she said.

In a Smith Barney & Co. report, bank analyst Thomas Brown wrote that these sort of changes accounted for less than half the cut in expenses. "The bottom line," he said, "is that NCNB is counting on running a leaner, more efficient banking organization than it originally did."

Following NCNB's more upbeat assessment in Texas, several securities firms raised their earnings estimates for NCNB Corp. by about a nickel a share. For example, Robinson-Humphrey Co. raised its 1989 estimate to $3.25 per share, and the Mabon Nugent & Co. securities firm in New York raised its estimate to $3.20 per share.

Panel Predicts 'Relentless Increase' In AIDS Cases

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The North Carolina AIDS Task Force, predicting little relief from the AIDS crisis, has made 37 recommendations aimed at slowing the spread of the disease and helping its victims.

The task force, chaired by state Health Director Dr. Ron Levine, says total cases of acquired immune deficiency syndrome may double next year in North Carolina from the current level of 655 cases.

"We're looking to, unfortunately, a relentless increase in cases, suffering, deaths, for years to come," he said.

While the task force did not call for new funding, Human Resources Secretary David Flaherty said at a news conference Thursday he had asked the Advisory Budget Commission to consider a $4.5 million increase in state spending for AIDS programs. So far, the ABC has not heeded the request. The legislature allocated $400,000 for AIDS programs last year.

Marvin Dorman, deputy state budget director, said the ABC's move did not mean Gov. Jim Martin would not request additional AIDS funding.

"Until the governor gives his State of the State address, he can change his budget any way he wants to," Dorman said. Martin is tentatively scheduled to deliver the speech to the General Assembly and release his spending plan Jan. 17.

Levine originally requested roughly $11 million. The AIDS task force suggested a $6.5 million increase that would provide $1.7 million for local health education programs; $240,000 for foster care for AIDS-infected children; $705,614 for individual care planning or "case management;" $350,000 to subsidize purchases of anti-viral drugs; $210,000 for support services; $175,000 for insurance assistance; $975,000 for treatment and education programs regarding the link between AIDS and intravenous drug use; and $306,000 for AIDS residences.

Levine said approving the group's funding requests would save money in the long run. But he and Flaherty said they recognize that money for new spending will be scarce next year.

Flaherty acknowledged DHR gave highest billing to programs for the elderly, environmental protection, curbing infant mortality and helping poor children.

Flaherty also urged officials in the public and private sectors to do all they can to implement the task force's recommendations.

"These recommendations are long-range and far-reaching," he said. "They are important steps in a long war against AIDS that will involve our working together to both educate the public and assist those persons with AIDS." DHR has already implemented portions of the task force report that don't require spending increases, Levine said.

For example, the department has forwarded to Insurance Commissioner Jim Long recommendations for requiring health insurance policies to include services for AIDS patients such as reimbursement for home health, hospice, skilled nursing, respite and medical day care.

Pesticide Changes

RALEIGH (AP) — New warning signs, written notices and a 300-foot buffer zone around pesticide spraying sites are among proposals recommended by the Legislative Committee on Pest Control.

"What we did was barely scratch the surface of the problems," said Rep. Bertha Holt, D-Alamance, committee chairman. "Heaven knows we need to control our pests and I'm sympathetic to the farmers. But there comes a time when you have to find out how far you can go."

The Pesticide Board already has rejected proposals that a 100-foot buffer around spraying sites be tripled and that residents be notified in writing of spraying. The board rejected the changes as impractical and cumbersome after opposition from the chemical, agricultural and forestry industries at hearings last spring.

Nonetheless, Ms. Holt said she will sponsor legislation to make those changes.

New Show For Bakkers

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Jim Bakker, indicted this month with three former PTL associates for misusing millions of dollars at the television ministry, will return to television next week with his wife, Tammy, a Charlotte newspaper reported today.

The show will be broadcast from the living room of the Bakker home starting Monday, sources told The Charlotte Observer. It will be carried by at least six independent television stations across the nation, sources said.

Bakker has not had a regular TV show since he resigned from PTL in March 1987 amid questions about his 1980 sexual encounter with Jessica Hahn and payments to keep her quiet. Bakker could not be reached for comment.

Sources familiar with his plans said the Bakkers — cohosts of PTL's old "Jim and Tammy Show" — are making their comeback on live television.

The programs — to be broadcast live from the Bakkers' living room near Pineville Monday through Friday — will be carried on stations in Albany, N.Y.; Atlanta; Chico, Calif.; Los Angeles; Philadelphia; and San Diego, another source said.

Pipeline Lawsuit

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) — Mecklenburg County has filed suit against Virginia Beach, claiming the city must get county approval before using water from Lake Kerr, a reservoir next to Lake Gaston.

Virginia Beach officials say county approval is not necessary because Lake Kerr, which is partly in Mecklenburg, is owned and controlled by the Army Corps of Engineers.

A hearing is set for Feb. 9 in Mecklenburg Circuit Court. Virginia Beach is asking that the case be moved to Virginia Beach.

This is the second lawsuit filed against Virginia Beach over the Lake Gaston pipeline project. The first, filed by North Carolina and the Roanoke River Basin Association in 1984, challenges the Army Corps of Engineers' approval of the project. The suit is still pending in federal court in Raleigh.

A third lawsuit may be filed next year if Brunswick County rejects the pipeline. In that case, Virginia Beach will sue to overturn Brunswick's decision. Virginia Beach needs Brunswick's approval because Lake Gaston is partly in that county and the intake vent would be in that part of the lake.

Virginia Beach wants to build an 85-mile pipeline from Lake Gaston to reservoirs in Suffolk. The water would be pumped through the Norfolk treatment plant to homes and businesses in Virginia Beach, Chesapeake, Franklin and Isle of Wight County. By the year 2030, the pipeline would pump 60 million gallons a day.

Accessory Count

BREVARD (AP) — An Arden woman has been charged with being an accessory after the fact to the 1985 murder of a Hendersonville man who died after being robbed and locked in the trunk of his car, police said.

Mary C. Browder, 23, was apprehended by Buncombe County law officers in an Arden mobile home park.

Ms. Browder was charged with being an accessory after the fact to the Greenville, S.C., murder of A.R.M. Stroud, of Hendersonville.

Jesse Dean Allison, 22, of Hendersonville, was arrested Monday in Brevard and ordered held on a fugitive warrant in connection with Stroud's death. Allison faces charges in Greenville of murder, kidnapping and robbery.

Greenville County Sheriff's Department Detective Joe Wood told the Hendersonville Times-News that Stroud was robbed while he was in Greenville and was then forced to climb into the trunk of his own car. He was later found dead in the trunk. Officials determined that he died from a heart attack.

Two Are Charged

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A woman and her boyfriend have been charged in Richmond County in connection with the death of the woman's 11-month-old daughter, authorities say.

April Michelle Caulder died last week after being shaken in an attempt to stop her crying, Chief Deputy Dale Furr of the Richmond County Sheriff's Department said.

The child's mother, Jenny Lou Caulder, 20, of Rockingham, was charged Monday with contributing to the delinquency or neglect of a child. Her boyfriend, Albert Wayne Shepherd Jr., 20, also of Rockingham, was charged with involuntary manslaughter and with contributing to the delinquency or neglect of a child.

Shepherd was being held Wednesday in the Richmond County Jail on $1,000 bond. Ms. Caulder was being held on $500 bond.

The death occurred after the baby accidentally burned herself Dec. 19 on an electric range being used to heat the house in Rockingham, Furr said.

The burn blistered, and the baby cried, Furr said. He said someone shook the baby to stop her crying.

"The autopsy revealed that it (the baby) died from other than natural causes," he said. "It died from shake syndrome. When the baby was shook, damage was done to its spinal cord and brain."

The baby was taken to Richmond Memorial Hospital, then to Duke Medical Center, where she died, Furr said.

Schlesinger On Energy Post List Of Nominees

By Guy Darst
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — James Schlesinger, who has served in the Cabinet under three presidents, is among nearly a dozen people rumored to be in contention for the post of energy secretary in the Bush administration.

Schlesinger would fit the president-elect's desire for someone with a nuclear background to tackle the department's massive cleanup and modernization at its 17 weapons plants in 12 states.

At least 10 other names still were circulating around Washington's rumor mills Thursday.

Schlesinger's was a new name as a possible selection. Two other candidates, Lee M. Thomas, administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, and former congressman Henson Moore of Louisiana, also remained in leading contention.

Now a consultant and staff member of the Center for Strategic and International Studies, Schlesinger served as Defense Secretary under President Nixon and was dismissed from that job President Ford in 1975. His resignation was one of a handful President Carter accepted in 1979 after demanding resignations from the entire Cabinet and top echelons of his administration.

Schlesinger, who was traveling Thursday, was let go by Ford because of budget differences and, according to one account, because he presumed to lecture the president, a congressional veteran, on how to deal with a House committee chairman Ford had known for decades.

Two other Democratic names to the surface: John Deutch, undersecretary in Schlesinger's days at the Energy Department and now provost of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and John Ahearne, former chairman of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and now chairman of Herrington's Advisory Committee on Nuclear Facility Safety.

Other names mentioned are:

- Martha Hesse, deregulation-oriented chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, and former assistant energy secretary for administration.
- Peter Johnson, former head of the Bonneville Power Administration and the candidate backed by Sen. James McClure of Idaho, senior Republican on the Energy Committee.
- Retiring Sen. Dan Evans of Washington, who has been opposed by McClure.
- Former Gov. Lamar Alexander of Tennessee.
- Air Force Lt. Gen. James A. Abrahamson, retiring head of the Pentagon's Star Wars space-defense program and former head of both the F-16 fighter and the space shuttle programs.
- Former Rep. James Broyhill of North Carolina, senior Republican on the House Energy and Commerce Committee before losing a Senate race in 1986.

Marcos' Condition Said Guarded

By Steve Elliott
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HONOLULU — Former Philippine president Ferdinand Marcos was hospitalized in guarded condition with possible congestive heart failure or pneumonia, hospital officials said.

Marcos, who contends he is too ill to travel to New York for arraignment on racketeering charges, entered St. Francis Medical Center on Thursday for the second time in three weeks.

"They (the attending physicians) have diagnosed him as a possible congestive heart failure or pneumonia," said St. Francis nursing supervisor Cindy Miller. Marcos, 71, was listed in guarded condition.

A leading Marcos supporter, said a priest administered the last rites to Marcos, but a Marcos spokesman could not provide confirmation.

Marcos is "very, very seriously ill," said the supporter, Friends of Marcos President Joe Lazo. "We are preparing a telegram to send to President Reagan and President-elect Bush, asking them to let him (Marcos) go home. That is his dying wish."

Marcos spokesman Gemmo Trinidad said he did not know if a priest had administered the sacrament of the sick, formerly known as extreme unction.

Marcos was brought to the hospital by ambulance at 4:55 p.m., said St. Francis spokeswoman Norma Kop.

Trinidad said he was with Marcos when he was taken to the hospital, but said he did not know why the decision was made to return Marcos to St. Francis.

"You'd better ask the doctors," Trinidad said in a telephone interview earlier Thursday. "All I know is he is in serious condition." He would not elaborate.

However, Marcos' private physician Dr. Azucena Ignacio, asked if his patient's condition was serious, replied, "We don't know yet."

Ms. Ignacio said Marcos' wife, Imelda, was at the hospital with her husband.

Marcos returned to his Makiki Heights residence Dec. 18 following a 9-day stay at St. Francis, where he was treated for congestive heart failure, his doctors said.

Ignacio and Marcos cardiologist Calvin Wong said upon his release that Marcos suffered from congestive heart failure, which means the heart is unable to pump the amount of blood required by the body.

A federal grand jury in New York City indicted Marcos and his wife, Imelda, on Oct. 21, on racketeering charges. They were accused of looting more than $100 million from their homeland to buy art and real estate in Manhattan.

Mrs. Marcos later went to New York to plead innocent to the charges and is free on $5 million bail.

Marcos claimed he was too ill to travel to New York. His arraignment has been postponed indefinitely.

The Marcoses fled to Hawaii in February 1986 following his ouster in a civilian-military revolt.

Analyst: Candidacy May Backfire

By James Litke
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — A political analyst says Alderman Timothy Evans' third-party bid for mayor may wind up accomplishing the very things he hoped to avoid — splitting the black vote and returning a Daley to city hall.

Evans announced Thursday that he was withdrawing from February's Democratic primary to run in the general election as the candidate of the Harold Washington Party, which he created and named after Chicago's first black mayor.

That leaves Mayor Eugene Sawyer, Evans' chief black rival, in a primary showdown against Richard M. Daley, Cook County prosecutor and son of the late Mayor Richard J. Daley, who ruled Chicago for more than two decades.

Evans repeatedly said he was not endorsing Sawyer in the primary, but urged supporters to "do whatever they can do to defeat Daley," who according to early polls is the front-runner among announced candidates.

Evans may ultimately regret both positions, said Eugene Kennedy, a Loyola University professor, author of a biography of the elder Daley and a veteran political observer.

"He urged black voters to keep away from Sawyer," Kennedy said. "Then he made repeated references to Daley as though he were somehow evil ... and that all whites, by implication, were somehow 'the enemy.'"

"On the one hand, he weakens the very cause he purports to support — a black mayor for Chicago. On the other, he's galvanized the (white ethnic) opposition," Kennedy said.

Evans, 45, was Washington's floor leader in the City Council and has tried since the late mayor's death to portray himself as heir to Washington's legacy as a reformer.

Sawyer, 54, was chosen to succeed Washington by many of the same City Council members who were Washington's staunchest opponents. He and Evans have waged a costly struggle for the loyalty of the black community.

Evans said some believed Sawyer should have withdrawn from the primary "because it is clear from all the available evidence I am the choice of an overwhelming majority of our coalition."

"But as he has refused to do so, I will make that move — secure in the knowledge that I am at once serving, uniting and leading our great coalition on a course that will result in a historic victory," he added.

The Daley and Sawyer camps expressed little surprise at Evans' move Thursday.

"Mr. Daley has said all along that what's important are the issues — crime, education and health — not who's in or who's out or what the numbers are," said Daley spokeswoman Marj Halperin.

"Mayor Sawyer did not expect Tim Evans' endorsement in the primary and he'd have been surprised if there was one," said a Sawyer spokesman who refused to be identified.

"The mayor felt all along the important thing was to remove the onus from both himself and Mr. Evans of splitting the black vote," the spokesman said. That was everybody's greatest fear and that has now been removed."

Reporter Says Late Justice Was Source

CHICAGO (AP) — Reporter Bob Woodward has revealed that the late U.S. Supreme Court Justice Potter Stewart was the confidential source for his best-selling insider's look at the high court, "The Brethren."

In an interview published in the February issue of Playboy magazine, The Washington Post reporter said he was willing to identify Stewart because the former justice is dead. Stewart died in 1985 at age 70.

"I'm revealing his name now, for the first time because it's worth showing that there really are sources, people do talk," Woodward said.

"It's not some reporter's imagination or some letter that comes in the mail with no address, typed on a standard typewriter," Woodward said. "You have relationships, you nurture them and they pay off."

Woodward said he met Stewart at a party in the spring of 1977. "The Brethren" was published in 1979.

Although Woodward was willing to identify his main source for "The Brethren," which he wrote with reporter Scott Armstrong, he told Playboy he was not ready to identify "Deep Throat."

"Deep Throat" was the key informer Woodward and Carl Bernstein used for their Pulitzer Prize-winning articles uncovering the 1972 Watergate scandal in Post and for their subsequent best-selling book,

"All the President's Men."

"As you know, I'm not going to discuss the identity of Deep Throat or any other of my confidential sources who are still alive," Woodward said.

Woodward said Stewart turned out to have "real intellectual disdain" for former Chief Justice Warren Burger and former Attorney General John Mitchell, both appointees of President Richard Nixon.

Woodward said Stewart's animosities became clear as he worked on the book, and were probably the reason Stewart allowed him to have a behind-the-scenes look at the high court.

Coast Guard Continues Search For Crewmen

By Sonni Efron
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — The Coast Guard searched through the night for six crewmen missing from a Bermuda-bound container ship that sank in rough seas and gale-force winds in the North Atlantic, leaving two seamen dead.

"We continue the search as long as there's a chance of finding them alive," Coast Guard Petty Officer Ken Arbogast said Thursday night. "We haven't found the second life raft" from the ship.

Three crewmen were plucked from the sea Thursday after the 254-foot Lloyd Bermuda sank Wednesday night. A fourth was found dead and a fifth died on the way to the hospital.

Two of the rescued men were transferred to the Coast Guard cutter Tamaroa and were helping searchers with information on what happened to their ship, Arbogast said. A Coast Guard C-130 airplane also took part in the search.

The Lloyd Bermuda sank about 160 miles south of Nantucket and 200 miles east of New Jersey when its cargo shifted in weather that was "nothing short of horrendous," said Coast Guard Lt. Paul Wolf.

Wolf said there was hope for the missing crewmen because the ship went down on the edge of the Gulf Stream, where warm currents mix with frigid Atlantic waters. Two of the rescued crewmen did not suffer serious hypothermia.

The ship's captain was American and the crew was a mix of nationalities, John W. Moore of the Meyer Agencies Ltd., the ship's agent in Bermuda, said in a telephone interview from Hamilton.

The Lloyd Bermuda, registered in Cyprus, made a run to Bermuda every week, and had left Port Elizabeth, N.J., Tuesday night with a cargo including food and building materials, Moore said.

Powerful winds hit the East Coast on Wednesday as a cold front moved swiftly through the area and out to sea.

Around 7:10 p.m., the ship's cargo shifted. The captain issued a distress call, then called back a few minutes later to say he was abandoning ship, Wolf said.

The ship capsized and began to sink within five minutes of the order to abandon ship, said Coast Guard Lt. Mike Humphreys, who spoke to one of the survivors. The men took to two life rafts.

Rescuers began searching a 700-square-mile area for survivors but were hindered by heavy rains, 40- to 45-mph winds and 25-foot seas.

Shortly after midnight Wednesday, a Coast Guard jet spotted three people in the water waving flashlights. Sailor aboard the merchant ship Eagle pulled two men from the water, but the third "slipped from his life jacket, fell back into the water and was not seen again," Wolf said.

The two survivors were treated for mild hypothermia.

Around 4 a.m., a Coast Guard frogman from a helicopter rescued two men drifting in the water without life rafts.

They were flown to Falmouth Hospital on Cape Cod, but one man was pronounced dead, apparently of hypothermia, a hospital spokeswoman said.

The other man, identified as Dario

Macio-Lopez, 35, was treated for hypothermia, spokeswoman Marie Johnson said.

At first light Thursday, a Navy pilot spotted what appeared to be a man waving from a life raft. But when rescuers reached the raft, they found nobody.

Three hours later, rescuers spotted another man but, because of choppy seas and floating debris, could not get close enough to tell if he was alive. By the time a rescue helicopter reached him four hours later, the man was floating face down.

Report: Fraud Probe Now Targets Steinberg

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The government has widened its probe of alleged securities fraud at Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., to include corporate raider Saul Steinberg, according to report published today.

The investigation of Steinberg, one of Drexel's junk bond clients, focuses on an alleged "stock parking" scheme involving Drexel's junk bond chief Michael Milke, The Washington Post reported.

In "stock parking" an investor hides his ownership of stock by placing the shares with someone else and agreeing to buy them back at some other time.

The newspaper, citing sources it did not identify, said government investigators are examining whether Steinberg four years ago hid stock he owned in Wickes Cos. through an insurance firm he controlled.

Wickes, an automotive, industrial and home furnishings company, was then operating under federal bankruptcy law and New York laws prohibit insurance companies from owning stock in firms under bankruptcy proceedings.

The newspaper also said another Drexel junk bond employee, Carl Deremer, who was responsible for Steinberg's accounts, has been told by federal prosecutors he likely will be indicted on criminal fraud charges. The Beverly Hills, Calif.-based Milken and other Drexel employees also reportedly face possible indictment.

Steinberg gained prominence as one of a new breed of corporate raiders on Wall Street in his attempts to take over such companies as Walt Disney Co., Quaker States Corp. and Penn Central Corp. Steinberg bought shares in those companies through another firm, Reliance Group Holdings Inc.

Drexel last week agreed to plead guilty to six felony counts and pay $650 million in penalties to end a U.S. attorney's securities fraud investigation of the company. The company still faces investigation by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

UCB Lecturer Cleared After Boy Says He Wrote Threat

By Richard Benke
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — A college lecturer was cleared of charges he made a bomb threat on an American Airlines flight after an 11-year-old boy admitted he wrote the note and left it on the aircraft, says an apologetic FBI.

Charges against Peter W. Canning, a lecturer in literature at the University of California-Berkeley, were dropped Thursday after the boy told the FBI he wrote the note.

Canning, 40, found the note on an American Airlines jetliner Tuesday, gave it to a flight attendant and was arrested by the FBI.

The FBI's top New Mexico agent, Jim Nelson, said he "regrets any inconvenience and embarrassment suffered by Mr. Canning."

"However, the investigation fully warranted the arrest of Canning, which occurred after consulting with the U.S. attorney's office in Albuquerque," Nelson said.

Canning, a Harvard doctoral candidate, could not be reached for comment because he was driving home to Berkeley when the charges were dropped by U.S. Magistrate Sumner G. Buell in Albuquerque. He had been released on his own recognizance the previous day.

Canning had insisted all along that the note fell into his lap from his seat tray while lunch was being served on the flight from San Francisco to Dallas. He handed the note to a flight attendant, who notified the pilot.

The plane was diverted to Albuquerque and was searched for about four hours with bomb-sniffing dogs.

The boy came forward with his parents Thursday, and admitted writing the note during a flight to San Francisco earlier Tuesday, said FBI spokesman Douglas Beldon. The note was put on the pullout tray before it was stowed away, he said.

The note said: "Read this. There are guns pointed at you. If you want to live, read the letter underneath and do what it says. This is a bomb scare. Read this. PS If you do what the letter says, and have everyone else do it, you will live. PS If you don't, you are history!! There are bombs planted all over this airplane and there is a gun pointed at your head. Take your wallet and throw it in the aisle now."

At the time of the arrest, federal agents said there were similarities between Canning's handwriting and the note.

Agents determined that the boy sat in the seat later occupied by Canning, Beldon said. He said the U.S. attorney's office in San Francisco declined to prosecute the boy.

Canning's attorney, Ray Twohig, had said the arrest resulted from FBI confusion. "I'm glad they've cleared up their confusion," he said Thursday.

Asked if the crash of a Pan Am jumbo jet in Scotland last week might have affected the way this case was handled, Twohig said: "Sure, everybody was jumpy."

French Girls Back Home After Hostage Ordeal

By Elaine Ganley
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — Two French girls held hostage in Lebanon for 13 months by a Palestinian terrorist group rejoined their father and went into seclusion today in France.

The long journey home took Marie-Laure Betille, 7, and her sister Virginie, 6, by boat from Lebanon to Libya, where they were turned over to French officials and flown to France late Thursday.

Left behind in the hands of Abu Nidal's Fatah Revolutionary Council, a Palestinian guerrilla organization, was their mother, Jacqueline Valente; a baby sister born in captivity; and five Belgians also seized aboard the yacht Silco off Israel's occupied Gaza Strip.

Their captors, who have been blamed for numerous terrorist attacks, said the girls' freedom was a gift to France from the children of the yearlong Palestinian uprising in the Israeli-occupied territories.

Marie-Laure, Virginie and their father, Pascal Betille, arrived in a French government plane at a secluded military base near Marseille, a Foreign Ministry spokeswoman said. They were then taken to a hospital for checkups and then to a secret location for sleep.

The girls, dressed in dark robes, their shoulders draped with plaid Arab scarves, had been reunited with their father hours earlier in the Libyan capital of Tripoli.

Betille's lawyer, Yves Massiani, said Thursday night that the children had said nothing of their detention, "talking only of their boat trip."

Libyan leader Col. Moammar Gadhafi called for the girls' release on Christmas Eve, and on two occasions they were reported freed and en route home. The Palestinian group has ties to Libya.

"France ... welcomes this humanitarian gesture in appropriate measure," the Foreign Ministry said. "It thanks foreign authorities who contributed," it added without elaboration.

A statement in Beirut by Fatah

Revolutionary Council spokesman Walid Khaled said the girls' release was "a gift to the French authorities ... in the name of the children of Palestine, the children of the Revolution of the Stones on the occasion of Christmas and New Year."

Khaled said Saturday the girls would be freed following a call from Gadhafi. In the following days, he said they were en route home.

But when there was no sign of the children, the initial suspense turned to confusion and despair for relatives who spent the Christmas weekend in Beirut seeking the children's release.

There was no immediate comment from the children's relatives about their arrival.

A later dispatch by the official Libyan news agency reported a call from Gadhafi to "liberation movements" to free all hostages.

"Once again, I ask the Fatah Revolutionary Council and the rest of the liberation movements in the Middle East to respond to my appeal for the release of the remaining hostages on this holy occasion," JANA quoted him as saying. "Holy occasion" was apparently a reference to Christmas.

"Hope disappointed after hope have generated a storm of controversy over business and political ethics. Prosecutors also are investigating possible bribery.

Leaders of the opposition Clean Government Party and the Democratic Socialist Party said Hasegawa's resignation was only natural, while the Communist Party called for the entire Cabinet to resign and new parliamentary elections.

the fight for the other hostages."

Fatah-Revolutionary Council announced the capture of the hostages in a yacht off the Gaza Strip on Nov. 8, 1987. It accused the captives of spying for Israel, a charge Israel and the family has denied.

The group has been blamed for dozens of hijackings, bombings and assassinations since it broke with PLO chief Yasser Arafat in 1976.

Ms. Valente, who is separated from the father of Marie-Laure and Virginie, gave birth to a third child in captivity and said in a recent videotape that she is pregnant again.

The case is considered unrelated to the 15 Westerners held hostage in Lebanon by pro-Iranian factions.

Justice Minister Latest Casualty For Takeshita

By Terril Jones
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — In a major blow to Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita, the man appointed to investigate a widening scandal resigned today after saying he had accepted political donations from the company at the center of the controversy.

Takeshita today named a political outsider, former Supreme Court Judge Masami Takatsuji, 78, to replace Justice Minister Takashi Hasegawa.

Hasegawa announced he was stepping down just three days after Takeshita appointed him to a new Cabinet supposedly untainted by a stock-dealing scandal that had already forced the resignation of 17 politicians and business leaders.

Opposition parties and analysts say Takeshita should follow the lead of those leaders and resign.

Hasegawa's resignation, which occurred the day after Takeshita publicly reaffirmed his support for him, was the second Cabinet casualty. Finance Minister Kiichi Miyazawa stepped down on Dec. 9.

Takeshita made no comment on the resignation of Hasegawa, 76.

Takatsuji, a constitutional expert and former bureaucrat, served as a Supreme Court justice from 1973 to 1980. He is an unusual choice as a Cabinet member because he is not a career politician, the background of nearly all Cabinet ministers.

Takeshita apparently decided it was necessary to go outside politics to find someone without links to the Recruit Co., the information conglomerate at the heart of the scandal over charges it sold unlisted stocks in a subsidiary to scores of politicians and business leaders at bargain prices.

Asked at a news conference today if he had any connection to the Recruit affair, the new justice minister said: "None at all."

"I don't really have anything to say about Recruit," Takatsuji said. "My attitude toward it is no different from that of the people in general."

His predecessor had been given a mandate to reform political ethics and head the legal probe of the Recruit scandal. But one day after Hasegawa's appointment, it was disclosed that Recruit had given money for 12 years to a group that financed his campaign and political activities.

"There is nothing wrong with politicians accepting donations made from the good will of their supporters," Hasegawa told reporters earlier today.

"However, as minister in charge of clearing up the Recruit problem in the Takeshita administration, which is trying to heighten trust in government, it is regrettable that I received donations from Recruit," he said.

"I apologize deeply and resign from my post as justice minister."

The scandal has engulfed the Liberal Democrats, as senior party lawmakers or their aides purchased shares in the subsidiary before the shares were offered publicly and later sold them at large tax-free profits.

The transactions were legal but have generated a storm of controversy over business and political ethics. Prosecutors also are investigating possible bribery.

Leaders of the opposition Clean Government Party and the Democratic Socialist Party said Hasegawa's resignation was only natural, while the Communist Party called for the entire Cabinet to resign and new parliamentary elections.

"Takeshita should step down because he is connected to the Recruit affair himself and as long as he is appointing Cabinet ministers, government won't be clean," said Masayuki Fukuoka, a professor of political science at Komazawa University in Tokyo.

"There is no way for the Takeshita administration to regain its public support as more people will probably be arrested as the Recruit investigation advances next year," he said.

It is widely perceived that the premier should consider resigning when public support dips below 20 percent, Fukuoka said.

A newspaper poll this month found Takeshita's public support was 18 percent, down from 30 percent when he took office 13 months ago.

An aide to Takeshita and one of his relatives also profited in the stock transactions, but the prime minister has denied any personal involvement.

"Takeshita cannot escape the responsibility of political reform that he has pledged, and he should resign," said Jiro Kamijima, professor of government at Tokyo's Rissho University.

"The entire parliament has been hijacked (by Recruit)."

Hasegawa confirmed Thursday that his political support organization received $46,000 from Recruit over the last 12 years, but Hasegawa said he had no knowledge of the donations.

Other new Cabinet members have received donations from Recruit, including the agriculture and economic planning agency chiefs and Chief Cabinet Secretary Keizo Obuchi, who has acknowledged his political support group received monthly donations of $160 from Recruit.

Soviet Refusenik, Family Will Be Able To Emigrate

By Andrew Katell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Chicago-born Abe Stolar said today his family has received permission to emigrate and that he would finally be leaving the Soviet Union for the first time in more than a half-century.

"There's no feeling yet. It's just a big mess thinking of all the things we have to do," Stolar said in perfect English in a telephone call.

The long struggle came to an end when Stolar's daughter-in-law received word she would be allowed to join the rest of the family in emigrating. Stolar, his wife and son received exit visas in 1975 but his daughter-in-law was not given a visa, so the family decided not to leave.

Stolar's case has been the subject of negotiations between the United States and the Soviets for years and its resolution was another in a series of Kremlin moves to improve the country's human rights record.

Numerous prominent refuseniks, or Jews denied permission to emigrate, have since Mikhail S. Gorbachev took power in March 1985.

Stolar, a 77-year-old Jew, has not been out of the Soviet Union since his parents, ardent American Communists, brought him here in 1931.

His parents left the American Depression behind to help build the new Soviet Union, but in 1937, his father disappeared in one of dictator Josef Stalin's bloody purges.

Stolar, who still holds U.S. citizenship, served with the Red Army during World War II and afterward became an announcer and translator for Radio Moscow.

"I have news now," an excited Stolar said in beginning the phone call.

Burma Forces Take Outposts

RANGOON, Burma (AP) — Government forces have recaptured a strategic area from Karen insurgents after three months of fighting that claimed at least 444 lives, a government spokesman said today.

The government launched its offensive at Methawaw on Dec. 16 and retook the three outposts on Christmas Eve, spokesman Kyaw Sann told a weekly news briefing.

The Karens, probably the strongest of the dozen guerrilla groups fighting the government, claims to control most of the 1,350-mile frontier with Thailand. This ethnic minority group has been fighting for greater autonomy since 1949.

Until government forces first captured it in 1984, the Methawaw area served as a key transport and communications route for the Karens. In that area, they also acquired funds for their insurgency by taxing those responsible for the smuggling of narcotics between Burma and Thailand.

The Karens seized three of the five government outposts there last September but the government then sent in large numbers of reinforcements.

The spokesman said the two sides fought 85 "major battles" and 145 other engagements in three months. The area is on the west bank of the Moei River separating Burma and Thailand, and 130 miles northwest of Rangoon.

He said 240 government soldiers, including 12 officers, were killed and 922 wounded.

The spokesman said the bodies of 204 rebels had been counted as of Saturday. Seized from them, he said, was a large amount of automatic weapons, hand grenades and ammunition.

Fireworks Explosion Kills 11, Injures 20

BOCAUE, Philippines (AP) — Eleven people were killed and 20 others injured when an explosion blew up a house where illegal fireworks were being made, police said today.

About 10 people were making firecrackers and sparklers late Thursday in a house in this town 15 miles north of Manila when two barrels of powder ignited, destroying the residence and four others in the neighborhood.

The explosion, heard several miles away, triggered a fire that damaged five other homes before authorities could extinguish the blaze.

Police said five of the dead, including three who were dismembered, were killed instantly, while the rest died in nearby hospitals.

Such explosions are annual occurrences in Bulacan province, the center of the country's flourishing but illegal fireworks industry. Two similar accidents killed 15 people last year.

"I am appalled by this kind of destruction," said Bulacan Gov. Roberto Pagdanganan, who visited the scene early today.

Pagdanganan said the explosion occurred only about an hour after he warned Bocaue authorities to crack down on the industry, outlawed in the mid-1960s after a series of deadly explosions and fires.

Don't Call Him God

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW DELHI, India — You can call him Shree. And you can call him Rajneesh. But Oregon's former self-styled guru of wealth and free love, Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh, says until further notice that you don't need to call him God.

Rajneesh announced Thursday he has dropped the honorific title of Bhagwan, a Hindi word meaning God.

Many Indians resented Rajneesh calling himself Bhagwan because, in Hinduism, no mortal is equal to God.

"I have been calling myself 'Bhagwan' just as a challenge to this country," the 37-year-old who once taught philosophy in India said in the statement from his new commune in Poona, western India.

"I don't want to be called 'Bhagwan.' Enough is enough. The joke is over," he said.

Rajneesh was deported three years ago from the United States after he pleaded guilty to immigration fraud and closed his 64,000-acre commune of Rajneeshpuram in central Oregon. Followers had bestowed dozens of Rolls Royces on their revered guide of Eastern religion, pop psychology and free love.

After roaming in search of a new sanctuary for a claimed 500,000 faithful worldwide, he moved his cult to a six-acre commune in Poona, a city of nearly 1 million residents about 80 miles southeast of Bombay.

But despite Thursday's announcement, the guru did not entirely renounce claims to divinity.

He told 10,000 people in Poona, "From today onwards, you can look at me as 'Gautama the Buddha.' And by accepting Gautama the Buddha as my very soul I go out of the Hindu fold completely."

Gautama Buddha, born in India about 500 B.C., renounced a title too. Born a prince, he gave up nobility to launch a new religion — Buddhism.

Christmas Trees Back As Cuba Eases Stance Toward Religion

By George Gedda
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAVANA — Christmas trees have reappeared in homes and social clubs after a long absence, the latest sign of a softening in the attitude of the officially atheist government toward the Roman Catholic church.

"I considered it a tradition that couldn't be erased," said Enrique Lopez Oliva, who teaches religion at the University of Havana and also edits a newsletter on church issues.

At a social club, a pine tree adorned with Christmas lights sits a few feet from the statue of one of the martyrs of the Cuban Revolution. But the great majority of the Christmas trees are found in private homes and occupy an out-of-the-way place invisible to passers-by. This Pennsylvania-sized nation of 10 million people, the least religious of any in Latin America, branded Yuletide celebrations as a "bourgeois prejudice" after the 1959 Communist takeover, Lopez said.

One reason: The government felt the manpower needed for the winter sugar harvest should not be diverted by holiday celebrations. That problem has become less acute with mechanization.

Last year, several Cubans displayed a Christmas tree, and the old tradition picked up considerable momentum this year.

Putting up a Christmas tree can be a chore since none is sold commercially and often they must be dug up from wooded areas, no small task in a country with few private cars.

In addition, ornaments generally are available only if they were stashed away — and not discarded — when the government began discouraging Christmas observances.

Several Cubans said Christmas always had been considered more of an occasion for family gatherings and gift-giving than a religious festival.

Still, even the limited Yuletide observation is a far cry from a few years ago, when the only acknowledgement of the holiday were the signs in stores reserved for foreigners: "December is gift-buying month."

This was a subtle attempt by the government to earn dollars by getting foreign visitors to buy Christmas presents in Cuba, Lopez said. Cuban authorities have become much more accommodating toward the church as part of an effort to improve the country's image abroad.

Follow Conscience

CHICAGO (AP) — Catholics are supposed to follow their consciences, even if that means defying church teachings, says Catholic psychologist Sidney Callahan.

Ms. Callahan of Mercy College in Dobbs Ferry, N.Y., says in the monthly U.S. Catholic that the church should be considered a guide, teacher and counselor and "ultimately you have to follow your conscience."

"In fact, according to Saint Thomas Aquinas (great, medieval Catholic theologian) it is better to be excommunicated than to go against your conscience."

Religion Writers Select Swaggart Scandal Top Story

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MINNEAPOLIS — The defrocking of TV evangelist Jimmy Swaggart after he allegedly paid a prostitute to pose naked and talk dirty was the top religion story of 1988, says a national poll of religion writers released today.

Swaggart was also picked as the religion newsmaker of the year in the poll of the Religion Newswriters Association's 200-plus active members, who write for newspapers, magazines and news services. Forty-three members responded.

Swaggart stayed out of the pulpit for three months after tearfully confessing to an unspecified sin. But he refused to accept a one-year suspension imposed on him by the Assemblies of God denomination and resigned from the ministry the day his defrocking was announced in April.

Another television evangelist, Jim Bakker, also figured in the news in 1988, but his indictment this month by a federal grand jury on charges he misused millions of dollars from his PTL ministry came too late in the year to be included in the poll.

The protest campaign against showings of the controversial movie "The Last Temptation of Christ" ranked second in the poll. Evangelical and fundamentalist Christians denounced the film as blasphemous.

Third was the election of Barbara Harris as suffragan (assistant) bishop of the Massachusetts Episcopal Diocese, making her the first woman bishop in the worldwide Anglican Communion.

The other top 10 religion stories, in order, were:

- Two religious leaders, Pat Robertson and Jesse Jackson, wage aggressive but unsuccessful campaigns for presidential nominations; George Bush elected with support from the religious right.
- Reform policies help ease some religious restrictions in the Soviet Union as celebrations marking the millennium of Christianity there are attended by spiritual dignitaries from 100 nations.
- Scientific tests find the Shroud of Turin, long venerated as the burial cloth of Jesus, to be medieval in origin.
- The Operation Rescue anti-abortion group sponsors demonstrations blocking entrances to abortion clinics, with some 2,000 protesters arrested in 27 cities.
- Rebel Roman Catholic Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre consecrates bishops in defiance of Rome and is excommunicated.
- The National Council of Churches, in a financial crisis, calls for another reorganization and hints at forming a broader ecumenical structure including Roman Catholic and evangelical churches.
- Orthodox Jewish religious parties demanding controversial amendment to the Law of Return appear to hold balance of power after election in Israel.
- The poll was conducted by Willmar Thorlerson of Minneapolis, a past president of the Religion Newswriters Association.

Peace Message

WASHINGTON (AP) — Respect for the rights of minorities in increasingly international societies is cited in a 1989 World Day of Peace message as a key to achieving peace.

Theme of the day, observed Jan. 1, is: "To Build Peace, Respect Minorities."

A Vatican-originated message, issued by the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, says most countries now include minorities that seek to maintain their identities, but at the same time societies grow more globally blended.

Reagans Want Quiet Life With Activity

By Beverly Beyette and Betty Cuniberti
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — In 1981, when Ronald and Nancy Reagan left the comforts of the West Coast to become the quintessential Washington outsiders taking over the White House, Mrs. Reagan says she and her husband felt as if they had been put under a public microscope.

Their lives became more harried and less private than even they had expected.

Everywhere they went, there were crowds — admirers and detractors, members of the press and presidential security. Their friends were barraged with questions about the first family. The president and his wife even had matters of their personal health widely publicized during their illnesses and after the assassination attempt.

But after eight years of unrelenting pressure and scrutiny in the nation's capital, the Reagans now hope to return to a very different life in Southern California.

So how will the Reagans fit in when they come home to Los Angeles? Who will they see and what will they do? What do they want in their new lives in the Bel-Air neighborhood and at the Santa Barbara ranch?

Peace and quiet mostly, the first lady said.

"I know there's always going to be a little microscope (on us), but it won't be as concentrated as it is here," she said in a recent White House interview. "We won't have those television cameras at the ranch. We'll be spending most of the time at Bel-Air, but ... we'll go to the ranch."

The president and the first lady, however, also have made it clear that they hardly will disappear once they return to Los Angeles.

Mrs. Reagan plans to campaign in the fight against cancer and continue her war against drugs from an office in the Nancy Reagan Center at Phoenix House, a 150-bed residential drug treatment facility planned in suburban Los Angeles. The president will have his office in Fox Plaza in the Century City section, where part of his time will be spent working on the Reagan Library and Republican Party affairs.

Both Reagans will write autobiographies and give speeches.

They also will renew ties with friends in a Los Angeles social scene that has changed considerably in their eight-year absence.

And there promises to be a spate of social and official events — including a major Valentine's welcome home bash for Nancy Reagan — wedged comfortably between the Reagans' respites at the ranch in Santa Barbara, about 90 miles north of Los Angeles.

"The first thing, I want to get myself settled in the house and that takes a little time. But I'm going to be very involved at the drug center. Very. I worked awfully hard for 7½ years on that and I'm not about to give it up now."

Mrs. Reagan said that she was uncertain about whether she would go to the office on a daily or weekly basis.

"That'll all work itself out. I can't say how often I'll be there," she said. "But I'll be very involved. I'll be giving speeches, probably on two things: drugs and cancer. And probably life in the White House, I would guess."

Plans already are jelling for the Valentine's Day gala that will welcome Nancy Reagan home.

Good friend Erlenne (Mrs. Norman) Sprague is chairing what she promises will be "a fabulous event for Nancy," a luncheon in the Crystal Room of the Beverly Hills Hotel with Adolfo (one of Mrs. Reagan's favorite designers) presenting his spring collection.

The event is being sponsored by the Colleagues to Benefit the Children's Institute International for abused children and drug-addicted babies, and, Mrs. Sprague said: "We're expecting at least 400. Many of (Nancy's) good friends will be there."

Intimates say that they expect the Reagans, after a period of rest and quiet, to do "a good amount of socializing" within a circle of longtime friends that includes members of the president's one-time "kitchen Cabinet," the group largely responsible for his rise in Republican politics.

And "we wanted ours to be the first event," Mrs. Sprague said. "Remember, so many of the girls in this group are her very close personal friends."

Mrs. Sprague, who hosted the Distinguished Ladies Reception at the Kennedy Center in Washington in 1980 in honor of Nancy Reagan and Barbara Bush, said that tickets for the Feb. 14 luncheon, at $100, are "a very hot item."

The social set in which the Reagans move is composed to a great extent of self-made millionaires and their wives.

Close friends include William A. and Betty Wilson (he is a former ambassador to the Vatican); William French Smith, the former attorney general, and his wife, Jean; and Betsy Bloomingdale, widow of New York department store heir and Diners' Club magnate Alfred Bloomingdale.

Some of the Reagans' close friends have died during their eight years in Washington: Jack and Bunny Wrather and Justin Dart, among them.

Some of Nancy Reagan's time will probably be spent with author Bill Novak, who has been working with her at the White House on her autobiography, due for publication by Random House in the fall or winter of 1989.

Mrs. Reagan said that her book will encompass her entire life, going back to her childhood. She will explain, for the first time in detail, her interest in astrology. Also, she said, "I'll talk about staff and my so-called influence in the White House. I don't know whether you'll be shocked or not."

Reagan will be working closely with Edmund Morris, once Morris completes the second volume of his Teddy Roosevelt biography, on a presidential biography that Random House plans to publish in 1991, the year his 80th birthday will be observed.

Mrs. Reagan will make appearances on behalf of cancer awareness, a cause for which she has shown interest since undergoing removal of a cancerous breast in October 1987. (The president earlier had undergone surgery for colon cancer.)

But the Nancy Reagan Center will probably command the lion's share of her time, especially in fund-raising. "We expect that Mrs. Reagan is going to be actively involved," said Dr. Mitchell S. Rosenthal, president of the Phoenix House Foundation, which runs nine other drug treatment facilities in New York and California. "We plan that she will have an office there, that she will be there on a regular basis, that we will plan certain events around her."

The goal is for the center to open in summer 1989. Site acquisition and minor remodeling of the existing medical facility will take an estimated $10 million.

"To date, with both money in hand and pledges, we have about $4.5 million," Rosenthal said, adding that the Reagans' friend, Merv Griffin, who is chairing the campaign in Los Angeles, has raised "a large part" of that.

On Jan. 4, Barron Hilton will jump the gun by hosting a welcome-home party for the Reagans at the Beverly Hilton and is guaranteeing that, with help from the Conrad Hilton Foundation, if needed, the black-tie party will raise $1 million for the drug center. Griffin has lined up the entertainment, which will include Frank Sinatra and Don Rickles.

Meanwhile, the president in retirement will be involved with plans for the $43-million Ronald Reagan-Presidential Library, for which he helped break ground Nov. 21 on a 100-acre site in the Simi Valley, about 35 miles from downtown Los Angeles. William French Smith is chairman of the library foundation's board of directors, which has raised $34 million in private donations, $20 million of that in pledges.

The library, when it opens in 1991, will house official White House records and personal papers donated by the president and Nancy Reagan, as well as films and videotapes of the Reagan years.

On StarLine Tours' map of the stars' homes, 668 St. Cloud Road now carries the notation: "The Bel-Air Home of Ron and Nancy Reagan."

Theirs is the only star attraction on St. Cloud, said Gina Williamson, who staffs StarLine's booth at Mann's Chinese Theater in Hollywood, but the $1.25 guide also directs gawkers to once-or-present homes of Bill Cosby, James Stewart, Gene Kelly and Chevy Chase.

Vans carrying tourists up into Bel-Air, past tiled and turreted mansions discreetly tucked behind electric gates, slow as they pass the fork of St. Cloud and Bel-Air roads, to give the tourists a good look. And neighbors navigating the narrow, curving road in their Jaguars and BMWs slow to avoid hitting construction vehicles lined up outside 668.

But for the Reagans, who had hoped for an abundance of privacy in their new lives, all the current hustle and bustle near their new home — especially the gawking by tourists — ought not to be too disquieting.

StarLine's Williamson, for example, reports that most of their clients are Japanese and "no one is really that interested" in the Reagans. "They want to know where Michael Jackson lives and where Elvis Presley lived with Priscilla."

The Reagans should fit right into the block. Their new neighbors will not be overwhelmed by celebrity. As real estate agent Jeff Hyland of Hyland Alvarez Young put it, "He's just another president moving into the neighborhood," which is home to assorted entrepreneurs and millionaires such as Jerry Perrenchio, the movie mogul who will be the Reagans' only next-door neighbor.

Two years ago, Perrenchio — once Norman Lear's partner — bought for $13.5 million the Kirkeby Estate, best known as the Clampetts' home on "The Beverly Hillbillies." Of formidable size, it sits on a knoll behind gates guarded by a pair of stone lions.

President and Mrs. Reagan break ground for library

By contrast, the 7,192-square foot-home bought by 18 longtime friends as the Reagans' post-presidential residence is a modest, 50-ish shingle-roofed salmon-pink stucco ranch-style house on a split lot; at $2.5 million, it was picked up, Hyland said, for land value. The Reagans have a three-year lease with an option to buy or re-lease.

Escalating Los Angeles property values all but guarantee that the 18 investors, known collectively as Wall Management Services Inc., can sell 668 St. Cloud in three years at a tidy profit.

Marlin Fitzwater, the president's press secretary, has explained that, because a blind trust was set up for Reagan when he took office, "this lease allows them to make further decisions about the home once the president is out of office and has exact knowledge of (his) assets and income."

One Step At A Time For New Year

MRS. PHILLIPS

Dear Abby: Every year you publish some New Year's resolutions. I cut that column out and taped it on my bathroom mirror where I could read it every morning. I want you to know that it has helped me to become a better person. I am not saying that I kept every one of those resolutions every day, but I kept most of them, and they have now become habits that have made a remarkable improvement in my personality and character.

I hope you will run it every year. I'm sure it will benefit many others as it has me. — Never Too Old

Dear Never: My "resolutions" column has become an established annual tradition:

Dear Readers: These New Year's resolutions are based on the original credo of Alcoholics Anonymous. I have taken the liberty of using that theme with some variations of my own:

Dear Abby Abigail Van Buren

Just for today I will live through this day only, and not set far-reaching goals to try to overcome all my problems at once. I know I can do something for 12 hours that would appall me if I felt that I had to keep it up for a lifetime.

Just for today I will be happy. Abraham Lincoln said, "Most folks are about as happy as they make up their minds to be." He was right. I will not dwell on thoughts that depress me. I will chase them out of my mind and replace them with happy thoughts.

Just for today I will adjust myself to what is. I will face reality. I will correct those things that I can correct and accept those things I cannot correct.

Just for today I will improve my mind. I will not be a mental loafer. I will force myself to read something that requires effort, thought and concentration.

Just for today I will do something positive to improve my health. If I'm a smoker, I'll make an honest effort to quit. If I'm overweight, I'll eat nothing I know to be fattening. And I will force myself to exercise — even if it's only walking around the block or using the stairs instead of the elevator.

Just for today I'll do something I've been putting off for a long time. I'll finally write that letter, make that phone call, clean that closet or straighten out those dresser drawers.

Just for today, before I speak I will ask myself, "Is it true? Is it kind?" And if the answer to either of those questions is negative, I won't say it.

Just for today I will make a conscious effort to be agreeable. I will look as good as I can, dress becomingly, talk softly, act courteously and not interrupt when someone else is talking. Just for today I'll not improve anybody except myself.

Just for today I will have a program. I may not follow it exactly, but I will have it, thereby saving myself from two pests: hurry and indecision.

Just for today I will have a quiet half-hour to relax alone. During this time I will reflect on my behavior and get a better perspective on my life.

Just for today I will be unafraid. I will gather the courage to do what is right and take the responsibility for my own actions. I will expect nothing from the world, but I will realize that as I give to the world, the world will give to me.

Have a happy, healthy New Year. And pray for peace! — Love, Abby

GRIMESLAND — Michele Lee Medlin and Jeffrey Eugene Phillips, both of Loganville, Ga., were united in marriage Dec. 17.

Ray Smeltzer conducted the double-ring ceremony in Proctor Memorial Christian Church.

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James E. Medlin of Grimesland, the bride was given in marriage by her parents and escorted by her father. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Gene H. Phillips of Loganville. His father was best man.

Trina Gail Medlin of Grimesland was honor attendant for her sister. Bridesmaids included Gena Phillips of Loganville, sister of the bridegroom, Shannon Batts and Jennifer Vick, cousins of the bride, and Tammy Oakley, all of Greenville.

Crystal Batts of Greenville, cousin of the bride, was flower girl. Eric Phillips of Vanceboro, cousin of the bridegroom, was ring bearer.

Ushers were David Rouse and Eddie Cannon, both of Greenville, Donny Heath of Grimesland and Jessie Weaver of Loganville.

Organist Ruth Majette and vocalist Danny Sasser provided wedding music.

The bride wore a gown of white crystalline organza with a beaded high collar accented by V-shaped strings of beads, puffed sleeves and hand-sewn pearls on the bodice. The embroidered lace skirt had fluted ruffles and a scalloped train. Her waist-length veil of illusion, with pearl trim, was attached to a headpiece of embroidered lace and sequins. She carried a cascade bouquet of white flowers with blue roses and ribbons.

A reception was held in the church fellowship hall.

The couple is living in Loganville after a wedding trip to Gatlinburg, Tenn.

The bride graduated from D.H. Conley High School and is attending DeKalb Community College. She is employed by Hairshack in Loganville. The bridegroom graduated from Shiloh High School in Snellville, Ga. and is employed by L&M Service in Loganville.

The bride was given several showers and a bridesmaids breakfast. An after-rehearsal dinner was given by the bridegroom's parents.

Conley Tops Vance, 56-50 Vikings Advance To Finals Of Pitt County Tourney

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

In a game chocked full of dry spells, D.H. Conley managed to hit the gusher when it counted.

The Vikings advanced to the championship game of the Pitt County-Overton's-WNCT TV Holiday Basketball Tournament with a hard-fought 56-50 win over Henderson Vance.

Conley will now face J.H. Rose, a 46-45 winner over Farmville Central Thursday, in the championship game tonight at 9 p.m. Vance will square off against Farmville for third place in the tournament at 7 p.m.

Conley managed to build a 14-point lead in the first half when Vance went 13:32 with only one field goal.

Vance took a 6-4 lead with 6:17 left in the opening quarter when forward Andi Hicks connected on a layup. But following that basket, Vance scored only one other field goal until the 51 second mark of the half. During that span, Vance did make good on four free throws.

"We just didn't play very well at all," Vance coach Lucius Bullock said. "That's about all you can say about it. We didn't do the things that we're capable of doing. The players knew what they needed to do, they just didn't do it."

"They (Conley) put some good pressure on us, but we play against the press every time out, so that's no excuse," Bullock said. "You've got to be able to attack the press to have a successful team."

The key run for the Vikings, who improved to 6-2, came midway through the second quarter when they were nursing a 17-12 advantage.

Five free throws and scores from both Stacey Green, who finished with 11 points, and Paul Merritt pushed the lead out to 26-12 with 1:20 left in the first half.

Warren Hargrove, who scored 10 points, finally got Vance's offense untracked when he scored on a layup with 51 seconds left to trim the lead to 26-14. Hargrove then added another goal when he scored following a rebound with 25 seconds left to round out the scoring in the half and cut the Conley lead to 26-16.

The Vikings seemed ready to run away and hide in the third quarter in the early going.

Terry Williams, who led all scorers with 17 points, scored on a jumper inside with 6:19 to go in the period to stretch the lead to 30-18.

Following a Vance free throw by Hargrove, Green drilled a 3-pointer to push the Viking lead to 33-19 with 5:26 showing on the clock.

It was then time for Conley's drought.

Vance used the poor shooting and ball handling by the Vikings over the next three minutes of the quarter to cut the lead to 33-29.

"We had them right where we wanted them and then let them get back in it," Conley coach Cobby Deans said. "Our mistakes really hurt us. We were trying to force the tempo when we didn't need to."

Hargrove got the Vance run started when he slammed one home following a steal with 5:08 left in the period.

Rampants Hold Off Jags In Final Seconds By 46-45

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Officially it was only the semifinals, but Rose's basketball game against Farmville Central seemed much more important than that.

The contest lived up to its expectations as both team had chances to win in the final seconds, but it was Rose that seized the opportunity and took a 46-45 win in the nightcap game of the Pitt County-Overton's-WNCT TV Holiday Basketball Tournament Thursday night.

Johnny Ebron hit a jumper with 16 seconds remaining to give the Rampants a 46-44 lead. Rose then sweated out a last-moment Farmville hope when Jarvis Lang missed the back end of a one and one with one second remaining to leave the score at 46-45.

"The free throws at the end didn't lose the game for us," Farmville coach Mike Terrell said. "When you lose 46-45, there are a lot of ways you can win a game and a lot of ways you can lose."

The game went back and forth over the final quarter as neither team was able to sustain a lead.

With three minutes to go, Rose point guard James Teel hit a three-point basket to put his team ahead 44-40.

"He only scored eight points, but they were big points," Rose coach Jim Brewington said of Teel, who had two three-point baskets in the final period.

Teel soon exited the game, though, as picked his fourth and fifth fouls on consecutive plays.

Farmville turned the fouls into two points as Jarvis Lang and Morris Foreman each hit a free throw to make it 44-42 with 2:23 remaining.

After the teams traded missed shots and turnovers on the next two possessions, Farmville's George Burnette hit a jumper with 53 seconds remaining to tie the game at 44-44.

On Rose's next possession, Eric Edwards broke out of the Rampants' spread and tried to drive the lane only to run smack into Lang and Reggie Barrett, who blocked the shot and recovered it. Barrett was fouled with 29 seconds left but missed the front end of a one and one.

Given new life, Rose capitalized as Ebron drove in, pulled up and hit what would turn out to be the game winner.

"He's the only one that could penetrate," Brewington said. "He was kind of reluctant to shoot but he's a good shooter. He hit one like that earlier this year to win a game (over Eastern Wayne)."

On Farmville's final possession, William Carr misfired from the right side but Lang got the rebound and was fouled. He wished the first one but came up empty on his second attempt.

Rose came out strong early on as Carlester Crumpler had eight points in the first quarter to stake his team to an early 16-9 lead. But things slowed down in the second quarter as Rose went to its spread offense to try and pull the Jaguars out of a zone and into man-to-man coverage.

By the half, Farmville had pulled within 21-16.

That momentum carried over into the second half as Farmville outscored Rose 16-9 in the third quarter, keyed by two three-point baskets by Burnette who had all of his 11 points in the second half.

"I felt like in the first half when they did that it was to our advantage. It gave our guys time to reorganize," Terrell said. "They sat back on Jarvis and that gave George some open shots."

"The first half, I don't know what it was. We were trying too hard. They came out smoking. Crumpler hurt us a lot all night. I felt like we played much more solid offensively and defensively in the second half."

Crumpler led Rose with 17 points and was the only Rampant in double figures. Lang led Farmville with 17 points while Burnette joined him in double figures with 11.

Rose moves to 7-1 while Farmville drops to 6-2. The Rampants take on D.H. Conley in the championship game tonight at 9 p.m. while Farmville takes on Henderson Vance for third place at 7 p.m.

South Brunswick held on late to record a 44-43 win over North Pitt, while Ayden-Grifton topped Edenton Holmes 57-49.

The Cougars, who were coming off of 68-44 opening round loss to D.H. Conley, struggled all game long with North Pitt but managed to improve their record to 4-3 with the win.

South Brunswick was led in scoring by Vernon Battles, Grover Gore and Ron Harrison. All three players scored eight points.

North Pitt, which slips to 3-5 on the season, was led by a 14-point effort from Reggie Daniels, while Roosevelt Hines added 10.

In the other afternoon contest, Ayden-Grifton, which was coming off a lackluster 53-44 defeat at the hands of J.H. Rose, bounced back from an early deficit to control the Aces.

The Aces, 6-2 for the year, jumped out to a 16-8 lead by the end of the first quarter but couldn't hang on.

The Chargers, who are now 4-3 were led in scoring by Leon Dixon, who had 18 points. Guard Ronnell Peterson added 13 and James Woodard 12.

Edenton was led by Kelvin Holley's 16 points, while Jeff Leary chipped in 10.

Ferry Leads Duke Win; Reid Helps Heels Rally

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Danny Ferry scored 22 points to power No. 1 Duke to a victory over Cornell and J.R. Reid scored 17 in his first start of the season to help seventh-ranked North Carolina beat San Diego State as six Atlantic Coast Conference teams saw action.

The Blue Devils improved to 8-0 with the 94-59 victory over Cornell in Durham Thursday. North Carolina, 11-1, scored its ninth straight victory in beating the Aztecs 103-92 in San Diego. No. 17 Georgia Tech dropped an 80-75 decision to No. 4 Illinois in the semifinals of the Rainbow Classic in Honolulu.

In other action, Clemson beat Oregon 74-61 to reach the finals of the Far West Classic in Portland, Ore. Maryland advanced to the finals of the Sun Bowl Basketball Classic in El Paso, Texas with a 74-65 victory over Lamar and Virginia finished last in the four-team Sugar Bowl tournament, falling to Mississippi State 86-84.

Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski had his team play man-to-man in an effort to regain its defensive sharpness.

"We played very hard defensively," Krzyzewski said. "We were diving for loose balls and getting back to some of the things we lost during that exam break."

The pressure helped Duke take a 17-0 lead in five minutes, forcing Cornell into seven turnovers and four missed shots.

Christian Laettner, getting his first collegiate start because of an injury to Alaa Abdelnaby, had 20 points while Robert Brickey had 17 and Reserve John Smith had 11 for the Blue Devils.

Josh Wexler scored 13 points for Cornell, 2-4, and Rich Medina had 10.

Reid, playing his first complete game since a stress fracture to his foot, scored nine points down the stretch as North Carolina overcame an eight-point deficit in the second half against San Diego State.

"I think maybe in the first half I might have been pressing, but in the second half I really felt good," Reid said. "My teammates were looking to give me the ball."

Kevin Madden scored 19 points with 7-for-9 shooting from the field for North Carolina.

Mitch McMullen equalled his career high of 29 points to lead the Aztecs despite fouling out. He was the second of four San Diego players to foul out and the Aztecs went the final 3:30 with only one starter in the lineup.

San Diego State, 5-4, held a 52-50 halftime lead and used an 11-2 spurt to take a 67-59 lead with 15:45 remaining.

The teams alternated leads until the Tar Heels scored seven straight points to take an 83-78 advantage with 8:11 to go.

Illinois coach Lou Henson credited rebounding and free throws for the victory over Georgia Tech.

"They (Georgia Tech) did a great job rebounding in the first half," Henson said. "And we came back in the second half with good rebounding and good free throw shooting. These two factors, I felt, were the difference in the game."

Illinois out-rebounded Georgia Tech 21-7 in the second half and went 4-for-4 from the free throw line during the last minute of the game.

"They just beat us on the boards," Georgia Tech coach Bobby Cremins said. "We were one rebound away from winning it."

Lowell Hamilton scored 24 points and Nick Anderson had 15 points and 10 rebounds to lead Illinois, 11-0, which advanced to the finals.

Dennis Scott scored 25 points, including six 3-pointers, for Georgia Tech, 6-2. Tom Hammonds scored 20 and Brian Oliver 12.

Clemson's Elden Campbell scored 16 points and grabbed eight rebounds despite second-half foul trouble as Clemson improved to 7-1. The Tigers will play Oregon State, 6-3, which upset previously unbeaten Michigan State 63-58 in the other Far West semifinal.

Derrick Forrest, who scored the Tigers' first 10 points, sank a 3-pointer four seconds before inter-

Danny Ferry puts up a defense against Cornell's Mike Pascal

COOKEVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Greg Bender hit a 22-foot jump shot to tie the game at 93-93 and then tipped in a missed shot at the buzzer to lift North Carolina-Wilmington to a 95-93 double-overtime victory over Tennessee Tech Thursday night.

Bender scored seven of his 10 points in overtime to help lift North Carolina-Wilmington of the Colonial Athletic Association to a 4-5 mark. The loss dropped Tennessee Tech of the Ohio Valley Conference to 3-8.

North Carolina-Wilmington's Antonio Howard drove into the lane for a layup and hit his free throw that tied the game at 69-69 to force the first overtime.

Tennessee Tech moved to an 83-80 lead when Andy Walker hit a free throw but missed his second with 10 seconds left.

Bender hit his first 3-pointer from the left side of the circle with just one second left in the first overtime period that knotted the score at 83-83.

Hornets Reactivate Rex Chapman

CHARLOTTE (AP) — The Charlotte Hornets reactivated rookie guard Rex Chapman on Thursday and waived rookie forward Tom Tolbert.

Chapman, Charlotte's first-round draft pick from Kentucky, injured his back against Indiana on Jan. 14 and missed seven games. He is averaging 13.0 points.

Tolbert, a second round draft pick from Arizona, played in 14 of Charlotte's 26 games, averaging 2.9 points, 1.5 rebounds and 8.4 minutes.

The Hornets still have one player, forward Brian Rowsom, on the injured list.

"Having to waive players is unfortunate, but is nonetheless a way of life in the NBA and any professional sport," said Charlotte General Manager Carl Scheer. "We thoroughly enjoyed having Tom Tolbert in Charlotte, but teams are not allowed to keep more than 12 active players on their roster, so a move had to be made. We've had such a cohesive group that we don't like to see anyone go."

"At the same time, we can now look forward to a healthy Rex Chapman coming back and contributing to the team in ways only he can."

Joyner-Kersee, Kingdom To Give Clinic

CHAPEL HILL (AP) — Double gold medalists Jackie Joyner-Kersee and Roger Kingdom will be the headline speakers at the annual track and field clinic at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill on Jan. 7.

The clinic lasts from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. at Carmichael Auditorium and the Carolina Indoor Track.

Joyner-Kersee won the gold medal in the heptathlon and the long jump at the 1988 Olympics in Seoul. Kingdom won the gold medal in the 110-meter high hurdles in the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles and the 1988 Olympics.

Other speakers will include marathoner Margaret Groos, UCLA head coach Bob Kersee, North Carolina assistant coach and former world record holder in the high hurdles Charles Foster, and North Carolina head coach Dennis Craddock.

Miami Wants To Be Aggressive

MIAMI (AP) — The stakes are high, and University of Miami defensive end Bill Hawkins wants to make Nebraska quarterback Steve Taylor show his hand early in Monday night's Orange Bowl game.

"We're gonna be aggressive, come after him and see what he's got," Hawkins said.

Taylor, who can both run and pass, is the sort of quarterback who has given the Hurricanes fits in two games this season. A big performance by Taylor in his final game for the sixth-ranked Cornhuskers, 11-1, could be enough to beat No. 2 Miami, 10-1.

"Steve Taylor is as dangerous a quarterback as we've faced all year long," Hurricanes coach Jimmy Johnson said. "That style of quarterback has given us trouble — Michael Taylor from Michigan, Tony Rice from Notre Dame. And I think Steve Taylor is a much better player than either of those two."

The scrambling Michael Taylor ran and passed for 238 yards and three touchdowns in Miami's 31-30 victory at Michigan. Rice totaled 215 yards and two scores in Notre Dame's 31-30 win.

The Hurricanes allowed more points in those two games than in their other nine games.

"Taylor caught us on a couple of scrambles, and Ellis had a helluva game against us," Hawkins recalled.

"Jitterbug quarterbacks," defensive tackle Jimmie Jones called them. Steve Taylor is the quickest of the three, Jones said, but he predicted Miami will be able to contain the Husker senior.

Johnson isn't so sure.

"With his ability to scramble, he can run away from our pass rush," Johnson said.

Taylor has rushed for 13 touchdowns and 826 yards this year. But he denied any plans to run wild against the Hurricanes.

"I've noticed they have some problems containing the quarterback," Taylor said. "But I'm not going to go out and try to make things happen, drop back and scramble, because of something I've seen on film."

"I don't like to scramble. You scramble when things aren't going right."

But while Hawkins promised the Hurricanes will be aggressive, Johnson said the threat of Taylor's running could negate a pass rush that has 50 sacks this season.

"We are a much better defensive team with our four-man front, when we can zero in on a quarterback and rush the dropback passer," the coach said.

"Our ends get a lot of the sacks, so our ends have to have some freedom. When we're in a soft contain-type rush, it takes away from their effectiveness."

UCLA Seeks To Break The Wishbone

DALLAS (AP) — The UCLA defensive coaches have been studying films of every game the Arkansas Razorbacks played in 1988. Their assignment: to break a wishbone.

Bob Field and Tom Hayes, UCLA's defensive coordinators, have established three priorities for defeating Arkansas' ground-oriented triple-option "flexbone" in Monday's Cotton Bowl Classic.

"The first threat you have to handle is the fullback (Barry Foster) and he's as good as you are going to find," Field said. "When he made that 80-yard touchdown run against Miami, it got your attention."

"Foster makes you stop the fullback game. If you don't control the fullback, you don't beat Arkansas."

Second item on UCLA's hit list is All-Southwest Conference quarterback Quinn Grovey.

"They make you stop Grovey," Field said. "He's very fast. Then if you stop him, they may pitch the ball every once in a while and you have to be ready for that."

Then there's another problem.

"Grovey is just as big a threat to run when he goes back to throw, and we'll have to keep him contained and keep him from pulling down the ball and running with it," Field said.

Field said UCLA hasn't faced a triple-option wishbone team since the Bruins lost 38-3 to Oklahoma in 1986.

"We tried to forget everything about the Oklahoma game, so I'm not sure I can remember much about it," Field said. "I'm not sure we stopped any phase of their option game."

"Arizona runs something of a wishbone, but Arizona doesn't make you stop the fullback. They were more of a perimeter wishbone team, with the quarterback and the pitch being the biggest threats they posed for us."

Enter a big problem for the Bruins: injured inside linebackers Chance Johnson and Stacy Argo will not play.

Farmville Wins Conley Title

HOLLYWOOD — Farmville Central took an early lead and was never headed as it downed Havelock, 73-64, to win the D.H. Conley Girls' Basketball Tournament Thursday night.

Farmville eased out into a 12-9 lead in the opening quarter of the game and never looked back. During the second quarter, the Lady Jaguars outscored Havelock, 18-12, building their lead to 30-21 at halftime.

That was cut, however, to 45-40, by the end of the third period. Farmville held off the Lady Rams, 28-24, in the final quarter.

Vickie Best, chosen the tournament's most valuable player, led Farmville with 24 points while Brenda Reid added 22. Felicia Barrett added 11 and Wanda Bullock had 10.

Havelock was led by Dee Godette with 24, Marcy Hill with 19 and Karen Nolan with 16.

Also named to the All-Tournament team from Farmville were Reid and Barrett, while Hill and Godette were named from Havelock.

Mavs Move Up; Celtics In Slide

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Dallas Mavericks are moving up in the NBA. The Boston Celtics are sliding.

Dallas moved to the best record in the Western Conference on Thursday night with a 131-115 victory over slumping Boston, which has lost three straight games. While Dallas is 17-9, Boston is 12-14 and 4-7 this month.

For the first time in 61 months, or since Larry Bird joined the Celtics, they have had a losing month. Their problems coincide with Bird's surgery on both of his feet. Since Bird arrived in 1979, the Celtics have not had a sub-.500 month.

"This was a really big win for us," Mavs forward Sam Perkins said. "With a player the caliber of Larry Bird out, we have to take advantage of any chance to win. We think Boston is still an elite team and we wanted to play well at any cost."

Right now, the Mavericks are the elite of the West. They showed why early Thursday night, scoring 40 points in the opening quarter.

"We've been really slow off the mark in our games at home recently," said Derek Harper, who had 11 points in the first period and passed out a career-high 18 assists in the game. "We talked before the game about moving the ball, about hitting the open man."

"When people are hitting the way we were tonight, you're bound to get a lot of assists."

Elsewhere, it was Chicago 108, New York 106; Washington 126, Houston 109; and Seattle 129, Miami 99.

Dallas, which had dropped 15 of 16 previous meetings with Boston, hit nine of its first 10 shots and 13-of-16 to build leads of as many as 15 points in the first quarter. Boston drew closer several times but never caught up.

"We'd get it within five to seven points a couple of times, but we just couldn't get over the hump," said Kevin McHale, who led the Celtics with 29 points. "They came out and hit some incredible shots in the first quarter. The first quarter was the difference in the game."

"It's tough to win on the road when the other team hits such a tremendously high percentage," Celtics coach Jimmy Rodgers said of Dallas' 58 percent shooting.

Rolando Blackman led five Mavericks with 18 or more points with 32. The 131 points was Dallas' season high.

In New Orleans, Virginia fell to 7-3 after relinquishing a lead the Mark Aguirre added 22 points for the Mavericks, but when he picked up his fifth foul and was removed from the game with 9:07 remaining, he glared at Coach John MacLeod. After taking a seat at the end of the bench, Aguirre made an obscene gesture in the general direction of MacLeod.

"I didn't see it so I can't respond to it," MacLeod said. "I thought Mark had a fine game. I can't please everybody. The commissioner says we can only play five guys and I'll leave it at that."

Bulls 108, Knicks 106
At Chicago, Scottie Pippen made the third try for the winning basket the last one when scored from the lane at the buzzer.

Pippen, in his second start of the season, had 23 points. Michael Jordan led the way with 37.

The winning shot came after Jordan missed with five seconds left and Horace Grant missed a tip-in attempt.

Knicks coach Rick Pitino was ejected with 7:56 left when Patrick Ewing was called for his fifth foul. Pitino received two quick technicals from referee Ted Bernhardt and was gone.

Bullets 126, Rockets 109
Jeff Malone scored 24 of his 31 points in the second half and Mark Alarie had a season-high 19 for Washington, which managed its highest point production of the season.

Houston, 18-10, had won six straight, its longest streak since winning seven in a row in November 1985. The victory was the second straight for the Bullets.

Malone, Bernard King and Alarie were among six players to reach double figures for Washington. King scored 24, John Williams 13, Steve Colter 10 and Ledell Eackles 11.

Otis Thorpe led the Rockets with 26 points. Sleepy Floyd had a season-high 25 points. Akeem Olujuwon scored 21 points and grabbed 17 rebounds for Houston.

SuperSonics 129, Heat 99
Seattle won its seventh straight game at home thanks to 14 blocked shots, including a team-record nine by Alton Lister. The Sonics also forced 35 turnovers and got 25 points apiece from Xavier McDaniel and Dale Ellis.

Ellis scored eight points during a 16-point run in the second quarter.

Jon Sundvold topped Miami with 23 points.

Detmer, Brigham Young Top Colorado By 20-17

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANAHEIM, Calif. — It would be premature to add the name of Ty Detmer to the distinguished list of standout quarterbacks at Brigham Young University, an honor roll that already includes Gifford Nielsen, Marc Wilson, Jim McMahon, Steve Young and Robbie Bosco.

But if Thursday night's Freedom Bowl was any indication, next season ought to be enough to ensure his enshrinement.

The wily redshirt freshman rallied BYU in the second half, throwing a touchdown pass and helping set up two field goals by Jason Chaffetz in the final four minutes as the Cougars beat Colorado 20-17.

"Ty is a very poised young man who has shown he can play under pressure," BYU coach LaVell Edwards said. "He gave us a spark tonight."

Detmer's performance, offsetting a 144-yard rushing effort by Colorado's sophomore tailback, Eric Bieniemy, enabled BYU to finish at 9-4. Best of all, according to Edwards, it helped erase the disappointment of a Cougar collapse down the stretch during the regular season, when they lost three of their last four games.

"This has to be one of the most significant games we've won in a while," Edwards said. "We had finished poorly, and we're not used to that."

Besides the play of Detmer and Chaffetz, BYU displayed an unusually potent rushing attack, winding up with 152 yards on the ground compared to 168 passing. Draw plays were particularly effective against Colorado's quick pass rushers.

"We started off running and found we were successful," Edwards said, "so we stayed with it."

"Our defense played well except for one drive when Colorado got its second touchdown. We dodged a couple of bullets when they missed a short field goal and then we blocked one. We held them on fourth down a couple of times. We just made the plays when we had to."

Colorado, victimized by mistakes, ended the year 8-4, losing its sixth straight bowl game.

BYU made two first-half errors, helping stake Colorado to a 14-7 halftime lead. On the third play of the game, blitzing Colorado linebacker Michael Jones disrupted a planned handoff and forced BYU starting quarterback Sean Covey to fumble. Jones recovered at the BYU 49-yard line. Six plays later, Bieniemy dived 1 yard for the game's first score.

BYU drew into a 7-7 tie later in the quarter, aided by two personal-foul penalties on the Buffaloes. Covey hit Mike Salido on a 19-yard TD throw.

Dave McCloughan's end-zone interception thwarted a BYU drive early in the second quarter. Colorado promptly mounted a 14-play, 72-yard drive inside the BYU 10, but Pat Blottiaux was wide on a 25-yard field goal try.

Bieniemy capped a 46-yard scoring drive late in the half.

Colorado took the second-half kickoff and marched to the BYU 17, where Blottiaux's 33-yard attempt was blocked by Tim Knight.

BYU made it 14-14 when Detmer, who started the second half, hit Chuck Cutler on a 15-yarder with 4:46 left in the third quarter.

Later in the period, Detmer was sacked for a 9-yard loss by Colorado's Alfred Williams — who had three sacks for the night — and that helped set up a 19-yard field goal by Blottiaux. That drive was kept alive by a fake field goal play.

BYU then scored on its next two possessions. Facing third-and-20 Detmer completed a 29-yard pass to Jeff Frandsen, leading to a 31-yard tying field goal by Chaffetz with 4:11 remaining.

Colorado freshman quarterback Darian Hagan, who entered for two series in the second half, was intercepted by safety Scott Peterson near midfield moments later, and an unsportsmanlike-conduct penalty against Colorado's Joe Garten was tacked onto the play.

Caffetz nailed his clinching 35-yarder with 2:33 left.

"The officials told me their kid was down and our guy hit him," Colorado coach Bill McCartney said of Garten's penalty. "I take it personally that we'd have that lack of discipline. A good football team doesn't do that. The game was tied. The penalty put them in scoring position."

But McCartney pointed to other equally frustrating plays.

"The play that I focus on the most in my own mind was BYU's third-and-20 play when we were ahead 17-14," he said. "We let them throw the ball into a zone (for a 29-yard gain). We should force them to throw the ball in front of us."

McCartney said the fake field goal play also should have gone for a touchdown, instead of an 18-yard gain to the BYU 7. Holder Jeff Campbell's pass to Erich Kissick wasn't thrown with enough "zip," according to McCartney. The Buffs wound up settling for a field goal.

"This is a team we should have beaten," McCartney insisted. "But we made some big mistakes and took ourselves out of it."

Greene Central Girls Take Tri-County; Boys Second

DEEP RUN — Greene Central's girls and North Lenoir's boys captured the championships of the Tri-County Basketball Classic Thursday night.

Greene Central took a 53-38 win over South Lenoir for the girls' title, but the Greene Central boys' fared less well, bowing to North Lenoir, 75-65, in their title game.

North Lenoir inched out into a 13-12 lead after one period of the boys' game. Then, in the second period, the Hawks flew away from the Rams, 23-18, building up as much as a 12-point lead in the period. "They shot the eyes out," Coach Lewis Godwin said. "They missed only two shots in the quarter." That staked the Hawks to a 36-30 halftime lead.

In the third period, Greene Central cut it back to 53-48 and then closed it on to 60-59 in the final quarter. But the Rams missed a layup for the lead and fouled on the rebound. North Lenoir made both shots and the Rams never had the opportunity to grab the lead again.

Leon Morgan led North Lenoir with 25 points while Norwood Kittrell added 14 and Will Sutton had 12. Tyrone Streeter led the rams with 18 while Reggie Atkinson had 12, Johnny Joyner had 11 and Tyrone Sutton had 10.

In the girls' game, South Lenoir slipped ahead, 12-10, after one period. But the Lady Rams came back to take a 25-22 halftime lead.

Greene Central pulled away in the second half, easing out to a 35-31 edge at the end of the third and outthrottling the Lady Devils, 18-7, in the final quarter.

Florida's Emmitt Smith takes off on a 55-yard TD run as Illinois' Henry Jones defends.

Smith Rallies Florida To 14-10 Win In All American

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Emmitt Smith, untouched by Illinois defenders, was happy to score Florida's winning touchdown at the All American Bowl without much effort at all.

"That was a very satisfying feeling," Smith said after the 14-10 victory Thursday night. "It made me feel I didn't have to work too hard to get the touchdown."

Smith's 2-yard run around right end came with 4:28 left, shortly after Doug Higgins had given Illinois its only lead with a 44-yard field goal.

Smith, who carried 28 times for 159 yards and was named the game's most valuable player, put Florida on the scoreboard on the first play from scrimmage, racing 55 yards for a touchdown.

"If we can knock some people off the line, Emmitt has that uncanny ability to find the cracks," said Gator Coach Galen Hall, whose team ended the season 7-5. "The defense kept us in the game and Emmitt won it."

Trailing 10-7 in the fourth quarter, Florida's Owen Bartruff intercepted an Illinois pass by quarterback Jeff George and returned it to the Illini 26-yard-line.

Smith, helped by a block by quarterback Kyle Morris three plays later, ran 16 yards to the 2. He scored untouched on the next play.

"Ultimately, the Florida defense made the difference... an interception that led to the winning touchdown," said first-year Illinois

Coach John Mackovic, whose team ended the season 6-5-1.

He also credited Smith's running, saying that "at the end of the game, he was at his very best."

A key defensive play stopped Illinois' final scoring drive with about a minute to play. Facing fourth-and-one at the Gator 28, Lynn McClellan was thrown for a seven-yard loss by Florida's Huey Richardson.

"There was just a miscommunication," said Illini tackle Mark McGowan, explaining the missed block on Richardson. "It was a bad time for one of those."

Florida's Kerry Watkins returned the opening kickoff 29 yards to the Gators' 45. On the next play, Smith broke clear over left tackle for the 55-yard TD run, as Florida took a 7-0 lead.

On Florida's next possession, the Gators drove from their 11 to the Illinois 34, but John David Francis was short on a 51-yard field goal — one of three he missed during the game.

Illinois then moved from its 34 to the Florida 2, but George's pass into the end zone was intercepted by Richard Fain.

The Gators gave it right back, though. Two plays later, Steve Glasson intercepted for Illinois on the Gators' 30 and Keith Jones ran for the score on the next play to tie the game 7-7 in the second quarter.

Francis missed on field goal attempts of 38 yards and 48 yards in the third quarter.

George completed 20 of 36 passes for 194 yards, but had the two costly interceptions and was sacked four times for a loss of 50 yards.

Jones, who left the game with a sprained ankle in the fourth quarter, picked up 88 yards rushing on 18 carries for Illinois.

can score a lot of points against West Virginia. No way possible."

West Virginia coach Don Nehlen arrived at the news conference just about the time Holtz was saying all those nice things about the Mountaineers.

"Lou, you're great for my morale," Nehlen said to the departing Holtz. "Stick around a little longer. Holy crimony, half the people in America don't think we ought to be here and Lou thinks we're so good we shouldn't be playing. I'm having trouble figuring this game out."

Besides trying to score on West Virginia's defense, Holtz must figure out a way to stop quarterback Major Harris, who is so talented it takes three players to simulate him in practice.

"One thing we have in our favor — we're not foreign to their offense," Holtz said. "Their offense is very, very similar to many things we do. In addition to that, we can come closer to simulating Major Harris than anybody else they've played.

"We've had Pete Graham simulate him throwing the football. Pete Graham throws the ball very, very well. We can come closer to simulating Major Harris because we have Tony Rice doing some against our defense."

Nehlen said that Harris, a third-year sophomore, came of age last year in a 6-3 loss to Pitt.

"We made the decision in our first practice last quarter that he was going to be our quarterback," Nehlen said. "We had Ohio State, Maryland and Pitt among our first three games and we knew that could cost us a game or two, but we also felt that where we wanted to go as a football team, Major was the only guy on the team that could get us there."

Hartlieb Poses Big Test For Wolfpack Defenders

ATLANTA — Iowa's Chuck Hartlieb, the All-Big Ten quarterback who threw for more than 3,000 yards this season, poses a stiff test for North Carolina State in Saturday's Peach Bowl. Despite its No. 8 national ranking in total defense, the Wolfpack was severely wounded by two passing teams during the regular season.

Kickoff is scheduled for 1:10 p.m. EST Saturday at Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium. A crowd of 58,000, including 20,000 Wolfpack backers, is expected for the matchup between the schools that finished third in their conferences. State was 7-3-1 overall and Iowa State 6-3-3.

160.6 yards per game against the pass, 23rd in the country. "We're very concerned because the two games where we did have problems defensively — we gave up 30 points to Maryland and 43 points to Duke — it was primarily because of the pass, and we're facing a team that we feel is much more difficult to defend than either one of those teams," said Sheridan.

State lost to Maryland 30-26 and tied Duke 43-43. Hartlieb, who underwent arthroscopic surgery to his knee on Nov. 20, said he is impressed with State's secondary, despite those two performances. "The thing that sticks out to me is their 21 interceptions," he said. "If they get an opportunity to get an interception they're going to make it. You really don't see them drop too many balls."

Hartlieb, however, said that there is "nothing really that strikes me" about State's secondary. "They play great, well-coached football against the pass and run. We'll just have to be patient."

As for the season in which Iowa was picked in preseason as the Big Ten champion and a Top Ten team before injuries struck, Hartlieb admitted it had been difficult.

"It's always going to be one of those seasons that you look back and say 'if this would have happened,' but I think that we all know that we gave it our best shot," he said.

"You can't look back. You've got to look forward in life. It's been a tough one, but you've got to learn from it and go on," said Hartlieb, the first quarterback in Iowa history to throw for more than 3,000 yards in two different seasons.

Villanova Shocks Florida State

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Mark Macon is the biggest star in Philadelphia's college basketball constellation, but Lionel Simmons and Tom Greis are makin' the most impact at holiday tournament time.

Greis got 10 of his 14 points in the second half as Villanova surprised No. 10 Florida State 68-67 Thursday night to win the Red Lobster Classic in Orlando.

Simmons scored a tournament-record 38 points as La Salle stung No. 16 South Carolina 85-67 in the opening round of the Cotton States Classic in Atlanta.

The upsets by Villanova and La Salle, each members of Philadelphia's Big Five conference, came in a season when Macon and his Temple Owls are struggling.

"It's about time one went our way. We're close to being back," said Villanova coach Rollie Massimino, who guided the Wildcats to the NCAA championship in 1985.

This season, Villanova is 8-4. La Salle is 8-1 and will play Georgia tonight in the championship game.

"It felt exciting to go up against one of the best teams in the country," said Simmons, a 6-foot-6 junior forward. "Once I hit a 3-pointer, they were going for every fake I threw up there."

"They say it happens to you sooner or later, and tonight it happened to us," he said. "The way I feel right now, we played a legitimate Top 20 team. They did everything. Lionel Simmons is a first round NBA draft pick and he's only a junior."

In other Top Twenty games, No. 1 Duke beat Cornell 94-59, No. 2 Michigan defeated Holy Cross 100-63, No. 4 Illinois stopped No. 17 Georgia Tech 80-75, No. 5 Georgetown got past South Florida 74-64, No. 6 Oklahoma overwhelmed Texas A&M 128-80, No. 7 North Carolina rallied by San Diego State 103-92, No. 13 Seton Hall handled DePaul 83-60, No. 15 Ohio State downed St. John's 77-72, No. 19 Tennessee held off Memphis State 76-74 and No. 20 Kansas beat Iona 100-67.

Villanova used 3-point shooting to overtake Florida State, which lost for the first time in nine games.

Kenny Wilson, the tournament's most valuable player, led the Wildcats with 17 points and made three of four 3-pointers. Greis got four inside baskets in the final 10 minutes.

Villanova, trailing by five points with 10:53 remaining, rallied for a 66-60 lead with 2:44 left. George McCloud's 3-pointer got the Seminoles within 68-67 with seven seconds to play, but Tony Dawson missed a desperation shot from midcourt at the buzzer.

Florida State had been averaging more than 100 points per game.

"That was the worst we've shot in a long time," Coach Pat Kennedy said. "We're not that upset about it. We need to get our shooting on track and get the continuity in our offense."

La Salle got all of its offense from Simmons. He scored 10 points as the Explorers exploded for a 19-0 run that made it 25-8 with 6:58 left in the first half.

South Carolina, 6-1, never got within 12 points in the second half.

"We're not 18 points better than them. I figured the game would come down to a couple of points either way," La Salle coach Bill "Speedy" Morris said. "Lionel Simmons had a great game and South Carolina could not contain him."

Simmons broke the tournament record of 31 points by Loyola's Bernard Jackson in 1986. Simmons shot 15-for-22 from the field and made all seven free-throw attempts.

Michigan 100, Holy Cross 63

Michigan, upset by Division II Alaska-Anchorage the previous night, rebounded to beat Holy Cross for third place in the Utah Classic.

Glen Rice scored 28 points and Mark Hughes 21 for the Wolverines, 12-1. Terry Mills added 11 rebounds.

Hughes scored eight points during a 22-2 burst that put Michigan ahead 32-15. Hughes had 15 points in the first half.

Grant Evans scored 16 points for the Crusaders, 6-3.

Georgetown 74, South Florida 64

Charles Smith scored 25 points, including 16 in the second half as Georgetown held off South Florida to win the Tribune Invitational in Tampa, Fla.

The Hoyas, 9-0, saw their 13-point lead dwindle to four with eight minutes remaining. But Smith and freshman Alonzo Mourning helped Georgetown re-establish control at 66-56 with 5:04 remaining.

Mourning had 12 points, 10 rebounds and eight blocked shots and Jaren Jackson scored 14 points.

Hakim Shahid, a 6-foot-7 center, scored 16 points for the Bulls, 4-2. Oklahoma 128, Texas A&M 80

Even without injured Stacey King,

Oklahoma had no trouble overwhelming Texas A&M in the All-College tournament.

Tyrone Jones scored 32 points and Mookie Blaylock had 28 as the Sooners ran their record to 9-0. Oklahoma made nine of 11 3-point shots in the first half and took a 66-25 lead.

Mike Bell, a 6-foot-6 senior, subbed for King at center and finished with 15 points and six rebounds. King, averaging 26 points per game, broke the index finger on his shooting hand in practice this week.

Lynn Suber scored 17 points for the Aggies, 7-4.

Seton Hall 83, DePaul 60

Andrew Gaze scored 16 points and Darryl Walker had 15 as undefeated Seton Hall beat DePaul to win the Sugar Bowl tournament in New Orleans.

The Pirates, 12-0, were ahead by at least 23 points for the final 24 minutes and led by 35 at one point.

Gaze was named the tournament's outstanding player. John Morton added 11 points and Anthony Avent 11 for Seton Hall.

Brad Nieman scored 10 points for the Blue Demons, 8-5.

Ohio State 77, St. John's 72

Jay Burson capped a strong two-game tournament, scoring 23 points that led Ohio State over host St. John's in the ECAC Holiday Festival. The Redmen have played in every ECAC Holiday Festival championship game since 1979 and had won the last four tournaments.

Burson, who scored 37 points in a semifinal victory over Florida, got the Buckeyes' final eight points in the championship game at Madison Square Garden. Jerry Francis added 19 points.

Ohio State, 9-2, used a 13-2 run early in the second half for a 51-41 lead.

The Redmen, 7-3, playing four true freshmen and a Prop 48 sophomore, came back but could not take the lead. Jayson Williams, who fouled out with 2:38 to play on a call that nullified a basket that would have tied it at 67, led St. John's with 20 points.

Tennessee 76, Memphis State 74

Dyron Nix had 27 points and 10 rebounds as Tennessee stopped Memphis State in the second-ever meeting between the intrastate rivals.

Nix was named most valuable player of the 23rd Volunteer Classic for the third straight year. He is the only player to win the honor three times.

Tennessee, 9-1, led by 11 points early in the second half before Memphis State scored 14 consecutive points in a 7½-minute span. The Volunteers regained the lead for good at 68-67 on Rickey Clark's two foul shots with 4:12 remaining, and Memphis State's Steve Ballard missed a potential tying jumper at the buzzer.

Elliott Perry scored 17 points for the Tigers, 7-5.

Kansas 100, Iona 67

Milt Newton and Kevin Pritchard sparked a first-half spurt that sent Kansas over Iona in the first round of the BMA Holiday Classic.

The Jayhawks won in their first appearance at Kemper Arena since winning the NCAA tournament there last April. Kansas, which is on probation and cannot defend its national championship, will play Southwest Missouri State tonight for the BMA title.

Pritchard and Newton sent Kansas to a 21-8 lead. Mark Randall finished with 17 points for the Jayhawks, 9-1.

Sean Green scored 25 points for the Gaels, 5-5.

49ers Must Reverse Trend To Earn Third Super Bowl

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The San Francisco 49ers are the only team with a chance to win three Super Bowls in the 1980s. It will take a severe reversal of recent results to do it.

"People tend to overlook the fact we've won two Super Bowls in the last eight years," Coach Bill Walsh said as the 49ers prepared for Sunday's NFC playoff game against Minnesota.

It's overlooked because the 49ers have been routed three straight years in their only playoff games since winning the 1984 Super Bowl. Even though they have the best record in the NFL for the decade, the 49ers have been a major disappointment in the postseason, losing twice to the Giants and once to the Vikings by an aggregate score of 120-30.

"It's hard to explain to somebody who's never been through it," said center Randy Cross, one of five veterans left from both Super Bowl winners, "and there are a lot of young guys on this team who might be saying, 'Golly, gee whiz, we're in the playoffs.'"

The 49ers were 7-1 in the playoffs under Walsh through 1984, losing only 24-21 at Washington in the 1983 NFC championship game.

"This year has got to be the year," said third-year defensive end Larry Roberts. "I told them we've got to lay it on the line."

"My class, we've been here three years and we've won the division every year. We just don't have that ring yet. I think this is the year to do it, because some of the older guys might not have another chance."

The Chicago Bears also have been on the slide since winning the 1985 league championship. They lost at home to Washington in the 1986 and

'87 playoffs. This Saturday, the Bears play host to Philadelphia.

Buffalo, which has not been in the playoffs since 1981, is home to Houston on Sunday in the AFC, while Cincinnati, in its first postseason game in six years, plays Seattle.

The Bears-Eagles game features the return of Buddy Ryan to Chicago. Ryan designed the 46 Defense for the Bears and helped them win the '85 title. He has coached the Eagles since then and rarely has a kind word for the Bears or former boss Mike Ditka.

Ditka wasn't bothered by a quote attributed to Ryan that if the game came down to coaching, the Eagles would win.

"I'd agree with that," Ditka said. The Bills, like the Bears, aren't much into verbal battles.

"We let our play do the talking," quarterback Jim Kelly said. "They do both. They like to talk but they get it done, too."

They — the Oilers — finally got it done on the road against a winning team when they edged Cleveland 24-23 in the AFC wild-card game last Saturday. It was the first road playoff victory for Houston since 1979.

Oilers coach Jerry Glanville would prefer emphasis on his team's skills, not it's talkative nature and bruising — some say dirty — style.

"We are a hard-nosed team," he said. "They play at 100 mph and they get after you. I don't think you should ever have to apologize for that in the NFL. This is football."

Like the Oilers, the Seahawks don't often fare well in cold weather. They won three of their last four games, but the defeat was at New England, where they managed two first downs.

"The weather doesn't matter," defensive end Jacob Green said. "This is a playoff game and we're not worried about the snow or the cold or whatever it is. I don't think the weather is going to be a factor on how we play. What's going to matter is which team makes the least mistakes."

Esiason Named Most Valuable

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — Boomer Esiason's value to the Cincinnati Bengals can't be measured by quarterback rankings. That's why receiver Cris Collinsworth thinks it's appropriate for Esiason to be named the NFL's Most Valuable Player.

"I don't think I've ever been around a more dynamic leader as a quarterback than what Boomer is," Collinsworth said. "And that probably is his biggest strength and his biggest asset for our football team, especially after last year."

Esiason, the triggerman in the league's top-ranked offense, was named Thursday as the league's MVP by The Associated Press. He won the award in a close three-way vote among sportswriters and broadcasters covering each of the NFL's 28 teams.

Esiason had 31 votes to 21 for quarterback Randall Cunningham of Philadelphia and 17 for running back Roger Craig of San Francisco, who was named the league's top offensive player. Mike Singletary of Chicago, the defensive player of the year, had six votes and quarterback Warren Moon of Houston, defensive tackle Keith Millard of Minnesota and running back Herschel Walker of Dallas got one vote each.

Esiason's personal statistics were impressive but not record-setting — 3,572 yards passing, 28 touchdowns, a 57 percent completion rate.

Another statistic is a better measure of his importance — the Bengals' turnaround from 4-11 to 12-4. The left-handed quarterback played a major role in turning the Bengals into a team that believed it could win this year.

"Boomer's attitude coming in was, 'We're going to win, and we're going to win because we're going to outplay some people,'" Coach Sam Wyche said. "I think that's the mark of a Most Valuable Player."

Esiason also played a leading role in the turmoil last season. As the team's union representative, he led the Bengals' strike activities and traded harsh words with Wyche. He also bore the brunt of the fans' dissatisfaction when the strike ended, hearing frequent jeers and calls for his backup, Turk Schonert.

While he became a lightning rod for the public dissatisfaction, Esiason apparently endeared himself with teammates.

"He really took a lot of the heat last year on himself rather than putting the pressure on his teammates to really have to stand up for themselves," Collinsworth said. "And I think they really appreciated that this year."

He came into the season determined to heal the rifts.

"I knew coming off last year, I was as much at fault as everybody else was, if not more, for our downfall," Esiason said. "But I never gave in last year. I knew that I needed to come back and set the example that I will work hard, I will not complain, I will not worry about what happened last year, just set an example for this year."

His consistency at operating the offense helped it become the most effective in the league, averaging 379 yards per game. The offense set club records for points, touchdowns, rushing touchdowns and rushing yards.

Report Says Soviets Trailing West In Computer Advances

By Barton Reppert
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's restructuring drive eventually may enable Soviet computer makers to satisfy demand, but progress will be slow and Moscow can be expected to keep trying to acquire Western technology, a U.S. scientific advisory panel says.

It said the United States should take a more focused and flexible approach to export controls on computers, especially since the existing curbs on many components and systems have become virtually unenforceable.

The panel urged the United States to concentrate instead on striving — together with its NATO allies and Japan — to control leakage to the Soviet bloc of militarily valuable supercomputers and the most advanced computer manufacturing processes.

"The United States cannot afford to be complacent about its computer technology strengths or base export control decisions on an assumption of an invincible lead," said the National Research Council report released Thursday.

Preparing the 288-page study was a 17-member committee chaired by Seymour E. Goodman, professor of management information systems and policy at the University of Arizona, Tucson.

The National Research Council is the principal operating agency of the National Academies of Sciences and Engineering.

The report estimated that the Soviet Union lags about five years to 10 years behind the West in many computer technologies.

"The lag between East and West is now large enough that the acquisition-diversion of certain Western technologies for direct production will help the Soviets tremendously," it said.

Referring to Gorbachev's perestroika or restructuring drive, the report said that "if perestroika actually fails to bring about fundamental changes in the Soviet economy, cooption efforts will surely increase."

"On the other hand, if perestroika succeeds, the Soviet computing industry may finally find itself in a position to fully meet demand, and the Soviet military may find itself getting the same kind of support from its own computing industry that it now must get by using the Western computer industry as a surrogate," it said.

But the report added that "the full effects of perestroika will be a long time coming, and transformation of the Soviet computer industry cannot happen overnight. In the meantime, the acquisition of Western technology would seem to appear even more attractive to the Soviet computer industry as it tries to close the gap."

On U.S. export controls policy, it noted that "as the computer market becomes increasingly global, U.S. firms face increasing foreign competition, mostly from firms operating with fewer export barriers under the same CoCom guidelines."

CoCom is the Coordinating Committee for Multilateral Export Controls, comprising the United States, Japan and all NATO countries except Iceland.

"Tighter U.S. controls may reflect the absence of a fully effective multilateral control effort, but there is a risk that in the computer area, the United States may lock the proverbial barn door after the horse has escaped," the report said.

It concluded that "current technological progress will make controls harder to enforce, and technological and market developments combine to make a case for a more focused and flexible control process."

Increasingly powerful computer hardware and software, the study said, are in effect becoming commodities in world trade.

"Commodity products are available in high volume and at low cost, they may be available in multiple and substitutable forms, and they tend to be small and easy to transport," it said. "These attributes make commodities vital to the economic health of the computer industry, but also effectively uncontrollable."

The report recommended that the United States publish a list of computer technologies that are commodities. The government then should promulgate a policy exempting such commodities from export controls, at least for trade among CoCom nations.

The study also said the United States should involve newly industrializing countries such as Singapore, Hong Kong, Taiwan and South Korea into the CoCom program.

Moving Experience

A game between friends is not always a friendly one. Cory Carnagey, 11, looks none too happy about a move by Jasen Hursey, 11, during a classroom game of chess. They are members of a student chess club at Pacheco Elementary School in Redding, Calif. The club has about 60 members under the tutelage of a 70-year-old volunteer named Paul Jolly who hopes to perpetuate the game by donating his enthusiasm and instruction to schools and youth groups.

South, West Still Top Settling Sites

By Rita Beamish
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — More Americans are once again calling the Midwest their home, but Sunbelt states like California and Florida remain the favored places to settle down, government figures show.

The Census Bureau on Thursday released its 1988 population estimates, showing that the West and parts of the South continued strong population growth, while smaller growth rates were reflected in the Northeast.

The Midwest appeared to be rebounding after a dropoff in population during the early part of the decade.

The total U.S. population stood at 245.8 million as of July 1, the date of the 1988 Census statistics, reflecting a 3 percent increase in population from July 1, 1985.

Over the three-year period, the biggest growth rate and population loss were seen in small population states: Nevada was up 12.8 percent, topping the 1 million mark for the first time; and the energy-producing state of Wyoming had a 7.6 percent decline, a loss of 39,000 people, leaving its population at 471,000.

The 12 Midwestern states — where the depressed farm economy caused a population downturn between 1981 and 1983 — had an overall 1.2 percent population increase in the 1985-88 period, the Census estimates showed.

Some Midwestern states continued to lose residents, but the Midwest as a region picked up slightly.

Losses were estimated in 1985-1988 for Iowa, Nebraska, North Dakota, Montana and Idaho, the Census Bureau said in a statement, but added, "The 1988 data indicate that the declines may be slowing, and several of these states may have grown in the past year."

The largest state, California, had the greatest increase in population, 1.8 million people, or 6.9 percent, boosting its total to 28.2 million.

Other states that showed strong growth rates over the three years were: Arizona, 9.6 percent, bringing its total to 3.5 million people; New Hampshire, 9.9 percent, to 1.1 million residents; Florida, 8.9 percent, to 12.4 million people; Georgia, 7.1 percent, to 6.4 million; Maryland, 5.7 percent, to 4.6 million; and Delaware, 5.4 percent, to 660,000 people.

Eleven states and the District of Columbia lost population during the three years: Iowa, North Dakota, Nebraska, West Virginia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Oklahoma, Montana, Idaho, Wyoming and Alaska.

In the regions outside the Midwest, the government found that population increased by 1.5 percent in the Northeast, including the New England and Mid-Atlantic states; by 3.7 percent in the South; and by 5.5 percent in the West, including the Mountain and Pacific Coast states.

Florida, the Sunshine State, continued to attract residents, with a population growth rate of 8.9 percent. That boosted its population to 12.4 million.

Christmas Spirit

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — City Council showed a little belated Christmas spirit when it agreed to tear up 800 parking tickets issued Monday to many car owners who thought it was a holiday.

City Councilman Joe Giarrusso argued Thursday for giving auto owners the benefit of the doubt. City Attorney Okla Jones countered that the Streets Department had done nothing it wasn't authorized to do.

Several people cited for expired parking meters downtown and in the tourist-loaded French Quarter said they thought the day after Christmas was a ticket-free holiday.

Jones said that Monday was a city government holiday not a public holiday, which would have been ticket free.

Streets director Betty Jo Everett said she gets tired of defending the city holiday policy to irate drivers.

"We didn't gear up and lick our chops and think that we really had something to go for," Everett said. "It was just a normal working day."

Bookstore Owner Eyes Guinness Record For Collection Of Titles

By Dwight Woodward
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLEVELAND — With 36.5 miles of shelves and more than 1.1 million different books, John Zubal thinks his bookstore offers the largest collection of titles for sale in the world.

He hopes the Guinness Book of World Records will think so, too. Zubal, 49, says he's writing the editors of the Guinness Book once he has gathered supporting evidence. And there's quite a bit of it.

Four warehouses, packed with books from floor to ceiling, house Zubal's volumes, arranged alphabetically by categories. The complex is so large that, until recently, his 49-year-old wife, Marilyn, used roller skates to retrieve customer requests.

Guinness lists W. & G. Foyle Ltd. of London as the bookstore with the most shelving at 30 miles, while Barnes & Noble Bookstore in New York City is listed as the largest book building with 154,250 square feet of books, said Sheelagh Thomas, a deputy editor for Guinness in England.

Zubal said he has 78,000 square feet of books, and more titles than any other store because he has few duplicate books, textbooks or remainders such as those sold at Barnes & Noble and Foyle.

Bibliophiles from as far way as Japan visit his store regularly, he said.

But if you want to learn how to ski or groom your pet, don't go to Zubal's.

"We don't have too many (books) for the casual reader," Zubal said recently. "Mostly our books are for the scholar and most are sold by mail order. We are not too concerned with what is being published now."

Fewer than 2 percent of Zubal's tomes were published after 1960, he said.

Some of the biggest categories are literary criticism, anthropology, philosophy, theology and history. Zubal estimated he has 250 books alone about Charles Dickens and 1,000 on Shakespeare.

"We do a lot of business in World War II books," said Zubal. "We think there are about 6,000 books published on World War II, and we have 3,000."

Zubal acquires most of his books from contacts who tell him of literary estates or bookstores for sale.

"I used to hit the flea market circuit but now I let the younger guys do it," said the bookseller, who travels to Europe several times a year to buy and sell.

Zubal also owns autographed editions by James Joyce, Ernest Hemingway and flying ace Eddie Rickenbacker.

While Zubal said all his books are for sale, "there are books I mark up to scare off the fainthearted." He was not ready to dicker over an autographed edition of "Finnegan's Wake" priced at $3,000.

"I'm in no hurry to sell it," he said. "It's money in the bank."

Once Zubal submits his claim to Guinness, Ms. Thomas said, he will need to submit two forms from witnesses validating his claim and a color photograph.

Ms. Thomas said editors would have to determine if his claim to have the most individual titles would merit a separate record category.

"That is always a possibility, but we can't make any promises," she said.

Travel Agents See Increased Interest In 'Ethical Tourism'

By Steve Silk
LAT/WP NEWS SERVICE

West German tourists headed for India's sun and sand met with a surprise when they arrived at the airport in Goa not long ago. The Vigilant Goan Army was waiting.

But the confederation of Catholic nuns, professors and concerned citizens was unlike most armies; its members were armed with leaflets and placards. Their message to tourists: "Go home." Mass tourism is destroying our society, the protesters said.

The incident in Goa was not an isolated one but part of a backlash in some countries, such as Malaysia, Cyprus and Kenya, against insensitive tourists, says Peter Davies, a member of the board of directors for the Center for Responsible Tourism in San Anselmo, Calif. Drugs, nudity, prostitution and cultural destruction are just some of the ills caused by mass tourism in Third World nations, Davies says, but he adds that there are ways that tourists can act to help alleviate the problems.

Davies is among a small but growing number of travel agents, church representatives and travelers concerned about the implications of modern mass tourism, which typically whisks Westerners to inexpensive holiday playgrounds in places like the Caribbean, Mexico and the South Pacific.

Many believe the answer lies in what they call "ethical travel." The life-enhancing form of travel that they propose addresses the cultural and economic realities faced by visitors to the developing world while making vacations more meaningful and less exploitative.

What is needed, they say, is a way for travelers to get past the promise of slick brochures and experience the culture of a place while behaving in an ethical way that fosters meaningful encounters with local people and brings them economic benefits.

Most tourists do not intend to harm the cultures they visit. They simply may be unaware of local etiquette.

Many travelers, in fact, may think they are contributing, at least economically, to the nations they visit. But most tourists pay for their vacation before leaving home; their money goes to multinational hotel corporations and to airlines. Even their sightseeing excursions are paid for at home. Little money trickles down to the local people.

Social ills, such as insulting behavior or ignorance of local customs, aren't usually considered by tourists, Davies says. Many choose to isolate themselves from local culture, staying in high-rise enclaves and venturing out in the cocoonlike safety of a tour bus to see "colorful natives."

But those who behave poorly don't mean to be bores; their offenses result from ignorance, he says.

"I want to tear that veil of innocence away and say: 'Look! Look what you're doing!'" Davies says.

For example, the wearing of shorts or skimpy bathing suits can be offensive in some Moslem countries, where it is often thought of as nudity. Drug use or other ill-considered behavior by some Westerners serve as poor examples to impressionable youth in developing nations, says Virginia Hadsell, director of the tourism center.

Hadsell advocates staying in small, locally owned guest houses, using local transportation instead of tour buses, and eating at the same restaurants as local people to benefit local economies.

"When we try to understand a little bit about the people and are prepared with a little of the history and some sense of their culture and some sense of their geography, then we're ready to receive more from them and from the experience," she says.

Margaret Zellers, a writer of travel guidebooks, agrees. In her book "Fielding's 1989 Caribbean" (Fielding, $12.95), she includes extensive information about the political and social climate on the islands.

Caribbean travelers who take the time to learn something about local lifestyles, Zellers says, will have a better vacation because they won't "be intimidated by some of the things they see — offering of drugs, people trying to sell them things. That's just the way life is down here."

But beyond the Caribbean, how many people are ready for an intimate encounter with the realities of the Third World? Travel guidebook author Arthur Frommer says that racial differences and settings that are radically different may make the idea frightening to many Americans.

But there is really nothing to fear, Frommer says. "These people are the gentlest, nicest people on earth," Frommer says. An increasing segment of the American public is opting for such encounters, he says.

Mary Hoffman, of the Minneapolis-based Travelers' Society (a non-profit educational organization), agrees, saying a new breed of sophisticated traveler recognizes the rewards of meeting another culture face to face.

"They want to do something with more meaning, something that will add to their life. Because they've been in situations like that, they know it's a joyful experience. You bring something back that never leaves you," she says.

There is certainly plenty of excitement in visiting a Third World village, Frommer says. In Thailand, for example, a company called Life Travel Services, a Thai-owned company, offers reality tours that allow visitors to experience the village life that is led by nearly three-quarters of the world's population.

"Living with a private family, sharing the cycles of life — that's fascinating. And in my opinion, infinitely more valuable than going (sightseeing)," Frommer says.

AdaWoman Club Pokes Fun At Annual Event

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — While a nearly all-male club is making its annual New Year's Eve trek up 14,110-foot Pike's Peak, a group of women will be making a 1,000-foot ascent of a nearby mountain in jest of the traditional event.

This year's climb will mark the 66th annual climb of Pike's Peak by the AdAmAn club, which plans to set off fireworks at the summit. The group adds a climber each year.

AdaWoman, a band founded in 1982, will make an ascent on Pyramid Mountain in Ute Pass west of Colorado Springs, light sparklers, play Helen Reddy's song "I Am Woman," down champagne and head home for the night, organizers said.

It will be the seventh climb for the AdaWoman club, which was founded almost as a lark by Rita Randolph and several other women who train on Pyramid Mountain.

"It's really beautiful up there, and one morning we had run the mountain and decided this was the way we should start out the new year together," she said.

The women also were prodded that year because AdAmAn, for the first time in its history, was inviting a female guest, veteran climber Sue Graham.

"One of the AdAmAn members said that the reason they hadn't done it before was they didn't know any women who could make it," said Randolph. "Well, I and another of our members ran the Pikes Peak Marathon, so I think we can make it."

AdAmAn historian Jim Bates said Graham, still the only woman invited, will make her fourth climb with the club this year.

London Comedy Goes To Broadway

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Ray Cooney's "Run for Your Wife," the longest-running comedy on the London stage, is Broadway-bound after six years on the West End.

"It's so readily acceptable; that's what people relate to," Cooney, 56, said of his farce about a bigamous taxi driver.

"It can be summed up so simply," he said. "People can understand the dilemma of an innocent guy who, because he didn't have the heart to say no, has got two wives."

Cooney last went to Broadway with his 1967 London hit "Not Now, Darling," but it closed after just six weeks.

Paxton Whitehead, an alumnus of the hit Broadway and London farce "Noises Off."

After such successes as "Move Over, Mrs. Markham," co-written with John Chapman, "Two Into One" and "Wife Begins at Forty," Cooney believes he is ready to try Broadway again.

"My plays are pure situation," he said. "There are no local jokes."

"Run for Your Wife" has been slated for Broadway for years, and Cooney has directed it in productions in New Jersey with David McCallum, in Baltimore with Bob Dishy and at Oakbrook, outside Chicago.

But Cooney said only now had talent and script meshed properly. Under a special agreement with the American actors' union, Equity, three British actors will appear in the play for four months on Broadway, at which point the five Americans completing the New York line-up will transfer to the London production at the Criterion Theater.

While emphasizing his play is a farce, Cooney said "Run for Your Wife" had a darker underside.

"My farces are really inverted tragedies," said Cooney, a London-born carpenter's son who left school when he was 14 to become an actor.

Television Limp Through Weak Year

By Kathryn Baker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Yes, it was a pretty bad year for television. It started out promisingly enough, though. Remember back in January, when CBS anchorman Dan Rather and Vice President George Bush had a shouting match on the "CBS Evening News"? What pathos! What excitement!

But by year's end, the presidential election seemed to be as much a victim of a writers' strike as the networks' prime-time schedule, and only a chair-hurling brawl on Geraldo Rivera's syndicated talk show ignited TV passions.

Here are just a few fascinating highlights of television's year:

CBS finished the television season in last place in the Nielsen ratings for the first time ever, confounding TV columnists who had to get the concepts of "last" and "first" into the same sentence.

The Writers Guild of America went on strike, crippling network preparation of fabulous, innovative new shows for the 1988-89 season. More importantly, "Hee-Haw" celebrated its 20th anniversary, while dwindling viewership for ABC's multimillion-dollar "Dolly!" prompted network executives to contemplate the imponderable universe.

The networks moved lock, stock and make-up artists to Moscow for a newsless summit between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev. Viewers were enthralled by the final episode of "St. Elsewhere," which revealed the entire series to have been imagined by an autistic child.

NBC News launched a series of summer documentaries, no doubt inspired by Edward R. Murrow, beginning with the riveting "Of Macho and Men," an examination of male strip-tease artist as metaphor for our troubled times.

Floor fights that might have made the political conventions such boffo programming dissipated in the waning days of the decade-long primaries. The network news divisions nevertheless moved lock, stock and catering trucks to Atlanta in July for coverage of the Democrats, then whined about the lack of street riots that made the 1968 version such a ratings bonanza. CBS courageously marched on, however, and used the setting as an opportunity for Dan Rather and Walter Cronkite to announce to reporters that they really do like each other, honest.

By August, network audiences were plummeting — no, not in Nielsen ratings, but literally diving for remote control devices. The writers' strike ended, but the networks revealed that the fabulous, innovative new shows planned for the 1988-89 season would be delayed, and, meanwhile, the networks would be forced — against their will, of course — to air mediocre swill.

Two talk show guests revealed they hoaxed Oprah Winfrey. Sally Jessy Raphael and Geraldo Rivera by posing as a phony sex surrogate and a middle-aged virgin, prompting producers to decry the disservice to a public desperately in need of accurate information on sexual deviations.

GTG Entertainment launched its ballyhooed "USA Today: The Television Show" and set a new standard for out-of-whack hype-versus-quality ratios.

In September, even the Summer Olympics on NBC could not match CBS and ABC's heart-pounding race to see who could get the first made-for-TV movie about Liberace on the air.

In October, CBS premiered the Mary Tyler Moore and Dick Van Dyke shows, "Annie McGuire" and "The Van Dyke Show," bringing tears to the eyes of television critics who mistily recalled "Life with Lucy."

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR SATURDAY Dec. 31

- ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Keep a temperate attitude, and let others entertain you. Fate will bring you exciting prospects. Trust those around you who use good sense.
- TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Home may seem like a wildlife refuge with too many, too much and too soon. Put the over-indulgents to bed, and have fun.
- GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): You may find it difficult to know just where you fit in. You may be headed in so many directions, you can't find the high point.
- MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Set your priorities. Relate to young family members who expect extra privileges tonight. Stop worrying and have a great time.
- LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Share a beautiful day with family and loved ones. Time may move slowly until you get to the energy-packed evening: You make a great companion.
- VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Don't be too hard on yourself. Everything does not have to be perfect. Let your hair down, go with the flow and have some fun.
- LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): You love meeting new people, but don't neglect those close to you. A more-the-merrier attitude can alienate those expecting your attention.
- SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Rely on your intuition to set the pace today. What is planned may not come off exactly on schedule, but it will still be a great night.
- SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Keep driving down to a minimum today. Catch up on a personal matter, possibly involving parents or close relatives.
- CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Something you have been worried about clears up. There is a strong romantic pull of which you can take advantage. Enjoy this evening.
- AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): The day has you on the go. You may feel like a stranger even in a crowd until you get into the swing of things. Tune into others.
- PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): You may feel like sneaking away from the party to be alone with your one and only. Affection runs deep, and you are in the mood for romance.

 Opening lead: King of ♣

There are common misconceptions about playing certain suit combinations.

For example, consider these two holdings: x x x opposite A K J 10 x; and x x opposite A K J 10 x x. With ample entries to the hands, should these combined eight-card holdings be tackled the same way? The auction was interesting. East's one no trump response was an attempt, at favorable vulnerability, to bluff the opponents out of their due. Since North was a passed hand, his three-diamond bid had to denote heart tolerance. The final contract was perfectly reasonable.

West led the king of spades and shifted to a low club. Declarer won in hand, cashed the king of trumps and led a diamond to dummy's ten, which held. A trump finesse succeeded, but when West showed out, declarer was saddled with a trump loser. He switched to the king of diamonds. West grabbed the ace and played another club, and as the cards lay, declarer had to lose a club trick and the trump—down one. Had the combined trump holding been distributed 5-3, declarer's play would have been correct, since he could afford to guard against a singleton queen offside before taking the finesse. Now, if West shows out on the second round of trumps, declarer can get back to dummy for another finesse. However, when the suit is divided 6-2, the odds change dramatically. Since declarer is going to finesse, he should not first cash the king, because the chances of East holding four trumps headed by the queen are considerably greater than finding West with specifically a singleton queen. Had declarer immediately taken two finesses for the queen, he would have landed his vulnerable game.

Do You Know The Game Plan For This Week?

Sure You Do! You Read The Daily Reflector.

The Daily Reflector has been reporting the facts and events that shape the lives of Greenville and Pitt County residents for more than 100 years with honesty, dignity and integrity.

Every weekday and Sunday, we keep you on top of local news and sports, inform you about places to go and things to do in eastern North Carolina and help you plan your shopping. For more than a century, we've continued to meet the changing needs and interests of our community and maintain that commitment every day.

For those of you who are not receiving The Daily Reflector, we'd like to offer a three-month introductory subscription for the price of two months. Once you see how much you get, we're sure you'll become a permanent part of our growing family.

Keeping you in the know.
