Court Will Review Abortion

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court, acting in an appeal urging reversal of its landmark 1973 decision that legalized abortion nationwide, today agreed to review a Missouri law regulating abortions.

The justices said they will study a federal appeals court ruling that struck down key provisions of the state law.

Even before today's action in the appeal filed by Missouri officials, the case had become the most-watched battleground in the continuing political war over abortion. Justice Department lawyers also are urging the high court to use the case as a means of undoing its 1973 ruling, called Roe vs. Wade.

But nothing in the brief order issued today suggested that the justices will reconsider Roe vs. Wade.

The court's eventual decision, expected by July, could resolve the Missouri controversy without significantly changing the 1973 decision or other past rulings on abortion.

The 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last July 13 struck down, among other aspects of the Missouri abortion law, these five provisions:

—A ban on using public hospitals or other government-run facilities for abortions not necessary to save a woman's life.

—A ban prohibiting any public employee from performing or assisting an abortion.

—A ban on using taxpayer money for "encouraging or counseling" women to have abortions.

—A requirement that doctors planning to abort a fetus believed to be older than 19 weeks test for weight and lung capacity to determine whether the fetus is capable of surviving outside the womb.

—A declaration that "the life of each human being begins at conception."

The appeals court upheld a provision in the state law that bans the use of taxpayer money for performing or assisting an abortion. But it said use of a public facility or the services of a public employee cannot be banned if all such costs are reimbursed by a patient.

In the appeal acted on today, Missouri Attorney General William L. Webster said the 8th Circuit court's ruling "expands (Supreme Court) precedents in favor of abortion on demand, further contracts the state's compelling interest in the life of viable, unborn children and disregards this court's holdings that abortion is a private matter which

British Midland Airways jet lies crumpled near Kegworth, England, after Sunday's crash

New Jet Crashes As Both Engines Falter, Killing 44

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KEGWORTH, England — Both engines on a brand-new Boeing 737 apparently failed before the plane crashed along a highway, killing at least 44 people, officials said today. Aviation experts said the chances of double-engine failure were about 10 million to one.

"So far the evidence, although by no means conclusive, is consistent with the right engine having stopped before impact and there are also signs of fire in the left engine," Transport Minister Paul Channon said in an interview on British Broadcasting Corp. television.

Officials raised the number of confirmed dead to 44 late today.

Eighty-two people were injured in the crash.

Investigators recovered the flight recorders from the wreckage today, hoping they might shed light on what caused the accident. Firefighters pumped foam onto the crumpled jet to prevent seeping aviation fuel from catching fire.

The Belfast-bound British Midland Airways jet carrying 126 people broke into three pieces on the edge of Britain's main north-south highway, the M1, in central England on Sunday night.

The twin-engine Boeing 737-400 narrowly missed the small town of Kegworth and plowed into an embankment just a few hundred yards short of the runway as the pilot struggled to make an emergency landing at East Midland Airport, 100 miles north of London.

Ham radio operator Mervyn Solloway said he heard "not a shouted message, but a bit of a frantic one to say, 'We've got problems with the other engine.' That was the last I heard from the aircraft."

British Midland Airways said sabotage was not suspected in the crash, which came less than three weeks after a bomb blew apart Pan Am Flight 103 over the Scottish village of Lockerbie, killing all 259 people on board.

Reagan Budget Recalls Dreams

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Reagan today sent Congress a $1.15 trillion farewell budget that attacked his biggest economic failure, the federal deficit, by offering up again some of his cherished ideas about reducing the size of government.

The president's ninth and final spending plan — out of balance like all of his others — is largely an academic exercise, certain to be overhauled to reflect the priorities of a Democratic-controlled Congress and an incoming president, George Bush, after his inauguration Jan. 20.

If Reagan's ideas were adopted in their entirety, the deficit would fall to $92.5 billion in the 1990 fiscal year, lower than at any time in his presidency.

"This budget shows that a gradual elimination of the deficit is possible without raising taxes," Reagan said in his budget message. "It can be done in a reasonable, responsible way — with discipline and fairness. New taxes are not required."

In his proposals for the fiscal year that starts Oct. 1, 1989, Reagan advocated terminating a total of 82 government programs, slashing spending on farm programs by $9.7 billion and trimming the growth in Medicare and Medicaid, the giant health programs, by about $5 billion. The Pentagon's budget, on the other hand, would be increased by $16.4 billion.

The budget would provide increased spending for two of the government's most pressing new problems, bailing out hundreds of insolvent savings and loan institutions and cleaning up contaminated nuclear weapons plants. AIDS research and space exploration would also receive increases.

Bush Budget Coming

WASHINGTON (AP) — The $1.15 trillion budget President Reagan proposed today will pave the way smoothly for George Bush, who must submit his own proposal soon after taking office, Reagan administration and Bush transition officials said.

Outgoing Budget Director Joseph R. Wright Jr. said the final Reagan budget was designed with a "dual purpose" in mind, summing up Reagan's philosophy while providing Bush "with a good base to begin negotiations with Congress."

Bush himself has said he won't submit a completely new plan of his own, but will outline what he'll "add and take off there," much of it to be spelled out in an address to a joint session of Congress in early February.

Congressional Democratic leaders have indicated they would like to get Bush's final budget plan by no later than Feb. 20 so Congress can begin work on its own budget and meet the goal of finishing work on spending bills before the August recess.

And leaders are indicating they are giving Bush the benefit of the doubt on his much-touted concept of a "flexible freeze" to hold overall spending increases generally to the rate of inflation — but without a tax increase.

Justices Allow Exclusion Of Jurors Because Of Race

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court, in a case involving a black man's murder by Ku Klux Klan members, today allowed criminal defendants to exclude potential jurors because of their race.

The court, over two dissenting votes, rejected arguments by Alabama prosecutors — supported by law enforcement officials nationwide — that defense lawyers unlawfully are seeking to impanel an all-white jury in the Klan case.

Justices Byron R. White and Anthony M. Kennedy voted to hear arguments in the case but four votes are needed to grant such review.

The issue was whether a 1986 Supreme Court ruling against racial discrimination in jury selection applies to defendants as well as prosecutors.

The court in 1986 ruled that prosecutors may not disqualify potential jurors based on their race. The 7-2 decision curtailed dramatically the traditionally broad power of prosecutors to strike prospective jurors from trials by using "peremptory" or automatic challenges.

The ruling, which overturned a black man's conviction by an all-white jury in Kentucky, established that the Constitution's equal-protection guarantees bar racially motivated jury selection by prosecutors.

But the decision left unanswered whether the same guarantees apply when defense lawyers seek to mold the racial make-up of the jury.

Generally, constitutional safeguards prohibit abuses by the government and not by private citizens.

The case acted on today stems from the March 21, 1981, killing of Michael Donald, 19, a black man who lived in Mobile, Ala.

Donald was abducted at random from a city street, beaten to death and his body hanged from a tree.

Budget Battles Top Issues Facing States

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Aid to education, prison overcrowding, insurance reform, property tax relief and the environment are among the issues challenging state lawmakers this year, but none looms as large as the battle of the budget.

It's income vs. spending, and if revenues are up, so are costs of services. Just to stay even is more expensive, without talking about adding money for things like schools, road repair or social services.

"What we face in the coming months will not be easy," Connecticut Gov. William A. O'Neill said last week in his state-of-the-state address. "We will have to say 'No' when we really want to say 'Yes.'"

Some states, including Alaska, California, Connecticut, Iowa, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Montana, New York and West Virginia, are running in the red or face deficits in the coming fiscal year. Others, like Illinois, have avoided deficits by no-frills budgets and face a backlash from the lean years.

A lucky few are running surpluses, heating up debate on what to do with the largesse.

Caution abounds. New York and Massachusetts saw surpluses of a few years ago turn to deficits — at least $636 million in Massachusetts' current $11.6 billion budget and more than $1 billion in New York's budget of more than $28 billion.

States expecting to do well this year — Hawaii, Kansas, Minnesota, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, Virginia, Idaho and Maryland — are fearful of the same thing happening to them.

"It's real easy to make a tax cut right now, and we all look good for re-election," says Hawaii House Finance Committee Chairman Joseph Souki. "But is that the wisest thing?"

Lawmakers, having read voters' lips, are loath to talk about hiking taxes. The idea is being mentioned mainly in the states with the biggest money woes, and the most likely candidates are increased taxes on cigarettes, alcohol and gasoline, rather than raising state income taxes.

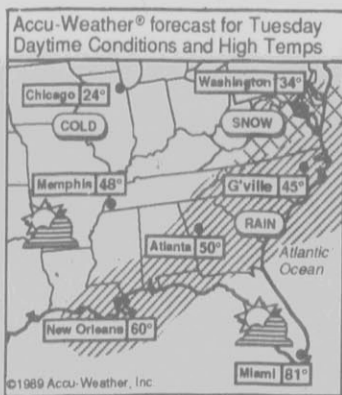

Spending on education has perhaps the highest priority. Even in West Virginia, with a fiscal headache totaling $680 million, Gov.-elect Gaston Caperton has promised unspecified raises to the state's teachers, who rank 46th nationally in salaries. Illinois education officials, who have gone two years without a significant budget increase, are expected to seek increases totaling more than $600 million this year.

Coupled with increasing aid to education is the need in some states to restructure the system for public school financing to reduce the disparities between rich and poor districts. Montana's Legislature

Final Reagan Budget Recalls Old Goals

While Reagan was presenting his budget only 11 days before leaving office, many of its broad outlines were expected to be adopted by Bush, who has said he will unveil his own proposals to a special joint session of Congress soon after taking office.

In two key respects, the two budgets will be alike. Both men pledged to cut the deficit, which is projected to climb this year to $161.5 billion, without resorting to new taxes and without touching Social Security.

But Bush is expected to seek a smaller increase in defense spending while allocating more money in such areas as child care, cleaning up the environment and housing the homeless.

Skeptical Democrats believe Bush will find it impossible to fulfill all his campaign promises for higher spending while relying on a "flexible freeze" on other government programs to eliminate the budget deficit without resorting to new taxes.

"President Reagan's final budget is really irrelevant at this point," Rep. William Gray, D-Pa., former chairman of the House Budget Committee, said today on "CBS This Morning." "It is a farewell gesture that every president is required to do. It only becomes relevant if George Bush today, tomorrow or this week says, 'that's my budget.' I don't expect him to do that." Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, called Reagan's proposal "amiable fiction."

Reagan will leave office with a budget that proposes collecting $1.059 trillion in revenues and spending $1.152 trillion, leaving a budget deficit of $92.5 billion.

The deficit, if realized, would be the lowest since a $73.7 billion imbalance between spending and revenues in 1981, the year Reagan took office with a pledge to balance the budget by 1984. Reagan saw that promise swamped by a tide of red ink which has almost tripled the national debt.

In his budget message, Reagan blamed the huge deficits on the severe 1981-82 recession, which reduced government revenues, and on the refusal of Congress to go along with his spending cuts. But he predicted that the deficit could be totally eliminated by 1993 if Congress adopts his spending cuts. Similar predictions of future budget deficits in past Reagan budgets have proved to be wildly optimistic, however.

"We have an opportunity this year to put the worst of the deficit problem behind us and enable the next administration to begin its term of office with a clean slate," Reagan said.

Reagan's $92.5 billion deficit target for 1990 would be well within the Gramm-Rudman requirement which sets a $100 billion deficit goal for 1990. This law establishes declining deficit targets leading to a balanced budget in 1993, holding out the threat of across-the-board spending cuts if the targets are not met. Many private economists believe

Reagan's 1990 deficit estimate is based on overly optimistic assessments about how the economy will perform, including expectations that growth will continue at a rapid clip while inflation and interest rates both decline.

Among the 82 individual programs recommended for termination by Reagan are the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Legal Services Corporation, the Economic Development Administration, the Appalachian Regional Commission, direct loans by the Small Business Administration, Amtrak railroad passenger subsidies, mass transit grants and subsidies to airlines serving small airports.

Reagan has tried and failed over the years to get Congress to go along with these proposals.

The president's final budget projects his defense buildup, one of the hallmarks of his presidency, by proposing a 5.4 percent increase to $315.2 billion in spending authority, 2 percent higher than the expected rate of inflation. As part of the increase, the budget seeks a 44 percent increase in spending on development of the spaced-based Star Wars nuclear defense shield.

The president also proposes making a downpayment of $900 million to start cleaning up and modernizing the government's aging nuclear weapons facilities, a project that the Energy Department estimates could cost as much as $128 billion over the next two decades.

Likewise, the budget projects spending $16 billion this year and $9 billion next year to bail out hundreds of insolvent savings and loan institutions. From 1988 through 1994, Reagan's budget estimates spending to mop up the S&L mess will exceed $80 billion but leaves the problem of finding the necessary funds to the incoming Bush administration.

In the area of cuts, Reagan's budget proposed trimming the huge Medicare program, which provides health care to Social Security recipients, by $3.2 billion below the projected increase for 1990, primarily by reducing the fees received by doctors and hospitals.

Medicaid, which pays the health bills of poor people, would be cut by $1.7 billion over its projected increase for 1990 with the savings coming from reductions in federal payments to the states, which run the Medicaid program.

must fashion a new system to replace one that a state court last year declared unconstitutional.

Prisons are another big-ticket item. Michigan is in the middle of a massive prison building program; by 1991, the state will have spent $900 million to build 28 prisons, and if projections hold true, the system still will be overcrowded.

"The cost of operating prisons is eating us alive," said Michigan Senate Appropriations Chairman Harry Gast.

Virginia is building two new prisons to increase its inmate capacity by 2,600, but corrections officials say the state still will be at least 1,000 beds short in a few years and more money will be sought.

"The cost of crime is expensive, so we must accept the fact that the money drawn to support the criminal justice system is money that we will not have for the wide range of other important needs throughout the commonwealth," said Gov. Gerald L. Baliles.

Once lawmakers have their budget priorities settled, they still won't lack for issues.

Rising auto insurance costs are expected to be debated in New Jersey, Pennsylvania and South Carolina. And California is awaiting the results of a court challenge to Proposition 103, a voter initiative passed last November that requires a 20 percent rate rollback for most kinds of insurance and tougher state regulation of insurers.

The environment and waste disposal is another sore spot for some states. New Jersey suffered a second consecutive summer of beach closings because of high bacteria levels and medical waste washing ashore, and the Legislature passed a series of measures designed to help clean up the state's ocean waters.

However, other proposals to track the disposal of medical waste, impose tougher penalties on polluters and create a powerful commission to protect the coast remain mired in disputes.

South Carolina residents are clamoring for reductions in the amount of hazardous waste buried in a landfill used by more than 30 other states, and the Legislature is studying ways to deal with rapidly filling solid-waste landfills, also a consideration in New Hampshire.

Interstate Roads Fail To Solve Urban Woes

By Josh Getlin
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — It was the post-war American Dream. When Congress approved the Interstate Highway System in 1944, it paved the way for some 44,000 miles of new roads that would link cities from coast to coast and whisk commuters from suburban homes to downtown jobs.

Now, the interstate system is virtually complete, a monument to America's love affair with the automobile. But in the nation's rapidly growing suburbs, drivers face more woes than ever. From coast to coast, millions of motorists are caught up in massive traffic jams, fighting their way through streets that were never designed to handle so many cars.

For a growing number of Americans, the drive from their homes to nearby shopping centers has come to rival the ordeal of a stop-and-go commute to work. Unforeseen 40 years ago, suburban congestion has become the fastest-growing traffic problem in America today.

But it is only recently that Washington has begun to take notice. Federal highway programs have been primarily designed to build freeways, leaving state and county governments to resolve congestion on local streets. This year, however, Congress will start drafting a new blueprint for the nation's $14 billion federal highway program, and experts predict that metropolitan gridlock will at last be a prime target.

"Clearly, we're facing problems in the suburbs that were not envisioned years ago," said Rep. Glenn M. Anderson, D-Calif., the chairman of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee. "As we decide the future of the highway program, we have to be aware of the need for solutions. ... The economic health of the nation depends on it."

Indeed, the failure of suburban streets to handle the growing number of cars has caused heavy traffic jams on the nation's interstates, as many motorists now use freeways as part of their daily commute. That, in turn, has made it difficult for millions of trucks across the nation to maintain on-time deliveries for their cargoes, causing delays and economic problems for a multitude of businesses.

"Ultimately, this local problem becomes a barrier to interstate commerce," said Robert Farris, director of the Federal Highway Administration. "All of these transportation issues are interrelated, and we've got to start looking at them simultaneously."

For those reasons, Anderson's panel will hold hearings on a myriad of transportation problems this year, including suburban congestion, crumbling bridges, crowded interstates, mass transit needs and the environmental consequences of building more highways. If all goes as planned, Congress will approve a new Surface Transportation Act in 1991, the first of the "post-interstate" era.

The distinction is important since a broad coalition of transportation experts and state and local officials will be urging Congress to shift its attention away from freeway projects. In particular, they want federal money now earmarked for highway work to be distributed with fewer strings attached so cities and suburbs can have greater flexibility in devising ways to relieve their jammed streets.

On the local level, that could mean more projects to widen suburban boulevards, synchronize traffic lights, launch light rail systems and experiment with van-pooling programs.

In drawing up the new plan, many experts say, it is crucial that Washington avoid trying to devise one cure for suburban congestion, because its forms and causes differ substantially from one community to the next across the nation.

"There is no magic bill that Congress can pass into law that will solve this problem," said Francis B. Francois, executive director of the Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials. "If there are 50 different metropolitan areas with the problem, then 50 different answers are needed. What works in Los Angeles won't work in Boston, and that's why there needs to be more flexibility in the system."

Since 1956, the sole source of money for the program has been the 9 cents per gallon federal gasoline tax, which goes into a special account called the Highway Trust Fund. In recent years, Congress has withheld spending about 10 percent of the money flowing into the trust fund to help offset the nation's $155 billion budget deficit. Currently, while $14 billion is distributed annually for highways, there is an unused surplus of about $13.6 billion in the fund.

Anderson and others would like to see that money freed up for transportation projects. But they have lost several House votes to exempt the highway funds from budget cut-backs.

Another potential barrier to increased transportation spending would be a proposed increase in the federal gasoline tax, now being discussed by members of Congress as a deficit-fighting measure. Highway advocates fear that such an increase would discourage many states from raising their own gasoline taxes, and thus retard the growth of locally sponsored transportation programs.

Few dispute the need for change. Federal, state and local officials agree that the current highway program is geared to a bygone era of sleepy bedroom suburbs and commuters heading for distant, downtown jobs. In the last 30 years, there has been an explosive growth in the size and economic importance of American suburbs.

From 1960 to 1980, the number of jobs located in the suburbs grew from 14 million to 33 million. More than 25 million commuters drive every day from a suburban home to a suburban job, comprising 38 percent of all trips. Not surprisingly, the suburb-to-suburb commute has become the nation's most prevalent route of daily transportation, according to a demographic study by the Eno Foundation for Transportation.

As a result, state and local officials are demanding that the federal highway program keep pace with the shift.

Waddling Ducks Set Off Civil War In Peaceful Florida Neighborhood

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. AUGUSTINE BEACH, Fla. — A flock of ducks that waddle through yards and dirty streets has prompted a neighborhood civil war of sorts in which both sides are crying foul about the other's tactics.

The domesticated Muscovy duck population has swelled to 200, prompting some to begin efforts to reduce their numbers. The methods have included egg stealing, trapping, maiming, and ducks being run down by motorists.

"The ducks got caught in a people problem," says Jim Vanairsdale, a pro-duck member of a committee named by the City Commission to try to resolve the yearlong dispute. "It's sad what has happened."

Those in favor of the ducks claim the animals were in the Woodland neighborhood when the middle- to upper-class area was established more than 20 years ago. Opponents say the birds are too aggressive, leave droppings underfoot and mate in public.

Many in this oceanside city of 3,200 people agreed the duck population should be reduced, and the dispute has been focused on how many ducks would be allowed. For some people, one Muscovy is one duck too many.

A duck trapper was hired to relocate the ducks to Georgia, but there were questions about the humanness of his trapping methods.

The St. Augustine Humane Society helped catch others, but they relocated them too close, enabling some to return.

The ducks are such an emotional issue here that they dominated three monthly meetings of the St. Augustine Beach City Commission. One meeting erupted into name-calling before Commissioner Pete Dodson suggested last summer that a committee find a solution.

"I agreed to act as a moderator. Two people from each side were appointed to act as a committee," he said.

"We've got to live together and stop this monkey business."

At the committee's first meeting,

Dodson asked each member to tell him how many ducks should be allowed.

The numbers began at zero, with the average being 17, which became the standard.

Then Bill Van Marter, a former city commissioner who had supported ridding the neighborhood of Muscovy ducks, complained in August that his wife and granddaughter were attacked by a rogue drake in their back yard.

Mrs. Van Marter, who declined to be interviewed, told officials at the time that she was forced to fling the bird, "as big as a turkey," into a nearby palm tree to stop the attack.

Insurance Charges

RALEIGH (AP) — Savings and loan associations that engage in risky lending should be charged higher rates than more conservatively managed S&Ls for insurance of deposits, North Carolina officials said.

But the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp., which regulates S&Ls, responded coldly to the suggestion, saying it would be difficult to agree on a fair method of charging for insurance based on risk.

William Seidman, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. said such a system would help solve a financial crisis facing the FDIC, which insures deposits in S&Ls.

James Sparger, president of First Federal Savings and Loan Association of Durham, agreed, saying, "Those of us that are not at risk are paying for those that are."

But Theo Pitt Jr., president of Pioneer Savings Bank in Rocky Mount and past president of the U.S. League of Savings Institutions, said, "The idea sounds good, but it is very difficult to come up with a structure that is fair and equitable for charging those premiums."

BITE ADJUSTMENT AND JAW PAIN

In many cases, the aches and pains that people experience in their jaws (and related areas) are the result of a bad bite. Often, correcting the bite may be all that is necessary to alleviate the problem.

The dentist will examine your bite and see if there is a deflecting surface where your teeth are meeting incorrectly. He may adjust the teeth surfaces with high-speed burs or diamond stones. This is called equilibration or bite adjustment. A very fine knowledge of occlusion (how the teeth meet) is needed to recognize any discrepancies in the bite, as they may be very subtle.

Sometimes the bite cannot be corrected by equilibrating because the biting surfaces of the teeth need to be rebuilt. If this is your situation, the dentist may recommend onlays or crowns as he restores your bite to a healthy occlusion. Occasionally, orthodontic treatment may be necessary to realign the teeth, and this alone may correct the faulty bite.

If you have aches and pains in your jaw, call our office today for an appointment. We will be glad to assist you to proper dental health.

Note:
We welcome new patients,
both children and adults.

Pick Again

Mayoral Vote Not An Issue

Pick another issue, Mr. Mayor. Choose education or traffic or zoning or tax reduction. Focus on better cooperation between Greenville and Pitt County. Bear down on drugs. Emphasize capital needs.

But leave the mayoral vote alone. That's a non-issue. And there's an ample number of pressing items issues facing the city — needs that require the attention of a mayor dedicated to the betterment of the community; problems that can hobble Greenville's quest for growth and vigor. Whether the city's mayor can vote on every issue that comes before the city council is not one of these issues, needs or problems.

While it's true the city failed to obtain essential approval from the U.S. Justice Department when it banned the mayoral vote in 1981, that oversight does not alter the sound reasoning behind the change. Neither does it invalidate the decision, Mr. Mayor, as you claim, and give you an instant right to vote. No one, not the federal government or the city's legal experts, have given you that privilege.

Remember the reasons the vote was banned, Mr. Mayor. The system wasn't producing sound government. First, the mayor had too much power when he could vote.'

Remember the reasons the vote was banned, Mr. Mayor. The system wasn't producing sound government. First, the mayor had too much power when he could vote. There's no better way to say it. A mayoral vote encouraged the city's top elected leader to hand pick candidates for council. Once these candidates reached office, the mayor had voting power plus control of the council. That's not balanced government and it didn't work in the best interest of the city.

Second, a mayoral vote has historically worked against minority interests. While the city has a black mayor now, it won't always. Greenville worked very hard in 1985 to revise its voting districts and method to increase minority representation on the council. Those changes have been effective, and have, appropriately, prompted better attention to minority issues. But that improvement, again, depends on balance, and giving the mayor too much voice in government disrupts that symmetry.

Progress means to go forward. But allowing a mayoral vote would be a step backward, a return to the past. Greenville doesn't need to regress.

So before you waste the city's time and energy, please pick an important item to focus on, Mr. Mayor. And don't insist on voting on issues now, as you say you will. That would be disruptive.

Remember, there are plenty of valid issues for an elected public official — one that wishes to serve his constituency — to choose from. Pick a good one.

Gadhafi Needed Demons To Rise

John Cooley

President Reagan's critics have often asserted that Col. Moammar Gadhafi, Libya's leader, is Reagan's favorite and most convenient villain. He is, they say, the softest target available to the outgoing president since the U.S. invasion of Grenada in 1984.

However, anyone who has followed Gadhafi's spectacular rise and slow decline comes to realize that Gadhafi, too, has needed villains and demonic adversaries.

Since his damaging encounter with United States naval and air forces in 1986, Gadhafi had been downplaying his depiction of demons and projection of himself as a sort of white knight of Arabism — the champion and hero of Moslem liberation forces in an unequal struggle against an unjust Western world. He had patiently but with indifferent success been trying to give himself a new image — that of a responsible Arab statesman. But his growing confrontation with the Reagan administration over his suspicious chemical plant south of Tripoli was sharpened by Wednesday's air battle in which Gadhafi once again lost planes to U.S. fighters.

The first of Gadhafi's villains was Italian fascist colonialism in the 1930s. Gadhafi's father fought and survived the bitter guerrilla war of Libyan schoolteacher Omar el Mokhtar's partisans against the regime of Italian dictator Benito Mussolini. The Italian army needed most of the time between its invasion of Libya in 1911 and its final defeat and execution of Mokhtar in 1931 to subdue Libya's proud and stubborn people.

By the time Moammar Gadhafi, a recalcitrant teen-age schoolboy, was disciplined in high school for extracurricular political activities, his demon was the British-backed monarchy of modern Libya's once and only king, Idris el Saoussi.

By the early 1960s, when he entered military school and then took specialized training at Britain's Royal Signals School at Beaconsfield, England, Gadhafi's adversaries were shared by many of the younger, nationalist Arabs of those days: Israel; the "imperialist" regimes of Britain, France and, to a much lesser degree, the United States.

In the months just after the young Libyan army lieutenant and his like-minded companions evicted King Idris in a bloody coup on Sept. 1, 1969, and set up a "collective leadership" inspired by Egyptian leader Gamal Abdel Nasser, many U.S. policy-makers were inclined to take a bland view of Gadhafi.

After all, argued some American diplomats, hadn't Gadhafi taken a strongly anti-Communist stand, as a good Moslem? Wasn't he a pure uncorrupted Arab nationalist? Hadn't he kept the Soviets at arms length?

(This, of course, was long after Soviet dictator Josef Stalin's unsuccessful bid for Soviet bases in Libya in 1945, and shortly before Gadhafi's own massive purchases of Soviet arms began in 1970-71.)

My own first meeting and only real private conversation with Gadhafi, in September 1969 when he was still an almost unknown member of the collective leadership, convinced me that his personality showed a mass of contradictions and complications. He was — then, at least — a dreamer and idealist, but also a shrewd political schemer, given to fits of acute depression when he couldn't get his own way.

Somewhat anti-American, perhaps, the State Department's policy-makers thought. After all, Gadhafi had evicted the British from their bases,

'Can Gadhafi's mercurial career survive yet another major confrontation with the United States? He may yet prove to be a major problem ...'

and the United States from one of the biggest and most useful U.S. Air Force bases overseas, Wheelus Field. But, just as British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher was to say much later of Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, for Americans Gadhafi seemed "like a man you could talk to."

Shrewdly, Gadhafi hired good money managers and oil technicians. He left Libya's booming oil business out of his seemingly crack-brained socialist economic schemes in his ideological primer, "Green Book." With big oil and American oil technology to keep it flowing, Libya prospered. A country of less than 3 million people, Libya earned no less than $20 billion in 1980. Enough money, in fact, to finance a healthy development program and many "liberation" causes from Northern Ireland and southern Africa to more radical components of the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Moros Liberation Movement in the Philippines.

With possibilities for new military and political adventures shrinking with the revenues, Gadhafi turned to reshaping the image blackened by accusations of terrorism and the resulting military blows of 1986. He made peace with Chad, which had swallowed much Libyan manpower and money in a futile series of territorial and tribal wars.

Europeans, Gadhafi's best trading partners after President Reagan's progressive economic boycotts of Libya and withdrawal of the American oil companies took effect in 1986, took heart. Certainly, they believed, the Americans had exaggerated Gadhafi's supposedly demonic powers. Here, they said, was a man you could not only talk to, but do business with — within the limitations imposed by people who are late in paying their bills.

Gadhafi's old enemy, President Reagan, remained. For months after the April 1986 American bombing of Tripoli and Benghazi, not exactly a successful military operation but a punishing blow for him, Gadhafi kept a low profile.

With Europeans, Arabs and Africans, he cultivated his "Mr. Nice Guy" image. One of his latest moves before the Wednesday air skirmish with the United States was to offer Switzerland's International Committee of the Red Cross his mediation to assist them in returning to a danger-ridden Lebanon they had quit in haste. Then there was Gadhafi's gauche offer to free two little French girls, held by the notorious Palestinians of the Abu Nidal group, as a "Christmas gift to the world's children." This only served to highlight his own ties to Abu Nidal, the radical Palestinian opposed to Yasser Arafat, at a time when the group emerged as a suspect in the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland, before Christmas.

Can Gadhafi's mercurial career survive yet another major confrontation with the United States? He may yet prove to be a major problem for the administration of George Bush after Jan. 20, as well as an always embarrassing client for Soviet President Gorbachev.

In A Regressive Modern World, Advantages Flow To Advantaged

WASHINGTON — Jay McInerney, the novelist, knows about fashions, being a chronicler, product and shaper of them. He says drug use is going out of fashion. But the bad news (it is hardly news, it was so predictable) is that unfashionable people are inheriting the whirlwind.

George Will

This is especially so regarding crack. "That's strictly a class thing," says McInerney, 33. "I don't see it among anybody I know." McInerney is quoted in a Washington Post report on the emergence of a "two-tier" drug culture. That is part of a broader phenomenon, the emergence on many fronts of a two-tier society as modern life becomes increasingly regressive, and not merely in monetary terms.

McInerney's "Bright Lights, Big City" is a picaresque tale of a Holden Caulfield of the '80s, a young man with a habit of "hoovering" cocaine. But McInerney reports that the Holdens have cleaned up their acts: "People my age, we've been through the cocaine wars and we've seen it can hurt you and even kill you. It's become unfashionable among the people who made it fashionable. It's really not around much any more."

It's around, not far from the Manhattan haunts of people like McInerney. "People my age, we've..." He means only people of his small social experience. But he is right about "the people who made it fashionable," people like him.

James Q. Wilson writes that most of the most dangerous drugs — heroin, cocaine, LSD, for example — have first been used by affluent, educated people. Drug use was promoted by people who considered themselves liberated from deadening restraints (including the law). Such people were intellectual at least in the limited sense that they possessed — or were possessed by — theories, about drugs as keys to peace, self-discovery, self-expression, fulfillment.

When self-discovery turned into self-destruction, these experimenters, "being affluent and educated, had access to treatment programs and support systems that gave them a good chance of finding their way back to normality." But, says Wilson, to people less advantaged, the pursuit of bliss was a one-way path to an abyss.

"What began as a clever experiment for affluent Americans quickly became a living nightmare for disadvantaged Americans. Drug use has not spread because drug pushers have forced it on us, but because the apostles of unconstrained self-expression...celebrated the value of self-indulgence."

There is a pattern here. It is axiomatic that the rich get richer. They have money to put to work making more money. However, there is a more encompassing axiom: In this information age, the advantaged become more so, and the disadvantaged fall from the back.

Life is increasingly regressive because the benefits of information are distributed disproportionately to those already favored by many advantages. The more certain kinds of information matter, the more unequal society — life — becomes.

In the last quarter-century, since the 1964 Surgeon General's report condemning smoking, it has become clear that the most cost-effective thing government does is disseminate health information. Smoking has become declassé. Alcohol, high blood pressure, red meat, fiber, oat bran, seat belts, safe sex — the list is long. In a broadly educated middle-class country, information about such matters produces behavioral changes on a dramatic scale.

More and more is being learned about the relationship of particular problems, and of "wellness," to particular patterns of behavior. The more such information is available, the more life-chances are improved — but only for people equipped by upbringing and training to act on information.

Consider AIDS. It is not a democratic disease, threatening us all equally. It is behaviorally based. It is hard to get and easy to prevent. Easy, that is, if information is heeded, which it is by advantaged people.

That is why apocalyptic talk about a "breakout" of AIDS into the general heterosexual population is waning. It is being replaced by anxiety that society will lose interest in AIDS as it becomes increasingly a disease of marginal, inner-city populations such as intravenous drug users and their sex partners. Such people are caught in the culture of urban poverty precisely because they are inadequately educated and lack the ability to regulate their behavior on the basis of important information.

The meals of the poor are unhealthy not merely because they often are meager, but because they are not prepared by people influenced by information about healthy eating. And so it goes. What has always been true is becoming more broadly important: The more information matters, the more advantages flow to the advantaged. As ever, but increasingly, modern life is regressive.

Martin Eschews Flower Prose For Galvanizing Support

John Flesher

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin's second inaugural address didn't exactly have his audience yelling for an encore. But the low-key speech was indicative of what advisers call a desire to get his second term off to a fast start.

The 18-minute speech, delivered after Martin took the oath of office Saturday, was short on ringing, inspirational phrases that future governors might quote. He seemed intent on eschewing flowery prose in favor of galvanizing support for his programs.

Governors customarily emphasize broad themes in inaugural addresses and use their biennial speeches to the General Assembly to unveil policy initiatives. Martin's State of the State address before a joint legislative session is scheduled for Jan. 17.

"The State of the State gets some media attention ... but the inauguration is clearly the focal point," said Alan Pugh, Martin's special counsel. "So he thought he would set out the themes for the administration ... the specific themes."

Four years ago, Martin's inaugural address was based on the theme of "one united state." He spoke in general terms of how the goals of economic development, educational excellence and political freedom can bind North Carolinians and help them overcome regional, political and other differences.

The only specific initiative he mentioned was the tax-cut package on which he had based his 1984 campaign.

"I ... have come to herald a new day for North Carolina" is a typical excerpt from the earlier speech. "With its problems, its opportunities and its challenges, the future calls us together."

On Saturday, Martin opened with a tribute to retiring Secretary of State Thad Fure, a poem about the state and a call for a year-long celebration of

Analysis

"the spirit of North Carolina" in 1990. He then shifted quickly to business.

•He called for improving the quality of public schools by focusing less on money, course offerings, staff-to-student ratios and other "inputs" and devoting more attention to results: test scores, dropout rates and other factors that show how well such massive efforts as the Basic Education Program are working.

'Saturday's speech was virtually devoid of partisan rhetoric and red-flag issues such as the gubernatorial veto — another sign that the former college professor has done his homework.'

•He reiterated his support for statewide implementation of the Career Ladder Program, a system of merit pay for teachers currently under way in 16 school systems. The program has its skeptics in the education field and the General Assembly, and Martin was eager to boost it in front of a television audience and virtually the entire state leadership.

•He promised to create task forces to develop strategies for waging the drug war and protecting the environment.

•He said he would support a highway financing package being assembled by a legislative study committee.

An aide who spoke on condition of anonymity said Martin's advisers dissuaded him from packing the speech with still more policy goals, arguing that he should leave some fresh material for his State of the State address.

"He had it loaded," the aide said. "He's really raring to go." State Republican Chairman Jack Hawke, who managed Martin's 1984 campaign and was his first director of policy and planning, said Saturday's speech was the product of a more knowledgeable and confident governor.

"He had his priorities set, he had his programs in mind and he was ready to hit the ground running, unlike four years ago when he had to spend some time learning state government and deciding exactly what the program was," Hawke said. "What I heard him saying today was he knew where he was going and how he wanted to get there ..."

In his first term, capped by his landslide re-election, Martin showed he is a good politician and knows how to build and maintain popularity with the voters.

Critics said he seemed more interested in politics than running the government. Martin always denied it, but he seems determined to build a substantive legacy in the next four years.

Doing so will require more skillful dealings with legislators. Martin says he's willing to use the tools of his office, such as patronage, to win support for his programs, a change from his first term when he was reluctant to engage in horse trading.

Democratic lawmakers also were infuriated by the stinging attacks Martin would unleash when disagreements arose during his first term. Saturday's speech was virtually devoid of partisan rhetoric and red-flag issues such as the gubernatorial veto — another sign that the former college professor has done his homework.

Sympathy Shouldn't Exonerate Nussbaum

Barbara Roessner

This is what I would like to know: Why is Elizabeth Morgan in jail while Hedda Nussbaum is free? Why, if you stand up to an abusive man on behalf of your child, do you get prison, but if you submit to him, you get sympathy?

Morgan is a Washington, D.C., plastic surgeon who has spent the past 17 months in the District Detention Center for hiding her 3-year-old daughter, Hilary, from ex-husband Erick Foretich. Morgan accuses Foretich of repeatedly sexually assaulting Hilary, whose whereabouts she refuses to disclose in defiance of the courts.

Foretich, an oral surgeon, dismisses the allegations of incest as the ravings of a sick woman bent on revenge and celebrity. A standing court order permits him unsupervised visitation with Hilary, who he claims is being unfairly and illegally denied a father's love.

Nussbaum, an emotional and physical wreck of a woman, couldn't be more different — or have chosen a more divergent path — than the arrogant, histrionic Morgan. When her lover, Joel Steinberg, allegedly tortured her and Lisa, the 6-year-old they illegally adopted, Nussbaum did nothing.

Over the years, Nussbaum lost her spleen, her teeth and her mind. Finally, Lisa lost her life.

Both those women, similar in social and economic standing, perceived their children to be in imminent danger. Yet one chose to fight back no matter what the consequences; the other, at some point still in possession of a will, chose to give in. One little girl is in hiding; the other is dead.

One woman is in jail; the other had all charges against her dropped on the grounds she was incapable of either killing or saving Lisa.

Like so many people, I have followed the details of the Steinberg trial with a kind of macabre fascination. I have squirmed at the accounts of squalor and cruelty and cringed at the sight of Nussbaum's broken face.

And, like other observers, I do feel sorry for Nussbaum and the brutal beatings she endured. But I have also concluded that sympathy cannot exonerate her.

At the very least, Nussbaum was a guilty bystander — as culpable, morally if not legally, as those who watched the infamous Kitty Genovese murder or cheered on the New Bedford, Mass., gang rape similar to that depicted in the film "The Accused."

Nussbaum's psychiatrist describes his patient's passivity as a symptom of "psychic numbing" induced by the relentless physical assaults and mental manipulations allegedly perpetrated by Steinberg. But weren't those other bystanders also anesthetized — by the violence and sexism that permeate our culture? They, too, were victims. But does that absolve them?

Morgan's plight raises the question of just what Nussbaum's options might have been had she been moved to escape or intervene. Incidents of official indifference to domestic violence — whether husband against wife or parent against child — are legion. There is no guarantee that if Nussbaum sought protection from Steinberg she would have gotten it. There is no guarantee she could have saved Lisa.

But to not even try?

Be Fair To Defense Contractors

Milton Eisenberg

WASHINGTON — The government's settlements with Drexel Burnham and other alleged Wall Street wrongdoers have focused attention on the government's ability under RICO — the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act — to freeze a defendant's assets and possibly put it out of business before any trial or verdict.

The Defense Department is using an equally potent weapon to deny defense contractors their day in court in cases involving much less serious crimes than RICO. The government's weapon in defense contractor cases is suspension and debarment rather than a freeze on assets, but the consequences are just as devastating. Before any trial or verdict, a defense contractor can be officially blacklisted and thereby barred from any contract awards. For defense contractors dependent on government contracts for all or most of their business, suspension can spell economic disaster.

In every criminal case, no matter how heinous the offense, the jury is advised that an indictment is not evidence, that the defendant enjoys a presumption of innocence, and that it is the government's burden to convince the jury of the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. These precepts have governed our system of criminal justice for centuries, but they mean nothing if prosecutors are never put to their burden of proof.

Under the suspension and debarment regulations, the mere fact that a contractor has been indicted is sufficient to allow any of a multitude of agency officials to immediately suspend the contractor from any further eligibility for government contracts. This suspension can remain in effect until all of the criminal proceedings are concluded. As a practical matter, this coerces pleas of guilty even to defensible charges in order to bring the criminal proceedings to an end. Even then the contractor is not off the hook. Having pleaded guilty, he must make amends and show contrition and will not be permitted to complain that he pleaded guilty in the first place only because of the suspension. As a result, the plea agreements and related civil and administrative penalties imposed in these cases are all out of proportion to the alleged crimes.

The Department of Defense, of course, should not deal with irresponsible contractors, but this does not in any way justify the present system. Corporations can be (and have been) indicted for wrongful conduct by one or a handful of their thousands of employees. No self-governance program, no matter how well conceived or faithfully administered, can totally safeguard against such wrongdoing. The FBI, the CIA, the military, Congress, the courts, even our churches, bear daily witness to the fact that corruption can exist in the ranks of our nation's best-run and most sacred institutions. We don't assume that the institutions are irresponsible because some of their agents stray from the straight and narrow. No one would even consider barring such institutions from carrying out their normal operations while the alleged miscreants are awaiting trial.

The American Bar Association and the Packard Commission have urged reform. Unfortunately, the media seem largely unaware of the problem even though it has involved a number of major defense contractors as well as hundreds of small businesses. The contractors, for their part, are too vulnerable to pressure from their government customers to stir up any fuss. Even though the present system offends any notion of justice, there are no bleeding hearts for defense contractors.

As is often the case with government policies, we have gone from one extreme to another in dealing with defense contractors. President Eisenhower warned of the military-industrial complex. David Packard and others are now warning that the "current adversarial atmosphere will harm our industrial base." There is a middle ground here as there is in most such situations. It does not demean the importance of rooting out corruption wherever it exists to suggest that fair procedures are the most likely to produce the best results.

Shellfishing

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Lingered concern about damage from the red tide has cast a shadow on today's opening of the season for harvesting bay scallops, shellfishermen and Marine Fisheries officials say.

"It doesn't look real good," said William Hogarth, director of the state Division of Marine Fisheries. "Don't look for anything great."

Hogarth said scallop populations are still suffering the aftereffects of the red tide, which killed 98 percent of young scallops last year and cost local fishermen about $4.5 million in revenues from clams, scallops and oysters.

Because scallops have a short life expectancy after spawning, Hogarth said the season is being opened to give fishermen the best opportunity possible to make money.

Return Delayed

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — Charles Lyons Jr., former chancellor at Fayetteville State University, has delayed his scheduled return to the campus because of the death of his father, according to the current chancellor, Dr. Vic Hackley.

Lyons resigned in 1987 and was given a one-year paid sabbatical for calendar year 1988 with the understanding he would return to Fayetteville State University as a political science professor at the beginning of 1989. In the letter to Hackley, dated Dec. 27, Lyons said the unexpected death of his father in late December prevented him from preparing for the transition back to teaching.

Charles Lyons Sr., a retired farmer who lived in Bethel, died Dec. 17, according to a spokesman for Flanagan Funeral Home of Greenville.

Permit Voided

ASHEVILLE (AP) — Vulcan Materials Co. has made no decision on whether to appeal a judge's ruling voiding its permit for a mine in Flat Creek, Vulcan's attorney said Friday.

"They are looking at all the various options available," said regional corporate spokesman Gayle Anderson in Winston-Salem. "They have made no determination of what they will do next."

Buncombe County Superior Court Judge Robert D. Lewis ruled last week Vulcan's state-issued permit was invalid because the company had not undertaken an environmental impact study required by Buncombe County.

Vulcan's plans have been unpopular with Flat Creek residents since it announced it would dig a 58-acre, open-pit quarry two miles north of Weaverville. Residents, backed by geologists, said the quarry would drain wells and pollute residential water supplies.

Unwanted Lake

RALEIGH (AP) — A 5-acre pond in Cary will be auctioned off Tuesday at the Wake County courthouse because its owners are $3,000 behind in their county taxes.

"It's the lake nobody wants," said Charles Henderson, the Cary town attorney.

Greenbrier Realty and Construction Co., which owns the lake, has been trying to turn the pond over to homeowners ever since the corporation developed the Coronado Village subdivision in the late 1970s.

The homeowners, pleading the high cost of liability insurance and maintenance, say they can't afford to do take over the lake.

Mavretic, Ramsey Claim They Have Votes To Win Speakership

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — State Rep. Joe Mavretic says he has enough support to oust House Speaker Liston Ramsey, but the four-term incumbent says he is confident, and that the post will go to whoever can persuade legislators who have committed to both candidates.

"It's solid. It's in concrete," Mavretic said Sunday in a telephone interview with The Associated Press.

A group of Democratic state House members said Sunday they had enough commitments to elect Mavretic, but Ramsey called the announcement a publicity ploy to lure swing votes.

"I don't think so," Ramsey responded in a telephone interview from his office at the General Assembly. "I don't think they've got 'em. I think they're saying that so that you folks (the news media) will say it. 'There are some people on the border line that maybe they think they can sway,'" he added. "And I think, as in any important election, you have four or five that are committed both ways."

Rep. Don Dawkins, D-Richmond, read a statement saying the group of Democratic lawmakers had decided "election of a new speaker was needed to make certain that all 120 members of the House would be included in the legislative process."

"We believe that the deliberations of the House of Representatives should be both more open and more fair, particularly those dealing with the budget of the state of North Carolina," the statement said, adding that the current leadership "promises only cosmetic changes instead of making substantive alterations in the way business is done in the House."

The group also will propose legislation to limit future speakers to a maximum of two terms, Dawkins said. Ramsey is seeking an unprecedented fifth term as speaker.

Mavretic declined to say where the group was meeting Sunday.

When the General Assembly opens Wednesday there will be 74 Democrats and 46 Republicans in the House. It will take 61 votes to elect the speaker.

When it comes time to vote, it will be impossible for legislators to keep their support secret. The state constitution requires that all elections in the General Assembly be by voice vote.

Sources told The Greensboro News & Record that Gov. Jim Martin, a Republican, is working personally to help deliver full Republican support in the challenge to Ramsey, D-Madison. Since 1985 Martin and other Republicans have focused on Ramsey as they attacked the leadership of the Democratic-controlled General Assembly.

In Cumberland County, 18th House District representatives R.D. Beard and Alex Warner, both Democrats, told The Fayetteville Times they support replacing Ramsey.

Beard said a committee of legislators supporting Ramsey's ouster has been meeting for seven weeks.

Warner acknowledged that months ago, he endorsed Ramsey for a fifth term. Reading from a prepared statement, he said the results of the November election shows that voters "want a philosophical change in state government."

"The taxpayers' message sent to elected officials is very clear that the people of this state have selected their leaders from two political parties to conduct and conclude the business of the state as cooperatively and efficiently as possible," Warner said. "I am consequently torn between my previous personal commitment to Liston Ramsey and what I feel has arisen as my personal obligation to the county of Cumberland and the great state of North Carolina."

"I must vote for what I feel is most progressive for our state and accordingly, I must ask to be released from any commitment made previously from Rep. Ramsey on a personal basis," Warner said.

Beard said "it is not in the public interest" for Ramsey to serve a lengthy term.

Ramsey said his opponents might be selling their political souls to the Republicans, whose 46 members would likely join a challenge to the current status quo.

"What you would have, you would have the Republicans picking a Democrat that they wanted to be speaker," he said. "The Republicans would be furnishing 75 percent of the vote. The Republicans, if that happens, should be entitled to 75 percent or more of the committee chairmanships."

Ramsey has never appointed a Republican to chair a committee, but he said he continues to be receptive to making GOP members vice-chairmen.

"I've been appointing some vice-chairmen all alone, proportionate to their numbers," he said.

Some Democrats have complained that Ramsey's heavy-handed policies and behind-the-scenes approach have given Republican election opponents an alarming amount of ammunition at campaign time. But Ramsey waved off such comments.

"The newspapers have been printing that type stuff," he said. "However, the House of Representatives has been more open since I've been speaker than it's been before."

"If people won't get up and express themselves, I can't make them."

Ramsey admitted part of the reason he was in his office on a Sunday was to shore up his own votes, adding, "A man would not be normal if he wasn't concerned, and I'm normal."

Asked whether he was calling on House members to check on votes, Ramsey said only, "I'm doing the very best I can."

"Whatever happens, it's going to be close," Ramsey said.

Tobacco Industry Launches Counter Move For Smoking

By Lee Byrd
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The tobacco industry, bidding to stem the tide of anti-smoking rules, today took out newspaper ads around the country declaring "Enough is enough" and touted a survey indicating three of four Americans do not support smoking bans in workplaces and restaurants.

The industry's counter-initiative through its lobbying organization, the Tobacco Institute, comes during the week marking the 25th anniversary of the first of the surgeon general's reports to declare smoking a health hazard.

A spokeswoman for the institute, Brennan Dawson, noted some anti-smoking groups are pushing for a "smoke-free" society. "To achieve their purposes," she said, "anti-smokers are turning to censorship, harassment, punitive taxes, and intrusion into personal and private decision-making."

"The majority of Americans, according to objective polling, do not support these anti-smoking efforts," she said.

The institute's poll was conducted by the Washington firm of Hamilton, Frederick & Schneiders, which said it randomly telephoned 1,500 Americans over age 18 between Nov. 23 and Dec. 6, 1988. The respondents included 1,099 nonsmokers and 401 smokers, the firm said.

An overwhelming number of those polled indicated they are satisfied with current levels of smoking restrictions, and opposed outright bans in the workplace or public areas. The survey has a margin of error of plus or minus three points.

Among the findings:

- Eight out of 10 people believe it should be left to employers and their employees to determine workplace smoking rules, without government interference. Even among nonsmokers, more than 70 percent supported that approach.
- About 74 percent believe restaurants should be allowed to offer both smoking and non-smoking sections to customers. More than 60 percent of the non-smokers agreed.
- Fifty-three percent said they believed that excise taxes — amounting to about a third of the price of a pack of cigarettes — should stay the same (38 percent) or be reduced (15 percent).
- Fifty-seven percent said they believe cigarette advertising restrictions should remain the same (38 percent) or be lifted entirely (23 percent), as opposed to banning all advertising.

The institute's newspaper ads declared "Enough is enough!" and said that meant "enough taxation ... enough legislation ... enough control ... enough censorship ... enough harassment ... enough discrimination" against smokers.

There was no answer over the weekend at the offices of various anti-smoking groups that were called for comment on the campaign and survey.

Etheridge Calls For Full Audit Of School Operation

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The most extensive audit ever of North Carolina's public education system will show whether the state is getting its money's worth in its schools, state Auditor Ed Renfrow says.

"I'm going to lead this audit myself," Renfrow said. "I'm cleaning my calendar off for the next three or four months."

The audit will be conducted this year as new state Superintendent of Public Instruction Bobby Etheridge works to streamline the department.

The study will take up to a year and involve about 20 auditors in six teams covering every facet of public education from the state department down to the 140 local school systems, Renfrow said.

In an interview published Sunday,

Etheridge avoided specifics, but hinted that he was considering major organizational changes in the agency, including staff cuts.

Public education receives about half the money in the state's general fund. The audit will include an investigation of how state money is spent on new facilities and on the Basic Education Program, the state's eight-year plan to improve schools with more teachers, courses and supplies.

The audit will be conducted in stages, with a report released as each phase is completed. It will begin with a study of the organization of the Department of Public Education. That study should be completed by mid- to late February, Renfrow said.

Etheridge, the state's first new superintendent in 20 years, said a preliminary study by his transition team suggested that the agency should be streamlined and restructured more vertically.

"What we have found is there are some divisions that have large numbers of people, and some that have a small number of people," he said in an interview. "The consistency is somewhat unbalanced."

Etheridge said it appeared that some divisions could be merged to improve efficiency. Functions of the controller's office — which operates independently but will be brought under the superintendent's control Feb. 1 — also "probably can be more efficiently done by merging some things," he said.

Etheridge implied that the steps he was taking would lead to a reduction in staff. He said he would not act, however, until he had more documentation from Renfrow's audit.

State Getting Ready For Exhaust Testing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — State environmental regulators are drawing up legislation to create mandatory auto exhaust inspections in 19 urban counties, but the tests wouldn't start for at least two years, officials say.

The inspections, part of a broad attack on air pollution, eventually could be required statewide.

The 19 counties targeted for a cleanup are Mecklenburg, Cabarrus, Gaston, Lincoln, Rowan and Union in the Charlotte area; Davidson, Davie, Forsyth, Guilford, Randolph, Stokes and Yadkin in the Greensboro-Winston-Salem area; Durham, Franklin, Granville, Orange and Wake in the Durham-Raleigh area; and Cumberland.

Wilms said the urban counties contain 2 million vehicles, about 44 percent of the state's total.

The state's top environmental regulator, Paul Wilms of the Division of Environmental Management, said his agency is considering asking the General Assembly for authority to go beyond the 19 counties and apply the inspection program across the entire Piedmont or even statewide.

North Carolina is under pressure from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to clean its air. Last year, 19 ozone monitoring sites, including three in Charlotte-Mecklenburg, measured 69 violations of the federal health standard.

Only two counties, Mecklenburg and Wake, require exhaust checks as part of the annual auto safety inspection.

There was no answer over the weekend at the offices of various anti-smoking groups that were called for comment on the campaign and survey.

NAACP Demands Paid Day Off In Observance Of King Birthday

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — NAACP officials say they've "thrown down the gauntlet" in North Carolina cities this year, demanding a paid day off on Jan. 16 for municipal employees to celebrate Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday.

Dennis Schatzman, executive director of the North Carolina chapter of the NAACP, said his organization is taking a stand on the holiday because "Martin Luther King's birthday is an issue that should not be questioned."

"You don't have a better person to fight for than Martin Luther King," Schatzman said. "He is a man whose work was recognized by the Nobel Peace Prize Committee, a man of the magnitude of Mahatma Gandhi."

Last week, Lenoir City Council members also praised King. But they told local NAACP leaders the city can't afford another holiday.

In Lenoir, as in many other Piedmont cities, officials argue that an additional holiday for employees is simply too expensive. They propose giving employees the option of trading another of their holidays for King's birthday.

But Schatzman and other North Carolina black leaders say observing the King Holiday is a bellwether of racial attitudes.

"Because he (King) was black, people are fighting the holiday," Schatzman told The Charlotte Observer. "This is not to say that everyone who is against the King holiday is a racist. There are some economic concerns. But at least half of that is rationalization."

Most officials in cities that don't observe the King holiday say the issue is economic, not racial.

"I don't think it's an indication of racial tension or lack thereof one way or the other," said David Wilkinson, city manager of Shelby, which does not observe the holiday.

Reagan Back Home After Hand Surgery

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Reagan raised his bandaged left hand to reporters as he pronounced himself "fine" after successful surgery to correct a curvature of his left ring finger.

Reagan returned to the White House from Walter Reed Army Medical Center on Sunday, a day after undergoing surgery that lasted just under three hours.

The president, accompanied by first lady Nancy Reagan, lifted his left hand, with a bulky bandage on it, as he stepped out of the emergency entrance of the hospital in Northwest Washington.

Asked how he felt, he replied, "Fine," in a vigorous, booming voice. After raising his bandaged left hand, he waved with his right.

The operation was to alleviate a worsening condition known as Dupuytren's contracture, which caused the president's fingers to curve inward in a claw-like configuration.

Dr. John Hutton, the White House physician, said last week the operation would not interfere with the president's performance of his duties.

In a statement after the operation on Saturday, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater described the surgery as "successfully completed."

Since recovery normally takes two to three weeks, the president may still be wearing the bandage when he turns over the reins of government to President-elect Bush at inauguration ceremonies on Jan. 20.

Freshmen Looking To Graduate Study

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Entering college freshmen are getting less aid from the federal government and are increasingly interested in making their educations pay off in cold cash, according to a survey of more than 300,000 students.

The annual survey nonetheless found that students entering college in 1988 were more likely than their 1987 counterparts to want to pursue graduate study despite the financial obstacles.

And although students are more interested in making money, they seem less interested in business careers as a means of reaching that goal, the survey said.

The findings released Sunday by the American Council on Education and the Higher Education Research Institute at the University of California at Los Angeles are based on questionnaires filled out by 308,007 freshmen entering 585 two- and four-year colleges and universities. The results were adjusted to reflect the total population of 1.64 million first-time, full-time entering students and have a margin of error of plus or minus two points.

Only 15.6 percent of freshmen entering school last fall received Pell grants, the government's major aid program for low- and middle-income students, the survey found. That was the lowest level since the survey began 23 years ago and less than half the 31.5 percent who received Pell grants in 1980.

Freshman participation in other federal aid programs also fell, while students reported greater reliance on family contributions, savings, loans and institutional grants.

The amount of Pell grant aid awarded to students actually rose nearly 57 percent from 1980 to 1988, or 17 percent taking inflation into account, according to The College Board, a New York-based lobbying group.

But during the same period, the aid was more sharply aimed at the very neediest post-secondary students, many of whom shun college in favor of vocational schools that teach cosmetology, art, drama, auto mechanics, business skills or other trades.

Victoria Tripp, an Education Department spokeswoman, said 11 percent of Pell money went to vocational students in 1980, compared with 27 percent in 1988. "That figure will increase to one-third in the early 1990s," she predicted. "The money is targeted to those students and there has been a proliferation of those schools."

Despite the falloff in college aid, a record proportion of freshmen said they were interested in pursuing advanced degrees — 58.7 percent, compared with 48.3 percent in 1980.

"The rising degree aspirations suggest that a growing proportion of students feel the bachelor's degree will not be an adequate credential in the job market during the next decade and into the next century," said Kenneth C. Green, associate director of the survey.

In line with that, a record 72.6 percent of the freshmen indicated "making more money" was a very important factor in their decision to attend college.

Tornadoes Hit In Three States

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALLEDALE, Ill. — Residents of three states today struggled to recover from tornadoes that destroyed a third of the buildings in this southeastern Illinois town and injured more than four dozen people.

"It looks like this place has been bombed," Mayor Jack Loeffler said Sunday from an emergency command post in a bank.

Twisters hit the Illinois towns of Mill Shoals, Albion and Alledale on Saturday afternoon before moving into Indiana and touching down near Vincennes. Late Saturday, a tornado cut a two-mile path through the southern Kentucky community of Franklin.

Fifty people were injured in Illinois, and 22 remained hospitalized Sunday. The three people injured in Indiana were released from hospitals by Sunday; no injuries were reported in Kentucky.

"After seeing everything that's happened, we were pretty lucky no folks were hurt," said Simpson County Judge-Executive Ken Harper in Kentucky.

The National Guard was sent to the tornado-ravaged areas of Illinois and Kentucky to help with the cleanup and to prevent looting.

Loeffler said the tornado cut through a 10-square-block area of Alledale, destroying 53 homes and nine businesses, as well as the post office, fire station, city hall and a school.

On Sunday, the National Guard and other emergency workers cleared trees and power lines that had been knocked down and other rubble from streets, but hadn't made much headway on houses, said Gen. Donald Lynn.

Police said people whose homes were destroyed were staying with friends or relatives in town, and about a dozen were taken to shelters.

Shocked officials and residents of this town of 600 assessed the damage Sunday.

"It's a mess is all you can say," said Alledale resident Linda Griesemer. "Houses are flattened, windows blown out, roofs gone."

A damage estimate was not yet available, Loeffler said.

Gov. James R. Thompson toured Alledale and flew over the other affected areas. He said he planned to declare Alledale a state disaster area.

"It's a mess. It's awful," Thompson said. The tornado "not only took out a third of the homes, it took out almost the entire downtown and all the public facilities."

In Mill Shoals, two or three mobile homes were overturned and a few homes and farm buildings were damaged. In Albion, five buildings were damaged but there were no injuries, said Mayor Earl Bailey.

In Indiana, a twister came within a mile of Vincennes Lincoln High School, where 2,500 people were watching a junior varsity basketball game when the storm knocked the school's power out.

Five homes were destroyed and 25 were damaged by the tornado that hit Franklin, Ky.

Remarriage Rate Declining In U.S.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — One of every three men and women walking down the aisle in the United States has been married before, but the remarriage rate for divorced Americans has been declining, according to a National Center for Health Statistics report.

The government report also shows that most divorced men marry divorced women and that of those divorced Americans remarrying in 1983, the women were on the average 34 years old and the men, an average 37 years old.

The report is based on samples of records from states that compile marriage and divorce statistics. It studies data collected from 1970 to 1983, the latest year for which most of the figures were available.

The number of remarriages increased during the period studied, rising from 404,000 in 1970 to 736,000 in 1983 for divorced women and from 423,000 to 773,000 over the 14-year period for divorced men.

But although the number of remarriages was growing over those years, the pool of divorced men and women was growing faster, the report said.

In 1983, the remarriage rate for divorced women was 91.6 per 1,000 compared with 123.3 per 1,000 in 1970.

Doctor Killed At Bellevue

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The savage beating death of a pregnant 34-year-old physician at Bellevue Hospital has triggered a major police investigation and a review of security at the shaken institution, officials said.

"This is a major case and at least 30 detectives are assigned to it," Police Commissioner Benjamin Ward said after the body of Dr. Kathryn Hinnant was found in a laboratory office Sunday morning by her husband.

Hinnant, a pathologist, may have also been raped and choked, Ward said.

"It was a particularly brutal, outrageous murder," said Mayor Edward I. Koch, who termed it a "No. 1 case to be solved."

The city offered a $30,000 reward for information.

Japan's New Ruler Pledges To Work For Peace On Earth

By Terri Jones
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — Emperor Akihito today set the tone for his reign by pledging to work for peace and preserve Japanese democracy, but said he faced "awesome responsibilities" after the death of his father, Hirohito.

The four-minute speech was Akihito's first public statement since he ascended the Chrysanthemum Throne when Hirohito died of cancer Saturday at age 87. It was delivered at the Imperial Palace during a simple ceremony attended by Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita and 237 other dignitaries.

Outside, hundreds of thousand of Japanese streamed past to pay their respects to Hirohito, who reigned for 62 years.

"Shrouded in sorrow and overwhelmed by the awesome responsibilities I undertake, I stand humble before you," said Akihito, who was clad in a black cutaway and gray trousers.

"I pledge myself to continue in the spirit of his late majesty, making his desire to constantly be at one with the people my desire as well, joining together with you to preserve the constitution of Japan, and thereby execute my duties faithfully," he added.

Japan's post-war constitution, which bans the emperor from any role in government and limits him to ceremonial functions, formed the basis for the country's democracy. It limits the emperor's role to signing bills into law and serving as "symbol of the state and the unity of the people."

"I do fervently desire the further development of Japan, peace on Earth and enhanced well-being for all peoples," Akihito said.

He spoke clearly and solemnly, with the new Empress Michiko, 54, on his left wearing a black dress and veil and their son, Crown Prince Naruhito, 28, on his right.

By Japanese tradition, Akihito's statement was his first Imperial Rescript, in which a new emperor sets a tone for his reign.

The rite, in the palace's main ceremonial hall, was an important milestone in the transition to Akihito's new imperial era of Heisei, or "Achieving Peace."

On Sunday, Hirohito's body was wrapped in a white cloth and placed in a coffin made of Japanese cypress at the palace in preparation for the Feb. 24 burial. Representatives of more than 130 countries, including up to 50 heads of state or government, are expected to attend.

Hirohito's era, called Showa, or "Enlightened Peace," ended with his death, and according to Japanese tradition he becomes known as Emperor Showa. His reign stretched from Japan's descent into militarism and defeat in World War II to its impressive recovery into an economic superpower.

Thousands of police were deployed today to prevent violence by radical leftist and rightist groups, for whom the emperor embodies Japanese militarism and nationalism.

Hirohito was revered as a living god until he was forced to renounce his divinity at the end of World War II, and Japanese soldiers fought and died during the war in the monarch's name.

Two old soldiers have hanged themselves since learning of Hirohito's passing, saying in suicide notes that they wanted to follow the emperor in death. An 87-year-old former army man hanged himself Saturday, and the body of a former navy officer was found Sunday hanging from a tree in a temple compound.

Emperor Akihito, wife pose on his birthday last month

Mourners continued to stream to the palace today to sign condolence registers outside the main gate. On Sunday, the palace said 438,376 people braved drizzling rain to honor the late emperor at the palace, and the number of signers today had reached 223,020 by 3:30 p.m.

Japan's stock market today boomed to a record high closing and its biggest gain in a year in the first session since Hirohito's death.

A dealer at Nomura Securities said small investors were drawn back into the market after the emperor's death.

"During his three-month-long illness, many individual investors were extremely cautious and anxious about what might happen when the emperor died," said Michio Katsumata. "But that's over now."

IMF Report Says U.S. Trade Policy Blocking Farm Accord

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Fear that the U.S. government will go it alone in world trade is discouraging other countries from joining in an accord that could cut spending on farmers by tens of billions of dollars every year, according to a report published by the International Monetary Fund.

Fund experts see a possibility that James M. Baker III, designated as secretary of state by President-elect Bush, will single out favored countries as trading partners instead of promoting U.S. trade with the whole world.

The Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, whose members include the governments of the major industrial countries, says farm subsidies cost consumers and taxpayers $185 billion a year between 1984 and 1986. The biggest costs are in the United States, western Europe and Japan.

The IMF report cites a speech last year by Baker, then secretary of the treasury. Baker spoke of what the U.S. government would do if there were a failure of the trade talks now being held by representatives of 96 countries.

"We might be willing to explore a 'market liberalization club' approach, through mini-lateral arrangements or a series of bilateral agreements," Bush was quoted as saying.

Bilateral agreements are like the new one between the United States and Canada, freeing up trade between two countries but tending to freeze out others. A similar deal with Israel was made earlier last year. A "mini-lateral" arrangement includes not just two but a group of countries, like the 12 in the European Economic Community.

Groups of this kind encourage trade among members at the expense of those outside the club.

The report was written before last month's meeting in Montreal of representatives from the 96 governments. They agreed on how to negotiate 11 different kinds of trade issues in the remaining two years of talks. But they failed to agree on four others, including agriculture.

U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter insisted that other governments, especially the Europeans, promise to join in a long-term phase-out of subsidies before he would talk about cutting them in the immediate future. Bush has picked Yeutter as his secretary of agriculture.

On Thursday Alan Holmer, Yeutter's deputy as trade representative, said he was optimistic about agreement being reached on farm issues by April, a new deadline set at Montreal. But negotiations are being soured by a fight between the European community and the Reagan administration over the hormones that U.S. farmers use to make their cattle grow faster.

Grenade Kills 14 At Tourney

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANILA, Philippines — Unknown assailants hurled a grenade into a crowd attending award ceremonies at a basketball tournament, killing at least 13 people and injuring 69 in a remote area of the southern Philippines, the military said today.

Lt. Anselmo Cabingan, a military spokesman, said the attack occurred Sunday night at a basketball court in Esperanza, a town in Sultan Kudarat province about 600 miles south of Manila.

There was no indication who was responsible for the attack, Cabingan said.

The Philippines News Agency said the injured included the town's mayor, Romulo Latog Sr., and his son, Romulo Jr. The agency said two grenades exploded, but the military was unable to confirm the report.

The agency, quoting a local radio station, put the death toll at 26 people, mostly children. It gave no motive for the attack.

'Horrific Massacres' Reported In Lebanon

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SIDON, Lebanon — Rival Shiite Moslem factions today fought savage house-to-house battles for control of villages in south Lebanon, and police reported "horrific massacres" in which at least 25 people were killed.

Police said more than 40 people were wounded after the pro-Syrian Amal militia launched a dawn counterattack against the Iranian-backed Hezbollah, or Party of God, which overran five villages on Sunday.

A police spokesman in this southern Lebanese city said many victims had been hacked to death.

"Others had their throats cut and some were headless. Many were riddled with bullets," said the spokesman, who cannot be named under standing regulations. "Horrific massacres have been committed."

The casualties raised the overall toll in fighting that erupted Dec. 31 to 90 killed and 200 wounded, by police count.

Since Sunday morning, at least 65 people have been slain — the highest 24-hour toll since the power struggle for Lebanon's 1 million Shiites, the country's largest sect, flared in April.

Amal claimed its fighters recaptured four of the villages along the main road from Sidon, 25 miles south of Beirut, to Israel's self-designated "security zone" on Lebanon's southern border.

But police in Sidon said they could not confirm Amal's claims.

Amal and Hezbollah accused each other of "atrocities and summary executions" in the fighting for Kfar Hatta, Kfar Melki, Kfar Beit, Kfar Filla and Jbaa.

An Amal statement said 500 militiamen recaptured the first four villages from Hezbollah. "Our men are now fighting the enemies of Islam from house to house in the streets of Jbaa," it said.

Afghan Guerrillas Break Off Talks With Soviets

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — Afghan guerrilla leaders refused today to resume direct talks with the Soviets, accusing Moscow of playing political games aimed at securing its communist proteges in Kabul a place in a post-war government.

The guerrillas promised not to attack departing Red Army troops but said their decision to break off negotiations means fighting is likely to continue after Feb. 15, when the 50,000 Soviet troops remaining in Afghanistan are to withdraw under a U.N.-brokered accord.

The Pakistan-based guerrilla leaders ended talks with Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Yuli Vorontsov Saturday, deadlocked over the composition of a post-war government but saying they were ready to meet again.

But Vorontsov later told reporters that Moscow would find a way to support its Marxist allies in Kabul if a broad-based government that includes communists is not in place Feb. 15.

Moslem insurgents, who have been fighting the Soviet-backed communist regime in Kabul for a decade, have unanimously rejected the participation of any of its members in a post-war government.

The Soviet envoy has said Moscow will meet the February withdrawal deadline unless departing Soviet soldiers are attacked by guerrillas.

"It could be delayed if there were all out fighting on Soviet forces, if there were attacks on Soviet forces withdrawing," Vorontsov said.

Washing Machine-Mad Kid Now A Collector

By Lynn Williams
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

BALTIMORE — Some kids get obsessed by cars. Others plaster their walls with pictures of horses, or develop an inexplicable fondness for ant farms or old ham radios.

But Charles Diehl Jr.'s parents did not know quite what to make of their son's favorite hobby. Young Chuck was crazy about ... major appliances.

A kid who spent all his time under a car they could understand, but one who spent all his time at the neighbors' houses, watching them do their laundry?

He never outgrew it, either. The washing machine-mad kid is now a grown-up washing machine-mad collector, who claims the job title of "appliance consultant" and runs the Charles William Diehl Jr. Museum of Appliances in his Baltimore apartment.

The museum is devoted not only to vintage washers and dryers but to smaller appliances such as vacuum cleaners and irons; his kitchen is fitted out with matching copper-colored appliances and a roaster that is identical, he says, to one seen in "I Love Lucy."

Diehl remembers his first Frigidaire with the affection many men reserve for their first kiss, or their first Chevy.

"When I was a child I was very hyperactive," he explains. "One day we were all over at my Aunt Margaret's house for a family reunion, and I was all over the place, getting in everybody's way. Aunt Margaret sat me on top of the washing machine and said, 'Chuckie, watch the clothes do somersaults, like little teddy bears.'"

Sure enough, the clothes did somersaults. Chuckie, then 3 or 4 years old, was captivated. He took to examining all the washing machines in his neighborhood, to the bafflement of the neighbors: "One lady up the street had one with a light in it. I'd go there at night time and watch them do laundry, and would turn off all the lights in the kitchen except the one in the washing machine," he remembers.

In his teens, he took a course in appliance repair at high school, and had his own "Frigidaire corner" where he would restore appliances saved for him by the owner of a nearby used-appliance store.

Sometimes he would sell the reconditioned machines, and sometimes he would give them away, he says. But he could not take them home.

"My father hated the fact that I was a washing machine freak," he admits. "He'd think it was effeminate — he connected washers with women. I'd bring these things home from the junkyard, and he'd take them back in the woods and throw them out."

Although he still enjoyed appliances as an adult, and even worked for a time as an appliance salesman, he never had the space to indulge his collecting habits until he moved into his current apartment with its spacious rooms and hardwood floors.

At the museum's entrance is a gunmetal gray Westinghouse water cooler. Inside, positioned against walls decorated with old advertising banners and posters, are washers and dryers and other household items. Hooked up, and in good working order, is a 1947 Frigidaire Unimatic automatic washer, notable for its extremely fast spin cycle — the barrel makes almost 1,200 revolutions per minute, Diehl says — and an agitator that pulsates rather than oscillates, for that special "somer-saulting" action.

Other prizes are the chic turquoise Westinghouse Imperial washer and dryer pair from 1959, with a water-level selector and built-in clothes scale on the door, and the oldest piece, a 1934 Maytag wringer washer, nicknamed the "Gray Ghost."

The smaller appliances demonstrate just how streamlined and elegant industrial design once was. A chrome-trimmed Electrolux vacuum cleaner from the '50s is a stylish classic, and two 1939 American Beauty irons with red Bakelite handles have art deco lines. These irons, made by a now-defunct Detroit company, are rarities, and worth $500 and up to collectors. Diehl got one for $2 at a yard sale, another at West Virginia thrift shop.

In fact, most of his items were free, or cost next to nothing. They were picked up in junkyards, from curbs where they had been discarded, and from salvage dealers. Most needed only minor repairs.

Another part of Diehl's collection rests on a shelf next to his dining area: his toy appliances, a few of which are perfect miniatures of the real washers in his museum.

While Diehl, who is also a potter, appreciates vintage appliances for their design qualities, he also is enthusiastic about their old-fashioned durability and efficiency.

Maria's Mom Should Seek Help

Dear Abby: In response to "Judy in West Virginia" who cared for Maria, her 10-year-old blind and retarded child at home, Judy is to be commended for having lasted so long. She needs to recognize that she is not equipped to spend every waking hour caring for her child — however well-loved.

Her decision concerning whether or not to place Maria in a facility should not depend on what her relatives think. Such critics are ignorant of the toll caring for a multi-handicapped child at home takes on the child and the entire family.

ed are able to give 24-hour supervision and care, help the child socialize at her own pace and level, and train her in some basic skills. However much Judy tries, her closeness to her child as well as the guilt trip imposed by the relatives renders her unable to do these things effectively.

The federal government sponsors a program to enable the mentally retarded person to reach his/her maximum potential. The ICF/MR program (Intermediary Care Facility for the Mentally Retarded) is usually supervised and sometimes managed by the state. There is some governmental subsidy, which varies from state to state. Information is usually available from the regional mental health center. If not, Judy should write to the Department of Health and Human Services in Washington, D.C.

Judy has done all she can. Now it's time for her to give that responsibility to the specialists. At first it may be very hard and leave a terrible void, but for the child's sake, it's better at 10, rather than 20 years later when health or other problems occur.

My husband and I placed Sherry, our retarded teen-ager, in such a facility after much deliberation by us, and criticism from relatives. I thought I would not survive the experience. I found fault with everything and everyone until I realized that after the initial shock of separation, Sherry was better controlled and, believe it or not, happier there than she had been at home. Now, eight years later, I could kick myself for having waited so long because of my own pride and the interference of relatives.

Good luck to Judy! — Relieved In Texas

Abortion

government need in no way subsidize."

The 1973 decision "should itself be reconsidered" if it cannot be squared with the disputed Missouri law, Webster said.

In its 1973 ruling, the Supreme Court said women have a constitutional right of abortion, based on the right of privacy. The court most recently reaffirmed that ruling in 1983.

But today's court is viewed as deeply divided on the abortion issue.

Justice Harry A. Blackmun told a law school audience last September that the 1973 decision he authored could be overturned in the court's 1988-89 term.

"The next question is, 'Will Roe vs. Wade go down the drain?' I think there's a very distinct possibility that it will — this term. You can count the votes," he said.

While Blackmun and Justices William J. Brennan, Thurgood Marshall and John Paul Stevens have resisted attempts to reverse or greatly modify the 1973 decision, anti-abortion forces are hoping some day to attract five votes for such a result.

Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justice Byron R. White dissented from the 1973 ruling and several subsequent abortion decisions.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor in past decisions has questioned the court's reasoning in its 1973 decision.

Justice Antonin Scalia, who has not yet voted in an abortion decision since being named to the high court by President Reagan in 1986, is thought to favor overturning or curtailing Roe vs. Wade.

Justice Anthony M. Kennedy, who joined the court last Feb. 18, likewise has not voted in an abortion decision. His views on abortion and the Roe vs. Wade decision are not known in any significant detail.

The case is Webster vs. Reproductive Health Services, 88-605.

Jurors Excluded

Prosecutors said he was the victim of a Klan hunting party retaliating for a jury's inability to reach a verdict in the trial of a black man accused of murdering a white police officer.

Klan members Henry Francis Hays and James "Tiger" Knowles were charged in connection with the slaying.

Hays was convicted of murder and was sentenced to death. Knowles pleaded guilty to a federal charge of violating Donald's civil rights and was sentenced to life in prison.

Mobile County prosecutors then charged Hays' father, Bennie Jack Hays, and Benjamin Franklin Cox with aiding and abetting the murder. The elder Hays and Cox are former KKK members.

Bennie Hays collapsed in court last February, prompting a mistrial for both defendants.

An all-white jury already had been impeded because of peremptory challenges used by the defense lawyers. The defense attorneys had disqualified all 16 blacks among 65 prospective jurors.

The elder Hays and Cox face retrial. In the interim, prosecutors appealed to the Supreme Court to test whether blacks may be excluded in a similar fashion once again.

Mobile County Circuit Judge Michael E. Zoghby ruled last May, "Under the law as it now exists, defendants do not have to give a reason for the exercise of their peremptory challenges."

The Alabama Supreme Court refused to disturb the judge's decision.

State prosecutors argued that excluding jurors based on race fosters racial prejudice and "harms all members of the minority excluded from jury service" by suggesting they are inferior.

The prosecutors said the most recent nationwide statistics show that in 1986 there were 81,000 cases — not including murders and kidnappings — in which blacks were victims of violent crimes committed by whites.

Allowing blacks to be barred automatically from juries in such cases is unlawful discrimination, the prosecutors said.

Defense lawyers for Hays and Cox said barring blacks helps assure the defendants a fair trial. One attorney said he also would move to disqualify "Jewish people if I had a PLO (Palestine Liberation Organization) defendant."

The appeal by Alabama prosecutors was supported by the National District Attorneys Association, attorneys general from nearly every state, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and the Southern Poverty Law Center.

The case is Alabama vs. Cox, 88-630.

In the world's first transcontinental solar-car race, held in Australia, 14 sun-powered cars traveled 1,950 miles from Darwin to Adelaide without fuel, says National Geographic World.

Bengals To Meet 49ers In Super Bowl

Cincinnati Rolls, Defeats Buffalo

By Terry Price
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

CINCINNATI — The AFC championship rumble in The Jungle Sunday turned into one loud roar for the Cincinnati Bengals.

The Bengals proved in a decisive victory, 21-10, over the Buffalo Bills that they deserve to shuffle off to Miami to play the San Francisco 49ers Jan. 22 in Super Bowl XXIII. The 49ers defeated the Chicago Bears in the NFC Championship game, 28-3.

The Bengals outplayed the Bills in every aspect of the game and even shook off an eleventh-hour ruling by the NFL that could have slowed Cincinnati's high-flying offense.

As it turned out, it didn't matter, mostly because the Bengals defense chose to emerge from the shadows of Ickey and the Boomer.

The Bengals even outdid the Bills' heralded defense, stopping the Buffalo running game cold and harassing quarterback Jim Kelly into a miserable afternoon. Kelly completed 14 of 30 passes for 163 yards, and was intercepted three times.

"I think our defense is playing as well as any defense can be expected to play going into a Super Bowl," Bengals linebacker Reggie Williams said.

The Bengals, who never trailed, got a pair of 1-yard touchdown runs from Ickey Woods and a 10-yard touchdown pass from Boomer Esiason to James Brooks.

The Bills displayed the grit that carried them to the AFC East title and 60 minutes from the Super Bowl by hanging in against the Bengals.

"It was a game we wanted very badly to win," Kelly said. "We got a little excited and made some mistakes, but we fought real hard.

The Bengals are a super team and deserved to win."

The NFL issued a statement Sunday morning that said both teams had agreed not to "feign injuries" and that neither team would be allowed to quick-snap the ball to gain advantage by drawing the opponent into a penalty.

The directive was aimed squarely at the Bengals, who have utilized a no-huddle "attack" offense for several seasons.

The apparent faking of injuries in last week's playoff game by Seattle against the Bengals and statements by Bills Coach Marv Levy that he would take similar measures prompted the league to take the steps.

It did not affect the Bengals — at least not negatively.

"The team didn't need much more to rally around, but it certainly was another hook to be angry about," Bengals Coach Sam Wyche said.

Instead, it was the Bills who did the self-destructing. Buffalo began to crack late in the third quarter, with the Bengals leading, 14-10.

The Bengals were able to keep a drive alive with a fake punt the Bills should have recognized. Then, Derrick Burroughs' unsportsmanlike conduct penalty and ejection gave the Bengals an automatic first down at the Bills' 4-yard line.

It moved the Bengals from an apparent field-goal situation into an almost certain touchdown situation. Woods got into the end zone two plays later to make it 21-10 with 14 minutes, 56 seconds left in the game.

Burroughs was ejected for throwing a forearm at Tim McGee's face, apparently in retaliation for a block McGee tried to throw.

Burroughs' action violated one of

49ers Warm Up, Chill The Bears

By Greg Logan
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

CHICAGO — When the public-address announcer at Soldier Field told the crowd of 64,830 at the NFC championship game that the wind-chill factor was minus-26 degrees, a cheer went up. The 29-mph wind and game-time temperature of 17 degrees were supposed to be the Chicago Bears' 12th man Sunday.

The announcement, the fans seemed to think, would work on the minds of the San Francisco 49ers and make them wish they were warm and safe at home. This was Bears weather.

But the 49ers adapted to the Bears' environment and beat them at their own black-and-blue game. San Francisco quarterback Joe Montana hooked up with Jerry Rice on two first-half touchdown passes that sent a shiver through the Bears, and then the 49ers took the second-half kickoff and pounded 78 yards Chicago-style for the touchdown that clinched a 28-3 victory and a trip to Super Bowl XXIII to meet AFC champion Cincinnati.

"I dreamed of playing in the cold weather to test my mind," 49ers running back Roger Craig said. "It was fun. It was a test of character — do you really want to play the game and win? You have to block the elements out of your mind. This is the kind of game you remember when you get older. This was a memory game."

The 49ers' performance revived memories of their Super Bowl titles after the 1981 and '84 seasons, but this was the first time in the '80s that they won a playoff game in a cold-weather city. "I'd have to say that, in my 10 years in San Francisco, this is our greatest road victory," 49ers Coach Bill Walsh said.

The 49ers are the first road team to win the NFC championship game since the Los Angeles Rams beat the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in 1980.

The 49ers' 12-6 record is the second-worst of any Super Bowl team behind that Rams team, which lost seven games, but their playoff victories over Minnesota and Chicago (13-5), the tough guys from the NFC Central, indicate they are as formidable as ever.

That is especially true of Montana, who was involved earlier this season in a quarterback controversy with Steve Young and was considered to be on the downhill side of his career at the age of 32 after 10 years in the NFL.

The folks from wine country have a word for the play of the two-time Super Bowl MVP — vintage. Montana completed 17 of 27 passes for 288 yards and three touchdowns. Rice caught five balls for 133 yards and his two first-half scores and had an apparent third diving touchdown catch nullified by the officials.

Describing Montana's effort, 49ers center Randy Cross said, "It was one of his old-fashioned classic performances."

The Bears couldn't have agreed more. "The guy is just awesome," strong safety Dave Duerson said of Montana. "He's been doing it that way for a long time. This was his day. Period."

"He played like a champion," added Bears middle linebacker Mike Singletary. "He played the best today when he had to. That's why he's a champion."

By comparison, Bears quarterback Jim McMahon had a miserable day, completing just 14 of 29 passes

NCAA Meeting Set Delegates To Tackle Questions

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — After spending several hundred thousand dollars studying college athletes, the NCAA has two questions left.

What does it all mean? And what should be done about it? More than 1,800 delegates will tackle that broad subject today in a two-part panel discussion on the opening day of the NCAA's 87th annual convention.

The morning session will be devoted to interpreting the mass of data. In the afternoon, panelists will discuss the long-range implications of the research and what influence it could have on NCAA policy.

"I think you'll find that information extremely interesting," NCAA executive director Dick Schultz told delegates Sunday night in remarks opening the convention. "It's probably the most conclusive and massive amount of information that has ever been accumulated in intercollegiate athletics. Over 4,000 individuals were interviewed."

Panelists include Joe McGuff, vice-president and editor of the Kansas City Star and Times and former sports editor of the newspapers; Will Bailey, outgoing president of the NCAA; Gail Fullerton, president of San Jose State University, and Edward F. Fort, chancellor of North Carolina A&T University.

Schultz also told delegates that the NCAA, for the first time in its history, was "turning the corner" in the war against illegal recruiting and maintenance of athletes.

"I've talked with our enforcement staff, and with coaches and athletic

Pirates Pass Early Test

Win Over The Tribe Gives Bucs' Confidence A Boost

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The semester is only starting for most East Carolina students, but the school's men's basketball team faced and passed an important preliminary exam Saturday at William and Mary.

The Pirates won their first Colonial Athletic Association road game over the Tribe, 75-69, to move to 7-5 on the year.

Last year, ECU won only one CAA game away from home the entire season en route to an 8-20 finish.

"I always try not to put too much emphasis on one game because it's a long season," ECU coach Mike Steele said. "But we needed to prove to ourselves that we could beat somebody on the road in the conference."

"Plus William and Mary has some injuries and they are struggling. You've got to beat those teams that are struggling. They are going to beat some teams up there."

Granted, the loss by the Tribe dropped their record to 2-8 on the year, yet it was the first time since the 1985-86 season that the Pirates had won their conference opener.

"It was very important for us because we didn't win many games on the road last year," senior point guard Jeff Kelly said. "William and Mary had some guys out but, they're tough at home. They are going to beat somebody in the top three in our conference sometime this season."

"We choked a lot of times last year. We had 10 games where we were close and had the ball with a minute to go and still lost. Saturday night, we lost the lead, but then we went and tried to win the game and not let William and Mary decide who would win the game. We went out and took the win. That's the only way you can win on the road."

ECU led by as many as 15 points over the Tribe in the first half, but found itself down by two, 54-52, with 6:40 left in the game. But the Bucs rallied to regain the lead and held on down the stretch for the win.

Senior forward Blue Edwards scored 31 points for the Pirates, his fifth game this year over 30 points. But ECU also got 12 points and 11 rebounds from forward Kevin Staples off the bench. Senior guard Kenny Murphy added 11 and reserve guard Reed Lose had 10.

"I think that the real positive thing is they made a real run and we didn't just hold them off, we put them away," Steele said.

"We're right where we need to be. By that I mean the guys have really pulled together. You can sense a closeness. You have to have it to win games on the road, to get through tough times."

"We went to Blue and he hit big shots and then late Jeff Kelly made

State Considering Some Legal Action

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH, N.C. — An attorney for North Carolina State University says the school plans to begin today taking legal action against the publisher of a forthcoming book that alleges the Wolfpack basketball program is corrupt.

"We plan to take all possible legal steps to defend the university from this sort of an attack," said Becky French, counsel to the university. "I'm sure that Simon & Schuster has its own in-house lawyers, and we will begin by making contact with them," Ms. French said Sunday.

The book, "Personal Fouls," by Peter Golenbock, is scheduled to be published next month, but a Raleigh newspaper obtained a copy of its dust jacket and published details of its allegations.

The dust jacket description charges the Wolfpack program, headed by coach and Athletic Director Jim Valvano, made payments to players, had grades changed and kept secret the results of drug tests. The News and Observer of Raleigh said. Valvano called the charges "erroneous, false and absolutely absurd."

Golenbock said Sunday he would make a statement on the issue today.

Also Sunday, Vincent Del Negro of Springfield, Mass., asserted Golenbock a "flat-out liar" in reference to the book cover proof's allegation that no player on the 1986-87 team had graduated.

"I have his diploma hanging right here on the wall in my den," Del Negro said of his son. "If someone wants to come and take a picture of it, they're more than welcome..."

The elder Del Negro also questioned another charge leveled in the book cover proof that NCSU players were provided cars, cash and gold jewelry.

Tyson Says He's Normal

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAS VEGAS — Mike Tyson, a tyrant inside the ring, insists he's not one outside of it.

"I'm just a normal guy," Tyson said. "I'm not a tyrant. I just don't take garbage from anyone."

The heavyweight champion: who meets Britain's Frank Bruno on Feb. 25 in his first fight in eight months, portrayed himself in a weekend interview as a misunderstood fighter because of the intense spotlight on his life.

"The way I am is the way I am, high-spirited, energetic and wild," he said. "I'm going to live the way I want to live anyway. I have to live my life. Once I start to change, that's the first sign of failure."

Tyson was in good spirits and appeared to be well on his way to trimming down to his fighting weight of about 218 pounds as he met for about an hour Saturday with a handful of reporters in a Las Vegas Hilton hotel suite.

Tyson, involved in a lawsuit with his estranged manager, Bill Cayton, sat with his new "adviser," promoter Don King, and declared himself enthusiastic about fighting again.

49ers Are 6-Point Favorites To Win

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — The San Francisco 49ers were made six-point favorites over the Cincinnati Bengals in the Super Bowl following each team's victory Sunday.

The 49ers beat Chicago 28-3 in the NFC Championship game. Cincinnati defeated Buffalo 21-10 for the AFC title.

The Super Bowl will be Jan. 22 in Miami. San Francisco defeated Cincinnati 26-21 in the 1982 Super Bowl and holds a 5-1 edge in games with the Bengals.

Charlotte Woman Falls At Riverfront

CINCINNATI (AP) — A young North Carolina woman suffered minor injuries Sunday when she fell from a ramp at Riverfront Stadium following the Cincinnati Bengals victory over the Buffalo Bills in the American Football Conference championship.

Yvonne Schmidt, of Charlotte, N.C., was dismissed after treatment for a neck injury at Christ Hospital, police said.

Ms. Schmidt, in her early 20s, fell over the wall of the down ramp, about eight feet to the ground level when she was bumped by the surging crowd leaving the stadium police said.

She was the third fan to fall in the stadium this season. One man was killed when he fell off a ramp outside the stadium. Another man was seriously injured trying to catch an extra point kick.

The Bengals have since installed nets behind the goal posts to keep balls from going into the stands and tempting fans.

William & Mary Eases By Japanese Team

YOKOHAMA, Japan (AP) — Fielding an all-star football team to try to beat an American college team at its own game turned out to be the wrong strategy for Japan.

William & Mary sent out the brightest star, freshman Robert Green, who rushed for 166 yards and two touchdowns in a crushing 73-3 victory over the Japanese collegians.

The 11,000 Japanese spectators cheered Green's slashing, twisting runs, but groaned at the score and the complete failure of the Japanese team's favorite weapon: the pass. Of 18 passes, only three were caught — all by the visitors.

"All our passes were incomplete because of the rain and slippery ball and there was no harmony and timing between the passers and receivers," said Japanese coach Mikio Shinotake.

William & Mary coach Jimmie Laycock, whose team was 6-4-1 in the regular season, said he did not think Sunday's all-star team was "a true representation of Japanese football in the sense that it is very difficult to prepare an all-star team of different people from different teams and put them together in a short period of time."

Japanese quarterback Yoshihiro Yamada said of the Americans, "They are heavier but lack speed. I wish to meet them again with my Nihon University team alone."

Shinotake, who coaches at Nihon University, expressed the same wish.

For one quarter, it was close. Japan started with three incomplete passes, and William & Mary came right back with a 42-yard drive capped by Green's 2-yard scoring plunge.

But Japan's Seiji Sugimoto intercepted a pass by John Brosnahan and ran it back 29 yards to the William & Mary 27. The Japanese All-Stars moved to the 5 before settling for a 24-yard field goal by Yosei Maeno.

Most of the rest of the game was played in Japan's half of the field, partly because Maeno was unable to punt out of trouble, averaging just 26 yards on nine kicks.

William & Mary scored almost at will. Besides Green, Tom Lewis and Michael Belmear also scored twice. Lewis caught touchdown passes of 12 yards from Craig Argo and 11 yards from Brosnahan, and Belmear caught one from 10 yards from Chris Hakel, the third William & Mary quarterback in the game, besides scoring on a 14-yard run.

Steve Christie kicked a 50-yard field goal on one of the few drives that stalled.

The visitors gained 406 yards rushing to just 66 for Japan.

Green agreed with the two coaches that Japan was hurt by lack of practice time.

"But as individuals they played very hard all the way to the end. ... In a couple of years they'll be OK," said Green, who led his team in rushing in the regular season with 609 yards on 105 carries.

Linebacker Kerry Gray added, "They were very quick, especially the quarterback." The Japanese suffered a disadvantage in size, "but I think they are coming along," he said.

Sunday's game was the first Epton Ivy Bowl, the first in a planned annual series of games against American teams. American football is becoming more popular in Japan, where 190 colleges, 110 high schools and 46 companies have teams, and a forthcoming feature film is centered around football.

The game went ahead despite Japan's six-day national mourning period for Emperor Hirohito, 87, who died on Saturday. The halftime show was canceled, and before the game, the two teams lined up on the field of the 35,000-seat stadium in a moment of silent prayer.

Auburn Loses Three Basketball Players

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — Auburn coach Sonny Smith dismissed junior forward Kelvin Ardister and freshman guard Johnny Benjamin from the injury-decimated team and Derrick Dennison — the Tigers' second leading scorer — quit several hours later.

Smith met with Dennison prior to Sunday night's practice to discuss a change in his role following the two dismissals, both apparently prompted by disciplinary problems.

"It (dismissals) had to be done because no individuals are going to be more important than the team," Smith said Sunday in a statement released by the university's Sports Information Office. "In Kelvin's case, things just haven't worked out since his reinstatement."

Ardister, from Decatur, Ga., was suspended for the first four games of this season for repeatedly violating team rules. He had since appeared in seven games, including five starts, and was averaging 10.9 points and 8.1 rebounds.

Associate Sports Information Director John Lewandowski said the dismissals were "as in permanent."

"I talked to Derrick about the need to change our style of play," Smith said of his conversation with Dennison, "because of our depth situation. I also told Derrick that I planned to bring him in off the bench, but that he could earn his starting job back."

The junior guard from Atlanta has averaged 13.5 points this season.

"He just feels like he's invested too much time and effort. His competitiveness really causes the problem. He wants to win so badly, he thinks he can do it all by himself."

Smith said "the door is open" for Dennison to return to the team.

Smith said Benjamin, of Orlando, Fla., told coaches he had to pay a $40 traffic ticket Friday afternoon and did not show up for practice or to travel with the team Saturday to Baton Rouge, La., for Auburn's Southeastern Conference game against LSU.

Smith said assistant coach Otis Johnson, who stayed behind in Auburn, confronted Benjamin at the athletic dormitory Friday night for an explanation but Benjamin declined to discuss his reason for failing to show up for practice or the team's trip.

A part-time starter at point guard, Benjamin averaged 6.5 points, 5.1 rebounds and four assists through the first 10 games.

The dismissals and Dennison's departure leave the Tigers only seven scholarship players.

Auburn earlier this season lost guard Reggie Gallon, guard John Battle and forward John Caylor to injuries and freshman forward Corey Walker has transferred to Florida International.

Auburn is 7-4 overall and 0-3 in the SEC, with a game scheduled Wednesday at Mississippi State.

directors, and there is a firm feeling that we're getting on top of the integrity issues," Schultz said.

Fear of the death penalty — instituted at a special 1985 convention and levied in 1987 against SMU football — is a major factor, Schultz said.

"It's also because of the programs you've installed in your own institutions and because of the renewed attitude of having integrity in intercollegiate programs," he told delegates. "Ninety-nine percent of everything that's going on in intercollegiate athletics today is exceptionally positive. We have to be sure we don't get mired down in that one percent that's negative."

Schultz, who took over for the retired Walter Byers in September 1987, told delegates morale has never been higher on the enforcement staff.

"We've improved working conditions. We've addressed the salary question. The morale of the enforcement staff is better than it has been for a long time."

Heavy probations levied recently against football programs at Houston, Oklahoma and Oklahoma State have given the public a misleading picture, he added.

"It's easy to say things are going downhill in a hurry. But what you have seen in the past 30 days is not what you see in intercollegiate athletics in January, 1989. It's an effort to clean up a lot of cases that have been there for two or three years."

"Fortunately, our problems are no different from those we see in society today. And I think we do a better job of dealing with our problems than society does."

Schultz said he bases his assertion that there is less cheating on what he hears from coaches and athletic directors.

"The number of violations are down substantially, especially major violations. We have fewer schols under investigation," he said.

Schultz and others point to the 1985 special convention as the turning point.

"I don't think there's any question that the 1985 convention ... empowering the infractions committee to give out stiffer penalties has had an impact," he said.

NEW YORK — "Home Sweet Home" is an adage the New York Knicks and the Los Angeles Lakers can really get into.

In the only NBA games Sunday, the Knicks walloped the Los Angeles Clippers 134-100 for their 11th straight victory at Madison Square Garden, while the Lakers pounded the San Antonio Spurs 126-96 at the Forum, where they are 13-0 and the only team still unbeaten at home this season.

New York, which now is 14-1 at home, with the one loss coming at the hands of the Lakers, had lost its previous two games.

"We have it in our mind that we don't want lose another game at home the rest of the year," Johnny Newman said.

Newman and Patrick Ewing led the Knicks with 26 points apiece, while Charles Oakley added 17 rebounds and 12 points.

The Knicks raised their overall record to 21-11, moving them 4½ games in front of idle Philadelphia in the Atlantic Division, despite a road mark of only 7-10.

"It's a matter of concentration and confidence right now," Newman said. "We know we're a good team, but we have to run off a few victories on the road to really build ourselves up. We've been close. We haven't lost by much. We're just a few points away from getting over that hump."

Newman, breaking out of an eight-game scoring slump, hit for 22 of his points in the Knicks' 80-point second half as New York turned a six-point halftime lead into a blowout.

The Knicks, using their fullcourt pressure defense from the start of the game, turned 23 turnovers into 29 points.

"In the first half, we were trying to tire them out," Knicks coach Rick Pitino said. "We were coming off a road trip, but the Clippers were coming off a longer one. We hoped to tire them out before we tired out."

The Knicks, who led 54-48 at the half, broke the game open with an 18-6 spurt early in the third quarter that made it 76-58 with 5:42 left. The Knicks entered the final period with a 92-78 lead and stretched that margin to 103-80 in the first three minutes of the quarter.

Quintin Dailey topped the Clippers with 26 points and Charles Smith added 15. On the negative side, LA's Kenny Norman was 2-for-18 from the field.

The Clippers now have lost five straight games, five straight away from home, and are 2-18 on the road this season.

"We've lost our continuity," Clippers coach Gene Shue said. "We had been making progress, but there just isn't any flow right now. We are breaking down defensively and not putting the ball in the hoop. When you don't hit your open shots, it kills you in the long run."

Newman was 11-for-15 from the field, including 4-for-4 from 3-point range. He missed only one of nine shots from the field in the second half and hit three of his 3-pointers in the fourth quarter.

"I think a lot of us snapped out of slumps tonight," Newman said. "I felt like we had control the whole way through, even though it was close early. I also thought that if we were able to maintain our concentration, we would be able to blow this game out."

Newman averaged only 10.9 during the previous eight games, scoring less than 10 in three of those contests.

Ewing went 10-for-13 from the field and also had 11 rebounds, seven assists and five blocked shots before leaving the game for good with 6:47 remaining. Lakers 126, Spurs 96.

The Lakers, who also have struggled on the road this season — with a 9-11 record and seven straight losses — got 16 points, 17 assists and eight rebounds from Magic Johnson against the Spurs to keep their home record perfect.

The Lakers will carry a seven-game road losing streak — their longest since an eight-game slide in 1975 — to Sacramento Tuesday night.

"Somewhere, this has to stop," LA coach Pat Riley said of the road woes. "We've had some bad breaks on the road, but we don't want have all that hanging over our heads when we go to Sacramento."

"We've gotta get rid of all that bad baggage. We've played much better recently."

"It's time to get over that," Johnson said of the travel jinx. "We've been out (on the road) the most of any NBA team, and although we did OK, we didn't do well by our standards."

San Antonio coach Larry Brown said of the Lakers, "They've had a miserable schedule, and only a team like the Lakers could have done as well as they did with that schedule."

Byron Scott and Michael Cooper, starting in place of the injured James Worthy, added 17 points each as eight Lakers scored in double figures.

Willie Anderson led the Spurs with 19 points and Alvin Robertson had 16.

Los Angeles took command early against the Spurs with a 19-8 run as the Lakers pulled away from a 21-15 lead midway through the opening quarter.

San Antonio rallied to move to within 60-54 at halftime, but the Lakers spurted away again, building an 83-65 lead 7½ minutes into the third period.

The Lakers, who now have beaten the Spurs 16 straight at the Forum, dating back to Jan. 6, 1984, led 89-74 heading into the final quarter.

Worthy missed the game with a bruised left knee. He injured the knee in a collision Friday night during a game against Miami, and team officials said it is uncertain when he will return to the lineup.

ECU Faces Tough CAA Stretch

free throws. Late in the game, we got back defensively and we did some good things."

But while things are going well for the Pirates now, the task ahead is formidable. Next up is a road game at Richmond Wednesday, followed by home games Saturday against James Madison and Monday against George Mason. All three are legitimate contenders for the CAA title.

Edwards, averaging 26.4 points per game, has been a constant for the Bucs thus far. How his supporting cast plays figures to be a determinant of whether the Pirates will be contenders or not.

Steele said Staples has a good chance at earning a starting spot for the game against the Spiders. At 6-5, Staples is one of the team's tallest players and his rebounding and inside scoring are sorely needed by the Bucs.

In Richmond, ECU faces a team that boasts a strong inside game led by senior center Mike Winiacki (6-8, 230) who averages 19.0 points and 6.8 rebounds a game. The Pirates were burned inside against William and Mary's 6-8 Scott Smith for 19 points and 10 rebounds.

"Richmond is similar to us in that they'll change defenses a lot and they'll get to the shooters," Steele said. "They are not going to beat themselves."

"(Our) interior defense has got to get better. We let the ball go in the post (Saturday night) because we didn't think the Smith kid was going to be very good with it. He was real good with it and we didn't really adjust well. With a guy like Winiacki, you have to keep him from getting the ball."

Richmond holds a 32-21 edge in the series and have won seven straight at home against the Pirates. ECU's last win at the Robbins Center came in 1977-78 by a score of 71-53.

"It's an important game," Kelly said. "It's a game that we can't go up there and expect them to play bad. Coach (Dick) Tarrant always has them prepared. We haven't beat them in quite a while. In order to win the conference you have to beat some people on the road."

CAA Notes

American, the pre-season pick to finish first, thus far has forged a 2-0 conference record after a 70-68 win over George Mason Saturday. Both of those teams are expected to challenge for the league title.

James Madison, under the guidance of Lefty Driesell, has been the big surprise of the CAA. The Dukes were picked for the conference cellar but are 1-0 in the league after a 64-60 win over Navy Saturday and have also managed an overall mark of 8-5.

UNC-Wilmington (4-7, 0-1) was expected to be one of the CAA's better teams at the start of the season, but has struggled early on this year. The Seahawks take on struggling William and Mary tonight.

Sam Wyche celebrates after winning AFC Championship

Wyche Made Complete Turnaround

By Hal Bock
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — As time evaporated in the AFC championship game, the coach and his players stood at arm's length on Cincinnati's sideline, pouring various liquids on each other, participating in this decade's ritualistic shower of champions.

The Bengals qualified for the ceremony after a 21-10 thumping of Buffalo on Sunday that was not as close as the final score indicated. So they played dueling Gatorade cans, splashing happily on their way to the Super Bowl. A year ago, though, there were people in this town who wanted to dump other stuff on Coach Sam Wyche.

Wyche was in charge of a fast-sinking ship then, almost certain, it seemed, to go down with it in the wake of a 4-11 season that was pock-marked with bizarre losses. "Sure, I thought about getting fired," he said. "When three out of four people in your household think you're going to be fired, you think about it."

Wyche's trick plays invariably backfired, leaving the Bengals the laughing stock of the league. Nobody's laughing anymore.

Owner Paul Brown called last season an aberration and imposed some basic rules on his coach, requiring that Wyche eat the standard three meals a day and go home at night, instead of turning football into an obsession. It was a quaint idea in this era of coaches whose eyes are bloodshot from watching films from morning till night.

Everybody benefitted, including the Bengals, who rode the MVP season of quarterback Boomer Esiason and the charming if slightly off-balance shuffle of rookie running back Ickey Woods to the AFC Central title.

This would not be Wyche's team, though, without a little wrinkle here and there. For the Bengals, it would be the no-huddle, quick-snap attack, a sort of perpetual two-minute offense that often caught opponents with their defensive substitutions down.

A week ago, Seattle responded to the tactic with a rash of entirely coincidental injuries that conveniently stopped the clock and permitted the substitutions to be made.

That bit of business spurred the NFL into action and less than two hours before Sunday's title game, league officials announced an agreement. There would be no feigned injuries, but the quick-snap attack might be subject to unsportsmanlike penalties at the discretion of the referee.

Wyche was less than thrilled with this sudden turn of events, especially when the Bengals have been using the tactic for 3½ seasons and had been reassured repeatedly by the league that it was within the spirit of the rules and the letter of the law.

"That's like a restaurant getting robbed at 6:30 in the evening," he said. "You let the crook go and then tell the restaurant, 'You can't stay open at 6:30, because you're vulnerable to robbery.'"

"What they did was say they would penalize our team for doing what got us to the playoff."

Against the Bills, the Bengals played it mostly straight. There was a strange timeout called by Cincinnati immediately after a built-in television timeout but that hardly fit in the theatre of the absurd that Wyche's team often performed in a year ago.

But these would not be the Bengals without a little sleight of hand from the coach. So, on fourth-and-4 from the Buffalo 33 in the third quarter of a still-tight title game, Wyche went for the fake punt.

Backup quarterback Turk Schonert was positioned under the center while punter Lee Johnson waited for the phantom snap. The ball came to Schonert, who handed off to Stanley Wilson for six yards and the first down that continued the drive to the clinching touchdown.

The key to the play, of course, was having somebody there for the handoff. "(Guard) Brian Blades is 315 pounds. Turk just snuck out there behind him," Wyche said. It was no big deal. Just a little strategy, just like the old quick-snap, no-huddle razzle dazzle.

In the Super Bowl, look for the Bengals to bring back the umbrella defense, just in case the Gatorade starts getting spilled again.

Loyola Rolls Up Points Once Again

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN DIEGO — Loyola Marymount Coach Paul Westhead wants a perfect game and U.S. International's Gary Zarecky likes his team to be fast-paced.

So how about a rematch of the highest-scoring game in NCAA history?

Mark your calendar for Jan. 31 and bring plenty of score sheets. The Loyola Marymount Lions and the U.S. International Gulls are going to do it again, this time in Loyola's Gersten Pavilion in Los Angeles.

Loyola Marymount beat U.S. International 162-144 Saturday night and rewrote part of the NCAA record book.

The 306 points were the most ever, surpassing the previous record of 302. The Lions also were involved in that game, a 164-138 victory over Azusa Pacific in the season-opener Nov. 28.

The Lions missed a 3-point shot at the final buzzer Saturday, missing a chance at breaking their record for most points by a Division I team.

The 164 points against Azusa Pacific tied Loyola with Nevada-Las Vegas, which scored 164 against Hawaii-Hilo Feb. 19, 1976.

The Lions led U.S. International 93-68 at halftime, setting an NCAA record for most points in a half by one team. The old mark was 87, by Oklahoma in the second half of the Sooners' 152-122 victory over Oral Roberts last month.

U.S. International set a Division I record for most points by a losing team in regulation. The previous mark was 127, by Pepperdine against Loyola Marymount Feb. 20, 1988.

Even with all that offense,

Westhead was thinking about improving his beloved fast break, which is triggered by the Lions' pressure defense.

"I don't get into that record stuff much," Westhead said. "I'm into it this much — I would like to see our team play the perfect game, run the perfect break every time. That would be around 240 (points). So 160 is kind of dabbling with mediocrity. "I think we can play better than we did tonight. When we defend better, we can get more points off of our defense.

"USIU hung in there. The fact that they are willing to shoot quickly like us helped the fast pace."

Zarecky said, "We got our money's worth tonight. We set an NCAA record and we didn't get embarrassed."

Bench And Yastrzemski Have Reason To Wait By The Phone

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Johnny Bench and Carl Yastrzemski have a good reason to stay close to a phone tonight.

Sometime this evening, a call will come letting them know if they are the newest members of baseball's Hall of Fame. The rest of the world will hear about it at 11 p.m. EST, when the results are officially released.

Last year, Willie Stargell was the 17th player elected in his first year of eligibility and most observers expect Bench and Yastrzemski will be Nos. 18 and 19.

Jim Bunning will be waiting by the telephone, too. For Bunning, it's the 13th year he has waited for a call in the affirmative.

After missing by 21 votes in 1987, Bunning fell four votes shy with 317 (74.2 percent) last year.

"I thought I had a shot," said Bunning, who is eligible for two more years if he doesn't make it. After that, he must wait three years before he can be considered by the Veterans Committee.

"I think I was right the first time," Bunning said. "If you don't make it right away, you should take your name off the ballot so you won't have to go through this every year."

Bunning's near miss wasn't the closest in voting history. Former Chicago White Sox second baseman Nellie Fox missed by one vote in 1985, his last season of eligibility.

Reflecting on the weak field last year, nine writers returned signed ballots without votes. Fourteen of the 45 players listed failed to receive a vote.

If the nine writers had not sent in their ballots, the total would have been 418, meaning 75 percent would have been 314 votes and Bunning would have made it.

Bunning was 224-184 with a 3.27 ERA and 2,885 strikeouts, second to Walter Johnson on the all-time strikeout list when he retired. He won 100 games in each league and also had a no-hitter in each league, including a perfect game while pitching for Philadelphia against the New York Mets on June 21, 1964.

In addition to Bench and Yastrzemski, pitchers Gaylord Perry and Ferguson Jenkins also appear on the ballot for the first time.

To be on the ballot, a player must be retired for five years and to be elected must be named on 75 percent of the ballots cast.

While Jenkins and Perry are given an outside chance of making it in tonight, Yastrzemski and Bench are already making plans for spending a July weekend in Cooperstown.

Yastrzemski and Bench not only have outstanding statistical credentials, but carry an image of being among the upper echelon of baseball's stars.

Yastrzemski took over in left field for Hall of Famer Ted Williams and asserted himself with authority.

Yaz finished with 3,419 hits and 452 home runs. He was on 16 All-Star teams, won six Gold Gloves as the Red Sox' left fielder and won the American League MVP Award in 1967, when he won the Triple Crown and led Boston to the pennant.

He also holds league records for the most intentional walks, 190; most at-bats 11,988, and most plate appearances, 13,990.

Yaz reached base via a hit or a walk 5,264 times during his career, ranking third behind Pete Rose, 5,822, and Ty Cobb, 5,440.

"I accomplished something no one else has ever done," Yastrzemski, the only American Leaguer to have 3,000 hits and 400 home runs, said. "I'm very pleased and very proud of my accomplishments."

Bench holds the record for most homers by a catcher, 327. Overall, he hit 389 home runs and won 10 Gold Gloves while helping the Reds win the World Series in 1975 and 1976.

"Johnny Bench was the prototype catcher of his time," former Cincinnati manager Sparky Anderson said. "He was a great talent and a leader."

Legal Action For State

"That's so absurd that sane people would know it's funny," Del Negro said. "Vinnie drove a 1974 Buick clunker that his mom and I bought for him in his second year down there."

North Carolina State senior Chucky Brown said he and his teammates were "stunned" by the allegations.

"It was unfair to coach Valvano, his family and the team," Brown said.

Still another allegation claimed a player "deliberately lost" a 1987 NCAA first-round tournament game to Florida because winning would have meant drug testing and a lost opportunity for an NBA career, the newspaper said. The dust jacket did not identify the player.

"If somebody was point-shaving, it was hard to tell. I sure don't think anybody was," Brown said. "I mean, Florida went on to the Final 16 and lost to Syracuse. I don't see how anybody could have point-shaved that game."

Brown joked about the claim that players were rewarded with cars and money.

"I haven't received anything and neither have the guys before me," Brown said. "If I was supposed to receive money and a car, I didn't know it. And if I was, somebody stole them and I wish they'd please return them."

Sophomore Chris Corchiani also disputed the payment charge. "All of this is something we know as a team is untrue," Corchiani said. "It looks like someone's trying to ruin coach Valvano's life. We know he's not that kind of person at all. I just can't believe somebody would do this. It just blows my mind."

Valvano said the charge of altered drug tests at N.C. State "shows a lack of real information about our drug-testing program."

"The university has a voluntary drug-testing program with very specific guidelines. ... We follow the letter of our drug testing to the spirit of its intent," Valvano said. "Once again, that statement would seem to implicate our doctors, trainers and everyone who administers our drug tests. Believe me, you're talking about some people with great integrity."

Valvano said he was at a loss as to which former player may have given Golenbock the information which appeared on the dust jackets and is expected to appear in the book.

"There is not a player who has left our program that I have not followed closely," he said.

Cincinnati Gets Past Bills

Levy's bylaws "Don't play dumb; don't play dirty."

Burroughs had been warned to control himself or he would be penalized.

"I didn't see what happened," Levy said. "The referee came over and said he hit him straight in the face, and the rules require an ejection."

The Bills still did not die.

Buffalo drove to the Bengals 18-yard line and seemed on the verge of going to the wire with a chance to win, but Kelly threw three straight incomplete passes, then was intercepted in the end zone by Bengals safety David Fulcher.

It was Kelly's third interception of the game and, with 8:07 left, the final stake in the heart of the Bills' season.

"Sure, we are aggravated," Bills nose tackle Fred Smerlas said. "We thought we matched up very well with the Bengals, and we fought hard the whole game. Nobody likes to lose. The Bengals are a very good team and we just didn't play well enough to win."

The three interceptions and the Bills' lack of a running game (45 yards) said volumes about the way the Bengals defense played.

"I think everyone had our defense below the standards of a championship team," Wyche said. "But our defense has played as it had to when the chips were down, and this was a defensive win."

The only time the Bills moved the ball against the Bengals was when Kelly completed four passes on a touchdown drive at the start of the second quarter.

The Bengals scored first on Woods' 1-yard run with 1:51 left in the first quarter following an interception by Eric Thomas that gave Cincinnati the ball at the Bills 20.

The Bills tied the score, 7-7, on their next possession, with Kelly finding Andre Reed in the corner of the end zone from the Bengals 9-yard line.

The Bengals took a 14-7 lead by marching 74 yards in 11 plays and scoring on the pass to Brooks.

An interception by Mark Kelso allowed the Bills' Scott Norwood to kick a 39-yard field goal with 22 seconds left in the half to cut the lead to 14-10.

The Bengals defense slammed the door from that point.

"The Bengals defensive line kind of surprised us," Bills guard Jim Richter said. "They seemed stronger than the last time we played them."

"Overall, they just played real well. The way they played today, they played like one of the top teams in the league."

Yow Gives Credit For Wins To Players

By Tom Foreman Jr. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH, N.C. — Instead of taking all the credit for winning 300 basketball games in 14 seasons at North Carolina State, Kay Yow gives the due to those who played the game under her.

"It's not my 300th win. It's their 300th win," Yow said after the 19th-ranked Wolfpack took a 100-70 victory over Georgia Tech. It was the Wolfpack's ninth victory this season.

"I just happened to be here. We know the credit really doesn't belong to me. It's shared by many people. That's what it caused me to focus on," she said.

Yow, who coached the U.S. Olympic women's team to the gold medal at Seoul last summer, has a 300-107 record in 14 years at N.C. State. In 19 years at the college level, Yow has a mark of 357-126, including five years at Elon College.

Yow brought the Wolfpack program out of its infancy in the late 1970s into a position of prominence within the state and the nation. N.C. State has been in the top 20 for 10 of the 12 years such a list has been picked, and Yow has been coach for all but one of the seasons N.C. State has had women's basketball.

Under Yow, the Wolfpack has three Atlantic Coast Conference titles, and has reached post-season play in 12 of her 13 previous seasons, including six of seven NCAA tournaments.

Still, the Gibsonville, N.C., native prefers to focus the attention on all those who have been around her.

"When something like this happens, it causes you to focus on all the past players and past staff members who were a part of the 300 wins," she said. It's special with this team and this staff that a part of this nine wins was here when the 300th was here.

A major part of the 300th victory was Andrea Stinson, who scored a career-high 37 points. Stinson's performance was five points short of the N.C. State record of 42 points, set by Linda Page on two occasions and both against Clemson.

N.C. State opened a 21-2 lead as the Yellow Jackets went almost five minutes before scoring their first basket. Georgia Tech rallied and cut the deficit to 25-19 with 7:42 left in the half.

The Wolfpack then went on a 24-12 run and held a 49-31 halftime lead. Stinson had 19 points in the half.

N.C. State led by as much as 33 points in the second half, and Sandee Smith's three-point play with 1:12 left put the Wolfpack at 100 points for the third time this season.

"This team is doing well right now for a young team," Yow said. "We have to go through an entire ACC schedule. As the season goes by, we'll be able to judge this team better."

Yow says there's no magic number in mind, adding that it's amazing to have coached in 300 games, let alone winning that many.

"I never thought about it, what would be a good number to shoot for," she said. "I just never see it as a personal goal. It's just not me."

San Francisco Looking Ahead

for 121 yards with one key first-half interception. He was replaced in the fourth quarter by Mike Tomczak after the game no longer was in doubt. The 49ers never sacked McMahon, but they kept constant pressure on him and blanketed his primary receivers to take away his favorite short pass patterns.

"The coverage by our defensive backs was outstanding," 49ers nose tackle Michael Carter said. "McMahon always was on the move and couldn't get set to pass."

For most of the first quarter, both offenses had trouble moving the ball. Because of the gusting, swirling wind, four of the first five punts traveled less than 30 yards, which turned the game into a battle for field position.

"The weather was rough," Carter said. "After the first five minutes, there was ice on my facemask from the perspiration dripping down."

Facing a third-and-9 situation at his own 39 late in the period, Montana called for Rice to run a 20-yard stop pattern. The Bears blitzed, and Rice found himself getting single coverage from cornerback Mike Richardson. Rice stopped and came back to make a leaping grab as Richardson and safety Todd Krumm went sailing past, then broke to the middle of the field to race the last 42 yards of a 61-yard play for a 7-0 lead.

"Jerry just had to play a little basketball, and he came down with it," Montana said. "It was a great catch and a great move."

The ball bounced around on the unpredictable air currents the whole game. "Joe told me the ball might not be right where I wanted it, and I would have to make a play on it," Rice said. "As a whole, I think that if I'm making the plays, it boosts the whole team up."

Under the conditions, the ease of Rice's score had a crushing effect on the Bears because it put them in a comeback position and forced them to pass more than they had planned.

"The first quarter went on and on, and all I could think was, 'Here comes another 10-9 game,'" said Cross, referring to the score of the 49ers' loss to the Bears last October. "Then Jerry broke loose, and we started moving the ball and getting the chunks of yardage."

Safety Jeff Fuller intercepted an overthrown pass from McMahon at San Francisco's 36 to stop one threat. Immediately, Montana hit a 20-yard slant to Rice against cornerback Vestee Jackson.

On third-and-10 at the Bears' 39-yard line, the 49ers pulled a surprise when fullback Tom Rathman broke two tackles for a 12-yard gain on a trap play. Two plays later, Rice went in motion, and Jackson followed him across the field. At the snap, Rice cut to the inside of Jackson, who made a clumsy turn that allowed Rice to break clear for a 27-yard touchdown.

The Bears came back to score their only points on a 25-yard field goal by Kevin Butler. They had a third-and-1 at the 49ers' 47 and a chance to get back in the game before halftime, but safety Ronnie Lott blitzed and forced a sweep by running back Neal Anderson to lose 5 yards.

After warming themselves at halftime, the 49ers took the second-half kickoff and drove a stake through Bear hearts with a 78-yard scoring drive that required 13 plays and took 5 minutes, 18 seconds. Rice got it started with an 8-yard slant-in on third-and-6 from his 26.

The next play was a 12-yard pass to wide receiver John Taylor, and on third-and-3 at the Bears' 47, Montana hit Rathman out of the backfield for an 11-yard gain. Craig, who rushed for 68 yards in 18 carries, got 11 on a sweep, and Montana hit Rice with an 18-yard completion to the Bears' 5. After the officials ruled a circus catch by Rice incomplete, Montana found tight end John Frank alone in the end zone to put the Niners ahead 21-3.

Musical '42nd Street' Ends Long Stand On Broadway

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The dancing feet of the cast of "42nd Street" took to the stage one last time, as the second longest-running show on Broadway closed after eight years and 3,486 performances seen by 10 million people.

Based on the 1933 Warner Bros. movie starring Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell and Ginger Rogers, the show told the tale of a chorus girl replacing an aging star who breaks her ankle just before opening night.

It closed on Sunday but it may be revived in April with an all-black cast, and the scenery and other equipment is being kept.

Its music includes such classics as "Lullaby of Broadway," "Shuffle Off to Buffalo," and the title song.

The musical's longevity was second only to "A Chorus Line," which opened in 1975.

"42nd Street" won the 1981 Tony Award for best musical, and its director and choreographer, Gower Champion, won a posthumous Tony for choreography.

Champion died just hours before the opening-night performance in New York on Aug. 25, 1980. He was 59 and had a rare form of blood cancer.

Few involved in putting on the musical had known of Champion's illness, and the cast and audience were not informed of his death until after the final curtain, when producer David Merrick announced it from the stage.

Merrick, now 77, suffered a stroke six years ago that makes it difficult for him to speak.

"It's been a wonderful opportunity to have brought this extravaganza to Broadway and I take pride in the fact that it has been seen by 10 million people," Merrick said through his attorney.

Merrick watched the final show from the audience and he posted a letter backstage to thank the cast and crews for "your brilliant talents, your dedication, your boundless energies and caring, and your total professionalism."

He has produced more than 80 Broadway shows, including "Hello, Dolly" and "Play It Again, Sam."

"42nd Street" opened with a cast of 54 that included Tammy Grimes, Jerry Orbach, Wanda Richert and Lee Roy Reams. It closed Sunday starring Elizabeth Allen, Jamie Ross, Jim Walton and Clare Leach.

Thirteen cast members had been in the show since opening night. There have been six marriages within the company and six babies born.

The musical played at three theaters: the Winter Garden, the Majestic and the St. James, where its final performance was played.

King World Hopes Frost Will Make 'Inside Edition' New Television Hit

By Kathryn Baker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — So how will journalist-personality David Frost make the new syndicated newsmagazine "Inside Edition" different from those other shows relegated by critics to the "trash TV" heap?

"I think the accent will help," he chuckled through a cigar-smoke haze. Indeed, there is that clipped, British way of making everything sound ever so more important than it perhaps, in point of fact, is, as it were.

Frost, who made a twice-weekly commute for "That Was the Week That Was" back in the 1960s, will have an easier time of it this time — he'll commute only weekly between his home outside London and the Manhattan studios of "Inside Edition." Thanks to the supersonic Concorde, time zones and a helicopter from JFK Airport, he boasts, "I can leave my house in the country at 8:30 in the morning and be at my office at 'Inside Edition' at 10."

During an interview, Frost was positively buoyant, bouncing around his hotel apartment overlooking Central Park, from telephone to room-service tray and back to the dining table. But an English reporter doing a profile piece who had flown in with him that morning seemed a bit foggy.

"Inside Edition," a half-hour, weekly series, premieres tonight. It is the first news effort from Roger and Michael King, the kings of syndication whose King World distributes "Wheel of Fortune," "Jeopardy" and "The Oprah Winfrey Show."

King World announced "Inside Edition" shortly after the highly touted "USA Today: The Television Show" premiered in September to universal bad reviews and seemed bound shortly for syndication oblivion. The daily "USA Today: The Television Show" was picked up by stations in a whopping 95 percent of the country weeks before its premiere, proving there was a big market for a new, syndicated newsmagazine.

The timing of the King World announcement of "Inside Edition" was not coincidental. But GTG Entertainment has not folded the "USA Today: The Television Show" tent. The show has been retooled and renewed for another season in an attempt to salvage a $40 million investment.

Nevertheless, "Inside Edition" has been picked up in 71 percent of the country, and King World calls it "the hottest-selling midseason replacement in the history of syndication."

"USA Today: The Television Show" had an impressive cast of behind-the-scenes characters: former NBC Chairman Grant Tinker, Gannett and former NBC "Today" show producer Steve Friedman.

The Kings have matched Frost with the producers of Fox's successful "A Current Affair."

Frost first arrived on these TV shores in the fab '60s as host and co-creator of the satirical "That Was the Week That Was." He has maintained his television presence in this country as host of the syndicated "Spectacular World of Guinness Records," the "Spitting Image" network specials and the syndicated "The Next President" series in which he conducted in-depth interviews with every 1988 U.S. presidential candidate.

Frost has retained his hip, tongue-in-cheek image from the days of "TW3," but he made the serious-interview hall of fame in 1977 when he elicited an apology to the nation for Watergate from former President Nixon.

Since then, he has conducted one-on-one interviews with numerous world leaders, including most recently Britain's Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. That interview was excerpted on NBC's "Today" show, on which Frost is a contributor.

In addition to tapping Frost for "Inside Edition," the observant Kings grabbed John Tomlin and Bob Young, the producers of "A Current Affair," an impertinent, sensationalistic, seedy newsmag with a saving edge of self-mockery.

Frost hopes the producers will bring to "Inside Edition" some of that self-mocking quality. But he calls the new show "a cross between 'A Current Affair' and '20-20,' ABC News' quite serious magazine show.

"Inside Edition" "does concentrate on people rather than issues, it's popular journalism in that sort of sense," Frost said.

"It's not 'This Week with David Brinkley,' or something like that. It hopes to be popular journalism. But every subject it covers will hopefully be reflected through the prism of good judgment, as it were."

Film Critics Vote 'Unbearable' Best

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — "The Unbearable Lightness of Being," a film adapted from Milan Kundera's novel, was voted the 1988's best picture by the National Society of Film Critics.

The film, about a Czech surgeon who flees his homeland when the Soviets invade in 1968, mixes politics and eroticism. Its director, Philip Kaufman, was honored Sunday by the society with the best director award.

Other winners were: Actor: Michael Keaton, "Beetlejuice" and "Clean and Sober." Actress: Judy Davis, "High Tide." Supporting Actor: Dean Stockwell,

"Married to the Mob" and "Tucker."

Supporting Actress: Mercedes Ruehl, "Married to the Mob." Documentary: "The Thin Blue Line," by Errol Morris.

Screenplay: Ron Shelton, "Bull Durham." Cinematography: Henri Alekan, "Wings of Desire."

The society voted a special award to Pedro Almodovar, director of "Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown" and "Matador," "for his originality."

The society, made up of 39 critics from major publications, has given awards for 23 years. It held its annual meeting Sunday at the Algonquin Hotel.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠83 ♥AKJ105 ♦8 ♣AKJ52
 Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one spade. What action do you take?
 A.—Although in terms of point count you are a bit heavy for a simple overcall, two-suited hands aren't handled well by a takeout double. For instance, suppose West then boosts the auction to four spades, passed back to you. Now you would have to guess at an uncomfortably high level. It's wiser to get in one suit by overcalling two hearts.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠Q76 ♥A9873 ♦8 ♣K762
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♣ Pass 1 ♥ Pass

3 ♣ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—Since partner's jump rebid shows a hand worth some 18 points, a raise to four clubs, which might be passed, is a distinct underbid. Jump to five clubs to confirm that you have excellent trump support and a distributional hand. (If you play splinter bids, a jump to four diamonds to show a singleton there would be perfect.)

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠A2 ♥K932 ♦AKJ6 ♣KQ6
 The bidding has proceeded:
 South West North East
 1 ♦ Pass 1 ♣ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—There is a textbook bid available—a jump to two no trump. That shows a balanced hand of 19-20 points and no significant support for partner's suit.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠K932 ♥A2 ♦AKJ6 ♣KQ8
 The bidding has proceeded:
 South West North East
 1 ♦ Pass 1 ♣ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—A jump raise to three spades in this sequence is invitational, not forcing. Since you want to be in game even if partner has a dead minimum 6 points, there is a simple way to show your powerful hand in support—jump to four spades!

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠AJ ♥954 ♦762 ♣KQ763
 Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?
 A.—With only 10 points and no fit, you do not have quite enough to respond at the two-level. Therefore, the only bid you can make is one no trump.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠AJ ♥954 ♦762 ♣KQ763
 The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♣ Pass 1 NT Pass
 2 ♣ Pass ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—In this sequence partner must have at least a six-card spade suit, especially since you can tell that his suit can't be top quality. Therefore, you have excellent support and, because you have a maximum for your first response, you should now raise to three spades.

Arabs Want Chemical, Nuke Bans Linked

By Elaine Ganley THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — A campaign by Arab states to link nuclear and chemical disarmament has threatened to jeopardize a consensus at an international conference called to bolster flagging talks on a chemical weapons ban.

At the conference Sunday, the Soviet Union announced it will start destroying chemical arms stockpiles this year, but U.S. officials said the Soviets are merely playing "catch up" because the United States has been routinely destroying stockpiles of aging chemical arms since the early 1980s.

Delegates from 16 Arab countries at the 150-nation conference argued, meanwhile, that a total chemical ban would be discriminatory as long as another weapon of mass destruction exists for a few countries, Israel among them.

"Iraq believes that any call for a comprehensive ban on chemical weapons must be coupled with a parallel and similar call for a comprehensive ban on nuclear weapons," Vice Premier Tariq Aziz of Iraq said Sunday.

In a fiery speech to about 80 foreign ministers among the delegates, he accused Israel of posing "a serious threat to the security of Arab nations." Aziz said Israel has "nuclear weapons as well as chemical weapons and missiles that can reach many Arab cities."

Israel called the Iraqi statement "blatant hypocrisy." Iraq is known to have used chemical weapons in its 8-year war with Iran.

The five-day conference, which ends Wednesday, is aimed at giving new political impetus to a 1925 Geneva Protocol that prohibits the use of such toxic chemical and biological agents.

A final statement is to be adopted by consensus, meaning differences could block an accord or leave it grossly weakened.

Among foreign ministers scheduled to address the conference today were Moshe Arens of Israel and Jadalla Azouz Ettalhi of Libya, which the Washington accuses of building a factory to manufacture poison gas.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz said Sunday that in talks with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze, he had persuaded the Soviet Union to look into the U.S. allegations.

Shevardnadze said in a speech to the conference Sunday that the Soviet Union will not wait for disarmament negotiators in Geneva to reach an accord banning use, production and stockpiling of chemical arms. He said a new Soviet facility to destroy chemical weapons will go into operation this year.

The envoy said his country has stopped production of chemical weapons, an announcement first made in April 1987.

"What they are doing is playing catch-up ball," said a senior official of the U.S. delegation, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Delegation members said the United States has been destroying limited quantities of aging chemical weapons since the early 1980s, while continuing to manufacture modern chemical arms.

It was not immediately clear whether the Soviet announcement signaled a program to systematically destroy all chemical weapons, but U.S. officials appeared doubtful.

Lynn Hansen, director of the bureau of multilateral affairs at the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, said the Soviet position "now corresponds to our own position. ... We simply don't get the press, because for us it's more routine.

"When they do it, all of a sudden it's news," Hansen told reporters.

The United States and the Soviet Union are the only two countries to admit possessing chemical weapons. According to U.S. estimates, about 20 countries possess or have the ability to manufacture chemical weapons.

The Paris conference is aimed at pressing negotiators in Geneva to reach an accord on outlawing production, use and stocking of chemical weapons.

The only existing document on chemical weapons, the 1925 Geneva

Protocol, bans only their use, and without enforcement power, is regarded as inadequate by many nations.

Addressing the thorny issue of verification, a major stumbling block for negotiators, Shevardnadze said a new convention should provide for a "short notice challenge inspection" of any facility suspected of manufacturing chemical weapons, and that there should be no "right of refusal" of any such inspection.

He said the Soviet Union supports proposals for enlarged powers for the U.N. secretary general to investigate alleged chemical weapons use, and he proposed setting up an international verification agency working under United Nations auspices.

The United States halted production of chemical weapons in 1969 but resumed 18 years later to counter the Soviet build-up. The Soviet Union says it has 50,000 tons of chemical arms stockpiled, while the United States has about 30,000 tons. However, both those figures are thought to be largely underestimated.
