Thrift Banker Says Insurance Cut Would Hurt S&Ls

By Greg Laudick
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A Reagan administration recommendation to curtail deposit insurance for banks and savings and loan accounts has drawn negative reaction from a local banking official, Congress and the Treasury Department.

The Associated Press reported today that President Reagan's Council of Economic Advisers, in its final report to Reagan, said reducing protection for depositors would encourage them to more closely "monitor the financial health" of institutions holding their money. But Jerry Carson, executive vice president of Home Federal Savings and Loan Association in Greenville, said such an action would in effect, penalize smaller financial institutions.

"I think it would hurt smaller institutions because the public has a perception that a large institution cannot fail because the government has not allowed any of them to fail over the last 10 years," Carson said. "But some smaller institutions have been allowed to fail," he said. "They usually are either merged with a larger institution or the government comes in, closes them up and pays off the depositors."

Carson said that if the federal insurance coverage amount is lowered, for example from $100,000 down to $50,000, a customer at a small bank with $100,000 deposited might be tempted to take the uninsured $50,000 to a different bank.

However at a larger bank, the customer might be content to leave the entire $100,000 on deposit because the customer perceives the institution can't fail because the government won't allow it to fail, he said.

Meanwhile, the Associated Press reported that Democratic and Republican members of Congress have reaffirmed a commitment to guaranteeing deposits up to the current $100,000 per account limit.

"I'm appalled at the timing of the administration... I think the public needs some reassurance," said Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., in an AP story.

The Treasury Department, through Rep. Chalmers P. Wylie, R-Ohio, of the House Banking Committee also promptly distanced itself from the proposal.

At a hearing of the committee, Wylie said, "Curtailed deposit insurance is not an option and will not be considered" as part of the S&L plan being developed by Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady.

Brady will be staying on as treasury secretary in the Bush administration.

In its report, released by the White House, the Council of Economic Advisers also sharply criticized Reagan-appointed savings and loan regulators for "postponing the day of reckoning" in their rescues of failed institutions, according to the AP.

Last year a post-Depression record of more than 200 insolvent institutions were closed.

Republicans Pay For Quayle Rest

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — An aide to Dan Quayle asked the Republican National Committee for "a very large amount" to defray the cost of the vice president-elect's Christmas-week vacation in Vail, Colo., and the party approved a $25,000 payment. The Washington Post reported today.

RNC Chairman Frank Fahrenkopf told the newspaper that the original request "was not something I thought we could do." Quayle's spokesman, David Beckwith, said an aide had made an unauthorized estimate of vacation expenses of $65,000.

The Quayle family vacation plans were scaled back and Beckwith told the Associated Press on Tuesday evening that the final cost to the RNC would be about $15,000.

He said that amount would cover the expenses of two aides — their accommodations, air fare, per diem payment, rental of a four-wheel-drive vehicle, extra telephone lines and facsimile and reproduction machines — during the 10 days.

Beckwith said an unidentified aide planning the Vail trip had estimated the cost at $65,000, including a charter airplane, hotel and other expenses of the Quayle family, advance men, personal aides and others. The trip was to have included a stopover at the Jan. 2 Fiesta Bowl football game in Tempe, Ariz.

Beckwith said Quayle considered the $65,000 proposal "totally out of line" and chose to go by commercial airlines, skipping the Fiesta Bowl, reducing the size of his entourage and paying all his personal expenses.

Airport Maintains Growth Patterns

By John Bare
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Pitt-Greenville Airport enjoyed continued growth in 1988, but boardings dropped at Stallings Field in Kinston for the third year in a row, airport officials said.

More than 92,000 passengers passed through Pitt-Greenville Airport in 1988 on Piedmont Commuter and American Eagle Airlines flights, Airport Manager Jim Turcotte said.

The numbers reflect a 16 percent increase over 1987, Turcotte said at the Pitt-Greenville Airport Authority's regular monthly meeting Tuesday. In 1987, 79,098 people flew commercial airlines at the airport.

The 1988 totals are a 64 percent increase from 1986, when the only airline available in Greenville was Piedmont Commuter and 56,146 people passed through the airport.

Turcotte said the statistics show Pitt-Greenville is faring well against one of its main competitors, Kinston.

In 1988, 46,473 passengers boarded planes in Greenville. That is a 15 percent increase from commercial boardings in 1987.

Though the Kinston airport is still busier than Pitt-Greenville, Kinston experienced a 9.6 percent drop in boardings in 1988, Kinston Airport Manager Steve Brian said. The Lenoir County facility boarded 63,089 passengers in 1988 on Piedmont Commuter and Piedmont Airlines.

"We're beginning to level off at the present time," Brian said. "It's partly due to increased competition among airports in the area and around the country."

Turcotte said he feels Pitt-Greenville picked up a number of the passengers Kinston lost.

Statistics from the state Department of Transportation indicate boardings at Kinston have been dropping since 1985, when the airport enplaned a high of 88,821 passengers, Turcotte said.

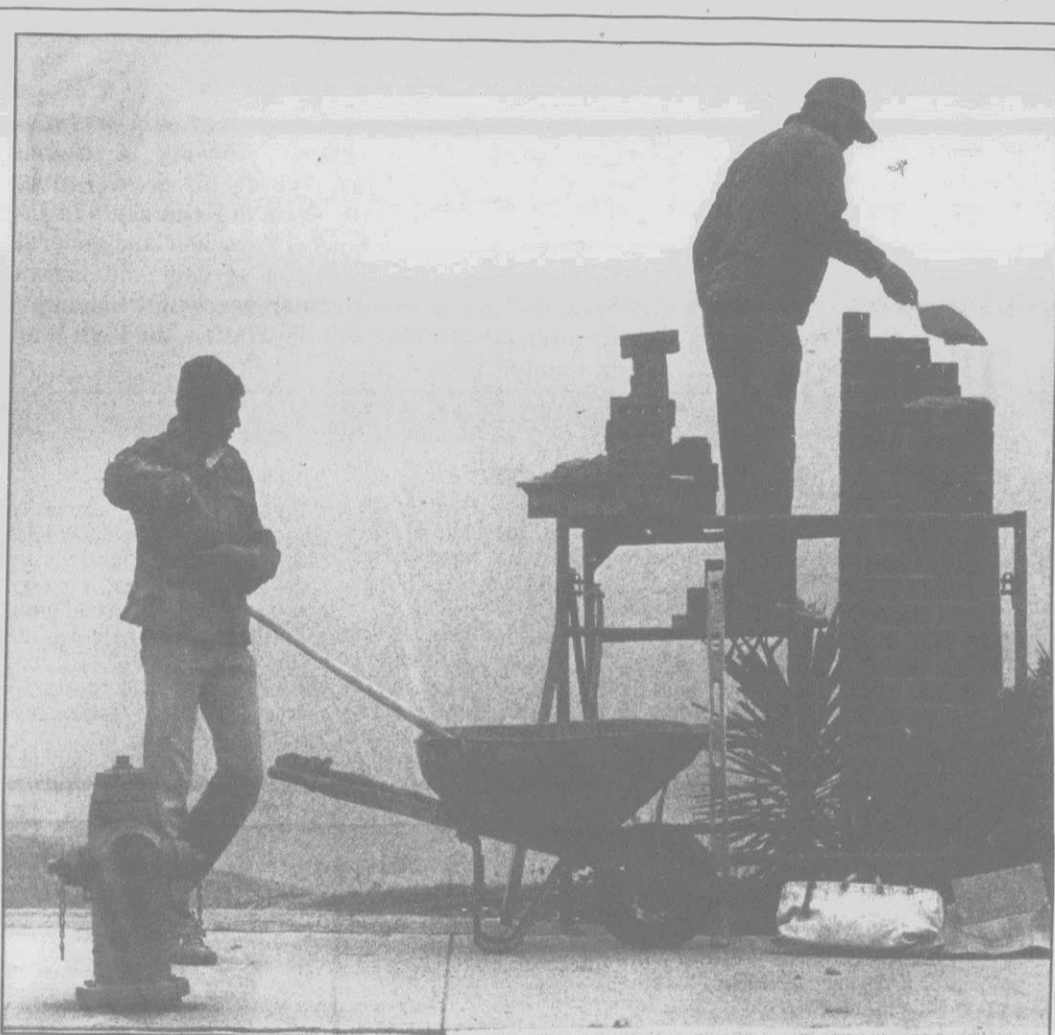

Since then, boardings at Kinston have decreased by more than 25,000.

On the other hand, DOT statistics show boardings at Pitt-Greenville have skyrocketed over the last five years. In 1984, 4,442 passengers boarded planes in Greenville.

Since then, boardings at Pitt-Greenville have increased by about 44,000.

Eddie Bacon, a spokesman for Piedmont Commuter, said the airline boarded 39,527 passengers at

Arrest Of Union Boss Spurs Refinery Strike

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEXICO CITY — Refinery operations across Mexico were crippled today as tens of thousands of striking oil workers protested the arrest of their union boss following a gun-battle in which a federal agent was slain.

The arrest of Joaquin Hernandez Galicia on gun-running charges Tuesday was widely seen as a surprise challenge to the powerful union by the new administration of President Carlos Salinas de Gortari.

The official Notimex news agency said soldiers blew down the union boss' door with a bazooka shot during the morning raid on his home in the northeastern city of Ciudad Madero.

The allegedly corrupt Petroleum Workers Union of the Mexican Republic controls more than half the lucrative drilling contracts issued by the government oil monopoly Pemex, or Petroleos Mexicanos, S.A.

"We had to move to clean up things," a presidential source said on condition of anonymity. "They knew this was coming."

Hernandez Galicia warned last week that the union would paralyze Mexico's oil industry if the government carried out a threat to sell Pemex operations to private investors. Oil revenues are crucial to the struggling Mexican economy.

Reagan Will Say Farewell Via TV

WASHINGTON (AP) — George Washington delivered his farewell address to a Philadelphia newspaper, Lyndon Johnson and Gerald Ford delivered theirs to Congress, and Ronald Reagan is turning to the medium of which he is most the master — television.

Reagan's swan song as president will be delivered at 9 p.m. EST tonight from the Oval Office and will be carried by the networks.

The White House press office said the address, expected to last about 20 minutes, would be the 43rd television speech of Reagan's presidency.

"We expect it to be a very personal kind of look at what President Reagan tried to do, and what he sees as his accomplishments, and the problems ahead," White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said.

"It will be an opportunity for him to talk directly to the American people as he has done so often in the last eight years."

Chemical Weapons Decried

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — An international conference today condemned the use of chemical weapons and called for a new agreement banning their production and storage. The final declaration ignored Arab demands to mention nuclear arms.

U.S. delegates said they were pleased with the declaration, which officials from 150 nations adopted by consensus after a five-day meeting.

The document urges stepped-up negotiations in Geneva to ban development, production, storage and use of chemical arms. It also recommends strengthened powers for the U.N. secretary-general to investigate chemical weapons use.

The declaration, which is not binding, illustrates "the common will of nations to condemn chemical weapons," Kalevi Sorsa of Finland, chairman of the drafting committee, told reporters after the meeting ended.

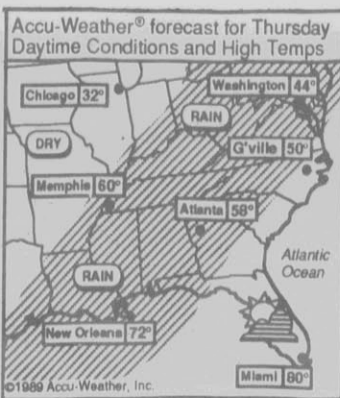

Sorsa said obtaining a consensus "required concessions and compromises from all sides." But, "From here on we can refer back to the Paris conference and its text."

The resolution reaffirms participating nations' commitment to a Geneva protocol that bans the use of chemical weapons but not their production and storage. The protocol often has been ignored since it was signed 67 years ago.

Arab delegates failed to persuade the meeting to implicitly condemn Israel's alleged nuclear capability. Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz of Iraq said he and his Arab colleagues finally decided not to take a position that would prevent the success of the conference.

Work on the declaration continued through Tuesday night to reconcile deep-seated differences between industrialized nations and Arab states. Including the word "nuclear" became the main obstacle to consensus.

Survey Indicates Public Backs Aid For Poor

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A vast majority of Americans support programs to help the chronically poor, according to a survey released today by a civil rights group.

The NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund also said it found further erosion in opposition to busing to achieve school integration.

"The survey demonstrates that the public is primed for presidential action and leadership on race relations issues," said Elaine Jones, deputy director-counsel of the fund.

The survey found that 93 percent of whites and 95 percent of blacks favored special school programs beginning at age 8 to motivate poor youngsters to stay in school and not drop out.

Ninety percent of whites and 95 percent of blacks favored federal youth corps camps where poor young people could learn to read and write and attain other skills. Similar majorities supported business incentives to provide jobs in poor neighborhoods.

Among blacks, 79 percent said the best long-term way to combat crime was not "to spend large sums of money sending criminals to prison and keeping them there a long time" but to "spend the same money attacking the causes of crime, such as reducing poverty, keeping young people in school and motivating young people to succeed rather than become criminals." Among whites, 81 percent agreed.

The civil rights group said the poll was taken June 3 through Sept. 12 by Louis Harris and Associates and based on interviews with more than 3,000 people. The report was unclear as to the margin of error.

According to the survey, 57 percent of whites remained opposed to busing children to achieve school integration but 67 percent of blacks remained in favor of it. Among all Americans, it was favored by 54 percent.

Until two years ago, opposition among all Americans had remained a consistent 78 percent for three decades.

The survey was accompanied by a separate study documenting conditions among the black poor. Eighty-six percent of single mothers surveyed received no funds from their families or the government to pay for child care. Just 11 percent said they received federal or state housing subsidies.

Sixteen percent reported having private health insurance, compared with 60 percent among all Americans.

The NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund Inc. is a separate and distinct organization from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Founded in 1940s, the New York-based group has played a major role in many of the battles or the civil rights era.

GUC Approves Contracts For Brook Valley Sewers

By Stuart Savage
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Contracts totaling $4.43 million for sewer main extensions in connection with the Brook Valley annexation were approved by the Greenville Utilities Commission board Tuesday night.

Contracts for sewer main extensions along Hardee Creek, Bells Branch and Meetinghouse Branch were awarded to Outerbanks Contractors for a total of $3.27 million, while a contract for the Tucker Estates outfall line was awarded to J.F. Wilkerson Contractors for $231,316. Outerbanks also received a contract for the Riverbluff-Oakhurst outfall with a low bid of $935,166.

Wadie Lewis, superintendent of GUC's water and sewer systems, said the bids were $1.35 million less than the estimated cost for the projects. He said the bids were awarded pending approval of the state's Division of Environmental Management and the federal Environmental Protection Agency.

The board was told that work on the projects should be completed within 16 months after construction begins in April.

Roger Jones, superintendent of electric systems for the utility, reported that load management operations during December resulted in a savings of some $177,886 in wholesale power costs.

Since January 1985, the GUC's load management program has resulted in a savings of some $6.48 million in wholesale power costs.

Jones said December's savings included $94,280 realized through voltage adjustments, $76,076 from operation of radio-controlled Beat-the-Peak switches on water heaters, and $6,969 through operation of generators at Procter & Gamble Paper Products Co. and at GUC's water treatment plant.

Jones reported that generating capacity at Fred Webb Inc. on North Greene Street will be added to the load management program this month, and the board approved a request from Burroughs Wellcome Co. to be included in the load management program.

Board members were told that testing of generators at the pharmaceutical manufacturing plant is scheduled for April, and that full participation in the load management program should begin in May.

Jones reported that consultants for Pitt County Memorial Hospital had contacted him for information about the load management program. But Jones said he has heard nothing further from the hospital.

Officials in the past have said that the hospital has the potential to save large amounts of money — both on its own electric bill and in wholesale power costs for the GUC — if generators at the medical facility could be added to the load management program.

In other business Tuesday, the board approved the purchase of 50,445 pounds of conductor from Rigby Electric Supply Co. for $62,551, as well as a $3,000 contract with the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce under which the chamber will furnish statistical data and long-term needs information as part of the Year 2007 project.

Council To Study Length Of Terms

A resolution of intent to lengthen the terms for municipal officials will be one of the items to be considered by the Greenville City Council at its monthly meeting Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the council chambers of City Hall.

The resolution of intent is the first step in a process to amend the city's charter to provide four year terms for council members and the mayor. Currently officials serve two years in office.

"The purpose of a resolution of intent is to notify the public that the council is considering the change and to set a date for a public hearing on the matter," said City Attorney Mac McCarley. "Only after the council hears the public's comments at the hearing will the council then be allowed to take action on an ordinance which would change the charter."

Also on the agenda is a request by the East Group Inc. to amend the Zoning Ordinance to increase the maximum height limit for buildings from 35 to 80 feet in the MD-6 (medical district commercial) Zoning District.

The Planning and Zoning Commission recommended approval of the request with the amendment that the maximum height limit of all other Medical District land-use zones also be increased to 80 feet with the exception of MD-1, which is recommended there be no height limitations imposed.

In addition, the council will consider an amendment to the Bufferyard Ordinance reducing from 500 feet to 250 feet the minimum spacing requirement between improved areas and adjoining property lines that exempts schools from bufferyard regulations and also an ordinance updating the city's subdivision regulations.

The council will also consider the sale of Disposal Parcel F-6 of the Southside Redevelopment Project for $1,500; K-4 of the Southside Redevelopment Project for $2,000, and 42-1-8A of the South Evans Community Development Project for $28,400.

Also to be considered for approval Thursday is an application by Eagle Cab for the operation of a taxicab franchise; an ordinance making tow service operators responsible for cleaning wreck debris from city streets; an ordinance allowing the parking authority to lease parking spaces within limited time parking zones; an amendment to a lease allowing the city to purchase and install a swimming pool heater at the Greenville Aquatics and Fitness Center; a Budget Ordinance amending appropriating the city's portion of the library's $1,000 per year across-the-board wage adjustment, and a resolution requesting a state grant for construction of a boat launch ramp at the Town Commons Park.

Consent Agenda items to be considered Thursday include establishing a 25 mph speed limit on Prince and Kent roads in the Eastwood Subdivision; the placing of 34 stop signs; establishing three on-street parking spaces on the south side of Fifth Street between Evans and Charles streets; establishing a no parking zone on Buxton Road; a sub-lease arrangement for the Humber House, and the release of $4,853 and refund of $262 in taxes.

A request to rezone two lots leading into the Brook Valley subdivision has been continued until the council's February meeting.

Kinston Firm Wins Substation Contracts

AYDEN — The Ayden Board of Commissioners has awarded a Kinston company two contracts to install part of the new Weyerhaeuser substation.

The board awarded the contracts to E.R. Inc., the low bidder for the project. The company is to install a foundation for $21,250 and put up the steel structure for $49,230.

The foundation should be completed by Feb. 24, Town Clerk Ralph Ford said, and the steel should be erected by May 25.

In other business at its regular monthly meeting Monday night, the board amended the town's zoning ordinance to limit the height of signs to 70 feet in commercial-industrial areas.

The board awarded a Community Development Block Grant project to Dixon Remodeling, after the original contractor withdrew from the project. Dixon bid $13,996, $4 less than the original bid.

The board awarded a $39,164 contract to Parker and Allen to relocate a water line on West Third Street. The water line must be moved away from the highway, and Ford said the contractor must negotiate with about a dozen homeowners to obtain easements.

Ayden Police Officer Mitchell Whaley announced to the board that he had participated in a training session for the Drug Abuse Resistance Education program, and he will be speaking to students Pitt County schools about the dangers of drugs. Officers from Farmville, Bethel, Greenville and the Pitt County Sheriff's Department are also participating in the program.

Ford also announced that the town has $867 in tax additions and $52.80 in tax releases.

Two Inmates Flee From Satellite Jail

Law enforcement officers from the Pitt County Sheriff's Department and the Greenville Police Department are searching for two prisoners who escaped from the county's satellite jail Tuesday night.

Charles Ray Dixon, 33, of Robersonville and James Arthur Acklin, 31, of Bethel escaped through a window shortly after an 8 p.m. head count, according to records from the sheriff's department.

Dixon was being held on charges of driving while his license was revoked and failing to appear in court on trespassing and larceny charges. Acklin was being held on charges of driving while his license was revoked and unauthorized use of a conveyance.

The jail, which houses up to 50 inmates, was opened last week to help ease overcrowding in the county jail, which is located under the courthouse.

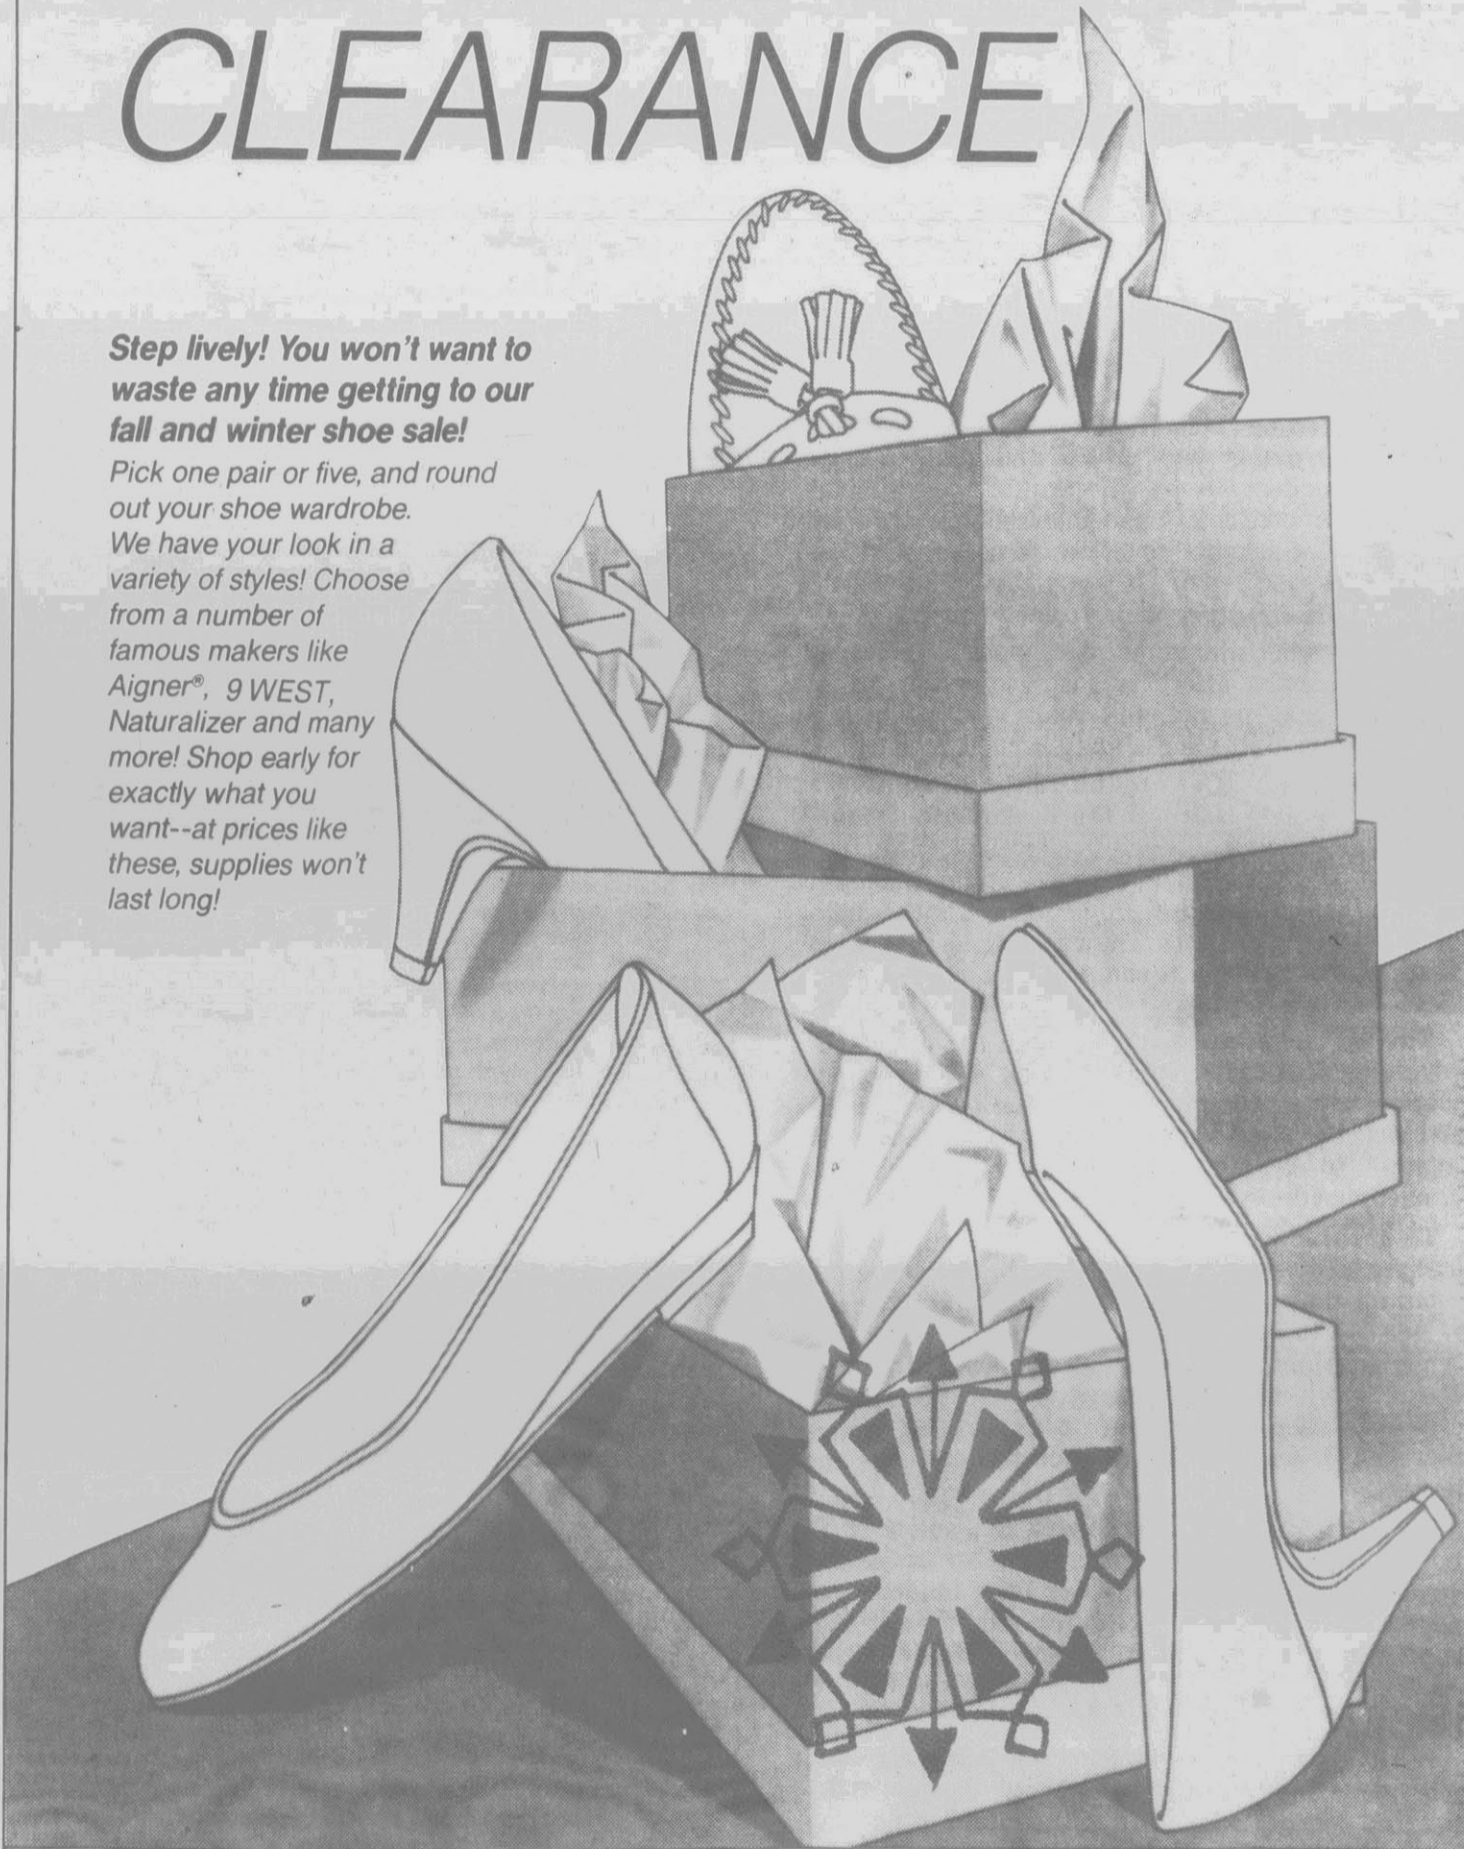

The satellite jail is located on West Fifth Street in the county office building complex. It is used to house weekend prisoners, defendants awaiting trial and people convicted of minor crimes and serving short sentences.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Balancing Act

Budget, Interests, Issues, Politics

The 1989 N.C. General Assembly session that began today will be a balancing act for legislators.

During the session, they must balance a budget diminished by shrinking revenues while addressing large issues with parity. They must poise increasing conflict between rural and urban interests. And they must foster an equilibrium between parties in a newly bipartisan state government, where squabbling over leadership threatens progress.

For eastern North Carolina and Pitt County those issues include education, transportation and prison overcrowding. These three items, within the framework of fiscal responsibility, form the base on which the business of the 1989 General Assembly should rest.

'For eastern North Carolina, lagging behind the rest of the state in resources, classrooms and student performance, education remains the most significant issue ...'

For eastern North Carolina, lagging behind the rest of the state in resources, classrooms and student performance, education remains the most significant issue for 1989. An absolute commitment to the state's Basic Education Program is mandatory. Because of the region's rural nature and many counties' slender tax base, its schools do not offer the instructional options available to urban students in larger, more prosperous areas. The Basic Education program, by standardizing course offerings and providing funding for school systems to meet requirements, addresses that deficiency. It should remain intact as the state's top budget priority.

East Carolina University is Pitt County's vital resource, but it is also a regional asset. Its growth hinges in part on strong support from the lawmakers who represent the broad community it serves. The university needs a regional activity center to accommodate growth. It needs a strengthened library to support its research potential.

For the East, highways are economic lifelines — links to larger metropolitan areas and connectors between smaller growth areas. And for this region especially, the transportation infrastructure of North Carolina is aging rapidly into obsolescence. Bridges, roads need major repairs. Existing highways are woefully inadequate for the traffic they support. New routes, connectors and interchanges are needed. It is unthinkable to allow these resources to crumble beyond repair. It is equally unthinkable to let the state fall further behind on new construction.

A major roadbuilding initiative must begin in 1989. The state cannot afford to postpone action. Squabbles over gasoline tax, toll roads and methods of raising revenue for roadbuilding must be resolved.

For eastern North Carolina, the concern will be securing its fair share of the construction money. Whatever funding alternatives prevail, any roadbuilding programs should be based on the concept of creating major transportation corridors with funding tied to specific projects. The east has lost out in the past on road funding. It can no longer ride on promises.

Finally, legislators must work to secure the revolving door to the state's prisons. A growing population and a vigorous criminal justice system has stressed the state's prison capacity. And an unwillingness to devote tax dollars to jail cells has bankrupted the system.

To avoid federal takeover, North Carolina periodically releases prisoners unacceptably early to make room for more offenders. Incarceration is expensive — $25,000 to imprison one offender for one year. While rehabilitation should be the ideal, in reality it doesn't work in many cases. And violent or habitual criminals should be locked up. In North Carolina, there's not enough prison space to guarantee that protection.

The General Assembly bears a portion of the burden for this unacceptable fact. No major construction of additional cells has been funded in the past decade. While rehabilitation should be strongly supported, there is no justification for falling behind on prison needs. 1989 is the year to reckon with this urgent need.

Legislators went to work today. They began the job voters elected them to do. Their responsibility is to these constituents — and to the future of the state. To the East, and to Pitt County, that means balance — the region's fair share of funding and leadership. It means firm support of education, improved highways and prisons that aren't day camps for lawbreakers.

Moving Forward By Looking Backward

BOSTON — I cannot trace my roots very deep. I run out of names and places quickly. Of my eight great-grandparents, only two were born in America. The others, whose names I do not know, came from all over Europe, mostly from towns that were German one year, Polish the next, Russian the third.

Some were kicked out of those towns, still others chose to emigrate. They came and married each other — sometimes against their families' wishes — and begat. They became Americans. To trace my ancestry back through even such a short history to one set of ancestors in one town in one country would mean cutting out the others the way Alex Haley did when he chose Kunta Kinte from his lexicon of forebears.

Like most third- and fourth-generation Americans, then, I am a genetic melting pot, the product of nationalities that spent centuries trying to murder each other. If there is an ethnicity that makes any sense at all it has been expanded from a country to an entire continent. European American.

It is from this personal vantage point that I witness the movement of some of my countrymen and women to name themselves after a different mother continent: Africa.

Ellen Goodman

Twenty years ago, the civil-rights leadership told its followers to drop the names that white Americans had given them. They were no longer colored, no longer Negro, but black. Black and proud, black and and powerful, black and beautiful.

Now there is a impulse to turn from a name that promoted unity on the basis of color to a name that promotes unity on the basis of origin. To turn from a title that describes people in contrast to others, whites, to a title that describes people in connection to their own ancestry. African American.

"We are not just former slaves living in the United States," says Ramona Edelin the head of the National Urban Coalition who raised the issue at a recent meeting of leaders, "We are African Americans."

"To be called African American has cultural integrity; it puts us in our proper historical context," says Jesse Jackson, speaking for himself and others who have urged the use of a title that until now has been mainly used by academics.

At first, as an American who regards her ties to the mother continent Europe with great distance, I regarded the phrase African American with great skepticism. After all, what is in a name? Does this one promise to be more precise? If black is a word used to describe a huge range of skin color that rarely resembles ebony, then African is a word that covers countries as different as Ethiopia and Kenya. It covers cultures as diverse as the Kikuyu and the Bakuba.

Does this name promise unity? How do you find unity identifying with Africans when Africans themselves, like Europeans and Asians, are often in deadly conflict with each other? When the Americans in question may trace their strongest roots to the Caribbean, or may indeed trace much of their genetic heritage to Europe?

The question, it seems to me now, isn't whether this name change makes genetic or ethnic sense, but whether it makes emotional sense. And it does.

A change of name is a serious business. A name is identity, a handle on consciousness, a public and collective description of who you are. It may be especially important for those who still carry the surnames of slaveholders.

The name "black" emerged out of confrontational politics of the civil-rights movement. But now the toughest battles are not against segregation but against violence and drugs, the destruction of family and community and culture.

In this context of change, African American sounds right. It's a name that resonates of cultural history, a name that reflects the real desire to teach children that "I am Somebody." A name that reaches back past slavery and out past the limits of an embattled city block for that lesson.

"We are really adrift if we are just former slaves," Ramona Edelin adds. "When a child in a ghetto calls himself African American, immediately he's international. You've taken him from the ghetto and put him on the globe."

The black leadership of today has turned inward, toward internal healing, toward self-help. It is a fitting impulse to choose a name that looks backward in order to move forward.

The Danger Of A Blurred Line

WASHINGTON — Well, you live and learn. All the years I've been in the newspaper business, I thought of my fellow-journalists as tough cookies, with hides at least as calloused as a middle linebacker's. All the years I've covered politics, I believed that the men and women in government could take the heat.

In the last few weeks, I've learned how wrong I was. Journalists who have worked in government turn out to be, in conspicuous cases, sensitive souls who, like adolescents, either whimper or rage when they feel their honor has been insulted.

A bit of background: A month or so ago, in remarks at the National Press Club, I expressed concern about the increasing coziness between politicians and journalists in Washington. Particularly worrisome is the growing tendency for journalists to dabble in politics, either as closet strategists or as temporary government appointees, and for government officials, whether press agents or policy-makers, to go through the revolving door and emerge as prominent commentators and news executives.

The danger is not that these in-and-outers diminish the quality of journalism. Many of these folks are gifted writers and speakers, who bring special insights from their previous jobs. The danger is the blurring of the line between politicians and journalists. The First Amendment gave journalists a special immunity from government regulation and placed us outside the system of checks and balances, not because of our charm, our virtue or our brilliance, but because the Founders believed that a free press, even if fallible, would be a healthy check on government.

"If we are to defend that privilege," I said in the speech, "we better make it clear we are not part of government, and not part of a Washington Insiders' clique where politicians, publicists and journalists are easily interchangeable parts. Once we lose our distinctive identity, it will not be long before we lose our freedom."

That was it. Excerpts from the speech were printed in the opinion section of The Post. And the same day, Post ombudsman Richard Harwood took off on his own in an essay citing some of the many prominent newspaper and broadcast executives, columnists, commentators and reporters who launched or boosted their careers in government.

I had hoped my talk would stir debate on the issue, and it did. But it's taken an unexpected turn. Umbrage has been taken. With wit and humor, in one case, and ponderous self-congratulation, in the other, columnists William Safire (who toiled for Richard Nixon and Spiro Agnew) and Carl Rowan (an alumnus of the Kennedy and Johnson administrations) defended their credentials.

Columnist Patrick Buchanan (who was an enthusiastic press-basher for Nixon, Agnew and Ronald Reagan) jumped in, pouring buckets of boiling oil on my head, as is his customary style of debate. Buchanan has changed hats so often he's forgotten, if he ever knew, the difference between political propaganda and journalism. In 1980, while ostensibly a journalist, Buchanan joined columnist George F. Will in rehearsing Reagan for his campaign debate with Jimmy Carter — a breach of professional ethics so gross even he might be expected to grasp it.

Safire, Rowan and Buchanan — and many others with similar histories who've been interviewed in articles about the controversy — have suggested that it's a bit arrogant for Harwood or me even to raise the issue. "By what right do you question me?" they ask. That attitude is an interesting posture for commentators whose livelihood is second-guessing and judging the performance of public officials. But it's disappointing that in their zeal to prove their own innocence, they give short shrift to the pattern of which they're a part.

Personalities aside, let me tell you why I think it's a problem. I think the public is ill-served when more and more of the fashion-setting and policy-making roles in journalism are filled from the ranks of politics. Politicians and their press secretaries know well how to "package" a particular viewpoint, but they are not required to question their own assumptions.

By contrast, journalists who come up in the business are drilled, over and over, to be skeptical of their own views as well as others'. In newsrooms across America, you are told: "If you think your mother loves you, check it." That is not the ethic inculcated in political headquarters or government offices.

The independence and integrity of the press are best preserved, I think, if the tone of journalism — including commentary — is set by those who are never too certain of the exclusive wisdom of their own viewpoint.

And there's a larger point. A federal judge who has been following the controversy wrote me that it "parallels the separation-of-powers issues now so often litigated. Our democracy depends largely on the integrity of our system of both formal and informal checks and balances. While some flexibility may be needed, any unnecessary or excessive confusion of roles is dangerous to the institutions and individuals involved."

That's a warning we in the press need to hear and heed.

Bush Cabinet Male, White, Establishment, But Criticism Scarce

Donald Rothberg

WASHINGTON (AP) — George Bush's Cabinet is emerging as nearly all male, all Republican establishment, but women and conservatives are holding their fire.

Bush's honeymoon period is quite a contrast to eight years ago when conservatives voiced outrage over several of Ronald Reagan's Cabinet choices.

The Reagan transition was marked by regular denunciations by conservatives of such Cabinet choices as Donald T. Regan for treasury secretary and Malcolm Baldrige for commerce secretary.

Kemp, the choice to head the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Craig Shirley, a conservative consultant who backed Bush for the GOP presidential nomination, said there is a mixed response to the emerging administration.

"Some are very delighted because Bush struck conservative themes during the campaign and he hasn't changed on any of those," he said. "Others are taking more of a wait-and-see attitude and then there are the historical Bush-bashers."

'Bush's honeymoon period is quite a contrast to eight years ago when conservatives voiced outrage over several of Ronald Reagan's choices.'

One of the longtime Bush bashers is Richard Viguerie, a conservative fund-raiser, who was an early and outspoken critic of Reagan Cabinet choices.

"The consensus (among conservatives) is, this is not the time, let's wait," said Viguerie. "There is nothing to be gained by going out there and pounding the table now."

Viguerie was less restrained than many of his conservative allies and he described the Bush appointments as "very disillusioning, discouraging and disappointing."

Throughout his campaign and since winning the presidency, Bush has emphasized his desire to reach out and bring into government people "who are too often overlooked."

If by that he meant women, so far, he has fallen short.

"I keep being told, give it time," said Nancy Thompson, a Republican consultant who was a Bush delegate to the 1988 Republican National Convention.

"I've got my fingers crossed."

Thompson and Susan McLane, a Republican state senator in New Hampshire, chose to praise the women Bush has chosen rather than bemoan those left out.

Both cited the selection of Elizabeth Dole to head the Labor Department and Carla Hills to be trade representative as encouraging choices.

But McLane conceded that women appear still to be at a stage where they must be satisfied with one or two high-visibility jobs in an administration.

"I think we are still at that age," she said.

As for the president-elect's attitude toward appointing women, she said, "I don't think George Bush has thought about it that much and he hasn't thought about it as something important."

"There are only a very few of those top, top spots," said Thompson. "And to have two — one and a half, if you will (Hills would have Cabinet status but not run a full department) that are that visible, that's good."

Thompson said she expected to see far more women in the next round of appointments.

"I'm waiting for this second cut. I believe that's where we're going to find some names."

Rep. Lynn Martin of Illinois, a strong Bush supporter from the earliest stages of the presidential campaign, was on many lists of potential Cabinet appointees.

"My name was being thrown around a lot, not necessarily to my benefit," she said. "The fact is he never asked me to serve in his Cabinet and I don't know if I would have or could have. ... I think there was an assumption I was talking to him every day and it just wasn't so."

Martin, who denied any personal disappointment, said, "I know he has asked again and again for the group around him to give him the names of more women, of more Hispanics or more blacks."

"I believe we're going to see a lot of women," she added. "And if we don't, the shoe drops."

Legislators Tend To Favor Veto For Governor

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Major obstacles remain to be overcome before North Carolina loses its distinction as the only state with no gubernatorial veto, an Associated Press survey shows.

Veto supporters are divided over how much of a majority should be required to override a governor's rejection of a bill passed by the House and Senate. A two-thirds majority was the most popular option, but other legislators said a three-fifths or a simple majority vote should be enough.

Another question would be whether to couple the veto with repeal of the 1977 constitutional amendment that allows the governor and lieutenant governor to seek two consecutive terms, a move some veto supporters favor and other oppose.

Also, some veto backers said the governor should share or relinquish some of his power in exchange for the veto: for example, having key appointments subject to legislative confirmation.

Reaching a consensus on these questions will be vital to building a coalition strong enough to overcome years of suspicion that a veto would tilt the balance of power too far toward the executive branch.

But despite the problems, results of the mail and telephone survey suggest that enough of the legislators elected Nov. 8 support the veto concept to give it a solid chance of passing during the session that convenes Wednesday.

Granting a veto would require a constitutional amendment, which must receive the backing of three-fifths of the House and Senate members and the approval of a majority of the voters in a statewide referendum.

Of the 170 legislators — 120 House members and 50 senators — 108 participated in the survey.

In the House, 52 of the 79 respondents or 65.8 percent said they favored giving the governor veto power. Twenty, or 25.3 percent, said they opposed it and seven were undecided.

Of the veto supporters, 28 favored a two-thirds majority override provision, while seven favored three-fifths and four said the Legislature should be able to override a veto by a simple majority. The remaining 13 were undecided.

In the Senate, 20 of the 29 respondents or 68.9 percent favored the veto, while six or 20.6 percent opposed it and three were undecided. Ten favored a two-thirds majority to override, four favored three-fifths and four a simple majority. Two had no opinion.

Sen. Donald Kincaid, R-Caldwell, the senior GOP senator, said the veto's growing acceptance was indicative of his party's enhanced strength.

"I think the majority party realizes that since the governor campaigned on this issue, it's on the minds of the people," Kincaid said. "They realize they'd better get on the right side."

Few governors bothered to expend political capital by seeking veto power until Martin took office in 1985. The first veto bill introduced in the Senate at his request was killed by a committee so quickly that he called a news conference to denounce the move as "arrogantly repulsive."

As Martin continued to press the matter, an issue that historically had been in the separation-of-powers, executive-versus-legislative arena took on a partisan flavor.

When Lt. Gov. Bob Jordan endorsed the veto in his unsuccessful 1988 campaign to unseat Martin, a few Democratic legislators suddenly found it acceptable to voice public support.

Martin's 56 percent to 44 percent re-election appears to have won additional converts. Even House Speaker Liston Ramsey, a longtime veto opponent, has said he can now accept it, albeit the weakest possible version: with a simple-majority override. Ramsey also wants gubernatorial succession abolished as part of the deal.

Kincaid said Ramsey's plan is unacceptable.

"If you have a simple majority override, you're wasting your time," Kincaid said. "That's not even a real veto."

But Ramsey says the simple-majority veto would accomplish the primary benefit of veto power: forcing the governor to take a stand on every bill that comes before the Legislature instead of standing on the sidelines when controversial matters arise.

Veto opponents say the governor shouldn't need that prod to get involved in the legislative process.

Porno Defense

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Cinema Blue received judicial approval to show pornographic films and magazines to adult audiences in Mecklenburg County to help prepare a defense against charges of violating North Carolina obscenity laws.

U.S. District Judge James McMillan's ruling prohibits Mecklenburg District Attorney Peter Gilchrist from prosecuting the adult bookstore, its attorneys and experts for showing the videos and magazines.

The decision applies only to films and magazines that are subjects of criminal prosecutions involving Cinema Blue.

Cinema Blue sought the court order to prevent Gilchrist from interfering with its attorneys' efforts to prepare for next month's obscenity trial.

Parole Opposed

RALEIGH (AP) — Relatives of a Saluda police chief went before the North Carolina Parole Board Tuesday in a plea to keep the chief's killer behind bars.

William Fred Constance was convicted in 1977 and sentenced to life in prison in the September 1976 slaying of Chief Andrew Williams and is coming up for a parole review, said Cathy Johnson, the slain chief's daughter.

She said 3,000 law enforcement officers signed petitions opposing Constance's parole, and those petitions were presented to the board.

Visiting Speaker

DURHAM (AP) — Chinese journalist Liu Binyan will speak at Duke University on Jan. 21 on "Intellectuals and Reform in the People's Republic of China Today."

Liu, senior reporter for China's leading newspaper, The People's Daily, is best known in the West for his role as an outspoken critic of corruption among leading members of the Chinese Communist Party. He was expelled from the Communist Party in January 1987 during the "Anti-Bourgeois Liberalization" campaign after the party charged that he helped touch off a wave of student demonstrations by advocating the adoption of Western ideas.

Liu is a visiting scholar at Harvard University.

Everett Named

RALEIGH (AP) — George T. Everett has been picked to succeed David W. Owens as head of the Division of Coastal Management in the North Carolina Department of Natural Resources and Community Development.

Everett, a native of Wilmington, was the deputy director of the Division of Environmental Management. Prior to that appointment, he was the chief of the division's water quality section.

Owens, a native of Elizabeth City, N.C., has headed the Division of Coastal Management for the past five years. He has been invited to join the faculty at the Institute of Government in Chapel Hill. The offer must be approved by the University of North Carolina's Board of Trustees.

'Drug Cabinet' Will Seek Funds For More Agents To Assist SBI

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — One of the jobs of the "drug cabinet" assembled Tuesday by Gov. Jim Martin and Lt. Gov. Jim Gardner will be to win support in the General Assembly for funding of more SBI drug agents, the governor said.

Attorney General Lacy Thornburg, a member of the drug cabinet, has asked Martin to request in his budget money to hire more State Bureau of Investigation agents to beef up the agency's anti-drug operations.

Martin said he had included funds for 40 new agents in the second year of the 1989-91 biennium. Thornburg said he wanted 100 more and he wanted them sooner.

"One of the things that this drug cabinet will be able to do is ... build a case so that we can get that," Martin said at a news conference Tuesday.

But Thornburg said that waiting until the 1991-92 fiscal year would mean that the new SBI agents would not be on the streets fighting drug traffickers until 1992.

Thornburg said the SBI is only able to meet about half of the requests from local law enforcement agencies for assistance in drug investigations. Also, the Justice Academy at Salem is able to accommodate only one-third of the requests for training from police chiefs and sheriffs.

Martin and Gardner said the cabinet would plan state government's most comprehensive strategy to date for waging war against drugs.

"If we're going to ... achieve our goals, there has to be a strong, committed, experienced leadership from the executive branch," Martin said at a news conference with the eight-member group. After the news conference, the drug cabinet held its first meeting, which Gardner said dealt with organizational matters.

The drug cabinet will develop by July 1990 a blueprint for attacking the drug problem on a variety of fronts, Gardner said. But Martin said it will make interim recommendations as it decides on actions that could be taken sooner.

Aside from Gardner and Thornburg, the Drug Cabinet members include Joseph Dean, secretary of crime control and public safety; Bob Etheridge, superintendent of public instruction; Jim Harrington, secretary of transportation; Aaron Johnson, correction secretary; David Flaherty, secretary of human resources; and Claude Pope, secretary of commerce.

Indians Fight Extradition

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Eddie Hatcher and Timothy Jacobs, Indian activists who sought sanctuary on reservations in Idaho and New York, will fight their extradition to North Carolina, where they face kidnapping charges.

Hatcher said Tuesday he would not return to Robeson County from an Indian reservation in Idaho for arraignment, and lawyers for Jacobs said they would fight an extradition warrant signed by the governor of New York.

"What I'm seeking here is a platform in an Indian court before an Indian judge," Hatcher said from the Fort Hall Indian Reservation near Pocatello, Idaho. He would said he would invoke tribal extradition law if North Carolina authorities try to force his return.

Marines Reassign Battalion's Officers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. — The Marine Corps will reassign the two top officers of a battalion that included a Marine lance corporal who died in a California desert after being left behind during a training exercise, officials said.

Lt. Col. Edward Robeson, the battalion commander of 3rd Battalion, 2nd Regiment, and the battalion's executive officer, Maj. T.L. Holm, will be reassigned to other jobs within the same regiment effective Friday, base officials said Tuesday.

Maj. Stuart Wagner, the chief spokesman for the base public affairs office, said no disciplinary action has been taken against Robeson and Holm, however.

The reassignments followed a defense motion Tuesday seeking dismissal of charges against Sgt. Christopher Clyde, 28, of Mentor, Ohio, who faces a court-martial in connection with the death.

Capt. William Fisher, the defense lawyer, argued that Robeson and Holm might have a conflict of interest in the case, since the officers are subject to an administrative review of the events that led to the death.

Under military legal procedures, Robeson was the commanding officer who formally convened the court-martial proceedings against Clyde, who is charged with three counts of dereliction of duty and one count of willfully disobeying a lawful order.

"Lt. Col. Robeson has a personal interest in this case because his career is on the skyline," Fisher said Tuesday at Clyde's court-martial.

New Mexico Officials Take Look At Tar Heel Economy

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK, N.C. — Gov. Jim Martin told a delegation from New Mexico that North Carolina's successful economic development formula centers on good non-union labor, location, transportation and educational resources.

"Whether in North Carolina or New Mexico, the formula for success remains the same — build the best business climate possible and then work hard to improve it," Martin told the New Mexico lawmakers and businessmen. The group visited his state Tuesday on a three-state brain-picking tour. The 60 officials were scheduled to travel to Michigan today and to Oklahoma on Thursday for similar engagements.

New Mexico Gov. Garrey Carruthers said after the presentation that he was most impressed with the sprawling Research Triangle Park and with North Carolina's appeal to private interests.

"We wish we had a research facility like you have here," he said. "I was most surprised to learn it is a private foundation."

Martin said North Carolina has been ranked tops in the nation in four straight surveys by Business Week magazine, covering 1976 to 1987, as the state most often considered for new manufacturing facilities. New investment has averaged $5 billion a year for four years, he said.

Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., said North Carolina's economic development has longevity and performance, and the delegation is eager to find out how it's done.

New Mexico, while strong in research, has much of its economy closely tied to Albuquerque, he said.

"We need to know how do we get growth elsewhere," he said.

Domenici said Michigan and Oklahoma were chosen for different reasons: Oklahoma because it, like New Mexico, has an interest in oil and gas; Michigan for innovative economic development in such areas as the automotive industry.

North Carolina officials, led by Martin, gave a presentation at Burroughs Wellcome Co.

Martin told the group that customized job training for new and expanding industry is one big draw.

"We train their workers the way they want them trained at our expense," Martin said, adding that with 58 community colleges, there is one within 30 miles of 99 percent of the population.

North Carolina fosters cooperation between businesses and its 16-campus university system, Martin said. The state also tries to keep taxes low.

Ernest Pearson, appearing on behalf of Commerce Secretary Claude Pope, emphasized the importance of private-public partnerships.

He also noted recent initiatives to spread the wealth to rural areas, help small businesses and lure the movie industry to North Carolina.

Former Gov. Bob Scott, now president of the state's community college system, said that while the delegation was meeting in Research Triangle Park, they should not forget a more important "triangle" — the partnership between government, education and business.

State Transportation Secretary James Harrington said North Carolina's central location, placing businesses with 700 miles of 150 million potential customers, helped make the state a haven for long-haul truckers as well as large manufacturing companies.

"North Carolina companies can offer overnight delivery to 60 percent of the domestic market," he said.

Carruthers said North Carolina seems to have more cabinet officers involved in economic development.

New Mexico's main problem is a 6.5 percent unemployment rate, swelled by jobless Indians in the northern counties, Carruthers said.

Sniffing dog helps U.S. Customs agents inspect trucks at a South Carolina weigh station

Customs Service Checking Trucks For Drugs On I-95

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HARDEEVILLE, S.C. — A special U.S. Customs Service operation to detect drugs flowing out of south Florida on a main freeway to the Northeast enters a second day today.

The three-day, round-the-clock check for drugs smuggled on heavy trucks began Tuesday at a weigh station on Interstate 95 just inside the Savannah River from Georgia.

About two dozen customs agents and highway patrolmen used drug-sniffing dogs to check the rigs for contraband during the first day of the operation Tuesday.

Billy Byrd, the district director for the U.S. Customs Service in Charleston said 70 percent of the drugs flowing into the United States enters through South Florida.

"We feel I-95 is the corridor through which drugs transit to the rest of the country," Byrd said. "We think somehow they're bringing drugs through here in large loads, and this is an attempt to find out."

Similar check points were set up on U.S. 17 and a second road which also parallels the interstate, officials said.

Only a small amount of marijuana was found in the cab of one of the trucks during the first hours of the operation.

But Byrd said customs agents are used to looking through hundreds of containers without success in their search for contraband.

Jose Ramirez, the supervisor of the customs Contraband Enforcement Team in Charleston, explained that any containers under a customs bond — that is those that are still in international transit — are subject to search.

The drivers were asked permission to search their vehicles.

But Ramirez said if permission was refused and the dogs gave indications there were drugs on domestic shipments, search warrants would be obtained.

Most of the drivers didn't mind the extra 10-minute wait while their rigs were checked for drugs after being weighed.

"I'd like to see more of it," said driver Les Hammond of Great Falls, Mont.

He noted that the company he drives for, Americana Express, requires its drivers to take drug tests.

"If I used drugs, I'd be pulled off this truck and never get another job," he added.

Most drivers might not even be aware they're carrying drugs, Byrd said.

"A large number of the smugglers today are using commercial operations," he said. "The driver doesn't know what he's carrying. He may think he's got auto parts and he's got drugs."

News of the checkpoint spread quickly up and down the interstate over citizens band radios.

"This will have some effect from Florida to New York by now," said Capt. Al Corbin, who oversees the Size and Weight Enforcement Division of the state Highway Patrol.

Corbin said such an operation will make smugglers think twice about using commercial shippers to smuggle drugs.

He added about 1,000 trucks a day pass through the weigh station and said the Highway Patrol and customs agents plan to work together in the future on similar operations.

"We're going to be doing this again," he promised. "This is not just a flash in the pan."

Drug Tests Affect Few People

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Twenty percent of all American workers are now employed by companies that test for drug use, but only one employee in 100 actually is tested in a 12-month period, the government reported today.

Ninety-one percent of employers have neither testing nor counseling programs, the Labor Department said, but larger companies are much more likely to have such programs.

Job applicants are far more likely to be tested than employees, the department said. It billed its survey of 7,500 establishments as the most extensive study to date on drug testing in the workplace.

Among establishments with testing programs, about two-thirds tested only those workers suspected of drug use, while one-fourth had programs that subjected all employees to possible testing.

In the 12 months prior to the Labor Department survey, taken last summer, establishments with testing programs reported testing slightly fewer than 1 million workers — or about 1 percent of all workers.

Daily Perks Boost Income For Members Of Congress

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Members of Congress can count on generous pensions, foreign travel, free medical services, prime parking space and unlimited long distance telephone calls even without the 50 percent pay raise they may soon get.

"The public is usually kept in the dark when it comes to what Congress receives as perks," said consumer advocate Ralph Nader, who listed the fringe benefits in a report.

Nader opposes President Reagan's recommendation that members of Congress receive $135,000 in annual pay instead of the current $89,500. The raise will become law unless both houses of Congress defeat the plan by Feb. 8, and House leaders are dropping hints they have no plans to schedule a vote by then.

While lawmakers can't depend on job security, those who stay around a while can live comfortably on their pensions.

Some former members have received over $1 million in pension benefits, and dozens of others are approaching the million-dollar mark, according to Nader's report.

Lawmakers can invest up to 10 percent of their base pay in a 401 (k) pension plan — a program available to many Americans, in which no tax is paid until money is withdrawn.

But for members of Congress, taxpayers match the first 5 percent of salary, a contribution that currently is worth $4,475 a year per member. If the pay raise goes through, the taxpayer share would total $6,750.

Covered by Social Security and — if they choose, the Civil Service retirement programs — members can receive pension benefits at age 50 after 20 years of service or age 60 after 10 years of service.

Lawmakers have shown they love world travel on congressional business. Reports filed by congressional committees and other reports show expenditures of $6.7 million during the 1987 calendar year, money that comes from the State Department budget.

Food and beverage expenses are reimbursed to members when they "discuss matters relating to official duties" with someone other than fellow members or staffers.

Members can participate in federal employee health insurance programs, and they are better off than many Americans if they become ill at work.

The Attending Physicians Service in the Capitol includes doctors, nurses and technicians, and their services include a medical response team; ambulance service; laboratory, X-ray and pharmacy services; immunization and allergy shots. At the Senate Health Club, members can receive free medical testing.

For fitness, members can use the gym in the Rayburn House Office Building and exercise rooms in the Russell and Dirksen Senate office buildings. Facilities include a swimming pool, a handball, volleyball and a basketball court and a steam room.

Life insurance of $78,000 is provided for members, with taxpayers picking up half the cost and members paying for the other half.

One of the best-known perks is the frank, the privilege of sending unlimited pieces of mail to constituents at taxpayer expense — $113.3 million worth in 1988.

The Postal Service provides "orange bag" service for franked mail, ensuring one-day delivery.

Lawmakers receive a special tax deduction of $3,000 per year for living expenses while away from their congressional district or home states.

Parking on the streets of Washington is a hassle for most workers in the capital, but not for members, whose special tags permit them to use any curbside space except along fire hydrants, fire stations or loading docks.

Bank Agrees To Pay $14 Million

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Women and minorities who worked for a major Chicago bank from 1973 to 1988 will share a record $14 million in back pay the bank agreed to pay in settling a race and sex bias case dating to 1977.

Harris Trust and Savings Bank and the Labor Department announced the settlement Tuesday, ending an 11-year legal battle in which an administrative law judge twice ruled against the institution. A Chicago group that intervened on behalf of some bank workers estimated that about 5,000 current and former Harris employees are eligible for a share of the settlement.

Harris said it would put the money in an escrow account in another bank. The government is responsible for finding the workers and determining how much back pay to award them.

The bank said it was not admitting to any wrongdoing but was settling the case to avoid "more legal and statistical wrangling."

Under the agreement, Harris Trust must revise its affirmative action policies, set up training programs for women and minorities seeking promotions to professional and managerial posts, and tell the department periodically over the next three years how well it is complying with the agreement and anti-discrimination laws.

Roxboro Fire

ROXBORO, N.C. (AP) — Firefighters battled a blaze in downtown Roxboro for almost five hours Tuesday, fighting to keep it from spreading to adjacent businesses.

The former Person Furniture Co. caught fire shortly after 11 a.m. More than 100 firefighters from nine departments fought to contain the fire after it broke through the building's roof and threatened adjoining buildings.

Damages were estimated at $200,000 for the building and $45,000 for contents, primarily furniture stored there after the business closed, Hall said.

Soviets May Have Missile Recorder

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Air Force can't find the flight data recorder from a nuclear test missile and the Pentagon says the Soviets may have snatched the device from where it splashed down in the western Pacific Ocean.

The recorder was aboard a Minuteman 2 missile test-fired from California at Kwajalein Atoll in the Marshall Islands on July 7, 1987, according to Army Maj. Bill O'Connell, a spokesman for the Defense Department.

The story was first reported Tuesday by the CBS Evening News and later confirmed by the Pentagon.

The flight data recorder was part of the dummy warhead on the missile, which did not carry any nuclear weapons on its launch from California. The Air Force periodically tests missiles by launching them from California at Kwajalein, 5,000 miles away.

"It is unlikely that the Soviets recovered it (the recorder) in the hours between splashdown and the first search, but that possibility cannot be ruled out," said O'Connell.

The Minuteman is one of the main components of America's land-based nuclear missile force.

The recorder would contain valuable information about the performance of the Minuteman 2 missile. It was not classified, O'Connell noted, but its recovery "would be useful to our missile testing efforts."

Judge Lets Victim Set The Sentence

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MINNEAPOLIS — A 65-year-old woman who was allowed to decide her rapist's prison term chose a 4½-year sentence that will put him behind bars immediately, then said of being allowed to pick the penalty: "Wasn't that something?"

"He was so kind," the victim said of Hennepin County Judge William Posten. "He said, 'It's your decision.' I liked that."

Posten on Monday gave the victim two choices in the prosecution of James Halvorson, 25. She could have the case go to trial and hope for a conviction, which could have meant a 108-month prison term, or she could accept the conditions of a plea agreement for a 54-month prison sentence effective immediately.

The woman chose immediate incarceration in lieu of a trial because Halvorson was free on bond and she feared being attacked again, said Assistant County Attorney Kevin Johnson.

"She knew he would be going straight to prison" and wouldn't be eligible for parole for three years, Johnson said Tuesday.

Halvorson was accused of breaking into the woman's house through a kitchen window in the early morning hours of June 16, according to a criminal complaint. The noise awoke the woman and she went to investigate. A man dragged her from the kitchen to the bedroom, covered her head with a blanket and raped her. He fell asleep after the attack and the woman ran to a neighbor's house to telephone police, Johnson said.

Court Upholds Local Tax On Phone Calls

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court cleared the way Tuesday for states and cities to levy taxes on the rapidly increasing flow of interstate phone calls and computer data and telecopier transmissions, ruling that such fees do not put an undue burden on interstate commerce.

The unanimous decision was a significant victory for state and local governments that have begun to look to the $60 billion-a-year long distance telecommunications industry as a lucrative source of new revenue.

Ten states and the city of Los Angeles are the only major jurisdictions that now tax interstate phone calls, but lawyers in the case expect others will soon follow.

"This is an open invitation to the states," said Walter A. Smith Jr., a Washington attorney who represented Illinois taxpayers that challenged a new tax by that state on phone call tolls. "It is our understanding that a lot of jurisdictions were waiting on the outcome of this case."

The Illinois tax reviewed by the court was a 5 percent levy enacted in 1985 on the cost of communications carried by telephone lines, including both local and long distance calls, computer transmissions and telecopied material. With interstate transmissions growing by 13 percent per year, the state said it was collecting $10 million a month through its new tax.

FBI Charges Former Sailor In Spy Case

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — FBI agents, posing as Soviet operatives, Tuesday arrested a former Navy chief petty officer in Norfolk, Va., for attempting to gather and deliver anti-submarine defense secrets to the Soviets.

The suspect, Craig Lee Kunkle, 39, first came to the attention of the FBI when he called the Soviet Embassy here last month and the conversation was monitored by authorities, sources familiar with the case said.

Kunkle, who had attempted to earn a living as a private investigator and security guard after ending an 11-year Navy career with a "less than honorable discharge," may have been motivated by money and possibly revenge over his discharge, one source said.

The information Kunkle allegedly sought to obtain and sell to the Soviets involved Navy anti-submarine warfare capabilities, the FBI said. Throughout his Navy service, with both the Atlantic and Pacific Fleets, Kunkle's specialty was operating equipment in P-3 Orion sub-hunting planes.

While Kunkle did not actually turn anything over to Soviet agents, his arrest is another indication of the surveillance net the FBI maintains over locations where a U.S. spy would likely try to contact foreign agents.

And the arrest comes at a time when U.S. intelligence officials are voicing greater concern over what appears to be growing efforts by the Soviet Union to recruit American agents, despite Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's emphasis on glasnost.

"Our counterintelligence problems have increased over the past couple of years," a Reagan administration source said.

Most Soviet efforts are targeted at military enlisted personnel and lower-level civilian workers, like couriers and communications specialists, rather than at senior staff officials, according to intelligence sources. These sources said that more U.S. employees are reporting approaches from Soviet operatives than at any other time in the post-war era.

Kunkle, who was born in Alameda, Calif., held a secret clearance during his Navy service.

Although Kunkle's alleged espionage attempt took place in Norfolk, his activities have no relation with the case of convicted spy John A. Walker Jr., the retired Navy communications specialist who organized an espionage ring out of Norfolk using family members and a close friend, government sources said.

Kunkle, who appeared Tuesday before U.S. Magistrate Tommy E. Miller in Norfolk, could face life imprisonment if convicted of the espionage charge.

Gas Leak

YANCEYVILLE, N.C. (AP) — About 75 Caswell County residents were evacuated Tuesday night after a natural gas leak was discovered at a trailer park on N.C. 86.

The leak was discovered about 9:30 p.m., and everyone was evacuated by 10 p.m., said Cpl. R.A. Strader of the Caswell County Sheriff's Department.

The Suburban Trailer Park is a mile north of Yanceyville. The leak occurred at the main intersection of the town's gas line, Strader said.

Refitting Fisher's Island Gem Truly 'Worthy Work'

By Angus Phillips
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — Life has taken some curious turns for Allen Cady. There are stretches of the 1960s he can't even remember, when he was living alone in a shack out in the thickets of Annapolis Neck, before all the townhouses and marinas sprang up around him. "No one even knew I was here," he said.

But he made out all right, accepting what came his way, bouncing from job to job, building, fixing, fooling around with wood, working on houses and boats and machines, gathering tools, skills, values.

He's 41 now, living in the little green house he resurrected years ago from a bombed-out hippie den. A formidable firewood stack and a pair of pet llamas sit in the yard outside, two small kids and a wife are within, a half-dozen aging Saabs lie around in various stages of disrepair and a seagoing masterpiece rests in the shed.

The boat is Spindrift, a 1927 Fisher's Island 31 sloop from the drawing board of Nathanael G. Herreshoff, America's greatest yacht designer. She is 43 feet 8 inches overall, a little over 31 feet on the water, flawlessly fair of shape, like a dolphin sculpted of wood, and built by hand, with care, of longleaf yellow pine, cypress, oak, teak and redwood.

Her restoration has come to dominate Cady's life, though she came into it innocently enough: a phone call from a friend of a friend, a slack time in his work schedule, an anxious owner looking for a refit.

That was December 1986, when William Rich III, a New York financier, needed someone to fix the yacht that had satisfied his family for 46 years, ever since his father bought it in 1940. "He told me, 'I have a yacht that needs refastening and new decks,'" Cady recalled. "Famous last words..."

Because when Cady probed Spindrift with a screwdriver, things simply went to dust. "The screws were green powder," he said. Oak frames were rotted through; floor timbers were soft as cardboard, floor bolts were rusted thin as paper clips. "The deeper I looked, the worse it got."

He called Rich and learned that the boat had been in regular use, but only at her crew's peril. "When they raced it in any kind of wind they kept two men below, bailing full-time with buckets," Cady said. "They tried to stay in shallow water so if they sank, they wouldn't lose the boat."

Cady asked for a marine survey to see how bad the rot was. The surveyor shook his head and said to rebuild it or let it go. "I sent the survey up, thinking, 'That's the end of that,'" Cady said.

But sentiment for old loves runs deep. Rich called a few days later for advice. "I told him he had three choices: Put a little money in and keep it going two or three years; dig a hole, bury it and plant flowers in it; or fix it right." Total restoration would cost $70,000-$120,000.

"I could hear him scratching on a pad. I didn't think I heard him right when he said, 'Okay, let's do it.'"

Which is how Cady has come to spend the last two years of his life in the daily company of a ruined beauty, putting her back to glory piece by piece.

It's been a learning experience. His only previous serious boat-building came way back when, when he took a job at Trumpy's famous yard here to satisfy the distraught father of a girlfriend. Later, he rebuilt a 27-foot wooden daysailer for himself, then found he liked working on it better than sailing it. "Anyone who says he loves sailing," said Cady, "hasn't been sailing."

"But I love this boat," and working on her, he said, running a hand along Spindrift's perfect sheer line. "It's worthy work. It gets your interest up. It's so different from working on a boat that you don't like."

And he has a good boss, which helps. Rich waited six months before coming to see the boat the first time. By then she was a wreck, her frames torn out, interior gutted. But Rich never lost faith, Cady said, and everything he's needed as the project evolved, he's gotten.

Chore 1 was removal and replacement of all 76 steam-bent oak frames, the skeleton of the boat. Every one was shot. To replace them, Cady had to learn the delicate art of steam-bending green wood to proper shape. "I started out knowing nothing," he said. "Now I'm a steam-bending expert."

Next, the entire keel had to be replaced. Cady, flush with his framing success, thought briefly of

Washington Post/Angus Phillips

Allan Cady, right, and helper Gary Stiewing stand before the refurbished hull of the sloop Spindrift steam-bending a solid piece of 35-foot-long oak, a project roughly akin to the Apollo moon shot, but soon gave up and laminated a replacement out of oak strips and space-age glue.

Exterior planks had to be replaced. The deck was rotten through and will be replaced by teak over double-planked plywood. The two cockpits have been redesigned and built from scratch.

Every hull fastening has been replaced; the mast and all its support structure has been redesigned and replaced. The transom was rebuilt of steam-bent, double-planked, quartersawn oak.

To do the mammoth job, Cady bought a 50-foot-long commercial greenhouse and erected it in his side yard.

For a year he worked alone. Then Gary Stiewing turned up. He'd been living aboard a sailboat for 10 years, cruising the coast, and ran out of money. He's been on the job ever since. "My right-hand man," said Cady.

Days in Cady's tool-strewn shed are interesting. "We have a lot of fun," Stiewing said. "A job like this keeps you thinking because if you make a mistake, you're going to pay for it later."

There are few guidelines for what they do. Mostly it's common sense, careful planning and paying proper respect to the genius of the design.

"In most boats," said Cady, "everything is second-rate. There's no attention to quality, to detail and design, so the end product is a failure. Other things took precedence with this boat: Beauty, design, seakindness, attention to detail, workmanship."

The experts concur. In 1980, Woodenboat magazine said of the Fisher's Island 31s: "It has been as cruisers and handicap racers that these wonderful boats have spent most of their lives. For this use they were ideal — seakindly, fast under a wide range of measurement rules, sleeping six in reasonable comfort, affording standing headroom, and being strikingly handsome to look at in spite of changing styles."

"You just have to look at her," said Cady, "to know she's fast and wonderful to sail. I can't wait to sail her. The amazing thing is that anyone had the resources to restore her and decided to do it."

Today the job is 80 percent done. The deck has yet to go on, as well as the coachroof. The interior must be put back, mostly as original, and then Spindrift needs to be painted and dumped in the water for three weeks of "controlled sink," until the wood swells up watertight, Cady said.

He recently told Rich he could have the boat back in June, better than new.

And what did the owner say to that, after a two-year wait and a six-figure bill?

"He said, 'Oh, boy!'" said Cady.

This Kid Should Go Far In P.R.

Dear Abby: I've read, seen and heard many instances of the rudeness of the younger generation, but I'd like to relate an incident that restored my faith in young adults.

My teen-age daughter was very proud of her new leather "bomber" jacket she had bought with the money she had saved from baby sitting. While standing in the lunch line, she was approached by a high school senior who had spied the jacket. He had bought one just like it for his girlfriend — and her jacket was missing.

He proceeded to question my daughter about the jacket she was wearing and eventually accused her of stealing his girlfriend's jacket. Only when my daughter was in tears in front of the packed lunchroom did the girlfriend appear wearing her "missing" jacket.

The senior of course apologized to my daughter and went even further by having a vase of yellow flowers delivered to her while she was in her afternoon class. Chivalry is not dead! — Impressed

Dear Impressed: You call this "chivalry"? I call it a grandstand play. First he humiliates a girl publicly — calling her a thief. Then on discovering he had made a mistake, he sends flowers to her classroom. This kid is a natural showman. He should go far in the P.R. business.

Dear Abby: A lady asked, "What do you do with a 28-year-old man who rarely showers, never washes his hair and doesn't own a toothbrush?"

You replied, "Nothing." Well, I was married to a man just like that for 40 years. He was a good provider and a gentle person in all his actions. Even though I hinted often and spoke negatively about other men who never cleaned themselves up, he never got the hint, so I also tried to do "nothing."

I slept on the far side of the bed, feigned sleep and weariness and avoided closeness whenever possible.

I know I hurt his masculine ego many, many times. Poor soul. How I wish I could have said something definite about it instead of living those 40 years in that unhappy situation, and doing so little to make him happy and satisfied.

Abby, I would have advised that lady to tell her husband to shape up or ship out. That is what I should have done 40 years ago. — Too Late Now

Dear Too Late: If your husband is still alive, it may not be too late. Get "Love and Sex After 60" (Harper and Row) by Dr. Robert N. Butler, former head of the National Institute on Aging (and Pulitzer Prize recipient for his book, "Why Survive: Growing Old in America"). But all the books in the world will not help you unless you look your man straight in the eye and tell him the truth: "I love you, but I can't make love with a clothespin on my nose."

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

Cardigan Jacket Easy, Versatile

Whether you knit it with or without sleeves, this versatile cardigan jacket will be a terrific wear-with-anything addition to your wardrobe. Fashioned to resemble a jeans jacket with collar, flap pockets and ridged detailing, its deeply cut armholes ensure comfort even when worn over a shirt or sweater. Make it as shown, or omit the sleeves and you have a great vest.

A fashionable stone-washed effect is achieved with an acrylic denim-look yarn. The gauge is 9 stitches to 2 inches, and easy-to-follow directions are written for small, medium and large sizes. Finished bust measurements are 40, 42 and 44 inches respectively.

To obtain directions for making the Denim-Look Cardigan, send your request for Leaflet No. Z-010889 with $2 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler Crafts, The Daily Reflector, P.O. Box 419148, Kansas City, Mo. 64141.

Or you may order Kit No. K-010889 by sending a check or money order for $25.95 to Pat Trexler Crafts at the same address. The kit price includes shipping charges, full instructions and acrylic yarn in denim blue.

Dear Pat: I have a favorite cardigan pattern — a classic that I have used with a variety of knit pattern stitches — but I now would like to add a collar and don't know how to go about it. Can you help? — Sandra R., Denver

Dear Sandra: The collar used with today's featured denim-look cardigan is a versatile one that could be used with many different sweater styles. For those knitters with a good understanding of gauge, it can be adapted to any yarn and needles. The sweater gauge is 9 stitches to 2 inches, and the collar is worked on a circular needle three sizes smaller than the needles used for the sweater.

Work back and forth on the circular needle without joining. Starting at the right front edge with the right side facing you, pick up 18 stitches along the right front neck edge, 40 along the back and 18 from the left front edge for a total of 76 stitches.

Row 1: (wrong side) knit 3 stitches, work in purl 1, knit 1 ribbing across row until 3 stitches remain; knit these 3 stitches.

Row 2: Knit 3 stitches. Keeping in ribbed pattern as established, increase 1 in first and last stitches of ribbed section and end with knit 3.

Continue to work in garter stitch on first and last 3 stitches with ribbing in between, and increase 1 at each end as in Row 2 until there are 92 stitches and collar measures 2½ inches from beginning.

On the next right-side row, knit 3, increase in next stitch and knit across, increasing in last stitch before the garter stitch border. On the next wrong-side row, knit all stitches. Repeat last 2 rows, ending with 96 stitches. Collar should measure 3 inches.

How can you use these directions if your neck measurement and gauge is different? The only figuring you need to do will involve the number of stitches to be picked up around the neck edge.

A good way to do this is to measure the neck edge of your garment after the shoulder seams are joined and multiply the number of inches by your stitch gauge. This will give you the number of stitches to be picked up. For example, with a 17-inch measurement and a gauge of 6 stitches per inch, you would pick up 102 stitches. If your gauge gives you an odd number of stitches, just add or subtract 1 so you have an even number.

Jacket has denim look

If you pick up a different number of stitches because of a different gauge, you will not, of course, have the same number of increases as in the pattern given above. Don't worry about that, however. Just work in the same manner, increasing on the right-side rows until collar measures 2½ to ½ inch less than desired finished dept of the collar. Then work a ½-inch garter stitch border, increasing as before on every right-side row.

Officers Question Pilot of Crashed Jet

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — The pilot of a Boeing 737 was questioned again today by investigators trying to determine why his plane's apparently undamaged right engine was shut down long before the jet crashed, while the burning left engine remained in operation.

The Civil Aviation Authority said it would order stepped-up inspections of engines on three types of airplanes as a result of the crash Sunday of the British Midland Airways jetliner.

The new inspections will apply to Boeing 737-400s, the type of aircraft involved in the crash, as well as Boeing 737-300s and Airbus A320s, which have similar engines, the authority said in a statement.

The statement came after the Transport Department recommended more frequent inspections of Boeing 737 engines. A communique issued by the department's Air Accidents Investigation Branch said it was still looking into the possibility that both engines "might have suffered a related failure."

It did not refer to suggestions in the British media that the pilot shut down the wrong engine when a fire alarm went off.

The reasons for shutting down the engine "are not yet clear and are still under investigation," the communique said.

The pilot, Capt. Kevin Hunt, whose back and legs were broken in the crash, was interviewed for 45 minutes at Leicester Royal Infirmary, said the hospital's deputy general manager, Carol Henshall. Hunt answered preliminary questions Tuesday.

The jet plunged into an embankment a half-mile short of the runway at East Midlands Airport in central England, where it was trying to make an emergency landing. Forty-four people died and 82 were injured.

Transport Secretary Paul Channon said Hunt had reported a fire in the right engine of the new Boeing 737-400 shortly after it took off from London's Heathrow Airport for Belfast.

Channon told the House of Commons Tuesday that investigators found evidence of fire in the left engine, but no evidence of fire or mechanical damage in the right engine.

Britain's tabloid newspapers concluded today that Hunt had mistakenly shut down the right engine, believing it was on fire, instead of the left engine.

"Fatal Error" said the Daily Star. "Pilot Shut Off the Wrong Engine" said the Sun. "Error on the Flight Deck" said Today.

The British Airline Pilots Association called the newspaper reports "outrageous" and "without a shred of evidence." Aviation experts said it was highly unlikely the pilot could have confused the two engines, given the cockpit layout and the system of doublechecks between pilot and co-pilot.

Mrs. Henshall said that after Hunt's meeting with investigators he "is obviously a lot happier that they have all the relevant facts."

Scientists Say Newly Found Ribbon Of Gas Supports Black Hole Theory

Discovery May Help Determine Source Of Power For The Milky Way

By Lee Dye
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

BOSTON — A ribbon of gas more than 90 trillion miles long has been discovered streaming toward the center of the Milky Way galaxy, and it may provide the answer to the baffling question of what powers the galaxy.

An international team of scientists announced the discovery here Tuesday amid claims that the ribbon of gas offers dramatic new evidence that a giant black hole, more massive than a million suns, lies at the heart of the Milky Way.

Many astronomers believe that an enormous black hole provides the energy that powers the Milky Way, driving billions of stars in giant orbits around the galactic center as it pulls in more and more mass.

Such a black hole would be so powerful that it would already have devoured most of the mass near the galactic center, which is about 30,000 light years away from Earth, according to Harvard University professor Paul Ho, who announced the discovery during a meeting of the American Astronomical Society.

Salinas, who took office Dec. 1, has vowed to sell or close unprofitable and non-strategic state industries.

Animosities between Hernandez and Salinas, then president-elect, surfaced in October when the union revived charges that a leading governing party official, Mexico state Gov. Mario Ramon Beteta, had embezzled millions of dollars while serving as head of Pemex.

During Beteta's tenure, the union lost control of millions of dollars worth of contracts. Attorney General Enrique Alvarez del Castillo said a federal agency was killed in Tuesday's battle between security forces and Hernandez Galicia's bodyguards. Carlos Torres, a spokesman for the attorney general's office, today said authorities had arrested 35 people in connection with the case, including former union Secretary-General Jose Sosa and 16 others on illegal weapons charges. Salvador Barragon Camacho, the union's nominal leader as secretary-general, surrendered to authorities early today and was hospitalized after complaining of heart problems. He recently suffered a heart attack, Notimex said.

Alvarez said police confiscated 200 Uzi submachine guns and 250,000 rounds of ammunition at Hernandez Galicia's house and denied charges that the raid was an attack on the union.

Ho, who is also with the Harvard-Smithsonian Center for Astrophysics, said many scientists now believe a giant black hole at the center of the Milky Way serves as the "engine" that powers the galaxy. But it must constantly gobble up mass to drive the system, and if it has already devoured nearly everything in its neighborhood, where does it get its fuel?

"How do you feed the central engine?" Ho asked during a press conference.

Some scientists believe an occasional passing star is sucked into the black hole, but to serve as the galaxy's engine the black hole would need a fairly constant flow of matter. So far, no one has been able to figure out where it comes from. Ho and his colleagues believe they may have found the answer in the discovery of a long stream of molecular gas that is feeding into the galactic center. He said the gas appears to be supplying matter to a giant shell of gas and dust that surrounds the galactic center. Material from the shell falls into the black hole, Ho theorized, and is replaced by mass from the ribbon of gas.

"It's the first time that we have seen evidence that suggests such a phenomena," he said. Ho's team includes scientists from the Max Planck Institute for Extraterrestrial Physics in Munich, the University of Cologne and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Black holes are believed to be created when a star collapses, and they are so dense that not even light can escape their gravitational pull. Thus no one has ever seen a black hole, although an increasingly large number of scientists now believe they exist.

An "ordinary" black hole might be no larger than a few miles in diameter, yet as massive as the sun. According to theory, black holes devour nearby matter — including stars — and they continue to grow as they feed on their neighbors.

Some could become huge, influencing the movement of distant stars and possibly playing a key role in the formation of galaxies.

Ex-State Player Offered Money For Info

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A former North Carolina State basketball player says the author of a book about Wolfpack coach Jim Valvano's program offered to pay him for information, but lost interest when the player said he knew nothing controversial.

Quentin Jackson, who played for the Wolfpack from 1984 to 1988, said author Peter Golenbock offered to pay $500 to $1,500 per half-hour for information on the team.

"I told Golenbock that I would be glad to talk to him for that kind of money, but that I had to do it at the sports information department," Jackson told The News and Observer of Raleigh in today's editions. "And I told him that I didn't have anything bad to say about the program or Coach V. When I told him that, he said, 'Fine,' and hung up the telephone."

Jackson said he received the offer during a conversation with Golenbock, the author of a forthcoming book called "Personal Fouls." Jackson called back a second time after considering the offer.

Jackson said he got in touch with Golenbock through former team manager John Simonds Jr. last May and June.

N.C. State chancellor Bruce Poulton said Tuesday that a former team manager whom he didn't name was the source of information for the upcoming book. According to a book jacket, the publication will contain allegations of irregularities in the Wolfpack basketball program.

"John must have felt that I had an ax to grind with Coach Valvano over playing time," said Jackson, now a player for the Harlem Globetrotters. "John told me he had the telephone number of a guy staying in a hotel in Durham and that the guy was writing a book on ACC basketball and wanted to interview me. I called the number, and the man identified himself as Peter Golenbock...."

"He told me he wanted to write a book about what it was like to play against teams like Carolina and Duke and win the ACC tournament. That all sounded fine to me. But then he told me that my name wouldn't have to be in the book and that no one would have to know that I had given him any information."

"That made me suspicious. I had never heard of a situation that like in a book that wasn't supposed to be controversial."

Adam Rothburg, a spokesman for Pocket Books Inc. of New York, a division of Simon & Schuster Co., said he knew of no financial offers made by Golenbock to sources for the book.

The newspaper said that neither Simonds nor Golenbock could not be reached for comment.

Meanwhile, a former head of N.C. State's physical education department said three failing grades on the transcript of former Wolfpack basketball player Chris Washburn were changed to passing grades in 1985, and that Poulton knew of the change.

University officials denied that the grades had been changed, but they acknowledged that one "incomplete" was changed to a "C."

Richard A. Lauffer, who retired last year after seven years as head of the physical education department, said in a telephone interview with the newspaper from his home in Emerald Isle that he had complained to Poulton about the changing of three grades and other irregularities involving basketball players. Poulton declined to be interviewed on the subject. However,

Nelson Faces Cancer Again

Giants' Lineman To Fight Illness One More Time

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Months of chemotherapy stare him in the face. His wife is pregnant and about to deliver any day and his soon-to-be 3-year-old daughter is asking Daddy about the "boo-boos" on his chest.

Cancer is again challenging Karl Nelson, but it hasn't deprived him of his dream of one day again playing for the New York Giants.

Nelson said Tuesday that he still hoped to continue his NFL career despite learning that doctors have found Hodgkin's disease in his chest for a second time and that it also has spread to his neck.

"The way you deal with this is not say 'Why me?'" the 28-year-old Nelson said during a packed news conference at Giants Stadium. "You say, 'OK, what do I have to do to get better?'"

Nelson's treatment will involve 12 sessions of chemotherapy over a six-month period. The two-monthly treatments will be conducted at a doctor's office and will not require hospitalization, he said.

"If you go into the treatment thinking it won't work, I feel it won't," said Nelson, who underwent radiation treatment when cancer was first diagnosed in 1987. "You have to have a positive attitude."

Nelson does, and that's why he is not ruling out his chances of playing again, although they do seem small. Nelson will not finish his treatment until July and that would be just before training camp.

"I think I have a chance," Nelson said. "I think I can. I don't know whether it will happen. I'll try again."

Teel Keys Rampants

2nd Half Spurs Rose By Gryphons

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

When things got tight, Rose coach Jim Brewington looked to point guard James Teel for assistance against Rocky Mount.

Teel scored all of his 11 points in the second half as the Rampants held off the Gryphons, 52-47, Tuesday night in high school basketball action.

"James is our point guard," Brewington said. "He's the one that makes us go. He's the straw that stirs the drink. In the first half, he wasn't going. James played a lot better in the second half."

The lead went back and forth the entire night as the two teams amassed enough turnovers to drive both coaches crazy. Rose had 17 ball-handling miscues while Rocky Mount had 19.

After playing to a 24-24 tie at the half, Rocky Mount came out and quickly took the lead.

Carlton Randolph, who led both teams with 18 points, gave the Gryphons an early 26-24 lead with a short jumper with 5:45 remaining in the third period. After a Rose turnover, Issac Copeland scored on a follow shot inside to make it 28-24.

Rose went the first 3:42 of the second half without scoring before Patrick Joyner came up with a steal and fed Carlester Crumpler underneath for a layup to make it 28-26.

Rocky Mount's Michael Jenkins hit Shaun Ricks for a layup to make it 30-26, but Teel followed with a three-point basket, his first of the night, to pull Rose within 30-29 with 3:13 left in the quarter.

The Gryphons turned the ball back to Rose. Joyner then drove the lane and fed Brewington for a basket to give Rose a 31-30 lead the Rampants would not relinquish the rest of the game.

"That's been the story of our season," Rocky Mount coach Reggie Henderson said. "We've been losing for so long. This is the sixth year we've been under .500 and it looks like we're headed there again."

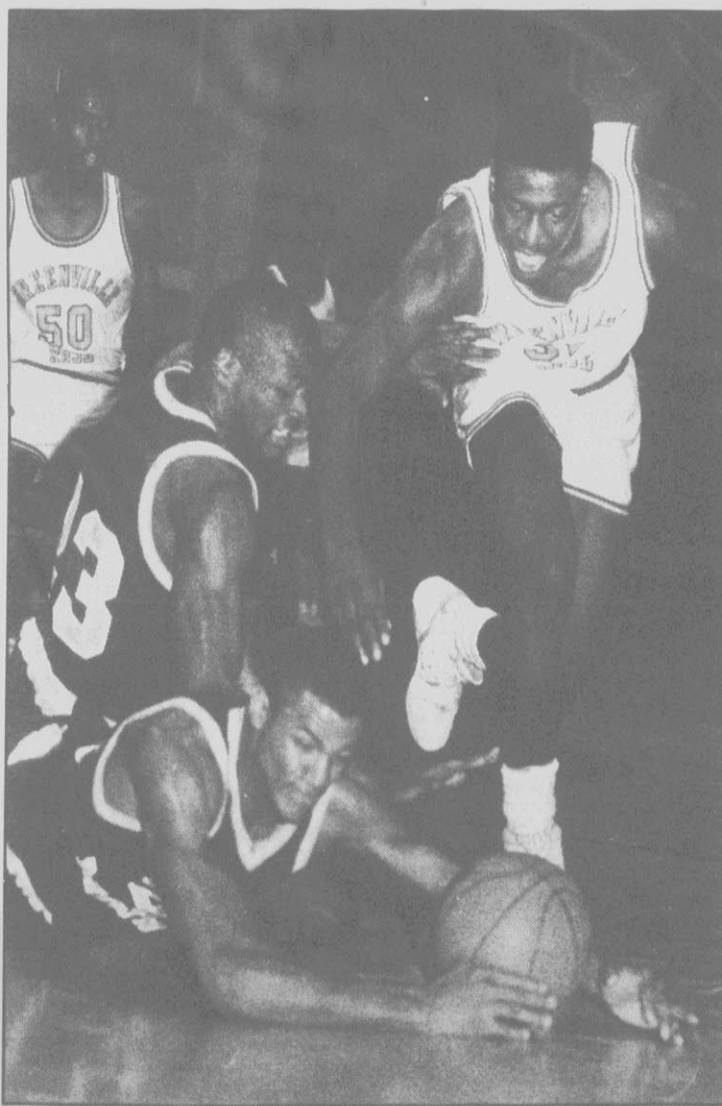

"We don't know how to win. Someone on the floor has to take charge."

Rose maintained a slim advantage the rest of the way to make it 35-32 at the end of the third quarter.

"When James Teel hit that three pointer in the third quarter, I thought that was the key," Brewington said. "He came in at the end of the third quarter and really played."

The advantage the Rampants built up in the third quarter was just enough the rest of the way. Rocky Mount made charges, drawing within one point at 43-42 on a free

Tech Rolls To Win

Hammonds Scores Career-high 40

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — The game was decided by the size and effort of one ballplayer, Georgia State Coach Bob Reinhart said after Georgia Tech whipped his Crimson Panthers 121-86 on Tuesday night.

"Obviously the difference in the game was Tommy Hammonds," Reinhart said of the 6-foot-9 Tech forward. "It's illogical and I guess stupid to think that any kid 6-4 or 6-5 can guard Tommy Hammonds."

"We're small inside. They took advantage of it and he got his career high, 40."

Hammonds, coming off back-to-back 30-point games for the 19th-ranked Yellow Jackets, had 19 points in the first half and scored his 40th on two free throws with 6:16 remaining to give the Yellow Jackets a 102-64 lead. They led by as many as 41 points in running their record to 10-2. Georgia State fell to 6-6.

"Obviously, we had a height advantage and we wanted to take advantage of that," Tech Coach Bobby Cremins said. "Bob's tallest guy is 6-5, and we talked about getting the ball inside, particularly to Hammonds, and to try to go to the boards."

He admitted he kept Hammonds in longer than usual to get his last two points.

The coach "kept giving me the one sign," Hammonds said, "so knew I had one shot left before he took me out."

The Crimson Panthers were led by James Andrews with 29 points and Lanard Copeland, who scored 20.

"I knew coming in that talent-wise we couldn't match up with Tech," Reinhart said. "We tried to get the ball to Jimmy Andrews and Leonard Copeland and go for it from 3-point range. We knew we couldn't score inside against them."

The Crimson Panthers held their last lead of the game when Michael Carr's baseline jumper put them up 18-17 with 11:31 remaining in the first half.

Tech then took control with a 22-4 burst, with Hammonds scoring 12 points.

David Whitmore's driving dunk put Tech ahead 39-22 with 5:59 left in the half. The Yellow Jackets built their lead to 54-36 at halftime and held their biggest lead, 105-64, with 5:29 remaining.

Whitmore added 15 points and Brian Oliver and Anthony Sherrod scored 13 apiece for Tech.

Conley's Defense Sinks Pam Pack

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

HOLLYWOOD — After being blown out by Farmville Central last week, D.H. Conley coach Cobby Deans installed a full court pressure defense in his squad's scheme.

The move paid off Tuesday as the Vikings topped Washington, 68-61, thanks to a strong fourth-quarter performance defensively.

Trailing 51-47 with six minutes to play, the Vikings reeled off three consecutive scores off of Pam Pack turnovers to move ahead to stay at 53-51 with 4:41 left on the clock.

Stacy Green got the run started when he scored on a layup. Junior Farrow then added another layup before Bershaun Thompson capped the run with a jumper in the lane.

"I thought our (pressure) defense in the second half was the difference," Deans said. "We just put it (the fullcourt press) in this past week and it really helped tonight."

Thompson, who scored nine of his 18 points in the final period including a halfcourt shot at the buzzer, along with Green, Farrow and Jason Wing helped engineer the defensive effort by the Vikings.

"We made too many turnovers, that's all you can say," Washington coach Dave Smith said. "There's no doubt that the defense they played in the fourth quarter made the difference in the game. They caught us off-guard."

At one point in the quarter, the Pam Pack turned the ball over on five straight possessions.

Terry Williams, who led all scorers with 22 points, helped ice the game down the stretch with four free throws for the Vikings, while Paul Merritt, who chipped in 12, scored a key basket and a pair of free throws in the waning moments.

The win lifts the Vikings to 8-3 overall for the season and to 1-0 in the conference, while Washington slips to 6-6 and 0-2.

In the early going, cold shooting by the Vikings looked as if it might doom them.

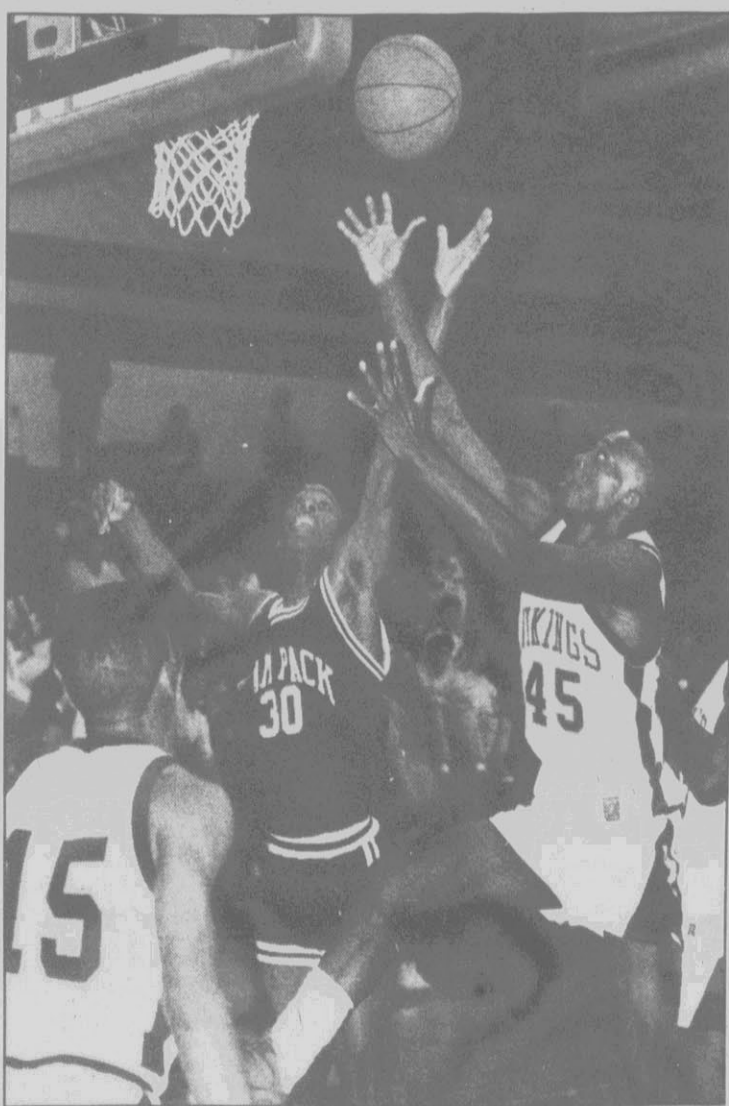

Nico Hines, who led Washington with 16 points, put Conley behind 8-2 with 3:38 left in the first quarter when he buried a 17-footer.

The Vikings managed to cut the lead to two, 8-6, by the three minute mark with a tip-in from Farrow and a pair of free throws from Williams.

The Pam Pack moved back out by as many as six, 20-14, in the second quarter with scoring from Jason Smith and Walter Rasby, who finished with 14 and 12 points respectively, before the Vikings closed the gap to two, 26-24, by the half.

In the second quarter, Conley opened up a four-point lead, 42-38, on a jumper by Green with 4:39 left.

Pirates' Staples Charged, Arrested

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

East Carolina basketball player Kevin Staples has been suspended from the team after being arrested and charged with two counts of breaking and entering and larceny.

Staples was arrested at 3 p.m. Tuesday in connection with dorm thefts at three separate rooms at Scott Hall. The charges are felonies, ECU Police Chief Johnny Rose said.

"There were textbooks involved in the thefts," Rose said. "There was an attempt made to sell them back to the student stores. That's the way we uncovered it. The books tied in to three rooms."

"(There is) no other involvement by any other person as far as the investigation has determined so far."

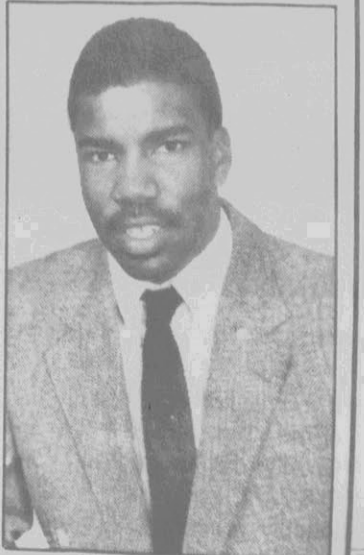

The alleged thefts were reported Sunday, Rose said. Classes for the spring semester began Friday.

At a first appearance Wednesday before Judge David Leach, a probable cause hearing for Staples was set for Jan. 27. Assistant District Attorney Nancy Aycock said Staples was charged with two counts of breaking and entering and larceny. Each charge carries a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison.

In conjunction with school policy, ECU basketball coach Mike Steele suspended Staples from the squad Tuesday. His status will be reviewed after his case has been settled in court.

Jones Earns Team Handball Honor

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Leora "Sam" Jones was named the Team Handball athlete of the year for 1988 on Tuesday by the United States Olympic Committee. Jones, a native of Dudley, N.C., led the United States Olympic team in scoring in the 1988 Olympics in Seoul, South Korea. She finished as the second leading scorer in the tournament with 35 goals. She also played in the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles and led the United States team to gold medals in the 1986 and 1987 Pan American games. Jones played basketball for Louisburg Junior College and East Carolina. She joined the national handball team in 1982.

Perry Testifies To Collect Damages

BARTOW, Fla. (AP) — Former baseball great Gaylord Perry, suing to collect damages in the automobile accident that killed his wife, testified Tuesday that his life will never be the same again. "I always counted on her being there," Perry told a six-member Polk Circuit Court jury. "It didn't matter if I won or lost, she always knew the right thing to say at the right time."

Perry is suing the driver of the car that hit Blanche Perry's Chevrolet on U.S. 27 near Lake Wales on the morning of Sept. 11, 1987. The driver, 67-year-old Harold Arnold, has acknowledged that he was at fault in the accident, so the jury will decide how much the Perry family should receive in damages.

Testimony was expected to last all week and Perry's attorney has not yet specified the exact amount he is seeking in damages.

Florida Highway Patrol troopers reported that Arnold ran a stop sign and drove into the path of Mrs. Perry's car.

Mrs. Perry, 48, was in Florida visiting her daughter, Amy Espallad, who had just given birth to a baby girl the day before the accident.

Criminal charges were not filed against Arnold, according to prosecutors, because his failure to react to the stop sign may have been caused by medication he was taking.

Arnold was found guilty of failure to yield the right of way in connection with the accident, and he paid a $67.50 fine, according to traffic court records.

Meanwhile, Byrnes High School lineman Dan Rogers said he would play for Georgia. The 6-4, 255-pound Rogers was named to The Associated Press all-state football team as an offensive lineman.

Valvano-Book

in a speech to the faculty council, he said he had asked the university registrar to review the grades of every member of the men's basketball team.

"It's flying around out there that one athlete had three grades changed," Poulton told the council, "and we're looking into that right now."

Grade-changing for basketball players is one of the allegations believed to be contained in the book.

Arthur Padilla, associate vice president of academic affairs for the 16-campus University of North Carolina system, of which N.C. State is a part, contacted the chancellor after being told of Lauffer's allegation.

"I have great reservations about discussing academic information about any student or former student, but since this charge was so serious, and since it went to the heart of the academic enterprise of the university, I called the chancellor about it," Padilla said.

"He told me from information he had received from the registrar at N.C. State that the only change in this particular student's transcript was a change from an incomplete to a 'C' in a physical education course. There were no other changes in the transcript.

King Take 2nd Straight Over L.A.

The Sacramento Kings coach Jerry Reynolds put his team's second straight home victory over the Los Angeles Lakers in perspective.

"This is the most fun I have had since the Fourth of July festival in French Lick (Indiana)," Reynolds said.

Pat Riley, coach of the defending NBA champion Lakers, who now have lost a record-tying eight consecutive road games, tried to put it in a different perspective.

"So we're 9-12 on the road," Riley said after the 106-97 loss Tuesday night. "But we're still 13-0 at home and we're in first place in our division."

True, and Sacramento is still in last place in the Pacific Division with an 8-21 record. But the Kings also won their last meeting against the Lakers in Sacramento last season.

"I think any time you play at home you feel more comfortable," the Kings' Kenny Smith said. "Look at how well the Lakers play down in the Forum. You really have to play flawless basketball just to keep up with them."

LaSalle Thompson had 23 points, 11 rebounds and a season-high four blocks to lead Sacramento. Smith added 19 points and a season-high 14 assists, while Harold Pressley had 17 points.

The Kings never trailed the Lakers in the second half. The closest the Lakers were able to get was 75-73 when Orlando Woodridge hit a jumper to start the fourth quarter.

Magic Johnson scored 18 of his 22 points in the second half for Los Angeles, which also got 22 points from James Worthy.

Trail Blazers 125, Sonics 109
 Reserve Steve Johnson scored a season-high 27 points and triggered a second-half surge that lifted Portland over Seattle. The loss snapped the Sonics' five-game winning streak.

It was the Blazers' 12th straight home victory.

Clyde Drexler led Portland with 29 points, while Kiki Vandeweghe had 21 points, his most since coming off the injured list five games ago.

Portland took the lead for good at 71-69 on Johnson's three-point play, then outscored the Sonics 15-3 to start the final quarter.

Michael Cage led Seattle with a season-high 24 points and 15 rebounds.

Bulls 104, Hawks 101
 Michael Jordan scored 14 of his 48 points in the final 7:18 as Chicago erased a 14-point deficit to defeat Atlanta and snap a two-game losing streak. The Hawks missed three 3-point shots in the final 20 seconds.

Moses Malone gave Atlanta a 95-81 lead with 7:45 remaining on a 14-foot jumper, but the Hawks scored only six points — two field goals and two free throws — the rest of the way.

Dominique Wilkins led Atlanta with 28 points.

Bullets 120, Nuggets 117
 John Williams' snazzy layup with 18 seconds remaining and Jeff Malone's two free throws 13 seconds later led Washington over Denver and snapped the Bullets' two-game losing streak.

Washington trailed 117-116 when Williams put in a double-pump, left-handed layup. Malone then hit

Prison Caters Jail Food In 8 Counties

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
WADESBORO, N.C. — Cost-conscious sheriffs at eight North Carolina county jails are getting help from state prison kitchens.
Anson County is paying only one-third the cost of the commercial price of meals. It has made the savings by contracting with the Polkton Prison Unit of the Correction Department to provide jail meals at a savings of $1,200 to $1,500 a month.
Sheriff Tommy Allen paid $5.32 a day for prison meals last year under a contract with local restaurants. That price would have climbed to almost $10 under a similar contract this year.
Allen, however, is paying $3.15 a day under a contract with the prison unit. The county must pay for take-out containers and pick up the food.
Alexander County Sheriff Thomas Beber, whose county is following the same plan, is pleased with his arrangements for providing jail meals. "We have been using the service for about a year, and it has worked out well for us," Beber said.
Jails in Anson, Alexander, Pender, Halifax, Montgomery, Davie, Yadkin and Northampton counties get their food through contracts with local prison units.
Montgomery County Sheriff Wayne Wooten has been using the prison food for more than two years. "We average about 20 prisoners a day, but we don't have the facilities to cook and it would cost too much to hire a cook," he said.
"If we need a salt-free diet or any other kind of special food, all we have to do is call and let them know," Wooten said.
Allen said: "We took bids for meals this year and the figure was $9.77 per day from local restaurants. At that price, we wouldn't have had enough money to feed our prisoners for six months."

Allen spent $31,915 for jail food in 1986-87 and watched that figure climb to $38,434.64 in 1987-88. The sheriff budgeted $36,000 for food in the 1988-89 budget, but average daily jail populations have increased to 20 prisoners a day, pushing meal costs far above budget estimates.
John Mullinax, Southeastern area administrator for the Correction Department office in Kannapolis, said Anson County is the only county in the 11 under his supervision receiving meals.
"This is done on a county-by-county basis, depending on whether we can provide the service," he said. "We like to help out whenever we can."
"We provide a good balanced diet, and I will compare the cleanliness of any of our kitchens with the best restaurants in the state," Mullinax said. "We have had no problems with providing the service. And the more meals we can prepare, the lower the cost per meal."

CASH BACK

Program Extended through Dec. 31, 1989

Now you have another year to join over 300 of your friends and neighbors who have received CASH for saying "Good-bye" to high heating and cooling costs!

They did it by replacing their old inefficient heating/cooling equipment with high-efficient equipment that qualified for Greenville Utilities' CASH BACK rebates.

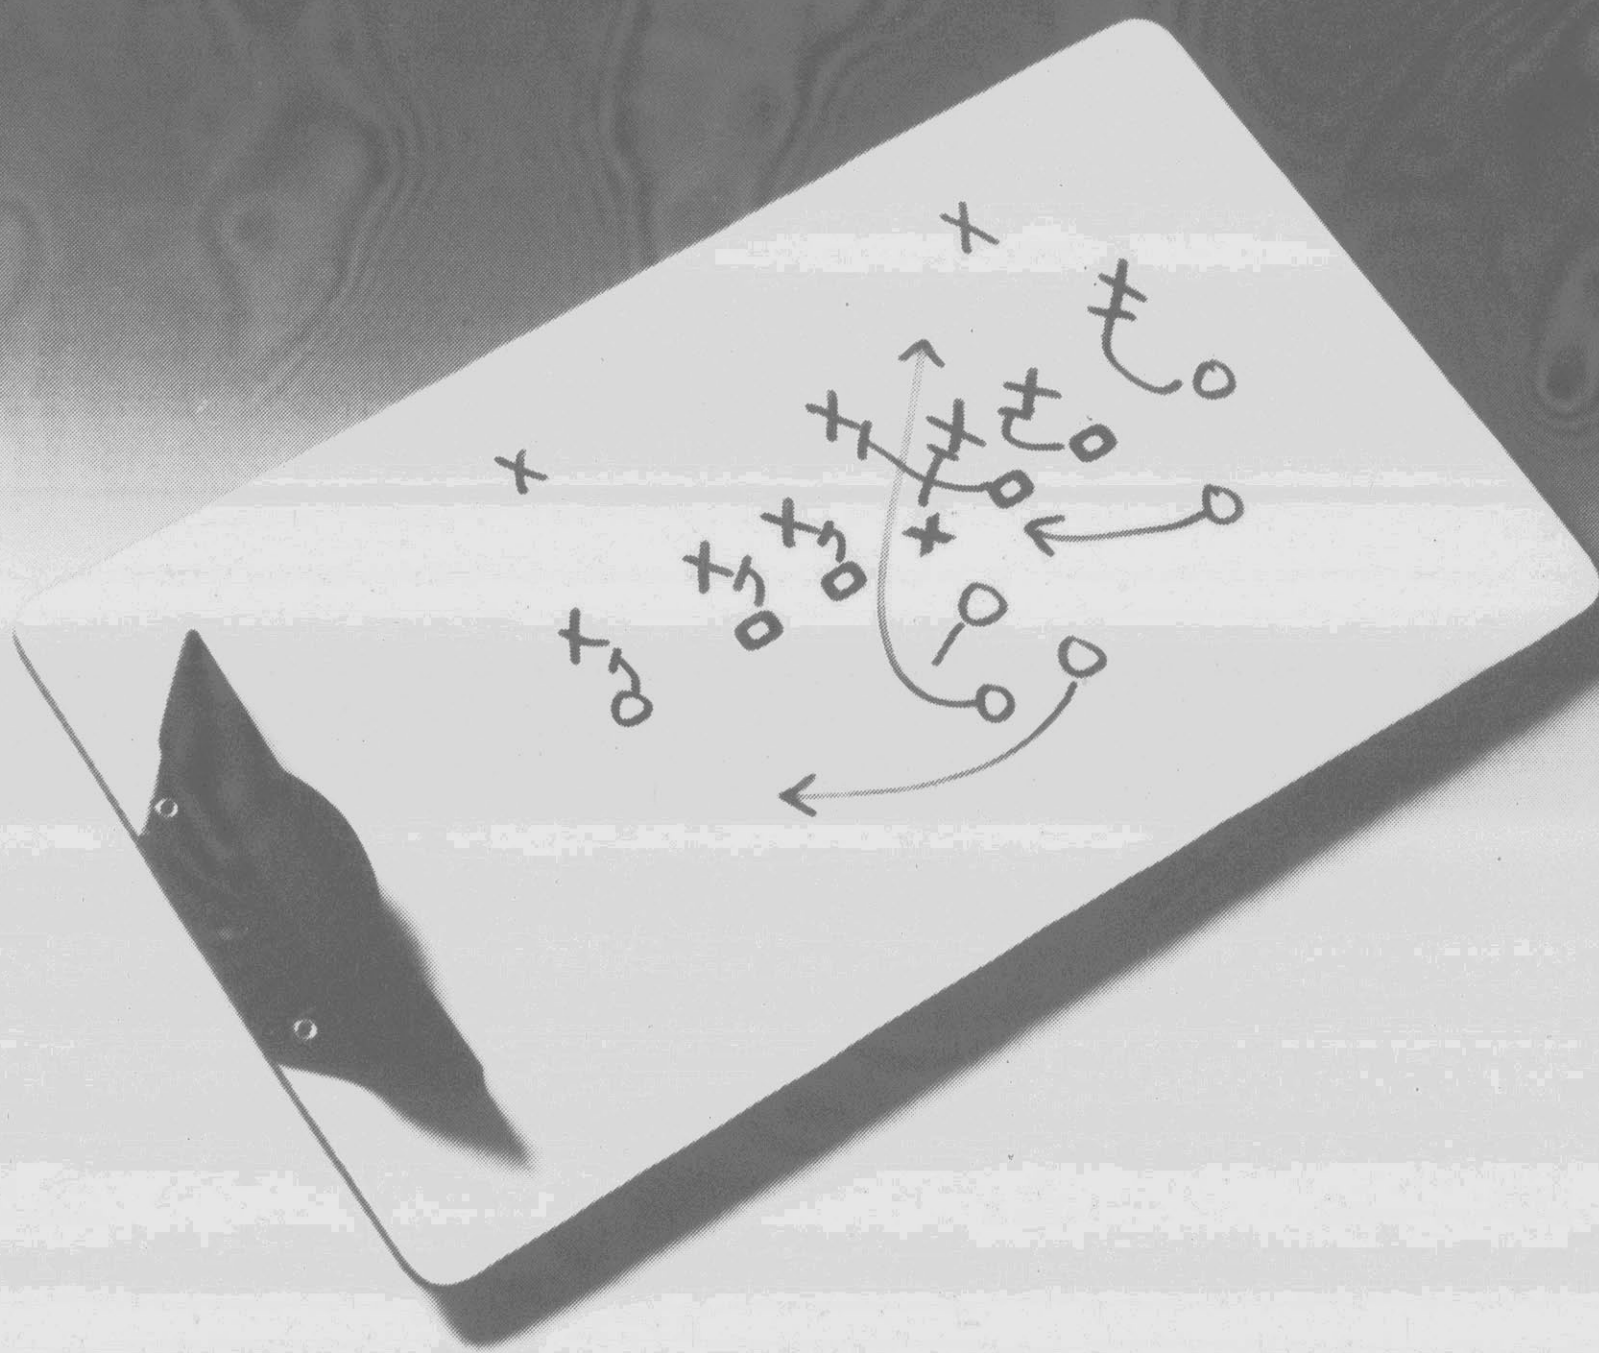

Whether you are remodeling or buying a new home, you can get a CASH BACK Rebate ranging from $75.00 to $400.00 per piece of equipment. The amount depends on the type and efficiency of the equipment you select.

This popular program has been extended through December 31, 1989, so if you'd like a free information packet on a CASH BACK Rebate, please call Greenville Utilities Energy Services Office at 752-7166.

This program is funded by the North Carolina Department of Commerce, Energy Division, from money made available through Exxon Oil overcharges.

All In All, It Was An Elegant Day For Hunting

By Angus Phillips
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

JONESPORT, Maine — The temperature was 10 degrees and a brisk breeze bore down from the Northwest, ancestral home of North American frigidty.

Bracing weather, but if you kept your gloves on, your head buried in the hood of your jacket and your back to the wind, it was sufferable. There even were hints that once the sun came up, it might heat right up to the upper teens. Hoo-boy!

Capt. Barna B. Norton had drained the overnight antifreeze from his 36-foot workboat, Chief, and the V-8 was now a-rumbling. A kerosene heater kept the cabin cozy.

Outside, in the dark jumble of decoys, dogs, guns and gear in the cockpit, John Marshall, his wife, Anne, and I greeted the final member of our party, Mike Leonard, who came scurrying down the gangplank, scanned the foreboding sky, the whitecaps on the water and our huddled visages and remarked:

"Hmmm. Nice day for it."
I took Marshall aside. "Is this guy okay?"

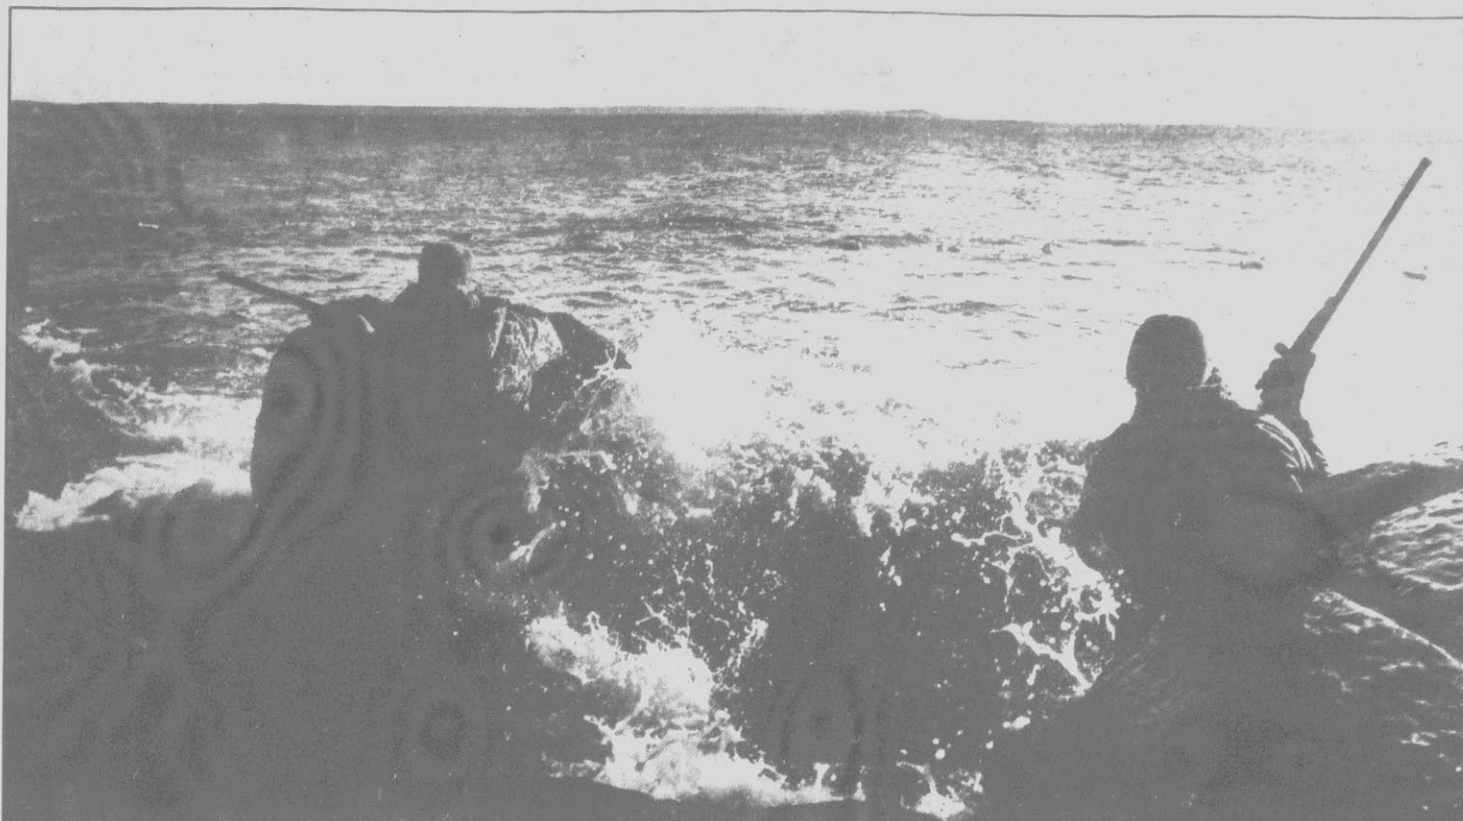

"Oh, he means it," he replied. "And he's right, it is a nice day. Around here in December, you have to think about what could be."

I was thinking more about what had been. The only other time I'd hunted with Marshall was in Australia, somewhere in the western desert next to the only bit of fresh water in 100 miles. It was about 98 degrees, duck season had just opened, birds were plentiful and we were embarking on an experience he later characterized as "elegant." T-shirt ducking, I'd call it, and it was awfully nice.

Now came the flip side and Marshall, Olympic sailing bronze medalist, veteran of four America's Cups as Dennis Conner's right-hand man, president of the prestigious Hinckley Yacht Co. and duck-nut extraordinaire, was in his element.

"The thing about John," said Norton, "is he loves mud. And ice. And anything dangerous."

Marshall, in fact, was so

Washington Post/Angus Phillips

John Marshall, left, and Mike Leonard ignore the December surf as they scan for eider ducks off the coast of Maine thoroughly hopped up about this trip he'd abandoned a meeting of the new America's Cup Class Association in San Diego and flown cross-country to get back for it. The last 300 miles were in his own small plane after an overnight redeye on commercial jet. "Trips like that," he said on arriving, "you just put it on automatic pilot and hope you wake up somewhere over Maine."

Now, we were somewhere alongside Maine and moving away. The rocky coast and dim outlines of Jonesport were receding as Chief breasted the swells at the mouth of Pleasant Bay. Our objective was a granite ledge where the sea swells bashed away and where eider ducks fed on a rising tide.

"Everything here is by the tides," said Marshall. With a 13-foot reach, the tide variously exposes and covers waterfowl feeding areas. If you know where certain ducks feed on certain tides, you can intercept them. That was Norton's job, and he did it well.

At Batson's Ledge, he eased the throttle and we peered through the icicles on the windshield at flocks of eiders buzzing close to the water in classic sea duck style.

Big, beautiful ducks they were, heavily plumed for the winter and shot over so infrequently they were not too wary at all.

Norton's son, John, loaded up the outboard skiff. He, Marshall and Leonard banged through the swells to the edge of the ledge, where they set out decoys in two strings. The skiff came back for Anne and me.

We found the men and the Marshall's retriever, Magic, hunkered in deep notches in the craggy granite. The wind whistled in from behind, but here in the lee it was tolerable, and with the sun in our faces, downright pleasant.

I noticed a decoy had flipped over and hollered at John Norton to fix it before he left. He waved and shouted comforting words: "It ain't going to matter!"

HOO-BOY!

And it didn't. In these turbulent conditions, the eiders were in a mood to move. Hundreds and hundreds flew around us, mostly out of range, but from time to time three or four spied the decoys and rolled in for a closer look. That was a mistake. And when they fell, Magic braved the icy swells to claim them.

The action was so steady I grew transfixed, inching closer and closer to the edge. I was thus in as wrong a place as could be when a great swell rolled in unannounced from Portugal, bashed the side of the rock and sent up a wall of green water that struck me face-on and ran down the insides of my waders like an icy waterfall.

HOO-BOY!

Then the tide was full and the eider flights slowed. John Norton sped over to urge us to try a high-water spot for black ducks. Off we went on a five-mile journey, at the end of which a flock of 150 black ducks lit out of a protected cove as we neared.

We set a couple of dozen decoys, hunkered down again and finished up what Australians call a "bottle day" (so nice you want to put it in a bottle and save it). The black ducks came back steadily, in twos and threes, which is all a waterfowler dreams of.

Since you're only allowed one black duck a day per person, it added up to dinner, which is what we made of it. And a marvelous dinner it was.

"So," asked Marshall, picking his teeth and just about bursting his buttons, "what did you think of that?"

"Elegant," said I. "And a nice day for it, too."

Old Pete Was Guide's Only Hope Of Survival

By Angus Phillips
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

JONESPORT, Maine — Capt. Barna B. Norton has seen some worrisome times in a half-century working Maine's coast. Perils lie everywhere — in the fierce tides, rocks, fog and icy water.

If you doubt it, just read the instructions in case of fire aboard his workboat, Chief.

"Shout 'Fire!'" they say. "Stop the boat. Get extinguishers and stream at the base of the fire. Get pails of water. Call the Coast Guard. Call all boats. Get lifejackets. Fight the fire like a madman. Don't give up! You will freeze to death in the water!"

Not that Norton needs reminders. He's come close to feeling the sting of icy water, and lived to tell the tale.

His summer business is running birdwatchers to Machias Seal Island, 10 miles off, to view rare puffins. In fall and winter, he takes gunners to hunt ducks near the granite islands that poke out of the sea.

There are two types of these ledges — ones that "cover" and ones that don't. Those that cover are submerged by the tide at high water. If you hunt one, you'd better be ready to get off when the tide is "coming," as Mainers put it.

Norton's tale centers around Shootin' Rocks off the mouth of Pleasant Bay, where he was gunning years ago with a couple of sports he carried regularly — Don Gates and Dr. Niles Perkins.

That day, they anchored the big boat well off and rowed a skiff in to set the decoys, he said. It was October, a pleasant day in a pleasant

Pistol-Totin' Librarian A Bail Bondsman, Too

By Charles Hillinger
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

DOWNIEVILLE, Calif. — Tom McIntosh is Sierra County's pistol-packing librarian. He carries a gun when he moonlights as the county's only bail bondsman.

McIntosh, 58, is a mild-mannered man under ordinary circumstances, and he is known affectionately to everyone in California's second-smallest county (population 3,200) as "Mr. Mac." He runs the county's only public library out of a room he built over his garage. He used to keep the books in his living room.

And, in fact, Mr. Mac is far more comfortable with books than with pistols. He only carries a gun when on the trail of those who have skipped town after he has posted bail for them.

"When that happens, I chase them down. Otherwise, I'm liable for their bail. It has taken me as long as three weeks to find one guy who skipped. But I haven't lost one yet," said McIntosh, knocking on wood.

"Being a bail bondsman can be a dangerous job. You have to be armed when dealing with desperadoes. I carry a gun to capture them."

His income as a bail bondsman, he said, is about $3,600 a year, or a little more than double the $1,536 a year the retired high school principal makes for running the library.

A sign outside his home proclaims: "McIntosh Library, Thurs. 10-8."

"That's when the library is officially open: Thursdays, 10 in the morning to 8 at night, but in fact, it is open whenever anybody wants it to be," McIntosh said.

Patrons phone him when they want to borrow or return books or magazines. They wave him down on the street. They come to the library all hours of the day and night, seven days a week.

The library overlooks Downieville, (population 350) on a hill reached by a steep one-way street.

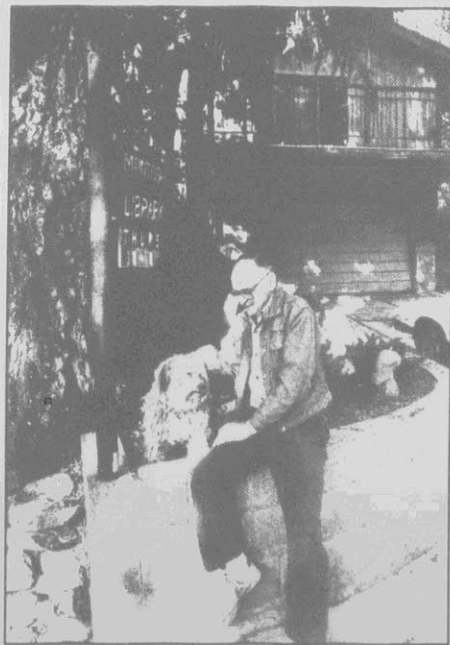

"Some of the older folks and others can't make it up the hill, so they call me and tell me what books they want and I deliver them. The town isn't that big," McIntosh said.

There are 2,000 books in the library, all the property of Plumas County, the next county to the north. Three times a year McIntosh gets 200 books from the Plumas County Library and returns 200 books "that have been read or nobody wants to read."

If someone keeps a book longer than three or four weeks, Mr. Mac reminds him that the book is overdue. "Sometimes they forget. We have no late charges; no money exchanges hands in this library," he noted.

The Dewey Decimal System is not in evidence here. Books are stacked and marked with symbols on the covers, such as a skull for mysteries, a cowboy for Westerns or an atom for science.

McIntosh was a math teacher and high school principal until he retired nine years ago "because I am a diabetic and my sugar shot sky-high from daily confrontations." So he and his wife, Olive, who works in the county re-order's office, moved to this small town for peace and quiet.

McIntosh believes that he may be the only librarian-bail bondsman in America. "There was no bail bondsman in Sierra County. So, five years ago, I took that on as well as 'librarian,'" he said.

He also does title searches and auctions property. He even ran a portable sawmill for awhile.

"You live in a small town where work is hard to come by, and you become a jack-of-all-trades to survive," said the librarian-bail bondsman-title searcher-auctioneer.

January 24 Deadline For Travel Course

GOLDSBORO — January 24 is the deadline for receipt of application at Wayne Community College for its new study-travel course. The course involves travel to London and surrounding areas to see and study British culture.

Class auditing, extended round-trip reservations and a reduced price for the travel are part of the travel package. Dates of the trip are May 27 through June 4, with the alternative of extending the visit and returning later at the same group rate airfare. The price of the trip for the travel portion of the course is $1,050 for airfare, coach service, tours, lodging and special activities. For more details, call the college at 735-5151.

Regular Weatherspoon gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesdays through Fridays and 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. weekends. Admission is free.

State Writer's Network Opens New Home Sunday

CARRBORO — Writers, editors and publishers from across North Carolina will gather at 2 p.m. Sunday at White Cross School to mark the official opening of the home of the North Carolina Writers' Network.

A brick elementary school built in the 1930s, White Cross School, is seven miles west of Chapel Hill on N.C. 54. It is being renovated into a multi-purpose arts center by White Cross Partnership, Carrboro.

Marsha Warren, executive director for the network, has announced the receipt of two grants for the center — one for $5,000 from the Kathleen Price, and Joseph M. Bryan Family Foundation; another for $2,000 from Burroughs Wellcome Co., to help establish the new Resources Center for North Carolina writers.

Ms. Warren said the new home for the network is an important development for North Carolina writers not only because of the increased services it can provide them, but also "because it will help us gain recognition as a literary center by the National Endowment for the Arts."

The endowment supports seven literary centers around the United States, but none is in the Southeast — and none is statewide. The centers support the development of emerging writers, provide marketing services and schedule readings for established writers. Additionally, they conduct a full-range program of competitions,

It Is Perfectly Healthy To Need Time Alone

By Theasa Tuohy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OXFORD, England (AP) — If togetherness is getting you down you have an ally in a British psychiatrist who says solitude is more than just OK.

"It is a fault of my profession that people have been made to feel guilty" if they enjoy time alone, said Anthony Storr, former Oxford University lecturer in psychiatry and author of "Solitude: A Return to the Self."

"The whole emphasis in social work and psychotherapy is all to do with interpersonal relations," Storr said in a recent interview.

"I'm not saying people can do without personal relationships. I'm saying it's not pathological" to spend hours alone in some activity. "A great many people on phone-in programs in America seemed to find it rather a relief," said Storr, whose book, published by MacMillan Inc., was No. 6 for 1987 on The Washington Post non-fiction best-seller list.

On "Jan Black's Journal," a radio call-in show on KCBS in San Francisco, many callers "thought of themselves as weird — because we are such a social society — but they had a desire or need to spend time by themselves. It gave them a certain sense of relief that someone with his credentials said it's OK," said producer Charlotte Lantz.

"I remember one caller in particular, a woman, who gave a big kind of sigh of relief, after all the pressure to be with people," said Cordelia Maloney, producer of "Extension 720," a call-in show on WGN radio in Chicago.

"Particularly in the U.S., Canada and Western Europe there is a cultural bias that people who want to be alone have something wrong with them. That it's a sign of danger, especially in a kid. But people do, in fact, need time to be alone," said psychology professor Peter Suedfeld, dean of the Graduate Faculty at the University of British Columbia in Canada.

In the 1970s, Suedfeld studied prisoners in solitary confinement and found that generally "what they object to is not being alone, but to harassment of guards, cold food, things like that." Some even "popped a guard in the nose" to get put into solitary when "the pressures of everyday conditions in the prison got to be too much for them," he said.

"We have a social setup," said Storr, "that makes people feel guilty if they want to go off and read a book. Families say, 'Why do you want to do that?' Some people never have anything by themselves in their lives."

"We need times when we don't have too much input."

And not just input from people, he said. "We've got to a kind of stage where people feel that if they haven't auditory stimulation, something's wrong."

"If they didn't have the radio on, they might have some more interesting thoughts. I always walk out of shops if there is music going on."

People's fear of being without sounds comes from fear of thoughts, Storr said. "They don't want to face what they really feel, they want to put out of their minds anything that's upsetting."

Dr. Arnold Modell, a clinical professor of psychiatry at Harvard University, said, "People need to maintain an area of themselves that does not communicate with other people. That hasn't been known as a basic human need, even among psychoanalysts. But most artists know this to be true. People need to be within their own world, yet maintaining contact with other people." Asked why many readers seem to react with such relief toward "Solitude," Dr. Arnold Richards, a New York Psychoanalytic Society spokesman, said people often confuse life with psychoanalytic exploration of relationships.

"Psychoanalytic theory does not tell people how to live their lives," said Richards, a practicing psychoanalyst in New York City.

"It's been a fashion for many years to think that happiness depends on personal relationships," said Storr. "I'm not a zealous person who is trying to convince everybody not to have a relationship. I just want to give a little push on the pendulum the other way."

readings, and classes, bring in nationally-known writers, and act as literary information centers for their areas.

"North Carolina is an ideal place for such a center," said Ms. Warren. "This state is recognized as a rich breeding ground for writers, many of whom enjoy national and even international reputations. We hope to be the first statewide center the NEA supports."

During its first two years, the network was housed in temporary space provided by the Durham Arts Council. It later moved to a transition office in Chapel Hill to await funding for the appropriate permanent space.

The North Carolina Writers' Network, now in its fourth year, has 950 members and is the first and largest statewide organization of writers in the United States.

For details on services and for membership in the network, interested writers are to write to: N.C. Writers' Network, P.O. Box 954, Carrboro, N.C., 27510 or to call 967-9540.

time of year, but the water already was cold enough to kill.

The eider shooting was good, Norton recalled. At one point, a big flock of the heavily feathered birds from the Arctic rolled in in perfect formation and the men knocked down several.

They sent Norton's 106-pound Labrador retriever, Pete, to pick up the downed ducks and launched the skiff to help.

As they rowed back, Norton said, another flock of eiders came around the point. The men scurried into position, hoping for a shot, but no one took time to make the skiff fast.

When Norton glanced over, it was already 50 yards out to sea, headed downwind and down tide quickly.

It was too far to swim, he said, "and I can't swim, anyway." Moreover, "The tide was coming and that rock covers," he said. "The sea sweeps right over it. It made for a kind of an empty feeling in your gut."

Norton looked around for some tool of rescue. He scanned the gear they had brought: Guns, decoys, bags and baggage. All useless. Then he spied Pete.

"John (Norton's son) was just a boy then," he said, "and in the summers we were teaching him to row. We always kept a line on the bow in case he went too far. We'd send Pete after him. Pete would take the line in his mouth and tow him back to shore."

Norton looked at the skiff spinning away. It was the same one young John rowed in the summer. The bow line was still in place. He looked at his dog. It was a longshot, but the only shot.

"Pete," he said, "go get John." The Lab made a crashing dive and headed out. It was a long haul, Norton said, dragging the big wooden boat back to the island against wind and tide, but Pete had three frightened men urging him on, and by straining and heaving, he made it, and in the process saved their lives.

A few years later, Gates died when a canoe he was paddling at night capsized and he couldn't make it to the lake shore, Norton said. Then Perkins capsized a canoe in the Miramichi River and perished when he was unable to claw onto the bank because the rocks were covered with ice.

Pete died of old age. And Norton? "Still going," said the captain with a grin, "like white lightning."

 The saddest words heard over the bridge table are the plaintive: "But partner, I had an opening bid!"

That usually means that someone went for a large penalty—and it usually should have been avoided.

The key to making an overall, especially at the two-level, is suit quality. A six-card suit headed by 100 honors and nothing else is better than a 15-point hand with a ragged suit. If you want to see why, take a look at what happened to poor South on this hand.

South's two-heart overall seemed innocent enough—that is, until West doubled. East won the spade opening lead with the king, cashed the king of diamonds and then continued with ace of spades and another. West ruffed and returned a diamond, allowing East to win two tricks with the jack and ace.

East exited with a trump and West captured declarer's nine with the ten. He returned a club to declarer's king. After cashing the ace of clubs, declarer was forced to lead a trump. He chose the jack, taken by West's queen.

Back came the queen of clubs, forcing declarer to ruff. He then had to lead away from his king-seven into West's ace-eight tenace. That meant that declarer scored only three tricks, for a set of 1,400 points.

"But partner, I had 13 points," cried South. North gravely leaned over and changed South's score to minus 1,387.

Why Cabbage Is Purple

By Jordan Markowski

Once there was an old man who lived in the woods 5 million miles from the nearest town. People say he moved there when his wife died because he was so sad and wanted to be alone. Well, since he lived 5 million miles from the nearest town, he couldn't go get food from the grocery store whenever he wanted. So, he grew red cabbage on trees in his backyard. (At this time, red cabbage was red, not purple.)

The only problem was that he hated the color red. Why? Because his wife used to have a gorgeous evening gown which she looked beautiful in, and the color red always reminded him of his wife. He didn't own one thing that was red except, of course, the red cabbage in his backyard.

So he thought about what he could do to change the color of the cabbage. While he was struggling with the problem, the planet Zuron exploded and the chemical fireduz entered the earth's atmosphere. It mixed with the rain in the sky turning it blue. That day when it rained, the blue rain mixed with the red cabbage, turning it purple. The man was so happy that his problem had been solved (Zap! Just like that!) that he went into the red (purple) cabbage business.

Beyond The Sun

By Adeel Kaiser

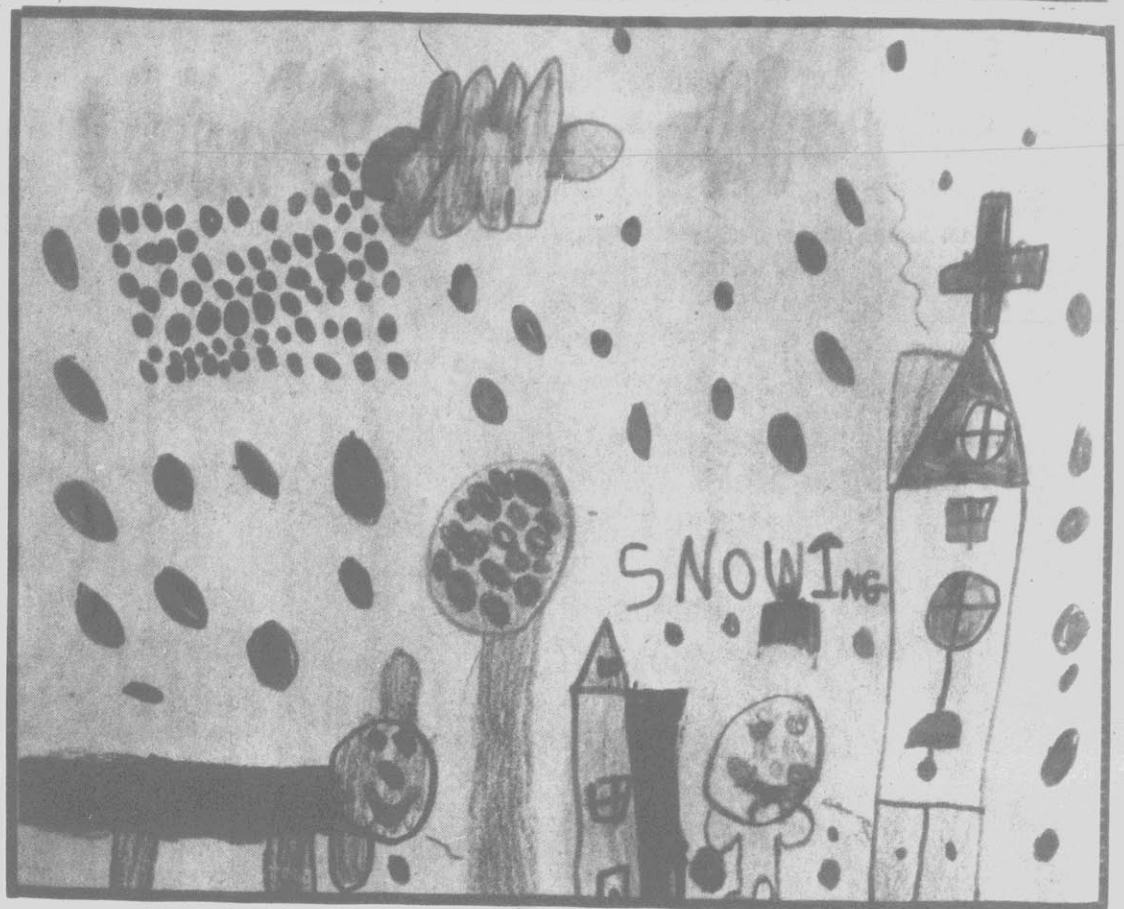

Beyond the sun, beyond the moon lie the lands of the Eleven-kings. Where the Horse-lord of Rohan roam the mighty lands where the Dwarf-lords make their blades of steel.

Where the Eleven-smiths make their mighty armour and shields. Where they gather silver, diamonds and gold from the sea which they cannot behold. From other lands beyond the sea they found diamonds, emeralds and rubbies.

They took back the jewels to their homeland from which they make gold bracelets and bands.

Adeel Kaiser, 11, a student at Wahl-Coates School receives special mention.

My Secret Hiding Place

By Michelle Woloszyn

I don't have a secret hiding place. If I did have one, I'd like one inside and outside. The one inside in case it was raining. The one outside in case I was out there and needed it. The one outside would be in a tree and the branches would be the seat with a back rest. The one inside would be beside my bed. I'd feel good there.

Federal Facts The House

The House of Representatives is often called the "lower house" of Congress. When the early Congress met in Philadelphia the House held its meetings on the first or lower floor. The House is one of the two parts of the Legislative (law making) Branch of the U.S. Government. The other branch of Congress is the Senate. The number of Representatives from each state depends on the population. There can be no more than a total of 435 in the entire House. N.C. has 11 members who represent the state in the House.

Article I or part one of the Constitution gives the requirements and duties of the members of the House who are called Congressman or Representative. Members must be at least 25 years old, a citizen for 7 years and a legal resident of the state which they represent. They are elected for 2 year terms of office and may be reelected time after time. Their salary is over $75,000 a year, plus they receive over $500,000 for expenses and salaries for assistants. They get free office space and like Senators they have legal immunity.

They cannot be sued for making critical remarks while serving in the House of Representatives.

The primary job of Representatives is to introduce possible ideas for new laws and to pass laws with the Senate. Serving on the most powerful committees is very important to Congressmen. It is the committee which has the power to promote or kill a bill. All bills which deal with money must originate or begin in the House of Representatives. Any bill which deals with taxes or with spending must get its start in the House. It is the lower house of Congress which brings charges against officials who may have had improper conduct while in office. The charges are called impeachment. The House also elects a new president if the Electoral College has no winner when it votes in January.

The leader of the House of Representatives is called the Speaker. In case the president or vice-president cannot carry out their duties, the Speaker of the House is next in line to become president of the U.S.

My Chance

By Daniel Reel

This morning I had a chance of getting a deer. The clouds moved in. The fog came in, too. It began to rain. The rifle barrel jammed up. The buck got scared.

He ran away. That day everybody else killed a buck. I was shamed because I didn't get a buck. My truck wouldn't crank. I had to break my wife on the CB to get some help. So the day was bad and I was sad. Too bad!

Daniel Reel, 7, a student at Sam D. Bundy School receives special mention.

SOUP!

Stick-To-Your-Ribs Classic Is January's Favorite Food

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — January is National Soup Month, and there are countless reasons to applaud. Soup is a convenient, fun-to-eat, wholesome and nutritious food.

According to Campbell's Soup Co., Americans enjoy more than 10 billion bowls of soup each year. The reasons for soup's popularity?

— Soup is convenient. It can come from a can, which makes it easy to prepare, or dry from a packet, which makes it a portable dish.

— Soup can be heated in minutes.

— Soup can be kept warm by using a slow cooker, a chafing dish or a soup tureen.

— Soup can be the basis for main and side dishes.

— Soup is a "comfort" food — and, it's nutritious.

Mary Lee Chin of Denver, Colo., a nutritionist, says, "When we think back to our childhood, we remember certain foods we ate when we were sick or stressed that made us feel better."

"Soup is something you can pull back from your childhood when you're not feeling well. It's warm, comforting, easy to swallow — and it has the impact of Mother's love wrapped up in it."

Joel Gurin, co-author of The California Nutrition Book, says many traditional foods, such as soup, "may be some of the best nutritional bargains around."

Gurin says, "It all comes down to a concept known as high nutrient density, which refers to foods that offer a lot of vitamins and minerals for a relatively low number of calories."

A typical serving of most Campbell's soups, for example, has less than 150 calories. Tomato soup is a good source of vitamin C and vegetable soup is a good source of vitamin A. In addition, cream soups made with a full can of milk are a source of calcium.

Some soups can also be a source of dietary fiber. One serving of bean or pea soup, for example, can provide as much dietary fiber as a serving of many bran cereals.

A free booklet, "The Good News... At The Bottom of the Bowl," contains "souper" recipes, menu suggestions and ideas for planning balanced meals. For a free copy, send a stamped, self-addressed, business-size envelope to: "Good News," Box 964, Bensalem, PA 19020.

Soup-And-Salad Bar

A soup-and-salad bar is a great idea for serving hungry crowds. It's an easy meal, and everything can be prepared in advance.

To host a soup-and-salad bar party, prepare a large bowl of crisp salad greens and fill tureens with soup. Arrange mugs, large cups or bowls, soup spoons and paper napkins near the soup.

Provide toppings that are appropriate for both soup and salad, and let your guests create their own culinary masterpieces by adding their own favorite vegetables, cheeses and toppings. Some suggestions: fresh broccoli, cauliflower or ripe tomatoes; Swiss or Cheddar cheeses; hard-cooked eggs, croutons or sunflower seeds; salsa, cooked shrimp or imported olives.

To round out the meal, fill a large basket with baguettes, breadsticks, hard rolls, corn muffins or crackers, or set a warm, crusty loaf of bread on a wooden board and let the guests slice it themselves.

For a free booklet offering soup-and-salad bar recipes, send a stamped, self-addressed, business-size envelope to:

Soup And Etiquette

When soup is served for a luncheon or dinner, Emily Post's "Etiquette" offers the following advice:

— Soup should be the first of six courses. It should be followed by fish, the entree, salad, dessert and coffee. Six is the maximum number of courses for even the most elaborate dinner; and for an informal luncheon, two or three courses are sufficient — soup, entree and dessert.

— Soup at a luncheon is served in two-handled cups. The soup is eaten with a teaspoon, or the cup may be picked up and the soup may be sipped, if it has sufficiently cooled. A clear soup is usually served.

— Sherry is the first wine offered at dinner, and then usually with a soup that contains sherry in the preparation. Sherry should never be offered with cream of chicken soup or vichyssoise, but with turtle or black bean soup, for instance.

— Clear soups are often served in a shallow bowl rather than a cup. When the level of soup is so low that you must lift the bowl to avoid scraping the bottom, lift the near edge with your left hand and tip the bowl away from you. Then spoon the soup away from you.

— Both soup cups and soup bowls should be served with a saucer or plate beneath them. The spoon, when not in use or when the soup is finished, is laid on the saucer underneath.

Amy Vanderbilt, in the "Amy Vanderbilt Complete Book of Etiquette," says soup should always be kept flowing in the opposite direction from one's lap. The soup spoon should be filled from its far side, and soup then poured gently into the mouth with its near side.

Vanderbilt says that if dumplings, vegetables, mushrooms or other garnishes are floating on top, these should be eaten first by using the spoon, before the liquid part of the soup is drunk. If noodles are at the bottom of the bowl, spoon them up before consuming the liquid.

If you take a large spoonful of extremely hot soup, don't spit it out, concludes Vanderbilt. Instead, take a quick drink of water to cool your mouth. If you have burned your mouth, an exception may be made to the rule against drinking with food already in your mouth.

Milk Adds Rich Taste To Low-Fat Cream Soup

As a source of protein, carbohydrates and many important vitamins and minerals, dairy products such as milk, cheese and yogurt have long held a prominent place in the American diet. Milk and other dairy foods are also our major dietary source of calcium.

Yet many dairy products, including whole milk, most cheeses and ice cream, are very high in fat and cholesterol. Cholesterol and fat are both linked to higher rates of heart disease, and fat and many types of cancer are closely linked.

Here are some ideas for including milk nutrition while lowering fat in your diet:

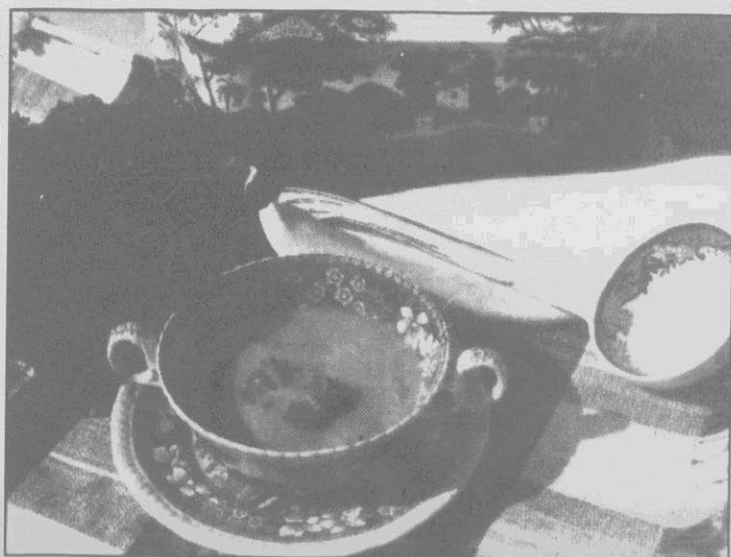

- Use skim or non-fat dry milk in cooking.

- Choose lowfat varieties of milk products, such as lowfat yogurt and cottage cheese, and part-skim or reduced calorie cheeses.

- Save ice cream and high fat cheese for special occasions and limit portion sizes.

- Use lemon juice and seasonings on vegetables instead of butter which gets 99 percent of its calories from fat.

- Check ingredient labels on dairy substitutes like whipped toppings, non-dairy creamers, non-dairy

Evaporated skim milk used in Cream of Broccoli soup frozen desserts and sour cream substitutes which may contain high levels of fat, even though they are low cholesterol.

Here's a recipe that features milk, but is kept low fat, yet rich tasting, by using evaporated skim milk. Try this delicious, creamy soup on a cold winter's day.

CREAM OF BROCCOLI SOUP

- 1 lb. broccoli, fresh or frozen
- 1 cup onion, chopped
- 1/4 tsp. white pepper
- 1 tsp. flour
- 1 tsp. basil (optional)
- 1 1/2 cups water
- 1 cube or tsp. low-sodium chicken bouillon
- 1 13-oz. can evaporated skim milk

The broccoli should be washed, trimmed, broken into small pieces and placed in a medium saucepan. Add the remaining ingredients, except the milk, to the broccoli. Cover, bring to a boil, then reduce heat and simmer the ingredients until tender, about 10 to 15 minutes.

Remove some florets, and set aside for garnish. Place the rest of the saucepan contents in a blender and puree until smooth. Return the mixture to the saucepan, stir in the evaporated milk and heat to serving temperature (do not boil). Garnish the servings with the set aside broccoli florets.

This recipe yields 4 one-cup servings, with a fat content of 1 gram and 126 calories per serving.

Soups, Stews Are Quick Meals For Hectic Days

On busy days when time is short, there's still time for a homemade meal. Great-tasting soups and stews are easy when you combine pantry staples and seasonings with a few fresh ingredients. These 25-minute recipes begin with convenient canned beans, which provide hearty, satisfying taste, and the nutritional bonus of protein, iron, calcium and fiber.

A nourishing soup with lively flavors, Vegetable Bean Soup teams versatile canned pork and beans with a variety of family favorite vegetables and seasonings. Ingredients can be combined in minutes, and the soup requires little attention from the cook as it simmers. One-dish preparation and serving means fast clean-up, too!

A single-skillet supper, Beans and Sausage Italiano features the zesty taste and inviting aromas of Italian sausage, tomato sauce, fresh vegetables and kidney beans. A quick 15-minute simmer is all that's needed to mix and mingle the savory flavors.

Aim For Four Daily Servings Of Fruit, Vegetables

Q. I can't always afford fresh vegetables. Are canned vegetables really that bad? A.M., Greenville.

A. A good dietary goal for most of us this year would be to eat more fruits and vegetables. We should aim for four servings per day. Today, the actual difference in nutrients in most canned and fresh vegetables are too small to mean much for most of us nutritionally. Most produce is canned within three to six hours of being harvested and so nutrients are preserved. Processors keep improving their methods. As a result, fewer and fewer nutrients are lost. Canned vegetables can, on occasion, actually have more retained vitamins than fresh produce. That happens when fresh produce has not been handled well on its way from field to the grocery store.

Some folks think that all canned foods have additives or preservatives. But, the truth is that the heat sterilization process and shutting of air out of the containers preserves the food. You do have to read labels though, especially if you are a salt sensitive person with high blood pressure. Many canned vegetables still have added salt. Although, many food companies are reducing or cutting out the salt. Buy those vegetables without salt or wash the vegetables before using. Oh yes, the canned vegetables often have less dietary fiber than fresh vegetables (if they are cooked only lightly before eating). If you eat canned vegetables, you may want to eat more high fiber.

Kathy Kolasa

Ph.D., ECU Dept. Family Medicine

Q. I read in the paper that selenium in our food is dangerously high. We have been taking selenium tablets for several years. Should we stop? Ms. W.M., Greenville.

A. I missed the article, but we dug it out to see what was said. First, the article referred to the dangers of selenium in food in the western part of our country. I did some research and could not find anyone who thought the data generally applied to eastern North Carolina. Our soils are low in selenium. I can't tell you to take or not to take supplements. I have urged our readers to discuss vitamin or mineral supplementation with your family doctor, especially if you are supplementing with individual nutrients, like selenium. You need to determine if your diet is deficient in that nutrient and if it puts you at risk for poor health. If you take in too little or too much of many nutrients, there can be dangers.

I did talk with Dr. Robert Crouse from ECU School of Medicine. Crouse trained as a dermatologist and has had a lifelong interest in nutrition. He has followed the studies on selenium supplementation to prevent cancer. We still don't know enough about selenium to set a Recommended Dietary Allowance like we have for many other nutrients. But there are recommendations for safe and adequate intakes. Those recommendations are that dietary intakes should be least 0.05 milligrams. Most people routinely get this amount in their food. Safe intakes should not exceed 0.2 milligrams without talking with your doctor. Symptoms of too much selenium are hair loss and chapping, cracking skin. Crouse and I agreed that low dose supplementation will probably cause no harm. But, at the time, there are not conclusive data to say selenium supplementation will prevent cancer.

Labeling May Be Dominant Food Issue Of '80s

By Charlyne Varkonyi
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Those same high-tech factors that put the average guy in a technological tizzy are also hitting the regulators at the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

You cannot program your VCR without a Ph.D. in electronics, but you are not alone. FDA officials are scurrying to sift through the maze of '80s claims and biotechnological innovations — from cereals that promise to prevent cancer to disguised proteins that trick the tongue into tasting fat instead of protein.

How far should food companies be allowed to go in their diet and disease claims? What effect will mergers and acquisitions of food companies have on what we eat? How safe is safe enough? And what is really wrong with food labels?

Frank E. Young, FDA commissioner, predicts that food labels will be the dominant food issue of the late 1980s. He gave the keynote speech recently at the Food Safety and Nutrition Update conference sponsored by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the FDA at the National Press Club here. The annual conference is open to magazines, newspapers, industry and government representatives.

Consumer groups have been complaining that current food labeling regulations are inadequate. Products that claim they contain "no cholesterol" or are "low in cholesterol" may actually be high in saturated fat. The word "lite" or "light" on a label is no guarantee the product is low-cal; it may only be light in color, texture and taste. Cereals that boast they are high in fiber may also be high in fat or sugar.

"Food labels as they are today are a relic," he said. What we have on the can today is what we agreed to in 1968, he added later in his speech.

One of the biggest problems the FDA has faced with food labels is the diet-disease claims, an issue that first surfaced in 1984 when Kellogg's linked the consumption of its All-Bran cereal with reduction in cancer. Traditionally, if a product made claims of treatment or cure of a disease it was considered a drug and had to go through premarket clearance.

Strict interpretation of the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act would mean the Kellogg's All-Bran cereal could be placed in the "misbranded" category — foods with false or misleading labeling that could be seized or enjoined by the court until the labeling is changed. The FDA also could have reclassified the cereal as a drug, pulling it from the market until the safety and effectiveness is proven. Instead, the agency allowed the labeling to continue and examined what could be done with future health claims for foods.

"We could have labeled Kellogg's All-Bran as a new drug and asked for a 100,000-page New Drug Application, but that wouldn't even pass the hee-haw test here within the (Capital) Beltway," Young said.

In August 1987, the FDA proposed a regulation governing food labeling and received 600 comments. Hearings were held last December and the final draft was submitted recently to the Office of Management and Budget for review.

Although FDA officials will not divulge too many details of the regulation, The New York Times recently reported that critics say the new rule leaves loopholes that will permit companies to make unsubstantiated health claims.

"For example, a high-sodium, high-fiber soup might have a label stating that fiber reduces the risk of cancer," the article states. "But the label will not have to say that the soup contains a significant amount of sodium, which may contribute to hypertension. Consumers will have to refer to the consumer guide to learn about the connection between high sodium consumption and hypertension."

During another part of the seminar, F. Edward Scarborough, deputy director of FDA's Office of Nutrition and Food Sciences, said that the regulation calls for a model label statement. The statement includes a short description of the scientific basis for the claim, the amount of the food component, such as fiber or calcium, in the food, a reference to the consumer health message summary and a statement directing attention to consumer information on the package.

Scarborough said that the five topics addressed on the labels include: lipids and heart disease, fats and cancer, fiber and cancer, sodium and hypertension and calcium and osteoporosis.

The FDA is also in the final stages of drafting a regulation on cholesterol content labeling and terms such as "cholesterol free" and "low cholesterol."

Under current FDA regulations, package labels are required to list only the several oils the product may contain, but consumer groups have supported legislation to require specific disclosure if the product contains tropical oils, such as coconut and palm oil. These oils are high in saturated fat and should be avoided by those with heart problems. The bill was defeated and Scarborough sees no change in sight.

"FDA continues to maintain that singling out oils is unlikely to reduce coronary heart disease," he said.

Scarborough added that it is too early to recommend intake of fiber to reduce cancer risk and Omega III fish oils to reduce risk of heart attack because claims should not be based on preliminary data.

Labeling is just one of the many issues for the upcoming years. Commissioner Young said that the FDA also will be addressing the following:

On mergers and divestitures: "I think we are going to see a substantial loss in research and quality control."

On growing food imports: "I was brought up with the idea that the U.S. was the breadbasket of the world. ... Our own data shows an increasing number of imports under FDA authority, reflecting the globalization of the food supply." Because of the emphasis on gourmet items, imports — such as mustards, exotic fruits and vegetables and unusual fish — have increased 300 times since the early 1970s.

Soviet Chefs Visit U.S. For Cook's Tour Of Nation

By Mary MacVean
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Three Soviet chefs traveled 12,000 miles in 10 days to sample everything American from catfish to ketchup, supermarkets to 7-Elevens on a trip organized by a Cajun chef who hopes to improve the culinary climate between the two countries.

John Folse, chef at Lafitte's Landing Restaurant near Donaldsonville, La., opened an outpost of his restaurant in Moscow during the superpower summit in May. He also began arrangements for the Soviets chefs' visit to this country.

"What did we get out of it? First and foremost, we got an opportunity to showcase Soviet cuisine in the United States, a country that knew very little of what Soviet cooking was all about," Folse said in a telephone interview.

"Second of all, we wanted to showcase to the Soviet chefs what was available to the American public and to the restaurant chef, not only what we could buy, but how it was packaged and processed," he said.

Among the accomplishments, he said, was the signing at the American Culinary Federation headquarters in St. Augustine, Fla., of a contract that could lead to the Soviets joining the World Association of Cooks Society, which has more than 1.5 million members in 43 countries. Before the Soviets become members, the organization, based in West Germany, must approve the application.

The Soviet delegation — three chefs, four folk musicians, an interpreter and the head of the Soviet Chamber of Commerce and Industry — also stopped at the White House kitchens, Bourbon Street in New Orleans, the Russian Tea Room in New York City and a sprawling supermarket. They baked a cake for Mickey Mouse's 60th birthday celebration at Walt Disney World in Florida.

"I think they were very surprised that we got a chance to go into the White House, that three Soviet chefs got into the home of the president of the United States," Folse said.

And at the supermarket, "at first, they thought the store had to be a store that only the government or the hierarchy could shop in and when they were finally made to realize that this was just a common everyday occurrence, they said, 'Why so much food and no lines?'" Folse said.

The group also stopped at a catfish farm and processing plant in Indianola, Miss. In Baton Rouge, La., they ate at a cafeteria and toured a hospital kitchen.

In New York City, at a restaurant trade show, they prepared three regional dishes: sauteed chicken with prunes and apples, served with a sweet sauce and carrots; salmon with a sauce of tomatoes and olives; and a rolled beef stuffed with wild mushrooms, poached in broth and thickened with roux.

That night, at a cocktail party at the famed Russian Tea Room, the Soviet chefs took a look at the work in the kitchen. Generally they found the food authentic, Folse said, but offered some tips on how to roll a chicken Kiev.

The Soviets also saw the Culinary Institute of America in Hyde Park, N.Y., one of the country's top cooking schools; demonstrated Soviet cooking in Cincinnati at a benefit to raise money to fight hunger; and sampled convenience shopping at a 7-Eleven store.

All three Soviet chefs work in Moscow, and were selected for the trip through a culinary competition, Folse said.

"They are a lot like we were 20 years ago," he said. "Quality cuisine has not been important until a couple of years ago, with glasnost."

Vladimir Vokhmin, head of the Soviet Chamber of Commerce and Industry, said during the stop in Baton Rouge, La., "Our dream is to organize a pure Russian restaurant" in the United States.

"One of the reasons they were here is to get a reaction to Soviet food," Folse said. "They left here with a great positive attitude about opening a Russian restaurant here" with Soviet and American partners.

"I think we will, because of this trip, see a couple of Russian or Soviet restaurants open in New York, New Orleans or Los Angeles," said Folse, who plans to keep in touch with the Soviets.

New Vending Machine Fits On Top Of Counter

By Daniel P. Puzo
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

There will be no escaping soft drinks if the Coca-Cola Co. is successful with its latest venture: miniaturized vending machines small enough to fit on top any available counter space.

About the size of the family television set, the new dispenser is trademarked as BreakMate, a joint venture between Coke and Bosch-Siemens of West Germany.

The move into minivending was needed, according to one company official, in order to reach the "last remaining dry channel," or about 20 million disenfranchised people who work in offices not large enough to support the typically cumbersome soda machine.

This device, however, now puts the likes of Classic Coke and the company's other brands virtually within arm's reach.

In addition to the convenience of size, the system needs only an electrical outlet and access to a water source in order to provide three different carbonated beverages. The design is meant to rest snugly alongside the office coffee maker. The recommended positioning underlines Coke's ongoing efforts to wrest daytime sales away from the competition.

"Coffee is a morning beverage, but soft drinks are an all-day option," said Ira L. Gleser, a Coca-Cola spokesman. "And soft drinks are now the beverage of choice in America with people consuming about 45 gallons per capita annually. That's more than even tap water. ... And Coke is the nation's No. 1 soft drink."

Coca-Cola has experimented with a compact vending machine, in one form or another, since 1973. But it was not until Bosch-Siemens developed BreakMate in 1983 that the concept became viable. The intervening years were spent adapting the appliance to Coke's specifications and then testing it in day-to-day settings.

"This is the largest development project we have ever undertaken," said W. Andrew Harvill of Coke's fountain sales department.

Harvill further maintains that BreakMate marks a milestone in the company's history on par with introductions such as the soda fountain in 1886 and the 1899 debut of Coke in bottles. All three innovations, he maintains, greatly expanded distribution of the soft drink.

"If you make Coke available," he said, "then people will drink it."

And corporate response to the unit seems to support Harvill's claim. In the past year, 20,000 BreakMates have been installed nationwide. Projections call for 40,000 more such placements next year.

Within a decade, the company expects the systems to generate between 1 percent and 2 percent of the soft drink giant's sales, or the equivalent of 20 million gallons of Coca-Cola concentrate each year.

The machines are designed to be user-friendly, and the only regular maintenance required is the replacement of empty concentrate containers that house the syrup needed to make Coca-Cola and all other soft drinks. Canisters of carbon-dioxide gas, the source of carbonation, also need to be refilled, but on a less frequent basis.

Maintenance aside, BreakMate is financially attractive because the machines are loaned free of charge to customers by its local distributor.

Another feature of BreakMate is a compact refrigeration unit that ensures the drinks will be dispensed chilled; an important aspect because the unit does not provide ice as is the case with larger vending machines.

And each customer determines whether the system offers free drinks or requires coin payment. The per cup cost is adjustable depending on a company's view of subsidized beverages for employees.

Fudge Is Fun, But It's Definitely Sinful

By Jonathan Susskind
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

There is no fudging the facts. Fudge is sweet. Fudge is heavy. Fudge is not one of your high-fiber, multivitamin, oat bran sorts of confections.

Go ask a candy-maker. "Is there a low-calorie fudge?"

"Yes," says one maker. "Instead of eating a pound you eat a half a pound. Instead of a half a pound you eat a quarter-pound."

And fudge is fun, too. And it is not hard to make from scratch, a task that, with adult supervision, might keep the kids busy for a while.

You can fiddle with a candy thermometer and a marble slab if that sort of laborious enterprise appeals, yet many fudge recipes require nothing more than a good heavy pot, a steadily hot stove and a little experimentation to fire up the taste buds.

At its most basic level, fudge is just a mixture of sugar, cream or milk, butter or margarine, and various flavorings, stirred together over heat and allowed to cool into a dense, decadent block of smoothness. Too sweet for some people, it is, nonetheless, a cherished American confection.

John Mariani, in "The Dictionary of American Food and Drink," says that fudge was first made in the last century by New England college women — ergo, the "Freshman Fifteen" — who dubbed it with the word that was already a quaint expletive. The first printed recipe for the candy was published in 1896.

There is no "true" way of making fudge. Some people like the texture to be as smooth as cream cheese, others want it grainy (Texture depends on the rate at which the dissolved sugar crystallizes as the liquid cools). Some like a rich, buttery fudge, while others — with visions of bathing suits dancing in their heads, no doubt — believe that they can control the calorie and cholesterol count by using margarine and evaporated milk instead of butter and cream or half-and-half.

Here are some fudge-making tips:

Do it on a cold, dry day.

Start with cold utensils and ingredients.

A copper pot is ideal because it conducts heat and cools quickly.

Stir with a wooden spoon.

Use a candy thermometer for accuracy. Most recipes recommend between 230 and 238 degrees, or the soft-ball stage, when a teaspoon of fudge, cooled in a bowl of water, flattens when removed from the water.

Bittersweet chocolate gives a more chocolaty flavor than semisweet chocolate. Increase sugar to taste.

If using a marble slab, make a frame around the edges of the slab by covering wood strips or other long square objects in aluminum foil.

Pour the liquid on the slab and work it by folding and turning it with a metal spatula or a wide, clean paint scraper. Add nuts, peanut butter and alcoholic flavors when you start to work the fudge. Add marshmallows when the fudge starts to thicken and change color from deep brown to creamy brown.

If the fudge hardens with an unpleasant grain, reheat it and work it again. A small amount of a paste of equal parts cornstarch and water added to the liquid will help it solidify better.

Don't refrigerate fudge. Store it in a tightly sealed plastic container with a slice of bread to recycle moisture. It usually tastes better a day after preparation.

In the mood for fudge? Here are some recipes.

CHOCOLATE FUDGE

2 cups sugar
4 oz. semi-sweet or bittersweet chocolate, chopped
2 tbsps. corn syrup
2/3 cup evaporated milk
3 tbsps. butter
1 tsp. vanilla
1 cup chopped nuts (optional)

Combine sugar, corn syrup, chocolate, evaporated milk and butter in a heavy saucepan. Clip a candy thermometer to the side and bring mixture to a boil, stirring and cooking to 234 degrees on the thermometer. Remove from heat and pour onto marble slab. Turn and fold in edges with a spatula until the glossy sheen is gone. Add vanilla and chopped nuts, if desired. Form into desired shape. Makes about 1 1/2 pounds.

The following Pennsylvania Dutch-type fudge can be coated with dipping chocolate or chocolate-flavored candy coating, which can be bought at a store specializing in candy-making supplies. Make it a day ahead so the fudge dries out some. You will need about 8 ounces of coating. You can also add chopped nuts, dried fruit or coconut just before pouring or working the fudge.

OPERA FUDGE

2 cups sugar
3 tbsps. light corn syrup
1/2 cup heavy cream
1/2 cups milk
1/4 tsp. salt
1 tsp. vanilla extract

Lightly grease an 8-inch square baking pan. In a heavy saucepan over very low heat, combine all ingredients except vanilla. Cook, stirring constantly, until the mixture reaches 238 degrees on a candy thermometer, or the soft-ball stage. Use very low heat so some of the sugar will caramelize, tinting the mixture very faintly to a rich cream color.

Pour the candy into a large bowl and cool until it is lukewarm. Add the vanilla. If working on marble, do so until the fudge is cool and thick. If pouring into pan, beat with a wooden spoon until it becomes thick and creamy and loses its shiny look, about 4 to 5 minutes. To keep center creamy, cover with a damp cloth or paper towels for 30 minutes. Then uncover and allow to cool completely before cutting into 1-inch squares. Tastes best when allowed to mellow overnight. Makes 1 1/2 pounds.

This very nutty recipe is from Better Homes and Gardens.

ORANGE-WALNUT FUDGE

3 cups sugar
1/2 cup water
1/2 cup orange juice
12-oz. package semisweet chocolate pieces

1 tbsps. finely shredded orange peel
4 cups coarsely chopped walnuts
In a 3-quart saucepan combine sugar, water and orange juice. Cook and stir over medium heat until sugar dissolves and mixture comes to a boil. Clip candy thermometer to side of pan and continue cooking to 234 degrees (soft-ball stage), stirring occasionally. Remove from heat. Stir in chocolate pieces and orange peel. Fold in walnuts. Work on marble table as described above or spread candy in a foil-lined 13-by-9-by-2-inch baking pan to cool. Makes 3 pounds.

This recipe is from James Ross of Naron Candy in Baltimore, who says that it does not require a candy thermometer. Peanut butter or slightly melted marshmallows may be substituted for the chips and marshmallow cream.

PEANUT BUTTER FUDGE

3 cups sugar

1/4 cup margarine or butter
2/3 cup evaporated milk
12 oz. peanut butter chips
1 7-oz. jar marshmallow cream
1 tsp. vanilla
1 cup chopped peanuts, cashews or favorite nuts, optional

Combine sugar, margarine or butter, and evaporated milk in a 2 1/2-quart saucepan. Bring to a boil over medium heat, stirring constantly, and boil for about 5 minutes. Stir so it does not scorch. Remove from heat and stir in peanut butter, marshmallows or peanut butter chips. Add marshmallow cream, vanilla and nuts. Beat until well blended. Pour into a greased 13-by-9-by-2-inch pan and cool to room temperature until set. Cut into 1-inch squares. Makes about 3 pounds.

This microwave fudge recipe, from "The Best of Gourmet Volume 3" (Random House; $24.95), requires the use of a microwave candy thermometer, available at most cookware and candy-making stores.

BUTTERMILK HAZELNUT FUDGE

2 cups sugar
1 cup buttermilk
3 oz. unsweetened chocolate, chopped fine
2 tbsps. unsalted butter, cut into pieces
1 1/2 tps. vanilla
1/4 tsp. salt
3/4 cup hazelnuts, toasted and skinned (procedure below) and chopped coarse

Line an 8-inch square baking pan with waxed paper, leaving a 1-inch overhang. In an 8-cup glass measuring cup or bowl stir together the sugar, the buttermilk and the chocolate. Scrape the sides clean. Cover 3/4 of the bowl or cup with tautly stretched microwave-safe plastic wrap. Microwave at high power, stirring gently with a cleaned spoon every 2 minutes to dissolve the sugar, for 6 minutes.

Insert microwave candy thermometer into the mixture and microwave at high power for 7 to 10 minutes, or until the thermometer registers 240 degrees after the mixture has rested out of the microwave for 10 seconds. Remove the plastic wrap, leaving the thermometer in the mixture resting against the side of the measure. Add the butter, vanilla and salt, but do not stir. Let cool to 120 degrees and remove the thermometer. Add the hazelnuts, beat the mixture with a wooden spoon until it just begins to lose its shine, and immediately turn the fudge into the pan, spreading it into an even layer. Let the fudge cool, lift it out of the pan using the wax paper, and cut into 1-inch squares. Keeps in an airtight container for three days. Makes 12-3 pounds.

Note: To skin hazelnuts, lightly toast them on a baking sheet in a preheated 350-degree oven until light golden, 10 to 12 minutes, watching them carefully. The skins will start to blister. Remove and wrap in a kitchen towel to let the nuts steam and cool for a few minutes. Skin the nuts by rubbing them by the handful in a clean towel (terry cloth works best). Some skins may stick and can be scraped off with a knife.

Author Combines Cooking And Gardening In Book

By Carol Deegan
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — In 1982, Rosalind Creasy published "The Complete Book of Edible Landscaping." The book integrated ornamental and edible plants in home landscape design.

"I thought I knew everything you needed to know," she said in an interview here. "What I found out was that 400 pages didn't even begin to cover the subject."

So, Creasy, who lives in Los Altos, Ca., worked four years researching and writing "Cooking from the Garden" (Sierra Club Books), a 547-page book filled with up-to-date information on gardening, storing produce, cooking — and much, much more. The book is beautifully illustrated by more than 170 full-color photographs, most taken by the author.

Creasy describes her book as a history of food; a picture book; and a personality book, filled with profiles of people in cooking and gardening.

Her goal, she says, is to encourage "not just gardener cooks but also cooks who have never undertaken their own planting."

Creasy says she spent little time in libraries researching the book. Most of the information was gained from "talking to people and trying things myself."

She traveled around the country, interviewing gardeners, chefs and seed experts, inviting them to grow prototype gardens and to contribute recipes.

Contributors include Alice Waters of Chez Panisse restaurant in Berkeley, Ca.; Seppi Renggli, chef at the Four Seasons restaurant in New York City; Diana Kennedy, author of "The Cuisines of Mexico;" Vicki Sebastiani of Sebastiani Vineyards in Sonoma County, Ca.; and John Jeavons, author of "How to Grow More Vegetables."

The book is divided into Traditional Gardens, International Gardens and Avant-Garde Gardens; An Encyclopedia of Superior Vegetables; and Resources and References, which includes information on planting and maintenance, pests and diseases, and suppliers.

Each chapter presents a specific theme garden and includes a list of recommended vegetable varieties; profiles of expert chefs and gardeners; a cooking section with information on cooking techniques and ingredients for the particular cuisine; and recipes from contributing chefs and the author's own test kitchen.

The book's 180 recipes range from seafood gumbo and Boston baked beans to tempura, ratatouille and baked chiles rellenos. The more adventurous cook may want to try the ricotta-stuffed zucchini flowers or the lavender ice cream.

The recipes reflect many of the latest trends in both the cooking and gardening worlds: the use of edible flowers; the creation of healthy, attractive "spa" cuisine dishes; and the renewed interest in traditional American foods such as Cajun cuisine and Native American dishes.

Creasy stresses quality of ingredients.

"Salad doesn't need to be a head of iceberg lettuce and one gray tomato," she says, and stir-fry should be made with Chinese cabbage, not regular cabbage.

She rallies against "tasteless dried commercial basil," and says once you have tried growing your own, you will never buy it in a bottle again.

"Basil is the queen of Italian herbs," she says, and one plant of this warm-season annual will produce enough leaves to use as a seasoning in soups and sauces, "and now and then for sliced tomatoes."

She also suggests using oregano, rosemary and fennel in spaghetti sauce; borage blossoms, chives and basil in salads; and basil, oregano and Italian parsley in minestrone.

To grow your own basil, remove the top of an Italian olive oil can or coffee can. Punch holes in the bottom of the can for drainage. Fill the can with a good potting mix and plant the basil as you would in any other container. (In hot weather, the sides of the cans will get hotter than clay or wooden pots, so you will need to water plants often and shade the sides of the cans.)

For five or six pints of pesto, she suggests growing at least three plants. Spicy Globe is a good variety for growing in containers. Start basil seeds in the spring or buy plants of regular sweet basil from a nursery, Creasy says.

Some other ideas:

— Try experimenting with stylish arrangements such as red, white and blue potato salad or a fresh tomato tart made with orange, gold and red tomato slices.

— Serve an appetizer tray of many-hued vegetables including red scallions, baby purple snap beans, red celery stalks, baby orange turnips and bright-yellow zucchini slices.

— Surprise your guests with a purple sweet potato pie.

Creasy, who is a landscape designer, specializes in residential landscapes that include edible, native and drought-resistant plants.

She now works as a consultant to several California restaurants, working with chefs to develop new recipes. She is also planning to do several children's gardening books.

The following is a sample recipe from "Cooking from the Garden." The clear, jewel-like colors of these basil jellies — rose-pink, deep-garnet and champagne — are quite beautiful. They are delicious with cream cheese and crackers or with bagels. They make wonderful presents for others — and yourself.

SCENTED BASIL JELLIES

1½ cups packed fresh Anise or Cinnamon or Opal or Lemon basil
2 cups water
2 tbsps. rice vinegar
Pinch of salt
3½ cups sugar
3 oz. liquid pectin

Wash basil and dry in paper towels. Finely chop by hand or in food processor. Immediately put basil into a large saucepan, and use the bottom of a glass to crush leaves. Add water, bring slowly to a boil, and boil for 10 seconds. Remove saucepan from heat, cover, and let steep for 15 minutes.

Pour 1½ cups of liquid from saucepan through a fine strainer into another saucepan. Add vinegar, salt and sugar, and bring to a hard boil, stirring. When the boil can't be stirred down, add pectin. Return to a hard boil that can't be stirred down and boil for exactly 1 minute; then remove saucepan from heat. Skim off foam and pour hot jelly into hot, sterilized 8-ounce jelly jars. Leave ½-inch headspace and seal at once with sterilized 2-piece lids or melted paraffin. Makes four 8-ounce jars.
