John Williams accepts Boys Club award from Ronny Greene

Boys Club Names Rose High Junior

By Jerry Raynor
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A Rose High School junior, John "Big J" Williams, was named Thursday night as the Boys Club of Pitt County 1988 youth of the year.

Williams was presented the award at an annual dinner at which new officers and directors of the Boys Club were installed.

The award is given annually to an active member of the club who displays qualities of leadership and assistance to others, maintains a high standard of academic achievement in school and is active in civic or church affairs.

Williams is a member of the SGA at Rose, a defensive guard on the Rose High football team, and a member of York Memorial Church. He has been an active member of the Boys Club for seven years and has coached cadet basketball and the T-ball teams. He played basketball and baseball on the Boys Club teams.

Outgoing president Ronny Greene presided over the installation of new officers for 1989. They are Jordan Whitchard III, president; John West, first vice president; Spence Cosby, second vice president; Jim Ward, treasurer, and Mary Wesley Harvey, secretary.

Outgoing members of the board of directors recognized were Cordell Avery, Hyman Brody, Wally Howard, Tom Minges and Waigthy Seales.

Directors honored for special achievements in serving the Boys Club were Spence Cosby, who received the prestigious Boys Club Medallion; Jim Ward, recipient of the award given to the board member chosen as the most outstanding board member of the year, and Cordell Avery, a special award for having served on the board from 1982 through 1988.

Recapitulating the highlights of 1988, outgoing president Greene termed it "a very active year, a time when events happened more quickly than ever before."

Topping the list of events during the year was the purchase of the club's current facility by the Pitt County Board of Education. Under the purchase arrangement, the Boys Club will still have use of the facility until June 1992.

"We have been fortunate to have this fine place," Greene said, "but the time has come when we really need more space, a larger facility. We now have 750 active members and a waiting list of 300 who want to become members, so our facility here is really no longer the ideal one. We have reached the point of needing ten or more acres of land."

Following a search of several sites at prices Greene said the land search committee found prohibitive, "we have just recently concluded a purchase arrangement with (former) Senator Vernon White for land near Sunnyside Eggs."

The purchase of the 10-acre site from White, Greene said, "was generously supplemented by Senator White of one and one-quarter acres that he has donated to us."

Greene said the club's annual auction brought in over $87,000. That amount, "added to the United Way allocation to us of $105,000, more than covered our projected expenditures of $175,000."

Whitchard announced that "the new facility will serve both boys and girls in Pitt County. This is going to be an exciting challenge, but one I know we can meet as everyone involved continues to put service above self."

Public To Speak On Mayor's Vote

By Greg Laudick
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Greenville City Council has agreed to conduct a public forum to allow citizens an opportunity to voice their opinions on the issue of allowing the mayor to vote on all matters before the council.

Approximately 30 people gathered at Thursday's council meeting to request the board to hear citizen input as to whether the city's highest elected official should vote.

The council in 1981 had taken away the mayor's vote except in cases to break a tie among the six council members. But the city was recently notified that the 1981 decision was not precleared first by the U.S. Justice Department as required by law.

Subsequently, the council on Monday passed a resolution directing the city attorney to submit the 1981 charter amendment to the Justice Department for preclearance.

But Mayor Ed Carter, who feels

Greenville's mayor should vote, claims the council "rushed the vote" Monday without first obtaining appropriate citizen input on the issue.

After an extended discussion Thursday, the council subsequently agreed by a 6-1 vote to conduct the forum.

City Attorney Mac McCarley said although a date has not been set for the forum, he "expects the meeting to occur very soon."

"The information obtained at this meeting will be forwarded to the U.S. Justice Department as part of our submission for preclearance of the 1981 amendment," McCarley said.

"I expect to submit this information for preclearance within two weeks following the public comment," he said.

"It's clearly evident that it is the council's authority to make a final decision," Carter said. "It's evident to me that the council had given an indication of its intentions. But to me, I think it's wrong for the council not to listen to the people."

Major North Charges Dropped

Trial Judge Says He's Powerless To Keep Prosecution Going

By Pete Yost
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The judge in the Iran-Contra case today dismissed the two criminal charges that accused fired National Security Council aide Oliver North of illegally diverting more than $14 million in U.S. Iran arms sale proceeds to the Nicaraguan rebels.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell said he had no choice but to grant the motion by independent counsel Lawrence Walsh to dismiss the conspiracy and theft counts against North. The Reagan administration had refused to allow use of some classified documents bearing on the charges in the trial.

"It is apparent that the attorney general and the independent counsel are unable to proceed... (are) unwilling to proceed in connection with the conspiracy and theft charges," said Gesell.

"The court is powerless to direct the case to proceed" on the two main counts.

The judge dropped the charges

Early story on B-7

under a section of the Classified Information Procedures Act in which the attorney general may certify that a trial may result in the disclosure of classified information.

Attorney General Dick Thornburgh made that certification in a declaration filed Thursday with Gesell at the judge's request.

Walsh last week gave up his pursuit of the conspiracy and theft of government property charges against North after the administration refused to declassify portions of documents that Gesell said were needed in order for North to get a fair trial.

At a hearing today, Gesell touched on one of the areas of classified material that was among the most sensitive with the administration. He pointed to the portion of his order Dec. 12 that said that in many cases the government must provide the full text of intelligence reports in open court in any trial of North

Washington Names New Police Chief

John A. Crone of Ocean City, Md., was named this morning as chief of police in Washington, N.C., effective Feb. 1.

In making the announcement, Washington City Manager Bruce Radford said that Crone was picked "after an intensive search and assessment process that included review of applications from 48 people."

Radford said he believes that "Chief Crone is a personable and dedicated individual who will serve the city of Washington with distinction. His 18 years of progressive responsibility in large police departments have more than adequately served to prepare him to meet the law enforcement needs of the citizens of Washington."

Crone was not present at today's announcement, but will be in Washington Saturday at 11 a.m. to meet the public, said Radford. When he begins work Feb. 1, Crone will be directing a 27-person force.

Crone, 40, who grew up in West Palm Beach, Fla., has a bachelor's degree in administration of justice from American University in Washington, D.C.

He served in the U.S. Army from 1967 to 1970 and began police work with the Metropolitan Police Department of Washington, D.C., in 1970, assuming the rank of sergeant in 1974. He served during 1978-79

County To Open Three More Compaction, Recycling Units

By Stuart Savage
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Three new compaction and recycling centers — at the Ayden-Grifton, Bethel and Winterville solid waste container sites — will open Monday as part of Pitt County's continuing effort to combat increasing costs and other problems associated with disposing of solid waste.

According to County Engineer Phil Dickerson, who heads the county's solid waste landfill efforts, the compaction and recycling centers "will be arranged in such a manner that it will be as easy as possible to deposit recyclables in the appropriate containers, while non-recyclables may be placed in a compactor."

The three new sites will also be staffed with employees to operate the compactors and help maintain the sites, Dickerson said.

Dickerson, who said the three new sites are patterned after the pilot compactor-recycling site on the County Home Road near Bells Fork and another compactor-recycling site at Farmville, said those using the sites are asked to separate their mixed paper (junk mail, magazines, newspapers and other clean paper), colored glass bottles and jars, clear glass bottles and jars, beverage cans, cardboard and aluminum scrap from their household waste and deposit each material in its appropriate container.

Although there are six separation categories, Dickerson suggested that "the separation can be achieved very easily. Mixed paper can be bundled or placed in a paper grocery bag," Dickerson said. "cardboard can be kept separately and beverage cans, bottles and jars can be placed in separate bags on the outside." And Dickerson said it is important to remember that glass bottles and jars do not have to be washed and the tops and labels do not have to be removed.

Jenkins Hospitalized

Dr. Leo W. Jenkins, former chancellor of East Carolina University, is in serious condition in Pitt County Memorial Hospital where he is being treated for cancer, family members said today.

"We're just going one day at the time," his wife, Nancy M. Jenkins, said this morning. "This is not a give-up person. He'll be fighting it just like he does in everything else."

"He doesn't like being confined. He would like to be at home. We just reassess the situation every day," Mrs. Jenkins said.

Jenkins, 75, has been receiving radiation and chemotherapy treatment for cancer since May.

This latest admission to the hospital for treatment came on Sunday, according to Mrs.

Jenkins, who said her husband was first treated for prostate cancer several years ago. Jenkins "had done real well for a lot of years," she said. "He enjoyed life, traveled and all those things."

The couple was in Warsaw, Poland, last year when Jenkins became ill and treatments were started when they returned to Greenville, according to Mrs. Jenkins.

Jenkins retired in 1978 after 31 years at ECU, the last 17 as the school's top administrative officer. During his years as president, then chancellor, East Carolina grew from a small teachers college with an enrollment of about 1,600 students, to a comprehensive university with 12,000 students.

Martin Gets Choice Senate Chairmanship

By John Bare
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

State Sen. R.L. "Bob" Martin of Bethel landed a choice committee chairmanship Thursday, after Senate Democrats stripped Republican Lt. Gov. Jim Gardner of his appointive power and let one of its own dole out the goodies.

Goldsboro Democrat Henson Barnes, president pro tem of the Senate, named Democrats to head all 34 committees announced Thursday. Sen. Larry Cobb, R-Meck., minority leader in the Senate, also appointed GOP senators as ranking minority members on each committee.

Senate Democrats, who outnumber Republicans 37-13, took appointment power away from Gardner on Wednesday. Barnes, who represents Wayne and Greene counties, did not appoint himself to chair a committee.

Martin, who represents portions of Pitt, Martin, Edgecombe and Wilson counties, will chair the Appropriations Subcommittee on Natural and Economic Resources. Thus, Martin will be one of seven senators responsible for putting together major portions of the state budget.

Sen. Tom Taft of Greenville will chair the Senate's Election Laws Committee. Taft's district includes portions of Pitt, Martin and Beaufort counties.

Martin's subcommittee will handle appropriations for the state Department of Transportation, which includes the highway fund and the Department of Motor Vehicles. It will also handle funding for the Department of Commerce and the Natural Resources, Conservation and Development Commission.

"I pulled down a big one. I'm one of the five subcommittee chairmen of the base budget," Martin said in a telephone interview today from his new office on the top floor of the legislative office building in Raleigh. The office was formerly occupied by Sen. Marc Basnight, D-Dare, who is now chair of the Base Budget Committee and will oversee the Senate's budget process.

"(The chairmanship) is right in the heart of things. It's one of the seven (positions) on the Senate side putting together the state budget," Martin said.

One of the major issues Martin's subcommittee must deal with is whether to increase funding for the state highways. A commission that has been studying the problem has not yet reported on the topic, Martin said, but one possible proposal would be an increase of $5 billion a year in funding.

Martin said some reports indicate the state has fallen behind as much as $15 billion in funding for highways, but until the study commission reports, no exact figure is available.

Taft said in a telephone interview today that Pitt County will likely benefit from Martin's chairmanship. "I'm particularly pleased with Senator Martin's appointment as one of the subcommittee chairs. That will mean a great deal to Pitt County. With the close working relationship Senator Basnight, Senator Martin and I have, Pitt County will find itself in a particularly favorable position on (Senate) appropriations," he said.

As chairman of the Election Laws Committee, Taft said he would push for legislation to increase the length of legislators' terms from two years to four years.

Other issues the committee will likely address include voting machines and standard statewide ballots for voting procedures, he said.

"I'm pleased with (the chairmanship). The thing that pleases me about this is that there's going to be an awful lot of election related legislation coming to the Senate this year," Taft said.

There could also be a change in the manner in which the state conducts its presidential primary, he said, because many legislators were not pleased with the results of the 20-state Super Tuesday primary last March.

"We don't know yet... what direction we'll go in, but I think there will be a change. We were uniformly

Council Will Consider Longer Terms

THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Greenville City Council agreed Thursday to consider longer terms of office for elected municipal officials.

Council members approved a resolution of intent to consider amending the city's charter to increase the terms of office for the council and the mayor from the current two-year terms to four years, with all terms beginning simultaneously.

The resolution set Feb. 9 as the date for a public hearing on the matter.

"At the public hearing, the City Council will hear citizen comment on the proposed change," said City Attorney Mac McCarley. "Whatever the decision the council makes will probably be influenced by the comments from the public at that hearing."

McCarley said state statutes require a council decision be made no earlier than its Feb. 20 meeting and no later than 60 days following the public hearing.

"As presently proposed, the change would be in effect in time for the 1989 elections," he added.

Nancy Jenkins was the sole council member in opposition to the resolution.

"Many people don't want to commit to four years and I think it perhaps might limit the people who will run," she said.

"I believe that two years is sufficient — it's done OK in the past," she added.

Also approved by the council Thursday was a request by the East Group Inc. to amend the Zoning Ordinance to increase the maximum height limit for structures in the Medical District from 35 to 80 feet with the exception of MD-1 (hospital) property, which has no height restrictions.

The council also approved an amendment to the Bufferyard

Ordinance reducing from 500 feet to 250 feet the minimum spacing requirement between improved areas and adjoining property lines that exempts schools from bufferyard regulations.

Other items approved Thursday include an ordinance updating the city's subdivision regulations; an ordinance making tow service operators responsible for cleaning wreck debris from city streets; an ordinance allowing the parking authority to lease parking spaces within limited time parking zones; an amendment to a lease allowing the city to purchase and install a swimming pool heater at the Greenville Aquatics and Fitness Center; a Budget Ordinance amendment appropriating the city's portion of the library's $1,000 per year across-the-board wage adjustment, and a resolution requesting a state grant for construction of a boat launch ramp at the Town Commons Park.

The council also approved the sale of Disposal Parcel F-6 of the Southside Redevelopment Project for $1,500; K-4 of the Southside Redevelopment Project for $2,000, and 42-I-8A of the South Evans Community Development Project for $28,400.

Consent Agenda items approved Thursday include establishing a 25 mph speed limit on Prince and Kent roads in the Eastwood Subdivision; the placing of 34 stop signs; establishing three on-street parking spaces on the south side of Fifth Street between Evans and Charles streets; establishing a no parking zone on Buxton Road; a sub-lease arrangement for the Humber House, and the release of $4,853 and refund of $262 in taxes.

Grandson Sues After Geese Go On Attack

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHESAPEAKE, Va. — Ernest N. Sawyer, attacked by his grandmother's geese, has filed a $30,000 lawsuit against her because he says it's the only way to force the woman's insurance company to pay his medical bills.

"It might sound strange for a grown man to be afraid of geese, but it's no different than a dog or other animal you're not familiar with," Eric O. Moody, Sawyer's attorney, said Thursday.

"I didn't think it was right," Sawyer said, that the insurance company wouldn't pay the bills.

"Goosie-Loosie" and "Ducky-Lucky," handfed cornbread by defendant Hattie B. Pitt, ganged up on Sawyer last June when he stopped by to visit his sick grandmother at her home, according to the suit.

As he stepped inside a low, chain-link fence surrounding the yard, the two geese and their three goslings rushed him.

Startled, Sawyer turned to run but fell and broke two fingers and injured his wrist.

It was the first time Sawyer ever had been attacked by the geese, he said. "That was why I was surprised."

But the geese weren't friendly to everyone, said his mother, who escorted an insurance agent onto the property after the attack.

"They were bad," Sarah K. Sawyer said. "They were dangerous. That dog was scared of them. They would come at you... their necks out like this. They would go after anybody."

Ms. Pitt, 78, has since sold her recently published book on human labor and childbirth in the context of comparative mammalian and primate births.

She is the daughter of Dr. Earl Trevathan, a local pediatrician and member of the ECU medical school faculty.

Further information about the program is available from Sigma Xi officers, Dr. Hal Daniel of the ECU School of Allied Health (telephone 757-6390) or Dr. Vincent Bellis of the biology department (telephone 757-6718).

Violence Expert Says State-Sponsored Terrorists Pose Biggest Public Threat

By Paul Nowell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — State-sponsored terrorism from countries such as Iran, Libya, Syria and North Korea remains the largest threat to innocent people, a counter-terrorism expert said.

"The one single thing that would help the most against terrorism would be to break the association between government support of terrorist operations," Alvin Adams told more than 300 people in a speech Thursday to the Carolina Council on World Affairs.

Adams is an assistant to L. Paul Bremer, the State Department's Ambassador at Large for Counterterrorism. Bremer had been scheduled to address the group but he was unable to leave Washington, D.C., because he is involved in the investigation of the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103, which claimed the lives of more than 250 people in Lockerbie, Scotland.

The U.S. government is more prepared than at any points in its history to apprehend and punish the individuals responsible for the bombing, Adams said.

"I wish I could say we know who did it (bombing)," he said. "I think today we have a better capacity to reach a conclusion. It will take time, but these guys make mistakes."

Adams defined terrorism as "premeditated violence perpetrated against non-combatants for political purposes."

He said many inroads have been made in recent years to thwart terrorism, but much work still remains to be done.

State-sponsored terrorism remains the largest threat, he said. Countries such as Libya, Iran, Syria and North Korea have provided havens and support to terrorist groups.

While terrorism is not a threat to Americans at home, he said, they have become vulnerable while traveling abroad. Recent actions by the U.S. government to encourage its allies to invoke swift punishment has helped reduce the number of terrorist acts in Western Europe during the past six years, he said.

"We need to let the cops do their job," Adams said. "Let's stay away from the politics and the baloney and make them pay for their crimes."

Adams told the group the key element of the U.S. government's anti-terrorist policy was to refuse to pay ransom or release prisoners. The sale of arms to Iran to win the release of American hostages was contrary to that policy, he said. "Mistakes were made and they won't be made again," Adams said, explaining that the reaction of the American public to the scandal affirmed the validity of the policy.

Adams said direct military retaliation can sometimes be the only response to terrorist acts. He noted the reduction in Libyan terrorist activities following the bombing of Tripoli by U.S. warplanes in 1986.

"When we went after the Libyans it was effective for a while, at least 18 months," he said.

A major issue facing the United States involves reports that Libya has constructed a large plant to manufacture chemical weapons.

"Retaliation is an option we cannot discard," he said. "We need to play hardball."

Adams offered a deal to anyone in the audience who believed the Libyans when they said the plant was built to manufacture pharmaceuticals.

"If you believe that, I've got a bridge in Brooklyn that I'd like to sell to you," he said.

Defendants Plead Innocent In Defense Contract Case

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — A defense contractor, a Navy employee and five men pleaded innocent today in U.S. District Court to charges they conspired to obtain Pentagon contracts by paying bribes for information.

Judge Richard Williams set a trial date of March 27 in the case that stems from a two-year investigation into allegations that private consultants and defense contractors tried to illegally manipulate the Defense Department's $150-billion-a-year purchasing system.

The defendants were released on $10,000 personal recognizance bonds.

Thomas Patten, the attorney for the contractor, Teledyne Electronics, asked that the trial be delayed "because we have a daunting task in front of us." Williams denied the request.

Patten said outside the courthouse that he felt the March 27 date did not give him enough time to prepare in view of the fact that the government had more than two years to develop its case.

The defendants are Teledyne Electronics of Newberry Park, Calif., a division of Teledyne Industries; Navy purchasing specialist Stuart E. Berlin; private consultants Fred H. Lackner and William Parkin; and three Teledyne employees, George H. Kaub, Eugene R. Sullivan and Dale Schnittger.

Gerard Treanor, an attorney for Parkin, said outside the courtroom that he was confident about the case. "We anticipate after the trial he will be acquitted," Treanor said.

Stuart Berlin was asked whether he thought he would be exonerated. "Sure do," he responded.

The 27-count indictment returned by a grand jury in this northern Virginia suburb of Washington includes a variety of charges against the defendants, but not all of them are accused of the same offenses. All, however, are charged with conspiracy and bribery.

The indictment alleges that Teledyne Electronics and its employees paid Parkin, of Alexandria, Va., to get details about a Navy radar contract worth more than $100 million. Parkin then paid Lackner, a consultant based in Woodland Hills, Calif., who in turn gave bribes to Berlin, the indictment says.

Prosecutors said Berlin's information played a role in landing the contract for Teledyne Electronics.

Berlin, Parkin and Lackner face maximum penalties of 185 years in prison and fines of $5.5 million. Teledyne Electronics faces a fine of $6.5 million if convicted. The other men face lesser sentences if they are found guilty.

Lawyers for Teledyne Electronics claim their client is innocent of conspiracy and knew nothing of any deals between private consultants and government employees. Attorneys for Parkin also have said their client did nothing wrong in running his business.

In presenting its case, the government is apparently planning to use the testimony of Michael Savades, a former employee of Teledyne Electronics who has pleaded guilty to conspiracy to commit bribery. He is cooperating with prosecutors.

Hazeltine, based in Greenlawn, N.Y., is a subsidiary of the Emerson Electric Co. Inc.

Rescue Doubted

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — The official news agency Tass today expressed serious doubts over a story it ran about six men allegedly pulled from the rubble in Leninakan 35 days after the Armenian earthquake.

"Regrettably, we are unable so far to confirm with full certainty the authenticity of the reports made by our Armenian colleagues about the 'Leninakan miracle,' nor can we categorically deny them," Tass said.

Today's urgent dispatch was headlined: "One Always Wants Miracles."

Tass reported Thursday that the six men had been rescued a day earlier from the basement of a wrecked nine-story apartment building after being trapped for five weeks after the Dec. 7 earthquake.

The chief source of information for the Tass account was Aikaz Akopyan, a 50-year-old electrician.

Soviet television broadcast an interview Thursday night with Akopyan from his hospital bed. But Tass said disturbing questions surfaced when Armenian reporters began to check into Akopyan's story.

"Why, for instance, a day after the miraculous salvation, was it possible to locate only Aikaz Akopyan in a Yerevan hospital?" Tass asked in the dispatch 24 hours after publication of the first report. "Where is the survivor's sister, who failed to appear at the hospital on Friday, though she promised to do so?"

DURHAM — Last year, 17-year-old Levern Allen III was a lifeguard and scuba diver. This year, he hopes to master walking and climbing stairs.

Allen's life changed abruptly two days before Christmas when a hit-and-run driver rammed into his car and forced it to spin out of control on Interstate 40. Allen considers himself lucky to be alive.

"I lost my leg, but I've still got a good mind and my strength is coming back," Allen said Thursday at Duke Medical Center.

A senior at Smith High School in Greensboro who wants to become a pilot and electrical engineer, Allen talked Thursday of the unknown date when he will go home and get on with his life.

He said he's angered by the actions of the man driving the car last Dec. 23, when Allen and three friends from Smith High School were headed to Raleigh to shop for Christmas gifts, that hit Allen's car three times from behind, causing it to crash and roll down an embankment.

Allen and his friend, Kenny Dungee, 19, were pinned in his parents' 1971 Plymouth Duster after the wreck. Dungee was killed in the crash. Kenneth Newkirk and Darius Bannerman, both 17, were thrown from the car and suffered broken bones.

Witnesses said the driver stopped after the wreck, but drove off after a quick look at the wreckage. Authorities continued to search for him Thursday.

"I wonder why he did it," Allen said from his hospital room. "I wonder if he has some sort of problem."

"He not only hurt four people, he hurt hundreds of people by what he did."

Allen said he has been touched by the dozens of cards, gifts, telephone calls and visits he has received from friends, family and even strangers.

He showed a visitor a card from a woman who identified herself as a "friend in Asheboro" who read news accounts of the hit-and-run accident.

"As the mother of a teen-age son, I felt great sympathy for you and your family," the woman wrote. "May it help you to know I care and have concern for you. I wish you health and courage for the future."

Allen has received a steady stream of cards, phone calls and visitors.

"When you get letters from people you don't even know, it gives you more strength to want to get better," he said. "I know everyone is pulling for me."

He said the loss of his right leg won't stop him from pursuing his applications to the U.S. Air Force Academy and the U.S. Naval Academy. This week, he received a letter from the Navy informing him he received a three-year ROTC scholarship to Georgia Tech. Last month, before the accident, he learned of his acceptance at N.C. State University.

An army of doctors supervises his recovery: specialists in hematology, respiration, infectious diseases, orthopedics and physical therapy.

"The pain has gotten better," he said. "I can sleep longer now. Before, I would sleep until the pain medication wore off, and that was about three hours. Plus, I had a high fever, and that made things bad."

His father, Levern Allen Jr., says his son's physical fitness before the accident helped him survive and recover from the crash.

"We wish this never happened, but we know one day he's going to be up and doing everything he wants to do," said the elder Allen, a self-employed home builder.

"It's not the end of the world — it's a setback, temporarily," the father said.

Young Allen said he's anxious to get home and learn to walk with an artificial leg. So far, he says, doctors have evaded his questions about a date to leave the hospital.

"I'm trying to keep going and get my life back on track," he said. "I've been thinking about them catching the guy who did this, but mainly I've been thinking about getting myself back together, because I have to push ahead."

"I have to go to college, and I have to learn to walk."

School Bond Deserves Closer Look

Pitt's Commissioners were correct to disregard a $65 million bond issue but they were hasty in their dismissal of a reasonable school bond referendum.

A $65 million debt would have been intolerable for Pitt's taxpayers to absorb. The requests represented by that figure weren't all valid; there were projects that should, and could, be addressed through sound long-range capital outlay planning.

But school needs, especially outstanding deficiencies, can be effectively funded by a school bond. Pitt's school construction needs, projects which totaled $25 million, are real and pressing. A reasonable bond referendum request addressing these requirements wasn't adequately explored by the County Commission. It needs to be.

Instead, commissioners appointed a committee of school board and county commission members to explore a pay-as-you-go approach. In their probe, that group must consider and point out the drawbacks of pay-as-you-go for a county's schools.

For example, a county always plays catch-up with pay-as-you-go. The public finds itself funding yesterday's needs today while tomorrow makes today's expenditures obsolete. That reality especially holds true in a rapidly-expanding community like Pitt, where growth often outpaces capacity.

Second, pay-as-you-go plans leave taxpayers vulnerable to inflation as costs rise. A construction dollar buys a great deal more in 1988 than it would in 1998. A school bond provides cost containment. It allows progress to occur at today's prices.

Besides, Pitt has made little headway on its school facility needs with past pay-as-you-go efforts. In 1984, commissioners levied a 10-cent tax hike aimed at raising $3 million each year for school construction. That funding built classroom additions at high schools and constructed a new middle school in the Winterville District but has fallen short of addressing other serious needs. Political fund-juggling, shrinking revenues and growth made it inadequate.

Those unmet needs are serious, especially for a county that prides itself on excellence in education. Consider these realities:

In 1988, 90 mobile units were in use — more than there were in 1984 when a campaign to eradicate them began. A trailer simply isn't an acceptable environment for learning.

Two-thirds of the school system's facilities are nearly 30 years old. Many have deficiencies and weren't designed to house the diverse curriculum of the 1980s.

Pitt County's student population is expanding by 200 pupils per year. With a classroom crunch already, how will the system satisfactorily serve this growth without major construction?

The joint committee and the county commission owe a reasonable bond request a more careful look. Certainly they must ask "can the county afford such debt?" But they must also question the sharp cost of continual shortfall.

Martin Will Have More Influence

Traditionally Democratic governors have gone into the latter part of their four year terms, or more recently into their second terms, with less elout than when they started.

That was true because even Democratic governors in this vetoless state derived much of their power from their ability to make appointments. Most appointments are made at the beginning of the first term; hence the governor's powers of persuasion were used up at the beginning of his term.

It may be somewhat different for Republican governor Jim Martin as he begins his second four-year term. As a first term governor he was often pictured as one who was elected on the coattails of the popular President Reagan. In 1988 Gov. Martin had his own record to stand on, and he won re-election. Thus, if there were any doubt in 1984, it was clear in 1988 that Gov. Martin had personally won the office of governor. The political powers know that the voters approve of the governor — and that means he is an entity to be dealt with.

But it is clear Gov. Martin will be more influential with the State Legislature this year than in the past, especially after Wednesday's changes in the House of Representatives. It won't be in an arm twisting way. He doesn't have that much to withhold if the lawmakers don't do his bidding.

Only cooperation between the executive and legislative branches of government can address the state's needs in secondary education, prison overcrowding and roadbuilding.

Gov. Martin will have proposals for meeting these needs and it will be a test of his leadership to persuade the legislative leadership to consider those proposals. It will have to be a bipartisan effort. The right balance might just get things done.

Public Forum

To the editor:

Your editorial lecture to Mayor Ed Carter (Jan. 9) left me puzzled. In the last election for Greenville's mayor and city council, Mr. Carter had the majority and won the election. There was no report of a single vote for David J. Whichard II or any other of the Reflector's editors. It seems to me that Mayor Carter is best-positioned to identify the "Mayoral Vote" as an issue. The citizens put him in office. It was not inherited or passed on as by royalty.

I haven't a clue as to the legal status of the question, but common sense suggests that the recipient of the most votes should not be obliged to play the role of "observer" of an administration holding less authority than any others of the city council.

I missed the headline which announced that God died last week and left the editor of the Reflector in charge of all political matters of Pitt, Greenville and surrounding areas. Sorry.

"Pick another issue, Mr. Mayor," you said. Let me pick. Ask the Chamber of Commerce and others to seek another industry which we truly need in the downtown area: a newspaper.

William C. Byrd Sr.

To the editor:

Congratulations to the House of Representatives for throwing "the rascals" out. The state of North Carolina is far better off without the likes of Liston Ramsey, Billy Watkins and their handful of cronies who have made all the decisions in the House for too long.

Surprisingly, it was done despite the efforts of all the "big-wig" Democrats, including Terry Sanford. The "Kiss of Death" probably was the News and Observer's desperate last-minute plea to keep the entrenched regime in power. Ramsey and his crowd had been in power so long they thought the state belonged to them.

Hopefully, we'll see the same thing in the Senate shortly, where we've got too many who've been there too long. They started "the ball rolling" with the way they stripped the lieutenant governor, who had been elected by a majority of the people, of all his powers on opening day.

Leave Emotionalism At Home

WASHINGTON — My colleague in the opinion game, William Safire, recently wrote a column that has become something of an international controversy. Regarding charges that a German firm has helped Libya build an alleged poison-gas installation, Safire said that the Germans, of all people, should stay out of the poison-gas business. "Can it be that the 'good Germans' are at it again?" Safire asked.

The answer from Germany is no. Some "bad" Germans may be at it again. Those bad Germans are those ones who reportedly have helped Libya build its poison-gas installation. They include, also, other firms that may have helped the Libyans and, earlier, the Iraqis, get into the poison-gas biz, but they are hardly representative of a nation — neither its character nor its intentions. The total of baddies is hardly sufficient to indict an entire nation.

The Safire column (widely circulated in Europe through the International Herald Tribune) has produced a furor in Germany — and well it should. Editorialists have waxed indignant, wondering when the monkey of the Holocaust will finally be removed from Germany's back. Politicians, too, have taken umbrage.

German-American relations, already frayed by crashes involving U.S. war planes and repeated low-level training flights, have reached a new low. The German press reported that Chancellor Helmut Kohl sent President Reagan a message of complaint: Stop picking on us. The U.S.-German relationship is being damaged. When asked if the press reports were true, a German diplomat diplomatically told me, "They weren't denied."

Some years ago, a commentator on the Middle East noted an often-overlooked triumph of Zionism: the right of Israel to be wrong. Those who hold Israel to a higher standard of behavior than other nations have missed the point of what it means for Jews to have their own nation. It means that they can be like other peoples, ordinary — sometimes right, sometimes wrong.

The same logic applies to Germany. No one should ignore the Holocaust and the Germans, to their credit, have not. But they are entitled to their bigots and idiots and, of course, if true, to their occasional rogue corporations. When it comes to aiding the manufacture of chemical weapons, they are not alone. According to Secretary of State George Shultz, the firms of other nations have also gotten into the act — although it's not clear to U.S. intelligence if these firms knew the ultimate Libyan purpose. But even the United States has had to prosecute individuals (such as former CIA agent Edwin P. Wilson) who have aided Libya. Free enterprise, like lust, has no conscience.

The trouble with indictments like Safire's is that it puts lead into Teutonic heads. Rather than deal with the issue of a single company, the question becomes one of national character. Germans, from Chancellor Kohl on down, feel unfairly singled out. As with Bitburg, they dig in their heels and, emotionally, deny what the State Department says is obvious: incontrovertible evidence that a German firm has aided Libyan efforts to make poison gas.

Whereas another country might by now have dealt with such a firm, German backs have stiffened. Leaks to the U.S. news media (particularly the New York Times) has made investigation of the suspect chemical firm all the more difficult, the Germans say. They can find evidence of an administration-inspired public-relations campaign. What they cannot find, they maintain, is hard evidence to support American charges.

Maybe in due course they will. But that issue should be worked out without the emotionalism of the Holocaust. More than most nations — more, certainly than Austria — Germany has attempted to come to terms with its past. It can never purge itself of the murder of millions, but it is entitled to be "bad" like other nations and be criticized on the basis of what it is doing, not what it has done. To judge Germans always by a single standard evokes in them the reaction white Americans have when they are held accountable for slavery: Who me? I wasn't even alive at the time. The accusation can result in a kind of cynical despair: If nothing can be done to show good faith then nothing will be done.

Since World War II Germany has done everything asked of it to make amends. Its democracy flourishes, it has made financial reparations to its victims and it has confronted its past — a painful process akin to a national psychoanalysis: What kind of nation are we?

History will ultimately provide that answer. In the meantime, Germans ask that they, like other peoples, be given the benefit of the doubt. Based on what they have done since the end of World War II, they have earned that privilege.

'A' For Students, 'F' For Parents

Art Buchwald

I receive a lot of interesting calls at my office. My favorite so far this year was from a mother who lives in Bethesda, Md.

"I wonder if you'd mind answering some questions on the U.S.-Soviet missile treaty?" she said.

"I would be happy to," I told her. "Why do you ask?"

"My son is home from college and he has to write a term paper on disarmament."

"I see. Why doesn't your son call me himself?"

"He's very busy. He needs to get his car tuned, and the only time he can see his girlfriend is when he comes home."

"Don't you think there is something wrong with a son asking his mother to do his term paper for him?"

"I don't mind," she replied. "There is so little he needs from me these days. Was it Reagan's idea or Gorbachev's to reduce the missiles in Europe?"

"Look, ma'am, I don't mind answering your questions, but if you do the work, your son isn't going to get anything out of it."

"Oh, yes, he will. If the paper is any good, they'll give him an A."

"That's not what I mean. Mothers shouldn't be writing term papers for their children."

"Why not? We pay their tuition."

"The term paper itself isn't important — gathering the research for it is what helps make the scholar."

"Well, I'm sure my son would research the material if he could spare the time. He was never lazy when he lived at home."

"Whose idea was it for you to do this paper?"

"Both of us. He kept complaining that his entire vacation was being ruined because he had to look up facts about ICBMs. Since I didn't have any other commitments, I volunteered to help him. After all he is flesh and blood."

"But if you just give him all the information, he won't understand any more about disarmament than he does now."

"If he gets stuck, he can always call me. I always like to hear his voice."

"I didn't know what to tell her. 'Somehow I feel party to a crime,' I said."

"Mrs. Lipkin always helped her son Milton with his papers, and now he works for the State Department. Will you please tell me everything that took place in Geneva before they reached an agreement?"

"That'll take a long time."

"I'm not going anywhere. My son is using my car."

"Apparently there is no child abuse in your family."

"None whatsoever. We're very close."

"I'm sure you are. But I would still prefer to discuss disarmament with your son."

"What's the matter? Are you afraid that a woman can't understand it?"

"It's not that. What concerns me is if something I tell you about the missile treaty is wrong, your son would never forgive you."

"He has in the past," she told me.

"Once I did a paper for him on Tolstoy. Are you going to help me or not?"

"Why are you so impatient?"

"He has to get the paper in by Monday, and my husband needs at least a day to type it for him on his computer."

The Energy Choices For U.S.: Pay A Gas Tax Or Pay OPEC

Beilenson

WASHINGTON — The federal budget deficit. The U.S. trade deficit. Energy security. U.S. auto industry competitiveness. Air pollution. Global warming.

All are daunting and seemingly intractable problems. Yet each one cries out for the same easy-to-implement and relatively painless solution: an increase in the federal gasoline tax. President-elect Bush and the new Congress should make it their first order of business to enact a "driver user fee" (since we can't call it a tax) of 10 cents a gallon, rising by 10 cents annually for four successive years.

Raising the gas tax by 50 cents a gallon over five years would put us on a path toward a balanced federal budget faster than any other single measure that anyone is seriously considering. Since each penny per gallon of tax raises about $1 billion a year, this proposal would slash our deficits by an enormous $50 billion each year once it is fully implemented.

Increasing the price of gasoline through a higher tax would also reduce our dependence on foreign oil, which is growing at a frightening rate. In 1985, we imported 27 percent of our nation's oil supplies; by the mid-1990s, we will be importing over half the oil we use — a much higher proportion, incidentally, than that which triggered our energy crises of the 1970s, bringing not just the inconvenience of long gas lines but also two serious recessions, high unemployment and the worst period of inflation in American history.

Oil imports are rising rapidly largely because gasoline prices are now so low that drivers have no incentive to conserve fuel. Americans are paying about 40 cents a gallon less than in 1981, when gas prices were at their peak; we are even paying less in real terms than back in 1950. Higher gasoline prices would give people an incentive to buy more fuel-efficient cars and use mass transit or car pools for commuting. By cutting our consumption of gasoline, we would reduce the amount of oil we need to import.

Lowering U.S. demand for imported oil would also reduce our trade deficit. Oil accounts for nearly one-quarter of the trade imbalance, so cutting demand for just this one commodity would greatly reduce the total amount of money we send overseas. And, by reducing the trade deficit (as well as the budget deficit), we would also be ensuring lower inflation, lower interest rates, less unemployment and a higher standard of living for all Americans.

A higher gas tax would also help save domestic auto makers from the devastating blow they are setting themselves up for by continuing to increase their production of big gas-guzzling cars. Their competitors in Europe and Japan are now developing and will soon be marketing 60 to 90 mpg vehicles, while the U.S. industry, which has successfully petitioned the federal government to roll back relatively modest fuel economy standards, is moving in precisely the opposite direction. When the world oil market tightens and rising oil prices again generate a frenzied demand for higher-mileage cars, U.S. auto makers will be demolished — unless we help them prepare for that day by stimulating demand for more efficient cars through a gradual increase in the price of gasoline.

Finally, lowering our consumption of gasoline would reduce auto emissions, which are the primary cause help control the damage while we work on more comprehensive solutions to this critical problem.

Despite all these benefits, opponents of a higher gas tax point to the disproportionate burden it would place on certain groups: the poor, rural residents, workers in the tourism and transportation industries. Certainly higher gasoline costs will be felt more by those who drive a great deal than by others. But those who would feel the impact more, as foreign oil producers increase their control over the world oil market and are again able to raise their prices.

On the other hand, the cost of gas will increase modestly and gradually if we raise the gas tax, but we will have lowered our demand for oil and kept foreign producers from raising their prices. We will pay a little more for gasoline, but we will pay the entire extra cost to ourselves, ensuring that the tens of billions of dollars that would otherwise be sent abroad to fill the coffers of the OPEC oil chiefs are instead put to use here at home.

A higher gasoline tax is by no means a cure-all for the vast array of economic and environmental problems our nation faces. But no other single measure can ease so many major problems without creating new administrative burdens or causing serious hardship. Raising this tax — er, driver user fee — is long overdue; it would be the wisest step we could take in 1989.

Anthony Beilenson is a Democratic representative from California.

of unhealthy air in most U.S. cities. It would also help slow the buildup of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, which is believed to be the main contributor to the global warming phenomenon. The need to address the deterioration of our atmosphere is more urgent than ever, and incentives to reduce gasoline use would of a higher gas tax the most are the very same people who will be hurt the most if we do not raise the gasoline tax.

If we do nothing to curb our growing demand for imported oil, the cost of gasoline will go up because oil supplies will decline. We could soon be paying $2 or $3 a gallon or

Questions Of Hirohito's Role In World War II Still Unanswered

Robert Benjamin

Japanese Emperor Hirohito outlived every other major figure from World War II. Yet his role in that war remains a quagmire for Western historians. The 87-year-old emperor, who sat on the Chrysanthemum throne for 62 years, died Saturday, leaving unanswered key questions about the degree of his guilt in the Pacific war.

Although Japan's armed forces went into battle vowing to die for their emperor, Western historians predominantly cast Hirohito as a man manipulated by militarists who revered him as a god but had few reservations about forcing their decisions on him. They contend the emperor essentially was powerless to affect Japan's march to war.

A dissenting school, however, finds that Hirohito firmly led Japan into the war and that assertions of his limited role amount to a carefully contrived conspiracy maintained by more than 40 years of silence. By this view, the emperor was a master of illusion.

A third view — advanced in one of the few Western biographies of Hirohito — takes the middle ground, painting a portrait of a man who wanted to stop the war and who had both the power and the opportunities to do so, but who simply failed to speak up. The emperor is portrayed here in a sorrowful light, as one who be taken," MacArthur wrote in "Reminiscences," his 1964 book. "I believed that if the emperor were indicted, and perhaps hanged, military government would have to be instituted throughout all Japan, and guerrilla warfare would probably break out."

'The emperor is portrayed here in a sorrowful light, as one who must be held responsible for not exercising his will in successive moments of truth.'

must be held responsible for not exercising his will in successive moments of truth.

That Hirohito was not tried as a war criminal by the Allied powers does not settle the issue, for that was solely a military and political decision. The Australians, the British and the Soviets all lobbied for his indictment, but that movement was quashed by Gen. Douglas MacArthur, whose memoirs indicate that his prime concern as the lord of occupied Japan was controlling and remaking the defeated nation.

"I would need at least one million reinforcements should such action

Hirohito, instead, willingly subjected himself to being cut down to the size of a mere mortal, publicly renouncing his supposed divinity to his people and humbly offering himself to MacArthur, according to the general's recollections of their first meeting, "as the one who should bear sole responsibility for every political and military decision made and action taken by my people in the conduct of the war."

This assumption of responsibility and the emperor's earlier, relatively forceful steps to end the war over some opposition were, by all accounts, his finest hours. There is little disagreement among Western historians that Hirohito, with the end of the war, lived up to the name given to his reign in 1926, Showa or Enlightened Peace.

But the most common view among Western historians absolves the emperor even more.

"The ... emperor is known to have chafed at the actions of the military in his early years and to have attempted to get reconsideration of the steps leading to war, but the only political decision he himself made ... was when his ministers in August 1945 pointedly presented him with a tie vote on surrender and he opted for accepting the allied ultimatum," Edwin O. Reischauer, the former U.S. ambassador to Japan, has written.

"The combination of the awesome respect (commanded by the emperor) and the callous manipulation of his person is hard for contemporary people, or at least for non-Japanese, to comprehend," Reischauer added. But for the Japanese at the time that Hirohito came to the throne, it made sense: Neither his grandfather, Meiji, who brought the imperial institution back to the political forefront in the late 19th century, nor his father, Taisho, who was mentally incapacitated, ever really ruled.

Western historians trace this concept — of reigning but not ruling — to Japan's 1889 constitution. This constitution — part of Japan's extraordinary response in the late 19th century to the challenge of the West — assigned sovereignty and all powers of government to the emperor but assured that he would only affirm decisions that already had been made by his ministers.

This basic ambiguity as to the role of the emperor left a dangerous vacuum at the heart of Japan's prewar political system. Western historians believe. With the passing of the group of non-elected elder statesmen who had run the nation as an oligarchy for Hirohito's grandfather and father, this void came to be filled in the years leading to the war by right-wing militarists who gained control, in part, through a series of assassinations of government ministers and the threat of a military coup d'etat.

The strongest dissenter to this line of argument outside of Japan has been David Bergamini, an Australian journalist who spent his adolescence in a Japanese prisoner-of-war camp. Bergamini asserts in great detail in his 1971 book, "Japan's Imperial Conspiracy," that Hirohito was far different from his official portrait as a peace-loving, secluded biologist who devoted most of his energies to putting around with marine organisms.

"Hirohito was a formidable war leader: tireless, dedicated, meticulous, clever and patient," Bergamini wrote. "He had inherited ... a mission, which was to rid Asia of white men. Since his people were reluctant and backward, he had skillfully manipulated them for twenty years before the war in order to prepare them psychologically and militarily for their task."

House Coalition Launches Effort To Realign Power

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — While House Speaker Joe Mavretic consolidates his support and pushes a reorganization plan, onlookers are watching for the emergence of a new set of power brokers and wondering what philosophical direction the chamber will take.

The day after he unseated longtime speaker Liston Ramsey in a bipartisan coup, Mavretic unveiled a proposal to overhaul the House committee system and a meeting schedule that drew immediate criticism.

The blueprint, which many legislators saw for the first time Thursday, organizes the House into 12 standing committees and 50 subcommittees. Under the agreement reached with the Republicans who helped elect Mavretic, the GOP will receive 20 of the subcommittee chairmanships.

The proposal drew fire from some veteran lawmakers, who complained that it would force them to choose between policy areas in which they've been deeply involved.

"I want to be a player in this process, and I don't want to just sit back and lob hand grenades," said Rep. Joe Hackney, D-Orange, who did not join the rebellion that ousted Ramsey. "But I've got some real problems with this."

Hackney said the schedule calls for the Judiciary and Basic Resources committees or their subcommittees to meet at 10 a.m. on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays. He said his two principal interests have been the judiciary and the environment but that the new system might force him to drop one of them.

Rep. Donald Dawkins, D-Richmond, a Mavretic ally, distributed sheets to each House member asking them to list their committee preferences. As speaker, Mavretic will make the assignments and name chairmen.

As one legislator after another echoed Hackney's concerns, it was agreed that they would list any complaints on the sheets along with their committee choices. Dawkins said the schedule might be revised to resolve as many problems as possible.

Mavretic said the system eventually would be accepted. "There's always some confusion and resistance to change," he said. "What we're trying to do is please as many members as we can, but quite frankly to eliminate or reduce as much as possible the high absenteeism rate we had in the '87 session on various committees."

Meanwhile, Mavretic spent much of Thursday in meetings with fellow Democrats, including some of the 54 who voted for Ramsey. Mavretic appealed for unity and told them he might request a written promise of support for his procedural and organizational reforms if significant opposition emerges.

"If the polarization increases rather than decreases, at some point in time I may have to ask them to sign a pledge to help me with some of my initiatives," Mavretic said in an interview. "I hope that, over time, we will not become polarized. But you have to be ready for that possibility."

The move drew fire from Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, the former House Appropriations Committee chairman who was Ramsey's top lieutenant.

"I've never known the leadership in the House to ever ask for a signed pledge of loyalty," Watkins said.

Mavretic countered, "That's just Watkins trying to stir the water and muddying it more."

Mavretic said he would make no decisions about committee chairmanships until the requests for seats are submitted.

He said in an interview that the 20 Democrats who joined in his challenge of Ramsey had the inside track for many of the choicest assignments. But he vowed not to use committee assignments to punish Ramsey supporters.

"That's yesterday's business," he said. "Now we are getting on with the business of doing what is best for the state."

Some observers have said the makeup of Mavretic's coalition makes it likely that the House will have a more conservative tilt than under Ramsey. Coalition members said that might be the case but that it was too early to tell.

"We're going to find out what the ideology of the House is. We really haven't known," said Rep. Sam Hunt, D-Alamance. "We've had a situation in the past where you could have 75 members wanting something but you couldn't even get it to a discussion ... because people said 'I don't want to go against the speaker' or 'it might make Billy (Watkins) mad.'"

Rep. Alex Hall, D-New Hanover, said the coalition had broad philosophical representation and that Mavretic himself was not seen as having an ideological agenda. The

Mavretic Supporters Cite His Savvy, Courage As Reasons For House Vote

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Courage under fire, tenacity and savvy were characteristics that made Rep. Joe Mavretic the ideal leader of the insurrection that toppled Liston Ramsey, supporters of the new House speaker say.

"He's tough," said Rep. Sam Hunt, D-Alamance. "He's used to getting in a plane and accomplishing the mission. I think he sees this as ... like he's in the cockpit of a fighter plane."

It was fitting that an ex-Marine fighter pilot lead what the Democratic dissidents called a "kamikaze" mission — a matter of political life or death.

"We knew it was going to be a tough fight," said Rep. Alex Hall, D-New Hanover. "We needed someone who knew the rules inside and out, someone who would work real hard at the job ... and someone as tough as nails. The choice was fairly obvious."

Mavretic, 54, an Edgecombe County Democrat, has developed a reputation for numerous characteristics since he was appointed to fill a vacancy in 1980.

Some observers have said his last name is fitting in its similarity to the word "maverick."

It was he who proposed abolishing all property taxes and replacing them with an 8-cent sales tax, sparking a fight between the House's rural and urban legislators. His plan would have reimbursed local governments for the loss of property tax revenue under a distribution plan that favored rural counties.

Mavretic also led the unsuccessful fight to remove North Carolina from an eight-state compact that has designated the state to host a low-level radioactive waste facility. But last year, he suddenly offered his county as home for a waste "park" that would include the radioactive waste facility and treat hazardous and solid wastes as well.

Some Democrats privately cited his unpredictability as one reason for their hesitance to support Mavretic as the House's highest ranking Democrat — a post that previous speakers have used to put their stamp on state policies.

But his supporters say Mavretic, mindful of the unusual circumstances he faces, has pledged not to use the speaker's podium to promote a personal agenda.

"I'm the referee, not the player,"

he said in an interview.

Even Mavretic's detractors say he is tenacious, intelligent and hard working — characteristics that attracted the Democrats who were looking for someone to run against Ramsey. A skilled and articulate speaker, he delights in the give and take of committee and floor debate.

"He's extremely smart," Hunt said. "All these reforms we're putting together he thought up."

Rep. Don Dawkins, D-Richmond, another coalition member, said Mavretic was "energetic, politically savvy ... and he's perceived as being a fighter."

"He doesn't run from controversy, that's for sure."

Ascending to the post of speaker is the dream of nearly every House member, but Mavretic insists it wasn't a prize he planned to seek before the coalition to oust Ramsey formed. He said his goal was to be chairman of the Finance Committee, which deals with tax issues.

"The toughest thing about being the speaker from my point of view is not getting in the fights and squabbles and the debate ...," Mavretic said. "I love the legislative process. I'd pay people to let me get up here and fight for bills and debate public policy. That's why you come here. But this job is different."

Blacks Await Outcome Of Change

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The chairman of the Black Legislative Caucus says blacks will have to wait and see how the change in state House speakers will affect the group's goals.

But the only black legislator to support state Rep. Joe Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, over four-term Speaker Liston Ramsey says black legislators should give the new system a chance.

Rep. C.R. Edwards, D-Cumberland, said the change in leadership could involve blacks more actively in the legislative process.

"We have to be open-minded and give the new system a chance. I think it will work and our interests will be represented equally on both sides," Edwards said.

Edwards was among 19 Democrats who joined 45 Republicans to help Mavretic defeat Ramsey on Wednesday by a 65-54 margin. He was the only one among the 13-member Black Legislative Caucus to stray from Ramsey's camp.

Caucus chairman Rep. H.M. "Mickey" Michaux Jr., D-Durham, said he thinks Edwards "made the right move."

"At least we had someone representing the caucus," Michaux said.

But Michaux said caucus members believe it may be difficult to accomplish goals in the House under Mavretic's leadership because the caucus had been "extremely successful under (Liston) Ramsey."

"The things that we asked for that would benefit the black community were looked upon with favor with the help of the speaker," Michaux said.

One of those benefits under Ramsey included committee and subcommittee chairmanships for 11 of 13 caucus members, including Edwards who heads the committee on aging. The House has 13 committees and 58 subcommittees.

"We are 13 people that represent a significant part of the population," Michaux said. "For some of us, it will be difficult to work under the new system. We are going to have a wait-and-see attitude."

Barnes Reshapes Senate Panels

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The state Senate tried out new Democrat-drafted rules when President Pro Tem Henson Barnes named committee chairmen while GOP Lt. Gov. Jim Gardner looked on.

Republican senators had criticized Democrats for using their 37-13 advantage to strip Gardner of appointment powers when the General Assembly convened Wednesday. But Thursday's action was accepted quietly.

Barnes, D-Wayne, conferred with Gardner about the appropriate way to deliver the names. He also emphasized the designation of ranking minority members on each panel — another novelty for the Senate.

Barnes said each Republican, named by Minority Leader Larry Cobb, R-Mecklenburg, would function as "the spokesperson for the governor and the minority party with regard to the particular committee."

Veteran Sen. Ken Royall, D-Durham, deputy president pro tem, landed the key Senate Appropriations Committee. He switched jobs with Sen. Aaron Plyler, D-Union, who will take over the Ways and Means Committee that Royall chaired last session.

Barnes changed the list of committees, removing one judiciary panel, eliminating a local government committee and dividing last session's Commerce Committee into the three areas from which it had been created: public utilities, banks and small business.

Barnes also added one new committee, Marine Resources and Wildlife, saying North Carolina needs to do more with aquaculture as a way to move away from tobacco as a livelihood.

The net result was 34 committees, so every Democratic senator will chair a committee except Barnes, Majority Leader Sen. Ted Kaplan, D-Forsyth, and freshman Sen. Fountain Odum, D-Mecklenburg, who has no previous legislative positions.

Barnes asked senators to examine their requests for committee memberships to avoid conflicts. Memberships were expected to be announced by next week.

While the House became bogged down in debate over the restructuring of committees there, Barnes said the Senate would be able to accommodate whatever changes the other body adopts.

"The House is making some innovations, a large number of innovations that we haven't seen before," he said. "We are willing to support them with regard to their changes and accommodate them in whatever way we need to ... so both parties can work well together."

Barnes declined to speculate on how Rep. Joe Mavretic's successful ascent to House speaker and the loss suffered by Liston Ramsey would affect legislation or the Democratic Party.

"As to helping or hurting the party, it will depend on the work we do up here and how well it is done," he said. "So I think the future will tell."

In other legislative action: The House and Senate approved a resolution inviting Gov. Jim Martin to deliver his State of the State address Tuesday at 2 p.m. to a joint legislative session.

Bills designed to answer lawsuits over North Carolina's crowded prisons were filed for introduction, calling for more than $25 million in construction, additional staffing and expanded alternatives to prison.

Under one bill, $10 million would be appropriated for 1989-90 to provide grants to build satellite jails that would shift misdemeanors from prisons. Each county could receive up to $750,000 to build the facilities and adjacent counties would be allowed to pool funds if they agree to jointly operate one unit for men and one for women.

Another bill calls for $2.1 million to build facilities for women in the state prison system.

A package designed to toughen North Carolina's drunken-driving laws was filed for introduction by Sen. Ollie Harris, D-Cleveland.

Among features of the bill is a reduction of the legal limit for intoxication from 0.10 percent blood alcohol to 0.08 percent, higher fines and tougher licensing procedures for convicted drunken drivers.

New bills were pre-filed for introduction that would decriminalize the possession of lottery tickets purchased outside North Carolina, require that abortion remains be disposed of in a "humane manner" and create a drug-testing law for state employees.

Taxes For Roads?

RALEIGH (AP) — The majority of legislators surveyed by The Associated Press say they're willing for a tax increase to be included in a revenue-raising program to pave roads in rural areas, widen city streets and build new highways.

"This matter is so important, no method should be ruled out," said Sen. Austin Allran, R-Catawba. "Roads are vital, so the dollar figure should be arrived at first, then devise the means — or various means — of funding."

Other, however, said there were better ways to raise money than raising taxes.

"We must look at various options, including non-traditional ways to raise revenue," said freshman Rep. Marty Kimsey, R-Macon. "However, raising (the) fuel tax is not the answer. North Carolina is already higher than surrounding states. In border counties like I represent, this would hurt businesses that sell fuel."

In the mail and telephone survey, to which 79 of the 120 House members and 29 of the 50 senators responded, an overwhelming majority said the need for highway funding was so acute that a major funding measure should be enacted this year.

Sixty-five House members or 82 percent favored a package and only two opposed it while 12, or 15 percent, were undecided.

In the Senate, 22 of the respondents — 75.8 percent — supported a big-ticket highway bill and none opposed it. Seven had no opinion.

It's unusual for so many legislators to express acceptance of higher taxes. In a 1987 AP survey, the majority of respondents were opposed to higher taxes for roads, education or anything else.

Forty-eight House members — 61 percent of the survey participants — said they could support a tax increase for roads while 22, or 28 percent, ruled it out. Eleven percent — nine legislators — were undecided.

In the Senate, 20 people expressed support of a highway tax increase, three voiced opposition and six were undecided.

IN THE STATE

Payments Up

RALEIGH (AP) — State courts officials say a law giving clerks of court a role in enforcing child support orders has led to a 131 percent increase in child support payments collected by the court system in five years.

Under the law, clerks of Superior Court monitor child support cases and take action when payments are delinquent. Before the law, individuals who were owed child support had to take court action against those who were delinquent.

In 1987-88, the court system collected $208.68 million in child support payments, according to the Administrative Office of the Courts. That was a 131 percent increase over the $90.37 million collected in 1982-83, the year before the law went into effect.

Wiring Blamed

ROXBORO, N.C. (AP) — A wiring short between floors is thought to have started the fire that destroyed the old Person Furniture Co., said Roxboro Fire Chief Buddy Hall.

"We are speculating wiring," Hall said. "We found the point of origin and there were some beaded wires."

The fire kept about 100 firefighters from nine departments tied up nearly all afternoon Tuesday fighting to keep it from spreading to adjoining businesses.

Authorities spent Wednesday going over the site to determine the cause of the fire.

Damage to the former store building owned by Dallas Rhodes was estimated at $200,000 with $45,000 to the contents.

Airport Security

CHARLOTTE (AP) — American Airlines will install X-ray machines able to detect plastic explosives in international baggage at Raleigh-Durham International Airport and 18 other airports by mid-February, company officials say.

The move comes less than a month after a bomb blew apart Pan Am Flight 103 over Scotland on Dec. 21, killing 270 people.

American spokesman Tom Stack in Chicago said the airline will spend $2 million to install the new machines at Raleigh-Durham and other airports with international flights.

"It is a better X-ray system," Stack said, "but no system is foolproof. It's good, but it is no panacea."

CDC Grant

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — The Centers for Disease Control has awarded a new three-year grant to the University of North Carolina

Center for Health Promotion and Disease Prevention.

The grant will provide nearly $500,000 during the first year, according to Dr. O. Dale Williams, director of the center, a joint effort of the Division of Health Affairs and the schools of dentistry, medicine, nursing, pharmacy and public health.

Williams said new projects will attempt to establish a model for carrying health promotion and disease prevention programs to rural communities.

Applications

DURHAM (AP) — Fifty-one people from 21 states and one foreign country have applied for the director's job at the North Carolina School of Science and Mathematics, officials say.

Most of the applicants are educators, with science and mathematics backgrounds, but a minister and a lawyer are among the candidates, says Virginia Spence, secretary to the search committee.

Bland Worley, committee chairman, said Thursday that he anticipates about 60 applicants before the deadline on Sunday.

Charles Eilber, the school's first director, gave his resignation to the board of trustees in September. His resignation is effective June 30.

Duke Endowment

DURHAM (AP) — The Duke Endowment has awarded Duke University more than $3.7 million in grants for 1989-90, endowment and university officials say.

The grants will help provide financial aid to students through the university's Benjamin N. Duke Leadership Fund and Angier B. Duke Memorial Scholarship program, and will provide money for several special projects, including four designed to increase the number of minority faculty and students on the Duke campus.

Appeal Denied

RALEIGH (AP) — The Federal Emergency Management Agency in Washington has denied an appeal for more than $1 million in public assistance funds sought for cleanup and other expenses stemming from the Nov. 28 tornado that hit Raleigh.

Al Warlick, a spokesman for the state Division of Emergency Management, said the division was informed of the decision Thursday.

The appeal asked for money to deal with public assistance expenses. The most severe need was for cleanup expenses, Warlick said, which were estimated to be $509,831 as of Dec. 26.

Woman Takes On Power Company, And Wins Her Fight For New Bills

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENSBORO — Mary Gibson of Greensboro says she doesn't feel like a hero even though she challenged Duke Power Co.'s method of billing appliance customers and won.

"But I feel good about it because they were trying to do everybody wrong," Ms. Gibson said in an interview this week.

It was Ms. Gibson's complaint to the N.C. Utilities Commission last summer that prompted Duke Power to change the way it bills customers who buy both electricity and appliances from Duke.

The changes are designed to prevent customers such as Ms. Gibson, who fell behind on appliance installment payments, from being threatened with disconnection of electrical service. They also will help to clarify how customer payments are applied.

The Utilities Commission approved Duke's settlement of Ms. Gibson's case on Oct. 31. Duke Power is explaining the changes in notices included in the monthly bills for 1.35 million residential customers in North Carolina and South Carolina between mid-December and mid-January, Duke Power spokeswoman Anne Sheffield said.

Appliance customers who fall behind on electrical or appliance payments, and don't catch up within nine working days after notification, now will automatically have their accounts on separate bills in the same envelope.

The company's good-credit customers will now be able to choose whether they want to be billed on separate accounts, or on the same account, for electricity and appliances, Sheffield said.

"This reaffirms our policy that, if customers fall behind in nonutility payments, it will not affect their electrical service," Sheffield told the Greensboro News & Record.

Ms. Gibson is a 50-year-old divorcee who suffers from a heart condition, high blood pressure and diabetes, and lives on Social Security disability payments.

She went last year to Legal Services to complain that Duke had, without her knowledge, applied her electric payment to arrears on a stove and water heater she had bought from Duke for her prior residence. The practice put her in arrears on her electric bill.

She said that Duke then threatened to cut off her electricity unless she entered a payment agreement she couldn't afford.

Attorney Jeremy Eisler, who took Ms. Gibson's case to the Utilities Commission, is pleased with the result. Ms. Gibson also was represented by attorney Janet McAuley-Blue of Central Carolina Legal Services.

"I think Duke Power should be commended for taking this action before being told to take it," Eisler said. "They should also be asked why it took the initiation of a law suit."

Sheffield said that Duke Power had a past practice of applying undesignated payments to the customer's oldest outstanding balance.

"Our old policy was a good one until something happened where a customer was unclear about the procedure," Sheffield said.

The company proposed the changes because of Ms. Gibson's complaint.

The notices tell anyone who may have been hurt by Duke's past method of using undesignated payments to contact the company. Duke may be able to reapply payments, Sheffield said.

"If anyone received termination notices, or was terminated, they may have a right of action about which they might want to consult an attorney," Eisler said.

The changes also specify how any undesignated payments an appliance customer makes will be applied. Unless the customer asks otherwise, undesignated payments will be applied first to past due utility charges, then to past due merchandise charges, then to current utility and current merchandise charges.

Ms. Gibson also settled a civil suit she filed against Duke Power in Guilford Superior Court over the matter. She and Eisler declined to say how it was settled.

Marines File New Charges In Death

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Marine officials Thursday ordered courts-martial for a lieutenant and two sergeants in connection with the death of a young Marine who was left accidentally in the Mojave Desert last summer.

Maj. Gen. Orlo K. Steele, commanding general of the 2nd Marine Division at Camp Lejeune, N.C., ordered a general court-martial for 1st Lt. Allen V. Lawson, who was the officer in charge of Lance Cpl. Jason J. Rother's unit when he was posted on a remote road Aug. 30. Lawson and other leaders did not report Rother was missing for 40 hours, almost a day after investigators believe the 19-year-old Marine died following a training exercise.

Lawson has been charged with disobeying orders, dereliction of duty and conduct unbecoming of an officer. If he is convicted of all three charges, maximum punishment would be dismissal from the military, five years in prison and forfeiture of all pay.

His court-martial is scheduled for Feb. 7.

Steele also ordered special courts-martial for Sgts. Christopher Clyde and Thomas B. Turnell. Original charges against the two were withdrawn Wednesday because the officer charged with conveying their courts-martial is being relieved of command due to his role in Rother's death, according to Marine officials.

Clyde, who was Rother's platoon sergeant, has been charged with dereliction of duty and disobeying an order, which carry maximum penalties of six months in jail, a bad conduct discharge and forfeiture of some pay for up to six months. His court date is Tuesday.

Turnell, Rother's squad leader, has been accused of dereliction of duty, disobeying orders and unauthorized absence from the base during the much of the period before it was discovered that Rother was missing.

The charges carry punishment of up to six months in jail, six months loss of pay and a bad conduct discharge. Turnell's court-martial is scheduled Feb. 2.

Suit Challenges Tax Law On Bibles

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A federal lawsuit has been filed against the state, alleging that a 1939 law exempting the Bible from state sales tax is unconstitutional, but state officials say the exemption applies to all religious tracts.

"The language of the exemption says holy bibles," George W. Boylan, an assistant attorney general, said Thursday. "It's a generic phrase meaning whatever is comparable to the Holy Bible." Boylan said that, under the interpretation of the attorney general's office, sales of all religious tracts similar to the Bible should be tax-exempt. But Boylan acknowledged that sales clerks may not have been aware of that interpretation.

"I don't know how effectively the word has gotten out to the retailers," he said.

Boylan also said that the interpretation leaves a lot of room for retailers to decide what is — and what is not — a religious tract.

But William G. Simpson, the staff attorney for the North Carolina Civil Liberties Union's Legal Foundation, Simpson said that the attorney general's office's interpretation does not make the law constitutional.

"That interpretation is without effect because retailers don't know about this interpretation.... And, in any event, we don't believe that that cures the problem," he said.

The suit, filed Wednesday in U.S. District Court in Raleigh by the civil liberties union, claims that the tax exemption unconstitutionally restricts freedom of speech and establishes religion — two violations of the First Amendment.

Simpson said his group is asking that a federal judge rule the exemption unconstitutional and require that the sales tax on Bibles be reinstated.

"It violates freedom of expression because it singles out one category for special treatment," he said.

The suit, which names state Revenue Secretary Helen A. Powers as defendant, lists five plaintiffs:

— The Rev. W.W. Finlator of Raleigh, retired minister of Pullen Memorial Baptist Church and a member of the national advisory board of the American Civil Liberties Union;

— John S. Friedman of Durham, who is Jewish and was charged the sales tax on the Tanakh, the Jewish Bible;

— Vasudha Gupta of Raleigh, a member of the Hindu faith who had to pay a sales tax on a copy of the Bhagavad Gita, a sacred Hindu text;

— Bruce Jacobs of Route 6, Hillsborough, a member of the Hare Krishna faith who paid the sales tax for a copy of The Upanishads, the Hindu spiritual treatises; and — Slater E. Newman of Raleigh, a member of the American Civil Liberties Union.

Simpson said that exclusion any religious tracts from the state sales tax violates the separation of church and state required by the Constitution and limits free expression. He said that the state must either exempt all printed material from the sales tax or exempt none.

Another lawyer in the suit, Brian Rubin of Washington, said the state "is treating books and ideas and expressions differently based solely on their content."

Rubin said that, when he was attending Duke University in 1985, he bought an Old Testament at a bookstore in Durham and had to pay sales tax. A clerk told him then that, if he had bought the Old and New Testament in a single volume, no sales tax would have been charged because the state exempts the Bible.

Boylan said he was surprised that the civil liberties union had challenged the law.

Libya Turns Over Body Of U.S. Jet Pilot To Vatican

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROME — Libya handed over the body of a U.S. pilot killed during a 1986 air raid on Tripoli to a Vatican representative in the Libyan capital and flew it to Rome today, the Vatican announced.

The body was to be turned over to U.S. officials upon the arrival of the Libyan military plane at Rome's Ciampino Airport, said the Vatican, which was acting as an intermediary for "humanitarian reasons."

Libya's apparent olive branch comes during increasing international debate over a suspected poison gas factory in Libya, and only nine days after U.S. warplanes shot down two Libyan jets over the Mediterranean Sea.

The official Libyan news agency JANA also has complained a Libyan Airlines plane en route from Tripoli to Istanbul on Tuesday was buzzed over the Mediterranean by U.S. fighter planes. There was no immediate comment to the report from Washington.

JANA did not identify the U.S. pilot in its Thursday dispatch. However, JANA reported on Dec. 24 that Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi was offering to return the body of Capt. Paul Lorence, 31, of San Francisco.

Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro said the papal representative in Tripoli, Monsignor Giovanni Martinelli, accepted the body and accompanied it on the flight to Rome.

"The Holy See, for humanitarian reasons ... and above all thinking of the (pilot's) family, has accepted," the Libyan offer, Navarro said.

Two Vatican bishops, Francesco Mointerisi and Sebastiano Corsanego, went to Rome's airport to turn over the body to U.S. Embassy representatives, Navarro said.

The Vatican statement said the Libyan request for Vatican mediation had a "humanitarian character connected with the Christmas holidays."

Vatican sources said the Libyans first approached the Vatican around Dec. 15.

In Washington, a State Department official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the administration regards the return of American remains as a humanitarian obligation by Libya.

Lorence and Fernando Ribas-Dominicci, 33, of Utuado, Puerto Rico, were in an F-111 that disappeared during the April 15, 1986, raids on Tripoli and Benghazi. Witnesses reported seeing an F-111 crash into the Mediterranean soon after being hit during the raid.

The other 17 U.S. Air Force bombers returned safely to their bases after dropping about 100 tons of bombs on the cities.

Three months after the 1986 U.S. attack, Libyan television showed pictures of a body it said was Lorence's. Libyan authorities have made no mention of Ribas-Dominicci.

President Reagan said the attack was in retaliation for what it called Libya's support for international terrorism.

Libyan authorities said the raids killed about 40 people.

Gadhafi was quoted as saying in the Dec. 24 dispatch that he was returning the body "especially since this occasion coincides with the end of the rule of the Reagan administration."

The move follows the Jan. 4 downing by U.S. jets of two Libyan planes over the Mediterranean. U.S. authorities said the attack was in self-defense, but Libya claimed the American craft launched a "premeditated" attack.

The Libyan gesture also comes after Washington threatened possible military action against a nearly completed plant in Rabta, 40 miles from Tripoli, that it says is intended for chemical weapons production.

Kohl Says West Germans Involved In Libyan Plant

By Carol J. Williams
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BONN, West Germany — Chancellor Helmut Kohl has acknowledged what his government long denied — West German companies may have helped build and supply a Libyan plant that U.S. officials believe is on the verge of full-scale production of poison gas.

Kohl said in a television appearance late Thursday that authorities have uncovered new documents implicating West German companies in deliveries of equipment for the plant in Rabta, about 40 miles outside Tripoli.

The government's sharp reversal followed the arrest of a Belgian shipping agent linked to the case and confirmation by Libya's U.N. ambassador that West German companies assisted in the project.

In the United States, NBC News reported Thursday that Libyan officials contacted West German companies for clean-up help after a dangerous chemical spill last August at the facility.

The television network, citing U.S. intelligence sources, said the United States determined in the summer of 1987 that Libya had obtained chemical components to manufacture poison gas.

Both NBC and The New York Times quoted unidentified officials as saying the evidence included extensive interceptions of telephone conversations between the Libyans and their suppliers.

Several high-ranking West German officials said Thursday that the latest indications of West German involvement in the Libyan plant embarrassed the government.

But Kohl, answering questions from reporters on the ZDF television network, defended the handling of the case, saying authorities needed evidence before acting against companies suspected of helping the Libyans.

A group of West Germans in the United States this week are examining evidence that Washington says indicates the Libyan plant is a chemical weapons factory. Libya says the facility is a pharmaceutical plant.

"There are new indications that will be further checked," Kohl said when asked if the government had additional evidence. "More documents have been seized and they could give evidence, I don't know."

Kohl said the documents involved chemical equipment that could be used in many ways, but did not elaborate.

The latest developments came after Belgian authorities arrested and charged Jozef Gedopt, director general of Cross Link NV of Antwerp, with forging shipping documents for goods delivered to Libya.

West German investigators provided the information that led to Gedopt's arrest, a Finance Ministry spokesman said. He said the investigators were examining seized records of I.B.I. Engineering, a defunct Frankfurt company.

ZDF said Gedopt's company allegedly used a Cyprus-registered freighter to deliver West German equipment to Libya in February 1986 after forging destination papers. The network gave no other details.

Earlier Thursday, Libya's U.N. ambassador, Ali Treiki, confirmed that Libya got help from West Germans with the plant, which he said was intended to produce pharmaceuticals. West Germans "did help us, not only in this plant, in other plants also," Treiki told CBS.

President Reagan has raised the possibility of military action against the plant.

Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, who earlier denied West German complicity, said Thursday: "There are a number of indications that evidently point in this direction."

Kohl was told by Secretary of State George P. Shultz in November that Washington had evidence of involvement by West German companies in the building and outfitting of the plant.

U.S. officials disclosed the name of one of the companies it suspected, Imhausen-Chemie of Lahr, nearly two weeks ago. The Finance Ministry audited the company and announced last week it had found no evidence of illegal exports.

Imhausen-Chemie has denied any connection to the Libyan plant.

On Wednesday, government sources confirmed a criminal investigation of I.B.I. Engineering's activities was under way and said authorities had seized company documents.

TV and magazine reports have shown bank documents and other records said to establish Libyan financial links with Imhausen-Chemie and I.B.I.

On Thursday, the president of a Tulsa, Okla.-based company said the West German government is investigating its West German affiliate as a source of at least one piece of equipment used in a Libyan factory.

Bernard Benson, president of John Zink Inc., said it is believed, although not confirmed, that a flare manufactured by its affiliate, Frankfurt Zinc, was used in the Libyan plant. He called the flare, valued at about $100,000, "a typical device used in chemical plants to burn off waste gas."

The company manufactures combustion and environmental control items.

Investigators are focusing on a West German law that requires an export license to ship arms, hazardous substances or components that can be used to produce them.

Libya Claims U.S. Jets Buzzed Plane

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROME — U.S. fighter jets buzzed a Libyan commercial airliner flying from Tripoli to Istanbul, Libya official JANA news agency said today.

The report, citing a statement by the Secretariat of Libya's General Popular Committee for Communications and Maritime Transport, said the incident occurred Tuesday after the Libyan Airlines Boeing 707 had left Tripoli communications air space and entered Athens communications air space.

The week before, U.S. jets shot down two Libyan military planes over the Mediterranean. U.S. authorities said the attack was in self-defense, but Libya claimed the American aircraft launched a "premeditated" attack.

The Libyan news agency, monitored in London, said the captain of the Libyan airliner observed a U.S. fighter plane flying fast from right to left and then go behind the airliner.

Shortly after, the statement said, two U.S. fighters appeared, one from the right and the second from the left, each about 10 miles from the airliner and at about the same altitude. They flew alongside the airliner for about 14 minutes, the statement said.

It added that the captain informed Athens air control.

According to JANA, Libya also sent a protest to the Arab civil aviation and the international civil aviation organizations condemning the behavior of the U.S. fighters, which it said "endangered the safety of the airliner."

It said any repetition "will be considered a threat against international air navigation over the Mediterranean."

Warplanes Collide

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BREMEN, West Germany — A British Tornado warplane collided with two West German jet fighters over a northern village today, killing the two British crewmen and injuring a German pilot, police said.

Several houses were slightly damaged on the edge of Wiesmoor by debris from the Tornado but there were no civilian casualties, Wiesmoor police said.

The accident comes amid growing complaints among the West German public about the dangers to civilians from NATO training flights over this densely populated country.

A spokesman at the West German Defense Ministry in Bonn said the British plane flew into a group of eight German Alfajet fighters that were preparing to land at Wittmund air base near the town of Wiesmoor.

The Defense Ministry spokesman, who asked not to be identified by name, said the Tornado plane collided with two of the Alfajets.

The Tornado crashed into a field just outside Wiesmoor while one German plane came down a few miles away, said the spokesman. The other plane managed to land safely, the spokesman said.

Wiesmoor is 50 miles northwest of the port city of Bremen.

The pilot of the German jet that crashed was injured, he said.

Brueggen is near the West German border with the Netherlands, 210 miles south of the crash site.

The last major NATO plane crash occurred on Dec. 8, when an American war plane plunged into the central city of Remscheid, bursting into a ball of fire and killing six people.

Bush Cabinet Reflects Faces Of Times Past

By Tom Raum
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — George Bush promised a Cabinet of "new faces" but his final team more closely resembles a group photograph of old-timers from previous Republican administrations.

The president-elect completed his selections on Thursday by naming retired Adm. James D. Watkins as energy secretary and William Bennett as drug czar.

The two are typical of other Bush appointments. Both have previous top-level government experience: Bennett as President Reagan's education secretary and Watkins as chief of naval operations and chairman of Reagan's presidential commission on AIDS.

In the past, Bush said "stay tuned" when he was asked about those new faces. But now that the lineup is complete, the new faces are hard to pick out.

Nearly all the top-level positions in the Bush administration will be filled by people who, like Bush, are middle-aged, middle-of-the road Republicans. Most, like him, have resumes long in years of government service.

served in President Reagan's Cabinet and two are retiring Republican lawmakers.

In fact, of the government's 14 principal Cabinet agencies, only three will be headed by Washington outsiders: Texas oilman Robert Mosbacher at Commerce, Atlanta educator Louis Sullivan at Health and Human Services and Chicago mass transit official Samuel Skinner at Transportation.

Asked where the rest of the new faces are, Bush aides have suggested they'll be at sub-Cabinet levels of government.

Bush himself has insisted that his Cabinet does have its share of new faces — or at least old faces in new jobs.

"I set a goal for a broad-based Cabinet, experienced people, experienced people," Bush said in an interview earlier this week with USA Today. "I think we've got it. They're giving me a hit a little on 'new faces.' These are new faces. ... When I said new faces, I didn't mean I was going to reach out and find everybody with no experience in government."

Three members of Bush's new Cabinet are direct holdovers from Reagan's — Dick Thornburgh as attorney general, Nicholas Brady as treasury secretary and Lauro Cavazos as education secretary. He also announced that CIA Director William Webster and presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater would keep their jobs.

Eight other top-level Bush appointees once held Cabinet or other high-level posts under Reagan.

They include: Bennett; Watkins; former Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole, who is Bush's choice for labor secretary; former Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter, chosen for agriculture secretary; and former Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III, to be Bush's secretary of state.

Also: Edward J. Derwinski, an undersecretary of state who was chosen as secretary of veterans affairs; Richard Darman, a former deputy treasury secretary who will be Bush's budget director; and Thomas Pickering, U.S. ambassador to Israel who will be U.N. ambassador.

Bush picked two retiring veterans of the House for his Cabinet: former rival Jack Kemp of New York for housing and urban development, and Manuel Lujan of New Mexico for interior.

And he reached into pre-Reagan GOP administrations for two of his selections, picking Carla Hills, who had been HUD secretary in the Ford administration, as his trade representative; and naming Brent Scowcroft as national security adviser, the same job he'd held under Ford.

Three sub-Cabinet posts filled by Bush do qualify as newcomers, however: New Hampshire Gov. John Sununu as his chief of staff; Stanford University economist Michael Boskin as chief White House economist; and conservationist William Reilly to head the Environmental Protection Agency.

In all, Bush's Cabinet contains one black (Sullivan), two Hispanics (Lujan and Cavazos), and two women (Dole and Hills).

And what advice did Bush give his new team?

Bush met with them Thursday evening. But before the event, he told reporters his advice would include "think big."

And, Bush added, "I'm going to tell them I don't like 'kiss and tell' books."

Pals Knew Bush As 'Ellie The Elephant'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Surviving crew members of the World War II submarine Finback are looking forward to a nostalgic reunion with George Bush, the young Navy pilot they dubbed "Ellie the Elephant" after rescuing him from the Pacific Ocean more than 44 years ago.

Don Kohler, 64, of Rogers, Ark., the torpedoman who helped pull a grateful Bush to safety from his orange life raft onto the Finback's deck, remembers offering a smile and a hearty "welcome aboard," but recalls little else about the incident.

"At that time, he was just another downed pilot," said Kohler, a retired Chicago businessman. "Nobody back then knew he'd become president of the United States."

Rescued after his plane was shot down by Japanese fire, Bush eagerly took his turn at night lookout watches and other seagoing duties, watched Betty Grable movies in the wardroom and donned earphones to listen in awe as the submarine's torpedoes sank two enemy ships.

Former Finback officers remember the 20-year-old Bush as a gregarious jokester who earned the nickname "Ellie" for his comic wardroom imitation of a trumpeting elephant, they said in recent telephone interviews.

"I remember he was very lively, obviously intelligent and very personable," said retired Rear Adm. Lawrence Heyworth of Virginia Beach, Va., who was the Finback's torpedo and gunnery officer when Bush was hauled aboard on Sept. 2, 1944.

Said Heyworth: "All three pilots we rescued were bright, bright-eyed young men, but George seemed the most outgoing and had the most ebullient personality. He was the most entertaining, and he made us laugh a lot."

"We called him Ellie because of his outstanding imitation of an elephant trumpeting. Ellie the Elephant. It wasn't because we all sat around thinking we were Republicans. We must have seen one in a Tarzan movie. We just thought elephants were funny. We kept asking George to do it over and over again."

"He had a tremendous sense of humor," recalled W.E. "Bill" Edwards of Bay St. Louis, Miss., an insurance agent and retired Navy commander. As a bearded ensign aboard the Finback, Edwards filmed Bush's rescue with an 8mm Kodak movie camera.

Edwards said that at last count, nearly 30 surviving officers and enlisted crewmen of the Finback were planning to attend Bush's swearing-in at noontime Jan. 20 at the Capitol.

They and a few of Bush's former flying buddies plan to sit together in prime bleacher seats on Pennsylvania Avenue for the inaugural parade after Bush takes the presidential oath of office.

Inaugural officials reportedly were trying to arrange a reunion for Bush and his old submarine buddies at Blair House, the presidential guest quarters across the street from the White House, possibly next Wednesday.

Heyworth and Edwards have stayed in touch with Bush over the years. But most of the Finback veterans haven't seen or spoken to Bush since he left the submarine at Midway Island after a month-long combat patrol.

Bush won the Distinguished Flying Cross for completing his bombing run against a Japanese radio communications center in the Bonin Islands, about 600 miles south of Japan, after his Grumman Avenger torpedo bomber was struck by enemy fire and engulfed in flames. Bush bailed out over the water but his two crew members were lost.

According to his autobiography, Bush's only injuries were a gash on the forehead and a painful sting from a Portuguese man-of-war. He was picked up by the Finback less than two hours after his parachute hit the ocean.

"I'm proud of what I was able to do to help Mr. Bush on board our boat," said Kohler.

But Dan Moody, 71, a Finback veteran and retired radiation laboratory technician living in Albany, Calif., gave little thought to Bush at the time.

"We brought him aboard, dried him out and gave him hot coffee," he said, and then forgot him.

"I was 26 years old and a first class torpedoman," Moody said. "Who'd pay any attention to a 20-year-old kid?"

Reagan, Military Exchange Salutes

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — President Reagan and the U.S. military services exchanged tributes Thursday at an elaborate and unusual farewell ceremony at Andrews Air Force Base that celebrated the $2.5 trillion defense buildup of the Reagan years.

Speaking as commander in chief, which he said is "the most sacred, most important task of the presidency," Reagan lauded members of the armed forces as "America's pride" and thanked them for submitting to risk and hardship while others enjoyed "great prosperity and ease."

"You have made the comfortable lives of your fellow Americans possible by taking on these responsibilities," Reagan told an audience of 1,400 military personnel and civilians. "And over the past eight years, the luster has been restored to the reputation of our fighting forces, after a time during which it was shamefully fashionable to deride and even condemn service such as yours. Those days will never come again."

Reagan paused during his speech for a moment of silence for the 595 members of the armed forces he said had died on active duty during his presidency. "They are not with us today because they are at the right hand of God ... " he said. "They are our heroes."

Pentagon gratitude for the military buildup that Reagan promised and delivered was expressed by Adm. William J. Crowe, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, who said Reagan had "made patriotism fashionable again and serving in the military attractive."

Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci presented Reagan with medals from the Defense Department, its four services and the Coast Guard, and Reagan reviewed honor guards from all the services as a Marine band played martial music and concluded with "Auld Lang Syne." The ceremony, moved inside a 14-story hangar because of the rainy weather, also included a Defense Department film made for the occasion that praised Reagan's decision to bomb Libya in 1986 and to invade Grenada in 1983. Costs of the ceremony and film, which were not disclosed, were absorbed by the Pentagon, officials said.

Reagan and Caspar W. Weinberger, his secretary of defense for nearly seven years, were surrounded by the complex and expensive weapons systems produced by the buildup, including the Air Force's new B-1B bomber, an Army M-1A tank and various helicopters and fighter planes. The hangar, known as the "Air Force One Complex," will eventually be home to two new Boeing 747 planes that are being built for presidential use and are scheduled for delivery later this year.

First Lady Nancy Reagan did not attend the ceremony because of a sore throat, her spokesman said. Reagan made the trip from the White House to Andrews by motorcade instead of helicopter because of the weather, which also forced cancellation of a flyby of Air Force, Navy and Marine fighter jets and Army and Coast Guard helicopters.

Trawler Sinks

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NAGS HEAD, N.C. — Four crewmembers escaped from a sinking trawler and were rescued by a passing fishing boat early Thursday morning, after spending an hour floating on a life raft in the Diamond Shoals two miles off Cape Hatteras.

The 65-foot fishing trawler, called the Capt. John Duke, slammed into a sand bank south of Cape Point off Hatteras Island about 3 a.m. Thursday.

During the third day of the four-day trip, the boat's engine began spewing oil, and Fredrick A. Parker, the owner of the trawler, had decided to return to port in Wanchese for repairs. The engine's power died two miles from shore, stranding the boat in the middle of treacherous shoals.

It Only Hurts When I Think

Thinking is unpopular in some quarters these days, but Unitarian Universalists see thought as one way of expressing religious values. Thought helps everyone make better decisions about very complex questions. But thought in isolation is always incomplete. # Episcopalians Hold Power In Congress

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — In proportion to their numbers, Episcopalians as usual hold far more than their share of seats in the new Congress, and next Friday for the 12th time in U.S. history, an Episcopalian — George Bush — occupies the White House.

There have been more presidents of that denomination than any other, although it rates only seventh in size. Its 2.8 million members make up only about 1.2 percent of the population.

But it holds about 12 percent of the seats in the new 101st Congress — 63 of 535 seats in the House and Senate. In the Senate alone, Episcopalians are an even bigger proportion, 20 members, or a fifth of the 100 senators, more than any other denomination, although several others are much larger.

Episcopal prominence in politics began in early America, with the nation's first president, George Washington, belonging to that church, as have 10 other presidents, most recently Franklin D. Roosevelt and Gerald Ford.

Other Episcopalians among the founders and early presidents were James Madison, who originally planned to become a minister but switched to politics, and Thomas Jefferson, who in his spare time produced the Jefferson Bible version.

It retains the ethical teachings, but eliminates miracles, causing Unitarians to claim him, although that denomination wasn't formed until the year before he died in 1826 — long after his presidency.

Protestants, along with Episcopalians, have always predominated in Congress, and still do, with 334 of 535 seats, but the number of Roman Catholics has swelled over the last two decades, now totalling 139 seats.

That is more than any other single denomination, although slipping slightly by two from the previous Congress. Methodists hold the second largest number of seats — 75 — down by one, while Episcopalians increased three — to 63.

Altogether, about 52 percent of Congress members belong to those three traditions.

Baptists made up the fourth biggest denominational bloc — 55 of them — gaining one. For the first time, they surpassed Presbyterians, whose number dropped four to 53.

The preliminary figures on affiliations of the New Congress were compiled by Rob Boston of Americans United for the Separation of Church and State in Washington.

In sixth place were Jews, who gained two members to a total of 39, while the next-placed Lutherans also gained two to a total of 25. The Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) gained one to total four.

The Jones Sisters of Tarboro will be in concert at Selvia Chapel Free Will Baptist Church at 3 p.m. Sunday.

Bush Asks Churches To Join In Prayers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK - President-elect George Bush will culminate his inauguration with prayers for God's guidance of the new administration, stressing the importance of worship in his life.

In an open letter mailed to nearly 300,000 American clergy - all those of any kind whose addresses could be obtained - he asked that they join in similar devotions across the country on that occasion.

He also suggested nationwide ringing of church bells at the time. He said he and his wife, Barbara, "believe it is most fitting that the events of my inauguration as president conclude in an ecumenical service of prayer and thanksgiving."

Such a service has been planned on Sunday morning, Jan. 22, at the Washington Cathedral, the Episcopal center in the nation's capital and the denomination of Bush and his family.

Roman Catholic, Jewish and Protestant leaders are to participate, including the head of Bush's denomination, Episcopal Presiding Bishop Edmond L. Browning of New York.

The service caps the weekend inaugural events following the formal inauguration ceremonies of Jan. 20.

"Worship is basic to my own life," Bush said. "Our family has endeavored to uphold our faith by participation in the life of our church."

He added that he was particularly pleased the inauguration "will end on a note of asking God's guidance on the new beginning which opens before us."

Vice President-elect "Dan Quale and I very much hope that this service will be part of similar observances of prayer and thanksgiving throughout our country. We ask that you join us ... by using elements of the national service," Bush added.

Copies of the Washington liturgy were sent to them in advance for their use. Roy Pfautsch of Washington, chairman of the "National Day of Prayer and Thanksgiving" designated for the occasion, said the affair was church-arranged to avoid any impression of ties to the government.

The service was scheduled at regular Sunday time of worship.

Washington's Episcopal bishop, John T. Walker, who is host of the event, issued invitations to participants, including the Bush family. A similar day of prayer and thanksgiving was arranged at Reagan's second-term inauguration in 1985.

State Recalls Its Favorite Son

By Charles Hillinger
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LINCOLN, Ill. — When developers began planning this town in 1853, they hired an attorney to draw up the legal papers.

Not knowing what to call the place, they decided to name it after the attorney, who later would become the 16th president of the United States. It was the first — but far from the last — town named in his honor. Today, towns named for Abraham Lincoln can be found nationwide and in some foreign countries, on street signs, buildings and schools.

But Lincoln's impact is most evident in Illinois, also known as "Lincoln Country" or "The Land of Lincoln." As a circuit-riding attorney serving 14 county seats in central Illinois, Lincoln crisscrossed the state. His political campaigns took him to still other corners of the state where plaques, statues, monuments and buildings recall his appearances. Almost everywhere in Illinois there is something named in his honor.

In the town of Lincoln, population 15,000, "practically everything is named for him," said Matt Mason, 31, a printer for the weekly Lincoln Courier.

But perhaps most notable are the state's many statues in his honor. Some are quite unusual, like the slice of watermelon that carries this inscription: "Near this site Abraham Lincoln christened the town with the juice of a watermelon when the first lots were sold Aug. 27, 1853."

At the Vermilion County Museum in Danville, Ann Hillenburg, 33, was busy adjusting the pant leg on a Lincoln mannequin in stocking feet. Lincoln is shoeless, Hillenburg explained, because he had walked from the Danville railroad station to the home of his friend and kicked off his boots in the bedroom.

"It happened during Lincoln's unsuccessful campaign for the Senate against Stephen A. Douglas," she said. When a crowd gathered outside the home to see Lincoln, he made an appearance in his stocking feet because his feet were so swollen, he couldn't get his boots back on.

Other statues depict Lincoln debating in the town of Freeport; reading a book while riding a horse at New Salem; sitting on a stump, an ax by his side, at Millikan University in Decatur.

At the State Fairgrounds in Springfield is a 30-foot-tall "rail splitter" statue of Lincoln holding an ax and wearing an open shirt, rugged trousers and boots. In Clinton, this famous Lincoln quote is inscribed on a statue in town square: "You can fool all the people part of the time and part of the people all of the time but you cannot fool all the people all the time."

And near Lawrenceville, on the western shores of the Wabash River — just over the Lincoln Memorial Bridge on the Lincoln Memorial Highway — is Nellie V. Walker's 50-year-old monument to the Lincoln family entering Illinois for the first time on a cold, blustery winter day.

The statue features a bigger-than-life figure of 21-year-old Abe Lincoln leading the family from Indiana to Illinois in an ox-drawn covered wagon.

For the last 13 years in New Salem State Park, Abraham Lincoln's life has been recalled each summer in "Your Obedient Servant, Abe Lincoln," a play written and produced by John Ahart, a theater arts professor at the University of Illinois.

It is presented in a theater built by the Civilian Conservation Corps during the Great Depression. About 100 feet away are the store and post office where young Lincoln worked from 1831 to 1837.

Today, New Salem features 23 reconstructed log buildings typical of Lincoln's era. A 30-foot-high portrait of him serves as stage backdrop as players re-enact his life amid the buzz of katydids and the flickering of fireflies.

It was in New Salem, 20 miles northwest of Springfield, that young Lincoln courted Ann Rutledge. Nearby, in the cemetery at Petersburg, a tombstone reads: "I am Ann Rutledge who sleeps beneath these weeds. Beloved of Abraham Lincoln, wedded to him not through union, but through separation. Bloom forever O Republic, from the dust of my bosom. Jan. 7, 1813-Aug. 25, 1835."

Lincoln was buried in Springfield's Oak Ridge Cemetery. The massive tomb in his honor was built with public donations, said Nan Wynn, 34, manager of Lincoln's Tomb State Historical Site. Last year more than 300,000 people visited the site where Lincoln's wife, Mary Todd Lincoln, and three of their four sons are also buried.

Only Robert Todd Lincoln lived to manhood. He died at 82 and is buried in Arlington National Cemetery. Abraham Lincoln's last direct descendant, Robert Todd Lincoln Beckwith, a great-grandson, died at 81 in Virginia in 1985.

The Springfield home where Lincoln and his family resided for 17 years is the centerpiece of a four-block National Historic Site administered by the National Park Service.

A $2.2 million renovation to the house was completed last summer. It is furnished as it was when Lincoln left for Washington in 1861. Among the treasures are 65 original family pieces, including the president's rocking chair.

Also in Springfield is the law office Lincoln shared with Billy Herndon, the federal courthouse where Lincoln worked as an attorney on 200 cases, the Lincoln family pew in the First Presbyterian Church and the old Great Western Railway Depot where Lincoln bid farewell to his friends and supporters when he left for the White House.

The Old State House, too, is preserved. There Lincoln served as a representative, laid in state following his assassination and delivered his famous house-divided speech: "A house divided against itself cannot stand. I believe this government cannot endure, permanently half slave and half free. ..."

One of five original drafts of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address is displayed in the old Capitol.

Senior Discounts Disturb Reader

Dear Abby: "Not There Yet" wrote of his resentment at being asked if he was entitled to a senior citizen's discount since he is only middle-aged.

I resent those discounts for another reason: In case you are not aware of it, senior citizens are the richest group in our population, and it appears that they are going to stay that way.

Why should a senior citizen get a 10 percent discount on drugs, forcing the less well-off single mother of an ill child to pay 110 percent of the cost of the drugs she needs?

If stores gave 10 percent discounts to blonds or red-haired people, this practice would be seen for what it is, and a quick halt would be brought to its use.

The worst example can be seen at our national parks where seniors in their multi-thousand-dollar RVs get into parks free, while the less affluent vacationers must pay up to $25 a year for a pass — all the while the parks are desperate for money. These parks may not even be there for my old age and my children's because of the heavy use they are getting now.

It's just not fair. — Christine In Albuquerque

Dear Christine: Begging your pardon, but where did you get the idea that our senior citizens are "the richest group in our population"? Please tell us where they are stashing their wealth, and about 10 million people of that group will begin a treasure hunt.

Dear Abby: I am a senior citizen, and the letter in your column signed "Not There Yet" made me absolutely furious! He or she wrote: "I, and many of my friends, have had days spoiled by that obnoxious question: 'Are you a senior citizen?' (Gag me with a cane!)"

The obvious hostility against senior citizens in that letter was very upsetting. I infer from the writer's comments that he or she feels that senior citizens are obnoxious or something on the level of a criminal.

My, how times and values have changed. When I was a child, older people were held in high esteem. According to "Not There Yet," aging is something to be ashamed of. "Not There" suggests that the best way to end the "prying practice" of asking if a person is a senior is to refuse to patronize establishments where they routinely ask such disgusting questions, and be sure to let the management know why.

How insulting! I think "Not There Yet" should have been signed ... "Not All There." — 74 And "All There" In Rancho Mirage

Dear Abby: Just a note to "Not There Yet," who is unhappy with clerks who ask if she is entitled to a senior citizen's discount: If that depresses you, just wait until they give you a discount without even asking. That will be a real day-spoiler. By then you will be delighted to have them ask you. — Jean Ward, Sun City, Ariz.

Breaking In Is Slow Process

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

NEW YORK — They may one day be known by their first names like Ralph (Lauren), Calvin (Klein) and Bill (Blass), but for the moment these worthy young designers are just getting their clothes and their names out to consumers. It is a slow process, with some on a faster track than others.

Most eschew a Seventh Avenue address for lofts or showrooms out of the usual path of store buyers as a way to keep costs down. Several can show off editorial credits from the fashion slicks, but only a small fashion distribution to back them up. Others are building up their retail following at a faster rate.

Of the five we checked in on recently, only one can boast that he will receive the prestigious Council of Fashion Designers of America Award given in the name of the late Perry Ellis for new fashion talent: Isaac Mizrahi will get the honor at a dinner at the Metropolitan Museum of Art on Jan. 9.

Mizrahi says he's given some thought to the fact that two of the three young designers who got the award before him have gone out of business.

"It has crossed my mind," says Mizrahi. "But my business is still so tiny and I never intend to take a huge jump ahead like the other winners. I don't expect to take over the world tomorrow."

"It would be great to be a great designer, but the first step is to get women to wear your clothes," says Leslie Samuel, 29, who has three seasons of mixed selling success under his belt. The first year he went out under his own label, Samuel — who previously was an assistant to Gloria Sachs, then Norma Kamali and David Cameron — got lots of good comments and photographs in the fashion magazines.

Prompted by his early success, he bought fine Italian wools and silks from Ratti and Etro in Como, Italy, that he adored for his second collection, this time to sell in the fall. They were not a big hit.

"The collection wasn't commercially viable. A young woman, who is my customer, only has so much money to spend," Samuel says. "The competition out there is real tough. Being expensive doesn't help."

"A part of designing is giving yourself limitations," he says philosophically. So for his third collection, which he introduced last month for spring, the fabrics are mostly domestic. The four-ply chiffon, for example, he bought as gray (undyed) goods and sent out to be dyed in saffron, deep red and ivory to his specification. The rayon is from North Carolina rather than Europe. And for the first time, Samuel, who was born in India, is using competitively priced Indian fabrics. Samuel's clothes sell for about $150 for pants or a blouse, $400 for a jacket.

"I've given myself guidelines. This is my price range. This is the quality of fabric and the amount of labor I can afford to use."

He also has curbed his work schedule. "Now I'm into normal hours — 8 in the morning till 6 at night, except on special occasions when I need to stay later. It leaves me the energy to work on keeping up quality standards."

Samuel has been approached by executives of several large companies offering him jobs, but has decided to stay on his own.

"I'm still prepared to starve a little," he says. "There's no easy way in this business. No instant success. You must pay the piper at some point."

"There has to be a good reason for leaving working for a designer and going out on your own. You must have something important to say. Just being a new name isn't enough," says Geoffrey Gertz, 24, who as a student worked for Gloria Sachs and later Perry Ellis.

"I wanted to make wonderful blazers, bringing newness into familiar shapes. Doing things with flare."

He uses the word "flare" quite literally. His jackets flare out to the hem. So do his tunics and even his hand-knit sweaters.

"The clothes should flow, but you should still see the shape of the body of the woman in them," he says.

When he can, Gertz travels to talk to potential customers and try to understand their needs. "Designers have to think beyond New York," he says. "I'm not into selling to the world. I just want to do enough business to stay in business."

"There is no reason for a woman to have to pay $1,000 for a jacket. Prices today are absurd," says Charlotte Neuville, 37, who anticipates $9 million in business this year, her second with her own collection. Her wool crepe jackets retail for $360, but a summer evening jacket in a fabric she couldn't resist will have a price tag of $800.

Over the two years her ideas about clothes and the importance of quality haven't changed, but she says she has. "I'm becoming more confident because now the clothes are selling."

Many of her clothes have their own scenario. A cotton sateen jacket, for instance, is called her "boyfriend's jacket" because it is the size and shape of a jacket you might borrow from a man. She imagines her long white crepe deck pants and shirt might have been worn by a woman in the 1930s going to Paris on a steamer by herself. "The fabric is a modern interpretation of what was worn then," she says.

Her husband Kenneth Merlo, formerly a lawyer in private practice, is now in business with her. "I would never see him if we weren't in business together," Neuville says. They've had to make an effort to avoid talking about business all the time. "With me it's a 24-hour preoccupation," she says.

Merlo says it takes $3 million and more than 2½ years before you know if you are a success in the business. "You need a deep pocket," he says. The other thing you need is time. "It takes a lot of time to get recognized and accepted," says Merlo. "It takes nine months from the time you start till you have something to sell."

And now there's another hazard. "The business climate is very difficult today," says Neuville. To make sure that her clothes have the most appeal possible on the hanger she has one woman whose main job is to go to stores to make sure everything looks right. "I'm passionate about hanger appeal," she says. "If you are not well known, the clothes have to call to the customer from 20 feet away. If that works, half the battle is won."

"It is easy just to pick the prettiest fabric available," says designer Patricia Clyne, 33. "But that doesn't work if you want to make things affordable." She does admit that if she sees an expensive fabric that is positively irresistible — well, then she goes on the theory that if she can't resist, her customer, who has been buying her clothes for six years, will not be able to resist either.

Clyne has put her office in the factory so she can watch every step of production. Overseeing the process is the most time-consuming part of her job. "You have to be ready to catch every mistake," she says. She's in on every fitting and okays every duplicate sample. At least twice a month she visits the contractor who makes some of her clothes. Her partners and assistants go as frequently as she does. "We're constantly looking because of Murphy's Law — if something can happen to go wrong, it will go wrong."

While her fabrics are mostly European, she has found good wool jersey and cotton shirting from domestic makers. "But anything special comes from Europe. Just on color alone, the Europeans seem to get things better."

As a child growing up on Staten Island she loved everything related to clothes. When she got old enough — age 17 — to be allowed to spend her Saturdays alone in New York, she practically bunked in at Bloomingdale's. "It became my home away from home." Eventually she got a job in the trendy Madison Avenue boutique Bitsy, Bunky and Nini, then was made fashion coordinator for the Brooklyn-based department store Abraham & Straus.

It was her husband David Wolfson who convinced her that from the clothes she made for herself she could well be a designer. Clyne started her business on $250,000 — "which is what it takes if you are a little bit crazy and want to work that hard." There were only two in the company in the beginning, herself and a pattern maker, both working six or seven days a week, 12 to 14 hours a day.

There are 12 people in the company now. Her mother-in-law — who worked with the great tailors Ben Zuckerman and Ben Reig — is her sample maker. Her husband became her working partner, "putting his hands in everything."

Says Clyne, "They told me that after my volume reached $500,000, I would make a profit. But only now, after six years in business and a $2 million volume, I finally feel that I have made it, that I'm in there solid."

Isaac Mizrahi is the most innovative of the new name designers, which has everything to do with why he is receiving the CFDA award next month. Innovative, not outrageous, and certainly not dull. His new sack pants and skirts start out as oversized squares, and the excess fabric is bunched up at the waist and held in place by a belt.

It all sounds complicated, but it is a simple idea that Mizrahi developed for himself as a comfortable pair of pants in Wedgwood blue canvas 10 years ago.

Legal Conflict Imperils N.Y. Camp

By Donald Smith
NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC

NEWCOMB, N.Y. — Sapling branches whipping at their faces, two rangers fought their way through underbrush toward the memory-haunted lake. They emerged just below the old boathouse.

"This is really in bad shape," forester Jim Papero said as he peered into the darkened interior through a broken window. "We're going to lose the whole structure in a couple of years. Too bad."

The boathouse, along with about 15 other log-and-stone buildings that sprawl over historic Camp Santanoni, is dying, caught in a web of conflicting laws and good intentions. "It's just going down the drain a little bit at a time," park administrator Joseph LaSpisa told National Geographic.

Santanoni is one of the Adirondack Mountains' celebrated "great camps": a 12,500-acre, pine-scented remnant of America's Gilded Age, the freewheeling period that followed the Civil War, before antitrust laws and income taxes, when a few purposeful individuals amassed tremendous fortunes.

The wealthiest — the Morgans, Vanderbilts, Astors and Whitneys — lived in houses that resembled the castles and chateaus of European lords. They threw regal costume parties and raced horses and yachts. To escape summer heat, they built marble seaside "cottages" in Newport, R.I., and, beginning in the 1880s, great, rustic hunting lodges amid the wild beauty of the Adirondacks.

"Hunting lodges like Alfred G.

Vanderbilt's Sagamore, with sleeping space for up to 100 guests; offered that peculiar graciousness of the English country seat, where guests might see their host occasionally at the dining table while enjoying the full hospitality of the estate," wrote Harvey H. Kaiser, author of "Great Camps of the Adirondacks."

Santanoni was one of the early great camps. It was built beginning in 1888 by Robert C. Pruyn, founder of a lumber company that still exists.

The Pruyns sold the holding in 1953 to a shoe magnate by the name of Melvin, whose family used the property as a wilderness retreat until tragedy struck in 1971. An 8-year-old great-nephew wandered into the woods and never returned. Divers scoured the bottom of Lake Newcomb in the largest manhunt ever conducted in the Adirondacks. The boy's disappearance remains a mystery.

The distraught family got rid of the camp. The following year the property passed through the hands of a local chapter of the Nature Conservancy, a group that buys and preserves wilderness land, and became part of New York's Adirondack Park.

This transaction ensured the survival of the land as wilderness. Under the state constitution, public park land must remain "forever wild."

The future of the camp itself, however, became problematical. Under the same constitution, the state may not legally lift a hammer to preserve the buildings. Despite nationwide public demand for preservation of historic and cultural landmarks, wilderness conservation groups such as the Sierra Club and the Audubon Society actively monitor Camp Santanoni to make sure no repairs are made.

"Santanoni is Exhibit A of where two very significant and very popular public policies are in direct conflict," said New York environmental conservation official J. Winthrop Aldridge, who would like to see the camp preserved. Thus far, proposals to convert the property to public use through some nonprofit organization, as has happened to Sagamore and J.P. Morgan's Camp Uncas, have founedered.

The great hall of Santanoni's main lodge, a soaring space of birchbark-lined walls, is dark at midday behind boarded-up windows. Most of the furnishings have been removed but some reminders of another age remain: a vintage reclining chair fashioned from bent tree limbs, with built-in rings for holding cocktail glasses; a 6-foot fireplace of four massive boulders.

In places, shafts of daylight stream through broken roof tiles. "Every time I come out here, there's more deterioration," said forester Papero. Gesturing back toward the road that winds five miles through the woods to the lodge, he added, "The only thing saving any of this from vandals is its distance from the highway. It's a wonder to me it all hasn't been burned down."

Although most of the buildings are padlocked, the camp is largely unguarded and at the mercy of passers-by. The area is barred to vehicles but open to hikers. Papero said more windows had been smashed since he last visited the site a year ago.

But Santanoni's worst enemy so far has been nature: Near the main lodge, some outbuildings, weakened by years of neglect, have collapsed under the weight of snow.

Waste Sites Change

Dickerson said that in the next few years, "budgets for solid waste management will be doubled due to federal regulations being placed on landfills. Some alternatives are estimated to cost in the range of seven times the present budget. These costs translate into from 4 cents to 24 cents increase in the county's tax rate if solid waste management continues to be financed by ad valorem taxes.

"Although recycling is only a part of the action which will be required to slow cost increases," Dickerson said, "it offers the only sure means of slowing cost increases without incurring additional environmental liabilities. It is estimated that with citizen participation, several cents' increase in the tax rate can be avoided by voluntary recycling."

Compactors at the three new sites, Dickerson said, will result in "considerable savings in the transportation of the waste" from the site to the landfill. "In most cases about two-thirds of the trips from the sites to the landfill are eliminated" through site compaction. "This savings is due to the fact that one com-packer container will hold three to five times the waste which can be placed in an open top container."

Another benefit of staffing the sites, Dickerson said, is that their appearance will be "vastly improved." Unmanned sites have tended to be unsightly due to windblown paper, while staffed sites are normally kept free of litter.

The three new sites at Bethel, Winterville and Ayden-Grifton, as well as the Bells Fork and Farmville centers, will be open from 7 a.m. until 6 p.m. every day.

Other permanent recycling centers include an aluminum, glass, cardboard and paper drop at Overton's Super Market parking lot on Jarvis Street, which is open 24 hours a day, and an aluminum, glass, cardboard and paper recycling site at the Greenville public works facility at 1500 Beatty St.

In addition to the normal recycling program, Dickerson said a buy-back program for aluminum and glass is available at the Bells Fork site each Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. until 3 p.m.

Dickerson said people having questions or suggestions about the county's recycling efforts should call 830-6354.

Main Counts Against North Dropped

"The court has no factual basis to question" the classification of documents that the administration says it cannot allow to be disclosed at North's trial, Gesell said.

Meanwhile, Walsh embarked on an effort to protect the remaining 12 criminal charges against North from the problems of classified information that plagued the conspiracy and theft counts.

Walsh said in a court filing Thursday that North's possible offenses to the other 12 counts "are narrowly circumscribed" and that "the classified information problems" affecting the conspiracy and theft charges "should no longer be at issue."

Walsh's view clashes with the one expressed a week ago by defense attorney Brendan Sullivan, who said, "Classified information pervades the remaining charges as well."

At the conclusion of today's court hearing, Gesell announced that lawyers from both sides were to meet immediately in his chambers to discuss matters pertaining to classified information.

Four of the remaining charges relate North's alleged obstruction of inquiries in September and October 1985 by misrepresenting his activities to Congress.

Walsh said the government also will prove North denied in the 1986 presidential inquiry by Attorney General Edwin Meese III that the NSC was involved in the diversion of an arms sale money and that North told Meese the Israelis controlled the diversion.

Walsh said in the court filing Thursday that "the government's case no longer depends on proving that the proceeds of the Iranian arms sales constituted government property, or that by diverting those proceeds to the Contras, North embezzled them."

He said "classified information problems affecting Counts One and Two (the conspiracy and theft charges) should no longer be an issue."

Still, Walsh said North may attempt to bring classified information into the case by saying that he covered up his activities because superiors directed him to or because everything he did was "authorized and perfectly legal." Under neither approach should North be permitted "to import classified information," said Walsh.

However, Gesell said Monday that while motive does not determine guilt or innocence under the law, North has a right to show the activities he sought to cover up were not illegal. North might then seek to bring in some of the same classified information that led Walsh to abandon the conspiracy and theft charges.

Walsh said the government would prove North solicited funds for the Contras from private donors, helped Contra leader Adolfo Calero obtain weapons, played a role in the Contras' opening a southern front and provided military advice and intelligence.

East Carolina Hosting Dukes, Lefty Driesell

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

East Carolina University's basketball Pirates enter a crucial weekend series in the Colonial Athletic Association, hosting James Madison on Saturday and George Mason on Monday.

Both games are scheduled for 7:30 p.m. tipoffs in Minges Coliseum.

East Carolina's Lady Pirates will be on the road against the same two opponents, traveling to James Madison on Saturday and on to George Mason on Monday.

The Pirates are coming off an 83-56 spanking at the hands of the University of Richmond while James Madison is coming off an 84-81 win over American University. George Mason, an 84-73 winner of Navy in a CAA game Wednesday, will play at UNC-Wilmington on Saturday prior to facing the Pirates on Monday.

James Madison leads its series with the Pirates, 10-6, but East Carolina holds a 5-3 edge in games played in Minges.

East Carolina won both of the games played last year, taking a 68-65 victory in Harrisonburg, while claiming a 70-66 win in Minges.

But the Dukes, who finished tied for sixth in the conference last season with a 5-9 league mark and a 10-18 overall record, have found new life this year under new coach Charles "Lefty" Driesell.

Driesell, coming off a two-year hiatus from coaching following his leaving the University of Maryland's head coaching position in the wake of Len Bias' cocaine-induced death, has turned the Madison program around immediately.

The Dukes were picked to finish last in the conference in all of the pre-season polls, but currently are in second place in the league standings with a 2-0 record. Madison is 9-5 overall.

What's been the most surprising thing for the Dukes is that they've done this without a starter returning from last year's team — well, maybe one. Claude Ferdinand, a 6-6 junior guard, was a sometime starter for the Dukes last season.

Joining him in this year's lineup are 6-0 sophomore Kenny Brooks at guard, 6-6 freshman Troy Bostic at center, 6-5 senior Anthony Cooley and 6-5 sophomore Barry Brown at the forwards.

William Davis, a 6-5 freshman forward, is the Dukes' leading scorer at 14.4, but is not listed in the latest starting lineup for JMU. Cooley is next with a 13.1 mark, while Brooks is hitting 11.8 and Fer-

Bryant Captures Lead At Hope

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PALM DESERT, Calif. — After four years of nagging injuries, financial struggle and professional frustration, Brad Bryant is back.

"I think I'm almost as good a player as I was before I got hurt," the 34-year-old Bryant said after taking the second-round lead Thursday in the $1 million Bob Hope Classic.

"I know my game has matured, that I have matured. Adversity makes you grow."

Bryant has had his share of that. Take 1984, for example.

"It wasn't a very good year. I was hurt three times. My father almost died. My wife almost died. But the only fatality was my golf game."

A shoulder injury at the PGA national championship, eventually requiring surgery in 1985, ushered in a four-year period in which Bryant didn't win enough money to cover expenses.

"We thought about doing something else," he said, "but it seemed like the Lord didn't want us to do anything else."

"We thought about teaching. We thought about a golf pro club job. We thought about opening a hunting camp."

But he stuck with competitive golf, playing the PGA Tour when and where he could, playing the mini-tours when he was healthy, staying home when he had to.

"In a way, they were good years," Bryant said. "I was home about five months each year. My wife and I got to spend a lot of time together. We

Romping Pack Gives Valvano New Strength

By Tom Foreman Jr.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Beset by allegations in a soon-to-be-published book about his basketball program, North Carolina State coach Jim Valvano says he has found strength in those people who mean the most to him.

"I'm very proud of the team. Time will tell, certainly it has been a major distraction, maybe more for me than for the kids," Valvano said after his team took a 97-69 victory over Coastal Carolina. "I've had to maintain an upbeat attitude. So far, they have been my support system. I probably feel most at home in the lockerroom with my players and at home with my family."

Normally, Valvano whips out oneliners with the same speed his Wolfpack uses in its transition game. However, as he and the basketball community await publication of "Personal Fouls," a look at the 1986-87 Wolfpack basketball team, the humor has been replaced by a serious side rarely seen from the 43-year-old coach.

As a result, team members have rallied behind Valvano.

"After Temple, he was really down," said senior Chuck Brown, whose early efforts helped the Wolfpack shake off its sluggish beginning. "We just pulled him aside and told him we were behind him and supported him."

Valvano also has discovered that his lifelong coaching philosophies have not been lost on his current team, which is 10-1.

"My kids have been telling me things I've been telling them for 22 years. (Center Brian D'Amico) gave me a hug after the game. Kelsey (Weems) told me to hang tough."

Indeed, it was N.C. State that had to hang tough in the early moments.

"I think all of us came out a little flat," Brown said. "It took us a while to find the groove."

Coastal Carolina kept pace for the opening 10 minutes and was within 16-15 after Richard Scantlebury's three-point play with 10:32 left in the first half. N.C. State came back with a 12-2 run and essentially put the game out of reach for their eighth straight victory and a 10-1 mark.

Brown seemed unaffected by the early doldrums, hitting seven of N.C. State's first 12 points.

"Every game, I try to play like it's my last game since it's my senior year," Brown said.

Coastal Carolina, 4-8, got within 28-21 after Scantlebury scored at 4:56, but a 10-0 run sparked by six points from Lester gave N.C. State a 38-21 lead three minutes before halftime.

The Wolfpack stretched its 45-27 halftime lead to as much as 88-52 after reserve Mickey Hinnant's dunk with 4:47 left.

Valvano admitted the week thus far has been difficult.

"We haven't practiced well at all this week, and I think that showed early on," he said. "I wasn't at all pleased with the way we opened up, but then we put together a nice spurt at the close of the first half."

D'Amico, a reserve, had 11 points for N.C. State, which won its eighth straight game. Chris Corchiani and Rodney Monroe scored 10 points apiece for N.C. State.

Scantlebury had 20 and Derek Wilson 12 for the Chanticleers.

"Tonight is the most we've lost our poise since we have been playing Division I," Coastal Carolina coach Russ Bergman said. "We didn't execute anything we wanted to. Part of that is a credit to N.C. State because they are a very good basketball team."

Lady Pirates Edge Past A&T

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

East Carolina's Lady Pirates ran out to a 12-point lead in the first half, then held off North Carolina A&T to take a 64-58 basketball victory in Minges Coliseum Thursday night.

The Aggies, who went nearly five minutes in the first half without a basket, cut the lead back to five before the half ended, fell back by 11 once again, then rallied to within three on several occasions.

But each time, East Carolina came up with the key basket to hold off the charge and eventually pull out the victory.

Most pleasing to Coach Pat Pierson was the fact that the Lady Pirates hit their free throws when they had to — something they had not been doing of late. But this time, the Pirates nailed six of seven in the final two minutes and seven of nine in the half to help themselves along.

"We had good senior leadership in the clutch," Pierson added. "I didn't think we played well offensively at times, but we got the key baskets we needed in pressure situations. Chris (O'Connor), Pam (Williams) and Gretta (Savage) all got big baskets for us and had good games. They played with a lot of confidence."

"A&T is not a bad team. They do well in their league and they play good competition," the coach said.

The Aggies led throughout much of the first seven minutes of the game. East Carolina tied it up at 2-2, 4-4 and 6-6 but couldn't find the range when the opportunity arose for the lead.

Finally, however, Tonya Hargrove hit off an assist from O'Connor to give the Lady Pirates an 11-10 lead and they never trailed again.

O'Connor went on to record three assists in the game, moving her career total to 153 and moving her into

Lang's Progress Makes Him Main Cog For Jags

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

FARMVILLE — Not too long ago, Farmville Central's Jarvis Lang was put on basketball teams just to make the sides even. Now the 6-5½ junior center is one of the main cogs on the 9-2 Jaguar club.

In fact, just last Friday in an Eastern Plains Conference game against C.B. Aycock, Lang scored a school-record 40 points and hauled down 14 rebounds to lead the Jaguars to a 87-64 win.

In the Aycock game, Lang connected on 14 field goals and was true on 12-14 attempts at the free throw line.

Even with his new-found fame, Lang vividly remembers backyard games during his elementary school years when he was the least talented player participating.

"When I was growing up, we had a basketball goal in the backyard," Lang said. "My cousins used to come over and play and they'd sometimes ask me to play when they needed an extra person."

"I didn't really want to play but I did," Lang said. "Then I just got interested in the game and wanted to play."

After learning the sport, Lang decided to try out for the Farmville Middle School team in the when he was in the seventh grade.

"I went out for the team, but I didn't make it," Lang said. "They had better people than me trying out."

Being cut from the squad made Lang strive even harder to make it the next season.

Lang succeeded in gaining a spot on the team the next year, but to his dislike, it was as a reserve player until his big break came later in the year.

"I didn't get to start at first but one day one of the starters got into an argument with the coach and quit the team," Lang said.

That opened up a spot in the starting lineup which Lang was given. He went on to finish the season as the team's most valuable player.

Lang could very well earn MVP honors with the Jaguars this season.

Through Farmville's first 11 games, Lang is averaging 18.1 points per game. Prior to the Aycock game last Friday, his high game was against Havelock when he poured in 24 points to pace the Jaguars to a 84-62 victory. That win by Farmville helped avenge a 60-56 earlier loss to the Rams.

Lang won't have the opportunity to avenge the Jaguars' other loss, a 46-45 heartbreaker to J.H. Rose in the semifinals of the Overton's WNCT-TV Holiday Classic. In that game, Lang missed a free throw with one second left which would have tied the game and sent it into overtime.

"That was the probably the low point for me since I've been playing basketball," Lang said. "After the game I was feeling like it was my fault. But then I realized that basketball is a team game, one person can't win or lose a game."

With that behind him, Lang's sights are set on his ultimate goal.

"My goal is to help the team as much as I can and win the state championship," Lang said.

Personal goals for Lang this season are to average 18 points per game and gain recognition as a major college basketball prospect heading into his senior campaign next season at Farmville.

Jaguar coach Mike Terrell thinks Lang will get the recognition if he continues to improve.

"I think he's definitely going to be a Division I prospect," Terrell said. "He's got the tools. He's still got some learning to do, but he's only a junior."

Terrell said Lang may still be adjusting to being labeled as the "leader" of the team.

"Last year there wasn't any pressure on him, but since he made all-conference people are expecting

FAYETTEVILLE — Pitt Community College started out cold Thursday night and wound up falling to the Methodist College JV's, 72-52 on the road. The Paladins were ice cold in the first 10 minutes of the game, scoring only two points. With 10:49 left in the opening half, Methodist was on top 13-2. In the second half, PCC closed to within eight with 17:58 left in the game, but never managed to get any closer. The Paladins were without leading scorer Ricky Conleton in the game. He failed to make the bus trip. Methodist was led in scoring by Steve Shinhoster's 16 points, while Eric Hunt added 15. ## Measles Put Catawba Hoops On Hold SALISBURY, N.C. (AP) — Catawba College must postpone its men's and women's basketball games until further notice because of a red measles epidemic which has put Rowan County under quarantine, school officials announced Thursday. Both teams were scheduled to resume their seasons Wednesday, but health officials have banned sporting and social events until further notice. Catawba's athletic events could be cancelled for the next three weeks. "This thing is unfortunate because I really feel that this team found itself in the Bahamas," said men's coach Sam Moir in reference to the recent Great Goombay Shootout in Nassau. The Indians averaged 108 points per game. Catawba will practice every day and hold intersquad games on days where regular contests had been scheduled. The men's team was 5-6 after splitting two games in the Nassau tournament. Coach Gary Peters' women's team is 7-5 and have not played a game since Dec. 7. The quarantine also affects Livingstone College and all high school teams.

Lloyd, Wiggins Hoping For Reinstatement

HOUSTON (AP) — Lewis Lloyd and Mitchell Wiggins, former Houston Rockets guards, are planning to apply for reinstatement into the National Basketball Association after a two-year absence due to drug use. Lloyd and Wiggins become eligible to apply for reinstatement Friday after being banned by the league Jan. 13, 1987, when they tested positive for drugs. Chicago attorney Herb Rudoy, who used to be Wiggins' agent, said Wiggins "definitely" will apply. "I just wrote a letter of recommendation to the commissioner," Rudoy said. "Mitchell Wiggins has been clean for a long time." Under terms of the Anti-Drug Agreement, the league will conduct an investigation of about 45 days after a player applies for reinstatement. The player will then meet with the league's general counsel, followed by an interview with Commissioner David Stern. With that timetable in mind, both Lloyd and Wiggins hope to be re-admitted for the start of the 1989-90 season. Houston General Manager Ray Patterson said he would have no comment about whether he might consider taking either player back. Lloyd and Wiggins each have had problems since leaving the Rockets. Lloyd voluntarily checked into the Powell III Treatment Center in Des Moines, Iowa, last fall, shortly after winning Most Valuable Player honors in the United States Basketball League. Lloyd is eligible to reapply for admission to the Continental Basketball Association in March.

Sponsors Are Key To Winston Cup Success

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — Corporate sponsorship of NASCAR drivers has become big-time business, where the stakes are high for both the drivers and the companies, representatives of both groups said. Bob Emerick of Chevrolet said his company has a slogan which pinpoints the carmaker's philosophy about being involved in motorsports. "Win on Sunday, sell on Monday," he told a seminar Thursday during the annual Charlotte Motor Speedway media tour. "Ninety percent of our dealers feel racing is very important to Chevrolet." "During the NASCAR season, when our cars are winning, Chevrolet as the first choice preference (among car buyers) is very high," Emerick said. "In the car business, if you're not interested in racing you're probably comatose." Corporate sponsorship was the focus of a panel discussion featuring team owner Rick Hendrick and representatives of Chevrolet and Tide, which sponsor Waltrip. "I can remember when all we saw at the tracks was beer and tobacco," said Hendrick, who owns 31 automobile dealerships and three Winston Cup racing teams. "Now they're selling everything from detergent to ladies' underwear." Big-time sponsors like Tide, Coors, Hardee's and Miller have backed winners in recent seasons. Now smaller companies are joining the fun. "On a typical race day there are 40 drivers and 75 sponsors so each driver is split three or four ways," Hendrick said. "This doesn't happen with an National Football League team. Michael Jordan may do a commercial for $8 million, but that's it." Winston Cup drivers, on the other hand, are expected to make numerous appearances on behalf of their sponsors.

Knight Aims At 500th Win

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — Bob Knight needs only an Indiana defeat of Northwestern on Saturday to achieve his 500th career coaching victory, but he puts down the idea of that kind of milestone.

For the man regarded as both a genius and a profane boor, a fiery field general and the bad boy of the college courts, basketball is more than a game.

"If your goals are to win championships, or to win 'X' games, then I think those are very, very superficial goals," Knight has said. "I don't think those are the kinds of things that can sustain you very long."

"I think you have to derive interest from things other than merely winning basketball games or championships. If that's all that brought any enjoyment from this thing, I'd have gotten out of it a long time ago."

He has found enough to sustain him through 24 seasons, six at Army and the last 18 at Indiana. He also has collected a lot of hardware along the way — three NCAA Tournament titles, a National Invitation Tournament crown, eight Big Ten championships and gold medals as coach of victorious United States teams in the 1979 Pan American Games and 1984 Olympics.

Controversy has stalked him nearly every step of the way, from his arrest for assaulting a policeman during the Pan Am Games in Puerto Rico to slam-dunking a fan into a trash can.

"If I live long enough, what happens next is I outlive my enemies," Knight said. "They'll all be gone and I'll be an elder statesman and everybody will like me. That's my next step."

The 48-year-old Knight, whose record of 499-183 includes a 397-133 mark at Indiana, would be the second-youngest major-college coach to reach 500 victories. Former Oklahoma State coach Hank Iba was nine months younger when he reached that plateau.

A master of intimidation whose controversies have amused and infuriated Hoosier fans and opponents alike, Knight has protested officiating by throwing a chair across the court and by yanking his team from the court, forfeiting a game to the Soviets.

He has gone to court against the NCAA and gone to war with Indiana fans for not cheering loudly enough at times and for chanting obscenities at opposing teams at other times. He has been publicly reprimanded by the university, the Big Ten and the NCAA.

"You can knock the French pastry around it, the salty language and everything else, but you can't knock his coaching," former Marquette coach Al McGuire once said.

Knight considers himself more a teacher than a coach and, while his antics may capture national attention once or twice a season, he garners respect for the scrupulous honesty and fierce loyalty he demands of himself and his players.

No one ever has been lured to Indiana with a promise of instant stardom. He deplores cheating and has no sympathy whatever for schools or coaches who run afoul of the rules.

Knight and college basketball first met on the Ohio State campus. He was a substitute on the Jerry Lucas-John Havlicek-Larry Siegfried teams that won the 1960 NCAA title and lost to Cincinnati in the 1961 and 1962 championship games.

After graduating in 1962, he was an assistant high school coach in Ohio for a year, then entered the Army and was assigned to West Point as an assistant. Two years later, at age 24, he was named head coach when Bates Locke left for Miami, Ohio.

Knight's Army teams, with his trademark defensive style of play, won 102 of 152 games in six years. In 1971, at age 30, he succeeded Lou Watson at Indiana and inherited a program that had produced only two winning seasons in six years.

His first season, the Hoosiers went 17-8. The next, Indiana was 22-6, won the Big Ten title and finished third in the NCAA Tournament. Then, over two seasons, the Hoosiers won 62 of 63 games, won the 1976 NCAA championship behind All-Americans Scott May and Kent Benson and sent their top eight players into pro basketball.

Indiana also won NCAA titles in 1981 and 1987 and the NIT in 1979.

His program has sent 19 players to the NBA, and also has been a breeding ground for college coaches — Mike Krzyzewski at Duke, Dave Bliss at New Mexico, Jim Crews at Evansville, Don DeVoe at Tennessee, Bob Donewald at Illinois State and Tom Miller at Colorado.

Locke, the coach Knight assisted and then replaced at Army, has come back to work for his former pupil as an assistant.

Knight, who recently remarried, has had offers to work elsewhere, including the NBA and in television, but he never really considered leaving until last spring, when he came close to taking the job at New Mexico.

"It comes down to the job itself," Knight said. "There's a certain energy level to every job. We have developed a situation here (at Indiana) where we can do it effectively with 'X' energy. If I go to New Mexico, then it's 'X' plus quite a bit."

big things out of him this year," Terrell said. "So far, he's handled it very well. He's going to be double and triple teamed a lot by teams, but that will work to our advantage. Jarvis is lucky in that he's got a good supporting cast around him."

The Jaguars rolled through the Eastern Plains Conference regular season race last year finishing 12-0 in the league and 22-5 overall. The season closed on a sour note when North Pitt knocked them off in the conference tournament, something that still bothers Lang.

"This year we're hoping to win the regular season along with the tournament," Lang said. "We think we can win it all."

Pirates..

dinand, 11.3. Bostic is averaging 10.1. He is also the leading rebounder at 7.3 while Cooley has a 6.5 average.

Brown has 35 blocked shots, just one shy of the single season record. He blocked seven against American, a single game record.

George Mason, 5-7 overall and 1-1 in the league, was one of the pre-season favorites in the league, along with American. But the Patriots have struggled despite the return of the CAA Player of the Year, Kenny Sanders.

Mason holds an 11-4 lead in the series with the Pirates, including a 5-2 edge in Minges. Last year, Mason swept the Pirates, 77-63 in the Patriot Center, and 67-64 in Minges.

East Carolina brings a 1-1 league record into the JMU game, and is 7-6 overall.

Pirate Coach Mike Steele regards the series as crucial for his Pirates. "Any time you have home games, it's critical," Steele said. "At the start of the season, we looked at the first two (CAA) games and said that we'd like to have a split and that's what we got. We had a chance against Richmond — it was a 10-point game when Blue (Edwards) fouled out. We feel bad about the (size of the loss), but we have to look at it like it was a 10-point loss and come back."

Steele said he had been surprised somewhat by James Madison. "I'm sure that they're playing with a lot of enthusiasm and confidence. They had good talent last year but just never came around. They beat (CAA champ) Richmond at home last year. They're the same team with a couple of incoming players who are pretty good. They have a new attitude, it looks like."

And while Madison has been a surprise in winning, Mason has been a surprise by its somewhat lack of success thus far. "They have a lot of kids back, but they've had three coaches in three years and that's tough."

The Pirates, down to only nine players, will have to "try and survive the next couple of weeks," Steele said. East Carolina lost guard Jimmy Hinton, who decided to quit the team before Christmas; center Brooks Bryant, sidelined with an injury for at least another two weeks; and Kevin Staples, suspended after having been arrested and charged with several counts of larceny and breaking and entering. Casey Mote, a freshman post player, was scheduled to be re-drafted this year, but Steele said that Mote's situation may be reviewed now.

Following the series with JMU and GMU, East Carolina takes to the road next weekend to face American and Navy.

Miami Shocks Kansas, 87-86

Number 16 Kansas ran into problems at Miami. Joel Warren's foul shot with two seconds left enabled the Hurricanes to upset last season's national champions 87-86.

Miami ended the Jayhawks' 11-game winning streak with its first victory over a Top Twenty team since reinstating the basketball program four seasons ago.

"It was like in the movies — the kid that hardly ever scores gets in and makes one point to win the game," said Warren, a senior reserve. His first foul shot bounced off the rim before he swished the second try for his only point of the game.

Warren was fouled as he attempted a layup. His first free throw bounced off the rim but he swished the second try.

Dennis Burns scored 25 points and Eric Brown had 23 points and 10 rebounds for Miami, 10-6.

Milt Newton scored 20 points for Kansas, 13-2. He made two foul shots with 11 seconds left to tie it at 86.

Elsewhere, No. 2 Illinois swamped Wisconsin 103-80, No. 6 Michigan topped Wisconsin 98-83, No. 12 Arizona defeated Oregon State 85-64 and No. 20 Providence routed Central Connecticut State 105-56.

Eagles Take Two In Tourney

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Trinity Christian Academy picked up a pair of wins Thursday to advance to the semifinals of the Free Will Baptist College Invitational Basketball Tournament in Nashville, Tenn.

The Eagles swept past Mingo Academy of West Virginia 72-52 in their first game Thursday before topping Gateway Academy of Virginia in their nightcap, 61-50.

The two wins push Trinity to 9-1 for the year and into the semifinals of the winners bracket against Woodbine Academy of Nashville today at 6 p.m. If the Eagles defeat Woodbine, they will play for the championship Saturday morning at 9 a.m. If they lose, they will play again at 9:30 p.m. tonight.

In the Mingo game, the Eagles placed a trio of scorers in double figures in picking up the win. Kreston Welch led the way with 18 points, while Kirk Welch chipped in 17 and Michael Harrell 14. Kirk Welch also added 15 rebounds.

Trinity jumped out to a quick lead over Mingo and never looked back. By the half, the Eagles led 39-18. Mingo's only offensive threat in the game was Billy Deskins, who scored 37 points.

In the win over Gateway, Kirk Welch led the way for the Eagles with 24 points, while Kreston Welch chipped in 16 and Gerrod Fulton 12.

Trinity got off to a slow start in this game and were behind 23-21 at the half after only scoring six points in the second quarter. In the first half, Trinity connected on only 7-31 shots from the field.

Cee Edwards led Bath with 14 points while Tony Woolard added 11. Jamesville had no one in double figures.

In the girls' game, Jamesville took a 12-5 lead in the first period only to see Bath come back and grab a 26-19 halftime lead. But the Lady Bullets cut the lead to 36-32 in the third quarter and outscored Bath, 17-10, in the final period to win it.

10th place on the all-time assist list, replacing Gale Kerbaugh and Kathy Riley, each of whom had 151. Irish Hamilton, with five assists, upped her total to 170, and moved past Fran Hooks, with 167, into seventh place on the list.

And Savage, with three blocked shots on the night, brought her career total to 52, tying Anita Anderson for sixth place in that category.

O'Connor added another basket on a baseline jumper for a 13-10 lead and the Lady Pirates slowly inched away over the next three minutes to build up as 12-point lead, 25-13. A&T scored its 13th point with 9:24 showing on a jumper by Deidra Cheeks, but didn't score again until 4:34 when Helena Creamer hit a short jumper. East Carolina scored 10 unanswered points during that gap in building up the big lead.

But in the final minutes of the half, A&T rallied, led by nine points by Paulette Dennis, trimming the lead to 31-26 at the horn.

Dennis scored 4:10 into the second half to cut the lead to three, 35-32, but Williams and Savage each hit after that to push the Lady Pirates back out by seven, 39-32. Sarah Gray and Savage each scored after that to up the lead to 44-33, the largest margin of the second half.

A&T refused to die, however, and once again came back, cutting the lead to three once more, 48-45, with 6:13 left.

But again, the Pirates answered the challenge as O'Connor and Gray scored to move back out by seven once more. Another run by the Aggies cut it to three again at 56-53, but O'Connor made two free throws. Creamer then hit again for A&T and Hamilton made two more at the stripe to counter. Savage scored underneath to open the lead to seven, 62-55 with 44 seconds left and the clock was then against A&T's attempts to rally.

O'Connor led East Carolina with 14 points while Gray added 12, Hargrove had 11 and Savage, 10.

A&T was led by Dennis with 15, Cheeks with 14 and Creamer with 10.

East Carolina improves to 6-5 with the win while A&T drops to 6-5.

Woody Peele

It's the year of the upstart thus far in the Colonial Athletic Association. And while there's still a long way to go before the 1988-89 CAA champion is crowned, there have been some surprises thus far.

When then CAA held its annual Tipoff meeting in Williamsburg, Va., last November, just about everyone was looking either to American or George Mason to win the championship.

If there was a dark-horse, it was UNC-Wilmington. East Carolina was also looked upon by some as a championship contender.

But that was it. Richmond's Spiders lost three of its top players to graduation as they came off a championship season. James Madison had no starters returning — and even the legendary Lefty Driesell was not expected to be able to lift them out of the CAA's cellar. William & Mary was thought to be improved and moving up to the middle of the pack, while Navy was seen as a sure second division team.

Look at the CAA standings.

There, atop the league are Richmond at 3-0 and James Madison at 2-0. Both teams have beaten American University, the CAA coaches' pick to win. Richmond has added wins over UNC-Wilmington and East Carolina, the other two teams picked to finish in the top four. Madison's other win was against Navy.

George Mason, the pick of the media to win the championship, has struggled. The Patriots are 5-7 overall and 1-1 in the league, having beaten Navy.

UNC-Wilmington, 1-1, has beaten William & Mary and lost to Richmond. The Seahawks are also 5-7 overall.

East Carolina, the only pre-season top four pick with a winning record is 7-6, but is 1-1 after getting kicked by the Spiders in Richmond Wednesday. The Pirates open an important series with JMU and GMU this weekend.

American is currently 1-2 in the league and 5-5 overall. Navy and William & Mary are both struggling — as many predicted. Navy is 3-9 and William & Mary 2-10.

One thing is certain — nearly everyone predicted that there would be a great deal more parity in the league than has been in the past. That prediction appears to be coming true.

A lot of basketball still lies ahead, and the tournament could wind up being anybody's to claim.

A belated congratulation is due Vickie Spivey, who won this year's football picking contest. Spivey went 11-6 during the bowls to finish up with a 114-43 record for the season.

Second place was taken by Tom Baines, who wound up at 108-49, while Tim Chandler finished strong to take third with a 106-51 record. Chandler had the best bowl game record at 12-5.

Tom Morris took fourth at 103-54, following by me at 98-59. Greg Laudick wound up in the cellar with a 93-64 record.

Valvano Speaks About Allegations

By Tom Foreman Jr.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — North Carolina State basketball coach Jim Valvano recalls his relationship with a manager on the 1986-87 team as one that wasn't destined to go beyond that season. Unexpectedly, it has been re-established.

The manager, John A. Simonds Jr., is thought to be at the source of allegations printed on the dust jacket of a forthcoming book on Wolfpack basketball. Valvano, surrounded by reporters following his team's 97-69 victory Thursday night over Coastal Carolina, said the two didn't necessarily see eye-to-eye that year.

"Obviously, John and I had a difference of opinion about what happened," Valvano said. "I'm not sure whether he wanted to come back or not, but he wasn't invited back."

Asked to elaborate, Valvano said, "I've probably said more than I intended to tonight. I'm trying hard each day not to have to go over this."

Valvano is at the eye of the storm surrounding the book, "Personal Fouls," written by Peter Golenbock and to be published by Simon and Schuster's Pocketbooks division. The News and Observer of Raleigh obtained a copy of the dust jacket and published details of the allegations last weekend.

The dust jacket description charges the Wolfpack program made payments to players, had grades changed and kept secret the results of drug tests. Another allegation said a player "deliberately lost" a 1987 NCAA first-round game because winning would have meant drug testing — which could have affected his prospects of playing in the NBA.

"There's not a coach or athletic director in this country who could say that there may not be some wrongdoing in their program," Valvano said. "But I'm telling you as I've said from day one that I have never violated, knowingly, any NCAA rule since I have been here."

Valvano said he is amazed at the number of stories published about the allegations, specifically that he could wield such influence.

"The power that has been given to me has been shocking. Does anyone here think I actually have that ability? That's astounding," Valvano said.

Valvano, usually ready with one-liners, got into a heated discussion with a reporter after a question about N.C. State's drug-testing program and the fact that results are kept confidential.

"We're trying to help young people as opposed to find them out, vilify them in the press and throw them off the campus and say 'That's not the way to act,'" Valvano said. "That's not what the program is. It is not my program. It is the university's program."

attacked charges by the former head of the physical education department that N.C. State Chancellor Bruce Poulton knew of changes in grades for former basketball player Chris Washburn. Poulton denied knowledge of such an incident, and several school officials Thursday said the allegations were not true.

"Valvano-bashing at times is a popular faculty function," he said. "Don't print that I'm running around pressuring people to change grades."

Meanwhile, Simonds, 25, told the Raleigh newspaper on Wednesday that he had talked with Golenbock. Now a student at Florida State University, Simonds told the newspaper on Thursday that he expected to profit from the publication of the Golenbock book.

Simonds did not tell the newspaper that he supplied the information for the book, but he said Golenbock contacted him about the book. He would not discuss his relationship with Golenbock or elaborate on the contents of "Personal Fouls."

Simonds said it was a "logical presumption" that he would benefit financially from the book. But he refused to say how much money he expected to receive or if he would get a percentage of the book's profits.

Also, Dave Kindred, a columnist for the Atlanta Journal and Constitution, says he was approached in 1987 by two people connected with N.C. State who wanted him to write a book about what they described as corruption in the Wolfpack basketball program.

Kindred said the people wanted to be paid for their information, according to the newspaper. He identified the two as Simonds and Lienne C. Federico, a former N.C. State academic skills aide.

Federico, now employed by the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, left N.C. State after the 1986-87 season. She said she was not aware of any grade changes.

"When I left my position at N.C. State, I was very upset about the way the academic advising for athletes was being administered. I told a number of people that for $25,000, I would write my own book myself about how I would organize an academic support system for division I teams," Federico told WWAY-TV in Wilmington, N.C.

"As far as I know there are no NCAA infractions connected with the Wolfpack and I do not question the integrity of State's faculty or athletic program," she said.

In another development, the office of N.C. Attorney General Lacy Thornburg has sent a letter to Simon and Schuster, asking the firm not to publish the book until N.C. State can answer allegations of wrongdoing.

Members of the University of North Carolina Board of Governors said Poulton should direct any inquiry into the allegations.

While his basketball team has responded to the pressure of the allegations with two victories, Valvano said the controversy has taken a toll on his wife and three daughters.

"It hasn't been pleasant for them at times," he said.

Knicks Avenge Loss To Hornets

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The New York Knicks, after waiting two weeks to avenge their most embarrassing loss of the season, still took a full first half to work up some intensity.

"We weren't as emotionally high as we should have been," back-up guard Trent Tucker said. "It's something we have to work on."

Charles Oakley scored six of his 12 points during a 15-0 spurt that opened the third quarter Thursday night, and the Knicks beat the Charlotte Hornets 106-89.

Mark Jackson led the Knicks with 18 points and Patrick Ewing had 13 points and 13 rebounds, helping New York to its 12th straight home victory.

Oakley also added 12 rebounds.

New York is 15-1 this season at Madison Square Garden. Charlotte has lost 11 consecutive road games and is 1-15 on the road.

On Dec. 30 at Charlotte, the only other game between the two clubs, the Hornets crushed the Knicks with a 122-111 victory. It took the Knicks a while to stop shaking their heads.

"We know they're not pushovers," Jackson said. "But you're bound to have a mental lapse after playing the really good clubs."

The Knicks, coming off a 100-93 victory over the Detroit Pistons on Wednesday night, started out slowly, trailing 31-29 after the first quarter. But they managed to tie the game at 48-48 at halftime.

The Knicks then built up a frenzy in the third quarter. Toughening their man-to-man defense, they outscored the Hornets 32-13 in the quarter by holding them to 3-for-18 from the field.

"We made an incredible leap in the third quarter," Johnny Newman said. "You could feel the change. We doubled the intensity we had at the start of the game."

Oakley's layup capped the start-of-the-quarter streak and gave the Knicks a 63-50 lead with 6:35 left. Dave Hoppen's layup with 5:48 left in the quarter was the first points for Charlotte in the second half.

"We have a tendency to come out in the second half and look at the scoreboard," the Hornets' Robert Reid said. "We knew we weren't trailing and we thought that was all right. We got somewhat complacent and lost our fire."

Teammate Kelly Tripucka added, "We stopped being aggressive against a club that really makes you pay the price for not hustling."

Rex Chapman topped the Hornets with 19 points and Tripucka had 16.

Charlotte led by as many as six points five times in the second quarter — the largest lead of the first half.

New York shot 33 percent in the second quarter and Charlotte shot 32 percent, but the Knicks outscored the Hornets 19-17, tying the score.

The Knicks led by as many as 22 points twice late in the third quarter. "Charlotte is a very good basketball team, and they're especially a good defensive team," Jackson said.

"They make you work for everything and we really had to bring out the game in the second half."

Hornets coach Dick Harter was half satisfied with his team — the first half. "They simply wore us down in the second. They were out-hustling us right from the start and got a lot of easy baskets. We got very careless and completely forgot about the fundamentals of the game."

New York raised its record to 23-11, its best start since 1980-81. The Knicks didn't win their 23rd game last season until March 1, their 55th game.

Dale Ellis scored 36 points, including four 3-pointers, and Seattle won at home for the 12th consecutive time, topping the Dallas Mavericks, 117-77. Dallas lost its sixth straight game.

Ellis ignited a 21-5 Seattle run during a six-minute span in the third quarter as Seattle turned a 14-point lead into an 88-58 advantage.

The 35-point victory was the largest ever over Dallas for Seattle. The SuperSonics beat the Mavericks 107-79 on Nov. 11, 1981.

Seattle led 22-18 after one quarter and 60-47 at halftime. Ellis had 23 points in the first half, Derrick McKee 11 and Xavier McDaniel 10.

The SuperSonics opened a 20-point lead early in the third quarter with an 8-0 run led by McKee's four points.

Detlef Schrempf scored 24 points for Dallas.

Bullets 106, Heat 100
Bernard King and Jeff Malone scored 32 points each for Washington and Steve Colter scored 11 points in the fourth quarter to rally the Bullets, who have won six of their last eight home games.

Malone made four free throws in the final 13 seconds to seal the victory.

Rony Seikaly scored 23 points for Miami.

Boston 106, New Jersey 103
Dennis Johnson made one free throw and Danny Ainge added two in the final minute as Boston sent New Jersey to its fourth consecutive loss.

With the score tied at 103 and 44 seconds remaining, Johnson made one of two free throws. Roy Hinson missed 10-foot jumper from the top of the key with 22 seconds left and Ainge made two foul shots with 11 seconds to go. Hinson missed a 28-foot 3-pointer at the buzzer.

Robert Parrish had 25 points and 12 rebounds. Buck Williams scored 15 points for Nets.

Rockets 116, Trail Blazers 106
Akeem Oluajuwon scored 32 points, including six straight baskets in the closing minutes.

Oluajuwon, who grabbed 16 rebounds, scored 12 points in the fourth quarter. Mike Woodson scored 22 points for Houston.

With the Rockets trailing 93-92, Oluajuwon scored on a dunk with 7:27 to play and sank two more baskets to regain the lead for good.

Jazz 115, Spurs 91
Karl Malone scored 31 points and Thurl Bailey added 21 for Utah, which scored 17 consecutive points in the first quarter. Mark Eaton had 17 rebounds and blocked 11 shots.

John Stockton had 26 points, 16 assists and six steals for the Jazz.

Frank Brickowski scored 16 points for the Spurs, who lost their third straight game.

Utah led 8-5 with 8:43 left in the first quarter and then ran off 17 consecutive points, eight by Malone.

Nehlan Named Top Football Coach

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Don Nehlen enrolled at Bowling Green State University in 1955 on a football-basketball-baseball scholarship and thought he would study accounting.

In Nehlen's sophomore year, Doyt Perry arrived as football coach and everything changed.

"After six months of studying accounting, the only thing I knew was that I didn't want to be an accountant," Nehlen said Thursday upon being voted Kodak major-college Coach of the Year by the American Football Coaches Association for leading West Virginia to an 11-1 record and a No. 5 national ranking. "I didn't know if I wanted to coach and teach, but I knew I didn't want to be an accountant."

Nehlen went into coaching because of Perry, whose winning percentage of 85.5 (77 victories, 11 losses, 5 ties) trails only Notre Dame's Knute Rockne and Frank Leahy and is one of college football's best-kept secrets.

"Doyt brought Bo Schembechler as an assistant and brought just a great bunch of young coaches that were hustling, and their approach to football was so different," Nehlen said. "They had a little office and they were there every night. None of us could figure out what they were doing over there. None of the other coaches ever did that."

"Their approach to football was so different, so organized, so thorough. All of a sudden I wanted to be a football coach."

"But the guy that really pointed me in the right direction was Bo. I respect him so much. He's the epitome of a college football coach. He's so special for the guys who play for him and the guys who work for him."

Nehlen was an assistant under Schembechler at Michigan from 1977 through 1979.

Nehlen and the other division winners — Jimmy Satterfield of Furman in Division I-AA, Rocky Hager of North Dakota State in AFCA College Division I, and Jim Butterfield of Ithaca in College Division II — were honored Thursday night at the annual Kodak-AFCA Coach of the Year banquet.

Nehlen was one of five regional winners in Division I-A. The other three were write-in candidates who led their teams to national championships and won out over previously announced regional winners. Almost all the ballots were cast here.

West Virginia was 11-0, the first perfect regular season in the school's 96-year football history, and No. 3 nationally before losing to national champion Notre Dame 34-21 in the Fiesta Bowl.

"When I left Michigan for West Virginia, some of my friends told me I wasn't very smart," Nehlen recalled. "But I had been a head coach for nine years (at Bowling Green) before I went to Michigan and in three years with Bo I gained such great confidence that I just felt very strongly that West Virginia, sitting where it was geographically, could be a competitive football team."

"It's not a big state and it doesn't have a lot of high schools, but if you draw a radius of 300 miles from Morgantown, there are a lot of football players."

"I said to myself that Pitt and Penn State and Ohio State can't get them all. We ought to be able to grab a few and grab some in other areas and we should be able to compete."

Nehlen is the winningest coach in West Virginia history with a nine-year record of 69-36-1. His career mark is 122-71-5.

He won in the Division I-A voting over Lou Holtz of Notre Dame, Curley Hallman of Southern Mississippi, Ken Hatfield of Arkansas and Paul Roach of Wyoming.

Satterfield, who succeeded Dick Sheridan at Furman in 1986, led the Paladins to a 13-2 record.

"We've just got a fantastic program at Furman," he said. "It's a super school. One thing we're proud of, the last two years we've had 48 seniors, and all 48 of them have graduated. That's something we feel very strongly about."

Hager, who went 14-0 in his second season as a college head coach, said his award was "for our team" rather than an individual award.

He gave special thanks to university president James Ozburn, "who was at every one of our football games and traveled a long way for us."

"Probably the most important person that we'd like to thank is Dr. Ade Sponberg, who's now the athletic director at Wisconsin, because he's the guy who decided that our staff was capable of taking on the chores at North Dakota State."

Butterfield, a 22-year veteran with a 164-59-1 record, thanked Ithaca College "for the opportunity to have this kind of a team and this kind of a season (13-1) because every college doesn't afford you that opportunity."

Regional winners included:

Division I-AA — Ed Zubrow of Pennsylvania, Charlie Taaffe of The Citadel, Roy Kidd of Eastern Kentucky, Jim Hess of Stephen F. Austin and Bruce Craddock of Western Illinois.

College Division I (NCAA II, NAIA I) — Danny Hale of West Chester, John Perry of Lenoir-Rhyne, Bill Lynch of Butler and Dick Lowry of Hillsdale (a tie in their region), Jim Heinitz of Augustana, S.D., and Pokey Allen of Portland State.

College Division II (NCAA III, NAIA II) — Dennis Kayser of SUNY-Cortland, Hank Norton of Ferrum, Ron Murphy of Wittenberg, Bob Berezowitz of Wisconsin-Whitewater and Mike Dunbar of Central Washington.

Baryshnikov Opens PBS 'Dance In America' Series

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Mikhail Baryshnikov danced in George Balanchine's New York City Ballet for only one year a decade ago, but it made a lasting impression.

The superstar of ballet dances tonight on PBS in two ballets, "Apollo" and "Who Cares," created by Balanchine, this century's master choreographer.

"Baryshnikov Dances Balanchine" is the first offering in the 13th season of "Dance in America," presented by "Great Performances" on the Public Broadcasting Service.

Asked the most important thing he learned from Balanchine, the dancer said in a telephone interview, "I wish I could say he taught me how to choreograph. That would be the best thing."

"I learned from him a lot. He was a very extraordinary man and I had a lot of fun to be with him."

He says he doesn't have a favorite Balanchine ballet. "They're all pretty incredible."

"Apollo" is about the birth of the god, his realization of his divinity and his early education in the power of the arts by the muses of dance, poetry and mime. The muses are danced by Christine Dunham, Leslie Browne and Stephanie Saland of American Ballet Theater.

"Apollo" was Balanchine's first of many collaborations with composer Igor Stravinsky. He created "Apollo" in 1928, and it is his earliest ballet that is still regularly danced.

Baryshnikov had danced "Apollo" under Balanchine's guidance. He did not dance for him in "Who Cares," which Balanchine created for the New York City Ballet in 1970, after Baryshnikov had left the company.

For "Who Cares," set to 18 songs by George Gershwin, Balanchine's choreography is lighthearted, plotless and elegant. It's a style which suits Baryshnikov, an admirer of Fred Astaire. Baryshnikov, Deirdre Carberry, Miss Browne and Miss Dunham dance to eight of the songs on TV.

Speaking of Balanchine's neoclassic style, in which traditional ballet steps and phrases are used in innovative ways, Baryshnikov said, "What Balanchine has done for ballet is, he opened to all choreographers future possibilities. He showed what can be done with that kind of music, movement, ideas and aesthetics."

"He pushed the ballet finally to the level of all visual art, music and poetry. Otherwise ballet would have been dragging a century behind everything else."

On the TV show, Baryshnikov calls dancing for Balanchine the "experience of a lifetime." And he talks about how he felt when Balanchine praised him.

"After the performance ... I was lucky to get — I mean sometimes ... a good review from him, and it was just one word, and ... he just opened your dressing room and said, 'Excellent. Good night.' You know? And went home. And stars are shining, you know, for you."

Baryshnikov first saw "Apollo" when he was 11 or 12 in his native Riga, Latvia. It was danced by Alicia Alonso's company, from Cuba. He first met Balanchine in 1972, when the New York City Ballet toured the Soviet Union.

In 1974, when he was 26, Baryshnikov defected to the West in Toronto, while on a tour of Canada with a group of dancers from the Bolshoi Ballet.

Tracy Chapman Grabs Six Nominations For Grammys

By Jeff Wilson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — A pair of idiosyncratic talents captured the bulk of Grammy Award nominations, with the feel-good sound of Bobby McFerrin's "Don't Worry, Be Happy" contrasting with the bleak poetry of Tracy Chapman's "Fast Car."

Miss Chapman's somber, haunting folk songs won her six nominations Thursday, including best song, record, album and best new artist.

McFerrin's ebullient vocals earned five nominations, including record, album and song.

The two symbolize the diversity of nominees for National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences trophies, and represent a break from the mainstream. The Grammy nominations — with an all-time high 76 categories — were culled from a record 6,800 entries released from Oct. 1, 1987 to Sept. 30, 1988. Winners will be announced here Feb. 22 during a televised ceremony on CBS-TV with host Billy Crystal.

Miss Chapman's self-titled first album was a surprise hit in 1988 and its single "Fast Car," about a woman seeking to escape a cycle of poverty, was a No. 1 hit. The 24-year-old singer's song and record nominations, plus one for best female pop vocal performance, were for "Fast Car."

Her album also received a nomination for best contemporary folk recording. The Boston-based singer came to record producers' attention during nightclub performances while a student at Tufts University.

McFerrin, 38, whose "Don't Worry, Be Happy" was the first a cappella song to reach the No. 1 position on Billboard charts, received nominations for best song, record and male pop vocal performance for "Don't Worry, Be Happy." He also received an album nomination for "Simple Pleasures."

In addition, McFerrin, who records his works using only his voice, was nominated for best male jazz vocal performance for the song "Brothers."

Heavy metal and rap music made a Grammy debut, while past pop giants gathered nominations in relatively obscure categories — Bob Dylan and Van Morrison in traditional folk, Joe Jackson for motion picture score and Linda Ronstadt for Mexican recording.

Anita Baker received four Grammy nominations, all for "Giving You The Best I Got," the one song she had eligible for this year's awards. The song is a candidate in the best record, song, best female rhythm and blues performance and best rhythm and blues song performance.

Sting's "Nothing Like the Sun" received an album of the year nod and the song "Be Still My Beating Heart" was nominated for song of the year as well as best pop male vocal performance. Sting has four Grammys, all as a member of The Police.

Steve Winwood, a rock veteran whose career spans nearly 25 years, received record of the year and best male pop vocal performance nominations for "Roll With It" and an album of the year nod for the LP of the same title. Winwood has won two Grammys.

George Michael, whose smash album "Faith" sold more than 6 million copies and spawned six hits, received only two nominations, album of the year and best pop male vocalist for "Father Figure."

Michael Jackson, shut out last year's awards, received a single nomination for his "Man In The Mirror" single as record of the year.

The Beach Boys, who have never won a Grammy and have not been nominated since 1966 for "Good Vibrations," received a best pop group performance nomination this year for their hit "Kokomo."

Nominated for record of the year were "Don't Worry, Be Happy," "Fast Car," Miss Baker's "Giving You The Best That I Got," Jackson's "Man in the Mirror," and Winwood's "Roll With It."

Nominations for album of the year were Michael's "Faith," Sting's "Nothing Like the Sun," Winwood's "Roll With It," McFerrin's "Simple Pleasures," and Miss Chapman's album.

Nominations for song of the year — a songwriter's award — were for "Be Still My Beating Heart" by Sting, McFerrin's "Don't Worry, Be Happy," Miss Chapman's "Fast Car," "Giving You the Best That I Got," written by Miss Baker, Skip Scarborough and Randy Holland, and "Piano In The Dark" by Brenda Russell, Jeff Hall and Scott Cutler.

Jackson Nominated

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — A new Jackson ranks among the artists nominated for a Grammy — and he's unrelated to Janet and Michael.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson, fiery orator and Democratic candidate for president in 1988, is nominated for a speech recorded on a gospel album by Aretha Franklin, "One Lord, One Faith, One Baptism."

In the speech, delivered at Detroit's New Bethel Baptist Church, Jackson pays tribute to Ms. Franklin's late father, the Rev. C.L. Franklin.

Ms. Franklin was nominated for best female soul gospel singer for her work on the album.

Jackson spokesman Frank Watkins said Jackson was unaware of the nomination. He was expected to return to Chicago Thursday night after a two-week trip to Africa and France.

Houston Opens 2 Schools As Shelters For Homeless Students

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — A 12-year-old girl who had been sleeping under an abandoned house was the first to seek shelter at a public school in a new program that offers homeless students a refuge from the chilly streets.

"Right now she's playing checkers with one of the administrators," said school board President Melody Ellis. "We just tried to give her encouragement and let her play."

Public school officials opened shelters at two schools Thursday night to provide needy students with beds, showers and hot meals.

The 12-year old, who was not identified, was the only one of eight children who stayed at the shelters on the first night who met the guidelines for the Schoolhouse Shelters program, officials said. A mother brought five children to a shelter, and two teen-agers who sought refuge gave names of schools outside Houston.

"If only one child shows up, the program's working because that's one child that's not on the streets," says area schools Superintendent Kaye Stripling.

"I'm not disappointed," Ms. Ellis said. "It's going to take some time for the children to build up a trust factor with us, and you can imagine how frightened these poor little children are with all this attention."

Four other boys who came to a shelter decided to leave because they feared the attention they might draw, said officials who tried unsuccessfully to discourage reporters from staking out the shelter.

Officials in the Houston school district, Texas' largest with about 190,000 students, set up the shelters after increasing reports of students living on the streets. Houston has an estimated 20,000 to 25,000 homeless people, but it's uncertain how many are children.

The program is based on the premise that students who feared seeking help elsewhere might turn to a more familiar environment — school.

Under the program's guidelines, only students enrolled in Houston schools are eligible to stay in the shelters, which are not meant for families or children who should be served by other social programs.

One of the two schools is set up to handle children from kindergarten through the eighth grade. The other is intended for high school students.

The Red Cross donated 75 cots and blankets, and area residents volunteered to drive the streets in search of children needing shelter. The cost to Houston schools, which provided food, space and security officers, was described as minimal.

The program will remain in effect at the two schools until at least Jan. 20, when the superintendent will recommend to the school board that it be continued or modified.

Despite general support from social agencies, some officials have doubts about how severe the problem is.

Programs already exist for "truly homeless" children, said Judy Hay of Harris County Children's Protective Services.

But supporters of Schoolhouse Shelters disagreed, saying a cold front that swept through Houston Thursday evening may help prove the necessity of the program. Balmey afternoon temperatures dipped to a windy 40 degrees by late evening.

"These children do not have homes," Ms. Ellis said. "We have incidences reported where children have left school and gone home to find that there is nobody there anymore."

Federal Health Center Says Changes Needed In Vaccinations For Measles

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control Thursday recommended two significant changes in the routine for measles vaccinations: an extra shot for many infants and re-vaccinations for older children if an outbreak hits their schools.

The CDC's measles specialists, who once expected to eradicate measles in the United States by 1982, now say the new measures are necessary to prevent continuing outbreaks of the disease.

"We view these recommendations positively; clearly something needs to be done," said Dr. Loring Dales, chief of the immunization unit for the California Department of Health Services in Berkeley. "In our large inner-city areas, such as Chicago, Los Angeles, Miami, Newark and New York City, we have had recurrent problems with large and continuing measles outbreaks in pre-school age children. We need higher immunization levels in these populations."

Measles outbreaks nationally currently fall into two patterns: outbreaks among infants under the current 15-month vaccination age and outbreaks among vaccinated school-age children who turned out to be still susceptible to the measles virus, according to an article in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

To combat the outbreaks, the CDC's Immunization Practices Advisory Committee is now recommending these steps:

—Infants under 15 months old, in areas where recurrent measles is a problem, should get two measles shots instead of one — a shot of measles vaccine alone at 9 months, and a second dose at 15 months as part of the commonly used measles-mumps-rubella vaccine. The current recommendation is one measles immunization at 15 months of age. An alternative in large urban areas with low levels of immunization is a single dose of the measles-mumps rubella vaccine at 12 months, according to the report.

—In schools with measles outbreaks — and in nearby schools where the disease might spread — all students whose measles shots came before 1980 should be re-vaccinated, along with their siblings. If a school fighting a measles outbreak cannot re-vaccinate all students whose shots came before 1980, it should at least target students vaccinated before the age of 15 months.

The 1980 cutoff was chosen because vaccinations given before that time used a less effective vaccine and, until 1976, were given at 12 months, which was less effective than 15-month shots.

Dr. Sonja Hutchins, a CDC measles specialist, said there was no way to predict how many children would be affected by Thursday's recommendation. "We're in the process of analyzing that now," she said.

Since the measles vaccine was licensed in 1963, reported case rates in the United States have decreased by more than 98 percent in all age groups.

Over the last six years, measles cases reported in the United States have ranged from a low of 1,497 cases in 1983 and a high of 6,282 cases in 1986. In 1987, the last year for which complete data is available, nearly three-fourths of the 3,652 measles cases reported occurred in children who had been vaccinated but got measles anyway — thus posing a potential threat to other susceptible children like themselves.

Secrets No Longer Issue In North Case

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The independent prosecutor in the Iran-Contra case says classified information "should no longer be an issue" in the remaining 12 criminal charges against Oliver North despite efforts by the former National Security aide to the contrary.

Lawrence E. Walsh made the assessment Thursday in a court filing in which he outlined the prosecution's legal theory of the case against North should conspiracy and theft charges against North be dropped as expected.

The charges that would be dropped allege that North and three co-defendants illegally diverted more than $14 million in U.S.-Iran arms-sale profits to the Nicaraguan rebels.

Walsh's view Thursday clashes with the one expressed a week ago by defense attorney Brendan

Sullivan, who said "classified information pervades the remaining charges as well."

Walsh last week gave up his pursuit of the conspiracy and theft of government property charges against North after the Reagan administration refused to declassify portions of documents that U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell said were needed at trial.

Four of the remaining charges relate North's alleged obstruction of inquiries in September and October 1985 by misrepresenting his activities to Congress.

Walsh said the government also will prove North denied in the 1986 presidential inquiry by Attorney General Edwin Meese III that the NSC was involved in the diversion of an arms sale money and that North told Meese the Israelis controlled the diversion.

Flag Comes Back

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TONAWANDA, N.Y. — Kind-hearted thieves returned first-grader Margaret Allen's prized Buffalo Bills flag and gave her some goodies to boot.

The 6-year-old girl had proudly displayed the deep blue Bills flag inscribed with the words "Happy New Year" under the American flag outside her family's home just north of Buffalo until last weekend, when it disappeared.

Whoever took it left a note in the family's mailbox promising to return the flag after the Bills-Bengals American Football Conference Championship game in Cincinnati.

Margaret watched Sunday's game, which the Bills lost, on television and thought she spotted the flag in the crowd. She waited and waited, but the flag didn't show up.

After news reports about her loss, the family received a mysterious phone call Wednesday evening.

The caller instructed the family to look for the flag near a telephone junction box outside their home, said Margaret's father, Peter.

The family found the flag, a case of beer, a thank-you note, a bag and a second note that read, "We waited till now to return the flag for our own protection (we thought you'd be watching), but we had all intentions of returning your flag. And this is for Margaret."

Inside the bag, to Margaret's surprise and delight, was a game program from Cincinnati, a shirt, a hat and several other souvenirs from the playoff.

Communist Party Offers Promises To Lure Voters

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

MOSCOW — Approaching contested elections for the first time in its seven decades of power, the Soviet Communist Party has published a chicken-in-every-pot platform loaded with promises that a better life is coming — if people simply back the party's reform program.

The lengthy platform, the first such document in Soviet history, acknowledges the slow progress of economic change. But, as befits a political pitch, its tone is far sunnier than that of recent speeches of President Mikhail S. Gorbachev as well as the deep gloom of many people about the skimpy food supply.

Congratulating itself for "courageously facing the truth" about the country's problems, the party's ruling Central Committee hails Gorbachev's program of perestroika as "an abrupt turn in the country's life ... A turn from stagnation in the economy, politics and the spiritual domain to renaissance, emancipation of sound forces, to the renovation of the socialist idea itself."

The Central Committee's "Address to the Party and Soviet People," published Friday in Soviet newspapers, promises peace, prosperity, ethnic harmony and political freedom.

Failing to mention the Soviet Union's massive, recently acknowledged budget deficit, it tells struggling elderly people that pensions will be raised, low-income families that welfare payments will be increased and people worried about dirty air and water that pollution will be cleaned up.

The platform even goes so far as to echo U.S. President Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, pledging "genuine and complete power for the people, of the people and by the people."

On March 26, Soviet voters will elect 2,250 members of a new Congress of People's Deputies in national parliamentary races where, in contrast to the past practice of single-candidate races, two or more nominees will compete for each seat. The congress will choose from its own ranks a revamped Supreme Soviet that will become the country's first standing parliament.

Opposition parties are still banned and the nine-month-old attempt of a small group of radicals to create one, called the Democratic Union, has met with frequent arrests and repeated short jail terms for its organizers. But non-members of the Communist Party are running in the election and are expected to take a substantial percentage of the seats.

Moreover, as they push for controversial political and economic changes, Gorbachev and his colleagues apparently believe it is important to appeal for public support. In the two years preceding Friday's appearance of the party platform, Soviet officials have conducted public opinion polls with increasing frequency on a wide variety of issues.

This week's issue of the newspaper Argumenti i Fakti, for instance, reports a telephone poll of Muscovites who rank poor medical care as their worst problem, followed by the food supply, the housing problem, "the battle against unearned income" (Soviets for black-market earnings), pension reform, the supply of consumer goods and the improvement of ethnic relations.

Perhaps not surprisingly, the new Communist Party platform addresses each of these concerns in turn, though it places improvements in the food supply at the top of the list.

'Baby Boom' Outstripping China's Main Food Supply

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — The world's most populous country is growing faster than the food supply, threatening China's economic development unless authorities enforce strict birth control policies, official reports said today.

"If we don't strictly control the baby boom, more difficulties will be passed on to succeeding generations," Peng Peiyun, head of the State Family Planning Commission, told about 6,000 people gathered Thursday night at the Great Hall of the People.

She was quoted by the China Daily newspaper.

"The population increase will gobble up all the economic gains each year unless it is put under strict control," the Xinhua news agency quoted Beijing Mayor Chen Xitong as saying.

China will have 1.1 billion people by April, Ms. Peng told the meeting.

She did not announce the birth rate for 1988, but disclosed that 1987's rate was 2.3 percent, higher than the 2 percent previously announced for the year.

The recent barrage of official lectures on family planning may indicate that last year's rate was higher still. The official goal is 1.5 percent growth or lower.

To achieve that goal, since the early 1980s the government has limited most families to only one child. But in the past few years more and more families have ignored the limit, and the state also has seemed to relax the policy.

Last year, it said rural couples whose first child was a girl would be allowed to have a second to try for a son to work on the land.

However, the combination of soaring population and stagnant grain harvests has heightened anxiety among officials.

Chen said the rapid growth rate means per capita grain supplies will remain about even even if overall grain production is increased 25 percent to 1.1 trillion pounds by the year 2000.

However, a decline in per capita grain supplies seems likely because agriculture officials recently said it will be virtually impossible to reach that goal by 2000.

Population projections for 2000 are going higher and higher. The target is 1.2 billion, but family planning authorities said last year it more likely would reach 1.27 or 1.28 billion.

The Economic Daily predicted Tuesday that it would hit 1.32 billion if it continues growing at its current pace.

Enforcement of the general one-child policy varies widely from one area to another. Cities are the most strict, with most workers facing fines and possible dismissal if they have a second child.

But in some rural areas, farmers have become prosperous enough to be able to afford the fines.

High-Level Aussie Policeman Killed

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CANBERRA, Australia — The government today offered $217,000, one of the largest bounties in Australian history, to help solve the killing of its No. 3-ranking law enforcement officer.

Justice Minister Michael Tate announced the reward after Assistant Federal Police Commissioner Colin Winchester was shot twice in the head in his driveway in Canberra, the federal capital.

Tate has suggested Tuesday's murder might have been a warning to witnesses in upcoming drug trials that Winchester was known to be investigating.

"It may be an intimidation tactic to say that if we can kill a man of this seniority, no witness is safe," he told a news conference. "All Australians have found this killing shocking, and would want no resources spared in the hunt for the murderer."

Winchester, 55, was buried today with full police honors in Canberra.

Tate said the reward was for information leading to an arrest for the killing. He said any witness would be granted indemnity from prosecution relating to the crime.

Mail Fraud

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — A federal grand jury has indicted two former Fayetteville businessmen on charges they used the mail to operate a fraudulent investment scheme.

In an indictment returned in early December, Warren D. Barker, 43, of Vienna, Va., and Paul J. Lawrence of Rocklin, Calif., were charged with one count of conspiracy and four counts of mail fraud.

But the indictment returned in Fayetteville — which replaces the December charges — accuses the two of a single count of conspiracy and 28 counts of mail fraud. Lawrence was also charged with two counts of income tax evasion.

The conspiracy and mail fraud charges both carry a maximum prison term of five years with a maximum fine of $10,000 for the conspiracy charge and $1,000 for the charge of mail fraud. The two could be sentenced to prison, ordered to pay a fine or both.

Opening lead: Ten of ♥ Terrible things can happen on Friday the 13th. That's why you have to pay extra care as declarer to avoid catastrophe.

South was a whisker short of a jump to four spades. North, with two prime cards and three trumps, had no hesitation about accepting his partner's invitation—remember, aces and kings are undervalued in the point count.

East rose with the ace on partner's heart lead and continued with the queen, ruffed by declarer. Faced with a certain loser in each minor suit, declarer's problem was to avoid losing a second club trick.

That would be easy enough if clubs were to break 3-3 or trumps 2-2. But what if clubs were 4-2 and trumps 3-1?

If declarer does not draw trumps and plays three rounds of clubs, the defenders might be able to lead a fourth club and overruff dummy. If declarer were to draw two rounds of trumps and then try three rounds of clubs, a defender might be able to lead another trump to eliminate dummy's ruffing ability.

The secret of success is surprisingly simple. Declarer should draw only one round of trumps and then duck a club. Suppose a defender wins and returns a trump—as good a defense as any. Declarer must leave the last trump outstanding and cash the king and ace of clubs.

If clubs are 3-3, declarer draws the last trump and claims his contract—the 13th club is high. If clubs are 4-2, declarer must hope that the player with the long trumps also has four clubs, so that he can ruff his club loser on the table.

Tax Overhaul Will Add $91 Billion To Deficit

By Jim Luther
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The landmark 1986 overhaul of the federal income tax, which was widely advertised as having no effect on the budget deficit, actually will worsen the red ink by almost $91 billion over a five-year period, the Reagan administration now estimates.

The 1990 budget that President Reagan sent to Congress on Monday projects the new tax law will add $24.4 billion to the deficit this fiscal year and $20.3 billion in the year that begins Oct. 1. It resulted in an $8.9 billion loss in 1988.

A Congressional Budget Office specialist this week disputed the Treasury calculations. CBO's figures, which are expected in a few days, will show a far smaller revenue loss over five years. The official said CBO's estimates are supported by the Joint Committee on Taxation, which advises Congress on tax matters.

"In 1992 and 1993, we believe the new law will increase collections by between $5 billion and $10 billion a year," said the CBO official, who would not be quoted by name.

"Looking even further into the future, it's going to be revenue neutral," meaning it will produce the same revenue that the old law would have in those years, the CBO source said.

The Treasury Department offered no official explanation of why its new estimates differ so widely from earlier calculations.

However, one Treasury aide suggested the problem is that the new estimates have no way of accounting for higher incomes that many economists think resulted from the lower tax rates under the new law. Significantly higher incomes might be expected to produce more revenue, even at lower tax rates.

During the nearly two years it took Congress to write the law, leaders of the House, Senate and administration always agreed on one point: no matter what went into the new tax package, the total result should neither raise nor lower total government tax collections.

On several occasions, lawmakers had to amend their work because revenue experts indicated it would have lost money.

Shortly after the law was enacted, Congress and the Treasury Department estimated that in the five budget years from 1987 through 1991, it would produce $300 million less in total revenue than the old law would have — a figure low enough to be considered revenue-neutral.

But a year ago, Reagan's budget indicated that loss would be $23.2 billion.

The new budget more than doubles the loss or the same five years to $48.5 billion. It projects a $90.9 billion loss for the five years from 1988 through 1992.

When Reagan signed the new law, Congress and the administration agreed the measure would increase tax collections by $11.5 billion in 1987, chiefly because owners of stocks and other investments would be induced to sell some assets in the closing days of 1986 to avoid a higher tax on capital gains that began in 1987.

In fact, the Treasury Department says, 1987 collections rose by $21.5 billion.

Congress and the Treasury Department often have found it is next to impossible to project how changes in tax laws will affect taxpayer behavior — and thus revenue collections — more than a year or two into the future.

The problem with the 1986 law is even greater, because it included the most changes since the income tax was enacted in 1913.

In addition to cutting tax rates significantly for individuals and corporations, the law reduced or repealed several deductions and credits and aimed to shift $120 billion of the tax burden from individuals to businesses over five years.

The CBO official said whatever shortage in revenue results from the new law will have been caused by overestimating taxes to be gained by reducing individual deductions, rather than from the rate reduction.

Reagan Questions Whether Some Black Leaders Are Sincere

WASHINGTON — President Reagan says some civil rights leaders are doing so well by "keeping alive the feeling that they're victims of prejudice" that he sometimes wonders whether they "really want what they say they want."

Reagan made the statement in an interview to be broadcast Sunday on the CBS television program, "60 Minutes." Portions of the interview were broadcast Thursday on the CBS Evening News.

The president defended himself against criticism of his civil rights record, saying he was a lifelong foe of discrimination and "one of the great things that I have suffered in this job is this feeling and this editorializing comment that somehow I'm on the other side."

Of the black leaders who have criticized him, he said, "Sometimes I wonder if they really want what they say they want because some of those leaders are doing very well leading organizations based on keeping alive the feeling that they're victims of prejudice."

He declined to name names.

Mike Wallace of "60 Minutes" conducted separate interviews with Reagan in the Oval Office and with first lady Nancy Reagan in the presidential residence. He also interviewed them together in the residence.

Asked whether she had ever worried during the Iran-Contra crisis about the possibility of impeachment, Mrs. Reagan said, "No, well, no. I — It never entered my mind until somebody said it on television, and then that word is a frightening word."

"It's like — it's like having somebody say cancer to you. You know, you ... you ... you freeze."

Mrs. Reagan did not say who it was she heard discuss the possibility of impeachment. No impeachment moves were made against the president, who repeated during the interview his denial that he swapped arms to Iran in an effort to secure release of American hostages.

Mrs. Reagan also said in the interview she believes John Poindexter, who lost his job as the president's national security adviser because of the Iran-Contra affair, "should have told Ronnie" about the diversion of profits from the arms sales to Contra rebels in Nicaragua. The president has said he did not know of the diversion.

Asked if she disagreed with her husband about his description of Poindexter aide Oliver North as a national hero, the first lady replied, "Sometimes we disagree."

OSHA Expands, Rewrites Standards For Exposure To Hazardous Matter

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The government today drastically revised standards for workplace exposure to hazardous materials, regulating 164 substances for the first time and reducing exposure limits for hundreds more in an action it said could prevent 700 deaths and 55,000 illnesses a year.

The new regulations, two years in the making, should significantly curtail the risk of illness to 21 million Americans who work in general industry and are potentially exposed to toxic and hazardous substances, the Labor Department said.

Of that number, 4.5 million workers currently face exposure to hazardous materials at rates above the new limits, the department's Occupational Safety and Health Administration said in releasing the regulations, the first large-scale changes to exposure standards in nearly 20 years.

The changes should cost affected establishments an average of $6,000 a year each, the government said. Those costs would range from $77,400 a year for petroleum refineries to $360 annually for auto dealers. The average per-worker cost is $150.

The department considered the limits for more than 400 industrial chemicals and substances in a single review, departing from a policy of case-by-case study that had produced new, comprehensive standards for just 24 substances in the past 17 years.

"We were able to make a 20-year leap forward in the level of worker protection in a relatively short time," said John A. Pendergrass, the assistant labor secretary who heads OSHA. "We also have saved the American taxpayers tens of millions of dollars that otherwise would have been spent over a long period of time in individual rulemakings."

OSHA placed 164 substances under exposure limits for the first time, reduced allowable limits for 212 others and let stand existing limits on 52 substances. The new limits take effect March 1 and employers must be in compliance by Sept. 1. Exposure limits will remain unchanged for 169 additional substances not covered by the two-year review.

Included in the revisions were some of the most commonly used industrial substances, among them chloroform, carbon monoxide, hydrogen cyanide and perchloroethylene. Wood dust and grain dust are among substances subject to exposure limits for the first time. The limits for maximum workplace exposure to acetone, carbon disulfide and styrene also were among those reduced.

OSHA said it needed to conduct further review before setting limits for exposure to asphalt, fibrous glass dust and mineral wool. The agency said it is looking to strengthen worker protection further by considering rules on medical surveillance, respirators and exposure monitoring.

FBI Study Shows Non-White Males Top Risk For Murder

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Take two boys born today. One is white. The other is not. The chances are five times greater that the non-white boy eventually will become a murder victim, the FBI says.

Non-white males born now face a 1 in 38 chance of ending up the victim of a killer, while the risk for white males born today is 1 in 204, according to a statistical study released Thursday.

The odds faced by the entire population born today are 1 out of 177, the study found.

Sharon Prophet, a statistician with the Uniform Crime Reporting program, cautioned that the predictions are based on 1987 figures and do not account for possible changes in the murder rate.

"We can't look into the future and say there are going to be so many murders in 1999," said Prophet, who prepared the report with statistician Harvey Rosenthal. "This is based on what happened in 1987."

The murder rate in 1987 was 8.3 per 100,000 population. That year, there were an estimated 20,100 murders nationwide, of which 9,510 victims were non-white, 7,436 of them non-white males. The murder rate in Canada for that year was 2.5 per 100,000.

Between 1967 and 1987, the U.S. murder rate leaped 34 percent, the FBI reported. The highest rate in the past 10 years was 10.2 per 100,000 population in 1980, and the lowest was 7.9 per 100,000 in 1984 and 1985.

The FBI study was based on the Uniform Crime Reporting statistics added to a computer model. It did not break down the non-white category for blacks, Hispanics, Asian-Americans and other minorities, Prophet said.

If there were no murders, the average lifespan for all Americans would increase by almost 3 months, and the average lifespan for non-white males would increase by more than 11 months, the study found.

A person born now can expect to live about 75 years, according to health statistics.

The study — which calculated the probabilities of being murdered for newborns, those age 20 and those age 40 — predicted that while newborn non-white males have a 1 in 38 chance of becoming a murder victim, the chance for non-white females is 1 in 138. For both sexes combined, the chance is 1 in 60.

For newborn white males, the risk is 1 in 204, while for white females, it's 1 in 437 for a combined chance of 1 in 277.

For newborns of all races, the chance of being murdered is 1 in 122 for males, 1 in 324 for females and 1 in 177 for both sexes.

The least likely to be murdered — among the ages calculated by the FBI — are white women who are now 40. They have only a 1 in 931 chance of being murdered. Of all the groups now 40, the highest probability of being murdered remains non-white males, with a 1 in 97 chance. The overall odds for that age group is 1 out of 453.

As for men who already have reached age 20, non-whites have a 1 in 41 chance of being murdered, while whites have a 1 in 224 chance, for an overall chance of 1 in 136.

For females who are now 20, non-whites have a 1 in 157 likelihood of being murdered, and whites have a 1 in 504 chance for a total probability of one in 376.

Former S&L Officers Indicted For Illegal Political Donations

LATWP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Three former executives of a failed Texas savings and loan were indicted Thursday on charges that they conspired to make $135,000 in illegal corporate campaign contributions by orchestrating donations from employees who were then reimbursed through pay raises or phony travel expenses.

The 47-count indictment, returned by a federal grand jury in Dallas, alleged that the former executives of Commodore Financial Services Corp. conspired from 1982 through 1986 to funnel the illegal corporate contributions to two political action committees. Commodore was placed in federal receivership last month and was among 15 thrifts sold to an Arizona investor in one of the largest federally assisted bailouts in the troubled S&L industry.

The indictment is one of a number growing out of efforts by a special bank fraud task force within the Justice Department looking into the S&L industry. Because S&L executives have been particularly active in political circles, their ties to legislators and regulators — including their political contributions — have become a focus of the federal investigation.

In the Commodore case, one of the PACs that allegedly received illegal contributions, East Texas First Political Action Committee, was set up by Thomas M. Gaubert, a onetime S&L owner and active Democratic fund-raiser with close ties to House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas. Last year, Gaubert was acquitted of federal bank-fraud charges.

Gaubert set up the East Texas PAC to back Rep. Jim Chapman, D-Texas, who was running in a hotly contested 1985 special election for a Texas House seat. The PAC raised and spent $100,920 in three months to support Chapman, gathering numerous contributions from executives of thrifts that soon became financially troubled, according to FEC records.

Records of contributions in excess of $1,000 show $15,000 in contributions from Commodore employees and another $10,000 from contributors who appear to be related to the employees.

Poet Robert Frost was born in 1873 in San Francisco.
