Bush Leads King Honors By Recalling His Dream

By John A. Bolt
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Black leaders nationwide remembered the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. on what would have been his 60th birthday by urging a new generation to use the rights they enjoy because of his struggles.

Today is a federal holiday honoring the slain civil rights leader, and the commemorations included the swearing in of the first blacks on the Dallas County, Ala., Commission in more than a century. The ceremony was scheduled for Selma, where King began the 1965 Selma-to-Montgomery march that resulted in passage of the Voting Rights Act.

The Liberty Bell in Philadelphia was to be symbolically tapped today and church and school bells were being rung in Michigan. Golfers were to tee off in a suburban Los Angeles tournament benefiting King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and the Rev. Jesse Jackson was scheduled as the featured speaker at King's church in Atlanta.

President-elect Bush attended an ecumenical prayer breakfast organized by the Inaugural Afro-American Committee in Washington, where he pledged that as president he will work to fulfill King's dreams of racial equality.

Bush called King an American hero, saying, "He lived a hero's life. He dreamed a hero's dreams. He left a hero's indelible mark on the mind and imagination of a great nation."

Other events in the nation's capital included a benefit and fashion show. Jackson's keynote address at Ebenezer Baptist Church capped a week-long observance in King's hometown. At the church Sunday, King's widow urged Bush to hold true to his call for "a kinder, gentler nation" and to impose strict sanctions against South Africa.

Jenkins' Memorial Service Planned Tuesday Afternoon

Hunt Calls Him An 'Outstanding North Carolinian'

By Stuart Savage
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Memorial services for Dr. Leo W. Jenkins, who died Saturday, will be conducted at 2 p.m. Tuesday at St. James United Methodist Church on East Sixth Street by the Revs. William K. Quick and Caswell Shaw.

Jenkins, 75, retired as chancellor of East Carolina University in 1978 after 17 years as the school's top administrative officer. He began his career at ECU in 1947 as dean and became president of then-East Carolina College in January 1960.

He had been undergoing radiation and chemotherapy treatment since May for cancer and was admitted to Pitt County Memorial Hospital on Jan. 7 in serious condition.

Former Gov. Jim Hunt said this morning that, "I think Leo Jenkins was one of the half-dozen most outstanding North Carolinians in our history. He was a builder and creator and East Carolina University's national prominence and medical school will always stand as a monument to his determination and leadership."

Hunt said, "It was my great privilege to work with him and leaders of eastern North Carolina as we passed legislation to establish the medical school and I put the funds for the new facilities in my first budget as governor."

"All of us in eastern North Carolina are blessed because he believed in us and spent his life working for us."

According to Gov. Jim Martin, "East Carolina University is a living testament to Leo Jenkins' vision, enthusiasm and determination."

Robert Morgan, former North Carolina attorney general, U.S. senator and now head of the State Bureau of Investigation, said Jenkins "felt like the average common boy and girl in eastern North Carolina was entitled to a university education just like all the others and he meant to make ECU a great university."

Morgan, an ECU graduate and former chairman of the school's board of trustees, said, "some of the toughest battles I have ever been in were when I followed Leo Jenkins."

"I thought he was the most dynamic leader and best organizer and promoter that North Carolina has seen in my lifetime. He loved eastern North Carolina and made

Koreas To Hold Peace Session

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEOUL, South Korea — Communist North Korea today agreed to rival South Korea's proposals to hold the highest-level political and military talks on easing tensions since the Korean War.

Prime Minister Yon Hyung Mok of North Korea accepted the south's proposal that he and his South Korean counterpart, Kang Young-hoon, should head their respective delegations at talks to be held in both country's capitals.

"The north and south should remove the state of tension which is driving the same people toward disaster," Yon said in a letter to his Kang. He said the two Koreas should "prepare a firm foundation for peaceful unification."

Yon proposed a meeting at the Panmunjom border truce site on Feb. 8 at which vice ministers would work out terms for full-scale talks. No date was mentioned for the main talks, and the two sides are expected to face problems on agreeing on terms.

Yon repeated the north's demand for separate talks with South Korea and the United States on reducing tension on the divided peninsula. He also demanded an end to annual South Korea-U.S. military exercises.

"It is obvious to everyone that the north and south can not fundamentally resolve the question of peace by setting aside the United States, which is the party responsible for the aggravation of tension," the letter said.

South Korea and the United States have rejected the north's demands for separate three-way talks.

Seoul agreed last month to the north's call for high-level political and military talks on reducing tension. It also proposed that the prime ministers head the delegations to make the talks the highest since the war.

While agreeing to upgrade talks to that level, the north has rejected the south's proposal for separate economic and Red Cross humanitarian talks. It said economic issues can be resolved after the political issues and Red Cross talks are outside any official control.

New Signal System Blamed As 110 Die In Train Wreck

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DHAKA, Bangladesh — Operators using a newly installed system may have given the wrong signal to two trains that crashed head-on, killing at least 110 people and injuring 1,000 in the country's worst rail accident, officials said.

About 40 people remained in critical condition today, according to one hospital official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, and the government declared a day of mourning.

The 10-car express train and seven-car mail train slammed into each other Sunday outside the farming village of Maizidi Khan, sending cars tumbling and tossing passengers into freshly-harvested rice paddies.

The express train was traveling at about 50 mph, the mail train coming to a halt, authorities said.

Communications Secretary Mazurul Karim estimated that more than 2,000 people were aboard the trains, many of them Moslem pilgrims. He said, however, that people routinely ride between the cars and on the roofs, making a precise count difficult.

Rescue workers using two large cranes to pull apart the crumpled wreckage finished the search for victims early today and reopened the track. Karim said no bodies were found inside.

Shortly after the accident, senior officials of the state-run railroad said they suspected operators may not have known how to properly work a sophisticated digital signaling system installed five days earlier.

"Human failure and wrong signaling may have caused the two trains to come on the same track, leading to the collision," said one official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Dhaka newspapers on Monday blamed the accident on human error.

The Sangbad, an independent Bengali-language daily, quoted unidentified railway officials as saying the express train ignored a signal to stop and allow the mail train to pass. Another Bengali-language daily, the Khabar, quoted witnesses as saying either the wrong signal or no signal failed to keep the two trains off the same track.

But Communications Minister Anwar Hossain disputed their suspicions, saying more than 200 trains had traveled on the track since the system was installed Tuesday. The track on which the crash occurred shares north- and southbound traffic, so trains often must wait on sidings for trains going in the opposite direction to pass.

The government appointed a commission to investigate the collision and ordered that the panel's findings be ready within two weeks.

Soldiers, fire officials and villagers pulled at least 100 bodies from the trains on Sunday, and another 10 people died at hospitals, police and railway officials said.

At the scene, sobbing relatives tried to look for loved ones among rows of bodies laid alongside the single track, but were held back by police.

"Oh, God! Bring brother back!" cried Sunil Daniel, pressing his arms against his chest.

Pentagon Job Filled

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The No. 2 job at the Pentagon will go to Donald Atwood Jr., vice chairman of General Motors Corp., sources in President-elect Bush's transition operation said today.

Atwood, 63, is the top choice of Defense Secretary-designate John Tower to be deputy secretary of defense.

Transition officials, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said Atwood's selection would be announced Tuesday.

GM spokesman Jim Crellin said today in Detroit that Atwood was unavailable for comment.

"Mr. Atwood is aware he's on a list of candidates for a position of deputy secretary of defense," Crellin said. "He does not feel that it would be appropriate to comment on the matter until a final decision."

The likelihood that Atwood would be selected was first reported by The New York Times.

Biologist Sees Threat In County Development

By Greg Laudick
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

One of the highest quality areas of natural environment in Pitt County could suffer as a result of the unintended consequences of development, says an East Carolina University professor.

Dr. Vincent J. Bellis, an ECU professor of biology, says the bluffs on the south side of the Tar River west of the Falkland-to-Belvoir bridge constitute the highest quality natural environment remaining in Pitt County.

But Bellis says that, at the current rate of development, virtually the entire upland portion of the area will be lost as wildlife habitat within five years.

"The impact on adjacent wetland habitat may be equally devastating unless wildlife values are given a high priority by quality developers who will incorporate natural surroundings into their projects," he said.

Currently situated in northwest Pitt County is the 46-acre, state-owned Otter Creek Natural Area.

Bellis said the area is used for ecology, geology and botany students at East Carolina University.

"Graduate students and faculty have carried out research projects there and the area has been registered with the N.C. Natural Heritage program," he said.

Bellis said the intensity of the developments in that area has the potential to "fragment" the wetland habitat.

"The rivers and floodplains have been the corridors of migration by the animal populations," he said. "By closing off these corridors, you're fragmenting that habitat."

"It's almost like shutting off the veins and arteries leading to the heart of an individual. The eventual result will be the death of that individual," he said.

Bellis said the restriction of wildlife movement along streams can lead to the impairment of the gene pool and loss of vigor to the population which could ultimately lead to local extinction of various species.

"People need to recognize the consequences of this current development activity and decide just how much of the land we need to have developed and how much is to remain natural," he said. "A choice for development is a choice which cannot be reversed."

Bellis suggests the Pitt County Planning Board can develop guidelines and procedures for protecting the natural heritage while encouraging high quality development.

One such development proposed for the area is River Plantation, a combination golf course and residential area.

Stephen K. Gwaltney, president of Golf Development Group, said the development would include a three-story golf clubhouse, an 18-hole golf course and 400 .75-acre lots.

Gwaltney said the Golf Development Group has expressed a willingness to work with the college and listen to university officials to help minimize potential environmental damage.

"We have planned from the beginning to set aside a portion of the property for natural areas and parks which will be undisturbed and to provide a permanent habitat for the natural vegetation and animal species," he said.

"The subdivision will have restrictions that homeowners will have to have permits to cut down trees more than 6 inches in diameter," he said.

Gwaltney said the engineering is in the process of being completed and construction of homes should begin this summer.

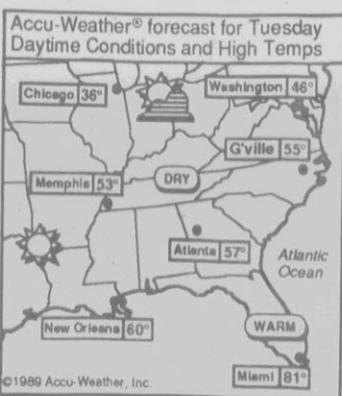

Jeannette Cox, president of the real estate firm which is marketing the property, said an increasing number of Greenville citizens are looking at residential properties in the area northwest of Greenville because of the close proximity of the Medical School.

"Several developments are in that area now and I believe we'll be seeing more growth out there in the next few years," she said.

She said River Plantation will be a valuable asset to the area, adding to the county's tax base and providing area golfing enthusiasts an additional course.

"Greenville only has two golf courses and there is usually a waiting list for membership to play on those," she said.

Aurora Fisherman Is Early Victim In Ocean Drug Fight

By Jon Glass

VIRGINIAN-PILOT & THE LEDGER-STAR

AURORA, N.C. — Eight months ago, a few marijuana seeds and part of a marijuana cigarette almost put commercial fisherman Michael "Jimbo" Ireland out of business.

Even now, the Aurora fishing captain cringes at the approach of a Coast Guard patrol boat. And the bitterness lingers.

"You don't forget something like this," Ireland, 30, said recently.

On May 3, Ireland's $500,000 boat, the 90-foot Lorraine Carol, was seized at Ocracoke Inlet by shotgun-wielding Coast Guardsmen who found the marijuana remnants in the vessel's crew quarters. The vessel and its catch — 22,000 pounds of scallops and fish — were confiscated by the U.S. Customs Service.

Ireland, who said he was unaware of drug use among his 12-member crew and later voluntarily took drug tests to bolster his defense, faced felony charges of transporting illegal drugs and misdemeanor possession of drugs. Even worse, he said, Customs agents threatened to sell his boat at public auction.

"When they read me my rights and told me the charges were punishable by a $250,000 fine, 10 years in prison or both, I can't imagine any nightmare compared to that," he said.

The charges against him were later dropped, and his boat was returned. But scars remain. The ordeal cost Ireland $20,000 in legal fees and $80,000 in lost income during the two weeks Customs held his boat. And he had to pay a $250 fine. The crew members charged with possessing the marijuana were fined $75.

Unwittingly, Ireland had become one of the nation's first commercial fishermen to fall victim to the Reagan administration's tough war on drugs. At the heart of its new anti-drug effort was a controversial policy called "zero tolerance," a hardline attack on even small amounts of drugs found on vessels, vehicles and aircraft crossing U.S. borders.

Under the program, federal authorities seized 5,073 cars, 229 trucks, 133 vessels and 9 aircraft between March 21 and Dec. 6, said Richard R. Weart, a Customs special agent in Washington, D.C.

"The whole point of zero tolerance is that drug use of any amount, as well as trafficking, is wrong and the government is not going to allow it," Dennis Murphy, Customs district director in Virginia, said recently. "Our country right now is being devastated by drug abuse. What we're trying to do is to get a growing intolerance (of drug use) in society. This is a good place to start, because everybody knows that drug abuse takes place on some of these boats."

"It's the seizure of assets that gets the headlines, but it's a change in attitude that we're trying to get as much as anything."

The confiscation of Ireland's vessel, however, sent chills through commercial fishermen in North Carolina and Virginia. Suddenly, they realized that their industry was under seige.

In the Coast Guard's 5th District, which is based in Portsmouth and stretches from New Jersey to North Carolina, a half-dozen fishing boats with "personal use" amounts of drugs on board were seized in three weeks last spring.

Since April, when the Coast Guard began enforcing the policy in the 5th District, which is based in Portsmouth and stretches from New Jersey to North Carolina, 21 vessels have been seized, including 11 commercial fishing boats. The rest involved recreational boaters, said Michael Ragsdale, chief of the district's law enforcement branch. All the seized vessels have been returned.

"We didn't know this was going on, and then boom!" recalled Bradley Brauer, president of the East Coast Fisheries Association and owner of East Coast Fishing and Scallop Co. in Newport News. "It's real tough when you're sitting here faced with losing a vessel because a crewman slips a joint on the boat. We were at that point, and that's scary."

"It was insane," said Jerry Schill, executive director of the North Carolina Fisheries Association in Bayboro. "Some boats stayed in port because they were afraid. They were so confused and fearful of having their boats seized that they stayed in port until they found out what was expected of them."

Ireland's ordeal became a rallying cry, and the zero tolerance program came under criticism. The debate even reached the halls of Congress; in November, a law to provide legal safeguards for innocent boat owners went into effect.

As a result of the outcry, Schill said, fishermen have reason to hope that cases of "overzealous" enforcement of the policy are behind them.

On Dec. 5, the two fisheries organizations, after months of negotiations with Customs officials, signed agreements with the federal agency that will likely reduce the number of outright vessel seizures. The pacts, the first of their kind in the country, require boat owners who enter into them to take steps to keep drugs off their vessels.

In exchange, these fishermen will get "much more favorable treatment" from Customs agents investigating user amounts of drugs, Murphy said.

"I'm not holding anybody's feet to the fire to sign an agreement," Murphy said. "It certainly would help (fishermen). These agreements frame what the Customs Service believes are prudent steps boat owners should take." MORE

Council Will Take Up Zoning Request

A request to rezone a .14-acre tract of land off South Village Drive for commercial purposes will be one of the items considered by the Greenville Planning and Zoning Commission Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the council chambers of City Hall.

The request by Walter L. Williams is to rezone the property, located between Memorial Drive and West Village Drive, from R-6 (residential) to CH (highway commercial).

Williams also has requested that a .01-acre second tract, located northeast of tract 1, be rezoned from CH to R-6.

The commission also will consider a request by Collice C. Moore to close Smith Street (Chestnut Street) west of Memorial Drive across from the existing Chestnut Street; a request by Edward Carson Dail to close a portion of an unnamed street in Westwood Subdivision east of Carlson Street, and a request by the city development department regarding the city's current surety requirements for subdivision improvements.

Residential development in the downtown area and space needs requirements of the MD-2 and MD-3 zoning districts also will be discussed.

Catawba College Does Turnabout With Its Finances

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SALISBURY, N.C. — The success of a $28 million fund-raising campaign at Catawba College has attracted the attention of officials at other private colleges around the country, who want to know the secret of the school's success.

"I've been in the business 50 years, and I don't know of any other institution of that size that's been as successful," said George Brakeley Jr., the founder of a fund-raising consulting company that has helped more than 250 colleges conduct capital campaigns.

"I think they're right up there with the best in the country. I think that's pretty remarkable," Brakeley said.

When Stephen Wurster became president of Catawba College in 1981, the small liberal arts school had a budget deficit of more than $865,000, declining enrollment and buildings in need of extensive repairs.

A new classroom building opened last week; the new student center opened a year ago. Two dormitories were extensively renovated, and a 20-acre sports complex including soccer and other fields was built.

A stronger academic program and renewed excitement and pride in the school's progress have transformed the once-struggling college into a thriving institution, Wurster said. "God has been good to all of us," Wurster, an ordained Methodist minister, said last week.

"It reminds me of Camelot, of John F. Kennedy's 1,000 days in office," Wurster said. "I hope this is not just a brief shining moment, but we can never take it for granted. When you have good morale and an excitement for learning, you have to keep the momentum going."

Enrollment at the college, which was 1,029 last fall, is its highest in 12 years, said John Mays, the senior vice president for college relations. But Catawba is not planning to admit many more students, preferring instead to remain a small college devoted to giving its students personal attention from faculty.

Since 1981, the college has toughened its graduation requirements and admissions standards and increased the percentage of faculty holding doctorates from just over half to 85 percent, Mays said.

The college also began a freshman studies program that requires all freshmen to study ancient civilizations, said Robert Knott, provost and dean of the college.

The new emphasis on a strong liberal arts background has followed the trend of the 1980s, Knott said. In the 1960s and 1970s, Catawba followed the lead of many colleges and universities that loosened requirements in areas such as foreign languages, he said.

"People don't choose a small college for its cafeteria curriculum," Knott said. "A small school can't offer the variety of courses that a university can, so what we try to do is add depth."

The lenient academic standards were only one symptom of the malaise that affected the college in the 1970s. The college's troubles began when the Roberts Co., a textile-machinery manufacturer based in Sanford, went bankrupt in the early 1970s. About $2 million in financing, half of the college's endowment, died with it, Wurster said.

At the same time, inflation was driving up the costs of maintaining the college as gifts to the college declined, he said. Enrollment, however, grew to about 1,100 students — more than the college had room for. Students were crowded into deteriorating dorms, and repairs were delayed to save money, Wurster said.

"I don't think I have ever seen such an unfortunate combination of all these things happening to one college at the same time," Wurster said. "A larger institution, or a highly endowed institution, has more flexibility to deal with problems like those."

Enrollment soon declined, and, in an effort to increase the numbers, the college admitted students with qualifications below the current standards of a B average and a score of at least 800 on the Scholastic Aptitude Test, Knott said.

In May 1985, the board of trustees began a quiet campaign to raise money for repairs. They set a goal of $12 million, soliciting businesses and foundations in the Piedmont and Rowan County, where the school is located, Mays said.

In December of that year, Ralph Ketner, the founder and chairman of the board of Food Lion, which is based in Salisbury, announced that he and his wife, Anne, would donate $3 million to the campaign — the largest gift ever to the school, Wurster said. Ketner is also a Catawba trustee.

The donation by the Ketners "helped us set our sights higher," Wurster said. In March 1986, the college went public with the campaign and announced a $15 million goal.

By March 1987, however, the board had received $16 million in pledges, Mays said that, since the college's "needs list" totaled $26 million, the trustees decided to raise the goal to $20 million.

By fall 1987, the campaign appeared to have leveled off at $18 million. It was then that the Ketners announced a challenge: they would donate an additional $2 million if the trustees could bring in another $6 million in pledges, raising the goal to $26 million.

By August 1988, the campaign ended with $28 million.

us all feel good about it. He challenged us to do what things we could do."

Jenkins "surely had a knack for motivating people, including myself. I could be tired and about ready to give up," Morgan said. But Jenkins could call and after talking to him for a few minutes, "I would feel like, golly, we can do it and start all over again."

Morgan suggested, "I don't think we realize in eastern North Carolina the great personal sacrifice Leo Jenkins made for eastern North Carolina."

"He was president, then chancellor, of an established, 75-year-old institution. When Charlotte College was made part of the university (of North Carolina) system, they set the new chancellor's salary at more than they did Leo Jenkins'. If he had gone to Raleigh and said, 'Yes, governor; yes, governor; yes, governor,' he could have had more money," Morgan said. "He didn't have to do the things he did."

Greenville businessman W.M. "Booger" Scales described Jenkins as "the greatest in-fighter I've ever known in my life. He had all kinds of guts."

"The only thing he ever lost to in his life was the big casino (cancer)," Scales said. "The greatest battles I've ever been in were with him. If he lost, he'd go on to another challenge. But he won most of them."

According to Scales, a staunch ECU supporter, "I wrote a letter to him three months ago and told him I thought they ought to change the name of Greenville to Leo Jenkins, North Carolina. And I've said for the last three years they should change the name of Pitt County Memorial Hospital to Leo Jenkins Hospital. I wish they'd done it while he lived."

"He's meant more to more people east of Raleigh than any man who ever lived, in my opinion," Scales said. "My mind is not capable of expressing how I feel toward the man. You just had to like him."

"I will never know, in my lifetime, another man like Leo Warren Jenkins."

During Jenkins' tenure as president and chancellor, the Summer Theater and the Regional Development Institute were established. East Carolina gained university status, the four-year medical school had its birth.

Jenkins rated university status "near the top" in memorable events during his years at East Carolina. He was also proud of the four-year school of medicine.

In his farewell address during the school's commencement program in May 1978, Jenkins said, "I trust history will record that together we have done a good job in meeting our responsibilities."

Later Jenkins would say, "The greatest achievement? I feel it was instilling a sense of pride in the people here in the East. People walk a little taller because of ECU, and they take a great pride in themselves."

Family visitation will be from 7 p.m. until 9 p.m. today at S.G. Wilkerson & sons Funeral Home.

The family, at Jenkins' request, asks that in lieu of flowers memorial gifts be made to the East Carolina University Medical School Foundation.

Failure to register is a felony punishable by a fine of up to $250,000, a prison sentence of up to five years or both.

Men ages 18 through 25 can register at any local post office. For men born in 1963 who have registered, 1989 marks the year that ends their eligibility for selection for induction.

Swine Must Be Tested

The N.C. Agricultural Extension Service has recommended that swine producers have their herds tested for disease by the North Carolina Pseudorabies Control Program.

New regulations by the N.C. Board of Agriculture say that all feeding and breeding swine must be tested by Feb. 1. If producers fail to meet this deadline, they cannot legally transport or sell feeder pigs in North Carolina.

The tests are free if the hogs are penned and adequate help is available. Testing can be done by veterinarians in the fee-basis program or by N.C. Department of Agriculture livestock inspectors.

For more information call Phillip Rowan at 830-6361.

Selective Service

The national headquarters of the U.S. Selective Service System in Washington, D.C., has provided guidelines for registering for the system.

Effective Jan. 1, men who were required to register with the service and who have not done so should be aware that the system does not have the authority to accept late registrations after a man reaches his 26th birthday.

With few exceptions, a man who fails to register before his 26th birthday will permanently forfeit his eligibility for certain federal benefits such as student aid, job training and most federal employment. Some states also require registration for certain benefits and for

The Fighter

A Legacy Of Spirit, Vision, Love

Imagine eastern North Carolina without the East Carolina University School of Medicine.

Picture ECU without a School of Art located in its building on Fifth Street. Recall the time when the School of Music was a department without its present facilities.

Remember when there was no School of Nursing, School of Business, School of Education, School of Social Work or School of Industry and Technology at East Carolina University.

Consider what the area would be like without Minges Coliseum or Ficklen Stadium.

Imagine ECU's football teams playing before 3,000 fans even on a good night and Pirate basketball still being played in Memorial Gym.

Visualize eastern North Carolina without all the pleasure that Summer Theater brings.

If the community considers all those things, and if it considers their tremendous benefit to the state, then it has some concept of the impact of Dr. Leo W. Jenkins.

So much of what is ECU today can be attributed to Dr. Jenkins, who died Saturday. The man who was known as a fighter could no longer battle the disease that invaded his body. But for Greenville, ECU and the region, Dr. Jenkins left a legacy of spirit, vision and deep love.

He would have been the first to say that he built on the foundation his predecessors passed to him. But it is clear there has been no other era like the one he brought to the university and the state.

Dr. Jenkins challenged everyone. He expected the best from his staff and faculty and he wanted top performance from students. He challenged the people of Greenville and Pitt County. He challenged the entire East to shake off its negative mindset and reach for the fuller, better life he knew was possible. Then he challenged Raleigh and the state to give him the resources to do what needed to be done at ECU.

Impossible to transform East Carolina College into a full university? Many said so. But Leo Jenkins believed. It happened. Impossible to develop and support a medical school down east? Even the faithful didn't believe. Yet today the school of medicine and accompanying Pitt County Memorial Hospital serve the area from the west Greenville campus.

Because they do, the people of eastern North Carolina now need not travel so far for the services of a referral hospital. Already some of the physician graduates have set up practice in the area, bring medical care to communities that might otherwise go unserved. Because of special programs and facilities some youngsters are alive and healthy today when they would not have been in past decades.

All who knew him are aware that Dr. Jenkins' interests were not narrow. This transplanted New Jersey native wanted it all for the people he adopted. Music, art, literature and business captured his imagination as much as medical education. And soon, because of his leadership they captured the imagination of the community and region.

Greenville and eastern North Carolina responded to Jenkins as vibrantly as he reacted to them. Here was a man who believed this immense and rural region, with directed use of its resources and dynamic leadership, could progress. Here was a man who knew eastern North Carolina could excel. Jenkins did not believe in mere possibilities, he believed in realities.

The president who became chancellor said ECU emphasized everything it did. That was his personal philosophy and it became the philosophy of the institution he headed. He made everyone he touched a better citizen and thrust more rewarding lives upon the region. He wouldn't allow anyone to be less than the best possible.

Only Dr. Jenkins voice is stilled. His great zeal, energy and combative spirit will continue to inspire future generations. His death represents a final challenge to the region he deeply loved. That challenge is to keep his vision, his tenacity and his concern for mankind alive. It is to keep moving in the direction he commanded — forward, beyond impediments, toward fulfillment of the potential it possesses.

'Here was a man who knew eastern North Carolina could excel. Jenkins did not believe in mere possibilities, he believed in realities.'

What Of Chinese Racism?

WASHINGTON — Experts are forever pointing out that what you know from ordinary experience does not quite apply to their area of expertise.

Of course you can be forgiven for your childlike error, they seem to say. After all, you haven't had the advantage of their academic immersion and their long years of experience.

Their indulgent smiles as they point it out are calculated to underscore your ignorance.

Now the experts are telling us that what has been going on in China since just before Christmas isn't racism — certainly not racism as we knew it in the American South of a quarter century ago.

Well, to this son of the South, it sure looks the same. The recent events — though not the attitudes that triggered them — began on Christmas Eve, when two African students in Nanjing refused to register their Chinese dates at a university dance. At least 13 people were injured before police could break up the resulting mele.

The following weeks have seen protest demonstrations, more fights, jailings and beatings, some of them at the hands of police, who reportedly used electric cattle prods on the Africans.

But if the news accounts brought to your mind images of "Bull" Connor — well, it just proves how ignorant you are.

A teacher from Western Europe explained that the real issue was the special privileges — special food allotments and living arrangements, for instance — enjoyed by foreigners studying in China.

"Attacking the Africans is a way to get back at the government," this expert explained. "The (Chinese) students are giving vent to frustrations over not being treated well."

Another expert saw the violence as triggered by generalized Chinese suspicion of outsiders and a desire never again to be humiliated by foreigners as they were in the past by "Western imperialists" and the Japanese.

Others cited "cultural clashes" between the "puritanical" Chinese and the Africans, whose greater sexual freedom was viewed as a threat to Chinese order.

Still others have seen the anti-African violence as just another manifestation of the Chinese animosity toward all outsiders — including native Chinese who are not members of the dominant Han group.

William Raspberry

All these things may be true, though it is hard to believe that China, with its enormous population, fears domination at the hands of some 1,500 African students, in the country as guests of the government. It is also true that many white Southerners distinguished between decent whites and "po' white trash," resented "outside agitators" and saw the Civil Rights Movement as a threat to their cherished "way of life."

But the fundamental fact — in the old American South and in present-day China — is a deep-seated racism, no less virulent because the racists don't know they are racists.

Racists never do. They always imagine that their attitudes are based on reality. The outgroup is intellectually backward, less hardworking or less cultured, closer to animals. In the South, the assessment applied to "niggers." In China, it applies to "black devils," as Africans are routinely called.

And it is complicated by sex. Virtually all of the African students, many of whom are in the country for six years at a stretch, are male. They must either live as monks or date Chinese women. Interracial dating may be the single most important factor in the recent violence.

The experts, insisting that it's not that simple, point out that American blacks are accorded much better treatment than Africans. Doesn't that prove that more than race is involved?

Well, what did it prove when, as late as the 1960s, Africans in America were accorded rights that were denied to American-born blacks? Were white restaurateurs to be absolved of racism if they seated an African diplomat while tossing a local black professor out on his ear?

As in the American South, there must be many Chinese who can look at a non-Chinese face without automatically thinking in terms of racial inferiority and superiority. But the overriding attitude of the mainland Chinese toward their African guests, if the accounts of journalists and other observers are to be credited, is a thoroughgoing racism.

Officially, of course, the Chinese reject all charges of racism. But who, besides the experts, would expect otherwise? The relevant evidence is not in official pronouncements but in manifest actions and attitudes. You get a pretty fair idea of attitudes in the bewildered reaction of a graduate student in Shanghai.

"Just because we say 'black devils' doesn't mean we are racists," she said.

Hats Off To A Covered Pate

WASHINGTON — The first annual Richard Cohen Man-of-the-Year Award was hard to make. I considered Ronald Reagan, the first two-term president since Dwight Eisenhower; mullered over Mikhail Gorbachev; thought of Dan Quayle, who proved what we all feared in school — that the indolent could succeed if they had good looks and a winning smile.

But the first annual Richard Cohen Man of the Year has to go to Terence Smith of CBS News. Smith is a bright and personable man and a good reporter. But it is not for this that he has been chosen. It is this: Terry Smith was the first newsman in modern memory to wear a hat on network television.

To my mind, this is no small thing. It represents something momentous — a break (finally) with the macho dictum that real men do not get cold. More than the misguided belief that the United States has primacy in world affairs, the notion that the hat is an affectation and not really useful is a baleful legacy of the Kennedy era. It was John F. Kennedy, after all, who removed his hat to deliver his Inaugural address. In 22-degree cold, he appeared hatless on the windswept ceremonial platform, and the world has never been the same.

Since that time, men have ceased to wear hats. I am not one of them. I wear hats and I do so for two reasons: I like the way they look and they keep me warm. The first reason is unimportant and, in the view of some, downright un-American. (American men are not supposed to care about clothing and most don't.) The second reason cannot be as easily dismissed. Most body heat is lost through the head. A hatless man is a convertible with the top down — all show in summer and just plain dumb in winter.

From Kennedy, the news spread to all politicians, even the dimmest of them, that one way to exhibit toughness was to go hatless in the cold. It was as if a man who wore a hat could not stand up to the Russians — and we all know how important that is. Kennedy also removed his overcoat before speaking on that freezing Inaugural morning. And since then, except in sub-zero cold, politicians will not make an appearance with a coat on. Their mothers must wring their hands in despair.

This coatless-hatless business signifies not toughness but a lack of common sense. When I see a politician making an outdoor appearance without a hat or coat, I do not think the man is tough. I think that anyone who does not have the sense to dress for the weather should be constitutionally prohibited from dealing with the Russians.

From politicians, this bigotry concerning hats spread to the general population. Men, by and large, will not wear hats anymore. Since I do, I am berated as a poseur, someone wanting to make a statement. But it is the men who ridicule me who are making a statement. A man, especially one who is bald or tending that way, is a fool if he does not wear a hat in the winter. How's that for a statement?

But could it be that the trend is being reversed? One recent morning I turned on CBS News, and there was Smith reporting from the White House lawn, wearing a hat. His hat made perfect sense to me. It was early in the morning, with the temperature around the freezing point. A light snow was falling. This eminently sensible man was being eminently sensible. I shall trust his reporting even more from now on.

Here was my Man of the Year. I called Smith in the CBS newsroom where, presumably, he was hatless. CBS has a hat policy, he told me. His hat is permitted on the morning news, but not on the evening news. Why Smith should not be permitted to wear a hat outdoors while Dan Rather wears a sweater indoors is beyond me, but there it is.

Smith also pointed out that he is no longer alone at CBS when it comes to wearing hats. Anthony Mason has also appeared on television with his head covered. This is indeed good news since drizzly London, where Mason is stationed, and Moscow, where he was on temporary assignment, are places where a hat is a necessity. Only mad dogs and network correspondents have heretofore gone out without one in either place.

So after much rumination, I make Terence Smith my Man of the Year. He is a bold fellow, certain of his masculinity, confident of his good judgment and, if truth be told, a bit spare on the pate, a trend not likely to be reversed. But for reversing 27 years of machismo nonsense, for returning the hat to its proper place (the head), I salute Terence Smith of the CBS morning news (but not Terence Smith of CBS evening news).

My hat is off to him. But not, mind you, if it's really cold.

Washington Farmer Plans Test Of Organic Tobacco Production

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, N.C. (AP) — An organic farmer seeking a healthier cigarette says he plans to experiment this year with organic methods of growing tobacco.

A.H. "Brownie" Van Dorp, who does not smoke, said he thinks cigarettes would be safer if the many chemicals used in growing tobacco were not applied to the crop.

"It would prove to the industry that we would have a product that consumers wanted, a healthier product," Van Dorp said in an interview. "I don't believe tobacco is all that bad by itself."

Organic vegetables found a market with health-conscious diners, and organic tobacco might be able to develop a similar market with health-conscious smokers, said Van Dorp, who lives in the town of Washington.

"We need to get a product available for testing with other products, to see the difference in carryover of chemicals in tobacco," he said. "We'd hope to have tobacco with a clean test, without any chemical residue."

Van Dorp is president of the North Carolina chapter of the Organic Crop Improvement Association, which has chapters in 21 other states, Canada, Mexico and Peru.

Van Dorp said a similar organization in Europe helped direct an inquiry by a West German company that is interested in marketing a cigarette made of tobacco that can be certified as organically grown and free of chemical residues.

That request got him to thinking about the possibilities.

"I think companies in this country would also be interested," he said. "It certainly would be in their interest."

One difficulty in meeting organic requirements is that a field must lie idle for three years to cleanse it of "non-acceptable" pesticides and fertilizers. Few farmers are willing to do that with good cropland, Van Dorp said.

He has 60 acres certified as organic on his 105-acre farm, and another 100 acres in Hyde County. He grows mostly vegetables for specialty markets.

"I farmed like everyone else, but I wasn't getting the productivity that I thought I should," Van Dorp said. So 10 years ago, he began growing crops organically.

"My father came here from Holland in the 1920s and grew acres of flowers to sell," Van Dorp said. "He used chicken litter and cow manure. He said that was the only way that he could grow good quality flowers."

"He went into the dairy business just to have enough manure for the flowers," Van Dorp said.

The dairy farm is gone now, but several large poultry farms nearby have chicken litter to sell. And a local crab-processing plant provides crab shells, which Van Dorp says are good sources of calcium for his fields.

Insurance Will Cover Stored Leaf

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A new insurance policy that became available to North Carolina farmers last month can protect holdover tobacco, currently worth about $120 million, from certain catastrophes for the months it sits in storage.

"We have been working on this for about two years," said Bernard Cox, policy and rate analyst supervisor with the state Insurance Department. "Until now, there has been no way to protect tobacco from the end of one season to the beginning of the next. And the farmer already has his money tied up in it. He can't afford to lose it."

The coverage would be especially attractive to the large commercial grower who might have 20,000 to 30,000 pounds of tobacco on hand, he said.

The policy insures against damage due to fire and smoke, windstorm and hail. It would not cover losses due to theft or insect damage.

Rates for the new policy being offered are based on the type of storage building in which the tobacco is held: $1.50 per 100 pounds if the leaf is stored in a fire-resistant barn made of metal, and $1.80 per 100 pounds for any other type of building. Rates might be adjusted later, Cox said, depending on the number and types of claims made.

The policy includes a $250 deductible.

Niles A. Whitake, vice president of the N.C. State Grange Mutual Insurance Co., one of the companies carrying the policy, said last week that the company had not written any of the new insurance policies. He said he did not expect great interest in the coverage until the end of the coming tobacco season.

"We'll be ready when that starts," he said. "We think farmers are going to be glad about it. They can at least get some coverage where before they couldn't get any."

Jury Selection

SHELBY, N.C. (AP) — Jury selection will begin Tuesday in the trial of Michael Brian Church, charged with six felonies against his stepson.

The child, Travis Gammons, also will be the center of a custody case Friday between his father, Fred Gammons, and the Cleveland County Department of Social Services.

Prospective jurors will be questioned in Rutherford County. An out-of-county jury pool was ordered to find people who have not already formed an opinion about the case.

Jury selection is expected to last at least two days. The trial is then scheduled to be moved to Shelby.

Church, who's been in Cleveland County Jail since he was arrested Aug. 30, 1988, is charged with two counts of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill inflicting serious injury, three counts of felonious child abuse and one count of maiming.

If convicted as charged, Church faces a maximum of 80 years in prison.

Chief Retires

LAURINBURG, N.C. (AP) — Norman Whiteford Quick retired Sunday after 16 years as Laurinburg's police chief, ending a 35-year career in law enforcement.

Quick, 57, joined the Laurinburg Police Department in 1953 at the age of 22. In 1958, he became a lieutenant, and five years later he became a detective and received training at the FBI's national academy.

In 1972, he was appointed chief.

IN THE STATE

Fatality

RALEIGH (AP) — Only one person died in accidents on North Carolina roads over the weekend, the state Highway Patrol said today.

"It's highly unusual" to have only one death, said a dispatcher at the patrol's headquarters in Raleigh. "I think it's fantastic. I wish I could say we had none."

Fred Brady, 61, of Carthage died at 9:20 a.m. Saturday when a car he was riding in collided with another car on N.C. 22 in Moore County.

Twenty-eight people have died on North Carolina roads this year, compared to 37 at this time last year, the patrol said.

Escapee Caught

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Philadelphia police have recaptured Timothy Dockery, a murder suspect who escaped from two jails in less than two months.

Police say a confidential informant told them Dockery was staying at the home of a friend. He was arrested without a struggle Thursday night.

Dockery, 24, was arrested by Forsyth County, N.C., deputies Nov. 9 on assault charges. They then discovered he was wanted in Philadelphia on drug and weapons charges and was a suspect in four gangland-style killings.

But Dockery tricked jailers into freeing him the day after his arrest. Philadelphia police recaptured him Dec. 23, but five days later, Dockery fooled his jailers and escaped again.

Fatal Shooting

KENLY, N.C. (AP) — Police say they don't think the slaying of a Johnston County woman killed by a shotgun blast fired from a passing car on Interstate 95 was a random act.

"I don't think there was just somebody traveling around who said, 'Hey, I'm going to kill this woman,'" said Detective Larry Carter. "Hopefully, something will come out in the investigation. We do have several leads that we are trying to follow up at this time."

Phyllis Ann Estep, 28, was killed about 2:15 p.m. Friday shortly after she left Smithfield, where she was visiting her mother, a family member said. A student at Wayne Community College in Goldsboro, she was trying to get home before her two children got out of school.

Wayne Fire

MOUNT OLIVE, N.C. (AP) — A pot left unattended on a gas stove ignited a mobile home fire that killed

ed an elderly Wayne County woman and her son, fire officials say.

Ellen Bell Byrd, 77, and John Wesley Byrd Jr., 46, of Mount Olive, were found lying on the floor of their bedrooms after the Friday night fire. They died of smoke inhalation, said Pricetown Fire Chief C.W. Smith.

When firefighters arrived about 10:20 p.m., the trailer on N.C. 55 was filled with smoke. Attempts to revive the Byrds failed.

Clerk Stabbed

MONROE, N.C. (AP) — Officials aren't sure if robbery was the motive in the slaying of a convenience store clerk who was found behind a counter with a stab wound in his chest. Public Safety Chief Bobby Kilgore says.

William Kirkland Griffin, 60, of Indian Trail, was stabbed to death late Saturday afternoon at Duey's Convenience Store.

Kilgore said at about 6 p.m. customers found Griffin, who was treated at the scene by Emergency Medical Services workers and taken to Union Memorial Hospital where he was pronounced dead.

Kilgore said officers were interviewing the customers and have talked to Duey's owner Al Plyler, but are not certain if anything was taken from the store.

Safe Theft

WILMINGTON (AP) — Thieves used a mail cart to wheel away a 300-pound safe containing $38,000 in stamps from a U.S. Post Office branch.

Thomas Dail, who manages the privately contracted station in Wilmington, said he found the mail cart in an alley behind the post office when he came to work Saturday morning.

The safe contained the stamps, $825 in signed money order, $125 in cash and blank money orders, police said. No mail was stolen, Dail said.

Body Found

WILMINGTON — Two hunters discovered the body of a woman who apparently had been murdered and left in the woods near Magnolia in Duplin County, authorities say.

The body of Pauline Whitman Sanderson, 55, of Warsaw was found Saturday about two miles from Magnolia off Secondary Road 1003, said Duplin County Sheriff George Garner.

An autopsy was scheduled to be done Monday, Garner said. The death is being investigated as a murder, but Garner would not say whether there was any visible sign of how Ms. Sanderson was killed.

House Shakeup May Bring Fewer Conflicts With Senate Leadership

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The state House and Senate usually jockey for the upper hand of power in the final weeks of the legislative session, but lawmakers are looking forward to fewer House-Senate conflicts than usual this year.

"This is the first fruit that has been borne from the rise of the two-party system in North Carolina," said Lt. Gov. Jim Gardner. "I think you're going to see an atmosphere of working together."

Twenty House Democrats joined 45 Republicans last week to oust four-term speaker Liston Ramsey and replace him with fellow Democrat Joe Mavretic.

"I think it's going to be much, much better than it's been in years past," Gardner said.

When Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, took over the House and reorganized its committee structure, some observers predicted House-Senate tensions would increase, with the Senate gaining the upper hand. Traditionally, partisan squabbling gives way to the inter-house rivalry in the final weeks.

One senator, who asked not to be identified, said Mavretic might be particularly adept at the end game in which each house takes the other's choice bills hostage.

"He plays a pretty closed hand, but two can play that game," the senator said.

Mavretic, often a player in the inter-house hostilities, was less than enlightening as he tiptoed around the issue.

"The House and Senate will get along as cordially as they have in the past," he said with a smile. "... I'm not going to give you any qualifiers."

Some observers wondered whether Mavretic might use his position to renew controversial issues such as his bid to replace all property taxes with sales and use taxes — or even his attempt to remove North Carolina from an eight-state compact for handling low-level radioactive waste.

Mavretic has made no mention of either issue.

Sen. Ted Kaplan, D-Forsyth, the Senate majority leader, said the change might make it easier to get out early — maybe by the first week of June.

"I think with the makeup of the Senate and the new makeup of the House is going to make for a very efficient General Assembly," Kaplan said. "Hopefully, we'll have our stuff together and we may produce some good legislation and be done with it."

Limited money could speed the session, as well as a general commitment by Senate leaders to shorten the session, he said.

"To some degree, politics has been what kept us here in the past, and a lot of that gamesmanship won't be played," Kaplan added.

Rep. Martin Nesbitt, D-Buncombe, a key legislator in previous sessions and a Ramsey lieutenant whose fate remained in question under Mavretic, said he wasn't sure how the House and Senate would stack up.

"That'll be something to be evolved," he said. "We have a brand new organization and people and the Senate is tested and seasoned."

"You won't know (the outcome) until you get there and stare each other in the eye," Nesbitt said.

Raleigh Plans Collection Day For Wastes You Can't Discard

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — If you've got something to throw away, but are told not to burn it, bury it, pour it down the drain or toss it in the trash, exactly what are you supposed to do with it?

State officials say it's a common problem with the household hazardous wastes that lurk in nearly every homeowner's garage or kitchen cabinets: cleaners, polishes, motor oils, paints, thinners and garden sprays.

"Right now, we think it's probably going to the landfill, being flushed down the toilet or being poured out on the ground," said Cindy E. Kling, a management analyst with Raleigh's public utilities department. "Or, they're storing it in their homes. There's almost nowhere else for it to go."

That dilemma is what prompted the city of Raleigh to schedule a hazardous-waste collection day for April.

"This is the first community-sponsored household hazardous waste collection day in North Carolina," Ms. Kling said. "But there have been lots of them around the country. The last time I counted, there had been more than 1,300 of them across the United States."

Organizers initially didn't realize that the event would fall on April Fool's Day, Ms. Kling said, but they used that coincidence to develop a motto: "Only fools would keep household hazardous waste in their homes."

State waste authorities hope that message will spread across North Carolina.

"In our state we just don't have the (disposal) alternatives available, quite frankly," said Hope Lucas, community relations coordi-inator for the Governor's Waste Management Board. "And we're hoping this collection day will set a precedent for other communities."

"In some communities in other states, they have a regular curbside pickup program for household hazardous wastes. That is a model that many people in North Carolina would like to see."

Although household materials probably account for less than one percent of the nation's total hazardous waste production, they can cause serious health and environmental problems if improperly stored or disposed.

"These household hazardous wastes are not regulated," said Roger Schecter, director of the state Pollution Prevention Program. "Therefore, they tend to end up in places where they'll make an impact, such as the local landfill or wastewater treatment plant. Then they may cause localized problems."

Potential dangers abound. Hazardous products stored around the house can cause poisonings, burns or illnesses if left where children or pets can touch, inhale or ingest them.

If discarded in trash, the wastes can injure garbage collectors. They can contaminate groundwater or wells if they end up in landfills or are poured onto the ground.

Pouring hazardous products into drains, toilets, gutters or ditches can pollute streams and lakes. And burning them can pollute the air.

A private waste-management company conducted the only previous collection event in North Carolina. In 1985, GSX Chemical Services Corp. held a two-day collection in Reidsville and Eden.

The state Department of Agriculture will pick up used pesticides and herbicides from people who request it. And many service stations and automotive products dealers will recycle used batteries and motor oil for customers.

But so far, cities and counties have shied away from collecting hazardous wastes because of real or perceived difficulties, said Mary Beth Edelman, a research associate at the Institute for Environmental Studies at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

"The biggest reason is that local officials — even though they would like to do something positive about the problem — are scared to death about liability issues and the costs," she said. "Raleigh has really stuck its neck out."

"We're hoping that other communities will see that it's possible, will see that the city of Raleigh got a lot of good publicity and will try to do it themselves."

Ms. Edelman, co-author of a report on household hazardous waste for the Pollution Prevention Program, said most collection events in other states have been relatively trouble free — despite concerns.

"There have been examples where people bring explosives onto the sites," she said. "There have been cases where people bring in things they're not licensed to handle, like radioactive waste. You've just got to be ready for that."

Organizers of the Raleigh collection will take appropriate precautions, Ms. Kling said, by staffing the collection with police, a bomb squad, a hazardous materials response team and pesticide experts.

Greensboro Woman Cited For Helping People Think

By Payl Nowell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Sarah Herbin admits that it is almost impossible to change the way people think — whether it's a racist attitude towards minorities or the skepticism of an underprivileged black child.

But that doesn't stop her from trying.

"Our society is geared so that as black kids are growing up they don't walk down the street and look at a business and say, 'I can own that like white kids can,'" Mrs. Herbin said. "There's a wide gap and something needs to be done to fill that gap."

Mrs. Herbin, 72, of Greensboro, was awarded last week for 30 years of work with the National Black Child Development Institute and other organizations. She was one of 10 people to receive the 1989 Lewis Hine Award for her volunteer work with children.

At a ceremony in New York, Mrs. Herbin was presented the award and $1,000 by John J. Crendon, chairman of the National Child Labor Committee, which sponsors the award.

The Hine Awards are presented annually for unheralded service to children and youth. Lewis Hines, the award's namesake, was an early 20th century photographer who spent his career documenting the exploitation, poverty and abuse of young children who were forced to work in factories or on farms.

In a telephone interview from New York, Mrs. Herbin thought back to a hot, steamy day last summer when she invited several black youngsters from her Greensboro neighborhood to take a swim in her backyard pool.

"It began raining so they had to get out," she recalled. "We sat on my porch and I asked them, 'What do you want to be when you grow up?'"

The boys were young, she said, no older than 11. Still, their replies astounded her.

"One boy said he wanted to be a checker at a Food Lion (grocery store)," Mrs. Herbin said. "He's not alone. So many black children feel the same way."

In 1969, Mrs. Herbin helped found the National Black Development Institute, which has since grown to include 33 chapters and more than 3,000 members.

"Sarah Herbin is a trailblazer," said Evelyn Moore, executive director of the Washington D.C.-based organization. "She has touched children's lives in a multitude of ways ranging from education to civil rights, career development, family issues, alteration of self-destructive behaviors and recreation."

"Her many efforts in and around Greensboro reflect a spirit of hope, dedication and commitment which helps make tomorrow, our children's future, a better place to live," said Ms. Moore, who won the award last year.

"One question people frequently ask me is, 'Why do I concentrate on black children?'" said Mrs. Herbin. "I have to explain that black children have special problems and it takes special policies, services and programs to address those needs.

"These children need to establish a wholesome concept of themselves," said Mrs. Herbin, who managed to find enough time while she was a schoolteacher and later a law office manager to work with children. "So long as they are relegated to the back seat they will never have a good concept of themselves."

Mrs. Herbin admits she is tough on her kids. Her philosophy is that children will live up to whatever expectations are placed on them.

That's why she is an advocate of individual attention. One of her latest projects will involve 500 adult volunteers willing to spend a year with an underprivileged black child.

"It could involve anything from tutoring to helping them with their homework to bringing the child on trips to expose him to enriching activities," she said. "It's something in which we hope to see a difference in the child at the end of the year."

U.S. team unloads equipment in Hanoi to be used in search for missing GIs in Vietnam

U.S.-Vietnamese Teams Hunt Remains of Lost Americans

By George Esper
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HANOI, Vietnam — While some Americans still await word of a husband, father or son, U.S.-Vietnamese teams patrol the countryside in the biggest effort yet to find remains of fallen airmen and send them on a final, peaceful journey home.

Some families, an unspecified but apparently small number, have been told five teams are investigating and excavating sites where relatives are believed to have crashed during air strikes between 1964 and 1972. This is the fourth joint operation since October.

"Due to privacy considerations of the affected families we cannot discuss the specifics," a statement from the U.S. delegation said. "However, those families have been notified of the investigation and will be fully advised of the results."

The two dozen U.S. specialists will be in Vietnam until Jan. 23 and will leave with 25 sets of remains that are being prepared for repatriation and identification at the U.S. Army laboratory in Hawaii.

Previously, Vietnam had allowed only four U.S. teams in at a time. It has repatriated 63 sets of remains in the past month.

"The U.S. government is pleased that Vietnam has agreed to expand the ongoing effort from four to five teams," the American delegation said. "The U.S. government appreciates the initiative taken by Vietnam to repatriate these remains and hopes to continue the increasing joint cooperation to resolve the long-standing humanitarian issue."

Nguyen Can, acting director of Vietnam's office for MIAs, those missing in action during the long war that ended in 1975, agreed that cooperation has been good and the issue is humanitarian rather than political.

"We don't want to use this as any kind of leverage because we understand the feelings of the American families whose loved ones did not come home after the war," he said. "We have our own MIAs, more than the United States."

Can put the figure at 300,000. "We want to solve this question and let bygones be bygones," he said. "What's the good of keeping this alive? It would only let the spiritual wounds of war bleed, and that would not be helpful to any understanding between the two people."

Both governments have sought in public pronouncements to separate the human side of the war from politics, but the MIA issue figures into the process of establishing the diplomatic relations Vietnam seeks.

Washington has said all Vietnamese troops must be removed from Cambodia before it will consider an exchange of ambassadors, economic aid and lifting the U.S. trade embargo.

Hanoi has said it will meet the requirement by the end of next year, perhaps sooner. Vietnam invaded Cambodia in December 1978, overthrowing the murderous Khmer Rouge regime of Pol Pot, and has occupied the neighboring country since.

The United States also has sent word to Vietnam that its cooperation in returning remains would be regarded favorably. In the past, Vietnam slowed the search when it was angered by critical U.S. statements.

Can said some "bad elements" in southern Vietnam were "trafficking in remains" by hiring people to dig in Vietnamese graves, steal the remains and try to pass them off as American.

He said those Vietnamese mistakenly believed American remains would get them entry visas to the United States or some other reward.

U.S. policy "is to accept POW-MIA information from any source," the American delegation said, but "we do not view paying for remains as helpful to promoting government-to-government cooperation on accounting."

"Paying for remains would encourage scavenger activities at crash sites by persons lacking the technical recovery knowledge, thus enormously complicating the U.S. government's ability to recover remains," the Americans said.

"Similarly, the U.S. government does not provide refugee resettlement as a reward for cooperation."

Fewer than 10 percent of the remains of Americans listed as missing in Indochina have been recovered since U.S. forces were withdrawn from Vietnam in early 1973.

Vietnam has returned the remains of 172 Americans identified by the Army laboratory. Another 2,383 are missing: 1,747 in Vietnam, 547 in Laos, 83 in Cambodia and six in China.

U.S. officials acknowledge not all cases will be resolved, because much time has passed and many airmen were lost in jungle terrain or at sea.

The United States "will continue its efforts to account for all missing Americans," the delegation said.

"We still have ongoing efforts to account for Americans missing from World War II and Korea. This solemn commitment to resolve the fate of missing Americans and to return all recoverable remains to their native land will not be abandoned."

Survivors Of Violent Attacks Say Fighting Back May Help

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Most violent crime victims who survived the attacks say they tried to protect themselves, and 63 percent say their efforts helped, a government study found.

However, the study and a victims' rights group both cautioned that the survey's findings should not be seen as an endorsement of fighting back, as those who may have fought back and paid with their lives were not accounted for in the report.

The study by the Justice Department's Bureau of Justice Statistics was based on National Crime Survey interviews from July 1986 through June 1987 with about 100,000 people age 12 and older in 49,000 households nationwide.

The findings "should not be used to recommend whether or not victims should defend themselves or to determine the measures that are most effective," the study says.

John Stein, deputy director of the National Organization for Victim Assistance, says that there's no universally appropriate response to a violent crime due to varying circumstances. Even if there were, he said, the victim probably would be too shocked to carry it out.

"If we do resist, it's not because it's a calculated decision," said Stein, whose organization advocates victims' rights, does research on victim assistance and provides direct services to victims.

When one is confronted with a violent criminal, the situation "clearly is not one in which training, thinking, cognitive stuff is taking place a lot," Stein said.

"I'm not saying we are powerless in moments of crisis, but we certainly emphasize to victims that the level of decision-making we are likely to operate under is very low," he said. "That's one of the reasons why we're not certain that, for example, self-defense training is likely to have much of an impact."

The survey found that 73 percent of the victims of violent crimes — rape, robbery, aggravated assault and simple assault — made some efforts to protect themselves.

Those efforts included fighting back, threatening the attacker or screaming from pain or fear. About one-third resisted or tried to capture the offender, one-fourth ran away or hid and one-fourth tried to persuade or appease the offender. Some tried more than one measure.

Of those victims, 63 percent say resisting helped, 7 percent said it led to more harm, 6 percent said it both helped and hurt, 13 percent said it did neither and 11 percent weren't sure of the effect.

In explaining why no conclusions were drawn regarding whether a victim should take some self-protective actions or which actions those should be, the study noted that the survey did not determine the exact circumstances of each case or whether the victims were correct in their assessments.

"Finally, it should be noted that the National Crime Survey does not collect information on homicides and therefore misses any cases of self-protection that may have resulted in the death of the victim," the report says.

Other findings of the survey include:

—Police, when notified of a crime, arrived within 10 minutes to see the victim in 56 percent of the violent crimes, 38 percent of personal thefts and 35 percent of household crimes. They arrived within an hour in 95 percent of violent crimes, 84 percent of personal thefts and 85 percent of household crimes. Previous surveys have found that police are called only in about half of all violent crimes, 40 percent of household crimes and 25 percent of personal thefts.

—Police had later contact with victims in 37 percent of the violent crimes reported to them — including 62 percent of rapes — as well as 35 percent of household crimes and 25 percent of personal thefts.

—The victim received help or advice from a victim assistance office or agency other than the police in about one of nine violent crimes reported to the police.

The report did not give a margin of error for the survey results. However, traditional polls involving 1,000 people typically have error margins of 3 percent to 4 percent. With a substantially larger sample, the margin should be lower.

Reagan Won't Suffer Financially In Retirement

By W. Dale Nelson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON (AP) — As President Reagan heads "back to the ranch" on George Bush's inauguration day, he will carry with him a passel of perquisites that presidents receive when they become former presidents.

For one thing, he will fly to California on Air Force One, but that's only a one-shot deal. The plane will be flown back to Washington without him and after that will be earmarked for the new president.

There will be no need, however, to pass the tin cup for Reagan. Unlike such early presidents as Thomas Jefferson, who had to sell his books to make ends meet, Reagan will, like other recent ones, be quite comfortably off.

He gets two pensions, around-the-clock Secret Service protection, an office allowance and the use of a townhouse in Washington. In addition, the government will pay to ship his papers to California, process them and run his presidential library.

Reagan already receives a pension of $29,188 a year from the state of California, because of his eight years as governor.

Now, with eight years as president under his belt, he will receive a federal pension equal to the annual salary of a member of the Cabinet. This is currently $99,500 but will jump to $155,000 if Congress approves a salary increase Reagan has recommended.

The Secret Service protection applies to both the president and his wife, Nancy. Should Reagan die, she would receive lifetime protection unless she remarried. The Reagans' children will receive no protection, since they are all adults.

Former Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., who waged a campaign to scale back benefits for former presidents during his Senate career, estimated the cost of the Secret Service protection at $9.3 million in 1986. This covered former Presidents Ford and Carter, but not Nixon, who chose to hire private bodyguards.

"I wouldn't be surprised to see that double in the first year that Reagan is out of office," said Robert Coakley, who was Chiles' staff director and is now on the staff of Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio.

Coakley said the first year out of office is always the most expensive because of equipment purchases.

Also, although Reagan spoke in his final presidential radio address Saturday of going "back to the ranch," he and Mrs. Reagan actually plan to live in a fashionable Los Angeles neighborhood and continue to use their 688-acre ranch north of Santa Barbara as a vacation home. Protecting both places also will increase the cost.

Each former president receives an office allowance of up to $300,000. Reagan already has waiting for him a penthouse suite in a Los Angeles office building, with offices for himself, Mrs. Reagan, the Ronald Reagan Presidential Foundation, the Secret Service and press aide Mark Weinberg.

The Washington townhouse, on a side street near the White House, is reserved for the use of former presidents when they come to town, although they do not always use it. President Carter, for instance, stayed in the presidential suite of a hotel about a block away when he came through town on a recent book promotion tour.

In 1986, the Senate passed a Chiles bill to limit Secret Service protection and reduce the office allowances, but it failed to win approval in the House.

Chiles did secure enactment of a bill requiring the private backers who put up the funds to build presidential libraries also to create an endowment to underwrite the cost of running them. There's a catch, though. At the insistence of the administration, the bill exempted the Reagan library, now being built in Simi Valley, Calif.

In addition to the cost of running the library, National Archives spokeswoman Jill Brett said an estimated $500,000 is ticketed for moving Reagan's presidential papers to California and $1.3 million for renovating and equipping storage room for them in the Archives' facility at Laguna Niguel and in rented space at Culver City.

James B. McKinney, director of the White House Military Office, which oversees transportation, medical and other services for the president, said those services will be available to the ex-president for six months, but he will have to pay for them. Weinberg said Reagan expects to use only "some limited communications support to facilitate the transition."

Reagans' personal finances are hard to measure, since most of his assets are in a blind trust. His latest government financial disclosure form, which discloses assets in broad categories, said only that the trust is worth more than $250,000. The Reagans bought their ranch for $526,000 in 1974 and made $127,000 in improvements to it eight years later. The new home in Los Angeles was purchased for $2.5 million by California friends from whom the Reagans are leasing it for a reported $15,000 a month.

Both of the Reagans plan to write books and make speeches, for which they are expected to command handsome fees.

All in all, if Reagan's presidential limousine turns into a pumpkin at the stroke of noon on Friday, it certainly should be a prize pumpkin.

Inauguration Means Another Arrest

By Jennifer Dixon
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Another presidential inauguration is likely to mean another arrest for Stacy Abney, an expatriate Texan who is routinely carted away by police from a Capitol archway whenever new presidents and foreign dignitaries appear.

Abney has been arrested 21 times for refusing to leave the archway, where he has slept on scraps of carpet for the past 14 years.

Rain falling on a recent January day sluiced over the edge of the archway and kept Abney from his usual daytime perch in the middle of the Capitol's main steps, where he crouches with a placard listing health problems blamed on his World War II military service.

Tourists, he says, have told him the Capitol steps "are too good" for someone like him. But as the chilling cold turns each word into puffs of mist, he declares that he isn't going anywhere until the government relents and gives him disability payments.

An arrest at this year's inauguration of a fellow Texan, George Bush, "is a given," says U.S. Capitol Police spokesman Dan Nichols. "As part of his protest he refuses to leave."

Abney is cited for unlawful entry when he won't budge for police securing the building for special occasions. So far, he's been arrested 21 times, Nichols said.

Stacey Abney stands in front of Capitol archway

He is taken to a District of Columbia jail, but always comes back to the Capitol upon his release.

"Mr. Abney is never disorderly," Nichols said. "He's very docile as far as police go. He presents no special problems."

Nichols, who used to patrol the east side of the Capitol where the 77-year-old stages his lone and silent protest, says tourists sometimes complain that Abney ruins their pictures, sitting on the imposing Capitol steps with his roughly scrawled cardboard sign.

Nichols says he always explained to the visitors that only in the United States would a protester be allowed to demonstrate at the foot of the Capitol. "They should be happy that's allowed in our country," he said.

"We consider him a demonstrator, not a homeless person," Nichols said. "He demonstrates every day on the Capitol steps and at night, by being on the Capitol grounds."

Born a mile from the Louisiana border in northeast Texas, Abney says he came to the Capitol to fight for disability benefits he believes he deserves for serving in the military — 18 months and six days in the United States and 25 months and two days overseas, in England, France, Belgium and Germany.

He said that after his discharge, doctors told him not to work on account of his weak heart, high blood pressure, gout and arthritis, and he hasn't held a job since 1948.

"I don't get nothing from the VA (Veterans Administration) in Texas for 29 years," he says, so he came to Washington.

He says some people give him food and money as they bustle past him on their way to tend to congressional business, but he still shivers through the winter and swelters in the summer.

"When the wind comes through here, it's as cold as ice. I stand here all day in the cold, freezing weather. I ain't got no sign of fire, no sign of heat," he says, wiping a drop of rain from his face with a crumpled paper towel.

In the summer, he says, he finds places where he can rinse the dirt from himself and his clothes.

"Then I sit out in the sun like an animal and get dry," he says.

He refuses to move to a shelter for the homeless, because, he says, it would be "h-e-double-l."

"Why sure, I'm lonely," he says. "Who wouldn't be, stuck out here like this 24 hours a day? But no, I'm not sad. I'm not worried."

"I wasn't getting anywhere so I came up here and decided to fight until I get it. I haven't gotten it but I'm still fighting."

Amid Political Glitter, The 'Other' Washington Comes Down To Earth

By Ruth Sinai
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — On a snowy Sunday morning this month, two youths were buying drugs within a few steps of the Embassy of Spain. There was nothing furtive about the deal, just money handed over and two small packets given in return. Anybody driving by could have seen it.

Across the street, next to the Polish Embassy, a young woman signaled a passing car. The car stopped, the woman leaned into the open window and handed over some money. She withdrew a gloved hand holding a small package. Anybody could have watched.

That block, just a mile up 16th Street from the White House, is one of the estimated 90 open-air drug markets flourishing in the capital, which last year achieved the distinction of having the nation's highest murder rate.

Washington is a city of contrasts, and they never have been more stark. The news coming out of the capital these days — of farewells and the fresh expectations which arise with the inauguration of a new president — competes against news of murder, drugs and a mayor under a cloud.

Things have gotten bad enough for the other Washington to begin to poke into the consciousness of official, prosperous, gleaming Washington.

Barely a block from the White House, some of the city's homeless huddle on heating grates. Activist Mitch Snyder estimates there are 15,000 people who live in Washington with no homes other than the streets, and he says several have frozen to death. The best publicized case was that of Jesse Carpenter, a World War II veteran who died of exposure across the street from the White House in Lafayette Park.

Across the street from the domed Congress, a beggar jangles coins in a tin cup and asks passing legislative aides for money.

"It's the American dream and the American nightmare all rolled into one," said B.J. Harris, a drug education counselor with the non-profit Sasha Bruce Youthworks, a youth counseling service named in honor of the late daughter of a prominent American diplomat.

Statistics provided by the Census Bureau highlight the disparity.

The District of Columbia has the nation's second highest per capita income after the state of Connecticut: $20,303 annually, which is 32.3 percent higher than the national average.

The city has the nation's fourth highest per capita education level, with 28 percent of the population having completed 16 years or more of schooling.

Yet, Washington's infant mortality rate is the highest in the country — 20.8 per 1,000 births, compared to the national average of 10.6, according to the Children's Defense Fund. The city has the country's highest tuberculosis case rate, 25.4 per 100,000, according to the Centers for Disease Control.

"This city has monoliths of marble attesting to a great civilization, and yet some of its neighborhoods are like the undeveloped Third World," Harris said.

Most of the 27 million tourists who come through Washington every year never see the seamy sides. In Washington, most neighborhoods are clearly delineated between the 170,000 white minority and the 458,000 blacks and Hispanics.

There are many middle-class black neighborhoods, and integrated neighborhoods, with tidy lawns and substantial houses which could fit anywhere in America. Some of the predominantly white areas, such as green and grassy Spring Valley or Cleveland Park, with shaded streets of elegant Victorian homes, are as comfortable as any in America.

One can stroll down Massachusetts Avenue — past the official residence of the vice president, past the statue of Winston Churchill, past the ornate Islamic Center where Moslems gather to worship, past dozens of elegant embassies — without a moment's thought of danger.

In fact, one can live a lifetime in northwest Washington removed from the violence and crime that characterize neighborhoods just a few miles away.

"The lines of race and class are very distinct here," said Harris.

"The neighborhood we live in is completely white and it's a world apart from" the crime-ridden streets in other parts of the city, said Lauren Silva Pinto, a television producer who lives with her husband on a shaded block in northwest Washington. "I feel extremely safe here, we walk around at night with no problems, have barbecues, visit neighbors."

Washington became a mecca for blacks fleeing the segregationist South in the first half of this century. Washington was segregated itself until after World War II, but jobs were available for blacks, who ultimately became the majority group in the capital.

Most of the people who work in Washington, whether for the federal government or other employers, live in suburbs across the Potomac River in Virginia or across the district line in Maryland

Forgive Others And Know Peace

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Readers: Did you know there is an International Forgiveness Week? Well, neither did I, until last year. And this is the week.

If you are a card-carrying member of the human race, there is at least one person in your life who needs your forgiveness. Or perhaps it's YOU who needs to be forgiven. So, get aboard the mea culpa bandwagon. Robert Muller, former assistant secretary-general of the United Nations, wrote this piece especially for International Forgiveness Week:

Decide To Forgive
Decide to forgive
For resentment is negative
Resentment is poisonous
Resentment diminishes and devours the self.

Be the first to forgive,
To smile and to take the first step.
And you will see happiness bloom

On the face of your human brother or sister.
Be always the first
Do not wait for others to forgive

For by forgiving
You become the master of fate
The fashioner of life
The doer of miracles.
To forgive is the highest,
Most beautiful form of love.
In return you will receive
Untold peace and happiness.

Here is the program for achieving a truly forgiving heart:
Sunday: Forgive yourself.
Monday: Forgive your family.
Tuesday: Forgive your friends and associates.
Wednesday: Forgive across economic lines within your own nation.

Thursday: Forgive across cultural lines within your own nation.

Friday: Forgive across political lines within your own nation.

Saturday: Forgive other nations.

Only the brave know how to forgive. A coward never forgives. It is not in his nature.

— By Robert Muller
Many years ago, B.C. (Before Column), I came across this particularly poignant description of forgiveness:

"Forgiveness is the fragrance of the violet which still clings fast to the heel that crushed it." No source was credited, so I searched for years until I finally found it. And here it is:

Forgiveness
— By George Roemisch
Forgiveness is the wind-blown bud which blooms in placid beauty at Verdun.

Forgiveness is the tiny slate-gray sparrow which has built its nest of twigs and string among the shards of glass upon the wall of shame.

Forgiveness is the child who laughs in merry ecstasy beneath the toothed fence that closes in Da Nang.

Forgiveness is the fragrance of the violet which still clings fast to the heel that crushed it.

Forgiveness is the broken dream which hides itself within the corner of the mind oft called forgetfulness, so that it will not bring pain to the dreamer.

Forgiveness is the reed which stands up straight and green when nature's mighty rampage halts, full spent.

Forgiveness is a God who will not leave us after all we've done.

Wedding Vows Said Sunday

FARMVILLE — The wedding ceremony of Mary Lisa Carraway and William Nathan Holloman Jr. took place Sunday.

The Rev. William Scott Sowers conducted the ceremony in the Marlboro Free Will Baptist Church at 3 p.m.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Robert D. Carraway of Greenville and Mary S. Styron of Farmville and Mr. and Mrs. William Nathan Holloman of Harrellsville.

Jeanie Elizabeth Taylor of Winterville was honor attendant. The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers were Brett Lee Holloman and Lofton Heath Holloman of Harrellsville, both brothers of the bridegroom.

Pianist Lynn Chapelear and soloist Chris Edwards presented wedding music.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a formal gown of white bridal satin featuring a sabrina neckline, fitted bodice and basque waistline. Seed pearls, sequins and schiffli embroidered lace accented the bodice. Lace cutouts trimmed the skirt and cathedral train which cascaded in ruffles. A bustle butterfly bow highlighted the back bodice and matching embroidery and pearls trimmed the full-length sleeves. She wore a crown headpiece of alencon lace flowers, pearls and crystals attached to an imported fingertip-length illusion veil with a bubble pouf. She carried a cascade of pink sweetheart roses, miniature carnations, baby's breath and greenery accented by streamers.

The maid of honor wore a royal blue tea-length gown of satin. The gown had a sweetheart neckline and the pouf sleeves had a ruffle effect. The bodice was fitted and the waistline was basque. The skirt extended into an A-line design with a satin bow in back. She carried a nosegay of pink miniature carnations, white carnations and baby's breath tied with pink and royal blue streamers.

Friends of the bride gave a reception in the fellowship hall of the church.

The bride is a graduate of Farmville Central High School and Pitt County Community College. She is employed by Charlotte Memorial Hospital. The bridegroom, who attended Ahsokie High School and Pitt County Community College, is employed by Crowdet Construction Company.

After a wedding trip to Atlantic City, N.J., the couple will live in Charlotte.

Southwestern Look Gains Speed

By Cathrine Cook
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

The Western, especially Southwestern, trend has been gathering speed for several seasons. Pointed cowboy boots have been much sought-after by the young and trendy of late, and cowboy fringe is decorating many a jacket, in thrift-shop versions on the streets as well as in sophisticated megabuck variations in the designer boutiques. The influential French designer Jean-Paul Gaultier even shows a version of chaps in his current collection.

Bandannas are another element of the look, worn pirate style around the head by both men and women, tucked in pockets, wrapped as belts and serving as inspiration for printed fabrics. Laced-up fastenings reminiscent of Daniel Boone are a detail decorating shirts and skirts and pants, especially in suede.

Even the cosmetics industry is getting in the mood. Estee Lauder has titled its new spring makeup campaign "Heading West" and promotes makeup colors with names like "Prairie Orange," "Canyon Rose" and "Tumbleweed Tan."

The Carole Little Wear clothing line for this spring is meant to be evocative of primitive Indian sand paintings in shades the designer refers to as "sandstone, sagebrush, maize and coral." The design motifs are based on geometric carpet shapes and pueblo prints.

The West has provided inspiration for Carole Little's designs at various times since she first launched her business in 1975, but lately she's received even greater response to clothes with a Southwestern touch.

"I think it's because so much today is machine-made and people appreciate the detail of handwork that goes into that kind of clothing — like the beading and the lacing," she says.

"In an era of fashion where people are bringing back the '60s and hippies, anything you do that has handwork, it's something women are going to like."

Her sweaters and pants for the upcoming transition months are trimmed with wooden and crystal beads and for spring are decorated with seed beads like those on Indian moccasins.

Western wear offers a certain advantage over such recent fashion fads as neon-colored spandex: It can be worn again. Western wear has become a classic element of the American wardrobe. Well-maintained suede vests and suede skirts, prairie skirts and petticoats can often be worn for years.

But there are subtle differences between this year's fling with the West and that of previous years. Bernie Ozer, vice president with the Associated Merchandising Corp. in New York, says that this trend around the fringe being worn tends not to be a pure American West interpretation, but "a combination of Western and Spanish."

In a report from Elle magazine, the accessories touted under the heading "Cowboy Chic" tend not to be literal interpretations of Western garb. The cowboy boots are cropped to the ankle and equipped with steel tips. The star pins are free-form interpretations of the old sheriff's badge. And in place of the conventional bolo there are leather rope necklaces dangling with charms or dog tags.

One aspect of the new trend that may provide it with some longevity is the opportunity it provides for mixing and matching items in an existing wardrobe with new Western clothing or accessories for a variety of completely new looks.

Stock And Market Reports

By The Associated Press
HOGS: Market steady to 50 cents lower at N.C. buying stations. Kinston, Spivey's Corner, Murfreesboro, Robersonville, Siler City 41.00; Clinton, Fayetteville, Dunn, Pink Hill, Chadbourne, Ayden, Laurinburg and Benson 40.75; Wilson 41.00; sows: (500 pounds up) Fayetteville 31.00; Wallace 31.00; Spivey's Corner 32.00; Rowland 31.00.

BROILERS: The North Carolina fob dock quoted price on broilers for this week's trading was 53.25 cents, based on full truck load lots of ice pack USDA Grade A sized 2 1/2 to 3 pounds birds. 100 percent of the loads offered have been confirmed with a final weighted average of 53.09 cents. The market is mostly steady and the live supply is adequate for a mostly light demand. Average weights are desirable. Estimated slaughter of broilers and fryers in North Carolina 1,513,000, compared to 2,090,000 last Monday.

GRAIN: No. 2 yellow shelled corn 2 cents higher, at mostly $2.97-$3.13 in the East; mostly $3.13-$3.23 in the Piedmont; No. 1 yellow soybeans 5 to mostly 6 cents higher at mostly $7.95-$8.09 in the East; mostly $7.75-$7.80 in the Piedmont; wheat mostly $4.16-$4.22; new crop wheat $3.34-$3.69. Exchange rates for P.I.K. certificates were steady and ranged from 97 to 99 1/2 percent of face value.

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market was little changed today in quiet holiday trading.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks slipped 1.96 to 2,224.11 in the first half hour of trading.

Gainers and losers ran about even in the overall tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 420 up, 429 down and 564 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 15.72 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

Trading had been expected to be light because of the absence of many investors taking the day off in observance of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday.

Analysts said the mood of the markets kept brightening gradually as the rally in stock prices that began last November continued into the new year.

By the end of last week, several primary indicators of market trends stood at their highest levels since the crash in October 1987.

However, brokers said some traders were selling today to cash in on those gains. Many Wall Streeters worry that the rally cannot make much progress unless interest rates turn downward.

Losers among the blue chips included American Express, down 1/4 at 27 3/4; Sears Roebuck, down 1/4 at 41 3/4; General Electric, down 1/8 at 44 3/4; and Eastman Kodak, down 1/8 at 44 3/4.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks slipped .05 to 159.53. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .06 at 315.99.

On Friday the Dow Jones industrial average rose 3.75 to 2,226.07, finishing the week with a net gain of 31.78 points.

Heart Disease Death Rate Drops But It's Still Nation's Biggest Killer

By Daniel Q. Haney
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MONTEREY, Calif. — Heart disease remains the nation's biggest killer, taking a life every 32 seconds.

King

Mrs. King gave her speech before an estimated 1,200 people at the church where King and his father were co-pastors. It may have been her final "State of the Dream" address as president of the King Center, a memorial and policy center in Atlanta.

On Saturday, she announced that her 27-year-old son, Dexter Scott King, would assume the presidency April 4 — the 21st anniversary of King's assassination at a Memphis, Tenn., motel in 1968.

Today is the fourth year for the King holiday. In 1983, after a bill passed by the House of Representatives, Congress named the day in January as a national holiday honoring King, whose actual birthday was Sunday.

Most states also observe Martin Luther King Jr. Day as a state holiday. Among the few that don't is Arizona, where rallies were planned in Phoenix and Tucson and where prospects are uncertain for a measure that lawmakers plan to introduce this year.

"When will those who have been ejected to lead our great state into the 21st century finally remove all the suggestions of racial bigotry and narrow, myopic political viewpoints and let this state join the entire nation?" said the Rev. Warren Stewart during a church service in Phoenix on Sunday.

Former Gov. Bruce Babbitt created a King holiday for some state employees in 1986 after the Legislature refused to act on a broader bill, but the state attorney general ruled it illegal without legislative action.

Babbitt's successor, Evan Mecham, rescinded the order before the first holiday could be celebrated. The uproar helped create a climate that led to Mecham's impeachment and removal from office last year.

Jackson, the former Democratic presidential candidate, was in New York on Sunday where he told about 1,500 people in a Harlem church that too many young blacks are confused about what their civil rights are.

"If you know your history, you'll have a sense of destiny," Jackson said. "If slavery could not stop us ... if apartheid could not stop us, nothing can stop us now."

He also urged people to avoid drug abuse.

"That is a civil wrong. Dr. King did not die for your right to sniff cocaine and crack and heroin. Stay the dream. Don't betray the dream," Jackson said.

but researchers have made "unbelievable" progress in taming the disease, according to the American Heart Association.

Figures released Sunday show that deaths from heart and blood vessel disease have dropped 24 percent during the past decade. Researchers attribute the improvement to healthier living habits and better treatment.

"The public ought to appreciate the progress that has been made in heart disease over the past 20 years," said Dr. Myron L. Weisfeldt, the association's president-elect.

"It's almost unbelievable. There is almost no form of heart disease that we can't approach without meaningful treatment."

However, Weisfeldt, a heart specialist at Johns Hopkins University, cautioned that much work remains in improving care and encouraging people to take better care of themselves.

"I believe we can prevent at least 50 percent of the ischemic heart disease in the United States by the year 2000 if we stop smoking, get cholesterol treated if it's above 220 and identify and treat hypertension," he said.

Ischemic heart disease is the clogging of blood vessels that feed the heart. It underlies most heart attacks, the single most lethal heart ailment.

The association said that in 1986, the most recent year for which there are statistics, an estimated 978,500 Americans died from heart attacks, strokes and other diseases of the heart and blood vessels. Cancer, the No. 2 killer, took 466,000 lives.

The association's latest figures show that more than one in four Americans suffers some form of cardiovascular disease, and almost half eventually die from it.

Obituary

Heath

Mrs. Alma Edwards Heath, 81, died Sunday at Pitt County Memorial Hospital.

The funeral service will be conducted Tuesday at 2:00 p.m. in the Wilkerson Funeral Chapel by Rev. Bobby Aycock and Rev. Ed Walker. Burial will be in Pinewood Memorial Park.

Woody Peele

It's been 25 years this month since I first sat down at the sports desk at The Daily Reflector.

There have been a lot of people who have crossed my path during those years, but not one of them had the effect on sports than the man who died Saturday night, Dr. Leo W. Jenkins.

Leo Jenkins influenced the lives of nearly every person in eastern North Carolina while he served as president, and then chancellor of East Carolina. He led the school from the ECTC days to university status, making it one of the top schools in the state.

He fought against great odds to have his greatest dream, a medical school for East Carolina, come into being.

What he accomplished in the field of education and medical sciences not only affected us during his tenure but will continue to affect us long into the future.

Jenkins was also proud of the athletic programs at East Carolina and always was putting forth the idea that if a school had a program, it should be one it could be proud of. He urged the other four Division I schools in the state to play the Pirates and saw that come to be. Although those ties have, at least for now, ended, they might never have occurred if not for Jenkins leadership and pressure.

Shortly before I came to Greenville, he started his movement to bring East Carolina out of the minor leagues. He took the school out of the Carolinas Conference and into the Southern Conference. He went into the mountains of North Carolina and brought Clarence Stasavich from Lenoir Rhyne to head the football program.

Now, 25 years later, the program is still growing, still struggling, to meet the goals of Leo Jenkins. Many might say that it has not yet arrived, and in many ways, they might be correct.

But without Jenkins' leadership, the ECU athletic program would have never made the strides it has.

Often, I joked with him following a speech over his misquote of Grantland Rice. "Grantland Rice was wrong with that bunk about how you played the game," Jenkins would say. "It does matter whether you win or lose."

You always quoted him wrong, Leo. Rice wrote:
When the One Great Scorer comes to write against your name—
He marks — not that you won or lost — but how you played the game

Leo, you played the game well — and we all won for it.

Morgan, Cavaliers Rip Tar Heels

Virginia's Richard Morgan drives past Steve Bucknall

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — Virginia's Richard Morgan has no aspirations of becoming a doctor, but he's glad to practice a little medicine without a license when the patient is Cavalier coach Terry Holland.

"It was a chance for us to do something for him and maybe ease the pain a little bit," Morgan said after scoring a career-high 39 points Sunday to help Virginia to a stunning 106-83 Atlantic Coast Conference victory over No. 8 North Carolina.

Hours before the contest, Holland had been released from the University of Virginia Medical Center, where he had been confined since Jan. 1 for stomach surgery. On his way home, Holland stopped at University Hall for a visit with his team prior to the game.

"To see Coach Holland come in just before we went to our team meal was a very heartfelt experience," assistant coach Dave Odum said. "In the seven years I've been associated with him, that's the first time I've ever seen him crack just a little. I think he allowed himself one tear — that's all his personality will allow. But he just told the team to have fun."

Morgan said the Cavalier players had more in mind.

"Just seeing him today gave us all the extra incentive we needed," Morgan said. "Nobody said anything, but it was understood."

The victory broke Virginia's five-game losing streak, including three losses that had come since Holland's hospitalization, and raised the Cavaliers' mark to 8-6 overall and 1-2 in the ACC.

North Carolina, 14-3 and 1-1, had won six straight against Virginia and 13 of the last 14.

"I'm wary every time I come up here," Coach Dean Smith said. "They're always ready for us."

On this day, Morgan was especially prepared. The 6-foot-4 senior guard hit 13 of 25 field-goal attempts, including a school record eight of 14 from 3-point range, en route to the best scoring game by a Cavalier at home since Ralph Sampson's 40 against Ohio State in 1981.

Smith changed his defense several times in an attempt to control Morgan, and at one point in the second half even assigned 6-10 Scott Williams to guard him.

"He showed what kind of a player he can be when those rainbows are

Cards Top Tech; Pass Road Test

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Coach Denny Crum had been waiting for a road test for his ninth-ranked Louisville Cardinals.

He finally got one Sunday, and the Cards survived the test, using two key 3-point baskets by Kenny Payne in the final 1:17 to trim No. 19 Georgia Tech 67-65.

"They were 49-1 against nonconference teams here," Crum said of Tech. "I think that says something about our team. It gives us momentum and it's always nice to beat a real good team on the road. That was the first Top Twenty team we had played on the road this season."

Since opening the season with consecutive losses against Xavier and Vanderbilt, the Cardinals have reeled off 12 victories.

Tech, which dropped an 82-68 Atlantic Coast Conference decision at North Carolina State on Saturday, fell to 10-4.

Payne's first 3-pointer with 1:17 to play gave the Cardinals a 63-62 lead; his second, with 44 seconds left, built a 66-64 advantage.

"I'm always glad to see him (Payne) shoot the ball," Pervis Ellison said after carrying the Cardinals most of the game.

Ellison, who scored 20 points, hit one of two free throws with four seconds left to provide the final margin, just after Tech's Brian Oliver had missed an opportunity to tie the game with five seconds to play. Oliver was fouled on a rebound, but missed his first free throw and made the second to cut the lead to 66-65.

Louisville seemingly took control of the game with just over 12 minutes remaining when Keith Williams built a 48-42 lead with two free throws.

The Jackets fought back to lead 52-50 when Tom Hammonds converted a three-point play with 9:09 left.

Tech led twice down the stretch on 3-point baskets by Dennis Scott, but couldn't hold off the Cardinals in the final 90 seconds.

"This is a good confidence builder for our team to beat a Top Twenty team on the road," Ellison said.

"When it was on the line, he (Payne) hit two in a row that really helped us," Crum said. "But, everyone had to contribute and it was a good team effort. To hold that team to 65 points on their floor is a good defensive effort."

"I thought we held our poise well even when they made some runs," Crum said. "We didn't get flustered and we executed pretty well."

"For the two 3-pointers, Louisville definitely deserved to win," Tech coach Bobby Cremins said.

"We looked sloppy at times but we played our guts out," Cremins said. "We've got to play a little bit smarter, but I have no complaints as far as guys go. We really gave a tremendous effort."

Payne scored 12 points for the Cardinals and Scott led Tech with 24, including five 3-point baskets. Hammonds had 19 points and 10 rebounds for the Yellow Jackets.

Pleas For A Good Super Bowl Big Game Could Develop Into Spectacle Of Boredom

By Scott Ostler
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Prediction: This will be the year that the Super Bowl outlives its usefulness to humanity. I hope I'm wrong, but don't bet on it.

Unfortunately, it's too late to cancel the whole thing. You can't stop an avalanche in mid-slide. But if this turns out to be the most boring Super Bowl in history, don't say nobody warned you.

The game itself will be terrible, of course, but everybody expects that. The games are always terrible. The Super Bowl game is football's equivalent of a hangover, the pay-the-price residue after a week of fun.

The real event, Super Bowl Week, has always been a festival of comedy, controversy and commotion. John Riggins shows up in full uniform and cowboy boots. Howie Long and Lester Hayes amaze and amuse. John Matuszak blows curfew, Jim McMahon drops his pants, Joe Namath calls his shot, Dexter Manley alternately dominates and boycotts the interviews. Natural rivalries surface, artificial rivalries are created, great characters are discovered.

This year, though, it looks as if the fun will be in short supply.

For starters, the opposing head coaches are the very best of pals. You'd think that the National Football League, as long as it has been in business, would take measures to prevent such an occurrence. Nothing is as dull as buddy coaches, unless it's tennis-buddy coaches.

Bill Walsh of the San Francisco 49ers and Sam Wyche of the Cincinnati Bengals were tennis pals when Wyche was an assistant under Walsh at San Francisco. Did Walsh make questionable line calls, or fake injuries if he was losing to Wyche? Did Wyche try to quick-serve Walsh, or ruthlessly exploit Bill's weak backhand? No, to hear them tell it, theirs was an intense yet spirited relationship. They respect and admire one another so much it makes you ill.

Until recently, the 49ers had a dandy quarterback controversy going. Walsh and Joe Montana spent most of the season pouting and glaring at one another. Walsh whipped up the controversy in the first place, then shamelessly blamed it all on the media.

Now, it's over. Montana played so well, even Walsh couldn't make a case for thinking about starting Steve Young at quarterback. After one playoff game, Walsh and Joe Montana even put their arms around each other's shoulders and smiled brightly for the sideline television camera.

Walsh and team owner Eddie DeBartolo clashed during the season. Would Eddie fire Bill? Would Bill resign? Neither. The 49ers would start winning and Bill and Eddie would rekindle their warm friendship.

You know you're in big trouble when your most exciting story going into Super Week is whether or not Walsh will retire after the game. That specter has kept me awake many nights. For those similarly afflicted, I recommend warm milk and Lawrence Welk on your Walkman.

49ers Hope Road Remains Kind Bengals Hoping To Reverse Season's Travel Woes

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — The road to Miami has been a kind one for the San Francisco 49ers, the NFL's best team away from home.

The Cincinnati Bengals, the league's best home team, haven't taken so kindly to safaris outside the Jungle — Riverfront Coliseum.

Next Sunday, both teams will be in strange environments — neither has ever played in Joe Robbie Stadium, site of the Super Bowl.

For the 49ers, there are places like home. Better places, in fact — San Francisco is 7-2 away from Candlestick Park this season, including the 28-3 romp at Chicago for the NFC championship. At home, the 49ers were 5-4.

"It's a sign of an experienced team when you can win on the road," quarterback Joe Montana said. "We're not the type team to get flustered."

"In a lot of ways, you are a little better off on the road because you concentrate more on the game," Coach Bill Walsh said. "Maybe there was a day and age where guys went on the road and there was a wild party or whatever. But now you get more football in and more concentration than at home."

If ever the 49ers were ripe to trip on a road trip, it was at Soldier Field. Presented with icy conditions as well as the Bears' bone-chilling defense, the Niners never shivered, never looked out of place.

"This is too good a team to be bothered by things like the weather or not having the home field," Montana said. "The best teams in this league can win anywhere. You won't even get into the playoffs without being able to win on the road."

The Bengals won only four of their eight games on the road and just one — against the Cowboys, the NFL's weakest link in 1988 — came after the fifth week of the season. The Ickey Shuffle, the no-huddle offense and AFC crown can't hide those results, which include losses at Kansas City and New England, not exactly NFL powers.

"We're going to do it in Miami just like we did it here," star running back Ickey Woods said after the victory over the Bills. "Championship teams don't have weaknesses and this team's got no weaknesses. Not here, not in Miami."

Top Twenty Is Shuffled

By Jim O'Connell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

After a week which saw nine ranked teams suffer 10 losses, Duke and Illinois remained the top two teams in The Associated Press' college basketball poll while the shuffling continued in the remainder of the Top Twenty and North Carolina had its string of 63 consecutive weeks in the Top Ten ended.

Duke, 13-0, and along with Illinois the only undefeated Division I teams, held the top spot today for the ninth consecutive week in the regular season as well as having been No. 1 in the preseason voting.

Georgetown, 12-1, jumped from seventh to third with 1,070 points after victories during the week over Pittsburgh and Boston College, the latter without coach John Thompson, who walked off the court before tipoff to protest the recently passed Proposition 42, a new set of academic entrance requirements, which the Hoyas' coach says is discriminatory against certain students.

Oklahoma, which fell to 13-2 after losing to Pittsburgh on Sunday, dropped two places to fifth with 947 points, 12 more than Michigan, 14-2, which held sixth despite losing to Illinois on Saturday.

Jones Takes Hope Classic In Sudden Death

PALM DESERT, Calif. (AP) — Steve Jones birdied the first extra hole and scored his second consecutive victory in the Bob Hope Classic. Jones made up three strokes in three holes on leader Paul Azinger and beat Azinger and Masters champion Sandy Lyle. The trio were tied at 343, 17 under par.

Jones, who shot a 63 in the final round, put his approach shot four feet from the cup on the 14th at Bermuda Dunes, site of the playoff. After Azinger and Lyle missed birdie attempts, Jones, winner of last week's Tournament of Champions, rapped his putt into the back of the cup.

King Tops Jamaica Classic After 2nd Round

SANDY BAY, Jamaica (AP) — Betsy King, the leader after two rounds, shot a 1-under-par 70 and won the inaugural $500,000 LPGA Jamaica Classic by six strokes over Nancy Lopez. King, who led the entire way in the first LPGA event of the year, finished with an 11-under total of 202 for 54 holes. Lopez shot a final-round 69 and was next at 208, followed by Lori Garbacz and Marth Nause, each at 210.

Strange Outduels Floyd In Australian Open

GOLD COAST, Australia (AP) — Curtis Strange shot a 1-over-par 73 for a two-stroke victory over Raymond Floyd in the $525,000 Daikyo Palm Meadows Classic. Strange, the 1988 U.S. Open champion, finished with an 8-under-par 280 and earned $92,000. Floyd finished at 282 and Australian Terry Price a shot back in third.

Edberg Takes Forfeit Win Over Cash

ADELAIDE, Australia (AP) — Stefan Edberg completed his preparation for the Australian Open Saturday with a forfeit victory over Pat Cash in the final of the Rio Challenge exhibition tournament. Cash was forced to withdraw after suffering an elbow injury with the score at 6-6 in the first set.

Sixers Handle Hornets Defense

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Mike Gminski says the 76ers know what to do now when opposing squads double-team Charles Barkley, and it showed as Philadelphia downed the Hornets 116-109.

"We've been winning because other guys have stepped forward in scoring when Charles is covered," Mike Gminski said Sunday. "We weren't burying those shots last year."

Barkley scored 24 points, pulled down 15 rebounds, and had six assists and two blocks, but it was his willingness not to pad his statistics that may have been the most telling.

The Hornets double-teamed Barkley in the fourth period. Time after time, he gave the ball away to open teammates.

Philadelphia scored on all but one of its last 13 possessions after acquiring a five-point lead midway through the fourth period. And Ron Anderson sunk two long jumpers in the last two minutes to keep Charlotte at bay.

"When Charles gets double-teamed and kicks out the ball, you'd better make it," Anderson said.

A little more than seven minutes into the second half, Earl Cureton was steaming downcourt toward Charlotte's offensive end. He approached Barkley near the foul line, then suddenly went down on his back.

Cureton, who said that Barkley hit him with a forearm under the chin, leaped to his feet and poked Barkley on the side of his face. He was quickly restrained, but fought for more than a minute to get free.

Cureton was given a technical foul on the play. Barkley received a personal foul.

"I had this flashback to my football days," Barkley said. "I thought I was a linebacker so I hit the first guy that came down the court. I didn't even know it was Earl."

Cureton said, "It was just a dirty play. I don't mind physical basketball, that's my game. But that got me mad."

Charlotte started the game slowly, making just one of its first seven shots from the field. Leading scorer Kelly Tripucka pulled a groin muscle on the first play of the game and disappeared into the Hornets' locker room for much of the first quarter.

Rex Chapman came off the bench to score 10 in the first quarter and keep the Hornets going, but they still fell behind 37-26 after one period. Charlotte pulled to within 58-57 at the half.

Charlotte's Robert Reid battles Charles Barkley and Shelton Jones for a loose ball

The game stayed close until the 76ers assumed control early in the first period. Ahead 89-86 with 9:51 to play, the Hornets missed eight straight from the field.

Philadelphia took advantage of the drought to score eight in a row and take a 94-89 lead with 7:19 left.

Charlotte closed to 96-95 on Tripucka's spinning bank shot, but Hawkins sank a 3-pointer for Philadelphia, and the Hornets couldn't get closer than three points for the rest of the game.

Anderson added 18 points for the 76ers. Tripucks led Charlotte with 25 points, and Chapman had 22.

Lakers 116, Clippers 95
The Los Angeles Lakers found an easy way to end their long road losing streak. They played a game in Los Angeles.

Byron Scott scored 28 points and Magic Johnson got 22 as the Lakers beat the Los Angeles Clippers 116-95 Sunday.

Even though the victory at the Clippers' Sports Arena came just eight miles from their home at the Forum, it officially ended the Lakers' eight-game road skid. That tied for the longest in team history.

Heat 118, Pacers 117
Rory Sparrow scored 20 points, including four foul shots in the final 19 seconds of the second overtime, and Miami rallied from an early 29-point deficit to beat Indiana and end a 10-game losing streak.

Jon Sundvold scored 25 for Miami, including two 3-point baskets in the last 24 seconds of regulation. A pair of baskets by Miami's Pat Cummings in the final 50 seconds of the first overtime forced a second extra period.

Bulls 110, Celtics 104
Michael Jordan scored 42 points, Bill Cartwright had 23 and Scottie Pippen 20 as Chicago beat Boston.

The Bulls won their season-high fourth straight game. The Celtics fell to 4-11 on the road.
With the score tied at 104, Cartwright made a pair of foul shots with 52 seconds left. Pippen's jump shot with 17 seconds remaining clinched it. Jordan scored 17 points in the fourth quarter.

Reggie Lewis led Boston with 32 points.

Mavericks 111, Trail Blazers 108
Derek Harper made a steal and layup with 17 seconds left as Dallas ended a seven-game losing streak by beating Portland for its first victory of 1989.

Harper's basket made it 110-107 and Detlef Schrempf added a foul shot with 11 seconds left. Portland's Clyde Drexler and Terry Porter missed 3-point attempts as time expired.

Bucks 120, Pistons 112
Terry Cummings scored 26 points and Milwaukee past Detroit for its sixth straight victory.

The Bucks, trailing by eight after three quarters, used a 13-2 burst to overcome a 95-93 deficit. Cummings got five points during the run.

Super Bowl ...

The rest of the 49ers, quotewise and controversy-wise, forget it. They give you name, rank and serial number. This is a team that prides itself on holding back from the media. If the old Raiders were the most colorful team ever to infiltrate a Super Bowl, the 49ers may be the blandest and most reserved.

The most talkative and quotable member of the San Francisco group is Montana's back surgeon, who is trying to make things interesting by predicting that Montana, should he be sacked from the blind side, will actually break in two.

Interesting concept, except that Montana doesn't have a blind side. Those aren't ear holes on the sides of Joe's helmet; they're eye holes.

Montana may be the best performer in the clutch in Super Bowl history, but he'll never make the all-interview team, featuring such motormouths as Joe Theismann and McMahon and Namath.

Meanwhile, in the Bengals' camp, you may get some bluster from Boomer this week, but it's nothing like the good old days when Esiason and Wyche not only were not on the same page, but weren't even in the same library.

Now, they have enormous respect for one another. They probably play tennis together. Yawn.

Ikey Woods? The rookie with the ponytail and the Ikey Shuffle? OK, Woods is a very promising young runner, but do we need to know any more than we already know about his end-zone dance? In a dance contest, Ikey would get no better than a tie with Dancing Barry, who entertains at the intermission of Laker basketball games. I've seen guys show better moves hailing a cab.

The game's venue is no help. When they play the Super Bowl in New Orleans, you can count on two or three players doing something foolish on Bourbon Street, embarrassing the team and generating great interest for the event. In Los Angeles, Sunset Strip is always a temptation. But where can a guy go to get in trouble in Miami? The Everglades?

It will still be party time in Miami for the fans and the corporations that turn Super Bowl Week into one long tax write-off toga party. In America, the Super Bowl is God's way of telling us we have too much money.

But the football outlook is bleak. This year we have to rely on the actual game to provide the Super Bowl thrills, and that's scary.

East Wins Japan Bowl Easily, 30-7

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

YOKOHAMA, Japan — Robert Drummond started the show for Japanese football fans with a tackle-breaking 41-yard scoring run on the game's first series and his Syracuse teammate, Kris Ingram, effectively ended it with a fourth-quarter interception.

In between, the East All-Stars let the West in the game for only six minutes in a 30-7 triumph, only the fourth for the East in 14 Japan Bowls.

Drummond scored twice, adding a 1-yard touchdown plunge in the second quarter, and ended with 66 yards in eight carries and another 17 in three pass receptions as he won outstanding offensive player honors.

Duke's Anthony Dilweg, who threw three touchdown passes in the East's 21-10 victory over the West in the Hula Bowl a week earlier, threw 10 yards to West Virginia's Anthony Brown for the East's other touchdown.

Pete Stoyanovich of Indiana added field goals of 49, 30 and 22 yards.

After Drummond's early touchdown, the West, led by UCLA quarterback Troy Aikman, went 79 yards in 12 plays for its only offensive success of the game. Aikman completed four of five passes for 43 yards before UCLA teammate Eric Ball scored from the 3.

Then the West's Marcus Turner intercepted a pass by Michigan State's Bobby McAllister.

But Shon Morris of Auburn intercepted Aikman on the next play, and the East defense kept the West bottled up for the rest of the game, allowing just 45 yards rushing and 94 passing.

After Morris' interception, Stoyanovich lined up to try a 40-yard field goal, but after a bad snap from center he tried a pass and Doug Kline of UCLA intercepted.

The tide turned again on a key third-down play. Thomas sacked Hartlieb, and the East went 66 yards in six plays for a 14-7 lead. Dilweg passed 42 yards to Boo Mitchell of Vanderbilt and later threw to Brown for the touchdown.

On the West's next possession, Rod Carter of Miami intercepted Hartlieb and the East went 33 yards, with Drummond scoring from the 1.

East 24, West 6
STANFORD, Calif. — The West all-stars managed to contain the East's fleet receiving corps in the 64th annual Shrine game, but they couldn't corral a punter and linebacker on the run.

Two key plays by those players resulted in two touchdowns and a 24-6 East victory Sunday in front of 76,000 fans and dozens of NFL scouts at the nation's oldest collegiate all-star game.

But several players stepped forward to give standout performances and enhance their standing in the NFL draft, among them East running back Lewis Tillman of Jackson State and West strong safety Steve Atwater of Arkansas, selected players of the game. Tillman, who broke Walter Payton's school rushing records, ran for 86 yards and a 1-yard touchdown, and Atwater picked off two passes and made 10 tackles, nine of them unassisted.

Punter-placekicker Mike Gillette of Michigan and linebacker Jerry Olsavsky of Pitt provided the plays of the afternoon for the East while the West was suffering from the absence of its two most explosive players. Southern Cal quarterback Rodney Peete and Oklahoma State wide receiver Hart Lee Dykes were injured in the Hula Bowl a week earlier.

Gillette raced 18 yards out of a punt formation for a second-quarter first down formation that led to the only touchdown of the game's first 52 minutes for either side. It was a nifty bit of deception that found a loophole in the game's strict rules, which prohibit exotic formations and blitzing in order to best showcase the talent of top college seniors.

Olsavsky clinched the victory by chugging 75 yards with an intercepted pass for the final score with 4:40 remaining, spoiling a rare West drive. He nearly ran out of gas on the return, but made a couple of dekes in the final yards to send three would-be tacklers sprawling. Olsavsky also was in on 11 tackles.

The West players had been told not to get beat deep by the East's four fast wide receivers, and they allowed only nine receptions by Andre Rison of Michigan State, Nasrallah Worthen of North Carolina State, John Ford of Virginia and Mark Stock of VMI.

Virginia Rolls Past Tar Heels ...

going in," Smith said of Morgan. "I don't think he had an open one all day. We had a hand in his face. All you can do in those situations is congratulate your opponent."

North Carolina's Jeff Lebo scored 26 points before a severe sprain of his left ankle sent him to the bench with 5:23 to go. Smith, whose team plays top-ranked Duke on Wednesday, said he was uncertain how long Lebo would be out.

Lebo was examined by Dr. Joseph DeWalt, the team physician, after the team returned to Chapel Hill on Sunday night. DeWalt said Lebo suffered a severely sprained left ankle, but the X-ray indicated no fracture. He said it was unlikely that Lebo would be ready to play against top-ranked Duke on Wednesday, according to North Carolina Sports Information Director Rick Brewer.

North Carolina, trailing 87-76 when Lebo left, was unable to score again until Hubert Davis made a 3-point goal and free throw that cut the Tar Heel's deficit to 96-80 at the 1:30 mark.

Virginia went ahead for good by closing the first half on a 17-7 run that began with two short jumpers by Curtis Williams. A 3-point goal by Morgan gave Virginia a 50-38 edge with 32 seconds left in the half before North Carolina's J.R. Reid converted a three-point play to make it 50-41 at intermission.

Virginia was up 62-53 with 15:07 left when Morgan scored his team's next eight points, including a pair of 3-pointers, to give the Cavaliers a 70-55 advantage at the 13:48 mark.

North Carolina could get no closer the rest of the way than 73-66 on Lebo's 3-pointer with 10:37 remaining. But Morgan once again answered, this time with a 3-point goal 13 seconds later.

Virginia also got 12 points apiece from Williams, Anthony Oliver and Kenny Turner.

Reid, with 21, was the only other Tar Heel in double figures.

It marked the second time in eight days Morgan had established a new career scoring high, but Holland was the main thing on his mind after the game.

"This is the best healing mechanism around, the best medicine possible," Morgan said.

'Real' Panthers Roll Past Sooners, 99-91

By Bob Greene THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Will the real Pitt basketball team please stand up.

"You saw the real Pitt team today," Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs said after the Panthers upset his third-ranked Sooners 99-91 Sunday. "They played a physical game, and they whipped us physically and emotionally."

So how come the Pitt Panthers were beaten earlier this season by Siena and Duquesne?

"I think we've shown that we are capable of beating anybody ... or of losing to anybody," said Pitt guard Sean Miller.

Brian Shorter and Rod Brookin had career-best performances as Pitt won only its second game in its last six outings. The other victory came against Syracuse, at the time ranked No. 2 in the country.

Shorter scored 37 points and had 12 rebounds, and Brookin had 24 points as Pitt overcame Mookie Blaylock's 37-point performance for Oklahoma. The Sooners got no closer than five points in the second half as their 11-game winning streak ended.

"We were ready to play," Miller said. "It's the most ready I've ever seen Brian and Rod for a game."

In other games Sunday involving Top Twenty teams, it was Virginia 106, No. 8 North Carolina 83; No. 9 Louisville 67, No. 19 Georgia Tech 65; and No. 14 Florida State 101, No.

17 Tennessee 90.

"Every time we'd get close, they'd make the big play and we'd make the wrong play," said Tubbs,

British Actress Says Her Typecasting Hard To Lose

By Kathryn Baker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — During the filming of the classic thriller, "The Birds," Veronica Cartwright would take Alfred Hitchcock his tea.

"Every afternoon at 4:30," said the English-born actress, then a 12-year-old child star. "He loved the fact that I was from Bristol, because he used to tell me all the best wine cellars to go to, like it was really going to help me at 12. I wish I could remember some of them now."

Ms. Cartwright got her start in William Wyler's 1962 film "The Children's Hour." Most recently her roles have included "The Witches of Eastwick," "The Right Stuff" and "Alien" and the critically acclaimed HBO series "Tanner '88."

She can be seen Tuesday night in the CBS movie "Desperate for Love," playing the mother of a teen-ager who is accused of murder.

"That was funny when they sent us the T-shirts," she said during lunch at a midtown Manhattan restaurant. "It says 'Desperate For Love.' Can you imagine me wearing that down the street here?"

The movie was shot in Georgia and is based on a real-life case from Mississippi.

Ms. Cartwright seems surprised when it is suggested that she works a lot.

"I'm glad it seems that way," she said. "Sometimes when I'm off for a month, I start to panic and go, 'Where's my next job?' Yeah, I've been really lucky, and the parts that I've gotten have been really different and not really in the same realm which makes it exciting."

Jack Nicholson, who had directed her in "Goin' South," had suggested her for the role as the small-town prude in "The Witches of Eastwick," a part that had been written with an older actress in mind. Her performance was praised, but she said it set her career back briefly, because casting agents thought she was older than she is, her late 30s.

"I wanted to get out on 'Bull Durham.' I was too old. Susan (Sarandon) gets it, and she's three years older than I am!" she said.

Ms. Cartwright's sister, Angela, was a regular on TV in "Make Room for Daddy" and "Lost in Space." Angela lives in Toluca Lake, Calif., and devotes her time to running a gift shop and raising two children, Jessica, 7, and Jesse, 3, Veronica said.

The doting aunt pulled out pictures of the kids. She said her sister works on occasion, if it's convenient and doesn't take her away from her family.

"Maybe she got saturated when she was a kid, I don't know," Ms. Cartwright said. "She was on series for 12 years. No, I'm the only nut in the family. I like to subject myself to torture."

HBO Dramas Capture 13 Cable TV ACE Awards

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Home Box Office swept the cable industry's 10th Annual ACE Awards on the strength of a trio of dramas that captured 13 of the cable network's 35 awards.

HBO won four times more awards than its nearest competitor: Arts & Entertainment, which won eight. The ACE awards were presented during ceremonies Sunday sponsored by the National Academy of Cable Programming.

HBO's winning dramas were "Vietnam War Story," "Mandela" and "Tidy Endings." In all, HBO had received 114 nominations in the 76 categories for which prizes were given.

Winning performers included Danny Glover, Alfre Woodard, Stockard Channing, Rip Torn, Robin Williams, Billy Crystal and Billy Joel. Lucy Webb received a fourth consecutive ACE as best actress in a comedy series for HBO's "Not Necessarily the News."

Other winning networks were: CNN five; Bravo Cable Network, Discovery Channel, ESPN and Showtime four each; Disney Channel three; Cinemax, Nickelodeon and USA Network two; and Lifetime, Prime Ticket and SuperStation TBS one each.

"Vietnam War Story," a 30-minute anthology series, won five awards out of its 18 nominations, the most of any show. It was named best dramatic series and Wesley Snipes won as best actor. Other ACEs in the dramatic series category were for directing, writing and direction of photography.

Glover and Miss Woodard were cited as best actor and actress in a movie or miniseries for their roles as South African black activists in "Mandela," which got four ACEs in the movie or miniseries categories. Glover played Nelson Mandela, imprisoned founder of the African National Congress, and Miss Woodard was his wife, Winnie Mandela. The drama also won for directing and film editing.

"Tidy Endings," adapted from Harvey Fierstein's play about settling the affairs of an AIDS victim by his ex-wife and homosexual lover, took four awards. It was named best dramatic special and Miss Channing won as best actress in a dramatic or theatrical special. Fierstein, her co-star, won an ACE for writing and another went to the director.

"The Race for the Double Helix" won best movie or miniseries. Juliet Stevenson also won as best supporting actress in a movie or miniseries. "Blackadder the Third" on A&E Network was named best comedy series. HBO's "On Location: Dennis Miller: Mr. Miller Goes to Washington" won as best comedy special.

Pamela Reed won best actress in a dramatic series for HBO's "Tanner '88." Crystal was cited as best actor in a comedy series for "HBO Comedy Hour Live: An All-Star Toast to the Improv." Jackie Mason won as best writer of a comedy special for HBO's "On Location: Jackie Mason on Broadway," but lost the best performance title to Williams for HBO's "Comic Relief '87."

Joel won as best performer in a music special for "HBO World Stage: Billy Joel Live from Leningrad." The show was named best music special.

Daniel Massey won as best actor in a dramatic special for "HBO Showcase: Intimate Contact." Torn was the winner as best supporting actor in a movie or miniseries for HBO's "Laguna Heat."

Peter Ustinov received an ACE as best informational or documentary host for "Peter Ustinov in China" on the Discovery Channel. Roy Firestone was best sports host for "Sports Look" on ESPN. Bernard Shaw of Cable News Network was named best news anchor.

HBO won the "Golden Ace," the cable industry's highest honor for its "high impact" programming. Its three winning dramas were cited, as was "Dear America: Letters Home from Vietnam," winner for documentary special.

The Governor's Award went to Charles F. Dolan, chairman of Cablevision Systems Corp., for his contribution to the development of cable programming.

Harry Anderson, star of NBC's "Night Court" and of cable comedy specials, was host of the awards presentation, which was carried live on 10 cable networks.

Awards in the crafts and technical awards, and in some acting categories, were made Saturday night.

Bridge

By CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠A ♠AKQJ73 ♦874 ♣AK8

Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one spade. What action do you take?
 A.—We are sure that there'll be votes for a direct cue-bid of two spades, a takeout double or a jump to four hearts. Our choice is none of the above—we would bid three no trump! With any lead other than a diamond, we should be able to claim nine tricks; and even if the opponents find a diamond lead, there's no guarantee that they can take five tricks.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠J6 ♥KJ5 ♦AKQ107 ♣AQ4

Your right-hand opponent opens three hearts. What action do you take?
 A.—You can't double because you don't have spades and you might not come close to 11 tricks at diamonds. We'd gamble on three no trump—the odds are pretty good that partner will have the cards we need to collect nine tricks, as well as the half-stopper in spades.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠Q107 ♥A6 ♦K95 ♣AQ765

The bidding has proceeded:
 West North East South
 1 ♠ 2 ♦ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—This is no time for dragging your feet. You have a good hand, stoppers in all suits and a sure source of tricks, since partner almost surely has a six-card diamond suit and you have a key filler. Bid three no trump.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
 ♠AQ74 ♥6 ♦KJ952 ♣873

The bidding has proceeded:
 West North East South
 1 ♥ 2 ♠ Pass ?
 What do you bid now?
 A.—Since partner almost surely has four spades on this auction, we would opt for four spades. However, if you feel the urgent need to check on whether partner does, indeed, have four spades, we would accept a cue-bid of two hearts.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠K1076 ♥5 ♦KJ6 ♣98652

The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♣ Pass 1 ♣ Pass
 3 NT Pass ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—In standard methods, partner is showing a balanced hand of about 21 points. With your 7 points, you should be content to try for nine tricks in no trump rather than 11 at clubs, despite your five-card club and singleton heart. Pass.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
 ♠954 ♥7 ♦AK9872 ♣A63

The bidding has proceeded:
 North East South West
 1 ♣ Pass 2 ♦ Pass
 2 ♣ Pass ?
 What action do you take?
 A.—You know your side has at least an eight-card spade fit, and you have a very fine hand for partner—three prime cards, three trumps and a singleton. Three diamonds is a terrible bid—it shows a sub-minimum two-over-one response. If you bid anything other than four spades, you need to haul out that book on bidding theory.
