Miami Rioters Strike Again

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI (AP) — Rioters set fires and looted stores early today as 700 police officers poured into two black neighborhoods, arresting hundreds in an attempt to halt two days of racial violence in which two people have died.

The violence eased toward dawn, enabling police to reduce their presence.

The riots, which began Monday night in the Overtown section following the shooting death of a black motoryclist by a police officer there, spread to the Liberty City neighborhood Tuesday. The violence, which broke out as Miami made final preparations for Sunday's Super Bowl, forced the cancellation of a National Basketball Association game Tuesday night.

"Things have quieted a lot since about 2 a.m.," said police spokesman David Rivero. "We have pulled back some of the blockades."

Rivero said some sections of Overtown's business district were still closed to traffic at 6:30 a.m., but most roads were open in the mostly residential Liberty City area.

Two fires were burning in Liberty City at dawn, including a church that was being allowed to burn to the ground, Rivero said.

The U.S. Justice Department began an investigation of the cyclist's shooting, which led to the death of the man's passenger after

Mourners Pay Tribute To Leo Jenkins

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

In a memorial service remarkable for its simplicity, Dr. Leo W. Jenkins, chancellor emeritus of East Carolina University, was eulogized Tuesday by the region he adopted 42 years ago and led into a new era of well-being.

The service for Jenkins, who died Saturday evening after nine months of treatment for prostate cancer and related ailments, was conducted by his pastor, the Rev. Caswell Shaw of St. James United Methodist Church, and Jenkins' former pastor, the Rev. William Quick of Detroit.

Quick said he believed that Jenkins wanted to be known more for the regional pride that he kindled in eastern North Carolina than for all his other accomplishments. Jenkins was also pleased, he said, with the outcomes of his hard-fought battle to make the teacher's college he came to as dean in 1947 a regional university and his equally ambitious fight to have the state fund a medical school on the ECU campus.

Greenville residents — many of them East Carolina University faculty and staff, many his fellow St. James Church members — turned out by the hundreds to attend the service at St. James.

But the larger community Jenkins served, eastern North Carolina, was also well represented. People from Washington, N.C., Morehead City, Elizabeth City, and other eastern towns and counties were also in the standing-room-only congregation.

Court Overturns Teacher's Verdict

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The state Court of Appeals has thrown out a conviction against a former Rose High English teacher accused of giving a student a passing grade in exchange for a VCR.

In a five-page opinion handed down Tuesday, the panel of the appeals court voted 2-1 to vacate the 1987 judgment reached in Pitt County Superior Court. Because there was a dissenting vote, the state may appeal the case to the Supreme Court.

Writing for the majority, Judge Gerald Arnold said the court condemned the actions of Madeline Jordan Taylor, 40, of 1404 Dickinson Ave. as unethical and undesirable. But, Arnold said that the statute under which the case was prosecuted is intended to punish professional test-takers or paper-writers,

Steps Down

Pitt County Memorial Hospital officials announced today that Jack W. Richardson, president and chief executive officer of the hospital, will step down as chief executive officer Feb. 28 but will continue to serve as president until March 1, 1990.

Richardson, who has headed the 560-bed hospital for more than 20 years, will continue to be responsible for PCMH's subsidiary corporation, East Carolina Health Services, and to represent PCMH in national, state and local health care organizations and activities.

Robert Harrington, chairman of the hospital board of trustees, said Senior Vice President Dave McRae has been named interim chief executive officer. McRae has been a member of the administrative staff for 13 years and chief operating officer since July 1986.

Harrington said Richardson had expressed a desire to step down from the fast-paced CEO position but to remain active in the hospital's development and in health care.

Edwards Wins Jaycees Annual Service Award

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Donald Edwards of Greenville, owner of University Book Exchange, has received the Greenville Jaycees' 43rd annual Distinguished Service Award.

Greenville attorney Randy Doub, who won the award in 1985, made the presentation at a Jaycee banquet Tuesday night at the Beef Barn restaurant.

Doub recited a long list of Edwards' accomplishments. In 1982 Gov. Jim Hunt named Edwards one of the outstanding volunteers in the state. Edwards is a member of the board of directors of the East Carolina University Foundation and he now provides 12 academic scholarships through his business, Doub said.

Edwards, 36, flanked by his wife, Judy, and their children, Jack, 10, Meredith, 4, and Claire, 2, said he was touched and honored by the recognition, and he praised the volunteer work and fund-raising efforts of the Jaycees.

"I'm just really appreciative of the Jaycees for this award," Edwards said. "I'm really appreciative for what the Jaycees do for this community.

"There's something special about working hard and raising money ... It's what makes our country great. Volunteer work in our country is just the greatest thing in the world."

A Greenville native, Edwards graduated from Rose High School in 1970 and received a bachelor's degree in business from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill in 1974. He then returned to Greenville and began working at UBE, the business his father began in 1967.

Edwards and his family are members of St. James United Methodist Church in Greenville, and Edwards has worked closely with the Boy Scouts of America, the Downtown Greenville Association, the United Way, the ECU Commerce Club, the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce and the Greenville Noon Rotary Club.

Edwards' parents, Jack and Rachel, of Greenville attended the ceremony, and the award recipient praised his mother as the "nicest person in the world." Edwards thanked his father for giving him the opportunity to join the business and said a father can give his son nothing greater than a chance to succeed.

Schoolyard Gunman Slays 5, Wounds 30

STOCKTON, Calif. (AP) — Police today were unraveling the steps that turned a young drifter with a long criminal record into a silent killer who opened fire on a schoolyard jammed with laughing children, killing five and wounding 30 before committing suicide.

Patrick Edward Purdy, 26, killed himself with a bullet to the head after firing about 60 rounds from a Soviet AK-47 assault rifle at hundreds of youngsters enjoying recess on Tuesday at Cleveland Elementary School. The five slain were children of refugees from Southeast Asia.

"I'm shocked. It's just horrible," said Purdy's grandmother, 63-year-old Julia Chumbley of nearby Lodi. "I don't understand why and I probably won't ever know why. It troubles me to think that such a terrible thing can happen. It's like a nightmare. This sort of thing happens to others, not you. Your own grandson."

Purdy, who most recently listed his grandmother's address as home, began his assault shortly before noon when he parked his station wagon behind the school. The car burst into flames in a fire possibly set as a diversion, said Deputy Police Chief Lucian Neely.

Then the 5-foot-11, 140-pound killer, clad in camouflaged combat fatigues, a flak jacket and earplugs, entered the campus through a hole in a fence with the semi-automatic and two handguns and walked to several portable classrooms about 250 yards from the main, L-shaped building. He opened fire from the west side of the portable buildings, then moved to the east side and continued spraying the screaming children before turning the rifle on himself.

In some cases, the bullets went through the wood and stucco walls of the main building and came out the

Foreman Sentenced

A Pitt County man has been sentenced to 25 years in prison after pleading guilty to the armed robbery of People's Bank on Stantonsburg Road.

Judge Herbert O. Phillips III of Morehead City sentenced Mitchell Eugene Foreman Tuesday in Pitt County Superior Court. Foreman allegedly stole $2,063 from the bank May 17, 1988, and threatened employees with a handgun.

Foreman, 38, of Roberson Trailer Park also pleaded guilty last month to the April 1988 armed robbery of the Arborgate Inn on Memorial Drive. Foreman received a 25-year prison term in that case. He now has been sentenced to a total of 50 years.

Two more armed robbery charges are pending against him in Pitt County. He has been charged with robbing the Pic & Pay Shoe Store on Greenville Boulevard last March and robbing the Buccaneer Theater last February. In both instances, he allegedly threatened someone with a handgun.

Police Chiefs Meet

More than 150 members of the North Carolina Association of Chiefs of Police will meet Feb. 5-7 at the Ramada Inn.

Al Nichols, director of the Pitt-Greenville Convention and Visitors Bureau, said the three-day conference is expected to generate about $60,000 in revenue for the local community.

John Otto, executive assistant director of law enforcement services for the FBI, will be the guest speaker.

Otto, who joined the FBI in 1964, has worked in Dallas, Washington, D.C., Portland, Ore., Minneapolis and Chicago. He was acting director of the agency for about five months in 1987 before William Sessions was sworn into office.

The newly elected president of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, Charles D. Reynolds of the Dover, N.H., Police Department, also will speak.

Federal Reserve Banker Says Nation May Enjoy Limited Economic Gains

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

While predicting that 1989 won't be as prosperous as 1988, an assistant vice president with the Federal Reserve Bank in Richmond, Va., says the nation should enjoy limited economic growth.

Kemper Baker of Richmond, who is scheduled to speak in Greenville tonight at the monthly meeting of the Eastern Carolina Chapter of the National Association of Accountants, said there are three main trends that indicate the U.S. economy will continue to grow. Baker, 44, will discuss the "Economic Outlook for 1989" at the association's meeting.

"I don't know that there's a whole lot that looks especially good, but everything looks (somewhat) good," said Baker, who has worked with the Federal Reserve for about 15 years and oversees marketing and public information distribution.

First of all, the rate of consumer spending will likely slow in 1989, Baker said, but the public still appears willing to buy and there should be moderate growth.

Second, the overall business community has remained stable, he said, and investments should remain solid this year, though businesses will likely not grow at the same rate as 1988.

The economy could get a welcome boost from agriculture in 1989, he said, because it is doubtful farmers will have as bad of a year as they did during the drought-plagued 1988 growing season.

Third, the nation will likely continue to close the gap in the trade deficit, he said.

"That gives us a reasonable base for growth in 1989," Baker said.

"The big question in my mind is where we are relative to our capacity to produce," he said. "We know we can produce a lot more in some areas ... but I don't know if the market is there."

The nation's production capacity is a relative unknown, and businessmen and economists will have to wait and see what develops in 1989, he said. It does not appear that the nation has reached its limit, but he said there may be isolated regions in which companies find it difficult to expand.

One of the regions may be North Carolina. The Washington Post newspaper recently reported that the state has one of the tightest labor markets in the country, he said.

In recent months, North Carolina has boasted one of the lowest unemployment rates in the country. While that end is desirable, Baker said it makes it tough for companies to expand when they have to bid against other companies to land workers from the available employment pool.

If labor becomes scarce enough, then wages increase. Then consumer prices also increase, he said.

"Where do we bump into those constraints?" is the question for which no one has been able to provide a concrete answer, Baker said. In his opinion, the nation is not yet dangerously close to is production ceiling

"Overall, I'm reasonably optimistic about that, as well as everything else in the economy," he said.

Even if the nation reached its capacity, consumers would not immediately feel the effects.

"It would tend to dampen growth, put a lid on it," he said. "That would be very difficult for the individual to discern ... . But I'm not sure we're there, anyway."

The trade deficit is an area in which the nation made great leaps in 1988, but the pace of recovery may slow thus year, he said.

"It seems we're getting reasonable growth in the rest of the world, and that bodes well.

"It has closed quite a bit in the last year," Baker said. "But there is still quite a ways to go if we're talking about reaching zero."

Because of the tremendous deficit under which the nation is working, Baker said the country will have to export much more than it imports this year to maintain the current level of progress.

Local Educators Express Concerns With Career Development Program

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Pitt County educators and other concerned persons who met to discuss the North Career Development Program Tuesday evening said they weren't too comfortable with the program, especially the Teacher Performance Appraisal Instrument used to evaluate teachers.

The Career Development Program, authorized for teachers and administrators by the state General Assembly in 1985, has been tested in 16 school systems within the state for three years. It is expected that the state Legislature will review the pilot programs this year and will decide if the Career Development Program should be implemented statewide.

The group of more than 50 people attending the forum, sponsored by the League of Women Voters, Greenville-Pitt County, said the Career Development Program and the TPAI fall short of their purpose in several ways.

David Taylor, an East Carolina University student, said two things trouble him about the program.

First, teachers coming from other states "won't go in at the same level" as teachers within the state who have comparable experience, he said. Also, "evaluators are human beings with prejudices. Where do you find fair evaluators?"

Dr. Parmalee Hawk, who works with the ECU School of Education, said she helped to develop the "training package" for the program.

"The instrument (TPAI) was developed, designed to look at beginning teachers," she said. "These beginning teachers should have a base" of skills in which to build upon.

"The TPAI deals only with things that are alterable," Dr. Hawk said. It does not evaluate humor or other individual personality traits.

In the TPAI, teaching functions are divided into five major areas — management fo instructional time, management of student behavior, instructional presentation, instructional monitoring of student performance and instructional feedback.

Louise Woods, educational committee chairperson for the League of Women Voters in Charlotte-Mecklenberg County, where the program is being piloted, said teachers have viewed the TPAI as a morale deflater because it doesn't consider or encourage flexibility, creativity or risk-taking in motivating students.

Ms. Woods summarized the program, explained its effects on the school system and presented recommendations from the Charlotte-Mecklenberg League.

It recommends that research of models for classroom evaluation be continued so that flexibility and creativity will be allowed; that methods be explored and included that allows parent and student participation in the evaluation of teachers and administrators; that ideas and innovations be shared within the schools, systemwide and across the state; that current classroom teachers serve as outside observers for specified, limited terms and that the Professional Development Plan of teachers is a reflection of students' needs and of the teacher's goals and interests.

Attendants at the forum also expressed concern for the competition among teachers that may develop if the program is implemented statewide but has a funding limit so that only so many teachers would be advanced to higher level and a higher salary per year.

Becky Ebert, a teacher at Pactolus Elementary School, said "they can't even raise the base salary now. When they put this in, where are they going to get the money."

Jackie Wooten, a teacher at Bethel Elementary School, said that, if the base salary for teachers could be re-evaluated, teachers may feel more comfortable with the career ladder.

In the Career Development Program, after two years of teaching and at least four observations are made using the TPAI, successful teachers are granted a continuing teaching certificate to teach a third year. During the third year, teachers must complete 30 hours of Effective Teaching Training and are observed at least four times. Successful teachers are then recommended by the principals to the superintendent for a Career I status where they receive a 5 percent increase in salary over the base salary for third-year employees.

After three years in Career Status I, teachers may apply for Career Status II where they receive about 10 percent above what they would have received in the same year at Career Status I.

There also is a Career Status III level that has yet to be defined by the state Board of Education.

Chet Preyar, associate supeintendent of personnel development services, and Tina Drye, director of certificated personnel in Pitt County schools, explained the personnel development and evaluation system used in school system.

Planning Board Backs Rezoning Of 2 Tracts

The Greenville Planning and Zoning Commission on Tuesday agreed to recommend the City Council approve a request to rezone two tracts of land off South Village Drive.

The commission unanimously approved recommendation of a request by Walter L. Williams to rezone a .14-acre tract, located between Memorial Drive and West Village Drive, from R-6 (residential) to CH (highway commercial) and an adjacent .01-acre strip of land from CH to R-6.

A similar request by Williams to rezone a .17-acre tract at the same location from R-6 to CH was previously considered by the City Council in October and failed to receive the necessary four votes for approval. Two council members at that meeting cited potential conflicts with adjacent residential uses as reason for denial.

Two adjacent property owners spoke at Tuesdays' commission meeting in support of William's request.

Also Tuesday, Commission Chairman Dr. Wallace Wooles appointed a Planning and Zoning subcommittee to meet with officials of various downtown organizations and study mixed land-uses in the downtown area. The subcommittee will consist of commission members Steve Blades, Bruce Flye and Ruth Leggett.

The subcommittee will report back to the commission and offer recommendations relative to a request to be presented to the planning board next month by Evergreen of Greenville Inc. to allow residential development downtown.

"I think that finally to see something happen to downtown other than shops come and go is at least an exciting possibility," commented Wooles.

Board OKs School Land Purchase

By Stuart Savage
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Pitt County Commissioners adopted a budget ordinance Tuesday authorizing the Board of Education to spend $325,000 for a five-acre tract of land at the intersection of Arlington Boulevard and Hooker Road.

But it was unclear today whether or not the property will be bought. Reliable sources said negotiations are still under way for the land, which adjoins the high school athletic complex and the Boys Club of Pitt County property, which the school board recently purchased for $900,000.

Sources close to the board said the Sycamore Hill Baptist Church, which owns the land, had agreed to make the property available to the schools for $352,000. But in adopting the budget ordinance, commissioners agreed to fund only the appraised value of the parcel.

Board of Education member Howard Parker is pastor of the Sycamore Hill church.

School officials have expressed interest in buying the land as part of a plan to convert nearby Greenville Middle School into a high school facility to replace Rose High School on Elm Street.

The acquisition of the Sycamore Hill property would create a 57-acre tract for development of the high school and related athletic complex.

In other business Tuesday, commissioners approved adding the 29 employees of the Pitt ABC Board to the county's group health insurance program — a move which would cut health insurance costs for the ABC employees in half; reappointed Rudy Alexander chairman of the Pitt-Greenville Convention and Visitors Authority, and appointed Louise Downing to the Pitt County Women's Commission.

The board also acknowledged the gift of five willow oak trees — now planted on the courthouse property in downtown Greenville — from Judge W. Russell Duke Jr. and his family.

In other action, the board designated the Mid-East Commission as the agency to receive an estimated $55,800 in money allocated to Pitt County under the federal Economic Dislocation and Worker Adjustment Act.

PCMH Trustees Adopt Resolution 'Praising And Honoring' Jenkins

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY RELFECTOR

The board of trustees of Pitt County Memorial Hospital adopted a resolution Tuesday "praising and honoring" the late Dr. Leo W. Jenkins for his contributions to the good of eastern North Carolina.

Many of those present had attended a memorial service held for Jenkins earlier Tuesday.

The board approved having the hospital continue to use First Citizens Bank for its banking services. A survey of nine other banks determined that the hospital gets the best services for the least costs from First Citizens, said Kathy Barger, financial vice president.

Capital budget requests approved totaled $273,263. Of these, all but $10,260 was for equipment for the hospital's birthing center, soon to be opened. The $10,260 purchase was for a linear staining machine for the pathology department.

Board Chairman Robert Harrington said that a bylaw stating that any board member who misses three successive meetings or 50 percent of the meetings in a year will be replaced. He said the executive committee has recommended a bylaw amendment that will require that board members attend at least 75 percent of the monthly meetings of the committees to which they are assigned.

Charles P. Gaskins, a Pitt County commissioner, was welcomed as an honorary member of the board now that he is no longer a voting member. Gaskins formerly represented the county commissioners on the hospital board and has been replaced by Wilton Duke.

It was pointed out that Gaskins' expertise on the board's building committee continues to be needed and that, as longtime chairman of that committee, he has a greater knowledge of the building needs of the hospital than virtually anyone else in the county.

Dr. Michael Weaver was given a plaque noting his "significant contribution to the development of the medical center" during his tenure as chief of the medical staff and liaison from the medical staff to the hospital board.

Dr. Mary Raab was welcomed as the new chief of staff. She introduced Dr. Paul Camnitz, chief-of-staff-elect, who will attend meetings of the board with her for the next year before becoming chief of staff.

It was announced that an orthotist has been added to the staff of the PCMH Regional Rehabilitation Center. This is a specialist in making and fitting braces, splints and similar assists for injured people.

Jennifer Congleton, now serving as the hospital's guest relations director, was welcomed to the meeting.

It was announced that William Flowers, Arlee Griffin and Katheryn Lewis will serve on a committee to nominate board officers and will report at the February meeting of the panel. Elections will be held in March.

Executive Vice President Dave McRae reported that the hospital is requesting information about grants that might be available from the federal government for innovative programs in serving rural areas with medical resident personnel.

Beth Nelson, hospital public relations director, showed the trustees two 30-second television spots that have recently been filmed at D.H. Conley High School promoting health careers. These will begin airing on all three television stations in eastern North Carolina next month, she said.

Henry Leslie, head of the hospital foundation's current fund-raising drive, said some $715,747.34 has been pledged so far. The figure represents 4.8 percent of the drive's $1,750,000 goal. He invited each of the trustees to give and he said similar appeals are being made among doctors and other leaders of the community. He hopes that the campaign will have surpassed its goal by May 1.

Mourners Honor Leo Jenkins

ficials present were former U.S. Sen. Robert Morgan, now head of the State Bureau of Investigation; C.D. Spangler, president of the University of North Carolina System, and UNC System President Emeritus William Friday.

Jenkins' son James, the oldest of his six children, said after the service that he agreed with Quick that Jenkins considered the fostering of regional pride his best contribution to the area served by the university he headed. "He came here in 1947 with a house full of children and soon knew this was the place that would forever be his home," the son said. "He made eastern North Carolina his own and he wanted it to be the best it could be."

Jenkins' son thanked the public for "the outpouring of love and affection that has been shown my family during this time."

He also expressed appreciation for "everyone who worked with my father over the years. I know that my father demanded big sacrifices from people in order to realize the success that he sought for the university and the region."

Quick said the memorial service was not a time of mourning, but was rather a time to recall the wonderful contribution that Jenkins' life was.

He reminisced about the days when Jenkins and his first wife, Lilian Jacobsen Jenkins, were charter members of St. James Church which met first in a school building. "He was always here with his family," Quick said. "He liked to sit in the northeast corner of the sanctuary. Always an easterner, you know."

He said Jenkins used "the barbecue circuit" — talking to Rotary, Lions and Optimist clubs and the like all over the region — to lead the people. "He did — and he inspired others to do — whatever it took to lead the people of eastern North Carolina out of the wilderness of deprivation and despair."

Quick recalled moments from his long friendship with Jenkins including when Jenkins chose to fly all the way to Detroit to have Quick perform the wedding ceremony for him and his second wife Nancy a few years ago.

Quick said the couple traveled extensively after they were married and he learned to expect postcards from all over the world. One of his favorites, he said, was a card from Israel in which Jenkins said that he was there "cramming for his finals."

Quick proposed that consideration be given to renaming U.S. 264 between Greenville and Raleigh as the Leo W. Jenkins Memorial Highway. "He traveled that road thousands of times," Quick said, "working with the legislature and others in Raleigh for the good of this region. I think it would be fitting."

Robert Morgan, interviewed after the memorial service, agreed with Quick's assessment of the battle that Jenkins waged on behalf of his adoptive region. "I remember at one point," Morgan said, "counting with him 285 different editorials that were written against him and me and our goals for East Carolina College. But he didn't let the adverse comments stop him or even slow him down. He took a little teachers' college and he led the people of eastern North Carolina in making it a great university.

"I'm so glad my wife Katie and I could be here today. I just can't say enough about what a great man I think Leo was."

Vandalism

HIGH POINT (AP) — Vandals caused at least $31,500 in damages to 24 of 26 school buses, two activity vans and a teacher's car at North Davidson Junior High School, officials say.

"It is the most depressing sight I've encountered in 28 years of teaching in terms of material things," said Principal Glenn Compton.

The vandals slashed virtually all of the buses' vinyl seats, front and back, and pulled the the vinyl down, Compton said. They also ripped out fans and other wiring in the activities buses, he said.

Pakulski Trial

WAYNESVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Haywood County Superior Court Judge Chase B. Saunders delayed making a ruling Tuesday in motions on the first-degree murder trial of Mitchell John Pakulski, charged in the 1978 death of Waynesville security officer Willard Setzer.

Paluski, along with Elliott Clifford Rowe, has been scheduled for a fifth trial on the charges.

After two mistrials, the two men were convicted. That conviction was later overturned. A mistrial was again declared in their fourth trial.

Saunders postponed a decision until later this week on a motion by Assistant State Attorney General William P. Hart contesting the withdrawal of Gordon Widenhouse of Raleigh as attorney for Pakulski.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

The Sequel

Reagan's Script Had Serious Flaws

The goodbyes are under way for Ronald Reagan. Thursday he will make a final exit on his most important role — President of the United States.

And while his feel-good script will linger strong in minds of Americans, Reagan leaves the nation a troubling legacy of financial irresponsibility and disregard for propriety. He leaves the nation with false wealth, a nonexistent Civil Rights policy and a widening gap between the haves and have-nots. While his popularity will give Americans fond memories of their 42nd president, the consequences of the national debt he amassed and the trade imbalance he fostered will also linger.

When he delivered his final address last week the president presented himself in the most favorable light possible. The nation is not in a recession, unemployment is low and the nation is not at war. The United States' relationship with the Soviet Union has radically changed.

'And while his feel-good script will linger strong in minds of Americans, Reagan leaves the nation a troubling legacy of financial irresponsibility ... .'

But America is a troubled society. There are large numbers of disadvantaged and poor alienated from the political and economic system. Reagan has not even acknowledged their presence. He simply has disregarded those disenfranchised from the prosperity on the 1980s. The result of that disinterest will be a generation of young Americans who can neither participate, benefit nor share equally in the nation's economic and social fabric.

And these same young Americans, thanks to Reagan, must bear the huge financial burden of an awesome annual federal deficit. Reagan increased the national deficit more than any previous chief executive — and called it economic vigor. His policies have also encouraged mounting debt in the private sector — a fact which has made the nation vulnerable to foreign investors.

The president's successful build-up of the military was an important part of his plans. It was a move that was necessary — but certainly not to the lengths Reagan carried out his defense pump-up. While some attention to a crumbling military was warranted, Reagan plunged the nation into an abyss of debt to stock America's war chest. The price? Too high — neglect of education, social programs and domestic needs.

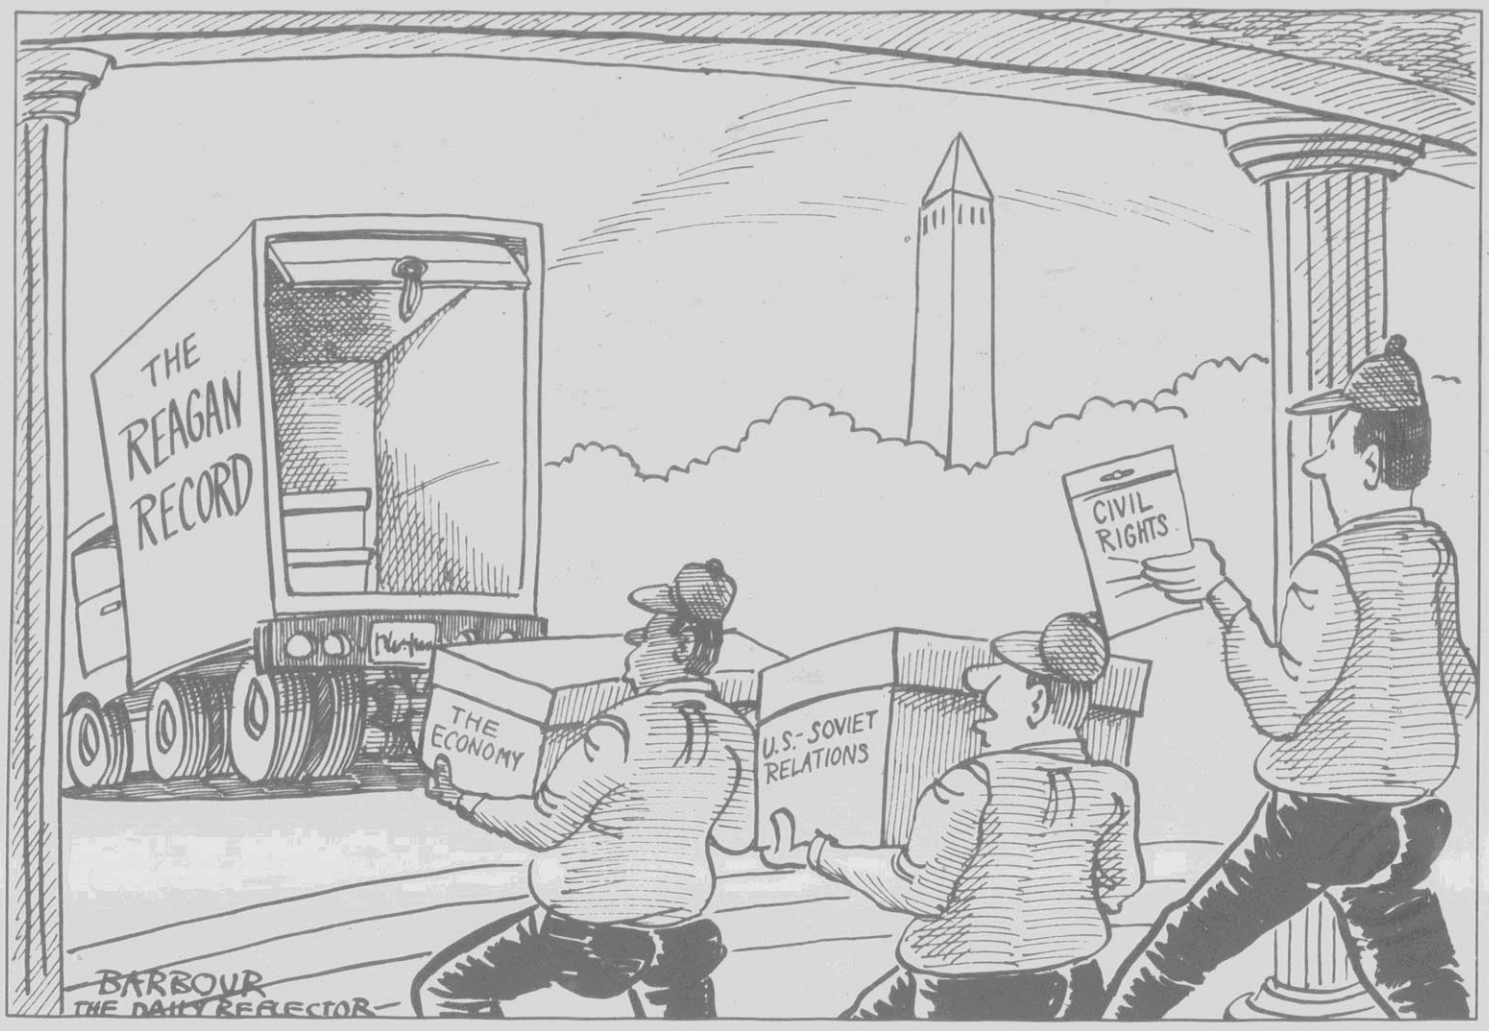
Reagan has also left a record of inattention to propriety that cannot be forgiven. Ed Meese, his attorney general, turned the position of the nation's highest law enforcement officer into a joke with his questionable associates and dealings. Michael Deaver used his influence improperly and was convicted for his deeds. And a group of renegades circumvented the will of the U.S. Congress by trading arms to Iran for hostages and smuggling weapons to Nicaragua. These realities are all part of the Reagan legacy.

In addition, the nation faces other serious consequences from the eight-year Reagan reign. Consider these:

- Increasing competition from other nations and the resulting negative impact on the nation's job supply.
- The United States has made no progress in resolving the difficulties of the Middle East, an area on which it depends for its oil supply.
- The nation faces a huge government obligation for bailing out financial institutions — that on top of the current deficit.
- America has an aging population which expects decent care as its members become old or disabled. There are inadequate revenues to take care of these needs.

President Reagan has been a voice of false assurance for the American people during his term. His vision has been selective, and the result is a nation divided — divided by debt, economic inequities and disparate opportunity.

What has been a comfortable era for many Americans has lulled the nation into a deceptive sense of insulation from the United States' steadily mounting problems. Reagan acted his role amiably, but there were serious flaws in the script. Now the sequel, in which only leadership and courage can keep these faults from becoming fatal flaws, is about to begin.



The Lesson Must Not Be Lost

David Broder

WASHINGTON — The Department of Labor, where Frances Perkins became the first woman Cabinet member half-a-century ago, is now the first Cabinet department where one woman succeeds another of the same party. Retiring Secretary Ann Dore McLaughlin, the only woman in the final Reagan Cabinet, will be replaced by Elizabeth Hanford Dole, the only department head in the Bush Cabinet.

That women should have a special role in the Labor Department at this time is appropriate. One of the startlingly unappreciated facts about the American future is that five out of every eight people entering the work force between now and the end of the century are expected to be women.

Immigrants and minorities will constitute the other major sources of new talent for American factories, offices and stores. Of the next 20 million people to join the job market, only 3.6 million — 18 percent — likely will be native-born white males.

Ann McLaughlin and her equally savvy predecessor, Bill Brock, understand such facts about America's future, things that obviate the cliches of liberal and conservative rhetoric this city's politicians use when talking about domestic policy.

Most startling was what McLaughlin told a Chicago AFL-CIO audience last fall. "(If) workers, managers, government and unions can cooperate," she said, "we can deliver on a promise that has never been made to the American people before: We can offer a job to everyone in this country who wants one, provided they have the skills, the education and the training for the 21st-century workplace."

That sounds like pie-in-the-sky political rhetoric, but it is based on solid economic and demographic facts of life. The American economy has added 19 million jobs in the past six years, cutting the recession unemployment rate in half. But while demand climbs, growth of the labor force is slowing. The postwar baby boom has done all it can do for the supply of workers. The number of additional women ready and able to enter the work force is also trending downward after a huge upsurge the past two decades. In the 1990s, the work force will grow only half as fast as it did in the 1970s. Skill shortages, rather than job shortages, are likely to be the next decade's dominant labor problem.

Building on studies started by Brock, McLaughlin has made the Labor Department a center of creative thinking about this new world of work. One of her final acts as secretary was to issue the department's first-ever report on "Labor Market Shortages," an admittedly tentative stab at outlining approaches to "an issue which has arisen only rarely in our economic history but...may become the norm, rather than the exception, over the next few decades."

In an interview as she ended her 399-day tenure, McLaughlin said two things are clear about this new world of work. As it happens, they both confound conventional wisdom.

One is that affirmative-action programs for women and minorities are becoming, in her words, "a business necessity," not just a form of civil-rights policy. Women, minorities and immigrants have to fill eight out of ten job vacancies and recruiting them will require new efforts by employers.

Second, in this kind of labor market, failures in education and training of any large group of potential workers will cripple the United States in the ever-tougher international competition. "We have an opportunity we have never had before," McLaughlin told me, referring to the prospect of a job for every trained person interested in working. "But we're on the slippery slope in the wrong direction." Too many millions of young people are dropping out of school or failing to acquire the skills new jobs require. And retraining of today's workers, a vital necessity, is plagued by "lack of coordination among bureaucratic fiefdoms."

In her brief tenure, McLaughlin started cooperative ventures with the Education and Commerce departments on improving the quality of the work force. But it's not clear how much of that initiative will carry over under the Bush appointees.

'Ann McLaughlin leaves knowing that leadership in the Labor Department and from the White House will help determine whether this coming decade is a time of unprecedented opportunity for American workers or a time of economic disaster for a skill-starved nation.'

Nor is it clear how attuned the new President is to the dramatic changes taking place in the work force and the challenges they present. In one of the few significant slips of the transition period, Bush commented Dec. 6 that he had "completed my top team" of economic policymakers by naming the presidential assistants for budget, trade and economic advice along with secretaries of Treasury and Commerce. The clear implication that the Labor Secretary was of lesser importance was disquieting. And the later decision to give that job to Elizabeth Dole was viewed, perhaps unfairly, more as a goodwill gesture to her husband, Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, than as a signal that Bush understood the central role that work-force questions will play in the nation's future.

Ann McLaughlin leaves knowing that leadership in the Labor Department and from the White House will help determine whether this coming decade is a time of unprecedented opportunity for American workers or a time of economic disaster for a skill-starved nation. The lesson must not be lost.

It Beats Making License Plates

When Caught, White-Collar Criminals Have A Good Attitude

Art Buchwald

In my continuing series on white-collar crime — a subject I will be dealing with through much of 1989 — I am happy to report that justice is being served because these criminals are being sentenced to community service rather than to jail. So much so that there is now a shortage of jobs for white-collar criminals to perform.

I know this because not a day goes by without someone, who has plea-bargained his way out of a prison sentence, showing up and volunteering to work for me as part of his punishment.

Only last week a gentleman in a Ralph Lauren double-breasted suit and cashmere sweater, holding a mop in one hand and a squeegee in the other, appeared on my doorstep.

"How do you do, sir," he said. "I am a former president of a Texas savings and loan association, and I embezzled the whole stack from my depositors. I was given a choice of 20 years in prison or doing 1,000 hours of community service. I chose the latter and I was wondering if I could wash your car."

"That's very kind of you," I told him. "But we had a convicted felon from one of New York's largest brokerage houses wax our car yesterday. He was working off 1,500 hours in order to pay his debt to society."

"Perhaps then," the S&L executive said, "I could clean your windows. I believe I am the only white-collar criminal who does windows."

"I'm sure you do good work. But we don't really need any windows washed today."

The man sounded nervous, "I hate to beg, but if I don't put in five community service hours by the end of the day, the judge will send me to jail. How about letting me shovel snow from your walk?"

"But it isn't snowing."

"The court will never know," he said.

"That's perjury, which probably got you where you are today. The object of a sentence like this is rehabilitation so that a person will never commit a nonviolent white-collar crime again."

'I know this because not a day goes by without someone, who has plea-bargained his way out of a prison sentence, showing up and volunteering to work.'

"Absolutely," he agreed. "But how can I do it if no one will let me perform the work? I am also a trash man — the best in the Sixth Circuit Court."

"We could use someone to handle trash. But you're a white-collar criminal. How do we know you won't come into our home and juggle our household account books while we're not watching?"

"Trust me. Ever since I have had to cut lawns, I've realized the folly of putting large sums of other people's money into my own account. Nobody who has ever cleaned toilets in community service goes back to a life of crime again."

"You sound contrite," I admitted. "And I think it only fair that we give you a chance to rehabilitate yourself. But if you try to open so much as one Swiss bank account while you work for us, I will see that you never do an hour of community service again."

"Yes, sir — thank you, oh, thank you. If you let me take out your trash, I will only have 896 more hours to complete."

"After you have finished with the trash, my neighbor, Robert Parrish, needs his gutters painted."

"I don't do gutters. But I have a friend putting in 700 hours for illegal computer entry, and he's a whiz with a paintbrush. He loves it so much that when his sentence is up, he is thinking of asking the judge if he can stay on marking lines down the middle of the road."

I said, "What I like about you white-collar criminals is that once you're caught, you have a good attitude. You seem eager to carry out your sentence."

"Community service may not be the same as working for Merrill Lynch," he replied, "but it beats the hell out of making license plates in the Big House."

Martin Calls For Veto, School Choice, DWI Push

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Gov. Jim Martin says he opted for substance over rhetoric in a low-key State of the State address that outlined perhaps his most ambitious and wide-ranging legislative program yet.

Fresh from his inauguration Jan. 7 as North Carolina's first Republican governor this century elected to consecutive terms, Martin presented his agenda Tuesday to a General Assembly still coming to terms with dramatic changes in its leadership and structure.

"We meet ... in a time of great change, of great challenges and of great expectations," Martin said in a 41-minute speech in the crowded House of Representatives chamber of the Legislative Building.

Aside from proposing a $22.8 billion budget for fiscal 1989-91, Martin renewed his call for gubernatorial veto power, endorsed a study of freeing parents and students to choose which schools to attend, called for statewide implementation of the Career Ladder Plan for teachers and supported tougher drunken driving laws.

Martin was warmly received by the legislators, a sign of the enlarged GOP delegation and his promise to seek a better relationship with the Democratic majority. But his speech was interrupted by applause only once, a probable result of its businesslike tone.

"This was a budget message," Martin said. "It's a serious one. If I had done the alternative and come in here with a lot of whoops and hurrahs, a fair question would be (whether the speech was) all rhetoric and no substance."

The Legislature faces sobering problems ranging from tight money to crowded prisons to deadlines for deciding what to do with hazardous waste, the governor said. But the 1989 session can produce "historic achievements" through unity of purpose, hard work and creative thinking, he said.

"It is a time of revenue growth more limited than we have enjoyed in recent years," Martin said. "And yet, while it may not be the best of times, neither is it the worst of times."

The speech contained few new proposals. Perhaps the most notable was Martins' endorsement of the "schools of choice" concept.

He noted that many local boards have established "magnet schools" that offer special programs or curricula, but said some states let students attend any school in a given system. Minnesota allows choice among any school in the state, he said.

"This approach imposes the ultimate test of accountability on a school system: to meet the needs of the students," Martin said. "It is self-enforcing through choice of enrollment, and generally strengthens teachers as academic leaders."

It also would lead local boards to establish "career education high schools" and other innovations, he said.

Twenty-three states have considered the choice concept while North Carolina has "watched from the sidelines," Martin said. A potential adverse result would be resegregation, but other states have avoided that problem, he said.

"With President-elect Bush encouraging this movement to 'schools of choice,' the time has come for us to begin debate on this issue," Martin said.

The State Board of Education should study the matter, he said. "It does not have to be rushed, what with so many issues on our agenda, but neither should it be ignored."

Flexibility and choice also should be emphasized as lawmakers consider fine-tuning the Basic Education Program midway through its eight-year implementation schedule, Martin said. Schools should be allowed to tailor spending on new positions to their particular needs instead of being tied to rigid formulas, he said.

Martin renewed his call for the gubernatorial veto, which he first made in his 1985 State of the State address shortly after taking office.

Some legislators have said if the governor is given veto power, he should forfeit the right to seek a second consecutive term or make other concessions. Martin said he was willing to discuss any proposal, but opposed linking the veto to other policy changes.

He also spoke against a veto that could be overridden by a simple majority vote in the House and Senate — an arrangement proposed by former House Speaker Liston Ramsey. Martin favors a two-thirds override and also wants the governor to be allowed to veto individual items in bills — the so-called "line-item veto."

"It will not do to submit a watered-down version to the people," Martin said. Proposed constitutional amendments must be submitted to a statewide referendum after getting three-fifths support in both legislative chambers.

"Neither should there be any sandbagging of the issue by tying it to unpopular measures in a package so unappealing that the whole would be doomed," he said. "The people should be allowed to vote on a real veto, separate and apart from any other questions."

On other issues, Martin endorsed an eight-item package suggested by two study groups for cracking down on impaired driving. Among the proposals were reducing the intoxication threshold from the current blood-alcohol level of 0.10 to 0.08 for most drivers and 0.04 to truck and bus drivers, increasing fines, and prohibiting open alcohol containers in passenger vehicles.

He also suggested making people injured in accidents involving a drunken driver eligible for the state victims' compensation fund and proposed establishing at least one alcoholic treatment centerse for people convicted of impaired driving.

Martin called for speedy approval of a plan to consolidate state health and environmental programs in a single agency. He endorsed creation of an "environmental index" to set standards for environmental protection and ways to measure progress.

It is "crucial" to reach a decision on handling toxic wastes generated in the state, the governor said. The federal government will impose penalties if North Carolina cannot demonstrate a readiness to choos a treatment facility site by October, he said. Also, South Carolina is threatening to refuse further shipments to its site from North Carolina generators.

The Legislature last year ordered a state commission to stop its search for a hazardous-waste site and to look for an out-of-state host.

Martin also:

— Said he would submit a bill to consolidate agencies dealing with migrant farm worker housing inspections.

— Renewed his call for slashing the state abortion fund so that it will pay only to terminate pregnancies resulting from rape or incest or that endanger the mother's life.

— Proposed establishing an office in the Department of Administration to coordinate literacy programs.

— Called for experimental prekindergarten programs for economically deprived 4-year-olds.

— Made several proposals for environmental protection, including development of an "index" against which the state's progress in fighting pollution and conserving natural resources could be measured. He called for speedy consolidation of state environmental and health agencies.

Budget Highlights

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Here are highlights of the $22.8 billion state budget Gov. Jim Martin unveiled Tuesday for fiscal 1989-91:

— $325.4 million to continue implementation of the Basic Education Program.

— $47 million to hire evaluators and allow statewide implementation of the career ladder program for teachers by 1991.

— $205.8 million for pay increases for teachers and state employees, which would take effect in April 1990. The money would be allocated in an unspecified fashion between across-the-board raises, merit pay for state employees and career-development raises for teachers.

— $7.4 million to hire 100 additional Highway Patrol troopers and 40 State Bureau of Investigation agents.

— A $75 million reserve for reducing prison crowding, including building prisons and expanding alternative punishment programs.

— $93.5 million to offset cost increases in the state employees' health care plan.

— $20.8 million for environmental protection programs such as replacing leaky underground storage tanks and complying with air-quality standards.

— $14 million to improve services for the elderly.

— $220 million for capital improvement projects including improvements of University of North Carolina facilities ($47 million), completion of the North American phase of the state zoo ($8.5 million), development of state parks ($10 million), and a reserve fund for hazardous and low-level radioactive waste projects ($16 million).

Legislators Cautious Over School Proposal

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Gov. Jim Martin's surprise call in his State of the State address to let parents choose which schools their children attend drew a wary response from legislators, who said such a change could result in resegregation.

"I think we need to know some more details about what they are talking about," said Bobby Etheridge, superintendent of the Department of Public Instruction. "I think the worst thing we could get into ... is to allow that to put us into the position where we are resegregating the schools again. I think that would be a horrible mistake because we've made a lot of progress in this state."

Martin noted that many local boards have established "magnet schools" that offer special programs or curricula, but said some states let students attend any school in a given system.

The State Board of Education should study the matter, he said in his speech Tuesday.

But Rep. Dan Blue, D-Wake, said: "I doubt very seriously whether we can do that kind of thing statewide unless you have comparable systems."

"The first thing that popped into my mind is ... 'Man, I'd like to be someplace where I could recruit athletes," said Rep. Dave Diamont, a Surry County teacher and football coach, of the "schools of choice" idea. "That would be something that would throw the high school athletic community into chaos."

Martin also endorsed pay raises of 5.7 percent for teachers and 4.5 percent for other state employees, but said the raises would probably be deferred until April 1990. He also proposed studying a "schools of choice" concept similar to the magnet school programs in use in some larger North Carolina counties.

"This would be a death blow to the teacher salary schedule in North Carolina," said Karen Garr, president of the North Carolina Association of Educators, which was seeking a 9 percent raise in each year of the biennium.

"Teachers in North Carolina have already had one salary freeze in this decade," she said. "I find it very hard to believe that either the governor or the legislature will do that to teachers again in this same decade."

Blue said North Carolina needs to be "radically increasing" teacher salaries, perhaps by as much as 15 percent over the biennium.

"In order to do that, it may take additional funds and I certainly don't see the commitment in this overview of the budget that shows that," Blue said.

"As we start to recruit new teachers, we've got to send signals to those that we're trying to recruit that we are elevating the teaching profession to that level that it ought to be."

Etheridge agreed with Martin that money is "terribly tight." But he said that was no excuse.

"We've got to make sure we keep competent, quality people; we continue to attract them into the profession; we challenge them while we have them there; we compensate them and then we hold those people accountable so we get the quality going out," Etheridge said.

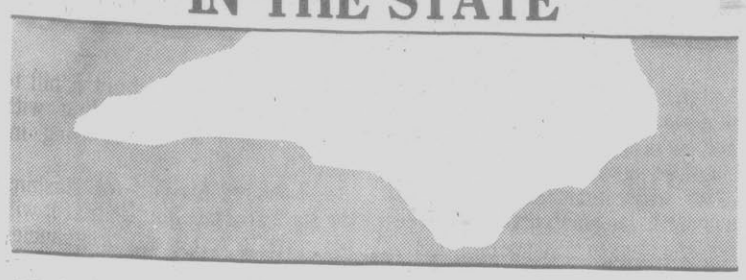
IN THE STATE



Fails To Appear

LUMBERTON, N.C. (AP) — Eddie Hatcher will be subject to arrest and forfeiture of his $25,000 bond if he does not answer to kidnapping charges by Thursday, a Robeson County Superior Court judge said.

Hatcher failed to appear for arraignment Tuesday, and Judge Anthony Brannon gave him until Thursday to surrender. If he does not, the National Council of Churches will forfeit the $25,000 bond that it posted.

"I am not going back to Robeson County," Hatcher said. "I have appeared before a tribal judge here (at the Fort Hall Indian Reservation in New York) and they will have to go through the tribal court now to get me back."

He told The Associated Press in a telephone interview Tuesday he had no plans to return to the state.

Hatcher is facing 14 counts of second-degree kidnapping in the 10-hour takeover of The Robesonian newspaper last February.

Cancer Test

DURHAM (AP) — A congressional subcommittee came away with "heightened concern" after a three-day investigation into charges of scientific fraud revolving around the use of an experimental cancer test at Duke University Medical Center, a government official said.

The House Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations of the Committee on Energy and Commerce spent three days in Durham last week investing the use of the test known as B72.3.

The test is at the center of a lawsuit filed Dec. 22 by Betty Jean Eldreth of Hickory, a patient at Duke. She alleges the monoclonal antibody test falsely indicated she had breast cancer and led to unnecessary chemotherapy and surgery.

The defendants in the suit are Duke University, the university's medical center and three Duke pathologists; Dr. William Johnston, Dr. Cheryl Szpak and Dr. Robert Jennings, chairman of Duke's pathology department.

Census Suit

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina will enter the legal fray over the 1990 federal census in an effort to save the state's chances for a 12th congressional seat, Attorney General Lacy H. Thornburg said.

Thornburg said Tuesday that the state will join with Kansas and Pennsylvania in a lawsuit against the U.S. Census Bureau pending in U.S. District Court in Pennsylvania. The suit challenges the bureau's plans to include illegal aliens among the headcount of Americans to be conducted April 1, 1990.

Thornburg said a letter last week from U.S. Rep. Stephen L. Neal, D-N.C., brought to his attention the potential for North Carolina to lose its chance for an additional congressional seat if an estimated 1 million to 6 million illegal aliens are included in the national count.

Convictions

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Four anti-abortion activists were convicted Tuesday of misdemeanor trespassing during a Dec. 3 demonstration at a Charlotte abortion clinic.

The four immediately filed notice of appeal and promised to continue a defense they began Tuesday morning — that their efforts to disrupt operations at the Carolina Women's Clinic were intended to protect human life.

"I was trying to stop the killing of babies," testified defendant Linda Stone.

Mecklenburg County District Judge Richard Boner sentenced Linda Stone, Timothy Vining, Pamela Schuffert and Max Stallings to 30 days in jail, but suspended the sentences and put the defendants on probation for a year.

Bakker Pleads Innocent To Federal Charges He Diverted PTL Donations

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Attorneys for Jim Bakker, who pleaded innocent to federal charges that he diverted millions of dollars from his television audience for personal use, and prosecutors will present a U.S. magistrate with a proposed gag order on Thursday.

JIM BAKKER

Bakker's lawyer, George T. Davis, asked U.S. Magistrate Paul Taylor during Tuesday's arraignment hearing for the gag order based largely on comments by the retired federal bankruptcy judge who supervised the sale of PTL assets. Taylor said he would consider the request.

Taylor instructed attorneys from both sides to draft a consent order and present it to him by Thursday for approval. Bakker said nothing during the hearing.

Meanwhile, Bakker pleaded innocent to the charges.

After the arraignment, Bakker said, "I am definitely not guilty of any charges in this indictment. The judge asked for no conversations about this case, but I'd like to say that Tammy and I are thrilled to be back on TV."

In seeking the gag order, Davis, a veteran defense attorney from Hawaii, presented Taylor with a copy of a recent newspaper article in which retired U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Rufus Reynolds called Bakker a "sawed-off little runt."

Taylor asked Davis if any of the comments made by Reynolds focused on whether he felt Bakker was guilty or innocent of the charges contained in the indictment.

Davis responded affirmatively, saying Reynolds described his client as "a thief."

"We can't see how we can have a fair trial if we're innundated with pretrial negative publicity, especially from a federal judge," Davis said. "How can we prevent this? This guy is a loose cannon. He's already gone overboard."

Davis said Reynolds' statements could have profound implications in the case because of their impact on potential jurors.

"This judge needs to be restrained," he said. "He simply cannot control himself. Just think of the dangers that this kind of pretrial publicity could cause."

Deborah Smith, a U.S. Justice Department prosecutor handling the case, said the government was willing to agree to a consent order but said she questioned Davis' motive.

"The government is very concerned about the pretrial publicity," she said, adding that prosecutors also were considering filing a motion for a gag order.

Ms. Smith said prosecutors were concerned that Davis' request might be part of a strategy to get a change of venue in the case.

Taylor tentatively scheduled the trial for the court's February term but set no specific date. He also gave the attorneys 15 days to file other motions, such as a request for a continuance.

Leaf Supports OK'd

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Tobacco producers in six states voted overwhelmingly in favor of continuing the flue-cured tobacco price support program for three more years, officials said Tuesday.

John Cooper, state director of the North Carolina Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service said 98.1 percent of growers in this state approved the continuation with 16,990 of 27,694 elieile producers responding. Only 391 producers voted against the plan.

"That shows the strong support of the farmers for the program," said Cooper, who noted it was the first time most had voted on the program since it was revamped in Congress three years ago.

In Florida, 98 percent voted in favor of the plan while 100 percent voted yes in Alabama, 96.8 percent backed it in Georgia, 98.7 percent approved it in South Carolina and 97.1 percent were in support in Virginia.

Marines' Trial Scheduled Jan. 24

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. — Trial dates have been scheduled at Camp Lejeune for the special courts-martial of three Marines charged in the disappearance of Lance Cpl. Jason Rother on Aug. 30 during an exercise at Twentynine Palms, Calif.

The court-martial for Sgt. Christopher Clyde is scheduled to begin Jan. 24. He is charged with dereliction of duty and willful disobedience of a lawful order not to allow anyone special liberty without prior approval from Lt. Col. Edward Robeson, the battalion commander.

Charges against Clyde, who was Rother's platoon sergeant, had been dismissed on a technicality on Jan. 11, but he was charged again the following day.

Sgt. Thomas Turnell's court-martial is scheduled to begin Feb. 2. He is charged with dereliction of duty, willful disobedience of a lawful order and authorized absence.

Pay Raise Delay Upsets Teachers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Gov. Jim Martin has proposed delaying pay raises for state employees until 1990, but the North Carolina Association of Educators has not given up hope that there will be an increase this year.

"I believe he (Martin) is painting the worst case scenario and now that we have heard the worst case, we need to go about correcting it, so we can have the best case," Karen Garr of the NCAE said Tuesday after Martin's State of the State speech.

But if Martin's proposal is approved, the trend of North Carolina losing good employees to private business will continue, Ms. Garr said.

"Teachers don't deserve this kind of proposal," she said. "We're losing our good folks already, especially in the counties that can't afford to supplement salaries."

"Our feeling is that state employees are a valuable resource ... and the state needs to make an investment in that resource," said Alice Garland of the State Employees Association of N.C.

Martin, in his budget proposals for the next two years, recommends giving teachers a 5.7 percent pay increase and 4.5 percent for other state workers. But Martin says slow growth in revenues this year means the pay raises should be delayed until April 1990.

He also proposes that part of the 5.7 percent raise be used for the career ladder program and that 1.5 percent of the raises for other workers be used to reinstate merit pay. Merit pay has been frozen since 1982.

"That's almost like getting no pay raise this year and then a small increase the next," Ms. Garland said. "With the labor market paying about 5 percent a year, that means we'll be falling even further behind."

In addition to the pay increase, Martin also has recommended spending $40 million on major medical insurance in 1989-90 and $53.5 million in 1990-91. Workers also will be paying higher premiums over the next two years for the insurance program, which the state operates for itself.

"We believe that amount of funding leaves a large amount of money that would have to come from reduced benefits," Ms. Garland said. "We consider health insurance to be part of the total compensation package for employees, so if benefits are reduced, the compensation package is reduced.

"We're just very disappointed," she said.

Deficit Widens

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. trade deficit widened dramatically to $12.5 billion in November, the largest imbalance in five months, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said the gap between what the United States imports and what it sells overseas was 21.9 percent higher than the October deficit of $10.3 billion.

The sharply higher deficit was blamed on a big jump in imports, which shot up to $39.7 billion, $1.6 billion above the October level. Exports, which have been booming this year, declined by $639 million to $27.2 billion.

The November deficit was the largest since a $13.2 billion imbalance in June.

In the past, a sharp worsening of the nation's trade performance has sent shock waves through financial markets. However, analysts said that the new report may not have as dramatic an impact because it had been widely forecast.

Atwater Taking Over As GOP Chief

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — George Bush is putting his stamp on the Republican Party by installing campaign manager Lee Atwater as party chairman with directions to break the Democratic hold on the support of black voters.

Atwater, a 37-year-old veteran of three presidential campaigns, was Bush's choice to succeed Frank J. Fahrenkopf Jr. as chairman of the Republican National Committee.

That one endorsement made Atwater a shoo-in for the job when the committee formally voted today.

"He's a friend; I'm proud of his accomplishments," Bush said last month when he designated the South Carolina native as his choice for the party post.

Political rivals claim Atwater's accomplishments often are tainted by roughhouse tactics.

"He's got a tough-guy image," said South Carolina GOP chairman Van Hipp. "I think Lee enjoys it to be honest with you."

For most of the 165 Republican committee members, the meeting was a routine piece of business leading up to the inauguration of Bush on Friday and the round of parties keyed to that event.

In recent interviews, Atwater said a top priority would be trying to expand the party's appeal to blacks, Hispanics, Asians and the handicapped.

While getting 53 percent of the overall vote in the 1988 election and carrying 40 states, Bush received only 12 percent of the black vote, according to a New York Times-CBS poll. That was marginally better than Reagan who attracted the votes of 11 percent of blacks in 1980 and nine percent in 1984.

Among Hispanics, the Bush total was estimated at about 30 percent, down from Reagan's totals of 35 percent in 1980 and 37 percent in 1984.

Bentsen's Father Dies In Wreck

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

EDINBURG, Texas — Lloyd M. Bentsen Sr., a rancher who returned from World War I with $1.50 in his pocket and forged a multimillion-dollar empire, was remembered as a pioneer and entrepreneur following his death at age 95 in a car crash.

"He was part of this valley. He loved this valley," his son, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen Jr., said upon arriving Tuesday night from Washington.

Bentsen was pronounced dead at the scene of Tuesday morning's accident at a rural intersection of Hidalgo County in the Lower Rio Grande Valley, said Texas Department of Public Safety spokesman David Wells.

Gov. William Clements called Bentsen "a great Texas entrepreneur who contributed much to the people of our state, particularly those in South Texas."

Bentsen was "an entrepreneur whose leadership and character have long since made him a legend in Texas. Texas has lost a true pioneer and a great citizen," added Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

Bentsen remained active with his farming, ranching and real estate interests until his death and showed no physical evidence of the two times in his long career he was trampled by stampeding cattle.

"He was here two or three times a week, sometimes every day," said Bud Williams, foreman for the past 25 years at Bentsen's 16,000-acre La Coma Ranch in Hidalgo County, one of six ranches Bentsen owned.

Bentsen held nearly 50,000 acres of farms and ranches scattered on a South Texas empire he began carving out of brush near the Mexican border in 1920.

He was on the stage during part of last summer's Democratic National Convention, where his son was named the party's vice presidential candidate.

The senior Bentsen was one of six children of Danish parents who settled before the turn of the century on a small South Dakota farm. He had little time as a child for school and none at all after age 13, when he followed the grain harvest across Iowa, Nebraska and the Dakotas.

Inaugural Ceremonies Officially Begin Today

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — George Bush is moving out of his vice presidential mansion and closer to the White House as the countdown to his inauguration officially begins today with a trumpet fanfare, fireworks spectacular and trio of black tie dinners.

The man who said he wanted to be the education president was beginning the day with a speech to 250 teachers summoned from each state for the inauguration. They were nominated by home-state officials to represent the best from America's schools.

In a bow to the political operation that helped him win the White House, Bush also planned to oversee the installation of his campaign manager, Lee Atwater, as chairman of the Republican Party.

Bush will be sworn in as the nation's 41st president at 11:59 a.m. EST Friday, but the five-day celebration of his inauguration begins today with an outdoors, twilight pageant at the Lincoln Memorial, complete with herald trumpets, fireworks and a flyover of Navy combat jets.

As inaugural guests flooded into hotels, building to an estimated 300,000 celebrants, Bush and his wife Barbara were moving out of the official residence they've occupied for the last eight years on the grounds of the Naval Observatory off Massachusetts Avenue.

Bush's temporary home, until he goes to the White House on Friday, is the Blair House, the newly refurbished government guest quarters across the street from 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue.

Bush's aides say the move will allow workers time to prepare the vice president's residence for its new occupants, Dan Quayle and his family, who will move in next month after renovations.

The president-elect and his wife will not be lonely at Blair House. Their five grown children and their spouses, along with 10 grandchildren, also were moving into the guest house. The whole clan — 22 in all — will live together and then move en masse to the White House on Friday where they'll all spend at least one night.

About 100,000 people were expected for the opening ceremony at the Lincoln Memorial, and the city was braced for traffic problems in the evening rush hour. The first 40,000 celebrants were to receive tiny flashlights with instructions to turn them on at one point to highlight Bush's campaign theme of "a thousand points of light."

The most exclusive social event of the whole inaugural was tonight's black-tie inaugural dinner, with tickets priced at $1,500 a plate. Yet, the demand was so heavy that organizers had to split it up into three dinners at different sites, all being attended by Bush.

Advocates of the poor and homeless were staging a counter-inaugural banquet at one of the dinner sites in protest of the pricey tickets. Mitch Snyder, an activist for the poor, challenged corporations that are underwriting the cost of Bush's inauguration to contribute like amounts to house the homeless.

Amid the swirl of events, Bush arranged a Blair House reunion with World War II submarine crewmen who rescued him after the Japanese downed his bomber in the Pacific in 1944. He also was working to fill out high-level jobs in his administration.

Industry sources said Bush planned to name Susan Engeleiter, 36, a Wisconsin state senator who lost the race for a U.S. Senate seat last November, as head of the Small Business Administration.

Bush met quietly on Tuesday with leaders of the Teamsters union, which is the target of a Justice Department lawsuit alleging that it is infiltrated by organized crime. Bush aides said the meeting, which was not listed on Bush's schedule, was a thank-you for the union's endorsement in the election, and that the lawsuit was not discussed.

Meanwhile, Congress focused its attention on Bush's nominee to run the State Department, James A. Baker III. After getting a warm reception at the opening of his confirmation hearings, Baker was returning today for more testimony.

Execution Scheduled

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Serial killer Ted Bundy's death warrant for murdering a girl was signed minutes after the U.S. Supreme Court rejected his appeal, and the mayor of the slain child's town said the execution would prompt celebrations.

In signing the warrant, Gov. Bob Martinez set the execution for Jan. 24 for the 1978 rape and murder of 12-year-old Kimberly Diane Leach, who was abducted in Lake City and was found dead in a pig sty.

It was the fourth time the 42-year-old former law student has been scheduled to die in Florida's electric chair. Bundy, whose case was depicted in the television miniseries "The Deliberate Stranger," has come within hours of being executed only to win postponement.

His attorneys said after Tuesday's 7-2 high court decision they would pursue further appeals.

Bundy also has also been sentenced to death for killing two women in a Florida State University sorority house in Tallahassee three weeks before Kimberly's murder. He has been linked to up to 36 sex murders or disappearances of young women, most in Utah, Colorado and Washington state.

"Justice has been on hold for a decade, and it's about time Ted Bundy paid for his crimes," Martinez said. "I have a strong feeling on Tuesday of next week, the state will be able to carry out its duty."

"There'll be a celebration when he dies," said Gerald Witt, mayor of Lake City, a rural town of 11,000 people near the Georgia border. "He has such a terrible criminal record. It's just impossible to have any sympathy for him."

Electrocution

JOHNSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Harnett County authorities are investigating the Monday afternoon electrocution death of a 25-year-old Moore County man.

Rufus Edgar Watkins III of Cameron died around 3:20 p.m. when he was electrocuted after touching a 14,000-volt live wire, said Dr. John F. Blue, a medical examiner at Central Carolina Hospital in Sanford.

Detective Jim Osborne of the Harnett County Sheriff's Department said Watkins was on a pole owned by Central Carolina Electric Co., cutting copper wire off the pole.

A&T Grant

GREENSBORO (AP) — North Carolina A&T State University has received a grant of $849,544 from NASA to fund a new space technology development and utilization program involving six of the university's schools and its college.

Funding for the program over the next three years is expected to reach a total of $3.6 million.

Teacher's Conviction Is Overturned

not teachers acting as Ms. Taylor did.

But in a two-page dissent, Judge Jack Cozort said he felt the statute did encompass Ms. Taylor's actions and she did assist a student in obtaining a grade by fraudulent means.

"I do not agree that the actions of the defendant ... are outside the unlawful conduct as set forth in the statute," Cozort wrote.

David M. Parker, associate state attorney general, said he could not comment on the case, but he said it was obvious the state disagreed with the court's interpretation of the statute.

"I think you can see that we argued to the contrary," Parker said.

Pitt County District Attorney Tom Haigwood said officials in the attorney general's office informed him Tuesday they intend to appeal the decision to the Supreme Court. He said he also felt the statute prohibited Ms. Taylor's actions.

"I invite anybody to read the statute and reach their own opinion," Haigwood said. "Myself, I don't have any trouble reading the statute and understanding what it means."

The statute states that it is "unlawful for any person, firm, corporation or association to assist any student ... or attempt to assist any student in obtaining ... by fraudulent means, any academic credit ... ." Prohibited activity includes, but is not limited to, fraudulent test-takers or paper-writers, the statute states.

The statute does not specifically address a situation in which a teacher would trade a grade for money or property.

Ms. Taylor, who no longer teaches in Pitt County, could not be reached today at her home for comment.

In the case, a Pitt County jury convicted Ms. Taylor in November of 1987 of assisting a student in obtaining academic credit by fraud, which is a misdemeanor.

Superior Court Judge Paul M. Wright of Goldsboro suspended a six month sentence for five years on the condition that Ms. Taylor serve 30 days in the Pitt County jail, pay $288 in restitution and remain on supervised probation for three years.

The case reached Superior Court after Ms. Taylor and her attorney, Milton Fitch of Wilson, appealed her conviction in District Court.

Arnold said the state's evidence tended to show that Rose High guidance counselor John Walter Leech told Andre Love of Winterville in the spring of 1987 that he was in danger of not graduating.

Later that day, Leech approached Ms. Taylor, who was Love's English teacher, and said Love needed some extra credit work to allow him to graduate. Love also went by to see Ms. Taylor and was told that she would pass him if he would get her a VCR, Arnold wrote.

Under guidance from the Greenville Police Department, Love went back and asked Ms. Taylor if she still wanted a VCR. She said said yes, Arnold wrote, and she would pass him in return. She also told him to rewrite a paper he had previously turned in in the event anyone questioned the passing grade, Arnold wrote.

Police supplied Love with a VCR and he took the item to Ms. Taylor's home and tape recorded the conversation. When Love asked her why she wanted a VCR in exchange for the grade, she replied she had to "get something out of the deal," Arnold wrote.

In a search, police did not find the VCR, and Ms. Taylor testified that she had disposed of it after learning of the investigation.

She also testified that she agreed to help Love with an extra-credit paper on her own time, and therefore she asked him to help her find a VCR for $100 to $150, and she intended to pay him for it, Arnold wrote.

"A criminal statute must be strictly construed in favor of defendants, although the court is to keep in mind the evil the statute was intended to suppress and not force an unduly narrow reading of the statute," Arnold wrote.

"It is our opinion that (the statute) is not intended by the legislature to make criminal actions like those of defendant... ," Arnold wrote.

Jaycees

Most recently, Edwards said he has been working through his church to get the community involved with the homeless shelter in Greenville. He is in charge of scheduling two volunteers a night to stay at the shelter to serve as supervisors.

"It's one of the most rewarding things you can do," he said.

While Edwards said he has stayed overnight at the shelter, he said it can be a tougher job trying to recruit volunteers for the job and organizing the schedule.

He said Sam Loy, associate minister at St. James Church, was instrumental in creating the shelter and area businesses and restaurants regularly contribute to the facility where about 30 people stay each night.

Midshipmen motion to a model during a fashion show sponsored by the academy's Black Studies Club

Black Midshipmen At Academy Find An Anchor In Cultural Club

By Rochelle Riley
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — Midshipman 1st Class John Duvall III recalled the time his roommate asked him why he wore a do-rag to bed at night.

"I explained to him that black men use it, that you can tie it up and it holds your hair down, keeps the ends down," Duvall said of his old cloth headwrap. Duvall is black and his roommate is white. "Now he wears one."

Conversations about black culture, concerts by soul musical groups, and observances honoring the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. are increasingly becoming a part of the U.S. Naval Academy experience, almost as much as the military balls and classical performances by the glee club.

The change is partly due to an increase in the number of black midshipmen from about a dozen 20 years ago to a high of 250 this year of the 4,500-member brigade. But another factor has been the Midshipmen's Black Studies Club, about 216 black midshipmen and a few whites, who said they have taken on the teaching of black history and culture as a crusade.

The club was founded by black midshipmen 14 years ago. There had not been such a black organization before because there weren't enough black midshipmen to form one, said Samuel P. Massie, a chemistry professor who became the first black faculty member in 1966.

In its early years, the club's purpose was to provide social alternatives to academy functions, members and faculty said. But in the past three years, the club's focus has changed. It now offers the entire brigade glimpses of black culture, such as song, dance and tribal history, to supplement the two courses the academy teaches, black literature and black-white relations.

"We teach midshipmen about black contributions, male and female, past and present, and their positive effect on life in America," said Midshipman 1st Class Dondi Edwards, the club's president.

Club members, however, don't just stick to textbook history. They have been called on by other midshipmen to explain the phenomenon of comedian Eddie Murphy, the logistics of the Cabbage Patch (a popular dance) and the secrets of fashionable dressing as well.

Some midshipmen say the club events have helped black and white midshipmen accept one another. At the academy, which produces the cream of the Navy and the Marines' officers and technical experts, fitting in is sometimes as high a priority as passing the 40-minute swimming test, they said.

Moreover, in this arena where performance and rank determine power, success is often measured by classmates' and officers' impressions.

Take Midshipman 1st Class Joseph Smith, who graduated from a prominent Shreveport, La., school for high achievers.

He came to the academy with a 4.3 high-school grade-point average and his "father's arrogance," he said. But his first remembrance on arriving four years ago was being the only black person on the bus. That feeling of isolation sometimes continued in classes and activities, he said.

"If you have 100 marbles and 95 are clear and five are black, you're going to notice the black ones," he said. "If he is an outstanding performer or if he is a poor performer, he's going to stand out. That's the difference."

Smith said feelings of being different show up anywhere, even in friendly discussions among friends of other races.

"We were discussing welfare reform," Smith recalled. "I remember somebody making a comment, 'Well, why don't they just go out and get jobs?'

"Well, my family's been on welfare before," Smith said. "So I understand everyone on welfare is not some lazy bum who's sitting around collecting a check because he doesn't want to work. It bothered me that they would think that."

The Black Studies Club does not limit its activities to the academy. It has been praised by black community leaders and city officials for its work with black youths.

Club members tutor students from public housing in math and science, the midshipmen's best subjects. They sing as part of the U.S. Naval Academy Gospel Choir at area colleges and along the East Coast. They serve as ushers and escorts for civic social functions. And they have become a growing source of support in Annapolis' network of black churches.

The black midshipmen say they want to serve as models for the city's black youths at a time when the number of black teen-agers arrested for involvement in illegal drug activity is rising.

"Those midshipmen are examples of something attainable. It's right within (the youngsters') reach," said Bertina Nick, head of Energizing Self and Community, a civic organization that promotes black-youth achievement.

"We try to reach out to the youth," said Edwards, who grew up in a Philadelphia housing project. His mother borrowed money to send him to private schools.

"We want to show them that the only difference between them and us is we've had ... opportunities, and we wear the uniform here at the academy because we've had those opportunities," he said.

The Black Studies Club is the only such group at the nation's military service academies and provides support that the midshipmen cannot get anywhere else, said Lt. Cmdr. Ruby Miller.

"It gives them a sense of direction," said Miller, who oversees the club's activities. "A lot of times people tend to be quiet, withdrawn. Not these guys."

The black midshipmen are drawn to one another by their shared backgrounds and stick together to increase black attendance at the academy, club members said. Every Saturday, club members recruit minority students by phone from the admissions office, and they help one another prepare for academic and physical examinations.

Club members — black and white — say participating in the group's functions has changed their attitudes about racism and cultural differences.

"Before I came to the academy, I didn't know that many black people that well," said Midshipman 1st Class Christopher Thomas, 22. "This is the first time I've ever been interested in their backgrounds, be it African stuff or where they live. ..."

Thomas, who grew up in Potomac, Md., became one of the club's few white members two years ago and regularly tutors black students. He said he considers the club activities a part of his training.

"A lot of my sailors are going to be black," he said. "It will give me a chance to know about the people I'll be leading."

Veteran Gravedigger Says He Enjoys His Profession

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OWENSBORO, Ky. — Digging graves by hand is a dying art.

To hear Alvin Lewis tell it, it takes an older man to do it.

"I've worked with a lot of kids," says Lewis, 59. "Most of them don't stick with it."

Several of the younger people hired to work with Lewis at Mater Dolorosa Cemetery in Owensboro quit within a day or two, he says.

"A lot of them don't know what they're getting into until they get to doing it," he says. "It's not easy like they think it is."

The only way to find out how hard it is to dig a grave, Lewis says, is to "grab hold of a spade and dig awhile."

Lewis, who's been digging graves for 11 years, says it's like anything else — you get used to it.

Most people think heavy equipment such as backhoes dig graves in a matter of minutes, Lewis says. But in older cemeteries where the monuments are placed close together, it's impossible to use machinery, so the graves are dug by hand.

Lewis has dug as many as six graves in a week. The holes must be about 5 feet deep, 8 feet long and nearly 4 feet wide to accommodate the vault, Lewis says.

Lewis grew up on farms in Hart and LaRue counties and has always worked with the soil in one way or another. Although many people think of digging graves as miserable work, Lewis says he loves just about everything about the job.

Afghan Has Cushiony Feel

Pat's Pointers
Pat Trexler

You'll be as busy as a bee knitting the honeycomb stitch into a delightful afghan with a cushiony feel. Only two colors of worsted-weight yarn — one dark and one light — are required, but a three-toned effect is achieved by blending the two as you work with double strands throughout. The large needles used for this fun and fascinating project make for quick knitting.

Knitted in five strips that are sewn together, the geometric pattern is surprisingly simple to work. Finished off with tassels at each corner, the afghan measures 45 inches by 64 inches when completed.

To obtain directions for knitting the Honeycomb Afghan, send your request for Leaflet No. Z-011585 with $2 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler Crafts, The Daily Reflector, P.O. Box 419148, Kansas City, Mo. 64141.

Or you may order Kit No. K-011589 by sending a check or money order for $30.95 to Pat Trexler Crafts at the same address. The kit price includes shipping charges, full instructions and acrylic yarn in your choice of burgundy and off-white, dark colonial blue and off-white and spruce and off-white.

The Honeycomb Stitch, which creates a lovely texture, is not difficult to learn. In fact, you need learn only one technique — knitting in the row below — that might be new to you.

When you are told to knit in the row below, insert the tip of the right-hand needle into the center of the stitch immediately below the first stitch on the left-hand needle; draw the yarn through to the front of that stitch and let the stitch above it slip off the needle.

To practice the pattern stitch, cast on 20 stitches and, for row 1, which is the wrong side of your work, knit all stitches.

Row 3: Knit all stitches. Row 4: Step 1, knit 1 in the row below; Step 2, knit 1. Repeat Steps 1 and 2 across to end of row.

Now, just repeat those four rows over and over in sequence until you have worked enough to see the effect and to be comfortable with the pattern. Bind off and save the swatch with these directions of your pattern stitch file.

If you don't have such a file, make it a belated New Year's resolution to start one with this column. One of the easiest ways to build such a file is to purchase a three-ring notebook binder and a supply of plastic sheet protectors. Then you can slip into the sheet protector your swatch, pattern stitch directions and information on yarn and needles used.

If you enjoyed working the honeycomb stitch, try the two-color checked stitch — an almost identical pattern except that it is worked on an uneven number of stitches with two alternating colors.

To try it, cast on 21 stitches with Color A. Work 3 rows of garter stitch (knit every row) and then change to Color B and start in the pattern. Row 1: Knit all stitches. Row 2: (right side) With Color B work as follows: Step 1, knit 1; Step 2, knit 1 in the row below. Repeat Steps 1 and 2 across to the last stitch, and knit that stitch.

Row 3: With Color A, knit all stitches. Row 4: With Color A, knit 2; Step 1, knit 1 in the row below; Step 2, knit 1. Repeat Steps 1 and 2 across to the last stitch and knit that stitch. Repeat these four rows for pattern as you did for the honeycomb stitch.

Honeycomb stitch gives afghan a soft texture

Daughter Struggles With Mom's Newly Aquired Skill: Shoplifting

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: What do you do when you go shopping with your 80-year-old mother, and you see her shoplift?

Abby, this is the mother who held down two jobs all the time her children were growing up in order to make ends meet. She taught us to be honest, respectful, upstanding citizens. We respected her so much — and now this! I can't believe it.

I let her know that I saw what she had done, but what do I do now? I dread the thought of taking her into another store for fear she will do it again. Can you imagine how embarrassing it would be if she were caught?

Abby, she never misses your column. Please print this. Maybe she will get the message. Sign me ... A Loving Daughter Who's Worried Sick

Dear Daughter: Please consider the possibility that something has happened to your mother's mind — her conscience, her sense of right and wrong.

Be patient with her, and explain — as though she were your child — that all stores have security officers and devices to catch shoplifters, and if she is caught, she will be severely dealt with by the police.

If you shop with her again, watch her closely. And should you see her take something, insist that she return it. Also, share this disturbing change of behavior with your mother's physician.

Dear Abby: Could you please print the following letter to my father and thousands of others who are like him:

Dear Dad: Mom got custody of us in the divorce so she could raise me and little Tommy, but she is not doing a very good job. Tommy had to quit Little League because Mom didn't have time to take him to the games, and last week when I broke up with my boyfriend, she wasn't even there to talk to.

Mom is never home in the evenings because she works, and Tommy and I both have trouble with our homework. (Tommy may flunk third grade.) Mom says she wants to be there for us, but because you don't pay the support money, she's forced to work two jobs.

Dad, could you please help support us so Mom will have time to raise us? Love, Your Daughter

Dear Daughter: I'm publishing your letter. I hope that your dad — and the "thousands like him" — will see it and heed your important message.

Dear Abby: I would like to convey my heartfelt thanks for what Operation Dear Abby IV has done for the morale of the military here.

To be 10,000 miles from friends and family is part of our job and commitment, but that doesn't make it any easier to deal with during the holiday season.

The letters we received have brightened many soldiers' days and eased the pain of being away. For thousands of people in the States to care enough to write letters to individuals they have never met is simply amazing!

But that's America. And that's why we are here doing what we're doing. The only way we can express our warmest gratitude is through you, Abby, so please print this letter for all of us. — 1st Lt. Michael P. McCauly, Aviation, Seoul, Korea

Dear Abby: A relative who frequently visits our home has become a real pain. She is forever asking, "How much did this (or that) cost?" "How much do you get paid, and how often?" "Why do you have two cars when you only need one?"

Or she's always telling me what she thinks I ought to do, such as "Lose weight," or "Wash your car," "Do this," "Do That."

How can we protect ourselves against this overbearing woman? — Sick Of Her in Omaha

Dear Sick: To personal questions that are none of her business, turn the tables and ask, "Why do you want to know?"

And when she tells you what to do, simply say, "Thank you very much," then quickly change the subject.

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

New Band To Rock The '89 Charity Ball

Those attending this year's annual Charity Ball sponsored by the Greenville Service League had better grab their dancing shoes — because the band set for this year's affair promises to give the evening a whole new sound.

The Fantastic Waller Family — Harry, Karen, Bruce, Sandra and Chris — will be on hand Feb. 18 at the Greenville Country Club to deliver a list of rock and roll classics designed to get everyone moving.

Featuring a list of songs made popular by such groups as the Pointer Sisters, Kool and the Gang, Sam and Dave and James Brown, the fivesome delivers a beat that has garnered positive reviews and a long list of achievements.

The five-member band, backed by its own five-piece horn section, presents a fully choreographed show that has appeared in 45 states, Santo Domingo and Canada.

The Service League's by-invitation-only ball benefits the Laughinghouse Fund, which aids needy medical patients in the region. Those who received invitations to the affair must respond by Feb. 1, according to Cathy Gavigan, this year's chairman.

Volume on the Big Board came to 24.74 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

The Commerce Department reported this morning that the trade deficit widened to $12.51 billion in November from a revised $10.26 billion the month before.

In other economic news, U.S. oil imports last year jumped to the highest level since 1979 as consumption rose and domestic production hit a 12-year low, an industry trade group said today. The American Petroleum Institute, representing the major oil producers and refiners, said U.S. oil production fell to 8.1 million barrels a day, a nearly 3 percent drop from 1987.

The government reported today that operating rate at U.S. factories, mines and utilities rose in December to the highest rate since November 1979.

Quarterly earnings from International Business Machines Corp. fell slightly short of expectations. IBM, which posted profits of $3.97 a share for the fourth quarter against $3.47 in the like period a year earlier, dropped 1 to 122⅞ in early trading.

RJR Nabisco rose ⅛ to 95⅜. Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co. said it had lined up more than $14 billion in bank loans to help finance its buyout of the company.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks lost .30 to 159.18. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down .49 at 316.08.

On Tuesday the Dow Jones industrial average fell 10.00 to 2,214.64.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 4 to 3 on the NYSE, with 615 up, 807 down and 519 unchanged.

Big Board volume totaled 143.93 million shares, against 117.38 million in the previous session.

Court Upholds New Sentencing System

Ruling Will Affect Thousands

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A new sentencing system that took effect last Nov. 1 for people convicted of federal crimes is constitutional, the Supreme Court ruled today in a decision that will affect thousands.

By an 8-1 vote, the justices upheld the U.S. Sentencing Commission's rules. The decision also upheld the validity of the commission itself.

Scores of federal trial judges have refused to use the new sentencing rules, calling them and the commission unconstitutional. Now, defendants sentenced by those judges must be resentenced.

The decision carries no impact, however, for any defendant sentenced in a state court.

About 10,000 federal court defendants have been subjected to the new sentencing system.

The commission was created by Congress in the Sentencing Reform Act of 1984, legislation aimed at eliminating what some called unjustified disparities in sentences.

The law empowers the commission, with seven members appointed to six-year terms by the president, to tell federal judges what sentences should be imposed for various crimes. Three of the commission's members must be federal judges.

The guidelines generally stiffened the prison time federal convicts are required to serve. The commission eliminated parole and curtailed credit for good behavior.

Judges who had struck down the new sentencing system had ruled:

—That Congress unlawfully avoided political accountability by unconstitutionally delegating its legislative power to the commission.

—That the commission, because it includes members of the judiciary and holds legislative power, violates the Constitution's separation of powers principle.

—That the new rules violate defendants' due-process rights by curbing too severely judges' sentencing discretion.

Writing for the court today, Justice Harry A. Blackmun said those judges were wrong.

"Congess neither delegated excessive legislative power nor upset the constitutionally mandated balance of powers among the coordinate branches," Blackmun said.

"The Constitution's structural protections do not prohibit Congress from delegating to an expert body located within the judicial branch the intricate task of formulating sentencing guidelines consistent with such significant statutory direction as is present here," he said.

In justifying judges' membership on the commission, Blackmun said Congress is free to call on the judicial branch's help in "a matter uniquely within the ken of judges."

Only Justice Antonin Scalia dissented, on grounds that the commission was given power not authorized by the Constitution.

Sentencing Commission Chairman William W. Wilkins Jr., a judge on the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, Va., called today's ruling "one of the most important decisions handed down by the court this decade."

Wilkins said the commission's guidelines "are now the law of the land, and the barriers to full implementation have been lifted."

Rioting Continues

the motorcyle crashed. The city also was investigating the shooting.

"For the sake of our city, I appeal to every citizen, regardless of race to stay calm, get off the streets and stay in your homes," said Mayor Xavier Suarez in a televised appeal Tuesday night.

Police, who earlier had stood by to protect lives and property, took a more assertive role late Tuesday, arresting troublemakers. By early today, 250 arrests had been made, mostly for burglaries, said police Sgt. Michael Mazur. The suspects were being held at the Dade County Jail pending bail hearings, according to a jail spokeswoman who would not give her name.

The 1½ square mile Overtown section and a small part of Liberty City were cordoned off by police. The decision to sweep through the areas and make arrests came after sniping incidents increased, police said.

In Liberty City, several miles to the northwest, a 16-year-old black youth was killed late Tuesday in a shooting apparently unrelated to the rioting. Metro-Dade police Sgt. John Roper said Troy Robinson was shot to death during an argument over a stolen check-printing marchine. Howard Scippio, 37, of Miami, was arrested and charged with first-degree murder.

In Overtown, just north of downtown, two people were shot Tuesday, one of them in the leg by police. Five others were shot in Liberty City, including a police officer who was wearing a bulletproof vest and was not seriously injured by sniper fire.

A white man in a luxury car fired a gun into a crowd of rock-throwing blacks early Tuesday afternoon, wounding a 19-year-old man who was hospitalized in fair condition.

Gunfire and rock-throwing in the area of Miami Arena, which is in Overtown, forced the postponement of Tuesday night's NBA game between the Miami Heat and Phoenix Suns.

other side to land on the front lawn, Neely said.

There was no apparent motive.

"He was just standing there with a gun, making wide sweeps," recalled Lori Mackey, who teaches deaf students in one of the portable classrooms at the school about 80 miles southeast of San Francisco.

"He was not talking, he was not yelling, he was very straight-faced, it did not look like he was really angry," she said. "It was just matter-of-factly.

"There was mass chaos. There were kids running in every direction."

Purdy, who also was known as Patrick West and Eddie Purdy West, had an "extensive criminal record," said Neely. Many of the crimes were committed in the Los Angeles area and included soliciting for sex and narcotics and weapons violations, Neely said.

The dead children were shot in the schoolyard and two were dragged inside by fleeing teachers, he said.

As police cleaned up the carnage, a large handgun and the assault rifle were seen lying on the ground near a pool of blood. Written on the pistol's handle was the word "Victory." The letters SSA were printed on the rifle's clip in letters 1½ inches long.

The assault rifle Purdy used apparently was purchased in Oregon as a semi-automatic in August.

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — President P.W. Botha suffered a mild stroke today and was admitted to a military hospital, his office announced.

A brief statement said Botha, who turned 73 last week, was in stable condition at No. 2 Military Hospital in the Cape Town suburb of Wynberg. It said no further details would be released unless the president's condition worsened.

The South African Press Association, quoting unidentified sources, said Botha suffered the stroke early in the day, before leaving home for his office.

Prop 42 Would Appear Doomed

By Doug Tucker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

If ever an NCAA rule seemed doomed, it is Proposition 42, the loophole-closing freshman eligibility measure whose supporters are dodging charges of racism.

"That is a very ugly accusation to make," said Jim Epps, assistant athletic director at Kansas State, one of the schools that switched its vote the second time around and boosted Proposition 42 over the top. "We find it regrettable that some people have taken such an emotional stance and equated it with racism."

As presented at the NCAA convention last week in San Francisco, Proposition 42 eliminates the "partial qualifier" provision in the 3-year-old freshman eligibility rule known as Proposition 48. Previously, high school graduates who met part but not all of Proposition 48 requirements could still receive scholarships while sitting out their freshman year without playing or practicing.

Black coaches and administrators have been particularly opposed to Proposition 48 because they believe standardized entrance exams, which are part of the qualifying criteria, are racially and culturally biased.

About 600 partial qualifiers, most of them black, have taken advantage of the provision each of the three years that Proposition 48 has been in effect. Now partial qualifiers will have to pay their own way their freshman year if they cannot qualify for federal aid for needy students, and will still have only three years of eligibility. They can get scholarships as sophomores if they complete 24 credit hours toward a degree.

"This storm of protest will have an impact," said Jim Frank, former NCAA president who is now commissioner of the predominantly black Southwestern Athletic Conference. "There is no question in my mind that it will be reversed at the convention next January in Dallas."

Many Proposition 42 critics have called for a special meeting of NCAA schools to wipe out the new rule before it can do any harm. But it does not take effect until Aug. 1, 1990, and does not include the 1989 football and basketball classes who will sign letters of intent next month. If overturned at the January 1990 convention, Proposition 42 will die without ever having lived.

"It's not unheard of for the NCAA to pass legislation at one convention and then have it modified or repealed altogether before it goes into affect," said Al Witte of Arkansas, who was installed as NCAA head at last week's convention in San Francisco. "We saw that a couple of years ago when the convention voted to reduce basketball scholarships."

In the meantime, confusion and controversy over the new rule showed no sign of abating.

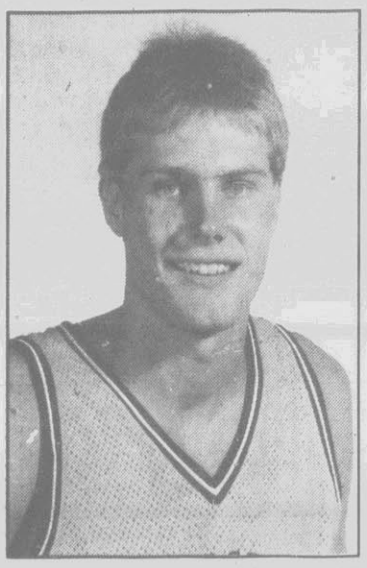
The NCAA announced on Tuesday that a discussion of the new rule has been added to the agenda of the upcoming meeting of the executive committee of the NCAA Presidents Commission and the NCAA Administrative Committee, which should please Georgetown basketball coach John Thompson.

Calling Proposition 42 a "tragic mistake," Thompson called attention to his opposition by walking off the court before his team's game against Boston College last Saturday and did not accompany the Hoyas to Providence for tonight's game.

Proposition 42 was written and sponsored by the Southeastern Conference, which had voted to phase it in unilaterally even if the NCAA as a whole did not follow suit. Temple coach John Chaney blasted the rule as discriminatory to minority and poor students and noted pointedly that the SEC "was the last conference to admit black athletes."

Any suggestion that racism was a factor in the SEC's stand "is preposterous," a conference spokesman said.

"If anyone feels the standardized tests are discriminatory, then let's talk about that," Brad Davis, assistant commissioner for communications, said. "But please do not believe that racism had anything to do with it."



Phil Medlin

Medlin Emerges As Surprise Starter

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Phil Medlin wasn't sure what to expect from his first season of college basketball at Wake Forest University, but starting at center was probably the furthest thing from his mind.

So when Demon Deacon coach Bob Staak informed him that he would start the second game of the season against Davidson, it caught the former D.H. Conley standout more than a little off-guard.

"Right after the Richmond game (a 74-61 loss), the coaches told me I was playing well and said (incumbent starter) Ralph (Kitley) had played his way out of playing time and that I would start the Davidson game.

"Coach had told me I going to play, but it might be six minutes one game and 12 minutes another. Then he comes back and tells me I'm going to start."

But Medlin has risen to the challenge for Wake Forest. He has started every game since for the Deacons, 8-5 overall and 1-3 in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Medlin is averaging 5.8 points and 4.2 rebounds per game for the Demon Deacons, who take on North Carolina State in Raleigh tonight.

"Phil has been a very pleasant suprise for us," Staak said. "We expected him to contribute to our program somewhat this season, but certainly didn't anticipate him earning a starting position right away.

"Phil has worked hard to build his strength and size which he must continue to do. He has excellent hands for a post player, good timing and athletic ability."

Adding some bulk and strength has been the catalyst for Medlin's rapid emergence on the Wake Forest team. He played most of his high school career at approximately 200 pounds and there were some concerns about whether he could handle the rigors of ACC play.

He developed slowly in high school as he adjusted to his height, but by his junior year he helped lead his team to the state 3-A championship. His senior year, he overcame a bout of mononucleosis around Christmas time to average 16.2 points and over 10 rebounds per game as the Vikings advanced to the Eastern finals before falling to Bartlett-Yancey.

During the past summer, Medlin began to add size and strength to his frame. By late-July, he had added 15 pounds of weight and the effect was noticeable. Medlin scored 12 points and pulled down 11 points to help the East to a 97-90 win over the West in the annual East-West All Star basketball game.

As the season approached, Medlin was up to 225 pounds.

"It started right at the beginning of the summer when I came up here in June. (Wake Forest strength coach) Joey Bullock got me on a weight program," Medlin said. "They told me to start eating more and I (also) used some Ensure Plus supplement drink.

"That was one adjustment, playing with that weight. During the preseason I could tell I wasn't playing well, that I wasn't running well or jumping as quick. But I took off five pounds and adjusted."

Medlin has found that strength is a

North Pitt's Paul Brown goes up for a shot against Farmville

Farmville Takes Win

1st Half Keys Jags By Panthers

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

BETHEL — Farmville Central used an explosive first-half offensive attack to pad the way to a 79-67 Eastern Plains Conference victory over North Pitt Tuesday night.

With the win, the Jaguars improve to 11-2 overall and 3-0 in the league, while the Panthers slip to 6-7 and 1-3.

North Pitt stayed within striking range throughout the first quarter behind the scoring of Clayton Cherry, who poured in six of his team-leading 12 points in the first eight minutes.

The Jaguars' lead was only five, 19-14, early in the second quarter before they reeled off eight points in a 11-second span.

Jarvis Lang, who led all scorers in the game with 23 points, scored on a follow shot with 6:18 to go in the first half to give the Jaguars a 21-14 lead.

Guard Morris Foreman, who scored 15 points, then stole a pass, scored on a layup with 6:07 left and, according to the referee, was intentionally fouled giving him two free throws and Farmville the ball out of bounds.

North Pitt coach Greg Ashorn argued the call and was assessed a technical foul.

Foreman went on to sink both of his free throws and George Burnette, who scored 16 points, then tacked on the two technical tosses to increase the lead to 27-14 with 6:07 still showing on the scoreboard clock.

"That was a big momentum boost for us," Farmville coach Mike Terrell said. "We were already playing tough defense but we seemed to get even tougher after that. It was a big plus."

The Jaguars went on to lead by as many as 19, 43-24, in the first half before settling for a 45-29 lead at the intermission.

Things didn't get much better for the Panthers at the outset of the third quarter either.

Burnette drilled a 3-pointer with 7:06 left to push the lead to 48-29 and Reggie Barrett, who finished with 14 points, added a pair of free throws with 6:35 showing on the clock to make the score 50-39.

"Playing a team as good as Farmville is, many teams would have laid down and given up," Ashorn said. "But I've got to give our guys credit. They battled back and made a game out of it."

The Panthers gradually chipped away at the Farmville lead throughout the period and closed to within 14, 65-51, heading into the final eight minutes when Billy Hardison, who scored 10 points, drilled a 3-pointer with 30 seconds on the clock.

Paul Brown, who scored 11 points and pulled down 14 rebounds, got the Jaguar lead under 10 points, 69-61, for the first time since the first

Questions Asked

About State's Graduation Rate

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Despite reassurances from basketball coach Jim Valvano, members of North Carolina State University's faculty senate say they remain concerned about the low graduation rate of men's basketball players.

And some are skeptical about statistics cited by Valvano when faculty members asked him two months ago about his players' graduation rates.

Valvano said that of the 44 players he has recruited since becoming coach at NCSU in 1980, 86 percent have graduated or are still in school. Some are playing professionally and attend school in the summer, he said.

While Valvano promised at the time to provide the statistic in writing — broken down by the number who had graduated, dropped out or transferred — the faculty panel has yet to receive the information.

Robert A. Robinson, NCSU's assistant athletic director, said Tuesday the delay was caused by a mix-up. He added that he would provide the statistics to the chairman of the faculty senate today, but declined to give it to a reporter.

NCSU athletic department officials cite the 86 percent figure in a pamphlet they give to high school recruits and their parents.

According to Robinson, the figure includes basketball players who graduated from NCSU, those still enrolled at NCSU, those who transferred and earned degrees elsewhere, those who transferred and are still in school, and those who are playing professionally but who could go back to school if they wanted to.

Bengals' Secondary Shows Improvement

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — There's an easy way to tell the improvement in the Cincinnati Bengals' defensive backs. Just listen to them talk.

A year ago, the secondary was one of the team's weakest links, repeatedly giving up big plays. The defensive backs had little NFL experience, a poor identity and no chance to brag.

All that's changed this year. They've matured into a solid bump-and-run unit, they attend poster-signing sessions as the "SWAT Team," and they've developed a reputation for singing their own praises.

Cornerback Lewis Billups says it's no coincidence that the Bengals' defensive backs are talking a good game and playing one, too.

"Experience and confidence," Billups said, citing the reasons for the transformation. "When we went into the Phoenix game (to open the regular season), I don't think the players, coaches or fans knew how the secondary was going to play this year.

"We had a couple of interceptions (against Phoenix) and goal-line stands. We played well and kept doing that the first two or three games. Once you play like that, your confidence level gets higher and you feel like nobody can beat you, and that's what it was."

He's getting no argument on that point from the San Francisco 49ers' receivers, who can expect to get bumped around Sunday in the Super Bowl.

"They're very confident, and playing in this league confidence is 80 percent of it," 49ers receiver Mike Wilson said. "They're playing with a lot of confidence and obviously they've made some statements to back them up."

The Bengals have developed a reputation for running their tongues. They haven't curbed that part of their game for the Super Bowl.

Secondary Is Key To Success By 49ers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Big safeties and the Cover Brothers. What sounds like the name of a rock group is the key to San Francisco's defense going into the Super Bowl.

The 49ers' secondary is primary when it comes to stopping Cincinnati's run-oriented attack on Sunday.

"I think we'll have to stay close to the line of scrimmage to do well against these guys," strong safety Jeff Fuller, a 222-pound former linebacker, said Tuesday. "If we go out and not let them get in their ball-control game, their running game, their no-huddle offense, we'll be OK."

San Francisco's defensive backfield has been more than OK in contributing to lopsided playoff victories over Minnesota and Chicago. Both the Vikings and Bears completed fewer than 50 percent of their attempts and managed only 347 passing yards combined and one touchdown pass in the two games.

"Our secondary just did a great job" against the Bears, said linebacker Charles Haley. "When the receivers are covered that well, sooner or later one of us guys is going to go in and bother the quarterback."

In other words, opposing receivers have been covered as if by a blanket lately. Tim McKyer has adopted the "Blanket" nickname as his own, and together with fellow third-year cornerback Don Griffin, a.k.a. the "Quilt," they are the self-proclaimed Cover Brothers. They don't have a video or a shuffle, but they are hawking their own T-shirts and caps.

McKyer had a team-high seven interceptions this season. Griffin returned from six weeks on the inactive list due to a dislocated left shoulder to stymie the Vikings' dangerous Anthony Carter in the playoff opener.

USC Loses Yet Another Assistant

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Coach Mike Bender on Tuesday became the second South Carolina assistant to leave in as many days and third this month, accepting a job at Rice under new Coach Fred Goldsmith.

Bender, 45, a native of Fort Smith, Ark., will coach the offensive line under Goldsmith, who accepted the job at the Houston university Sunday. Bender, who came to South Carolina in 1983, coached the offensive line for Coach Joe Morrison, with special emphasis on guards and centers.

"I'm truly grateful to Coach Morrison and the University of South Carolina for the opportunity I've had here over the past six years," Bender said in a news release. "Going to Rice is a good opportunity for me, and we're excited about getting back in the Southwest Conference."

Bender played for Arkansas, earning All-Southwest Conference honors in 1964. He later played for the Atlanta Falcons of the NFL for two years before entering the coaching profession.

Bender is the second coach to announce he was leaving the Gamecocks this week. Jim Washburn said Monday he was leaving South Carolina to take a job at Purdue. Washburn coached defensive line for the Gamecocks, but his duties at Purdue haven't been announced yet.

Washburn was criticized in an article in Sports Illustrated in October by former Gamecock lineman Tommy Chaikin. Chaikin alleged that Washburn indirectly encouraged steroid use, a charge Washburn has denied.

Washburn, 39, said his resignation had nothing to do with the steroid controversy.

Another assistant, linebacker Coach Frank Orgel, resigned last week to take a job at Georgia.

The resignations of Bender, Washburn and Orgel come amid a shuffling of the coaching staff by Morrison, who reportedly has demoted offensive coordinator Al Groh. Groh, who is in the running for the head coaching job at Richmond, will serve as quarterback coach if he returns this fall.

As part of the coaching staff shuffle, Morrison said the Gamecocks would drop the pro-set offense and return to the run-and-shoot, which South Carolina used in 1986 and 1987.

Steroid Trial Apparently Set To Go

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — A grand jury apparently started hearing testimony on Tuesday on its continuing investigation of the use and distribution of steroids across South Carolina.

U.S. Attorney Vinton Lide declined comment after the grand jury adjourned late Tuesday.

"The investigation is continuing," Lide said, "and that's as far as I'll go."

Asked if he would be back Wednesday, Lide said, "Maybe."

All grand jury proceedings are closed to the public, and jurors are sworn to secrecy.

Lide accompanied an unidentified man about 3:35 p.m. into the back entrance of the Federal Building who apparently was going to testify before the grand jury, which is expected to continue meeting through Thursday.

The probe stems from allegations by former South Carolina football player Tommy Chaikin. In an article in Sports Illustrated in October, Chaikin, who played for the Gamecocks from 1983 to 1987, said that he used steroids for three years and that about half the 1986 team used them as well.

Chaikin, who reportedly will testify before the grand jury this week, also wrote that some players used other drugs such as cocaine and LSD.

The allegations prompted an investigation by the State Law Enforcement Division. SLED's findings have not been made public, but they did lead to a joint federal and state probe into statewide steroid use and trafficking.

Richmond's Lawsuit With NASCAR Settled

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Tim Richmond can return to the NASCAR circuit now that his $20 million lawsuit against the sanctioning body has been resolved, the lawyer for the 33-year-old driver said.

"If Tim so chooses to race, there is nothing barring him from racing," Richmond's attorney, Bettina Schein of New York, said Tuesday after the lawsuit was settled.

Bu a NASCAR spokesman would not comment on Richmond's current status as a licensed driver or whether Richmond could compete in next month's season-opening Winston Cup race at Daytona International Speedway.

"I do not know one way or the other," said Chip Williams, NASCAR's director of public relations.

Terms of the settlement, which came three weeks before it was to go to trial, were not disclosed. Richmond could not be reached for comment. He left Tuesday on a trip to an undisclosed location, according to his mother, Evelyn Richmond, who was reached at his home in Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

"We have no comment on the terms of the settlement," Ms. Schein said. "We had been in the pretrial phase, but all parties came to an agreement. All parties agreed to settle the matter, and that's what we've done."

NASCAR, in a brief statement, said, "The case has been resolved out of court and dismissed."

NASCAR offered no other explanation.

Attorneys for NASCAR and for Richmond met Tuesday morning, and dismissal of the suit filed in U.S. District Court in Charlotte followed.

Richmond filed suit last April against NASCAR and five of its officials, alleging that he was portrayed as a drug abuser in NASCAR statements. The sanctioning body in February had revoked Richmond's NASCAR driving license after the sanctioning body said he had tested positive for two substances prohibited by a drug-abuse policy.

Richmond passed a subsequent test, and the sanctioning body said the two substances found in the first test were ingredients in two over-the-counter medications.

But NASCAR still refused to reinstate Richmond's license, saying Richmond had failed to supply specific medical records from a 1987 illness that Richmond had said was pneumonia.

Richmond refused to hand over the records, and hasn't competed on the Winston Cup circuit since he ran a limited schedule in 1987. Richmond's most recent race was the 1987 Champion Spark Plug 400 in Brooklyn, Mich.

The suit was scheduled for U.S. District Court in Charlotte for Feb. 6. NASCAR and five of the organization's officials — President Bill France Jr., executive vice president Jim France, substance-abuse advisor Dr. Forest Tennant, vice president for competition Les Richter and Williams — were named in the suit.

Ellis' Persistence Pays Off

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Dale Ellis believes in the old "if-at-first-you-don't-succeed" adage.

The Seattle SuperSonics guard is averaging 28.6 points per game, third highest in the NBA. But on Tuesday night, he scored only two points in the opening quarter.

"I had good shots in the first quarter, but they were rolling around and not going in," Ellis said. "I figured if I kept taking good shots they were going to start falling, and they did."

Ellis finished with 28 points — 15 coming in the second quarter — as the Sonics handed the crippled Los Angeles Clippers their 10th straight defeat, 130-107. It was Seattle's 13th consecutive victory at home.

With the scored tied at 38, the Sonics reeled off a 21-2 spurt midway through the second quarter, including nine points by Ellis. Alton Lister scored 10 of his 18 points in the third quarter as Seattle extended its lead to as many 29 points.

The Clippers played without top draft choice Danny Manning, lost for the season with torn knee ligaments, and guards Gary Grant and Tom Garrick. Grant has a bruised right thigh and Garrick a sprained left knee.

"We need players," Clippers coach Gene Shue said. "We did a good job until the second quarter, but they went on a big run. It's very simple. We were just overpowered."

Kings 123, Rockets 109

Harold Pressley scored seven of his 24 points in the final five minutes to lead Sacramento. The Kings went ahead 115-92 with 3:12 remaining on Pressley's jumper. Sacramento led four times by 23 points, its biggest margin of the game.

Jazz 111, Trail Blazers 110

John Stockton sank four free throws in the final 14 seconds and Karl Malone scored 26 points for Utah. Stockton, who had 20 points and 18 assists, scored 11 points in the final period, including the crucial free throws after Portland's Jerome Kersey missed a layup with 22 seconds remaining and Utah leading 107-106.

Bulls 103, Pacers 96

Michael Jordan, held to just 11 points for three quarters, erupted for 11 fourth-period points and had 13 assists to help lead Chicago over Indiana.

Bill Cartwright scored seven of his 21 points during a 19-4 third-quarter burst and John Paxson shattered Indiana's defense with a season-high 24 points as Chicago handed the Pacers their 17th road loss against just one win.

Nets 117, Spurs 112

Dennis Hopson and Mike McGee scored 24 points each and Lester Conner had four points in a late 6-0 spurt as New Jersey handed San Antonio its sixth straight loss. The Nets, who led by 19 points in the first half, saw the Spurs rally in the second half behind Willie Anderson, who had 19 of his 25 points after intermission.

Hawks 111, Bucks 98

Five points by Glenn "Doc" Rivers in the final 2:13, including a key 3-point basket, staved off a fourth-period Milwaukee surge and powered Atlanta to its second straight victory and only the Hawks' third in eight games. The loss snapped Milwaukee's six-game winning streak.

Not Seeing Eye To Eye

Recruiting Notes

Timmy Moore, twice the Player of the Year in the Big East Conference, and an all-state selection from Rose High School, has verbally committed to sign with East Carolina University.

Rampant football coach Chip Williams made the announcement today, saying that at least two other members of the Rampant team were also expected to sign grants-in-aid.

The official signing date is Feb. 8 under NCAA guidelines.

Raleigh Fuller, a 6-3, 230-pound lineman for Rose, and Carlester Crumpler, a 6-6, 215-pound linebacker, have yet to decide on their collegiate future, Williams added.

Moore, a 5-9, 220-pounder, played both tailback and linebacker for the Rampants. He led the team in rushing this past season with 1,240 yards in 10 games. He scored 15 rushing touchdowns, and a total of 90 points on the season.

He was named as the Big East Conference's Player of the Year following his junior year, when he rushed for just over 1,000 yards, and was named to that honor again as a senior. He was the runner-up for the Associated Press Player of the Year and was an AP All-State selection.

Crumpler, also all-conference and all-state, played both tight end and linebacker for the Rampants. The son of former ECU star Carlester Crumpler, he is believed to have narrowed his choices to East Carolina and N.C. State.

Fuller, who went both ways in the line for the Rampants, has made visits to East Carolina and North Carolina A&T, and is expected to visit South Carolina and Appalachian State. He also had scheduled a visit with N.C. State, but Williams said he was not sure whether he would make that visit.

This past weekend was a big recruiting push for the Pirates and new coach Bill Lewis, who brought in over 20 prospects. The recruits attended a basketball game Saturday night in sold-out Minges Coliseum where ECU defeated James Madison, 62-57.

One of the prospects visiting was Chuckie Burnette, who was named the AP's high school player of the year in North Carolina this past season after leading Burlington Cummings to the state 3-A championship.

North Carolina had been the early leader for Burnette in late November, but Lewis and ECU have made a late push to get in the running for the 6-0, 180-pounder.

During his senior year, Burnette passed for 3,526 yards while leading his team to an undefeated season.

Burnette has visited UNC and ECU and those two schools appear to be the front runners for his services. He may reportedly take three more visits as allowed by the NCAA.

ECU has also received verbal committments from kicker Joel Blackerby of Marietta, Ga., and linebacker George Koonce (6-2, 220) of Chowan Junior College.

Virginia Overcomes Drought, Wins 64-58

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — A little forgetfulness almost cost the Virginia Cavaliers.

Virginia went nine minutes, 45 seconds without a basket before Richard Morgan scored the game's final seven points in overtime to lift the Cavaliers to a 64-58 overtime victory over Maryland.

Prior to scoring a three-point basket with 1:17 left in overtime, Morgan had gone more than 20 minutes without a basket.

"We forgot Richard Morgan was on the court," said Dave Odom, Virginia's acting head coach until Terry Holland completely recovers from surgery.

"I have to take the blame for that," Odom said. "I didn't do a good job calling our offensive sets."

By overcoming their scoring drought, during which the Cavaliers scored three points on free throws, Virginia won its first road game of the season and its second Atlantic Coast Conference game of the year.

"For us to still win the game after going that long without scoring a basket says a lot," said Morgan, who led the Cavaliers with a game-high 21 points. "We stayed in there and showed commitment to get the plays we wanted to run. The shots weren't going in the basket for us."

Not until the 6-foot-3 senior guard who scored 39 points in Virginia's 106-83 victory over No. 10 North Carolina canned a three-pointer from the right wing to give the Cavaliers a 60-58 lead.

He added a short jumper and two free throws in the final 14 seconds, but it was the three-pointer Morgan was sure of.

"I'm thinking nothing. I think, 'Put it up' and go with whatever happens," Morgan said.

Medlin Making The Adjustment

valuable asset in the Atlantic Coast Conference because, more often than not, push inevitably comes to shove.

"You've got to have strength if you want to play with some of the big guys in this league," said Medlin. "I've played with (Georgia Tech's Tom) Hammonds and he's a monster. (Clemson's) Elden Campbell wasn't as strong but still has got great post moves. We've still got (North Carolina's) J.R. (Reid). You have to have strength."

Another adjustment was academics.

"Being away from home hasn't been that bad. School is a lot harder, especially at a school like Wake Forest. We do have (regularly scheduled) study halls and time for studies (though). This semester will be the biggest test because we're missing a lot of classes."

Only time will tell on that count, but for a guy who was just hoping to get some playing time as a freshman, Medlin appears to have passed his entrance exam with flying colors.

Medlin is one of three freshman starters for the Demon Deacons, along with 6-7 forward Chris King and 5-11 point guard Derrick McQueen. They team with holdover veterans Sam Ivy, a 6-7 senior forward, and Cal Boyd, a 6-1 senior guard.

Wake, 10-18 a year ago, is looked upon as one of the most improved teams in the ACC this season. In the Deacons' first conference game, they played No. 1-ranked Duke heads up before losing in the final minutes. Since then, they have defeated Maryland while falling to Georgia Tech and Clemson.

Tonight the Deacons hope to get back on the winning track when they battle the Wolfpack.

"This is a pretty big game," Medlin said. "We've lost the last two (to Georgia Tech and Clemson). Our goal, like every team, is to get to the (NCAA) tournament. It's a big game. We have N.C. State, Duke, Carolina and Virginia (coming up). Two of those are at home so we need to win two out of the four at least. We can do it. They did it last year, they beat State and Carolina.

"One of the biggest things for us at Duke, everybody was up for the game. They were the No. 1 team in the nation. They picked us to get beat by 20 and we played a great game. We haven't played that well since that game. The intensity is there for 20 minutes and then it isn't there for the next 20. If we can just get up like that and play 40 minutes, we can hang with any team in the ACC."

The adjustments are continuing day to day for Medlin, both on and off the court.

"At first I thought I would be a role player," he said. "Now I'm starting. The coaches tell me they'd like me to be contributing a little more. If I'm on the floor, they'd like me to be scoring a little bit more."

Rose, Ayden-Grifton Claim Wins; Vikes Bow

KINSTON — Rose High School's Carlester Crumpler scored off a rebound with one second showing on the clock to give the Rampants a 32-31 Big East Conference basketball victory over Kinston Tuesday night.

It marked the fourth straight close loss in the final minute of play for the Vikings.

Kinston led early before Rose rallied within 23-21 as the final period got under way.

James Teel accounted for five of the Rose's 11 points in the period. He went to the foul line with about eight seconds left and Kinston leading, 31-30, but missed his shot and the Vikings rebounded but Rose knocked the ball out of bounds.

Rose's Johnny Ebron stole the ball and took a shot that missed, but Crumpler was there to make the rebound and toss it back for the winning basket with one second left.

No one scored in double figures in the game, although Crumpler and Paul Powers each had nine points to spark the Rampants.

With the win, Rose improves to 10-3 overall and 3-1 in the Big East.

Valkyries Nip Havelock, 52-50

HAVELOCK — D.H. Conley's girls, trailing by as much as 12 points, rallied and pulled out a 52-50 Coastal Conference basketball victory over home-standing Havelock Tuesday night.

Conley held a slim 11-10 lead after the first quarter of play, but Havelock pushed into the lead in the second frame and took a 26-22 edge into the dressing rooms.

In the third period, Havelock increased that lead to 40-30. But in the last period, Lendora Tyson took command for Conley, scoring 12 of her 25 points in the game to draw the Valkyries back into a 50-50 tie.

Charlene Davenport then hit a 19-foot jumper with 15 seconds left to push Conley into a 52-50 lead. Havelock had three shots in the time remaining but could not get one to drop to knot it again.

Glenda Hardy added 15 points for Conley while Davenport had 10. Dee Godette led Havelock with 22 while Marcy Hill and Karen Nolan each had 10.

Conley goes to 10-3 overall with 2-1 in the Coastal with the victory. The Valkyries return to action on Friday, traveling to West Craven.

Contamination

HONG KONG (AP) — A piece of radioactive iridium missing from a construction site wound up in a welder's home in the eastern Chinese city of Nanking and contaminated at least 14 people, a newspaper reported today.

One man was hospitalized with third-degree radiation burns on his left leg but there was no sign of harm to the other 13 people, the pro-Beijing Chinese-language Wen Wei Po said.

The Iridium-192, which emits beta and gamma radiation, was found missing Dec. 22 from a Nanking construction site, the newspaper said.

It said the material resembled a stick used to beat what the Chinese call a "wooden fish," a popular percussion instrument made of a hollow wooden block.

Police and health authorities immediately began searching for the iridium with radiation monitoring equipment, which picked up a signal Dec. 27 from the home of welder Wang Fuqiang.

Many people had been to Wang's home to view his new color television and electronic games, and up to 47 people may have been exposed to the material, the report said.

Wang was hospitalized with a leg injury after receiving what the newspaper described as a "small dose" of radiation. The newspaper said his life was not in danger. It did not say how the material was being used at the construction site or what Wang was doing with it.

Wen Wei Po said authorities were investigating the incident.

European Countries Has Edge On U.S. Grain Sales

WASHINGTON (AP) — A wheat supply crunch in the United States and Canada is helping the 12-nation European Economic Community export surplus grain at record levels and fat prices, according to Agriculture Department analysts.

The department's Foreign Agricultural Service said Tuesday that "limited southern hemisphere exportable supplies" of wheat, coupled with a tight inventory in North America, is behind the surge in EEC exports.

According to the agency's report, the EEC will export a record 19 million metric tons of wheat in the international trading year that runs through June, up from 15.3 million tons in 1987-88.

Meanwhile, U.S. wheat exports were projected at 40.9 million tons, down from 43.4 million tons in 1987-88. Canada's exports were shown at 11.7 million tons, down from 23.6 million last year. Australia and Argentina also showed declines.

A metric ton is about 2,205 pounds and is equal to 36.7 bushels of wheat.

It said the 1989 U.S. winter wheat crop, for harvest this coming summer, "will be the first new-crop supplies available for export and, given the nature of the world wheat market, the size and quality of this crop will likely set the stage for prices in 1989-90."

The USDA reported last week that American farmers had boosted plantings of winter wheat for this year's harvest by 12 percent. However, much of the newly planted crop is in need of moisture.

45 Travelers Killed As Bus Loses Road Race With Train In Sri Lanka

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka — Hundreds of people rushed to hospitals in southern Sri Lanka today, hoping to find that loved ones had survived a train-bus collision in which at least 45 people were killed, officials said.

Most of the dead were schoolchildren.

Police and witnesses to Tuesday's crash said the bus driver apparently thought he could beat the express train, but his vehicle's engine stalled on the unguarded crossing about 43 miles south of Colombo.

At a Cabinet meeting today, President Ranasinghe Premadasa ordered all the country's 758 railway crossings to have gates installed by Monday, said spokesman Festus Perera.

Seventy-one of the 120 mostly young people on the bus were injured, and six critically injured victims were taken to Colombo today for emergency surgery, police said. No one on the train was injured.

The train, traveling at about 40 mph, knocked the bus about 150 feet down the track, witnesses said, and many bus passengers were hurled into a field. Others, most of them aged 5 to 15, were trapped inside the mangled vehicle.

"Bodies were all over ... Children were screaming," said a Buddhist priest who helped carry the injured to ambulances.

Many of the victims could not easily be identified.

Israel Under Fire For Tough Policy

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Politicians from the right and the left today criticized Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's government for the army's handling of the upsurge of violence in the occupied territories.

In no-confidence motions raised by eight parties, the doves protested tougher army measures and rising casualties, and the hawks criticized the military for failing to put down the 13-month Palestinian uprising.

The Cabinet, which includes Shamir's right-wing Likud bloc and the left-leaning Labor Party, was expected to easily defeat the no-confidence motions from the small parties.

In violence today, two Palestinian teen-agers were wounded in a clash with troops in Hebron in the occupied West Bank, Arab news reports said.

Merchants closed their shops and public transportation came to a halt in four cities — Jenin, Ramallah, Qalqilya and Arab east Jerusalem — in protest of the army's destruction of three Palestinian houses Tuesday and the latest deaths, the reports said.

Three deaths on Tuesday brought the number of Palestinians killed in the uprising to 362. Fifteen Israelis also have died.

Several clashed with stone-throwing protesters occurred today in east Jerusalem. Police fired rubber bullets and tear gas to quell one disturbance at a Palestinian high school and detained eight demonstrators, police spokesman Rafi Levy said. Police shut for 30 days a second city high school, the site of frequent clashes, Levy said.

In the West Bank, seven high schools were shut for up to two weeks on Tuesday following stoning attacks, the army said. In all, 33 West Bank high schools have been closed this month following rioting.

In the Parliament debate today, left-wing lawmakers criticized Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin's newest policy of allowing troops to shoot plastic or rubber bullets at stone throwers even as they flee and expanding the number of troops allowed to shoot.

Plastic and rubber bullets were introduced as a less lethal method of quelling riots than firing live ammunition, but they have been blamed for several deaths, including eight of the 13 Palestinian teen-agers killed in disturbances in the past week.

Another measure allows troops to demolish or seal the homes of stone-throwers or confiscate their families' property, Chief of Staff Lt. Gen. Dan Shomron said Tuesday.

The new policy was implemented Tuesday when the army dynamited the homes of three men suspected of injuring three Israelis in an attack last month.

Communists Conditionally OK Solidarity

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WARSAW, Poland — Communist leaders passed a resolution early today that could restore Solidarity's legal status, but officials of the banned trade union movement said too many unacceptable conditions appeared to be attached.

Among conditions set Tuesday before the vote by the party's governing Central Committee was that Solidarity declare itself for socialism, promise no strikes for two years and forfeit financial assistance from the West.

Prime Minister Mieczyslaw F. Rakowski said during debate Tuesday that he favored ending the seven-year ban on Solidarity if its leaders promise not to drag the economically depressed country "into anarchy."

The official PAP news agency said today that a majority of the 230-member body had approved the party leadership's stand on trade union and political pluralism. Other details of the proposal, debated for 17 hours until 3 a.m., were not immediately available.

There was no immediate comment from Solidarity chairman Lech Walesa.

But a Solidarity source in Warsaw, demanding anonymity, said Rakowski's proposal to reinstate the only independent labor movement ever allowed in the Soviet bloc appeared at first glance unclear, "unacceptable" or even "laughable."

The source said Solidarity could not function as a free trade union if forced to embrace an ideology and stripped of the right to strike.

In setting the conditions, Rakowski said the government needed assurances a legally functioning Solidarity would differ from the movement that used general strike threats as a pressure tactic during its 16-month heyday.

Solidarity activists on Tuesday welcomed the shift in the party's new stance, but said they must now proceed with caution because it stems not of good will but necessity.

Chinese Paper Reports Torture, Illegal Arrests

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — State agencies last year investigated more than 11,000 cases of human rights violations in China, including torture, illegal arrests and unwarranted search and seizure, the nation's leading newspaper reported today.

In an unusual report, the People's Daily said more than 50 high-ranking officials, 2,600 government workers, including policemen, and 1,250 employees of collective enterprises committed such violations.

The story cited an example of Officer Wang Xiugang, a policeman from Hengyang, a city in Hunan province, who took bribes to have criminals released from jail.

Wang traveled to Canton province nine times and secured the release of 36 prisoners using bogus letters of introduction, the paper said. For his services, he was bribed $1,784 — or about 50 times the average Chinese police officer's monthly salary.

Add TV To PC For High-Tech View Using HD

Next Generations Of TV To Be Home Computers

By Michael Schrage
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

HDTV is more than just another pretty interface. It is the technological revolution that may turn your personal computer into a TV set. And vice versa.

"The real impact of HDTV is on computers," says Sheridan Tatsuno, an analyst with Dataquest, a computer market-research firm, "because the Japanese view the television as nothing more than a graphics terminal."

For Japan's electronics industry, turning a TV set into a next-generation home computer — call it CompuTV — is simply a matter of inserting a microprocessor chip and a few megabytes of memory.

By contrast, Tatsuno says, "when Apple and IBM try to penetrate the home market, it's by offering their computers as a separate hobbyist or home-business machine."

"The next generations of TV are the next generation of computer," says Craig Fields, deputy research director at the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency. "We have virtually no domestic television industry anymore. And if we want our personal-computer industry to survive international competition, it has to respond to the HDTV threat" — which may include modifying PCs to accept broadcast signals.

The Redskins on Monday-night Macintosh? The McLaughlin Group on an AT? ("Switch over to Lotus, honey — I wanna see how my spreadsheets are going.") It may be inevitable as technology forces previously disparate media to converge. TV displays pictures; PCs process data.

Yet pictures are data, and computer technology is superb at manipulating torrents of data at great speed. Just as a VCR can now be programmed to record a certain show at a certain time, CompuTV could be set to record all shows containing a certain actor, to isolate key plays in a football drive or automatically to disregard Ed McMahon.

Last month William Schreiber, director of the Advanced Television Research Program at MIT's Media Lab, made a proposal to the FCC: Just as IBM's original PC had an "open architecture" that made it easy for third parties to manufacture logic boards and software for it, America should develop an "open architecture television."

That is, all units would be built to a common standard that would facilitate the use of add-on equipment-chips to improve picture quality; jacks for a keyboard, joystick or CD player; connectors to fiber-optic networks.

"It seems like the most sensible way to go," says Schreiber, who adds that both Japanese and Korean consumer-electronics companies are interested in the idea.

Ken Hattori, who covers media technology for Asahi Shimbun, Japan's largest newspaper company, agrees: "The TV manufacturers are technically ready to make everything. They're looking for diversification."

However, he says, "there's a question as to whether they have any clear idea of what the next generation of television might be. There's a big culture gap between TV manufacturers and computer companies."

Dataquest's Tatsuno, recently returned from a reconnaisance trip to Japan, says that companies there seem to understand that CompuTV is not a market segment but the basis of a new tsunami (wave) of consumer electronics. "People in America don't look at the market holistically," he says.

Bushes Offered Social Advice

By Sarah Booth Conroy
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Past presidents Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter and the past secretaries of state have handed out advice to their successors. Now's the time for the really important advice — from White House social secretaries Republican and Democratic of the past to the one to come.

WASHINGTON — The Bushes have feted and been feted at home and abroad for so many years that their entertaining education is certainly a fete accompli.

Party people are expecting great things in White House social services for the next four years at least.

Gretchen Poston, Rosalynn Carter's social secretary, puts it this way: "The curtain's going down on Hollywood. It was obvious that the Reagans would be very Californian in their parties, especially in their guest lists. So much of their entertainment came from Hollywood and Las Vegas.

"Everyone loved the Reagans and Hollywood at the beginning. It was very glitzy. Still, after eight years, people are ready for a change. The Reagans didn't complete the circle for a rounded social program.

"I expect Barbara Bush will balance the guest list — invite writers, musicians, poets, clowns, children. I think she will do classical, versatile entertaining, more like the Carters. Mrs. Bush has projects and those will lead to other things."

Lucy Winchester (now Breathitt), Pat Nixon's social secretary, agrees. "Like the Bushes, by the time Mr. Nixon became president, he'd already been vice president. They'd been entertained all over the world, and played host at the White House when President Eisenhower was so ill. It must be much harder for a new president who's only entertained on a state level before he comes into office."

Muffie Brandon, Linda Faulkner (both successively Mrs. Reagan's social secretaries) and Bess Abell, Lady Bird Johnson's social secretary, say the job carries with it the best help in the world. They claim they couldn't have lived through the experience without the expert assistance of the magnificently talented and enormously helpful permanent staff: the head usher, the chef, the calligraphers, the florist, the housekeeper, communications and transportation officers and all of their colleagues.

Even so, the job is not easy, says Poston.

"The social secretary works for both the president and the first lady. The position is so important it deserves a better, more serious title. 'Social secretary' today sounds like someone who addresses envelopes. I think it should be called 'special events officer.' Today the job has to go to a real professional who knows parties and protocol. It's too important a job to pay back a political obligation."

Specifically, Poston says, reading your mail is essential. "People write in to say why they should be invited — and sometimes they should. And artists volunteer to perform."

Keeping down the size of the guest list is a White House problem, according to Brandon. The White House, after all, is no major palace such as is available to most principal potentates. It is, as was said early on, "a gentleman's house."

Brandon says firmly: "The White House certainly doesn't need larger parties, wall-to-wall people. The receiving line should be kept to a one-hour maximum, so the president and his wife can walk around and greet everybody. They can't be gracious when it's overcrowded. I figured 120 for a dinner in the State Dining Room, 400 for a reception. You can pack in more than that, but it loses something. Of course you can have 600, 700 on the South Lawn."

One recurring bit of advice is that you can count on your first lady to cope.

Faulkner found that the Reagans, seasoned troupers, were good at going on with the show, such as the time the first lady shook hands for the duration of the receiving line with a sign around her neck to the effect: "Bad Cold, Can't Talk."

Winchester says she quickly learned that the first thing to do was to ask Pat Nixon. "She was always busy, writing letters, planning

Thanks, Moonie Krupa And Others For Hit Single From Was (Not Was)

By Hillel Italie
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Don and David Was, authors of the hit single, "Spy in the House of Love," would like to thank many people for the success of Was (Not Was): Moonie Krupka, jazz critic David Weiss, funk king George Clinton, music executive Michael Zilkha, and, of course, Don's 2-year-old son.

Get the picture? Well, there's more.

The Was would also like to extend their appreciation to singers Sweet Pea Atkinson and Harry Bowen, rocker Elvis Costello and Frank Sinatra Jr., all contributors to the group's third album, "What Up, Dog?"

Still confused? Then go back about 20 years when two young smart alecks named Donald Fagenson and David Weiss were growing up in the suburbs of Detroit. The story begins with our heroes in eighth grade gym class.

This is where Moonie Krupka comes in.

"Some of the students were using tumbling equipment without supervision," Weiss recalled in an interview at the Manhattan offices of Chrysalis Records. "When the teacher found out he asked who had done it. Don and I decided to withhold information, but a guy named Moonie Krupka ratted on us. We met outside the teacher's office."

And so the friendship was born — Weiss, the poet who could not remember lyrics to the Motown hits sung in the school bathrooms, and Fagenson, the natural musician experimenting with multi-track recordings at age 14.

They each attended the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, but eventually went their separate ways. Weiss headed west and became a jazz critic for the Los Angeles Herald Examiner.

"I fancied myself a writer," Weiss said. "I was really just a big jazz fan."

Fagenson, meanwhile, took to the "trenches" in Detroit, doing studio work and performing Gilbert O'Sullivan songs ("Alone Again, Naturally," "Get Down") in local bars.

"I was at wits end," Fagenson recalled. "You can only do so much hackwork. It'll drive you nuts, especially if you have a statement you've got to make. I felt the moment slipping away. I called David and said, 'Let's go down in glory.'"

So in 1980, Was (Not Was) was formed. The name being inspired by none other than Don's little boy, who had invented phrases such as "Blue (Not Blue)" and "Hot (Not Hot)."

The Was write most of the group's material and also play a number of instruments, including keyboards, flute, harmonica and mandolin. For singers, they recruited Atkinson and Bowen, who had been performing backing vocals at the Sound Suite.

Clinton, mastermind of Parliament-Funkadelic, enters the story because his music and satirical style of writing are powerful influences on Was (Not Was).

"George Clinton played at our high school dance when his group was still called the Parliaments," Weiss said. "They came and lip-synced 'I Just Wanna Testify' at our dance. He was obviously the first black hippie anybody had ever seen so he really made quite an impact."

With the help of a friendly jazz critic, Was (Not Was) managed to get signed to Ze Records, an independent label, in 1980.

"I violated journalistic ethics by sending the demo to Ze Records with a cover letter record from myself as a critic saying you must listen to these guys," Weiss confessed.

The ploy worked. Zilkha, the president of Ze, liked Was (Not Was) and the group's self-titled debut album came out in 1981.

The record sold poorly, however, and Was (Not Was) tried its luck the following year with Geffen Records, formed by David Geffen, who had helped discover the Eagles and Jackson Browne among many others. It was, in Weiss' words, "The beginning of the end of the beginning."

"We came in as this pan-ethn dance act, this heterosexual 'Village People,'" Weiss said. "Geffen's people thought in terms of hit records. 'Get rid of the black guys (Atkinson and Bowen),' they told us. 'You're blue-eyed soul. You need a Paul Young or Daryl Hall to front the group.'"

Out of this promising relationship came the group's sole album for Geffen, "Born to Laugh at Tornadoes," released in 1983. The record bombed and Was (Not Was) spent the next two years trying to get out of its contract.

"We were pariahs at our own record companies," Weiss said.

Was (Not Was) did manage to have a couple of hits in Europe and is now happily signed with Chrysalis records. "What Up, Dog?" is a mix of funky tracks such as "Spy" and "Anytime Lisa," the off-the-wall "Earth to Doris" (featuring Weiss' anguished vocals) and the heartfelt "Love Can be Bad Luck."

Sinatra can be heard crooning "Wedding Vows in Las Vegas," a less-than-romantic look at life in the gambling mecca.

"It was a case of him seeing the song and being glad he had an original piece of music that he could relate to," said Fagenson, inspired to use the singer after seeing his name on a marquee. "There was a great deal of pathos in that lyric. It's a sad place and I thought he captured it."

Now that they are commercial successes, fans will no doubt want to know Weiss and Fagenson's secret to writing hit singles.

Faye Dunaway Eases Up For 'Burning Secret

By Hillel Italie
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — She won an Academy Award for playing the ruthless television executive in "Network," and gave unforgettable performances as Bonnie Parker in "Bonnie and Clyde" and Evelyn Mulwray in "Chinatown."

Faye Dunaway's exhaustive preparation and demand for perfection have won her admiration but have also caused tension on the set. Jack Nicholson, her co-star in "Chinatown," nicknamed her "The Dreaded Dunaway."

But for her latest movie, "Burning Secret," Dunaway drops the tempo. She plays Sonya Tuchman, the wife of an American diplomat stationed in Vienna in 1919. The film has a quiet, somber feel and Dunaway plays her part with the same sense of understatement.

"You just have to keep it balanced inside," the actress said. "It's a part of acting. Your business is the inner character and the rest will take care of itself.

"This particular character was gently restrained. She was very much in the period of 1919, very much as it should be. She wasn't like Diane in 'Network.'"

"Burning Secret" also stars Klaus Maria Brandauer ("Mephisto" and "Out of Africa") as the enigmatic baron who romances Sonya, and features 12-year-old David Eberts in his film debut as Sonya's sensitive son.

"What Klaus does is what the best actors do," Dunaway said. "He's a link. He always goes against the grain. He's also a very great gentleman."

Dunaway, who has played opposite such seasoned thespians as Warren Beatty and William Holden, relished the opportunity to work with an untrained actor such as Eberts.

"Children have a wonderful thing — they don't have to battle against artifice," Dunaway said. "David is completely genuine, which is what all of us grownups want to achieve. He wasn't like a child actor; David didn't have that artifice. He had a wonderful kind of innocence and reality about him."

Acting Dunaway, noted, is really a way of staying childlike. A chance to remain open and adventurous.

"I do know that acting is play. When you actually are doing it, it's play. Let's do this now and then this. It's all very spontaneous," she said. "That's very enjoyable because the rest of life is far more complicated."

Dorothy Faye Dunaway was born in 1941 in Bascom, Fla. She attended Florida State University and the University of Florida before transferring to Boston University's School of Fine and Applied Arts.

In 1962, her senior year at Boston University, Dunaway was chosen to play a lead role in Arthur Miller's "The Crucible," and was subsequently recommended for admission to an actor's training program at the new Lincoln Center Repertory Theater.

Her time at the Lincoln Center program led to roles on Broadway in "A Man for All Seasons" and "After the Fall." Dunaway's performance as the unhappy wife in the American Place Theater production of "Hogan's Goat" caught the attention of talent agent Joyce Selznick and in 1967 led to her film debut in "The Happening."

Neither that film nor "Hurry Sundown" made much of an impact, but later that year Dunaway earned her first Academy Award nomination when she starred with Beatty and Gene Hackman in "Bonnie and Clyde," an enormous critical and commercial success.

"I think I've been lucky for many of the roles I've played," Dunaway recalled, "but Bonnie was definitely the biggest break for me. It was the closest to me. I felt kind of homefree."

She went on to earn another Oscar nomination in 1974 for "Chinatown" and was named best actress in 1976 for "Network." Still, fame has had its drawbacks as well: she has divorced twice (from rock star Peter Wolf and photographer Terry O'Neill) and her overwrought performance as Joan Crawford in the 1981 cult classic, "Mommie Dearest," left moviegoers wondering whether the "real" Faye Dunaway came armed with wire hangers.

"I think it was a mistake to do," she admitted. "The intentions are there, we wanted to make the portrait of a tortured woman. It's an interesting challenge but I don't think it can be done. People think that you're like that; the persona that's created by the roles you play are identified with you. You have to be careful."

Dunaway's career made few gains after "Mommie Dearest" until 1987, when she won raves as the broken down alcoholic, Wanda, in "Barfly."

"I was absolutely searching for a part that would make people forget 'Mommie Dearest.' 'Barfly' was a gift from Mickie (Rourke, her co-star), a gift from God. I was deglamorized, demystified.

"The vulnerability in 'Barfly' is close to me, but not the drinking."

Dunaway's admirers have included Crawford, John Huston, who played her father in "Chinatown," and Debra Winger, who sighted her performance in "Mommie Dearest" as a major influence on her own career.

Dunaway expressed great respect for Patricia Neal but stressed that her acting style is very much her own.

"You can only be yourself, you can't emulate other actresses."

Walker Cleans Up His Act

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GRUENE, Texas — Jerry Jeff Walker walked onto the small stage at Gruene Hall, slung the exotic reptile skin strap of his Martin guitar over his shoulder and signaled to the band he was ready to start.

To the resounding applause of 600 people at the rustic, wood-floor honky-tonk, he picked and crooned one country tune after another, talking to the crowd in between instrumental solos as if he were talking to old friends.

At the chorus of one tune, the 46-year-old Walker reminded his audience he had matured just a bit: He was once regarded as a hard drinking, cussing rebel both on and off the stage who couldn't care less for the business end of his career.

"We're just here to play a little music, not watch me throw up. ... I've already done that ... before," he said to ear-piercing hoots and hollers in the 110-year-old dance hall where burlap sacks hung from the rafters and newspaper ads adorned the walls.

The recent performance was another success. It also was an inspiration for Walker, who recorded his first album in three years and his first live one in 10 years at the hall.

The Oneonta, N.Y., native wrote such songs as "Drifting Way of Life," "Gypsy Songman," "Hill Country Rain" and "Cadillac Cowboy."

But he is best known for "Mr. Bojangles," a song about a raggedy old man who danced a soft shoe for money. Walker wrote the tune during his wild days in 1968 but it remains popular and has been recorded by such artists as Nina Simone.

"I still think it's part of everything," Walker said. "I think people in show business have identified with that song and that's what's kept it around."

Though Walker's attitude about fans has at times been perceived as flippant, he and his wife insist he does care.

"I think it's great the fans stayed there and I think my wife, Susan, getting involved in the business end of my thing has really helped my fans and me keep in touch with ourselves," he said.

Among those fans is Chris Wall, a 38-year-old Wilsall, Mont., singer-songwriter who relocated to Austin to open up shows for Walker and to be managed by Susan Walker.

Walker planned to record at least two of Wall's songs on the new album, including "Trashy Women," and "I Feel Like Hank Williams Tonight."

Stage Is Set For A Syndication Showdown Of News Magazines

By Kathryn Baker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — In this corner "USA Today: The Television Show," fast on its feet, but dragging the baggage from its inauspicious debut in September.

In the other corner is the plodding "Inside Edition," a knockoff of Fox's "A Current Affair" that King World hopes will knock "USA Today" out of the ring.

The decisive round between the two syndicated shows is expected during the February sweeps when local ratings are measured.

"USA Today: The Television Show" barely survived the November sweeps and has suffered station defections and time changes, sometimes in favor of the new "Inside Edition" and the old "A Current Affair."

"USA Today: The Television Show" premiered last fall after months of hype and a $40 million investment by the Gannett Co. in partnership with Grant Tinker. The producers promised state-of-the-art graphics and a format that would change the face of television news. In retrospect, there was no way the show could live up to expectations — but it wasn't expected to be so bad, either.

Overproduced and whizzing by at a frantic pace, its anchormen and women were stranded on an unpopulated, space-age set, talking to disembodied images on big-screen television monitors.

The new version is much better. Brief updates on stories of the day are delivered by grounded anchors who have been allowed to sit down — phew! — behind a desk that does not spin, gyrate or sprout statistics.

Its light-hearted features benefit from the impressive graphics. The flash and the likable, telegenic hosts remain. If this were the show that had premiered in September, it still wouldn't have lived up to the build-up, but reviews would not have been nearly so negative.

But those negative reviews did hit newsstands, and King World, the successful syndicator of "Wheel of Fortune," "The Oprah Winfrey Show" and "Jeopardy!" soon thereafter announced it was gunning for "USA Today: The Television Show" with "Inside Edition," to premiere in January.

"USA Today: The Television Show" had proven there was a market for a syndicated newsmagazine. It had sold in 95 percent of the country weeks before a single show was produced, thanks to the cast behind the scenes — former NBC Chairman Tinker, Gannett, and former NBC "Today" show executive producer Steve Friedman.

When the show fell flat, King World figured to step in and pick up the market.

But GTG stuck by the show, hired Jim Bellows as new executive producer and announced a massive repromotion — at a cost of $4 million — to herald the re-created program.

"USA Today: The Television Show" is far from the the sure thing it once seemed. "Inside Edition" has been picked up as a midseason replacement in markets covering 71 percent of the country.

The Kings enlisted the producers of "A Current Affair" and hired well-known TV personality David Frost as host.

But "Inside Edition" wasn't exactly impressive in its premiere, either. In comparison to "USA Today: The Television Show," the set looked like community-access cable. The content was a mish-mash of previously covered sob stories. Frost concluded the show with an embarrassing promise of "no three-headed babies, no programs devoted to issues like, should one-legged lesbians be allowed to adopt ferrets, no sex surveys, and hopefully, no broken noses for the host."

If "Inside Edition" is wavering, the new "USA Today: The Television Show" has settled down.

Movies Teach McCarthy About America

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — In the same year that George Bush and Michael Dukakis criss-crossed the United States searching for votes, Andrew McCarthy headed for the heartland.

"I had never been to America before — just New York and L.A.," said the actor, who spent extensive time in the Midwest while filming "Kansas" and "Fresh Horses."

Neither film was a box-office hit for McCarthy, who has appeared in "St. Elmo's Fire," "Pretty in Pink" and "Mannequin," but he enjoyed the chance to work in new environments.

"Kansas," which also starred Matt Dillon, was filmed in Lawrence and surrounding areas.

"We had a ball," McCarthy said in a recent interview. "I found the people there really neat. We were big fish in a small pond."

In "Fresh Horses," filmed in Cincinnati, McCarthy plays a college student who breaks up with his fiancee after meeting a poor country girl (Molly Ringwald).

"It was cold," he said of the location work. "There's the whole starkness up there; it helped the mood of the movie."

Nothing could have prepared McCarthy, a theater major at New York University, for the quickness of his entry into the movie business. Back in 1983, he was just another student at NYU when he decided to answer an "open call" in the newspaper for a part in "Class," which starred Jacqueline Bisset.

"I waited for hours with 500 other kids and they called me back," McCarthy recalled. "It was so out of the blue. One week I was in school and the next week I'm in bed with Jacqueline Bisset. I thought, 'I'm doing something right here.' I was going so fast, I didn't have time to think about it."

Bisset gave him a lot of professional help.

"She was great, she could have said, 'Who is this punk?' and taken advantage of me. She was amazingly patient and considerate to me. She and the director would say, 'That's the camera, Andrew,'" he recalled.

McCarthy's first major success came in 1985 with "St. Elmo's Fire," which also featured Rob Lowe, Judd Nelson, Emilio Estevez, Ally Sheedy and Demi Moore.

"St. Elmo's Fire," a smash hit despite scathing reviews, was a mixed blessing for McCarthy. He was unquestionably popular at the box office, but his image suffered from being grouped with other young actors whose talents were questionable and who were known as arrogant and pretentious. "Brat Packers" they were called.

"I never really tried to take it that seriously," McCarthy said. "I haven't talked to any of them since I worked with them. If people want labels, it makes it easier to identify someone. I don't really care. It doesn't mean anything to me."

But he was concerned about being cast in parts designed to bring teen-agers into the theaters.

"It's such a trap because they keep sending you the same movies and then you say I'll do just one more and you're letting them control your life."

So in 1986, McCarthy was happy to have the chance to appear with Linda Hunt and Linda Bassett in the American Playhouse Production of "Waiting for the Moon," based on the lives of Gertrude Stein and Alice B. Toklas.

"I was doing 'Mannequin' when I got the script and I thought it was a wonderful little story. I also wanted to work with Linda Hunt. It was a nice little project," he said.

Despite his success, McCarthy is not immune from getting cold feet — last- minute doubts about whether he is capable of playing a particular role. He recalled having those feelings while making "Weekend at Bernie's," a comedy to be released later in 1989.

"I was torturing myself, saying 'I can't do this. I'm not funny.' My friend said, 'You're such a jerk. You were like this when you were about to do 'Fresh Horses.' You were like this with all of them."

But McCarthy isn't likely to give up this little ritual.

"I think it's good for you to ask, 'What the hell am I doing here?' They're paying me a lot of money and I don't know what I'm doing. That's part of the fun in a sick little way."

And if his popularity does fade, McCarthy can always count on the support of his friends in Middle America.

"I got a letter the other day from the Locke family in Minnesota," he said. "They write me letters every month. They have a birthday cake for me and I'm invited for Thanksgiving."

things, but I could go to her at 7 a.m. and she'd be glad to help me. She remembered faces and names out of the ancient past. And she was always ready on time for events. We called her 'the minute man.'"

Winchester says the White House has its limitations. "Some super ideas don't work because of the house's geography. The kitchen is downstairs and all the food has to come up in a bitty elevator. The guests enter on the lower floor. But the permanent staff are so generous, flexible, and love the house so much, they want to see everything done right."

Perhaps the mishaps — not funny at the time — are the most instructive for the new regime.

Poston says for state dinners, you must study the background of people coming — their favorite flowers, types of entertainment. And you have to check everything.

"When the Czechoslovakia head of state came, we played the wrong anthem — the Czechs had changed it just six months ago and our military band hadn't been told about the new one."

Brandon, who strongly advises all social secretaries that a sense of humor is a major qualification, remembers the time Prince Charles arrived unexpectedly at the Diplomatic Reception Room door. Two people were mopping there. The mops, the mop bucket, the moppers and Muffie all disappeared into a closet till the prince had passed through.

Bess Abell remembers vividly the time she learned on short notice that former British prime minister Harold Wilson was coming to dinner. The invitations went out by wire. She arranged quickly for Robert Merrill, who'd sung before at the White House, to come again.

His wife Marion was his accompanist. And he quickly put together a program of his favorite standards. All went well until the National Security adviser, Walt Rostow, saw the program.

"He said, 'You can't be serious. This must be a joke. To the prime minister who pulled the British out of Suez, you're singing 'On the Road to Mandalay.' And you serenade the man who devalued the British pound with 'I've Got Plenty of Nothing'?"

"Well, I called Merrill and he put together a new program. Meanwhile, the story leaked and the British Embassy told us that Wilson couldn't survive a change of program. Fortunately, we hadn't trashed all the first printed programs. So Merrill sang it all, and added one — 'It Ain't Necessarily So.'"

Bess Abell warns while you're in the White House you shouldn't take yourself too seriously. "Don't assume that your great popularity is due to your charm and good looks."

Brandon says: "There is a life after you leave the White House — remember that all the non-White House people who are so helpful to you will still be around in the afterlife."

Even so, the social sisterhood has not done badly in the hereafter.

Abell is now head of her own public relations firm.

Sgt. Mark Conklin chastises a recruit at Parris Island, S.C. during basic training

Marine Corps Drops Boot Camp To Teach Basic Warrior Training

By Molly Moore
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

PARRIS ISLAND, S.C. — Eighteen-year-old Marine Pvt. Jeff Hickman is down in the dirt, cheek jammed into the metal of an M-60 machine gun that is spitting bone-jolting rounds at an enemy target across the flat marsh.

He leaps from the trench and darts behind a board wall, pokes the barrel through a fake window opening and fires another round. He turns and dives into a nearby sandbag bunker, braces his shoulder and fires again. Wooden pop-up targets lie wounded on the South Carolina marsh.

Hickman, who grew up on Maryland's Eastern Shore hunting deer and squirrel, is one of the new breed of Marine recruits — the boot-camp troops who are training for Marine Corps Commandant Gen. Alfred M. Gray's meaner, leaner, green fighting machine.

His Marines don't go to "boot camp" anymore; those grueling, gut-busting first 11 weeks are now called Basic Warrior Training. Marines no longer become mere infantrymen; they are commandos — trained to take a terrorist base in the Persian Gulf as skillfully as they can storm a beach in the South Pacific.

In his first 17 months as commandant of the 197,000-member Marine Corps, Gray, a tobacco-chewing bulldog of a general who tromps around the Pentagon in combat fatigues, has waged a crusade to return the service to its "war-fighting image." He has taken his campaign on the road to a service stung by the Marine embassy guard spy scandals and still haunted by the 1983 bombing that killed 241 Americans at the Marine barracks in Beirut.

"We are warriors and people who support warriors," Gray, who was the U.S.-based commander of the men who died in Beirut, told a group of Marines during one of his field tours to promote the new image. "We're not too fancy. We're not a whole bunch of other things. What you see is what you got."

In recent years, many Marine leaders weren't very pleased with what they saw or what they got.

These officers took a dim view of the complex, costly, heavy weapons such as the M-1 tank and AV-8B Harrier jumpjet the Corps helped itself to during the Reagan era's military buildup. These leaders feared that the Marines were getting too fat and heavy for their mission as an expeditionary force.

Batallions were being loaded down by tanks and artillery that would take up valuable ship space and slow the quick-response forces in a war emergency, some officials said. Others argued that the equipment would be useless in the smaller-scale, Third World conflicts that the Marine Corps is most likely to face today. Gray ordered his top officers to rethink how those weapons are used and, in some cases, whether the Corps needs them at all.

Gray and other Marine leaders also were alarmed by their belief that the platoons were inadequately trained in basic combat skills.

"Whoever heard of a marine who wasn't skilled in weaponry?" growled Chief Warrant Officer Jim Jerrolds, head of training at the Parris Island firing range for the past seven years. "That, unfortunately, was what was happening. We weren't putting Marines out in the field who were qualified to use all the weapons in an infantry battalion."

But even as Gray seeks to launch some of the most sweeping changes in the training and structure of his fighting forces since the Vietnam War, and faces the problems of an aging air- and sea-transport force, congressional leaders and budget analysts are warning the new Bush administration and the Defense Department to brace for an era of sharply declining defense budgets.

"Things are going to get tighter now," said Maj. Gen. Michael P. Sullivan, deputy commander for war-fighting, a new position created under Gray to plan the combat needs of the Marine Corps. "There's only so much to go around. We'll tighten our belts."

Meanwhile, Gray is pushing his overhaul of the Marine Corps, beginning with the new recruits — 33,400 men and 1,130 women who have enlisted this year.

"We need to teach these high-school graduates with their football letters from East Cupcake, Neb., a little bit about being streetwise," Gray told a group of sergeants at Cherry Point (N.C.) Marine Corps Station this year.

Since February, the Corps has crammed 60 more hours of training into those rigorous weeks at the Parris Island and San Diego training centers where young "boots" are stripped of their civilian identities — more time on the firing range, more marches, more hand-to-hand combat, more night training, more sweat. Requirements are the same for male and female recruits, although training for the women is tailored to be more defensive than offensive.

It's barely daybreak and recruits are slithering on their bellies through the black mud and whining mosquito clouds of a Carolina marsh, inching under coils of razor wire as ear-piercing explosions thunder all around.

In a steamy gymnasium, other recruits are writhing in the choke holds of their partners in hand-to-hand combat training.

"I want you to start bustin' heads, okay?" the instructor roars at his panting recruits.

"Yes, SIR!" shouts the panting chorus.

"Poke 'im in the eye!"

"Yes, SIR!"

The instructor squints mischievously at his red-faced charges: "Are you gonna go home and show grandma what you learned in boot camp?"

"Yes, SIR!"

Late one afternoon, in a scene repeated dozens of times over the course of boot camp, recruits are smearing their faces with greasy streaks of green and brown camouflage makeup — "cammie sticks" — and dressing their helmets with leaves and grass in preparation for a stalk through the thick piney woods in search of "enemy" troops.

"The recruits are doing the things they sign on to do," said Maj. Gen. Joseph P. Hoar, commanding general of the Parris Island Recruit Depot, which trains all male Marines who sign up east of the Mississippi and all female recruits nationwide. "They're caught up in the idea of creeping and crawling through the woods."

"It's highly motivating," said Pvt. Larry Peyton, 18, of Powhatan, Va., during a break on the new firing range where recruits now spend four days using weapons ranging from M-60 machine guns to anti-tank artillery instead of the old schedule of just one afternoon with M-16 rifles. "It puts more action into the training."

"It's good for the Marine Corps," said squad mate Hickman, who hopes to become an intelligence specialist. "If we ever go to the battlefield, everybody won't be lost wondering what to do."

Gray is not satisfied that there is enough extra training in boot camp. Beginning in November, all "boots" are required to go on to more advanced infantry training, whether their occupational specialty is helicopter mechanic or mail clerk.

The new emphasis on tougher training was prompted in part by a recent Marine Corps review revealing that many Marines assigned to rear echelon jobs were not capable of defending themselves in combat.

"You have to be able to put down that wrench, pick up your helmet and war belt and defend your airfield if called on," Hoar said. "That goes for the women as well as the men."

For men, there will be 28 more days of intensive, advanced field work and weapons training. Women will get an extra seven days of training — a shorter period because it will not focus on offensive tactics and because the smaller number of female recruits requires significantly less training time than the larger groups of male recruits.

Beyond recruit training, the Marine Corps is restructuring its fighting forces, converting eight infantry batallions into commando units.

They train on oil rigs in the Gulf of Mexico and with FBI anti-terrorist forces. Hostage crises, invasions, Third World strikes — Gray wants the Marine Corps there.

"Commandos — by anybody's definition," he has said of the new units.

When the Joint Chiefs of Staff needed a military force to attack and destroy oil platforms being used as command posts by the Iranian Revolutionary Guard in the Persian Gulf last spring, they called on the new Marine Corps commandos.

"Before, we would not have had that capability," Gray said.

The Beirut barracks bombing, and his background in intelligence fields, also prompted Gray to order greater emphasis on intelligence-gathering skills, reconnaissance and high-level "war gaming" against perceived enemy threats.

Gray and his officers concede that the new training programs are expensive but say the expense involves time and people more than direct new expenditures. Marine budget analysts note, however, that partly because of the new training, the Marine Corps shot more ammunition than it bought this year and had to dig into its reserves for the first time since the Reagan buildup began.

But the added training costs are relatively small compared to the mammoth expenses the Marine Corps faces in its efforts to modernize and upgrade its weapons, ships and equipment:

— Over the next 14 years, the service is scheduled to retire 55 of its aging amphibious landing ships and other troop and cargo vessels. It will be competing with the Navy's need for more destroyers, frigates, submarines and aircraft carriers in a time of shrinking budgets.

— In the next decade, the Marines will introduce their most expensive aircraft ever — the V-22 Osprey tilt-rotor craft for carrying troops and equipment — more than $35 million apiece. The aircraft already is slightly behind schedule and, as a program in its infancy, is expected to encounter expensive growing pains. The total estimated cost is $22.6 billion for 602 Marine Corps and Navy planes.

The introduction of the Osprey follows another major new aircraft acquisition — the Harrier AV-8B, a sleek hybrid of a fighter jet and a helicopter. It can lift off vertically like a helicopter, then shift its jet engines and race across the horizon at speeds of 650 mph in seconds.

Recruits Dread The Gas Chamber

By Molly Moore
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

For the "boots," it is the single most dreaded event in 11 long weeks of mind-numbing, body-grinding dreaded events.

"I can see the letters now: Dear Mommy, They tried to kill me today," chortled a drill instructor as his young troops, coughing and drooling, spilled out of the small white cinderblock building — the Gas Chamber.

They've been hearing about it for weeks — the Marine Corps' attempt to prepare you for biological warfare. Now, they're sitting on the bleachers under a moss-draped live oak tree, clutching a black rubber mask, and the drill instructor is laying it on thick.

"I don't want anybody spazzing out in my gas chamber!" growls Staff Sgt. Frederick Hunt, giving the nervous recruits detailed instructions on what they're supposed to do for the 10 minutes that they're inside the the little white building.

"When I tell you, close your eyes. Take a deep breath. Reach up with your left hand and take the mask off.

"Then we'll start the march around the gas chamber. You're still holding your breath. Your eyes are still closed. I don't want to see no pushin' and shovin' in there.

"The gas is crystallized CS. (Tear gas, in layman's terms. Harmless, but temporarily painful.) There's no way to escape it. If you try to put your mask on, we're gonna take it off."

"Now, some are you are gonna say, 'I can't breathe! I can't breathe! My heart stopped!' "

He pauses. Forty pairs of eyes are glued to his face.

"We're not gonna let you die in there," he shouts. "You're gonna hurt — I'm not gonna lie to you; but nothing is gonna happen to you. You understand?"

"Yes, sir," shout the mouths. "No, sir," whisper the brains.

The door slams open.

A great wave of coughing, gagging, slobbering recruits stumble out. Arms flail. Tears pour down distorted red faces. Throats are on fire. Bodies bend to the ground in pain. Screams echo off the white cinderblock walls.

Drill instructors, yelling to guide the blinded boots, lead the screeching mass into an open field. The gas is on their hands, in their clothes, still seeping into their burning nostrils.

"You're not dying!" comforts Hunt.

They clearly need to be reminded.

Jazz Institute

DURHAM (AP) — Officials of the Thelonious Monk Institute of Jazz said Monday they have decided to build the $12 million jazz complex at a downtown site and hope to begin classes by the fall of 1991.

City Manager Orville Powell said that the city and county will buy the property at Foster and Morgan streets, valued at about $750,000, and lease it to the institute. Details for the lease agreement have yet to be worked out, he said.

Opening lead: Four of ♣

South's hand was a classic jump shift—a good hand with a self-sufficient suit. Once North raised, simple Blackwood was all South needed to place the contract at the right level.

West led a club to East's ace, and the defense rested its case. Declarer won the heart shift, drew trumps and claimed the balance of the tricks, and the hand was thrown in.

Those who would fault West for not leading a diamond are being unduly harsh. How was he to know that his partner was void? The blame should go to East for not telling partner to lead a diamond.

How can he do that? By doubling six spades! When the opponents bid freely to slam, you are not going to get rich with a penalty double. Unless they have lost their senses, or unless there is a really freak distribution, the most you can hope for is down one.

Theodore Lightner suggested a better use for the double when the opponents have bid to slam voluntarily—it should be a lead director. Normally, it asks for the lead of the first suit bid by dummy. Had East doubled six spades, West would dutifully have led a diamond. The resultant ruff would have completed the book and, since the ace of clubs was going to cash, the defenders would have scored a one-trick set.

My Mountain Trip

By Ben Smith

Matthew, Robert, my dad and I went to South Mountains State Park in Burke County, North Carolina to camp and hike. Our route took us through the cities of Raleigh, Burlington, Winston-Salem, Greensboro and Morganton. We stopped and ate at a pizza buffet in Morganton. Then we went on the winding 18 mile road to the park.

When we got there, we had a snack. Robert, Matthew and I looked at the trout-filled, cascading river. Finally, we reluctantly put on our heavy backpacks to hike up the rugged mountain terrain for 1½ miles to our campsite. It was located in a beautiful meadow with a mountain stream gurgling among the rocks. We set up camp, ate supper and went to sleep.

The next day we went hiking along a steep trail, dammed a creek, hiked boulder to boulder across a river to a beautiful waterfall and returned to our campsite.

Once at our campsite, Matthew, Robert and I went exploring up the river and we saw many tiny waterfalls. Dad said that while we were gone, a river otter came up to our tents and then ran away when he discovered he was not the only one in camp.

That night all of our shoes were wet so we put them next to the fire on some rocks to dry out. We went to look at the fallen bridge near our campsite. When we came back, the fire had crept up to Robert's shoes and had burned the tip of his sole. After that, we went to sleep.

That morning we ate breakfast, put up camp and hiked down the rough trail. Finally, we made it to the car and left for Greenville.

The Mystery Of Gilbert

By Glen Dudley

Once upon a time in an old town, the people were in need of money. All they had was one hundred dollars each. They were all nice people, but somebody was stealing their money. It was a long summer for everybody. There were six people, Alan, Chris, Matt, Daniel, Mitzi, my dog and me. We were detectives. In case you are wondering, my name is Glen Dudley. We solved a lot a mysteries before this. We were not scared. We were about to start the case when we found somebody who was very suspicious. His name was Gilbert. He was sixteen years old. I said we were going to go to my family and ask them a few questions because they had a detective agency when they were kids.

I felt proud to be the leader, sometimes, but other times I didn't. Like the time we got lost in the mountains. This time we were all leaders. This time we knew we were going to solve this mystery. We all had the very same suspect. It was Gilbert! They all thought they had found the thief. Just then I was walking in the park looking for clues, when all of a sudden, who would come up but Gilbert! Same Gilbert, same age, same voice. I asked him what he was doing there. He mocked me. I asked him again and he mocked me again. A bird tweeted, he tweeted. It was a robot! I turned it off. He was made really good so I knew that Gilbert was the thief.

The next day, we all searched the park high and low. We did not find anything. It got late and we left. Gilbert came out of the bushes. We were still there but we were also hiding. I saw him carry four bank bags to his hideout in the woods. We were disguised as bushes and trees. But, we noticed it was not Gilbert! It was somebody else! We were surprised. He had a whole bunch of money. He looked like he was nine or ten. He had a name tag that said Joey. He was going to another bank! We went to an army store. When I opened the door nobody was there. We dressed up as army men. We took grenades, guns and firecrackers. We followed him to the bank, took an intercom and said, "This is the army. Come out with your hands up." So we took the money to the rightful owners and put him in jail!

Discover Squash, The Winter Vegetable

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Enjoy a vegetable of winter — squash.

The many colors and shapes of the winter squash remain in the market from fall to early spring. There are three main varieties — acorn, sweet potato and Hubbard.

The acorn squash is small and fluted, dark green in color, and generally shaped like an acorn. The sweet potato, marrow and other similar squashes are paler green streaked with white and are medium-sized, while the Hubbard squash is the largest of the winter varieties. It has a dark green color with a touch of orange and roughened skin.

Winter squash is ripe for the picking after it has fully developed on the vine, producing a hard rind. The seeds also are hard and are discarded when preparing the squash.

Because of its hard skin, winter squashes usually are cut in half and the seeds scooped out. The squash is baked usually with a little water in the pan to prevent the skin from drying. It usually takes about 45 minutes to an hour to cook this way, while a shorter way is to place the halves of squash, cut sides down, in the pan with a little water and bake for 15 to 20 minutes. This will steam the squash, cooking it until it's almost tender.

The halves then may turned right side up to hold the desired filling for more baking until its tender.

The squash may be served with a sprinkling of salt and pepper and butter, or pork sausage meat, sliced apples, onions and other fillings may be accompany it in the cavity.

The larger winter squashes may be cut into pieces and either steamed or baked to soften the skin.

The strained pulp of the winter squash may be used to substitute for pumpkin in pies or puddings, while squash blossoms may be dipped in thin batter and fried for a delicious vegetable. Unopened yellow buds may be sauteed. They will open in the pan and make an unusual garnish for omelets and other egg dishes.

The Daily Reflector/Shannon Wolfe

SQUASH WITH CIDER CREAM

1 lb. butternut squash
3 tbsps. stock
1/3 cup plain non-fat yogurt
1 tsp. prepared coarse mustard
1/3 cup apple cider
1 tbsp. very finely minced fresh chives
Dash freshly grated nutmeg

Peel the squash, remove the seeds and cut into 1-inch chunks. Toss the chunks and the stock into a 9-inch glass pie dish, cover and microwave on full power for about four minutes. Let stand for five minutes, then drain and pat dry.

Meanwhile, in a small bowl, combine the yogurt, mustard, cider, chives and nutmeg. Toss with the squash and serve warm. Makes 4 servings.

TWICE-BAKED SQUASH

1 10-oz. package frozen chopped spinach, thawed and well drained
3/4 cup grated Parmesan cheese
2 hard-cooked eggs, finely chopped
1/4 cup margarine or butter, softened
4 slices bacon, crisp-cooked, drained and crumbled
2 tbsps. chopped green onion
1/4 tsp. salt
Dash to 1/8 tsp. ground red pepper
1/4 cup soft bread crumbs

Halve squash. Remove seeds; discard. Place squash, cut side down, in 13x9x2-inch baking pan. Cover, bake in a 350-degree oven 45 to 60 minutes or until tender.

Remove squash pulp, leaving a 1/4-inch shell. In a large mixing bowl, combine squash pulp, spinach, 1/2 cup of the cheese, eggs, margarine or butter, bacon, green onion, salt and red pepper. Fill the squash shells with squash mixture. Combine remaining cheese and bread crumbs; sprinkle atop squash. Place squash in same baking pan.* Bake in a 350-degree oven for 25 to 30 minutes or until heated through. Makes 8 side-dish servings.

*Make-ahead directions: Prepare to this point, cover and chill up to 48 hours. Reheat, uncovered, in a 350-degree oven for 45 minutes or until heated through.

WINTER SQUASH PUREE

1 lb. butternut or acorn squash
1/2 cup stock
3/4 tsp. rosemary
2 tsps. sweet butter

If using butternut, peel it, halve it, remove the seeds and cut into equal-size chunks about 1-inch square. Toss the chunks, the stock and the rosemary into a 9-inch glass pie dish and cover with vented plastic wrap. Microwave on full power about five minutes or boil the squash in water for 20 to 25 minutes until tender; drain and pat dry. Let stand for three minutes.

If using acorn squash, halve and seed it, then wrap each half in plastic wrap. Microwave both halves (or boil them) on full power about seven to eight minutes, until tender, rotating the halves midway. Let stand for four minutes, then peel.

Scoop the squash, rosemary and about 3 tablespoons of the stock into a processor and blend until smooth. Add the sweet butter while the motor's running. Serve warm with roast turkey, pheasant or other poultry. Makes 4 servings.

HONEY-BUTTERNUT STIR-FRY

1 lb. butternut squash
2 tbsps. cooking oil
1 tsp. sesame oil
1/2 cup bias-sliced celery
1 clove garlic, minced
1/2 tsp. grated ginger root
1 cup broccoli flowerets
1/2 small onion, thinly sliced and separated into rings
1 tbsp. lemon juice
2 tsps. honey
2 tbsps. sunflower nuts

Peel, seed and slice squash into 1/4-inch slices. Cut slices into small pie-shaped wedges (should have about 2 cups total). In a 10-inch skillet or wok, heat oils. Add squash, celery, garlic and gingerroot; stir-fry 3 minutes. Add broccoli and onion, stir-fry 3 to 4 minutes more or until vegetables are crisp-tender. Combine lemon juice and honey; toss with vegetables. Top with nuts. Serve immediately. Makes 5 to 6 servings.

Cooking With Sunshine

Solar Oven Touted As An Aid To Third World

By Laura Wilkinson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MINNEAPOLIS — A simple box of cardboard, foil and glass is being promoted as a means to free Third World women from the time-consuming search for firewood and get them out of the unhealthy smoke of wood cookfires.

The solar cookers, designed by two Arizona women, are being introduced in the Third World by Pillsbury Co. "We feel the potential of solar cookers is so great that it could truly alleviate some of the global problems," said William H. Sperber, a senior research microbiologist at the food conglomerate.

The United Nations estimates 1.5 billion people are affected by firewood shortages, said Robert Metcalf, a microbiologist at California State University-Sacramento who attended graduate school with Sperber at the University of Wisconsin 20 years ago and is working with Pillsbury.

"They've got a lot of sunshine, but they don't know how to use it," Metcalf said. "It's fun in the United States, it can be very useful, but it's critical in developing countries."

The cooker is an insulated box within a box topped with a glass pane and a reflector that directs sunlight. It can be made out of cardboard or wood, and aluminum foil. Food is cooked in dark, covered metal, glass or ceramic pots.

The temperature peaks at 250-275 degrees, meaning food takes longer to cook than in electric ovens. But Metcalf says users save time by no longer having to collect firewood and by not having to stir the food because of the low heat.

Metcalf, who has been promoting the solar cooker since 1979, was joined by Pillsbury in 1986. He and Sperber have demonstrated it in Africa and South and Central America. Pillsbury is spending more than $100,000 on the program.

Simplicity may be an obstacle to widespread adoption, supporters say.

"It doesn't look as high tech as other things that have been tried," said Chris Flavin, vice president of research at Worldwatch Institute, a private non-profit research group that focuses on global resource issues.

"There's an actual bias in development agencies against anything that's small and decentralized," said Flavin. "They like to support big projects because they're easy to manage."

Flawed cookers produced before the Arizona women designed theirs also have discouraged widespread use. They tipped easily, temporarily blinded users, had reflectors that fell off and were able to cook only one pot of food at a time.

Barbara Kerr of Taylor, Ariz., a nurse, and Sherry Cole of Tempe, a former free-lance writer and neighbor of Kerr's, created the design in the mid-1970s. Since then, Cole said, they've sold about 3,000 kits and cookers ranging from $40 to $275 and several thousand plans, from $1 to $3.75.

Sperber and Pillsbury became involved in 1986 while working in Bolivia with the Freedom from Hunger Foundation, a private, non-profit group, on the problems of lack of firewood, high infant mortality and diarrhea. Metcalf and scientists from Pillsbury's Technology Center have worked to simplify the design so it can be better mass produced and more easily assembled in the field.

By trial and error, Metcalf and his family have developed recipes that work with the cooker. Vegetables, which contain moisture, don't need to be cooked in water, they discovered after one "soggy mess." Chicken can be cooked in three hours but can't be overcooked because the low temperature won't turn moisture in the food to steam, dry out the food and burn it. The normal amount of water is added to dried grains, such as rice, and to beans.

"They're cooking their corn and beans today in Guatemala ... in these types of cookers and really taking control of their lives," he said. "This is what I want to see happen in hundreds of thousands of places around the world."

A. Lots of folks have asked about books lately. We are happy to look them over and give you our opinion. We hope this column has helped to perk your interest in good eating and reading in more detail. "Parents Guide to Nutrition" is from the Boston Children's Hospital and is a readable, common sense guide to eating for all ages. Although geared to children's specific needs, the nutrition education offered in this book can give all ages useful information about eating habits. This is one of the most helpful, comprehensive books on childhood eating that I have seen.

A basic introduction is given describing the nutrients needed for proper growth and energy: protein, carbohydrates, fats, minerals and water. Suggestions are given for meal plans that meet your child's nutritional needs. It is important to remember that children's nutritional needs are very different than adults. The book's authors describe each nutrient in consumer terms. But, they do include a scientific discussion to help you understand the function of the nutrient in the body.

The psychological aspects of food preferences also are discussed. They give some easy-to-follow suggestions on how you can get your child to eat. It is stressed that children learn best when directly involved in a positive experience. For example, let children help in food preparation and in making food choices.

Hints on lunch and "short order" meal preparation are given for working parents. The authors give some hints on healthier fast food choices. The authors give tips about microwave and other preparation methods that help keep the nutrients in your foods. They give tips to save time for the busy parent and child.

Several chapters focus on the problems caused by food-related illnesses such as allergies, obesity, anorexia, bulimia, lactose intolerance, diabetes, sick days and special needs of athletic children. A quiz for parents about the myths of nutrition is quite good. I would suggest you start with the quiz and then read from the beginning of the book. The quiz gives you a good insight on how much you already know. It reminded me of some "old wives tales" that are not correct today.

This is a well-researched, very informative book for anyone interested in nutrition. The authors have done a thorough job.

The Food Composition and Nutrition Tables alone are worth the $9.95 cover price. The authors have included tables on such topics as Recommended Dietary Allowances for children; common sources of high quality protein and of carbohydrates; fiber in selected foods; sugar contents; fat types and sources; cholesterol contents; recommended calorie intake and others.

Americans Pop Vitamins In Record Numbers

By Jean Marbella
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

First came vitamin C, which people popped to stave off the common cold.

Then iron to prevent "tired" blood, calcium to prevent osteoporosis and fish oil capsules and niacin supplements to lower cholesterol.

We have long looked to vitamin and mineral supplements to cure or prevent a whole range of health problems. But never to the extent that we do today. Americans now spend some $2.5 billion a year on vitamin and mineral supplements, up from $328 million 25 years ago.

For all this outlay, though, it appears that many of those pills are going into the wrong mouths.

"We don't have definitive measurements, but the bits and pieces that we do have suggest that those who need them the most aren't getting them," says Elizabeth Yetley, Ph.D., chief of the Food and Drug Administration's clinical nutrition branch.

It is a rich-getting-richer situation. Generally, people with higher incomes, more education and an already nutritious diet are the ones who tend to take vitamins, Ms. Yetley says. The poorer and the less educated — who tend to have less healthy diets — tend not to take vitamins, which could help make up for dietary deficiencies, she says.

The best way, though, to get all the vitamins and minerals you need is from food rather than pills, most experts agree.

First, while it may seem easier to pop a pill every day than to change what you eat, in the long run, dietary changes are more lasting. Few people can get into the habit of taking a pill every day for the rest of their lives.

And secondly, when you eat food rather than just swallow a pill, you are getting other nutrients as well. You may decide to eat broccoli for its beta-carotene or vitamin A — but you also get vitamin C, calcium and fiber as well.

Finally, eating a balanced diet will help prevent you from getting too little of one nutrient or too much of another. It is a rare person who likes liver or spinach so much that he or she will get too much iron, whereas it is relatively easy to take too many iron pills.

Indeed, you can get too much of a good thing when it comes to some vitamins and minerals. The effect of megadosing, though, varies with the nutrient.

Some water-soluble vitamins, for instance, will just wash out of your body, leaving you with nothing more than expensive urine. But with some other vitamins and minerals, the body cannot rid itself of extra supplies, and then toxicity can result. Too much iron, for example, can lead to liver, heart or kidney damage.

Even if toxicity is not a threat, takers of vitamin or mineral supplements also should consider how nutrients react to one another.

"All nutrients interfere with one another," says Dr. Robert P. Heaney, a leading expert on calcium and bone disease who is based at Creighton (Neb.) University. "A large intake of one nutrient can upset the balance of other nutrients."

Fiber, for example, tends to interfere with the absorption of minerals like iron. Calcium also has that same effect on iron. On the other hand, some interactions are positive. Vitamin C, for example, aids in the absorption of iron.

It is hard to keep all the different interactions straight — another reason many experts recommend getting vitamins and minerals from food rather than pills. It is unusual to have a food that has just one nutrient in it, unlike a pill that can just contain iron or vitamin C or some other single nutrient and nothing else.

"A pill is to supplement a diet, not to replace healthy eating," says Nancy Clark, a registered dietitian and Massachusetts-based sports nutritionist. "Take an orange. An orange is more than a vitamin C pill. It's potassium. It's fiber. It's energy. It's folic acid.

"There are 50 things in food that you need. And that's just what's known, what's been identified," she says. "It's naive to think that you're just deficient in one thing. People say, 'I'm iron-deficient' and so they take an iron pill. But if you're deficient in iron, you're probably also deficient in zinc."

Certain groups do tend to have more of a need for vitamins and minerals: pregnant women, for example, the elderly, dieters, vegetarians and heavy-duty exercisers. But just because you belong to one of these groups does not mean you automatically need to head for the drug store.

A 1986 survey of women's eating habits, for example, found that their diets included less than the recommended daily allowance for calcium, iron, folic acid, zinc, magnesium and vitamins B-6 and E, says Howard Riddick, a nutritionist with the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

"Men generally do a little better because they eat more food," Riddick says. Their diets, in a similar survey conducted in 1985, were found deficient to a lesser degree in vitamins B-6 and E, magnesium, folic acid and zinc, he says.

Women, however, may be partially making up for dietary deficits with supplements. Roughly 55 percent of women and 45 percent of men say they take some kind of vitamin supplement, Riddick says.

Elderly Should Take Vitamin Supplements To Balance Their Diets

By Jean Marbella
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

A decrease in eating and exercise coupled with an increase in drugs that potentially can lead to nutritional deficiencies have sent many elderly persons looking to vitamin supplements for a dietary boost.

"We change as we grow older," says Dr. Peter Lamy, assistant dean of geriatrics at the University of Maryland School of Pharmacy. "We get frailer, we get more sedentary. We get more chronic diseases that are treated with drugs that can deplete our nutritional status."

Some 66 percent of the elderly have some sort of chronic disease, Lamy says. And some drugs used to treat cardiac patients, hypertensives and other sufferers can contribute to a loss of vitamins or minerals, he says.

Persons with hypertension, for example, are sometimes treated with diuretics, which can result in a potassium loss.

The elderly also tend to eat less, for several reasons, meaning they have less opportunity to get adequate nutrients.

"Many of them, because of their health, have dietary restrictions," Lamy says. "You can't eat enough under those restrictions to get what you need."

Some elderly do not eat enough fresh produce or meat because of dental problems, others fail to eat enough because of economics, declining activity and metabolism levels or, simply, because decreasing smell and taste sensitivities mean that food just does not taste as good.

Because of the likelihood of nutritional deficiencies, Lamy recommends that the elderly consider taking a multivitamin supplement. And any elderly taking medication should check with health professionals to determine whether the drugs might cause a depletion of certain vitamins or minerals.

Women Need The Most Vitamins

By Jean Marbella
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Pregnancy, dieting, menstruation — these are among the factors that can give women more cause for concern than men when it comes to vitamins and minerals.

Chief among those concerns are iron and calcium deficiencies, and nutrition experts think supplements, in some cases, are probably a good idea when food alone cannot provide those minerals.

Women need more iron than men because of their monthly menstrual periods, which result in an estimated loss of 6 milligrams of iron. As a result, the recommended daily allowance of iron is 18 milligrams for women, 10 milligrams for men.

Some women also have greater calcium needs to help protect against osteoporosis, a loss of bone mass, generally in the elderly, brought on by calcium deficiency. Estrogen-deficient women, such as those past menopause or younger women who diet or exercise to the point they no longer menstruate, need more calcium to protect their bones from osteoporosis. Thin women and those of northern and western European descent are also more likely to lose bone earlier than others.

But while they need more iron and calcium, women tend to get less of it from their diets than men, because they eat less.

"Men drink more milk and eat more food," says Dr. Robert P. Heaney, a Creighton (Neb.) University expert on bone disease. "Calcium is widely distributed in food, so if you eat more food, you're likely to get more calcium."

Aggravating the situation is the fact that some of the most iron- and calcium-rich foods also have unhealthy aspects — high cholesterol, saturated fat or a high number of calories.

Liver contains iron, for example, but it is also high in cholesterol. Red meat is another source of iron; but unless you choose a very lean cut, you are getting saturated fats as well. And, like cholesterol, saturated fat is linked to heart disease.

Iron is found in legumes, though, as well as leafy green vegetables. But iron is absorbed about five times better by the body when it comes from meat rather than plant sources. Adding a vitamin C source or a little bit of meat or poultry to the meal, though, can boost the absorption rate of plant-derived iron sources. Drinking fruit juice with an iron supplement does the same.

Calcium also has its good and not-so-good sources. It is found in milk and dairy products, but some are high in fat. Experts recommend low-fat milks and yogurts. A benefit of getting calcium from milk is that it contains vitamin D, which aids in calcium absorption.

Some products like orange juice are being fortified with calcium and can be helpful to women who do not drink enough milk or eat enough calcium-rich foods, Heaney says.

But because it is hard to get the 1,000 to 1,500 milligrams of calcium recommended daily for post-menopausal women, supplements have become popular.

"Twenty-five percent of women are getting less than 300 milligrams a day," Heaney says. "Clearly those people are deficient and need more calcium. Half of the women are getting less than 500 milligrams."

For women who do take calcium supplements, Heaney recommends starting with a chewable tablet. "So many of the swallowable ones are so poorly formulated, they don't break up in the stomach," he says. "So if you chew one, at least you know it's disintegrated."

Dr. Ralph Shangraw of the University of Maryland School of Pharmacy agrees that many calcium supplements on the market do not dissolve quickly enough in the stomach to be absorbed properly. You can test calcium pills yourself, he says, by dropping one in 6 ounces of room-temperature vinegar. With occasional stirring, it should disintegrate in a half-hour. Otherwise, you might have a pill that is passing too quickly through your body without being fully absorbed.

"After that, I'd consider price," Heaney says. "Tums (antacid) are a good source — they're the same chemical, but cheaper.

Old-Fashioned Vitamins Aid Athletic Performance

By Jean Marbella
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

While some athletes look to steroids and amino acids to boost performances, what they really might need are just good old-fashioned vitamins.

Most important to the athletic are the B-complex vitamins that play roles in the metabolism of energy, says Dr. Mona Shangold, director of Georgetown University Hospital's sports gynocology center.

These nutrients — thiamine (B-1), riboflavin (B-2), niacin (B-3) and panthothenic acid (B-5) — are readily available from food sources such as whole grains, enriched breads, dairy products, nuts and liver.

Athletes may need more of these vitamins than their counterparts on couches, but there is no evidence that athletes as a group have been found deficient in these vitamins, Shangold says.

Athletic people — especially endurance athletes — also need to consider what is lost in sweating, including the minerals magnesium, iron and zinc, says registered dietitian Nancy Clark, author of "The Athlete's Kitchen" and a sports nutritionist in Brookline, Mass.

Most athletes can get adequate supplies of these minerals through their diet, especially because they can afford higher caloric intakes.

"The more a person exercises, the more (he) can eat," Ms. Clark says. "As long as they're eating and making halfway decent food choices, they shouldn't need supplements."

The athletes who might risk vitamin and mineral deficiencies are those who exercise in conjunction with counting calories to lose weight, experts say. Cutting calories also could mean cutting nutrients.

Wrestlers trying to make a certain weight class, ballet dancers and other weight-conscious athletes might need to take vitamin and mineral supplements, Ms. Clark says.

"If they're consuming less than 1,500 calories a day, they might need a supplement," she says. "Or, they might look for enriched breakfast cereals."

Female athletes face a double whammy. A recent study of cross-country runners by Florida State University researchers found that women not only lost more iron through perspiration than men (even though they tend to sweat less), they also tended to get less iron in their diets to begin with. As a result, the researchers recommend that women runners who don't eat enough iron-rich foods consider taking an iron supplement.

Food A Large Part Of Author's Italian Heritage

By Lynn Williams
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Would it surprise you to learn that Lorenza de'Medici is actually a down-to-earth person?

Someone with that name, one has to figure, must live in a palazzo in Florence, buying Botticellis and advising popes and basking in the glow of the most famous name in Italian history.

Despite the curiosity that her ancestry inspires — she is a descendant of Lorenzo the Magnificent, through a daughter who married a Medici cousin — Ms. de'Medici, author of the recent "Italy the Beautiful Cookbook," is a champion of unpretentious home-style cuisine, with a manner as straightforward and no-fuss as fresh Italian bread.

Food is as much a Medici heritage as art or statecraft. Champions of Italian cooking credit Catherine de'Medici, Queen of Henri II, with giving France not only the fork, but also the art of haute cuisine.

"I think she was 12 when she married the King of France, and she brought her own cooks," says Ms. de'Medici, who was in Washington recently on a talk-and-cook publicity tour for her book, which was released in October. "She considered the French a rough sort of people, not refined like the Italians."

De'Medici came by her love for fine food through her genes, arguably, but certainly through her family's cook.

"She was with us for 30 years," Ms. de'Medici says. "She was an excellent cook who could do the most refined French cuisine or very simple Italian cuisine. She was really my teacher."

When many authors set out to write a cookbook they have to seek out new material, but for Ms. de'Medici, who also served as Italian Vogue's food editor for five years, it was mostly a process of whittling her repertoire of thousands of recipes down to a manageable 250. She opted for a well-balanced selection of regional classics, both those that were recognized favorites of Americans, and others that were more obscure.

"Most people here are not used to things like sweetbreads, or oxtails, or recipes that call for pork liver, but we use them a lot. They are delicious. I wanted to introduce American people to these things," she says.

Her recipes are not difficult — no special techniques are needed — and they are not lengthy.

"I hate to write and teach the long recipes," she says. "When I see a recipe longer than, let's say, 20 lines, I don't do it. When I do recipes of classical things that are very complicated, I simplify a few things. I think you can get the same results by simplifying. Otherwise it's boring. Cooking must be enjoyed!"

Italian cooking is also a boon to the budget-minded, she says. And not only the traditionally economical pasta dishes. A little Italian magic applied to a cheap cut of meat can produce wonderful results.

Tuscan cooking, as Italian writer Giuseppe Prezzolini put it, is "light, lean, tasty and full of character and fragrance, created for people of lively intellect who do not wish to sit around and grow fat."

These Tuscan recipes from the "Italy the Beautiful Cookbook" are not for people in a hurry. But they are very appropriate for a late autumn or winter day, when a warm kitchen and a house full of inviting aromas are most welcome.

RIBOLLITA
(TWICE-COOKED SOUP)

1¼ lbs. fresh haricot beans, shelled (or dried haricot beans, soaked overnight)
½ cup extra virgin olive oil
½ onion, finely chopped
1 carrot, finely chopped
1 celery stalk, finely chopped
2 garlic cloves, finely chopped
3 oz. pancetta or rindless bacon
1 lb. black or Savoy cabbage, chopped
10 cups broth (stock)
1 tbsp. fresh thyme
12 thin slices of firm, coarse-textured bread
Salt and freshly-ground pepper

Simmer the beans in water just to cover over very low heat for 1½ hours. Put a little more than half of them through a sieve, or puree in a food processor.

Heat 2 tablespoons oil in a large saucepan over moderate heat. Add the onion, carrot, celery, garlic and pancetta and cook for a few minutes. Add the cabbage and cook, stirring, for a minute or two. Add the broth and thyme and bring to boil, then simmer, covered, over very low heat for 2 hours.

Add the bean puree and the whole beans and simmer, uncovered, for another 10 minutes. Pour the soup over the bread slices in a flameproof casserole and set aside, covered, in a cool place.

The next day, bring the soup to boil and simmer for 2 minutes. Pour into soup bowls. Add the rest of the oil, and salt and pepper to taste. Serve hot. Serves six.

PORK WITH ROSEMARY

1 fresh rosemary sprig
6 garlic cloves, crushed
Salt and freshly ground pepper
1 chine of pork (loin section with bones), about 2½ pounds
2 tbsps. extra virgin olive oil
1 tbsp. butter
½ cup dry white wine

Finely chop the rosemary leaves. Mix rosemary and garlic with salt and plenty of pepper. Rub the meat well with this mixture and tie it securely to the bone. Place the meat in a Dutch oven or aluminum saucepan with the oil and butter. Bake in a preheated 400-degree oven for 1½ hours, turning frequently.

Untie the meat and remove the bone. Arrange meat in slices on a serving dish. Pour wine into the pan and bring to boil, scraping up browned bits and season to taste. Serve this sauce with the meat. Serves six.

SCHIACCIATA
(TUSCAN FLAT BREAD)

½ oz. fresh yeast or 1 envelope (¼ oz.) dry yeast
½ cup tepid water
4 cups bread flour or all-purpose flour
3 tbsps. extra virgin olive oil
Leaves of 1 large fresh rosemary sprig
Coarse salt

Dissolve the yeast in tepid water and let stand for 10 minutes. Heap the flour on a board and make a well in the center. Pour the dissolved yeast into this and add sufficient water to make a soft dough. Knead the dough until very smooth and elastic, at least 10 minutes. Form it into a ball. Sprinkle the inside of a large bowl with flour. Place dough in bowl and cover with a clean cloth. Let stand in a warm place until doubled in volume.

Knead the dough again briefly. Roll out on a lightly floured baking sheet into a circle about ⅜ inch thick. Let rise again for 30 minutes. Brush the top with oil and sprinkle with rosemary and coarse salt. Bake in a preheated 450-degree oven until golden brown. Let cool slightly before serving. Serves six.

ALMOND BISCOTTI

2¼ cups unbleached all purpose (plain) flour
¾ cup superfine sugar
1½ tsps. baking powder
¼ tsp. salt
2 eggs
1 egg yolk
⅔ cup unblanched almonds, chopped
1 egg yolk plus 1 tbsp. milk for glaze

Mix flour, sugar, baking powder, salt, whole eggs and the yolk and blend to form a smooth dough. Knead in the almonds.

Divide the dough into 4 parts and form each into a cigar-shaped log. Heat oven to 450 degrees. Flour a baking sheet and place the logs on it, well apart. Bake until golden, about 20 minutes. Cut the logs into 1-inch slices while still warm. Separate the slices, and cook for another 5 minutes. Cool on racks before serving. Store in an airtight container. Serves six to eight.

North Carolinian's Award-Winning Egg Dish A Spicy Original

By Nancy Byal
BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS

Cross a tostada and a pizza and what do you get? Egg Pizza Ole, says Karen Berger of Jamestown, N.C. Karen's colorful, zesty dish won the $4,000 first prize in the junior division of the American Egg Board's 1988 National Egg Cooking Contest.

Karen liked the idea of topping eggs pizza-style with her favorite Mexican ingredients but wanted something that would be easy to eat. So she made the eggs into an omelet and added a flour tortilla base that can enfold the filling like a sandwich.

To receive a copy of the 1988 National Egg Cooking Contest Winning Recipes, send a stamped, self-addressed, business-sized envelope to: The Incredible Edible Egg 25, P.O. Box 755, Park Ridge, IL 60068-0755.

EGG PIZZA OLE

2 eggs
1 tbsp. water
¼ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. chili powder
1 tbsp. margarine or butter
One 10-inch flour tortilla
⅓ cup chopped tomato
2 tbsps. sliced green onion
2 tbsps. canned chopped green chili peppers, drained
2 tbsps. sliced pitted ripe olives
¼ cup shredded Monterey Jack cheese (1 oz.)
⅛ tsp. dried oregano, crushed
Avocado slices (optional)
Salsa (optional)

In a small bowl beat together eggs, water, salt and chili powder until blended. In a 10-inch omelet pan or skillet over medium heat, heat butter until just hot enough to sizzle a drop of water. Pour in egg mixture. Cook until eggs are set but still moist, about 3 to 4 minutes. As eggs cook, lift cooked edges with spatula and tilt pan so uncooked mixture can run beneath. Remove from heat.

Place tortilla on greased 12-inch pizza pan or ovenproof serving plate. Top with cooked egg round. Sprinkle tomato, onion, chili peppers and olives over top. Sprinkle with cheese and oregano. Bake in 350 degree F oven 8 to 10 minutes or until cheese is bubbly and edges of tortilla are crisp. Garnish with avocado slices and serve with salsa, if desired. Makes 1 serving.

with Sun-Dried Tomatoes, which can be prepared one day in advance, or Sesame-Maple Chicken Wings, which can be marinated the day before. The recipes are provided by Bon Appetit.

MEAT LOAF
WITH SUN-DRIED TOMATOES

One 8-oz. jar sun-dried tomatoes packed in oil, drained (¼ cup oil reserved) and chopped
1 lb. onions, finely diced
3 celery stalks, finely diced
6 garlic cloves, minced
2 tsps. dried basil, crumbled
2 tsps. dried oregano, crumbled
2 tsps. dried thyme, crumbled
3 lbs. ground beef (not lean)
2 lbs. sweet Italian sausages, casings removed
1 cup minced fresh Italian parsley
4 eggs, beaten to blend
½ cup fine dry bread crumbs
1 tbsp. freshly ground pepper
Sixteen 1-inch-long onion strips
Fresh Italian parsley sprigs
French bread baguette slices
Garlic Mayonnaise (recipe below)

Position rack in center of oven and preheat to 350 degrees F. Heat reserved oil in heavy medium skillet over medium heat. Mix in onions, celery, garlic, basil, oregano and thyme. Cover and cook until vegetables are very tender, stirring occasionally, about 12 minutes. Transfer to large bowl. Cool slightly.

Mix beef and sausage into vegetable mixture. Add tomatoes, parsley, eggs, bread crumbs and pepper and mix well. Press mixture into two oval-shaped loaves in large shallow baking dish. Bake until meat thermometer inserted in center of loaves registers 160 degrees F, pouring off accumulated fat as necessary, about 1½ hours. Cool slightly in dish. (Can be prepared 1 day ahead. Cool. Wrap tightly and refrigerate.)

Set loaves on platter. Place onion strips on top to resemble football. Garnish with parsley. Serve warm or at room temperature with garlic mayonnaise and bread. Makes 20 servings

GARLIC MAYONNAISE

3 egg yolks, room temperature
3 tbsps. (or more) fresh lemon juice
3 garlic cloves
1 tbsp. Dijon mustard
¾ tsp. salt
1 cup corn oil or other vegetable oil
⅔ cup olive oil
Freshly ground pepper
2 tbsps. chopped and drained sun-dried tomatoes packed in oil (optional)

Blend yolks, lemon juice, garlic, mustard and salt in processor. With machine running, gradually add oils through feed tube in very slow steady stream and process until thickened. Season generously with pepper. Transfer to bowl. Mix in tomatoes if desired. Taste, adding more lemon juice if desired.

Note: This recipe can be prepared 2 days ahead. Cover and refrigerate. Makes about 2 cups.

SESAME-MAPLE
CHICKEN WINGS

½ cup pure maple syrup
¼ cup low-sodium soy sauce
3 tbsps. Oriental sesame oil
1 tbsp. chili oil
1 tbsp. coarsely chopped and peeled fresh ginger
3 garlic cloves
4 lbs. chicken wings, cut at joints, end tips discarded
2 tbsps. sesame seeds
Green onion tops, 2 inches in length, cut into brushes and crisped in ice water (optional)

Combine first 6 ingredients in processor or blender and puree. Place chicken wings in large bowl. Pour puree over. Cover and refrigerate at least 2 hours. (Can be prepared 1 day ahead.)

Position rack in top third of oven and preheat to 375 degrees F. Remove chicken from marinade, reserve marinade. Arrange chicken on large jellyroll pan and bake 25 minutes. Turn chicken over and bake for 15 minutes. Brush chicken with half of marinade and bake 7 minutes. Turn chicken over and brush with remaining marinade. Sprinkle with sesame seeds and bake until chicken and sesame seeds brown, about 7 minutes.

Transfer chicken to platter. Garnish with onion brushes and serve. Makes about 40.

Canned Cuisine Is As Close As Your Cupboard

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — It's easy to plan an elegant dinner party, if you know a few professional shortcuts. One suggestion: a well-stocked cupboard, for spontaneous as well as planned entertaining.

Linda Lee Shiosaki, chef at McCormick and Schmick's Restaurant in Seattle, says, "I always carry a grocery list with me and make it an ongoing project to keep a well-laden pantry.

"Keeping a variety of canned products on hand, such as olives, clams, water chestnuts, artichoke hearts and bottoms, mushrooms, tomato products and various fruits, makes it easy to prepare eye-appealing hors d'oeuvres and desserts."

At Blue Mesa, a popular southwestern-style restaurant in Chicago, Chef Joe Cozzi finds it easy to make festive dishes using a variety of canned items.

Says Cozzi, "At home, I create all kinds of dips and sauces using high-quality canned chilis, sliced and whole ripe olives, olive oil and salsa. They're ready to use, right out of the can, so I can spend less time chopping and dicing, and more time with my guests."

"Garnishes can turn a very simple dish into something quite elegant," says David Bromely, a chef in Memphis, Tenn. "Surround a favorite poultry dish with canned spiced pears or another fruit for an attractive entree."

Color is key for Elizabeth B. Terry, chef and owner of Elizabeth on 37th in Savannah, Ga.

"Buy a variety of contrasting colored vegetables, such as carrots, asparagus, onions and tomatoes, and arrange them beautifully on each plate next to the entree," she suggests. "Not only does this create a naturally attractive dish, but you'll increase the nutritional value of the meal."

Most chefs agree that the key to creating a sophisticated, savory meal is having everything in place, in front of you, before you begin. They also suggest setting your dining room or buffet table attractively several days before the party, if possible.

Carolyn Buster, chef and owner of The Cottage in Calumet City, Ind., says "95 percent of the work involved in planning a dinner party can be accomplished days before the party, leaving time to socialize with guests. Choose dishes that can be prepared ahead of time and need only to be reheated or arranged on each plate when your guests arrive."

Buster advises against preparing a souffle or deep-fried foods because they require too much attention during the party.

The next time you entertain, try Buster's recipe for Caponata. She suggests serving this appetizer with toast points, canned artichoke bottoms, zucchini slices or celery.

CAPONATA

1½ lbs. eggplant
Lemon juice and salt
¾ to 1 cup olive oil
1 cup each finely diced onions, celery and red bell peppers
2 cups canned, seeded, chopped tomatoes
¼ cup canned tomato sauce
1 tbsp. anchovies, mashed
½ cup chopped green olives
4 tbsps. sugar
½ to ¾ cup red wine vinegar
Salt
Garlic powder
1 tbsp. freshly ground black pepper
2 tbsps. capers, rinsed
¼ cup canned, chopped black olives

Dice unpeeled eggplant, sprinkle with lemon juice, then generously sprinkle with salt. Let stand in a colander for 15 to 20 minutes. Rinse thoroughly, then squeeze all moisture out with a towel.

Meanwhile, place half of olive oil in a large skillet. Add onions and saute until transparent, but not browned. Add celery and red peppers and cook another 10 to 15 minutes. Heat remaining olive oil until hot. Add eggplant and cook, stirring pan frequently, until golden brown. Add onion-celery mixture to skillet along with tomatoes, sauce, anchovy puree, green olives, sugar and vinegar. Season with additional salt, garlic powder and black pepper. Simmer mixture, stirring frequently for about 20-30 minutes. Mixture will reduce to a relish consistency. Remove from heat, stir in capers and cool.

CANNED FOOD MONTH

The Canned Food Information Council, which celebrates February as Canned Food Month, says canned foods can be part of many simple, yet elegant meals.

More than 1,500 foods are available in cans. Among the top-selling canned foods: soup, tuna, canned pasta, canned corn, canned beans and pork & beans; canned green beans; canned tomatoes; evaporated condensed milk; tomato sauce; and applesauce.

Many canned foods come in low-sodium and no-salt-added varieties, and canned fruits are available packed in their own juices or in light syrup.

Suggested foods to have on hand for a well-stocked pantry: fruit juices and drinks; condensed milks; canned fruits and vegetables, including tomatoes and tomato products; pie fillings; canned pastas and other specialty foods; canned meats; broths, soups and gravies; a variety of beans.

Canned Foods For Sauces

Gregg Shiosaki, chef at the Rainier Bank Executive Dining Room in Seattle, uses canned tomato products as the base for many of his sauces.

"Canned tomatoes are of high quality that is very difficult to find fresh, especially year-round," he says.

Jerry McClellan, chef at the Atchafalaya River Cafe in Houston, also uses canned products in preparing sauces.

CHINESE CAJUN SAUCE

One 15-oz. can pineapple rings
Eight 8-oz. chicken breasts
1 tbsp. soy sauce
¼ lb. bacon, chopped, cooked until crispy
1 cup canned carrots, drained
1 yellow onion, chopped
2 tsps. chopped garlic
½ tsp. thyme
1 bay leaf
2 cups Burgundy wine
Two 15-oz. cans beef broth
¼ tsp. black pepper
1 cup crushed pineapple
2 tbsps. cornstarch

Strain juice from pineapple rings. Marinate eight 8-ounce chicken breasts in juice plus 1 tablespoon soy sauce for 3-4 hours (no longer). Combine all remaining ingredients, except cornstarch and pineapple rings, in a saucepan and bring to a boil. Thicken with 2 tablespoons cornstarch and let simmer for 10 minutes. Dip canned pineapple rings in butter and put on grill (or broil in oven) for 1-2 minutes. Serve grilled chicken or tuna over pineapple rings and top with sauce.
