Pitt Lawmakers Seek Funding For Local Projects

Regional Center, ECU Library Key Items

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Pitt County lawmakers have filed a bill asking the General Assembly to provide $15 million in funding for the first phase of a regional activities center in Greenville.

Rep. Ed Warren of Greenville said the delegation of legislators has agreed to move forward with a package of bills requesting $20 million for a new library at East Carolina University, $8 million for land acquisition at the main campus and the medical school and $15 million for the conference and convention center.

The convention complex would be the first phase of the regional activities center, and an exhibition hall and a sports arena would be added later as the second and third phases of the project, Warren said.

Janice Faulkner, director of ECU's Regional Development Institute, headed a feasibility study concerning the activities center. Once all three phases are in place, it is projected that the facility will generate $25 million a year for the community, she said.

Warren, Rep. Walter B. Jones Jr. of Farmville and Rep. Gene Rogers of Williamston introduced the bills Thursday in the N.C. House of Representatives. Sen. Tom Taft of Greenville and Sen. R.L. "Bob" Martin of Bethel introduced companion bills in the state Senate. The proposals request the funding over the next two years.

The budget request from the president of the University of North Carolina system included $12.5 million for the activities center, Warren said, but it would require matching local funds. In previous sessions, the General Assembly has funded comparable centers at Western Carolina University, N.C. State University and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill without requiring local governments to supply funds, Warren said. Therefore he will push for a similar deal for Greenville.

The Pitt County legislative delegation is scheduled to meet with ECU officials within the next two weeks to discuss the university's needs, Taft said, and UNC System President C.D. Spangler is also set to meet with lawmakers and ECU officials on Feb. 13.

The total cost of the library, which is the university's No. 1 priority, will be $24.4 million, said Cliff Moore, vice chancellor at ECU in charge of business affairs. The university is also requesting $5.4 million for a new administrative building, $4.2 million for renovations of Memorial Gymnasium, $2.4 million for an addition to the nursing building and $6.7 million for an addition to the medical school's vivarium, which is a facilty used to raise animals used in research.

The General Assembly appropriated $500,000 last year for land acquisition for the activities center, but Moore said he did not know whether a site had been selected. He said the sports arena would likely include about 12,000 seats.

Ms. Faulkner said the total cost of the regional activities center is projected to be about $38 million, and there are a number of suitable sites in the area. Any site would need ample space for parking, access to roadways, nearby lodging facilities and nearby amenities such as shopping areas and restaurants.

"You can go in almost any direction and find (a site) that would fit most of those criteria. We're in a

Bush Plays Tour Guide For Guests

WASHINGTON — President Bush said on his first day in the Oval Office Saturday he is prepared to respond in kind to any acts of good will by those holding Americans hostage, but will make no concessions "to free those precious lives."

"People in the past facilitated the release of our citizens, and I'd love to see that happen again, and I won't — and I won't forget it," if it does, Bush declared.

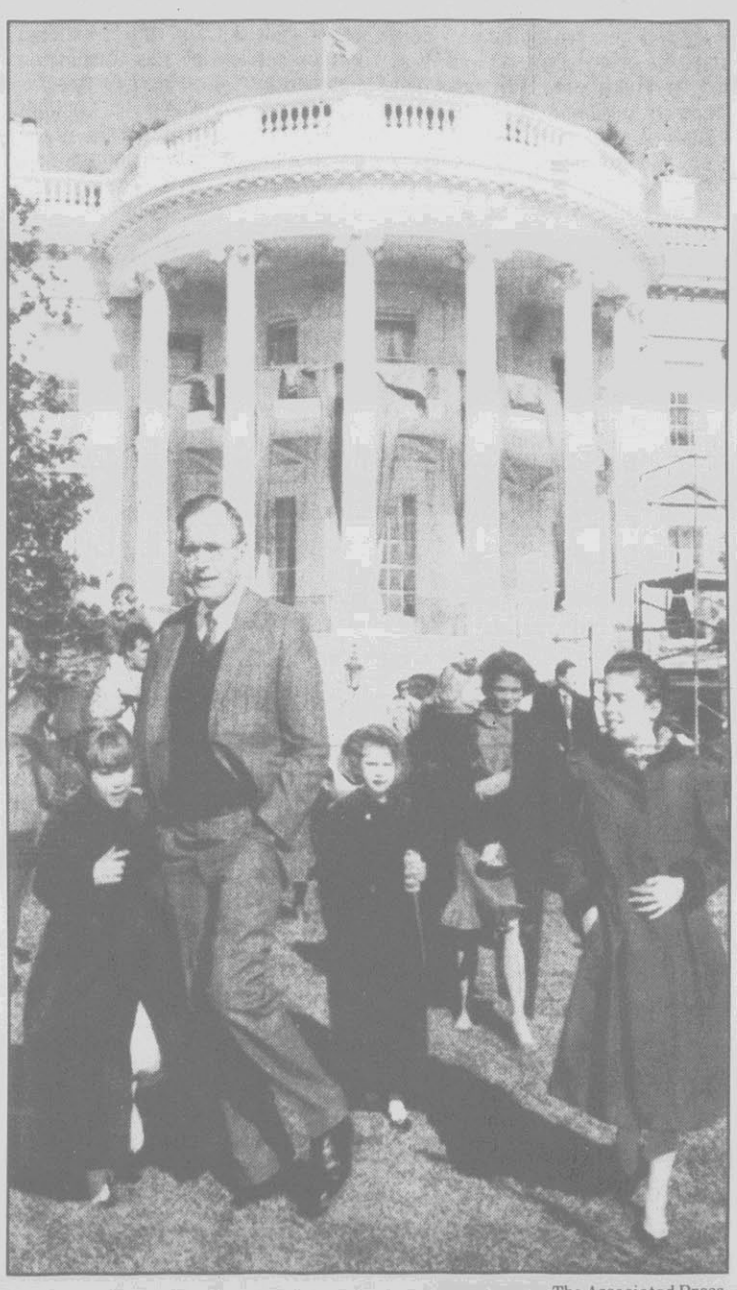

In a free-wheeling exchange with reporters, the new president also said he intends to meet with congressional leaders Tuesday to discuss the government's spending deficit, and has asked to address a joint session of Congress Feb. 9. Bush hinted that would be a more specific call to action than what he termed a "thematic" inaugural address on Friday.

"Stay tuned. Feb. 9th, we'll have something a little different, if that's the date that's settled on," he said.

After a night of celebration at 11 inaugural balls, Bush and his wife Barbara were up early to open the doors of the White House to 4,500 ordinary Americans, many of whom had stood in line for hours in bitter cold for a special tour and a chance to stroll the South Lawn.

It was the first "open house" at the executive mansion since William Howard Taft held a public reception 80 years ago. But it was hardly

West Germany Pulls Diplomats Out Of Kabul

By Maureen Johnson

KABUL, Afghanistan — West Germany's diplomatic staff left Kabul on Saturday under orders from the Bonn government, and Tass said the Soviet Union began an airlift of emergency food supplies to this beleaguered capital.

The West German Foreign Ministry said it told its three diplomats in Kabul to leave because of fears of worsening economic conditions and increased violence as Soviet soldiers leave Afghanistan and its civil war.

Juergen Chrobog, chief ministry spokesman, said the diplomats and their families left the city Saturday. He said the embassy would function "on a reduced status" with a small local staff.

Western diplomatic sources in Kabul, however, said the embassy was closed. That would make it the first foreign mission in Kabul to shut down amid concerns about an economic blockade and possible blood bath following the Red Army's departure.

Local Fans Plan Super Bowl Fun

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

All the Super Bowl pregame hoopla, point-spread speculations and position-by-position player analyses come to an end at 5 p.m. Sunday.

That's the scheduled kickoff time for Super Bowl XXIII, featuring the AFC champion Cincinnati Bengals and the NFC winning San Francisco 49ers.

Approximately 75,000 people are expected to witness professional sport's premier event at Miami's Joe Robbie Stadium, while millions more watch the televised contest in the United States and countries all over the world.

Greenville gridiron followers will be glued to their television sets late Sunday afternoon and the sole topic of conversation Monday at work will undoubtedly be the foibles, heroics and perhaps even the shuffles during Sunday's game.

Many local business operators are planning to present the Super Bowl to patrons while many area sports fans are planning their own super celebrations.

"We're going to have a blowout," said Steve Donahue, manager and owner of Professor O'Cooles Eating and Drinking Saloon on Greenville Boulevard.

Donahue says this is the fourth straight year of presenting the Super Bowl at the restaurant, which offers the game on three 25-inch televisions along with a 42-inch wide-screen set.

We'll have different food specials each quarter, free popcorn and prize givaways," he said. "It's just going to be a real good time."

The Reagan Years

By Stuart Savage
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Americans would be better off if President George Bush does not enjoy the kind of popularity experienced by Ronald Reagan, an East Carolina University political science professor suggested Friday, shortly before Bush took the oath of office as the nation's leader.

Dr. Tinsley Yarbrough, an expert on U.S. politics, said, "I believe that because of Reagan's basic popularity with the people, the people of the nation have been willing to overlook a number of very serious and growing problems ... environmental problems, the enormous deficit and the growing status of the United States as a debtor nation.

"I hope that President Bush will not enjoy the kind of popularity that insulated President Reagan from having to deal with those problems," Yarbrough said. "It seems to me that Reagan, apart from his issue positions, has been so popular that

Geologist Says Pamlico Has Toxin 'Hot Spots'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, N.C. — The Pamlico River has at least five "hot spots" where heavy metals and other toxic elements run 25 times above normal, including an area near an abandoned pesticide dump federal officials are cleaning up, an East Carolina researcher says.

Marine geologist Stanley R. Riggs said Kennedy Creek, a Pamlico tributary, heads the list of hot spots. The Environmental Protection Agency has uncovered 2,000 tons of contaminated soil and buried pesticides from a legal dump used by FCX Inc. a quarter-mile from the creek.

"We started calling it Nasty Creek," said Riggs, who spent last summer taking samples of the river bottom in the first comprehensive study of the metal content in the river sediment.

"We found sort of what we predicted," Riggs told the Winston-Salem Journal. "The Pamlico is not a Boston Harbor, but there are some problem spots related to man's activities. They may very well be connected to these fish and disease problems and the water problems in the system."

Fish and crab disease have plagued the river for some time. Explosions of algal growth and episodes of oxygen-depleted water have been responsible for numerous fish kills over the years.

Riggs took more than 150 samples

Eight Arrested At Anti-Abortion Rally

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAPEL HILL — Eight people, including a local pastor, were arrested Saturday morning during a Chapel Hill anti-abortion protest a day before the 16th anniversary of the U.S. Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion, police said.

All but one were released on written promise to stay away from the Triangle Women's Health Center before their trial is over. A secured bond of $300 was set for Mark Yavarone, a graduate student at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, because he refused to sign the promise, officials said.

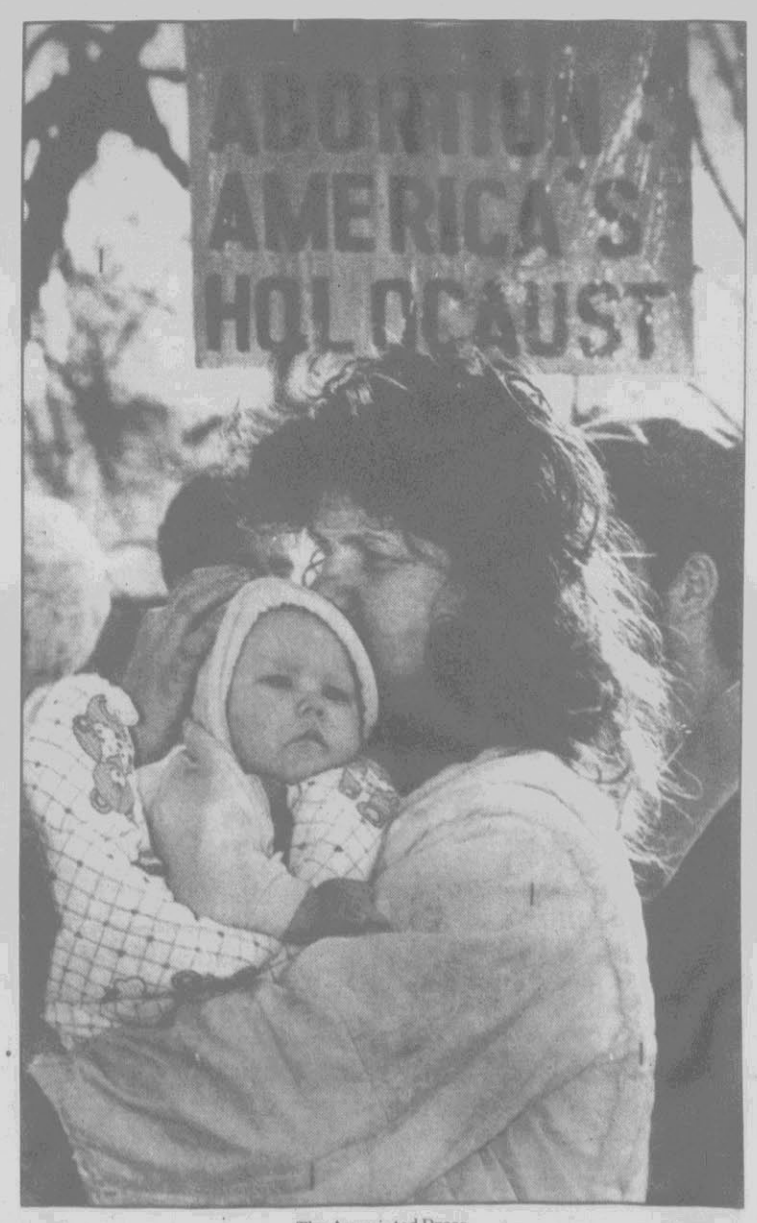

The 1973 Roe vs. Wade abortion case has attracted attention lately because the court recently agreed to hear a Missouri case that could reopen the issue.

The eight protestors approached the doors of the clinic in twos, ignoring repeated orders to leave by Chapel Hill police officers and Bill Brenner Jr., son of clinic owner William Brenner Sr.

Included in those charged with second-degree trespassing was Ronald Alan Lewis of Carrboro, pastor of Maranatha Christian Church in Research Triangle Park.

The protestors did not struggle as police carried them into vehicles for wonderful position to build one here in Pitt County," Ms. Faulkner said.

The study also revealed that there are about 750,000 people within a 50-mile radius of Greenville, she said, which is enough to sustain such a facility.

In Gov. Jim Martin's budget proposal, he set aside $47.5 million for building projects for all 16 schools in the UNC system. The Pitt County legislative package filed Thursday would take a large hunk from that total, so it appears money will be tight, Warren said.

"Even then, we're going to have to work to get that much out of the $47 million, because there are 16 schools in the system," Warren said.

He said ECU's library is ranked 15th among the UNC system institutions, therefore it will is the primary target for funding. Moore said the new library, which will be larger than the existing facility, is to be built as an addition to the old structure.

Moore said he had no indication of how much money the General Assembly would agree to allocate ECU.

"Your guess is as good as mine ...," he said. "(Watch and wait) is all we can do. We've got our name in the pot. What they fund is up to the legislators."

With Democrats holding a majority in the Senate and House, Moore said the final budget may not resemble Martin's proposal.

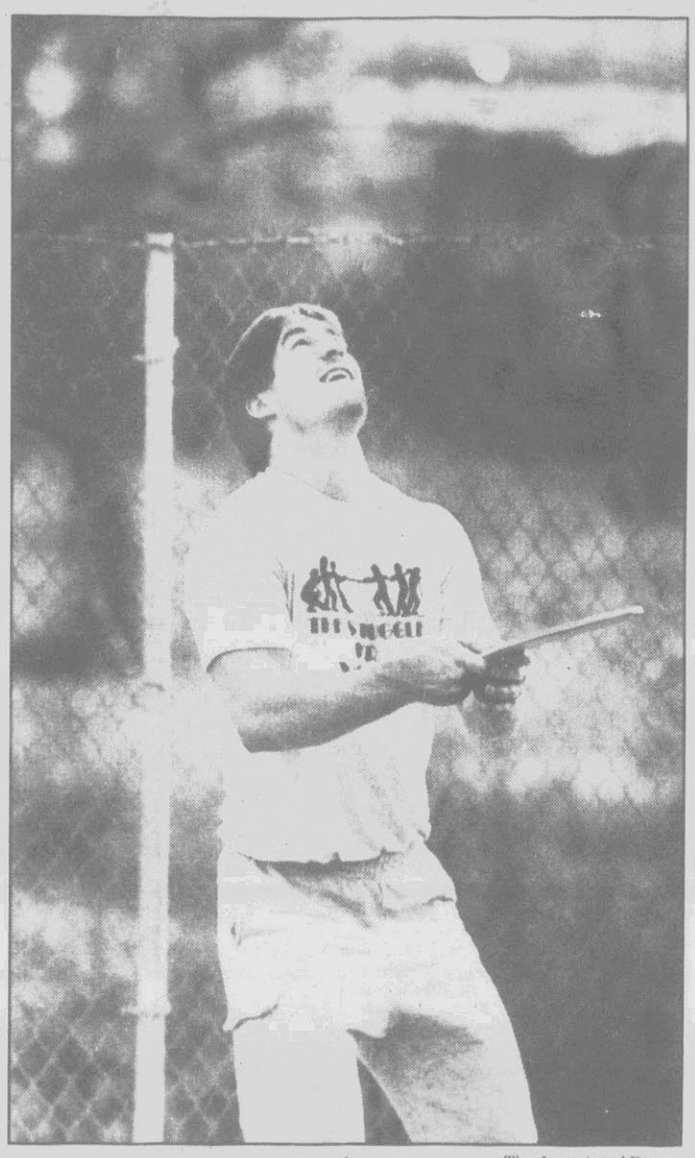

"They're going to do some carving, some adding and some massaging before it comes out," he said.

Taft said he felt optimistic additional money would become available.

"Sen. Martin and I are hoping on the Senate side that we'll be able to help East Carolina with its capital needs, in spite of the shortage of funds this year," Taft said.

"The library is my first priority for the university," he said. "We filed bills (Thursday) for the funding of the new library ... land acquisition and the regional activities center .... Even though money is short, there will be money for capital projects for the university. We're hoping there will be more than (Martin's proposal of $47.5 million) for the university system ....

"And we're getting good support from (Dare County) Sen. (Marc) Basnight and (Durham County) Sen. (Kenneth) Royall," he said. Basnight and Royall head key Appropriations Committees.

Bush Serves As White House Tour Guide

reminiscent of the most famous such occurrence, when thousands of Tennessee frontiersmen in muddy boots followed Andrew Jackson through the doors in 1829 and virtually trashed the place.

After personally escorting 15 tourists, picked at random, through his new home, Bush took his place at the Oval Office desk occupied by Ronald Reagan for the last year years. There, he found a personal note left behind by his mentor, inscribed on joke-shop stationery which bore the printed heading: "Don't Let the Turkeys Get You Down."

Beneath it was Reagan's handwriting: "Dear George. You'll have moments when you want to use this particular stationery. Well, go to it. George, I treasure the memories we share and wish you all the very best. You'll be in my prayers. God Bless you and Barbara. I'll miss our Thursday lunches. Ron."

Showing the note to reporters, Bush said none of those assembled should take the "turkey" reference personally. "It is a broad, ecumenical statement," he grinned.

Q: How does it feel to be president?

A: It feels just fine. It's setting in now after the glamour and excitement of the inauguration. It's a great joy to have my mother here, the leader of our family.

Later, he declared "It's the most exciting day of my life so far. It just is wonderful. Everything's been perfect. Everything's so beautiful."

Bush said, too, he would soon respond to a "generous letter" from Soviet Leader Mikhail Gorbachev. In the letter, Gorbachev told Bush he hoped his term would bring "stable and diverse development of relations between our countries," and that they could work together "to eliminate the threat of war."

Bush's schedule included an intelligence briefing from National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft and Chief of Staff John Sununu, an appearance at a luncheon for the financial organizers of his $25 million inaugural, and a second night of formal revelry, including a "Black Tie 'n' Boots" ball for his fellow Texans. His official inaugural calendar ends Sunday with a national prayer service at the Washington Cathedral.

Bush acknowledged he couldn't find his way around the White House his first night, after he and the first lady returned from the long round of balls. "I got lost trying to find a couple of kids' rooms, yeah," he chuckled.

Along with his mother, five of Bush's children, their spouses and 10 grandchildren shared the first night in the mansion. After a luncheon for the entire Bush clan in town — 240 relatives in all — the kin scattered.

"It's a great joy to have our kids over there (in the living quarters) last night," said Bush. "One got sick, so I had the duty at about 6 o'clock this morning — Ellie LeBlond. I pumped half a Tylenol into her and she's looking good. Ate two pancakes. What you'd call a rapid recovery."

Bush expressed special feeling, too, for the thousands who stood outside the White House, in sub-freezing temperatures, for a chance to tour it at the new president's invitation. The White House is routinely opened for limited tours by the public, but this was different.

"I must say that was kind of interesting," said Bush. "I was saying to myself, 'Now what does it take for somebody to stay awake all night to come into the White House? What kind of people are they? Well, they were all different kinds of people. A lot of kids. A lot of young people. Some older.

"The common thread was that they felt they were lucky to be there, which amazed me in a sense because I thought we were so lucky to have people that would care that much."

On the hostage issue, Bush was asked if his inaugural address reflected any movement or change of policy regarding the imprisonment of AP Correspondent Terry Anderson and eight other Americans believed held in Lebanon by Shiite Moslems. Bush had said in the speech that "assistance can be shown here, and will be long remembered. Good will begets good will."

Bush told reporters "I don't think it's a change of policy. But I wanted to be sure I mentioned in that speech my absolute determination not to forget either ... the POW-MIAs or these hostages. And I wanted that right in there. It was one the few spcific points in an otherwise thematic speech. And in terms of your question, I hope it was heard around the world.

"You know," Bush added, "we keep hearing rumors that countries want to have improved relations with the United States. I wanted to make clear to them that good will begets good will. I also know enough about the situation to think, in fairness, that because of the nature of the hostage-holders you can can't finger any one country for holding Americans hostage against their will.

"But people have in the past facilitated the release of our citizens, and I'd love to see that happen again, and I won't — and I won't forget it.

"But having said that," Bush concluded, "we're not going to escalate the currency of holding Americans hostage. We're not going to have people feel that we are going to make concessions in order to free those precious lives."

Soviet Fireball

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo (AP) — A fireball that blazed across the night skies of the central United States on Friday was a Soviet rocket body launched in December and re-entering the atmosphere, authorities said.

The rocket was sighted in Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, Illinois, Mississippi and Iowa, and a number of witnesses called officials to say they had seen it blaze across the sky about 8:10 p.m. CST.

Some witnesses said the fireball had fiery tail 30 to 40 miles long.

Maj. Dick Adams, a spokesman for the North American Air Defense Command in Colorado Springs said the U.S. Space Command identified the object as a Soviet-built rocket body that was launched sometime last year.

the ride to the police department, authorities said.

About 15 representatives of the National Abortion Rights Activists League worked as escorts for women with clinic appointments. The escorts and protestors engaged in a footrace to reach arriving patients, officials said.

The escorts stood on each side of the women and walked them into the clinic as the protestors offered pro-life literature and advice.

In Morganton, 22 members of the Burke County Right-to-Life marched with solemn faces and graphic posters during a march and rally. No one was arrested, police said.

The group had a police escort along their route, as passerbys read signs proclaiming, "Abortion: America's Holocaust" and "All Life is Precious," and hearing the group sing "Jesus Loves Me."

Fans Are Ready

Gloria Tobin, assistant food and beverage director at the Ramada Inn, said fans can watch the aerial displays of quarterbacks Joe Montana and Boomer Esiason while munching on nachos, hot dogs, and South-Texas chili.

"We'll even be offering a free lunch buffet to anyone here that picks the winning team," she said.

Other establishments planning Super Bowl festivities include The Attic, Wrong Way Corrigan's, and Susie's Treehouse Restaurant.

Raymond Downes, president of the East Carolina University Chapter of Tau Kappa Epsilon Fraternity, said several of the fraternity brothers are taking time out from the textbooks to watch the game.

"We use to have a Super Bowl party at the house but this year most of us are going over to a brother's house," he said. "Everybody rooting for one team watches the game in one room while everyone rooting for the other team watches from another room. Then we sort of yell back and forth to each other."

Brian Bailey, sports director at WNCT-TV, said he believes Super Bowl XXIII will be a close game, but predicted the Bengals would be victorious by a score of 31-24.

"A bunch of us at the station are having a big party at Todd Gibson's place," Bailey said. "My wife and I will be going over, indulging in some pregame activities and getting fired up."

Gibson, WNCT-TV sports and general assignment reporter, also predicts a Bengals victory.

"I'm an Ohio boy so I suppose I'll go with Cincinnati on this one," he said.

Meanwhile, Dave Hart, ECU athletic director, said he's planning the usual Sunday morning activities and then he intends to enjoy Super Bowl XXIII in the company of good friends.

When asked to speculate on the game's outcome, Hart sides with San Francisco.

"I really believe the 49ers are simply a better ballclub than Cincinnati," he said. "I'm just hoping for a good ballgame this year. We haven't had too many of those."

ECU Geologist Says Pamlico River Has Five Toxin 'Hot Spots'

along the river's 39-mile length. He looked for the eight heavy metals listed by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency as "priority pollutants": arsenic, cadmium, chromium, copper, lead, mercury, nickel and zinc. He also tested for 14 other elements, including selenium, cobalt, iron and phosphorus.

Riggs' research does not prove that the metals are linked to the diseases or to water problems, or that the metals are being ingested by fish or other wildlife. Heavy metals, though, are known to cause tumors and fin rot in fish, according to fish biologists. Copper, chromium and cadmium, for instance, can be toxic to fish, and all heavy metals can cause a variety of ailments in humans.

Other hot spots, said Riggs, are:

— Off Texasgulf Chemicals Co. on the south side of the Pamlico. Riggs found concentrations of cadmium two to three times above normal and high levels of the nutrient phosphorus. Cadmium is found naturally with phosphate ore, which Texagulf mines from land adjoining the river. The company legally discharges tons of phosphorus into the river daily.

— In Broad Creek on the north side of the river. High levels of the metals copper and zinc were found. They are commonly used in marine paint and coatings for boat hulls to discourage barnacle growth. The Washington Yacht and Country Club is located on the creek.

— Off Belhaven in the Pungo River, a tributary of the Pamlico. High levels of phosphorus and slightly elevated concentrations of copper and cadmium were found.

— In the upper reaches of the Pungo. Riggs found high levels of phosphorus. One source of phosphorus is runoff from agricultural fields. Most of land around in the Pungo is planted in crops.

"You get metals everywhere, but most of the Pamlico estuarine system is very low," Riggs said. "These hot spots are way above the mean, and they stand out."

Washington's wastewater treatment plant discharges into Kennedy Creek, which flows past an old municipal landfill. The nearby FCX dumpsite was used for more than 20 years to legally dump pesticides, fungicides and other farm chemicals. FCX filed for bankruptcy under Chapter 11 in 1986, and cleanup of the site was completed this week by the EPA as part of its Superfund program.

Bill Klutz, who led the EPA cleanup crew, said pesticides, including DDT, Chlordane and other chlorine-based compounds, were found in two trenches on the site. The largest trench, he said, was 300 feet long and about 8 feet deep.

The pesticides, Klutz said, apparently were buried in almost pure form starting in the 1960s. Large clumps of crystallized pesticides were pulled from the trenches, he said. Concentrations of pesticides measuring 10 to 12 parts-per-million, or ppm, are considered high, Klutz said. DDT, he said, was found at levels as high as 500,000 ppm.

The pesticides and contaminated dirt have been removed and stored at the site, which is on the national Superfund priority list, Klutz said. It will be burned later, he said.

"The main threat, we've mitigated," Klutz said. "The trenches were non-uniform in nature, and some of the material was exposed above ground. Because the material is not in the ground now, it won't be leaching back in the ground."

Riggs, though, wonders if some of those pesticides already have. They may account for the extremely high levels of heavy metals that he found in Kennedy Creek, Riggs said.

"Our data suggests that something is leaking into that creek," he said. "We don't know where it's coming from, but it's coming from someplace."

David A. McNaught, the executive director of the Pamlico-Tar River Foundation, said that he would like to pinpoint the source. The state or EPA, he said, should monitor ground water near the site to make sure pesticides aren't contaminating wells or leaching into the creek.

Ronald Wilson, a spokesman from the EPA's regional office in Atlanta, said Friday that no monitor wells have been dug at the site and it could be "some time down the road" before the the agency tests the groundwater for contamination.

Said McNaught: "We don't want to wait what may be one to five years. The reason is Riggs' data. There is very clear evidence that there are hot spots on creek. What we got is a need for exploratory surgery. We know we have a cancer in that creek. Now we have to find out what the source is."

Reagan Years Are Assessed

he has been able to ignore realistic problems."

According to Yarbrough, "I think probably that Reagan's easy ride as the president has been the good Lord's way of compensating him for all those bad rolls he had to play in Hollywood. But I don't know whether the nation can endure much more inattention to the enormous problems that it faces."

Yarbrough hopes that the American public will be "less willing to let Bush get away with what Reagan has been able to ignore ... the deficit, our status as a debtor nation ... environmental problems.

"Frankly," the political science expert said, "I think one problem Democratic presidents have is that they recognize these problems and tend to attempt to confront them. When they do, of course, they threaten the sense of good feeling Americans have about their nation. Often Americans tend to blame the messenger of the problems, rather than blame the problem.

"If you can say it's morning in America and everything is right about America, then (as a politician) you're better off at the polls than pointing out the serious problems. People just don't want to be reminded of those problems."

And, Yarbrough said, "the Republicans have capitalized on that very effectively, I think.

"I've always thought we need two presidents," Yarbrough said, "a Republican for inaugurations and ceremonial occasions and a Democratic president to deal with the problems confronting the nation. Unfortunately we can't have two presidents at the same time."

Bush, as the new head of state, is in a good position to deal with some of the nations major problems. But Yarbrough said, "I don't know if he will or not."

Bush will "certainly have to ignore his campaign promise of no new taxes if he does, and I certainly hope he will.

"Taxes are the price of civilization," Yarbrough suggested. "We're all perfectly willing to accept increases in the price we pay for hamburgers, shirts, blouses, suits. But somehow or other we are very resentful when we see increases in prices we have to pay for government service ... probably because people tend to take those services for granted."

Dr. Robert Thompson, the chairman of ECU's political science department, said, "I think there are some positive things Reagan has done," as he reflected on the past eight years. "I think the spirit of the country is better and that he is to be congratulated on giving us a pretty good basis to deal with the Soviets."

But Thompson cautioned, "I think there are lots of land minds waiting to tarnish his (Reagan's) legacy ... the budget being the major one.

City Council Sets Priorities At Annual Planning Session

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Illegal drugs, transportation problems, the need for improved municipal facilities and fire/rescue capabilities were among the top issues addressed at Saturday's planning session of the Greenville City Council.

The six members of the council, along with city staff department heads and the mayor, spent eight hours Saturday at the Ramada Inn on Greenville Boulevard setting priorities for the upcoming year.

The session was intended to help City Manager Greg Knowles better identify those council concerns and priorities which must be considered when formulating next year's city budget proposal.

Knowles said over 80 priorities were identified by the council during the session, with 20 of those being designated as "high-priority."

"This year the council again unanimously put the drug prevention program as one of its highest priorities," Knowles said.

"They also decided that we can't wait any longer, we have to discuss the issue of municipal facilities, I see that as an issue that is coming up this next year also," he said.

Also discussed was fire service delivery and the possibility of acquiring an arial ladder, which Knowles described as "a high-rise ladder used for rescue and to provide a water stream a hundred-some feet in the air."

Mayor Pro-Tem Lorraine Shinn said, "I think the biggest thing that came out of this session today was that we gave our manager some direction as to what our priorities are for the city for the upcoming year, which gives him some direction as to how to appropriate monies in the budget. It gives him some guidance as to where to put the dollars."

She said environmental issues and transportation were two of the subjects she expressed as top priorites.

"I think until we can do something about the traffic flow and improve access to varous thoroughfares, we're going to continue to have transportation problems," she said

Council member Rufus Huggins said an important priority is the city looking into lower and moderate income housing for the elderly, new government facilities and economic development for minorities.

Council member Mildred Council said she stressed the importance of the city becoming involved in monitoring the 1990 census.

"It's important that we count all the people in the city so that we can get the appropriate monies this city deserves," she said.

Council member Inez Fridley said that the council worked well together at the planning session.

"I think we did an excellent job of preparing a planning agenda for the city," she said. "I think it was a meeting where you could tell all of us were beginning to feel comfortable with discussing the issues. We could engage in serious dialogue with each other and I thought that was a real positive thing."

Minority Medical Students Urged To Serve Humanity

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Minority students scheduled to graduate from the East Carolina University School of Medicine this spring were introduced to Hattie Brown on Friday evening — a bit of reality.

Hattie Brown died from a stroke caused by high blood pressure, Dr. Mary Vernon said. Ms. Brown was aware of her condition and had medicine to control it, but she did not take her medicine regularly, Dr. Vernon said.

"Did Hattie Brown have to die," Dr. Vernon asked the 11 minority graduates and the 120 people who gathered at the fourth annual Student National Medical Association Martin Luther King Senior Recognition Banquet at the Ramada Inn.

Dr. Vernon, assistant professor of pediatrics at Duke University and director of adolescent medicine at the Lincoln Community Health Center in Durham, was the guest speaker for the event.

She said doctors have to realize the different circumstances that exist in their patients' lives.

Dr. Vernon said blacks still are more likely to be born into poverty, to not have the advantage of prenatal care, to be born premature, to die in the first year of their lives, to be attended in foster care, to be murdered, to be incarcerated, to be dependent upon welfare, to be a pregnant teen-ager and to have a parent who never marries.

"When you go out there, these problems are there," she said. "Poverty and ill health go hand in hand — from the womb to the tomb. Health is the most precious possession that one can have, yet it is denied to millions every day.

"What is our role in dealing with these kinds of issues? We have to assume some responsibility," she said.

"To honor Dr. King is to work to make his dream come true for others and yourselves. He preached that we should go and serve our fellow man as he did.

"You have your M.D. degree to hang on your wall. Will you hang there with it or will you work to keep that dream alive," Dr. Vernon said.

"Use your degree to serve humanity," she said. "These problems have a social ideology and providing a prescription for medicine will not solve the problem. You must reach out to them ... you can't wait for them to come to you."

"No matter who you are or where you are, you are important in Dr. King's dream," Dr. Vernon said.

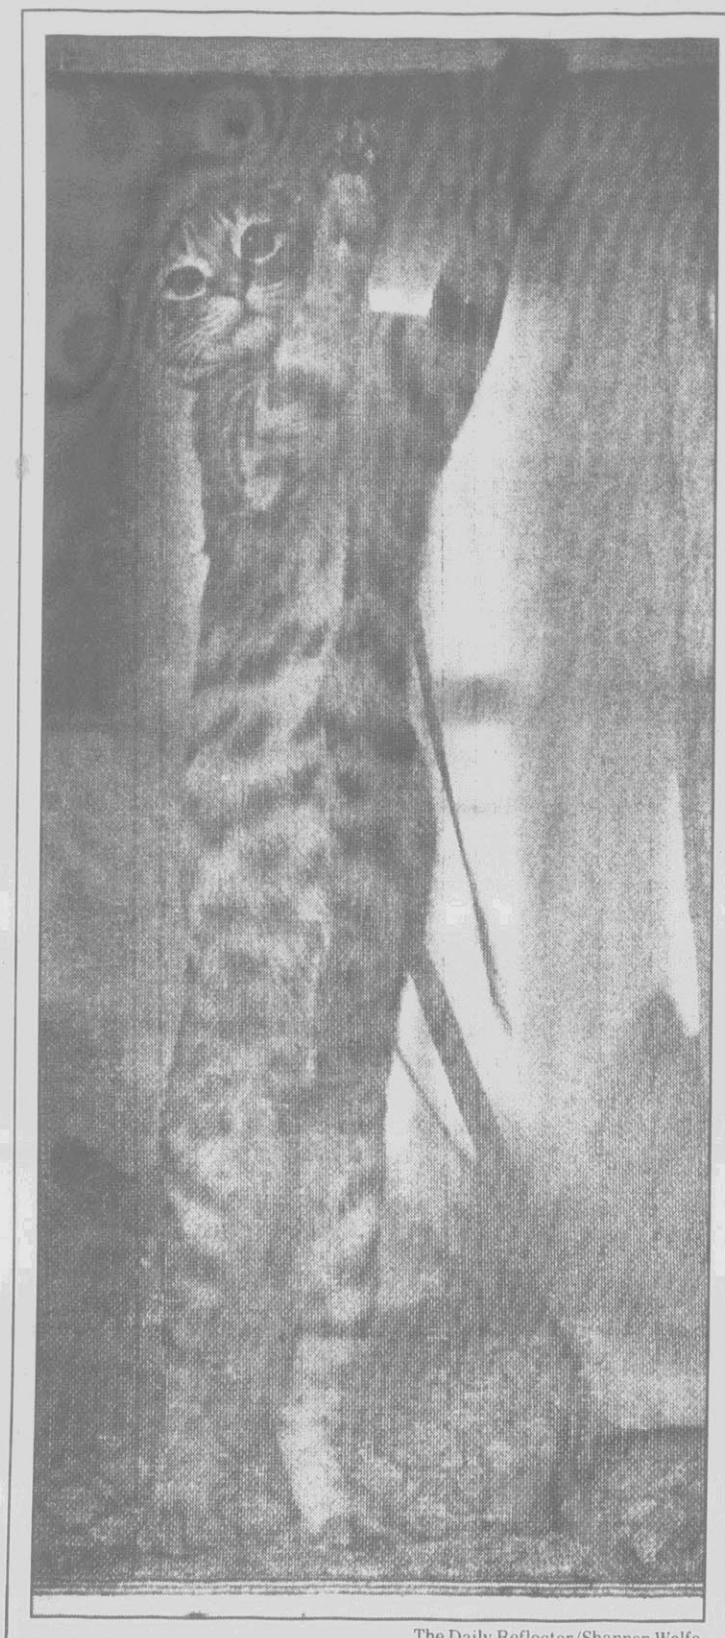

"Become a person of value rather than just a success," she said.

Describing how King's dream influenced her life and career, Dr. Vernon told the students, "You are the recipients of the Martin Luther King dream because you are here to carry on the dream he started."

Led by Dr. Julius Mallette, faculty advisor for SNMA, the group sang happy birthday to King, while Victoria Grady and Phillip Timmons presented the purpose of the event and the goals and objectives of the organization, respectively.

Judy Lawrence presented the invocation before dinner, while Anita Hudson introduced Dr. Vernon. Neil Brickhouse recognized guests and Gladys Gregory recognized the graduating seniors — Peggy Ward, Velvet McDonald, Claudia Weaver, Karen Coward, Darlene Keene, Allen Hatch, William Blackstock, Rodney Sessoms, Burton Price, Aljoeson Walker and Jurgen Taylor.

The group also sang "Lift Every Voice and Sing," the black national anthem, before Drew Jones, president of SNMA and the master of ceremonies for the event, presented the benediction.

Rape Arrest

A 38-year-old Bethel man remained in Pitt County Jail under $100,000 bond Saturday after being arrested on charges of rape and taking indecent liberties with an 11-year-old Pitt County girl.

Pitt Sheriff Ralph Tyson said Lloyd Alvin Stallings, 38, of Route 1, Bethel, was arrested Thursday by the Pitt County Sheriffs Department following the issuance of a 16-count indictment from the grand jury. Stallings was arrested on seven counts of rape, one count of sexual offense and eight counts of taking indecent liberties with a child, Tyson said.

Stallings' wife, Antionette Stallings, 34, was also arrested and charged with two counts of allowing the commission of sexual acts upon a child, Tyson said. She was released from jail Thursday after posting $10,000 bond, he said.

The alleged criminal acts were said to have occurred between June of 1984 and March of 1988.

Robbery Charges

Greenville police said several arrests were made Friday, including an arrest in connection with a December armed robbery.

Officer T.E. Nevelle said Curtis Ray Crandell, 29, of 204 Ridgeway St. was arrested at 5:05 p.m. at the Pitt County Jail and charged with armed robbery in connection with a Dec. 21 incident at the Spur Station on Dickenson Avenue.

Officer R.C. Allsbrook said Ashley Solo Paige, 22, of 1504 Fleming St. was charged with shoplifting in connection with the theft of seven compact discs valued at $102 from East Coast Music in an incident reported at 5:46 p.m.

Officer J.A. Bartlett said Linwood Earl Harris, 27, of 609 Contentnea St. was arrested at 10:51 p.m. in the 1400 block of Fleming Street on charges of assaulting a law enforcement officer.

Pocketbook Taken

Greenville Police Officer A.T. Parrish said a pocketbook valued at $90 and containing keys and $30 in cash was taken from a vehicle parked adjacent to Albamarle Drive in an incident reported at 3:37 a.m. Saturday.

Early Release

Students at Wintergreen Elementary School were released from school early Friday, according to Barry Gaskins, public information director for the Pitt County schools.

Gaskins said a waterline in the school area was accidently cut, thereby cutting off the water supply to the school.

ECU Sophomore Gets Democratic Party Post

By Lane Dunn
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Debbie Nelson, an East Carolina University sophomore from Craven County, has been elected to a two-year term as third vice chairman of the North Carolina Democratic Party.

Ms. Nelson said her duties have yet to be assigned by party Chairman Lawrence Davis. Historically the position chairs the Democratic Youth Council.

Ms. Nelson said she will probably deal with the Young Democrats, College Democrats and Teen Democrats and serve as a liaison between these groups and the N.C. Democratic Party.

According to Ms. Nelson, the third vice chairman position is always held by a person under the age of 36 in order to foster better working relations with young people. She said that the third vice chairman "has to be more active in the next few years in order to give young people an avenue into the party."

Ms. Nelson said the election procedures for Democratic Party officers were changed slightly this year. In previous years campaigns were run and the 394-person executive committee voted on party officers. This year a nominating committee viewed applications and recommended people for office. Nominees then had to gain approval from the executive panel.

Ms. Nelson, 28, said she has been involved in Democratic Party activities for 10 years, mainly with the Young Democrats organization where she was state treasurer. She has also worked with the Democratic Women of Guilford County.

In 1980 she worked with Jim Hunt's successful campaign for re-election as governor and played a role in Jim Long's campaign for state insurance commissioner in 1984. She said her work with Long led to employment with the Department of Insurance for five years, serving as purchasing officer for the department and manager of the eastern regional office.

Ms. Nelson, who is originally from Durham, attended the University of North Carolina at Greensboro in 1978. She is majoring in special education at ECU and plans to teach when she graduates.

Workshop Agenda Set

A progress report of the city's Community Improvement Association will be presented to members of the Greenville City Council at a council workshop session Monday at 6 p.m. in the third floor conference room of City Hall.

Association Chairman Wade Johnson will inform the council of the organization's progress in combating drug abuse and other criminal activities in the six months since its inception.

The council had authorized city funds for the association for its six-month infancy.

Mayor Carter announced the formation of the association in August. It is intended to mobilize volunteers throughout the community to help solve problems which undermine Greenville's quality of life.

The council will also hear a presentation of the annual report of the Mid East Commission.

Other items to be discussed Monday include: Pitt County appointments to the Planning and Zoning Commission and the Board of Adjustment; issuing a pawnbroker's license to Bill's Jewelry & Pawn shop, and reports from council liaisons to boards and commissions.

An executive session concerning land acqisition matters will also be conducted Monday.

With Wachovia's Convertible CD, You Can Switch To A Higher Rate If Interest Rates Rise — Without Penalty.

Wachovia introduces a radical new idea — an investment that can only go up. And what could be more conservative than something that will never decrease in value? We call it our Convertible CD, and the only place you can get it is from a Wachovia Personal Banker℠. So now you don't have to be stuck with a fixed-rate CD as you watch interest rates rise. Because once you've bought a Wachovia Convertible CD, if interest rates rise, you can switch over to a higher rate. And even if interest rates go down, the interest you earn does not. We like to think of it as a no-lose proposition.

Convert Without Penalty And Keep On Converting

The term is one year. But after three months, if interest rates have risen, you're free to switch to another one-year Convertible CD at the higher rate. Or to a non-convertible CD of one year or longer. All without having to pay a penalty. As long as you wait at least three months between conversions, you can keep on converting to a new one-year Convertible CD whenever interest rates rise.

Safe and Secure

The reason the Convertible CD is such a smart, conservative investment is because the rate is guaranteed for the term of your certificate, just like other Wachovia CD's. When you switch to a higher rate, that new rate is also guaranteed for the full term. Even if interest rates fall, your rate can't go down.

Convert To The Convertible

If you have a CD that's maturing, or if you're thinking about making a new investment, now is a great time to convert to the Convertible. The current opening rate on the Convertible CD is 8.10%, with an annualized yield of 8.436%.* Not only will you start making money right away, but when interest rates rise, so can your earnings.

The only place you can get this Convertible CD is at Wachovia. Just talk to any Personal Banker at any Wachovia branch. So if you're interested in interest rates, give us a call. Because we've got a profitable way for you to be radical and conservative at the same time. Smart, flexible investments. That's The Wachovia Way.

THE WACHOVIA WAY

It's more than what we do. It's how we do it.℠

*Quoted rate based on deposits of $10,000 to $49,999. Other rates available for other amounts. Rate shown subject to change. $500 minimum deposit. $250,000 maximum per depositor. While there is no penalty for conversions, there is a substantial penalty for early withdrawal. Individuals only.

Road Safety: The Path To Prohibition

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Efforts to strengthen North Carolina's Safe Roads Act appeared to have strong backing in the General Assembly despite some grumbling that the battle against drunken drivers might have political underpinnings.

"I'm concerned that we don't confuse the Safe Roads Act with the Prohibition Act," said Sen. Bob Swain, D-Buncombe, whose Judiciary I Committee will handle most of the bills. He said many of those supporting the package would prefer to see alcohol abolished.

"I just don't want this to be a back door for something," he said.

Gov. Jim Martin and a legislative study commission have supported similar measures, including reducing the legal blood-alcohol level for drivers from 0.10 percent to 0.08 percent and increasing penalties for several alcohol-related crimes.

Martin also is calling for prohibition of open containers of alcohol in passenger vehicles and a provision to revoke the limited driving privilege granted to some drunken drivers if its terms are violated. To free prison space, the governor wants more alcoholic treatment centers under the Department of Correction.

"There are many facets to this DWI program," Martin told the Legislature in his State of the State address. "There is treatment, loss of privilege, punishment and publicity. There is also injury, pain and death. We must use every reasonable weapon to put a stop to it."

Chris Valauri, representing North Carolina's beer wholesalers, said there is a lot of sentiment for the package. But he said he hopes lawmakers are aware that some of the provisions may look good politically without keeping problem drinkers off the road.

"The real problem is with about 10 percent of people who drink, the ones who drink and drive even if their license has been revoked 30 times," Valauri said. "There's not much we can do about them unless we set up a guillotine by the side of the road and chop their heads off."

Valauri said banning open beers in cars would punish innocent passengers with little impact on drunken drivers.

Chefs Cook For The Homeless After Charity Event Canceled

By Carolyn Skorneck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Crab meat with duxelle sauce and chocolate-covered macadamia nuts isn't the usual bill of fare for the homeless, but that was on the menu Saturday after celebrity chefs ousted from a fund-raising event decided to cook instead for those who can't pay.

"We normally serve a very nice meal, a hot meal with either fresh fruit salad or fresh green salad. But ... we don't serve clams or crab. People around here got all perky about that," said Mitch Snyder of the Community for Creative Non-Violence, which runs the homeless shelter.

A commercial event had been scheduled for Saturday night and Sunday, charging $50 per ticket for Saturday night and $15 for the Sunday Super Bowl party. The for-profit organization planning it, A Taste of America, had expected to donate $150,000 to $300,000 in profits to the homeless shelter, said spokeswomen for the sponsoring group.

But the event was canceled because of last-minute contract problems with the DC Armory, they said.

James Dalrymple, general manager of the armory, did not immediately return a phone call to his home Saturday.

"Obviously, we could use the money and we're sorry that didn't work out," Snyder said. "At least people in our shelter are going to get one nice meal."

The dismayed chefs, who had brought some of their food with them, met Friday to decide what to do.

"We had a choice whether we should pick up and go, but we decided we were here to help the hungry and homeless, so why don't we?" said John P. Hughes III, owner and chef of Windows On the Water in Kennebunkport, Maine.

When President and Mrs. Bush stop by his restaurant, he usually serves them lobster-stuffed potatoes, and he had intended to make the same dish for the A Taste of America event. But he managed to stop the shipment of 160 pounds of lobster.

"It would have cost us $2,000," said his wife, Cynthia. "We're a small business. We can't absorb that."

John Weichman of All Seasons restaurant in Mobile, Ala., had brought more than $500 worth of crab meat with him, and Filippo Milone of The Pillars Restaurant, also in Mobile, who had canceled his shipment of crab meat, offered to split the cost.

Referring to the homeless shelter residents, Weichman said, "Hopefully, they'll have a memorable meal and they'll realize they ate as well as some of the fat cats."

There appeared to be no clash of egos as the chefs whirled around the shelter's kitchen, directing college volunteers on the proper way to slice potatoes, chop carrots and open and mix cans of tomato paste with whole tomatoes.

"Broccoli au gratin," Weichman pronounced as crates of broccoli appeared in the kitchen. "You gotta be flexible," he said, explaining the instant addition to the menu.

"We'll make a good pasta with crab sauce, whatever," said Milone, reflecting the ad hoc menu decisions.

In addition to the crab meat with a sauce of bell pepper, onions, mushrooms and pimentos, the chefs prepared a dish of roasted garlic potatoes, pasta with a red sauce as well as a lamb dish and salad.

Chef Daniel Thiebaut of the Mauna Kea Beach Resort in Kohala Coast, Hawaii, got his company to donate the lamb, fruit and special colored chocolate-covered macadamia nuts.

Snyder surveyed the busy scene in his kitchen at 2 p.m. and asked warily, "You can get this dinner done by 5 p.m.?"

"No problem," Weichman responded.

Snyder, who runs the 1,400-person homeless shelter, said he expected the residents to be thrilled by the culinary change of pace, but some waited to be impressed.

"It'll probably be all right," said Ronnell Showell, 29, of Washington, who, after thinking about it a moment, added, "It should be all right."

Herman Jackson, 51, also of Washington, said, "I think it's a very good idea. ... I'm thankful for everything we get."

Snyder said the money that had been expected from the commercial event would have been used to renovate a theater next to the shelter, a project that will cost about $250,000.

"We've discovered that cultural activities, theatrical activities, are very important to the people here," he said.

There are no plans to build another shelter now.

"We already operate the largest shelter in America," Snyder said. "We're trying to make this as complete a model as possible so people here have the greatest chance possible to get out of here ... to help their transition back to the real world."

Satellite Fails

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A satellite that provides those clever moving cloud pictures for television weather forecasts failed Saturday, depriving customers of views of the Western United States, officials said.

The failure occurred aboard GOES-6, a National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration satellite that was launched in April 1983, said Milton Mortman, a shift supervisor at the agency's satellite operations control center.

"It's just old age," Mortman said.

"For making maps it wouldn't have that much effect," Brown said, noting that forecasters rely mostly on conventional ground data.

"We do things such as help them locate frontal positions ... coming in over the ocean areas. It's sort of extra input," he said of the GOES-6 data.

Brown said partial pictures can be provided from a companion satellite, GOES-7, that covers the Eastern United States.

"We'll be getting pictures from the eastern satellite. Eventually we will move the eastern satellite over so it can cover the entire country," Brown said.

Mortman said the process of moving GOES-7, using small rockets mounted to the satellite, would be completed around Feb. 21. Controllers will move the GOES-7 satellite from its present position at 80 degrees west longitude over northern South America to 108 degrees west longitude.

GOES-6 is located at 134.5 west longitude, far out over the Pacific Ocean. The two satellites are in stationary orbits 22,300 miles above the equator.

Until the satellite is moved, weather watching also will be augmented by other existing satellites operated by NOAA and by satellites from the European and Japanese space agencies, said Thomas N. Pyke Jr., NOAA's assistant administrator for satellite and information services.

NOAA said GOES-7 will perform double duty for an estimated 18 months until mid-1990, when the next GOES satellite is expected to be ready for launch.

Mortman said the satellites take cloud-cover pictures in narrow strips and then compile the pieces to give large-scale, moving views of cloud patterns. An encoder lamp that is critical to the compilation process failed, he said.

"Without the lamp you have no instrument," Mortman said.

Republicans Rock

By Christopher Connell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush did some more high-steppin' Saturday night when he showed off his Lone Star boots to an appreciative Texas crowd, while across town young Republicans also kicked up their heels at a rollicking, foot-stomping rock and blues bash.

Bush exhibited the boots at a Texas "black tie and boots" affair for thousands of members of the Texas State Society at the Washington Hilton. His footgear was black with a map of the state of Texas enameled on each of them, and with a Lone Star flag in the middle.

Coyly lifting his pants leg, Bush said, "Hey, listen. Stop whistling at me."

Several people yelled "take em' off."

Barbara Bush, who did not address the crowds at any of the numerous balls she and her husband visited the night before, said, "What I ought to do is make George stand on his head and really show you those boots."

Bush also was expected to make an appearance at another event, the sold-out "Celebration for Young Americans," which featured big-name rock and blues acts. Authorities estimated between 8,000 and 9,000 people were attending the show at the Washington Convention Center.

The music show was the brainchild of 37-year-old Lee Atwater, the new chairman of the Republican National Committee and a longtime fan of rock 'n' roll and blues music.

"Ladies and gentlemen, this is a dream come true. ... You're going to hear the greatest of rhythm and blues and soul," Atwater told the crowd before some of the best-known singers in the genre took the convention center stage.

"Tonight is not the night for politics. ... We're going to have the time of our lives tonight," said the Columbia, S.C., native who likes to entertain friends with his own guitar playing.

Among those who led off the show were Percy Sledge singing his classic "When a Man Loves a Woman," and Coco Taylor, the so-called queen of the Chicago blues.

Audience members, who paid $35 a seat, were mostly young, wearing a range of outfits from black tie to blue jeans and casual clothes. Behind the stage in the center of the hall party-goers packed the dance floor to twist and jitterbug to the sounds of the 1950s and 1960s.

In front of the stage, VIP guests sipped soft drinks at round tables. Among those attending were Marvin Bush and Dorothy Bush LeBlond, two of Bush's children.

Earlier, at the black tie and boots event, Bush told his audience and a separate overflow crowd, "We've had a great, wonderful family day."

He recalled going home to the White House on Friday night for the first time, looking out the window and seeing people already lined up to visit it during Saturday's open house.

"Here were people who spent all night out there under blankets — or maybe not," he said. "It made me realize just how important it is to be the custodian of the people's house."

And Mrs. Bush, who wore a red dress with a black, lace-covered bodice, also turned serious, saying, "Just a minute ago, when George said 'first lady' — I don't think so. I think I'm still George Bush's wife and I'm darn happy to be living in the White House."

West Germany

of anonymity, said the West Germans left on a flight for New Delhi with no prior announcement.

"We intend to watch developments there carefully before making a decision on when to return," Chrobog said.

Other Western embassies say they are reviewing their positions now that it appears the Soviets will meet a Feb. 15 deadline for removal of their troops from Afghanistan, where they have been helping government troops fight Moslem guerrillas since December 1979.

The British Embassy last week told Britons and nationals of six other countries for which it has diplomatic responsibility to leave. The U.S. Embassy has 11 American staff members in Kabul and says the question of whether to stay is "under constant review."

Kabul has been increasingly tense as the withdrawal date for the remaining 50,000 Soviet soldiers approaches and guerrillas close in. Food prices have doubled in recent weeks. Civilians, including young children, stand in bread lines for hours in 20-degree temperatures.

Guerrilla disruptions of convoys of food and supplies, including ammunition, have increased as Soviet troops hand over escort duties and positions to government units along the key Salang highway from the Soviet border. Bad weather also has held up convoys.

Kids Still Gather In Spite Of 'Limited Quarantine'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Sponsors of school and community group activities in Rowan County say a "limited quarantine" imposed after an outbreak of red measles has done little to keep young people from gathering at movies, malls and teen clubs.

"It's called a limited quarantine, whatever that means," said Lynn Lomax, associate director of the YMCA. "When someone 18 comes to the Y and we tell 'em, 'You're not supposed to be here ...,' they go to the mall."

The quarantine was imposed by county health officials Jan. 10 on schools, colleges and community organizations. It did not apply to private businesses where young people and adults born after 1957 — the groups most at risk — gather.

"We have concerns about businesses that cater to young people, but the quarantine does not apply to private enterprise," said Martha Harrell, a nursing supervisor in the county health department. "When you're talking about private enterprise, you're talking about people's livelihoods."

Since November, 163 cases of red measles have been reported in the county. Statewide, 200 cases have been reported and students from Rowan are believed to have carried the disease to Appalachian State and North Carolina State universities after the Christmas break.

The outbreak forced cancellation of a college entrance testing session next Saturday at Central Cabarrus High School, possibly affecting college plans of more than 400 North Carolina students.

Fred Pilkington, Cabarrus County health director, Friday ordered cancellation of the session, which was to include the Scholastic Aptitude Tests and the final entrance test for Duke University's Talent Identification Program.

Health and school officials had met for days, Pilkington said, to develop restrictions for the testing session, as well as some athletic activities, under a limited quarantine issued Jan. 13.

But in a statement issued late Friday, Pilkington said, "Because of the continued spread of measles in Cabarrus County, these activities will have to be or remain canceled."

Meanwhile, the disease spread to Person and Pitt counties Friday, bringing to 20 the number of counties affected by the outbreak.

Most colleges require SAT scores as part of the admissions process. The TIP is a summer program for academically talented seventh and eighth graders. Its entrance test is administered at the December and January test dates of the SAT. Next Saturday was the last opportunity to take the test to qualify.

The school system will begin efforts Monday to keep the cancellation from affecting students' chances of admission to college, said Jesse Register, superintendent of Cabarrus County Schools.

"We'll do everything we can to get the test delayed or rescheduled on this site, or anything we can do," Register said. "Some kids need to take (the SAT) now for the admissions procedures and where they are in the process. I hate that it had to be canceled, but I feel sure that fees won't be lost.

"Whether the testing service will allow it (to be rescheduled), I don't know," Register said. As for the Duke test, he said, "We'll ask. I really don't know if we can get an extension."

Panel Appointees Get Ethics Letters

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WILMINGTON — Gov. Jim Martin's five newest appointees to the North Carolina Coastal Resources Commission all have potential conflicts of interest because of land holdings or professional interests, the state Ethics Board says.

The Ethics Board has sent letters to each of the appointees advising them they have "potential for conflict of interest," the Wilmington Morning Star reported Saturday. The letters direct the commission's chairman to read the potential for conflict into the commission's minutes at its meeting Thursday in Beaufort.

The letters come as the commission is trying to develop a new, detailed conflict-of-interest policy to clarify when a member should and should not vote on matters that could affect his financial interests. The commission will consider adopting a policy when it meets next week.

The Ethics Board, in reviewing ethics statements filed by each of the commission's new members, found no actual conflict of interest, only potential conflicts, the letters state.

Letters to three of the new appointees remind them that although they were appointed to the commission to represent specific interests, they also have "the duty to protect the public interest."

That version of the letter went to appointees Kent Mitchell, whose family is developing Bald Head Island; Timothy Thornton, an Elizabeth City developer; and Martha Blount Simpson, who was appointed to represent agricultural interests. Mitchell, a member of Bald Head's Village Council, was appointed to represent local government interests, and Thornton represents coastal development interests.

The tone of the letters — stronger than that of letters to commission members in recent years — shows that the ethics challenge environmentalists filed last summer against commission member Ronnie O. Watson left a lasting impression on the Ethics Board, said the board's chairman, K.D. Kennedy Jr.

"Yes, our letters have evolved based on that case and ... the publicity of it," Kennedy said Friday. "Yet we're going to stay fair. ... We're not going to race to the side of the environmentalists."

The ongoing conflict between the state's environmental and development interests reached a crescendo during the summer, when the state's largest conservation group — the N.C. Wildlife Federation — filed a formal conflict-of-interest charge with the Ethics Board against Watson, an Emerald Isle developer.

The Wildlife Federation accused Watson of breaking state ethics rules by voting on regulations that established building setbacks for coastal development. The regulations directly affected property that Watson owns.

The Ethics Board found that Watson had broken the rules and advised the governor to remove him from the commission if he breaks the ethics rules again.

Environmental groups have continued to push the conflict-of-interest issue in recent months, especially since Gov. Jim Martin appointed the five new commission members, three of whom have direct ties to coastal development.

In addition to Mitchell and Thornton, both active coastal developers, Martin appointed Myra Ladd, a Dare County real estate agent; Lawrence Robertson of Wilmington, a Southern National Bank official; and Mrs. Simpson, whose family owns a Washington County tree farm.

The appointments angered environmentalists, who say the governor "stacked" the commission in favor of development interests.

Pending legislation aims to stop that. Rep. Bruce Ethridge, D-Carteret, filed legislation Wednesday to limit the number of developers who could sit on the commission, which regulates coastal development.

Of the 15 members, nine would have to make their living in areas other than land development, construction, real estate sales or lobbying for development interests, according to Ethridge's bill.

The Ethics Board, an advisory body that reviews the ethics statements of all of the governor's appointees, wanted to send a clear message in its letters to the new CRC members, Kennedy said.

"There's a certain amount of selfishness in all mankind," he said.

An Image Problem

GREENSBORO — For years, when the county fair was in town, men flocked to the girlie shows.

These days, fair managers are trying to kill the carny, girlie-show reputation. But it's easier said than done.

Two dozen fair managers gathered Friday in an upstairs meeting room at the Holiday Inn-Four Seasons to talk about cleaning up that image. They want to make the fair a wholesome family event that includes ambling musicians, mimes and magicians, and involves local people in cheerleading contests, bake-offs, livestock shows.

But downstairs, among the exhibits, an Ohio promotion firm pushed its own brand of family entertainment — an all-girl mud wrestling show. "A real crowd pleaser, a show for the entire fami ly," said the letters underneath a picture of 15 leggy women in tight, white tank tops and short shorts.

That's not exactly what the 350 fair managers at the annual convention of the N.C. Association of Agricultural Fairs had in mind for family entertainment.

Nowadays, that kind of show is a unsuccessful, they say. Tastes have changed.

"We had that about five years ago and it flopped," said Bill Austin, manager of the Dixie Classic Fair in Winston-Salem. "It absolutely flopped.

"We're spending more on educational, cultural programs and activities now. It's a trend, and that's what we are promoting."

Ominously, the next display promoted an Indiana insurance firm that billed itself as "the leader in liability entertainment and leisure insurance."

Austin says the fairs are returning to the style he knew when he first got into the business 30 years ago. That's when people in the community brought their corn, pumpkins, cakes and prize calves to show off and compete for the blue ribbon.

N.C. Based Seed Company Makes Hit With Area Growers

Recently we have received performance reports from many area growers that promote the efforts of a new progressive N.C. seed firm based out of Wilson, N.C.

We contacted some of these growers to confirm these reports. We also interviewed Mr. J. Watson, Gen. Mgr. of Carolina Supreme Seeds to find out how a new seed firm could become successful overnight especially during the recent perilous times in the N.C. Agricultural economy.

The following are statements from this interview:

Is there a real problem concerning the lack of genetic diversity and increased risk associated with growing currently available corn hybrids?

The problem is definitely not as serious as it was during the southern leaf blight era. However, a grower may be at risk if he plants most of his acreage to a single hybrid purchased from one company, or if unknowingly plants the same genetic combination purchased from several companies. Yes, it is important to select wisely to spread your risk from drought and disease.

How can a grower best reduce his risk and spread genetic diversity at the same time?

A grower can reduce his risk and spread diversity by selecting and planting at least three to four different maturing genetic combinations or hybrids from a single company or from several companies. Let me explain...It is a fact that most seed companies (big and small) share the hot genetic combinations because of yield, disease resistance, standability, etc., etc. Therefore it is important to recognize and distinquish the similar genetic combinations or hybrids. Otherwise a grower could unknowingly plant the same genetic combinations even though he purchased several hot hybrids from several seed companies. Recognition comes from experience, observation, and similar maturity dates. It makes sense that identical genetic combinations would mature identically at the same time. By planting several different maturing hybrids you would automatically spread genetics and reduce the risk from drought and disease.

There are knowledgeable Ag. Consulting services that can be of valuable assistance on this subject. Your seedsman should also be familiar with this subject. If your present supplier cannot offer assistance on identifying similiar genetic combinations, you need to consult with someone who can.

What advice would you give a progressive corn grower today?

It is important to rotate your cropland and be aware of disease and insect pests. Take adequate and complete soil test regularly as micronutrient deficiencies can be a serious overlooked problem.

If at all possible, change to close row planting. Then stretch your in-row-population. This reduces stress on the individual plant and provides a better canopy to conserve moisture and keep down grass and weeds. Anytime the bare ground is open to sunlight, your corn is going to suffer from it. Most of the high yields you hear about come from close row cultural practices.

How you plant is just as important as what you plant. Make sure your planter is fine tuned and not skipping or double planting. Planting double can be worse than not planting thick enough. this is a major factor in yield loss.

Plant your narrow profile, high population hybrids on your best unstressed acreage. These are race horse type hybrids and do their best without stress. They usually demand and respond to more fertilizer.

The lateral wide leaf, lower population, workhorse type hybrids do better on your thirsty soils. They stand more heat and stress. They demand lower populations. There is especially one genetic combination of this type that has exceptional yield power.

It is important to follow plant population recommendations. Some hybrids will blank out at high population. Some do not. It is important to know your hybrids and plant the right population for each genetic combination.

If you don't know your seeds, get to know your seedsman. Big is not always best in the seed industry. Small companies can give technical advice as well as the big boys and they usually will take more time to work with the individual grower.

What do you offer over the larger seed companies?

I think this question can be summarized in three words - research, performance and service. We offer quality, proven genetic combinations geared to the growers needs for maximum yield potential. The seed business is similar to the farm machinery business. The purchase is only as good as the service you get after the sale. So many times we have heard growers complain about not seeing a seed salesman until its order time. We guarantee service and satisfaction. Maybe that's why 95% of our customers re-order every year.

We try to advise growers on all subjects related to growing high yield corn such as genetic diversity, staggered maturity dates and recommended population rates.

We sell products as good as our word and behind each of these corn hybrids is at least three years of thorough research and field testing, preceded by many years of development. We have enough confidence in the quality of our seed to offer 100% replant protection to our customers. How many other seed companies offer 100% replant protection?

Supreme Seeds has organized a 150 Bu. Club to honor customers attaining yields of 150 Bu. or more using Supreme corn hybrids.

J.B. Bell Jr., Pantego, N.C.; Earl Pugh, Engelhard, N.C.; Allen Gibbs, Engelhard, N.C.; Wade Swindell, Swan Quarter, N.C.; Carl Cahoon, Swan Quarter, N.C.; Fred Suter, Columbia, N.C.; Durwood Cooper, Columbia (Gum Neck); Roland Tooley, Scranton, N.C.; Bill Van Staalduinen, Terra Ceia Farms, Belhaven, N.C.; Bill Roberts, Kinston, N.C.; Jim and Johnny Lewis, Farmville, N.C.; Allen Ballance, Fairfield, N.C.; Garland Berry, Fairfield, N.C.; Holly Hunt, Fairmont, N.C.

In 1989, Supreme Seeds will award an all expense paid hunting and fishing trip to Steamboat Springs, Colorado. The grower with the highest yield from coastal N.C. using Supreme Corn Hybrids will win this trip.

Arts Patrons Want To Build A Replica Of Globe Theater

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAKE LURE, N.C. — Supporters of the arts in Rutherford County hope to add a new tourist attraction to the shores of Lake Lure in the next two years — an historically detailed replica of the Globe Theater where many of Shakespeare's plays debuted.

"I think our chances of building it are very good," said Matthew McEnnerney, head of the Rutherford County Arts Council, which launched a fund-raising campaign for the $2.5 million project earlier this month.

The replica would likely be the historically accurate recreation since the Globe Theater was destroyed in London in 1644, supporters said.

"The fact of the project having come this far is quite remarkable," said McEnnerney, 46. "The sort of David and Goliath quality of it — it's in a rural area with (the support) of small organizations, and so on — I think that might turn out to be an asset in the end."

McEnnerney said if all goes well, construction on the 16- to 20-sided, 100-foot diameter Globe could begin in July or August of this year, on the northwestern shore of Lake Lure, near the town's community center.

The planned theater, which would contain about 800 seats on three tiers, should open by late spring 1990 at the earliest or late spring 1991 at the latest, said McEnnerney — who sees the project as a tribute to North Carolina's role as a first colony, in addition to the Globe itself.

Crews will also work on an $11.4 million to $11.7 million park featuring exhibits on North Carolina's heritage, nature trails and a parking area on the total 12.9-acre site. The park, says McEnnerney, would be completed in segments and should take five to seven years to finish.

McEnnerney got the idea for a Globe replica from a book on the famous theater by C. Walter Hodges. Hodges, an expert on Elizabethan drama and the Globe, visited Lake Lure four or five years ago at the request of local arts patrons.

It was Hodges who spotted the land on the lake's north shore and urged the Arts Council to acquire it as the theater's site. The land, owned by the town of Lake Lure, has been turned over to the non-profit Globe Playhouse Inc., formed by the arts council.

If the project fails to get off the ground within three years, ownership of the 12.9-acre tract reverts to the town of Lake Lure. Mayor L.C. Michelon said he hopes that doesn't happen.

"I think it would be great if the project becomes a reality," he said. "It would be a Mecca for those coming into the area as well as a cultural center for the county. ... I see it as a real boon."

Rutherford County has no cultural center now, he said. Lake Lure, which has no schools and only a small library, would also gain an educational center if the Globe and associated park are built.

North Carolina's two regional Shakespeare companies — the N.C. Shakespeare Festival in High Point and the Charlotte Shakespeare Company — have expressed interest in the replica, which would likely host some of those troupe's performances.

No Gag Order

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Prosecutors and defense attorneys for former PTL leaders Jim Bakker and Richard Dortch met with a federal magistrate Friday, apparently to discuss a proposed gag order that would ban outside comments on the fraud and conspiracy case.

But U.S. Magistrate Paul Taylor later left the courthouse without taking any action on the proposal.

Taylor met for about 30 minutes with Bakker attorneys George T. Davis and Harold Bender, Dortch attorney Bill Diehl and U.S. Justice Department attorney Deborah Smith.

Davis told a reporter as he left the meeting he could not discuss the case. Davis asked for a gag order at Bakker's arraignment Tuesday, citing a published interview with retired federal bankruptcy judge Rufus Reynolds as the kind of pretrial publicity that would prevent Bakker from getting a fair trial.

Reynolds, who oversaw the liquidation of PTL last year, referred to Bakker in the interview as a "sawed-off little runt" and a "thief."

Bakker, Dortch and two other former PTL aides to Bakker, are charged with 24 counts of conspiracy and fraud.

Fishing Trees

More than 1,000 sagging, matted Christmas trees sank to the lake floor Friday. Now millions of bass, crappie, bluegill and other fish will have better protection in public fishing areas.

And fishermen will have easy access to large pools of prey.

"We're trying to make some improve ments on what's naturally out here," said Bob Brown, a fishery biologist with the N.C. Wildlife Commission. "If we don't harvest them, they're going to die."

A dozen wildlife officials and volunteers gathered Friday under a gray morning sky to begin the commission's third annual Christmas tree dumping.

Man Was On Drugs

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — A Carrboro man who was fatally shot after he forced his way inside a Chapel Hill house Jan. 10 was under the influence of LSD at the time, District Attorney Carl Fox said.

Friends who were with William John McMichael III in the hours before his death told Chapel Hill police they saw him ingent the hallucinogenic drug, as well as consume alcoholic beverages, Fox said.

McMichael, 23, the owner of a Chapel Hill wholesale balloon business, was shot four times by Lee Sizemore after he forced his way inside Sizemore's house. Sizemore's wife and two young children were in the house at the time of the 4 a.m. shooting.

Fox said no charges will be filed against Sizemore because evidence indicates that Sizemore took action only to defend himself and his family from an attack by McMichael, Fox said.

Police Tapes

DURHAM (AP) — The Durham Police Department's communication tapes from the morning that an unnamed undercover officer was arrested for drunken driving have been stolen, but the theft was not reported until a week after it was discovered, according to police reports.

"I can't comment on that," Durham Police Chief Trevor Hampton said. He said the State Bureau of Investigation is looking into the case, which prevents him from talking about it.

The stolen tapes are the latest twist in the events following the arrest of an undercover police officer Jan. 10 on a charge of driving while impaired. The officer was arrested by a rookie policeman at 3:33 a.m. The undercover officer registered .15 blood alcohol content on a preliminary field test. He refused to take the Breathalyzer test, which could be submitted as evidence in court.

Faculty Upset With Choice Of New Dean

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENSBORO — Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary's faculty criticized the president's nomination of Russ Bush III as academic dean, saying his election would further polarize the campus and could jeopardize the school's accreditation.

Seminary President Lewis Drummond's nomination of the inerrantist Texas professor "intensifies the troubled circumstances on campus ... and contributes to conditions leading to the seminary's sharply declining enrollment," said a statement from the Southeastern chapter of the American Association of University Professors, to which all 30 professors belong.

Efforts to reach Drummond, who was out of town, were unsuccessful. He announced in a memorandum distributed to faculty Friday that he will recommend Bush, a professor at Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in Fort Worth, Texas, to the board of trustees at its March meeting.

Faculty members object to Bush's lack of administrative experience, paucity of published work, and suspected political alliance with the Southern Baptist Convention's fundamentalist leadership.

"He's (Bush) not our candidate by any means. We have several people we selected. Bush is not a person that I personally, or the dean's selection committee, had," said Donald E. Cook, a professor of New Testament and one of four faculty members on the dean search committee.

Southeastern is operated by the 14.7-million member Southern Baptist Convention. In October 1987, W. Randall Lolley — who was then the seminary's president — academic dean Morris Ashcraft and six other administrators resigned in protest of efforts by the school's new board of trustees to ensure the teaching of biblical inerrancy there.

That prompted investigations by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools and the Association of Theological Schools in the U.S. and Canada, the seminary's accrediting agencies.

Soybeans Promoted

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The state Department of Agriculture is involved in a soybean promotion that the agency calls the largest marketing campaign it has ever undertaken.

The campaign, called North Carolina Soybean Bonanza, involves the cooperation of 762 grocery stores with banks and feed, seed and chemical companies, said Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham.

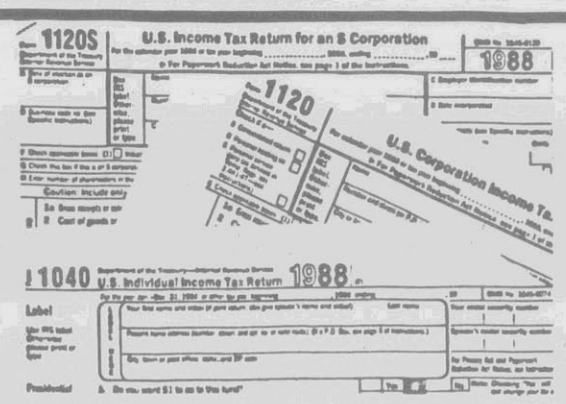

The project's goal is to educate consumers about the health benefits of using soybean oil and products containing soybeans and soybean by-products.

About 11 million coupons valued at $2.6 million will be available at grocery stores for immediate redemption beginning Feb. 15. The coupons will be distributed by "nutritional centers" set up in participating stores.

The campaign was announced at the 22nd annual meeting of the N.C. Soybean Producers Association. About 300 producers, NCDA officials, extension agents and others involved in the industry attended Friday's meeting.

"We feel like the products are literally going to jump off the shelves into shopping carts," Graham said. Coupons will be available on such items as cookies, margarine and pet foods.

Shooting Victim Buried; Police Tighten Security

By Scott McCartney
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Blacks gathered on Saturday to bury one of the two men killed in a police shooting that sparked race riots, and police said many of those arrested in the uprising would be kept behind bars until after the Super Bowl.

Elsewhere, Miami erupted in parties and hoopla for Sunday's football extravaganza in stark contrast to the tension and violence of last week, and police arranged for tight security at Joe Robbie Stadium, 15 miles north of the city.

About 150 people entered the Cathedral of St. Mary for the funeral of Allen Blanchard, a passenger on a motorcycle whose unarmed driver was gunned down Monday in the Overtown neighborhood by a Hispanic police officer. Police were chasing the motorcycle for a traffic violation.

Blanchard, 24, died of injuries suffered when the motorcycle crashed. His family made televised appeals for calm in Overtown and Liberty City. Driver Clement Lloyd, 23, who was killed by a shot to the head, will be buried Monday.

Riots touched off by the shooting left one man dead, and 11 others were treated for gunshot wounds. Thirteen buildings were torched and others looted in the two black neighborhoods, and 372 people were arrested, authorities said. There were less serious disturbances in the black section of the Coconut Grove neighborhood.

Blanchard was remembered as a youth who "resented trouble and violence," and worked with both the elderly and schoolchildren in his native Virgin Islands.

After the service, Blanchard's family and community leaders said they hoped the burial would also lay to rest the tension in the community.

"We would like to have peace and not have violence," brother Stanley Blanchard said.

"The tension has somewhat dissipated. ... As of now things are under control," said James Bush, president of Operation PUSH in Miami. "Forgiveness has already taken place. But we're not going to forget that there's a lot of things that need to be accomplished here in Miami before we can eradicate this type of action."

Another death was linked to the riots when a 66-year-old asthmatic was found dead Friday in his Liberty City apartment of a clogged bronchial tube. His family said he had tried unsuccessfully to stop the burning of a grocery store, and smoke and tear gas aggravated his condition.

Police remained on 12-hour shifts, ready for any signs of a rekindling of the violence, spokesman Angelo Bitsis said Saturday.

Sgt. Michael Mazur said authorities planned to keep about 150 rioters locked up until after the Super Bowl. They were unable to post $250 bail.

Mazur said there will be arraignments Monday. If those arrested plead guilty, they will be released based on time served, he said.

Police said only people with tickets for the game between the San Francisco 49ers and Cincinnati Bengals will be allowed past the parking gates at the stadium.

If protesters obstruct the entrance, they will be moved out quickly, spokesman Jim Hutton said. Some 300 officers have been assigned to the stadium.

On the edge of Overtown, Frank Sinatra, Liza Minnelli and Sammy Davis Jr. performed Friday night at the Miami Arena with a large police presence, but no trouble. A professional basketball game at the arena Tuesday night was canceled because of the unrest.

Fireworks burst over Biscayne Bay on Friday night as thousands of revelers listened to salsa and jazz bands at a shopping center and park less than a mile from where Lloyd was shot.

In nearby Miami Beach, 3,000 people attended a bash held by National Football League Commissioner Pete Rozelle at the Stephen Muss Convention Center.

The Rev. Al Sharpton, an activist who has led protests by blacks in New York City and in Atlanta, addressed a gathering of about 50 supporters in Liberty City. He is known for his involvement in the case of Tawana Brawley, the Wappingers Falls, N.Y., teen-ager who claimed she had been raped by whites but later, with Sharpton's backing, refused to cooperate with investigators.

Many local black leaders have said Sharpton is unwelcome in Miami, and police worried his visit was designed only to rekindle violence. A half-dozen officers watched from across the street.

Man Had Acted Odd Before Gunning Down Two Officers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — A man who wrestled away a policeman's gun and fatally shot two officers before he was gunned down had acted bizarrely hours earlier, police and friends said Saturday.

Dale Randy Connors mumbled to himself Friday, looked dazed and occasionally raised his arms in the air, said friends and street acquaintances.

Connors, 35, had been arrested at least twice for willful obstruction of a thoroughfare after standing in the middle of the street and waving his arms.

The usually affable, easy-going Connors became violent just before noon in the parking lot of a doughnut shop, and he later was overheard telling one officer he had shot, "I got you now."

"Basically, he was a nice, quiet, even-tempered guy," said Johnny Flamingo, 44, a friend of Connors who witnessed the shootings. "He was the kind of person who'd talk to you about God, but I never saw him like this before."

Connors had his own apartment but was well known among the homeless in downtown San Jose.

"I saw him about 7:35 this morning and he kind of mumbled," said Michael Williams, who said he has known Connors for six years. "I was wondering why he didn't speak. He wasn't like that. He was a good guy. He'd come around and have a little fun with us all the time."

Officers wore black bands on their badges Saturday in memory of their slain comrades, the first to die in the line of duty since 1985.

The Friday shootings, witnessed by about 30 people, were partly videotaped by San Jose State University students doing a documentary on the homeless. It began as a routine call of a disturbance outside Winchell's Donut House, a block from the college.

Connors had been acting "bizarrely," repeatedly challenging people to fight and may have been accosting them for money, said Police Chief Joseph McNamara.

Officer Gene Simpson, 45, a 19-year veteran working an overtime shift, approached Connors outside Winchell's, which had evicted Connors three times, and attempted to calm him down.

Almost immediately, Connors attacked the officer. Witnesses said the two men wrestled to the ground. But Connors managed to pull Simpson's .357-caliber Magnum from his holster.

Simpson ducked around cars in the parking lot in an attempt to escape Connors. But Connors followed, shooting.

Police said Simpson fell to the ground, either from a gunshot or after losing his footing.

Witness Samuel Tobias said that after the third shot, he heard Connors tell the officer, "I got you now."

Services Held For Children

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STOCKTON, Calif. — Grieving relatives and friends gathered at memorial services Saturday to mourn the five school children slain by a camouflage-garbed, suicidal drifter.

"Although there are some people in the United States who do bad things, most of the people in the United States do good things," said Patricia Busher, principal of Cleveland Elementary School, where the killings and the woundings of 29 students and one teacher happened last Tuesday.

"The tragedy that occurred at our school could have happened anywhere. There is no way to protect us from this kind of tragedy ... this senseless tragedy. In time, some of the cutting edge of the pain will go away," Busher said.

Her speech, at a memorial service attended by 200 people for the four Cambodian children killed, was translated as she spoke into the Cambodian language.

"Tragedy has followed you," state Sen. John Garamendi told the families, refugees from a country where more than 1 million people were killed in executions and enforced hardship after a 1975 communist takeover.

The service, held in Central Methodist Church, was for 8-year-old Oeun Lim, 9-year-old Rathanan Or, 8-year-old Ram Chun and 6-year-old Sokhim An.

During the morning, a Catholic funeral mass and burial were held for 6-year-old Thuy Tran, daughter of Vietnamese refugees.

Condemned Killer Discusses Unsolved Murders

By Ike Flores
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Bundy, scheduled to die in the electric chair for the kidnap-murder of 12-year-old Kimberly Leach in 1978, has been linked to as many as 36 killings and disappearances of young women in Washington, Colorado, Utah and other Western states.

The 42-year-old law school dropout was visited Saturday by officials from several Western states, and more interviews were scheduled for Sunday, said Paul Decker, assistant warden at Florida State Prison in Starke.

"We have been told by some investigators who met with him that he indeed is owning up to some of his acts," said Jon Peck, spokesman for Gov. Bob Martinez. "He indeed is making good on his promise to start talking."

Bundy's lawyers lost two more bids for a stay of execution Saturday. U.S. District Judge G. Kendall Sharp, who in 1987 called Bundy "a diabolical genius" and "probably the most competent serial killer in the country at this time," denied a request for a stay Saturday morning.

A three-judge panel of the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Atlanta denied Bundy's appeal in a telephone conference Saturday afternoon without addressing any of the legal issues, said court clerk Matt Davidson.

As a last resort, attorneys can appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court, but the nation's high court already refused to hear a separate Bundy appeal Tuesday.

Bundy last week had offered to trade information about other slayings for a delay in his execution, but Martinez, who signed Bundy's fourth death warrant Jan. 17, refused, saying he would not "negotiate with a killer."

Bundy also has been sentenced to die for the murders of two Florida State University sorority sisters.

John Tanner, a defense attorney before being elected a prosecutor in the Daytona Beach area in November, said law officers from several states told him that Bundy "is giving them verifiable hard facts concerning unsolved murders."

"It's my information that murders are being solved," said Tanner, who befriended Bundy and has acted as a spiritual adviser for two years. Tanner made the comments to the Orlando Sentinel late Friday.

During Saturday's appellate hearing, Bundy lawyer James Coleman had questioned the judge at the Leach trial in an unsuccessful effort to prove that the judge had privately discussed Bundy's mental competence with prosecutors.

Tanner told the Sentinel that Bundy called him last Tuesday and said: "I want to tell it all, but it will take longer than six days." That was right after the U.S. Supreme Court rejected an appeal and the governor signed the death warrant.

Tanner told the Sentinel he believes it could take as long as several months for Bundy to tell detectives everything they want to know, including where the remains of some victims are.

Tanner on Saturday did not return telephone calls from The Associated Press.

"Bundy had over 10 years to tell what he had to tell, and if he is now telling all, that's nice, I'm pleased, but his execution shouldn't be delayed any longer," said Attorney General Bob Butterworth.

Tanner said Bundy met Friday with Robert Keppel of the Washington attorney general's office, and Bill Hagmaier of the FBI Behavioral Sciences Unit in Quantico, Va. He would not identify other investigators or what cases they had discussed.

Bob Sexton of the Colorado attorney general's office was scheduled to talk to Bundy for 90 minutes Monday. Attorney General Duane Woodard said Colorado investigators chose the last time slot available before the execution because "We believe this last shot at him will be the best shot. Perhaps he will show some remorse."

"We're most hopeful of learning where he may have buried his victims," Woodard said. "That would go a long way toward helping alleviate some of the grief of parents and loved ones."

Ann Rule, of the Seattle area, author of a book on Bundy titled "The Stranger Beside Me," said Saturday she expects that Bundy will reveal many details of his crimes before his death.

She recalled hearing a police tape in which Bundy described his escape from a jail in Colorado. "There was such pride in his voice," she said, "as he described to detectives, which for him are the perfect audience, how clever he had been.

"I've always thought that when he was absolutely sure that the end was at hand that he would not be able to resist describing to police how he had accomplished his murders. For him what good would all the cleverness be without ever getting to tell anybody?"

Prisoner Died In Inmate-Set Fires At Lorton, Va., Complex

By Anita Womack
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LORTON, Va. — Officials at a troubled District of Columbia prison complex spent Saturday cleaning up from a series of fires that left one prisoner dead, another injured, and gutted an administration building.

Inmates took advantage of a power failure that occurred at about Friday night to set a series of fires, according to Corrections Department spokeswoman Pat Wheeler.

Two inmates were stabbed during the disturbance, a press release issued Saturday by the D.C. Department of Corrections said. Both were taken to Dewitt Army Hospital at nearby Fort Belvoir, where one of the inmates was pronounced dead. He was identified as Andre Drake, 26, of Washington, D.C. The injured prisoner, Jerry Gill, 36, a Shelby, N.C., native, was taken by helicopter from Dewitt to D.C. General Hospital, where he is listed in stable condition.

Gill, who is eligible for parole in August 1996, is serving a five- to 15-year sentence for rape and several other convictions. Drake had been convicted of simple assault and was serving two to five years for unauthorized use of a vehicle. He would have been eligible for parole in 1990.

One blaze engulfed the prison's main adminstration building, as Fairfax County, Va., firefighters refusing to enter the grounds stood by for more than an hour. They said they were waiting until prison guards could contain inmates who roamed the grounds freely.

A damaged heating system, smoke and water at one of the complex's 25 dormitories forced prison officials to move about 60 prisoners to the D.C. Jail. Officials have said the prisoners will probably spend another night there.

Damage estimates from the fires have not been released.

The prison — one of 10 correctional institutions in the Lorton complex — is about 20 miles south of Washington and held 6,165 prisoners last month.

Mayor Marion S. Barry Jr., who came to the city-run prison complex from a presidential inaugural celebration at the city's convention center by helicopter, downplayed the incident. Barry was accompanied by his wife, Effi.

Rating the incident at two "on a scale of one to 10," Barry said, "it could have been a lot worse."

Corrections officials said a power outage had briefly knocked out the lights at the facility.

William Falls, an operations manager at the Virginia Power Company said Saturday that about 620 customers in the nearby Occoquan area of Prince William County, Va. loss power from 9:15 p.m. until about 10:13 p.m. Friday. But he said he had not been notified that the prison had experienced an outage.

At least four fires were set during the incident, according to Lt. Mike Reilly, spokesman for the Fairfax County fire department. Ms. Wheeler said the fires were brought under control at about 2:30 a.m. One blaze destroyed the main administration building for the medium-security central facility. One dormitory and a supply unit also received "minor damage," Ms. Wheeler said.

Police from Fairfax County, the district and Virginia State Police ringed the outer fences to guard against escape attempts, county officials said. All inmates were accounted for within about four hours after the fires started.

Members of the D.C. police department's special operations division and civil disturbance unit — some on overtime duty because of the events surrounding President Bush's inauguration — rushed to the scene, as did about a half dozen D.C. fire department units, police said.

The disturbance was the latest in a series of problems plaguing the city prison system, including escapes, accusations of drug dealing inside prison walls, disorders and years of litigation to reduce chronic overcrowding.

But corrections director Hallem Williams said early Saturday the disturbance was not caused by overcrowding. "We are in compliance with the cap and overcrowding was not the issue," he said. In July 1986, fires set by inmates destroyed four dormitories at the Occoquan area of the correctional complex. That blaze was blamed for severely intensifying the crowding that has plagued the prison system.

Supremacists Pelted With Rocks

By Joseph B. Frazier
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Six white supremacists marched through downtown Saturday surrounded by National Guard troops in riot gear as hundreds of angry counterdemonstrators hurled bricks, rocks and insults at them.

A half-dozen law enforcement officers were injured as violence broke out along the route and in spots throughout downtown after the march. Police reported 31 arrests.

Two thousand police officers and National Guardsmen surrounded the Capitol and lined the mile-long march route, trying to keep about 1,000 counterdemonstrators away from the white supremacists.

John Bankhead, a spokesman for the Georgia Bureau of Investigation, said the counterdemonstrators overwhelmed the security forces at some points along the mile-long route. But the white supremacists completed their march unscathed.

"I wouldn't call it a riot," said Public Safety Commissioner George Napper, who was quickly surrounded by an angry crowd of about 50 people when he appeared downtown after the march. "It's an unusual situation that we're going to contain."

He told the crowd the white supremacists had a right to march, adding, "They're entitled to protection. it's not always easy."

The six marchers were among 10 white supremacists who had rallied at the state Capitol, marking the second anniversary of clashes between civil rights marchers and white onlookers in neighboring Forsyth County.

Rally organizer Richard Barrett, a Mississippi lawyer and leader of the white supremacist Nationalist Movement, had predicted 1,000 supporters would attend his rally and march, which also was a protest of last week's observances honoring the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. But he drew only 10.

"People ask me, 'Where are your numbers?'" Barrett told the nine supporters at the Capitol. "How many people were at Kitty Hawk (where the Wright brothers made their historic flight)? I don't know, but it changed the course of history. I have the spirit of Kitty Hawk in my heart."

As Barrett's group walked the mile from the Capitol to near The Omni sports arena, they were surrounded by riot-helmeted Guardsmen, massed shoulder to shoulder, who covered almost a full city block.

The Guardsmen were led by a convoy that included 12 motorcycle officers, four police cars, two dozen officers on foot, two police buses and two vans.

At the end of the route, the marchers were met by dozens of youths throwing bottles, bricks and other objects. The violence scattered dozens of curious bystanders, including conventioneers in town for a homebuilders trade show.

After the march, hundreds of people milled about at spots throughout downtown. Vandals at the Underground Atlanta shopping and entertainment complex, which is under construction, threw building materials.

Police used riot shields and clubs to disperse the crowds, and several people were seen struck by policemen wielding billy clubs.

During the melee, a police officer was knocked unconscious by a flying rock, a National Guardsman was injured by a brick that hit his foot, the Georgia Bureau of Investigation said several of its agents were hurt, and Grady Hospital said it was treating two officers from the state Department of Natural Resources.

Bush Relishes First Day On Job

President 'Couldn't Wait' To Get Started

By Susanne M. Schafer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush admitted Saturday with a sheepish grin that he got lost wandering around on his first night in the White House but vowed to "get to work ... serious work" on his first day in the Oval Office.

"I couldn't wait to get in here ... It's wonderful," said Bush, seated before a crackling fire with his mother, Dorothy Prescott Bush, by his side.

"Oh, I think it's the most exciting day of my life — so far!" said Mrs. Bush, who was seated in the traditional chair reserved for visiting heads of state and dignitaries when they visit the president.

From around 8 a.m. when Bush popped his head out of a second-floor window to wave to tourists, the new president started a first day that had its hectic moments. Several dozen inaugural week visitors toured the mansion's ceremonial rooms and caused more commotion than the White House has seen in years.

Bush — clad in a suit and sweater against the January chill — led several dozen members of his family on an impromptu tour of the South Lawn and tennis court, capping the stroll by tossing a footfall with his sons.

Then the new president joined about 240 of his family members for lunch in the East Room.

Shortly before 9 a.m., Bush strolled across the colonnade and entered the Oval Office, stealing a few private moments with the matriarch of his family.

Even at that hour, he already had put his stamp on the office — several pens were neatly arranged on a gilt plate on his desk, accompanied by a letter holder and a trio of books. Pictures of Bush family members in plastic frames crowded the table behind his ornate wooden desk.

As he chatted amiably with reporters, the president sipped coffee from a green and gold cup emblazoned with the eagle of the presidential seal.

A somber portrait of George Washington in full dress uniform looked down upon the nation's 41st president. A dark bronze bust of Teddy Roosevelt played sentry by a side door.

Asked how he felt on his first visit to the office, Bush said, "It feels just fine," noting that his large family was "settling in ... after the glamor and excitement of the inauguration."

"I can't wait to get to work ... serious work. And we're going to do some here today," Bush said. He said he has "a good full schedule" for next week.

"I got lost in the White House yesterday evening when we came in, trying to find a couple of kids rooms," Bush admitted when asked about his first night in the mansion.

As his mother beamed, Bush reached over and patted her on the knee. "This is the one who told me not to brag about myself and to bend my knees when I volleyed," Bush cracked.

The president said he began his day around 6 a.m., caring for a sick grandchild, Nancy Ellis LeBlond, and that the recovery was rapid — "Pumped a half a Tylenol into her and she's looking good. Ate two pancakes."

Asked about the note President Reagan left for him on Friday before leaving the office, Bush told an aide to pull it from the desk drawer.

Holding high a notepad with the inscription, "Don't let the turkeys get you down," Bush showed reporters how Reagan had written his successor he'd "have moments when you'll want to use this particular stationary. Well, go to it."

"You'll be in my prayers. God bless you and Barbara. I'll miss our Thursday lunches," Bush quoted Reagan as saying in the note.

Bush also touched on matters of policy ranging from U.S.-Soviet relations to relations with Congress.

He told reporters that "the United States will stay strong" and that occasionally presidents are called upon to use force. "This president will be no different," he vowed.

He went on to muse about the limits of presidential power and said he intended to work with Congress "not only to avoid the erosion of power but to re-establish ... the firm hand that I think the Constitution gave the president."

Bush, who has vowed not to answer questions in the so-called "photo opportunities" set up by the White House, insisted that his 17-minute session with reporters and photographers "is not a phot op."

"I love it when it's tranquil and peaceful like this," Bush told the assembled reporters and photographers as the cameras clicked and the reporters asked questions.

President Loves His Rinds

In Spite Of Their Cholesterol, Salt, Fat

By Paul Recer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Pork rinds? They're loaded with cholesterol, salt and fat. But they crunch pleasingly and explode on the palate with delight before dissolving into a light, bacon-flavored residue. And President Bush loves them.

He was introduced to the crispy tan strips during his days as an oilman in West Texas. After a tough day in the oil fields, pork rinds, washed down with a cold beer, seems like a food of kings — or of presidents.

But a diet laced with pork rinds, say nutrition experts, is bad news for a guy with a job like George Bush's.

"This is an appropriate snack for somebody who is doing a lot of manual labor — an agricultural worker, a guy working on the chain gang, or building railroads," said Dr. Wayne Callaway, an associate clinical professor of nutrition at George Washington University. "Where they are burning up to 4,000 calories a day and sweating a lot, this would be fine."

"As a general snack, it's not a good idea," he said in a recent interview. "I think once a year would be fine."

According to a U.S. Department of Agriculture analysis, a two-ounce package of pork rinds contains 315 calories; 32.5 grams of protein; 18.9 grams of fat; 58 milligrams of cholesterol, and 1,054 milligrams of sodium.

In effect, a small package of the hog chips has 20 percent more calories, almost twice the fat and double the sodium of a typical fast-food hamburger. But the snack also has almost three times more protein than the burger.

The fat, cholesterol and sodium, says Callaway, make pork rinds an unhealthy addition to a typical American diet that already is high in those elements. He said jelly beans, the treat preferred by former President Reagan, are a much more healthy snack.

"On the other hand," Callaway added, "if Mr. Bush had a cholesterol of 165 ... and was otherwise healthy and was eating this stuff all day long, then I wouldn't make a big to do about it."

According to his staff, President Bush's cholesterol count is 192 — well above the pork rind safety limit suggested by Callaway.

Bush is so fond of the fried pig skin that in his primary campaign last April he stopped in Lima, Ohio, and met with the president of Rudolph Foods Co., one of the nation's top pork rind processors.

"He said he learned about (pork rinds) in Texas," said John E. Rudolph, the food company president. "He told me, 'I eat the heck out of these things.'"

But the president is not alone in his craving for fried hog hide.

"Pork rinds are a $200 million part of the $6 billion snack food market," said Rudolph. "They're just a little less popular than pretzels, but they're crawling ahead by 4 to 5 percent a year."

Rudolph's company produces both the finished product and the partially-prepared "pellet" that other companies "pop" into the snack food.

Rudolph believes pork rinds originated decades ago in Mexico. He and his company modernized the technique and spent the last 33 years trying to sell the product to a skeptical world.

Pork rinds start with raw, fresh hog hides delivered to the Lima plant. The skins are cut into one-inch squares and smoke-cured like bacon. Then they are rendered, a process that extracts grease and moisture and shrivels the strips into hard kernels called "pellets."

Hahn Pays Visit To S.C.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENVILLE, S.C. — Jessica Hahn says she found it difficult to return to the South, the heart of the PTL television ministry constituency, but came anyway to help promote a car show.

"In this part of the country, I didn't know if I was going to get kicked or kissed," said Ms. Hahn, whose sexual encounter with PTL founder Jim Bakker helped lead to the downfall of the evangelical empire.

Signs such as "Jessica is a Disgrace to All Women," which greeted the former church secretary upon her arrival Friday at the Greenville-Spartanburg Airport, no longer bother her, she said.

"When you get Jessica Hahn, you get controversy. Some people like me, and some people don't," she said.

Right Off The Bat, Bush Is In A Predicament

By Terence Hunt
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — George Bush begins his presidency awash in political good will for the moment but strapped in the long run by the legacy of debt from the Reagan administration. The trick is to jump start his term without any money.

Bush has been trying to dampen expectations of a dazzling new start, perhaps hoping to insure that any early achievements seem larger than life.

Dismissing the notion of a dramatic first 100 days; Bush said in an inauguration-eve interview, "I'm not shooting for any 100 days. And I think it's kind of a concept that doesn't really apply."

Bush is guaranteed of making a splash, though, just by comparison with the way Ronald Reagan did things. There will be plenty of differences to highlight — many of them that will depict Bush as a busy, hands-on manager in contrast to Reagan's laid-back style.

A late sleeper, Reagan never got to work before 9 a.m. On his first day, Bush was on the move at 8 a.m., leading a tour of the White House for selected tourists. On regular work days, Bush is expected to be in the Oval Office between 7 a.m. and 7:30 a.m.

In public and private appearances, Reagan relied heavily on prepared scripts and "talking points" written on file cards. Bush is more comfortable speaking off the cuff, though he, too, depends on speech writers to write formal remarks.

Where Reagan's schedule was carefully choreographed, Bush is spontaneous and often unpredictable. While Reagan consented to always be accompanied by the press, Bush said he won't wait around for reporters and will come and go as he pleases. "You just don't want to be totally isolated," he said.

There will be a big emphasis on family and children in the Bush White House. He has four grown sons and a daughter and 10 grandchildren who will be frequent visitors.

While Reagan was not fond of traveling overseas, Bush loves it, making 40 separate foreign trips and visiting 74 nations since 1981. He'll go to Tokyo for the Feb. 24 funeral of Emperor Hirohito and has not ruled out other stops on that trip. A NATO summit in Brussels is likely in April, and an economic summit in Paris is set for July.

As Reagan flew into retirement on Friday, he acknowledged, "I think there are a lot of things yet to be done. ... Certainly a change with regard to the abortion situation — (I) couldn't get that done yet." He also mentioned his futile efforts to get authority for line-item vetoes on the budget and to win passage of a constitutional amendment for a balanced budget.

For Bush, the realities of the deficit loom over everything else on the domestic agenda.

On Monday, Bush will have his first Cabinet meeting and the budget is sure to be Topic A. On Tuesday, he wants to meet at the White House with the bipartisan leadership of Congress to open talks on the $150 billion budget deficit bequeathed by Ronald Reagan. On Feb. 9, he will address a joint session of Congress to announce his budget priorities.

For now, at least, congressional Democrats are treating Bush warmly. "Bush is extending the hand of friendship and we intend to extend ours in return," said Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine.

Former House Speaker Thomas "Tip" O'Neill, who led the Democrats' budget battles with Reagan, exulted, "It's the dawn of a new era. We're back to normalcy in the White House. How delighted I am."

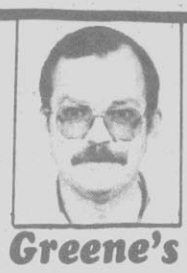

No one expects the honeymoon with a Democratic Congress to last forever, and some think it will end sooner than later. "The Hill is stacked against them. It will give this administration little or no slack," said Reagan's former political adviser, Mitchell Daniels. "The Hill will treat this as an extension of the Reagan administration."

Already the deficit has forced Bush to scale back on education initiatives and other plans. "Our funds are low," he said in his inaugural address. "We have a deficit to bring down. We have more will than wallet; but will is what we need."

Bush, in an interview, said, "We'll have to sort through and set priorities. Some of what I want to do will have to wait on a solution to the budget question."

While Bush and his lieutenants are hanging tough, polls show that a majority of Americans doubt that the new president will be able to live up to his promise not to raise taxes. He has to find billions of dollars for the savings and loan industry crisis, the cleanup and repair of the nation's nuclear weapon plants and other costly problems.

There also are vexing national security and foreign policy problems. For the Pentagon, Bush has to decide on a scaled-down budget and choose between two strategic weapon systems, the MX missile or the Midgetman. He plans to order a major reassessment of how to deal with the Soviet Union on arms control and other areas. The Middle East and Central America also demand immediate attention.

Presidential Departures: One Was Bitter, One Bittersweet

By W. Dale Nelson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Nearly a decade and a half after Richard M. Nixon, a distraught former president beset by the past, flew home to California, another former president has followed in his path — serene, popular and proclaiming that he looks to the future as he nears his 78th birthday.

The contrasts between Nixon and Ronald Reagan were inescapable as Reagan flew west after George Bush's inauguration Friday. Reagan left Washington declaring that it was "very pleasant living" in the White House but there are "a lot of things yet to be done" outside of it.

Nixon, driven to resignation by the Watergate scandal, took off by helicopter from the South Lawn of the White House on Aug. 9, 1974, and was aboard an Air Force jet to his native state by the time Gerald Ford was sworn in to succeed him.

Reagan, whose own administration was plunged into turmoil by the Iran-Contra affair he professes not yet to understand, sat by benignly on the Capitol's western porch as Bush took the oath of office. Then he boarded a helicopter for the eight-minute flight to Andrews Air Force Base and the same jet trip west.

Nixon, born and raised in California, called his departure from Washington "the nightmare ending of a long dream."

Reagan, a Midwesterner who adopted California as his home, said the journey back there for him and former first lady Nancy Reagan was "a return to a life we did love very much."

Nixon went to an exile of seclusion and silence — first in California, then in New York, then in New Jersey — only recently emerging to proclaim his views in books, articles and public appearances.

Reagan said he will quickly be "out on the mash potato circuit" pushing his proposals for budgetary and electoral reform.

Asked what he would miss most about Washington, he said, "I haven't tried (thinking about) that; it was very pleasant living there..."

As to what they would like most about their new life, he said, "Well, because it will be a return to a life we did love very much. California isn't a place in my mind, it's a way of life, so that is the sweet part of the bittersweet experience."

Reagan often conferred with Nixon while in office and once said that as fellow Californians they had a "closer bond" than he enjoyed with former presidents Carter or Ford.

Nevertheless the two men's attitudes toward past and future seem to differ greatly.

Nixon, 61 when he left office, asked diplomat Vernon Walters some months later, "What did I do wrong?"

If there is any such soul searching in Reagan, he does not show it.

The circumstances of his departure as the first president since Dwight Eisenhower to complete two terms are, of course, immeasurably happier.

Still, the stark contrasts stand out. In his farewell to his staff in the East Room, Nixon said, "Always remember, others may hate you — but those who hate you don't win, unless you hate them."

The Quayle Pledge

By William M. Welch
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Vice President Dan Quayle, in his first full day on the new job, pledged Saturday to remember his small-town midwestern values and "to live up to the awesome trust you have placed in us."

Quayle spent much of his first full day as vice president at his new home, the vice president's residence at the Naval Observatory in Washington.

He relaxed and made final touches to the text of his first formal speech as vice president, which he was delivering at an evening "Tribute to Democracy" at Constitution Hall.

Quayle also made plans to conduct his first official acts as vice president Monday morning.

At the request of President Bush, Quayle is to administer oaths of office to the new presidential and vice presidential staffs in the White House's East Room, Quayle press secretary David Beckwith said.

Quayle scheduled a mid-morning meeting on Monday with anti-abortion leaders, which Beckwith said was being held in conjunction with the anniversary of the Supreme Court's decision upholding the right of women to have abortions.

Quayle, his wife Marilyn and their three children planned to return to their suburban Virginia home Sunday, Beckwith said. The electricity in the official residence will be shut off for several days of repairs and renovations, and they will wait a week or more before moving back in, he said.

In remarks prepared for the Constitution Hall speech, Quayle praised the wisdom of average Americans and the strength of hometown values.

"First in the House of Representatives, then in the Senate, now in the vice presidency, I have tried and will continue to try to live according to the values I learned in Huntington, Indiana," Quayle said.

"And I'll work to make sure our government lives up to the expectations of the decent, hard-working citizens of Huntington — and of the thousands of towns and suburbs and cities across our nation."

Quayle said the new administration "will be judged, and it will deserve to be judged, by how well it does in securing the blessings of liberty to ourselves and extending those blessings to others." He said it will also be judged "by how well we succeed in sharing and deepening the enjoyment of the blessings of liberty here at home."

Authorities Prevent Vigil At Student Activist's Grave

By Alison Smale
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia — Police blocked roads and stopped strangers on Saturday to prevent a vigil at the grave of a student who burned himself to death 20 years ago to protest the Soviet-led invasion.

In the village of Vsetaty, 18 miles north of Prague, authorities checked the identifications of Western reporters and Czechoslovaks traveling on roads to the village.

The village was the hometown of Jan Palach, who burned himself to death in Prague's Wencenslas Square to protest the Soviet invasion that crushed the country's Communist Party reforms of 1968.

Czechoslovaks without Vsetaty residence permits or police permission to pass the roadblocks were told they could not go to the village, where the part of the cemetery where Palach is buried was closed for "technical reasons," according to a sign outside.

The Charter 77 human rights group called the vigil at Palach's grave, but Western reporters at Vsetaty saw no sign of them in the village. Activist Petr Uhl said on Friday that passenger trains traveling to Vsetaty would not stop there on Saturday.

Uniformed police also patrolled Wenceslas Square late Saturday, but there were no crowds gathered as there had been the previous six evenings in the longest wave of unrest since the weeks after the 1968 invasion.

An attempt to commemorate Palach on Jan. 15 was broken up by police, spawning a week of demonstrations in Prague.

The youth daily Mlada Fronta reported that police arrested 280 people during a demonstration Thursday, when truncheon-swinging riot police charged a crowd of more than 2,000, beating several people.

Fourteen people, including three policemen, sought medical aid after that demonstration, Mlada Fronta said. Nine people, including a 59-year-old man who suffered a fractured skull, were injured on Jan. 15, it said.

Police threats of violence and a heavy presence of riot police dispersed a silent crowd that gathered in Wenceslas Square for a sixth day on Friday.

Mlada Fronta also reported that anonymous bomb threats had been made in the past 11 days against two Prague schools, the city's Kotva department store, the main railway station and the National Theater.

The reports that violence had been threatened appeared to be part of the efforts of Communist authorities to discredit dissidents and demonstrators.

Mlada Fronta said all the places where bombs reportedly were planted were searched and nothing was found.

But Jiri Schwarz, manager of the Kotva department store, said he knew nothing about a reported bomb threat when asked about it by a Western reporter.

Fog Causes Wrecks

PADUA, Italy (AP) — Two people were killed and at least 10 were injured in highway pileups caused by thick fog Saturday in northern Italy, traffic police said.

The plains in the Po Valley were wrapped in thick fog for a 27th consecutive day. The international airports at Milan and Venice operated for only a few hours and several flights were rerouted.

Police said the most serious incidents occurred on the Padua to Bologna highway, in almost zero visibility. Following a series of chain collisions, the highway was closed for several hours.

Cold Weather Exercise May Stretch Endurance Limits

By Dean Fosdick
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — With temperatures dipping to 64 degrees below zero Saturday, about 26,000 servicemen prepared for a mock battle in maneuvers described as "the premier cold weather training exercise in the free world."

But participants in Brim Frost '89 may be getting too much of a good thing.

Air Force Col. John D. Hopper Jr. said orders were issued to field commanders allowing them to suspend the exercise if weather conditions become too severe.

That means temperatures ranging from 30 below to 65 below.

"We do have some curtailment of activity this morning," Hopper said Saturday, although noting that the exercise still is primarily in its command and communication phase.

About 26,000 servicemen, 120 aircraft and 1,000 vehicles from the United States and Canada are participating in the $15 million biennial arctic training exercise, which military planners called the largest of its kind in the West.

Among the players are the U.S. Army, Air Force, Marines, Coast Guard, Alaska National Guard and reserve units, and Canadian land and air forces.

The exercise is to conclude Feb. 1.

Maneuvers are planned at more than 17 sites around Alaska, but the focus of the exercise will be a set piece battle between two Army brigades on the Tanana Flats at Fort Greely, about 75 miles southeast of Fairbanks.

That will include a battalion-sized Canadian force dropped into the arctic winter darkness by parachute.

Planners said they were emphasizing safety throughout the maneuvers.

"Our track record has been very good," said Army Maj. Gen. Harold T. Fields Jr., in charge of land forces during the exercise.

"Last month, 3,500 soldiers at Fort Greely trained in weather that was 44 below zero and they came through the exercise with no serious cold-related injuries," Field said.

Army Maj. John Tilman said the bitter cold produced ice fog which has restricted visibility in many areas. "That has delayed some flights and stranded some flight crews around Eielson (Air Force Base) today," he said.

"We're also having problems with metal fatigue and rubber fatigue on vehicles and aircraft," Tilman said.

"This kind of stuff (weather) is old hat to the military personnel stationed in Alaska," he said.

Amnesty International Wants Brazilian Action On Killings

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Amnesty International has released a report urging Brazil's government to investigate "the widespread killing of community leaders."

The report came a month after the death of environmental activist Francisco "Chico" Mendes, whose murder drew international attention.

"Amnesty International fears that when public interest in the murder of Chico Mendes abates, his case will follow the pattern of cases now numbering many hundreds which remain pending because of inconclusive or obstructed investigations," the report said.

Brazilian authorities have said that Darcy da Silva, the 21-year-old son of a rancher, has confessed to the killing.

Mendes, 42, was an internationally acclaimed ecologist who said he received death threats from cattler ranchers for organizing demonstrations against deforestation of the Amazon rain forest. He was under local police protection when he was shot.

Amnesty International said authorities did not investigate six previous attempts to murder Mendes. It said he was one of five rural trade union presidents killed in 1988.

"These cases are among hundreds which show the result of governmental failure to take effective action against political killings in rural areas," said the organization, which won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1977.

"A new wave of death threats and killings began after the municipal elections of November 1988," Amnesty International said.

"More than 1,000 killings have occurred since 1980 in the context of land disputes.

"Amnesty International's information indicates that less than 1 percent of these killings have resulted in convictions of gunmen or of people who hired them to kill."

Truck-Taxi Collision Kills 24

Shahbuddin said 24 people were killed, but witnesses reported seeing 27 bodies, UNI said.

The accident occurred about 600 miles east of New Delhi. The report did not say whether the victims were in vehicles or walking on the street.

Walesa Says Plan Comes Up Short, But He Will Talk

By John Daniszewski
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GDANSK, Poland — Lech Walesa says the Communist Party's proposal to legalize Solidarity does not go far enough but that he is willing to talk with the government if the union's leadership agrees.

"Seeing all the needs and necessities, I will try to do everything on my side to begin talks about Poland ... as soon as possible," the Solidarity leader said after meeting with workers at the Gdansk shipyard, where the union was founded in 1980.

Walesa said at a news conference Friday that he was only expressing his own opinion and that he would consult with other Solidarity leaders over the weekend. The trade union will announce its position soon after that, he said.

"I will want to take advantage of all chances for agreement for Poland because we need it so badly. Time really presses us," Walesa said.

Poland's leader, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, endorsed the proposal in Warsaw on Thursday as a "momentous event" for the nation.

He said Solidarity could be legalized if the independent trade union federation agreed to respect the law.

The resolution also says new unions must stop accepting financial support from the West. It does not contain a timetable for legalization or call on new unions to refrain from striking, but party leaders have suggested a two-year trial period with no strikes.

Poles watched Jaruzelski's news conference on television and could read about the Communist Party proposal in today's newspapers, which carried the full text of the position paper on political and trade union freedoms.

"One can state — without any fear of misusing these words — that Poland is entering a qualitatively new stage of transformations of her political system," said a commentary in Zycie Warszawy, a Warsaw daily.

But Alfred Miodowicz, the head of the official OPZZ trade union alliance, who voted against the party proposal, said rank-and-file workers were not prepared for the changes.

"The situation is very tense in the country and I think we are facing very serious events in enterprises," he said at a news conference today. "Although the intent of this position was to bring about a peaceful mood in enterprises, it seems to me the effect could be just the opposite."

The Communist Party's Central Committee approved the union proposal Wednesday in a resolution that said Solidarity could be legalized so long as it is non-violent, respects the constitution and the law and helps reform the hard-pressed economy.

"Trade unions will be such as the working people want them to be," said the resolution, made public Thursday.

A subdued Jaruzelski said at a rare news conference in Warsaw that "our offer is honest and serious."

Asked if he would meet with Walesa, whom he had detained for 11 months after declaring martial law in 1981, Jaruzelski said: "Never say never."

The dramatic reversal by Jaruzelski and other party leaders underlined the failure of a seven-year campaign to eradicate the independent union movement and the personal popularity of Walesa.

The leadership, shocked by strikes in May and August and confronted by a worsening public mood, began to view Walesa as a potential partner in economic and political reforms aimed at reviving the failing economy.

At a news conference in Gdansk on Thursday, Walesa said he needed to examine the party proposal carefully.

"I will try to say something, when I see what it's like," Walesa said.

Beijing Citizens Remember Well The Surrender Of Jan. 22, 1949

By Kathy Wilhelm
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Radio stations broadcast the news 40 years ago Sunday to anxious Beijing residents: the city's Nationalist officials had surrendered peacefully and a long Communist siege was over.

She Diqing, now 71, remembers the day well. The announcement meant his imminent release from jail in Beijing for his underground Communist work.

Historian Wang Huilin is less sure of the dates but remembers clearly getting the news. He and friends, then students, ran into the streets and sang songs of celebration.

From a military standpoint, Beijing's surrender Jan. 22, 1949 was anticlimactic. After more than three years of civil war, the rest of northeastern China already was in Communist hands. Communist troops had surrounded the ancient walled city since Dec. 13.

Gen. Fu Zuoyi, Beijing's Nationalist commander, had no line of retreat and no chance of relief from Nationalist leader Chiang Kai-shek's forces in the south.

For Beijing's 2 million residents, the surrender meant the end to waiting and wondering whether the proud Fu, one of the Nationalists' most able generals, would choose to make a stand.

"It was a very dismal, difficult time. We never knew whether there would be violence or not," Derek Bodde, professor emeritus of Oriental studies at the University of Pennsylvania, said in a telephone interview. Bodde was in Beijing during the siege, busy translating a history of Chinese philosophy, and remembers filling his bathtub with water each day because water supplies often were cut.

Wang, who in 1949 was a student at Beijing Normal University and now teaches history there, remembers food supplies also were tight.

"Classes went on as usual. But everyone wanted a peaceful surrender. Aside from the possible loss of life, Beijing held so many ancient relics that would have been destroyed in a battle," he said.

The relics were part of Beijing's mystique as China's capital for centuries. The Nationalists made their capital in Nanking, to the south, but the Communists planned to restore Beijing's status and did not want to destroy the city first.

Beijing city officials have commemorated the fateful weeks in 1949 by issuing three books of photographs, reminiscences and documents.

She, now retired from a top position in Beijing's postwar government and a contributor to the books, recalled his work as an underground Communist organizer.

Even before the siege began, he said, he sent envoys to persuade Fu to surrender, starting with Fu's daughter, a member of the pro-Communist Democratic Youth Alliance that She headed.

"We feared that if we picked someone else to talk to Fu, he might be angry and kill the messenger," She said. "But we figured if we picked his daughter, he might be unhappy but he wouldn't do anything."

Several weeks later, She was arrested by Nationalist forces and spent the last 22 days before the surrender in jail.

W. Allyn Rickett, then a student at Beijing's Qinghua University outside the city wall, watched events from a different perspective.

Nationalist troops had set up an artillery unit on campus, said Rickett, now retired as a professor at the University of Pennsylvania.

"But on the night of the 13th, the Nationalists withdrew and the Communist forces went past the university and set up their lines around Beijing," he recalled in a phone conversation. The two sides dug into defensive positions in the arid winter landscape, trading occasional cannon volleys.

Rickett said he crossed Communist and Nationalist lines twice to enter Beijing and found a city crowded with refugee students whom the Nationalists had evacuated from other cities. They camped in parks and ancient temples.

"The place was loaded with troops and trucks rushing around. There were a lot of accidents," he said. Soldiers patrolled the dark streets at night to enforce a curfew.

"You couldn't see them and they couldn't see you," Rickett said. "I'd go along with a flashlight in my face to show I was a foreigner. Sometimes that got me by, sometimes I got yelled at."

Fu, meanwhile, paced the floor of his study in Beijing's former imperial palace and debated what to do, Major Gen. Zhou Beifeng, his former aide, wrote in the latest edition of Outlook Weekly magazine.

Zhou said Fu's hestitation lost him the chance to peacefully give up the nearby city of Tianjin, which he also commanded. Communists finally attacked on Jan. 14, and history books say 130,000 defenders were killed.

Syrian Defense Minister Says A U.S. Soldier Carried Bomb

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KUWAIT — Syria's defense minister alleged that Israel duped an American soldier into carrying the bomb that blew up a Pan Am jet over Scotland last month. Israel called the charge "ridiculous."

"An agent of Israeli intelligence, Mossad, handed him the bomb-laden bag to carry in return for $300,000, claiming it was diamonds worth $500,000 needed to be smuggled into the United States," Mustafa Tlass said in an interview published Saturday in Kuwait's daily Al-Qabas.

Reached in Damascus, Tlass confirmed the newspaper reported his statements correctly, but he refused to give additional information.

In Israel, Foreign Ministry spokesman Alon Leil said, "It is ridiculous and malicious. This story shows how the Syrian leaders are not serious toward Israel and peace in the region."

Syria is Israel's most vehement enemy in the Middle East. Israel has accused Palestinian terrorists of placing the bomb and has dismissed claims of Israeli involvement as ludicrous.

The Syrian minister did not say where he got his information, but he said it was known to Western investigators.

Britain's Sunday Express newspaper, in an unattributed report Jan. 15, said U.S. government investigators are looking into the theory the bomb went aboard the plane with a soldier involved in a diamond smuggling ring. All 259 people on board Pan Am Flight 103 were killed and 11 people on the ground in Lockerbie, Scotland, died when the Boeing 747 fell from the sky Dec. 21.

The flight originated in Frankfurt, West Germany and stopped in London en route to New York.

Tlass said "the one who carried the explosives aboard the plane in Frankfurt was one of the American soldiers serving at a base in West Germany and he did it unknowingly." He did not name the soldier.

British investigators determined the plane was destroyed by a bomb placed in the luggage hold, but they have not said who was responsible.

Representatives of the Palestine Liberation Organization have talked of a Mossad connection, suggesting Israel planned the attack to throw blame on the PLO and undermine a new dialogue between the PLO and Washington.

Suspicions also have turned on several Syrian-backed Palestinian factions which might be trying to derail peace overtures of PLO chairman Yasser Arafat.

In addition, a caller claiming to represent an Iranian group called the Guardians of the Islamic Revolution made two calls to The Associated Press in London saying that group planted the bomb.

Airport Incident

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Two men waiting to throw dynamite at a plane carrying author and activist Mario Vargas Llosa shot and wounded four people when their attempt was foiled, a newspaper reported Saturday.

The daily newspaper Expreso reported the plane belonging to the domestic airline Faucett had just landed Thursday in Pucallpa, 355 miles northeast of Lima, and was taxing to a halt when the incident occurred.

Deaths Blamed On Pollution

BURSA, Turkey (AP) — Heavy smog fed by burning coal and automobile exhaust killed at least four people in this western city last week, according to a heart specialist.

Ahmet Yalim, a cardiologist at a state hospital in Bursa, was quoted by the Anatolia News Agency as saying the hospital had been treating about 100 people a day for three days for problems related to the pollution.

Yalim said four patients with these symptoms died at the hospital.

Authorities on Wednesday closed schools and banned private cars from traveling in the city, Turkey's fifth largest.

Bursa, 90 miles south of Istanbul, has a population of about 800,000 and is a hub for Turkey's auto industry. Anatolia said wealthy residents with weekend homes outside the city left town to escape the pollution.

New Laws In Force As Iran Executes Traffickers

By Ed Blanche
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Harsh new laws mandating death for anyone found with small amounts of drugs took effect in Iran on Saturday, part of a ferocious crackdown in which scores of smugglers have already been executed.

The laws make the death sentence mandatory for people convicted of possessing 30 grams, or just over an ounce, of heroin, codeine or morphine or smuggling 11 pounds of opium or hashish. Simple possession of opium or hashish carries a jail term.

It is the toughest crackdown since the early days of the Islamic revolution, when hundreds of alleged drug users and pushers were rounded up and executed.

The new campaign followed the Aug. 20 cease-fire in the Iran-Iraq war and an alarming surge in drug abuse blamed in part on hardships caused by the 8-year-old conflict.

Other contributing factors cited were Iran's religious ban on alcohol, worsening unemployment and the breakdown of political control in the revolution's early days.

"The problem ... is a political one," he said recently. "The superpowers, just as they fought the Islamic revolution on the battlefield and in the economic field ... use narcotics as one method to battle with the people ... and taint the revolution."

Official figures on drug abuse in Iran are not available. But Parliament Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani recently indicated the scale of the crisis by referring to "the devastating problem of drug abuse ... a blight that has ruined some of our young people."

Even before the new law came into force, Iranian authorities had rounded up more than 1,000 suspected smugglers and pushers, running them through Islamic tribunals and hanging them as soon as they were found guilty.

On Jan. 7, 19 smugglers were hanged or shot by firing squads.

Nine days later, Iran's official media said 56 were executed in one day in various cities, a chilling display of Tehran's determination to eliminate drugs.

Jomhuri Islami urged that authorities "put an end to the disgraceful life of a few who take joy in ruining a nation only to fill their pockets.

"It's much better if some families lose their breadwinners in this way than a nation loses its youth."

The conservative Abrar daily noted the executions are the "beginning of the uprooting of addiction and narcotics."

Mohammad-Mousavi Khoeiniha, Iran's hard-line prosecutor-general who rose to fame in 1979 as the spiritual guide of militant extremists who stormed the U.S. Embassy in Tehran, said the executions will continue.

"We have no fear of increasing statistics on executions because those who become the victims of the traders of death are far greater in number than the smugglers," he said on Tehran Radio.

The new law was announced Dec. 5 by the 13-member Expediency Council, a body with special powers set up in February by Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini to speed up legislation snarled in Parliament.

Apart from the death sentences, the law provides for a minimum 20-year prison term for anyone convicted of addicting another person to drugs. Those convicted of causing widespread addiction could also face death.

The Expediency Council gave drug addicts six months to kick their habits or face imprisonment.

Mokhtar Kalantari, deputy commander of the Islamic Revolutionary Committees, or "komitehs," which have largely taken over law enforcement from police, acknowledged shortcomings in recent years in combatting the narcotics trade from neighboring Afghanistan and Pakistan while Iran concentrated on the war with Iraq. There are extensive poppy fields in Iran as well.

Officials say large quantities of narcotics are smuggled through Iran into Turkey and the Soviet Union.

Former President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, in exile in France, claimed in a recent New York Times interview that the Tehran government is involved in the drug trade "to make ends meet" and earns $2 billion a year from it.

Kalantari said authorities expect that 80 percent of the narcotics trade will be eliminated within two years.

Criticizing earlier laws, which carried far less severe penalties, he complained: "Perpetrators imprisoned for smuggling 75 tons of narcotics are just sitting in jail."

Doctors Say Artist Dali Near Death

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FIGUERAS, Spain — Doctors treating Salvador Dali for a heart ailment and other problems said Saturday the famed surrealist artist appeared to be close to death.

Dr. Carles Ponsati, Dali's chief physician, said the 84-year-old painter has "a great will to live ... and this is what is keeping him alive."

He said Dali was not responding to treatment for heart trouble, which has been aggravated by pneumonia, and that he needs an oxygen mask to breathe.

Ponsati also heads Figueras Hospital, where Dali returned Wednesday after his condition deteriorated.

Dr. Joan Garcia San Miguel, who treated Dali during two previous hospital stays since November, told the Spanish news agency EFE the painter had only "a one-in-a-thousand chance" of surviving his present crisis.

"Even if he does, he would suffer the same again in a short time," he said.

Dali has suffered chronic heart ailments and has been in a wheelchair since August 1984, when he suffered severe burns in a fire in his former home in nearby La Pera.

Afterward, he moved to quarters next to the Dali Theater-Museum in Figueras, near the French border. He has since lived there in seclusion, fed through a tube and watched round the clock by a team of nurses.

In 1986, he underwent surgery to receive a heart pacemaker.

A founding member of the surrealist art movement, Dali is the last of an outstanding generation of Spanish painters that included Pablo Picasso and Joan Miro. Dali is best known for his eerie, dreamlike landscapes.

Figueras Mayor Mariano Lorca, a friend of Dali, told The Associated Press by telephone the painter had requested he make arrangements for Dali's burial in the inner court of the museum in Figueras.

Lorca said Dali also requested his body lie in state at his Galatea Tower residence next to the museum and that a funeral service be held in Figueras' San Pere Roman Catholic parish church, where Dali was baptized.

Lorca said parish priest Narcis Costabella visited Dali in the hospital Friday and Dali asked him to return.

Cuba Plagued By Housing Woes

By George Gedda
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAVANA, Cuba — Teresa, a 25-year-old professional, has put off a decision on whether to marry her boyfriend because that would mean moving in with his family.

Her predicament is just one symptom of this country's severe housing shortage: there simply is not enough space to permit young married couples to have their own apartments.

As a result, Teresa must decide whether she wants to continue living with her own family, or get married and move in with that of her prospective husband. Complicating the decision is the fact that she doesn't get along with some members of his family.

Many residences here have 10 occupants in a space more suitable for three or four.

In the Nuevo Vedado section, three families, all related, shared the same two-story home, once the residence of a pre-revolutionary oligarch. Since none of the families got along, they had their respective dinners in shifts — at 6, 8 and 10 p.m. Eventually, each family found alternate housing, easing what had been a wrenching experience for all concerned.

The government claims that every Cuban has a place to live and, indeed, the housing shortage is probably less acute here than in the overwhelming majority of other Latin American countries, where homelessness and sub-standard housing are often rampant.

But because Cuba has a different social system, the housing problems and the ways they are dealt with are not the same as they are elsewhere in Latin America.

Because young couples often have no privacy due to overcrowded conditions at home, the government runs a string of "posadas," or inns, where they can spend a few hours alone in a modest room for a nominal fee.

Occasionally, signs saying "2 for 1" can be seen hanging from apartment building balconies. That can mean that the couple there wants a divorce and is willing to trade their apartment for two smaller ones, one for each partner.

In the meantime, until alternate arrangements can be found, such couples often must live under the same roof.

Rodolfo Davalos, legal director of the National Institute of Housing, admits that this unhappy situation is a "common" occurrence in Cuba but he says usually in cases of marital difficulties, the husband packs up and leaves. An alternate solution is to construct a partition in the house, in effect, converting it into a two-family dwelling.

In 1986, President Fidel Castro said he was appalled at the evidence of corruption and profiteering in housing.

He discovered that state construction equipment, material and manpower were being used illegally to renovate existing housing, enabling the owners to sell it at big profits. The government struck back by forbidding the sale of housing altogether.

Thus, a Cuban family that wanted to move had no choice but to trade houses with another family. Last month, new regulations were instituted which permit the sale of housing once again but only if state inspectors give their approval. Their main interest is to guard against profit-making by home sellers.

There are ways for young Cubans to escape from an untenable housing situation. One is to volunteer for a "microbrigade," groups of mostly young Cubans who take leave of their regular job to work at a housing construction site.

The workers continue to receive the salary from their normal job and the state provides the equipment and the building materials. The normal workday is 10 hours but it is not unusual, as part of the spirit of self-sacrifice Castro tries to instill in his people, to find these workers on the job 12 to 14 hours a day.

For the typical 200 peso a month worker (about $160 at the official rate), the long hours mean an income of less than a peso an hour. But the payoff comes when, after two or more years, the "microbrigadista" is entitled to move into one of the apartments, at mininal monthly payments, which he or she has helped construct Rafael, a taxi driver, worked on a microbrigade at the Alamar apartment complex 12 years ago. After two years, he was allowed to move into one of the apartments, paying just 21 pesos a month. The apartment will be all his in four years.

The Alamar complex has grown to about 30,000 units. Dania, one of 18 women on a 90-person brigade, has spent two years as a construction worker there and the long hours obviously had taken their toll. She looked drawn and tired and said she looked forward to going back soon to her normal eight-hour a day job as a garment worker.

But she is luckier than her peers in some other communist countries, such as Poland and the Soviet Union, where the wait for an apartment sometimes exceeds 20 years.

The Cuban government abolished the microbrigade system for a time, then resurrected it two years ago in an effort to meet the increasing demand not only for housing but for day care centers and health clinics as well.

In previous years, housing was allocated largely on the basis of need but lately the government has been shifting its philosophy somewhat, showing a preference for workers who demonstrate diligence.

Thus, in the competition for new housing, a father of five who is indolent may lose out to an exemplary worker with only two children — a form of material reward in a country which usually relies on moral incentives to get people to work hard.

The microbrigades distribute among themselves half of the apartments they construct. The other half goes to the elderly or to others who are unable to volunteer for such work.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Foresight

Land Use Planning Prevents Conflict

It had to happen. In a rapidly-growing county, it was inevitable for conflict between a pristine environment and urban growth to rear its ugly head.

Now that has happened with Otter Creek Natural Area and a proposed nearby residential area and golf course. That conflict is tangible proof that it's past time for Pitt County to do solid, progressive land use planning.

In question is the future of Otter Creek Natural Area, a state-owned outdoor laboratory for East Carolina University's biology and botany departments. An ECU biologist who oversees the area feels it may be damaged by a 400-lot subdivision and golf course planned nearby. He feels the development will impair the wildlife-rich wetland habitat.

It doesn't take a degree in environmental science to see he's probably right. Simply put, the things people do with land often make it less useful for animals. That doesn't mean that a community must exclude either. It simply must plan sensibly for coexistence so conflicts are minimized.

Development is desirable; it brings prosperity and increases the tax base. Growth is a resource, but one that must be properly directed.

An area like Otter Creek is also an asset. It is a valuable teaching resource for the university. Graduate students conduct research projects there and the area is a component of the N.C. Natural Heritage program. It is the highest quality natural environment remaining in Pitt County.

Why, then, is there no mechanism in place to safeguard it from conflicting land uses? Because there is no land use planning in the county. Period. Homeowners, businesses and industries are just as vulnerable to inappropriate development as natural areas.

The Otter Creek conflict forces the people of Pitt to consider the effects of opposing forces — development versus the environment. But more important, it forces the community, for the first time, to see the tangible effects of no land use planning in a county rapidly becoming urban.

While little can be done to prevent the Otter Creek conflict, it can be minimized. Developers of the property have declared the houses and golf course will be built with attention to environmental impact. They have appropriately expressed a willingness to work with ECU to minimize damage to Otter Creek and should be held to high quality development standards.

But more important, the community must take steps to avoid future clashes between growth and Pitt County's natural resources. The land use study under way for the county is the most important step. Its findings are the key to directing the growth that is inevitable, indeed welcome, for Pitt.

Not Gifts

The East Needs Its Fair Share

It is a waiting game to see how the changes which took place in the North Carolina General Assembly on opening day will affect the direction the Legislature takes.

An interesting development since those shenanigans is the fact eastern North Carolina legislators formed a block to say that they won't support a new highway financing package without assurance of eastern road projects.

Specifically the group referred to U.S. 17, U.S. 159 from I-95 to the Outer Banks, U.S. 64 from I-95 to the Outer Banks and U.S. 264 from I-95 to Washington, N.C.

It is true some of the projects, including some on U.S. 264, are in various stages of planning and construction and they generally are in accord with the governor's strategic highway corridor program.

However the Wilson bypass is still years away and even a right-of-way route has yet to be decided.

Worse, the interchanges originally planned in the highway which were deleted are not even in sight in present highway planning. They should be.

These and other eastern projects are not gifts. They are critically needed projects which will provide safety and economic development in the east. We pay for them each time we purchase fuel.

If we are going to pay more it is not unreasonable for our legislative representatives to expect a return on the taxes paid.

The same applies to education and tourism. Eastern interests should not be neglected.

Eastern North Carolina is the poor end of the state insofar as state appropriations are concerned because we allowed that to happen.

Public Forum

To the editor:

In the past few years there has been quite a bit of discussion here in Greenville concerning three related subjects: planning and zoning, environmental protection and economic development. Sometimes the issue is trees, historic or aesthetic; sometimes it is the survival of wildlife; sometimes it is roadside signs.

What all these discussions have in common is the question of whether regulation as a result of public policy decisions will stifle economic development either by making it too expensive for, say, a developer to build a building at a reasonable cost, or by sending out a signal that Greenville cares more about regulating businesses than attracting them.

Regulations aimed at environmental protection or aesthetic enhancement may indeed have some short-run monetary costs. It may cost a development more to hire a landscape architect or protect some trees, or for a company to dedicate some portion of its property for a greenbelt or buffer from the Tar River. But think of the towns you have visited that you have liked the best; that were the most beautiful, the most thriving. We will bet that those places had good land use planning and good environmental regulation. And we will bet that it is exactly the environment created by such responsible planning and regulation that will most attract new businesses and residents to Greenville, besides making it even more pleasant for those of us who live here already.

To the editor:

I congratulate the President of the United States on his new job. I did not vote for him, but he is my President.

May I respectfully recommend:

1. Forget Ronald Reagan. His legacy is no benefit to this and future generations. Salvage the destruction of our economy and the debt of the future.

Forget your promise, "Read my lips," and get on a fiscally responsible course of action. Meet responsibilities to the undernourished, the poor and the children of the upcoming generation. Raise taxes where needed to pay for these needs. If necessary, admit you misled a gullible and greedy public. God will forgive you.

Put the TV evangelists on notice that their use of monies will be scrutinized by the IRS and the FCC. Tammy and Jim Bakker and their ilk were licensed to steal from the public these past few years.

Take a sane approach to family planning, here and worldwide. An uncontrolled population growth is a common denominator for world disaster.

Rescind past giveaways and stop futures ones on mineral rights and facilities which are rightfully public domain. Giving corporations or individuals land or facilities at a few cents on the dollar is not "free enterprise."

Keep John Tower, if confirmed by the Senate, on a short leash.

Drive a hard, fair bargain in international trade.

Keep a middle class of professionals and skilled workers. They will support a broad tax base.

Send more people-to-people help to Central America. Forget the hired guns of the Contras.

Doing the honest and humanitarian is good politics. The Presidency is the Brass Ring. It can and will ennoble the man reaching for it. I wish you and Barbara — she will be a fine First Lady — well.

To the editor:

As a child it was a special adventure to play in the creek on 14th Street and often I saw Mr. Arthur, the owner of the house which stood on the property that will soon be a shopping center, riding on his horse. Last week when I rode past 14th and Charles and saw that every tree had been ripped out of the earth, I felt overwhelming despair in my heart and terror in my mind. Where will this end? Who is letting this happen? Will we allow every tree to be destroyed and cover Greenville with asphalt before we realize this is a terrible mistake?

Progress is important. Economic prosperity is important. But what pleasure will it bring us if we earn $250,000 each and live in a town of wall-to-wall concrete? Will our grandchildren thank us? Do you want Greenville to be another L.A.?

You and I as citizens will decide. Each of us will either stand up and be counted as one who supports economic growth and a quality of life or we will not. Phone Mayor Ed Carter and City Manager Greg Knowles, and your city councilperson to speak for a strong tree ordinance. Call "Save The Trees," 752-2261, to add your name to a telephone bank so citizens can be alerted when areas are in danger and next time we can act as a strong group before it is too late. Together as citizens we can take a stand to protect our trees. Commit to keeping the Green in Greenville.

A One-Liner For Every Occasion

Alvin Taylor

Sunday Morning Notes

The Leo Jenkins stories abound.

Jenkins, who died Jan. 14, was a persuasive public figure and, as is true of most such people, he usually had a one-liner for any occasion.

One of our reporters called Jenkins when East Carolina University was absorbed into the University of North Carolina system and then-President William Friday became his boss.

Prior to that Jenkins was a university president. Now his title was to be chancellor.

"How does it feel to be called chancellor?" the reporter asked him on the first day of the change.

"Oh," replied Jenkins, "I've been called worse."

When then-President John D. Messick left East Carolina University, there was little doubt that Jenkins, whom Messick brought to the college from New Jersey, was the man for the position of president.

In fact, at a trustees meeting a motion was made to elevate Jenkins to the presidency. "Wait," someone cautioned. "Aren't we supposed to appoint a search committee?"

The committee was named and the time-honored tradition of searching for a new president was conducted. The result was the same. Jenkins was still the choice. All of us in the east are the lucky ones.

While Jenkins was picked to come to ECU in 1947 and later selected to lead the school, a fan, recognizing Jenkins' fierce devotion to eastern North Carolina, once commented, "We didn't choose Leo. He chose us."

Jenkins loved to win... and he transmitted that desire to the athletic teams of his time.

Earl Aiken, who was then sports information director at East Carolina, recalled that Jenkins would visit the football players prior to big games and offer his pep talk. One such visit was at a practice before the football team's first appearance in the Tangerine Bowl.

Aiken recalled his words: "I like to win; I can't stand to lose and I don't like a tie, because a tie is like kissing your sister."

"'How does it feel to be called chancellor?' the reporter asked him on the first day of the change. 'Oh,' replied Jenkins, 'I've been called worse.'"

Dr. William Quick, a former pastor at St. James Methodist Church who returned from his present pastorate in Detroit to preach the Jenkins memorial service Tuesday, recalled a number of Jenkins' stories. One was about the lady who wrote asking that he look after her son who was coming to college here.

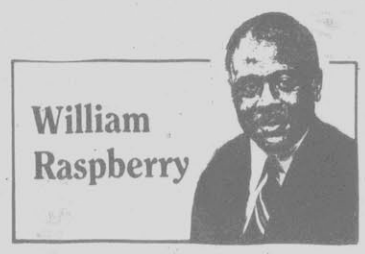

"Put him in a room with somebody who doesn't drink, smoke or run around and with a housemother who'll look after him. He is a poor boy and I don't want him ruined. I'm a good Methodist like you," she wrote. Then she added a P.S. "Dr. Jenkins, he ain't never been away from home except for four years in the Navy."

And Jenkins himself often expressed his love for the region. "The only way I'll ever leave," he once said, "is if they carry me out feet first."

No one ever did that, of course, and the bond of eastern North Carolina and the Leo Jenkins spirit will never be broken.

Forget Prop 42, Repeal Freshman Eligibility. Period

William Raspberry

WASHINGTON — I wish someone would explain to me the point of Proposal 42 put forward last week by the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

The point of Proposition 48, you will recall, was to keep colleges from exploiting young athletes. Under that rule, no freshman is eligible for varsity athletics unless he scores a minimum of 700 out of a possible 1,600 points on the Scholastic Aptitude Test (or 15 out of a possible 32 on the American College Test) and earned at least a C average in high school.

That rule, viewed by many as calculated to reduce the dominance of black players in big-time college athletics, was controversial enough. (Most white students who take the entrance tests score above the 70015 cut-off; most black students don't.) But at least it admitted of some justification. It would, said its backers, make sure that youngsters recruited as student-athletes were students first. No athletics until they got their academics together.

And apparently a lot of youngsters have done just that. With a year to devote to their studies, and the threat of athletic ineligibility as an incentive, a lot of borderline students have caught up to the Proposition 48 admission standards and seem to be doing reasonably well in class. One cheer, at least, for Proposition 48.

But what is the justification of Proposal 42, which, beginning in the 1990-91 school year, would keep NCAA member schools from granting athletic scholarships to students who fail to meet the requirements of Proposition 48?

Proposition 48 says meet the requirements, or you don't play. Proposal 42 says meet the standards or you don't go to school at all.

Well, it doesn't quite say that, but for an awful lot of kids, particularly from the inner-city playgrounds, that will be the effect of it.

The earlier rule, by allowing NCAA schools to invest an athletic scholarship in a borderline student, gave the schools an incentive to provide the academic help required to bring them up to speed. That can be a good thing for a youngster who has spent too much of his life working on his game and too little of it hitting the books.

But for whom is Proposal 42 a good thing?

The most obvious answer is that it's good for those schools that don't recruit players who can't pass muster with Proposition 48. What it says is that we don't want these youngsters, but we also don't want our kids to have to play against them.

But it was more than this athletic unfairness that led Georgetown University basketball coach John Thompson to stage a one-man protest by walking off the court at the start of the Georgetown game with Boston College Saturday.

Thompson, who has had no Proposition 48 casualties on his teams (and virtually all of his players earn their degrees), said the new rule will work against inner-city youngsters for whom the required tests are not necessarily indicators of academic potential.

"Many of the proponents of Proposal 42 may have laudatory academic and athletic goals in mind," he said in a prepared statement. "However, this proposal fails to take into account the significant detrimental effect that it will have on socio-economically deprived students. They will no longer have an opportunity to show that a poor test score is not a result of the lack of native intelligence but is a result of the cultural bias of the test and the deprivation that has existed in their lives."

Thompson, whose own intelligence is not doubted by those who have followed his Georgetown career, speaks from experience. Back in 1985, when he went on record in opposition to Proposition 48, he admitted that he couldn't have gotten into Providence College, his alma mater, if the school hadn't granted him an academic exception.

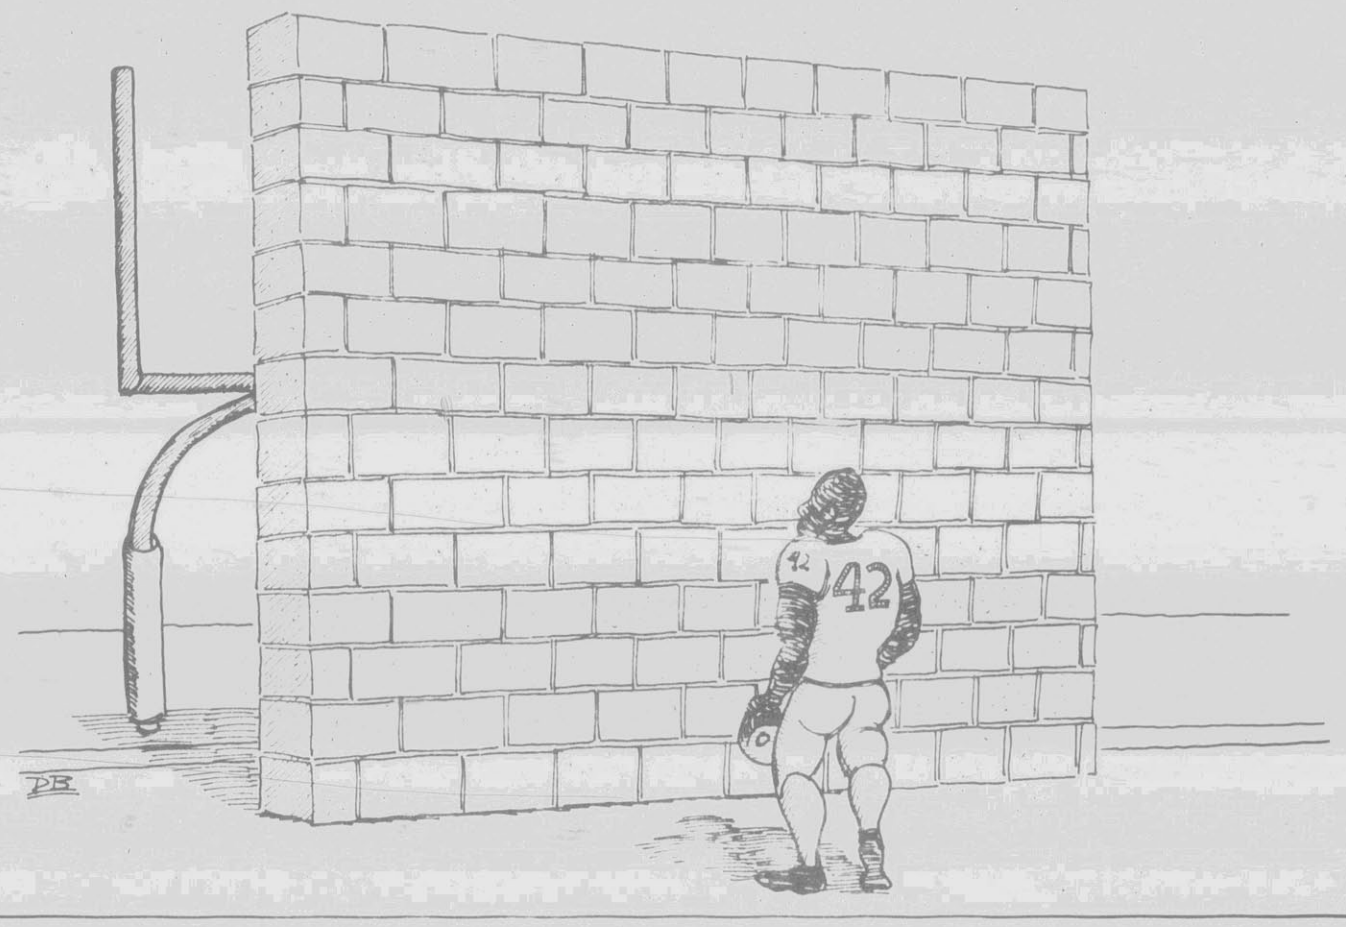

I might not buy his argument with regard to Proposition 48. The evidence is that most youngsters will, if they know their freshman eligibility depends on it, manage to sustain at least a C average and seek the help they need to get their test scores up to par.

But what of those who still fall short? Aren't they better served by the present rule, which gives them a chance to catch up, than by the new proposal, which effectively prevents them from even trying?

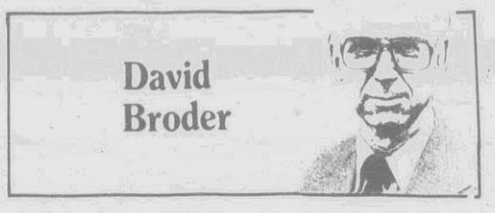

If those who voted for Proposal 42 are interested in the youngsters (and not just in eliminating them as competition), I suggest that they shift their support to a proposal made a year ago by then-University of Maryland Chancellor John Slaughter.

Slaughter's idea? Repeal freshman eligibility altogether. The transition from high school to college is tough enough. Why make it tougher by having freshmen take on the double load of big-time studies and big-time athletics?

More Than A White House Conscience

David Broder

WASHINGTON — The gush is on about Barbara Bush. The same journals that were enthralled by Nancy Reagan's chic for eight years are now suddenly enchanted by Barbara Bush's crow's feet and comfortable stoutness. Time magazine, borrowing what is purportedly a family nickname, put her on its cover as "The Silver Fox," suggesting with wild inappropriateness that she is like a luxury fur. She will bring "a refreshing new style to the White House," Time promised its readers before the new mistress of the mansion ever set foot in the place.

The New York Times, not to be outdone, said on its front page: "With a sigh, Barbara Bush acknowledges that she now views herself as a role model for many American women. 'My mail tells me a lot of fat, white-haired, wrinkled ladies are tickled pink,' she said."

When the press is in the grip of this kind of gushiness, the prudent thing to do is to stay away from the topic. A political columnist has the freedom to say, "I don't do first ladies," and as a general rule, I don't. To ignore the special qualities of Barbara Bush, however, would be to miss one of the most important clues to the character of this new administration.

The woman most Americans have known only as the white-haired matron with three strands of (fake) pearls has the capacity — and likely, the inclination — to become a major influence on her husband and the nation.

Mrs. Bush has cautioned reporters that she dislikes the comparison to Eleanor Roosevelt. But that exact comparison is made by Susan Baker, spouse of Secretary of State James A. Baker III and a close friend of the Bushes.

"She sees needs; she involves herself with them; and she gives others the strength and encouragement they need to involve themselves," Susan Baker said.

The strengths Barbara Bush brings to her role are evident to anyone who knows her. She is direct, honest, clear about her loyalties (most importantly to her husband) and her values. Perhaps as a result of raising her own large, diverse batch of children, she also has exceptionally keen antennae for the moods and needs of other people. As a reporter, I have seen her, more than once, defuse a tense situation simply by slipping her arm through the aggravated party's arm and walking and talking until the hurt and anger have passed.

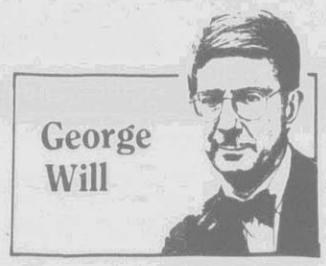

What is less evident — because she has tended to downplay her role during the past eight years out of deference to Mrs. Reagan — is her strong personal awareness of the problems that blight too many lives in this outwardly affluent society. Her special cause has been the fight against illiteracy, and those who share it — like Ruth Graves and Anne Richardson of "Reading Is Fundamental" — testify that Barbara Bush's involvement has been intense and unstinting.

In the last few years, Mrs. Bush has begun working with groups aiding the homeless and has encouraged many of her friends to put their energies into that effort. These are personal causes, but they spill over into consciousness-raising for her husband, the President. Last spring, Bush told David Hoffman of The Washington Post that after he had talked about aiding the homeless in a Republican candidates' debate, "some guy that's all involved in one of these homeless programs wrote Barbara saying, 'I know you care about the homeless, but I listen to your husband (and) he doesn't.' So we got into a big argument. She had been telling me I had to do more, and I think she's right."

It may seem exaggerated to suggest that Barbara Bush will be the conscience of this White House, but my guess is that she will be more: an example to the country. She comes from a tradition that says that those who are favored with wealth and power thereby acquire reciprocal obligations to those who lack any advantages.

An Opaque Future

George Will

WASHINGTON — Twelve years ago, a new administration began by declaring a dramatic "moral equivalent of war" on the energy crisis. But ever since 1891, when the U.S. Geological Survey discounted the possibility of discovering oil in Texas, the world has had pleasant surprises.

In 1965, proven world reserves were 353 billion barrels; in 1979, 611 billion; today, 887 billion. Iran's reserves are huge. Iraq's may match Saudi Arabia's. Geological formations in western China suggest vast reserves, as does the fact that Siberia is on the same latitude as Alaska's Prudhoe Bay.

U.S. taxpayers now own 560 million barrels in the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, with a distribution capacity of four million barrels a day. The SPR is a weapon against OPEC's "oil weapon," but OPEC's weapon has been largely disarmed by economic and technological developments.

It has been said that if the Strait of Hormuz was closed, the lights would go out. But that strait is hard to close and harder still to keep closed. Anyway, last year, on one day, five tankers were burning in the Gulf and the price of oil barely moved. Markets know the oil will flow.

Pipelines connect Iraq with the Mediterranean and the Red Sea. In the 1990s, upwards of seven million barrels a day will be able to leave the Persian Gulf by pipeline. Furthermore, three of America's top four suppliers (Mexico, Canada, Venezuela; Saudi Arabia is the fourth) are not insecure sources.

OPEC is not impotent. Absent OPEC, oil might cost $7 rather than $12-$15. But many OPEC nations have development needs that require a high cash flow. Thus they need high production of oil. Furthermore, both Iran and Iraq have war debts exceeding $40 billion, and each needs at least that much for reconstruction.

The probable persistence of the oil glut for many years means the U.S. oil industry is in twilight. Eighty percent of all the oil wells ever drilled on the planet have been drilled in the lower 48 U.S. states. But today, Saudi Arabia is pumping nearly one-fifth of the world's oil flow from fewer wells than are operating today in the city of Los Angeles.

Conservation has far exceeded 1970s projections. Gasoline costs less today in real terms than at almost any time since 1935, but today's automobile fleet goes 50 percent farther on a gallon than in 1976. However, American demand is growing and American production is dropping. We are importing 42 percent of our needs (we hit a high of 48 percent in 1977) and oil imports account for one-quarter of the trade deficit.

But there are non-economic as well as economic arguments for draining foreign sources first. And there is no compelling argument for rushing exploration in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge or off California's coast.

If the price goes high enough, several centuries' supply of oil can be extracted from sand, shale and other sources in Colorado, Canada and elsewhere in this hemisphere. But even without scarcity, there is a move to alternative forms of energy. Japan's "strategic petroleum reserve" may be plutonium as Japan becomes more reliant, even than France, on nuclear power. Australia may become the Saudi Arabia of uranium.

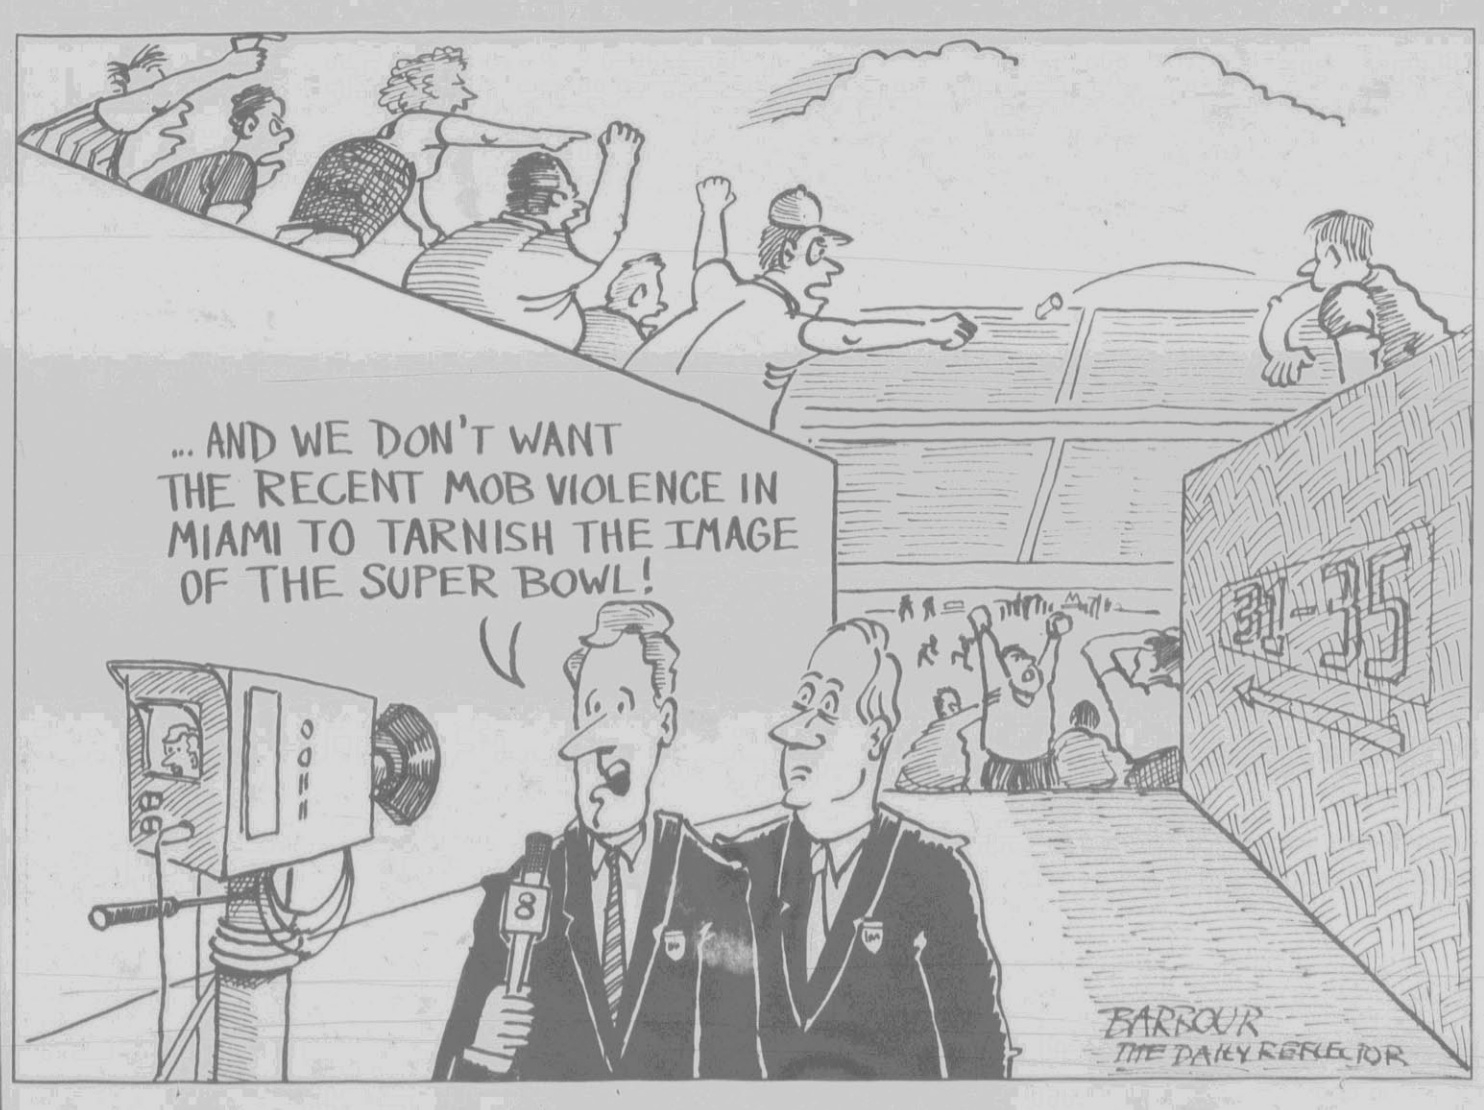

Fifty-seven percent of America's electricity is generated by coal, of which America has a 300- to 500-year supply. But we do not want to pay the environmental costs of mining and burning it. This is especially so because of the greenhouse effect, which is aggravated by burning hydrocarbons.

Natural gas is a relative benign fuel and U.S. reserves of it may be as large as U.S. oil reserves. Furthermore, vast quantities of natural gas are being found in places like Qatar's North Dome Field, the largest discovery ever. And the Pacific rim is an extremely promising source.

Most of the data in this column comes from John Herrington, who just stepped down as secretary of Energy. The data point toward several hopeful conclusions, and a chastening conclusion:

Cheap oil, although it inhibits the search for alternative energy sources that might be environmentally preferable, is on balance a big blessing. And the pace and direction of change in the energy picture in the last dozen years is a timely reminder to the new administration of just how opaque the future is.

Indians Vote In 3 States; 19 Said Hurt

By Raju Gopalakrishnan
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MADRAS, India — Voters in three Indian states cast ballots Saturday in elections testing the popularity of Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, and reports said at least 19 people were injured in election-related violence.

At least 16 supporters of Gandhi's Congress Party were injured in the key state of Tamil Nadu, United News of India reported. The news agency also said two bombs exploded there, but there were no reports of casualties.

Despite the violence, election officials reported heavy turnouts in polling for assemblies in three states, where voting will restore local rule. The government in New Delhi imposed federal rule in the states last year after political crises there.

In Tamil Nadu, a southern state, an estimated 65 percent of 36 million eligible voters went to the polls, election officials said.

An estimated 75 percent of 600,000 eligible voters in the state of Nagaland and about 97 percent of 300,000 eligible voters in Mizoram cast ballots.

Results are expected Sunday.

But the crucial test is Tamil Nadu, where more than 2,000 candidates vied for 234 seats in the state assembly.

Gandhi must call national elections by December, but a Tamil Nadu victory could allow him to move sooner. A loss there could give more time to organize to the newly formed People's Party, which is trying to unite behind Gandhi's chief rival, V.P. Singh.

Pre-election polls showed Congress trailing the front-runner, Muthuvel Karunanidhi and his Dravida Munnetra Kazhagam Party. That party was expected to win about 120 of the 234 seats. Karunanidhi is backed by Singh.

Karunanidhi served as Tamil Nadu chief minister from 1967 to 1976, when he lost to M.G. Ramachandran, a popular actor who turned to politics at the peak of his career.

Lack Of Goods Draws Protest By Homeowners

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CARACAS, Venezuela — A group of homemakers said Saturday they will protest at government offices because of a shortage of goods that has created a wave of panic buying and put the government at odds with manufacturers.

"There's no coffee, toilet paper or detergent. There hasn't been all week. It's been crazy," said Cesar Rumbos, a supermarket clerk in Caracas.

He was describing a wave of panic shopping after a group of companies announced they would no longer be able to supply the market with goods. Many stores simply closed their doors by week's end, unable to stock shelves with items ranging from toothpaste to milk.

The government says manufacturers are storing away goods to pressure it into increasing import subsidies, which have been curtailed.

"In Venezuela, the scarcity is false and distorted," said President Jaime Lusinchi late Friday. He blamed manufacturers for hoarding and smugglers for taking goods out of the country, especially to neighboring Colombia and the Caribbean. Venezuelan products often fetch higher prices there.

The homemakers said they were fed up with both the government and manufacturers. They announced they would protest this week in front of the government's Superintendency for Consumer Protection to highlight the scarcity.

"The government says there's no problems because they assigned the dollars (for import subsidies). The industrialists say they haven't gotten them. The truth is consumers have lost faith in both the government and the industrialists," said Diana Vegas, head of a neighborhood group.

Advertisements placed in local newspapers by a soap maker and a paper manufacturer blamed the government for cutting back on the subsidies granted to Venezuelan companies to import goods.

President-elect Carlos Andres Perez has warned the program must be eliminated in an effort to bolster U.S. dollar reserves, which are used in the program.

American Rolls Past Pirates, 82-68

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President George Bush may have been welcoming people into the White House Saturday, but the American University basketball team didn't roll out the red carpet for East Carolina.

The Eagles took control of the game in the first five minutes and rolled to a 82-68 win Saturday night at Bender Arena.

"You've got to put yourself in a position to be in the game in the last five minutes if you want to win and we were out of this game in the first five minutes," ECU coach Mike Steele said.

American improved to 9-5 overall and 4-2 in the Colonial Athletic Association, while the Pirates slipped to 8-8 and 2-3.

From there, the Eagles went on a 12-2 run to open a 12-4 lead with 14:10 left in the half.

After that, the Pirates slipped further and further behind.

"In the first half, I thought we were horrible," Steele said. "I thought our team played with no emotions. It was a bad as we could play. I don't think I've ever seen them play quite as bad.

"I don't know the reason," Steele said. "We're gonna go back and take a look at the films and see why we could play so poorly in a game that is so important to us."

The woes of East Carolina seemed to take an even worse turn later when Edwards went down with an injured wrist with 12:54 left in the half after being whistled for a charging foul. Edwards returned later in the first half and played most of the second 20 minutes.

"When he went down, I was really hoping he wasn't hurt," American head coach Ed Tapscott said. "When a kid has worked as hard as he has to get to the point he has you don't want to see anything bad happen to him."

The Eagles, who shot 56 percent for the first half, seemed to be hitting from wherever they pleased.

"We should be able to convert some scores inside because we are bigger than they are inside," Tapscott said. "It was a point made early in the game and in practice yesterday to get the ball inside to our big men. Once we established that, we were able to kick the ball out for 15-18 foot jumpers."

The Eagles doubled the score on the Pirates, 22-11 with 9:23 left in the first half when Ron Draper, who led American with 21 points and 12 rebounds, converted a pair of free throws after being fouled inside.

"We knew we had a height advantage going in," Draper, a 6-8 senior, said. "We did a good job converting on it."

American went on to push the lead out to largest point of the half, 16 points, when Chuck West scored on a layup with 46 seconds left in the half to put the Eagles on top 39-23.

Things looked as if they would get even worse for the Pirates at the start of the second half when the Eagles reeled off the first seven points to grab a 46-23 lead.

Draper scored twice inside and Wortman added a 3-pointer before the Pirates' Jeff Kelly finally ended

Tar Heels Hold Off Pack

N.C. State's Last-Second Rally Falls Short, 84-81

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — North Carolina coach Dean Smith watched his 13th-ranked Tar Heels stave off surge after surge by North Carolina State, but Smith said the final spurt really hurt.

North Carolina held off 15th-ranked N.C. State for the 84-81 victory on Saturday, but the final 46 seconds was painful.

North Carolina held an 82-72 lead before the Tar Heels saw the lead evaporate in a barrage of 3-point jumpers.

Then, with a three-point lead, Tar Heel center Scott Williams threw the inbounds pass to the wrong man — N.C. State's Chucky Brown. But Brown's 3-point jumper missed at the buzzer.

"Everything looked nice until Brian Howard hit two 3-pointers," Smith said. "Of course, Brown didn't stop and thank Scott for the last pass. We'll learn to handle that better. We have a lot to coach."

"The cruelest blow of all ... is to have the kid throw us the ball on the last play," said N.C. State coach Jim Valvano. "That's too much to handle."

Valvano has been coaching under the pressure of allegations of wrongdoing in the N.C. State basketball program. Former Wolfpack basketball team manager John Simonds told NBC Sports during a taped halftime interview that he was only one voice in the forthcoming book called "Personal Fouls" by Peter Golenbock, and said that "when the public sees this, I think that they're going to be shocked and appalled ...."

"I worry that our kids will become drained ... with all the scrutiny," Valvano said.

North Carolina, which was coming off a 20-point victory over Duke on Wednesday, relied on a balanced attack led by Steve Bucknall, who hit four of eight 3-point attempts and finished with 14 points.

"I knew I was in trouble when Bucknall's first shot went up to Section K and went in," Valvano said.

The Tar Heels used a 9-4 run late in the second half that included a 3-point jumper by Bucknall to take a 78-69 lead with 3:14 left. North Carolina increased the lead to 10 points at 82-72 on four free throws by King Rice with 46 seconds left.

But Howard hit two 3-point jumpers in the final 25 seconds, Chris Corchiani hit a short jumper and Avie Lester converted a free throw to pull the Wolfpack within 84-81 with six seconds left.

"We will handle those situations better," Smith said. "Still, I was very proud of our defense in the second half. I think they had to work for everything they got."

N.C. State, which trailed by as many as nine points in the first half, tied the score at 43 with three minutes left in the half, and took a 46-45 lead at halftime.

Freshman Keys Wake's Win

By Tom Foreman Jr.

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Derrick McQueen helped Wake Forest complete some unfinished business from last month, guiding the Demon Deacons to a 75-71 victory over top-ranked Duke on Saturday.

McQueen, a freshman, shrugged off foul trouble in the second half and scored a career-high 20 points in the Atlantic Coast Conference battle. It was partial payback for a heartbreaking 94-88 loss to the Blue Devils in December.

"People were saying 'What was wrong with Duke?'" McQueen said. "I think we were a big part of what was wrong with Duke. I'm glad that it ended like this this time."

McQueen picked up his fourth foul with nine minutes left, but he scored eight of his points after that, helping to stave off a Duke comeback and leading the Blue Devils to their second straight loss. Duke is 13-2 and 3-2.

"McQueen was outstanding," Wake Forest coach Bob Staak said. He did a great job controlling the tempo."

That control was in jeopardy midway through the second half, however.

The Demon Deacons, 9-6 and 2-4 in the ACC, squandered most of a 15-point lead in an eight-minute stretch of the second half as they committed five turnovers and hit just two of eight shots in the span.

McQueen rescued the Demon Deacons from their slide with a running jumper at 5:39. After Greg Koubek scored on a running jumper for Duke, reserve Robert Siler hit a 3-pointer and McQueen hit a running baseline jumper at 3:18, giving Wake Forest a 66-59 lead.

Campbell's 19 Points Lead Win

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLEMSON, S.C. — Elden Campbell scored 19 points in just 21 minutes as Clemson coasted past Western Carolina 77-60 Saturday.

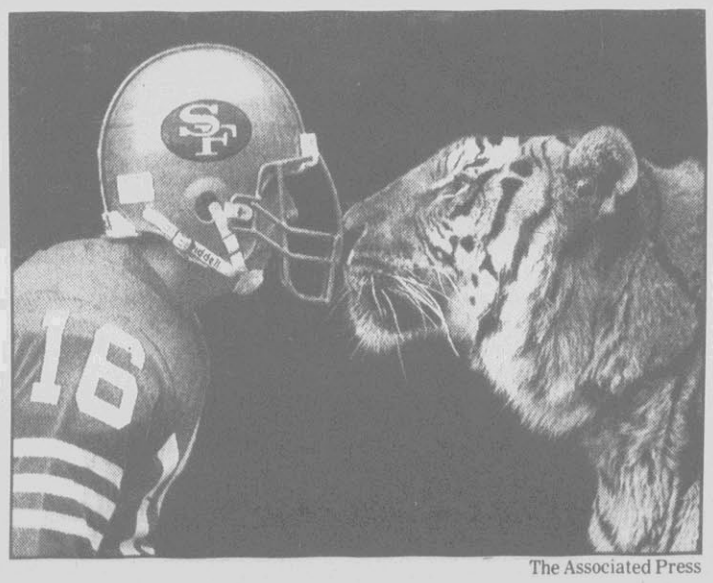

Campbell, the team's leading scorer with a 16-point average, hit nine of 13 shots from the field and scored 13 points in the first half to help the Tigers to a 44-25 lead at intermission.

As a team, the Tigers, 12-3 after their fifth straight victory, hit 34 of 54 from the field, for 63 percent, including a 15-of-23 effort in the second half.

Western Carolina, 6-8, stayed in the game in the second half with a balanced attack that featured four starters in double figures.

49ers Seek Posterity In Super Bowl XXIII

By Dave Goldberg
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — The never-ending search for "The Team" — of the season, of the decade, even of the day — is so pervasive that the San Francisco 49ers have found themselves explaining this week why it's possible that they can lose to the Cincinnati Bengals in Sunday's Super Bowl.

Nobody believes them.

Not after four years of NFC dominance.

Four years in which four different NFC teams have beaten the AFC by a cumulative score of 165-46, an average of 41-14.

Four years in which physical has overcome finesse, defense has overcome offense and quarterbacks of the stature of Dan Marino and John Elway have been overpowered.

So is it any wonder that during a Super Bowl week marred by racial disturbances in two Miami neighborhoods, all the 49ers — with the notable exception of cornerback Tim McKyer — have been apologizing for being favored by a touchdown while the Bengals have been poor-mouthing.

"I feel like the team that's going to play the Harlem Globetrotters every night," Cincinnati coach Sam Wyche said as he arrived here with a 14-4 team that includes MVP quarterback Boomer Esiason and the NFL's best offense.

"Everyone already knows what's going to happen, that we're going in as a marked underdog playing way over its head against the giant out of the fog."

For a while, the game itself was overshadowed by the racial troubles. They took place Monday and Tuesday nights in Miami's Overtown and Liberty City neighborhoods, leaving three dead and shaking up a lot of players, particularly the blacks.

"It's real life out there," said Esiason, who is white. "It puts the game in perspective."

"A bunch of us went to the movies and saw 'Mississippi Burning,'" said his teammate, safety Solomon Wilcots. "We came back and looked out the window and saw Miami burning."

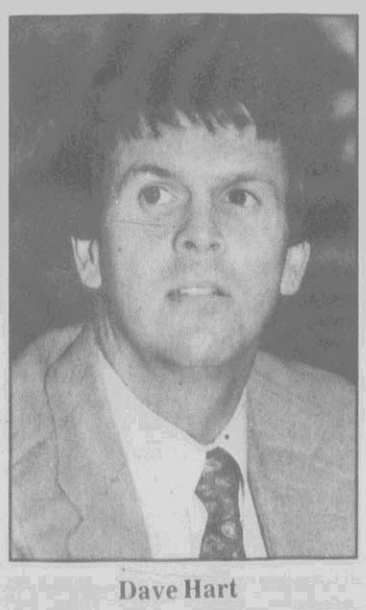

In fact, for many of those here, the Super Bowl had already been considered an afterthought, the outcome a foregone conclusion.

Two weeks ago, after the Bengals beat Buffalo 21-13 and the 49ers overpowered the Bears 28-3 in Chicago's minus-20 wind chill, the guys in Las Vegas who know everything made San Francisco a 4 1-2 point favorite. Almost immediately, the public jumped on the 49ers; the line jumped to seven points and stayed there — despite an ankle sprain that will limit the mobility of Jerry Rice, perhaps the game's most dangerous offensive player.

Can it be that easy?

ECU Officials Didn't Support Proposition 42

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

East Carolina University officials, who decided last year not to recruit partial qualifiers in athletic admissions, voted against a similar proposal at the recent NCAA convention.

The regulation, termed proposal 42, passed by a close vote at the convention and ruled the NCAA member institutions could not sign prospective student athletes to scholarships if they did not have a 2.0 grade point average in college preparatory curriculum along with at least a 700 on the Scholastic Aptitude Test or a 15 on the American College Test.

That prompted an immediate uproar from a number of coaches, including Georgetown's John Thompsop, who sat out two games as a protest of the rule.

In response, the presidents of the NCAA have asked that the rule be postponed. That will probably be done at the next NCAA Convention, in January, 1990.

The rule was to take effect in 1990 and does not affect anyone being recruited for next year's freshman class.

Proposition 48, adopted in 1986, set the original requirements, but allowed for a loophole where athletes with a 2.0 gpa could still sign scholarships even if they failed to meet the standardized test requirement or the core curriculum requirement. If they did so, they would be able to attend school on a scholarship but they would be ineligible to practice or compete during their freshman year.

"The thing that surprised me most was that when proposition 48 was adopted, it was really adopted more or less with the understanding that it would be studied for five years and at that time the academic committee felt it would have a pretty good reading on its effectiveness," ECU Director of Athletics Dave Hart said.

Hart said ECU officials decided to vote against proposition 42 because they wanted to stay with the original intent of proposition 48. That would have allowed the bylaw to be reviewed after it was in place five years and data from that period had been analyzed.

NCAA president Albert M. Witte and Martin Massengale, chairman of the the (NCAA) Presidents Commission will recommend at the next NCAA Convention that no changes be made until Proposition 48 could be further studied.

"The surprising thing was that the proposition (42) even made it to the floor," Hart said. "A lot of people anticipated, based on the (original) recommendation of the academic committee (in 1986), that it may not even make it to the floor.

"It was voted down the first time. We voted against it both times. The second time enough people obviously reversed the vote."

The proposal, originally introduced by the Southeastern Conference, passed the second time around by a count of 163-154.

"We had made a decision athletically not to recruit nonqualifiers (last year). Looking at it from our perspective, we'd already made a decision."

Cool 49ers Slip Up Every Now And Then

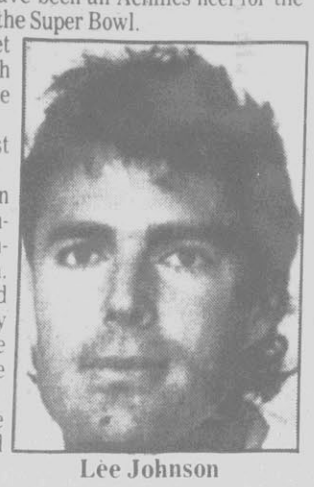

MIAMI (AP) — They feign disinterest. They claim their place in history is of no concern. They insist they want to treat it like any other game on any other Sunday of the NFL season.

They lie. And, sometimes, the San Francisco 49ers slip. They admit that, yes, securing recognition as this decade's dynasty is important.

"I think we already are the Team of the '80s," All-Pro running back Roger Craig said. "But we can be one of the greatest teams in history. We can prove that here."

Special Teams Come Through For Bengals

MIAMI (AP) — The special teams that have been an Achilles heel for the Cincinnati Bengals kicked into high gear for the Super Bowl.

Lee Johnson

The Bengals' improved kicking game set up two playoff victories and convinced Coach Sam Wyche that early-season problems were corrected.

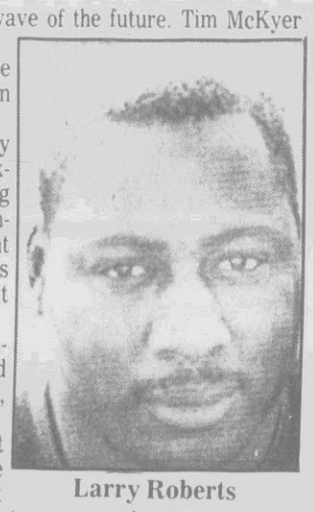

"Our special teams have peaked at just the right time," he said.

Punter Lee Johnson — acquired in midseason for kickoffs — kept Buffalo pinned near its goal line in the AFC championship game, contributing directly to the win. In addition, Johnson kicked a 51-yard field goal in the AFC Central-clinching victory over Washington in the regular-season finale and averaged 46 yards on six punts in the first playoff game against Seattle.

The Bengals also have avoided the coverage breakdowns that characterized their earlier games.

49ers Have New Plan: No Huddle Defense

Larry Roberts

Like it or hate it, San Francisco may have to solve Cincinnati's no-huddle trickery in order to win the Super Bowl.

Coach Sam Wyche has been playing it coy on whether his Bengals will use the quick-snap tactic frequently on Sunday, saying they might leave it out of the game plan entirely. But it's unlikely he will disappoint Cincinnati's players and fans, and perhaps even a few 49er defenders, by playing it straight for the whole game.

"I like to run," said San Francisco defensive end Larry Roberts. "I'm not worried about it. If we match up and make the play, it won't matter."

Matchups are a concern for any team that could be caught short by the no-huddle. The 49ers' defense incorporates frequent substitutions but may have a couple of advantages over other teams: speed up front and versatility behind.

Rice's Ankle Should Be Fine

MIAMI (AP) — Jerry Rice tested his tender ankle in practice for the first time in four days Friday and the San Francisco 49ers wide receiver said it was still sore, but improving.

Rice twisted his right ankle during a routine passing drill Monday and did not work out Wednesday or Thursday. Friday's session was the team's last before Sunday's Super Bowl against the Cincinnati Bengals.

"He looked OK," 49ers coach Bill Walsh said. "Again, he hasn't had to do anything quick and lateral, but he ran straight ahead fine."

Forecaster Say Super Bowl Could Be Wet

49ers Still Favored; Betting At A Frenzy

LAS VEGAS (AP) — The San Francisco 49ers remain a steady touchdown favorite heading into a Super Bowl weekend that bookmakers expect to break all records on a single football game.

The 49ers were a seven-point favorite at almost every Las Vegas betting parlor Friday, and most oddsmakers say they don't expect the line to change despite the millions of dollars that will be wagered in the last 48 hours before kickoff.

Brown Remains An NFL Constant

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — Eyes widened in disbelief when Paul Brown, the founder of the Cincinnati Bengals, put his hips into the Ickey Shuffle before a game this season.

A lockerroom dance was the last thing they expected from Brown, a Hall of Fame coach known for his no-nonsense approach to the game.

At age 80, Brown is proving he has some surprises left as he shuffles off to the Super Bowl with his Bengals, eyeing the one championship trophy that has eluded him.

"It would make me very happy," Brown said in a recent interview. "But I told the coaches and I told the players, 'You're doing this for yourself. I don't need any crown jewels. This is the way I feel about it: you're not doing it for old Paul, you're doing it for yourself.' They've done the job, and I've just been in the background."

Unlike some other NFL operators, he doesn't yearn for attention.

"It's not that he doesn't deserve the credit and the attention, but he's had it for a long time," Coach Sam Wyche said. "I think probably he can do without it and not feel anything about it."

It was as a coach that the Brown made perhaps his biggest mark on the game itself. He was known for his innovations — introducing classroom techniques that are commonplace today, using film to grade players, calling plays from the sideline. He also ran his team with a seriousness that shaped his image.

Bengals Need Run To Win Super Bowl

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — The Cincinnati Bengals will try to do two things in the Super Bowl — run the football successfully and confuse San Francisco quarterback Joe Montana.

The running part of the equation plays to the Bengals' main strength as the NFL's best rushing team. The second part will be more tricky, and could determine the game's outcome.

The Bengals' main weakness this season has been their inability to shut down ball-control offenses run by patient quarterbacks. That description fits the 49ers perfectly.

"This guy, there's a magic about him," Bengals defensive end Jason Buck said. "He's able to make the play happen. He's the key to the game for us.

"We've got to be able to shut down his quick stuff. He reads (defenses) so fast and so well on all your blitzes, he just picks you apart. We've got to shut down his short (passing) game or he'll just kill us."

The Bengals have been successful at disguising their coverages, confusing quarterbacks and taking chances on their blitzes. They could face a tough time against Montana, who knows what to expect.

"They do some unorthodox things that catch you off guard more than anything," Montana said. "You sit there and say, 'They can't do that.' And then they do it.

"They'll blitz sometimes and play zone (defense) behind it without the normal number of guys to cover the zones. They'll leave a guy open here and there and say, 'You're not going to get to him.'"

"He's such a tremendous reader of defenses, a veteran who's seen everything we're going to do," defensive coordinator Dick LeBeau said. "He's going to recognize it eventually, but we're going to try to delay the time kes to do that."

Even if th ngals can do that, they face another problem in Montana — his ability to improvise. Bengals coach Sam Wyche flatly predicts that will be a decisive factor in the game.

"The reason I think he's so tough is that he's going to do something that's not programmed for him. We're going to stop what they have planned on occasion, and he's going to somehow improvise. Now we find out who the real champion is," Wyche said. "If we can't stop his improv, they're going to win the game. If we can't stop him from making something out of nothing, then they're going to win it."

Montana has two main weapons to help his improvisation — running back Roger Craig and receiver Jerry Rice. The Bengals have referred to Craig in glowing terms this week, while suggesting they can handle Rice. Members of the secondary, who call themselves the "SWAT Team," think they can make Rice a marginal factor in the game.

"The SWAT Team has talked and we've said to each other, we're not going to let this guy beat us," cornerback Lewis Billups said.

On the other side of the ball, there's no mystery. The Bengals will try to run, passing when they catch the 49ers stacking up to stop the run.

"We have to be successful running the ball," offensive tackle Anthony Munoz said. "That has been true all year. For us to build confidence we have to be able to run the ball."

The Bengals became a ground-oriented team with the emergence of rookie Ickey Woods. They led the NFL by averaging 169 yards a game rushing in the regular season. In their three biggest games of the season, they stayed on the ground.

In their AFC Central Division-clinching win over Washington in the season finale, the Bengals rushed 28 times for 135 yards while Esiason threw just 19 times for 187.

In a playoff win over Seattle, they ran 47 times for a season-high 254 yards and Esiason threw 19 times for 108.

In those last three games, Cincinnati has run the ball 68 percent of the time.

"The key is going to start with our defensive line, right up front," said 49ers nose tackle Michael Carter. "We're going to have to try to control the running game, hopefully slow it down."

If they succeed, the burden will fall on Esiason — who hasn't thrown for 200 yards in any of his last five games — to match Montana.

"I'll submit this, being around both, Boomer brings the same (improvisation skills) exactly," Wyche said. "He brings it in a little different style — Boomer's got a little stronger arm, Joe is probably a faster guy. They bring different things to the game, but they're both winners. They just somehow win."

MIAMI — A position-by-position look at the San Francisco 49ers and Cincinnati Bengals, who meet Sunday in the Super Bowl:

SAN FRANCISCO: OFFENSE

Quarterback — Joe Montana (16) is a winner. This is his third Super Bowl — he's 2-0 — and the culmination of an inspiring comeback from 1986 back surgery and three years of playoff problems. Montana ignored a quarterback controversy to lead the 49ers to six victories in the last seven games, including decisive playoff wins. Still a master at throwing on the run, he reads defenses, especially blitzes, better than anyone.

Running back — Roger Craig (33) tied Eric Dickerson as the NFL's total yardage leader with 2,036, rushing for 1,502, tops in the NFC. Strong and fast, Craig can run inside or out, blocks and is the game's best backfield receiver.

Tom Rathman (44) basically is a blocking back for Craig, but he ran for 427 yards (4.2 a carry). At 6-foot-1, 232, he looks like a typical fullback, except for his catching skills (42, 9.1 average).

Receivers — When healthy, which he was for only half of his All-Pro season, Jerry Rice (80) is the best. Not as fast as some burners, Rice has an explosiveness that, combined with superb moves, gets him wide open. His sore ankle could limit him, but he has helped the 49ers as a decoy when necessary.

John Taylor (82) came on late in the season and averaged 23.2 yards a reception. A Pro Bowl kick returner who led NFC with 12.6 average on punt runbacks.

John Frank (86) will see more passes if Rice is limited. A good blocker, Frank makes his catches over the middle between linebackers. Injuries limited him to 10 games, in which San Francisco was 9-1.

Center — Randy Cross (51) concludes a terrific 13-year career — three Pro Bowls — as a guard and center. Cross announced his retirement on Wednesday. "I plan to go out on top," he said.

Guard — Guy McIntire (62) pulls and leads the charge outside in front of Craig. In his first full season as a starter after four seasons as a reserve, also has been used as a blocking tight end, slotback and surprise receiver.

Tackle — Harris Barton (79), the 1987 top draftee, started 15 games on right side in first year as regular. Consistent blocker, particularly on rushing plays.

Steve Wallace (74) passed Bubba Paris as starter. In college, blocked for Bo Jackson at Auburn, which Craig calls "valuable experience."

Placekicker — Mike Cofer (6), a rookie free agent, took the job from 15-year veteran Ray Wersching and led the NFC with 121 points. Hit team-record 27 of 38 field goals and made 40 of 41 extra points. Longest is 52 yards. Made eight straight field goals in one stretch.

DEFENSE

End — Larry Roberts (91) and Daniel Stubbs (96) share left end. Sort of. Kevin Fagan (75) is the right end. Sort of.

Roberts and Fagan start and are the best pass-rushing linemen. Stubbs, a rookie from the University of Miami, where Fagan also played, and Pierce Holt (78), another rookie, join the line on passing downs.

San Francisco's schemes are so complex that all of the ends are called on to shift sides and even move inside.

Nose Tackle — Michael Carter (95) is outstanding. Clogs the middle on running plays and has excellent pursuit. Won 1984 Olympic silver medal in shot put. Often relieved on passing or blitzing situations.

Linebacker — Charles Haley (94) led team with 11 1-2 sacks. A converted lineman who uses excellent outside moves and speed to get to quarterback. Most dangerous pass-rusher who made Pro Bowl in first season as outside LB. NFC's top defensive player for October.

Bill Romanowski (53) started half of Niners' games, replacing veteran Keena Turner (58). Run-oriented defender.

Insiders Jim Fahnhorst (55) took over for Riki Ellison (50) and plays both sides. Not as good on pass coverage as Ellison or other ILB Michael Walter (99), who led team with 97 tackles. Also has team-high 21 postseason tackles.

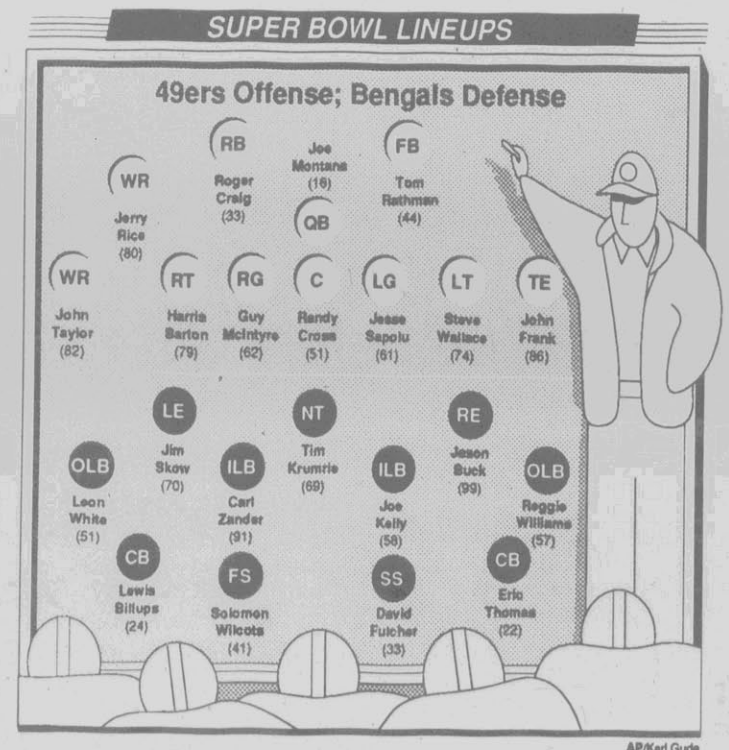

Secondary — Ronnie Lott (42) is crunching hitter and reads defenses superbly at free safety. Made Pro Bowl for seventh time, picked off five passes. The glue of the secondary.

If Lott isn't the hardest tackler among NFL safeties, Jeff Fuller (49) probably is. Led team with 62 solo tackles in second season as starter.

Tim McKyer (22) learned from rough indoctrination early in 1986. San Francisco's best cornerback since midway through that rookie season. Led Niners with seven interceptions. Aggressive 1-on-1 cover man with supreme confidence. Don Griffin (29) was sidelined by dislocated shoulder for final six games, returned in playoffs. If he isn't ready, Eric Wright (21), often nickel back, starts if his groin is healed.

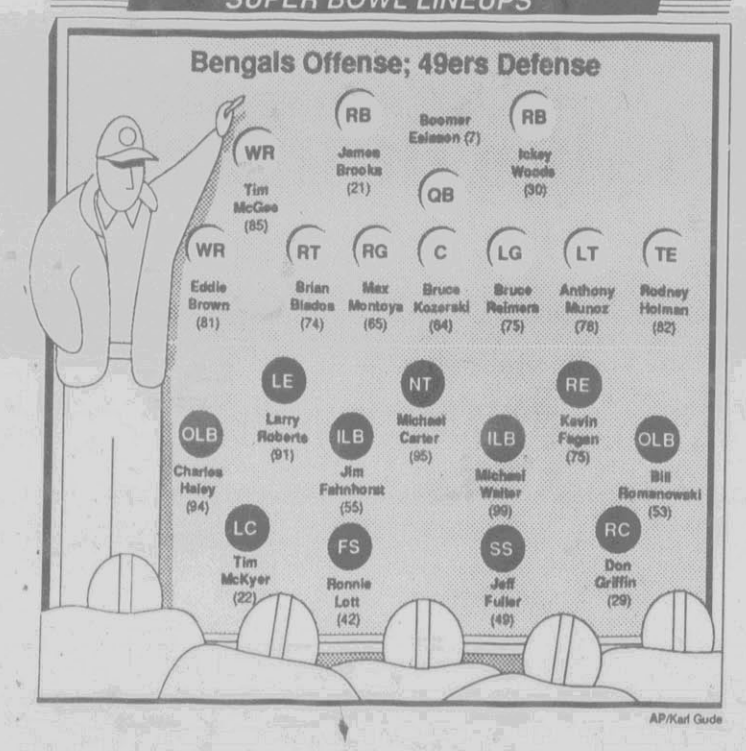

Punter — Rookie Barry Helton (9), cut in training camp and re-signed after first game. Averaged 39.3 per kick.

CINCINNATI: OFFENSE

Quarterback — Boomer Esiason (7) was the league's top passer and MVP, completing 57.5 percent for 3,572 yards, 28 TDs and 14 interceptions. The heady left-hander is dangerous rolling out to pass and as a runner, but prefers to throw from the pocket. A good leader who willingly took a backseat to the running game down the stretch, he is the perfect QB for the no-huddle offense.

Running back — Rookie Ickey Woods (30) scored 15 times while rushing for 1,066 yards and inventing the NFL's most popular dance, the Ickey Shuffle. Woods has power and speed, like Craig, but isn't as good a receiver or blocker. His fresh approach and personality endear him to teammates.

James Brooks (21) made the Pro Bowl for his 14 touchdowns, 931 yards rushing and explosiveness. A fine complement to Woods' inside running, Brooks is particularly dangerous on screen and flare passes.

Receivers — Eddie Brown (81), who grew up here and played for the Miami Hurricanes, is as deadly as Rice, but sometimes drops the ball. He averaged 24 yards a reception, best in the league, and scored nine times, but has been relatively quiet since the Bengals turned to the run.

Tim McGee (85) is quick and not someone to cover 1-on-1 too often. He has six TDs and 19.1 yards per catch. Cris Collinsworth (80) is the possession receiver.

Rodney Holman made the Pro Bowl more for his blocking than receiving. But he had 39 catches for a 13.5 average and Esiason looks to him on medium-range patterns, often on third down.

Center — Bruce Kozerski (64), in his fifth year, had started at all three positions before settling in at center. Line coach Jim McNally called him "basically a reject we got on the ninth round because only I wanted him."

Guard — Max Montoya (65) made Pro Bowl for second time. At one stretch this season, allowed opponent a quarterback hit just once in 237 passes. Bruce Reimers (75) has played tackle and size (6-7, 280) makes him one of league's biggest guards. Especially good on drive blocks from left side.

Tackle — Anthony Munoz (78), voted league's best tackle, hasn't lost a thing in nine seasons. Made eighth straight Pro Bowl, Esiason calls him "the greatest player in Cincinnati Bengals history and our best athlete."

Brian Blados (74) replaced Joe Walter (knee ligament damage) in final game. Neutralized Seattle's Jacob Green in playoffs but struggled with Buffalo's Art Still.

Placekicker — Jim Breech (3) is inconsistent. Sometimes kicks too low and can be blocked. Has streak of 136 games with a point, was 56-59 on extra points, 11-16 on field goals. Not effective from long range, but can surprise. More comfortable on artificial turf.

DEFENSE

End — Jim Skow (70) led team with 9 1-2 sacks. Small (6-3, 250) for position but Bengals claim he's their strongest player. Also quickest lineman. Jason Buck (99) had six sacks and plays right side on pass situations. David Grant (98) often starts but sees less action than Buck.

Skip McClendon (72) also has started.

Nose Tackle — All-Pro Tim Krumrie (69) consistently beats double teams with strength and quickness. Led team in tackles for fourth straight year — how many NT's do that?

"If I don't do my job, I don't think we'll win," he said.

Linebacker — Finishing 13th season, the team's senior member, Reggie Williams (57) is missing Cincinnati City Council meetings. "If I bring home a Super Bowl, they won't say anything," he said.

Williams can be beaten by medium and deep pass, as can all the LBs. But he rarely is in a position for single coverage.

Leon White (51), other OLB, got job when Emanuel King (90) was suspended by NFL and held it.

Carl Zander (91) had only interception among linebackers and led LBs with 81 tackles. Joe Kelly (58), the 1986 top pick, became starter in third season. Vulnerable to play fakes.

Secondary — SS David Fulcher (33) almost is a fifth linebacker. At 6-3, 228, Fulcher made Pro Bowl in third NFL season and, like Lott and Fuller, loves to hit. Supports run defense particularly well.

FS Solomon Wilcots (41) was third with 85 tackles in second pro season.

Eric Thomas (22) had seven interceptions, a team high, and is Cincinnati's best in man-for-man coverage. His confidence can't be shaken and he no longer is target of opposing QBs, who prefer going after Lewis Billups (24). Billups gambles and can be burned.

Punter — Lee Johnson (11), who also kicks off, replaced Scott Fulhage and starred in AFC Championship. Two punts were downed inside 10, one at the Buffalo 1. Johnson, formerly with Houston and Cleveland, averaged 39.9 per punt in regular season, upped it to 41.5 in playoffs. Also kicks long field goals.

49ers Facing Test Against The Run

A Special Super Bowl For Sydney

Sunday Notebook:

Harry Sydney Jr. can't help it. He's beaming with pride as he gets set to watch Sunday's Super Bowl XXIII between the San Francisco 49ers and the Cincinnati Bengals.

When Sydney gathers with family and friends today at Lake Ellsworth Club House there better be no interruptions come game time, especially during the opening kickoff.

It's during kickoff, you see, when Harry Sydney Jr. will have his eyes cast firmly on his son, Harry Sydney III, who is the captain of the 49ers' special teams.

Sunday's 5 p.m. kickoff is the culmination of an eight-year dream shared by father and son.

Sydney Jr., a retired Army veteran who now works at TRW in Greenville, moved with his family to Greenville three years ago from the Fayetteville area.

His son has had more than his share of obstacles to clear in a quest to play professional football that began in 1981 after he finished his career at the University of Kansas.

"He knew he wanted to play and that was a driving ambition of his," Sydney said. "He came back and worked out and taught in the high schools. He never lost the desire to play. Each year it was, 'next year I'll try again.' He worked out at the gym. He constantly stayed in shape.

"I am more proud of him for the fact that he never quit. He had a dream and he built upon it for seven years."

After graduating from Fayetteville 71st High School, Sydney went on to Kansas where he played quarterback his first two years and running back during his junior and senior seasons.

He lettered from 1978-80 and had a career total of 986 yards rushing.

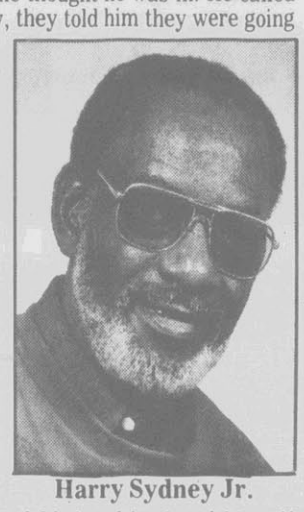

Sydney went unnoticed in the National Football League collegiate draft that June and signed with the Seattle Seahawks as a free agent.

Trying out as a free agent in the NFL isn't the easiest thing to do. In fact, it's probably easier to win the Publisher's Clearing House Sweepstakes. But it was Sydney's only avenue so he went after it.

He made it to the last cut with the Seahawks, but it didn't matter. He was still a man without a team.

The following year, Sydney was back in an NFL training camp as a free agent, this time with the Cincinnati Bengals.

"(Regular starting fullback) Pete Johnson was overweight and he felt he could replace him," his father said. "It came down to the very last cut. That really broke him up. It was the last cut and he thought he was in. He called me and thought he had made it. The next day, they told him they were going to keep Pete Johnson."

Harry Sydney Jr.

So it was back to Fayetteville and time to regroup. As he had the previous year, Sydney kept himself busy as a substitute teacher and coach. In his free time he lifted weights and ran with his father as he worked toward another shot at pro football.

This time, it appeared luck was with him. The United States Football League had formed and Sydney signed with the Denver Gold. He started at fullback for the Gold that season and the following year moved on to the Memphis Showboats.

"The USFL was in the air. It kept him uplifted," Sydney said. "During the training camp, they gave him assurance. He felt pretty positive about making the club and he never was cut."

So for two seasons, Sydney had attained his dream. But the following year the USFL folded and he found himself back at square one. He hoped to hook up with another NFL team, but none came calling. His only option was in the Canadian Football League where he played one season for the Montreal Alouettes. The pass-happy CFL, though, is no place for a running back whose strength is tucking the ball into his gut and running for daylight.

Once again, Sydney found himself in limbo.

"That was sort of the time I was saying you're getting a little older, it's time to settle down and find a stable job in the teaching field," the elder Sydney said. "He was receptive to teaching and coaching."

But he was even more open to one more shot at pro football and this time a team came looking for him.

In the spring of 1987, the San Francisco 49ers were looking for a fullback/special teams player and signed Sydney to a free agent contract.

The pattern looked familiar. Sydney again had a strong training camp, just as he had with the Seahawks and the Bengals, but there was something missing. The Turk missed him. He never got the fateful knock on the door, followed by "The coach wants to see you in his office. Bring your playbook."

"He told me that this was it," the elder Sydney said. "If he didn't do it this time, the dream was over. The bubble is shattered. When he finally wasn't cut, he talked to everybody about an hour on the phone. It was jubilation.

"It was like, 'I finally made the big boys, the two-time super bowl champs.' He was really ecstatic."

Now in his second year in San Francisco, Sydney's emergence with the 49ers was spurred by his transformation as a player. His earlier tryouts with the Seahawks and Bengals had taught him a lesson.

NFL teams are allowed to carry 45 players, but each year only eight to 10 spots are really open. A player has to be more than just talented. He has to be versatile enough to contribute on special teams. Sydney became that type player.

"Initially, he felt he might pick up a role as a fullback," Sydney said. "Then Tom Rathman (a high draft pick who has since become a starter) came along and he had two choices.

"He felt he could be the second best or he could establish a role on the team which he could be comfortable with and support the team."

Sydney became enough of a force on special teams to be elected one of the team's three tri-captains. Now, in his biggest moment as a player, he gets to take on the Bengals, a team that told him, in effect, he wasn't good enough.

"He told me on the phone the other night that his dream was shattered with the Bengals," the elder Sydney said. "Now I have the opportunity to go back and play against them."

What more could you ask for?

MIAMI — Giving an analytical coach like Bill Walsh two weeks to prepare for a title game, the going theory holds, is akin to handing world chess champ Garry Kasparov a free move.

Walsh, who writes out the San Francisco 49ers' first 25 plays each game, would love to script out a Super Bowl victory on Sunday in what could be his final coaching appearance.

To obtain it, the 49ers will need to prevent the Shuffle, survive the no-huddle offense and beat the blitz.

Keeping the Bengals from dancing the Shuffle means stopping Ickey Woods shy of the end zone and containing Cincinnati's potent two-back attack. Woods and James Brooks combined for 1,997 yards rushing and a 5.2-yard average.

How the 49ers' third-ranked run defense fares against the Bengals' league-eading running game may determine the outcome.

"We've got to stop their running game and not allow their offense to control the ball," said George Seifert, the 49ers' defensive coordinator.

San Francisco has fared well against strong running teams. It allowed an average of only 80 yards on the ground in three games against teams (Seattle and Chicago twice) that finished in the NFL's top 10 in rushing, although two were blowouts that forced the opponents to pass.

Only two runners, Atlanta's Gerald Riggs and Denver's Sammy Winder, have run for 100 yards against the 49ers. No one has exceeded 88 yards against them in the last dozen games.

A primary reason is the recent emergence of Jeff Fuller as an impact player at strong safety. A 216-pound former linebacker, Fuller is big enough and fast enough to gamble by playing up against good running teams.

Ronnie Lott told Fuller in Chicago the night before the NFC championship game that if he had a bad game, the 49ers would lose. Fuller responded with 10 tackles and an interception and the Bears only mustered 91 yards rushing.

Fuller should be a pivotal player this Sunday, too.

"I think we'll have to stay close to the line of scrimmage to do well against these guys," he said.

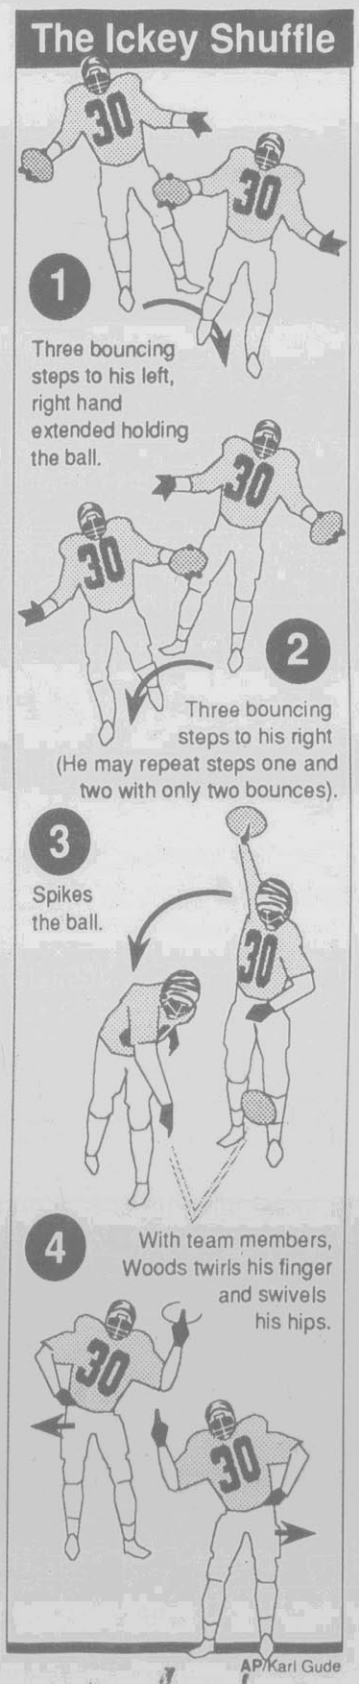

If the Bengals are able to establish their ground game, Boomer Esiason may be able to throw deep and make Fuller and the 49ers pay for focusing on Woods and Brooks. Chances are Cincinnati will attempt any bombs without a huddle to add to the deception.

The 49ers appear less likely to fall victim to that strategy than other teams, however.

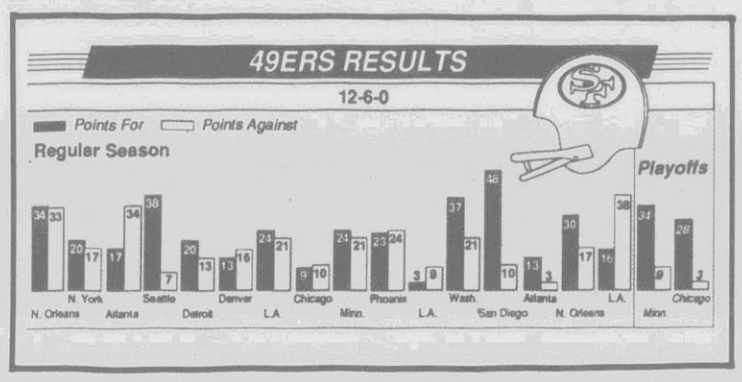

Fuller's size and versatility and Lott's All-Pro savvy will help. And because San Francisco does not routinely shuttle defensive backs in and out of the game, it may be harder for the Bengals to find matchups they can exploit.

It will be up to Montana, if he gets adequate pass protection, to dump the ball over the middle before he gets in trouble.

Lady Pirates Find Niche, Top AU

The Daily Reflector/Shannon Wolfe

ECU's Chris O'Connor, Sarah Gray (30) battle for a rebound

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

It took a little while, but East Carolina's women finally came up with the right combination and rolled to a 66-43 Colonial Athletic Association victory over American University Saturday night.

After a first half that could only be called bizarre, East Carolina got moving with a lineup that included four freshmen and a senior. The rookies were Tonya Hargrove, Laura Crowder, Mechelle Jones and Toina Coley, along with senior Gretta Savage.

Neither team could buy a basket in the first quarter of the game. Sarah Gray scored a field goal for the Lady Pirates 1:09 into the game. Hargrove then added a free throw with 12:12 showing on the clock.

That — believe it or not — made it 3-0.

"Don't ask me to explain it. I have no answers," ECU coach Pat Pierson said afterward. "It defies explanation."

At any rate, the two teams warmed up for the rest of the half, American finally shooting 41.4 percent for the first 20 minutes. ECU, however, dominating the backboards, still shot only 20.9 percent.

That helped American ease into the lead on several occasions, taking a 25-22 margin into halftime.

"All we told them at halftime was to keep shooting," Pierson said. "We just hoped that it would finally start to drop."

It did. ECU shot 47.1 percent in the second half while the defense held American to only 17.1 percent as the Eagles hit only six field goals in the period.

After American took a 28-24 lead early in the second half, Savage hit a three-point play and Pam Williams rebounded a missed shot for a 29-28 lead. Williams and Hargrove both hit layups and Savage added a 12-footer for a 35-28 lead and the Pirates never trailed again.

American cut it back to three, 39-36, but East Carolina outscored the Eagles, 14-2, over the next six and a half minutes to take a 53-38 lead with 6:01 remaining. A final 13-5 string set the final margin.

Pierson praised the play of the four freshman and Savage. "Gretta has, since Christmas, played well for us. She had good games at James Madison and George Mason and it's nice to see her having good games. It wasn't a pretty win, but I'll take a 'W' any way I can get one," she added.

Savage had 15 rebounds and Hargrove nine as ECU held a 61-48 edge.

Felicia Young scored 12 points to pace the American scoring.

The win boosts the Pirates to 7-7 overall and to 2-3 in the CAA. American slumps to 3-13, 1-4.

released by the NCAA, East Carolina was counted as voting for Proposition 42 the first time, then voting against it on its second time around. Hart, however, said this was incorrect.

"I have to say that I was surprised that it passed," said Pam Penland, assistant athletic director for athletic counseling.

"I think that there are those who still have concerns about the bias about the SAT and the ACT. Those biases have not been put to rest. What is interesting is that most thought it was going to be in place for five years, which would have given the NCAA time to do ample research."

Approximately 1,800 athletes have been admitted to NCAA member institutions as partial qualifiers over the last three years, according to NCAA statistics.

At the crux of much of the criticism was the use of standardized tests such as the SAT and the ACT as a fair means of a college admissions standard.

"My feeling, to be real honest with you, I think they need to eliminate the SAT," ECU basketball coach Mike Steele said. "I don't think it's a step forward. If a young man has good enough grades, and goes through the admissions process and interviews with school officials and passes all the criteria, then he deserves a chance.

"I just have real trouble when I look at the rationale dealing with the SAT score. I'd say that most of us (now) couldn't answer many of the questions. The way I think you measure a young man is what he does in his four years (of high school).

"I would much rather have someone who has horrible SAT scores, but is a B or C student and shows that he can work hard and make grades. I saw people (when I was coaching) at Depauw that had over 1,200 (on the SAT) and flunked out of school the first semester."

ECU women's basketball coach Pat Pierson also questions the validity of the SAT as a determinant of college performance.

"I feel like the SAT score..., there is too much emphasis on that," she said. "I just don't think it always an indicator of how a person can perform at the college level. It's not the purest measure you can use."

For high school student-athletes who don't meet NCAA requirements, the closing of the loophole would figure to be a boon to junior college and preparatory schools, which offer the only alternative as far as post-high school education and athletic participation on scholarship.

Bob Dailey, athletic director for the Pitt County school system, said colleges need some sort of standard against which students could be evaluated for admissions. For now, those standards, at least athletically, are set by the SAT and the ACT.

"I have no problem with the two of them but I think grade point is the best indicator," Dailey said. "But if you make it so it is a neither nor situation, then that's a pretty strong statement.

"We're trying to pay attention to it anyway. We were still going to attend to it. It's going to limit the number that have the opportunity. If anything it is going to reinforce that everybody is updated on the requirements."

Regardless, there don't appear to be any easy answers to the athletic admissions dilemma.

"I really don't know," said Rose High School Football Coach Chip Williams. "I dare say if they did a study on SAT scores and grades you make in college, I don't know how relative that is. You can't measure work attitude. Until we come up with something like that, I don't know what will be fair."

The intent of the NCAA seems clear in this bylaw. Proposition 48 was the first step in strengthening the academic requirements for incoming freshmen student athletes. Proposition 42 took it one step further.

"I just thought that originally when they passed prop 48, they though it had enough teeth to get done what they wanted it to do," Pierson said. "For the kids who are freshmen in high school now, they know what the rule is. They have to be responsible in the classroom."

The rule may not go into effect for another year, but the storm around the bylaw rages. Critics have charged that the new rule is discriminatory and some have gone as far to label it racist.

"I don't think anybody predicted the immediate reaction," Hart said. "It was obviously (inevitable) because of the very nature of the vote and how close it was and that fact that it was a controversial item.

"I don't know that you can etch it in stone. A lot of this reaction may well be premature."

UNC Tops State ...

Wolfpack 15-6 over the first six minutes of the second half to take a 60-51 lead on Kevin Madden's offensive rebound basket with 13:54 left.

But N.C. State was able to match North Carolina's spurts, scoring seven straight points to pull within two points with 6:55 left.

Rice and Madden also finished with 14 points for North Carolina, now 16-3 and tied with N.C. State at 3-1 in the Atlantic Coast Conference. J.R. Reid added 13.

Howard led N.C. State, which dropped to 12-2, with 20 points, Rodney Monroe added 17 and Corchiani had 11 for the Wolfpack.

Calcavecchia Set For Final

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — Mark Calcavecchia, in the same situation a week ago, let a title get away from him.

"I learned something last week," Calcavecchia said Saturday after his late burst of four birdies and an eagle gave him a three-stroke lead after three rounds of the $700,000 Phoenix Open golf touranament.

"I was playing so good — just like I am now — and I got the lead going into Sunday and I had the feeling inside of me that I was going to win," he said.

That was in the Bob Hope Classic, where he led by two shots going into the final round.

"I really expected to win.

"And I blew it.

"I'm going into the last round tomorrow with a different attitude out there," the long-hitting Calcavecchia said after his brilliant run had produced a 6-under-par 65 and a three-shot lead.

"I'm not going to expect to win," he said. "I'm going to try to win. That's different."

Calcavecchia was three shots off the pace when he went to the 13th tee and began a birdie-birdie-eagle-birdie-birdie string that vaulted him to the lead and left the rest of the field shaking their heads in disbelief.

"Every once in a while I get on a crazy roll like that. It was fun to do it today," Calcavecchia said after completing three trips over the TPC course at Scottsdale in 14-under-par 199.

Australian Steve Elkington played his front side in 29 on the way to a 64 that lifted him into a tie at 203 with Chip Beck and Scott Hoch. Beck shot a 66 and Hoch had a 69.

Calcavecchia, who won the Australian Open late last season, was even-par for the day through the first 12 holes and said he was "kind of frustrated, bombed out.

"I was playing great and nothing was happening. I'd hit one bad shot all day, in the water on the 12th, and I'm even par.

"'I just said to myself, 'hey, make two or three birdies coming in and it's okay.' I was just trying to shoot 68 or 69 and I ended up with that wild finish.'"

It started on the par-5 13th where he needed only a 4-iron second shot to reach the green and two-putted for birdie.

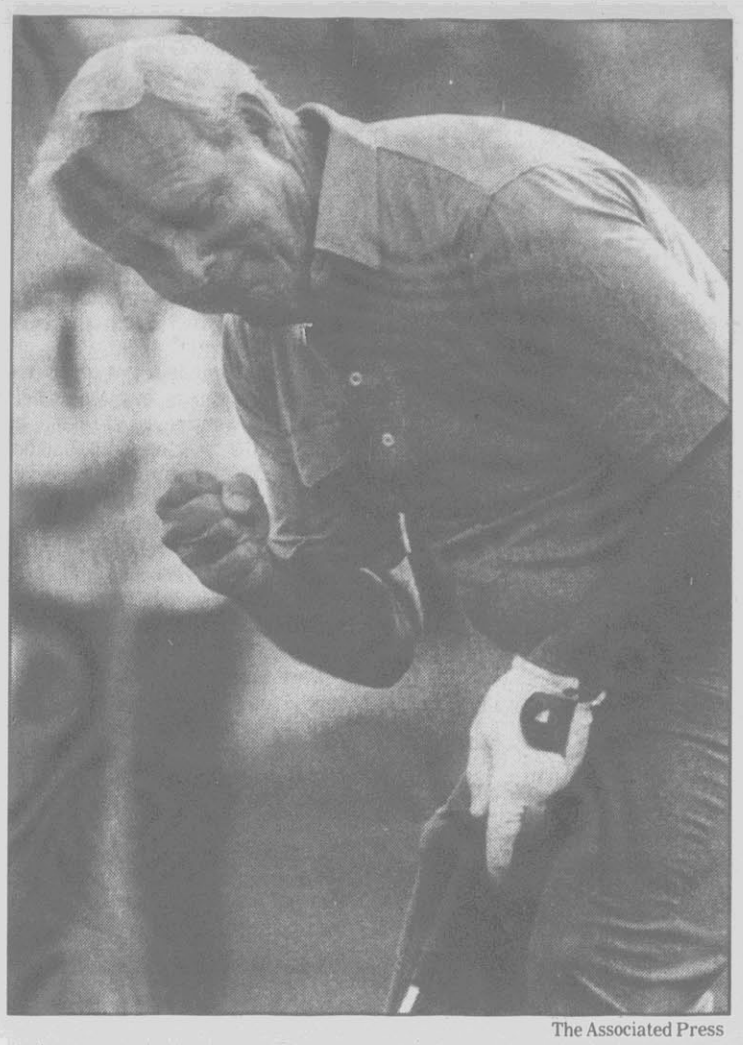

He dropped a 20-footer on the 14th. After a big drive on the par-5 15th, he hit a 5-iron to within six feet of the cup and made the eagle putt.

On the 162-yard 16th, a 7-iron shot stopped four feet from the flag and he watched as the putt caught the right lip, made a 360-degree circle around the hole and then dropped in.

The 17th is a 332-yard par-4. His drive reached the front of the green and he two-putted for birdie-3, dropping a six-foot second putt.

The 18th refused to yield, however, and he two-putted for par from 20 feet.

Putting Magic Keys Success In Senior Skins Game

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LA QUINTA, Calif. — Arnold Palmer, showing signs of his old magic under pressure, rolled in a pair of dramatic putts Saturday to win two holes and collect $70,000 on the opening day of the Senior Skins Game.

Gary Player won one hole to earn $50,000.

Chi Chi Rodriguez, who dominated last year's tournament, and Skins newcomer Billy Casper were shut out over the first nine holes of the competition at La Quinta Hotel Golf Club.

The final nine holes, with a total of $240,000 at stake, of the $360,000 tournament will be played Sunday.

Palmer, 59, rammed in a 15-foot birdie putt — "dead straight," he said — to win $60,000 on the ninth hole, including $40,000 carried over when the seventh and eighth holes were tied.

He began the day by making a par putt of 6 feet on the opening hole, worth $10,000, as the other three players all struggled to bogeys.

Player, 53, won his "skin" when he sank a 30-foot putt for a birdie 3 on the sixth hole. The second through fifth holes were tied, building the prize to $50,000.

Palmer, talking about his rich putt on No. 9, kidded Rodriguez, saying, "I watched Chi Chi putt in front of me, and he pulled it so bad I tried to wipe it out of my mind."

Palmer then playfully tugged at Rodriguez' sleeve, causing Rodriguez to dump orange juice on himself.

The 53-year-old Rodriguez, who won $300,000 of the $360,000 prize money in the inaugural Senior Skins Game a year ago, and Casper both said they hope to break through on the second day of this year's tournament.

"Those two (Palmer and Player) had it their way today," Casper, 57, said. "Maybe Juan (Rodriguez) and I will have our day tomorrow."

After Player's long putt to earn the pot on No. 6, he and Rodriguez matched birdie 4s on the 500-yard No. 7. Then all had par 4s on No. 8 to send the foursome into the final hole of the day with $60,000 on the line.

Leading up to Player's money-winning birdie, Casper and Rodriguez sank short putts for par 3s on the second hole. All four golfers had par 4s on No. 3, then Rodriguez, Palmer and Casper matched birdie 4s on the 528-yard fourth hole.

Player, who bogeyed three of the first five holes, was the only one over par on the the fifth hole, the second par-3 on the front nine.

In the Skins format, each of the 18 holes is a tournament in itself, with prize money, called a "skin," awarded for the low score on each — unless there's a tie. If two or more players tie, the money carries over to the next hole, with all four players still in the hunt.

The players play nine holes each day, with the first six holes worth $10,000 each, No. 7 through 12 worth $20,000 and the final six holes worth $30,000.

Sunday's play will be nationally televised by NBC.

Aoki Leads Aussie Event

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MELBOURNE, Australia — Japan's Isao Aoki carded a 6-under-par 66 Saturday to take a one-stroke lead after the third round of the $525,000 Coca Cola Golf Classic at the Royal Melbourne course.

Aoki, 46, who has not won a golf tournament outside of his native Japan in five years, finished the third round 8-under-par 208 to lead the 120-man field, which includes 20 of the leading Japanese players and former U.S. Open winner Scott Simpson.

After 54 holes Aoki holds a narrow lead over Australian Rodger Davis and Grant Waite of New Zealand, both at 7-under-par 209.

Georgetown Rallies To Top Huskies

Oklahoma Tops Iowa State In OT; Wisconsin Upsets Michigan In Big 10 Action

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LANDOVER, Md. — Sam Jefferson made two free throws with 15 seconds remaining Saturday to give No. 3 Georgetown a 59-55 Big East victory over Connecticut that served as a welcome-back gift to Hoyas coach John Thompson, who returned to the bench after a two-game protest.

Georgetown were behind 51-41 with 5:24 left before rallying. The Hoyas still trailed by six with 2:57 left, but a 3-point shot by Mark Tillmon made it 55-52 and Alonzo Mourning followed with a three-point play to tie it with 1:30 remaining.

Georgetown's Bobby Winston made a steal that set up a short jumper by Dwayne Bryant. The shot missed, but Jefferson got the rebound and was fouled.

Jefferson made both free throws, and after Connecticut's Chris Smith missed a jumper, Hoya guard Charles Smith was fouled. He made two free throws to account for the final margin.

The Hoyas' late heroics came as Thompson watched from the bench for the first time since staging a protest over Proposition 42. He did not coach while demonstrating over the new rule on scholarships.

Thompson watched in frustration as Connecticut pulled away in the first half, leading by as many as 11 points. After the Hoyas took a 6-5 lead, the Huskies never trailed until Jefferson made his two foul shots.

Smith led Georgetown with 19 points and Mourning had 11. The victory enabled the Hoyas, 14-1 overall and 4-1 in the Big East, to move into a tie atop the conference with Seton Hall.

Connecticut fell to 10-5 and 2-4 despite getting 17 points from Cliff Robinson.

Georgetown went six minutes without a basket and made only eight of 21 shots from the floor, yet trailed by only 28-22 at the half.

Robinson made a short hook in the lane and jammed a follow shot to ignite an 12-0 run that gave the Huskies a 17-6 lead. The Hoyas used three straight baskets to cut the margin to 17-12, but Connecticut eventually worked its advantage back up to 28-18 before settling for a six-point lead at the half.

Oklahoma.....109
Iowa St.....100 (OT)

AMES, Iowa — Mookie Blaylock scored a career-high 38 points and Tony Martin hit two straight baskets in overtime to put Oklahoma ahead to stay as the No. 5 Sooners pulled out a 109-100 Big Eight Conference victory over Iowa State on Saturday.

Oklahoma rallied from an 11-point deficit in the first half and overcame a subpar performance from center Stacey King to improve its conference record to 3-0 and 15-2 overall.

Martin rebounded a missed shot and scored with 3:30 remaining and got another basket inside at the 2:43 mark for a 104-100 lead. Blaylock and Terrence Mullins then hit consecutive jump shots from the left side and King sank a free throw with 44 seconds left.

King, who did not start because he was late for a pre-game meeting, finished with 15 points after scoring only one in the first half. He was averaging 25.6 points per game.

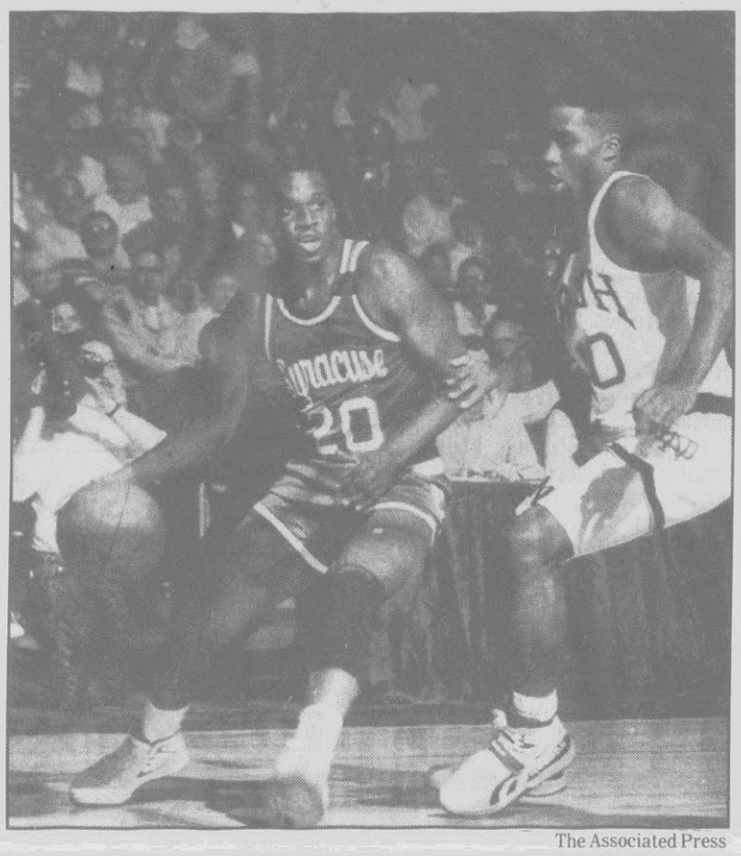

King sank two free throws with 29 seconds left to send the game into overtime.

He was averaging 25.6. Blaylock's performance bested his previous high of 37 points against Pittsburgh earlier this month. Bell added 15 points for Oklahoma, while Martin had 14 and Skeeter Henry 11.

Mark Baugh led Iowa State, 9-6 and 1-3, with a career-high 28 points, Mike Born scored 20, Alexander 19, Brian Pearson 13 and Sam Mack 12.

Iowa State, hitting its first five shots and 11 of its first 15, led 56-45 late in the first half and 56-49 at halftime. The Cyclones then stayed ahead in the second half until Blaylock hit a 15-footer for a 76-75 lead with 11:14 left.

No team led by more than three points after that and Iowa State went ahead 98-95 on Pearson's 3-pointer with 1:31 to go. King made a free throw with 1:15 remaining and sank two more at the :29 mark to force the overtime.

Syracuse's Sherman Douglas drives by Jamere Jackson

Wisconsin.....71
No. 6 Michigan.....68

MADISON, Wis. — Trent Jackson made the go-ahead free throw with 30 seconds left and Tim Locum added two more with four seconds remaining as Wisconsin upset sixth-ranked Michigan 71-68 Saturday in the Big Ten.

Locum's clinching free throws came after Michigan's Rumeal Robinson missed two free throws with nine seconds remaining.

The Wolverines' Terry Mills rebounded Robinson's second miss, but Locum ripped the ball away from him, was fouled and hit both free throws as Wisconsin ended a four-game losing streak.

Jackson led the Badgers with 21 points and Danny Jones had 19. Glen Rice led the Wolverines, now 15-3 and 3-2 in the league, with 25 points. Mills added 15.

Wisconsin, 10-5 and 2-4 in the Big Ten, trailed 68-66 when Rice hit a bank shot with 1:57 to go.

Jackson's his first free throw put the Badgers ahead 69-68. When his second shot twisted out, teammate Kurt Portmann grabbed the rebound. The ball was knocked out of bounds but the Badgers retained possession with 26 seconds to play.

Wisconsin's Tom Molaski was fouled with 16 seconds to go, but missed and Robinson rushed to the other end, drove for the basket and was fouled with nine seconds to go.

Shooting into the basket in front of the Wisconsin pep band, he missed the free throw badly. After a timeout, he also was short on the second and Locum eventually came up with the ball.

But Jones converted a three-point play with 3:16 left to tie the game at 66.

Michigan led 24-14 with 9:25 left in the first half but Wisconsin, spurred by a technical foul on Higgins, scored nine straight to get back in the game as Locum made four free throws, Jackson hit a 3-pointers and Kurt Portmann made a basket.

No. 7 Iowa.....67
Purdue.....66

Horton scored 26 points, including 10 in the final four minutes. Iowa trailed 56-45 midway through the second half and was still behind by nine before two foul shots by Horton started the Hawkeyes' surge.

Iowa, playing its fourth straight conference game on the road, outscored Purdue 10-2 in a three-minute span and took the lead 65-64 on a basket by Horton with 1:45 remaining.

Stephen Scheffler gave Purdue its final lead at 66-65 on a goaltending violation by Ray Thompson with 23 seconds to go. After the final basket by Horton, who made 11 of 15 shots, Purdue had one more chance to win, but a shot by Scheffler bounced off the rim at the buzzer.

The victory snapped a two-game losing streak and left Iowa at 2-2 in the Big Ten and 14-3 overall. Purdue dropped to 2-3 and 9-9.

Horton, who also had 10 rebounds, was backed by B.J. Armstrong with 17 points and Les Jepsen with 11. Roy Marble, the Hawkeyes' leading scorer for the season, was held to seven points, all in the second half.

Purdue was led by Ryan Berning with 13 points and Scheffler with 12.

The Hawkeyes, who opened their Big Ten season with a victory at Michigan State before losing at Minnesota and Ohio State, took an 8-0 lead as Purdue missed its first four shots and had two turnovers in the first three minutes of the game.

But the Boilermakers, whose only other loss in the previous 20 home games was to Indiana earlier this season, matched Iowa's eight-point streak at the start of a 23-5 spurt. A 3-point play by Melvin McCants tied the game, then after Jepsen's free throw put Iowa ahead again, Berning gave Purdue its first lead at 10-9.

The only other points for the Hawkeyes during an 11-minute stretch came on a basket and two free throws by Armstrong.

Purdue, meanwhile, twice built its lead to 10 points before Armstrong started the Hawkeyes' first rally with a 3-pointer with 6:36 before halftime. Iowa slowly closed the gap and cut the Boilermakers' halftime lead to 34-30 on a rebound basket by Horton.

Purdue again widened the gap in the second half and took its final lead of 11 points on two free throws by Scheffler.

No. 8 Missouri.....105
Oklahoma St.....83

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Byron Irvin scored 30 points and led a second-half rally that carried No. 8 Missouri past Oklahoma State 105-83 Saturday in the Big Eight.

Missouri trailed 62-54 before Irvin's basket put the Tigers ahead 69-68. Lee Coward scored on a pair of fast breaks, Irvin made a jump shot and Gary Leonard had a dunk as Missouri extended its lead to 79-70, capping a 25-8 surge.

The Tigers are 16-3 overall and 3-0 in the Big Eight. The Cowboys are 10-3 and 1-1.

Oklahoma State stayed close and closed to 81-79 with about five minutes left on Byron Houston's three-point play. Houston, a freshman, scored 27 points.

Coward followed with a 3-point shot and Anthony Peeler, who had 22 points, made two free throws for an 86-79 lead.

Oklahoma State trailed 40-38 at halftime, but built a 50-42 lead early in the second period.

No. 9 Arizona.....75
Villanova.....67

TUCSON, Ariz. — Sean Elliott got 31 points and became Arizona's all-time leading scorer as the No. 9 Wildcats beat Villanova 75-67 Saturday.

Arizona, the Pacific-10 Conference leader at 7-1, improved to 13-2 overall by winning the meeting of Wildcats. Villanova, 2-3 in the Big East, fell to 10-8.

Arizona led 63-50 with 4:18 remaining before Villanova's Marc Dowdell made consecutive layups and Doug West had a short jump shot that made it 63-56 with 2:41 left.

But Elliott made six of seven free throws and a slam in the next 1:19 as Arizona went ahead 71-58, and he finished the scoring with another two free throws with seven seconds left.

Elliott, who shot 8-for-12 from the field and 13-for-15 from the foul line, also had eight rebounds and three assists. He now has 2,147 points, breaking the school record of 2,132 by Bob Elliott, who is not related.

West finished with 29 points and seven rebounds, while Tom Greis had 16 points and 14 rebounds for Villanova.

Arizona, which shot 49 percent for the game, led 34-24 at halftime. Villanova shot only 36.6 percent for the game, and just 28.6 percent in the first half.

Syracuse.....99
Notre Dame.....87

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Sherman Douglas showed no signs of earlier back pain as he scored 26 points Saturday, helping Syracuse beat Notre Dame 99-87 and ending the No. 11 Orangemen's three-game losing streak.

Stephen Thompson added 25 points and Derrick Coleman had 21 for Syracuse, 15-4, while Joe Fredrick led Notre Dame, 8-3, with 24 points.

Syracuse hit 86 percent from the field in the second half and boosted its poor free-throw shooting percentage by hitting 10 of 14 attempts in the half, besting the Irish's 5-for-13 mark from the line after halftime.

Syracuse opened a 15-point lead late in the second half of a see-saw game, which the Orangemen hadn't led by more than nine points.

Notre Dame pulled within two points at 7:21, but Thompson led the Syracuse attack as they outscored the Irish 10-4 for an eight-point lead.

Crumpler Says He'll Sign With Pirates

Carlester T. Crumpler, an all-star member of the Rose High School football team, has made an oral commitment to East Carolina University, Coach Chip Williams of Rose has announced.

Crumpler, who had narrowed his choices to ECU and N.C. State, made the decision Friday, according to Williams. A tight end and defensive linebacker, Crumpler will be a second generation player for the Pirates. His father, Carlester Crumpler, played for the Pirates in the early 1970s, earning all-Southern Conference and all-American honors, along with Player of the Year honors.

The younger Crumpler was named to the Big East all-conference team, the All-East team and the Associated Press' All-State team.

Crumpler is the second member of the Rose High School team to give an oral commitment to the Pirates. Earlier in the week, all-state selection Timmy Moore, twice the Big East Player of the Year, announced he would play for the Pirates.

Valvano's Nightmare Continues

State's Ex-Manager Details More Information About The WolfPack

By Tom Foreman Jr.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH, N.C. — A former North Carolina State basketball student manager says he was offered cars, cash, apartments and money while involved with the program, and told an interviewer that the public will be "appalled" when they read about the behind-the-scenes activities with the Wolfpack in the forthcoming book, "Personal Fouls."

John Simonds Jr., thought to be the source of allegations in the book, was the subject of an interview televised by NBC Sports during halftime of the N.C. State-North Carolina game on Saturday. He said he decided to give information about the Wolfpack program and Coach Jim Valvano because he thought the public should see behind the scenes.

"I was on the inside. I saw things that the average public person does not see," Simonds said in the interview, which was conducted by NBC investigative reporter Armen Keteyian.

Valvano, who watched the video tape of Simonds' interview, responded, saying: "Integrity has always been, maybe, the most important aspect of the coaching profession. My integrity has been questioned for the last several weeks," Valvano said.

"All these allegations are false and they have hurt me personally and professionally," Valvano said. "(My family) have suffered a great deal.

In responce to Simonds saying he received cars, cash and an apartment, Valvano said: "It's also shocking, the thought that a manager was offered cars, cash ..."

The allegations of wrongdoing in the Wolfpack basketball program focus on the 1986-87 season, and appeared on the dust jacket of the book, published by Simon & Schuster. Those allegations were published two weekends ago by The News and Observer of Raleigh.

Among the charges were that Valvano funneled money from the Wolfpack Club to players, that grades were changed to help players retain eligibility, and that players received cars and money.

Also, the dust jacket said that one player "deliberately lost" an NCAA first-round game so as not to be detected for drug use which would have jeopardized his NBA career.

Simonds has said that he is not the lone source for the book, but that several players and faculty members were involved in revealing information about the allegations.

"When the public sees this, I think that they're going to be shocked and appalled, especially back home, where basketball is a fever," Simonds said. "People just eat, drink, breathe basketball."

Simonds, now a student at Florida State, said he doesn't have an ax to grind in making the allegations against the program he once served.

"But I was put in a position where I was offered cars, cash, apartments, money, pressured and that's really shocking," he said.

Keteyian, who narrated part of the interview, said sources identified Charles Shackleford as the player who allegedly played below his caliber during the 1987 NCAA tournament against Florida to avoid drug testing.

Shackleford says he never talked to Golenbock and labeled the charge "a lie" and also was reported to call the book "illegitimate."

"Charles said that word?" Simonds said, apparently laughing when told of Shackleford's response. He also said the former Wolfpack center "is going to put himself in a bad situation real fast."

"He has told people that he didn't talk to Pete (author Golenbock). That's not true," Simonds said. "Charles did talk to Pete and talked to him for quite some time. And, you know, sang to him."

"He's a very smart man. He's a genius with the media. He's capable of swinging the public opinion over to him very fast," Simonds said. "Off the camera, he doesn't do the things you see him do on the camera, picking up kids and talking to grandmothers and things."

Simonds did say that he and Valvano were close. The coach has disputed that claim in previous interviews, saying Simonds was dismissed from the team after the 1986-87 season and was not invited to return.

In his response, Valvano said he was surprised to learn that Simonds considered their relationship as close, and he said his friends would also be surprised to learn he was quiet in his personal life.

In response to the specific charges, Valvano said N.C. State's drug testing program has been judged one of the best run in the country. He said procedures must be followed in order to change the grades of students, and that twice-annual audits of finances at the Wolfpack Club would make it impossible for him to funnel money out of the club and to players.

River Plantation Set To Break Ground

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Construction is expected to begin around March on a new 18-hole championship golf course in the Falkland area — with another 18 holes planned at some point in the future.

Ken Worthington, who will be the resident pro and manager of the River Plantation Country Club, said the new course will open sometime in the spring of 1990, if all goes right.

The new country club will be an integral part of a new housing development in the Falkland area — actually dwarfing the Pitt County town. The first phase of the development will include some 400-500 building lots around the golf course, located between Otter Creek, the Tar River, N.C. 43 and N.C. 222. The second phase, to be developed at a future date, would include another housing development around another 18-hole course. Each area includes some 1,000 acres.

Worthington, a New Bern native, has had extensive experience as a golf pro, having played on the tour, and been involved in the construction of several courses himself. Worthington opened the North Ridge Country Club in Raleigh in 1967 when the course was under construction and helped develop the membership. Prior to that, he was at the Orangeburg, S.C. Country Club when it moved to another location and enlarged its membership.

Gene Hamm, who will design River Plantation, was also involved with Worthington at North Ridge. Hamm did some revision on the original North Ridge course and designed the second 18 holes there.

Worthington has been a professional for 30 years and is a life member of the PGA. He comes to Greenville from the Tidewater, Va. area, where he has been for the past nine years.

"Each hole will have several sets of tees," Worthington said. "The championship tees will play around 7,000 yards and the front tees, around 6,000 yards."

The golf course will be the sixth in Pitt County. Current clubs include Brook Valley Country Club, Greenville Country Club, Ayden Golf and Country Club, Farmville Golf and Country Club, and Indian Trails Country Club in Grifton.

"There are only two courses in Greenville, both private," Worthington said, "and a survey has shown there is a demand for more courses. There is also a need for a public course, but we are not trying to serve that purpose with this club."

River Plantation will — eventually — be restricted to property owners in the area. Currently, purchase of a lot in the development carries with it automatic membership in the country club. "The first 100 or so will include membership," Worthington said. "We're getting close to this now. For these people, who will be founder members, there will be no initiation fee and they will be able to sell their property at a later time and regain membership in the club."

Worthington said that would probably be some temporary memberships involved also, but these would be limited and would be phased out as more lots are sold in the development.

The club will have an old southern plantation theme, which will carry over through the development, too, Worthington said. The club house will resemble a plantation mansion, with tee markers and ball washers and other trim for the course following along with that theme.

In addition, some restrictions will be maintained through the residential area. An architectural committee must approve all plans and all changes in any lots, even tree cutting, according to Worthington.

Hamm, who will design the course, has built some 75 to 80 courses across the south. Among his designs are North Ridge's Oaks course, Echo Farms in Wilmington, Silver Creek in Emerald Isle, and 13 different courses in the Grand Strand area of Myrtle Beach.

"Normally, it takes about 12 months to construct a course, then you have conditioning time, too," Worthington said. "We hope to have the fairways ready to sprig in July or August, and the greens (penncross bent) will be planted in September or early October. This gives us the possibility of opening the course in the spring of 1990."

Worthington said the land for the course is gently rolling and ideal for a course. "Gene has said that the soil texture in the area is perfect. It has good drainage and we feel that we can build as fine a course as there is in eastern North Carolina."

Plans call for water to be on 10 of the 18 holes, usually in the form of small ponds. A 12-acre lake will greet the golfer on the first tee, and ponds will guard the greens on three and four. A five-acre pond will border the fifth fairway. A pond will guard the green on six and lie beside the green on seven. The large lake on one will also guard the green at the ninth hole. Additional ponds will come into play at 13, 15 and 16 on the back side.

"These are all preliminary plans," Worthington pointed out. "There could be some changes before all the work is done."

In addition to golf, the club will also have tennis courts, a swimming pool and a number of nature areas. "We want to have buffer zones both along the river and Otter Creek to guard those area," Worthington said.

The club also has hopes of one day attracting a professional tournament. "We'll aim at either a senior or an LPGA tournament," Worthington said. "But we would like to eventually try and attract a PGA tournament here, although I admit that it would take a major sponsor to bring one here."

UNCC Upends South Alabama

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Freshman guard Henry Williams scored 27 points to lead North Carolina-Charlotte to a 72-70 Sun Belt Conference victory over South Alabama on Saturday night.

Williams scored 11 of his team's last 14 points after South Alabama, 9-5 and 3-1, had erased a 21-point first-half deficit.

Jeff Hodge's three-point play gave the Jaguars a 66-65 edge with 2:55 left. But Williams hit a 3-point jumper with 1:31 remaining, giving the 49ers, 7-7 and 1-3, a 68-66 lead.

Hodge tied the game with two free throws 14 seconds later, but Williams hit three of four free throws from that stage, including two which provided a 71-68 49ers' lead with 33 seconds left.

South Alabama drew to 71-70 when Junie Lewis hit two free throws with 15 seconds remaining. With nine seconds left, Byron Dinkins netted one foul shot for the final margin.

South Alabama, which hit only eight of 30 first-half field goal attempts, trailed 45-26 at halftime.

The 49ers also got 18 points from Dinkins and 11 by Cedric Ball.

Campbell.....59
Winthrop.....58, OT

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. — An inside basket by Henry Wilson with 29 seconds remaining in overtime gave Campbell a 59-58 Big South Conference victory over Winthrop on Saturday.

Winthrop had a chance to win the game, but Campbell's Sanders Jackson blocked a shot on a drive by Sean Smith with one second remaining to preserve the victory.

Shaun Wise led Winthrop, 8-8 and 2-3, with 17 points. Smith added 16.

No. 20 Stanford.....84
UCLA.....75

STANFORD, Calif. — Todd Lichti scored 18 points and Howard Wright added 17 to lead No. 20 Stanford over UCLA 84-75 Saturday in the Pacific-10.

The Cardinal, 14-4 and 6-2 in conference play, shut down high-scoring UCLA guard Pooh Richardson, who was held to six points. The senior guard averages 15 points per game.

The Bruins, which are now 10-5 overall and 5-2 in league play, were led by Don MacLean with 20 points.

Stanford took a 42-31 halftime lead. Guard Terry Taylor scored 10 points and made 4-for-5 shots from the field in the first half.

The Cardinal extended its lead to as many as 15 points in the second half behind Eric Reveno, Lichti and Wright, who together piled up 29 points in the second half.

UCLA starters Richardson and Trevor Wilson were hampered by foul trouble early in the game, each sitting out most of the first half. Wilson, who averages 18 points a game, scored 17 but only had one point in the first half.

Florida St.....95
Cincinnati.....80

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — George McCloud scored 29 points and Irving Thomas added a career-high 21 Saturday as 14th-ranked Florida State captured a 95-80 Metro Conference victory over foul-plauged Cincinnati.

Florida State, now 14-1 overall and 2-0 in the conference, sank 42 of 52 free throw tries with McCloud making 12 of 15 and Derrick Mitchell 11 of 15 while scoring a career-high 17 points.

Tony Dawson added 14 points and sophomore Aubry Boyd came off the bench to score 10 in the second half for Florida State, which has won six straight games since suffering its lone loss of the season to Villanova last month.

Cincinnati, which has dropped 17 straight conference road games, fell to 8-6 and 1-3 in Metro action.

The Bearcats led 55-52 early in the second half until Boyd sparked a 12-4 run that put Florida State into a 64-59 lead. Cincinnati was never able to get closer than two points, 65-63, for the remainder of the game.

Steve Jackson scored 18 points and Levertis Robinson 17 for Cincinnati. Keith Starks chipped in with 13 and Cedric Glover 12.

Elnardo Givens and Andre Tate each fouled out for Cincinnati,which scored just eight points from the free throw line while being whistled for 31 personals.

No. 19 Indiana.....75
Michigan St.....60

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — Jay Edwards scored 17 of his 19 points in the second half and No. 19 Indiana beat Michigan State 75-60 Saturday for its 12th straight victory and sole possession of first place in the Big Ten.

The Hoosiers, 15-4 overall and 5-0 in conference play, trailed early by eight points before tying the score at 33 on Brian Sloan's jumper at the halftime buzzer.

Edwards, who made all three of his shots from 3-point range in the second half, put the Hoosiers ahead to stay 40-37 with 16:22 to play.

Michigan State, 10-5 overall and 1-4 in the conference, had only one field goal in nearly 10 minutes in the second half as Indiana took command. Steve Smith, who led the Spartans with 18 points, made a field goal 15 seconds into the period to give his team a 35-33 edge. Smith's two free throws then gave the Spartans their final lead 37-35 with 18:02 to play.

Joe Hillman, who scored 15 for Indiana, tied the score with 17:27 remaining. After Edwards' go-ahead basket, Eric Anderson made a layup to complete a seven-point Indiana spurt.

Lyndon Jones contributed 12 points to the victory. Ken Redfield with 12 and Todd Wolfe with 10 were the only other Spartans in double figures.

Vanderbilt.....94
Texas.....79

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Frank Kornet scored 25 points and grabbed 16 rebounds, both career highs, as Vanderbilt Coach C.M. Newton received his 500th career victory by downing Texas 94-79 Saturday in a nationally televised game.

The Commodores trailed by as many as 13 points in the first half before shutting down Texas' outside shooting and cruising to their 10th victory in 18 games.

The victory gives Newton, a player on the University of Kentucky's 1951 national championship team, a 500-369 record as a coach.

Newton, who ranks 11th in wins among active coaches, coached 12 years each at Transylvania and Alabama and is in his eighth season at Vanderbilt.

The Commodores placed five players in double figures with Booker following Kornet with 16 points, Eric Reid and Goheen each finished with 14, and Wilcox had 10 points.

Texas' Travis Mays topped all scorers with 30 points, while Wright came off the bench to score 16.

Kentucky.....66
No. 18 Tennessee.....65

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Derrick Miller scored 23 points and Deron Feldhaus made two foul shots with 12 seconds left Saturday night as Kentucky beat No. 18 Tennessee 66-65 in the Southeastern Conference.

Kentucky improved to 9-9 and 4-2 in the conference. Tennessee fell to 12-3 and 5-1 in the SEC.

Miller had 15 of his 23 points in the second half and the Wildcats' sagging 2-3 zone confounded Tennessee, which was held to its lowest point total of the season and 25 under its average.

While Kentucky was hitting 61.5 percent from the field, making 24 of 39 shots in a deliberate half-court offense, the Vols hit just 18 of 60 shots for 30 percent.

The tight zone also held Dyron Nix, Tennessee's leading scorer, to just 14 points.

Thompson Glad To Be Back

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LANDOVER, Md. — John Thompson was back on the Georgetown bench Saturday and he was awfully glad about it, especially after a narrow victory over Connecticut.

The Hoyas coached missed two games in a protest over the NCAAs membership's passing of Proposition 42, new academic admission qualifications, Thompson described as "discriminatory."

When he met the media after the 59-55 victory, in which the Hoyas were down 10 points with 5:25 to play and didn't lead in the second half until there was 12 seconds to play, Thompson looked tired.

"I told them after the game, 'I don't mind blowouts but I'm getting too old for the close games.' It felt good to be back, especially the last few seconds," Thompson said. Then he turned serious about his eight-day, two-game protest that attracted as much national attention in college basketball as any game played in that time.

"I was glad to be back because that's what I do best — coaching, not protesting. I feel emotionally drained. The nervous system this morning was going like a vibrator. I just have to get back into this and get my mind settled down."

Thompson's mind was certainly made up last week when he announced he would boycott his team's games until some positive movement was shown regarding discussion of the new academic standards.

The ruling, which was to take effect in 1990-91, would have meant the loss of scholarship for those not meeting the minimum standards of a 2.0 average in core curriculum and a specific score — 700 in the SAT, 15 on the ACT — on standardized entrance examinations.

Proposition 48, a rule adopted three years ago, will remain as the standard with student-athletes meeting one of the requirements being able to obtain athletic aid while forfeiting a year of eligibility.

When Thompson announced he would not coach his team until he saw movement regarding discussion and possible repeal of the rule, the attention he drew brought the new academic standards into the college basketball limelight.

The 1988 U.S. Olympic coach did not even make the trip to Providence with his team, again leaving it in the hands of his assistants, who did lead the third-ranked Hoyas to victory in each game.

He was back, however, for Connecticut at the Capital Centre and he received a warm reception from the crowd when he walked onto the court as the team took the floor for warmups.

"It was an honor to have him back," said guard Mark Tillmon, who had five points in the Hoyas' decisive run. "If he's happy, we're happy."

Reserve Sam Jefferson made the deciding free throws with 12 seconds left.

"It was comforting to know one of the best coaches in the country is on your side," Jefferson said. "I'm always glad to have Coach back."

On Friday, Thompson announced that a meeting between himself, school administrators and several NCAA officials had shown a "sincere committment" to re-evaluation of Proposition 42.

"Nothing negative was involved. We didn't have to beat anyone over the head or threaten anyone," Thompson said of the meeting at NCAA headquarters in Mission, Kan. "It was a good, friendly discussion."

Thompson had stirred the coaching and academic communities as they hadn't been in quite some time.

He was praised by most, even some of his harshest critics.

His protest helped to bring out comments from some school administrators that they had voted the wrong way because of the wording of the proposal.

"It's quite obvious, based on the confusion that has come out surrounding this, there were people who were not exactly certain what they were voting for anyway," Thompson said.

His critics were few throughout the protest, a rarity for a coach whose teams are kept in Thompson's protective web from the media and public.

"I don't think any other coach doing what he's doing would have had the same effect," Oklahoma's Billy Tubbs said last week.

Thompson said who he is should not have affected the result of the protest.

"Rosa Parks was not famous when she made her stand," Thompson said referring to the woman who refused to move on a segragated bus in Montgomery, Ala., one of the first acts of the civil rights movement.

"What it has done is show what a strong and respected man can do if he stands up on his hind legs and does it," Georgetown president Rev. Timothy Healy, S.J. said of his coach's actions.

The NCAA did not repeal Proposition 42, only a special presidents' session or the next January's regularly schedule convention could do that.

NCAA president Albert Witte and Martin Massengale, chairman of the presidents' commission, said they would recommend holding up any NCAA movement on Proposition 42 until a related on-going study is completed.

Super Bowl Preparations Close ...

Walsh, is an emphatic "NO."

"The odds are set because so many people bet on one team. That doesn't mean they know what they're talking about," says quarterback Joe Montana. "I can't envision a team being favored by a touchdown in a game of this magnitude."

"1988 has been very difficult," said Walsh, who is seeking his third Super Bowl win in a decade of running the 49ers, a tenure that he has hinted strongly will end with this game.

"We lost at home as a 13-point favorite over Atlanta and a 15-point favorite over the Raiders. We are very capable of losing."

Indeed.

The 49ers lost six games this season, including those two upsets and one in which they blew a 23-point third-quarter lead in Phoenix. The Bengals lost just four, playing in an AFC Central that is arguably the NFL's toughest division.

At one point, the 49ers were 6-5, then ran off four straight wins before getting blown out 38-16 in their final regular-season game with the Rams, a game that led Phil Simms of the New York Giants to suggest that the 49ers "lay down like dogs" to eliminate the Giants after being outscored by New York 66-6 in the 1986 and '87 playoffs.

In fact, a lot of this lies in the search for a standout team amidst the fog of NFL parity.

Why isn't that team the Bengals?

To start with, these are the regal two-time champion 49ers, who routed the regal 1985 champion BEARS, against the commonfolk bengals.

In other words, a national team from a national city that overpowered another national team from a national city; a team seeking to become the unofficial team of the decade with its third Super Bowl win in seven years.

The Bengals?

Just the AFC guys; a bunch of guys from a Midwest river town who were 4-11!!!! last season. So what if everyone knew they were better than a 4-11 team, that the strike skewered a lot of records. In the public mind, 4-11 is 4-11.

Ironically, all those problems started on Sept. 20, 1987, before 53,498 fans who came to watch the Bengals play these same 49ers at Riverfront Stadium. With six seconds left, Cincinnati held a 6-point lead and had fourth down and 25 at its own 30.

But James Brooks was thrown for a 5-yard loss, leaving two seconds left on the clock and Montana then hit Rice with a 25-yard touchdown pass in front of Eric Thomas, a rookie in his second regular-season game, for the victory.

Then came the 24-day strike and the season went downhill from there. "We were always in games," says Esiason, "we just seemed to lose them."

This year, the season began with a goal-line stand that preserved a 21-14 victory over Pittsburgh and was followed by a 28-24 win in Philadelphia that was preserved by a last-ditch defensive effort that stopped the Eagles at the Bengals' 11.

"That seemed to give our defense confidence," says Thomas, who has emerged in his second season as one of the NFL's most promising cornerbacks. "We all feel we can stop anyone, including Rice."

Thomas wasn't the only young player to emerge as the Bengals won five straight before losing for the first time in New England on Oct. 16.

There was David Fulcher, an oversized, 228-pound strong safety; Joe Walter, a 290-pound tackle who bested some of the best defensive linemen in the league; Tim Krumrie, who emerged as one of the game's best nose tackles.

He took over from Stanley Wilson as the starting fullback a third of the way into the season and ended up leading the team with 1,066 yards. He also scored 15 touchdowns, punctuated by the "Ickey Shuffle," an awkward looking two-footed hop that somehow entranced Cincinnati fans and spread nationwide.

It was symptomatic of a season that ended 12-4 and was followed by victories over Seattle, 21-13, and Buffalo, 21-10, in the playoffs.

"You know all those games last year where we'd be right there and lose?" asks Esiason. "This year we'd win them."

"The way the league is now, there are probably 20 teams who can make the playoffs if things go right, and if you make the playoffs, you have a chance at the Super Bowl," Wyche says.

"It comes down to making one, two or three plays a game. This year we made them."

The 49ers made them and barely squeezed by in their first two games — a 34-33 victory at New Orleans and a 20-17 win over the Giants achieved when Montana and Rice hooked up on a 78-yard touchdown pass with 41 seconds and no time outs left.

Rice, hampered for most of the season by the ankle that he reinjured in practice this week, finished with just nine TD catches in 16 games compared with a league-record 22 in 12 non-strike games in 1987.

But after that Giants game they lost five of nine, including a 24-23 defeat in Phoenix in which they blew a 23-0 third-quarter lead and a dismal 9-3 loss at home to the Raiders.

Moreover, the team was plagued by rumors that Walsh would leave and by the shuffling of Montana and Steve Young at quarterback.

In fact, the only positive note in that stretch was Roger Craig, who emerged as one of the league's best runners after spending most of his career as an all-purpose rusher-blocker-receiver. He finished the season with an NFC-leading 1,502 yards, including 190 in a 24-21 win over the Rams in which several of his runs were the stuff of highlight films.

But the season turned on Monday night, Nov. 21, when a series of big plays — including John Taylor's 95-yard punt return, gave them a 37-21 win over the defending champion Redskins.

From there they went on to win three more, lose to the Rams, then avenge last year's playoff loss with a 34-9 win over Minnesota and demolish Chicago in "Bear weather" as Montana threw three touchdown passes, two to Rice, who had five receptions for 133 yards.

Just about every sports story you've read about the Super Bowl this past week has been about the players, coaches and fans of the San Francisco 49ers and Cincinnati Bengals.

But haven't you ever wondered about what will be going on behind the scenes at Joe Robbie Stadium today when the two teams take the field?

Take for instance that the game telecast will include 23 cameras.

NBC-TV will have network coverage to approximately 208 stations and CBS Radio will air its broadcast to more than 281 radio stations throughout the United States and an additional 400 stations around the world on the Armed Forces Radio Network.

The game will be distributed by Trans World International, the NFL's international distributor to the following countries: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bermuda, Brazil, Canada, Curacao, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Dubai, England, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hong Kong, Hungary, Iceland, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Portugal, Saudi Arabia, Scotland, Singapore, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Thailand, Venezuela, Wales and Yugoslavia.

And what about the trophy?

The winning team today will receive permanent possession of the Vince Lombardi Trophy. The trophy, named after the late coach of the two-time Super Bowl champion Green Bay Packers, is sterling silver and is made by Tiffany & Company.

The trophy is a regulation silver football mounted in a kicking position on a pyramid-like stand of three concave sides. The trophy stands 20 3/4 inches tall, weighs 6.7 pounds and is valued at more than $10,000.

An anticipated capacity crowd of 75,223 will jam into Joe Robbie Stadium to watch the game. That attendance mark won't come close to the 103,985 that attended Super Bowl XIV in the Rose Bowl.

But just like most of the other Super Bowl stories you've read this week, this one will be tossed aside and forgotten once the whistle blows to start the game.

Chargers, Dixon Roll By Hurricanes

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

LITTLEFIELD — With four guards in the lineup, Ayden-Grifton coach Bob Murphrey was hoping at least one of them could get the ball into center Leon Dixon consistently.

As it turned out, all four were pretty successful feeding Dixon as he scored a game-high 28 points, all on short shots inside the paint, as the Chargers rolled over Pamlico County, 82-62, in an Eastern Plains Conference basketball matchup Friday.

"We handled the ball really well," Murphrey said. "We've got four perimeter players in the lineup. They were getting him the ball. That's the best we've done all year getting him the ball. We were able to do what we wanted."

At 6-4 and 230 pounds, Dixon, in many ways, had the easy part. All he had to do was run down the floor, pick a spot in the lane and wait for the ball. When he caught it, he'd turn and put in a short shot over any number of Pamlico defenders.

"We overplayed the big man and he killed us," Pamlico coach Gary Cooper said. "I wish I had a big guy like that inside."

The Chargers controlled this one from the outset.

After a 2-2 tie in the opening minutes, Ayden-Grifton led the rest of the way.

Ronnell Peterson had two of the team's first three baskets. Then Dixon scored two in a row inside to make it 10-2. Dixon and Peterson scored seven points each in the first period as the Chargers broke out to a 21-11 lead.

From there, the Hurricanes never got closer than 10 points the rest of the way.

"Give Ayden all the credit," Cooper said. "They've got a fine ball club. Whenever we had a spurt, they countered. I think the pressure, the aggressive way they played (defense) hurt us. We looked for them to deny on the entrance passes, not on the dribble."

The Chargers opened the game in a man-to-man defense that included a lot of double-teaming and it helped them gain the early lead.

With a small lineup, Murphrey said his team has to dictate the tempo.

"With that type lineup, we need to pick up the pace," he said. "They've got the freedom, if a guy turns back, to go over and double-team. Sometimes they do it too much. I wanted them to play a little more solid. You pay a price when you miss. That up and down pace is not conducive to a half-court defense."

The second quarter, much like the third and fourth, was more of the same. If Dixon wasn't scoring on layups inside, Peterson was sneaking around picking up baskets here and there on his way to 25 points. By halftime, the Chargers were ahead 39-26.

Dixon scored on a follow shot to open the second-half. Vincent Thomas missed at the other end for Pamlico. Peterson rebounded and started down the court on a fast break. He hit Dixon in the paint, who quickly shoveled the ball back to him as he laid the ball in and drew a foul from Thomas. Peterson added the free throw for a 44-26 lead.

Pamlico missed at the other end and Dixon scored again inside to make it 46-26 with 5:50 remaining in the quarter. The lead hovered near this margin the rest of the way.

Pamlico never really even made a charge in the second half as the Hurricanes' went scoreless for the first 4:05 of the period. That drought killed any comeback hopes.

James Woodard added 10 points for the Chargers, 11-3 overall and 4-0 in the conference. Pamlico falls to 1-7 and 1-2.

In the girls' game, Ayden-Grifton overcame a slow start at the beginning of the third quarter to roll past the Lady Hurricanes for a 55-32 victory.

The Lady Chargers led 26-19 at the half, but Pamlico rallied within 27-26 on a layup by Denise Davis with just under five minutes remaining in the period.

From there, Ayden-Grifton regrouped as Debbie Williams and Mary Spruill scored four points apiece to key a 13-2 run that closed out the third quarter with Ayden-Grifton leading 40-28.

From there, the Lady Chargers rolled on to the win.

Ayden-Grifton moves to 6-8 overall and 2-2 in the EPC. Both Charger teams return to action Friday at Farmville Central.

Maxwell's Admission Is Proving Expensive

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — A reported admission by former Florida basketball player Vernon Maxwell that he accepted cash from an agent while still in school could cost the university more than $600,000 in tournament revenue, said David Berst, NCAA director of enforcement.

Maxwell, now a guard for the NBA's San Antonio Spurs, was recently quoted in the St. Petersburg Times as saying he accepted money while at Florida.

If Maxwell did, Berst said Thursday, he was immediately ineligible.

Florida earned $318,808 from the 1987 NCAA tournament and $287,561 from the 1988 event. Maxwell competed in both.

"If the student athlete or the school knew that player was ineligible, then the school may have to return those funds. That decision would have to be made by the NCAA Executive Council," Berst said.

If Florida is forced to forfeit the money, it could sue the agents in an attempt to recoup the loss.

The acceptance of money by an athlete would not result in sanctions or probation against the university unless the school had knowledge of the payments.

Fike Rallies To Topple Rampants, 57-55

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Down by five points with 70 seconds left to go, Wilson Fike put on a furious rally and Jamie Watson's tap-in at the buzzer allowed the Golden Demons to slip past Rose High School, 57-55, Friday night.

Paul Powers had just hit a baseline jumper to put Rose into a 55-50 lead with 1:16 left in the game, but Watson came downcourt and nailed a three-point shot from the top of the key with 1:06 to go.

The Associated Press

Rose's Johnny Ebron finds himself surrounded by defenders

Just after the in-bounds pass by the Rampants, Maurice Williams stole the ball and drove for the layup with 56 seconds to go, tying the game at 55-55.

Rose, after a time-out, worked the ball around and with 14 seconds left, James Teel drove towards the basket, but was called for a charge, giving the Demons the last shot with the ball.

"When we got the ball with the score tied," a victorious coach Harvey Reid said, "I knew we had it."

Fike called time with 14 seconds to go, setting up its play. Kendrick Lucas got the ball low, but missed his shot with four seconds left. He spun around the basket, got the rebound as it came off the other side and put it back up with two seconds left, but again it rolled across but Watson was there for the tap just milliseconds before the horn went off.

As it was, Fike was lucky to have Watson in there at the end. Minutes earlier, he had taken a spill under the Rose basket and left the game after banging his nose and his elbow. But he came back in to spark the final rally.

"We've had several (games like this)," Reid said. "I think our players are getting used to being in that position.

"We were fighting foul trouble and trying to keep Maurice (Williams) and Kevin (Satterfield) in there the rest of the way."

Reid said that Fike was lucky to escape with the win. "We've never played well in this gym. When we win here, it's good for us. But it'll be a different story when we play at our place. I'm not taking anything from Rose, but we just don't play well here."

Fike didn't play well, hitting only 40 percent of its shots, including 38.5 percent in the second half. Rose, in contrast, hit 53.7 percent from the floor and also outrebounded Fike, 35-28. Fike, however, held an 18-11 advantage in turnovers and made good use of it.

"Turnovers killed us," Rose coach Jim Brewington said, "especially right there at the end. We played about as well as we can, but we couldn't make our free throws (8 of 16) when we needed to."

Brewington also felt that a technical foul called against Rose's Carlester Crumpler hurt the Rampants early on when Fike built up as much as a 12-point lead.

Fike was leading 8-7 at the time and Rose went up for a shot that was rejected. A dead ball followed just seconds later, and Crumpler, as the floor captain, questioned the official about the no-call on what Rose thought was goal tending.

The first official he approached pointed to another and when Crumpler went to him, he shook his head. Crumpler moved away and the official called the technical.

"He didn't say anything to him," Brewington insisted afterwards.

Fike, however, got one of the two free throws, then added a three-point basket by Satterfield after the in-bounds. Rose committed a turnover on its in-bounds following and Fike scored off that, running out to a 14-7 lead.

Both teams were cold early on. Rose missed its first four shots and was just two of 10 in the first period. Fike missed its first four also and was six of 16 in the period, which saw them take a 20-10 lead.

Watson scored to open the second period, making it 22-10 before Rose had a mini-rally to trim it to 24-16. The Rampants twice went to the line with one-and-one opportunities but failed to convert and Fike pulled back out by 11, 32-21 at the half.

The Rampants caught fire in the second half and roared back to take the lead late in the third period. Fike hit only one of nine shots in the first seven minutes of the period while Rose was pumping in 15 to take a 36-34 lead.

Crumpler and Powers both score to open the period and after Watson hit for Fike, Teel and Johnny Ebron both hit two-point baskets before Jamie Brewington nailed a three to cut it to 34-32. Rose then missed four straight times before Ebron hit off a rebound with 2:07 left to tie the game for the first time at 34-34.

Powers then scored off a fast break to five Rose the lead for the first time, 36-34 and Crumpler added two free throws to up it to 38-34. Fike got a three-pointer, but baskets by Powers and Eric Edwards ran the lead to five fore Satterfield hit at the horn to make it 42-39.

Rose continued to hold on to the lead in the final period although Fike cut it back to 47-46 at one point. The Rampants eased it back out by five once again, 55-50, before the bottom fell out on them.

Watson finished with 25 points for Fike, which goes to 12-0 overall and 4-0 in the conference. Williams added 12 and Satterfield, 10. Rose was led by Brewington with 14 and Powers with 11.

The Rampants fall to 10-4 overall and 3-2 in league play. They are idle until Friday when they host Northeastern.

Rose High School's girls' team, decimated by injuries and other problems, fell to Fike, 45-31, in their game.

The Rampants have had to go into the student body to come up with additional players in order to continue competing after losing two more members of the team, Angie Mills and Sharon Kuykendall.

Rose, however, held an 11-8 lead in the first period before Fike came back to grab an 18-17 halftime lead. From there, Fike pulled away, building up a 33-23 lead going into the final quarter. In that, Fike outhit Rose, 12-8.

Tammie Atkinson and Sheila Horne each had 13 points while Denise Hill added 12 for Fike. Rose was led by Jenny Stoneham with 13.

Rose falls to 5-6 overall and 3-2 in the conference.

Holly Farms Rejects Tyson Foods Buyout Bid

By Woody Baird
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — The board of directors of Holly Farms Corp. rejected a sweetened $1.15 billion buyout offer from rival poultry producer Tyson Foods Inc., but invited Tyson and ConAgra Inc. to continue bidding for the firm.

In a statement Friday, Holly Farms acknowledged that Tyson's $63.50-a-share cash bid topped ConAgra's offer to buy the company in a stock swap valued at $1 billion.

However, Holly Farms said, its board had doubts that Tyson could in fact pay $63.50 a share for the firm.

Holly Farms said Tyson had been unwilling "to provide the board with appropriate assurances that Holly Farms' stockholders would in fact have received $63.50 and not some lesser amount."

The directors also were not certain that Tyson would be able to close the deal because of litigation resulting from Holly Farms' proposed merger with ConAgra.

Holly Farms agreed to be acquired by ConAgra in November as it tried to fend off Tyson. The merger has been blocked by a Delaware state court in response to a petition by Tyson, which argued that Holly Farms was not acting in the best interest of its shareholders in agreeing to the combination with ConAgra.

ConAgra is appealing the decision.

Tyson also objected to a provision of the proposed merger — known as a lock-up agreement — that would have allowed ConAgra to buy major parts of Holly Farms if their merger fell through.

Tyson's offer was contingent upon the termination of the lock-up agreement, which remains in effect. Holly Farms said it had asked ConAgra to release it from the agreement.

Despite the rejection, Tyson was optimistic it would ultimately prevail.

"I think our problems now are not price problems and I think these are problems we can work out," said Jim Blair, a Tyson attorney.

"It's too bad they rejected (the latest offer) but it's good the rejection isn't harsh," Blair said. "Their investment advisers now have quit saying our offers are inadequate. In fact, they've said this one was fair."

There was no answer at ConAgra's Omaha, Neb. offices when a reporter called for comment late Friday.

Tyson's $1.15 billion bid was the latest and largest offer in a struggle that began in October and pitted Springdale, Ark.-based Tyson against ConAgra Inc. for control of Holly Farms.

Tyson began its takeover attempt at $54 a share and had announced a $60 offer to Holly Farms shareholders prior to the close of bidding Wednesday.

The Holly Farms board recommended that stockholders not tender their shares to Tyson but said Tyson and ConAgra were invited to submit further bids.

Tyson is the nation's largest poultry processor while ConAgra is the second-largest and Holly Farms ranks third.

Business Briefs

Inflation Warning

WASHINGTON (AP) — The rate of increase in consumer prices held at 4.4 percent in 1988, a government report says, but economists are warning inflation could accelerate moderately this year.

Although the rise in the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index last year was identical to the 1987 gain, the reasons were very different.

The report said the summer drought pushed food prices up by 5.2 percent in 1988, compared with 3.5 percent a year earlier.

Housing Starts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Housing construction dropped 8.2 percent in 1988 to its lowest level in six years, the Commerce Department says.

Construction of both single-family homes and apartments fell during 1988 to leave total housing starts at 1.49 million units. It was the poorest showing since the recession year of 1982 when 1.06 million units were built.

Commenting on the report, analysts said that despite the decline, the 1988 level of construction was relatively high.

Business With Libya

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has authorized U.S. oil companies to resume doing business in Libya in a bid to head off the potential nationalization of their huge investment in that country.

The move also is designed to put an end to what a White House statement called the "significant windfall profits" Libya has reaped since the administration imposed the ban on the U.S. operations there in 1986.

In the absence of the U.S. companies, Libyans have been working the U.S. oil fields and keeping the income.

Bid Sweetened

BOSTON (AP) — Shamrock Holdings Inc. has sweetened its bid for Polaroid Corp. to $3.2 billion, up from its previous $2.6 billion hostile buyout offer, and said it would wage a proxy fight for control of the instant photography giant.

Shamrock said it would pay $45 a share for all Polaroid stock, including 9.7 million shares recently issued to Polaroid's employee stock ownership plan. The previous tender offer of $42 a share did not apply to the ESOP shares.

Shamrock also indicated it would nominate a slate of candidates for election to Polaroid's board at the company's May 9 annual meeting.

New Trading Hours

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Foreign currency traders who want to make a mark on the market can make one first with a snowball when the Philadelphia Stock Exchange opens expanded early morning trading hours.

The exchange is introducing a 4:30 a.m. EST starting time — 3½ hours earlier than its current opening time — to let currency trading coincide with morning hours in Europe. A half-hour before the new opening on Friday, the exchange is hosting a snowball throwing contest.

The new hours will be 4:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. and 6 p.m. to 10 p.m., the latter period begun in September 1987 to cover the Japanese morning hours.

Restructuring Noted

BOSTON (AP) — Affiliated Publications Inc., publisher of the Boston Globe and Billboard magazine, have announced a restructuring that would include the spinoff of its holdings in an unprofitable cellular telephone business.

Affiliated owns about 43 percent of McCaw, the nation's largest cellular telephone operator, which has suffered losses in recent years.

Wall Street analysts said the restructuring would benefit Affiliated by separating its profitable publishing operations from the troubled cellular business.

Management Moves

NEW YORK (AP) — General Electric Co. announced a management shuffle at its Kidder, Peabody Group, the venerable Wall Street investment house that has provided its share of problems since GE took control in 1986.

Installation of new leadership at Kidder reflects the corporate parent's desire to exert greater control over Kidder's day-to-day operations, as well as GE's latest attempt to deal with difficulties posed by the firm, analysts said.

GE Capital, the company's financial services division, said that Michael A. Carpenter, an executive vice president of GE Capital, has been named president and chief executive officer of Kidder, Peabody Group.

Net Withdrawals

WASHINGTON (AP) — A one-month record of $7.01 billion in deposits flowed out of the nation's savings institutions in November as increases in interest paid on deposits lagged behind the market, the government said.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board, which regulates about 3,000 federally insured S&Ls, said in a report that it was the seventh consecutive month of net withdrawals, which from May through November totaled $16.4 billion.

Oil Bosses Booted

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Oil union bosses Joaquin Hernandez Galicia and Salvador Barragan Camacho have been kicked out of the Mexican Workers Federation in the wake of their arrests in a government crackdown, the official news service Notimex said.

The federation cleared their belongings out of their offices at the union headquarters on the orders of Mexico's top labor leader, Fidel Velazquez, Notimex said. Their offices are to be occupied by meat union leaders.

Hernandez Galicia and Barragan Camacho were among 46 people arrested in a Jan. 10 crackdown on oil union leaders.

Hernandez Galicia, 66, was arrested after soldiers and federal agents raided his home in Ciudad Madero. A federal agent was shot to death in the attack.

A planned 260-acre development located off N.C. 43 will feature an equestrian facility, ponds, and 78 estate lots

Rock Springs Envisioned As An Estate Community In An Equestrian Setting

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Flowers and Associates Inc. of Greenville has announced plans for a 260-acre estate community in an equestrian setting to be located off N.C. 43, about three miles from the Pitt County Memorial Hospital-East Carolina University School of Medicine complex.

The Rock Springs development will feature various on-site amenities, including ponds, parks, gardens and a 20,000-square-foot facility designed to host regional horse shows and equestrian events, said Phil Flowers, president.

The development is planned in three phases, Flowers said. Phase I consists of 23 lots, ranging in size from 1.8 acres to 5.6 acres. Overall, 78 lots are planned for the community.

Construction of the equestrian center is scheduled to begin in February with the official grand opening celebration set for April, Flowers said.

Flowers suggested that the development will be reminiscent of the bluegrass area of Kentucky.

"We're trying to do something a little unique here," he said. "We didn't want to do the same thing that every other developer is doing in town."

The equestrian center will feature an executive office, conference center and stable. Adjacent to the center will be 25 acres of land designated primarily to exercise and ride horses. Riding classes will be made available, he said.

Residents of the development will be provided first choice of the center's 24 horse stalls.

"I think people interested in horses would like to know that there something coming to Greenville that is going to have a regional draw to it," Flowers said.

"This is not just for the people here in town. We are attempting to have something in Greenville that's going to make us the regional equestrian center for the eastern part of the state. That is, we're going to try to bring in horse-related activities which cover the area east of Raleigh," he said.

Other features include a 1,000-foot stone wall along the entrance, white fences, and a jogging path.

Flowers said the development is a departure from the typical subdivision plan which features group amenities like a clubhouse, tennis courts and a swimming pool.

"You're going to get the feeling of wide open space out there," he said. "When you consider that most of the houses in subdivisions around town are built on less than a quarter of an acre, when you put the same size house in the middle of a three-acre tract, it's just going to be really all to itself.

"We've made these lots large enough that people can have their own pool and their own tennis courts," he added.

Flowers said all homes proposed for the development will be required to first be approved by a Rock Springs architectural review committee and must meet specific requirements such as a minimum of 2,500 square feet.

"We're going to try to have all the houses to compliment each other," he said.

"We do not think that everybody who lives in the subdivision will be a horse owner. However we believe there are a lot of people who like to live near horses," he said.

New Employees

Eddie R. Jones, president of East Carolina Farm Credit Service, has announced that Patricia Ann Howard Matthis has joined the company as senior office assistant in the Snow Hill branch office.

She had been associated with Cape Fear Farm Credit Service in Kenansville and earned a degree in accounting from Wayne Community College. She and her husband, Lelon, will live in Greenville.

Jones also announced that Bernice Brown Bailey has joined the firm as an office assistant for the special assets management office in Greenville.

A former employee of the Civil Service in Georgia, she earned a degree in clerical administration from Georgia Southwestern College. She and her husband, Willie, reside in Greenville.

Chapter Meeting Set

The Greenville Chapter of Professional Secretaries International will meet Monday at 6:15 p.m. at the Three Steers Restaurant on Memorial Drive.

For information on the meeting or membership in the organization contact Kathy Thuma, president-elect, at 758-1189.

Manager Appointed

Tony McCuiston has been appointed manager of the Greenville service of Southern States Cooperative Inc.

A native of Glasgow, Ky., he earned an agribusiness degree from Western Kentucky University. He was previously employed as a manager associate in Kentucky and a department manager in Wilson.

Licenses Awarded

Bobby R. Boyd, president of Boyd Associates Inc., has announced that Terry W. Allen, vice president, and Timothy D. Randall, project manager, have been awarded general contractors' licenses by the N.C. Licensing Board for General Contractors.

The company is a general construction firm specializing in commercial, industrial and institutional construction projects.

Largest Taxpayer

Carolina Telephone's 1988 Greenville property tax payment of $161,893 made the company the largest local taxpayer, according to Floyd Little, tax collector for the city of Greenville.

Grady Strickland, district commercial manager, said the company's total tax payment in Pitt County, including all municipal taxes, was $462,693. County and municipal taxes paid by the company in its 50-county operating area totaled $7.16 million, Strickland said.

Fraud Probe Triggers Seat Sales On Exchanges

By Mark Perkiss
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Federal investigators probing allegations of widespread fraud at the nation's largest futures exchanges pressured three suspects into secretly taping conversations with employers and other traders, a newspaper reported Saturday.

The three were among a number of traders suspected of fraud who have provided the FBI with fresh evidence in the two-year probe, the Chicago Tribune said, quoting unidentified sources.

FBI agents have been visiting the homes of traders suspected of wrongdoing, threatening them with criminal charges and demanding cooperation, the newspaper reported.

Law enforcement sources said the three suspects were fitted with hidden recording devices and told to call on colleagues to obtain recorded admissions of guilt from those involved in fraud at the Chicago Board of Trade and the Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

The investigation centers on allegations that investors were cheated out of millions of dollars, according to published reports.

Seats on the exchanges, which go for hundreds of thousands of dollars, have been selling like hot commodities by traders panicked by the probe.

Fourteen seats were sold at the Merc and the Board of Trade starting Thursday, when the investigation was first reported, through the end of business hours Friday.

"We had a week's worth of sales in a day," said Andrew Yemma, chief spokesman for the Merc.

Officials in the FBI and U.S. Attorney's office have said nothing publicly about the investigation, but news of subpoenas for exchange records dating back to January 1983 has shaken the industry.

"Everybody is obviously concerned about what this means," said Board of Trade spokesman Raymond Carmichael.

"If there are people breaking the rules, of course people that make an honest living in this business think they ought to be punished," a Merc pork belly trader, who asked that his name not be used, said after a day of trading Friday.

"The mood's very uneasy," said a soybean futures trader, who also asked that his name not be used. "Everybody's worried about what's going to happen. ... It's very unsettling to long-time members."

Commodities exchanges are hotbeds of capitalism in which speculators bet millions of dollars on the future prices of goods ranging from gold to Treasury bills to frozen orange juice.

FBI agents-turned-traders recorded conversations that suggest some trades were rigged to prevent customers from getting fair-market prices, and that some brokers sent false reports to customers to hide the skimming of profits of overcharges on commissions, the Chicago Tribune has said.

FBI spokeswoman Jane Koshutko would neither confirm nor deny the investigation, but two law enforcement officials in Washington, speaking on condition of anonymity, confirmed it Thursday.

The seats, which allow traders access to various markets on the trading floor, sell for a wide range of prices. The Merc has 2,724 seats and the Board of Trade has 3,400.

Last year the price of a Merc seat ranged from $350,000 to $523,500, officials said. Prices for Board of Trade seats ranged from $371,000 to $545,000.

Vote Will Decide Alamodome Issue

By David Sedeno
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN ANTONIO, Texas — Thousands of residents turned out to vote Saturday on a proposal to hike the sales tax to finance a $174 million domed stadium.

More than 76,000 people had cast absentee ballots on the Alamodome referendum and other questions on the ballot and Bexar County elections administrator Tony Gomez said he expected a total turnout of about 185,000 because of the warm weather. There are 1.2 million people in the county, including San Antonio.

The vote culminated an 18-month battle between city officials, businessmen and grass roots groups over the referendum, which proposed to raise the sales tax in Bexar County by a half-cent to a total 8 percent over the next five years to pay for construction of the 65,000-seat stadium.

Mayor Henry Cisneros, who leaves office in May after eight years as mayor and six as a councilman, led the pro-dome factions that said the stadium would help the city increase its $1.5 billion tourism industry by luring bigger conventions and attracting new hotels.

The possibility of using the stadium to attract a professional sport team was discussed, but that was overshadowed by talk of boosting convention and tourist business.

The Rev. Rosendo Urrabazo, a co-chairman of the grass roots organization Communities Organized for Public Service, was among the leading opponents of the stadium's financing proposal.

Cisneros, Urrabazo and others had debated the issue at town meetings and on television.

Urrabazo and others said the private sector should take over financing of the proposal and said any tax increase should be used for educational programs and basic services.

"This stadium is not a vision for the future. It's a step backwards," Urrabazo said.

Duke Power Co., TVA Clash Over Providing Services To Nantahala

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Representatives of Duke Power Co. and the Tennessee Valley Authority clashed over which organization can provide cheaper power to Nantahala Power & Light Co.

In testimony Friday before the state Utilities Commission, TVA officials said their power offer to NP&L would be $2.3 million cheaper than Duke's in an average year. But Duke said that its proposal is a little more than $2 million lower than TVA's.

The disagreements came on the final day of a four-day hearing before the commission on a Duke proposal to build a power line to connect its grid with that of Nantahala's.

The line would pass through Jackson County's Panthertown Valley. Conservationists and some area property owners have petitioned the commission to force Duke to consider other routes, saying the line would disturb a scenic and environmentally sensitive area and lower property values.

The commission is expected to rule on the request in about two months. Environmental groups offered the TVA officials as witnesses Friday in an attempt to convince the commission that the $36 million line would not be necessary if NP&L accepts TVA's offer.

But commissioners took a dim view of the idea, judging from their sharply worded questioning of TVA officials.

"The time y'all should have been interested was before the barn door was shut," said Commissioner Sarah Tate. "I'm sort of at a loss as to why (TVA) waited so long."

Duke announced in October 1987 that it intended to buy NP&L from the Aluminum Company of America, and completed the sale in October 1988.

TVA made its current offer — which TVA said would cut the rates NP&L pays for Nantahala power by 15 percent to 20 percent — Jan. 9.

TVA's offer contains generally lower rates than Duke's that would be more contingent on the amount of water NP&L has available to it to generate electricity, said TVA vice president of power business operations Jimmy Cross.

Duke's rate structure would be $601,000 cheaper for NP&L in a dry year, Cross said.

But in a normal year, TVA power would cost NP&L $5.8 million less than Duke's would, Cross said.

"Eighty percent of the time, our proposal is better than theirs," Cross said.

Continuing to buy power from TVA would also enable NP&L to avoid paying a one-time $5 million withdrawal fee to TVA, Cross said.

TVA overestimated Duke's fuel costs (which will affect Duke's rates for NP&L), failed to compensate for savings from a "time of use" rate Duke is offering NP&L, and figures incorrectly the effect water availability would have on the Duke rates, Stimart said.

Duke's offer is $5 million per year cheaper than the rates NP&L was getting from TVA, Stimart said, and is a little more than $2 million lower than TVA's current offer.

Saying that TVA customers still have to pay for $8 billion to $10 billion in work on nuclear power plants in progress, Stimart said TVA's offer should be taken with a grain of salt.

"TVA has now come out of the blue and offered rate reductions," Stimart said. "Where were the rate reductions for the past 10 years?"

Charges for TVA power added to NP&L customers' bills — which increase during dry weather — have been the subject of vehement customer complaints.

Asked if TVA's current offer means it has been overcharging NP&L in the past, Cross said, "I'm really not in a position to say. ... I don't think they were."

The offer stems from a new emphasis on competitiveness at TVA and success in getting some of the federally owned utility's nuclear power plants back on line, Cross said.

Two TVA nuclear reactors began generating electricity again within the past few months, and another is expected to later this year — thus increasing TVA's supply of electricity — Cross said.

Top TVA management was reshuffled last year, and several hundred TVA employees were laid off.

RJR's South African Holdings To Be Sold

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — RJR Nabisco Inc.'s prospective new owner said Friday it will sell the food-tobacco giant's holdings in South Africa, two days after Michigan withdrew from a fund used to help finance the record $24.53 billion takeover because of a new state law barring investments in that country.

Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co., the New York investment house that won the bidding for RJR late last year, confirmed reports that it plans to sell Royal Beechnut to the division's South African management, and sell the South African Preserving Co. as soon as possible after the takeover is formally completed.

The disclosures, made via Kohlberg's public relations agent Kekst & Co., appeared to be a reaction to the announcement Wednesday by Michigan officials that they would prohibit a $110 million state pension investment in a Kohlberg fund that will help finance the RJR deal.

Michigan Treasurer Robert Bowman said such an investment conflicted with a law effective Jan. 1 banning state investments in companies with ties to South Africa due to that country's policy of apartheid or race separation.

Bowman's move marked the second state to pull out of the Kohlberg fund because of the RJR-South African relationship, possibly signaling more defections from pension-fund investors that are considered important financiers of the deal. Earlier, Massachusetts withdrew $25 million.

RJR is one of 95 U.S. companies with South African involvement, according to a list Bowman compiled in compliance with the Michigan law which took effect Jan. 1.

Bowman said Wednesday that Kohlberg officials had indicated to him the South African holdings would be sold off as soon as the acquisition of RJR was completed. But he said the new law still required state withdrawal because RJR's South African interests haven't been sold yet.

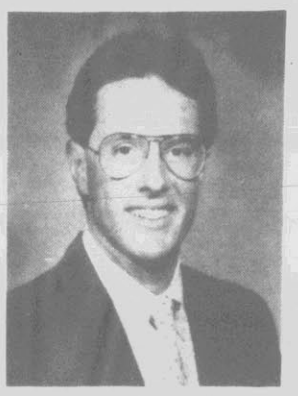

Kohlberg said Michigan's withdrawal would have no effect on completion of the RJR takeover, which is to be financed largely by bank debt and the sale of high-risk, high-yield "junk bonds."

RJR is an Atlanta-based maker of hundreds of consumer items ranging from Oreo cookies to Winston cigarettes. Kohlberg won a bidding war with RJR management to acquire the company Nov. 30.

Jesse Boyd strolls along the empty cabinets and shelves at his grocery store on Evans Street

The Daily Reflector/Shannon Wolfe

Jesse and Elsie Boyd have run their grocery for 42 years

Closing Down

Boyds Shut The Doors On Neighborhood Store

By Rosalie Trotman
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Jesse and Elsie Boyd are leaving their "neighborhood landmark" grocery store after 42 years due to upcoming expansion of Evans Street.

The Department of Transportation is buying the property in order of widen the street.

"We had no desire to retire — we felt like we had a few more years of service to the neighborhood," Boyd said. "That's why we have been a neighborhood grocery store. The business was very successful and we both enjoyed it very much. Our service in the area has been very enjoyable."

"There is no comparison in the neighborhood from 1939 to now. People have come and gone," Boyd said. "Most of the changes I have seen are people leaving the neighborhood because businesses have been built instead of houses."

"When we first started here houses were built on both sides of the street and the families all traded with us. The store was helpful to the neighborhood and the neighborhood was helpful in return," he said.

Mrs. Boyd said, "We were like one big family. We all knew each other — they were friendly people."

The store's candy case is an antique and will be used by Mrs. Boyd as a curio cabinet. She will display a collection of vases given over the years as gifts and other items received during her years as a Sunday School teacher.

"One thing so sweet to me was concerning the candy case. Some of the little children would come in and point out which candy they wanted because they couldn't talk yet," she said.

The experiences have been good. The couple operated a store for seven years several blocks from Evans Street. "When we first opened, we didn't know what time to close," Boyd said. "After we changed locations, we had set hours. On Saturday nights, we stayed open until 10 o'clock.

"Neighbors would come in and shop a little bit and then visit. The children would go to sleep in the front windows."

The Boyd's went to work together at 7 a.m. and home together at 6 p.m. "He didn't tell me he needed a store clerk until after he married me," she said, "but I have enjoyed every minute of it. We worked six days a week, whether we wanted to or not."

They raised their family in the store. Mrs. Boyd pointed out where their son David's carriage was placed as an infant.

"Our older son, Jesse Ray Jr., would push the carriage around outside the store, down the sidewalk for a little ways and then turn around and come back," said Mrs. Boyd.

In describing the store's business, Boyd said, "Our success has been due to regular hours, good merchandise and putting Christ first in our lives. We have had more blessings here than trials and tribulations."

The Boyds started off with one bicycle boy delivering groceries. As business grew, they added another. "We worked neighborhood boys that needed spending money after school hours and on Saturdays," he said.

The Boyd sons filled in delivering groceries. David told of delivering groceries to the late Mrs. Frank Savage on Saturdays.

"She called her grocery order in each Saturday morning — a case of six-ounce drinks, a box of groceries, five gallons of kerosene and usually two-three dozen eggs, which were placed loose in a paper sack. After I got everything loaded, Daddy would always tell me, 'Don't break those eggs.'

"I don't remember breaking too many," he said, "Always in the summertime, Mrs. Savage gave me ice water, watermelon, cantaloupe, homemade cookies or candy."

Generally at lunchtime several regular customers came in for their usual ham and cheese or bologna and cheese sandwich made by Boyd. They gathered at the end of the meat case where attorneys, contractors, postmen and secretaries ate their sandwiches and watched television news.

"Mother's plants displayed in the front windows have been a landmark," David Boyd said. "I think everybody in Greenville has some of her cuttings. They have been a joy to Mother in addition to many others, We made room for them during the winter — the store was her green window."

Another store landmark was a miniature church, which was a vacation Bible school project. Made from an apple box, the church was completed with miniature pews, song books, flags, trees and pipe organ. "Every Saturday night when the store closed the church was placed in the front windows with a sign, 'Attend the church of your choice,'" David Boyd said.

"Mother and Daddy experienced one armed robbery and several break-ins, losing money and merchandise," David said. "They were fortunate in that they were never physically harmed."

The Boyds have no retirement plans.

"I don't plan to retire," Boyd said. "We are going to do something — some type of ministry work. We will try to bring cheer to those not receiving any — visiting people in the hospital and nursing homes and other shut-ins.

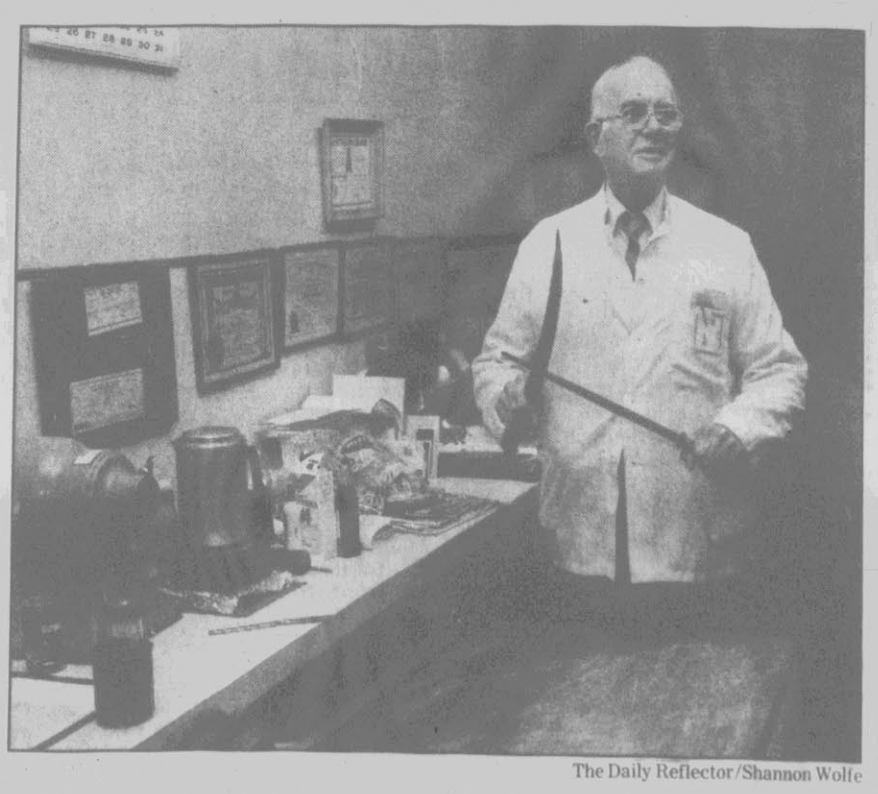

"We will do it together."

The Boyds stand outside their Evans Street store with the front steps of their house on Evans Street. The store will be torn down as workers make way for a wider Evans Street. Above, Boyd sharpens the knives with which he cut meat in the store's butcher shop.

Miss Stocks Is Married To Troy David Simpson

DURHAM — Leah Gail Stocks and Troy David Simpson were united in marriage Saturday in a double-ring ceremony.

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leslie A. Stocks of Durham, the bride was given in marriage by her father. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. George F. Simpson of Hubert.

Holly Elizabeth Stocks of Durham, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. Caroline Peach Davis of Ayden, cousin of the bride, Lizabeth Lorraine Bentley of Wilkesboro, and Julia Kristine Manning of Elizabeth City were bridesmaids. Teresa Maria Simpson of Jacksonville, niece of the bridegroom, was flower girl.

The bridegroom's father was best man and the ring bearer was James Brian Simpson of Jacksonville, nephew of the bridegroom. Ushers were Robert Anthony Simpson of Jacksonville and Thomas Gary Simpson of Hubert, both brothers of the bridegroom, Treg Lane Hamilton of Hubert, Steven Jay Walsh of Lakewood, N.J., and Johnny Ray Weaver of Erwin.

The bride wore her mother's gown of silk organza over taffeta with appliques of re-embroidered alencon lace. The bouffant skirt, accented by a back bow, cascaded into a chapel train. Her fingertip veil with lace appliques was attached to a pearl and iridescent crown. She carried a bouquet of pink and white rosebuds with baby's breath and ivy.

The attendants wore tea-length gowns with black velvet bodices and skirts of emerald green satin. The gowns had long sleeves, dropped waistlines and back bows. Each carried a bouquet of rubrum lilies and greenery.

The bride and bridegroom are graduates of East Carolina University and he is a second lieutenant in the U.S. Air Force.

The couple will live at Emerald Isle after a wedding trip to Cancun, Mexico.

The bride's parents entertained at a reception held at the Croasdaile Country Club. The bridegroom's parents gave an after-rehearsal dinner at the country club.

Several miscellaneous showers and a bridesmaids luncheon were held prior to the wedding.

Dr. Ruth: Good Talk Vital To Marriage

REDBOOK MAGAZINE

Therapist Dr. Ruth K. Westheimer calls boredom the leading hazard to marriage and says it can be combatted by turning off the TV and turning on the talk.

Couples must start discovering or rediscovering each other, Westheimer wrote in an article in the current issue of Redbook, before they end up strangers.

"Marriage is a paradox," she wrote. "It provides us with wonderful security and familiarity. We can be comfortable, we can establish a nice routine. But suddenly we get too comfortable. We get lazy. We don't talk to each other anymore.

"And what happens with less talking? Less intimacy. Then what? Without intimacy you become distant, you become bored. When you are bored with your spouse, you don't want to talk to him. When you don't talk, you become more distant, more bored."

She said life in the '80s is hectic and couples seldom talk except to discuss problems. Meantime each is evolving, and they lose track of each other.

"So how do you keep up with your mate — this fascinating person who is constantly changing?" she wrote. "You must talk. You must be young lovers always." She said it takes effort — and is worth it. She recommended:

"Don't turn on the television in the evening. Instead, sit down together and take a couple of deep breaths to relax and clear your head of daily concerns. Really focus on each other. Take turns asking each other about your day — and really listen to each other's responses.

"Too often, couples don't hear each other, and it is not because they are hard of hearing. It is because they are not really paying atention. Each is too busy thinking about what he or she wants to say when the other person stops talking."

She advised letting the conversation wander. "Just because your life isn't a big drama doesn't mean you have nothing to say," she said. "You have stories to tell and opinions to express and ideas to share, and so does your husband."

She advised talk sessions at least once a week and stressed the importance of a sense of humor, the best prescription for a good marriage.

"Now I am not saying you and your husband have to know everything about each other," she wrote. "Sometimes partners make the mistake of trying to crawl into each other's mind and soul. When a husband and wife follow each other into the bathroom and constantly ask each other, 'What are you thinking about?' this is not communication. This is an intrusion on an individual's privacy — and I am a great believer in privacy. You do not need to know everything about each other. This is nonsense.

"You should both have separate interests. Then you will always have plenty to talk about and plenty more chapters to write in the story of your marriage — and plenty of romance to spice up the story."

She said the way to combat boredom in marriage was to go back to your dating days, when you talked, revealed yourself, but always with the hint that there was more.

"The play between what is known and what in unknown is fascinating," she wrote. "Sparks fly between lovers when they find things out about each other and want to know more."

She likened marriage to a "long, wonderful novel. "At the beginning the characters, you and your husband, don't know each other well. There are just a few sparks.

"Then you go on living and creating the story of your life together. You never want to stop reading a good novel, right? It should be the same with your marriage. The best marriages, like the best novels, are full of surprises that keep you wanting more."

Lots Of Layers Cut Winter Chill

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

Women often have a harder time keeping warm in cold weather than men for several reasons. They generally eat less, which means they have less fuel to turn into heat. They also tend to dress more lightly. Here are a few ways to avoid winter chills.

Wear lots of layers that trap warm air and allow for adding or subtracting clothes as needed. Keep a good supply of clothes made of natural materials, such as cotton, silk or wool or light thermal synthetics, including Goretex or Thinsulate. Avoid clothes with tight ankle and wrist cuffs as they can restrict circulation to the extremities.

Choose mittens over gloves to keep hands warm.

Advice To A Teen-Age Mother-To-Be

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: My 16-year-old daughter attends one of three public high schools in Sacramento specifically designed to serve the needs of expectant or new parents. There are 83 girls and two boys presently enrolled at her school.

Since many of these teen-age moms will continue to live at home, the principal of "Kelly's" school asked me to write something for their newspaper from a grandmother's point of view. I thought you might like to share the enclosed message with the rest of the nation, some of whom may be facing similar circumstaces. — A Grandmother At 33

An Open Letter To My Daughter

Soon, my darling daughter, you are going to become a mother yourself and we will add another family member to our household. Now is the time to discuss some of the drastic changes about to take place in your lifestyle. Since you have chosen to remain at home, it is important that you have a clear understanding of what will be expected of you after the birth of your child.

You will be playing a dual role, and it may be difficult for you. On one hand, you will be my child, my responsibility. You will be expected to honor the same rules and regulations as your brothers and sisters. This includes doing your chores, cleaning your room, honoring your curfew and being respectful to your parents. If you are disobedient or uncooperative, you will be disciplined in the usual manner.

On the other hand, however, you will be a mother, and your child will be your responsibility alone. When he needs tending to, tend to him. This means that if you are gossiping on the phone with a friend and the baby begins to cry, you will have to hang up and take care of his needs. You cannot ignore his wails (it would be too nerve-wracking for the other family members), and you cannot pass the task to one of us (it's not our responsibility). "Get the baby, Mom — I'm on the phone" will not be tolerated. Also, don't expect a built-in baby sitter on a moment's notice.

In exchange, I promise to try not to interfere with your child-rearing decisions unless you are endangering the baby by neglect or abuse. If I slip and give some unsolicited advice, simply lift an eyebrow and give me "The Look," and I will shut up.

Now, don't panic. It's not that I won't help at all. Naturally, I will be thrilled with my new grandchild and will gladly spend countless hours with him (or her), but only when it's convenient for me, or pre-arranged, or an emergency. Also, I will answer any questions you may have, or show you how to do something when you ask for my assistance. And I won't mind baby-sitting if you ask ahead of time and I have made no plans. In other words, I will be there to help you, but from a distance. You are just one step away from adulthood, and now it is my job as your mother to step back and let you test your wings.

I love you, and I'm looking forward to watching you raise your child. I'll bet you will be a terrific mom! — Your Loving Mom

Dear Abby: I am a 29-year-old single male who frequently goes to movies alone. Sometimes, if the theater is quite filled, an usher will ask me if I would mind moving to another seat in order to accommodate a couple who want to sit together. This always happens just as the opening credits start to roll and the theater is dark.

I never refuse. The usher will then escort me to another seat, which means I have to carry my coat, popcorn and maybe a soft drink as I try to avoid stepping on some toes.

Abby, I always manage to get to the theater early to get a seat of my choice. Invariably the seat I am moved to is inferior for various reasons. (It's usually to the far left or right, and I like to sit in the middle section.)

Please tell me if it is theater etiquette for an usher to ask someone to move? They are always courteous, but that doesn't make up for giving up a good seat for one that's not as good.

Should I flatly refuse to move? What would you do? — In The Dark

Dear In: Much would depend on the circumstances. I would move in order to let an adult sit with his or her child, or to accommodate a physically disabled person who needs an aisle seat. But I would decline to move to an inferior location to accommodate an able-bodied couple who want to sit together. (They should manage to get to the theater early — as you do — to ensure sitting together.)

Baker Sells Mardi Gras King Cakes Nationwide

By Mary Foster
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS — People here like to say that you aren't really at home in New Orleans until you can stomach the thought of eating purple, green and gold food, but David Haydel thinks outsiders can develop a taste for the unusual.

Haydel, who with his brother Gary runs Haydel's Bakery, is one of a number of city bakers ready to ship more than 100,000 king cakes — iced in the three gaudy Mardi Gras colors — anywhere in the nation.

"Last year a lady called me and said, 'Honey, I just received one of your cakes and it's all green.' I said, 'Darlin,' as long as there's gold and purple with it, it's OK,'" Haydel laughed.

King cakes, made of sweet dough, shaped like giant doughnuts, and iced with the traditional colors of carnival, start showing up locally around Christmas. Haydel says his bakery goes from selling 10 or 15 a day then to 3,000 a day during the carnival season.

In France, king cake is served on Epiphany, the 12th night after the birth of Christ when the three kings are said to have arrived with gifts. In New Orleans it's eaten daily right up until Mardi Gras (Fat Tuesday), which falls this year on Feb. 7. Local bakers think the tradition can be exported to the rest of the country.

"Last year we shipped 8,000 king cakes out. That's a big jump from back in 1985 when we were shipping 75 a day, but this year we expect to do 5,000 a day," Haydel said.

He has ordered 100,000 specially designed Federal Express boxes to ship the cakes.

Haydel's package is typical of that also being offered by another local baker, Gambinos. Both include cakes, literature on Mardi Gras and Carnival trinkets such as plastic beads and aluminum coins called doubloons.

Baked inside each cake is a tiny plastic baby. Tradition has it that the person who gets the slice of cake with the baby in it must host the next party. At some parties, the person who gets the baby is crowned king or queen.

Federal Express now works with five bakeries that ship king cakes, while smaller local shipping companies say they are also sending out more of the gaudy confections.

"If we don't do pretty close to that, we're going to be very unhappy. We've got a lot invested in this," Haydel said.

The bakery has spent about $75,000 in national advertising, and has installed a mainframe computer and an 800 number to handle orders.

Alphabet Books Have Been Helping Kids For 200 Years

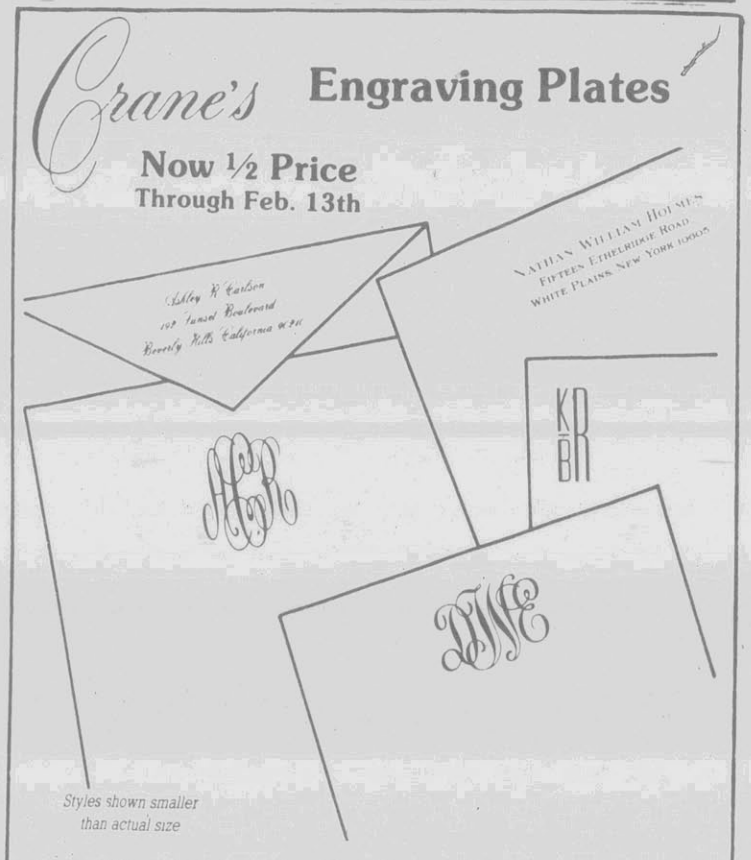

ROCHESTER, N. Y. (AP) — Alphabet books have been giving advice to children for two centuries, says University of Rochester librarian Mary M. Huth, who has a personal collection of about 600 such books.

By comparing 19th- and 20th-century books, one sees a shift in attitudes toward childhood. "In the 19th century, life was short; books admonished children to prepare their souls for the hereafter. A book might show a coffin to illustrate the letter 'C'."

In contemporary children's books, stern warnings about the straight and narrow path of righteousness have given way to upbeat advice: "Eat right, take a bath, and save your money are the kinds of messages that alphabet books offer today."

Retailer Is Building His Success On Fun

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WILKES-BARRE, Pa. — Albert R. Boscov is having his picture taken for a story about the growth of his family's multimillion-dollar retailing business.

In a store that bears the family name, photographers suggest Boscov, 58, pose casually, standing next to a table layered with men's slacks.

This is fun in retailing.

"Aggressive advertising and merchandising, promotions, putting fun back in retailing, are all reasons he's grown," says Tom Weyant, president of the Pennsylvania Retailers Association.

"Most competitors who see him coming are glad, because he perks things up. ... He simply puts more bodies in the market."

Since 1962, the family-owned business has grown from a neighborhood dry goods store to 14 Boscov's stores and four Ports of the World outlet stores.

Last year, the company made its largest single expansion move by acquiring three Pomeroy's stores from the Toronto-based Campeau Corp., and there are plans to open three more stores.

Together, they have kept the company competitive and growing at a rate well above the industry average.

Retail business watchers compare numbers called compound average growth rates, which account for changes in the number of stores and sales. Boscov's rate is slightly more than 14 percent in an industry where the average growth is 9 percent, according to the Chain Store Age, an industry magazine.

The raw numbers reveal the growth: In 1982, with nine stores, Boscov's had gross sales of $165 million; in 1986, with 11 stores, sales of $280 million, and in 1987, with 14 stores, sales of $350 million.

According to Boscov, growth in both sales and stores is essential.

He says expenses can rise about 6 percent annually, depending on inflation, so volume must increase or, according to him, "your overhead goes up and you start eroding profitability in the existing stores."

Boscov's was founded by Solomon Boscovitz, Albert's father, in 1919, at age 27. Eight years earlier he had left his native Russia for the United States. He failed as a street vendor in Washington, D.C., partly because his English was limited.

Hearing that people spoke Yiddish in Reading, Pa., he moved there. The German of the Dutch settlers was close enough, and Boscov became a door-to-door salesman, walking 10 to 15 miles a day selling his wares.

His business grew; he made deliveries on wagon, then motorcycle.

Facing One Of The Little Gnats Of Marriage

About 25 years ago, I saw a Broadway musical about the Army where the hero was in charge of latrines. When his commanding officer visited one day to inspect his work, the private pressed his foot on a lever and every toilet seat popped up in snappy salute.

I remember jumping out of my seat yelling, "Bravo! Bravo!" My husband had to contain me. I was witnessing greatness and I knew it. Before my eyes was a scientific breakthrough whose time had come — a toilet seat that would go up only on command. The rest of the time it would be down where it belonged.

It has taken a full 25 years for a potato farmer in Maine to implement the idea. He and his wife were shopping one day in Quebec when she began playing around with a trash can that had a pedal attached that opened the lid. At that moment, the husband had a vision that would revolutionize marriages throughout the world — a 21st-century shuttle seat that you could launch and land at will. "My wife was real enthused with it," he said, "because there's always the battle about whether the toilet seat stays up or down."

That is the understatement of the century. (Do you realize that the only argument Donna Reed and Dr. Stone ever had was over the seat on the commode. I heard that someplace.) It's one of those little gnats that buzz around in a marriage — not important enough to squash, but important enough to take a swat at three or four times a day.

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

It's insensitivity in its rawest form. How would men like it if they got up in the middle of the night and groped their way down a dark hallway, only to fall down a dark, bottomless hole like Alice in Wonderland?

How would they like it if every time they stooped to pick a towel off the floor, the seat from the commode knocked them senseless? I remember when the women's movement was at its peak and everyone was screaming for unisex bathrooms. I warned, "You've gone too far, sisters. I've cleaned unisex bathrooms for more than 20 years, and I'm here to tell you it's a bad idea."

From birth, a boy child considers a toilet seat balancing in mid-air a natural position. Through conscientious conditioning, you can teach a male child to eat with a fork, say "Thank you," carry a nose tissue, wipe his feet at the door, button his coat in cold weather, brush his teeth, keep gum in his mouth, his feet on the floor and a civil tongue in his head, but you will never — never — get him to put a toilet seat down.

If our friend from Maine isn't on the cover of Time next December as Man of the Year, I'll be amazed. He built a prototype of his idea in his workshop, installed it on his own commode, and sees a bright future for the attachment.

I like to think it's what President George Bush meant when he asked for a kinder, gentler America. Today, the toilet seat! Tomorrow, the car seat pushed up to where it belongs!

Stars Work To Save Planet Earth

HARPER'S BAZAAR

A small but growing number of big names are using their fame for a cause: The preservation of the planet Earth.

Ted Danson, Richard Chamberlain, Robert Redford, Barbra Streisand and Martin Sheen are among the big guns on the environmental battlefront, according to an article in the current issue of Harper's Bazaar, and they help draw the spotlight to ecological issues.

A top star means prime time publicity. Sheen and astronomer Carl Sagan won national headlines for Greenpeace when they were arrested protesting nuclear weapons testing in Nevada.

"If we've learned anything from Ronald Reagan, it's that politics is partly show business," said Chamberlain, an avid supporter of the National Audubon Society.

"Celebrities are very important in raising awareness and educating," said David Phillips, director of Earth Island Institute. "We need people who can instantly spread the word and provide lasting recognition."

Last October, when Phillips' San Francisco organization denounced passage of a law allowing the tuna industry to use explosives — which kill more than 20,000 dolphins each year — it gathered celebrity supporters that included David Crosby, Loretta Swit, Lloyd Bridges and Morgan Fairchild.

Among those environmentally involved is Ted Danson of NBC's "Cheers," who has spent most of the past two years crusading for clean oceans and waterways. He is founder and president of the American Oceans Campaign, a bipartisan, nonprofit group dedicated to preserving and restoring our seas.

Last spring, Robert Redford, whose Institute for Resource Management has spent seven years fostering conservation of natural resources, helped initiate a U.S.-Soviet study of global climate changes.

Last fall, the Grateful Dead announced their effort to preserve the world's tropical rain forests, which are being razed at a rate of 50 million acres annually.

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

DO YOUR FURNITURE PIECES HAVE THE RIGHT "COMPANIONS"?

Generally speaking, your furniture will be both more useful and more beautiful if it is combined correctly together.

What this idea of decorating means is that you don't, for example, let a table--no matter how pretty it may be--stand alone with nothing around it or on it. A beautiful mirror, painting or other wall accessory above it, and the right amount of beautiful furnishings on it will help the table.

By the same token it's usually a good idea not to let a chair stand off by itself. If you have a chair away from a conversation grouping, don't let it be lonely. Give it a table and possibly a lamp beside it. Such a table and lamp can enhance the overall appearance of the chair, and, of course, make it more practical.

People sometimes have a habit of leaving pieces of furniture here and there in a room, with no relation to the use of that furnishing, or how it looks in relation to the whole room.

We can help you by suggesting the type of pieces to use with your existing furniture and showing you a good selection of furnishings that will bring new beauty and usefulness to what you already have. We invite you to stop in Betsy Drake Interiors and let us help with your decorating needs.

Dieting: It's All In The Head

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

Successful dieting requires knowledge about nutrition and exercise and, more importantly, the right frame of mind. Ladies' Home Journal offers a few suggestions for reshaping thought patterns to help make healthy, permanent changes in eating habits.

"It's a matter of getting a positive attitude and turning it into positive action," explains Dr. Ronna Kabatznick, a psychological consultant to Weight Watchers. Don't "go on a diet." This seemingly innocent phrase is emotionally loaded, because it implies it's possible to eventually go "off" the diet. Instead, it's more important to improve eating habits permanently.

Think "thinner" rather than "thin." Anyone who has a long-standing weight problem may find it difficult to envision a much slimmer body. Instead of aiming for a complete, immediate transformation, it is better to create a mental picture of oneself 10 pounds lighter. It's possible to lose more weight, but make that decision after reaching the initial goal.

Accept lapses, and avoid relapses. A single lapse is a small, temporary slip-up. Relapses, on the other hand, happen when a single lapse turns into many. It's best to forgive oneself for lapses and get back on track. The important thing is to use them as learning experiences.

Be aware of binge triggers. Seemingly uncontrollable urges to overeat do not appear out of the blue. Learn what people, activities or feelings trigger overeating situations and develop constructive responses to them that don't involve food.

Ceramic Dogs Collectors' Choice Breed

COUNTRY LIVING

Ceramic dogs of every breed are available but collectors tend to prefer porcelain dogs that watch their live pets.

So says a Massachusetts dealer who specializes in royal Doulton figures, according to an article in the current issue of Country Living about ceramic canines.

As early as the third century, the Chinese produced ornamental china hounds with a green glaze, and by the 18th century they were exporting porcelain dogs to the West.

By this time European pottries, including Meissen, were offering finely detailed porcelain dogs. In the mid 1700s, English potters — Chelsea, Derby, Bow, Longton Hall and others — began offering such choice pieces as small pug dogs on cushions, to add to the early pottery dogs of salt glaze and agateware on the market.

By the end of the century china canines — pugs, greyhounds, dalmatians, harriers — were everywhere.

It was the Victorian era that gave birth to great litters of pottery dogs, from lapdogs to stalwart hunters. Prince Albert's greyhoud Eos posed for paintings by Edwin Landseer, the 19th century's most renowned English painter of animals, which prompted increased interest in the ceramic breed.

Author Recalls Fears Of McCarthy Era

By Hillel Italie
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — When George Bush labeled campaign rival Michael Dukakis a "card-carrying" member of the American Civil Liberties Union, frightening memories flooded back to Howard Fast.

In the 1950s, Sen. Joseph McCarthy achieved notoriety for his purges of suspected Communists, brandishing a piece of paper in his hand and charging that he had a list of "card-carrying" members of the Communist Party.

Fast was one of those members. He confronted McCarthy at a hearing of the House Committee on Un-American Activities (HUAC) and went to jail in 1950 for refusing to submit names of alleged "subversives." Thirty-eight years later, Fast has reconstructed that time in a novel, "The Pledge" (Houghton-Mifflin, $18.95).

"Bush's campaign had something of the same feeling. That 'card-carrying ACLU' device was worked out very precisely," said Fast, author of "The Dinner Party," "Citizen Tom Paine" and other works.

"'Pledge' is based on a part of my life that was a great time of fear in the United States, and this generation should learn that this happened. None of them know," he said in an interview.

"The Pledge" begins in post-World War II India and centers on a war correspondent, Bruce Bacon, who has reason to believe that the British government played a role in the famine then sweeping Calcutta. His actions come to the attention of the British and U.S. governments and he is ultimately forced to leave the country.

Back home, Bacon resumes his job as a prized newspaper reporter for the New York Tribune, but his world becomes unraveled. Determined to pursue his theory of British collusion in the famine, Bacon attracts the attention of the FBI and is subpoenaed by HUAC.

He is asked about his alleged ties with members of the Indian and American Communist parties and also about his love relationship with Molly Maguire, a writer for the Communist Party's newspaper. He angrily refuses to answer any questions about Maguire, lashes out at the committee, is removed from the hearing room and goes to jail for contempt of Congress.

"This has nothing to do with democracy," Fast said. "It has nothing to do with the United States. This book is a true book. Eighty percent of it happened to me. What didn't happen to me happened to people I know."

Fast was born Nov. 11, 1914, in New York, the son of a factory worker. His first published novel, "Two Valleys," appeared in 1933. Four years later the success of his novella, "The Children," enabled him to write full-time.

Like many liberals in the 1930s, Fast was a bitter opponent of Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini and later joined the Communist Party as a way of fighting fascism. His books were written from a decidedly left-wing point of view.

"I've run into kids who told me I have taught them American history. I have educated them in the best meaning of the United States. I would like to have millions read 'Pledge,' but that's not too likely."

During World War II, Fast was a member of the overseas staff of the Office of War Information and in 1945 went to Europe as a correspondent for "Esquire" and "Coronet" magazines.

"I discovered one interesting thing in World War II," Fast recalled. "For most people involved in a war, it's a picnic, a holiday. A way to break up a bad marriage.

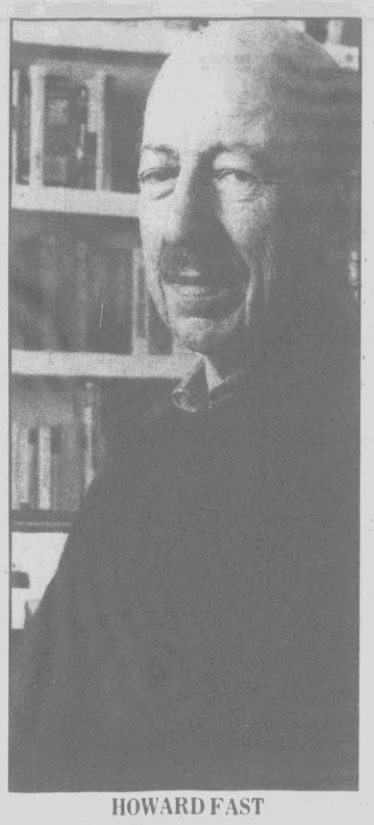

"To me, war is unspeakable. It's murder condoned. You are murdering a human being who has not harmed you, who you don't know and will never know."

After his prison term he ran for Congress in 1952 as a candidate for the American Labor Party.

"I had a sense of outrage after being released and I did something that I would advise no writer to do," said Fast, easily defeated in the election. "I based my campaign on ending the war in Korea."

Fast left the Communist Party in 1956, and even wrote a book, "The Naked God," about his disillusionment, but remains a committed liberal. He is currently working on a new novel, based on the story of a priest murdered in Honduras.

In "The Pledge," Maguire repeatedly teases Bacon about his "innocence," his endless disbelief that people are capable of such evil. Fast, despite his war experiences and his time in prison, considers himself an "innocent" as well.

German Author's Experience In U.S. Taught Him To Fight Back, Speak Out

By Girard C. Steichen
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BERLIN — More than three decades after renouncing his U.S citizenship and returning to East Germany, novelist Stefan Heym's American experience continues to infuse his writing and offend his nation's censors.

"From my experience in America I learned to fight back and speak up," the 75-year-old writer said in a recent interview at his East Berlin home. "I learned that you don't have to take things lying down."

Heym's critical views have resulted in a ban of almost all of his later works in his homeland, and he has struggled for more than two decades with East German censors. His latest book, a voluminous memoir titled "Nachruf" ("Obituary"), has only been published in West Germany.

Because of his prominence, East German officials allow him to publish his books in the West and to accept hard currency royalty payments.

He is also permitted to travel freely to the West, a privilege enjoyed only by a select few of the nation's authors, artists and trusted party officials.

"I'm just too well known now for them to hurt me," Heym said, adding that he has won the grudging respect of party foes in his clashes with them over the years.

His first novel, "Hostages," was written in English and published in the United States in 1942. A movie based on the novel was released a year later. While his early work received considerable critical acclaim, most of his novels are no longer in print in the United States.

Heym returned to East Germany in the early 1950s after becoming disillusioned with the advent of the McCarthy era and the American involvement in the Korean War.

"I loved the United States," he said.

"It was the time of Roosevelt and the New Deal. Then came McCarthy and it all changed," Heym said, referring to anti-communist hysteria sparked by Sen. Joseph McCarthy that left hundreds of creative artists blacklisted.

Heym, the son of a Jewish merchant, was forced to flee Germany in 1933 after the Nazis took power. He traveled first to Prague, where he worked as a journalist for a variety of left-wing publications. It was there that the young writer abandoned his given name of Helmut Flieg and created the pseudonym Stefan Heym in order to secretly inform his family in Chemnitz (now Karl-Marx-Stadt) that he had arrived safely in Czechoslovakia.

In 1935, he received a scholarship from a New York-based Jewish organization and enrolled at the University of Chicago.

He stayed on in the United States, writing and editing anti-fascist newspapers in New York as Adolf Hitler's war engulfed more and more of Europe. He later served in the U.S. Army in a special psychological warfare unit in Europe charged with the task of demoralizing the will of German troops to fight.

Heym published four novels in the United States before returning to East Germany, which he said he believed at the time was the Germany "where there was the most hope that something new and better could be forged."

The respected Hamburg-based weekly newspaper Die Zeit, however, in a review of "Nachruf," suggested that other, opportunistic considerations were also a factor in his decision to return to East Germany.

"The reasons for Heym's return appear well-known — McCarthyism and the Korean War," Die Zeit said. "But another factor played a role — a lack of artistic success in America. Then came the fortuituous invitation to return. In this he saw a chance for a new professional beginning."

Heym said that after a brief, uncritical love affair with the fledgling communist state, he turned more and more to an analysis of social and political problems that brought a series of stern rebukes from the party's leadership, who rejected his calls for "discussion without taboos."

Official dissatisfication over the course of his writing prompted former East German leader Walter Ulbricht to mockingly refer to Heym as "an American writer with an East German passport."

He still frequently writes passages in English first because "its precision and economy demands clearer thinking than cloudy German."

Museum Curator Into Ice Age Animals From Digs To Display

By John Nolan
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — Museum curator Greg McDonald isn't at a loss for challenges.

When he isn't planning a walk-through display of Ice Age animals at the Cincinnati Museum of Natural History, he might be found diving in a southwestern Florida sinkhole helping Florida State University archaeologists recover and identify bones of Ice Age animals.

Archaeologists say the Florida project represents a potential wealth of information because it shows that the animals — a giant ground sloth and a saber-toothed cat — apparently existed during the time of man.

"I think there's a real good chance that they overlapped," McDonald says. "That's one of the reasons that we're putting so much effort into this, because there seems to be so much material there for us to work with."

The site, near what is now Venice, Fla., is known as Warm Mineral Springs. Amateur diver and archaeology enthusiast Bill Royal discovered the animal remains in the late 1960s and alerted state officials. The site is privately owned, but the state is funding the archaeology research through Florida State University and is debating whether to buy the land.

Relatively little is known about that period of co-existence between animals and man. McDonald says it is possible that men may have hunted the animals 11,000 years ago as they stopped to drink at a watering hole.

Bones of the two animals have been found in the sinkhole, not far from human remains. The exact fate of the two animals is uncertain.

McDonald, a paleontologist, has been involved with the project since 1975 when he was a University of Florida graduate student. He dives and identifies the animal bones found in the fossil deposits.

Australian Conservationists Are Furious Over A Proposal To Harvest Kangaroos

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SYDNEY, Australia — Kangaroos may soon end up on dinner plates in New South Wales, Australia's most populous state. Animal welfare groups are hopping mad.

They contend few Australians will want to feast on their national symbol but that tourists might.

Conservationists called the decision "disastrous" and potentially dangerous because kangaroos carry a host of diseases.

"Paul Hogan (the comic star of "Crocodile Dundee") is luring American tourists to Sydney, but all they are likely to see is a bloodbath," said Sue Arnold of Australians for Animals, the country's largest wildlife conservation group.

"Kangaroos are shot by helicopter, poisoned, snared and used for pet food as well as an export industry. Now they're being offered for domestic human consumption. How can they survive?" she said in an interview.

Hogan, hailed by the tourist industry for his "throw another shrimp on the barbie" commercials that brought a record 2 million visitors to Australia's bicentennial celebrations in 1988, has a new series to be screened in the United States in February.

In the commercial, as reported by the Sydney Morning Herald, Hogan says that "God had a sense of humor" when he desposited in Australia "the famous giant hopping mouse" — the kangaroo.

Tourism Minister Graham Richardson said the commercials are expected to contribute to a 20 percent growth in tourism this year. Five million tourists are expected by the year 2000, said Bill Gray, Manager of the government-funded Tourism Australia.

Officials said a decision Jan. 6 to harvest kangaroos for human consumption will not endanger wildlife.

The News South Wales health minister, Peter Collins, said the program is for farming kangaroos, not depleting wildlife stocks.

Initiative Makes Doctors Aware Of Signs Of Abuse

By Sandy Rovner
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Rana Lee remembers the time she went to her doctor because her husband was beating her. The doctor, she told a congressional committee, "prescribed 10 milligrams of Valium three times a day to calm me down. ... He refilled it for five years, with no questions asked."

Today, Lee is a community education worker for a California abused-women agency, and she knows that her experience was far from unique. The medical community, she and others contend, has never been able to spot evidence of battering.

In an effort to finally come to grips with the problem, the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists along with Surgeon General C. Everett Koop this month announced an initiative to make doctors aware of the signs of battering and to persuade them to intervene when it is appropriate.

Lenore E.A. Walker, a Colorado psychologist who specializes in research on and treatment of victims of abuse, wrote in 1987 in the Journal of Medical Aspects of Human Sexuality that "physicians may be the last to know that their patients are being battered. Misdiagnosis occurs even though abuse is the most frequent reason why women present to hospital emergency rooms."

She also noted that physicians "may overprescribe pain medication and-or minor tranquilizers, or refer the woman for psychiatric services and label her 'hysteric' and 'hypochondriac.'"

Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., chairman of the House Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families, has been concerned about domestic violence for more than a decade. People have accused him, he says, "of trying to take the fun out of marriage." But his hearings, and his successful sponsorship of the Child Abuse Prevention, Adoption and Family Violence Prevention and Services Act (renewed in 1988), have made him one of the key players in the battle against spousal as well as child abuse.

Since 1985, Surgeon General Koop has made domestic violence a major part of his own agenda. In a speech some 18 months ago, Koop, a pediatric surgeon, said, "I believe it's time for my colleagues in emergency medicine, in gynecology and in family medicine to take off their blinders and deal candidly with the issue of spouse abuse, or woman battering.

"For too long, it has been the practice for health workers to ignore the clear visual and emotional signals sent out by a woman patient who has been abused. We've said, 'It's not my problem. Let her go to the police. They'll handle it.' And we've patched her up and sent her back home with a prescription and a warning to 'be more careful next time.'"

Traditionally, says Walker, physicians were reluctant to invade the privacy of the family, but many were also intimidated by the myths that had surrounded the situation — a myth that battered women are masochistic, "asking for it," or that somehow they were to blame for the attacks against them.

A husband's right to beat his wife is included in Blackstone's 1768 codification of the common law. Husbands had the right to "physically chastise" an errant wife so long as the stick was no bigger than his thumb — the so-called rule of thumb.

The rule of thumb, according to one report, was upheld by an appellate court in North Carolina in 1867. Still, that was better than only a few centuries earlier when women were burnt at the stake for, among other things, scolding, threatening their husbands or having miscarriages, even though the miscarriage was caused by an assault by the husband.

According to Miller, studies shows that 25 to 44 percent of assaulted women were assaulted while they were pregnant. This fact has drawn such organizations into the fray as the March of Dimes, which sees battering during pregnancy as a threat not only to the mother, but to the infant, and as such, relevant to the group's ongoing campaign against birth defects.

Walker, Miller and others have publicized information designed to identify victims of battering, but with this week's announcement, it will now have the imprimatur of the surgeon general and ACOG, an organization of doctors.

The beatings of a pregnant woman may require particular alertness on the part of the physician. Wrote Walker: "Pregnant women are often pushed into an object, dragged by the hair and choked. These battering acts cause pain that often cannot be traced to a specific injury."

But, said Walker in an interview last week, battered women seem to have an unusually high number of gynecological disorders, including higher rates of hysterectomies. "We see it," she says, "but we don't really know why, although one thing I've learned in treating these women is that there is an enormous amount of sexual abuse going on where there is also physical abuse."

Walker said new informtion "important for health professionals to know" came out of a recent analysis of data from federal crime statistics. The research, done by Angela Browne of the Family Research Lab at the University of New Hampshire, compared domestic killing rates and the amount of support services available to battered women.

Browne found a decrease of 25 percent in the incidence of battered women killing their abusive spouses in states with strong services for battered women. On the other hand, Walker said, in 25 states there was an increase in the number of abusing men who killed their spouses, and in 35 states there was an increase in men killing women who have separated from them.

"People," says Walker, "do not understand why battered women don't just leave. Many of them stay because it is safer that way, and health professionals need to be very aware that when we advise a battered woman to terminate the relationship, we may be placing her in great jeopardy."

Brochure Calls For Protection And Dignity

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

A March of Dimes brochure on the prevention of battering during pregnancy urges doctors and others to "provide the battered woman with dignity and protection" by:

— Treating battering as a health issue, not a whispering, secret problem.

— Emphasizing privacy, nonjudgmental approaches and gentleness when providing health care to a battered woman. ("Questioning in front of the male partner may place a battered woman in danger.")

— Recognizing that denial of battering by a woman may be her normal defense mechanism. (It is, says psychologist Lenore Walker, "a survival response.")

— Examining their own prejudices, myths and feelings surrounding battering of women.

The brochure emphasizes that pregnant women who are battered:

— Have increased risk of low birthweight infants.

— Have increased risk of miscarriage.

Companies Design Furniture Now For Baby Boomers' Kids

By Beth Sherman
LAT/WP NEWS SERVICE

When baby boomers started having babies, retailers obliged them with high-style cribs and highchairs that defined design sensibilities in the '80s.

Now the kids are out of the nursery, and the furniture has graduated, as well. A host of new companies has entered the market with even more sophisticated, upscale pieces that run the gamut from traditional to ultra-contemporary. Reproductions of antique classics — such as Chippendale chairs and Shaker-style rockers — are now being produced in miniature versions. European design has infiltrated the junior set in the form of baby Milano sofas and squiggly TV stands. There's even a reference to architecture in dressers and bookcases shaped like clock towers and skyscrapers.

"It used to be that you could have anything you wanted as long as it was white," said Marcia Herman, president of Fun Furniture, a 3-year-old company based in Los Angeles. "Our concept is that a child should be stimulated visually, in terms of both color and design. In other words, the phrase 'Go to your Room' should not be a negative."

Fun Furniture's furniture is made of Formica and is available in 10 colors, including "Crocus" (a lavender shade), "Thistle" (periwinkle blue) and "Almond Blossom" (a taupe color). The line is designed by an architect and it shows: A step stool is shaped like the Parthenon, a closet is a cut-out of the Empire State Building, a storage chest looks like a bank.

"We wanted to stay away from Care Bears and superheroes and anything else that was faddish," said Herman. (Prices range from $110 for a hamper shaped like a house to $700 for a storage unit that resembles a building.)

"There are many young artisans out there who have decided they want to forget about softness and go for the fun," said Judy Corman, who owns childrens' furniture shops in New York. "They want to make a statement without doing Beatrix Potter rabbits."

Like many young designers, Laura Dabrowski began making children's furniture when her son, Cody, was born. The pieces are whimsical, like fairy-tale characters come to life. Made of hand-painted birch, they are shaped like sly bulldogs, shy mice and vivacious cats. Dabrowski also has the licensing rights to reproduce actual storybook characters, such as Toad from "The Wind in the Willows" and the Cheshire Cat from "Alice in Wonderland."

On occasion, she crafts pieces for adults. "I made a bench for (playwright) Harvey Fierstein that was shaped like two rabbits," she said. "They were even wearing slippers."

Some manufacturers look to Europe when designing children's furniture. The Kreiss Collection in Los Angeles makes a miniature version of the company's Euro-style "Milano" sofa, which is available through architects and designers at DFC in Manhattan.

Let Consignment Shops Sell Old Items

By Charlyne Varkonyi
LAT/WP NEWS SERVICE

At the time it seemed like such a wonderful idea. The parsons-style chrome coffee table was all the rage in the 1970s. Friends could sit on those large poofy floor cushions and enjoy impromptu spaghetti suppers. The Mexican white onyx top was close to indestructible. Even the hefty $450 price tag didn't seem like too much money for a great table you were certain would never go out of style or out of your favor.

But, alas, the table that worked so well with the 84-inch modern sofa now doesn't seem to complement the black lacquered cabinet from Hong Kong and grandma's antique chair. Post-college meals served on floor cushions have given way to formal sit-down dinners of the "thirtysomething" generation.

What do you do when a piece of furniture no longer fits your taste and lifestyle? No time for a garage sale? Afraid the potential buyers who come to your house to see your sofa will be back later to steal your stereo? Or just need the cash more than the tax deduction for a charitable contribution?

The best way to get rid of your unwanted stuff depends on what you have to sell, whether it's more important to get the money or get rid of the item, and how much tolerance you have for face-to-face selling.

In these days of rising crime and busy schedules, more and more people are turning to consignment shops to do the selling for them. The shop owner acts as an agent or a broker for your unwanted furniture, china, silver or glassware and takes a commission ranging from 33 percent to 50 percent of the sale price. The item may be displayed for up to 120 days, and during that time, the shop owner may have the option of reducing the price. The consignor is paid when the item is sold. If it doesn't sell at the end of the agreed period, the owner may retrieve the item or donate it to the shop.

"You should be able to find resale shops in every nook and cranny of the United States," says Trudy Miller of Chicago Heights, Ill., president of the National Association of Resale and Thrift Shops, a 4-year-old trade association with more than 230 members. It's estimated that there are more than 5,000 of these shops nationwide.

"I don't think anyplace is more than 50 miles from one of these shops unless you are located on the Great Plains. There has been a boom in the past 10 years, and the business keeps on booming."

Nobody knows for sure why these shops are continuing to grow, but speculators say it might be because people who live more mobile lifestyles may think twice before moving furniture from one city to another and because, unlike their parents who lived with the same furniture for 40 years, the baby boomers tire of a look and don't hesitate to redecorate.

But before you pull your station wagon up to a consignment shop and start unloading, consider the following suggestions from consignment shop owners:

Always visit the shop first to see what its customers expect. Not everything sells everywhere. Nationally, Mediterranean furniture doesn't sell. If you are unsure whether the item is appropriate or if you are considering getting rid of several items, many of the shops will send someone out to your home for an appraisal.

Consider the condition of the item. China and glassware should be chip-free and in sets of four or more. Furniture can have a few scratches, but broken legs and rips in upholstery won't pass the entrance exam. Remember that consignment shops rank somewhere between antique shops and thrift shops. Their customers expect to take the stuff home and use it without any major rehabilitation.

On The House

By ANDY LANG

Elderly persons and-or those with heart or respiratory problems usually seek out one-story houses when it comes time to change residences.

Even if that were not so, the chances are one-story or ranch houses would continue to be the best-selling places to live in the country. A ranch has more attributes than the fact that there are no stairs to climb, making it easier to get from one place to another.

It's the kind of house we think about when we first contemplate the purchase of a house. Its design lends itself to creative styling. Maintenance is easier than in other kinds of houses. It brings the indoors and the outdoors together quite naturally. And, it has always had an excellent resale value.

Why, then, doesn't everybody live in a ranch house? Because it requires more land, more foundation, more roofing, more insulation, usually needs more heating and cooling equipment and costs more per square foot than other types of houses.

When you get ready to buy an existing house, the term used by the real estate industry for a house which has been lived in, a lot of questions must be asked and answered:

How many people are in the family? What are their ages? What is their lifestyle? Do any of them have special needs? How will the maintenance be handled? How about preferences for the locations of the bedrooms? With a ranch, for example, the bedrooms are at ground level, an arrangement some persons do not like and others prefer.

When you are buying a house that is to be built, you often, although not always, have some choice as to the manner in which it will be put together. In an existing house, everything is where it will stay while you live there, unless you contemplate some remodeling. That means your family must adjust to the conditions that prevail.

Because price is a prime consideration, we may have to accept some type of house other than a ranch. A two-story house will give you more square footage on less land. Heating and air conditioning require less ductwork and will be less expensive. The same may be true of other kinds of heating and air conditioning where ductwork is not a factor. Space layout is more flexible. That kind of house supplies bedrooms on the second floor and affords more sleeping privacy. And stair climbing, if health problems are not involved, can be good exercise.

A split level does not make as much use of land as a two-story but it makes more use of it than a ranch. It can work on a sloping plot where a ranch might not be feasible. A split level utilizes what would be basement space by providing habitable quarters or a garage. In a raised ranch, you do not open the front door onto either floor, but proceed from there either up or down, an arrangement many people consider advantageous. In such a house, maintenance is often more controlled and, therefore, easier.

So, although a ranch remains the best-selling house on the market, that's not the reason you should buy it. The purchase should be made on the basis of your family's needs.

Here's The Answer

By Andy Lang
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Q. — I plan to make a wooden board on which things like cheese can be cut. I have a pretty good idea of how to do it, but I'm not sure what it should be finished with. Can I use varnish?

A. — No. You should not use any finish which can be cut by a sharp knife. Instead, use a mineral or vegetable oil and renew it once or twice a year. Clean the board thoroughly after each use to prevent retention of food odors.

Q. — I plan to build a retaining wall at the rear of our house to divert water during a heavy rain. I want a little of the water to get through so there isn't too much pressure on the wall. Is is better to just leave a few spaces in the bricks at the bottom of the wall or use pieces of clay pipes?

A. — Both are effective. They are known as weep holes. Most professionals consider the pieces of pipe more durable, although both methods are effective. Incidentally, the openings should not be at the very bottom of the wall but 8 or 10 inches above the ground.

Q. — About two years ago, my wife hung the wallpaper in our dining room. Now, the paper is loosening a bit at a few of the seams. What is the best way to glue it back without causing any further trouble?

A. — Regluing back the paper at the seams is easy if you exercise great care. Wherever the seam is loose, pull it back very gently until it does not "give" easily. At that point, stop, wipe off the old adhesive and apply new. This is where you need extra care. You must now wipe away the excess glue that has oozed out from under the paper. Wipe carefully so your wiping cloth, which should be slightly damp, does not lift up the reglued seam. Usually, this is best done by wiping away from the seam so it is not disturbed.

Q. — In making a rubbing mixture, can I mix turpentine with linseed oil?

A. — Yes, but be sure it is boiled linseed oil. You do not boil it yourself. Purchase the kind that says "boiled" on the container.

(The techniques of using varnish, lacquer, shellac, bleach. stain, remover, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending $1 to Know-How, P.O. Vertical siding accentuates the soaring roof lines of this exciting, three-bedroom contemporary. Step into the two-story foyer, bathed in sunlight from clerestory windows high overhead. To the left, a fireplaced living and dining room flow together, providing a dramatic setting for entertaining. Enjoy informal dinners in the angular kitchen, or out on the adjoining deck. The first-floor master suite, just steps away from your morning coffee, is a plus you'll appreciate. Up the central staircase, two bedrooms, each with a private vanity and walk-in closet, adjoin a skylit bath.

First floor — 1,171 sq. ft.

Q. I have always given roses for Valentine's Day. My new girlfriend recently mentioned she doesn't care for roses. What flowers can I give her? Roses are the only flowers I have bought from a florist.

A. Roses have a long tradition with romance, but they are not the only flower suitable for Valentine's Day. Anthuriums are exotic, appropriately heart-shaped and have long lasting flowers. Another choice would be a bouquet including a protea, perhaps an even more exotic flower.

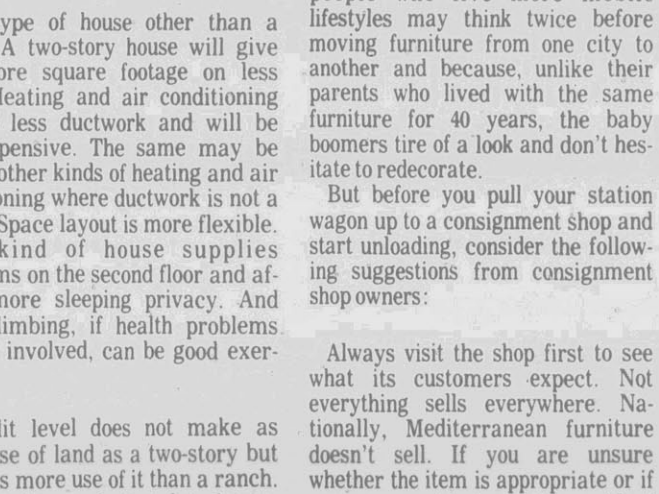

Q. How tall does Chinese sumac grow?

A. Chinese sumac (Rhus sinensis) is a small tree reaching 15 to 20 feet tall with masses of creamy white flowers in autumn, followed by yellow to red fall foliage.

Q. Can broccoli be grown as a spring crop?

A. Yes, as a spring crop, broccoli should be set out between March 1 and March 15. In the mountains, plant broccoli 10 to 20 days later and in the Coastal Plain, plant them 10 to 20 days earlier.

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR SUNDAY Jan. 22

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Use restraint and avoid flying off the handle over another person's rudeness. Consider the source and let the matter die.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Scrutinize documents and legal papers carefully before signing. Stay away from credit cards and shopping binges.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Keep yourself busy and catch up on chores early. Surprises come your way and free time is needed to take part in latter day activities.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): The range of financial possibility is limitless if you stop worrying and make sound choices. Trust fate and your own abilities.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Minor irritations get the day off to a bum start. A short trip, with some adventure thrown in, will turn the day around.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Unusual flare-ups around the house will ease later in the day. Contact distant family members for some good news.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Your workaholic approach needs to be tempered. Re-arrange time schedules to include interesting activities.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Seek out some privacy for yourself and channel intense feelings into worthwhile projects. Avoid people who aggravate you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Use diversified activities to keep youngsters out of your hair. Relieve cabin fever by getting out of the house.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Laying down the law over household duties may not work to your advantage today. A long walk with nature will help you to relax.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Give plenty of thought to home and domestic matters. Be patient with a handyman project that may not run as expected.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): This is a good day to be assertive and lead the way. Use the current situation to solidify a romantic interest or new admirer.

(c) 1989, The McNaught Syndicate Inc.

FORECAST FOR MONDAY Jan. 23

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): A new perspective and attitude would make tasks less boring. Nothing will bne gained by bucking established routines.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Emotional differences with a loved one need to be approached with empathy and understanding. Use a creative approach.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Catching up on neglected duties will not be easy but is recommended. Find different ways of using resources. Return borrowed items.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Avoid those with an argumentative negative attitude. Offering friendship along with a positive view will bring results.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Use logic in approaching crafty associates whose ideas lack goals. Stay with professional, or time-proven, procedures that you know work.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Romance will run in your favor if you take the initiative. The evening hours hold a promise of an enchanting rendezvous.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Inhibitions can cause you to make poor selections in personal relationships. Call upon your shining personality to attract good partners.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Make plans regarding a change of lifestyle and career that would reflect your personality and aptitudes. Finances need attention.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Take charge of a situation that has been steadily getting worse. The current trend is anything but calm and comfortable.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Associates may test your plans. Keep your own objectives within sight, and stand your ground. Take care of an important errand.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Falling into someone else's arms when your current partnership is at the boiling point will not work in your favor.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Frustration arises when dreams do not come true. One solution is to keep those dreams within the possibility of your environment.

Opening lead: Jack of ♡

There are those who claim it is better to be born lucky than rich. We're not convinced—money can provide considerable balm for an awful lot of bad breaks in life. We are not sure of South's financial standing, but from this hand, we do know that he is blessed with good fortune.

After North took a club preference, South elected to gamble on a small slam. After all, he needed no more than the queen of clubs in partner's hand to be a lock for 12 tricks.

West led the top of his heart sequence, and the hand was over at trick two. Declarer won and, with no entry to dummy to take the trump finesse, banged down the king of clubs. When that fetched the queen, declarer claimed all the tricks except for the ace of clubs.

Now no one can quibble about the fact that declarer was lucky to find a singleton queen of clubs. However, we should give him credit for realizing that that was the only chance he had for his contract.

If the trumps were 2-2, there was no way declarer could have avoided losing two trump tricks, so he had to hope for a 3-1 split. And a singleton ace would not have helped him. That would mean that one of the defenders held the queen guarded twice. A low trump from declarer would bring down the ace, but the queen would still be guarded and would not drop under the king.

Perhaps we should reconsider. There is something to be said for "buona fortuna" at the bridge table.

Famous Amos Is Happy Cookie Man

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Wally "Famous" Amos was 39 years old before he sold his first chocolate chip cookie.

Today, 13 years later, Amos is a millionaire — and he declares he's an irrepressibly happy one — the result of having focused his creative energy on something he loves and takes for granted other people love, too — chocolate chip cookies with lots of chips and lots of nuts.

He advises anyone seeking to enter business, "Specialize in something you love. If you do what you love with all your heart, the money will come to you. And if you do it with integrity, you'll know you earned it and your satisfaction will be enormous."

For several years prior to 1975, Amos was a show business manager liking his work but not totally satisfied with every aspect of his life. It was during 1975 that a friend suggested that he start marketing the cookies he made so well for friends. He thought about the advice, about how much he enjoyed the chocolate chip cookies he often baked by his Aunt Della's recipe. He acknowledged how pleasing it was to have other people enjoy them. He also thought about how much he reveled in promoting anything he believed in.

He felt he could make a living as a cookie maker, because he'd be an A-No. 1 promoter of the A-No. 1 cookies he would make.

With virtually no money of his own, he formed a company and sold 25 percent of the stock to show business friends, including Helen Reddy, Bill Cosby and Marvin Gaye. With about $25,000 in startup money, he was, within a short time, selling the cookies from a storefront in Los Angeles.

The storefront was in a low-rent district but, always the promoter, he and his friends managed to launch his business with a party for 1,500 people. The guests were accorded valet parking and red carpet treatment and were served champagne along with the superstars of the evening — Amos's chocolate chip cookies.

Some of his friends questioned his wisdom in being so specialized. "A bakery needs to sell about 29 items, not just one," his accountant told him. He replied he'd be selling only one.

Now Amos' cookies are marketed worldwide. They are unabashedly expensive — sold in department stores, not off the grocery store shelf. They're made with extra nuts and chips, but not by a new nor secret recipe. He says his recipe came via his Aunt Della from off the side of the Nestles chocolate chips package.

The Famous Amos Cookie Co. does not pay for broadcast or print advertising. Knowledge of its product is disseminated almost entirely via Amos's personal appearances on television talk shows, and in church, school and professional gatherings around the world. He has now sold the headaches of running the firm, but he still promotes his cookie creation, having allowed the buyer to keep his name and pay him to travel and promote for them just as he would for himself. Sales continue strong and markets have expanded throughout the world.

Wally Amos is a tall slim man with a graying beard and a penchant for wearing vividly colored flower print shirts that speak of his beloved home, Hawaii. But on the day of interview during a speaking engagement at the Unity of Raleigh Church, he wore a short-sleeved blue striped shirt open at his lei-ringed neck. He seems as open and loving as his whinnying laugh is infectious. His eyes sparkle as he talks. He laughs a lot. The listener quickly becomes convinced that, as often as he's shared his story over the years, he enjoys hearing it himself as much as does his audience.

At 52, he's a man who's realized all his early dreams, so now he's making new ones to fulfill. His earlier dreams were about ability to provide well for his family, to live in Hawaii, to be with people a lot. They were never about avoiding work. He's still working, but he's working for new and different causes. Now his emphasis is on self-discovery, on his own spiritual growth and on helping others discover the best that life has to offer. He says he never takes himself too seriously and, when you hear his story and the way it laughs his way through it, you believe him.

Amos was born in Tallehassee, Fla., to a teen-aged mother who he now knows loved him but didn't always know how to express that love the way he wanted it expressed. He tells of the transformation that has come about in his relationship with the mother he calls Ruby since he started telephoning and visiting her often and telling her frequently that he loves her.

"I do love her," he said. "I always did. I just used to think that you only needed to be as expressive with the other person as they were with you. Now I know you have to be the one that gives 100 percent regardless and not worry about the response."

He says that not knowing how to relate well to a woman, because of early problems with his mother and other female figures in his life, sabotaged his first two marriages. "I was not an attentive husband either time," he said. "I loved those wives — my second wife Shirlee was originally from Raleigh — but I failed to express it and I lost both of them."

He tells, too, of how he nearly destroyed his influence with his youngest son Shawn by attempting to be a heavy-duty authoritarian and not accepting the boy as he was, troubles and all. Shawn was getting into trouble in Los Angeles and Amos brought him to Hawaii to live with him and his third wife, Christine. The boy kept on rebelling.

"Finally, I realized," Amos said, "that I had to love and accept this son of mine as he was, that if he was ever going to learn the lessons he needed to learn he was going to have to learn them with me off his back. As soon I let him be, he straightened up, got back in school and is now doing fine."

Amos remembers some doing less than one's best of his own when he was a teen-ager. He moved north when he was 12 years old and said he was a lazy student all through high school. "I had a warped sense of reality as a youngster," he said. "I had the same level of ability I have now, but I just refused to use it."

He attended a New York City trade school with an apprenticeship in a local hotel kitchen as a cook. He cheerfully chopped salad there for a while, then decided that cooking was not to be his career and dropped out six months shy of graduation, joining the Air Force.

As a 17-year-old airman, he was stationed at Keesler AFB at Biloxi, Miss. In the Mississippi of 35 years ago he, like most other black servicemen, had to endure the irony of not being allowed in restaurants and other facilities frequented by white people, yet being called on to serve his country.

Despite all this, though, he excelled in the military and developed many new skills. "The military was my college," he said.

A duty station he especially enjoyed was Hawaii. He lived there for several years and found in this melting pot the acceptance of himself as a person he hadn't found elsewhere.

When he went back to New York after he was out of service, he thought of returning to Hawaii, but didn't feel he could afford it. In 1977, though, when his cookies were making money, he knew that was the place on earth he most wanted to live and it's been home for him and his wife and daughter since.

Back in New York, he married and went to work in the stockroom of Saks Fifth Avenue, making $85 a week. "I showed a lot of initiative there and they really valued me," he said. "But they didn't feel they could advance me but so much because I was black. I did my work well, but when I asked for a $5 raise, they wouldn't give it to me, so I quit."

At the time he quit, he was unemployed with a wife and a son and another child on the way. "I seriously considered becoming a New York City garbageman," he said. "Garbagemen were making what seemed like a good wage back then, but something inside me wouldn't let me. I held out, instead, until I landed a job at the William Morris Talent Agency. They were looking for a token black at the time, so it was perfect for me — never mind that my pay was reduced to $50 a week."

He soon made himself indispensible at the Morris Agency and was allowed to advance there from the mail room to being an agent. Show business promotion became his work, first in New York and then in California, until he started selling cookies. He signed such unknowns as Simon and Garfunkel, the Supremes, and the Temptations during his several years in this work.

Today, it's not just cookies he touts. He talks a lot about belief. "You have to have faith in yourself. You have to know you can accomplish things. But you also have to believe in a supreme being. You need to feel you will have help because the odds are so great you won't succeed. When you develop a real consciousness that there is a force, an energy at your disposal, you get strong. That force is whatever you perceive God to be."

Wally "Famous" Amos

He also spends much time and energy on his favorite cause, Literacy Volunteers of America. He takes part in LVA promotions worldwide and he is the host of an educational television series for people preparing for the GED high school equivalency diploma. He tells in an early segment of the series that he is a GED high school graduate, that he passed the test while he was in the Air Force stationed at Travis AFB in California.

He mixes his messages effectively. "Faith in yourself, regardless of how it looks, can enable you to learn to read and write regardless of your age or financial status," he tells people. "And reading and writing can open doors for you. It's never too late to realize whatever dream you have."

Amos finds it easy to enumerate the things he's happy about, the little and large things in his life that give him pleasure:

He says he's happy with his wife, Christine. "She and I just look at the good qualities of each other and let the bad ones be," he said. "We really enjoy each other."

He declares he has happy relationships with his adult sons. His son Gregory co-authored his most recent book, "The Power in You."

And he is thrilled with his young daughter, Sarah. "I was present at her birth," he said. "It was one of the loveliest spiritual experiences I've ever had. This child is pure love. I'm so glad God gave her to me so late in my life."

An avid foe of littered landscapes, he said he makes it a practice to pick up a little litter in every city he visits. "I know it sounds silly," he said, "but I want to do my part to create a world without litter. That's my way of doing it."

At home, though he has clerical assistance, he often types his own letters to his friends. "I taught myself to be an excellent typist when I was a young man trying to make it in New York," he said. "And I still love to type."

He is a pillar of the Unity Church of Honululu. His fellow church members say his tithe goes a long way toward the church's yearly budget.

"I have come to the place now," he said, "when I can even be happy about the mistakes I've made in the past. I know that I have made amends for all that I could make amends for. And the rest, I just have to let go of and have faith that the other people involved grew from them just as I did."

He shared a way of looking at mistakes that he finds helpful: "In the movie industry, when you do Take 1 and you don't get it right, you must move into Take 2. Take 1 was just a mis-take.

"That's how I think we need to feel about our lives. When we don't get it right the first time, we need to make adjustments, be gentle with ourselves, do it again and do it without guilt.

"We'll get it right eventually and we'll learn a lot in the process. And we'll have fun along the way."

Conservancy Acquires Coastal Tracts

N.C. NATURE CONSERVANCY

CARRBORO — During December 1988, the North Carolina Nature Conservancy acquired three additional tracts totalling approximately 100 acres to be included in the Carolina Bays Critical Areas Campaign to protect unique wetlands.

The Conservancy acquired from the James Torry family of Lumber Bridge, an area of 9.44 acres at Goose Pond Bay in Robeson County. This site harbors the largest known population of the state listed endangered sarvis holly (Ilex amelanchier).

Ms. Gladys E. Sellers of Red Springs sold to the conservancy 5.8 acres of Antioch Bay, located in Hoke County. This site is home to the rare, state listed endangered plant, Boykin's lobelia (Lobelia boykinii)

The conservancy also acquired an important 84 acre addition to the McIntosh Bays, located near the town of Wagram, in Scotland County, from the Farm Credit Bureau.

This complex of three Carolina Bays provides habitat for two species of rare salamanders, the Tiger salamander (Ambystoma tigrinum) and the silver-bellied form of the Dwarf salamander (Eurycea quadridigitata). This bay complex also supports the only known North Carolina population of the federally-listed, endangered plant, Canby's Cowbane (Oxypolis Canbyi).

Alvin Braswell, curator for lower vertabrates of the N.C. Museum of Natural History, said that preserving the bays is vitally important to the existence of several southeastern United States amphibians that require fish-free breeding habitats. He said that we have already lost several species through ditching, agriculture, and forestry which lowers the water table of the bays.

"The size of the bays is also critical," according to Braswell. "The size is important because it supports a large population of these (amphibians) animals, which provides a good, strong gene pool. You need a good gene pool in order to have a viable population that has variation in it. It is important to have large populations to work with, without the fear of driving the animals out of existence," Braswell noted.

Carolina Bays are elliptical wetland depressions scattered across the Coastal Plain from New Jersey to Georgia. The greatest concentration of the bays are in North and South Carolina. The conversion of lands for silviculture, agriculture, residential and industrial developments has made the Carolina Bays a rapidly vanishing landform. Recognizing the ecological importance of the Carolina Bays and the threat of extinction, The North Carolina Nature Conservancy included the Carolina Bays in its National Critical Areas Campaign in 1982 to protect the rarest ecosystems remaining in the U.S.

"With the acquisition of these properties, the Nature Conservancy has moved closer to completing its effort to protect this important system of natural areas," said Frederick W. Annand, associate director of the N.C. Nature Conservancy. "We are grateful for the spirit of cooperation demonstrated by these landowners."

To date, the Nature Conservancy's Carolina Bays preserve protects 18 separate rare plants, animals, and plant communities. The project now totals 490 acres, embracing nine bays located throughout Hoke, Robeson, and Scotland counties. An additional 208 acres remain to be purchased at an estimated cost of $104,000, in order to complete the protection program.

The North Carolina Nature Conservancy is a chapter of The Nature Conservancy, an international membership organization committed to the global preservation of natural diversity. Its mission is to locate, protect, and maintain the best examples of plant and animal communities, ecosystems, and endangered species of the natural world.

Since its inception in 1977, the North Carolina Nature Conservancy has protected over 307,000 acres in North Carolina with funds obtained through gifts and grants from foundations, corporations, and individuals. Jazz Pianist Finds Inspiration For Videos On Visit To Africa

By Susan Linnee
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MADRID, Spain — The first time Randy Weston set foot in Africa, the truth of what his father had been telling him hit home.

"The chip has to go back to the block from where it came, that's what Pop would tell me," the 62-year-old jazz pianist and composer said during a recent seven-day gig in Madrid that found him halfway between homes in Marrakesh, Morocco, and Brooklyn, N.Y.

The truth struck him 27 years ago when he visited Nigeria, Senegal and Morocco on tours sponsored by the U.S. State Department that took jazz to Africa and, inadvertently, Afro-American jazz musicians to their musical roots.

Weston's father was Frank Edward Weston, born in Panama of Jamaican parents, redoubtable cook and host who often invited his son's friends and fans home for dinner in Brooklyn or Tangiers before he died in 1981 at the age of 87.

Last June, Weston and a French production company finished taping a video called "Randy in Tangiers." It opens with the musician and a swarm of youngsters pushing a grand piano up a narrow street in the medina, or Arab quarter, of the Moroccan port that is the gateway to Africa.

"It's sort of the story of me and my music and how we learned from Africa," said Weston, who lived in Tangiers from 197 to 1972 and ran a jazz club above the Mauritania Cinema.

His son, Azzedine, a percussionist, was called Niles when he went to the American School in Tangiers — the "Little Niles" of the classic Weston composition. His name was changed in a ceremony performed by Moroccan musicians from the nearby Rif Mountains.

During his stay in Tangiers, Weston shared musical information with longtime resident Paul Bowles, the American writer who collected and documented the music of the Rif for the Library of Congress, and introduced British and American rock musicians to the mysteries of the music of the tiny village of Jujuka.

Weston said if the video is successful, he plans to do another one in Nigeria where he recently received the Roots Award from the Nigerian Cultural Association for his contribution to African music.

The recent emergence of African music and musicians in Europe and the United States such as King Sunny Ade, Johnny Clegg and Toure Kunda doesn't surprise Weston. Nor does it shock him that white musicians such as Paul Simon, through his "Graceland" album, are given credit for introducing music previously considered too exotic for Western tastes.

"What's happening now, I knew it was going to happen. It was just a matter of time," he said. "The spirit of Africa is everywhere."

But the spirit of racism isn't far behind, Weston added — the same racism that forced him and many other black American musicians to leave the United States in the late 1950s and '60s for Europe or Africa.

Weston started playing piano as a child growing up in Brooklyn. He played as a teen-ager at Broadway dance halls that catered to lonely servicemen at the outbreak of World War II. He joined the segregated U.S. Army and served in the quartermaster corps on Okinawa but wasn't permitted to play in the white Army band.

"There were white guys who wanted to play with me," he said. "We'd have to find some old place, and if I got hungry, they'd have to go and buy me a hamburger because I couldn't go in to get my own."

When he returned to the States he hung out with fellow pianist Thelonious Monk, and played with drummers Charlie Persip and Max Roach and saxophonists Coleman Hawkins, Johnny Griffin and Charlie "Bird" Parker.

Weston has mixed feelings about "Bird," Clint Eastwood's film about Parker, the legendary saxophonist who helped create bebop.

"He puts so much emphasis on the drugs that the beautiful things don't come through," Weston said. "This music is also about family. We know we are just the continuation of a culture. It's a very beautiful story, and I don't like to see it distorted."

In Madrid, and on a Paris gig, he toured with Trinidadian-American saxophonist Talib Kibwe and Swiss-based Ghanian percussionist Eric Asante.

Actor Got Start In Opera

By Richard Herzfelder
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEXICO CITY — If Robert Davi ever gets tired of being a villain on film, he can always try opera. That's how he got his start in show biz, and when he talks about a character it can sound a bit — well, operatic.

"I was a high baritone, loved Verdi," said Davi, who plays drug lord Franz Sanchez in "License Revoked," the latest James Bond movie due out in the summer. "I sang for the Lyric Opera of Long Island."

Davi, 35, did that when he was 19. He even studied with Tito Gobbi, one of the great voices of Italy.

"If I was still singing I wouldn't be doing any of this now," he said, waving at a Bond set gloomy with smoke from the fire that destroys the villain's laboratory. "I wouldn't be smoking cigars or drinking. And I'd get out of this air (Mexico City's world-record pollution). I wouldn't even be talking. I would be totally crazy.

"After I'm established as an actor I'd like to spend six months and work on the voice. Now the voice is getting the black mark."

Timothy Dalton, who plays Bond, had proposed that Davi play Sanchez as an opera buff: "I suggested to him that he had to find a moment where he sang a bar or two. Probably at an odd moment right after or just before he killed somebody, whistle or sing a couple of bars."

"We thought about it when we first met," Davi said. "Timothy wanted me to try something, but I decided I better not. I did the same thing in 'Goonies,' sort of played a frustrated opera singer. I didn't want to do the same thing as I did in the Spielberg film, which was full of pirate ships and fantasies. I want to be remembered for something else in this film."

But Dalton said he didn't see why Davi should worry about that, "if it's a good idea."

"All actors have good ideas. But they're not always germane to the piece," said Davi, more diplomatic than Sparafucile, the hired killer of Verdi's "Rigoletto."

But Sanchez, "seductive, charming, and totally immoral," as Davi conceived him, might be able to hold his own with many another opera bad guy.

"The most difficult was when I walked through that house in Acapulco that was supposed to be the house I owned. A $30 million house. I don't have $30 million," Davi said.

"You know, a lot of actors when they play something like that you see them in the house but you don't really believe that they own it. I had to go through that house and feel like I owned it."

Then he bursts into a snatch of "Va, Tosca," a solo in which the evil Scarpia boasts that he's infected Tosca's heart with jealousy.

Archaeologists Find 100 Mosaic Floors

By Kerin Hope
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PAPHOS, Cyprus — Archaeologists have unearthed 100 exquisite mosaic floors of mythological and geometric design from the glory years of Paphos as a rich Roman trading port, and may find as many more.

British soldiers discovered the first floor, depicting Hercules about to attack a lion, while digging an air-raid shelter in 1942. They covered it up again.

The mosaics, made of thumbnail-sized cubes of sawn stone called tesserae, decorated wealthy Cypriot homes when Paphos was the capital of the eastern Mediterranean island more than 2,000 years ago.

"They were the ancient equivalent of a fitted carpet, and a status symbol" of the rich "in the rooms where they entertained," said Demetrios Michaelides, the government archaeological officer in charge of the 950,000-square-yard site."

He said in an interview there may be "more than another 100 mosaics on the site."

A second chance find 20 years after the soldiers uncovered Hercules and the lion led to systematic digging by archaeologists.

They unearthed a mansion filled with mosaics and called it the House of Dionysus because the god of wine and revelry was prominent in the decorations.

Three other mansions with spectacular mosaic floors have been found in recent years, one so lavish it eventually was identified as the palace of the Roman governor.

"It's surprising to find a highly developed mosaic art in Cyprus at a point when it was really one of the empire's provincial backwaters," said Christina Kondoleon, professor of art at Williams College of Williamstown, Mass., who is publishing a book on the discoveries.

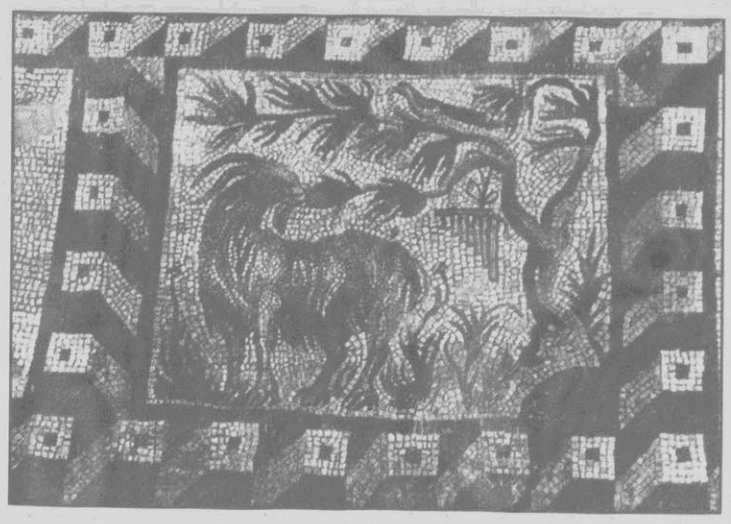

"The designs are lively and creative. ... Mosaicists copied each other and used pattern books, but these are often original, with a very wide color range," she said in a telephone interview.

Naturalistic figures are surrounded by borders in floral and geometric designs that are based on classical architecture and intended to give a three-dimensional effect.

Scholars agree the mosaics were made of local stone by craftsmen influenced by the sophisticated styles of mosaic workshops in Antioch on the coast of nearby Syria.

Michaelides said many were laid during a period of great prosperity in the late 2nd and early 3rd centuries.

One of the finest shows Orpheus, a mythological musician whose playing was said to tame wild beasts, seated on a rock performing with his lyre for an audience of animals — a tiger, leopard, deer and several others.

The Associated Press
One of the fine mosaics found in Paphos, Cyprus

It measures 13½ feet by 16 feet, 4 inches. The colors are a subtle range of grays, pinks and browns.

A later series, again of Dionysus and his followers in luminous colored robes, dates from the middle of the 4th century, when Christianity was gaining adherents in Cyprus.

Ms. Kondoleon said the Dionysus mosaics "are certainly making an anti-Christian statement, reasserting the old pagan values."

The Paphos mosaics have become the island's biggest tourist resource, attracting more than 250,000 visitors a year, but it will be years before all are on show.

Michaelides said the "difficulties and expense of conserving and displaying mosaics mean you can't go out and dig one up whenever you want."

Gauze and sacking are glued to a mosaic to keep the tesserae in place, then it is cut out of the ground.

Last summer, the Orpheus mosaic was lifted in one piece by experts from the Getty Conservation Institute in Los Angeles, who rolled it around a wooden drum to help keep it intact.

"Usually you cut the mosaic up in panels on the site and reassemble it later, but this way there's less danger of damaging it," Nicholas Stanley Price, the archeaologist who supervised the operation, said in a telephone interview from Los Angeles.

He said the team will return this spring to unroll the mosaic and place it on a special epoxy resin base to reduce humidity before it goes on display.

Finns Proudly Celebrate 500 Years Of Literature

By Matti Huuhtanen
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HELSINKI, Finland — The first book arrived in this arctic nation 500 years ago and Finns apparently have decided reading is an ideal way to spend long, dark winters that keep them indoors most of the time.

"No other country places such emphasis on literature," said Marja-Leena Rautalin of the Finnish Literature Society. "It's obvious everywhere you look. Foreign writers and critics who visit us are constantly surprised."

Celebrations pegged to the arrival in 1488 of a volume written in Latin and printed for the Finns in Germany were held throughout 1988 and into January.

She said the extent of the anniversary celebrations reflected widespread interest: "It wasn't just another highbrow cultural event. It also worked at the grass-roots level."

Four of five adults in Finland read a daily newspaper. More than 83 million books are borrowed annually from 20,000 public libraries in a nation of fewer than 5 five million people.

The government subsidizes writers and several literary prizes are awarded each year. The Finlandia Prize, the largest, is worth the equivalent of $23,500.

Nearly 9,000 books are published each year, which the U.N. Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization says is the most in the world per capita. UNESCO statistics for 1986 put the number of titles per 10,000 inhabitants at 17.7, compared with 1.2 in the United States.

About half the books published are translations, most from English.

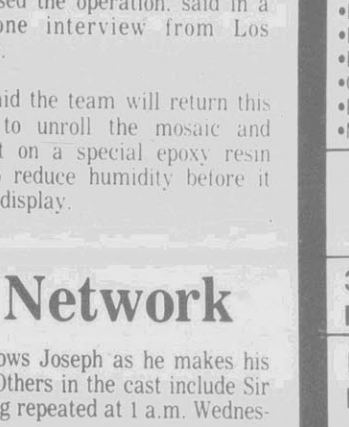

Although the numbers are impressive, poet and social critic Paavo Haavikko worries about timidity in publishing and the national penchant for concensus.

Haavikko, who won the 1984 Neustadt Literature Award from the University of Oklahoma, published an eight-poem series in a leading magazine in December defining the political climate in Finland as "corrupt."

In an interview, Haavikko said: "It's not 500 years of the Finnish book that has been celebrated, but a couple of hundred years of a closed and stagnant publishing trade.

"Yes, we could say the publishing trade is doing okay, but that does not necessarily mean we can print what we want. There is an unwritten agreement to keep one's mouth shut, and self-censorship prevails in this consensus country."

During the observance, a new magazine called The Reader appeared, promoting literature and reading. Ms. Rautalin said schools and kindergartens arranged programs around the theme and companies held writing competitions.

Spencer Museum Thriving

SPENCER — In little more than a decade, the steam locomotive repair center known as Spencer Shops has been transformed from a dying grounds for memories of steam locomotives into the South's largest transportation museum.

Begun in 1896 at a point roughly half-way between Washington, D.C. and Atlanta, Spencer became the site of what was once the Southern Railway Company's largest steam locomotive servicing the facility. In fact, the town of Spencer and the Spencer Shops repair center were created solely for the repair of steam locomotives and were named for Samuel Spencer, the first president of the Southern Railway.

Charlie Peacock, a retired trainman at Spencer Shops, said, "Every time you come to Spencer and look around and see the vastness of it, I think you have to remember the great contributions the railroads made when they finally tied the nation together, with two ribbons of steel."

During its heyday, more than 2,500 people worked at the facility, providing almost all the employment for the towns of Spencer and East Spencer. The railroad center also spawned hundreds of jobs for the neighboring city of Salisbury.

Sculptor Designing Creation Inside State Museum Of Art

RALEIGH — Visitors to the North Carolina Museum of Art will have an opportunity to see and talk with a sculptor at work for a few weeks.

Chapel Hill artist Patrick Dougherty on Jan. 17 began building one of his rambling sculptures make of woven saplings inside the museum building. The creative process should take from two to three weeks, and when completed, the site-specific work of art will remain on view in the museum until March 26 in an exhibition titled "Patrick Dougherty: Shelters of Transition."

Using his hands as his only tools, Dougherty weaves freshly cut twigs and saplings into environments that are custom fitted to their locations. He has been building these twig-and-sapling constructions for about five years. In the spring and summer of 1988, he exhibited his work in New York City at New York University and at One World Trade Center and was featured in ARTnews magazine.

Born in Oklahoma in 1945, Dougherty grew up in North Carolina. After graduating from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill with a bachelor's degree in English in 1967, he went on to obtain a master's in hospital administration from the University of Iowa City two years later.

Dougherty managed an Air Force hospital in West Germany and administered a vocational rehabilitation program in South Carolina before returning to Chapel Hill and deciding to turn his long-time interest in working with wood into a career as a sculpture. Studio courses at the university and building a log cabin home for his family gave him valuable experience.

Within the last five years, Dougherty has been invited to do installations at both Spirit Square and the Mint Museum in Charlotte, at Waterworks Visual Arts Center in Salisbury, and at Center/Gallery in Carrboro. Outside the state, he created works for galleries all over the country from Cleveland to Tampa, Greenwich Village to Marin County, California.

Dougherty's installation at the museum has been supported by contributions from the 1987-88 Fellows of the North Carolina Museum of Art. The exhibition is accompanied by a free, illustrated gallery guide and a follow-up publication that will document the entire process from start to finish. Huston Paschal, assistant curator, has organized the exhibition.

Dougherty will discuss his work in a free lecture at 3 kp.m. February 26 at the museum.

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Sarah Shepard-Swartz
SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

Andy Warhol once remarked that "in the future, everyone will be famous for fifteen minutes." With her memoir of her years within the Warhol troupe, Ultra Violet (nee' Isabelle Dufresne) seems destined for yet another quarter-hour in the spotlight.

"Famous for Fifteen Minutes: My Years with Andy Warhol" chronicles the author's transformation from beautiful French heiress into Ultra Violet, a Warhol pop-culture "groupie" and "the girl in Andy's soup." In a somewhat self-deprecating manner, she uses her life story as a mirror to reflect the jaded horrors of the famous with whom she once associated.

Thus, her story begins (approximately enough) at Warhol's funeral, and then flashes back to the December 1963 day when she, at 17, walked into Warhol's Factory and its drug-and-ego-propelled whirlwind. There she met an assortment of characters who clustered around "the gnome king of Pop."

Only after this rapid zoo tour does Dufresne flash back again, to her storied childhood, and precocious affair with artist Salvador Dali. Dali urges her to meet Warhol; the next decade zooms by in a haze of drugs, parties, money, celebrities (including Howard Hughes, who wore used Kleenex boxes as slippers; Richard Nixon, John Lennon, and a glittering host of others); and more drugs.

She arranges her short chapters into sharp, clear photographic images: Warhol's shooting by crazed militant feminist Valerie Solanas; his sex life, consisting largely of liasons with young boys and Truman Capote; the odd world of his "Underground" and its inhabitants; his mother; his death and subsequent memorial service.

Updates on Warhol's crowd (most of them now deceased, primarily from drug abuse) and on herself (a born-again Christian, in Alchoholics Anonymous, embracing the New Age with a sense of sadness, coupled with relief) close the account.

This book is at times shocking, often witty, and is fascinanting throughout. It can be found, along with other noteworthy new books on interesting personalities, at Sheppard Library. Do yourself a favor, check one out today.

Woodcut Exhibition On View In Tarboro

TARBORO — A woodcut "book" titled "Catharsis and the American Myth, a Memory Portrait," by Baltimore-based artist Calvin R. Custen is currently on view at the Hobson Pittman Memorial Gallery in the Blount-Bridgers House, Tarboro.

Custen, a native of New York City, describes his work as a "peraonal narrative using a video and woodcut book . . . to stimulate the viewer in re-evaluating social standards that are considered to be acceptable."

Custen was educated in Maryland and holds a bachelor of science degree.

Since 1974 Custen has worked as a designer, etcher and graphic artist, teaching at schools in Maryland and exhibiting his work in several states.

The woodcut series "were selected from my family photo-albums as the most direct catalyst . . . for my own re-evaluaton of choice," he notes. "The images are, in reality, not personel, even if from my own family album, since American society has many families with similar histories, the story I tell becomes universal as the narrative unfolds."

Custen's stark, strongly rendered translations of his family, however, are about the artist and his brother, "a kid," who died in Vietnam before he was old enough to vote.

The Blount-Bridgers House is open Mondays through Fridays from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and on Sundays from 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. Any group wishing to schedule a special afternoon or evening viewing of the video which accompanies the exhibit may do so by calling 823-4159. Admission to the museum is free.

Old-Time Rodeo Creates Contrast

By Ike Flores
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KISSIMMEE, Fla. — Hundreds of volunteers are cleaning bullpens, putting up fences and readying the horse chutes for a bit of old-fashioned Americana that is in sharp contrast to the squeaky-clean, make-believe fun of the Magic Kingdom just a few miles away.

This is a fully sanctioned, professional rodeo that attracts the top cowboy stars in the country for big-money prizes in traditional events such as bull riding, calf roping, steer wrestling and saddle bronc riding.

It is, as publicists say, the celebration of an original American sport born in the Old West, where cowboys challenged each other in contests of ranching skills.

Set amidst the glitzy, big-time entertainment conglomerates of Walt Disney World, Sea World, Boardwalk and Baseball and Cypress Gardens, the Kissimmee rodeo offers a small-town atmosphere, lingering livestock aromas, tobacco-chewing machismo, dandified dudes in pickup trucks and more than its share of flying dust.

This is where you get your Levis caked with mud, listen to the oldtimers spin tall tales and eat some of the best barbecued beef in the world, or so they say.

"If you wanted to, you could go to a rodeo just about every weekend in this state," says Reed Berlinsky, a Kissimmee advertising man knowledgeable about rodeo history.

But except for a few, they are not full-fledged, multi-day performances sanctioned by the Professional Rodeo Cowboy Association, the organization that sponsors some 400 events a year throughout the country. The Kissimmee rodeo is ranked among the top 50 in that group.

Another large PRCA rodeo is held in Arcadia, which contests the local claim as the state's oldest.

One of the most unusual aspects of the Kissimmee rodeo is that it is put on strictly by volunteer labor.

Twice a year, in February and July, 300 to 400 members of the private Silver Spurs Riding Club and many of their relatives and friends come together to run the show. They oversee stock, check in cowboys, clean pens, work in concessions, park cars, tabulate scores, man ticket windows and put together programs, says publicist Carolyn Reis.

"The rodeo is Americana, something real and dusty and dirty," says the enthusiastic Reis, who donates her publicity services at cost. "It is remarkable because it is thriving in the middle of these sophisticated, top-name tourist attractions with multimillion-dollar budgets and attendance."

The event draws about 30,000 people over four days, and many of them are faithful rodeo goers who travel long distances to get here.

They come to see the likes of Lewis Feild, from Elk Ridge, Utah, whose specialty is bronc riding but who was reigning "world all-around champion cowboy" for three years running when he appeared here last year. Feild made $144,335 on the rodeo circuit in 1987, when he was ranked the top rodeo performer by the PRCA.

Last year's all-around champ at the Silver Spurs Rodeo was Clay O'Brien Cooper, of Gilbert, Ariz. He and a partner have been world champion team ropers for three years.

Other rodeo athletes here last year included bareback rider Bruce Ford of Kersey, Colo., who won $102,000 on the circuit in 1987, and Lane Frost of Lane, Okla., a bull rider who won $105,000.

The top rodeo stars can pick up $15,000 or more in one rodeo and usually ride in more than 100 a year, Berlinsky says.

One of the keys to success for the Silver Spurs Rodeo is Osceola County's oldtime ranch families. They founded it in 1944, developing it from a club that gave horseback quadrille (dance) demonstrations for many years.

"Club members cut their own fences, borrowed some bleachers from some guy in Tampa, and they became the first contestants in a pasture on Geech Partin's land," says Berlinsky.

The name of longtime supporter Partin is legend in these parts for several reasons. He also sold some of his land to developers who later turned out to be the Walt Disney Co.

"We're going into the third generation of club members who support and work at this rodeo," says Berlinsky. "We are into the second generation of 'big bosses.'"

The big boss, or club president and rodeo director, this year is Assistant Principal Tom Booth of Osceola High School, who is a parttime rancher.

And the profits from the rodeo — after all the big purses and expenses are accounted for — go to charity.

Pair Of Operas To Be Broadcast

NEW YORK — This season's new productions of the double-bill of Bela Bartok's "Bluebeard's Castle" and Arnold Schoenberg's "Erwartung" will be broadcast live from the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York beginning at 1:30 p.m. Saturday.

The monodrama "Erwartung" stars Jessye Norman as the terrified woman who searches in a darkened woods for her lover only to find him brutally murdered.

Movies Go A Long Way For Polish Film Director Krysztof Kieslowski

By John Daniszewski
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WARSAW, Poland — Krzysztof Kieslowski, the director of "A Short Film About Killing" and "A Short Film About Love," believes the human condition can be expressed by the ways people observe and ignore the Ten Commandments.

The winner of the first European Film Prize, who sees human frailty in its purest form, has set out to do short films about all 10.

"A Short Film About Killing" contains what he believes is the longest murder in film history, nearly eight minutes of brutality that he himself describes as too horrible even for a horror film.

"A Short Film About Love' speaks equally of loneliness and need, leaving the viewer scoffing at the superficiality of most relationships and rethinking the common assumption that true love brings happiness.

Long one of Poland's leading filmmakers, Kieslowski has remained relatively little known in the West. But these "sophisticated and strange tales" — to use the words of one Polish critic — may cause that to change. Already they have brought him far more acclaim than he ever expected.

"Killing" recently won the first European Film Award, a statuette called "The Felix,' in West Berlin. The prize, to be awarded annually in a different European city, is intended to be Europe's answer to the Academy Awards. Last May, the film won the 1988 Jury Award at the Cannes Film Festival."Love" has been submitted as Poland's entry in the Oscar's best foreign film category.

Kieslowski, 47, an intense, ironic filmmaker whose past work has focused on people faced with ambiguous moral and political choices, has finished shooting the other eight films of his decalogue and is editing them for state-controlled Polish TV.

"It's not a religious inclination to make the Decalogue," he said in an interview, "it's just a look at how difficult it is to live, how complicated life is.

"Moses came up with the Decalogue 6,000 years ago. Nobody has ever questioned it — no ideology, no politics. (And yet) we violate it every day. That's interesting."

Interesting enough for Kieslowski to work harder than he ever has in his life, he said. Instead of his usual pace of one film every four years, he is making 10 in a space of three years.

"Americans are always saying that if there is something good, you should shoot it immediately. And they are right. That's how it happened with the Decalogue. ... I'm surprised no one ever thought of it earlier.

The first commandment that he completed was the fifth, Thou Shalt Not Kill. It resulted in the starkly titled "A Short Film About Killing." The screenplay, which Kieslowski co-authored with a lawyer who is active in political causes, portrays the murder of a taxi driver by a young criminal and the youth's subsequent execution for the crime. The initial murder lasts seven minutes, 44 seconds.

"Film killing has its own form," Kieslowski said. "We know how one kills or gets killed in movies. Unfortunately, in real life, one has to work very hard to kill a man. It's hard work."

The ruthless hollow-cheeked killer, played by Miroslaw Baka, struggles for what seems an eternity to strangle and beat to death the much larger taxi driver and then drag him down a river bank. Strangely, by the end of the film — which portrays Warsaw's mean streets at their meanest — the audience is able to see the killer as a victim too.

In Poland, the film has given impetus to a drive to outlaw capital punishment, a goal which Kieslowski readily endorses.

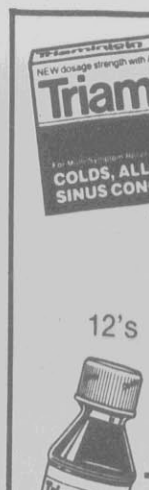

The movie "is against the death penalty because it is against killing, any form of killing. Because I think that relations between people have become too brutal."

Abruptly shifting gears from killing to love, Kieslowski made a haunting film about the crystalline love of an innocent 19-year-old for a worldly woman in her mid-30s whom he observes with the aid of a telescope from his room in an apartment block opposite hers.

The film, which refers to the Sixth Commandment, ends with their positions reversed and the woman longingly watching for the boy through the window. Love fails to bring happiness, but afterwards they are "wiser, better people," said Kieslowski.

"Paradise," a tapestry by Teresa Salt

The Daily Reflector

A finely detailed textile piece by Lee Malerich

Textile, Metal Art Exhibit Is Open At Arlington Hall

There is a short viewing period only left for area patrons to see a few examples of small-scale textile and metal art by three women artists now on view at Arlington Hall, Arlington Village.

Teresa Salt of Greenville and Lee Malerick of Orangeburg, S.C., are exhibiting textile art, and Betsy Markowski of Greenville is showing small metalworks in which she has incorporated textiles in the form of tapestry and lace.

Malerich is exhibiting two pieces of embroidery work on precious materials. The pieces are basically patterned in a checkboard design of miniature silk squares. On this background of varied colored squares, the artist has made overlays of exquisitely worked miniature details — of tiny people, objects, decorative symbols. The way in which she framed these add much to their appeal.

Markowski continues to fashion her superbly crafted small items in pewter and a mixture of pewter, silver and titanium. On three of these she has, in her usual treatment, embossed the metal's surface with formal designs based on sea motifs and repeated floral patterns. One of the pieces, a small wardrobe, has simple, non-embellished lines.

In this show, Markowski has added small insets of pleated ribbons, tapestry, and lace. This is particularly effective in a mummy study in which the mummy ie encased in a richly figured metal funerary object.

Of the three, Salt is the most representational in her choice of subject matter for the five pieces she is showing. Her colors are bold reds, yellows, green, blues, with an occasional work-in of glittering threads. One of her works, titled "Paradise," is very much like a travel poster showing three girls in grass skirts against a palm tree in the background.

Other than the common denominator of small size, all three artists prove that meticulous care coupled with the patience of careful, time-consuming creation results in miniatures that are impressive works of art.

Hours at Arlington Hall are from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Mondays through Fridays, and from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Saturdays. Admission is free.

Plastic Plots On Highways To Make Way For Flowers

RALEIGH — Motorists who are wondering why plastic-covered plots are scattered along North Carolina's highways will get an answer to that question when colorful splashes of wildflowers appear in the beds next spring, summer and fall.

First Lady Dottie Martin, an advocate of roadside beautification, announced today that the freshly tilled plots now visible to passers-by are part of the Department of Transportation's expanding wildflower landscape program.

"The department is in the process of planting 350 acres of wildflowers statewide. This is an addition to the 300 acres planted during the past two years," she said.

All of the current plantings will be on primary roadways with one-third being planted for the first time on interstate highways.

William D. Johnson, head of DOT's landscape unit, said, "The variety of wildflowers selected has been reviewed by the Weed Science Extension at N.C. state University as well as the N.C. Department of Agriculture. We expect a beautiful display of color in several months."

Some of the expected blooms are: yellow and brown black-eyed Susan, white and yellow oxeye daisy, yellow and maroon plains coreopsis and bright yellow lance-leaved coreopsis. Other varieties being planted include toadflax, rose catchfly, brilliant orange California poppy, and white, pink and red corn poppy.

The wildflower plantings this season will cost about $250,000. DOT's specialized license plate funding, which is earmarked for roadside beautification, will provide $150,000 while the remaining $100,000 will come from interstate funds, which are 90 percent federal funds and 10 percent state funds.

Johnson said that the plots under plastic have been treated with methyl bromide to control the growth of weeds and reduce competition to the wildflowers.

Tracy and Hepburn in film Without Love: They had plenty

Q. Is it not true that the so-called love relationship between Spencer Tracy and Katharine Hepburn was a film industry public-relations sham used by Tracy as a cover for his homosexual preferences?—E.N. Edwards, Honolulu, Hawaii

A. Spencer Tracy had no homosexual preferences. His collaboration with Katharine Hepburn, off and on the screen, endured from 1941 to 1967, when he died. Theirs was a genuine affair founded on love, intelligence and the mutuality of interests. To suggest that it was "a film industry public-relations sham" is ridiculous. You could not be more wrong.

Q. The rumor waxes hot and heavy that Ronald Reagan, who was never even nominated for an Academy Award when he was a motion-picture actor, will win an Oscar in March for having acted so Presidential from 1981 to 1989. True?—Wanda Jessup, Las Vegas, Nev.

A. It would surprise relatively few moviegoers or television viewers if the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences awarded Ronald Reagan one of its special or honorary Oscars this year. After all, he is the only screen actor in history to have served as President of the United States—an accomplishment surely worthy of honor, fame and distinction.

Q. Which community in the United States has the largest number of Soviet emigrés?—Jo Anne Sutton, Chicago, Ill.

A. Probably Brighton Beach, a community in the New York City borough of Brooklyn. It houses a population of approximately 30,000 emigrants from the Soviet Union.

Q. How many children did Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis have by her first husband, the late President John F. Kennedy—two, three or four? I say two. The man in our house says four. Who is right?—J.M., Middleburg, Va.

A. The man in your house is correct. The Kennedys had four children: an infant girl who was dead at birth on Aug. 23, 1956; a daughter Caroline, now 31 and a lawyer, who is married to the writer-historian-designer Edwin Schlossberg; a son John Jr., 28, who is finishing his last year at the New York University School of Law; and another son, Patrick Bouvier Kennedy, who was born on Aug. 7, 1963, but died two days later. On Dec. 4, 1963, the bodies of Patrick and his stillborn sister were removed from their respective gravesites in Brookline, Mass., and Newport, R.I., flown to Washington, D.C., and buried alongside their father in Arlington National Cemetery in Virginia.

Q. Will Yves Montand, the French actor who had a fling with the late Marilyn Monroe, marry his young girlfriend, Carole Amiel, before or after their baby comes? Isn't Montand three times as old as she is?—Jayne W., Swampscott, Mass.

A. Montand is 67, Amiel 28. At this writing, only Montand knows the answer to your question, and he isn't telling.

Steven/Sipa-Press

Q. Is Meryl Streep really a great actress, or is she an actress who mainly does various accents well?—Emm Collins, Wilmington, Del.

A. Make no mistake about Meryl Streep. She is one of the most genuinely great actresses of our time. Her talent is far more than the total of the accents she has mastered, and her expertise with accents is merely prologue to the depth of her characterizations. As demonstrated in "Sophie's Choice," "Out of Africa," "Kramer vs. Kramer" and "Silkwood," she is resourceful, inventive, many-sided and immensely gifted. Sometimes her choice of story is questionable, but she is not one to play it safe. Basically cerebral, she is a credit to her profession.

Q. Richard Dreyfuss, the actor: how tall, how bald, how old, how much per picture?—Patti Evans, Atlanta, Ga.

A. Dreyfuss is 5 feet 6, balding rapidly, 41 and asks $3.5 million to $5 million per picture.

I asked people across America: "If you were the new President, what's the first problem you would try to solve?"

Start With The Problems That Hit Home

Sergio Martinez of Cameron Park, Tex., with (clockwise) sons David, Carlo, Sergio Jr. and Luis, and his wife Alejandra. "The people want to work," he says.

Eddie Adams

IN THE DAYS AND WEEKS following the election, I traveled across the country to talk with Americans about their hopes for George Bush's Presidency. As I set out, I resolved that I would not merely take an "issues poll." I wanted to hear the real voices of people coping with the everyday problems of our society—the poor and the powerful, the experts and those who are scrambling to eke out a living.

My five years spent dealing with domestic issues in the Nixon White House convinced me that every new President—whoever he is, of either party—can become cocooned from real people and their everyday problems by the black iron fence around the White House. With that in mind, I offered the people I met PARADE's pages to tell George Bush what they see as America's most pressing difficulties. The voices you will hear are typical of the dozens of people I talked with in Texas, Georgia, Tennessee, Washington and the District of Columbia. Beginning the journey, I wondered what they would tell him. I asked each one: "If you were the new President, what's the first problem you would try to solve?"

There is one fact upon which everyone seemed to agree, and Mr. Bush needs to understand it: For a large segment of our people, things are not good.

Carolyn Stewart, a 32-year-old single parent in Nashville, supports her school-age boy and girl on less than $10,000 a year. She would like Mr. Bush to help those trying to get off welfare.

"Welfare is hard to get out of," she says. "I sat there watching TV and taking those government checks when I should have been getting some education. I didn't like me, but I didn't realize that I was the only one who could change me. I got in deep. Now I'm working, but I don't know how I meet my bills—it's only through the Lord. A worker like me doesn't qualify for any government medical aid, so my kids and I are just hanging out, hoping that nothing will happen. I'm trying, but there's no one helping."

The experts recognize that the present system makes it very difficult for a person to emerge from welfare. The main reason: Many beginning jobs pay less than that government welfare check.

"If I were the new President," says Robert Greenstein of the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities in Washington, D.C., "I would make work pay. Today, many families are worse off if the father goes out to work. One solution is to restore the buying power of the minimum wage. It has lost 25 percent since the last increase. Congress has not kept the minimum wage up to counteract inflation. If a parent works full-time, he or she shouldn't have to go on welfare to get out of poverty."

Jacquelyn Weeks of Atlanta agrees. Mrs. Weeks is an unemployed, divorced mother of five daughters who lives in public housing. The system should be structured better, she observes: "As your earnings increase, the public housing rent goes up, so you're better off not working. There should be a lid on the rent as an incentive to get out and earn a living. As I do with my kids—you should get a reward when you do good and get punished when you do bad. I want to get out of the housing project. Public housing should be a stepping stone, not a permanent home. That's wrong."

"If I were President," says Ann McLaughlin, Ronald Reagan's Secretary of Labor, "my first objective would be to improve the earning potential of workers by augmenting their basic language, math and job skills."

Gary Clinton, who lives in Nashville, can't find out how to augment his skills. He has only a ninth-grade education. For several years, he had serious trouble with a valve in his heart. His wife, Rosemary, earns $210 a week at an electronics factory, and Gary earns about half that as a night-shift stock clerk in a drugstore.

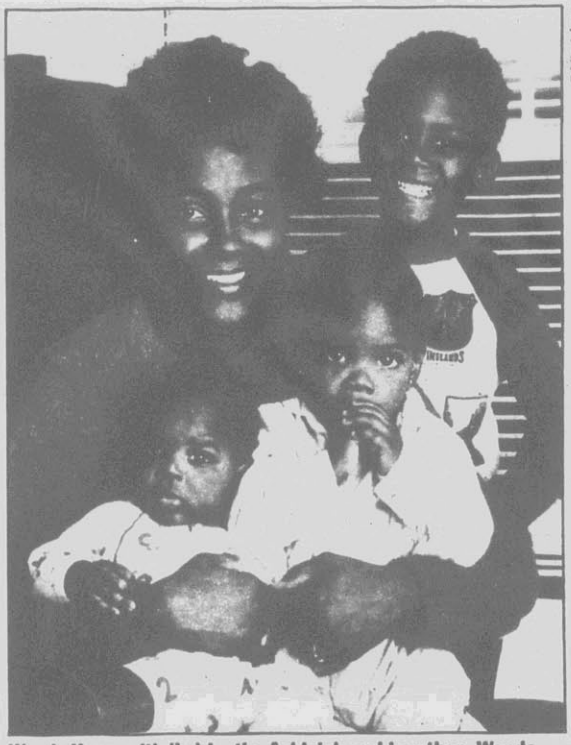

Gary would like to train to do some skilled work, but the Clintons can't live on Rosemary's wages while Gary takes vocational training. "We're not eligible for any help, I guess," Gary says. "I have been to the city and the state. Our daughter is 8 years old. Day care costs us $24 a week. We don't have health care, welfare, food stamps or any of those programs. The government should make it possible to get subsidized training. I apply everywhere for a better job. I want security and a good future. But I need subsidized training of some kind."

Ernesto Cortes Jr., 45, of Austin, Tex., is state director of a nonprofit foundation working in the barrios and colonias of the Southwest. His top priority for the President is health care. "We need some kind of medical insurance for everyone. It could be paid for by spreading premiums over the entire tax base. When we compare the U.S. to other nations—our economic competitors—it is bad economics as well as bad public policy to deny 37 million Americans the means to have preventive medicine or to treat illness."

continued

What Our Children Say

AMERICA'S CHILDREN have a few things they want to say to our new President too. Last fall, Weekly Reader, the national classroom newspaper, asked its young subscribers in grades four through eight to establish a list of goals for our new Chief Executive. More than 28,000 children participated in the poll. Each class also was asked to send in drawings and essays to tell the President—in their own words and pictures—what they think are our most urgent problems. Here's what they said:

First on Mr. Bush's list should be helping the poor, the hungry and the homeless. "It just isn't right to have so much food, clothing and shelter with them out there with nothing," said Cheryl Galvin, a fourth-grader in Fullerton, Calif. "Just think how you would feel knowing that people could help you, but they won't."

"Sometimes I go downtown and see people that do not have homes," wrote Dawn Bogardus, grade five, of North Syracuse, N.Y. "They sleep and live on sidewalks. They are as skinny as toothpicks because they don't eat. In a country as great as ours, with so many opportunities, this shouldn't happen."

Amira Lama, a fifth-grader at Indian Hill School in Round Lake Heights, Ill., has a creative solution to the problem: "I think if the President really wants to help these people, he should make a program called the 'Presidential Telethon.' The money people donated would go to a center for deprived people."

Second on Mr. Bush's agenda, say the students, should be protecting our environment. Otherwise, as Frances Aragon of San Antonio put it, "Soon we might not have anywhere left to play."

Paul French, a fifth-grader at Newberry Elementary School in Memphis, noted: "An answer to world peace or a cure for AIDS will be of no use without our clean land, water and air."

"Kids are the future of America, but there isn't going to be one if we don't put our foot down and stop the trash and dumping," wrote Laura Rose, grade eight, Skillman, N.J. "We're slowly tearing our world apart, and it frightens me and many others."

George Bush often stated that fighting illegal drugs would be a major focus of his Presidency. The students backed him up on that issue, voting it third on their list of Presidential priorities. "The country needs you to lead the way to put a stop to this age-old, worldwide problem," said Geoff Reily, a sixth-grader from San Pablo, Calif.

"Every night I'm frightened of what would happen if a drug addict broke into my house to rob money so he could buy drugs. I want to stop worrying about that," wrote Michele Censullo, grade four, New York City.

Another fourth-grader, Andy Snow from Thrasher Elementary in Signal Mountain, Tenn., offered the President his own recipe for getting rid of drugs: "2 cups harder laws, 1 cup more knowledge about drugs, 4 cups love and laughter, 1 dash honesty. Mix all ingredients, and the world will scream with pride."

Peace was on the minds of many. Jana Jordan, grade four, Oakwood, Ga., outlined a direct course of action. "The President should have the ability to go into a war, stand out in the middle, yell 'stop' and give a lecture." A plea came from fifth-grader Cassie Taylor of Riverside, Calif.: "Please get together with the other leaders of the world and put the nuclear bombs away and make this a world of peace. My life is depending on it!"

Finding a cure for AIDS was another goal for our President. "We as a nation are dying little by little," wrote Melissa Christensen, grade five, Vacaville, Calif. "Please let us find a cure for AIDS."

This is the third time that Weekly Reader has asked students to set goals for the President. Four years ago, the majority of those polled thought that the President's top priority should be to reduce the threat of nuclear war. Far behind in second place was helping the poor. Now it is No. 1.

President Bush, the children have spoken—clearly and eloquently. Now it's up to you. Please listen.

—Patricia S. Sears

PROBLEMS/continued

For more than four years, he has worked for a nearby industry that provides no health insurance to its employees.

Health is a major concern among the more than 1000 Hispanic families jammed into Cameron Park. For years there was no running water or electricity there. Even now, there are no sewers. When it rains heavily, the dirt streets turn to dangerously contaminated mud, because there are no storm drains. The water table is high, so cesspools and septic tanks overflow.

"If I were President," Sergio Martinez says, "I would put thousands of people to work on water systems, streets and sewers all over the country. They could also build hospitals, clinics and bridges. If there was work, there would be no welfare in this colonia, because the people want to work."

A top priority for the new President's agenda should be the nation's children—especially those whom Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan (D., N.Y.) calls the "juvenile underclass." He says: "We have seen a breakdown in the social policy of this country. There is not any social misery against which we are making headway. The breakdown of the family has gone so far, it's beyond anyone's ability to predict it. Few reach 18 years of age with two parents."

"We need government programs that focus on kids, to help them with their problems."

Phil Schofield

Eddie Adams

Carolyn Stewart of Nashville—a single mother of two—with her daughter, Shanay, 8. President Bush should focus on welfare reform, says Stewart.

Janice Key, 36, for example, is an earnest and outspoken single mother with sons 15 and 19. "I hope my 19-year-old will go in the service," she says. "He can't find a good job, and I'm afraid that he might go to drugs. I pray, and I keep working with him, but I've seen so many kids here in Nashville get involved."

Mrs. Key supports her family on $240 a month, which includes some child-support payments. "A third of my rent is subsidy, and we get some food stamps," she says. "I like to work, but I've been laid off several times."

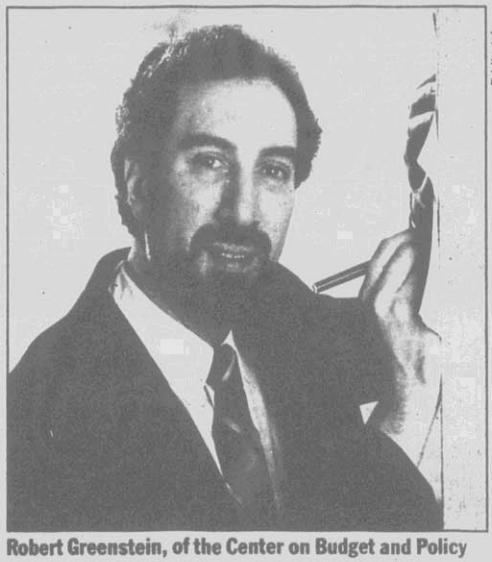

"I can't afford to send my eldest son to college," she adds, "and he hasn't a chance of getting a grant. He's interviewing for jobs, but without transportation it seems like all the jobs are either fast-food places or so far away, he can't get to them. I think the military is the best place for him right now. They can influence him to stay away from drugs."

Tawnya Okins, 17, a junior in high school in Yakima, Wash., believes the new President should put the highest priority on how American children are being brought up. "Education should tell kids: 'There is something better you can do for yourself,'" she says. "Kids today are beset by drugs, there is child abuse and poverty. There need to be specific government programs to focus on kids, to keep them in school and help them with their problems."

Senator Moynihan is convinced that the federal government must now develop a focus on the juvenile underclass: "What has become of the [federal] Children's Bureau? Where is it? If I were the new President, I'd install someone in the government who will pay some attention to the poorest of the poor—the children! There is no one in Washington doing that right now, and we desperately need such a person."

Wanda Henry, 24, and her husband, Hernell, 33, of Nashville have jobs but can't find a house they can afford. He does construction work, and she is a bank teller. "We're getting there," she says. "We began with nothing, living in a shelter. I took a course at the technical school, and together we earn about $30,000 a year now. But the most we can pay on a house purchase is about $500 a month, and we have no down payment or credit. Hernell could fix up a house, if we could find one. It doesn't need to be fancy. Oh, you can't imagine how important it is to me to have our family in our own house! But, so far, we don't seem to be able to figure out how to do it."

"The typical poor renter pays out about 65 percent of his income for rent and utilities, and that is a severe burden," says the policy analyst Robert Greenstein. "To address this problem will require major action by all levels of government—federal, state and local. Low-income housing assistance will need to be substantially increased, and greater use will need to be made of nonprofit community corporations, which can often address these problems more economically than private builders."

Eddie Adams

Robert Greenstein, of the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, says, "I would make work pay."

So, what did I find on this journey? As I traveled, I found gentle voices, thoughtful, kind and mostly hopeful people. They are concerned about education as a means to qualify for better jobs, better living conditions for their children and improvement in their quality of life. All of those with low incomes want to work.

"All that I want," says Janice Key, "is a steady job that gives me and my boys some security. I'd like the benefits—medical insurance and Social Security—and I'd like for my boys to grow up free of drugs, to get good steady jobs and be able to lead good lives. It is hard for a black woman. I took some job training, but then I was laid off. I'll work and work hard. I'm tired of struggling to just scrape by. My boys are clean, so far, because I'm concerned and I watch them closely. But sometimes I wonder, 'Am I ever going to get out of this?'"

Many of those I talked with look to their new President for a hand up. They, and the realities of their lives, present an urgent challenge for him, but he has a right to be very proud of the people he represents.

As perfect as a day in May...

ROBIN

Springtime's favorite visitor recreated in fine porcelain

Painted by hand in nature's softest hues

Just when you think spring will never come—you see him! His lively, bright eyes taking note of the world around him...his arched red breast a vibrant burst of color...his cheery song one of the most welcome harbingers of the coming season.

Now Lenox has captured the brilliant beauty and spirit of the robin in a remarkably lifelike sculpture that takes an enchanting moment in nature and turns it into a magnificent work of art.

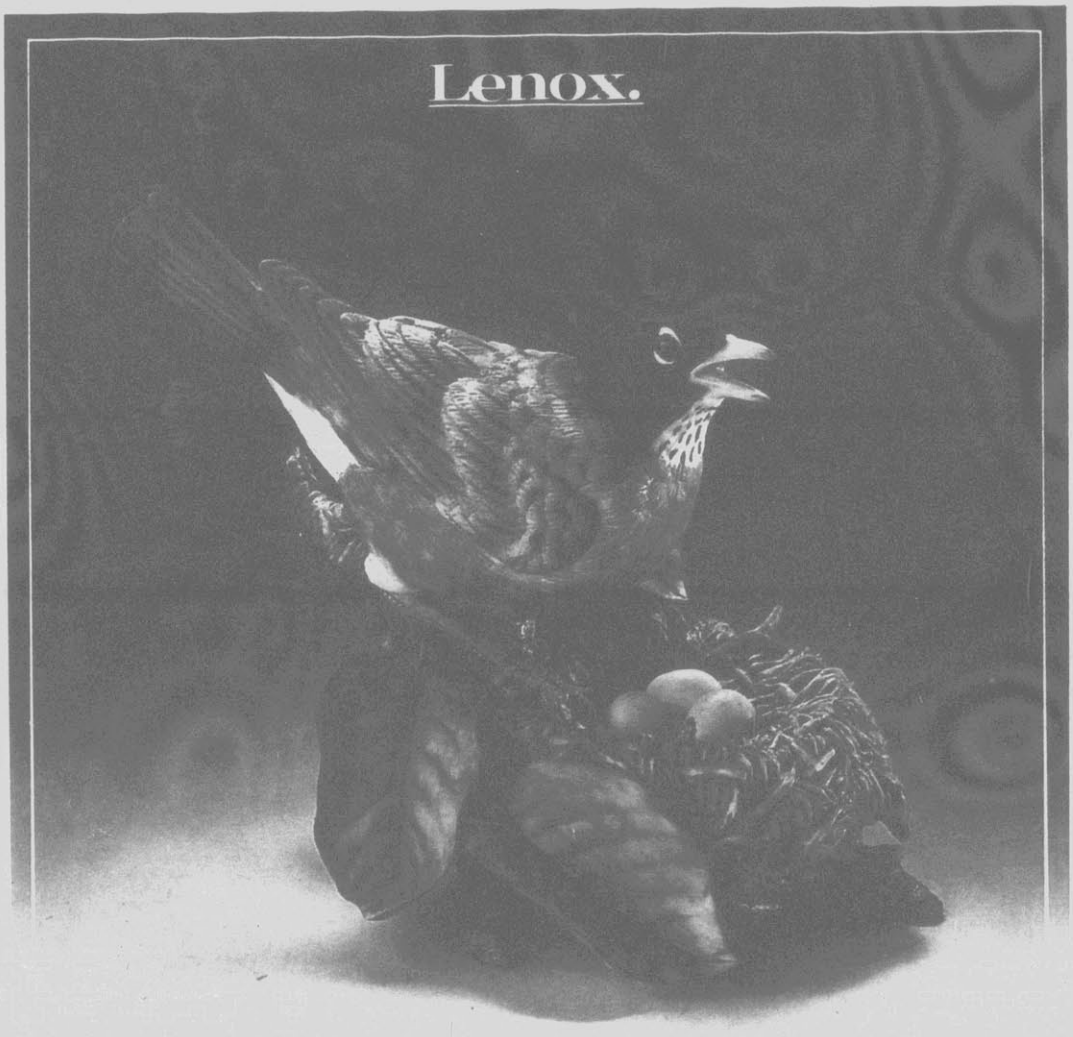

Intricately sculptured and true to life

Crafted in fine bisque porcelain and painted entirely by hand, everything about this delightful sculpture is true to nature. The subtly shaded plumage from head to tail...the delicately streaked white throat...long, sweeping tailfeathers tipped in white ...and the brilliant red breast, all recreated with astonishing attention to every nuance of color and texture. And the setting is equally true to life...the tightly interwoven twigs of the nest...the three delicately shaded blue eggs...the rough bark of the tree branch.

Harry Hamlin Finds Home

At 37, the popular star of L.A. Law finally has won fame ...and a great deal more

BY TOM SELIGSON

SUCCESS HAS NOT COME EASILY to Harry Hamlin. Though, at 37, he's now one of the stars of the popular television series L.A. Law, up until recently Hamlin was best known for his relationship with the actress Ursula Andress, with whom he has a child.

With L.A. Law, Hamlin finally has gained the recognition as an actor for which he has been striving for so long. He also has found contentment in his personal life, with his marriage to the actress Laura Johnson.

How, I wondered, had Hamlin maintained his belief in himself?

We met at the house the actor and his wife are renovating in the hills high above Los Angeles. Hamlin looked very much like he does on television. And, at first impression, he seemed even more serious than Michael Kuzak, the lawyer he plays on L.A. Law.

Hamlin talked about his family. He grew up in Pasadena, Calif. His mother was active in charity work; his father was an aerospace engineer and young Harry's hero. "There weren't many people in their 50s who were in the vanguard of the rocket industry," he explained. "I was always very proud of my father and excited by what he did. We would go on long trips together, and he taught me how to camp and fish."

Though as a child Hamlin toyed with the idea of one day becoming an actor, when he went to college it was with plans of studying environmental design. "However, I got there too late to register," he said, shaking his head. "All the design classes were full, so I enrolled in drama classes instead. It didn't take me long to realize that I liked it."

Hamlin graduated from Yale in 1974, determined to make it as an actor. "My parents tried to discourage me," he said. "I think they were afraid I'd be on the dole for the rest of my life. I decided to do it anyway."

While never quite on welfare, Hamlin survived on $45 a week while continuing to study at the American Conservatory Theatre in San Francisco. He starred in Equus and was on his way to London to study Shakespeare in 1978 when the director Stanley Donen cast him as a Lower East Side prizefighter in Movie Movie. Though the Hollywood parody never caught on at the box office, Hamlin has fond memories of his first film.

"I still think it's one of the best roles I've ever done," he said, smiling. "I love playing characters who are so different from who I really am. That's what also made Making Love [in which he played a homosexual] so challenging. I like to see what makes other people tick."

Hamlin leaned back and lit a cigarette, seeming more relaxed. I asked if he regretted doing Making Love and Clash of the Titans—two failures made at about the same time—since they seemed to have hurt his still-budding career.

"I have no regrets for anything I have done," he answered. "Though my career did go into a slump for a couple of years, I think it resulted as much from finding myself in the tabloids, which makes it hard to be taken seriously."

Hamlin was referring to the tremendous press given his relationship with Ursula Andress, whom he met while shooting Clash of the Titans. Hamlin was 28, Andress was 43 and more famous, and the two of them were besieged by photographers everywhere they went. "I had never been through anything like that before," he said. "I was very naïve, and I was surprised that Ursula and I got all that much attention. We both tried not to pay much attention to it. The only time it did burn us was when one of them printed that we were both on drugs. They claimed we were poisoning the baby, who was still in the womb. Ursula was so devoted to being clean, she never even took an aspirin during her pregnancy. So, naturally, that was a bit disconcerting."

Hamlin insisted that the fishbowl attention did not contribute to the relationship's ending. "We had planned to get married a couple of times," he said. "But because she lived in Rome and I was here, both of us trying to make ends meet so we could have the child, we never really had a chance to coordinate it. And then suddenly we weren't happening anymore, and we hadn't gotten married."

Their son, Dimitri, now 8, lives in Rome with his mother. "I speak to him every week on the phone," Hamlin told me. "We have intense conversations. And he spends the whole summer with me."

We were joined on the lawn by Laura Johnson. As her husband left us to confer with a contractor, Johnson—who's best known for her three-year stint as Terry Ranson on Falcon Crest—described their first date. "We were at dinner," she said, smiling, "and at one point I said something he didn't agree with, and he slid the ashtray across the table in a kind of challenging way. A few minutes later, he said something I didn't like, and I slid it right back. There was this nice challenge between us that I found magnetic. And the next day, when he sent me the ashtray wrapped in a Bergdorf Goodman box, I mean, how could I resist? We've been together four years, and I'm more interested in him now than when we first met. I love what we've put together."

Johnson cited their shared sense of humor as one of the secrets to their sustained happiness. The couple will need their sense of humor now, as Johnson's new ABC series, HeartBeat, competes directly against Hamlin's L.A. Law on NBC. "Unfortunately, we have similar audiences," she explained. "People will watch one or the other. You know what I'm thinking of doing? Getting him real fat. 'Have another piece of cake, Honey. Don't you want some more mayonnaise?'" Johnson said, laughing. "Actually, it's quite funny. Ultimately, we'll both just try to do the best work we can. The good thing about our marriage is that we function as a team. We try to help one another."

Hamlin returned, and the two of us took a walk. "Our relationship is like a rock," he said. "I would probably be content right now even if L.A. Law didn't exist, and that's because of Laura. You know, I may be at a high point right now. But in five or 10 years, I could be at the bottom. Yet I know I'll survive that. The moments of excitement, the moments of dropping down—that's what is going to keep life interesting. The important thing is to have the right perspective. I have no definite formula for success. The only thing I've learned is to trust my instincts and do what the little voice inside of me says to do. I've learned to follow my heart."

Loni and Burt, latest to flee Hollywood

Last month, Burt Reynolds took his wife, actress Loni Anderson, and their newly adopted baby son and moved to Jupiter, Fla., where Reynolds owns extensive property. The 52-year-old film star then put up for sale his Holmby Hills estate, situated halfway between Beverly Hills and Bel Air, Calif., for $6 million.

Reynolds is one of the latest of those screen personalities who prefer to live a considerable distance from "the movie capital of the world." Others who feel similarly for a variety of reasons —which they diplomatically decline to state—include: Paul Newman, Joanne Woodward and Meryl Streep, who reside in Connecticut; Sissy Spacek and Jessica Lange, who live in Virginia; Goldie Hawn and Kurt Russell, who have a ranch in Colorado; Jerry Lewis, who dwells in Nevada; Gene Hackman, who likes New Mexico; and Robert Redford, who spends much of his time in Utah.

To the above list you can add the following entertainers, who cotton to the California lifestyle—but not necessarily as it is practiced in Los Angeles: Clint Eastwood, who resides near Monterey; Michael Jackson, who recently bought a spread in Solvang; and Bo Derek and Eva Marie Saint, who occupy homes in and around Santa Barbara.

Women Outnumbering Men in Vet Schools

Do women care more for animals than men do? There is no empirical evidence that they do, but the fact is that more women than men have enrolled in the nation's 27 schools of veterinary medicine since 1985.

The American Veterinary Medical Association reports that the enrollment in the 1985-86 school year consisted of 50.8% women and 49.2% men; in 1986-87, it was 53% women and 47% men; and in 1987-88, it was 55.3% women and 44.7% men.

In some vet schools, the trend began more than a decade ago. Dr. Robert J. Hansen of the University of California vet school at Davis, says: "Throughout the profession, applications from women have remained fairly constant since 1974, while those from men have decreased significantly."

"The reason fewer men are applying," says Dr. Cassie Jones, a veterinarian in Los Angeles, "has nothing to do with their relative love of animals. In my opinion, going to vet school makes little economic sense to many men. If they have to put in four years of pre-med study and four years of vet school medicine, most would rather become physicians. They will earn more." (In 1985, for example, veterinarians in the U.S. averaged $43,590, while physicians averaged $112,200).

Dee Jenkins of the AVMA says: "Approximately 21% of our 47,235 members are women, with more joining every year." Inevitably, it appears, women will take over the profession, because being a vet is no longer considered a man's occupation. Modern technology has made it just as easy for women as it is for men to treat large animals, such as horses, cows and sheep.

Top Three

Don't accept this as gospel, but the three brand names that most impress and hit the mark with consumers in the U.S., Japan and Western Europe are Coca-Cola, IBM and Sony. That's the word from Landor Associates, an image-management firm that says it tested 2140 brand names on 3000 consumers. Rounding out the Top 10, Landor lists Porsche at No. 4, followed in order by McDonald's, Disney, Honda, Toyota, Seiko and BMW.

Rumors Persist

The world's top entertainer, Michael Jackson, 30, who earned an estimated $60 million last year, continues to be the target of rumors. They hold that his nose, cheeks, forehead and chin are slowly dissolving—the result of a series of bone grafts and assorted plastic surgeries performed in the last decade to improve his looks. The eccentric singer denies the swirling rumors, of course, explaining that some of his concert rescheduling last year was caused by too much strain on his vocal cords and not the tumbling down of his carefully rearranged facial structure.

Research Target

If someone were to ask you to guess the disease that the drug companies in this country have made their major target for new research and development, which would you come up with?

The correct answer, says the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association, is cardiovascular disease—the leading cause of death in the U.S., particularly among older people. A review of its new survey, the association declares, shows that 47 of its member-companies are hard at work developing 87 drugs for heart disorders, stroke, hypertension and other cardiovascular diseases. All 87, it says, are being tested on humans or are awaiting approval by the FDA.

The most concentrated testing and development of drugs is for hypertension (high blood pressure) and congestive heart failure.

"I'm thrilled by your cleaning system. It's the answer to a prayer"

S. Brown, Illinois

"After almost 40 years of cleaning, your book is proving that you can teach an old dog new tricks"

Colleen M. Hartley, California

If you're still cleaning your home the old-fashioned way, you're costing yourself time. Precious time. Leisure time. Time you'd rather be spending at the movies, at the beach, at the game or with friends . . . anywhere else, in fact, but in cleaning your house or apartment.

Now, here's cleaning help for anyone who has better things to do than vacuum or dust or scrub a home for hour after hour. Here is SPEED CLEANING.

This book will give you back your weekends—No exceptions! No excuses! No kidding!

Enter the Clean Team, professionals who clean San Francisco homes 10,000 times a year. Let them show you how they can clean an average home in just 42 minutes—start to finish—and a one-bedroom apartment in about 21 minutes.

They've timed and tested every sequence, technique and product imaginable. They know what works (a step-saving apron like the pros wear, clear ammonia, not sudsy, and a feather duster—yes, a feather duster) and what doesn't ("bargain" mops and brushes that aren't, wasting time, money and effort by using too much cleanser or cleaning where it's already clean, and running back and forth to the trash). They don't work harder, just smarter and faster. And their waiting list has often been six months long.

Get through with housework—and out of the house—faster

Here are the professional trade secrets that have put their services in such great demand—at a fraction of the cost. Just follow their simple approach to streamlining housework as they take you through the whole house, step-by-step . . . room-by-room . . . from the horrors of kitchen and bathroom cleaning to pet hair and cookie crumbs on the living room couch.

The result will be a sparkling clean home in under half the time it used to take. Very clean. Very fast. Very easy.

Work smarter, not harder

You'll save hours every week. Hours that add up to days you'll spend not cleaning the house.

Here's just some of what this book shows you:

- ★ Tested systems that make every move count
- ★ How to clean the bathroom in 12 minutes
- ★ Places often overlooked by distracted dusters
- ★ The cleaning products that work best . . .
- ★ How using less cleanser can save you time and effort
- ★ A simple idea that may save you 20% or more vacuuming time
- ★ Methods that work for a single person or a whole household

So, if you have better things to do with your weekends than housework, you owe it to yourself to look into SPEED CLEANING.

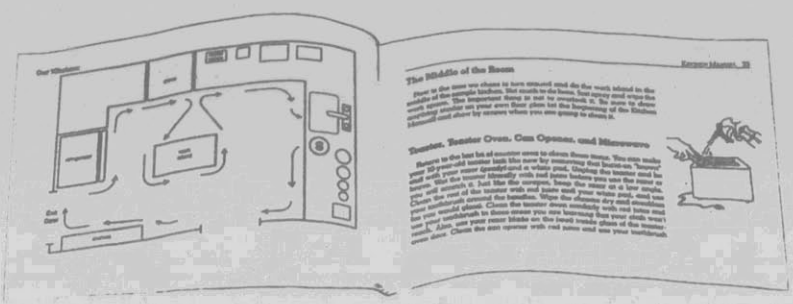

"I am a senior citizen who has been cleaning house for many years. But after reading the first 20 pages of your book I realize I never learned how to get organized to start cleaning! I wish I had received this 40 years ago."
—Mrs. W.A. Ingle, Montclair, CA

"I read it 'just for laughs' and this morning I tried it, 'just for laughs', and now I've quit laughing!"
—Shirley Voris, Yusta, AZ

"Your book has made a terrific difference in my way of life. Thanks for getting me out of the rut of thinking cleaning took too long."
—Mary Lou Ehlers, Benson, AZ

"I have been using your methods for 3 weeks now and they really do work! In fact my house seems to stay cleaner and uncluttered throughout the week!"
—Paulette Hummel, Linden, MI

Does Burt Equal Clark?

Columbia Pictures

Burt Reynolds, 1989 (l); Clark Gable, 1960

Burt Reynolds is not used to the woman being in control, says Theresa Russell, his co-star in the '40s-style whodunit Physical Evidence, in which Burt plays a quick-fisted ex-cop arrested for murder and forced to depend on an uppercrust lady public defender. "I think it was a bit difficult for Burt at first to come to terms with a part like this," says Russell, "but he did. I mean, we didn't end up hating each other or anything." Hardly: Russell, who admits she was "surprised to find him so talented," now calls Reynolds "the Clark Gable of the '80s." Well, the movie is basically about how the characters change each other.

BOOKS

HOW TO BUILD YOUR BUSINESS

In How To Start Your Own Business Without Losing Your Shirt (Atheneum, $16.95), Mortimer Levitt sure seems to know what he's talking about: He tells the stories of 16 businesses, from a salvage company to a computerized real-estate business, explaining how they were developed and why they succeeded, drawing on his experience as founder and sole owner of the 50-year-old, 81-store Custom Shop chain. Working for this master retailer, who has no problem pointing out how much smarter he is than the other guy, is probably no day at the beach—and you may well refuse to admire his choice of an entrepreneur like Glenn Bernbaum, whose restaurant is built on snob appeal and treating ordinary people with indifference—but Levitt's book is a savvy, plain-spoken and practical guide to how to (and how not to) build a business.

TELEVISION

A Thriller for Mitchum

Robert Mitchum plays a really bad guy in Brotherhood of the Rose, a top CIA agent who raises two orphans as brothers and trains them to be assassins. Also starred are Peter Strauss and David Morse as Mitchum's adopted sons and Connie Sellecca as a top-ranking Israeli Mossad agent who is on their side. The four-hour miniseries (based on the novel by David Morrell) is a Bangkok-to-London-to-Paris spy thriller with as many twists as a pretzel. NBC.

• And check out All Passion Spent. The wonderful English actress Wendy Hiller plays an 85-year-old woman whose husband, a former prime minister, has just died. The way she goes about pleasing only herself, after all these years, is an absolute joy to watch. PBS.

• Princess Di's octogenarian stepgrandma keeps writing historical romances, and TV keeps doing 'em. In Barbara Cartland's The Lady and the Highwayman, set in the England of Charles II, Fate throws a rogue (who is really an aristocrat) and a young woman (whose brother is beheaded) into a passionate-but-maybe-doomed liaison after he saves her from rape and other troubles that beset rich and beautiful highborn ladies. A Playful Encounter Captured on Porcelain

They're just busy being kittens . . . amazing one and all with their inexhaustible supply of energy . . . mischief . . . curiosity . . . and charm. And Mother Cat? Well, after spending a full morning tending to her litter, it is time for a well deserved cat nap.

With the introduction of "Mischief Makers," artist Gré Gerardi captures a scene that is sure to bring a smile to anyone who has ever been amused by the playfulness of young kittens. While portraying the precocious nature of kittens, her work offers a subtle, heartfelt tribute to the carefree elegance of days gone by . . . all on a shimmering "canvas" of flawless porcelain.

Adding to its significance, "Mischief Makers" marks the very first time the art of Gré Gerardi has appeared on a collector plate. And, it is the premiere issue in the Country Kitties Plate Collection, featuring eight endearing Gerardi portraits of playful kittens in nostalgic settings. Each issue will be enhanced by a generous border of 23K gold, hand-numbered on its reverse, and accompanied by a Certificate of Authenticity.

Fitting Facts

How to Avoid Gapping and Wrinkling

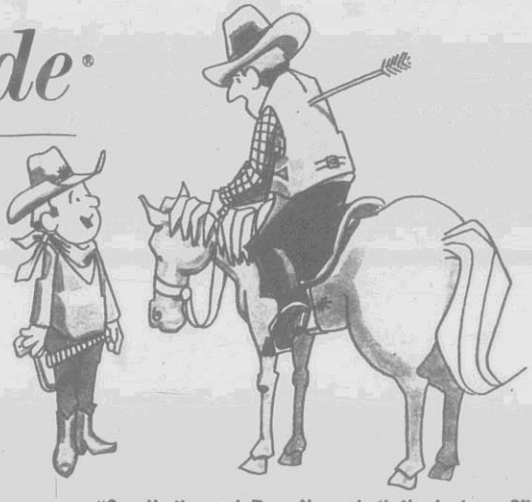

If you experience bulge at any part of your bra, the design may be wrong for your figure—or your cup size may be too small. Another sign of improper size is when the cups themselves wrinkle—also an indication that they are too small. A bra that fits should embrace you smoothly in all areas and lie flatly against the breastbone.

MEET PAT RETTEW

A Quiet Hero Who Lives Next Door

Seth Resnick

The accident happened when Pat was 14 months old. At 7, she decided to fight.

CHESTNUT HILL, Mass., where Pat Rettew lives, looks like an ordinary suburb—all neatness, fresh paint and crew-cut lawns. It seems that ordinary lives are being led there, and that may be true. But there is sometimes heroism in "ordinary" lives.

Pat's father was one of the first beneficiaries of a government-loan program to enable veterans to buy land, and Pat and her two brothers, Steve and Dick, grew up on the Pennsylvania farmland. An old photograph of Pat shows a happy 2-year-old, though she had already had the accident that would mar her life. "I was just 14 months old," she says. "I was left alone in a room. In those days, they kept liquid lye around the house. I found a can of it on a windowsill. My grandmother came up from the cellar and saw me drinking it and immediately made me drink baby oil and throw up. Even today, my doctors haven't decided about whether that was a good thing to do."

The caustic liquid seared the delicate tissues of Pat's esophagus. Potentially more damaging than the injury itself was the body's response to it: Scar tissue began to form, which threatened to close off the little girl's esophagus entirely, making it impossible for her to swallow food. For almost eight years, Pat went through a series of surgical procedures designed to keep that from happening.

"Around the age of 7," Pat recalls, "I just realized, 'Other people aren't going to help you. You're going to do this by yourself.'" By the time she was 8, the operations were over, she had scars on her chest and trouble swallowing food, but Pat decided to make something of her life. She studied hard and planned on college—but her family fought her plans. "They thought college was something rich people did for their spoiled children to keep them from having to face the world," she says.

Pat took a job as a telephone-company service representative. She saved her money for two years, quit her job and enrolled in a teachers' college near home. After one semester, a series of dental problems exhausted her savings. She married Stephen Rettew, her high school sweetheart. They soon had two children, Aaron and Megan, and moved to Boston.

If Pat's dream of an education seemed dead, she was determined that her younger brother, Steve Whiteford, would get the opportunity she never had. She argued incessantly and finally persuaded her father to allow it. Steve lived with his sister and brother-in-law for part of the time he went to Boston University. He got a degree in theater and started a career as an actor and voice teacher. Today, he calls Pat his personal hero. Pat's husband built a successful career as an industrial and graphic designer, and she helped out, taking office jobs when times were lean. Once she saw the founder of a school for troubled children on a TV talk show. She was impressed and started volunteer work at the school. Soon, she was one of its key outreach workers. Pat was a success, but she still didn't have the one thing she wanted in life: an education.

Pat decided to go to Wellesley College. It took her six years to get her degree. Along the way, she began writing and publishing her poetry. She won a prize at an intercollegiate poetry contest, just as the late poet Sylvia Plath had done before her. While she studied, Pat continued to run the house and raise her two children.

Pat Rettew never expected her life to be easy. When she graduated from Wellesley, her husband had some business problems, and she once again put her dreams of a writing career on hold and took an administrative job at a college. Then, in 1984, one of those oversized vitamin/mineral pills got stuck when she tried to swallow it. Doctors in a local emergency room who tried to remove it inadvertently damaged her esophagus beyond repair. For two weeks, Pat lingered near death, but she hung on. "I guess I have a life wish," she says with a laugh. "I wasn't ready to check out yet."

It took her two years to recover, but Pat came back stronger than ever. She was accepted into a Ph.D. program in English literature at Boston College, with a fellowship that pays her tuition and a small stipend. Aaron is now 22 and a travel agent in Brighton, Mass. Megan is a sophomore at Boston University. Stephen's problems worked out, and the business he helped start is doing well.

It is an ordinary home in an ordinary suburb. Stephen and Pat don't even own the half of the building they live in. "We've been renting for 18 years," Pat says. "We've had to make some sacrifices." But behind that ordinary front door is an extraordinary person.

Maureen McGovern

She does it all: movie themes, Broadway, nightclubs, albums—even the World Series and a duet with Placido Domingo

IT WAS A LITTLE BOY'S DREAM.

There was 8-year-old Matthew Adamski of San Jose, Calif., attending a World Series game at Oakland last fall, sitting in a box behind home plate with Maureen McGovern, who would sing the National Anthem. It was her idea to have young Matthew at the game. He suffers from muscular dystrophy, and MD research is the cause for which Maureen works.

But then, she has always been a worker. One little story tells you a lot about her.

Her first single, "The Morning After," from the 1972 film The Poseidon Adventure, won an Oscar. Maureen was on her way to stardom. Within a couple of years, she was stranded on the West Coast, flat broke. Bad management, a failed marriage and a lawsuit had derailed a brilliant career. Down-and-out and using the name Glenda Schwartz, she brushed up her old secretarial skills and got a job as an office temp.

But Maureen was no quitter. Whenever a singing offer came along, from outposts as far away as France or the Philippines, she grabbed it. Then, in 1979, came the theme "Can You Read My Mind" from Superman. The song made No. 1 on the Billboard chart, and Maureen McGovern was back in business.

She has an extraordinary voice with a four-octave range, enabling her to sing with Placido Domingo, the opera star, on his CBS album and to handle anything from soft rock to jazz. Was her family musical? "Well," she says, "Dad sang Tuesday nights in a barbershop quartet, and I remember crawling around under the table, listening and seeing all these legs."

I went to hear her sing recently at Michael's Pub in Manhattan—a small, low-ceilinged but very "in" spot, where Woody Allen plays clarinet with a jazz group every Monday night. Every table was filled. Then Maureen came on, long legs set off by a mini-skirt and a brocade jacket, her red hair chopped short. The five black-tied musicians took their places, she told a joke, then she began to sing, and nothing else mattered.

She started with "How Long Has This Been Going On?" and "The Man I Love" and then paused. "I have so many favorite Gershwin songs," she said, "we might be here all night." Everyone cheered at that, and Maureen broke into a rousing "Strike Up the Band" and then, in a change of pace, "Of Thee I Sing," turning it into a love song, sweet and low.

Maureen grew up in Youngstown, Ohio, with Judy Garland and later Barbra Streisand as role models. After high school—where, she admits, she was a loner—she became a typist, and at 18 she married a drummer touring with a small band. Then came the Oscar and, too swiftly, the down times and "Glenda Schwartz."

BORN: July 27, 1949, in Youngstown, Ohio. STAGE: Appeared in The Sound of Music, 1981; The Pirates of Penzance, 1981; Nine, 1982; Brownstone, 1984. MOVIES: Cameo in The Towering Inferno, 1975; singing nun in Airplane!, 1979. ALBUMS: Include The Morning After, 1973; Nice To Be Around, 1974; Another Woman in Love, 1987; State of the Heart, 1988.

Eddie Adams

BRADY'S BITS

After her set at Michael's Pub, Maureen and I stood in the lobby talking. "One night a young man named Brian persuaded me to propose for him to his girlfriend, Eileen," she recalled. "'I have the ring in my pocket,' he said. So I stopped in the middle of a song and proposed for him. Eileen said, 'Yes!'" When Maureen introduced me to her band, I thought she was especially warm about the percussionist. "You're not going to marry another drummer?" I asked. She gave me a patient look. "I've done that," she said. "You don't make the same mistake twice."

Cover Story....

Super Bowl XXIII Airs January 22

By George Robinson

The last time the San Francisco 49ers met the Cincinnati Bengals, it almost cost Bengals head coach Sam Wyche his job. It was Week 2 of the 1987 season and the Bengals were seconds away from a homefield upset of the 'Niners. But the Bengals were unable to run out the clock and Joe Montana hit Jerry Rice for a TD with no time left, giving Cincinnati a 27-26 loss, the first of many. The Bengals finished the season 4-11 and Wyche was dangling over the fiery pit.

When the Bengals and 49ers next meet, the situation will be different. It will be Sunday, January 22 in Miami's Joe Robbie Stadium and the teams will be playing for the championship of the National Football League in Super Bowl XXIII. The game airs on NBC.

A lot of the credit for the Bengals' resurgence goes to Cincy quarterback Boomer Esiason. The Long Island native won the league's MVP award this season on the strength of outstanding numbers, the best of any passer in the NFL. Esiason completed 57.5 percent of his passes, threw for 28 touchdowns and was only intercepted 14 times.

The strength of the Bengal offense is its balance. While Esiason and the passing game were getting most of the ink, running backs Ickey Woods and James Brooks combined for 1,997 yards rushing. The Bengals lead the NFL in total yards per game, rushing yards per game, average gain per run, average gain per pass, average gain per offensive play and points per game. Air, land or sea, the Cincinnati Bengals can light it up, and their massive offensive line is the reason why. Reading left to right, Anthony Munoz (6-6, 278 lbs.), Bruce Reimers (6-7, 280), Bruce Koserski (6-4, 275), Max Montoya (6-5, 275) and Brian Blados (subbing for the injured Joe Walter, 6-5, 295), are one of the largest offensive lines in the NFL. After Super Bowls in which the small, finesse-oriented Denver Broncos got shoved all over the field, the AFC has finally sent a team big enough to get the job done.

But can they?

The 49ers are nearly as explosive as Cincinnati. The Montana-Rice combination was good for five TDs in the playoffs. Roger Craig, the NFC's offensive MVP and World Almanac/NEA player of the year, was announced in both playoff games. San Francisco's offensive production ranks only slightly behind that of the Bengals: second in total yards per game, second in rushing yards per game, second in average gain per run, fourth in average gain per offensive play.

Clearly Super Bowl XXIII will turn on defesne. Then, most good NFL games do. Can the Bengals shut down the 'Niners? Perhaps not. For all the brilliance of their offensive play this year, the Bengals defensive numbers are less scintillating. They finished in the middle of the league in several important categories.

What about the 'Niners defense? Can anyone derail the Boomerville Trolley and snuff the Ickey Shuffle?

The San Francisco defense may be the most nameless since the original No-Name Defense from Miami. Charles Haley, Pierce Holt, Jeff Fuller, Michael Walter and Bill Romanowski are as well-known outside of the Bay Area as the last five unsuccessful candidates for vice president of the United States. The only defensive players from SF that anyone has heard of are Ronnie Lott, Michael Carter and Keena Turner (the last because he's confused with a certain long-legged r&b singer). But the 'Niners defense is nearly as good as the much-touted Bears unit.

Bengals coach Sam Wyche has always struck me as a decent and intelligent man. We're sorry that he probably won't get a Super Bowl ring this year. On the other hand, he has one title ring already, won as the quarterback coach of the San Francisco Forty-Niners in Super Bowl XVI. That was the one in which they beat the Cincinnati Bengals, 26-21, in the Silverdome. We expect approximately the same result in Miami.

Velour

Velour is a fabric that is showing up in many of today's fashions for both men and women.

Velour is taken from the French word velours meaning "velvet." There are two types of constructions - woven and knitted.

The terms "velour" and "plush" are used interchangeably for a pile velour construction. But velour also includes a variety of woolen fabrics characterized by a short, soft, thick pile with either a twill or satin background and given a velour finish. The fabric may be made of cotton, wool, silk, mohair or synthetic fibers. They may also be bonded.

Woven velours are used in both menswear and womenswear for coats, suits and dresses. They are rich and luxurious in appearance and usually dry clean very well.

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

Dear Michele: I know I've seen Phil Hartman and Kevin Nealon of "Saturday Night Live" in the movies "Pee-wee's Big Adventure" and "Roxanne," respectively. How old are they, where were they born andare they married? Also, how did they get their starts and where do they live? — BOB HARRIGAN, MYERSVILLE, MASS.

Hartman was born Sept. 24, 1947, in Brantford, Ontario, and was raised in Connecticut and Southern California. For 11 years he was a member of the famed Los Angeles comedy group, "The Groundlings," along with Paul Reubens, aka Pee-wee Herman. Hartman and Herman produced "The Pee-wee Herman Show" on stage, and Hartman has recorded voices for Herman's hit Saturday-morning show "Pee-wee's Playhouse." He also co-scripted the film "Pee-Wee's Big Adventure" (1985). He's single and maintains residences on both coasts.

Nealon was born Nov. 18, 1953, in Bridgeport, Conn. After graduating from Sacred Heart University in Connecticut, he headed for Los Angeles to pursue a career in acting. While attending classes,he worked as a bartender at The Improv and began doing stand-up comedy routines in 1979. Like Hartman, Nealon is single and maintains bicoastal residences.

Dear Michele: My sister's favorite actress is Jean Simmons, but she isn't in many films anymore. What has she been doing? — THERESA SHOEMAKER, SCRANTON, PENN.

Simmons is semi-retired and living in Southern California. The veteran actress occasionally appears on the small screen, and has starred in such miniseries as "The Thorn Birds" (for which she won an Emmy as Best Actress in 1983) and "North and South" (1985) and the TV-movie remake of "Inherit the Wind" (1987). One of the many celebrities to enter the Betty Ford Center, Simmons was treated for a longstanding alcohol problem in 1986.

Dear Michele: What can you tell me about Holly Hunter? What else has she done besides "Raising Arizona"? — RALPH COFFMAN JR., JOHNSON CITY, TENN.

A native of Conyers, Ga., Hunter moved to New York immediately after graduating from the School of Drama at Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh. She's been working steadily ever since,appearing in the TV movies "An Uncommon Love" (1983), "With Intent to Kill" (1984) and "A Gathering of Old Men" (1986) and feature films "The Burning" (1981), "Swing Shift" (1984), "End of the Line" (1987) and "Broadcast News" (1988).

Dear Michele: Please list "Growing Pains" star Tracey Gold's birthday and real name. Any information would be welcome. — DAVID WELDON, OXFORD, N.C.

Tracey Gold was born May 16, 1969, in New York City, the eldest of a trio of actress-sisters from a show-biz family. Her father, Harry, is an agent in Hollywood, and their mother, Bonnie, once had her own radio show in Montana. Prior to her "Growing Pains" role of Carol Seaver, Gold appeared in the sitcoms "Shirley" (1979-80) and "Goodnight, Beantown" (1983-84). Her sisters Missyand Brandy appeared in "Benson" and "First Impressions," respectively.

Dear Michele: Is there any relationship between Chad Allen of "Our House," and Ricky Schroder of "Silver Spoons"? — ROSALENE POSEY, MISSION, TEXAS

They are not related. Chad, 14, is the son of a computer analyst and homemaker. He has three older brothers, ranging in age from 13 to 25, and a twin sister, Charity. The twin Allens began acting in commercials six years ago.

Schroder, 18, has a sister, Dawon, an actress/model. Their father, Dick is a telephone company executive, and their mother is a homemaker.

Dear Michele: Many times, I have wanted to write and object about certain programs being canceled, but I don't know where to write. Please help with addresses. — S. KOCH, NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y.

TV Chatter

By Frank Sanello

Roseanne Barr, star of the new season's only certifiable hit, slipped into episodic TV because she hates going on tour. "When ABC called me, I was shocked," she says. "I thought they just wanted me to do a guest shot on some show. But then I thought about it and decided a weekly series was better than being on the road. I went on the road once, and it was enough. I opened for this Spanish guy named Julio Iglesias, and it was disastrous. Everybody spoke Spanish, so I didn't have nobody to talk to."

The language barrier wasn't the only problem. "It's harder for me to be in strange cities 'cause I'm not that friendly," Barr explains.

On the bright side, touring allowed Barr to leave her kids with her husband. And since achieving TV stardom, Barr has hired a maid to help out with the kids and other household "chores." But this upwardly mobile touch hasn't hindered Barr from creating comic material about life as a lower-class housewife.

"I spent 36 years without a maid, so I have plenty of material to fall back on," she says.

"Were there any... sexual problems?" Almost every episode of "Dear John" features singles-group leader Louise Mercer (played by British actress Jane Carr) asking members that question about the breakup of their relationships. Carr always asks the question hoping the sad-sacks in the support group will answer "yes" and supply details.

"I had to make up my own scenario for why Louise always asks that," Carr says. "Her ex-husband was into kinky sex. Maybe that's why she's obsessed with other people's sexual problems. I'm convinced Louise was married to an American."

Moore's 'Loving' return is more than welcome

By Connie Passalacqua

Mary Tyler Moore may not have wanted him, but "Loving" fans are very happy to welcome back Edward J. Moore (no relation to Mary) as Harry Sowolsky.

Moore (Ed, that is) left the soap about a year ago for what looked to be a big acting break. He had been cast in Mary Tyler Moore's new CBS sitcom (which would eventually be called "Annie McGuire") as Annie's (i.e. Mary's) husband. The day before taping was to begin, however, he was dumped and replaced by Dennis Arndt.

Oh, well. A few months into the season, Mary's dull show has been put on "hiatus." Now Moore (Ed, that is) is coming back to "Loving," where he's badly needed. Until the relatively recent emergence of kooky Egypt Jones (played to the max by Linda Cook), Moore's blue-collar Harry was the only touch of ethnicity – and recognizable real life – in the unremittingly WASPy town of Corinth.

Moore's Harry was originally brought on to "Loving" to be the emotionally involved father of later-to-be-murdered young hero Steve (played by John Johnston). But volatile Harry proved to be an excellent counterpoint to society sisters-in-law/ice queens Anne Alden Forbes and Gwyneth Alden (played by Callan White and Christine Tudor), and the three made quite an interesting love triangle.

Both Anne and Gwyneth are still available, so look out for "Harry, Part II."

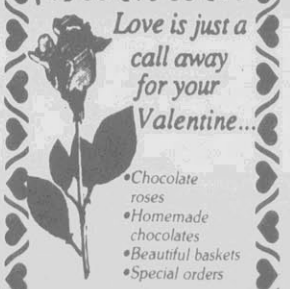

• Periodically during the past few years, "One Life to Live" 's Michael Storm (who plays Dr. Larry Wolek) has kicked up a public fuss about his character's habitual lack of story line. But are we really supposed to be sorry for this veteran, who has been on the show in the same role for 20 years?

His publicist recently released a little story about a hardship (!) Storm has suffered. It seems he had to trade in his gold Porsche for an Accura. The repair bills on the Porsche were so high – $35 for a gas cap – that he decided it was time to get practical. Aaaww.

At least Storm (who really is a good actor, despite this nonsense) has some consolation. Word is that "OLTL" is looking for yet another actor to play Larry's son Danny Wolek. So many actors have played the role over the years that it has become almost impossible to keep count! Word is that father and son will be romantically involved with the same woman. What a strikingly original soap-plot idea!

WEDNESDAY
THE EQUALIZER

Robert McCall (Edward Woodward, l.) and sidekick Mickey Kostmayer (Keith Szarabajka) rush to the aid of a family forced to move into a decrepit welfare hotel on "The Equalizer." It airs Wednesday, Jan. 25 on CBS.

'Babar' Is An Unusually Appealing TV Series

By Bob Remington

Earlier this month, CBC launched "Babar," an animated series based on the children's-book elephant created in 1931 by French illustrator Jean de Brunhoff.

This is more than a program you want to watch; it is television you want to cuddle. Viewers are likely to coo at the characters as if they were newborn babes. A-w-w-w-w.

While the animation is far from the quality of Disney classics, "Babar" is rich in color, with wonderful theme music and touching stories. If there is one complaint, it is the mellifluous tones of actor Gordon Pinsent as Babar. Elephants just shouldn't have radio voices, which is the case for most of the adult pachyderms in "Babar."

Twenty-six half-hour programs have been created by Nelvana, a Canadian animation company that had previously produced several "Babar" specials for television. Thirteen episodes will run Tuesday nights this season on CBC, with the remaining coming back next year.

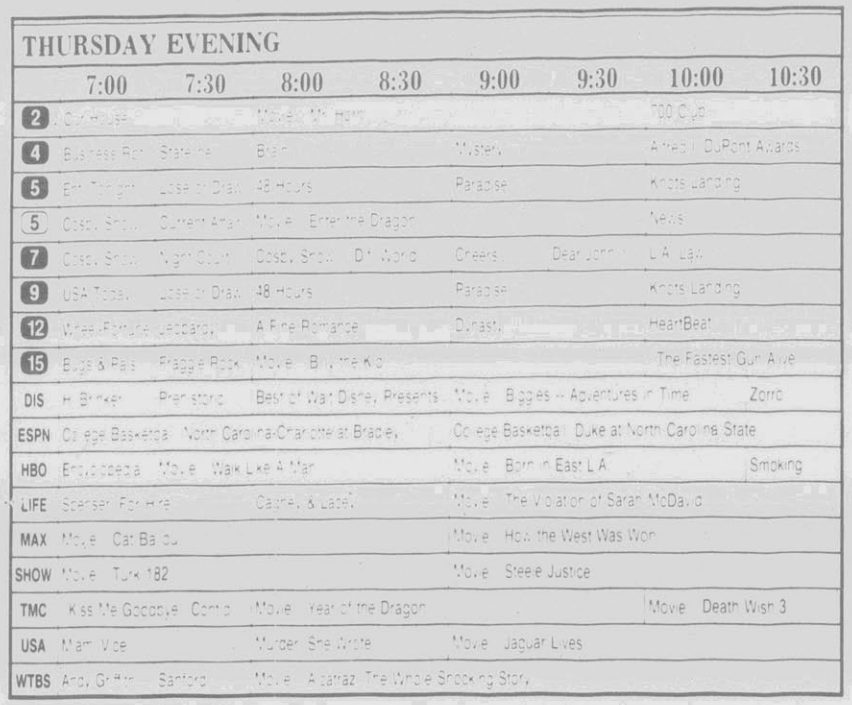

Each story is done as a flashback, with an adult King Babar recounting one of his adventures as the young elephant king of Celesteville, city of elephants.

Sports Roundup

SUNDAY, JAN. 22

NBA Basketball (CBS)

Detroit Pistons at Boston Celtics. Are the Pistons slipping already? After 25 games of the 1987-88 season, they were scoring 116.9 points per game; at the same point this year, they avergaed 103.8. Could it be that the Central is a lot tougher this year? We sure think so and the Cavaliers might agree.

Seniors Golf (NBC)

NCAA Basketball (ABC)

Georgia Tech at Illinois.

NCAA Basketball (CBS)

UNLV at Louisville.

PGA Golf (CBS)

Phoenix Open, final round from the TPC of Scottsdale, Ariz.

NFL Football (NBC)

Super Bowl XXIII, from Joe Robbie Stadium, Miami, Fla.

Miami Herald sports columnist Edwin Pope has covered every Super Bowl, including the five previously played in the Orange Bowl. He says the Super Bowl publicity is invaluable for the host city.

"From what you read about San Diego last year, you would believe it's an unmixed paradise," he says. "Well, it's not. You could go five blocks from the Super Bowl headquarters hotel and see some of the worst slum scenes of any town in America."

With most people getting their picture of his town from "Miami Vice" and the like, Pope acknowledges that the city's image could use the boost that a successful Super Bowl provides. "It meansa good deal in terms of image," says Pope, "more than in terms of money."

MONDAY, JAN. 23

NCAA Basketball (ESPN)

Doubleheader: St. John's at Georgetown, followed by Indiana at Michigan.

Michigan has been shredding the likes of Eastern Michigan, Central Michigan and (we think) the Michigan School for Wayward Girls. Even though this is a less-than-optimum Bobby Knight squad, lookfor the Hoosiers to give the Wolverines a tough time.

FRIDAY, JAN. 27

Tennis (ESPN)

OK, so Maureen Connolly and Margaret Court won Grand Slams before Steffi Graf. We guess she'll just have to go out and win two in a row if she really wants to make people notice her.

SATURDAY, JAN. 28

NCAA Basketball (CBS)

PBA Bowling (ABC)

NCAA Basketball (NBC)

Oklahoma at UNLV.

Basketball (ABC)

A special presentation featuring the Harlem Globetrotters. The Trotters are an act that never gets tired. If you've never seen them before (hard to imagine), you should; if you've seen them a hundred times, once more won't hurt.

TUESDAY LADY AND HIGHWAY-MAN

Hugh Grant plays a 17th-century aristocrat-turned-highwayman, and Lysette Anthony plays the lady he has sworn to protect in "The Lady and the Highwayman," based on a Barbara Cartland novel. It airs Sunday, Jan. 22, on CBS. (LATE CHANGE: SHOW HAS BEEN SWITCHED TO SUNDAY JAN. 22)

Seven Reasons To Cheer For Super Bowl XXXIII

By Marty Linehan

Ever since the Green Bay Packers took on the Kansas City Chiefs in Super Bowl I, the Super Bowl has been the most hyped event in sports history. In the last 10 years, it has also been the most maligned, as folks have begun to notice that of the 22 games played so far, only two would qualify as good ones. But let's look at some good things about Super Bowl XXIII (airing Sunday, Jan. 22 on NBC).

* Announcers Dick Enberg and Merlin Olsen will be given meaningful employment.

* Viewers will see 90 athletes on one field at one time who are not presently in jail or going through drug rehabilitation (although some have already gone that route).

* It will be the last pro football bet of the season for gamblers (except for those so hardened that they'll bet on the Pro Bowl), and some of them will even get a chance to break even. And let's hear it for those Super Bowl office pools, where a guy in the mailroom can, for once, outdo the boss by picking the correct score.

* With some corporations paying up to $600,000 for 30-second commercials, the game will make tons of money for NBC. This means the network can put on more programs that will drive viewers to cable TV, which will prosper and steal more sports events from the watch-for-free viewers.

* If things slow down on the field, viewers will be able to get their action fix via the commercials. Budweiser will present the "Bud Bowl," in which — get this — beer-bottle teams will face off against each other, football style. And during halftime, Coke will present the most publicized TV commercial since Michael Jackson married Pepsi.

CAN YOU TRUST YOUR EYES? There are at least six differences in drawing details between top and bottom panels. How quickly can you find them? Check answers with those below.

Differences: 1. Bathmat wording differs. 2. Purse is smaller. 3. Box is missing. 4. Collar is smaller. 5. Sign is missing. 6. Elephant is reversed.

• LOOSE ENDS! A list of five words whose first three letters and last three letters form the same short word is given at right. A dash is shown for each missing letter — four in the first, four in the second, etc.

P.S.: It's not so easy.

1 ANT	ANT
2 ION	ION
3 OUT	OUT
4 TOR	TOR
5 BED	BED

1. Antiqpant. 2. Ionization. 3. Outshout. 4. Tormentor. 5. Bedaubed.

• FOUR SUM! In how many ways can the first four letters of the alphabet — ABCD — be arranged in a different order (ABCD, ACDB, CBDA, etc.)? Guess.

A GOOD BET TO IGNORE?

Suppose at a party someone steps up to you with the following sporting proposition:

"I'll bet you a quarter that if you give me a dollar, I'll give you three dollars in return."

Sounds like a generous offer, does it not? But will it serve your best interests to accept or decline? What say?

Best bet is to decline, for, friend or not, your opponent can lose and still gain $.75. Here's how: If he welshes on paying the $3, he can give you $.25 from your dollar and still have $.75 of your money left.

© 1989 King Features Syndicate, Inc. 1/22

SPELLBINDER

SCORE 10 points for using all the letters in the word below to form two complete words:

INCUBATE

- - - - - - - -

THEN score 2 points each for all words of four letters or more found among the letters.
