Praying Bundy Dies As Foes Lift Cheers

By Ron Word
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STARKE, Fla. — Ted Bundy, the "diabolical" law school dropout who confessed to killing 20 women in four Western states, was executed in the electric chair today for the 1978 rape and murder of a 12-year-old girl.

At 7:06 a.m., six minutes past schedule, the executioner turned on 2,000 volts of electricity and Bundy gently arched back in the chair and clenched his fists. One minute later, the power was turned off.

"At 7:16 this morning, the doctor at Florida State Prison pronounced Theodore Bundy dead," said Jon Peck, a spokesman for Florida Gov. Bob Martinez. "He was executed right on schedule."

In his final statement, Bundy said, "Jim and Fred, I'd like you to give my love to my family and friends."

Jim Coleman is Bundy's attorney from Washington, D.C., and Fred Lawrence is a Methodist minister who spent the night in prayer with him.

In addition to praying, a remorseful Bundy, 42, also placed two last calls to his mother in Tacoma, Wash., to say farewell.

"He sounds wonderful," Louise Bundy said after the first telephone call. "He sounds very much at peace with himself."

At the conclusion of the second, Bundy's mother told him, "You'll always be my precious son," according to today's Morning News Tribune of Tacoma.

Bundy was condemned for the kidnapping, rape and murder of 12-year-old Kimberly Leach of Lake City. Her body was found in an abandoned pigsty. He also was sentenced to death for killing the two Florida State students in Tallahassee in 1978.

dates through appeals, has been called a suspect in as many as 36 deaths.

Around 5:30 a.m., the final preparations began with a prison official shaving Bundy's head and right leg, where the electrodes were later placed.

When Bundy entered the chamber at 7:01 a.m., wearing a light blue shirt and dark blue pants, he looked frightened but walked directly to the electric chair. After being seated he nodded to his attorney and minister and mouthed words to them.

Forty-two people witnessed the execution from behind a plexiglass partition. They included 12 official witnesses, among them a state representative and three state attorneys; 12 reporters; and 18 other people, mostly corrections officials.

More than 100 people supporting the execution and about two dozen against milled around outside the Florida State Prison. At 7 a.m. a small group of death penalty supporters lit sparklers and firecrackers and cheered, while opponents silently held candles and then held a memorial service.

Within a half hour of the execution, a hearse carried Bundy's body out of the prison to Gainesville for an autopsy.

The execution brought a sigh of relief in the LaConner, Wash., home of Vivian Rancourt, whose daughter, Susan, was among Bundy's victims. "Good," Mrs. Rancourt said when told Bundy was dead. "The only thing I can say is thank God, it's finally over."

Bundy, who dropped out of law school after a year, is believed to have stalked young women near college campuses, shopping centers and parks in the West and Northwest, targeting those with long, dark hair, parted in the middle.

Carter Breaks Tie On Airport

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Greenville Mayor Ed Carter, wielding his newly acquired voting privilege, on Monday cast the crucial vote needed to approve additional local funds for the future expansion of the Pitt-Greenville Airport terminal.

With city council members Ruffus Huggins and Mildred Council voting against further monies for the expansion and with council member Bill Hadden absent, the resolution stalled with only three affirmative votes cast by the council. Four votes were required for passage.

However, the mayor stepped forward with his controversial voting powers and submitted the required fourth vote, approving the city's commitment for an additional $45,000 towards the terminal expansion.

Requesting the funds Monday were Pitt-Greenville Airport Manager Jim Turcotte and Airport Authority Chairman Jack Duffus.

Turcotte explained that the terminal expansion has increased from a project costing an estimated $700,000 to a project estimated at $1.3 million.

In a letter to City Manager Greg Knowles, Turcotte explained, "during the course of design development for the facility with our architects and consultants, it was determined that the Airport Authority's original concept established in 1987 to add 6,500 square feet fell short of accommodating the unprecedented growth we have experienced."

"To handle this growth and our future expectations, the Federal Aviation Administration guidelines indicated that an expansion of approximately 11,000 square feet was warranted. These guidelines were followed and incorporated in the design causing the total projected costs to increase."

Turcotte said the authority has been successful in securing about 85 percent of the additional $600,000 from state and federal sources. However, local contributions, consisting of both county and city funds, of approximately $90,000 was still lacking.

Turcotte requested a commitment from the city for its share of those local funds, or $45,000.

Turcotte indicated the project cost figures were still preliminary, saying the actual cost amounts would not be known until the opening of bids sometime in mid-March.

To date, the city council has committed $120,312.50 in city funds for the terminal expansion. Ms. Council said she would not vote for the additional $45,000 request, indicating an expansion of the terminal might subsequently lead to the prevalence of jet travel at the airport.

"Deep down in my heart, I cannot at this point provide any more support where the airport is concerned because before we know it, a jet port is going to be right here in the middle of Greenville," she said.

SBI Studies Winterville Police Two Officers Fired, Third Restricted After Dispute Over Ticket

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The State Bureau of Investigation is investigating allegations of wrongdoing in the Winterville Police Department, an SBI official said today.

"We have been requested by (Pitt County District Attorney Tom) Haigwood to look into certain matters regarding the Winterville Police Department," SBI Chief Investigator Bill Dowdy said in a telephone interview from his Garner office.

"The investigation has begun," he said. "It's just hard for me to tell you how long it will take or when it will be over."

Winterville Police Chief Lester

Smith dismissed two officers Saturday morning for what he called disciplinary reasons. The officers, Harold Evans of Winterville and Ralph Whitehurst of Greenville, had both been with the force less than seven months and were on the standard one-year probationary period.

Smith said the officers went over his head and took complaints straight to the town's Board of Aldermen when they had no authority to do so.

A third officer, Tony Summerlin of Winterville, who has been with the force 14 months, may be fired at the next meeting of the aldermen, which is set for Feb. 13, Smith said.

Summerlin, who said he told the chief he will not resign, has been restricted to desk duty, leaving only

Smith and part-time trainee Michelle Rhodes to patrol Winterville.

After Whitehurst said he observed Alderman Bobby Crawford of Winterville speeding last Tuesday, he and the other two officers claim Smith ordered them not to ticket any of the town's aldermen or their family members unless it was a felony offense. When the three objected to that policy — and to other practices of Smith's — they claim they were fired.

Dowdy said he could not comment on any specific allegations and upon completion of the inquiry, the matter will be turned back over to Haigwood, who will decide whether to take action.

Haigwood also said he could not comment on specifics: "We've received a complaint and it's being looked into."

Winterville Mayor E.C. Hines, Alderman John G. Weathering and Alderman Crawford denied any policy that exempts town officials from receiving tickets, but Hines also said the officers' actions may not have been suitable for a small town like Winterville.

"I never have been a ticket man myself, no way," Hines said Monday night at an interview at his home. "There are times you have to give tickets. But, in small towns, you're better off and you keep all the community closer together, if your

Chief Says Police Auxiliary Will Patrol

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Winterville Police Chief Lester Smith said today he plans to utilize auxiliary police officers to compensate for the loss of two officers fired Saturday morning for disciplinary reasons.

"The citizens should have no alarm ... I have a full complement of police officers," Smith said today in a telephone interview from his office. "The town is patrolled and protected 24 hours a day."

Smith fired Harold Evans and Ralph Whitehurst for disciplinary reasons, saying the two went over his head and contacted town aldermen with grievances when they did not have the authority to do so. Both had been on the force less than a year and were still on the standard probationary period.

Another officer, Tony Summerlin, who had been with the department about 14 months, said he has been restricted to desk duty and told he may be fired next month.

The three men claim Smith ordered them not to ticket any aldermen or members of their families, and they have complained to Pitt County District Attorney Tom Haigwood. At Haigwood's request, the State Bureau of Investigation is looking into the allegations. Smith denies any wrongdoing or special treatment to town officials.

With only himself and part-time trainee Michelle Rhodes left to patrol the town, Smith said he opted to hire two auxiliary police officers: Virgil O'Neal of Bell Arthur and Wayne Williams of Winterville.

O'Neal has worked as an auxiliary officer since 1979, Smith said, and Williams is an experienced detective with the Greenville Police Department. "With the auxiliary officers, the coverage hasn't changed. It's 24-hour coverage," he said. "I feel a whole lot more comfortable with the (auxiliary) officers. Between the two officers, they have years of experience."

Smith said O'Neal and Williams were to let him know today how their schedules are arranged, and he will complete his work schedule after that.

Area law enforcement agencies also have a mutual agreement to help other departments in the case of an emergency, Smith said. Brooks Oakley, chief deputy with the Pitt County Sheriff's Department, said his department has always assisted area towns with major crimes, and now deputies will also answer other calls until new officers are hired in Winterville.

Winterville Mayor E.C. Hines said he feels the town is just as safe, even if only two officers are on staff.

"When we were down to one policeman, people in this town were better satisfied than they have been since ... It doesn't bother me a bit in the world. People in this town don't want too many policemen, and they don't want no Highway Patrolmen."

"That's the trouble ... you can't go out and hire what you really need in a small town," Hines said. "You send your people to community college to get certified and they train to be Highway Patrolmen. When they start, all they think is they can't do any police work unless they've got a car, radar and all this stuff. And that's not small town police work."

Inside the Winterville Police Station hangs a sign that reads: "Rule No. 1, the boss is always right. Rule No. 2, if the boss is wrong, see rule No. 1."

Wheelchair-Bound Arsonist Attacks Art In Vatican

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VATICAN CITY — A man in a wheelchair tried to set fire to a 16th century painting by Raphael in the Vatican Museum today by setting ablaze a flammable liquid he tossed at the painting, Vatican officials said.

Museum guards restrained the man, quickly extinguished the flames, and prevented the work from being damaged, said Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro.

The Italian news agency ANSA said police identified the man as Thomas Lange, a 31-year-old West German from Berlin who had been living in Italy about a year. Earlier, Navarro said the man spoke only English.

The incident occurred in the Vatican Picture Gallery, which contains some of Raphael's most famous works. Navarro said the man's target was the Madonna of Foligno, painted from 1512 to 1513.

Navarro said the man, who had been noticed by guards in the museum in previous days, struggled up from his wheelchair, took out a thermos and tossed a liquid toward the painting.

The liquid landed on the floor and wall beneath the painting, and the man then tossed a lighted match to set it ablaze, Navarro said. He said the flames did not reach the painting.

Navarro described the man as "showing signs of being handicapped, also mentally."

Museum officials took down the work to check for possible smoke damage. It was to be back on display Wednesday.

Navarro said the man was also carrying two spray bombs of the type used for personal defense and another bottle of an unidentified liquid.

The 10-by6½-foot canvas the man tried to damage depicts the Madonna with child seated on clouds above a sphere surrounded by cherubs. Beneath are Saints John the Baptist, Francis and Jerome. In the distance are the Umbrian town of Foligno.

The most serious vandalism against a Vatican work of art occurred in 1972 when Hungarian-born Laszlo Toth battered Michelangelo's famed Pieta with a hammer inside St. Peter's Basilica.

Toth, who screamed "I am Jesus Christ" as he attacked the statue, broke off the Madonna's left arm and veil and dented the left side of the face.

The masterpiece was fully restored and is now protected by bulletproof glass in the basilica.

Panelists Say State Should Change Law To Give Parents More Control

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Parents are responsible for debts, damages and other results of rebellious behavior of their 16- and 17-year-old children, yet they cannot legally compel these same children to live in their homes, curb their alcohol and other drug use or otherwise follow family rules, several speakers said Monday night at a Greenville public hearing on substance abuse.

It was pointed out that North Carolina is one of only three states with a court system that recognizes youth as adults at age 16. All of the speakers except one argued that the law should be changed to put control of children back with parents and to close a gap in services offered for 16- and 17-year-olds.

The speaker who differed was Keith Knox, crime prevention officer at East Carolina University. He said drug dealers now use 14- and 15-year-olds as "mules" to pick up and deliver drugs because they know the law will be more lenient with them if they are caught. He believes if the law is changed, 16- and 17-year-olds will be similarly used.

Knox said youthful offenders

Probation

ASHEVILLE (AP) — An Asheville woman who was convicted of involuntary manslaughter in the death of her 5-year-old daughter last May has been accused of violating her probation by using cocaine and marijuana, court documents say.

Tausha Luciata Swepson, 22, tested positive for cocaine and/or marijuana in September, October and November, according to the Buncombe County Probation Office. Traces of the drugs were found in six samples submitted, the office alleges.

Illicit drug use violates the sentence Judge Robert Gaines gave Ms. Swepson Sept. 20 after she pleaded guilty to involuntary manslaughter. He gave her a four-year suspended sentence and ordered her not to use illegal drugs, not associate with anyone who uses them.

The violation charges will be heard in Buncombe County Superior Court Feb. 13. They could result in her suspended sentence being activated.

worry less about breaking the law before they're 16 because they know the consequences won't be as stiff as those after they're 16. He believes that raising the legal majority age will increase the crime rate.

The law that makes children legal adults at 16 when they're still emotionally children puts parents on the defensive, said James Mastriani, substance abuse program coordinator of Brynn Marr Hospital in Jacksonville. He said his program and others in this state are not sufficient for many children addicted to substances. There is a crying need, he said, for long-term care facilities in this state for adolescent substance abusers. He said many youth need at least a year of care and counseling to be free of addiction to substances.

Dr. Julian Keith, Brynn Marr medical director, echoed Mastriani's sentiments. He said the children he sees are "exceptionally sick, many even with anti-social behavior. These patients are quite different from substance-abusing adults with their co-dependent spouses. They come from families that are much sicker. They and their families need long-term assistance and it should be available in this state, regardless of economic or social levels."

Keith said he also is disturbed about "lax standards for accreditation of adolescent substance abuse care centers." He said the ratio of staff to patients is sometimes 1-10 when it should be no less than 1-6. He said exacting standards also are needed for every person who works with adolescent substance abusers.

Too, Keith blasted medical schools in this state, saying that chemical dependency is the most treatable of all chronic diseases, yet it's one to which no medical school that he knows of gives significant time and energy in their curriculums. "I know of no other disease about which medical schools know so little," he said. "They, like so much of the rest of society, are still treating addictive disease like a moral issue. Yet it is the number one cause of morbidity and the number three cause of death in this nation."

Roy Jones, father of a 17-year-old who is in prison in western North Carolina, expressed his dismay that North Carolina has no better plan for dealing with the behavior of youth under the influence of addicting drugs than to send them to prison. He said he knows his son committed breakings and enterings to buy drugs, but that he would like to work for better ways to deal with this kind of behavior in children.

Jane Emerson, a counselor at the Mary Frances Center in Tarboro, said she works mostly with adolescents and is upset every time she has to send her patients "back to the same playpens and the same playmates. We all need to work together to come up with better support for our children once they have treatment for substance abuse so so many won't return to it."

Mary Ann Selby, a parent of a teenager not yet 16, said she and her husband have already incurred debts of more than $120,000 for treatment for substance abuse for their daughter that has done "absolutely no good." She cautioned the professionals present to "be careful when you set up treatment centers. Make them effective ones. Don't let them be just money-making ventures like the one in Florida where we ran up so much debt."

Mrs. Selby made the point that unless children are rebellious enough to be under court control, their parents' hands are tied in trying to deal with them. She expressed appreciation for the Toughlove organization that has given her the support of other parents in similar situations.

There is no Toughlove group in Greenville, said Vickie Skladanowski, national area representative for the group. She said she would help begin one if there is sufficient interest. She said the Toughlove organization seeks to help develop cooperative families — that it is not anti-kid, as some people seem to think.

Mrs. Skladanowski agreed with several other speakers that "Nothing victimizes families in North Carolina like the current law." She said there are virtually no resources in this state for 16- and 17-year-olds. She, too, called for "reasonable and affordable long-term care for adolescents."

Jamie Norton, a former substance abuse program developer for the state who is now employed by the Mary Frances Center in Tarboro, said she feels that adult denial is a major contributor in the cause of the "giant killer of kids" problem we have in this country. "These are children" she said, "who had baby aspirins popped in their mouths from the time they were born, who see their parents and others they look up to drinking and drugging whenever they want to feel a little better.

"We've got to start limiting the number of drinks we serve at parties. We've got to break out of our denial, face our own shortcomings. And we've got to let our legislators know that we know how they're voting and we will talk about how they're voting."

Several speakers pointed out how few were present for this hearing on a topic that affects one in every three families in the country. Including the speakers, there were only about 30 persons present.

Bills Will Be High

In spite of the recent sunshine and warm days, things may look a little cloudy to Greenville Utilities' customers when they get their January bills, according to George Reel, customer assistance supervisor for the utility.

The higher bills, Reel said, are due in part to a longer billing period. "The usual billing period for GUC customers is about 30 days. But because of holidays and rainy weather delayed our meter reading schedule, some customers are being billed for 34 or more days this month."

Reel said the normal meter reading schedule was thrown off by the Christmas, New Year's and Martin Luther King holidays, and 12 days of rain in January.

"Even when it rains, we try to go out and read as many meters as we can in between showers," said Donnie Paramore, GUC's meter superintendent. "But there were four days (Jan. 9, 10, 12 and 13) when it rained continuously and that really put us behind."

The good news for GUC customers is that next month should be a relatively short billing period, Reel said. "In February, if the mild weather holds out, the shorter billing period should allow customers some relief from high bills."

Welder-Generator Rig Reported Stolen

Investigators said 11 thefts, including a trailer-mounted welder and generator valued at $3,000, were reported to Greenville police Monday.

Officer R.E. Jones said the welder-generator was taken from Greenville Overhead Door at 207 Watauga Ave. in a break-in reported at 8:07 a.m. and $1,480 worth of property, including a video cassette recorder and camera, were taken from an equipment room at Pitt County Memorial Hospital's Gaskins-Leslie building in a break-in reported at 1:44 p.m. According to Officer T.L. Forrest, three bags of change were taken from Video Wizard at The Plaza mall in a break-in reported at 6:37 a.m.

Officer R.L. Forrest said a compact disk player worth $300, two speakers worth $700 and some change were taken from Monk's at The Plaza mall in a break-in reported at 8:44 a.m., while Officer R.E. Jones said a router and door planer were taken from a Superior Construction Corp. trailer at the intersection of Third Street and Roundtree Drive in a break-in reported at 10:09 a.m.

Officer L.C. Overby said $385 worth of property, including a purse and several cassette tapes, were taken from a vehicle parked at the intersection of Third Street and Rotary Avenue in an incident reported at 10:19 a.m. and $575 worth of clothes were taken from a car parked at 308 Student St. in an incident reported at 11:06 a.m. Officer K.L. Hadnot said a video cassette recorder was taken from 41 Riverview Estates in a break-in reported at 10:40 a.m.

Officer R.G. Mendenhall said a pair of shoes were taken from the Rack Room at the Buyers Market at West End Circle in an incident reported at 5:50 p.m., while Officer C.G. Alphin said a wallet was taken from the Family Dollar Store on North Memorial Drive in an incident reported at 8:16 p.m.

According to Officer J.L. Moody, a television set, two .12-gauge shotguns, a pellet gun, a .22-caliber rifle, a .22-caliber pistol, 10 pairs of pants, 10 wool sweaters valued at $50 each and a pair of cowboy boots were taken from 1953 White Hollow Drive in a break-in reported at 10:03 p.m.

Alternatives to Gallstone Surgery

Gallstones are formed when an abnormally large amount of cholesterol is secreted by the liver and crystallizes in the gallbladder. An estimated 20 million Americans have gallstones.

Historically, surgery was the only way to rid the gallbladder of these stones. But stone-dissolving medications and alternative procedures are now available.

Recently the U.S. Food & Drug Administration approved ursodiol, a prescription drug that dissolves gallstones. Ursodiol, a bile acid derivative, destroys small-to-medium sized stones that do not contain calcium and cannot easily be seen in x-rays. This new medicine reduces stones to a liquid that easily passes through the bile ducts into the small intestine. It is prescribed for non-emergency and high-risk surgical candidates. It is well-tolerated and has few side effects.

Some stones can be broken down without medicines through the use of shock wave lithotripsy. With this nonsurgical method, stones are pulverized to a powder. Stones found in the common bile duct occasionally can be dissolved with an infusion of a cholesterol solvent medicine. Removal of stones can be accomplished by inserting a probe with a small wire basket into the duct.

Officers Say Drug Help Available For Asking

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Law enforcement officers in Pitt County said they're willing to help educators fight the drug problem in the county schools. But, they have to be asked.

Law officers of the Greenville, Farmville, Bethel, Winterville and Ayden police departments and the Pitt County Sheriff's Department met with the Pitt County Board of Education during its workshop meeting Monday night at Bethel Elementary School. The officers discussed their perception of the drug problem in the schools and their relationships with school officials in their areas.

Jamaicans in the county are selling and distributing drugs, said Kerry Wicks, the narcotics supervisor with the sheriff's department.

"Their target ... (is) high school-aged students who take pride in being a part of their team," he said. The students could make from $500 to $2,000 a week. "It's very hard for them to turn that down."

At least 14 high school students in the county have been identified as participants in drug activities, he said.

Students have been threatened with weapons and "shot-up houses" to keep them in line, Wicks said.

Calls from school officials to the sheriff's department have resulted in the arrest of students for having drugs and weapons — knives, shot guns and rifles — at school, Sheriff Ralph Tyson said.

But some school officials who are aware of the situation are not very vocal because "they're not wanting to create a disturbance with you all here," he said. "They're not wanting to be put in that situation."

Information that is shared by teachers and other school officials has led to the identification of students involved in drug activities, Ayden Police Chief Tim Phillips said. "We're able to substantiate what we're getting with other sources," he said.

Generally, the relationships between officers and school officials are good, the officers said.

"If they have a problem, they call us," Farmville Police Chief William Waters, said of the school officials in his area.

But principals and other school administrators are naive about what they can do when they suspect drug activity within the schools, the officers said.

Principals only must have a reasonable cause for searching the school for drug activities, Phillips said. "We've got to have probable cause. We just can't go in and do it indiscriminately."

But, "the schools should feel free to call law enforcement for assistance and know they're going to get it," he said.

"Any type of drugs in the school is a problem," said Capt. Randy Nichols of the Greenville Police Department.

The Greenville department has a sergeant and five officers assigned to drug investigations, he said. "For a city the size of Greenville, that's a lot of manpower. We have a big problem."

"Other than the schools, we don't target the user," Nichols said. "We handle too many cases to target the user" on the streets. But, "the school and the street are two different things."

The officers said they're able to help the schools in decreasing the drug activity on campuses in several ways.

Many of them are participating in the Drug Abuse Resistance Education program, which teaches fifth-graders about the effects of drugs. Phillips said the Ayden department also is seeking funds to initiate a juvenile delinquency prevention program for kindergarten through eighth-grade students in their area schools.

In addition, the county has a Labrador retriever, bought through the efforts of the municipalities, that is trained to detect marijuana, cocaine and heroine, said Wicks, who works with the dog. The dog continuously is trained in locating drugs in varying situations at least three days a week.

The Greenville department also has bought a dog, which is expected to arrive in a few weeks.

The officers also said they would be willing to teach educators about what they can do when they suspect drug activity. Phillips suggested they begin by reading "What Works — Schools Without Drugs," published by the U.S. Department of Education.

Waters said a real deterrent would be stiffer sentences for drug offenders, such as giving life sentences to those who sell drugs to minors. "These people are targeting our children," he said. "I think it's time that we as citizens target them."

In related matters at the meeting, Dr. William Smith, president of the Pitt County Council on Substance Abuse, suggested that student assistance and employee assistance programs be established in the school system.

Board member Frank Grooms said the board agrees with the objectives of the council, but "the problem we have is the funding of those objectives."

The board also discussed the Employee Assignment and Transfer policy that will be presented for approval during the regular board meeting in February.

Economic Gap Between Races Growing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The nation made no progress in reducing economic disparities between blacks and whites during the Reagan years, and blacks face increasing misery from poverty, crime and drugs, the National Urban League reported today.

The report, "The State of Black America, 1989," is the organization's 14th annual assessment of the status and conditions of blacks in America.

"The new Bush administration will need a clear understanding of the large magnitude of the problem of economic disparities as a precondition to finding effective remedies," David H. Swinton said in the report's summary of economic conditions.

"No progress has been made in reducing the longstanding economic disparities faced by blacks during the Reagan administration," Swinton, dean of the business school at Jackson State University in Mississippi, wrote. "In fact, racial inequality in American life actually increased by many of the standard indicators."

At a news conference releasing the report, John E. Jacob, president of the National Urban League, said he was encouraged by President Bush's selections of what he called a "very centrist Cabinet." He called on Bush to establish as a goal moving black Americans toward economic parity with whites.

"We call for a decade-long massive effort," Jacob said. "That effort would amount to a national investment in the future."

In a grim assessment of the outlook for black children in America, Marian Wright Edelman wrote that compared with 1980, black children are more likely to be born into poverty, lack early prenatal care, have a single mother, have an unemployed parent, and not go to college.

A black baby is three times as likely as a white baby to be born to a mother who has had no prenatal care, and is more than twice as likely to die during the first year, she said. A black male teenager is six times as likely as a white male teenager to be a victim of homicide, she said.

"Millions of black children today live in a desolate world where physical survival is a triumph, where fear and hopelessness reign, and where the future holds no promises and few opportunities," said Edelman, president of the Children's Defense Fund.

In another section, the report said the number of blacks enrolled in four-year colleges has declined since 1980, while other minority groups showed increases.

The report said black families experienced "sharp social and economic setbacks during the 1970s and 1980s," after unprecedented gains during the 1960s.

It said the poverty rate for black families in 1987 was higher, at 30 percent, than the rate in 1969, 28 percent. The number of black families in poverty was up 700,000, it said. Three times more blacks were unemployed in 1988 than in 1969, the report said.

The report cited increases in the proportion of female-headed black families over two decades and "a shrinking in the size of the black middle-class since 1978."

Increases in use of drugs, drug-related crime and gang violence have destabilized many black families and caused homicide rates among blacks to reach record levels, according to a chapter written by Robert B. Hill, a consultant to the league.

"The disproportionate surge in deaths among blacks has resulted in the first declines in black life expectancy since 1962," Hill wrote.

He said life expectancy at birth rose among whites from 75.3 to 75.4 years between 1984 and 1986, but for blacks the corresponding figures declined from 69.7 to 69.4 years.

Evans said that sign illustrates how the department operates under Smith. And the recent firings, Evans said, have left the town without adequate police protection.

"But the boss is not always right, anywhere you go ...," Evans said. "I'd like to know what the citizens of this town have to say about having no police protection."

Martha Deaver, who has lived in Winterville off and on for four years, said she has always liked Smith, and she was surprised to hear of the allegations against him. But she is also worried about her safety.

"I'm worried about not having any police protection," she said. "(Smith) can't work 24 hours a day."

Edna Barber, a Winterville business owner, said she felt the citizens need to know exactly what occurred within the department.

"It's not like we're upset with the chief. We're not upset with the mayor. We just want some answers. What is going on?" she said.

In the past, Ms. Barber said officers have locked the door of her business on nights she has forgotten to secure the building. That is an important part of small-town police work, she said, and she hopes the town will have enough manpower available to see that residents continue to benefit from such personal touches.

Inmate Stabs Maury Guard

MAURY — A correctional officer at the Eastern Correctional Center, stabbed four times by an inmate Saturday, was released from Pitt County Memorial Hospital Monday.

Pete Barnett, director of the prison, said Robert Payton of Greenville was stabbed three times in the back and once in the left side of the head, just behind his ear, by inmate David Adkins of Reidsville, who is serving a life term for second degree murder.

Barnett said Adkins used "a drill bit ... made into what we call a shank, a homemade knife," to attack Payton.

As a result of the incident, Barnett said, Adkins has been charged with assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill and assault on an officer.

policemen can be good public relations men.

"If somebody's doing wrong, stop them and talk to them. You'd be a lot better off. You don't have time to spend all your time in courtrooms. It means extra men," Hines said.

But Hines said he believes the accusations from the fired officers are false.

In an earlier interview Monday, he said that Evans and Whitehurst had often complained about the quality of their equipment, time sheets and other "petty stuff."

"It just left the impression they wanted to be boss and intended to take the bosses' job. That's the way I interpreted it," Hines said. "It looked like Evans was trying to get the chief's job. All of it was petty stuff ... they were after. It was nothing serious."

"I think the chief is doing a good job ... and we're well pleased with his work," Hines said. "(The Board of Aldermen) had no problem at all. The town board was satisfied."

Evans said Saturday morning Hines had scheduled a special meeting of the aldermen for Monday night, but no town officials came to the meeting hall at the 7:30 p.m. starting time. Evans, Whitehurst, Summerlin and about 30 of their supporters waited outside the building for about an hour.

Winterville business owner Suzie Bowen said she has received three tickets in Pitt County in the last year, and she was upset when she heard allegations that aldermen were not to be ticketed.

"I was ticked off," she said. "I went to court. I paid (my tickets) off. I don't think it's fair that just because you're an alderman that you're exempted from the law. And I don't think it's fair to ask the policemen to make that choice."

Ms. Bowen and another Winterville business owner, Edna Barber, said Smith has appeared to try to improve the police force in the past, and they said the aldermen could have pressured Smith to create the policy.

Evans said he objected immediately when Smith told him of the policy.

"(After being ordered Thursday not to ticket aldermen or their family members), I told Lester Smith that it wasn't right, that there's nobody above the law," Evans said. "No, sir. I was not mad (at being fired). The chief made the mistake. I didn't."

Evans and Whitehurst have retained Greenville attorney Nelson B. Crisp and they say they will probably move forward with a lawsuit unless they are reinstated to the force. Mrs. Crisp said Monday she could not comment on the situation.

"We want some things done in this town, (and they) are going to be done, or, yes, we're going to proceed with (a lawsuit) .... Before you can fire a man or anything else, you need proof that he's done something legally wrong. We have that proof in the tickets."

"The problem with this town is they want to operate 30 years in the past and it doesn't need to be that way any more," Evans said.

Smith, a military man for 24 years, said he just wants to get on with the business of policing the town.

"They violated the primary directive of a police officer: going over the chief's head when they were told not to," Smith said Monday morning in an interview at his office. "They did something I have told them not to. They did it anyway, which is itself a violation of the disciplinary code."

"I'm not here to grind axes .... As far as I'm concerned, they did it. The knew they were doing it, and it's over .... My concern is for the town and the publicity," Smith said.

Smith also said he would not allow officers to let most citizens speed and then single out town officials for ticketing.

"Everybody is going to be treated the same," Smith said. "I don't operate that way."

Evans denied he and the other officers were singling out town officials for tickets.

Last week, Whitehurst said he clocked Crawford traveling 47 miles per hour in a 35 zone. He did not pull him over, but he motioned with his hand for him to slow down. Because he had previously been told by other officers that town officials were considered off limits, Whitehurst said he told Smith of the incident. Two days later, he said, came the order not to ticket aldermen.

On Friday night, Evans and Whitehurst contacted the mayor and on Saturday morning they contacted Weathington, they said. Later Saturday they were called to the station and dismissed.

Evans said when he gave a verbal warning for speeding to Weathington's wife last September, Summerlin told him the next day to be careful because Smith did not like the practice.

Weathington denied that he received any special treatment. His 18-year-old son has been given a written warning for speeding, and he said he stands just as good a chance as any other Winterville resident of receiving a traffic ticket.

He said he was not surprised to hear the accusations from the fired officers because the board has criticized them in the past for "childish behavior," including spending too much time outside the city limits and speeding through town in police cars for no apparent reason.

Crawford said he believes the officers are immature and were upset by the criticism from the board members.

Facing Facts

City Caught By Fast Pace Of Technology

The Greenville City Council doesn't need admonition for having to purchase a new computer system in a relatively short time after it purchased the present one. The council members fully recognize a mistake was made.

In the rapidly changing world of computer technology, the present system was superseded by a new model of computers almost from the time it was installed. It happens to governmental units as well as private industry. It tells anyone dealing with computer installations the best approach is to look forward rather than back.

The current city system will do the work it was designed for, but two new IBM AS/400s will do it far better and with less monthly maintenance, a study done by the East Carolina University Bureau of Business Research showed. It left city officials lamenting the choice of the older equipment which was based on a more limited study.

"We tried to make chicken salad out of chicken feathers and that's where we are," Mayor Ed Carter commented.

Other council members expressed their concerns about having to buy new systems so soon. The new equipment will utilize terminals and printers that are a part of the present system and the city hopes to realize some resale value from the old computer.

The changes in computer technology come with breathtaking swiftness, and the Greenville city government is not the only public entity which has found itself with expensive computers which have been replaced in short order with newly developed equipment.

The message to all government agencies should be to investigate thoroughly before purchasing computers. Data processors are here to stay. They are essential to government, business and industry. However, they should be purchased with the future in mind, and money spent to determine the data processing needs and the ability of the equipment to handle them is well spent.

To the editor:

I would like to commend Rep. Walter Jones Jr. and his support of new leadership in the N.C. House of Representatives. While I commend him and the other 19 Democrats in joining the 45 Republicans in ousting Liston Ramsey, I am dismayed that The Daily Reflector chose to criticize Rep. Jones in your Jan. 12 editorial. We are all aware Rep. Jones always votes in the interest of his constituents. Rep. Jones is truly an asset to our community and we should hope other lawmakers would follow his distinctive lead.

I was also interested in your criticism of Mr. Mavretic and his "flip-flops." As I recall, you never criticized Sen. "Turnaround Terry" Sanford when he flip-flopped three times on President Reagan's highway bill because he was "confused." You never criticized Bob Jordan when he flip-flopped on several of Gov. Martin's proposals. Obviously Sen. Sanford and Mr. Jordan share your own liberal views and you wouldn't want to hang your dirty laundry out to dry.

In November the voters re-elected Gov. Martin, elected Jim Gardner lieutenant governor, 10 new Republican representatives and three new Republican senators. The people spoke with their vote and it showed the people are fed up with "Good Ole Boy" Ramsey and his allies. We are tired of secret meetings that involve the wheeling and dealing of our tax dollars. That is why Joe Mavretic is the new Speaker of the House.

The time has come for The Daily Reflector to come to grips with reality. The winds of change are picking up momentum. If The Daily Reflector cannot sail with the winds of change, your paper may end up like Liston Ramsey — out in the cold!

To the editor:

May I express my sadness at the removal of some of Greenville's oldest trees at the southwest corner of Charles Boulevard and 14th Street, all for another asphalt parking lot and shopping center. Is there no compromise with developers, no civic sense of propriety?

The 19th-century poet Henry Bunner said that he who plants a tree "plants in sap and leaf and wood, in love of home and loyalty and far-cast thought of civic good — his blessings on the neighborhood." And the poet Lucy Larcom maintained that he who plants a tree "plants youth... thou shalt teach the ages, sturdy tree, youth of soul in immortality."

Surely you will recall Sergeant Joyce Kilmer, World War I poet, who never saw "a poem lovely as a tree." If these poets immortalized nature's creation of trees and the honor of those who plant them, what is there to be said of the developer who cuts down these century-old trees — whose numbers in Greenville are few and diminishing?

The tragedy of many people going after the fast buck is that they in the process destroy that which they seek ultimately for themselves and their children, a fable of the goose which laid the golden eggs — and the people who killed the goose — in other times.

My hope is that our elected officials will formulate policies that encourage development of the city, but recognize these trees as one of the city's most distinctive and irreplaceable natural resources.

New Demographic Realities

BOSTON — In the early 1970s, I was among that wave of young professional mothers who felt privileged as well as stressed, lucky as well as guilty, to create a life that combined work with family. If you asked me then what I wanted from the workplace, it would have been simple. I wanted to be treated exactly like my male colleagues.

All my experience up to that moment had taught me that when a boss treated women differently, it was bad for women. The best course, it seemed to many of us then, was to mute the differences. The best way to mute the differences was to adopt a single work standard which was the male standard.

In that era — a generation ago in the way we calculate social change — our toehold in the work world was so tenuous, our welcome so guarded, our status so shaky, that it seemed risky to ask for more. Maternity leave, child care, flexible work hours — these would only strengthen the old-guard resistance.

That anxiety was shared even by such an ardent advocate for the advancement of working women as Felice Schwartz, the founder of Catalyst. She remembers being wary when asked by some people at IBM to come and speak for maternity leave. "I thought then, don't do it. You're going to make it more costly to employ women. Why pile on the extra costs? That was a period when women hadn't proved themselves as business resources."

"But now," she says, "it's different, it's really different." As if to prove that difference, Schwartz has written a piece on women in management for the current Harvard Business Review, a magazine that goes straight to the inner and mostly male circle of corporate leaders. She opens with this startling sentence: "The cost of employing women in management is greater than the cost of employing men."

Can you hear a collective gasp? This polished analysis — from a woman who has spent 27 years working for women and business is sure to stir anxiety among those who remember when these corporate heads were looking for just such a bottom-line reason to exclude women. "I assure you," says Schwartz, "that in the early days I didn't try to get corporate leaders to think about the costs of employing women."

If she dares to do that now — and she does — it's because she believes that women are empowered by the new demographic realities. As the population shrinks, so does the pool of talented workers. So bosses no longer have the option of excluding women from management. It is safe to calculate the costs of women and it is time to say that companies can cut those costs by going forward, not backwards.

Women in the top jobs cost more, Schwartz says because they are more likely to leave, taking the company's investment with them. They are also more likely to drop off the fast track.

They do these things for many reasons, she writes, "when female socialization meets the male corporate culture and masculine rules of career development..." But mostly they do it when it becomes too difficult for the vast majority of women who wish to balance a high-powered career and motherhood.

Schwartz argues — not on humanitarian or feminist grounds, but on the bottom line — that it's in the interest of business to make it easier for women. To protect their investments, business should respond to the needs of women and families: deal with maternity more openly and flexibly, take an active role in providing family supports and child care and alternative work schedules.

She writes: "Part-time employment is the single greatest inducement to getting women back on the job expeditiously and the provision women themselves most desire." Moreover, businesses should value and not ignore those women who choose to stay on a plateau.

I am more than a bit uneasy with the divisions that Schwartz makes between two groups of women. She labels one "career-primary" and the other "career-and-family." That distinction is not as distinct in real life. It may justify the new two-track system with its fast-lane men and a few women above; with most mommies and a few daddies below.

But I find her tack refreshing, even daring in the way it restates the old workplace issues. She tells corporate heads: "Look at the costs of maternity, study it. Gasp. And then realize that no matter what you do, it's worth it."

If her words find a receptive audience, then it represents a wholesale change, a coming-of-age for women in business. What we have talked about as personal needs are also business needs. In the long run they don't increase costs, they cut them.

Such a message comes at a time when every corporate leader is talking tough. It comes at a time, too, when women are more comfortable talking about gender differences in our lives and values. Can flexibility become the new standard of an efficient and effective workplace? Yes, if we can all get past that gasp.

Breaking The Deadlock

Richard Trumka

WASHINGTON — For more than a decade, Congress has debated various approaches to control the smokestack emissions from coal-burning utilities that are widely believed to cause acidic precipitation harmful to the environment. But, because lawmakers have been unable to balance the justifiable demands for a cleaner environment and the protection of jobs, Congress has remained deadlocked.

Late last year when a breakthrough seemed possible, a truly strange pair of bedfellows — the electric utility industry and the environmental lobby — joined forces to kill a reasonable acid-rain-control compromise. One of the new Congress' first tasks should be to pass that proposal.

Sen. George Mitchell, D-Maine, a leading proponent of tougher controls and an architect of the compromise, clearly articulated our common concern last Oct. 4 when he told the Senate: "A policy that imposes huge job losses in West Virginia or Ohio or Kentucky is no more acceptable than a policy that imposes heavy pollution damage on Maine or Vermont or North Carolina."

The compromise proposal is the first to mandate significant reductions while protecting the Midwestern and Appalachian coalfield communities, where 91 percent of our nation's coal miners work and live. According to the Environmental Protection Agency, the proposal would reduce annual sulfur-dioxide emissions by a total of 10 million tons in the year 2003 — very close to the year 2000, the target set by the acid-rain-control lobby, which refused to accept the compromise and dug in its heels.

The environmental lobby's efforts to block the proposal, when the rush to adjourn made a genuine breakthrough possible, guarantees only that emissions from coal-burning utilities, which account for 75 percent of all sulfur-dioxide emissions, will continue to pollute New England's environment for the foreseeable future.

The proposal would require utilities to install pollution-control equipment to remove the first 5 million tons of sulfur dioxide, with the cost shared by ratepayers from polluting states. To remove the next 5 million tons, technical controls would be encouraged, but not required. And contrary to the utilities' hysterical claims of 50 percent rate increases, the EPA has concluded that the average residential ratepayer in polluting states would pay little more than $1 per month toward the clean-up — consumers in other states would pay nothing. And, while the electric utility industry may have put off its own day of reckoning, public impatience ultimately will lead Congress to enact an even harsher bill, without provisions to smooth the transition to stricter emission standards.

By discouraging utilities from switching fuel supplies, the proposal defends the Midwest and northern Appalachia from the long-term economic devastation threatened by previous acid-rain-control bills. By protecting the only means of employment of 30,000 of our nation's coal miners, the compromise also safeguards nearly $3 billion in irreplaceable annual income that is the economic lifeblood of coalfield communities.

The compromise has been unfairly criticized on two counts. Like the utilities, low-sulfur-coal interests anxious for a windfall continue to argue that sufficient coal is available to reduce emissions without the use of control technology. In doing so, they callously gloss over the unacceptable human cost that widespread fuel-switching would cause. The disruption of as much as 130 million tons of current annual coal production would displace tens of thousands of coal miners and turn hundreds of coalfield communities — where skilled workers now work and pay taxes — into economic ghost towns.

And senators from western, low-sulfur-coal states have falsely charged that the proposal unfairly tilts markets to protect eastern coal at the expense of western production. Their real problem with the compromise is that their region — whose coal production already is expected to double between 1980 and the year 2000 — does not further gain.

By contrast, the United Mine Workers, which represents miners in every coal-producing region from Virginia to Wyoming and from New Mexico to Montana, firmly believes that acid-rain legislation need not and should not disrupt current coal markets. As a corollary to Mitchell's statement that control advocates should not solve a problem in New England while creating a new one in the Midwest and Appalachia, we have consistently argued that acid-rain legislation should not benefit one coal region at the expense of another. In fact, moderate growth is expected in all coal regions in the absence of an acid-rain bill, and there is little change forecast under the compromise.

Coal produces nearly 60 percent of the nation's electricity. With serious questions remaining about the cost and safety of nuclear energy and with limited supplies of natural gas, America cannot afford to turn away from its most abundant energy source. By the same token, states that are downwind of polluting sources have a right to demand that coal not be burned without pollution-control equipment on most, if not all, of the nation's generating plants. This is entirely consistent with current law, which, since 1979, has required scrubbers on all new utilities.

Because he understands the importance of breaking the deadlock on acid rain, Mitchell approached all the parties in the debate with the sound idea that regional interests could, in fact, be balanced — and he succeeded. If special interests again kill an acid-rain compromise, don't look for coal miners to be among the usual suspects.

IN THE STATE

Graham Cited

RALEIGH (AP) — Commissioner of Agriculture James Graham was presented a plaque Monday honoring him for his 40 years of service in state government.

The award was presented by Sen. Terry Sanford, D-N.C., who appointed Graham to the agriculture post during Sanford's term as governor.

In that slaying, Fayetteville police have jailed 36-year-old Brenda Lee Geddie of Fayetteville on charges of first-degree murder.

Adjutant General

RALEIGH (AP) — Brig. Gen. Nathaniel Robb Jr., commander of the 30th Infantry Brigade, has been appointed adjutant general of the North Carolina National Guard by Gov. Jim Martin.

Robb, an assistant secretary in the Department of Crime Control and Public Safety, succeeds Maj. Gen. Charles Scott, who is retiring. The appointment is effective March 6.

Concurrent with his assuming the office of adjutant general, Robb will be promoted to major general.

Robb will be succeeded in his Crime Control post by E.B. Jackson, who has been special assistant to the secretary for citizens affairs since November 1986. Jackson will be responsible for the National Guard, the Division of Emergency Management, the Civil Air Patrol, Butner Public Safety and the Crime Prevention Division.

Guard Stabbed

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — A Piedmont Correctional Center guard who was stabbed with a homemade knife is in satisfactory condition, and another wounded guard was expected to return to work this week, officials say.

Otto Withers, 45, was charged Wednesday with two counts of assault with a deadly weapon, with intent to kill, inflicting serious injury.

He is accused of stabbing guards Steve R. Yost and Jack Ross Jr. on Jan. 9 at Piedmont, a medium-security prison in Salisbury.

Yost, who was stabbed 14 times in the chest and back, is in satisfactory condition at Rowan Memorial Hospital. Ross, who was treated at the same hospital for nine stab wounds in his back and chest, has been released.

Withers was transferred to Central Prison in Raleigh Jan. 12 and placed in solitary confinement in a maximum security cell. He will appear in Rowan Superior Court on Tuesday.

Indicted

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — A Winston-Salem man faces 19 additional charges of sexually abusing teen-age boys after the Forsyth County grand jury returned 30 indictments against him Monday.

Investigators have accused Ricky Martin Vernon of molesting 12 boys over the last seven years. The indictments say that the boys ranged in age from 12 to 15 years old. Police and prosecutors say that the investigation is continuing.

Vernon, 35, is free on a $100,000 bond on the initial charges.

Martin Says State Employees, Teachers May Get Pay Increase Earlier Than 1990

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Representatives of teachers and state employees reacted cautiously to comments by Gov. Jim Martin that they probably will get a pay raise before April 1990 as tax collections pick up and the General Assembly finds ways to cut spending.

"I'm certainly pleased to hear there's some possibility that something can be done," said Karen Garr, president of the North Carolina Association of Educators. Members of her group demonstrated against Martin's pay plan Saturday in front of the Executive Mansion.

"We want him to do whatever's necessary to fund public education the way it ought to be funded," Ms. Garr said.

Martin said in an interview he was confident the state would reap a "healthy bonus" in capital gains tax payments resulting from the RJR Nabisco sale. If that one-time windfall is big enough, and if legislative subcommittees save enough money through cuts as they study Martin's proposed budget for current government operations, the raises could be implemented earlier, he said.

"I think we will have a better pay increase than the one that I've offered, but I couldn't put it in my budget" because it is unclear how much extra money there will be, the governor said in an interview on Monday.

Martin has recommended a 5.7 percent raise for teachers and a 4.5 percent raise for other state workers.

The governor spoke in the wake of an outcry from groups representing teachers and state employees following Martin's State of the State address to the Legislature last week.

In the speech, the governor formally presented his budget plan for 1989-91, recommending no pay raise for the 1989 calendar year because of what he says is a temporary slowdown in revenue growth.

He said revenues probably will have picked up enough by April 1990 to implement the raise and keep it intact through the 1990-91 fiscal year, which will begin July 1, 1990.

Kay Wijnberg, president of State Employees of North Carolina Inc., described the governor's statements as "encouraging news."

"But it's not solid enough to cause us to back off our strong lobbying efforts with the General Assembly," Ms. Wijnberg said. "Our plan is to ... keep the pressure on."

Martin said the NCAE could have helped its cause by supporting a plan he floated in December. It called for a one-year slowdown in implementing the eight-year, $800 million Basic Education Program, which would save enough money to start the pay raise July 1.

Martin dropped the plan in the face of strong opposition from the Advisory Budget Commission and legislative leaders.

NCAE's leaders "knew that I was considering this and they never came to talk to me," Martin said. "They didn't want to make a commitment to try to help me do it. They'd rather come after the budget is offered and then be critics."

Ms. Garr said the NCAE leadership did not know about Martin's alternate plan until the ABC turned it down. "He didn't float it with us," she said.

Martin said in the interview Monday that it will take several months to determine how big a windfall the state will receive from the RJR Nabisco sale and how much can be saved through budget cuts.

He said he preferred to let legislative committees identify potential cuts during their review of the budget instead of recommending them as part of his spending plan.

"We'll work with them to do that," he said. "But it could be counterproductive if in my budget I just set out a couple of specific targets. It would focus all the attention on those ... targets and not on others."

"More important, it would build up a political reason for the legislative majority to oppose those cuts rather than to support them. ... If they can find some savings and vote for it, they'll get credit for that, and I'll be a part of supporting and applauding them."

Mavretic Says 'Best And Brightest' House Members Moving To Front

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — House Speaker Joe Mavretic says the "best and brightest" Democratic legislators are rising to positions of leadership under his plan for reorganizing the chamber.

Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, announced the composition of four additional committees Monday night. He is halfway through the process of naming chairmen and members of the committees that will handle proposed legislation in the 1989-90 session.

All chairmen of major committees thus far have been among the 20 Democrats who joined the coup that drove former Speaker Liston Ramsey from power.

Rep. Sam Hunt, D-Alamance, perhaps the most outspoken critic of Ramsey's leadership, was named chairman of the Infrastructure Committee. Speaker Pro Tem Don Beard, D-Cumberland, was named chairman of the Ethics Committee.

Rep. Betty Wiser, D-Wake, was appointed to lead the Human Resources Committee, while Rep. Donald Dawkins, D-Richmond, received the chairmanship of the Committee on Government.

"From this point forward, let it be said the best and brightest of the majority party have a chance to be all they can be," Mavretic said at a news conference.

The chairmen will "act as overseers of the process, making sure all bills receive a fair and thorough hearing," he said, but the power will be dispersed throughout the standing subcommittees. "That is democracy and it's healthy."

Mavretic supporters have been named chairmen of all six of the committees whose membership he has announced thus far. He has adhered to the agreement reached with Republicans under which they will receive 20 of the 50 subcommittee chairmanships.

Ramsey and the Democrats who were closest to him, such as Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, have received no committee or subcommittee chairmanships.

Mavretic again refused to release the agreement between the 20 House Democrats and 45 Republicans that led to creation of the bipartisan coalition that elected him speaker.

The North Carolina Press Association has pushed for release of the document. Mavretic has said its contents will become obvious as he announces the appointment of committee and subcommittee chairmen.

Part of the agreement was that Republicans would receive 20 of 50 subcommittee chairmanships under a revamped committee structure.

Asked whether he intended to make the document public, Mavretic said, "At this time I do not. I see no need to."

He said an attorney had advised him that the agreement was not a public document but declined to identify the attorney.

In other legislative action, Mavretic endorsed a bill introduced by Rep. Walter Jones, D-Pitt, that would bar the House speaker from serving in the post more than two two-year terms. Ramsey held the post an unprecedented four terms.

"I think that eight years in any major position in North Carolina is too long, and I think if I had my druthers, I would have the governor, the lieutenant governor, the speaker of the House and the president pro tem of the Senate all limited to four years," Mavretic said.

House Appropriations Committee

Chairman Dave Diamont, D-Surry, urged chairmen of the panel's subcommittees to be aggressive in searching for ways to save money as they begin a review of Gov. Jim Martin's 1989-91 budget.

"You're going to run into some political bombshells," Diamont said in his first meeting with the chairmen.

He acknowledged that "there's not a whole lot of room to make cuts" in some areas of the budget and said Martin's projections about revenue availability for the second year of the biennium might be too rosy.

For that reason, he said, legislative leaders are not seeking across-the-board cuts and will target some programs for deeper reductions than others.

The House and Senate appropriations and finance committees were to receive initial briefings from legislative staffers Tuesday and Wednesday and will begin a line-by-line review of the Martin spending blueprint Thursday.

Battle lines over abortion were drawn as about 100 pro-choice demonstrators held a candlelight vigil outside the Legislative Building. The event marked the 16th anniversary of the Supreme Court ruling that women had a constitutional right to choose abortion.

Tobacco Inspection

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department said Monday it will begin charging a fee for the voluntary or industry-solicited inspection of tobacco for export.

J. Patrick Boyle, administrator of the department's Agricultural Marketing Service, said the fee will be $0.0025 per pound, or a rate of 25 cents per 100 pounds of tobacco. He said the fee will recover costs of salaries and other expenses.

The new fee, scheduled to take effect today, does not affect charges for any inspection or grading service for tobacco used domestically, he said.

Soldier Shot

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — A 21-year-old Fort Bragg soldier was shot to death and a 42-year-old man was fatally stabbed in Fayetteville in unrelated homicides, officials said.

Wendell Jones, a member of Service Battery, 1st Battalion, 39th Field Artillery, was killed at about 9:30 p.m. Sunday. A second soldier, Charles Miles, 21, Company C, 1st Battalion, 39th Field Artillery, was shot in the left forearm and taken to Womack Army Community Hospital.

At 10:10 p.m., 42-year-old Curtis Willis of Fayetteville was stabbed in the chest in front of Kimbrell's Furniture Co.

Willis died a short time later at Highsmith-Rainey Memorial Hospital.

Bankers Expect Economy To Slow

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Most of North Carolina's largest banks enjoyed a robust year of profits in 1988, but 1989 will be a challenge because the rate of the state's economic growth is expected to slow, bankers said.

Slower growth makes it more difficult to generate loans — the primary sources of banks' income.

"We are cautiously optimistic about 1989," said W. Harold Parker Jr., controller at CCB Financial Corp. in Durham. "Interest rates will remain where they are or rise over the next six months ... and the markets are overbuilt in real estate."

Still net income at the state's three largest bank companies — NCNB Corp. and First Union Corp., both in Charlotte, and Winston-Salem-based First Wachovia Corp. — is forecast to rise by 10 percent, according to a study by Hermitage Capital Corp., a New York investment banking firm.

"The outlook is good," said John Medlin Jr., chairman of First Wachovia Corp. of Winston-Salem. "The economy looks to grow a little more slowly, but still be positive." In that environment, he says, banks should increase deposits, loans and profits.

To offset slower loan growth, many North Carolina banks plan to depend more heavily on income from services as checking accounts, real estate, insurance and brokerage operations.

First Union did just that last year. Fees from such services, including those at its large mortgage banking company, rose 15 percent last year, even though the bank company's overall net income grew only 5 percent.

NCNB Corp. of Charlotte said its 1988 earnings rose 51 percent to $252.5 million, while First Union Corp. of Charlotte reported a 5 percent gain to $297 million and First Wachovia Corp. of Winston-Salem reported a 38 percent gain to $244 million.

Smaller Carolinas banks shared in the good times. Through Sept. 30, North Carolina banks recorded a 15 percent gain in profits to $522.5 million.

But both bankers and analysts are becoming more concerned about problem loans. One reason is that the nation's economic expansion has entered its seventh year, an unusually long period of growth that raises the possibility that a recession may be near.

Pro-life demonstrators mass in front of the White House Monday awaiting Bush's phone call

Washington Police Arrest 153 Pro-Life Demonstrators

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Activists who blocked the entrances to area abortion clinics on the anniversary of the Supreme Court decision legalizing abortions say they are carrying on the tradition of the 1960s civil rights movement, but a leader from the era disputes that contention.

Police arrested 153 people Monday in one of the "Operation Rescue" protests outside a clinic in the city. The arrests were a sideshow to the larger event, a peaceful march and demonstration by about 67,000 people at the Supreme Court to mark the 16th anniversary of the Roe vs. Wade decision.

The event, called the March for Life, received a boost from President Bush, who told the anti-abortionists by way of a telephone loudspeaker in a park near the White House that the decision "was wrong and should be overturned."

Vice President Quayle also met with Nellie Gray, the leader of the March for Life, and other anti-abortion leaders. "I couldn't think of a more appropriate group to be meeting with," he said.

District of Columbia police on Monday arrested the 153 protesters outside Hillcrest Women's Center in northwest Washington and charged them with blocking access to the building or crossing police lines, said police spokesman Sgt. Joe Gentile.

Police said doors at the clinic were locked for about two and a half hours because of the protest.

In Glen Burnie, Md., the Gynecare Center closed after about 300 demonstrators gathered at the clinic entrance and refused to move, but no arrests were made, said Sgt. Joe Bisesi of the Anne Arundel County Police.

"We'll stay as long as we have to," said demonstrator Kathy Kelly before the closing. "We hope to keep this place safe for the day, which means no killing of babies and no exploitation of women."

Both protests were organized by a group in suburban Gaithersburg, Md. known as "Rachel's Rescue," which is part of a national effort by abortion foes to use tactics of the 1960s civil rights movement to stop women from having abortions.

But at a press conference in Washington, civil rights activist Julian Bond read a statement for Planned Parenthood saying the "rescue" operation is wrong in likening itself to the civil rights movement.

He said the civil rights movement was an effort to extend constitutional rights while "today's anti-abortionists, quite to the contrary, are attempting in their Operation Rescue protests to deny American women their constitutional right to freedom of choice."

Though in past years, protesters have provoked arrest by crossing police lines at the Supreme Court as part of their demonstration, this year they were orderly.

Most of the marchers stopped only briefly at the court to chant or sing hymns before continuing on to buses taking them home or to the offices of their congressmen.

The anti-abortionists are hoping that court review of a challenge to Missouri's abortion law would lead to greater restrictions on abortion.

As Bush and Quayle aligned themselves with the foes of abortion, the president's choice for Secretary of Health and Human Services reportedly was telling members of Congress he does not want to see Roe vs. Wade reversed. Dr. Louis W. Sullivan "opposes public funding for abortions, but he does not want to overturn a woman's right to make a choice," a senior Republican lawmaker told The New York Times.

Sullivan nearly lost his cabinet nomination last month when he told an interviewer he personally favored a woman's right to an abortion.

Bush, in addressing the group, voiced his support for a constitutional amendment against abortion.

"I think America needs a human life amendment and I think when it comes to abortion, there's a better way — the way of adoption, the way of life," Bush said.

Bush Sets A Hectic Pace In First Full Day On Job

By Merrill Hartson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — On his first full working day, President Bush met with Vice President Dan Quayle, gave a pep talk to his senior staff, phoned Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev and British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and addressed anti-abortion activists.

That was all before lunch. By the end of the afternoon, Bush also had visited Quayle at the vice president's desk in the Old Executive Office Building next to the White House, presided over the first meeting of his Cabinet and attended to routine paperwork in the Oval Office.

By the time, he finished his day's work, Bush had put in 11 hours and 16 minutes.

If Monday is any indication, Bush will start work earlier than Ronald Reagan did, and likely stay later in the Oval Office each day. Reagan usually worked from around 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Here is how the president's day went, according to his public schedule and conversations with White House officials:

—7:21 a.m. Bush has breakfast in the Oval Office with Quayle. John Sununu passes through and Quayle administers the oath of office to the chief of staff. (An account of Quayle's day by press secretary Dave Beckwith says breakfast was at 7:15 a.m.)

—8:00 a.m. Bush gets a briefing from CIA officials.

"The CIA briefing is a daily intelligence briefing that they gave to President Bush during his years as vice president, and it is their intelligence assessment of the world situation that day," said press secretary Marlin Fitzwater. President Reagan did not have daily CIA briefings.

—8:20 a.m. Bush attends formal swearing-in of his senior staff in the East Room. He tells aides that "we all now are about to embark on a really great adventure." Bush says the work will be arduous, but that "these long hours can result in a country with more opportunity for all."

—9:00 a.m. Bush meets with national security adviser Brent Scowcroft in the Oval Office.

Fitzwater said Scowcroft's briefing is broader in scope than that provided by the CIA. In his role as coordinator of foreign policy matters in the White House, "he presents the presidents with the views of all the foreign policy agencies on various issues facing the president," the spokesman says.

—12:10 p.m.: Bush talks by telephone to leaders of the anti-abortion demonstration in the capital city, where the focus is reversal of the 1973 Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion on demand.

"I'm confident that more and more Americans every year — every day — are hearing your message and taking it to heart," he tells the activists.

—12:15 p.m.: Bush has lunch with his senior staff in the Roosevelt Room. He also has telephone conversations with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, among others, to thank them for their good wishes.

—1:30 p.m.: Bush drops by Quayle's office in the Old Executive Office Building. The president watched as Quayle was photographed signing his name in the historic vice presidential desk that Bush also used as vice president and that he and predecessors had signed.

—2:15 p.m.: Bush attends meeting of his Cabinet and mostly listens as Sununu discusses with the president's new team "an overview of major themes and initiatives to be taken in the weeks ahead." Sununu does most of the talking after Bush introduces the agenda.

—4:45 p.m.: Bush has staff time, attends to routine paperwork in the Oval Office.

—6:37 p.m.: Bush returns to the White House residence for dinner.

Diet Pills Sweeping U.S.

Doctors Invent 'Lazy Way' to Lose Weight

U.S. Gov't. Approves Patent Claims for New Diet Pill

BEVERLY HILLS, CA (Special)—An amazing new weight loss pill called "fat-magnet" has recently been developed and perfected by two prominent doctors at a world famous hospital in Los Angeles that reportedly "guarantees" you steady fat loss and calorie reduction by simply taking their tested and proven new pill.

The U.S. government has just approved the doctors claims for a hard-to-get patent that confirms "there has never been anything like their fat-bonding pill process before." It is a totally new major scientific breakthrough and is revolutionizing the weight loss industry.

You Can "Eat Normally"
Best of all, "you can continue to eat your favorite foods and you don't have to change your normal eating habits. You can start losing fat and reduce calories from the very first day, until you achieve the ideal weight you desire without exercising."

Flushes Fat Out of Body
The new pill is appropriately called the "fat-magnet" pill because it breaks into thousands of particles, each acting like a tiny magnet, "attracting" and trapping many times its size in undigested fat particles. Then, all the trapped fat and calories are naturally "flushed" right out of your body because they cannot be absorbed.

Within 2 days you should notice a change in the color of your stool, caused by the fat particles being eliminated.

"Automatically" Lose Fat
According to one of the inventors, Dr. William Shell, heart specialist and associate professor of medicine at UCLA medical school, "the new fat-bonding process is a 'lazy way' to lose weight because the pills alone 'automatically' reduce calories by eliminating dietary fat. It is 100% safe and not a drug."

The fat-magnet pills are already sweeping the country with glowing reports of weight loss from formerly overweight people in all walks of life who are now slimmer, trimmer and more attractive again.

Now Available to the Public
If you are trying to lose 20, 50, 100 pounds or more, you can order your supply of these "no-risk" highly successful fat-magnet pills directly from the doctors' exclusive manufacturer only (includes optional calorie-reduction plan for even better results). Send $20 for a 90 pill supply (+$3 handling), or $35 for a 180 pill supply (+$3 handling), to: Fat-Magnet, 9016 Wilshire Blvd., Dept. W634, Beverly Hills, CA 90211. # ADA Says Liberals Fared OK In House-Senate Races

By Jim Drinkard
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — An advocacy group says that despite George Bush's liberal-bashing in last year's campaign, liberal politicians and issues fared well in the elections and are poised to make their mark in the 101st Congress.

The group, Americans for Democratic Action, based its prediction in part on an analysis of the voting records of members of Congress in 1988, which showed the House of Representatives with a "liberal quotient" of 52 percent, the highest figure since ADA began rating voting records in 1947.

In the Senate, the average score was 48 percent on the key liberal-conservative issues selected by ADA for its ratings.

The group's national director, Marc Pearl, noted that senators who were up for re-election last year averaged higher liberal scores than the rest of the Senate, "and their liberal voting records proved not to be a liability."

An exception Pearl did not mention was Lowell P. Weicker Jr. of Connecticut, at 90 percent the highest-scoring Senate Republican, who was beaten last November by Democrat Joseph Lieberman.

"Because so many champions of social and economic justice have been elected and re-elected, and the Democrats have added seats in both chambers, the prospects for holding President Bush accountable on his campaign pledge to create a 'kinder, gentler nation' appear excellent," Pearl said in a statement.

He noted that even Bush raised many issues during the campaign which the ADA considers part of its legislative agenda, including child care, education and environmental protection.

"In spite of the gratuitous rhetorical beating that liberals took during the presidential campaign, support for our agenda remained strong and solid, Pearl said.

Pearl also noted that in the Senate leadership, Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., who had a 55 percent ADA rating in 1988, has been replaced as majority leader by Sen. George Mitchell, D-Maine, who had a 95 percent rating.

"A new Congress and a new president have the responsibility to restore the social and economic balance that was so severely shredded during the Reagan years," Pearl said. "Given the results of 1988, we are optimistic that the 101st Congress will have the muscle to do it."

The ADA vote ratings for each chamber are based on a set of 20 floor votes on bills and amendments that the organization believes most clearly reflect liberal-conservative differences. Issues include civil rights, labor issues, women's rights, foreign and military policy.

Twenty-four House members, all Democrats, scored 100 percent, along with two Senate Democrats. Twenty-five House members, all Republicans, had scores of zero, along with 11 Senate Republicans.

Congress Studies Debt-Laden Deals

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan and at least a half dozen congressional committees all are worried about corporate America's debt binge of takeovers financed with high-interest junk bonds.

With a series of hearings on the growing wave of debt-financed corporate takeovers opening today, the new administration already is under pressure to come up with proposals to curb the buyouts.

Some economists worry that during a recession, highly leveraged companies would not have enough cash flow to keep up their interest payments to junk bond holders and other creditors and might pull other companies down with them.

The leadoff witness before the Senate Finance Committee is Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady, a former Wall Street investment banker who has called the use of junk bonds in corporate takeovers a "dangerous destabilizing element ... largely dedicated to unproductive purposes."

Since last fall Brady has had a team at the Treasury Department looking at whether the tax laws are encouraging companies to finance their expansions through debt rather than stock equity. The group also has tried to determine corporate vulnerability in the event of an economic downturn.

The Senate Finance and the House Ways and Means committees last week issued a report showing that corporate debt has climbed by $613 billion in the past five years while ownership equity has declined by $313 billion.

The report also said that the ratio of debt to equity in non-financial corporations has climbed from 30 percent to 46 percent from 1981 to 1987.

Fears about the vulnerability of highly leveraged companies were heightened last September when Revco D.S. Inc., the Cleveland-based drug store chain, entered Chapter 11 bankruptcy proceedings after defaulting on $700 million in bonds following a buyout. Despite the continuing booming economy, bankruptcies continue to climb — from 51 large companies defaulting on $11 billion in debt in 1984 to 87 companies defaulting on $21.4 billion in 1987.

"I think there's an appetite here to do something," Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the tax-writing Ways and Means panel, told reporters last week. "Something really should be done, particularly when we're seeing the junk bond abuse."

Bush two weeks ago ruled out direct government action to curtail the new tide of takeovers — most of them financed by borrowing huge amounts of money against the assets of the company being acquired through high-yield junk bonds.

But he left open the possibility of changing the way the tax laws treat stock dividends and the deductibility of interest payments on debt used to finance takeovers.

Marines Wind Up Tour Of Vietnam

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HO CHI MINH CITY, Vietnam — Six former U.S. Marines completed their 10-day tour of Vietnam today, making one of their last stops at an orphanage where they were serenaded with traditional Vietnamese songs.

The Marines were to leave Ho Chi Minh City for Bangkok, Thailand, en route back to the United States, where they will report their findings to government authorities.

They pronounced a success their goodwill visit, in which they called attention to the dangers of unexploded shells and mines in central Vietnam.

The ex-Marines had walked the battlefields and seen children trying to dig up shell casings buried in the red dirt of former U.S. bases. They heard reports of continuing casualties from the shells and mines.

Five of the men are former members of the 11th Marines, an engineer battalion that planted 100,000 land mines in the region to protect American bases more than 20 years ago.

The Marines had returned on their own to determine whether the mines and unexploded shells had been removed. They came as tourists but were given VIP treatment, staying at a government guest house in Dongha.

In Hanoi, they met with Nguyen Can, deputy director of the Foreign Ministry's North American Department, followed by dinner with the official.

The former Marines presented their findings to Can, who said he would relay the information to the proper authorities.

Robert Dalton, a 54-year-old freelance writer from Davidsonville, Md., said Can brought up the issue of establishing diplomatic relations with the United States.

Vietnam badly wants diplomatic relations, which likely would mean U.S. economic aid and the lifting of an American trade embargo. To this end, it has been opening its doors wide to American visitors.

"They talked about some things that shouldn't have been talked about in the meetings," Dalton said of the Vietnamese. "But it worked out good because they accepted our findings."

Gene Spanos, a 39-year-old police lieutenant from Rosemont, Ill. and the trip's organizer, described it as a "huge success."

"We've accomplished a couple of things," he said. "We've shown the Vietnamese that in the north there is a problem in the central area and they appreciate it."

He added, "If they want Vietnam veterans to come back here as tourists, many of the Marines that served up in those areas are going to want to go up in those areas and we want it to be safe."

For the former Marines, it was a journey into the past, to renew their youth and to pause on the battlefields to unfurl the Stars and Stripes and honor their fallen comrades.

"I think I lost about 20 pounds of emotional baggage I never knew I was carrying around," said Nate Genna, a 41-year-old maintenance worker from Boston.

Frank Noe, a 40-year-old firefighter from Stoughton, Mass., said, "We had a chance to do some good in this world. Not only that, to come back to a place where we grew up, where we became men."

Rice is prepared for survivors of the earthquake near the Soviet village of Sharora Monday

Hopes Fade For Finding Survivors In Soviet Town

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Rescuers probed with bulldozers and shovels today for survivors in the soggy mass of dirt and rock an earthquake sent crashing into three Central Asian mountain villages, but expected only to find bodies.

The official Tass news agency estimated 1,000 people were killed in slides loosened by the tremor as it struck a rich agricultural region of the Soviet republic of Tadzhikistan before dawn Monday.

"There is little hope (of finding survivors) because of the flood of dirt and mud," Erkin Kasimov, a spokesman for the republic's foreign ministry, said today. "But while there is any hope, the rescuers will keep working."

Official reports said more than 100 people were hospitalized in the Tadzhik capital of Dushanbe, 20 miles from where the Soviet Union's second devastating earthquake in two months had caused the most destruction.

Vitaly Zhukov, deputy head of the republic's official news agency, said 11 people died during the night in Dushanbe hospitals.

The Communist Party newspaper Pravda blamed the conditions for mudslides on heavy snows followed by a thaw in hills overlooking the stricken villages of Sharora, Okuli-Bolo and Okuli-Poyen.

The thaw moistened the earthen walls of canals that stretched down to the villages and when the quake hit, the rich earth loosened and Pravda said it "moved in a huge mass onto the villages" — about 1 1/2 to 1 3/4 miles.

"There is a danger of new mudslides in similar places in the event of a new natural blow," the paper said.

Pravda said previous experience had shown that the Soviet Union is careless in construction of buildings, especially in rural areas. However, it did not specifically blame poor construction for any of the deaths in the area about 1,800 miles southeast of Moscow.

Poorly constructed apartment buildings have been blamed for many of the estimated 25,000 deaths in the earthquake that struck northwestern Armenia Dec. 7. That quake registered 6.9 on the Richter scale.

The U.S. Geological Survey said Monday's quake measured 5.4 on the scale.

Rescue workers labored today under sunny skies in 50-degree temperatures in the three adjacent villages, digging with shovels, bulldozers, cranes and earthmovers, Kasimov said.

He said the quake and mudslide also damaged farms, homes, schools, stores and administrative buildings outside the three villages.

Zhukov said many of the surviving women and children had been evacuated, but some remained behind in hopes of finding relatives.

Rescue workers put up round reinforced tents and built small wooden huts for survivors and worked to restore communications and electricity to the area, he said. Food and fuel were also sent to the scene, Tass said.

Zaimiddin Nasreddinov, editor in chief of the Tadzhik news agency, estimated that about 600 people were killed in Sharora — almost the entire population.

The 40-second tremor was centered 20 to 30 miles southwest of Dushanbe, a city of more than 460,000 people, Tass said. The area is in the fertile Gissar district, a vineyard and livestock-raising center.

The earthquake unhinged a wall of loess at least five miles wide that buried Okuli-Bolo and much of Sharora, said Kasimov. Officials said most of the victims were asleep at the time.

Residents of Okuli-Poyen, apparently roused in time, fled in panic before the slide could reach their homes, Kasimov said from Dushanbe.

In Okuli-Bolo and Okuli-Poyen, "everything is destroyed — all the homes, the schools, the hospitals and clinics, the stores," Nasreddinov said.

Okuli-Bolo is a "heap of rubble" and the chairman of a local economic cooperative, Hairrulo Yuldashev, said the households of 70 peasant families were "completely demolished and buried by the landslide," Tass said.

The TV news program "Vremya" showed aerial footage of Sharora, with white roofs of buried homes peeking through the dirt like seashells scattered on a beach.

The Kremlin leadership sent condolences and promised aid.

Argentine Rebels End Camp Siege

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — Fourteen civilian commandos surrendered this morning after holding off hundreds of tank- and artillery-backed soldiers and police at an army base for a day, the government news agency said.

At least 25 people were killed in fighting after about 40 commandos, who the government said were leftist guerrillas, broke through the base's main gate in a stolen truck early Monday, authorities said.

The state-run Telam news agency said 13 men and one woman walked out of the base early this morning, their hands in the air and one waving a white shirt as a flag of surrender.

Sporadic shots and mortar rounds were heard for about an hour afterward, but two hours later all was silent. President Raul Alfonsin was en route to the scene, said his press secretary, Jose Ignacio Lopez.

The red brick officers' club in which the attackers holed up was virtually leveled by tank and mortar fire, and the woman who surrendered was wounded and carried out by two comrades, Telam reported.

Soldiers took the 14 into custody and entered the bombed-out officers club, it said.

Troops issued an ultimatum through loudspeakers to any other commandos who might be on the base in La Tablada, on Buenos Aires' western outskirts. Local news reports said some commandos had sniped at police and troops Monday from positions outside the base.

The commandos had been reported earlier as holding hostages, but reports today did not mention captives.

The battle was the most serious of its kind since an attack by the leftist People's Revolutionary Party and an allied guerrilla group on an army arsenal in 1975.

Miami Policeman Charged In Death

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Two manslaughter counts have been filed against a policeman whose fatal shooting of a black man ignited last week's racial riots, but a lawyer for one of the victims said the charges amount to a "whitewash."

Officer William Lozano, 29, was charged Monday, hours after the funeral for 23-year-old Clement Lloyd, who was shot to death on his motorcycle while being pursued by another officer for speeding. Lloyd's passenger, Allan Blanchard, 24, died from injuries sustained when the motorcycle crashed in the Overtown section.

The Hispanic officer, who has been suspended with pay since the shooting on the holiday for the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., surrendered Monday at Dade County Jail and left 30 minutes later after posting $10,000 bond, said John Hogan, chief assistant Dade County state attorney.

Also Monday, a special city panel reviewing the killings complained it lacked sufficient investigatory powers, and the U.S. Justice Department said it sent two prosecutors to Miami to investigate.

A government source in Washington, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said a grand jury could be impaneled as early as this week to study possible federal charges against Lozano.

Lozano could face 60 years in prison and a $30,000 fine if convicted of the charges — manslaughter with a firearm, said State Attorney Janet Reno. She said a thorough investigation found that murder charges were unwarranted.

"Based on the evidence and applicable Florida law, manslaughter is the correct charge," she said.

But Ellis Rubin, an attorney for Blanchard's family, said his clients were dismayed that Lozano wasn't charged with second-degree murder, which indicates malice was present in the attack and carries a possible life prison sentence.

"This practically amounts to a whitewash and we're very disappointed," Rubin said. "We're going to monitor this case very closely."

Ms. Reno also was criticized by Lozano's attorney, Roy Black, who said the officer acted in self-defense and was being made a scapegoat for political reasons.

Lozano was issuing a traffic ticket when he saw the motorcycle speeding toward him, authorities said.

According to Lozano's arrest warrant, a witness told investigators Lozano was standing in the lane opposite the motorcycle and stepped toward it before firing. The witness, Eddie Johnson, claimed Lozano did not try to get out of the way.

Lloyd was shot once in the head. The killing triggered three days of looting and violence in the predominantly black Overtown and Liberty City sections that left one man dead and 11 others wounded by gunfire. Fire officials estimated $1 million in damage from arson and looting.

Thank-You Scrolls Are Improper

Dear Abby: A girlfriend of mine is getting married soon and she's planning to have "thank-you scrolls" printed to hand out during the reception. These "scrolls" contain a message from the bride and groom thanking the guests for their gifts. I think this is a lovely idea — except they are doing it instead of sending personal thank-you notes.

When I told the bride I didn't think the scrolls were in good taste, she said she had already attended two weddings where this was done. Tacky?

Although personal thank-you notes take time, I truly hope these "scrolls" are not a new trend. Do you agree, Abby? — Thanks, But No Thanks

Dear Thanks, But No Thanks:

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

There is no substitute for a personal thank-you note for any kind of gift. And to send out printed "form" letters or hand out "scrolls" is improper.

Dear Abby: I want to give you and your readers the benefit of my own experience, which is worth a lot. My first husband, "Larry," appreciated unusual gifts, so for our first anniversary I had his name tattooed on my left breast, above my heart. Larry loved it. After 14 years of marriage, he died in an automobile accident.

Two years later I married "Mark," who never really liked seeing "Larry" over my heart, so I found a tattoo parlor and had "Larry" covered with a fancy floral design. It took a lot of doing, but it was well worth it.

Please, Abby, tell your readers never to have anybody's name tattooed on their bodies where it will show. One never knows what tomorrow will bring. — Mark's Wife

Dear Wife: Thanks for the wise counsel. It will be appreciated by tattoo fanciers who are not eager to hold still for additional needling.

Dear Abby: My husband and I are close friends with another married couple. We see each other frequently and usually have a great time together.

Very often, the wife will criticize or ridicule her husband in front of us — and others as well. This is obviously embarrassing for him, and it makes us feel very uncomfortable.

Is there anything we could say to avoid this in the future, or to break the tension when it does happen? Or should we just keep quiet and mind our own business? — Uncomfortable Friends

Dear Friends: Much depends on how close you and this woman are. If you are sufficiently close to speak frankly with her, tell her what you have told me. It would be the friendly and generous thing to do because most people avoid the company of those who make them uncomfortable.

Kitchen Appliances Save What?

At Wits End

Erma Bombeck

If there's a picture of me with this column, take a good look at it. Does it look like a woman who couldn't go on breathing without a salad shooter? Or a home nurturer who could never find real happiness without a greens spinner that takes the moisture out of her lettuce? Can you imagine giving this person a crepe maker when she doesn't even sew?

Every time someone gives me a gift, it's for the kitchen. Just once I'd like to receive something that doesn't come with a warranty. In spite of the fact that inside this industrial-strength body is a shallow, materialistic airhead, I have received enough small appliances and gadgets to open my own store.

These little time-savers take more time than you think. Unless you wear all the appliances dangling from your waist on a utility belt, you have to get a ladder and get them off the top shelf somewhere. Then you have to wash the dust off and, finally, rummage through a drawer for the instruction booklet.

Under great pressure from my husband, I took my new salad shooter out of the box yesterday and brought out all the ammunition from the refrigerator I could muster. The first volley was fired in seconds. It all went so fast, I kept loading and reloading until finally I had shot out enough salad to cater a wedding reception for 200. When my husband walked into the kitchen, I surrendered my salad shooter and begged, "Stop me before I kill again."

"It's great to see you using something," he smiled. "You never did use the pasta maker I bought you." (Shows you what he knows. The drying rack is in my bathroom with little knee-high stockings drying on it.)

Year after year my mother patiently requests a gift that is endangered/has to be insured/has 10,000 fewer miles on it than she does. Tough biscuits. Her kitchen is a romp through a domestic Toys R Us.

For her birthday she got an automatic bread maker. When I visited recently, my dad, who is retired, was seated near the counter with his eyes glued to the little light on the machine.

"He's been there for three and a half hours," said my mother. "Reminds me of a dog we used to have who put his nose in the crack of the back door just in case someone opened it."

We watched him in silence. Between Mother and me, we have a world-class collection of electric knives, bagel slicers, steamers, slow cookers, popcorn poppers, egg poachers, wine kits, yogurt makers, thermostat spoons, blenders, mixers, ovens, candy molds, deep fryers, woks, taco warmers and sandwich grills.

"I got something for you," I said. She brightened. Together, we removed a page from a magazine advertising Passion perfume. We both hovered over the flap until I lifted it, releasing an exotic scent. Hurriedly, we rubbed it on our wrists before it disappeared.

My dad sniffed, "Mmmm... smell that yeast?"

It's not going to get any better.

NEW YORK (AP) — Prices were little changed in trendless early trading on Wall Street today.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials was up 4.29 to 2,222.68 as of 10 a.m. EST.

Advancing issues were about even with decliners, as 420 stocks rose, 438 declined and 572 were unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 19.92 million shares after the first 30 minutes of trading. Meanwhile, the energy futures market began the week with a selloff as the price of crude oil dipped below $18 a barrel and refined petroleum products lost more than 2 cents a gallon. Technical factors and profit-taking were mostly blamed for Monday's decline, which some analysts called an expected "correction" following a recent strong rally fueled by confidence in OPEC's production-cutting pact.

The most actively-traded issue on the NYSE was AT&T, up 3/8 to 29 3/8.

Pacific Telesis was unchanged at 31 7/8 after announcing a fourth-quarter earnings gain.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks was up 0.15 to 160.28. On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down 0.38 to 317.65.

On Monday the Dow Jones industrial average fell 16.97 points to 2,218.39.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 5 to 3 on the NYSE, with 550 up, 909 down and 504 unchanged.

Big Board volume totaled 141.64 million shares, against 166.10 million in the previous session.

Bundy Dies In Electric Chair

Prosecutors said he often lured victims into his car by posing as police officer or making false requests for aid.

One of the women he admitted killing was Caryn Campbell, 23, of Dearborn, Mich., who was killed by a blow to the head while vacationing in Colorado in 1975.

"You never really forgive someone for something like that. You just try to put it behind you," her father, Robert Campbell, said Monday. "It's not important to me now. The thing I'd like to have back, I can't have."

Bundy's final appeals, including a series to the U.S. Supreme Court, were rejected Monday.

On Tuesday morning, Peck said, "The governor told the superintendent at the prison there were no stays, saying, 'On behalf of the countless victims of Theodore Bundy both dead and living, throughout Florida and the nation, I direct you to proceed to carry out the court-ordered sentence.'"

The execution was the 20th in Florida since it resumed executions in 1979; 106 murderers have been put to death in the United States since capital punishment was restored in 1976.

Bundy, known for his cockiness and arrogance, was "subdued and emotional" on Monday, said prison spokesman Bob Macmaster.

He met with a psychiatrist Monday evening as his attorneys filed requests to delay the execution.

Visitors also included James Dobson, a psychologist and Christian broadcaster, who said that Bundy had expressed "great remorse" and had "resolved his relationship with God."

Bundy wept openly during the interview, admitted he was a murderer and said society had a right to protect itself from people "with his weakness," according to Dobson, whose "Focus on the Family" is heard on 1,300 radio stations.

Residents of Lake City hoped Bundy's execution would help the community put the gruesome case behind them.

"It's sort of like the Super Bowl," Gerald Witt, mayor of the northern Florida town, said Monday of the execution. "It'll give everybody a feeling of relief, and make everybody smile, to know he's finally been electrocuted."

"He's destroyed so many lives ... it seems like he's just a living devil."

Bundy, who grew up in Tacoma, was linked to three dozen killings of young women. As the execution approached, he met with investigators from Western states and admitted killing eight women each in Washington and Utah and two each in Colorado and Idaho, authorities said.

"I think he was born to kill," said Bob Keppel of Washington's state attorney general's office, who interviewed Bundy during the weekend.

"I don't know if it was a bad seed or what, but boy, ... he was just totally consumed with murder. All the time. He had to be."

Bundy was the subject of five books and a television miniseries, "The Deliberate Stranger." A federal judge once called him "the most competent serial killer in the country at this time ... a diabolical genius."

Three psychiatrists appointed by Martinez waited at the prison Monday in case Bundy's attorneys raised the claim that he was mentally incompetent to be executed.

Israelis Kill Youth In Raid

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Israeli soldiers shot and killed an Arab youth in a pre-dawn raid on a West Bank village today, and the military announced that security agents had arrested dozens of members of an underground "army."

The raid on Habla adhered to the army policy of disrupting nationalistic activities on days of general strikes called by leaders of the 13-month Palestinian uprising.

Today's strike, called to protest harsh new army tactics for quelling the revolt, closed down shops in the West Bank and Arab east Jerusalem and paralyzed commerce in the Gaza Strip, where the army confined at least 200,000 Arabs to their homes.

The Shin Bet security service arrested dozens of Arabs suspected of belonging to the "Palestinian Popular Army", the military command announced today. Officials said the group was led by Yasser Arafat's mainstream Fatah branch of the PLO.

The radio did not mention what type or quantity of weapons were seized.

HEARING TESTS SET FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

Electronic Hearing Tests will be given Thursday and Friday.

Factory trained Hearing Aid Specialists will be at the Beltone Office in Greenville to perform the tests.

Anyone who has trouble hearing is welcome to have a test using modern equipment to determine if his or her loss is one which may be helped. Some of the causes of hearing loss will be explained and diagrams of how the ear works will be shown.

Everyone should have a hearing test at least once a year if there is any trouble at all hearing clearly. Even people now wearing a hearing aid or those who have been told nothing could be done for them should have a hearing test and find out if they are one of the many a hearing aid can help.

Hoosiers Slip By Michigan; Knight Credits Tough Slate

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Leave it to Indiana coach Bob Knight to leave no stone unturned against Michigan.

The 16th-ranked Hoosiers cut No. 10 Michigan down 71-70 in Big Ten play Monday night, then Knight took the knife and sliced into Bill Frieder's soft non-conference schedule.

The Hoosiers, playing the likes of Syracuse, North Carolina, Louisville and Notre Dame, lost four of their first seven games. Since then, however, Indiana has reeled off 13 straight wins, including all six Big Ten games.

"We had the snot knocked out of us early," Knight said. "We know what it means to lose big against good teams. But getting beat by a good team tells us what we need to do to beat those teams. That's really important."

"According to Dick Vitale's magazine, we played the fifth-toughest non-conference schedule over the last five years. That's what I want. We're not going to schedule someone who can't play. I don't care about losses in December. I just want to find out where ... we are."

At the moment, that would be first in the Big Ten and nicely on track for an NCAA tournament bid.

In the only other Top Twenty game, No. 2 Georgetown beat St. John's 75-64.

The Wolverines spent December toiling against the likes of Tampa, Northern Michigan and Youngstown State, including a loss to Alaska-Anchorage.

As a result, they started the Big Ten season with a lofty 12-1 record. But with January came a 3-3 conference record that has dropped them to 15-4 overall.

"We're still struggling at times," Frieder said. "We are still having breakdowns in our offense which is the result of our guard play. I'm tired of making excuses. I'm tired of talking about it. We have to get consistent guard play."

"I'm not going to panic. I still have faith in my kids. We're going to go on a mission. I'm not down in the dumps."

Following the Hoosiers' 84-71 defeat at Notre Dame, Knight went back to a three-guard offense. The trio of Jay Edwards, Joe Hillman and Lyndon Jones has started 19 games for Indiana over the last two seasons and the Hoosiers have posted a 19-1 record in those games.

"The thing is, you play with your strength and stay away from your weakness," Knight said. "Our strength is the ball-handling of Jones and Edwards."

Against the Wolverines, it also was the scoring of Edwards that carried the day. He scored 20 of his 28 points in the second half — five in crunch time.

"The difference in the game was Jay Edwards," Frieder said. "He was sensational."

Glen Rice had 28 points for Michigan. Indiana shot 55 percent while the Wolverines hit only 49 percent of their shots. Michigan also hurt itself by missing six of 15 free throws while Indiana sank 13 of 16.

Still, Michigan had two chances to win it in the closing seconds and couldn't cash in.

The Hoosiers led 71-70 when Edwards' off-balance jumper from beyond the free-throw line spun out of the basket.

Michigan got the rebound and called a timeout with 40 seconds remaining. When play resumed, the Wolverines ran the clock down to 15 seconds and called another timeout.

Terry Mills missed a baseline shot from the right corner, then Mark Hughes missed from the left corner as time expired.

Frieder said he wanted to win it at the buzzer so Indiana wouldn't have time to take a last shot.

"We had two good cracks at it and the shots didn't fall," Frieder said. "We've beaten them at the buzzer before."

Georgetown 75, St. John's 64
Dikembe Mutombo, a seldom-used sophomore, blocked a school-record 12 shots as Georgetown beat St. John's in a Big East game marred by a scuffle.

Jayson Williams, the leading scorer on St. John's, and John Turner began pushing and then swinging with 14 minutes left in the game. Both were ejected and, under conference rules, cannot play in their next Big East game.

Georgetown, 15-1 and 5-1 in the league, won its sixth straight game. The Redmen, who had won five of their last six at the Capital Centre, had their five-game winning streak stopped and fell to 12-5 and 4-3.

Mutombo had been averaging two blocks per game while backing up star freshman Alonzo Mourning. But Mourning got two quick fouls and the 6-foot-11 Mutombo, a native of Zaire, took over in the middle. His 12 blocks were two short of the NCAA record of Navy's David Robinson.

Mutombo blocked nine shots in the first half, during which St. John's made only eight of 34 attempts.

Edwards, Hill And Kelly Lead Pirates Over Navy

East Carolina Wins First Ever In Halsey, 70-63

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

ANNAPOLIS — East Carolina's 70-63 win over the U.S. Naval Academy Monday ended one streak, but kept another going.

The Pirates entered the game, their eighth played in Halsey Field House, without ever having won a game on the 31-year-old floor. Navy, on the other hand, brought a nine-game losing streak this year into the contest.

It was a situation where something had to give.

In the end, the Pirates placed four players in double figures to win the game and improve to 9-8 overall and 3-3 in the Colonial Athletic Association. Navy fell to 3-12 and 0-7.

"This game scared me to death," ECU head coach Mike Steele said. "Navy had lost nine games in a row with us coming in here, but we scouted them at James Madison and they had the ball with a chance to win late. In the Richmond game here (a 76-74 overtime loss) they had the game won and got beat in overtime. They've been in virtually every game."

The loss sends the Midshipmen back to the drawing board. It was also a school record 10th straight loss.

"We made some key turnovers down the stretch," Navy coach Pete Herrmann said. "We have to respond in the tough time. We're in every league game. Every game we're there. We've just got to make the key plays."

Senior forward Blue Edwards led the way for ECU with 21 points, while junior swingman Gus Hill added 13. Senior point guard Jeff Kelly and freshman Casey Mote had career highs of 12 and 10 points, respectively. Kelly also had 12 assists, also a career high, and the second best ECU single game performance. The school record is 13 shared by Walter Moseley and Ernie Pope.

"We really wanted Jeff to try and penetrate," Steele said. "Their ball pressure is really good, they really get after it. So if you get by some guys you've got some opportunities and Kelly was able to get by them and score some points."

In the opening 15 minutes of the game, the Pirates stayed even with the Midshipmen without points from Edwards, who leads the conference in scoring. Edwards, who wound up with 10 first half points, didn't score his first one until the 4:38 mark of the opening 20 minutes.

"Gus got 43 (points) up here last year and I think he felt this was his home court," Steele quipped. "But he got the ball early and it really helped us. People have been keying on Blue so much we needed to have someone else in there who could score and Gus was hot early and got us off to a good start."

It was the unsung heroes who kept the Pirates tight through the opening minutes.

After Navy's Joe Gottschalk opened the scoring with a 3-pointer, Hill knocked in the first four points for ECU to open up a 4-3 lead.

Kelly then added a layup to stretch the lead to 6-3.

Edwards' first points came on a 12-footer from the wing with 4:38 left before the half and put the Pirates up 26-25.

"I didn't notice any trick defenses set up to keep me from getting the ball," Edwards said. "I was just waiting until I felt I was open. I didn't want to force anything."

After Bobby Jones countered for the Middies at the other end, Edwards scored on an assist from Kelly, giving ECU a 28-27 lead with 4:05 left.

"Coach told me to try and penetrate more and make some offense happen," Kelly said. "The guys were getting open and when you can get it inside to someone like Gus Hill, he's either going to score or get fouled."

Navy battled back and grabbed a 33-30 lead on a turnaround jumper from Sam Cook with 2:09 showing on the clock.

But the Pirates rallied to score the final eight points of the half and

Illinois Takes No. 1 Position

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Illinois Coach Lou Henson, scrambling to regroup after the loss of a key guard, allowed little time for his players to bask in the glory of being the nation's top-ranked basketball team.

"I hope they ... at least have enjoyed it for one day," Henson said Monday, as the Illini moved into the No. 1 spot in The Associated Press college basketball poll. "Starting today, they won't have time to think about it because we have other things to do."

Henson said he would begin immediately making adjustments because of the loss of junior Kendall Gill, who broke a bone in his left foot during Sunday's 103-92 double-overtime victory over Georgia Tech.

Illinois, 17-0 and the only undefeated Division I team, received 62 of the 65 first-place votes cast and 1,296 points from the nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters.

The news about Kendall just about took away the emotional high that we had yesterday," point guard Steve Bardo said.

"The team is very down about that. Everyone else has to pick up the slack, and I think we'll do that."

Illinois, which had not held the No. 1 position for 37 years, took over from Duke — the only other team to occupy the top spot this season.

The last time Illinois held the No. 1 spot in the regular season was in the poll released on Jan. 22, 1952 when it took over the top spot from Kansas. The Fighting Illini held it just one week as they lost to DePaul four days later.

Illinois was No. 1 in the preseason poll for the 1952-53 season, but lost an early-season Big Ten game with Minnesota.

Duke had held the No. 1 spot in the preseason poll and in the first nine regular-season votes but the Blue Devils, 13-2, lost their first games of the season last week. North Carolina and Wake Forest beat Duke. Georgetown, Louisville and Oklahoma each advanced one place in the voting as did Illinois.

San Francisco Celebrates 49ers Super Bowl Victory

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — Cornerback Tim McKyer boogied atop a cable car and Most Valuable Player Jerry Rice waved from a vintage convertible Cadillac as 300,000 screaming fans welcomed home the San Francisco 49er Super Bowl superheroes.

"It was a great win, a great season. We're so proud of the 49ers in this city. We're known for a lot of things, and I'm glad sports is now up there with them," said an ecstatic John McGee, 21, who strained against a police barrier Monday under a shower of confetti tossed from offices along the Market Street route of the homecoming parade.

The San Francisco youth said what he really wanted was to touch the players, but couldn't get close enough. But his moment came when he held up a souvenir newspaper edition blaring "Team of the '80s" across the front and saw one of the players look at the paper and then smile at him.

"There was some eye contact," beamed McGee, whose voice was hoarse from screaming.

Coach Bill Walsh, his third Super Bowl victory of the decade safely under his belt and the game trophy clutched in his hands, roared in a convertible beside Mayor Art Agnos, who wore a red 49ers sweater. Sharing the car was team owner Edward DeBartolo Jr.

Quarterback Joe Montana, his wife, Jennifer, and their two daughters waved from the seats of one cable car, as dozens of police motorcycles and squad cars flanked the procession, lights flashing.

Retiring center Randy Cross videotaped the fans as they cheered with joy, while defensive back Ronnie Lott did a mock imitation of the "Ickey Shuffle" aboard another cable car.

"Three Super Bowls. The Niners are the team of the decade. They're awesome," said an unidentified young woman wearing a red 49ers cap and cheering the team at the foot of Market Street.

Joe Jachens, 21, said the 49ers are the best team ever — even better than the famous Pittsburgh Steelers of the '70s. "I think they'd kill them (Steelers) now," he declared emphatically.

Gov. George Deukmejian said in a statement that the team not only laid claim "to the 'Team of the 80s' designation, but proved to the world that California "is the state of champions."

"I salute the Super Niners, their management, coaches, and fans on a historic victory yesterday," he said.

Police said the celebration went well, without the broken windows, trashed police cars and other bedlam that accompanied 49er Super Bowl victories in 1982 and 1985.

"This is great," said Police Lt. Rich Holder. "In '82, it was scary. See all these officers? They're wearing soft hats. That wasn't the case in previous years."

But about 1,000 fans had gathered at City Hall, shouting, "We want Montana" and expecting to see the players on a reviewing stand. They were disappointed the team was a no show.

After the parade, the 49ers quickly boarded a bus and left for an undisclosed location on the advice of police who feared lingering fans would vandalize stores and public buildings at the parade's terminus.

"They should have controlled the celebration, not abandoned it," said Roger Strohmeyer, 28, who drove from Marin County expecting to party into the evening.

"It was too short. People came from miles around to watch and (the police) chose to abandon it rather than deal with it better," Strohmeyer said.

Police reported only one arrest and only one injury, a man who fell off a lampost.

An early-morning rain had threatened to put a damper on the homecoming, but the skies cleared by parade time, capping a celebration that began Sunday evening when fans began pouring into the streets by the thousands as Montana threw the winning touchdown pass to John Taylor with 34 seconds remaining in Super Bowl XXIII.

ECU's Savage Earns Weekly CAA Honor

East Carolina's Gretta Savage has been named Colonial Athletic Association women's Player of the Week. Scott Stapleton of Richmond and William Davis of James Madison shared the men's honors.

Savage, a senior center from Orangeburg, S.C., scored 30 points in two ECU games last week and pulled 24 rebounds. Against American on Saturday, she had 13 points and a career high 15 rebounds. For the week, she shot 67 percent from the floor and 86 percent from the foul line.

Stapleton, a junior forward from Lowell, Mass., scored 33 points, grabbed 10 rebounds, had seven assists and five steals in the Spiders' two victories last week. Stapleton scored a career-high 21 points in the Spiders' 75-73 victory over Marist.

Davis, a freshman guard from Washington, D.C., who broke into the Dukes' starting line up last week, scored 57 points in James Madison's three games. Davis is the leading freshman scorer in the CAA with a 14.7 point average.

Rose's Thompson Commits To The Pirates

Rose High's Don Thompson became third Rampant player to give a verbal commitment to play football at East Carolina next year, following the lead of teammates Tim Moore and Carlester T. Crumpler.

Thompson (6-0, 180) was a starter in the defensive secondary for the Rampants this year, helping them to their second straight Big East Conference title.

At ECU, Thompson will be joining his father, Donnie, who is the Pirates' linebacking coach.

In other recruiting news, ECU lost out on Burlington Cummings quarterback Chuckie Burnette and receiver Ray Griffin. Both had narrowed their choices to ECU, North Carolina and N.C. State. Burnette verbally committed to UNC while Griffin agreed to sign a grant with N.C. State.

American Nips UNC-Wilmington, 86-85

WASHINGTON — Dale Spears hit two free throws with 38 seconds left that helped American University recover after blowing a 12-point lead and beat North Carolina-Wilmington in a Colonial Athletic Association game on Monday, 86-85.

The Seahawks missed two chances in the last eight seconds to win the game, as Joe Cherry missed a jump shot from the top of the key and referees ruled Larry Houzer's 25-footer was shot just after the final buzzer.

American, 10-5 and 4-2, won its fourth in a row and its 13th consecutive game at home.

N.C.-Wilmington, 9-7 and 4-2, had a four-game winning streak snapped.

Houzer had 17 of his 19 in the second half as the Seahawks, down 63-51 with 13:52 left, came back to take a five-point lead with 4:50 left. Antonio Howard had 22 and Major Wiggins added 14 off the bench.

Daryl Holmes led five Eagles in double figures with 21 points. Draper added 20, Chuck West 16 and Brock Wortman 14.

Houzer had given N.C.-Wilmington their last lead, 85-84, when he hit two free throws with 1:45 left. The senior center then stole an Eagle pass but missed a three-footer with a minute to go.

Spears, who finished with 13, was fouled on a drive to the basket. Ron Draper, fouled trying to rebound Cherry's miss, failed on the first of a one-and-one opportunity for American to set up the shot Houzer swished through a split second too late.

ACC Honors Wake's McQueen As Top Frosh

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Wake Forest's Derrick McQueen, who scored 20 points in the Demon Deacons victory over top-ranked Duke on Saturday, has been named the Atlantic Coast Conference rookie of the week.

McQueen, a 5-foot-11, 175-pound guard from Darlington, S.C., grabbed five rebounds and had six assists as Wake Forest snapped a two-game losing streak with a 75-71 victory over the Blue Devils.

McQueen hit five of seven field goals, including both his attempts from 3-point range. He converted all eight of his free throw attempts.

Earlier in the week, McQueen scored 14 points, seven rebounds and five assists in an 82-64 loss to 15th-ranked North Carolina State.

Martin Crashes His Ford At Daytona

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Mark Martin crashed his Ford Thunderbird at more than 195 mph while testing Monday for the Feb. 19 Daytona 500, but the driver was unhurt.

Martin, of Batesville, Ark., had just run the best lap of the day around the 2.5-mile speedway at an average speed of 195.143 mph, when he cut a tire and spun into the concrete retaining wall on turn two.

"Mark's OK. He's just a little upset," crew chief Robin Pemberton said. "(He) luckily hit the wall with the back of the car first."

Measles Ground Five N.C. High Schools

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Basketball and wrestling teams from five Cabarrus County high schools won't be allowed to compete until at least Feb. 7 and may be done for the season.

Health Director Fred Pilkington gave five Cabarrus County schools permission Friday to resume their winter sports schedules provided that all games or meets were played behind closed doors — with only players, coaches and officials in attendance.

But Pilkington said Monday that he reissued the limited quarantine after two new cases of red measles were reported. Three more cases were reported to the health department Monday, Pilkington said.

Meanwhile, Rowan County Health Director Bert Hawley said Monday that no new cases of measles had been reported since Friday.

Hawley said that he will lift the quarantine and allow teams from five high schools — including North Rowan, Salisbury, South Rowan — to resume competition two weeks after the last reported case of measles.

If Rowan County gets through the next 10 days without another case, there is a possibility that teams could resume competition the weekend of Feb. 3. With conference basketball tournaments scheduled to start Feb. 27, however, and the North Carolina High School Athletic Association sticking to its limit of three games per week, it will be impossible for teams from Rowan County to finish their regular-season schedules.

In wrestling, Kannapolis Brown, North Rowan, Salisbury and South Rowan are scheduled to complete their regular seasons Feb. 2. Conference tournaments in the Central Piedmont 4-A and the Central Carolina 2-A are scheduled for Saturday, Feb. 11, and regional tournaments are scheduled Feb. 17-18.

Walsh, 49ers Look To Future

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — With or without Bill Walsh, the San Francisco 49ers will be a force in the NFL next year. And into the next decade.

Although Walsh might resign as coach and just handle front-office duties, the 49ers' organization is strong enough to survive and prosper. Just ask the man himself.

"The only way a team wins is through continuity of the organization," Walsh said Monday, hours after the 49ers beat Cincinnati 20-16 for their third Super Bowl title of the decade. "If you're struggling, get better players, don't just change coaches."

"People with the right chemistry all participate together and are involved in the decisions. We have worked well together for years. I think our staff is as good as any."

But it could be changing. Walsh has coached for 31 years, the last 10 with the 49ers. Although he says he remains enthusiastic, he likely won't stay on the bench.

Defensive coordinator George Seifert is one of the rising assistants in the league and, Walsh said, "I hope he's a head coach (next year). He sure deserves it."

Does he deserve the chance in San Francisco? If Walsh does step down as coach, a main proviso could be that Seifert takes over.

The 49ers have made the playoffs the last six years, even though they've been challenged by either the Rams or Saints throughout that span. The NFC West is the conference's toughest division and will get tougher for the Niners.

"The problem with an extended season, with the extra five weeks, is that you become emotionally spent," Walsh said. "It's tough to generate that enthusiasm again. The opposition is aware of it and wants to play you desperately. Don't you think the Saints and Rams and Falcons are gearing up to get at us because they think they're better than us?"

No team has been better than the 49ers in this decade, of course, even though they haven't won consecutive Super Bowls. And no quarterback has been more successful in the '80s than Joe Montana.

This victory was especially gratifying for the 10-year veteran, who has a new contract, guaranteed for three years, that pays him $2.5 million a season.

"This was really sweet after where we were earlier in the year," said Montana, the engineer of the remarkable 92-yard drive to glory against Cincinnati. "When we were 6-5 and had lost two really tough games, you couldn't even imagine this."

It's hard to imagine the 49ers without Walsh and Montana at the helm. But with Steve Young, one of the Niners' best athletes, as his understudy, Montana will have to face even more quarterback controversy questions if the team has a new coach.

"We overcame a lot this year," All-Pro running back Roger Craig said. "Not the least of it was the quarterback controversy."

In view of Montana's superb playoffs, however, Young figures to be a substitute for a while longer.

Craig had a magnificent season and is in the best shape of his life. Jerry Rice, the game's most dangerous receiver, also is approaching his prime. John Taylor, whose only reception on Sunday was the 10-yarder that won the game, might be the complement at split end that Rice has never had in San Francisco.

The offensive line will be the focal point in the draft since center Randy Cross has retired and tackle Steve Wallace broke his ankle against the Bengals.

Defensively, no team uses its personnel better. Except for nose tackle Michael Carter, safety Ronnie Lott and cornerback Tim McKyer, they are situation players. Lott is the only defender with a lot of mileage, but he was as good as ever in his eighth season.

Rice, the Super Bowl MVP, had the first strong postseason of his four-year career.

"It was just a dream for me," he said. "It was the ultimate challenge and now, who knows, we might be able to come back and repeat."

That is a lot to expect, Walsh insisted.

"This thing is competitive," said Walsh, who remembers his team failing to make the playoffs the season after winning its first NFL crown. "A lot of people, especially 28 owners, have lost sight of it."

Walsh hasn't, which is why this championship is so meaningful.

"This was my toughest season as a winning coach," he said. "I could see we had it, and won a very big game at New Orleans (to start the season). Then we beat the Giants 20-17."

"Then the roller-coaster started. But I looked around the league and everybody was having a roller-coaster season."

"At least it was (happening) as a winning coach. Imagine what I went through when I was 2-14."

That isn't likely to happen again, even if he does return. Rice thinks he will.

"Right now we feel like Bill is going to come back. I feel like Bill is competitive and not ready to give up the game."

"When you are getting paid $1 million a year ..."

Tennessee was the only team to fall from the rankings as the Volunteers fell to 12-3 after losing 66-65 at home to Kentucky.

Williams Leads Pacers Past Nuggets

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

When you work hard, good things come your way. In Herb Williams' case, good things happened to be rebounds.

The forward grabbed a team-record 29 rebounds — breaking the old Indiana mark of 25 set by Dan Roundfield in 1977 — and scored 21 points to lead the Pacers to a 117-102 victory over the Denver Nuggets on Monday night. The win snapped Indiana's five-game losing streak.

"The rebounds were just coming to me tonight," Williams said. "I went to a lot of them, but a lot just fell in my hands."

Williams, known for his defensive skills, also showed he could score.

"I'm not going to sacrifice it anymore," Williams said of his of-tense. "I kind of fell into that thing where people say you're a good defensive player. Well, I can score. I can do both."

"Three or four years ago I put up a lot of good numbers. I've always been a scorer, and I'll always be a scorer."

Williams entered the game averaging 12 points. He scored eight points during the decisive third period when he, Reggie Miller and Rik Smits led a Pacer surge that inflated a five-point halftime lead into a 97-70 advantage.

"We came out awful in the second half," Denver coach Doug Moe said. "Everybody who's played against us has had a career night."

"All the other teams look the same to me. I don't care if it is Indiana, Little Sisters of the Poor or whoever. We are just playing awful."

In the only other NBA games, it was Cleveland over Golden State

142-109 and San Antonio over Miami 119-110.

"I was happy for Herb," Pacers coach Dick Versace said. "I told him before the game to get out of the blocks fast and let the chips fall."

Miller and Smits scored 12 points apiece in Indiana's third-period outburst.

"We just wanted to come out strong in the first five minutes (of the second half), and that's what we did," said Miller, who finished with a season-high 27 points. "We just had to get another win, another double-figure win."

Chuck Person also scored 20 points for the Pacers. Alex English had 25 for the Nuggets, who now have lost three straight games.

Cavaliers 142, Warriors 109

Larry Nance scored 22 points as Cleveland halted Golden State's eight-game winning streak. The Cavaliers have won five straight overall and 12 in a row at home to improve their NBA-best record to 30-7.

The 142 points was Cleveland's highest output of the season.

The 6-foot-11 Nance, going against 6-8 Larry Smith and 6-5 Mitch Richmond, took control of the game early, scoring 16 first-half points to help Cleveland to a 72-52 halftime lead.

"We went inside and used our height, got some easy baskets, and our height hurt them at the other end because we were able to block some shots," Nance said. "They didn't have the tall guys, so we were able to go inside."

Ron Harper scored 21 points, Mark Price 19 and Mike Sanders 18 for Cleveland. Chris Mullin led Golden State with 27 points.

Spurs 119, Heat 101

San Antonio snapped a seven-game losing streak behind Willie Anderson's 26 points and nine assists. Miami is now 1-18 on the road.

The rookie forward also came up with a career-high six steals as the Spurs produce a franchise-record 22 thefts.

The Spurs used a 22-6 third-quarter run to blow open what had been a tight game. An 8-0 surge at the end of the streak gave San Antonio a 76-66 lead.

Miami scored just 12 points in the third period, missing 14 of its 19 shots from the field and turning the ball over nine times.

"The number of turnovers (34) really jumps out at you," Miami coach Ron Rothstein said. "San Antonio did a great job with their quickness and trapping. In the second half, they really went after us and put the game away."

Grant Long led Miami with 16 points. Rory Sparrow, who has led the Heat in scoring with a 13.6 average, was held scoreless.

Bolton Thinks He's Target Of Book

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH, N.C. — Bennie Bolton, a former North Carolina State University basketball player, thinks that he — not Charles Shackleford — is the target of teammates' suspicions that a Wolfpack player threw an NCAA tournament game in 1987 to avoid a drug test.

But Bolton insisted he didn't throw the game, which was the last of his college career. And he said he doubted that Shackleford, or any other member of the team, did.

"When I heard the Florida game mentioned, and they said a player threw it, I just naturally looked at myself," said Bolton, referring to NCSU's 82-70 loss to the University of Florida in the first round of the tournament.

"I had a bad game and threw a lot of bad passes," Bolton told The News and Observer of Raleigh.

In the game, which was played at Syracuse University, Bolton had four turnovers. Shackleford, then a sophomore, had three turnovers.

The allegation that some players think a teammate threw the Florida game reportedly will be contained in the book, "Personal Fouls," by Peter Golenbock, scheduled for release next month, according to the book's dust jacket.

In an NBC Sports report aired Saturday during the halftime of the N.C. State-North Carolina game, sources said Shackleford was identified in the book as the player suspected of throwing the Florida game.

Shackleford, now playing professionally with the New Jersey Nets, has been unavailable for comment, referring all calls to his agent, attorney Salvatore P. DiFazio.

DiFazio, reached Monday, described the allegation that Shackleford threw the game as "preposterous" and "completely crazy."

"Hell, he probably shouldn't have even played," DiFazio said. "His leg had been in an air cast for the three days before the game. He had an ankle that was swollen about twice the normal size. He couldn't even practice, and he still went out and got his averages in a fairly low-scoring game."

"That sort of statement is outright BS, and anyone who knows very much about the sport, or who saw any of that game, should realize it."

In the 1987 loss to Florida, Shackleford scored 12 points and led his team in rebounding with eight. In the same game, Bolton was the team's leading scorer with 20 points. He also had four rebounds. His average that season was 15 points and 4.1 rebounds a game.

Bolton, now living in Washington, said in an interview he didn't think anyone on the Wolfpack squad would throw a game.

"Not in an NCAA tournament," he said. "Once you get in the NCAA tournament, it's do or die. You're trying to play to the best of your ability. I think it would be real cheap for a player to do that."

Bolton said he expected that the book, when it is published, would trigger "a lot of finger-pointing." He said he was never approached by Golenbock.

He added that despite some factual errors, he expected the book to contain a lot of truth.

"I think the book is going to be interesting because the sources from which the information is coming are very credible," Bolton said.

"These are people who were very close to the scene. People who were with the family, so to speak — a former manager, a former tutor, former players."

John A. Simonds Jr., the former team manager who supplied Golenbock with information about the team, said in the NBC interview that he was very close to Coach Jim Valvano and, by virtue of being "on the inside ... saw things that the average public person does not see."

Valvano, in a taped response to those comments, denied that he was as close to Simonds as the former manager had suggested.

Meanwhile, Richard A. Lauffer, a former NCSU professor and department chairman, said Monday that investigators from the NCAA were to speak with him today about his assertion that grades were changed for a Wolfpack basketball player.

Lauffer said Becky R. French, NCSU's counsel, called him Monday to ask if he would talk with the investigators.

Lauffer, who was head of the physical education department from 1981 until 1988, has said that three failing grades for former player Chris Washburn were changed to passing grades in 1985.

After he learned of the grade change, Lauffer said, he informed NCSU Chancellor Bruce R. Poulton about the switch, but the chancellor seemed unconcerned.

Pirates Win...

went in up 38-33 at the intermission.

Mote started the rally with a pair of free throws. Edwards then added a finger roll layup with 1:08 left for a 44-33 lead.

Edwards knocked in another layup off an assist from Kelly and Kelly scored as time expired in the half on a feed from Kenny Murphy.

In the second half, the Pirates quickly opened up a 10-point lead when Edwards slammed home a shot after a long rebound and assist from Kelly with 15:27 left in the game.

Mote added a pair of baseline jumpers at the 13:41 and 13:08 marks to give the Pirates their biggest lead of the game at 51-37.

"He shot two shots down on the baseline where we were like 'Oh God, don't shoot Casey, all right good shot,'" Steele said. "He's just a freshman and he's gonna be a good player for us."

Navy then began its comeback following a timeout.

Led by four 3-pointers, two from Jones and a pair from Erik Harris, the Midshipmen cut the lead to two, 57-55 with 7:38 to play.

The Midshipmen then went 4:07 without a score and enabled the Pirates to move back out by seven, 62-55 on scores from Hill and Edwards.

"I thought our defense played pretty well down the stretch," Steele said. "Even though we made some mistakes down the stretch, defensively they didn't get a good shot against us in the last four or five minutes. They made a run and cut it down to two and then I thought we got after their shooters and forced them into some bad shots."

By the time the Middies finally scored again the Pirates simply had to sink free throws down the stretch to put the game away and Kelly delivered, knocking in six out of six in the final 1:11 to put the game away.

"We need to be more consistent in clutch time," Herrmann said. "We need to make sure we get shots in the clutch time. They shot 58 percent for the game and we shot 43 and that's not gonna get you a win in a close game."

The Pirates will be back in action Saturday on the road against UNC-Wilmington, while Navy will try to snap its losing skid at American Saturday.

Madison Square Set To Get Renovations

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Madison Square Garden, among the most famous sports arenas in the world, will stay put and get a multimillion dollar facelift instead of being moved to make way for a $1-billion office complex, according to published reports.

Soaring construction costs and a downtown office vacancy rate of 12 percent have prompted the project developer to scrap plans to move the Garden west of its present site.

Gulf & Western Inc., which owns the Garden, and Olympia & York, the largest developer in the city, had jointly planned the project.

FORECAST FOR WEDNESDAY Jan. 25

- ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Financial adjustments are hard but necessary. Double-check and be certain that deals are on the up and up.
TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Know your opposition's viewpoint before you formulate your approach. Use diplomacy. Establish schedules.
GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Use your humor to advantage. A smile will bring results, brighten the day, and bring you a touch of romance.
MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Ambition can get out of hand. You may be forced to eliminate some activities. Use the evening for relaxation.
LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Trust your own instincts. A cool, calm approach to life will bring gains. Express your views with clarity so that everyone understands.
VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Curb a tendency to argue even though you know you are right. Develop more personal time for rest and relaxation.
LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Changing your mind can get to be a bad habit. Others may misinterpret your intentions. Contact close relatives.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Take care of your health by slowing down to a reasonable pace. Romantic desires can be fulfilled at a gradual pace.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Your insight is keen, but steer away from subjects that you know can cause friction. Get along by going along.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Your competence is noticed by superiors even though rewards, both verbal and financial, are not apparent. Keep up the effort.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Lines of communication may not be clear. Use care in what you say. Verbal fighting for peace and quiet will never solve the problem.
PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Recognize your talents, and put them to work. You build for the future when you stay clear of self doubt.

There used to be a kibitzer haunting New York bridge clubs who, because of his pontificating while kibitzing, earned the nickname of The Rabbi. The rule for which he became famous was: "If the king is singleton, play the ace!" He would have been delighted by this hand, which cropped up in a duplicate game at New York's renowned Cavendish Club.

Sitting South was club manager Tom Snow. After his vulnerable overall, North had more than enough to contract for game. His cue-bid of two clubs simply added an additional round to the bidding.

West led the king of clubs, which held. A diamond shift would have been best, but West chose the ten of spades. On the auction it was most unlikely that West could hold two kings, so declarer shot up with the ace and was delighted to see East's king come tumbling down.

A low trump from the table fetched another king from East, and things were looking up. Declarer ruffed a club in dummy, came to hand with the queen of spades and ruffed another club. After discarding a diamond on the jack of spades, a spade ruff was the entry to the closed hand to draw the outstanding trumps in three rounds. Dummy came down to the ace-queen of diamonds, while declarer was left with a diamond and the queen of clubs. East could not withstand the pressure when the last trump was cashed.

His last three cards were the king-jack of diamonds and ace of clubs, and he could not afford to part with any. He tried valiantly by discarding the jack of diamonds, but declarer made no mistake. A diamond to the ace felled the now-singleton king, and declarer emerged with two over-tricks for an absolute top score.

Shelton Sets Finals' Pace

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Ricky Van Shelton, a former pipefitter who has been recording country music less than two years, is the leading finalist for fan-voted awards sponsored by cable TV's The Nashville Network.

Shelton is a finalist for five of the eight annual Viewers' Choice awards to be presented by TNN.

He was voted one of six finalists in every eligible category: favorite entertainer; favorite male vocalist; favorite album; favorite song and favorite music video.

The song and video are "I'll Leave This World Loving You," a No. 1 hit in November. The album, which has received gold status for selling 500,000 copies, is "Loving You."

Shelton, 37, whose trademark is a white cowboy hat, is one of country music's rising stars. Four years ago, he left Grit, Va., where he had worked as a pipefitter for 10 years. Settling in Nashville, he signed a recording contract with CBS Records just two years ago.

NEIL HARRIS

LOS ANGELES — For a teen-ager who attends high school in New Mexico, Neil Patrick Harris has a rather impressive film career.

He co-starred with Whoopi Goldberg in "Clara's Heart" and was in the TV movie "Too Good To Be True," with Lonnie Anderson and Patrick Duffy.

This Sunday, he co-stars with Barnard Hughes, Robert Prosky and Sada Thompson in "Home Fires Burning," a Hallmark Hall of Fame presentation on CBS.

He plays Lonnie Tibbetts in this drama set in a small Southern town at the end of World War II. Hughes is his grandfather, Jake Tibbetts, Ms. Thompson is his grandmother and Prosky plays Jake's best friend.

"My father's been in the war since I was a child," Harris said of his role. "He's coming home. I live with my grandfather, who's got a large grudge against my father. My mother was killed, and Jake blames my father for the accident. I've lived with my grandparents most of my life, and I have to straighten out things between Jake and my father."

Harris was in Los Angeles with his parents, who are lawyers in Albuquerque, to promote the show and interview for new projects. They recently moved there from Ruidoso, N.M.

Unlike a lot of 15-year-olds, Harris is completely at ease with people, articulate and seemingly never at a loss for words.

He described Lonnie as a "quiet, intelligent boy."

"His Grandpa's almost his best friend," he said. "He's close with his family, but confused with his mother gone and his father in the war. It affects him greatly. He's curious, he gets into trouble. He's pretty much a normal kid."

"Home Fires Burning" was filmed on location in Crawfordville, Ga.

"It was interesting because of the accents, the food and the culture," he said. "I've been on location four times, and each time I had a different guardian. I think once was enough for each of them. So far it's been my mother, father, grandma and my brother Brian, who's 18."

His first professional job was in an episode of the syndicated comedy series "Throb." He was also in a movie called "Purple People Eater" with Ned Beatty and Shelley Winters.

"It all began when I was 5 or 6 and living in Ruidoso," he said. "My folks took me to see the national road show of 'Annie.' I fell in love with it. I bought the soundtrack album and the music book. I was going to be Annie. All I needed was a wig.

"I've always loved to watch plays. Whenever I'm in L.A. I go to the book stores to buy scripts of the latest plays. I love plays. I was John Darling in 'Peter Pan' in Albuquerque. I like the spontaneity of a play. If you mess up, you have to cover up. And you always mess up and you cover up and you get applause every night."

As much as he wants to do a play, Harris recently turned down an opportunity to play Jack, of Jack and the Beanstalk, in the road show of "Into the Woods." The voice required was too low for his range and it would have kept him away from home for six months.

Winfrey Will Star In TV Movie By Her Company

By James Endrst
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

HOLLYWOOD — Oprah Winfrey may have slimmed down to a size 10, but she is carrying more weight than ever in Hollywood these days.

Best known for her No. 1 syndicated talk show, Ms. Winfrey has, in a few short years: won an Emmy, been nominated for an Oscar, made millions of dollars and started her own Chicago-based production company, Harpo Inc.

And on March 19 and 20, Ms. Winfrey will one-up herself again as the star and executive producer of her first TV movie, a four-hour ABC miniseries called "The Women of Brewster Place," which is a Harpo production.

But clearly it is not Ms. Winfrey's money or success that impresses even the most cynical Oprah watcher.

Not to sound like one of the members of her studio audience, but it is just Oprah.

Though the reviews are bound to be mixed on "The Women of Brewster Place," based on initial reactions from many TV critics who previewed the movie here the other day during the annual January TV press tour, Ms. Winfrey the woman was an unqualified success.

Graceful and confident throughout a news conference that followed the screening, Ms. Winfrey wowed the room with her sleek new frame and a keen sense of self.

In "The Women of Brewster Place," audiences will see a different Oprah — many months and many pounds ago — but certainly one no less impressive.

As Mattie Michael, Ms. Winfrey is the dramatic center of Brewster Place, a big-city tenement where the audience follows the fates of seven black women. The first hour of the film, in particular, evokes memories of "The Color Purple" and the long-suffering Sofia, the role that brought Ms. Winfrey the Oscar nomination.

And in ABC's small-screen adaptation of Gloria Naylor's novel, Ms. Winfrey outshines a cast that includes such standout performers as Paul Winfield, Olivia Cole and, at least briefly, Cicely Tyson (Robin Givens and Jackee co-star, as well, and if you look very closely, you will see a cameo appearance by Mike Tyson as a gang member).

Ms. Winfrey first read the book in 1985, she said, during filming of "The Color Purple."

"There was a scene in this movie that's so close ... I thought I was having deja vu," she said.

The talk show host-actress-producer-entrepreneur said, however, that she would like to play a more contemporary character the next time or two out.

"I'd like to play something that's sexy," she said, adding without hesitation, "with my clothes on."

Not that Oprah is tired of talk. Harpo studios, in fact, were built to conform to her grueling schedule on "The Oprah Winfrey Show," where she does more than 200-plus shows a year.

"The word 'trapped' does not apply here," she said about her golden bread and butter. Ms. Winfrey has a realistic attitude, too, about the negative reaction she may get when "The Women of Brewster Place" is broadcast — especially as it relates to the film's depiction of black men. For the most part, their image as presented here is grim and heartless. They are gang members, rapists, fathers who abandon their families, sons who abandon their mothers.
