British Envoy Checks Reports Of Hostage Release

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIRUT, Lebanon — British Ambassador Allan Ramsay, escorted by heavily armed bodyguards, crossed Beirut's dividing Green Line into the city's Moslem sector today to investigate reports British hostages might soon be freed.

Patrick McCabe, Ireland's ambassador to Lebanon, said he also would head for Beirut from his office in Iraq to investigate the reports.

One of the British hostages is Brian Keenan, a Belfast teacher with dual British and Irish nationality whose release is also sought by the Ireland.

A British Embassy spokesman confirmed Ramsay was in west Beirut and indicated he was trying to check reports that Keenan and possibly British journalist John McCarthy would be released.

The other Briton missing in Lebanon is Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite.

Ramsay denied his visit had a special significance.

"I often come to west Beirut, and there's nothing significant in my current visit," he told The Associated Press by telephone when asked if it was in connection with the reports.

He said none of the reports "can be verified ... I'm anxious to avoid speculation on that subject."

The envoy spoke from the British consular section in west Beirut.

No faction has claimed to hold Waite, Keenan or McCarthy.

They are among the 15 foreigners, including nine Americans, held hostage in Lebanon. The hostage held longest is Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, who was kidnapped March 16, 1985.

There was no immediate word on where Ramsay went in west Beirut or whom he planned to meet. "We have heard a report and we're making inquiries," said the embassy spokesman, on condition of anonymity.

Earlier, Christian-run Voice of Lebanon radio said prospects that British hostages would soon be freed were growing.

Most hostage releases in the past have been preceded by statements from the kidnapers. No such statements about Keenan or McCarthy have been reported.

ECU Moves To Bar Students Without Measles Vaccinations

By Carol Tyer

THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Lists completed Wednesday night by the East Carolina University Student Health Center showed that about 2,500 ECU students still need measles inoculations and the lists were to be distributed in classes today barring students who haven't been vaccinated from entering, a Student Health Center spokesman said.

The ECU registrar and his staff were at work at 6 a.m. today getting out lists for each of today's classes. Lists for classes meeting on Monday-Wednesday-Friday schedules will be distributed Friday morning.

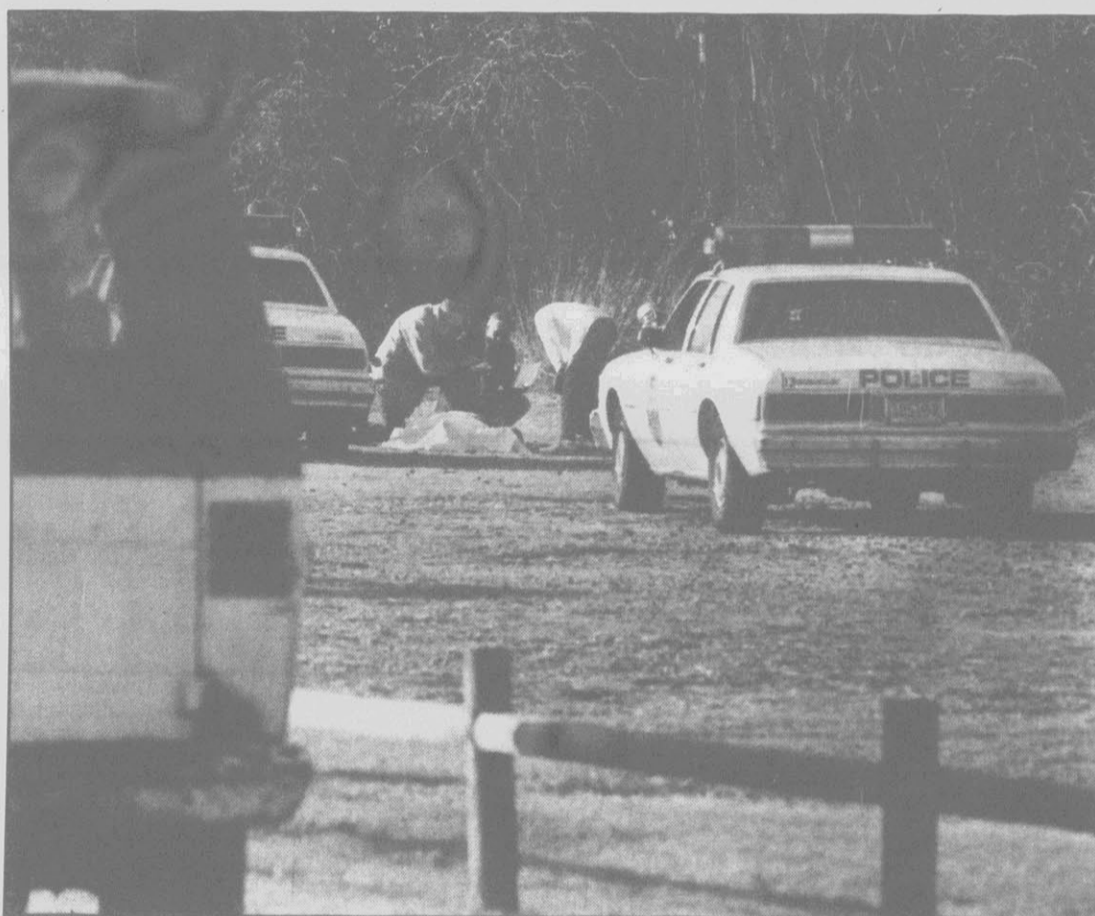

Kay Van Nortwick, associate administrative director of the Student Health Center, said she expected the center would inoculate many more students today and Friday.

Before the inoculations began, there was one confirmed case of measles in an ECU student. Mrs. Van Nortwick said today a report from the State Office of Communicable Disease Control indicated it was "inconclusive" as to whether a second student at ECU has measles. She said the student is being treated and more conclusive results from the state may be about 10 days in coming.

Mrs. Van Nortwick said that a Reflector story Wednesday indicated that Student Health Center workers, in addition to processing measles inoculations, were dealing with about 400 cases of flu. She said that she

Winterville Firings Spur Queries About Police Role

By John Bare

THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The firing of two Winterville police officers has raised questions concerning how speeding tickets are issued in the town and how small town police officers should perform their jobs.

Former Winterville Police Chief Keith Knox said Wednesday he is not close to the current situation, but town officials never ordered him to give special treatment to aldermen. Knox said he would not have approved of such a practice.

The fired officers claim they were dismissed because they refused to follow an order from Chief Lester

Smith not to ticket aldermen or the family members.

"I'm not familiar with the problems they're having right now ... But, if such a statement was made (directing officers not to ticket aldermen), it shouldn't have been made," said Knox, who served as chief for three years in the mid '80s and is now a lieutenant with the East Carolina University campus police.

Last Saturday, Smith dismissed Harold Evans and Ralph Whitehurst for what he called disciplinary reasons, and Tuesday the Board of Aldermen approved the firings. The officers claim Smith had told them aldermen were not to be ticketed. Smith denied the charges Monday, but he has said since he will not comment on the situation again until a State Bureau of Investigation inquiry is complete.

Winterville Mayor E.C. Hines has said that he does not approve of traffic tickets. Small town police officers are better off being good public relations men because tickets have never really accomplished anything, Hines said this week in interviews. But Hines has denied there was any official policy in place that favored aldermen.

Several residents who attended a special meeting of the Board of Aldermen on Tuesday said they do not want town officials to receive special treatment from police officers. Residents also said they were worried that the firings would leave

Import Prices Increase

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Prices of imported goods rose 1.6 percent from October through December after declining during the previous three months, the government reported today.

The Labor Dept. said the increase, which followed a revised 1.3 percent third-quarter decrease, reflected widespread rises in a variety of imported goods. Only the cost of crude oil and other imported fuels showed a decrease for the quarter, dropping by 7.8 percent after plunging 9.0 percent in the previous three months.

By contract, prices for imported crude materials rose by 5.5 percent, imported machinery costs rose 2.5 percent, intermediate manufacturing products rose 2.4 percent and chemical prices increased 2.3 percent.

Theft Victim Dies In Chase

By Carol Tyer

THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The regional medical examiner says heart disease killed a Greenville man found Wednesday afternoon in Meadowbrook Park, and police say the man may have been chasing someone when he fell dead.

Dr. Page Hudson said today that an autopsy completed late this morning on Robert Lee Smith, 63, of the Meadowbrook section of Greenville showed that Smith died of natural causes.

Police Detective J.E. Nichols said that after interviewing juvenile witnesses and neighbors of the dead man, it is believed that, at the moment of his death, Smith was running behind a man he believed had stolen guns from him.

Nichols said children who reported a chase involving two men in the north Greenville park called police. When officers arrived, they found Smith's body lying face down on top of a shotgun with a high-powered rifle nearby, the officer said. Neither gun was loaded.

Neighbors had reported to Smith, who was the owner and operator of Auto Salvage Co. near his home, minutes before his 3:10 p.m. death, that someone was breaking into his house and were stealing guns, according to Nichols. The officer said seven other guns apparently owned by Smith were recovered later by police.

Hudson said there were no visible wounds nor signs of injury on the body and said he believes Smith's exertion might have triggered his death.

Nichols said the case is no longer considered a possible homicide, but that the investigation of the burglary of the guns is continuing. Anyone having information may call Crime Stoppers, 758-7777, without giving a name, he said.

Foes Say Pay Raise Will Stay

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — House opponents of a 50 percent congressional pay raise said today they can't stop the increase, despite growing Senate opposition to the higher salary.

Rep. Thomas J. Tauke, R-Iowa, a leading opponent of the raise, said he's now focusing on a long-range strategy that would roll back the increase, and change the system that permits it to become law without a vote.

And Rep. Robert C. Smith, R-N.H., who has organized a House letter-writing drive to Speaker Jim Wright demanding a vote, said, "We cannot budge the speaker."

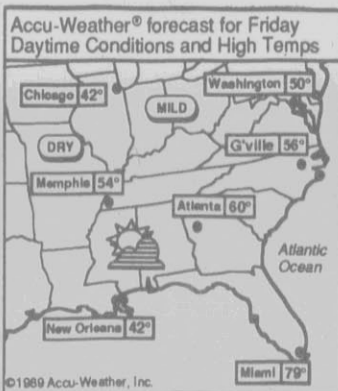

In the Senate, opposition continued to grow Wednesday after legislation was filed to block the increase.

Opposition was turned up a notch outside Congress, too, as three part-time musicians from the Detroit area released an anti-raise protest song, "Tea Bag Revolution." The title, with its reference to the Boston Tea Party, comes from efforts of 30 radio talk show hosts, who are behind a national drive to send tea bags to lawmakers with the message: "Read my tea bag. No fifty percent raise for Congress."

Legislation that would reject the pay raise, and roll it back should it take effect, was introduced Wednesday in the Senate. The legislation had a dozen sponsors in the morning, and 23 by day's end — nearly a quarter of the 100-member Senate.

City Tries To Ease Downtown Parking

By Greg Laudick
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The city of Greenville is engaged in efforts to help ease the parking aggravations for downtown business operators, employees and customers.

On Wednesday the city made available three on-street parking spaces between Cotanche and Evans streets. Meanwhile, the city is planning, effective Feb. 1, to lease 22 short-term spaces in downtown parking lots to employees and owners of downtown businesses.

And, although the two actions by the city have a different intent, both are part of the same effort — to more effectively manage existing downtown parking resources to reflect today's demands, according to a city official.

The three spaces made available on Fifth Street are intended to help make the adjacent vacant properties more readily leased, said Floyd Little, collector of revenues and city staff representative on the Greenville Parking Authority.

"In that particular block, there is not adequate parking for the businesses in that area," Little said. "It's making it hard to rent out some of the currently vacant buildings in that block."

Little said a Fifth Street property owner in November submitted a request for additional parking availability on Fifth Street before the Parking Authority. The authority subsequently approved the re-

Real Estate Broker Has License Revoked

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The North Carolina Real Estate Commission has revoked the license of a Greenville real estate broker who pleaded guilty last year to cocaine charges.

In an order issued Tuesday, Phillip T. Fisher, commission director, stated that the commission had revoked the broker's license of Alan B. Rubenstein, 35, of 102 Elite Place.

A Pitt County grand jury indicted Rubenstein in February of 1988 on three felony counts of possessing cocaine with intent to sell. The charges involved about a half ounce of cocaine. In March of 1988, Rubenstein pleaded guilty to each charge.

Superior Court Judge David E. Reid Jr. of Greenville suspended a three-year prison sentence for five years on the condition that Rubenstein spend four months in jail and pay $1,595 in restitution and costs.

According to Phillips, Rubenstein agreed to the settlement and waived notice of a hearing and any judicial review to challenge the order. Rubenstein was first issued his license in 1979, officials in the commission's legal department said.

Knights Of Columbus Give Schools, Agencies $11,575

The Greenville chapter of the Knights of Columbus presented $11,575 to 16 Pitt County schools and three county agencies Wednesday evening in a program at St. Peter's Catholic school.

The money was raised through the chapter's Tootsie Roll drive conducted in October and co-chaired by Tim Baker and Frank Flower, Grand Knight Raymond Reddrick said.

The chapter arranged for interested schools and organizations to solicit funds outside local grocery stores and provided them with Tootsie Rolls to distribute to donors, he said.

About $15,000 was raised during the two-weekend effort, Reddrick said. "We definitely would like to thank the merchants for letting us utilize their facilities for this drive and also thank the citizens for being so generous for their donations toward this worthwhile project," he said.

Reddrick said 85 percent of the money will be used to benefit special education students in 16 county schools, in addition to programs of the Farmville Child Development Center, the Association for Retarded Citizens-Pitt County, and the Cerebral Palsy Association.

The remaining money will be donated to the four mental institutions in North Carolina by the state Knights of Columbus, Reddrick said.

The three schools that raised the most money during the drive were presented plaques for their efforts. Chicod Elementary School won first place, Sadie Saulter School placed second and Wintergreen Elementary School won third place. Other participating schools and agencies received certificates of appreciation for their efforts.

Reddrick said the Knights of Columbus has donated about $150,000 to the Pitt-Greenville community through fund-raising efforts during the last 14 years.

Donations

RALEIGH (AP) — The American Red Cross has transferred more than $300,000 in unspent Raleigh tornado-relief money to its national disaster fund, an agency official said.

"It is rare that a disaster effort comes close to even meeting its expenditures through contributions received," said William A. Malfara, assistant director of disaster services for the group's Eastern headquarters in Alexandria, Va. "Those funds left over will be used elsewhere."

All the money will stay with the Red Cross and will not be given to another organization or agency, he stressed.

The funds totaled $1,051,555 as of Jan. 4, the date the Red Cross ended its participation in the local relief efforts. "So far, the actual and estimated remaining payments total $746,500," he said.

DWI Sentence

RALEIGH (AP) — Otis D. Wadford was convicted Wednesday of his 34th drunken driving charge and sentenced to seven years and 30 days in prison.

Wadford, 52, of Raleigh, also was convicted in Harnett County District Court of driving while his license was permanently revoked, not wearing a safety belt, transporting an open bottle of fortified wine and giving a fictitious name to a highway patrol trooper, said Phillip A. Fusco, an assistant district attorney in Harnett County.

He also was found guilty of carrying a concealed weapon — a steak knife — and injury to personal property, for causing about $250 damage to the trooper's car by kicking the dashboard.

Wadford, who was fined more than $4,000 and ordered to pay restitution for the damage to the car, indicated he would appeal the decision, Fusco said. The charges stem from an October arrest, Fusco said.

State Sells Eastern Power Agency Bonds

Greenville Utilities stands to share in a debt service savings as a result of action taken Wednesday by the North Carolina Local Government Commission.

The NCLGC sold an issue of $429.5 million in tax-exempt electric revenue bonds on behalf of the North Carolina Eastern Municipal Power Agency, said Jack Childs of Electricities of North Carolina Inc.

Childs said the sale will result in significant debt service savings for the benefit of the 32 eastern North Carolina municipal electric systems served by the power agency, including Greenville Utilities.

Greenville Utilities has a 16 percent ownership share of the power agency, said Malcolm Green, general manager.

"As a result, we will see 16 percent of the lower interest rate as reductions in future power costs over the next 24 years," Green said. Wednesday's sale will allow for the refunding of $358.47 million in outstanding bonds that were previously issued at higher rates ranging from 8.25 percent to 13 percent, according to Childs. As a result of this refunding, NCEMPA will realize reductions in the cost of debt service totaling approximately $151 million between issuance and the year 2003 of approximately $13.9 million in present value savings, Childs said.

He said the lower debt service costs will be reflected in the electricity rates charged by the power agency in future years to its 32 participating municipalities.

The true interest cost of the bonds was 7.802 percent, Childs said. The bonds were sold in increments of $5,000, except for $6.6 million in capital appreciation bonds which were issued in amounts that, together with accrued interest from issue to maturity, would equal $1,000 at maturity.

Hundreds Are Killed In Raids

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — Soviet and Afghan troops shelled both ends of a major tunnel north of Afghanistan's capital in raids that killed hundreds of civilians, Western diplomats said today.

The diplomats, who demanded anonymity, quoted reports from Kabul as saying that "after bombing of north and south ends of Salang tunnel, Soviet and Afghan artillery obliterated all dwellings and villages south of the tunnel."

They quoted Afghan sources, including an eyewitness report, as saying the raids occurred Monday at the Salang tunnel on the main highway, which connects Afghanistan and the Soviet Union.

"Soviet forces and Afghan Special Guard committed a major atrocity in Salang area on Monday," the diplomats said. "Reportedly, hundreds of civilians were killed."

"According to eyewitnesses, no dwellings remain," they said.

A dispatch received from Western diplomats in Kabul said witnesses reported seeing "Soviet tanks rolling over dead bodies of victims of Salang road."

The dispatch said the account of destruction of all dwellings came from three separate sources, including one diplomat who is an outspoken defender of Afghan President Najib.

College Agrees To Delay Name Change

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — North Carolina Baptist leaders, miffed that Wingate College trustees did not consult them before deciding to change the school's name to Charles Cannon University, have won a delay in the change.

Wingate, which is affiliated with the Southern Baptists, was named for Washington Manley Wingate, a president of Wake Forest College in the late 1800s. Cannon, the late textile giant who gave more than $10 million to the school, was a Presbyterian.

The N.C. Baptist State Convention's general board voted Tuesday night to "respectfully request" trustees delay action until the convention's executive committee can determine if Wingate trustees had the right to change the name without a convention vote.

Wingate President Paul Cortis said Wednesday that the college will comply with the request, but he still hopes to get the name change approved by June 1.

Charlotte lawyer Bill Poe, past president of the Baptist State Convention, said faculty, students and Baptist officials were not told about the proposal until after the trustees had acted.

"I thought that the business of keeping it all secret, springing it at the last minute, was a very unfortunate procedure," Poe said.

Poe said the convention must help coordinate the plans of North Carolina's six Baptist colleges, and it can't do that if they don't share those plans.

The N.C. Baptist State Convention helps fund Wingate, Gardner-Webb, Mars Hill, Meredith and Chowan colleges and Campbell University. It contributed almost $934,000 to each of them last year.

"It's a little bit ticklish to go outside the denomination and name a Baptist school for a Presbyterian layman, when it was named for Baptist clergyman," Poe said. "I think a lot of people are having trouble with that."

Martin Backs Hardison Amendment Repeal

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Gov. Jim Martin said today he supports repeal of laws that prohibit the state from imposing environmental regulations tougher than those on the federal level.

But Martin said at a news conference that repeal of the so-called "Hardison amendments" was not a major priority for him.

"All I can say is I don't see that we need them," Martin said. "If people agree with me and repeal them, that's fine with me. But would I trade for that? I've got other, more important objectives."

The Hardison amendments, named for their sponsor, former Sen. Harold Hardison, D-Lenoir, were approved in the late 1970s. Environmentalists have pushed for their repeal ever since, saying they force the state to abide by federal standards that might be inadequate.

Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, has introduced a bill to repeal the amendments. Supporters say Martin's help will be essential to its enactment, especially in the House, where 46 of the 120 members are Republicans.

On another matter, Martin said he would push for a cut in the state fund that pays for poor women's abortions and supports a bill that would require minors to get parental consent before obtaining abortions.

The governor said "public-spirited groups" that favor abortion should raise funds to help poor women obtain abortions.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

Monsters

Civilization Is For The Civilized

Feelings on capital punishment — the taking of a life by society in retribution for wanton killing — run the gamut.

There are those who feel that execution is never justified and others who would be glad to pull the switch.

Then there is an element which would make a carnival out of an execution.

We saw them at the electrocution of Ted Bundy, now recognized as a mass murderer who had no compassion for his young female victims.

An attractive and articulate man, it was difficult to image the horrors Bundy must have caused his victims in the final hours before he put them to death. He was executed in Florida this week for the heartless slaying of a 12-year-old girl. But before he died he confessed to many more murders.

'If criminals like Ted Bundy are monsters, those of us outside the jails do not have to become monsters, too.'

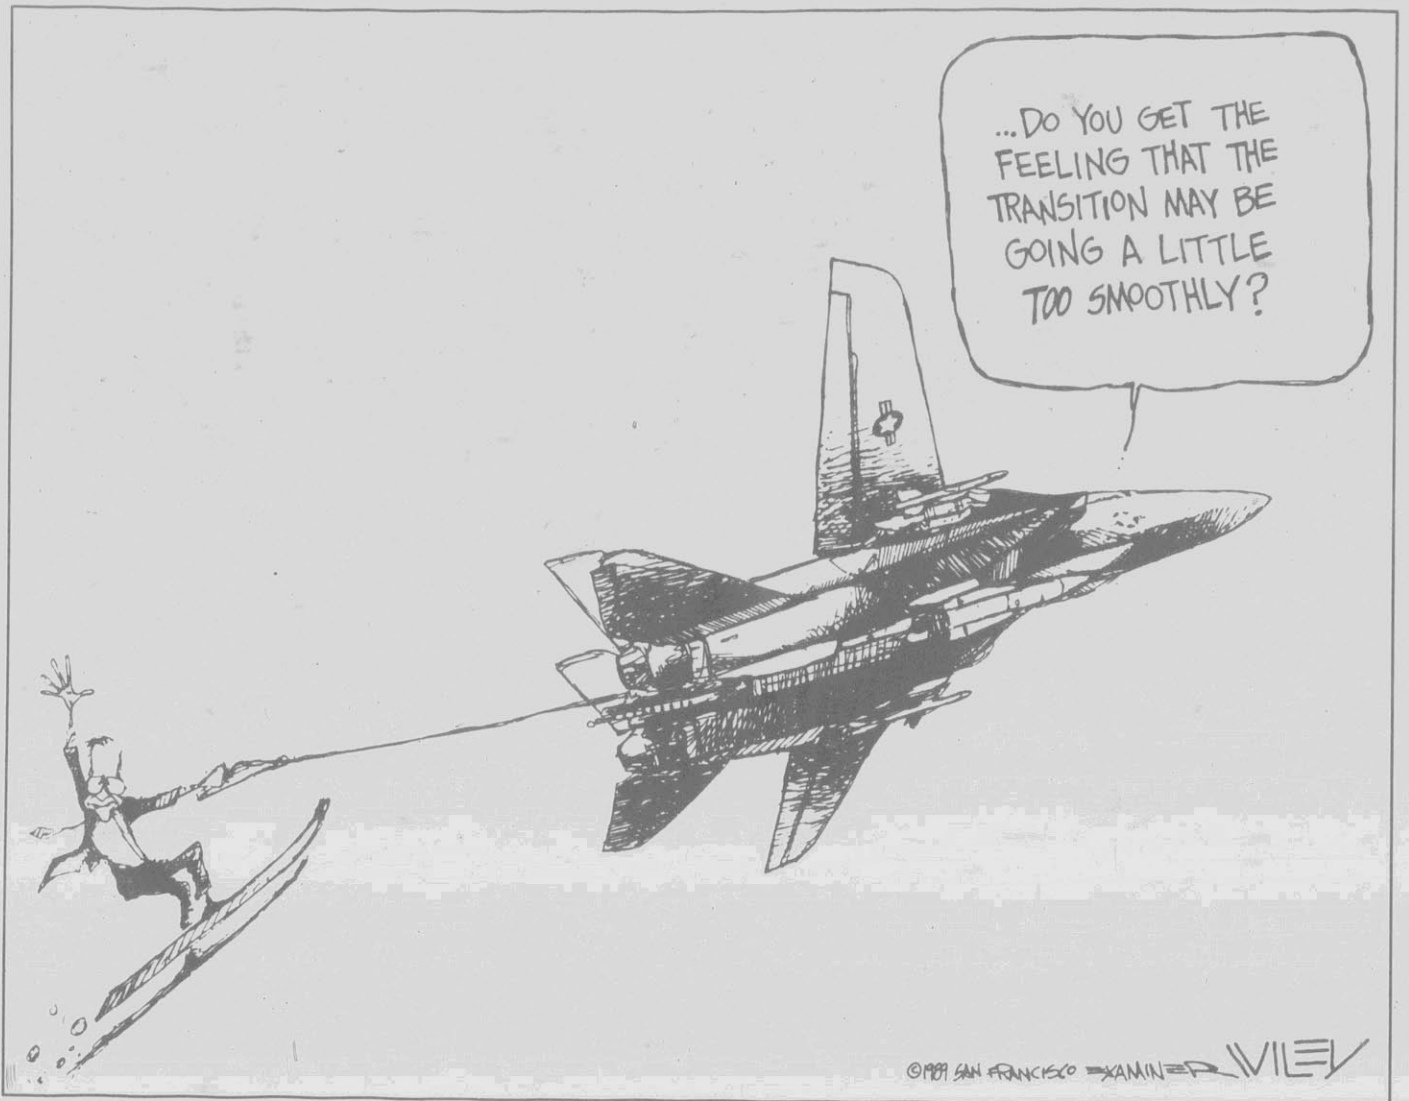

Citizens who conform to the rules of society — even learned scholars of social behavior — cannot begin to understand how the mind of such a man works. It is a certainty, however, that it is not a normal mind. Clearly it is twisted to the point where it leaves no room for compassion and allows no remorse until it becomes time to pay for the crimes through execution.

Most of us, if we feel there is justification for any execution, would say that this is the perfect case — to put to death someone who has wantonly taken the lives of so many innocent victims.

Many would say that even a legal execution is a heavy responsibility and the occasion should be one of dignity. Therefore it is difficult to understand the gleeful death watch outside the Florida prison that brought out crass placards, and cheers when it was determined that the execution had taken place.

While such people have the constitutional right to gather and express their feelings, they can only harm the cause of justice with crude behavior. They, too, have sick minds.

If criminals like Ted Bundy are monsters, those of us outside the jails do not have to become monsters, too. Civilization, after all, can only be carried on by the civilized.

Is There Something He Wants To Do?

WASHINGTON — New Presidents serve up rich sauces of symbolism, high in political cholesterol. George Bush has begun with a blizzard of words and gestures communicating high-mindedness.

We are at the English-muffin phase (folks swooned when Jerry Ford popped his own muffin into the presidential toaster), which also has been a cardigan sweater and jellybean phase of young presidencies. This humanizing — perhaps miniaturizing — of Presidents is a recurring skit for a public that periodically pretends it wants ordinariness in that extraordinary office.

The Bushes — up with horseshoes, down with designer clothes — are quite traditional in their ostentatious unostentatiousness. Their carefully choreographed "simplicity" projects the image of indifference to image. This is Carter Redux, as in the religiosity (Bush's first presidential act was to lead the nation in prayer), the walking on Pennsylvania Avenue, the country music, the open house, the stern talk about ethics. Carter's presidency confirmed this law: Frenetic reliance on symbolism indicates uncertainty about what you want to do.

Amidst the familiar metaphors (breezes blowing, pages turning, doors opening) of Bush's inaugural address there ran a vein of familiar moralism. It equates rectitude with right, and assumes that having the right attitude is tantamount to doing the right thing. Bush's feet may be in cowboy boots, but his head is in New England, home of right-mindedness and (not coincidentally) Abolitionism.

The Abolitionists were not much help in ending slavery while preserving the union, but they were pure in thought. The Abolitionist mentality was visible in the one specific vow in Bush's inaugural, concerning cocaine: "This scourge will stop."

It won't, but Bush has struck a pleasing pose, as he did in the campaign when he said: "If I'm elected President, if I'm remembered for anything, it would be this: a complete and total ban on chemical weapons." Bush's national security adviser, Brent Scowcroft, speaking last Sunday, said he supposed a verifiable ban to be "impossible." That is the unvarnished truth. But Bush has an arresting attitude, if not a practical position.

Bush also stood foursquare for rectitude when he came out against "bickering" and for bipartisanship in foreign policy. Bush, like many who came of age politically during the Second World War, assumes that bipartisanship is the American norm. That is a misreading — perhaps a nonreading — of American history.

'Bush's feet may be in cowboy boots, but his head is in New England, home of right-mindedness and (not coincidentally) Abolitionism.'

The fiercest dispute of the 1790s — some historians say it raised the specter of civil war — swirled around the Jay Treaty with Britain. The War of 1812 stirred semi-secessionist sentiment in New England, which became almost a neutral zone. The Mexican war (1846-48) was denounced by Whig critics (including Congressman Lincoln) as, among other things, unconstitutional. The war with Spain (1898) and the acquisition of territories brought bitter debate about the very nature of the nation. Between 1914 and 1917, modern isolationism found its voice, heard again in the late 1930s. Advocates of a "Pacific first" strategy troubled FDR's conduct of the war. They had an ally in Gen. Douglas MacArthur who was heard from again during the angry debates about Korea.

Much has been made of the fact that Bush's inaugural address contained the word "sacrifice": "Are we enthralled with material things, less appreciative of the nobility of work and sacrifice?" But one reason he was inaugurated was his pledge not to ask a central sacrifice of citizenship — taxes. "No new taxes" was a pledge not to let public needs impinge upon private materialism. Bush's pledge does mean a sacrifice — of national security. Scowcroft, when asked if Bush's tax pledge and his promise of a strong national defense are conflicting goals, said: "Of course. Of course they conflict." But, as attitudes, each is popular.

After praising sacrifice, Bush said, serenely: "We have more will than wallet; but will is what we need." However, in government will without wallet is usually ineffectual. And willing an end without willing the means to that end is mere attitudinizing. Bush was praised for saying at the Republican National Convention, "I don't hate government." That is an admirable attitude, but actions count. Governments run on money and Bush's solo significant campaign promise was to keep the government's wallet thin.

That is why when he promised "a new activism," he spoke of the need for voluntarism and generally displaying "better hearts and finer souls." The new activism will not be by the government that he does not hate but will not fund.

Bush has hit the ground running in place, promising rectitude — handsome attitudes — and raising anew this question: Beyond "serving," is there something he wants to do?

'Mississippi Burning' Neglects True Heroes In Movement

Nicolaus Mills

Twenty-five years ago, the idea behind the Mississippi Summer Project of 1964 was as simple as it was daring: A thousand volunteers, most of them Northern college students, would come to Mississippi for the summer.

Under the direction of a civil rights coalition led by the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, the volunteers would work on voter registration, start Freedom Schools and help build a political party open to all races. The Summer Project would show, its organizers believed, that the segregationist laws keeping more than 90 percent of Mississippi's eligible blacks from voting could be overcome.

It was a dream that would take more than a summer to accomplish. In the eyes of most white Mississippians, the Summer Project was an invasion. Participants were looked on as the enemy. Before the summer was up, 37 black churches were burned, 80 volunteers beaten and scores arrested.

But the worst violence occurred on June 21, as the Summer Project was just starting. On that night, three young civil rights workers — a black Mississippian, James Chaney, and two white New Yorkers, Michael Schwerner and Andrew Goodman — were shot as they were driving back from visiting a black church that had been burned to the ground.

"I am mindful that only yesterday in Philadelphia, Mississippi, young people seeking to secure the right to vote were brutalized and murdered," Martin Luther King would observe in his 1964 Nobel Peace Prize acceptance speech.

As a nation, we have not, however, been mindful of the tragedy of Chaney, Schwerner and Goodman. When we think of the 1960s, we prefer to remember the Camelot days of the Kennedy administration or the "right stuff" of the astronauts.

Now, as a result of a controversial new film, Alan Parker's "Mississippi Burning," Chaney, Schwerner and Goodman and the Mississippi Summer Project are news again. It is a welcome change, but the movie raises a question: What really happened in Mississippi in the summer of 1964?

In Parker's film, which he has acknowledged is a fictionalized version of Mississippi in 1964, we don't get a historical answer. "Mississippi Burning" begins with the murder of the three civil rights workers, then turns into a made-up account of how two FBI agents cracked the case.

The heart of the movie is the relationship of the two agents. Ward (played by Willem Dafoe) is a young idealist who believes that the best way to solve the murders is by following FBI procedure. Anderson (played by Gene Hackman) is an ex-Mississippi sheriff who believes that only by bending the law can the killers be caught. Anderson eventually persuades Ward to see Mississippi his way, and what brings the film to its conclusion are the steps Anderson takes to terrorize the murderers of the three civil rights workers into turning on each other.

The result is a first-rate thriller that demonstrates why there was a need for the Summer Project. But the film poses a terrible danger if we allow its references to actual events to make us see it as a docudrama that tells the story of the civil rights movement in Mississippi that summer. For what the film suggests, if we take it as representative of that period in American history, is that the FBI was a central force in the civil rights movement and that Mississippi blacks were basically passive witnesses to the most important struggle of their lives.

Nothing could be further from the truth.

In the summer of 1964, the FBI discovered where the bodies of Chaney, Schwerner and Goodman were buried — by offering a $30,000 reward. Later, by infiltrating the Ku Klux Klan, the FBI helped bring about the conviction, on civil rights charges only, of eight of the men responsible for the murders, including the deputy of Neshoba County.

But for most of J. Edgar Hoover's years as director, the FBI was hostile to the civil rights movement. In June 1964, the FBI did not even have an office in Mississippi.

The real Mississippi heroes of 1964 were neither the FBI nor the Kennedy administration nor the civil rights establishment. They were the young SNCC field secretaries who, after years of working alone, organized the Summer Project. They were the Northern college students who answered the call to come South. Above all, they were the black families of Mississippi who at the risk of their jobs and lives opened their houses to the civil rights movement.

There is, however, little point in trying to say who was more heroic. Both groups needed the other. In 1964, there was no way, as the project's organizers acknowledged, that Mississippi blacks could have mounted massive political protest without terrible bloodshed. But there was also no way that white volunteers, most of whom had never been in the Deep South before, could have ever survived the summer without the protection offered by the black community.

The year ended with fewer than 1,700 new black voters making it onto Mississippi voter rolls. It would take the 1965 Voting Rights Act for major political change to occur. But what the summer established was the willingness of blacks and whites to put their lives on the line to challenge American racism at its worst.

Never again would Mississippi officials have credibility when they said the state's blacks didn't vote because they were happy with their lot. The Summer Project brought the terror of Mississippi political life into the open, and the terror could not survive the exposure.

Twenty-five years later, there is no need to turn these men and women into superheroes. But there is a need to see them in context, to make sure what they achieved is not filtered back to us primarily as a white experience or a police story.

What makes the summer of 1964 so meaningful for us today, when racial progress seems to have stalled, is the picture it presents of ordinary Americans — black and white — acting together in extraordinary ways, giving themselves to a cause without lending themselves to fanaticism.

We cannot afford to lose that picture or the memory of it that prompted John Lewis — currently a Georgia congressman, in 1964 chairman of SNCC — to write of that Mississippi summer: "Most of all, there was an all-pervading sense that one was involved in a movement larger than oneself, almost like a Holy Crusade, an idea whose time had come."

Nicolaus Mills, who teaches American studies at Sarah Lawrence College, is completing a book on the Mississippi Summer Project.

Frozen Embryo

Parents Hope Successful Birth Will Give Inspiration To Others

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DURHAM — An Asheville couple whose child is the first in North Carolina to be born from a once-frozen embryo said they hoped their child's birth would give hope to other infertile couples.

"The reason we're here today is we would like people (with infertility problems) not to become disheartened or not to be discouraged," Michael Greene, 35, said Wednesday at a news conference he attended with his wife and his daughter, who's nearly a month old.

Eva-Michelle Grace Greene, daughter of Michael and Eva Green of Asheville, was born Dec. 27 at Memorial Mission Hospital in Asheville.

William C. Dodson, director of Duke University Medical Center's in vitro fertilization program, said the baby was conceived at Duke last Valentine's Day. She weighed 8 pounds, 2 ounces and measured 20½ inches at birth.

Dodson said Mrs. Green became a patient at the in vitro fertilization program at Duke because scar tissue from previous surgery had made her Fallopian tubes unusable. That made in vitro fertilization the only available route to pregnancy, he said.

Mrs. Greene said she remained relatively calm throughout her pregnancy but began to be overwhelmed by the situation on the way to the hospital to deliver the child.

"It was unbelievable," she said. "I started to cry because all of the sudden we were about to have a baby — the one thing we had waited so long to have. It was just an overwhelming feeling — one of joy and happiness."

Greene said his daughter's birth was worth all the waiting.

"We had crowds of family and friends waiting on Eva-Michelle to be born, and I was just feeling wonderful," he said. "It was as if all the problems and setbacks and disappointments that we had had over the years of trying to have a child were forgotten."

The Greens said they plan to have another child through the in vitro fertilization process.

"We are absolutely ecstatic," Green said. "We'd like to see them again in a year."

Dodson said doctors had retrieved six embryos from Mrs. Green, implanting four and freezing two others. When the first four failed to produce a viable pregnancy, Dodson said, the other two embryos were implanted.

Mrs. Green is one of two women implanted last summer with a once-frozen embryo. The other implantation was done at North Carolina Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill.

Luther M. Talbert, director of the N.C. Memorial program, said the woman who had received the embryo implant there conceived twins in March. The woman's pregnancy is progressing normally, Talbert said.

Freezing embryos is becoming more common at test-tube baby programs that use a process called in-vitro fertilization. Although the birth is a first for North Carolina, there have been about 10 such births across the nation.

Thawing and implanting the embryos is a very complex process, and the success rate for pregnancies is not high. A woman given fertility drugs commonly produces multiple eggs, which are removed and placed in a laboratory dish for fertilization by her husband's sperm.

If the eggs are fertilized and become embryos, some are implanted in the woman's womb. Many doctors set a limit at four or five implants and freeze extra embryos.

At N.C. Memorial and Duke, the embryos are placed in vials and submerged in a tank of liquid nitrogen at minus 197 degrees Celsius. Once frozen, they remain in locked storage, wired to an alarm system that rings if the temperature changes. The embryos can remain frozen for months or years, ready to be implanted.

Martin Warns Revenge Possible If Plant Closes

By Paul Nowell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CANTON, N.C. — Gov. Jim Martin warned Wednesday that North Carolina may take retaliatory actions after Champion International announced it may have to close its Canton paper mill because of Tennessee's water color standards.

"From now on, when Tennessee paper mills want to draw down water from our lakes to flush out their color, North Carolina will put the full force of our laws behind the land owners here," Martin said after Champion's announcement.

He said North Carolina will seek stricter environmental controls on pollution from Tennessee auto emissions "gassing our mountains" and that the state will try to attract industries that are adversely affected by Tennessee's regulations.

"When they refused to issue a variance on Champion's water quality permit, I think they said to their own (Tennessee) industries to look out, this bogus environmental standard they've set might bite them next," Martin said. "We might point that out to (industry) prospects when they're looking at Tennessee and North Carolina."

Champion announced it must either close the mill or scale it down significantly in the wake of Tennessee's refusal to grant a variance of water color standards for the Pigeon River. The river, which is stained the color of coffee by the plant's discharge, flows into Tennessee 40 miles from Canton.

Some 2,000 people are employed by Champion in western North Carolina.

Legislators also discussed withholding water in Tennessee Valley Authority lakes in North Carolina or taking other steps to show their wrath.

"The western delegation is open to ideas as to how we might retaliate in some way against the state of Tennessee to show them they do have a cost" in causing Champion to close, said Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, in a speech on the Senate floor.

The company has thus far offered no specific details of its plans, employees said.

"They didn't say the (job) cuts would not be coming tomorrow or next week, but we understand they'll start cutting back in a few weeks," said Joe B. Fish, who has worked at the mill for 30 years. "It will be a gradual thing. It will probably start in the pulp mill, because that's where most of the color comes from."

Fish said many employees were bitter that Tennessee officials waited until two days before Christmas to announce a variance would not be granted.

"It ruined a lot of people's holidays," he said. "I've got a boy who's 11 years old. I don't know if I'll even have the money to buy him clothes."

Plant manager Oliver Blackwell said Champion officials are scheduled to meet with EPA officials next week in Atlanta to discuss a temporary permit to keep the plant in operation.

But one EPA official said Tennessee's stance gives the agency little room for changing discharge requirements.

"I'm not real clear on how we would write a permit knowing that a facility would be phased out," said Fritz Wagener, EPA's water quality standards coordinator.

"I guess we have to understand what their plans are before we get into the mechanics of a permit."

U.S. Rep. Jamie Clarke, D-N.C., asked the EPA Wednesday for five-year "grace period" to minimize the impact of a closing.

Rick Webb, executive director of Economic Development for Haywood County, said in an interview that recent estimates put the annual economic impact of the Champion paper mill at about $174 million.

"Last year's payroll was $100 million," he said. "That does not address the question of the emotional and social issues this will have on our families."

Webb said the timing of Champion's decision could not have been worse. It comes on the heels of an announcement by Dayco, a rubber manufacturer in Waynesville, to lay off nearly 350 people, he said. The two plants account for about 80 percent of the county's manufacturing jobs, he said.

"We've always prided ourselves on our strong industrial base," Webb said. "We never dreamed something of this nature would happen to us. It's devastating. We're bitter at the governor of Tennessee."

In his remarks at a meeting of several dozen elected officials, Martin defended Champion's decision and said the company's hands were tied.

"We've been working for over a year on this with the expectation that we had an agreement that Tennessee could accept," Martin said. "The company was willing to modernize the plant at a cost of some $300 million. The company was willing to make that kind of investment, even with a five-year permit in a friendly environment."

"Now how can they invest $300 million in a hostile environment if they have to come back five years later for another permit?"

Throughout the day, Martin tried to be optimistic, saying he would put his staff to work on bringing in new employers to western North Carolina. Martin said 16 companies were considering moving to the state or expanding their operations in North Carolina. He said Haywood County and the surrounding region would be recommended as a good place to start.

But he said not all of the jobs would pay as well as Champion, where the average annual wage is $35,000, a company spokesman said.

Martin said the message at the meeting was the same as its been all along.

"This is serious," he said following his six-and-a-half hour stay. "We have stated it clearly and honestly. We have done all we can do, but achieving 50 color units at the North Carolina-Tennessee border cannot be done."

U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms agreed. "Gov. McWhorter's decision to deny the company a variance in the water quality standards amounted to a scorched-earth judgment inasmuch as the Environmental Protection Agency has acknowledged that requirements are being made that cannot be met," Helms said.

Missile Found

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CREEDMOOR, N.C. — A residential block was evacuated after authorities found a live, World War II-vintage missile in a Creedmoor house, but explosives experts from Fort Bragg removed the missile without incident, officials said.

"It is a live missile. The safety cap was completely off and the pin was halfway out," said Major Danny Eudy of the Creedmoor Police Department.

An unidentified man volunteered the information that he had the missile in his Granville County house after he was stopped for a traffic violation Wednesday night, Eudy said.

"I don't really think he knew exactly how dangerous it was," he said. "He's had it over a year. I think he was just fascinated to have it. He said he just wanted to get rid of it."

Eudy said agents from the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms would investigate how the man obtained the anti-tank missile, which was about 2½ feet long and 3½ inches in diameter.

Two explosives experts from the 18th Airborne Division at Fort Bragg packaged the missile and were on their way back to the army base near Fayetteville just before midnight, Eudy said.

"They've got the firing pin back in it, and are using Super Glue to keep it in there," he said.

Emergency personnel were called off the scene and residents were allowed to return to their homes.

A Helping Hand

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — A loud whoosh told James "Junior" Adams something was wrong.

The sound of a tire blowing Tuesday began a five-hour ordeal for 46 youngsters that ended with the kindness of a North Carolina state trooper and a Cabarrus County restaurant.

Junior, 45 other students and five adults from Sacred Heart School in Danville, Va., left home at 8:30 a.m. and traveled 140 miles to see the Ramesses exhibit at the Mint Museum in Charlotte.

On the way home about 2 p.m. near the Mecklenburg-Cabarrus county line, they heard the whoosh.

"We pulled over and waited until the other bus took those students to the rest stop and then came back for us," Junior said. One bus continued to Danville as a repair truck was called.

But the truck didn't have the right tools, and a second truck failed to show up.

The children, who hadn't eaten since 11 a.m., grew tired and hungry.

Trooper E.J. Childers sensed the situation was growing desperate and contacted Shoney's Restaurant on U.S. 29 near I-85.

District Manager Walt Kiefer and assistant manager Raymond Walker donated hamburgers, french fries and drinks for the students and their chaperones.

"We didn't want anyone to go hungry," Walker said.

Childers and Trooper R.R. Childers ferried the meals to the rest stop shortly before 7 p.m., as repairs were under way on the bus.

"This is such a positive experience for the children," said Sophie Raoccu, a school secretary. "We've just been so impressed with the help."

Senate OKs Change In Prison Cap

RALEIGH (AP) — The North Carolina Parole Commission will be able to better manage the prison population without releasing dangerous inmates under one of two important correction bills approved by the state Senate.

One measure that could be enacted as early as today would liberalize a state law that keeps the prison population under 18,000 by letting the Parole Commission expand the pool of inmates eligible for release and community alternatives. That bill, approved by the House Correction subcommittee shortly after its Senate passage Wednesday, also would prevent the release of sex offenders, drug traffickers and other "undesirables."

The Senate voted 45-0 to approve the cap legislation and, by the same vote, backed a wide-ranging $80 million bill to provide more prison beds, expand alternatives to jail and add probation officers with an eye toward improving prison conditions. A court settlement dictates that inmates have 50 square feet of space by July 1, 1994.

The cap changes got the most attention because the current inmate population is just below the number that will trigger the release of more prisoners.

Mavretic Bares Bipartisan Pact

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — House Speaker Joe Mavretic made public the pact between Democrats and Republicans that led to his defeat of former Speaker Liston Ramsey even as he defended his insistence on secrecy until the plan was implemented.

After rejecting for a week media requests to release a letter from House GOP leader Johnathan Rhyne spelling out details of the agreement, Mavretic gave The Associated Press a copy Wednesday.

The pact includes a reorganization plan for the state House of Representatives, a promise that unnamed Ramsey allies will be stripped of power, and numerous assurances that GOP legislators and their programs will be treated with fairness and respect.

The agreement was hammered out at a secret meeting of coalition leaders in late December. Rhyne, R-Lincoln, represented the 46-member GOP delegation in negotiations with the 20 Democrats who bolted party ranks Jan. 11 to replace Ramsey with Mavretic. Rhyne wrote the letter confirming the agreement Jan. 2.

Controversy arose after Mavretic refused to release the letter. The North Carolina Press Association formally called for its release last week, contending that it was a public document and accusing Mavretic of violating the state's public-records law.

Some details were leaked to reporters Monday and Tuesday, but Mavretic said he wanted to withhold the document until he had finished assigning the representatives to their committees. All the panels have been filled except the Pensions and Retirement Committee, whose membership Mavretic said he would announce Monday.

"It is my opinion that a premature release of the agreement would have triggered lobbying pressures that would have hindered the organization of the House," he said in an interview Wednesday.

"It was a judgment on my part that it was better for me to take the heat for not releasing it than it was for a great number of members to be pressured by even greater numbers of special interests."

Although not explicitly stated in the letter, it was agreed by members of both parties that Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, would be deprived of any semblance of influence, Mavretic said.

Watkins, former chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, was Ramsey's chief lieutenant and the biggest target of criticism by members of the Mavretic coalition.

"There was a strong feeling that Representative Watkins, if allowed to be in a position of leadership, would have been a negative influence on this assembly," Mavretic said. "Whether it's earned or not ... is less important than the public perception that he is a negative factor."

Mavretic declined to identify other Ramsey allies whom the coalition members targeted. "It was kind of fuzzy," he said. "We did not sit down systematically with a hit list."

The bargain involves more than the inner workings of the House, Mavretic said. He contended that North Carolina will benefit from the infusion of new talent and ideas it will generate.

"We are moving toward institutionalizing the relationships in the House between majority members and minority members, which ... bodes well for the general public," Mavretic said.

The reorganization will spread the power and generate frequent leadership turnover, he said, allowing more legislators to develop their skills instead of leaving the Legislature in frustration because of a bottleneck at the top.

"The House is going to become kind of a farm team for the political stars of the future, for both parties," Mavretic said.

Among the 18 provisions in the letter, nearly all of which have been carried out:

— Mavretic would be elected speaker and Rep. Don Beard, D-Cumberland, would be elected speaker pro tem.

— The number of House committees would be reduced from 58 to 12, with 50 standing subcommittees. Democrats would be chairmen of all standing committees and Republicans would receive 20 of the 50 subcommittee chairmanships.

The letter identifies the subcommittees to be led by GOP members, including three of the seven Appropriations subcommittees.

— Republicans would receive roughly 40 percent of the seats on committees and subcommittees, in keeping with their representation in the entire House. They also would have proportional representation on other legislative panels such as the powerful Joint Commission on Governmental Operations, which has been all-Democratic.

— Mavretic would not meet with 50 percent or more of the committee chairmen without the minority leader or another Republican being present unless the meeting is held in public.

— Democratic members of the coalition would join Republicans in voting to seat Gov. Jim Martin's nominee to replace former Rep. Walt Windley if a dispute arose. Windley, R-Gaston, resigned in December after being charged with soliciting a prostitute. Martin's nominee, Republican W.W. Dickson, was not challenged.

The provision about Ramsey's allies said that "the persons discussed at our meeting on Friday will not be appointed committee or subcommittee chairmen or vice-chairmen because they have in the past demonstrated their opposition" to the principles on which the coalition was founded.

The letter did not say to whom it was referring. It said, however, that an exception could be made in the case of the Pensions and Retirement Committee.

Legislators Say Highway Funding Plan Progressing

RALEIGH — Despite lingering questions about how and where the money would be spent, legislators say progress is being made on crafting a highway financing package for the General Assembly to consider.

"It seems to me we are going to undertake the biggest transportation improvement program since the days of (former Gov.) Kerr Scott," House Speaker Joe Mavretic said Wednesday. Scott sponsored a highway construction program during his 1949-53 term.

Gov. Jim Martin met Tuesday with Sen. Bill Goldston, D-Rockingham, co-chairman of a legislative study committee that is crafting the package. Ward Purrington, Martin's legislative liaison, also attended.

After the meeting, Harrington endorsed increases in the taxes on motor fuels and vehicle title transfers as part of a proposed $6.5 billion program. Martin took no position during the meeting, participants said.

Goldston said Wednesday he expected to meet again soon with the governor.

"We're trying to hammer out something we can agree on," he said. Asked whether they were nearing an agreement, Goldston shrugged and replied, "Some say we're close and some say we're not."

The study committee is scheduled to meet next week. Goldston is expected to push for a vote on a package along the lines of one he proposed last fall, which would boost the gasoline tax by 5 cents per gallon, impose a new 2 percent fee on vehicle title transfers, and issue $1 billion in highway bonds for right-of-way purchases.

The package might include a provision for a statewide referendum to test its public support.

Martin said in his State of the State address he would support the study commission's recommendations.

A major sticking point has been the question of how the money would be allocated. Legislators representing rural areas have said their support of the program is contingent on all regions of the state getting a fair share for their road projects.

"My feeling all along has been that you couldn't discuss how you're going to raise the money until we have an agreement on how you distribute it and how you spend it," said Rep. Bob Hunter, D-McDowell, co-chairman of the study committee.

"If a lot of people feel they are being treated unfairly, I think you'll have problems getting it through the House."

The solution might be a compromise that would allocate a portion of the money for equal distribution to all the state's 14 highway districts and use different formulas to divide the rest, based on factors such as population and miles of unfinished roads, Hunter said.

Hunter has said he hoped for the study committee to have a package ready to submit to the General Assembly by Jan. 31. He said Wednesday he still hoped to reach the goal but "I'm not sure we can."

House Speaker Joe Mavretic said that aside from the amount of the package and allocation of funds, lawmakers must decide which road projects will get priority and how to fit them into the existing Transportation Improvement Program, a construction blueprint fashioned by the State Board of Transportation.

"There is a fairly divergent range of opinion on these matters," he said, "but I expect there to be a convergence ... within the next week."

Despite the disagreements over details, there is a broad, bipartisan agreement in the House and Senate on the need for a major financing program, Mavretic said.

Slowdown

RALEIGH (AP) — North Carolina's economy will slow down and could lapse into recession in the next couple of years, Martin administration officials told legislators as they prepared to delve into the 1989-91 budget.

C.C. Cameron, Martin's budget director, told a joint meeting of the House and Senate Appropriations and Finance committees Wednesday that "we definitely will have a slowdown ... most likely a recession ... within the next two years."

Later, Cameron's deputy, Marvin Dorman, said in an interview that the economy generally is considered in recession if it fails to grow for two consecutive quarters.

He said State Budget Office does not forecast that grim a scenario within the fiscal 1989-91 biennium, although a couple of quarters are expected to have growth rates of less than 1 percent.

Convicted

SHELBY, N.C. (AP) — A Cleveland County jury Wednesday convicted Michael Brian Church of scalding his stepson's buttocks and burning the child's face with a bowl of hot oatmeal.

Church, 21, of Fallston, was sentenced to 10 years in prison. He was given an 8-year sentence for felonious child abuse and two years for misdemeanor child abuse, to be served consecutively.

Church was found innocent of assault and a second count of felonious child abuse for skull fractures and burns to Travis Gammons' foot.

Ridley Named

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — James R. Ridley, the president and chief executive of Integon Corp., has been elected chairman of the company.

Ridley replaces Gene E. Phillips, the former president of Southmark Corp., who resigned as Integon's chairman last week. William S. Friedman, the former vice chairman of Southmark, also resigned from Integon's board last week.

Those resignations were part of a larger shake-up at Southmark, a real-estate investment company based in Dallas. Southmark is the former parent of Integon and now owns about 89 percent of Integon's stock.

Ridley became president and chief executive of Integon in 1982. At that time, Integon was owned by Ashland Oil Co. Southmark bought Integon for $157 million in 1985.

Appointment

RALEIGH (AP) — Gov. Jim Martin has appointed William H. Stephenson of Garner as chairman of the N.C. Industrial Commission.

Stephenson, 61, replaces Ernest C. Pearson, who recently resigned as chairman to become deputy secretary of budget and administration in the N.C. Department of Commerce.

Stephenson, who will earn an annual salary of $57,840, has worked for the Industrial Commission since 1948 and has served as a commissioner since 1970.

The industrial commission hears and determines matters in dispute between employees and employers and claims for compensation under the Workers Compensation Act.

Martin also appointed Durham attorney J. Randolph Ward as a member of the commission. Ward will serve until April 30, 1991.

Ward, 35, will assume his duties on Feb. 10.

Grant Extended

DURHAM (AP) — The National Cancer Institute has extended for five years the Duke Comprehensive Cancer Center's core grant, officials say.

The grant will total about $15 million over five years. Principle investigator on the grant is Dr. Robert Bast Jr., director of the cancer center.

"This grant recognizes and supports the outstanding efforts of more than 200 physicians and scientists who are working every day at Duke to care more effectively for cancer patients, to understand the causes of cancer and to cure this disease," Bast said.

Findings Released

RALEIGH (AP) — The State Bureau of Investigation has released its findings of an investigation into the dismissal of several drug cases in Harnett County District Court last week because of an SBI agent's failure to appear.

Charges against seven men arrested in "Operation Crackdown," a drug roundup in Dunn in November 1988, were dismissed Friday when the undercover drug officer failed to show up for the probable cause hearing.

SBI agent P.E. Sweatt, the undercover officer who reportedly made cocaine purchases from the defendants, did not show, said assistant district attorney Phil Fusco. A Dunn newspaper reported Sweatt had missed five previous hearings for the defendants, causing numerous continuances.

SBI Director Robert Morgan said Wednesday his department was only notified of two hearings for the defendants and that agents were subpoenaed only once. On that date, Morgan said, three agents were present and one or two cases were tried.

Sweatt was not able to be in Harnett County that day, Morgan said, because he was in Bladen County Superior Court in Elizabethtown.

Driver Suit

CHERRYVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A U.S. District judge has ordered Carolina Freight Carriers Corp. to rehire a female truck driver fired in 1986 and pay her more than $100,000 in back wages with interest.

U.S. District Court Judge James McMillan ruled Jeannette Guffey had been fired illegally in July 1986. He said the company must rehire her within five days of receiving a written request for reinstatement.

"All I wanted was my job back," Mrs. Guffey said. "It's the American dream, to be able to provide for your family and get all the benefits available to you. Nobody else in North Carolina has benefits as good as Carolina Freight's."

McMillan ordered the company to pay Mrs. Guffey $77,977 in back pay from July 29, 1986, to August 27, 1988; $895.17 per week from that date until she accepts or rejects a job offer, which adds up to about $14,400 so far; and minimal interest of $7,262.

Apple Crop

HENDERSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — If warm weather in western North Carolina continue for another 10 days, this year's apple crop may be in deep trouble, said R.D. Hodges, an assistant Henderson County extension agent.

"It's the warmest January I've ever seen here," Hodges said Wednesday. "I remember plenty of warm days in January, but not two weeks of it like we've had this time. One lady told me her forsythia had already bloomed three times. Of course, the buds and blooms that have already appeared will be killed back when we have a freeze. And there really isn't much we can do...except talk about it."

Hodges said buds may begin to appear in 10 days of warm weather. After that, a killing frost would prevent fruit from forming, he said.

Retirement

PINEHURST, N.C. (AP) — The president of Sandhills Community College is retiring and 40 people have applied for the job, according to George W. Little, chairman of the board of trustees.

An 11-member search committee has begun reviewing applications of those who want to succeed Raymond A. Stone, the first and only president of the 25-year-old school.

Little said Stone's retirement is effective July 1. A replacement is to be picked by May 1, he said.

Little said about 25 percent of the applicants are from North Carolina and the rest are from areas nationwide.

Sentenced

DURHAM (AP) — Stephen Jackson Faucette was sentenced Wednesday to life plus 15 years in prison for the first-degree murder of his ex-girlfriend and the burglary of her house.

Jurors returned a decision for life imprisonment on the murder charge late Wednesday afternoon after nearly three full days of deliberations.

The 15 additional years for first-degree burglary were imposed by Superior Court Judge J.B. Allen.

Former Jackson Manager In Line To Become Democrats' Party Chief

By Donald M. Rothberg
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Ronald H. Brown, the establishment lawyer who played a key backstage role in Jesse Jackson's anti-establishment presidential campaign, is poised to take the spotlight himself as the first black to head a major political party in the United States.

Brown's ascension to the Democratic Party chairmanship became all but certain Wednesday when he was endorsed by his chief rival for the post.

It was a remarkably swift triumph for the 47-year-old political veteran who grew up in Harlem but attended predominantly white schools on New York's Upper East Side.

His parents were graduates of Howard University, one of the nation's premier black colleges, but they sent their only child to Middlebury College in Vermont, where he was one of the few blacks. He now serves on the college's board of trustees and is chairman of the board of the Kennedy Institute for Politics at Harvard.

Brown worked for Sen. Edward M. Kennedy and studied law under Mario Cuomo. His ties to the Democratic Party's liberal wing are firm, and were cited by opponents to his bid for the party chairmanship.

Former Rep. Jim Jones of Oklahoma, who said he was remaining in the race at least long enough to assess if he had a chance to win, said the question for Democrats is "whether we're going to be perceived as mainstream or to the left of the mainstream."

The breakthrough for Brown came when Richard Wiener, chairman of the Michigan Democratic Party, abruptly announced, "I am ending my campaign for Democratic National chair."

"From the outset of my campaign, I have stated that the next chair of our party would be either myself or Ron Brown — and properly so. By taking this action today, I believe that this race has effectively ended and that Ron Brown will achieve a first-ballot victory."

The Democratic National Committee will elect the new chairman on Feb. 10.

In a statement thanking Wiener for his support, Brown said, "I now have more than enough votes to win the chair of the DNC. I am very, very pleased and look forward to leading a united party for the next four years."

He said his first priority would be "to reach out to all Democrats. Our strength as a party depends upon our ability to appeal to Americans in every region with a message of strength and hope."

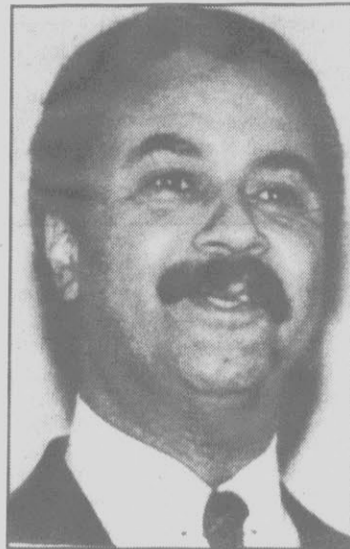

The only other candidate remaining in the race was former Rep. James Stanton of Ohio, who had no immediate comment on the latest development.

Assuming that Brown succeeds Paul G. Kirk Jr. as chairman, he may face tough sledding achieving his goal of uniting the party, particularly in the South.

"Ron is probably the most qualified guy in the race," said Florida Democratic Party chairman Charles Whitehead. "But the perception in this state is that Ron is Jesse's and Ted's and labor's guy. ... It poses a political problem a little bit in Florida."

But Whitehead said he would do "anything I can to help Ron overcome that perception."

Less amenable to a Brown victory was Alabama chairman John Baker, who has said it would represent a triumph for the "ultra-liberal" wing of the party. Baker said he would ignore a national party headed by Brown.

RONALD H. BROWN

Southern opponents of Brown argued that election of a liberal as chairman would drive from the Democratic Party those whites who have remained loyal — a dwindling bloc in recent elections.

Brown has portrayed the opposition to his candidacy as racially motivated.

"People will look you in the face and say you have the credentials for the job, but ..." he said. "It is race-conscious behavior."

He said the only way to overcome that attitude is "to put light on it and make people address it."

For a decade Brown moved smoothly through the capital's corridors of power, winning ready acceptance when he ran the Urban League's Washington office and then as Kennedy's general counsel and staff director on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

He was deputy manager of Kennedy's unsuccessful challenge of President Jimmy Carter for the 1980

Democratic presidential nomination.

When that campaign ended, Brown accepted an offer to become a partner in one of the capital's major law firms. With clients that included the Japanese electronics industry and the government of Haiti, Brown earned a six-figure salary and drove a Jaguar.

He and his wife, Alma, have a son, Michael, who is in law school, and a daughter, Tracy, who is a senior at Boston College.

While pursuing his lucrative law practice, Brown remained active in Democratic Party affairs.

Jackson was rebuffed when he tried to recruit Brown to manage his presidential campaign. But in May 1988, when only Jackson and Michael Dukakis remained in the race, Brown agreed to serve as Jackson's convention manager.

While Democrats were certain Dukakis would be their nominee they were troubled by the question, "What does Jesse want?" Jackson was sending mixed signals about the vice presidential nomination and his demands for platform planks.

But Brown managed to deflect a potentially divisive platform debate over Middle East policy and was instrumental in arranging the convention's closing-night show of unity, when Jackson and his family joined Dukakis at the podium.

A Tooth May Cost Fortune

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — It's now an eye for an eye and a tooth for $309,000, according to a survey taken for root canal specialists who wanted to know how much monetary value Americans place on their front teeth.

The survey taken last month for the American Association of Endodontists asked 1,023 men and women to name the smallest amount of money they would accept for one of their healthy front teeth.

Dr. Joseph D. Maggio, president of the association, said almost a quarter of those surveyed refused to specify how much, saying they would not sell such a tooth for any amount of money.

The average amount cited by respondents who said they would take money was $309,000, Maggio said Wednesday night.

"This survey tells us that people understand the importance of a tooth to their health and quality of life," said Maggio, an endodontist from Oak Brook. "A tooth is like a computer chip. It's small and the materials that make it up are worth only pennies, but that's far exceeded by its functional value."

Maggio estimated the chemical value of an average-sized front tooth at about 12 cents.

Maggio said the survey specified healthy front teeth because those are the ones most people would be least willing to part with.

"Obviously, we wouldn't have gotten the same results if we had asked about wisdom teeth," he said.

Maggio noted that the survey, conducted by the Opinion Research Corp. of Princeton, N.J., found that older respondents were much less willing to sell a tooth.

Among respondents at least 65 years old, 42 percent said they would accept no amount of money for a front tooth. A similar response came from only 13 percent of those between ages 18 and 34.

"It could be that older people already have suffered some tooth loss and know first hand that nothing can really replace a natural tooth," Maggio suggested.

As an endodontist, Maggio believes that everything possible should be done to save an existing tooth, rather than pulling it and replacing it.

He estimates that more than 22 million root canal procedures, in which the tooth is saved by removing the nerve, were performed in the United States last year, compared with some 40 million tooth extractions.

Grooming The Groundhog

Octoraro Orphie, the weather forecasting groundhog of Quarryville, Pa., gets a last-minute grooming from Diana Bushong. On Feb. 2 at 2:31 GST (Groundhog Standard Time, according to Quarryville), the stuffed Orphie will join his human companions in top hats and white cloaks to see if a live groundhog will see his shadow or not. The result will indicate a stormy or mild spring ahead, so the 81-year old tradition contends.

Democrats Urge National Service

Education Loans Could Be Linked

By Robert Shogan
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Democratic lawmakers, seeking a new, centrist approach to social programs, Wednesday introduced a sweeping proposal for national-service legislation intended to harness the latent energy of voluntarism to combat such problems as illiteracy, homelessness and crime.

Described by its sponsors as an updated version of the GI Bill of Rights, the legislation would create a "citizen corps" whose members could choose either civilian or military service. On completion of their service, volunteers would receive cash vouchers that could be used to help finance college education, vocational or job training or for a down payment on a home.

The proposal combines the goals of upward mobility and social justice with the patriotic notion of national service.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., one of the bill's principal sponsors, called the measure "a major thrust in how we deliver social services in America."

Speaking at a Capitol Hill press conference, Nunn said he was pleased that President Bush had given voluntarism a boost in his inaugural address, during which he urged "a new engagement in the lives of others — a new activism."

Democratic backers said that they hoped to gain bi-partisan support for the bill. Nevertheless it was clear that the measure could have important political implications for the future of the Democratic Party, which is struggling to rehabilitate itself after a series of presidential defeats.

Nunn and another principal sponsor, newly elected Sen. Charles Robb, D-Va., are leaders of the Democratic Leadership Council. This group of moderate to conservative party leaders has made enactment of national-service legislation a major part of its overall effort to wean the Democratic Party away from its longtime dependence on big government and big spending.

Nunn contended that not only would the national-service proposal not require a large federal bureaucracy to administer, as many existing government programs do, but also that it would steer away from the notion of entitlements, another hallmark of many social programs.

"This is not a guaranteed benefit," Nunn said. "It's a guaranteed opportunity."

Under the plan, national service would ultimately become a prerequisite for federal aid for most students who now receive such support in the form of loans or grants based on economic need.

Advocates of the proposal also assert that it would appeal more to middle-class youth than many programs created by President Johnson's Great Society that benefit mainly lower income groups.

The Republican view of voluntarism has generally focused on the private sector or on much more limited government programs.

Nunn contrasted the citizen corps proposal with a plan offered by President Bush during the campaign for a part-time volunteer corps called Youth Engaged In Service. Nunn said that program was aimed mainly at the affluent and based on the concept of what he called "noblesse oblige."

Though the moving force for the national-service proposal has been the relatively conservative Democratic Leadership Council, backing for the general idea has come from some liberal Democrats, such as Sen. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md. At the press conference Mikulski outlined her own version of national service, which allows for part-time, neighborhood community service, modeled after the National Guard.

"Every one seems to have a sense of entitlement and no sense of obligation," Mikulski said.

Sponsors of the bill acknowledged that their proposal would require lengthy study and debate before it could be enacted.

One problem is opposition expected from students and others who would object to making national service a requirement for federal aid to college students.

Cost is another obstacle. Charles Moskos, University of Northwestern sociologist and one of the chief architects of the plan estimated that the citizen corps would eventually require an annual budget of roughly $5 billion based on a civilian volunteer force of 500,000, though he contended that the expense would be partly offset by cutting back on programs for student aid and job training.

As envisaged by its sponsors, the citizen corps would be managed on the local and state levels by councils made up of non-profit organizations and other community groups, funded by grants by a public corporation for national service.

Civilian volunteers could serve one to two years, getting a subsistence wage of $100 a week, working in education, health care, conservation or public safety. For each year in the corps civilian volunteers would receive a $10,000 voucher.

Volunteers choosing military service would get $24,000 vouchers after two years of active duty, or $12,000 if they choose reserve status.

Reformists Say Big Ditch Won't Stop Border Crossings

WASHINGTON (AP) — A private group today proposed elaborate measures to seal the southern border against illegal immigrants but derided government plans for a car-blocking ditch south of San Diego as "too little too late."

The Federation for American Immigration Reform proposed installing stronger and higher metal fences, concrete barriers and electronic surveillance equipment along the 200 miles of the Mexican border where most illegal immigration occurs.

"If we are to regain control of the southern border, we will have to begin to deter illegal entry rather than merely apprehend those hundreds of thousands of illegal aliens who cross our northern and southern land borders every year," said the report. "Locking uninvited gate crashers out ... is just good common sense."

The report was issued a day after the Border Patrol announced plans to build a 5-foot-deep, 4-mile-long ditch in an attempt to stop drug smugglers from driving across a flat desert from Mexico to San Diego.

The ditch, which Associate Attorney General Francis A. Keating II likened to a "buried Berlin Wall," will traverse an area east of San Ysidro, Calif., that is a major drug smuggling route.

But Patrick Burns, assistant director of FAIR, said "the drainage ditch is too little too late if it is to be taken seriously as a method of deterring illegal entry."

Burns' group proposed charging a $2 user fee for every person who crosses the border to finance construction of better fences and stepped-up border patrols.

"Where a fence exists at all, it often lies torn and tattered," the report said. "Gaping holes invite illegal entry" and efforts to patch them "amount to bailing water in a sinking ship."

The non-partisan organization's advisory committee includes former Attorney General William French Smith, ex-Sen. Walter D. Huddleston, D-Ky., and former Colo. Gov. Richard Lamm. It issued its recommendations in a report entitled "Ten Steps to Securing America's Borders."

Defector Claims Latin Rebels Had Arabs' Aid

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A veteran Cuban diplomat who defected to the United States says he was a regular participant in a Palestinian-backed gun-running operation on behalf of rebel groups in three Latin American countries.

Hector Aguililla Saladrigas, who spent most of his 14-year diplomatic career involved in Middle East affairs, said he defected last fall after becoming disillusioned with Cuba's subversive activities and widespread official corruption.

Aguililla's defection was not publicly disclosed until the State Department made him available for an interview Tuesday with The Associated Press.

He had been assigned to the Cuban Embassy in Madagascar but last Oct. 10, during a transit stop while en route to take up his duties there, he asked U.S. officials for political asylum for himself, his wife and two children, aged 13 and 10. He declined to say where the request was made.

Much of his time since his defection has been spent in CIA debriefings.

Aguililla, 35, offered a rare glimpse into the role Cuba has played in cooperation with Palestinian radicals in the shadowy international arms trafficking business.

He said that with Palestinian help, Cuba arranged for the transport of large quantities of Western-made weaponry to guerrilla groups in El Salvador, Guatemala and Chile and also provides training of a "terrorist nature" to Palestinian militants.

Aguililla said that between 1980 and 1983 while he served as the second ranking official at the Cuban Embassy in Damascus, he routinely made trips to Lebanon's Bekaa Valley where the trunk of his car was loaded with rifles, pistols, revolvers and smoke bombs.

He said Palestinian groups, particularly two pro-Marxist factions, were the principal source of weaponry, which he was able to transport back to Syria without a customs check because of the diplomatic plates on his car.

On occasion, he said, a top Cuban intelligence officer flew to Damascus for larger-scale arms transfers.

Weapons of U.S., Israeli or Italian manufacture were favored because "socialist involvement" in the arms trafficking scheme could thus be concealed, he said.

"The Palestinians were a good source of Western arms because they had a lot of contacts to get them," he added.

"The policy of Cuba has always been to export the revolution," Aguililla said as he recounted his experiences in the 75-minute interview. He referred on occasion to a single page of typewritten notes he used as a memory aid.

Speaking in Spanish while chain-smoking cigarettes, Aguililla said he does not know if the arms smuggling operation by way of Syria continued beyond 1983 because he left the country in early 1984. Since then he served brief stints at the Cuban embassies in Iran and Kuwait.

Aguililla said he was troubled by evidence of widespread official corruption in Cuba, a problem that has been acknowledged by President Fidel Castro.

Healing Old Wounds

Kent State Holds Groundbreaking For Memorial To Slain Students

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KENT, Ohio — Kent State University officials broke ground for a scaled-down memorial to the four students killed by Ohio National Guardsmen in 1970, despite a silent protest by students and donors who say the new design is inadequate.

The groundbreaking Wednesday for the May 4 Memorial followed unanimous approval by university trustees to build a $100,000 memorial on a campus hill near where guardsmen shot 13 students, killing four, on May 4, 1970.

About 30 people stood in silence about 20 yards from speakers at the groundbreaking, holding signs protesting plans for the memorial.

The trustees Nov. 15 agreed to reduce the cost of the memorial from $1.2 million to $100,000 after a fund-raising campaign netted only $40,000.

"I don't like the autocratic method by which decisions were made," said Glenn Frank, a geology professor at the university for 32 years who recently retired.

Frank said he was among donors who, along with a group of students known as the May 4 Task Force, hired attorneys to represent their concern that the original design not be altered.

"They can't just use their money and build something else," said attorney William Whittaker of Kent, who with John Lawson of Cleveland represents the donors and students.

Whittaker said they were prepared Wednesday to ask Portage County Common Pleas Judge George Martin to issue a temporary restraining order halting all work on the memorial.

However, KSU attorneys agreed to contact all donors regarding the change in memorial plans before construction starts, said Lawson, adding that a restraining order was not necessary.

About 300 people turned out for the groundbreaking, where Dean Kahler, one of nine students wounded when the guardsmen fired on the students, spoke from his wheelchair.

"There is still a stigma and that incident affects all the alumni," said Kahler, who was crippled in the shooting.

Securities Firm Firing Its Chief

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Embattled junk bond wizard Michael R. Milken is being fired from Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. without last year's reported nine-digit pay, according to a plea bargain to settle the nation's largest securities fraud case.

The bad news for Milken, considered the driving force behind Drexel's leap from obscurity to become the fifth largest U.S. securities firm, came in a 12-page plea agreement signed by Drexel officials Tuesday and made public Wednesday.

Under the agreement, Drexel will not be prosecuted for any activities in the last decade involving its bond traders or its dealings with now-imprisoned stock speculator Ivan F. Boesky. In exchange, the firm agreed to plead guilty to six felony counts and pay a record $650 million in fines and restitution.

Drexel also agreed it would not pay Milken's brother, senior company aide Lowell J. Milken, half of what is due him for 1988.

Milken's attorney, Martin Flumenbaum, condemned the deal as "punishment without trial, sentence before verdict."

Both Milken's and his brother's names were named along with Drexel in a Securities and Exchange Commission insider trading civil lawsuit in September.

Neither brother has been charged with any criminal activity and both have denied wrongdoing. But Michael Milken is considered one of the biggest remaining targets of the investigation and is expected to be indicted soon on racketeering and fraud charges.

Milken heads Drexel's Beverly Hills, Calif.-based high yield "junk" bond department and is one of the most dynamic financiers of the decade. Said to be one of the country's wealthiest people, Milken reportedly makes $200 million a year, mostly in a yearly bonus paid in the following year.

Denying him his expected income and bonuses for 1988 would go a long way toward defraying the cost of Drexel's settlement of criminal charges.

The agreement also required Drexel to pay $500 million of the $650 million penalty on the day it enters a guilty plea, a date U.S. Attorney Rudolph Giuliani said will not be set until after the SEC approves the settlement.

A Drexel lawyer said that approval may be worked out by early next week, according to a court transcript unsealed Wednesday.

"We are meeting with them almost on daily basis eight or nine hours a day," Drexel lawyer Thomas F. Curinn told U.S. District Judge Kimba Wood at a closed hearing Tuesday.

"And we may well have an agreement with the SEC, particularly if we work through the weekend, by next Monday or Tuesday," he added, according to the transcript.

Drexel also must pay 8.5 percent interest on the initial $500 million up until the day it pleads guilty.

The judge ordered the transcript and the plea bargain unsealed despite a request for secrecy from Drexel. Lawyers for The Associated Press and The New York Times had sought the action.

Flumenbaum called the deal to deny Milken his compensation for 1988 "a violation of due process and an infringement of Mr. Milken's constitutional rights," but he added, "There is no change in Mr. Milken's position."

Lowell Milken's lawyer, Michael Armstrong, said, "Drexel chief executive Fred Joseph has consistently maintained he has no indication Lowell Milken did anything wrong."

The six felony counts, which were detailed Tuesday, included allegations of illegal dealings by Drexel with Boesky and the defunct securities firm, Princeton-Newport Partners.

The agreement called for Drexel to pay $300 million in criminal fines and civil penalties.

Reagan To Write For Millions

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — After a two-term presidency during which he blasted kiss-and-tell books by aides, Ronald Reagan will get a chance to do his own talking with a book deal that is expected to bring millions.

Reagan has signed a contract with Simon & Schuster to write his memoirs, the publishing house said Wednesday.

"I've got my pen in hand and I'm ready to get started," Reagan said in a statement released by the publisher.

The financial arrangements would not be disclosed, Reagan spokesman Mark Weinberg said.

Before the announcement, literary agent Irving "Swiftly" Lazar, a longtime Reagan friend, said every major publisher was bidding for the Reagan book. He added, "It probably will bring $5 million to $7 million."

Norman Brokaw, a literary agent who has handled book deals for Reagan administration figures Alexander Haig, Caspar Weinberger, Donald Regan and Larry Speakes, agreed.

"In the current market with the success of Ronald Reagan's presidency, the books should be worth in excess of $5 million," he said.

In his statement, Reagan said he was "anxious to begin work on this book and to share insights with the American people."

"I have been fortunate in my public career to have been allowed the opportunity to serve the people and through this book I will let them know how the 'American miracle' came about," Reagan said. "This will be an honest and straightforward look at where we have been, with some thoughts on where we're going."

Reagan will "write the book himself, as far as I know," without a co-author or ghostwriter, said Julia Knickerbocker, a Simon & Schuster spokeswoman.

Ms. Knickerbocker said Simon & Schuster also would issue a collection of Reagan's speeches, with introductions written by Reagan about the context and effect on public policy and opinion.

That book is to appear within a year. No date was set for the memoirs.

Congress Casts Cold Water On Plan For S&L Patron Fee

By Dave Skidmore
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Congress wasted little time sticking a pin into President Bush's trial balloon suggesting that depositors pay for rescuing the savings and loan industry. Bush's Treasury secretary, Nicholas F. Brady, said Wednesday his staff is looking into a variety of revenue-raising options, including a proposal to charge depositors in banks, S&Ls and credit unions a 25-cent fee for every $100 in their accounts.

Bush, in an interview, stressed that he hasn't made any decisions, but he said, "That is one option." The trial balloon stirred a furor on Capitol Hill where Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., predicted, "It's going to be blown out of the water." Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, said through an aide, "There is not a member of the (banking) committee who would vote for it." Although Bush isn't expected to endorse a plan until next month, the House Budget Committee was meeting today to examine the depositor fee and other ways to raise money for the S&L crisis. The committee was scheduled to hear from the top S&L regulator, Federal Home Loan Bank Board Chairman M. Danny Wall, and the chairman of the insurance fund for commercial banks, L. William Seidman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. Others testifying include private analysts and representatives of industry lobby groups. Seidman said Wednesday that he opposes any plan that would stick banks with the cost of the S&L cleanup. "In general we have said it is unfair to have the banking system pay for the errors of the S&L industry, but we have always recognized that it's a possibility," he said. Last year, federal regulators pledged more than $38 billion to close 205 insolvent S&Ls. More than 350 other insolvent institutions remain open and billions of dollars more will be required. The Washington Post reported today that a forthcoming congressional study will criticize some of the nation's largest accounting firms for failing to uncover fraud and mismanagement at S&Ls.

The General Accounting Office, the investigative arm of Congress, found that a dozen failed S&Ls were given "clean audits" — meaning no problems were found — shortly before they went under, the newspaper said.

So far, no single proposal for bailing out the industry has gained widespread support.

Rep. Jim Leach, R-Iowa, a senior member of the House Banking Committee, said the administration's decision to float the deposit fee plan "underscores how bad all the alternatives are."

"The nature of the solutions is they are going to be uncomfortable. ... Our choices are potentially increasing taxes, potentially increasing the budget deficit or some sort of deposit insurance premium increase," he said.

One option under Treasury scrutiny is a user fee paid by mortgage borrowers. Other choices involve various ways to borrow the money, either on or off budget, with the Treasury paying the interest.

A variation strongly opposed by S&L lobby groups calls for the Treasury to issue bonds whose principal would be covered by the industry-owned, regional Federal Home Loan Banks. Only the annual interest payments by the Treasury would count toward the budget deficit.

Others say putting all of the S&L spending on-budget would be the cheapest alternative in the long run, but that would greatly complicate the Bush administration's efforts to bring the 1990 budget deficit under the $100 billion Gramm-Rudman limit.

Rep. Willis D. Gradison Jr., R-Ohio, a member of the budget panel, advocates putting S&L spending on-budget, but exempting it from the Gramm-Rudman limits. He argues that S&Ls costs already exist as a federal liability and therefore shouldn't count as new spending.

Meanwhile, White House chief of staff John Sununu maintained that a deposit insurance fee is not a tax and wouldn't violate Bush's "Read my lips: no new taxes" pledge. Sununu called it "an adjustment upward of the current premium structure."

Sununu noted that banks and S&Ls have paid deposit insurance premiums since 1934. But, he says the premiums were set too low to cover the true risks involved and should undergo a "modernization."

The U.S. League of Savings Institutions, the industry's largest trade group, is proposing a plan that would lower deposit insurance premiums for S&Ls, which currently pay nearly 2½ times the fees paid by banks.

The league would create a new agency, called the Resolution Corporation to shoulder all of the cost of paying for currently insolvent S&Ls and any S&L that failed in the next three years. A new Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. would be created, collecting lower deposit insurance fees from healthy S&Ls.

Bankers, Customers Reject Fee Proposal

By Mike Feinsilber
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

All over America, bankers and their depositors are taking potshots at what looks to them like a Bush administration tax that fails the administration's own "duck test." To them, it looks like a duck, it quacks like a duck, and it's a tax in duck's feathers.

In question is a proposal, offered by Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady and defended as "one option" by President Bush, to impose a fee of 25 cents on every $100 deposited into a federally-insured savings and loan institution, bank or credit union.

The revenue raised would help bail out the government's S&L insurance fund.

"I think it is a terrible idea," Gerald Martel, president of First Federal Savings and Loan of Lewiston, Maine, said Wednesday when the idea first flew.

"I don't have a clear answer on how you solve this problem in an equitable manner," Martel said, "but I don't think applying a tax is an answer."

Not a tax, said Bush, gamely. "I will answer the question with a question. Is (it) a tax when the person pays the fee to go to Yosemite Park, using the park?"

John Sununu, his chief of staff, tried calling it "an adjustment upward of the current premium structure."

Sununu added that it "does not pass the duck test and therefore is not a tax."

The duck analogy arose — on every lip in Washington — because only a week ago Richard Darman, Bush's nominee to be budget director, told senators the president remains opposed to any new taxes and won't try to fool people by playing on words. "I think the burden of that is the duck test — if it looks like a duck, it's a duck," Darman said.

To Marlin Fitzwater, Bush's press spokesman, the idea was not a duck; "what you're looking at today is a trial balloon," he said.

A little later, Fitzwater took that back, circulating through the White House press room, saying, "It was not an intentional trial balloon."

Whatever. Out in America, it laid an egg.

"What I see is a constituency of 240 million people calling their congressmen about it," said William A. Ferguson, chief operating officer at French Market Homestead Federal Savings Association in New Orleans.

"I don't think it would be popular," Ferguson said. "Whether it's right or wrong, whether it's the best alternative or not, I don't think this will gather the popular support to be implemented."

"I would mind a lot," said Amy Davis of Little Rock, Ark. "I'm the kind of person who has a little bit set back in savings, nothing to brag about. And I don't think it's right I should pay for their problems."

"I can't believe they really think this is a solution to the problem," said Norman M. Coulson, president of GlenFed Inc., in Glendale, Calif., parent of one of the nation's top five S&Ls. "One of the problems in our country is our savings rates are not as high as they should be and this is just another impediment."

He made a point familiar to Washington, where the public's low rate of savings is often deplored. Americans saved only 3.2 cents of every disposable dollar in 1987, the lowest rate in 40 years.

"What's the difference between charging them on their income tax and doing this?" Coulson asked, referring to opposition in some quarters to using taxpayers' money to bail out insolvent S&Ls.

"The depositors ... look at how much interest they are going to earn on their dollars, and if you have an additional assessment to them they're just going to withdraw it and the cost will be borne by the institution," Coulson said. "The consumer would have the opportunity to go to a non-insured institution."

"I don't think it should always come from the little man per se," said depositor Terryann Rutherford at French Market Homestead. It's hard to always say the government (ought to pay), it's hard to say the little man (ought to pay)," Rutherford said.

"But it just seems like someone is always coming by the little man and saying, 'Thank you.'"

South African Judge Sets Off Furor With Light Sentence For White Man

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — The most prominent liberal member of parliament said today that she will seek the impeachment of a judge for his lenient sentencing of a white farmer who beat a black worker to death.

Helen Suzman's announcement came as the Johannesburg Bar Council, in a rare denunciation of a judicial decision, said it was outraged by the sentence.

The farmer, Jacobus Vorster, tied one of his workers to a tree and beat him with fists and whips over a two-day period in December 1987 because the black man, Eric Sambo, accidentally killed one of Vorster's dogs with a tractor.

In November, Justice J.J. Strydom gave Vorster a five-year sentence that was suspended on condition he pay a 3,000 rand ($1,360) fine and pay 130 rand ($55) a month to Sambo's widow and children for five years.

The lawyers' council, in a statement today in the Johannesburg newspaper Business Day, said the suspended jail term and fine were "so grossly inappropriate as to induce not simply a state of shock, but one of outrage."

The sentence imposed by Strydom in the northern town of Louis Trichardt occurred after the 22-year-old Vorster pleaded guilty to culpable homicide, an intermediate charge between murder and manslaughter when there is no clear proof of premeditation.

The judge said Vorster's guilt was lessened because of his youth and the fact that he had consumed liquor prior to the assault.

Mrs. Suzman, the longest-serving parliament member with the anti-apartheid Progressive Federal Party, said she would move for Strydom's impeachment when parliament reconvenes Feb. 3.

She described the sentence as "outrageously lenient."

The Johannesburg Bar Council said it usually did not comment on court rulings, but felt this case was exceptional.

"If there grew up in the community a belief that such a crime could merit so trivial a punishment, the maintenance of law and order would be gravely endangered, and no law-abiding citizen would be safe from violent and callous killers," the council said.

Vorster's sentence contrasts with the death sentences issued to several blacks who are awaiting execution at Pretoria Central prison for murdering white farmers.

Military Vows Revenge For Ex-Chief's Death

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — The Honduran military vowed retribution for the assassination of former armed forces chief Gen. Gustavo Adolfo Alvarez Martinez, a key supporter of the Nicaraguan rebels.

Officials said Alvarez, the founder of the U.S.-backed anti-Sandinista movement in Honduras, was slain Wednesday when six gunmen riddled the car he was sitting in outside his home in the capital's Florencia district.

The armed forces said Wednesday that Alvarez, 56, had been "vilely assassinated" and it "deeply mourned the tragic death."

In a news release, it "energetically condemned the extremist forces that try to fill our country with blood and terror" and promised to "act according to the law against those who violate the norms of the law and human dignity, trying to upset tranquility and the democratic stability of our nation."

Radio America, a local station, said anonymous callers claimed responsibility on behalf of the Popular Liberation Forces, a leftist extremist group. Police said they had no evidence to confirm the claim.

It was the third assassination in Honduras in three weeks. Previously killed were a Nicaraguan rebel commander and a reputed druglord's lawyer.

As head of the national police in 1981, Alvarez became the godfather of the Contra rebels by telling the late CIA director William Casey forces opposed to Nicaragua's ruling leftist Sandinistas could operate from Honduran territory.

Police said the driver of the former military chief's car also was killed in Wednesday morning's shooting and Alvarez's son-in-law was wounded.

Alvarez was chief of the armed forces from 1982 to 1984 under President Roberto Suazo Cordova and frequently denounced the Sandinistas.

Trained in the United States and Argentina, he was once considered the most powerful figure in Honduras.

Alvarez also presided over the beginning of joint U.S.-Honduran military exercises in Honduras that were designed to intimidate the rulers of neighboring Nicaragua.

The Contras, Alvarez once pledged, would "wage a war without quarter against international communism, which has now taken over Nicaragua."

Under his original proposal to Casey, described in the book "Banana Diplomacy" by journalist Roy Gutman, Alvarez proposed using the rebels to provoke a border incident with the Sandinistas in Nicaragua. Honduras then would ask the United States for assistance, permitting U.S. intervention.

Alvarez also supervised a counterinsurgency campaign against suspected Honduran guerrillas that U.S. officials privately viewed as a success.

Human rights activists charged that the campaign relied on military-linked death squads and at least 100 people disappeared or were jailed illegally. Honduran forces denied the charges.

Honduran officials have kept a low profile on the Contras and officially denied their presence on Honduran territory, even when thousands operated from border camps.

Alvarez's denunciations of the Sandinistas brought embarrassing attention to the U.S. role in Honduras and Honduran support for the Contras.

About 12,000 Contra fighters now are believed to be in Honduran border camps.

New Quake Hits Soviet Republic

SHARORA, U.S.S.R. — A new tremor today rattled the Central Asian republic of Tadzhikistan near villages where hundreds were killed this week by a quake-triggered mudslide. No damage or deaths were reported.

The official Tass news agency said the tremor struck without incident at 2 a.m. about 15 miles southwest of the republic's capital of Dushanbe.

A spokesman for the U.S. Geological Survey in Golden, Colo., Russ Needham, said the quake — "quite probably an aftershock" — was not large enough to register on American monitoring equipment.

The epicenter of today's tremor was 18 miles southwest of Sharora, which was smothered by a mudslide following the quake early Monday that measured 5.4 on the Richter scale.

The slide buried one-story mud-brick and prefabricated concrete homes in three remote mountain villages and killed 274 people, officials said.

In Sharora, it left a soft, moonlike landscape of rolling, moist earth and no signs of life except for white roofs that peeked through the grime or scraps of brightly colored cloth carried by a morning breeze from the hills.

On Wednesday, bulldozers, cranes and dumptrucks worked to clear Sharora's main streets of crumbled brick, broken pieces of roofing, trees and mud.

Since custom in this mostly Moslem republic north of Afghanistan and China is not to attempt to recover the bodies of people buried alive, this village, whose name means "spark" in the Tadzhik language, will be fenced off and turned into a common grave. Two hundred seven villagers died here.

Two families, however, have insisted on searching for the bodies of loved ones. Regional Communist Party chief Khusayin Kasymov said, and a dozen policeman and villagers, wielding shovels and hoes and assisted by an excavator, cut into the dense earth Wednesday in search of more dead.

For this more than 300-year-old settlement, the end came in seconds. The mudslide covered much of Sharora with a 300-yard-wide chocolate-colored earthen slather.

In Okuli-Bolo, a village to the west of Sharora and near the quake's epicenter, 67 people died when all 88 whitewashed dwellings in the settlement were flattened by the quake.

Mexican Students Visiting The Area Work For Future Of Their University

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Three students and their advisor from Universidad Madero in Puebla, Mexico, are in eastern North Carolina for three weeks promoting programs of their university, including its exchange and building activities.

The student visitors are Carlos Valerio, Carlos Valderrama and Lorena Rodriguez. They and their advisor Cesar Romero Reyes, director general of the Methodist university, are using the East Carolina Methodist Student Center as their headquarters.

Valerio and Valderrama are co-developers of a videotape about the university and the city and state in which it is located. Miss Rodriguez is the daughter of the Methodist university's founder.

The three have been visiting Methodist churches throughout eastern North Carolina sharing the video and meeting and getting to know the congregations. They are inviting Americans to go to Mexico and learn the language and about the culture.

"Our video shows what is Madero, what is Puebla, what is our university," Valderrama said. He said it has been shown so far in churches and for college groups in Greenville, Wilmington, Kinston, Chocowinity, Grimesland, Raleigh, Vanceboro and Durham.

The group has met with representatives of the School of Education of East Carolina University about having some of its students spend 10 days of March at Madero practicing having classes in Spanish and preparing materials for teaching Spanish-speaking children. They are also talking to the Foreign Language Department of ECU about exchanges.

The students are working to enlist the aid of Methodists here in building more, improved facilities for their university. They now have land purchased for a campus, they say, but only one major building has been built.

Through the Methodist Student Union, Greenville area residents have participated in building efforts in Mexico. This group would like to see this year's and future years' effort be on their campus.

They also are requesting donations of books and other materials for their library.

The students say that they live in a very beautiful part of central Mexico, with volcanic mountain peaks all around them. Just as their area's terrain is different from that of eastern North Carolina, so is their climate. They are amazed at how flat the land is here and how cold it has been during some of their visit. The temperature where they live seldom varies from 60-70 degrees.

There is a crowded city of two million people. Some of the city is Old Town, dating back to when it was settled by Spaniards some 457 years ago. Other parts are modern.

They say they have been amazed at the variety of merchandise available to consumers here. But they have not done much buying here, because their money has so little value in relation to our money. It takes 2,300 of their pesos, they said, to make one American dollar. The two young men have made a couple of electronics purchases they will find useful in their videotaping work.

They say they are impressed with the mass communication they see here aimed at discouraging young people from using drugs. Drugs are not as much of a problem in their country, they said. They believe it's because Mexican families "are more united" and children do not move out of their family homes even when they go to college. They live in their parents' homes until they are ready to start their own homes after starting careers and being ready to start their own families.

"There is some alcohol problem among the very rich and the very poor," they said. The poor sometimes sniff glue, too, and the rich use cocaine or other expensive drugs. But among the middle-class, they said, it's not too big a problem, especially among the younger people. Among some of the middle class, in people 40 or older, alcohol abuse may become a problem, they say. They guessed that one reason drug use might not be as prevalent in their home city as it appears to be here is because drugs are expensive and difficult to get and most people have little money.

Miss Rodriguez and Valerio are university freshmen; Valderrama is a sophomore. Valerio and Valderrama are communications students. Both have so far had mostly general college subjects, so neither is clear yet whether he will pursue a print or broadcasting career. Miss Rodriguez, too, has had only general courses and isn't sure what aspect of business she will pursue.

The three are in a minority in Mexico because they are Protestants. All three come from families who converted from Catholicism in previous generations.

At one time, they said, it was difficult to be a Protestant in Mexico, but there is more tolerance now than ever before they said, especially in the cities. In some of the smaller villages that are exclusively Catholic, a non-Catholic probably wouldn't be welcomed, they said.

The four said they like the eastern North Carolinians they have met. "People here are very kind, very friendly. We have a good image of North Carolina people," Reyes said.

Judy McLawhorn, secretary at the Methodist Student Center, was equally complimentary of the visitors. "Having these students and their advisor here has been a wonderful experience. All four of them are some of the most pleasant non-critical people I have ever worked with. The two Carlos have stayed at my house. I have not heard one complaint. They are very gracious and appreciative of everything."

Madame Tussaud's Legacy Is Growing Beyond Wax Museum

By Maggie Jackson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — A big toy leopard in a pink tutu sits near the desk of Madame Tussaud's chief executive, but it isn't made of the waxy stuff that attracts 2.5 million visitors a year.

Michael Herbert's office mate is a fiberglass leftover from a children's exhibit, and a sign of the company's future. For Tussauds isn't just into wax anymore.

The company, whose waxworks were brought from Paris to London 186 years ago by the enterprising Madame, has bought a medieval castle and a set of caves, owns one theme park and plans to build another for $90 million at a stately home. It's also delving into non-wax Disney-style animated figures.

But Tussauds hasn't forsaken its roots. Its wax statues pop up at new ventures and the original exhibition has been London's top fee-paying tourist site for two years.

To a celebrity, few accolades are greater than an invitation to pose for a Tussauds effigy, and to the public it's a true sign of the passage of fame when a wax statue gets taken to the storeroom. Its Chamber of Horrors, with its freshly guillotined heads and disemboweled Jack the Ripper victims have given generations of children sleepless nights.

"Madame Tussaud's is something we rather crudely say you would visit three times in your life: as a child, a parent and perhaps a grandparent," says Herbert, a gentle man who clearly delights in the fun side to his business, like his leopard.

"Wax exhibitions need a turnover of people," he said in an interview, noting that more than half of Madame Tussaud's visitors come from abroad. "Therefore it's no use going to set up a wax exhibition in somewhere like Cleveland, Ohio or even Chicago."

Marie Tussaud, an accomplished sculptress in Paris, inherited the waxworks from the uncle who trained her. She had made deathmasks of guillotine victims including Marie Antoinette, but finding post-Revolutionary France too chaotic for business, she moved to England in 1802.

A marketing whiz in her time, she guaranteed new audiences for the waxworks by touring Britain for 33 years before settling in London at age 74. Here she displayed her last work — a scowling self-portrait in spectacles and black bonnet which is among the 350 figures presently on display in the permanent exhibit on the Marylebone Road.

After her death, the exhibit grew somewhat "rusty-dusty," Herbert said, but tourism boosted revenue in the 1960s and it has flourished in recent years with stepped-up marketing.

Tussauds — the company as opposed to Madame Tussaud's, the waxworks — first expanded in 1970 with an exhibition in Amsterdam which has been so successful that the company hopes to move to a bigger site.

It bought the Wookey Hole Caves in western England, a popular tourist spot, in 1973 and was attempting to buy the Chessington Zoo, now the Chessington World of Adventures, in 1978 when its owner, the Pearson PLC conglomerate, struck back by buying Tussauds.

Soon after, Tussauds bought 13th-century Warwick Castle, for then $2.7 million, and has installed a startlingly lifelike exhibit re-creating with wax figures a typical 19th-century royal weekend.

Tussauds' planned amusement park at Woburn Abbey, the 18th-century stately home of the Duke of Bedford, would be impossible without Pearson's backing, says Herbert, who is a director of Cefadair LP, an Ohio-based amusement company, sees great potential in this sector in Britain.

"After all, we are still a very small company, with turnover of 30 million pounds ($55 million)," he said. "To do this alone would really be sticking your neck out."

Expansions aside, Tussaud vows never to abandon wax. But the old standbys, which cost an average of $18,000 apiece, are being improved and paired with newfangled figures.

Next year, Tussauds will open a London exhibition of both wax and non-wax animated figures representing rock stars.

"Rock Circus" continues the Disney-style animation work begun with an exhibition near Windsor Castle, on the outskirts of London, called "Royalty and Empire," which re-creates a scene from Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee celebrations in 1897.

"Static wax figures are something we've been famous for more than 180 years," says spokeswoman Juliet Simpkins. "What we're doing (with animation) is enhancing the illusion."

Also, she said, the mother exhibition on Marylebone Road uses more audiovisual aids with its figures. But plain old wax still holds its fascination.

"Are you sleeping?" a small girl recently asked a young wax prince frozen in time. "Will you wake up?"

Old Prison A Target For Vandals

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBUS, Ohio — The old Ohio Penitentiary, a prison for 150 years, apparently is becoming a haven for the homeless and a target for juvenile vandalism since it closed several years ago.

Intruders leave signs of their presence inside the 22 acres of prime real estate surrounded by crumbling stone walls.

Though they've left evidence of their presence, no intruders have been caught inside the walls that once housed such convicts as Confederate rebel John H. Morgan, and William Sidney Porter, better known as story writer O'Henry.

Mostly the enclosure is left to pigeons that nest on pipes and conduits on ceilings of the cell blocks and litter the floors with droppings.

It is an expensive nest.

The land, just northwest of Columbus' main business district, has been appraised at more than $12 million. The Ohio State Penitentiary Development Commission is to decide in the next year what should be done with the site.

The commission was created by the Ohio General Assembly after the Ohio Department of Administrative Services turned down several proposals for the site.

Suggestions have included developing a theme hotel, amusement park and shopping mall among the cell blocks.

Story Quilts Show A Variety Of Techniques

By Beth Sherman
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

NEW YORK — Faith Ringgold's "story quilts" are a powerful amalgam of words and pattern, color and fabric, laced with historical and personal overtones.

Begins one:
I will always remember when the stars fell down around me and lifted me up above the George Washington Bridge. I could see our tiny rooftop with Mommy and Daddy and

Mr. and Mrs. Honey our next door neighbors, still playing cards as if nothing was going on, and BeBe, my baby brother, laying real still on the mattress, just like I told him to, his eyes like huge floodlights tracking me through the sky.

The quilt, called "Tar Beach," evokes the wistful reveries of childhood. It shows a black family on the roof of their apartment building at night. The parents are playing cards. The children are resting on a mattress, underneath the stars. The young girl who narrates the story dreams about flying over the city, so that she might feel as if she owned it.

Like much of Ringgold's work, the quilt is rooted in her own experience. "When I was a little girl, it would be too hot to sleep at night, so we'd all go up to the roof," she recalls. "We had these formal sit-down dinners up there. Then we kids would get sleepy and the grown-ups would talk."

Her work has been exhibited at the American Craft Museum, the Museum of Modern Art and the Whitney Museum of Art here among other institutions. In addition, the Guggenheim Museum recently purchased "Tar Beach" for its permanent collection. (The quilts cost between $18,000 and $35,000.)

The 59-year-old artist grew up in Harlem a few blocks away from where she now lives and works. After obtaining a master's degree in art from City College, she taught in the New York City public school system for 18 years, then resigned to paint full time. In the 1960s, she was a political artist whose imagery reflected the turbulence and tensions of the civil rights movement. In the '70s, with the advent of feminism, she began to work with quilts.

"I was looking for a way to get in touch with myself as a woman," she says, "and quilts are a medium that women have used forever, in every culture."

In her own family, quilt-making skills were passed from one generation to the next. Her mother, a fashion designer and dressmaker, was taught to quilt by her grandmother, "in the old way, boiling flour sacks until they were white for the lining of the quilts."

Ringgold transforms the craft into art by combining traditional techniques with modern ones. She pieces and sews the fabric together, then paints on the cloth or etches images onto it. Instead of using scraps of old material, she prefers natural fibers, including fabric that has been dyed in brilliant multicolored patterns.

"There was a whole tradition of sewing in my family and of storytelling, as well," she says. "That's the way people entertained each other back then. My father told stories, my sister told stories, my brother told stories. And I was a great listener."

Two years ago, Ringgold made a quilt to document her vow to lose weight. Using the Optifast liquid diet, she shed 60 pounds; Weight Watchers helped her drop 40 more.

Photos of her taken over the years — in cap and gown, and leotards, looking chunky and finally, svelte — are etched on to the silk and cotton canvas in different panels. The panels are bound together by a narrative that chronicles the process of change.

"I made the quilt to keep me honest," she says. "In it I incorporated photos from all the decades of my life. I was not a heavy child, but by the end of the '60s, I had begun to gain weight. By the '80s it was out of hand."

Many of Ringgold's quilts deal with people and events that have had an impact on her life. One, "Who's Afraid of Aunt Jemima," transforms the figure on the syrup bottle into a successful businesswoman.

"Aunt Jemima may not have been a real person; but her image was hated all the same," Ringgold explains. "I wanted people to see her as something other than fat and black."

Quilts in her "Love Letter Series" capture the sense of loss and yearning felt by women caught in an emotional undertow. "They're about women's dependency on love to keep them alive, which is a huge issue in our society, no matter what color you are," she says.

Critics have called the quilts "fables," but Ringgold objects to the label. "These are not folk tales. They're stories ... about the way I see the world."

Throughout her work, there is a recurring interest in the world outside her window, on the streets of Harlem and beyond. Three subjects she plans to address soon are the crack epidemic, the homeless and child abuse.

"I was on the subway the other night," she says softly, "and there was this homeless man on the train. All the stuff he had in the world was in a cart. And the doors opened, and he got out, but the cart got stuck behind. So, he's pounding on the doors, trying to get back in, and I didn't know what to do. I said to myself: 'Faith, don't get involved,' which, of course, is what everyone else is doing. And I was ashamed. "So I plan to make this quilt."

Honesty Is Best Policy

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: This is in regard to "One Against Many," who wants to tell a close relative that she — the relative — is terminally ill. Other family members are against telling her. Abby, I am on your side.

I am absolutely outraged that a physician would violate the privileged doctor-patient relationship by revealing a patient's condition to family members while withholding the truth from the patient.

I think every adult has the right to know the truth about his or her condition, and relatives who are concerned with how he or she will react should be prepared to lend support in any way possible. To withhold the truth — however sad — from adults for whatever reason is patently unfair. It is the patient's right to have the necessary information to maintain control of his or her life for as long as possible.

My mother died of cancer, and it would have been inconceivable for me and a grave insult to her intelligence to have judged her unfit to know of this painful but unavoidable reality.

You may use my name. — Penny Baker

Dear Abby: After reading the letter concerning whether or not to tell a terminally ill patient the truth about her condition, I had to write. I feel qualified to comment because three days ago we had a memorial service for my husband.

He was given six to 12 months to live — that was less than two months ago. After the initial shock, we made what time he had left count. My husband was only 45 years old, and he had never been sick, so getting such news was hard to take.

Seven of his longtime friends from five states came to visit us. I cannot describe how much that meant to my husband. He accepted his impending death and helped me plan the service. At 42, I wasn't prepared to cope with it, but he gave strength to me and our children, 16 and 21. We did it together.

I am all for total honesty. I say, tell your loved one the truth. The chances are that he or she knows it already. They can read it in the eyes of those they love and who are caring for them. — Ginger M.

Dear Abby: I've read your column for years, but this is my first time to write. I was pleased to see your answer to "One Against Many." I share your opinion. I was also one against many when my father was diagnosed as terminally ill. I live in California and he was living in New York when I was told that he was terminally ill, so I went East to see him and the rest of my family.

I wanted so much to talk honestly with him about so many things, but I was not allowed to because his sister (my aunt) told me that if he knew the truth he would kill himself. She insisted that she knew her brother better than I knew my own father.

Abby, my father already knew the truth. But out of respect for my aunt, I chose to abide by her judgment. Now I realize it was a grave mistake. Maybe my experience will help others. — Sad In Sacramento

Dear Sad, Ginger And Penny: I can only reiterate my original advice to anyone who is faced with that decision: "Do unto others..."

And for the record, my mail has been running overwhelmingly in favor of total honesty — no game-playing. It's the patient's right to know the truth.

Column Gets Four Stars

At Wits End

Erma Bombeck

Much has been said about critics. Channing Pollock said, "A critic is a legless man who teaches running."

Stephen Potter regarded book reviewers as "people who show that it is really they who should have written the book if they had had the time, and since they hadn't they are glad that someone else had, although obviously it might have been done better."

George Bernard Shaw summed up a drama critic as "a man who leaves no turn unstoned."

Critics will always have a place in this world, but we have reached a weird time in history where they outnumber the people being critiqued. This has had a decided effect on those of us who stumble through each day without an advance copy or preview tape and who don't know how we feel about life until the reviews come out.

Before I go to a film, I have been informed by a critic that there is no plot. (This is right after he has revealed it to me.) He reports the film has no integrity and would appeal only to someone who considers mud wrestling an art form. Am I going to take a chance on going to this film and liking it? What am I? Crazy?

For weeks, I look forward to a new television series. Two nights before it airs, a critic writes its obituary. So why should I make time in my life for something that's not going to be there for me?

There's no place in town to eat anymore. Food critics have put "tough calamari" right up there with rat infestation. As for attending anything on Broadway, forget it. I can't move that fast. A critic once closed a show in the time it took me to get a cab to go to the theater.

It doesn't stop there. There are reviewers of symphonies, concerts, art shows and fund-raisers. I even read a column by a woman who reviews church sermons.

Every time the president speaks, his speech is followed by a group of critics who proceed to tell us what he said, how well he said it and what he didn't say.

Acceptance speeches for the Emmys and Oscars are judged by the media within hours, and before you check into a hotel, it is wise to make sure all five of its stars are still in the galaxy.

It's only a matter of time before the performances of doctors, plumbers and auto mechanics are reviewed by the Siskels and Eberts of public service. The basic surprises of life are disappearing one by one. Any day now I expect to read a review of a wedding pointing out that the ceremony had little substance, the groom was miscast, and the bride's father admitted the production was over budget.

My husband dropped my mail on the desk yesterday and said, "Nothing exciting here. Just a lot of junk."

See what I mean? Everyone's a critic!

Parking Expanded

quest, which was forwarded to and approved by the City Council in January.

To make the necessary room for the three spaces, the capacity of the left-turn lane on Fifth Street which turns on to Evans Street was reduced.

The city's transportation manager, Glen Whisler, said that although the storage capacity of the left-turn lane on Fifth Street was reduced from three to two cars, motorists should not notice any adverse effects in traffic flow.

"Overall, I believe the impact will be minimal," he said.

Little said the three, two-hour parking spaces would be available only from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m.

"We recognize the fact that there are a lot of students in town at night and we didn't want to impede on that pedestrian traffic. There's a safety factor that's involved here," he said.

However the availability of those three short-term parking spaces on Fifth Street does not help the owners and the employees of businesses who have to leave their cars for up to eight hours at a time.

To help alleviate the parking problems for those individuals, Little said the approved city ordinance also provides for the leasing of 22 parking spaces in downtown municipal parking lots.

Effective on Wednesday, the city will begin to lease eight-hour parking spaces in five lots downtown at a cost of $10 per month on a month-by-month basis," he said.

Little said two spaces will be available in the merchants parking lot on Washington Street; four spaces in the Blount-Harvey lot on Fourth and Washington streets; six spaces in the Hooker lot on Cotanche and Second streets; seven spaces in the Harris lot at the northwest corner of Fourth and Cotanche streets, and three spaces in the Mosely lot at the southwest corner of Fourth and Cotanche.

He said applications to lease the available spaces can be submitted to the city's tax collection department at City Hall, 201 W. Fifth St.

Jack Steelman, executive director of Evergreen of Greenville Inc. and a board member of the Parking Authority, said the three additional spaces on Fifth Street will be an attribute for those particular property owners seeking tenants.

"There is without question a correlation between the lack of available off-street parking and the amount of vacant space in the buildings on that block," Steelman said.

"In the past, when downtown was a more dominant retail center, there were short-term spaces provided which recognized the needs of the retail customer," Steelman said.

"In contrast, today downtown is more of an area of office and institutional land uses. Consequently the nature of the parking demand has changed in relation to the nature of the land uses.

Steelman said Evergreen conducted a study of downtown parking lots in 1986 and 1987. The utilization study determined the number of unused short-term spaces in each individual parking lot.

"We found, given the number of vacant spaces available throughout the day in each lot, there existed an oversupply of short-term free parking," Steelman said.

"We contrasted that with the fact that for sometime now, the authority has had a waiting list of downtown employees wanting to lease spaces downtown.

"The change that was recommended was one wherein we can satisfy the demand of those people needing to lease a space while still maintaining a number of unused short-term spaces within each lot," he said.

Council member Rufus Huggins says he can identify with the parking problems experienced by the operators of commercial establishments downtown.

"I really feel if a person has a business and is going to the expense of operating that business, he shouldn't have the problem of having to find some place to park," Huggins said.

Huggins also says he sees a problem with customers who cannot park nearby a prospective downtown store or office.

"No one wants to park three or four blocks away to go to a business," he said.

Huggins also anticipates there will be future recommendations from the Parking Authority.

"It's an ongoing problem, because the space is just not there," he said. "Right now we're doing the best we can to utilize all the space we do have."

Firings Spur Queries About Police Role

the town without adequate police protection.

"I never had any problem with that when I was there ...," Knox said. "I never had anybody tell me who to and who not to write tickets to ... But I do know (residents and town officials) did not want the town to have the reputation of being a speed trap."

Hines was in office while Knox was chief, as were two of the three current aldermen: John G. Weathington and Bobby Crawford.

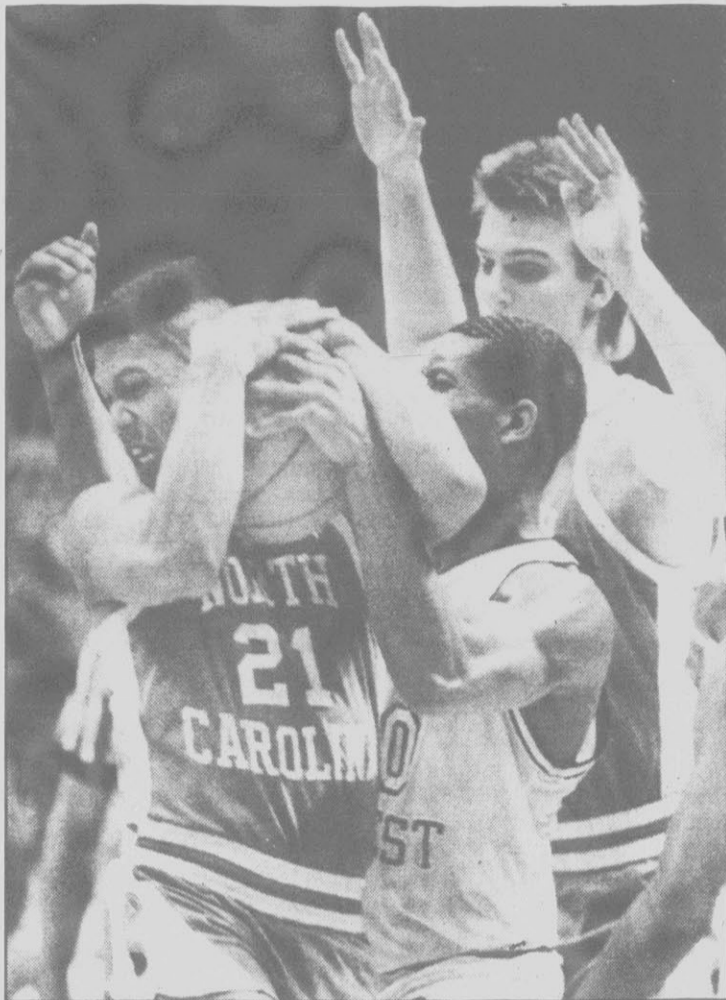

Wayne Williams, who worked on the Winterville force from 1976 to 1978, has been a detective with the Greenville Police Department since 1984. He also still lives in Winterville and said he was never directed to give special treatment to anyone in the town.

"(When I was there), we basically didn't have the problems they're having now. All of our cars were equipped with radar units, and we basically wrote tickets to everybody," Williams said.

While it is sometimes necessary to issue speeding tickets, Knox said small town police officers have other more important duties, such as interacting with residents and assuring them they are safe.

"The only thing is, in a small town, I do think you have to police a little differently than you would in a big city," he said. "You can't be totally concerned with traffic. The security of lives and property comes first. Patrolling the businesses and neighborhoods would probably be the top priority."

UNC's King Rice (21) struggles for ball with Wake's Sam Ivy

Carolina Trims Deacs, 88-74 Georgia Tech Slips Past Clemson; Virginia Wins In OT

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENSBORO — North Carolina's Dean Smith is usually reserved in praise for his team, but even the veteran coach couldn't hold back his feelings after chalking up victory 17 in 20 tries.

"I think we've been awfully good, check whom we've played," Smith said Wednesday night in response to a post-game question about team chemistry despite several key injuries. "Seven games we've already played against Top 20 teams."

Wake Forest wasn't a Top 20 team, but the Demon Deacons were coming off an upset of previously top-ranked Duke. But the seventh-ranked Tar Heels ran away from the Demon Deacons 88-74 with a season-high 73.5 percent shooting performance.

"Not too many teams in the country could have beaten North Carolina tonight," Wake Forest coach Bob Staak said. "The way they shot the ball they could have beaten us by a heckuva lot more. They did everything necessary to win."

The Tar Heels played the first two months of the season without All-American J.R. Reid because of an operation designed to mend a stress fracture. Now, the team has had to deal with the loss of senior leader Jeff Lebo because of a severe ankle sprain.

"I think we need to get Lebo back for us to be the team we can be," Smith said. "That's the one I want to see back. Along come February or March — at least the last two years — we played our best basketball and I hope it's true this year."

Without Lebo, the Tar Heels pounded the ball inside against the Demon Deacons, shooting 86 percent in the opening nine minutes on 13 of 15 shots.

"They decided to go to a pressure defense outside, which keeps you from doubling down (inside)," Smith said. "They were getting up on each guy that gets and ball in a man-to-man (defense) — which we like to do — but it's a long way to go to get some help down there."

Kevin Madden led the charge early, scoring nine of his 13 first-half points in the first nine minutes, mostly on inside shots. He hit six straight from the field and 1-of-3 from the foul line.

"That's not just this game, we look inside every game," said the 6-foot-4, 230-pound junior. "That's basically what we want to do. If you depend on the perimeter game, one night your perimeter game isn't going to show up."

The Tar Heels, a league-leading 4-1 in the ACC, rode their hot shooting to grab a 28-16 lead on a J.R. Reid layup. The junior forward, who scored 11 first-half points, was perfect, hitting all five shots from the field and a free throw in the opening period.

North Carolina, using its swarming defense and transition game, also didn't commit a foul until Scott Williams was whistled for blocking at 11:14.

North Carolina went to the outside to grab its biggest lead of the half as a Steve Bucknall 3-pointer with 8:56 left put the Tar Heels up 31-18.

With just under two minutes left, Wake Forest, 9-7 and 2-5, closed to 40-35 on a Sam Ivy dunk from Derrick McQueen.

But King Rice hit a running bank shot while being fouled as the buzzer sounded before halftime and completed a three-point play for a 46-38 margin.

The Tar Heels sank 20 of 26 shots in the opening half for 77 percent. Wake Forest pulled within seven points several times in the second half, but North Carolina used a 19-4 run midway through the period to win going away.

"We did not play as physical a game as we needed to," Staak said. "Our biggest problem was catching up with Madden."

Reid, who hit 10 of 13 shots, led the Tar Heels with a season-high 24 points. Bucknall added 18, including three 3-pointers in the second half, while Madden finished with 15.

Ivy, 10 of 12 from the field, led Wake Forest with 24 points.

Georgia Tech.....75
Clemson.....74

ATLANTA (AP) — Redshirt freshman David Whitmore gave Georgia Tech a lift and Coach Bobby Cremins a surprise.

Whitmore scored a career-high 16 points, including seven in a row in one stretch of the second half, to help the Yellow Jackets trim Clemson 75-74 in an Atlantic Coast Conference basketball game Wednesday night.

Court Ruling Gives NCAA Right To Keep Info Secret

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MISSION, Kan. — The NCAA is unbeaten in Supreme Court decisions this term, but the latest and least-publicized case was the most vital to its enforcement efforts, says assistant executive director David Berst.

By refusing Monday to review a lower court decision, the high court upheld the NCAA's right to keep secret the information it gathers during investigations.

"If we had lost this second case, I think it would have had a chilling effect on our ability to conduct investigations," said Berst, head of the enforcement division. "It could have been very detrimental to our efforts."

In a nationally celebrated case last December, the court ruled 5-4 that the NCAA did not violate the rights of basketball coach Jerry Tarkanian in ordering Nevada-Las Vegas to suspend him for two years. Whether the NCAA will still insist on punishing Tarkanian remains to be seen.

"This case is more important because it involved the ability of media representatives to gain access to our official files, memos and documents during the course of our investigation," Berst said. "We would have had to investigate and turn over the information to the public as we gathered it. I think that would have assured that we would have been unable to develop any significant infractions cases."

"We believe we could operate quite well if we had lost the Tarkanian case. But in this case, if we had to give up our files and information as we gather it, I really don't know how we could proceed."

A suit filed against the NCAA and the Southwest conference by the A.H. Belo Corp., owners of the Dallas Morning News and Dallas television station WFAA, cited the Texas open records law. It sought to force the NCAA to turn over records and documents involving the Southern Methodist football case.

A state court ruled in favor of Belo and the NCAA won a reversal at the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Berst said NCAA investigators have been at odds with news organizations in several states over open meetings or "sunshine laws," including Illinois, Kentucky, Georgia and Texas. The NCAA hopes the Supreme Court decision will set a legal precedent.

At least one NCAA attorney is uncertain what effect Monday's action might have in other cases.

"It depends on each state's open records law," Jack Kitchen said. "It is some precedent, to be sure. But these open records laws, a lot of them are tailored differently. But it is certainly some precedent."

The NCAA has always maintained that confidentiality is necessary because it lacks subpoena power and witnesses would not cooperate if their names and testimony were made public.

"To operate on the basis of live witnesses only would simply be impossible under this kind of system," Berst said.

Ralph Langer, vice president and executive editor of the Morning News, said the newspaper regretted the court's action.

"We're very disappointed that they would not hear the appeal because we felt the 5th circuit's decision was in error," Langer said Monday.

Berst said having to release information because of open meetings laws has not yet damaged any specific case.

"Most of these have dealt with information that's already prepared and after hearings have been concluded, and that's less detrimental," he said.

Dooley Wants To Clear The Air Of Allegations

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATHENS, Ga. — University of Georgia Athletic Director Vince Dooley wants to "clear the air" by allowing his attorneys to have unsealed documents containing allegations that he offered drugs to an undercover agent in 1983.

Dooley said "politically motivated" rumors on the incident might have jeopardized his possible gubernatorial bid.

In a statement released by the Georgia sports information office, Dooley denied that he ever offered anyone drugs. He acknowledged that he got a court order in 1986 to prevent release of a Georgia Bureau of Investigation report on the allegation.

According to Superior Court documents unsealed at Dooley's request in DeKalb County on Wednesday, Dooley filed a lawsuit in 1986 under the name John Doe, seeking to seal all documents related to the incident.

The GBI report included allegations that Dooley, who stepped down as football coach earlier this month, offered an agent cocaine and marijuana in exchange for her spending the night with him. The agent, Gail Buckner, notified a superior officer, who instructed another agent, Kim Chambers, to go to Dooley's room to see if he had any drugs there.

The documents said Dooley considered the material "libelous, scandalous and embarrassing."

Dooley, who soon will leave as athletic director, said in the statement that rumors about the 1983 incident first circulated in 1985, when he was considering running for the U.S. Senate.

"Now that I am considering running for governor, rumors are again being circulated," he said. "It appears they are politically motivated. It is painful for me and my family to even have to answer these rumors which are exactly contrary to my strongest and deepest personal beliefs and to the way I have conducted my life."

Dooley said he was approached by the GBI agents in January 1983, while he was at a hotel on a recruiting trip to Atlanta. Dooley said the encounter ended when the woman at his room made "a gesture I found offensive."

The brief GBI investigation of the encounter was terminated after it was determined that no drugs were in Dooley's hotel room, according to the court documents.

Dooley said he learned later that a report had been filed by the GBI relating to the encounter. He said his lawyer told him the agent involved had been disciplined.

Buckner was given a three-day suspension for initiating an investigation while under the influence of alcohol. Buckner, who still is with the GBI, and Chambers, who is not, were not available for comment Wednesday.

Dooley told The Atlanta Constitution he was not disclosing the incident in an attempt to harm Buckner.

"She made a mistake, but that's a long time ago," he said.

"I don't know what they were trying to do," he added. "Maybe they were trying to entrap me, I don't know."

He called the incident "a mistake by young, overzealous agents."

He said the existence of the GBI file had no effect on his decision not to run for the Senate in 1986.

Dooley's lawyer could not be reached for comment Wednesday. He was neither at home nor at his office when calls were made by The Associated Press.

Vikings Rip East Carteret, 61-40

Lack Of Practice Time Didn't Show In Conley's Coastal Loop Romp

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

HOLLYWOOD — D.H. Conley hasn't practiced together as a team for a week. But you never would've known it Wednesday as the Vikings romped to a 61-40 Coastal 3-A Conference win over East Carteret.

The Vikings, 11-4 overall and 4-1 in the conference, jumped out to a 16-2 lead in the first five minutes of the game and never saw their lead get smaller than eight points the rest of the game.

Conley hasn't been able to practice since last Thursday due to a Pitt County Board of Education rule which doesn't allow practice during exam periods.

"All things considered, I was very pleased with the way the guys played," Conley coach Cobbie Deans said. "I was real concerned going into the game about asking the kids to play for safety reasons since they hadn't practiced since last Thursday."

Conley reeled off the first eight points of the game keyed by Stacey Green. Green had all four of his points in the opening three minutes.

After Billy Ellison, who led East Carteret with 13 points, finally got the Mariners on the board with a reverse layup, the Vikings put together another eight point run.

Terry Williams, who led all scorers with 18 points, nailed a jumper in the lane to make the score 10-2.

After Paul Merritt scored on a layup, Williams countered with two easy hoops following steals by Green to push the lead to 16-2 with 3:10 left in the first quarter.

"We just got off to a bad start tonight with a lot of turnovers," East Carteret coach Cecil Lilly said. "I never thought we'd get off to that bad of a start. Conley played well defensively and it just sort of snowballed on us."

Joe Montford managed to break the Mariners' scoreless skid with 1:31 left only to have Conley reserve J.J. Stephenson slam home a follow shot at the other end seconds later.

"J.J. came of the bench and did a good job for us," Deans said. "He really worked the boards well. We're looking for him to continue to improve."

In the second quarter, the Vikings' lead reached 19, 29-10, when guard Bershaun Thompson canned a 15-footer with 4:34 left in the half.

The Mariners, who slipped to 5-5 and 1-3, then went on a 12-2 spurt to close to within nine, 31-22, with 1:22 left in the half.

Ellison, who scored five of his points during the run, capped the spurt with a dunk. The Mariners' surge could have been even greater but Ellison, who was 3-11 at the free throw line for the game, missed five tosses from the charity stripe.

In the second half, the Mariners opened up with full-court pressure defense and closed to within eight, 36-28, with 5:51 left in the third quarter when Mike Way canned a 15-footer.

"We created some turnovers with the press in the second half," Lilly said. "If we had kept taking good shots we might could have gotten closer. But I think the kids also just got tired late in the game."

The Vikings regrouped and pushed the lead back to 17, 47-30 by the end of the quarter.

"We kind of lost our concentration for a while in the third quarter," Deans said. "A lot of times when you've got a big lead you tend to not concentrate as much as you should."

Merritt had eight of his 14 points in the quarter, including a dunk following a Junior Farrow steal. Farrow also added five of his seven points in the quarter as the Vikings put the game out of reach.

East Carteret got no closer than 14, 51-37, in the final period, while the Vikings went up by as many as 24, 61-37, before Robert Nelson drilled a 3-pointer for the Mariners to round out the scoring.

Junior High School Basketball Action

Ayden Middle School swept a pair of games from hosting Wellcome in junior high school basketball action Wednesday.

Ayden took the boys' game, 65-44. Ayden was led by Alico Dunk with 19 while Julius Perkins had 13 and Orlando Peterson had 11. Wellcome was paced by M. Fleming with 15.

In the girls' game, Ayden took a 40-25 win. Nikki Wilson led Ayden with 15 points while Keisha Rasberry had 13. Wellcome was led by R. Clark with 14.

Ayden's boys are now 10-0 while the girls are 9-1.

Hornets-Pacers Working Out A Trade

GREENSBORO (AP) — The Charlotte Hornets and the Indiana Pacers are working out the final details of a four-player trade, according to today's editions of the Greensboro News & Record.

The newspaper, which said the deal could be completed today, said Charlotte would send guards Dell Curry and Rickey Green to Indiana in exchange for center Stuart Gray and guard John Long.

The Hornets are in the midst of a five-game western road trip and Coach Dick Harter was unavailable for comment. But the newspaper quoted sources in Indianapolis as saying an agreement on the deal had been reached.

Acquiring Gray and Long will fill two needs about which Harter has been talking recently — size and defensive ability at the big guard position.

If the deal is completed, Gray would be Charlotte's biggest player at 7 feet and 245 pounds. A fifth-year pro from UCLA, Gray has been a career backup at center in the NBA. Starting this season, Gray had more career rebounds, 620, than points, 591.

Harter was an assistant with the Pacers for the last two years and knows Gray's abilities.

Long is in his 11th season. Known primarily for his outside shooting, Long carries a career average of 15.5 points per game with a career high of 21.9 in 1981-82.

Curry and Green have had limited playing time with the Hornets in their initial season.

The 34-year-old Green is averaging 4.1 points per game. He was selected in the expansion draft from the Utah roster, and started the Hornets' first game. A hamstring pull forced him to miss several games.

Coleman Sanctioned Over Dorm Break In

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Syracuse basketball player Derrick Coleman and four other students have been sanctioned by a university judicial board for a series of apartment break-ins and involvement in a fight.

Coleman, who still faces criminal charges stemming from the Dec. 11 episode, will not be forced to sit out any games, said Robert Hill, Syracuse's vice president for public relations.

Hill said the sanctions issued were a disciplinary warning, an official reprimand and a record of violation. The board also required restitution where property damage was involved and assigned some students 25 hours of community service.

Clemson Players Charged With Assault

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Clemson officials say they are investigating a report that two of their football players were involved in an incident at a local nightclub that resulted in the men being charged with assault and battery.

Sophomore linebacker Chuck O'Brien and red-shirt freshman center Curtis Whitley were charged after a student at the university was assaulted in the restroom of the Sloan Street Tap Room, according to authorities.

Thomas George Bennett was struck eight to 10 times, receiving a fractured jaw, contusions and lacerations, Clemson Chief of Police Johnson Link said Tuesday. The incident occurred about 1:30 a.m. Jan. 17.

O'Brien and Whitley were released on $5,000 bonds, Link said.

O'Brien, a 6-foot-2, 225-pounder from Frederick, Md., played in 11 games this season and finished with 25 tackles. Whitley, a 6-1, 260-pounder from Smithfield, N.C., played in eight games.

Clemson Athletic Director Bobby Robinson said the school is investigating the incident and the results of the probe will be given to the athletic department for further review.

"After the university makes its report, we'll look into it ourselves, from the athletic point of view," Robinson said. "It's treated like it would be for any student."

In an unrelated incident, Clemson officials plan to question several basketball players about a fight with campus security guards Saturday night. The fight, which occurred less than 30 minutes after the Tigers' 77-60 victory over Western Carolina, resulted in injuries to two Crowe's Security officers, authorities said.

Center Elden Campbell, the team's leading scorer and rebounder, was among those on a list of people security department spokesman John McKenzie said would be interviewed, said David Crockett, a spokesman for the university.

Jordan Reaches 10,000 Point Plateau

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Chicago's Michael Jordan scored his 10,000th NBA point Wednesday night in the Bulls' 120-108 loss to the Philadelphia 76ers, reaching the career milestone in fewer games than all but one other player in NBA history.

Jordan, who started the game despite a sore knee, hit an 8-foot bank shot with 5:39 to play in the fourth period for 33 points in the game and exactly 10,000 points in his NBA career.

When the feat was announced over the public address system, Jordan received a minute-long standing ovation.

"As far as the game goes, I would have been very happy to score two points if we had won," said Jordan, a fifth-year player from North Carolina who reached the milestone in his 303rd game.

Wilt Chamberlain needed just 236 games for 10,000 points.

Gabriel Elected To College Football Shrine

LARCHMONT, N.Y. (AP) — Quarterbacks Archie Manning of Mississippi and Roman Gabriel of North Carolina State and fullback Larry Csonka of Syracuse are among 11 players elected to the College Hall of Fame, the National Football Foundation announced Wednesday.

The others are Bob Schloredt, Washington quarterback, 1958-60; Donny Anderson, Texas Tech halfback, 1963-65; Paul Cleary, Southern California end, 1946-47; halfback Chalmers "Bump" Elliott, Purdue, 1944, Michigan, 1946-47; Bob Johnson, Tennessee center, 1965-67; Ted Kwalick, Penn State tight end, 1966-68; Edgar "Eggs" Manske, Northwestern end, 1931-33, and Aurelius Thomas, Ohio State guard, 1955-57.

Manning won MVP honors for Ole Miss in the Gator and Sugar Bowls and was voted Quarterback of the Quarter Century in the Southeastern Conference for the 1950-75 period. He lettered from 1968-70, was a first-round draft choice of the New Orleans Saints and is currently in business in New Orleans.

Lendl Ousts McEnroe From Event

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — Ivan Lendl ended John McEnroe's title dream with a straight-set victory in the quarterfinals of the $2.4 million Australian Open tennis championship. Lendl, the tournament's second seed, beat McEnroe 7-6 (7-0), 6-2, 7-6 (7-2). The other semifinalists are Thomas Muster of Austria; Miloslav Mecir of Czechoslovakia; and Jan Gunnarsson of Sweden. Muster won when two-time champion Stefan Edberg was forced to default with a back injury.

Pitt Claims Another Upset

By Bob Greene
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Playing the best brings out the beast in the Pittsburgh Panthers.

Earlier this month, the Panthers upset then-No. 2 Syracuse and No. 3 Oklahoma. On Wednesday night, they added No. 9 Seton Hall to the list.

"I don't know what it is," said Jason Matthews. "Maybe somewhere down deep we say to ourselves we're going to beat the Top 10 teams."

Matthews scored all 15 of his points in the second half and sank two go-ahead free throws with 1:28 to play as Pitt knocked off Seton Hall 82-79.

"Look around," Pitt coach Paul Evans said. "Most teams don't have all five starters play well at one time. We don't have a bench. We need all five starters to play well. When we do, we can compete with anybody."

The Panthers, 10-7 overall and 3-3 in the Big East, rallied from a seven-point deficit in the final 5:41 and held Seton Hall, 17-2 and 4-2, to just one field goal in the final seven minutes. The loss snapped the Pirates' seven-game winning streak at the Meadowlands Arena.

"I thought when it mattered, they made the plays and we didn't," Seton Hall coach P.J. Carlesimo said. "That may be simplifying it a lot. I thought we had our chances. I didn't think we had breakdowns."

Elsewhere, No. 4 Oklahoma defeated Colorado 122-86, No. 7 North Carolina stopped Wake Forest 88-74, No. 13 Nevada-Las Vegas downed Utah State 94-68 and No. 18 Kansas defeated Wichita State 86-66.

Trailing 70-63, Brain Shorter's two free throws ignited a 9-0 run that forward Bobby Martin capped with layup for a 72-70 Pitt lead. But Seton Hall's Ramon Ramos scored four consecutive points to put the Pirates ahead again with 2:41 to play.

Sean Miller's 17-footer tied the game and Matthews put Pitt ahead for good with his two free throws. Darelle Porter's 12-foot jumper extended the lead to four points.

"We're a young team, but we never gave up," Matthews said. "We never quit."

Shorter led Pitt with 22 points, while John Morton topped Seton Hall with 23.

No. 4 Oklahoma 122, Colorado 86

With Stacey King scoring 20 of his 26 points in the second half, Oklahoma ran away from Colorado for a Big Eight victory.

"They do that to a lot of people.

They're awful explosive" Colorado coach Tom Miller said. "You see stretches where they aren't playing as well as they could, then some stretches where it was lights out."

Colorado trailed only 52-42 with 16:23 remaining before Oklahoma went on a 25-6 run that made it 77-48. King scored eight points and Tyrone Jones — who had 18 second-half points — added seven during the spurt.

Oklahoma's 78 second-half points were the most ever scored against a Big Eight team.

"You really can't get pumped for Colorado," said King, who also grabbed nine rebounds in the second half and finished with 13. "They're a good team, better than last year, but we started off flat and were still up 15 or 16 points."

Steve Wise scored 14 points and Jeff Penix had 13 for Colorado.

No. 13 Nevada-Las Vegas 94, Utah State 68

Stacey Augmon scored 17 points, grabbed eight rebounds and led four Rebels in double-figure scoring as Nevada-Las Vegas, 14-3 and 9-0 posted a Big West victory over Utah State, 6-12 and 4-5.

Utah State trailed only 41-39 at intermission, but UNLV went on a 23-9 spurt in the first nine minutes of the second half to pull away. Most of the points came on fast-break dunks and layups by Moses Scurry, Anderson Hunt and David Butler.

The Rebels held Utah State's Reid Newey, the conference's leading scorer, to 13 points on 4-for-14 shooting. Dan Conway led the losers with 20 points.

No. 18 Kansas 86, Wichita State 66

A 15-4 run triggered by Kevin Pritchard at the outset of the second half broke open a tight game and led Kansas over Wichita State in the first coaching faceoff between old friends Roy Williams of Kansas and Eddie Fogler.

"We've been very good friends, but today he was the better coach and he had the better team," Wichita State's Fogler said.

Lincoln Minor's basket capped Kansas' second-half run for a 54-37 lead and Wichita State, 12-5, never recovered.

Pritchard led the Jayhawks, 16-3, with 19 points, followed by Milt Newton's 18. Wichita State was led by John Cooper with 19 points.

Others

Freshman Chris Jackson scored nine of his 23 points in a 28-10 rally that got Louisiana State back into the game and Wayne Sims sank a pair of free throws with 1:03 remaining to give the Tigers an 80-79 Southeastern Conference victory over Georgia.

Sixers Overcome Bulls, Win 120-108

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Michael Jordan may be Air Jordan but he fell short of becoming Heir Jordan.

Jordan scored 33 points Wednesday night and reached the 10,000-point mark faster than any player in NBA history except Wilt Chamberlain. But it wasn't enough to prevent the Chicago Bulls from losing to the Philadelphia 76ers 120-108.

"As far as the game goes, I would have been very happy to score two points if we had won," said Jordan, who has exactly 10,000 points in 303 games — an average of 33.0. Chamberlain did it in 236 games, averaging 42.4.

"I'm very happy and very proud to have accomplished this. To be compared to Wilt Chamberlain is quite a compliment. I don't mind coming in second to Wilt in anything, even though he's a foot taller than I am. I'm just honored to be in his class."

"The first 10,000 was pretty easy, but the second 10,000 is going to be a lot harder. Wilt got there a lot faster than I did."

Elsewhere, it was Detroit 105, Golden State 104; Indiana 103, Boston 94; Dallas 117, Los Angeles Clippers 98 and Utah 107, San Antonio 103.

Jordan's effort went for naught because Philadelphia's Charles Barkley had 34 points and Ron Anderson came off the bench to score 32.

Trailing 89-82, Philadelphia was sparked by the 3-point shooting of Scott Brooks and outscored the Bulls 19-9, taking a 101-98 lead on Gerald Henderson's layup with 6:23 to play.

Dave Corzine made a layup and Jordan hit his historic field goal on an eight-foot bank shot to put the Bulls ahead 102-101. The 76ers then scored nine straight points — five by Barkley, four by Anderson — for a 110-102 lead.

Jordan received a one-minute standing ovation from the Philadelphia crowd, including congratulations from Barkley.

"I said, 'I'm only about 6,000 behind you, so don't worry about me,'" said Barkley, who also had 17 rebounds. "He's a great player. There's no way you're going to stop him. It's just that we have a better team."

Pistons 105, Warriors 104
At Auburn Hills, Mich., Detroit's 6-foot-1 Isiah Thomas won the game by sinking a high, arching layup over 7-7 Manute Bol with 14 seconds remaining.

"I saw Manute coming and said, 'Oh, man,'" Thomas explained. "So I put it high off the glass and just hoped it would go in. He was standing right there and I didn't have much of a choice."

"I didn't know if I could bank it in Conley...

The Vikings will be back in action Friday at home against North Pitt, while the Mariners will take on West Carteret.

In the girls game, Glenda Hardy scored 15 points to lead Conley to a 42-24 rout of the Lady Mariners.

Conley broke open a tight 17-13 halftime game in the third period with a 17-4 spurt to stretch the lead to 34-17.

The Valkyries improved to 11-4 overall with the win and to 3-2 in the Coastal 3-A.

The Lady Mariners were led in scoring by Lynada Murray and Georgia Jones. Both players scored nine points.

because I had to bank it so high off the glass."

"We did not want Isiah in the inside," Warriors coach Don Nelson said. "He kissed it off the glass. It was big time. There are only five players in the NBA that can do that, and you have one of them right here in Detroit."

"If they miss the shot it's over, we're going to win. But Zeke (Thomas), what a pro he is."

Rod Higgins hit consecutive 3-pointers to give the Warriors their first lead, 101-100 with 2:22 remaining. Bill Laimbeer's basket put Detroit ahead by a point but Terry Teagle's basket put the Warriors back in the lead before Thomas, who scored 27 points, tied it 103-103 on a free throw with 1:35 remaining. Teagle made one of two free throws to give the Warriors their last lead, with 1:24 remaining.

Chris Mullin, who missed an off-balance shot with one second remaining, led Golden State with 28 points and Mitch Richmond added 23.

Pacers 103, Celtics 94

At Indianapolis, Chuck Person scored 14 of his 27 points in the final quarter and Indiana held Boston to one field goal in the final 6:30. It was the Pacers' second victory over Boston this season — that last happened eight years ago — and helped Coach Dick Versace even his record at 5-5. He took over when the team was 6-23.

Reggie Miller added 19 points and Herb Williams 18 for Indiana, which last beat Boston two straight times in 1977. Reggie Lewis led the Celtics with 22 points and Kevin McHale had 20.

Mavericks 117, Clippers 98

At Dallas, Mark Aguirre scored 14 of his 24 points during a 42-point first quarter, a team-high for one period this season. The Mavericks, losers of nine of their previous 11 games, led 42-31 after one period and 70-56 at halftime in handing the Clippers their 12th consecutive defeat. Their road record is 2-22.

Dallas opened a five-game home stand after dropping its 10th straight on the road in Chicago on Tuesday night.

Derek Harper added 23 points for Dallas and James Donaldson had 18 points and 14 rebounds. Quintin Dailey paced the Clippers with 22 points.

Dallas guard Rolando Blackman suffered a dislocation of the little finger on his left — non-shooting — hand in the third quarter. A team spokesman said Blackman would be out for 2-3 weeks.

Clemson's Elden Campbell looks for help amid traffic jam of Georgia Tech defenders

Lady Panthers' Pilgreen Leads Area Girls Scoring

Clint Parker continued to hold on to the area basketball scoring lead among high school boys, but North Pitt's Keisha Pilgreen has jumped to the top among the girls.

Parker, who led the listing two weeks ago with a 20.6 average, has slipped one point since then to 19.6. Ayden-Grifton's Ronnell Peterson, fourth last time out, has leaped up to second, moving from 18.2 to 18.5 this period.

Kirk Welch of Trinity, who was second last time around, drops to third as he average slipped from 20.0 to 18.5. Jarvis Lang of Farmville Central has moved from fifth to fourth, improving from 18.1 to 18.2.

Rounding out the boys' top five is Reggie Atkinson of Greene Central, up one place as his average advanced from 16.1 to 17.3.

Pilgreen has moved her average from 20.3 to 20.5 and has advanced from third to first place in the girls' standings. She replaces Joanie Cherry of Greenville Christian, who drops to second with a 19.5 average. Two weeks ago, she had the lead at 20.6.

Kim Hawkins of Williamston falls from second to a tie for third as her average slips from 20.4 to 18.7. Conley's Lendora Tyson moves from fourth to a tie for third, but improved her average from 17.7 to 18.7.

The fifth spot is taken by Roanoke's Joyce Outlaw, up from seventh place as her average improved from 17.4 to 18.4.

Farmville Central has taken over first place in the team scoring lead with a 71.0 average, up from 68.0. Trinity, the leader last time out, falls out of the top five. Ayden-Grifton moves from fifth to second at 66.1.

Defensively, Trinity still leads with a 44.7 average, up from 42.9. Rose is now second, moving up from third at 50.2 to 48.7.

Farmville Central continues at the girls' offensive leader with a 58.1 average, up from 56.2 last time. North Pitt moves from third to second, improving from 54.6 to 55.5.

On defense, Trinity continues as the leader, allowing 32.7 points a game, improved from 34.6 two weeks ago. Rose is still second although its average dropped from 35.4 to 36.1.

ACC Basketball...

"I was really, really proud of David Whitmore," Cremins said. "The reason I went with him is because he has been working so hard and he has a great attitude. I really did not expect him to perform that well."

Tom Hammonds led the Jacket attack with 24 points and Brian Oliver hit two clinching free throws with six seconds left to offset Dale Davis' basket at the buzzer just inside the 3-point line.

Whitmore had given Tech a 73-69 lead with a basket out of the left corner with 48 seconds to play, but Davis then converted a three-point play off a dunk to cut the lead to 73-72 with 40 seconds left, setting up the final scoring in the last six seconds.

"I'm not really sure how we won," Cremins said. "But it was an exciting basketball game and we needed a win. This was a big ball game. I thought a couple of times we had a loss. It was tough."

The victory lifted Tech to 12-5 for the year and 2-1 in the ACC and Clemson fell to 12-4 and 3-2. The Tigers had entered the game riding a five-game winning streak.

Clemson Coach Cliff Ellis called Davis' final shot "one of those tough ones. He was just a couple of inches inside the line. We knew we had to go to three. We work that situation. We had the situation set up and we were two inches away from overtime. I can't fault Davis. He thought he was there."

Elden Campbell led the Tigers with 20 points and Derrick Forrest, who had four 3-point baskets in the second half, added 18. Oliver had 16 points and a career-high 14 assists for the Jackets.

"I thought we were out of sync, and to some extent both teams were," Ellis said.

Both teams had trouble shooting free throws. Tech hit 16 of 28 for 57 percent and Clemson hit 13 of 24 for 54 percent.

Virginia.....113
Virginia Tech.....106

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — For the second time in as many games, Virginia lost a lead in the second half, but once again, the Cavaliers showed they can regroup and win in overtime.

"Since it happened against Maryland in the same type of situation, we knew that we'd come out and do what we had to," Virginia's John Crotty said after the Cavaliers beat Virginia Tech 113-106 Wednesday night.

The Cavaliers' Richard Morgan scored 28 points and Crotty added a career-high 21, and Virginia outscored its intrastate rival 15-8 in overtime for the victory.

Virginia, which had beaten Maryland 64-58 in overtime eight days earlier, improved to 10-6. The Cavaliers now hold a 61-42 lead over Virginia Tech in their series, which dates to 1915.

The Cavaliers led their main damage on the boards, grabbing 64 rebounds — one short of the school record. Matt Blundin led the way with 15.

"Matt Blundin continues to amaze me," said Virginia assistant coach Dave Odom.

Virginia Tech, losing for the seventh time in its last eight outings, fell to 7-10.

"They just wore us down in the overtime," Virginia Tech coach Frankie Allen said.

The Hokies rallied from a 90-77 deficit in the final 6:39 to force the overtime. Bimbo Coles, who finished with 43 points, scored 11 as the Hokies closed the second half with a 21-8 run to tie the score at 98.

"We had some missed opportunities," said Odom, who is filling in while Coach Terry Holland recovers from Jan. 2 stomach surgery. "Good basketball teams nail the coffin, and we didn't do that."

Kenny Turner put the Cavaliers ahead to stay on a pair of free throws 49 seconds into the extra period.

Morgan added a 16-foot jumper from the wing to make it 102-98 before Coles answered with a 3-point goal.

Two free throws each by Crotty and Blundin boosted Virginia's lead to 106-101 with 1:40 left.

Coles made a pair of free throws 20 seconds later, but the Hokies would not score again until there were three seconds left and they were trailing 113-103.

Morgan, Turner and Crotty scored four points each in the extra period.

The Cavaliers also got 15 from Bryant Stith, 14 from Turner, 13 from Blundin and 10 from Brent Dabbs.

Wally Lancaster, in his first game back since sitting out two games with a sore ankle, had 24 points for the Hokies, who also got 21 from George Caesar. Lancaster fouled out late in regulation and Caesar with 3:54 left in the extra period.

"We came through a lot of adversity and foul trouble to get back in the game," Allen said. "Our kids battled back well. We just couldn't get over the hump."

Lancaster ran his NCAA record of consecutive games with at least one 3-point goal to 62.

To the Sports Editor:

There are proper means of registering a complaint with an authoritative or governing body and there was ways to get attention. Georgetown University head basketball coach John Thompson has chosen the latter.

The subject of his protest is the very controversial Proposition 42, recently adopted at the NCAA Convention. Proposition 42 is set to become effective in August of 1990, but will probably be reassessed at the next NCAA Convention in January, 1990.

Proposition 42 states that no athletic scholarship can be awarded to an incoming freshman who does not meet minimum academic standards of a 700 score on the SAT or a 15 on the ACT and a 2.0 GPA in a high school core curriculum. Proposition 48, the existing qualification for freshman eligibility was passed in 1983. Its guidelines are minimum scores of 700 on the SAT or 15 on the ACT or a 2.0 average in the high school core curriculum courses. If an athlete does not meet these requirements he may still be awarded an athletic scholarship, but cannot participate in games or practice. Proposition 42 is unquestionably a stiffening of academic standards.

This letter does not debate the pros and cons of Proposition 42, but brings under scrutiny the method of Thompson's objection, which was walking off the floor before the Georgetown-Boston College game on Jan. 14. Would Thompson find it acceptable if one of the Georgetown starters walked off the floor right before practice began in protest of one of his rules? Wouldn't it be better to try and bring about change in a more positive and acceptable manner? Would it have been too difficult for Coach Thompson to have started his campaign for change by contacting the officials with opposing views, expressing his concerns, thoughts, etc., and then asking them to reconsider?

Award-Winning Actor Will Star In Cambodian Film

By Jerry Buck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Academy Award-winner Haing Ngor appears Sunday in a half-hour documentary called "Beyond the Killing Fields" that he hopes will "wake up the world" to the plight of Cambodian refugees.

"The documentary shows the work I'm doing and is about the suffering of the people at the border," he said. "We must wake up the world. Why has the world forgotten Cambodia and especially its children?"

"Before 'The Killing Fields' no one knew what happened in Cambodia. The Khmer Rouge killed 4 million people. If Vietnam pulls out and the Khmer Rouge return they may kill the rest of the people."

Ngor, who won the Oscar as best supporting actor for "The Killing Fields" in 1984, appears in a segment of "National Geographic Explorer" this Sunday on SuperStation TBS.

He has been devoting most of his spare time and money from his acting career to helping the many thousands of Cambodian refugees driven from their own country and forced by international policies to stay in the camps in Thailand. He works through two groups he has organized, Aid to Displaced Persons and Enfant d'Angkor.

"My main goal is to build a hospital to help the refugees," he said. "Right now that's hard because of the Thailand government. They talk, but we haven't seen a green light. The money is there from contributions raised in Europe."

The Khmer Rouge is the Chinese-backed communist faction that overthrew the republic in 1975. The Soviet-backed Vietnamese pushed the Khmer Rouge out in 1979, but now the Vietnamese are considering a pullout. Ngor said he estimates the population was 7.5 million to 8 million in 1970. He believes between 700,000 and 1 million died between 1970 and 1975.

During the reign of the Khmer Rouge, Ngor said, his personal estimate is that 4 million Cambodians were killed. The International Red Cross places the number of deaths at 2 million.

"The communists never think of civil rights," he said. "If they want to kill, they kill. The Khmer Rouge want to create a utopian society. Mostly, they want power. All the power. 'The Killing Fields' told the story of one family that got out. But what about the millions more who didn't get out? Almost my whole family was killed by the Khmer Rouge."

Ngor, a small, intense, bespectacled man, lost his parents, his brothers and sisters and his girlfriend. He had been a physician and suffered intense and crippling torture at the hands of the Khmer Rouge.

"My life is like skin of teeth," he said. "The Killing Fields" just touched the tip of the iceberg. The real story is much worse."

He won the Oscar for playing Dith Pran in "The Killing Fields." He plays a North Vietnamese army captain in "The Iron Tr show for the fall. The show's already been cleared in 72 cities. "LasCurtain," a movie about Vietnamese in this country.

He also will play himself in a movie based on his autobiography, "Free at Last," and will star in another film called "The Other War."

Ngor said he needs the world's support to keep the Khmer Rouge from returning to power.

"I don't want history to be repeated," he said. "My people, innocent people, will pay the price. The Khmer Rouge have already killed 95 percent of the educated people of Cambodia. Most of those at the border are orphaned children. They are the next generation of Cambodians."

"I was happy when the National Geographic people came to me. I am happy that we can show the world what happened to my country. The war is not yet over. The killings are not over yet."

Sharkey Back

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Ray Sharkey will be back on CBS' "Wiseguy" for one episode to air in February.

His character, Sonny Steelgrave, is deceased. But star Ken Wahl came up with a storyline that has Sonny returning as a vision visited upon Wahl's character, undercover agent Vinnie Terranova.

Filming is scheduled to begin in Vancouver, British Columbia, this week.

Ramesses Exhibit Has Been Rousing Success In Charlotte

By Paul Nowell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Less than a week away from closing the blockbuster "Ramesses the Great" exhibit of ancient Egyptian artifacts, Mint Museum director Milton Bloch considered some of the things that could have gone wrong during the last four months.

"There's been relatively few problems considering we were on a path strewn with potential land mines — a labor strike, a fire, a tornado or zoning problems," he said. "There's all kinds of showstoppers that could have left us high and dry."

But none of those came to pass, and the exhibit, which has drawn more than 620,000 visitors since it opened Oct. 1, will be remembered as a rousing success.

"In one sense we had no right to even try to do it," Bloch said in an interview Tuesday at the museum. "We're now known as people who can reach way above our heads."

Bloch laughed when a visitor suggested that the gods must have been smiling on the Mint during the show's long stay in Charlotte.

"I feel real fortunate," he said. "We had 120 of the mildest winter days I can remember and only one interruption of power."

Landing the show of 73 treasured objects from the time of Ramesses II, who ruled Egypt 3,000 years ago, was a major coup for the museum and quickly became a logistical nightmare.

The exhibit became by far the largest and most expensive undertaking in the 51-year-old history of the Mint. The $4.6 million budget was larger than the museum's previous 50 budgets put together.

To pull it all together, the museum closed in May and the inside of the building was gutted. The staff of 45 was nearly doubled, a 15,000-square-foot addition was built, and parking was added.

Part of the budget included $800,000 for advertising. The museum also benefited from a lot of free publicity, including a picture of the pharaoh on the cover of 1 million Southern Bell phone books.

By agreement with the Egyptian government, the Mint could not make a profit from the Ramesses exhibit. Officials were more concerned about losing money.

"The show will just about break even," Bloch said, adding that his only disappointment was that he felt the museum could have turned a profit.

To break even, Mint officials said, they needed to sell about 550,000 tickets. As of Tuesday, more than 620,000 tickets had been sold. Of that total, about 180,000 went to students.

The facility does not come away completely empty-handed. When the show departs next Tuesday for its next stop in Dallas, the Mint will be left with 140 additional parking spaces, a new $25,000 cargo bay used to bring in large artworks, improved lighting, upgraded security and new office equipment.

The exhibit also swelled the Mint's membership rolls by about 1,000. According to Ramesses project coordinator Robert Bush, the Mint also will take in about $500,000 from the sale of gifts from shops at the museum and the SouthPark shopping mall in Charlotte.

Any excess profits over costs goes back to the Egyptian government, which insisted on no-profit contracts for the traveling exhibit after watching American museums make millions off the "Treasures of Tutankhamun" exhibit in the 1970s while it lacked funds to restore its monuments.

The benefits of hosting the exhibit are many, Bloch said, including improvements to the structure, more members and a larger volunteer force.

"It also has given a broader vision," he said. "We've got a new assessment of our strengths and capabilities."

"Now when we look ahead and when an opportunity comes along, we know we can handle it," he said.

Bloch believes good planning helped ensure a successful run. All complaints were brought to his attention, and they were few.

"There were a handful (of complaints) but when you measure them against the hundreds of thousands of people who were thrilled it doesn't even measure," he said. "The high regard we got from our visitors is music to my ears."

Many of those visitors were coming to the Mint for the first time, he said. "We saw the exhibit as a chance to demystify the museum," he said. "Once they came they found it was exciting and not deadily boring."

Bloch said despite all the long hours and hard work, the museum could not pass up the opportunity to host such an important exhibit.

New Madonna Single Scheduled March 3

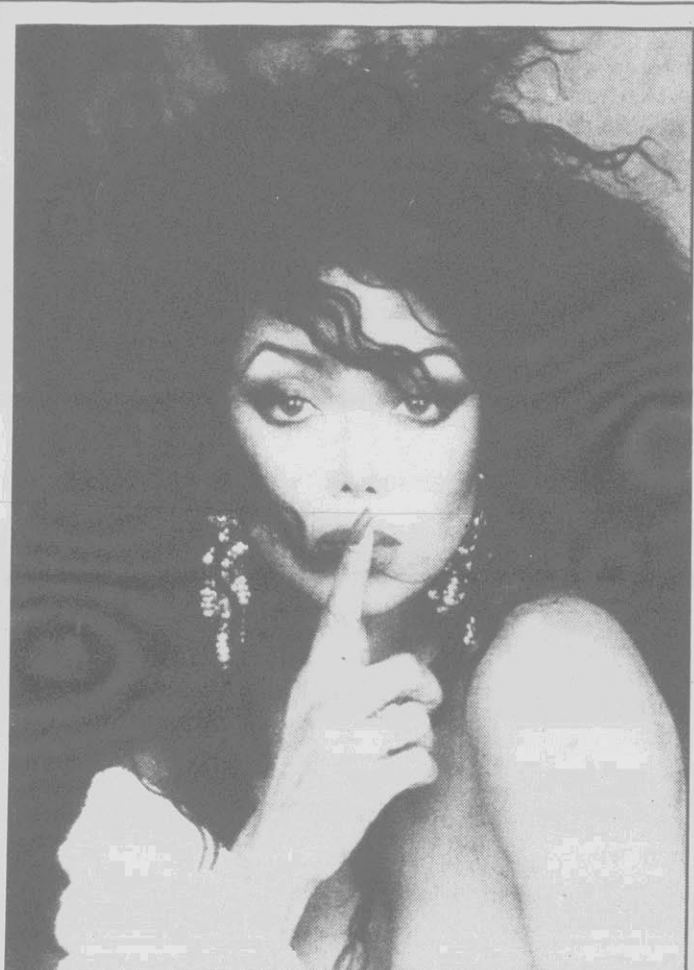

NEW YORK (AP) — Everybody holding their breath until they can hear Madonna's hot new single can exhale on March 3.

That's when Warner Bros. Records says it will release "Like a Prayer" — the title track from the singer's new album. The album itself, which includes a duet with Prince on a song he and Madonna wrote together, "Love Song," will be released March 15.

There's more: the video for "Like a Prayer" features Madonna plunging into the Olympic diving pool at the University of Southern California from a height of 33 feet, the company said Wednesday.

The album includes "a number of hot dance tracks," the company said. It noted, "much of the material ... is of a personal tone."

Entertainer LaToya Jackson is shown as she appears in the March issue of Playboy Magazine. She's the sister of singer Michael Jackson.

Actress Kelly McGillis Says She Wed Secretly

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Actress Kelly McGillis, the star of "Witness" and "The Accused," says she and California yacht broker Fred Tillman were secretly married New Year's Eve.

The ceremonies were held on Tillman's yacht off Miami as Miss McGillis was filming the movie "Cat Chaser," co-starring Peter Weller, the actress said in a statement Wednesday.

Barr-Streep Film Set For N.Y.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "The Life and Loves of a She Devil," a comedy starring Roseanne Barr and Meryl Streep, will begin shooting in New York in April, Orion Pictures announced.

The film, to be produced by Jonathan Brett and directed by Susan Seidelman, will be Barr's big screen debut and Streep's first major comic role, Mike Medavoy, an Orion executive vice president, said Wednesday.

The film, to be adapted from a novel by Fay Weldon, follows the downfall and revenge of Barr, an overweight housewife whose husband leaves her for an attractive romance writer.

She was seen most recently as a prosecutor in a rape case in last fall's "The Accused." She also will be featured in "The Winter People," due to be released later this year.

The statement did not include Tillman's age.

Prison Undergoes Changes For Movie

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CARSON CITY, Nev. — A reverse face lift is under way at the Nevada State Prison in anticipation of actor Tom Selleck's arrival next month to begin work on a film.

"If you thought it looked dreary before, wait until you see it now," prison Lt. Mike Budge said Wednesday.

The maximum-security prison will be one of the scenes for Selleck's movie "Hard Rain." Sets being constructed by Disney Studios and inmate volunteers have changed the look of the place.

The crews have installed a new entrance for the movie's use and added a gun tower and razor wire.

The work is scheduled for completion Feb. 20, one day before shooting is to begin at the prison. Other scenes will be filmed at the Reno jail, a machine shop in Sparks and additional locations in the area.

Prisoners working on the sets and about 300 inmates who will appear briefly in a crowd scene shot in the prison yard all receive minimum wage for their work and the "actors" get to keep their studio-issued clothing.

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR FRIDAY Jan. 27

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Hoping that the odds are in your favor is not enough. Study the matter and stay with what is feasible. Luck is on your side.
TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Arguments need to be toned down and compromised. The homefront is a safe refuge today. Family members appreciate you.
GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Legal problems can arise if you ignore important matters that need attention. Adopt whatever measures are necessary.
MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): All sorts of happy opportunities could come along. Don't fail to recognize them because of preoccupation with social matters.
LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Take a more conservative approach with a new love interest who will not be impressed by a lavish approach. Try to collect an old debt.
VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): You could get caught up in change just for the sake of change which has poor results. A friend or close associate may try to take charge.
LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): A little gentle prodding can move social interests along. Plans and arrangements can be made easily today.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Chatter around you can affect your nerves. Stay clear of the gossip, and back away from any discordant situations.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Taking unnecessary chances would be the wrong approach. This inner turmoil will not last, so calm down and remain confident.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Retreating from an emotional situation will not settle the matter, only postpone it. Patiently, in your kindest way, air out the difficulty.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Tides are turning in your favor financially. Your level-headed approach and personality furnish the ideal atmosphere for progress.
PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): The potential for boredom is there unless you do something about it. Adventure and variety could be a remedy.

 Opening lead: King of ♠
 If you open any beginners' bridge book, you'll find it contains a table of opening leads. These standard leads will keep you on the right track most of the time, but slavishly following them can prove costly—as this hand proves.

 At both tables in a team match the final contract was four hearts, reached in an identical manner. Note that, despite his 19 high-card points, North did not even think of slam opposite his partner's preempt. He knew his side was off at least one ace, and there had to be another loser somewhere.
 At one table West made the daring opening lead of the king of spades. That did not figure to cost. If either opponent held the ace, it figured to be North. The lead would blow a trick only in the event that North held the ace, East the jack and South the queen. And it stood to reap a huge dividend if East held the ace.

When the king won, it was a simple matter for West to continue with a spade to East's ace; and ruff the continuation. He then exited with the four of hearts. Declarer stared at that card suspiciously, but finally elected to go with the percentage play of a 2-1 break by rising with the ace—down one.
 At the other table West made the "safe" lead of the jack of diamonds. Declarer won and cashed the remaining diamond winners for two spade discards. He returned to hand with the ace of clubs and ran the ten of hearts. Next came a heart to the jack, the king of clubs and then the jack. Since it would not help to cover with the queen, East played low. Declarer discarded his remaining spade, and so made all the tricks!

Legislation

RALEIGH (AP) — The nation's top anti-smoking group pledged to fight for higher cigarette taxes, a ban on tobacco advertising and dramatically tougher federal regulation of cigarettes.

But even as the group unveiled its 1989-90 legislative agenda on Wednesday, it conceded it faces tough odds in a Congress that is heavily lobbied by the tobacco industry.

"All of these are going to be uphill battles," Scott D. Ballin, chairman of the Coalition on Smoking or Health, said. "Any tobacco issue is an uphill battle."

The coalition is a joint effort of the American Heart Association, the American Lung Association and the American Cancer Society.
