North Enters Federal Court Building in Washington

North Jury Selection Begins

Faces Charges Of Lying, Destroying Evidence And Conspiracy

WASHINGTON — The trial of fired White House aide Oliver L. North opened today with efforts to select a jury that has not been exposed substantially to the massive publicity surrounding the Iran-Contra affair.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell issued a questionnaire to 54 prospective jurors asking them, "Have you read or seen or heard anything about this case before coming to this court?"

North, dressed in a dark suit, sat at the defense table as Gesell addressed the prospective jurors. Then they filed out of the courtroom to fill out the questionnaires.

North's trial on charges of lying to Congress, shredding evidence and conspiring to commit tax fraud "arises following a period of fairly intense publicity on television, newspapers, magazines" which will continue, Gesell told the jurors.

The questionnaire each of the jurors was told to fill out carries a written warning not to read or listen to anything about North. The questionnaire also admonishes prospective jurors not to discuss the case with anyone.

The questionnaire also asks whether the prospective juror knows or has any connection with any one of 195 people whose names have come up in the Iran-Contra case, including former President Reagan and President Bush.

Those who spent much time viewing the nationally televised hearings into the Iran-Contra affair likely will be dismissed from the pool.

Gesell wants to find 50 people out of a pool of 300 who have not been exposed to the congressional testimony of North or other witnesses granted limited immunity from prosecution in exchange for telling their stories to Congress.

Indicted 10½ months ago, the retired Marine lieutenant colonel and decorated Vietnam veteran is the first figure in the scandal to come to trial.

He could face up to 60 years in prison and $3 million in fines if convicted of all 12 crimes with which he is charged.

Guilty Plea Brings 50-Year Jail Term

Clay Changes Plea As Trial Nears

By John Bare
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A Greenville man was sentenced to 50 years in prison and fined $200,000 today after pleading guilty to six heroin violations.

Special Superior Court Judge Sam Currin of Raleigh sentenced Elijah Clay, 38, 104-E Lakeview Terrace. Jury selection for Clay's trial had been set to begin today, as Pitt court officials continue a series of drug trials this week.

Clay was the only person arrested in last year's State Bureau of Investigation drug sweep in Greenville to be charged with trafficking offenses. He faced several trafficking counts involving at least 4 grams of heroin. Each charge carried a potential minimum prison term of 14 years and a maximum of 20 years. Clay was also charged with maintaining two vehicles for the purpose of controlled substances and possessing, selling and delivering heroin.

In the plea arrangement with the state, Clay pleaded guilty today to two trafficking counts, two counts of possessing heroin with the intent to sell the drug and two counts of selling heroin. Other charges are to be dismissed.

Clay was arrested last September after an eight-month undercover drug operation conducted by the SBI in cooperation with local law enforcement authorities. He was one of 31 people indicted in connection with the drug sweep, and about 20 others are also on the Superior Court calendar this week.

In a separate case, a Greenville woman was sentenced to nine years in prison Monday after pleading guilty to more than a dozen cocaine and heroin violations.

Initially charged with 27 heroin and cocaine violations, Laura Ruth Vines Daniels, 39, 512 Davis St. pleaded guilty to 15 charges. She faced a maximum of 190 years in prison, according to court records, but under the plea arrangement with the state, she could have received no more than 50 years.

Superior Court Judge David E. Reid Jr. of Greenville consolidated the charges and sentenced Ms. Daniels to nine years in prison. He also ordered her to undergo treatment for substance abuse.

The charges stemmed from a series of heroin and crack sales Ms. Daniels was accused of making to undercover drug agents from March through April of 1988. She was also accused of conspiring on April 18 with Ricky L. Jackson of Oakmont

More than 1,000 letters will be mailed to Pitt County citizens who may be eligible to receive benefits under the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act.

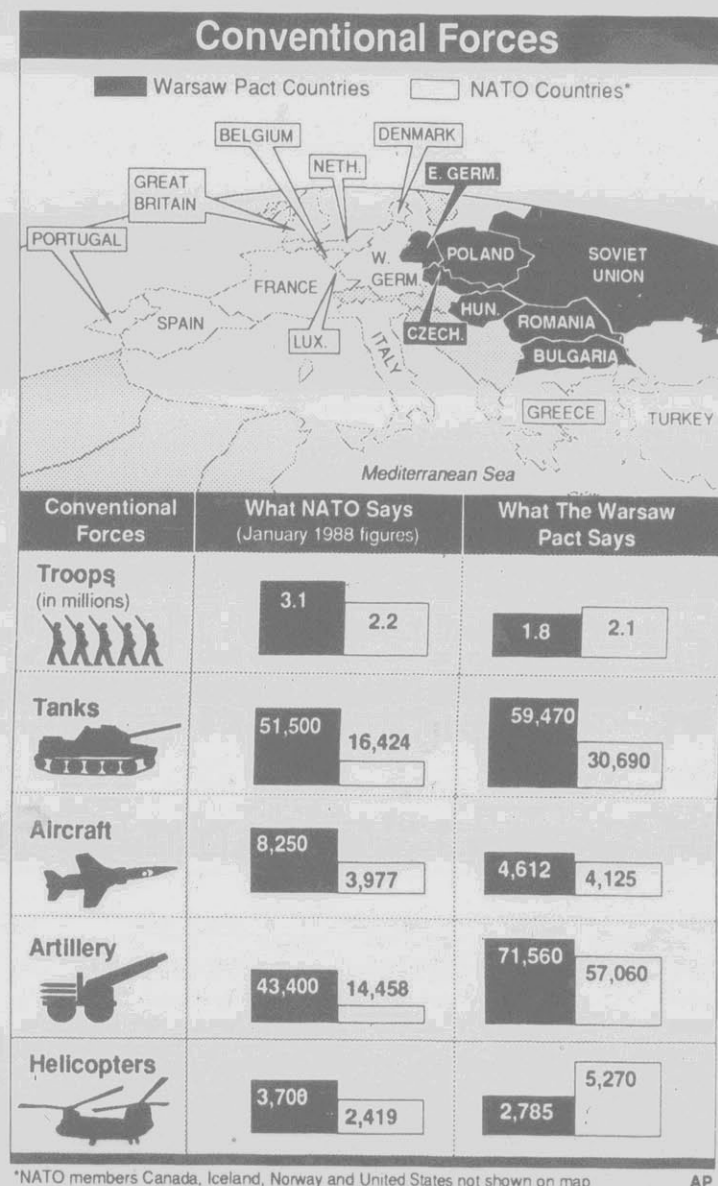

About 1,200 county citizens may receive benefits from the federal program which became effective at the first of the year, but only about 100 citizens have applied for the benefits.

"We're off to a slow start," Deborah Ryals told the Pitt County Board of Social Services in its meeting Monday afternoon. Ms. Ryals is the eligibility director for the county Social Services department.

Elderly and disabled county citizens will be most aided by the benefits of the program, which include paying hospital bills, doctors' fees, prescription bills and other services, she said.

In order to reach those potential clients, who may have transportation problems and the like, department employees have visited nutrition centers to discuss the program in addition to mailing the letters to

Soviets Publish Troop Strength

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union has published its most detailed breakdown ever of Warsaw Pact conventional forces in Europe in an effort to rebut Western claims that the Soviet bloc has a clear advantage over the NATO alliance.

The breakdown in Monday's edition of Pravda, the Communist Party newspaper, did not account for differences between East and West over how to interpret the figures, however.

Those differences have stymied negotiations on reducing conventional forces in Europe for 15 years.

In its statement, the Soviet bloc acknowledges having twice as many tanks in Europe as NATO — far below the 3-1 advantage alleged by the West — but claims the West has the advantage in attack aircraft and personnel.

Hence, the Soviets asserted, the strength of the two sides is about equal.

Western experts did not agree.

U.S. Teens End Up At Bottom Of Pile In International Math-Science Exams

By Jill Lawrence
 THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — American teen-agers came out at the bottom of the heap in a survey of math and science performance among students in five countries and four Canadian provinces, the Educational Testing Service reported today.

The low math performance levels are "a matter for grave concern" while the science results "are sobering and pose a serious challenge to our position in the world community," according to the report, called "A World of Differences."

The ETS study is its first international assessment of educational progress, a counterpart to the group's periodic national assessments in various academic fields. It was financed by the National Science Foundation and the Department of Education.

Findings were based on tests of approximately 24,000 13-year-olds in Ireland, Korea, Spain, the United Kingdom, the United States, British Columbia, New Brunswick, Ontario and Quebec. The last three were divided into French- and English-speaking samples.

In all countries and provinces, the more time spent watching television, the poorer student performance was in both math and science, the report found. And in all but two, more than 50 percent of the students reported spending an hour or less each day doing homework in all their subjects. The exceptions were Ireland and Spain, where two hours or more was the norm.

The survey revealed that almost all U.S. 13-year-olds have mastered math basics and know everyday science facts. But ETS notes that "national assessments consistently reveal a weakness in higher-order thinking skills" and this is borne out in the international assessment.

Korean students demonstrated the highest overall mathematics achievement while those from the United States and Ontario (the French speakers) showed the lowest.

For example, the report said, 78 percent of the Korean 13-year-olds can use intermediate mathematics skills to solve two-step problems, compared with only 40 percent in the United States and French-speaking Ontario.

Also in Korea, 40 percent of the students understand measurement and geometry concepts and can solve even more complex problems — compared with under 10 percent in the United States and French-speaking Ontario.

Despite their poor performance, the ETS report said, two-thirds of U.S. students said they considered themselves "good at mathematics." Only 23 percent of Korean students,

Local Blacks Split On 'African-American'

By Greg Laudick
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

"Colored," "Negro" and "Black." Those are among the names which have been used at different periods in the United States to Americans of African origin.

A highly publicized movement, led by the Rev. Jesse Jackson, is currently under way to change the commonly used collective term "blacks" to "African-Americans."

Those in favor of the concept say that the new name fosters an improved cultural and ethnic identity for that minority group.

However, some national black leaders say they do not share an identification with Africa and that the debate is stealing attention from those issues which should be drawing concern and support from the black community.

Several local blacks today voiced their own opinion on whether blacks should be called "African-Americans."

"It's something I myself have felt for years," said Barbara Fenner, director of the West Greenville Community Development Corporation.

"Whenever you fill out an application, there is a space for you to check Hispanic-American and Asian-American and then it just says 'black.'"

"To me that does not identify us with any nationality — as if black people did not come from any nation."

"To me, it's a very positive step and I think Jesse Jackson is absolutely right in stating that it is time for blacks to identify with their origins," she said.

Ms. Fenner said she has no problems with being called black. However, she says she has a special sense of pride being identified as African-American.

"I have traveled to Africa and I know what I'm being identified with — the history of mankind. That began in the heart of Africa. I also identify with the richness and the resources found in that country," she said.

Jeffrey Savage, executive vice president of Minority Voice Inc., said that organization's radio station, WOOW, started using the term "African-American" several years ago.

"We felt it would be more indicative of our history as a race of people," he said.

"We have come a long way as a people and along that way, we have changed the name to which we would like to be referred as a race of people. I think the term African-American will become the name that will stick for generations to come," he said.

Bennie Rountree of Greenville, state president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said blacks in America have been referred to by many labels in the past and instead of debating which name to use, blacks should invest their energies in solving problems which currently plague the black community.

"I'm perfectly satisfied with being referred to as a black American," he said.

Rufus Huggins, Greenville City Council member, said he respects the opinions of all people and their right to be referred to whatever name they so choose.

"As an individual, I look at myself as an American — a black American," Huggins said.

"This is where I was born and as an American, I would like to think of myself as a person who looks toward solving those problems which face other Americans," he said.

Greenville Mayor Ed Carter has identified with black origins by proclaiming February as Afro-American (Black) History Month in the city.

Cabarrus May Lift Measles Ban

Kinston Student At Appalachian State Joins List Of Stricken

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Cabarrus County health officials are considering relaxing a three-week-old limited quarantine, which would allow athletic events to resume on a restricted basis.

"It (the quarantine) is not ending per se, because there will be stipulations," said Dennis Joyner, health educator for the Cabarrus County Health Department. "We're still advising large groups of young people not to meet, but we're relaxing the quarantine for athletics."

County and state health officials planned to meet today to discuss relaxing the quarantine, which bans athletic and social events among school-age people. The quarantine was imposed in an attempt to stem an outbreak of red measles.

The outbreak began in December in Rowan County, where 163 cases

"Hansel and Gretel" and performed it for classmates and parents.

Third-grade TEP students gave oral presentations to third-graders about countries they had researched, while second-grade TEP students culminated a unit on endangered species by sharing a variety of projects with second-graders.

Activities Sponsored

Chapter I teachers at South Greenville School are sponsoring activities for students at risk and their parents.

Events have included a meeting to introduce parents to the Chapter I program and a discussion by Bill Sanders on the importance of overcoming obstacles and getting a good education.

A program on "Everything You Wanted to Know About the C.A.T. Test" will be held Friday from noon to 1 p.m. in the Chapter I trailer. Dr. Patricia Anderson of the East Carolina University School of Education will speak.

Attendants should bring a sandwich and beverages will be provided. For information, call Gwendolyn Gray or Patricia Mair at 756-4242 from 2 p.m. to 3 p.m.

have been reported. Since it began, confirmed or suspected cases of red measles have been reported in 46 counties.

Cabarrus County, with 34 confirmed or suspected cases, was the second hardest-hit county. The most recent case there was reported Friday.

Joyner said he expects the athletic restrictions to require that Cabarrus County teams play teams from outside the county at the opposing team's school. Players and reporters covering the games would have to meet state immunization requirements.

Meanwhile, officials at three universities announced plans to carry through on threats to prevent any students or faculty who haven't been immunized from going to class.

Two more confirmed cases of red measles were reported at Appalachian State University, meaning that some students, professors and employees who cannot be immunized will be barred from campus for two weeks, officials said Monday.

As many as 600 others must be vaccinated or show proof of proper immunization before they are allowed to return to class or to work, said C. Speed Hallman, a spokesman for ASU.

At ASU, Hallman said that a student from Kinston and one from Cary, both women, were confirmed as having measles Monday. Both have gone home.

Professors at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington are supposed to turn an estimated 500 students away from classes today for failing to get a red measles vaccination.

And at Duke University in Durham, only a few hundred of more than 3,000 students and 7,000 faculty and hospital staff members who were required to get vaccinations had rolled up their sleeves by afternoon, said Dr. Howard J. Eisenson, student health director.

The university told the students and staff they would have to show proof they had been immunized or stay away from class and work temporarily. The action followed confirmation Friday that a Duke sophomore had red measles.

If no new cases are confirmed at Duke, non-immunized staff and students can return to campus Feb. 10, Eisenson said. "But we hope those who need it will be getting the shots."

The measles case at Duke was the first confirmed in Durham County. By Monday afternoon, health officials said, there were 46 counties with confirmed or suspected cases, up from 40 reported Friday. In addition to Durham, the other new counties are Granville, Jackson, Pamlico, Swain and Wayne. Statewide, more than 80 cases have been confirmed, and more than 180 are suspected.

"We thought it had peaked in December," said Wayne Raynor, assistant coordinator of immunization with the state Division of Health Services. "But it doesn't look like there's an end in sight yet."

The first case on the ASU campus was confirmed Jan. 13. It led to the vaccination of about 4,000 students, professors and employees found to be in a high-risk category of people not properly immunized, Hallman said.

But about 600 people either ignored letters to check their immunization records or were not vaccinated for other reasons including pregnancy, religious beliefs or other illnesses that they were had, he said.

King's Waistcoat Remains Unproven

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — The waistcoat reputedly worn by King Charles I at his beheading in 1649 is being taken back to the Museum of London today, after a police crime lab failed to determine if its mysterious stains are royal blood.

"We have examined it but we cannot tell if the stains are blood," said Graham Divall, a biochemist at the Metropolitan Police Forensic Science Laboratory.

"If we had a piece of the silk we could look for some form of hemoglobin by using intensive X-rays to show the protein structure, but naturally, the museum won't let us cut it up," said Divall.

To discover whether the stains could have been the king's blood, the museum sent the waistcoat to the lab, where it underwent the routine tests that would be conducted in a modern-day crime, Divall said.

"I am convinced we have the king's waistcoat," Kay Staniland, the museum's keeper of costume and textiles, said on Monday, the 340th anniversary of the execution.

"The workmanship of the knitting is right for the time and when it was bought for us from a collector in 1925, it had a note attached saying it had belonged to Dr. Hobbs, the physician who attended the king on the scaffold. It then passed to his daughter, Susannah, and remained with their descendants until it was auctioned in 1898," Miss Staniland said.

The faded blue silk waistcoat is believed to have been worn by the king next to his skin when his head was chopped off on Jan. 30, 1649, after he lost his long struggle against the Puritan leader, Oliver Cromwell. The monarch stepped out on the scaffold in Whitehall, central London, from a window of the Banqueting House, which still stands.

The long-sleeved garment with buttoned neck opening and small upstanding collar has armpit stains, probably from sweat, but no collar stains. Two large stains, on the upper chest and abdomen, have survived an attempt to clean them off.

"We took ultraviolet light photographs and did a very sensitive chemical test for blood which we are doing every day on clothing, weapons and at the scene of a crime. We were not surprised at the negative results because blood would have degraded in 300 years," he said.

The king was a small man, and the waistcoat's chest measures only 28 inches. It is long enough to reach his thighs.

"We wanted to see if the legend about the stains being blood could be true. But the only way we could prove that without destroying anything was if we had some proved blood-stains of the same period and we haven't," said Suzanne Keene, the museum's head of conservation.

"An eyewitness of the execution said the king was wearing a sky blue garment, and the waistcoat is a faded sky blue," Ms. Keene added.

Miss Staniland said: "Authentication is a difficult business and it would help if we had other garments of the king."

Swaggart Denies Penthouse Story Tying Him To Stripper

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BATON ROUGE, La. — Television evangelist Jimmy Swaggart has accused Penthouse magazine of trying to destroy his ministry through a "diabolical and slanderous" story in which a stripper says she performed sexual acts for him.

The stripper's employer labeled the woman's allegations, detailed in the magazine's current issue, "a pornographic fairy tale." As Swaggart threatened to file a libel suit Monday, the magazine said it was standing by its article.

The allegations by the woman, Catherine Mary Kampen, are similar to those leveled last year by a prostitute, Debra Murphree. Those allegations led to Swaggart's ouster from the Assemblies of God, a Pentecostal denomination, and a major downturn in the fortunes of Jimmy Swaggart World Ministries.

"There is not one shred of truth to these allegations. I have never met or seen the woman," Swaggart said at a news conference at his ministry headquarters.

"Our attorneys learned of this fraudulent story in December and had clearly shown Penthouse and its porno writer, Art Harris (the author), that the story was untrue," Swaggart said. "We now know that they already knew and did not care that it was a lie."

Penthouse spokesman Sy Presten issued a statement for publisher Bob Guccione saying the magazine stood behind the story.

"The fact that she was with Swaggart has been corroborated by her husband and others in Louisiana," the statement said. "The things she reports Swaggart made her do are very similar to the story of Debra Murphree ... which have never been contradicted."

Ms. Kampen, 38, was quoted in

CATHERINE KAMPEN

Orleans, said a lawyer had advised her not to comment. She refused to confirm her sister's story.

At the news conference, Swaggart accused Penthouse of conspiring to destroy his ministry and asked for public support.

"I am appealing to the American people, and especially the Christians, to help us by letting the pornographers know they have filled this land with their filth far too long. There seems to be no end to their diabolical slander."

Attorney Dennis Brewer, a member of the ministries' board of directors, said Monday that a lawsuit would be filed within the next few days in Texas, where punitive damages are permitted in libel actions.

Last February, Swaggart confessed to an undisclosed sin, and Murphree said she had been paid by the evangelist to perform sex acts while he watched. Swaggart later was defrocked by the Assemblies of God after refusing to step down from the pulpit for at least a year.

The furor resulted in the cancellation of Swaggart's programs from three major cable television networks, an exodus of students and faculty from his Bible college and layoffs from the ministry, a major Baton Rouge employer.

Penthouse as saying Swaggart gained her trust with his counseling, then emotionally manipulated her into acting out sexual fantasies.

She was reported to be in New York for promotional appearances about the article and could not be reached for additional comment.

Rhonda Shear, co-owner of "Hot Lines," a strip-tease telegram service that employs Ms. Kampen in New Orleans, said her sister, Nona, told her that Ms. Kampen made up the story after seeing the Penthouse account of Murphree's relations with Swaggart.

"She told my sister it was all concocted," Shear said in a telephone interview from Los Angeles. "She saw the issue with Debra Murphree (and said) ... 'It's only a matter of time before someone jumps on that band wagon. Why not me?' ... She said it was foolproof if she said it happened at her house."

Legendary Groundhog Day Will Arrive On Thursday

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Folklore has it that groundhogs will appear this week with weather on their minds, but scientists say what the animals really are interested in is sex.

Across America, small-town chambers of commerce will disturb sleeping woodchucks Thursday in the commercialized adaptation of farm folklore known as groundhog day.

The folk belief is that if the groundhog sees his shadow, six more weeks of winter weather are in store. If there's no shadow, that means good weather is just around the corner.

Woodchucks do indeed begin to leave hibernation at this time of year — at least in some parts of the nation. But scientists say they're looking for mates, not shadows.

It's the males that come out of the burrows first, looking for females. The lady groundhogs will be awakening in a few weeks. In the meantime, the males search for food and fight among themselves, according to scientific studies conducted in Maryland and Pennsylvania.

But the human focus is on the notion that animal behavior somehow can predict the weather, an idea that extends back at least to the ancient Celts and which was spread by the Roman legions.

Somewhat lost in the modern observance is the Feb. 2 commemoration known as Candlemas, a feast of the Christian church which occurs at midwinter, approximately halfway between the winter solstice and the spring equinox.

Through the centuries, farmers came to consider the celebration a good time to try to make weather predictions, applying the theory that the rest of winter would be the opposite of that on Candlemas.

"If Candlemas be bright and clear, there'll be two winters in the year" goes one traditional British rhyme.

Its counterpart says: "If Candlemas bring clouds and rain, go winter, and come not again."

Similar beliefs are reported from Ireland, Scotland, France and Spain. Indeed, so serious was this taken that some German farmers were said to have preferred to see a wolf in the stable than that Candlemas day be pleasant and clear.

Whether or not they were that strong believers, it was the Germans who settled in Pennsylvania who brought to America the tradition of predicting the weather on this date.

In Europe they had looked to the first movements of hibernating bears, hedgehogs and badgers for weather predictions. On this side of the ocean the honor fell to the woodchuck — also known as the groundhog or marmot.

The notion that a shadow might frighten the animal back into its cave led to the associated prediction of continued winter weather.

Many folks consider that bad news.

In the more northerly areas of the country, however, some people are said to hope that the groundhog will see its shadow — predicting that winter will last "only" six more weeks.

The U.S. Naval Observatory, meanwhile, relays reports from sailors stationed at Guantanamo Bay the local residents in Cuba have a somewhat similar tradition.

The belief is that on Feb. 2, banana rats find a tree to climb and relax in. If they settle at a low level, it will be a bad year for hurricanes, while rats climbing high in the trees indicate a mild hurricane season.

For the more religious, the church observations on this date are known as the Feast of Presentation of the Lord and the Feast of the Purification of Mary.

This celebrates Mary's presentation of Jesus at the Temple in Jerusalem 40 days after his birth. That presentation, said to bring light to the world, helped lead to the custom of blessing, on this date, the candles destined to be used for the rest of the year. Hence, the name Candlemas.

And even those candles extend the weather-folklore connection, with the superstition that a candle blessed on this date will protect a home if lighted during a thunderstorm.

Frank Discussion Averts Mistakes

One more startling development of the changing Soviet Union is the revelation that Fidel Castro was urging the Soviets to launch a nuclear strike against the United States at the height of the 1962 Cuban crisis.

It is not so surprising that Castro would make such an irresponsible request, but that U.S., Soviet and Cuban government participants in the crisis are now discussing it openly in a Moscow conference.

The Cuban missile crisis was one of the great tests of the administration of President John F. Kennedy. Soviet missiles were detected on the then relatively new Communist nation only 90 miles off our shore and more were on the way. In a dramatic mid-ocean confrontation the Soviet ships were turned back by Nikita S. Khrushchev. It was as close as the world has ever come to a nuclear holocaust. It probably caused leaders of that time and the future to better understand that there would be no winners in a nuclear war.

The Moscow conference is of significance because it is not simply a group of scholars gathering to debate a point of history. Communist Cuba, after all, still exists and it could still be a base of attack against the United States. Both the Soviet Union and the United States still have their nuclear warheads and the possibility of confrontation will exist far into the future.

Thus such a conference is far different from a gathering of historians debating the battles of our Civil War or the mistakes of World War I. Historical events are completed and only their effect on future world development are still to be decided.

The Moscow conference deals with the ongoing. At the same time it is indicative of the remarkable openness that is now sweeping Soviet society.

Above all such conferences are essential to the two super powers having an understanding of each other. The world learned from this one that Khrushchev was being counseled to launch a nuclear attacks. It also learned that Soviet leaders and Castro were fully convinced that the United States was preparing an invasion of Cuba. Our leaders say that was not under consideration, at least not until the presence of the missiles became known and the confrontation was under way.

This conference, and future ones, can serve a great purpose in international understanding. Understanding can help to avoid the one disastrous mistake which can lead to world annihilation. If this is a product of Soviet glasnost, then it is welcome.

Hot Spots

The Pamlico Has Its Share

An East Carolina University Marine geologist reports there are at least five "hot spots" along the Pamlico River. These are areas where heavy metals and other toxics are 25 times above normal.

Stanley Riggs said that, while the Pamlico is not a Boston Harbor there are trouble locations. They might have been a part of the fish and crab disease problems which have caused concern.

Environmental distress is not a new issue to advocates of the Pamlico River. Those concerned with the great resource's future have struggled with evidence of declining water quality, increased pressure from development, industries and runoff. Fishermen know firsthand about declining productivity. They have watched oyster beds retreat miles in the past decade and seen their catches diminish in size and quality.

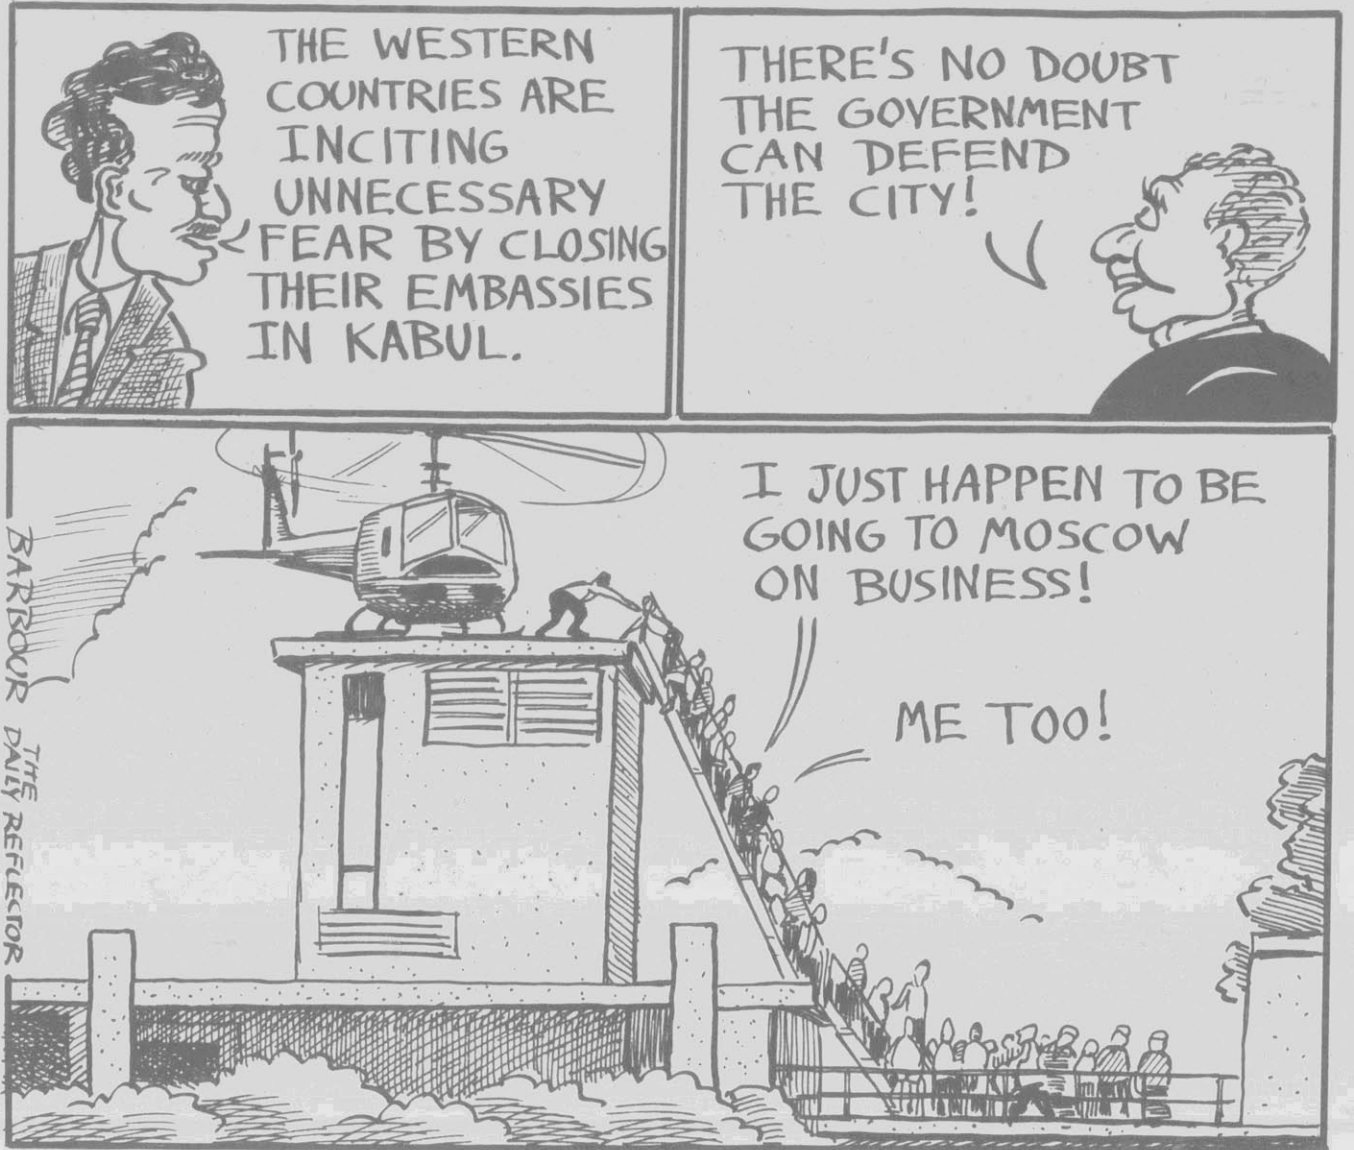

Riggs found problem spots off Texasgulf Chemicals Co. on the south side of the Pamlico, in Broad Creek on the river's north side, off Belhaven in the Pungo River and in the upper reaches of the Pungo.

Right now Environmental Protection Agency crews are concentrating on the FCX dump. FCX legally dumped farm chemicals at the site for over 20 years.

Riggs thinks there is a possibility the pesticides have already leaked into Kennedy Creek, which feeds into the Pamlico.

Pinpointing the sources of problems along the Pamlico is a complex, multi-faceted task. Riggs' studies, however, indicated there are several possibilities and perhaps they all combine to create the fish and crab disease problems.

There will be considerably more work to do before the disease mystery is solved and the pressures plaguing the Pamlico are eased. But while study is essential, action is equally necessary. The EPA cleanup of the FCX site is a step in the right direction. Continued monitoring of the hot spots and possibly other cleanups may be necessary. Overriding it all is the fact that the Pamlico River is a much too valuable resource to lose.

A Glimmer Of Good News

BOSTON — In a mere five weeks, Louis Sullivan has done more flip-flops on the subject of abortion than George Bush did in a lifetime.

First, the man chosen to head the department of Health and Human Services said he supported a woman's right to abortion. Then he said he didn't. Next, he said he wouldn't want to see Roe v. Wade overturned. Then he said he would.

George Bush's response to this sounded like an exercise in political new math. "He has supported my position 100 percent," said the President.

But the most intriguing question is not where the real Sullivan stands on legal abortion, but what difference it makes. From the furor over his opinions, you would think that Dr. Sullivan had been nominated for the Supreme Court. But the hematologist from Georgia was chosen for HHS. And for those in and out of the Senate confirmation hearings who have forgotten: HHS is out of the abortion business.

The only role that the head of HHS could play in the reproductive drama is in pregnancy prevention. The secretary does head up Title X, the program set up under that old libertine, Richard Nixon, to help the poor and young prevent unwanted pregnancies. A modest $130 million from the megabudget of more than $350 billion goes to that purpose.

During the Reagan administration, the New

Ellen Goodman

Right homesteaded on HHS's turf. They staked out the agency for their own social agenda. Title X was the prime target of those who were not only anti-abortion but also anti-birth control.

They began their eight-year attack by trying to eliminate Title X altogether. Having failed that, they launched the squeal rule, primarily to limit the independent access of teen-agers to birth control. Having failed that, they tried to regulate it to death. Using a cover of anti-abortion rhetoric, they went on the offensive against family planning — especially against their arch-enemy, Planned Parenthood.

The Reagan HHS ruled that no provider could give information about abortion — not even say the A-word — without losing federal funds. On the other hand, no clinic could legally misinform or disinform a patient about treatment without risking malpractice. They had a choice of losing funds or being sued for malpractice.

The same rule-writers said that family-planning clinics couldn't be in the same building as abortion facilities. As of now, three federal courts have enjoined these regulations. But, if instituted, the regulations would limit access to birth control. Which would, ironically, increase the demand for abortion.

After this sort of barrage, eight years during which conservative insiders lobbed grenades from HHS, Dr. Sullivan may well be a relief. Family planners may be able to use their energy in providing services instead of practicing self-defense.

Dr. Sullivan can have an effect on the abortion rate in one way. He comes out of a tradition of progressive medicine. He would head an agency that is acutely conscious of the troubles of teenage pregnancy. From the bully pulpit and from the administrator's office, he can expand both birth-control availability and birth-control choices.

The President has placed himself squarely in the anti-abortion camp. But the nomination of Dr. Sullivan is an early signal that there's some attempt to balance ideology and reality. It's unlikely that his crowd would be hostile to birth control. And that is a modicum of good news for those who believe that birth control should be a tool and not a target in the attempt to reduce the need for abortion.

To Blacks, Bush's Signals Matter

WASHINGTON — Eight years ago, at the beginning of the Reagan era, the best you could get out of black America was: Maybe Reagan won't be as bad as we fear.

His successor begins his term with a more hopeful, though still tentative, reaction: Could George Bush possibly be as good as he sounds?

The difference, which white America must find incomprehensible, is that Bush is more likable.

The new President lacks the easy grace, the unself-consciousness, the utter self-assurance of his predecessor — traits that endeared him to whites. He's not the sort of guy you'd stop off for drinks with, or hang an endearing nickname on, or swap stories with. He is almost a black man's caricature of whites: overeducated, stiff and sure to clap on the wrong beat.

So what is there about him that leads blacks, if not to like him, at least to suspend judgment on him?

I think it is as simple as this: Bush seems to understand the extent to which even economically successful blacks see themselves (or imagine that they are seen) as outsiders, our hunger for racial justice, the degree to which we rely on symbols.

The symbols have not all been positive. Blacks particularly remember Bush's campaign use of Willie Horton as a symbol of his opposition to liberal ideas of criminal justice. But he also promised during the campaign that he would be "personally involved" in protecting civil rights.

Lately the signals have been more reassuring: not just the "new breeze" of the inaugural speech but also his praise of Martin Luther King Jr. as God's gift to America and his pledge to fulfill King's dream. "Bigotry and indifference to disadvantage," he said, "will find no safe harbor on our shores, in our public life, in our neighborhoods or in our homes."

Already he has met with Coretta Scott King, Jesse Jackson and Benjamin Hooks.

Contrast all that with Reagan's defamation of King, his once-in-eight-years meeting with the Congressional Black Caucus and his turn-back-the-clock embrace of efforts to grant tax exemptions to Bob Jones University and overturn settled consent decrees designed to promote employment opportunity for blacks.

Blacks, virtually alone among Americans, saw Reagan not as an easy-going nice guy but as racially insensitive, if not outright bigoted.

The kindest reading of Reagan's attitudes over the past eight years is that he just didn't understand. The most benign interpretation of his actions — his administration's assaults on "reverse discrimination," for instance, or his recent insistence that black leaders are deliberately "keeping alive the feeling that they're victims of prejudice" — is that he believed racial justice already had been achieved.

Bush, who knows better, has been reaching out to blacks, declaring his presidency to be "the age of the offered hand," and blacks are at least tentatively encouraged.

They don't want to make too much of the early signals. After all, signals are not the same as policies and programs, and given the deficit-induced constraints on the federal budget, it is likely that there won't be the kinds of programs that could transform the signals into concrete advances.

But signals are important, too. Reagan, whether personally bigotted or not, sent signals that opposition to black aspirations was legitimate. That's why he is blamed for the resurgence of overt racism — on college campuses, in

'Already he has met with Coretta Scott King, Jesse Jackson and Benjamin Hooks. Contrast all that with Reagan's defamation of King, his once-in-eight-years meeting with the Congressional Black Caucus ...'

Howard Beach and in Forsyth County, Ga. Who can doubt that black attitudes, even toward a conservative administration, might have been different if Reagan had sent different signals?

That is what Bush is doing. In part, it is an effort to break the Democratic lock on black voters — an effort Bush undertook, with indifferent results, when he was chairman of the Republican National Committee.

But it seems also to be a recognition that, for all the racial progress since the days of the Civil Rights Movement, racial justice remains for blacks a distant dream.

We didn't stand and cheer when Bush spoke of his concern for the homeless, the "lost and roaming" children and teen-age mothers and declared that "we have work to do."

But we heard him, and dared to hope that maybe — just maybe — things will be different this time around.

Signals matter.

Brown Looks To Victory, Not Ideology, As Democratic Chair

Walter Mears

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ronald H. Brown doesn't intend to lead the Democratic Party as a symbol, although he'll be one — or as a liberal, although he is one.

He is about to become the first black chairman of a national political party and he vows to build the Democrats a campaign organization that can help win the White House, something they have managed only once since 1964.

Brown is a sure thing to be elected chairman of the Democratic National Committee on Feb. 10 to succeed Paul G. Kirk Jr.

Brown, 47, an urbane lawyer-lobbyist with a lengthy political resume, says the chairman's job is not a pulpit for any ideology, left or right. He promises evenhanded leadership at the national committee, especially when candidates begin lining up for the 1992 presidential campaign.

One of them is likely to be Jesse Jackson, Brown's candidate in 1988 when he served as convention manager for the black challenger to nominee Michael Dukakis. They are allies and friends, but Brown says his new role will lead inevitably to differences.

"I'm not looking to set up a fight to prove something," he said in an interview. Brown said that when his new responsibilities require saying no to Jackson, that's what he'll do.

Setup or not, that will send a useful signal to his Southern and conservative opponents, who insist that race is not a factor but that Brown's liberal ties send the wrong message to the voters who have chosen Republican presidents in four of the last five elections.

Analysis

Again and again, Brown has pointed out that the Jackson campaign was a 90-day assignment in a long political career. But it was the most visible, as he negotiated for Jackson in televised glare of the Atlanta convention, and it now is the one with which he is most widely identified.

Not that his earlier affiliations win points with the party's more conservative wing. After working at the National Urban League, Brown served as a committee aide to Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, and as a deputy manager in the Massachusetts senator's losing bid for the 1980 Democratic presidential nomination.

Kirk was Kennedy's campaign manager that year. There's no sign that Kennedy has reaped any benefits from the fact that one former aide has been party chairman and another is about to take over the job.

As chairman, Kirk made his mark with a relatively low profile. He engineered the elimination of midterm conventions, issues conferences which had become forums for ideological warfare. He also ended party recognition of special-interest caucuses, calling them political nonsense. Neither of those steps fits the liberal agenda.

Party chairmen often are little known outside Washington and political circles. Brown will be out front as chairman. That's obviously his preference, but the lower profile wouldn't be an option even if he sought it. As the first black chairman he is sure to be a spokesman on issues and topics that go beyond the nuts and bolts business of political organization.

"I've got to be one of several messengers," he said, a spokesman as well as a technician. Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell and House Speaker Jim Wright are the ranking messengers. Brown said he already has discussed his role with them.

Now he has to sort it out with skeptics, with Democrats who see him as the wrong representative to choose after a presidential election in which the L word — liberal — was used by Republicans as a political curse. To that end, even before the committee election, Brown plans a swing across the South. "to reach out... raise the comfort level."

He knows the Democrats have problems on issues like national defense, law and order, federal spending. But he says copying Republicans is no answer. "The last thing this country needs is two Republican parties," Brown said. "One is quite enough."

That has a familiar ring. As newly-elected chairman in 1985, Kirk said much the same thing, and immediately went South, saying he didn't need to wait for an invitation to go fence-mending.

"Today marks the end of the soul-searching, the end of the identity crisis of the Democratic Party," Kirk said four years ago when he became chairman.

Not quite.

Who Will Win The Bloody Battle For Kabul?

Selig Harrison

Shortly before his death last August in a mysterious plane crash, President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq of Pakistan predicted a swift, surgical conquest of the Kabul Communist regime following the departure of Soviet forces.

"There will be a big fight for Kabul," Zia said in an interview in early July. "They'll make an initial stand, but it will fall within a matter of weeks, or at the most a few months. We will help the Afghan resistance in every way we can."

The bloody struggle for Kabul that Zia predicted is now approaching. The security situation is deteriorating day by day in the Afghan capital, and Secretary of State James Baker announced last week that as a safety precaution, the United States will evacuate its embassy. A pell-mell battle for power lies ahead, making it increasingly urgent for the United States to formulate clear policies designed to promote a stable process of political and economic reconstruction.

'What happens after Soviet forces leave is likely to depend primarily on whether the United States encourages the Intelligence Directorate or helps the new prime minister, Benazir Bhutto, restrain military action while pursuing a political solution.'

Zia made no secret of his desire to install a Pakistani satellite state in Afghanistan dominated by the Islamic fundamentalist wing of the resistance. "We have earned the right to have a very friendly regime there," he declared. "We took risks as a front-line state, and we won't permit it to be like it was before, with Indian and Soviet influence there and claims on our territory. It will be a real Islamic state, part of a pan-Islamic revival that will one day win over the Moslems in the Soviet Union. You will see."

Zia's ghost continues to dominate Pakistani — and American-policy on Afghanistan. The late president left behind a solidly entrenched military intelligence organization that still exercises largely unrestrained control over the American-backed program of weapons aid and technical support for the resistance. Manned by Zia sympathizers, the Interservices Intelligence Directorate has successfully resisted civilian pressures for a new Afghan policy.

What happens after Soviet forces leave is likely to depend primarily on whether the United States encourages the Intelligence Directorate or helps the new prime minister, Benazir Bhutto, restrain military action while pursuing a political solution. Though giving lip service to the goal of avoiding a bloodbath, the Reagan administration used its leverage only for a limited purpose: curbing the power of the most extreme fundamentalist, Hezbe Islami leader Gulbuddin Hekmatyar, who is regarded as anti-American. To appease Washington, the Pakistani Intelligence Directorate has reduced Gulbuddin's share of U.S. weapons aid. Another, more moderate fundamentalist, Jamaat Islami leader Burhanuddin Rabbani, is now getting increased aid and has emerged as the Directorate's candidate to head a new Kabul regime.

The Bush administration is still weighing its diplomatic options. The administration is said to be "studying" whether to accept the mutual suspension of military aid proposed by President Mikhail Gorbachev, in return for a similar arrangement in Nicaragua, and whether to join Moscow in backing United Nations intervention to promote a broad-based compromise regime in Kabul.

Bhutto had repeatedly criticized Zia's Afghan ambitions before her election, calling for negotiations to create a broad-based compromise regime in Kabul. Now, however, he is moving cautiously to avoid a showdown with the powerful Intelligence Directorate that could trigger an army attempt to unseat her.

Zia converted the Directorate into a Pakistani-style blend of the CIA, the FBI and the Iranian Savak. In addition to expanding its foreign-intelligence machinery, he systematically built up a vast, ubiquitous apparatus of agents inside the country. The Directorate served as a potent weapon against his political opponents and is now playing a key role in the delicate transition to civilian rule.

While Bhutto has been feeling her way, preoccupied with a variety of economic and political problems, the Directorate has pushed ahead with efforts to organize the spring military offensive envisaged by Zia. With Washington's approval, more and more Pakistani technicians are helping resistance groups inside Afghanistan to fire and repair sophisticated missiles and to operate new communications equipment linking the widely scattered commanders. But the prospects for a quick victory over Kabul are problematical. After a decade of guerrilla warfare, the deeply divided resistance groups are finding it difficult to unite for conventional warfare against communist-led regular forces in fortified cities.

In October, six Pakistani generals, accompanied by Rabbani, traveled by jeep and mule to the Pansjer Valley, where they mapped plans for creating a conventional force to storm Kabul under the leadership of the Pansjer local commander, Ahmad Shah Massoud, widely respected as one of the most effective resistance strategists. However, both Massoud and Rabbani belong to the Tajik ethnic minority, and Afghanistan's traditionally dominant Pushtun tribes have been reluctant to accept their leadership.

Throughout the war, Zia consciously downgraded Pushtun-based resistance groups, fearing a revival of demands for an independent "Pushtunistan." This is why most weapons have gone either to the Jamaat Islami, with its Tajik base, or to the Hezbe Islami, which consists partly of Tajiks and partly of Pushtuns in northern Afghanistan who are not tied to the Pushtun tribal structure in the South.

Despite the Directorate's attempts to organize a unified offensive, conflict is growing within the resistance over how to proceed militarily, who should take power in Kabul and whether to accept "good Moslems" now serving in the Kabul government as partners in a transitional regime. Many observers believe that this disunity will not affect the outcome. Kabul will crumble psychologically in any case, they argue, soon after the last Soviet soldiers go.

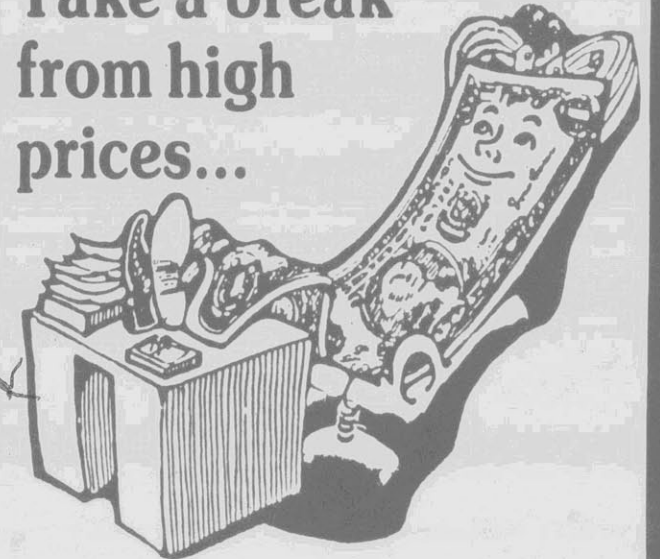

In this scenario, competing commanders will then converge on Kabul with their followers, driving the communists underground or forcing them to flee toward the Soviet border. Eventually, after a period of chaos, Pakistani proposals will knock heads together and a new government will be formed.

In my view, while a psychological collapse is possible, a protracted civil war is more likely. The Afghan Communist Party has a hard core of some 40,000 dedicated activists and will continue to receive both military and economic support from the Soviet Union. Moscow will continue to subsidize the salaries and perquisites of the Kabul regime's 350,000 employees, including a military and secret-police infrastructure numbering at least 110,000 men. The current chairman of the seven-party resistance alliance, Sibghatullah Mojaddi, said recently that it might take "four to six months" to dislodge the communists. But even this forecast might prove to be optimistic unless the resistance can quickly take the communist-controlled bastions of Kandahar and Jalalabad. It is the fall of one or both of these cities that could touch off a panic in communist ranks.

Avoiding Problems with Your Medicines

You can help avoid problems with your medicines by following these suggestions from the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

Inform each physician, your dentist, and your pharmacist of all the medicines you are taking. Most medicines are safe when taken properly. But in combination, certain medicines can be dangerous. Tell prescribers about any over-the-counter medicines you are taking and whether or not you drink alcoholic beverages. Remind prescribers of allergies, other medical conditions, or past problems tolerating drugs.

Ask your physician how long the medicine has been on the market and what side effects it can produce.

When you take medicines, follow prescribers' instructions exactly, and carefully read any information inserts provided with the medicine.

Never share prescription drugs with others for whom they were not prescribed.

If you suspect you are having an adverse reaction to a medication, call your physician or pharmacist immediately. Serious reactions often demand quick medical attention.

Charlotte Teachers Challenge Martin Pay Plan

By Paul Nowell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Governor Says There Is 'Some Hope' For Budget Change

CHARLOTTE — Gov. Jim Martin and a group of Charlotte teachers met and found one area of agreement — that his plan to give teachers a pay raise in the last quarter of the 1989-90 fiscal year and continue it through the following year isn't satisfactory.

"That's not a very good deal, is it?" he asked at Monday's gathering. Nearly all of the teachers nodded their heads in agreement.

While the mood of the meeting was generally congenial, Martin did get into a sharp exchange with Kent Walker, a history teacher from Myers Park High School.

"Do you know how low morale is in this system?" Walker, a 17-year veteran, asked the governor. "I've got my own budget. I have two sons ready to start college and I have no money to put them through. Do you expect teachers to just lay down and take it?"

Martin responded by saying North Carolina moved up from 43rd to 29th in average teacher pay during his first term in office.

"Is this progress?" he asked, pointing to his proposed pay increase written in chalk on the blackboard. "It's not much."

Peggy Jackson, who has been teaching home economics at Alexander Graham for 24 years, tried to explain her feelings of frustration.

"We have been good little children, taking what is given to us," she said. "This is our way of saying we need to be heard."

Martin, a former chemistry teacher, met with about 50 educators in a multipurpose room at Alexander Graham Junior High School in southeast Charlotte.

A majority of the teachers wore green ribbons or armbands to indicate their displeasure with the governor's plan to delay raises until next year.

Martin did not wait for the teachers to bring up the issue of teacher pay. Instead, he had his staff hand out sheets of paper titled "Budget Facts," with figures on how much the state had to spend for teacher salaries over the next two years.

"It's a tight problem in the first year," he said. "In the second year, there's room for improvement."

In his Jan. 17 State of the State address, Martin proposed average raises of 5.7 percent for teachers beginning in April 1990. On Monday, he tried to explain why he came to the decision to put off any raises in the current fiscal year.

Of the $457 million in additional recurring revenue in fiscal 1989-90, he said, only $232 million was available for such items as salary increases for teachers and state workers.

If every state employee got a 5 percent raise, he said, there would be nothing left for the Basic Education Plan, the Teaching Fellows program or other state needs, such as new prisons.

Several teachers at the meeting said they planned to travel to Raleigh on Feb. 14 to protest the lack of a pay raise this year. Other teachers from the Charlotte-Mecklenburg system also plan to make the trip.

Martin told the educators that he would support moving up the starting date of the pay increase — perhaps to the third quarter — if new sources of revenue could be found.

For example, if the state takes in millions of dollars in taxes from the $25 billion buyout of RJR Nabisco Inc., he said, some of the revenue could be earmarked for teachers' salaries.

"I'm trying to indicate to you that there is some hope," said the governor, adding that some projections put the windfall at between $50 million and $70 million. "I'm telling you to keep the issue in the forefront so (the General Assembly) doesn't use that money for something else."

Gail Crowell, an English teacher at Alexander Graham, asked Martin how he could justify being the second-highest paid governor in the nation while North Carolina's teachers are ranked near the bottom.

"It's a strong populist argument," Martin said. "But after it's finished, what have you got? You can take $80,000 and divide it up between 80,000 employees. What does that do?"

Earlier in the day, Martin said there was too much controversy over the Career Ladder pilot program for teachers.

"The State Board of Education has found widespread support for (the program) among teachers who have participated in it," Martin said in prepared remarks to the state Department of Public Instruction's Winter Leadership Conference in Charlotte. "Few would want to relinquish the extra pay for which they have qualified. More importantly, they have generally agreed that better preparation led to better quality of work in the classroom ... their own and those around them."

Martin said an N.C. Association of Educators' survey, which showed that 93 percent of member teachers were opposed to the Career Ladder, was not a survey of all teachers but a vote by proxy in which a voter cast a ballot for an entire delegation.

"It is time to stop arguing about it, and start working together to make it even more successful statewide," Martin said. "If you want to talk seriously and responsibly about raising taxes, then show how we can build broad support among educators for extending the Career Ladder statewide to all school systems. The public is more likely to go for it if we can show a way to get better results for our money."

NCAE President Karen Garr acknowledged that the delegates cast weighted votes based on their determination of how members stood on the issue. But she said the

Teachers Plan Raleigh Protest

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Charlotte-Mecklenburg school system administrators said they wouldn't intervene to prevent large numbers of teachers from traveling to Raleigh in two weeks to rally for pay increases.

Associate Superintendent Chris Folk said system officials would let principals decide teacher leave requests on Feb. 14, a move that could pave the way for hundreds of teachers to make the trip. Many principals support the teachers.

Teachers that day plan to meet as a group with local legislators and rally in protest of Gov. Jim Martin's proposal to delay teachers' and state employees' pay raises until April 1990.

"We felt that it was a matter each school should decide ...," Folk said. "If the school can accommodate the absence of a number of people on that day, then we would leave that to the individual school to decide."

Granting widespread requests would force principals to turn to substitute teachers — or even parents.

Meanwhile, Gaston County representatives of the N.C. Association of Educators will meet next week to discuss how to make their feelings known. Bob Wilkerson, Gaston NCAE government relations chairman, said the group would work with the school administration to devise a way to make feelings known without taking away from day-to-day work.

"I feel like our administration here in Gaston County will support whatever effort we deem to be necessary," Wilkerson said. "We certainly don't plan to do anything negative to detract from school."

He said some teachers may be contacting the Gaston County legislative delegation to air their complaints about the salary freeze.

Teachers in Lincoln County are planning a letter-writing campaign to legislators.

Vilma Leake, president of the Charlotte-Mecklenburg Association of Educators, is calling on parents to help teach classes if needed. Folk, while discouraging recruiting parents, said each principal would have to decide.

Leake said about 1,000 teachers have signed up for the Raleigh trip. The school system has about 900 approved substitute teachers.

School officials, faced with mounting requests, met Monday to review the state policy for deciding leave requests. Under that policy, principals are given authority for such decisions.

Teachers may take two personal leave days a year. Pay for substitutes is deducted from their pay.

"I hope that principals will remember that they, too, will profit from what the teachers out here are struggling for," Leake said at a rally Monday night. "Teachers have a right to a personal day."

Kathy Anderson, Lincoln County NCAE president, said members would write the local delegation as their main avenue of recourse. In addition, there may be several county representatives in the Feb. 14 protest.

criticism is "just a bunch of cover-up."

"The teachers of this state have spoken," she said. "The career development experiment has failed. Career ladder has to rest on a foundation — the salary schedule — and the foundation is crumbling, exacerbated by a salary freeze until April 1990."

"I feel like we will write in support of an overall salary increase," Ms. Anderson said. "I think that the public is behind teacher salary increases."

"We'd like to see the salary steps frozen in 1982 put back in force so we wouldn't have to beg for a salary increase every year and be denied."

"Every year promises are made that there will be more for educators and every year we are denied."

Ms. Anderson said teachers would like to see legislators who say they stand behind education really do something about it.

Wilkerson echoed her comments.

"The campaign rhetoric (by Martin) doesn't match the proposal," Wilkerson said. "Teachers are very much dismayed ... and they feel somewhat betrayed."

Marine Testifies

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. — A platoon sergeant accused of dereliction of duty that caused the death of one of his men testified that he made sure Lance Cpl. Jason Rother had sufficient water, food and equipment for the Mojave Desert before turning him over to a superior officer.

"I was taught never to question my superior commissioned officer," said Sgt. Christopher Clyde, testifying in his own defense at his general court-martial on Monday.

Clyde was referring to 1st Lt. Patrick Kline, who had directed him to assign one man from his platoon to be a road guide for a convoy. He said he assigned Rother because he thought the lance corporal, who had had problems with the desert heat and had back problems, needed a break.

Clyde, 28, of Mentor, Ohio, was the platoon sergeant of the 1st Platoon, "K" Company, 3rd battalion, 2nd Marines when Rother was left behind during a nighttime training exercise Aug. 30 at Twentynine Palms, Calif.

Rother, 19, of Minneapolis, was not reported missing until nearly two days later and his remains were not found until Dec. 4.

Highway Tax Action Delayed

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The change in Democratic leadership in the state House will delay action for two weeks on a multibillion-dollar plan to raise taxes and user fees to pay for highway construction, legislators said.

Legislators canceled a Thursday meeting of the Legislative Highway Study Commission so they could educate new Democrats elevated to positions of power by the election of Rep. Joe Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, to House speaker.

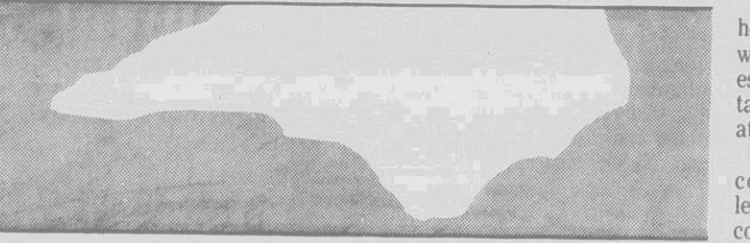

"You've got to calm the waters before you can know which way to paddle," said Sen. Bill Goldston, D-Rockingham, cochairman of the commission.

Commission members had been scheduled to vote on draft legislation this week to raise $6 billion through a variety of taxes and user fees to pay for highway construction over the next 12 years. Goldston said he hopes to call the meeting by mid-February.

"You've got a new bunch of players in the House," said Seddon "Rusty" Goode, a Charlotte Republican on the panel. "As far as I know, they haven't had a chance to digest this thing."

The additional background work is needed, members said, because legislation the commission ultimately recommends will have to survive scrutiny in as many as eight different House and Senate committees.

IN THE STATE

Etheridge Cutting Staff To Build Leaner Agency

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Four top administrators, about 30 divisions and numerous secretaries will be cut from the state Department of Education under a plan announced by Superintendent Bobby Etheridge to build a leaner, more efficient agency.

Etheridge also proposed cutting the number of workers in the state's eight regional education centers by 40 percent, from 200 to 120, although he said that plan was not firm.

The 1,000-member department has nine top administrative spots and 48 division heads.

Once the moves are complete, eight of the top administrators who served under former Superintendent A. Craig Phillips will be moved into interim positions or lower positions, or will be cut from the staff. The ninth spot was vacant at the end of Phillips' term.

The reorganization "means fewer people are going to have more to do and fewer people will make more decisions," said Howard H. Haworth, chairman of the State Board of Education.

Bakery Payoffs

ROCKY MOUNT, N.C. (AP) — The Nash and Edgecombe county school boards will receive a portion of the $1.2 million settlement collected from four bakery companies in a recent bid-rigging suit, the state attorney general's office says.

Nash County will receive $12,292, and Edgecombe County will be paid $10,006, state Attorney General Lacy Thornburg said in letters to the chairmen of both boards. The money will be paid on April 25, he said.

The companies involved were American Bakeries Co., formerly of Rocky Mount, Fox's Holsum Bakery Inc. of Wilmington, Franklin Bakery Co. of Goldsboro and Dainty Maid Bakery Inc. of Kinston.

Deer Arrests

RALEIGH (AP) — Arrests for night deer hunting were down 25 percent in 1988 thanks to a crackdown on poaching and a heavy acorn crop, according to N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission officials.

"In 1987, we made more arrests because people were hunting deer at night and landowners and sportsmen were reporting the violations while they were in progress," said Col. Harold Ragland, chief of the Commission's Division of Enforcement. "We believe that was a deterrent for 1988 because we covered so much of the state and arrested so many people."

There were 479 arrests on charges of hunting deer at night in 1988, down 125 from the previous year, officials said. Also, 319 people were charged with shining light violations, down from 382 in 1987.

Cases Dismissed

RALEIGH (AP) — Unavoidable circumstances kept an undercover agent from attending hearings in Harnett County District Court, prompting a judge to dismiss 19 drug cases last week, the director of the State Bureau of Investigation said.

SBI agent Phil Sweatt did nothing wrong when he did not appear in court Jan. 20 when cases were called before District Court Judge Yates Dobson, SBI Director Robert B. Morgan said Monday.

The cases stemmed from a seven-month undercover operation centered near Dunn, where young people regularly congregate, Morgan said.

Convicted

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A former Army sergeant accused of raping a prospective Marine recruit at a military processing station in Charlotte last summer was sentenced Monday to 18 months in prison.

Rickie Eugene Maddox could have faced life imprisonment if convicted on all charges in connection with the attack on a 22-year-old woman. He was indicted on two counts of aggravated sexual abuse and five lesser offenses.

Costs Of Health Care Plans Soar

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The lid on the cost of health-care plans popped off in 1988 as the expense per worker of employer-sponsored programs shot up 18.6 percent, a survey shows.

The jump came after increases of 7.7 percent in 1986 and 7.9 percent in 1987, and "there doesn't appear to be much relief in sight," according to a report released Monday by A. Foster Higgins & Co., a New York-based benefits consulting firm.

Health insurers absorbed some of the unexpected cost increases last year and will pass them along this year, ensuring another big rise, said John Erb, who conducted the survey.

The average cost per employee of health care plans was $2,354 in 1988, up from $1,985 in 1987, according to the survey of more than 1,600 employers, whose plans cover 10 million workers and dependents.

The figures include the cost of plans to employers and employees. The medical-care component of the U.S. Labor Department's Consumer Price Index rose 6.9 percent last year, making it the fastest-growing part of the inflation measure. But the cost of services is only part of the problem for employers and employees, Erb said.

According to Erb, these were some of the factors in last year's rise:
 —Expensive medical services such as heart and liver transplants are becoming more widely available, so more people are using them.
 —The federal and state governments, strapped for money, are holding down how much they pay health-care providers for Medicare and Medicaid patients. That forces the providers to raise their prices to other customers.
 —Doctors are raising fees for outpatient services because patients tend to be more highly reimbursed for them and are less likely to complain. The higher reimbursement was intended to encourage use of outpatient services, which are generally cheaper than hospital care.
 —Doctors are requiring more follow-up visits, some of which may not be necessary.

"The providers of care have gotten wise to some of the tricks and are compensating for it," Erb said in an interview.

Dr. John J. Ring, chairman of the American Medical Association, responded by saying he saw no evidence that doctors were reaping big fee increases from the shift to outpatient care.

Ring, of Mundelein, Ill., also said he would like to see statistics backing up Erb's claim that doctors were requiring unnecessary follow-up visits.

Erb said he had no such statistics.

The 1988 increase was smallest, 15.6 percent, for companies with fewer than 1,000 employees, which usually pay for their plans through insurers. Insurers did not anticipate the big increase in expenses last year and are likely to put through big increases this year to compensate, the report said.

Ex-Lawyer Convicted Of Manslaughter

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Joel Steinberg was convicted of manslaughter but not murder in his adoptive daughter's death after jurors rejected testimony by his battered live-in companion that he beat the girl and left her comatose on their bathroom floor.

Eight days of heated deliberations ended Monday when the jury reached the compromise verdict in the case that refocused national attention on domestic violence.

By acquitting Steinberg of second-degree murder, the jurors decided that the disbarred lawyer had not shown "depraved indifference to human life" when he struck his illegally adopted 6-year-old daughter, Lisa, in a rage in November 1987.

"It's a sad day for the kids who are being abused in this country," said Dr. Vincent Fontana, chairman of the Mayor's Task Force on Child Abuse, who believed Steinberg was guilty of murder.

"The child protective system failed (Lisa), the school system failed her, and now the judicial system has failed her."

District Attorney Robert Morgenthau promised to seek the maximum 8 13-to-25-year prison sentence for the first-degree manslaughter conviction, which required the jury to find that Steinberg intended to cause Lisa serious harm. Steinberg, 47, faces sentencing March 8.

"Steinberg has shown himself to fully deserve that sentence."

Morgenthau said, adding: The case "highlighted the dreadful problems that beset our city — child abuse, drug abuse and family violence. All of us have a responsibility to work to ensure that similar tragedies do not reoccur."

Steinberg was stoic as the verdict was announced, ending a three-month trial in a case that spun a web of drugs and domestic violence from behind the facade of a quiet Greenwich Village building.

'Night Stalker' Trial Is Under Way

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — The lead witness in the "Night Stalker" trial described finding the nearly decapitated body of his mother, whose slaying was the first of 13 blamed on the man who terrorized California four years ago.

"There was a neck gash as if someone tried to remove her head and almost succeeded," Jack Vincow said of his 79-year-old mother, Jennie.

"The sight of my mother's head almost removed was just too much to deal with."

The trial of Richard Ramirez was scheduled to resume today with more testimony from Vincow, who discovered his mother's body in her apartment on June 28, 1984.

During his opening statement Monday, Deputy District Attorney Philip Halpin gave a detailed account of each of the slayings, using an enlarged Los Angeles County map as a guide.

The prosecutor called for the death penalty against Ramirez, a shaggy-haired drifter from El Paso, Texas, who was chased down by a mob and arrested in the summer of 1985.

Halpin did not emphasize the satanic or ritualistic aspects of the serial murders. He let sensational aspects of the crimes speak for themselves and delivered a low-key outline of the crimes that will be recounted for the Superior Court jury during the trial.

"This is where your work begins," he told the panel.

Defense attorney Daniel Hernandez reserved his opening remarks until after the prosecution concludes its case, which Halpin said would take four months.

Ramirez, 28, is charged with 13 slayings and 30 other felonies stemming from the crime spree.

The unpredictable defendant, who once shouted "Hail, Satan!" in court, was subdued in the packed courtroom Monday and sat slumped in his chair. Dressed in a dark gray suit and sunglasses, he was shackled at the ankles as a security measure. The shackles were kept from sight of the jury.

Halpin described how the "Night Stalker" killed his victims through a combination of shooting, slashing and bludgeoning. Most of the female victims were raped, sodomized and often asked to "swear to Satan."

Although the prosecutor said satanic symbols were found at some murder scenes, he hinted the real motive was burglary.

He said the killer told his victims virtually the same thing: "Where's the money? Don't look at me. Shut up."

Halpin said the prosecution will prove its case through fingerprints lifted from crime scenes, ballistics tests and eyewitness testimony.

"Makes you scared to go home at night," muttered spectator Nancy Vgoretz of Los Angeles as she left the courtroom.

"I heard so much about him. ... I had to see him in person," she said, adding, "I'm fascinated."

Ramirez was arrested after he was captured by an angry East Los Angeles mob on Aug. 31, 1985, the day his picture appeared in newspapers for the first time identifying him as the alleged "Night Stalker."

VA Disciplines 32 For Outside Deals

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Thirty-two medical employees of the Veterans Administration have been disciplined for accepting money and other gratuities from drug companies doing business with the agency.

The VA said Monday that its department of medicine and surgery took the action as a result of a three-year investigation by the VA inspector general into dealings between VA doctors and other employees and five pharmaceutical suppliers.

The actions were for the acceptance of travel expenses, speaking fees, grants or consulting fees, and for being absent from work without taking vacation to do the outside work, the VA said.

The probe began after an earlier investigation into dealings by another drug company resulted in disciplinary actions against 34 VA physicians and other employees in 1987.

In response to a Freedom of Information Act request, the VA's office of inspector general said that in the latest actions one employee was suspended, 29 received admonishments and two received reprimands, which are more serious than admonishments.

In three other cases no action was taken because the employees resigned.

Six cases were referred to the Justice Department, which decided against prosecution in four of them, in most cases citing lack of criminal intent. The other two cases remain under consideration.

In addition, the agency provided counseling to 18 employees and issued instructional letters to 473 employees — steps that were the result of the investigation but are not considered disciplinary actions.

The inspector general withheld names of the employees involved.

Man Named Noid Holds Pizza Workers

CHAMBLEE, Ga. (AP) — A man named Noid, apparently annoyed by Domino's Pizza's "Avoid the Noid" ads, held two Domino's employees at gunpoint for more than five hours before they escaped and he surrendered, authorities said.

Kenneth Lamar Noid, 22, told police he thinks Tom S. Monaghan, owner of the Detroit-based pizza chain and the Detroit Tigers baseball club, "comes in his apartment and looks around," said Police Chief Reed Miller.

Investigators believe Noid was "having an ongoing feud in his mind with Monaghan about the 'Noid' commercials," said detective Sgt. Mark Bender. "Apparently, he thinks they're aimed at him."

Domino's national TV advertising campaign features the "Noid," a red-hatted, red-caped gremlin who uses every trick he can to make sure the pizza is not delivered hot and fresh but is never successful.

Police said Noid entered the suburban Atlanta store shortly before 11 a.m. Monday and made one of the employees call police to tell them he had taken hostages and to stay clear of the area.

When police arrived, Noid fired four warning shots into the ceiling of the store, Capt. Dave M. Perkins said. Police did not return fire.

"He said he didn't want to kill them, but if the police came in he would shoot them," Perkins said.

Noid demanded $100,000, a getaway car, and a science fiction book titled "The Widow's Son."

He also ordered and ate a pizza.

One hostage fled the store after 5½ hours and the second escaped about 15 minutes later while Noid's back was turned, authorities said.

Noid gave up minutes later and was charged with two counts of kidnapping, two counts of aggravated assault and theft by extortion for demanding the $100,000 from Domino's, Perkins said. No bond had been set.

Record High Pressure Keeps Weather In Tizzy

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The strongest high pressure system in North American history kept a frigid grip on Alaska while warm winds battered Montana with gusts that blew railroad cars off their tracks and knocked down a grain elevator.

Forecasters said the record-setting arctic cold front could dip into the lower 48 states as early as Wednesday, bringing an end to that balmy weather that set records for warmth in many cities.

It was 51 degrees below zero Monday morning in Fairbanks, Alaska, where the temperature has risen above minus 40 only once during the past three weeks. There were unofficial readings of 75 below in some parts of Alaska, the National Weather Service said.

The severe cold disrupted the flow of oil from the Alaska pipeline, closed schools, brought state government to a virtual standstill and was tentatively blamed for the crash of a Canadian military transport plane outside Fairbanks.

The cold air from Siberia is being caused by a dome of extremely high atmospheric pressure over Alaska. The barometer in Big Delta, Alaska, reached a high of 31.54 inches of mercury on Monday, breaking the previous high pressure record for North America of 31.53 inches, recorded in the Yukon Territory of Canada in 1974.

Although temperatures in much of Alaska have risen slightly since the weekend, the moderation has been accompanied by rising winds that have disrupted ship traffic and created dangerously low wind-chill readings.

Meanwhile, winds of up to 124 mph hammered Montana on Monday, blowing at least 10 railroad freight cars off their tracks near Browning, topping a grain elevator near Cut Bank and fueling an unusual mid-winter range fire, authorities said. No injuries were reported.

The wind was caused by the violent confrontation of a high pressure system over southern Canada and low pressure over northern Utah, the weather service said.

It coincided with a period of record high temperatures in Montana and across much of the country.

High temperature records fell in places as far apart as Great Falls, Mont., where it was 62; Burlington, Vt., where it was 45; and Minneapolis-St. Paul, where it was 48. Miami tied its record for the date of 82.

But forecasters warned that the springlike hiatus would end soon. A winter storm was expected to hit Montana today, packing wind chills of as low as 75 degrees below zero. Weather service forecasters in Great Falls said it would be the "coldest arctic system in five years" to hit the state.

"This is a very dangerous storm and should not be taken lightly," the weather service said in a special statement issued Monday afternoon.

Although Alaska is exporting its cold weather, no significant warming is expected there for at least five days, the weather service said.

There was, however, some good news for Alaskans on Monday when the Coast Guard reopened the Valdez Narrows between the Port of Valdez and Prince William Sound late Monday after winds abated enough to allow safe tanker operations.

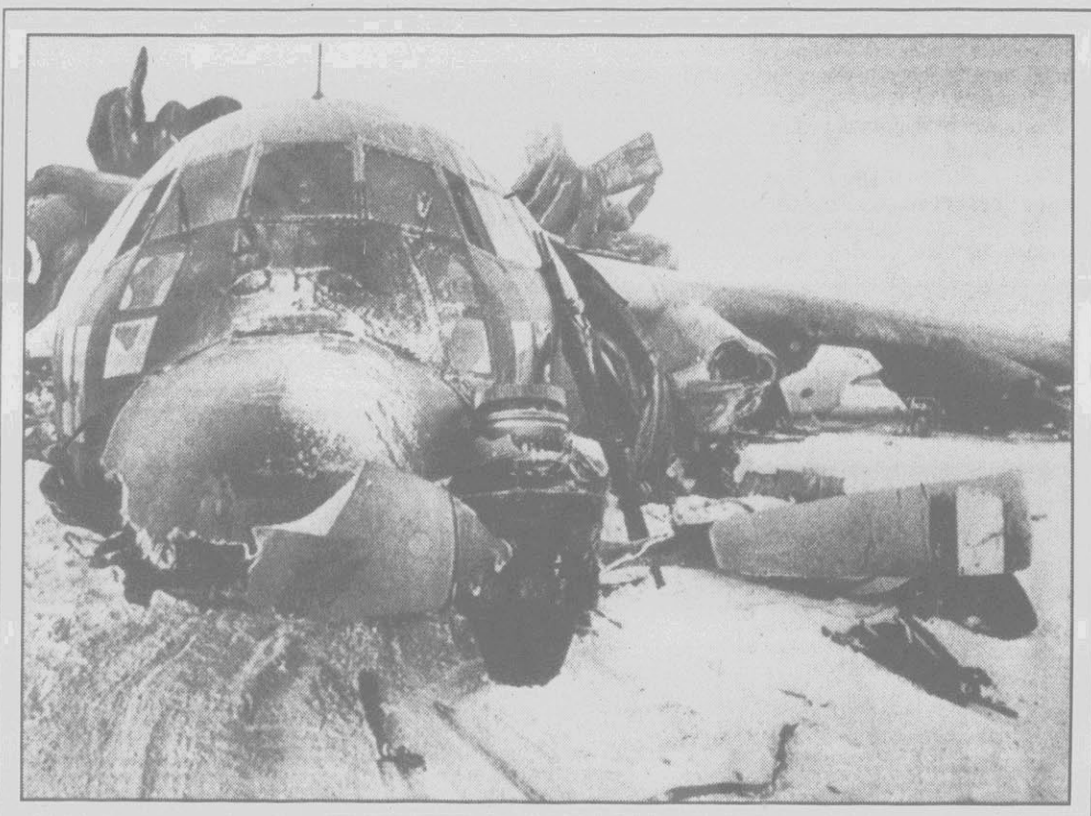

Gusts approaching 100 mph had forced the closure of the port for a day, prompting the Alyeska Pipeline Service Co. to reduce flow in the trans-Alaska oil pipeline by 65 percent.

Alyeska spokesman Tom Brennan said the pipeline should be able to resume normal production of about 2 million barrels a day by late Tuesday. The state treasury had stood to lose $3 million a day in lost taxes and royalties if the closure had continued.

The temperature crept a few degrees above zero in south-central Alaska on Monday, 55 mph gusts blew windows out of a downtown Anchorage office building. Schools were closed in several places around the state, and the state court system shut down out of concern for the safety for jurors.

Gov. Steve Cowper ordered all non-essential state employees in Fairbanks to stay home until there was a break in the weather.

The cold continued to hamper exercises designed to show the military's ability to function in harsh arctic conditions. Canada pulled its troops out of Brim Frost '89 after eight men were killed when a transport plane crashed while trying to land at Fort Wainwright near Fairbanks.

Eight Canadian special forces soldiers were killed when this C-130 aircraft crashed Sunday night while trying to land at the Fort Wainwright Army base in Fairbanks, Alaska. One of the plane's propeller assemblies, shown in the foreground, sliced into the underside of the cockpit.

Charity Hospitals Face Threat

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JACKSON, Miss. — Gov. Ray Mabus has gotten himself into an emotional battle by proposing to close the three charity hospitals that the nation's poorest state operates for its poorest people.

Mabus says the poor would be better served if the money that funds the hospitals went instead into Medicaid and attracted federal funds, but opponents claim to have more than 100,000 petition signatures to keep the hospitals open.

Mabus, who took office a year ago after a reform-based campaign, says the hospitals are underfunded and represent the lower tier of a double standard of health care in Mississippi.

"We have to work toward the day when where you live and how much you make are not the deciding factors in the standard of care you get," the 40-year-old Democrat said recently.

But he has been unable to convince some people that the health care needs of the poor could be better served by closing Matty Hersee Hospital in Meridian, South Mississippi State Hospital in Laurel and Kuhn Memorial State Hospital in Vicksburg.

The hospitals, set up in 1916, collectively maintain only 199 of the state's more than 15,800 hospital beds on a budget of $6.8 million. They served 77,508 patients in the 1988 fiscal year, out of a population of about 2.5 million. That includes 8,278 who required hospitalization and 69,230 outpatients.

"The buildings are older buildings, but they are well kept and they're very clean," said Peggy Sprayberry of the state Eleemosynary Board, which oversees charity hospitals.

The governor's plan sparked a recent rally at the state Capitol.

"I don't have no insurance, no Medicaid and you can't get no doctor to wait on you if you don't have no money," said Georgia Mae Jones, one of about 300 people who traveled the 90 miles from Laurel for the rally.

"When you go to the state hospital they take good care of you. They don't ask you if you got money. They just wait on you," Jones said. "If you go to these other hospitals, they're going to turn you out. They're going to say you got to get some money and that's something these people ain't got."

Mabus hastily called a news conference to counter the public attention drawn to the rally.

Buyer Will Sell Some RJR Brands

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co., moving closer to approval of its record-breaking, $24.5 billion takeover of RJR Nabisco, said Monday that it has tentatively agreed with antitrust officials to sell off some duplicate brands.

Under the preliminary agreement, either RJR Nabisco or Beatrice Cos., of which KKR controls about 90 percent, would sell off its brand in several product categories: ketchup, packaged nuts and Oriental entrees, noodles, vegetables and soy sauce.

RJR Nabisco, based in Atlanta, makes Del Monte ketchup, Planters peanuts and Oriental products under the Chun King name. Chicago-based Beatrice owns Hunt's ketchup, Fisher nuts and LaChoy.

The preliminary agreement was reached with staff members of the Federal Trade Commission. The full commission is expected to rule on the matter in the next few days.

One professor of economics described the accord as an example of the government's "swallowing the camel and straining at the gnats."

"Here you have two of the biggest food and beverage companies ... merging, and the government boldly chases cashew nuts," said James W. Brock, who teaches at Miami University of Ohio and is co-author of a 1987 book on antitrust and competition called "The Bigness Complex."

Industry observers speculated that any sales of product lines, which KKR would be required to make within a year, might ultimately mean that entire units would be sold. In fact, KKR has already acknowledged that it expected to sell $6 billion of RJR food operations during the next two years.

"You can't just sell the Del Monte ketchup label and continue to support Del Monte canned fruit," said Stephen M. Carnes, a food industry analyst with the Minneapolis investment firm of Piper Jaffray Inc. "So if you're going to sell Del Monte or Hunt's, you will have to sell the whole brand."

Carnes speculated that the sales of three lines such as Del Monte, Chun King and Planters might garner KKR $500 million to $700 million.

FCC Delays Action On AT&T Rate Plan

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Bowing at the last minute to congressional pressure, the Federal Communications Commission on Monday postponed a decision on whether to change the rules for regulating AT&T's long-distance rates.

The delay followed a meeting Friday between FCC Chairman Dennis Patrick and Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., chairman of the House telecommunications subcommittee, as well as various staff-level consultations. The FCC promised to work more closely with Congress before voting on the issue in March.

The postponement headed off, for the time being at least, a new confrontation between the deregulation-minded Patrick and Congress. Many analysts had said Congress might legislate against the plan if the FCC proceeded in the face of its opposition.

Patrick said the delay, the latest in a series since the plan was first floated two years ago, was being taken "in the spirit of the new administration." He was recently reaffirmed as FCC chairman by the Bush White House.

"I want to establish a more positive and constructive dialogue" with Capitol Hill, said Patrick, who has experienced combative relations with Congress on a variety of broadcasting and communications issues.

The FCC had scheduled a vote for Monday at a special meeting. But several hours before it began, the commission announced the vote would be deferred until March 16.

The controversy hinges on the so-called "price cap" plan, a pet project of Patrick. It would replace the current, two-decade-old system in which the FCC regulates American Telephone & Telegraph Co.'s profits. Currently, the huge company is not allowed to make more than a 12.2 percent return on the value of its interstate long-distance network.

Patrick wants to focus on rates instead. They would be allowed to rise to reflect inflation, but that would be offset with annual cuts intended to force AT&T to increase productivity. AT&T would be free to squeeze out whatever profit it could within this framework.

Solo Tourists Find Buddies With Service

By Jeff Baenen
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MINNEAPOLIS — Travelers who don't want to see the sights alone can find a friend through Travel Buddy, which provides companions who will accompany anyone, any age, to anywhere in the world.

Since Dona M. Risdall began operating Travel Buddy out of her home in suburban Bloomington in 1987, the service has provided "buddies" for more than 100 travelers in the United States and overseas. The buddies, who are carefully screened, get their tickets paid by the clients, but pay other expenses.

"I think they relax a lot more when they're on a trip with a buddy. I think it's extra security," Ms. Risdall said. "I call it 'Travel Buddy' because that's what they are — a really good buddy to the client."

Among Ms. Risdall's clients are the elderly, the slightly handicapped and small children. The youngest were a couple of girls, ages 6 and 7, who flew with a buddy to visit their father in Texas.

"There's a lot of early retirees that have the money but have no one to go with," Ms. Risdall said.

She got the idea for the service at her job as a front-desk assistant at an athletic club in Bloomington.

"Just time and time again I heard so many say, 'My wife or husband has passed away,' and they'd love to travel, but they don't want to go alone," she said.

Ms. Risdall, 49, started her business with about $5,000, which was used mostly for printing and mailing brochures.

For a fee — $65 for non-members, $45 for members — Risdall lines up a traveler with a buddy of similar background and interests. The annual membership fee is $25, and travelers either can make their own travel arrangements or Ms. Risdall will make them through a travel agent she works with.

Ms. Risdall screens all prospective buddies and requires references. She said she has about 50 men and women of all ages in her listings.

This month Ms. Risdall began a branch operation in Dallas out of a former Buddy's home, and she's thinking about a similar branch in Arizona.

There are other organizations that provide companions for disabled travelers, said Peter Shaw-Lawrence, of the New York City-based Society for the Advancement of Travel for the Handicapped.

"Each of these organizations may have slightly different things," he said.

A get-acquainted session is arranged between the traveler and the prospective buddy if both are from around Minneapolis. If the client lives out of state, Ms. Risdall chooses the buddy.

Agatha Drilling, 70, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, contacted Travel Buddy after reading a magazine article about the service. She was lined up with a companion who drove with her to Phoenix in December.

"I think it's great," said Ms.

The Associated Press

Drilling, who plans to use the service again. "You get somebody who you can feel is trustworthy because they were checked out."

Her "buddy," Natalie Kirstiuk, 40, of Fridley, said she applied to be a buddy because she loves to travel.

"It was a chance to see more of the country that I haven't seen,"

she said.

Ms. Risdall has provided buddies for travelers going to Europe and Australia, but the trip can be as short as to North Dakota.

Ms. Risdall, whose friends tease her for being a workaholic, hasn't taken a vacation herself for years. "When a trip to Hawaii comes along, I'm going to go," she said.

University Club Presents Fashion Show, Luncheon

The East Carolina University Club is presenting a benefit fashion show and luncheon at 11:30 a.m. Feb. 25 at the Greenville Hilton.

Proceeds will go toward the ECU Chancellor's campus beautification project.

Fashions will be presented by several Greenville area retailers, including Certain Things, the Golden Gull, C. Heber Forbes, Matita Fine Fashions, the Snooty Fox, Susan's, Francine's of Washington and Steinbeck's.

Nancy Jenkins will narrate the show; pianist Susan Bulow will provide the music. Denise Hinnank of Paradise Hair Designs will help with the models' hair styling.

The spring fashion show luncheon is one of several annual projects sponsored by the ECU Club, an organization of faculty and staff and spouses which was formerly known as the ECU Women's Club.

Tickets for the show and luncheon are $12 per person. They are available from any of the participating apparel retailers or from the Kitchen Cupboard.

Further information about the event is available from Pam Hart at 355-7593.

'Alone' Is A Wise Young Woman

Dear Abby: I am writing in response to "Alone in Minnesota," who wanted to hear from people who never knew their fathers. I am one.

My mother and father had planned to marry in June of 1959. My mother became pregnant in October of 1958, and when she told her fiance the news, that's the last time she saw him!

When I hear my friends tell horror stories of what it was like to live with "lousy" fathers who were in and out of their lives (many of them were abused children), I thank everyone involved for not having subjected me to a father who obviously was not ready for the responsibilities of fatherhood.

I am proud that my mother decided to keep me — which was not an easy choice to make in 1959. I was very much loved by her and have missed nothing in my father's absence. Perhaps I would have felt different if I had had some contact with him, but I agree — no father is better than a lousy one.

Dear Abby

If I should ever have the opportunity to meet him, I would do so. I am very much interested in his ancestors, and particularly in his medical history. However, I cannot say to what extent I would want him in my ongoing life. It would depend on the type of person he is today.

I hope "Alone" obtains peer support for herself. She is not the first woman who has had to make that kind of a decision. Nor is her child the first to grow up without a father. Somehow, they survive. — One Of Many In L.A.

Dear Abby: "Alone in Minnesota" wrote to say she was pregnant and unmarried. She tried to tell the man responsible, but he lived in another state and refused to see her, so she decided not to tell him, saying, "Maybe no father would be better than a lousy one." You said: "Every man has the right to know that he has fathered a child."

"Alone" asked for opinions of those who never knew who their fathers were.

My opinion is based on the life of James Michener, the author. As a babe, he was left on the doorstep of a Pennsylvania widow who had several children of her own.

At one point she had to place all her children in an orphanage until she was financially able to care for them. Michener not only didn't know who his father was, he didn't know who his mother was either. But apparently he knew love, which was more important.

Enough on Michener. "Alone" is a wise young woman. No father is indeed better than a lousy one. — Joyce In Flint, Mich.

Dear Abby: I fathered a child 42 years ago by a young girl I cared for. Soon after "Mary" became pregnant (unknown to me), I went into the armed services. Mary fell in love with another man and did not want me to know about the pregnancy, preferring to let her new husband think it was his child. He learned a year later that it was not his, as it looked exactly like me, so he divorced her. I found out about all this only after Mary had given up my son for adoption. I lost track of the boy and his mother, Abby. I would have married her in a minute and raised my son.

I wholeheartedly agree with you when you say, "It's a man's right to know that he has fathered a child." Sign me ... How Nice It Would Have Been

If you would like to write to Abby, send your letter to Abigail Van Buren, P.O. Box 69410, Los Angeles, CA. 90069. For a personal, non-published reply, enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope.

North Trial Begins

gress about his role in funneling money to the Nicaraguan Contras rebels when Congress had banned U.S. aid to them. He is accused of lying to the attorney general about his role in giving the Contras millions of dollars in profits from the Reagan administration's secret arms sales to Iran.

He also is accused of shredding National Security Council records and participating in a tax fraud conspiracy in which wealthy donors would get tax breaks for contributions to the Contras.

Former National Security Adviser John Poindexter and arms suppliers Richard Secord and Albert Hakim also face criminal charges in the case, but will be tried separately later.

North on Monday received a setback as well as somewhat encouraging news.

Gesell quashed North's subpoena for the testimony of President Bush, but did say that Reagan will "remain subject to call" for testimony.

North testified at congressional hearings in 1987 that all his activities were authorized by higher-ups in the Reagan administration.

The judge said North failed to show that Bush's testimony would be relevant, but he refused to quash North's subpoena for Reagan. Gesell said that if it appears Reagan ought to be called as a witness, he will first listen to any objections by the Justice Department and Reagan's lawyers before issuing an order.

Gesell also held out the possibility that portions of Reagan's personal diary might be sought as evidence.

Gesell said a subpoena for the diary may be renewed if during the trial North supports a claim that Reagan ordered or condoned in advance North's alleged crimes.

North was fired from his government post as a National Security Council aide on Nov. 25, 1986, three days after assistants to the attorney

Bush Pledges He'll Insist On Tight Defense Controls

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NORFOLK, Va. — President Bush said today he will insist on tighter controls and higher quality from military contractors in a drive to "bring the last drop of waste and mismanagement out of the way we buy our weapons."

He said those steps are vital to building a national consensus in support of a strong defense.

Bush, on first trip out of Washington as president, made his remarks in a speech prepared for delivery from the deck of the aircraft carrier America at the huge Norfolk Naval Base at an audience of thousands of Navy personnel and contractor employees.

He planned to have lunch in the ship's enlisted mess before returning to the White House by helicopter.

Touching on cost overruns and the current criminal investigation into

Pentagon purchasing practices, the president said:

"Even if overruns are not new, they are still wrong — and hurt the national security, particularly when budgets are tight. We want tighter controls and higher standards in weapons procurement."

Bush, who was a carrier-based Navy pilot in World War II, said the "first bulwark of our national defense is our national will. If our will is ruptured, our ship of state cannot sail — or at least sail safely."

"I firmly believe that the vital first step to broadening our national consensus on defense is to bring the last drop of waste and mismanagement out of the way we buy our weapons," he said. "And that's what we intend to do."

The Justice Department is pursuing a 2-year-old investigation of alleged purchasing fraud. The case focuses on charges that private consultants, hired by military contractors, bribed Defense Department officials to obtain inside information that gave companies an edge in bidding for Pentagon work.

The probe so far has led to guilty pleas by several individuals and one defense-contracting firm in the indictment of another contractor.

The president used the occasion to emphasize his program to highlight public service, praising members of the military for the sacrifices they make.

"In the years ahead I want to make sure that those who build our ships, planes and weapons live up to the standards of service, dedication and duty that this crew and this shipyard set," he said.

Bush predicted that one day peace and freedom will triumph worldwide.

Soviets List Warsaw Pact Strengths

"It is clear that the idea of a rough parity of forces in Europe does not correspond to the factual situation," said Henry Sloan, a spokesman for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Gen. John Galvin, the alliance's American military commander, declared: "I definitely do not agree that a rough parity of conventional forces already exists in Europe."

Warsaw Pact defense ministers said in a statement that the figures add up to "rough parity" in conventional forces. They said the Western alliance has issued "tendentious data based on a selective approach."

New negotiations on conventional forces are to begin March 7 in Vienna. Those talks were given a boost Dec. 7 when President Mikhail S. Gorbachev said the Kremlin would reduce the Red Army by half a million soldiers by 1991.

Moscow also says it will get rid of 10,000 tanks, 8,500 artillery systems and 800 combat planes.

The other Warsaw Pact countries — Romania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, East Germany and Poland — have also announced cuts in their military forces.

Pravda's report said the 16-nation

NATO alliance has 2.1 million ground troops in Europe facing 1.8 million from the Warsaw Pact countries, and 685,000 sailors in nearby seas compared to only 338,000 for the East bloc.

NATO contends the Warsaw Pact has 3.1 million ground troops, while the alliance has 2.2 million.

The Pravda report acknowledged a 2-1 Warsaw Pact advantage in tanks, and its tables also showed a heavy advantage for the East in armored personnel carriers and combat infantry vehicles.

A Western analyst in Moscow said privately that the Warsaw Pact appeared to have tailored the categories of forces to support its long-standing contention that the sides are about equal.

He noted that NATO contends the Eastern alliance has qualitative superiority in virtually every major weapons system.

Sample comparative figures illustrate the differences in strength estimates.

The report in Pravda says the Warsaw Pact has 59,470 tanks to 30,690 for NATO, but the Western alliance says the figures are 51,500 to 16,424.

Although the Soviets say the West has a dramatic advantage in strike aircraft and helicopters, NATO says the Warsaw Pact has a comfortable edge.

Warsaw Pact figures say NATO has superior numbers of ground troops, air forces, navy personnel, strike aircraft, helicopters and large surface ships, while the East is ahead in tanks, tactical missile launchers, interceptor aircraft, artillery and infantry vehicles and armored personnel carriers.

In its November report on troops in Europe, NATO said the East had more soldiers, main battle tanks, armored infantry fighting vehicles, artillery, anti-tank weapons, air defense systems, helicopters, combat aircraft and armored vehicle launched bridges.

That report did not include naval forces, which NATO said "are capable of global deployment, and this makes it artificial to identify specific numbers of ships associated with any one region."

Analysts generally feel the West has a qualitative edge in tactical aircraft and naval forces, neither of which is to be included in the Vienna negotiations.

U.S. Plane Has Near-Miss Exit

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW DELHI, India — The evacuation flight carrying the last 11 U.S. Embassy staffers out of the besieged Afghan capital narrowly missed a head-on collision with a Soviet transport plane today, the two most senior American diplomats said.

"We had a near-collision 10 minutes after take-off with an incoming flight from the north," Jon D. Glassman, charge d'affaires at the closed U.S. Embassy in Kabul said after arriving in New Delhi.

Jim Schumaker, the second-ranking diplomat at the embassy, said the Americans' chartered Indian Airlines flight came within a mile of a head-on collision with the Soviet IL-76 transport plane.

"Air traffic control at Kabul is never very good," Schumaker said.

Both diplomats praised the captain of the Indian Airlines Boeing 737 for his quick and expert action in avoiding a collision.

"We drank a champagne toast after crossing the Afghan border," Schumaker said.

The State Department ordered the U.S. Embassy's two diplomats, four Marine guards and five-member support staff, to leave Kabul because of fears the Afghan army could not protect foreign diplomats after the Red Army withdraws.

The Americans are expected to return to Washington this week.

Soviet soldiers entered Afghanistan's civil war nine years ago and are to be gone by Feb. 15 under a U.N.-mediated agreement. Moslem insurgents, who get most of their support from the United States and Pakistan, were not parties to the agreement and predict victory soon after the Red Army departs.

The U.S. Embassy closed after an emotional ceremony during which the American flag was lowered.

Embassy staff members traveled to Kabul airport today in two bullet-proof jeeps escorted by an Afghan army car.

Card of Thanks

We would like to express our heartfelt thanks to Pitt County Memorial Hospital, the doctors, nurses, everyone on South 3A, Flanagan Funeral Home and to our many friends everywhere for all the acts of kindness shown to us during the illness and death of our loved one, Augusta (Gus) Hopkins, for, without you, our burden would have been much harder. May God richly bless each of you.

the highest achievers, shared that attitude.

That only 40 percent of the U.S. students can solve two-step problems "is a matter for grave concern," ETS said. Percentages for more complicated tasks "are even more modest and suggest that the pool of trained talent from which to draw our future scientists, engineers and technicians is small indeed."

Based on comparisons with more successful participants in the assessment, ETS suggests examining the impact of heavy television watching, the small amount of math homework typically done, and the importance attached to math by schools and society in general.

On the science front, youths in Korea and British Columbia turned in the best performance. The United States, along with Ireland and French-speaking Ontario and New Brunswick, "perform well below the mean," the report said.

"The United States has traditionally thought of itself as technologically innovative and in the forefront in science," ETS said. "These results are sobering and pose a serious challenge to our position in the world community."

More than 70 percent of the youngsters in Korea and British Columbia can use scientific procedures and analyze scientific data while only 35 percent to 40 percent of their peers in the bottom four samples showed the same degree of competence, the report said. The U.S. results are "clearly unacceptable," it said.

Several other defendants also pleaded guilty Monday to drug charges, and Reid was expected to hand down sentences in those cases today.

Other drug cases expected to go to trial this week will likely be sent to a separate Superior Court presided over by Currin, according to prosecutors and attorneys.

The department also is scheduled to accept applications at the Shelter for the Homeless in Greenville on Feb. 6 and Feb. 8 and at the Community Building in Farmville on Feb. 14 and Feb. 16. Applications will be accepted at those sites from 9 a.m. to noon each day.

The department still is trying to secure a place in the Ayden and Grifton areas to accept applications, Ms. Ryals said. In areas where no site is available — Grimesland, Stokes and Simpson — people are advised to apply at the main office building, she said.

In other matters, Brenda Earnest of the Pitt Community College preschool lab addressed the board about her concern for the decreasing allocation of money from state and local funds for child care.

The PCC preschool lab is one of eight day care centers in the county that the department pays for keeping children aided in social service programs. About $258,134 has been allocated in the 1988-89 budget to fill 117 slots in the centers with children, Lois Gray, administrative officer, said.

But, about $56,000 of the current day care budget may be in jeopardy because the department's spending rate for the day care program decreased in the last quarter, Ms. Gray said. Based on that pattern, the state has determined the county department would have $56,649 left in its overall day care budget for the year.

The department's budget had decreased about $2,000 during the last quarter from $50,128 to $48,106, she said.

Pirates Hosting William & Mary

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

East Carolina's Pirates return to the relative comfort of Minges Coliseum Wednesday night at 7:30 p.m. hoping to bounce back from an 81-66 loss at the hands of UNC-Wilmington Saturday night.

The Pirates will be entertaining William & Mary as they start their second swing through the Colonial Athletic Association. ECU finished the first half of the league schedule with a 3-4 record. Ironically, only one of those three wins came in Minges Coliseum — a 62-57 win over James Madison. The Pirates dropped their only other home game in the conference, an 86-74 decision to George Mason. The Pirates are 2-3 on the road in the conference.

One of those wins came against the Indians, as the Pirates gained a 75-59 victory over the Tribe in the opening CAA game of the year for both teams.

In that game, East Carolina stormed out to a 39-24 lead in the first half, outscoring William & Mary 16-2 to open the gap. But the Indians rallied in the second half and took a 54-52 lead with 6:50 left in the game.

However, the Pirates caught fire again at that point and outscored the Indians, 23-5 the rest of the way to take the win.

Blue Edwards led the Pirates in scoring in the game with 31 points and eight rebounds. Kevin Staples had 12 points while Kenny Murphy added 11 and Reed Lose added 10. For Staples, it was the last game with the Pirates. He was indefinitely suspended from the team a few days later after being charged with stealing textbooks from student rooms.

Scott Smith led the Indians with 19 points and 10 rebounds while Jimmy Apple added 18 points.

The Indians, however, were missing three of their players. Curtis Pride was sidelined with an ankle injury, while Tom Bock and Casey

Potts were recovering from illnesses.

All three are back now, making the Indians more of a threat than they were in the first meeting.

Bock, a 6-9 senior forward, is the leading scorer for the Tribe with a 15.6 average. Jimmy Apple, a 6-4 sophomore guard, is the only other Indian in double figures with a 13.3 mark but Smith, a 6-8 freshman forward, is close at 9.3.

Ben Blocker, a 6-6 freshman forward, is the leading rebounder with a 5.7 mark while Bock is pulling 5.6 per game.

Apple is the top three-point scorer with 29 of 75. Greg Burzell, a 6-5 senior swingman, is next with 21 of 67, but he has been a thorn in the Pirates' side in previous games.

Edwards leads the Pirates — and the CAA — in scoring with a 25.7 mark and is also the leading rebounder for ECU with 6.5 per game. Gus Hill is the only other Pirate in double figure scoring with 13.4 per game.

Both Edwards and Jeff Kelly are approaching milestones in their careers. Kelly currently has 225 career assists, just eight short of breaking the record of 232 set by Curt Vanderhorst.

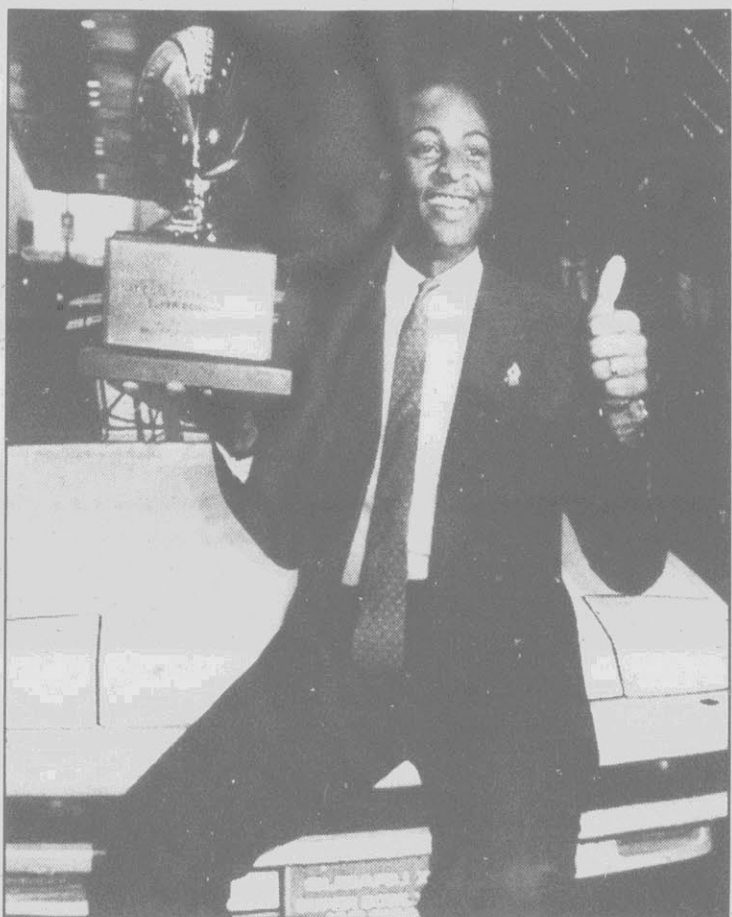

Edwards has 67 career steals to be in sixth place while Kelly has 62 to be in eighth. Edwards has moved to 10th in career blocked shots with 22.

Kelly has 76 assists on the year, placing him 12th. Six would move him into the top 10. Edwards has scored 462 points, eighth in single season. He also has 866 career points and should become the 16th Pirate to surpass 1,000 in his career.

The Indians bring in a 3-15 overall record, 1-6 in the CAA. The Indians only win in the league was a 72-59 win over Navy in Williamsburg.

East Carolina is now 9-9 overall. The game is the first of two home games in the current stand. The Pirates host league-leading Richmond on Saturday at 7:30 p.m.

Super Bowl MVP Jerry Rice shows off trophy, automobile

Rice Says He's Still In Shadow

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — While Jerry Rice is on the verge of reaping some of the benefits a Super Bowl MVP earns, he says his talents are still being obscured by the long shadows of Joe Montana and Bill Walsh.

Rice, who caught 11 passes for 215 yards as San Francisco beat Cincinnati 20-16 nine days ago, was in town Monday to receive the sports car awarded him by Sport Magazine.

And he was hardly starved for attention, sitting down for interviews with nearly a dozen reporters, then sitting for individual television interviews. Moreover, he said that his agent, Jim Steiner, has begun to get requests for endorsements and appearances — just those things he said last week were passing him by.

But he still says his achievements in the game had been overshadowed by the attention paid to Walsh's retirement as coach or the 49ers and by Montana for quarterbacking the 92-yard drive that won the game in the final three minutes.

"I went back to the Bay Area and I felt like I didn't get the coverage I deserved," Rice said.

"I don't think it was racism. Maybe it was because of Bill Walsh retiring or maybe because of Joe Montana, but somewhere, Jerry Rice got lost in the shuffle. I expected to get a little more respect."

Last week, Rice implied in an appearance on a San Francisco television station that he might be getting less attention because he is black.

"If it were Joe Montana, Dwight Clark, it would have been headlines all over," he said, adding "I'm not saying it's racism." But when asked if he thought racism was involved, he replied: "Yeah, I would say so." On Monday, he again denied that there was racism involved, but added: "What I said needed to be said."

He also said he had nothing against Montana.

Portland Runs By Hornets, 130-118

Caldwell Jones Leads Trail Blazers To Second Straight Victory

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORTLAND, Ore. — The Trail Blazers took advantage of the NBA schedule to get a much-needed victory that gave the team a happy ending to a disappointing homestand.

Veteran Caldwell Jones, starting for the second straight game, keyed a third-quarter run to give Portland a 130-118 triumph Monday over expansion Charlotte.

Tied at 75, Jones scored all five of his points during a 10-0 spurt that put Portland in command. The Trail Blazers built their lead to 104-88 after three quarters and remained in control the rest of the way.

The Blazers, coming off a victory over Atlanta Saturday that snapped a four-game home losing streak, made the most of their meeting with the expansion team. Portland, plagued recently by poor play and dissension, seems to be playing with renewed vigor following a team meeting last week.

Clyde Drexler said the key was Portland's strong inside play.

"In the second half, we concentrated on getting the ball inside," said Drexler, who led the Blazers with 32 points. "I think we've got two of the best low post players in the league in (Kevin) Duckworth and (Steve) Johnson."

Duckworth scored 19 points, including nine points in the third quarter, while Johnson came off the bench to score six of his 14 early in the fourth period.

Portland coach Mike Schuler said his team came together defensively in the second half.

"In the first half ... we didn't deferend them at all. In the second half, we tightened up our defense," Schuler said. "We got a little more aggressive and defended better."

Hornets coach Dick Harter said his team was no match physically for the much bigger Blazers.

"We are very small in the middle and they just pushed us around in there," Harter said. "We the shortest and lightest team in the league and every night that's a problem."

Ex-Blazer Michael Holton faced his former mates for the first time, and scored a season-high 22 points.

"It's funny, you hear a play called out there by Portland and you know exactly what it is but you can't always stop it," Holton said. "It was fun playing against Terry Porter again, he taught me so much about how to play the point guard."

Porter finished with 17 points, 10 assists and eight rebounds.

"I always like coming back to Oregon," said Harter, who once coached at the University of Oregon, "but I wish we could have given a little better accounting for ourselves — particularly on the defensive end."

"Duckworth and Johnson had their way and we also let them — Clyde Drexler and those quick people — get too many easy transition baskets."

Hawks 130, Clippers 101
Dominique Wilkins scored 29 points and Glenn Rivers added 19 as the Atlanta Hawks handed the Los Angeles Clippers their 15th straight defeat, 130-101, Monday night.

The Clippers, in their 19th year of existence, went 0-14 in January — a month when Danny Manning was injured and lost for the season and Coach Gene Shue was fired. The Clippers are four short of the longest losing streak in franchise history, set in 1981-82 while in San Diego.

The Clippers have never beaten Atlanta since moving to Los Angeles in 1984 and have lost nine straight to the Hawks.

This time, the visiting Hawks went on a 22-8 burst in the third quarter to break away from a 60-all tie.

Ken Norman had 22 points and rookie Gary Grant got 20 for the Clippers.

Lady Niners Top EC Women, 72-56

CHARLOTTE — UNC Charlotte defeated East Carolina University's women's basketball team for the second time this season Monday night, taking a 72-56 victory.

The game posted almost the identical score of the first meeting of the two, in the first round of the Lady Pirate Classic, when ECU fell to the Lady Niners, 70-54.

East Carolina was plagued by poor shooting on the night, hitting only 30 percent of their second half shots and only 34 percent on the night. The Lady Pirates were just as cold on the foul line, canning only 45 percent there. From the three-point range, ECU hit only 11 percent, just one of nine. The nine attempts tied the seasonal high, first set at Vanderbilt this year.

Meanwhile Charlotte was having little trouble with its own shooting. The Lady Niners hit on 53 percent of their field goals and 85 percent of their free throws. They did not attempt a three-point shot.

"We got some bad breaks, too," Coach Pat Pierson said. "Gretta (Savage) had a good game but they called four quick fouls on her. She went back in with 9:50 to go and on the first play drew her fifth. She caught the ball at the top of the foul lane and never moved, and they called her for a charge. I could not believe it."

Savage, the only Lady Pirate in double figures, had 14 on seven of eight shooting, but played only 23 minutes before fouling out.

"The difference was they were 13 of 14 from the line and we were 0-1 in the first half. We jumped out to a lead, but they got whistle happy and knocked us right out of it. The kids did play hard, however."

Kimball Gets 17-Year Term

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TAMPA, Fla. — The judge who sentenced former Olympic diver Bruce Kimball to 17 years in prison for the drunken-driving deaths of two teen-agers hopes the case "screams out to young people."

"You must suffer the consequences of drunken driving," Hillsborough Circuit Judge Harry Lee Coe III told Kimball on Monday following a 2½-hour hearing in the crowded courtroom.

Kimball, 25, who wore a blue jail uniform, was allowed to change his plea from guilty to no contest to safeguard insurance benefits for the victims and their families in their civil suits.

Kimball had pleaded guilty during the first hour of his trial Jan. 11 to spare the families of the victims the pain of hearing testimony and viewing photographs of the Aug. 1 accident, his attorney and family said.

Prosecutors said Kimball was legally drunk and driving about 75 mph when his sports car slammed into a crowd of 30 teens gathered on a dark dead-end street in suburban Brandon, killing two and injuring four others.

Kimball will serve a 15-year sentence for one of the drunken-driving manslaughter charges, followed by a two-year sentence for one of the drunken-driving serious bodily injury charges. Kimball was sentenced to 15 years' probation on the remaining charges, and his driving license was revoked for life.

If Kimball takes advantage of the state's early-release programs, he could be free in about six years, according to Frank Quesada, his attorney.

Prior to sentencing, Robert Bedell, whose 19-year-old son, Robbie, was killed in the accident, asked Coe to impose the maximum 22-year sentence for the 1984 Olympic silver medalist. State sentencing guidelines called for seven-to-22 years for the charges.

Kimball was silent in court, flanked by his family and friends, including Ron O'Brien, the diving coach of 1988 Olympic gold medalist Greg Louganis.

"For anyone to think that Bruce didn't show any remorse for what happened is a very unfair thing," said Colleen Smith, Kimball's former fiancée who was riding in Kimball's car the night of the accident. "Bruce has taken responsibility for this, and he does feel horrible."

Later, Kimball told jailers he was prepared to face prison and no special precautions were necessary. During the first days after his guilty plea, Kimball was under special surveillance as a possible suicide threat.

"He said it was pretty tough, but he knew it was coming and he would adjust again," Hillsborough County Jail Supervisor James Cook said.

"When he first came in he was scared to death of jail and his situation," Cook said.

Kimball will be held at the county jail in Tampa until being transported to a facility such as Lake Butler Reception Center, for three to 10 days in intake, undergoing tests and examinations by doctors, psychologists and counselors. After being evaluated, prisoners are assigned to a specific institution.

Kimball's mother, Gayle, thought the sentence was stiff.

"I think it's a very stern sentence, but ... I'm not in the judge's shoes," she said. "I want to let everyone know how very sorry all of us are for all the pain and suffering that everyone involved has had to go through."

"I'm extremely proud of Bruce. We'll be 100 percent behind him," said his father, Dick Kimball, a University of Michigan diving coach.

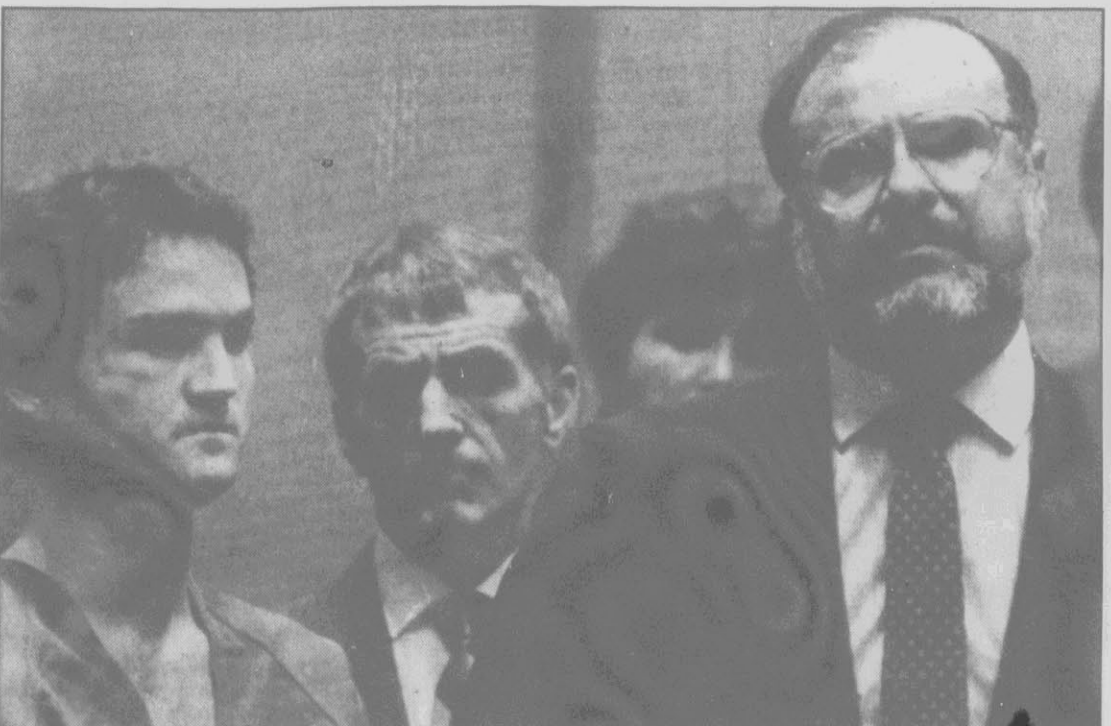

The victims and their families left the courtroom immediately after the sentencing.

April Bruffy, 18, an aerobics instructor whose right leg was crushed in the accident, said she did not know whether she was satisfied with the sentence.

"How can you put a number on it?" Bruffy said. "There were just too many lives destroyed."

Prosecutors said Kimball had a blood-alcohol count of 0.2, or twice the legal limit in Florida, an hour after the accident. At the time, Kimball was in training to qualify for the 1988 U.S. Olympic team.

After being released on bond, Kimball failed to qualify for a place on the U.S. squad. Families of the victims staged a silent protest at the Olympic trials in Indianapolis.

Sanders, Dudley Gain CAA Honors

RICHMOND (AP) — George Mason's Kenny Sanders and James Madison's Missy Dudley were named the Colonial Athletic Association players of the week, the conference announced Monday.

Sanders, last year's CAA player of the year, scored 72 points and grabbed 36 rebounds in the Patriots' three victories last week. Sanders currently is second in the CAA in scoring and rebounding, averaging 23.1 points and 10.8 rebounds per game.

Dudley scored 39 points in the Dukes' two victories last week. She also set a school record with five 3-pointers in the Dukes' 73-57 victory over Richmond.

Whitfield Sweeps Pair From Chicod

CHICOD — G.R. Whitfield swept a pair of middle school basketball contests from Chicod Monday.

In the boys game, Aikawan Thompson scored 30 points to lead Whitfield to a 63-31 win. Michael Moore paced Chicod with 15.

In the girls game, Whitfield squeaked out a 34-33 win in overtime. Lakeshia Simpson and Shannon Thompson led the way for Whitfield with 17 and 11 points respectively, while Tabitha Evans led Chicod with nine.

Pitt Community Tops Staff/Faculty

Pitt Community College rooled to a 87-28 win over a team made up of staff and faculty members Monday.

Don Hudson led the way for the Paladins with 28 points. Ricky Congleton added 20 and Andre West 15.

PCC will be back in action Saturday at home against Clinton Junior College at 4 p.m.

UNC-Wilmington Tops Davidson, 81-68

DAVIDSON, N.C. (AP) — Bryan Withers led a balanced scoring effort with 19 points, leading North Carolina-Wilmington to an 81-68 victory over Davidson on Monday night.

Antonio Howard added 15 points for N.C.-Wilmington, now 10-9. Brannon Lancaster and Joe Cherry had 14 points each and Larry Houzer had 11 as the Seahawks expanded a 38-30 halftime lead to pull away.

Maurice Gray's hook brought Davidson within 42-36 with 18:30 left in the game before N.C.-Wilmington staged a 13-6 run that gave the Seahawks a 55-42 lead with 12:56 left.

N.C. Wilmington extended the lead to 68-49 on two free throws by Withers with 6:57 left.

Davidson pulled to within 73-60 on Gray's jumper, but could not pull closer. Gray scored 13 second half points and finished with 17 for Davidson, now 6-16. Jay Schmitt added 10 points.

Carlton Withdraws From Investigation

RALEIGH (AP) — Former state Supreme Court Justice J. Phil Carlton said Monday he cannot serve on a four-member panel appointed to investigate allegations of wrongdoing in the North Carolina State University basketball program.

Carlton, in a letter to University of North Carolina President C.D. Spangler, said he could not serve on the independent panel because his law firm has performed legal services for the NCSU booster club and basketball coach Jim Valvano.

"You are wise to create this independent commission and its members should certainly be free of any past associations which could cast the slightest doubt on their independence," Carlton wrote.

Spangler Friday appointed Carlton; D.W. Colvard, the former chancellor of UNC-Charlotte; William Klopman, former chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Burlington Industries; and Samuel Poole, vice chairman of the UNC Board of Governors and chairman of the board's special committee on intercollegiate athletics, to investigate the charges.

The investigation stems from the publication of allegations appearing on the dust jacket of the forthcoming book, "Personal Fouls." The book, which focuses on the 1986-87 Wolfpack basketball team, allegedly charges that Valvano distributed money from boosters to players, that positive drug tests were kept secret and that grades were changed to maintain eligibility for basketball players.

Valvano and NCSU Chancellor Bruce Poulton have denied the charges. Poulton two weeks ago was asked to conduct an investigation by the Board of Governors. But Spangler called for an independent probe Friday because the charges had received widespread coverage and questioned the integrity of NCSU.

Carlton said he accepted a spot on the panel Friday, but discovered Monday that some of the 90 other lawyers in his firm had represented the Wolfpack Club and Valvano.

Stith Named ACC Rookie Of The Week

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Virginia forward Bryant Stith was named the Atlantic Coast Conference rookie of the week after scoring 29 points and grabbing 15 rebounds in two Cavalier victories last week.

The Freeman, Va., native scored 15 points and grabbed six rebounds in a 113-106 overtime victory over Virginia Tech and added 14 points and nine rebounds in an 88-69 victory over Wake Forest.

Stith is averaging 13.2 points and 6.1 rebounds per game.

Earlier, North Carolina State forward Brian Howard, who shot 74 percent from the field in two Wolfpack victories last week, was named the ACC player of the week.

Howard, a 6-foot-7, 218-pound junior from Winston-Salem, N.C., scored 23 points and had three assists in N.C. State's 88-73 victory over Duke on Thursday night. He hit eight of 11 field goals and five of eight free throws.

Howard scored 21 points, hitting nine of 12 field goals in the Wolfpack's 90-67 victory over Maryland on Sunday. He also pulled down six rebounds and had three assists.

The selections were made by a committee of the Atlantic Coast Sports Writers Association.

UNC Quarterback Charged With DWI

DURHAM (AP) — North Carolina quarterback Deems May has been charged with driving while impaired, authorities say.

May, 19, of Chapel Hill, was charged Sunday after registering a blood alcohol content level reading of 0.13 on a breathalyzer test, a Chapel Hill police report said. May also was charged with driving too fast for existing road conditions, the report said.

North Carolina football coach Mack Brown was on the road recruiting and could not be reached for comment.

Joe Robinson, the assistant athletic director for recruiting, said Brown is looking into the situation and will determine May's status with the team at a later date.

"We're in the process of looking at the circumstances," Robinson said. "We're trying to get the complete story."

May, a 6-foot-5, 220-pounder from Lexington, started the first three games for the Tar Heels as a redshirt freshman before being replaced by junior Jonathan Hill. May played sparingly for the remainder of the season and fell to third on the quarterback depth chart behind freshman Todd Burnett and Hill. May rushed for 33 yards on 17 attempts and completed 28 of 68 passes for 270 yards with five interceptions and no touchdowns.

Bengals' Stanley Wilson Served Sentence

NEWPORT, Ky. (AP) — Stanley Wilson, suspended from the Super Bowl because of a drug relapse, was sentenced Monday on an unrelated charge of urinating on a sidewalk.

Terms of the sentence were not announced, but Justin Verst, the assistant Campbell County prosecutor in charge of the case, said he would recommend that Wilson be required to complete a drug treatment program.

Campbell County District Judge Daniel Guidugli agreed to place the 27-year-old Cincinnati Bengals' running back in a diversion program on the disorderly conduct charge, which alleged that Wilson urinated on the sidewalk outside a northern Kentucky nightclub Jan. 5.

Verst said he agreed to the defense request for the diversion program because the charge against Wilson involves a first-time, non-violent offense.

Wilson was banned by the NFL from the Jan. 22 Super Bowl in Miami, which the Bengals lost 20-16 to the San Francisco 49ers for a violation of its substance abuse policy — reportedly a drug relapse the night before the game in his Miami hotel room. Wilson, a former University of Oklahoma star originally from Carson, Calif., has missed more than two seasons since being drafted by the Bengals in 1983 for previous cocaine use.

Jadlow Leads Hoosiers To Win

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — His free-throw shooting has been off and Indiana's Todd Jadlow doesn't believe practice is the answer.

But the senior center came up with an answer Monday night, making 18 in a row en route to a career-high 32 point performance.

The 6-foot-9 Jadlow also had a career-high 13 rebounds as No. 17 Indiana downed No. 9 Iowa 104-89 to maintain sole possession of first place in the Big Ten Conference. It was the only game involving ranked teams.

"Free throws is all a mental thing," said Jadlow, who went into the game with a .385 mark from the line in conference action. "I think once you hit a few, you just keep going, you get into a little rhythm and they just start falling for you."

Jadlow, struggling since conference play began, averaging only three points a game in his past seven games, made his first start in four games.

"I started him because we needed the inside scoring that we didn't have in Saturday's game," Coach Bobby Knight said in reference to a 75-65 loss to then-No. 1 Illinois when Jadlow failed to score in 30 minutes of play.

Jadlow's 18 free throws made tied the Assembly Hall record for a game. He lost the chance to tie the mark for free throw percentage in a game when he missed his last two attempts.

"Free throws to me, you can practice them all you want, but it's a total mental thing and it's all in your mind if you can make them or miss 'em."

"I had to get on his ... once about drifting out of the press offense. Other than that he stayed with what we were doing," Knight said of Jadlow, who had 16 of his points as the Hoosiers took the lead for good.

"It's been trying, not only for me, but for Coach as well. This is probably the first time I've really contributed since Dec. 29 (when he scored his previous career-high 27 in the title game of the Hoosier Classic)," Jadlow said.

"He did give them an awful game inside and you could see we just could not contain on the interior," Iowa coach Tom Davis said.

"Defensively we had an awful lot of problems locating him down inside, partially because we were trying to cover him with some people in foul trouble and our bench is a little soft at some of those positions."

While Jadlow was doing his damage inside, the three-guard starting unit of Jay Edwards, Lyndon Jones and Joe Hillman gave the Hawkeyes problems outside.

Edwards scored 28 points and set a school record for 3-pointers in a career with the third of four he made in the first half. Both Edwards and Jadlow scored 16 points as Indiana opened a 58-49 halftime lead.

The Hoosiers went on to a 13-point advantage in the second half, but Iowa charged back to cut the deficit to 77-75 with 8:01 to play.

"I thought the whole thing would be determined from that point on by what kind of conditioning and stamina we had," Knight said. "I was interested to see how well we hung in with Iowa. They are a very well conditioned team and I thought it would be a true test of how well we were conditioned."

"I was pleased with what I saw down the stretch. It was probably the biggest test of our stamina this year."

Iowa went more than four minutes without a field goal as Indiana put together a 13-2 spurt at that point. The spurt ended with two Jadlow free throws, giving the Hoosiers a 90-77 lead with 4:28 remaining.

Indiana's 12th consecutive home victory boosted the Hoosiers to 17-5 overall, 7-1 in the Big Ten.

Iowa, which got 27 points from B.J. Armstrong and 26 from Ed Horton, slipped to 15-4 and 3-3. Horton had 14 rebounds, helping the Hawkeyes post a 41-33 advantage off the boards.

Jones contributed 18 points to the victory and had six assists, while Hillman had 15 points and eight assists.

Other Games

Brian Shorter scored 20 points and Pittsburgh got the first 11 points in overtime to beat St. John's 85-81 in the Big East.

Jason Matthews, who scored 18 points, had a 3-point basket and four foul shots in overtime for the Panthers, 11-8 and 4-4 in the Big East. Jayson Williams had 19 points and 13 rebounds for the Redmen, 12-7 and 4-5.

Michael Best and Mitch McMullen scored 16 points apiece as San Diego State ended a five-game Western Athletic Conference losing streak by beating Wyoming 69-61. The losing streak was the longest ever in Coach Jim Brandenburg's 13-year career, which included stints at Wyoming and Montana. Brandenburg, in his second year at San Diego State, won for the first time against his former team after losing twice to the Cowboys last year.

Mark Houghton scored 25 points, including five 3-point baskets, as Delaware beat Navy 62-51. Navy's school-record losing streak reached 12 games.

Tom Savage had 24 points and Rutgers led all the way in beating St. Bonaventure 79-50 in the Atlantic 10.

Also, Kemp Phillips scored 19 points to lead Appalachian State over Virginia Military Institute 76-69 in the Southern Conference; David Brown made a jumper with five seconds left that lifted Furman over Tennessee-Chattanooga 76-74 in the Southern, and Mario Donaldson came off the bench to score 22 points and lead Drake to an 89-72 victory over Indiana State in the Missouri Valley Conference.

Dottie Mochrie Wins LPGA Tournament

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOCA RATON, Fla. — Beth Daniel lost the tournament she thought was hers. Dottie Mochrie had the last say at the LPGA Oldsmobile Classic.

"I guess I was wrong," Daniel said Monday after Mochrie made a 2-foot putt for par on the fifth extra hole to end a sudden-death playoff and claim her first professional victory.

"I got a shot at it," added Daniel, who overcame a two-stroke deficit on the final hole of regulation and almost extended the playoff to a sixth hole with a putt that narrowly missed falling in the cup.

"I was down two (strokes) going into 18 (Sunday) and I got a shot at it. That's about all you can ask for."

The loss means Daniel still hasn't won an official LPGA event since 1985. She finished first in last fall's Nichirei Cup Team Match in Japan but the tour considers it an unofficial victory.

A 14-time winner since turning pro in 1979, Daniel felt she was on the verge of ending the frustration when the playoff was suspended because of darkness after four holes Sunday night.

She shrugged off the suggestion she may have been a little overconfident returning to the Stonebridge Golf and Country Club Monday morning. Mochrie earned $137,293 as a rookie last year, but hadn't won a tournament nor experienced the pressure of a playoff.

"I don't you can bank on anything until it happens," Daniel said. "That's part of the problem with golf. If you start looking ahead, you really are in trouble."

Mochrie won by avoiding problems on No. 18, a hole she bogeyed Saturday and Sunday. Daniel's prospects for victory diminished with a bad tee shot and ran out when her putt for par lipped the cup and didn't fall.

"My husband was sitting there this morning, and said, 'You know, this hole really owes you.' I birdied it Friday, but it really got me good over the weekend," said Mochrie, who slept for two hours Sunday night and then tossed and turned for hours thinking about No. 18.

"In the middle of the night, I wasn't feeling too good about it," she said. "But by the time I was ready to get up, I felt like this is your tournament to do with it as you wish. There's a little luck involved, but the longer you stay in it, the better your luck is."

Don't tell that to Daniel. While Mochrie rejoiced in winning her first LPGA title, she also felt for the veteran.

"Last year she and Juli Inkster probably played the best golf of anybody the last three months. Juli won twice in that span, and Beth came away with nothing," Mochrie said.

"I know her win in Japan was a big lift for her. To me, that's an official win. If I had won it, I would have called it my first victory. It doesn't say official on it, but she still won the tournament."

Miami's fourth-quarter rally.

The Warriors led 62-45 early in the third quarter before the Heat got within 94-92 with 6½ minutes left. But Chris Mullin, who scored 24 points, and Winston Garland, who had 22, kept Golden State in control.

Billy Thompson had 30 points and Grant Long had 24 for Miami, which is 4-37 at the halfway mark of the season.

Suns 126, Nuggets 100
Eddie Johnson had 26 points and Tom Chambers and Armon Gilliam got 20 each as Phoenix beat Denver in a matchup of the league's two highest-scoring teams.

The Suns scored 13 straight points in the first quarter and led 70-49 at halftime. Rookie Tim Perry finished with 19 points as Phoenix won for the 15th time in 16 home games.

Alex English scored 20 points and Michael Adams had 18 for the Nuggets.

Denver leads the NBA with a 121-point average, four more than Phoenix.

Rice...

"Joe and I have a good understanding," he said. "We've got good chemistry going. It was nothing against him. But I just felt I had to use he and Dwight Clark as examples of people who are built up by the media."

Rice also pointed out that Walsh, who stepped down as coach last week in favor of George Seifert, had called him and told him the laid-back Bay Area is not as lucrative an area for endorsements by athletes as, say Chicago, where 16 Bears got radio or television shows after their Super Bowl victory following the 1985 season.

"He told me not to feel bad, that it had nothing to do with racism. He said he'd had a Volvo ad and he didn't have it any more," Rice said.

Travis, George Michael Dominate Music Awards

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Gentle country crooner Randy Travis and stylish crossover singer George Michael dominated the American Music Awards, where heavy metal roadiness and rap jive earned only limited acceptance.

The Shrine Auditorium nationally televised ceremonies Monday night ushered in first-time categories for heavy metal and rap, which enjoy widespread youth culture popularity.

Michael and Travis each won three trophies and diversity reigned in the winners list with artists like Whitney Houston, Def Leppard, D.J. Jazzy Jeff & The Fresh Prince, Gladys Knight and Guns N' Roses.

Def Leppard, who didn't attend the ceremony despite three nominations, won two trophies for heavy metal music but lost with Van Halen to Gloria Estefan & Miami Sound Machine in the pop-rock group category. Guns N' Roses lost to Def Leppard twice in heavy metal but won for pop-rock single.

The lethargic performance by the tattooed, long-haired ruffians Guns N' Roses, who were joined by ex-

Eagle Don Henley, contrasted sharply with the show's other flashy, professional numbers.

Their bad-boy persona also didn't endear them to show producer Dick Clark, who was forced to move Rod Stewart's performance ahead of schedule because Guns N' Roses showed up late.

Travis was named favorite male country vocalist and won the album trophy for "Always & Forever" and the single award for "I Told You So." He won in three categories last year for the same album.

Asked about milking awards twice from the same album, he said backstage, "I'm not sure how that happened but I'm glad it did."

Unlike Grammy Awards decided by artists and industry insiders, 20,000 ordinary music lovers are the arbiters for American Music Awards. Because "Always & Forever" spanned two calendar years, it was eligible twice.

It happened before. Glen Campbell's "Rhinestone Cowboy" won in 1976-77, Kenny Rogers' "The Gambler" in 1980-81 and the Rogers-Dolly Parton duet "Islands in the Stream" got a two-year ride in 1984-85.

Michael, formerly of the group Wham!, was favorite male vocalist in the pop-rock and the soul-rhythm-and-blues categories. His album "Faith" claimed the soul-R&B album award.

"A couple of years back when I split the group with Andrew (Ridgeley), I knew I had a tough job ahead of me and I thought that maybe people weren't going to give me much of a chance," Michael told the audience.

Miss Houston won the female pop-rock and rhythm-and-blues vocalist categories, her 10th and 11th American Music Awards, and Miss Estefan & Miami Sound Machine's Latin beat got them the pop-rock group award.

"I never expected to win this," said Miss Estefan. "It's wonderful to be able to cross over to a whole new market and to have everyone from all walks of life like our music."

Gladys Knight & The Pips, who dominated the awards in 1976 with four trophies, beat out hot new acts New Edition and Salt-N-Pepa for R&B group honors. Alabama won its seventh consecutive country group trophy.

Def Leppard swept the heavy metal category as favorite artist and for the album "Hysteria." The new rap category went to favorite artist Jazzy Jeff & The Fresh Prince and his album "He's The D.J., I'm The Rapper."

Tracy Chapman, who led Grammy nominations earlier this month with six, was the favorite new pop-rock artist but did not appear to claim the trophy.

The "Dirty Dancing" movie soundtrack won favorite pop-rock album.

Highlighting the three-hour ABC-TV presentation were tributes to Michael Jackson and Willie Nelson, who were given non-competitive trophies for personal achievement. A brief segment also honored three artists who died last year — Roy Orbison, Brook Benton and Andy Gibb.

"I would first like to thank God, who makes all things possible," said Jackson.

Guns N' Roses won best pop-rock single for "Sweet Child O' Mine" and Freddie Jackson's "Nice 'N' Slow" took the R&B single award. The favorite new R&B artist was Al B. Sure!, a Boston native.

Reba McEntire won favorite female country singer, and Patty Loveless was favorite new country artist.

Names of nominees were compiled from year-end sales charts of the music industry trade publication Cash Box.

Winners were selected by a polling of 20,000 people who receive ballots sent by Herbert Altman Communications Research Inc. The ballots are counted by the Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Co. accounting firm.

The Grammy Awards will be handed out Feb. 22.

NBC Plans New Day Soap Featuring Black Family

By Jerry Buck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Sally Sussman, after more than a year of plotting, planning and writing, is about to launch the new NBC daytime serial "Generations."

The story of three generations of two Chicago families, one white, one black, "Generations" will make its debut on March 27. It will be the first soap with a black family at its core from the beginning, Ms. Sussman says.

Ms. Sussman was hired away from CBS' "The Young and the Restless" to mold the serial, which is her first creation. It's also the first new soap since CBS brought out "The Bold and the Beautiful" nearly two years ago. And it's NBC's first new serial since "Santa Barbara" in 1982.

"When they asked me to create the show they asked me if I had any ideas," said Ms. Sussman, who is co-executive producer as well as head writer.

"I did. I submitted a 20-page outline describing the two families. I didn't have a story at that time. Then I wrote the bible, which ran to 525 pages. It has eight or nine different stories and I figure it will take us through the first two years."

Last October, after working alone for a year, she hired three writers, Thom Racina, Elizabeth Harrower and Judi Ann Mason. Racina and Harrower are experienced soap opera writers and Mason is a new black writer.

The writers now have 20 scripts completed and 30 outlined. The taping will begin with 25 completed scripts and 10 in the works. Ms. Sussman wants to stay five to six weeks ahead of taping and two months ahead of the air date.

The cast of "Generations" includes Taurean Blacque, Joan Pringle, Patricia Crowley, Lynn Hamilton, Barbara Rhoades, Kristoff St. John, Gail Ramsey, Andrew Masset and Jonelle Allen.

"We're going to keep the writers away from the production office and studio," said Ms. Sussman. "The production offices are too small and too hectic. We need to be where it's quieter, more sane, and the writers aren't pressured. We also have to work in secret because we're so far ahead with the story. We don't want anyone to know what we're doing until we're ready to reveal it."

Each actor auditioning for the roles was given a complete biographical sketch of the character and read from special material written for the audition.

"We want every actor to be thoroughly familiar with his character," said Ms. Sussman. "We want them to know who they are and who all their relatives are. Before we start taping we're going to meet individually with each actor and go over their character. It's very important each has a strong knowledge of who they are."

Blacque, the head of the black family, will run a chain of ice cream stores called Marshall's Chicago Ice Cream. His lawyer will be Patricia Crowley, who heads the white family. The stories, covering all the generations, will touch on both their business and personal relationships.

"These are going to be stories of character and emotions," said Ms. Sussman. "It's not what I call the false reality of soap operas where everyone's a private detective. It's more reality oriented. We'll get into some black issues and social trends."

Dr. Troy Duster, a black professor of sociology at the University of California at Berkeley, is a consultant to the show.

NBC's affiliate stations will be offered alternative time slots for the new half-hour show. It will be fed twice, for possible airing at 11 or 11:30 a.m. and again for 12 or 12:30 p.m. This would allow the stations to schedule the show around their noon newscasts. "Generations" will then lead into "Days of Our Lives," NBC's highest-rated daytime drama.

Ms. Sussman, a native of Toronto, attended the University of Southern California and was a management intern at NBC. Later, she became a secretary and began writing comedy scripts on speculation. She sold a script to "Facts of Life" and later joined the staff. She also wrote for "Knots Landing" and "Too Close for Comfort."

"I was looking for the security of a steady job," she said. "I met some people at CBS and wrote a six-month story projection for 'The Young and the Restless.'" She was hired on the basis of that, and spent five years with the show.

Johnson Nabs His Man

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — Now maybe he'll get a promotion. Actor Don Johnson, who has played Sonny Crockett on NBC's "Miami Vice" for more than four years and still holds the rank of detective, got his man — but with no cameras rolling.

This time it was for real, when Johnson went back to his suite at the Hotel Bel-Air here shortly after 9 p.m. Sunday and found a man allegedly pawing through the purse belonging to Johnson's once and future wife, actress Melanie Griffith.

Police say the couple surprised the man in mid-rifling before he could lift the costly jewelry in the handbag. Johnson — obviously a method actor — blocked the man's exit, told him to stop what he was doing, patted him down to make sure he was unarmed and held him until a policeman working as a hotel security guard arrived.

Booked for investigation of attempted burglary was David Johnson, 34, no relation to Don.

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR WEDNESDAY Feb. 1
ARIES (March 21 to April 19): A difficult home situation cannot be handled with sweet talk. When a problem gets the best of you, move away from it.
TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Breaking away from a difficult situation is impossible, so why not try a different approach? You can win over another's heart.
GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): When you fail to follow your own rules, it is difficult to enlist the cooperation of others. Express views with reason and clarity.
MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Trust your own instincts today. Even though your tolerance level is low, your intuition can be accurate. Use it to your advantage.
LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): You hate boredom and enjoy life when fun is all around you. Plan to stir up some excitement during the coming weekend.
VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): You are not perfect but have the confidence to get the job done. Don't expect others to follow along with the same reliability or proficiency.
LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Frustration over a relationship can bring out angry words. Keep family connections intact, and consult with those you trust and admire.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Someone may back down from a prearranged commitment. Use your romantic nature to rekindle the chase. Success will come if you try.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Be aggressive if you want to catch the one and only today. Pick out the one who respects your opinions.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): You may have to work in spurts today as a result of numerous interruptions. You may enjoy reading stimulating material now.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): You have been working extra hard and may feel undercompensated. Recognition will come, but monetary reward may have to wait.
PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Confine discussions about dreams to those who appreciate your spiritual nature. Less understanding types may discriminate against you.

With nine tricks in the bag, declarer led dummy's last spade, and East's goose was cooked. If he ruffed low, declarer would overruff and take two more tricks via a club ruff and the ace of trumps. If he ruffed high and returned a trump, declarer would trump with dummy's ten (or ace, if necessary) and score the last two tricks on a high crossruff.
 So East discarded his ace of clubs. Declarer countered by ruffing low, then trumping a club with the ace of hearts. When declarer now led the last diamond from the board, he had to score his queen of trumps en passant for the fulfilling trick.

Police Say Most Of Loot Missing

LONDON (AP) — Four men have been convicted and jailed for stealing at least $53 million in cash, gold, silver, gems and other valuables in Britain's biggest robbery. Police say about two-thirds of the haul is still missing.

Valerio Viccei, the 34-year-old Italian who masterminded the robbery at a London safe deposit center, was sentenced to 22 years in jail on Monday after the two-month jury trial at London's Old Bailey Central Criminal Court.

Detectives, speaking on condition of anonymity, said they thought Viccei, who had most of a month to dispose of the haul before he was arrested, still controls much of it.

One Scotland Yard detective said: "He is set for a very comfortable retirement when he gets out" of prison.

Assisted by Parvez Latiff, the 32-year-old debt-ridden owner of the safe deposit center, the gang broke into 120 deposit boxes on July 12, 1987 and stole enough valuables to fill a bathtub at their hideout, prosecutor Roy Amlot told the jury.

Viccei and an accomplice had posed as customers at the safe deposit center across from Harrods department store in the expensive Knightsbridge area.

Once inside, they pulled guns on security guards and on Latiff, who concealed his involvement. The gang members then spent two hours breaking open boxes, taking goods such as a 40-carat diamond, since recovered, belonging to the wife of West German industrialist Gerd Rudolph Flick.

One robber cried, "Bingo," when he opened a box containing $265,000 worth of cocaine, the court heard.

But Viccei cut his finger on one box, took off his glove, and left a fingerprint, which allowed police to arrest him a week before he planned to flee to South America.

Viccei estimated the haul was worth $70 million and detectives said it was worth at least $53 million.

Latiff, who had been promised one-third of the haul, was sentenced to 18 years in prison for robbery and five years concurrently for possessing a gun.

One accomplice, David Poole, was given 16 years with a five-year concurrent sentence. Another, Peter O'Donoghue, was to be sentenced later.

Viccei also received a concurrent 12-year term for a firearms offense.

Police said about $17 million worth of the haul has been recovered. They said about $12 million worth of this will be returned to owners but that about $5 million worth remains unclaimed.

Police think many of the mainly foreign owners may not have claimed items of stolen property because they want to conceal the full extent of their wealth for political, tax or other reasons.

Yugoslavia's Army Issues Warning

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — A senior military officer has warned that the army might take a more active role in trying to end Yugoslavia's economic and political crisis if regional Communist leaders don't stop quarreling.

"What some describe as the battle for Yugoslavia will not be waged without the Yugoslav army," declared Adm. Petar Simic, a member of the ruling Politburo and the military's chief political officer.

Simic called for party unity Monday at a plenary session of the Communist Party's policy-setting Central Committee that continued today.

Liberal and hard-line committee members have been clashing over how to cope with 250 percent inflation, a sharp drop in living standards and an alarming increase in labor and ethnic unrest.

The army generally has remained on the sidelines in the struggle to end the country's woes that pits advocates of greater democracy against supporters of a more centralized communist system.

But senior officers are now showing signs of increasing unease, and Simic indicated the military — with an estimated combined strength of about 200,000 — might take a more active role "in putting a stop to confrontations between the republics."

"The crisis in Yugoslavia is rapidly approaching its culmination," Simic said, adding that the party is losing battle after battle" as the "political system is breaking apart." The army is "stable and prepared to fulfill its role and purpose," he said.

The Central Committee session was convened to discuss calls for the resignation of the Communist Party leader, Stipe Suvar, a liberal-minded Croat who favors greater decentralization of the economy.

It was expected to be the scene of a showdown between liberals and the hardline coalition led by Slobodan Milosevic, the ambitious party chief of Serbia, the largest of Yugoslavia's six loosely federated republics.

Suvar told committee members Monday that Yugoslavia must now choose between more democracy and "neo-Stalinism."

He also lashed out at Milosevic, his chief political rival, not mentioning the Serbian party boss by name but attacking the politics of centralized control favored by Milosevic.

He called for more "political pluralism, which is conditional on the competition of ideas" as opposed to "the dictatorship of the Communist Party" and "bureaucratic rule."

Milosevic on Monday called for sweeping personnel changes in the country's leadership, which he blamed for the current crisis.

"It would be honest and intelligent that those who have clashed with the people should allow themselves to be replaced by better and more capable men," he said.

Ortega Calls For Austerity, Cuts Army

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — In an attempt to end Nicaragua's economic crisis, President Daniel Ortega has announced plans to cut the budget by nearly half, lay off 35,000 troops and public employees and end subsidies for basic goods.

He said in announcing the austerity plan on Monday that city dwellers would be hardest hit and suggested many move back to the farm.

Speaking to the National Assembly, Ortega called for the cooperation of private business and told landholders the leftist Sandinista government would no longer confiscate private property.

In ending the two-hour, 40-minute address, he told his fellow 3.5 million Nicaraguans that sacrifice is needed to bring the economy out of crisis and curb inflation, which reached 20,000 percent last year.

"I appeal to the sensibility and honesty of all Nicaraguans so this proposal doesn't turn into a political confrontation," Ortega said.

"Otherwise, we'll be paying with the blood and the future of our people."

He said the federal budget this year would be cut by 44 percent — 461 billion cordobas or about $100 million to $200 million.

The president said the government would impose a "war economy" policy if inflation is not brought under control. He did not elaborate.

Ortega said the government will reduce subsidies for basic goods, but did not provide details.

He did not say during the speech how many workers the government plans to lay off. But in a telephone interview with the newspaper El Nacional in Caracas, Venezuela, he put the figure at 35,000, including 23,000 from the army and Interior Ministry and 12,000 from other public institutions. The Sandinista army had 74,000 troops last year, including reservists and militia.

Laid-off workers will receive temporary compensation and be offered agricultural employment, he said, noting that about 10,000 workers are needed for the coffee harvest.

He suggested, in addition, that laborers who live in cities consider moving to rural areas to find employment.

Thousands of Nicaraguans migrated to Managua, the capital, and other cities to flee the fighting during the 7-year war with the U.S.-backed Contra rebels, in which a preliminary cease-fire was reached last March.

Thousands more flooded into cities after Hurricane Joan ravaged the country in October. The storm killed more than 100 people, left at least 200,000 people homeless and caused more than $800 million in economic damage, according to the government.

LOWE'S You can't find better service anywhere

10% Low Price Guarantee Policy:

Lowe's guarantees our everyday low prices. If you find an identical advertised item at any retail competitor currently priced lower than ours, simply bring us written proof of that price. We'll match that price PLUS give you an additional 10% of the difference between the two prices when you buy from us. It must be an identical in-stock item. Closeout, discontinued and other clearance type sale items are excluded from this offer.

Satisfaction Guarantee Policy:

Lowe's guarantees that you will be satisfied with your purchase. If you are not completely happy with your purchase, simply return it along with your original sales receipt to any Lowe's store. We'll repair it, replace it, or refund your money.

Lowe's Raincheck Policy:

If an advertised item is temporarily out-of-stock, we will gladly issue a raincheck (except for items marked limited quantities, discontinued or closeout). When we restock you will be notified so you can buy at the previously advertised price. Some stores may not stock all advertised items; however, every item shown can be ordered for you.

UP TO $1,000 INSTANT CREDIT

Apply For Your Handy Lowe's Credit Card!

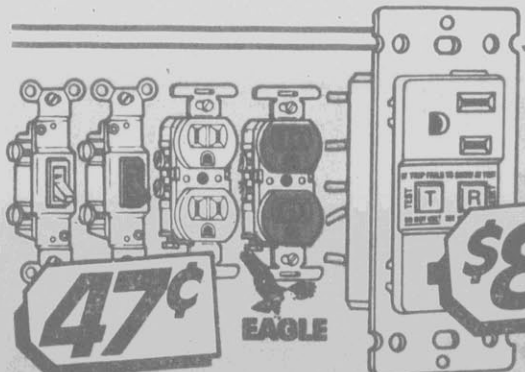

Just present your Visa, American Express, MasterCard or Sears card and you may qualify for up to $1,000 instant credit on a new Lowe's card. (Even without these cards, your application will be processed with minimum delay.)

Details on product warranties & Lowe's financing policy are available in store.

Lowe's Low Payment Plan — Terms Of Repayment:

Your credit must be satisfactory. No down payment required. The monthly payment includes sales tax of 5% and finance charges. If sales tax differs in your area, the monthly payment may vary slightly. The monthly payment has been estimated and may vary depending upon state laws and charges. Insurance is available upon request. The APR is as follows:
