Pitt's Teachers Will Skip Protest

Etheridge To Submit New Plan Calling For Stepups This Year

By Cherie Evans
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The local chapter of the North Carolina Association of Educators is not sending Pitt County teachers to Raleigh on Valentine's Day to join educators from Charlotte and Mecklenburg County who plan to rally for pay increases.

However, the chapter is likely to plan its own efforts to show its dissatisfaction with Gov. Jim Martin's proposal to delay teachers' and state employees' pay raises until April 1990, a spokesman says.

"We are going to be writing our legislators. We are calling. We are thinking about possibly a lobby day on our teacher workday in March," said Ruby Jackson, president of the Pitt County chapter of the NCAE and a teacher at D.H. Conley High School.

The local NCAE council, which is made up of a representative of each of the 31 schools in the county, will meet Feb. 23 to decide what the group will do, she said.

"There are some of our teachers probably in the county who are talking about" joining the group in Raleigh on Feb. 14 or the group from Wake County on Feb. 13, but they will not be part of an organized effort of the local chapter, Ms. Jackson said.

"The local president and I have reservations about a mass of teachers' going to Raleigh, said Jackie Wooten, president of District 15 of the NCAE and a teacher at Bethel Elementary School. The district covers 16 local chapters of NCAE in northeastern North Carolina, including Pitt County.

"We don't want to send the wrong message," she said. But, "we are dissatisfied and our teachers are concerned. We'll be planning something in Raleigh or either possibly planning something locally on the weekend when the representatives are in town.

"We don't want to adversely affect the students," Ms. Wooten said.

NCAE will have a statewide lobbying day April 13, prior to the NCAE state convention April 14 and April 15 in Raleigh, Ms. Jackson said.

Meanwhile, the Associated Press reported today that state school Superintendent Bobby Etheridge has announced he will submit a revamped salary plan to the

Gorbachev Takes Home $28,000

By David Remnick
 LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

MOSCOW — Mikhail Gorbachev is no millionaire, according to a leading Soviet magazine editor, but no one should be shocked that his wife, Raisa, can afford a pair of rhinestone-studded stockings now and again.

As head of state and general secretary of the Communist Party, Gorbachev brings home an annual salary of "something around 18,000 rubles" — or $28,000, at the inflated official exchange rate — Vitaly Korotich, editor of Ogonyok, said in an interview Tuesday with The Washington Post.

Most Western leaders earn far more, including President Bush, who makes $250,000. But many Soviet citizens, dissatisfied with their own meager salaries, often take great delight in sitting around the dinner table and making snide remarks about the Kremlin leader's American Express card and Raisa Gorbachev's haute couture.

"People ask, if Gorbachev doesn't make so much money, where does his wife get so many dresses?" Korotich said in an earlier interview with a Moldavian newspaper. "But that is not a serious question because Mikhail Sergeyevich is not so badly paid — he gets more than 1,500 rubles a month. Why shouldn't his wife buy a new dress?"

Korotich said that members of the ruling Politburo were paid between 1,200 and 1,500 rubles a month, but the highest salaries in the government went to the leading generals and marshals in the Defense Ministry, who earn as much as 2,000 rubles a month. Although such information is not generally published in the Soviet press, Korotich said it was not regarded as a state secret.

"Our leaders get free transport and very often food that is cheaper than ordinary," Korotich said. "I stand for a position where our chiefs will receive a real salary — maybe as much as what Bush makes — but they will pay for everything."

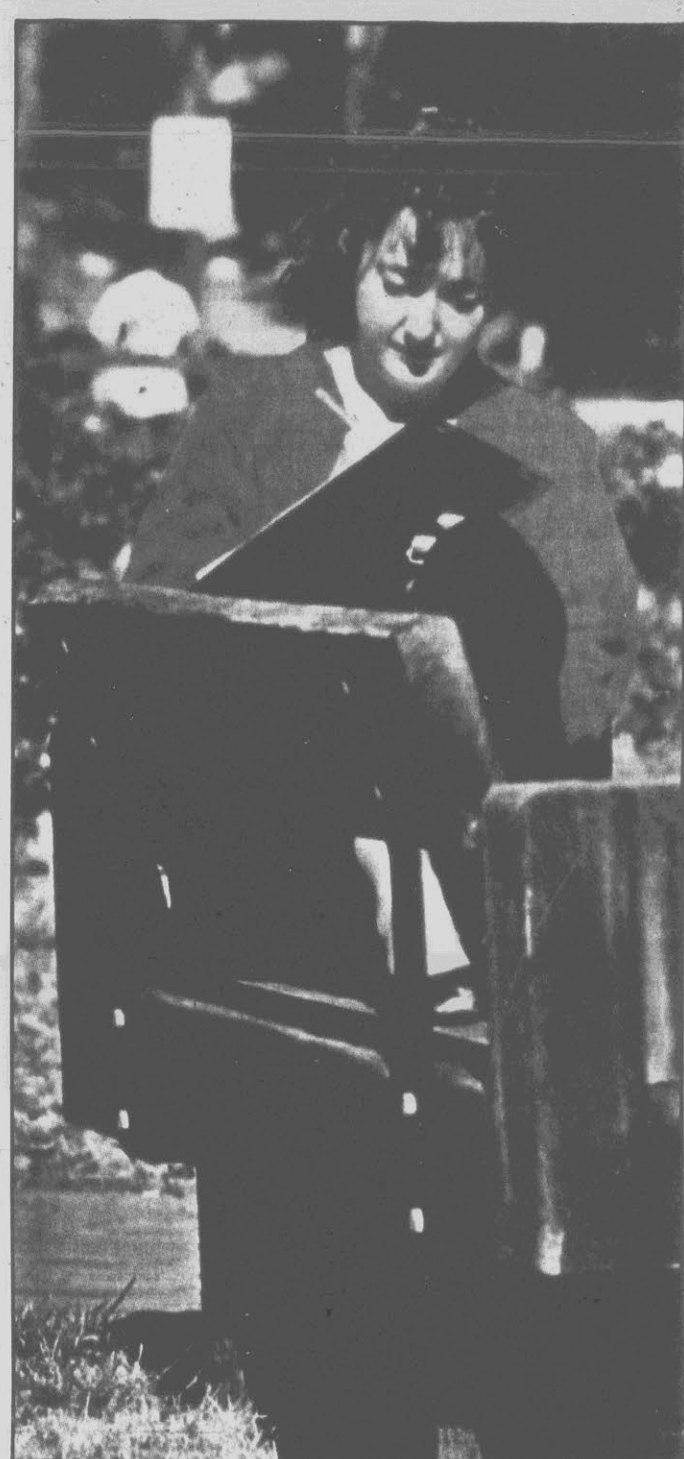

Korotich said that "as a journalist and as a Soviet citizen, I would love to know how members of the leadership buy potatoes and sausages and all the rest. They have closed down some of the special stores, so right now we're trying to call people in the government, the KGB and the Defense Ministry to see how they get along and live."

Gorbachev's book "Perestroika," published in the United States by Harper and Row, reportedly earned him $600,000 in American royalties. Korotich said the Soviet leader donated the money to the Communist Party.

While Gorbachev's salary appears low by Western standards, the Soviet leader's "more than 1,500 ru-

Viet Vets Discuss Healing

By Carol Tyer
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Seven people whose lives have been irretrievably altered by the Vietnam War experience on Tuesday discussed their continuing work to spare themselves and their families further pain resulting from the war.

The seven took part in a panel discussion during the two-day East Carolina University-sponsored 29th annual Family Life Conference. This year's conference was titled "Vietnam: A Family Experience Then and Now."

The discussion was led by Mary Stout, a former U.S. Army nurse now living with her husband, Carl, also a Vietnam veteran, in Arlington, Va. Mrs. Stout was recently elected president of Vietnam Veterans of America, the first woman president of a major U.S. veterans' organization.

Joining her were Alan Hoffman, WNCT television news anchor and his daughter, Marlo, a D.H. Conley High School student; Chet Holmes of Greenville and his father, Chester Holmes of Jacksonville, and Al Furbush and his wife, Linda, of Greenville. Hoffman, Furbush and both Holmeses are veterans of Vietnam. Now retired from the U.S. Marine Corps, Chester Holmes also served during World War II and the Korean War.

Mrs. Stout opened the discussion by quoting from several recent books about the Vietnam experience. One book, she said, shows that the war and the political upheaval surrounding it has affected the lives of some 2.5 million veterans and at

Bakeries To Pay Schools $38,013

By Cherie Evans
 THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Pitt County School Food Service Program will receive $38,013 as its share in a $1.2 million settlement by four bakery companies accused of rigging bids on bread sold to 37 educational systems in southeastern North Carolina between 1979 and 1985.

The food service program of the Greene County school system will receive $15,162.40 from the settlement, while the Martin County schools' food program will receive $12,987.31.

A letter to the school systems from Attorney General Lacy Thornburg said the money will be paid to the boards of education of each of the school systems in a single payment on April 25.

The payments to the school systems represent one and a half times the amount of the actual damages sustained by the systems, Thornburg's letter says.

"Inasmuch as the bid-rigging increased the cost of school food service by inflating bid prices on baked goods to the schools, (a public school law) requires that these funds must be used by your board in its school food service program 'to reduce the cost of food, to serve better food, or to provide free or reduced price lunches to indigent children and for no other purpose,'" the letter said.

The Pitt County school system will use the money to offset the cost of food for this year, said Donna Ware, director of the child nutrition program.

"We have over a $3.5 million budget," she said. "Of course food is a large portion of that budget. It would be nice to have the $38,000 to offset the expenditure in that area."

The firms charged with bid-rigging were American Bakeries Co., formerly of Rocky Mount and Fayetteville; Fox's Holsum Baker Inc., Wilmington; the Franklin Baking Co. Inc., Goldsboro, and a Franklin subsidiary, Dainty Maid Bakery of Kinston.

The Franklin firm, which provided bread products to the Pitt County schools (and to the Greenville school system prior to its merger with Pitt), and the Fox firm pleaded guilty to federal charges in the case.

ECU Nears End Of Measles Shots

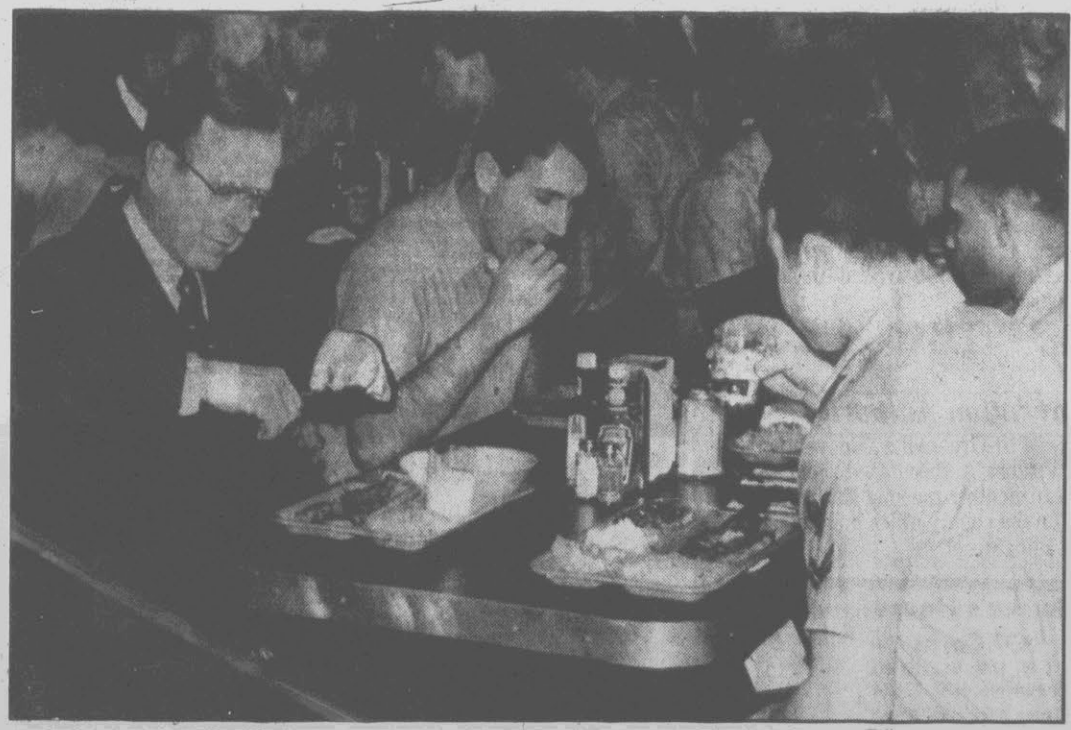

The list of East Carolina University students who have not been inoculated or shown proof of previous inoculation for measles is down to less than 400, Kay Van Nortwick, ECU Student Health Service assistant director, said this morning.

Mrs. Van Nortwick said a phone bank composed of secretaries in ECU's academic affairs office called everyone on the list Tuesday and then attempted to call everyone not previously reached. However, many were not reached the second time, she said.

Mrs. Van Nortwick said Dr. Al Matthews, vice chancellor, and Dr. James MacCallum, medical director of Student Health Services, were meeting today to decide what to do next in the effort to have every ECU student vaccinated against measles.

She said almost 7,000 shots have been given on campus so far and no new measles cases have been reported. She said the incubation period of measles — two weeks — has nearly passed since the last case was noted, so there is hope that the threat to the ECU campus is nearly over.

Majority Of House Favors Vote On Pay

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A new survey on a controversial 50 percent pay raise for members of Congress and top federal officials concluded today that about 62 percent of the House would oppose the increase if it came up for a vote.

The survey, by groups opposed to the pay raise, was released as House Speaker Jim Wright conducted his own questionnaire on the pay issue that left open the possibility of a House vote.

Wright, who had planned to allow the increase to become law Feb. 8 without a vote in the House, now says members can have a vote if they express that view in the survey. But the speaker said he expected members to tell him what they already communicated privately: they want the raise without a vote, even if the Senate defeats the pay hike as expected this week.

The raise would become law Feb. 8 unless both houses vote to stop it.

The new survey said 270 House members, or about 62 percent, said they would oppose the raise if it came to a vote. Forty-seven, or about 11 percent, said they would support the raise; 75 members, about 17 percent, declined to state a position, and 41 members, about 9 percent, declined to respond.

Of those willing to take a position, 85 percent said they opposed the raise, according to the survey, conducted by Public Citizen, a consumer advocacy group founded by Ralph Nader; the National Taxpayers Union, a non-partisan organization of fiscal conservatives; and Coalitions for America, a conservative organization headed by activist Paul Weyrich.

"A failure to vote on this issue would be a fundamental breakdown of democracy," said Joan Claybrook, president of Public Citizen.

Wright said Tuesday he ordered

Last-Day Listers Jam Tax Office

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

A multitude of tax-conscious citizens, many with automobile registrations in hand, descended upon the Pitt County Tax Office on Tuesday to meet the deadline for listing taxable personal property.

Employees of the tax office were kept busy throughout the afternoon processing people who had waited until the last day to list their cars, boats and other personal property.

According to state law, Jan. 31 is the last day to list real estate and personal property without penalty. Those persons listing property past that date are subject to a penalty of 10 percent on the general tax of that property.

In addition, legislation approved in 1987 says that those who fail to list a vehicle are subject to a $100 penalty if the vehicle owner fraudulently states on the vehicle registration card that taxes were listed and paid.

The prospect of those penalties was incentive enough for some people to wait in a line, which at times stretched beyond the tax office doors and out onto the sidewalk.

"There were probably 400 to 500 people here on Monday and our estimate for Tuesday was about 1,000 people," said Glenn Cutrell, assistant tax assessor for Pitt County. "Jimmy Hardee, the Pitt County tax assessor, said it was the busiest last day he's seen in 20 years."

"I knew it was going to be a busy day when there were about 30 people waiting at the doors at 7:40 a.m. After that, the line of people never stopped," he said.

Cutrell said it wasn't until 5:20 p.m., 20 minutes past the usual closing time, that the front doors of the office were finally locked and that employees were not through processing last-minute listers until 6:15 p.m.

Apparently, tax-listing procrastinators were not only found at the Pitt County office.

"I heard there was one listing station in another township where employees stayed until 9 p.m.," Cutrell said.

"People were pretty calm and collect yesterday and our employees received no hostile comments throughout the entire day," Cutrell said.

He said those listing their personal property taxes have in the past received their tax bills around the first of August.

The Pitt-Greenville Convention and Visitors Authority will hold its regular monthly meeting Feb. 8 at 7 p.m. in the county office building on West Fifth Street.

Convicted Man Testifies Jenkins Sold Him Heroin

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Testifying in his own behalf at a sentencing hearing Wednesday, a Greenville man said he received heroin at least once last year from a man prosecutors claim is a top drug dealer in the city.

Forrest June Wilson, 605 Albemarle Ave. took the stand after pleading guilty to six charges involving heroin, morphine and cocaine-based crack.

Under cross-examination from Chief Assistant District Attorney Nancy Aycock, Wilson said Charlie Lee Jenkins, 41, 1802 McClellan St. gave him heroin to sell on one occasion in early March of 1988.

When asked how often Jenkins gave him drugs to sell, Wilson only said, "sometimes," and did not specify other dates.

Jenkins and more than 20 other people arrested last year in a State Bureau of Investigation drug sweep are scheduled to stand trial this week in Pitt County Superior Court.

Jenkins is charged with 36 heroin violations, and he is the first person in Pitt County ever to be charged with operating a continuing criminal drug enterprise. If convicted on the charge, he could be sentenced to life in prison and be forced to forfeit money or property gained from the drug business.

The charge alleges that Jenkins conspired with at least five other people to operate a drug ring and that he was the organizer of the scheme.

Pitt County District Attorney Tom Haigwood said it remains to be seen whether Wilson's testimony will affect Jenkins' trial. Tuesday's testimony itself would not be admissible as evidence, he said, and Wilson would have to take the stand against Jenkins at another trial.

Jenkins' attorney, Charles Vincent of Greenville, suffered a broken leg this week and has not returned to work. He could not be reached for comment.

Wilson's attorney, Assistant Public Defender Carlos "Buddy" Murray, objected to Mrs. Aycock's questions regarding how and where Wilson obtained the drugs. But after taking a short recess to consult case law, Judge David E. Reid Jr. of Greenville overruled the objection and ordered Wilson to answer the questions.

By voluntarily taking the witness stand, Wilson waived his right to refuse to undergo cross-examination, Reid said.

In response to questions from Mrs. Aycock, Wilson said he used heroin every day during March, the month he was accused of selling heroin and cocaine to undercover SBI Agent J.C. Rea on two occasions.

Wilson said sometimes he would steal to get money to purchase the drugs. Other times, he would serve as the middle man in a drug sale, not profiting in money but receiving a packet of heroin as payment. Such an amount usually sells for about $25 on the street.

Wilson said he probably sold heroin on the streets in Greenville two or three times in March of last year, but he told Mrs. Aycock he only received the drugs from Jenkins on the first sale, which allegedly occurred March 9. On that occasion Rea paid $250 for the heroin, but Wilson said he did not profit from the transaction.

He said people from out of town or others unfamiliar with the drug scene in Greenville often did not know how to purchase drugs and would approach people standing on street corners, such as himself. He would then act as a middle man in a sale.

Reid sentenced Wilson to a 10-year prison term Tuesday. The penalty is to run concurrently with a previous six-year prison sentence handed down against Wilson last July in unrelated drug cases.

Under the plea arrangement with the state, the maximum penalty

Wilson could have received was 20 years in prison, and Mrs. Aycock asked Reid to impose the stiffest punishment possible, citing Wilson's long involvement with drugs.

"If anybody ever deserved (the prison term), he does ...," she said. "He is part of the drug scene in Pitt County. He is someone you can always buy from. He has never stopped selling, and he never will."

Murray said Wilson has had a "tragic and horrible" heroin addiction for 12 years and the numerous injections have left scars along his arms and legs. Wilson participated in the drug business to obtain heroin for himself, not for profit, Murray said to Reid.

There are two Superior Courts operating this week in Greenville, and several other defendants who have entered guilty pleas were scheduled to be sentenced today.

The state also continued presenting evidence in the trial of Jenkins' brother, James Earl Jenkins, 41, 102 Glenwood. He is charged with possessing, selling and delivering heroin and conspiring to do the same. If convicted, he could face a maximum of 60 years in prison.

Three other people arrested in connection with the SBI drug operation were also sentenced Tuesday.

Reid sentenced Samuel Lewis Perkins, 37, 502-B Darden Drive, to 15 years in prison. Perkins pleaded guilty to six heroin violations. The prison term is to run concurrently with a 10-year sentence handed down against Perkins last July.

Reid sentenced Willie Armwood, 33, 621-B Hudson St., to two years in prison. He pleaded guilty to possessing and selling heroin.

Special Superior Court Judge Sam Curren of Raleigh sentenced Torrence G. Payton, 17, 407-A Jordan Drive, to six years in prison. He suspended another three-year term for five years. Payton pleaded guilty to three counts of selling cocaine, one count of possession with intent to sell and deliver cocaine and one count of conspiracy.

Task Force Suggests Major Campaign To Combat High Infant Mortality Rate

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — North Carolina must launch a major campaign to combat its high infant mortality rate, a panel of health care experts say in a report.

Among the options the state should consider, according to the report, are sending teams of doctors into rural reaches of the state to provide prenatal care, offering incentives to women who have a high risk of delivering children so frail that they will not live until their first birthday and appropriating additional money to local health departments to help them provide better prenatal care.

The incentives could include discounts on diapers and baby clothes to ensure that expectant women keep check-up appointments.

"The single most important cause of infant death and disability is low birth weight — a condition which worldwide experience proves can be dramatically improved by early, consistent and thorough health care throughout pregnancy," says the report by the Task Force for Reducing Infant Mortality and Morbidity, an offshoot of the N.C. Institute of Medicine in Durham.

The report was released today.

Dr. Sarah T. Morrow, chairman of the task force and a former state secretary of Human Resources, said the task force proposals would cost the state $5 million over the next two years to provide better prenatal care throughout the state.

The expense, she said, would save taxpayers money in the long run because of the high costs of caring for small babies in intensive care. Those costs average $30,000 per child.

"The cost of caring for five low birth weight infants in intensive care facilities would pay for prenatal care for 149 women," she said at a press conference today. "Prenatal care would make it far more likely that children born would not only survive their first year of life, but would be far less likely to suffer illness and other handicapping conditions."

"It really depends upon the value we place on human life, perhaps vs. roads," she said in an interview Tuesday. "Now, where do you put the money?"

Gov. Jim Martin, in his budget recommendations for the next two years, proposed no new money to address the problem of infant mortality. But Human Resources Secretary David T. Flaherty said Tuesday that his department was attempting to get some private foundations to help the state set up pilot programs to fight the problem.

Ms. Morrow said the task force's goal is to reduce North Carolina's infant mortality rate — now the 46th highest of the 50 states, according to the report — from 12.1 to 10 deaths per thousand births by 1993. The national average is 10 deaths per thousand births.

"The costs are far more than human suffering," the report says. "The economic impact on the state as a whole and on governmental resources is staggering."

The report says that the problem is particularly acute in the rural regions of the state, where doctors who deliver babies are often in short supply. In many cases, the high costs of malpractice insurance are driving doctors from providing prenatal care and delivering babies, the report says.

The task force called for increasing from $6,500 to $8,000 the maximum amount the state will pay a rural obstetrician to help defray insurance costs. And it also called for an extensive public education effort about the need for prenatal care.

The report says that pregnancy tests should be offered free so that pregnant women could then be informed about prenatal care.

Flaherty said a task force he appointed has presented him with a first draft of a proposal to address the problem. He said the report would be released by the middle of February.

The N.C. Institute of Medicine is a non-profit corporation chartered in 1983 by the General Assembly to study statewide health problems and recommend solutions.

EPA Plans Air Changes

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Environmental Protection Agency administrator-designate William K. Reilly, declaring a "new era" is coming to the agency, said Tuesday that the Bush administration will introduce a comprehensive clean air bill with a strong acid rain provisions in the near future.

Reilly, former president of the World Wildlife Fund and the first conservation leader ever to be nominated to the top EPA post, said the legislation also would establish new deadlines for the nation's smoggiest cities to comply with federal air standards.

New Securities Probe Scheduled

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Attorney General Dick Thornburgh, declaring that investors are being bilked out of hundreds of billions of dollars annually, on Tuesday announced formation of task forces by six U.S. attorneys to pursue securities and commodities fraud.

In addition to individual investor losses, the federal Treasury loses more than $90 billion annually through tax fraud, and white-collar crime also contributed to many recent business failures.

No Magic Number For Quality

As cities go, 50,000 is a dazzling figure. Many see it as the break between small town America and the onset of the metropolis status. It is, for many communities, a benchmark of growth which leads to national recognition.

After struggling for over 200 years Greenville is approaching the magic figure. There is little doubt that sometime in the next few years the city will have an official population of 50,000.

City officials, in fact, want the event to happen in 1990 when the next official national census is taken. When the city registers 50,000 it is in a better position to claim federal grants. On the state level some local funding takes into account population and the more citizens you count the more funding you receive.

All that is fine, but let's not be stampeded into stretching for the magic number in 1990 — just to get there. Greenville has been carrying out a carefully planned annexation program, one which allows the Utilities Commission and city departments to anticipate the cost of additional services required. The result is orderly growth — expansion that doesn't overtax services and degrade quality of life or require expensive bonds to accommodate.

When an annexation occurs, that brings more people into the municipal limits. And more people, while they mean more revenue ultimately, mean more services are demanded from the city — sewer, water, fire, police protection.

Let's look at the realities of providing these services. Sewer and water lines cost big bucks for utilities to provide in new areas. Public works has to plan for refuse collection, street maintenance and other services. Police and fire departments must plan and budget for covering the new areas. More services means more manpower is needed by these departments.

What is the point? Annexing new residential areas with careful planning for financing the necessary municipal services makes sense. Annexing to boost population to a magic figure does not.

Greenville should continue to plan for expansion of the city limits on a sound financial basis. In doing so, however, it must let the population figures take care of themselves. If in 1990 the community hits 50,000, well and good. If the population is only 49,990 then the city will still be a growing, vibrant center — without the problems of overstressed services and haphazard growth.

If Greenville plans well and keeps quality of life foremost it will reach that 50,000 mark someday, even if not in 1990 — and the community will know it has developed a metropolitan area that will be second to none as a place to work, play and live.

That goal, not a so-called magic number, should be the plateau the city covets.

'And more people, while they mean more revenue ultimately, mean more services are demanded from the city — sewer, water, fire, police protection.'

No Substitute For Direction

WASHINGTON — On the day George Bush held his first full-blown press conference, my colleagues were a happy lot. They watched a President nimbly answer questions, admit he didn't have all the answers, fake follow-up questions, call reporters by name and stay on the podium so long an uninformed viewer could have thought he was watching a telethon. George Bush, everyone gasped, is no Ronald Reagan.

No, he is not — and that may become his problem. Reagan's handlers knew better than to call a news conference when the President had almost nothing to say. They knew better than to put him into a defensive posture in which the President repeatedly said that he was not ready to discuss a particular issue. A viewer could only conclude that after a lifetime of preparing himself for the presidency, George Bush was unprepared for the presidency.

Some examples: Bush said it was a "little absurd" to comment on a Treasury proposal to charge a fee on saving-and-loan deposits. That proposal had been greeted on Capitol Hill like an infidel in Mecca, but did Bush give it the coup de grace it deserves? No way. He said he wanted to "reserve comment until I actually have it presented to me."

On U.S.-Soviet relations, Bush once again appealed for time. "Let's take a look on where we stand on our strategic-arms talks, on conventional-force talks" and other matters before we "formulate the policy and then get out in front." In other words, he wasn't ready to say anything.

When asked what he meant when he said he needed to have a foreign-policy initiative, Bush went all over the map. The Middle East? The Soviet Union? "Where?" he was asked. "All of them," he answered. "But we've got to have a little time."

The press, unaccustomed after eight years of Reagan to such candor, went off in a journalistic version of a chocolate high. But an average American might well have recalled a refrain from the Democratic National Convention: Where was George?

How is it that a man who has been vice president for eight years and President or President-elect since last November has been unable to hit the ground running? Why is it that in matters of paramount importance — the U.S.-Soviet relationship, for instance — Bush does not seem to know where he is going? In Europe, Mikhail Gorbachev has the initiative and the Germans, in particular, are looking for signals from Washington. How shall NATO respond to Warsaw Pact troop reductions? Why should Germany continue to bear the social costs of NATO (low-level training flights, for instance) when, in their view, the Russian bear is now a pussycat? To these questions, Washington is mum.

What we are seeing is Jimmy Carter redux. From the moment he stepped onto Pennsylvania Avenue during the inaugural parade, Bush has substituted a Carter-like atmosphere of good intentions for sound programs. Instead, Bush has thrown himself into being the un-Reagan. No Washington restaurant is safe from a presidential drop-in. No two reporters can gather for either a chat or an assignment without the presidential limo pulling up. Hi, guys!

All of this is welcome. But it is no substitute for direction — for leadership. Bush is both too much his own man and too knowledgeable to take instruction from his juniors, but he is quickly squandering that special aura of mystery that veils the presidency. Like Carter, he appears both ordinary and indecisive, a man of good intentions whose foremost intention is to be liked. On a whim, he transformed a routine White House briefing into a presidential news conference in which the entire message, really, was that he is not Ronald Reagan. True. But so far, he's not presidential, either.

Royall: A Budgeter Of Stature

Paul O'Connor

RALEIGH — Amid the turmoil created by the turnover in power in both houses of the General Assembly sits one stabilizing influence for the 1989 session. Sen. Kenneth Royall, D-Durham, the Senate's most powerful member for at least a dozen years, is once again chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Royall may not be a household name, but when the history of North Carolina in the seventies and eighties is written, his role may be considered the equal of, or superior to, those played by Jim Hunt and Jim Martin.

Royall, 70, is an immense man, standing well above six feet and with a weight in the range of that required for NFL linemen. In legislative circles, however, his stature is even grander. Other legislators, lobbyists and reporters are probably in near unanimity in describing Royall as the legislator with the greatest grasp of the budget.

He first entered the legislative budget leadership in 1971, as a member of the House. Although at several times in the past 20 years he did not hold a money committee chairmanship, these has never been a time when he was not an instrumental player in writing the budget.

Royall is a staunch believer in responsible budgeting. In a world where spending is popular and collecting is anathema, Royall is a rigid guardian of the principle that spending and collecting must equal each other. He won't allow his budgets to be balanced with blue smoke and mirrors.

True to his realistic view of budgeting, Royall doesn't see any easy way to meet state needs this year. More than $70 million was cut out of the budget before it was even sent to the legislature, he said, and even with that amount of cutting, the anticipated spending for school, prisons and Medicaid will devour all available new dollars.

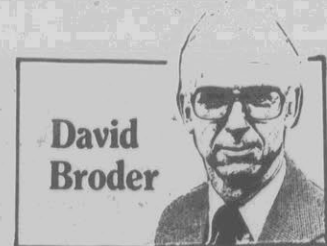

There aren't any quick fixes in the Royall school of budgeting, and that's probably the reason that for all the time that Ken Royall has been involved in writing the state budget, North Carolina has been fiscally sound.

Open Means Flexible, And That Helps Bush's Cause

WASHINGTON — White House chief of staff John H. Sununu was just finishing up an anecdote illustrating how "the very loose approach the President wants to take" is shaping "a much more open structure" of White House decision-making, when George Bush made the point for him. The door to the chief of staff's office opened last Friday and, unannounced, Bush walked in on the interview in progress.

"You going over to this thing?" he asked, referring to the swearing-in of Secretary of State James A. Baker III. "Yes," Sununu said. "Do you want to go now?" "Finish up what you're doing," Bush said, "and pick me up when you're ready."

In three decades of White House interviews, this is the first time I can recall a President walking to the office of an aide, rather than having the aide summoned to the Oval Office. It illustrated the tone of openness and access the fledgling Bush administration set in its first days.

For the press, it's meant frequent and lengthy news conferences with Bush, Sununu and others in the high command. For members of Congress, especially the opposition Democrats, it's meant not just substantive formal meetings but social events in the White House residential quarters, including glimpses of the new first family's bedrooms.

Internally, it's meant that Sununu has for now shucked off the short temper and arrogance he often displayed in his old job as governor of New Hampshire. Instead, he has emphasized the impatience with bureaucracy that comes naturally to a hands-on manager accustomed to dealing with a pocket-sized government.

Sununu suggested that the scene I had just witnessed indicated why he was optimistic about being able to "reduce the bureaucracy and paperwork in the White House. I tell the staff, 'If you've got a problem, don't write a five-page memo. Come ask. And if I can't answer it...I'll go in and ask him (Bush) and for the most part, you'll get your answer within two hours.'"

"That's wonderful, if it survives the first big bump," I said, voicing the skepticism with which Washington views such assertions.

He replied: "It's easier to survive the big bumps with a system that is flexible than one that is rigid. A rigid system tends to be brittle. A flexible system can handle the give and take. People will pull together much better if the communication has been taking place on a personal level than in a more distant, formalized way."

There were no big bumps in the early days, just a couple of gaffes involving Cabinet members who are personal favorites of the President. Secretary of the Treasury Nicholas Brady set off one by letting members of Congress know that he was considering recommending a fee on savings accounts as a way of financing the savings-and-loan bailout. And Dr. Louis Sullivan, the appointee to head the Department of Health and Human Services, aroused the suspicions of conservatives by again intimating that his private views on abortion may be more permissive than the President's.

It took some quick scrambling to nudge Sullivan back into line, and to make it clear that Brady had not yet sold Bush on his S&L plan. But in neither case was there a White House crackdown.

Talking about the congressional leaks that embarrassed the two

Cabinet members, Sununu said: "You have to expect that when you talk to people early, and that's going to happen again and again...The President hopes, and everyone here hopes, it will not inhibit a continued willingness...to go up and consult as early as possible (with members of Congress)."

Sununu's studied nonchalance is understandable, since the damage done to Bush in the Sullivan and Brady affairs was neither serious nor long-lasting.

Heavier weather is just ahead, however, when the bad news in the Bush budget is conveyed in advance to the key players on Capitol Hill. "We're going to prepare people for some of the tough things we have to propose (to reduce the deficit)," Sununu said, "and there will be selective disclosures...what you call leaks in this town...There will always be somebody to say we're not planning to put enough money into this or that, and we know we'll have to live through that flurry."

There's no way to avoid it, except by not having consultation, and consultation is going to be a hallmark of this administration."

Old hands in Washington will nod wisely and say that if this policy of openness continues to provide raw material for anti-Bush sharpshooters, the iron curtain will come down around this White House as it has around others.

I thought that myself, before Bush took office, but I am no longer sure that cynicism is warranted. The new President's approach to rival politicians (in both parties) and to the media is so determinedly relaxed and non-antagonistic that it may take a lot to end it.

Given the difficulties of dealing with the nation's problems in a divided government, it will be a blessing if it lasts.

Robeson Fugitives Join In Lawsuit Accusing The State Of Harassment

By Dennis Patterson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A battle that began a year ago today when two Indians took over a small-town newspaper to draw attention to alleged corruption remains unresolved, with the two fugitives suing the state.

Eddie Hatcher and Timothy Jacobs, who were acquitted in December on federal hostage-taking charges in connection with the siege in Lumberton, filed the lawsuit Tuesday, alleging the state was harassing them by filing separate charges.

The lawsuit also was filed by the Robeson County Defense Committee, a group of Indians and blacks formed during the past year to voice concern about "oppression."

Jacobs' attorney, Lewis Pitts, said the group's involvement in the lawsuit shows the people of Robeson County "are a changed people."

"No longer will they sit by and take the reign of terror and the oppression, and this lawsuit reflects their changed attitude," said Pitts.

"They are calling the emperor naked. That's the positive spirit here one year after the takeover."

Hatcher says he doesn't see an end to the standoff.

"Just because I'm not in North Carolina doesn't mean I'm not in their hair," he said in a telephone interview from Idaho, where he is seeking sanctuary with the Shoshone-Bannock Indians.

Brandishing sawed-off shotguns, the Tuscarora Indians walked into The Robesonian newspaper office in Lumberton, and took up to 20 hostages.

They said they had evidence of law enforcement involvement in drug trafficking in Robeson County, whose population is evenly divided between blacks, whites and Indians. Hatcher also said federal officials were repeatedly presented with information concerning racial injustice and police corruption in Robeson County over the years, but failed to rectify the problems.

Gov. Jim Martin ended the siege without injuries to the hostages by agreeing to form a task force to investigate the allegations.

Hatcher and Jacobs were charged with federal firearms violations and hostage-taking, held in a federal prison at Butner, then moved through a series of county jails while awaiting trial.

They were denied bond three times before a three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals ordered their release in July. The full appeals court later agreed to reconsider that decision and ordered them back to jail.

Jacobs complied, but Hatcher fled and surfaced a few days before his trial in September with a lawyer from the Center for Constitutional Law in New York.

After a three-week trial, a federal jury on Oct. 14 acquitted the two of all charges.

Hatcher and Jacobs had met with the task-force panel once, but it concluded there was no evidence to back up their charges.

On Dec. 6, a special session of the Robeson County grand jury indicted the pair on 14 charges of second-degree kidnapping. Hatcher was arrested at the offices of the Robeson County Defense Committee that day, but Jacobs fled to New York.

Hatcher was freed on $25,000 bond, which was posted by the National Council of Churches, but jumped bail and fled to the Onondaga Reservation near Syracuse, N.Y., where Jacobs was hiding. Hatcher later left New York for Idaho.

Jacobs was arrested Dec. 13 outside the reservation after fleeing from a state trooper and crashing his car into an empty school bus. His $25,000 bond also was posted by the National Council of Churches.

Hatcher failed to make a court appearance in Robeson County earlier this month, saying he feared for his life should he return, and his bond was ordered forfeited. Jacobs' extradition is pending.

The lawsuit says the state charges are just "intimidation and harassment," and asks a federal judge to block their extradition and declare the state charges unconstitutional.

It asks for at least $10,000 in damages from each of the 20 defendants and a judgement "declaring unconstitutional the campaign of intimidation and harassment" it alleges is being conducted in Robeson County.

The lawsuit, which was filed by the defense committee, names Martin, state Attorney General Lacy Thornburg, and several other law enforcement officials as defendants.

Thornburg said the state did not intend to stop pressing for extradition.

"It is clear that this lawsuit represents a thinly disguised effort to prevent the state of North Carolina from pursuing the extradition and criminal prosecution of Mr. Hatcher and Mr. Jacobs for holding 14 innocent people at gunpoint and against their will," Thornburg said.

"The state will do everything within its power to see that these individuals are extradited to North Carolina to stand trial on state charges."

Democratic Club

RALEIGH (AP) — Democrats in the state House of Representatives who believe they have been chained by the election of Joe Mavretic as speaker have formed a "Kennel Club" so they can unleash their opinions.

Rep. Billy Watkins, D-Granville, who was former House Speaker Liston Ramsey's chief lieutenant but has been relegated to the back bench by Mavretic, said the Kennel Club members were "the real Democratic (House) members."

All 54 House Democrats who declined to join the bipartisan coalition that replaced former Speaker Liston Ramsey with Mavretic have been invited to dinner tonight, said Rep. Vernon James, D-Pasquotank. He would not say where.

"I think this is an effort to make sure that we are equal partners," said Rep. Edd Nye, D-Bladen. "It's a cohesive group, a homogenous group that can speak with one voice."

Democrats who plan to attend the dinner said in interviews they did not consider their Kennel Club a rival power base. They said the Democrats would socialize together but were not plotting to overthrow Mavretic or battle his coalition.

Legislature Raises Prison Inmate Limit

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — The General Assembly rapidly enacted legislation intended to stem prison crowding without forcing the release of dangerous inmates, but it was unclear when the new powers would be used.

"I'm not sure that this will do any immediate good," said Sen. Dave Parnell, D-Robeson, after the Senate voted 47-2 to concur in House amendments Tuesday and enact the first statute change this session.

The law increases the number of inmates eligible for prison alternatives, raises the number of inmates that may be held in the system before triggering emergency release mechanisms and gives the commission more time to decide what prisoners to parole.

As of Tuesday, the prison population was three inmates short of the new trigger for emergency release — a trigger 180 inmates higher than the original cap law enacted in 1987.

The law also removes kidnappers, drug traffickers and sex offenders from the pool of inmates the commission may consider for release.

Under the new law, to trigger population reduction efforts, the number of inmates in the system would have to go over 17,640 for 15 straight days — up from the current trigger of 17,460. The Parole Commission also has 90 days to deal with each emergency, up from 60 days.

The new law makes it clear the commission is not required to release any felons unless the population goes over 18,000. The attorney general's office had ruled last year that if there were no eligible misdemeanants during an emergency, felons would have to be released until the population went below the trigger.

Mavretic Backs 'Quality' Roads

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Some eastern North Carolina legislators want a proposed strategic-corridor network of state highways to be built to interstate standards, a move that could double the cost of the roads.

The idea was discussed at a caucus of eastern lawmakers Monday evening, and House Speaker Josephus L. Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, said Tuesday that he supported it.

The new speaker, who lives near Tarboro, said he opposed "tin-cup roads," which fall short of interstate standards, in the network of major arteries envisioned in Gov. Jim Martin's highway plan. The network is designed to bring four-lane roads within 10 miles of more than 90 percent of North Carolina residents.

"I support building the quality of roads that we need across this state, whatever the price, and I believe that the people of this state will pay that price," Mavretic said. "I also think there is a flaw in the logic that says, if you don't have anything, a little bit is better than nothing."

Sen. William D. Goldston Jr., co-chairman of the legislature's Highway Study Commission, said Tuesday that such interstate standards would require wider rights of way, more fencing and cloverleaf interchanges.

Goldston, D-Rockingham, and officials of the state Department of Transportation say such standards would cost the state twice the $4.1 billion estimated for the strategic-corridor system, which the study commission endorses.

February is Black History Month

Who were the "Buffalo Soldiers?"

The Buffalo Soldiers were black calvary units formed in 1866 on orders from General Grant. The Indians called them "buffalo soldiers" as tribute to their fierce prowess in battle and because their hair resembled that of the buffalo.

The "Buffalo Soldiers" are beautifully depicted in full color on canvas by Burl Washington.

Mavretic Says He May Use Deception, But No Lies

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — As he joins the Senate leadership in an initiative to boost the Legislature's image, House Speaker Joe Mavretic says he sometimes might have to mislead reporters to protect "delicate" negotiations.

"If I need to practice deception I would do that," Mavretic, D-Edgecombe, said at a news conference Tuesday. "But just stand up and outright tell you a lie? I'm not going to do that."

Henson Barnes, D-Wayne, president pro tem of the state Senate, told reporters he would neither lie to nor deceive them but might withhold comment on sensitive matters.

Mavretic and Barnes, the Legislature's two highest-ranking members, held the first of what they say will be weekly news conferences to discuss pending issues.

News conferences are nothing new at the General Assembly, but Barnes and Mavretic said their new policy was part of a broader effort to cultivate better media relations and improve the public's understanding and appreciation of what lawmakers do.

Mavretic was one of 20 Democrats who secretly formed a coalition with 45 Republicans to oust former Speaker Liston Ramsey. As word of the impending coup leaked before the Legislature convened Jan. 11, many coalition members disavowed knowledge of it.

After the coup, Mavretic drew media criticism for withholding a document outlining details of the bipartisan accord until he had assigned committee chairmen.

He defended both actions Tuesday, saying temporary secrecy and deceit were necessary.

"We knew that it (the uprising) could not become public knowledge, because if it did the other side would cut us to ribbons, pick us off one by one," Mavretic said. "The pressures were overwhelming."

He said he knew of no instance in which coalition members had lied, but acknowledged they had misled reporters.

"Delicate negotiations have to be kept in private or they're not delicate any more," Mavretic said.

Democrats have lost ground in the Legislature, where Republicans were scarce for most of the 20th Century, since Gov. Jim Martin was elected in 1984 and began clashing with the Democratic majority.

The telegenic and articulate governor, who holds weekly news conferences during General Assembly sessions, has used his easy access to the media to go over legislators' heads to the voters.

The majority party's image also suffered from a perception, nurtured by Republicans, that the General Assembly was controlled by a handful of arrogant, power-hungry Democrats who operated in secret.

Some Democrats blamed that perception for the GOP's pickup of 10 House seats and three Senate seats in the 1988 election, a catalyst of the Mavretic-led uprising.

Aside from establishing their weekly news conferences, Barnes and Mavretic have shown other signs of heightened media awareness:

— They are sprucing up the room in the Legislative Building where news conferences are held, constructing a small stage with carpet and chairs that will make them look more relaxed on television.

— Mavretic has hired Tim Kent, a former Raleigh television reporter, as his administrative assistant. Mavretic said his choice of Kent was a signal of his emphasis on good media relations.

— Journalists from across the state who do not cover the Legislature full-time have been invited to Raleigh for a two-day seminar. A total of 128 reporters, editors and photographers have signed up to spend today and Thursday touring the Legislative Building, attending briefings, and watching committee meetings and floor sessions.

IN THE STATE

Champion Order

RALEIGH (AP) — The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has announced it will accept Tennessee's demands for tough limits on Champion International Corp.'s paper mill in Canton, giving the firm three years to end pollution in the Pigeon River.

But Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., said that Tennessee's hard line might soften with some negotiating.

EPA said Champion will have three years from the issuance of a discharge permit to shut or scale down its Canton mill.

The permit will incorporate terms set by the state of Tennessee for col-or units at the state line downstream from the Canton plant — a standard Champion says it cannot meet without closing the mill or curtailing its operations — the statement said.

RJR Construction

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — Construction of a packaging plant in Rural Hall, a second cigarette plant in Tobaccoville, and a peanut factory in Suffolk, Va., has been delayed by RJR Nabisco Inc. to give time to the company's buyer to review the projects.

Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co. will take control of RJR Nabisco Monday in a $25 billion leveraged buyout, the largest in history.

In the meantime, work on various capital projects will have to wait.

"Everyone is aware that we're going to be under new ownership Feb. 6," said Betsy J. Anese, a spokesman for R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. "We're just delaying these projects to give KKR time to review our plans."

Extension

RALEIGH (AP) — As the deadline passed for the North Carolina Low-Level Radioactive Waste Management Authority to name a contractor for a $40 million disposal site, legislation was introduced to give it more time to strike an agreement.

Under a bill sponsored by Rep. George W. Miller Jr., D-Durham, the authority would have until June 1 to award a contract for construction of a disposal site that is to operate 20 years and be monitored for 100 years.

Tenney I. Deane Jr., the executive director of the Authority, said that more time is needed to negotiate with Chem-Nuclear Services Inc. and Westinghouse Electric Corp., one of which is to have the plant operating by Jan. 1, 1993.

"We're looking at a phase that we really didn't think we would be at, at this time, but it is in the state's best interest that we have some flexibility in these negotiations," Deane said.

Defense Rests

CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. (AP) — Defense lawyers in the general court-martial of Marine charged with dereliction of duty rested their case after reaching an agreement with prosecutors that eliminated the need for testimony from the sergeant's squad leader.

Final arguments were scheduled to begin today in the court-martial of Sgt. Christopher Clyde, who was charged after one of the Marines in his platoon was left behind during a training exercise and died in the Mojave Desert.

The defense rested its case Tuesday after the defense and prosecution reached an agreement stipulating information that would have been provided in testimony from Sgt. Thomas B. Turnell, who also faces a court-martial in the case.

The agreement eliminated the need for Turnell to testify. The defense had sought a grant of immunity to get Turnell to testify in information that the defense says supports Clyde's case. The prosecution opposed the motion for immunity.

Teacher Honored

WASHINGTON (AP) — Esther M. Dunnegan of Morrisville, N.C., has been selected as the North Carolina NEH-Reader's Digest Teacher-Scholar for 1989, the National Endowment for the Humanities announced Tuesday.

NEH selected 53 teachers — one from each state, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands — to undertake an academic year of independent study on topics in history, literature, foreign language or other humanities disciplines.

Each award provides a stipend up to $27,500 to replace the teacher's annual salary or to supplement sabbatical pay up to the amount of the academic year salary.

Beginning in the fall, Ms. Dunnegan, a social studies teacher for the past 11 years at Athens Drive High School in Raleigh, will use the award to study Islam and its influence on the cultures of five modern nations — Nigeria, Pakistan, Malaysia, Trinidad and Egypt.

Damages

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — A Rowland woman whose husband and daughter were killed in a 1985 boating accident will receive more than $450,000 in damages from a Clarksville, Va., construction company, a U.S. District Court jury in Fayetteville has ruled.

Helen Pate filed suit in August 1987 against J. Lawson Jones Construction Co. for personal injuries she received and for the wrongful death of her 16-year-old daughter, Frances Marie Pate. A case involving the death of her husband, Charles Pate, was settled out of court for an undisclosed sum.

The complaint charged that the construction company, which was building a replacement bridge across the Intracoastal Waterway at Ocean Isle Beach, negligently left a power cable hanging underneath the bridge.

Quayle Starts Latin America Tour

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Vice President Dan Quayle embarked on the Bush administration's first overseas diplomatic trip today, a three-day goodwill visit to Latin America.

Senior administration officials said Quayle is not expected to undertake any policy initiatives on major issues such as Latin American debt or the conflict in Nicaragua.

The officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Quayle will be in a "listening mode" during his meetings with several heads of state during the inauguration of Venezuela's new president, Carlos Andres Perez.

Today, Quayle's itinerary called for an afternoon arrival in Caracas, meetings with two unspecified heads of state, a U.S. Embassy reception hosted by Ambassador Otto Reich, and a reception at the presidential palace.

The inauguration, to be attended by some two dozen heads of state, is scheduled for Thursday morning.

Quayle will stop in El Salvador on his way home Friday. During meetings with political, military and labor leaders there he will stress the need to curtail human rights violations in the Central American country, officials said.

He will meet with outgoing president Jose Napoleon Duarte of the Christian Democratic Party and with representatives of right-wing factions, but not with anyone from the leftist party battling for power in the March 19 election, U.S. officials said.

One official said it would be awkward for Quayle to meet with leftist presidential candidate Guillermo Ungo since he is a civilian ally of rebels fighting to overthrow the U.S.-backed government.

The vice president will meet with representatives of the rightist Nationalist Republican Alliance, or ARENA, whose candidate Alfredo Cristiani has led Christian Democrat Fidel Chavez Mena in opinion polls, with Ungo trailing.

No official list of Quayle's meetings has been released.

But a State Department official involved in planning the trip said he is scheduled to meet with the presidents of Spain, Portugal, Brazil, Colombia and Honduras. He will also meet with a group of Caribbean leaders.

One of the topics for those meetings will be the status of the U.S.-backed Contra rebels battling the leftist government of Nicaragua.

In El Salvador, an administration official said, Quayle intends to have "very straightforward" conversations emphasizing that the administration is serious about adherence to human rights.

Officials have expressed concern that continued human rights problems will make it difficult for the administration to obtain further U.S. aid for El Salvador from Congress.

Crash By Tanker Kills 19 Airmen

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ABILENE, Texas — A military refueling jet that crashed on takeoff, killing all 19 aboard, appeared to veer away from a cluster of houses before tipping onto the ground and exploding in a mushroom-shaped fireball, witnesses said.

The flight manifest showed that 17 of the passengers were from Sawyer and the two others boarded at Dyess, said Master Sgt. Al Doster, another Dyess spokesman. In addition to seven crew members, four passengers were on active duty in the military, four were retired military and among the four dependents was one child, Ames said.

Names were withheld pending notification of relatives.

Doster said it was not uncommon for dependents to fly "space available" aboard a military flight.

But Ames said, "If they can get there by commercial jet ... there are certain regulations that prohibit civilians from flying military aircraft. There are certain exceptions to that rule."

"It couldn't have been more than 50 or 60 feet off the ground," said Skeet Jackson, who witnessed Tuesday's crash of the Hawaii-bound KC-135A from his back yard. "That left wing hit the ground and (crashed) just like these pictures of atomic bombs you've seen."

Officials at Dyess Air Force Base outside Abilene and at K.I. Sawyer Air Force Base near Marquette, Mich., where the flight originated, said the passengers included spouses of military members, retired military members and one child.

Members of the Air Force's Accident Investigation Board were expected to arrive at Dyess today. However, their investigation could be hampered by the fact that no flight data recorder was aboard the modified Boeing 707, said 1st Lt. John Ames, deputy chief of public affairs at Dyess. Ames said he didn't know if a cockpit voice recorder was aboard.

The tanker was scheduled to refuel F-16s in the air as part of a training mission before flying nonstop to Hawaii, the spokesman said.

Ames said it was unclear how much fuel the plane was carrying, but added it was enough to complete the mission and make the eight-hour flight to Hawaii.

The Board of Directors of Home Federal Savings & Loan would like to take this opportunity to thank the members of the Association, including depositors and borrowers, for another successful year. During 1988, the Association reached another important milestone by increasing assets to over $100 million. Net worth reserves were also increased to $5 million or 5.4% of deposits. This represents substantially more than the $3.2 million minimum required reserves for a savings institution of our size by the Federal Home Loan Bank. The board and management of Home Federal will continue to promote homeownership and thrift as its original charter set out in 1906.

GOP Fined In '86 Event

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A Republican Party committee will pay a $20,000 fine for its handling of a 1986 fund-raising campaign for a dozen Senate candidates to which then-Vice President Bush lent his support, the Federal Election Commission said today.

The commission found that the National Republican Senatorial Committee violated federal election law because it did not charge the candidates for the cost of the fund-raising effort.

However, the six-member commission deadlocked over a related question of whether the senatorial committee broke the law by the way it funneled more than $2.7 million in campaign contributions to the 12 candidates.

Republican Senate candidates in Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Missouri, Nevada, North Carolina, South Dakota and Vermont were on the receiving end of the funnel.

The commission's decision, which was reached last year but was not released until today, deals with the practice of "bundling," a tactic used by political committees to gather funds from individual contributors and then channel the money to a particular candidate.

The practice allows organizations to bypass provisions in the law setting limits on how much money they can give to a candidate. Under the law, the National Republican Senatorial Committee and the Republican National Committee can give no more than a total of $17,500 to a Senate candidate.

The elections laws permit political organizations to act as a conduit for contributions to candidates as long as the organization does not try to talk a contributor into giving money to a particular candidate.

FAA Orders Jet Checks

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — More than 700 Boeing jetliners operated by every major U.S. airline must undergo a comprehensive inspection for cross-wiring and cross-plumbing in their safety systems, after problems were discovered in 17 aircraft.

The Federal Aviation Administration, in issuing the "airworthiness directive" late Tuesday, also noted that Boeing is studying its design, production procedures and testing of airliner emergency systems to see if changes are needed.

The newly ordered tests are not expected to disrupt airline schedules and can be completed anytime over the next 3½ weeks while the airlines are undergoing routine maintenance.

The order affects 741 newer jetliners flown by U.S. carriers. It applies to all Boeing 737s, 747s, 757s and 767s built after Dec. 31, 1980. Most foreign airliners using the planes also are expected to comply, although the FAA has no jurisdiction over them.

Boat Sinks

FORT MACON, N.C. (AP) — An 80-foot pleasure boat sank in the Atlantic 10 miles south of Diamond Shoal Light after the U.S. Coast Guard worked nearly 24 hours to salvage the vessel, according to a Coast Guard spokesman.

Ensign Gary Bracken of the Fort Macon Coast Guard station said the pleasure boat, the Pandora, was being towed by the the Coast Guard cutter Point Martin. But the Pandora, which is owned and operated by Ian Arnott of Washington, D.C., began taking on water faster than it could be pumped out.

The Pandora reported taking on water around 1 a.m. Monday morning and requested Coast Guard assistance. The boat was being towed back to shore about 10 a.m. when the pumps failed and the water level began rising rapidly.

Arnott will determine later if salvage operations should be conducted.

The Shirley Plantation, dating to 1613 is the oldest of the Charles City County plantations along the James River

LAT-WP News Service

Virginia Aristocrats Snub Idea Of Subdivision Near Plantations

By Eugene L. Meyer
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

CHARLES CITY COUNTY, Va. — This is a county named for a city that does not exist.

In fact, this county along the James River also has no town, no bank, no video store or movie theater, no pharmacy, no liquor store, no newspaper, no shopping center, no fast food restaurant, no 7-Eleven, no library, no jail, no motel, no red light and no chamber of commerce.

Nor has there been a homicide here since 1983.

In this county only 30 miles from Richmond but seemingly lost in time, there are also no apartments, town houses or suburban subdivisions.

What Charles City County, organized in 1634 and named for Charles I of England, does have in its 201 mostly forested square miles are 7,000 people, 80 percent of them nonwhite, and a row of riverfront plantations inhabited largely by descendants of the early white planters.

And, if things go as planned, the county's first full-scale subdivision will soon sprout along historic Rte. 5, the scenic John Tyler Memorial Highway that courses down the peninsula toward Williamsburg and Jamestown.

Now, 58 houses on lots averaging 1½ acres may not sound like much to most city dwellers, but to many of the riverfront people here — a Who's Who of southern aristocracy — it's the worst thing to happen since the Union Army invaded in 1862.

"What scares us is growing... out of control," said Lisa Ruffin Harrison, mistress of her family's Evelynton Plantation whose Confederate ancestor, Edmund Ruffin, fired the first shot at Fort Sumter.

The Burkeshire subdivision, she said, "looks very urban in nature on a rural road," despite the developer's promise to hide the houses behind a buffer of trees. "Your view west will be nothing but a sea of houses," she said.

Harrison and others say they're all for more housing in the county — elsewhere.

"Instant suburbia" is how Frederick S. Fisher, owner of Westover Plantation, described the subdivision. Other property owners call it a "high-density subdivision" that "offers nothing good for the county."

But if the landed gentry feels vulnerable to a pincer movement from the expanding areas of Williamsburg to the east and Richmond to the west, most of the residents here either are apathetic about the new houses or want more.

"Our kids graduate high school, they go straight to Richmond or Williamsburg for an apartment because nobody will sell them any land," said Darlene Smith, a dispatcher in the sheriff's office.

Houses and land are passed down through the generations, and many younger people go elsewhere not only to live but also to work.

About 80 percent of the work force commutes to jobs outside the county.

"Charles City County would make 'The Color Purple' look pink," or mild by comparison, said Barbara Lewis, who left Charles City to attend Norfolk State College in 1967 and now lives in Alexandria, Va. "There was absolutely zero opportunity as far as jobs."

Even today, the county's largest employer is the school system, with 184 on its payroll. The largest private company, which makes cabinets, employs 100; the county government, 79. The plantations employ an estimated 50 people full time as guides, groundskeepers and gift shop workers.

"It's a whole different world here," said David L. Kleppinger, director of the county's Department of Economic Development and a native of New Jersey.

"You can go back almost 300 years, there's not been too much change physically," said Richard Bowman, the first black person to head the county Board of Supervisors and a man who has traced his roots here to 1786. The subdivision, he noted with some detachment, "has caused some concern among the landed gentry who've so long occupied that sacred area."

Traditionally agrarian, Charles City County dates its first plantation, Shirley, back to 1613. The first Thanksgiving was celebrated in 1619 at Berkeley Plantation. The county boasts two presidents, William Henry Harrison and John Tyler, one signer of the Declaration of Independence and three governors. Two of Tyler's grandsons still live here.

After the Civil War, blacks held some elected positions in the county until a state convention in 1901 imposed a poll tax, effectively disenfranchising nonwhites.

Eventually, the first black supervisor was elected, in 1947, but it wasn't until 1972 that blacks gained a majority on the three-member county board. With Bowman's retirement in 1987, the board reverted to a white majority.

School integration also came late to the county, with the consolidation in 1969 of separate white, black and Indian schools. With the white gentry and a few middle-class blacks sending their children to private schools outside the county, public school enrollment has been declining in recent years, to a current low of 1,125, and the school buildings have deteriorated.

To build new schools, county officials cut a deal recently with a Pittsburgh company to operate a regional landfill in Charles City in return for revenue of $2.5 million a year. In November, residents voted by a 6-to-1 ratio to float a $10 million school bond issue, to be repaid with landfill revenue.

Good schools, officials say, are the key to attracting the kind of industry and jobs that will make residents of new subdivisions such as Burkeshire more than commuters, and Charles City more than a bedroom community.

Despite the long list of things their county lacks, residents are choosy about change. They overwhelmingly opposed a new state prison here. They also objected to a federally subsidized 40-unit apartment building proposed for a site near the courthouse, in use since 1730.

On the other hand, they voted in liquor by the drink, a change sought by two young men, one a Ruffin, for their new Indian Fields Tavern, one of only two restaurants in the county.

Four bed-and-breakfast establishments, including two in plantation houses, are other recent indicators of a county slowly yielding to change. In at least one case, it was also a way for George and Ridgely Copland, owners of North Bend, to finance repairs on his ancestral home.

"We're right rural, but that's gonna change," said George Copland, a farmer who is the great-great-grandson of Edmund Ruffin and the great-great-grandnephew of William Henry Harrison.

His Flowing Penmanship Filled A Page In History

VICTORIA MAGAZINE

Platt Rogers Spencer wrote a page of American history in the last century, and he did it with his penmanship. Spencer was the model for the master penmen of the country, and his flowing script ushered in the golden age of American penmanship.

American business writing changed after the turn of the century with the advent of the typewriter and the elegant art of Spencerian script became almost extinct.

It is being revived by Michael Sull, an avid amateur calligrapher who turned his hobby into a profession and this month is publishing a biography of Spencer that is also a history of his script.

Spencer was born in 1800 and grew up on New York's Lake Erie and in frontier Ohio. His first penny, the story goes, went to buy a sheet of paper, procured by a friendly lumberman who carried it rolled up in his shirt from a market 20 miles distant.

In the absence of paper, Spencer drew his letters on bark, leather, the sandy banks of brooks and in the snow.

In the mid 1800s, Spencer walked 15 miles to enter a handwriting contest, which he won. The judges were seeking a style to teach schoolchildren, and his script was the "golden mean between the labored fullness of the round hand and the rigid sharpness of the angular."

Spencer, a self-styled poet, saw his penmanship in more romantic terms, calling it "the rolling wave, the dancing stream" of his boyhood landscape that he had hoped to capture in the undulating lines of his script.

Quick, Easy Afghan Features Aran Look

Everyone loves the Aran look, with its warm, inviting texture and fascinating patterns. Now, for everyone who loves to crochet, this popular look can be achieved in a quick and easy afghan.

Two strands of worsted-weight yarn and a size P crochet hook guarantee a fast finish, with a completed size of 44 inches by 62 inches. Worked in one piece, this cozy chill-chaser is finished off with a decorative fringe.

To obtain directions for making the Aran Crochet Afghan, send your request for Leaflet No. Z-012989 with $2 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler Crafts, The Daily Reflector, P.O. Box 419148, Kansas City, Mo. 64141.

Or you may order Kit No. C-012989 by send a check or money order for $30.95 to Pat Trexler Crafts at the same address. The kit price includes shipping charges, full instructions and acrylic yarn in off-white.

If you work chain stitches, single crochet and double crochet, there is little else you need to know to complete the afghan featured today. Try the pattern stitch for yourself. In the directions that follow, an asterisk (*) indicates that a full explanation of the step following it is described later in the column.

To begin the Aran crochet pattern, chain an uneven number of chain stitches. For the sample swatch, I recommend as chain of at least 21 stitches.

Row 1 (right side): Single crochet in the second chain from the hook and in each remaining chain across, turn.

Row 2 (ridge row): Chain 1; Step 1, (*) insert hook horizontally from front around post and draw a loop through; Step 2, yarnover and draw through 2 loops on hook, turn. Repeat Steps 1 and 2 across to end of row, turn.

Row 3: Chain 3 (counting as 1 double crochet); skip the first stitch and then double crochet in each remaining stitch across row, turn.

Rows 4 and 5: Chain 1; Step 1, skip 1 stitch; Step 2, work a single crochet and a (*) cluster all in the next stitch. Repeat Steps 1 and 2 across to last stitch and work a double crochet in the last stitch, turn.

Row 9: Chain 1, single crochet in first stitch; Step 1, draw up a loop in the same place where last stitch was worked; Step 2, draw up a loop in the next stitch, yarnover and draw hook through all 3 loops on hook. Repeat Steps 1 and 2 across to end of row, turn.

Rows 10 through 15: Repeat Row 9. Repeat Rows 2 through 15 for the pattern.

In Row 2, you are told to insert your hook horizontally around the "post." The post is the upright, vertical bar of any crochet stitch. You would normally insert your hook under the top strands above the post. In this case, just insert the hook from the right side, pass it under the post and let it emerge on the left side of the post. Complete as a single crochet. This is called a "post single crochet."

For the "cluster" called for on Rows 4 and 5, work as follows: Step 1, yarnover (wrap yarn around hook) and draw up a loop 3 times in same stitch; Step 2, yarnover and draw hook through 6 loops; Step 3, yarnover and through remaining 2 loops.

Afghan a breeze for those who like to crochet

You can use any yarn and hook you have on hand to work this sample swatch, but it will probably not have the same depth of texture as you will see on your afghan, when you will be using double strands of yarn and a large hook. I think it will be easier for you to learn, however, with a single strand and a smaller hook.

How To Give And Not Get Taken

Dear Abby: I know what I want for Christmas next year: a bigger mailbox. Never have I received so many begging letters. I would also like to know if all these "causes" are on the up and up. How does one know? I am familiar with the usual ones for cancer, diabetes, kidney, heart and lung, but now we have so many new causes — help the starving children in Asia and Africa, for instance. There also are needy nuns, homeless people sleeping on our streets, and catastrophes in other parts of the world, such as the earthquake in Armenia. I know the need is legitimate, but how much of my dollar will actually go to help the victims? And how much will be spent on office expenses and advertising to raise money? — Blitized In Boston

Dear Blitized: Before you send any money anywhere, if your only contact with the charity has been through a telephone call, a solicitor on the street, or a radio or TV appeal, ask for information in writing.

Look for: A clear statement of the organization's purpose, what it does and for whom; an audited financial report that shows how much was spent on each of the organization's main activities, plus management and fund-raising; a list of board members or trustees, preferably with some identifying information about each. (All this information should be in the organization's annual report.)

When you give, if possible, make your gift by check or money order. This will help both you and the charity to maintain an accurate record of your gift. Be sure to get a receipt for cash and do not give your credit card number to a solicitor whom you do not know.

Up to three reports on individual agencies are available free on request by writing to: National Charities Information Bureau, 19 Union Square West, New York, N.Y. 10003-3395. This is a non-profit organization, so please enclose a long (business-size), self-addressed stamped envelope.

Dear Abby: I have another point of view concerning whether or not to tell a person that he or she has a terminal illness. I have been an ambulance operator for 14 years and have transported hundreds of patients to clinics for their appointments.

Quite often I have been met at the door by family members who will confide that the patient has a terminal illness, then they instruct me to please not mention it because they do not want the patient to know.

Then when the patient and I are alone for a few minutes, the patient will say, "Please don't tell my family that I know I have a terminal illness." — Gerald E. Childs, Toronto

Dear Gerald: What a sad and useless game that is. I'm sure that many who read this will have played that game. I know; my sisters' and I have.

Economic Forecast Increases

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The government's chief economic forecasting gauge rose a healthy 0.6 percent in December after having fallen during the previous month, the Commerce Department said today.

The December jump in the Index of Leading Economic Indicators, which is designed to predict economic activity six to nine months in the future, followed a 0.2 percent decrease in November and a 0.5 percent rise in October.

The index has alternated between dips and gains for the past nine months, which many economists believe is a signal the economy is headed for a slowdown in growth that would help keep inflation in check.

The economy grew a robust 3.8 percent in 1988, but the slowest quarterly performance in two years was recorded during the October-December period, when the increase in the gross national product was held to an annual rate of 2 percent.

Although President Bush plans to adopt his predecessor's forecast that the economy will grow at a 3.2 percent rate in 1989, many private economists believe the Reagan administration's predictions for growth, interest rates and inflation were too optimistic.

Six of the nine available components of the economic index contributed to December's increase, while two detracted from it.

Veterans Discuss Experiences

least 10 people in the lives of each of them. The same book says that the support and love of family members and friends has contributed the most to the recovery of those experiencing varying degrees of dysfunction as a result of the war.

For many years, Mrs. Furbush said, her husband shared only the amusing things he experienced in Vietnam. During an earlier session of the conference Tuesday, she heard, for the first time, his moving story of a painful experience.

"Al is my best friend and has been since we were 11," Mrs. Furbush said. "We shared everything before he went to Vietnam. Yet when he came home, he wouldn't share much at all about a whole year of his life. I'm still learning things by overhearing."

All of the veterans agreed that it was hard to talk to anyone about the painful times, and especially hard to talk to people they love most. Mrs. Stout said most veterans report that their early attempts to answer their families' questions usually were so obviously difficult that families stopped asking.

Hoffman told of his distress answering his children's questions when they innocently inquired about whether he had ever killed anyone.

"It's hard," he said, "to let your children, who think you're this pillar of strength — and you want them to think that — see the pain that associations with Vietnam bring up."

He said he feels that he and his wife Barbara have made virtually every post-war decision of their married life out of the experience of Vietnam. For instance, he said, he would never take a job that would keep him away from home because both of them are intent on never being apart over a night or two.

Chester Holmes said he and his son have talked about war experiences, at times until the sun came up. He added that he feels extremely close to Chet because of these times — yet both have found it hard, he said, to share with others.

Holmes said it was much harder coming home from Vietnam than it was from previous wars. And he felt that he had it easier than young veterans. Many, he said, were thrust directly back into their communities, sometimes within 24 hours after their war zone duty had ended. A career military man, he reported to a military base after a short leave, and was among people who could understand his experience.

All of the veterans said that their healing has been helped by taking part in Vietnam Veterans of America. They said they are beginning to feel more able to open up emotionally with their loved ones and are happier because of this.

Jump Injuries

FAYETTEVILLE (AP) — About a dozen soldiers from Fort Bragg's 82nd Airborne Division suffered minor injuries Tuesday as they parachuted into Honduras for a training exercise with Honduran soldiers, division officials said.

Injuries consisted of sprained ankles and twisted knees, Phillips said.

Gorbachev's Pay

bles a month" is at least seven times the average Soviet salary. In a society where times are hard, even slight differences in living standards spark bonfires of envy. What is more, unlike ordinary Soviet citizens, the Gorbachevs do not have to stand in line for goods that are scarce.

Economists here say that 20 percent of the population live under a poverty line of 254 rubles a month for an urban family of four. A Soviet worker from Kronstadt, I. A. Savochkin, wrote this week to the newspaper Economicheskaya Gazeta saying that he was earning just 64 kopecks ($1) an hour.

Gorbachev's perks of office are far more considerable than his straight pay. They include an apartment in Moscow, a house in the woods outside the city and a vacation place in the Crimea. But Gorbachev, despite his own penchant for the occasional tailor-made, English suit or raffish felt fedora, is decidedly not a member of the Soviet millionaires' club.

In an article published last year in the labor newspaper Trud, a leading economist said that of the "several thousand" millionaires in the Soviet Union, almost all were either artists and writers, who earn foreign royalties, or mobsters and black marketeers.

Korotich did not say where he got his information on Gorbachev's finances, though he said he is in favor of the Soviet press publishing more information about the personal backgrounds and characteristics of Kremlin leaders and putting "an end to rumors."

He said his magazine, one of the flagships of Gorbachev's campaign for openness in the media, has applied for personal interviews with members of the leadership. But so far the requests have been ignored.

"It's an irony that in your country, politicians give many interviews before their elections. But (here) they are all telling me that they don't want to talk until after the elections" on March 26, Korotich said.

In order to learn about the personal lives of their leaders and battles at the top levels of government, millions of Soviet people still turn to foreign radio signals beamed into the country. But, Korotich said, "We cannot depend on Western voices for everything."

Korotich, for his part, said his own salary was 450 rubles.

Pay Plan Debated

Legislature in the next few days to correct what he called "one of the most serious morale problems we've seen in this state."

"Educators ought not to be the people walking in the streets," Etheridge said, speaking to superintendents and N.C. Board of Education members Tuesday at a conference in Charlotte. "It's up to us to provide the leadership from within."

His plan would call for a pay stepup this year, Etheridge said.

Etheridge said a new salary schedule, which could cost at least $200 million, would pay teachers based on their years of experience. Experience pay steps have not been funded since 1982. He also said a new schedule would give teachers bigger pay increments as they gain experience.

He said he would begin work on the plan next week, in conjunction with The Public School Forum of North Carolina, the N.C. Association of Educators and the N.C. Board of Education. Each is proposing a new pay schedule.

In his budget proposal, Martin called for delaying across-the-board pay increases until April 1990. He did not address the experience steps on the pay plan.

Etheridge called the current schedule "a crazy patchwork. ... It's a system intelligent people don't understand."

In theory, the current schedule allows for year-to-year seniority pay raises of almost 5 percent. But, because experience steps have not been funded, Etheridge said, "bunching occurs all up and down the schedule." That means a new teacher and a teacher with four years' experience are paid the same salary.

Etheridge strongly opposed cutting the BEP to pay for teacher salaries.

But he said salaries increases for all teachers should take priority over career development, a performance-based merit pay plan. During the first several years of the plan, money allocated for career development would be spent on administrative start-up costs and not on teacher salaries.

"I think we have to talk about something now," Etheridge said. "You've got to talk about a salary increase for people in the field."

He added he would support a tax increase to pay for the increases. "I would not shirk my responsibility if that were needed to get the job done," he said.

Survey Shows Support For Vote

his survey to prove he is not a dictator preventing a vote, but a leader who is following the private wishes of members.

While House members were sending their survey answers to Wright, who promised to follow their wishes, opponents of the raise were to testify today before the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee.

Tuesday, supporters of the pay plan urged that the increase at least be approved for judges and top federal executives, even if lawmakers are unwilling to raise their own salary.

The raise will become law a week from today unless both houses vote to stop it. Senate Majority Leader George J. Mitchell, D-Maine, said senators will vote Thursday or Friday, and an Associated Press Survey indicates at least 88 of them will oppose the raise.

Should the raise become law, the House and Senate would each vote immediately afterward on measures to bar outside income, including speaking fees, according to congressional leaders.

While opponents said they would try to have Congress rescind any raise that became law, they would have a rough time convincing colleagues to take such action once the speaking fees, known as honoraria, are banned. Lawmakers would be reluctant to accept the net loss of income if their raise and honoraria were taken away.

House Democratic leadership sources, speaking only on condition they not be named, said Wright acted on his own to order the survey, with Majority Leader Thomas Foley, D-Wash., and Majority Whip Tony Coelho, D-Calif., apparently cool to the idea.

ECU Lining Up In-State Recruits Lewis Comes Through On In-State Recruiting Pledge

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Despite a late start, East Carolina head football coach Bill Lewis has followed through on a campaign promise to recruit heavily in North Carolina.

Since taking over for Art Baker on Dec. 3, Lewis and his staff have been on a whirlwind tour across North Carolina trying to line up as many prospects as possible for the national signing date Feb. 8.

The competition for prep talent in North Carolina is intense. In state alone, there are four other Division I-A schools, as well as a strong I-AA program at Appalachian State. Clemson and South Carolina also recruit extensively in North Carolina.

Lewis and his staff clearly had their work cut out for them, but the new coach said he was going to make in-state recruiting a top priority.

So far, ECU has received as many as 17 verbal commitments, mostly from North Carolina players.

In the greater Fayetteville area alone, ECU assistant Tim Kelly has lined up three highly touted players in tight end Rodney Jones of Fayetteville Byrd, center Daryl Taylor of Westover High School and Red Springs fullback Victor McBryde.

Soon after being named coach Lewis hit the recruiting trail, along with holdover assistants Donnie Thompson and ECU Director of Administrative Services Carlester Crumpler. Kelly, a native of New Bern who also spent five seasons at Byrd High School as an assistant coach, was one of the first additions to the new staff.

"Tim Kelly knew this area has good ballplayers when he came down the very first time," said Westover coach Reggie Pinkney, a former ECU player who went on to play for the Baltimore Colts.

"Obviously the late start (and selling the program with the dismissal of the (two) coaches within the last four or five years is tough. When you have a big changeover, you have to sell the program.

"I told all the coaches that come through here this is probably the toughest part, trying to sell a program to young players who are trying to make a decision."

Byrd coach Bob Paroli said Lewis did one thing in particular that impressed him.

"They were very complimentary toward Coach Baker," he said. "I had the privilege and opportunity of having visited in the homes that East Carolina recruited in."

"In both conversations, there was only admiration for coach Baker. They said they planned to just take it one step further. They kind of built on what Coach Baker started."

Signing Jones was a breakthrough for the Pirates. North Carolina State, Clemson and North Carolina had been considered the front runners.

"When Rodney went down there he canceled his trips to Carolina and Clemson," Paroli said. "He committed while he was down there."

"Coach Lewis was very impressive. Plus, ECU is a class institution. My son graduated from there. They don't have to take a back seat to anybody academically. You have every offering that anybody could want."

Closer to home, things went even better for the Pirates.

During the last two years, Rose High School has claimed two straight Big East titles, both times going undefeated during the regular season. A large part of that success could be attributed to the play of tight end/defensive end Carlester Crumpler and tailback Tim Moore, both All-State choices this past season.

Both had been recruited hard by Baker's staff as well as a number of other schools. South Carolina had shown a good deal of interest in Moore, while N.C. State was pursuing Crumpler. Both committed to the Pirates over a week ago.

"As soon as Coach Lewis came into town, he made sure they kept in contact with our recruits," Rose coach Chip Williams said. "I dare say that if it wasn't the same day it was the day after (he was named)."

Thompson, who was a defensive line coach under Baker and has been moved to linebacker coach by Lewis, maintained contact with the Rose players throughout the transition between coaching staffs.

"It probably gave them an in," Williams said. "Coach Thompson is a good recruiter. He had an advantage too. They couldn't see any games, but his son was playing so he got to see (most of) them."

Crumpler, Moore and Thompson join former prep teammates Dave Daniels and Adrian Barnhill at ECU. Daniels was a backup fullback who saw considerable playing time as a freshman, both in the backfield and on special teams. Barnhill was a second-team defensive tackle as a freshman but figures to be moved back to fullback this spring.

"The success they had at East Carolina had a lot to do with our guys (signing)," Williams added.

After a strong junior year playing tackle for Westover, Taylor received a good deal of attention over the summer and was being heavily recruited by Clemson, but their interest cooled during Taylor's senior year.

"I don't think he had the kind of year people projected," Pinkney said. "But a big part of recruiting is looking at that kid on video and seeing the small things. I think he (Kelly) is a good coach. He saw that. When you get in college ranks, you should have a good football mind, be able to see the little things that the public doesn't see. A coach should see that."

Fayetteville has long been a recruiting hot spot and ECU has a number of players currently on its roster from that area. Paroli said ECU had traditionally recruited well in this area under (former ECU assistant) Don Powers, and Kelly is continuing that.

"He's got three commitments from this area," he said. "I told them they did a great job coming as late as they did."

"Coach Bill Lewis is a very class person. Not that Coach Baker wasn't, but he has come in with an altogether different philosophy. The whole outlook is all toward the program, the new building, the renovations of the dorms, the change in attitude by the administration and the people themselves."

With most coaching changes, there is usually a swell of enthusiasm during the first recruiting season and Lewis seems to have picked up on that.

"I think that first of all, they started late but East Carolina has a lot to offer," said Lee County coach John Green. "Any time a new staff comes in, there is a lot of excitement."

That excitement landed ECU two players with Lee County ties in brothers Jeff and Willie Cooke, a pair of linebackers from Sanford. Jeff is a senior at Lee County while Willie is a two-year starter at Chowan.

"As a high school coach, you're always impressed with the enthusiasm coaches have," Green said. "You hate negativism. They were very enthusiastic and very positive. That is enough to sell anybody."

Jeff Cooke also received interest from N.C. State, South Carolina, North Carolina A&T and Appalachian State.

"Jeff just sort of hit it right off with them," Green said. "He just sort of liked it. One of the things that the East Carolina coaches realize is there are two ways to think about it."

Words Right But Something Wrong

By Hal Bock
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

There was something not quite right about the interview, something that just didn't fit, like a piece of a jigsaw puzzle that you simply can't squeeze into the last available space.

It wasn't the voice. It sounded clear, sincere, honest. It wasn't the words. They were the right words.

And yet, something was wrong. Very wrong.

Once, the voice and words belonged to Mitchell Wiggins of the Houston Rockets, who was exiled to the Continental Basketball Association two years ago last month after the NBA caught him putting strange stuff up his nose.

Wiggins played his high school basketball at North Lenoir High School.

Speaking from some roadside motel in Mississippi, a bus stop in a bus league, Wiggins insisted he now was clean. There was no question about it, Wiggins promised. He would be back in the NBA before we knew it. He would challenge the two-year ban and apply for an early return. There was no reason for him to stay out that long. He had learned his lesson. No more junk for him.

It sounded good. It turned out to be so good.

Ten months after bailing out of the NBA, Mitchell Wiggins failed another drug test, thus succeeding in getting himself suspended again, this time by the second-chance league.

That cemented the full two-year NBA ban for Wiggins, just in case his previous transgression had not. He now has applied for reinstatement and the league's official position is that the application is under review.

In the wake of the Wiggins affair, it might be wise to approach an interview with Stanley Wilson a bit warily.

Wilson is the NFL's world champion drug recidivist, with three suspensions and five rehabilitations behind him. Unlike Wiggins, Wilson had landed squarely on his feet in, of all places, that pot of jam called the Super Bowl. There the Cincinnati Bengals running back was surrounded by 2,000 or so writers and broadcasters. What a wonderful spot for him to tell his story.

Oh, sure, Stanley Wilson would talk. He would be only too happy to take care of his media obligations, now an accepted part of the Super Bowl regimen.

Yeah, sure, he'd talk to you about drugs because, hey, he's been there. He could tell you what it was like to feel that craving for cocaine. He could explain the spiral from promising running back to repeat drug user, his career hanging by the thinnest thread.

The counselors encourage addicts to talk about their problems and Wilson said all the right things, the same things he'd heard in each of his various rehabilitations from cocaine addiction, the same kinds of things Mitchell Wiggins said.

He talked about "slow suicide," a catchy, alliterative phrase that sounded so good.

He talked about how drugs had destroyed his marriage, about how it had hurt people close to him, about how he had used his experience to turn his 6-year-old son away from the garbage.

He talked about taking each day as it comes, about how ex-teammate Gary Burley had him involved in a new business publication that would be launched this summer, about how he would keep busy with that project, avoid the idle hours that cause so much trouble for addicts.

It all sounded so good, and yet, like with Mitchell Wiggins, it wasn't quite right.

Two days after the interview, on the eve of the biggest game of his life, while his team met for the last time to refine the game plan, Stanley Wilson went back to drugs.

After a week of talking about its pitfalls, about how it had robbed him of two playing seasons, cost him thousands of dollars, his wife and nearly his life, the lure became too much to ignore and Stanley Wilson resumed his affair with cocaine.

And if you believed he was clean, you felt cheated, violated, much the way you did when Mitchell Wiggins failed that CBA drug test.

Perhaps the words once written by Simon and Garfunkel sum it up best. "Hello darkness, my old friend."

Chargers Roll Past Aycock, 74-50

Peterson, Dixon Lead Ayden-Grifton In Bouncing Back After Defeat

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

LITTLEFIELD — Luckily for Ayden-Grifton, the schedule is sometimes kind.

The Chargers, fresh off a heart-breaking loss Friday to Eastern Plains Conference-leading Farmville Central, bounced back with a 74-50 rout over C.B. Aycock Tuesday.

The win ups Ayden-Grifton's record to 12-4 overall and 5-1 in the league, while the Falcons slip to 7-10 and 1-5.

"It was a good game for us to play after an emotional game like we had Friday night," Ayden-Grifton coach Bob Murphrey said. "I think it is good to have an easy game after a tough loss."

And it was easy for the Chargers, right from the start.

Ayden-Grifton broke out to a 24-9 lead by the end of the first period as C.B. Aycock connected on only one field goal in the period.

After a 2-2 tie in the opening minute, David Dixon buried a 3-pointer for the Chargers upping the lead to 5-2 with 6:31 left in the first.

Ronnell Peterson, who led all scorers with 21 points, then slammed a score home after picking off an errant pass for a 7-2 Ayden-Grifton lead.

The Chargers built the lead to 10, 17-7 at the 2:30 mark of the quarter when Peterson scored on a layup after an assist from James Woodard, who finished with 13 points.

After C.B. Aycock, who scored his first seven points at the free throw line, finally nailed a field goal, the Chargers ran off the final seven points of the period.

Peterson sandwiched five points around a score from Leon Dixon, who finished with 17 points.

"We came in without our number one point guard (Kelvin Lewis)," C.B. Aycock coach Randy Bledsoe said. "Mike (Lane) did a good job filling in for him, but it was tough on him against Ayden's tough denying defense."

"When you play Ayden-Grifton, you can always expect to see great defense and great passing on offense."

The Chargers built the lead to as many as 21, 30-9, in the second quarter when Leon Dixon scored on a baseline layup with 6:24 left in the half.

C.B. Aycock, which hit only three field goals in the second quarter, closed back to within 15, 36-21 by the half as the Chargers emptied their bench.

"I felt like we weren't getting blown out at the half," Bledsoe said. "But a lot of that is because he (Murphrey) was playing his subs."

In the third quarter, the Chargers pushed the lead up to 24 points as Leon Dixon took over on the inside. "(Leon) Dixon really took control of things in the third quarter," Bledsoe said. "Once he got going inside, we didn't have much of a chance."

The only bright spot for the Falcons offensively in the game was the scoring of Bob Grant, who finished with 17 points. Wayne Moore also added 10.

Ayden-Grifton will be back in action Friday on the road against North Pitt. C.B. Aycock will play again Tuesday at home against Greene Central.

"This was a big win for us, but we've got to get ready for Friday now," Murphrey said. "We're going to have to play well down there (North Pitt) to win."

No Lingering Effects Expected For Murphy

ATLANTA (AP) — Dale Murphy should have no lingering effects from arthroscopic surgery Tuesday, according to the surgeon who removed torn cartilage from the Atlanta outfielder's right knee.

"Everything went real well and he should be OK," said Dr. Joe Chandler. "The torn portion was removed and he should be able to start exercising very shortly."

Chandler said the injury, in the medial cartilage, was not new, but had been aggravated during the weekend.

"It's a good thing that we caught it now," Chandler said. "If we hadn't caught it now, the tear could have gotten worse and the situation could have been more serious."

Junior High School Basketball

E.B. Aycock Junior High School rolled up an 85-39 basketball victory over SouthWest Edgecombe Tuesday.

Troy Clemons led Aycock with 18 points while Germaine Williams added 13. SouthWest was led by Montez Wilson with 13.

Aycock is now 6-1 and travels to Bertie on Friday.

Clemson Altercation Probe Continues

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Officials say an investigation into an incident possibly involving members of the Clemson basketball team is drawing to a close, and could be completed before the week is over.

The incident, which occurred in the parking lot of an apartment complex that serves as the basketball players' dormitory Jan. 21, resulted in minor injuries to two security officers.

"It's still under investigation," John McKenzie, a spokesman for the university police department, said Tuesday. "They are interviewing some more people today. I believe that they're the last of the people to be interviewed. ... Unless something develops, it should be finished this week."

But the Anderson Independent-Mail has reported at least three players — Jerry Pryor, Ricky Jones and Dale Davis — have been interviewed.

The investigation stems from an altercation shortly after Clemson beat Western Carolina in basketball at Littlejohn Coliseum. One security guard received a bruise on the head, while the other had what officials said were "some bruised spots."

Cameron Appointed To Inquiry Panel

RALEIGH (AP) — C.C. Cameron, the governor's budget director, will replace J. Phil Carlton on a panel that will conduct an inquiry into the North Carolina State University basketball program, UNC officials say.

Carlton, a former justice of the N.C. Supreme Court, withdrew from the job Monday, citing the potential appearance of a conflict because members of his law firm had performed legal work for NCSU athletic department officials.

The NCAA also is investigating charges raised in a book scheduled for publication next month. The book, "Personal Fouls," charges that NCSU basketball coach Jim Valvano funneled money from boosters to players, that positive drug tests were kept secret and that grades were changed to keep players academically eligible.

Valvano and NCSU officials have denied all charges.

Wyche Collected Evidence From Room

CINCINNATI (AP) — Cincinnati Bengals coach Sam Wyche collected evidence of Stanley Wilson's possible cocaine use from the Florida hotel room where the running back was found the eve of the Super Bowl, the hotel's owner says.

Cincinnati Police Chief Lawrence Whalen, who was in Florida coordinating security for the Bengals, found Wilson in an apparent drug-induced state inside his Plantation, Fla., Holiday Inn room and, with two other men, took him back to the team headquarters at the Omni Hotel in Miami, said David Katz, the Holiday Inn owner.

According to Katz, he let Wyche into Wilson's room about 11 p.m. on Jan. 21, about 2½ hours after he let Whalen into the room. In the bathroom, Katz said, Wyche discovered several items. Katz said that Wyche placed the items in a shower cap. He said he did not know that Wyche did with the items.

Higuera, Jones, Russell Agree To Pacts

NEW YORK (AP) — Teddy Higuera, Tracy Jones and John Russell agreed to new contracts, reducing the players in salary arbitration to 65.

Higuera, who is recovering from hernia surgery, settled with the Milwaukee Brewers on a one-year contract worth $1.525 million. Jones and San Francisco agreed to a one-year deal for $300,000. Russell, a catcher, agreed to $145,000.

Three Cavs Added To East All-Star Squad

NEW YORK (AP) — Three Cleveland Cavaliers — guard Mark Price, forward Larry Nance and center Brad Daugherty — were named reserves for the Eastern Conference team for the NBA All-Star game Feb. 12 in Houston, the league said.

Other players selected as reserves in a vote by Eastern Conference coaches were guard Mark Jackson of New York, forwards Terry Cummings of Milwaukee and Kevin McHale of Boston, and center Patrick Ewing of New York.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Reserve guard Grant Gondrezick of the Los Angeles Clippers checked himself into a substance abuse center, the NBA team said.

Gondrezick, 26, missed practice Sunday and told trainer Bernie LaReau he was going to see a doctor. The player contacted the NBA late Sunday and requested admission to the ASAP substance abuse clinic in nearby Van Nuys.

It was not known whether he checked himself into the clinic because of drugs or alcohol.

McCormack Plans To Remain In Seattle

KIRKLAND, Wash. (AP) — Mike McCormack, the fired president and general manager of the Seattle Seahawks, said Tuesday that he has no immediate plans after football, but harbors no ill will against the man who ousted him — Seahawks owner Ken Behring.

"I do not plan on leaving Seattle," McCormack told a farewell press conference at the team's headquarters. "I may write some letters to the editor when I disagree with things you say."

McCormack, 58, was told Monday by Behring that he was out of a job.

Behring cited "communications difficulties" and the desire to have someone of his own choosing, with more business experience, in the team's top financial spot as reasons for not renewing McCormack's $250,000-a-year contract, which expired Wednesday.

"I understand Ken's right to get the guy in here that he wants," McCormack said, adding that he "had a lot of fun" since joining the Seahawks in 1982 as director of football operations. He was made president and general manager in 1983.

McCormack occasionally said "we" or "our" when talking about the team, and stopped to correct himself to say "the Seahawks" as he discussed the football club of which he is no longer part.

The Hall of Famer said there was no talk of staying with the club in a diminished role when Behring informed him Monday that he was being let go. He also noted the difference between Behring's $100 million investment in the team, compared with the $16 million that had been invested by the Nordstrom family — the Seahawks' original owners who sold the team to the northern California land developer.

"I guess that's what he wants, is someone who can get a good return on $100 million," McCormack said.

Oklahoma Police Investigate Possible Football Gang Rape

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NORMAN, Okla. — University of Oklahoma police found a blood-stained towel and hairs when they searched an athletic dormitory room where an Edmond woman says she was gang-raped by five men, according to court documents.

The 20-year-old woman's allegations are found in a sworn affidavit a campus police officer filed to obtain a search warrant. The Daily Oklahoman and Oklahoma City television station KTVY had filed a lawsuit last week seeking a complete summary of the alleged assault from the police report.

The woman said she and a 17-year-old female friend came to Norman to meet with football player Nigel Clay to go dancing, police reported in the sworn affidavit.

The woman told police she and her friend went to Clay's room Jan. 21 in the Bud Wilkinson dorm, and both were given alcohol, the documents say.

The woman said she was grabbed from behind and forced onto the bed where she was repeatedly raped, according to the documents.

The affidavit said the woman told police the men held her on the bed and a hand was held over her mouth as she tried to scream. The woman said she was left bloody from the assault, the documents say.

She told police her friend was having sex in an adjoining room, but the documents do not say if that was voluntary.

Police reported that they searched Clay's room and an adjoining room used by a person identified as both Byron and Bryon Keith Traylor. There is no player listed under either name in the 1988 Oklahoma football media guide.

Police said the search two days after the alleged attack turned up a bath towel, blanket, bathroom rug and bedding possibly stained by the woman's blood, hairs, contents of a vacuum cleaner bag found in the room and two bottles of cologne the woman said she handled and would have her fingerprints.

The search also turned up ammunition, including three 12-gauge shotgun shells, 31 .22-caliber long rifle rounds and one .22 "short" round, police reported.

Authorities said a .22-caliber pistol was used in a Jan. 13 shooting at the same dorm. In that incident, starting cornerback Jerry Parks was charged with shooting with intent to injure teammate Zarak Peters.

Parks was immediately suspended from the team and university, officials said.

No charges have been filed in the case. The listing of Clay and Traylor in the affidavit does not necessarily mean either man was involved in the alleged gang rape, campus police said.

Meanwhile football Coach Barry Switzer said it is "totally ridiculous" to say his program is out of control because of the incidents in the football dormitory.

"The actions of a few have reflected on many and that's what's upsetting and disturbing to me," Switzer said Tuesday night on The Barry Switzer Show, broadcast on the Oklahoma News Network. "We will deal with that problem and we will get rid of those problems, and I can promise you that that will occur."

"I'm proud of our players. You can't speak in general terms and say that these players are out of control," Switzer said. "That's totally ridiculous."

Switzer said the Parks incident was "very unfortunate and a tragic and unlucky situation."

He said the alleged sexual attack will be investigated, and if it is determined football players were involved, "they'll be handled in the proper way, not only by the athletic department but by legal action, too."

Both incidents occurred during the heart of the recruiting season, which will culminate Feb. 8 when high school players begin signing national letters of intent. Oklahoma also has to contend with a three-year NCAA probation for recruiting violations.

Bucs' Recruiting ...

You can bring in great athletes and just let them play, or you bring in kids and work hard coaching them. They are going to do a heck of a coaching job. That's what they have to do. You are kidding yourself if you say you are on the same level with Carolina, Georgia or Oklahoma.

"All you have to do is each year sell 25 kids on something special about East Carolina and then keep them there. That's the key to Dick Sheridan at North Carolina State. Each year he brings in 25 kids and four years later when they're seniors he's still got 23 or 24 of them."

ECU still lost out on a number of big prospects that they had gotten in on late, such as Burlington Cummings quarterback Chuckie Burnette (UNC), Burlington Cummings receiver Ray Griffiths (N.C. State) and Havelock defensive back Ledel George (N.C. State). But each of those three included ECU among their final chances and that in itself is an accomplishment.

ECU's Verbal Commitments:
Red Springs fullback Victor McBryde (6-0, 215); New Bern safety David Davis (6-2, 190); Fayetteville Byrd tight end Rodney Jones (6-3, 230); Chowan linebacker Willie Cooke (6-2, 220); Lee County linebacker Jeff Cooke (6-1, 220); junior college noseguard Albert

Loyola Leads Another Record Win

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — The Loyola Marymount Lions and U.S. International Gulls ran amok through the NCAA record book once again, bringing to a close perhaps one of the craziest home-and-home series ever seen in college basketball.

When the Lions and Gulls finished their 40 minutes of non-stop action Tuesday night, Loyola Marymount had won the highest-scoring game ever, 181-150 at home in Gersten Pavilion.

That's 331 points, and just the start of one of six offensive records set.

"We were unconcerned about an NCAA record," Loyola Marymount coach Paul Westhead said. "We worked on our defense as well as offense and worked hard to put that together."

It may sound strange to hear the coaches talk about defense, but that's what fuels these teams' fast-break offenses.

"I thought we played very hard defense," Westhead said. "We made some nice steals and forced turnovers."

Gulls coach Gary Zarecky agreed. "Their pressure really bothered us," Zarecky said. "We thought we might have had an advantage because they were thinking about setting a record instead of winning. But the difference is they had the intensity to go to the hoop and we didn't."

Hank Gathers, who leads the nation in scoring and rebounding, had 41 points and a school-record 29 rebounds for Loyola Marymount.

The game was an encore to the previous highest-scoring game, a 162-144 Loyola victory over U.S. International on Jan. 7 at San Diego, which set the previous record of 306 points.

The Lions' 181 points were the most ever by an NCAA team.

Marcellus Lee's slam dunk with 3:52 remaining gave Loyola Marymount a 165-137 lead, breaking the previous record of 164. Loyola matched that record in a 164-138 season-opening victory against Azusa Pacific, an NAIA school, on Nov. 28.

Nevada-Las Vegas scored 164 points in 1976, against Hawaii-Hilo, also an NAIA school.

The Lions broke their own NCAA record for most points in a half when they took a 94-76 lead at intermission. They set that record when Bo Kimble, who had not played since Dec. 23 in a loss to DePaul, hit a jump shot as time expired. In the Jan. 7 game, Loyola led 93-68 at the half.

The 170 points in the first 20 minutes set a record for points in one half.

The Gulls broke their own NCAA mark for points by a losing team.

Gathers, a 6-foot-7 junior center, increased his averages to 33.4 points and 14.6 rebounds as he seeks to become the first player to lead the nation in scoring and rebounding since Wichita State's Xavier McDaniel did it in the 1984-85 season.

"It's not as easy as it looks," Gathers said of the Lions' fast-break offense, which leads the nation with 113.5 average. "Every player plays off the other."

Jeff Fryer added 34 points for Loyola, 12-7, while Enoch Simmons had 25.

Kimble scored 20 points, which impressed Westhead.

Kimble was returning from arthroscopic knee surgery Dec. 29. Last season, he missed the first six games, then upon his return the Lions reeled off 25 straight victories before losing to North Carolina in the second round of the NCAA Tournament.

"We played a very consistent offensive game," Westhead said. "I was pleased with getting the mixture of Bo Kimble. We wanted to give him some game minutes before league play."

Loyola Marymount returns to West Coast Athletic Conference play against co-leader St. Mary's on Friday at Moraga, Calif.

Steve Smith had 32 points to lead U.S. International, 8-14, which returns to its rather nomadic schedule, the result of being an independent. Demetrius Laffitte added 26 points, Gary Williams 25 and Paul Wilson 21 for the Gulls.

"We didn't play very well," Zarecky said. "We missed a lot of shots we should have made."

"We didn't have the athletes to stay with them," said Zarecky, in his fourth year as head coach at U.S. International, which moved to Division I in the 1979-80 season.

Loyola Marymount praised the Gulls.

"USIU is a very confident team. They can score, shoot and run," Westhead said. "It shows they can score. They played a very good game and so did we. They showed a lot of character and poise as a team and did well."

Gathers said he felt the game may help USIU on the map.

"When you can get a team that can score like that, it's a great attraction," he said.

The game highlighted a night in which none of the nation's ranked teams was in action.

N.C.-Charlotte finished with a 13-4 run, holding the Bulls scoreless during for more than six minutes.

South Florida, now 6-10 and 1-5, shot 28.8 percent from the field, including eight of 28 in the second half.

Persley scored 12 points, Sam Robson added 11 and Cedric Ball had 10 as N.C.-Charlotte won its fourth straight game and improved to 10-7 and 3-3 in the league.

Radenko Dobras paced the Bulls with 15 points, and Hakim Shahid added 11.

Tonight, it will be No. 1 Oklahoma at Kansas State, No. 3 North Carolina at Clemson, No. 5 Missouri at Kansas, No. 6 Georgetown vs. No. 10 Seton Hall, No. 7 Louisville vs. Virginia Tech, No. 8 Florida State vs. Memphis State, No. 13 North Carolina State at Virginia, No. 14 Syracuse vs. Villanova, No. 15 Ohio State at Minnesota and No. 19 LSU vs. Mississippi.

Elsewhere Tuesday night, Stanley Brundy scored 18 points as DePaul cruised to an 85-63 victory over Duquesne, giving coach Joey Meyer his 100th career victory. Only Meyer's father Ray, with 724, and Jim Kelly, with 122, have more coaching victories at DePaul.

All five Iowa State starters scored in double figures, topped by Victor Alexander's 22 points, and the Cyclones hit 12 straight shots in the first half en route to an 88-76 victory over Nebraska.

Byron Dinkins and Henry Williams, who left the game on a stretcher after hitting his head on the backboard, scored 14 points each to lead North Carolina-Charlotte to a 71-47 victory over South Florida.

LaPhonso Ellis scored 18 points to lead Notre Dame to an 85-75 victory over Dayton.

U.S. Population Could Dip In Next Century

By Randolph E. Schmid
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — America's population may decline for the first time after two centuries of steady growth, due to declining number of women of childbearing age, the Census Bureau says.

After increasing from nearly 4 million in the first census in 1790 to nearly 247 million people today, the population could peak at 302 million in 50 years before starting to dwindle, the bureau says.

That's because the massive post-World War II Baby Boom generation is now headed out of the prime childbearing ages, meaning fewer new babies can be expected in the future, Gregory Spencer, a bureau demographer, said Tuesday.

A much smaller group of young women is coming along into the childbearing ages, Gregory said.

Already the number of women aged 18 to 34 has begun to decline, the study noted. Peaking at 35.3 million in 1985 it slipped to 35.2 million by 1987 and is expected to drop to 34.7 million by 1990 and by 2080 to be below 30 million.

"After 1995 the population may grow more slowly than ever before — more slowly than even during the Great Depression of the 1930s," Spencer reported.

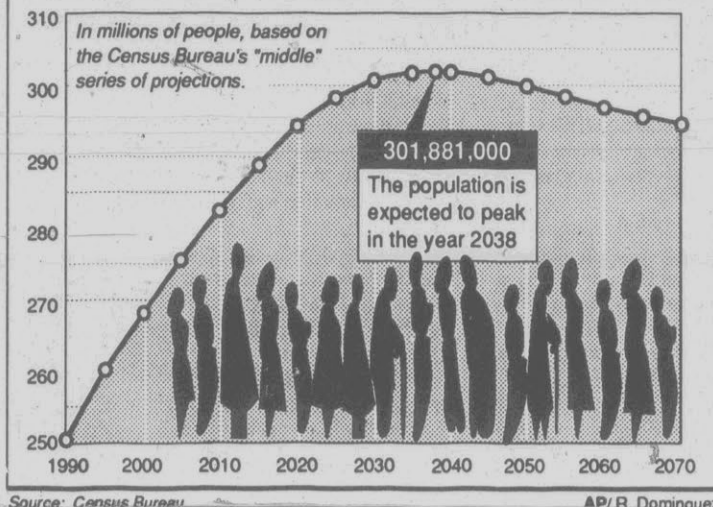

The peak in 2038 and subsequent decline is the middle projection of a series of some 30 different possibilities included in the study.

The lowest growth estimate would have the population peak at 264.5 million in the year 2020 before starting to decline, while the high-growth scenario would have the nation at 501 million and still growing in 2080.

While wary of calling any series "most likely," Spencer said that in general, when people ask what the population will be like in the future, he gives them the middle series of projections.

The Bureau compiles the 30 different sets of estimates in an attempt to account for varying possibilities in birth rates, death rates, differences between races and ethnic groups, immigration and so forth.

During that coming half-century the middle series of projections calls for an overall increase of about 56 million people, nearly the same amount by which the U.S. grew during the last 25 years.

After that, shrinkage should occur, although it will be "really quite modest," with the population falling by only about 10 million over the subsequent 42 years, Spencer said.

"So, obviously, it wouldn't take very much to make this not happen," he said.

The report also discloses that the nation's elderly population, which has attracted so much attention in recent years, is expected to grow more slowly after the mid-1990s, and then accelerate again after 2010.

That slowing is expected because the small generation born in the Depression and war years of the 1930s and 1940s will be moving into this age group.

But once the post-war Baby Boom reaches that plateau the elderly segment will resume the rapid growth it has seen in recent years.

Other findings of the new report include:

—The share of the population under age 35 may never again be as large as it is now — 55 percent. That percentage is expected to drop to 48 in 2000, 46 in 2010 and 41 in 2030.

—The white population may begin to decline in 40 years while the population of black and other races is expected to continue increasing.

—By the year 2030 the population could include as many as 32 million immigrants who entered the country after 1986, and their descendants — 12 percent of the population.

Here is a rundown of the projected U.S. population in coming years, based on the middle set of estimates. The Census Bureau estimated the U.S. population at 246,879,546 as of Jan. 1 of this year.

Woman Will Lead St. Patrick Parade

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The "First Lady of Irish Radio" has been chosen as the first female grand marshal of the St. Patrick's Day parade in its 226-year history.

And Dorothy Hayden Cudahy — who accepted the honor with smiling Irish eyes, not tearful ones — says it's about time.

Mrs. Cudahy, 66, had been passed over in favor of a man in three previous years before she was elected Tuesday night to lead the 200,000 marchers in the nation's largest and oldest St. Patrick's Day celebration.

Afterward, she said Irish women have too often been left standing in the wings while men took center stage.

"Like everything else, men run it but women do all the work," she said of past parades.

"When I march up there, ladies and gentlemen, girls and boys will remember my mother and your mother and all the Irish women who came over here and did so much," Mrs. Cudahy said.

Mrs. Cudahy and the other nominee, 61-year-old Mary Holt Moore, were on stage in front of 600 people in a Manhattan ballroom when the vote was announced. Mrs.

Moore, a school teacher, hugged and kissed the winner.

Mrs. Cudahy is known as the "First Lady of Irish Radio" for her "Irish Memories" program, which moved last August to WNWK-FM after more than 40 years on WEVD.

"This achievement was really your achievement," she told the delegates.

The vote was narrow, 256 to 233, but the crowd seemed unanimous in its delight at seeing a woman chosen to lead the March 17 parade up Fifth Avenue.

"I guess we are a chauvinistic race," said delegate Noah Kingston. "I suppose the European races in general are. We've always just went along with the status quo. But the times have changed and it's long overdue really."

"It's about time," said Irene McDonnell, a member of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. "The women in Ireland used to hold a high place before the English invaded."

The delegates who picked the grand marshal were chosen from about 200 affiliated organizations that march in the more than 40-block-long parade, which usually attracts more than a million spectators. The organizations include the Ancient Order of Hibernians, the United Irish Counties and schools and fraternal organizations.

Woman Lived Life As Male Musician

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SPOKANE, Wash. — Billy Tipton lived his life as a man, performing as a jazz musician, appearing to have a wife and adopting three sons. But his death at age 74 revealed to fans, friends and family that Billy Tipton was a woman.

Donald Ball, director of Ball & Dodd Funeral Home, said Tuesday that Tipton, who died this month of a bleeding ulcer, was a woman.

Ball said he privately informed Jon Clark, one of Tipton's adopted sons, that his "father" was really female so Clark would not have to learn it from the death certificate.

"I was just trying to break it to him gently," Ball told The Associated Press on Tuesday night. "I just didn't want him to find out in a public office. It's been a very difficult thing to handle."

The Spokane County coroner was not available Tuesday for comment, the coroner's office said.

"I'm just lost," Clark told the Spokesman-Review newspaper. He said he learned the truth last Wednesday, four days after Tipton's death.

"No one knew," said Kitty Oakes, the woman that Tipton had said he married in 1960. Ms. Oakes, who separated from Tipton 10 years ago, refused to talk about her life with Tipton, saying he died with the secret and that should be respected.

"The real story about Billy Tipton doesn't have anything to do with gender. He was a fantastic, almost marvelous, and generous person," she said.

"He'll always be Dad," Clark said. "But I think that he should have left something behind for us, something that would have explained the truth."

Ms. Oakes told funeral directors that Tipton was born Dec. 29, 1914, in Oklahoma City and was raised in Kansas City, Mo.

The newspaper said Tipton apparently began appearing as a man to enhance his chances of success as a jazz musician.

"He gave up everything," Ms. Oakes said. "There were certain rules and regulations in those days if you were going to be a musician."

Tipton, a saxophone and piano player, performed with the Jack Teagarden, Russ Carlyle and Scott Cameron bands, then formed the Billy Tipton Trio in the 1950s and played nightclubs throughout the West.

Dick O'Neil, who played drums with the trio for 10 years, recalled some listeners made cracks that Tipton, with a baby face and a high singing voice, looked too feminine to be a man.

"But I would almost fight anybody who said that," O'Neil said. "I never suspected a thing."

Scott Miller, 27, Tipton's oldest adopted son, said his father died broke and tired.

"Now I know why I couldn't get him to a doctor," Miller said. "He had so much to protect and I think he was just tired ... of keeping the secret."

GM Agrees To Bias Settlement

DETROIT (AP) — Thousands of black salaried General Motors Corp. employees in three states will share in a settlement worth perhaps $40 million, their attorneys said in announcing an agreement to end a 6-year-old bias lawsuit.

GM also agreed to monitor the future promotions and pay raises of black salaried employees for five years to make sure they conform with statistical expectations based on factors like tenure, education, job level and age, said Dennis D. James, an attorney for the workers.

The lawsuit was filed in 1983 by four employees.

North's Lawyers Want Jurors Kept In Isolation During Trial

By Pete Yost
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Oliver L. North's lawyers say any jury in the Iran-Contra case should be kept in isolation for the entire time the fired White House aide is on trial, which could be for five months.

A request to sequester the jury was made by defense lawyer Brendan Sullivan on Tuesday, the opening day of North's trial, as U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell qualified seven people to be part of a pool of potential jurors.

Sullivan said that "in the event a jury can be empaneled, it should be sequestered immediately to minimize the potential for exposure to immunized testimony and to protect Lt. Col. North's constitutional rights."

At a Jan. 9 hearing, prosecutor John Keiser estimated it would take six to eight weeks to present evidence against North while Sullivan estimated it would take two to three months to present the defense's case.

North faces 12 felony counts including lying to Congress in 1985 and 1986 to cover up Reagan administration assistance to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels during a period in which Congress had banned U.S. aid to the insurgents.

North's lawyers have said that no jury can be empaneled that would provide him with a fair trial because the former National Security Council aide later testified about his activities in nationally televised hearings before Congress in 1987.

In that testimony, North detailed many of his activities, such as shredding documents and cashing travelers' checks intended for the Contras, for which he is now accused of crimes.

"There has been repeated, widespread dissemination of Lt. Col. North's immunized testimony for more than 18 months," said Sullivan.

North appeared before Congress under a limited grant of immunity, meaning the testimony itself could not be used to prosecute him. However, under the arrangement, special prosecutor Lawrence Walsh was allowed to gather much of the same information independently.

Over protests from North attorney Barry Simon, Gesell on Tuesday approved seven potential jurors out of an initial group of 54.

One of the seven, a retired postal clerk, said she paid as much attention to North's televised testimony as she paid to "The Three Stooges." She said her house had burned down and she was occupied at the time with itemizing household items that had been lost.

Another potential juror approved by Gesell has a son who delivers newspapers for The Washington Post. Simon objected that the woman must have seen headlines during North's testimony. But Gesell placed her in the jury pool after being assured that she would cut off her son's conversation if he ever starts talking about the North case.

An unemployed man looking for work as a security guard also was ordered into the jury pool. He said he saw North on television during the congressional hearings but knew nothing about him.

Simon objected to the selection, saying that "if he heard even one" small portion of North's testimony, "which he very easily could have," he should be disqualified.

In addition to charges that he lied to Congress, North is accused of lying to the attorney general about his role in diverting millions of dollars to the Contras from the Reagan administration's secret weapons sales to Iran.

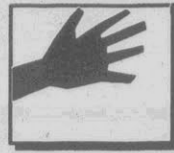

He also is accused of illegally accepting a $13,800 security system at his home from co-defendant Richard Secord, converting to his own use at least $4,300 in traveler's checks from Contra leader Adolfo Calero and conspiring to defraud the Treasury of tax revenue by using a tax-exempt foundation to funnel money to the Contras.

Iran-Contra Charges

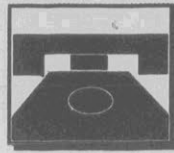

Charges brought against former National Security Adviser John M. Poindexter, Lt. Col. Oliver L. North, retired Air force Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord and businessman Albert Hakim.

CONSPIRACY: All four men were charged with conspiring to defraud the United States by illegally funneling money and other support to the Nicaraguan Contras at a time when such covert aid to the rebel group was banned, and conspiring to commit fraud by "deceitfully exploiting" the sale of arms to Iran "for their own purposes."

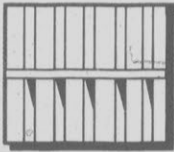

THEFT: The defendants were charged with theft of government property by converting "to their own use" proceeds from the weapons sales.

WIRE FRAUD: The four were accused of carrying out the diversion scheme by using wire communications in interstate and foreign commerce.

OTHER CHARGES: Poindexter was charged with two additional counts of obstructing Congress and two counts of making false statements. North was named in 9 additional counts involving obstructing Congress, making false statements, obstructing justice and a presidential inquiry, destroying official documents and conspiring to defraud the Internal Revenue Service. An additional charge of obstruction of justice was lodged against North in connection with the FBI's investigation of the installation of a security system outside his home. Secord was charged with three additional counts of conspiring to pay illegal gratuities to North, including financial aid to educate North's children and money to pay for the security system for the North home. Hakim was named in two additional counts of conspiring to pay illegal gratuities to North.

PENALTIES: The harshest penalty is 10 years in prison and a $250,000 fine for theft of government property. Most of the other conspiracy and fraud charges carry a maximum term of five years and a $250,000 fine. The illegal gratuity charges are punishable by two years in prison and a $250,000 in fines.

Britain Raises Furor By Proposing Fee-Charging Hospitals, Insurance

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — The government's plan for a major reform of the free National Health Service — cutting billions in state costs by letting big hospitals charge fees and by promoting private insurance — is meeting stiff opposition.

Many doctors, nurses and major unions expressed serious reservations about the plan announced Tuesday by the Conservative government. Some condemned it as an attempt to dismantle the system.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher called the legislative proposals the "most far-reaching reform of the National Health Service in its 40-year history."

Health Secretary Kenneth Clarke, the Cabinet member heading the service, added: "All our proposals share a common purpose — to make the health service a place where patients come first."

But the opposition Labor Party accused the government of trying to wreck the National Health Service.

Rodney Bickerstaffe, secretary of the National Union of Public Employees, one of the main health service unions, condemned it as "a cynical charter to dismember the National Health Service and transplant Britain's health care in a commercial circus."

The 650,000-member union represents hospital cleaners, porters, kitchen staff and other health service workers.

The British Medical Association said in a statement that it had "serious reservations about whether the proposals will produce the desired improvements in the quality of services."

Under the plan, the 320 largest and most sophisticated of the 2,000 National Health Service hospitals can become independent in 1991, taking fee-paying private patients and billing local authorities for others.

The 320 self-governing hospitals under the government plan also will be able to charge patients for extras such as meals, private telephones or television.

For the first time too, private health insurance for the elderly, the biggest burden on the state system, will be tax-deductible.

The self-governing hospitals under the government plan will be able to attract quality staff, from consultants to cleaners, by setting their own pay scales, the government said.

Other planned changes include fining general practitioners who prescribe too many medicines.

Under the plan, family doctors with big practices will get separate state budgets to buy drugs and hospital treatment from private, state or self-governing hospitals for elective surgery. They will be allowed to keep half of any savings on the drugs budget.

Consultants and general practitioners will have their costs independently audited and, like hospitals, will be encouraged to compete for patients.

The plan, to be drafted as a government bill, needs parliamentary approval to become law. But the government's overwhelming parliamentary majority ensures its passage and the entire package of proposed changes is expected to be in force within three years.

The National Health Service came into operation on July 5, 1948, part of a wave of social legislation by Clement Attlee's Labor Party government designed to give Britons a better post-war life.

The new plan is seen by some as an attempt to borrow from the American health system, with its emphasis on private care, without increasing spending.

The National Health Service operates alongside a smaller system of private hospitals and other medical care. The private system is not affected by the government plans unveiled Tuesday.

Government officials said the plan will streamline the health bureaucracy, give the public wider choice but deny no one access to free treatment.

Trevor Clay, general secretary of the Royal College of Nursing representing health service nurses, said: "I do not see much consumer choice in these proposals. ... As patients, we all have a price tag on our heads now."

"Some of this looks like a return to the elite voluntary hospitals and local authority infirmaries when I first started nursing" before World War II.

The National Health Service has 1 million staff. Used by 90 percent of the population, it is generally popular and Mrs. Thatcher has held back from exposing it to her strategy of rolling back socialism. Instead, spending has increased by nearly one-third since 1979 to $38.7 billion a year.

Argentine Ship Sinks

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — An Argentine supply ship sank in heavy seas after running aground off Antarctica, and authorities in the region said oil from the ship had created a 10-mile slick that was killing wildlife.

No one was injured in the sinking late Tuesday of the 400-foot Bahai Paraiso, which began leaking diesel fuel after striking rocks on Saturday, the government news agency Telam reported, citing a navy communiqué.

It did not say whether the double-hulled ship broke up or if diesel oil had spilled when it sank, and the depth of the water was not immediately known.

The U.S. National Science Foundation had warned before the vessel went down that the Antarctic could face ecological calamity if the 250,000 gallons of diesel fuel aboard the ship were to spill.

Officials from the foundation, the Greenpeace environmental group and a U.S. research facility near the shipwreck said fuel that leaked from the vessel before it sank had killed krill, a shrimp-like crustacean that is a vital part of the Antarctic food chain, affecting gulls and penguins.

"The krill are dying; they are literally jumping out of the water," the New Zealand Press Association quoted a Greenpeace spokesman, Peter Bogart, as saying. "Seabirds attracted by the krill are diving into the slick. ... It's a real environmental disaster in no uncertain terms."

Unwed Couple Loses Housing Bid

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — An unwed couple expecting their third child "are creating children for the welfare rolls," a federal judge said in blocking their request to overturn an agency's ban on housing unmarried couples.

U.S. District Judge Ronald R. Lagueux also suggested that Dana Dagnese leave the family so that Susan Arsenau and the children could meet the Woonsocket Housing Authority's regulation, said Steven Brown of the American Civil Liberties Union's Rhode Island chapter.

The couple, who have lived together six years, filed a federal lawsuit two weeks ago saying the authority's decision to deny them emergency housing violated their rights to "freedom of association, family privacy and equal protection of laws."

The couple were seeking a preliminary injunction Tuesday. No trial date has been set.

"Under our policy, boyfriends are not allowed, and they are not part of the family," said Ernest Lafond, the housing authority's executive director.

The agency's attorney argued that the couple could neither show a husband and wife, nor a common-law relationship, said Lafond.

But it was Lagueux who said the relationship was adulterous and against the state's public policy, according to Brown, whose ACLU chapter is assisting the couple.

Alaskan Cold Slips South Into Northern Plains

By Mike Hirsch
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Record-cold arctic air trapped over Alaska finally broke loose and barreled into the lower 48 states, dropping a bitter winter into the laps of springlike northern cities in a matter of minutes.

Temperatures plunged by nearly 80 degrees in a day, with one town reporting a 23-degree drop in one minute. High winds preceding the cold front blew a toddler down a street in Lander, Wyo.

The polar air outburst, accompanied today by blizzards driven by winds over 100 mph, stunned residents throughout the northern Plains and Midwest, where ski slopes and ice festivals had been abandoned for golf courses and tennis courts.

The frigid air, no longer trapped by a warm-air jet stream that had strayed farther north than usual and left record-high temperatures in 64 cities Tuesday, promised frigid weekend weather for the East Coast and as far south as Arkansas, the National Weather Service said.

"We're going to make up for the party we've been enjoying," said meteorologist Rick Brumer in Chicago.

The party ended quickly on Tuesday, as arctic air rushed into the balmy northern Plains, including Nebraska, North Dakota and Wyoming, dropping temperatures to 10 to 20 below zero. High winds and blowing snow knocked out power in Washington state and parts of northwest Montana.

Valentine, Neb., reached a record high of 70 degrees and dropped to zero degrees within 10 hours. The mercury plunged 33 degrees in one hour after the cold front passed Valentine.

In a 24-hour period beginning Monday morning, temperatures fell 79 degrees at Great Falls, Mont., from 62 above to 17 below zero. The state braced for even colder weather today as the system continued southward.

"It's the coldest air mass in the last five years, since December of 1983," said Bruce Thoricht, a weather service meteorologist at Billings.

In the town of Cut Bank, about 100 miles north of Helena, a Federal Aviation Administration official said the temperature plunged 23 degrees in one minute, and 103 mph winds dropped the wind chill to 75 below zero.

"It was a drastic drop, really fast," said Glacier County Under-sheriff Bill Barron.

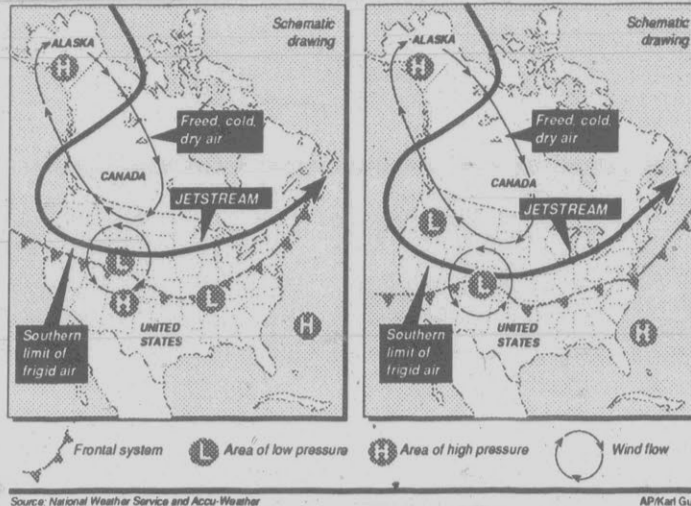

Deep Freeze

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON (forecast)

- By Wednesday morning the jet stream will have dropped, allowing the low pressure frontal system that had been trapped over Alaska to begin moving southward.
- Winds flowing around the low pressure area had trapped cold, frigid air revolving around a high pressure area in a tight circle over Alaska.

THURSDAY MORNING (forecast)

- The dropping jet stream has opened the food gates, allowing ice-cold winds to sink into Canada and the continental U.S.
- Temperatures in areas of the northern Plains region are expected to fall as low as -40° F by the weekend.

In Lander, winds gusting up to 86 mph dragged a 2-year-old boy down the street, said his mother, Pamela Roberts, who chased after him. The toddler was not seriously hurt.

"He fell and the wind dragged him along on his face," said Roberts, 27. "I was trying to hold him and trying to open the door."

Blizzards hit northwest Minnesota, southeast North Dakota and southern Montana. Cut Bank had 5 inches of snow and Helena 4. Blowing, drifting snow dropped visibilities to almost zero in parts of Montana and Minnesota.

Snow also fell in Washington state, where Snohomish and Spokane got up to 5 inches.

Where snow didn't fall, high winds fanned a prairie fire in western Nebraska that consumed 8,000 acres of grassland and burned several farm buildings, but destroyed only one house.

The cold air had been trapped over Alaska by a dome of extremely high atmospheric pressure. The barometer at Northway, Alaska, rose to a North American record high of 31.74 inches of mercury, the weather service reported Tuesday.

Before the warm jet stream shifted south and freed the arctic air, high-temperature records were broken or tied in 64 cities from Colorado to Ohio and from northern Texas into southern Minnesota. Dodge City, Kan., soared to 80 degrees, surpassing the record of 76 set in 1911; Chicago climbed to 65, breaking its 1877 record of 56; Louisville, Ky., hit 67, also breaking a 112-year-old record; Detroit climbed to 60, breaking the mark of 54 degrees set in 1890; Grand Island, Neb., reached 72; and Fort Smith, Ark., hit 77.

"The upper air wind patterns are normally different than they would be this time of year," said Brian Smith of the National Weather Service Severe Storms Forecast Center in Kansas City, Mo.

"Normally we have the jet stream across the continental U.S. It's been further north. ... Weather systems couldn't move through."

Finally, he said today, "we've had a buckle in it." Authorities reported no deaths or injuries directly attributable to the cold. However, on Tuesday the body of a man whose skiff was swamped by high seas and strong winds off the coast of southeast Alaska was found on a beach.

The warmth that preceded the cold front was indirectly responsible for the death of a Wisconsin woman Tuesday aboard a sled that sank in a lake where warnings had been issued several times about un-trustworthy ice.

Six Bodies Found In Trailer Park

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. ALBANS, W.Va. — Authorities have discovered the bodies of six people who were shot in the head with a shotgun near a trailer compound, and one of the residents has been charged with two of the deaths.

The body of a man found Tuesday in the rusted hull of a car in a junkyard near the three-trailer compound appeared to have been shot twice in the back of the head at close range, said Assistant State Medical Examiner Dr. Vasudeo Kshirsagar.

The condition of the body indicated that the victim had been dead several months, Kshirsagar said, adding that the five others appeared to have been killed in a similar manner.

Police believe the body is that of 20-year-old Michael Schillings of North Carolina, who came to the compound to live last spring and was reported missing last summer.

On Monday, the body of 22-year-old Jimmy Price was found on the site about 30 feet from the car, authorities said. The junkyard is about 200 yards east of the compound, where the first two bodies were discovered Jan. 8.

"We have a consistent pattern. It was a shotgun. It was consistent with the other cases," said Kanawha County Sheriff Art Ashley.

If all six bodies are linked to the same killer, it would be the worst series of deaths in West Virginia attributed to the same person.

Authorities said 19-year-old Mark Southern McCallister is being held without bond on charges of murdering brothers Billy and Otis Sanson, who lived with McCallister at the compound in St. Albans, a town of 15,000 people 15 miles west of Charleston.

Prosecutors said McCallister has confessed to the brothers' murders.

Police found the body of the Sansons' sister, Bonnie Pauley, at an abandoned motel across the street from the compound on Jan. 21. Another victim, McCallister's grandmother, Charlotte Farrell, 69, was found in her nearby home.

"We hope this ight wrap up the investigation from the standpoint of looking for people," Ashley said.

The sheriff's department declined to say whether McCallister would be charged in the other deaths or to speculate on a motive.

However, authorities said all the victims lived at the compound, which is now abandoned, and Price and Schillings had dated Bonnie Pauley.

Farm Prices Up

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The nation's farmers began 1989 on a price upswing that saw them receiving more for their cattle, hogs, tomatoes and wheat, according to preliminary January figures by the Agriculture Department.

On the average, prices that farmers got for raw products increased 1.4 percent from December to January, the department's Agricultural Statistics Board said Tuesday.

As always, there were losers as well as gainers, with grapefruit, oranges, peanuts and strawberries commanding lower prices. But even so, the USDA's overall price index was up 12 percent from a year earlier.

New quarterly figures showed prices paid by farmers to meet expenses rose 1.2 percent from October and averaged 6.1 percent more than a year ago. Higher prices for feeder stock, including pigs and cattle, along with higher calf prices accounted for most of the rise since last fall.

In a related report, the board said preliminary figures showed last year's corn production, which was shriveled nearly a third by drought and heat, had a value of more than $13 billion, an average of $2.60 per bushel. That was down from almost $14 billion in 1987, when the crop averaged only $1.94 per bushel.

The value is USDA's estimate of how much a crop is worth, whether a farmer sells it for cash or feeds it to livestock.

Soybeans were valued at almost $11.9 billion, an average of $7.70 per bushel, compared with $11.3 billion and $5.88 in 1987. Wheat was third at $6.63 billion and $3.70 per bushel, compared with a 1987 value of $5.5 billion and $2.57 per bushel.

According to the preliminary January price figures, based mostly on midmonth averages, the index for livestock and livestock products as a group rose 1.9 percent from their December average and was up 6.8 percent from January 1988.

The department's all-crops price index for January rose 0.7 percent from December and was up 20 percent from a year earlier. Prices of food grains were up 3.2 percent from December. Wheat prices rose 14 cents per bushel from December to $4.08 in January, the highest since March 1981. Rice dropped 8 cents per 100 pounds to $6.52 per hundredweight.

Prices of commercial vegetables rose 8.2 percent from December, with tomatoes and sweet corn leading the increase.

A PEP Boost

Program Helps Recovering Patients Gain Independence

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Mary was diagnosed when she was in her early teens as clinically depressed. For many years, she experienced recurrent episodes of depression that made her sad or anxious, interfered with her concentration, made decision-making tough, disrupted her eating and sleeping patterns, and cut short her work toward educational and career goals. Over the years, she became more and more emotionally and financially dependent on her aging parents.

She has been hospitalized more than once and was treated with numerous therapies and medications before an effective way of controlling her symptoms was found. Now in her late 20's, she lives with her parents, but has hope, for the first time, of having her own apartment and supporting herself.

She is developing friendships outside her family and mental health circles, looks forward to bowling every Thursday night, attends church gatherings on Sundays and Wednesdays and takes part in a Job Club meeting once a month.

The job which she has held last June has given her a new, more satisfying lifestyle, hope for the future, freed her parents of major responsibility for her protection and care, and transformed her from being a tax burden to being a taxpayer.

Her job was made possible by her participation in the Pitt County Partnership Employment Program operated by the Pitt County Mental Health Center in cooperation with local employers.

Emotionally impaired people, by the very nature of their illness, often have difficulty getting and holding jobs, says Janis Holland, employer representative with the PEP Program. Yet they, like all of us, need to be employed both to contribute to themselves financially and to improve the self-esteem that often has direct bearing on their vocational insecurity.

Ms. Holland said that, as people to fill entry-level jobs become harder and harder to find, it is becoming apparent that all segments of our society are needed in the work force to keep it functional. For this reason and many others, the Pitt County Mental Health Center has begun a supported employment program known as PEP. The purpose of the program is to help selected mental health center clients get and keep jobs.

Supported employment nationwide began a few years ago with research that showed that, using special trainers and training techniques, people with various disabilities could perform jobs which previously had been thought too difficult for them. Now all over the United States, supported employment programs have been established to help mentally retarded and physical disabled people enter and stay in the workplace. Similar help is being extended to people recovering from mental illness.

Overall, Ms. Johnson says, it's been easier to assist the mentally retarded than the recovering mentally ill. "People don't have the fear of mentally retarded people that they do of mentally ill people," Kim Johnson, PEP director, said. "They probably don't feel as confronted by them. They don't see mental retardation as something that's likely to happen to them, like a stress-related disorder might be."

Also, mentally retarded people tend to be more content in their jobs, more able to adjust to less stimulating tasks, less likely to make waves. Therefore, there's not as much risk on the part of the employer dealing with them.

PEP offers job placement and support services to Mental Health Center clients who have been reviewed by a special screening committee and are found to be ready for competitive employment.

Its services include a four-week Pre-Employment Group designed to strengthen clients' interviewing skills and identify their vocational interests.

After completing the pre-employment group, clients are linked with specific jobs that meet their vocational interests. Job coaches provide specialized job training for the client, plus social and emotional support.

Employers who participate in the program are offered a federal tax incentive for hiring the disadvantaged worker. They're also assured that the employee will be supported in learning and continuing to carry out the job by a job coach provided by PEP. The PEP job coaches are Beth Cooke and Janet Griffin.

"Being a job coach never gets dull," Ms. Griffin said, "because you're dealing with different people a lot and you're constantly learning new skills." She said she's been everything from janitor to food service worker to library assistant as she's learned the skills she has to coach.

A job coach learns the client's job thoroughly, completes a detailed analysis of the job station, then trains the new employee to work at the job as the employer requires. Any part of the job that is not being done by the employees, the coach does. As the employees become more and more proficient, the coach fades out from supervision and allows the employees to function on his own, providing he or she is performing to the employer's satisfaction.

Catherine Mullins, the dietary manager at Triad Health Care Center, said, "I am very well satisfied with this program and especially with the effectiveness of the job coaching involved. We have been participating in the program almost since it started. I'm very pleased with the employee I now have. She and the job coaches have fitted into our program quite well and were always adaptable, trainable and willing to meet job-site requirements, no matter how difficult they were. When the worker here had to be at work at 6 o'clock on a Sunday morning, her job coach was with her."

"I really see the beauty of the job coach approach. It works. I don't think my employee would have worked out if she hadn't had the coach, but with her extra special care, she's done wonderfully well.

"I would be glad to use other PEP employees as I have the need for additional employees. That's how impressed I am with the program."

A PEP client said of PEP and her job coach, "I know I would not have gotten a job without the PEP assistance. My job coach has been very supportive and helpful. She worked right alongside of me during my training. I think the program is very helpful to chronically mentally ill people."

Another component of PEP is its Job Club for the program participants. It is an ongoing support club for clients who are employed. It meets once a month after working hours. It's an opportunity for members to learn new skills from stress management to budgeting to job advancement. The members also talk about related subjects of interest to them all, like using leisure time wisely. Of course, it's a way for each to realize that he or she is not alone in breaking back into the job market.

A PEP client who chose not to be identified said, "The Job Club is a support group that is good so we can compare notes on our jobs. PEP is a program that took a lot of pressure away from my getting a job."

PEP is financed by a grant obtained by the Mental Health Center through the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation, with Ms. Holland's job being funded by the Governor's Advocacy Council of North Carolina, with application made by the Pitt County Mental Health Association.

Many of the clients now being served through PEP are previous clients of The Challenge, a Mental Health Center facility which operates like a day club in which the clients learn home and work skills. Many have been involved in transitional employment like working at the county-run greenhouse or at one of the county's refuse separation sites or in the thrift store run by the mental health center clients. These have been jobs that paid commensurate wages — not always up to minimum wage, up to the rate of performance. Now their jobs will pay minimum wage or above.

Some mentally ill or recovering mentally ill people have job histories; some do not. Like everyone else, some wish to stay in their chosen fields; some do not.

For more information about the program, call 758-3758 or 752-7151.

Women Pay A High Cost By Holding Anger Inside

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FOREST GROVE, Ore. — How people handle anger varies with gender, according to studies by a Pacific University psychology professor.

Women experience anger in response to many of the same circumstances as men and may even experience similar levels of anger, says Dr. Mary Kay Biaggio, but they are prone to suppress and internalize their anger while men tend to externalize theirs.

"The cost of this suppression may for many women be lowered self-esteem, a sense of powerlessness and fear of responding to or of even recognizing a provoking or unfair condition that causes the anger in the first place," she says.

For example, if a supervisor criticizes an employee for a trivial matter, male employees would be more likely than females to view their supervisor as unreasonable and to consider the incident their supervisor's fault. Women would be more likely to blame themselves for the criticism and to attempt to correct the problem.

Though individual men and women may respond in a variety of ways to this type of provocation, Biaggio's research suggests that there will be some differences, in general, between the sexes in how they construe such provocation.

When men have aggressive impulses, they are expected to express them by showing anger, while women are encouraged to suppress their own anger.

Biaggio, program director and professor at the Oregon Graduate School of Professional Psychology who has studied anger for nearly 10 years, used two experiments in her study.

In a field study, 72 college students recorded all of their anger arousing incidents for two weeks. Categories of provoking incidents and of the feelings they aroused were developed.

The men reported more provoking incidents than did the women, and men had more incidents stemming from annoying or ignorant persons. The women reported more anger in response to criticism or rejection, and they listed more feelings of hurt.

'Lonesome Dove' Becomes Four-Day Event For CBS

By Kathryn Baker
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Durn. Just when you write off the whole danged network season, CBS comes along with a big ol' event, a four-night masterpiece of a Western, "Lonesome Dove."

The eight-hour miniseries begins Sunday and runs through Wednesday.

Readers who loved Larry McMurtry's Pulitzer Prize-winning novel can be assured that Austin screenwriter Bill Wutliff has transformed it into a film that enlightens rather than obscures the heart of it.

For viewers who haven't read the novel, the movie stands on its own. It's proof that the miniseries is still a worthwhile genre for epics like "Lonesome Dove" that can't be contained in a two-hour film.

The cast is virtually unprecedented for a network movie — Oscar-winner Robert Duvall ("Tender Mercies") and Anjelica Huston ("Prizzi's Honor"), plus Tommy Lee Jones, Diane Lane, D.B. Sweeney, Frederic Forrest, Robert Urich, Ricky Schroder, Chris Cooper, Glenn Headly and William Sanderson.

Wutliff wrote "Raggedy Man" and "Country" and co-wrote "The Black Stallion." Director Simon Wincer's credits include "Phar Lap" and the network miniseries "Bluegrass."

But the miniseries belongs to Duvall. Well, the book did belong to Gus McCrae. Duvall, an actor who becomes his role, has found in coot-philosopher Gus a character who becomes the actor just as much.

Jones (with his hair dyed white) holds his own with Duvall, no mean feat. He has perhaps a more difficult role, as the simmering, taciturn Call.

Gus and Call are legendary ex-Texas Rangers reduced to running a down-at-the-heels cattle outfit along the Rio Grande, just outside a wide spot in the road called Lonesome Dove.

When old companion Jake Spoon (Urich) shows up after 10 years, running from a fatal misunderstanding in Arkansas, he's full of tales of a cattleman's paradise in a wilderness called Montana.

Call, without Indians and outlaws to keep his mind off the ghosts of his past, figures an adventure is just what he needs, and he's soon rounded up 2,600 head of Mexican cattle and an inexperienced bunch of hands and headed off on a 3,000-mile trail drive.

Gus is usually satisfied to sit on the porch avoiding work, swigging whiskey and expounding loudly on any subject that happens to come up. But he goes along hoping to see his true love, Clara (Huston), who is married to a horsetrader in Nebraska. Jake trails along with Lorie (Lane), a young prostitute who believes his promise to take her to San Francisco.

Meanwhile, Arkansas sheriff July Johnson (Cooper) embarks reluctantly on a mission to bring Jake to justice. He is soon distracted, though, by the news that his wife (Headly) has run off. She, too, is bound for Nebraska, and an outlaw she still loves.

Along the way, the cowboys tangle with sandstorms, stampedes, horse thieves and Indians. Lorie is stolen by Blue Duck (Forrest), a vicious renegade who duels with Gus and meets an unusual demise.

Wutliff did an exceptional job of turning McMurtry's vivid but often introspective 840-page book into a film, preserving the dialogue and improving the ending by a simple rearrangement of minor events.

Much of the violence and raunchiness of the book remains, though toned down for network TV. When Gus is under attack by Indians on the open plains, he stabs his horse to death to use him for cover.

Wincer occasionally lapses into unnecessary slo-mo melodrama. But only occasionally. The action sequences are mostly superb.

Set designer Cary White has turned the "Lonesome Dove" of imagination into a reality. And Douglas Milsome's cinematography is evocative without being too darned purty.

Wutliff telescopes many events, so the miniseries gets going much more quickly than the book. By the end of the first night, the trail drive is under way and the first fatality has occurred at the Nueces River. By then, any viewer with a pulse should be hooked.

In exchange for the quicker pace, the miniseries shucks some of the character development of the book. There's no way around that unless the network stretched the miniseries into a week. After four nights, viewers might wish that they had.

Uncut 'Raisin In The Sun' Will Air On PBS Tonight

By Ronald Powers
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Some 30 years ago an explosive drama by an unknown young black woman defied the odds, the experts and the money men to open on Broadway.

Lorraine Hansberry's "A Raisin in the Sun," which starred Sidney Poitier, went on to win critical raves, and established itself as a cornerstone in American theater.

While the story of a black Chicago family's move from the ghetto into a white neighborhood has been produced thousands of times and has captivated millions of theater patrons and moviegoers worldwide, Hansberry's original play has never been seen in its entirety.

However, a new, uncut production will be broadcast by PBS tonight. It stars Danny Glover and Esther Rolle. It is the year's first production in the "American Playhouse," now in its eighth season.

The new production will include nearly an hour's worth of restored material, including themes of feminism, African nationalism and black pride.

"Nothing that was cut was cut to censor the play," said Robert Nemiroff, the late playwright's husband and literary executor. "Pressures were enormous to keep the play as tight and streamlined as it could possibly be."

When the play opened on Broadway in 1959, Walter Kerr, writing for the New York Herald Tribune, called it "an impressive first play, beautifully acted ... relieving and wonderfully caustic comedy."

Directed by Lloyd Richards, it ran for two years and received the New York Drama Critics Award for best play. It is the story of a family whose prospects for the future brighten considerably when misfortune strikes. The death of Walter Younger Sr. leaves his wife with a $10,000 life-insurance policy and the problem of how to use it.

Her son, a chauffeur, wants the money to start a new business, and her daughter needs money for medical school. Another option, the wife sees, is buying a new home for the family.

In one restored scene a neighbor comes in with a newspaper story about the bombing of a black family's house after they had moved into a white neighborhood.

"This obviously shows the danger the Youngers are facing at the curtain," said Bill Duke, director of the PBS production. "It makes clear that for all the joy and affirmation of the family's inner triumph at the end, it is anything but a traditional happy ending." The scene was cut from the Broadway production to save the added cost of another actor's salary.

It took producer Philip Rose nearly two years to find a co-producer and the money to stage the production. Even with the money in hand, Broadway theaters were not willing to rent to the new production until it had proved itself out of town, Nemiroff said.

But once on stage, the shortened play — which with an uncanny prescience foresaw the rise of black pride and nationalism in the United States and Africa — became a hit with both blacks and whites.

"Never before in the entire history of the American theater had so much of the truth of black people's lives been seen on the stage," the late author James Baldwin wrote.

While not autobiographical, "Raisin" had its origins in Hansberry's own childhood experiences in Chicago in the 1930s when her family moved into a white neighborhood. They were evicted from their home by an Illinois court, but her father, a prosperous real-estate broker and banker, fought the case to the U.S. Supreme Court, which outlawed the restrictive covenant.

After trying her hand at painting and determining she had no talent, Hansberry moved to New York in 1950 where she concentrated on her writing, but made little effort at publishing, and earned a living with a number of odd jobs. Although she wrote extensively, she completed only two plays during her brief life, "A Raisin in the Sun" and "The Sign in Sidney Brustein's Window." She died of cancer in 1965 at the age of 34.

Nemiroff, who married Hansberry in 1953, has devoted much of his life since her death to editing and shaping her works into publishable form, including the well-received "To Be Young, Gifted and Black" and "Les Blancs."

Hal DeWindt, a teacher, director and associate producer of the PBS production of "Raisin," said that aside from the restoration of the original material, this newest version differs from many previous productions in one important respect.

Rose and David Suskind produced the movie version in 1961. Directed by Daniel Petrie, it starred Poitier, Ruby Dee, Claudia McNeil, Diana Sands and Lou Gossett Jr.

Tips Help Extend The Life Of Your VCR

VIDEO MAGAZINE

Video cassette recorders are remarkably durable and long-lasting devices. However, like anything else mechanical, they do need occasional care to keep things in top working order.

Here are some tips on how to tuneup VCRs and avoid video gremlins.

The most common causes of gremlins — quirks in the machine — are dust and dirt that find their way into the VCR. Decks should be cleaned regularly, both inside and out. Use of an anti-static cloth on the exterior will decrease the chances of dust build-up around the VCR. The less dust around a VCR, the less dust there is to get inside where it can cause trouble.

The clue as to when to clean the heads of a VCR is to wait until there's a visible problem on screen. These include snow, lines, excessive graininess or a deteriorating picture. And the rule here is: If it ain't broke, don't fix it.

Heads can be cleaned with a commercially available head-cleaning cassette. Ignore the instructions on some head-cleaning tapes advising owners to use them after every so many hours. Excessive use of head-cleaning cassettes can damage the heads. In some cases, using a head cleaner can void the machine's warranty. In any case, use them only when a visible problem is present.

VCRs should be covered when not in use, and should be kept away from heat, cold, vents, windows, magnetic fields (like loudspeakers), close quarters with no ventilation and liquids.

Avoid playing old tapes that may be losing their magnetic coating. Try to use high-grade tapes. They cost more but most contain cleaning agents that work to keep the heads clean.

The positioning of VCR cables and connectors are as important to deck performance as the positioning of the VCR. For example, cables should be kept away from magnetic fields like loudspeakers. Other common mistakes such as routing cables under carpets and mats or using cables that are too long and end up in a loop on the floor are inviting interference problems.

Arsenio Hall says his show should be called 'The Rainbow Coalition Talk Show'

Hall Seeking Guests Of All Descriptions

By Jerry Buck
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — It's called "The Arsenio Hall Show," but its star suggests it should be called "The Rainbow Coalition Talk Show."

The syndicated late-night talk show was recently launched into competition on more than 135 stations against NBC's Johnny Carson and David Letterman and fellow newcomer Pat Sajak on CBS.

Not since the late 1960s and early 1970s, when all three networks fielded talk shows, has there been such yacking at the witching hour. In addition, about a dozen other syndicated or cable talk shows, with stars from Kenny Rogers to Joan Rivers, are in production or waiting in the wings.

"Everybody's talking about the new talk shows," said comedian-actor Hall, 29. "I think Pat Sajak should call his show 'A.M. Sajak.' I think the people he attracts will be asleep by 11:30 at night. Letterman's basically a comedy show. I don't care who the guests are. I tune in to watch David. And Johnny's a legend. He'll be around as long as he wants."

"I think the problem with most talk shows is that they're 'Caucasian Boys Clubs.' My show is going to be more reflective of America. America's a melting pot and that makes for an interesting mixture. I don't see that on the other shows. You can tune in every night for a month and not see a black person."

"People will say I'm the black talk show host," he said. "I say ignore my color. If I'm good, watch it. If I'm not good, don't watch it. Talk is what I do best and most. I think God put me here to be a talk-show host."

A few days before "The Arsenio Hall Show" premiered on Jan. 3, Hall was feeling the tension. His office at Paramount Studios had the look of a showroom for Toys R Us.

"I'm trying to control the stress level," Hall said. "I can't move to an island, so I'm discovering adult toys." At the moment he was manipulating the radio control for a racing car that was speeding around the outer office. In one corner was a basketball hoop. There was also a table tennis set.

His private office had enough doodads to please a bored child on a rainy day. Hall settled behind the big U-shaped black desk. He was wearing a Cleveland Indians warmup jacket and hat perched backward on his head.

Hall is not new to the talk show format. A year and a half ago he took over "The Late Show" on Fox Broadcasting Co. not long after the departure of Joan Rivers. The ratings began to improve, but Hall left to co-star with Eddie Murphy in the film "Coming To America." It was while he was a guest on "The Tonight Show" promoting the movie that Hall made up his mind to accept Paramount's offer for a new talk show. "I made the decision during a commercial break," he said. "I'd told Paramount no at first. I didn't want to play against Johnny Carson, the idol who had made me want to do what I do. But I can't sit on the sidelines and be a fan all my life. I can't live my life through Johnny Carson. If I fail, I fail. I'd feel even worse if I'd never tried."

'America's a melting pot and that makes for an interesting mixture. I don't see that on other shows. You can tune in every night for a month and not see a black person.'

Although the talk shows are on the air at the same time in many cities, Hall said he doesn't think they are competing for the same audience.

"I don't think competition is a problem," he said. "My show's a different kind of show. My demographics are different. My job is not to cure racism. My job is to present entertainment. It's not an issue of blacks and whites. Sometimes it's between the young and the old. I may not get Dolly Parton, but maybe I'll get the next Dolly Parton."

"But this is not a minority talk show. I'm not doing 'Soul Train' at late night. I just want to be first with some new talent. Something 'new wave' with a cutting edge. It's a talk show for people who don't have a talk show now. Johnny has his loyal fans, but those fans have kids and maybe they'll watch me."

Hall tapes his show late every afternoon at Paramount Studios and it's sent out by satellite. Paramount distributes "Entertainment Tonight" in a similar manner.

Hall started performing early in his hometown of Cleveland, and at the age of 12 told his mother he wanted to do what Johnny Carson does. His parents, however, insisted he go to college. "I thought it was a waste of time," he said, "but now I see it's really helped me."

He worried that he had missed his shot by going to college. "I saw Letterman get his show," he said. "I saw Garry Shandling get his break. Then Jay Leno took me under his wing. He was a great inspiration for me."

Army Plans To Close Largest Supermarket

By Robert M. Andrews
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — One of the busiest supermarkets in the world is posting a "going out of business" sign on its doors and telling thousands of happy, loyal customers to go elsewhere.

The Army's Cameron Station, a sprawling supply facility and cut-rate grocery store for the military in this Washington suburb, is one of 34 bases slated to be closed under a Defense Department cost-cutting plan announced in December.

A Pentagon commission said 120-year-old Cameron Station was "old and inefficient" and should be shut down to save taxpayers $13.3 million a year.

Unless Congress takes the unlikely step of overruling the Pentagon, the Cameron Station commissary will be closed in the next few years despite nearly $31 million in annual sales last year.

Receipts like that make Cameron Station the envy of the supermarket giants. And it's only open during the day, five days a week.

When the station is closed, its grocery business probably will shift not far away to the mammoth commissary at Fort Belvoir, Va., the king of the Army's 478 worldwide commissaries with $64.3 million in sales last year.

The supermarket chains keep their sales figures a closely guarded secret. But Food World, a reliable industry journal, estimates that the average Giant Food store in the Washington metropolitan area, by comparison, posted $18.5 million in annual sales as of last May. The figure for the other major chain, Safeway Stores, was $11.4 million.

As many as 40,000 customers, most of them military retirees, push their loaded shopping carts past 18 checkout counters at Cameron Station every month.

offer, except for alcoholic beverages, automotive accessories, a jewelry and cosmetics counter or a pharmacy.

"Cheaper prices — that's our big draw," says Len Langford, the civilian assistant manager at Cameron Station, and his customers agree.

They say the commissary's low prices save them 25 percent to 30 percent of the checkout counter tab at Giant or Safeway, the two biggest supermarkets on the outside.

With a current operating subsidy of $743 million from Congress, the commissaries sell everything at cost, plus a 5 percent surcharge to cover overhead expenses.

Altogether, the 431 military commissaries racked up $5.2 billion in worldwide sales last year, making them the seventh largest grocery chain in the country. The estimated $1.8 billion difference between commissary and supermarket prices is regarded as a pay supplement for military families.

Langford said his shoppers drive here from throughout Washington and its Maryland and Virginia suburbs to load up on bargains. "One guy and his wife drive all the way from upstate New York near the Canadian border to shop here every six months," he said.

"I've been going to the commissary all my life," said Betty Tychsen, wife of a retired Air Force colonel who loaded a dozen grocery bags of bargains into the trunk of her car at the Cameron Station parking lot.

"It's close to my home, the produce is good and I seem to get through the checkout lines quickly," she said. "We get everything we need here, and my husband says we save 20 percent by shopping here."

"I'm going to miss it," said Cosy Schneberger, wife of a Navy commander at the Pentagon who hits Cameron Station every three weeks to stock up. "You can find most everything you want. I hope they do something to take care of everyone when they close."

In the parking lot at Fort Belvoir, Lance Cpl. James Pearson of Billings, Mont., a 24-year-old with a wife and baby, drives 30 miles both ways from their home on the Marine base at Quantico, Va., to shop for commissary bargains.

Pearson says the commissary is a lifesaver on his paycheck of $382 every two weeks. He figures the $120 worth of groceries they buy at Fort Belvoir every payday would cost an additional $75 if they shopped elsewhere.

"If we didn't have this, we'd go pretty hungry," he said. "We'd have pretty empty grocery bags when we got home."

Capt. Earl Hemminger, who lives in nearby Springfield, Va., with his wife and 2-year-old daughter, buys most of his groceries at the Belvoir commissary, but says his enlisted men need the $50-a-month savings more than he does.

"To a private living in a high-cost area like Washington, $50 a month is a lot of money," he said. "As it is, a lot of soldiers have to work a second job till midnight to make ends meet."

The big food chains complain that the commissaries enjoy an unfair competitive advantage because of their government operating subsidy and ability to sell groceries virtually at cost.

85 Years Later, Kentucky Bank Still Offers Service

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOWES, Ky. — The narrow two-story Bank of Lowes looks like a place Jesse James would go out of his way to visit.

Little has changed in the 85 years of Kentucky's smallest bank. The teller cage is a genuine antique. Accounts are kept in a ledger book, and the closest thing to a computer is an adding machine on a desktop.

"A lot of people like small banks and don't like computers," says Dorothy McClellan, cashier and chairwoman of the board.

Founded in 1903 by a group of local businessmen with a pool of $15,000, the bank remains in the hands of local residents. It pays depositors no interest, but it thrives in an isolated corner of Graves County, serving about 500 customers with checking accounts and loans.

The bank charges no fees, except for returned checks. Bank officers help customers with bookkeeping chores and will type important papers and provide notary services. All without charge.

Customers who can't make the 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. banking hours make appointments — sometimes as early as 7 a.m. weekdays — or give their deposits to McClellan at church on Sunday.

McClellan's father, Col. Paul Wilkerson, ran the bank for more than 40 years. He used to write loans on the kitchen table at his home for those who couldn't do their banking during regular hours.

"Most of what we handle is checks and paperwork," McClellan says. "We barely have enough cash on hand to operate."

She says about two-thirds of the bank's assets are invested in government securities and in certificates of deposit at other banks. The remaining one-third is on loan to customers.

The Bank of Lowes is regarded as one of the state's healthiest institutions. Its cash reserve, surplus and undivided profits are enough to cover all its loans. Earnings as a percentage of assets have in the past topped the state's more than 300 banks.

Besides McClellan, who has been a bank officer for 29 years, there are two other full-time employees. Frank Wilkerson, her brother, is president and has worked at the bank for 18 years. Gladys Sullivan is assistant cashier and has worked for the bank for 27 years.

Staying small is one of the bank's goals, McClellan says.

"We're just trying to help other people," she says. "Everybody knows everybody. The larger you get, the more headaches you have."

Retired Aviator Is Finding Plenty To Occupy His Time

By Richard Brooks
THE BEAUFORT GAZETTE

RIDGELAND, S.C. — Hooks Johnston's first airplane never got very high off the ground, but it launched a lifelong love of aviation.

Johnston, who says he is "pushing 82," has been retired on this tiny island between Hazzards Creek and the Chechessee River since 1971. Retirement for Johnston means anything except being idle.

"I've seen too many people retire at 65 and all they ever knew was work. They think their lives are over. I tell them they need a hobby," he said.

Johnston's workshop is ample evidence of his busy retirement. He makes toys and household items from wood and donates them to his favorite civic organizations for fund raisers and auctions.

He's also restoring a half dozen or so gasoline engines from the early 20th century. And woodworking also coincides with another hobby, making clocks, which he started doing in 1955. He has built 11 of them.

How long does it take to make a clock?

"It's impossible to say," Johnston said. "You have to glue something and then leave it alone unless you just like to watch glue dry. I do some and then leave it alone and go to something else."

"I got so much going on now I wonder how I ever had time enough to work anyway." Perhaps he never thought of his job as work in the first place.

A room in Johnston's house is a veritable museum filled with samples of fabric from early planes, wooden propellers and books on aviation history.

He proudly pulls a first edition copy of "Spirit of St. Louis" from a shelf to display an autographed flyleaf: "To Hooks Johnston, Best Wishes, Charles A. Lindbergh."

Johnston's life and the aviation age have been on parallel courses practically from the beginning.

"Even as a little boy I used to sit and draw pictures of airplanes," he said.

As a teen-ager he built a model plane powered by rubber bands. It is preserved today in the South Carolina State Museum in Columbia.

"There were no plans or kits for it back then; I just built it the way I thought it ought to look," Johnston said.

He points out that the model is streamlined — something that didn't occur in airplane design until years later — yet it has exposed control cables. "It's sort of a combination of the old and the new," he said.

Johnston left his home town of Luray, near Estill in Hampton County, in 1926 to attend Clemson College (now Clemson University) and spent two years there before his father died and he returned home.

But Hampton County was not receptive to young Hooks' flights of fancy. "Those people hadn't accepted the fact that birds could fly, much less people," he said.

So Johnston, at age 19, enrolled in a flying school in Dallas, Texas, where he learned to fly a World War I trainer.

He returned to Clemson, where he found a small crew of like-minded students led by Dallas Sherman had formed the Clemson Aero Club in 1927, the year Lindbergh crossed the Atlantic Ocean, and were planning to build their own "aeroplane."

Club members contributed $35 apiece and began work on a single-seat, parasol (wing above the fuselage) monoplane powered by a two-cylinder, 28-horsepower Lawrence engine. It was 16 feet, 6 inches long and its wingspan was 23 feet.

The plane, christened the "372," never flew more than about 20 feet off the ground, but that didn't hold back the club's elation.

"It was like the Wright brothers plane at Kitty Hawk, it sort of hopped along and came back down again real soon; but we were all excited and jumping up and down," Johnston said.

The plane was donated to Clemson, where it stayed in a wood shop until 1965 when the original Aero Club members reunited to rescue it from being trashed. It was refurbished at a cost of $100 per member and was displayed in museums in Santee and Lakeland, Fla., before being returned to Clemson.

Today the "372" hangs high above the floor of the South Carolina State Museum near the entrance of the science and technology exhibits, where Johnston's model airplane also is exhibited.

The Clemson Aero Club sort of married Johnston's mechanical engineering career to aviation and in 1930 he enrolled in the Boeing School of Aviation in California. After graduation in 1931 he was offered a job by Pan American World Airways.

Band Builds Its Following With Questions

By Hillel Italic
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Though mainstream radio has so far chosen to resist the songs of They Might Be Giants, the biting lyrics and unique music of guitarist John Flansburgh and accordion player John Linnell have helped the two-man band build a substantial following.

"Our songs are question marks," Linnell said. "We leave a lot more stuff hanging out than other bands."

The music is simple, catchy and deceptively cheerful. "Shoehorn With Teeth" could almost be mistaken for a toothpaste commercial if it weren't for the lyrics: "He wants a shoehorn, the one with teeth. People should get beat up for stating their beliefs."

And "Kiss Me, Son of God" would fit right into a glee club recital if someone could find a way around these words: "Now I laugh and make a fortune off the same ones that I tortured and the world screams, 'Kiss me, son of God.'"

"I think what's weird about our songs is that they work much more on a symbolic level than on a literal level," Flansburgh said. "I'm not trying to make it more poetic than it really is. We're not too concerned about being really explicit. I think it's better for a person listening."

Linnell and Flansburgh grew up in the suburbs of Boston and became friends in high school.

"We hung out with a clique of people who were like-minded," Linnell said. "We were on the staff of the school newspaper. The high school had a newspaper office so we could hang out in the office and we didn't have to hang out in the hallway."

Linnell was the first to show interest in music, playing in high school bands, but Flansburgh would eventually catch the bug.

"I did sort of tape stuff at my own home and started getting into the punk rock thing," Flansburgh said. "Then a friend of mine gave me a guitar and said, 'Play this and you'll never be the same.'"

A friend was also the source of Linnell's accordion.

"I'd been a keyboard player in other bands, but someone gave me this accordion and John and I started messing around with that," Linnell said. "I immediately took to it. I think it has the biggest effect on us on stage. We both have instruments where we can stand up and move around."

After graduating from high school, they went their separate ways, but reunited in 1981 when both moved to New York and ended up in the same apartment building. Before long, they were working on songs and did some home recordings.

But the two Johns, as they're sometimes called, decided to start performing and the

"We were considerably farther off stream when we first started," Linnell said. "We had done a lot of tapes that weren't strictly music. Typical sort of high school experimentation. It's kind of still with us in a way."

They still didn't know what to call the group. After trying out different names, the two Johns were saved by yet another friend.

"He was a ventriloquist," Flansburgh recalled. "He had a list of names for his own performance and one of them was 'They Might Be Giants.' We just decided to rip his name off."

Their self-titled debut album came out at the end of 1986 to nearly unanimous critical acclaim and respectable sales of 100,000 copies.

"It was incredibly informal," Linnell said. "All we were doing was taking tapes we had made and remixing them."

Both the first album and "Lincoln," their latest LP, were released by Bar-None Records, an independent label based in Hoboken, N.J. "Lincoln," consists of 18 short songs whose titles include "Purple Toupee" and "Snowball in Hell."

"I don't think we're particularly good at writing 10-minute, free improvisational songs," Flansburgh said.

Looking For A Man? Go To The West

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Listen, ladies. If you're looking for a Valentine to tie the knot, he's not going to be easy to find.

The Atlantic magazine, with the help of the U.S. Census Bureau and the National Planning Data Corporation, offers these statistics:

There are 3,138 counties in America. The male-female ratio for ages 18-44 is within 10 percentage points of absolute equality in almost all of them.

"A difference of a few percent may seem slight," the magazine reports in its February issue, "but it is in fact quite significant. Think of the situation as a game of musical chairs."

"Each marriage removes one man and one woman from the game. In a county where eligible men are 48 percent of the target age group, there are 13 single women for every 12 seats. Counting out gay and incarcerated men may remove another chair. All in all, then, there are no potential husbands in the target age group in such a county as for many as 15 percent of the women in the target age group."

One bit of advice: There are more counties with a surplus of men in the western two-thirds of the nation than in the eastern third.

Candy Man Settles Sticky Note In History

By Ron Avery
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA — Harold Platts is a modest, Southern-born gentleman. So it's only at the end of a long conversation that Platts casually drops a claim of historic importance for anyone with a sweet tooth.

Asked if he made candy apples in his tiny candy-bake shop, Platts says, "Yes. You know, I originated them. I made the first candy apple."

Historians, take note.

"It was 1919 in Savannah, Ga. I was making candy with a partner," Platts recalls. "We were making these all-day suckers. And there was a fruit stand outside. And I found this smallest roundest apple I could find."

"And I stuck it in that candy and it crystallized right away. I forgot about it. A few hours later my friend said, 'What's this?'"

"I said, 'That's my apple.' So, we broke it up and ate it. And he said, 'Man, that's pretty good. You know what, we can make money off this.'" of Savannah, and he remembers circus folks passing through town. They bought some and showed a whole lot of interest.

"The next year, I guess it was 1920, when the circus came through they were selling them," Platts says. "They called them the 'Original Coney Island Apple on a Stick.'"

Platts arrived in Philadelphia in the 1920s to work in the shipyards as a caulker of wooden ships. But since 1930 he has been in the candy business, selling his peanut brittle, candy canes and chocolate Easter eggs from one of several small candy shops he has owned.

Platts' son, Donald, 55, does most of the candy-making now. The senior candy man's health and eyesight are failing.

They don't make many items these days, but the elder Platts puts a lot of time into his handmade sweets.

"Look at this piece of candy cane," he says proudly, holding a thick rope of striped candy. "You can see sugar all the way through. Can you see it? They don't make it that way anymore."

 Trump Coup Tommy, familiar to readers of this column for his uncanny ability to perform miracles when faced with a daunting trump break, yet unable to land even the simplest of contracts, was inordinately proud of his younger son, Tim. While studying romance languages in Europe, Timmy had won a place on his temporary home's Junior European Championship team. What's more, he was showing some signs of being a chip off the old block, as this hand shows.

 West's three-club overall promised a red two-suiter. North intended his double as a request to let him have the right of way, but Timmy interpreted it as showing club values; hence his jump to four spades based on presumed fillers for his side suit.
 Ace of diamonds and another would have resulted in a one-trick set, since East must come to two more black-suit winners. The club lead, however, gave Timmy a chance he was quick to seize. He captured the queen with the ace and ed with another club. East was forced to ruff and lead away from his jack of trumps, allowing declarer to score his ten. In all, Timmy made six trump tricks, three hearts and the ace of clubs for his contract.

 Now Timmy exited with a club. East won but, down to nothing but trumps, he had no choice about his exit card. Declarer's eight was good enough to win the trick, and he exit-

Year of the SERPENT

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The Year of the Serpent — the year 4687 in the ancient Oriental lunar calendar — arrives Monday with the second new moon after winter solace, the shortest day of the year.

Following the Chinese tradition of naming years after animals, the Year of the Dragon ends as the Year of the Serpent begins. Those born in the Year of the Serpent (1905, 1917, 1929, 1941, 1953, 1965, 1977 and 1989) are said to be philosophers and thinkers. They have a great sense of responsibility, purpose and dedication, and they often occupy places of power.

While most countries in the Far East changed to the Gregorian calendar (the one we use) many years ago, they continue to celebrate festivals based on their ancient moon calendar.

To prepare for the new year, Chinese families will thoroughly clean and decorate their homes on New Year's Eve, says Soo Chan Lim, graduate student and president of the Chinese Students Association at East Carolina University. "They will get everything new for the house and get rid of old furniture and clothing," she said.

They'll wear red and decorate their homes in red, because, Ms. Lim says, red is thought to frighten away evil spirits. "That's why in the Chinese New Year red is a very important color."

"We hang strips of red paper outside the door," and they have messages of long life, good luck and a successful career on them, she said.

Firecrackers also frighten evil, Ms. Lim said. "Normally, we have a string of firecrackers to hang down from the roof" to create a loud noise for scaring the evil spirits.

On New Year's Day children are given money tied in red packets to wish them a happy new year and to wish that they won't be without money. The Chinese also visit relatives and friends and watch parades, concerts and other festive activities.

A major component of the tradition is the family meal, Ms. Lim said. "We cook a lot of food," mostly vegetables, poultry and pork.

The Chinese Students Association is celebrating with a Chinese dinner and Chinese music for Chinese students and their guests Sunday in the Mendenhall Student Center, she said. Area Chinese restaurants have contributed food and Pepsi-Cola has contributed drinks for the event, which is expected to be attended by about 100 people.

Have your own Chinese New Year celebration by trying these Chinese dishes:

HOP SING ALMOND CHICKEN

Sauce:
1/3 cup chicken broth
2 tbsps. dry sherry
1 tbsps. soy sauce
2 tps. cornstarch
1/4 tsp. sesame oil

Chicken and vegetables:
1 lb. boned, skinned chicken breasts, cut into 3-inch strips
2 tbsps. soy sauce
1 tbsps. cornstarch

1 (2 1/2-ounce) packaged sliced almonds, toasted

In a small bowl, combine sauce ingredients; set aside. In a medium bowl, combine chicken, soy sauce and cornstarch; set aside. In a large, non-stick skillet or wok, heat 3 tablespoons oil. Stir-fry chicken in two batches; remove and set aside. Add remaining oil to pan; saute garlic and ginger 30 seconds, stirring constantly to prevent burning. Turn heat to high; add carrots and celery; stir-fry 1 minute. Add zucchini and stir-fry 1 minute longer. Stir sauce ingredients and add to pan with water chestnuts and pea pods. Cook, stirring constantly, until thick and bubbling. Add chicken back to pan; toss to coat and heat through. Top with almonds and serve. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

Lance Decision Shows Consumers Do Count

Dear Readers: Consumers showing their concern can make a difference! We have already reported that the Lance Company has removed coconut and palm oil from their snack products. Unfortunately, other "nabs" are not as healthy yet. We've heard that Pepperidge Farms and Sunshine Biscuits are in the process of reformulating their products. By summer, those companies hope to have products lower in fat and cholesterol. Foods are changing. Actually, we expect to see a lot more product changes this year to help us keep our blood cholesterol under control. Food companies know we will try to eat for health — if it's not too much extra trouble! Oh yes, remember that "no cholesterol" does not mean no fat.

Q: I seem to get a lot a gas. Are there foods that do that to me and I should avoid. S.M., Ayden

A: There are many reasons you can have gas or flatulence. Some people will become uncomfortable after eating some foods. Here are some of the more common "gas formers." We have italicized the ones that affect more people. Among the vegetables are: Beans — pork and beans, kidney, lima, navy; broccoli, Brussel sprouts, cabbage, carrots, cauliflower, celery, corn, cucumbers, eggplant, kohlrabi, leeks, lentils, onion, peas, peppers (green), pimentos, potatoes, radishes, rutabagas, sauerkraut, scallions, shallots, soybeans and turnips.

Kathy Kolasa

Ph.D., ECU Dept. Family Medicine

Among the fruits are: apples (raw), avocados, cantaloupe, citrus, watermelon, prunes and prune juice, apricots, bananas, honeydew melon and raisins.

Among the breads and cereals are: pretzels, wheat germ, bagels, processed-packaged food with lactose as an ingredient and pasteries.

If any of these foods cause you gas, you should try using less in your regular meal plan. Try eating at a slower rate; chewing foods more thoroughly and not gulping down foods or liquids at meal times. By eating in a hurry, you can suck in large quantities of air and this, not the food, can cause gastric distress and gas!

If you do eliminate the foods you feel have been causing distress, and slow down your eating pace and your gas still continues, you may need to consult your family physician or local nutritionist to look more carefully at the eating patterns and overall health situation.

Heritage Of Arizona Cooking Goes Into Book

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHOENIX — "History, like an army, travels on its stomach," writes Louise DeWald in "Arizona Highways Heritage Cookbook," the first such book to be published by the state magazine.

The volume details foods of the territory from tamales of Montezuma to State House Stew of Prescott. It features more than 200 recipes from Arizona's Indian, Mexican, pioneer and cowboy heritage.

The 176-page cookbook is enhanced by historical photographs from around the state as well as color photography by Richard Embry, photographic food styling by Pam Rhodes, and illustrations throughout the book by James Metcalf and Barbara Ritz.

Ms. DeWald, who says the book "isn't a recipe collection" but "a history-of-life cookbook," has included colorful anecdotes on the origin of recipes and their preparation, including Barry Goldwater's Arizona Chili, Chile Corn Bread, Sheepherder's Salad, 100-Year-Old Oatmeal Cookies and Calf Sale Coffee. (The cookbook is available for $12.95 through Arizona Highways, 2039 W. Lewis Ave., Phoenix, AR 85009.)

The following are some sample recipes from the cookbook.

BARRY GOLDWATER'S ARIZONA CHILI

This chili was cooked up for Senatorial Chili Cookoffs and has been prepared for countless charitable events.

- 1 lb. coarse-ground beef
 - 1 lb. dry pinto beans, soaked overnight
 - 6 oz. tomato puree
 - 2 cups chopped onion
 - 3 tbsps. chili powder
 - 1 tsp. cumin
 - Salt to taste
 - Water, as needed
- Saute beef and drain off excess fat, leaving a little for flavor. Add beans, puree and onion and stir well. Mix the chili powder, cumin and salt (about 2 teaspoons to his taste) and add to chili. Bring to a boil, stirring. Turn low and cook slowly until onions and beans are tender, adding water to desired consistency as needed. "Serves 4 to 6 guests who know beans about chili."

HOT TAMALES PIE

When the late Gov. Ernest W. McFarland was a senator, his wife compiled a book of congressional wives' recipes. This mush-crust tamale pie is one of those.

- 2 cups cooked beef or pork
- 1 1/2 cups meat stock

- 1 garlic clove, minced
- 1 large onion, chopped
- 2 tbsps. chili powder
- 1/2 tsp. ground comino seed
- Salt to taste
- 1 cup pitted ripe olives
- 1 lb. cornmeal
- 3 cups boiling water
- 1 tbsps. salt

Grind meat, then combine with meat stock, garlic, onion, chili powder, comino and salt. Cook for 15 minutes. Stir in olives. Make a stiff mush by scalding cornmeal with boiling water and 1 tablespoon salt. Line a baking dish with the mush, reserving enough for the topping. Pour the meat mixture into bottom crust. Make a top crust of remaining mush. Bake 45 minutes at 345 degrees F, until golden brown. Serves 6.

SHEEPHERDER STEW

Such isolated cooks as Mrs. L. D. Harbison of Phantom Ranch, who lived at the bottom of the Grand Canyon, used this recipe frequently because jerky and salt pork were two meats that did not spoil.

- 1 lb. salt pork
- 3 onions
- 6 large potatoes, peeled and sliced
- Pepper, black or red
- Water

Slice salt pork into skillet, enough to cover bottom. Add a layer of sliced onions, then a layer of sliced potatoes. Alternate until the skillet is full, sprinkling with red or black pepper, or both. Cover with water. Place over low heat, covered securely so stew will steam. Cook slowly 30 minutes, or until potatoes are tender. Sourdough bread and stewed tomatoes are good buddies with this stew. Serves 6.

100-YEAR-OLD OATMEAL COOKIES

Billy Early, historian and early-day settler in Florence, contributed this cookie recipe which has been in her family for generations.

- 1/2 cup butter, soft
- 2 eggs
- 1 cup white sugar
- 1 cup brown sugar
- 2 1/2 cups white flour
- 1 cup oatmeal
- 1/4 tsp. baking soda
- 1/2 tsp. cream of tartar

- 1 tsp. vanilla
- 1 cup nuts and/or 1 cup raisins, optional

Mix together the first four ingredients. Mix together the flour, oatmeal, soda and cream of tartar. Combine both with vanilla until well blended. Add nuts or raisins, if desired. Roll in balls and place on cookie sheets. Bake for 10 minutes at 375 F degrees. Makes 5 dozen.

- ¼ cup sugar
- Vegetable oil
- ½ tsp. salt

Bring 3 cups water to a rolling boil in deep saucepan. Add walnuts; boil 1 minute. Rinse under hot water; drain. Toss walnuts with sugar. Heat 1/2 inch oil to 350 degrees in deep saucepan. With slotted spoon, add half the walnuts to the oil. Fry, stirring constantly, about 5 minutes, or until walnuts are golden. Repeat with remaining walnuts. Sprinkle with salt. Drain peaches, reserving all liquid. Beat eggs on high speed of electric mixer until thick and pale in color. Gradually beat in 1 cup sugar; continue beating until sugar dissolves, about 5 minutes. Blend in ½ cup reserved peach liquid and 1 teaspoon vanilla. Combine flour, baking powder and salt; fold into egg mixture. Pour batter into prepared pan; spread evenly. Bake at 375 degrees 20 minutes, or until lightly browned.

Loosen edges and dust cake with powdered sugar; cover cake with cloth towel. Turn pan upside down; remove parchment and turn cake right side up with walnuts down. Roll up jelly-roll fashion starting from short side; cool. Meanwhile, blend remaining reserved peach liquid with cornstarch in saucepan. Heat, stirring constantly, until mixture boils and thickens. Reserve 1 peach half. Place remaining halves in food processor or blender container. Cover and process until smooth. Blend into cornstarch mixture with remaining 1 tablespoon vanilla; cool. Cajuns Change Their Eating Habits

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAFAYETTE, La. — Rich, highly seasoned Cajun food is still a hot item nationwide, but restaurants in the heart of Acadiana have spotted a trend toward healthier dining. "People have changed their eating habits," says Jimmy Blair, owner of Blair House Restaurant here. "They're eating less beef and eating more fish and chicken." Cajun food, traditionally rich in calories, is hearty fare, featuring thick gravy, fatty meats and zesty seasoning. But new recipes are focusing on the grill instead of deep-fat frying, and sauteing instead of smothering in gravy.

"People are eating lots healthier, but not totally," Blair said. "They're shying away from fried foods, but they'll still have a cocktail or two."

And what about bread pudding or cheese cake?

"You can still tempt them with a rich dessert," he said.

Even the types of crawfish dishes are changing. Customers are eating more of the shellfish, but now prefer it sauteed with butter and wine, instead of the traditional etouffee or bisque, both of which have heavy gravy.

"We still sell it, but not as much," Blair says, adding that some customers prefer the sauteed crawfish as a topping on fish or chicken.

His own family has made the switch to better eating.

"When you exercise, you may forget it in six months," Blair said. "But when you change your eating habits, it's permanent. Looking back, we've changed our family's eating habits almost subconsciously."

He admitted, however, that once a week, he and his wife treat themselves to a filet mignon — "and really enjoy it."

Randy Hamilton, Don's Seafood and Steakhouse's kitchen manager, said that only a few years ago, 75 percent of the restaurant's sales were fried foods. Today, that amount has dropped by 40 percent.

"About 60 percent of our customers are eating broiled food," Hamilton says. "We now have a diet side where we serve broiled chicken or broiled fish with a plain baked potato and salad."

Customers have also scaled back on sweets, Hamilton observed.

"We used to make three to four batches of bread pudding and cheese cake a day," he says. "Now it's just one batch a day. They've cut way back on dessert."

At Angelle's Restaurant, owner J.C. Sharp said, the menu doesn't list the lighter foods, but waitresses can tell diners what is available.

"The fried foods area is still doing more (business) than the salad area, but the lighter area has increased by 12 percent in the last 2 years," he said. "We're seeing a trend."

Pepper sauce? "We're going real light on the seasonings," he said. "Customers can ask for light seasoning or for no seasoning at all."

Some foods are broiled with lemon juice rather than seasoning.

"There're more people coming in to Lafayette," Sharp said. "So we also have to look at this on the positive side. Other people are coming in to taste Cajun food, but some of them also want to eat light."

He's noticed children, however, still prefer the heavier, fried foods.

Italian Food Works Its Way Into Trendy Status

By Patrick Ercolano
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Look what they've done to our food, Ma. Something has happened to Italian food in recent months. No longer merely the hearty, easy-to-fix staple of countless American homes and restaurants, Italian fare has become molto trendy.

I confess this development tickles me. My three brothers and I grew up on Italian food — lasagna, spaghetti, about a dozen other pasta dishes, meatballs, eggplant Parmesan, cannoli, etc. — lovingly and masterfully prepared by my mother. It strikes me as peculiar that this food — our food — has suddenly become so, how you say, to-die-for, hotter-than-hot, I've-got-Robin-Leach-on-hold trendy. For various reasons, most notably the ease and low cost of its preparation and the high nutritional value of its ingredients (low-fat olive oil and carbohydrate-rich pasta, to name two), Italian food has entered the realm of contempo hotness. Call it heartland food with a Neapolitan accent.

Indeed, all things Italianate seem to be enjoying a spell under the glaring spotlight accorded most modern trends. Why? Probably because it is the Italians' turn. Next year may bring a fascination with all things Huguonot.

To wit: Italian fashion has been the subject of more than usual interest, and the language itself is experiencing a boom. Berlitz International Inc., the language school, reported that enrollments in Italian classes rose 26 percent during the first four months of 1988, compared with the first quarter of the previous year.

Total exports from Italy to the United States, everything from furnishings to food, grew from $5.8 billion in 1983 to $11.7 billion in 1987. The number of Italian restaurants in the United States increased to 5,142 in 1987, up 1,000 from two years before, according to a national restaurant consulting organization. In addition, a National Restaurant Association poll found that Italian fare is the most popular ethnic cuisine among American restaurant-goers.

Not only have the people spoken, but so have the pros. At the National Conference on Gastronomy given by the American Institute of Wine and Food last year in New York, the attendees voted that the preeminent cooking style of today is no longer French but Italian.

This goes beyond pasta salads, of course. Top-rank chefs in American restaurants are, so to speak, Italianizing their menus with traditional tomato sauce entrees as well as more arty creations, such as veal in tuna sauce and Southwestern pizza made with chiles and grilled shrimp.

Finally, to wash down all this fine Italian fare, what better way than with an Italian beer? To the rescue comes Peroni, the top-selling brew in Italy and newly arrived to American shores.

At any rate, writing about Italian food is an OK way to pass time, but it pales tragically next to eating the stuff.

HOMEMADE TOMATO SAUCE

1 small onion, chopped fine
1 clove garlic, chopped fine
1 28-oz. can crushed tomatoes
1 tsp. tomato paste
2 cans whole tomatoes (to be pulped by hand)
Dash of basil
Salt and pepper to taste

Pour oil into a large pot. When it's hot, add onion and garlic. Brown them, being careful not to burn them. Add crushed tomatoes and paste, then stir well. Add pulped whole tomatoes and stir well. Stir in basil, salt and pepper. Turn gas to low and let cook for about an hour. Stir occasionally, especially the bottom of the pot. Taste during cooking to see if the sauce is too tart; if so, you may want to add a little sugar. After an hour, if the sauce seems too liquidy, let it cook longer till thicker.

Leftover sauce can be put in jars and refrigerated for a few days. If put in freezer, jarred sauce should keep for months.

(Option: After browning the onion and garlic and before adding the tomatoes, you may want to brown a piece of pork in the mixture. This will give the sauce a meaty flavor.)

STUFFED PASTA SHELLS

4 eggs
2 lbs. ricotta cheese
8 to 12 oz. mozzarella cheese
Fresh chopped parsley
Black pepper to taste (salt is optional)
1 pkg. large pasta shells
1 tbsp. oil or margarine

Tomato sauce (about 1 jar)
¼ cup grated Parmesan cheese
Beat eggs in a large mixing bowl. Add ricotta, mozzarella, parsley and pepper, then mix by hand until well blended. Meanwhile, boil a gallon of water for pasta (adding a tablespoon of oil or margarine so that shells won't stick together while cooking). Cook shells al dente. Drain them and then place them on paper towels, with the open section of the shell facing down. When they're cool, stuff shells with the cheese mixture. Coat the bottom of a large baking dish with tomato sauce, then lay in shells. Pour more sauce and Parmesan cheese over shells. Bake in oven for about 15 minutes at 350 degrees. Serve hot, with more sauce and Parmesan to taste.

Leftover filling can be frozen and used later in any type of baked pasta dish.

(Option: Browned ground beef and/or a package of chopped spinach can be added to cheese mixture during blending process.)

PASTA PISELLI (PASTA WITH PEAS)

5 slices raw bacon, chopped into small pieces
1 large onion, chopped fine
2 cups peas (frozen or fresh)
½ cup water
Chopped parsley
Black pepper
About one pound pasta (any type, though usually tubes or shells with this dish)

Brown bacon and onion in a large pot. Add parsley (to taste) and water. Mix. Then add peas and mix. Let cook until peas are done, about three to five minutes. Meanwhile, cook pasta according to instructions on package. Drain pasta well and then add to pea and bacon mixture in pot. Stir everything together so the pasta picks up the flavor of the mixture. Serve hot.

A Fish A Day...

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

If we ate like Eskimos, we might not have as much heart disease. Instead, many Americans pop fish oil capsules.

Both the meals of fish and the capsules provide omega-3 fatty acids, which studies show may reduce cholesterol and triglyceride levels.

Some think fish oil capsules, which thin the blood, can lead to excessive bleeding. Fish oil marketers recommend 1 to 2 grams daily.

And some experts believe that is the best way to get your fish oil, or omega-3 fatty acids — straight from the source itself. They recommend two to three fish meals a week.

Answers To Cooking Questions Aren't Half-Baked

By Candy Thomson
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

It's an answer that has always worked like a charm.

"Mom, why do I have to go to bed?"

"Because."

"Why do I have to eat my vegetables?"

"Because."

And because "because" worked with such dazzling simplicity, we were hopelessly outmatched by the time we reached eighth-grade home economics.

"Why do the eggs have to be at room temperature?"

"Why can't we open the oven door?"

"Why do we have to chill the bowl and beaters?"

The questions would be met with a sigh, eyes rolled heaven-ward and the answer: "Because."

Sufficiently cowed, we dropped our other questions. No one wanted to be the class idiot, at least not actively campaign for the job. So we sifted this powder and added that liquid and kept our questions to ourselves.

But there had to be logical answers. Let's face it, the Julia Childs and Betty Crockers of the Dark Ages did not think up these stupid rules to pass the time between plagues.

Yes, these are burning questions. Well, maybe just smoldering after all these years.

Like what is cream of tartar? No, it's not the mess that the dental hygienist mines from your molars. But it is a residue and it does have to be scraped.

Hank Kaestner at McCormick and Co. calls it "the glop that's inside wine casks."

Kaestner, director of spice procurement, says that McCormick gets its supply of cream of tartar from Italy, where very small people crawl through the very small holes in oak wine casks to scrape out the residue left after the wine has been fermented and drained out.

It is processed in Italy and shipped to McCormick ready to go into jars.

Chef Michael Baskette of International Culinary College in Baltimore says that the primary purpose of cream of tartar is to "age" egg whites before you whip them. "If a chicken lays an egg and you take it and try to whip it, you're going to have a difficult time, because the proteins haven't developed. Old eggs work better than fresh ones and cream of tartar helps the aging process."

Bringing eggs to room temperature helps, too, he says. The exact opposite works for whipping cream. Chill the beaters and bowl to get optimum fluff.

Kaestner says that as wineries in the United States switch from oak casks to steel tanks, the world supply of cream of tartar may be threatened. But it is hoped that the Old World wineries will continue to go the traditional route and the glop will continue to plop.

And speaking of plopping, why do they make different kinds of molasses. Isn't one type wretched enough? And why do they have some with sulfur and some without?

Molasses — light, dark or blackstrap — is what is left after sugar has been refined from sugar cane. During the refining process, the liquid pressed from the sugar cane is boiled, causing the sugar to crystallize so it can be extracted. Light molasses, the sweetest type, is the product of the first boiling, when the least amount of sugar has been removed. Dark molasses is the product of the second boiling, when more sugar is removed. Blackstrap is the bitter end, literally, because the maximum amount of sugar has been extracted after the third boiling. Professional roofers use blackstrap as do sadistic grandmothers, who believe it has some mythical healing powers.

The refining process uses sulfur dioxide, which lightens the color of molasses. Molasses that has not been lightened with sulfur is called unsulfured.

While we are on the subject of refining, how do they make confectioners' sugar? Frank Stowe, a refinery manager at Domino's Sugar, says that there are no secrets to turning grainy sugar into a powder. Domino's does to regular sugar what your boss does to you every day — puts the product through a grinder.

Stowe says that a small amount of corn starch, 3 1/2 percent, is added during the process to keep moisture from making the sugar clump. Domino's changes the screens in the grinder, or mill, to produce different degrees of fineness. Extremely fine sugar, or 12X, used by industrial bakers, is made with a screen with 325 wires to the inch. The home version is called 10X, and calls for a screen with 200 wires per inch.

Sugar is simple when you compare it to flour, which comes in many types. For starters, there is cake flour, regular flour and pre-sifted. Why do we need so many kinds, and what is the difference in the varieties?

It is all in the wheat, says Pam Becker, a spokeswoman for General Mills. Cake flour uses soft wheat, which is lower in protein and gluten. The lower gluten level produces a more tender cake. All-purpose flour is a blend of soft and hard wheat with a higher gluten level, which helps breads hold together better.

And pre-sifted? Becker says that if you sift flour you might as well do it to the sound of Fabian records. Flour has not required sifting since 1961, when General Mills completed a study and found that it did not make one iota of difference if you sifted and measured or just dipped your measuring cup in the canister and leveled it off.

As a matter of fact, Becker says, to make a more tender cake, substitute cake flour for all-purpose flour. Just remember that for every cup of all-purpose called for in a recipe, substitute one cup plus two tablespoons of cake flour.

The rise and fall of cakes has been a matter of deep concern in many a mom's kitchen. "Don't open the oven door!" or "Don't stomp you're feet!" are battle cries that rival "Remember the Alamo!"

But exactly what makes a puffy cake crumple?

An incorrect recipe or using the wrong kind of flour are two of the most common reasons, says Chef Baskette. Baking at a temperature that is too high is another. "It rises so fast that the structure inside the cake doesn't get a chance to develop so you get a crusty top that can't be supported by the cake."

Cooks who grease and flour the bottoms and sides of the cake pans are also making an error, he says. "Cake batter needs something to cling to while its rising. If you grease the sides, you're eliminating that surface."

What of the dastardly duo the oven door and heavy feet? A possibility, Baskette says, especially with angel food cake, which is leavened by air. But they are not usually the culprit with other baked goods.

You want to talk disaster? Cooking rice.

Cooked rice comes in two consistencies: hard and mush. It's gotten so bad that the crooks who make small appliances for the incredibly lazy have made a rice cooker.

Chef Baskette says that there is no reason for butchering rice. It is as easy as one, two: one part rice to two parts liquid. "It doesn't matter what the liquid is, it can be tomato juice. And it doesn't matter what you use to measure, your coffee cup will do."

Cook it slow, don't boil too quickly, he advises.

Armed with these amazing tips, you should be able to stay out of harm's way. So sit back and toast your new knowledge. You could do it with cooking wine, but Chef Baskette recommends that for a better flavor you should cook with what you drink. There's a difference, you know.
