Arctic Cold Comes Down South

Below-Zero Chill Factors Make Sweep From Canada To Texas

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The arctic cold wave that shocked even Alaska moved far enough south to chill Mardi Gras revelers Saturday, while blowing snow and temperatures as low as 50 degrees below zero hampered travel in the northern Rockies and Plains.

There was too much snow for a major ski competition in Colorado; a group of travelers had to be rescued from a snowbank by a freight train in Wyoming, and a small Idaho town was isolated by drifting snow.

The Northwest's giant Bonneville Power Administration, which normally has electricity to spare, sought power and water from elsewhere to meet demand for heat. Texas worried that its natural gas wells couldn't keep up with demand.

In St. Paul, high school bands marching in a winter carnaval parade that was curtailed by subzero cold faked their routines before TV cameras as loudspeakers played taped band music.

"The players will have the instruments in their mouths in playing position. But we put athletic tape on the mouthpieces so the cold metal doesn't stick to their skin," said Don Glassel, band director at Simley High School in Inver Grove Heights, Minn.

The frigid air that built up over Alaska and pushed into the Lower 48 states Tuesday brought below-zero wind chill factors to normally balmy southern Texas and freezing rain to the Texas Gulf Coast and New York City.

In North Carolina weather forecasters called for freezing temperatures across the state this weekend, and warned that snow or freezing rain could be expected in most sections of the state, including the Coastal Plains, early this week.

At sleast 23 deaths around the nation were blamed on the cold front, including four in sledding accidents.

"I wonder why we live in Minnesota," said Gloria Ball, manager of a Rockford, Minn., mobile home park that lost gas service Friday as temperatures dipped to as low as 42 below zero.

Record lows for the date Saturday included 7 degrees at Seattle; 33 below zero at Great Falls, Mont.; 29 below at Duluth, Minn., and 22 below at Billings, Mont. Records also fell as far south as Texas, with a low of 4 at Lubbock and 16 at Wichita Falls,

Public Will Have Say About Terms

By Greg Laudick
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Greenville residents will have an opportunity this week to express their opinions on a proposal which could have a profound impact on the nature of the city's local government.

On Jan. 12, the Greenville City Council approved a resolution of intent to double the length of the council members' terms and the term of the mayor from two years to four years.

But before the council can officially vote on extending the terms from 24 to 48 months, it first is bound legally to listen to the feelings of the constituents who vote elected officers into the governing positions.

At Thursday's City Council meeting at City Hall, a public hearing will be conducted on whether to amend the city's charter to provide for the extended terms.

"State law requires that before a City Council cam amend the charter to make a change like this, a public hearing must first be held," City Attorney Mac McCarley said in an interview.

"The purpose of the public hearing is to answer any questions citizens may have and allow citizens to comment on the proposed change," he said.

McCarley explained that cities in North Carolina are allowed to select one of three options regarding the length of office terms for its elected officials. Those options include two-year terms, four-year terms with all members elected at the same time or four-year terms with half the members elected every two years, also known as "staggered" terms.

"The proposal which the council will hear public comment on Thursday is for straight, four-year terms for the council and the mayor rather than the staggered terms," McCarley said.

He said state law mandates that the council may officially vote on the matter not earlier then the next regular council meeting after the public

Bus Riders Find Cold Too Much

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FARGO, N.D. — Five people were treated for frostbite and hypothermia after a 500-mile journey in below-zero weather on an unheated Greyhound Trailways bus, a passenger and hospital spokeswoman said.

"If it hadn't been for my blankets, I think we'd be in worse condition than we are now," said Dan Clark of Missoula, Mont., who said his daughter was treated for frostbite at St. Luke's Hospitals-MeritCare after they arrived here Friday on the bus from Billings, Mont.

Deb Nelson, a hospital nursing supervisor, identified the child Saturday as 4-year-old Janilynn. A total of five people from the bus were treated for cold-related maladies and later released, according to another supervisor, who declined to identify herself.

The Forum newspaper of Fargo quoted one passenger as saying he blacked out for a half-hour from hypothermia. He declined to identify himself, the newspaper reported Saturday.

Dale Bruggeman, a Greyhound supervisor in Fargo, said Saturday that the bus' alternator failed at Forsyth, Mont., about 100 miles east of Billings and 500 miles from Fargo. The malfunction left the bus essentially without heat, he said.

The passengers were invited to transfer to another, heated bus, but about seven declined, Bruggeman said. He said he did not know how many moved to the other bus.

He said the second bus was crowded and some of the transferred passengers would have had to stand, "but it would have been better than staying on that other bus, especially with the weather," he said.

British, French Diplomats Join Exodus From Kabul

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KABUL, Afghanistan — British and French diplomats left Kabul on Saturday after their nations closed their embassies, joining an exodus of Western countries as the last Soviet soldiers pull out of Afghanistan.

Britain's 19 embassy staff members and the four French Embassy workers flew aboard a chartered plane to New Delhi and arrived there Saturday evening. Their departure from Kabul was delayed a day because of a storm.

A convoy of about 40 Soviet military vehicles rolled out of the snowy capital about 3 a.m., headed toward the border.

On Friday, a huge column of tanks, armored personnel carriers and trucks slipped out under cover of darkness and headed up the Salang Highway, the only route between Kabul and the Soviet border.

The deputy foreign minister of the Soviet Union, Yuli Vorontsov, was quoted as saying the Red Army will be out of the country well ahead of the Feb. 15 deadline set by a U.N.-mediated accord.

"Within four days, there will be no Soviet forces in Afghanistan," Vorontsov was quoted as saying by Iran's official Tehran Radio during a visit to Iran.

The radio said Vorontsov would discuss with Iranian officials and Afghan resistance leaders the future of Afghanistan after the Soviets leave.

New Dean Says ECU Medical Unit Developed On Solid Base

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Dr. James A. Hallock, dean of the East Carolina University School of Medicine since Sept. 1, feels that he has inherited the leadership of "one of the best-developed new medical schools in the nation."

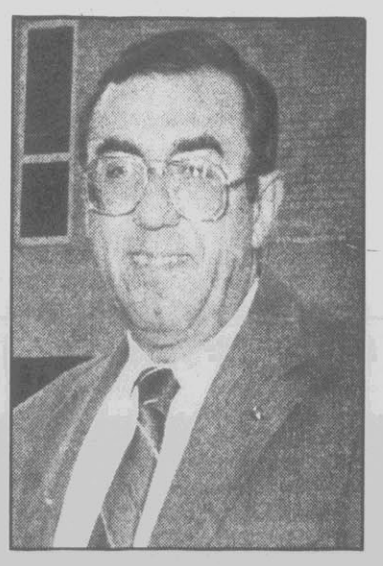

And Dr. Hallock, formerly executive dean of the college of medicine of the University of South Florida and associate dean of All Children's Hospital of the USF College of Medicine, has had an ideal vantagepoint from which to make this assessment.

He was one of the original faculty member sof a medical school that is comparable in age, size and mission to the ECU school. As both an administrator and a teacher, he participated from its opening in 1972 until last year in developing the USF medical school into a nationally accredited school with several affiliated hospitals.

It, like the ECU School of Medicine, has always had regional responsibility. It served the Tampa-St. Petersburg area which has experienced a population explosion during its 17 years.

Hallock said the ECU affiliation with Pitt County Memorial Hospital as a regional teaching hospital is probably a more stable situation than USF enjoys. USF was originally affiliated with a county-owned hospital 14 miles from its campus, but since has struck working affiliations with seven or eight other hospitals in the area, plus a Veterans Hospital, a Shriner's Hospital, a psychiatric hospital and a state-run

Future Of Pamlico Study Team Uncertain

By Angela Lingerfelt Bland
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

When millions of fish died last summer in the Pamlico River from diseases and a lack of oxygen in the water, the newly formed Pamlico Environmental Response Team (PERT) reacted immediately to fish kill reports from citizens.

But the future of that response team is uncertain until PERT's oversight committee convenes in a few weeks to review the team's accomplishments and decide if its efforts can continue.

"We don't know what the future holds for the response team," said Jess Hawkins, one of four researchers on the team based at the Washington, N.C., regional office of the state Department of Natural Resources and Community Development.

"Right now, we are gathering information collected during the last six months and making recommendations to the oversight committee."

That panel consists of Dr. Bill Hogarth, director of the N.C. Division of Marine Fisheries; Paul Wilms, director of the N.C. Division of Environmental Management; Dr. Bud Cross, director of the Southeastern Fisheries Center in Beaufort; Greenville Mayor Pro-Tem Lorraine Shinn, director of NRCD's Washington regional office; Terry Sholar, DMF Pamlico district manager; Jim Mulligan, DEM district supervisor, and Chuck Wakild, head of DEM's water quality section.

PERT was created in June 1988 to address environmental problems that affect the Tar-Pamlico River Basin, problems that include fish and blue crab diseases, fish kills and algae blooms that have alarmed citizens, fishermen and state and local officials.

The group consists of Greenville residents Raleigh Bland and

By Christopher Sullivan
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RIDGEFIELD, N.J. — Traffic droned on the New Jersey Turnpike just as on any other Tuesday morning. Commuters passed through the rest area here just as sleepy-eyed. But something was amiss, and if Robert Cieplensky hadn't spotted it someone might be dead now from the shrapnel of a homemade bomb.

Cieplensky, a New Jersey state trooper, saw a disheveled young man in the rest area parking lot, walking in circles, looking under a car, heading one way, then another. When the man got into a brown Mazda and pulled out — narrowly missing parked cars, the trooper said — he stopped him.

The Mazda turned out to contain not just Yu Kikumura, later identified as a member of the terrorist Japanese Red Army, but also electrical fusing devices, two clocks, precision tools, U.S. airline timetables, maps of New York City and other places, a bottle of Ten High whiskey and 36 $100 bills.

A search also found three foot-long steel canisters packed with gunpowder and lead shot.

Kikumura faces sentencing Monday in Newark following his November conviction for transporting the bombs "with the knowledge and intent that they would be used to kill, injure and intimidate."

What was the target? Sources had speculated it was a meeting of finance ministers in Washington or an economic summit in Toronto, but on Friday prosecutors said they had evidence that a Navy recruiting station pinpointed on Kikumura's Manhattan map was his objective and that he was acting for Libya.

Though his lawyers deny those claims, Kikumura's case and others like it raise a troubling question:

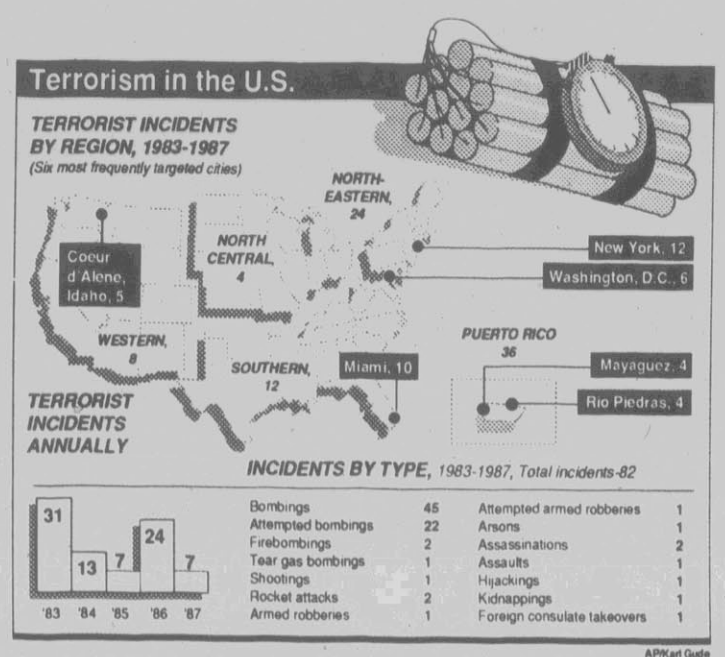

Are Americans, who have long felt safe at home, becoming more vulnerable to terrorists?

"The fact that we have been free from terrorist acts to the extent we have is in some ways amazing," said U.S. Attorney George Terwilliger III, who last year prosecuted three Lebanese natives stopped just inside the Vermont-Canada border with makeshift bombs. Federal investigators said they belonged to an organization that assassinated Lebanon's President-elect Bashir Gemayel.

"Are we vulnerable? Absolutely," said Frank Bolz Jr., whose consulting firm trains other nations' police in handling terrorist incidents.

Missing Robes

TROY, N.C. (AP) — A manhunt is on in Montgomery County for the thief who swiped the custom-made robe of Superior Court Judge Thomas W. Ross of Greensboro from the county courthouse during a luncheon recess.

"At first, I thought someone was playing a prank on me," said Ross, who had been holding court in Troy last week. "Unfortunately, the robe was given to me as a Christmas present by my wife. My name was monogrammed in the back."

Sheriff's deputies have circulated a composite sketch of the would-be jurist, which was based on descriptions of a man who asked a clerk for directions to Ross' courtroom during the recess.

The $150 black robe was taken Jan. 25 as Ross lunched with the sheriff, district attorney and other court personnel. Ross last saw his robe hanging in a lounge between the courtroom and the judge's chambers. The lounge is accessible to the public, he said.

German Radicals Say Allegiance Up

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FRANKFURT, West Germany — Right-wing radicals claim they are winning the allegiance of more mainstream Germans after capturing 11 seats in the West Berlin legislature.

"The Berlin elections show that a psychological barrier has been removed," said Michael Kuehnen, the leader of a Nazi-oriented group and a prominent right-wing extremist.

West Germany has been involved in some deep soul-searching ever since Jan. 29, when the far-right Republican Party won 11 seats in the 138-seat legislature and 7.5 percent of the vote.

With their showing, the Republicans also won the right to send two representatives to the federal Bundestag next year. West Berlin is considered a state under the West German system, but its representatives to the national parliament have limited powers.

Though a sweeping rightist trend seems virtually impossible in modern West Germany, a Jewish leader called the elections "a warning shot."

"I fear the Repubuicans have hit upon a mood that's not just in West Berlin," said Frankfurt Jewish Community spokesman Michel Friedman.

He said the strong showing by the Republican Party will make the extreme right "socially acceptable" to many West Germans.

The Republicans campaigned on a platform that included a call to oust foreign workers from the city.

Their positions won broader support than pollsters predicted, reflecting the volatile and growing nationalist sentiments stirred by housing and job shortages that are especially acute in West Berlin.

The big, established parties — the conservative Christian Democratic Union and the Social Democratic Party — won most of the rest of the seats in the West Berlin legislature.

The outcome of the West Berlin elections also mobilized activists. An estimated 10,000 people marched through downtown West Berlin on Saturday to protest the right-wing groups.

"Foreigners stay, Nazis away," shouted demonstrators, who marched peacefully.

Also Saturday, about 200 right-wing supporters of the Free German Workers Party marched in the northern city of Rotenburg, drawing a counter-demonstration by 1,200 opponents. Four hundred police officers stood by, and one minor injury was reported from a thrown rock.

In Munich, Republican Party chief Franz Schoenhuber said his members would not yield to the "terror" of demonstrators.

"On the contrary, it makes us as a law-and-order party stronger and stronger," the 66-year-old former Nazi SS soldier told reporters last week.

"The danger is certainly there, since they're conducting their campaign with Pied Piper techniques," said Gov. Lothar Spaeth of Baden-Wuerttemberg, a Christian Democrat.

Some West Germans point to other troubling signs:

—The Republicans are expected to field candidates in some of the municipal elections this year in five more states.

—Right-wing extremists already are making elaborate plans to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the birth of Hitler on April 20. The number of extreme rightists is estimated at about 28,300 by the federal Interior Ministry.

—A flood of asylum-seekers, numbering 103,076 last year alone, has been angering some people in towns and cities across West Germany.

Nelson Adams presents award to Mitchell Greene.

Reflector Carrier Wins Ireland Trip

R. Mitchell Greene of Greenville will visit Ireland in April through a program sponsored by PARADE Magazine and The Daily Reflector.

The Young Columbus program rewards outstanding young Americans annually with an expense-paid educational and cultural journey abroad. The participants are newspaper carriers between the ages of 12 and 17 who are chosen on the basis of scholarship, citizenship and overall route performance. They also are students who compete in academic contests through Newspaper-In-Education programs.

Presented the award by Nelson Adams, circulation director of the Reflector, Greene has been a newspaper carrier for the newspaper for three years. The son of Bruce and Judy Greene, he is a student at E.B. Aycock Junior High School where he participates in the gifted and talented program, the Future Business Leaders of America and the pep and honors bands. He also is a charter member of the University Church of God and enjoys reading, electronics, basketball and computers.

The Columbus program was launched in 1956, and there have been 32 trips to such countries as England, Scotland, Austria, France, Switzerland, Germany, Yugoslavia, Italy, Spain, Portugal, Norway and Denmark. The participants have met monarchs, presidents, ambassadors and local mayors of the host countries, and they have an opportunity to exchange ideas with local youths through special get-togethers.

The participants are chaperoned by PARADE escorts, and counselors — college seniors chosen from some of the country's top universities — are each assigned 12 youngsters for whom they are responsible throughout the trip.

This is the second year the Reflector has participated in the program.

Tesmond Plays Major Role As City Lands N.C. Police Chiefs' Meeting

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The safest place in town for the next few days may be the Ramada Inn in Greenville, where more than 150 police chiefs from across the state are set to gather for a four-day conference.

"It's considered one of the biggest (conventions) we've had," Al Nichols, executive director of the Pitt-Greenville Convention and Visitor Bureau, said of the 12th annual convention of the North Carolina Association of Chiefs of Police.

The officers are scheduled to begin registering Sunday, and the conference is expected to generate over $60,000 in revenue for the area, Nichols said. The bureau landed the convention last fall, he said, after Greenville Police Chief Jerry Tesmond convinced the organization to consider Greenville.

"We played a role in it. The main one who should get the credit is the chief himself. (The convention) had never been held here, and he was determined to bring it here," Nichols said.

During the organization's mid-year meeting at Wrightsville Beach, Tesmond said he lobbied for the group to meet next in Greenville.

"The city of Greenvile has never had this conference, and it's somewhat prestigious," Tesmond said. "We're bringing in some heavyweight speakers."

Tesmond, a graduate of the FBI National Academy, said he called on some old friends to speak at the convention.

John Otto, executive assistant director of the FBI, is scheduled to address the group Tuesday. Charles D. Reynolds, chief of the Dover, N.H., Police Department and newly elected president of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, is also scheduled to speak.

Tesmond is chairman of the Education and Training Committee for the international association.

Two of the more interesting seminar topics will deal with the use of DNA for identification and serial crimes in North Carolina, Tesmond said. Officials from the SBI will conduct both seminars. The State Bureau of Investigation is also scheduled to conduct a session on the impact drugs have on the state.

Because the convention receives statewide notoriety, Nichols said the event will boost the city's chances of landing other statewide meetings.

"It is prestigious. We've not had many state conventions here in Greenville. These are the real opportunities for us. In the not too distant past, we really didn't have the meeting and hotel facilities we have now.

"It's bringing in people from throughout the region, and the (state) Attorney General, (Lacy Thornburg, who is scheduled to speak Monday morning). It does have statewide attention, and we do not get many coventions like that. We hope to get a lot in the future."

Most state conventions are booked a year or two in advance, Nichols said, therefore he was pleasantly surprised to learn last fall that the group was considering Greenville for this year's meeting.

In addition to providing each police chief with a packet of maps, the bureau is to give each person brochures on area sites such as the Greenville Museum of Art, Riverpark North and regional attractions in New Bern and Bath.

The bureau has organized a reception for the chiefs on Monday evening. Several area lawmakers are expected to attend the function, which is sponsored by AT&T, Nichols said.

Teachers Say Pay Plan Puzzle Leaves Them Cold

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — While North Carolina struggles with proposals to provide merit pay for teachers and increase their level of professionalism, there is growing sentiment to put more energy into revamping the pay scale from the ground up.

In 1982, the year of a recession, the General Assembly began a practice that has continued through the years: It didn't fund the pay-step increases that come with seniority. The result: Teachers with varying years of experience were stuck on the same pay step. Only in 1985 was the pay-step increase authorized.

As the yearly pay-step freezes piled up, it became more difficult for teachers to keep track of where they were and where they should have been on the scale.

"A good majority of our teachers don't even know where to begin to be sure that they are being paid adequately and accurately," said Cheryl Umberger, a spokesman for the Charlotte-Mecklenburg Association of Educators. "And it's not the school system's fault. I think they're as confused and negatively impacted as employees."

For example, Olympic High School's David Schneider has been a classroom teacher for eight years, but he's paid as if he had only two years of experience.

With a wife and two children, he makes $21,594 during a 10-month school year — about $2,000 more than a beginning teacher.

Myers Park High School history teacher Kent Walker has a master's degree, 17 years of experience, and earns $29,560 a school year. During his career, his seniority pay has been frozen six times.

"I should be paid $5,000 more than I'm being paid," he said. "If this situation continues I may be better off looking for employment in a state that has a more professional pay scale."

Schneider and Walker are among thousands of North Carolina teachers and other state employees who are fed up with low salaries, little or no raises and a confusing state pay schedule that has been only partially funded since 1982.

Teachers' groups have been concerned for several years, but this year, Gov. Jim Martin's proposed freeze on all state employee raises until April 1990 struck a nerve.

The question now is how to fix the pay scale and how much it will cost.

"There seems to be a growing consensus that looking at a multiyear implementation of a new plan is the way to go," forum Executive Director John Dornan told The Charlotte Observer. "I think the question is, can you come up with something affordable?"

The cost of revamping the schedule could be almost $200 million a year over a three-year phase-in period.

"We are so far behind on the current schedule," said NCAE President Karen Garr, "it would just about bankrupt the state to try to put us back on schedule."

The NCAE is calling for a 30-step pay scale — under which teachers would move up one step for each year of experience. Each time a teacher moved up a step, he or she would get a 9.5 percent pay increase. In addition, the legislature could decide to add an across-the-board cost-of-living in crease.

Under the plan, a beginning teacher with a bachelor's degree would earn $20,000 a year. Top salary for a teacher with a bachelor's degree would be $42,540. Currently on the state scale, a beginning teacher with a bachelor's degree earns $18,330 a year. Top salary for a teacher with a bachelor's degree is $28,895.

The Public School Forum of North Carolina, a coalition of edcation and business leaders, is proposing a similar plan. But the pay steps would be smaller — about 2 percent a year. That would leave room for across-the-board increases and increases that would stem from the career development merit pay raises, Dornan said.

According to a study by the Southeastern Educational Improvement Laboratory in Research Triangle Park, the average North Carolina teacher earns $21,728 a year, while the average college-educated worker in other professions earns $31,255 a year.

"What we're saying," said program manager Joseph Haenn, "is that teachers are tremendously underpaid given their qualifications."

Annoyed Gov. Martin leaves Hickory stage after meeting with teachers about his pay plan

Upset Teachers Confront Martin, But: 'I Don't Think He Heard Us'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HICKORY, N.C. — Gov. Jim Martin answered questions from more than 400 angry teachers for nearly an hour, but when it was over, teachers still weren't satisfied.

"I think he was irritated when he came in," said Sue Travis, president of the Catawba County Schools' chapter of the North Carolina Association of Educators. "He was just killing time. I think we'll have more in Raleigh than ever on Feb. 14."

NCAE officials in Raleigh discovered Friday that Martin was coming to Hickory to speak at the kickoff dinner of Lenoir-Rhyne College's $24 million centennial campaign. They hastily arranged a meeting with local teachers at the Arts Center of Catawba Valley before his speech.

The teachers were concerned about salaries, the Basic Education Plan and the Career Ladder program, but they questioned Martin primarily about Career Ladder, a statewide career development, a performance-based merit pay plan.

"Students in classes with teachers under the Career Ladder have done remarkably better on their test scores than those in other classes. I know it's not perfect, but it's better than the alternative," Martin said.

"I wish you will listen to teachers," one said. "We don't like the Career Ladder as is. They've taken surveys and 93 percent of teachers are against it."

Martin disagreed.

"Your association took a survey and your local presidents voted by proxy," he said. "Of those teachers that participated in the program for the last three years, 58 percent were in favor of it."

The teachers erupted.

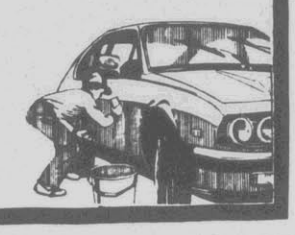

"No," cried Sue Travis as she laid a stack of survey forms from the teachers in her district on the stage. "That's not true. These are my votes and 519 members voted no and 30 voted yes."

At one point, Martin wanted to see the hands of those teachers who believed that education was getting "a smaller slice of the pie."

Legislator Proposes Road Tax Increase

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A legislator who has proposed increasing North Carolina's gasoline tax by 16 cents per gallon said he envisioned his bill as a starting point for discussions and did not expect it to be enacted without changes.

The increase would generate $22.5 billion for highway construction over the next 15 years, he said, adding that the tax increase probably would be combined with a bond issue and other revenue sources.

"The public is ready to look to someone who will have the courage to address the highway needs of this state," Dawkins said.

North Carolina currently levies an excise tax on motor fuels of 14 cents per gallon, plus 3 percent of the average wholesale price of motor fuel, a figure that is calculated every six months.

Currently, the wholesale tax is about 1.7 cents per gallon, making the total tax just under 16 cents per gallon, according to Bill Jones, spokesman for the state Department of Transportation.

The Dawkins bill would boost the tax to 30 cents per gallon plus the 3 percent at the wholesale level for 15 years. In the year 2004, the flat rate would revert to the current 14 cents.

Dawkins, chairman of the House Government Committee and a member of the Finance Subcommittee on Ways and Means, is one of the 20 Democrats who rebelled against former Speaker Liston Ramsey and formed a bipartisan coalition to replace him with Joe Mavretic.

Dawkins is a close Mavretic ally and was the point man in implementing the new speaker's reorganization plan for the House. But Dawkins insisted that he was introducing the tax bill on his own.

Mavretic agreed, saying he had not known of Dawkins' plan to introduce the bill.

"It's one way to get the money," Mavretic said. "You're going to see a lot of bills that will offer funding mechanisms for the highway package. I suspect the final bill that comes out will be a mixture of several funding mechanisms which will provide the money for the system."

A House-Senate study commission has been working for more than a year to fashion a program. It has been bogged down in debate over how ambitious a program the taxpayers will accept and how to fairly divide the money between urban and rural projects and between all regions.

Mavretic said he hoped the negotiations, in which Gov. Jim Martin is a key player, will produce a proposal in a week to 10 days.

Housing Study

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — A study at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill may help determine whether home ownership is beneficial enough to low-income families to warrant continued government subsidies.

William Rohe, associate professor of city and regional planning at UNC, said there is some question whether the poor benefit as much from home ownership as others.

Tobacco Growers Told Quotas Will Rise For Next Two To Three Years

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — While this season's flue-cured tobacco quota increased 18 percent over 1988, experts say the amount of tobacco grown will stabilize after a few more years.

Bruce A. Babcock, a North Carolina State University assistant professor for economics and business, said Friday that the growing number of cigarettes manufactured for export would account for "moderate increases" of 5 percent to 10 percent for the next two or three years. U.S. companies are expected to eventually snare about 25 percent of the market in Asian countries such as Japan, South Korea and Taiwan that just opened up to U.S. cigarette imports.

"I think you'll see a rough stability in three to eight years in the demand for American-made cigarettes," he said, and that will stabilize the quota.

Quotas are set according to manufacturers' buying intentions, export volume and the reserve supply desired.

Babcock also told farmers at the annual meeting of the Tobacco Growers Association of North Carolina that the 1986 Tobacco Reform Act is doing what it was meant to do. While quotas are going up, the provision of the reform act in which companies agreed to buy out stocks of old tobacco has reduced the excess by 34 percent, he said.

"When asking if the tobacco reform program has been successful, you have to say yes on one of its most important aspects, and that is control of supply," he said.

The setting of quotas "are much more of a market-based approach" than before, he said. "It's a self-adjusting program. If you let the tobacco program work and don't change it, you won't let the supply and price situations get out of control like you did in the early 80s."

T. Carlton Blalock, executive vice president of the association, said the value of the crop had risen so dramatically in the past three years that it equals some new industries in the state. The $883 million the 1989 tobacco crop is expected to bring in is $200 million more than that in 1986.

"The increase alone is equal to the total value of the state's projected corn crop for 1989," he said.

The combination of favorable growing conditions and a competitive market gave the state's tobacco producers their best year of the decade, he said, and there's optimism for a repeat this year.

"It's been a good year," he said. "If the weather cooperates, it will be another good year."

Murder Charge

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A Mecklenburg man has been charged with murder in the death of a University of North Carolina at Charlotte student earlier this month, authorities say.

Mecklenburg County police arrested Rodney Lee Montgomery, 22, about 6:15 p.m. Friday and charged him in the stabbing death of Kimberly Piccolo. Montgomery had been paroled two days before the killing.

Weight Loss Pill Approved for U.S. Gov't. Patent

BEVERLY HILLS, CA (Special)—An amazing new weight loss pill called "fat-magnet" has recently been developed and perfected by two prominent doctors at a world famous hospital in Los Angeles that reportedly "guarantees" you steady fat loss and calorie reduction by simply taking their tested and proven new pill.

The U.S. government has just approved the doctors claims for a hard-to-get patent that confirms "there has never been anything like their fat-bonding pill process before." It is a totally new major scientific breakthrough and is revolutionizing the weight loss industry.

You Can "Eat Normally"

Best of all, "you can continue to eat your favorite foods and you don't have to change your normal eating habits. You can start losing fat and reduce calories from the very first day, until you achieve the ideal weight you desire without exercising".

Flushes Fat Out of Body

The new pill is appropriately called the "fat-magnet" pill because it breaks into thousands of particles, each acting like a tiny magnet, "attracting" and trapping many times its size in undigested fat particles. Then, all the trapped fat and calories are naturally "flushed" right out of your body because they cannot be absorbed.

Within 2 days you should notice a change in the color of your stool, caused by the fat particles being eliminated.

"Automatically" Lose Fat

According to one of the inventors, Dr. William Shell, heart specialist and associate professor of medicine at UCLA medical school, "the new fat-bonding process is a "lazy way" to lose weight because the pills alone "automatically" reduce calories by eliminating dietary fat. It is 100% safe and not a drug."

The fat-magnet pills are already sweeping the country with glowing reports of weight loss from formerly overweight people in all walks of life who are now slimmer, trimmer and more attractive again.

Now Available to the Public

If you are trying to lose 20, 50, 100 pounds or more, you can order your supply of these "no-risk" highly successful fat-magnet pills directly from the doctors' exclusive manufacturer only (includes optional calorie-reduction plan for even better results). Send $20 for a 90 pill supply (+$3 handling), or $35 for a 180 pill supply (+$3 handling), to: Fat-Magnet, 9016 Wilshire Blvd., Dept. W634, Beverly Hills, CA 90211. (Unconditional money-back guarantee if not 100% satisfied.) Visa, MasterCard and American Express OK. (Send card number, expire date, and signature.) For fastest service for credit card orders ONLY call anytime 24 hours, toll free 1(800) 527-9700, ext. W634.

Lt. Gov. Gardner rubs his eyes during debate on drug plan

Democratic Women Challenge Davis

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — About 50 Democratic women stopped short of calling for the resignation of chairman Lawrence Davis III but asked the party to reassess his leadership in the wake of comments that Democrats should re-examine their stand on abortion.

"Women are the majority stockholders in the Democratic Party. We will not allow our party, which we have built, nurtured and strengthened, to be the victim of a hostile takeover," former state Sen. Wilma Woodard said Friday at a news conference on the stairs of the Democratic Party headquarters.

Davis said he would call a meeting of top party leaders Wednesdayy to disuss the issue. He also issued an apology.

Davis said in a prepared statement that the women's views "will be duly considered."

"I regret having made a statement of personal opinion that was taken as a public expression of policy," he said. "Democratic Party policy is arrived at through established procedures that must be honored."

He went on to say, "As members of the party of progressive leadership and compassionate government, we need to move forward to the establishment of sound public policy that will serve the broad interests of our people in the pursuit of a better life."

The action came a week after published reports in which Davis was quoted as saying he personally opposes abortion and that the party should not take stands on such issues to avoid alienating more conservative voters.

"Mr. Davis has every right to his personal views," Ms. Woodard said. "But as a leader of our party, his obligation is to provide strong, active leadership for the party's platform."

Ms. Woodard emphasized the long-term contributions women have made to the party and the extensive work that went into the platform.

"Perhaps Mr. Davis is not aware of the lengthy process which shaped this platform, involving hundreds of hours of working and listening by hundreds of Democrats from across this state," she said. "Perhaps he is not aware that the party's stand on reproductive freedom is in the mainstream, supported by Republicans and Democrats alike.

"In fact, 79 percent of the voters in this state oppose efforts to ban abortion. A majority of voters support the state abortion fund. And over 52 percent of the voters in this state are women," Ms. Woodard said.

She said she was citing a 1987 poll, conducted by FGI Research in Chapel Hill for Planned Parenthood of Greater Charlotte.

The group that took issue with Davis inlcuded most of the Democratic female state legislators, a former state Cabinet secretary, a member of the state Utilities Co mmission and a Raleigh City Council member, as well as women who have held key position in various statewide political campaigns.

Rep. Judy Hunt, D-Watauga, said all but three of the Democratic women in the General Assembly had signed a petition endorsing Ms. Woodard's statement. Those who did not sign were Reps. Beverly Perdue, D-Craven, Edith Lutz, D-Cleveland, and Jo Graham Foster, D-Mecklenburg. But Ms. Hunt said they may not have been asked to sign because of the haste in preparing for the news conference.

School Officials Say Gardner Drug Plan May Duplicate Existing Rules

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Lt. Gov. Jim Gardner called for mandatory drug education from kindergarten through high school, but others said it wasn't clear if such a program would duplicate others already in effect.

Howard Haworth, chairman of the Board of Education, said there was "very specific language" on drug instruction in a set of standards for accrediting schools that the board adopted last summer.

In a telephone interview from his Morganton home, Haworth said it was not immediately clear whether Gardner's plan would merely duplicate existing policy or break new ground.

"I'd have to see the lieutenant governor's proposal and we'd have to cross-reference it with the provisions in the mandatory accreditation program, and then the full board would have to study the implications," Haworth said.

Gardner's proposal was quickly endorsed by the North Carolina Drug Cabinet, a group of Cabinet and Council of State officers established by Gov. Jim Martin and chaired by the lieutenant governor.

Gardner said the cost could be partially covered by levying an additional fine on convicted criminals.

But Superintendent of Public Instruction Bobby Etheridge, a member of the Drug Cabinet who left Friday's meeting before Gardner unveiled his plan, said later that the State Board of Education already had taken a stand in favor of mandatory drug instruction.

Etheridge, reached by telephone, said he would look at the plan but did not know enough about it to comment. "I don't know what he's talking about, in all honesty," he said.

Etheridge appeared miffed that Gardner had not told him about the plan before making it public. "It's always helpful to be infor ed about what someone wants you to do," he said. "I thought this (meeting) was a briefing session. If I had known he was going to come up with this I would have stayed."

Gardner unveiled his plan at the end of the Drug Cabinet's first substantive meeting, at which experts painted a bleak picture of a growing drug problem in the state.

"The single (most) important area we need to address and we need to address immediately is in the area of education," Gardner told reporters. Cutting off the supply and treating users are important, "but if we long-term are going to do something about this, then we've got to start getting it in the schools."

Aside from recommending that the program be established, Gardner made no specific proposals about its contents except that it require school systems to establish "definite sanctions" for using drugs on school grounds. He said in an interview that students who take drugs at school should be suspended and treated.

He declined to estimate the program's cost, saying that and other details should be worked out by professionals in the Department of Public Instruction. Gardner said he hoped Etheridge and the State Board of Education would support his plan.

North Carolina is one of five states that have no law requiring substance abuse education, no minimum curriculum standards and no requirement that teachers be certified for drug instruction, Gardner said.

Steven L. Hicks, director of the Department of Public Instruction's Alcohol and Drug Defense Program, said all North Carolina school systems have drug education programs but "we really have no way of knowing how that drug education program is being implemented at the school level."

"Any attempt to clarify and coordinate efforts, especially to bring additional resources to schools to implement it" would be welcome, Hicks said.

State law requires health education for all students, and the Basic Education Program's Standard Course of Study includes a reference to teaching about alcohol and drugs but prescribes no specific curriculum, Hicks said.

Gardner said he hoped the Department of Public Instruction could develop a program quickly enough to present to the General Assembly for approval this year.

The law should include a provision levying an additional fine on convicted criminals, which would be earmarked for drug education, he said. The revenue would be distributed as grants to each county to fund the instructional programs.

Several speakers emphasized the need for better drug education.

Worth Bolton, director of the psychiatric ward at Charter Northridge Hospital in Raleigh, said many television programs and advertisements glorify drug and alcohol use, diluting the effect of warnings about the dangers.

"I'm not a neo-prohibitionist, but I think we need to carefully consider what messages we send when we teach success and alcohol are hand in hand," Bolton said.

He endorsed starting drug education in kindergarten, saying many students are confronted with the choice of whether to drink or take drugs by the time they are in the fifth or sixth grade.

David Jones, director of the Criminal Justice Analysis Center of the Governor's Crime Commission, said more than 375,000 North Carolinians are believed to have smoked marijuana within the last 30 days.

Marijuana is the state's top cash crop, having generated $1.5 billion last year while the tobacco crop was worth $738 million, Jones said.

Officials estimate that 160,000 North Carolinians have used cocaine within the past 30 days, he said. Consumption of cocaine in the state is believed to have exceeded 4,000 pounds last year.

Such statistics indicate the drug abuse problem is worsening and is contributing to an increase in robberies and break-ins as addicts seek money to support their habits, Jones said.

IN THE STATE

Mudd To Speak

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — Broadcast journalist Roger Mudd will be the commencement speaker at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill on May 14.

Mudd, of McLean, Va., joined the MacNeil-Lehrer NewsHour in 1987. He has been congressional correspondent for the television news program since September 1987 and previously was a special correspondent and essayist.

Mudd spent the previous seven years at NBC, where he was chief Washington correspondent, chief political correspondent, co-anchor of the "NBC Nightly News," co-host of "Meet the Press," and anchor of "American Almanac" in 1986.

Mudd moved to NBC from CBS News, which he joined in 1961 and where he worked for 19 years as congressional correspondent and national affairs correspondent.

Mudd graduated from Washington and Lee University in 1950, and earned a master's degree in American history from the UNC-Chapel Hill in 1951.

Obscenity Arrests

SANFORD, N.C. (AP) — Four people were charged with disseminating obscenity after a raid on an adult bookstore in Sanford, officials said.

The arrests at Sanford Video and News Exchange culminated a 10-month undercover investigation, said Maj. Wayne Poe of the Sanford police. He said agents confiscated magazines, movies and sexual aids during a search of the business Friday.

Frederick Dewayne Artherhults, 21, of Spring Hope was charged with disseminating obscenity and operating an adult establishment and was being held on $2,000 bond. Brian Dean Gittins, 21, of Sanford, was charged with two counts each of disseminating obscenity and operating an adult establishment and was held on $2,500 bond.

Robert Christopher Campbell, 18, and Tammy Kay, 25, both of Sanford, each were being held on $1,000 bond on a charge of disseminating obscenity.

Alleghany Standoff

SPARTA, N.C. (AP) — An Alleghany County man surrendered Friday after a brief standoff in which several shots from a rifle and a shotgun were fired at officers parked outside his house, officers say.

Franklin Delano Williams, 52, was charged with firing between 12 to 15 shots at officers at his home southeast of Sparta. He was placed in the Allehany County Jail under $25,000 bond.

No one was injured, authorities said.

Alleghany Sheriff's Detective J.L. Wagoner Jr. said the shooting incident began after a county dispatcher received a call from Williams about 2:30 a.m. Friday. Williams told the dispatcher that there was a dispute at his home and an officer was needed, Wagoner said.

Volunteer

RALEIGH (AP) — Marta Bullard of Fayetteville, an advocate of child-abuse prevention in North Carolina, has been named the winner of the 1989 Volunteer Service to Children Award by the North Carolina Child Advocacy Institute.

Mrs. Bullard founded Concern for Children of Cumberland County, a coalition of agencies and individuals dedicated to prevention of child abuse. Through her local work, she became a leader in the successful 1983 statewide effort to establish the Children's Trust Fund, the first state funding for child-abuse prevention.

Mavretic Says He, Governor Near Accord On Hazardous Waste Plan

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Gov. Jim Martin and House Speaker Joe Mavretic have reached a "pretty clear agreement" on a new direction for North Carolina's hazardous waste program, with details to be announced in two weeks, Mavretic said.

The General Assembly put a virtual freeze on a proposed hazardous waste plant last year after the N.C. Hazardous Waste Treatment Commission picked a potential site for it in Lee County. The selection raised a storm of protest among residents and legislators, as had previous sites in Davidson and Rowan County.

Martin met privately with key legislators Wednesday to unveil a new proposal, the "Industrial Waste Management Act of 1989." But the legislators, who questioned some of the bill's provisions, persuaded Martin to delay its introduction.

The bill would replace the Hazardous Waste Treatment Commission, whose members were appointed by the governor and leading legislators, with an "industrial waste commission" appointed entirely by Martin. The new panel would pick a site for a state treatment plant — something the current commission was assigned to do before the legislature put those efforts on hold.

The action followed up Martin's proposal last month that he be given the authority to find a site and "take the heat" of making the decision.

State officials have scheduled a news conference with Mavretic, Martin and officials from North Carolina State University on Wednesday to discuss a "major initiative" on hazardous waste.

North Carolina is being pressed by industries and by South Carolina to build some kind of treatment plant or landfill for hazardous waste. Gov. Carroll Campbell of South Carolina announced last month that his state's hazardous waste landfill will not accept any more waste from North Carolina after March 1 unless North Carolina against starts developing a landfill or treatment facility of its own.

In addition, every state must prove to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency by mid-October that it has the capacity to dispose of all its industries' hazardous waste. States that cannot show such a capacity will lose federal Superfund aid to clean up abandoned waste sites.

Linda Little, executive director of the Governor's Waste Management Board, said the details of the new plan are still in flux.

Man Cuts His Income As Example For U.S.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A retired contractor and evangelist from Albemarle, N.C., who dreamed that George Bush agreed to cut his own salary as his first presidential act, has been sending 10 percent of his monthly income to Washington.

Floyd A. Griffin, 69, started with a $52 donation Nov. 11, 1988, which he sent to the president-elect. The check represented 10 percent of his monthly Social Security benefits and 10 percent of his veteran's disability pay.

In the letter that accompanied his check, Griffin said his contribution was motivated by a dream he'd had the night before.

When Bush made his announcement in the dream, "shock waves filled the room!" Griffin wrote. Bush's supporters lined up to take the salary-cutting pledge, and Griffin found himself in line.

"I felt that if the president as our top national leader had taken such action, so will I," he wrote.

"In my waking hours, I decided the idea was so doggone good, I'm going to do it even if no one else does it," Griffin said.

Peter E. Hollenbach, a spokesman for the Bureau of the Public Debt, said donations like Griffin's are deposited in the Fund to Reduce the Public Debt. Since the fund was created in 1961, it has amassed more than $14.5 million, he said.

House Democrats Try To Ignore Pay Raise Issue

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W.Va. — House Democrats tried with little success on Saturday to temporarily put aside the firestorm over a proposed 51 percent congressional pay raise and focus instead on broader national issues.

While an inspirational speech by New York Gov. Mario Cuomo and the pampering and recreation of the Greenbrier resort helped soothe frayed nerves, the lawmakers remained anxious for a way to put the pay issue permanently behind them.

Former President Reagan's proposal to raise federal pay for members of Congress, federal judges and top executive branch employees takes effect Wednesday unless both the House and Senate vote to kill it. The Senate has already done so, making House Democrats the center of the controversy because Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, plans to let it take effect.

Wright said he would hold a subsequent vote to reduce the raise to 30 percent, but rank-and-file Democrats continued to voice skepticism that such a plan would quell public outcry.

Rep. Steny Hoyer, D-Md., a member of the Democratic leadership supporting's Wright's approach, acknowledged that many House members were willing to give up any pay raise even though they believed they needed to earn more than the current salary of $89,500.

"I think they're frustrated with trying to answer to an angry public and an insatiable press," said Hoyer. "At some point, people get tired of being looked upon as thieves and greedy folks. I think everybody's getting a little testy — like me."

Rep. Pat Williams, D-Mont., offered one of the most graphic descriptions yet of the controversy. "It's like living with a political gas leak, only it's not odorless or colorless," he said. "And the voters are going to strike the match."

Many of the approximately 150 Democrats spent Saturday morning listening to panel discussions on issues facing the country, including the deficit and social economic inequities. Then Cuomo, delivering the keynote speech at a luncheon, told them that Democrats should take heart because President Bush's statements that more needed to be done for the homeless and needy was an embracing of Democratic values and "a giant step forward to the truth and progress."

"He has clearly said that the Democrats were right ... by candidly rejecting his predecessor's narrow view of life in America," Cuomo said. If Bush fails to push forward his "kinder and gentler" programs, he will "have earned himself some cheap grace by reciting some Democratic poetry," he said.

In such an event, he said, Democrats should push their agenda even if that eventually means seeking to raise taxes to cover the cost.

"When you present him with the solutions, would it not be difficult for the president then to say no?" he asked.

Cuomo made no direct mention of the pay raise controversy, but kidded the lawmakers that their annual retreat to West Virginia to get away from daily pressures was "a great idea ... when it works."

Several dozen news people were watching the conference but the resort otherwise coddled and protected the Democrats.

A small band of anti-pay-raise demonstrators was kept outside the front gates, seen only by those lawmakers who cruised by in resort limousines on their way to the skeet and trap-shooting range. The hotel switchboard screened callers, asking whether they were calling about the pay raise.

Wright, at the center of the controversy, kept mostly to himself except for introducing Cuomo at the luncheon. Protected by staff, he didn't talk to reporters about the pay raise but praised Cuomo's speech as a challenge to Bush, who addresses a joint meeting of Congress Thursday night.

"We'll now see whether it's words or whether it's deeds," he said. "Words are fine. They set a good tone. But now it's time for deeds."

Rep. Gary Ackerman, D-N.Y., who is Cuomo's congressman, praised the speech as "what we came to hear."

"He's the only constituent I've seen in two weeks who didn't ask about the pay raise," he said.

Thousands Of Other Federal Employees Await Pay Decision

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — The fortunes of U.S. research scientists, military generals, enforcers of hazardous waste laws and thousands of other, sometimes obscure public servants are riding on the outcome of the congressional debate over federal pay raises.

Although 2,498 of the nation's highest legislative, judicial and executive positions are named in the hotly disputed pay plan, more than 12,780 public jobs actually stand to gain automatic raises if the House lets the plan take effect Wednesday, federal officials say.

Among the less-publicized beneficiaries of the pay raises would be 150 top-ranking military officers, 1,256 senior diplomats and 61 judges and officers of District of Columbia courts, whose salaries are linked by law to changes in congressional or federal judicial pay.

The nation's three- and four-star generals and admirals, whose pay is now capped at about $75,500, would earn between $82,501 and $90,702, depending on rank and seniority, a Pentagon spokesman said. The District of Columbia trial judges, whose salaries are the same as U.S. District Court judges, would collect $135,000 annually, while appellate judges would receive $140,000.

The raises would make the judges the highest paid local jurists in the nation, surpassing New York, the current leader, where trial judges get $95,000 and appellate judges $115,000. The National Center for State Courts reports that Montana pays the least for trial judges, $49,178, and for appellate judges, $50,452.

Meanwhile, bigger salaries for the top echelons of government should trigger increases in the maximum amount members of Congress can pay their top aides, some of whom earn as much as 93 percent of what their bosses make.

Under current rules, salaries for 19,000 staff positions are set at the discretion of individual lawmakers, but top House aides can make up to $82,500 a year, while Senate staffers can draw a maximum of $84,000 a year. New pay ceilings will have to be decided by House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, and Senate President Pro-Tem Robert Byrd, D-W.Va.

In addition, about a fifth of the nation's 306 senior judges who do no legal work, including former Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, would get larger paychecks under the proposed plan.

Reagan Busily Lining Up Work

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Ronald Reagan left the White House two weeks ago to retire as elder statesman in his beloved California, but instead of lounging around the pool he's been busy lining up work and visiting old haunts.

The ex-president has signed a book deal worth up to $7 million, lined up a $50,000-per-speech lecture contract and opened his Century City offices, where a variety of offers are pouring in.

There are also social demands: His 78th birthday party Monday night at the ritzy Bistro Gardens, a Feb. 23 Palm Springs gala honoring Elizabeth Taylor and a private welcome-home dinner Feb. 25.

"The change of address hasn't caused any slowing down of their schedule," said Reagan spokesman Mark Weinberg. "They are very active and on the go." Reagan and his wife, Nancy, haven't even taken time yet to visit their Santa Barbara mountaintop Rancho del Cielo. Rumors they might sell the ranch have repeatedly been denied by the Reagan staff.

Shunning the reclusive lifestyle of many celebrities, the couple often venture from their Bel-Air home to dine at Chasens, attend Sunday church services or visit friends.

Secret Service agents drive Reagan from his $2.5 million hillside home to Century City, a distance of five miles, where he takes a private elevator to his 34th-floor office suite at Fox Plaza and spends about six hours daily at his desk.

Foreign dignitaries dropping in on Reagan have included Ugandan President H.E. Yoweri K. Museveni and Japanese Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita.

He has received a telephone call from Henry Kissinger, a telegram from Britain's Prince Charles and flowers from neighbors.

Reagan invited news photographers to his office last week to take pictures of him at his desk before a private office lunch with his former agent, MCA Inc. Chairman Lew Wasserman.

Reagan is apparently fielding corporate board membership offers, with MCA and the Los Angeles Dodgers baseball franchise seen as sure bets. He also is being sought for radio, television and motion pictures.

Hours after relinquishing the presidency to George Bush on Jan. 20, Reagan told cheering supporters at a Los Angeles International Airport rally that he had been asked to star in a sequel to "Bedtime for Bonzo," the 1951 comedy he shared with a chimpanzee.

"Only this time they wanted me to play Bonzo," he joked.

However, longtime friend Irving "Swifty" Lazar, who said he was working on an unspecified project for the ex-president, dismissed as "ridiculous" the possibility of a Reagan cinematic comeback.

"There are many invitations for a variety of opportunities, but President Reagan has no current plans to appear in any movies," Weinberg said.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — Death came to Oliver W. Sipple without any of the fanfare that once anguished the disabled ex-Marine, who became a reluctant hero when he foiled an assassination attempt on President Gerald Ford.

A friend found Sipple, 47, dead in his apartment on Thursday, apparently of natural causes. A framed letter of commendation signed by Ford hung on the wall.

Sipple gained unwanted fame on Sept. 22, 1975, when he lunged for a .38-caliber chrome revolver aimed at Ford by Sara Jane Moore outside a San Francisco hotel. His move caused Moore's shot to go astray, hitting a building instead.

Afterward, Sipple telephoned news outlets and begged them not to mention his name, his address or "anything about me."

"I'm not a hero, I'm a live coward," he said later. "It's probably the scariest thing that ever happened in my whole life."

But reports about Sipple, some mentioning his homosexuality, were published anyway.

Sipple filed a $15 million invasion of privacy lawsuit against several newspapers, claiming he was abandoned by his brothers and sisters after they learned of his sexual orientation by reading published accounts.

"My sexuality is part of my private life and has no bearing on my response to the act of a person seeking to take the life of another," he said in the lawsuit, which was filed five days after the assassination attempt.

He lost the five-year court battle when Superior Court Judge Ira Brown dismissed the suit.

Film Actor-Director John Cassavetes Dies

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

LOS ANGELES — John Cassavetes, the innovative film maker deeply admired by some but scorned by others for such off-center movies as "A Woman Under the Influence" and "Faces," died Friday at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center here. He was 59.

Actress Gena Rowlands, his wife since 1958 and a star in most of his films, was with him when he died about 10 a.m., said his publicist, Esme Chandlee.

Chandlee said that Cassavetes died from complications of cirrhosis of the liver. She said he had been in poor health for three years.

Cassavetes, who once called himself a "professional" actor and an "amateur" director, was a method actor known for such roles as the ambitious actor-husband in "Rosemary's Baby," the 1968 film that starred Mia Farrow.

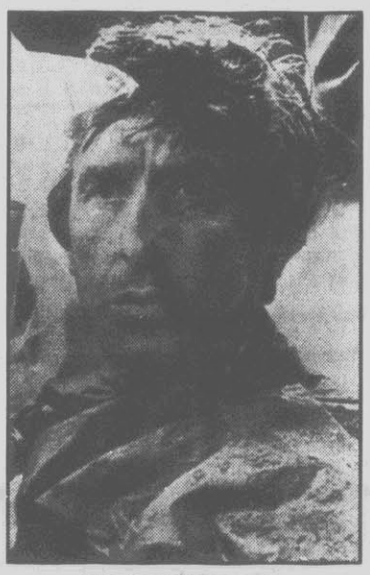

He also appeared with Rowlands, Susan Sarandon and Molly Ringwald in "Tempest," Paul Mazursky's film adapted from the Shakespeare play.

Chandlee said that Cassavetes was one of the few people nominated for Academy Awards in three categories — for best writer for his screenplay "Faces" (1968), for best supporting actor in "The Dirty Dozen" (1967) and for best director for his film "A Woman Under the Influence" (1974).

The last film, Chandlee said, was Cassavetes' most commercial effort and the favorite of both Cassavetes and Rowlands, its star. Chandlee quoted the director as saying he had seen it 30 times and could not look at it any more because it was "too powerful an experience."

After acting in films and on television since 1953, he turned to directing with the experimental film "Shadows" in 1960, about a black girl living in New York with her two brothers. Shot on a shoestring budget ($40,000), "Shadows" had no script and was improvised by a cast of Cassavetes' proteges.

It was grainy and crude, but it won the Critics' Award at the 1960

JOHN CASSAVETES

Venice Film Festival and gained Cassavetes an immense amount of recognition in Europe as a pioneer of realism in American films.

Cassavetes then directed two unsuccessful Hollywood films, "Too Late Blues" with Bobby Darin and "A Child is Waiting" with Judy Garland and Burt Lancaster, before writing, producing and directing his second independent film, "Faces," a study of the marriage of two people unable to communicate with each other.

Like "Shadows," it was shot in black and white. It had a script, but Cassavetes allowed his actors to do a lot of improvising. Rowlands was one of the stars of "Faces." It captured five awards at the 1968 Venice Film Festival and three Oscar nominations.

Cassavetes also directed such films as "The Killing of a Chinese Bookie" (1976), "Opening Night" (1978), "Gloria" (1980) and "Big Trouble" (1985).

He was seen as an actor in 20 films, including "Taxi" (1953), "Affair in Havana" (1957), "The Killers" (1964), "If It's Tuesday, This Must be Belgium" (1969), "The Fury" (1978) and "Brass Target" (1978).

U.S. Commander Calls For End Of Danger Pay In Persian Gulf

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The general in charge of the U.S. Central Command has recommended suspension of combat pay for sailors in the Persian Gulf, Pentagon sources say.

The recommendation, under review by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, is the strongest indication yet that American defense officials believe the truce between Iran and Iraq may hold.

The "imminent danger" bonuses, previously known as hostile fire or combat pay, are worth $110 a month and have been paid to servicemen working inside the Persian Gulf since August 1987.

Precise figures were not available last week, but Navy officials estimated 4,000 servicemen were receiving the payments. At that rate, the Pentagon would save $440,000 a month by dropping them.

The defense sources insisted, however, that the recommendation had nothing to do with budget concerns.

According to the officials, who declined to be identified by name, the recommendation was forwarded to Adm. William Crowe, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, "within the last month or so."

It came from Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, who assumed command of the U.S. Central Command last November and "believes the threat has now receded to the point" where it is difficult to justify the payments, said one source.

"And the fact that we've gone to a different regime — one of monitoring ship traffic instead of actually escorting tankers directly — changes things, too," the source added.

Another source said the staff that serves the nation's highest council of military officers "is hard at work reviewing the recommendation and its ramifications."

"A final position should be presented to (Crowe) within the next month, but there doesn't appear to be any reason to maintain the payments," the source said.

The Central Command is the organization responsible for American military operations in the Middle East and Indian Ocean region. As such, it is the parent command for the Joint Task Force Middle East, the unit responsible for guaranteeing the safety of merchant ships flying the U.S. flag in the Persian Gulf.

The administration of former President Reagan agreed in the spring of 1987 to extend American military protection to 11 Kuwaiti tankers after they switched to U.S. registry. Kuwait, a friend of the United States and a key ally of Iraq, had found that its ships had become special targets for Iranian forces.

In August 1987, one month after the first U.S.-escorted Kuwaiti tanker ran into an underwater mine, the Pentagon announced it would start making the payments to the crews of warships operating inside the Persian gulf, the Strait of Hormuz and a small portion of the Gulf of Oman, as well as to personnel stationed in Kuwait and Bahrain.

Iran and Iraq agreed to a truce last August in their bloody, 8-year-old war and the cease-fire has held. As a result, the United States has slowly reduced the number of warships operating in the region and stopped conducting closely supervised convoy runs.

Instead, the ships now in the region maintain what the Navy calls a "monitoring regime" of keeping U.S.-flaged tankers within radar or radio range.

The United States now has 14 ships inside the Gulf, including six small mine-sweepers.

According to the Pentagon sources, even if Schwarzkopf's recommendation is approved, some minor exceptions might be made to continue the payments to the sailors on the mine-sweepers. Those men are still actively engaged each day in hunting for floating mines, the officials noted.

Teen-Ager Is Killed Over Dime

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MILWAUKEE — A 14-year-old boy was shot to death by a friend after a roll of the dice led to a quarrel over a dime, police said.

Javonda Bethly, a high school freshman, was shot in the head Thursday evening and died Friday.

A 16-year-old boy was taken sobbing from the scene of the shooting and was questioned by police, Lt. David Bruess said. The boy told officers that Bethly owed him a dime from a dice game, and that the pistol went off accidentally.

"He said he wished he was dead," Bruess said. "He wished it was him. I told him to try to calm down and said it was a little late to think about that."

Police held the 16-year-old at the Children's Detention Center, pending a review by the district attorney's office.

Bethly and another teen-age boy were playing dice in the den in the home of the boy with the gun, Bruess said.

The 16-year-old pulled out an old .22-caliber pistol he had found when Bethly and the other boy refused to pay dimes they lost on a roll of dice, Bruess said.

"He pulls out the gun and was flashing it around," Bruess said. "He threatened to kill them if they didn't pay up."

One boy surrendered his dime, but Bethly refused. The gun went off accidentally, the older boy told police.

The grandmother of the 16-year-old said she was sure the shooting was accidental.

"They were both born in my house and grew up together," she said. "I don't think they'd get mad enough at each other to do something like that."

Lebanese Publications Say Release Of Hostages Near

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Five Lebanese publications predicted Saturday that some foreign hostages held in Lebanon will be freed soon. One magazine said two of the nine missing Americans will be released.

Also Saturday, Irish Ambassador Patrick McCabe, who spent one week in Lebanon trying to verify reports hostage Brian Keenan might be released, said there was "a distinct possibility" Keenan would be freed.

The reports marked the first time several Lebanese publications have simultaneously carried nearly identical articles about the possible release of foreign captives. The reports came shortly after a top Iranian official and a Shiite Moslem leader predicted a breakthrough in the hostage problem.

The An-Nahar Arab and International weekly said the Iranian-backed Hezbollah has "decided to release two American captives as a goodwill gesture." It gave no names.

The magazine, based in Christian east Beirut, quoted an unidentified Hezbollah official as saying: "The scenario is being set for the release." The brief report did not elaborate.

Hezbollah, made up of Shiite Moslem zealots, is believed to be the umbrella organization for several groups holding hostages.

There are 15 foreigners missing in Lebanon. In addition to the nine Americans and Keenan, who holds both Irish and British citizenship, there are three Britons, an Italian and a Belgian.

The longest held is Terry A. Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, who was kidnapped March 16, 1985.

The leftist daily As-Safir, which has close ties with the Syrian army command in Lebanon, said: "Diplomatic information speaks of the possible release of some (foreign) hostages in the next two weeks."

The weekly Ash-Shiraa said the hostage issue "has been put on a hot burner." Its brief report said without elaborating: "This could result in releasing them ... in the light of a decision to this effect adopted by regional powers interested in this case."

The independent An-Nahar and conservative Ad-Diyar dailies both said a peace pact reached Monday in Damascus between Hezbollah and Amal, the rival pro-Syrian Shiite militia, also aims at securing the release of foreign captives. The pact, sponsored by Syria and Iran, halted a nine-month war between the rival militias.

U.S. Makes U.N. Payment

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — The United States has paid late U.N. dues of nearly $30 million, but it remains almost $500 million behind in payments to the regular U.N. budget, officials said.

The United States is in the process of paying back money it withheld several years ago when Washington complained of what it viewed as mismanagement and anti-Western bias at the United Nations.

Washington's second-ranking U.N. ambassador, Herbert S. Okun, delivered the $28.8 million dues check Friday to U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, U.N. officials said. He also gave Perez de Cuellar a $7.3 million check to help pay for U.N. peacekeepers in Cyprus.

The United States is assessed for one-fourth of the U.N.'s regular budget of about $880 million annually. Friday's payment ended U.S dues obligations for 1988.

However, U.N. financial spokesman Fred Eckhart said the United States still owes the world body $279 million for unpaid pre-1988 dues and $216 million for 1989 dues.

The Board of Directors of Home Federal Savings & Loan would like to take this opportunity to thank the members of the Association, including depositors and borrowers, for another successful year. During 1988, the Association reached another important milestone by increasing assets to over $100 million. Net worth reserves were also increased to $5 million or 5.4% of deposits. This represents substantially more than the $3.2 million minimum required reserves for a savings institution of our size by the Federal Home Loan Bank. The board and management of Home Federal will continue to promote homeownership and thrift as its original charter set out in 1906.

To those who are not presently members of the Association, we invite and encourage you to call Home Federal for safe investments, a wide selection of loan plans, and courteous service.

GAO Says B-1B Ails Persist

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Major problems still plaguing the B-1B bomber may reduce its expected range and payload capability, says a report issued by Congress' investigative arm.

The General Accounting Office concluded in its report that although the Air Force has made progress in correcting certain deficiencies in the Rockwell-built bomber, problems in the bomber's performance persist.

"Several areas critical to B-1B's mission performance have not yet been demonstrated," the report said.

The review also said the cost of the Air Force plane could be up to $400 million each if the service goes ahead with all the planned improvements.

Those problems mean the B-1B may not have the range it was designed to have or be able to carry all the bombs and missiles planned for it, the report said.

The bomber is designed to carry conventional and nuclear gravity bombs, cruise missiles and short-range attack missiles.

Specifically, the report said the Air Force has not made progress in resolving problems with the B-1B's defensive avionics. "In short, it is now known that the defensive avionics cannot meet specifications without a major redesign," the report said.

The defensive avionics, or electronic countermeasures system, was designed to improve the bomber's probability of penetrating the Soviet Union by allowing the aircraft's crew to "avoid, degrade and deceive the Soviet air defenses," the report said.

The problems involve the system's radar warning receiver and processor function.

The report also said that data for the bomber indicate that reported fuel leaks have for the most part remained the same over the last year. Elimination of the fuel leaks is probably not possible, according to the report.

Quayle Ends First Foreign Trip On Break-Even Basis

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Vice President Dan Quayle is back home from his first foray abroad for the Bush administration, apparently with neither great gaffes nor startling accomplishments to show for his largely symbolic mission to Latin America.

Quayle, meeting in Venezuela with world leaders at a presidential inauguration, signaled Bush administration sensitivity to Latin America and then went to El Salvador where he delivered a stern human rights message to the U.S.-backed government.

The Latins had waited with great curiosity to size up the new vice president while his own countrymen watched to see how he would handle his first major assignment from President Bush.

Foreign service officials nervously hoped he would not live down to campaign criticisms that he was not up to the job of vice president.

By many accounts from both U.S. and foreign officials, the diplomatic greenhorn acquitted himself well on the international stage, even displaying a certain verve for his mission.

In Venezuela, where his job was mostly to spread goodwill, Quayle's affable, political style was a hit with Latin leaders who place great store in "personalismo," one member of the U.S. delegation said.

"I was skeptical but I'm impressed," said Michael Skol, a State Department Latin America specialist who traveled with Quayle. After one day of meetings, Skol said, "He's making the right political moves, the right body language. ... He's not saying too much when he shouldn't say too much."

In El Salvador, a harder line was called for as Quayle went before some 20 military officers who lead the nation's 56,000-member armed forces. He delivered what was described by U.S. officials as an emphatic admonition on the need for progress in curbing human rights abuses.

Quayle took that same message to the country's political and business leaders, leaving a clear message that future U.S. aid will be linked to the country's success on human rights.

Aside from Perez, the center stage figure was the larger-than-life Fidel Castro of Cuba. He was ubiquitous on television screens and he sat not far from Quayle at the inauguration. The two did not speak to each other.

Quayle's hectic schedule during two days in Caracas included bilateral meetings with 10 heads of state, and less formal meetings with about the same number.

Guatemala's President Vinicio Cerezo subtly noted Quayle's newcomer status, saying this was "a really good opportunity for you to come here and meet many leaders from Latin countries ... for you especially."

Cambodian Seeks U.S. Help

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Cambodian resistance leader Prince Norodom Sihanouk, in an exchange of letters with Secretary of State James A. Baker III, has called on the United States to step up its efforts to resolve the Cambodian conflict.

"We Cambodian patriots ask the United States to play a more important and active role in the search for a fair solution to the problem of Cambodia," Sihanouk said in his letter dated Friday and seen Sunday.

Sihanouk said he received the Baker letter earlier in the day during a meeting with U.S. Ambassador to China Winston Lord. The meeting took place at Beijing's state guesthouse, where Sihanouk is staying.

According to a copy of the Baker letter provided by Sihanouk, Baker expressed U.S. "appreciation for your indispensable leadership in the valiant struggle of the Cambodian people to regain their independence."

Baker said, "without question, your leadership is crucial to achieving an acceptable Cambodian settlement, both as the head of an interim government preceding elections and as a symbol and focus for the unity of your people.

"We consider it vital that you remain involved in the ongoing diplomatic processes, and that your views be conveyed to all involved parties at every opportunity."

Diplomats Skeptical Of Major Change In Paraguay

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ASUNCION, Paraguay — Forces loyal to Gen. Andres Rodriguez rounded up backers of the previous government Saturday to consolidate power after a violent coup. Reports linked the nation's new leader to drug trafficking.

Ousted President Alfredo Stroessner, who held power 34 years, was believed still under house arrest awaiting a flight to exile two days after the overthrow that left an estimated 300 dead.

The larger-than-life portrait of Stroessner in dress uniform was taken down from President Stroessner International Airport to the cheers of onlookers, and Rodriguez attended the funeral in La Recoleta Cemetery of a fellow officer killed during the coup.

Rodriguez, who had been Stroessner's second-in-command, vowed to restore democracy and respect human rights. But diplomatic and political sources expressed doubt.

A Western diplomat in Asuncion, speaking on condition of anonymity, said reports are common in Paraguay that Rodriguez allows cocaine traffickers to use an airstrip he owns in deserted Chaco Province along the border with Bolivia. However, he said the reports are unproven.

In Indiana, John Hoyt Williams, a professor of Latin American history at Indiana State University, said the drug smuggling allegations against Rodriguez were common knowledge.

"It's appeared in print in a number of places. There's never been an official indictment of him however," said Williams.

The Cox newspaper group, citing a classified U.S. State Department report, said on Friday that Rodriguez is considered by law enforcement authorities in Paraguay to be the country's No. 1 drug trafficker.

Rodriguez, the 65-year-old son of a small-scale farmer, lives better than his army salary would seem to allow. His house in a plush neighborhood is a mansion with a fountain in the well-manicured front yard.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, asked about U.S. reports of Rodriquez's alleged drug ties, told reporters Friday, "We won't characterize our relationship to him at this point."

Forces loyal to Rodriguez, who was sworn in Friday, detained about 20 Stroessner followers and aides, raising the total to about 50, according to the leader of an anti-Stroessner political group.

Officers of Stroessner's presidential escort, who defended the 76-year-old dictator after the coup began Thursday night, also were arrested. No number was given.

The escort battalion's collapsed roofs and morter shell-damaged brick walls slowed traffic on fashionable Avenida Mariscal Lopez as drivers craned their necks to see the damage.

The U.S. Embassy next door was undamaged.

The Roman Catholic station Radio Caritas said up to 200 people were killed in the fighting, but no official numbers have been given. A high-ranking foreign diplomat, speaking on condition of anonymity, estimated fatalities at 300.

Stroessner apparently remained a prisoner at the First Army Corps base four miles north of the capital. Radio reports Friday said Stroessner was given 12 hours to leave the country following his arrest.

The chief of operations at Paraguay's international airport, identified only as Maj. Sanabria, said Saturday that Strossner so far had not left the country. He denied a rumor Chile had sent a plane to pick up Stroessner.

Soldiers raided the house of Stroessner's justice minister, Eugenio Jacquet, carting away boxes of documents, the radio reported. It said Jacquet was en route home from Caracas, where he represented Stroessner at the inauguration Thursday of President Carlos Andres Perez of Venezuela.

The former interior minister and leder of the ruling Colorado Party, Sabino Montanaro, was reportedly given shelter at the Honduran Embassy.

New details emerged about the coup.

Rodriguez, whose First Army Corps is the biggest and best-equipped in the 12,500-man army, apparently tried to arrest Stroessner on Thursday as he dined at the home of a friend near the corps' base.

Stroessner's bodyguards resisted and he escaped to the escort battalion, according to a witness who saw the exchange of gunfire.

The witness said that after a battle at the barracks, he saw Stroessner being driven off in his black Chevrolet between two tanks.

Opposition groups said they hoped the transition boded new opportunity for them.

"I consider the overthrow of that tyrant as the most positive event in our country's political history over the last 40 years," said Luis Manuel Andrada Nogues, leader of the Christian Democratic Party. Stroessner had refused to recognize the party.

"A year ago, we couldn't have held this meeting," Carlos Levi Rufinelli, leader of a small Liberal Party faction, told fellow party members at his home Saturday.

The Liberal Party, Paraguay's other main party besides the Colorado Party, began efforts to patch together its many factions to take on the Colorado Party in the event of elections.

Bentsen Wants U.S. To Swap Debts For Pollution Cleanup

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Finance Committee Chairman Lloyd Bentsen is asking the Treasury Department to investigate the possibility of swapping Latin American debts for money that would be used to clean up pollution in the Western Hemisphere.

Bentsen, D-Texas, said Saturday he is particularly interested in "debt-for-nature" swaps that would involve Mexican debt and cleaning up pollution along the U.S.-Mexico border, including the dumping of raw sewage into Rio Grande.

On Friday, Bentsen asked Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady for an accounting of the Mexican debt situation before Congress assesses his plan.

Latin American debtors have become increasingly interested in reducing their foreign debt in unconventional ways, Bentsen said, citing "debt-for-nature swaps" in Costa Rica, Equador and Bolivia, in which small quantities of their foreign debt have been converted to local currencies for investment in environmental projects.

In one case, an international consortium of environmental groups purchased $5.6 million of Costa Rican debt from a bank in the United States for about $700,000 and converted it to a local currency bond worth $5.6 million, Bentsen said. Interest on that bond will be devoted exclusively to environmental investments to protect clean air and water and promote conservation in Costa Rica.

"Both Mexico and the United States would benefit if environmental investments are stepped up along the border in Mexico," Bentsen told Brady, citing the sharp deterioration of the water in the Rio Grande and air pollution on the border.

Bentsen said much of the $400 billion in Latin American debt will never be paid back, but if it could be bought at a "deep discount" and then traded at full value in local currency to solve such problems as sewage dumping and the chopping down of tropical rain forests, "we'd be far ahead."

The dumping of raw sewage into the Rio Grande is creating serious health threats to citizens on both sides of the border, Bentsen said, noting that 20 million gallons of raw sewage are dumped into the river every day at Nuevo Laredo, Mexico.

The enormous debt in Latin American nations has slowed their growth and "crimped foreign exchange reserves, hurting United States exporters," Bentsen said.

"The sale of our manufactured exports to the 20 Latin American republics ... fell 10 percent between 1980 and 1987," he wrote. "Many world-class United States industrial firms like Caterpiller suffered declines of 50 percent or more in traditional Latin American markets."

Solidarity Sets Plans For Talks

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WARSAW, Poland — Solidarity leaders met Saturday to prepare for historic talks with the government that Prime Minister Mieczyslaw F. Rakowski called "a significant event in the life of Poland."

Lech Walesa and other leaders of the outlawed labor movement are to sit down with government leaders on Monday to begin discussing social and economic reforms considered crucial to this increasingly impoverished nation.

The long-awaited negotiations, known as the round-table talks, will take place in Warsaw and also address the legalization of Solidarity, the first recognized independent union in the East bloc.

"There was commotion concerning the round table in which I had to take part as chief of government because I was aware of the fact that the round table is a significant event in the life of Poland," Rakowski said in nationally televised address Saturday night.

"There may be advantages to all of us."

Government spokesman Jerzy Urban said the opening session would be aired on Polish television, the state-run news agency PAP reported.

In Gdansk, meanwhile, Solidarity's Citizen's Committee, which was formed by Walesa in December to address social and political problems, met to prepare for the talks.

The names of the Solidarity delegates to the talks will be voted on Sunday, said Solidarity spokesman Piotr Konopka.

Walesa refused to agree to talks until the authorities agreed to legalize the unionm which was banned by parliament in 1982.

Gorbachev To Visit Chinese Chief In Beijing In Mid-May

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze ended a three-day visit to China on Saturday by announcing the nations will hold their first summit in 30 years in mid-May.

Shevardnadze said Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev will travel to Beijing at the invitation of the Chinese for a meeting with senior leader Deng Xiaoping. Soviet sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the summit was tentatively scheduled for May 15.

China's Deputy Foreign Minister Tian Zengpei, however, said no date had been set and that the Chinese were "studying the proposal" for the May meeting.

Shevardnadze later flew to Islamabad, Pakistan, for meetings with Pakistani leaders about the Soviet troop withdrawal from neighboring Afghanistan.

At a news conference before his departure, Shevardnadze said Deng told him the summit would "close the page on the past and open up a chapter on the future."

In a move toward "complete normalization" of relations, diplomats and other officials are to discuss reducing military tensions along the 5,000-mile Soviet-Chinese border, he said.

Western diplomats said the issue first came up when Chinese Foreign Minister Qian Qichen visited Moscow in December.

"We hope at the summit we will be able to make progress in that important direction," Shevardnadze said.

He said the first step might be an agreement on advance notice of troop movements and military exercises, and then negotiations for disbanding offensive forces.

In the 1950s, China depended on Soviet technical and military aid and followed the Soviet lead in diplomatic policy. Relations between the countries soured in 1960 over ideological and strategic disputes, and they fought a brief border war in 1969.

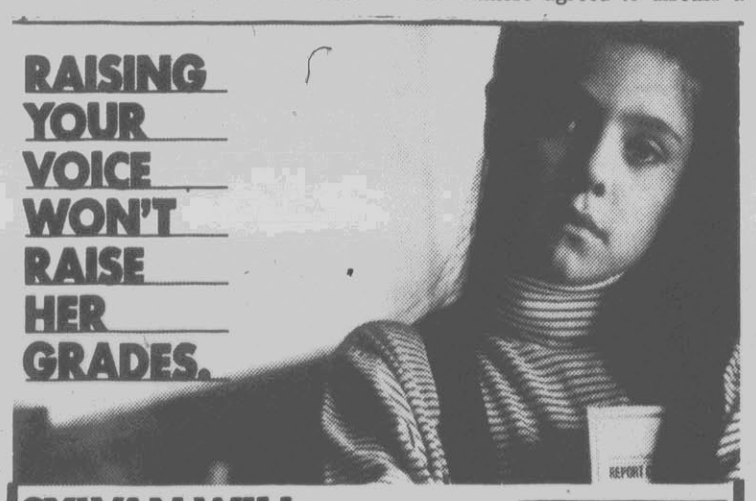

The Chinese agreed to discuss a summit last year after progress was made on what they call the "three obstacles" — border tensions, Soviet aid for Vietnam's invasion of Cambodia and the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

The last Soviet troops are supposed to be out of Afghanistan by Feb. 15.

Gorbachev has pledged to remove from Asia 200,000 Soviet troops, many now stationed along the Chinese border, and has said that most of Moscow's 50,000 troops in Mongolia will be withdrawn.

Qian was the first Chinese foreign minister to visit Moscow in 32 years. Shevardnadze's visit was the first by a Soviet foreign minister in 30 years and was designed to lay the groundwork for the summit.

Soviet Publications Link 15 Million Deaths To Tactics Used By Stalin

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — The number Soviets have wondered about for more than 30 years appeared in print Saturday: more than 40 million arrested, killed or otherwise repressed in the bloody political terror of Josef Stalin.

In the most detailed account of Stalin's victims reported in the Soviet press, the weekly tabloid Arguments and Facts said 15 million people died because of the dictator who took power in 1924.

Its article came as a daily newspaper reported bullet-fractured skulls were found in what may be a mass grave of Stalin's victims.

Although figures on Stalin's victims have been known to Westerners, Soviets have not seen them published officially. Almost every Soviet living today had relatives who suffered under Stalin, and since his death in 1953 they have hoped to put a number on the human toll.

Historian Roy Medvedev gave the 40 million figure to Arguments and Facts and said it included all "victims of Stalinism" based on his own calculations.

The toll was much higher than previous vague estimates.

In 1987, Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev said "many thousands of people .... were subjected to wholesale repressive measures" under Stalin.

Western historians believe 20 million Soviets died under Stalin. The same number of Soviets were killed in World War II.

Medvedev said 6 million to 7 million people were killed in an early 1930s famine, 5 million to 7 million were executed or died in labor camps after mass arrests in the late 1930s, and 1 million died during forced relocations of ethnic minorities during World War II.

Also Saturday, the daily Sovietskaya Rossiya reported construction workers discovered a mass grave Jan. 19 in Gorno-Altai, 1,900 miles southeast of Moscow. Human remains they found include 50 skulls of men 30 to 50 years old who were shot through the temple or back of the head, it said.

Medvedev, a dissident historian who recently has received official backing, gave Arguments and Facts this breakdown for Stalin's victims:

—From 1927-1929, about 1 million Soviets were jailed or in exile. Most were former members of political opposition groups and figures in Soviet founder Vladimir I. Lenin's New Economic Policy.

—From 1930-1932, 9-11 million peasants were deported to Siberia and other remote regions or fled to cities when Stalin forced collectivization of Soviet agriculture. At least 1 million more peasants were deported in 1933.

—From 1932-1933, 6 million to 7 million people died in a famine blamed on Stalin's policies.

—About 1.5 million to 2 million other peasants were arrested for violating "extremely cruel" laws on state property.

—Five million to 7 million people were arrested in the "Great Terror" of 1937-38. One million of them were sentenced to death. The rest were sent to labor camps, where most died.

Cold Goes South

while Midland tied its record of 9 degrees.

But the coldest official reading in the Lower 48 states was 50 below zero at Wisdom, Mont., the weather service said, followed by 44 below at Butte, Mont. By constrast, Anchorage, Alaska, had a low of 12 below zero.

In New Orleans, thousands of Mardi Gras party-goers bundled up Saturday against a suddenly cold Carnival weekend. Saturday afternoon's temperature hit the mid 40s, with light rain, but the forecast for Sunday was for a high in the 30s. Many people ducked into bars along a parade route Saturday.

"They're here anyway and they're going to go drinking," said Matt Hendricks at Fat Harry's. "Instead of standing outside, it just gets packed inside. The cold weather makes no difference."

A foot of snow fell overnight at Alta, Utah, bringing the ski resort's total since late Wednesday to 49 inches. Some highways in northern Utah were blocked by snowdrifts.

Snow fell at an inch an hour in parts of California's Sierra Nevada. Up to 4 feet of snow fell in the Lake Tahoe area and Norden at Donner Summit got 40 inches of snow over two days, officials said. Interstate 80 through the Sierra was reopened Friday night after being closed more than a day by blowing snow, but some other highways remained closed by snow.

"Basically, it's a real mess out there," said California Highway Patrol dispatcher Gina Moran at Truckee. "They're crashing everywhere ... . It's snowing like crazy and they're still coming up here. They still refuse to believe they shouldn't come."

At Beaver Creek, Colo., the premier event of the World Alpine Ski Championships, the men's downhill, was canceled Saturday because more than 8 inches of snow made it impossible for crews to groom the course in time.

Idaho Gov. Cecil Andrus declared a state of emergency Saturday in Bonner County, where high wind Wednesday toppled hundreds of trees and left hundreds of people without electricity. The Bonner County Commission requested the declaration after utilities reported power might not be restored until Monday.

Four people driving from Laramie, Wyo., to Fort Collins, Colo., were rescued from a snowbank Saturday by a Union Pacific Railroad freight crew, who put them aboard their locomotive near Tie Siding, Wyo.

Fourteen inches of fresh snow were on the ground and the wind chill factor was minus 76 degrees. While the Highway Patrol was alerted, a snowplow couldn't reach the travelers, said UP spokesman John Bromley in Omaha, Neb. "Apparently the car was running, but they (engineers) were afraid to leave them if the car ran out of gas," he said.

The Colorado highway patrol closed southbound Interstate 25 in Denver because there were so many accidents in whiteout conditions.

Most of 200 travelers stalled in the Idaho town of Dubois when the cold front hit Wednesday made it out in two caravans on Thursday and Friday, but the town was shut and isolated Saturday by 25 below zero cold, 40 mph wind, near zero visibility and drifting snow.

"Everything's closed off. We can't use our main streets or nothing," said Ed Russell, a county road foreman. "We're trying to get our equipment started, but it's so cold, nothing is starting for us. It's pretty serious."

The Bonneville Power Administration cut back power deliveries Friday by about 25 percent to 10 Northwest aluminum smelters because of high residential demand, spokesman Bob Reed said.

The BPA, which normally sells surplus power from its huge Columbia River hydroelectric dams, was trying to buy electricity from California utilities to meet demand, and British Columbia Hydro agreed to release more water upstream to help generate power, Reed said.

Texas may face a natural gas shortage if the severe cold continues past Monday, said Texas Railroad Commission Chairman Kent Hance.

"The gas wells simply will not be able to deliver all the gas we need, and the storage facilities may not be able to supply more than half of the gas volumes they did in 1983," when Texas nearly ran out of natural gas, Hance said.

Diplomats Pull Out

Shevardnadze arrived in Pakistan on the same mission early Sunday and was expected to propose a political settlement.

"The Soviet leadership has decided to consult with the government of Pakistan on how best to contribute to restoring peace and tranquility in Afghanistan," Shevardnadze told reporters before a scheduled day of talks with Pakistani officials who support the guerrillas.

But he added, "Problems have been piling up. There are quite a few of them."

Pakistani Defense Minister Ghulam Sarwar Cheema said Saturday in the Saudi capital of Riyadh that his government has formed a committee to oversee resettlement of the 3 million Afghan refugees living in Pakistan.

"The process of shifting Afghan refugees from Pakistan to their homeland will be handled smoothly after complete evacuation of the Soviet forces from Afghanistan," said Cheema, on a state visit to Saudi Arabia.

Guerrilla leaders, meanwhile, warned they might launch a major attack on the strategic city of Jalalabad, about 90 miles east of Kabul.

Abdul Zaher, a senior commander of the Jamiat-i-Islami guerrilla group, said the insurgents did not want to attack the crowded city for fear of injuring civilians but that they might if communist forces there don't give up soon.

Jalalabad could be the first major Afghan city to fall to the guerrillas, local insurgent commanders said. They said its fall would weaken the defense of Kabul and open up the highway to the capital.

In and around Kabul, Afghan solders patrol the streets and outdoor markets. The armored personnel carriers once stationed in the crowded bazaars are gone.

The Soviets intervened in December 1979 to back Afghan troops in their war with the Moslem guerrillas. They began pulling their estimated 100,000 soldiers out in May, in accordance with the U.N. accord.

Soviet and Afghan officials have estimated there are about 1,000 Soviet soldiers still in Afghanistan, including a small contingent assigned to Kabul airport.

Giant Ilyushin-76 transport planes have been flying into Kabul ferrying supplies of flour and other goods in short supply.

Britain quietly shut its embassy early Saturday. "We didn't want a public display," said one diplomat, referring to the highly publicized flag-lowering ceremony when the U.S. Embassy closed.

America Changes Its Ways As Terrorism Moves A Step Nearer

For Americans jolted by terrorist attacks in Europe and the Middle East, the only comfort has been that the danger is far away. Yet in the last six years the FBI has recorded more than 80 domestic incidents, from bombings to assassinations, and says dozens of others have been thwarted. Are terrorists looking for America's vulnerabilities?

Nonetheless, Jenkins said, the United States generally lacks the driving forces of home-grown terrorism: ideology (usually "Americans kill in personal quarrels, not for causes") and ethnic grievances (the independence movement in Puerto Rico is an exception).

As for foreign terrorists, why attack on American soil when there are convenient U.S. targets abroad, from embassies to fast-food restaurants? "It's easier to cross a street than cross an ocean to commit a terrorist attack," as Neil Livingstone, author of several books on terrorism, put it.

Still, despite safeguards, bombers have slipped through.

Even though their numbers have not been great — the FBI counts seven domestic terror incidents in the last year — law enforcement officials know the potential for destruction and intimidation of even a single well-placed explosive. (The Vermont bombs blew 2-foot-square steel plates the length of a football field when agents set them off.)

Americans' best protection, authorities say, will come from continued toughening of anti-terror laws and swift justice for those caught. At least as important is intelligence work.

In Bolz' words, "We have to get to know more about the enemy."

"We can't wait for the bomb to go off," said the FBI's counterterrorism chief, Neil Gallagher, who added agents would use "whatever resources the judicial system would allow ... (to) neutralize a terrorist act before it occurs."

Civil liberties groups are watching for overzealousness, something the FBI tacitly acknowledged last year in disciplining agents for an undercover probe of the Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador.

The FBI's counterterrorism effort costs tens of millions of dollars annually, said Gallagher, who declined to be more specific because the budget is classified.

"I always say it's been 95 percent blood, sweat and toil by those agencies involved, but we've had a bit of good luck, too," said Victoria Toensing, a former top terrorism policy official at the Justice Department.

She said the tools of anti-terrorism have improved.

There's better cooperation among investigators and prosecutors — the FBI, which once balked, she said, now "has the coffee waiting" for Justice Department lawyers called to an investigation. And laws have been toughened — extradition agreements have been revised, and it's now a federal crime to attack an American abroad, she noted.

These changes have not halted terror altogether. In 1986 alone, the worst recent year for domestic attacks, the FBI recorded 24 incidents and nine preventions.

In 1987, the FBI's undercover sale of an inert anti-tank rocket to members of the Chicago-based El Rukns gang led to conspiracy convictions and long prison terms. The government said they had offered to blow up U.S. targets for Libya.

"A domestic group was willing to commit a terrorist act in the United States," the FBI said, "in order to receive funding from a known state sponsor of international terrorism."

In Hartford, Conn., members of Los Macheteros, a Puerto Rican separatist group, are on trial now, charged with conspiracy in a violent $7 million armed robbery there. And three alleged revolutionaries accused of plotting a series of robberies and bombings, including one that injured 22, are being tried in Massachusetts.

A 1983 explosion 30 feet from the Senate chamber in the U.S. Capitol was blamed on a group protesting U.S. foreign policy. Security was overhauled. Senators were warned to remove identifying license plates from cars. Seats in the House chamber got bulletproof backings.

Before and since, groups have detonated explosives at banks, at government offices, under police cars — from anti-Castro organizations in Miami to affiliates of the Aryan Nations in Idaho. The tradition of American terrorism goes back to the Weather Underground, to the 19th century coalminer-terrorist "Molly Maguires" in Pennsylvania, and beyond.

In recent years, the acts and threats have changed the American landscape and lowered Americans' resistance to searches. Security barriers shield the White House and other public buildings, and airport scanners, having turned up 41,000 guns since 1973, are a fact of life.

Not all of the security gates are closed, however, according to Robert Kupperman of the Center for Strategic and International Studies in Washington: "If you hit some of the key nodes" — gas transmission lines, water systems or electric power grids — "you're going to have big trouble."

In a 1987 mock attack, an Army Special Forces team acting as terrorists symbolically "knocked out" power substations, an emergency operations center and valves of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve in Louisiana and Texas. The U.S. Department of Energy said it was tightening security for the oil stored against an embargo.

It was no mock attack two years ago when a bomb destroyed an employee's car at the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory in California, where nuclear weapons are designed. Claiming responsibility was the Nuclear Liberation Front, a group never heard of before.

There is no "profile" to use to spot a potential bomber, the FBI's Gallagher said, citing the case of Raymond Levasseur, on trial now in Massachusetts with two others on seditious conspiracy charges.

"Their group began up in Maine as some husbands and wives who formed up a leftist terrorist group. ... What identifies them in advance as terrorists?

"Once they began the series of bombings, bank robberies," he said, "there is a series of trails they left. They kept records ..., they kept safe houses. All that has to be methodically pieced together."

Sometimes the piecing together is beforehand. The decade-old Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act court is described as an important anti-terrorism tool.

The court, which convenes in a secret room in the Justice Department headquarters with judges rotated every two weeks, hears 500 applications a year for electronic surveillance in foreign intelligence, spying and terrorism cases.

"We have never been turned down," said Mary Lawton of the department's Office of Intelligence Policy and Review.

It was a FISA court-approved wiretap that alerted FBI agents to a dynamite bomb aboard a Los Angeles-to-Boston flight in 1982. Three men convicted of conspiracy and transporation of explosives appealed, saying their rights had been violated, but the convictions were upheld.

Kikumura's lawyer, Ronald Kuby, is challenging the legality of the search that turned up the bombs in New Jersey, saying the government violated his client's rights "in pursuit of this allegedly higher goal of attacking terrorism."

Speaking generally, Kuby added: "When a supposed democracy violates individual civil rights and goes outside the law in order to punish certain individuals, that society loses the moral authority to criticize and condemn the actions of others." Such inequity leads to more violence, he said.

Some see an inequity in punishing actions, even violent ones, taken for a political cause. Last year, the Greek government declined to extradite a suspected terrorist bomber to Italy, explaining that he had been acting in the Palestinian "struggle for ... independence."

Ideology is irrelevant when a bomb goes off, said Bolz, the security consultant. "People can be killed ... no matter what the cause."

Pamlico Team Faces Uncertain Future

Hawkins, both of the N.C. Division of Marine Fisheries, and Barry Adams of Greenville and Cathy Tyndall of Simpson, both of the N.C. Division of Environmental Management.

Since its formation, PERT has investigated 83 environmental concerns, including 35 fish kills. Of the kills, 17 were caused by low dissolved oxygen, also called anoxia, which naturally occurs from heat and a lack of rainfall or wind in the summer, Bland said. Fish get caught in a stratified layer of "dead water" and cannot breathe, he said.

The remaining 18 fish kills were disease related, with the majority of fish dying from ulcerative mycosis, an ailment that primarily strikes Atlantic menhaden, causing abrasions and sores near their anal area. In 1984, the disease reached epidemic levels in Pamlico River menhaden, a commercially valuable fish processed for its oil and for animal feed.

Some state officials feel that PERT is vital to the future of the Pamlico because it is the first group of researchers that has been responsible primarily for the immediate response to problems.

"I think it's critical in a number of different ways to continue an integrated evaluation of the problems of the Pamlico River because they are so severe and they do cross the administrative boundaries of the agencies normally involved," said Dr. Doug Rader, senior estuarine scientist for the state Environmental Defense Fund.

For example, Rader said, the Division of Environmental Management is directly responsible for investigating fish kills, but the Division of Marine Fisheries normally handles them.

"In the absence of a group like PERT, the reports (of fish kills) often fall right through the cracks. (PERT) is an extremely valuable thing and it is a good first step to blending the efforts of different groups into an integrated whole. I would hate to see it dismantled," Rader said.

The Environmental Defense Fund, established 20 years ago to respond to problems related to the pesticide DDT, acts as the "go-between" among scientists, the business community and state government.

Hawkins said one of the advantages of the response team concept is that people are devoted full time to responding immediately to environmental problems.

"A lot of times, fish kills or algae blooms are short term. We increase the likelihood of determining the causes by responding quickly," he said. "An anoxia event can break up or dissipate very rapidly, so it behooves you to go out as quickly as possible to see what's causing these blooms or water quality problems."

Another advantage of the concept is that the team combines the expertise of marine fisheries biologists with that of environmental management professionals.

Bland said some of the kills investigated last summer involved millions of dead fish and lasted for several days in a stretch of river three to four miles long. The majority of the fish kills occurred in June and July in the middle portion of the Pamlico River from Bath Creek to Chocowinity Bay. The remainder of PERT's 83 environmental probes involved dead eels, blue crabs and other water quality-related problems.

"My personal perception is that the river has severe problems," said Hawkins.

During the past couple of years, the Pamlico River has been the focus of attention throughout the United States. National news media, including ABC World News, Time Magazine, Newsweek and PBS, have done stories on the polluted river.

Yet Bland feels that "a lot people are not aware that the river is in danger. I think it's vitally important that some type of effort continue to identify and address the problems facing the Pamlico estuary."

The estuary is formed where salt and fresh water meet, providing a shallow, warm and highly productive nursery area for finfish, crabs and other organisms. Rader considers estuaries to be "absolutely irreplaceable."

"Since the early 1980s, numerous signs of stress on estuaries have been fairly well documented," Rader said. "Fish kills and algae blooms are there and if conditions are right, diseases explode."

Submerged plants, a critical component of estuary life, have almost completely disappeared — a clear sign that the system is in trouble, according to Rader.

Bland said delicate estuaries also are important for aesthetic and recreational purposes, such as hunting, fishing, boating, swimming and wildlife photography.

"There is good evidence that (environmental) stress on organisms in our sounds is increasing every single day," Rader said. "More and more people cause more and more waste of all kinds washing across the land from fields and farms and cities into the water."

What everyone needs to understand, Rader said, is that "when people in Raleigh flush their toilets, for example, they should know it's going straight to the Neuse River."

Likewise, anything that enters the Tar River from its starting point in Person County east of Roxboro eventually winds up in the Pamlico River, which begins at the U.S. 17 bridge in Washington.

"We're trying to build an understanding ... that all of us have to work together," Rader said.

Hawkins said the response team encourages the public "to be our eyes and ears because state personnel is short-staffed on working on the multitude of problems out there."

He said that PERT "appreciates the cooperation we've gotten from the public and different users of the Pamlico in doing our work so far. The public has been outstanding in terms of fishermen cooperating and people letting us set up experiments on their private property and making us aware of problems."

The public, as well as state resource agencies, "need to do all they can to preserve the river and better environmental quality," Hawkins said.

City Council Will Hold Hearing Thursday On Length Of Terms

hearing and no later then 60 days following the hearing. He also said the council's final decision on the length of terms would define the terms of office for those officials elected in the 1989 city elections.

So what exactly is the ideal length of time for an official to serve?

According to Dr. Dorothy Clayton, an assistant professor of political science at East Carolina University, that question is one which has been asked since the days of our nation's forefathers.

"If you go back and read the Federalist Papers, they discuss how long the terms of office should be," she said. "James Madison's feeling was they needed to be long enough so that some learning occurred.

"But they also wanted it short enough so that the elected officials remained very responsive to constituents. That they paid close attention to what citizens said and were very accountable to citizens," she said.

Ms. Clayton said those who argue for longer terms of service usually say that current times and circumstances have created the need for extended terms.

"Governments now not only manage larger budgets but also provide more services and subsequently suffer more problems. It's a more complex arrangement than it used to be and, therefore, you need a longer ferm for individuals to learn how to do the job and to be effective," she said.

Carter, who was also a former Greenville council member, said many matters which come before the council, such as rezoning requests, are often extremely complicated.

"Consequently, those council members with little experience are often at a disadvantage in their attempts to make a decision which is best for the city," Carter said.

Four-year terms, Carter feels, would provide new council members ample time to become knowledgeable and effective policy-makers.

Meanwhile, Ms. Clayton said those who argue in favor of shorter terms often say the most important concept in our system of government is the link that the elected official represents between citizens and government.

"They argue that for citizens to hold those elected officials accountable, you have to have frequent elections — that you don't relieve elected officials of pressures by lengthening their terms of service."

Council member Bill Hadden is one who agrees that two-year terms heighten a politician's sense of accountability to constituents.

Hadden, who supports two-year terms for council members and the mayor, said he believes the public has less control of an official in the midst of a four-year term.

"I think most citizens prefer the accountability that a shorter term provides," he said.

Hadden said he particularly opposes a four-year term for the mayor, a position which he believes exerts considerable influence on city staff.

"In the case of an ineffective mayor, a four-year term might have undesirable consequences for the city," he said.

Ms. Clayton also said proponents of four-year terms may argue that the longer terms may increase the pool of potential office holders.

"More individuals might be encouraged to run for office because they would have the time for which to make significant accomplishments," she said.

But proponents of two-year terms might argue that holding office for four years may be too long for some individuals and might actually dissuade people from entering into local elections.

"Some people may not be sure they really want that responsibility, that much intrusion into their business and private lives, for that length of time," she said.

That possibility is a concern of Council member Nancy Jenkins, who said "I'm afraid we might rule out some very capable candidates by virtue of their not wanting to commit to four years."

"My feeling is that the two-year term has served us well in the past but I will certainly be willing to listen to public comment on Thursday," she added.

Mayor Pro-Tem Lorraine Shinn said she's inclined to agree there are pros and cons of both two-year and four-year terms.

"I have often been enlightened at public hearings and I just hope that if someone has a real good case for either side, they come to Thursday's meeting and state it because I want to hear it," she said.

One local organization which has formed a definite opinion on the issue is the League of Woman Voters of Greenville-Pitt County, which reached a consensus in 1985 establishing a position pertaining to the length of term for Greenville City Council members.

"The league at that time concluded that the length of term of office for members of the City Council should be two years. Our position at this time is the same as was previously decided," said Mary Alsentzer, president of the local league.

Ms. Alsentzer said the league agreed two years was appropriate because it encourages change and the influx of fresh ideas into city government, it allows citizens a chance to replace ineffective officials more often and that more accountability would be demanded of elected officials.

She also said the league feels more elections might provide greater opportunities for minorities to hold office.

"Our real concern is that the matter should be decided by the citizenry, not those holding the office in question," said Mrs. Alsentzer. "We will most likely try to collect the signatures necessary to have this issue placed on a ballot.

A referendum on the matter could happen, according to Ellis Hankins, general council for the N.C. League of Municipalities, if a petition containing the signatures of 10 percent of the registered voters is collected.

Hollock Looks At ECU Future

cancer center. The last three have been built on the campus of the university.

"With our hospital right here beside the medical school's main building (the Brody Medical Sciences Building), we can be much more focused," he said. "Being located in a well-planned medical district makes us more visible to the people of the region we serve and, therefore, we have greater impact, I believe."

Hallock envisions the ECU School of Medicine as having several "areas of excellence" declared and realized within the few years.

He believes the school needs to declare itself a cancer center to attract the best cancer researchers and physicians in the nation. He believes there is enough commonality among the various types of cancer that the money and other forms of human energy spent on researching and treatment the malady could be best used if there were a cancer center here.

He also envisions ECU continuing in its quest to be one of the top centers in the nation for diabetes research and treatment. Eastern North Carolina seems to have an abundance of people having diabetes and there is much work to be done here, he said. Every area of excellence must be relevant to the people served, multidisciplinary and educational for the students served by the medical school, he said. Having ECU as a diabetes center certainly fits the bill on all three, he indicated.

Hallock also would like to explore making this a research and treatment center for immunological conditions like arthritis, allergies, rheumatism and transplant rejection.

And it's already becoming, he said, a cardiovascular research and treatment center. Like diabetes, heart disease, high blood pressure and other cardiovascular conditions seems to be prevalent among eastern North Carolinians. "The work is here and much more needs to be done," he said.

He stressed, of course, that all of these centers and other components of the medical school would complement each other. For instance, work done concerning transplant rejection would, of course, also be betterment of cardiovascular knowledge.

Hallock came here with high expectations. He had been briefed about the medical school during extensive visits and talks here prior to his selection as dean. And he has not been disappointed, he said.

"I really do acknowledge Dr. William Laupus for the strong base he gave me," he said. "This is a well-run school with superb faculty and I know the leadership of Dr. Laupus has a lot to do with that."

He said he met the late Dr. Leo Jenkins, credited with conceiving the idea for a medical school here while serving as chancellor of East Carolina University, only one time — over dinner with him and his wife, Nancy. "I sensed then," he said, "what a great man Dr. Jenkins was, how dedicated to the medical school and to eastern North Carolina he was. But I realized even more during the time of his recent death what a truly great contributor to eastern North Carolina he was."

He said ECU is one of about 25 medical schools in the country which were developed at virtually the same time (the first class entered in 1977). "Of the ones I am familiar with, this one is put together as well as any and better than most. It has evolved well in terms of programs, faculty and students.

"It has a legislated mission, which I think is very important because it gives a sense of direction to the people involved."

He said that the school's mission is threefold: "To provide for the health care of eastern North Carolinians; to produce students who seek to practice primary care medicine, particularly family medicine, and to access medical education for minority and disadvantaged students."

He said he sees this school as fulfilling its mission well. "I observe that many of the new medical schools are in competition with other medical schools, that they really have to guard against duplication. Here there is such a well-defined mission. We know that what we have to do is bring state of the art technology and the most humane care to a region that has long not had what it needed in terms of medical care."

The school's ability to attract students in primary care is documented, he said. He said figures quoted at last year's graduation showed that 26 percent of the ECU graduates went into family medicine — the fourth-best showing in the nation — while about 60 percent went into primary care.

And it does serve minorities, he said. "This school is 14th of all the 127 medical schools in the country in the number of black, Indian and Spanish-American students it has.

What has he been doing these past five months to know and be known by the school he heads?

He has instituted a monthly luncheon with 10 medical students. He hosts four students from the fourth-year class and two from each other class. He feels this is a way to better get to know the students and help them build a sense of community among themselves. "The feedback has been terrific," he said.

He has also started a monthly faculty luncheon. He hosts three from basic science faculty and three from clinical science faculty — a professor, an associate professor and an assistant professor from each. "I tell them who I am, where I come from and what I'm here for and I ask that each of them tell me and the others present the same. I do this to foster in the faculty a sense of pride and ownership in th medical school. I think it has been effective. I already know of at least one research collaboration that has come out of the lunches."

He also meets monthly with representatives of the private practice faculty of the medical school and hospital administrators. He attends all the departmental meetings, committee meetings and other gatherings within the medical school for which he has time. And he meets monthly, not only with trustee board of Pitt County Memorial Hospital, but also with the executive committee of the hospital staff.

He represented the school in November at a meeting of the Association of American Medical College in Chicago and at its Council of Deans.

"Getting to know as many of the medical school faculty as possible and what each is committed to is large part of the work of this transition period," he said. He said there are now between 230 and 240 full-time faculty members within the medical school. And the number increases continuously with recruitment of the best in their various fields of medical research and teaching.

Teaching is an endeavor dear to the dean's heart. "I was an administrator most of the time I was at USF," he said, "But I was always also on the pediatrics faculty, too. I love to teach."

His resume shows that he was named Clinical Teacher of the Year at USF in 1976. "This idea is not original with me, but it's one I heartily subscribe to," he said. "My sense of what a good teacher is someone who imparts excitement about a subject.

"I truly believe that the dean of a medical school has to be its No. 1 teacher. He or she has to impart enthusiasm and energy to the faculty and students about medicine and about the mission of the medical school."

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

One Choice

Find The Funds For Education

North Carolina's lawmakers really don't have a choice.

They face only one acceptable option when it comes to pay increases for teachers and the state's all-important Basic Education program — they must do what it takes to find the money to meet the state's needs.

A shortfall in state revenue has prompted discussion of that scheduled teacher raises and the BEP be delayed. In fact, Gov. Jim Martin, in his proposed 1989-90 budget, put off teachers raises until April of 1990.

That position is not consistent with his 1988 campaign promise to put education first and it's in opposition to North Carolina's urgent need to improve its public school system.

Unless Martin changes his mind, the burden of finding the money to fund these issues will fall squarely on North Carolina's legislators. It is their duty to see the state has the revenue to support vitally important issues and programs. The BEP and teacher raises are just that — they are essentials, not options.

Sure, the state is experiencing a revenue crunch, and an unexpected one at that. Certainly it should not operate in the red. But questionable tax changes in 1987 contributed to this shortfall. The state's students shouldn't be made to pay for these doubtful moves by sacrificing long overdue improvements to instruction. Neither should teachers who have waited for and been promised a pay raise have to settle for less. No, the state must do what it takes to address these urgent needs.

The BEP should proceed. That program is designed to dissolve inequities in instructional offerings across the state. It can provide equal educational opportunity to all school children in North Carolina — whether in rural Martin County or urban Wake County. That is no small charge and it is imperative if the state is going to raise its student performance standards.

In addition, North Carolina cannot afford to compromise on improving teachers' salaries. The state's educators rank 29th in the nation in pay. This unenviable position can be bettered almost painlessly through slow, incremental increases in the base pay. But that means an absolute dedication to yearly raises for teachers, and 1989 is no exception. The state is already too far behind. It can't tread water and expect to employ top teachers.

So where education is concerned, there is only one option in 1989. Find the funds to put the state's public school system at the top. Holding ground is losing ground. That's not acceptable.

No Roadblock

Too Important For Squabbling

There is still a difference of opinion in Wilson over whether the U.S. 264 bypass should follow a close-in route as recently proposed, or a more distant route which the Wilson County Chamber of Commerce had endorsed earlier.

News reports in the Wilson Daily Times indicated the discussion showed support for both routes.

Of course Wilson interests see the U.S. 264 route as a local project. They expect, and will have, considerable impact on its location.

That is well and good, but all entities concerned should keep in focus the concept of a strategic corridor for U.S. 264. Much of the work creating the corridor has already been done. The highway from Zebulon to west of Wilson is constructed to interstate standards. East of Wilson the highway on a new, fenced corridor is taking shape. It is minus some interchanges and the Farmville bypass is yet to be completed. Nevertheless the missing interchanges can be easily added and the Farmville bypass is under construction.

That will leave only the Wilson bypass location and construction to provide central eastern North Carolina with an adequate highway corridor to Raleigh. It is imperative to the entire northeast region that this be done without delay.

Greenville's northwest bypass is on schedule. The area must demand the construction of the missing interchanges between Greenville and Wilson. Finally, a decision must be made on the location of the Wilson bypass. Only then can planning and construction of this important link proceed and it is only after its completion that Wilson, Pitt, Beaufort and other counties along the route can begin to capitalize on it economically.

To the editor:

Lives are being needlessly lost in North Carolina and across the country. At least three people have been killed by freight trains recently. Action needs to be taken quickly to eliminate the cause of these deaths.

Both collisions occurred at night, the automobile hitting the train after the engine had cross the road. At night the chances of running into the side of a train are much greater than getting hit by the train.

This is because there is no warning whatsoever that a train is moving through the crossing. The mostly dark rail cars are practically impossible to see at night.

I am familiar with this type of accident first hand, as I've had two close calls, one on the Allen Road before it was signaled and another on 14th Street Extension prior to increased development and signaling. In both instances, I had to slam on brakes to keep from hitting a train.

There is at least one thing that can be done to eliminate this kind of train wreck and it can be done without great cost to the state or the railroad companies. That is, to require every engine and rail car to have a strip of reflective tape or paint applied to the side where it would best reflect a car's headlights. I believe this would provide a safe stopping distance and save many lives.

If it is not possible to put signal lights at all crossings, it is my goal that the requirement of reflector warnings become state law, if not federal law.

I welcome any and all comments or advice regarding this proposal. If you've had or witnessed any incident where reflective warnings would have helped, write to me.

The destruction of trees on the lot at 14th and Charles provides present benefits to a few developers but substantial present and future costs to the rest of us and our children. These costs are: more storm water runoff, ugliness, loss of habitat, more noise and dust, increase energy user for air conditioning (as more urban shade is lost), additional destabilization of the water table, and negative long-term effects on local growth as the city becomes less attractive. Contributions to the Greenhouse Effect may be one of the biggest long-run costs.

It isn't just that trees are being cut where they interfere with immediate development on a particular lot. They aren't being replaced with ones elsewhere that will be future assets to the particular development and the city. Current city ordinances, federal tax code and developers' self-interest don't protect present or future public interest. Are there other voluntary or regulatory ways to protect our future?

Present ordinances neither brought the public's interests to the developers' attention nor ensured that the competing interests would be adequately balanced by our public administrators. Perhaps we need a new law. Such a law might provide authority and incentives for saving large trees and replanting when they can't be saved. Other cities in North Carolina have such laws and it would be difficult to show that they have lost important economic development because of their stronger laws. Private property rights can always be tempered by public rights and public necessity.

If you have ideas about how we can discourage further unnecessary loss of trees or encourage replanting, or wish to stay informed about the issue, you may join with other advocates for a greener Greenville by calling the ReLeaf organization (the "save the trees" group) at 752-2261.

On Jan. 25 the League of Women Voters of Greenville-Pitt County met to discuss recommendations made by the Charlotte-Mecklenburg League regarding the North Carolina Teacher Career Development Plan currently proposed by the N.C. Board of Education. They did not agree with the proposed statewide concurrence statement as formulated by the LWVCM.

Local League members expressed concern that the Charlotte-Mecklenburg recommendations were too general in their formulation. It was also felt that teacher-colleagues should be included in the evaluation process. LWVGPC members suggested that staff development should include teachers being encouraged to visit other classrooms, both within and without their own school system without having to take personal leave for such enrichment. The Greenville League agreed with LWVCM that current classroom teachers should be appointed as evaluators with pay comparable to that of classroom teachers, but felt that such a recommendation should stipulate that travel and training expenses be added to the salary ad that the time spent as an evaluator should not exceed three years. During the discussion many Greenville-Pitt League members also emphasized that the need to improve the quality of North Carolina's teacher training programs might be as important as the establishment of a Teacher Career Development Plan.

The League of Women Voters of Greenville-Pitt County will recommend to the LWVNC State Convention that a phrase regarding the promotion of legislation to improve the base salary of NC teachers be included in the LWVNC Program Priorities for 1989-1991. Having considered recommendations made by local educators, parents and administrators at an educational forum held Jan. 17, GPC League members felt that before any NC teacher career ladder plan be recommended, the problem of frozen and inadequate salaries need be alleviated.

Sunday Morning Notes

Was it hot enough for you? What a question for January. How the weather will be when this is read only the reader knows. However, it won't be difficult to recall the great false spring of 1989.

For several days there it was shirt sleeves — and even shorts — weather. It was a time when a young man's fancy turns to love, and a young woman's to the latest in bikini swim wear.

Alas it is still early February and even here in the sunny south we have the rest of this month and March to go before the real spring sets in with its budding flowers and singing birds.

If a cold front hasn't already reminded you, here are a few do's and don'ts for a false spring in eastern North Carolina.

•Do keep waxing the skis. Sooner or later another winter storm will move in and your favorite ski resort will be beckoning.

•Don't pack up the top coats. Maybe you're worrying about moths getting in them but believe me, you'll need them again.

•Don't start spending the money set aside for electric and oil bills. Weather has a way of evening things out. If you still have the money in May, spend it then.

•Don't get rid of the ice scraper. Even it it doesn't snow you can be certain there will be more frost and that windshield does have to be cleared before driving.

•Don't throw away cardboard kept around for covering the windshield. It may not snow here, but then again it might. Our snows have a way of coming in March.

•If you are a runner and have been running in shorts, fine. But keep the sweat suits handy. Colds and other infections get their best chance when we underdress for the weather.

•And if you walk, be prepared to bundle up again.

•Don't brag to your friends up north about our balmy weather. In a short while they may be razzing you when they see the cold front hanging over North Carolina.

•Don't head for the beach with the idea of plunging into the waves. Remember the ocean water doesn't warm up quite so fast.

•If you are an ardent golfer you don't need any do's and don'ts. You'll play regardless of whether the weather is hot or cold.

•Most of all, if it's still warm when this column comes out, do get outside and enjoy it. If it isn't, like the groundhog, return to your burrow for six more weeks of winter.

Commentary

A Strong & Diverse Local Economy Means Solid S&L's

Last week, President Bush reaffirmed the safety of federally insured savings and loan deposits. President Bush stated, "The savings and loan deposits are backed by the full faith and credit of the government and they are sound, they are good." Bush told reporters, "I want to assure the American people of that and that's not going to change."

There has been a great deal of publicity lately regarding the savings and loan industry. Some of it has been positive but a great deal of it, unfortunately, has been negative. I say unfortunately because the local S&L's are excellent examples of financially strong and sound financial institutions serving their communities.

Greenville and Pitt County, as well as North Carolina in general, are fortunate to have a strong and safe industry. The two savings institutions home based in Greenville, First Federal Savings and Loan of Pitt County Inc. and Home Federal Savings and Loan of Eastern North Carolina, had combined pre-tax profits of over $3,000,000 for 1988. First Federal ended 1988 with over $136,000,000 in assets and pre-tax net income for the year of $2,094,000. Home Federal closed the year with assets of over $100,000,000 and pre-tax income of $1,000,000.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the regulator of the savings and loans business, requires savings institutions to set aside capital to cushion depositors against any losses on loans or other investments. The current regulatory requirement for capital or net worth for federally insured savings institutions is 3 percent of liabibities. Home Federal at Dec. 31, 1988, had net worth, or capital, of $4,421,600 or 5.4 percent of liabilities.

Like the majority of Tar Heel S&L's, the local savings institutions have remained committed to the housing market. Wide spread home ownership is one of the distinctive characteristics of the American society. Savings institutions are the largest single source of home mortgage credit. By concentration on a market that they know and understand, the majority of North Carolina Savings and Loans have avoided the problem loans that have affected financial institutions in other states.

The problems are concentrated in a small number, only, approximately 15 percent of the savings institutions across the country. These are predominately in areas which have experienced severe and widespread economic problems such as oil producing states. In some cases, a lack of conservative lending practices and even fraud have contributed to the problem. Congress and the new White House administration have placed a high priority on strengthening regulations and insuring adequate funding for the FSLIC.

North Carolina S&L's loans have invested primarily in local home mortgages. Over two-thirds of the North Carolina savings institutions assets are in residential mortgages. Greenville-based and North Carolina savings institutions provide a more realistic picture of most of the savings institutions across the country — a picture of strength, stability, a committment to thrift and home ownership and a very bright future.

Conservative lending practices, combined with Pitt County's and North Carolina's diversified and strong economy, have produced healthy profits and built strong capital for local and state S&L's. North Carolina S&L's typically have not made loans in areas outside of the state. As Thad Woodard, president of the North Carolina League of Savings Institutions stated, "They have done what they were chartered to do and they've done it well. As a result, North Carolina Savings Institutions are the envy of the nation."

For example, First Federal of Greenville does not lend outside the state of North Carolina. The large majority of its assets are loans that have been made in its primary market area, Pitt County. Pitt/Greenville is blessed with a diversified base of strong industries, East Carolina University and the Medical School. Greenville serves as the commercial, educational, medical and cultural center of Eastern North Carolina. The community is consistently ranked among the top 10 communities in North Carolina in construction and development. Strong economic growth, consistent population increases, low unemployment and rapidly expanding retail sales have produced an excellent environment in which financial institutions flourish. Strength and diversification of the local economy in turn provide strength and diversification to the local savings and loans.

According to David S. Goodson, vice president and supervisory agent for the Federal Home Loan Bank Board in Atlanta, which regulates North Carolina S&L's, said "The state's thrifts are on solid ground. Generally the S&L industry in North Carolina is exceptionally strong and sound. I attribute to good management and to conservation lending policies by the board of directors and the industry in general."

Conservative management has helped to make Tar Heel S&L's the third most profitable thrifts in the nation. In 1988, North Carolina savings and loans should show a profit of about $120,000,000, ranking them only behing Hawaii and Nevada for profitablity. The capital to assets ratio is a frequently used measure of a financial institution's strength and soundness. North Carolina's 134 savings institutions have an average capital to assets ratio of 6.7 percent, highest among the southeastern states and more than double the federal regulatory requirement.

In addition to the financial strength and soundness of the local savings institutions, depositors are federally insured by FSLIC. FSLIC is the insurance agency for savings and loans and FDIC is the insurance agency for banks. FSLIC and FDIC insured institutions pay a regular insurance premium or assessment for deposit protection. In addition, they must comply with a body of regulations governing their operations.

While recent publicity has focused on the FSLIC, it is important to note that both the FDIC and FSLIC are on equal footing as agencies of the Federal Government. Congress has pledged the full faith and credit of the United States Government behind both FSLIC and FDIC insurance. No one has ever lost a penny in an account insured by FSLIC or FDIC and no one ever will.

It is interesting to contrast the performance of a local savings and loans with that of North Carolina banks. Please refer to the accompanying chart which compares the major banks that operate in North Carolina with First Federal of Pitt County.

As one can see, the equity or capital positions are very similiar. In fact, First Federal's capital includes only common shareholder equity and not preferred stock. A number of the banks' capital positions include preferred stock. Generally, common shareholder equity is considered to be the more desirable form of capital. Additionally, as the chart shows, First Federal out-performed all the major North Carolina banks in the category of the company's return on shareholder investment, a common measure of profitability. First Federal also produced a higher return on assets than the average bank. For the most part, the North Carolina savings and loan industry compares very well with the North Carolina banking industry in terms of strength and soundness. Fortunately, the large majority of both banks and savings institutions in North Carolina are on sound footing.

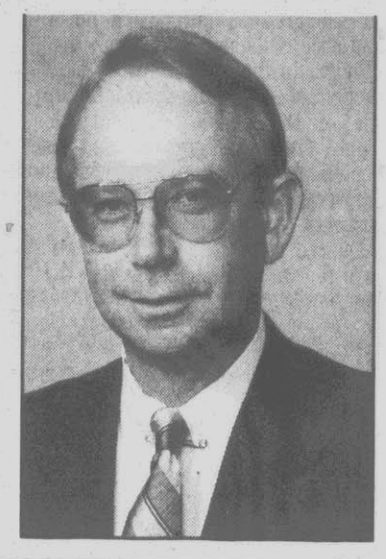

Savings Institutions perform a vital function in the American economy. They link consumers who have funds to save or invest and those who want to borrow. They accept deposits from the public, then use those funds to make various types of investments generally back into the local economy. As indicated earlier, in North Carolina, most of these investments are in residential real estate loans.

For over 50 years, First Federal and Home Federal have served the Pitt-Greenville community. In recent years, the local savings and loans have diversified their asset base and expanded the products and services they offer. Local savings institutions are comprised of people who possess sound business judgement and community accountability. They are friends and neighbors and have a deep committment to the local market. That committment, coupled with a strong financial base and federally insured deposits, provides the citizens of Pitt County a solid, stable place to bank.

Decision Fails The Duck Test

William Raspberry

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court's 6-to-3 decision against Richmond's set-aside program for minority contractors signals trouble on the racial-justice front. No question about it.

But whether it "sounds a full-scale retreat...from race-conscious remedial efforts," as Justice Thurgood Marshall wrote in a bitter dissent, is, for me, a tougher call. It may be no more than the awarding of a single round, on a technicality, in a bout America has been having with itself on the whole question of affirmative action. Still, the dangers are obvious.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, who wrote the majority opinion, said the Richmond program failed two tests that would have lifted it to the level of constitutionality. It was not based on proof of prior discrimination against minority contractors, and it didn't prescribe "narrowly tailored" remedies to overcome that specific discrimination.

"A generalized assertion that there has been past discrimination in an entire industry provides no guidance for a legislative body to determine the precise scope of the injury it seeks to remedy," O'Connor said. Therefore, she noted, quoting an earlier Court opinion, it "has no logical stopping point."

The decision may not have been calculated to turn back the clock and put racism back in the saddle, but clearly that could be the effect. What the Court majority said was that giving special advantage to minorities without first establishing specific discrimination against them is nothing more than reverse discrimination.

But whatever the theoretical validity of that view, it betrays a lack of understanding of the nature and effect of discrimination.

In the five years before Richmond instituted its set-aside program, barely 1 percent of the city's construction contracts went to minority firms, even though minorities make up 52 percent of Richmond's population.

Those numbers, on their face, justify a "general assertion" of discrimination. Nor should it be necessary to prove that specific firms were victims of that discrimination. Put yourself in the situation of a black would-be entrepreneur who, looking at that 1 percent figure, decided to take a job at the Post Office rather than risk bankruptcy in what must have seemed a fixed game.

How could you ever hope to prove that the business you were discouraged from launching was a victim of discrimination? And, yet, how could you doubt that discrimination had dictated your decision to find a safer line of work?

Plainly the dismal numbers did not reflect any lack of desire on the part of blacks to go into the construction contracting business. The proof of that is what happened after the set-aside program was initiated: The percentage of contracts given minorities rose to the mandated 30 percent. Then, when a lower court struck down the set-aside program, the rate of awards to minority contractors fell to 2 percent.

The insidious effect of discrimination is that it discourages effort. It's hard enough to prove discrimination against an employer with a history of not hiring blacks. Would you apply to such a firm if you were serious about finding work? And if you didn't, how would you show that the firm discriminated against you?

Nobody likes quotas, and given a choice between quotas and an open market, hardly anyone would choose quotas.

The problem is how to demonstrate that the markets are truly open. Theoretically, it should be possible to show market bias. All it takes is to prove that two firms, equally qualified, fail of equal access. That is the proof the Supreme Court's recent decision calls for.

But in practical terms, the most obvious proof is in results. Given clear evidence of race-specific outcomes, it makes sense to place on the alleged discriminator the burden of either proving that the process is fair or establishing a procedure that will produce fairer results.

Opposition to quotas and set-asides is almost wholly theoretical. Support of them is almost wholly pragmatic. The pragmatic approach has resulted in a significant increase in opportunity for minorities — in jobs, in contracts, in bank loans and in university seats. The recent decision, which can be read as requiring agencies to submit proof of their own bias before they can take corrective action, threatens a whole range of affirmative-action initiatives.

O'Connor, an advocate of the theoretical approach, demands proof. Marshall, with a pragmatism developed in the civil-rights trenches, is a partisan of what might be called the duck test. If it looks like discrimination, walks like discrimination and quacks like discrimination, let's call it discrimination and put an end to it.

Lung Group Offers Golf Card Plan

By Lane Dunn
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

For area residents who want to make a donation to a worthy cause and love golf, or know someone who does, a golf privilege card offered by a North Carolina agency might be something to consider.

The card is offered by the American Lung Association of North Carolina as a means of generating funds and is made available through the cooperation of 49 golf courses that donate one round to each card holder.

Sadie Daughety, regional director of the lung association, said that for $30 a card holder can play one round of golf on each of the 49 courses from the Triangle to the coast. The card is good through Dec. 31.

Ms. Daughety said that when the card was first offered courses were reluctant to join the program, but this year they have "more than ever." She said the lung association has never received a complaint from a golf course in six years of offering the privilege card program.

Ms. Daughety said proceeds from card sales will stay in the community, with the money going to education, the Better Breathers and scholarships for children's camps as well as other programs. She said that a portion of the proceeds goes to pulmonary research at the East Carolina University School of Medicine.

Ms. Daughety said the card is becoming popular among eastern North Carolina golfers and the association has recorded a 500 percent increase in sales since the program began in 1982. In 1987 the association raised $8,000, its highest figure ever, and has already made $6,000 this year. She said sales always receive a boost around Father's Day.

The card gives holders access to such courses as Duke University Golf Club, Belvedere Golf Club in Hampstead, River Bend Golf and Country Club in New Bern, Hickory Meadows Golf Club at Whitakers, and Lochmere Golf Club in Cary.

Ms. Daughety said that normal fees for playing all of the courses would probably cost over $800. "People think that it's just too good to be true," she said.

To obtain a form for the card write the American Lung Association of North Carolina, Eastern Region, PO Box 1407, Greenville, N.C., 27835 or call 752-5093.

Three Enter Guilty Pleas As Drug Trials End

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Pitt County court officials ended a week of drug trials Friday by sentencing three Greenville men who pleaded guilty to heroin and cocaine charges.

Superior Court Judge David E. Reid Jr. of Greenville sentenced Jackie Dupree, 35, 803 Bancroft Avenue to 10 years in prison. Dupree, who was indicted along with 30 others last year after an eight-month State Bureau of Investigation undercover drug operation, was charged with nine heroin violations. He pleaded guilty to possessing, selling and conspiring to sell the drug.

In addition to the 10-year active sentence, Reid suspended another 10-year term for five years and placed Dupree on probation for five years. Dupree was charged with selling heroin to undercover SBI agents on May 3 and April 26 of last year.

In the drug operation, SBI agents concentrated on purchasing heroin and cocaine-based crack from drug deealers in the predominantly black section of west Greenville. All but one of the people indicted were black. The investigation ended last September when state and local law enforcement agents began arresting suspects.

Of those, 16 pleaded guilty to charges and one person was tried and convicted by a jury. The prison sentences handed out ranged in length from two years to 50 years.

The cases for the five remaining defendants were continued, including cases involving Charlie Lee Jenkins, 41, of 1802 McClellan St., who is charged with 36 heroin violations and operating a continuing criminal drug enterprise, and Ronald Lee Brown, 35, 110 Ward St., who is charged with 60 heroin violations. Both men are scheduled to stand trial Feb. 20.

On Friday, Reid also sentenced Daniel Eugene Teel, 18, 1709 Hopkins Drive, to six years in prison. Teel pleaded guilty to four counts each of possessing and selling cocaine and one count of conspiracy to sell cocaine. The charges stemmed from four sales to undercover SBI agents in July and August of last year.

Bobby Wayne Wiggins, 27, West Third Street, was sentenced to five years in prison after pleading guilty to three counts each of possessing and selling cocaine and one count of conspiring to sell cocaine in connection with incidents in June and August of last year.

On Thursday, Reid sentenced Rufus Junior Cooper, 31, Route 4, Box 122, Greenville, to four years in prison. Cooper pleaded guilty to six charges involving the possession and sale of heroin, cocaine and marijuana.

Tyrone Joseph Vines, 19, 424 Pittman Drive, was sentenced to four years in prison after pleading guilty to possessing, selling and conspring to sell cocaine in June of last year.

Jill Caretta Daniels, 19, 2507 No. 5 E. Fifth St., was sentenced to two years in prison and placed on probation for five years after pleading guilty to two counts of possessing heroin, one count of selling heroin, one count of delivering heroin and two counts of conspiring to possess the drug.

Richmond Slips Past Pirates, 56-54

Pair Of Shots By Gus Hill Come Up Short In Waning Seconds Of Game

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

East Carolina's Pirates had two chances in the final 15 seconds to either come away with a victory or tie the game but came up empty-handed Saturday night as the University of Richmond escaped Minges Coliseum with a 56-54 victory.

The Spiders, who lead the Colonial Athletic Association with an 8-0 record, scored only 15 points in the second half, blocked a three-point effort by Gus Hill with just under 13 seconds left, then saw another off-balance shot by Hill fall away harmlessly at the buzzer to preserve the win.

Richmond's Ken Atkinson scored the final 10 points of the game for the Spiders, including two three-pointers to help them hold off the Pirates, who rallied from a nine-point deficit at the half.

"We were very fortunate to win," Spider coach Dick Tarrant said. "We scored only 15 points in the second half. We missed layups and one-and-ones. Everything that happens when you lose a came happened, but we still won."

Pirate coach Mike Steele credited his defense with a great effort in the second half. "Our guys really got after it tonight. In the dressing room, there were a lot of people with tears in their eyes. This hurt. But we need to have people react like that after a game like this."

Tarrant blasted the officials after the game, saying it was "horrendous" both ways. "I don't think it had anything to do with the outcome, but they lost control of the game. Guys were throwing elbows and grabbing and everything out there — on both teams."

Steele, when asked his opinion of the officiating, said, "It makes me very tired. I do say that it's not an easy job. But we shoot five free throws at home?"

Richmond, after trailing on three occasions, moved out to a seven point lead midway through the first half, 21-14 before Reed Lose and Kenny Murphy helped spark a comeback. Murphy hit a three-pointer and Gus Hill also added a three. Lose then hit a layup for a 22-21 ECU lead with 9:25 left. Lose took a charge at the other end, but the Pirates couldn't convert on their possession and the Spiders regained the lead on a layup by Paul Webb. Murphy connected again and Edwards scored on a breakaway slam for a 26-23 ECU lead

But Richmond, on two baskets by Scott Stapleton, regained the lead at 27-26, but Edwards matched that for a 28-27 edge.

Richmond then scored 11 unanswered points to forge a 38-28 lead with 1:50 left in the half. Mike Winiecki scored two baskets in the streak and Benjy Taylor added a three-pointer. Another three-pointer by Taylor with 41 seconds left upped the lead to 11, 41-30, but Blue Edwards hit off the baseline to cut it to 41-32 at intermission.

The Pirates slowly chipped away at the lead, finally drawing even on a Hill three-pointer with 6:40 left, 49-49, but Atkinson drove in for a short jumper to put the Spiders back on top, and they never relinquished the lead again.

It then came down to the final seconds as both teams missed several opportunities over the next few minutes. Stapleton missed at the line on the front end of a one-and-one with 2:55 left and then Edwards scored with 2:08 to go to cut it to 56-54.

After both teams missed chances again, the Pirates got it back and called a timeout with 13 seconds to go.

"We were looking for the Alley Oop to Edwards," Tarrant said. "We usually go zone on an inbounds play, but we went man on this one. But they went for three and somehow we blocked it. I don't know if that's what Mike (Steele) wanted."

It was.

"We ran what we call our special," Steele said. "It was the first time we've used it this year. We look for a back screen to Blue. Guy was to get the ball on the inbounds and get it to Blue if he was open, or shoot if he was open. I think he was surprised at how open he was and he dribbled once. That gave someone the chance to step up. I'll have to look at the films of the game to see if it was a clean block."

At any rate, Hill tried for the three and had it rejected and Richmond got the ball. Lose immediately fouled Stapleton, who missed again with nine seconds left, giving the Pirates one more chance.

Hill got the ball in the corner and again launched a three, but it bounced off and the ball went out of bounds off Richmond.

"We thought they'd be in a zone," Steele said of the second inbounds opportunity. We had Blue cut under the basket and Gus looked for an inside feed. Again, I'm going to have to look at the films to see what happened."

With Edwards covered, the ball came in to Hill, a step away from the basket, but he took an off-balance shot that again refused to fall and the horn sounded as the ball rolled off.

"I've got to give Richmond credit," Steele said. "And Atkinson made some big baskets for them. But, too, I think we could have shot some free throws there in the final seconds."

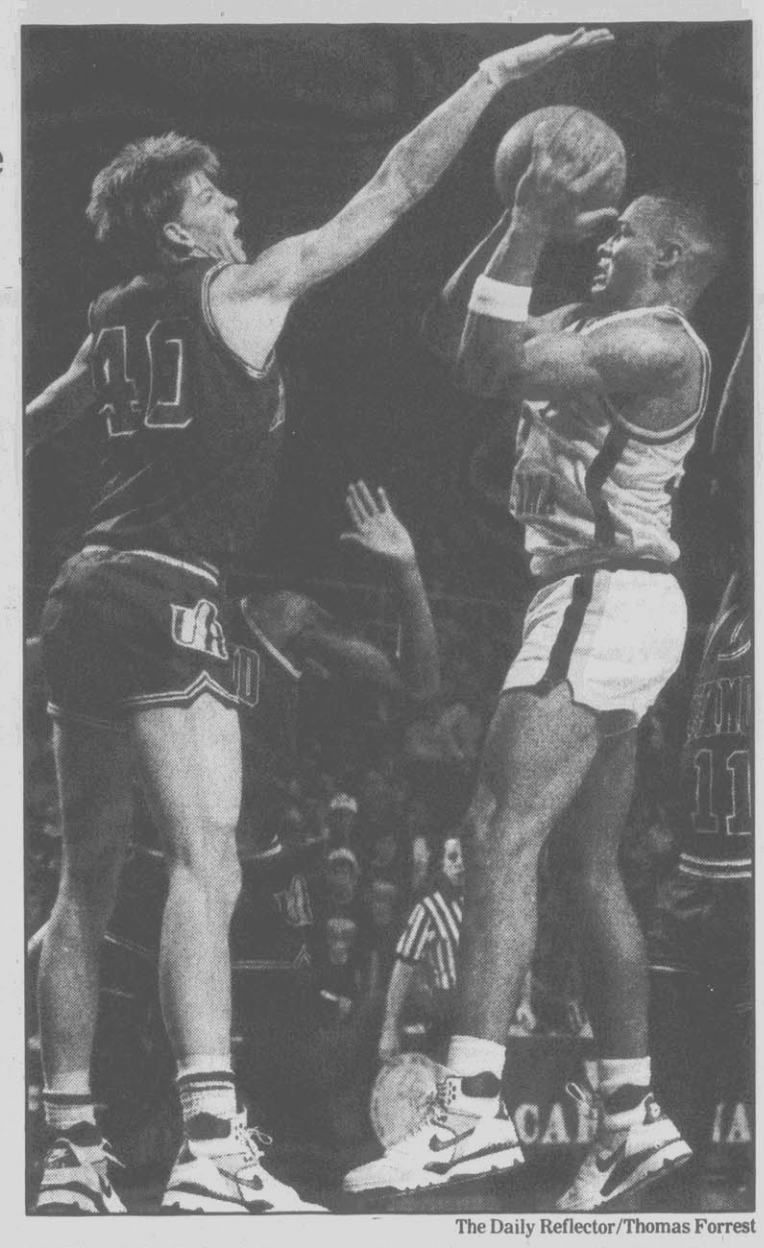

Tarrant, too, praised Atkinson. "He's a feisty kid. He's not afraid to make the big plays and he's an excellent end of the game player."

Tarrant said ECU's frequent changes of defense hurt the Spiders in the second half, contributing to the Spiders 28.6 percent shooting in the half.

ECU, however, made only 32.0 percent of its shots in the frame in failing to pull out the win.

"Richmond's good, but not unbeatable," Steele said. "If we had

Blue Demons Top Pack, Move To 14-9

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROSEMONT, Ill. — Moments after DePaul beat 13th-ranked North Carolina 81-74 Saturday, Coach Joey Meyer admitted said there had been a feeling around school all week "that we were going to get this one."

"Why?" he added, "I don't know."

Hoping his independent Blue Demons, now 14-9, can still earn down a post-season invitiation, Meyer said, "We prepared well, we had a game plan and we did it. We are in a must-win situation in every game. Each game becomes an NCAA tournament game for us."

Stephen Howard and Stanley Brundy each scored 19 points to lead the charge as DePaul got its first victory against a nationally ranked team in seven tries.

North Carolina State, suffering its third loss in the last five games and second straight, fell to 14-4. But that didn't seem to bother Wolfpack coach Jim Valvano.

"If anybody had told me that we'd be 14-4 after 18 games, I couldn't be happier," said Valvano. "I look at the glass as being half full."

"There's a fine line between victory and defeat for us," he said. "The games we won, we shot well. We've lost four games and only in our loss to North Carolina did we shoot well. We didn't in the other games.

"DePaul deserved to win. They outplayed us. They got every big play whether it was a rebound on a missed free throw or (Terence) Greene getting a loose ball when the score was 54-52. And those two 3-pointers by (Brad) Niemann were tough, big shots. Those are the things you have to do to win games."

DePaul held a 60-56 lead when Niemann hit a 3-pointer with 4:52 to play. After Chucky Brown made a pair of free throws, Niemann connected on another 3-pointer and the Wolfpack couldn't get back within range.

Howard, whose 19 points were a career high, and Brundy, then scored DePaul's next eight points to clinch it.

After nine lead changes in the opening period, David Booth slammed home the Blue Demons final basket for a 34-33 halftime lead. DePaul widened it to to 40-35 early in the second and N.C. State never managed to pull closer than two points the rest of the way.

Lady Spiders Top ECU

RICHMOND, Va. — The University of Richmond's women's basketball team eased past East Carolina, 78-70, Saturday night.

The Lady Pirates got a career-high 32 points from Sarah Gray, but were not able to overcome the Spiders as the two teams met for the second time this year.

The loss snapped a three-game winning streak in the conference for the Lady Pirates, who had beaten American, UNC-Wilmington and William & Mary since losing on the road to George Mason, 67-56 on Jan. 16.

Gray canned 14 of 19 field goals and added four of four free throws for her 32 point total. Her previous best this year as a 24-point effort against South Carolina State.

The 32 was also twice her production in the first meeting of the two teams in Minges Coliseum, where the Lady Spiders took a 67-58 victory.

But only Gretta Savage also scored in double figures for the Lady Pirates, getting 12.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT MYERS, Fla. — Ken Flach and Robert Seguso clinched a victory for the United States over Paraguay in their first-round Davis Cup competition by winning the doubles match Saturday, and avenged a bitter loss to the South Americans two years ago.

Flach and Robert Seguso breezed past Victor Pecci and Francisco Gonzalez 6-1, 6-3, 6-4 in 86 minutes. The win gave the United States a 3-0 lead in the best-of-five event.

Flach and Seguso were part of the Davis Cup team that lost before a raucous, unruly crowd in Paraguay in 1987.

"This doesn't change what happened there," Flach said. "I feel good about this, but I still feel bad about that. I'm always going to get a nauseous feeling in my stomach when I think about that whole scenario."

Singles victories by Andre Agassi and Michael Chang on Friday set up the clinching victory. Flach said he was confident that the singles players who lost to Paraguay in 1987, Aaron Krickstein and Jimmy Arias, celebrated the victory.

"I think seeing us rub these guys out like the little bugs they are makes them feel good," Flach said.

The victory put the Americans into to the Davis Cup quarterfinals April 7-9 against France at San Diego. France advanced by clinching its first-round series with Israel Saturday. "This is our first victory of '89, and we're going to go all the way," Flach said.

"We have the guys who can do it on paper as well as on the court," Gorman said.

Flach and Seguso, ranked second in the world, fared well against the big serves of Gonzalez and Pecci. The Americans also were superior volleyers, with 24 winners at the net to eight for the Paraguayans.

"We started playing better as the match progressed," Gonzalez said. "But Seguso played very well against our serves. He returned very solid all match long off both sides."

Flach and Seguso broke Gonzalez in the first game after four deuce points. Both Americans served love games to help give them a 4-0 lead in the first set.

The Paraguayans had only two break points in the first two sets, and both came in the ninth game of the second set when they trailed 5-3. The Americans rallied to deuce, and two service winners by Flach gave them the set.

The Americans broke Pecci twice in the third set, and Flach served a love game to clinch the victory.

The partisan crowd broke into chants of "USA, USA" several times and waved American flags when the match ended.

"It's been two long years," Gorman said. "We've been thinking about it a lot. It was a real embarrassment to us two years ago."

Austria 3, Australia 0

In the biggest upset of the World Group first round, Austria clinched its match with Australia in Vienna with a five-set doubles victory over Australia.

Thomas Muster and Alexender Antonitsch beat Pat Cash and John Fitzgerald 6-3, 7-6, 3-6, 3-6, 6-2 to give the Austrians an insurmountable 3-0 lead. On Friday, 20-year-old Horst Skoff shocked Cash, the 1987

ECU Announces 1989 Grid Slate

East Carolina University officially announced its 1989 football schedule Saturday, making a chance in the final slate. The Pirates also announced that future dates have been added to existing contracts with several schools and that both Pittsburgh and Tulane will be coming into Ficklen Stadium in the future.

The 1989 schedule includes five home dates and games against four bowl participants — South Carolina, Syracuse, Miami of Florida and Southern Mississippi.

The Pirates will open the season on Sept. 9 against Bowling Green. That marks a chance from the tentative schedule released earlier that had the Pirates playing their first game on Sept. 2 at Southern Mississippi. The Golden Eagles requested the game be switched to Nov. 25 in Hattiesburg in order to schedule an 11th game themselves.

"I think moving the USM game back to Thanksgiving weekend will benefit both schools," ECU athletic director Dave Hart said. "They want to play Florida State in Jackson on that day and we want to give our new coaching staff an extra week to prepare and we'll open at home."

The Pirates will travel to Cincinnati on Sept. 16, then return home for the next two games, Sept. 23 against Illinois State, and Sept. 30 against Louisiana Tech, recently upped to Division I-A classification.

The Pirates then travel to South Carolina on Oct. 7, then return home on Oct. 21 for a Homecoming game against Virginia Tech. The Bucs travel to Syracuse on Oct. 28, and to Miami of Nov. 4. They close out their home season against Temple on Nov. 11, and have road dates at Pittsburgh on Nov. 18 before facing Southern Mississippi in the finale on Nov. 25.

"Obviously, it is a very challenging schedule, as you can tell," new Pirate coach Bill Lewis said. "It means we will have to be the very best team we are capable of being to be successful."

Two of the home games, Bowling Green and Illinois State will be played at night in Ficklen.

Hart also annoucned home-and-home contracts with Pittsburgh and Tulane had been signed for the early 1990's. Current contracts with Virginia Tech, South Carolina, Southern Mississippi and Cincinnati have been extended. The USC contract will bring the Gamecocks to Greenville in 1991 and 1993. West Virginia has also agreed to contracts for home-and-home games in 1995 and 1996. Akron has also been added to the schedule for 1991 and 1992.

Seton Hall Romps Past Boston College

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEWTON, Mass. — John Morton scored 20 points, leading five starters in double figures Saturday night as 10th-ranked Seton Hall capitalized on superior height and free throws for a 105-82 Big East victory over Boston College.

Seton Hall, 19-3, dominated the boards early and spurted to a 10-0 lead. The Pirates outrebounded Boston College 49-28.

Daryll Walker had 17 points, Ramon Ramos 16, Andrew Gaze 15 and Gerald Greene 14 as Seton Hall improved its Big East record to 6-3, second only to Georgetown.

Boston College, beaten on its campus by Seton Hall for the first time since 1970, was forced to shoot from the outside much of the time, hitting on just nine of 28 tries from 3-point range.

Seton Hall built a 49-35 halftime lead and increased the margin to as much as 84-59 in breezing to its second victory over BC in a week.

BC dropped to 8-10 and 1-7 in the conference.

STARKVILLE, Miss. — Sherryl Robinson scored 30 points to lead Mississippi State to an 87-77 upset victory over 12th-ranked Louisiana State in Southeastern Conference women's basketball Saturday night.

The victory improved Mississippi State's record to 11-11 and 3-4 in the Southeastern Conference. LSU dropped to 12-6 and 2-2 in the SEC. The victory also extended Mississippi State's home winning streak to six games.

Robinson hit 10 of 13 from the field and was a perfect 10 of 10 from the line. Sophie Ratliff added 20 points and 13 rebounds for Mississippi State.

Louisiana State was led by Patricia Woods with 19 points and Dana Chatman with 17 points.

Mississippi State took the lead for good with 4:20 remaining on Tina Harris' steal and lay-up that put the Lady Bulldogs ahead 71-70. The layup started a 9-0 Mississippi State run that iced the victory for the Lady Bulldogs.

Vanderbilt.....67

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — Alvin Lee scored 24 points, including six 3-point baskets, to lead Alabama to a 77-67 Southeastern Conference victory over Vanderbilt Saturday night.

Lee had 17 in the first half when the Crimson Tide, 15-5 overall and 7-4 in the SEC, built a 34-31 advantage.

Vandy, 12-10 and 6-4, cut the lead to 40-39 with 15:47 remaining when Frank Kornet converted a three-point play before the Crimson Tide pulled away to a 50-42 lead on Keith Askins' 3-pointer from the left corner with 12:25 to go.

Barry Booker's 3-pointer for the Commodores cut the lead to 57-52 with 6:41 remaining, but Alabama then rolled to its biggest lead just over three minutes later when Michael Ansley scored on a rebound for a 65-54 advantage.

Ansley finished with 17 points, David Benoit 13 and Gary Waites 12, including 10 free throws in final 4:12.

Booker scored 23 points, including seven 3-pointers, for the Commodores and Kornet added 17.

UT-Chatt.....74

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. — Vincent Robinson's layup with 1:35 left in overtime gave Tennessee-Chattanooga a 3-point lead on the way to a 74-73 victory Saturday over East Tennessee State in Southern Conference basketball.

Calvin Talford drilled a basket from the corner with two seconds to play for the Buccaneers, but the referees ruled it a two-point shot to make UTC 6-0 in overtime games this season.

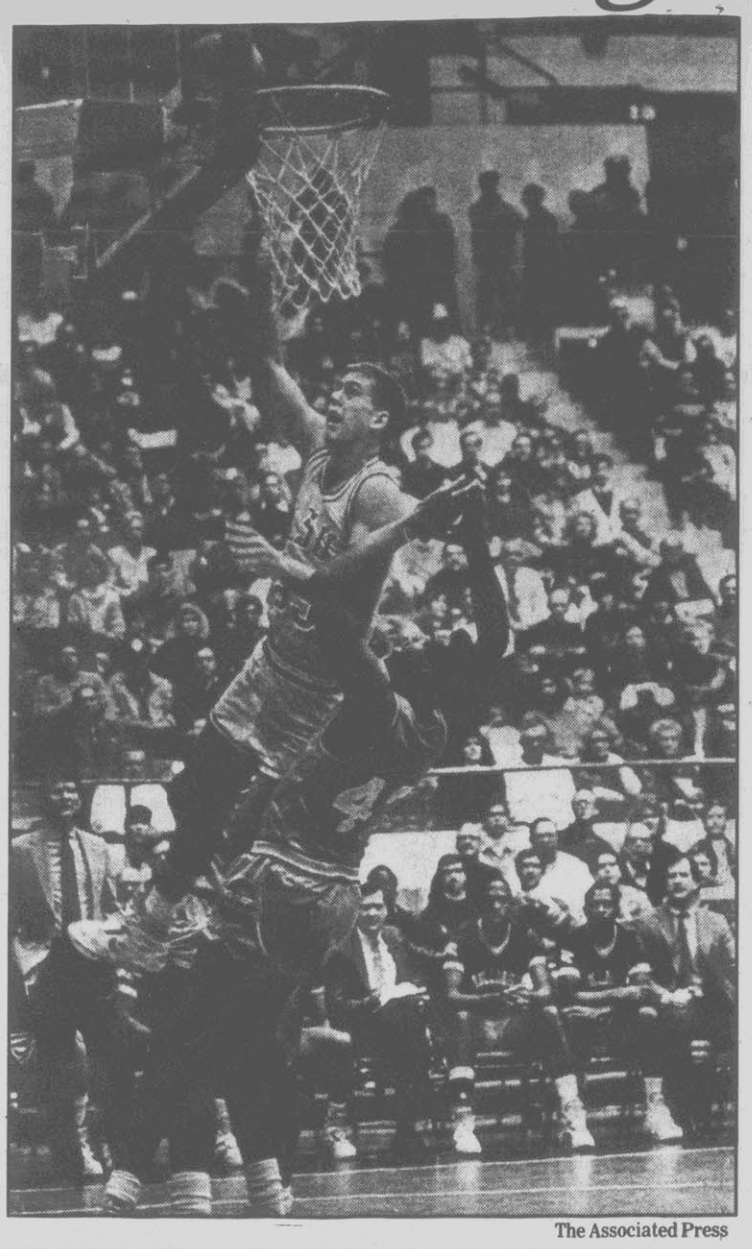

The first-place Mocs improved their record to 6-2 in league play and 12-9 overall. East Tennessee State dropped to 4-4 and 13-6.

Both teams failed to capitalize on scoring opportunities after Robinson's bucket, the Mocs missing two foul shots and East Tennessee State twice losing the ball out of bounds.

East Tennessee State led 37-31 at the half and built that advantage to 58-46 before Daren Chandler scored 11 points and Behrends added eight during a 19-6 run that put UTC ahead 66-64 with 52 seconds left. Two free throws by Jennings tied it nine seconds later, but neither team could score again in regulation.

Behrends led UTC with 24 points while Chandler and Benny Green added 13 apiece. Talford had 18, Greg Dennis 13 and Jennings 12 for East Tennessee State.

four players in double figures, led by Pam Bryant and Beth Spence, each with 17. Janine Morton added 14 and Beth Babbitt added 12.

Richmond also had a balanced board attack to out-rebound the Lady Pirates, 30-22. Morton and Spence each pulled six, while three other players each had five. Gray led ECU with seven while Savage pulled five.

ECU shot 55.8 percent from the floor while Richmond shot 57.4. ECU made good on five three-point shots, however, as compared to none by Richmond.

The big difference came at the free throw line where the Lady Spiders hit on 16 of 22. ECU made only eight of 10.

ECU is now 9-9 overall and 4-4 in the conference, while Richmond climbs to 16-3 overall, 6-1 in the league.

Ga. Tech.....87

Coach Bob Wade of Maryland did, and lauded the Tech senior after his 31-point effort carried the Yellow Jackets to an 87-74 Atlantic Coast Conference victory over Wade's Terrapins Saturday.

"I thought Tommy Hammonds played like the best player in the ACC," Wade said. "You can talk about other players, but after today's performance he gets my vote for Player of the Year. He was fantastic. He hurt us inside. He hurt us on the secondary break and did a great job from the free throw line."

Maryland gave the favored Jackets a battle for the first 23 minutes before Hammonds contributed nine points during a 22-7 burst that put Tech in control.

Hammonds hit 11 of 16 shots, all nine free throw attempts and also grabbed nine rebounds.

"I was scared that we would have an emotional letdown," Tech coach Bobby Cremins said, alluding to Thursday night's victory over 12th-ranked Duke.

"Maryland's good enough to stick you," he said. "That's exactly what happened. We were not playing the same type of defense. We were just trying to live off a big win Then we had the spurt in the second half. Once we got that spurt, I felt much better."

The Yellow Jackets were leading 46-42 when David Whitmore started the streak three minutes into the second half; Maurice Brittian capped it with two free throws 10 minutes later as Tech built a 68-49 lead.

The victory lifted Tech to 14-6 overall and 4-2 in the conference, one-half game behind co-leaders North Carolina and North Carolina State.

It was the 10th loss in 11 games for the Terrapins, who fell to 7-13, 0-7 in the ACC.

Tech's biggest lead came with six minutes remaining, when Hammonds hit a jumper off the baseline for a 76-53 advantage.

Brian Oliver added 17 points and Dennis Scott had 12 for the Yellow Jackets.

Wake Forest.....70

WINSTON-SALEM — Senior Cal Boyd scored 18 points, including two free throws with 32 seconds left, to lead Wake Forest to a 70-67 victory over Marquette on Saturday.

Boyd, who was starting for only seventh time this season, scored 12 points in the first half, and hit a 10-foot jumper during a 9-0 spurt in the second half that took the Demon Deacons from a 57-53 deficit to a 62-57 lead with 5:24 left.

The Warriors cut the lead to 68-67 on a steal by guard Tony Smith that resulted in a three-point play with 51 seconds left. But Boyd hit two free throws to seal the victory.

Ivy and Johnson scored 11 points each for Wake Forest, now 10-9, and King added 10 for the Demon Deacons, all in the second half.

Smith led Marquette, now 8-9, with 20 points and Trevor Powell added 17.

Wake Forest shot 56 percent from the field and made seven 3-point field goals.

"They were playing a 3-2 zone because they were concerned with covering Sam Ivy," Boyd said. "That gave us the 3-point shot all night and we had to take them."

Staak praised the play of Johnson, who came off the bench and made went 3-5 from 3-point range, and Boyd, who was 7-11 from the field.

"Tonight we played well enough to win. We knew Marquette would be tough and we're happy to come away with a victory," he said.

"We had an excellent game from the perimeter. Boyd and Johnson played extremely well. Antonio sparked us off the bench," Staak said.

Marquette coach Bob Dukiet, whose team suffered its third straight loss, said he was pleased with the effort.

"We were right there. We had two 3-point shots at the end, but we didn't make them," he said. "I thought we did a lot of good things. We were scrambling but we just couldn't put it away at the finish."

CLEMSON, S.C. — Derrick Forrest, Elden Campbell and Dale Davis scored 17 points each as Clemson beat cold-shooting South Carolina 78-65 on Saturday night.

The victory was the 12th in a row for the Tigers over South Carolina at Littlejohn Coliseum and avenged a 20-point loss earlier this season to their archrivals.

Clemson, coming off a stunning 85-82 victory over No. 3 North Carolina on Wednesday night, is now 14-5. The Gamecocks, who have lost three straight, fall to 12-6.

The Tigers hit their first five shots, but it was a 14-2 run that allowed them to take control. The Gamecocks hit just one of 16 shots during the Tigers' 10-minute surge that gave Clemson a 27-14 lead with 6:54 left.

The Gamecocks never got closer in the second half as Clemson extended its lead to as many as 23 points before an crowd of 11,500.

Clemson hit 54.2 percent of its shots and outrebounded the Gamecocks by seven in the first half. South Carolina hit just 33.3 percent of its shots.

For the game, Clemson hit 53.8 percent, while the Gamecocks shot 43.9 percent.

Marion Cash had 12 points for Clemson, while Davis had 10 rebounds as the Tigers outrebounded South Carolina 39-28.

South Carolina was led by Brent Price, who scored 14. Freshman Joe Rhett added 12. Senior Terry Dozier, who was averaging 10.3 points a game, was held scoreless for the first time in his career.

Knicks Top Pacers; Bucks Beat Bullets

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — Patrick Ewing had 19 points and five blocked shots as the New York Knicks defeated Indiana 113-106 Saturday night, the Pacers' fifth consecutive loss.

The Knicks led most of the game, but had to survive a 10-0 spurt in the final quarter. A drive by Vern Fleming ended the runand gave Indiana its only lead since the first quarter, 94-93, with 6:23 to play.

Ewing then rejected a shot by Wayman Tisdale and Gerald Wilkins ended a streak of eight consecutive New York misses with a layup to put the Knicks ahead again.

Indiana turned the ball over on its next two possessions and the score was tied twice before a dunk by Ewing put the Knicks ahead to stay, 100-98, with 5:21 to play.

Another dunk by Ewing, off a feed by Mark Jackson, put New York ahead 108-102 with 2:19 remaining and Indiana never drew closer than four again.

Chuck Person had 23 points for Indiana and Rik Smits scored 10 of his 20 in the final quarter. Herb Williams added 17 points for Indiana.

The Knicks led 59-55 after a sloppy first half that included a bench-clearing incident following body contact between Ewing and Indiana's Greg Dreiling with 31 seconds to play.

Dreiling was called for a personal foul on the play and the officials charged both Ewing and Dreiling with a technical after they exchanged pushes and grabbed each other.

The Knicks were leading at halftime despite hitting only nine of 25 shots in the second period. But they capitalized on seven Indiana turnovers against their press.

LANDOVER, Md. — Ricky Pierce scored nine of his 21 points in the fourth quarter, leading the Milwaukee Bucks to a 113-102 victory over the Washington Bullets Saturday night.

Terry Cummings and Larry Krystowiak added 18 points each for the Bucks, who won for the 18th time in 22 games, including six of their last seven on the road. The Bucks 13-9 road record is the second-best in the NBA, and gives them one more road victory than they had all of last season.

The loss was the third straight for the Bullets, and snapped their five-game home winning streak. Washington was led by Jeff Malone, who scored 23, and Bernard King, who had 21.

Milwaukee shot just 36 percent from the field in the first half, and trailed 50-46 at halftime. But the Bucks hit their first two shots of the third period, including a 3-pointer by Jack Sikma, to go ahead 51-50.

The lead seesawed until the Bullets tied the score 60-60 on Darrell Walker's jumper at 6:51. The Bucks then went ahead to stay when Krystowiak hit a 19-footer at 6:33 and followed with a layup 23 seconds later.

Milwaukee led 78-73 going into the final quarter after outshooting the Bullets 67 percent to 38 percent in the third period.

Milwaukee stretched the lead to 89-78 with 9:20 remaining after Charles A. Jones was called for a breakaway foul and Bullets coach Wes Unseld was assesssed a technical foul at 9:27. Charles Davis made the first two free throws, Pierce converted the technical and Randy Breuer completed the five-point play with a short hook shot.

The Bucks stretched the lead to 100-87 on a 35-footer by Jay Humphries that just beat the 24-second clock. Washington closed the gap to 105-100 with 3:32 remaining, but could get no closer.

Notes

Charlotte pulled off an upset Friday night when Robert Reid fed Tim Kempton for a basket in the final seconds to help the Hornets slip past the Seattle Supersonics, 108-106.

Reid, who had been hitting his jump shots all night for 28 points, had a chance to win the game with the clock running out and the score tied on Friday.

"I was surprised (that Kempton was so wide open). I was real surprised," said Reid, a 10-year NBA veteran who had started 43 straight games this season before being benched against Boston on Wednesday in favor of rookie Rex Chapman. "Instinctively, they (Seattle) expected me to shoot.

"Give Kempton a lot of credit. He went to the hole strong," he said. "I did have a shot but as I went up I saw them double team me and that's when I saw Kempton roll. I kicked it to him because that was a higher percentage shot."

Kempton, who scored six points, said it was Reid who deserved praise for the game-winning basket.

"I did nothing," he said. "Robert made a great play. He's been in a lot of big, tight games and it showed."

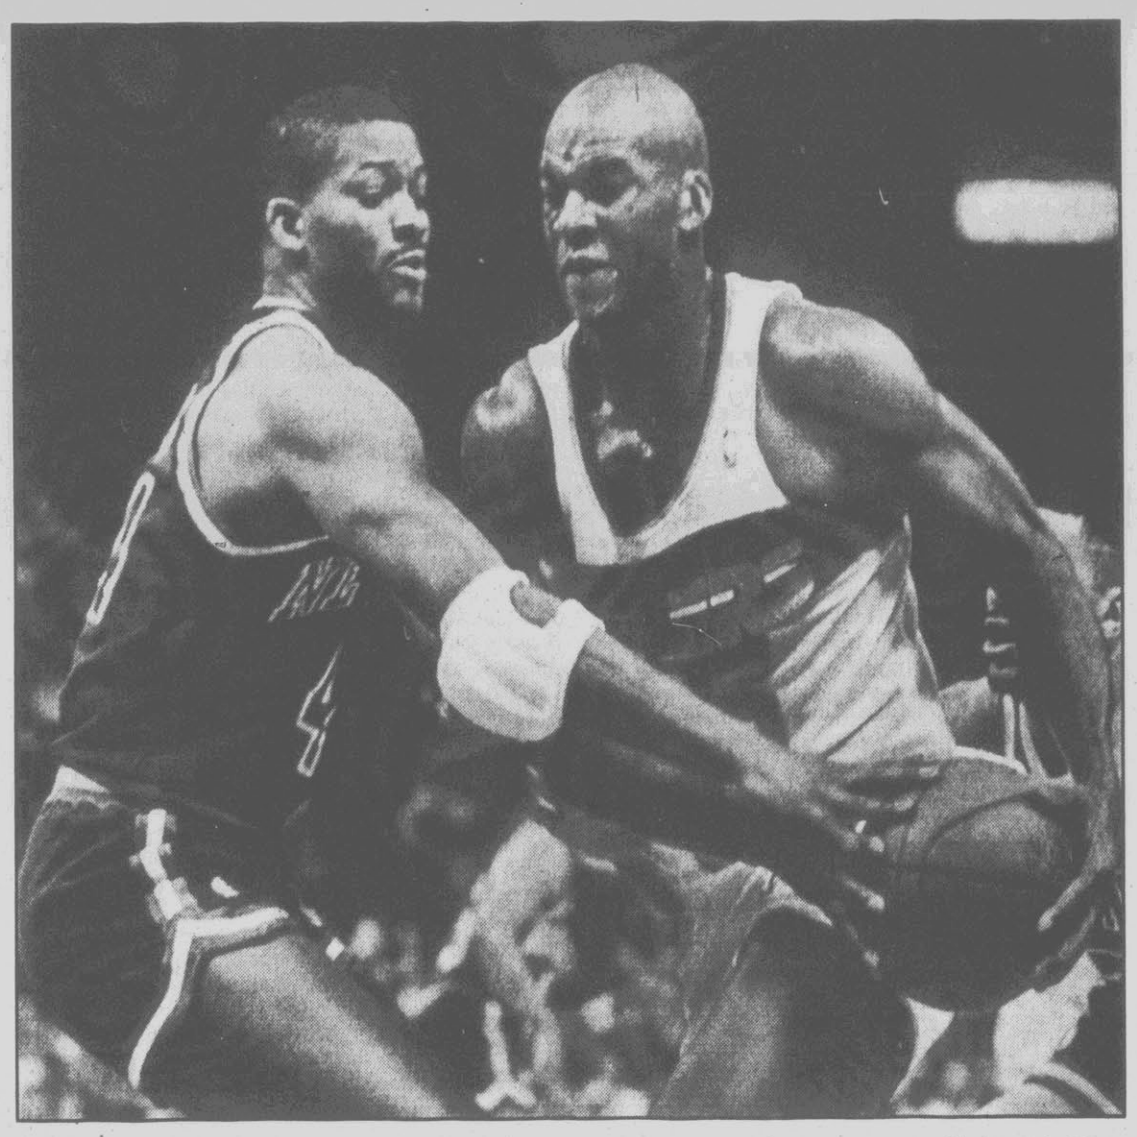

The victory was the first at home for the Hornets since they beat the Washington Bullets 107-104 on Jan. 9. And it came over a talented Seattle team with a 27-15 record, despite having to play without their leading scorer, Kelly Tripucka, who sat out with a viral infection.

"It was one of the best games we have had all year," said Charlotte coach Dick Harter. "Everyone played well, everyone hustled and played hard. We deserved this win."

Chapman added 23 points for the Hornets, while Kurt Rambis had 15.

"It was too bad one team had to lose," he said about the game which featured 12 lead changes, including six in the last eight minutes. "The Hornets play hard all the time. We are disappointed in losing but not because they are an expansion team. We would feel this way about any loss."

Wimbledon champion and Muster beat Mark Woodforde.

The Australians, used to playing on fast surfaces at home, looked extremely uncomfortable with the slow clay court at Vienna's Dusika Stadium, where a sellout crowd of 6,500 looked on.

France 3, Israel 0

France clinched its match with Israel and qualified to play the United States as Guy Forget and Yannick Noah outlasted Israel's Amos Mansdorf and Shahar Perkis 6-3, 6-7, 3-6, 6-3, 13-11 in a 3½-hour match in Tel Aviv.

It was the second come-from-behind effort in three victories for the French, as Forget and Noah staved off three match points in the fifth set, which lasted an hour and twenty minutes. On Friday, Henri Leconte lost the first two sets before coming back to beat Mansforf.

Sweden 2, Italy 1

Anders Jarryd and Jan Gunnarsson beat Diego Nargiso and Omar Camporese 7-6, 7-5, 6-4 to give the Swedes a 2-1 lead. Camporese had upset Mikael Pernfors on Friday to even the match for Italy.

West Germany 3, Indonesia 0

Boris Becker and Erik Jelen took just 78 minutes to beat Suhan Ina Suharyadi and Donald Wailan Walalangi 6-2, 6-4, 6-1 as defending champion West Germany clinched its match with Indonesia. The West Germans, who will meet Czechoslovakia in the next round, won all nine sets and lost just 15 games en route to their victory.

Czechoslovakia 3, Soviet Union 0

In Prague, Tomas Smid and Petr Korda beat Alexander Volkov and Andrei Olkhovski of the Soviet Union in straight sets to qualify to meet the West Germans. Despite playing without Miroslav Mecir, who stayed out due to jet lag and exhaustion following Friday's five-set battle against Alexander Cherkasov, the Czechs won easily, 6-3, 6-4, 6-4.

Spain 2, Mexico 1

Emilio Sanchez and Sergio Casal of Spain outlasted Leonardo Lavalle and Sergio Lozano 4-6, 6-3, 2-6, 6-2, 6-1, in a match that took two hours and 50 minutes.

Yugoslavia 3, Denmark 0

In Belgrade, Yugoslavia clinched its match as Slobodan Zivojinovic and Goran Ivanisevic downed Morten Christensen and Mikael Mortensen in the doubles 6-3, 6-2, 7-6. They will meet the winner of the Spain-Mexico match.

Zonal Round

There were also doubles matches in the zonal round, a qualifying round for next year's Davis Cup.

In those matches, Bangladesh took a 2-1 lead over Iraq; the Phillipines eliminated Hong Kong; Algeria eliminated Tunisia; Bahrain took a 2-1 lead over Syria; Malaysia took a 2-1 lead over Sri Lanka, and Hungary clinched against Zimbabwe; Kuwait took a 2-1 lead over Jordan; Finland clinched its match with Ireland and Portugal clinched against Senegal.

won, we could have sent a message to the rest of the conference that we can beat anybody. We competed, and we had the chance, but we didn't get it done."

Edwards finished the game with 21 points but missed two key free throws with 5:06 left when the Pirates trailed by two. That brought him to 515 on the second, moving him into fourth place in single season scoring.

Atkinson led Richmond with 16 points while Winiecki had 13, and only three in the second half.

Richmond, which had dominated the boards in the first meeting of the two teams, an 83-56 victory in Richmond, held only a 30-29 edge this time, which was pleasing to Steele.

The Spiders improve their record to 14-7 overall while ECU drops to 10-10, 4-5 in the CAA.

Number One Jinx Sinks Sooners, 77-73

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STILLWATER, Okla. — The No. 1 jinx hit Oklahoma Saturday as the Sooners, in only their second game as the nation's top team, lost 77-73 to Oklahoma State as Richard Dumas had 19 points and 13 rebounds and the shot-blocking Cowboys shut down Stacy King.

Oklahoma, followed Duke and Illinois as the latest casualty of the top spot, after moving up from No. 4 in the poll last Monday after a domino-like week in which the top three teams all lost.

It fell to 18-3 and 5-1 in the Big Eight as King, averaging 26 points a game, was held to 18, just four in the final 18 minutes.

Oklahoma State, 13-6 overall and 4-2 in the league, had a school-record 16 blocks, three by Dumas. But it still trailed 73-72 with 2:50 remaining after a basket by Tony Martin, who led the Sooners with 22 points.

Byron Houston, who had 11 points, 12 rebounds and six blocks, tied the score with a free throw 13 seconds later.

Mookie Blaylock had a chance to tie the score with 1:22 remaining, but he missed on the front side of a one-and-one. Thomas Jordan, who scored 15 points and blocked seven shots, then missed a jumper for the Cowboys, but Dumas grabbed the offensive rebound and got the ball to freshman Darwyn Alexander, who was fouled and made both shots to seal the victory.

The Sooners led 45-37 early in the second half before the Cowboys, who have only one senior on the roster — went on a 12-2 run to take a 49-47 lead with 13:56 to play.

Oklahoma surged ahead again with a 7-0 run, but the Cowboys scored six straight to take a 55-54 lead at the 10:56 mark.

The game see-sawed from there, with no team taking more than a three-point lead until the final seconds.

Kansas St.....68

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Gary Leonard had 22 points as fifth-ranked Missouri scored the first six points of the second half and held off Kansas State 73-68 in a Big Eight Conference game Saturday.

Missouri improved to 20-3, 6-0 in the conference, makring the seventh time this decade a Norm Stewart-coached Tiger team has won 20 games.

The score was tied 28-all at halftime, when Missouri broke out quickly, jumping out to a 34-28 lead in the first 1:55. The Wildcats, 12-7 and 3-4, twice pulled within one point, but were never able to take the lead.

Fred McCoy's two baskets cut Missouri's lead to 67-65 with 1:24 left in the game before Missouri's Mike Sandbothe then made two free throws to give the Tigers a 69-65 lead.

Following a Kansas State turnover, Irvin was called for an offensive foul, and Steve Henson made both free throws to make the score 71-68 with nine seconds left.

Missouri held Kansas State to just five points in the first 9:45, but the Tigers were plagued by poor shooting, and McCoy's basket with 10:15 left in the half brought the Wildcats to within seven points at 14-7.

Florida St. (8).....66
Cincinnati.....65

CINCINNATI — Tat Hunter's tip-in with two seconds to play capped a rally that erased a 13-point deficit in the final nine minutes and gave eighth-ranked Florida State a 66-65 Metro Conference victory over Cincinnati Saturday.

The game was tied 25-all at halftime, but Cincinnati's Andre Tate scored 15 points in the first 10 minutes of the second half as the Bearcats took a 54-47 lead with 9:10 to play. Florida State then went on a 16-7 run to close to 61-57 with three minutes left.

George McCloud hit a pair of jumpers to give Florida State its first lead of the second half, 64-63, with 1:02 remaining. But Elnardo Givens' jumper put Cincinnati back on top with 20 seconds to play.

McCloud then threw up a 3-point shot that bounced high off the rim but Hunter and tipped in the miss for the win for Florida State, 17-2 overall and 5-1 in the Metro. Cincinnati fell to 10-8 overall and 1-4 in conference play.

Irving Thomas led Florida State with 20 points and 13 rebounds, and Tony Dawson added 15 points. McCloud, bothered by back spasms, came off the bench to finish with 12.

Tate and Cedric Glover had 17 each for Cincinnati, which blew a 21-point lead in an 85-84 overtime loss to to Southern Mississippi on Jan. 9.

Michigan St.....66

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Glen Rice scored eight of his 29 points during a 16-4 second-half spurt as No. 11 Michigan overcame a six-point halftime deficit and went on to a 82-66 Big Ten victory over Michigan State Saturday.

The output gave Rice, the Big Ten's leading scorer, 2,027 career points, making him only fourth Wolverine and 15th Big Ten player to exceed 2,000. He had five 3-point shots as the Wolverines improved to 5-3 in the Big Ten and 17-4 overall.

Michigan State. 12-7 overall and 3-6 in the conference, led 31-25 at halftime but Michigan, with Terry Mills scoring seven points of his 17 points, went on a 15-8 spurt to take its first lead, 40-39 on a hook by Loy Vaught with 14:16 remaining.

A 3-pointer by Michigan State's Kirk Manns tied it at 48-all with 10:03 remaining when Michigan made its big run.

Vaught hit two free throws and Rumeal Robinson drove the length of the floor for a layup to start the burst and Rice continued it with his eight points, including a slam on an ally-oop pass from Robinson to give the Wolverines a 64-52 lead with 5:20 remaining.

Michigan State, frequently using most of the 45 seconds on the shot clock, took a 6-0 lead and led most of the half as Robinson was called for three fouls and Rice and Mills two each.

The Spartans increased their lead to 20-10 with 6:01 remaining in the half. But Rice, who hit three 3-point shots, helped the Wolverines cut it to 29-25 before Steve Smith's jam gave the Spartans their 6-point halftime margin.

Ken Redfield led Michigan State with 17 points, 13 in the second half, while Marc Montgomery had 14 and Steve Smith 13 for the Spartans.

Pittsburgh.....80

PITTSBURGH — Steven Thompson scored 29 points and missed only one field goal attempt and Sherman Douglas had 25 points and 11 assists as No. 14 Syracuse ran away from Pittsburgh 103-80 Saturday in a Big East Conference game.

Thompson, who made 14 of 15 shots, scored 11 points — including four field goals on feeds from Douglas — as the Orangemen, 19-4, outscored Pitt 22-5 in the final six minutes of the first half to break open a tight game.

Thompson, who ironically was just one for five from the foul line, hit consecutive layups off Douglas assists to give Syracuse the lead for good at 34-31 during an Orange outburst that included runs of 8-0 and 12-0. Thompson's basket off Derrick Coleman's steal and pass made it 38-31.

After Pitt cut the lead to 40-36, Syracuse scored the final 12 points of the half as Douglas, one of the most prolific point guards in NCAA history, scored six points, handed out three assists and made two steals in a three-minute span.

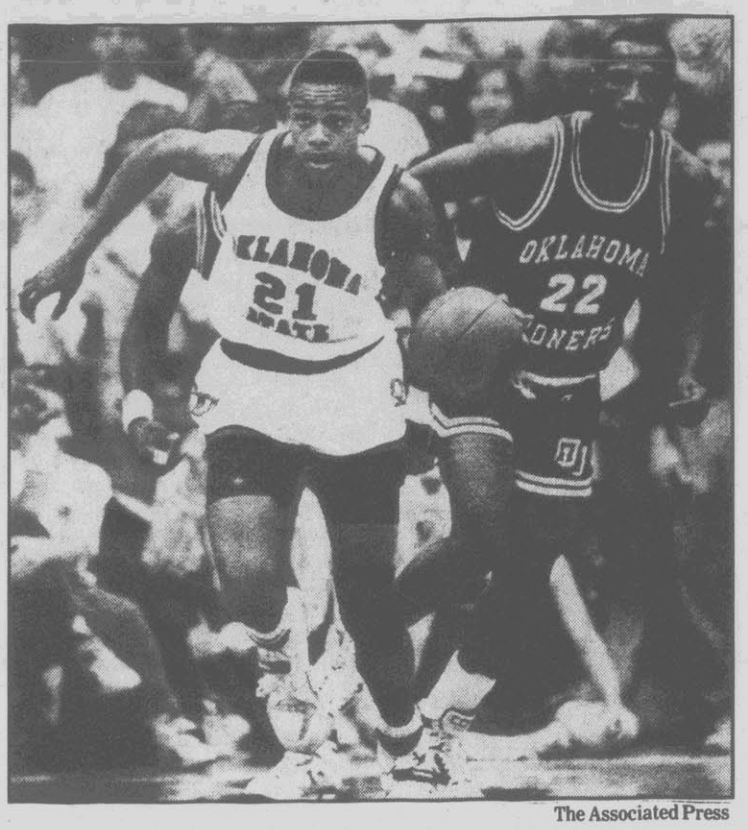

Syracuse shot 81.5 percent in the first half, 22 of 27, and finished at 70 precent (42 of 60) to just 40.6 percent for Pitt.

Pitt, falling to 11-9 overall and 4-5 in the Big East, never got any closer than 14 points in the second half despite Brian Shorter's 28 points.

Coleman had 20 points and freshman Billy Owens matched his season high with 19 points as Syracuse, won its fifth game in a row and its fourth straight in the Big East. The Orange are 5-4 in the conference after losing four of their first five Big East games.

Douglas, who needs 52 assists to become the NCAA's career assist leader, became just the seventh player in NCAA history with three consecutive 200-assist seasons and now has 208 assists on the season.

Jason Matthews had 18 points and Bobby Martin added 16 for Pitt, which had won four of its last five games against Syracuse, including an 81-76 upset in the Carrier Dome on Jan. 4.

Hoops Top Spot Is Hard To Hold On To For Long

By Jim O'Connell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The lastest AP college basketball poll caused quite a stir throughout the country. It furthered the claims of parity throughout the sport and also allowed many more people to claim their team was No. 1.

Oklahoma became just the third team to actually hold the lofty ranking this season but two more had a chance for it last weekend and six were listed atop at least one ballot in the 66 cast by the nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters.

The Sooners' stay at the top may not last long as they lost to Oklahoma State 77-73 on Saturday.

Duke was picked No. 1 in the preseason poll and the Blue Devils held that spot for nine straight weeks before suffering three straight losses and dropping to the more crowded air of the Second Ten.

"I personally thought there were 10, 12, 20 teams that deserved to be ranked that high but we were ranked that high and we had to deal with that for a couple of months," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said Tuesday. "Overall, I think it was good for our school and our program. But as far as the development of our team it hurt us in that we didn't really understand how hard we would have to play defense to be very successful and we were a different team than we were last year. These past two weeks have been eyeopeners for us and as some of those things have caught up with us so have we had to deal with Danny (Ferry) being hurt."

At least Krzyzewski was in the high rent district long enough to have enjoyed the view and get used to the air.

Illinois followed Duke into the No. 1 spot. It was the Fighting Illini's first week there in 37 years and then they lost to DePaul four days later and didn't return until this season.

Minnesota was the 1989 nemisis, beating Illinois just four days after it assumed the No. 1 spot. Even a victory over Indiana that snapped the Hoosiers' 13-game winning streak wasn't enough to keep the Fighting Illini from dropping to No. 2 behind the Sooners.

As with Ferry's back injury, Illinois could point to the loss of starting guard Kendall Gill to a broken foot as a reason No. 1 was hard to keep.

"I hope they ... at least have enjoyed it for one day," Henson said on the day Illinois assumed the top spot and the day Gill's broken metarsal was confirmed through X-rays. "Starting today, they won't have time to think about it because we have other things to do."

When told his second-ranked team missed a chance to take over the top spot following a loss to Louisiana State, Georgetown coach John Thompson said: "Do you remember who was number one last January? Nobody does but everyone remembers who was in the Final Four."

Oklahoma followed the Cardinals in the poll and the Sooners used an impressive victory at Nevada-Las Vegas to jump three places and become No. 1 for the first time in the school's basketball history.

"There are two things every team shoots for: the national championship and being ranked number one," he said. "There will be pressure but that is the kind of pressure I think this team thrives on."

"I'm not sure I ever thought about being number one during the game at all," he said Wednesday night. "That was exciting for us till about two p.m. Monday. I don't think our players or our staff really thought much about it. We knew we had business to take care of, so we just let it go at that."

There will have to be more changing in the final five polls if last year's total of five different No. 1 teams is to be matched. There were three in the previous two seasons and just two in 1984-85.

"There are many good teams and a case can be made for each being number one," Krzyzewski said.

That sounds like it could have been said by a college football coach talking of his sport's version of the poll. Luckily, there's this little 64-team get-together that decides the one and only No. 1 for the next offseason.

Kentucky Ready To Accept Penalties From Allegations

LEXINGTON, Ky. — The University of Kentucky will accept responsibility for a package of money allegedly mailed to the father of a basketball recruit, a published report said today.

The report also said UK will take responsibility for charges of academic fraud involving another basketball player, Eric Manuel.

The Lexington Herald-Leader said its information came from knowledgeable sources who requested anonymity.

The newspaper also quoted these sources as saying the university agrees with NCAA allegations that false and misleading information was supplied to NCAA investigators and that a self-styled talent scout acted improperly in the recruitment of a player.

The NCAA filed 18 allegations against the basketball program and is preparing a response.

The UK Board of Trustees scheduled a special meeting Sunday, presumably to be briefed on what the reply will say.

A package containing $1,000 reportedly was sent to the father of recruit Chris Mills last March in California. It came unsealed in transit and several Emery Air Freight employees said they found $1,000 inside, prompting the NCAA allegation.

The name of Kentucky assistant basketball coach Dwane Casey and the address of the university's basketball office was listed as the sender.

Casey has denied sending the package and the Mills family has denied receiving it.

The Herald-Leader said it wasn't known if the school's response blames Casey directly for placing the money in the package.

The academic fraud charge involves an American College Test.

After twice failing to meet the NCAA's minimum standard for freshman eligibility, Manuel made the grade when he took the ACT at Lexington Lafayette High School.

ACT officials reportedly have invalidated the test.

Charlotte Has Been Behind The Hornets

By Hal Bock
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

For the NBA, opening night in the spiffy new Charlotte Coliseum last November was exceedingly upbeat.

The launching of the expansion Charlotte Hornets was conducted in a party atmosphere, the event celebrated by people in tuxedoes and the building festooned with balloons, bands, whistles, all the appropriate trimmings for the new team's debut.

Final score: Cleveland 133, Charlotte 93.

That's a 40-point loss in the Hornets' first game, a game in which the team was ... well, awful might be a generous description.

This is not the very best way to introduce your product to its new market.

Scheer, a 20-year veteran of pro basketball with scars that go back to the ABA's Carolina Cougars, a regional franchise that hopscotched the state from Charlotte to Raleigh to Greensboro, and luggage stickers from NBA stops in Denver, Los Angeles and the Continental Basketball Association, was ready for trouble.

And then an amazing thing happened. The hometown Hornets, beaten up so badly by the unsympathetic visitors, left the court to a standing ovation from the crowd.

"That's when I knew," Scheer said, "that we had something special here."

Special, indeed.

Buried in last place in the Atlantic Division, Charlotte is nevertheless selling out the building with advance ticket sales guaranteeing that the team will lead the league in attendance.

We're not talking about some bus league here. This is the NBA, a successful operation of long standing with high profile winning teams and hotshot stars in media centers like New York and Los Angeles. You expect record crowds in Madison Square Garden and the LA Forum. You don't expect them for an expansion team that loses about three of every four games it plays.

Selling a loser usually takes time. In Charlotte it took, oh, about 48 minutes, the length of that first game. And the sale was completed under difficult circumstances because the Hornets play in an arena with a capacity of 23,500, largest in the NBA.

Truth be known, Scheer would have preferred a smaller building, something on the order of Miami Arena's less ambitious 15,000 seats. He did not have a choice, though. Charlotte's building came before the franchise, built primarily to attract the ACC tournament and, perhaps eventually, the NCAA tournament to this college basketball market. The prospect of a losing NBA team playing in front of sections of empty seats frankly frightened Scheer.

Not to worry. The town was not concerned with anything so pedestrian as wins and losses.

"This was a community yearning for a major league team," Scheer said. "It wanted that more than anything. The timing was good. The facility is beautiful. Everything was fortuitous."

Now, three months after that opening night embarrassment, Cleveland is back in town for another visit Sunday, and if you're looking for a ticket, well, you're out of luck. The game is a sellout, another one in a season that will generate an estimated $8 million profit for this franchise.

The Hornets are a box office smash and will finish their first NBA adventure with nearly 1 million in attendance, second highest in league history. Only Detroit, which drew 1,066,505 in the cavernous Silverdome last year, finished with more than the estimated 940,458 Charlotte will draw if it continues to fill the building at the current 98.1 percent of capacity.

Ask Scheer how the Hornets have done it and he shrugs.

"If I knew that, I'd bottle it," he said. "I'd love to tell you I knew this would happen but it's amazed me. I'm an optimistic guy but I never would have believed the intensity and momentum we've seen here."

The town has embraced this team of castoffs. Pint-sized Muggsy Bogues, all 5-foot-3 of him, became a folk hero. So did Kurt Rambis, with his world championship Laker rings, and Rex Chapman, the genuine blue chip first round draft choice from Kentucky. "There is a total, unconditional love affair going on," Scheer said. "We have a group of overachievers who work hard and the fans respond to that."

Charlotte had the good sense to win its second home game, beating the LA Clippers which, considering the condition of that team, was no major accomplishment. Later, however, there were consecutive home court victories against Miami — a must win situation against the league's other new franchise — and Philadelphia. Scheer calls the win against the 76ers the turning point.

"It was a bang-bang finish against an established team with Charles Barkley called for an offensive foul at the whistle," he said.

It was the kind of win that teams searching for an identity relish. It was David kayoing Goliath. It was the 96-pound weakling throwing sand in the face of the beach bully. And Charlotte went bonkers over it.

Now the Hornets are front page news, win or lose. A town that once concerned itself almost exclusively with the NASCAR races at Charlotte Motor Speedway and the Sun Belt Conference fortunes of North Carolina-Charlotte, is buzzing over the Hornets.

The franchise's original marketing strategy, suggested by the Dallas Mavericks who were the NBA's last expansion team, was to sell the stars of the league, people like Kareem and Akeem, Magic and Isiah, the headliners who would be stopping by Charlotte.

So, for ex-North Carolina star Michael Jordan's first visit to his old stomping ground with the Chicago Bulls, the Hornets prepared a poster promotion that seemed like an entirely sensible idea. Maybe not.

"We got calls complaining that we were publicizing the enemy," said Scheer, a touch of bewilderment in his voice.

Not surprisingly, Jordan needed a fistful of tickets to satisfy friends and family. He called Scheer for extras and was told he was out of luck. In Charlotte these days, there are no extra seats for the newest hit in the NBA. Even for Michael Jordan.

Irwin Shares L.A. Lead

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Hale Irwin advanced into a four-way tie for the lead Saturday as rain and darkness forced third-round play of the $1 million Los Angeles Open to be suspended.

Irwin, 43, a two-time U.S. Open champ, completed only nine holes before darkness settled over the rain-soaked Riviera Country Club course and play was stopped for the day.

At that point, halfway through the round, he was tied with Masters champion Sandy Lyle of Scotland and Mark Calcavecchia for the lead at 169, eight under par for 45 holes. Fred Couples, playing in front of them, birdied the 11th hole and also was eight under.

"We'll come back early Sunday morning to finish the third round, then start the final round about 10:30 (a.m., PST)," said Mike Shea, Tournament Director for the PGA Tour.

Shea was aware, however, that his weather worries may not be over.

"We've got a forecast for a 50 percent chance of more rain," he said.

"If half the field completes fourth-round play, it's an official round. And that means we come back Monday," he said.

The weather problems began Friday when a drizzling rain turned to steady showers, flooded some greens on the Riviera Country Club course and forced an overnight delay in the second round.

Almost half the field, 71 players, did not complete their rounds and finished Saturday morning in a chilly rain. The wind was strong enough to knock branches off trees.

Couples did he best job in those dreadful conditions, finishing off a 68 and moving to within three shots of the lead at 137.

Lyle, Calcavecchia and Irwin all completed second-round play on Friday. Lyle and Calcavecchia shared the top spot at 134.

Irwin, who narrowly avoided serious injury when he was struck in the forehead by a ball during pro-am play Wednesday, was at 137.

Continued bad weather delayed the start of the third round. It was after 3 p.m. PDT when the leaders began play.

"The waiting around, the uncertainty of whether we were going to play, is the most difficult part of it," Irwin said.

Irwin began three shots back of Lyle and Calcavecchia and birdied four of the first six holes, including a 70-foot putt on No. 3. He played the front side 3-under-par 32. Lyle and Calcavecchia each reached the turn in par 35. Couples was out in 33, then got a share of the lead with his birdie on the 11th hole.

Steve Pate was next at 6-under par for the tournament through 10 holes.

Tied at 5-under par were Nick Faldo of Britain, Donnie Hammond, Mark Brooks, Mike Reid and Gene Sauers. Reid and Sauers were through nine holes, Brooks through 11, Faldo 13 and Hammond 16.

Tom Watson was one of only nine men who completed third-round play. He had a 73 and was at 215, 2-over par.

Andy Magee, Tommy Armour III and D.A. Weibring were the clubhouse leaders at 213. Each shot a third-round 71.

Falcons' Jesse Tuggle Facing Charges

LAWRENCEVILLE, Ga. — Atlanta Falcons linebacker Jesse Tuggle faces criminal charges after he allegedly tried to obtain a second drivers' license while his license was suspended.

Tuggle, 23, was charged Friday with false swearing of an affidavit, accused of trying to get a license at the Georgia State Patrol office in Lawrenceville while his license was in suspension, warrants said.

Tuggle, who was arrested, was released Friday on $550 bond.

Roswell city officials had a minor traffic charge pending for Tuggle, Gwinnett County deputies said.

Roswell officials confirmed that the city had placed a hold on Tuggle for failure to appear in their court for minor charges. The charges were not revealed. Tuggle's license was suspended for not appearing for the hearing, Roswell officials said.

Tuggle, who played at Valdosta State, was signed by the Falcons as a free agent in 1987. He started four games in 1987 and eight last season.

Cincinnati Police Chief Faces Reprimand

CINCINNATI — The city manager has filed a written reprimand against Police Chief Lawrence Whalen that says Whalen gave evidence of drug use by former Cincinnati Bengals running back Stanley Wilson to the NFL rather than police.

The reprimand said that Whalen had possible evidence of a crime which was not turned over to appropriate police authorities.

"It was not a good thing to do and should not be done again," said City Manager Scott Johnson.

Whalen, who traveled to Miami with the Bengals to head the team's security, was involved in an apparent drug investigation on Jan. 21 that resulted in Wilson being suspended by the NFL from the Super Bowl the next day.

The league had suspended Wilson for the 1985 and 1987 seasons for violating its substance-abuse policy.

Johnson said the city no longer will allow Whalen to serve as the Bengals' security coordinator. He also handled that duty when the Bengals played in the Super Bowl in January 1982 at Pontiac, Mich.

Whalen faces no additional punishment beyond the reprimand, the city manager said.

Johnson said his investigation included interviews with Miami-area law enforcement personnel. He refused to describe in detail Whalen's actions on the night of Jan. 21.

"All I have found is that there is a possibility of a crime," Johnson said. "I believe that any citizen has an obligation to turn over possible evidence.

Whalen has acknowledged that on Super Bowl game day, he possessed material taken from Wilson's room at the team's hotel and turned that material over to the NFL. He said he did not arrest Wilson the day after the game because he lacked the authority.

Hoosiers Rally For Big 10 Win

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Joe Hillman scored a season-high 20 points Saturday, including 14 in the second half as 17th-ranked Indiana rallied from a 14-point deficit to a 66-62 victory over Minnesota.

The win solidified the Big Ten Lead for the Hoosiers, who are 8-1 at the midway point of the conference race, and 18-5 overall. The Gophers, winless on the road in the Big Ten, dropped to 4-5 and 12-7.

Willie Burton, who had 12 of his 17 points in the first half, helped Minnesota to a 28-22 lead at the break. The Gophers stretched their advantage to 44-30 five minutes into the second period before a 3-point goal by Jay Edwards, two free throws by freshman Eric Anderson and a steal and layup by Hillman started the Indiana rally.

A basket by Anderson tied the game at 52-52 with 5:45 to go, then a basket by Edwards, who had 13 of his 15 points in the second half, put Indiana ahead to stay at 60-59 three minutes later.

The Hoosiers' final six points came on free throws as they won their 14th straight over Minnesota over the past seven years.

Two by Edwards and two by Hillman put Indiana ahead 64-59 before a 3-point goal by Minnesota's Kevin Lynch cut the lead to two points with a minute to go. The Gophers had a chance to tie, but Melvin Newbern missed a shot, and Edwards was fouled on the rebound.

He hit the final two free throws for a four-point Hoosier lead with 28 seconds to go.

Anderson added 13 points and Lyndon Jones 12 for the Hoosiers. Newbern backed Burton with 14 points and Lynch added 11 for the Gophers.

Stanford (20).....84
Florida.....69

ORLANDO, Fla. — Todd Lichti scored 27 points, 12 from the foul line Saturday to lead 20th-ranked Stanford to an 84-69 victory over Florida in the first-ever basketball game played in the Orlando Arena.

Howard Wright added 17 points for the Cardinal, 10 during the final six minutes of the first half when Stanford, 16-5, jumped out to a 44-33 lead. Lichti had 18 of his points in the first half.

Lichti, who was 12 of 15 from the foul line for the game, scored 18 in the first half to pace the Cardinal to a 44-33 halftime lead.

Florida, 11-10 cut the lead to 60-52 midway through the second half on a Clifford Lett 3-pointer, bringing the crowd of 14,687 to its feet.

But Wright and Terry Taylor quickly snuffed the rally, scoring all of Stanford's 15 points in the next seven minutes as Stanford took its biggest lead of the game at 75-58.

NC-Charlotte.....68

CHARLOTTE — Cedric Ball scored 18 points and pulled down 12 rebounds to give North Carolina-Charlotte a 68-59 Sun Belt Conference victory over Virginia Commonwealth Saturday.

Henry Williams added 17 points and Frank Persley scored 10 for the 49ers, who led from start to finish while fending off a strong second half by the Rams.

N.C.-Charlotte, 12-7 and 5-3, expanded its 34-18 halftime lead to 41-22 with 18 minutes left, when Persley scored a transition layup.

From that stage, Virginia Commonwealth, 8-11 and 4-4, employed full-court zone pressure to chip away at the deficit.

Reserve center Antoine Ford, who scored 12 of his 16 points in the second half, hit a low post jumper with 5:23 to bring the Rams within 56-51.

The 49ers then found seams to break the pressure, as guards Williams and Byron Dinkins combined for eight closing points.

Chris Cheeks paced Virginia Commonwealth with 17 points, pulling down 10 rebounds as well. Ford had 13 rebounds and Martin Henlan grabbed 11 for the Rams, who outrebounded the 49ers 32-16 in the second half.

From the tipoff, the 49ers opened a 10-2 lead, as Jeff West hit a jumper from the corner with 14:42 left in the first half.

West sparked the 49ers off the bench, scoring all nine of his points in the first half as the Rams pulled no closer than six points.

Auburn.....72

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Dyron Nix scored 27 points Saturday to lead Tennessee past Auburn 89-72 in a Southeastern Conference game.

The victory broke a four-game losing streak for the Volunteers, now 13-6 and 6-4 in the SEC. The depleted Tigers fell to 7-11 and 0-10 in the conference.

Tennessee coach Don DeVoe broke up the all-senior lineup that had started most of the season, inserting three reserves to get more outside shooting. One of the starters in the revised lineup was junior college transfer Ron Taylor, who had played just 63 minutes all year.

The Vols responded early, scoring six of their first seven baskets from 3-point range, including two each by Taylor and Mark Griffin. Tennessee ended the day with 10 3-point baskets in 27 attempts to 1-of-5 for Auburn.

The Vols went on to build leads as large as 25 points late in the game before the Tigers scored the game's final eight points against Tennessee reserves.

Clarence Swearengen scored 12 points for the Vols and Doug Roth had 11. Ten Vols scored and all 14 of them played.

Matt Geiger led the Tigers with 18 points. Derrick Dennison had 17 and Keenan Carpenter had 15.

It was Tennessee's 18th victory in the last 19 games against Auburn in Knoxville.

The Tigers shot a higher percentage from the floor than the Vols, 54.4 percent to 45.5 percent, but Tennessee took 20 more shots. Auburn outrebounded Tennessee 43-37 but committed 25 turnovers to Tennessee's 11.

Va. Tech.....107
Southern Miss.....92

BLACKSBURG, Va. — Bimbo Coles scored 42 points and Wally Lancaster had 18 points and 16 rebounds Saturday as Virginia Tech snapped a four-game losing streak with a 107-92 Metro Conference victory over Southern Mississippi.

Jurado Hinton's basket with 4:13 remaining in the first half gave the Golden Eagles their last lead at 39-37. The Hokies outscored the Golden Eagles 11-6 over the rest of the half to take a 50-45 advantage at intermission.

Coles scored six points in a 12-4 Virginia Tech run in the opening 3:39 of the second half that gave the Hokies a 62-49 lead.

The Hokies, 8-12 overall and 1-5 in the Metro, also got 12 points from George Caesar. Lancaster continued his NCAA record streak of games with at least one 3-point basket to 65.

The Golden Eagles, 7-10 and 2-4, were led by Darrin Chancellor with 20 points, Clarence Weatherspoon with 19 and Louis Bates with 13.

Lefty Brewing A Winner In Harrisonburg

Despite a number of close conference losses recently, James Madison has done better than expected in the Colonial Athletic Association this season under Lefty Driesell.

The Dukes, 12-10 overall and 4-5 in the conference, field an undersized team this season, but next year could be a different story. Already in the fold are transfers Steve Hood (6-6 from Maryland) and Fess Irvin (6-1 from Louisiana State). JMU also recently got a visit from 6-10 Byron Tucker, who withdrew from N.C. State during the fall semester and has been shopping around for his next place of matriculation.

Right now, Hood (a small forward) and Irvin (a point guard) are arguably the best in the CAA at their position even though they are sitting out this year as transfers. If Lefty adds Tucker to the fold, the CAA could well become a one-team league.

Could Baker Be Back on the Sidelines?

Former East Carolina football coach Art Baker, now working as an assistant to South Carolina athletic director King Dixon, might well end up back on the sidelines.

USC has had a number of coaching changes since the end of the season, the most notable being the demotion of offensive coordinator Al Groh to quarterback coach.

Evidently, USC coach Joe Morrison wants to junk Groh's pro-set I formation attack to go back to the run-and-shoot scheme the Gamecocks had utilized during the previous two seasons.

Baker used the run-and-shoot during three of his four years at ECU and last year the Pirates had a productive year offensively with the scheme. When Baker resigned as the Pirates' coach in early November, he made no secret of the fact that he still wanted to coach.

Ebron, Langley Finding Their Roles In College

Former D.H. Conley point guard Troy Ebron has firmly established himself as a starter for the Wingate basketball team.

Ebron is averaging five points and five assists per game. His five assists per game average is the fourth highest total in the district.

Wingate, 10-8, is in its first year under coach John Thurston, who quit as James Madison's head coach last season in a dispute with athletic department officials.

"He's come around," Thurston said. "He's shooting about 50 percent from the floor and 40 percent from the three-point line. He's developing into a solid point guard.

"He didn't play very much last year, maybe three or four minutes a game. He's not a scorer in our offense. The other four starters are in double figures. His job is to get the ball on the break and distribute it."

Playing 30 minutes a game has meant some adjustments for Ebron, who rarely saw playing time last year.

"A lot of it is physical," Thurston said. "He has had problems with his stamina because he's not used to playing that long and that hard. At any level of college basketball, you have to play harder than in high school and he (also) didn't play last year. That's probably his biggest weakness.

Former Greenville Rose point guard Keyford Langley, now a freshman point guard at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, seems to have established himself as the backup point guard to Tony Green.

Langley appeared in Greenville in a 68-49 loss to East Carolina Nov. 28 and played just over a minute and a half.

UNC-G is currently 9-10 and in the midst of four-game losing streak.

In a 74-71 loss to Longwood Jan. 25, Langley scored a season-high six points, had one assist and two steals.

Green starts and averaged six points, two rebounds and two assists a game.

Football Signing Date Coming Up Wednesday

East Carolina football coach Bill Lewis will likely breathe a sigh of relief on the national football letter of intent signing day Wednesday.

Since being named the Pirates' head football coach Dec. 4, Lewis has been trying to make up for lost time on the recruiting trails and so far, he appears to have done quite well.

A number of North Carolina prep players have already committed to ECU and this weekend figures to be the climax of the Bucs' recruiting efforts.

So far, Lewis has gotten verbal commitments from one of the top tight ends in the state in Fayetteville Byrd's Rodney Jones (6-3, 230), who had been the target of a number of ACC schools.

Another commitment came from Red Springs fullback Victor McBryde (6-0, 215), who played in the Shrine Bowl and a pair of local standouts from Rose High in running back Tim Moore (5-9, 215) and defensive end Carlester Crumpler (6-6, 215).

Lewis' predecessors, Baker and Ed Emory, both made in-state recruiting a priority but found it tough going head to head with the ACC schools.

When Lewis met the media after being named head coach Dec. 4, he talked at length about the importance of going head to head with anybody for the state's top talent.

But saying you want to recruit successfully in state and actually doing it are two different things. Lewis has done both.

The All-Under-Achiever Team

The rosters are already set for NBA All-Star game Feb. 12 which will pit the top players in the league against each other in a test of supreme basketball skill.

But what about the under-achievers? You know, the guys with all the tools and little else in the way of measurable brain activity.

The MVP here would have to be Walter Berry, who this past week was released by the New Jersey Nets, his third team in as many years.

Nets' officials said Berry, a former first-round pick of the Portland Trail Blazers, wouldn't accept a role as a reserve. In fact they would rather pay his hefty, guaranteed salary and have him off the team than on the bench as a reserve.

An achievement of that magnitude deserves a reward and that's why Berry heads the All-Under-Achiever NBA Enigma Team.

Joining him on this squad are former N.C. State standouts Chris Washburn of the Atlanta Hawks and Charles Shackleford of the Nets along with Pearl Washington of the Miami Heat and Joe Wolf of the Los Angeles Clippers.

The one thing these five all have in common is outstanding college basketball careers followed by pro careers that have done little more than inspire yawns.

Berry, the established leader of this group, was traded to the Nets prior to this season from San Antonio. During his tenure with the Spurs, he had two high points. Once, He pulled a knife on teammate Alvin Robertson during an altercation. The other incident occurred after Larry Brown was named the team's new coach this summer. Berry objected to the choice. "Coach Brown is a fundamental coach. My game doesn't consist of fundamentals." That quote got him a one-way ticket to East Rutherford, N.J.

Luckily for Berry, talent (ie potential), counts more than results and for that reason he is now a member of the Houston Rockets who signed him shortly after the Nets released him.

Rawlings Working On New Baseball

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. LOUIS — One of the first orders of business for new National League President Bill White may be a signature.

One that looks good on a baseball.

Rawlings Sporting Goods, which produces major-league baseballs, needs White's autograph fast in order to make the new model available by Opening Day.

"I believe A. Bartlett Giamatti gave us all winter to produce the new balls," Rawlings spokesman M. Scott Smith said. "It was a lot easier. Now we know we're going to have to push."

White, a six-time All-Star and broadcaster with the New York Yankees for 18 years, on Friday was elected unanimously to a four-year term during a conference call of NL owners. He will take office April 1 when Giamatti becomes commissioner.

Smith said Rawlings expects to receive from six to 10 signatures from White by early next week. By the end of the week, Rawlings will have a finished stamp bearing White's autograph and should get the first new baseballs about a week to 10 days after that, Smith said.

During spring training, National League teams will use up their supply of Giamatti balls, "but we should be able to push out some Bill White models pretty quickly," Smith said.

Smith said some leftover Giamatti balls may see the playing field early in the regular season, but expected each team to debut the White ball in its season opener.

Rawlings produces about 500,000 baseballs each year for the major leagues. The balls are hand-sewn at plants in Port Au Prince, Haiti, and Turralba, Costa Rica, then shipped to Rawlings' testing facility at Licking, Mo., for quality control.

Smith said each major league team orders about 1,500-2,000 dozen baseballs per year, in three or four shipments. He said Rawlings anticipated the crush, making more American League balls earlier.

Giamatti's signature will not completely disappear, however. As commissioner, his autograph will still be displayed on balls at the All-Star Game and World Series.

Mets May Add To Pitching Staff

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The New York Mets have the most pitching in baseball. They may be getting more.

Last week, the Mets were close to working out a trade for Mark Langston, who led the American League in strikeouts in 1984, 1986 and 1987. The Seattle Mariners were set to trade Langston to New York with outfielder Jay Buhner and minor-league first baseman Jim Bowie Jr. for either left-handers Sid Fernandez and David West, or Fernandez and infielders Howard Johnson and Tim Teufel.

Seattle backed off at the last moment, apparently wanting to make every effort to get Langston to agree to a multiyear contract. Mariners GM Woody Woodward has said he will look to trade the left-hander if he does not agree to a multiyear deal.

Langston was 15-11 last season with a 3.34 earned-run average and 235 strikeouts in 261 1-3 innings. The five-year veteran is asking for $1.5 million in arbitration, a raise of $638,000. Seattle is offering $635,000. His case is scheduled for Wednesday, Feb. 15 in New York before arbitrator Richard Sears.

ALSO RUMORED ...

For once, baseball didn't have the biggest rumor mill.

On Thursday, rumors swept through brokerage houses in New York that the Yankees were about to trade first baseman Don Mattingly. A nearly-out-of-breath bond broker at Merrill Lynch Capital Markets called The Associated Press to check it out after the rumor swept through Merrill Lynch's trading floor in New York.

But the baseball rumor mill, bullish on rumored Mattingly deals last fall, has been led by the bears of late. There hasn't been any good Mattingly gossip in weeks.

POWER PR

Baseball, more image conscious these days following the collusion decisons and the Al Campanis statements of "Nightline" two seasons ago, has been working with Howard Rubenstein and Associates, the high-powered public relations firm that handles many of New York's realty companies and politicians.

The commissioner's office and the Player Relations Committee retained the firm about four months ago. Howard Rubenstein and Lloyd Kaplan handle do the advising.

"It's a very important account to the agency," Kaplan said this week.

Polly Rosborough Is The Master Of Flies

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHILOQUIN, Ore. — Polly Rosborough sat down at his old oak rolltop desk, the top cluttered with jars of hooks, stray hackle and swatches of bucktail, and explained the making of a fuzzy nymph.

"The whole secret to a good fly is to make it look like it's alive," says Rosborough. "Some of these tiers are hooked on Swannundaze and monofilament and they get in the water and they are dead. I want it to breathe."

Tying flies that breathe has been a specialty of Rosborough's since he spun a noodle of cream-colored seal fur and a little grizzly hackle on a hook in 1933 and inadvertently created the first of his fuzzy nymphs.

Though he didn't know it then, he had created something that, to a trout, looked pretty much like a caddis larva just before it emerges from the water and flies into adulthood.

"The odd part about it is there are no caddis on Butte Creek," says Rosborough. "But it looked so much like it was edible, the big browns went crazy over it."

Since then, Rosborough, 86, has filled a book with 46 of his flies representing stoneflies, caddis, mayflies, midges, damselflies, shrimp and scuds in various stages of their life cycles.

"Tying and Fishing the Fuzzy Nymphs," has become a classic of fly-tying literature. Originally published in 1965, it recently was released in an expanded fourth edition.

"What happened was, Polly was seeing that the little fish were up on the surface taking the duns," says Dave Hughes, a fly fisherman and writer himself from Astoria. "But he could see bigger fish swirling and taking something underneath the surface.

"So Polly was the first one to stick his nose underwater and look at what the fish were really doing."

Born in the Ozarks of Arkansas and raised in Oklahoma and Alberta, Canada, Rosborough had been following the harvest around the country as a young man in the early 1920s when he and another fellow decided to head for California.

"We were going to sleep under the orange trees," says Rosborough. "I never did get down there where the orange trees are."

After hopping a southbound train in Klamath Falls, he got kicked off not far past the California border in a little place called Penoyar and walked into the town of Bray, where he got a job in the local box factory. He worked in lumber mills up and down the Cascades and Sierra Nevada for the next 20 years.

It was in Bray that his non-stop chatter earned him the nickname Polly, after the parrot, and he got his first taste of fly fishing, after which he quit the local baseball team and devoted his Sundays to chasing the trout in Butte Creek.

That's also where he created the first fuzzy nymph, which, chracteristically, is no longer in his repertoire, because he has since come up with better designs.

During World War II he moved to Portland, where he worked in the shipyards and started tying flies for the Meier & Frank store.

"When I was tying for Meier & Frank, I averaged eight dozen a day," Rosborough says. "Once I tied 15 dozen in 11 hours. I couldn't dream of tying four dozen now. I don't have the stamina."

In 1944, he settled on the eastern slope of the Cascade Range about 30 miles north of Klamath Falls and hasn't lived far away since.

"I fished all over the West and there ain't anyplace that can compare with this river right here," Rosborough says, gesturing out the window of his mobile home to the Williamson River. "I fished Idaho, Montana and Alberta. But there is no place I could find where you can consistently take fish above 5 pounds on a fly like here."

A few years back he suffered vertigo that left him too dizzy to walk. He's pretty much over it now and is back at the rolltop desk, working mostly on orders from collectors and old customers.

Raising Elks Is Family Tradition

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. JOSEPH, Mo. — Scratching the furry back of 1,000 pounds of bull elk, Alva Ruark wears a mischievous grin as he advises "never turn your back on a wild animal."

That advice is difficult to take seriously, espcially when an 800-pound female elk is licking the hand holding the camera recording Ruark's herd of five wild elk he is raising on his farm, located in northwest Missouri, about 15 miles northwest of St. Joseph.

Ruark, or Alvie, as he prefers, obviously likes animals. Several dogs, a goat and an 11-month-old llama share the Ruark farm. The Ruarks plan to comb spinning wool from the llama, a South American pack animal prized for its soft fur.

"I've got the space out here in these wooded hills for all sorts of animals. We also hope to make money on the elk, which bring a good price from the right market," he said, continuing to scratch the hind leg and back of the very contented bull elk.

"Lucky — that's what they called him when I bought the herd in 1987 — loves to be scratched. But, he's still wild, so I don't get careless. Elk are stubborn. You can't drive them. They go where they want to go. They are more stubborn than any Missouri mule ever thought of being," Alvie said.

Lucky just doesn't seem the damaging sort. He scrunches down in obvious delight when being scratched or rubbed — much like a gigantic puppy being petted.

The big elk readily accepts the pet goat, "Maria," but quickly gets belligerent at the four female elk when they intrude on feeding territory.

Ruark, who also works at a steel cable manufacturing plant in St. Joseph, became interested in raising elk after reading a magazine article on the subject.

"Elk have a lot of advantages. They will eat plants the cows wouldn't touch, such as bark and buck brush. You can raise three elk on what one cow would eat. Oh, I feed them alfalfa every few days, mostly to keep them gentle and teach them to stay near the barn.

"They have few diseases. About all we have to watch for is pneumonia — the main cause of elk problems," Alvie said.

Elk are in demand to stock hunting game farms and as a meat supply very low in fat and cholesterol, he added.

"A bull elk can bring $5,000. They usually go for $3,500, which is a lot more than any cow would bring. And an exceptional rack would bring a lot more from a game farm, where hunters pay to shoot trophy elk."

An idea of the profit in raising elk can be gained from Alvie's investment.

He paid $750 each for Lucky and seven female elk, purchasing the eight elk in November of 1987 from the Russ Johnson elk farm near Bucklin in north central Missouri. The 6-month-old animals weighed about 250 pounds.

He sold three of the cow elk back to Johnson this year to help replace 13 elk Johnson lost from pneumonia.

"That sale nearly took care of my original investment in all eight elk, so you can see how they jump in value," Alvie explained.

"Russ is a great guy and has helped me like a father. He has been raising elk on his fenced farm near Highway 36 for 14 years and now has 200 head. He also has a two-year waiting list of people wanting to buy elk calves," Alvie said.

Tax Contributions Help Wildlife

North Carolina citizens hit another record high last year with their contributions to the state's Nongame and Endangered Wildlife Fund.

Figures provided by the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission by the state Department of Revenue show contributions have reached nearly $1.75 million through the state income tax check-off program over a five-year period.

Tax returns through September 1988 show a record $425,426 was contributed to the nongame program. By the same period in 1987, contributions totaled $384,758.

Records also show that more and more taxpayers are checking the block for the nongame fund. The number of contributors has increased from 36,216 in 1986 to 45,318 in 1988.

Each year, North Carolina residents may check a line on their state income tax form and designate any or all of their refund to the Nongame and Endangered Wildlife Fund. The fund is used by the Wildlife Resources Commission to manage and protect nongame wildlife and species that are endangered, threatened or of special concern.

Since the check-off program was enacted by the N.C. General Assembly in 1983, the contributions have been used only for projects involving nongame and endangered wildlife. Public support is vital to the success of conservation programs for such species as the bald eagle, peregrine falcon, Virginia big-eared bat, northern flying squirrel, sea turtles and the Tar River spiny mussel.

A panel of 17 volunteer citizen conservationists known as the Nongame Wildlife Advisory Committee guides the commission's nongame program, including the expenditures of nongame contributions.

The increase in contributions will allow the program to begin a plan to protect nesting sites used by North Carolina's colonial waterbirds such as pelicans, sea gulls and terns.

"All these birds nest on natural barrier islands, beaches or spoil islands in coastal waters," said Randy Wilson, manager of the nongame program. "We will identify areas that are important to birds and make sure a variety of habitat types are present. If all the birds were confined to one island, overwash from a storm could wipe out their entire colony."

Spoil, which is sand and mud produced when a waterway is dredged, can be used to replenish islands and restore habitats.

The nongame program also has used the donations in the past year to reintroduce the rare spotfin chub in waters of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park.

The contributions also funded a small grants program which awarded 19 grants totaling $50,000 to individuals and organizations for research, management and education projects on nongame and endangered species in North Carolina in 1988.

"We wish we could thank every contributor personally, but tax records are strictly confidential," Wilson said. "Records show that we have a strong group of supporters that has grown annually. The increasing number of contributors and amount of their donations indicate that the people of North Carolina support this program and the work being done by the commission."

Wildlife Officers Arrested 479 For Deer Poaching

A crackdown on poaching in 1987 and a heavy crop of acorns and other forest food this year have brought down the number of arrests in North Carolina for night deer hunting.

Officers with the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission arrested 479 people on charges of hunting deer at night in 1988. That number is down 125 from the 604 arrests made in 1987.

Officers also charged 319 people with shining light violations. That number dropped from 382 in 1987.

Night deer hunting, commonly known as firelighting, is described as shining a light into an area populated by deer, and possessing a firearm when shining the light. Shining light, or spotlighting, violations occur in areas of the state where local ordinances prohibit shining a light on deer or in their populated areas, even without a firearm in their possession.

In 1987, wildlife officers used special operations that netted as many as 44 night deer hunters in one week in target areas where complaints of violations were heavy. Officers from around the state joined their colleagues in Wildlife Districts 3 and 5 for Operation Wolfpack, Operation River Rat and Operation Midnight.

"In 1987, we made more arrests because people were hunting deer at night and landowners and sportsmen were reporting the violations while they were in progress," said Col. Harold Ragland, chief of the enforcement division.

"We believe that was a deterrent for 1988 because we covered so much of the state and arrested so many people," he said. "Also, the heavy acorn crop this year kept the deer in the woods and out of the fields so fewer deer were exposed to firelighters."

In 1988, 69 arrests were made for night deer hunting in Wildlife District 1, which includes the northeastern coastal counties. In 1987, 49 arrests were made.

District 2, which includes Pitt and 11 other coastal counties, reported the largest number (114) of arrests of any of the state's nine wildlife districts. This area usually leads the state in firelighting because it has the most dense deer populations and firelighting is prevalent.

Officers reported that 298 of the arrests statewide were made between the hours of 9 p.m. and 3 a.m., while 159 arrests were made between sunset and 9 p.m. Twenty-two arrests were made between 3 a.m. and sunrise.

Conviction rates in the state's district courts are high for night deer hunting. Although most of the 1988 cases are pending trial, more than 200 already have been convicted. Only 25 have been acquitted.

Illegal deer hunting is a misdemeanor and carries a minimum fine of $250. People convicted of night deer hunting automatically lose their hunting licenses for two years. In addition, judges may confiscate their firearms, vehicles and any other equipment used while committing the crime. The highest fine imposed on a poacher in 1988 by a judge was $790.

Although six people were arrested for resisting arrest, only one officer was assaulted. Wildlife officers confiscated 36 deer from firelighters and were involved in 26 high-speed chases.

White Shad Catch Reported

John Stancill and Claxton Stancill of Greenville reported catching a 2½-pound white shad Wednesday with a net in the Tar River near Sen. Vernon White's landing.

George Sugg of the Grifton Sport Shop said white shad also have been caught in nets in the Neuse River, but no hickory shad catches have been reported yet. He expects the first hickory shad to be caught within the next few weeks, especially if the weather remains warm.

Ayden-Grifton Holds On For Win Over North Pitt

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

BETHEL — Ayden-Grifton slipped gears somewhere in the second half, but got things going again in the end to hold off hard-charging North Pitt.

The Chargers led by as many as 22 points in the third quarter but had to fight to the end to take a 82-75 Eastern Plains 2-A Conference basketball victory Friday.

"When you are more or less idling and they are charging hard, it puts pressure on your players," Ayden-Grifton coach Bob Murphrey said. "We hit some big free throws at the end. That's what you have to do win these games."

Ronnell Peterson, who led the Chargers with 29 points, hit a pair of free throws in the waning seconds as did reserve guard Darryl Moye to hold off the Panthers.

"We're down 22 points and we cut it to five," North Pitt coach Greg Ashorn said. "I just don't understand how we can get down by 22 points. This is the fifth game we've come back in after being down by 20. Why can't we play like that in the first half."

The Chargers used strong runs in the latter part of the second quarter and the beginning of the third quarter to build up a big lead, only to see the game get close again in the final minutes.

"I feel like the tide turned for us in the end of the third quarter," Murphrey said. "I pulled out too many starters and they reeled off about six straight points. We weren't able to get a rebound. It was hard to get it going again."

The Chargers looked to have things well in hand midway through the contest.

Leading 31-24 with just under two minutes remaining in the opening half, Ayden-Grifton closed the second quarter with a 7-2 run, six by Peterson, to hold a 38-26 edge at the half.

Peterson then scored the opening six points of the second half to push the advantage to 44-26 and the Chargers looked to be in fine shape.

"We came out in the second half and I said to the guys we don't want to see any layups and they score two right away," Ashorn said.

Ayden-Grifton continued to pour it on in the third period and went ahead by as many as 22 after a short jumper by Leon Dixon made it 58-36.

But, with Dixon and Peterson getting a rest on the bench to close the quarter, North Pitt rallied, narrowing the gap to 58-44, keyed by the play of reserve William Crumble who scored five of his 13 points during the stretch.

Ayden-Grifton stemmed the Panther rally for the opening minutes of the final quarter, maintaining a 12-14 point cushion until losing center Leon Dixon with his fifth foul with 4:08 remaining. That left the Chargers with essentially a five-guard lineup and opened the door for a North Pitt rally.

"That hurt," Murphrey said. "Mainly we wanted to keep five guys moving and hope to work for a layup and keep our best free throw shooters in the game and just hold on."

The teams continued to trade baskets as the clock ran down. North Pitt kept getting closer and pulled within 78-71 with 43 seconds left on a three-pointer by Billy Hardison.

Corey Stokes missed the front end of a one-and-one for the Chargers at the other end. The Panthers' William Morning then hit in the paint with 39 seconds remaining to make it 78-73, but that was as close as it would get.

Moye and Peterson then came through on consecutive trips to the free throw line to seal the win.

The Chargers move to 13-4 and 6-1. North Pitt falls to 8-10 and 3-4.

In the girls' game, North Pitt broke open a tight game in the final period and went on to take a 44-32 win.

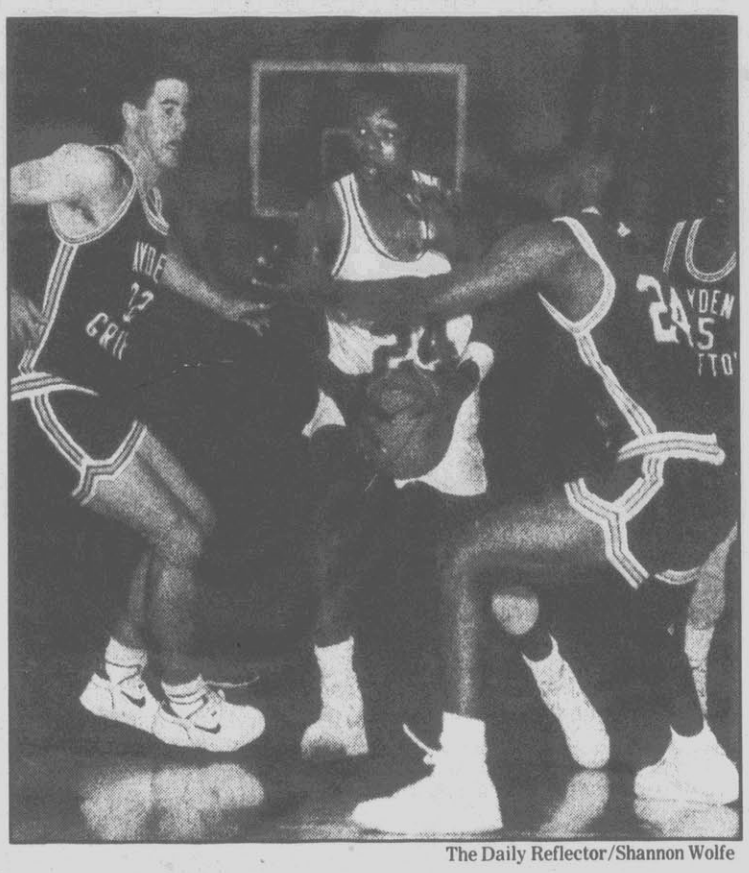

Keisha Pilgreen scored 10 of her 20 points in the final quarter as North Pitt broke a 26-26 tie and eased to the win.

Her jumper to open the final quarter put the Pant-Hers ahead to stay as Ayden-Grifton was never able to get back in the game.

North Pitt moves to 9-6 overall, 5-2 in the EPC.

Ayden-Grifton falls to 8-9 overall, 4-3 in the EPC.

Northern Nash Rallies To Top Rose

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Northern Nash, trailing by as many as 10 points, rallied and escaped with a 49-48 Big East Conference basketball victory over Rose High School Friday night.

The Rampants, leading by four as the final period opened, were unable to keep the Knights off the backboards and Northern's domination of the boards in the second half was the key to their victory.

Northern finished the game with a 40-33 edge in the rebounding department, but held a 26-13 advantage in the second half. That followed a blitzing of the boards by Rose in the second quarter, 11-1, when the Rampants built up their 10-point lead.

The Daily Reflector/Thomas Forrest

Rose also used a spread offense in the second period that seemed to confuse the Knights as Rose broke away from an 11-11 deadlock to run out to a 26-16 lead with 1:26 left in the period.

"We had talked about the spread, but we didn't go over it in practice (Thursday)," Northern coach Mike Mosley said. "I didn't expect it to cause the problems that it did."

Mosley said that he told his team to do a better job on the boards at halftime. "I told them they had to block off and hold them to just one shot every time. Then, we had to shoot the ball better, too. We got some turnovers and used them to our advantage."

Northern got the momentum back quickly, scoring the first six points of the second half to pull within one, but it was just over three minutes into the final period that the Knights finally regained the lead.

But it was with only 2:21 left that the Knights took the lead for good. John Drake hit a jumper for a 44-42 lead and Kenny Manning followed with a three-pointer after Paul Powers had been called for a charge, wiping out a potential tying basket at the other end.

Keith Thomas then made two free throws for a 49-42 lead with 28 seconds to play, but Rose got two three-pointers, from James Teel and Johnny Ebron to draw back within one with four seconds to play.

However, the Rampants were then hit with a technical for calling an excess time-out, but Northern missed both shots. On the inbounds, Rose was again called for a foul with two seconds left, and when that missed, time ran out before Rose could mount any type of offensive threat.

"We came out (in the third quarter) with anything but basketball on our minds," Rose coach Jim Brewington said. "We want to win and we play hard, but sometimes we make mental mistakes, and they kill us."

Mosley said he was very proud of his team's play in the second half. "This was a good win for us, an important win, no doubt about that."

The two teams battled on even terms through the first quarter of the contest, each holding two-point leads. There were three lead changes and five ties, the last coming on a free throw by Teel with 41 seconds left for an 11-11 deadlock. Teel had missed the front end of the two-shot foul, and later in the period, Northern's Darren Jones missed the front end of a two shot foul, only to have his second shot voided by a lane violation.

Powers scored off a fast break feed from Teel to open the second period, 13-11, and he followed that with another basket to up the lead to 15-11. After Northern closed to 17-16, Rose ran off nine straight points, scored by five different players, to open up a 26-16 lead with 1:26 remaining in the half. But two baskets by John Drake, around a free throw by Jamie Brewington, closed the gap to 27-20 at the half.

Three different players got baskets for Nash to open the second half, cutting it to 27-26, but Rose held them off and moved back out by five, 35-30 before settling for a 37-33 edge at the end of the period.

Drake scored to open the final period and close it to two, but Powers hit from underneath to up the lead to four once more. But a jumper by Lyman Gupton and a toss-back by Drake tied it at 39-39 with 6:16 remaining.

Gupton then hit the second of two free throws with 4:59 left to put Northern ahead, 40-39. Carlester Crumpler made two free throws to put Rose back up but Drake again hit to put Nash into the lead. Powers then made the first of two free throws with 2:43 left to tie at 42-42, but it was the last time.

Drake finished the night with 18 points while Thomas added 10. Rose was led by Brewington, Ebron and Powers, all with nine.

The loss dropped Rose to 12-5 overall, 5-3 in the league. Northern improved to 13-3, 5-3, tying the Rampants for second in the league standings.

Northern inched ahead, 9-6, in the first period and pulled out to a 21-14 halftime lead. The Rampettes rallied in the third period, however, and pulled even at the end of the period, 27-27. But Northern pulled away again in the final quarter and although Rose pulled back within two, they were never able to knot the score again.

Laura Godwin led Northern with 12 points. Rose was led by Jenny Stoneham with 15 and Lori Shankweiler with 10.

Rose falls to 5-9, 3-5.

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR SUNDAY Feb. 5

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Enjoy a lazy day and sleep in even though some of the day's tasks may have to be set aside. Get away from it all with quiet time and relaxation.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Avoid major discussions that can lead to misunderstandings. All of this will seem trivial tomorrow, so keep a cool perspective today.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Set your financial house in order. Go over books and records, pay bills and get the mail directly to the post office when you are late.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): When thoughts turn inward it is a perfect time for a mental housecleaning. Evaluate your current position.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Sudden mood swings and interruptions are all part of this day. Someone may press you for a decision that would be better postponed.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Household demands may be more than you have time or energy for. Siblings have important academic considerations.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): You may be spending extra cash before you have any. A stronger budget with practical controls is needed as a guideline.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Change is inevitable, and unrealistic behavior serves only to hasten and disrupt orderly change. Open up and share your thoughts and plans.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): You may want to tell it like it is, but before you do so clean up your approach and use a soft sell. Relax.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Get rid of those things you have no use for and utilize that which you wish to keep. Have some fun with your "junque!"

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Delays, problems and poor timing make for irritations throughout the day. It is best to leave important matters for another day.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): The early morning is excellent for getting in touch with your psychic self. Romance could brighten the later day.

FORECAST FOR MONDAY Feb. 6

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): The pressure may be on all day. Make use of creative ideas. Introduce yourself to someone whose friendship you have wanted to make.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): This is one of those days when everyone seems to be on your case. Keep your self-confidence, and don't back away from change.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Sleepy periods may make you feel in a lazy mood. RThe exotic will appeal to you. Resist immature temptations.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): This is a favorable day to shop for clothing. You are in the mood to improve things, so put yourself on the top of the list.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): The course of true love does not always run smoothly. You may be asked to prove your love to someone who wants a commitment reaffirmed.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Shop today and you may have to settle for an inferior substitute. Control your impulses and settle only for the quality you desire.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Don't compare yourself to others. Your own standards of comfort and living will serve you best. Avoid keeping up with the Joneses.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): You are capable of making a strong commitment whether financial, career or to a loved one. Express the depth of your feelings.

2 ♡	Pass	4 NT	Pass
5 ♡	Pass	6 ♡	Pass

Opening lead: Ten of ♡

Don't look for some abstruse line to fulfill your contract when there is some relatively straightforward solution at hand. Test your technique on this little teaser after West leads a trump and East discards a diamond on the first trick.

Once South confirmed a six-card suit by rebidding two hearts over one spade, North took charge. While Blackwood with a void is unusual, there is some slight justification on this auction. South could hardly have less than the ace-king of hearts or two aces and the king of hearts for his opener and rebid, and North was not interested in a grand slam opposite a minimum.

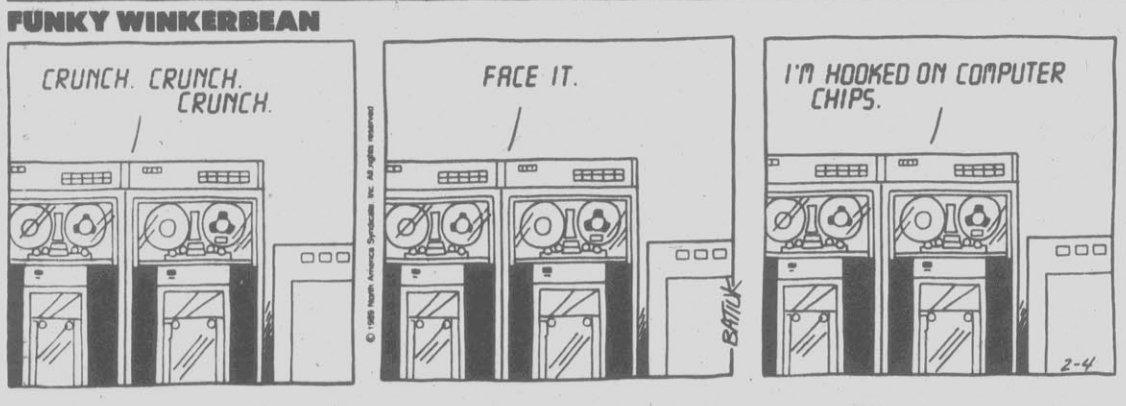

This hand is really little more than an exercise in counting. If clubs are 3-2, as is normal, declarer has six trump tricks, one diamond and four clubs, for a total of 11. A 12th trick can be obtained via a diamond ruff. However, there is an entry problem to the closed hand because of the 4-0 trump split. Declarer can't afford to come to hand with a spade ruff for a club finesse. If it loses, he would not have enough entries to return to hand for a diamond ruff and also to draw trumps when East forces him to ruff a second spade prematurely.

The simple solution is to win the trump lead in dummy and duck a club at trick two! Suppose East wins and returns a spade. Declarer ruffs, ruffs a diamond on the table and cashes the high heart. He can get back to hand with another spade ruff to draw the last two trumps and cash the ace of diamonds. A club to the board nets the rest of the tricks as long as the suit behaves.

Currently Charles is a member of the Greenville-Pitt County Home Builders Association serving on the Board of Directors as Secretary/Treasurer.

The continued success of VANRACK INC., Charles believes, is due to his ability and experience in being able to cover a large market segment of interest from first time home buyers to those who want larger custom built homes. With the higher interest rates of the early 1980's it was necessary, for the benefit of both the builder and buyer, to institute a complete overhaul in the building and scheduling of construction to gain control of costs management. It was necessary to hire additional labor to complete jobs in a timely manner and work with existing subcontractors to complete all scheduled work.

At Home Builders Supply Company, Charles Vandiford found a friend in J.B. Surles with a promise that when and wherever quality materials were needed that they could be depended on for service and delivery. Thanks to Home Builders and dependable co-workers, VANRACK INC. offers today the greatest buy in a home possible.

Here's The Answer

By Andy Lang

Q. — I plan to finish our attic into two rooms and a bathroom, doing most of the carpentry work myself. But I am using an electrician to take care of the lighting and a plumber to handle the bathroom. My wife thinks attic rooms look better if the ceilings are very high. Is it feasible to do this?

A. — You are limited by the height of the roof itself, since the collar beams or joists must be at least 2 feet below the highest point of the roof. There are ways to make the ceiling higher than the normal 8 feet or so but this takes considerable knowledge. You will do less work if you make the knee walls 4 feet and the ceiling height 8 feet, as these dimensions better accommodate the sizes of the paneling you will buy.

Q. — Years ago, I often worked on concrete. I'd drill holes into it with a star drill, hitting it with a hammer and then turning it slightly each time. I am sure there is now a better way to make holes in concrete. Can you help?

A. — To make ordinary holes in concrete, such as those necessary to hold anchors for screws and bolts, you need a portable electric drill and a carbide-tipped bit, because a regular bit will become dull almost instantly. In making the hole, work carefully. The bit sometimes will jam in the hole. Remove it and take another crack at it. Occasionally, you may have to blow the dust and grit from the hole so it will not interfere with the whirling of the bit.

Q. — I plan to set an addition to our house on a concrete slab. Will this be all right or is it necessary to use a foundation such as the house sets on?

A. — Putting an addition on a concrete slab is the modern way of handling the job. Are you doing the work yourself? If so, remember the slab must be reinforced with mesh and the slabs should be from 4 to 6 inches deep. Be careful handling the construction of the slab. If you have limited knowledge, better hire a professional. No matter who does the job, be sure waterproof insulation is placed around the perimeter of the slab.

The House Goes, Too

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MARKET DRAYTON, England — Figaro the cat is on the market for $236,250 — the only catch is that the house goes with him.

Peter Glanfield, a business consultant, said the black-and-white Persian feline "adopted" his four-bedroom home in this central England town several years ago, and he called it unfair to separate Figaro from it.

So the cat's picture was printed on the front of home's real estate flier, and prospective buyers were warned they cannot buy the house without Figaro.

"The elegant feline comes complete with a freehold Victorian residence of character in order to keep him in the style to which he is accustomed," said the flier, which described Figaro as a "large friendly cat."

Larger Number Of Lenders Offer 40-Year Plans For Buying Homes

By David W. Myers
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Sooner or later, it had to happen: The 40-year mortgage has arrived.

A small but growing number of lenders are offering 40-year loans, in part because skyrocketing home prices have made it impossible for many borrowers to qualify for 30-year mortgages.

Stretching payments out over an extra 10 years lowers the loan's monthly carrying costs, which makes it easier for cash-strapped borrowers to qualify for the loan and lets well-heeled buyers get a bigger loan to buy a nicer house.

But while those longer-term loans may appeal to some borrowers, they're clearly not for everyone. The longer repayment schedule dramatically increases interest charges over the life of the loan, and equity buildup is much slower.

Some lending experts say that those two drawbacks offset the benefits of a 40-year term's lower monthly payments.

"A 40-year term can lower your monthly payments a little bit, but you're giving up an awful lot for the privilege of making those smaller payments," says Dennis Casey of Home Federal Savings & Loan Association.

Lending giants Great Western Bank and the Home Savings of America unit of H.F. Ahmanson & Co. are among the institutions offering 40-year mortgages nationwide. A relatively small number of other lenders are offering them on a regional basis.

All of the 40-year loans currently offered are adjustable-rate mortgages. Introductory rates stand at about 8.25 percent, roughly the same as rates on 30-year adjustables.

Initial principal and interest payments on a $100,000, 40-year adjustable-rate mortgage at 8.25 percent would total $714, or $37 less than the monthly payment on a 30-year, 8.25 percent loan for the same amount.

By comparison, monthly payments on a 30-year, fixed-rate mortgage at the going rate of 10.5 percent would be $915. That's $201 a month more than the payment on the 40-year ARM.

A 40-year loan's lower payments can make a big difference for many first-time buyers. The savings free up cash to meet other financial obligations, and also make it easier to qualify for the loan.

For example, cutting the monthly payment by just $37 reduces the amount of annual income needed to qualify for a loan by more than $1,200. In high-cost areas where larger loans are needed, the savings can have an even more dramatic impact.

Apparently, though, the 40-year loans aren't just appealing to struggling first-time buyers: They're also drawing interest from affluent people.

Beverly Hills-based Great Western started making the 40-year loans last December, after getting hundreds of appeals from real estate agents doing business in high-cost coastal communities.

Although it's too early to tell whether the program is catching on with the public, says Great Western's Michael Cichon, "the Realtors say there's good demand for it."

By choosing a 40-year loan instead of a 30-year term, home buyers can borrow more money because their monthly payments won't be as high.

But while the 40-year mortgage lowers monthly mortgage payments, it also raises the long-term cost of the loan dramatically.

Since the 40-year loans have adjustable rates, it's impossible to calculate exactly how much more in interest charges the extra 10 years will generate. Some lenders say that finance charges over the life of a 40-year can be as much as 40 percent higher than interest charges on a 30-year loan, primarily because nearly all of the monthly payments in the first 15 or 20 years of a 40-year loan go toward interest, not principal.

As a result, a borrower who takes out a $100,000 loan could easily wind up paying an extra $80,000 to $100,000 in interest if the loan is paid off over 40 years instead of 30.

Of course, few borrowers actually keep their loans for the entire term; they usually sell their house and pay off the loan long before then. Borrowers who intend on staying in a house for a relatively short time — say, five or six years — will probably pay less than $2,000 in additional interest charges by choosing the 40-year plan over the 30-year term.

Paying an extra $2,000 or so in finance charges over five years isn't a problem for buyers in areas where home prices are rising fast, because their eventual resale profits will easily offset their extra financing costs.

But $2,000 can be important to buyers in markets where prices are advancing slowly, holding steady or dropping. Even if the value of the house goes up a few thousand dollars, the resale profit will have been eaten up by the extra interest costs. Add to that the cost of any sales commissions, and the home could wind up being a money-losing investment.

Casey at Home Federal admits that borrowers who can't quite qualify for the higher payments on a 30-year loan may be tempted to choose a 40-year mortgage. "If it's the only way you can get the money, then you might want to take it," Casey says.

"But the truth is, if your finances are so tight that you have to take 40 years to pay off your mortgage, you should probably start thinking about buying a less expensive house, or wait a little longer to save up more money for the down payment.

"You don't want things to be so tight that you can't afford to take your family to dinner every now and then."

Garden Clinic

Q.- Please give me some information about a small, evergreen tree called inkberry or bitter gallberry.

A.- Inkberry or bitter gallberry is a native holly. Its botanical name is Ilex Glabra. It grows six to eight feet tall, is a slow grower, has rounded form and is hardy throughout North Carolina. The black berries it produces are showy in the fall.

Q. I have heard several plants, shrubs primarily, described as "specimen plants." What exactly is a "specimen plant?"

A. A specimen plant is any plant isolated in the landscape so attention can be focused on the plant's merits. A camellia could be considered a specimen plant; its beautiful flowers reason enough to plant one in the yard. Camellias do not have to be used as specimen plants, however. They can be used other ways such as a screen or around buildings as foundation plants. The same is true for many other plants.

Whether a plant is considered a specimen plant or not depends on how it is used in the landscape. A specimen plant can also be defined as a plant grown simply as a representative of a certain plant group. In this case, the plant's ornamental features are secondary in importance. For example, a botanical garden may grow a camellia as a specimen plant to represent the tea family. Or it may grow a Camellia sinensis as a specimen plant to represent the genus Camellia.

Q. What are some garden tasks to do in February?

A. Make a diagram of spring, summer and fall gardens. Purchase garden supplies. Order strawberry plants. Finish pruning grapes, blueberries and fruit trees. Take soil samples. Plant onions in Eastern North Carolina. Sow seeds of broccoli, cabbage, cauliflower and lettuce five to seven weeks before planting time. Apply compost to garden and incorporate it into the soil.

Q. Why does broccoli flower without forming heads?

A. This may occur if plants have been stunted by poor growing conditions or have been set out too late in the spring. Broccoli needs cool weather for best head formation.

On The House

By ANDY LANG

After reading this article and assimilating as much as you can, clip it and put it away. Then, reread it before you begin your next paint job, inside or out.

Here are some things that have been learned over the years about painting the interior and the exterior of your house:

Important and secondary only to the proper preparation of the surface is the admonition to take your time. More amateur paint chores are ruined by the urge to get the task over with than anything except the desire to skip the boring but vital preparation chores. What's your hurry? If ever a task demanded a methodical approach, it is painting. That includes the time required to decide the kind of paint you are going to use, what effect you are trying to achieve, how you are going to handle the trim or woodwork, how much paint you will need and which applicators you will use on which surfaces.

On the inside, you generally will be choosing semi-gloss, flat or satin-finish paints. Semi-gloss reflects light and makes a room or hallway seem larger. It usually can be washed successfully with soap and water. Flat paints have a soft, less reflective appearance. Satin finishes combine the virtues of glosses and flats. They have a quiet luster, hide defects and can be wiped clean.

Outside, latex paints can be used for a variety of materials, but for metal and extremely porous surfaces, an oil-based primer should be used under either latex or oil-based paint.

Outside, you probably will use a latex paint, but oil-based, alkyds and modified alkyds are excellent for wood siding. Brick or other masonry should be painted with an exterior paint formulated for use on such surfaces. Exterior wood shakes or shingles are usually stained, although they can be painted. Once stained, they should again be stained when a second treatment is necessary.

Be sure to use a primer on unpainted surfaces such as wallboard or bare wood. It seals the surface, provides a color base and gives the second coat a clean and uniform look.

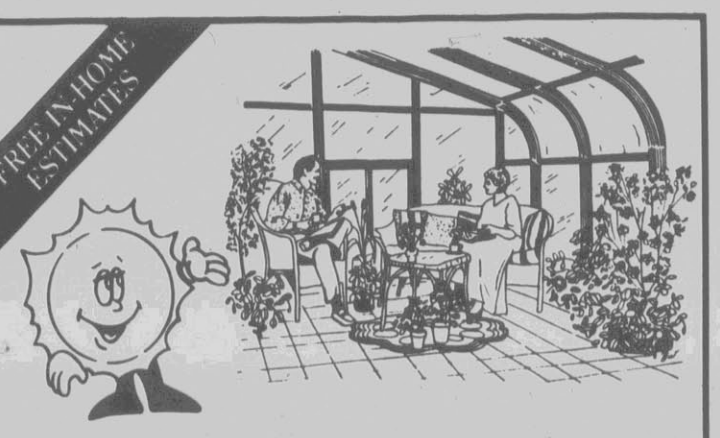

On ceilings, a bright white makes the room seem larger, but sometimes you may want to "soften" the room, in which case use a soft white. Textured paints have a heavier consistency than regular paints and so make an excellent base for the creation of patterns. They also can hide surface defects.

For large flat surfaces, nothing beats a roller, but brushes are better for smaller or irregular surfaces and jobs with trim. There are other kinds of applicators, including pads, for special tasks. A paint pad also works well on large surfaces or more precise areas, since they are lightweight and easy to use. Good pads usually have beveled edges and a rounded bottom.

Sales Firm Looking For Senior Citizens

THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Older adults who want to spend the rest of their lives doing more than "gardening, playing bridge or becoming couch potatoes" can go to work for a local business that's offering jobs to senior citizens, says Alice Monte.

The lively 72-year-old woman is southeastern North Carolina's district manager for Vector Marketing Co., which recently opened an office in Greenville at 211 Commerce St., Suite E.

"We are looking for local salespeople and distributors for our products," said Ms. Monte, an Aurora native who was the first woman hired by the company in 1963. She has been chosen by Vector Marketing, a subsidiary of ALCAS Cutlery Corp. in Olean, N.Y., to experiment with a pilot program to hire senior citizens.

"I have had about 350 calls from senior citizens interested in working since this office opened a few weeks ago," she said. "I am getting a lot of response."

She is especially interested in finding healthy, motivated people who "want to stay young and stay out of the rocking chair club. I'm looking for people who want to put some of their pent-up energy to use and make money and have some fun."

The company offers senior citizens the opportunity to work at their own pace, set their own hours and determine the best mode of operation for them.

"The greatest part about this job is that a person can be his or her own boss, literally," Ms. Monte said. "In essence, it's your own business."

She thinks employment for older people is important because "it's an opportunity to fulfill a lifetime goal of self-independence. It will help supplement their income and fill up some of that free time that weighs heavy on their hands."

At age 72, Ms. Monte tried "playing around" for a while, but became "bored real fast. This job keeps my brain active."

She said he will be with the company "until they bury me. I knew I couldn't work in an office and sit in a chair that keeps getting narrower and narrower," she said.

Likewise, she thinks a job with the company will benefit other people in the same way.

"We're just a big family," she said, "and I think that means a lot. I would never have seen or been to the places I've been if I hadn't been working for this company." As a reward for her dedication to the company, she has visited such places as Disney World, Nassau, Las Vegas, Jamaica and ski resorts, and has been on several cruises.

"They really put their people on a pedestal," she said. "I have a whole suitcase full of trophies. They never fail to recognize your accomplishments because they're a compassionate, family-oriented business."

A job with the company, Ms. Monte said, will help senior citizens "increase their future income tremendously and give them a great sense of security. The company wants them to enjoy themselves so there's total freedom from pressure. There's no clocks to punch or schedules to meet and they can work at their own pace to earn the money they need to earn."

She said interested senior citizens may call her at 355-0252.

Record Earnings

Peoples Bancorporation reported the highest level of earnings ever to be achieved in a single month and a single quarter.

Fourth quarter 1988 fully diluted earnings per share were 40 cents, an 18 percent increase over the same period last year. Earnings from core or traditional banking activities exceeded $1 million in December and positively impacted quarterly net income of $2.8 million, making the quarter the most profitable one in the organization's history.

Earnings for the year totaled $10.3 million, or $1.44 per fully diluted share, an 11 percent increase over the $9.3 million, or $1.30 per fully diluted share, posted in 1987.

Earnings Decreased

First Citizens BancShares Inc. has reported decreased earnings for 1988, according to Lewis R. Holding, chairman of the board.

Consolidated net earnings for the year ended Dec. 31, 1988, totaled $21.2 million, compared to $25.1 million for 1987, reflecting a decrease of 15.7 percent. Per share income for 1988 totaled $2.19, compared to $2.67 in 1987, a decrease of 14.8 percent.

Net income for the fourth quarter totaled $5.6 million, compared to $5.7 million earned during the fourth quarter of 1987, a 2.5 percent decrease. Per share income for the quarter ending Dec. 31 was 57 cents, compared to 58 cents earned per share in the corresponding period of 1987, a decrease of 1.7 percent.

Holding attributed the decline in earnings to reduced interest rate margins, increased operating expenses and an increase in the provision for loan losses.

Jury Sends Message

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENSBORO — A jury that ordered an asbestos product manufacturer to pay $1.75 million to an insulation worker's widow "wanted to send a message that a corporation cannot play these kinds of games and get away with it," the jury foreman said.

"There was no doubt in our minds that Philip Carey (Manufacturing Company) was aware of the hazards of asbestos and kept that information from its employees, users of its products and the communities near its plants," foreman Douglas Booth of Brown Summit said Friday.

The jury might have awarded more money on Thursday had it not believed that Derwood V. Amos's cigarette-smoking contributed to his illness, Booth said.

"We felt that asbestos was a cause of his death, but that cigarette smoking was a contributing factor. That affected our award," Booth said, adding that three of the six jurors are smokers.

The U.S. District jury ordered The Celotex Corporation of Florida, a successor to Philip Carey Manufacturing, to pay $250,000 in compensatory damages and $1.5 million in punitive damages to Amos's widow, Polly R. Amos of Greensboro.

It was North Carolina's first jury award in an asbestos case. The state's last asbestos trial in 1982 ended in a hung jury, and more than 200 cases have been settled without trials since then. Several other asbestos manufacturers settled their part of the Amos case for an undisclosed sum.

Attorney Martin Ellis of Tennessee, who represented Celotex, said he probably will recommend that an appeal be filed.

North Carolina's federal courts have 213 asbestos cases pending, in which insulation, shipyard and railroad workers say that asbestos exposure caused their illness or death.

GTE Studies Durham Site

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DURHAM — A plan to consolidate GTE South and GTE Florida customer billing operations and located them in Durham is being reviewed by GTE Corp., officials said.

Steve Toler, a GTE South spokesman, said a decision is three or four weeks away. He said he did not know how many employees would be affected by a consolidation.

If Durham is chosen for the customer accounting office, it would distribute telephone bills in North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Kentucky, West Virginia, Virginia and Florida.

While GTE public relations officials say the final decision has not been made, a GTE office memo dated Feb. 1 from Harry Hutchinson, assistant vice president of customer accounting, states the consolidated customer accounting operations will be located in Durham by mid-1990. The memo says site selections are based on geographic distribution of customers and the location of current GTE employees.

Toler said the memo is in error.

Seeds Of S&L Ails Lie Deep Within Industry

By Dave Skidmore
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — It was a bank examiner's nightmare: an electronic run at American Savings and Loan Association of Stockton, Calif., the nation's largest insolvent S&L a year ago.

Big depositors, worried that the long-troubled institution was on the verge of toppling, sent wire orders yanking out nearly half a billion dollars in the first two months of 1988 alone.

The episode symbolizes both the great strength and the underlying weakness of the U.S. system of insuring bank and S&L deposits, a system created half a century ago as part of Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal.

Bank run. The very words make financial regulators queasy and evoke Depression-era memories of long lines of depositors anxiously clutching savings passbooks.

But the run at American Savings and Loan was straight from the high-tech '80s. There were no mobs pressing at the institution's doors; only clacking computer terminal keys and whirring magnetic discs as money brokers withdrew their wealthy clients' cash.

Officials at the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the agency that regulates nearly 3,000 federally insured S&Ls, stopped the run in mid-March with the simple announcement that they would protect all depositors, even those with accounts exceeding the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp.'s $100,000 limit.

Ironically, the deposit insurance that saved the California S&L also helped create the industry's mess. The insurance allows savings and loan owners to put up a little of their own money, take in a lot of deposits and gamble on risky loans, potentially at the taxpayers' expense.

That's what occurred with American Savings and Loan. Once a conservative mortgage lender, new management took over in 1983 and embarked on a program of rapid growth and aggressive real estate lending. Bad loans grew and last December the FSLIC had to pay $1.7 billion to have the institution taken over by a new owner.

If deposit insurance is part of the problem, it has also been a source of security for millions and the only thing that has staved off disaster for people who found that the repositories of their life savings had gone under.

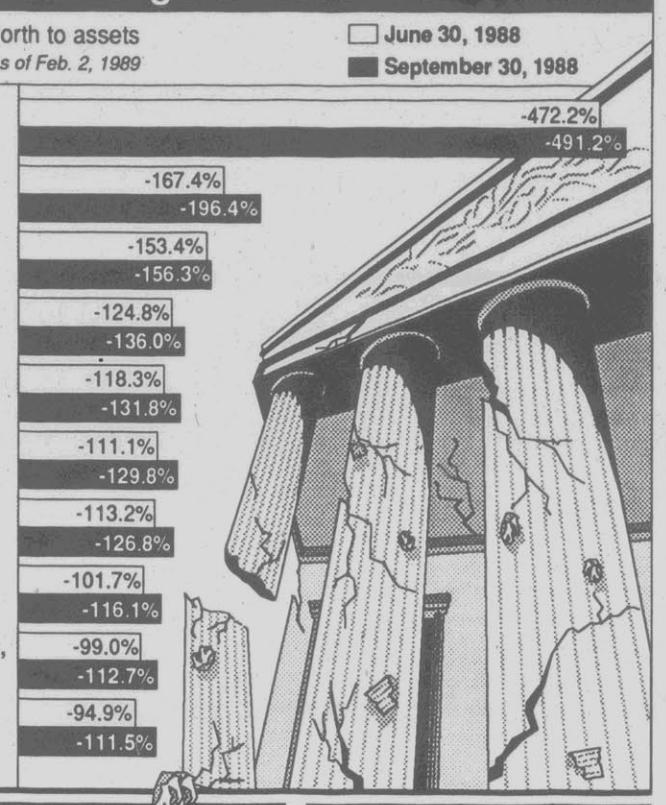

"People have an almost mystical degree of confidence in the federal sticker on the wall," says Robert Litan, a banking expert at the Brookings Institution, a liberal Washington think tank.

"Even though the FSLIC is insolvent, they believe the government can come up with the money somehow. George Bush just told them that."

One week into his term, Bush made a point in his nationally televised news conference of reassuring S&L customers. Deposits in the nation's S&Ls "are sound, they are good ... nothing is going to change in that regard," the president said.

How, then, did a once sleepy, seemingly secure industry come to the point that it needed presidential pronouncements to steady its customers' nerves? How did it sink so low that regulators would pledge $31 billion to rescue 205 institutions in 1988 and still have 350 insolvent, but still open, institutions to babysit?

The seeds of the ailment have been buried deep within from the start. They lay in the inherent instability of borrowing short (from depositors) and lending long (to home buyers for 20 or 30 years).

That was fine during the long economic boom and stable interest rates that followed World War II. S&L executives lived by the 3-6-3 rule: Take in deposits at 3 percent interest, lend the money to home buyers at 6 percent and hit the golf course by 3 p.m.

By the late 1970s and early 1980s, however, the industry's underpinnings had become wobbly. Inflation was soaring into double digits and the Federal Reserve Board responded by pushing interest rates past 20 percent. Money poured out of the thrifts, with their low interest rates, and into high-yield money market mutual funds offered by brokerage firms.

By 1980, Congress felt it had little choice but to lift the 5.5 percent cap on interest paid to S&L depositors or watch thrift institutions shrivel. At the same time, the limit on federal insurance was raised from $40,000 to $100,000 per account.

Then, two year later, new laws gave thrift owners fresh investment opportunities: commercial and consumer loans, construction lending and direct investments in development projects.

The idea was that diversification would give S&Ls a chance to enter more lucrative fields and grow less dependent on the roller coaster housing market.

Regulators also lifted rules limiting brokered deposits to 5 percent of the total. Brokers divy up the money of wealthy clients and institutions into $100,000 chunks, parceling them out to institutions paying the highest rates.

Some thrifts thrived in the new climate, but many didn't have the experience to succeed and saw their portfolios grow ever more shaky.

Even more bedeviling were laws lying dormant in states such as Texas, California and Florida giving thrifts power to make risky investments. As long as the federal interest rate cap and the limit on brokered deposits remained in place, institutions couldn't attract enough deposits to get into risky areas in a big way.

Men like Don Dixon and Ed McBirney, who purchased small, staid institutions such as Dixon's Vernon Savings and Loan and McBirney's Sunbelt Savings, both in Texas and both later bailed out for billions of dollars. These new owners opened up the phone lines, scooped up brokered deposits and shoveled the money into risky construction and development projects.

The party lasted until 1986, when oil prices collapsed. Across Texas, real estate projects begun on projections of $70-a-barrel oil fell apart. Borrowers defaulted but the collateral they turned over was now worth only a fraction of what they owed. Regulators estimate that about half of the nation's S&L problem is centered in Texas and other oil states.

And while more and more S&Ls were becoming financially shaky, the government had fewer cops — S&L examiners — on the beat.

Plant-Closings Debate Rages As Law Takes Effect

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — When Levi Strauss & Co. announced last week it would close a denim jacket plant in Tennessee, it gave 140 workers 90 days' paid notice.

It was a better cushion than most workers have been getting when plants close down.

Levi Strauss was following voluntary policies in place since 1984, guaranteeing workers advance notice of pending plant closings.

Notice of plant closings and large-scale layoffs, however, is now the law.

Plant closing legislation passed by Congress last year took full effect Saturday, with business and labor still debating its impact and both sides predicting a flood of lawsuits.

"The companies are mystified at how complicated this law really is," said Renee Reymond of the National Association of Manufacturers. "The labor attorneys certainly are poised and ready for business."

Supporters say the law will not hurt business and gives workers a time to prepare for job loss. Federal figures show 64 percent of the nearly 2 million workers idled annually receive no notice.

Opponents maintain the law represents a threat to industry.

"The threat is one of government fines, lawsuits, back pay and benefits expenses, loss of market image and costly training and adjustment problems," the Virginia Employers Association declared recently.

Then-President Reagan allowed the measure to become law in August without his signature, despite having earlier called it "a ticking time bomb in the back seat of any medium-sized or larger company."

Pressure from then presidential candidate George Bush was said to have influenced Reagan.

On Capitol Hill, supporters of the concept still say it was long overdue.

"The 'chicken littles' have been proven wrong again," said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass. "The sky did not fall. Enactment of this law was a triumph of reason over ideology and American workers will now receive the notice they deserve."

Provisions of the law call for it to take effect Saturday, but some employers have started early on the theory that courts may eventually hold that shutdowns up to 60 days beforehand were covered.

Lehigh Structural Steel Co. of Allentown, Pa., for example, announced Jan. 24 that its 184 employees would be laid off after current orders are filled. President R. Leslie Mullen said in a telephone interview last week that the company was observing the 60-day notice period.

"Nobody can seem to tell us what the law is, so we're being safe," Mullen said.

A random survey of a dozen companies that have announced shutdowns or major layoffs in the past two months found that nearly all had given their workers at least 60 days' notice, most because of company policies in place before the law was passed.

For example:

—Pillsbury Co. said last week it would close a pizza plant in Missouri and a potato flake plant in North Dakota, idling 334 workers who got 60 days' notice.

—AT&T recently announced plans to close two facilities in the Washington, D.C., area, one with 500 workers, the other 130. Many are being offered jobs elesewhere in the company and AT&T has a policy of giving a minimum 90-day notice, spokesman Don Griffith said.

—Mack Trucks Inc. five weeks ago announced it was laying off 300 workers at its Macungie, Pa., assembly plant, but since has said only about half that many would lose their jobs.

Mack spokeswoman Debbie Morgan said the union workers had been told of the initial layoff plans several months before the announcement.

"Our policy has been that we're not going to wait until February to be in compliance," she said. "We decided to treat it as if it was in effect immediately."

But about 130 workers at a microwave plant in Sioux Falls, S.D., who lost their jobs Friday got only one week notice. The layoffs do not appear to be covered by the law — even under the liberal interpretation of its effective date.

The law requires advance notice of plant closings by employers with at least 100 full-time workers if the shutdown will cost 50 or more of those employees their jobs. In the case of layoffs, notices are required if the number of affected workers totals 33 percent of the company's employees or 500 — whichever figure is lower.

In Sioux Falls, Microwave Products of America began the year with about 650 workers at its plant and in January laid off 155. That left the company with about 495 workers. By laying off 130 workers the company fell about 35 short of the 33 percent threshold.

"It was reviewed," company spokesman Gordon Taylor said when asked about the plant closing law. He said the company's position was that the law did not carry weight until after Saturday and also noted that regardless of the effective date the layoffs did not meet the threshold.

White House Seeking Revival Of Regulatory Review Process

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — President Bush and his senior staff are studying ways to revive the regulatory review process that Bush oversaw as vice president, perhaps with a powerful new board in the White House that would handle major regulatory decisions, according to administration officials.

The new effort could be significant because it would give the Bush White House more direct control over — and responsibility for — highly controversial decisions on regulatory issues, such as environmental protection, health and occupational safety, that affect millions of people and can have a major impact on businesses and the economy.

During his first term as vice president, Bush headed a task force that oversaw the Reagan administration's early efforts at deregulation. The task force claimed to have eliminated or modified 100 rules to save business $150 billion over a decade.

The recommendations were criticized last year by Democratic presidential nominee Michael S. Dukakis, who said they showed that Bush tried to weaken environmental protections.

The Bush task force closed down in 1983, and senior advisers said they now want to put someone in charge of the process with political "clout" who can oversee the rule-making disputes and decisions before they reach the president, much as Bush did earlier.

Under two executive orders issued in 1981 and 1985 by then-President Reagan, the Office of Management and Budget was given a strong role in reviewing regulations, and critics said the agency often became a roadblock for rules that the Reagan administration or industry wanted to stop. Bush plans to retain this review process in the budget office, but would add a new mechanism at the White House to oversee the big decisions, some of which would still go to the president, officials said.

What philosophy Bush will bring to regulation is unclear. During last year's campaign, he pledged to continue Reagan's general effort at deregulation, but in some areas he also advocated new regulatory controls, notably in environmental protection.

Former budget director James C. Miller III, commenting on Bush's economic policies in the Journal of the National Association of Business Economists, predicted that "it is unlikely we will see massive gains in deregulation in the next four years," but that Bush would not lead a "resurgence of regulation."

Miller described Bush as "a traditional regulatory reformer. He proposes to eliminate regulations that are counterproductive-such as price and entry controls in transportation and natural gas. But where regulation is necessary, such as in worker health areas and the environment, he would achieve the goals of regulation at lower cost."

One idea under discussion at the White House has been to give Vice President Quayle the regulatory portfolio. White House officials said Quayle might take on this assignment if the task were combined with his interest in job training and international competitiveness, but no decision has been made.

Critics Say FmHA Faces Paper Snarl

By Don Kendall
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The drive by the Farmers Home Administration to collect more than $8 billion in long-overdue accounts is running into administrative snarls that some critics say will be impossible to untangle soon.

Delinquent farm borrowers were given 45 days to respond to collection notices sent in late November. Farmers had to fill out long forms and return them to FmHA to qualify for loan servicing.

If the forms were not returned on time, borrowers were told they could face foreclosure or forced sale to take care of the debts.

Neal Sox Johnson, acting administrator of the Agriculture Department agency, told the Senate Agriculture Committee's subcommittee on agricultural credit last week that the agency's latest tabulation showed that 70,747 notices were sent out by certified mail by FmHA county offices Nov. 15-25.

A total of 34,719, or less than half, were returned with requests for loan servicing under the Agricultural Credit Act of 1987, which provides a number of options, including a write-down of debt.

Johnson told the panel, headed by Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., that it had not determined why the others were not returned. But he said the 36,028 who did not reply would be notified again by regular mail and given a 45-day period in which to respond.

"We are at the point where our field staff must analyze those applications that have been received so that those borrowers can receive a decision within 60 days as set forth in the statute," Johnson said. "I am sure you understand the complex nature of many of these individual cases, especially those that have been in a questionable status for a considerable period of time."

Johnson said FmHA was aware that "farmers need those decisions promptly in order to make plans for the coming crop year. He also noted that FmHA has 183,000 other borrowers who are not delinquent and that those will require attention for spring planting.

Leland H. Swenson, president of the National Farmers Union, told Boren's subcommittee he doubted that FmHA would be able to process the workload within 60 days as required by law and still work out the best deal for the borrower, lender and the taxpayer.

"It is inconceivable to us how, with all the (restructuring) applications coming in at roughly the same time, agency employees can be expected to meet their deadlines and still provide the kind of interactive, negotiated process that Congress envisioned and seek out the least-cost alternative for resolving a debt problem," he said.

FmHA's Johnson said he would send loan specialists from the agency's national headquarters to state offices to hold "on-the-spot reviews and consultation" on carrying out the law's provisions for restructuring.

"All of us at Farmers Home are committed to working closely with our borrowers in carrying out the mandates of the (law) in an efficient and compassionate manner," Johnson said. "Our efforts are, and will be, directed toward keeping our borrowers on the farm to the fullest extent possible."

Boren, the subcommittee chairman, said the FmHA had not followed the intent of the Senate in administering the 1987 law and chided Johnson for the number of forms the agency required farmers to fill out.

"The law says you (farmers) have to sign a letter" within a 45-day period, not fill out several forms, Boren said. He said he would ask Clayton Yeutter, agriculture secretary-designate, to give higher priority to solving FmHA's problems.

PLAINS-

By Charles Hillinger

PLAINS, Ga. — The sign in Hugh Carter's antiques and souvenir shop reads: "President Jimmy Carter Will Teach the Sunday School Lesson This Week at Maranatha Baptist Church. You Are Invited."

"Jimmy teaches the adult Sunday School class every Sunday he's in town. He tells me if he is going to be here and if he is I put this sign in the window," said Hugh Carter, 68, the former president's first cousin.

When the 39th president shows up at the church in this small town of 683 — usually once or twice a month — about 100 attend his class. Half are regular church-goers and the others are visitors who want to meet and hear the former president.

"Jimmy visits with the people after church," noted Boze Godwin, 45, the local druggist and mayor of Plains. "We see Rosalynn and Jimmy Carter a lot around town, riding their bicycles and jogging."

When Carter was in the White House from 1977-81, Plains and its one-block main street were packed with-out-of-towners.

"Every place boomed — souvenir shops, cafes, the Peanut Museum. You can't imagine the number of people here, sometimes as many as 30,000 on one day," Hugh Carter recalled.

"Something exciting was happening all the time. Long lines of cars would be waiting to buy gas from Billy. Big-time reporters like Tom Brokaw and Sam Donaldson were in and out. When Jimmy would come here the place would go crazy."

Now most of the stores on Main Street are vacant, the Peanut Museum is closed and there is only a trickle of out-of-towners.

Even a faded sign proclaiming "Plains, Georgia home of Jimmy Carter," has been altered. Since Sept. 25, the day Billy Carter died, the sign has been covered with a sheet bearing two red hearts and a scrawled message from his children: "PLAINS, GEORGIA HOME OF BILLY CARTER. WE LOVE YOU."

After leaving the White House, the Carters returned to Plains and the modest one-story brick ranch-style home they built in 1962.

In "Everything to Gain: Making the Most of the Rest of Your Life," published by Random House, Jimmy Carter wrote: "We came home from the U.S. Navy when my father died, stayed here after losing the first gubernatorial race, and came back after we had won and spent four years in the mansion in Atlanta. We returned again to Plains and our 25-year-old home, the only one we've ever owned when we left the White House."

Both Jimmy Carter and Rosalynn Smith were born in Plains. Their ancestors came here in the 1700s. The president's father, James Earl Carter, was a peanut farmer and storekeeper; his mother, "Miss Lillian," a registered nurse. Rosalynn Carter's father, Edgar Smith, was the town's school bus driver and auto mechanic.

Plains, Carter wrote in his book, is "without hustle and bustle, where one can amble among neighbors who would have been just as friendly to us if we had never done anything other than grow peanuts for a living. We enjoy being among our people."

"We love our house. We find it satisfying not only to do a lot of our own yard work and most of the repairs and renovations in our home, but also to design and build cabinets and furniture."

Last December, Congress passed a bill establishing the Jimmy Carter National Historic Site and Preservation District and appropriated $3.5 million for that purpose. The site was established to interpret the life and presidency of Jimmy Carter and to preserve the character and history of Plains, most of which is encompassed by the preservation district.

The site's visitors center is in the Old Seaboard Railroad Depot, headquarters for Carter's presidential campaign. The depot is filled with photographs and memorabilia detailing his youth, his marriage to Rosalynn in 1946, their family, his peanut business and years as governor and president.

Plains High School, built in 1921 and vacant since 1979, is scheduled to be restored. "The classrooms will be typical of when Jimmy was there from 1937 to 1941. We will show films about Jimmy Carter in the school auditorium," said John N. Tucker, 40, superintendent of the historic site.

Plans also call for the purchase and restoration of the president's boyhood farm home where he lived during the 1930s. The Carters' current home will become part of the National Park Service's historic site upon their death.

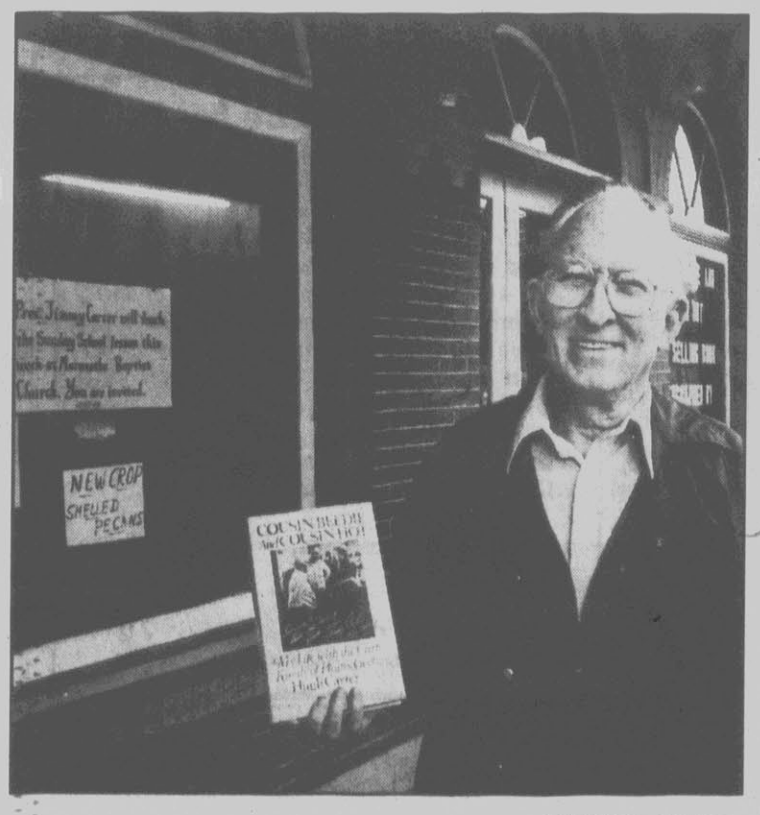

For the past six years, Jimmy Carter has been a professor of history, political science and international relations at Emory University in Atlanta. The former president and his wife have written five books and have been building houses for the poor with the Habitat for Humanity Project since leaving the White House.

Though Plains is their home, "Mr. and Mrs. Carter are away more than they are here," explained Melissa Montgomery, Carter's press secretary. When in Atlanta, the Carters stay at an apartment at the Carter Presidential Center, she explained.

Alma Chapman, 38, an eighth-grade teacher at Americus, near Plains, said: "Rosalynn and Jimmy Carter are two of the friendliest people you would ever want to meet. They know everybody in town. The other day I was out raking leaves and here comes Mr. Carter on his bike. 'Come over to my place and help me rake my leaves,' he called out laughing as he rode by."

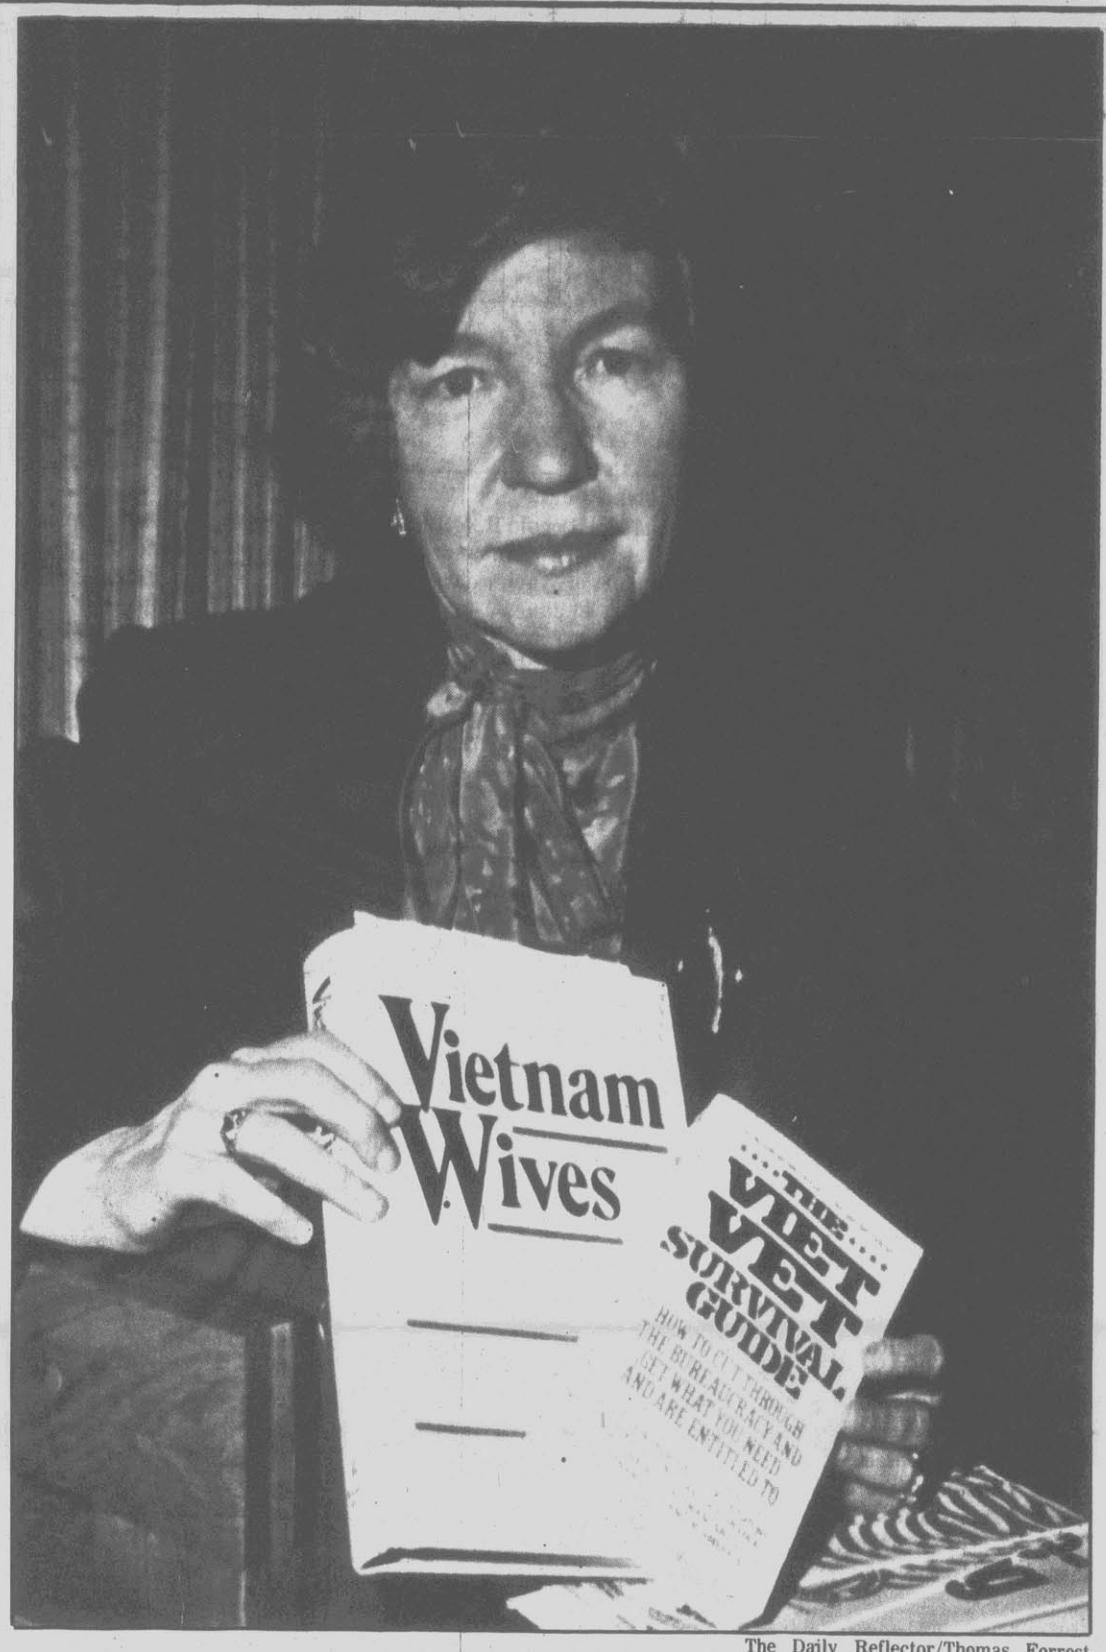

At Hugh Carter's shop — the same store his father Alton opened in 1909 — visitors can buy fried and green broiled peanuts, pecans, T-shirts, post cards and even empty Billy Beer cans. Also available are copies of the Carters' books, each autographed by the president.

"Didn't anything wake this town up like Jimmy getting to be president," said Hugh Carter, who served as a Georgia state senator for 14 years.

VVA PRESIDENT

Mary Stout, a Vietnam veteran who is also the wife of a Vietnam veteran, was in Greenville this week talking about healing relationships within Vietnam veterans' families. She posed with several books she recommends.

VVA President Visits Here

Says Serving Others Heals War Wounds

By Carol Tyer

Mary Stout sat in the snack bar of East Carolina University's Mendenhall Student Center Tuesday having coffee with her friends, Greenville residents Judy Brown and Linda Furbush.

The three women's new friendship was cemented during a two-hour conversation around a snack bar table. Their bond had been formed minutes before during a chat in the lobby which pointed out their common experience: Each of them has been married for more than 20 years to men they've loved since their youth, men who served in Vietnam during the late 1960s.

But Mrs. Stout also has a major commonality with Mrs. Brown's husband, Billy, and Mrs. Furbush's husband, Al. She, like each of them, is a veteran of the Vietnam War. She served during 1966-67 as a U.S. Army nurse.

The three women are members of the Vietnam Veterans of America service organization. Mrs. Furbush is public information officer of Greenville Chapter No. 272 and Mrs. Brown is the local membership chairman. Mrs. Stout is national president of VVA, the first woman to be elected to the presidency of a major U.S. Armed Forces veterans' group.

Mrs. Stout was in Greenville Monday and Tuesday as a keynote speaker for an East Carolina University-sponsored Family Life Conference on the effects of the Vietnam War on families of today. The Furbushes and the Browns also participated in the conference.

Mrs. Stout is the spokesperson for an organization of more than 30,000 people who gather in more than 400 VVA chapters and 25 VVA state councils coast-to-coast. But she's also a woman who is still facing the challenges of sustaining a marriage and nurturing three daughters. She and her husband Carl must deal daily with their respective ghosts from an era fraught with violence, misunderstanding and seeming injustice. And they have come to know that they deal with their own pain best by serving others.

Mrs. Stout was Lt. Mary Reis, a recent nursing school graduate who went against her father's wishes and volunteered for Vietnam. She volunteered when she heard that Carl, the young soldier she loved, had orders to leave Fort Ord, Calif., where both were stationed, and go to Vietnam.

It was not entirely a wish to follow her sweetheart that prompted her to volunteer, however. She had been feeling, for most of the months since her induction in the Army Nurse Corps, the need to serve in Vietnam, but her father had always talked her out of it. This time, though, she followed her heart on both counts.

Once she volunteered in mid-September, it wasn't a hurry-up-and-wait Army any more for her. She was in Vietnam by the first of November, well ahead of Carl's arrival.

Fortune sometimes smiles on people in love: Carl was assigned as an artillery forward observer in an area not far from Mary's field hospital at Chu Lai. They got together on April Fool's Day — "appropriately enough," she jokes — and he presented her with a gift he'd brought along from the States — a diamond engagement ring.

This ring, she said, brought her solace during the difficult months she remained in Vietnam. "I'd look at this ring," she said, nodding toward her third finger of her left hand, "and think, 'Somebody over here loves me.' It was wonderful having it."

The couple knew they were luckier than most. On the average, they had short visits with each other about every month and a half and they managed to go together to Hong Kong.

But during the times when they weren't together, Mary would hold her breath and pray when casualties came into the hospital. Would Carl Stout be among them? He never was, but once, a number of men from his unit came in wounded and some of them died.

All of her waking and going-to-sleep thoughts were not on Carl, though. She was very much involved in her work.

"In talking to hundreds of Vietnam veterans in the past eight years," she said, "I've learned that almost every one of them has one person who epitomizes the tragedy of the war.

"Mine was a 19-year-old sandy-haired boy named Steve," she said. "I used to know his last name, but somewhere along the way I've blocked it out. But whenever things have gotten stressful over the years, Steve's been there for me. And he's been a very painful presence."

She recalled, "Whenever wounded soldiers came into the field hospital, I did triage in my mind. I sorted out for myself the ones I thought would be okay. I put up this armor of not really relating to the ones I thought would not survive.

"I decided that Steve would make it. He had a lung wound, but he didn't seem too bad.

"He did all right for a few days. Then I came onto a 7 p.m. to 7 a.m. shift and I noticed he wasn't breathing well. I kept suctioning him and I kept taking his vital signs and I waited anxiously for a doctor to arrive. About 11 p.m., a doctor who was also the hospital commander came in and I directed him to Steve. He took one look at Steve and said, 'This man is going into cardiac arrest.'

"Steve died and the doctor turned to me and said, 'It's your fault that this man is dead. You should have done a tracheotomy.'

"I accepted what that doctor said," she said, "and it became a terrible burden. It took me 18 years to get to a place where I could differ with him, where I could say 'No, it wasn't my fault.'

"I was honestly doing the best I knew how for that soldier. I really didn't know he was in that much danger. I should not have been expected to know. I did not kill him, yet I am truly sorry that I didn't know enough to save him."

Mrs. Stout has been a military wife most of the years since she came home from Vietnam. She joined the VVA in 1981 when her family was living in Columbus, Ohio, and quickly became active not only in the local chapter, but on the state council as a paid employee.

When her husband was transfered to the Pentagon, she decided she would seek a similar job in Maryland where they would be living, because she had found her work in Ohio so meaningful.

Instead, she became affiliated with national VVA headquarters as its membership director, commuting two hours each way with her husband.

In 1985, she ran for national secretary and won. She began in 1987 her current two-year term as president.

"I think Vietnam Era guys are wonderful," she said. "Probably 95 percent of the voting members are male and they elected me. Everywhere I go, I can get my job done with no craziness about whether a woman can do the job as well as a man. This organization has no auxiliary. The female veterans and the veterans' wives are held in just as high regard as the men. It's a great organization to be in."

She said she never dreamed that when she joined the Ohio chapter seeking a rap group to work through some of her frustrations that she suspected stemmed from Vietnam, that she would find a rewarding career.

Asked about her personal issues, she said, "Anger is one. Mine and Carl's. In Vietnam veteran circles, we say that almost every veteran has a hole in the wall, a memory of some moment in his past when he's put his fist through a wall out of anger.

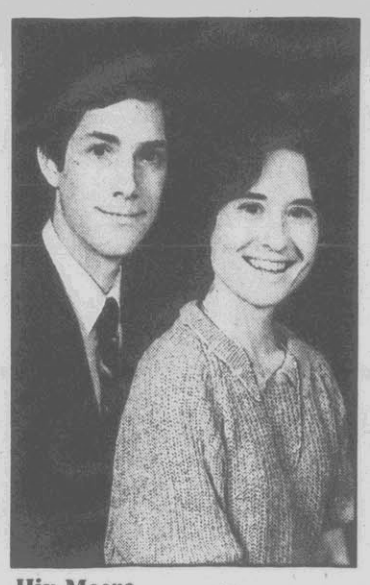

"Well, I hate to tell you, but I have my hole in the wall. Anger's been something I've really had to work on."

She said she's also had to work hard to not become an alcohol abuser. "When I was a nurse over there," she said, "it got to the point that it would take first one, later two, boiler makers to check my adrenalin flow after a 12-hour shift and settle me down so I could sleep. (A boiler maker is a shot of whiskey followed by a shot of beer.)

"When I came home, my parents didn't have alcohol readily available and that was good. I got out of the habit. But always since I've been on my own, I've had to really watch myself to make sure that I don't drink to control my feelings. Many Vietnam veterans are

Embracing Friends Irritate Wife

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: The holiday parties have ended. They were enjoyable for the most part, but irritating at times. Abby, what is the correct protocol for greeting and saying goodbye to guests?

My husband is a very handsome man. All the women simply adore him, which is something I must deal with day in and day out. Is it proper for women to greet and dismiss with lip kissing and arms-around-the-neck embraces? This kind of behavior embarrasses and disgusts me. I think a gentle touch on the arm with a "thank you" is sufficient.

My husband says he agrees with me, and he wishes that the women would leave him alone.

How do you handle this without being unpleasant, or is it something in society that we must accept? -- Bothered In Newport

Dear Bothered: As for your handsome husband's wishing that the women would leave him alone, his body language could probably do a better job of communicating his wishes. (No one embraces a statue.)

Affectionate women frequently hug the host on arriving and departing, so you should lighten up a little. And your husband should not be so quick to provide "lip service."

Dear Abby: I have been seeing a 27-year-old man who happens to be my ex-school teacher. I met him during my junior year of high school. He was my teacher for only one semester. We became good friends during my senior year. (I would occasionally stop by his apartment for a visit, but nothing ever happened.) I am 18 years old now.

After I graduated from high school we became intimate, and we've been seeing each other for eight months. He is terrified of losing his job, so we can't be seen together. The only time I see him is when I go over to his apartment.

I still live at home with my parents, so he never calls me or comes over. When we make love, it means the world to me. I've told him that at times I feel like I'm in love all by myself although I know I really am in love with him. He tells me he "cares" for me and wants to be with me, but society won't allow it because of the age difference. I feel differently. I am 18 now and I'm out of school, so what can "society" do? Besides, I never went to bed with him until I was 18.

I hate all this hiding. I could understand his fear of losing his job while I was in school, but that's no longer the case. Sometimes I feel that he is using that as an excuse to keep me hidden in the closet. How can I get him to go public with me? Or do you think he's just using me? -- Frustrated (No City, Please)

Dear Frustrated: Yes, I think he's using you. If his intentions were honorable, he would want to meet your parents and tell them how he feels about you.

He is no longer your teacher, and you were not intimate while you were in school, so what is there to fear?

He should be ashamed of himself, and you should concentrate on continuing your education and getting on with your future.

Wedding Vows Said Friday

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Whitehurst of Route 1, Ayden, and Mr. and Mrs. W. Warren Bishop of Goldsboro. She was escorted by her father. The bridegroom is the son of Karen Megran of Puyallup, Wash.

Teresa L. Waters of Winterville was honor attendant for her sister-in-law. Tad Jackson of Puyallup, Wash., was best man for his brother. Ushers were Charles Whitehurst Jr. of Raleigh and Chris Whitehurst of Ayden, both brothers of the bride.

The bride wore a formal gown of candlelight satin fashioned with a basque bodice designed with a bateau neckline. A yoke of French alencon lace extended over the shoulders into long sleeves, tapered into bridal points over the hands. Baroque scrolled appliques of alencon lace with seed pearls extended into a cathedral train. Her fingertip veil of illusion with a pouf was pearl-trimmed and attached to a candlelight satin hat covered with lace and pearls over the crown. It was enhanced by silk lilies and pearl sprays. The bride carried a bouquet of gardenias, Dutch iris, tulips and alstromeria lilies with matching streamers.

The attendant wore a royal blue tea-length gown of sheer lace over taffeta with a front scoop neckline and back V neckline. It had a shirred midriff and bow. She carried six long-stemmed yellow roses with matching streamers.

After the ceremony the bridal party and guests were entertained at dinner in the Terrace Room by the bride's parents.

The couple will live in Goldsboro, where he is serving in the U.S. Air Force.

MRS. JACKSON

The bride graduated from Ayden-Grifton High School and attended Pitt and Wayne community colleges. The bridegroom is a graduate of Sumner High School in Sumner, Wash., where he attended the University of Washington and Western Washington University. He is now attending N.C. Wesleyan College.

Short Hair Is Diet Secret

At Wits End
Erma Bombeck

Before I put a bite of food into my mouth, I have to identify it. (In my kitchen, that's tricky.) I have to know if what I am eating is a carbohydrate or a protein, how many calories it contains, how many grams of fat are in it. Then I have to worry about fiber, sodium, sugar and cholesterol levels before I factor in sluggish metabolism.

I must ask myself, "Is this the kind of food that forms a fat cell over each hip and multiplies and divides as I sleep?" I don't mind telling you I am bored to death reading cereal boxes and labels on cooking oils.

It seems as if every hour of every day in this country, a new bulletin is issued on how to lose weight. I know the ultimate answer, but I'm not going to reveal it until later in the column. First, you have to hear how I've suffered needlessly. I go back to the old water diets where I soaked up more water than the White House lawn. For a while, I had a complicated regimen spread out on the kitchen counter where I ate a yellow leafy vegetable from Column A, a green leafy vegetable from Column B, and a red meat supplement that wouldn't fit in the navel of a newborn.

I regressed to powdered formulas mixed with blue milk. One of my favorites was the diet where I ate pineapple for two hours and then switched to bing cherries for two hours. My face broke out, but I figured it was a trade-off.

There was the usual parade of patches, pills and pouches, with nothing promising on the horizon until the other day when I was leafing through a magazine. I saw "before" and "after" pictures of three women. One had lost 165 pounds, the one next to her had lost 44 pounds, and the one next to her 110 pounds.

There was something about all three of them I could not put my finger on. Then I realized what it was: All three had had their hair cut and styled in their "after" picture.

Feverishly I began leafing through every magazine in the house, and in every "before" picture, the hair was stringy and unkempt and the women were wearing bib overalls and overblouses. In the "after" pictures, they were neat and dressed like they were going to the Four Seasons for lunch. That had to be the secret to their weight loss; it was too much of a coincidence to be anything else.

Does hair retain water? Does it weigh more than we think it does? Does less of it affect our metabolism? Is it possible that it triggers a hormonal balance that shrinks the waistline and eradicates dimples?

I'm not ready to go public with this yet, but I think I'm on to something. I can just hear some of the skeptics saying, "Is she crazy?" Answer me this: Were you crazy when you drank liver malts once a week? Snacked on sunflower seeds eight times a day? Wired your jaws shut? What have you got to lose ... but a little hair?

'Kids Voting' Helps Parents

By Inger Sandal
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHOENIX — George Bush would have won by a landslide if it had been up to an Arizona caucus too young to be counted.

Nearly 7,000 children in grades three through 12 accompanied their parents to the polls and marked special presidential ballots in a project designed to help overcome voter apathy.

Bush, the Republican, received nearly three times as many votes as Democrat Michael Dukakis. The votes were tallied electronically by the Scan-Tron Corp. of Mesa.

The program was brought back from Costa Rica by three Mesa businessmen returning from a fishing trip. Costa Rica has a 90 percent election turnout and gets its children involved in the electoral process.

The three — R.R. Evans, Chuck Wahlheim and Max Jennings — were concerned about Arizona's anemic voter turnout. They involved the Tribune Newspapers, Valley National Bank and East Valley Partnership, a political business coalition, in framing the project. It was canvassed by 600 volunteers.

Backers say it worked, though not as well as they had hoped.

The project was coordinated by Donna Green, who says with 65 precincts "that's 30,000 kids to be touched and impacted."

Carolyn Parrish, a former Kyrene School Board member who helped Green, was the only paid staffer. She says they were able to complete the project with $20,000 from the Valley National Bank because they had so many volunteers.

Teachers from participating school districts devised a curriculum covering American political procedures, Parrish says. The curriculum also gave rise to classroom discussion on candidates and issues.

After their classroom work, children went home and talked politics with their parents, says Green, a former Mesa School Board president.

"The key to Kids Voting is they can not vote unless their parents come with them," Evans says.

Kids Voting worked with Maricopa County Elections Department and the state Legislature so the young voters would be exempt from the Arizona law that prohibits anyone except registered voters from entering a poll station.

"County elections people said they had had no complaints, written or verbal," Parrish says. "The kids loved it."

At Crismon Elementary School in Mesa, fifth-grade teacher Pam Gomez says the Kids Voting curriculum accented a government unit she already had planned.

She set aside one afternoon a week to prepare for the election and had a voter registrar speak to the class. After the election, Gomez says, the children seemed surprised that voting was easy.

"I thought it was going to be really hard," says James Wagstaff, 12. "You feel kind of powerful, or respected. It's a neat feeling that goes through you."

"I felt like I had say-so, that people listened to what I said," says Amy Trahan, a fifth-grader who voted with her mother after school.

John Blood, an eighth-grader at Rhodes Junior High, says he was ready to vote on election night after being prepared by Kids Voting.

"It takes some of the mystique out of it," he says. "It was interesting."

Did it really bring parents to the polls?

"We know that adult voter turnout in the 65 participating precincts was 70 percent," says Green, "which was higher than the 65 percent for the state and the 68 percent for Maricopa County."

Meanwhile, Bruce Merrill, an Arizona State University political science professor and researcher, is conducting a survey, but he expects to find a turnout 4 to 5 percent higher in the precincts involved.

Wagstaff has an idea of why grown-ups fail to vote:

Napping Could Save Life

A study at the University of Athens Medical School points to the benefits. Researchers compared Greek men hospitalized for coronary heart disease with Greek men hospitalized for other reasons and concluded that those who nap at least 30 minutes a day are 30 percent less likely to suffer heart problems than those who don't nap.

"Our society looks down on naps," says David Dinges, a psychologist at the University of Pennsylvania who specializes in the study of napping. "We regard time as money and see napping either as wasteful and self-indulgent or as a sign of a mental or physical defect."

Despite the stigma, Dinges says about one-third of Americans do nap at least once a week, and 55 percent of college students nap regularly.

Taxes Are Paid On Lost Land

By Kimberly M. Shearin
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOPKINTON, R.I. — Shortly before Victor Nascimento bought 11-plus acres of land in 1970, he toured the wooded site, which a real estate agent said ran along the town's Blue Dot Trail, past Babbling Brook, and stopped at the old oak tree just over the Connecticut border.

But the tree has rotted and the brook has dried, Nascimento says, and he's baffled because he has been paying taxes on land he can't find.

Nascimento and his brother, who is now dead, bought the parcel for $2,100 and got a quit-claim deed, which gives them the right to claim the land but not to take any recourse against the seller should there be a problem with the title.

Nascimento and his wife, Lynn, of East Providence, and his sister-in-law, Lois, were so confused that they refused to pay taxes on the land for two years.

When the town threatened to sell the land to collect the back taxes in December, the Nascimentos paid the $455 tax bill. Nascimento said he would get a title search, although financial constraints won't allow that soon.

"I am an old Boy Scout, and it was my dream to own a piece of land," Nascimento says.

Arlene Violet, former state attorney general, says if they had gotten a title search and title insurance when they bought the land, they would be able to sue the title company if they could not find their property.

Violet says there are two recourses: Since the old oak tree, Blue Dot Trail and Babbling Brook are identified in the Nascimentos' quit-claim deed, they could look for other references to those landmarks, perhaps in older deeds, to try to claim ownership. Also, they could obtain topography maps, which are close-ups of the land, to find their parcel.

The tax collector agrees with the Nascimentos that the land exists. "There's a deed for it, so we're assuming that it exists," says Linda Czerkiewicz of Hopkinton. "They bought something."

Nascimento says the original documents filed with his lawyer were destroyed when the lawyer's garage burned years ago, and his real estate agent says he doesn't remember the Nascimentos.

"There's a chain of taxes people paid on this land, dating back to the 1800s," Nascimento says.

He says he bought the land from a Dean Edwards, who inherited the parcel from his father, Oliver Edwards. He says Dean Edwards died about two years ago.

"Oliver Edwards was an old-time Yankee," Nascimento says. "These Yankees don't pay taxes on land that doesn't exist."

Hometown Museum To House Art

By Leslie R. Myers
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JACKSON, Mis. — Millions of dollars worth of art by Walter Inglis Anderson soon will be housed in a museum in Ocean Springs, the late artist's hometown.

Several hundred items by the nationally acclaimed Anderson — including his major murals — will become part of the museum's collection. A fund-raising drive to build the structure, called The Walter Anderson Museum of Art, now is officially under way.

Enthusiasm is no problem.

Before the drive began, about $300,000 had been contributed, said Courtney Blossman, president of The Friends of Walter Anderson, Inc., the organization that is spearheading the museum project.

The fund-raising goal will be as high as $1,050,000, which is the "maximum amount" the museum will cost, Blossman said. "We don't know what it is exactly, until the architects finish with the working drawings." Architects are Ed Pickard of Ocean Springs and Jim Eley of Jackson.

The fund raising should be completed by March.

"We want a small gem of a museum," Blossman said. "This is to honor Walter Anderson and the legacy that he left — and to keep a vital, very core collection in the state of Mississippi which might otherwise be lost."

The Friends, a 1,400-member organization, is dedicated to preserving and exhibiting Anderson's work. The museum project also is strongly supported by the Anderson family.

"It's wonderful. I think it's going to be grand," said Mary Anderson Pickard, Anderson's eldest daughter and the curator of his estate. "I can't believe the energy they (The Friends) have put into this; they've just worked like fiends.

"When they started The Friends of Walter Anderson, one of their goals was to build a museum. So it all ties together," Pickard said. "It seems this year that everything is coming together in a way that's very exciting."

Former Biloxi Mayor Jerry O'Keefe is general chairman of the project. Honorary chairmen are Agnes "Sissy" Anderson, the artist's widow and Pickard's mother, and Julie Mabus, the governor's wife.

The City of Ocean Springs and the City of Biloxi each have contributed $25,000.

Anderson — who died in 1965 at age 62 — was a watercolorist, oil painter, muralist, graphic artist, potter, decorator, sculptor, writer, naturalist, wood carver and furniture designer. He created designs for textiles, cut linoleum blocks for prints and hooked rugs.

Virtually every genre of his work will be represented in the museum, which will be built in the heart of Ocean Springs' historic district.

Its architectural style will be compatible with the neighborhood. The museum will be connected to the Ocean Springs Community Center — the site of Anderson's largest mural, which he painted for $1 and which has been appraised at $1 million.

They tentatively plan to break ground on the 7,000-square-foot building by June and to open the museum by the fall of 1990, Blossman said.

Since its founding in 1974, The Friends have collected 187 pieces of Anderson's work — all of which will be exhibited in the museum. In addition, the Anderson family has donated a few hundred pieces of the artist's work to the museum and is offering "vast amounts" of his other art on loan, she said.

The family's most famous donation is the so-called "little room," which will be detached from a cottage on the family's "Shearwater" compound in Ocean Springs. Anderson lived in the cottage during his final years. The interior walls of the "little room" are covered by a mural depicting a Shearwater day from sunrise to sunset.

Six Workers Progress Administration-era murals also will be removed from the old Ocean Springs High School auditorium and restored for the museum.

Private collectors also will donate Anderson art.

Thursday Opening For Three One-Act Plays By ATW

Cast members Winki Phillips and Don Watson

The Ayden Theater Workshp will present "A Night Of One Acts" beginning Thursday and continuing each evening at 8 p.m. through Saturday, with a matinee performance at 3 p.m. on Feb. 12. All performances will be presented in the auditorium of Ayden-Grifton High School.

Tickets purchased in advance are priced at $4 and at the door the price is $5. Advance tickets are on sale at Hungates in Greenville, Laura's Florist and Balloons in Ayden, and Karen's Flowers and Gift in Grifton.

The trio of one-act plays to be performed are Edward Albee's "The American Dream"; William Saroyan's "Hello Out There," and Christopher Durang's "The Actor's Nightmare."

Veteran ATW director Doug Mitchell is directing "The American Dream." Cast members are Maxine Harker as grandma; Duffy Lincoln as grandma; Etsel Mason as Mrs. Baker; Claudia Wiles as the domineering upper-class wife, and John Rose as the young man.

Albee's play is noted for its funny, conventional dialogue which is also marked by cyncial innocence — both ironic and offbeat.

Heidi Anderson, veteran actress of many roles in ATW productions, makes her directing debut with "Hello Out There." The play is the story of the bad luck of an itinerant gambler, arrested, charged with rape and jailed in a small Texas town. A young girl, a cook in the jail, understands him, but the husband of the lying woman who accused him of rape breaks into the jail and shoots the young gambler.

Marc Pressley has the role of the gambler, and Kellye Price is the young girl. Others in the cast are Duffy Lincoln as the husband, Candace McKenzie as the wife, and Jason Watson as another man.

The third of the trio of one-acts, "The Actor's Nightmare," is directed by Barbara Cohn. The play details the comic plight of a stranger suddenly pushed on stage to replace an ailing actor.

Cast members are Don Watson as the captive actor George, costumed as Hamlet but called on to perform in the middle of a scene from "Private Lives." Others in the comic confusion are Winki Phillips as Sarah Siddons; Candace McKenzie as Dame Ellen Terry, and Jim Hinson as Henry Irving.

The action ranges through Shakespeare, a play by Samuel Beckett and a scene that might be from "A Man For All Seasons."

Friday Reception For Show Of Orr Etchings

ECU NEWS BUREAU

A showing and reception have been scheduled for 3 p.m. Friday in the Fleming-Perry Conference Room of the Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures, East Carolina University, which has been decorated with the French etchings of artist Louis Orr.

The addition of eight Orr etchings "transfers the conference room into one of the most beautiful and unusual rooms on campus," said Dr. Martin Schwarz, department chairman.

The department is located in ECU's new $11.5 million General Classroom Building in mid-campus.

The Fleming-Austin Conference Room, named in honor of two veteran professors and former chairs of the department, now retired, was dedicated in honor of Dr. James L. Fleming and Prof. Marguerite A. Perry last April. Fleming and Perry have contributed the Orr etchings, Schwarz said.

Fleming lived and studied in Paris for several years before the outbreak of World War II.

"While many libraries and private individuals in North Carolina have prized collections of Louis Orr's North Carolina etchings (a series which was commissioned by Greenville statesman and international lawyer, Robert Lee Humber), the collection of the Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures is believed to be the only sizable collection of Orr's French engravings which exists in North Carolina and possibly in the United States," Schwarz said.

Included in the collection are the three etchings of Rheims Cathedral under bombardment during World War I, for which Orr was awarded the French "Pont Neuf, Paris," "Notre-Dame," and several other scenes of architectural interest.

In both his North Carolina and his French etchings, Orr showed himself to be a superb draftsman who noted the minutest detail, a great master of lights and shadows, and highly skilled in interpreting texture. For these reasons, he is considered by some experts to be among the greatest etchers of all time, Schwarz said.

PAINTING ACQUIRED

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A painting of the great Christian teacher and writer Saint Augustine by Philippe de Champaigne (1602-1674) has been acquired by the Los Angeles County Museum of Art.

The work was a gift of The Ahmanson Foundation.

It is the first work to enter the museum's collection by this major 17th century French artist, who is considered one of the pre-eminent religious painters of his time.

Pre-Conquest Tribes

Prominent Indian tribes living in what is now the South American country of Peru prior to the Spanish conquest of the 16th century included the dominant Inca tribe, as well as the Parakas and Chimu, and a number of smaller tribes.

Sculptor Recreates Far Eastern Treasures For A Club

The Associated Press/Kathy Willens

Sculptor Rodolfo Tejera with his dragon

By Catherine Wilson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. — A three-headed dragon glares down on club-goers, its red eyes flashing over the bar, its 33-foot green and red body hanging above the hallway and its tail suspended menacingly above the dance floor.

The fantasy came from the mind of artist Rodolfo Tejera. The reality is the centerpiece in the new Chinese temple interior at the trendy Club Nu in Miami Beach.

Tejera is a Mariel refugee who dropped out of sociology school in Cuba with dreams of the United States. He arrived by fishing boat in Key West in 1980 on forged travel papers and spent five years in San Francisco's underground art scene before returning to Miami and stumbling 1½ years ago into the design job with the 18,000-square-foot high-tech nightclub.

"I walked in the door one day and said give me some money to make you a wall," said the 37-year-old set designer and sculptor. "From there, I was working."

With two weeks to go before the new set was unveiled, Tejera was almost chain-smoking as he stood in a dark, dusty workshop, the gutted shell of the former Beach Theater. Its sea-blue plaster ceiling is frayed at the sides, and pigeons nest on its outer edge.

Scattered across the concrete floor are Chinese-style columns to fit over the club's posts; larger-than-life plastic foam statues of a priest, warrior and pagan goddess to cover a 27-foot wall; five wire-mesh framed Chinese figures for the club stage; Asian dog statues; bas-relief wall tiles made from imprinted clay; Oriental screens; and red ceiling ornaments.

"On this one, we have three weeks of research and two months of work, not even two months," said Tejera, whose black jeans and tennis shoes are covered by fine dust. He spent time in the library, the Chinese consulate and with Chinese friends as the ideas developed.

"What I'm looking for is quick, impressive." Working with the clay mold for the tiles, he said, "You just play with it when you have it in your hand."

It took 18 hours to frame the dragon with its 20-foot wingspan. He needed to finish the dragon by heating its plastic sheeting and then spray painting it.

A console lighting system will vary the color scheme every 45 minutes to give the decor a different look even on the same night.

The club opened in 1987 with an ornate Egyptian theme, was transformed at one point into Atlantis and most recently was an 18th-century palace parlor, complete with cream-colored fireplace relegated to the workshop again.

While most clubs will spend $250,000 every three or four years on a major renovation, Club Nu spends about $70,000 per set and changes them every three or four months. Special "environmental installations" also are prepared for one-day events such as Halloween and fashion shows.

"This keeps the club fresh. When the people come, they're always amazed the club has changed in such a short period of time," Tejera said. "The sets definitely bring people in. Every time you change the sets, you see the sales going up."

Mardi Gras Termed A Valid Folk Ritual

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS — Most folks see the New Orleans Mardi Gras as America's most stupendous party, but anthropologist Munro Edmonson sees it as a unique civic folk ritual.

"It's New Orleans' way of saying 'We Are the City that Care Forgot and Don't You Forget It,'" says Edmonson, whose vantage point since the early 50s as anthropologist at Tulane University has set him up as one of Mardi Gras' keenest observers.

On Tuesday, when the long Carnival celebration hits its peak, he will be in the mob. He'll see the same party most folks see — and a lot more.

After seasons of exhaustive research, Edmonson describes his city's Carnival as a community ritual found nowhere else in the country. It is huge. Everybody who wants to can get into the act somehow, some way. It mirrors the city to near-perfection. It's an anthropologist's dream: all those telltale signs of self-image and class and ethnic and social issues unfurled for anyone to see.

The City That Care Forgot? "It's often the case that people make up these self-identifying slogans," he said, "and whether they believe them or not to begin with, they eventually come to believe them."

That New Orleans sees itself more Latin, more permissive than comparable American cities is long accepted.

"I think most tourists are prepared to look for the famous license and orgiastic aspect of the celebration and they can usually find it if they look very far," he said. "Mardi Gras is a great big party. People usually suspend their usual worries to a large extent and enjoy it."

If New Orleans sees itself as mad and wicked, Edmonson sees Mardi Gras showing it also as an extraordinarily complex society with definite class distinctions.

"Carnival balls have changed," he explains. "They were very explicitly exclusivist in the 50's. The top status balls had well-known, unwritten rules against Italians and Jews. Blacks were, of course, unthinkable. You didn't have to have rules. Nobody would have even thought of it.

"So the fact that (the city's first black mayor Dutch) Morial attended the ball of Comus during his incumbency is a first. That exclusivism is no longer as absolute as it was. It's not gone, but it's certainly been attenuated."

The sight of wealthy krewe (carnival organization) members in elaborate costume tossing trinkets down off floats to spectators who plead, "Throw me something, Mister" underscores perceptions of a city ruled by the upper class.

Edmonson sees that and more: "It amuses me that the upper class makes a strenuous effort to focus the themes of their parades on the classics. And they always get it wrong.

"But I think that's diagnostic because if you know the upper class of New Orleans well, you know that it's their way of saying, 'Who gives a damn about classics?' People don't study classics if they're upper class."

Seeing the Zulu parade has always been a must for Edmonson. The spectacle of blacks in blackface frolicking in loincloths has befuddled visitors for years. What to make of this earthy burlesque which parodies — using a mock African motif — society's pretensions, black and white?

"The black population was participating very extensively in the 50s. All the black private clubs had their balls privately and that was that. None of them were held in Municipal Auditorium. Zulu, for example, was routed so that it had no overlap with the white parades," he remembers. "Now, it leads the white parade."

Edmonson was there to see the memorable change. "I remember when the (black) St. Augustine band swung onto Canal Street in those beautiful Trojan costumes they wear, whamming out 'Born Free.' It was a special, special moment."

Mardi Gras' future? "I don't see any signs of its weakening at all." Drastic alteration? "I don't think it's going to change anytime soon and I don't think it's going to change very fast."

Edmonson delights in showing Mardi Gras to his visitors and he's perfected his prescription for seeing the folk ritual along with the spectacle: one neighborhood parade, a ball, Zulu, the French Quarter, Canal Street for the Rex Parade, truck parades, nighttime Comus Parade, and the midnight meeting of the Rex and Comus courts on television.

"Most tourists, unless they've had some kind of briefing about it, consider that they're down here to see a spectacle. And I think that's the wrong way to approach Mardi Gras if you're going to enjoy it most.

"While it is a spectacle — there's no question about that — it's a spectacle that you understand best by participating. So if you don't wear a mask, and if you're not in a position to be laughed at, as well as doing the laughing, you don't get quite as much into the spirit of the thing.

"If you've knocked yourself out for weeks trying to dream up a really wacky costume, it's a great gratification to have somebody come along and say, 'Oh, I liiiiiiike it!'"

Edmonson regrets that visitors are seldom aware that the season has been revving up since the last week of December.

"It astonishes me that most of these people haven't really seen the spirit of Mardi Gras until Mardi Gras day, and by not later than 10 or ll o'clock in the morning they're With It. That is, they might as well be New Orleanians. They're scrabbling the gutter for worthless beads just like everybody else. They've got the spirit of the thing. They understand that this is not an occasion for even drunks to get angry with each other. We absorb a huge tourist population spiritually, so to speak, and get them to play the game our way.

"Why, it is amazing."

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

GETTING THE MOST OUT OF YOUR BEDROOMS

To make your bedrooms really convenient, you might want to consider a few of these suggestions to help you.

One of the most common complaints about bedrooms is lack of sufficient storage space, and perhaps it's a new dresser or chest that would help. You can consider a whole range of single, double or triple dressers. And when it comes to chests, there are chests with 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 or more drawers, and chests-on-chests to multiply your drawers, plus armoire chests, etc.

Then too, very often, people don't have the right night tables because over the years they've accumulated so many things such as radios, clocks, magazines and books, that their bedside night tables overflow. Night tables of the right size can solve problems and at the same time, add new beauty to a bedroom.

Another lack of many bedrooms is enough lamps, both near the bed for reading, and elsewhere in the room. Along with that thought you might want to create a cozy reading area in your bedroom with a comfortable chair, table and reading lamp. That could turn out to be one of the most pleasant retreats in your home.

To see lots of ideas for your bedroom, and for any furniture for your home, come in To BETSY DRAKE INTERIORS.

By Merlene Davis
FOR THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Around 4:30 on Friday afternoons, seven youths stretch, twist, jump, sweat and complain. They whine about sore muscles and exhaustion. They beg for compassion and mercy.

"It's up to you," she says with a shrug. "We're not going to leave until you get it right."

Over and over, the roles are played out until the dancers finally give their instructor a flawless routine that lives up to their name, Something Special.

For 3½ years, under the unrelenting yet nurturing instruction of Givens, Something Special has been dancing without charge at nursing homes, talent shows and anywhere else folks in the Bluegrass are willing to watch.

The group consists of six girls — Tamika Lee, 10; Phillina Black, 12; Willena Beattie, 13; Delmar Black, 13; Tracey Walker, 13; Rebecca Davis, 14 —and one male, Tony Jackson, 18.

The draw for the members to the regimented rehearsals is an overwhelming desire to dance, and to dance well.

"I would like to make a career of it," says Delmar, one of the three original members still dancing. "I'd also like to be a computer programmer. You have to have something to fall back on."

"She works you real hard so she can get you where you want to go," Tracey says, "and that's the top."

Givens, 29, moved to Lexington about four years ago. Before long, she discovered there was no outlet for her freestyle dance except at nightspots where the patrons were not appreciative of her hard work.

While attending a rehearsal for the Little Mr. and Miss Black Lexington Pageant, Givens noticed three girls who were using dance as their talent. She began working with them, and word of her abilities got around. Soon she was teaching dance to all comers.

"At first the parents thought I was too hard on them," Givens says. "We had a meeting, and I let them know that my situation was not going to change, and I asked them to stay out of it, to let the girls decide if they wanted to continue. Now the parents are supportive."

The group hopes one day to dance before an audience of millions on the syndicated television program "Star Search."

The dream is not unrealistic. A similar group Givens taught in Chicago several years ago did just that, winning twice before being eliminated.

Mrs. Stout has three daughters — Elizabeth, 20, and Vicky and Marigrace, 19-year-old twins. All three live at home. Elizabeth works in a recording studio, Vicky in a veterinary clinic. Marigrace attends college.

She said her husband, a VVA member who serves as Virginia State Council secretary now, has been supportive of her serving as national president.

And so have her daughters. She said she was thrilled when one of her daughters recently told a reporter who inquired about her feelings concerning her mother's being so busy in the work of the national VVA, "Mom's taught us that if you really believe in something and work hard enough, you can achieve it. I'm very proud she's doing what she's doing."

"The presidency has been educational," Mrs. Stout said. "I've met so many people and learned so much about the far-reaching effects of Vietnam. I love the traveling — I try to visit as many local and state chapters as I can."

She said she considered the East Carolina University conference a distinct privilege. This was the first such conference focusing on the family mental health aspect of the Vietnam experience that she's visited or heard of anywhere in the country.

She also likes the lobbyist work she's doing on Capitol Hill.

Another opportunity she's looking foward to is her first trip back to Vietnam next month with Dr. Bill Magee and his wife, Kathy, of Norfolk, Va. The couple leads medical assistance trips to various Third World countries to perform free plastic surgery. Mrs. Stout said the need is great in Vietnam where so many people's faces and other body parts were disfigured by the war. She said she's been told that on this trip she may get to use nursing skills she hasn't applied in 20 years.

Planning also is under way to extend her stay there, so she can, as VVA president, meet with government officials of Vietnam and Cambodia to talk about the Prisoner of War-Missing In Action issue.

As conversation among Mrs. Stout, Mrs. Furbush and Mrs. Brown turned to the Vietnam Memorial in Washington, D.C., Mrs. Stout said, "I know I could study those names on The Wall and figure out what Steve's last name is. But so far I haven't. Even without a last name in my mind, he's very much a part of my life, my incentive to do whatever I can to compensate for all the waste that went on over there.

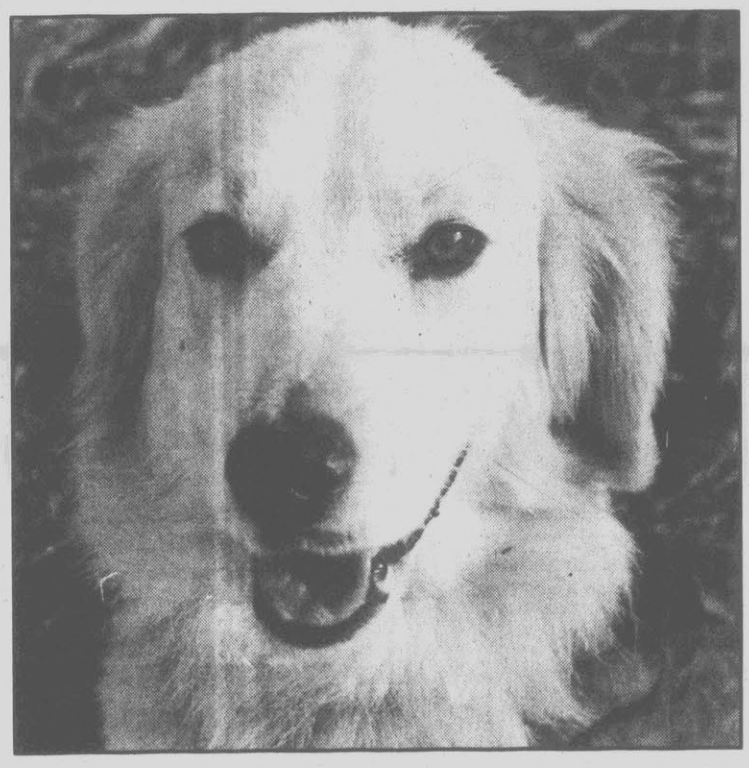

"I feel I am healing myself now by helping as many other people as I can to heal from the War. I meet and talk to people all the time who're still hurting. Not just the veterans, but their wives and children and parents and even their friends.

"The almost universal experience of healing that people seem to have when they visit the wall is proof that healing is possible.

"And we're all contributing to it in whatever way we see as ours. For me right now, it's this presidency.

"For some other people, it may be something as simple as saying thank you to a veteran. That would be healing for the vet and it would no doubt contribute to the person who said it, too."

IDEAL DRIVING CONDITIONS.

When acquiring a luxury car, a driver often faces two obstacles that severely hamper his enjoyment of the road. Namely, high monthly payments. And a large down payment.

At Volvo, we find these conditions to be less than ideal. Which is why if you're in the market for a luxury car, you should visit your local Volvo dealer.

Because right now, you can lease the Volvo 760 turbo sedan, 760 GLE sedan or the 760 turbo wagon at a very affordable $399 a month.

And to make it still easier to drive one of these highly durable luxury cars, your Volvo dealer is offering this lease with no down payment.*

Just make your first month's payment in advance. And then all the features that make the 760 such a pleasure to drive—like its electronic climate control and sophisticated six-speaker audio system—can be yours.

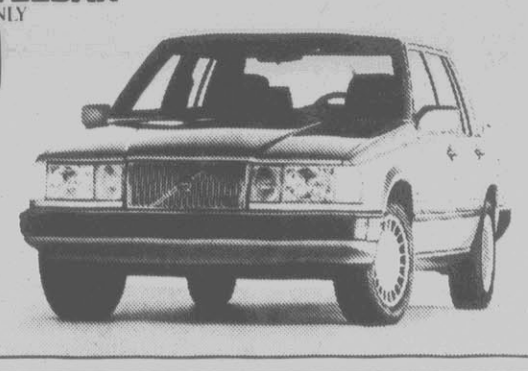

So see the 760 soon. Thanks to Volvo's leasing terms, it's one luxury car whose comforts are fiscal, as well as physical.

Pungo Wildlife Refuge, Where Nature And Tranquility Co-Exist

People who enjoy seeing migratory birds in winter and other birds and animals during any time of the year, as well as wild flowers in warmer months, will find pleasure in visiting the Pungo National Wildlife Refuge in Hyde County.

The entrance to the refuge is 59 miles from Greenville. It's easy to get to. Take U.S. 264 through Pactolus and Washington, past the crossroads village of Yeatsville, on to Pantego. In downtown Pantego, turn left on N.C. 99 (which goes to Plymouth) and travel seven miles to a small unnamed settlement where N.C. 45 forks to the right. Turn right on N.C. 45, and travel 1.3 miles. Just after the boundary signs that let you know you're entering Hyde County, you will see the refuge sign. Stop at the shelter near the sign to get an idea of what to do — and what not to do within the refuge.

Pungo Lake is the smallest of four shallow lakes — the others are Phelps, Alligator and Mattamuskeet — scattered north to south in the flatlands on the blunt peninsula jutting between the Albemarle and Pamlico sounds.

The manager of Pungo refuge is Larry Ditto. In his absence, David Kitts, a staff member at Mattamuskeet National Wildlife Refuge in Hyde County, provides basic information about the 12,350-acre Pungo preserve.

"The Pungo refuge was established in 1963," Kitts said. "Since then there has been two big forest fires, one in 1981, the other in 1985, that decimated the growth of older trees."

Pungo is a true pocosin area, a mixture of swamp and marsh typical of this area of the state.

Kitts cited the recent headcount of various migratory birds at Pungo. "It's a nicely varied representation," he said, "with 12,000 snow geese, 10,000 tundra swans, 4,500 Canada geese and 25,000 ducks." The ducks, Kitts explained, "include mallards, pintails, widgeon, teal and wood ducks."

Although the majority of these birds, particularly the larger geese and swans, "use Pungo as one of their winter quarters, many of them will be here through the month of February, so that visitors still have time to see them before they leave for another year."

On the day I visited, Sunday, Jan. 29, the larger birds were concentrated in two locales — on the waters of Pungo Lake and in two large fields to the left of the sightseeing road immediately after entering the refuge. The two fields, where perhaps 5,000 large birds, predominantly the beautiful, long-necked tundra swans were feeding, are typical of arrangements for food supply for the migratory birds provided by wildlife refuges. One field was of corn that had been cut down, unharvested — the other a field densely matted with green rye.

The view of birds busily honking and feeding on the gently wind-whipped surface of Pungo Lake was from the viewing tower roughly a quarter of a mile from the area of the lake where the birds were congregated.

For best viewing, visitors are advised to take binoculars. Birds feeding in the field can be approached, but not very closely lest they become distracted and take flight.

The good condition dirt roads that wander for something like a dozen miles through the refuge are well marked. Traffic within the area is light, so that visitors can park at any point along the roads to observe wildlife, to take photographs, or simply to relish the quiet beauty of the landscape.

Canals of varying width parallel the road and crisscross the refuge — as indeed is the case for agricultural lands in the area, both in southern Washington County and in Hyde County.

These canals, which appear so natural that many think they are the creation of nature, are, according to Kitts, "man made. When settlers first came in and began to convert the forest and marsh lands into agricultural acreage, it was necessary to cut the canals to drain the land. This entire area is after all the southern extremity of the Great Dismal Swamp."

Along these canals, one can see the blackened stumps of trees destroyed in the two big fires. Bronzed broomstraw and clumps of dark green myrtle dominate the landscape, with occasional stretches of paler species of grasses and here and there native willows in water that escaped the fires.

At one point three canal trees, perhaps 20 feet in height, were literally covered with huge flocks of red-breasted robins. Other song birds flit across the road, and in winter large beds of cattails are softly deteriorating.

Some care needs to be exercised. When I stopped, then crossed the road to photograph cattails, I inadvertantly stepped on a pygmy rattlesnake sunning himself in soft white sand — generally, snakes are expected to be passing the winter underground, but on warmer days they do come out to enjoy the sun. So whatever the time of year, be on the watch and wear sturdy shoes, heavy socks and have legs covered.

A few tips for greater visiting pleasure. There are no toilet facilities or concession stands within the refuge. It's a good idea to take along a canteen of water or some other (non-alcoholic) refreshment. Snacks are helpful should one extend a visit longer than originally intended (and the tranquil peace of the place makes that easy to do).

The same don'ts that apply to other wildlife refuge sites apply here. No hunting, no fishing, no camping or making fires. Look at, but do not disturb nesting boxes for song birds or the ones erected for wood ducks. Take out any food trash, but don't take out any wildlife (including snakes).

The Pungo Wildlife is open year round during daylight hours. It's a place to get away from civilization — a big spread of pocosin that pays rewards for time spent seeing wildlife, of observing nature with only the sounds of your car, bicycle or footsteps and the comforting voice of a companion to harmonize with the welcome silence.

Travelers who get an early start can perhaps add in a relatively brief visit to the Swan Quarter National Wildlife Refuge, with its entry point about 27 miles southeast of the Pungo refuge. From the Pungo refuge, take N.C. 45 south to U.S. 264 east. About 15 miles later, just before the turn-off to the town of Swan Quarter, watch for the entry sign to the Swan Quarter refuge. A third wildlife refuge, the Mattamuskeet refuge at the large lake by that name, is located about 20 miles east of the Swan Quarter refuge. However, due to the geographical extent of the refuges with much to be seen at each, ideally more than one day needs to be allotted to the pleasures waiting for an exploration of this trio of Hyde County natural refuge complexes.

North Carolina Quilt Show At The N.C. Museum Of History

By Peggy Howe
Department Cultural Resources

RALEIGH — You can see a quilt featuring events in American history, or a 1901 quilt make by a group of small girls or a quilt depicting Raleigh's famous Henry Clay oak.

These quilts and more are featured in the new exhibit, "North Carolina Quilts: Selections from the Museum Collection," on view now through June 18 at the N.C. Museum of History at 109 E. Jones St. in downtown Raleigh.

Thirty-three quilts dating from the 1830s through 1987, representing various areas of the state, will show trends of design, pattern and fabrics through the years.

The quilts are from the museum's collection. Many are part of a two-year documentation project in 1985-86 which examined more than 10,000 North Carolina quilts.

Presented by the museum and the Museum of History Associates, the exhibit groups quilts in five sections, including "Quilting Beyond Tradition;" "With Love and Pride;" "Making Do;" "Stars Over North Carolina" and "Designs from Nature."

Visitors will see quilts from 20 eastern and piedmont counties, along with two North Carolina quilts whose counties are unknown.

Leading off the "Quilting Beyond Tradition" section is the "Pictorial Quilt," created in 1935 by Maude J. McCauley of Alamance County. Three years in the making, the quilt depicts scenes from American history, such as the Lone Eagle, the Battle of Alamance, the Lost Colony, Flanders Field and Daniel Boone. "It's one of our finest examples of North Carolina quilts," said Martha Battle, museum liaison for the quilt project.

The newest quilt in the collection, a 1987 specimen made by Gladys Baker of Zebulon, pictures Raleigh's famous Henry Clay oak. Mrs. Baker is a member of the Capital Quilter's Guild and often gives quilting instruction and demonstrations.

Another quilt, "Grandmother's Pride," was made in 1901 in Onslow County by the "Willing Workers," a group of Swansboro schoolgirls. Some of the blocks are embroidered with names of the makers, whose ages ranged from 5-10 years.

Other quilts in the exhibit include the only political quilt in the more than 10,000 documented. Made in the 1940s in Moore County by an unknown quilter, the quilt features states that elected Franklin D. Roosevelt as president in 1932, 1936 and 1940. The quilt was purchased by Mary Scott, wife of Governor and later, Senator W. Kerr Scott.

This is the first time that most of the quilts have been publicly displayed, according to Jackson Marshall, the museum's acting curator of research.

Ms. Battle speculated that quilt patterns and fabrics tended to cluster in various areas because of lack of communication and transportation in earlier years. With no telephones, radios, few magazines and difficult transportation, quilters obviously shared patterns with nearby neighbors.

Kathlyn Sullivan, documentation coordinator for the quilt project, explained that North Carolina trends in quiltmaking and patterns extended across state lines into South Carolina, but seldom into Tennessee. "We also can see English correlation in some early pieced quilts," she said. She added that in the quilt documentation project, examiners noted more differences in time than in ethnic origins.

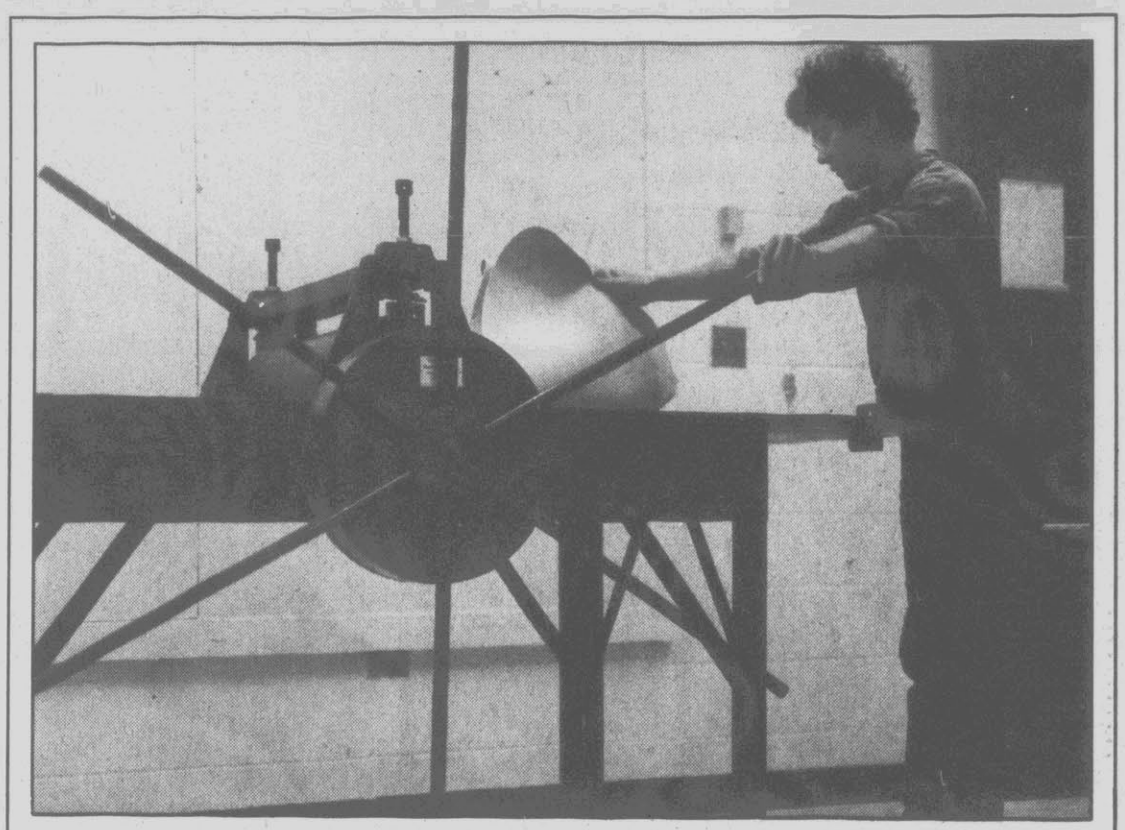

Another trend noticed is that quilts from textile mill area have similar fabrics and patterns. "...quilters used whatever was available," Marshall said.

Ms. Battle said the quilt exhibit contains no quilts from west of Caldwell County "...because we have none in the collection," she said, although "we would welcome any addition to the collection from the west." Speculation is that there are fewer quilts in the west because it has been a less populated area.

In conjunction with the quilt exhibit, the continuing Month of Sundays series will offer a free slide/lecture presentation by Ms. Battle entitled, "The N.C. Quilt Project: Selections from the Museum Collection."

The presentaton will by at 3 p.m. today in the Museum of History conference room.

Admission to the exhibit and slide/lecture program is free.

Metalsmith Rancer received her training at North Carolina's Penland School and at New York's Parsons School of Design. She is also an award winning broadcast journalist for WRDU in Raleigh, and actively seeks to promote the arts in North Carolina through her membership of the board of directors of Artspace. Happiness Is Living, Raising A Family On An Island Home

By Joan S. Boudreaux

The humorous detachment with which Joel Hancock views himself only serves to make him a colorful character typical of a Harkers Island, North Carolina resident. He was raised, along with six brothers and three sisters, on the island in Core Sound east of Beaufort. Like the enduring oaks he writes about, his roots run deep. A literal descendant of many of those he tells about in "Strengthened By The Storm", the author's allusions underline the nature of Harkers Island inhabitants, past and present.

Through stringently organized and consciously shaped from the beginning, much of the richness of the book lies in Hancock's memories.

He tells how the younger children in a family of 12 learn tactics for getting food at Sunday dinner. "When I was little, it was not uncommon to catch someone sneaking a piece of cornbread before grace was finished," says Hancock. "I was in high school before I ate my first chicken breast." He also tells how loyalty for family and the Mormon church was instilled by his mother.

"I remember sitting on mama's knee as she swung in the front porch swing and told us the story of Moses and the mountain and about Joseph Smith's vision in the grove," says Hancock. "When she'd finish, she'd say, 'Now let me tell you about your granddaddy.'"

Margarette Lewis Hancock made her 10 children proud to be Mormon descendants of ancestors who migrated to Harkers Island from Diamond City on Shackleford Banks prior to the turn of the century.

"Who you are is important in a small place like Harkers Island," says Hancock. It's not that he's Joel, but that he's that boy of Charlie William's." The author tells about working in a boat house for about four years and the men there were still referring to him as "that boy of Charlie William's."

"It was 'boy, get this; boy get that,' so one day I asked them why it was that I'd worked for them for four years and none of them knew my name." They assured the author that they did.

"What is it," I asked.

"You're that boy of Charlie William's," they said.

As Hancock grew up, he observed a culture, undergoing a slower transition than many, but a transition all the same.

"Many islanders today have to go off the island to make a living," says Hancock. "They work in Beaufort, Morehead City, Cherry Point, and some even go further than that." Hancock is currently employed as Computer Systems Administrator by Atlantic Veneer Corporation in Beaufort.

Hancock went away from the island long enough to get the M.A. in History at East Carolina University in Greenville. During his senior year he was named the History Honors Scholar. As a graduate student he was awarded a teaching assistantship and the school's Brewster Fellowship.

He met his wife, the former Susan Leggett of Greenville, while at ECU. After they married and had their first child, they traveled to Kentucky and rented an apartment near the University of Kentucky where Hancock had also been awarded an assistantship and scholarship.

"We decided to spend the summer at Harkers Island before starting school at Kentucky. Over a decade later and six children richer we are still Harkers Island proggers," says Hancock.

The author has no regrets for changing his mind about academia. "Where else could our six children get the love and support that they get from so many aunts, uncles, and cousins? There are six refrigerators I know of that they can open without permission," says Hancock.

He admits that there is truth in what one of the Mormon elders, James R. Hansen, wrote in his journal in 1897. He observed that the island people were "... good, humble, but poor people. All they lived on was the few fish they would catch, then sell them, and not worry any more until all the money was gone."

"I've got a brother who if he has a big catch on Monday, he'll debate on whether to go fishing on Tuesday."

Hancock also tells about the time while working for a local trailer sales company he was offered a job as regional manager in Florida. "I told them I would except that I'd be so late getting home at night."

The author, who also serves as bishop of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in Harkers Island, remembers how one day when he walked down to the water's edge, he found his five-year-old son Joel Jr. with Hancock's father mending a net.

"It's hard to describe the pride I felt watching my child weaving that net. That's an experience he would have missed in an apartment in Kentucky."

Hancock knows that when his sons and daughters grow up they too will enjoy searching and progging for oysters in January and February, scallops in March and April, fish in March and June, shrimp in July and August, clams in September and October and animals in November and December. He knows that they too will be able to"smell a mullet blow, when the northeast wind blows in mullet as well as the smell of the pines that grow on the north side of the island."

Mike, his three-year-old already knows how to balance a boat. "If someone gets on his side of the boat, he walks to the other side," says Hancock.

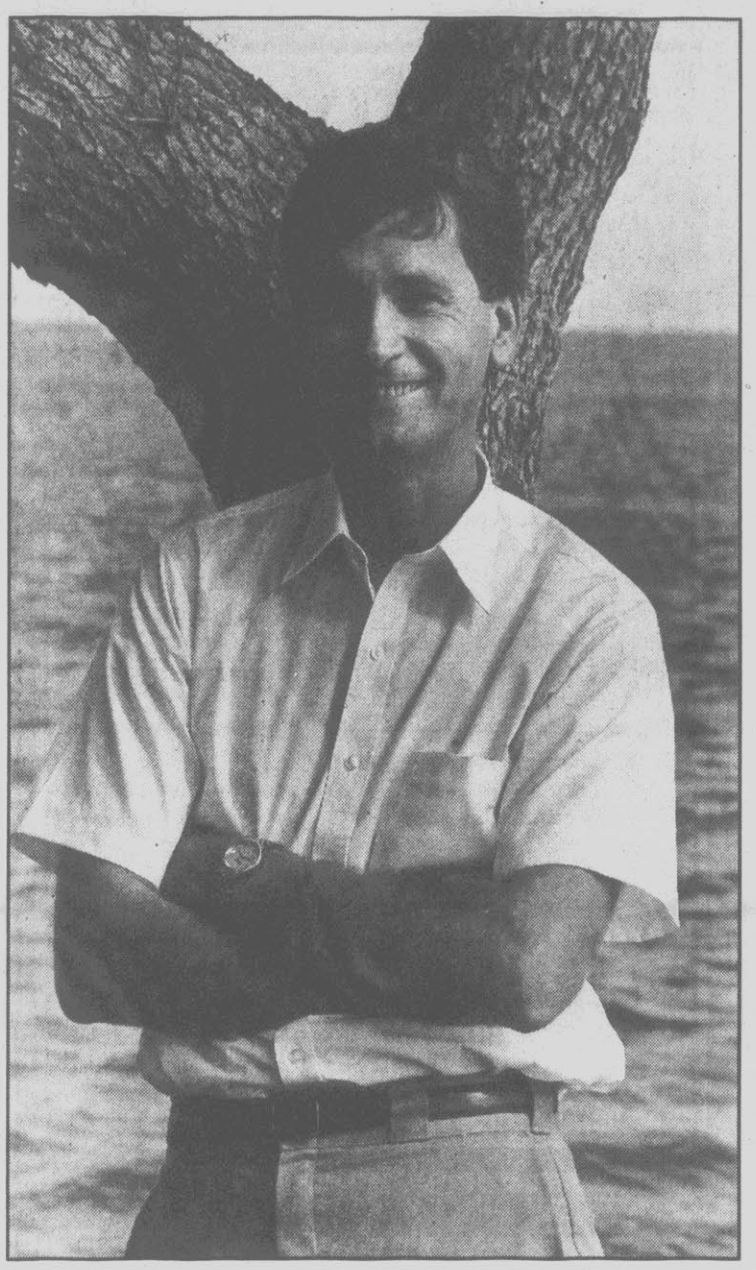

The author also has faith that as their ancestors were diligent members of the Mormon church, they too will be. Emily, Hancock's 13-year-old daughter, is already the church organist.

"The same match that set fire to that first church assured that the Latter Day Saints Church would endure on Harkers Island," says Hancock. "The 350 members are as steadfastly Mormon today as their forefathers were. Like any of the oaks under which they both lived and worshipped, they took added strength from things they had endured. Neither the blustering winds of persecution nor the days and years of long isolation could diminish their vigor."

One irony the author disclosed is the fact that among the 1,800 population on Harkers Island, he could get no one to reveal the identity of the Protestants who had persecuted their Mormon ancestors. When he finally persuaded them to help with what they knew about the mob action that took place when the Mormon church and school was burned in 1906, they consented with the provision that the names would not be revealed.

Hancock tells about a church official, Melvin J. Ballard's visit to Harker's Island in 1938. Before he left he said, "This island someday will become a Mormon paradise!

"There are many in our congregation who will agree that Elder Ballard's prophetic promise has been fulfilled already," says Hancock.

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Mj Daughtry
SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

Historical fiction has long been enjoyed by adult readers as a means to appreciate and learn from the past. For children as well, historical fiction can make the past come alive in a way that no textbook could.

One of the most prolific and successful of writers of historical fiction for children is Scott O'Dell, winner of the Hans Christian Anderson Award and a Newbery medalist.

O'Dell never talks down to his audience. His writing is simple, straightforward and gripping. Whether he is dealing with the life of an actual person (such as Sacagawea) or a period of history (such as Mexico of 200 years ago), O'Dell's books have an authentic atmosphere. He is especially good at making the reader understand the lives of different cultures.

This is especially true in O'Dell's best-known work "Island of the Blue Dolphins." This powerful story of the Pacific Indian girl, Karana, and her 18 year struggle to survive morooned on an island won a Newbery medal in 1960 and is still enjoyed by children today.

Young readers can see Lewis and Clark's adventurous expedition from St. Louis to the Pacific Ocean through the eyes of their guide, the Shoshone woman called Sacagawea, in the book "Streams to the River, River to the Sea."

Little is actually known about this brave but shadowy figure, but O'Dell brings her and her companions into the light. As a girl, Sacagawea was captured by slave hunters from another tribe. She was won in a card game by a French trader. And Captain Willian Clark fell in love with her during the Louisiana Expedition and renamed her "Janey."

The Lewis and Clark expedition brought people close together who came into contact with many different cultures: native American, black and white. But they were all individuals too, a fact which O'Dell never lets you forget.

After a sledding accident injures her father, Bright Dawn is called upon to take his place in the grueling 1,000-mile Iditarod race between Anchorage and Nome.

Bright Dawn picks and trains her team, and with Black Star to lead them, she braves roaring winds, incredible cold and other dangers to bring honor to her town and her father.

As in his other books, Scott O'Dell brings the reader to a better understanding of life, this time of life above the Arctic Circle.

Scott O'Dell is a serious writer of serious books for children, a rarity these days. And what's better, children are fascinated by his stories and read them ravenously. So try some historical fiction. And start with Scott O'Dell.

A Reflector Review

The History Of Harkers Island Mormons

STRENGTHENED BY THE STORM. By Joel Hancock. Morehead City, N.C., Campbell & Campbell, Publishers, 710 Arendell Street. Large format, hard cover. Illustrated with photographs, 168 pps. $19.95. (Mail orders add $1.00 N.C. sales tax and $2 for postage and handling).

From the perspective of being Mormon and of being a descendant of a Harkers Island heritage, Joel G. Hancock gives a well document account of the coming of the Mormoms to Harkers Island.

Using the weathered island oaks as a predominant image, Hancock starts his lyrical account of Harkers Island history "By the Water's Edge" where, isolated, many ancestors migrated from Diamon City on Shackleford Banks after the devastating hurricanes in 1896 and again in 1899. (Shackleford Banks are part of the narrow ribbon of Outer Banks across Core Sound that parallel Harkers Island and the mainland).

Hancock tells how his ancestors embraced the teachings brought to them by young Mormon elders in Prince Albert coats, and how they suffered persecution along with those elders when they held fast to what they believed.

Although the story Hancock tells is basically Mormon, its history is from a perspective that all coastal North Carolinians will appreciate. He has included enough information about the area to make the events he writes about interesting to Harker islanders and inlanders as well.

The oak, strengthened by the storm, becomes the controlling metaphor in the book. This strength is deep-rooted not only in oaks but also in the island people, a strength that motivates the symbolic structure of Hancock's story.

The young missionaries are men whom the author's ancestors grew close to — enough to name their children after. Elder James R. Hansen is one elder who will win the hearts of readers, Mormon and non-Mormon alike. His journal and other materials (family pictures, family history charts, island art and poetry) Hancock draws upon are assimilated into the book's design.

Hansen came to the island at age 18, lacking in many skills that one needs to preach. First he lacked confidence in speaking English. Although a native of Logfan, Utah, he and his parents had recently migrated from Denmark. Labeled the "baby preacher" by locals, Elder Hansen became discouraged when a Mr. Todd, an older man in his congregation said, "Elders, I think it's a shame and disgrace to the church to send a young boy such as this to try to preach the gospel : . . He will do more harm in two or three years while on this mission than ten of you elders can build up. He is about the greenest of the green I have ever seen or heard speak."

After hearing Mr. Todd recommend that Hansen be sent home at once, the young man went to his room and cried and prayed for strength.

After more blunders and much training, Hansen preached a sermon that brought tears from Mr. Todd's eyes and an apology.

Hancock relates many endearing stories of the bonding of the island people with these young innocents from Utah. He also tells of precarious positions these young men found themselves in when ministers from other denominations began to inflame their dwindling congregations against these city-dressed men who, according to some, had come to take away young women to be slaves to Mormon men in Utah.

When the mayor of Kinston, where the rail station that then served passengers coming in for Harkers Island was located, was asked "Have you ever seen them (the Mormons) ship a boxcar of women to Utah?," he replied, "No, not yet."

In "Strengthened By The Storm," Hancock relates frightening experiences written about in the elder's journals and in the journals of ancestors. There was the time when a drunken mob tied a noose around an elder's neck; times when Mormons had to guard their homes at night, fearing threats they'd gotten in anonymous letters — "If you hold meetings in your home we will burn them down."

Youngsters in the town got into the violent acts too. They threw rocks and shells at houses where religious meetings were held. In many instances these acts, called "chunking" by islanders, resulted in injury to women and children.

But along with persecution stories, Hancock reveals some hospitable citizens who fed the young men, washed their clothes and gave them shelter for the night. The lighthouse keeper, Captain William H. Gaskill was one. He fed them many times. James Congleton, major of Beaufort, was another who took them in many times.

Hancock's ability to give vivid descriptions of North Carolina Mormon pioneers, their traumas, their triumphs, is explained in the genesis of his use of the weathered oak symbol. He posits two levels of metaphorical or symbolic meaning which build a foundation for the narrative structure.

Hancock's book has simple power and he himself emerges as an author who has talent as a narrative stylist. His tale of the "traumatic birth of Mormonism in Harkers Island" equals the pioneer stories of the Mormon pioneers in the West.

The book not only tells of Mormons, it also shows the island life of all who live on North Carolina's barrier islands. From this book, readers will get to know and love the island people who make the North Carolina coast an idyllic place to vacation — and to live.

Concerts For Children Friday

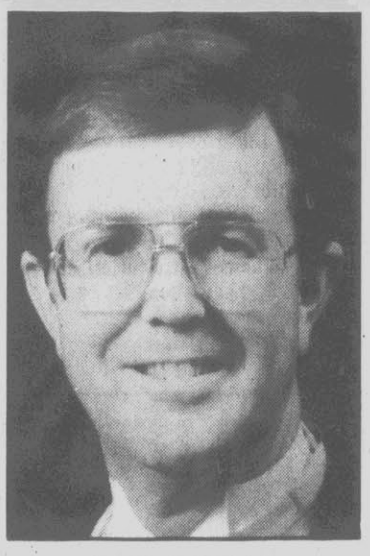

Third, fourth and fifth grade students in Pitt County School will attend concerts at Minges Colisuem on Friday. Two concerts by the East Carolina University Symphony Orchestra will be presented, the first at 10 a.m. and the second at 12:30 p.m.

Robert Hause, conductor of the symphony, began the concerts when he first came to Greenville in 1968 as a faculty member of the School of Music, ECU, and has continued them annually.

The program selected for this year will include a movement of a guitar concerto by Rodrigo, performed by Elliot Frank of the ECU music faculty; "Finlandia," by Sibelius; "Slavonic Dance No. 1" by Dvorak; "Night In Mexico," by Paul Creston, as well as selections from "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" arranged by Eric Knight, plus a singalong from "North Carolina Is My Home" by Charles Kuralt and Loonis McGlohon, and Meredith Willson's "The Music Man."

The concert is spearheaded by Hause and Emmy Whitehead, coordinator of cultural arts for the Pitt County schools.

Commenting on the annual concerts for children, Hause said "at that time, (20 years ago), there were no orchestral concerts for the children of the public schools. We began with one concert for Greenville school chilren and for the last several years have performed two concerts in order to include children from throughout the county." Hause noted too that the North Carolina Symphony also performs for children in the lower grade levels in area schools.

To Donate $500,000

CHARLOTTE — NCNB Corporation has agreed to donate $500,000 to Discovery Place, the hands-on science museum in Carlotte. The donation is for the museum's 18 million expansion campaign that includes construction of a new 7,500 square-foot exhibit space to be named NCNB Hall.

The museum's expansion is being funded through public and private sources. In November, a $9 million bond issue was approved by area voters.

Stanforth To Lecture At GMA

Mel Stanforth, a professor of painting and drawing at the School of Art, East Carolina University, is the guest lecturer scheduled to speak at 10:30 a.m. Thursday at the Greenville Museum of Art, 802 South Evans Street.

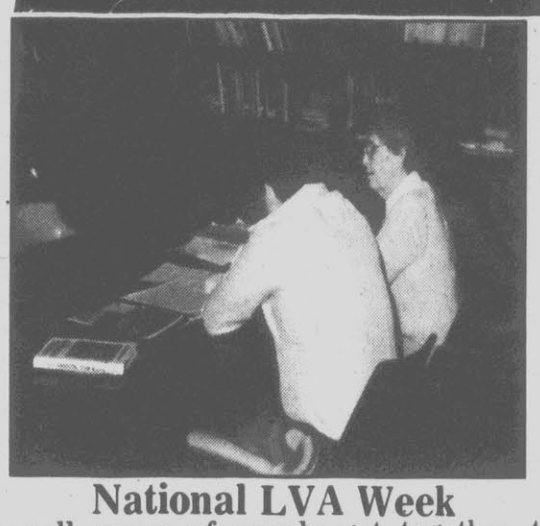

The lecture, of about one hour's duration, is free and open to the public, and is made possible with the help of a grant from the North Carolina Arts Council.

For his lecture in this continuing series of guest lectures at the museum, Stanforth will present a slide lecture on the art of the late Minnie Evans of Wilmington, a visionary black artist who died at an advanced age last year.

Mrs. Evans, an untrained artist, for years sold her richly colored, dream-inspired, religious motivated visionary drawings at a public garden where she was a gatekeeper. Later, after her art was brought to the attention of a wider public, Mrs. Evans became something of a Southern black cult figure in art. Her work was first shown extensively at St. John's Museum in Wilmington and a couple of years ago she was honored in a retrospective show at the North Carolina Museum of Art, Raleigh.

'The Boys In The Band' Opening Wednesday

The East Carolina Playhouse's third production of its 1988-89 season will be Mart Crowley's "The Boys in the Band" to be presented Wednesday through Saturday at 8:15 p.m. in McGinnis Theatre on the ECU campus.

It was called "the Best American play in some seasons," by the New York Times when it opened in the spring of 1968. The Saturday Review stated, "It was not a play for everybody, just for sophisticated playgoers." And Time magazine described it as being "a funny, sad and honest play about a set of mixed-up human beings who just happen to be homosexuals."

Sprinkled with stiletto-like wisecracks and an extreme frankness of language, "The Boys in the Band" brings together at a birthday party, in a New York apartment, a group of young men, who run through the alphabet of their persuasion, ranging from those whose manners and appearance seem thoroughly "normal" to those undisguidedly effeminate.

As the party progresses, the quips, becoming ever more cutting, curdle into misery and venom as events open up wounds of guilt, self-pity and resentment of the "normal" world's contempt. The inner anxieties of each guest start to come to light.

The cast will include David Blanchard as Michael, the host of the party; Chris Chappel as Alan, Michael's old college chum who drops by the party; Stuart Maxwell as Donald, an anxiety-ridden young man clinging to analysis, convinced that his parents deliberately raised him to be a failure; Vandy Behr as Emory, the circle's most blatant member; Scot Slusarick as Hank, a college professor who has left a wife and children for a jealously-wracked existence with Christian Keiber in the role of Larry, a promising butterfly; John Finnegan as Harold, the sardonic nihilist whose birthday is being celebrated; Eugene Bass, as the gentle black, member of a second minority, and Manley Pope, the cowboy, a dumb "midnight cowboy."

Critics have emphasized that "The Boys in the Band's" straightforward and very moving revelation of a milieu not previously on the stage, contains no elements overtly offensive — except a certain rawness of language. But theatregoers who might dislike the very idea of a play about a homosexual circle should be advised to skip this one.

Performances of "The Boys in the Band" will take place in the McGinnis Theatre in the Messick Theatre Arts Center on the East Carolina University campus.

Individual tickets are priced at $5 and $4 for groups of 10 or more. Tickets may be charged on VISA or MASTERCARD by telephoning the box office at 757-6829, or may be purchased at the McGinnis Theatre box office 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. Monday through Friday, and 10 a.m. until 8:30 p.m. on performance days.

Cultural Values Changing In Mongolia

By Jim Abrams
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ULAN BATOR, Mongolia — At the Young People's Cultural Center on a Sunday night, Mongolian girls with glitter on their cheeks and boys wearing narrow ties swivel to the disco beat of American singers Stevie Wonder and Whitney Houston.

Upstairs, a 12-piece band belts out Mongolian hits from the 1930s as a more middle-aged crowd, some dressed in the traditional robe-like "del" and high black riding boots, swirl around the room.

Despite the isolation — in the winter the capital of Ulan Bator is accessible only by plane from Moscow or a 30-hour train ride from Beijing — signs of Western influence are seeping into this stolidly socialist nation of 2 million.

Foreign visitors must pay hotel and transportation bills with U.S. dollars and are frequently stopped on the street by money-changers offering twice the official dollar rate for the Mongolian currency, the tugrik.

English, still rare in a country where studying Russian is mandatory, is now taught on prime-time national television with a series arranged through the British Embassy.

The foreign influence, however, is predominantly Russian. Thousands of Soviets — engineers, technical advisers, traders and soldiers — live and work in Ulan Bator. The visage of Lenin peers from statues and billboards around the city, and a war memorial jutting into the skyline from the top of a hill is dedicated to Soviet, not Mongolian soldiers.

Central Ulan Bator — which means "Red Hero" — is a collection of Soviet-financed columned government buildings and utilitarian apartment complexes, most painted in pleasant pastel shades of pink and yellow. Mongolia must import most of its consumer goods, and 80 percent of its trade is with the Soviet Union.

Mongolia adopted the Russian Cyrillic script in 1946, and all schoolchildren must study Russian from the fourth grade on. Study of the Mongolian script, suppressed for decades, was revived about four years ago, but classes only begin in the seventh grade.

Signs in the native script are rare, in contrast to Chinese Inner Mongolia, where shops and offices frequently carry signs in Mongolian for the Mongolian minority of 3 million.

About 6,000 Mongolian university and research students, the nation's best and brightest, study in the Soviet Union.

The dependence on Soviet political and cultural reinforcement goes back to 1921, when Soviet forces helped Mongolia drive out the Chinese who had occupied the country for more than 200 years and set up the world's second Communist state.

Soviet-style socialism was in part Mongolia's salvation, creating a well-cared-for and well-educated nation. The cost to Mongolian heritage, however, was high.

At the turn of the century the Mongolian population was only 500,000 and in danger of being wiped out. Literacy was about 1 percent. Forty percent of the male population lived in the nation's 750 Buddhist lamaseries, one reason for the declining population.

A Stalinist purge of the 1930s resulted in the closure of all monasteries and the murder of many monks. Today the Gandan Monastery in Ulan Bator, with 160 monks, is the only functioning Buddhist temple in the country.

In the 1940s, the Mongolian script was suppressed and in the 1950s there was a campaign to ban wearing of the native costume.

Mongolian culture persists in both the "del," the usual form of dress in the countryside, and the "ger," or "yurt," the round, canvas-colored tent which is still home to about half Ulan Bator's 500,000 people.

But Shagdarsuren, who grew up in a herdsman's family, said Mongolia should keep its nomadic ways. "In settled husbandry people live for the animals. In nomadic husbandry, the animals are always working for man."

Mongolia is also working to ensure that its human population, which occupies only a tiny part of this Western Europe-sized nation of steppes, deserts, forestland and mountains, will continue to grow.

A mother giving birth to her fourth child receives a 15-day vacation at a state rest house and is eligible for retirement at 50. Further births means greater salary and pension benefits, and a woman with eight children is awarded a "first class medal of famous mothers."

'Don Carlo' Opera To Air Saturday

Atlantic Dance Theater To Give A Concert At D.H. Conley

NEW BERN — Dancers of the Atlantic Dance Theater of New Bern will appear in concert at 8 p.m. Saturday in the auditorium at D.H. Conley High School.

Tickets for the concert are $5 for adults and $3 for students when purchased in advance, and $6 and $4 when purchased at the door prior to the hour of concert.

Advance tickets can be ordered by call the Pitt-Greenville Arts Council, 757-1785, 830-9284 in Greenville, or 636-1760 in New Bern.

Josephine Baker, 1920s sensation of Paris

"Shadowdance" is the work of Salvatore Aiello, choreographer and artistic director of the North Carolina Dance Theater in Winston-Salem. The dance, first to be done by Aiello for a company other than his own in North Carolina, is described by Aiello as "a shodow dance, a 20-minute piece that has music by three composers." The music is drawn from a group, Show Fax, from music by Jon Appleton, and the "Dust in the Wind" song by the group Kansas.

Aielo termed "Shadowdance" as an abstract piece, a work that has a Persian influence, an Oriental influence about a society of women who are infiltrated by a lone male figure, who seduces one of the women. This demonstrates how a society lost one essential part of that society."

A second dance, "Pyropower," is the work of choreographer Fred Benjamin, artistic director of the Fred Benjamin Dance Company of New York. This is a jazz ballet which Benjamin says "focuses on pryo-technique, which appears visually tricky to the audience."

In addition to creating ballets for his own company, Benjamin has choreographed for the Alvin Ailey Repertory Ensemble, Jazz Extensions of Holland, Wantanabe Ballet of Tokyo and the Joyce Ballet of Brazil.

Both the Aielo and Benjamin dances were made possible through a new works grant from the North Carolina Arts Council and the National Endowment for the Arts.

The third dance on the Conley program is "Couples," choreographed by David Anderson. He describes it as a "contemporary work, employing a fusion of ballroom, jazz and ballet styles of dance." It involves ten dancers and is choreographed to several older popular songs such as "Summertime," "Lullaby of Birdland," "Jalousie," and "Moonlight Serenade."

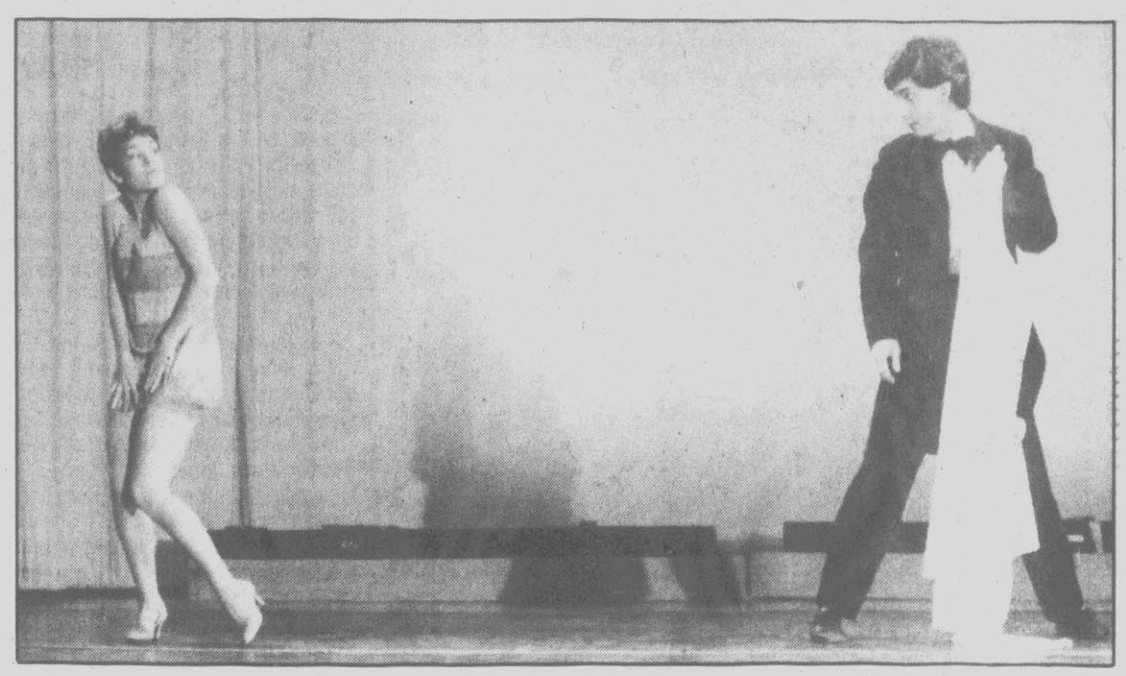

Dancers to appear in the program are Alan Arnett, Jane Atkinson, Lynda Capocesalo, Ann Craven, identical twins Dorsey and Robert McAden, Elizabeh Pope, Susan Vales, Terri Winchell, Jody Wise and Craig Woodham.

Three dancers who are members of the theater's junior company — Allyson Anders, Mary Neil Ipock and Beth Landen — will also perform.

Elizabeth Pope, artistic director of Atlantic Dance Theater, said "for this performance, we are also involving dance students at Conley in all concepts of this production. This is in keeping with our policy of involvement with dance students in eastern North Carolina whenever we appear in concert, and at other times when we give workshop and demonstration programs to school and other community groups."

Atlantic Dance Theater, now in its fourth year, is a non-profit dance company that in addition to dance concerts travels to give residency programs in schools.

Black History Programs

CHAPEL HILL — During February, in honor of Black History Month in North Carolina, the Center for Public Television, UNC-Chapel Hill, is presenting a number of specials highlighting noted black American talent, past and present.

In addition to two specials which aired earlier in the week, ten other specials have been scheduled to be broadcast over the North Carolina PBS stations during the month.

These are:

- Feb. 6, 11 p.m. — "And Still I Rise: Maya Angelou." This program features a conversation between writer/historian Dr. Nell Painter and Ms. Angelou, a multifacted author, poet, dancer, producer, social activities and professor. An original N.C. Public Television production that was first aired in 1985.
- Feb. 7, 9 p.m. — "Frontline: Running With Jesse." Frontline explores Jesse Jackson's political strategy, its pitfalls as well as its successes, in a look at his primary and presidential campaigns.
- Feb. 13, 11 p.m. — "A Singing Stream: A Black Family Chronicle." This hour-long production is the first to trace 20th century black history through the musical and cultural traditions of one Southern black family. Through interviews and scenes of family and church life, the program chronicles the history of the Landis family as Creedmoor.
- Feb. 18, 10 p.m. — "Austin City Limits: Stanley Jordan." Black guitarist Jordan has changed the face of music today by redefining his chosen instrument, the guitar, through the use of his two-handed tapping technique. This he achieves without relying on electronic devices.
- Feb. 20, 9 p.m. — "Chasing A Rainbow: The Life Of Josephine Baker." This heartwarming story traces the life of a semiliterate slum girl from Saint Louis who through talent and determination became "La Bakaire," the sensation of Paris. Flamboyant, exotic and talented, she gained fame in France in the 1920s where she became the queen of the Folies Bergere. There was another side to her too, the care of orphans in her Rainbow Tribe. Miss Baker was honored by her adopted country with the Legion of Honor and the coveted Medal of the Resistance.
- Feb. 20, 11 p.m. — "Gordon Parks: Moments Without Proper Names." Gordon Parks, a photographer for Life magazine from 1948 to 1968, had a life and career as photographer, writer, director and composer. He became the first black to direct a major motion picture, "The Learning Tree." This program is not a traditional documentary, but is instead an expression of his vision and the events that shaped his life.
- Feb. 24, 10 p.m. — "Step It Up And Go: Blues In The Carolinas." This hour of living history resounds in musical profiles of sisters Etta Baker and Cora Phillips, James "Jr" Thomas, Anthony Pough, Thomas Burt, James Stephens, Moses Rascoe and other Tar Heel musicians. With voices, guitars, banjos, fiddles, piano, homemade wind and percussion instruments, they keep alive an outstanding realization of Carolina blues music.
- Feb. 27, 9 p.m. — "Great Performances: Wynton Marsalis." Marsalis, the first artist ever awarded Grammys in both classical and jazz categories of music, is shown in concert with his versatile jazz quartet. The program also shows the artist as he coaches young musicians in master classes of college and younger students.
- Feb. 27, 10 p.m. — "Cissy Houston: Sweet Inspiration." This program follows the singing career of the mother of singer Whitney Houston, from childhood singing with a quartet gospel family group to her career as a sizzling singer with her nieces Dionne and Dee Dee Warwick in New York.
- Feb. 27, 11 p.m. — "Wild Women Don't Have The Blues." The final of the specials during February commemorating Black History Month, "Wild Women" is the inspiring story of a great generation of black women who performed the blues. This look back in time recalls women like Ida Cox, Alberta Hunter, May Rainey, Bessie Smith, Mamie Smith and Sippie Wallace. These were the talents who brought the music, songs and humor of black Americans into the cultural mainstream and established the blues for the first time as a popular performing art.

N.C. Symphony's Beethoven Program At Wright Feb. 13

Music lovers who are especially fond of the music of Beethoven will have an opportunity for a Valentine-eve program full of Beethoven's orchestra pieces in a concert by the North Carolina Sympohny at 8 p.m. Feb. 13 in Wright Auditorium on the East Carolina Unversity campus.

Tickets are priced at $10 for adults, $8 for students and senior citizens. Tickets can be purchased at Mendenhall Ticket Center, 757-6611, extension 266 or at the door prior to performance if tickets are still available at that time.

The all-Beethoven concert will be directed by Gerhardt Zimmermann, music director and conductor of the N.C. Symphony.

N.C. Symphony concertmaster Brian Reagin

Two symphonies are scheduled to be performed — the Symphony No. 6 in F major, Opus 88, and Symphony No. 5 in C Minor, Opus 67. The program will also include the Overture and "Turkish March" from "The Ruins of Athens."

Reagin was assistant concertmaster of the Pittsburgh Symhony Orchestra until he decided to come south to Raleigh at the beginning of the 1988-89 season. He is the second Pittsburgh Symphony violinist to sit in the North Carolina Symphony's first violin chair — succeeding Fritz Siegal.

Reagin was selected to assume the N.C. Symphony permanent concertmaster position after an extensive search and audition process.

He finds the extensive bus rides the orchestra takes in its traveling schedule useful for time to take care of some of his major duties as concertmaster. Recently he marked the bowings for a 72-page Rossini score on a bus ride from High Point to Chapel Hill.

When free time permits, Reagin rents a small plane from a local airport near home in Wendell and flies across the local Carolina landscape. Occasionally he goes hang gliding. He enjoys building furniture and has rebuilt a Volkswagon and constructed a geodesic dome on his grandfather's Kentucky farm. He earned his music degrees from the Cleveland Institute of Music.

The Feb. 13 concert is sponsored by the Pitt County Chapter of the North Carlina Symphony Society, Inc. of which Peggy Shuping is the chapter president.

The first chapter-sponsored concert by the society was on Oct. 19, and on Friday, the symphony presented a free education concert for Pitt County school children at Rose High School.

Q. Of the following 10 U.S. Presidents—Franklin Roosevelt, Harry Truman, Dwight Eisenhower, John Kennedy, Lyndon Johnson, Richard Nixon, Gerald Ford, Jimmy Carter, Ronald Reagan and George Bush—which two, in your considered opinion, were most faithful to their wives? I don't know if this comes under "trivia."—M.D., Bel Air, Calif.

Kozlowski and Hogan: Rumors rising from Down Under

Q. Is Linda Kozlowski, who fell for Australian actor Paul Hogan when they made the "Crocodile Dundee" pictures, still going with him? Or have they tiffed?—Pam Ward, Pawtucket, R.I.

A. Reports emanating from Byron Bay in New South Wales, Australia, have Paul Hogan, 50, and his lover, Linda Kozlowski, 29, expecting a baby. Should the reports be true, it will mark the sixth time Hogan has achieved fatherhood.

Q. Since actress Tatum O'Neal married that humorless tennis player, John McEnroe, I have not seen her in a new movie. Has she traded her career for marriage?—Nikki Kay, McAllen, Tex.

A. Tatum and John McEnroe have two sons, Kevin, 2, and Sean, 1. Tatum has been doing some TV acting in between caring for her boys, so it doesn't look as if she has traded her career for motherhood. On March 28, she's slated to appear in "Getting Straight," a CBS School Break Special.

Q. Do you know anything about a man named Pepsico, who's said to be researching Nancy Reagan in depth?—Frances G., Cornwall, N.Y.

Jack Kightlinger

Joseph Persico, not to be confused with cola company

A. Perhaps you have in mind Joseph E. Persico, not Pepsico, author of two outstanding biographies—one on the late Nelson Rockefeller, for whom he was a speechwriter, and the other on the late Edward R. Murrow, famed broadcast journalist. Persico is not researching Mrs. Reagan. He's preparing a book on the late William Casey, CIA director in the Reagan Administration, to be published by Viking.

Q. When Arnold Schwarzenegger and Danny DeVito signed to co-star in the movie "Twins," is it true that, instead of their usual salaries, they agreed to share 50% of the gross box-office receipts? —Jo Alvarez, Yuma, Ariz.

A. Not exactly. Schwarzenegger and DeVito, along with director-producer Ivan Reitman, signed a deal with Universal in which they agreed, in lieu of their usual up-front salaries, to share 35% of the "Twins" rentals in the following proportions: Schwarzenegger, 17.5%; DeVito and Reitman, 8.75% each. On the basis of early returns, the rentals should easily reach $80 million worldwide.

Q. There is a book out—"The Peter Lawford Story: Life With the Kennedys, Monroe and the Rat Pack"—which recounts the late actor's infidelities, his addictions, his alleged gift of drugs to his son and other shocking stories. Can the Patricia Lawford who wrote this scandalous monstrosity possibly be the sister of the late President John F. Kennedy?—Harriet F., Des Moines, Iowa

A. No way. Patricia Kennedy, sister of the late President, married Peter Lawford in 1954—despite her father's strenuous objections—and divorced him in 1966. The author of the book is Lawford's widow, the former Patricia Seaton, who wed the actor five months before his death in 1984.

Q. At a recent dinner, I heard former Sen. John Tower of Texas described as "the Gabriele D'Annunzio of the Bush Administration." Can you explain that remark?—G.C., Eagle Pass, Tex.

A. Gabriele D'Annunzio (1863-1938) was a short Italian poet-playwright well-known for his love affairs, particularly one with the great Italian actress Eleonora Duse. John Tower, President Bush's choice for Defense Secretary, is a diminutive dandy also publicized for his alleged womanizing. In her 1987 divorce petition, Tower's second wife, Lilla, accused him of "marital misconduct" and requested depositions from three women—a Dallas socialite, a Texas TV personality and a Filipino maid in Geneva, Switzerland. Lilla's lawyers also demanded the names of other women he may have dated during the 10-year marriage. Tower admits being "something of a swinger" in his salad days but says those days have come and gone.

She has had more ups and downs than most, but Bette Midler bounces back

'I CAN'T PLAY THE VICTIM'

Greg Gorman

BY TOM SELIGSON

"I ALWAYS BELIEVED THAT I was as good as the next person," said Bette Midler. "Although I'm also quite vulnerable, and there are times when I've lost faith in myself and have pretended things were okay when they weren't. I didn't want people to know that there was a hapless person in here."

Bette Midler has always projected an image of cocky self-assurance—whether as the larger-than-life "Divine Miss M" she created for her early concert tours or as the brash, wisecracking heroines of her recent movies. Yet, personally, she has had good reasons to feel vulnerable. She has gone years when no one would hire her as an actress. And she has suffered a number of failed relationships and family tragedies that have tested her. What sustained her during those periods? And how has she changed, if at all, now that her career is flourishing again and she has a family of her own?

To learn more about the private Bette Midler, I visited her in her Mediterranean-style house high above Beverly Hills. While most of Bette's film characters live in gaudy and pretentious homes, hers is simple, though elegantly decorated. The wood-beamed living room where we sat is tastefully furnished with a baby grand piano, a colorful couch and chairs, a mosaic-tiled fireplace and her collection of artwork and antiques, including baby shoes and a portrait of the silent movie star Mary Pickford.

Bette seemed much smaller in person than she appears on the screen, standing barely 5 feet 1. She wore no makeup and was casually dressed in a black sweatshirt, black tights and no shoes. Her hair, which she confided is naturally brown, was bright red. "This is my favorite," she said, laughing.

Curling up on the couch, Bette explained that if she seemed a bit tired it was because she had been working so hard putting the final touches on her new movie, Beaches. Unlike her recent comedies, it's a drama, following the friendship of two women (Barbara Hershey co-stars) over 30 years. One of the women is a performer, and in many respects the film is about Midler's own life.

"I never had a friendship that lasted that long," she said. "But I had a very dear friend when I was young. I was in the 10th grade when we met, and she's the one who brought out whatever sense of humor I have. She was only 19 when she died. Since then I've had a good friend here and there, but nothing like that. You know, there's a kind of emotional exploration you plumb with a friend that you don't really do with your family. You don't spill your guts, because you don't want to worry them. Of course, in crisis times, nothing beats your family."

Midler's parents originally came from New Jersey. Her father, a civilian house painter for the Navy, moved the family to Hawaii, which is where Bette was born, the third of four children. Her mother, who liked show business, named her after Bette Davis. One of her older sisters is a health-care executive in New York who until recently cared for her younger, retarded brother. The family was extremely poor and lived in military barracks in the middle of the cane fields before moving to a simple apartment.

"To this day, I don't know how my mother was able to raise us," Bette said softly. "She found her circumstances humiliating and didn't want anyone to see her living like that. But at the same time, she tried desperately to get out. She wanted us to have a home, and when my father brought home his paycheck, she immediately put it in the bank. Eventually, they got enough money to put a down-payment on a group of homes and became landlords. But they never moved out of that apartment. My parents were two of the most conservative people you've ever seen in your life. They never went to a movie. And we didn't get a TV set until 1957 or a phone until 1962."

Bette recalled a lot of tension and fighting in the family and described her father as a dominating man who always put her down: "He was one of those pooh-poohers—'You'll never amount to a hill of beans.' Maybe it was reverse psychology, hoping against hope that I would amount to something, but it was pretty painful for a long time. However, I used to fight back a lot. He couldn't keep me down. I had too much inner belief. That came from my mother, who always said, 'Kid, you're going to be fine.'"

That emerging self-confidence came in handy at school in Hawaii where, being one of the few white children and the only Jew, she was totally isolated. "I was resented and teased by the other kids," she said. "It was bad being treated like that. But you toughen up fast. I guess that's where I got my 'showoffedness,' because I had to entertain. I would sing and dance and tell jokes."

In the first grade, she won an award for singing "Silent Night." "I got big applause, and a light bulb went off in my head," Bette recalled. "Then I won a prize in the sixth grade, and that was a big thing too. I said, 'Maybe I have something here.'"

The theater quickly became her love, and she acted in all the high school plays, always as the star. "My mother really ate it up," she said, smiling at the memory. "I remember her coming to the senior-class play and handing me roses over the footlights, her face just shining. She just thought this was great."

Buoyed by her mother's encouragement, Bette spent a year studying theater at the University of Hawaii before heading for New York. "I wanted to get on with it," she explained. "I wanted to go to New York and make my mark."

Bette Midler didn't exactly take New York by storm. She acted in children's theater and some minor revues, while supporting herself as a hatcheck girl, a salesgirl at the glove counter in Stern's department store and as a go-go dancer. "This was before topless," she said, grinning. "I was all covered up and wore those little white boots. I actually enjoyed it, because I like to dance."

Bette eventually won a part in the chorus of Fiddler on the Roof, and while a casting agent tried to discourage her from auditioning, she later won the role of the eldest daughter, which she played for three years. Her professional life was beginning to take off—however, her personal life was still exceptionally painful. Her oldest sister—who had never really survived their early circumstances, becoming anorexic in high school—was killed by a car in the theater district while on her way to see Bette's show. Bette had to go to the morgue to identify the body. Twenty years later, the loss is still difficult to talk about.

What she is candid about is the single-mindedness that marked those days. "At that point, I decided I would never get married," she said. "I put that completely out of my mind. All I was interested in was my career: to make my name and fortune and to become a star."

She shook her head. "You know, it's not until you get older that you realize how incredibly juvenile that quest for fame is. You say to yourself, 'What was I thinking about?' Fame is not what's important. What's important about work is skill and experience, the ability to create and make something beautiful."

Bette's initial creation was her nightclub act. She'd been singing in clubs around New York, perfecting a heart felt torch style similar to Ruth Etting, Libby Holman and Aretha Franklin, who were her models. One night, while performing at the Continental Baths, a gay men's club, she added her unique brand of sassy humor.

Barry Manilow, who was Bette's pianist and arranger at the time, remembers that night vividly. "We had been rehearsing together all week," he recalls, "and when she walked out there looking like Carmen Miranda with apples on her head, this was not the Bette I knew. She'd become the Divine Miss M. I had never felt such electricity. I found myself laughing hysterically at her jokes, weeping during her ballads, and at the end I was on my feet with everybody else, cheering for her. I had never seen anything like it. Nobody has to this day."

Manilow worked with Midler for three years and is still friendly with her. "Even then, the private Bette was very different than she was onstage," he says. "She's amusing, but she's actually very serious and bright—and quiet. I always say she has the soul of a librarian. I learned a lot from Bette. She was one of the most insecure people I'd ever met, but at the time she took the most risks."

If Bette had doubts about herself, others did not. Aaron Russo, a dynamic man who became her manager—and for a while was her lover—began booking her into theaters. With the help of appearances on The Tonight Show and her sold-out performances across the country, Bette Midler soon became a bona fide star. She won a Grammy Award as Best New Artist of 1973, wrote a best-seller, The Saga of Baby Divine, and won an Oscar nomination for her performance in The Rose, her first major film role.

I asked her about the impact of this success.

"I didn't die from it, I'm proud to say," she replied evenly. "I did survive it. And I survived it by being basically kind of cynical. I never let it go to my head. I always thought it was ephemeral, that it would disappear and didn't really mean that much anyway."

What did mean a lot to her was something she never received. "My father never went to see my performances," she confided quietly. "I think he saw The Rose on television, and he saw me on the Johnny Carson show, but he just wasn't interested. He didn't like popular culture. He thought it was garbage. If I had been an opera singer—that he would have understood, or a professional person..." Her voice trailed off.

"What about your mother?" I asked. "Did she enjoy your success?"

"Yes, and I'm really happy about that," she said, standing and walking across the room. She took a box of tissues from the table and carried them back to the couch. "If she had passed away...and I wouldn't have brought her anything...I would have been devastated. She made huge sacrifices—huge, huge."

continued

"As you get older, you realize how juvenile the quest for fame is. What's important is skill, experience, creating something beautiful."

Bette took a tissue and dabbed at her eyes. "I think I made her happy," she said, her voice barely audible. "I think we all did...I'm sorry. I get very emotional about these family issues...I don't know why." She blew her nose. "I think it's very primal—how they treat you. Some people go to therapy and work it out, but I never got around to it...At the end...when my mother died...it was very bad."

Bette began to cry quietly. Neither of us spoke, while she breathed deeply, trying to control herself. She looked small and very vulnerable, her feet folded beneath her shirt.

"Do you want that picture of Mary Pickford?" she said at last, to change the subject. "I'm really tired of it."

I shook my head and said, "Why don't you put up a picture of you?"

"Get real!" she replied, suddenly the outspoken Bette Midler from her movies. "That's hardly my taste. I try not to be pompous. That's something my dad did give me. He had no patience for that."

Having regained her composure, Bette recalled how her early success was not to last. "After The Rose [in 1979], no one offered me any work, which came as a big surprise and disappointment for me," she said. "And then I left Aaron. So suddenly I was on my own. It's pretty hard to be on your own for the first time. I had counted on him for a lot. And when he wasn't there, I made a couple of bad mistakes."

Her biggest was choosing to make a movie called Jinxed. "I did it because my agent told me that I would never work again if I didn't," she explained. "My whole life I had never believed anybody who said something like that. But at that point I didn't trust myself."

When the film lived up to its title, bombing critically and at the box office, Midler was blamed by both her co-star and director, who attacked her viciously in the press. Bette's mother died about the same time, and it all became too much to bear. She suffered a nervous breakdown, staying in her house and crying. The depression lasted for months.

"The experience with Jinxed really shook her up," recalls Barry Manilow. "She was put through the ringer, and when I saw her after that, she seemed like she was in shell shock. She certainly wasn't as energetic and rebellious as I remembered her. She was a beaten-up girl."

"You get bored being in that state," she said calmly. "You say to yourself, 'I've done this now for three months. I've cried this many tears. I guess that's enough.' It's like a purification. I cleaned out my closets, cleaned out my life, until I finally felt strong enough to return."

Helping Bette regain her strength was a new man in her life: Martin von Haselberg, a former commodities trader who, under the name of Harry Kipper, is now a producer/performance artist. They had met briefly in 1982. When they got together again in 1984, it was love at second sight. Two months later, they were wed.

"He was exactly what I was looking for," said Bette. "I had nobody to tell my troubles to. And I wanted to settle down. I wanted to have a family. I was really ready for that. Not that I haven't had to work at it," she explained, sitting up straight. "Marriage involves big compromises all the time. International-level compromises. You're the U.S.A., he's the USSR, and you're talking nuclear warheads." She laughed. "To me, it's really like that. When you're used to being on your own, being single-minded and self-absorbed, it's a big thing to listen and pay attention to someone else."

Bette flashed a familiar grin, looking both cocky and tentative at the same time. "But I'm learning."

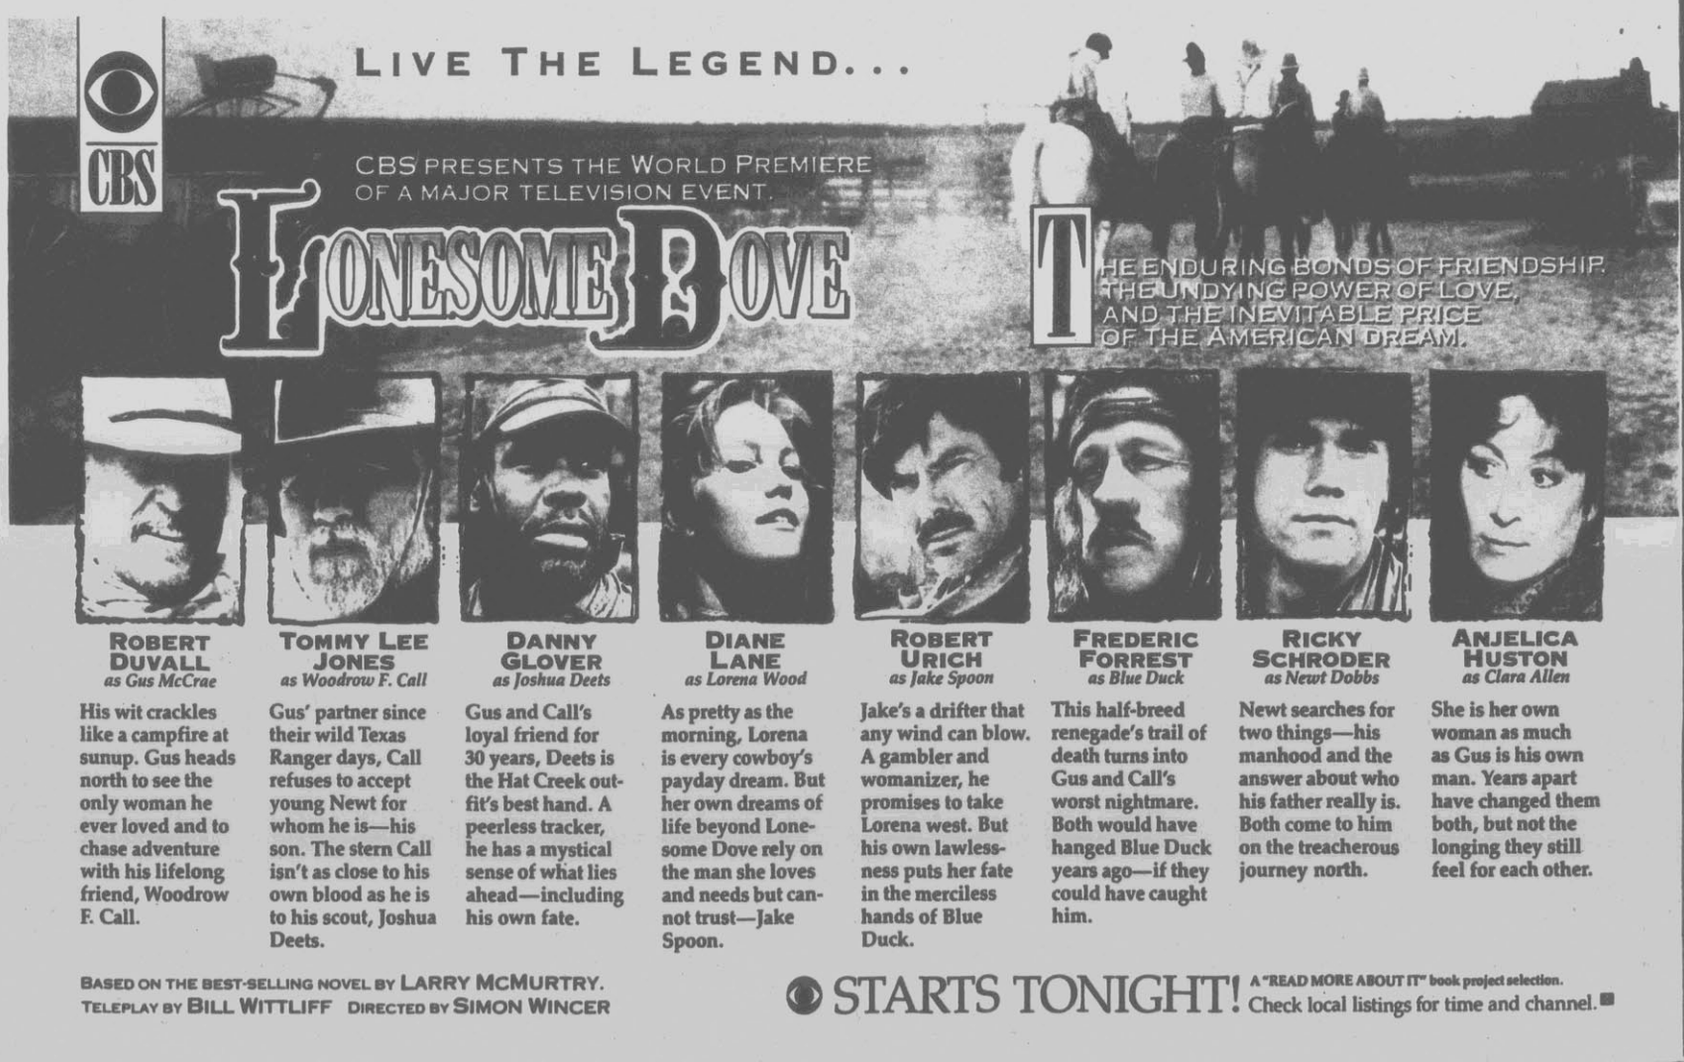

Her husband also helped Bette revive her career. "Harry's the one who pointed her back toward comedy," says Bonnie Bruckheimer-Martell, a partner in Bette's production company. "He said, 'You're so funny. Why don't you go be funny in the movies?'"

Which is exactly what she has done—in Down and Out in Beverly Hills, Ruthless People, Outrageous Fortune and Big Business—so successfully that Disney studios has Bette under contract. They are now bankrolling her movies, such as Beaches, which displays the full range of her talents.

Ironically, this newfound success comes at a time when Midler needs it least. "She realizes that having work is wonderful, and she's thrilled that she's doing so well," says Bonnie Bruckheimer-Martell. "But she now realizes that it's not the most important thing in the world. Her priorities have changed."

The main reason is that she has become a mother. Her daughter, Sophie, is now 2 years old. "The baby has changed my life in a really wonderful way," Bette said. "I never thought I would meet anyone I was so fascinated with. This joy that radiates from her—this innocence and sweetness. She's like a walking entertainment center. I can't look at her, touch her or be near her enough. I count myself so lucky to have her."

Bette and her husband are eager to have another child. Though she suffered a miscarriage last April, she is not about to let this or any other misfortune keep her down. Bette finally even came to terms with her father, nursing him before he died in 1986. "I got very close to him," she said. "I just can't play the victim. You know, a lot of people tell me I was their role model when they were in college, and that makes me feel fabulous. Maybe it's because of my straight talk and that, despite what has happened, I lived through it. Sure, things have been rough, and I wouldn't want to live through them again. Although, I'll tell you—you're up, you're down, you're up, you're down, and then it's over with. Ultimately, I have no regrets, because it has all turned out for the best. I like exactly where I am." ■

New Planes for the New President

Sobolik/Black Star

The Bushes board Air Force Two during '88 race: He'll be first President with jumbo jet

Come November, the Boeing Co. is scheduled to deliver to the Air Force the first of two special 747 jumbo jets for the transportation of George Bush and successive U.S. Presidents. The second will be delivered in 1990. The two aircraft will cost $250 million, according to terms of the original contract, but the total—including a new hangar and other support facilities—may exceed $390 million, depending upon which sophisticated communications equipment and creature comforts Boeing installs in the jets at its Wichita plant.

The new jumbo jets will replace the two Presidential 707s currently in use, which Boeing delivered to the Air Force—the first in October 1962, when John F. Kennedy was in office, and the second 10 years later, when Richard Nixon was President.

Each of the new 747s will boast three times as much interior space as the 707s and will feature a Presidential suite consisting of an office, a bedroom, a bathroom with shower, and a miniature operating room for emergency procedures. Each jumbo jet will have the capacity to fly 70 passengers and 23 crew members—also the capability of being refueled in flight so that, if necessary, it can remain airborne for a week.

Incidentally, a good deal of confusion surrounds the names Air Force One and Air Force Two. Neither name designates specific aircraft. They basically are code words used to inform air-traffic controllers that the particular aircraft identified by the pilot as Air Force One is carrying the President and that the aircraft identified as Air Force Two is carrying the Vice President. The President may be flying in a DC-3 or a Beechcraft Bonanza. His presence on board designates that particular plane as Air Force One. The same holds true for the Vice President and Air Force Two.

When the new 747 jumbo jet is flown in November without President Bush on board, its pilot will identify the plane by its numbered designation: VC-25 A—the first cargo plane of that type. Once the President is a passenger, VC-25 A becomes Air Force One.

From the Soviet Union—Beauty and Brains

London Express

Janyl, Shakhlo and Saltanat (l-r) pose in London: Beautiful benefits of glasnost

Under President Mikhail Gorbachev, life is beginning to change in even the remotest regions of the far-flung Soviet Union. Take Kirghiz—a Soviet republic in central Asia, once part of Russian Turkistan, where the people are Mongolian and speak variations of the Turkic languages. A few months ago, its women were informed that they would be allowed for the first time to participate in a Miss Asia beauty contest for children's charities, the local winners to be flown to London for the finalists' competition.

Herewith three of the Kirghizian beauties who made it to London, where they lost but caught the glittering lights and sights: Janyl Tolbashieza, 21, an artist who told newsmen her contemporaries in Kirghiz were almost all in favor of Gorbachev's glasnost (openness) policy, as it would give them "a chance to see the world"; Shakhlo Dougmoukchamedova, 22, a folk dancer who explained, "I never thought I would be allowed to visit the West"; and Saltanat Kamalieva, 20, a schoolteacher who pointed out, "More and more beauty contests are now permitted in the Soviet Union, and more and more young women are encouraged to enter them. It's an opportunity we never had before."

Why the Japanese Speak English So Poorly

The Japanese are perhaps the most intelligent and industrious people in the world. More than 90% of the well-educated Japanese study English for eight years (three in junior high and three in high school, which is compulsory; and two in college, which is not). Yet relatively few learn English well enough to speak it. Why?

We put this question recently to Todd Mittleman, an American employed by the Japanese information and cultural-affairs office. Mittleman, who taught English in Japan, offered a simple explanation: "Most of the Japanese who teach English in Japan cannot speak it half-well themselves, so what they teach is how to read and write it. Few have to pass an exam in conversational English to enter a Japanese university. They do, however, have to pass exams in reading and writing—which is why the Japanese can read and write English far better than they can speak it. If skill in conversational English were required, I assure you they would excel in it. They are a nation of competitive, determined students."

He Believes in Giving

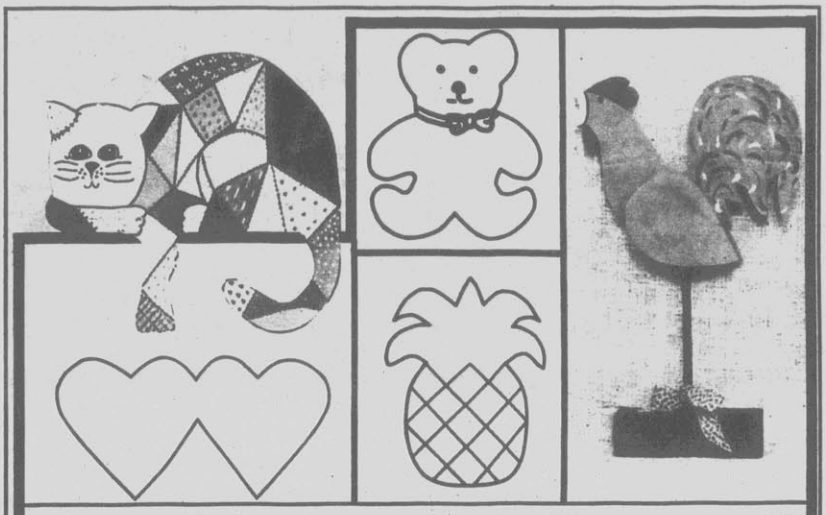

Comedian Bill Cosby, 51, is rapidly establishing himself as one of the most generous philanthropists in U.S. history. Last year, in less than 60 days, he gave $700,000 to Bethune-Cookman College in Daytona Beach, Fla.; $800,000 to Meharry Medical College in Nashville; and $20 million to Spelman College in Atlanta, which will name a new academic center for Cosby's wife, Camille.

More and more, cost-conscious Americans are choosing health maintenance organizations for their medical care. But beware: Not all are the same.

Andy Levin

Mr. and Mrs. Monas Seidman of Brooklyn, N.Y., belong to a special HMO for the elderly.

PREPAID HEALTH PLANS —which offer comprehensive medical care for a fixed fee—have been revolutionizing our health-care delivery system. Most common are health maintenance organizations, or HMOs: You pay a single premium and are covered for all your medical needs, including surgery, hospitalization and access to a complete range of specialists, maternity and emergency care, sometimes even physical therapy, dental and vision care.

More than 31 million Americans are enrolled in HMOs. But, after 15 years of spectacular growth, membership has leveled off. Dozens of the nation's approximately 650 HMOs are losing money. This translates into cutbacks in services or, worse, the sick and elderly being left without crucial medical care.

No one yet knows the prognosis for these health plans—which, ideally, combat high costs without compromising the quality of care. A key question: Do big business and good medicine mix? That is, can we realistically expect HMO executives to care more about the medical well-being of their members than about showing profits to their stockholders?

I spent months investigating HMOs throughout the country. I talked with scores of HMO members and physicians, government officials and executives of the health organizations. I was highly impressed by most of the HMOs I visited. I was appalled by some of the others, most particularly by testimonies and other evidence that fast-buck artists, political fixers and unethical physicians have moved into some HMOs in many sections of the country. From what I saw and heard, here's how to tell if you're getting the best care from your HMO:

The ABCs of HMOs. There are two major types. Group practice plans provide medical services at centers staffed by salaried physicians. Laboratories, X-ray facilities and pharmacies are on the premises, so members can obtain outpatient care at one central location. Individual practice plans (IPAs) offer medical care in the private offices of doctors under contract to them: The advantage is a wider choice of physicians. These doctors sometimes receive a monthly payment for every IPA member who has signed up with them.

In general, if you enroll in an HMO, you are "locked in" to its doctors. If you consult another physician without the HMO's approval, you must pay him out of your own pocket. The average monthly cost of membership in an HMO is $209 for a family, $77 for an individual.

Today, HMOs are part of the health-benefits package that many companies offer their employees. Such was the case with Sharon Jordan of North Canton, Ohio. She enrolled in the Health Maintenance Plan of Community Mutual Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Ohio in March 1986, when she started working for Buckeye Color Labs. That July, her 15-year-old daughter, Kristin, was in a serious auto crash in Canada. She suffered a shattered pelvis, a hairline skull fracture and a head injury that caused her brain to swell. For a month, Kristin lay in a coma. Twice she developed pneumonia and almost died. She was flown by air ambulance to the Cleveland Clinic for treatment. Then she had to be transferred to a rehabilitation hospital in Warren, Ohio, for physical therapy. The HMO's doctors monitored Kristin's care, and the plan paid 70 percent of her $100,000 medical bill.

"It was a miracle that my daughter pulled through so beautifully," Mrs. Jordan says about Kristin, who is back in school full time. "And it was another miracle that we were covered by Health Maintenance Plan. Otherwise, I don't know what we would have done."

Elderplan is one of the four pilot programs of the Health Care Finance Administration. Membership is limited to those 65 and older who are covered by Medicare Parts A and B. In addition to standard services, it also provides homemakers, nutrition counseling and nursing-home care.

When Seidman applied for membership, he candidly reported that Susan, 72, had advanced Alzheimer's disease and would need to spend the rest of her life in a nursing home. Elderplan accepted the couple anyway.

But not all HMOs are as reliable as these two. Among the questionable policies we uncovered:

• Many HMOs designate their primary-care physicians as "gatekeepers," with complete power over referrals to specialists, lab tests and other services. The HMOs then "ration" care by financially rewarding physicians who do not send patients to expensive specialists.

"The conflict of interest is obvious," notes Dr. Coleman R. Seskind, a Chicago internist. "The doctor often has to choose between his financial well-being and the patient's welfare. The physician has to persuade a patient against his own medical judgment—against his code of ethics—not to have lab work done because it hurts his own pocketbook."

One tragic example of the consequences of rationing medical care is the case of a young mother of two in the Midwest. She has filed a damage suit against her HMO and two of its physicians, charging that their laxness in ordering appropriate diagnostic tests resulted in a failure to detect her cervical cancer prior to its spread.

In August 1985, the woman went to her primary-care physician at the HMO because of vaginal bleeding. She maintains that the physician failed to order a Pap test or refer her to a gynecologist. Six months later, the woman charges, she was allowed to see the HMO's gynecologist, but he didn't order a Pap test either. By May 1986, she says, she was desperate and went to the emergency room of a nearby hospital. There, doctors made the appropriate tests, which showed that she was riddled with cancer. The woman underwent a hysterectomy, followed by radiation and chemotherapy, and finally a colostomy. Her suit charges that, to save money, the HMO discouraged lab tests and referrals to specialists. The case is still in litigation.

• Many HMOs hold back a percentage of the money due their doctors until the end of the year. It's a compelling reminder to pinch pennies on patient care.

• Some HMOs pay their doctors bonuses to limit treatment. One HMO in Texas reportedly paid its obstetricians only $600 for a vaginal delivery if the mother stayed in the hospital for three days—but $1025 when the doctors released the mother the day after she gave birth.

These questionable policies have not gone unnoticed by lawmakers. In late 1986, Congress passed a law that would ban HMOs from using financial incentives of any type to induce doctors to limit patient care. Both the HMOs and physicians would be subject to fines for violating this law. But lobbyists for the HMOs have persuaded Congress to postpone its effective date until April 1, 1990.

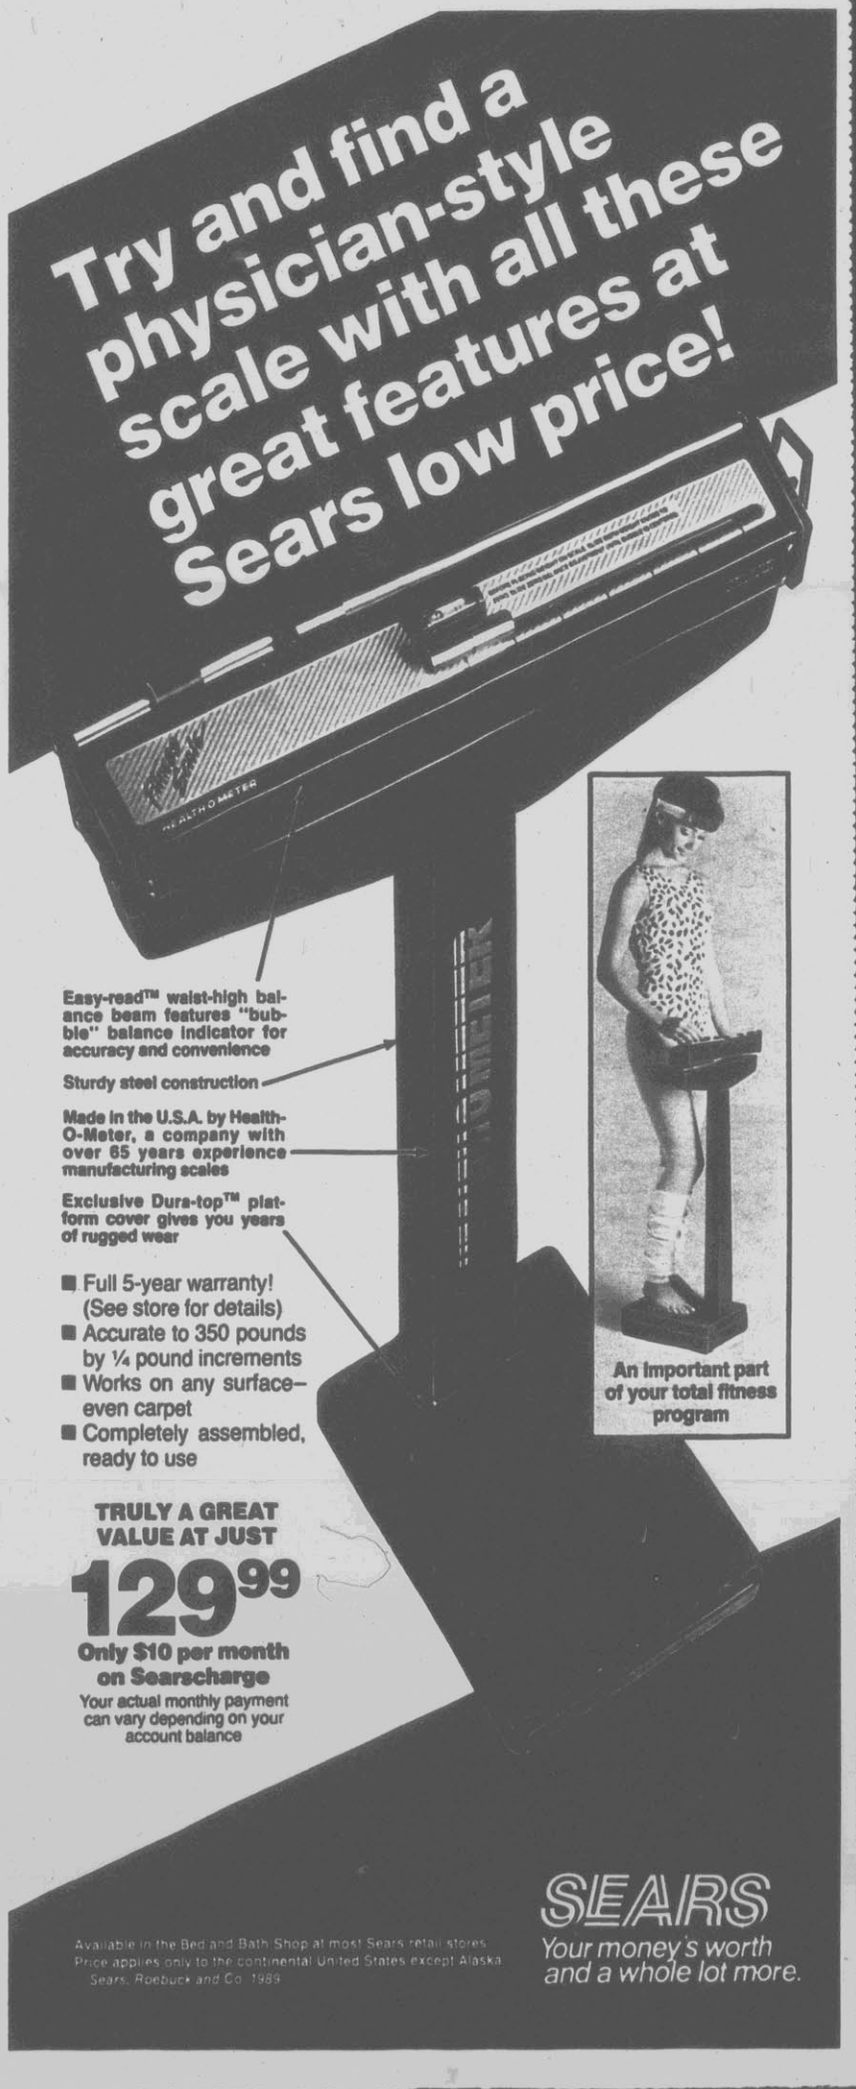

• Senate investigators found that some HMOs fraudulently enrolled senior citizens without their knowledge and billed Medicare for treatment that was never delivered. An employee of one California HMO detailed 10 cases in which its enrollment forms had been forged.

"The real crisis today is with HMOs that treat Medicare patients," says Dr. Ronald S. Bronow, a dermatologist in Los Angeles who is executive vice president of Physicians Who Care, a national grass-roots organization that supports patients' rights. "The elderly use up more services, costing prepaid plans more money than younger, healthier patients. So some HMOs are raising premiums to the elderly, cutting their benefits—or dumping them. Twenty-nine plans did not renew their Medicare contracts for 1988, resulting in the disruption of health care for 84,000 senior citizens."

Dr. Paul M. Ellwood, chairman of InterStudy, a research group in Excelsior, Minn., and an expert on prepaid health plans, cautions against the wholesale criticism of HMOs. "Fixing the doctors' fees until the end of the year, for example, is common among insurance companies, including Blue Cross and even Medicare," he notes. "The real issue here is that more medicine is not always better medicine. If a doctor is going to allow money to heavily influence the care he gives his patients—whether too little care or too much—I'd say that's a bad doctor and not that HMOs are necessarily a bad system."

How to guarantee the best care. Get the facts. Start by asking these questions:

1. What does your HMO membership include: Drugs? Dental care? Eyeglasses? Hearing aids? What's the cost to you—including extras?
2. How many of your HMO's doctors are board-certified? How are physicians reimbursed? Are there incentives to induce them to skimp on care?
3. Can you choose the doctor you prefer? How long does it take to get an appointment? How difficult is it to consult a specialist?
4. Is your HMO affiliated with good hospitals?
5. What's the reimbursement policy on emergency treatments? Suppose you suddenly become very ill and must call in an outside doctor not affiliated with your HMO. Or you are in a serious accident and are rushed to a hospital that has no contract with your HMO. Who pays the bills—you or your HMO?
6. Is there an effective quality-assurance program by a competent outside organization?
7. Is your HMO financially stable or in danger of closing its doors? Request copies of its financial statements to see the facts and figures.
8. Can members influence HMO policies? To find out, ask other members.

THE SECRET OF THE PERSIAN CHESSBOARD

THE WAY I FIRST HEARD THE STORY, IT happened in ancient Persia. But it may have been India, or even China. Anyway, it happened a long time ago. The Grand Vizier, the principal adviser to the King, had invented a new game. It was played with moving pieces on a board of 64 squares. The most important piece was the King. The next most important piece was the Grand Vizier—just what we might expect of a game invented by a Grand Vizier. The object of the game was to capture the enemy King, and so the game was called, in Persian, shahmat—shah for king, mat for dead. Death to the King. In Russian it is still called shakhmaty, which perhaps conveys a lingering revolutionary ardor. Even in English there is an echo of this name—the final move is called "checkmate." The game, of course, is chess.

As time passed, the pieces, their moves and the rules all evolved. There is, for example, no longer a piece called the Grand Vizier—it has become transmogrified into a Queen, with much more formidable powers.

Why a king should delight in the creation of a game called "Death to the King" is a mystery. But, the story goes, he was so pleased that he asked the Grand Vizier to name his own reward for such a splendid invention. The Grand Vizier had his answer ready: He was a humble man, he told the King. He wished only for a humble reward. Gesturing to the eight columns and eight rows of squares on the board he had devised, he asked that he be given a single grain of wheat on the first square, twice that on the second square, twice that on the third, and so on, until each square had its complement of wheat.

No, the King remonstrated. This is too modest a prize for so important an invention. He offered jewels, dancing girls, palaces. But the Grand Vizier, his eyes becomingly lowered, refused them all. It was little piles of wheat he wanted. So, secretly marveling at the unselfishness of his counselor, the King graciously consented.

When the Master of the Royal Granary began to count out the grains, however, the King was in for a rude surprise. The number of grains starts out small enough: 1, 2, 4, 8, 16, 32, 64, 128, 256, 512, 1024... But by the time the 64th square is approached, the number becomes colossal, staggering. In fact, the number is nearly 18.5 quintillion grains of wheat. Maybe the Grand Vizier was on a high-fiber diet.

How much does 18.5 quintillion grains of wheat weigh? If each grain were 2 millimeters in size, then all the grains together would weigh around 75 billion metric tons, which far exceeds what could have been stored in the King's granaries. In fact, this is the equivalent of about 150 years of the world's present wheat production. (Had chess been invented with 100 [10 x 10] squares instead of 64 [8 x 8], the resulting debt in grains of wheat would have weighed as much as the Earth.)

An account of what happened next has not come down to us. Whether the King, blaming himself for inattentiveness in arithmetic, handed the kingdom over to the Vizier, or whether the latter was made to play another game called viziermat, we are not privileged to know.

A sequence of numbers like this—where each is a fixed multiple of the previous one—is called a geometric progression, and the process is called an exponential increase. Exponentials show up in all sorts of places. Compound interest, for example: If an ancestor of yours put $10 in the bank for you 200 years ago, and it accrued a steady 5% annual interest, then by now it would be worth $10 x $(1.05)^{200}$, or $172,925.81—where $(1.05)^{200}$ simply means 1.05 times itself 200 times. If that ancestor could have gotten a 6% rate, you'd now have over $1 million; for 7%, over $7.5 million; and for an extortionate 10%, a tidy $1.9 billion. But few ancestors are so solicitous about their remote descendants, and $10 was a lot of money in those days.

Doubling time. The most common circumstance in which repeated doubling, and therefore exponential growth, takes place is in biological reproduction. Consider first the simple case of a bacterium that reproduces by dividing in two. After a while, each of the two daughter bacteria divides as well. As long as there's enough food and no poisons in the environment, the bacterial colony will grow exponentially. Under favorable circumstances, there can be a doubling every 15 minutes. That means 4 doublings an hour and 96 doublings a day. Although a bacterium weighs only about a trillionth of a gram, its descendants, after a day of wild asexual abandon, will collectively weigh as much as a mountain; in a little over a day and a half, as much as the Earth; in two days, more than the Sun... and before very long, everything in the Universe will be made of bacteria.

This is not a happy prospect, and, fortunately, it never happens. Why not? Because exponential growth of this sort always bumps into some natural obstacle. The bugs run out of food, or they poison each other, or they're shy about reproducing in public. Exponentials can't go on forever, because they'll gobble up everything. Long before then, they encounter some impediment. The exponential growth slows down.

This is a distinction very important for the AIDS epidemic. Right now, in many countries, the number of people with AIDS symptoms is growing exponentially. The doubling time is around one year—that is, every year there are twice as many AIDS cases as in the year before.

AIDS already has taken a disastrous toll among us. If it continues exponentially, it will be an unprecedented catastrophe. In 10 years, there will be a thousand times more AIDS cases; in 20 years, a million times more. But a million times the number of people who already have contracted AIDS is much more than the number of people on Earth. If there were no natural impediments to the continued doubling of AIDS every year, and the disease were invariably fatal (and no cure found), then everyone on Earth would die from AIDS—and soon.

However, this doubling has occurred in vulnerable groups that are largely sexually isolated from the rest of the population—male homosexuals, for example, and intravenous drug users. If no cure for AIDS is found, then most of the intravenous drug users who share needles will die. The same is true for homosexual men who have many partners—but not for the increasing number who use condoms or who are in long-term monogamous relationships. Strictly heterosexual couples who have long-term monogamous relationships and do not inject drugs are essentially insulated from AIDS, although there remains a small risk from blood transfusions. According to the Centers for Disease Control of the U.S. Public Health Service, the exponential curve is expected to flatten out (in the U.S., for example, the doubling time is now significantly more than a year), having killed many fewer than everyone on Earth.

Increase and multiply? Exponentials are also the central idea behind the world population crisis. For most of the time humans have been on Earth, the population was stable, with births and deaths almost perfectly in balance. This is called a "steady state." After the invention of agriculture, the human population began increasing, picking up steam in the Industrial Revolution.

Right now, the doubling time of the world's population is about 40 years. Every 40 years there will be twice as many of us. As the English clergyman Thomas Malthus pointed out in 1798, a population increasing exponentially will outstrip any conceivable increase in food supply. No Green Revolution, no hydroponics, no making the deserts bloom can beat an exponential population growth.

There is also no extraterrestrial solution to this problem. Right now, every day, there are something like 240,000 more humans being born than dying. We are very far from being able to ship 240,000 people into space every day. No settlements in Earth orbit or on other worlds can put a perceptible dent in the population explosion. Even if it were possible to ship everybody on Earth off to planets of distant stars on ships that travel at nearly the speed of light, nothing would be changed—all of those planets would be full up in almost no time. Unless we slow our rate of reproduction.

The Earth's population, growing through time, is shown in the graph. We are clearly in a phase of steep exponential growth. But many countries are now approaching a situation where their population growth almost ceases and they arrive at something close to a steady state. This is also called zero population growth (ZPG). Because exponentials are so powerful, if even a small fraction of the human community persists in reproducing exponentially, the situation is essentially the same—the world population increases exponentially, even if many nations are at ZPG.

There is, however, a well-documented worldwide correlation between poverty and high birthrates. In little countries and big countries, Capitalist countries and Communist countries, Catholic countries and Moslem countries, Western countries and Eastern countries—in all these cases, when grinding poverty disappears, exponential population growth slows down or stops. This is called the demographic transition.

How does it come about? Those high birthrates are thought to represent the cost-benefit analysis of desperate people. In a rural, subsistence economy, additional children help care for the livestock and gather the wood; they cost little to raise and nothing to educate; and, if they survive, they might provide for the parents in the helplessness of old age. Poor people do not have too many children because they are stupid but because they are poor. When there is enough to eat, however, and there is at least minimal social security, having many children makes less economic sense, and birthrates decline.

It is in the urgent long-term interest of the human species that every place on Earth achieves this demographic transition. This is why helping other countries to become self-sufficient is not only elementary human decency but also in the self-interest of the richer nations. Although it is an important tool, the central issue in the world population crisis is not contraception. The central issue is poverty.

At present there are a little more than 5 billion humans. In 40 years, if the doubling time stays constant, there will be 10 billion; in 80 years, 20 billion; in 120 years, 40 billion. But few experts believe the Earth can support so many people. Because of the power of this exponential increase, dealing with global poverty now will be much cheaper and much more humane than whatever solutions will be available to us many decades hence. Our job is to bring about a worldwide demographic transition and to flatten out that exponential curve by eliminating endemic poverty. Otherwise, some other process, less under our control, will do it for us.

Chain reaction. Nuclear fission was first thought of in September 1933 by an emigré Hungarian physicist named Leo Szilard. He had been wondering whether human tinkering could unlock the vast energies hidden in the nucleus of the atom. He asked himself what would happen if a neutron were fired at an atomic nucleus. (Because it has no electrical charge, a neutron would not be electrically repelled by the protons or the neutrons in the nucleus but would, instead, hit the nucleus.)

As Szilard was waiting for a traffic signal to change at an intersection on Southampton Row in London, it dawned on him that there might be some substance that spat out two neutrons when it was hit by one. Each of those neutrons could eject more neutrons, and there appeared in Szilard's mind the vision of a nuclear chain reaction, with exponentiating numbers of neutrons generated and atoms falling to pieces left and right.

The following year, in his small room in the Strand Palace Hotel, he calculated that only a few pounds of matter, if made to undergo a controlled neutron chain reaction, might liberate enough energy to run a small city for a year—or, if the energy were released suddenly, enough to destroy that city utterly.

Szilard emigrated to the United States, began a systematic search through all the chemical elements to see if any produced more neutrons than collided with it and, in 1942 in Chicago, played a major role in the first uranium chain reaction, which led to the atomic bomb. He spent the rest of his life warning about the dangers of the weapon he had been the first to envision.

The exponential is a mathematical machine of devastating power. It can get you from a grain of wheat to a whole mountain of the stuff in 64 easy steps. In the last few centuries, our numbers have grown prodigiously, and we have learned to build tools of awesome power. The exponential is a mathematical crystal ball that allows us to foresee the dead ends and blind alleys toward which our numbers and our technology are driving. In this game of world chess our species now finds itself playing, we need to foster long-term thinking; we must start planning many moves into the future. If we do, we might just be able to avoid global checkmate.

World Population Growth

HOW WE'VE GROWN. The vertical axis shows the number of humans on Earth; the horizontal axis shows time from 4000 B.C. We reached a billion people in 1800, and now we're at 5 billion. By relieving grinding poverty worldwide, we can stop the exponential growth sometime in the next century.

All In The Family

Everybody comes from 2 parents, 4 grandparents, 8 great-grandparents, 16 great-great-grandparents, etc. Every generation back we go, we have twice as many lineal ancestors.

This is very much like the Persian Chessboard problem. If there are, say, 25 years to a generation, then 64 generations is 64 x 25 = 1600 years ago, or just before the fall of the Roman Empire. So, every one of us alive today had in the year 400 some 18.5 quintillion ancestors—or so it seems—to say nothing about collateral relatives.

But this is far more than the population of the Earth, then or now. It is far more than the number of human beings who ever lived. Something is wrong with our calculation. What? We have assumed all those lineal ancestors to be different people. But this is not the case. The same distant ancestor is related to us by many different routes. We are repeatedly connected with our relatives. Every marriage brings cousins together.

If we go back far enough, any two people anywhere on Earth have a common ancestor. Whenever a new American President is elected, someone—generally in England—discovers that the new President is a distant relative of the Queen of England. This announcement is intended, perhaps, to soothe any residual American longing for a king of our own. Of course, when two people derive from the same small corner of the world, and their genealogies are well-recorded, the last common ancestor can be discovered. But whether it can be discovered or not, a relationship is clear: We are all cousins—all members of a vast world-girdling family. It's time, I think, for a reunion.

Counting The Grains

Don't be scared off. This is really easy. If you should ever find yourself face-to-face with a wheat-grubbing Grand Vizier or his modern entrepreneurial incarnation, here's how to calculate the grains on the Persian Chessboard. This is tantamount to calculating 2^{64}, or 2 times itself 64 times. You can calculate it by "brute force," which will, if you're patient enough, get you to 18,446,744,073,709,551,616. (The actual number of grains is just one less). But if you only want a rough answer and haven't got all day, here's a way to do it:

The exponent just tells us how many times we multiply 2 by itself. For example, $2^4 = 16$. Also, $2^{10} = 1024$—close to 1000, which is also written 10^3 (10x 10x10). All you have to remember now, from beginning high-school algebra, is when you add exponents and when you multiply them. Then, $2^{60} = (2^{10})^6 =$ roughly $(10^3)^6 = 10^{18}$. So $2^{64} = 2^4 \times 2^{60} = 16 \times 10^{18}$, or the number 16 followed by 18 zeros, which is 16 quintillion. Close enough for government work.

Even if you've never cared about Westerns, watch Lonesome Dove, adapted from Larry McMurtry's Pulitzer Prize-winning novel about two middle-aged former Texas Rangers who lead an epic cattle drive from Texas to the Montana territory. The eight-hour miniseries gives such a genuine feel for the diverse characters and landscape that you'll say, yes, this is how life must have been—at the same time as you're struck with a sense of yearning and loss for a West that is gone forever. The wonderful Robert Duvall creates a tough, philosophical hero in Capt. Augustus McCrae, who gives center and heart to the adventure. A word of warning: The story builds slowly, so lean back and give it time to get to you. CBS.

Mystery-Lovers' Heaven

Peter Falk as Columbo, the disarming homicide cop in the wrinkled raincoat, begins the two-hour ABC Mystery Movie series, airing Monday nights. He'll rotate with two other sleuths: Burt Reynolds as B.L. Stryker, an ex-New Orleans cop turned Florida private eye, whose lifestyle ruffles the feathers of Palm Beach's rich and powerful; and Louis Gossett Jr. as Gideon Oliver, an anthropology professor who takes on puzzling cases in exotic locales (and, though he never packs a rod, is a master at kick boxing and other deadly sports).

An unlikely but appealing trio!

• Two Agatha Christie stories—Murder at the Vicarage and 4:50 From Paddington, starring Joan Hickson as the elderly English sleuth Miss Marple—get fine new productions on PBS' six-part Mystery! series, along with one repeat, Nemesis.

Hickson also plays Miss Marple on audio. Try The Herb of Death and Other Stories and The Blue Geranium and Other Stories (from Listen for Pleasure, $14.95 each).

COUSINS, U.S.A.

Every lover of Cousin, Cousine—a charming and warmhearted French romantic comedy with a good feeling for family life—is waiting for Cousins, Joel Schumacher's American version. It stars Ted Danson and lovely Isabella Rossellini as two people married to philandering mates who become friends when her mother marries his uncle, and later fall in love. BOOKS

For Music Lovers

Undoubtedly the most compact yet comprehensive musical reference book currently available is the new Norton/Grove Concise Encyclopedia of Music (W.W. Norton, $40). Its 850 pages contain 10,000 entries, all of them authoritative and some quite extensive (two tightly packed pages on Mozart, for instance). Biographies, technical terms, articles on instruments—all are included, and the moderns get plenty of attention, from Leonard Bernstein to Woody Herman. A must, even for small libraries, and highly desirable for music lovers. —Herbert Kupferberg

Harry Smith

BORN: Aug. 21, 1951, in Hammond, Ind. PERSONAL: Married Andrea Joyce in 1986. CAREER HIGHLIGHTS: Include radio host and disc jockey (WLW in Cincinnati, KHOW and KIMN in Denver), 1973-81; talk-show host on Denver public TV station KRMA, 1981-82; reporter and anchor on KMGH-TV, CBS affiliate in Denver, 1982-85; Dallas-based correspondent for CBS News, 1986-87; named co-anchor of CBS This Morning, 1987.

AT FIRST, A LONG time ago, the morning belonged to NBC and the Today show. Dave Garroway, Barbara Walters, Joe Garagiola—it didn't matter. Then ABC hired an actor named David Hartman. Something called A.M. America. That wasn't quite right, and they chopped and changed, and finally they got it, and David and Good Morning America owned the television dawn. But NBC surged back, with Tom Brokaw and Jane Pauley and then with Bryant Gumbel and Jane. Now, sometimes Today is No. 1 and sometimes it's Good Morning America.

Notice anything? The third great network, CBS, is and always has been a morning disaster area.

They've tried everything, from Phyllis George to Diane Sawyer, from Charles Kuralt to Mariette Hartley. Nothing worked. The CBS morning show, by a half-dozen names, consistently ran third in a three-horse race. In November 1987, CBS unveiled its secret weapon: Harry Smith.

Harry Smith?

He's unknown. He's balding. He wears glasses. On a recent morning when I visited Harry on the set and sat through his show, I said, rudely perhaps, "You're not a very glamorous figure, are you?" Smith neither conceded the fact nor emptied his coffee mug on my head.

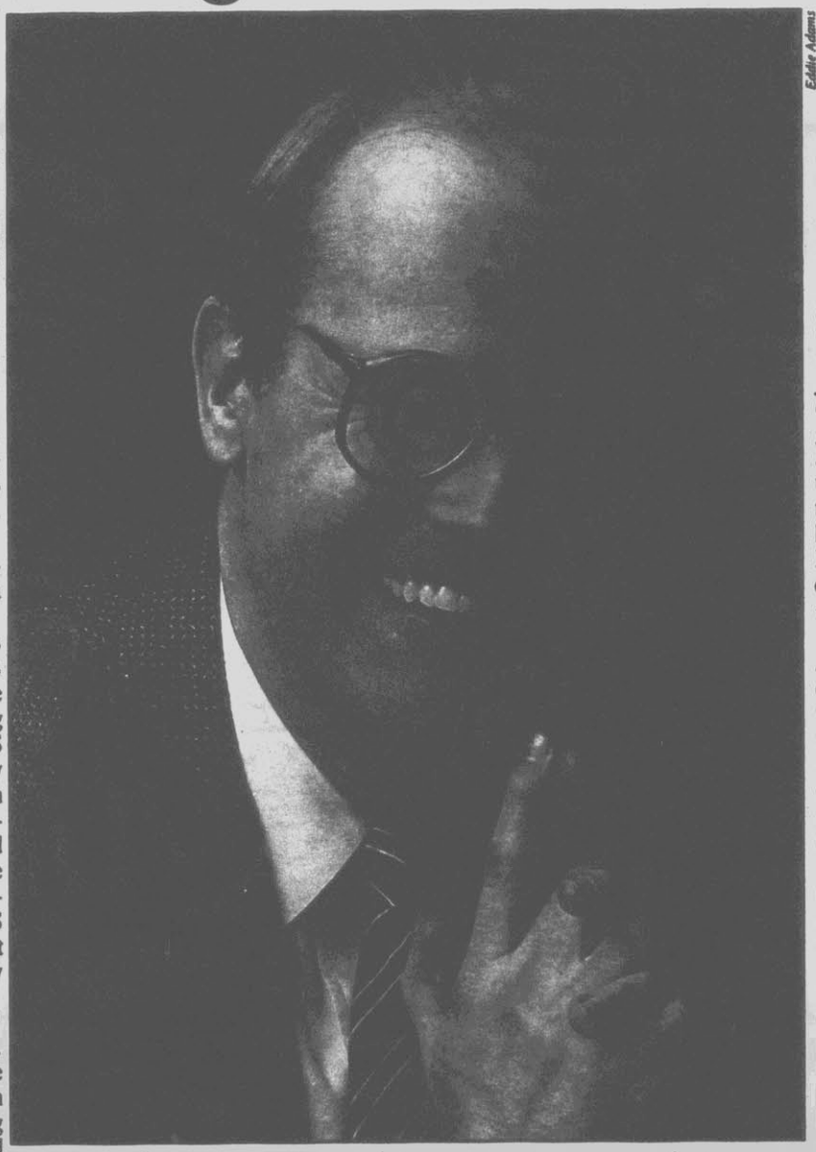

In a business where ego is practically a legal requirement, Smith is a refreshing novelty—a blue-collar sort of guy who comes to work with his lunch pail and gives you an honest day's labor. He doesn't even have an agent; he negotiated his own deal. "All I asked," he said, "was that, if things didn't work out, they give me the same consideration they've given other correspondents and put me into another job." His show, CBS This Morning, goes on the air at 7 a.m., but Smith is there at 5. "I used to get there at 4," he confessed, "but I found myself nodding off, trying to read The Wall Street Journal."

He even has a working wife, Andrea Joyce. "She's a freelance sports reporter for television," Harry said, "and she was in Korea [during the 1988 Olympics] for four weeks. But when she got back, we still recognized each other." Because of Andrea's work, the Smiths don't get many long weekends. Often, no weekends at all.

Harry studied communications and theater at tiny Central College in Pella, Iowa, which he attended on a football scholarship, later joking that he was "the world's smallest defensive tackle." But when you're one of eight kids, you become a competitor or you perish. He worked in radio and for local TV stations in Denver as a reporter and anchorman and as a talk-show host. "I didn't have hair even when I was on radio," he told me with a long-suffering grin. CBS hired him as a Dallas-based reporter, and he quickly became a correspondent for the network's Evening News With Dan Rather.

"I was happy working as a correspondent, covering stories from the panhandle to Pakistan," Smith recalled, "and my wife's career was smoking." Then came rumors that CBS was going to make yet another change on the morning television show, and Harry called to ask that his name be "put in the hopper." But the network wanted someone else, a top Canadian talent. "At the last minute, he pulled out," Smith said, "so they went to me."

Eddie Adams

BRADY'S BITS

The day I visited the set and watched Smith work, he seemed as relaxed with the Secretary of Energy as with the actor Mandy Patinkin. CBS is letting Harry be himself, giving him time to ask follow-up questions, to dig into unglamorous subjects like famine and disease in Bangladesh. Will it work? "First of all," says Smith, "CBS is being patient with us. Second, we've got the right people. Third, they're promoting the show." He even sounds happy. "Our aim from the start was to do a show we wanted to watch. We're doing that."

Cover Story....

'Lonesome Dove' Airs Feb. 5 Thru 8

By Robert DiMatteo

CBS describes "Lonesome Dove" (Feb. 5-8) as a "sweeping drama of the Old West," a clear clue that this all-star, eight-hour production intends to ape a classic Western like the majestic "Red River" (1948) rather than a revisionist one like the facetious "Silverado" (1985). Based on a memorable, Pulitzer Prize-winning novel by Larry McMurtry ("The Last Picture Show"), "Lonesome Dove" uses a cattle drive from Texas to Montana as the locus for a sprawling drama of character. As with most Westerns made in the last 20 years, the implicit subject is the changing West — the cowboy as a dying breed, rangy exemplar of an America of simpler, clear-cut values.

Accordingly, "Lonesome Dove" 's central figure — the likably gruff, philosophical former Texas Ranger Augustus (Gus) McCrae (played by Robert Duvall) — is a precursor of the character of Sam the Lion in McMurtry's "The Last Picture Show." Like the noble, anachronistic and tale-spinning Sam, Gus McCrae has the attitude of someone who has seen life's battles from up close. As the drama opens, Gus has been taking it slower; he drinks whiskey and plays cards, and occasionaly visits the "town whore," Lorena Wood (Diane Lane).

But Gus still has a little adventure left in him. Charged by tales of the uncharted Montana Territory, Gus and Woodrow F. Call (Tommy Lee Jones), also a former Ranger and now Gus's partner in a small local business, set out with cattle and horses on the long trip there. Gus's impetus to leave Texas has an amorous element: On the way north, he intends to stop in Nebraska to visit his one true love, the now-married Clara Allen (Anjelica Huston).

It's doubtful that there has ever been as detailed an evocation of cowboy life as this production offers. "Lonesome Dove" makes for a very atmospheric, if also leisurely, miniseries. There are dozens of plot points, and more than your average number of codified characters. But they are spaced out with lots of local color. There's a drawback to this approach, and it's most apparent in the uneventful opening two-hour chunk. As a thin, mustachioed Robert Duvall drawls his way through the role of that dusty cowpoke Gus and Tommy Lee Jones, made up to look like Kenny Rogers, drawls his way through the role of tough, taciturn Call, the viewer might worry: Is anything going to happen? And who can understand what these guys are saying? Is this going to degenerate into A Coupla Cowboys Sittin' Around Talkin'?

Just be patient. Cowboys weren't known for their elocution, and Duvall and Jones have been scrupulous in honoring that mush-mouthed, word-swallowing tradition. And, once the guys set out on the road, the story picks up in incident and interest. There are Indian attacks, hangings, shootouts, unruly cattle and a kid who is attacked by a snake while he's crossing a river. By the end, there is also a moving appreciation of this journey from Texas to Montana as the last grand gesture of a group of outmoded cowboys.

Seldom has a Western had such a class cast. Anyone who loves good acting has treasured the versatility of Robert Duvall — an actor whose country singer in "Tender Mercies" (1983) had next to nothing in common with his Mafia family underling in "The Godfather" (1972) or with his painfully shy Boo Radley in "To Kill a Mockingbird" (1962). Yet all three were completely created, completely vivid figures. Similarly, Duvall gets lost in the role of Gus.

"Lonesome Dove" is like one of its rangy cowboy characters: It's slow to get going, but, once it does, it's braced for action and intrigue.

Pilling

Pilling is a term used to describe the formation of bundles of entangled fibers, or "pills" on the fabric surface. This is due to rubbing and abrasive action on the surface of the fabric.

On synthetic materials, the fibers are very strong and the pills do not wear off but remain on the surface. The finer fibers are often more likely to pill than the coarser fibers. If a garment is made with mostly a synthetic fiber, the tendency to pill is greater.

Pilling is usually found on the portions of the garments that receive the most rubbing and friction in use. Pilling can often be found around the neckline of a man's shirt or a woman's sweater. Pilling will also occur around the elbows or front of a sweater.

We repair and alter garments; God repairs and alters lives.

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

Dear Michele: I just finished watching "Someone to Watch Over Me" with Mimi Rogers, and I thought she was incredible. Can you fill me in on her background and career? — J. DANIELS, LAWRENCE, KANS.

Rogers, who's in her 30s, was born Jan. 27 in Coral Gables, Fla. She is the wife of one of Hollywood's former most eligible bachelors, actor Tom Cruise. The daughter of a civil engineer, Rogers' formative years were nomadic. She and her brother, two half-brothers and two stepbrothers lived in Washington, D.C., Virginia, Arizona, Michigan, California and England.

Following her graduation from a Los Angeles high school, Rogers moved to Palo Alto, Calif., where she worked as a drug-abuse counselor and studied dance. She returned to Los Angeles in 1978 to study acting. She almost won Kathleen Turner's role as the femme fatale in "Body Heat" (1981). That rejection led to her first TV roles, two guest shots on "Hill Street Blues." More guest-starringseries roles followed, along with starring roles in the TV movies "Divorce Wars" and "Hear No Evil."

She rejected the Laura Holt role on "Remington Steele," and opted instead for a one-year contract with CBS, which only resulted in a failed pilot. Since then, she has appeared in two short-lived series, "The Rousters" (1983) and "Paper Dolls" (1984), and has had two major film roles, "Gung Ho" (1986) and "Someone to Watch Over Me" (1987).

Dear Michele: I know actress Erika Slezak is the daughter of Walter Slezak, but who is her mother? Also, where was Erika born? Does she have any siblings? — CATHERINE OSBY, AURORA, ILL.

Erika Slezak, who plays Victoria Lord Buchanan on "One Life to Live," was born Aug. 5, 1944, in Hollywood. The oldest child of Walter Slezak and former opera singer Johanna Van Rijn, she is the only family member to continue in the family's performing-arts tradition. Her sister Ingrid (born in 1945) is an attorney in Denver, and her brother Leo (born in 1946) is a Seattle-based pilot. Their grandfather was the great opera tenor Leo Slezak.

Dear Michele: What happened to Don Johnson's recent film "Sweet Hearts Dance"? My husband and I have waited and waited for the film to come out in the theaters, but with no luck. While we're on the subject, where and when was Johnson born, and what's the status of "Miami Vice"? — BEVERLY J. LIEBLER, MASSILLON, OHIO

"Sweet Hearts Dance" was released theatrically last fall. Unfortunately, it was released for only a brief time to a limited number of theaters. It's more than likely that the movie bypassed your local theater, but chances are it will be released on home video later this year.

Johnson was born Dec. 15, 1949, in Flatt Creek, Mo., and recently announced his engagement to his ex-wife actress Melanie Griffith ("Working Girl"). This will probably be the last season for "Miami Vice."

Dear Michele: I'm a big fan of "China Beach" 's Brian Wimmer, who plays Boonie. Could you provide some information on him? — M. BOHON, HICKORY, N.C.

Wimmer was working as a production assistant on the 1984 film "Footloose," when he was asked to pose for a screen test. The result was a bit part that led to additional acting work. The Provo, Utah, native had a small role in "Nightmare on Elm Street" (1984) and more recently appeared in "Less Than Zero" (1987) and the TV movie "What Price Victory?" (1988). His biggest break has been the role of lifeguard Boonie in ABC's acclaimed series "China Beach."

Dear Michele: Can you please tell me if either Jack Lord or James Arness are related to actor Peter Graves? — LINDA ROCHESTER, KNOXVILLE, TENN.

Former "Gunsmoke" star Arness, 65, was born James Aurness and is the older brother of Peter Aurness, 63, who's better known as Peter Graves, star of "Mission: Impossible."

Dear Michele: I've been trying to no avail to rent the John Wayne movie "Hondo" on video. Is it available? — JOSEPH TRAVA, VINCENTOWN, N.J.

Soap Scoop

James DePaiva comes to terms with 'OLTL'

By Connie Passalacqua

There's another major return of a soap star to report, but this time we don't have to explain who he is or what he has been doing during all those intervening years. And the show's writers don't have to go through laborious explanations about how the character has gotten older, grown a beard, been exhumed from the grave, lost 60 pounds or hit the lottery.

"One Life to Live" 's James DePaiva (who plays Max Holden) left the show when he couldn't come to contract terms last month. Now it has been announced that he'll return in March. This is great, since the romance between macho, larger-than-life Max and the equally larger-than-life Megan Gordon (who is played by Jessica Tuck) showed soap superstar-making promise before DePaiva's departure.

• Speaking of "OLTL," one performance on the show has been so entertaining it's definitely worth mentioning, even though it has lately receded from the plot spotlight. The performance comes from Carl Mueller, who plays Randy Stone, the manic former producer of "OLTL" 's soap-within-a-soap "Fraternity Row." As the double-dealing producer, Mueller had a quality one rarely sees in daytime soaps these days – he was truly funny.

Before his turn as the always flustered producer, Mueller was best known as the former boyfriend of Lori Landry, who used to play Nicole Love on "Another World." Immediately preceding "OLTL," he played an assistant hotel manager on "All My Children."

And just because Stone and colorful "OLTL" producer Paul Rauch wear their hair the same way (slicked back like Michael Douglas in "Wall Street"), don't think that Stone was modeled on Rauch, counsels our friendly "OLTL" spokesman at ABC. He has a point, since Stone was a nincompoop producer and Rauch continues to be daytime's canniest and most daring.

Randy Stone is now on the unemployment line, after trying to publicly plant a porn-film past on "FR" star Megan Gordon. The problem: He was once a porn film director himself. The new producer of "FR" is none other than Llanview man-about-town Bo Buchanan (played by Robert S. Woods), who has absolutely no experience in television production. Do you see what we mean about about "FR" being a great send-up of the real world of daytime television?

SATURDAY
CALLED HAWK

Avery Brooks reprises his tough-guy role from "Spenser: For Hire" in his new series, "A Man Called Hawk." Filmed on location in Washington, D.C., it airs Saturday, Feb. 11, on ABC.

TV Chatter

By Frank Sanello

In the miniseries "Lonesome Dove" (CBS, Feb. 5-8), Diane Lane plays a good-hearted hooker who has the misfortune of being gang-raped by Indians and slapped around by her cowboy boyfriend (Robert Urich). As if the on-screen abuse wasn't bad enough, the 24-year-old actress found life between takes just as tough during the three-month shoot under the sweltering summer sun of Texas. While lying on the ground during the rape scene, Lane discovered an unwanted guest crawling up her dress: a scorpion.

"It was just kind of hanging out in the billows of my petticoat," Lane recalls with a frown. "I didn't move or say anything because I didn't want people to come over and startle it any further into my skirt." So how did she get rid of her creepy guest? "I just flicked it off, and it went scuttling into the dirt," says the resourceful actress, best known for her role as the gangster's moll in Francis Coppola's "The Cotton Club" (1984).

When game-show host Bert Convy went on location in Maui to shoot two weeks' worth of "Win, Lose or Draw," he was determined to have fun. For starters, he traded in his Armani suits for tacky Hawaiian shirts. During the opening shot of these shows (which air during the week of Feb. 6), Convy slid down a giant water slide. But eventually the hot sun may have gotten to Convy. Once during taping, Convy thought the show had gone to a commercial, so he wandered around the set, kibbitzing with guests Robert Hays, Ben Vereen and Natalie Cole. Suddenly, the voice of the director boomed, "We're still rolling, Bert." Convy hopes the blooper will remain when the shows air.

Sports Roundup

SUNDAY, FEB. 5

NCAA Basketball (CBS)

Georgetown at Villanova. Hoya freshman Alonzo Mourning has been living up to his advance billing as the next great center. He has been putting up Ewing-like numbers; when he gets a little older and coach John Thompson plays him more, he could dominate Big East big men just like his fabled predecessor.

Boxing (NBC)

Skiing (ABC)

NCAA Basketball (NBC)

Duke at Notre Dame.

NCAA Basketball (ABC)

Illinois at Iowa or Kentucky at Georgia.

As we move into the weekly grind of the PGA Tour in earnest, one wonders what the toughest part of the Tour is for the pros. Fuzzy Zoeller, who has been on the Tour since 1975, is unequivocal: "The travel is the hardest," he maintains. "I'll be honest — mentally golf is very easy. But you get so whipped in between fighting with airport delays, getting a room, getting to the hotel, unpacking your bags that it all gets to be a burden after a while and you get tired of it."

MONDAY, FEB. 6

NCAA Basketball (ESPN)

SATURDAY, FEB. 11

NBA Basketball (TBS)

All-Star Saturday, from Houston. The NBA Legends old-timers game, the slam-dunk contest and the three-point shooting event all take place today as a prelude to Sunday's All-Star Game.

Speed Skating, Boxing (CBS)

Women's World Speed Skating Championship from Lake Placid, N.Y.; 12-round WBC super-welterweight title fight pitting champ Donald Curry against Rene Jacquot from Grenoble, France.

It is a mark of how far Curry's stock has fallen that the fight will take place in the challenger's home nation.

NCAA Basketball (ABC)

Florida at Kentucky. These two teams typify why it has been an off-year for the SEC, usually one of the most powerful conferences in college hoops. Florida hasn't been able to rebuild its backcourt, and with Dwayne Schintzius on and off the team, in and out of trouble, they lack power inside.

PBA Bowling (ABC)

Cable Olympics

NBC and Cable Systems Corp. have announced plans to add cable coverage of the 1992 Summer Olympics in Barcelona, Spain. The plan would make available multi-channel pay-per-view coverage of select events, in addition to the customary over-the-air broadcasts that will be carried by over 200 NBC affiliates. For a price, subscribers would have expanded viewing options.

NBA Teams Are Playing All The Medical Angles

By Marty Linehan

Not too long ago, you could waltz into Madison Square Garden five minutes before game time and pick up New York Knicks tickets for the entire family. No more. This year's resurgence of the Knicks has made Knicks tickets some of the hottest and hardest to get. And the Knicks are doing everything they can think of to keep up their pace. Recently, for example, they even took their team psychologist, Dr. Frank Gardner, on the road with the team for the first time.

A team psychologist? It's a far cry from the old days, when NBA teams didn't even send trainers on the road. The only time the old-timers saw doctors was when they were injured or sick, and they even had to do their own taping. (That's their legs, Seymour, not TV interviews.)

Doctors now accompany all NBA teams, and the trend is for enhanced health-support services. The New Jersey Nets, for example, have engaged an internist, the Phoenix Suns have their own chiropodist, and many pro teams have strength coaches.

Back to the traveling psychologist. How was his first trip? Exhausting, he claims. "The physical and mental strain the travel demands are not really understood until you experience it," he said. "I didn't play four games in five nights, and I came away exhausted."

* The NBA starts its all-star weekend on Saturday, Feb. 11, when the league's old-timers, who never benefited from today's medical attention and are now called "NBA Legends," play their annual game as a prelude to the Feb. 12 All-Star Game. There will also be a slam-dunk contest, won last year by Michael Jordan, and a three-point scoring event, which Larry Bird has dominated in recent years.

NEW! Rest-A-Matic . . .Adjustable Bed. . .

Copyright, 1979, Rest-A-Matic® Adjustable Beds

Rest-A-Matic

— so versatile, so advanced it makes ordinary chairs, sofas, and beds practically obsolete for leisure activities, relaxation, and sleep!

Here's an amazing discovery that enriches the hours you spend at home...making the most of healthful relaxation. REST-A-MATIC®... An engineering marvel that makes (what looks like) a conventional bed... into an ADJUSTABLE BED... that changes to literally hundreds of restful positions. Quiet electric motors concealed in the understructure of the REST-A-MATIC® do your bidding at the touch of a button.

Now your bedroom is not just for sleeping! With Rest-A-Matic® ...it becomes a center for your most rewarding leisure-time activities... reading, studying, sewing...watching TV... or even breakfast in bed!

People of all ages...in all walks of life are now finding new ways to enrich their lives with healthful, vigorous activities...for a renewed spirit of enjoyment, physically and mentally. And equally important to this renewed activity...is the enjoyment of total relaxation!

Rest-A-Matic® lets your mind work while your body rests. You may actually be able to add extra hours every day to your active life because you'll be more comfortable... more relaxed, yet wide-awake. you will soon find that muscle tension will be relieved in every part of your body.... because your body weight is more evenly distributed and supported than in any chair or ordinary bed.

Couples can now enjoy these extra pleasant hours spent together... each enjoying a preference of relaxed activities. With the new Dual-King model, for example, you can sit up watching television, perhaps, while your spouse can lie back even further for relaxed conversation... or just a pleasant rest.

How does Rest-A-Matic do all this for you?

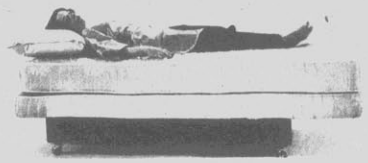

Programmed to raise or lower different sections of the bed, the Rest-A-Matic® is the product of extensive engineering design and testing... All toward the ultimate aim of providing you with a "free-floating" kind of support you could never experience in chair lounges, sofas or conventional beds. Since the Rest-A-Matic® adapts to literally hundreds of restful positions, you can actually distribute body weight more evenly to help relieve muscle tension, back fatigue, tired legs. Comfort is yours to command whether you just want to relax or adjust to a position for increased circulatory action.

Inside the Rest-A-Matic® frame and mattress is where the engineering magic has been concealed. Simply plug the cord into a regular electric outlet and the Rest-A-Matic, with its silent electric motors and scientifically structured framework ... is ready to do your bidding at the touch of a button.

When made up, your Rest-A-Matic® bed looks like any other elegant conventional bed. Can be used with your present headboards and comes in the usual sizes; Twin, Full-Sized, Queen and King, and Dual-King (two twin beds that accommodate king-size bedspreads).

Refreshing relaxation and increased circulation offer many obvious benefits to health and well-being.

Plus—
"Therm

Since the Rest-A-Matic® Bed adjusts to many positions, you can now choose exactly the right amount of lift or support for healthful relaxation. For example, you can lower the head support and raise your legs... for a healthful surge of circulatory action. With legs elevated, back completely relaxed... and your head slightly lower than the rest of your body... you can almost feel the pressures and tensions of the day slip away!

Enjoy "cradle-comfort" even in the sitting-up position, since only about one fifth of your body weight rests on the hips. Just one of thousands of restful positions you can command.

Rest-A-Matic® can automatically be controlled by the patient to change positions to relieve the monotony, aches, nervous tension and soreness from remaining in one position too long. In addition, by adjusting the bed to "activity" positions the patient can keep self-entertained or engaged in other activities such as reading, writing, with virtually no assistance from others.

After a hard day, you might like to enjoy a pleasant, refreshing massage... right in your own bed! Just dial in the optional Digi-Matic massage that sends out waves of pulsating energy... simulating the gentle fingers of a skilled masseur!

Another optional feature is the Thermo-Matic Warmth Control, a heating unit for your Rest-A-Matic® that is imperceptible to sight or touch. With its own control that lets you select the level of heat you prefer, "Thermo-Matic" is far more efficient than an electric blanket since the heat rises from the mattress and is retained by the lightest of blankets above.
