East Stands To Gain Under Road Plan

By Stuart Savage
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The future of the state's highway construction program may hinge on a meeting of the Highway Study Commission scheduled for 2:30 p.m. Monday in Raleigh.

Sen. Tom Taft of Greenville said Sen. William Goldston of Eden has called the meeting to "approve or disapprove a plan" to raise billions of dollars over the next 12 years to speed up road building projects.

"The important thing is that it's looking like something is going to happen that's going to guarantee our roads will get built." Taft said. "We are on the verge of a road construction package that would finally bring an entire network of first-class, four-lane roads to eastern North Carolina."

And Taft said he expects a funding plan proposed by Goldston, who is co-chairman of the highway study group, to win approval of the commission and ultimately the General Assembly.

Taft said if the Goldston plan, or some similar piece of legislation, is adopted, it will be "an enormous accomplishment historically and economically for eastern North Carolina, which has so often been left out of our share of the good roads in the state."

According to Taft, the Goldston plan "will guarantee us a four-lane U.S. 64 from Tarboro to Manteo 15 miles North of Greenville; a four-lane interstate standard U.S. 17 midway between Greenville and Washington, from South Carolina to Virginia; the upgrading of U.S. 264 to full interstate standards from its intersection with I-95 west of Wilson to Greenville, including overpasses where we now have grade-level intersections, and bypasses at Wilson and Greenville.

"In this program we would have a guarantee that these roads would be built," Taft said, "in a timely fashion. We can't build all these roads at one time." But, he suggested, "it would take a maximum of 12 years, possibly 15, for the whole statewide program."

According to Taft, "It's truly a road system for the 21st century. This gives us U.S. 64, finishes U.S. 264 and gives us U.S. 17." And, "it also includes substantial money for secondary roads and other urban improvements ... loops around Charlotte, Winston-Salem, Asheville, Greensboro, Raleigh-Durham.'

"I'm not telling you the study commission plan (the 'Goldston' plan) will be adopted without changes," Taft said. "But the broad outline, in my opinion, will hold."

Taft warned, though, that "we do have to pay for this." And that's what Monday's meeting of the highway study group will address.

Goldston's pay plan, Taft said, includes: a 2-cents per gallon increase in the motor fuel (gasoline) tax; a $1 billion bond issue; a 4 percent in-

U.S. Will Continue PLO Talks

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KEFLAVIK, Iceland — The United States has warned the Palestine Liberation Organization against attacking Israeli military or civilian targets, but is not ready to break off talks with Yasser Arafat's group over a clash in southern Lebanon, Secretary of State James A. Baker III said Saturday.

Launching a weeklong trip to 14 West European capitals, Baker said he had not decided whether an incident a week ago means the PLO has reneged on Arafat's pledge renouncing terrorism. In the confrontation, Israeli forces intercepted and killed five guerillas who were carrying identification papers linking them to two factions of the PLO. The pledge and the statement by the Palestinian leader accepting Israel's right to exist prompted the Reagan administration last December to open talks with the PLO after a 13-year official ban.

"We are not prepared at this time to say this constitutes action by the PLO to cause us to break off the dialogue," Baker said on a flight from Ottawa, Canada, where he opened U.S. consultations with North Atlantic Treaty Organization members on Friday.

But, Baker said, Robert Pelletreau, the U.S. ambassador to Tunisia, had informed PLO officials there that the clash last weekend was the kind of action "that presents us with great difficulty."

In fact, Baker said, "We made the point that actions such as this — directed against civilians or military targets, inside or outside of Israel — were something that gave us trouble."

The U.S. decision to talk to the PLO boosted Arafat's standing in Food Scares Have Britons On Diets

By Edith M. Lederer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Food-poisoning scares involving chicken, eggs, butter and popular precooked dinners have left millions of Britons baffled and preoccupied with what they can and cannot eat.

Since December, when a government health minister said most of Britain's egg production was infected with salmonella, the debate over the risk of eating various foods has gained momentum.

Public anxiety has been aroused partly by news media attention and front-page headlines, such as "Cheese Can Kill Your Baby" in Saturday's tabloid The Sun, and partly by confusing data from officials.

"The average consumer is punch-drunk with warnings and statistics — many of which seem contradictory," said the normally pro-government Daily Express on Saturday.

During the weekend, Britons faced a triple food scare: salmonella-infected chickens and eggs; mercury-contaminated butter; and soft cheeses, precooked meals, and fresh fruits and vegetables contaminated by listeria bacteria.

The Department of Health on Saturday denied a front-page story in the liberal Guardian newspaper

Sanford Gives Plan To Ortega

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — U.S. Sen. Terry Sanford on Saturday gave President Daniel Ortega an economic development proposal that seeks $2.5 billion in aid for Central America.

"The most important part (of the plan) is that it is ... done by an international commission made up of people predominantly from Central America," said Sanford, D-N.C.

Sanford heads the non-governmental commission of experts and legislators concerned with Central America's problems. He was in the region to present advance copies of the plan to Central American leaders.

The commission will formally present the plan to the presidents of El Salvador, Honduras, Guatemala, Costa Rica and Nicaragua on Monday when the presidents meet in El Salvador to revive a regional peace plan.

"It's not a plan that was drawn up in Washington, it wasn't done with public monies; it was done by private citizens and private money," Sanford said.

"The difference between this and just additional economic aid or foreign aid is that this plan emphasizes sustained economic development ... that will go on and on and will build on itself," he added.

Ortega told Sanford that the plan reflected "important support ... for the steps we Central Americans are taking."

Sanford declined to reveal details of the proposal, saying only that outside economic assistance could come from European countries. He did not elaborate.

Newton smiles broadly as Dawson checks work he has turned in on a reading lesson

At 43, Onetime Handyman Finds New Life In Reading

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Late in 1986 Greenville resident Chester Newton saw a public service announcement on television, copied a phone number and placed a call that has expanded his life and proved to him that a belief about himself he'd had since early childhood was false.

Newton, 43, until recently had believed since his early attempts at formal education in Fremont more than three decades ago that he was incapable of learning to read. But there was something about that television ad that kindled a desire to try one more time, to try even though he might have assumed that something he couldn't do — at 6 or 16 — he certainly couldn't do at 42.

He dialed the number and talked to a member of Literacy Volunteers of America who assured him that someone would be back in touch with him about working with him to help him learn to read. And someone was.

Dr. W.S. (Bill) Dawson called him and introduced himself as his tutor. Since last Feb. 26, the two have missed only one or two Monday and Wednesday evenings spending an hour together.

Dawson, a family physician who has enjoyed reading all his life but never before this volunteer effort had tried teaching it, has formed a partnership with Newton. Together the two men meet at the corner of a huge mahogany conference table in a second-floor room of Sheppard Memorial Library and, through their dedication to a common goal, Newton is learning to read.

Electronic tethers such as this keep track of offenders

House Arrest Backed Up By Electronic Tethers May Be Alternative To Prison

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

In a few months, someone convicted in Pitt County of passing worthless checks, breaking and entering, or a number of other offenses may be sentenced to house arrest.

The General Assembly has allotted funding to create an electronic house arrest program in Pitt County, the state director of the Division of Adult Probation-Parole said Friday in Greenville at the annual meeting of probation officials from the 18-county eastern North Carolina branch.

Electronic house arrest programs already operate in Forsyth and Wake counties, John G. Patseavouras said, and they are being expanded to 12 additional counties. With that move, he said North Carolina will be operating more electronic house arrest units than any state in the country but one.

Ann Porter, unit supervisor in Wake County, said they began their program last November and it costs about $4 a day per person, while prison costs the state about $30 a day per inmate. She attended Friday's meeting and helped explain the system.

"In all the time that I've been (on the job), this is one of the most exciting changes we have seen in our work," she said. "It is here to stay. It is a very impressive program. It is a simple, sophisticated program.

"We've had the entire support of our judges, our district attorneys and our attorneys in Wake County," she said.

Funding for Pitt should become available when the new fiscal year begins July 1, and the program, consisting of 100 units, should be implemented by September or October.

The system, which uses a radio signal and computers to monitor the whereabouts of a person, is the hottest new item in the field of criminal punishment because it offers an alternative, Patseavouras said. It is more restrictive than regular probation, yet it helps ease the state's prison overcrowding problem.

"I don't think we've had a single incident of public safety being compromised in (the program)," he said to the group, which met at the Holiday Inn.

Abortion Protesters Block Clinics

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Anti-abortion protesters blocked entrances at medical clinics in New Jersey, California and Florida on Saturday in demonstrations that resulted in the arrests of dozens of people, officials said.

In Los Angeles, more than 700 protesters on both sides of the abortion issue demonstrated outside two medical clinics; more than 40 abortion opponents were arrested in Woodbridge, N.J.; and 87 people were arrested when they blocked a women's clinic in Jacksonville, Fla.

Abortion protest drew smaller crowds in Orange County near Los Angeles and in northern California's Sunnyvale, where 16 demonstrators were arrested and cited, authorities said.

In Woodbridge, police arrested and carried away some of the 350 people who blocked entrances to a medical clinic during a protest dedicated to Nancy Klein, a comatose New York woman who received an abortion Saturday morning in an attempt to help her recover. Anti-abortion activist had tried to stop her husband from becoming her guardian to authorize the procedure.

Members from the Bi-State Operation Rescue Network sat outside the clinic, sang religious hymns and hung on the building their trademark banner that reads, "Killing Factory Closed."

Woodbridge Police Sgt. Myron Dzyak said 200 people were under arrest, but a spokesman for the protestors, Bob Pawson, said 43 people were actually processed and charged with defiant trespass. Police said they did not have a final number of those charged.

In Jacksonville, demonstrators blocking the entrance to an abortion clinic went limp when approached by officers, resulting in 87 trespass arrests, officials said.

Sheriff's Sgt. Steve Weintraub said the demonstration was peaceful. He said protesters were taken into custody after they were warned to leave clinic property. About 200 demonstrators carrying picket signs remained after the arrests to continue their protest, he said.

In Los Angeles, more than 700 people, opposing and supporting abortion, demonstrated outside two medical clinics, with anti-abortion forces blocking entry to one clinic for several hours.

Police in riot gear stood by but no arrests were made.

The two groups clashed verbally, but no altercations were reported. As the anti-abortion demonstrators locked arms and sang hymns, the pro-choice activists shouted, "Right to life, your name's a lie, you don't care if women die."

"It was a tremendous success," said Joseph Foreman, national field director for Operation Rescue, the anti-abortion group that sponsored the demonstration.

Counterdemonstrators also claimed success, citing their large turnout.

"I think it shows the country that pro-choice activists are ready to do battle," said Betty Ann Downing of the American Civil Liberties Union, one of the organizers for the Pro-Choice Coalition.

Sanford Confers With Ortega

The 47-member Commission for the Recovery and Development of Central America — or the Sanford commission, as it is better known — took 18 months to prepare the study.

Sanford did not say how much assistance the commission is recommending, but commission members last month gave a figure of $2.5 billion.

The report also emphasizes the resettlement of refugees throughout Central America as a starting point for economic development, he said.

Honduras hosts thousands of Nicaraguan and Salvadoran refugees.

Nicaraguan rebels known as Contras have lived with their relatives in Honduran camps since U.S. military assistance expired last year. Salvadorans, fleeing the civil war in their country, also have moved across the border into Honduras.

In addition, Nicaraguans seeking to escape a disastrous economic situation in that country have settled in Guatemala, often before continuing to Mexico and the United States.

Sanford said the report did not address the possibility of building a trans-isthmus canal through Nicaragua, but he called the idea "fascinating."

Nicaragua announced on Friday it had set up a committee to study the feasibility of building a canal that would, like the Panama Canal, connect the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. The government said Japanese investors and technicians were interested in participating in the project.

Food Scare Spreads

that claimed the government was delaying publication of a report into another scare — the possibility that meat products from cattle infected with a brain virus could trigger the same disease in humans.

The report will be published soon and there is no health risk because milk and meat from such animals is being destroyed, the government said.

With public concern mounting, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government announced Friday a committee to investigate all aspects of food safety.

The Agriculture Department on Friday ordered farmers to slaughter all salmonella-infected chickens. The disease can be fatal to the elderly and very young.

Also Friday, the government's chief medical officer, Sir Donald Acheson, warned pregnant women not to eat soft cheeses, which could be contaminated by listeria bacteria, and urged that precooked meals be reheated to prevent listeria contamination.

A Ministry of Agriculture spokesman, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Saturday that a ban would be imposed on unpasteurized milk. Pasteurization kills some bacteria and delays the development of others.

Meanwhile, Dairy Crest, Britain's largest butter producer, called in police and recalled all Cornish-brand butter after a container was found to be contaminated by mercury. The company said Saturday there was no risk of harm to humans.

Robin Cook, the opposition Labor Party's health spokesman, welcomed formation of the investigative committee and Acheson's recommendations but said: "I would be more impressed if the guidance to the public was accompanied by regulations on the food industry, to get at the root of the problem."

Even the prime minister's staunchest newspaper supporters expressed doubt the government's actions would quell public anxiety.

"The problem, which the spate of recent food scandals has brought into focus, is the tendency of government departments to mirror producer interests at the public expense," the pro-Thatcher Daily Mail said in an editorial Saturday.

The Financial Times, the respected conservative financial daily, echoed this assessment, saying the government had been "inept" and unable to reconcile the interests of egg producers, represented by the Ministry of Agriculture, with those of consumers who ended up with no voice.

"What we need," the Daily Mail said, "is a separate Whitehall (government) department corresponding to the Food and Drug Administration in the United States, to safeguard the people against the farmers', wholesalers' and retailers' failures and sins."

But Geoffrey Cannon, secretary of the Guild of Food Writers, wrote in The Daily Telegraph on Saturday that the public's demand for inexpensive, mass-produced food had led to the current health scares.

"The truth is that the severe outbreak of salmonella poisoning ... is caused by our demand for cheap eggs.

the international community. Since then, he has gained increased support from West European governments.

Israel, meanwhile, sharply disagreed with the U.S. decision. After the clash, Israeli leaders said the five guerillas — four Palestinians and a Lebanese — had tried to infiltrate Israel to carry out a terrorist raid.

Israeli Ambassador Moshe Arad complained to Baker on Wednesday in Washington and said the incident showed the PLO had not changed its tactics despite Arafat's pledge.

Baker said terrorism was one of the issues he intended to discuss with the 14 foreign ministers he will see on his European tour.

Baker said he hoped to encourage "a collective" approach, but that he would not "foreclose" unilateral retaliation.

The United States bombed Tripoli, Libya, in 1986 in what was described by the Reagan administration as retaliation for Libyan involvement in a terrorist attack on a West German nightclub frequented by Americans.

Baker met for nearly two hours in Iceland with Foreign Minister John Baldvin Hannibalsson.

He then flew to London for meetings Sunday with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Sir Geoffrey Howe, the British foreign secretary.

Baker said the NATO alliance was "extraordinary important" to the Bush administration as it shapes its foreign policy.

"We want them to be in on the takeoff so they can be in on the landing with respect to policy formulation as this administration gets started," he said in an airborne news conference.

Baker again rejected any suggestion the administration was foot-dragging in dealing with the Soviet Union on arms control and other issues.

He said an ongoing review of U.S.-Soviet relations could prompt some U.S. policy changes, but gave no specific examples.

Baker said the Bush administration had not decided when to resume negotiations with the Soviets to reduce long-range nuclear weapons.

The Women Business Owners Association of Pitt County will have its regular meeting Thursday at noon at Three Steers Restaurant. The speaker will be Barbara Cleary, producer and host of "Barbara King on Business," an award-winning syndicated radio program. She will discuss "Success Strategies."

Those interested in attending the luncheon or in becoming a member of the organization may call Marge Franck at 756-0286.

Close Up Week

Pitt County high school students will meet with local and state governmental representatives during the annual Close Up activities scheduled Wednesday and Thursday.

"Local Government in Action Against Drugs and Drug-Related Crimes" is the focus of the event.

Counseling Week

"Counselors Are The Heart of the School" was theme for the National School Counseling Week activities last week at Ayden Middle School.

Activities during the week included a breakfast for teachers, an open house, and a poster contest.

Volunteers

Kim Faulkner and Rosa Segovia have volunteered to help kindergarten students in Spanish class this year. Each class meets for 20 minutes once a week in the library with the Spanish teacher.

Ms. Faulkner is a student at East Carolina University and Ms. Segovia is a parent.

Essay Winners

Stephanie Davis and Shannon Harris, both students at Farmville Middle School, were first place winners in the essay contest of the Major Benjamin May chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Sarah Elizabeth Lewis of H.B. Sugg and Stephanie Turnage of Farmville Middle were second place winners.

Farmville To Dedicate Building

FARMVILLE — The completion of Farmville's million-dollar municipal building will be celebrated Sunday with a 2:30 p.m. dedication and tours which begin about 3 p.m.

According to Mayor Edna Earle Baker, the building's dedication marks the culmination of more than two years of planning and other work to provide the town a central administration-police department facility. Located on the western side of the Walter B. Jones Town Common, the building was constructed, she said, with only local money and without a bond issue.

The structure has about 15,000 square feet. A central two-story section houses a courtroom and council chambers upstairs. The south wing houses administrative offices — including planning, finance, code enforcement, utilities, mayor and town administration offices, and a conference room. The north wing provides space for the police department, including offices, a dispatchers' office and a jail.

Mayor Pro Tem Oliver Murphy will perform the act of dedication, followed by a ribbon cutting by Mayor Edna Earle Baker and Commissioner Marvin Speight. Special remarks will be made by Commissioner John Turner Walston, followed by a history given by Speight. Mayor Baker will give the welcome; Commissioner Alfred Williams Jr., the invocation. Commissioner Joe Kue will lead the pledge of allegiance and Joseph Joyner will be the master of ceremonies. Music will be provided by Kathryn Sauls, Milton Dwight Barnette and John S. Barker III.

Members of the building committee were Speight, Joyner, Sara Albritton, Robert Monk, Frederick Graham and Walston.

The East Group was the architect for the building and Farrior and Sons of Farmville did the construction work.

The contest is designed for fifth through seventh grade students in the Pitt County school system. The theme for this year's contest was "My Favorite Patriot of the American Revolution."

The winners read their essays at the DAR meeting Saturday, and the first-place winners will compete in the state and national contest.

Art Awards

Several Pitt County students were recognized in the ninth annual Scholastic Art Awards program held recently at Atlantic Christian College. The Gold Key and honorable mention exhibits will be on display in the Case Art Building at the college until Feb. 21.

County students recognized in the program are listed according to their schools.

Attended Meeting

Jonathan Li, a senior at J.H. Rose High School, recently attended the National Student Academy of Science meeting in San Francisco. He was selected to be North Carolina's student delegate for the meeting through his winning research paper submitted for state competition in the North Carolina Student Academy of Science.

Li also recently was named one of 300 semifinalists in the 1988 Westinghouse Talent Search. Student applicants for the award submit papers detailing their independent research projects. Li is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Chia-Yu Li of Greenville.

Scholarship

A $250 Marie Wallace Dance Scholarship award has been presented to LaVonda Gaskin of Wilmington, a senior student in the East Carolina University Department of Theatre Arts.

The Wallace awards for outstanding ECU dance students are made from a fund established by the owner of a Greenville dance studio.

Ms. Gaskin has participated in several productions of the ECU Dance Theatre and the ECU Playhouse during her studies here. She has also toured with "5,6,7,8," an ECU student repertory company and appeared in Wilmington area dance productions. She was a dancer in the motion picture "Traxx," starring Christopher Lloyd, which was filmed at DEG Studios in 1987.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lavern Gaskin of Wilmington, Ms. Gaskin graduated from New Hanover High School. She is a candidate for the Bachelor of Fine Arts degree in dance.

Trash Trailer

City leaders will unveil a new weapon in their arsenal to protect the environment and county landfill on Monday when they dedicate a new trailer to collect recyclable materials, said Greenville Public Information Officer Greg Brown.

Brown said the Greenville Recycling Committee and top administrators of the city's Public Works Department will conduct a brief ceremony at 5 p.m. at the Public Works Complex on Beatty Street. He said the trailer will be parked at four sites throughout the city each week.

Tentative plans call for the Public Works Department to park the trailer at Club Pines Park on Mondays; Elmhurst School on Tuesdays; Kroger's off Greenville Boulevard on Wednesdays and Harris Supermarket on N.C. 11 on Thursdays.

Student Musicians Attend Clinic

Approximately 175 junior and senior high school band musicians from 37 schools recently participated in the 1989 Eastern All-State Band Clinic at East Carolina University.

The clinic was hosted by the ECU School of Music. Participants were selected by audition for the two-day event, which included intense rehearsals and a concluding performance.

Students were organized into two bands: the Concert Band and the Symphonic Band. Clinicians were Roger Pemberton, jazz artist in residence at the University of South Carolina, and Mark Ford, coordinator of percussion at the ECU School of Music.

Also participating in the clinic were about 50 school band directors.

During their visit to ECU, the school musicians attended a Friday evening concert on campus which featured the ECU Symphonic Wind Ensemble and the ECU Jazz Ensemble.

Local students participating, listed according to their home counties, were: Beaufort: Timothy Odom and Gary McSweeney; Greene: Hansel Suggs; Martin: Jason McCandless, and Pitt: Rolf Sundwall, Tim Mayberry, Andrea Parham, Alisa Tinkham, Evan Kane, Brian Post and Milton Carawan.

Special Meeting

The eastern North Carolina chapter of the American Society for Training and Development will hold a special meeting Thursday at the Western Sizzlin Steak House at 5:30 p.m. The meeting is designed to familiarize interested newcomers about the chapter. Doug Gardner, the assistant regional director of ASTD, will be the speaker.

For more information call Leslie Spencer at 399-4271 or Lillian Roberts at 551-4466.

Research Grant

The ECU Planning Society, an organization of alumni and supporters of East Carolina University's Urban and Regional Planning Program, has presented a $1,000 research grant to three ECU geography and planning professors.

Dr. Mulatu Wubneh, Dr. Richard Stephenson, and Professor Wes Hankins will use the grant to study economic development in eastern North Carolina.

The grant, which is the society's first, was formally announced Saturday during the organization's annual banquet at Greenville Country Club. Money for the grant came from alumni contributions.

Dr. Richard R. Eakin, ECU chancellor, presented the society's 1989 Distinguished Alumni Award to E. Watson Brown of Raleigh for outstanding achievements in the planning profession.

Honor Roll

A dozen students in grades one through six are on the honor roll at St. Gabriel's Catholic School, West Fifth Street.

Those on the first honors list are: Bobby Sellers, Kia Barriteau, Taneca Ebron, Rachel Griffen, Kevina Henry, Maria Trent, Candice Ward and Kevin Dixon. On the second honors list are: Sommer Daniels, Cornelia Anderson, Dawn Forrest, and Tiffany Moore.

PCC Classes

Pitt Community College will start an adult furniture upholstery class and a sewing class, both in Ayden, this week.

The upholstery class will begin at 7 p.m. Monday at the old Ayden High School. The class will meet Mondays and Wednesdays from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. for 10 weeks.

A sewing class will start at 7 p.m. at the Ayden Housing Authority office. For information, call Pitt Community College, 355-4253.

Spangler's Board Status Studied

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAPEL HILL — In an apparent response to the business activities of UNC system President C.D. Spangler, the Board of Governors is considering developing a policy on university officials' participation on corporate boards.

Robert L. "Roddy" Jones, a Raleigh developer and chairman of the UNC board, said board members likely would discuss developing a policy on the matter during a four-day retreat planned for April.

The UNC president, a Charlotte businessman before taking the university post, sits on the boards of BellSouth Corp. and Jefferson-Pilot Corp. His predecessor, former UNC President William C. Friday, did not serve on any corporate boards during his 30-year tenure.

Court documents filed last month revealed that Spangler had approached F. Ross Johnson, president of RJR Nabisco Inc., with an unsolicited offer to buy the company. Spangler's offer, made months before Johnson opened a bidding battle that resulted in a buyout, was rejected.

Jones said that he did not object to Spangler's participation on corporate boards, but that some board members did.

Taft Says Highway Building Proposal Would Help Eastern N.C.

crease in the wholesale gasoline tax rate (from 3 percent to 7 percent); a 2 percent net sales or appraised value tax on title transfers for vehicles, with an exemption for off-road farm and construction equipment, and authorization of a toll authority that could build and maintain toll facilities where appropriate.

The Goldston funding proposal, designed to raise $7 billion in new money over the next 12 years — $5 billion to widen key roads to four lanes and $2 billion for loops around major cities — would increase the state motor fuel tax by about 4½ cents per gallon, to about 19.95 cents per gallon at the pump, which is at the upper level of state gasoline taxes nationwide.

Taft said the planned system of roads (already approved by the study commission) and the funding package are "truly an investment in the future of North Carolina."

"I can't say how enormous an undertaking it really is because the dollars are so staggering (about a billion dollars a year). But it's necessary if we're going to keep up."

Sen. Marc Basnight of Manteo, a member of the Highway Study Commission and chairman of the Senate Base Budget Committee, said last week that he likes the portion of the plan which would build highways in the east. "I like it very much. It serves the east very, very well with the exception of a couple of areas."

One of those areas, Basnight suggested, is N.C. 11 from Greenville to Bethel. N.C. 11 "needs to be added in the TIP (Transportation Improvement Plan) or this plan, to four-lane quality," he said.

And, Basnight said, "somewhere on 264 we need to punch in some appropriate rest areas (and) expand (to four lanes) 264 from Douglas Crossroads at Washington, to Belhaven," which will "allow for future economic growth."

The U.S. 264 project now stops at N.C. 32 just east of Washington, Basnight said. "We really need to extend that."

According to Basnight, the road plan "certainly enhances all the counties that border the U.S. 17 corridor as well as the Greenville-Pitt County area. It would place Greenville between interstate roads ... one interstate (I-95) and one of interstate quality (U.S. 17). That would bring about other economic opportunity for the school (East Carolina University) as well as the city and county."

Basnight suggested that the 12-year proposal might have to be increased to 15 years to take care of the needs. And he said, "I think we need to write into law what roads will be built in the 12- to 15-year period so people will know what to expect.

"It has great potential for all of us, but it is going to be expensive.

"The funding proposal is not what I would prefer," Basnight said, although "it might be the best we can do."

State Transportation Secretary James Harrington told Board of Transportation members last week that once the recommendations to the General Assembly are approved by the study commission, the proposals would have to go through at least six committees in the House and three in the Senate before going to the floors of the General Assembly.

Auditions Planned

Smiles and Frowns Playhouse will hold auditions on Tuesday at 4 p.m. for its production of "Charlotte's Web." Call back will be on Wednesday. The auditions will be in Wahl Coates Elementary School auditorium. There are 18 speaking parts and several non-speaking roles.

Auditions are open to anyone aged 5 to 17. Scripts are on reserve at both Sheppard and East Branch Libraries. Parents must be present with children during auditions.

The production is scheduled to be presented April 14 and 15 at D.H. Conley High School. For more information, call 756-4959 or 355-7453.

Carter Visits

Greenville Mayor Ed Carter recently visited eighth graders at Wellcome Middle School to discuss the importance of education and how it has influenced his life.

Carter also showed a video tape of different events in his life and his families' life.

Counseling Week

In observance of National School Counseling Week last week, Greenville Middle School students participated in several activities. They participated in a essay contest and a poster contest where first through third grade winners were chosen. Also students were given pens, pencils, notepads and keychains. The faculty and staff were served breakfast, and there was a drawing each day to award a prize to faculty and staff members.

School Seminar

Greenville Middle School will conduct the seminar "What's Happening in Physical Education, Occupation, Performing Arts and Visual Arts?" Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the media center.

Dental Health

Students at South Greenville School are participating in several activities to promote Dental Health Week Monday through Friday.

Students have made hall banners, bulletin boards and dental health announcements for the intercom.

"Sugar Free Day" will be held Wednesday, and kindergarteners will display their art work at NCNB. Students will march in a parade at the school Friday.

In observance of National School Counseling Week last week, Pat Kelly, the counselor was remembered with flowers presented by the school. The teacher were honored with a luncheon, and students learned more about having a positive self-esteem.

Light Study

Billy Creech, manager of Greenville Opticians, recently visited South Greenville School. He presented a concave and convex lenses while explaining the importance of focusing light. His visit was in conjunction with a study on light.

Black History

During the week of Feb. 20, South Greenville School will culminate studies on black history. Students have been studying famous black people by making posters, doing reports and creating skits in the classroom.

Allan Bailey of Carver Library will read to kindergarten through fifth graders Feb. 21, and Greenville Mayor Ed Carter and a dance troupe from Kinston will visit students Feb. 23.

Students Honored

The J.H. Rose High School Academic Boosters held a breakfast Thursday to honor about 80 students who earned places on the honor roll or principal's list for the third grading period.

Pactolus Activities

An attendence rally recently was held at Pactolus Elementary School for students with perfect attendance. Students with one absence received special buttons.

Greenville Mayor Ed Carter visited third-, fourth- and fifth-grade students to discuss the importance of education and citizenship. He also highlighted the school's observance of "Black History Month."

Conley Celebration

D.H. Conley High School celebrated "National School Counseling Week" Monday through Friday.

On Monday, counselors wore T-shirts depicting the theme "Counselors Are the Heart of the School."

On Tuesday, approximately 80 speakers were on hand for "Career Day." On Wednesday, teachers received tips for relating to students. Charles Lancaster of the Carolina Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers spoke to 10th- and 11th-grade English classes about college preparation.

The faculty was treated Thursday to a luncheon hosted by counselors and balloons were distributed. Counselors planned to explain their program today to community leaders. Students were to receive brochures explaining the guidance department's services and ninth-grade English classes received a suggested time line for making post-high school plans.

Career Day Held

D. H. Conley High School hosted its annual "Career Day" Tuesday. Representaives of Burroughs Wellcome, Pitt Community College and East Carolina University spoke.

Concealed Weapon

Greenville Police Officer M.R. Benton said Tony Jerome Harrell, 31, of Jamesville was arrested at 5:57 p.m. Friday and charged with carrying a concealed weapon after police found Harrell holding a six-inch fishing knife wrapped in a coat he carried.

Assault Charge

Greenville Police Officer F.G. Pruitt said John Thomas Hardner, 21, of Farmville was arrested at 2 a.m. Saturday and charged with assault on a female.

In other Saturday arrests, Officer A.J. Dennison said Alexander Ressy of Route 15, Box 242, Greenville was arrested at 10:25 a.m. and charged with shoplifting four VCR tapes.

Officer W.S. Heath said Adam Ellsworth Hucks, 17, of 207B Lindbeth Drive was arrested at 1:55 p.m. and charged with shoplifting two cassette tapes from Nichols Department Store.

Child Critical After Dog Attack

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A 3-year-old Kinston boy was in critical condition Saturday after being attacked by his babysitter's dog, authorities say.

Kinston police said the victim, identified as Regis Dickson, was discovered behind his baby sitter's house an hour after animal control officers had shot the boxer puppy, which had bitten a man earlier in the afternoon.

The child, the son of Valerie Coffen, 25, was in critical condition at Pitt County Memorial Hospital in Greenville after he was flown by helicopter from Lenior Memorial Hospital.

A spokeswoman for PCMH would not give details about the type of injuries that the child suffered during the attack Friday afternoon.

Kinston police spokesman William W. Wyatt said authorities received a complaint about 3 p.m. that a dog had bitten a passerby in front of a house near downtown Kinston. After responding to the call, police and animal control officers tried to capture the dog, but were forced to kill it with a shotgun.

"As I understand it, three dogs were chained in the yard, and witnesses said after a fight, one of them apparently got loose," Wyatt said.

The passerby, Charlie Taft, 41, received only minor bites, and was not hospitalized, Wyatt said.

About a half-hour after the officers left the scene, the police department received another call about the dog, saying the dog had bitten a child. Police searched the yard and found the child, lying unconscious amid stacks of cordwood and abandoned automobiles.

Threat Is Called Hoax

A bomb threat called into the Greenville Bus Station Friday turned out to be a hoax, Greenville police said Saturday.

According to Officer K.L. Jones, Clarence Smith received a telephoned bomb threat from a man who, Smith said, sounded intoxicated. The caller did not say when the bomb would be detonated, and an investigation found no explosives at the site.

In other incidents reported Friday, Jones said the theft of two television sets, worth $350, from Tri-County East at 745 Greenville Blvd. was reported at 9:08 a.m.

Officer E.A. Tyson said the theft of a $65 purse containing a credit card and some loose change from a car parked at Tammy's Day Care on Medical Drive was reported at 7:17 a.m.

Officer D.R. Wyrick said the larceny of a $30 coffee maker, a $20 AM-FM clock radio and a $12 AM-FM radio from the Superior Construction Site on West Third Street was reported at 7:53 a.m.

Wyrick said the theft of a $280 pager from 1717 W. Fifth St. was reported at 10:12 a.m.

Meanwhile, Officer H.D. Hines said a car was reported stolen from Dollar Automotive at 8:45 a.m. Hines said the car was leased to a man on Feb. 2 and was not returned by the Feb. 4 deadline.

And Hines said the larceny of six car radios and one CB radio from cars at Dewey's Auto Service, 305 Airport Road, was reported at 10:50 a.m.

Officer K.M. Smeltzer said the windshield of a car at Sweet Caroline's was broken, causing $75 damage, in an incident reported at 8:47 a.m., and Officer A.T. Parrish said a car parked at 403 S. Oak St. was pelted by eggs, causing $500 in damages, in an incident reported at 12:47 p.m.

Officer P.K. Burrows said the theft of a $296 bicycle from H-6 Wilson Acres was reported at 4:17 p.m. Burrows also said James Earl Cox was assaulted by an unidentified man at the corner of Pamlico and Fleming streets in an incident reported at 6:13 p.m. The assailant hit Cox in the stomach with a shovel handle, Burrows said.

Officer K.L. Hadnott said someone tried to force access to the freezer in S&S Cafeteria at the Carolina East Mall, causing $250 damage in an incident reported at 6:34 p.m.

And Officer R.S. Sawyer said the driver's side of a car parked at 1317 Rondo Drive was scratched, causing $200 damage in an incident reported at 7:47 p.m.

Cocaine Seized

BURLINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Cocaine valued at $30,000 and $16,219 in cash were seized at a Burlington service station Friday.

The sweep, which began at about 7 p.m., resulted in the arrest of James Gordon Thompson, 44, of Road, Graham, on multiple felony charges.

Burlington police detectives, who said Thompson was an employee at Al's Exxon Service Station, where the raid occurred, also said that Oma Joella Jones, 23, of Graham, was charged with misdemeanor possession of cocaine.

Reading Offers Man New World

During their early sessions, Dawson gave Newton simple tests. He learned that Newton knew all his letters. He saw that he could write. But he also found that, even though he could copy words, he could not understand what those words meant.

It was like the experience most people have in copying a foreign language. The writer may form the letters clearly and expertly, but the message they would conveyed would be lost.

So Dawson started making flash cards, teaching letter and letter-combination sounds, gradually increasing Newton's reading vocabulary.

Today, Newton can read. He still misses many words and sounding new ones is still difficult, but the envelope containing words he knows is growing. He keeps a journal in a composition book and writes daily of his discoveries concerning reading and the world it's opening to him.

And he's reading simple stories and answering questions about them. He and Dawson even make up their own stories, incorporating words that Dawson believes Newton needs to learn.

Newton was a child from a culturally deprived home. He grew up as the only child of a woman who had missed out on education during her childhood. He was a tiny fellow living among adults until he was 6 and then he was placed in a roomful of children, most of whom learned quickly to read. He did not.

He learned his letters and he learned to form them in such a way that his handwriting continues to be beautiful. But he never broke the code — he never caught on to how to figure out what the words on the page meant. No one ever had or took the time to give him the individual attention he apparently needed to learn to sound out words and discover a pattern that would help him retain written language for himself.

"I remember being in the first grade," he said, "and failing my grade. Then I was in the second grade — and I failed my grade. Then I was in the third grade — and I failed my grade. By then I was getting to be a great big boy. I felt so different from the other children."

In the schools of Fremont, he was pegged as a quiet, well-behaved child who couldn't learn — perhaps retarded. In the community, he was quiet and well-mannered and people knew him as a boy you could give simple tasks and expect to do them well.

While he was spending six years in the first three primary grades of school, Newton's mother was in an automobile accident. "She wasn't right after that," he said. "She had spells and she was in and out of the hospital all the time. I had to take care of her."

So he started missing school and working at odd jobs to make money for him and his mother. "I guess I felt kind of sad about dropping out of school after the third grade," he said. "But it seemed to me like I just couldn't learn. And nobody in the family and nobody at the school seemed to think I could. It seemed like nobody cared when I stopped going to school, so gradually I just didn't go any more."

Newton became known around Fremont as someone you could get to do a good job picking up pecans, raking your leaves, picking your cotton. One man admired his industry so much that he bought him a lawnmower and, from then on, he was available for hire to cut grass.

Into adulthood, Newton's life didn't improve much. He tried brief departures from Fremont to work first in Virginia and then in Florida. But he always worried about his mother and returned home. The years went by.

"I thought about learning a lot and wished I could read like other people," he said. "I wanted my driver's license, but I didn't feel like I could get it when I couldn't read. Sometimes I would sit down and copy words just to be writing. My handwriting's good, you know."

His mother died in 1975 and, by then, Newton had taken up drinking. He didn't stay drunk all the time, but drinking definitely didn't make his life any better.

A few years ago, he was sent to the East Carolina Vocational Center in Greenville for job training. "They gave me a lot of little jobs to do out there, taught me a lot of skills," he said. "I was glad for it. It was a good place to live. But I felt like I could be making more money than that if I put my mind to it.

"Finally I got a chance to work at Annabelle's Restaurant as a dishwasher. When I first heard dishwasher, I said, 'I don't want to be no dishwasher.'

"But then I changed my mind. I'd done a lot of really hard outdoor work and I thought it would be nice to work inside through the winter months."

It was at Annabelle's, he said, when he first felt that even people he didn't know very well really cared about him as a person. His supervisor reprimanded him once for coming to work after having been drinking. "I thought I was going to be fired," he said, "But instead, they just encouraged me to get some help and told me I'd have a job when I was through."

He got the treatment for alcoholism he needed, started attending Alcoholics Anonymous meetings, and it's now been well over a year since he's had a drink.

"My life really got better after I quit drinking," he said. "I got some raises at work and I started saying to myself, 'Chester, if all these people really care about you as much as they seem to, then why don't you care something about yourself and do something good for yourself — like why don't you learn to read?'"

It was about that time that he saw the television ad that enabled him to enroll in the LVA tutoring program.

Newton related a gratification of his that some might find hard to understand. "When I put up stock at the restaurant," he said, "I used to have to open a carton first and find out from pictures on the cans what was inside so I'd know where to put it. Now, most of the time, I can just read the printing on the outside of the box and take it to where it needs to be before I open it. That's a thrill for me."

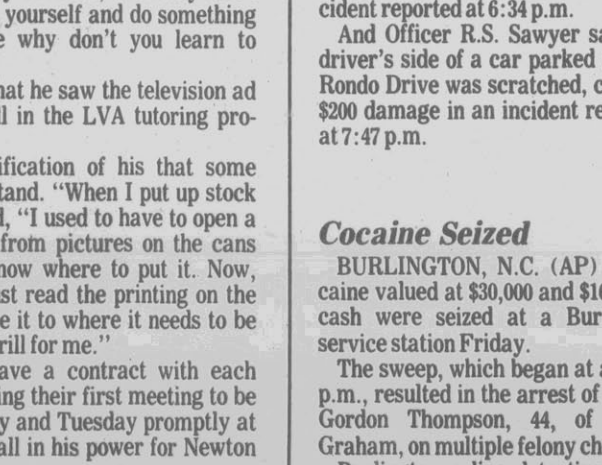

Newton and Dawson have a contract with each other. The two agreed during their first meeting to be at the library each Monday and Tuesday promptly at 6 p.m. and for each to do all in his power for Newton to learn to read.

A workshop to train tutors will begin Monday and continue for three weeks on Mondays and Wednesdays from 7 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. at the First Christian Church on Greenville Boulevard. To sign up or obtain information, call 752-0439 or 757-3615.

Wake County probation officials Tim Moose and Ann Porter show house arrest equipment

Electronic Tethers Aid Officers

person meets with probation officials and agrees to participate in the program. Wake keeps people under house arrest from 30 days up to six months. Under the plan, the person agrees not to drink alcohol or take drugs, and outlines an exact schedule for every day of the week. The person may go no where except to work, school, treatment centers or church.

"It is more controlled than the intensive ... (probation program, where officers meet with clients at least five times a week). The object of the game is: keep them out of prison and do all you can before asking a judge for revocation," Ms. Porter said.

For example, a person serving three years of probation may spend the first four months under house arrest. Or, if someone has violated terms of regular probation, a judge may choose to place him under house arrest for a few months instead of revoking probation and sending him to prison. Other times, a judge may sentence someone to house arrest for the entire length of the sentence.

"It's an extra resource for us. It's an alternative within an alternative," said Robert Lee Guy of Greenville, director of the eastern branch of probation and parole.

Under the house arrest program, a receiver about the size of a telephone answering machine is installed in the home and it maintains a radio signal with a unit the person wears on a plastic bracelet around the wrist or ankle. If the person strays more than 200 feet from the receiver, probation officials are notified by pager.

If the person leaves the house late for work or returns off schedule, the computer immediately notifies probation officers and produces a hard copy of the violation, Wake County house arrest officer Tim Moose said.

The computer also stores a voice recording of the client and can be programmed to telephone the person at whatever location he is supposed to be during the day or night. The computer can detect an impostor and it will also show a skewed reading if the person has been drinking or taking drugs.

If the person cuts the bracelet off within 200 feet of the receiver, the computer sends a signal to the officer. Tampering with it is considered a violation of probation. Only one person in Wake has tampered with the bracelet, and the person received a seven-year prison sentence, Moose said. In Forsyth, a person was sentenced to 10 years in prison for tampering with the device.

If a person leaves on time in the morning, he could cut off the bracelet and make a run for it once he is more than 200 feet from the receiver. But the probation officer would know of the violation when the person was supposed to return home. Also, Ms. Porter said it is unlikely that the person could escape because officers make personal visits each week and check to see if the person is on the job each day.

Patseavouras said the company that manufactures the system is working to create a bracelet that would send a signal to officers if it was tampered with at any time.

Three officers will be promoted to handle the house arrest program, Guy said, and three new probation officers will be hired.

Also, with the state set to create about 450 new probation-related jobs in the next two years, Guy said he has requested that Pitt County receive a second two-man intensive probation team.

The teams supervise a maximum of 25 clients, usually felons, and each member of the team is allowed to carry a weapon. The officers personally visit clients in the morning and evening to see that they are abiding by a curfew. Guy said the teams are a bridge between law enforcement officers and probation officials, and William Bonar, supervisor of the Pitt County office, said the intensive probation teams have been extremely successful in Pitt.

"I have not heard one officer in Pitt County express any animosity toward intensive probation," he said. "It's another resource for us."

Superior Court Judge David E. Reid Jr. of Greenville, who addressed the group after lunch, said he supported the intensive probation program.

He said he also supported the house arrest program. It is a safe method to punish criminals while they are forced to keep their job and function as a productive member of society, he said.

"This electronic house arrest program ... is going to be another tool that is not only going to be helpful to the courts, but to society," Reid said.

Dog Finds Skeleton

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ELIZABETH CITY, N.C. — A foraging dog uncovered a human skeleton at a Weeksville migrant labor camp, Pasquotank County Sheriff Davis Sawyer says.

Sawyer said the skeleton was that of a human child, and has been sent to the state forensic pathologist in Greenville to be identified.

He said a dog Monday carried a skull to a yard near the labor camp. Deputies began searching for the rest of the skeleton and discovered it Wednesday.

Sawyer said no tissue was found with the bones, and estimated it would take over a year for a body to decay to that point.

Sawyer said the skull had some marks on it but could not say whether the marks were the result of natural wear or had been intentionally inflicted. The sheriff would not speculate on the possible identity of the child, but a 10-year-old boy was reported missing from the labor camp on June 7, 1987.

Sawyer said he did not believe that Ricky Lee Alexander, who disappeared from the camp, has ever been found, but "I cannot connect that (the skeleton) with the child for the time being. I'm not saying it is, I'm not saying it isn't."

Searchers combed the labor camp area in June and July of 1987 but found no traces of Alexander, who disappeared while visiting his grandmother at the camp. The boy was from Hastings, Fla.

Legislator Loses State Job Because Of Time Conflicts

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — State Rep. Stephen Wood no longer has to worry about any possible conflict of interest between his state job as a veterans affairs officer and his chairmanship of a legislative subcommittee on veterans' issues.

He lost his state job Friday after being denied an extended leave of absence to serve in the legislature.

"We regret that he's caught in the middle of this, but he can be in the legislature or maintain his position in the division of veterans affairs — not both," said Margaret Smith of the state Department of Administration.

Wood, a two-term Republican from High Point, advised veterans on state and federal programs related to jobs, health and housing from the regional office in Winston-Salem. He said he felt blindsided by the state's decision.

"I checked with the Institute of Government and the state employees association and neither of them saw reason for a conflict," Wood said.

"I just can't believe that the concern here is that, if the position is left open, the General Assembly would decide to delete funding for the job of one of its members."

"By giving him a six- to-eight-month leave time, it communicates that the position isn't needed, which sends the wrong message," Ms. Smith told the Winston-Salem Journal.

Ms. Smith conceded that no formal policy deals with the action. "I think this is the first time that it has come up," she told the Winston-Salem Journal.

Sam W. Badgett of the State Personnel Office said that, although the issue rarely comes up, tradition has held that state employees can't serve two masters.

"The practice has been that a person would resign if elected to office, but I don't know how widely it has applied," Badgett said.

Without the $23,700 that the job paid, Wood draws $11,124 a year as a legislator plus the rewards of his role as a Quaker minister.

Wood said that he doesn't plan to fight the decision.

"Fortunately, my New Year's resolution was, 'No whine before its time in '89,'" he said.

At least two other legislators are public employees who also serve in the House.

Rep. John L. Tart, D-Wayne, is serving his first term while enjoying a flexible leave from his post as the president of Johnson Community College.

"I work on Mondays and Fridays when the House is not in session and sometimes on Saturdays," Tart said. "I have a leave of absence for the time that the legislature is in session and get paid to work two days a week."

Tart said that he is not subject to the State Personnel Act.

In Pilot Mountain, Rep. David H. Diamont, D-Surry, also has an adjustable leave of absence from his post as the head football coach and social studies teacher at East Surry High School.

Auto Insurance Reforms Go Into Effect This Year

By F. Alan Boyce
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — All the hoopla surrounding North Carolina's automobile insurance system came in the last session of the General Assembly, but the payoff will come this May.

Last session, efforts to spread the cost of insurance more fairly drew massive media coverage. And the public may think it was all for naught, said Bill Hale, deputy insurance commissioner.

"People feel like their rates are going up and they are right," he said. "But we hope people will be seeing them come down in May and maybe get some refunds down the road."

The problem is that the reforms enacted last session called for the Insurance Commissioner Jim Long to examine the system and decide how to restructure it in league with the North Carolina Rate Bureau, which represents insurance companies.

"The Rate Bureau came up with a plan Feb. 1 and Jim didn't like it," said Hale. "We just went back and forth with the Rate Bureau. They're really slow and it's hard for them to get their various committees together."

With a lead-in time of six months, the new rates could have taken effect in August, but the delays pushed it back to May 15.

Sen. David Parnell, D-Robeson, chairman of the Senate Insurance Committee, said lawmakers and their constituents were a bit perplexed.

"I have to admit some of us were a bit peeved at the amount of time he's taken," Parnell said. "But I guess he has his reasons."

The restructuring is good news for drivers with clean records and even better news for those with just one point on their records, Hale said.

Drunken drivers, however, will be hit even harder. That offense will increase from 10 points to 12, so instead of a premium increase of 350 percent someone convicted of DWI will see rates go up 400 percent.

And new drivers face the next highest increase. Currently, a new driver pays 100 percent more for insurance in the first two years. The new law will allow an experience-based surcharge for a driver's first three years behind the wheel, but it allows a lower surcharge for drivers who use their car only occasionally.

For example, the new driver of a car that would normally have premiums of $100 a year would pay $250 for liability and collision insurance the first year if he were the principal operator. If he used the car only occasionally, it would cost $225 a year.

Multicar policies would be slightly less expensive, with the principal operator paying $230 the first two years and $180 in the third.

Drivers with "almost clean" records stand to benefit substantially, Hale said. Right now, a driver who runs a stop sign gets one insurance point and is assessed twice. He gets hit with a 10 percent premium surcharge and another surcharge to compensate the North Carolina Reinsurance Facility — a pool that shares high-risk drivers. The total increase is 42 percent.

"Under the new system, if everybody on the policy has a clean record, they only get a 15 percent surcharge," Hale said. "They don't get the recoupment on top of that."

So someone now paying $142 a year with one point would see the premium fall to $115, for example.

Another change will be seen by a driver who receives a prayer for judgment continued on driving charges. Currently, those rulings, which amount to a guilty plea in exchange for probation, carry insurance points. Under the new law, "every household gets a free PJC," Hale said.

Drivers also will be able to pay for their own repairs to avoid insurance points stemming from accidents that don't involve personal injuries. And the amount of damage that carries one insurance point will increase from $500 to $1,000.

Hale said paying for repairs won't keep insurance companies from levying a surcharge for the fact that you had an accident. But a bill introduced this session by Rep. Gerald Anderson, D-Craven, would eliminate all surcharges in such instances.

Also eliminated will the the "double whammy" under which someone who runs a stop sign — a one-point offense — and causes damage to another car worth two insurance points now is saddled with all three points. Under the new law, only the higher-point infraction will be considered — in this case, two points.

The other main changes would slightly increase premiums for people who drive less than 10 miles to work, although they still will pay less than long-distance commuters. And there will be a small discount in medical premiums for people who own cars with factory-equipped air bags.

One change that may not go over well involves speeders on rural interstates. Under current law, speeders going less than 10 miles an hour over the posted speed limit are not assessed insurance points — even if they are going 74 mph in a 65 mph zone. The new law will assess points for anyone caught driving more than 65 mph.

"That was a conscious decision made by the legislature in 1987," Hale said. "They think that should be an absolute maximum."

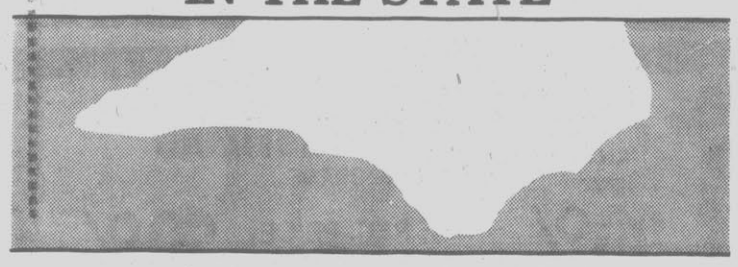

The net effect of the impending changes on the 1989 General Assembly is to put it into a kind of insurance limbo.

"We're pretty much going to see how it works," said Parnell.

"We're content to sit and wait and let it take effect," said Benjamin Seagle, a lobbyist for Aetna Insurance Co. "It will probably take at least a year to get a feel for how it's working."

Apartment Fire

RALEIGH (AP) — About 17 people were left homeless Friday after a fire swept through an apartment complex in Raleigh.

The blaze and smoke heavily damaged six apartments, and two more may have suffered some smoke damage, fire officials said. All the residents were able to get out of their apartments safely and no injuries were reported.

"I'm just glad nobody got hurt," said Andres Barrios, who last weekend had moved with his wife and three children into one of the now-destroyed apartments.

Teachers' Pay

RESEARCH TRIANGLE PARK, N.C. (AP) — Teachers in the Southeast earned salaries $10,000 less last year than other comparable college-educated workers, according to a study to be released in March.

Teachers in a six-state southern region including North Carolina received average raises of less than 4 percent during the 1987-88 academic year, earning roughly $23,000.

Non-teaching workers with college degrees earned close to $34,000 over the same period, posting average raises of closer to 5 percent.

The raises for teachers were the smallest recorded since 1982 by the federally funded Southeastern Educational Improvement Laboratory.

Listing For Deaf

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Speech- and hearing-impaired customers in North Carolina and three other states served by Southern Bell are receiving a new directory listing all residences, businesses and institutions which have a telecommunications device for the deaf.

It is the first company-wide TDD director every produced by Southern Bell.

A TTD is a machine that looks like a small portable typewriter which enables speech- and hearing-impaired customers to converse by typing messages that are sent over telephone lines.

Umstead Director

RALEIGH (AP) — Human Resources Secretary David Flaherty has announced the appointment of B. Gene Barrett of Raleigh as the new director of John B. Umstead Hospital in Butner.

Barrett, 49, replaces Buddy Hall, who has accepted the post of hospital directore at Broughton Hospital in Morganton. Barrett officially began his duties on Feb. 1.

John B. Umstead Hospital in Butner is one of North Carolina's four regional psychiatric hospitals under the jurisdiction of the Department of Human Resources' Division of Mental Health, Mental Retardation and Substance Abuse Services.

Flight Hearing

CLINTON, N.C. (AP) — Some 200 people attended a public hearing where a number of Sampson County residents spoke against a proposal that would allow F-4 Phantom fighter from Seymour Johnson Air Force Base to make low-flying over the county.

Most of the speakers said they were afraid the flights would ruin rural Sampson County's turkey industry.

"If a plane flies over and our birds pile up and suffocate, we can't afford that," Pam Tew, a turkey and hog farmer from Salemsburg, said at the public hearing Thursday. "What would we do then? What can we do?"

The Air Force hopes to use the airspace over almost all of Sampson County to fly training missions at altitudes down to 300 feet above ground and at speeds of about 250 knots per hour.

New Attorneys

GREENSBORO (AP) — A new anti-drug law passed by Congress last year will add eight positions, five of them prosecutors, to the three U.S. Attorneys' offices in North Carolina.

The U.S. Attorney's office in Greensboro has hired two new assistant U.S. attorneys and will add one person to its support staff, U.S. Attorney Bob Edmunds said.

The U.S. Attorney's office for the Eastern District will add one assistant U.S. attorney and one paralegal. The U.S. Attorney's office for the Western District will add two assistant U.S. attorneys and at least one support staff position.

Hospital Funds

ASHEVILLE (AP) — Federal budget crunches will leave Asheville Veterans Administration Medical Center about $1 million short of funds this fiscal year, but hospital officials say that won't affect the quality of care they provide.

"We are facing a shortfall that will make things tighter for us, but it's my job to find ways to continue to serve the veterans the best way we can within our allotted dollars," director James A. Christian said.

Although the hospital is facing a $1 million shortage in its $50.6 million budget, Christian said he hopes Congress will authorize a supplemental appropriation to ease budget problems for the entire VA system.

Mavretic To Change Prisons Committee

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — House Speaker Joe Mavretic says reshuffling the House members on a special legislative panel studying the state's prisons will bring a wider range of expertise, but critics say the changes could cripple the panel's work.

The Special Committee on Prisons has been studying North Carolina's troubled prison system as the legislature begins to grapple with solving overcrowding and other problems.

Mavretic says the changes he plans would ensure that "we have experience in the corrections area for the next two years to handle this very critical matter."

But Sen. David Parnell, D-Robeson, who has been the co-chairman of the panel, said putting new House members on the committee would slow the work of that previous House members have done, particularly Rep. Anne C. Barnes, D-Orange, the House co-chairman.

Parnell said he was considering asking the Senate not to concur with Mavretic's changes.

"I'm considering scrapping the committee," he said. "At this point, to be honest with you, I think we might not reconstitute the committee."

"That committee was two months away from completing some very important parts of its work," said Lao E. Rubert, executive director of the N.C. Prison and Jail Project in Durham. "A new committee will have to start all over again."

Mavretic, a Democrat from Edgecombe County, plans to replace the House members on the committee with the seven members of a corrections subcommittee he has appointed. That would result in Rep. Frank J. "Trip" Sizemore, R-Guilford, the subcommittee chairman, becoming a co-chairman of the special committee.

Two members of the corrections subcommittee, including Ms. Barnes, have served on the special committee.

Parnell also said that some senators feel that Ms. Barnes — who would still be a member of the special committee — is not being treated fairly by Mavretic, whom she did not support when he was elected speaker last month.

Mavretic said the move was not an attempt to punish Ms. Barnes. She declined to discuss the situation.

Tribal Judge Orders Arrest Of Hatcher

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT HALL, Idaho — Another hearing has been set for Monday for Eddie Hatcher, who is wanted for kidnapping in North Carolina, after Hatcher failed to appear in tribal court.

A tribal judge issued an arrest warrant for Hatcher on Friday, after Hatcher did not appear in court.

Jack Ross, Hatcher's Pocatello attorney, said he feared Hatcher had left the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, where he had sought the protection of the Shoshone-Bannock tribes. A court official said Hatcher has been living in a church on the reservation.

Hatcher, 31, is wanted on 14 counts of kidnapping stemming from a February 1988 armed takeover of a Robeson County, N.C., newspaper.

"I talked to Eddie last night by phone. He's panicky," Ross said Friday. "He said he was afraid if he showed up that the Justice Department and the FBI will not honor tribal law and that he will be taken back to North Carolina. If that happens, he fears he wouldn't stay alive."

Ross said Lohah waited a half-hour after the scheduled time of Hatcher's hearing on Friday before ordering a warrant issued for his arrest. Ross said he would do all he could to convince his client to surrender to tribal police.

"I think at this point, tribal jail would afford Eddie the best protection," he said.

Authorities expect to have North Carolina Gov. Jim Martin's request for Hatcher's extradition at Monday's hearing, a court official said.

If Hatcher appears in court, the official said, the judge will rule on whether Hatcher is Tuscarora Indian, as he claims, or white, as his birth certificate states.

Hatcher could receive protection on the Shoshone-Bannock reservation if the judge rules he is Indian, but he would be turned over to federal authorities if the judge rules he is white, according to the court official.

Lohah ordered Friday's hearing after an informant told Fort Hall Police on Thursday that Hatcher had left the southeastern Idaho reservation. Fort Hall Police passed the information on to the FBI.

Episcopalians Consecrate Female Bishop

Bishop Barbara Harris smiles after her consecration

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — The Rev. Barbara Harris, with the voices of dissidents overwhelmed by cheers from thousands of fellow Episcopalians, on Saturday became the first woman elevated to bishop in a 2,000-year succession dating back to the apostles.

Harris was greeted with a roar of approval from about 8,000 people when she walked down the aisle for a consecration that has drawn world attention because of her gender, background and liberal views.

She was faulted by a conservative church member who said in a brief speech that her elevation would be a sacrilege. But when the chief consecrator, the Most Rev. Edmond Browning, asked the congregation if it was their will that Harris be ordained, they thundered out: "That is our will."

"I will obey Christ and serve in his name," Harris said.

"Men and women now stand together before God, in today's world, a world that needs that," First Bishop David Johnson of the Boston Episcopal Diocese said before the consecration, held in a convention center to accommodate the crowd.

Beginning with a solemn procession and culminating in the laying on of bishops' hands and the placing of a pointed bishop's miter on her head, Harris assumed the relatively minor position of suffragan, or assistant, bishop in the Boston Episcopal diocese.

Harris said after her consecration that it put "a tremendous amount of responsibility" on her shoulders.

"That responsibility includes encouraging young people to press on and overcome barriers and to hang in there," Harris said, adding that she intended to do just that.

After the ceremony, she said she would try to reach out to her opponents and others to try to allay their fears. "We will be in contact. We will do that to the best of our abilities," she said.

"Just say I'm very proud and very happy. That's all," said Harris' mother, Beatrice Harris.

The 58-year-old former publisher of a liberal Episcopal publication is the first woman consecrated a bishop in any of the three major branches of Christianity — Roman Catholicism, Eastern Orthodoxy and Anglicanism, which includes the Episcopal Church — that consider bishops successors to Jesus' apostles.

Her selection touched off months-long debate within the church.

Opponents included traditionalists who believe that because the apostles were men, the position of bishop must be reserved for men. Others objected to Harris because of her lack of a college degree and formal seminary training and because of her relative inexperience in parish ministerial work. Still others objected to her strongly liberal writings on gay rights, U.S. policy in Central America and internal church matters.

Harris, who is black, said she believes that some of the opposition to her elevation stemmed from her race as well as her sex.

MIAMI — U.S. District Judge Alcee L. Hastings, his impeachment trial in the U.S. Senate near, has been on the road trying to rally support for what he concedes is a come-from-behind effort.

"I have an uphill battle, all the way ...," Hastings told listeners on a Miami radio station talk show last week. "It's going to be very difficult for me to extricate myself from this. History demands that I try."

It was typical of the speaking appearances he's been making each week on radio shows and at churches, colleges and civil rights groups.

With his Senate trial expected to begin as early as mid-March, Hastings, 52, has been urging listeners to write their senators to express interest in his case and contribute to his legal defense fund.

Although the judge is often warmly received, he has raised only $4,000. He unsuccessfully asked for government help for his defense expenses, saying the Justice Department has spent $2 million for "a witch hunt" or "fishing expedition" against him.

Hastings became the first black federal judge from Florida when he was appointed by then-President Carter in 1979.

He marked another, less happy first last August when he became the only person ever to be impeached after he was already cleared of similar charges in a criminal trial. The House vote to impeach, or send the case to the Senate for trial, was 413-3.

He is accused of conspiring with a former friend, attorney William A. Borders, to reduce a sentence of two convicted racketeers, and of lying and fabricating his defense during his 1983 criminal trial. Though Hastings was acquitted in that trial, Borders was convicted of bribery conspiracy in a separate trial.

Last month, the Senate Rules Committee dealt Hastings another setback by deciding his trial would be largely conducted by a 12-member special committee before the full Senate votes on whether to convict. A two-thirds majority would result in Hastings' removal from the bench.

On Friday, Hastings attorney Terence J. Anderson, a University of Miami law professor, said he would file challenges to the Rules Committee decision along with motions to dismiss the 17 articles of impeachment.

He contends that Hastings is unconstitutionally being tried twice for the same case, because of the criminal trial.

Teen-Ager's Spending Sprees Bring On Drug-Related Arrest

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GRESHAM, Ore. — It was the $2,500 watch and the $13,000 Mustang that put authorities on the trail of 18-year-old Frank Riley Wolsky.

Investigators say the high school senior attended school regularly while running a cocaine business on the side and spending thousands of dollars on cars, clothes and jewelry.

The teen-ager's fast-lane lifestyle came to a halt Jan. 18 as he prepared to go to school in this suburb east of Portland. Undercover police surrounded his car and arrested him on charges of possession and delivery of a controlled substance.

Officers found 4 ounces of cocaine, five firearms and $18,000 in cash. Also seized was a Chevrolet Corvette, customized Ford Mustang and a Chevrolet Blazer.

In November 1987, when he was 16, Wolsky was arrested on a drug-possession charge. His mother, Myra Wolsky, told authorities at the time she thought he was a dealer, but the possession case never went to trial.

The Regional Organized Crime Task Force, an interagency law enforcement group, began investigating Wolsky in earnest last year after parents and businessmen told police about his spending sprees, said investigator Bob Peterson.

Reports of an $1,800 clothes-buying trip and the purchase of the $2,500 watch crossed detectives' desks.

"We began looking at his activities and found that he was purchasing vehicles for cash," Peterson said. "He purchased a 1986 Mustang on Sept. 24, 10 days after his 18th birthday, for $13,000 cash.

"He moved into a $1,000-a-month apartment on Aug. 8. We looked at cash expenditures of $25,000 over a one-month period," he said.

"It all began to develop a pattern not consistent with a high school student."

Peterson said Wolsky did most of his business from his third-floor apartment at Johns Landing, a trendy section of Portland a world away from Gresham.

Wolsky didn't use drugs himself, maintained a low profile at the apartment and was known as a "nice guy" at school, Peterson said.

While the 390 other students in Wolsky's senior class dream about life after graduation, Wolsky is keeping silent about his future.

He has been expelled from school and is back home in Gresham, living with his mother, a parole and probation officer with the Oregon Department of Corrections.

At Gresham High School, Principal Rich Correa said he thought it was a "farce" that Wolsky was released after putting up $650 of $6,500 bail after his arrest.

Correa said rumors about Wolsky's drug trade had been circulating for some time. "His arrest was not a surprise," he said. "He was a shrewd student who stayed out of trouble here."

Comatose Woman Receives Abortion In Survival Effort

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANHASSET, N.Y. — A comatose woman on Saturday underwent an abortion ordered by her husband in hopes of saving her life, ending a two-week legal fight with anti-abortionists that reached the U.S. Supreme Court.

"It's been a major battle. I am tired and wounded. I want to go on with my life," Martin Klein said shortly after his wife's abortion. "No other family should ever have to go through what we have gone through."

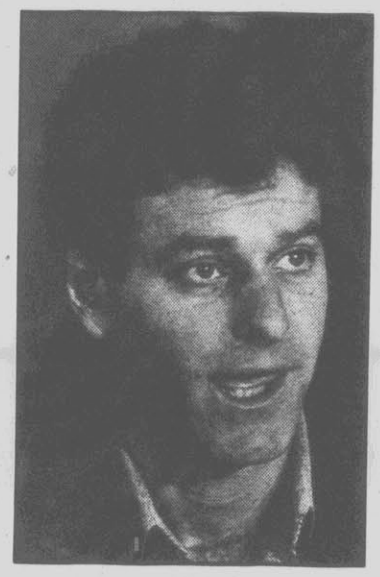

Nancy Klein, 32, remained comatose and was listed in guarded condition after the abortion but her vital signs were stable, said spokeswoman Carol Hauptman of North Shore University Hospital. A team of doctors, including an expert on second-trimester abortions, handled the procedure, she said. Mrs. Klein was 18 weeks pregnant.

"We have one other hurdle to overcome, and that is Nancy's recovery," Klein said. "I will live with this decision, but the decision had to be mine."

Mrs. Klein has been in a coma at the hospital since a Dec. 13 car accident.

Klein said doctors told him that terminating his wife's pregnancy could give her a better chance of recovering, so he asked a judge on Jan. 26 to declare him her legal guardian so he could authorize the abortion.

Although a judge granted Klein's request, the ruling was challenged by right-to-life advocates who appealed the decision at each court level until U.S. Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall rejected their stay request Friday.

MARTIN KLEIN

Klein, 34, of Upper Brookville on Long Island, quickly approved the abortion and the procedure was completed Saturday morning.

Although medical experts testified on Klein's behalf that the abortion could help his wife's recovery, Ms. Hauptman said it was unclear what effect the abortion would have on Mrs. Klein.

The two anti-abortionists, who had sought to be named Mrs. Klein's guardian themselves, said an abortion would threaten her emotional well-being.

Abortions have been performed before on comatose pregnant women, but never involving the same type of injury or coma, Ms. Hauptman said.

"This is not only landmark legal terrain but also medical. There's nothing in the medical literature like this," Ms. Hauptman said.

The operation ended two weeks of strain for Klein and his family.

"We are extremely relieved that the court battle is over and the operation went smoothly," said Anne Zusselman of Del Ray Beach, Fla., Mrs. Klein's mother.

"Now we are hopeful that Nancy's condition will improve and that we can move on to therapy for her," Mrs. Zusselman added. She and her husband visit their daughter daily at the hospital.

Pro-choice advocate Bill Baird said the case was not about abortion rights.

"This was an issue of husband and family rights, not abortion," Baird said. "It's a pity this family had to go through the pain and the suffering."

Baird suggested Klein sue anti-abortion activists John Short of Farmingdale and John Broderick of Syosset for the anguish their extended legal efforts caused, but Klein said it was too soon to consider such a case.

"This is the most tragic thing that ever could have happened," Short said Saturday afternoon. "We tried very hard up to the last second. We had a person standing on a phone at the hospital and one standing at a phone in Washington, but we couldn't do it."

Short vowed to work to persuade the full U.S. Supreme Court to hear the case in an effort to prevent such cases from happening again.

A half-dozen activists supporting a woman's right to choose an abortion carried placards outside the hospital, including one that read: "Right to Life — Your name is a lie. You were willing to let Nancy die."

Several Nassau County police cars were stationed at the hospital in case anti-abortion activists staged any protest, but none showed up.

Eagle Poacher Netted Thousands

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OLYMPIA, Wash. — A man who has pleaded guilty to wild animal poaching charges kept a ledger that shows he netted about $600,000 from the illegal slaughter of hundreds of animals, including bald eagles, officials said.

The ledger taken from the home of Ralph J. Jackson in Sequim indicates he poached at least 25 bald eagles and hundreds of other wild animals, Ron Perregrin of the state Department of Wildlife said at a news conference Friday.

Jackson, 38, was charged with poaching 13 elk in late September after an anonymous caller told officials Jackson had an illegally obtained polar bear skin, Perregrin said.

Investigators never found the polar bear skin, but they discovered illegally obtained elk and deer, and the ledger, Perregrin said.

Sales listed in the ledger over 3½ years include 25 eagles sold for $512,650, 135 elk for $28,500, 286 deer for $24,270, 18 native cats for $15,150, 12 seals for $14,500 and nine hawks for $2,775.

The ledger also listed purchasers and the investigation continues, Perregrin said.

Federal authorities arrested Jackson in October after he threatened the lives of a witness in the eagle transactions and several investigating officers and their families, Perregrin said.

The department has talked to many local people who knew Jackson was a poacher, Perregrin said. But no one knew the extent of his activities and just assumed he took a deer or two for dinner for the family.

Records indicate Jackson was receiving public assistance.

Jackson pleaded guilty in Clallam and Jefferson counties to poaching charges and was sentenced to up to 24 years in prison, Perregrin said. He also pleaded guilty to 10 federal felony counts of selling bald eagles and one count of threatening a federal witness.

He is in custody awaiting sentencing Feb. 23 on the federal counts, and could face additional prison time and millions of dollars in fines.

His wife Elaine also pleaded guilty in connection with the poaching, he said.

Justice Department Seeks Delay In North Trial

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department asked the Supreme Court on Saturday to delay former White House aide Oliver North's Iran-Contra trial, citing a danger he would divulge too many national security secrets.

"Proceeding with the trial on those terms will make it impossible for the attorney general to fulfill his responsibility to safeguard classified information," the department said in asking for a stay.

Independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, who is prosecuting North, urged the Supreme Court to reject the Justice Department's request, saying the department has no legal authority to seek a delay.

Walsh said the attorney general "comes before this court in an attempt to assume a role that the Ethics in Government Act and his own Independent Counsel Regulation deny him: that of prosecutor in this case."

The independent counsel called the Justice Department request an "eleventh-hour application" and said the department "has sought to interfere in this trial at the final hour."

A jury was chosen Thursday in North's trial on 12 felony charges stemming from the Iran-Contra affair, and U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell has asked the jurors to report to the courtroom Monday.

It was not clear when the Supreme Court was likely to act on the Justice Department request.

The Justice Department appealed to the Supreme Court after a three-judge federal appeals panel on Friday — for the second time in as many days — refused to delay the start of North's trial.

Department officials say that if the delay is denied, Attorney General Dick Thornburgh is prepared to act under the Classified Information Procedures Act to file an affidavit objecting to disclosure by North of some classified information. That step could result in dismissal of some or all criminal charges against North.

Under CIPA, once the attorney general files an affidavit, the court must order the defendant not to disclose the classified information, even though it might be relevant material tending to prove his innocence. Charges would then have to be dismissed on grounds that North could not get a fair trial.

The department criticized the judge in the case for not reining in North's plans to use extensive amounts of classified material in his case.

"No order of the District Court prohibits defendant North, in his opening statement or during the government's case, from simply disclosing, without seeking prior court approval, classified information that falls outside" eight categories identified by Gesell last Wednesday, said the Justice Department's 19-page court filing.

"Even as to information within those categories, no order prohibits defendant North from disclosing classified information during his own case," it added.

Thornburgh wants to delay the trial so additional steps can be taken to bar North from disclosing classified material.

For nearly 11 months, since the Iran-Contra indictments were returned, Walsh largely cooperated with the Justice Department and intelligence agencies in trying to resolve problems involving classified material.

Several days ago, the Justice Department and Walsh parted company so abruptly that Walsh's staff reportedly had almost no warning that the department was going to court on its own.

The problems began Jan. 19 when Gesell issued an order that would permit North to introduce, without a prior court order, classified information tending to show that his intent was not to violate the law.

Intelligence agencies were concerned over the freedom the order gave North to present a broad array of classified material.

As an alternative, the government asked Gesell to require the defense to provide advance notice or get a court order before disclosing classified information. Gesell rejected that proposal Jan. 30.

The Justice Department on Wednesday asked for a court order barring disclosure of classified material as long as a government objection was pending. Walsh, however, asked Gesell to impose no more than the restrictions that already apply to prosecutors.

Couple Returns $365,000

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BURLINGTON, Vt. — Two money bags containing $365,000 fell out of an armored truck, so Dominic and Mildred Olio did what came naturally — they picked them up and took them to police.

"We did what we felt we should do," said Olio, 78.

"My husband's just too honest," said his 65-year-old wife.

The Olios will receive a reward for their honesty, said Jerry Reeder, president of the Berkshire Armored Car Co., said from his Pittsfield, Mass., office.

"We are very grateful to that couple," he said.

The Olios were driving down Main Street when the bags fell out of the truck Friday.

"The driver sped up just past the Prospect Street traffic light and he must have hit a bump because a door flew open and the bags fell out," Olio said.

The armored truck kept going but Olio turned around and retrieved the bags.

"They were pretty heavy, probably weighed 40 or 50 pounds between 'em," said the retired mailman, who took the bags to the police department.

"Something like that doesn't happen very often around here. Those are honest people," said officer Greg Austin.

Bank Robbed

RALEIGH (AP) — A gunman robbed a Wake County bank Friday about 10 minutes after stealing a car from a woman who had gone into a Raleigh convenience store to pay for gas, authorities say.

The man left the bank with a paper bag full of cash, then abandoned the car and ran away. Raleigh police searched the neighborhood with a trained dog but could not find the man.

Sheriff's Detective K.E. Duckworth said the man drove to a Southern National Bank office, entered and pulled a pistol on a teller. He told her to put money into a white paper bag he had brought with him and threatened to shoot her if she didn't do it quickly, Duckworth said.

The man then hurried from the bank and drove away in the stolen car. He later abandoned the car, which eventually was returned to the woman.

Pay Raise Scars Still Linger On

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Two days after the House voted by an 8-1 margin to bury a 51 percent congressional pay raise last week, Speaker Jim Wright was asked if he would consider a smaller increase.

"That question has been answered," he told reporters, referring to the rejection vote. "I can count."

"Everyone wants to change the subject and move on," said Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif., who was a supporter of the raise. "It (the pay raise battle) left deep scars that won't be quickly healing. There's a mutual frustration with each other."

Such comments are not surprising in the aftermath of the 380-48 House vote, and the 94-6 Senate tally, to reject a raise that brought howls of protest on talk shows across the nation. As tired as lawmakers may be of the painful affair, however, at least some issues linked to it won't go away.

Common Cause, the self-styled citizen's lobby, says it will maintain pressure on Congress to eliminate the outside income lawmakers receive from special interest groups.

"This Congress cannot long ignore the increasing call for ethical reform," said Fazio.

The Senate voted two weeks ago to bar members from pocketing fees for speaking to various groups, including special interest lobbies. But it made the change contingent on approval of the pay raise.

The House had been planning to vote on the honoraria issue last Thursday, coupled with a plan by Wright to scale the raise back to 30 percent. The issue went on the back burner Tuesday, when the House decided the public wouldn't stand for any raise.

"It's a major setback for reform," said House Majority Whip Tony Coelho, D-Calif., "I thought what was needed was to increase salary, do away with honoraria and start a reform movement here."

While House members are still eligible to keep $26,850 in honoraria, the question of outside fees has been bucked to a new bipartisan panel co-chaired by Fazio and Rep. Lynn Martin, R-Ill. Lawmakers say there's no chance the House or the Senate — where members can retain $35,800 in honoraria — will give up the system without a raise, since that would amount to a pay cut.

Still simmering is the issue of raises for judges and top federal executives.

Congress' rejection of its own increase prevented raises for: 1,100 judges; 834 top executive branch appointed officials; 7,000 career federal managers, 12,000 foreign service officers and 155 generals and admirals.

Coelho told colleagues just before the rejection, "We are voting to continue the exodus of judges, top-level managers, and yes, creative members of Congress from government service to the private sector."

Lawmakers have shown little interest in resurrecting these pay raises without considering their own.

"I don't think it's a sound idea, because of the branches being equal," said Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., and chairman of the House Post Office civil service subcommittee. "The forefathers didn't say we should have a lower branch."

A survey by the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts concluded 20 of the last 26 judges to leave the federal bench said pay was a factor in their resignations.

From 1958-73, six federal judges resigned from the lifetime position, compared to 60 from 1974 to 1978. The loss in real salary due to inflation has totaled 30 percent for U.S. judges since 1969, the office said.

Bush Promises To Move Quickly Against Acid Rain

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OTTAWA — Running under Canadian satisfaction with President Bush's promise to act on acid rain is a bitter current that says, "It's about time."

There also is considerable reluctance to get too complacent until specifics of Bush's program are known.

On Bush's first trip outside the United States since his inauguration, he promised Friday to move quickly with congressional legislation to control acid rain.

He also said after his meetings with Prime Minister Brian Mulroney that the United States would move toward discussions with Canada for an accord on the controversial issue.

"The president's comments on the subject mark a small step forward in the longstanding environmental dispute between the two countries," The Globe and Mail newspaper wrote Saturday.

"However, without an exact U.S. timetable for the discussions, or commitments on the amount or timing of any cuts on transborder air pollution, Canada may still have to wait years before there is tangible relief on the issue," the Toronto daily wrote in front-page coverage of the visit.

Canadian concern about the acid rain, blamed for killing some 14,000 lakes in the eastern part of the country and defoliating millions of acres of forests, has been a dominant issue in relations with the United States for the past decade.

One of Bush's two official visits to Canada as vice president was in January 1987, when he came to Ottawa to hear Mulroney's complaints that the United States was holding back on acid rain cleanup.

Frustration grew in Canada during the eight years of the Reagan administration, when the pomp of summit meetings produced virtually no results on the issue.

For example, the Reagan administration did not once propose legislation to strengthen the U.S. federal Clean Air Act.

More than half the acid rain in eastern Canada comes from the United States, and in some areas U.S. emissions of sulphur dioxide and other materials cause 70 percent of acid fallout, according to the Canadian government.

The program to control Canadian emissions takes full effect in 1994.

"I think Mr. Bush's approach is a 180-degree reversal in U.S. policy," said Michael Perley of the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain lobbying group. He told reporters that while Reagan did not even recognize acid rain as a problem, the situation now is that "we've got the right principle, the right approach."

Perley also said the specific amount of emissions to be cut and the timetable for doing so are critical.

Senior Canadian diplomatic officials, speaking on condition they not be further identified, said they understand Bush's need to outline the specifics to Congress first.

At a joint news conference with Bush, Mulroney said the president's position "represents quite substantial progress. You know, it wasn't so long ago that Canada was sort of going it alone in many ways in this area."

Bush said he assured Mulroney "that the time for just pure study was over and that we've now approached the time for legislative action."

Pilot Of Air Force Jet Dies

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT WAYNE, Ind. — The crew of a F-4E fighter reported a possible hydraulic problem before smoke filled the cockpit and the pilot passed out, forcing another officer to make an emergency landing, officials said Saturday.

Both men were ejected from the jet as it taxied down a runway Friday night at Baer Field, where their unit, the 122nd Tactical Fighter Wing, is based. There had been initial reports that the plane crashed.

The pilot later died. The cause of death was not immediately known, the Indiana Air National Guard said Saturday.

After the pilot, 1st Lt. Dave E. Kruse, 26, passed out, the only other person aboard, weapons officer Maj. Wilbert J. Elliott, made an emergency landing under the escort of another jet, the Guard said.

Marcos Suffers Relapse

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HONOLULU — Former Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos was in critical but stable condition Saturday after suffering a relapse in his bout with pneumonia and bronchial asthma, hospital officials said.

Marcos, 71, had been in guarded condition Friday, but began running a fever, said Norma Kop, a spokeswoman for St. Francis Medical Center where Marcos has been confined since Jan. 19.

Marcos remained in the hospital's intensive care unit and was still breathing with the aid of a respirator, according to a statement issued Saturday morning.

Marcos' worsened condition "means there is infection again," said Gemmo Trinidad, a Marcos family spokesman. "I would suspect it's the lungs because of the tracheostomy."

A tracheostomy, a surgical incision in the trachea, was done Feb. 1 to relieve a buildup of fluid in Marcos' lungs.

Marcos and his wife, Imelda, have lived here since Marcos' ouster from power in February 1986.

Federal Deficit Grows As Focus Shifts

By Alan Fram
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The unveiling of President Bush's 1990 spending plan focuses the budget spotlight on the coming fiscal year — just as the deficit figures for this year are getting more and more embarrassing.

The imbalance is not only expanding like a wet blot of red ink on a piece of paper. But once again — as has happened every year since the Gramm-Rudman balanced budget law was passed in 1985 — the actual deficit is going to be far higher than the deficit ceiling the legislation sets.

The budget Bush presented to Congress for fiscal 1990 last Thursday revealed that the administration now expects the 1989 deficit to be $170.2 billion. Less than four months ago, the outgoing Reagan administration forecast that the imbalance would be $145.5 billion — $500 million below the $146 billion target set in the Gramm-Rudman law.

"It's a co-conspiracy between Congress and the administration," says Rudolph G. Penner, former director of the Congressional Budget Office. "And it's hard to think of any other word to describe it than dishonest."

Penner, now a senior fellow at The Urban Institute in Washington, was referring to the process set in law that is designed to force Congress and the White House to reduce the federal deficit.

Lawmakers and the president spend most of each year dueling with each other over the budget, with much of their battling devoted to deciding how they will produce a spending plan that meets the deficit target of the Gramm-Rudman balanced budget law.

Every year, the smoke clears in the fall or winter to reveal an agreement in which the projected red ink falls just within the deficit target. And the awesome hammer of the law — forced spending cuts on domestic and defense programs, totaling billions of dollars — is avoided.

But the key word here is "projected." The Gramm-Rudman law is a process that deals with the projected deficit for the coming year, setting declining ceilings for each year until the budget is supposed to be balanced in 1993.

If the final projection for each fiscal year — made in mid-October, two weeks into that year — falls within the target, the automatic cuts are avoided.

But once the projected deficit is certified as falling within the target, the law's machinery grinds to a halt. The law sets no consequences if the actual deficit at the end of the year turns out to be higher than the Gramm-Rudman target.

Budget experts say the deficit projections are off because of the difficulties of predicting how the economy will perform and how quickly some programs will spend money.

They say that in addition, the economic forecasts used are optimistic and thus underestimate the magnitude of the shortfall. After all, it's easier to pronounce the deficit smaller than it is to say it is larger and then have to enact spending cuts and tax increases to shrink it.

"They're avoiding political pain," said Stanley Collender, who oversees budget policy for the Price Waterhouse accounting firm.

Some say the way Congress and the White House focus each year on deficit projections is such a charade that the press is partially to blame for paying so much attention to it.

"We're all a little surprised that you all report that in such a straight-faced manner," says Carol Cox, president of the bipartisan watchdog group, The Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget.

Experts are divided over just how significant it is that the target is consistently missed.

Some, like Penner, say it is deceptive and postpones true deficit-reduction decisions.

Bush Puts Shiny Packaging On Budget

By Steven Komarow
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — There's barely a decimal point's difference between the Reagan and Bush budgets. But President Bush's plan is packaged to make the changes he's made look more dramatic.

He tries to put the most shine on the least shoe — to reflect toward Congress and the American people the things they want to see — by following the time-honored Washington tradition of jumbling the numbers.

On the one hand, Bush's kinder and gentler budget includes freezing the military budget, a sharp departure from the growth advocated by Reagan. He defines the Pentagon freeze as increasing spending $2.1 billion to keep pace with inflation — a so-called "current services" freeze.

But elsewhere in his budget, he ridicules the concept of maintaining current services as defining a freeze. Assuming adjustments to cover inflationary costs in domestic programs is "wonderland budgeting," he says.

His budget compares the domestic budgets with current fiscal 1989 levels, without mention of what providing the same services would cost next year. This approach allows Bush to minimize the appearance of cuts and maximize the apparent increases in his fiscal 1990 plan.

In sum, increasing Pentagon spending with inflation is a freeze in the Bush budget. Increasing the education budget, but not enough to maintain current services, is not a freeze.

Along the same lines, the president studiously avoids direct comparisons with Reagan's spending plan.

He claims with some fanfare initiatives to increase spending on AIDS research and the space program. Compared to Reagan, there's no increase at all. But the Reagan numbers aren't in Bush's book. You have to go to another document to find them.

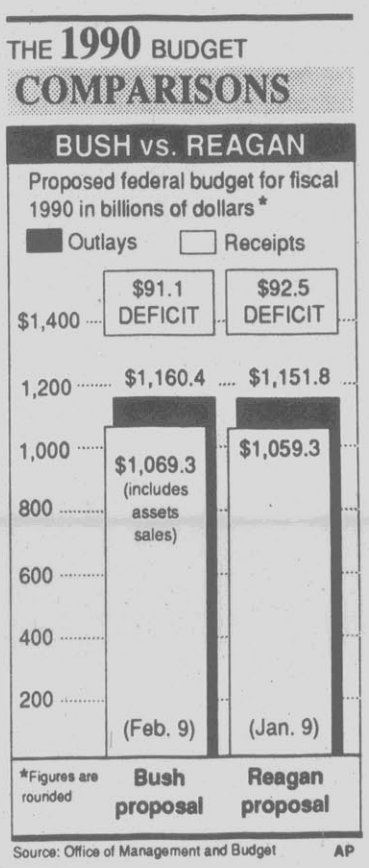

Further complicating any comparisons with his predecessor, Bush's budget drafters calculated his figures without the credit reforms that Reagan included in his accounting. That technical difference makes some of Bush's numbers look hundreds of millions of dollars different from Reagan's when, in many cases, they are exactly the same.

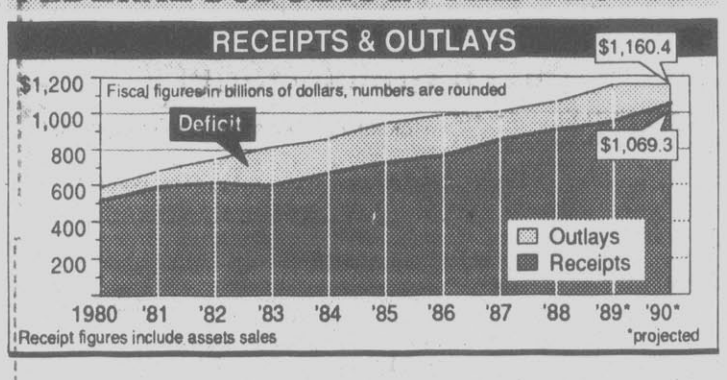

In the case of fighting drugs, Bush's new spending initiative isn't so new. Three quarters of the nearly $1 billion Bush claims as his anti-drug program is money already approved by Congress.

Mostly, the Bush budget as revealed so far is incomplete.

Bush explicitly changes only about four dozen out of some 4,000 line items in the budget left behind by his predecessor.

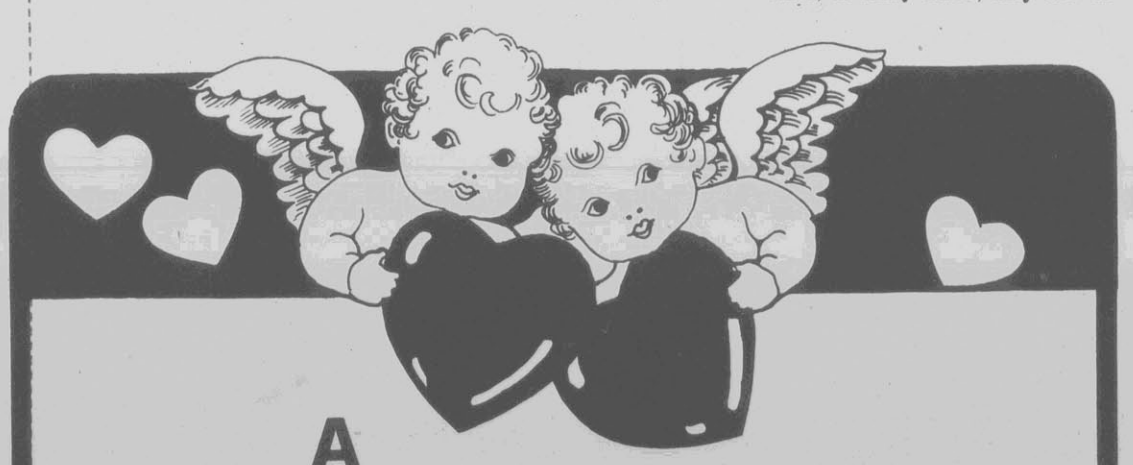

It claims to be increasing spending on important domestic programs, but often lists them within a group where the total spending is unchanged from Reagan's plan.

Bentsen Urges Broader Airline Anti-Terrorist Plan

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Federal authorities should expand tough new anti-terrorism measures to cover foreign air carriers with landing rights in the United States, says the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said in a letter to Transportation Secretary Samuel K. Skinner released Saturday he was "dismayed" that emergency security precautions taken after the holiday bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 apply only to domestic carriers with international flights.

"I do not think it requires a quantum leap in logic to conclude that as it becomes more difficult to penetrate the security of U.S. flag carriers because of their superior security systems, the terrorist threat may well shift to foreign air carriers which carry a large number of American passengers," Bentsen said.

About half of Americans traveling abroad fly on foreign carriers, he said.

"If the primary basis for the emergency rulemaking is to minimize terrorism aimed at Americans particularly and the international traveling public generally, then I do not see how it is accomplished by a blanket exemption to foreign air carriers to the requirement for improved security operations," Bentsen said.

The Federal Aviation Administration in late December announced tightened security procedures by U.S. air carriers at 103 airports in the Middle East and Western Europe, including X-ray or physical inspection of all checked baggage and random physical checks of some carry-on baggage.

The added measures were prompted by the bombing of Flight 103 over Scotland, which 270 persons dead.

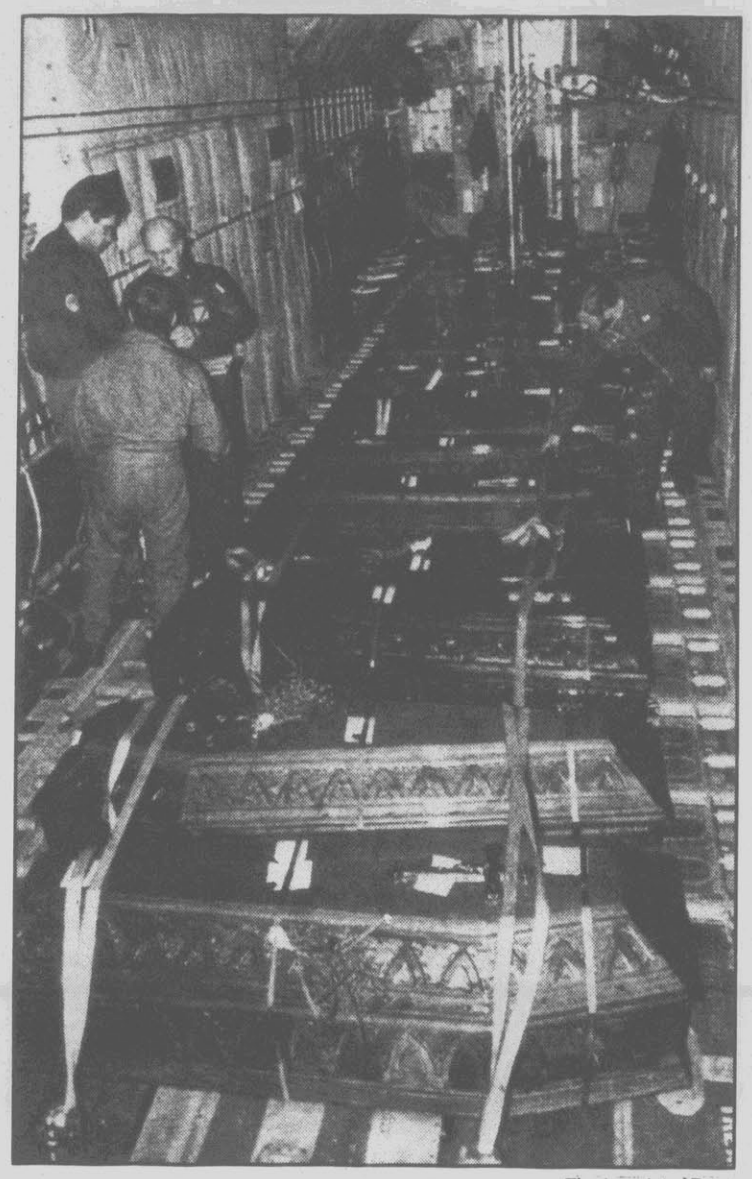

Bentsen said the measures did not go far enough.

"The problem is that they (FAA) offered a half a loaf and half a loaf is just not good enough when you're talking about terrorism," Bentsen said.

Bentsen said he was also urging Skinner to have the FAA coordinate its activities with the intelligence community in tracking terrorist activity and guarding against sabotage.

Skinner will head a U.S. delegation to a special session of the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization on Wednesday and Thursday in Montreal, where protecting aviation from terrorists will be discussed.

The Transportation Department said the meeting's primary purpose will be to improve the council's international standards on passengers, baggage and cargo security related to sabotage. The group will also consider how standard security measures might to expanded and applied uniformly to operations considered to be at high risk of sabotage.

Heater Fumes Kill 4 Men

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — A blocked heater pipe spread deadly fumes through a house, killing four young men and leaving a woman in critical condition, authorities said Friday.

The deadly fumes "might be either gas or carbon monoxide, but we're leaning toward carbon monoxide," Fire Department spokesman Scott La Greca said.

"It appears that they have been dead for some time, in terms of hours or days, I don't know," La Greca said. "Somehow, the woman was able to survive."

A flue pipe inside the living room heater and a separate pipe connecting the heater to an outside wall were blocked, causing the fumes to seep into the room, said Peoples Gas Co. spokesman Ed Joyce.

The four men were pronounced dead on arrival at Holy Cross Hospital, said supervisor Joyce Kopecky. She identified two of the victims as brothers Joel Blazek, 17, and Kenneth Blazek, 21.

Another victim, Larry Price, 27, and Carol Prykop, 18, who was in critical condition at University of Chicago Hospital, did not live at the house but were neighbors. The fourth victim, a 36-year-old man, was not immediately identified.

Four people were found in the living room and one person in a bedroom, authorities said.

Carbon monoxide is a colorless, odorless, extremely poisonous gas. Because it has no odor or color, persons breathing it usually fall asleep without realizing they are being poisoned. It results when fuels containing carbon like coal or oil burn in stoves or furnaces that contain insufficient oxygen.

La Greca said authorities determined there was no need to evacuate nearby buildings after gas company workers shut off the supply of gas to the building.

Ship Collision Leaves 3 Missing

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — The captain of a luxury liner that sliced a disabled Cuban freighter in two said Saturday his crew was not at fault in the predawn collision that left three Cuban crewmen missing.

The cruise ship Celebration arrived home in Miami on Saturday as federal transportation officials, the Coast Guard and its insurer, Lloyd's of London, questioned the crew about the Friday morning collision off Cuba.

Despite an 18-inch gash and black scrape marks on its bow, the 734-foot cruise ship sustained only minor damage, and none of its 1,500 passengers or 600 crewmembers was injured, a Carnival Cruise Lines spokesman said.

Capt. Rafaele Gravino, master of the Celebration, said the 350-foot Cuban vessel, the Capitan San Luis, was drifting without lights or steering in a major shipping channel and made no effort to warn his crew of the impending collision.

"The fault is with the ship that had no lights," said Gravino.

But the helmsman of the Cuban vessel said Saturday his captain tried to warn the Celebration and maneuver to avoid the accident, reported Prensa Latina, Cuba's official news agency.

"We signaled the other ship to let us maneuver and tried to change course to avoid an accident," said Ramon Lahera, whose right leg was amputated after the collision.

Prensa Latina said Lahera remains hospitalized in Holguin in eastern Cuba, and the search continues for the captain and two other lost crewmen.

Gravino also said his crew was not to be blamed for failing to check radar for 27 minutes prior to the accident.

"When there is no visibility, the radar is checked very frequently. But when there is good visibility, you are supposed to see the lights of the other ship," Gravino said during a news conference aboard the ship.

His crew didn't see the cement hauler until they were 300 feet apart, he said. His officers threw the engines into reverse, but it was too late to avoid slamming into the disabled freighter.

The Cuban crew told their rescuers that the freighter had lost electrical power. But Carnival spokesman Tim Gallagher said they still could have warned passing ships of its plight.

The three missing men included the ship's captain, Manuel Velazco Morales, 34, Antonio Campos de los Reyes, 41, and Ivan Freyre Diaz, 40, all of Havana, the news agency reported.

Parishioners Take Over Conn. Church

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. — More than 100 dissident parishioners took over St. Michael's Roman Catholic Church on Saturday to begin a two-day vigil to protest the transfer of their popular Polish pastor.

"We're here to stay, day and night," Halina Chmiel, a spokeswoman for the group, said as about 120 mostly Polish dissidents marched up the center aisle of the 89-year-old church just before the afternoon Mass.

The protesters planned to stay for two days and two nights and some said they would go on a hunger strike, she said.

The dispute centers on the replacing of the Rev. Bruno Pysz, a popular pastor who was transferred to a Buffalo, N.Y., parish in August, and associate pastor Roman Palaszewski.

Church officials maintain Pysz went voluntarily to the Buffalo parish and was not removed, as some of the protesters contend.

The protesters criticized the Rev. John Bambol, who was brought in to replace Pysz, for attempting to open the parish to other ethnic groups and allegedly verbally abusing the dissidents. The parish is in a mostly Hispanic neighborhood in Bridgeport's East End.

Bambol was in New York on Saturday and unavailable for comment, church officials said, and telephone calls were not immediately answered. But he has said previously, "as people get aroused, they're likely to do anything."

"The church is a place to pray, not to protest," said Casmir Zapolnik, an usher who said he's been a church member since coming from Poland 25 years ago.

As the procession moved down the center aisle behind a hand-painted banner that said "Church Occupation" in red letters, arguments broke out between the protesters and those who had gathered for Mass.

Several police officers were dispatched to the church, but no arrests were made and there was no attempt to remove the protesters.

The Board of Directors of Home Federal Savings & Loan would like to take this opportunity to thank the members of the Association, including depositors and borrowers, for another successful year. During 1988, the Association reached another important milestone by increasing assets to over $100 million. Net worth reserves were also increased to $5 million or 5.4% of deposits. This represents substantially more than the $3.2 million minimum required reserves for a savings institution of our size by the Federal Home Loan Bank. The board and management of Home Federal will continue to promote homeownership and thrift as its original charter set out in 1906.

To those who are not presently members of the Association, we invite and encourage you to call Home Federal for safe investments, a wide selection of loan plans, and courteous service.

Afghan President Says Pakistan Massing Troops To Cross Border

The Associated Press

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KABUL, Afghanistan — President Najib on Saturday accused Pakistan of massing troops along the border in preparation for an invasion and eventual annexation of Afghanistan.

In a speech broadcast on national radio and television, Najib said his government had received information Pakistan planned first to attack Jalalabad, about 80 miles east of Kabul and 50 miles west of the Pakistan border.

"Militarist and reactionary parties envisage swallowing our country and turning it into a fifth province of Pakistan," the president said in his strongest attack yet on Afghanistan's neighbor.

Pakistan has allowed Moslem guerrillas fighting Najib's Soviet-backed government to operate from Pakistan.

Pakistan, the United States and Iran have supported the guerrillas, who began fighting in 1978 after the communists took power in a coup. In 1979, the Soviets sent troops into Afghanistan to prop up the pro-Marxist government.

Under a U.N.-mediated accord, all Soviet troops must be withdrawn by Wednesday. Radio Moscow reported Saturday the last motorized army unit was within 125 miles of the Soviet border.

The guerrillas are not party to the U.N. accord and want to overthrow Najib's government when the Soviets are gone.

With the withdrawal deadline approaching, Najib exhorted the Afghan people to protect their nation's sovereignty.

"Say in one voice: 'Country or death,'" he said.

He also accused the Pakistani military of controlling the guerrillas.

In Islamabad, Pakistan, there appeared to be no end to the bitter disputes among guerrilla factions over the composition of a provisional Islamic government they want to form.

At issue is how power would be shared by the seven insurgent groups in Pakistan and the eight factions based in Iran.

On Friday, 526 guerrillas and other Afghans met as a council to decide the matter but the Iranian-based alliance walked out.

Rasul Sayyaf, the spokesman for the meeting, said Saturday the council would meet "in two or three days."

He said efforts to persuade the Iranian-based guerrillas not to boycott the council failed.

"We cannot expect quick solutions to the problem of Afghanistan," he said at a news conference.

Radio Moscow said patrols along the Salang Highway, the main route between Kabul and the Soviet border, were being discontinued.

According to the report, the last motorized Soviet unit traveled through a mountain pass on the Salang Highway. It did not say how many troops or what kind of equipment were in the unit.

The report also said a "small group" of soldiers will remain in Kabul, the Afghan capital, to guard the airport until the Soviets complete a massive food airlift.

Bush OKs Aid To Afghan Rebels

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine — President Bush has approved continuing U.S. military aid to the Mujahadeen rebels resisting the Soviet-imposed government in Afghanistan, an administration spokesman said Saturday.

Deputy press secretary Steve Hart confirmed that Bush had decided Friday to continue helping the rebels.

"The president met with his National Security Council," Hart said, "and reaffirmed U.S. policy" of continuing the flow of money, arms and supplies to the rebels so long as the Soviet Union keeps sending aid to the Kabul regime.

The New York Times, which initially reported the decision, quoted senior administration officials as saying that despite the continuing Soviet troop withdrawal from Afghanistan, the Soviets have left behind large amounts of military hardware and sent in new military equipment.

It said the Bush administration decision, in effect, means that the political goal of American policy in Afghanistan now that the Soviet troop withdrawal is virtually complete is to hasten the collapse of the Kabul government.

Bush spent a relaxed day here Saturday, taking a stroll and greeting townspeople during a brief shopping trip.

Kuwait Releases Terrorists Jailed For Embassy Bombs

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KUWAIT — Two of 17 pro-Iranian terrorists whose freedom is a key demand of a group holding American hostages in Lebanon have been released from prison after serving five-year terms, the interior minister said Saturday.

The 17 were convicted in 1984 of bombing the French and American embassies and given sentences ranging from five years to death. The Islamic Jihad, which holds two American hostages, has demanded freedom for all 17. Kuwait has refused.

Interior Minister Sheik Salem al-Sabah said the two freed men, Abdul-Mohsen Rashash Abbas, 25, an Iraqi, and 30-year-old Nasser Matar Dahash, whose family lives in Kuwait without official citizenship, were released "a while ago, having completed their prison terms."

The two are not considered key figures in the long-running hostage drama. Salem did not say what date they were freed or where they are now.

But Kuwait's information minister, Sheik Jaber Mubarak, told The Associated Press in December the pair would be freed after they finished their sentences and would be deported to the country of their choice.

Salem stressed to reporters the release "has nothing to do with the demands of extremist organizations."

Despite recent speculation that some of the 15 hostages, who include nine Americans, might soon be freed, informed Arab sources said there was no sign any were about to be released. Most of the Lebanese captives are held by Shiite extremists.

Islamic Jihad, believed made up of Shiite Moslem extremists loyal to Iran, kidnapped Terry Anderson of Lorain, Ohio, on March 16, 1985, and Thomas Sutherland, 57, of Fort Collins, Colo. on June 9 the same year. The group has released four other Americans.

Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, is the longest-held of the hostages in Lebanon.

In Washington, the State Department said it had no comment on the terrorists' release.

The 17 bombers — Kuwaitis, Iraqis and Lebanese — were arrested and tried after the December 1983 bombings of the U.S. and French embassies and Kuwaiti government installations.

Three were sentenced to death but have not been executed, and 12 were sentenced to prison terms ranging from 10 years to life.

The two released were handed the shortest sentences and are not believed central to Islamic Jihad's demand for the release of the 17.

Among the bombers sentenced to death is Mustapha Youssef Badreddin, a cousin and brother-in-law of Imad Mugniyeh, said to be the leader of Islamic Jihad. He was convicted under the alias of Elias Fuad Saab.

Iranians Celebrate

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEHRAN, Iran — A crowd estimated at 3 to 4 million celebrated the Islamic revolution's 10th anniversary Saturday by taking to the streets for a rally and roaring "Death To America!"

Men, women and children braved snow and icy winds whistling down from the Alborz mountains to attend the rally around the towering independence monument in Freedom Square.

President Ali Khamenei told the revelers their nation is ready for relations with "every country that doesn't plot against us."

But a resolution read aloud said Iran should never have ties with Israel, South Africa and "their godfather, the Great Satan," the Iranian epithet for the United States.

The rally and others across Iran marked the climax of 10 days of celebrations that began Feb. 1, the date in 1979 when Khomeini returned to Tehran in triumph after 15 years in exile.

Ten days later, the last government appointed by Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi collapsed. Khomeini's revolutionaries took power and proclaimed the Islamic republic.

In November of that year, fundamentalists took over the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and held 52 Americans hostage 444 days.

The revolution has survived bloody internal strife, an eight-year war with Iraq and the hostility of much of the world.

Beneath the huge portrait of Khomeini hoisted for the rally, a slogan in Farsi and English said: "The Victory of the Revolution Needs Safeguarding."

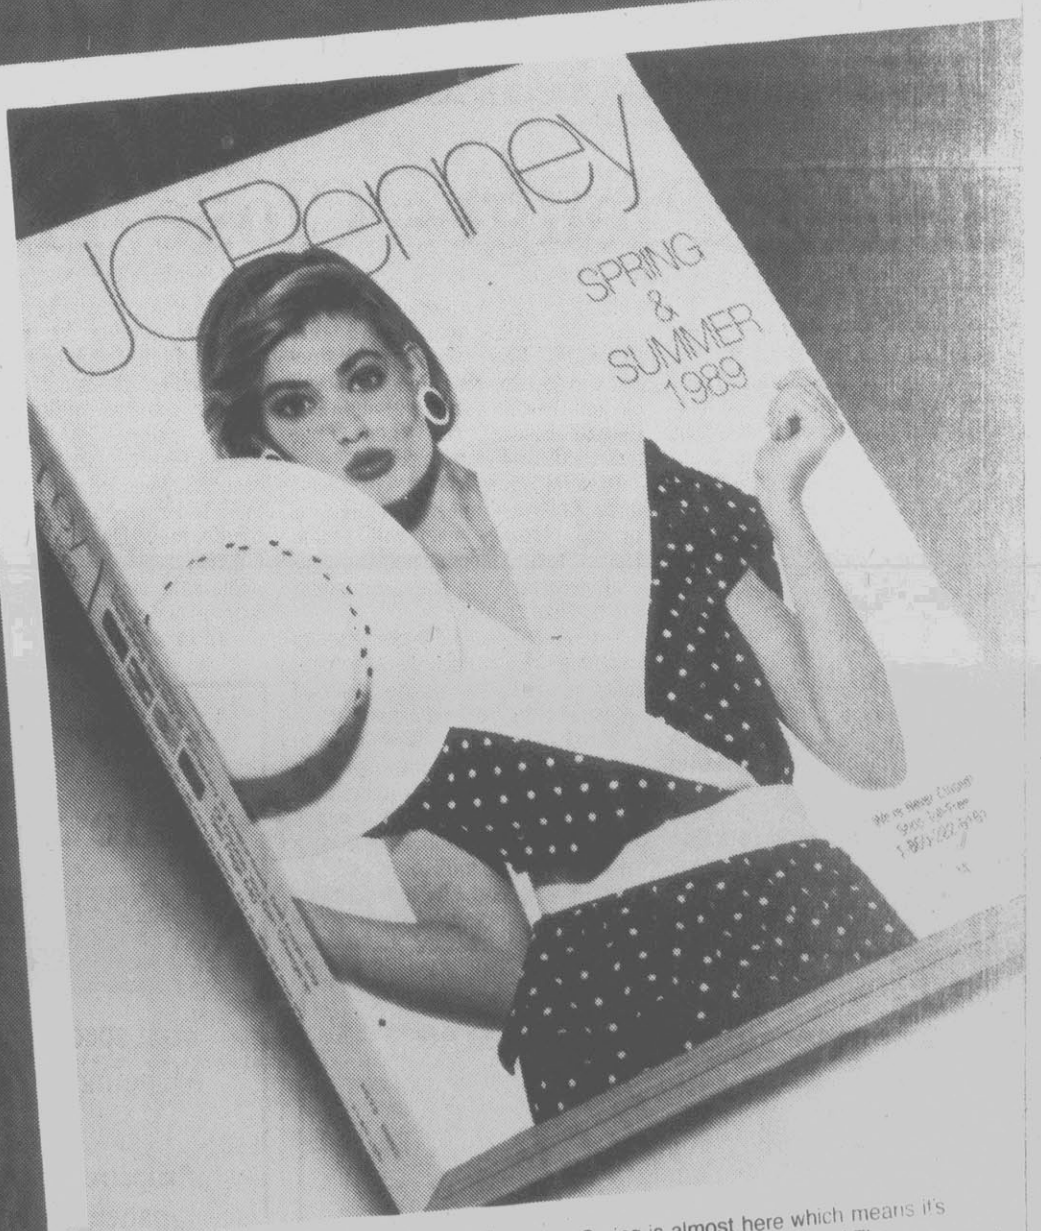

Khomeini did not attend the rally, which police estimated drew 3 to 4 million people. The 88-year-old leader reportedly is in poor health and rarely leaves his home in north Tehran.

Contras Optimistic Despite American Aid Cutoff

By Richard Herzfelder
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAMP CIM, Honduras — A year after the U.S. Congress cut off military aid to Nicaraguan rebels, the guerrilla army created with U.S. assistance is stranded in an isolated mountain valley without the means to fight.

Its men are keeping up their morale with intense training as they listen to the news on the radio and wonder what President Bush's policy will be.

"If the U.S. doesn't help us, we'll go back to the early days, taking our guns from the 'piricuacos,'" said Contra fighter Donal Severano, using camp slang meaning "armed dogs" for Nicaragua's Sandinista army.

Far from Contra directorate members in Tegucigalpa or Miami, far from the policy considerations of Washington, the guerrillas are aware of what they call "the situation" that began when Congress cut off military aid Feb. 3, 1988.

Contra troops began to move out of Nicaragua as their supplies dwindled, most of them withdrawing to their main base here along the Yamales River, about 10 miles inside Honduras.

Although they continue be optimistic about prospects for aid, few do not know that Bush's emphasis on "bipartisanship" and cooperation with the Democratic majority in Congress may be a death knell to hopes for renewal.

Few appear disposed to quit.

"(Nicaraguan President) Daniel Ortega says we are a cadaver waiting to be buried. Well, here are 11,000 'cadavers,' alive," said Comandante Jackson, a member of the general staff who doesn't use his real name for reasons of security and esprit de corps.

Like many Contras, Jackson takes heart from Nicaragua's economic crash and the cuts the leftist Sandinista government says it is making in its defense budget.

"We can beat them even though they outnumber us because we're tougher, like wood. They can't send draftees from the city after us," said "Comandante Caliman," a battalion leader, his two silver-framed teeth flashing.

Jackson and others said groups of rebels still infiltrate Nicaragua despite a truce in effect since May, but the scale of the fighting has been drastically reduced.

The Contra encampment now spreads for seven miles along the Yamales River and gets larger every day as more small groups emerge from the jungle.

The camps are organized by battalion, although some are beginning to take on a settled look; many have brought wives and children from "the inside." A few women work as prostitutes, others have settled into rough wartime relationships.

"The movement is reinforcing itself," said a fighter nicknamed "Penguin." A doctor said nearly 600 children were born in the camp last year.

The articulate talk idealistically about why they fight; others can say no more than that they left "because the piricuacos came."

A few, generally among the higher ranking, were members of former Nicaraguan dictator Anastasio Somoza's army and fought "from day one."

But there are also bricklayers, ranch workers, truckers, doctors, sharecroppers who joined when the Sandinista government tried to force them into a cooperative.

Some said a brother or father was arrested or tortured, and there are those who took the opportunity to shed abusive parents, family problems or a criminal past.

They give themselves nicknames like "Lightning," "Point-Blank," "Leopard," and "Rambo," sometimes known as "Gordo" behind his back; but also "Rabbit" and "Quetzal," an ancient Indian god of the air.

Roberto Martinez, "Comandante Nolan," keeps his 700 men in shape with volleyball, boxing, marches and extra drills, "what little we guerrillas know," he said apologetically as about 50 recruits executed a sloppy maneuver.

Martinez, at 23, twice wounded, is less than half the age of some of the men he commands. "All that matters here is ability and leadership," he said.

Armed guards are posted 24 hours a day, patrols move through the hills, and combat discipline is observed on trails — marchers spread out to prevent casualties, with a rear guard yards behind.

Last week there was a brief firefight with leftist Honduran guerrillas, officers said, and there is always the danger of Sandinista infiltrators seeking intelligence.

Most men live in 10-by-6-foot huts with camouflage plastic roofs and walls, although some have built straw or wood walls and even small mud-and-wood houses.

"Some guys are architects," said Julio Vargas Cruz, known as "Hunter." He sticks to plastic, although it gets too hot in the sun.

CIM, pronounced "seem," is a two-hour hike from the main camp across a jungle mountain trail three feet deep in mud when it rains.

Here, even as about 600 men took tests in map reading and military tactics to qualify as officers, others worked on wooden buildings with tin roofs so that classes would not have to be held outdoors or under ponchos.

"We are not wasting our time here. We are preparing ourselves during this pause in the war," an instructor told about 40 officer candidates in an open tent.

A kitchen turns out 900 handmade tortillas a day; there's also a small slaughterhouse and a pit with a barbed wire grill big enough to barbecue four sides of beef.

Some of the beef is sold by local Hondurans at about $233 a head. Honduran merchants peddle everything from dandruff shampoo to cowboy boots. Baby clothes and underwear are big sellers.

But there also are complaints ranging from drunken driving to rape, although most confess there is much less thievery and lack of discipline than they thought there would be.

"You know that when somebody kills somebody down here, all he has to do is join the Contra and he's safe," said Ramon Valladares, whose son just opened a tire repair store in Danli, 55 miles from the Contra camp and the nearest large town.

The trucks Valentin Valladares services are carrying food paid for by a U.S. humanitarian aid program that provides a monotonous but steady diet of beans, rice and tortillas, with occasional meat.

Some officers worry about the camp's children. Boys above the age of about 10 work as camp aides; girls work in the kitchens, as do most of their mothers.

"We would like to have AID (the U.S. Agency for International Development) give us some pencils, chalk and blackboards so we can start schools for the kids and for the illiterate," said battalion commander Caliman.

Caliman, like most others, said he plans to return to his former job "when we win the war, assuming I'm not dead." In his case, sharecropping with coffee-picking in season.

"19," who refused to explain his nickname, was among the less hopeful. He made cigar boxes in Nicaragua, loved his work and tried to find work at the Plasencia cigar factory in Honduras.

"But you need a Honduran ID and a work permit, and the Honduran unions are tough," he said. "I'm over 50 and I can't fight anymore, but I'll go on because I have to."

His attitude is an exception to the determination expressed by most.

"When I started there was no thought we would ever get aid from the United States," said Adan de Jesus Vargas Garcia.

Known as Commandante Javier, he brought 30 men, three women and 15 children out of Nicaragua last week "because I didn't have anything left to fight with." His wife was wounded in the foot during the trip.

"With or without help," said the former small-time cattle dealer, "we'll go on fighting."

Bhutto Pledges Close Ties To China

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEIJING — Pakistani Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto arrived Saturday for her first official trip abroad and gave assurances that China, long a close ally of her country, will remain a cornerstone of Pakistan's foreign policy.

Ms. Bhutto, speaking at a banquet put on by Premier Li Peng, said her visit had special significance in that she was fulfilling a promise made after her electiotn November to make China her first foreign stop.

"This demonstrates that the democratic government attaches special importance and priority to Pakistan's time-tested relations with China," she said.

Ms. Bhutto received a boisterous welcome from about 200 Pakistani diplomats, residents and schoolchildren at the airport.

She broke with normal procedure, walking away from a waiting limousine to shake hands with the Pakistanis. Many shouted her name and waved banners in English, Arabic and Chinese reading "Long Live Benazir Bhutto" and "Long Live Sino-Pakistan Friendship."

The Pakistani leader will spend three days in China. In addition to Li, she plans to meet with senior leader Deng Xiaoping and the general secretary of the Communist Party, Zhao Ziyang.

The official Xinhua News Agency said Afghanistan will be the main focus of talks, but another topic is expected to be Chinese arms sales to Pakistan. The Muslim Newspaper in Islamabad reported Saturday that Pakistan had reached agreement with China to purchase 75 F-7 jets, a Chinese version of the MiG-21, at a cost of about $225 million.

China is second only to the United States in providing military equipment to Pakistan and is now helping Pakistan develop its nuclear industry. Both Pakistan and China have denied persistent reports the nuclear aid has military applications.

Ms. Bhutto, in her banquet remarks, recalled how her father, the late Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, made his first foreign trip to China in 1972.

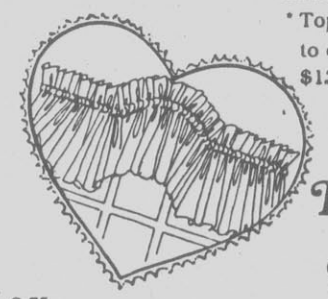

She said her father had sent all four of his children to China for a month in 1972, when she was a student in the United States. She returned to China with Bhutto on his 1976 state visit.

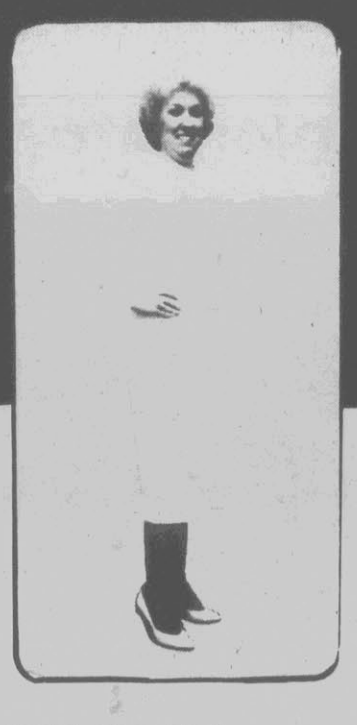

Her speech also gave a rundown of Pakistan's foreign policy, which generally has knitted closely with that of China.

Pakistan was glad to see prospects of improved relations between China and India following Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's visit to Beijing in December, Ms. Bhutto said.

U.S. Will De-Flag Kawaiti Tankers On Standby Basis

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANAMA, Bahrain — The United States has "tentatively approved" de-flagging six Kuwaiti oil tankers, but the deal depends on the ships remaining available to the United States in a national emergency, U.S. officials said Saturday.

The six ships are among 11 Kuwaiti tankers re-registered in July 1987 by the United States, entitling them to U.S. Navy protection as they carried Kuwaiti petroleum exports through the war-torn Persian Gulf.

Iran, then in the seventh year of its war with Iraq, targeted Kuwaiti ships because the Arab state supported Baghdad. Hostilities halted Aug. 20 when a U.N.-sponsored cease-fire took effect.

The Pentagon announced Jan. 11 the United States was preparing to de-flag six of the Kuwaiti tankers. It said the other five had been certified to continue flying the Stars and Stripes for another year.

Walter Oates, a public affairs officer at the Maritime Administration, said in a telephone interview the agency gave its "tentative approval" Feb. 7 for the six tankers to revert to Kuwaiti registry.

But he said it was unclear how Kuwait viewed the legal requirement that its ships remain available to the United States for possible use in a national crisis.

"Whether such a condition would be regarded by Kuwait as impinging on its sovereignty, only the Kuwaitis could answer," he said. Kuwaiti officials were not available immediately for comment.

U.S. law stipulates the "emergency availability" as a condition for the U.S. Maritime Administration to approve the sale or re-registry of American-owned and American-flagged commercial ships abroad.

Another official, who requested anonymity, said it was not known whether the Kuwaitis were aware of the provision, or whether it would have made any difference at the time.

Gulf-based shipping observers said another unknown factor was what practical value the huge tankers might have for the United States. One possible use might be storage.

Technically, the 11 ships belong to the Chesapeake Shipping Co., of Dover, Del., a firm Kuwait set up in 1987 to provide ostensible U.S. ownership. The ships' return to state-owned Kuwait Oil Tanker Co. apparently would be only a paper transfer, not a sale.

The de-flagging is the latest move by the United States to scale down its military role in the gulf, reflecting what officials say are reduced tensions since the truce.

The United States tripled the strength of its force in the gulf as the 'tanker war" worsened in 1987. Now it has trimmed that force from 27 to 23 ships and no longer escorts tankers.

The six being de-flagged include the 294,739-ton Townsend and 290,085-ton Middletown, both products carriers, and four identical, 46,723-ton liquified gas carriers.

Sources close to the Kuwaiti owners said the two large tankers no longer meet Maritime Administration safety rules and the gas carriers were included because the United States does not have enough merchant seamen qualified to serve on them.

Under the agreement, Kuwait has to replace its ships' non-U.S. crews with all-American crews if they fly the U.S. flag — a legal provision waived at the time of the re-flagging.

Communists Unable To Reach Agreement

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BUDAPEST, Hungary — The divided leaders of the Communist Party ended a two-day meeting Saturday, called to fashion a compromise on disputed reforms and the 1956 anti-Soviet revolt, with no firm word on any agreement.

The Central Committee meeting, called after Politburo reformer Imre Pozsgay shocked Hungarians by reassessing the revolt as a "popular uprising," finished with a terse report on the state news agency MTI, saying simply that "a communique will be published."

Earlier, party spokesman Emil Kimmel told Hungarian radio the "various platforms" within the 108-member Central Commi'tee "sought unity on the fundamental issues," indicating sharp differences were proving difficult to reconcile.

The length and secrecy of the debate, and surrounding press comment, indicated the party was split over plans to share power with other parties and a host of other reforms.

Kimmel indicated the party would reject Pozsgay's view. He said speakers at the Central Committee "said there should not be single-word summary formulations" when assessing the past.

For more than three decades, the revolt that was crushed violently by Soviet tanks officially has been termed a counterrevolution.

A source insisting on anonymity said the party had compromised on a new official view of 1956 after Pozsgay told the Central Committee his comment two weeks ago was his personal opinion.

When he made the comment, however, Pozsgay said his reassessment was based on the report of a party commission investigating four decades of communist rule in Hungary.

The report has not been published.

Pozsgay's statement touched off unprecedented open debate and revealed the party split on the pace and extent of reforms.

Fifteen of the alternative political movements founded in recent months said Monday they would not enter a coalition with the communists, as some Communist Party reformers desire, unless the party revises its view of 1956.

Prominent Central Committee member Gyula Horn hinted late Friday that Pozsgay's stance was not accepted by most members.

Varying only slightly from the official stance, Horn said on television the revolt may have started as a popular uprising but turned into "something which could be termed a counterrevolution" by the time it ended Nov. 4, 1956.

Representatives of alternative groups either refused to comment or were unavailable Saturday to say whether a formulation like Horn's would suffice for them to cooperate with the communists.

The state daily Magyar Nemzet said Saturday two of the most political new groups, the New March Front and Smallholders' Party, already have held talks on setting up national organizations before parliament legalizes alternative parties later this year.

The tempo of Hungary's recent political and economic reforms, and the pace with which new groups are springing up, indicate the Communist Party could lose the political initiative if it does embrace radical change.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

No Promises

The East Needs Asphalt, Not Hopes

The road to prosperity is paved with asphalt, not good intentions.

That's why any legislation funding major road-building in the state must stipulate priorities, and these priorities must be spelled out, project by project.

For eastern North Carolina, continually short-changed on major road construction, that specificity is not an option. It's time for the voters of the region to hold their lawmakers' feet to the fire. And it's time for these lawmakers to come home with dollars, not hopes.

'If the region's citizens are going to pay for improvements, they want their share of the booty and a reasonable guarantee of getting that portion.'

There is no question that 1989 is the time for the N.C. General Assembly to address the critical transportation needs of North Carolina. The cracks in the state's highway infrastructure are literal cracks — and potholes and sagging bridges and narrow, dangerous two-lane roads. And dirt roads and inadequate shoulders and traffic snarls on supposedly major thoroughfares. These fissures are unsightly reminders of a huge transportation shortfall.

What is less visible, but more ominous, is the lost economic opportunity from this shortfall — the industries that went elsewhere, the businesses that relocated, the taxpayers that accompanied these interests. While there is no way to measure what might have been, these losses are real and unacceptable. They will continue to escalate if money and action don't stop them.

But the bill to fix the state's roads may jolt taxpayers more than the potholes. And if the public is to accept that bump, it must know exactly what it's getting in return.

Three proposals are floating around the General Assembly, and all three recommend gas tax increases that could raise the price at the pumps by five cents a gallon. Quite a jar. The measures also would replace the state's $5 title transfer fee with a two percent consumption tax on car purchases. That would mean the buyer of a $15,000 car would pay $300 for the title. Big bump.

Only very nebulous recommendations have been made about where this money will be spent. That vagueness is not sufficient to convince eastern North Carolina taxpayers to open their pockets.

No, Down East won't settle for ambiguity. Here, bypass means the road runs through the Piedmont. That's the history of the region's share of road funds. Until the 1980s, roadbuilding took a detour when it came to eastern North Carolina. Never mind the immensity of the region and the geographic isolation of many communities — factors that made good transportation links of even greater importance.

So any bill that raises billions of dollars for highway construction must come with some strings attached. Those strings must tie spending to specific projects. And for Pitt County, several projects are urgent must-do's. Here is the list, lawmakers:

•Replacing all grade level crossings on U.S. 264 from Greenville to Wilson with interchanges. The intersections are substandard and a safety hazard.

•Further from home, the Wilson U.S. 264 bypass is imperative. That highway is Pitt's connection to the large urban areas of Raleigh and Charlotte. Completing them to interstate standard is crucial to the county's continued economic vigor.

•Providing Pitt County with a four lane connector to interstate highways 40 and 95.

There are other transportation needs in the community, but these remain the most significant. They are the deficiencies which act as roadblocks to economic growth, and they are the needs which must be addressed by any large state highway building initiative.

The directional sign to lawmakers from eastern North Carolina bears a message about the fine print on any roads funding: if the region's citizens are going to pay for improvements, they want their share of the booty and a reasonable guarantee of getting that portion.

Eastern North Carolina needs pavement, not promises.

Is Planet Earth headed for environmental disaster? Time Magazine's annual award went to Planet of the Year, "Endangered Earth." National Geographic's entire December issue was devoted to the theme, "Can Man Save This Fragile Earth?" Unless we all recognize and begin to reduce, reuse, and recycle waste and protect this earth, our children may have nothing to inherit.

The Greenville Recycling Committee, a group of concerned citizens working with the City of Greenville and Pitt County, have made significant strides toward helping citizens of Pitt County have easy access to recycling centers. The newest means is a compartmentalized trailer which can travel from neighborhood to neighborhood to allow people a convenient weekly dropoff site for cardboard, glass, paper and aluminum cans. The trailer will remain at each site approximately 24 hours.

As a neighborhood volunteer to this committee, I began to look for a convenient site for the trailer for the 550 houses in Club Pines, Belvedere, the Westhavens and surrounding homes. I was shocked to discover how many people are still turning their heads from this problem. A nearby church let me know very quickly they would not have the trailer in their parking lot because of the potential to have litter around it. At least six businesses referred me to their district or corporate headquarters as a means of getting me out the door. No one, it seems, could or would make a decision about this.

Thanks to Bill Bowen (Bowen Cleaners) and Wachovia Bank, a site has been secured in the parking lot of the Carolina East Center near Wachovia's A.T.M. Each Monday, beginning Feb. 17, 10 a.m. to Tuesday 8 a.m. Please look for it and use this or other dropoff sites. Encourage state and local governments, school systems and other large users of paper to buy and use recycled paper.

We must all help to solve this pollution/waste problem before we have no place to call home.

While watching television in my home in Baltimore, I saw on Channel 32 from Washington, D.C., a most vividly rewarding program. It was titled, "Pitch A Boogie Woogie." It was filmed in Greenville, North Carolina — the beloved hometown of my youth. Moreover, it was made in 1947 in the Old Plaza Theatre which was located on Albermarle Avenue. I was a young usher there.

All of the characters of the show rekindled fondly nostalgic memories. This is especially true of the actors such as the late Tom Foreman whose family has always been highly regarded. Rev. Dr. Little was my schoolmate. His close-knit and loving family resided happily on the corner of Reade and Third streets. I still remember Mr. Herman Forbes as a great musician. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Shivers, who commented on the film, are still my cherished friends.

East Carolina University is to be complimented for reviving the spirit of this movie. Motion picture archivists have rendered a uniquely praiseworthy service. Because of this, Greenville has never been portrayed more proudly or honorably. To top it off, this film has made a lot of people feel good.

To the editor:

I applaud the Charlotte-Mecklenburg County teachers who have set a date to rally in Raleigh for pay increases from state legislators. No amount of "letter writing, calling or 'planning a little something on the weekend when representatives are in town'" will get the attention of state legislators like a mass rally at the Capitol.

Until teachers stand up and fight for decent professional wages, politicians will continue to place their needs on he back burner. If every single teacher in the state of North Carolina left their classrooms and appeared on the Governor's doorstep Feb. 14, pay raises would be secured! Teachers in North Carolina have sat back quietly with their hands folded neatly behind their backs for a very long time.

Until educators command respect for themselves and a decent professional wage, we can all expect the education of our children to continue to decline.

I am replying to recent "Sunday Morning Notes" by Alvin Taylor.

Yes, the school system today is a far cry from the little rural schools of the 50's. No one graduated in my class who could not read or write! Those who were troublemakers (and there were a few) were looked down upon instead of being heroes. There were no drug problems and the kids were not sex-crazed. There was no sex education, and by the way, the four years I was in high school, no one dropped out for pregnancy. Sports were very important, but school was definitely for educational purposes and not social. How can we term our schools "successful" when Channel 9 last week reported that student scores in Pitt County and in North Carolina continue dropping lower than previously reported!

In the fifties, when discipline was necessary, the teacher was allowed to take care of the problem and occasionally the principal assisted — and more than likely, the parents repeated the disciplinary actions at home, supporting the teacher.

Children were not forced to be adults at such early ages, but were allowed to be children until their adolescent years brought about the normal changes of growing up. Childhood was a wonderful time; elementary school was exciting and high school fun and fulfilling.

Not enough praise could be lauded upon the teachers of the 50's in the Winterville school. They were not only my instructors — they were my role models, my confidants, my inspiration. Every student was individually known, cared about personally and many times individually assisted by these teachers, sometimes long after the school day was over.

In conclusion, I don't know even one thing unfavorable that could be said about my rural school of the 50's.

Roses, Not Poinsettias, For Valentines

Alvin Taylor

Sunday Morning Notes

It's Valentine's ... or at least it will be Valentine's on Tuesday. And it's a time to do something special for that girlfriend, boyfriend, wife or husband. Usually that means roses, a special card, an intimate gift or just something practical including a night out for dinner.

'There ought be a list of dos and don'ts for Valentines. Since there isn't, here are my thoughts on the matter.'

Sometimes people use the occasion for insults, which should be a no-no. There ought be a list of dos and don'ts for Valentines. Since there isn't, here are my thoughts on the matter.

For guys:

•Do give roses, chrysanthemums, or carnations.

•Do be considerate on Valentine's Day.

•Don't make comments about how the romance has gone out of life.

•Do plan to spend as much time as possible with her on Valentine's day.

For girls:

•Do buy him handkerchiefs with hearts on them if you wish.

•Don't expect him to use them.

•Don't buy Valentine's cards with insulting messages.

•Do give him shaving lotion if you wish.

•Do give him practical gifts like hunting knives, bill folds and even a wrist watch if you can afford it.

•Don't give him bow ties or a walking cane if you know he never uses them.

•Do take him out to dinner if you feel so inclined.

•Don't pressure him to take you to an expensive restaurant if you know he can't afford it.

For guys and gals:

•Do be natural and affectionate on Valentine's. It complements all the gifts, cards and candy.

Assume Productivity, Assume Education

George Will

WASHINGTON — A delightful joke stopped being delightful when it became national policy. The joke was: Two politicians fall into a deep ravine with steep, sheer sides. "We're trapped!" cries one. "No," says the other, "we'll just assume a ladder."

Imaginative assuming, once a cottage industry in Washington, is now, because of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit-reduction requirements, a sacrament. President Bush is assuming more rapid economic growth than most economists assume, more rapid increases in productivity than have usually been achieved in the postwar era, and interest rates plunging enough to produce 7 percent mortgages.

Sen. Fritz Hollings (D-S.C.) is so fed up with the fudging of figures and cooking of books provoked by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings that he proposes, in effect, blowing it up. He would remove the Social Security trust fund surplus from the budget. That would turn the entire Congress' hair as white as Hollings'.

In the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30, the advertised deficit was $155 billion. However, the real deficit for all government activities other than Social Security (which had a $39 billion surplus) was $194 billion. Take Social Security (the surplus is growing $72,000 a minute) and other trust funds (highways, airports) out of the budget and suddenly the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit target ($150 billion) is about $135 billion more distant.

To attack the true deficit of $285 billion, Hollings proposes freezing all spending (exempting COLAs and new entitlement beneficiaries) and enacting a 5 percent value-added tax to fill a Deficit Reduction Trust Fund. You are thinking: He can't be serious. He is. But popular government will not permit that.

This is the kind of crisis democracies deal with poorly. The cost of living off seed corn is slowly cumulative anemia, quiet and virtually invisible. Of course, a recession would get everyone's attention. Would? Will.

The current expansion was 74 months old on Inauguration Day. If it lasts until the next inauguration, it will be 122 months old. It has already run 42 months longer than the average of the 30 cyclical expansions since the middle of the 19th century.

Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan is in charge of keeping the expansion going without allowing inflation to get going. The Fed is one of the few federal institutions that can achieve what it intends. Its intentions pertain to interest rates. Greenspan is a serious inflation-fighter, but his room for maneuver with rising rates is severely limited because a recession has never been riskier than one would be now.

In a recession, the decline in government revenues would produce soaring deficits and leave the government without the option of countercyclical spending. Even if you assume (perhaps imaginatively) that the problem of insolvent savings and loans has been solved, recession or rising interest rates could produce a huge new problem from today's marginally solvent savings and loans. The servicing of Third World debts, and hence the health of important U.S. banks, depends on Third World exports to a growing U.S. economy. Leveraged buyouts, and borrowing by corporations resisting hostile takeovers, have produced debts that cannot be serviced unless the economy is growing.

For a perspective on our current vulnerability, consider this: The Carter budget submitted in January, 1980, proposed a deficit of $15.6 billion. The interest costs on the debt this year will be $130 billion more than in 1980. That is, as Hollings says, like a new $130 billion spending program. It redistributes revenues regressively to buyers of government bonds.

Much of the federal budget is a mechanism administering a huge and regressive intergenerational transfer of wealth. The 12 percent of Americans over 65 receive 27 percent of federal spending and are, as a group, better off than the rest of the population.

Forbes magazine calculates that the federal government spends more than ten times as much per capita on the elderly as on children. Sen. Pat Moynihan (D-N.Y.) notes that ours is the first society in history in which the poorest group is children, not the elderly. Twelve percent of the elderly are in poverty. Twenty percent of children are. Guess which group votes at a higher rate than the rest of the population, and which group does not vote at all.

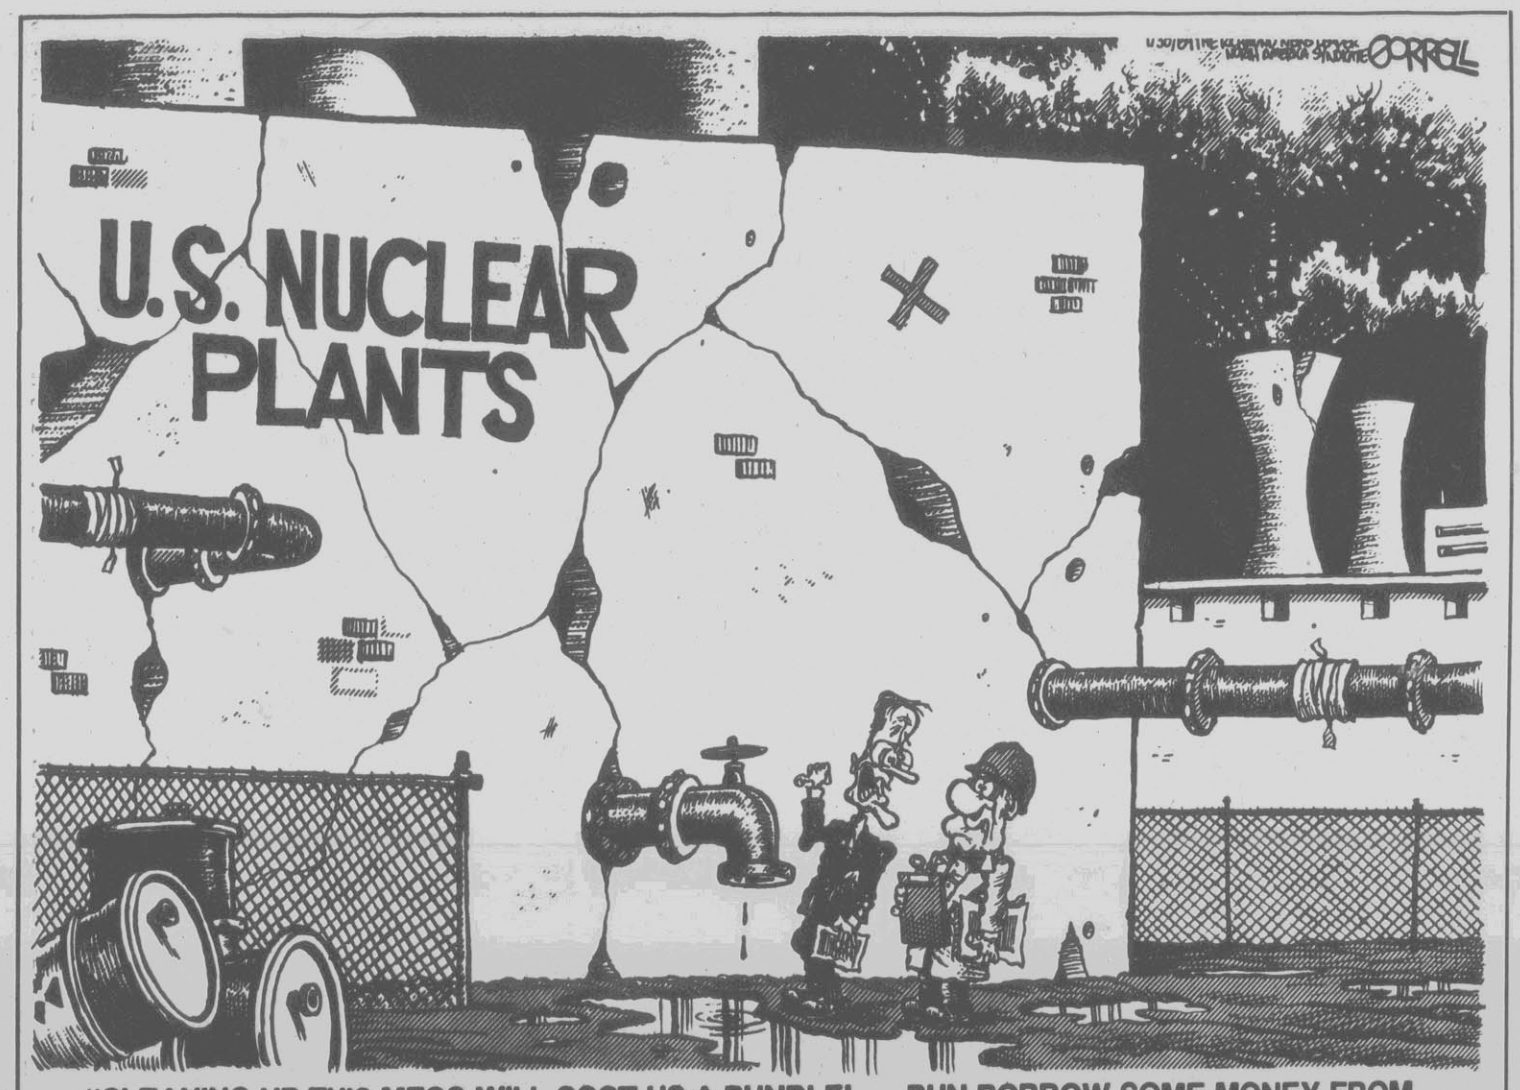

'Here is a question for the fellow who says he wants to be "the education President": Do you want to increase spending on education?'

We are spending less per capita to enhance the productivity (and thus to enlarge the income) of our children than our parents spent on us. Here is a question for the fellow who says he wants to be "the education President": Do you want to increase spending on education?

Coming to the heart of the deficit problem, productivity, American children spend 180 days a year in school, Japanese children spend 240 days — longer days. Japanese students outperform American children in math, science, engineering. American children do better than Japanese children in English. For now.

America: The AK47 Connection

Richard Cohen

WASHINGTON — My first time in Beirut, I passed a kid — maybe 14 or so — carrying a AK47 assault rifle. The combination of youth and firepower scared me. What could prompt a 14-year-old to open fire? A Western face? A desire to impress a girl? I walked down the street as quickly as I could. What kind of society was this?, I wondered.

Now I wonder about my own country. The very same weapon that so scared me in Beirut can be purchased just across the Potomac River in Virginia. It is a weapon of incredible destructiveness, a hardy gun, good in battle and wonderful for the massacre of innocents. For American chauvinists who think the communists can't make anything of quality, behold the Soviet-designed AK47. What the Colt-45 was to the Old West, the AK47 is to the Third World. It can turn a psychotic into a legend.

Patrick Edward Purdy used an AK47 to kill five children and wound almost 30 others last month in a Stockton, Calif., schoolyard. He walked into a gun shop in Oregon, put up his money and walked out with the weapon. That simple. Tell the grieving parents that guns don't kill people.

In the nearby Virgina suburbs of Washington, three stores sell the AK47. Walk in and pick one up. The price is a ridiculous — sometimes as low as $300. About 45,000 of these weapons have been imported since 1966, most of them from China. A member of the Maryland Legislature walked into a hearing with weapons he had bought legally — an AK47, a Uzi, an AR15 — and his colleagues wanted to duck under the table. Yet there are plenty of people out there with just those weapons. Where can we duck?

Consider the American Civil Liberties Union, which takes an absolutist stance on the First Amendment (thou shalt not censor anything, even pornography). It is derided as a fringe organization, vaguely un-American and, as the wise Ed Meese once characteristically observed, the friend of the criminal. In the last presidential campaign, the ACLU was used by Read-My-Lips-Bush to skewer Michael Dukakis.

Yet the National Rifle Association, which takes an absolutist position on guns, is virtually synonymous with the flag itself. President Bush is a lifetime member, as was Ronald Reagan before him. No politician ever called an opponent a "card-carrying member of the NRA." But, may we ask, who really is the friend of the criminal? Is it the organization that seeks to ensure his rights or one that virtually insists he be armed to the teeth? The answer in any other country would be obvious.

Name the weapon and the NRA will defend its importation and sale. No matter what its firepower, the NRA will find someone who hunts with it or uses it for target practice. Its reasoning goes like this: For the sake of any hunter or target shooter, the lives of us all can be endangered. Besides, the Constitution ensures our right to bear arms. After all, the Red Coats may yet return and the Indians may rise again.

This reasoning is what allowed Purdy to buy his AK47. Did anyone ask him why he wanted the weapon? Did anyone think it was strange that someone would want a semi-automatic weapon that, with some ingenuity, could be converted to an automatic one? Did he know a place where he could find, say, 1,000 deer — and wanted to get as many as he could before they bolted?

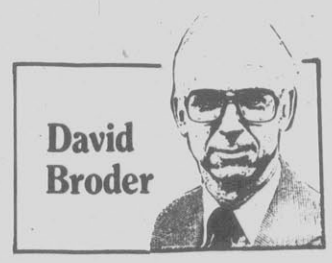

Last year, the government seized a luxury yacht because a trace of marijuana had been found on it. But should that yacht really have been engaged in drug smuggling (it was not), the dope pushers on board would have been entitled to have an AK47 — as many as they wanted. For a trace of marijuana, you can go straight to jail. For a weapon that can eliminate your competitors in the drug business (and anyone else who happens to be in the vicinity), no one can touch you — and the NRA will defend your constitutional right to be a potential homicidal maniac.

Abraham Lincoln was killed by a gun. So was James Garfield and William McKinley. Franklin Roosevelt was nearly shot. An attempt was made on the life of Harry Truman. John Kennedy was killed by a gun and so, too, was his brother, Robert. A gunman killed Martin Luther King Jr. Twice guns were pulled on Gerald Ford and Ronald Reagan was wounded by a deranged young man who wanted to impress a movie actress. What other country can boast of this record?

In this way, a city like Washington (372 were killed last year, most of them by guns) becomes like Beirut. Civilization unravels and the same question occurs: What kind of society is this?

Lonesome Wright

David Broder

WASHINGTON — The very week that Larry McMurtry's classic tale "Lonesome Dove" gripped the nation on CBS-TV, Speaker of the House Jim Wright (D-Texas) earned that unwanted title for himself. The fiasco over the federal pay increase left Wright isolated from his leadership allies, disarmed for future political combat and increasingly vulnerable to a rank-and-file coup which could cost him his job.

Very few looked good in this affair, certainly not the showboating senators and representatives who ostentatiously voted against a raise. By knuckling under to the know-nothing demagoguery of their hometown radio talk-shows and caving in to the moralistic blackmail of National Nag Ralph Nader, 90 percent of the senators and representatives demonstrated again that they put the safety of their seats far ahead of the well-being of the Congress in which they serve.

The long-term losers in the affair are the American people. Their misplaced indignation about a raise barely adequate to restore top government salaries to the real-dollar levels of 20 years ago will make it far harder to recruit and retain well-qualified people for the judiciary and for demanding scientific, technical and managerial posts in government. It will also perpetuate a system in which members of Congress supplement their inadequate salaries with direct payments — so-called honorariums — from interest groups intent on influencing their votes. That outside-income scam would have ended the day after the pay raise went into effect. Now it will get worse.

The press was shabby on this story, too. Editorial writers who should have known better, including those on the Washington Post, chose to take cheap shots. They bawled that the congressmen were too chicken to vote on the issue, ignoring the fact that four-fifths of those directly affected by the proposed increase — the judges and top executive branch officials — and another 10,000 people in senior executive positions whose pay is pegged to the top salaries, would have no voice in a decision made that way. Like Western bullies firing rhetorical bullets from their six-shooters, the editorial writers told the congressmen that before they filled their canteens, they better "show us you can dance."

And dance they did. Many were part of the shameful spectacle, but the man who is paying the highest price politically is Jim Wright. All the howling and posturing and moralizing would have had no effect on the pay raise had not Wright's knees buckled.

When Wright unilaterally decided to "conduct a poll" among House members on whether he should fulfill his commitment to keep the issue off the House floor, he let the whole political world see he could not take the heat.

That decision, ironically, almost certainly will speed his own exit from the speakership. Already, you can hear members of the House saying that under similar circumstances in 1977, his predecessor, Tip O'Neill, did not crumble.

Nothing will be done about Wright until the ethics committee report comes down. But unless he is exonerated of all charges, he will find himself short of defenders, especially among the younger members. The Democrats elected in the past ten years dominate the caucus numerically and could install one of their own as speaker any time they wish. These younger members are the ones most in need of the pay increase. They have the children's dental bills and college costs still facing them.

What happened in the House last week shows just how fragile is the veneer of self-confidence among the Democrats who have controlled that body for 34 straight years. On the key procedural vote last Monday, they jumped ship, not just on Jim Wright, but on the entire party leadership — including all of the major committee chairmen. "The panic was on," said Rep. Dick Gephardt (D-Mo.), one of the few to resist the stampede.

Enjoying the spectacle were Republican National Committee chairman Lee Atwater and his old boss in the Reagan campaign, Edward J. Rollins, who is soon to take over running the previously ineffectual Republican Congressional Campaign Committee. The Republicans did not orchestrate the attack on the pay raise, but they know that the unreformed perks of Congress — the honorariums, the self-serving newsletters, the bloated staffs — offer inviting targets for similar attacks in 1990 and 1992.

The ugly scenes of Capitol Hill last week could well be a prelude to more panic politics in the months to come. A House scared enough of its shadowy reputation to abandon a pay increase is certainly scared enough to ditch a speaker many of its members now regard as a campaign liability.

Medicare Weakens While Keeping Elderly Healthy

By Lee May
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Theodore Flack, a retired miner who now lives in Washington on a low fixed income, suffers from high blood pressure, gout, arthritis and sinusitis.

But he remains a vigorous and robust six-footer despite his 76 years — and he gives Medicare the credit. Without Medicare to pay for most of his medical care, including a three-week stay in the hospital last year, "I'd be in pretty bad shape," he says.

But even as Medicare is keeping Flack healthy, federal officials across town are working overtime to try to restore Medicare to financial health. White House budget director Richard G. Darman is looking at Medicare's future, and he doesn't like what he sees.

Medicare now costs less than half as much as Social Security, but if health care costs for the elderly keep growing at current rates, it will catch up by the year 2000. And by 2015, it will overtake Social Security and defense spending combined. Darman's job: to keep that from happening.

Flack's medical needs and Darman's financial concerns appear to be on a collision course. Can the government ensure Medicare's future by cracking down on doctor fees and hospital costs? Can it restrain the mounting costs of medical technology and malpractice insurance? Or will it have to solve Medicare's problems on the backs of the elderly by limiting their medical services or increasing their share of costs?

These are the questions that President Bush and Congress will have to grapple with as they put flesh on the bones of Bush's proposed $5 billion cut from Medicare's projected growth next year.

In the budget documents accompanying his nationally televised speech to Congress Thursday night, Bush said the cuts should be fall on doctors and hospitals, not the elderly. Even with them, however, Medicare will grow from $84 billion in the current year to $92 billion in the next.

In his speech, Bush chose not to mention the painful choices ahead for Medicare. Instead, he spoke in generalities about how "a decent society shows compassion for the young, the elderly, the vulnerable and the poor."

Several members of Congress immediately assailed Bush's Medicare proposal. Suggesting a contentious battle ahead, House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, said edgily: "We will oppose attempts to cut Medicare."

Medicare benefits not only the elderly but also their sons and daughters and nephews and nieces, upon whom many of the costs of caring for their older relatives used to fall. Dorothy Hamilton, who cares for her ailing 84-year-old mother in Cliffwood Beach, N.J., says: "I don't think there should be any cuts. It isn't sufficient enough now for people who don't have a lot of money."

Medicare beneficiaries already must pay $560 for their first day of hospitalization, $31.90 a month toward their insurance against doctor bills, their first $75 a year of doctors' fees and, in general, 20 percent of all additional doctors' fees. And Medicare does not pay at all for a number of services, including most immunizations, dental and eye care, physical examinations, outpatient prescriptions and custodial care.

From the perspective of many of Medicare's beneficiaries, doctors bear a heavy responsibility for the program's runaway costs. Medicare payments to doctors are rising three times faster than those to hospitals.

Jack Meyer, president of New Directions for Policy, a Washington research organization, says doctors run too many expensive laboratory tests and too frequently carry out unnecessary medical procedures.

"We've reached a point when these guys have to be put on a budget like the rest of us," Meyer says. "We're going to have to raise the tough questions about what services are necessary. Certain surgical procedures are done when they are not called for."

Doctors assert that they are caught between the needs of patients and the demands of a litigious society. If they do not take every precaution, they fear, a medical malpractice suit awaits them.

Jeffrey Marsh, comptroller and general manager of the National Capitol Reciprocal Insurance Co., says $1 million in coverage for obstetricians and gynecologists can cost anywhere from $12,000 a year in Oklahoma to $186,000 in Florida.

The exploding cost of malpractice insurance has generated calls for national ceilings on awards in malpractice suits. But until that happens, Marsh says, "we have no choice but to charge enough to cover the costs." And those costs are ultimately passed along to patients.

Medicare, as it is now structured, is not equipped to discourage recipients from seeking better technology, or doctors from using it. As long as most of the costs are passed on to the government, no one has an incentive to control them.

The system "in effect subsidizes every contact" between patients and physicians," Cogan says. "The policy dilemma is to control the growth and the cost without fundamentally altering the physician-patient relationship. And nobody has found a solution to that problem."

In the struggle to control Medicare's costs, the only notable success has been with hospitals. In 1983, the government abandoned the practice of reimbursing hospitals for services rendered to Medicare beneficiaries and instead instituted standard payments for treatment of each of 468 different patient conditions.

Hospitals complain it is unfair to set rates for all illnesses or injuries without considering the many possible variables that come into play when a person enters a hospital. But it has clearly contained costs. Federal payments to hospitals rose to $52.1 billion in fiscal 1988, a 4.5 percent increase over the previous year, while medical payments, mostly to doctors, jumped 13.6 percent to $34 billion.

Institutions are not the only targets of Medicare cost-cutters. Government policy makers will also consider proposals that would force Medicare beneficiaries to bear some of the burden of holding costs down.

Meyer asserts that cost-cutting measures "are going to hit beneficiaries." He suggests that the government might have to increase Medicare's $75 deductible on doctor fees.

The American Medical Association favors phasing in a system under which the elderly are entitled to medical benefits only to the extent that they contributed to the Medicare system while they were working. At present, all the elderly receive full benefits, regardless of their job history.

Whatever happens to Medicare will probably not happen quickly. "Policy in every area of government is made very incrementally, very slowly," Cogan says. "It's the fundamental nature of democracy. You don't see a radical policy change being made overnight."

Theodore Flack hopes the policy makers will remember "the little guy." For too long, he says, "the rich got richer and the poor got poorer."

Deaths Prevented

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) — North Carolina's Child Passenger Protection Law prevented deaths and serious injuries to at least 250 children during the first 5½ years it was in effect, according to the University of North Carolina Highway Safety Research Center.

Despite the law, however, more child passengers under age 6 died in auto crashes in North Carolina in 1988 than in any year in the previous decade, according to figures compiled by the center.

Thirty-nine children in that age category died on North Carolina highways in 1988, up from an average of 22 between 1982 and 1987. Previously, the highest number was 36 in 1978.

Under a law that went into effect in July 1985, safety seat use is required for all children under the age of 3. Children between the ages of 3 and 6 are required to ride in safety seats or or wear seat belts.

Second Half Run Sparks Dukes Past ECU

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

HARRISONBURG, Va. — James Madison made East Carolina forward Blue Edwards the focal point of its defensive effort in the second half and by doing that, did the Pirates in.

The Dukes came from behind in the second half to claim a 74-61 CAA basketball victory before a sold out JMU Convocation Center.

ECU, which led 35-33 at the half, fell victim to a dry spell midway through the second period that allowed the Dukes to get back in the game.

Edwards had 18 points in the first half and 30 on the game, but he went through a key second-half stretch without seeing the ball as JMU rallied to take the lead.

"The key was defense," said JMU coach Lefty Driesell. "The key was our ability to stop Edwards for a while. The other guys were missing. We left some guys open.

"Blue Edwards is a heck of a player. He's like Buck Williams or David Thompson. He's a horse. But in the second half, we went to a combination defense and that hurt them some."

That decision by JMU left ECU's other players open, but ECU struggled from the field in the second half, hitting on only 35 percent of its shots after shooting 59 percent in the first period.

"What they did was say, 'we'll let everybody but Blue beat us.' We were on 52 forever," ECU coach Mike Steele said. "I thought the difference in the game was they went to a different defense on Blue and we had a lot of open shots. But Jeff Kelly goes 3-9 and Kenny Murphy goes 3-10. They were wide open shots and we didn't make them."

The Pirates maintained a small edge over the first ten minutes of the second half and actually led by as many as five, 42-37, after a three-pointer by Lose with 15:25 remaining.

But Ken Halleck came off the bench to hit a three-pointer and after a miss by Edwards, Bostic scored underneath to tie the game at 42-42 with 13:29 remaining.

From there the teams traded baskets with ECU gaining its final tie with 8:33 remaining when Edwards fed Love for a layup to make it 48-48.

Claude Ferdinand, though, quickly scored underneath to make it 50-48 and JMU never trailed again.

Edwards drove in for a lay-in to pull the Pirates back within 52-50 with 7:08 remaining, but Cooley scored again for the Dukes to make it 54-50.

Two free throws from Edwards made it 54-52 with 6:05 remaining.

Davis missed at the other end for the Dukes, but ECU missed a chance to tie when Stanley Love lost the ball out of bounds with 5:27 to go.

With 5:06 remaining, Halleck broke free again and hit another three-pointer to make it 57-52 and the Bucs never really threatened from there.

Edwards was called for a charge on the next trip down the floor and after trading a couple of possessions, Kenny Brooks drove down the left side in the Dukes' spread offense, hit a jumper and was fouled by Kelly. He hit the free throw and with 2:44 left in the game, JMU led 60-52.

"I thought we ran that delay pretty good," Driesell said. "And we hit our free throws. I thought we played well."

That was all the edge the Dukes needed as the kept rolling down the final stretch for the win.

"They made the plays they had to to win.," Steele said. "When guys make a decision defensively, we still have to try and get the ball to him. After he catches it, then when he throws it back out they are wide open. We just didn't make the shots."

After trailing early in the first half, ECU was able to rally back and take the lead at the half, 35-33.

The Dukes held a brief lead early on before ECU surged ahead, 13-12, on a three-pointer by Edwards with 11:48 remaining following a steal by Murphy.

From there the teams traded baskets until ECU forged ahead briefly on five straight points by Edwards. His three-point play with 8:33 remaining made it 23-19, but Bostic hit for the Dukes at the other end to make it 23-21.

Lady Bucs Fall To Madison

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

When the smoke finally settled over the basketball court at Minges Coliseum Saturday night, James Madison had taken a 63-53 Colonial Athletic Association victory over the Lady Pirates of East Carolina.

But, in many ways, the final score wasn't the story of the game, a physical contest that let to a fight, a double ejection, and a pair of injuries to the Lady Pirates — one of which might carry over into future games.

Chris O'Connor went down in the first half with what described as at least a severe sprain. That came just over 10 minutes into the contest.

Then, with 3:56 remaining in the half, Savage went down with a knee injury and had to leave the game.

Ferry Leads Duke Past Terps, 86-60

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DURHAM — Danny Ferry scored 24 points as 14th-ranked Duke used a first-half binge to run away to an 86-60 victory over Maryland in the Atlantic Coast Conference Saturday.

All five Blue Devils starters contributed to a 16-0 run that covered five minutes and helped Duke take a 22-8 edge. Maryland trailed 40-22 at halftime.

Duke, which hit 60 percent of its field goals in the first half and 57.9 pecent for the game, raised its record to 17-4, 6-4 in the ACC. Maryland dropped to 8-14 and 1-8.

Alaa Abdelnaby started the run with a tip-in at 15:02 and Quin Snyder finished it with a layup off a steal with 10:45 left in the half. The Blue Devils hit seven of nine shots in the decisive stretch.

Phil Henderson's 3-point field goal with 16:43 remaining pushed Duke to a 62-32 lead, and the advantage grew to 75-42 when Brian Davis hit the front end of a two-shot foul.

Henderson finished with 17 points and Robert Brickey had 14 for Duke.

Jerrod Mustaf led Maryland with 18 points and John Johnson had 17. The Terrapins were held to 36.7 percent field goal shooting.

Ga. Tech.....75
Wake Forest.....70

ATLANTA — Dennis Scott scored 22 points and Tom Hammonds 19 as No. 20 Georgia Tech survived a late rally to trim Wake Forest 75-70 in Atlantic Coast Conference basketball Saturday.

Tech, 16-7 overall and 5-3 in the ACC, held a 10-point lead with just under six minutes remaining before Wake Forest rallied and cut the lead to 72-70 on Sam Ivy's basket with 44 seconds remaining.

Ellis, Walker Win NBA Events

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — With perennial champions Larry Bird and Michael Jordan sidelined by injury, two new champions and one old favorite dominated the NBA's glitz and glamor events on Saturday.

Dale Ellis won the 3-point shootout and Kenny "Sky" Walker the slam-dunk contest. Earlier, former Houston star Calvin Murphy electrified the crowd in the Legends ame.

Walker, who stayed in the slam-dunk event despite the death of his father three days before, took advantage of the absence of past champions Jordan, Dominique Wilkins and Larry Nance.

Ellis, the runner-up when Bird won the 3-point contest for the third straight time in 1988, had a final-round score that would have beaten the injured Boston Celtics star a year ago in Chicago.

Ellis said Bird's absence had an effect on the 3-point competition.

"You've got to expect the defending champion to win again after three years in a row," Ellis said. "I felt my chances to win were good with him not here."

Ellis was a model of consistency, scoring 19, 18 and 19 points, respectively, in the three rounds. He beat Craig Hodges, a loser to Bird in the 1986 finals, 19-15 in the championship round.

Last year, Ellis lost 17-15 to Bird in the final round. His three-round total of 56 was one short of Bird's best of 57 last year.

Walker, a reserve forward on the New York Knicks, did plenty of "sky-walking" to win the slam-dunk title.

Favoring a variety of 360-degree spin dunks, Walker started slowly with 42.5 points out of a possible 50 on his first dunk of the day.

After that, he was given scores of 48.8, 46.9, 49.5, 48.9, 49.6 and 49.6, respectively. No one else in the competition had a score higher than 47.8.

"I was not sure I'd make it," Walker said, referring to his doubts about competing because of his father's death. "I talked with my mother. Her advice was, 'Life goes on. You have to go on.'

"I felt like he was with me. There was a motivation to win it for him."

Clyde Drexler reached the finals against Walker and failed to put the ball in the basket in his first two attempts of the last round, giving Walker the victory.

Walker credited Drexler with helping him during the competition.

"I was tentative coming out and then Clyde told me to move my legs more and move the ball down more," Walker said. "The first 360 got a real good response."

Drexler, in the slam-dunk contest for the fifth time in six years, couldn't believe that Walker had not been invited to the event in his first two years in the NBA.

"Where's he been? He hasn't been invited? That's amazing," Drexler said.

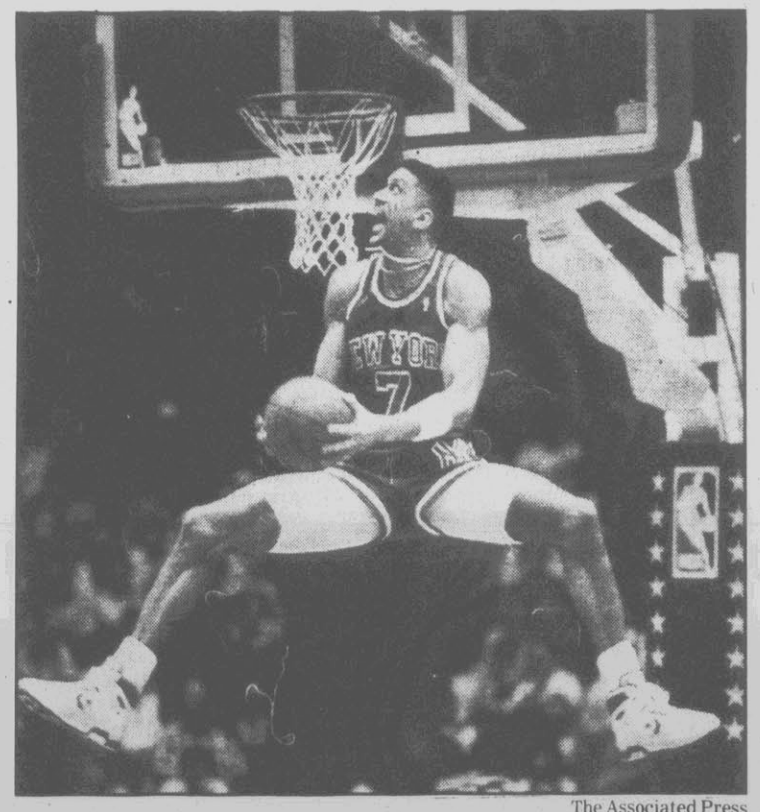

Drexler twice missed dunks after running almost the length of the floor and taking off from just in front of the free-throw line.

"Dominique and Larry Nance were saying, 'Try it from the free-throw line.' They were helping me out, right?" Drexler said. "The first one felt pretty good, but I missed it. The second one just slipped out of my hand."

The slam-dunk judges were Warren Moon of the NFL Houston Oilers and four retired NBA players — Julius Erving, Bobby Jones, Earl Monroe and Nate Archibald. Jones, Monroe and Archibald played in the Legends game dominated by Murphy.

Playing in front of a hometown crowd a week after being named the Houston Rockets' shooting coach, Murphy scored 26 points, including a game-winning 3-pointer at the buzzer, as the West beat the East 54-53 in the Legends game.

Lap Of 196.987 MPH Earns Schrader Daytona 500 Pole

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Ken Schrader won the Daytona 500 pole for the second straight year Saturday, taking the top qualifying spot away from Darrell Waltrip and a one-armed Bill Elliott in the first round of time trials for the Feb. 19 race.

Schrader turned a fast lap of 196.997 mph on the 2.5-mile, high-banked oval at Daytona International Speedway, while Waltrip, his teammate with Hendrick Motorsports, took the other front row position at 195.916.

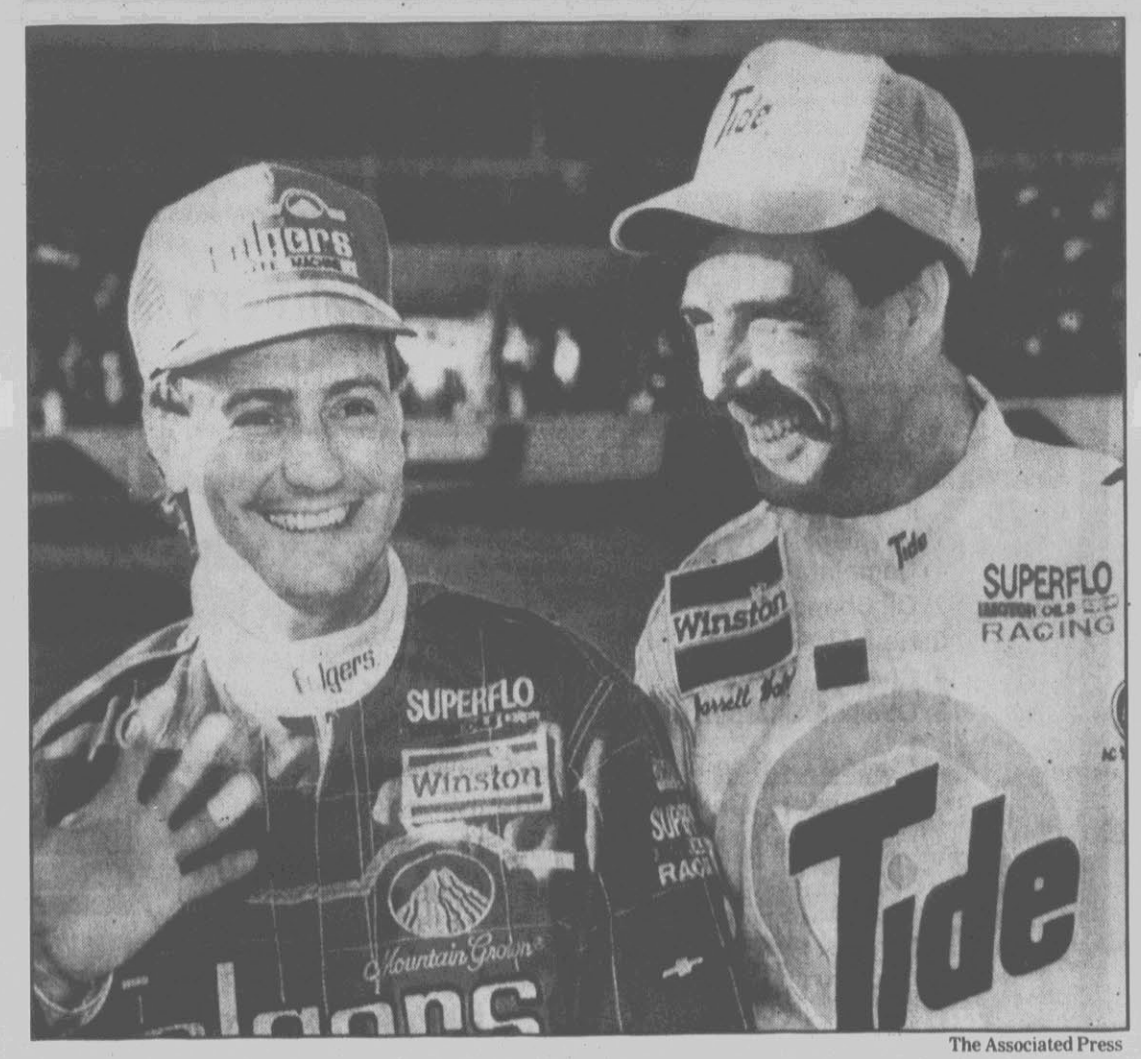

Those two, both in Chevrolet Monte Carlos, were the only drivers to pin down starting positions for the $1.7 million season-opening NASCAR Winston Cup race.

The rest of the 42-car field will be determined in further time trials Monday through Wednesday and in the twin 125-mile qualifying races on Thursday.

Elliott, the defending Winston Cup champion and a three-time Daytona 500 pole-winner, drove his Ford Thunderbird to a lap of 195.737 — the third fastest of the day — despite a broken left wrist suffered in a crash during practice on Friday.

Schrader's Plan For Busch Is To Simply Stay In Front

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Ken Schrader's battle plan for Sunday's $230,000 Busch Clash is simple: stay out front.

"I'm going to start up front and just stay there," Schrader said. "No matter what, that's what you gotta do — stay there.

"There's not much strategy in a race like the Busch Clash anymore, except run hard as you can all day. When you're running close to 200 (mph), that run don't take too long."

The 11th edition of the made-for-television stock car race will cover 20 laps and 50 miles on the 2.5-mile, high-banked oval at Daytona International Speedway.

It will be televised live by CBS beginning at 12 p.m. EST.

Terry Labonte, the 1985 Clash winner, echoed Schrader.

"The only thing I can tell you about the Busch Clash right now is that I'm starting fourth. I guess the only strategy for a short race like that is to get to the front as quick as you can and try to stay there.

"If the strongest car gets to the

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PITTSBURGH — Jason Matthews scored 24 points and Pittsburgh held No. 2 Georgetown to eight points in the final 10 minutes to upset the Hoyas 79-74 Saturday in the Big East Conference.

Matthews and Rod Brookin scored six points each during a 12-0 Pittsburgh run midway through the second half that rallied the Panthers from a 10-point deficit to a 68-66 lead on Matthews' fifth 3-pointer of the game with 5:58 to play.

With 6-foot-10 Georgetown freshman star Alonzo Mourning on the bench after fouling out with 8:13 to play, Pitt pulled off its fourth upset victory over a Top Ten team in the last five weeks. The Panthers last month upset then-No. 2 Syracuse, then-No. 3 Oklahoma and then No.-9 Seton Hall.

After leading 66-56 on Dikembe Mutombo's dunk with 10 minutes left, the Hoyas — who had won eight consecutive Big East games — were outscored 23-8 the rest of the way.

Georgetown, 18-3 and losing for just the second time in 11 games, scored 13 consecutive first-half points to take a 38-28 lead. The Hoyas, 8-2 in the Big East, stretched the lead to 12 points at 49-37 early in the second half, but Mourning drew his fourth personal foul with 14 minutes to play.

Mourning fouled out just 10 seconds after re-entering the game with 8:20 to play, helping Pitt run off its 12-0 burst that included two 3-pointers by Brookin and one by Matthews, who had four 3-pointers in the first half.

Pitt, 12-10 and 5-6 in the Big East, took the lead for good at 72-70 on Bobby Martin's two free throws with 2:20 to play. After Charles Smith made one of two free throws, Pitt scored five straight points, all on free throws, to make it 77-71 with 51 seconds left.

Martin added 16 points and Shorter, who was 11 of 18 from the foul line in the second half, scored 15 points. Darelle Porter and Brookin had 11 each.

Georgetown, which had won seven of its last eight games against Pitt, got 22 points from Smith, Jaren Jackson had 17 and Mourning had 12, all but two in the first half.

Pitt had lost three of its last four games, including a nationally televised 103-80 loss to No. 9 Syracuse last Saturday.

Missouri (3).....93
Kansas.....80

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Byron Irvin scored 22 points and No. 3 Missouri beat Kansas 93-80 Saturday, giving assistant coach Rich Daly his first victory in relief of the hospitalized Norm Stewart.

Missouri, 21-4 overall and 7-1 in the Big Eight, won as Stewart watched from a hospital bed for the second straight game. Stewart was stricken with a bleeding ulcer Thursday on Missouri's flight to Oklahoma, one day after the suspension of top assistant Bob Sundvold in the school's first-ever NCAA scandal.

Daly, who had not coached in games since he was at a Florida junior college 12 years ago, lost to fifth-ranked Oklahoma 112-105 on Thursday.

Kansas, 16-8 and 3-6, lost its fifth straight game and remained stuck on 1,399 victories. The 1987-88 NCAA champion Jayhawks again failed to join North Carolina and Kentucky as the only NCAA schools with 1,400 wins.

Missouri was leading 57-51 when Irvin, a senior guard, hit two straight jumpers to make it 61-51. The teams traded baskets until Irvin made a 3-point shot for a 68-57 lead with 8:47 to play.

The Jayhawks rallied back to 68-61 on baskets by Scooter Barry and Mark Randall, but Anthony Peeler converted a three-point play with 7:19 left to restore the lead to 71-61.

A 3-point shot by Kevin Pritchard for Kansas brought the Jayhawks to within 71-64, but Irvin scored and Doug Smith sank a pair of free throws to make it 75-64 with 5:54 remaining.

Missouri scored the first eight points of the game, but Kansas crawled back to take its only lead, 20-18, with about nine minutes to play on a 3-point shot by Pritchard.

The Tigers took control again and built a seven-point lead before the half ended in a 41-35 Tigers lead on a jumper by Milt Newton.

Wisconsin.....65
Iowa (8).....54

MADISON, Wis. — Trent Jackson scored 24 points and Wisconsin held No. 8 Iowa to its lowest point output of the season Saturday to beat the Hawkeyes 65-54.

Wisconsin, 13-7 and 5-6 in the Big Ten, outscored the Hawkeyes 17-7 in the final eight minutes of the first half to take a 36-27 lead, then stayed ahead throughout the second half.

Iowa, 17-6 and 5-5, never got closer than five in the second half in suffering its second straight loss. The Hawkeyes entered the game averaging 91 points and had not been held below 67.

Danny Jones added 15 points and Tom Molaski and Tim Locum 13 each for Wisconsin, which ended a six-game losing streak to Iowa, including a 78-70 setback earlier this season.

B.J. Armstrong led Iowa with 13 points and Roy Marble added 12.

The Badgers jumped to an early 15-5 lead before the Hawkeyes got untracked. Iowa then scored eight points in 50 seconds to start a 15-4 run and grabbed its only lead of the game at 20-19 with 8:02 left in the half.

A pair of 3-pointers from Locum and another one from Jackson then helped the Badgers to a 36-27 lead. The Badgers were six of 10 from 3-point range in the first half.

Iowa cut the lead to five with two baskets to open the second half and were within eight on Armstrong's basket with 3:42 to go.

But Jackson and Molaski hit four free throws each and the Badgers were up 58-43 with 1:52 to play.

Minnesota.....88
Michigan (10).....80

MINNEAPOLIS — Willie Burton scored five of his 27 points during a 33-second span late in the game to put Minnesota ahead for good, and the Gophers continued their string of home upsets by beating No. 10 Michigan 88-80 Saturday.

Minnesota, 14-7 overall and 6-5 in the Big Ten, has beaten ranked teams in its last four home games — Illinois (at the time No. 1), Iowa (No. 5), Ohio State (No. 15) and Michigan. By beating the Wolverines, Minnesota clinched its first .500 season since 1983-84.

Michigan, 18-5 and 6-4, took its first lead since early in the game at 61-60 on Glen Rice's 3-pointer with 8:07 left.

Burton then took a pass from Melvin Newbern and drove strong to the basket, scoring and getting fouled by Mike Griffin; he converted the 3-point play.

Griffin's foul shot cut Minnesota's lead to 63-62 before Burton made two free throws for a 65-62 lead with 6:12 remaining.

Burton made 13 of 14 free throws in the game and had 11 rebounds to steal some of the thunder from Michigan's star forward, Glen Rice. Rice had 29 points but went through some long scoring droughts.

Newbern iced the game with six points during a 9-3 run that put the Gophers ahead 78-70 with 1:45 left.

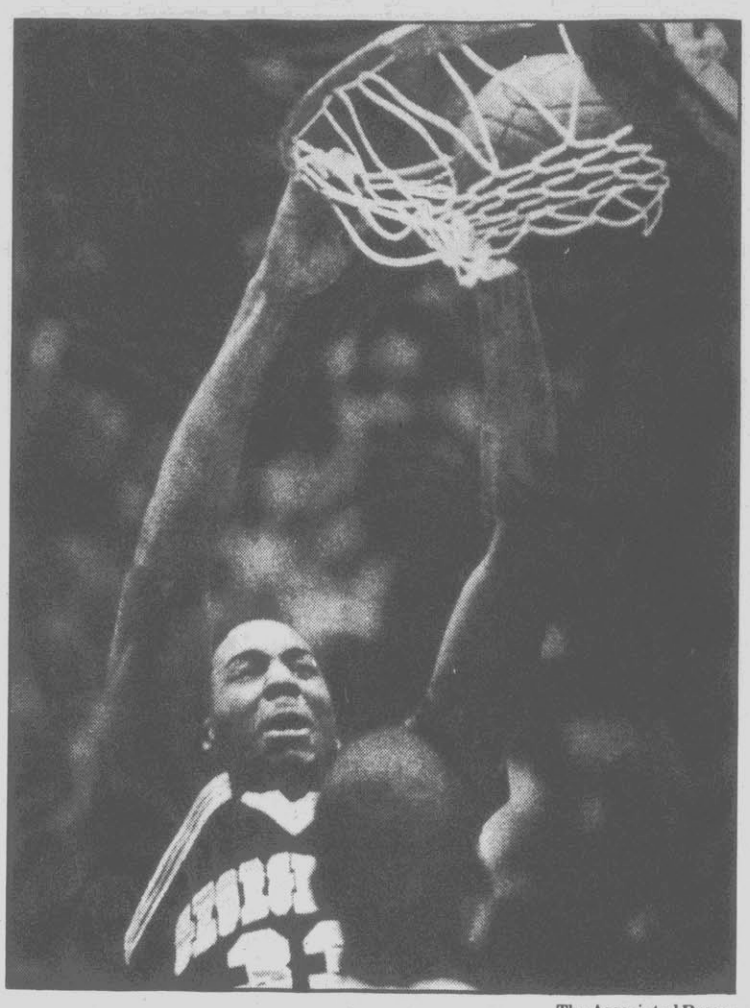

Ray Gaffney came off the bench to score 24 points for Minnesota, which has won 12 straight at home.

The Gophers led 43-39 at halftime thanks largely to the efforts of Gaffney, Burton and Walter Bond.

Gaffney, the team's top reserve and only senior, scored 14 points on 6-for-6 shooting, including two 3-pointers. Burton had 12 points and five rebounds as the Gophers enjoyed an 18-13 rebounding advantage. Bond scored eight points, grabbed five rebounds and made three steals.

Rice, who had 13 first-half points, made Michigan's first two baskets but then didn't score another for 11 minutes as the Gophers went ahead 27-20.

Minnesota opened a 52-45 lead early in the second half before Sean Higgins scored seven points to pull Michigan to 58-57 with 10:57 to go.

Six Tigers Could Face Probation

By Rick Scoppe
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Solicitor Joe Watson said Friday no criminal charges will be filed in a fight involving several Clemson basketball players and two campus security guards, but up to six players could face "athletic probation" as a result of the scuffle.

"I'm not going to submit it to the grand jury," Watson said during a telephone interview from his office in Greenville. "It's over as far as a criminal investigation."

While saying both sides share the blame for the fight, Watson said the security guards acted "unprofessionally," cussing and chasing the students after police arrived. He said the two security guards eventually had to be subdued by police.

Clemson senior associate athletic director Dwight Rainey said one player has been placed on athletic probation for a year and five more could join him in being reprimanded. He declined to identify the players.

Under the university's guidelines, athletic probation is basically an oral reprimand, with the understanding that any more violations by the player will result in suspension, Rainey said.

"It's been three weeks that they've gone through this. We feel they've been through a lot of mental anquish," Rainey said. "We feel like they've learned a valuable lesson from this episode."

A decision on how many players would be put on academic probation would not be made until Monday when the school gets Watson's report, Rainey said during a telephone interview. All six are named in Watson's report.

"We don't know the extent that they were involved," he said. "We've got to evaluate that report on Monday and determine how may will be put on athletic probation."

Coach Cliff Ellis said he was "pleased" Watson would not seek criminal charges. But he said "for athletes even to become involved in an incident of this nature is a violation of our team rules."

"We will not tolerate actions such as those taken by the players."

The fight occurred on Jan. 21 in the parking lot of an apartment complex that serves as the basketball players' dormitory. Watson declined to identify the players involved, but sources said junior 6-foot-11 center Elden Campbell was among those who took part in the fight.

The two Crowe's Inc. security guards involved in the fight suffered minor injuries. The fight, which Watson said lasted two or three minutes, occurred shortly after Clemson beat Western Carolina at Littlejohn Coliseum.

"It was basically a case where both sides acted immaturely. Basically, there were aggravating points on both sides," Watson said. "I'm not pointing blame at any one of them."

The fight prompted the Clemson Police Department to ask for help from the State Law Enforcement Division. Watson said both he and SLED probably would not have been involved in the investigation had athletes not been involved in the fight.

"That was the thing that made it bigger than it was, because some Clemson athletes were involved," he said. "The police department wanted someone who was independent to look at their findings."

Watson said statements were taken from 20 to 25 people during the probe, which took longer than expected because those involved initially "lied" about what happened.

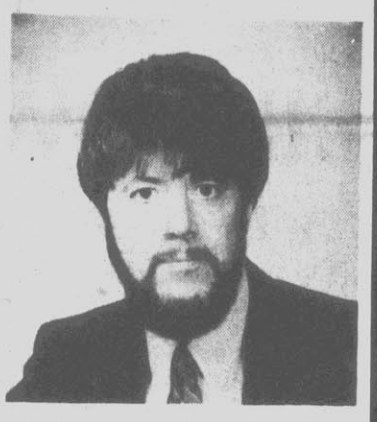

Based on the investigation, Watson said this was what happened:

The security guards were giving out tickets and marking tires when three students and one non-student came up to them and "some words were exchanged." One of the guards "became confrontational." He took off his jacket, laid his ticket book down and said, "I'll go one-on-one with you."

One of the students went back to his dorm, put on some tennis shoes and returned.

"The student threw the first blow. They scuffled for about a minute," Watson said.

Mountaineers Extend Win Streak To 18

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. — Steve Berger scored 22 points, including four 3-pointers, and Chris Brooks added 20 to lead No. 15 West Virginia over Penn State 100-67 Saturday to extend the nation's longest winning streak to 18 games.

Herbie Brooks had 19 points and Ray Foster had 15, 12 of which came during a six-minute, second-half spurt for West Virginia, which improved its record to 18-2 overall and 12-0 in the Atlantic-10.

Darryl Prue scored 12 for the Mountaineers, who never trailed and led by as many as 38.

The Nittany Lions dropped to 13-10 and 8-5 with the loss.

The Mountaineers had a 51-26 lead at the break behind the shooting of Herbie Brooks, who scored 14 points in the first half.

Berger's 14-footer with 4:43 remaining in the opening period sparked a 19-3 Mountaineer run that closed the half. Herbie Brooks also hit four field goals and sank two free throws after Penn State Coach Bruce Parkhill was called for a technical foul to tally 10 points during the West Virginia spurt.

West Virginia shot 65.6 from the field and 61.5 from the free-throw line.

The Mountaineers' stingy defense held Penn State to a 37.3 shooting performance from the field, and West Virginia held Tom Hovasse, who had been averaging 18.2 points coming into the game, to 12, including just two in the first half. Hovasse fouled out with 10:40 remaining in the game.

Bruce Blake scored 18 points for the Nittany Lions and C.J. Johnson had 11.

West Virginia has not lost since dropping 70-68 decision to Bradley on Dec. 3. The Mountaineers have won the last eight games against the Nittany Lions played in Morgantown and 12 of the last 14 games in the series.

Florida.....59
Kentucky.....53

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Livingston Chatman scored 15 points and Dwayne Schintzius added 12 as Florida overcame a 12-point deficit to defeat Kentucky 59-53 Saturday.

Florida equaled a school record by winning its sixth straight Southeastern Conference game to improve to 14-10 overall and 8-4 in the league. Kentucky dropped its third straight game and fell to 11-13 and 6-6.

Kentucky opened a 25-13 lead on a 3-pointer by Chris Mills with 7:24 remaining in the half, and went on to a 35-28 advantage at the intermission. Florida made only eight of 35 shots in the first half for 22.9 percent.

Renaldo Garcia, Clifford Lett and Dwayne Davis scored consecutive baskets in the opening 2:20 of the second half as Florida closed the gap to 35-34.

Kentucky countered with five straight points, but Garcia and Brian Hogan hit 3-pointers and Chatman made two free throws and an 18-footer to give Florida a 44-40 lead with 12:02 to go.

Derrick Miller and Mills hit baskets to pull Kentucky even at 44 with 10:21 left. Chatman then scored on a rebound basket and Schintzius slipped inside for a slam dunk to give Florida the lead for good at 48-44 with 6:31 remaining.

Kentucky could draw no closer than three points the rest of the way, the last time at 53-50 on Reggie Hanson's 15-footer with 1:50 to go.

Davis and Garcia each added 11 points for Florida, which hit only 19 of 58 shots for 33 percent.

Mills topped Kentucky, which made only 22 of 59 for 37 percent, with 17 points and Miller tallied 12.

LSU.....122
Tennessee.....106

BATON ROUGE, La. — Freshman guard Chris Jackson scored 50 points Saturday to lead Louisiana State University to a 122-106 victory over Tennessee that kept the Tigers atop the Southeastern Conference.

LSU is 17-6 overall and 9-3 in the SEC. Tennessee is 14-7 and 7-5.

Jackson's 50 points was the most ever scored in the Assembly Center. Pete Maravich, college basketball's all-time leading scorer, finished his career at LSU before the Assembly Center was built.

Jackson, second-leading scorer in the country, had a 53-point game against Florida earlier this year. He is averaging just under 28 points a game.

Tennessee played a box-and-one for most of the game, detailing a guard to play Jackson man-to-man. Clarence Swearengen fouled out trying to keep Jackson from scoring, and two other guards had four fouls apiece.

Memphis St.....63
S. Carolina.....48

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Guard Cheyenne Gibson scored 12 points, 10 in the first half, and grabbed nine rebounds as Memphis State defeated South Carolina 63-48 Saturday in a Metro Conference game.

Gibson, a 6-foot-3 junior, also had four assists as Memphis State ran its overall record to 17-8, 4-3 in the conference. South Carolina's record dropped to 13-8 and 3-4 in the Metro.

South Carolina was held to 19 points in the second half and hit only eight field goals after intermission, while shooting 30 percent from the field.

Memphis State led by one point at halftime and moved ahead by eight points early in the second half. The Tigers led 48-40 lead with 6:40 remaining after Ballard scored inside.

The Tigers connected on seven of eight free throws in the final minutes, and the final 15-point margin was their biggest lead of the game.

Meanwhile, South Carolina managed only a field goal by John Hudson in the last 3½ minutes.

Memphis State led 30-29 at intermission after John McLaughlin hit a 30-footer with two seconds remaining in the half.

Memphis State led through much of the first half, its largest margin coming at the 7:09 mark when Perry hit on a fast break to give the Tigers a 21-15 lead. The basket ended an eight-point streak for Perry.

South Carolina took its first lead of the game, 24-23, with 4:39 left in the half when Michael Glover connected on a pair of free throws.

Cincinnati.....82
Southern Miss.....70

HATTIESBURG, Miss. — Cedric Glover scored 30 points to lead Cincinnati to an 82-70 Metro Conference victory over Southern Mississippi Saturday.

Louis Banks added 23 points as Cincinnati snapped a five-game conference losing streak and a 17-game road conference losing streak. The victory improved Cincinnati's record to 11-9 and 2-5 in the Metro.

Southern Mississippi fell to 8-12 and 2-6.

Southern Mississippi was led by Jimmy Smith, who scored 19 points, and Clarence Weatherspoon, who added 17 points and 16 rebounds.

Lady Dukes Beat ECU...

She did return for the second half, however, but was visibly slowed.

Both Savage and Sarah Gray fouled out of the contest. Gray, who scored only two points in the game, left with 5:30 remaining while Savage, who led the Lady Pirates with 18, went out with 2:43 to play.

A fight broke out midway through the second half that resulted in the ejection of JMU's Missy Dudley and ECU's Pam Williams. The two, who had exchanged words on several occasions prior to the fight, were pushing each other back and forth as they jockeyed for position. Dudley threw an elbow at Williams, who retaliated. Both again exchanged blows before the officials broke them up. Dudley, however, got in the final blow, hitting Williams from behind as she left the court.

The officials, after conferring, assessed Williams with a foul and ejected both players. Under NCAA rules, both will receive a warning from the conference, and a second fight for either would mean a one-game suspension.

"There's no question that the officials lost control of the game," ECU Coach Pat Pierson said. "They lost it real early. If they had had control, neither of the injuries we sustained would have occurred.

"Both teams were playing hard-nosed basketball. James Madison is physical, and so are we. But if the officials had called it tighter, it would have been a different ball game," Pierson said.

Madison, unbeaten in the conference now at 8-0, had a height advantage on the Lady Pirates at every position and took advantage of it. They prevented much of the inside play by the Lady Pirates and also cut off the passing lanes to the inside.

Madison scored on its first possession of the game and on the next two before the Lady Pirates got the ball much past mid-court, stealing the ball twice and getting quick baskets for a 6-0 lead.

Then, Madison's height began to come into play as they scored on a short jumper by 6-5 Caroline Dehn-Durh. Dudley scored on a layup off a turnover and Vickie Harris hit two jumpers for a 14-4 lead by the Lady Dukes.

Madison pulled out to as much as a 14-point lead, 20-6, but the Lady Pirates rallied back to within eight on a couple of occasions before falling back by 14 again, 31-17. ECU then scored three late baskets to cut the margin back to 10 at the half, 33-23.

Twice in the second half, the Lady Pirates cut the lead back to nine, but they could get no closer. Madison again pushed out by as much as 17, 59-42, before the Lady Pirates came back to within 10 at the end.

"The girls played extremely hard," Pierson said. "But their size hurt us. We didn't shoot well from the perimeter and we didn't shoot free throws well. Losing Chris hurt us in our outside shooting and we didn't match up as well with them after that either.

"But we didn't give up and we didn't quit," she added.

"When we had both Sarah and Gretta on the bench in foul trouble, that was asking a lot from the others," Pierson said.

Despite the fact that the Dukes were the taller team, ECU held a 40-33 rebounding edge, led by eight from Williams while Savage had six. Dehn-Duhr led Madison's rebounding with nine.

Both teams shot almost equally well from the floor — each scoring 24 field goals, but JMU made the difference at the foul line, connecting of 15 of 20 while ECU was making only four of 13 tries.

Harris led the Dukes scoring with 16 points while Dehn-Duhr added 14. Adding to Savage's 18 were Irish Hamilton with 11 and Williams with 10.

East Carolina dips to 4-5 in the CAA and 11-10 overall with the loss. Madison is now 17-3 overall.

The Pirates will play host to George Mason on Monday at 7 p.m. in their final home game of the season in the CAA. They still have road games left with American and UNC-Wilmington. They close out the regular season with home games against South Carolina and Appalachian State before playing in the CAA tournament.

Elliott Uncertain About Racing Future

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Bill Elliott, his broken left wrist in a splint and heavily bandaged, was back in a race car Saturday, but remained uncertain about his immediate racing future.

Elliott suffered the injury Friday when a tire exploded and sent him careening hard into the fourth-turn wall.

The defending Winston Cup champion was examined at a nearby hospital by an orthpedic surgeon before being released Friday night.

"He just told me my options," Elliott said after practicing in his car Saturday morning. "He said if I had surgery last night, there would be no driving today."

Elliott stopped taking pain-killing drugs about 1 a.m. EST Saturday in order to be allowed by Speedway medical director Dr. Ronald Hinebaugh to drive Saturday.

The two-time Daytona 500 champion drove about eight laps in practice, no more than three consecutively.

"The way it is, I can't run the 500," he said. "I'm just too awkward. I can't do nothing in the race car."

Elliott said he intended to attempt to qualify later Saturday for the Feb. 19 Daytona 500 and he is scheduled to run Sunday in the 20-lap, 50-mile Busch Clash.

"I'll start the car (in the Clash) and go from there," he said.

As for the season-opening Daytona 500, Elliott, holding an ice pack to his broken wrist, said, "A lot of things can happen in a week. The way it stands now, I'll start the car and that is it. That's all I can do. We'll go day-to-day and have some people (doctors) look at the wrist again.

"The main thing is to take it a day at a time."

Under NASCAR rules, if Elliott starts his car in the 500, he will get the championship points no matter how many laps he drives.

That means a relief driver, possibly former Winston Cup regular Jody Ridley, could replace Elliott any time after the first lap with no penalty to the team.

Elliott, 33, broke a small bone in his lower left leg in 1985 at Rockingham, N.C., and came back two weeks later to win a race at Atlanta.

"This is a lot worse," Elliott said. "It's 10-to-1 worse. It's a lot more painful and you need your arm more in driving the car. All I can do right now is lay it in my lap. I can't get to the switches to do plug checks and things like that."

Busch Clash Preview ...

front, the rest of them will just have to hang on and hope to make something happen on the last couple of laps."

Darrell Waltrip, who has been in all but one of these races and will start third in the 13-car field, said, "I feel like we are going to learn a lot in the Clash, no matter how the race goes.

"The Fords for instance. Most of the good ones are in the back half of the field. If they come to the front real quick, the rest of us will be saying, 'Oh, no!' It's going to be interesting."

The winner of the sprint could pick up as much as $85,000, with $50,000 for winning the event and another $35,000 in lap-leader bonuses up for grabs.

The leader on lap five will earn $10,000, the leader on lap 10 will get $15,000, and the leader on lap 15 will earn $10,000.

Geoff Bodine, teammate of Schrader and Waltrip, said, "I'm starting fifth, third on the inside, right behind my buddies (Schrader and Waltrip). Schrader said we could just all three line up and take off and run like that the whole race.

"I said, 'What about all the bonus money for leading laps five, 10 and 15?' He said, 'Don't worry about that.' I said, 'To heck with that, I'm coming after you and Darrell.'"

The lineup was determined by blind draw.

Schrader and Ricky Rudd will start from the front row, with Waltrip and Labonte in row two.

Bodine and wild-card entry Rick Mast will be in the third row, followed by Davey Allison and Alan Kulwicki, Rick Wilson and Morgan Shepherd, Mark Martin and Rusty Wallace and, if he can drive, Bill Elliott.

Elliott broke two bones in his left wrist in a crash during practice Friday. He practice Saturday with a wrapped splint on the injured wrist and was expected to drive in the race.

Schrader, Waltrip, Bodine and Mast will drive Chevrolet Monte Carlos; Rudd has a Buick Regal; Labonte, Allison, Kulwicki, Martin and Elliott will drive Ford Thunderbirds; Wilson will be in an Oldsmobile Cutlass, and Shepherd and Wallace will drive Pontiac Grand Prix.

Wilson and Mast are the only first-timers in the race. Among the drivers who didn't make it this year is defending champion Dale Earnhardt.

Daytona 500 Pole ...

Elliott, who said he is not certain if he can run more than one or two laps with his aching and heavily-bandaged wrist, could now skip the qualifying races, which determine positions three through 30, and start next Sunday's event 31st by virtue of his fast lap on Saturday.

Elliott, who later complained of pain his his right side and had precautionary X-rays made of his ribs in the track medical center, said his only real problem in qualifying was shifting as he left the pits and got up to speed on the banking.

"That ain't really no big deal, though," he said. "It's just like driving down the road eating a hamburger. You just keep on driving down the road, steering with your knees. You shift the last time coming out of (turn) two (on the warmup lap), then you don't take your hand off the wheel again.

"That was as good a lap as I could have run if I'd had both hands because I couldn't get to the bottom of the racetrack."

It is expected the two-time Daytona 500 winner will start next Sunday's race to get the championship points, then use a relief driver most of the day.

Schrader, a native of Fenton, Mo., who now lives in Concord, N.C., did not get onto the track for his qualifying effort until late in the afternoon.

He was the 46th of 48 drivers who made one-lap qualifying attempts, knocking Waltrip off the top spot.

"My guys told me to go over and draw a real low number (in the qualifying line) or a real high number, like you can buy those things," he said with a laugh. "When I drew No. 56, they were real happy. I just stayed in the trailer and waited and it worked out fine."

About 15 drivers drew for positions in the qualifying line but were unable to make an attempt because of mechanical problems or decided to wait for another day.

Schrader won the pole a year ago at 193.823 and went on to finish sixth in the race behind winner Bobby Allison, who is out of action this season while recuperating from serious injuries.

Asked where the extra 3 mph came from this year, Schrader said, "In our case, we had a little more engine, a little slicker body and we just held our breath a little more as far as the (aerodynamic) spoilers are concerned.

"That car was real loose out there. There were two times out there, in (turns) one and two, that I said to myself 'Save it.' I knew it was all we had, but I thought that deal in one and two might have cost us.

"But it might have made it better, too. I just know it scared the hell out of me."

The pole-winner, who also will start from the top spot in Sunday's Busch Clash — a $230,000 sprint race for last season's pole-winners — made his fast lap on Hoosier bias ply tires.

Hoosier, which competes with the much bigger Goodyear as tire supplier for the Winston Cup series, got a big break earlier Saturday when Goodyear withdrew its new radial tires in the wake of two incidents on Friday.

Elliott was injured in one of those incidents, hitting the fourth turn wall after a tire blew at high speed.

Goodyear switched to a bias ply tire and Waltrip was the fastest of only a handful of drivers who moved onto them.

Also among the fast qualifiers on Saturday were three-time Winston Cup champion Dale Earnhardt at 195.737, Neil Bonnett 194.611, Terry Labonte 193.978, Morgan Shepherd 193.158, Davey Allison 193.046, Phil Parsons 192.889 and Mike Alexander 192.773.

Geoff Bodine, one of the favorites to win the pole, failed to complete a qualifying lap because of an ignition problem.

ECU Swimmers Blow Navy Out Of Water

WILMINGTON — East Carolina's men's swimming team rolled to a near-200 point victory in the Colonial Athletic Association swimming and diving championships held at UNC-Wilmington this weekend.

The Pirates compiled 751 points to soar past second-place Navy, which had 572. Richmond finished third with 478 while James Madison was fourth with 477, followed by UNCW at 409, American at 397 and William & Mary at 275.

In the women's competition, Navy took first place with 768 points while William & Mary was second with 620. Madison took third with 501, while the Lady Pirates were fourth with 452. They were followed by American with 361, UNCW with 276 and Richmond with 263.

"That's the first time we've ever beaten Navy in any kind of swim meet," Coach Rick Kobe said. Kobe was named Coach of the Year for men by the conference.

The Pirates took first place in two events Saturday. John Farrell won the 200-yard backstroke in 1:54.75 while George Walters was third in 1:55.98 and Mark O'Brian was fourth in 1:56.28. The other win came in the 200 butterfly where Tom Holston was first in 1:52.42, setting a new ECU varsity record. Andy Johns finished second in that event with a 1:52.47 time and Ted Christianson was fourth in 1:55.26.

Other ECU finishers included Mark Cook, third in the 1,650 freestyle in 16:13.24, while J.D. Lewis was sixth in 16:28.50 and Andy Jeter was seventh in 16:34.91; Erick Hoyos finished third in the 100 freestyle in 47.15; and John Springer was second in the 200 breaststroke in 2:06.06, while Raymond Kennedy was third in 2:10.06.

Meredith Bridgers and Jenny Muench each won events for the women. Bridgers took first in the 200 breaststroke in 2:21.27, setting a new CAA record. Muench was fourth in that event in 2:29.43.

Muench's win came in the 200 butterfly, where she set new ECU varsity and freshman records and a CAA record with a time of 2:07.68. Robin Wicks finished fifth in that event with a 2:09.74.

In Friday's competition, East Carolina's men won three events, including two of the relays.

Holston captured the 400-yard individual medley with a 4:03.27, setting a new CAA and a new ECU varsity record. Christianson was second in the event in 4:08.55.

ECU also won the 200 medley relay and the 800 freestyle relay. The team of O'Brien, Kennedy, Johns and Hoyos won the 200 in 1:36.96, a new conference and varsity mark. The team of Farrell, Johns, Lewis and Jeter took the 800 in 6:55.76.

Other place winners included Farell, who was second in the 200 freestyle in 1:42.97, while Jeter was fifth in 1:44.14 and Lewis was sixth in 1:44.55. George Walters was second in the 100 backstroke in 53.73 while O'Brien was third in 53.83. Kennedy finished second in the 100 breaststroke in 58.69 while Springer was fifth in 1:00.09.

The Lady Pirates won two events Friday. Bridgers won the 100 breaststroke in 1:05.66. Earlier, in the qualifying, she had touched in at 1:05.59, setting new CAA and ECU records. Muench took first in the 400 individual medley in 4:36.18, setting a new conference and ECU varsity and freshman records.

Other placings included Wicks, seventh in the 100 butterfly in 1:00.62; the team of Carolyn Green, Patti Walsh, Chantal Morris and Holt, second in the 800 freestyle relay in 7.53.53; the ECU team of Wendy Smith, Bridgers, Walsh and Holt in the 200 medley relay finished fourth in 1:52.8; and Holt took second in the 200 freestyle in 1:57.24.

James Madison Tops Pirates ...

Lose missed Edwards on an alley-oop try on the next possession and Davis countered with a three-point play at the other end to make it 24-23.

Kelly hit a jumper for ECU to make it 25-24 but Davis hit from three-point range to give the Dukes a 27-25 edge.

The Dukes eventually led by as many as four at 33-29, but Edwards scored on a finger roll with 1:28 to play in the opening period to make it 33-31. He then fed Lose for a layup with a bullet pass to tie the game 33-33 with 1:28 remaining in the half.

Lose came up with a steal on the Dukes' ensuing possession and ECU eventually scored off a Murphy layup to make it 35-33 with 54 seconds left.

JMU turned the ball over on the next possession, but ECU came up empty in the final seconds when Kelly missed on a drive down the lane.

JMU returns to action Monday at home against UNC-Wilmington. The Pirates' next game will be Thursday at non-conference foe Campbell in Fayetteville.

Coming into the game, ECU had won the last four meetings between these two teams.

ECU falls to 10-12 and 4-7 in the CAA. JMU improves to 14-10 and 5-5.

score after that and Tech hit the front end of three 1-and-1 free throw situations in the final 34 seconds, one each by Brian Oliver, Hammonds and Scott.

Wake Forest fell to 11-10 and 2-7.

Tech built its biggest lead with a 5-0 spurt at the start of the second half, 40-26, before Wake Forest used an 8-2 run later to close the lead to 46-41 with just under 14 minutes remaining.

Scott countered with two free throws and a 3-point basket midway through the half to build the lead back to 10 points, the margin by which Tech led before Wake rallied late behind five points each from Cal Boyd and Derrick McQueen.

Oliver added 11 points and also had nine assists for the Yellow Jackets.

Ivy was Wake's scoring leader with 16 points and McQueen added 13.

Clemson.....96

CLEMSON, S.C. — Junior reserve Tim Kincaid scored 25 points to lead Clemson to a 96-71 victory over Liberty on Saturday.

Kincaid hit 11 of 14 shots from the field, including a 3-pointer, and was two-of-two from the free throw line. He scored 16 points in the second half.

Clemson, 15-6, struggled early against the Flames, swapping the lead five times before running off a 22-4 scoring spurt to turn a 25-23 deficit with seven minutes left in the half into a 45-29 lead at intermission.

Kincaid and Dale Davis had five points each during that tear, while Elden Campbell and Derrick Forrest each had four. Campbell finished with 17 points, followed by Forrest with 13 and Davis with 11.

Murphy's point total was eight more than Pete Maravich scored in 1984.

Murphy was 4-for-6 from 3-point range, prompting questions about whether the 5-foot-9, 40-year-old still harbored dreams of still playing in the NBA.

"There's always a part of you that says you can still play," Murphy said. "Ego is all we have left."

Murphy said his main goal was to make an impression on the Rockets' players.

"I couldn't embarrass myself just after getting a job as shooting coach," Murphy said.

At a new conference before Saturday's events, NBA Commissioner David Stern said that the Denver Nuggets would be the league's representative in the third annual McDonalds Open from Oct. 20-22 in Rome, Italy. The Italian League champions and two other foreign teams will meet the Nuggets at the event.

Boris Stankovic, secretary general of FIBA, international basketball's governing body, predicted at the news conference that FIBA would vote to allow professionals, including NBA players, to appear in the 1992 Olympics. The FIBA congress meets at Munich, West Germany, on April 7.

The NBA All-Star game will be played Sunday.

A Glance Inside The ECU Team On The Road

Tom Morris

A college basketball season could best be termed a series of tests leading up to a cumulative final exam in March.

The first week of February featured one of the more crucial tests on the East Carolina syllabus with the final two conference road games of the year at George Mason and then at James Madison.

ECU, in its second year under Mike Steele, was still searching for an identity. That the Pirates were an improved team over 1987-88's 8-20 squad was undeniable. The Bucs headed into the two-game road swing at 10-10 overall and 4-5 in the Colonial Athletic Association. That was good for a fifth-place tie with James Madison.

It was a game that had given Steele hope. Back on Jan. 13, the Pirates had lost badly at Richmond, 83-56. To play the Spiders close the second time around and actually have a chance to win was a step in the right direction.

With seven games remaining, a winning season is hanging in the balance. This trip, a two-game, five-day road excursion, would be important in terms of seeding for the conference tournament March 4-6.

Senior forward Blue Edwards had returned to the team after a one-year discipline hiatus and was averaging 26.0 points per game and 6.6 rebounds per game.

But getting others involved in the offense on a consistent basis had proved difficult. Last year's two leading scorers, forward Gus Hill (19.0) and swingman Reed Lose (15.0) had struggled offensively at times during the year. Their roles had changed and neither seemed comfortable. Hill, for one, was struggling from the field and hitting on less than 40 percent.

Yet when the Pirates could put more than one scorer in double figures — be it Lose, Hill or Kenny Murphy — the Pirates were a good team. But the simple fact of the matter was that they often failed to do that. As talented as Edwards is, he needs help.

"We haven't jelled yet," Steele said.

If ECU wanted to make up any ground in the conference, this trip was crucial. From here, ECU had a road game at non-conference foe Campbell before closing out the regular season with a four-game home swing.

GREENVILLE — (Tues. Feb. 7) Steele ran the Pirates through a late-afternoon practice prior to the bus ride to Fairfax. Va. for Wednesday's game against GMU.

At 5:30 p.m., the bus pulled away from Minges Coliseum and the team settled in for the six-hour ride to Fairfax.

It's a dull and quiet ride and even before the bus is out of Pitt County the walkmans are on and everyone has settled into trip mode.

Before long, Kenny Murphy, a 6-3 senior guard, has the cards out.

The game is called Tunk and it's similar to Gin Rummy. Murph is the master. Within an hour, freshmen Robin House and Jay Scherer have learned this.

Murph taught House the game. In fact, Murph seems to have taught everyone the game. There's got to be a catch there.

The only other talking on the bus comes from the back where manager Kirk Michie has teamed with Reed Lose to handily defeat manager Donnie Davis and House first in pictionary and then in a game of All-Star Sports Trivia.

FAIRFAX, Va. — (Wed. Feb. 8, 9:30 a.m.) The team gathers for breakfast at the Tyson's Corner Marriott Restaurant. The USA Today newspapers delivered to the rooms are scattered across the tables along with a number of Washington Post and Washington Times.

The Post has a small preview of the ECU-GMU game. It mentions the Patriots' 86-74 win over ECU Jan. 16 in Greenville. All the players read it, but little is said.

Later that day, a number of players come by trainer Greg Beres' room to get taped for the afternoon shoot around. Edwards is the last visitor. He gets his wrist taped. "It's a mild sprain," he says. "It doesn't really hurt unless I fall on it."

ECU has won only once in 13 tries against GMU at the Patriot center.

Tip Off (7:35 p.m.) ECU holds only a brief 4-2 lead early on but stays close with the Patriots. GMU has come out obviously flat, turning the ball over and getting beat on the boards by a smaller team.

Despite this, ECU is unable to take advantage. Still the game, televised on Home Team Sports, is close. Edwards is scoring for ECU and keeping the Pirates in the game.

With 5:18 left in the half, the Pirates trail by only one, 28-27, but that is as close as it would get. Two charging calls against Hill results in a five-point swing and a 35-28 lead. In essence, that's the ball game. GMU standout forward Kenny Sanders scores the first eight points of the second half as the Patriots roll to a 83-65 win.

"It's really disappointing," Steele said. "I really thought we were going to play well tonight. It's frustrating. We not only practiced well before the Richmond game, we competed well. We made good decisions. We practiced well before this game. It wasn't that we didn't compete. We just didn't play smart. We've got a good bunch of kids. Tomorrow's practice will be emotional and the guys will do exactly what we ask them to do. What we haven't been able to do (though) is carry over from one game to another. I just don't know why."

Great idea, sure. Great weather, no way. It was cold, brutally cold. Graduate assistant Griff Mills passes out tour guides to the team, most of which are left on the bus.

The wind is whipping down Pennsylvania Avenue and for a bunch of guys from the south, this is cold. Everybody is bundled up, except for Decatur, Ala. native Stanley Love who is wearing only a sweater. Don't ask.

Hill isn't exactly cutting flips over the prospect of a D.C. tour. He's a native of the nearby Fairfax. This is like a tour of his family basement.

The first stop is the White House and once inside things begin to warm up. As the team passes through the security checkpoint, Murph sticks a program under Jeff Kelly's long jacket. "Hey Jeff, stick this gun in your coat," Murphy says jokingly. The pun doesn't go to far. A security guard immediately comes over.

That controversy aside, the tour proceeds.

First there is the Red Room, then the Green Room and finally the spot that draws the most attention.

"You notice they do have a Blue room, as in Blue Edwards," Hill said.

In the Lobby and Cross Hall, the team shuffles through slowly. Michie, doing a Steele impersonation, says "Let's get a Pirate (ECU's team cheer)."

Later stops at the National Aquarium, the dinosaur exhibit at the Museum of Natural History and the Aerospace Museum seem to draw little attention. Hill, Murphy and Kelly end up sitting on a bench discussing (what else) basketball.

The final stop is the Vietnam Memorial. Only Mills, House, Kelly and Casey Mote bypass the warm bus and visit the shrine. House finds the name of his uncle, Alton House, inscribed on the wall. Eventually, the rest of the team joins then, looking at the lone list of those killed in the war. Not much is said here. Not much needs to be.

When the team got on the bus that night to head to practice, Mills informed them they had the night off and instead would be going to the Washington Bullet-New Jersey Net game.

HARRISONBURG, Va. (6:30 p.m.) After arriving in mid-afternoon, Steele runs the Pirates through a practice at JMU.

Steele felt the Pirates did a poor job of getting the ball to Edwards against GMU (he got only 15 shots, hitting 10 of them en route to a game-high 27 points.

"The next game, we can't have Blue go 10-15," Steele said. "He's got to get more shots. We've been trying to get more guys in the offense and it isn't working. Maybe we need to get fewer guys in the offense."

Feb. 11 — (12:15 p.m.) At the pre-game shoot around, Steele takes Edwards aside to to talk about the JMU game.

Steele wants Edwards to take more shots. He realizes that the Pirates will go only as far as Edwards can take them. Against GMU, Edwards often came off screens and rather than shoot right away he would drive into the lane and try to get a closer shot. Steele would prefer for Edwards to shoot as soon as he receives the ball off the screen, when he is open.

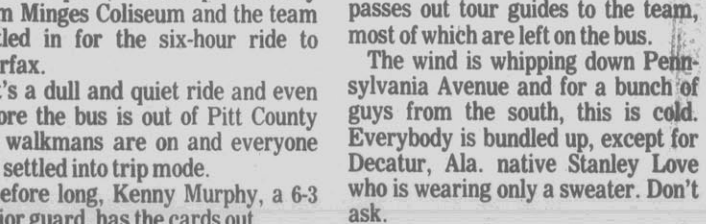

Game time: (7:30 p.m.) — And Blue shot the ball more, 20 times, hitting 12. He scored 18 in the first half, but was held to only 12 in the second half as JMU abandoned the rest of the team to concentrate on stopping Edwards.

It paid off for them as they took a 74-61 win. The game was close until JMU took the lead for good with about eight minutes left and pulled steadily away after that.

The Dukes did what they had to, using balanced scoring to hand the Pirates their third straight loss.

Carter Leads In Rainy Hawaiian Open

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HONOLULU — Jim Carter on Saturday retained the lead after two rounds of the rain-shortened Hawaiian Open golf tournament.

Continuing heavy rains and a flooded Waialae Country Club course forced officials to delay the second round and reduce the tournament to a three-round, 54-hole format, with the final round scheduled on Sunday.

Carter, seeking the first victory of a three-year PGA Tour career, held a two-stroke advantage with a 36-hole total of 130, 14 under par.

"I like where I am. I guess this is where you're supposed to want to be. I don't really know because I haven't been here before," said Carter, who had not previously led a Tour event.

But Mike Shea, Tournament Director for the PGA Tour, has been here before.

"It seems like we're going through this every week," said Shea, who is wrestling with rain delays, suspensions and postponements for the second consecutive week.

Heavy overnight rains flooded the course Friday and forced a three-hour delay in the start of play.

With the delay, 66 players were unable to complete their rounds before darkness Friday.

They returned Saturday to resume play, only to encounter more heavy rains and an again-flooded course. There was another delay of two hours and 10 minutes, before they went off in continuing rain.

They were out for only 20 minutes before "the course was totally unplayable," Shea said, "and we had to call play again" with 52 players still on the course.

After another delay of three hours, 10 minutes the second round was completed 32 hours and two minutes after its scheduled start.

Carter was in the last group to finish Friday and completed a 66 moments before darkness halted play.

Of the Saturday finishers — who had to contend with pools and puddles of casual water in the fairways and bunkers that became ponds — David Ogrin and Chip Beck were in the best position.

Ogrin birdied his final hole even though "at no point on the hole did I see dry ground," he said.

He had a 67 and tied Gene Sauers for second at 132, 12 under par. Sauers completed his 67 Friday.

Beck birdied two of the four holes he played Saturday and completed a bogey-free 64 that put him in a tie with Tim Simpson and Mark Brooks at 133. Simpson and Brooks both finished second round play Friday.

Defending champion Lanny Wadkins matched par 72 and failed to qualify for final round play at 143. Tom Watson also missed at 71-142.

Nicklaus, Strange Win Big In Australia

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORT DOUGLAS, Australia — Globetrotting Curtis Strange, seeking to atone for his failure in the U.S. Skins game, and Jack Nicklaus, a late arrival, each earned $94,500 Saturday in the first 18 holes of the Australian Super Skins golf competition.

Strange, the 1988 U.S. Open champion and the first golfer to exceed $1 million in earnings in a single season last year on the PGA Tour, won four holes — the second, third, 14th and 18th — in the richest skins game in history.

Recalling last month's Skins game in the United States, Strange said, "I didn't earn a cent in that skins and there was a very good reason for it. I played real poorly."

He played much better Saturday.

Nicklaus, who only arrived Saturday morning, sank a 20-foot birdie putt at the par-4 ninth and a 15-foot birdie putt at the par-4 12th to collect skins worth $54,000 and $40,500, respectively.

Meanwhile, Isao Aoki of Japan chipped in from off the green for a birdie at the par-3 15th to collect $13,500, while Australian Greg Norman, who drove poorly, failed to win any money.

The four golfers are competing for a pot of $607,500 plus hole-in-one bonuses worth $1.4 million over 36 holes. Under the skins format, prize money for each hole increases unless the hole is won outright.

Holes one to nine at the 6,890-yard Sheraton Mirage Country Club course were worth $9,000 each and 10 to 18 were worth $13,500 apiece.

Sunday, holes 19 to 27 will be worth $18,000 apiece and the final nine holes will be worth $27,000 each.

The players had to battle 90-degree temperature and humidity as well as the picturesque but tricky layout.

Strange, winner of two tournamewnts in Australia in the past 13 months — the Sanctuary Cove Classic just over a year ago and the Palm Meadows Cup last month — and winner of skins events in Canada and South Africa, was the first to earn money Saturday.

He fired a 5-iron to within six feet at the par-3 second hole, then sank his birdie putt for $18,000.

"You don't generally get that sort of chance playing in this company," Strange said. The other players all had bogeys.

On the par-5 third hole, Strange blasted out of a sand trap to the left of the green to within 18 inches of the cup and tapped in the putt for a winning birdie and $9,000.

Nicklaus started slowly, his 20-foot birdie putt for a skin on the sixth sitting on the edge of the hole, but not dropping.

Then he put his putter to work, carding birdies at nine and 12.

"Sometimes you putt well and come up empty, but I came up with the right putts at the right time," Nicklaus said. "If I hadn't made the putt at nine, I might not have made the putt at 12 because I would probably have been frustrated."

Strange sank a four-foot birdie putt on the par-5 14th after his rivals had squandered birdie opportunities. That netted him $27,000. He also birdied the par-3 18th to earn $40,500.

"I probably hit too many bad shots, but in a skins game it doesn't matter," Strange said. "I made the putts I needed to make."

Aoki said the heat a major obstacle.

"The golf course is wonderful, but the weather is terrible," he said. "I was just happy to win some money."

Norman offered no excuses for his poor play.

"I didn't play well at all," he said. "I got what I deserved."

Mowry Leads Seniors

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PALM BEACH GARDENS, Fla. — Larry Mowry birdied the 18th hole Saturday to complete a bogey-free 65 and take a three-shot lead over Al Geiberger and Miller Barber after three rounds of the 50th PGA Seniors Championship.

Mowry, chasing his fourth victory since joining the tour in 1986, started the day five shots behind second-round leader Mike Hill and took advantage of ideal weather conditions to post his 7-under-par score while other contenders struggled.

Mowry, who won 106 mini-tour events from 1976 to 1983, finished with a 54-hole total of 8-under-par 208 on the 6,530-yard Champion course at PGA National Golf Club.

Geiberger, who shot 72 for a 5-under-par 211 total, lost sole possession of the lead when he bogeyed the 14th hole and fell three shots back when the 52-year-old Mowry birdied No. 18 with a 10-foot putt and Geiberger took a double bogey 7.

"I feel like I should be leading. I feel like it should be my tournament," said Geiberger, who won once and finished second five times in 1988. "Maybe the double bogey will make me mad enough to go out and win it tommorrow."

Barber grabbed a share of second place with a rollercoaster 70 featuring four birdies, an eagle, two bogeys and a double bogey. Hill followed at 4-under-par 212 after shooting 74 and 1978 PGA Seniors winner Joe Jimenez shot 72 to trail Mowry by six strokes at 2-under 214.

"I feel fortunate to be where I am," said Barber, who birdied No. 18 from seven feet to pull even with Geiberger. "I made too many mental errors, didn't think well out there."

Hill, playing his first senior event, led by one shot after shooting a 67 Thursday and a 71 Friday. He bogeyed the seventh hole to fall behind Geiberger, and continued to slide with two more bogeys on the back nine.

"My round was a case of hitting a couple of bad clubs and not putting well," said Hill, who had two birdies and four bogeys.

Vikings Top Rams, Grab Coastal Lead

By Tim Chandler
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

HOLLYWOOD — The game was billed as the showdown of the year in the Coastal 3-A Conference, and it proved to be just that.

D.H. Conley took over sole possession of first place in the Coastal standings Friday with a 65-64 overtime win over Havelock in high school basketball action.

The Vikings improved to 16-4 overall and 8-1 in the league, while Havelock now stands at 12-7 and 7-2.

After battling to a 57-57 standoff at the end of regulation, Havelock struck first in overtime when Eric Borden, who finished with 11 points, scored on a driving layup with 2:42 left in the overtime for a 59-57 Ram lead.

Conley's Bershaun Thompson, who led the Vikings with 18 points, countered at the other end with 2:29 left with a 3-pointer for a 60-59 advantage.

With 2:10 left, Ledell George, who led all scorers with 21 points, knocked in one of two attempts at the free throw line to knot the game for the 10th time at 60-60.

Conley then called a time out to try and set up the final shot.

Farrow added the free throw to give the Vikings a 63-60 lead.

"We were supposed to be holding for the last shot then," Viking coach Cobbie Deans said. "But Junior had a pretty good shot. He probably played the best game of anybody on our team."

The Rams tried to pull even at the other end, however Isaac Barrett's 3-point shot with 18 seconds fell into the hands of Paul Merritt, who was fouled with 15 ticks left.

Merritt converted both ends of the one-and-one to give Conley a 65-60 lead, but the Rams weren't dead yet.

George crossed the time line and drilled a 30-foot 3-pointer with 10 seconds left to close the margin to 65-63.

Conley's Stacey Green then came up short on a driving layup with three seconds left at the other end. George came away with the rebound and was fouled by Thompson with one second left.

George sank the front end of the one-and-one, but missed the second. Kimbrew Morris pulled down the rebound but missed a desperation follow attempt at the buzzer.

For the night, the Rams shot 21-35 at the free throw line.

"We played pretty good," Havelock coach Shelly Marsh said. "We got the ball in the hands of the people we wanted to shoot, we outrebounded them (34-26), and I think played good defense. Our inability to hit the free throws though was what did us in."

Deans, on the other hand, wasn't pleased with his team's performance.

"I was not very happy with the way we played," Deans said. "If you play well and lose then you can still get something out of a game. I don't think we got anything out of this tonight except a win. I was disappointed with our execution down the stretch. It should not have been as close in overtime as it was.

"We have a young club and they don't understand that when you have the ball the other team can't score," Deans said. "A lot of times you had rather have the ball than two points when you're in the lead."

After heading into the fourth period tied at 43-43, Havelock jumped out to a five-point lead by the 6:58 mark. Anthony Robinson, who finished with 10 points, capped off the run with a pair of free throws.

The Rams led by as many as six, 53-47, in the fourth period, before the Vikings, led by forward Terry Williams, who scored six of his 16 points in the last five minutes of the quarter fought back.

Williams baseline jumper with 2:22 left tied the score at 55-55. After Havelock missed at the other end with 1:30 left, Williams knocked in a pair of free throws with 45 seconds left to give Conley a 57-55 advantage.

Robinson tied the game back up at the other end with 30 seconds left with a turnaround on the baseline.

The Vikings then held for the last shot. Williams tried a jumper from the corner with six second left that missed and follow try by Merritt inside also was off the mark at the buzzer.

The largest lead in the game was a eight-point advantage by the Vikings early in the second quarter. Martin Patrick scored on a driving layup for a 24-16 lead with 6:33 left in the half.

The Rams' biggest lead was seven, 41-34. Morris gave Havelock that lead with a follow shot midway through the third quarter.

In the girl's game, Conley broke open a four-point game in the third quarter with a 20-6 run.

The Valkyries led 26-22 at the half and bulged that out to a 46-28 margin heading into fourth quarter.

Conley then held off a rally by the Lady Rams to record the win.

The Valkyries now stand at 15-5 overall and 6-3 in the conference, while Havelock is 15-5 and 5-4.

Lendora Tyson led four Conley players in double figures with 18 points. Glenda Hardy added 14 and Charlene Davenport and Nikki Adams scored 12 and 10 points respectively.

Havelock was led by Dee Godette's 15 points, while Marey Hill chipped in 12.

Conley will be back in action Tuesday at home against West Craven, while Havelock will host West Carteret.

Wilkins To Try Luck From The East Side

By Bill Barnard
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Lenny Wilkens will become the second coach to lead both conferences in the All-Star Game when he leads the East at Houston Sunday.

Wilkens, now coach of the Cleveland Cavaliers, joins Alex Hannum in that category. Wilkens guided the West to a win in 1979 and a loss in 1980 when he was coach of the Seattle SuperSonics.

Hannum led the West twice, in 1958 as coach of the St. Louis Hawks and in 1965 as coach of the San Francisco Warriors. His only win came as coach of the East in 1968, while he was with the Philadelphia 76ers.

Seven players will be making their All-Star debuts Sunday.

Point guards Mark Jackson and Mark Price will play for the East and Kevin Duckworth, Mark Eaton, Dale Ellis, Chris Mullin and John Stockton are making their first appearances for the West.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar will be on the sidelines after making a record 17 All-Star appearances; Moses Malone will play in his 12th.

Tom Chambers is an All-Star reserve for the West and the leading scorer for the Phoenix Suns, but his teammates don't lack for firepower.

Kevin Johnson, Armon Gilliam and Eddie Johnson all have 40-point games for the Suns, while Chambers' season high is 39.

The All-Star Most Valuable Player has been won by a player from the host city 10 times.

They are Ed Macauley of Boston in 1951, Bob Cousy of Boston in 1957, Bob Pettit of St. Louis in 1958 and 1962, Wilt Chamberlain of Philadelphia in 1960, Rick Barry of San Francisco in 1967, Adrian Smith of Cincinnati in 1966, Jerry West of the Los Angeles Lakers in 1972, Tom Chambers of Seattle in 1987 and Michael Jordan of Chicago last year.

There has never been a triple-double in an NBA All-Star Game, although three players have come close.

Oscar Robertson had 23 points, 14 assists and nine rebounds in 1961, Abdul-Jabbar had 17 points, 16 rebounds and nine assists in 1980 and Magic Johnson had 22 assists, 15 points and nine rebounds in 1984.

Sunday's game will be the second NBA All-Star contest played in Texas, following the 1986 game in Dallas.

The San Antonio Spurs played host to the 1975 American Basketball Association All-Star Game.

Twelve players younger than the 41-year-old Abdul-Jabbar took part in Saturday's NBA old-timers' game at the Summit.

Five former Houston Rockets were on the West team in the old-timers' game.

Rick Barry, Elvin Hayes, Rudy Tomjanovich, Calvin Murphy and Mike Newlin are on the West team, which also includes Rockets coach and former University of Houston star Don Chaney.

North Pitt Wins, Takes Conference Lead

BETHEL — Keisha Pilgreen poured in 35 points to lead North Pitt to a 65-35 victory over Charles B. Aycock in the Eastern Plains Conference basketball race Friday night.

The win, coupled with a loss by South Lenoir to Farmville Central, left North Pitt all alone in first place in the league standings.

North Pitt zoomed out to a 24-4 lead over the Falcons in the first period and were never headed. They took a 36-15 lead into the dressing rooms at the half and settled for a 49-29 lead going into the final period. In that, the Pant-Hers outhit the Falcons, 16-6, to win going away.

Portia Clark added 12 points for North Pitt. Marti Anderson led Aycock with 15.

North Pitt is now 7-2 in the league and 11-6 overall. The Pant-Hers will travel to Greene Central on Tuesday.

Farmville C.....48
South Lenoir.....42

DEEP RUN — Farmville Central upset South Lenoir, 48-42, in a girls' basketball game in the Eastern Plains Conference Friday night and knocked the Lady Devils out of a first place tie.

South Lenoir, with the loss, drops to 6-3 in the conference, a game behind North Pitt. Farmville improves its record in the league to 5-3. The Lady Jaguars are 12-7 overall.

South Lenoir held the lead after the first period, 10-6, but Farmville matched them in the second frame, trailing 20-16 at the half. In the third period, the Jags took control, 15-4, moving out to a 31-24 lead. South Lenoir outhit them, 18-17, in the final period, but it wasn't enough.

Brenda Reid led Farmville with 22 while Wanda Bullock added 10. Susan Rigsbee and Nikki Whaley each had 10 to lead South Lenoir.

WILLIAMSTON — Northampton East High School rolled to a 42-26 victory over Williamston in the Northeastern Conference Friday night.

Both teams pushed in eight points in the first quarter, but Northampton pulled away in the second with a 12-6 margin. That gave the Lady Rams a 20-14 halftime lead. Williamston cut one off that in the third period, 28-23, but was outscored 14-3, in the last quarter.

Altessie Boone led Northampton with 14 points while Kim Hawkins had 12 for Williamston.

Williamston falls to 2-7 in the league, 5-12 overall and travels to Edenton on Tuesday.

Phelps Will Ready Irish With Tough Closing Slate

By Jim O'Connell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Notre Dame coach Digger Phelps will get his Fighting Irish ready for the NCAA with a tough tournament the week before the 64-team field is announced.

Phelps has scheduled the Irish for three road games against fellow independents the last week of the regular season. His thinking is that postseason conference tournaments are beneficial when it comes to advancing toward the Final Four.

"Five years ago I would have said that I didn't know if the postseason conference tournaments were going to work," Phelps said Tuesday. "Today, I disagree. I say that's a great situation.

"When we went to a round-robin with DePaul, Marquette and Dayton, playing each other twice, I also suggested we have a tournament the last week of the regular season. At that time, Rick Majerus, the coach of Marquette, decided that if you lost to one team three times in a season, that would hurt you. Well, when I looked last year, North Carolina lost to Duke three straight times and North Carolina still made the final eight."

This season, Notre Dame ends the season with games at Butler, Marquette and DePaul.

"We're on spring break and I thought the games would be a good test as the NCAA approaches. Sort of our conference tournament," he said. "A loss that week, and you never want that loss, a loss that week may be something a team can use as a springboard into the NCAA."

You figure Georgia Tech coach Bobby Cremins would have been able to enjoy his visit to his native New York this week to play Iona in Madison Square Garden.

The Yellow Jackets were ranked 20th and a prohibitive favorite over the Gaels, who entered the game two games below .500 and with little chance of matching the individual talents of Tommy Hammonds and Dennis Scott.

When Georgia Tech had sweated out a 78-69 victory over Iona with Hammonds and Scott scoring 52 points between them, Cremins hoped he proved his point to his team.

"This was a tough, big game for us," he said. "We are trying for an NCAA bid so this was an important game and we made sure the team knew that. We've got to believe we're going to the NCAA and a slip like this would have hurt us."

The Yellow Jackets improved to 15-7 with the comeback victory and they still have seven Atlantic Coast Conference games and a home game with Notre Dame before the conference tournament.

"We were in serious jeopardy of losing and I was in serious trouble with my relatives," Cremins said.

Only one player has averaged more than 18 points per game for Iowa in the 1980s — Greg Stokes finished at 19.9 in 1985.

The current trio of seniors, B.J. Armstrong, Roy Marble and Ed Horton, has averaged between 18 and 19 points per game.

Armstrong leads the Hawkeyes at 18.9 with Marble second at 18.7 and Horton close behind at 18.3.

Iowa has never had three players average better than 18 points per game in a season although the 1970 trio of John Johnson, 27.9, Chad Calabria, 19.1, and Fred Brown, 17.9, came very close.

A study on coaches' heart rates during games may be proof that head coaches worry about defense while their assistants have other things on their mind.

Representatives of four schools under the direction of the Department of Health and Physical Education at Stephen F. Austin monitored the heart rates of the coaching staff of the school's women's basketball team.

Rose Slips Past Bruins, 46-45

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Rose High School's basketball team dodged another bullet Friday night and escaped with a 46-45 victory over Wilson Beddingfield in a Big East Conference game.

The Rampants, who led by as much as 11 points in the second quarter of the game, saw that lead vanish and the Bruins lead by as many as five early in the fourth period.

But James Teel led Rose in a rally that regained the lead with 2:43 left at 44-43, and the Bruins missed two opportunities in the final minute of play to pull it out, including a layup with six seconds to play.

The Rampants, trailing by three, 43-40, cut the lead to just one when Johnny Ebron scored on a jumper with 2:53 to play. Teel then stole the ball and scored 10 seconds later to put Rose ahead for the first time in the final quarter, 44-43.

Henry Langston returned the lead to the Bruins with 2:31 showing when he hit both ends of a one-and-one, but Rose came right back down to score on a short jumper by Paul Powers with 2:17 to go, making it 46-45.

It was to be the final points of the night.

Beddingfield controlled the ball until 1:24 was left, then called a time. Langston was then fouled again with 57 seconds to go, but missed the front end of the bonus opportunity and Powers pulled away the rebound. Rose's Ebron was fouled as he drove to the basket with 23 seconds left, and he proceeded to miss both of his chances.

Beddingfield came back down, and after a time out with 12 seconds to go, missed when Sigmund Simms' driving layup rolled off the rim and Carlester Crumpler snatched it.

Despite the fact that the ball was life, the officials blew the whistle in error when Beddingfield called for a time out with four second left, but on the in-bounds that followed, Rose threw the ball far down-court to preclude any hopes Beddingfield might have for a steal and a quick basket.

"It was a standard sidelines pass," Beddingfield coach Lin Green said of the final play. "We wanted to go inside to the big man (Bill Mercer) but (Simms) had an uncontested shot. It's just unfortunate that he missed."

Beddingfield used a very patient game throughout the evening. "Yeah, it was a delay. We delayed as long as we could to try and get good shots. We wanted to spread them out and get the easy shot," Green said.

For a while, it didn't seem to work as Rose took early control of the game. The Rampants scored the first six points of the game before Beddingfield got its first basket with 3:50 left in the first quarter. Rose held a 10-4 lead at the end of the quarter.

After the Bruins cut it to 12-9 on a three-pointer early in the second period, Rose went on a tear, hitting eight straight points to take a 20-9 lead. Crumpler started it off with a three-point play and Teel followed with a three-point basket. Ebron finished it off with a jumper with 5:38 showing for the 20-9 lead.

But after that, Rose went to a spread offense itself, and everything seemed to fall apart. Rose turned it over several times, and allowed Beddingfield to get back into the game. The Bruins, led by six points from Langston, outscored Rose 12-4 the rest of the period to trail by only 24-21 at the end of the half.

"We put some people into the game to give some of our starters a rest at the time," Brewington said. "We had two crucial turnovers during that period and it let them take the momentum away from us."

Although Rose scored the first two baskets of the third period, the momentum stayed with the Bruins, who then score nine straight points to take the lead for the first time, 30-28. Mercer got the string started with a driving layup and Ronald Atkinson also scored the same way. Langston hit a three-pointer, tying it at 28-28. Mercer then scored on a jumper in the lane to put the Bruins up, but he missed a free throw that came with the basket with 4:01 left.

Rose took the lead back on baskets by Ebron and Powers, but lose it again with 1:42 left when Simms scored from the lane, tying it at 32-32 once more.

That's the way the period ended, and the Bruins scored baskets by Langston and Mercer to open the final quarter, taking a 36-32 lead. After Ebron hit the second of two free throws, Mercer scored again for a 38-33 lead, the biggest enjoyed by the Bruins.

Rose hung in there after that and finally got the baskets it needed to win.

Powers led the Rose scoring effort with 12 points while Ebron added 11 and Teel had 10.

Langston led Beddingfield with 20 while Mercer hit 16.

"I thought they shot the ball extremely well tonight," Brewington said of the Bruins. Beddingfield hit on 18 of 38 (47.4 percent), while Rose made good on 20 of 41 (48.8 percent). Rose also enjoyed a 28-21 rebounding edge.

"Our defense pulled us through the fourth quarter," the Rose coach said. "We just hustled enough to pull it out."

The win boosted the Rampants to 6-4 in the conference, 13-6 overall. Beddingfield falls to 2-7, 7-11.

Rose High School's girls won their second straight game after snapping a five-game dive, taking a 60-45 win over Beddingfield.

Rose rushed out to a 17-4 lead in the first period of the game and was never headed. Both teams pushed through 14 points in the second quarter to lead Rose in command 31-18 at the half.

In the third period, Beddingfield clipped a point off the lead, but still trailed by 42-30. Rose outscored them in the final period, 18-15, to wrap up the win.

Jenny Stoneham led Rose with 25 points while Tina Smith added 19. Barbara Barfield led Beddingfield with 12.

The Rampettes improve to 5-5 in the conference 7-9 overall. Beddingfield drops to 2-8, 3-15.

Rose is at home again Tuesday night, playing host to Kinston.

Kuester Finding Out About Life On The Losing Side Now

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Nothing John Kuester ever experienced could have possibly prepared him for the hellish season he's enduring as head basketball coach at George Washington University.

When he was in high school, Kuester was part of a team that won three straight Virginia state Catholic titles. Playing under Dean Smith at North Carolina in the mid-1970s, he helped the Tar Heels win two Atlantic Coast Conference titles and gain a Final Four berth. Kuester lasted three years in the NBA, and later enhanced his portfolio by working as an assistant at Boston University under coach Rick Pitino.

Those were the best of times. Now, as he endures the very worst of times, Kuester's only consolation is that things couldn't possibly get any worse.

George Washington was the lone winless Division I squad until a 103-77 victory over Massachusetts Jan. 21. After that triumph, Colonial fans swarmed the court and proceeded to tear down the nets in a celebration usually reserved for NCAA titlists.

Since then there have been a few close games, but no more notches in the win column. A 1-26 season is well within the realm of possibility.

Kuester, a winner much of his life, is destined to be known as the man who guided the worst team in the school's 82-year basketball history.

"I've never been through an experience like this," Kuester said earlier this week. "I'm trying to find out how to handle adversity, but it hasn't been easy. I'll tell you, something like this really helps you find out who your friends are."

Smith is one of those friends. The North Carolina coach often calls Kuester, offering consolation and advice.

"I try to give him some encouragement," Smith said. "When he was here, he was the type of guy who would dive on the floor for loose balls, do anything he could to win. Being the competitor he is, I'm sure this is just tearing him up."

They say misery loves company, but this is one ulcer Kuester would prefer to keep to himself. He frequently checks the standings around the country, hoping teams in similar situations — such as Portland (the last winless team before GW) — can shake equally depressing slumps.

"My heart goes out to them," he said. "It's sad to say, but I know just how they feel."

The Colonials started out on the wrong foot this season. Then they got it stepped on.

Center Max Blank, who finished second on the team last year in scoring and rebounding, pulled a hamstring muscle in preseason practice and has yet to play a game at full speed. Leading scorer Ellis McKenzie broke his foot during the fifth game of the season and is out for the year. Starting forward Mike Jones has been fighting tendinitis of the knee, and senior forward Brian Royal is sidelined with an Achilles tendon injury.

"We wanted to bring our freshmen along slowly, but with all these injuries we were forced to throw them to the wolves," Kuester said. "Call it experience under fire."

Smith has viewed several of the Colonials' games on television, and winces at the adversity that Kuester and his team have gone through.

"John has had some very tough luck," Smith said. "In fact, given the personnel he's had to work with, he's done a remarkable job."

GW opened the season with six home games, including matchups against Yale, Hartford and the University of Maryland-Baltimore, hardly formidable foes. The Colonials lost them all. In contrast, Kuester lost only four home games in four years at North Carolina and never endured a losing streak that exceeded two.

"I'll tell you, something like this gives you a different perspective on life," he said. "You realize how important your family is. This losing, it's killing me. But it makes me see how precious this job is, and how lucky I am to have it."

Kuester's job seems safe, at least until next year. In his prior three seasons at GW, he won 12, 10 and 13 games. This year has been an unmitigated disaster, but he says the administration has been understanding in realizing that injuries to key players have played a major role.

"They know the background to this. It's been a fluke year," Kuester said. "Next year will be my fourth (recruiting) class in, and I think we'll really turn things around. We could have 15 guys in uniform."

Kuester turned 35 last Monday. He spent the night at the gym with his team and 2,700 fans, looking for win No. 2 against St. Joseph's. GW could have leaped out of last place in the Atlantic 10 with a win over the 5-15 Hawks, but dropped an 83-81 decision to fall to 1-19 overall.

"We had nine bodies to work with, and one guy had the flu and another had a pulled thigh muscle," Kuester said. "It's been like that all year. But, to their credit, the kids have handled this all well. They haven't given up in any game."

Neither has Kuester. Never will.

"We'll get through this," he said. "And when next year comes around, all this will pay off. The future is bright."

And the present?

"He's upbeat," said Smith. "He really seems ever confident that things can get turned around. It's just a shame that in this profession things are measured only by wins and losses. He loses to West Virginia (currently in the Top 20) by two points and it's just another loss.

"I'd say he's done a great job, considering what he's had to go through."

76 Years Of Losing Is Over

EUNICE, La. (AP) — A 3-point play by junior Paul Thompson in the closing seconds clinched St. Edmund High's first winning basketball season in the south Louisiana school's 76-year history with a 77-74 victory over East Beauregard.

St. Edmund, 15-14 in the regular season under rookie head coach Rick Whittington, now must wait until next Tuesday to learn whether the Bluejays will advance as a wild card entry to the first round of the Class A state championships.

Padre Island Waiting To See If Turtles Come Back

By Bill Schulz
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRUNSWICK, Ga. — The waiting has started for scores of workers and volunteers who helped with the Kemp's Ridley sea turtle project on Padre Island, Texas.

The plan was to work for 10 years to try to develop a new nesting site for the endangered species, the smallest of the Atlantic sea turtles.

It went 11 years and now everybody must wait to find out whether any of the turtles return. It could come this spring. It could be another four years, maybe longer. No one knows how long it takes for the turtle to reach breeding age.

It would be wonderful, says Donna Shaver, the project's last director, if there's a report this spring that a dozen turtles are nesting on the island, which is part of the national park system.

"That's why I stayed at Padre as long as I did, working my way up from volunteer, up the seasonal ranks to a permanent job" with the park service.

In those 11 years, 15,875 hatchling turtles, incubated in plastic foam boxes in a shed, were taken to the National Marine Fisheries Service laboratory in Galveston to be raised for one year so they had a better chance to survive when returned to the Gulf of Mexico.

About 12,000 yearlings have been released into the gulf.

Workers brought 22,507 eggs from the prime nesting area at Rancho Nuevo, Mexico. Seventy-seven percent hatched. Only 381 hatchlings died.

There were 278 escapes by hatchlings who were given a taste of salt water before being caught and taken to Galveston.

Researchers found that the temperature in which eggs are incubated determine the sex of the hatchlings; higher temperatures brought a higher proportion of females.

To help ensure that hatchlings would call Padre Island home, eggs were packed in Padre Island sand.

The hatchlings from each clutch of eggs were kept separated, so their pedigrees could be tracked some day, and prepared for the parade to the surf.

Releases started just after dawn and continued until about 10:30 a.m., when it got too hot.

"We'd release turtles 30 meters (33 feet) from the water," Shaver said during the ninth annual Workshop on Sea Turtle Conservation and Biology on Georgia's Jekyll Island.

Then, once the hatchlings got to the surf, workers scrambled after them with aquarium dip nets.

"That was pretty hectic," she said. "The water was murky. We got tar balls that looked like turtles. They come up to the surface two or three times, then go down in the water. Sometimes you'd have to chase them to the second or third sandbar, out in water up to neck deep."

But only 278 made the quick trip to freedom the first 10 years.

Last year only half the usual 2,000 eggs came from Rancho Nuevo. "It was kind of our winding-down year," Saver said. But 91.6 percent of those eggs hatched — a project record. Of those, 810 were set free into the gulf immediately.

New-Boat Fever Strikes In Mid-Winter

New-boat fever. Its worst attacks occur in mid-winter and its symptoms are unmistakable. Boat lovers suffering from the malaise tend to stick their hands in their pockets and saunter slowly up and down boat docks and the aisles of boat shows.

They squint and cock their heads — sizing up the new boat, checking out the lines, the look, the style. They peek in portholes, point to accessories, run their fingers along the gelcoat. The only know cure is a new boat.

Buying a new boat can be fun. The trick is to get the most boat for the least amount of money, and a loan at the best interest rate. It's not that difficult if you do your homework.

If you want to know whether you are getting a good price on a new or used rig, the bible of all dealers and financial institutions is the "BUC Price Guide" series.

There are three books which list thousands of hulls of every size and type, up to the biggest of production yachts. One book covers 1981-87 ($65), one covers 1971-80 ($55) and one covers the oldies but goodies from 1905 to 1970 ($45).

The "New Boat Price Guide" for current models is $17.95 and all four books are available for $153 from BUC Information Services, Dept. SS, 1314 NE, 17th Court, Ft. Lauderdale, Fla. 33305.

A second good source of used-boat prices is the "NADA Appraisal Guide," put out by the same folks who do the automotive "blue book." The guide lists everything from inflatables to cabin cruisers, but contains no hulls longer than 36 feet, and none earlier than 1974. There are also sections on values of used electronics, outboards and trailers.

The cost for the "NADA Appraisal Guide" is $70, which includes three quarterly issues — each over 1,000 pages long. For information, write NADA, P.O. Box 7800, Costa Mesa, Calif. 92628.

Loans are a different matter, but be sure to comparison shop for them just as you do the boat. Some loan companies make it very easy to get a loan, but their rates may be higher than those from a bank. Banks may take longer, but if you have a strong financial background, your patience could be profitable.

Most companies are willing to finance up to 80 percent of the price of a new boat, and up to 75 percent of the value of a used rig.

DU Marsh Program Involved In North Carolina

The acquisition of a 136-acre tract of land will provide resident wood ducks a secure production site, as well as a valuable resting and feeding area for migratory waterfowl, in western Davie County this year. Funding from Ducks Unlimited has helped make it happen.

Working in cooperation with the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission, DU's Wetlands America MARSH program contributed nearly $67,000 toward the $100,2000 purchase price of Hunting Creek Swamp, located seven miles northeast of Mocksville. The state wildlife agency financed the balance.

About one-third of Hunting Creek Swamp is wetland and the site supports a large population of wood ducks, with mallards and black ducks also using the area. In addition, quail, rabbit, squirrel, white-tailed deer and other wildlife can be found on the property.

The wildlife commission, which was instrumental in implementing the acquisition process, will manage the site as a waterfowl refuge.

A formal on-site dedication ceremony is scheduled for Thursday at 1:30 p.m., with featured guests including Hal Atkinson, chief of the division of wildlife management; Charles R. Fullwood, director of the wildlife commission; Eugene Price, chairman of the wildlife commission, and Dr. David Thomson, DU state chairman.

Hunting Creek Swamp is one of three North Carolina DU habitat projects. Mackay Island was dedicated in 1987, and work at Conine Island will be recognized during a dedication ceremony later this year.

As of Feb. 1, DU's Wetlands America MARSH program counted 98 completed projects, including 26 in the Atlantic Flyway. DU is currently involved with 53 additional east coast projects.

North Carolina, with more than 15,000 DU members, ranks among the organization's top 10 states in terms of membership and fund-raising performance.

In 1987, North Carolina ranked second among the states in total DU sponsors with 2,671. The state ranked seventh in dollars per duck stamp ($57.40), ninth in total income ($1,749,302) and 10th in total contributors (15,389).

The primary waterfowl species expected to benefit from the 237 state fund-raising events in 1987 are wood duck, black duck, mallard, Canada goose, snow goose, gadwall, pintail, scaup, ring-necked duck, wigeon, canvasback, redhead and teal.

Ducks Unlimited is the world's largest private-sector waterfowl conservation organization. Since 1937, DU has conserved more than five million acres of wildlife habitat by constructing nearly 4,000 wetlands projects in Canada, the United States and Mexico.

State Park Attendance Reaches Record High

More than 7.9 million people visited North Carolina state parks in 1988, marking the highest attendance figure in the park system's 73-year history.

The 7,905,878 visitors recorded last year surpasses the previous high of 7,580,232 in 1987. The new figure represents a 4 percent increase over the 1987 total.

The 34 parks, recreation and natural areas in the state park system are managed by the N.C. Division of Parks and Recreation. More than 1.2 million people visited Fort Macon State Park in Atlantic Beach in 1988, making it the most visited park in the system.

Other parks showing sizable attendance growth include Hammock Beach State Park in Swansboro, Medoc Mountain State Park in Halifax County and Fort Fisher State Recreation Area in New Hanover County.

North Carolina ranks 49th in the nation in per capita funding for state parks. The state spends only $1.12 per citizen.

Bowhunters Convention Scheduled

The 1989 convention and awards banquet of the North Carolina Bowhunters Association will be held Saturday at South Iredell High School in Statesville.

Featured guests include "Maggie" McGee of "Bowhunter Magazine"; Jack Brobst, author of "Bowhunting Wild Turkeys"; Roger Rothhaar, nationally known whitetail trophy hunter; Pink Atkins, holder of the number one bear taken in North America with a bow in 1986, and George LaCross, an Ohio taxidermist.

Registration begins at 8:30 a.m. and admission is $3. For information or to make banquet reservations, call (704) 873-7475.

Conservation Achievement Awards To Be Presented

North Carolina Senator Terry Sanford will present the Governor's Conservation Achievement Awards at the North Carolina Wildlife Federation's annual awards banquet March 4 at the N.C. State University Faculty Club in Raleigh.

More than a dozen award recognizing excellence in conservation action are given each year by the federation. The banquet is held in conjunction with the organization's 44th annual convention.

The federation is the largest private conservation organization in the state, with over 40,000 members and supporters.

Blacklock Recalls Beginning

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOOSE LAKE, Minn. — Les Blacklock remembers where it started, this business of taking pictures. It began at a circus. The year was about 1930. The place was Moose Lake.

"I was 9," said Blacklock, now 67. "We kids had a circus in Mrs. Lewis' back yard. One kid had a goat."

Blacklock didn't say how they used the goat, but it must have been a crowd pleaser. He and his buddies each came away with $1.04 from their production.

"We all chipped in our extra four cents and bought Mrs. Lewis a lace hankie," Blacklock said. "Then I took my dollar and went zooming down to Peterson Drug. I bought myself a Kodak Rainbow Hawkeye camera for 98 cents."

From those first blurry black-and-whites with the Rainbow Hawkeye, Blacklock eventually graduated to large-format color photography. Rambling all over North America, Blacklock returned with photos that found their way into six Blacklock books, a popular series of calendars and advertising photos that made the "Land of Sky Blue Waters" synonymous with Minnesota for many Americans.

The books — "The Hidden Forest," "The High West," "Meet My Psychiatrist," "Ain't Nature Grand!" "Our Minnesota," and "Minnesota Wild" — have sold a cumulative 170,000 copies in hardcover and paperback, according to Blacklock's publishers.

The books and calendars are still selling, but Blacklock is slowing down. He calls it semiretirement, although he still hopes to produce one more book. He and his wife, Fran, 74, have turned over their business — Blacklock Nature Photography — to their son, Craig, and his wife, Nadine, who are carrying on where Les left off.

Les Blacklock was diagnosed in 1986 as having Parkinson's disease, a progressive disorder that affects the nervous system. The disease causes him to tremble slightly and it affects his memory at times. But it didn't stop him from hand-splitting seven cords of red oak last fall, and the snow shoes a visitor sees leaning by the front door aren't for effect. Blacklock uses them almost daily to cruise parts of the 190 acres he owns in the hardwoods outside of Moose Lake.

Around The House

Here's The Answer

By Andy Lang
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Q. There is a water stain on the gypsum board ceiling in one of our rooms. We want to repaint it. How can we prevent the stain from showing through the new paint?

A. Seal it with a 50-50 combination of shellac and denatured alcohol. Use clear shellac. However, before you begin the job, be sure whatever caused the stain will not give a repeat performance. The sealer will keep in the stain only if the mark is dormant. A new leak and you'll have new trouble.

Q. I have a marble coffee table with several large stains. I have tried several things and cannot remove them. I hope you can help. I didn't know marble stained that way.

A. The secret of polishing marble is to buff the surface with abrasive materials of successively finer grit sizes. The polishing usually will remove the stains. But it takes extensive effort and considerable time to achieve results. Your best bet is to go to a dealer who sells marble and buy a polishing compound or whatever poultice he recommends, being sure to get some kind of brochure or pamphlet that gives detailed instructions. Marble most certainly does stain, as you found out.

Q. I have read a chapter in a booklet telling how to repair what is called a compression faucet. How do I know whether my faucet is that type?

A. In a compression faucet, a threaded spindle is turned and the washer at the end of the lower end is pressed against a valve seat. This shuts off the supply of water. Modern faucets do not use washers. If your faucet has one, it is of the compression-type. Despite the big inroads into the market of washerless faucets, the majority of houses in the country still have compression faucets simply because they are old.

Q. Soon I will be using plywood in an exterior project. It is important that the paint job be extra smooth. Which kind of plywood should I get?

A. Not all lumber yards have it, but it can be ordered. It is a type of plywood called MDO. Those letters stand for Medium Density Overlay. The face of this kind of plywood is treated so that it will take an exceptionally smooth painted finish.

Q. I have a piece of furniture made of Philippine mahogany. I want to give it a pickled finish after I take off the old varnish. Must anything be done to the wood before starting the pickling process, which I know something about?

A. Yes. Once the wood has been stripped of the old finish, it must be bleached. Be especially careful about following the instructions for rinsing the wood after the bleach has done its color-removing job. The washing will take off any chemical residue.

Changes In Weather Put Stress On Plants

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The warm days in January created wonderful opportunities for Pitt County citizens to enjoy outdoor activities in anticipation of spring. And, when the winter temperatures emerged again this month, citizens only had to reach back into their closets to pull out the winter coats again.

But for budding plants, fooled by the warm weather, the transition from the balmy temperatures of January to the cold temperatures this month was not as smooth.

When cold and freezing temperatures set in, the cells in plants may freeze, Sam Uzzell, a Pitt County Agricultural Extension agent, said.

"When it gets cold enough, the liquids (in the plant) freeze and turn to ice, and the cell walls are ruptured," he said. "The appearance of cold-damaged leaves is one of wilted green tissue that soon turns black or brown" within two or three days.

"Damage usually occurs to different parts of plants at different rates," Uzzell said. "The most easily damaged portion is the flower or young fruit, and the next most easily damaged would be the real new and tender foliage. Of course, mature leaves or foliage would be less harmed because of thicker cell walls and higher concentrations of carbohydrates and other stuff in the cells," he said.

To protect plants from the cold temperatures, they may be covered with old sheets, burlap or bedspreads, Gayle Wainwright, owner and manager of Little's Nursery, said.

Wrapping the plants in plastic makes the plants and their blooms too warm when the sun rises in the mornings, she said.

"Wrapping makes the buds a little tougher or harder and it helps them gradually get use to cold weather. New growth is so tender, even wrapping may not help that much," Ms. Wainwright said.

Any bulbs that have just started blooming, such as daffodils, may be hurt by the cold weather, but bulbs that have not bloomed probably will not be hurt, she said.

The damage to budding plants may be minimal because the weather has changed gradually, she said. "We didn't have a drastic change," she said.

Outdoor pets also suffer in the colder weather, Dr. Renee Poirrier of the Willow Grove Animal Clinic in Farmville, said.

"The best thing to do is to take them inside when it's freezing and cold," she said.

If pets are left outside, "put a light in their house to where they can't chew the wire," she said. It's best to place the light in a corner so the pet can draw near it if it's cold or it can back away from it if it's too warm.

An old blanket also may be put in the house to help the pet stay warm. Straw in the house creates more problems with fleas and other insects, Dr. Poirrier said.

"Feed them at night," she said. "That's going to give them a lot of energy to keep warm."

Also, "make sure they have warm water to drink, not cold water." And, keep checking their water to make sure it hasn't frozen.

Antique Dealer's World Grows Smaller

By Barbara Mayer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Though boundaries still divide the political world, there's just one world of fine antiques.

Those who can afford it are just as likely to buy in Europe as in New York or their own hometown. And personal taste, rather than decorating styles, often dictates what they choose for their homes, says Paige Rense, editor of Architectural Digest magazine.

What's fashionable crosses both time periods and national boundaries.

The antiques dealer's world has also become much smaller, said the Los Angeles-based editor who was in New York recently to attend the Winter Antiques Show at the 7th Regiment Armory.

"You see the major dealers at shows all over the country and every local dealer knows what things are worth," added Rense, who travels quite a bit herself in her quest for luxurious interiors to reproduce in the pages of the magazine.

She says it's sometimes possible to follow the progress of a particularly toothsome object as it makes its way from a local shop or sale to become one of the glittering prizes in New York.

The New York Winter Antiques Show bears out her opinion that there is no single hot ticket in the upper reaches of the antiques world. The show held each January in Manhattan for the past 35 years is considered a bellwether by trend-watchers.

This year's show brought together 74 dealers from the United States, England and Europe, who exhibited some of their most valuable wares.

Among categories in abundance were neoclassic English, European and American furniture and architectural ornaments, oriental ceramics and bronzes and formal furniture from the late 18th and early 19th centuries.

American primitive antiques — furniture, paintings and objects as well as American Indian artifacts — were particularly evident, which represents a recent change. Only a few years ago, the category was rarely on display at this antiques show.

What's selling well, according to exhibitor Kenneth Newman of the Old Print Shop, is "the top 10 percent in all categories. Top quality, good condition and rarity are sought." Rather than opt for lesser quality, people tend to move into later time periods as the old things get harder to find, added Newman.

Miniature 16th-century figures in full armor, Russian court furniture, an 18th-century musical clock and a primitive American painted bench were other items their purveyors ballyhooed.

On The House

By ANDY LANG

On the average, a family lives in a house about seven years. But that's just an average that is made so by the fact that millions of people stay in one place no more than three or four years and sometimes less.

That means millions of others remain in their residences 10 or 15 or 30 years and, in many instances, through several generations.

Few keep a lasting record of the lives of their houses and, along with it, of the lives of the occupants. How fascinating it might be if the present owners of an old house knew from chronicled information that it once was a Georgian Mansion of sorts and later a buggy repair shop; that the rear part of it was tacked on in 1870, 35 years after the original house was constructed; that one of the owners was mayor of the village; and that it served as a house of worship for nearly a year when the principal church in the area burned down.

Knowing a building's past and something about its owners make it a more interesting place to live, and also affect your own contribution to its continuing evolution. Whatever its architectural legacy, future renovations can be made to contribute to its enhancement.

A book to record all these developments has been created by Marilyn Mohr, housing editor of Harrowsmith's Magazine. It's called "Chronicle of Our House" and is not an ordinary publication.

While there is plenty of reading matter, there also are plenty of lined blank pages so that a homeowner can put down everything that enters his or her head — not just the information that can be obtained by digging into the town files, although this sort of data is encouraged, but more personal things, even gossip and anecdotes.

Wouldn't you have loved to know what went on in your old house all through the years and to learn what was in your predecessors' heads when homeowners were assessed for certain improvements that didn't really affect them?

There is even space to display old swatches and photographs, sometimes even more revealing than reminiscences. Family events and "natural phenomena" would prove a most intriguing section for generations ahead.

Instructions on how to research the background of a house are detailed, but "A Chronicle of Our House" is more of an invitation to create your own background so future researching will not be necessary. The homeowner is encouraged to write down everything about any remodeling project that is done, even to the use of brand names for finishes and notes on how well they performed.

Author Mohr, discussing the differences between homeowner needs in the old days and now, makes this interesting observation:

"The modest Victorians resisted the idea of communal bathrooms, preferring to retain their 'pot cupboards' — small cabinets that opened to reveal a seat with a built-in receptacle — rather than share a toilet with other members of the household.

"Today, most new houses have two and sometime three or four bathrooms, but a recent trend toward an en suite bathroom in every bedroom indicates a curious return to the Victorian predilection for privacy."

Quotations are sprinkled throughout the book, some of them amusing, some profound, but all relating in some way to houses. If you think you are sometimes sentimental about your house, take some comfort from the words of Sydney Smith in 1943:

"A comfortable house is a great source of happiness. It ranks immediately after health and a good conscience."

("Chronicle of Our House" is published by Camden House, 8210 Ferry Rd., Charlotte, VT 05445 $19.95.)

(Do-it-yourselfers will find much helpful information in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," which can be obtained by sending $2.00 to this paper at Box Teaneck, NJ 07666.)

Fannie Mae Houses To Be Sold

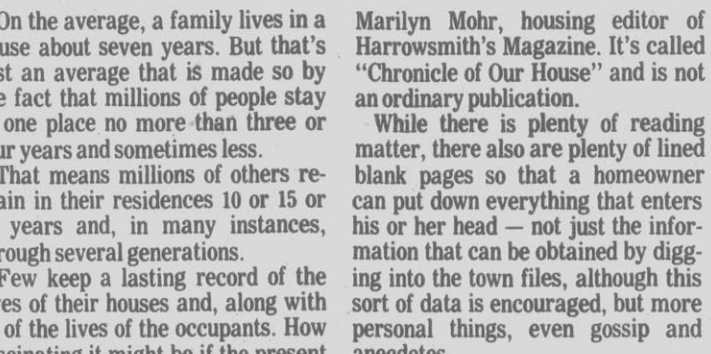

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — The Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae) is planning to sell foreclosed houses in four cities for use by the poor and homeless, spokesmen for the organization and a major private housing association said this week.

Public-housing authorities in Denver, Houston, San Antonio and Austin, Texas, will be offered the properties at discounts ranging from 10 percent to 14 percent, according to Larry H. Dale, a Fannie Mae senior vice president, and officials of the National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials. The public-housing officials' association, which represents 2,500 public-housing and development agencies, said thousands of low-income people in these cities are on waiting lists for housing assistance, many of them now living in crowded or unsafe conditions.

Inflation Fears Spur Major Banks To Increase Prime Lending Rates

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

NEW YORK — Signs of surging inflation helped lead many of the nation's biggest banks to raise their prime lending rates one-half of a percentage point Friday to 11 percent, the highest level in more than four years.

Continental Illinois Bank kicked off the move, announcing its new rate after the federal government reporting a jolting 1 percent rise in wholesale prices for January. Other major banks soon followed, including Wells Fargo, First Interstate, Bank of America, Security Pacific, Citibank, Manufacturers Hanover Trust, and Chase Manhattan Bank.

The prime, a benchmark on which many consumer rates are based, was last increased Nov. 28, when it was lifted one-half point to 10.5 percent.

The financial world has been studying the U.S. economy for signs that its continued robust growth would set off new inflation. Friday's price report from the Department of Labor convinced many that it would — and that the Federal Reserve Bank will soon raise short-term rates in an effort to brake any further rise in prices.

The price report and the prime rate increase were both bad news for President Bush's newborn federal budget, which assumes that short-term interest rates will fall sharply this year. Higher rates will hurt the administration because they make it more expensive to finance the federal debt, and, by slowing the economy, also have the effect of lowering tax revenues.

The new budget assumes, for example, that rates on 30-day Treasury bills will average 7.4 percent this fiscal year. They are now carrying a rate of about 8.5 percent, and Friday's price report assures they will go higher.

Bush, asked during a trip to Ottawa about the figures and how they might affect his budget projections, said: "You've got to wait to see how long interest rates stay different from that which we projected."

" ... I'm not overly concerned about inflation in the United States. ... We still have excess plant capacity. ... It is important that we keep growing." But he acknowledged, "I don't like the figures."

For millions of consumers, the latest rise in the prime means that they will have to make higher payments on their adjustable rate mortgages and home equity loans. But analysts say that, so far, the upsurge of rates has had relatively little effect on consumer borrowers, just as it has not appreciably slowed the growth of the economy.

"Rates have continued to go up, but for the average consumer, the effects have been pretty mild," said Kenneth Ackbarali , senior economist with First Interstate Bank in Los Angeles.

The impact has been mitigated by the fact that so many mortgage lenders have been luring home buyers with low "teaser" starting adjustable rates designed to win them market share in a highly competitive market, said economist Tom Holloway of the Mortgage Bankers Association.

Other key consumer rates have also been resisting the general rise of short-term rates, said David Rolley, economist with the Drexel Burnham Lambert investment brokerage. Competing fiercely for customers, banks have continued to lower credit card interest rates very slightly — to an average of 17.77 percent last November, from 17.8 percent at the beginning of the year.

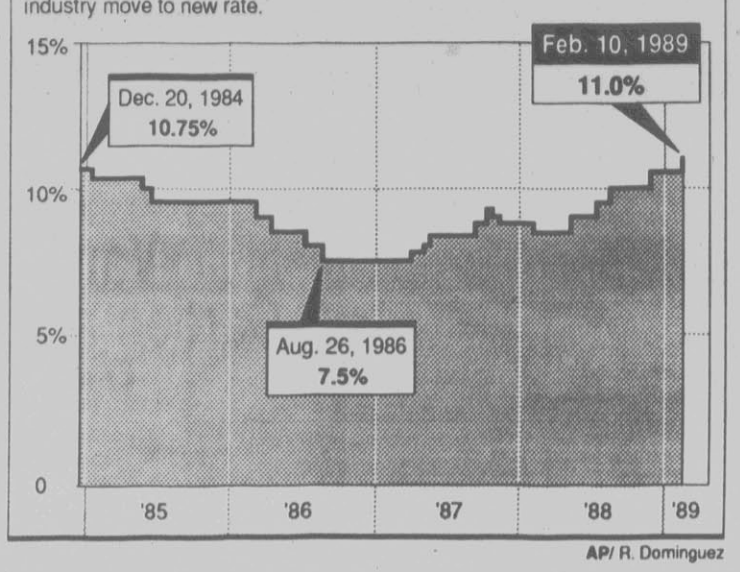

Auto loan rates have also been moving up only slowly. Auto loans from banks ticked up to an average of 11.2 percent by the end of last year, from 10.5 percent at the beginning. And, in fact, the Big Three automakers are financing some cars at rates below 6 percent.

Paul Getman, director of financial services at WEFA Group, a Pennsylvania economic consulting firm, said consumers have generally had it easy so far because the interest payments that consumers receive on their investments have been mounting faster than the interest charges they pay on their borrowings.

For example, increases in adjustable-rate mortgages kick in only once a year, while interest rate increases paid on certificates of deposit or money market accounts increase several times a year.

Prime Lending Rate

Each bank sets its own prime rate; major banks tend to set similar rates and change them at the same time. Dates are for general industry move to new rate.

U.S. Airways Could Become Massive Logjam

By H. Josef Hebert
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS WRITER

WASHINGTON — On the day before Christmas, some 2 million people rushed to airports across America, expecting turmoil or delays. They often found both.

That kind of airport crush, now usually seen only on Thanksgiving and Christmas, is likely to become commonplace by the year 2000 when the airlines expect to carry nearly 800 million passengers a year, an average of more than 2 million every day.

Aviation officials are beginning to worry about a logjam in the air.

Once the domain of businessmen and the well-heeled, the airlines have become a mass transit system. A record 455 million passengers boarded commercial aircraft in 1988, nearly 1.2 million people a day, compared to 243 million in 1977.

Three of every 10 adults took an airline flight last year, and nearly three of every four adults had flown at some point in their lives.

Yet, no major new airports have been built since 1974, when the Dallas-Fort Worth airport was constructed on 18,000-acres of Texas prairie. And while local officials have received agreement on a massive, futuristic $3 billion airport at Denver, the airlines there have balked because of the cost.

Add to that an air traffic control system still struggling to recover from a 1981 strike, plus federal budget constraints.

The holiday passenger crunch "gives us all a glimpse into the future of air traffic," bemoans Herbert Kelleher, chairman of Southwest Airlines. He says the air transport system of today "lacks the capacity to handle that volume of traffic on a daily basis." He also says there are scant signs that anything is being done about it.

"I think the single biggest concern in aviation is the capacity issue," agrees John Lauber, a member of the National Transportation Safety Board.

The traffic demands also raise safety worries, he says, especially since it is unlikely that dozens of new runways and airports will be constructed and broad modernization of the air traffic control system is years away.

"There are real questions as to how we are going to accommodate this growth," Lauber warns.

He acknowledges that there are ways to solve the congestion problem short of pouring new concrete. But, he says, "the danger is that these things will be done before all of the ramifications are thought through from a safety standpoint. The pressure is there."

Among the short-term solutions being considered by the Federal Aviation Administration are adopting new technology to allow more planes to land in a shorter time span and increasing use of computers to predict traffic flow.

Indeed, the overcrowding is being felt both in the air and on the ground.

Seventeen airports used by 40 percent of the flying public were classified in 1988 as "seriously congested" because they handled 160 percent of the traffic for which they were designed. By the year 2000 that number could go as high as 58 airports used by nearly three out of every four travelers, according to the FAA.

Officials at Boston's Logan International Airport say as far as they're concerned aviation gridlock already has arrived.

Last summer, the Massachusetts Port Authority, which runs Logan, imposed a new fee structure that makes it too expensive for owners of small planes and even some commuter airlines to land. The local officials argue that in an era of scarce resources priority must be given to large jetliners carrying hundreds of people.

The federal Transportation Department has called the action an interference with national commerce and threatens to withhold federal airport funds if the fees are not reversed. The Logan officials, meanwhile, are standing firm and intend to fight the DOT ruling in court.

The FAA is still trying to recover from the 1981 strike by air traffic controllers in which 11,400 were fired and had to be replaced by inexperienced recruits. While senior managers have drawn up new flight patterns and adopted a system of central "flow control" to better manage airspace with fewer controllers, problems persist.

Only last fall, controllers at Chicago's busy O'Hare International Airport began making errors so frequently that the federal government ordered a cut in flights. As a result, the number of delays jumped.

Furthermore, the agency's seven-year focus on damage control and government-wide budget constraints have delayed for several years the long-range modernization of its air traffic control system.

The overhauled system is now scheduled for completion in the late 1990s at a cost of $16 billion to $24 billion.

The answer, in the view of many industry executives, is for the federal government to become more aggressive in pushing for new airports or airport expansion where the lack of capacity is seen as impeding commerce.

Burnley calls suggestions that a new runway or airport might be forced on a community as "hopelessly naive" and adds:

"You're simply not going to be able to politically run roughshod over the rights of neighbors of airports. The Congress would not let us do that."

Withdrawals Cut Away At Thrifts

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Depositors withdrew a record $8.1 billion from savings and loan institutions in December in what banking regulators described as a continuing "slow erosion" of deposits in S&Ls that began last summer.

The bulk of the net outflows in December came from 16 unnamed institutions, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board said.

The outflow topped the previous one-month record of $7.1 billion in net withdrawals set in November, and government sources said that withdrawals continued to outpace deposits in January.

The December net withdrawals — resenting less than 1 percent of the S&L system's $972 billion in deposits — are a sharp change from the $2.4 billion in net new deposits during the last month of 1987.

Total outflows in 1988 were $8.4 billion, a sizable deterioration from the $1.8 billion in outflows the industry experienced in 1987. Only 1981, when depositors pulled $25.4 billion from thrifts, saw more withdrawals, S&L regulators said.

Although banking regulators said they do not see signs of a run on S&L deposits, the outflows helped spur the Bush administration to act quickly this week to bolster confidence in the nation's S&L system, where accounts are federally insured up to $100,000.

Regulators noted that the December withdrawals were concentrated in 16 institutions, which experienced $6.4 billion in outflows.

A single S&L was responsible for $3.4 billion of that amount, but the institution — which was not identified — is not in trouble, the bank board said.

Some of the December activity may have been caused by a shift of deposits into higher-yielding investments, such as money market mutual funds, regulators said. And some of it was attributed to withdrawals for the holiday season.

But some regulators attributed the bulk of the outflows to recurring publicity about the S&L industry's problems, and this has heightened their concern, they said.

In recent weeks S&L regulators across the country have reported higher-than-usual withdrawal activity, officials at the Federal Home Loan Bank Board have said.

Part of the reason was recent publicity about an administration proposal — later abandoned — to impose a tax on bank and S&L deposits to finance the S&L bailout.

Mississippi thrifts experienced especially large withdrawals, according to congressional aides and regulatory officials.

Separately, Sheshunoff & Co., a thrift rating service in Texas, said Friday that 72 percent of the nation's 3,032 thrifts in the country were profitable in the first nine months of 1988.

But losses in unhealthy institutions left the industry with a net loss of $4.5 billion on its balance sheets for that period, the most recent date for which statistics were available, Sheshunoff said.

The announcement of the December withdrawals came as bank regulators took control of six more insolvent S&Ls, all of them in the Southwest. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which insures deposits at commercial banks and manages banks when they fail, assumed control of the institutions from the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp.

The transfer of responsibility for troubled S&Ls from the FSLIC to the FDIC is a key part of the Bush administration's bailout plan for thrift industry.

The FDIC's action was the second such move this week under the Bush plan unveiled Monday. It took control from the FSLIC of four ailing S&Ls Tuesday.

Most of Bush's plan requires congressional approval, but the shift of control of ailing S&Ls to the FDIC from the FSLIC can be done without the consent of lawmakers.

Commodities Probe Shows FBI's Skill Against White-Collar Crime

By Douglas Frantz and Larry Green
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

When FBI agents posing as representatives of a bogus Arab sheik began arresting congressmen for bribery nearly a decade ago in the famed Abscam sting, there were cries of outrage on Capitol Hill.

Similar expressions of shock and anger were heard last month when it was disclosed that FBI agents pretending to be commodities traders had spent months secretly tape recording conversations in the pits of the world's two largest futures exchanges here.

"This wasn't a cocaine ring. This, at best, was a little white-collar crime," Thomas A. Crouch, a commodities broker who dealt with one of the undercover agents, complained to a Chicago newspaper.

Dozens of traders and brokers at the Chicago Board of Trade and Chicago Mercantile Exchange have unexpectedly found themselves entangled in what appears to be the most ambitious and sophisticated undercover operation ever launched by the Department of Justice.

The Chicago undercover operation is graphic evidence to business executives who hide behind legitimate and often complex enterprises that they are not immune to the investigative tools developed over the years to go after mobsters.

Indeed, as prosecutors and the FBI grow more adept at mounting undercover operations, they are turning their new skills more and more often on what U.S. Attorney General Dick Thornburgh recently called "crime in the suites."

But the use of these invasive techniques, coupled with the tough federal racketeering law, has prompted a chorus of protests from the pits of the commodities exchanges to the editorial page of the Wall Street Journal — just as Abscam evoked howls from the halls of Congress.

"Part of the concern is that white-collar people who commit white-collar crimes don't like to consider themselves a part of the same social class as the Mafia or as the people who commit street crimes," said Geoffrey Miller, a constitutional law expert and dean at the University of Chicago Law School. "So they really object when their homes are searched or their telephones are bugged."

Nowhere have undercover operations and racketeering laws been used more effectively than in Chicago, where recent targets have ranged from corrupt judges and lawyers to city officials and police officers.

Chicago has become, according to law enforcement officials, an incubator for the type of aggressive white-collar prosecution likely to turn up elsewhere in the country. One Chicago operation even had the title "Operation Incubator." The expertise gained here now is being shared with prosecutors from coast to coast.

But it was through an investigation of corruption in the country's largest municipal court system in Chicago — Operation Greylord — that the government polished the art of the sting and laid the groundwork for its undercover investigation of the commodities exchanges.

Greylord was an intricately scripted undercover operation that at times seemed more like a made-for-TV movie than a federal investigation.

Phony criminal cases, complete with FBI agents posing as criminal defendants, were manufactured and sent on their way through Chicago's courts. Courtrooms and judges' chambers were infiltrated by undercover FBI agents acting as attorneys and wearing concealed tape recorders. A real judge cooperated and allowed the government to hide a tape recorder in his cowboy boots to document offers of bribes.

Today, six years after the sting went public, more than 80 people have been convicted of bribery, conspiracy and racketeering.

Faberge Agrees To Sell Name Brands

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Faberge Inc. said Friday that it has agreed to sell its beauty products and toiletries businesses — which include the Elizabeth Arden, Brut and Aqua Net lines — to international consumer products giant Unilever Group for $1.55 billion in cash.

The deal is another in a long line of acquisitions in the cosmetics industry and one that would give Unilever, a British-Dutch company, a much greater presence in the United States. It also would boost the size of Unilever's personal products business by more than 25 percent.

"Unilever has for years planned on becoming more important in the U.S.," said Suzanne Grayson, a cosmetics and toiletries industry consultant. "They have not been able to do it on their own. So, they have gone about buying companies."

In 1986, Unilever acquired such well-known American brands as Prince Matchabelli fragrances and Vaseline when it bought Westport, Conn.-based Chesebrough-Pond for $3.1 billion. Unilever, with worldwide sales of more than $30 billion, also makes such products as Lipton teas, Wisk detergent and Lifebuoy soaps.

Analysts said $1.55 billion is a high price for Faberge, which is owned by New York financier Meshulam Riklis. When word of negotiations between the two parties leaked out last month, some industry analysts estimated that Faberge would fetch $1 billion.

"They are are probably overpaying," said Grayson, "but it's going to be worth it in the long run."

Under Riklis' ownership, New York-based Faberge has become one of the world's largest cosmetics and beauty products companies. Faberge and Elizabeth Arden, which was acquired in 1987, reported combined sales of $800 million and operating profits of more than $100 million for the fiscal year ending last month.

"They have been doing very, very well," said Paul Cohen, publisher of Beauty Age, a trade publication. "They also have increased the volume of spending on the brands, which has helped each one of the brands strengthen their position in the marketplace."

Cohen said that Faberge's chairman, Daniel Manella, deserves much of the credit for boosting profitability and sales at Faberge. Manella, reached at his weekend home in Palm Beach, Fla., said he would continue working for the Riklis family, as he has for the past 33 years.

Manella boosted profits at Faberge mostly by reducing costs, analysts said. After acquiring Elizabeth Arden, Faberge moved quickly to meld overlapping operations worldwide.

Faberge products are divided into roughly two large categories: low-priced goods, such as Brut cologne and Aqua Net hair spray, sold primarily at mass merchandisers and supermarkets; and higher-priced Elizabeth Arden fine fragrances and cosmetics sold in department stores.

Industry analysts said the acquisition is one of many in recent years that have reduced the number of players in the slow-growing and highly competitive U.S. cosmetics industry. In one of the biggest previous deals, Revlon purchased Max Factor in 1986 for $345 million.

Plant Will Produce Military Warheads

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SWANANNOA, N.C. — After two decades of dumping dangerous chemical wastes in the ground and eight years of scrutiny by environmental protection officials, the Chemtronics plant is getting out of the chemical business.

As of Jan. 1, Chemtronics Inc. doesn't even exist as an operating company.

"We are going to be a lot more responsible company environmentally," said Bob King, vice president of the facility's new operator, Jet Research Center.

Parent company Haliburton Corp. is phasing out Chemtronics and turning the Buncombe County facility over to its Jet Research subsidiary. And with the switch comes a change in production that should please neighbors of the plant concerned about its pollution, King said.

A Jet Research plant near Dallas will be shut down in a month, and all the company's defense and aerospace work will be transferred here, he said. It will make warheads and other explosives for the military, but the processes will not involve the release of dangerous substances into the air and groundwater, he said.

"The stuff we're going to be doing at Chemtronics now will be a lot more environmentally benign than what's been done in the past, because we won't be making any chemicals," King told The Asheville Citizen in a telephone interview from his Dallas office. "We're not going to be dealing with any solvents. We're not going to be dealing with any acids.

"We're not going to have to dispose of spent acids or spent solvents. We're not going to be putting anything into the air or into the sewer that might potentially be a problem when regulations change, as they have in the past. We won't be creating a hazardous waste stream which is common to the chemical business."

King said one motivation for the change is the planned Superfund cleanup ordered by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. The water under the 1,027-acre site is laced with toxic industrial wastes from the production of explosives, tear gas and chemical warfare agents. The plant's current and former owners, Haliburton, Northrop and Celanese, will have pay the tab for the effort to contain the contamination, estimated at more than $5 million.

The production of warheads for the Sidewinder missile is already under way at the Swanannoa plant, King said.

'Buy American' Means Little In Auto Industry

By James Risen
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

DETROIT — It was just a small news item, but it spoke volumes about the state of the world's automotive industry. Peugeot, the item said earlier this month, has formed a joint venture with an industrial company in India to produce French-designed pickup trucks near Bombay.

Peugeot's announcement came the same week that Chrysler disclosed a double-barreled plan not only to link up with Renault of France, but with Hyundai of South Korea as well. Chrysler said it would jointly produce mini utility vehicles with Renault in both Europe and the United States, while Hyundai said it would build mid-size cars for Chrysler in Hyundai's new plant in Canada.

Just the week before that, Toyota of Japan announced that it was seriously considering building passenger cars in Britain.

The globalization of the auto industry — heralded for more than a decade by analysts and industry executives alike — has arrived.

Look to your local Pontiac dealership, where cars are now just as likely to come from Seoul as from Detroit. Consider the Pontiac Le Mans, one of GM's smallest cars. Designed in West Germany, it is assembled in South Korea with parts from around the world, and finally is sold by Pontiac in the United States.

In fact, some cars today are both import and domestic; Cadillac for instance, now builds its Allante bodies in Turin, Italy, and flies them each day to the United States to be attached to their chassis on a final assembly line in Detroit.

It's enough to make people wonder what meaning is left in the phrase "Buy American."

A dizzying array of joint ventures and other production projects spread around the planet is rapidly blurring the lines of demarcation between the major Asian, American and European auto makers.

Trade barriers have done little to stop the trend. If anything, they may have accelerated it as the Japanese and Koreans have scrambled to set up local production operations and form joint ventures around the world to skirt import restrictions.

In the mid-1980s, the Japanese quickly established assembly operations in the United States and Canada, and by next fall will have eight plants up and running in this country; now they are moving fast to do the same in Europe to avoid tough new trade rules when the European Community becomes a true Common Market in 1992.

Nowhere are the results of this internationalization more evident than in the United States.

Indeed, with the industrial giants of Detroit, Tokyo, Paris and Turin working ever closer on new products aimed at the huge American market, it is becoming increasingly difficult for American consumers to tell import from domestic. As a result, old loyalties to American-built products seem to be breaking down.

In fact, American, Japanese and European cars are now often designed in the same styling studios and built in the same plants, and there is growing concern that this sharing of resources and manufacturing prowess is leading to a new sameness in the way cars on the American road look and feel.

To be sure, there is a wider array of product offerings than ever before, thanks to increased competition in the American market. Yet among cars competing head-to-head within the same size and weight classifications, there still seems to be an increasing level of homogeneity of technology, quality and design.

Some analysts and auto executives disagree, however, that the spread of so many interlocking ventures has really led to a high level of cooperation between the Japanese and American auto makers.

They argue that the joint ventures are little more than temporary supply arrangements, and that the companies involved work hard to try to limit the amount of confidential information they exchange with their foreign partners.

"I don't see these joint ventures as anything but extremely opportunistic relationships," says Maryanne Keller, automotive analyst with Furman Selz Mager Dietz & Birney, a New York investment firm. "These ventures are for the most part one-shot events. These companies are in fact competitors, major competitors, and that is a point that cannot be forgotten."

Still, there seems little doubt that these partnerships are on the verge of forcing a dramatic change in the way this nation perceives the car industry. Most notably, the new global networking is quickly turning slogans such as "buy American" and government policies such as restrictions on Japanese imports — into anachronisms.

Analysts acknowledge that the auto industry's expanding international ties have made it increasingly difficult to determine winners and losers and to predict which companies will survive.

But many agree that only a handful of companies, most notably Toyota and Honda, are likely to go it alone in the future.

Instead, some see rival families of paired Asian and American and European companies forming into giant combines to dominate the world's auto industry. The outlines of such families seem to be emerging in some of the joint ventures already under way: Ford and Mazda; Chrysler, Mitsubishi and Renault; GM and its Japanese partners, Isuzu and Suzuki.

"The production processes and the types of technologies that are emphasized in the world should become more similar among companies that are cooperating," notes one former top product planner at General Motors. "I think the technology, designs and processes will come together by groups.

"And, eventually, I think you will see these international partnerships form their own giant spheres of influence."

Europe's Unity Drive May Mean Trouble For U.S. Farmers

By Don Kendall
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The 12-nation European Economic Community is trying to transform itself into a single market by 1992, a unified trading bloc that an Agriculture Department analyst says could mean more trouble for American farmers.

By the end of 1992, the EEC plans to "perfect its internal market and remove further obstacles to the free movement of people, goods, services and capital between the member countries," says Ernest Koenig of the department's Foreign Agricultural Service.

"Although complete integration may be years away, the planned steps in that direction may conflict with U.S. interests," he said. "Tax, labor, business and investment regulations in a single European market undoubtedly will favor (EEC) members."

To what extent such regulations and preferences will affect the United States and other EEC trading partners is unknown at this time.

The move toward an integrated Europe has not met with unanimous approval within the bloc. British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher says she can never accept a United States of Europe.

Although Mrs. Thatcher favors removing barriers that restrict free trade, whe wants EEC borders to remain for security reasons and does not want a single market to lead to a monetary union with a single currency and a central bank after 1992.

But France, West Germany and the nine other countries say the EEC must head for that goal if it is to compete effectively with Japan and the United States.

If there is uncertainty about 1992 and the years after, there is little doubt about the position of the EEC in today's world trade. And there is no mistaking that the 12-nation bloc — even if has some old aches and pains — can flex plenty of muscle.

According to a USDA study several years ago, the 12-member EEC had a population of about 320 million, with 11 million employed in agriculture in 1984. Those represented 8.9 percent of the EEC's civilian employment.

In the United States, with a much smaller population, agricultural employment was 3.32 million in 1984, or 3.2 percent of total civilian employment.

The EEC had 9.8 million farms in 1984, averaging only 42 acres each, compared with 2.3 million farms averaging 438 acres.

A major complaint of U.S. trade people has involved the EEC's protective import system and readiness to subsidize exports as a way of getting rid of surplus production. For years, the United States has sought freer world trade and has complained often about EEC policies.

One of the fears of U.S. trade experts and American producers is that the situation may worsen instead of improve with the coming of the 1992 plan. There would be much to lose.

Recent trade figures speak for themselves. In the fiscal year that ended last Sept. 30, U.S. agricultural exports totaled $35.3 billion. Of the total, shipments to EEC countries were valued at more than $7.5 billion.

Collectively, the EEC is the largest foreign market for American farmers. Japan, at $7.27 billion last year, is the biggest single-country buyer.

Koenig, writing in a new issue of AgExporter, the successor to Foreign Agriculture magazine, said that the United States has encouraged EEC integration but "has stated repeatedly its concern for fair treatment of non-members."

For instance, he said, there is talk among EEC members of requiring identical or equivalent technical and regulatory conditions in non-member countries — called reciprocity — before granting them certain benefits of free access to EEC markets.

"Whatever the shape of things to come, exporters who wish to succeed in a post-1992 environment must pay close attention to developments as they unfold," Koenig said.

But the EEC's long-standing Common Agricultural Policy, which includes support of domestically produced commodities and their protection against foreign goods, has already determined what kind of conditions the United States will face after 1992.

"Internal price supports probably will decline, but import protection and export subsidization are likely to continue," Koenig said. "This scenario could change if the (EEC) adopts a more market-oriented policy in consequence of the Uruguay Round of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade."

Soviets Get New Rights

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — A proposed law published Saturday gives the often defenseless Soviet consumer some new rights in the marketplace, including the power to get defective mechandise repaired or replaced at no cost.

Legal protection for consumers has been so ineffective in the Soviet Union that many national newspapers last year reported the "sensation" of Muscovite Mikhail Makhov's successful battle in court to get his money refunded for a faulty tape recorder, the Tass news agency said.

"People in the U.S.S.R. have long been awaiting the appearance of this legal act," Tass said in a commentary on the new law.

Couples' Stories Show Road To Love Can Start Anywhere

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

The special love experienced between husbands and wives develop against the most ordinary backdrops — college campuses, the beach, hometown neighborhoods.

But those rather common scenes evoke fond memories from five couples this Valentine's Day season as they reminiscence about how they met their spouses.

"I was a senior in college and I and a few other of may friends decided we would be helpful in moving new students into the residence hall," said Richard Eakin, chancellor of East Carolina University. "For one reason or another we picked the women's residence hall" on the Geneva College campus in Beaver Falls, Pa.

"I can remember helping to move her and her belongings when she moved in as a freshman in college," he said. "That was the first time we met and then we were married the next summer."

Richard and Jo Ann Eakin were married in August of 1960 in Beaver Falls and they have two children — Matthew and Maridy.

Evelyn Spangler, a home economist with the Pitt County Agricultural Extension Service, said her husband's cousin introduced them.

"He had just gotten out of the Navy. It was the summer before my senior year in high school. He came down to New Bern from Ohio to spend some time with relatives," she said.

"Paul and I dated three times that summer," Mrs. Spangler said. One of those dates was at the beach, where Mrs. Spangler said she was taking pictures.

"On a picture of him, I thought, 'I better write his name on there. I'm going to remember that name.'

" I hadn't heard of Spangler before," she said.

The following Christmas, Spangler sent his future wife a card. She sent him a New Year's card.

The next Christmas, Mrs. Spangler initiated contact with a card, and Spangler answered with a letter. On Feb. 7, 1958, Spangler picked her up at King's Business College in Raleigh, where she was attending school.

"The day he picked me up in Raleigh, I lived in a boarding home near the capital and I had already brought my suitcases downstairs to the foyer so I could make my grand entrance," Mrs. Spangler said.

She had on gray wool slacks and a white blouse. The sleeves of the red cardigan sweater, which belonged to her roommate, was tied around her shoulders because it was too big.

"He picked me up and we rode to New Bern together," she said. "From then on we started dating," and it wasn't long before Paul decided to move to New Bern.

The Spanglers were married there on March 22, 1959.

The beach figured into the marriage of Jean Carter and her husband, too. The South Greenville School librarian identified her future spouse as the handsome gentleman on the beach.

She and her family had gone to Shady View Beach near Hollow for a Sunday School picnic on July 15, 1965.

When it was time to leave, her father's Buick would not crank, so Mrs. Carter went back to the beach to wade while her dad tried to fix the car. She was wearing pink pants and a blouse to match.

Mrs. Carter remembered that a "gentleman" dressed in green pants and a gold shirt approached her and asked, "Haven't I seen you someplace before, or some corny line," Mrs. Carter said. "It was a nothing line."

"But, it worked," said Greenville Mayor Ed Carter.

"He did get my address and phone number," Mrs. Carter admitted.

The couple dated three weeks before Carter left to serve in the Army as a first lieutenant. They corresponded until January, 1966, when Carter took an emergency leave to attend his grandfather's funeral.

While Carter was at home, he and Mrs. Carter were married. They exchanged vows Jan. 17, 1966 in Greenville.

The Carters have three daughters — Regina, Tonya and Jackie.

The Elizabeth City State University campus was the scene of Farney and Sudie Moore's meeting.

Jo Linda Sanders fell for William, a neighbor boy

"We met when I was a college junior at Elizabeth City State University," said Moore, a Pitt County commissioner. "She was a freshman at that time. We met in the library."

"That's a long time with one guy," Mrs. Moore said of her 44½-year marriage. Wed Aug. 30, 1945 in Pitt County, the Moores have six children — Matthew, Susan, Daphne, Aissa, Sharon and Brent.

Jo Linda Sanders didn't have to go away from home to find her husband. The owner of Landmaster's Realty said she didn't realize her true love would be Paul, the boy across the street.

"I was 10 and he was 12," Ms. Sanders said. "I don't think either one of us ever thought we would marry each other. We were just kids and our brothers played together.

"Occasionally, we would go for Sunday walks — the four of us," she said.

"We loss contact for a while and we got back up with each other while I was in college," she said. "He came up to Howard (University) because I was there. He had just gotten out of the military.

"I was graduating from college and he was just starting. He convinced me not leave Washington, D.C. and stay there and marry him," Mrs. Sanders said.

And married they were, on Oct. 16, 1971 in Waterbury, Conn. They have one son, Muhammad.

"It's an interesting thing to have known someone as long as we have known each other," Mrs. Sanders said. "You don't have a lot of secrets."

'We Get 'Em,' Says Repo Man

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FAYETTEVILLE — The telephone rings in Billy Whittenton Jr.'s office. A Florida bank needs a car repossessed in North Carolina. Can Whittenton do the job?

He doesn't have the words printed on his business cards, but his unofficial slogan is "We get 'em."

Whittenton's company, Security Adjustment Service Inc., is the last resort of banks, credit companies and other agencies that aren't receiving payments on big-ticket items like cars and boats.

Whittenton says his job makes him unpopular with some people, but he doesn't like the image of a bad guy. The way he sees it, he performs a public service.

"I'm not in this business to make friends. And like my father always said, if you don't pay for it, you don't need to ride in it," Whittenton says.

At 26, he knows the ins and outs of the repossession business. His father started Security Adjustment 15 years ago, and Whittenton used to ride with him to pick up vehicles when he was a boy. He considers his father a role model.

"He could talk a car out of anyone," says Whittenton. Most "repo men" don't want any trouble, says Whittenton. Most of their jobs are relatively easy. A bank may give him an address and telephone number and instruct him to call the owner to tell him when he's coming to his house. Whittenton already has copies of a vehicle's title and registration. All he needs are the keys before he takes the car away.

But many vehicle owners aren't so friendly. Whittenton has found the element of surprise works best with those who don't readily agree to give up their cars. Still, if Whittenton has a good address, "that's a start."

If the person he's looking for has moved or is hiding, there's extra work to be done.

In the repo business it's called "skip tracing," and it boils down to basic detective investigation — finding out where the person lives, works or shops for groceries. Difficult customers have gone into a Winn-Dixie to shop for dinner and come out to find their cars gone. The more savvy ones don't bother to report them stolen. They know what happened.

As in most fields, there are technological developments in the repo business. Whittenton is enthusiastic about his new tow trucks. They can be backed up to a car, and, with a flick of a switch, clamped to a bumper without the driver even getting out. Whittenton knows by experience it's best to get the car in possession before confronting the soon-to-be ex-owner.

"You pick it up, talk to them later," he says. Before a driver tows the car away he'll ask the owner to remove personal items from the car. Most oblige, even though they're often angry.

But if an owner orders him off his property — which is his legal right — the repo man returns later and simply takes the vehicle. On particularly difficult jobs, Whittenton or his employees will keep track of the owner until the right opportunity arises.

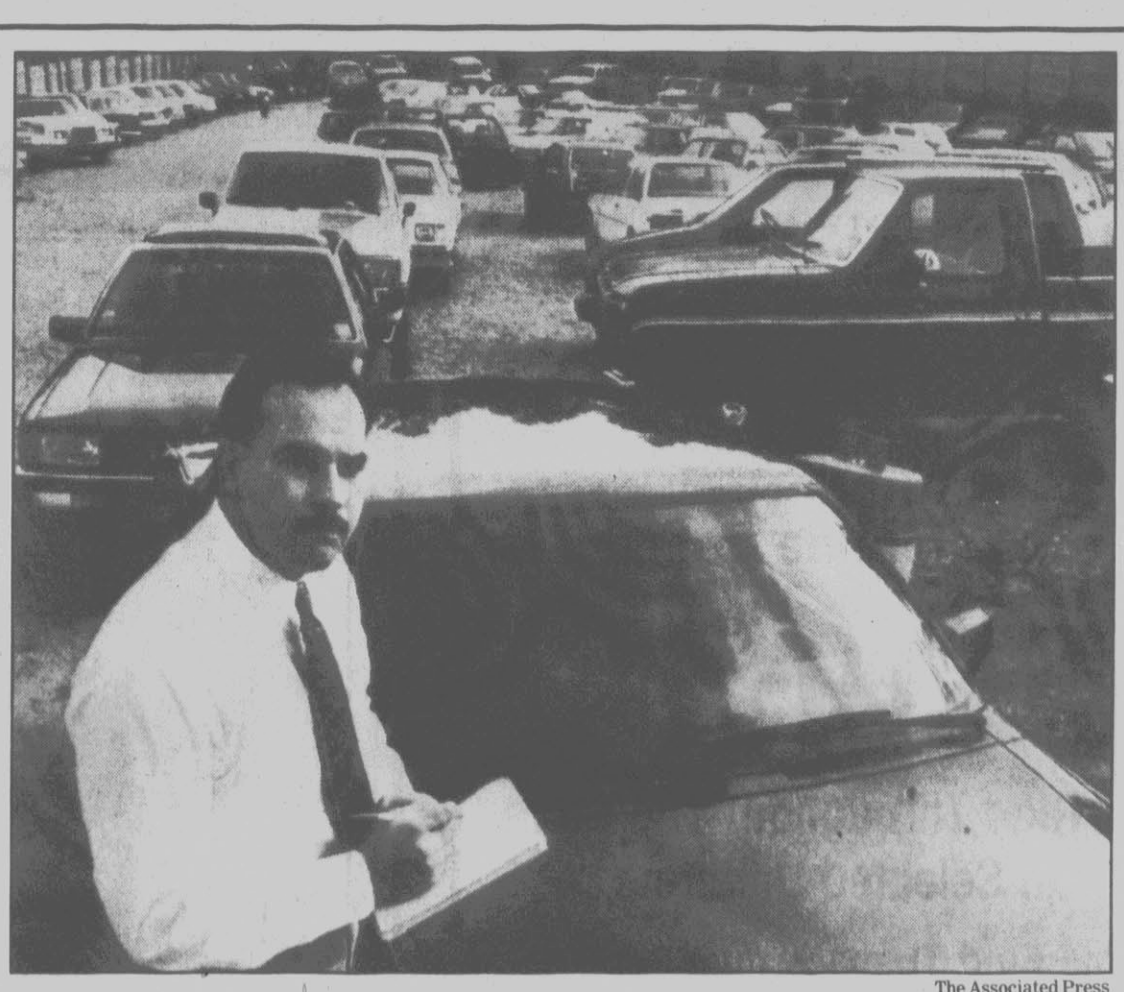

"With this new type of tow truck, no one gets hit in the face. No one's blood pressure rises," he says.

The majority of jobs take a couple of days at most, he says.

Whittenton can store the confiscated car at his business (for security reasons the company doesn't even have a sign in front) or take it wherever the bank wants.

So far Whittenton has never been hurt on the job.

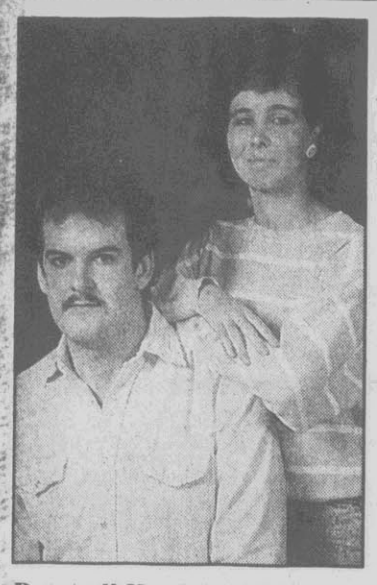

"There's an element of danger, but it doesn't have to be there if you're careful," he says.

Wedding Guidelines

The Daily Reflector requests a black-and-white, glossy photograph for each engagement and wedding announcement.

For those announcements scheduled for a Sunday edition, engagement information myst be submitted by noon on the preceding Wednesday. Engagement pictures must be released at least three weeks prior to the wedding date. If the wedding is sooner than three weeks away, only an announcement will be printed.

Wedding write-ups will be printed through the first and second weeks with a photograph. During the second week, the write up will give less description. After the second week, the newspaper will publish an announcement only.

Wedding forms, available at The Daily Reflector, should be returned to the newspaper at least one week before the date of the wedding. All information should be typed or written neatly.

Tips Help Cooks Find Perfection

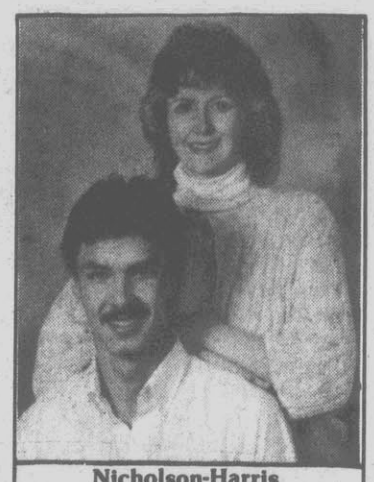

NEW YORK (AP) — Baking delicious desserts can really be a piece of cake — just as long as you follow the recipe.

Pastry chef Flo Braker, who is also a California caterer, food consultant and author, gives some personal tips in Family Circle magazine.

— Preheat oven 15 to 20 minutes before baking: This ensures even heat distribution and prevents uneven cooking.

— Use a warm, not hot, liquid to dissolve and activate yeast: Liquid over 110 degrees will destroy the yeast cultures.

— Store nuts in the freezer: They should be kept in an airtight container.

Nicholson-Harris

Mrs. Doris Nicholson of Bethel announces the engagement of her daughter, Carol Mechelle Nicholson, to Robert Paul Harris, son of Mr. and Mrs. James R. Sutton of Greenville. The wedding is planned for February 25.

Her Charming Man Turns Out To Be Another Two-Bit Romeo

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: I met a charming man at my high school reunion. We had both lost our mates, and had been living in the same city for 30 years and never knew it. He invited me out for dinner. He was a terrific dancer, and I had a delightful time. We had so much in common and hit it off immediately.

He started calling me every morning to find out if I had any plans for the day. Sometimes he'd take me to lunch and we'd go for a drive. He was retired and very well-to-do. We both had grown children with families, so I wasn't available all the time and neither was he. We took several trips together and things were going very well, romantically speaking — but when I was at his home several times his phone would ring and he'd say, "I have company now — I'll call you later." I never thought anything of it.

Then, one night, he called me about 1 o'clock in the morning to say he was having chest pains. I rushed over to his place and drove him to the hospital. He died 16 hours later. I was devastated.

At his funeral, a well-meaning friend of his pointed out a nice-looking woman, my age, who said she was his "fiancee." I couldn't believe it, so I called up this woman to hear her story firsthand.

It seems this man had been courting her before he met me. When I was out of town, he was with her. She told me he had planned to break up with me right after Christmas, marry her in April, and buy her two homes — one in Colorado and the other in Arizona! He had taken her on weekend trips to the same places he had taken me! There's more: He had given us identical Christmas presents!

Abby, what a way to find out how slick this two-timing Romeo was! I never would have believed it if it hadn't happened to me. Needless to say, my grief was short-lived. — In Shock In Colorado

Dear In: And people ask me if I make up these letters! Poor "Romeo." No wonder his heart gave out.

Dear Abby: As a surgeon who has performed thousands of vasectomies, I routinely ask the patient's wife to sign a consent form. I feel that this is not an unreasonable request since I am performing a procedure that involves the family. One particular case comes to mind, which is my reason for writing to you.

I normally have a 10-15 minute consultation with my patient and his spouse to explain the procedure, answer any questions, and have them sign the consent form.

In this case, the couple came to my office for the consultation, signed the consent form, and the patient was scheduled for surgery. Due to the fact that I was tied up in an emergency, I asked my secretary to telephone the patient's home early in the morning and inform him not to come to the hospital for the scheduled surgery because I would not be able to see him.

My secretary was quite surprised when my patient's wife said she did not know anything about any "vasectomy" her husband had scheduled. She also stated that she had never been in my office with him to sign any "consent forms"! The wife suggested that our office call her husband at his place of employment to cancel his operation and have him call her at home immediately.

Needless to say, the patient was never seen for his scheduled vasectomy, and we never heard from him again. — Michael A. Polacek, M.D., Milwaukee

Couple Wed By Candlelight

MRS. KNIGHT

The candlelight wedding of Jewel Faye Taft of Greenville and William Arthur Knight of Alexandria, Va., took place Saturday at 6 p.m.

Bishop T.L. Davis performed the double-ring ceremony in Progressive Free Will Baptist Church. Organist Barry Dixon and vocalist Marshall V. Taylor presented wedding music.

Daughter of Bernice Taft of Baltimore, Md., and Evelyn Taft of Greenville, the bride was given in marriage by her parents. The bridegroom is the son of the late Georgianna Knight and Columbus Boyd.

Bridal attendants were Kathryn Maye of Greenville, maid of honor; Belinda Council of Greenville, matron of honor; and bridesmaids, Agnes Luster of Baltimore, sister of the bride; Theresa Walker of Washington, D.C., daughter of the bridegroom; Mary Baker and Delores Tyson, both of Greenville.

Christin Hemby of Greenville was flower girl and Ryan Luster of Baltimore, nephew of the bride, was ring bearer.

Robert Atkinson of Clinton, Md., was best man. Groomsmen included Maurice Knight of Alexandria, son of the bridegroom, Melvin Taft of Baltimore, brother of the bride, Willie E. Gaskins of White Plains, N.Y., nephew of the bridegroom, Leon Luster Jr. of Baltimore, brother-in-law of the bride, and Herman Whitley of Washington, D.C., cousin of the bridegroom.

The bride wore a formal gown of white satin. The bodice, accented with jeweled alencon lace, featured a sweetheart neckline and long fitted sleeves with alencon lace inserts. The basque waistline fell to a circular skirt and chapel train bordered with lace. She wore a chapel-length veil shaped in a V, laced with pearls and attached to a beaded tiara of pearls and sequins. The bride carried a silk cascade bouquet of white roses, baby's breath, stephanotis and daisies tied with matching streamers.

The attendants wore red satin gowns with chantilly lace overlays. The necklines were scoop and the sleeves were Renaissance design. The bodices were blouson and had fitted cummerbunds. The hemlines were high-low. Each wore a spray of baby's breath in their hair and carried a white long-stemmed silk mum with matching streamers. The flower girl carried a white wicker basket tied with matching streamers.

The mother of the bride wore a red chiffon dress with a dropped waistline. Gladys Gaskins of Stanford, Conn., sister of the bridegroom, sat in honor of their mother.

Shirley Williams of Greenville directed the ceremony.

An after-rehearsal dinner was given by the bride's family at the home. The bride was also honor at a miscellaneous shower.

The couple will live in Alexandria after a wedding trip to Barbados.

The bridegroom is self-employed.

Dressed, But Not Dancing

At Wits End

Erma Bombeck

You never know what you really elect to the White House until little bits and pieces start to fall into place.

A pork rind here ... a fishing pole there ... until you have a composite of the man who is going to set the style for this country for the next four years.

President Bush and his vice president waited until the day of the inaugural balls to drop their bombs. Neither of them dances.

There they were — two college boys in full tuxedo with knockout dates in dresses that cost more than our first car, with 13 balls, 13 orchestras and the eyes of the entire world on them, and they say, "We don't dance." So, what did they think they were doing there? Judging a cow-chip throwing competition?

OK, so neither of them ran on a dirty dancing platform, but you'd have thought one of them would have been briefed on how important it is to restore romance to the American social scene.

Men have been getting by with this for years. They know women love to dance. It's a feminine trait to want to dress up and glide across the floor so everyone can see what you're wearing. Before women get married, their men dance their legs off. As the music starts up at the wedding reception, the first thing they hear is, "You don't want to dance, do you?"

My husband starts when he hears the music from the parking lot. "Oh God, there's music. You didn't tell me that."

"What did you expect to dance to? Bird calls?"

"I don't want to sit right next to the band," he announces. "Let's get a table away from the noise."

It won't matter. The moment I suggest we get on the dance floor, he slowly pushes his chair away from the table and with great effort rises to his feet. "What's the matter?" I ask.

"It's nothing."

"What do you mean it's nothing? I can't dance with a man who is bent over like a coffee table."

"It's just my hip."

"The same hip you ran a 10K with this morning? The same hip you played two sets of tennis with? The same hip you rode a bicycle ..."

As he takes a deep breath and straightens, he displays yet another talent. I don't know how he does it, but from the moment the song starts, he adjusts his underwear, stops to visit with a few friends on the way to the floor, rebuttons his coat, and by the time I lift my arms to glide into his, the music magically ends and the orchestra takes a break. It's a gift.

What have President Bush and Vice President Quayle done that's so bad? you might ask. They have given the men of America permission for another four years to stand around at a dance as if they're attending a truck-pulling competition, that's what they've done.

As for women, we wait and we plan. Punch, anyone?

Little-Smith Pair Wed On Saturday Afternoon

MRS. LITTLE

Robbe Anne Smith and Timothy Earl Little, both of Greenville, were married Saturday at 3 p.m. in Grace Church.

The double-ring ceremony was conducted by the Rev. Ed Walker. Susan Forlines and Jon Forlines presented wedding music.

Parents of the bridal couple are Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Smith and Brenda Little and Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Little, all of Greenville.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. Her honor attendant was Hollie Hardison-Stump of Wilmington, Del. Bridesmaids included Lisa Smith Jones and Bette Elaine Smith, sisters of the bride, Wendi Somers and Alesia Forlines, all of Greenville, and Tanya Elks of Ayden.

The father of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers included Mark Taylor, Tony Little, brother of the bridegroom, Timmy Stancil, step-brother of the bridegroom, Eddie Robinson and Aaron Williams, all of Greenville.

The bride wore a formal gown of bridal satin featuring a modified wedding band collar adorned with re-embroidered alencon lace and pearls. Matching lace trimmed the fitted bodice, sweetheart neckline and bishop sleeves. The full, circular skirt had motifs of lace, pearls and sequins on the front extending around to the cathedral-length train. Her double-layered ruffled illusion veil was attached to a bandeau of silk rosettes and pearl sprays. She carried a cascade of white silk roses, mauve alstromeria, seed pearls with white lace and picot streamers.

The matron of honor wore a ballerina-length gown in daphne satin with short, pouf sleeves worn off-shoulder. The bodice was fitted and sheered at the waistline with a satin bow and rhinestones at the hip. She carried an arm bouquet of white roses and rubrum lilies with mauve alstromeria tied with white and mauve satin ribbon. Bridesmaids were dressed identically.

The flower girl wore a tea-length dress of pink satin with a white lace overskirt. White satin roses trimmed the high yoke. She carried a miniature basket of white and pink silk flowers.

April Hardison passed out long-stemmed satin roses filled with bird seed.

A reception was held in the church fellowship hall and was given by the bride's parents. The bridegroom's parents entertained at an after-rehearsal dinner. The bride's aunt and grandmother gave a bridesmaids luncheon. Several miscellaneous showers and a lingerie shower were given. A social for the couple was given by the bridegroom's father and stepmother.

The couple will live in Greenville after a wedding trip to a ski resort in Maggie Valley and Orlando, Fla.

The bride is employed by Pitt County Memorial Hospital. She attended East Carolina University. Both are graduates of D.H. Conley High School. He is attending Pitt Community College.

Ceremony Joins Pair Saturday

WINTERVILLE — Debra Anne Daniels and Willie Lee Neal Jr. were married Saturday at 4 p.m. in a double-ring ceremony.

Dr. W.H. Mitchell conducted the ceremony in Good Hope Free Will Baptist Church. Loudell Greene and Wren Locke presented wedding music.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Lee Daniels of Winterville, and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Willie Lee Neal Sr. of Wilson.

Gloria Boyd of Greenville was matron of honor. Bridesmaids included Jeannette Henderson of Greenville, Annette Waller and Vanessa Best, both of Winterville, all cousins of the bride, Lillie Edwards and Cynthia Pender of Wilson, aunts of the bridegroom.

Flower girls were Adrianne Waller and Tramaine Best. Julius Daniels of Winterville, son of the bride, was ring bearer.

MRS. NEAL

The bridegroom's father served as best man. Ushers included Tim Neal of Greenville and Boris Neal of Raleigh, cousins of the bridegroom, Rodney Daniels, brother of the bride, and David Patrick, both of Winterville, and Lawrence Greene of Greenville, cousin of the bride.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a white formal gown of taffeta. The sweetheart neckline was adorned with seed pearls and sequins. The bodice had chantilly-type lace appliques. The three-quarter sleeves were accented by bows and ruffles. The basque waistline extended into an A-line skirt with a cathedral trimmed with lace and miniature ruffles. She wore a Juliet cap trimmed with seed pearls and floral appliques attached to a two-tiered, fingertip veil.

The honor attendant wore a royal blue tea-length gown of sheer lace over satin with a front scoop neckline. The neckline and basque waistline were highlighted with satin piping trim. She wore a royal blue and white headpiece and carried a bouquet of white carnations.

Bridesmaids were dressed identically. The flower girls wore white tea-length gowns of lace over satin with royal sashes and bows at the hemline. Each carried a basket of flowers.

The couple will live in Greenville.

The bride is employed at Eastern Carolina Surgical Center in Greenville and the bridegroom works at Nucor Machine Products in Wilson.

The family of the bridegroom gave an after-rehearsal dinner. Several showers were given by friends and family.

Christina Lynn Jensen became the bride of James Thurman Freeze Jr. in a wedding conducted Saturday at St. James United Methodst Church.

The Rev. Caswell Shaw conducted the 7 p.m. double-ring ceremony.

Parents of the couple are Jack E. Jensen and Dorothy R. Jensen, both of Greenville, and Mr. and Mrs. J. Thurman Freeze Sr. of Greensboro.

The bride wore an ivory satin gown with a wedding-band neckline and a sheer yoke with a fringe of pearls. Her fitted bodice and Gibson girl sleeves were heavily beaded. The front of the skirt has a large motif of lace and pearl. Lace and beading were appliqued to the detachable train. Her illusion waist-length veil was attached to a lace, pearl and sequin band with a spray of pearls on the side.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. Her matron of honor was her sister, Jacqueline Sullivan of Greenville; her bridesmaid, Elizabeth Freeze, sister of the bridegroom, of Greensboro. Each of them wore a full-length garnet-colored gown with three-quarter sleeves and a dropped waist and hip bow.

The best man was the bridegroom's father.

Music was provided by Frances Cain, organist.

A reception was held the Courtney Square Clubhouse. The bride was honored with a dinner party at River Forest Manor in Belhaven and by a shower in Greensboro.

After a wedding trip to the North Carolina mountains, Charleston, S.C. and Savannah, Ga., the couple will live in Jacksonville, Fla.

The couple attended East Carolina University.

Misdiagnosis In Children Occurs Often

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

Each year, children and their parents pay more than 100 million visits to doctors. Fast and accurate diagnoses are important for young patients who can go from being mildly to extremely ill much more quickly than adults.

But according to Dr. Donald W. Schiff, president of the American Academy of Family Physicians, "misdiagnosis in children is a very important problem." Why? Because young children often lack immunological reserves. To make matters worse, there are no conclusive diagnostic tests for many childhood diseases. Adding to the problem, symptoms may not be clearly defined during the early stages of children's illnesses. And very young children may not be able to say exactly where it hurts.

Parents can help by following some simple procedures and diagnostic rules outlined in Ladies' Home Journal.

Taking a child's temperature is an important step. Call the doctor if a child six months old or younger has a temperature over 100 degrees F. For children older than six months, call if it's 101 degrees F or higher.

Count the breaths a sick child takes per minute, counting one inhalation and exhalation as a breath. Sixty breaths per minute is normal for newborns; 50 for one-year-olds; 40 for two-year-olds; 24 for children six and over. Rapid, noisy or labored breathing may signal pneumonia, asthma or other respiratory illnesses.

Watch for changes in appearance. Paleness may mean anemia; yellowish skin may indicate jaundice. Loss of appetite can also be a sign of illness, especially if other symptoms are present.

Be sure to ask a child when a pain started, where and how often it hurts. In preverbal children, persistent crying may indicate an infectious disease or gastrointestinal illness.

Be alert to repeated episodes of vomiting. In older children, recurrent vomiting may be a sign of serious conditions. A baby who vomits more than once a day may have a digestive tract infection. Vomiting may be the indication of other serious problems, especially if a baby is also lethargic or feverish.

Diabetes Testing Needed

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KALAMAZOO, Mich. — Barely half the nation's adults have been tested in the past year for diabetes — the third leading killer disease.

A survey by the Gallup Organization — commissioned by Upjohn Co. — found that 48.5 percent of the 1,004 adults questioned had not followed the call for annual blood screening made last year by the American Diabetes Association and the National Institutes of Health. People over 40, overweight and with a family history of diabetes are targeted as most at risk.

An estimated 12 million Americans have diabetes but only half know it. Left untreated, diabetes can damage blood vessels and nerves, leading to kidney disease, gangrene and blindness in addition to heart attack and stroke.

Dr. Arthur Krosnick, editor of Diabetes Forecast, says, "Non-insulin-dependent diabetes, which accounts for 80 to 90 percent of all diabetes, commonly develops in adults slowly and without symptoms."

Programs Help Retarded Find Normal Lives

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BLYTHE, Ga. — Just above the sizzling sputter of hot grease on a flame, you can hear Kenny Giles singing to himself.

The tune is hard to place, but the tempo is unmistakable. It's the upbeat rhythm of a man who is busy at work.

He pulls Whopper-sized patties from a freezer and places them on a grill that's rolling like a conveyor belt into a shiny steel box. He places soft white buns on a toasting belt below.

As hot, dripping burgers steam out the opposite end of the broiler, Kenny lays each one on a golden bun, pops on a seeded top and whisks it into a steamer. Then he steps back to the front of the broiler and begins the process again.

Kenny likes to be busy. The busier the better. It's like he's making up for lost time.

"I like working," he said without lifting his eyes from the task. "I like that better than sitting around doing nothing."

When Kenny was 8 years old, he was admitted to the Gracewood State School and Hospital for the mentally ill and retarded.

He lived there for 25 years.

Today, at age 44, the smiling man with shy brown eyes lives with a home provider in Blythe, and holds a part-time job at Burger King.

Kenny's parents placed him in Gracewood after doctors said their mentally retarded son might become violent at a later age. The year was 1952, and the general medical opinion of the times was that anyone who was mentally retarded needed to be institutionalized. By 1968 there were 1,855 residents at Gracewood.

Today there are about 650. Now, community options like home health care providers and regional mental health centers allow clients with good functional skills to return to the community and reside in the least restrictive environment possible.

"It's basically the result of increased knowledge about the mentally retarded and increased emphasis on the rights of mentally retarded persons," said Gracewood Superintendent Dr. Joanne Miklas. "There is a general trend across the country to view all exceptional people as people first and to embrace principals of normalization, which means providing the opportunity for people to live as normally as they can."

The state classifies Kenny as moderately retarded. Although qualities vary with each individual, a moderately retarded person would have fair intelligence skills but probably better socialization and communication skills.

Since he left Gracewood 11 years ago, a normal life for Kenny has meant residing with home providers — people in the community who accept a person with mental retardation into their home and provide room and board at a state approved reimbursement rate.

Kenny spent nine years with his first home provider, an Augusta couple who recently retired and moved to Florida.

Since September, he has lived with Williefred and Wayne Luckey on their 168-acre farm in Blythe, where they raise Missouri Fox Trotting horses.

Kenny is one of five former Gracewood residents living with the Luckeys. It's a family-like atmosphere where laughter is the most often heard sound and everybody gets a hug when they need one.

Kenny helps feed the horses most evenings and does weekly chores in the house like dusting and cleaning. But three days a week he works away from home. Through an employment program offered by the local mental health support center, Kenny got a job at Burger King.

"Kenny is special to us because he's the first fellow we got out in community placement," said Rick Derby, director of the Richmond County Development Service Center, a program of the Community Mental Health Center of East Central Georgia.

The center has placed eight working clients in locations including Burger King, McDonalds, Hardees, Bi-Lo and LeBayou Cookery.

Derby said the jobs are selected to match each person's interests and level of academic functioning. Usually the jobs lend themselves to the development of a daily routine.

"We don't look for the jobs that nobody else would want," Derby said. "We look for jobs that we'd work in ourselves."

A representative of the center, called a work adjustment training instructor, does the job alongside the client for the first few days,

Betty Rhodes, who worked with the service center for 13 years, donned a Burger King uniform to coach Kenny in his new job.

"The job coach teaches the job and then backs off as they learn the process so they can do it independently," she said. "The employer told me what he wanted Kenny to do and as he learned I would go off for an hour or two and come back. Eventually he did it on his own."

Kenny does occasional cooking and performs daily maintenance tasks.

"I sweep the parking lot, take out boxes and stuff, clean up, and sweep and mop in here sometimes," he said, pointing to the tiled floor beneath his feet.

"He's a real outstanding worker," said Darryl Brooks, an assistant manager at Burger King. "He knows what needs to be done."

Since Kenny started working, Derby and others have seen changes in him.

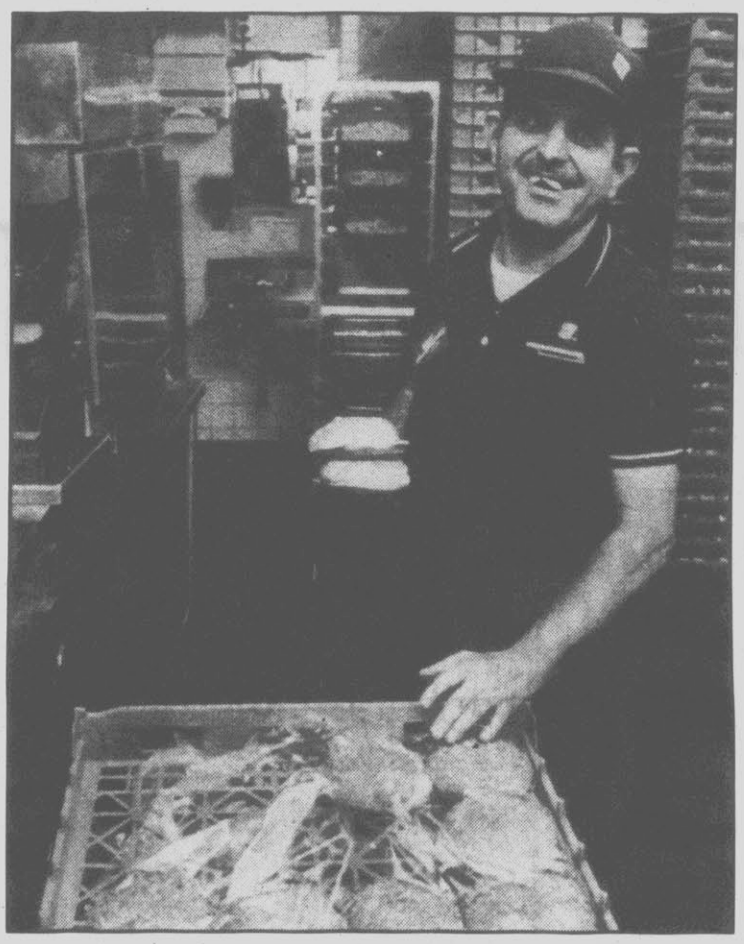

"We've noticed a lot more independence in Kenny and probably more than anything just plain maturity," Derby said.

"When Kenny attended the center every day, he wasn't nearly as verbal and he just kind of blended in. But now that he has had the opportunity to get out in the community he has really bloomed. He presents himself in a much more mature and adult manner."

Mrs. Rhodes has noticed a desire in Kenny to learn new things.

"He has learned how to dial home. We tried to teach that to him previously, but now he himself sees that need and has requested to learn his number, " she said. "He seems happier, well adjusted and well pleased. He's got a sense of pride and accomplishment.

"I'm real excited about out progress," she added. "I think we've sheltered our mentally handicapped for too long. There's a lot of things they can do. It's good they're finally getting the opportunity to prove themselves."

Submarine Builder's Spirits Take A Dive

By Bill Kaczor
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SPRINGFIELD, Fla. — The Beatles could only dream and sing about living on a "Yellow Submarine." Ralph Gordon has built the real thing.

The 41-year-old former Kentucky computer company owner is making final modifications on the 36-foot, eight-passenger Dolphin I in this suburb of Panama City in Florida's Panhandle.

The changes include a coat of yellow paint over the sub's formerly white exterior.

The submarine then will be turned over to a buyer, Nibra Water Sports N.V. of Curacao, which plans to take vacationers on undersea tours off that Caribbean island.

Although the first sub is sold and at least one other customer is waiting in line, Gordon isn't happily humming the spritely Beatles' tune as he works.

"I am probably one of the most frustrated people in the country right now," Gordon said. "I can't find any investors who've got guts enough to put their money in something that's going to make a lot of money."

Without investors or lenders willing to take a plunge on Gordon's Plongee Co., Dolphin I may be Dolphin Last.

Industry analysts have predicted a $250 million market with more than 100 passenger submarines around the world within a few years. But no U.S. companies are making them and only four are doing it elsewhere: two in Canada and one each in Finland and Scotland, Gordon said.

The foreign companies are focusing on larger vessels capable of carrying two or three times as many passengers as Dolphin I. Gordon said he wants to build small, 10-passenger subs that would be ideal for individual resorts and figures he could sell about 10 of them now for $1 million each if he had them.

Gordon said he has a letter of intent from a potential buyer in the Cayman Islands for $6 million worth of submarines but doesn't have the capital to build them. The order will go to the Finnish company, he said.

The Associated Press

Sub builder Ralph Gordon and the Dolphin I

Gordon complained that American investors are "not interested in innovation and they are not interested in taking any risk."

He is hoping that will change when he shows off the sub during a couple weeks of final testing later this month.

Gordon financed Dolphin I with $300,000 out of his own pocket after selling his computer company in Louisville, Ky.

His submarine-building venture was an outgrowth of his long interest in scuba diving and a wish to get away from the pressures of his former job.

"I decided if I stayed in the computer business I would die of a stress-induced heart attack," Gordon said.

His goal as a student at Kentucky Wesleyan College in his native Owensboro, Ky., was to become a marine biologist.

But Gordon quit college after three years, got married and went into the auto parts business in Owensboro. Ten years later he sold his two parts stores and began the computer business in Louisville.

He got the idea of a submarine while vacationing and scuba diving in the Cayman Islands four or five years ago. At that time no passenger subs were operating there.

Gordon, however, didn't dive into submarine building without first testing the waters.

"If somebody hasn't done something there's generally a reason," Gordon said.

But he couldn't find one, particularly after discovering someone had done it at the 1964 World's Fair in Geneva, Switzerland. A 150-ton submarine was used to take 60 or 70 fair visitors at a time on tours of Lake Geneva. The sub is now idle in a Houston boatyard.

His next step was learning how to build one.

"There are not any how-to books," he said. "'How to Build Your Backyard Submarine' is not there."

He was able to find enough information in libraries to learn submarines operate on elementary principles of physics and that most parts could be purchased off the shelf. The sub's controls are derived from equipment normally used in chemical plants and its hull is a pressure vessel of the kind used for boilers and chemical storage tanks.

Dolphin I operates the same way as a World War II submarine, using a diesel engine for surface cruising and battery-powered electric motors for underwater operation.

It is designed to dive to 200 feet, but there's no need to go below 40 or 50 feet because light fades rapidly at greater depths, Gordon said.

The vessel isn't heavy enough to submerge without using diving planes and the motors to literally drive it under water. If the motors fail it bobs to the surface, Gordon said. Nevertheless, it has enough air to keep eight passengers and two crew members alive for 72 hours,

Gordon spent 18 months building the sub in Louisville before shipping it to the Virgin Islands where he tested and learned to operate it for about six months last year.

"That was seat of your pants, also," Gordon said. "I figured if I could build it, I could operate it."

Everything worked pretty much as planned and the sub was brought to the Panama City area where Gordon hoped to set up a manufacturing facility.

His 17-year-old daughter made the move with Gordon, but his wife, a real estate broker, and two other daughters remain in Kentucky. He said he goes home as often as he can, but admits to an aversion to cold weather.

The Panhandle is ideally suited for submarine building because the relatively calm Gulf of Mexico is a good place for test runs, labor costs are low and the area needs new industry, Gordon said.

However, the submarine factory never materialized. Work on the Dolphin I is done in an open lot near a paper mill.

If Gordon cannot find the financing to build more submarines, he said he'll probably buy a sailboat and run day trips in the Virgin Islands.

"I'll live on dead fish and seaweed before I go back in the computer business," he vowed.

An Unusual Vessel

NEW YORK (AP) — Capt. Henry Griffin has been in command of an unusual vessel since 1976.

The 70-ton Cable Queen, owned by New York Telephone, is used to lay underwater cables in the waters around New York City and elsewhere.

Griffin, 59, said the ship, which sometimes carries a diver, is the only one of its kind in the U.S. It has laid more than 100,000 miles of cable since it was launched in 1951.

BETSY DRAKE LEWIS' DECORATING TIPS

· DRAMATIC DECORATING

Yes, you can have beautiful, exciting decor in your home by using some of the principles of dramatic decorating.

One of the ways to achieve dramatic decorating is the addition of one really outstanding piece of furniture to perk up the room and bring new excitement to it.

Or, how about a new color?

Or, some outstanding new accessories.

Or, how about a new mixture of furnishings? You know, one of the great trends in home furnishings is the freedom to mix--the use of specific pieces of furniture to improve a room, with only certain restraints. It is what one decorator has called "disciplined freedom." That is, the freedom of being able to mix differing furnishings but with the discipline of harmony and good taste, or eclecticism.

In this way, you can add dramatic highlights to your rooms and assemble the exact kind of things you like.

By using some dramatic decorating, you can create attractive, warm, appealing interiors for your home. And, remember we are here to help you with both the furnishings and the ideas.

We will be closed Feb. 13 thru Feb. 18. Watch for our fabulous February closeout sale beginning Feb. 20.

Relocating Sea Otters Stirs West Coast Furor

By Mercer Cross
NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. — Sea otter is their name and shellfish is their game.

Lovable little creatures they are to most people, the smallest marine mammals, floating on their backs in kelp beds off the central California coast, using rocks to noisily crack crustacea cradled on their chests.

Lovable they are not to divers and fishermen, with whom they compete for their shellfish diet. To their competitors, they are voracious and efficient predators of such delicacies as clams, abalones, sea urchins, mussels, crabs and lobsters.

Their role in the economy and ecology of the West Coast stands at the center of a bitter, long-running dispute that may go on for years.

Sea otters once prospered off the California shore, numbering 16,000 to 20,000. But their rich fur made beautiful coats, and hunters drove them close to extinction.

In 1913, the state banned their killing and over the years they have made a slow comeback. In 1977, under federal law, they were declared a threatened population. Today, California's otters total more than 1,700.

Still, concern for their survivability lingers. Part of the concern has to do with the danger of an eventual large oil spill from one of the huge tankers that ply the coastal waters. Clean fur is an insulator in the cold Pacific. Oil can destroy that insulation and cause the otters to die of exposure.

Faced with that eventuality, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, in cooperation with state agencies, decided to start a new colony of sea otters, away from tankers and ocean oil rigs, as a kind of insurance policy.

Translocation, it's called. San Nicolas Island, a Navy-owned barrier island about 70 miles offshore from Los Angeles and 200 miles south of the otters' established habitat, was chosen for their new home. Waters around the island offer abundant shellfish, particularly large lobsters.

At a cost of more than $1 million, 69 sea otters were captured and shipped south by plane during the program's first year, starting in August 1987. Only 14 are known to have stayed. Others died, disappeared, or swam back home.

Jim Estes, a Fish and Wildlife Service biologist stationed at the University of California at Santa Cruz, acknowledges some disappointment.

"Certainly we've learned a number of things which indicate that, although we still believe we will be able to do this, to establish a population through translocation is going to be more difficult than we originally expected," he told National Geographic. "The principal problem we've encountered is a strong tendency, particularly on the part of adult animals, to return to where they were captured."

Because of this problem, during the second year of the program biologists are relocating only younger otters, which they hope will stay at San Nicolas. But of the 29 moved since August, nine are unaccounted for.

Opponents of translocation remain adamant. "This thing is a hoax," says Steven L. Rebuck of San Luis Obispo, Calif., an abalone mariculturist, son of an abalone fisherman, and spokesman for a coalition called Save Our Shellfish. "It's a tremendous injustice to the public, to the fishermen, and to the otter itself."

Rebuck and other opponents argue the sea otter is not as threatened as its advocates have made it out to be; that it would be better protected through an effective management program on California's central coast; and that, if translocation is necessary, otters could be brought in from thriving North Pacific colonies such as Alaska's.

Clay Phipps of Santa Clara, Calif., environmental director of the Central California Council of Diving Clubs, sees the translocation as, among other things, a devious means of promoting oil drilling off the California coast. "It's best told as a tale of political intrigue," he says.

Estes also recognizes the impact of political pressure. "Politics has been a heavy element of this from the onset, and continues to be and always will be, I'm sure," he says. "In fact, it has so much stronger a bearing on the direction of this work than does biology that no one would deny that point."

The San Nicolas translocation is "absolutely foolhardy," says Diane Pleschner, a fisheries writer from Santa Barbara. She predicts that sea otter translocation, with its attendant depletion of shellfish, "will continue until at some point it's unmanageable. I don't see a happy end to this."

A leading supporter of translocation, and an optimist about its eventual success, is a 20-year-old organization called Friends of the Sea Otter, headquartered in Carmel, Calif. "What I'd like to see is people crossing their fingers and wishing the otters at San Nicolas well," says executive director Carol Fulton.

Having A Pet Bird Is As Healthful As Having A Hound

BETTER HOMES AND GARDENS

A bird can be as good for one's health as a dog, according to a pair of researchers at the University of Pennsylvania School of Veterinary Medicine. Dr. Alan Beck and Dr. Aaron Katcher found caged birds can relieve their owners' stress better than a dog or a cat.

According to Better Homes and Gardens magazine, a lot of recent research already has shown a strong link between pet ownership and stress relief. With their naturally friendly dispositions, animals help us fight loneliness. What's more, people form a strong bond with their pets. Their unquestioning loyalty and love make pets easy to get along with. Even stroking a dog or cat for a few moments has been shown to significantly reduce stress.

The Beck and Katcher study revealed several possible reasons why birds are better at relieving stress than dogs or cats: Birds provide a calming visual stimulus, much as fish in an aquarium do.

Scientist Touts 'Rosary' As Next Dinner Delicacy

By Alberto S. Franco
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BATON ROUGE, La. — A Louisiana State University researcher hopes to create a new high-protein food crop from a plant that fed American Indians and grows wild throughout eastern North America.

The "groundnut" or "rosary," formally known as Apios Americana, is a small climbing vine that produces clusters of edible pea-like seed pods and tubers along its roots, says William Blackmon, a professor of horticulture at LSU's Agricultural Experiment Station.

The plant, which contains about three times the crude protein of Irish potatoes, has been eaten by North Americans as far back as 3,000 B.C., Blackmon says.

"Historically, the plant is important because the Indians were eating it and they introduced it to us and very few crops native to North America have been domesticated," Blackmon says.

The plant is found from Canada south through the eastern United States climbing through bushes, over fallen trees and along sandy creek banks.

Because it is a legume, like peas, peanuts and soybeans, the groundnut produces nitrogen and therefore needs less fertilizer than some other food plants, Blackmon said. The plant can survive frost and other conditions unsuitable for many other crops.

"Heavy rain can wipe out a sweet potato crop. It (groundnut) can probably be grown on soil where sweet potatoes and Irish potatoes can't be grown," he says.

"It's most often found in moist areas that get full sunlight most of the day. It competes best there. We're doing some work to see how it will do in waterlogged conditions. Our early indications are that it probably will stand occasional flooding."

The tubers have taste like a cross between an Irish potato and a peanut when boiled, Blackmon says. The seeds are edible, but are a little harder to produce.

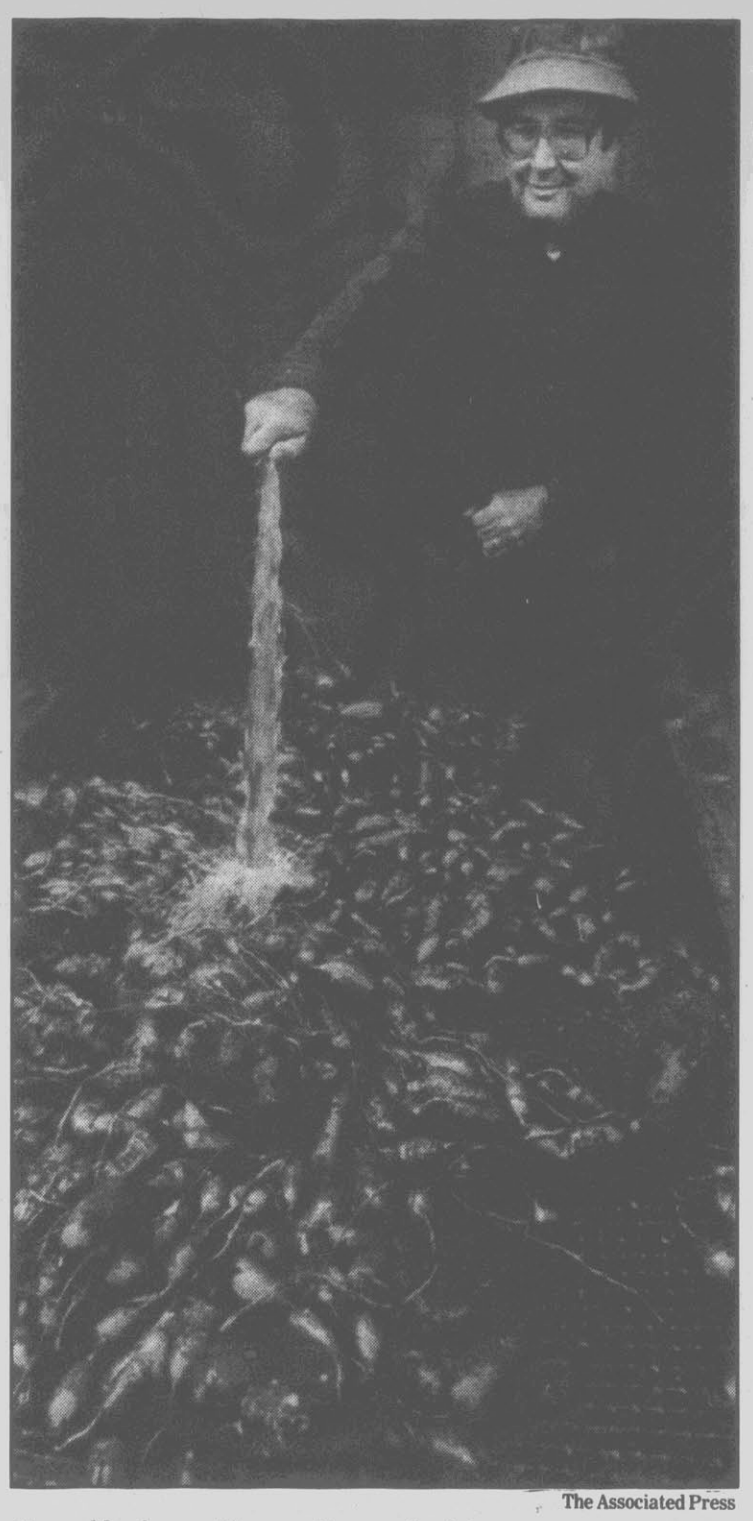

Blackmon's research is concentrating on the tubers, which he says can be used in casseroles, corn bread and stir-fry cooking. Work is just beginning to develop recipes and other uses for the groundnut, such as processing it into flour.

Researchers at the University of Minnesota and North Carolina State University have joined the study, Blackmon says. And in 1986, he and research assistant Berthal Reynolds began sending seeds to home gardeners throughout the United States and 16 other countries.

So far those grassroots efforts have drawn mixed results.

"It probably was a little premature to send out seeds. These were wild seeds and some of the wild seeds were just not productive," Blackmon says. "A lot of times you'll have a gardener who'll be real clever and will come up with something that's productive."

"As it is right now, the first person who will be able to use it will be the home gardener. He can grow the thing, pamper it a little bit and work with recipes. He can get some satisfaction in that it is one of few native American food plants."

Poet Came To America As Child With His Parents

DETROIT (AP) — Edgar A. Guest, sometimes called "the poet of the plain people," was a child of 10 when his parents came to this country as immigrants from England in 1891.

While still a teenager, Guest became an office boy for a local newspaper. He later was a police reporter, then a daily columnist for the paper. Guest began including homsespun verses and jingles in his column and they quickly proved popular. His writings were syndicated in 300 papers.

Guest once calculated he had written well over 10,000 verses in his columns. They were also widely used in greeting cards and calendars. A typical Guest verse began, "It takes a heap o' livin' in a house t' make it home."

Guest, whose verse-writing made him wealthy, died in 1959.

Joe's Truck Stop Does Just That

By James H. Kennedy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT PAYNE, Ala. — It's called "Joe's Truck Stop" because that's what it does — stops trucks dead in their tracks.

Joe Faulkner built the 4-foot-thick, steel-reinforced concrete wall in 1959 to fortify his house against runaway trucks roaring down Lookout Mountain on Alabama 35.

Some high school boys named it when they wrote "Joe's Truck Stop" on the wall shortly after he built it.

Faulkner lives at the foot of the mountain, directly across the street from where Alabama 35 curves into Fifth Street in Fort Payne.

Over the years, truckers by the dozens have lost their brakes on the steep, two-mile mountain pass. Before the wall, many wound up in Faulkner's and his neighbors' yards, destroying buildings and spilling their loads.

Once his yard was turned into a three-ring circus of sorts. "I had three circus trucks in my yard at once," said Faulkner, a 77-year-old retired Fort Payne businessman.

Great chunks have been knocked out of the wall by trucks, but none has penetrated it.

"I reinforced it," he said. "I put the chassis from two Dodge trucks in it, grader blades, steel pipe, wire — anything I could get my hands on."

Many trucks have dumped their loads over the wall into his yard, however. One truck spilled chicken manure. Another time, a load of chickens turned over. "Chickens were all over the front porch and everywhere," Faulkner recalled.

He said a controversy arose when a load of purebred cows wrecked on the curve.

"One of the cows broke a leg and the assistant police chief shot it," he said. "They raised heck. Fine breed of cows ... cost a lot. They didn't want that one shot."

Last July, a truck loaded with watermelons flipped and slid into the wall. "It threw watermelons on top of the house, all over the yard and every place," he said.

Several log trucks have hit or wrecked near the wall. A flying log once knocked a hole in his house as his wife, Vernice, worked nearby. She wasn't hurt.

Flying 2-by-4s and 2-by-6s from a load of lumber speared his front-porch steps another time.

Several truckers have died in accidents, the latest on Jan. 19 when a rig loaded with tons of steel flipped and skidded belly-up down Fifth Street. Faulkner, asleep in his three-bedroom house a few feet away, was jarred awake by the 4 a.m. crash.

"What happens is they burn out their brakes and ain't nothin' they can do then — except roll," he said.

Faulkner said there was no problem when he built his house in 1935.

"It was just a road up the mountain," he said. "Then they made it a farm-to-market road, and finally turned it into a state highway about 1950 or so. That's when the trouble started. The first 12 months, 13 trucks went through my yard. I had a row of trees out back and they took them out one by one."

But Faulkner said he has never seriously considered moving.

"I can't get what my house and property is worth. Nobody wants it. I'll just live it out, I reckon, and hope they don't get me one day."

His greatest fear, he said, is that a gasoline tanker one day will hit the wall. "If one of them hits, it probably will clean out this whole side of town," he said.

Officials, including several governors, have promised to correct the situation, according to Faulkner. But the trucks — their burned-out brakes smoking — never stopped coming.

"Fob James said he'd fix it; George Wallace said he'd fix it," recalled Faulkner, who managed to raise three children amid it all.

After the fatal Jan. 19 accident, the City Council adopted a resolution asking the state Highway Department to seek a "cost-effective and simple solution" to the problem. A runaway-truck ramp was one suggestion.

Andersonville Site Of Prisoner Of War Museum

I am dying, comrades dying
Far away from friends and home
In this rebel den I'm lying Suffering, staring, all alone
— From a poem written by an unknown Andersonville prisoner

By Charles Hillinger
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

ANDERSONVILLE, Ga. — All that is left of the infamous Confederate prison in this small, central Georgia town are graves. In the 3-foot-deep trenches are the remains of 12,912 Union soldiers and sailors, buried side by side, shoulder to shoulder.

Usable clothing was removed to be worn by surviving prisoners or guards. Then dirt was shoveled on top of their partially clad or naked bodies.

For the living, Andersonville was a place of horror. Prisoners lived in squalor, their excrement everywhere. Many went insane. Many killed fellow prisoners for a few morsels of food. Still others committed suicide, or died from scurvy, gangrene, dysentery and other diseases caused by poor sanitation, malnutrition, contaminated water, overcrowding and exposure to the elements.

The largest of the Confederate military prisons, Andersonville existed for 14 months — from February 1864 to the end of the war in May 1865. More than 45,000 Union troops were held here.

All prison buildings were torn down after the Civil War. The grounds are now occupied by the Andersonville National Cemetery, National Historic Site and National Prisoner of War Museum.

Since November 1987, the National Park Service, in cooperation with the American Ex-Prisoners of War, has operated the National Prisoner of War Museum, the only one of its kind in the United States.

"It is appropriate that here at Andersonville, where so much suffering occurred to Union prisoners, we honor and commemorate the sacrifices of all American POWs throughout history," said Helen Smith, 62, historian since 1972 of the 30,000-member American Ex-Prisoners of War.

She is the wife of Allen Smith, 66, a retired Diana, Texas, millwright and World War II Army Air Corps sergeant who was captured in the Philippines and held prisoner by the Japanese for 42 months.

Helen Smith worked with John Tucker, 40, superintendent of the Andersonville National Historic Site, to establish the POW museum, housed temporarily in a 62-year-old storage building on the cemetery grounds. Early this year, the organization will launch a $2.5 million fund drive to help finance construction of a larger permanent POW museum in Andersonville.

The temporary museum is filled with memorabilia from POWs of World Wars I and II, Korea and Vietnam. "We have space in the present museum to display only about 10 percent of our archival resources," Smith said. "The museum's purpose is to tell the POW story to the American people through interpretive exhibits."

On display are letters from POWs, prison camp diaries and artwork, exhibits explaining psychological warfare, photographs of emaciated POWs upon their release from the camps and maps showing their locations.

Another exhibit describes the 666 U.S. prison camps that housed 400,000 Germans, 50,000 Italians and 5,000 Japanese during World War II.

POWs from throughout the nation come to Andersonville to meet with museum visitors and explain their lives as prisoners of war. Often they are accompanied by their wives, who detail their own nightmares — not knowing whether their husbands were dead or alive, sometimes for months or years.

William J. Thompson's haunting sculpture of a crippled POW leaning on a crutch stands in front of hundreds of marble headstones marking the burial place of Andersonville prisoners. Presented by Georgia in 1976, the statue honors all American prisoners involved in all of the nation's wars, and carries the words of Zechariah: "Turn you to the stronghold, ye prisoners of hope."

New Jersey erected a monument here in 1899 in memory of its residents who died in the Confederate camp.

The graves were cared for then by the Grand Army of the Republic's Woman's Relief Corps auxiliary. From 1910 to 1970 the U.S. Army served as caretaker of the graves. Since then the National Park Service has had the responsibility.

At the turn of the century, 20 states whose soldiers died here erected monuments in their honor. The monument for Iowa is particularly poignant, a weeping woman with the inscription: "Iowa honors the turf that wraps their clay. Death before dishonor." The names of all Iowans buried here are on the monument.

At war's end Clara Barton, founder of the American Red Cross, came here with laborers, soldiers and former prisoner Dorence Atwater to properly identify all the graves.

While a prisoner, it was Atwater's duty to keep records of the Union dead. When a man died, a wooden stake bearing a number was hammered into the ground over his remains. Atwater kept the list of names corresponding to the numbers.

Later, he and Barton directed the placement of wooden markers bearing the names and state of each of the dead. In the 1870s and 1880s marble headstones replaced the wooden ones. Barton also directed the successful campaign to convert the Andersonville Prison graveyard to a national cemetery.

Perched atop the marble headstone of Lewis S. Tuttle, a young soldier from Saco, Maine, is a marble carving of a dove. No one knows how it got there, when or why. It's the only headstone different from all the others.

Capt. Henry Wirz, the commandant of Andersonville Prison, was the only Civil War veteran charged with war crimes, and was found guilty and then hanged on Nov. 10, 1865, across from the Capitol in Washington, D.C.

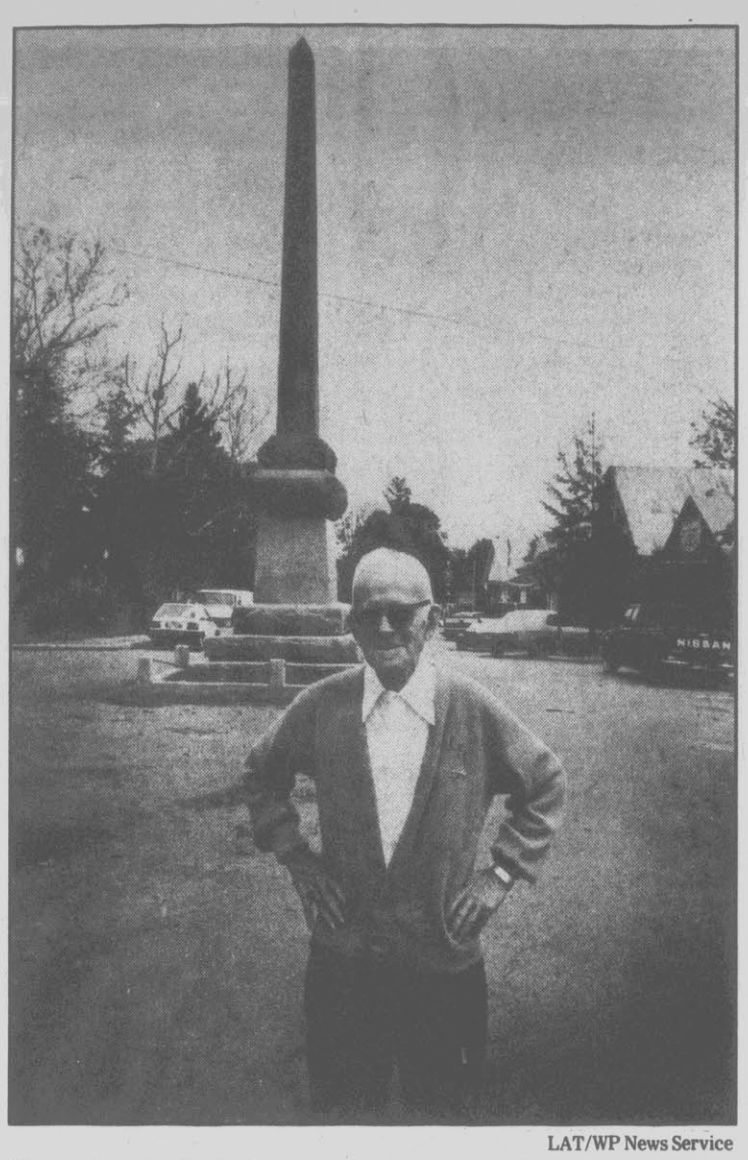

Charged with "conspiring to impair and injure the health and destroy the lives of federal prisoners in violation of the laws of war," Wirz was described as a monster and a fiend by Northerners. Southerners claimed he was a scapegoat, a good soldier, a hero and martyr.

The Daughters of the Confederacy erected a large monument to Wirz on Andersonville's main street "to rescue his name from the stigma attached to it by embittered prejudice."

Wirz's daughter and granddaughter unveiled the monument on Nov. 10, 1909, the 44th anniversary of his hanging. An annual memorial service is conducted there.

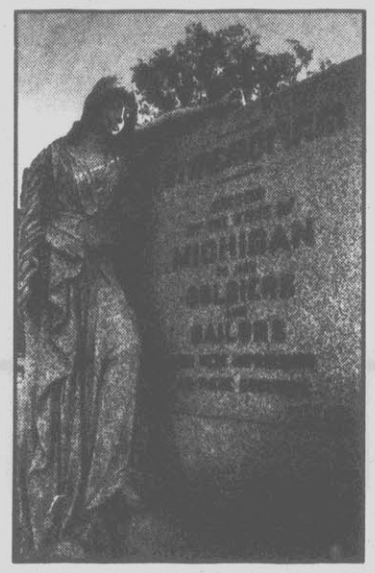

In 1981 Wirz was posthumously awarded the Confederate Medal of Honor at a convention of the Sons of Confederate Veterans in Dallas. Wirz Street in Andersonville is named in his honor.

"Feelings continue to run deep to this day about Capt. Wirz, about Andersonville Prison, about the Civil War," said Mayor Lewis F. Easterlin, 79, grandson of William Easterlin, a Confederate drummer boy at Andersonville Prison. "It's good to research history and research it right, good to remember history and remember it right."

Battles Raging Over Sunken Ships Near Beaufort Harbor

NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC

BEAUFORT — Beyond the protected harbor, the small charter boat Lookout Lady ran into a 25-knot wind. Cold 12-foot seas began slamming into the fiberglass bow and streaming over the top of the vessel. Inside the cockpit, six passengers in black wet suits grasped rails and seats to keep from being thrown from what had beome a seagoing bronco.

"Everything on the bottom out here was torpedoed during the war," skipper A.J. Mitchell shouted over the tumult of engine and raging water. Nodding toward the open ocean, he added, "It's a hell of a way to get good diving, but it's some of the best diving in the world."

Mitchell's clients had come to look over the wreck of the tanker W.E. Hutton, a German U-boat victim that sank in 70 feet of water off North Carolina's Outer Banks in 1942.

Today, another war is raging over many ships that, like the Hutton, lie on the bottom of the sea. Millions of recreational divers are pitted against a far smaller number of marine archaeologists and preservationists who fear that underwater souvenir hunters are stripping the nation of its maritime patrimony.

Sources in the recreational diving industry estimate that 3.5 million to 4 million people have passed a basic diving course. According to surveys, their favorite activity, surpassing reef-combing and photography, is exploring shipwrecks.

"It has a sort of mystique about it," one of the divers aboard the Lookout Lady, Robert Fuchs, told National Geographic. The 26-year-old land-planning consultant, who was making his first wreck dive, added, "It's one of the most exciting aspects of diving, a chance to explore some history that's lying on the bottom."

A big attraction for many is the availability of souvenirs, which can range from old, rusty nails to gold coins. Diving instructors provide courses on how to dismantle whole chunks of ships, including proper use of wrenches and crowbars and techniques for lifting heavy objects to the surface.

"The ship's bell is the most prized artifact," says Skin Diver magazine publisher Bill Gleason. "The next would be the compass or wheel. But the bell gives a wreck diver total bragging rights: I got the bell off of the such-and-such."

This kind of talk shivers the timbers of many archaeologists.

"Archaeologists are some of the most conservative people in the world, and rightly so," says Helen Hooper of the National Trust for Historic Preservation.

Museum Captures Penal History

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

EWING, N.J. — Welcome to the macabre world of Joe Baranyi, where New Jersey's penal history comes alive with a bizarre, gruesome and eclectic collection of artifacts from prison days gone by.

Baranyi, a former prison guard and president of the prison officers' union, is curator of the collection. It is at the state Department of Corrections training grounds on the campus of the old State Home for Girls.

He presides with an almost devilish delight and makes it clear that the chore of assembling the items is a labor of love.

There's no logical order to what he has put together, nor are there regular hours to view it. It is open when Baranyi has time off from his duties at the training academy.

In one corner sits an oak electric chair where Lindbergh baby kidnapper Bruno Hauptmann and 159 other convicts met their end with 2,400 volts of electricity.

Mounted on a peg board is a 20-penny nail that an inmate artfully shaped into a delicate lock pick.

"A lot of inmates are smarter than the average guard," he says.

Piled in a glass case are buckets of homemade weapons crafted from just about anything — from can openers to shards of plexiglass. A hollow book contains a gun, and a fountain pen conceals a knife.

Alongside are a pair of dice and a set of dominoes hand-carved from wood, a crude immersion coil for heating water, and a tattoo machine crafted from a piece of a stereo turntable and a needle.

Tattooists run lucrative businesses behind bars, Baranyi says.

Faded photographs show mug shots of dapper inmates in cravats, imposing wardens in top hats and group pictures of guards from the 1920s.

"They look like train conductors, don't they?" says Baranyi, an antiques collector who says he had long wanted to assemble the prison artifacts scattered throughout various institutions around the state. But the opportunity didn't present itself until a 1980 motorcycle accident removed him from active duty.

Baranyi has a human finger preserved in a glass bottle — no one claimed it after a weapons shakedown at Trenton State Prison — and a coil of braided rope made of mattress ticking. It was confiscated before it could be tested in an escape.

A crude miner's lamp, fashioned from a battery and a bulb, is the legacy of a Hungarian freedom fighter and former miner who attempted to escape by tunneling out through his cell toilet.

There's a copper drinking cup from a hard-labor rock quarry, cartons of documents, a brass key ring and a turn-of-the-century dictaphone.

A photograph of a 1797 Trenton house, the first warden's home when the state stopped using prison ships, shows ominous words chiseled above the entrance: "That those who are feared for their crimes may learn to fear the laws and be useful."

The oldest item is a heart-wrenching 1820 letter from an inmate begging to be pardoned and released "from this deplorable place."

The Cryptoquip is a simple substitution cipher in which each letter used stands for another. If you think that X equals O, it will equal O throughout the puzzle.

Horoscope

From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR SUNDAY Feb. 12

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): You might have difficulty making other people accept your ideas at first. Keep on trying, and they will come around to your way of thinking.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Look back and see if you can learn from past mistakes. This introspective view sets the stage to select from numerous opportunities.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Be grateful for peace and quiet at this time when you can rest and renew yourself. Don't grumble if family members need some of your time.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Silence about a family financial problem almost guarantees that it will continue. Counsel the gang about the financial facts of life.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): A positive attitude is the one that will pay off. Weigh what is expected of you, and do the best you can to get the job done.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): You may prefer to retreat into yourself today. Time alone would be appreciated. Boredom may be difficult to overcome.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Going around helter-skelter can put personal relationships in jeopardy. The company of young family members leads to much pleasure.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): An early start today will assure that everything will get done. Detours and adjustments will be needed to get to your destination.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Don't fall for sibling excuses, and insist that they take care of household chores. Disagreements will be ironed out quickly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Try for a slow pace and use this day to rest and rebuild your energy. Perplexing influences may be difficult to comprehend.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): A temperamental uprising may require the kid-glove treatment. Insist on apologies and compromises to clear up sibling rivalry.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): The day starts off slowly, but once you get started the day will fall into place. Catch up on neglected errands and correspondence.

FORECAST FOR MONDAY Feb. 13

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Is life moving too slowly? You may feel unsatisfied and bored when the merry-go-round of life is not turning fast enough.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Thank a friend with a personal call or visit. Play your hunches today as luck and good timing can be allied to bring success.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Stay with a project you are planning to dump. Reach out for new friends and let those who pretend to be friends fade into the background.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): If you feel lucky, it is because of your own confidence. Trust your own instincts. A new acquaintance adds sparkle.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Talents that have been moving slowly may be heading into a creative vacuum. Bring variety and change to favorite projects to avoid boredom.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): Your companion would appreciate some solitude with you. Greater income will bring an active social cycle to your life.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Your home and a companion could use some uplifting and added excitement. Cabin fever can bring out the worst in anyone.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Glamorous connections may bring beautiful people into your life. Added physical energy can be used for extending personal pleasure.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Your patience may be at stake in dealing with a co-worker who refuses to be compromising. Believe in what you do and stay confident.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): A give and take attitude will avoid a clash that will not be beneficial. Meet with an old friend for a colorful evening.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): A legal matter may surface that needs immediate attention. Proceed with new plans. Communication skills are highlighted.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Pursue your own personal interests and avoid catering to everyone else's whims. This is the key to clearing up current financial problems.

"How do you play this suit combination: K J x x opposite A x x?" writes a reader from the Bronx.

That depends. If you need four tricks from the suit, or if you can't afford to lose a trick in the suit, the percentage play is to cash the ace and then finesse. But what if you need only three tricks? Take a look at today's hand.

The road to four spades was quick and easy. With an opening bid facing a minimum opening, South simply bid game once the fit was located.

West led the top of his heart sequence. Declarer could count nine fast tricks. Barring a defensive blunder, the only place to find the 10th trick was in the club suit. He won the king of hearts, drew trumps, cashed the ace of clubs and finessed the jack. East took his queen, and the defenders cashed two diamond tricks before exiting with a heart. When the clubs did not split evenly the defenders had to come to a heart trick for down one.

But look what might have happened had declarer tackled the clubs differently. After drawing trumps, he should cash the king and ace of clubs. If the queen drops, as it does here, the hand is over. If it does not come tumbling down, declarer simply continues with a club toward the jack. That guarantees a third club trick, and with it the contract, whenever West has the queen of clubs or the suit breaks evenly. There are plenty of entries to the table's good club.

Helen Dail with an album containing part of her collection of favorite Valentines

Devotee Of Sentimental, Beautiful Paper Objects

Text by Jerry Raynor, photos by Shannon Wolfe, border design by David Barbour

Greenville's Helen Dail comes naturally by her love of beautiful, sentimental objects of paper art. "My collections are a continuation of ones begun by my mother," Mrs. Dail explained. "She loved to collect beautiful things and instilled this love in me."

Works of greeting art in Mrs. Dail's collection include several valentines dating back to the early years of this century. "The oldest I have is from 1906," she said. "In the early part of this century, a great deal of care was lavished on the design and production of all types of cards, things like Valentines, Christmas cards, Easter cards, birthday, Halloween, Fourth of July greetings and even cards for Saint Patrick's Day."

She offered one for close inspection. "Notice the elaborate design, the way it unfolds to stand so that the lacework in the design is more noticeable."

Carefully preserved in a series of albums are what she calls "my favorites. I love the beauty of flowers, butterflies, ribbons, Cupids and lovely people pictured on them. The verses too are lovely. I still add examples every year, although contemporary cards are generally simpler, less ornate. I suppose that today fine cards like the older ones would be prohibitive in price.

"But," she added, "There are still nice greeting cards of all types being produced, it's just that the styles, the artwork is different."

In her albums are reproductions of some older cards, most of them printed in New England. She also collects magazine and journal articles about greeting card collections.

Elaborate artwork of an early 20th century Valentine

A native of Fredericksburg, Va., Mrs. Dail was educated at Westminster Choir College, Princeton, N.J. She first came to Greenville in 1942 to be the director of education for children's work at Jarvis Memorial United Methodist Church.

"It was in 1946 that I met Moye Dail, the man who was to become my husband," she said. "That was in 1946 and he was just out of the Army."

The late Mr. Dail was a partner in the firm Hendrix and Dail in Greenville.

"My son, Macon, is an engineer with the Voice of America," she said, "and I have two granddaughters, Caroline and Laura. So I have my family close around me."

Music is a passion with Mrs. Dail. "I sang in the Greenville Choir for a number of years, and in church choirs. I'm a member of Immanuel Baptist Church. I'm very fond of the music of Beethoven and Chopin. I even like Bach! And I'm partial to the music of the big bands, the romantic songs of the 1940s."

Mrs. Dail also finds pleasure in traveling, in trips to Austria, England, West Germany, Switzerland. "Some of my favorite places are Salzburg, Lucerne, London, Stratford-on-Avon and the glorious mountain scenery of Germany, Austria and Switzerland. I love going to these places, but I love being back home in Greenville with friends, family, my music, my church activities."

British Post Office

Bird Stamps Issued by Great Britain

Great Britain Issues Series On Sea Birds

By Brian Hickman
THE BRITISH POST OFFICE

LONDON — One of Britain's natural treasures is its birdlife — but not everyone has the chance to see the rare species, particularly those that inhabit more remote parts of the country.

As an island nation Britain has many different types of sea birds, and some of the best-known are depicted on a new set of special stamps issued January 17 by the Royal Mail.

The stamps commemorate a prominent landmark in the drive to preserve Britain's wildlife — the centenary of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, which plays a leading role in conservation.

Europe's largest wildlife conservation organization, the society was founded in Manchester in February, 1889, by a few determined women dedicated to stopping the trade in wild birds' feathers for millinery.

Birds depicted on the stamps are:

• The puffin, a favorite sea bird, is shown on the 19 pence stamp. Best known for its brightly colored summer bill, the bird is found in large colonies in the Shetlands.

• The avocet, among the rarest of British waders, and the bird used as the RSPB symbol, is shown on the 27 pence stamp. This graceful black and white wader breeds mainly in East Anglia.

• The 32 pence stamp portrays the oystercatcher which sports a distinctive orange-scarlet bill, and can be seen all year round along the rocky and sandy shores of Britain.

• Britain's largest sea bird, the gannet, is pictured on the 35 pence stamp. With a wing span of about six feet, its main haunts are the rocky isles of the north and west, including St. Kilda in the Outer Hebrides in Scotland's Western Isles, where there are larger colonies.

The society owns some of the finest sea bird colonies in Europe, from the great gannet colony on Grassholm in Wales to the sea bird cities of the Shetlands.

Designer of the set on birds is Don Cordery, a natural history artist. He works from his home in the tiny village of Compton Abdale in the Cotswolds.

Discovery Place Has Scheduled Two Trips

CHARLOTTE — Two field excursions are being offered to the public by Discovery Place of Charlotte.

The first is a July 16-23 dinosaur dig in Montana, a trip to Egg Mountain, beginning and ending in Bozeman, Mont. In Bozeman, a tour will be made of historic homes in a 1936 Yellowstone Park bus, and a tour will be taken of the Museum of the Rockies.

Nearly four days will be spent at Egg Mountain digging for dinosaur bones.

Cost for the trip is $950 for museum members and $975 for non-members. Registration deadline for this trip is March 1.

The second Discovery Place travel event is an archaeological excursion in the Bahamas. This field archaeology trip is to San Salvador Island, where for the past three years participants have been excavating an ancient Lucayan Indian site, hoping to find evidence of where Christopher Columbus made landfall in the New World.

Participants will do archaeological work during the morning and early afternoon hours, with late afternoons spent studying the island's natural and cultural history.

Three ten-day sessions are scheduled — June 2-13, June 12-24 and June 23-July 2. The trip is for anyone 18 or older. Registration deadline for either of the Bahamas trips is April 30.

For details on either the Montana or Bahamas excursions, call Jerry Reynolds at 704/372-6261.

Lecture Rescheduled

The lecture originally scheduled for Feb. 6 on the Greenville Museum of Art's permanent collection of Louis Orr prints has been rescheduled.

It will be presented on Monday from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. and will be given by Nelson Britt, director of the museum. The lecture is free and open to the public.

FIRST SHOW OF ITS KIND

NEW YORK (AP) — "The Art Show," from Feb. 15-19, is the first group exhibition organized by the Art Dealers Association of America, and the first show of its kind for the city.

Fifty-seven art dealers will show paintings, sculptures, prints, drawings, photographs and objets d'art, all for sale, in Manhattan's Seventh Regiment Armory. Exhibits will span six centuries of art history.

Babe Ruth Stamp Among New Issues

By Syd Kronish
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

New stamps honoring a couple of "babes" — baseball star Babe Ruth and the bush baby, an endangered primate — are in this week's philatelic news.

A stamp honoring Babe Ruth has been released by St. Vincent Island in the West Indies. Postal authorities there announced that the stamp is part of a series which will, over a period of years, depict all the players who have been elected to the Baseball Hall of Fame.

It is obvious to followers of the stamp scene that this issue, like the others planned in the series, is geared to the U.S. collectors' market.

Former New York Yankees great George Herman "Babe" Ruth was idolized as the "Sultan of Swat" for his prodigious ability to hit home runs — a career total of 714. He led the major leagues in home runs 10 times, and twice tied for the honors.

He led the Yankees to seven pennants between 1921 and 1932, and his feats in All-Star games are as colorful and legendary as the Babe himself. Ruth was the second player elected to the Hall of Fame.

The bush baby is featured on four new stamps issued by the east African republic of Tanzania.

The stamps were released in connection with the international omnibus issues that bear the logo of the World Wildlife Federation. The omnibus issues encompass almost 100 postal administrations throughout the world. At the same time, Tanzania also issued a souvenir sheet illustrating another endangered animal, the African palm civet.

The bush baby, sometimes called the night ape, is a nocturnal creature with a bushy tail longer than its body. All bush baby species have very large eyes for night vision.

The four bush baby stamps show the animal in a tree, ready to pursue its diet of insects and fruit. The denominations, in shillings, are 5, 10, 20 and 45. The souvenir sheet is 350 shillings.

These issues are available from your local dealer.

The U.S. Postal Service has prepared a special souvenir folder to commemorate the swearing in of George Bush as the 41st president of the United States. The event coincides with the 200th anniversary year of the inauguration of President Washington.

Called the Bicentennial Inauguration Memento, the folder contains seven philatelic souvenirs — six stamped envelopes and a single post card. Each bears the postmark of a city in which the president or vice president was born or lived for some time.

The cover of the Memento has a reproduction of the presidential seal. The left inside panel has four canceled 25-cent Stars stamped envelopes. The cancellations carry the postmarks of Milton, Mass., Bush's birthplace; Greenwich, Conn., his boyhood home; Houston, Texas, his current residence; and Kennebunkport, Maine, his summer home.

The right inside panel holds two Stars envelopes bearing cancellations of Huntington, Ind., Vice President Dan Quayle's birthplace; and Indianapolis, Ind., his current hometown. Also included is a 15-cent Blair House post card bearing the postmark of Washington, site of the inauguration.

The special folder costs $4.95 and is available at most larger post offices, at all Philatelic Centers, and by mail from the Philatelic Sales Division in Washington.

To order by mail, send a money order or personal check in the amount of $4.50 per folder, plus 50 cents for handling per total order, to: Bicentennial Inauguration Memento, Philatelic Sales Division, Washington, DC 20265-9997. The minimum mail order is $10.

Looking for a colorful stamp?

The Turks & Caicos Islands, one of Great Britain's few remaining colonies, recently issued a single $10 high-value definitive depicting its colorful badge or seal.

The design features two pink flamingos, a white pelican, a Turk's head cactus, a crab and a queen conch.

Booklet Is Ready For Students

NEW YORK — Students planning a trip abroad will welcome the latest edition of the Student Travel Catalog, a free, 68-page guide to special opportunities for travel, study and work overseas available to students travel organization in the world. There is a $1 cost for postage and handling.

The catalog features information on special air fares, rail passes, low-cost accommodations, publications, insurance, travel gear, tours and car rentals as well as for passport, visa and custom requirements. Descriptions of special programs for study, work or volunteer service in dozens of countries are also included.

The catalog contains an application for the International Student I.D. Card, the only internationally recognized proof of student status. The card lets students take advantage of special student privileges, discounts and travel benefits throughout the world.

CIEE is the official U.S. sponsor of the card, which last year was used by more than one million students worldwide.

Although some of the services and programs are available only to students, most are open to all.

The 1989 Student Travel Catalog is available from: CIEE, Dept. 16, 205 E. 42nd St., New York, N.Y., 10017, telephone 212/661-1414.

Internship Deadline Announced

RALEIGH — The N.C. Arts Council is accepting applications for community arts administration summer internships. March 1 is the application deadline.

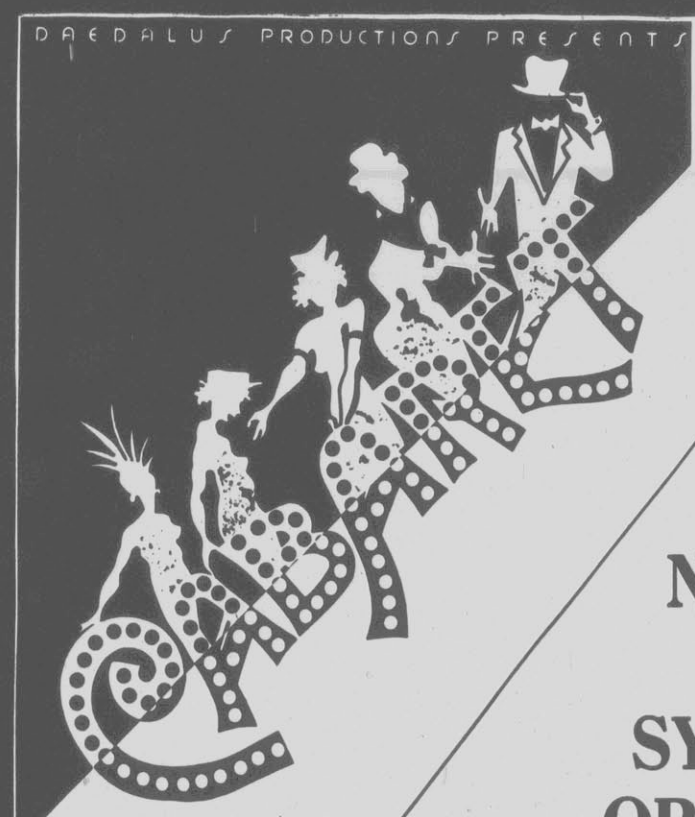

Three internships are available. Each candidate selected for an internship will spend four days at the N.C. Arts Council in Raleigh and three months at two different community arts councils in the state.

Designed to advance arts administration professionalism in North Carolina through work experience and instruction, this program is now in its 16th year.

All applicants must have a four-year college degree and should possess strong business administration skills plus an appreciation of the arts. It is preferred that applicants be able to accept full-time employment in September. Applications can be obtained by writing to: Summer Intern Program, Community Development Section, N.C. Arts Council, Raleigh, N.C., 27611 or by calling 733-7897.

Archaeologists Resurrecting Egyptian City Of The Phoenix

By Mimi Mann
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AL-MATARIYA, Egypt — Ancient Heliopolis, where legend says the phoenix was resurrected from its own ashes, is buried or in ruins. But like the fabulous bird that brought it fame, the city itself is emerging from the ashes of time.

Egyptian archaeologists are discovering remains under farmlands, in the shadow of apartment high-rises, down alleyways and in mid-campus at Ein Shams University.

"So much is left, but there's so much trouble getting to it," said Mohammed Abdel-Galil, chief antiquities inspector for al-Matariya, a crowded suburb six miles north of downtown Cairo. He is heading the search for ancient Heliopolis, struggling to keep a step ahead of a critical need for space to accommodate an exploding population.

The isolated temple columns, mud-brick houses, fallen obelisk, decorated tombs with star-studded ceilings and pieces of mummies hint of the glory of the lost spiritual center the Greeks named Heliopolis — City of the Sun. It honored the sun god Re, whose temple complex dominated ancient Egypt's history.

An elegant reminder of Heliopolis' past, an obelisk, stands in New York's Central Park. Its twin, the misnamed "Cleopatra's Needle," graces the bank of the Thames River in London.

The most impressive Heliopolis remnant in its original home is a solitary obelisk of red Aswan granite, erected almost 4,000 years ago by Pharaoh Senwosret I. It weighs 121 tons and towers more than 67 feet above a quiet park amid the daily hubbub of modern life.

Gamal Fares Abu-Fares, a young antiquities inspector, plucked a blue faience statuette from a desecrated brick tomb more than 2,000 years old.

"Grave robbers took the valuable things and tossed relics like this one aside," he said. "The whole area is one vast cemetery."

Nearby, an angry-looking man paced back and forth — the owner of the construction site where the tomb was discovered.

"Every time we find another relic, he shakes his head," Abu-Fares said, explaining that it means the owner can do no work until the excavators finish.

By law, construction cannot begin in Egypt without a permit from the Egyptian Antiquities Organization certifying the site's historical unimportance.

In al-Matariya, where the probability is high of archaeological significance, Abu-Fares spends part of each day riding through new housing areas checking building permits. His reception can be far from friendly.

"Sometimes, we get into fistfights," he said.

Historians fear for the city whose intellect dazzled early Mediterraneans. It gave the world the obelisk. Its mathematicians and astronomers created a solar calendar, 365 days divided into 12 months.

Ancient Heliopolis' high priests created a think tank that beckoned the leading brains of the day: the law-giver Solon came, as did the mathematician Pythagoras. Plato spent years absorbing Heliopolis' storehouse of knowledge.

The sprawling modern suburb that Cairenes know as Heliopolis lies southeast of the ancient city, which covered what is now Al-Matariya and nearby areas.

For almost 3,000 years of pharaohs, Heliopolis stood undaunted, bowing only to a brash young Macedonian, Alexander the Great, who in 331 B.C. founded a rival city 130 miles to the north, Alexandria.

By the time Christianity took hold more than 400 years later, Heliopolis — called "On" in the Old Testament — was a ghost town. Its remains were slowly covered by sand or they were carted away to build the medieval city of Cairo.

In legend, ancient Heliopolis lives side-by-side with the phoenix. That dying magical bird set fire to itself on the altar in the great temple of Re, and a new phoenix would fly from the ashes to heaven, a promise to the ancients of resurrection.

But two years ago, the city became far more than legend to construction workers digging the foundation for an engineering school at Ein Shams University, named for the spring where ancient Egyptians believed the sun took its daily baths morning and night.

As they dug, they unearthed evidence of a tomb, the first of an eventual 15 that archaeologists would find.

On a recent day at the dig, a tin can sat on the ground, holding hundreds of colorful mummy beads that once adorned the dead. Skulls, pieces of mummies hacked by grave robbers searching for jewelry and layers of mummy wrappings were clearly evident in the cross-sectioned hillside, frozen in time.

To the din of nearby construction, excavators gingerly removed remains with picks and shovels.

A mile away, inspectors are excavating a large cemetery with tombs decorated for officials 2,500 years ago. Sarcophagi line uneven ground where a high-rise had been planned.

Al-Matariya's Abdel-Galil, a soft-spoken man, constantly tours such excavation sites, trying to piece together the meaning of relics saved from steam shovel and pile driver. His work takes him bumping from one rocky road to another, from modern suburb to remote village, a 10-minute trip through a time tunnel.

He said the most important find so far is a mile-long double mud-brick wall separating a suburb from farming fields. According to surviving accounts of early travelers to ancient Heliopolis, the wall stretched for more than three miles, surrounding an enormous city.

In a quiet village about a mile from the wall, Abdel-Galil walked among columns heralding the exploits of pharaohs Ramses III and Ramses IV.

"We think a large temple of Ramses III is near here, maybe under the fields," Abdel-Galil said. "We have to find out, but we have problems. The villagers don't have a sense of history."

ECU Student Art Show

The East Carolina University School of Art "Undergraduate Student Art Exhibition" opens on Friday at 7:30 p.m. in the Gray Art Gallery on the ECU campus.

Artworks for the show were selected by faculty members within the School of Art, and awards were chosen by Anne Shengold, previous director of the Knight Gallery, Charlotte. Award winners will be announced at the opening reception Friday evening.

The student exhibition is a highlight of the school year, as it allows students within the art school an opportunity to exhibit their art in a professional gallery, and to have an opportunity to win a prize for an exceptional piece of art.

Gray Gallery is located in the Jenkins Fine Arts Center on the ECU campus. It is open Mondays through Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and remains open Thursdays until 8 p.m. Admission is free. For more details, call 757-6336.

Gives Book To Library Of Congress

The book, "The Enchanted Glass," by Dr. Hardin Craig, was published in 1936 by Oxford University Press, New York.

Mrs. Sorensen gave the book to the Smithsonian in honor of her husband, the late Dr. Frederick Sorensen, who was for years a faculty member at East Carolina University.

Dr. Craig was a noted scholar of Shakespeare and Elizabethan literature at Stanford University, Palo Alto, Calif. and later at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

Mrs. Sorensen said "the signed copy of 'The Enchanted Glass' was presented to my late husband when he was a student of Dr. Craig at Stanford University. I am delighted that it will be in the Library of Congress, available for use there."

Cynthia Marvin Named Arts Council Director

Winston-Salem native Cynthia Marvin is the new executive director of the Pitt-Greenville Arts Council, the agency serving Greenville and Pitt County in a wide range of cultural activities.

CYNTHIA MARVIN

Ms. Marvin is a graduate of UNC-Greensboro, with a BFA degree in design. She did postgraduate study at Georgia State University.

After returning to Winston-Salem, she was employed by that city's Children Theater Board as an arts administrator.

In 1986, Ms. Marvin was accepted into the North Carolina Arts Council internship program. As an intern, she worked in Hickory and Charlotte. After the internship period, she was hired as director of the Arts Council in Brevard.

As executive director of the Pitt-Greenville Arts Council, Ms. Marvin will be basically responsible for the council's administrative affairs. This will also involve her in the annual membership drive to be conducted in March and with preparations for the Eastern Carolina Arts Festival in April.

Persons or organizations interested in more information about the activities of the council can contact Ms. Marvin at 757-1785.

Writers To Meet

The first meeting in February of members of the Greenville Writers Club will take place at 8 p.m. Tuesday at the home of LaRona Murray, State Road 1202, two miles north of Greenville.

Those who wish to share rides or to get specific directions are to meet at the Krispy Kreme Doughnut shop on East Tenth Street at 7:30 p.m.

British Author To Speak In Farmville

Dr. Kenneth Wilburn, Jr., president of the Eastern North Carolina English Speaking Union, has announced that Dr. Barry St-John Nevill of London will be the guest lecturer for the union on Saturday.

The event will be he held beginning at 11:30 a.m. in the Colonial Inn, Farmville, and is open to members of the union and their guests.

DR. BARRY ST-JOHN NEVILL

The topic of Nevill's lecture will be "Queen Victoria Was Amused," in which Nevill reveals that Queen Victoria did not spend the 40 years of her widowhood in deep gloom and depression. He will show that on the contrary she was active and loved to be entertained and amused.

Nevill will cover too the relationship the queen had with one of her servants, John Brown. Their relationship became a scandal in England. Some claimed they were married, and others said the queen bore him a child in her late 40s.

Farmville is the ninth and final stop on Nevill's current American tour which he is undertaking as an Evelyn Wrench lecturer for the English-Speaking Union of the United States.

Dr. Nevill has had a career as a journalist, critic, lecturer and broadcaster on both sides of the Atlantic. He has worked for British, American and Scottish newspapers, and is the author of "The Journals of Queen Victoria."

A Reflector Review

New Trend In Walls' Photos At GMA

In past shows of his photographic efforts, Greenville photographer Billy Walls concentrated primarily on assemblages and collages of multiple photographic images — both people and landscapes.

A reception for Walls will be held at the museum from 5:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. Tuesday. It is free and open to the public.

In his new exhibition, titled "People of Color — Turning Dreams Into Reality," now on view through Feb. 28 in the Upstairs Gallery of the Greenville Museum of Art, 802 South Evans Street, Walls has taken a more formal, straightforward approach in a display of about a dozen local and area personalities drawn from the African-American community.

The small show is Walls' contribution to the celebration in Greenville and Pitt County of February as Black History Month.

Persons he has chosen as representative of black achievers include two Air Force officers, a lady dentist, a football player, Greenville's mayor, a medical doctor, a school principal and a police officer.

A couple of the photographs express concepts rather than persons — a flag and an open book.

In a statement about his new show, Walls refers to "the unselfish dedication, wisdom, inspiration and perseverance of great African-Americans . . . slavery and segregation have been expelled. African-Americans are free men and women. Free to vote — free to express opinion — free to seek the highest political seat in the nation — free to engage in business . . . without regard to 'color of skin'".

Photographs by Walls have been featured in several publications including Jet magazine and The "M" Voice. "Shapes," his most recent contemporary show, was included in a showing at Afro-American Arts International, a juried collection show by African, Caribbean, and African-American artists, shown in High Point.

A native of Bennettsville, S.C., Walls has lived in Greenville since 1982.

It is interesting to see this different approach by Walls in his photographic work — and viewers will be pleased to see area achievers recognized in this pictorial contribution to Black History Month.

Tarboro Museum Receives A Painting By Thomason

TARBORO — A painting by North Carolina artist Eugene Healan Thomason (1895-1972), has been given to the Blount-Bridgers House/Hobson Pittman Memorial Gallery in Tarboro.

The painting, "Berrypickers," is a large oil depicting the artists' favorite subject, mountain people at their everyday work. The donor, Mrs. Lavinia Thomason Sauter, is the daughter of the artist, and currently lives in St. Mary's, Kansas.

Thomason was born in North Carolina and attended Davidson College. After a tour of duty in the U.S. Navy, he met James B. Duke. Duke was impressed with the young man's artistic talent and helped him to attend the Art Student's League in New York City. While in New York, Thomason associated with George Bellows, George Luks and other artists known as "The Eight."

When Thomason returned to North Carolina around 1930, he applied the techniques and ways of looking that he had learned from the "Ashcan" artists to what he saw in the mountains of Appalachia. He invented a family, "The Hankins," a composite of all that he had noted while living in Nebo, near Marion. The resulting paintings comprise a rugged tribute to the character of the people of the Blue Ridge Mountains.

"The Berrypickers" will be on view through February along with the permanent collection of works by North Carolina artist Hobson Pittman, 1899-1972, and a special exhibit of woodcuts by Baltimore artist Calvin Custen: "Catharsis and the American Myth."

The museum is located at 130 Bridgers St. in Tarboro, and is open Mondays through Fridays from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Saturdays from 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. For more information call 823-4159.

John Biggers Art Show

WINSTON-SALEM — An exhibition, "John Biggers: Paintings and Drawings, 1949-1988," is being shown at the Sawtooth Building and the Delta Arts Center in Winston-Salem.

Forty-one works, including paintings, mural sketches, prints and drawings by this native North Carolinian will be exhibited.

Dr. Biggers was born in Gastonia, studied at Hampton University and earned the bachelor's and master's degrees in art education and the doctor of philosophy degree in education at Pennsylvania State.

He has lived in Texas since 1949, when he went to Houston to establish the Art Department at Texas Southern University where he served until his retirement in 1983. He was selected as 1988 Texas Artist of the Year, an award honoring outstanding visual artists in Texas.

Frequently described as "America's premier muralist," Biggers has completed numerous mural commissions, including nine murals in Houston.

In 1957, he was awarded a UNESCO Fellowship for a six month study of traditional cultural patterns in West Africa. This study resulted in his book, "Ananse, The Web of Life in Africa," which received the Dallas Museum Best Texas Book Design Award in 1962 and Excellence of Design Awards in the Southern Book Competition and Chicago Book Clinic Show in 1963.

Exhibition hours at Milton Rhodes Gallery in the Sawtooth Building, 226 N. Marshall St. are: Mondays-Fridays, 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.; Saturdays, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sundays, 1 p.m to 5 p.m. Hours at the Delta Arts Center, 1511 E. Third St. are: Mondays-Saturdays 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Sundays, 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. Admission at both places is free.

Workshop At New Hanover Museum

WILMINGTON — From 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday, the New Hanover County Museum of the Lower Cape Fear will conduct a workshop, "Collecting and Preserving Local Black Heritage."

Spencer Crew, curator of Smithsonian Institution's show, "Field to Factory," will provide the keynote address.

Dr. Crew holds a doctorate in history from Rutgers University where he graduated in 1979. He has been employed at the Smithsonian Institution since 1981 and now serves as a curator in the National Museum of American History.

Refreshments will be served prior to 10 a.m., with the keynote address at 10:10 a.m. Informational and guidance talks will be given from 11 a.m. to noon, followed by lunch.

A film, "The Angel That Stands By Me" will be shown

The workshop, including lunch, is free, but preregistration is required. To preregister, call 341-4350.

Historical Review Highlights N.C.'s Civil War Roles

By Peggy Howe
Department Cultural Resources

RALEIGH — Perhaps no event in North Carolina's long history provokes more enduring interest than does the Civil War.

In response to continuing curiosity about the Tar Heel state's role in that bloody conflict, the January issue of the "North Carolina Historical Review" contains two articles that focus on how the war affected North Carolinians.

A third article examines for the first time the state's part in the Whiskey Rebellion of the 1790s.

W. Davis Waters, assistant site manager of Bennett Place State Historic Site in Durham, writes about a new topic in the history of North Carolina in "Deception Is the Art of War: Gabriel J. Rains, Torpedo Specialist of the Confederacy." With his invention of torpedoes and other new explosive devices, New Bern native Gen. Gabriel J. Rains introduced a new concept of warfare into the Civil War.

Waters closely examines Rain's career and explains how the general's perception of war was actually a vision into the future. His article is illustrated with original drawings from Rain's own notebook, now located in the Museum of the Confederacy, Richmond.

The reproduction of the drawings in the "North Carolina Historical Review" is the first time that they have appeared in print.

In Part I of "Confederate Dilemma: North Carolina Troops and the Deserter Problem," Dr. Richard Bardolph, Jefferson Standard Professor of History emeritus at UNC-Greensboro, describes the enormous problem that desertion became among North Carolina troops during the Civil War.

Bardolph provides a graphic account of the war's impact on North Carolina's Confederate soldiers and their families. He insists that desertion among North Carolinians was an elusive dilemma that neither the state nor the Confederacy ever really resolved.

Part II of Bardolph's article will appear in the April 1989 issue of the "North Carolina Historical Review."

One aspect of North Carolina history that has never been explored is the state's role in the Whiskey Rebellion of the 1790s. During that decade, the federal government's excise tax on domestic spirits inflamed American farmers and even led to insurrection in Pennsylvania.

In "The Whiskey Rebellion in North Carolina," Dr. Jeffrey J. Crow, administrator of the Historical Publications Section of the Division of Archives and History and editor-in-chief of the "North Carolina Historical Review," describes, for the first time, North Carolina's part in that drama.

The "North Carolina Review" is published quarterly by the Historical Publications Section of the N.C. Division of Archives and History.

A Reflector Review

Mountain Book Proves The Ideal Can Be Achieved

DAWN'S EARLY LIGHT, North Carolina's Eternal Mountains. Photographs by Chip Henderson, Steve Muir and Scott Larson. Text and captions by Glenn Morris. Design by Russell Avery. Raleigh, N.C., Lightworks Publishers. Large format, hard cover. 112 pp. $29.95.

The next best thing to time spent journeying in the mountains of North Carolina is owning a copy of "Dawn's Early Light, North Carolina's Eternal Mountains."

The volume can be said to fall into the category of coffee table book, because it is the kind of book an owner will be proud to have handy for family and friends to see and read. But the appeal goes far beyond that of an average pretty picture book.

For one thing, the superbly reproduced photographs in full color, from small detail to full page and several two-page spreads take a reader on a journey to places other than often seen tourist attractions usually presented in similar pictorial books.

In a brief introductory text, Glenn Morris succinctly sets the mood, expresses responses one will experience in seeing the photographs: "The mountains are closer to being a continuous surprise package than any other region in North Carolina . . . You never know what to expect around every bend except an unanticipated delight for the senses.

"The unpredictable allure of the mountains pulls at something deep within you like a calling. You don't visit the mountains; you make a pilgrimage that has as its destination the journey itself. . . "

For those familiar with the North Carolina mountains, there will be stirred an urge to see it all again. Those who have not yet seen them will surely have an inkling from this volume of that which "pulls at something deep within you" as you turn the pages.

The only disappointment I find in the volume is that Morris' text ends all too soon. I wish the publishers would have sacrificed a few photos to have given us more than a meager four pages of his illuminating text. Aside from that, this beautifully designed volume is a confirmation that the age of finely crafted books is not a thing of the past.

Some examples of what is to be seen in the photographs: A full page photo of a maple that literally shouts the marvel of autumn in an October flowering of gold leaves. The caption informs the place and the ambience — "Along the Oconaluftee River near Cherokee, gold is abundant . . . every October in the mountains glows with an individual richness that is forever matchless." Another, a two-page spread of deep indigo and gold — dark mountains in the foreground over which clouds linger against a gold and rose sky, captioned "It is nearly ritualistic to bid a mountain day farewell and it seems that no sunsets are as enticing as those which settle gently behind a distant ridgeline such as the horizon near Blowing Rock."

Just by looking at this photograph, echoes of lines from the Carrie Jacobs Bond song, "when we come to the end of a perfect day" come to mind. The thought occurs that watching the day fade in the spectacle of a mountain sunset can be the most perfect ending to a memorable day.

One of the major rewards about "Dawn's Early Light" is the total representation of mountain life in North Carolina depicted — not alone the gorgeous natural scenery of hills, waterfalls, flowers, rocks and trees, but the people who live there, those who vacation, the produce, festivals, buildings.

We see a weathered water mill with an intriguing architectural design and its huge water wheel; a Highlander in full regalia at Grandfather Mountain's Highland Games; Governor Vance's sturdy simple desk holding a copy of a spelling book, other books, a brass candlestick; a striking photograph of a Cherokee gourd dipper in shadow against orange clay; whitetail deer grazing in morning mist; a hunger-provoking photograph of emerald apples splashed with scarlet, harvested in Hendersonville, and the amber richness of Mason jars of honey.

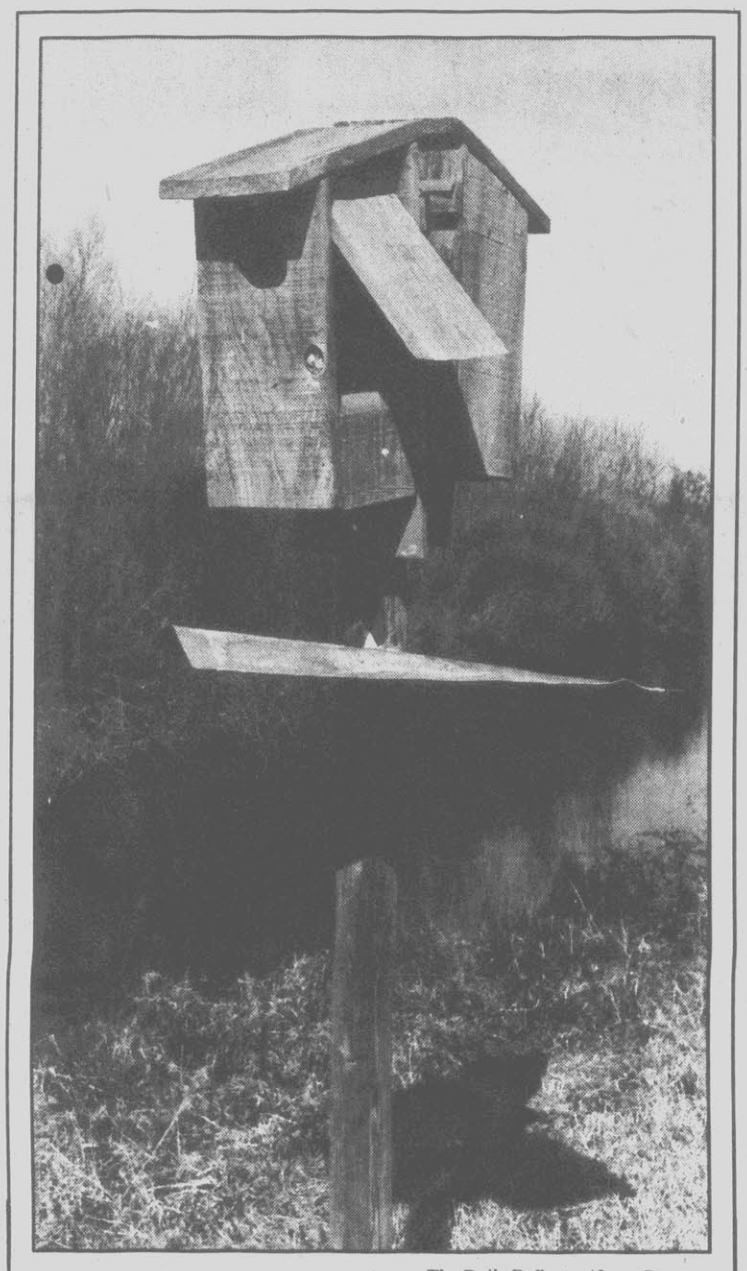

And there are are stunning two page vistas of silver water splashing over rocks covered with nature's lichen abstracts; dramatic images of snow and ice crystallizing trees and structures; views of early morning lake waters when all the world is impressionistic blue; the richness of sunlit jungle green in a Great Smoky Mountains National Park forest, and muscled young actors in Indian paint re-enacting the days of the American Revolution and Cherokee culture in the outdoor drama, "Horn in the West."

"Dawn's Early Light" is a splendid example of the combination of images and the poetry of words which shows that the ideal in bookmaking can be accomplished. Everyone connected with this book deserve the highest praise.

Plans Announced For 1989 All Species Day

Planning for the 1989 Coastal Carolina All Species Day scheduled for April 29 at River Park North is now under way.

As a preliminary step in shaping up plans for the event, there will be a open to the public meeting to be held at 7:45 p.m. Feb. 23 in the Jaycee Park Auditorium, 2000 Cedar Lane.

Anyone interested in being involved in the 1989 All Species Day is encouraged to attend the meeting. Volunteers are needed to assist in wide range of preparations for programs to be presented at River Park North to include school programs. Volunteer artists, prop makers, entertainers in all areas are needed to help get all in readiness.

Project coordinator for the event is Amy Hannon, and creative dramatist Steve Myott will be in charge a new feature this year, the Theater For All Species sector of the celebration. Interested persons not able to attend the meeting can contact Mrs. Hannon at 355-6516.

An environmental festival concentrating on all areas of coastal North Carolina, All Species Day is focused on ecology games, a display of live animals and the use of animal and plant masks to visually represent coastal flora and fauna. Other segments of the day's celebration will be a display of colorful banners and flags, story-telling, a music parade and brief drama sketches.

Support for the annual celebration in past year has been provided by the Pamlico-Tar River Foundation, the Greenville Recreation and Parks Department, the Sierra Club, the Pitt-Greenville League of women Voters. This year sponsors also include the Pitt County Community Schools and the Pitt-Greenville Arts Council.

Funding has been provided by grants from the North Carolina Humanities Commission and the Streamwatch agency.

Originally celebrated as a school-wide project first held at Sadie Saulter school in 1985, the program was expanded in 1987 and 1988

FROM SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

By Alan R. Bailey
SHEPPARD MEMORIAL LIBRARY

Alcoholism is a problem among American teenagers, and "You'll Miss Me When I'm Gone," the latest novel by Stephen Roos, addressed this problem.

Sixteen-year-old Marcus has been sneaking drinks from his parent's bar since he was 12. Marcus has lots of problems, some that send him to the bottle and others that stem from drinking: his grades are suffering, he has wrecked his new car, the school newspaper is starting to turn down his material and his girl is turned off by his growing dependence on alcohol. Knowing a bottle of vodka was waiting for him tucked neatly under his sweater makes life a lot more bearable.

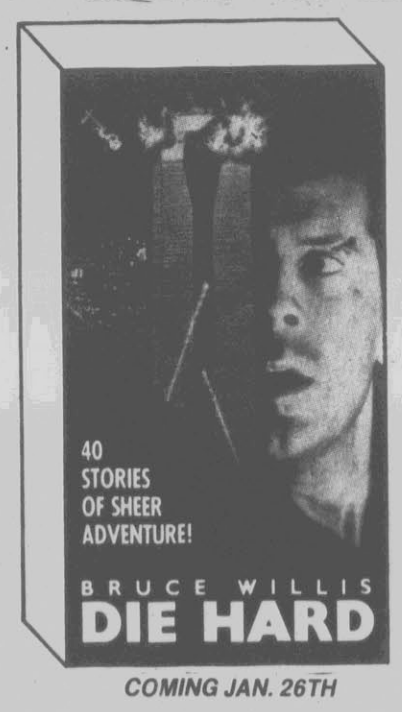

The problems are real ones for today's adolescent and believable as part of the plot. Equally realistic are the scenes between Marcus and his psychiatrist and those involving drinking, which are tough and depressing.

The characters may be a bit too reasonable about sex and commitment, and the ending seems a little pat, but the novel will be accepted by those who know about teen alcoholism and face these problems.

Other books at the library addressing teen alcoholism are "Teens Talk About Alcohol And Alcoholism," written by students from Mount Anthony Union Junior High School, in Bennington, Vt., "You Can Say No To A Drink Or A Drug," by Susan Newman and "Are You Dying For A Drink," by Laurel Graeber.

Free Performance Of 'Don Pasquale' At ECU Saturday

ECU NEWS BUREAU

An English language version of Donizetti's comic opera, "Don Pasquale," will be presented here by the National Opera Company and the East Carolina Symphony Saturday at 8 p.m.

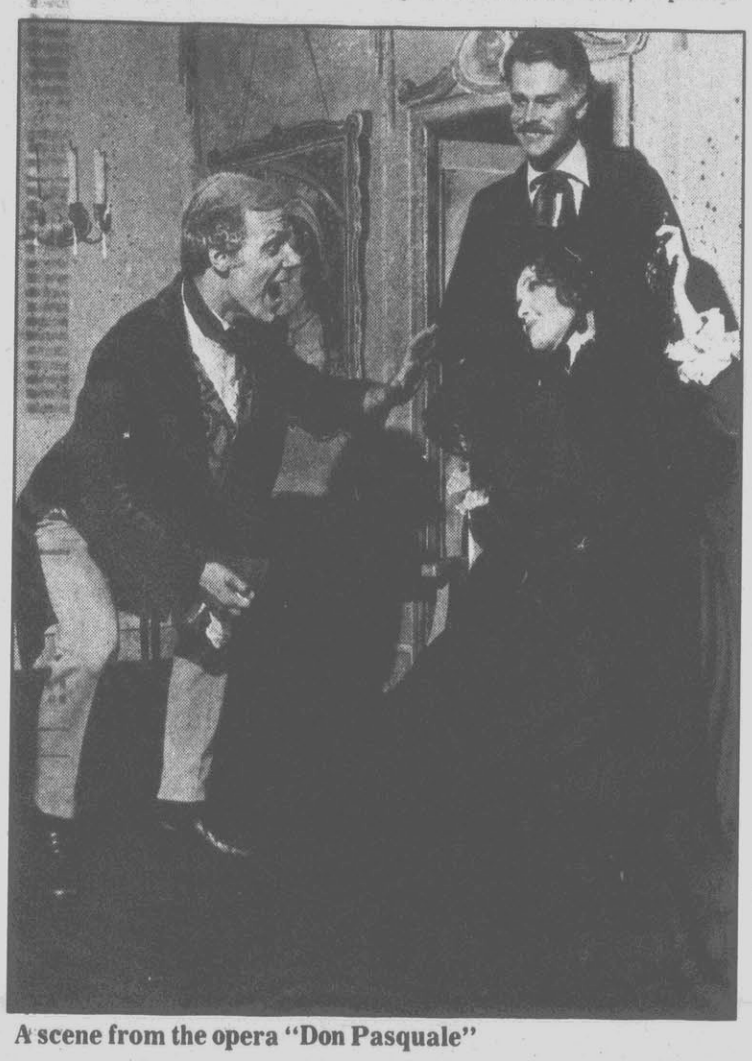

The presentation, free and open to the public, is scheduled for the A. J. Fletcher Music Center Recital Hall on the ECU campus. Music for the performance will be conducted by Robert Hause, conductor of the East Carolina Symphony.

"Don Pasquale" concerns an old man who foolishly determines to marry a shrewd young girl who is in love with his nephew. The elderly suitor is tricked into believing he has married a demure young thing, but she soon turns into a spendthrift shrew. Thoroughly disillusioned, the man is relieved to discover that the marriage contract is null and at the end, is eager to turn his "bride" over to the nephew.

The Raleigh-based National Opera Company was founded 40 years ago by the late A.J. Fletcher, to present operas in the language of the audience, to introduce opera to school children and to give experience and employment to young singers.

On its annual tours across the nation, the company has performed more than 3,000 times in smaller towns and communities which have seldom if ever witnessed live operatic performances. Many of the National Opera singers have progressed to larger companies throughout the world, including the Metropolitan, New York City, Hamburg, Vienna State, San Francisco, Chicago Lyric and other opera companies.

The A.J. Fletcher Foundation has supported the ECU School of Music in various ways, notably providing scholarships for music students. Each year the National Opera Company combines with the East Carolina Symphony to give performances of a full-length opera on campus and in Raleigh.

EC Summer Theater Auditions Scheduled

The producer of the 26th season of professionally produced shows by the East Carolina Summer Theatre is seeking actors, singers, musicians and technicians.

Auditions have been scheduled for Saturday from 10 p.m. until 1 p.m. and from 2 p.m. until 4 p.m. in room 206 of the Messick Theatre Arts Center, on the East Carolina University campus. All auditionees are asked to bring a performance resume.

The 1989 season will feature four shows with the following needs: "Sing For Your Supper" (July 3-8) was produced on Broadway as "Rodgers and Hart." This musical event celebrates the successful collaboration of Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart, whose songs include "The Lady is a Tramp," "My Funny Valentine," "With a Song In My Heart," "Where or When" and many more. Actors/singers, age 18-35, should bring their music; an accompanist will be provided.

"Foxfire" (July 10-15) is a play about Annie Nations, an indomitable Appalachian widow, who lived on her mountain farm with the ghost of her dead husband, Hector. Her tranquility is threatened by a brash real-estate developer and by concern over her son, Dillard. Women, age 18-35, and men 18-45, will be asked to read from the script.

"Pump Boys and Dinettes" (July 17-22) is a mixture of a country-pop concert and musical theatre. The Pump Boys sell the high octane in Grand Ole Opry country. The Dinettes, Prudie and Rhetta Cupp, run the Double Cupp diner next door. Singer/musician/actors will be asked to accompany themselves on one of the following instruments: acoustic guitar, electric bass guitar, accordian, piano or percussion. Bring your instrument with you.

A Tennessee Williams drama (July 24-29) will also be produced. Actors will be asked to read from one or more of Williams' dramas.

The productions will feature stars from television, film and theatre. Equity and non-Equity performers will make up the balance of the casts. Performers will be hired by the show or for the entire season, with rehearsals set to begin June 19.

Technicians should send or bring a resume with letters of reference. They will be called for an interview if their expertise is needed. There are also a number of apprentice positions available in all areas of theatre production.

All members in the Summer Theatre company are paid except for apprentices. Salaries are commensurate with size of role and performing experience, talent and training. The minimum salary is sufficient to cover temporary living costs in Greenville for non-Equity performers and complies with Equity salary scales for performers who belong to the union.

For further information, call 757-6329 or 6390.

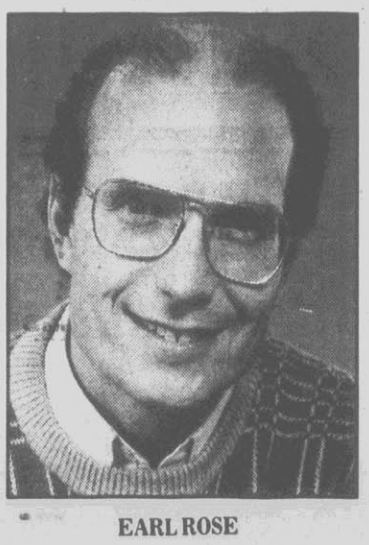

Orchestra director

Antoni Wit, artistic director and conductor of the Polish National Radio Symphony Orchestra of Katowice, will lead the orchestra in concert at 8 p.m. Feb. 22 in Wright Auditorium on the East Carolina University campus. For ticket information and reservations, call 757-6611.

Earl Rose Trio To Be In Williamston

WILLIAMSTON — The Earl Rose Trio will perform Feb. 21 at 8 p.m. in the Martin County Auditorium in Williamston. Tickets will be available at the door.

EARL ROSE

The midwinter attraction is sponsored by the Martin County Community Concert Association.

Rose combines classical technique with contemporary improvisation in his keyboard approach with bass and percussion accompaniment to blend classics, standards, current hits and his own compositions.

His music reaches millions both here and abroad due to his extensive television , recording and motion picture activities. Rose is currently the composer for "Ryan's Hope," for which he has received two Emmy Award nominations.

He has composed for ABC's "Dick Cavett Show," for productions of the CBS and PBS "Captain Kangaroo" series, and has served in frequent stints as assistant music conductor for NBC's "Tonight Show."

A native of New York, Rose studied at the Mannes College of Music, UCLA, Vienna Academy of Music and Julliard School.

Valentine's Day Theater Benefit In New Bern

NEW BERN — The New Bern Civic Theater is staging a benefit on Tuesday at 8 p.m. at the Saax Bradbury Playhouse, downtown New Bern. The entertainment will consist of an organ concert of music that accompanied the 1925 silent movie, "The Phantom of the Opera," vaudeville acts and a magic-comedy act. A reception with refreshments will be held following the show at the Athens Cafe, next door to the theater. Call 633-0567 for more information and tickets. Proceeds from the benefit will be used to do renovation work to the front of the theater.

Two Events For Coastal Carolina College

JACKSONVILLE — Two events are scheduled during the coming week at Coastal Carolina Community College, to take place in the Fine Arts Auditorium. at 8 p.m. Saturday, a classical guitar duo, Neil & Tamara Caulkins, will perform. Tickets are $4 for adults, $3 for students and $1 for children under 12. On Feb. 19 at 3 p.m. the Jacksonville Community Band and the Quad "C" Brass Quintet will be in concert. This concert is free. Local Girls Winners In Music Competition

AMY SCHWARTZ

Two young Greenville students have been named winners in the 1989 Music Teachers National Association's Southern Regional Competition in strings held last weekend in Memphis, Tenn., with competitors from seven Southern states.

Amy Schwartz, violinist and daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Charles Schwartz, an eighth grade student at E.B. Aycock Junior High School, placed first in the junior high level of competition.

Shelley Lucht, also a violinist, is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Richard Lucht and is a junior at J.H. Rose High School. She placed second in the strings category for competitors in the high school level.

As a first place winner, Amy Schwartz will compete in the MTNA national convention to be held in Wichita, Kansas on April 1. She will compete with string players who have won first place in competitions in the six other national regions.

Her program will include selections by composers Kreisler, Gabriel-Marie and Bach.

Amy and Shelley are both students of Joanne Bath of Greenville.

'Lucia di Lammermoor To Air On Saturday

NEW YORK, — Mariella Devia will be heard in the title role of the fragile Scot lady, Lucia, in the Saturday broadcast of Gaetano Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor."

The opera is to be broadcast live from the Metropolitan Opera house in New York City beginning at 1:30 p.m. over the Texaco-Metropolitan Opera Radio Network.

Locally, it will be heard over radio stations WTEB, New Bern and WRRF, Washington, N.C.

Others to sing in the cast are Luis Lima as Edgardo, Lucia's lover and Gino Quilico, in his Metropolitan broadcast, who will sing the role of Lucia's scheming brother, Enrico. Gwynne Howell has the role of Raimondo.

The Metropolitan Opera Orchestra will be conducted by Edoardo Mueller and announcer for the broadcast is Peter Allen.

"Lucia di Lammermoor" is perhaps best known for its soaring, intricate area, the soc-called "mad scene," a showpiece for those singing the role of Lucia.

"Lucia" is also a grand vehicle for an opera chorus, with several sweeping masterpieces written by Donizetti for a large ensemble of voices.

Sherri Bryan Gray Senior Recital Set

Sheri Bryan Gray of Kinston, a student of Dr. Charles Bath in the School of Music, East Carolina University, will present her senior piano recital at 3:15 p.m. Feb. 19.

The recital, free and open to the public, will be held in the A.J. Fletcher Recital Hall on campus.

For her program she has chosen music from the piano repertoire of Robert Schumann, Frederic Chopin and Ludwig van Beethoven.

Farmville Chorus Celebration Set

FARMVILLE — The Farmville Central High School Show Choir "Celebration" will present its third annual Valentine's Dinner Show at 6 p.m. Saturday in the Farmville Central High School Cafeteria.

Tickets are being sold by show choir parents. Cost includes the meal and the performance — $7.50 for adults and $5 for children 12 years and younger.

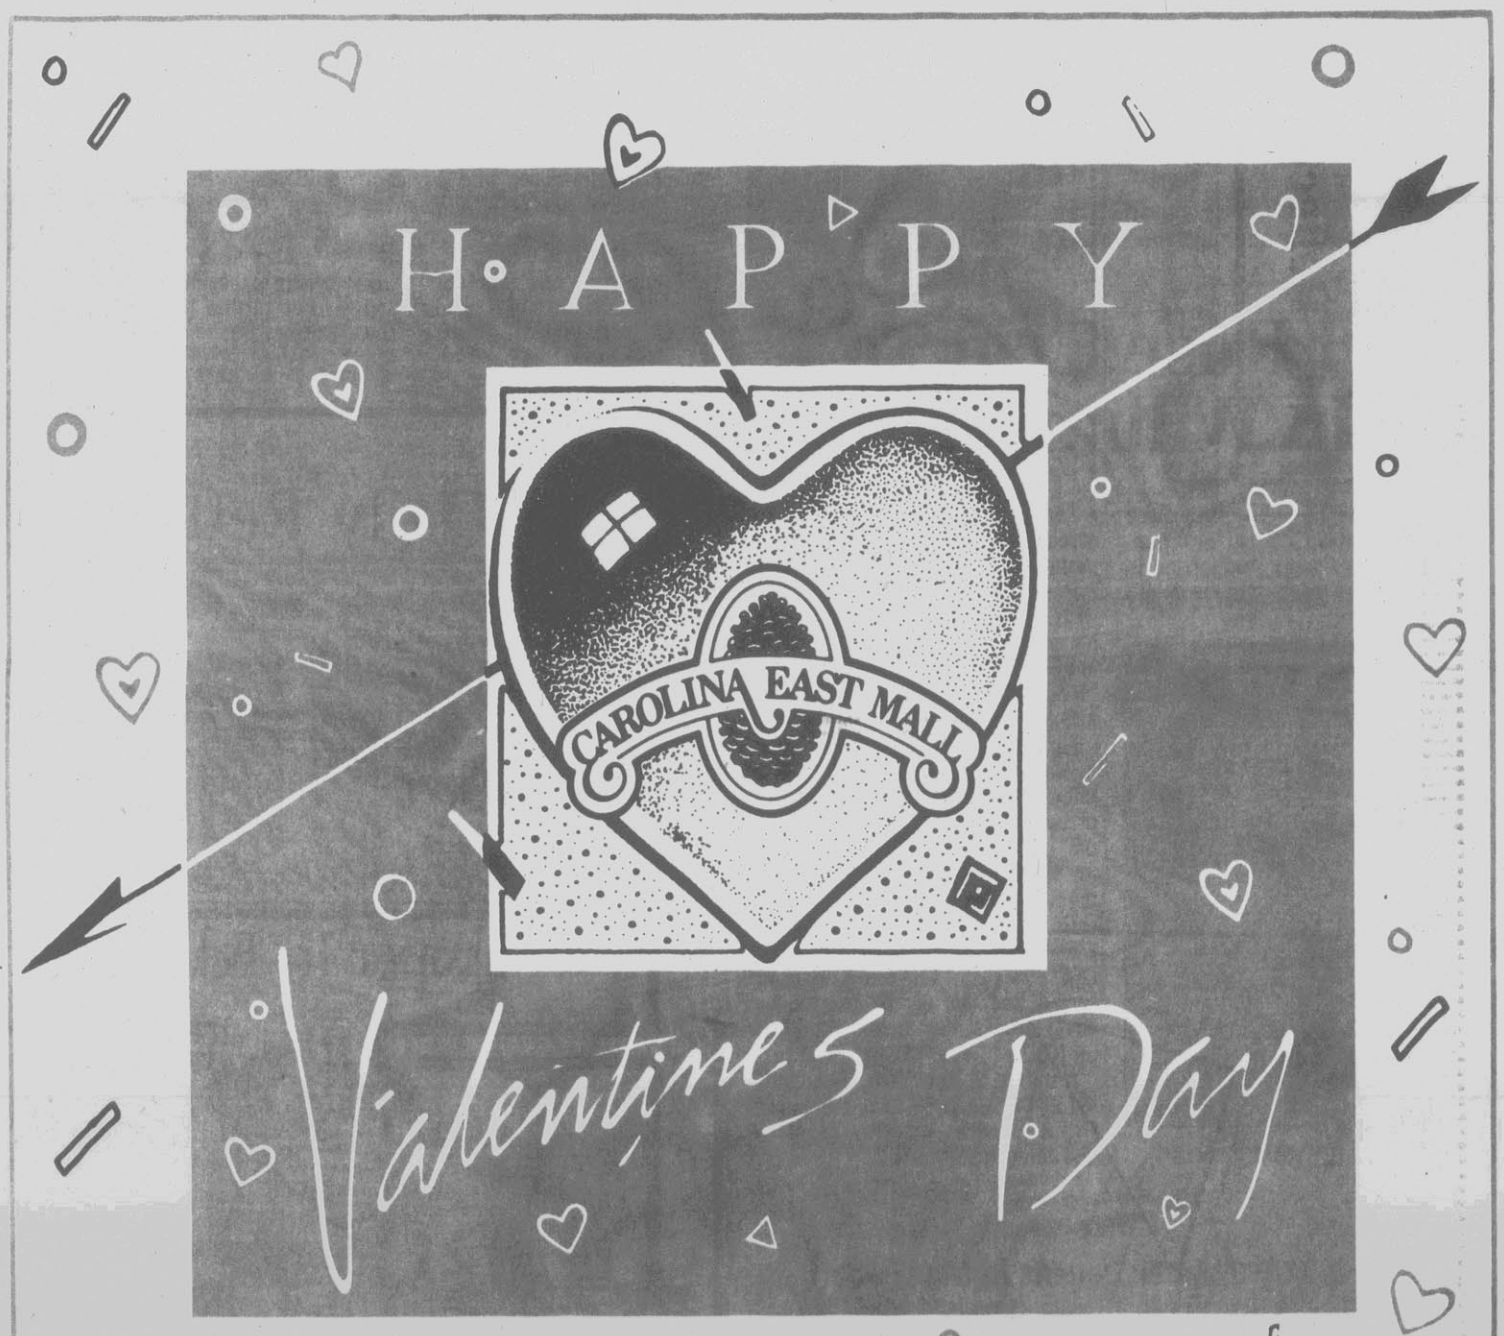

For information, call Frances Lewis or Kay Taylor, 753-2116.

CHINESE PAINTING

NEW YORK (AP) — "Masterworks of Ming and Qing Painting from the Forbidden City" has opened a 10-month tour of the United States with a showing at the Honolulu Academy of Arts through Feb. 12.

This exhibition consists of 76 of the finest handscrolls, hanging scrolls and album leaves, chosen from the Palace Museum — popularly known as the Forbidden City — of Beijing, executed by painters of the Ming (1368-1644) and Qing (1644-1911) dynasties. None of these exceptional paintings has ever been seen in the United States.

The exhibition is jointly sponsored by the Palace Museum and the International Arts Council, headquartered in King of Prussia, Pa. After its showing in Honolulu, the exhibition will be shown at the High Museum of Art, Atlanta, Feb. 28-April 2.

1st Time Buyer's Program.

We are pleased to announce Nissan's new purchase program, good for a limited time only, just for people who've never bought a car before! You see, we believe your first car-buying experience should be as exciting (and as easy) as possible! If you:

- Have a permanent job,
- Have lived at the same address for 1 year,
- Have an income sufficient to make your payments,
- Have no credit (or a satisfactory rating),
- A valid driver's license, and
- A social security number, then you're eligible to buy one of our new Nissans! Perhaps with no cash down!

The requirements, as you can see, are quite basic and easily met. In fact, we're willing to bet you're eligible and didn't even know it!

Just think, you could be cruising down the highway in your brand-new Nissan—much sooner than you've ever dreamed possible! And by beginning with Nissan quality, dependability and value, you've already made your most important step: getting the right car.

Simply cut out the credit application we've provided below. Fill it out and bring it to Leith Olds/Nissan. We'll be ready to start you on the road to your new car! And when you use your manufacturer's rebate, with absolutely no cash down!

IDEAL DRIVING CONDITIONS.

When acquiring a luxury car, a driver often faces two obstacles that severely hamper his enjoyment of the road. Namely, high monthly payments. And a large down payment.

At Volvo, we find these conditions to be less than ideal. Which is why if you're in the market for a luxury car, you should visit your local Volvo dealer.

Because right now, you can lease the Volvo 760 turbo sedan, 760 GLE sedan or the 760 turbo wagon at a very affordable $399 a month.

And to make it still easier to drive one of these highly durable luxury cars, your Volvo dealer is offering this lease with no down payment.*

Just make your first month's payment in advance. And then all the features that make the 760 such a pleasure to drive—like its electronic climate control and sophisticated six-speaker audio system—can be yours.

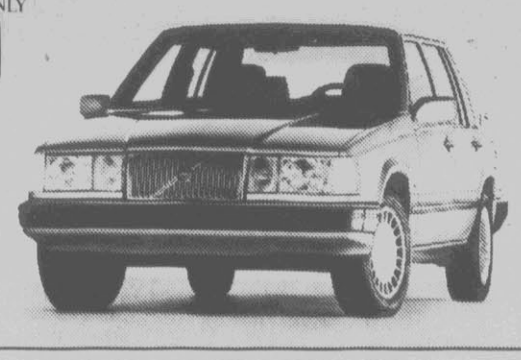

So see the 760 soon. Thanks to Volvo's leasing terms, it's one luxury car whose comforts are fiscal, as well as physical.

A Superior Lifestyle Has Its Own Place

These homes make a statement about those who become a part of the Bedford Place neighborhood. There's room to walk and relax in a well manicured park. Or maybe an afternoon of tennis is the order of the day. Bedford Place is a neighborhood of homes where Georgian architecture creates a distinction all its own. Every detail has been considered, from the exquisite interiors to the well sculptured exteriors. And for homeowners, there's no lawn maintenance and you finish your home to your individual discriminating tastes. These homes are not for everyone. These are the homes of Bedford Place.

Homes from $191,000.

Q. Kathleen Sullivan, of the CBS-TV morning news show, used to wear a wedding ring. She no longer does. Is this a sign that she and her husband have had it?—Nikki Smith, Charleston, W.Va.

A. It's a sign that their bi-coastal marriage is in trouble. Kathleen Sullivan is based in New York City, and her architect-husband, Michael Kiner, does his thing in Palm Springs, Calif. As of this writing, they're trying to surmount the long-distance differential and to solve the big question: Does he move East or she move West?

Q. In my opinion, the best movie George C. Scott has made to date is "Patton," for which he declined to accept an Oscar. Why did he refuse? What does the "C." stand for in his name? Where was "Patton" filmed—in California or Arizona? And who wrote the script, Francis Coppola or Darryl Zanuck?—Amy Nichols, Ann Arbor, Mich.

A. When George Campbell Scott was nominated for an Oscar for his work in "Patton," he wired the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences to withdraw his name from the list of nominees. "I mean no offense to the Academy," he explained. "I simply do not wish to be involved." Later, he said, "Life isn't a race, and because it is not a race, I don't consider myself in competition with my fellow actors for awards or recognition." The "Patton" screenplay was written by Francis Coppola and Edmund North. It was filmed in Spain in 1969

DeGuire/Galella

Susan Olsen: Missed reunion

A. Susan Olsen, now 27, was honeymooning while "A Very Brady Christmas" was in production.

Q. The estate of President Lyndon B. Johnson recently was sued for $10.5 million by a man claiming to be the son of LBJ and a woman with whom he'd had a long-term adulterous relationship. Who is the woman, and what was the outcome of the suit?—T. Lawrence, Vail, Colo.

A. On June 18, 1987, Steven Mark Brown filed suit against Claudia Taylor (Lady Bird) Johnson in the 192nd State District Court of Texas, alleging that the former First Lady and two of her friends —the late Jesse Kellam of Austin, Tex., and the late Jerome Ragsdale, a Dallas lawyer—had participated in a conspiracy to deny him his fair share of the Lyndon B. Johnson estate. To prove he is LBJ's illegitimate son, Brown filed an affidavit from his mother, Madeleine Duncan Brown, now 63, in which she declares that she engaged in a love affair with LBJ from 1948 to 1969. She says Steven Mark Brown is the son born of that affair on Dec. 27, 1950. As of this writing, no further action has been pursued by the parties involved in Steven Mark Brown vs. Claudia Taylor Johnson.

Q. Is that Jimmy Stewart's voice we hear on those Campbell's Soup commercials or just someone imitating him? I believe you wrote previously that, at 80, Stewart is one of the wealthiest actors in Hollywood. Does he have to do TV commercials for a living?—Jan Copeland, La Habra, Calif.

A. The distinctive voice you hear is indeed that of actor James Maitland Stewart. He doesn't need the money but obviously can't resist the temptation to perform on some avenue of show business.

Q. Harold Hughes, former governor and U.S. Senator from Iowa, retired in 1975 to do rehabilitation work with alcoholics in the Washington, D.C., area. Would you happen to know where Hughes is now and what he is doing?—The Rev. Howard R. Hilsabeck, St. Charles, Mo.

A. Hughes, 67, who has a home in Phoenix and two treatment centers in Iowa, is busy rehabilitating alcoholics and others who've lost their way.

Bruce and Julianne: "The Boss" will be poorer next month

Q. Bruce Springsteen and actress Julianne Phillips recently split after three years of marriage. Did Julianne get $5 million for each year she was married to Bruce?—Nini R., Corvallis, Ore.

A. The Springsteen divorce, obtained on grounds of "irreconcilable differences," is scheduled to become effective on March 1. Phillips, who has consented not to discuss her marriage publicly or to write about it, reportedly will receive approximately $9 million from the rock star.

How They Saved The Stark

Black Star

The Stark, threatened by deadly fires, also was listing heavily from the water she had taken on. Top: The ship and crew return home to Mayport Naval Station, Fla., on Aug. 5, 1987.

HE SETTLED INTO HIS BUNK, READY TO GET SOME SLEEP BEFORE STANDING WATCH at 11:30 p.m. Earlier, he had stood the 3:30 a.m. to 7 a.m. watch, after which he had worked the entire day. Idle and at ease at last in a pair of gym shorts and a T-shirt, Lt. William A. Conklin was in his quarters aboard the U.S.S. Stark, a Navy frigate patrolling the Persian Gulf.

Suddenly, a crashing roar—like the thunder of a racing railroad train—filled the air, rousing the officer to his feet. He grabbed his coveralls and shoes and ran out into the passageway. Outside his stateroom, Conklin could see only the dense, blinding smoke.

"Inbound missile, port side, all hands brace for shock," an overhead loudspeaker intoned. Instinctively, Conklin kept running toward the engine room. Then a second thunderous explosion sounded, rocking the 3600-ton ship. "I remember watching the passageway move to the right a couple of feet, right out from under me," he recalls.

It was Sunday, May 17, 1987, 9:12 p.m. Persian Gulf Time. The Stark, on routine patrol to protect American merchant vessels from attack in the Iran-Iraq war, had just absorbed two Exocet missiles from an Iraqi Mirage F-1 jet.

Over the next 24 hours, the men of the U.S.S. Stark battled to save their ship. Many fought while mortally wounded. In some spectacular cases, ordinary men became extraordinary heroes, carrying out uncommon acts of valor. But, in all cases, the efforts of the crew testified to the strength of their loyalty, which simply would not let shipmates fail each other or their ship.

The missiles tore a 15-foot hole in the side of the Stark. Within minutes after the hit, smoke and flames scoured the corridors and compartments. Seven men were thrown into the sea by the impact; they floated there, surrounded by sharks, until they were picked up the next morning—almost 10 hours later.

Only one of the warheads actually had exploded; the other was a dud. Both had hit the berthing area, where the crew slept. Most of the 37 men killed in the attack died in their bunks, either burned to death or suffocated by the sudden loss of oxygen. Some were charred beyond recognition. Lieutenant Conklin was the Stark's Damage-Control Assistant. Only 27 years old, he was now in charge of coordinating the efforts to save the ship.

"The first missile, which made that crashing roar sound, never blew up," says Conklin. "It went more than 100 feet into our interior, spreading several hundred pounds of rocket fuel as it passed through passageways, berthing compartments, the barbershop, post office and the chief petty officers' quarters. The second missile entered 30 seconds later and detonated. This ignited the spilled fuel, which burned through the middle third of our ship.

"The potent mix of the missile's fuel and oxidizer resulted in the initial fires being hotter than 3500 degrees Fahrenheit, which instantly ignited all the Stark's combustibles and melted her structural materials. That's nearly double the 1800 degrees normally considered the upper limit in shipboard fires. After the initial combustion, I'd say the average temperature in the internal sections of the ship was probably in the 1000-degree to 1500-degree range."

Back at Damage Control Central, in the engineering spaces of the Stark, Conklin and his team evaluated the situation: The fires had to be contained first and then extinguished. The ship's firefighting system had been all but blasted away. Key water pipes and valves had been blown open, so firefighters couldn't pump water; it simply ran out the open ends of the shattered pipes.

Conklin and Petty Officer 1st Class Michael J. O'Keefe determined that, to save the ship, they had to close the critical firemain valves, which would isolate the shattered sections of piping. To reach the valves, they would have to crawl through the burning, mangled wreckage.

Despite wounds to both feet, his hands and arms, Conklin stripped off his T-shirt from under his coveralls, wet it with seawater, wrapped it around his face and entered the crew's quarters, where the missiles had hit. It was totally dark inside, an inferno of about 400 degrees.

"I kept my eyes closed the whole time," says Conklin, "because I figured I'd rather have my eyelids burn away than anything else, so I had to rely on my memory of the piping system." Conklin tapped along the searing pipes with the backs of his hands, stripping off the skin. "Every time I touched a pipe," he adds, "it was like striking a hot griddle." Even the brass keys in his pocket melted together. Today, he compares the agonizing heat to a blazing pizza oven: "Stand in front of one sometime, then imagine walking inside it."

With the firemain valves closed off, the able-bodied could begin to douse the fires, which had engulfed the ship. But other dangers also threatened: The fire surrounding the missile magazine still could not be extinguished because access was blocked; the magazine could explode at any time, blowing the whole ship apart. (Eventually, the men cut a hole through the main deck to reach the blaze.) In addition, the ship was listing heavily from the water she had taken on.

"Five minutes after the missiles hit, I thought we'd lose the Stark by fire," says Conklin. "After fighting the fires for an hour, I realized the ship was also in danger of sinking."

The men regrouped, organizing themselves into two damage-control teams. And O'Keefe set up four fire-attack groups. Then the fight began.

"Common sense drove so much of everything we did," recalls Conklin. "Nobody got orders. You can't go running to an officer every time you need to blow your nose."

One cook, Mess Specialist Francis Burke, suddenly found himself in charge of a first-aid station. He rigged a system for distributing fresh water.

Seaman Mark Robert Caouette had lost a leg, yet he refused his shipmates' efforts to drag him to safety. Instead, he crawled about, frantically shutting off the firemain valves. "Caouette knew he was going to die," says Conklin. "That's what he said to the people who passed him by." The seaman's charred body later was found slumped over one of the valves.

Electronics Technician Wayne Richard Weaver kept pulling men from the wreckage, despite mortal wounds. Conklin recalls that Weaver pulled six to 12 men to safety before he died from shrapnel and burns. Weaver's body was found clutching the body of another man he was trying to rescue.

Conklin also recalls the bravery of Petty Officer 1st Class Randy Engram: "I was tired and burned, I couldn't see, I figured we had lost—and yet, when I looked at Randy, I said, 'I'm not going to sit down before he does.' And I know he was thinking the same thing about me."

Those Who Died

At the time of the attack on the U.S.S. Stark by an Iraqi Mirage F-1 jet, slightly more than 200 men were serving aboard the ship, according to the U.S. Navy. The 37 casualties, shown here, ranged in age from 19 to 36 and came from all across the United States.

"It was a fight for survival," says Michael O'Keefe. "I was fighting to stay alive. I bet you three-quarters of the crew would say the same thing. During my time in the Navy, I have fought other shipboard fires, but nothing was like this."

For 20 hours more, the damage-control parties continued the fight. The fire-attack teams smashed a porthole of the captain's cabin with a 25-pound sledgehammer to get at the fire within. Then, to vent the flames, they bashed holes in the Combat Information Center—the ship's defense center, from which her guns and missiles are directed. They gouged holes in bulkheads and walls to drain the water that had collected and made the ship list even more. Finally, by early Monday evening, certain facts were clear:

- The Stark had survived.
- She was towable.
- There were no more hidden holes in her hull.
- Everything that was going to burn had done so.
- The Stark's list, 23 degrees at maximum, had been reduced to 3 degrees.
- Thirty-seven men were dead, more than 20 injured.

Their efforts proved that these men simply would not fail each other— or their ship

"By 7 o'clock that night, we pretty much knew the Stark was going to go home," Conklin recalls.

Gradually, the men began to think of other things, such as eating. They assaulted the box lunches sent over by ships that had joined the Stark. "We sort of ate like wild pigs," says Conklin.

The lieutenant also recalls his first shower, on May 19, two days after the attack: "When I finally removed my coveralls, I discovered that my nylon gym shorts had melted onto my body, like candle wax, from the intense heat."

There were odd moments of great passion. After the fight was over, the crew was transferred to other ships to rest and recuperate, and fresh men were brought aboard to complete mop-up operations. Conklin, O'Keefe and Engram wanted to remain on board with their captain, Glenn R. Brindel, and conveniently missed the last boat that was taking the crew off.

"I was with the Stark before she was commissioned," O'Keefe says. "I'd been with her from day one. I had a lot of me in that ship—my work, my sweat."

As the Stark's commanding officer, Captain Brindel was criticized by the Navy for failing to defend the ship against the apparently accidental attack. (In his earliest comments, Brindel stressed that the attack had caught the Stark by surprise because Iraqi warplanes had always been viewed as "friendly" by U.S. ships patrolling the Persian Gulf.) Brindel retired at reduced rank. The executive officer, Lt. Cmdr. Raymond Gajan Jr., was relieved of his duties on the Stark and received a letter of admonition. And the ship's Tactical Action Officer, Lt. Basil E. Moncrief, resigned from the Navy. The Navy later reported that a "cascade" of failures had led to the "collapse of the ship's defensive readiness posture," permitting the attack to occur.

Today, the Stark has been repaired and refitted and has rejoined the Navy's Atlantic Fleet. Almost two years after the attack, both Conklin and O'Keefe say they still support Brindel.

"Decisions concerning right and wrong are next to impossible to make without appropriate experience and objectivity," says Conklin. "For example, the American people support the commanding officer of the Vincennes without any basis for that." (On July 3, 1988, the Vincennes, an American guided-missile cruiser, mistakenly shot down an Iran Air jetliner, killing all 290 people aboard.)

"Captain Brindel had been there a long time and was highly respected by the crew," Conklin continues. "We would have done anything for him. Was he the best commanding office I ever had? I don't know. It has been a perplexing question for a lot of us."

And O'Keefe says today of Lieutenant Moncrief's resignation: "That is the sorriest thing that can happen to an officer. You talk about a man who was dedicated to his job. I feel bad for what happened to him."

Both Conklin and O'Keefe say today that the 37 victims of the Stark attack did not die in vain. O'Keefe points out that when the frigate Samuel B. Roberts struck a mine in the Persian Gulf on April 14, 1988, loss of life was avoided in part because of lessons learned on the Stark. He points out, too, that the Vincennes may have been prompted to fire at the Iranian jetliner by the failure of the Stark to defend itself.

Ultimately, the men of the Stark were able to take pride in the fact that she was not sunk and that she remains an active unit of the U.S. Navy. Ten crewmen were decorated for heroism in the attack. All remember moments of pride, but O'Keefe cites one in particular: When the Stark returned to its home base, Mayport Naval Station in Mayport, Fla., an elderly man climbed out onto the last rock of a long jetty to greet them. The man had a flagholder strapped around his waist, and he broke out the biggest American flag he could find.

PARADE'S ALL-AMERICA HIGH SCHOOL

SOCCER TEAM

BY HASKELL COHEN

CALIFORNIA MAY be best known for the Lakers, the Dodgers and the 49ers, but it's also well on its way to becoming the high school soccer capital of the country. This year, eight players from that state have been named to PARADE's All-America High School Soccer Team.

Texas and New York both placed five players on the team, while Maryland had four. Eighteen states are represented on the 42-member team, which was selected by coaches from the U.S. Soccer Federation and the nation's colleges.

This year's squad also boasts a brother combination—Chris and Sean Henderson of Cascade High in Everett, Wash. Both made the team as midfielders. Chris is a repeater from last year, as are Chad Deering, Jason Luzak, Lance Killian, Erik Imler, Scott McDoniel, Steve Snow and Peter Cochran. Snow and Cochran, in fact, are three-time members of the PARADE team.

A senior from Hoffman Estates, Ill., Steve Snow was the highest-rated forward in the country. He is headed for Indiana University—a perennial collegiate soccer power—where he will join his brother, Ken, who led the nation in scoring as a freshman. "We are delighted that Steve is coming to our school," says Jerry Yeagley, coach of the Hoosier 11. "If he's anything like his brother, he will be a pleasure to work with, both on and off the field."

Jason Luzak of Wallingford, Pa., came in second in the ratings to Snow, but Luzak's coach, Mike Barr, says he has made the biggest impact of anyone on high school soccer in Pennsylvania in the last four years. And, Barr notes, Luzak is an outstanding student with a 3.6 grade average.

The top midfielder in the country this year was Kevin Anderson of Bohemia, N.Y. "To show how good he is," says his coach, Tom Bouklas, "at age 15, Kevin was offered a contract with the professional Volendan team in Holland to work in their pro-youth program." Also highly rated was Chris Majewski of Columbia, Md. "He's one of the top players I've ever coached, and I've had three all-Americans," says his coach, Bill Stara.

Troy Dayak of Livermore, Calif., was the highest-ranked defender this year. "The biggest part of his game," notes Mike Miltner, the Livermore coach, "is he's caught up emotionally but he never loses his temper. He's also an above-average student." Also highly rated was Mike Huwiler of Wauwatosa, Wis. He has tremendous speed and quickness, as well as technical and tactical ability, according to his coach, Bob Spielmann.

Scott Budnick is the premier goalkeeper on this year's team. As goalie for St. Xavier in Louisville, Budnick allowed an average of less than one goal per game this season. "He's one of the most talented and nicest players you could ever want to have," says Mark Saurer, who coaches the team. "He plays every game as if his life depended on it."

Four outstanding players from Texas were not eligible for our all-America squad because they starred for local soccer clubs rather than for their high school teams. However, all were highly ranked by coaches across the country. The four are Ben Cristantielli and Brett Duarte of Plano, Andy Pujats of Arlington and Ben Crawley of Austin.

The high quality of the players on PARADE's team is an indication of the increasing excellence of soccer play in the country. "With the World Cup coming to the U.S. in 1994, it is gratifying to see many of the players on PARADE's squad beginning to distinguish themselves internationally," notes Werner Fricker, president of the U.S. Soccer Federation.

No less than 20 members of the PARADE squad were invited to the Under-18 National Team's training camp to prepare for the Granatkin Tournament, which was held in Leningrad last month. Fifteen of those finally chosen to make the trip—to compete against teams from France, West Germany, China and the Soviet Union—were PARADE all-Americans.

"Those players on our under-18 team, which visited Russia, represent the vanguard of our future Olympic and national teams," says Mark Berson, the U.S. Soccer Federation coach who also coaches at the University of South Carolina. With the World Cup to be held here for the first time, it is likely that many members of this year's PARADE team will be hoping for a chance—five years hence—of helping the U.S. make its mark in world-class competition.

She has no regrets: Gless, with Glenn

The Helicopter Jailbreak

In The Outside Woman, Sharon Gless plays a drab middle-aged Southern millworker who blossoms into a voluptuous butterfly when she falls for a convict (Scott Glenn), rents a helicopter and breaks him out of a federal prison. "It's a true story," says writer William Blinn, "and, interestingly, the woman—who got 42 years for her role—says now, as she said then, that she had five days of excitement and fun the likes of which some women don't get in a lifetime. And while she was not proud of breaking the law, she isn't eaten up with regret either." CBS.

Charlie Chan Is Back

"Gremlins" to "Burbs"

The offbeat combo of hot actor-comedian Tom Hanks and horror-comedy director Joe Dante (Gremlins) has raised expectations for The Burbs, about a guy who decides to vacation in his own backyard and gets spooked by some strange new neighbors whom hardly anyone ever sees. Look closely at Hanks' nosy next-door neighbor, Art. He's the very talented TV comedian-actor Rick Ducommun, who lost 180 pounds in the last year or so but is expected to be very big after this flick opens.

Amazoy withstands active kids and cookouts. Gives you time to relax, since it needs little water and cuts mowing two-thirds.

GRASS SEED WILL NEVER GROW A LAWN LIKE THIS—DROUGHT & WEAR RESISTANT!

Two Grown Men Can't Pull It Apart! Zoysia Saves Time, Work & Money

Amazoy is the Trade Mark Registered U.S. Patent Office for our Meyer Z-52 Zoysia Grass

By John T. Jackson

Every year I see people pour more and more money into their lawns. They dig, fertilize and lime. They rake it all in. They scatter their seed and roll and water it.

Birds love it! Seeds which aren't washed away by rain give them a feast. But some seed grows, and soon it's time to weed, water and mow, mow ... until summer comes to burn the lawn into hay, or crabgrass and diseases infest it.

That's what happens to ordinary grass, but not to Amazoy Zoysia.

"MOWED IT 2 TIMES," WRITES WOMAN

For example, Mrs. M. R. Mitter writes me how her lawn"...is the envy of all who see it. When everybody's lawns around here are brown from drought ours just stays as green as ever. I've never watered it, only when I put the plugs in...Last summer we had it mowed (2) times. Another thing, we never have to pull any weeds—it's just wonderful!"

LAWN WATERED ONLY ONCE

And from Iowa came word that the state's largest Men's Garden Club picked a Zoysia lawn as the "top lawn —nearly perfect" in its area. Yet this lawn had been watered only once all summer up to August!

CHOKES OUT CRABGRASS

Thick, rich, luxurious, established Amazoy grows into a carpet of grass that chokes out crabgrass and weeds all summer long.

FOR SLOPES, PLAY AREAS, BARE SPOTS

End erosion of slopes with Amazoy. Perfect answer for hard-to-cover spots, play-worn areas.

YOU BUY ZOYSIA ONLY ONCE. ESTABLISHED LAWN CAN LAST A LIFETIME!

NO NEED TO RIP OUT PRESENT GRASS—PLUG AMAZOY INTO OLD LAWN, NEW GROUND OR NURSERY AREA

Just set Amazoy plugs into holes in ground like a cork in a bottle. Plant 1 foot apart, checkerboard style.

When planted in existing lawn areas plugs will spread to drive out old, unwanted growth including weeds—from part shade to full sun. Goes off its green color after killing frosts. Begins regaining its green color at the time when the temperature in the spring is consistently warm. This, of course, varies with climate. Easy planting instructions with order.

NO SEED, NO SOD!

There's no seed that produces winter-hardy Meyer Zoysia. Sod of ordinary grass brings with it the problems of seed: like weeds, diseases, burning out, other ills. Save time, work, money. Plug in Amazoy.

PATENTED STEP-ON PLUGGER WITH ORDERS OF 600 PLUGS OR MORE

Amazoy exclusive! No one else can offer you this patented 2-way plugger. Saves bending, time, work. Light, rugged, invaluable for transplanting. Cuts away competing growth as it digs plug holes.

WEAR RESISTANT

When America's largest University tested 13 leading grasses for wear resistance, such as foot scuffling, the Zoysia (matrella and japonica Meyer Z-52) led all others.

Your Amazoy lawn takes such wear as cookouts, lawn parties, lawn furniture, etc. Grows so thick you could play football on it and not get your feet muddy. Even if children play on it, they won't hurt it — or themselves.

Amazoy thrives in porous, sandy soil, "builder's soil" — even salty beach areas! Beauty is but one advantage of Zoysia Grass. It's also so vigorous and rich it thrives in soils where lesser grasses have failed you repeatedly. Start your Amazoy lawn this Spring, and never re-seed your lawn again!

CUTS YOUR WORK, SAVES YOU MONEY

Your deep-rooted, established Amazoy lawn saves you time and money in many ways. It never needs replacement...ends re-seeding forever. Fertilizing and watering (water costs money, too) are rarely if ever needed. It ends the need for crabgrass killers permanently. It cuts pushing a noisy mower in the blistering sun by ⅔.

YOUR OWN SUPPLY OF PLUG TRANSPLANTS

Established Amazoy gives you Zoysia plugs to plant in other areas as desired!

Meyer Z-52 Zoysia Grass was perfected by U.S. Govt., released in cooperation with U.S. Golf Assoc. as a superior grass.

For the millions of American adults and children suffering from asthma, new drugs and techniques are bringing relief.

They're Helping People To Breathe Easier

Shelly Katz

The Higgins family of Whitehouse, Tex. Paige, 6, and Taylor, 4, have had asthma since infancy.

WHEN ASTHMA ATTACKS YOUR lungs, you get the feeling you're drowning. You open your mouth for breath, but no air seems to come in. You utter a wheezing, whistling sound and breathe faster—more than 20 times in a minute. You can get air in, but not out. Your chest contracts with the effort. And your heart begins to pound, sometimes at double its normal rate. In an extreme case, your lips turn blue. You look and feel as though you're about to die.

Each year, 4000 Americans die of asthma. The figure of 4000 is small, compared with the 1.5 million people in this country who yearly experience heart attacks. But with 9 million persons suffering from this disease, according to an estimate by the National Institutes of Health, and consequently missing countless days from work and school each year, asthma is of major concern.

At the Mayo Medical School in Rochester, Minn., doctors have discovered a new, mild form of asthma that could swell by 20 percent the number of people who suffer from the disease. Dr. Edward O'Connell, professor of pediatrics, allergy and immunology at the school, says that people with a "cough-variant asthma" cough off and on for years without realizing they have a problem. "It leads us to think that asthma is much more common than we thought," he says.

Every year, asthmatic Americans spend more than $1 billion on drugs, doctor visits and hospital stays.

Asthma once ruled the family of Harold Higgins of Whitehouse, Tex. Paige, 6, and her brother Taylor, 4, both have suffered from severe asthma since infancy. "Every day," recalls their mother, Anita, "we were consumed with worry about how the children were doing. Seeing your child turn blue and unable to breathe is a very frightening experience. They knew us well at the Mother Frances Hospital emergency room."

'There's no cure yet for asthma. But,' says one doctor, 'there's no reason to put up with the symptoms. We can treat them.'

Doctors now know more about how to help parents deal with an asthmatic child. They have new drugs that open up the airways of the lungs to free patients to live normal lives. Such celebrities as Christopher Reeve, Jim "Catfish" Hunter and Elizabeth Taylor are among the many who have achieved success despite asthma. And, most important, scientists are getting closer to discovering the biological causes of the condition.

"We used to think asthma was all in your head, that emotional problems caused it," says Dr. O'Connell. "We still don't know what causes it, but we do know what makes it worse. We are now trying to understand asthma on a molecular level."

Dr. Allan Weinstein, an asthma expert in Washington, D.C., says he became a doctor because he'd suffered from allergies and asthma. "There is no cure," he says, "but there's no reason to put up with the symptoms. We can treat them."

An understanding of asthma is rapidly increasing now. Researchers have uncovered possible causes both inside and outside the body.

To find the inside causes, doctors must examine the interiors of your nose, throat and lungs, traveling through tubes that branch out like an upside-down tree. These tubes are called bronchi. The bronchi contain little muscles, and a thin skin covers their inner walls. Normally, air travels through them to add to your blood's oxygen supply.

During an asthma attack, several frightening things can happen at once: The bronchial muscles, from your throat down, contract violently, almost closing the airway. The bronchial walls become inflamed. The skin covering the walls swells up with fluid. And a thick, sticky liquid fills the remaining space, making breathing almost impossible.

One of the factors causing this reaction may be traced to the white blood cells. White cells usually protect against germs. But, in asthma, they flock to your lungs

THE ASHTON-DRAKE GALLERIES

Introducing a picture-perfect baby with a message of love all her own . . .

"Amanda"

A limited-edition doll handcrafted of fine bisque porcelain

From the dimples in her pink cheeks to the sparkle in her china-blue eyes, "Amanda" is the picture of an adored baby girl. Today is Mommy's birthday, and "Amanda" has spelled out quite a surprise for her. . .with a little help from Dad, of course.

The new baby girl in Yolanda's Picture-Perfect Babies collection by Yolanda Bello, "Amanda" crystallizes forever that touching moment when a baby begins to return the love her parents have lavished on her.

Produced under the hallmark of Edwin M. Knowles, she represents the centuries-old tradition of classic character dolls – dolls so treasured, many become heirloom collectibles cherished for generations.

A Masterpiece of the Dollmaker's Art

"Amanda" is meticulously handcrafted with head, arms, and legs sculpted of fine porcelain that's hand-painted in soft, lifelike colors. Her classic sailor dress is made of fine woven broadcloth, hand-tailored and trimmed with satin stripes. "Amanda's" wide-brim sailor cap is trimmed in satin and features an embroidered anchor that matches the bright red bow on her dress. As a final touch, "Amanda" bears the signature of artist Yolanda Bello, as well as the hallmark of the Edwin M. Knowles China Company . . .renowned for quality porcelain for over 125 years.

Real wood blocks are reversible to spell MOM or DAD.

An Ashton-Drake Galleries Exclusive

"Amanda" can be yours to cherish for only $68.00. But you must act promptly. . .this extraordinary doll is issued in a limited edition that will close in 1989. Each doll is individually hand-numbered and comes with a matching numbered Certificate of Authenticity.

Your Satisfaction is Completely Guaranteed

You may, without hesitation, return "Amanda" to us at any time within one full year after you receive her. We will refund (or credit your account if you pay by credit card) your full purchase price, including postage, with no questions asked.

and release a substance that severely irritates the bronchi. Some doctors are studying that substance, hoping to learn how to direct it away from the lungs.

Meanwhile, scientists have tracked down some outside sources that trigger the asthmatic response. Chief among them is allergy. Dr. Michael Kaliner is head of allergic-disease research at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md. He reports that 90 percent of asthmatics under the age of 30 have allergies, but fewer than 50 percent of older asthmatics have allergies.

Dr. Kaliner cites hay fever—caused by allergies to ragweed, tree and grass pollen—and sneezing fits in reaction to cat dander, mold spores, mites and cockroaches. These all-too-common substances exist either in powder or particle form. Once inhaled, inflammation of the nose or lungs results.

Dr. Thomas Platts-Mills, professor of medicine at the University of Virginia in Charlottesville, maintains that house dust—loaded with particles of dander, spores, mites and roaches—is a leading cause of asthma. "We are convinced," says Dr. Platts-Mills, "that at least part of the increase in sicknesses and deaths from asthma can be attributed to changes in our houses over the last 20 years." He notes that these changes create breeding grounds for the mites, which thrive in environments with the following:

- Fitted carpets that can't be cleaned. (Vacuum cleaning doesn't work against mites.)
- Central heating that keeps mites warm year-round.
- Airtight homes that maintain the humidity in which mites thrive.
- Cool-wash detergents that allow mites to escape unscathed from your washer. (Hot water kills them.)

Infestations of cockroaches and mites may account for the rise of asthma cases in our inner cities, where, says Dr. Charles Reed of the Mayo Medical School, asthma is far more common than elsewhere.

Dr. Floyd J. Malveaux of the Johns Hopkins Medical School in Baltimore says that young blacks with asthma are five to six times more likely to die of the disease than young whites. He says he doubts that mites and roaches account entirely for the high asthma rate in our inner cities. Another factor he cites is that blacks get poorer medical care than whites.

Aspergillus, one particular kind of mold, accounts for severe complications in many cases of asthma. Under a microscope, this mold looks like a tiny golf ball covered with fine hairs. It grows in dank cellars, barns, wet roof gutters and other damp places. It sends out microscopic spores—tiny seeds—that aggravate asthma. An even more damaging aspect of aspergillus is that it can grow in your lungs.

Virus infections can trigger asthma too. Bronchitis, colds and flu-like diseases can make existing asthma cases worse. Some people have asthma symptoms only when they have a cold or other virus.

Jo LoCicero, 61, of Manhattan, nearly died last fall after a virus infection led to an asthmatic explosion in her chest. "I tried to ignore it until it was almost too late," she recalls. "I wasn't feeling well—gasping for air when I talked—but I went to work anyway. I felt total fear that I wouldn't make it. I ended up in the hospital for seven days."

Simply sleeping can worsen asthma symptoms. According to Dr. Robert Ballard, up to 80 percent of asthma deaths occur between midnight and 6 a.m. During these hours, the body circulates more hormones, which can cause breathing tubes to squeeze shut. Dr. Ballard studies asthmatics in a sleep lab at the National Jewish Center for Immunology and Respiratory Medicine in Denver. "I feel hopeful that we can help these patients," he says.

You also can fall prey to asthma activators at work: Wood and vegetable dusts, industrial chemicals and plastics, metal salts, animal and insect materials, drugs and enzymes—together, they may cause up to 15 percent of all asthma cases in the workplace.

Jo LoCicero may have contracted asthma from industrial products. Living in an old apartment building, she inhaled the dust from a renovation project in a neighbor's apartment. She says she never had a symptom until she started breathing in those dust particles.

If you already have asthma, be aware that certain medicines or foods can bring on an attack. Aspirin and similar compounds can aggravate asthma. Patients also need to consult their doctors about the "beta-blocking" drugs that relieve migraines and high blood pressure and also protect against heart attack.

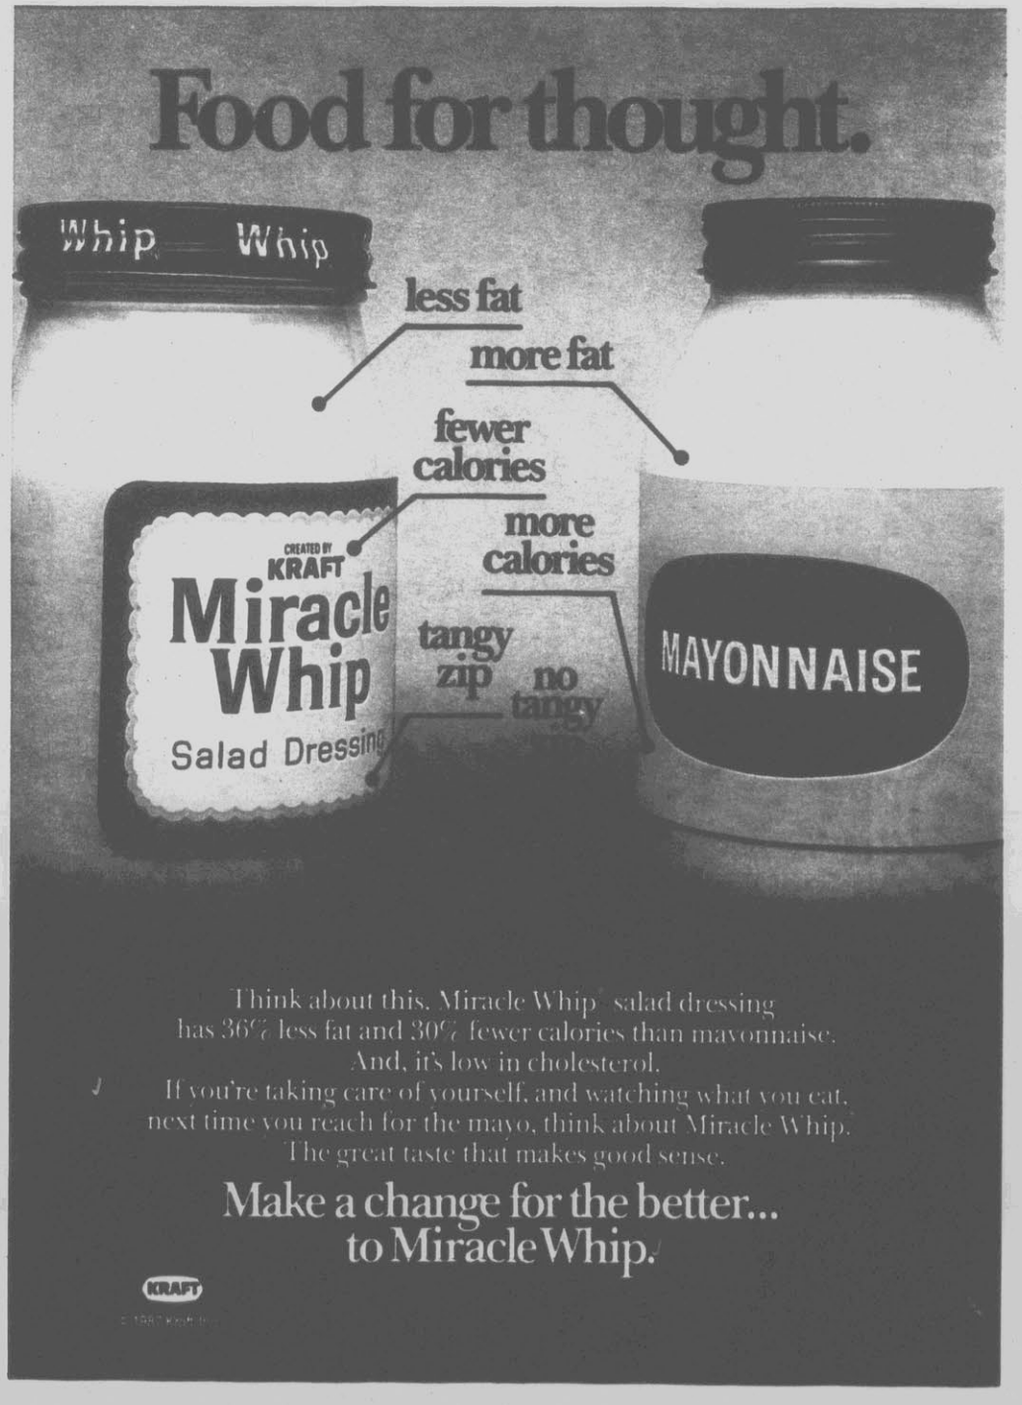

If you eat in salad bars, you may have consumed sulfites—tasteless preservatives that prevent browning in raw vegetables and fruits. In asthmatics, such chemicals could induce a fatal attack.

One more important cause of asthma is exercise. For reasons which scientists can only guess, intense physical activity brings on contractions of the bronchial tree. Dr. Kaliner says that "exercise asthma" interferes with the school and leisure activities of most, if not all, children who have asthma.

Fortunately, in most instances, any of several medicines taken before exercise will stave off an asthmatic storm in the lungs. Breathing warm, humid air and wearing a face mask in winter also helps. The experts say that for the asthma patient who takes the necessary precautions, there's no reason not to exercise.

For example, even though exercise can trigger an asthmatic attack, treatments given just before physical exertion do prevent the gasping spasms. In the 1984 Olympic Games, Nancy Hogshead of Jacksonville, Fla., then 22, swam the 200-meter butterfly competition. In her last few strokes, powerful spasms gripped her chest. She missed the bronze medal by 7/100ths of a second. That's how Nancy discovered she had asthma. She doesn't compete in Olympic events anymore, but she does inhale albuterol before swimming. No more spasms.

World-class track and field star Jackie Joyner-Kersee, the winner of two Olympic gold medals last summer, also copes with asthma. Before she takes off on a sprint, a long jump or a javelin throw, she issues two muffled coughs, and away she goes.

Today's asthma patients have plenty of medicines to help them. Doctors have prescribed some of them for 150 years. They relax the bronchial muscles when in spasm. They also clear out mucous. Modern chemistry also has created longer-lasting forms of theophylline, an old standby, that give extended relief.

But doctors now prefer the beta-adrenergic agonists—medicines that also relax the bronchial muscles and prevent spasms. Two of the best such drugs are albuterol and terbutaline.

Cromolyn, a recently developed drug, prevents asthma attacks. It doesn't stop them while they are happening, but it definitely helps in eliminating inflammation. Inhaled, cromolyn prevents various kinds of asthma, including the types that are induced by exercise and allergy. Ketotifen, a relatively new drug that works like cromolyn, has been used abroad but is not yet approved for use in this country.

Steroid hormones in the cortisone family can ease the symptoms of asthma in all but the most severe cases. These drugs can be taken by mouth, injected, inhaled or spread on the skin. But they can produce many untoward side effects unless doctors and patients treat them with caution. In high doses, the steroids taken orally can cause high blood pressure, weaken bones and muscles, and trigger diabetes.

Doctors recommend getting rid of the allergy in situations where they can pin the asthma on an allergic response. In such cases, long-term prevention of attacks is effected with small injections of the offending material—pollen, mold spores and the like. Although many allergy specialists hold that these injections purge the allergic response, not all of the experts agree. Still, in severe cases, some doctors feel the method is worth a try.

All doctors agree that, no matter what, if an asthma patient senses an oncoming episode, he or she must act fast to stop the attack with medicine. Make no mistake: Asthma can kill.

No matter what, if asthma patients sense an oncoming episode, they must stop it fast, with medicine. This illness can kill. And children are among its most vulnerable victims.

Dr. R. Michael Sly of Children's Hospital, National Medical Center, in Washington, D.C., says he is appalled by the recent increase in asthma death rates among young people.

In a 1979-86 study of children and young adults, Dr. Sly found that deaths from asthma had quadrupled among 10- to 14-year-olds and more than doubled among 15- to 24-year-olds.

A lightning-fast asthma attack robbed Karin Johnson of her life in 1984. The 19-year-old college student collapsed while dancing at a bar in Columbus, Ohio. Within minutes, she turned blue. Neither her friends nor paramedics could revive her.

Karin's mother, Jean Johnson, recalls: "We didn't know you could have such a severe attack so quickly. Now we realize that cigarette smoke [like that] at the bar could be the trigger."

Karin had said at times that she felt "fed up" with her severe and lifelong case of asthma, says Mrs. Johnson. "But," she adds, "Karin loved life and was not self-destructive."

Researchers at the National Jewish Center for Immunology and Respiratory Medicine in Denver found, however, that children with severe and prolonged cases of asthma suffer psychologically as well as physically. Some become so depressed that they tire of fighting for good health and make an unconscious decision to just let go. The violent discomfort of asthma may prove immensely frightening to asthmatic children, and vigilance on the part of parents and others is warranted and urged.

One medical theory is that some children may be passively committing suicide by ignoring both their medicines and their worsening respiratory symptoms. Depression is a signal.

The very real threat of death and the frightening experience of watching their asthmatic child turn blue will generate overprotective parents, says Dr. François Haas of New York University Medical Center in Manhattan. He explains: "They tell their child, 'Don't exercise, don't run. I don't want you to have an attack!' It takes effort to deal with that and create as normal an environment as possible for the child. The parent has to become an expert on asthma."

The Asthma and Allergy Foundation of America is helping children learn more about asthma too. Through a special program, the foundation trains children to recognize the warning signs of an asthma attack. They're taught what to do if they start to wheeze or feel a tightening in the chest. And they learn how to avoid the things that trigger an attack.

Parents need to learn what to watch for—such as whether the child overuses his spray medicine or is not using it at all. And parents have to guard against being overprotective. Children can feel confused by too much concern and caution; psychological problems could result.

Videotapes taken of parent-child interactions at the National Jewish Center in Denver reveal that asthmatic youngsters get their way three out of four times; healthy children only one-third of the time. It is a quite human tendency, after all, to use a handicap to one's advantage. Often unconsciously, asthmatic children pick up the slightest signal of concern from their parents and learn how to manipulate them. Counseling for the children and their caregivers can be helpful here.

Happily, research is paying off handsomely with new drugs and new techniques for diagnosing asthma and for training both patients and their care-givers to cope with it. Unfortunately, figures are rising on the cases of death and sickness from asthma. And the reasons why remain a mystery.

Stop kidding yourself!

Doesn't it strike you as strange that somebody as down-to-earth as yourself would think that if you close your eyes to serious questions, they will go away?

Yet there are plenty of people who spend their lives kidding themselves about the things that really matter. What things? Well, religion for one. For many, religion is like electricity. They know what it is until you ask them. And even when they can define religion, they don't see it as the most basic relationship of their lives.

If religion up until now has meant little or nothing to you, isn't it time you stopped kidding yourself? "It's all make-believe," you say. But what if it isn't? Write for our free pamphlet: "Religion Means God and Me." No one will call.

Children Who Feel No Pain—II

London Express

Steve (l) and Chris Pete play with English guest, Paul Waters (c): All have rare malady

A little less than two years ago, we devoted this column to the family of Bob and Christine Waters, a British couple who reside in Erith, a suburb of London. Bob, then 35 and an unemployed butcher, and his 32-year-old wife were the harried parents of two tots—Paul, 2, and Victoria, not yet 1—who suffered from one of the world's rare maladies, congenital analgia, or insensitivity to pain. They have since produced a third child, Amanda, also a victim of that dangerous insensitivity.

We explained that such children, born pain-free because of an abnormality in their parents' genes, are exceedingly difficult to rear. They constantly injure themselves without realizing what they are doing. In the case of the Waters' offspring, they bite off the tips of their fingers and tongues, cut themselves, burn their hands severely and break their bones. Victoria Waters, for example, has broken her right leg at least five times. Last year, one physician, aware of the little girl's insensitivity to pain, reset her shinbone without even applying a local anesthetic.

Fortunately, there are relatively few children like Paul, Victoria and Amanda Waters. When we asked their father if he knew of any in the U.S., he said he didn't. He does now, because a few months ago his family spent 23 days vacationing with Tom and Janette Pete of Castle Rock, Wash., parents of two pain-free sons—Steve, 7, and Chris, 6.

On April 5, 1987, Janette Peters Pete—born in Santa Cruz, Calif., and brought up in Myrtle Creek, Ore., one of five children of a school custodian—was thumbing through a copy of PARADE carried in the Portland Oregonian, when her eye caught an item, "Children Who Feel No Pain." Because she and her husband, Tom, an operator at the Reynolds Metals cable plant in Longview, Wash., have two such boys, she eagerly read the column and immediately identified with the Waters family in England.

"I realized," she says, "that we had so much in common and that I wasn't the only mother in the world trying to raise kids who'd been born insensitive to pain. I don't know why it is, but if children aren't born absolutely perfect, society usually blames the mother. Anyway, I used to blame myself for everything connected with Steve and Chris.

BY LLOYD SHEARER © 1989

"The truth, as Dr. Blaine Tolby—he's the pediatrician who treats the two boys—once told me, is that both parents have to carry the recessive gene which produces congenital analgia in order to pass it on to the children. Even so, after Chris, our second son, was born, I had myself sterilized."

Mrs. Pete, now 27, recalls that she began writing to Christine Waters soon after reading our article in 1987, exchanging information and experiences and establishing a warm rapport via correspondence. Last year, the Petes planned to visit the Waters family overseas, but financial difficulties caused them to postpone the trip. Luckily, Mrs. Waters was given a free airplane ticket to the United States. Her husband then promoted one for himself and, together with their three offspring and some other family members, the Waters flew from England to the state of Washington. Tom Pete rented a motor home, filled it with members of both families, and the group headed south for Disneyland.

In Roseburg, Ore., infant Amanda Waters—who suffers from a chronic nosebleed, the result of banging her nose on the walls and floors—came down with pneumonia and was hospitalized for three days. The trip to Disneyland had to be canceled.

Janette Pete is unaware of any family in this country other than her own that has children who were born immune to pain. "If there are any," she says, "I'd like to meet as many as possible—especially if they have children who are older than our two, so we can learn what to expect and how to handle such a problem. There are no books that I know of which have been written for the parents of congenital analgic children. You have to learn from your own experience or the experience of others. That's why it was so good when Bob and Chris Waters and their kids flew in from London. Our kids are older than theirs, but at least we could exchange information and share our common problems. Raising pain-free kids is not the easiest thing in the world."

"No matter how supportive your husband is—and mine is very supportive," she adds, "it's difficult and stressful, and it takes its toll. Look at Bob Waters. His wife found it so difficult, he had to quit his job as a butcher and go on the dole so that he could help raise their three in England."

Fitting Facts

CHECKING YOUR BRA FOR A PROPER FIT

Notice any bulges over the front or sides of your bra? Maybe you've got a cup that's too small—or a bra band that's too tight. A "rule of thumb" for telling whether or not your bra band fits correctly is: try to slip your thumb underneath it. If you can do so comfortably, the fit is fine.

Ask Marilyn

BY MARILYN VOS SAVANT

What scientific theory can prove that "no two snowflakes are alike"? I contend that all the snowflakes have never been examined and compared.

—Claire Lowe, Muscatine, Iowa

I don't know of any scientific proof, but I do know the reason that scientists consider the shapes of snowflakes to be infinite. Photomicrography has shown that there is far more minute variety than we had ever dreamed possible, and it now is understood that, as a growing snowflake drifts downward, what occurs to its rapidly branching crystals during every instant depends upon the combination of conditions it encounters—such as humidity, temperature, turbulence and impurities in the air. Each flake, then, is a record of its own personal experience, and the possible combinations boggle the imagination, making "infinite" a descriptive, if not provable, adjective.

Should government officials be given tests for competency before taking their jobs?

—Anonymous

If competency tests are not required of voters, they also should not be required of officeholders, and for the same reason—the danger of using the tests to prevent certain people from gaining power.

What is the difference between ignorance and innocence?

—Cynthia De La Rosa, Harbinger, Tex.

If you're 2 years old and you overturn your plate of spaghetti onto your head at a fine restaurant, it's innocence. If you're 32 years old, it's ignorance. The reverse is true for the person who took you there each time.

Has Einstein's theory of relativity been proved to be factual beyond a doubt?

—Robert Vinson, San Diego, Calif.

Nope.

I have two apples, and my friend has none. If we add them together, we have two apples to share—one for each. However, if I have two pears, and my friend has none, and we multiply them together, we have no pears at all. Where did they go?

—Ralph E. Brown, Shelton, Conn.

They're still in the bowl with the apples. All mathematical operations are not equal. If we want to see how many bananas we have together, we must pile them on top of each other with addition. Four bananas plus two bananas equals six bananas. Multiplication operates on only one of the groups: four bananas times one (not one banana) equals four bananas; four bananas times two (not two bananas) equals eight bananas. In other words, you can't multiply one group of pears by another group of pears. You can only multiply one group of pears by a number, and if that number is zero, you've ignored your own pears. You should have multiplied by one.

How do you explain the difference between "hypothetical" and "theoretical"? My dictionary doesn't do it at all well.

—Sheila Dickey, Birmingham, Ala.

They overlap, but you can think of them this way: A hypothesis is an imaginary deck of cards. A theory is the house you build with them.

In my opinion, there has never been a satisfactory answer to the question: "Why do the good suffer and the wicked prosper?" What do you think?

—Raidan Trujillo, Pueblo, Colo.

I don't have a satisfactory answer, because I doubt that the statement is true in any but the narrowest of senses. I do not believe that most prosperous people are wicked and most suffering people are good, nor do I believe that most wicked people are prosperous and most good people suffer. Instead, it appears to me that when a wicked person does prosper, or when a good person does suffer, it draws our attention disproportionately because we find it so irritating.

Mary Frann

Tired of acting the saint, Mary Frann says she isn't as perfect as Joanna, the character she plays on Newhart.

BOB NEWHART'S WIFE ISN'T married. I mean, she isn't married to Bob. She used to be married to someone else. Right now, Mary Frann isn't married at all. Maybe I'd better explain.

Mary is Joanna Loudon on the CBS series Newhart, and we got together over a pot of tea to talk about Bob, her TV husband, and about other things. Talking to Mary Frann (the family name is Luecke, and "Frann" is short for Frances) is easy: She is a green-eyed blonde with a glorious mane of hair, and she talks as if conversation were going out of business next Tuesday.

"My next project is a feature film directed by Peter Medack," she told me, "and my role is the direct opposite of Joanna. I play a blue-collar lady living with a younger man. I have a teenage daughter, and I've never been married. The working title is Fatal Charm. I want to surprise people. I have been six and a half years on Newhart, and there's a danger, and also a compliment, in that people think you are that character. I'm single, but I was married 10 years, and I have a lot of relationships. Sure, I'd love to have a child. No question the clock is ticking. I'd be capable of raising a child alone, but I want that family unit. I think a child needs that."

Mary was born and brought up in St. Louis, where her dad was a sportswriter. In high school, she did TV commercials for a local dance show and won an America's Junior Miss contest and a scholarship to Northwestern. After two years, she found a job as a weathergirl at KSDK-TV in St. Louis and then moved on to become host of a morning talk show in Chicago.

"But I never wanted a career in broadcasting," she said. "I was an actress, with a capital 'A.'" She acted in local theaters and then, in 1969, made her dramatic debut on the TV series My Friend Tony, starring James Whitmore. Within two years, she was on Broadway in Story Theatre.

Mary thinks Joanna on Newhart is "too perfect." She explained: "We make her a saint. I'm not perfect, and being a saint isn't interesting...You just go to heaven. I'd like the character to have a little bend. I do have some say-so on the show. The clothes, for example. I like sweaters. They're sexy and they're right for a country inn, so you'll notice I'm always wearing a sweater."

Her big regret? "I'd love to do the show in Vermont. Once a week, I demand it. The joke is that when we're having our final wrap party, maybe we'll go to Vermont. At last." PC

BIRTHDATE: Won't say.
TELEVISION: Weathergirl at KSDK-TV in St. Louis, 1962-63; My Friend Tony, 1969; Return to Peyton Place, 1972-74; Days of Our Lives, 1974-79; King's Crossing, 1982; Newhart, 1982–.
TV SPECIALS: Guest appearance on The New Mike Hammer, 1987; commentator on Tournament of Roses Parade, 1987; co-host of Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade, 1988.

BRADY'S BITS

Mary just bought and decorated her first house, in Beverly Hills. "It's warm and comfortable and inviting," she said. "I asked myself, if I were a guest, what would I want? So that's how I did the house." In New York, Mary used to run. Now it's aerobics. "What about Bob?" I asked. Mary laughed. "We have aerobics on the set," she said. "Everyone participates. Not Bob! That's a joke. We keep asking, 'Bob, what's the excuse today?'" Oh, yes, she has one other passion—working with Easter Seal kids. "It's hard work, for the whole family," she said. "Getting kids like that to live independent lives, you get a close-up look at some real gritty courage."

Every Monday evening, Mary Frann does what millions of us do: She watches "Newhart" on television—alone, she says, "so I can talk back to the TV set."

Series TV Salutes Seven Of Their Better Shows

By Robert DiMatteo

Series TV is the staple of the industry: It's what keeps us hooked between the miniseries, TV movies, commercials, and special-events programming. So let's salute a half dozen or so of the better shows on the air.

CHINA BEACH (ABC, Wednesdays): A women's eye view of Vietnam, this beautifully produced show makes up in mood what it sometimes lacks in story lines. Its biggest problem is what we'll call the TV writers' sensitivity overload. The characters sometimes seem too aware and too thoughtful. It's almost as if they too are looking back on Nam rather than living it. But what is right about this show is more important. Watching the series, you feel transported at times — into a world that has been cleansed of war-movie cliches.

MURPHY BROWN (CBS, Mondays): Yes, it's almost a clone of the old "Mary Tyler Moore Show," but it's funny — and getting funnier. The strain that showed in the pilot is gone, and the cast seem sincreasingly relaxed — even Candice Bergen, who has usually been a problem for this viewer. She appears to know that this is her best chance yet to win us over, and she's seizing the opportunity with elan.

THE TRACEY ULLMAN SHOW (Fox, Sundays): Ullman is a full-blown comic talent, akin to Bette Midler and Carol Burnett, but, in keeping with the times, much weirder. Her show is a shrewd variety format — comprised of offbeat little sketches that usually end before they wear out their welcome. So far, the material barely scratches the surface of Ullman's abilities, but it's a start.

ALMOST GROWN (CBS, Mondays): A lot of recent TV shows and movies have been trying to come to terms with our pop past., but this show may come closest to honoring the past without glorifying it.It has a quiet sense of period and no need to drum home its points. This is one of the few network TV series with a sense of poetry, and it has two gifted stars in Timothy Daly and Eve Gordon.

MARRIED.....WITH CHILDREN (Fox, Sundays): This acerbic sitcom was styled as an anti-"Cosby Show" comedy. Then "Roseanne" came along and got the attention. But "Roseanne" only seems different from "Cosby": It's actually just as heartwarming and wholesome. "Married" is another kettle of fish. Its family members are mean to each other — in very recognizable ways — and their selfishness and pettiness are genuinely funny.

THE GOLDEN GIRLS (NBC, Saturdays): This show is on our list as a tribute to those few comedies that maintain their quality year after year. Not every episode is first-rate, but very few are duds, and there may be no other sitcom on the air that delivers as consistently as this one.

WISEGUY (CBS, Wednesdays): The only thing wrong with this nifty crime drama is that it plays opposite "China Beach," forcing a tough choice on the viewer. It has become a haven for gritty actors who want to show their skill at sleaziness and is also, among other things, the best shoot-'em-up on the tube.

Happy watching!

THE Rook Look AT GARMENT CARE

DICKIE ROOK
Pilling
Pilling is a term used to describe the formation of bundles of entangled fibers, or "pills" on the fabric surface. This is due to rubbing and abrasive action on the surface of the fabric.
On synthetic materials, the fibers are very strong and the pills do not wear off but remain on the surface. The finer fibers are often more likely to pill than the coarser fibers. If a garment is made with mostly a synthetic fiber, the tendency to pill is greater.
Pilling is usually found on the portions of the garments that receive the most rubbing and friction in use. Pilling can often be found around the neckline of a man's shirt or a woman's sweater. Pilling will also occur around the elbows or front of a sweater.
Synthetic fibers are harder to remove pilling from, than the natural fibers. Pilling on wool can be removed by careful brushing of the fabric.

Michele Will Tell

By Michele Marks

Dear Michele: Could you please tell me what part of Oklahoma actors Dale Robertson and James Garner are from? — M. HACKETT, ENID, OKLA.

Robertson was born July 14, 1923, in Harrah, Okla. Raised in Oklahoma City, he attended Oklahoma Military College. A former prizefighter, Robertson distinguished himself during a highly decorated military career while serving with Gen. George S. Patton in World War II. The former star of such Westerns as "Tales of Wells Fargo" and "The Iron Horse," Robertson was inducted into the Cowboy Hall of Fame in 1983.

James Garner was born April 7, 1928, in Norman, Okla. He quit high school and lied about his age to join the Merchant Marine. Garner left after a year, but later served in the Korean War where he was wounded twice and awarded two Purple Hearts. Following his discharge, he landed a bit part in a play that eventually led to a contract with Warner Bros. and the highly successful "Maverick" series.

Dear Michele: On the series "Columbo," Peter Falk always mentioned his wife. I believe I've seen every episode, but I never saw a Mrs. Columbo. Was there one, and if so, who played her? — DOMINIC STELLATO, PALMYRA, N.J.

Peter Falk starred as Lt. Columbo on one of the three original rotating "NBC Mystery Movies" from 1971-77. Although he often mentioned his spouse, viewers never glimpsed her. Capitalizing on the popularity of the "Columbo" series, NBC introduced "Mrs. Columbo" in 1979 with Kate Mulgrew ("HeartBeat") starring as Kate Columbo. The series, which ran less than year, underwent subsequent title changes to "Kate the Detective" and "Kate Loves a Mystery," as well as a complete character overhaul, before its December 1979 cancellation.

Dear Michele: Please solve this problem concerning actress Susan Olsen. My friends say Olsen didn't appear in the holiday special "A Very Brady Christmas" because she died of a drug overdose years ago.I read that she didn't appear because she wouldn't receive the same salary as her TV sisters, Eve Plumb and Maureen McCormick. Who's right? — J. JOSEFEK, NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

Olsen did not appear on this special Brady outing because of a contract dispute. Your friends have probably confused Olsen with actress Anissa Jones, who portrayed Buffy on the sitcom "Family Affair." Jones died on Aug. 29, 1976, of an overdose of Quaaludes and liquor. She was 18.

Dear Michele: Over the holidays, I watched Steven Bauer in "Sword of Gideon," and Michael Nouri in "Quiet Victory: The Charlie Wedemeyer Story," and couldn't help but notice their resemblance. What are their backgrounds? — JEANETTE HAUCK, SHEBOYGAN FALLS, WISC.

Both actors are blessed with abundant swarthy good looks inherited from different nationalities. Bauer was born Estaban Echevarria Samson on Dec. 2, 1956, in Havana. Three years later, he emigrated to the United States with his family. Bauer began his career on a Spanish TV sitcom in Miami, but earned sex- symbol status with an impressive film debut as Al Pacino's pal in "Scarface" (1983). He was formerly married to actress Melanie Griffith.

Nouri's good looks are Middle Eastern. He was born Dec. 8, 1945, in Washington, D.C., the son of an Iraqi father. He was raised in both Alpine, N.J., and East Hampton, N.Y. Norui got his first professional role in "Goodbye, Columbus" (1969). His career has included daytime soaps, series television, miniseries and feature films. In May 1986, Nouri married the former Vicky Light.

Dear Michele: I'm curious if the large actor who appeared as the gruesome predator in the film "The Predator," and as "Big Foot" Harry in "Harry and the Hendersons" are one and the same. The similarity in size and physical presentation were very noticeable. — CATHY CHRISTIANSEN, FALLBROOK, CALIF.

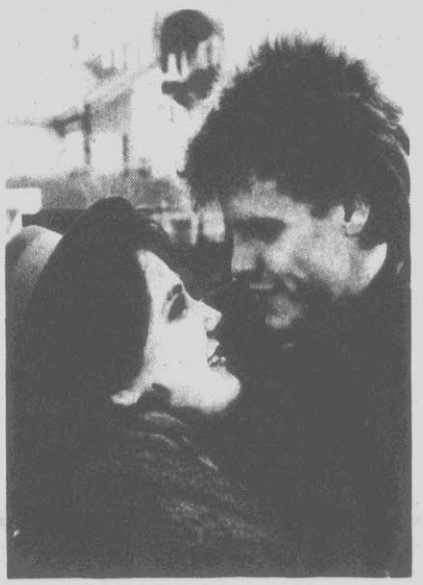

Kevin Peter Hall, who's 7 feet 2 inches tall, portrayed both characters. He also appeared in the short-lived NBC series "Misfits of Science."

Please address questions to Michele Will Tell, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 2315, Grand Central Station, New York, NY 10163. Because of the volume of mail received, personal replies cannot be sent.

Soap Scoop

'AMC' 's latest hunk gets romantic interest

By Connie Passalacqua

A few weeks back, we raved about the charisma of "All My Children" 's newest addition, Trent Bushey, who plays David Rampal, long-lost son of former monk Jeremy Hunter (played by Jean LeClerc). We weren't the only ones to spot his potential: "AMC" 's writers haven't wasted any time assimilating this new character into the show's often inbred story lines.

They have already toyed with the viewers by hinting at romantic sparks between David and his stepmother Natalie (played by Kate Collins). If they followed up on this, of course, it would be a bizarre rerun of the not-so-long-ago plot line in which Natalie, then married to Jeremy's father Alex Hunter (formerly played by Mitchell Ryan) had an affair with her stepson. There have also been scenes in which Natalie's vengeful ex-husband Palmer (played by James Mitchell) has tried a bit too hard to earn David's friendship.

David's intended love, however, is Palmer's long-lost niece, Melanie Cooney, who was born in Palmer's home town, Pigeon Hollow, and was given away at birth. Melanie will be played by Paige Turco, who has come off a long run on "Guiding Light" as goody-goody Dinah Morgan.

For those of you who are not up on "AMC" lore, the imperious Palmer Cortlandt's birth name was Pete Cooney. We'd guess that his scorned poverty-ridden birthplace, Pigeon Hollow (supposedly in West Virginia), isn't too far away from Dogpatch, U.S.A.

• Soap opera characters never celebrate their birthdays. In fact, save for "As the World Turns" 's Lily Walsh (played by Martha Byrne), soap characters are not known to have them. (And the sole purpose of Lily's is to give Oakdalers an annual excuse to pledge their allegiance to soapdom's most pampered princess.)

But all this could be ending. At the end of this month, Felicia Gallant Blake (played by Linda Dano) will publicly become 40 at a gala birthday bash. One would suppose that the always perfectly primped Felicia would be no more willing to 'fess up to her real age than a Gabor sister would, but apparently not.

The party will have an unfortunate end, however, launching a major new plot line. And we'll finally get an idea of the identity of the stranger who has been stalking Felicia all these months.

Pass the wrinkle cream!

TV Chatter

By Frank Sanello

Unfortunately, the story is all-too familiar: In 1985, New Yorkers Marilyn Klinghoffer and her wheelchair-bound husband Leon were celebrating their 36th wedding anniversary aboard the luxury liner Achille Lauro in the middle of the Mediterranean when terrorists seized the ship. Leon, who was recovering from his second stroke, was taken away from the other passengers and shot. His body was dumped into the Mediterranean. In "The Hijacking of the Achille Lauro" (NBC, Feb. 13), the scene where the terrorists seize the ship had special, real-life terror for Lee Grant and Karl Malden, whoplay the Klinghoffers. They literally did not know the identity of the men cast as the terrorists.

"One of the good things the director did was to keep us separated from the actors playing the terrorists," Grant recalls. "So we didn't see them until the day of the shooting when they came in and took over the lounge. That helped push us into the kind of situation that the (real) people were suddenly put into. I know I was certainly frightened and chilled by all the things that the cruise passengers went through."

Look for "Tour of Duty" to be a bit more realistic this season. Last year, the show was criticized for sanitizing the Vietnam War, omitting such realities as drug use, profanity and fragging (the murder of American officers by their own men). This year, it's going to be a bumpier ride, promises Ramon Franco, who plays the cocky Private Alberto Ruiz.

"Last season, the series was shot in part on a military base in Hawaii," says Franco. "We had to follow some pretty strict guidelines. This year, we don't have the cooperation of the Defense Department, so we can show a little more of what we want."

Getting Straight

Tatum O'Neal, Carey Feldman, David Birney and Drew Barrymore will star in "Getting Straight," a "CBS Schoolbreak Special" about a drug rehabilitation center for teens. O'Neal plays Kim, a former drug abuser who is now a group leader at the unit run by Dr. Rollo DeVito (Birney). Barrymore and Feldman play two teens (Susan and Jeff) looking to kick their destructive habits.

Hard Time On Planet Earth

Martin Kove will star as a convict from another planet in the one-hour CBS series "Hard Time on Planet Earth." It seems that Jesse (Kove) has been exiled from his own world because of his violent temper. Given a humanoid form to blend in with the natives, he must do his time under the supervision of a cybernetic parole officer named Control.

Sports Roundup

SUNDAY, FEB. 12

Auto Racing (CBS)

Busch Clash, from Daytona International Speedway, Daytona Beach, Fla.

NCAA Basketball (CBS)

Arizona at Oklahoma. Oklahoma is once again second in the nation in team scoring, averaging over 110 points a game. This is the kind of team that can lose a player like Stacy King for a few games and not feel the pain. King is clearly an NBA lottery player, averaging almost 26 points and 12.5 rebounds a game.

Skiing (ABC)

World Alpine Skiing Championships, from Vail, Colo.

NCAA Basketball (NBC)

UNLV at N.C. State. The Pack's Chris Corchiani was leading the nation in assists last month, but it will be interesting to see how the soph adjusts to the defensive pressure of the Runnin' Rebels.

NCAA Basketball (ABC)

Purdue at Indiana or Louisville at UCLA.

NBA Basketball (CBS)

NBA All-Star Game, from Houston. Last year's All-Star Weekend was the Michael Jordan Show on a grand scale. On Saturday, he faced down Dominique Wilkins in the Slam-Dunk championship for his second consecutive title. In the All-Star Game on Sunday, he scored 40 points, blocked four shots, had four steals and was named MVP.

PGA Golf (NBC)

MONDAY, FEB. 13

NCAA Basketball (ESPN)

Tripleheader: Syracuse at Georgetown, Ohio State at Iowa and Utah State at Cal-Santa Barbara.

SATURDAY, FEB. 18

Speed Skating, Boxing (CBS)

Men's World Speed Skating Championship, from Lake Placid, N.Y.; IBF welterweight championship fight, from Budapest, Hungary. Simon Brown defends his title against Jorge Maysonet.

NCAA Basketball (NBC)

St. John's at DePaul.

The $200,000 Greater New Orleans Classic, from Harvey, La.

NCAA Basketball (CBS)

Kansas at Duke. The key to how far a team will go in the NCAA tournament next month usually is how good their point guard is. The Blue Devils' Quin Snyder is rapidly improving, despite some initial problems adjusting to the point.

"I had to divorce my ego from scoring points and accept the fact that I can contribute in a huge way without it showing up in the boxscore," he admits.

With defensive ace Billy King graduated, Duke needs a player who can key the defensive pressure. Whether Snyder is capable of being the man on D in a tournament situation remains to be seen.

Boxing (ABC)

This IBF lightweight title fight, from Hampton, Va., pits Greg Haugen against Pernell Whitaker. It should be a bruising affair. Both these guys can take a punch and give one.

Get Smart, Again!

Don Adams, as Maxwell Smart, and Barbara Feldon, as Agent 99, are up to their old antics when "Get Smart, Again!" airs as "The ABC Sunday Night Movie," Feb. 26. They will be joined in this nostalgic romp by many of the original show's members, including Robert Karvelas (Larrabee), Dave Ketchum (Agent 13), Dick Gautier (Hymie), Bernie Kopell (Siegfried) and King Moody (Starker).

FRIDAY BEAUTY AND THE BEAST

On "Beauty and the Beast," Catherine (Linda Hamilton) is torn between loyalty and duty when she discovers a respected underground citizen committed a serious crime above ground years before. It airs Friday, Feb. 17, on CBS.

Winter Sports Bring Out The Walter Mitty In Fans

By Marty Linehan

ABC's Sunday, Feb. 12, presentation of the World Alpine Skiing Championships from Vail, Colo., is bound to bring out the Walter Mitty in many viewers, who love to imagine that they could zoom down the slopes like Switzerland's Pirmin Zurbriggen, if they were just given a chance.

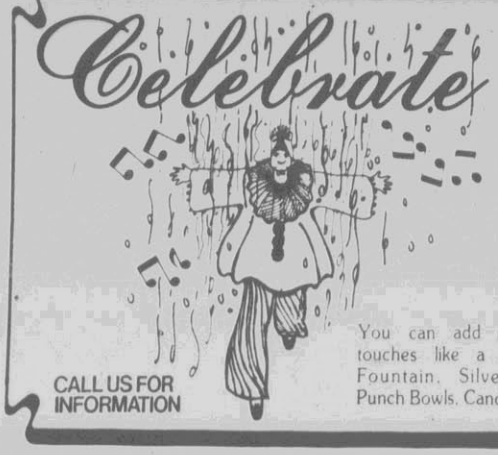

Most of us simply settle in our armchairs and dream. But there's a spot for those who are seriously interested in fulfilling one midwinter fantasy. It's Mount Van Hoevenberg at Lake Placid, N.Y., site of the 1932 and 1980 Winter Olympic Games.

The sport is bobsledding, and the Mount is the only place in the country equipped with an Olympic-size bobsled run. For $15, bobsled fans are entitled to one ride at 50 miles per hour down the slope and through the two most dangerous curves in the sport — Zig and Zag. The half-mile run takes approximately 40 seconds.

Is this something new? Not exactly. Runs have been for rent since the 1930s, via standard four-man sleds. But this year's sleds can hold six riders — one professional driver and one professional brakeman — and are strictly high tech.

The sleds are called Silver Bullets, and you can guess what beer company is backing the Lake Placid venture. (It's Coors, for you non-guzzlers!) It is estimated that 350 people a day make the run to Walter Mittyland.

This type of fantasy land is not limited to the United States. Other runs are open to the public in Calgary, Canada; St. Moritz, Switzerland; and Sarajevo, Yugoslavia. Each bobsled run is on the site of a former Winter Olympics competition.

Malden And Grant Star In 'Achille Lauro' Drama

By Kirk Nicewonger

Lee Grant brings an unusual perspective to her role as Marilyn Klinghoffer in "The Hijacking of the Achille Lauro," the NBC docudrama about the 1985 terrorist takeover of an Italian cruise ship, airing Monday, Feb. 13. In addition to an acting career that has won her an Oscar, Emmys and other awards, Grant has produced and directed such documentaries as "The Willmar 8" and the Academy Award-winning "Down and Out in America."

Many documentary-makers object to docudramas because of the format's potential distortions of fact. But Grant sees the issue differently. "What I find dangerous is what the television news departments are doing to reports of death and violence," she says. "There's not enough time for people to absorb the enormity or to grieve. There's a deep need for the audience to spend more than a few seconds on something that important. I think there's a long, very honored tradition of taking important incidents and bringing them to the screen as drama. If it's done well, there's nothing better."

Grant, a New York native, made her acting debut as a child in "L'Orocolo" at the Metropolitan Opera. While still in her teens, she played a shoplifter in the play "Detective Story," and her performance in the movie version won her an Academy Award nomination.

"It was very intimidating," Grant remembers. "I had some kind of image that I would do little tiny parts and work my way up. And to suddenly find that you're getting all this acclaim for a little bitty part just threw me completely."

SUNDAY
OUTSIDE WOMAN

Sharon Gless and Scott Glenn star in "The Outside Woman," a drama inspired by the true events in the life of Joyce Mattox, who helped her boyfriend escape from a maximum security prison. It airs Sunday, Feb. 12, on CBS.

MONDAY
B.L. STRYKER

Burt Reynolds returns to television in the role of an ex-detective who reluctantly becomes a private investigator, in "B.L. Stryker." It premieres Monday, Feb. 13, as part of the "ABC Mystery Movie."

• X-SQUARED! A magician holds up two toothpicks in the form of an X, note illustration at right. He states to his audience that he will use these toothpicks to make a square. How so?

Secret: Two bent toothpicks (with bends concealed behind performer's finger) are used to form the square, as in insert.

• SUM OFFER! To 50, add one-third of one; one-half of five attach — you have the means when this is done, to kindle any match. Explain, please.
