Gov. Martin ignores sign during teachers' rally

Teachers Shun Martin As They Take Plea For Pay Raises To Legislators

By Dennis Patterson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — North Carolina public school teachers, unhappy with what Gov. Jim Martin has said about pay raises, apparently did not want to hear any more as 5,000 of them rallied in Raleigh to protest the governor's call for a salary freeze until 1990.

Tom Egan of Red Springs in Robeson County, a former aide and first-year teacher, was among the crowd wearing green ribbons to symbolize the need for higher pay.

"We want to make sure that people know we're united behind this," Egan said. "To give (Martin) credit, he did raise salaries the last two years and we feel like he's tried to move in the right direction, but all of us were surprised, given his campaign promises, when he came up with freezing salaries until 1990."

The teachers rallied at the fairgrounds horse arena, where Martin stood in a group of protesters through speeches blasting his proposed pay freeze. Martin spokesman Tim Pittman said the governor had offered to speak to the group, but was told there was no official program.

While Martin watched from the crowd, House Speaker Joe Mavretic, D-Edgecombe; State Superintendent of Public Instruction Bobby Etheridge and officials of the North Carolina Association of Educators spoke from a platform on the arena floor.

Martin later said he had been told not to come to the rally because the schedule was tight.

"They said I would interfere with their schedule ... when in fact they wanted to have a partisan rally over there," Martin said at a news conference two hours after the teachers had disbanded. "There were some who did not want to hear what I had to say, I guaran-flat-tee you."

Teachers Back On The Job

By Cherie Evans
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Pitt County teachers were back in their classrooms today after teaming with teachers across the state in efforts aimed at gaining pay raises.

A group of Pitt teachers traveled to Raleigh on Monday evening to participate in a vigil with teachers in Wake and other counties held outside the Governor's Mansion.

The teachers also had a meeting with area representatives Monday in Greenville to request a raise of at least 10 percent this year and to request that the teacher salary schedule be unfrozen.

In the 1980-81 and 1981-82 school years, teachers automatically received a pay increase or a "step" from the state of about $100 each year depending upon experience and the grade level taught. The Legislature froze that scale after the 1982-83 year, but in 1985-86 it provided teachers with one or two "steps" in their salaries, based on experience and grade level taught.

Meanwhile, teachers have received cost-of-living increases along with other state employees as provided by the General Assembly.

The Pitt teachers also expressed their discontent with the proposed Career Ladder Program, which provides a method of evaluating teachers for advancement in status and salary.

On Tuesday, thousands of teachers from across the state met in Raleigh to talk with their legislators and Gov. Jim Martin about their request for a pay raise this year. Apparently, few Pitt teachers participated in Tuesday's activities in Raleigh.

Martin initially proposed to delay an increase in the salaries of teachers and other state employees until 1990, but recently, he said he would

Soviets End Afghan Era

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TERMEZ, U.S.S.R. — The Red Army commander for Afghanistan today led the last contingent of his troops across a border bridge, ending for the Soviets a nine-year war that claimed the lives of 15,000 of their countrymen.

"That is it — this war has come to an end," a Moscow Radio correspondent said from the scene.

About 200 cheering, windburned soldiers, clutching automatic rifles and riding mud-spattered armored personnel carriers, roared across the steel bridge spanning the Amu Darya River just 40 minutes before the noon withdrawal deadline set by an accord signed in April.

"I wasn't looking back," said Lt. Gen. Boris Gromov, the commander, after the Red Army officially left Afghanistan's army alone to face Moslem guerrillas in a 10-year-old civil war.

He rode in the last armored personnel carrier and was met halfway across the bridge by his 14-year-old son, Maxim, who carried a bouquet of flowers.

Together, they walked the final yards to Termez.

The 45-year-old general, at times appearing near tears, was kissed by a soldier, then climbed atop an armored personnel carrier to be taken to a dusty hillside for the official welcoming ceremony.

Some at the ceremony said getting involved in a neighbor's civil war was a mistake.

"It was a clear error, so many died," said senior Sgt. Asgat Husayinov, 22. He said Afghanistan was "a hell after which you fear nothing, except maybe yourself." The soldiers at the ceremony received watches sent on the orders of Defense Minister Dmitri T. Yazov.

Lt. Col. Igor Azarenok of the Defense Ministry said Gromov's group was the last to leave, ending what many Soviets have come to view as their Vietnam.

In Moscow, the Communist Party daily Pravda said Leonid Brezhnev's decision in 1979 to send troops to Afghanistan may have been an error. It suggested future commitments of Soviet forces abroad should be sanctioned by Parliament.

It called the withdrawal "the first step" toward peace in Afghanistan.

With Gromov and his troops gone, guerrilla leaders have predicted that major cities held by the Soviet-backed government will fall in a matter of weeks, if not days.

Soviet media have reported looting by troops of the 30,000-member Afghan army — and mass desertions as the U.S.-supplied guerrillas gain ground.

Contracts Approved To Raze Old Plant

By Stuart Savage
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Contracts for the demolition of the old West Third Street power plant — the facility that supplied the first electric power for the city of Greenville and a large portion of Pitt County — were approved by the Greenville Utilities Commission board Tuesday night.

The board awarded a $375,036 contract to Masterclean Inc. to remove asbestos from the power plant building and several smaller structures in the complex. A contract totaling $328,000 was awarded to L.J. Inc. for demolition of the buildings. Bids for the removal of asbestos from the structures ranged up to $580,200, while demolition bids ranged up to $526,500.

The power plant began operating in March 1905, but has remained idle since 1969. For the last few years of its operations the power plant was used only intermittently to cut down on peak system loads.

John Ferren, GUC's assistant general manager, said the asbestos removal and demolition should be completed within four to five months.

The board Tuesday also approved a sewer capital projects budget for the Brook Valley annexation area — $5.65 million — and endorsed 2.9 percent natural gas tracking rate increase.

The Brook Valley sewer project includes more than $4.43 million for construction of mains and outfalls and $650,000 for easement acquisition.

An Environmental Protection Agency grant of $1.61 million will help pay for the construction.

The natural gas rate hike endorsed at the meeting went into effect Feb. 1, when GUC's wholesale supplier, N.C. Natural Gas, increased the wholesale rate by 2.9 percent or 13 cents per million cubic feet.

The rate hike means an increase of 1.37 cents per hundred cubic feet for GUC gas customers, or about $7 for the average heating customer during the winter months.

The purchase of a water line on the County Home Road from the Eastern Pines Water Corp. for $135,000 was also approved by the board.

Other purchases approved Tuesday included 100 distribution transformers from Tennessee Valley Electric Supply Co. for $55,500.

Airport Ready To Ask Bids For $1.3 Million Expansion

By John Bare
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

After a year of planning, Pitt-Greenville Airport officials are set to open the bidding next week on the $1.3 million terminal expansion project.

Over the next 61 days, according to a tentative schedule announced at Tuesday's meeting of the Pitt-Greenville Airport Authority, the group will make drawings of the plans available to contractors, open the bidding, submit a formal grant application to the federal government and break ground on the project.

While the planning process may have lasted a little longer than expected, airport Manager Jim Turcotte said there have been very few problems.

"It might not have moved as fast as we would have like it to," he said. "But, we were real thorough with it. The FAA states that they do not believe in change orders (in construction plans after the grant money is awarded), and therefore they will not approve change orders. This is why we really had to peruse these plans to the nth degree."

This week, The Federal Aviation Administration is scheduled to complete a review of a comprehensive set of plans for the project, which will add about 11,000 square feet to the terminal, more than doubling the size of the existing facility.

"We're sitting on pins and needles hoping we'll get (approval of the review) in today," Turcotte said.

Potential contractors and subcontractors will be allowed to examine drawings of the proposed expansion Thursday, and Sunday the authority is set to formally advertise for bid proposals.

On the first notice of bids, state law requires the authority to accept a minimum of three bids each from four prime contractors: general; heating and air conditioning; plumbing, and electrical.

At a prebid conference tentatively set for March 8, architects will be in Greenville to answer questions from contractors interested in the project. The authority is to unseal the bids seven days later.

On March 15 or 16, the authority is scheduled to review the bids and consider recommendations from the architects.

Shortly after, the authority will submit a formal grant application to the FAA specifying the exact dollar and cent amount of the accepted bid. The group will also notify the approved contractors that the bids have been accepted pending approval and issuance of grant money.

"The FAA, unlike other organiza-

Five local residents were recognized Tuesday by the Greenville Jaycees for making significant contributions to the betterment of the community at the chapter's Community Awards and Jaycee Spouse Appreciation Night.

Approximately 60 people attended the annual event, which honors people whose civic and professional achievements exceed those of the average citizen.

Recognized for accomplishments in their respective categories were: John I. Brown, outstanding farmer; B.J. Cutrell, outstanding educator; Michael Thompson, outstanding teen-ager; Peter Anderson, outstanding senior citizen, and Timothy D. Copeland, outstanding public servant.

Jaycees President Michie Faulconer said the community awards originated as an effort to commend those people who have "gone that extra mile" to help improve the quality of life in the community.

"This presentation is our way of singling out those individuals and providing them the recognition that they so justly deserve," he said.

Faulconer said the honorees will be eligible to compete for state honors by the North Carolina Jaycees. Statewide winners will be selected in March.

The Jaycees said Brown produced his first tobacco crop in 1973. Since then, according to the chapter, he has distinguished himself by increasing his farm production despite suffering setbacks caused by a tornado in March of 1984.

He is a member of the American Farm Bureau Federation, The North Carolina Farm Bureau Federation and the Pitt County Farm Bureau.

Brown has also been an active member of Hooker Memorial Christian Church for the past 23 years, serving as chairman of the church board and as a deacon.

Ms. Cutrell has been an elementary education teacher in the Pitt County schools since 1975. She was chairman of the Accreditation Steering Committee, a member of the Principal's Leadership Team and served as a mentor teacher.

A member of Today's Women, she assisted in the Fourth of July activities on the Town Common in 1988. In 1987 she was co-chairman of the Christmas Charities.

Ms. Cutrell graduated cum laude from East Carolina University with a bachelor's degree in early childhood education and graduated with a 4.0 average from ECU's graduate school with a master's degree in elementary education.

She is married to Glenn Cutrell and is the mother of two children, Jason and Lauren.

Thompson, 18, is a senior at J.H. Rose High School and ranked 30th in a class of 350, according to the Jaycees.

Thompson is a member of the National Honor Society, Soccer Team, Spanish Club, Greenville City Human Relations Council and the Youth Mission Fellowship at Memorial Baptist Church.

Thompson also has worked as a volunteer at Pitt County Memorial Hospital and spent a month in Germany as part of a student exchange program.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Thompson of Greenville.

Anderson, 75, is a retired employee of the Federal Aviation Administration. A native of Brownsville, Texas, he has been active in various volunteer organizations including the Farmville Senior Council, Pitt County Council on Aging, Mid-East Commission and the Recommendations

The University of North Carolina Board of Governors has recommended the appointment of a Williamston woman and reappointment of two members to the Pitt County Memorial Hospital Board.

Recommended by the panel were Myra M. Bowen of Williamston, Robert E. Harrington of Greenville and Dr. Rose Pully of Kinston.

Ms. Bowen is the owner of Country Crafts in Williamston and is a former member of the Martin County Hospital Board. Dr. Pully is a retired family physician who practiced in Kinston and later taught in the East Carolina University School of Medicine. She was first appointed to the PCMH board in August 1987.

Harrington, chairman of the board, is in the real estate business. He was first appointed in March 1986.

The recommendations must be approved by the Pitt County Board of Commissioners.

GUC Cites Savings In Management Plan

By Stuart Savage
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Operation of the Greenville Utilities Commission's load management program saved more than $186,000 in wholesale power costs in January.

Roger Jones, director of the commission's electric systems, told GUC board members Tuesday night that load management program operations from 6:30 a.m. until 8:06 a.m. on Jan. 5 — the time of Carolina Power & Light Company's system peak — reduced the commission's wholesale power demand charge by $186,021.

According to Jones' report, $89,661 of the savings came from operation of radio-controlled "Beat-the-Peak" switches on water heaters, while $85,178 was saved through voltage adjustments. Generators at GUC's water treatment plant, Procter & Gamble Paper Products and at the Fred Webb Inc. grain elevator saved another $9,086, Jones said.

Since January 1985, GUC's load management program has saved some $6.67 million in wholesale power charges.

At the end of January, there were a total of 9,034 load management switches installed on water heaters throughout GUC's electric system, 9,306 switches in service on central air conditioning units, and 354 switches installed on electric heat strips on heat pumps, according to Jones.

Measles 'Danger Period' Ending

By Carol Tyer
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Student Health Center personnel at East Carolina University are breathing a sigh of relief as the official end of the measles "danger period" for ECU students and other Pitt County residents approaches and the incidence of flu on campus apparently has abated.

According to Kay Van Nortwick, associate director for administration for health services at ECU, Friday is the end of the period in which it would be expected that anyone exposed to either of the two cases of measles identified in Greenville over the past several weeks would contract the disease.

Virtually all inoculation of students is over, Ms. Van Nortwick said, although the vaccine is still available at the Student Health Center for any ECU student under 32 who might find that he or she did not receive the vaccine after 15 months of age.

Meanwhile, Ms. Van Nortwick said flu is back "within normal ranges." While the number of cases per week went as high as 103 several weeks ago, only 37 cases were reported last week and there seems to be even fewer this week, she said.

Dr. Tim Monroe, county health director, said he has no figures on flu for the county other than the ECU figures. "Flu is not a reportable disease," he said, "but ECU is used as a monitoring station, so we do have those figures, but only those."

Monroe said vaccine for measles is still available at the Pitt County Health Department, but the period of adults' receiving it free is now over. Anyone over 18 obtaining it from now on will be charged $5, he said.

Dr. Edgar Boyd, dean of students at Pitt Community College, said he knows of little flu at PCC now. He said he knows of a few instructors out of work and a few students absent, but that "it's certainly not epidemic out here and hasn't been."

The Pitt County schools office has no central record keeper for student health, but Geraldine Robinson, secretary at Eastern Elementary School, said flu seems about as prevalent in her school as it has been for the past several weeks. She said the school probably sends home each day three to four students who appear to have flu. No centralized records on absences and reasons for absences are kept, she said.

Arlene Wilder, receptionist at Farmville Family Clinic, said the clinic's two family physicians have seen about five cases of flu a day over the past several weeks, but hit a season's high Saturday morning with nine. This week, she said, there have been only one or two cases a day.

Ms. Wilder said the clinic staff has observed that most flu seen in the clinic is in people under 30. "I guess that means the older people are getting their flu shots and they're effective," she said.

ECU Students Arrested

Two East Carolina University students were arrested Tuesday at Raleigh-Durham International Airport and charged with trafficking LSD.

The Associated Press reported today that Quillin Gourley Davis, 20, and Kenneth Scott Lefkowitz, 22, both of Greenville, were each charged with two counts of trafficking about 3,200 doses of LSD, according to warrants. They also were charged with possessing MDMA, which is known as "ecstasy."

Davis and Lefkowitz arrived at Raleigh-Durham International Airport about 12:15 a.m. on a flight from Los Angeles, said Wake Sheriff's Capt. J.L. Brown. They were being held Tuesday in lieu of $50,000 bond.

String Workshop

Twenty-six high school string players from eastern North Carolina recently participated in the annual East Carolina University String Workshop.

Students were coached by the ECU music faculty on selections to be performed later in the year by the Eastern Regional Honors Orchestra, an ensemble composed of selected students.

Students were housed in homes of local residents, including members of the Friends of the ECU School of Music.

Faculty members coaching the workshop were Robert Hause, Selma Gokcen, John O'Brien, Paul Topper and Rodney Schmidt.

Participants from Greenville were: first violin, Katie Raab and David Thomas; second violin, Ken Duong Wu, Paula Song and Emily Davis; viola, Guy McPherson, Craig Kirkland and Lydia Coulter, and cello, Scott Thomas and Brian Marks.

Katherine Phelps Prescott, an East Carolina University employee and member of the national board of Mothers Against Drunk Driving, was among MADD board members hosting a reception for lawmakers at the Capitol in Washington, D.C., last week.

The organization's congressional appreciation reception honored contributions to the anti-alcohol and drug-impaired driving effort in the 100th Congress.

Special recognition was given to 15 senators and representatives who had key roles in the passage of measures to aid victims of impaired drivers, educate the public about the dangers of drinking and driving, and provide deterrents to DWI offenses.

Among the lawmakers who attended were two from North Carolina — Sen. Jesse Helms and Rep. Martin Lancaster of Goldsboro.

MADD is the largest organization in the nation fighting drunken and drugged driving, with nearly 400 chapters nationwide and affiliate organizations in four foreign countries.

Ms. Prescott, an administrative secretary in the ECU office of the vice chancellor-academic affairs, is southern regional representative on the MADD board of directors.

Horse Roundup

RALEIGH (AP) — Eleven wild horses removed in an October roundup from Carrot Island have been adopted while 12 others are still available for public adoption, officials announced Tuesday.

Any of the remaining dozen horses not claimed in the next two weeks will be sold at public auction at the East Carolina Stockyards near Ayden. The adoption fee is $125, said Brian Hargett of the stockyard.

A total of 33 horses were taken in the roundup. Of the 33, nine were humanely destroyed after testing positive for equine infectious anemia and one died of natural causes. The remaining horses are disease free.

How They Voted

WASHINGTON — Here's how area members of Congress were recorded Feb. 6-7 on votes that combined to kill a proposed federal pay raise.

To kill raises — By a vote of 380-48, the House passed a resolution (HJ Res 129) disapproving pay raises proposed for members of Congress, federal judges and top officials of the executive branch.

The measure was then adopted by the Senate and sent to President Bush for his signature officially killing the pay hikes. The increases were proposed in December by a federal commission and sent to Capitol Hill on Jan. 9 by President Reagan.

Congressional salaries would have risen nearly 51 percent to $135,000 under the proposal.

Craig James, R-Fla., who supported the resolution, said he was glad the House did not permit the raises to take effect automatically. "Allowing this absurd increase to go into effect without a vote would have constituted an ethical atrocity that this body would not have been able to live down," he said.

Pay raise supporter Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., told colleagues: "It's high time we stop whipping ourselves" over the pay issue because "each member of this house, Democrat and Republican, is worth a salary of $135,000."

Members voting yes wanted to kill pay raise.

North Carolina voting yes: Walter Jones, D-1, Tim Valentine, D-2, Martin Lancaster, D-3, David Price, D-4, Stephen Neal, D-5, Howard Coble, R-6, Charles Rose, D-7, W.G. Hefner, D-8, Alex McMillan, R-9, Cass Ballenger, R-10, James Clarke, D-11.

Voting no: none.

Not voting: none.

To force a pay vote — By a vote of 238-88, the House rejected a parliamentary strategy to avert a direct vote on proposed pay increases for members of Congress, federal judges and top executives branch employees.

Democratic and Republican leaders had hoped to sidestep a vote by keeping the House out of session until after the Feb. 8 date on which the raises were to take effect in the absence of House and Senate blocking action.

But with this vote on Feb. 6, the House refused to adjourn without promise of a pay vote. The upshot was that Speaker Jim Wright, D-Tex., agreed to an up-or-down vote (above) that scuttled the raises.

Members voting yes endorsed the leadership plan to allow the pay hikes to take effect Feb. 8 without a record vote in the House.

North Carolina voting yes: Walter Jones.

Voting no: Valentine, Lancaster, Neal, Coble, Rose, Hefner, McMillan, Ballenger, Clarke.

Not voting: Price.

Pay vote — By a vote of 94-6, the Senate adopted and sent to President Bush a House-passed resolution (HJ Res 129) disapproving pay raises for members of Congress, federal judges and senior executive branch officials.

Sen. Terry Sanford, D-NC, and Sen. Jesse Helms, R-NC, both voted yes to kill the pay raise.

'Truth In Preference To Fiction'

New Tool

An Experiment Worth Conducting

North Carolina's prisons might as well be locked up and the key thrown away if money isn't devoted to building an adequate number of jail cells. Lawbreakers beginning sentences and those being paroled can wave as they pass through what has become a revolving door to the state's prisons.

The state enacts tough laws against drug traffickers and spends millions of dollars and thousands of hours of manpower convicting these criminals only to have them waltz out of jail. Pitt County watched it happen when a local drug kingpin was released in November 1988 — after serving only one-tenth of his 36-year sentence.

Another example: an offender is released on early parole — freed to make room for another criminal — then breaks a law and is arrested. The cycle begins again. It's enough to make even the strongest believer in rehabilitation recoil in horror. It's certainly enough to justify the racket state lawmakers are making over the shortage of jail cells and the proposals to fund major prison construction.

'House arrest is simply one alternative to incarceration. It is a method of punishing criminals while forcing them to keep their jobs and function as productive members of society.'

But no amount of construction alone could solve the state's prison overcrowding crisis. Every lawbreaker can't be locked away. It's not practical and it's too expensive.

And an alternative to incarceration that will go on trial in Pitt County in July could, if applied correctly, provide the state a viable option. Pitt is one of 14 counties in North Carolina that will implement an electronic house arrest program this summer. It it works, the county could have a new, effective tool for punishment.

Under such a system, offenders sentenced to probation can be placed under house arrest and their whereabouts monitored by a radio signal and computers. Criminals agree to an exact schedule for each day of the week and they may go nowhere except to work, school, church or treatment centers. If they violate those orders, they go to jail.

The program has been used successfully in Wake and Forsyth counties. Both communities point to a clean record — no incidents where public safety has been compromised. The cost is enticing — $4 per day per person, compared with a $30 cost per day for each prison inmate.

With that in mind, house arrest is an experiment worth trying. But as it is tested, those charged with administrating the program should remember its limitations.

First, electronic monitoring is not foolproof. A bracelet worn by criminals allows parole officers to keep up with them. But that bracelet is effective only within 200 feet of a receiver placed in his home. If an offender leaves home on time in the morning, he could cut off the bracelet and make a run for it once he is more than 200 feet from the receiver. The probation officer wouldn't know of the violation until the person didn't return home at the specified time that evening.

Second, the success or failure of such as program will depend upon how it is used and the good judgment of those administering it. Clearly, the courts must be cautious about who is sentenced to house arrest.

Those convicted of violent crimes should not participate. Period. Habitual offenders should also be excluded. These are situations where incarceration is necessary for public safety.

Finally, house arrest and electronic monitoring will work only if they are components of a strong, well-planned, well-equipped penal system. It is not a means of emptying the state's jails. Neither should it be used as an excuse not to spend the necessary dollars to build adequate prison space.

No, house arrest is simply one alternative to incarceration. It is a method of punishing criminals while forcing them to keep their jobs and function as productive members of society.

It is a tool that, if applied judiciously and as part of a package approach to punishment, can save taxpayers money yet penalize criminals for breaking the law.

In Pitt County, where aggressive law enforcement and prosecution has produced a booming court system that has increased the number of convictions — and consequently the number of inmates — the success of house arrest could have a significant impact.

Public Forum

To the editor:

Many people who are approaching retirement have recently become aware of the Social Security "notch" problem, as evidenced by recent letters to your paper. Because of a mistake (officially termed a "flaw") in the formula Congress devised to figure Social Security benefits, people born during the years 1911-1916 received a much higher Social Security benefit than was intended. To correct the problem Congress decided in 1977 to phase down the benefit levels over a period of five years, affecting those born during the years 1917-1921 (the so-called "notch" years). These people receive less than those born 1911-1916, but more than they would have received if the mistake had not occurred.

It is unfortunate that the error resulted in people born during 1911-1916 receiving a higher-than-intended Social Security benefit. But there is no question that those born during the years 1917-1921 suffered no inequity. This was confirmed by studies conducted by the General Accounting Office and the National Academy of Social Insurance. Nevertheless, they believe they have been discriminated against and are demanding that the mistake be put back into the law. To do so would cost an estimated $55 billion over the next six years. This would seriously drain the reserves in the Social Security trust funds that are designed to pay benefits to future generations.

When one hears the complaints of those born 1917-1921, it is analogous to the man who finds a $20 bill on the sidewalk, so everybody in sight marches down to city hall and demands that officials pass out $20 bills. That doesn't make sense, nor does the complaint of the notch babies.

To the editor:

I read with interest Richard Cohen's article in your Sunday edition titled "America: The AK-47 Connection." He wrongly portrays the National Rifle Association as a support group for homicidal maniacs. He also downs the AK-47 along with other such firearms sold in the United States. Realize this: there will always be criminals — with or without any particular gun. Are we going to ban knives, axes, cars, baseball bats, and bricks as well? A killer will kill regardless of weapon availability. Where does it end? Banning a particular firearm is not the answer.

The media thrives on death and violence. Maybe those subject bring better ratings. Ratings and circulation seem to be more important than people's rights; that is, the "right to know" an objective view. Show the good and the bad. The networks would no-doubt have a miniseries on their hands if they aired a program on the countless robberies, rapes and other violent crimes which have been stopped by armed law-abiding citizens who were efficient with firearms.

Banning a particular firearm is wrong and Cohen's portrayal of the NRA is equally wrong. Two wrongs certainly don't make a right. Mr. Cohen, keep in mind what they say about opinions. All I am requesting is an objective view.

Bush's 'Willie Horton' Budget

David Broder

WASHINGTON — The budget that President Bush has sent to Congress is a lot like the campaign that elected him. It substitutes clever tactics for sound long-range strategy. It discomfits the Democrats more than it serves the country.

In the broadest terms, it confirms the suspicion that Bush has nothing very much he hopes to accomplish here at home. If he makes his mark in the history books, he intends to do it in foreign policy — not in domestic affairs.

Those may seem sweeping conclusions to draw barely a month into the new administration. But if there is one rule that experience has demonstrated in the postwar period, it is that the largest accomplishments in domestic policy are likely to come immediately after a President's first election.

There are exceptions: Eisenhower got the interstate highway program through Congress toward the end of his second term; the Environmental Protection Agency was created two years after Richard Nixon took office.

'Many Democrats know taxes are needed, but the party is paralyzed by fear. And that paralysis — so similar to the ailment that afflicted the Dukakis campaign last summer — lets Bush win the tactical battle. 'This is a "Willie Horton" budget, a smart tactic for putting the opposition on the defensive. But there's more to government than that. Bush has squandered an opportunity to put his mark on the future.'

But the Presidents who have left large thumbprints on the direction of domestic policy, such as Lyndon Johnson and Ronald Reagan, have done their most significant work in their first year in office. That is when the voters' decision registers most strongly in Washington and the chances are best of breaking the inertial forces in the capital.

But to break those forces, one must have a goal. Bush slid through the autumn campaign without defining such a goal, and none is discernible in the budget he unveiled last week.

Budget director Richard G. Darman acknowledged as much when he told reporters last week that the document he produced should not be read "as a description of the next four or eight yeears." Darman may be right in claiming that it is more detailed and comprehensive than any other newly elected President's fiscal blueprint. But it's all fine print. There's no bold headline in the whole 193 pages. It's a backing-and-filling budget, which tackles head-on neither the deficit problem nor any other policy issue. It seems more designed to meet the arbitrary 1990 deficit target set by the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law than any long-term objective of the man who is supposed to be leading America.

In defense policy, it offers a one-year freeze on inflation-adjusted spending, but is silent on the policy choices that clamp down may require. By holding out the promise of a more liberal Pentagon allowance in subsequent years, it tempts the military planners to postpone the hard decisions and nickel-and-dime their way through this one lean year.

In domestic policy, it offers two big "Nos," and a lot of little "Yeses." It says no to cost-of-living allowances for military and civilian government retirees, and it tells the hospitals and doctors they will have to swallow some $5 billion of the rising costs of Medicare.

On the increase side, there are dibs and dabs of money for a variety of social programs ranging from acid-rain cleanup and AIDS research to low-income feeding and health programs. These are modest down payments on what was, even in Bush's campaign rhetoric, a modest program of domestic improvements.

They're all good causes. But there's not a hint that Bush or his associates have a real passion to do any one thing well or an idea that could lead to a breakthrough on any of the intractable problems facing the country's schools, cities, transportation systems or trade practices. Most of all, the budget tacitly concedes that Bush will settle for tiny, marginal improvements in the federal deficit. Even those depend on optimistic, if not totally implausible, economic assumptions. He simply has not summoned the will to break the back of that chronic drain on our economic future.

For all that, Bush and Darman have crafted a set of budget tactics which throw the Democrats on the defensive. The "flexible freeze" that served to disguise budget choices during the campaign has taken on a new wrinkle. Bush specifies his preferred add-ons, and leaves it to the congressional Democrats to single out the places where compensating cuts in discretionary domestic programs should be made.

The Democrats are screaming foul, but they know they've been had. Essentially, Bush has borrowed the idea Sen. Pete Domenici (R-N.M.) put forward three years ago of requiring budget-makers to "trade in and trade up," cutting or discarding ineffective or outdated programs to pay for new ones of greater importance. It was a sound idea then and it still is.

But Bush has changed to rules to let the President designate winners, while Congress bears the onus of naming the losers. Congress hates making such choices, of course, and would prefer not to. But to avoid choices, the Democrats will have to find more revenues, and that could mean t-a-x-e-s.

Many Democrats know taxes are needed, but the party is paralyzed by fear. And that paralysis — so similar to the ailment that afflicted the Dukakis campaign last summer — lets Bush win the tactical battle.

This is a "Willie Horton" budget, a smart tactic for putting the opposition on the defensive. But there's more to government than that. Bush has squandered an opportunity to put his mark on the future.

To Index Or Not: A Big Hole In State Tax Restructuring

Paul O'Connor

RALEIGH— Legislators proposing a major restructuring of the state personal income tax system left an important hole in the plan they introduced. They did not decide whether the state should automatically adjust the new tax structure every year to account for the annual tax increase imposed by inflation.

On one side, there is sentiment for automatically "indexing" the tax structure to keep pace with inflation. That would keep tax bills from rising every year and keep the new tax system simple.

On the other side, there are serious concerns that if the General Assembly does index, it could seriously undermine future state tax collections and put the state's fiscal stability in danger.

Sen. Dennis Winner, D-Buncombe, one sponser of the tax reform, says there is merit in setting the state's exemptions and deductions at the levels used for federal taxes, and then indexing. That way, every year, exemptions and deductions would rise with inflation — as they do on the federal tax structure — and the two systems would be in line.

That's important because the idea for tax reform began with Winner's desire to simplify state income tax reporting. As Winner's plan is designed, most state taxpayers, after completing their federal returns, would need only three more calculations, on a very simple state tax form, to file their state returns. If the state does not index, and therefore allows its exemptions and deductions to become different from those in the federal system, then a few more calculations would be needed on state returns.

An indexed system would also provide a tax cut every year, and that would prove politically popular.

These bills were prepared by the legislature's Tax Fairness Study Commission which wants to eliminate some of the tax inequities that have been created by four years of inflation. Under the proposal, taxes for low-income families would be cut significantly, or eliminated. If the system is not indexed, future inflation will gradually reinstitute those inequities.

Those who oppose indexing are very concerned about the fiscal effects it could have on the state.

"Indexing leaves us too vulnerable," says Rep. George Miller, D-Durham, chairman of the House Subcommittee on Ways and Means which is handling the tax reform bill. "South Carolina had some real problems with it a few years ago."

David Crotts, the legislature's chief economist, estimated that if indexing were in place for this calendar tax year the state would collect $50 million to $55 million less than it currently anticipates. That would cause serious damage to state spending plans this year considering how tight revenues are.

Indexing is so controversial, says Rep. Sharon Thompson, D-Durham, one of the sponsors of the bill, that the study commission did not give it much consideration. The bill involves a great many changes without indexing and she does not want to weigh it down with any more. "I think that would be just another issue that would cause more differences of opinion," she says.

Winner, who is undecided on automatic indexing, says a compromise position may be to keep indexing out of the bill with the understanding that in 1990, and in subsequent year, the assembly could decide on indexing one year at a time.

Such a plan would leave it to future assemblies to decide when the state can afford a tax cut and when it cannot. Congress could index federal taxes budget does not have to be balanced. At the state level, a balanced budget requirement probably dooms any automatic indexing law.

The Best Of All Possible Adventures, Summer & Winter

Tom Raum

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine (AP) — As the helicopter "Marine One," bound from Pease Air Force Base in Portsmouth, N.H., reached the Atlantic Ocean at twilight and whirred north along the rocky Maine coast, its primary passenger suddenly grew animated.

President Bush was headed home. Even though he and his wife Barbara have lived in 31 homes in 17 cities, the comfortable three-story gray shingle and stone house on the ocean is the only one they own.

"You could see the sparkle in his eyes as he was getting closer to home. He started pointing out houses of friends and neighbors as we got closer. He loves being back in Kennebunkport," said Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater.

Fitzwater was aboard the presidential chopper with Bush last weekend as the chief executive made his first visit back — as president — to his family retreat, a stop on the way back to Washington from a visit to Ottawa, Canada.

But the seacoast village — permanent population 1,200 — had changed even since the Bushes visited there last Thanksgiving.

No longer can motorists drive unimpeded along Ocean Avenue, which winds along the coast right past the Bush compound on a rock-bound promontory known as "Walker's Point." The road passes so close that you can easily pick out individuals on the lawn of the house.

At night when the president is present, the road — a main thoroughfare — is closed now where it passes the Bush home, except to "authorized personnel" or to the three other families who live in the secured stretch. They must carry large cards identifying themselves as residents.

Security officers standing by bright floodlights at two checkpoints divert other traffic onto a back-road detour.

During daylight hours, drivers are stopped and told they can proceed, but only if they don't stop.

A new Secret Service command post sits on the grounds, and a Coast Guard cutter maintains a constant vigil offshore.

Bush memorabilia now dominates windows in the stores bordering Dock Square and along Route 9 on either side of the drawbridge that crosses the Kennebunk River in the center of this summer vacation spot.

The items range from "Kenne-BUSH-port" sweatshirts to towels showing a Bush character lounging in a beach chair, to cookbooks featuring recipes from Barbara Bush (who insists she doesn't cook) to postcards depicting the "Summer Home of the President."

The postcards were wrong. It was deep February. Snow was on the ground. And, even though only three rooms of the house are heated in the winter, the Bushes were clearly intent on not limiting their visits to the warm months.

Nor were they about to spend all their time at home. The Bushes last weekend walked into town to buy household items at a pharmacy, visiting a lobster market on the way and causing something of a stir all along the 1.5-mile route.

They also attended services at the tiny two-room First Congregational Church of Kennebunkport on Sunday, where the first lady responded in a clear voice to a request by the Rev. Robert Howes for any news of interest to the congregation.

"We had a new baby," Barbara Bush said, referring to their 11th grandchild, Ashley Bush, who was born to Neil and Sharon Bush of Denver earlier this month.

Bush has told townspeople that he intends to keep coming back to the house on the coast, where he has been coming for every one of his 64 summers except once during World War II.

He also promised to drive his speedboat slowly when in the channel in the Kennebunk River, to permit lobstermen to continue to work their traps in the cove next to his house, and to "try not to hold up traffic."

"Barbara and I want to be good neighbors," he told a town rally when he visited last Thanksgiving.

The Bush compound is set on more than six acres of seashore land that was purchased originally by the maternal grandfather after whom Bush was named, George Herbert Walker Sr., a prominent stockbroker.

The Bushes bought the house in 1981 from his mother, Dorothy Walker Bush.

During their marriage, the Bushes have owned two houses in Midland, Texas, three in Houston, one in Washington and two in Kennebunkport.

All have been sold except for the one on the Maine coast, which Bush has valued at about $1 million. (The overall compound is worth $3.5 million, but Bush's mother still owns the land).

In his 1987 biography, "Looking Forward," Bush said that while he was growing up, "Maine in the summer was the best of all possible adventures."

As president, it still seems to be, and not just in the summer.

Legislators Doubt Impact Of Teachers' Protest

By John Flesher
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Protesting teachers have focused the state leadership's attention on their demand for better pay, but legislators say the placard-waving, slogan-chanting demonstration may have little impact when decision time comes.

"In the final analysis, I doubt if they're helping their cause very much," Sen. Wendell Murphy, D-Duplin, said Tuesday as hundreds of teachers trooped through the Legislative Building visiting their hometown lawmakers to lobby for higher salaries.

Murphy and some other legislators said they detected an atmosphere of intimidation in the demonstration that might hurt teachers in the long run, though all said the General Assembly should approve as big a raise as possible.

"Marching doesn't impress me," Rep. Sam Hunt, D-Alamance, said. "I already understand they're unhappy. But we can't give them what we don't have."

But Sen. Tom Taft, D-Pitt, said the teachers' strong showing would put pressure on legislators — and on Gov. Jim Martin — to come up with an improved salary package.

"It's heightened the attention to the seriousness of the teachers' feelings," Taft said. "It's going to be more difficult for the administration and the Legislature to say no."

Some legislators handed out apples and others wore green lapel ribbons and arm bands Tuesday in support of the teachrs.

"It's not safe to be on the street without it," Rep. John McLaughlin, D-Mecklenburg, said, gesturing at his arm band as he worked his way through a crowded corridor.

Some lawmakers said the teachers' anger was making talk of a tax increase more feasible. Howard Haworth, chairman of the State Board of Education, has said it should be considered. Bob Scott, a former governor and current chairman of the community college system, strongly endorsed a sales tax increase Tuesday during a meeting of the Joint Appropriations Subcommittee on Education.

"The needs are so obvious," Scott said. "The longer we delay, we're just putting off the inevitable."

But Rep. Trip Sizemore, R-Guilford, said money alone would not solve the public schools' problems.

"The public's ... wondering whether education is doing its job at any funding level," Sizemore said. "You hear, 'If you throw money at it, what are you going to get for it?' More money is not the answer for education. Reform and focus is."

Rep. Dave Diamont, D-Surry, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee and the only legislator who is a public school teacher, said the teachers' action "sends a clear message: the governor's got to provide some leadership."

Martin is paying the price for leading teachers to believe during his campaign that he would move their salaries toward the national average, Diamont said.

But Hunt said, "If we're going to go back and make an issue out of every campaign promise that was made ... and didn't materialize, there's gonna be a lot of marching."

"We're going to do all we can for teachers, but when you start seeing a lot of this stuff it tends to dampen your enthusiasm," said Rep. John Church, D-Vance. "I've heard a lot of comments to that effect."

Sen. Ralph Hunt, D-Durham, who taught high school mathematics for 12 years, wore a green arm band and praised the teachers' activism.

"It's a positive expression of concern that teachers have ... about being paid for a good day's work," Hunt said. "I'm in great sympathy with the teachers, and whatever I can do for them I want to do."

Students Support Pay Plea

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE — Teachers at Quail Hollow Junior High School who protested a proposed freeze in their salaries found support from an unlikely source — their students.

"I think they should get a raise," said Robert Marze, an eighth-grader at Quail Hollow, as he helped paint a heart and a dollar sign on a large rock in front of the school as a show of support for the teachers.

"Garbage men get paid more than teachers," said Marze, who is in Suzanne Newsom's class for students who are considered at risk of dropping out. "Who do you want to be paid more, the teacher who helps your child become a better person or the guy who picks up your garbage?"

Fellow student Chris James put down his paint brush.

"They have a real hard job," he said. "I wouldn't do what they do for the money they get."

Newsom said Gov. Jim Martin's 11th-hour announcement to seek a smaller raise for teachers this year would do little to appease her peers.

Martin — who had recommended a pay freeze for teachers until April 1990 — changed his stand Monday and called for a 4.5 percent increase to go into effect as early as July.

"I don't think 4.5 percent is enough," said Newsom, who like Principal Ben Greene was wearing a symbolic green sweatshirt with the words "Have a Heart For Teachers" written on front. "I've been teaching here for four years and I make as much as a first-year teacher."

Twenty-three teachers and aides at Quail Hollow took a personal day off Tuesday to travel to Raleigh, where they joined about 5,000 educators from across the state who were lobbying Martin and the N.C. General Assembly for higher wages.

Altogether, some 1,700 teachers from the North Carolina's largest school district took Valentine's Day off to participate in the rally. So many left Bladen County that the school board canceled classes for the day.

Despite the loss of one-fourth of the district's total work force, schools spokeswoman Myra Joines said classes were held without a hitch thanks to the efforts of thousands of substitute teachers that included politicians, college professors, parents and business leaders.

"It was a productive school day," she said. "The phones were quiet. We only needed 13 additional substitutes this morning."

Tuesday's rally was spearheaded by teachers from the Charlotte-Mecklenburg school system following Martin's recommendation last month to delay teachers' and state employees' pay raises until April 1990.

Barbara Lockwood, who left teaching four years ago, returned so some of her former colleagues could march in Raleigh.

Candy Agent Says Alcohol Has No Place In Sweets

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — Open the doors to alcohol-laced candy and you soon could be facing 60-proof chili, 44-proof bread and "buzz burgers," a House committee was told.

"Alcohol in candy is just the tip of the iceberg," Jon Hurst, representing Hershey Food Corp., said in opposing allowing up to 5 percent alcohol in candy sold in North Carolina.

Hurst told a stony-faced House Commerce Subcommittee on Alcoholic Beverage Control the nation is in the throes of surging alcohol use.

"An article in the New York Times last year talked of a California chemist who has developed a process in which he can cook a product and not burn off any added alcohol," he said. "The chemist had made 60-proof chili, 40-proof mayonnaise and 44-proof bread. The article went on to say that a food market in California has begun selling what they call "Buzz-Burgers," which come with a warning against operating machinery for one hour.

"Public policy officials must now begin to deal with the reality that these products are alcoholic beverages disguised as food, and to make policy decisions aimed at keeping the products illegal, or at least out of reach of children."

Rep. Bob Brawley, R-Iredell, downplayed the importance of allowing the alcohol in chocolate-covered cherries marketed by Beacon — which has a plant in his district.

"I have eaten the candy. My children have eaten it. I saw nothing particularly wrong with the candy," Brawley said.

It would take 49 pieces of candy — at a cost of $6 per 15-piece box — to get one ounce of alcohol, he said. An adult would have to eat a pound-and-a-half to even register on a Breathalyzer test, Brawley added.

Besides, opening up sales in North Carolina could provide Beacon with $2 million a year in additional sales, resulting in $100,000 a year in state sales taxes and creating 20 to 30 jobs, he said.

Andy Cohen, president of Beacon, said most children don't even like the candy, which is designed for "adult tastes." Besides, the bill would limit sales to hose over age 21.

But Rep. Michael Decker, R-Forsyth, said he rejected "the idea that we are purporting that alcohol is in some way no more dangerous than candy."

Hurst said research showed even the tiny amounts of alcohol in the candy threaten recovering alcoholics, pregnant women and children.

He painted a picture of children biting the tops off candy and gleefully chugging down the contents.

Taft Wants Study Of Bill On Fetuses

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — A bill that would require proper disposal of fetal remains, such as cremation, burial or incineration, has hit a snag in the state Senate and is going back to a committee for more study.

The Senate voted 31-15 Tuesday to return the bill to the Human Resources Committee, which approved its last week. The vote came despite the sponsor's protest that further study was unnecessary.

But Sen. Tom Taft, D-Pitt, said the panel should take a closer look at an amendment he is pushing which would assure that pharmaceutical companies could use fetal material in the manufacture of drugs.

"This is not an effort to kill the bill," Taft said.

He said numerous questions had arisen, such as whether it contradicts federal law or regulations set by the Food and Drug Administration.

But Sen. A.D. Guy, D-Onslow, sponsor of the bill, said there was no reason to pull it from the floor.

"It's a simple bill," Guy said. He charged that Taft's proposed amendment on pharmaceutical use of fetuses was a veiled effort to permit making them ingredients in cosmetics.

The amendment "is simply for the purpose of creating from the cells taken from fetuses to provide cold cream to eradicate wrinkles on old folks," he said. "I think the bill is all right just like it is."

Retirement

DANBURY, N.C. (AP) — The superintendent of Stokes County schools for the past 12 years said Tuesday that he plans to retire next summer.

Kent S. Moseley, 58, will resign effective June 30.

R. Randy Martin, the chairman of the Stokes County Board of Education, said that the board should decide Thursday how to begin the search for a successor.

Hatcher

BLACKFOOT, Idaho (AP) — A Tuscarora Indian wanted on kidnapping charges in North Carolina has confirmed that he has left the Fort Hall Indian Reservation where he had sought asylum from extradition, according to a published report.

Eddie Hatcher called The Morning News in Blackfoot Tuesday and said he may seek asylum in another country, but did not say where, the paper reported in Wednesday's editions.

Hatcher has been charged with 14 counts of second-degree kidnapping stemming from a Feb. 1, 1988, takeover of The Robesonian newspaper in Lumberton, N.C. He came to the reservation in early January to seek protection under Shoshone-Bannock extradition laws.

Soul City

SOUL CITY, N.C. (AP) — Plans are forming to develop about 100 acres of the Soul City area of Warren County into an industrial and commercial project that could provide 1,300 new jobs and 85 new single-family homes, an official said.

Oliver W. Brown, president of the Broma Corp., said his firm is developing the project for the Washington-based Agricultural Investment Fund.

The Agricultural Investment Fund has bought some of the former Soul City property from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, which helped fund the "new city" project in the 1970s.

Soul City was the brainchild of Floyd McKissick, a North Carolina Central University graduate and Durham civil-rights activist, who hoped to build a city in western Warren County that would be organized and run primarily by black citizens.

Between 1972 and 1979, the Department of Housing and Urban Development, along with other federal and state government agencies, put about $29 million into development of Soul City. The project, however, failed to attract adequate private investment to make it work.

Woman Killed

RALEIGH (AP) — An Apex woman was killed Monday her car slipped off some blocks and crushed her, according to Deputy J.S. Newsome of the Wake County Sheriff's Department.

Ellen Capps Newcomb, 46, was working on the transmission of a Chevrolet Corvette at her husband's auto shop when the accident occurred, officers said. A spokeswoman for Wake Medical Center said Newcomb died at the scene at approximately 1:30 p.m.

Vehicle Drops

THOMASVILLE, N.C. (AP) — An 80-year-old Thomasville man died Monday when the car he was repairing dropped on him, authorities said.

James Segers died about 5:30 p.m., according to a spokesman for the Thomasville Police Department. He was pronounced dead at Community General Hospital.

Cpl. G. Driggers, who investigated the death, said Segers was working on the brakes of his older-model Datsun station wagon when the jack collapsed.

Court Review

WINSTON-SALEM (AP) — The North Carolina Supreme Court will review a lower court's decision to overturn Darryl Eugene Hunt's murder conviction in the 1983 beating death of a Winston-Salem man.

In October 1987 Hunt, 23, was convicted of second-degree murder in the death of Arthur Lee Wilson, who was beaten to death outside a drinkhouse in Winston-Salem. Two other men were convicted in the same death in 1986.

Last October, the N.C. Court of Appeals ruled that Judge William H. Helms gave improper instructions to the jury in Hunt's case and set aside the conviction. The Attorney General's Office appealed that decision to the Supreme Court, which agreed Thursday to a discretionary review of the case.

Hunt was also convicted of first-degree murder in the 1984 killing of Deborah Sykes.

Wilderness Society Says Planning For Southern Forests Is Flawed

By William E. Schulz
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — The government must begin developing a regional approach to protecting the beautiful and vital Southern Appalachian national forests and stop trying to turn them into tree farms, The Wilderness Society said today.

"The Wilderness Society maintains that plans for the Southern Appalachian national forests are seriously flawed," the Society said in a report on the six forests.

U.S. Forest Service plans for those forests "continue to threaten the region's environment with extensive clearcutting, road construction, habitat conversion and fragmentation," the report said.

The forests offer recreation and wildlife benefits not found anywhere else in the area, it said.

The forests support a tremendous variety of plants and animals, ranging from tropical ferns to Arctic lichens. There are 130 species of trees, as many as in all of Europe, the Washington-based conservation group said in its report "Mountain Treasures At Risk" written by Laura Jackson and released today at its Southeastern regional headquarters in Atlanta.

The report covered the Jefferson National Forest in Virginia, the Cherokee, Pisgah and Nantahala forests in Tennessee and North Carolina, the Sumter in South Carolina and the Chattahoochee in Georgia, an area which essentially surrounds the Great Smoky Mountains National Park.

"We want them to manage them as an ecosystem, not just isolated units," said Peter Kirby, Southeastern regional director for the Wilderness Society.

He said the society did the study because the U.S. Forest Service "with its 30,000 people, felt it didn't have the resources to do it."

While demand for wilderness recreation is increasing, Forest Service plans are to designate 60 percent of the areas suitable for official designation as wilderness areas as suitable for timber production.

In the past decade the Forest Service doubled the volume of timber sold from the six forests, from 63 million board feet in 1977 to 126 million in 1986 and plans call for doubling it again in 10 years and increasing it more than 350 percent by 2030.

The six forests provide essentially the only wilderness areas in the region. Private forests provide early succession habitat throughout the region.

The Forest Service plans are to build roads in remote areas which do not yet have official wilderness designation from Congress and cut the old trees there — essentially the only old growth forests in the area.

It plans to build 3,263 miles of roads in addition to the current 4,951 miles.

The roads are built to sell timber. Balancing the cost against the sale price, the Forest Service reported a $5.5 million loss on timber sales from the Southern Appalachian forests in fiscal 1987.

The service itself admitted private forests could produce the timber it sells, the report says.

It says the Forest Service views wildlife management "primarily as an adjunct of timber production" on each individual forest when a regional approach to wildlife management is needed.

There is no regional approach to forest planning with regard to wilderness, the report said.

"By analyzing the ecological inventory of an entire region, planners could better ensure protection of the greatest variety of representative ecosystems. Wildlife dependent on undisturbed land, such as the black bear, may require refuge in more than one forest. The Forest Service should insure that wilderness areas are not isolated from one another, but connected by natural corridors such as waterways and other protected travel routes."

Sen. Wyche Fowler, D-Ga., chairman of the agriculture subcommittee on conservation and forestry, said in a statement that he was "greatly disturbed" by the findings of the report.

"It makes no sense to spend millions of dollars on roadbuilding and logging operations only to encroach on our rare remaining wild areas, damage other forest resources, and ultimately lose money for the taxpayers," he said.

Fowler said his subcommittee plans "to take a close look at eliminating below cost timber sales altogether and to re-evaluate roadbuilding needs."

The Wilderness Society report makes 10 recommendations for the forests' future:

—The forests should be managed to provide regional benefits, including wildlife habitat and recreation, not available on private lands.

—Set up an outside task force to evaluate the service's management plans.

—Establish more wilderness areas to meet recreational demand and protect biological diversity.

—Phase out timber sales which cost the taxpayers millions of dollars per year.

—Stop road construction.

—Reform forestry practices to end mass stands of the same kinds of trees all planted the same year.

—Rehabilitate forests altered into tree farms.

—Put more emphasis on management to protect the natural beauty of the forests.

—Protect and enhance biological diversity with higher population goals for wildlife that needs remote habitat, such as the black bear.

—Restructure the Forest Service budget to provide more balance among the multiple uses of the forests, including recreation and wildlife management.

Presbyterians Debate Request For Grant To Tuscarora Group

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREENSBORO — The Tuscarora Indians met all the requirements of a minority group applying for Presbyterian money, a Pembroke minister says, adding that opposition to the donation comes from a small number of regional Presbyterians.

"These are the descendants of some of the same people who denied the ancestors of present Indians in the county the right to vote and the right to own property because they were Indians," said the Rev. John Robinson of Pembroke.

"The Presbyterian Church is not taking sides in a Lumbee-Tuscarora argument," he said. "The Presbyterian Church 20 years ago established a fund for communities of poor and oppressed people to determine their own future."

But opponents fo the church's $48,650 grant to the tribe say the Presbyterian Church (USA) should not involve itself in an attempt by the Tuscaroras to receive federal recognition because it is not clear who can claim membership in the tribe.

"There are at least five groups of mixed-blood Indians in eastern North Carolina who claim to be the true Tuscarora tribe," said the Rev. Parker Williamson, pastor of Lenoir's First Presbyterian Church.

"For the Presbyterian Church, which knows nothing about this, to arbitrarily choose one of five groups vying for that claim and give them $49,000 ... is just a waste of the church's money," said Williamson, who also edits The Presbyterian Layman, a conservative newspaper with a national circulation of 630,000.

The paper featured the controversy in its January-February issue, which includes a three-page spread on Timothy Jacobs and Eddie Hatcher's armed takeover of The Robesonian newspaper office last February. Jacobs and Hatcher — who both claim to be Tuscaroras — took 20 people hostage in what they called an effort to highlight the plight of Indians in Robeson County.

By that time, a group of Tuscaroras had already applied for a grant from the National Committee on the Self-Development of People of the Presbyterian Church (USA). The committee gave them money for genealogical research to help the Tuscaroras support their claim for federal recognition. Such status would make the 10,000 Indians in North Carolina who claim the Tuscarora name eligible for federal grants in education, community development, housing and social programs.

Hunt admits that many Lumbees — a name the state government gave Indians in eastern North Carolina in 1956 — probably can trace their lineage to the Tuscarora tribe.

"They are really our same blood," Hunt said. "They just choose to go under a manufactured name from the state government. I refuse to go under a state-manufactured name."

Security guards escort North to trial on Tuesday

Judge Says Administration Should End North Trial Or Stay Out Of It

By Pete Yost
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The judge in the Oliver North case says that if the Justice Department is intent on preventing the trial, it should do so now instead of trying to "chop up the case" with constant censorship demands.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell on Tuesday rejected a Justice Department bid to suppress evidence which North's lawyers say will show a Reagan administration coverup of secret attempts to help the Nicaraguan Contras.

North's lawyers revealed more of their planned defense on Tuesday, saying that the Reagan administration offered "CIA covert support" to Central American nations if they would help the Contras during a period in which Congress had banned U.S. aid.

The alleged "quid pro quo" added a detail to the scenario outlined earlier this week by North's attorneys, who say Reagan and other top administration officials ordered that the arrangements be kept secret.

The Justice Department is trying to suppress such information, saying disclosures could harm national security. North's lawyers say the information is essential to his defense.

Four of the 12 criminal charges against North involve allegedly misleading Congress in 1985 and 1986 by denying reports of National Security Council efforts on behalf of the Contras. Three other counts say he obstructed Congress, an inquiry by the attorney general and destroyed documents in November 1986 by shredding material that concerned aid to the Contras.

Gesell said Tuesday that he won't let Attorney General Dick Thornburgh "chop up the case" with a series of affidavits barring disclosure of information each time North tried to introduce evidence the government found objectionable.

He noted that Thornburgh could invoke the Classified Information Procedures Act and bar any such disclosures. That, however, could make any trial of North impossible.

"He can act now if he wants," Gesell told Thornburgh deputy Stephen Saltzburg.

Otherwise, Gesell said, decisions on possible challenges to classified information will be left to independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, who is handling the case against North.

Saltzburg had proposed a three-step process for dealing with classified information.

He said the government, through Walsh, would first seek to fashion for the court a summary of facts. Failing that, the prosecution would then seek to censor portions of the material and as a last resort have the attorney general object to disclosure of the specific information in question.

The judge rejected the last part of Saltzburg's proposal, saying the only time the attorney general may come into court with an affidavit is to terminate a count or terminate the case.

Under that drastic procedure, once the attorney general files the affidavit, the court would have to order North not to disclose the information on national security grounds, even though it is relevant to his defense. That could lead to dismissal of charges.

The department was reviewing Gesell's order, meeting with the independent counsel and "reviewing the options," said Thornburgh aide David Runkel.

An administrative stay of the case was issued Sunday at the Justice Department's request by Chief Justice William Rehnquist and the full Supreme Court meets privately Friday to consider a further stay.

Gesell earlier this week noted the possibility that North had been put "between a rock and a hard place" by his superiors, questioned by Congress and others about the Contra aid efforts but told by his bosses in the Reagan administration to keep the arrangements secret.

North lawyer Brendan Sullivan says the arrangements and the alleged coverup must be presented to the jury in opening statements and detailed in cross-examination if North is to have a fair trial.

The inducement held out to Central American nations "in return for their military support for the resistance was, in part, CIA covert support," Sullivan said Tuesday in a court filing.

Winter Deluge Leaves 3 Dead

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

An unusual winter deluge that left three people dead in Tennessee and Kentucky raised the threat of more flooding from Indiana to Texas today as hot southern air met cold northern air with dangerous results.

The relentless rain filled rivers to overflowing, closed roads and forced the evacuation of a hospital. Although it brought relief to drought-stricken areas of Tennessee and Texas, for many people it was too much of a good thing.

"There have been very few floods people can remember worse than this," Sen. Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn., said Tuesday night as he toured hard-hit sections not far from his home inCarthage.

Wilson County, just east of Nashville, was drenched with nearly 6 inches of rain. One woman, 62-year-old Sophia Payer, drowned when she ignored police warnings not to cross flooded U.S. Highway 231, authorities said.

The rainfall also caused a power outage in the county that forced 70 people to be evacuated from a hospital in Lebanon. Schools were canceled and police reported 80 vehicles stalled on flooded roads.

Flash flood watches were in effect early today from northeast Texas to southern Ohio, ranging along a line that crossed through Arkansas, Tennessee, Kentucky, Illinois, Indiana and West Virginia.

Rivers overflowed in central and western Kentucky. Residents were evacuated along the Green River and Little River; merchants in New Haven, Ky., began sandbagging the banks of the Rolling Fork River.

Many rivers in Kentucky, Tennessee and Indiana are expected to flood later in the week as their water levels continue to rise.

"The ground is pretty well saturated," National Weather Service meteorologist Bob Watson said in Paducah, which received more than half a foot of rain between midnight Sunday and late Tuesday.

A nun, Sister Robert Edlin of the Sisters of Loretto, was caught in high water as she drove along Kentucky 605 about 30 miles southeast of Louisville. Authorities said she was rescued as the water reached the depth of her dashboard. She was treated at hospital in Bardstown for minor hypothermia.

Two people in Kentucky died Monday when their car went out of control in heavy rain near the Indiana border.

Forecasters in Tennessee said the downpour should end a drought that has lingered for four years. Nashville's rainfall for the year is approaching 9 inches, 3 above normal. The 4.19 inches it received Tuesday marked the most rain in a 12-hour period during the past 10 years, weather officials said.

In west Texas, the storm brought rain to areas that had seen few drops since last August.

Study Indicates Few Students Can Apply Knowledge In Way That Assures Success

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

American students have improved their basic math, reading, writing and science skills in the past 20 years, but few can apply that knowledge in ways that would assure their success in college, careers or daily life, according to a national study released Tuesday.

Virtually all students ages 9 through 17 can read simple text, perform basic addition and know everyday facts about science. But relatively few older students can use algebra, compute how much change they are owed after ordering two items from a menu, understand a newspaper essay, write an adequate persuasive letter or apply their scientific knowledge to solve a simple problem, the study found.

Only 6 percent of 17 year olds, for example, can solve problems of this difficulty: "Christine borrowed $850 for one year from the Friendly Finance Co. If she paid 12 percent simple interest on the loan, what was the total amount she repaid?"

The study, which was conducted by the National Assessment of Educational Progress and involved 1.4 million students age 9 to 17, was the first to compare student achievement in several subjects in an attempt to look for problems that might cut across disciplines. It was administered by the Educational Testing Service under a grant from the Department of Education.

It concluded that in recent years, standard techniques of instruction that rely on teacher lectures, textbooks and worksheets have successfully raised the level of basic skills of most students, in part because of a greater emphasis on teaching, drilling and testing students on the basics. But those same methods also could be to blame for the failure of students to master more complicated thinking skills, the authors said.

Educators interpreted the report as more troubling evidence that, despite improvements, the failings of American schools remain a critical problem and that more fundamental reform is necessary.

"We have built a solid foundation of basic skills," said Archie Lapointe, executive director of NAEP. But "there is stagnation as far as higher-order thinking skills are concerned," he added.

The report also contained a mixed message on the achievement of minority students. While the gap between the white and minority student performance had narrowed, it is still "unacceptably large," the report said. By the end of high school, for example, minority students are often three or four years behind white students in achievement.

The study recommended that teachers allow more active participation and cooperative work by students, that the curriculum require students to apply the knowledge they are gaining, and that tests be rewritten to encourage students to think about and use their knowledge, rather than just repeat facts and rules they have learned.

The study cited these findings to support its pessimistic tone:

— In reading, 61 percent of 17 year olds cannot understand complicated written passages, including topics they study in school, high-school textbooks or simple newspaper essays.

— In science, 59 percent of 17 year olds cannot apply their knowledge to interpret text and graphs or evaluate whether the design of an experiment is appropriate.

Gorbachev's Shadow Dogs Baker Through Europe

By Doyle McManus
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

ROME — As Secretary of State James A. Baker III dashes across Europe this week at a pace of three countries a day, he finds himself dogged at every step by an unseen — and unwelcome — presence: Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

In London, Baker compared notes on Gorbachev's program of "perestroika," or restructuring, with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. In Bonn, he wrestled with a West German government increasingly drawn toward Gorbachev's vision of European disarmament. In Copenhagen, Oslo and Rome, he asked how NATO can regain the initiative in East-West affairs when Gorbachev appears to have seized the agenda.

"The world is going through a period and a process of change," Baker told reporters on the Air Force plane that brought him here Tuesday after stop-overs in Turkey and Greece. "One thing is very clear, and that is that the NATO alliance is key and fundamental to addressing those changes."

In years past, such a statement would have been taken as self-evident. But today, with Gorbachev unilaterally reducing the size of the Soviet armed forces and tolerating new independence among the nations of Eastern Europe, Baker's words about the 40-year-old Western Alliance carried almost a defensive edge.

"My question is whether NATO will exist five years from now," said Alexander Alexiev of the RAND Corp. think-tank. "Every good thing outlives its time. ... If there's no Soviet threat, what do we need NATO for?"

Alexiev and other scholars acknowledge that for now, the Soviet threat to Western Europe remains very real. But the increasing, quite palpable perception in Western Europe is that Gorbachev is genuinely reducing that threat — and that the usefulness of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, with its military maneuvers and demands for new weapons systems, may be waning as well.

Already, public opinion polls in several Western European countries show Gorbachev to be one of the most popular, and even most trusted, world leaders.

Even more alarming to U.S. officials, polls in West Germany show a majority in favor of withdrawing all nuclear weapons from the country, a move which would seriously disrupt NATO defense plans.

Gorbachev has captured European's attention by announcing that he was unilaterally withdrawing six tank divisions from Eastern Europe, by reasserting the Kremlin's drive for nuclear-free zones in Europe, and by completing his promised withdrawal from Afghanistan.

"When Mr. Gorbachev is in the White House and when they sing 'Moscow Nights,' people ask themselves whether the threat is the same," West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl said in a British newspaper interview last week.

The Soviet president is expected to press his openings to the West still further this year with visits to Britain, West Germany, France and Italy, as well as his trip to reopen ties with China in May.

"It is important that we deal with the public perception that Gorbachev is taking the initiative," an official in London quoted British Foreign Secretary Geoffrey Howe as telling Baker earlier this week.

"One of the most striking things about Gorbachev is his admission of failure (in the Soviet system), and yet ... the Western agenda has a hard time competing with Gorbachev's own ability to attract attention," said a senior U.S. official traveling with Baker.

"There is just an attraction, and intriguing quality to Gorbachev, and you have to answer somehow," the official said. "But we have no answers."

U.S. and other Western officials insist, a little plaintively, that NATO should be getting more credit for improved relations with the Soviet Union. "The agenda that's being worked is the Western agenda," the senior official said.

Still, a U.S. diplomat in Bonn acknowledged, "Gorbachev has the initiative. There's no denying it."

Baker and other allied leaders have been discussing several possible NATO initiatives to try to steal some of Gorbachev's thunder:

—An assertive joint position at the upcoming talks on conventional armed forces in Vienna, calling for a cut of 40,000 tanks in Europe, most of them Soviet.

—A new challenge to the Soviet Union to cooperate with the West on "transnational" issues such as terrorism and drugs; Baker may take this tack in his first meeting with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze on March 7 in Vienna.

—And a high-level review, perhaps by a panel of "wise men," of NATO's objectives in the new European political environment; Danish Foreign Minister Uffe Ellemann Jensen suggested this to Baker on Monday.

But it may not be easy for NATO to seize the public relations high ground quickly, diplomats say.

The alliance is struggling to patch up a series of disputes between the United States and West Germany, including a disagreement over whether NATO should seek negotiations to reduce short-range nuclear missiles. Germany favors talks, the United States dislikes the idea.

In Ankara, Baker received some support for the U.S. position Tuesday from Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal before going on to discuss U.S. bases and terrorism with Greek Premier Andreas Panpandreou.

The Bush Administration's formal review of U.S.-Soviet relations and arms control policy is still only getting under way, and the alliance cannot take any initiatives until Bush has decided what he wants.

And in conventional arms talks, domestic pressures to cut military spending in NATO countries, including the United States, make it difficult for the alliance to hold to joint negotiating positions.

"In several countries, budgetary pressures are reducing forces marginally, outside any negotiations," one expert said.

"Gorbachev has the advantage in this game," a U.S. arms negotiator complained. "He can cut forces he doesn't need, and make it look like a grand gesture for peace. We cut back on military spending, and everyone knows we are just reacting to our own budget problems."

New Rocket Launches U.S. Navigation Satellite

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — An advanced navigation satellite circled Earth today, boosted into orbit on the inaugural liftoff of the Delta 2, the first of the post-Challenger space rockets developed to launch vital military payloads.

"It was in every way a picture perfect launch," Air Force Lt. Col. Bob Tayloe, the launch director, said after Tuesday's successful liftoff. "The satellite came up very strong and we're receiving a good signal."

The Delta 2 is the first of at least 54 new unmanned rockets the Pentagon is ordering in a $14 billion program to launch much-needed reconnaissance, navigation, communications and other national security satellites.

About 40 of these payloads have been grounded for lack of a launch vehicle since the shuttle Challenger exploded three years ago, killing seven astronauts.

As a result of the accident, the Air Force decided it was a mistake to abandon unmanned rockets and to use the shuttle for sole access to space. It ordered three new rocket systems, the medium-size Delta 2 and Atlas 2 and the large, more powerful Titan 4.

The Delta 2 was the first to fly. On its debut, it carried into orbit the $65 million Navstar Global Positioning satellite, the first payload removed from the shuttle manifest to a throwaway rocket.

The satellite entered an initial elliptical orbit ranging from about 100 to 11,000 miles above Earth. On Thursday, an on-board motor will be fired to shift the satellite into a circular orbit of about 11,000 miles high.

The 3,675-pound satellite is an advanced version of of seven earlier model Navstars currently in orbit. It will enable U.S. and allied military units such as ships, planes, submarines and tanks to locate their positions within 50 feet by using an encrpyted channel. The accuracy for civilian users will be within 300 feet.

Baker To Sell Stock Holdings

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State James A. Baker III says he will sell his large stock holdings in a major international lender, after questions were raised about the potential for conflicts of interest.

Baker said Tuesday he will sell his stock in Chemical New York Corp., which has loaned $4.5 billion to Third World nations, as well as all other publicly traded stocks held in a qualified blind trust.

Members of Congress had expressed surprise when Baker's stock holdings were publicized last week, noting that as Treasury secretary under President Reagan he made decisions affecting the Third World debt crisis. The same issue confronts him as secretary of state in the Bush administration.

Baker's promise to get rid of the stocks was hailed Tuesday at the White House, where President Bush's ethics chief had questioned Baker's holdings under a new, stringent interpretation of government ethics rules.

White House Press Secretary Marlin Fitzwater issued a statement saying Baker "has gone even further than required to ensure there is not even the perception of a conflict of interest."

The controversy revolved primarily around Baker's holdings in Chemical New York.

While heading the Treasury Department in the Reagan administration, Baker developed the so-called Baker plan, which called on Third World nations to make good on their debts as they restructured their sagging economies. It called for new public and private lending, but it did not attempt to force the banks to forgive the loans.

'Rain Man' Gets 8 Nominations To Top Academy Award Lists

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — "Rain Man," a road movie featuring a scheming car salesman learning to love his autistic brother, topped nominations for the 61st Academy Awards today with eight nods, including best picture.

The movie also received nominations for Dustin Hoffman as best actor and best director for Barry Levinson.

Earning seven nominations each were "Dangerous Liaisons," a drama hinging on the bed-hopping seductions of the wealthy in prerevolutionary France, and "Mississippi Burning," the controversial depiction of the FBI's investigation of the slaying of three civil rights workers in 1964.

Both were nominated for best picture, as were "The Accidental Tourist," an adaptation of Anne Tyler's acclaimed novel tracing the emotional journeys of a travel writer, and "Working Girl," a Cinderella tale of a secretary who battles her way up the corporate ladder.

Sigourney Weaver claimed a rare Oscar double nomination, for best actress for "Gorillas In The Mist: The Adventure of Dian Fossey" and best supporting actress for "Working Girl."

The nominations were announced in a predawn news conference at the headquarters of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. Oscar trophies will be presented March 29 at a 6 p.m. PST ceremony broadcast on ABC-TV.

Joining Weaver in the best actress competition were Glenn Close for "Dangerous Liaisons," Jodie Foster for "The Accused," Meryl Streep for "A Cry In The Dark," and, in her first Oscar nomination, Melanie Griffith for "Working Girl."

Their male counterparts, joining "Rain Man's" Hoffman were Gene Hackman, for "Mississippi Burning." He was joined by Oscar nominee newcomers Tom Hanks for "Big," Edward James Olmos for "Stand And Deliver," and veteran actor Max Von Sydow for Denmark's "Pelle The Conqueror."

In addition to Levinson's nomination for "Rain Man," best director nominees included Charles Crichton for "A Fish Called Wanda," Martin Scorsese for the controversial "The Last Temptation of Christ," Alan Parker for "Mississippi Burning," and Mike Nichols for "Working Girl."

Nominated for best supporting actress were Joan Cusack from "Working Girl," Geena Davis for "The Accidental Tourist," Frances McDormand for "Mississippi Burning," Michelle Pfeiffer for "Dangerous Liaisons," and "Working Girl's" Weaver.

Veteran actor Alec Guinness, costar of "Little Dorrit," received a nomination for best supporting actor, as did Kevin Kline for "A Fish Called Wanda," Martin Landau for "Tucker: The Man And His Dream," River Phoenix for "Running On Empty," and Dean Stockwell for "Married To The Mob."

Ethics Panel Says Congress Should Remain Exempt From Conflict Law

By Michael J. Sniffen
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush's ethics commission wants members of Congress to disclose more about their finances but can't see a way to apply the same conflict-of-interest laws to them and the executive branch.

The eight-member panel agreed Tuesday that members of Congress should continue to be exempt from the basic conflict-of-interest law that prohibits making government decisions for personal gain.

That decision runs counter to Bush's appeal last month that the commission find standards that are "equitable all across the three branches of the federal government."

The members did, however, call for somewhat broader public disclosure of the assets held by members of Congress so the public could decide whether votes were cast or bills were introduced for private reasons.

The commission also suggested that members file disclosure statements upon leaving office as executive branch officials do now.

A departure statement would have disclosed that Rep. Jack Kemp planned to accept $67,000 in honoraria last year above the limit. Instead, the Senate banking committee and the public only learned of Kemp's now-acknowledged error because he had to file a new statement as Bush's nominee for secretary of housing and urban development.

The commission has until March 9 to recommend to Bush any legislative or administrative changes to stiffen and standardize federal ethics enforcement.

The basic federal conflict law, known as section 208 of the criminal code, makes it a crime for an executive branch employee to take any government action in which he or his immediate family has a financial interest. The top penalty is two years in prison and a $10,000 fine. Judges are separately prohibited from hearing any case involving any of their assets.

Former White House counsel Lloyd N. Cutler said, "If you apply 208 to Congress, you get into impossible questions. What does a farmer do on farm issues? What does any member do on tax legislation? Everyone pays taxes. Maybe disclosure of the interest is all you can do."

Former Attorney General Griffin Bell, the panel's vice chairman, agreed. "I don't believe 208 is workable for members. They'd have to divest all their holdings."

The panel's only ex-congressman, former New Mexico Republican Sen. Harrison Schmitt, appealed for some tougher action, at least full disclosure, because "we all know of abuses."

Judith Bello, general counsel to the U.S. special trade representative, said perhaps the law might apply when members are negotiating for employment after they leave office.

Panel chairman Malcolm R. Wilkey, a former appellate judge, thought perhaps the law could apply to members of Congress when they do casework for their constituents with specific federal agencies or when they get into administrative matters as opposed to legislation. But he found little support.

Eventually, the commission agreed that the law should apply to the executive branch, the judiciary and the staff of Congress.

Forcing members of Congress to meet executive branch disclosure requirements would entail a minimal change.

Members of Congress are now required to list whether assets fall into these categories: $5,000 or less, $5,001 to $15,000, $15,001 to $50,000, $50,001-$100,000, $100,001-$250,000, over $250,000.

The executive branch has all those categories but the first one, which is divided into less than $1,001 and $1,001-$5,000. There is a similar minimal difference in the categories for reporting income.

The panel split over existing rules against conduct that raises the appearance of a conflict of interest.

Backed by Cutler, Ms. Bello supported language against such conduct. "We want to enhance public confidence in government," she said. "I may know I can't be bought by going to lunch but if I'm doing that it will undermine the public's confidence in my impartiality."

But Bell said the standard was too subjective and "causes nothing but trouble. ... The press uses this to condemn you before you're tried. I feel so strongly I might dissent on this."

Wilkey said the commission staff would try to write compromise language, because criminal sanctions for actual conflicts were insufficient. "The fact that you are not indictable doesn't mean you're ethical," he said.

The panel also decided that members of advisory committees or commissions, such as their own, be exempt from section 208 but be required to file public financial disclosures. Currently they are covered by 208 but do not file any disclosures.

They declined, however, to apply this logic to themselves. They filed disclosure forms even though not required because of the topic of their commission, but they decided to keep them confidential.

EPA Lifts Estimate Of Sewage Treatment Plan To $83.5 Billion

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Highlighting the enormity of unmet needs, the Environmental Protection Agency Tuesday revised its estimated cost of upgrading the nation's sewage treatment facilities to meet federal standards for water quality and public health to $83.5 billion.

The new figure reflects a 4 percent real increase over a previous assessment in 1987, suggesting that the nation has failed to gain ground in combating water pollution.

More than two-thirds of the nation's 15,600 wastewater-treatment plants now have "documented water-quality or public-health problems," the agency said in a report to Congress assessing the nation's compliance with standards set under the 1972 Clean Water Act.

Noting that the cost of improvements would consume all of the EPA's current $4.9 billion annual budget for the next 17 years, new EPA Administrator William K. Reilly declared: "We must think cooperatively about how we are going to solve wastewater-treatment problems."

But representatives of municipal water treatment agencies charged that the new administration has failed to cooperate with them so far, noting that its $1.2 billion budget request for water clean-up funds was only half that authorized by Congress.

"What it means is that there isn't going to be enough money," said Eric Sapirstein, a lobbyist for the California Association of Sanitation Agencies. "If you're low on the priority list and there isn't enough money to go around, you ain't going to get funded."

The state officials' concern reflects a new anxiety in the wake of passage two years ago of the Water Quality Act, which shifted the burden for construction of wastewater-treatment facilities from the federal government to state and local authorities.

That legislation, passed with the support of the current critics, set out a plan calling for federal construction grants to be phased out at the end of this year and to be replaced by contributions to a State Revolving Loan Funds program.

But as the Reagan and now the Bush administration requested less financing than Congress envisioned, state officials and environmentalists are warning that the nation's quest for clean water could be left severely underfinanced.

"There are going to be some serious water-quality problems coming down the road," said Linda Eichmiller, deputy director of the Association of State and Interstate Water Pollution Control Administrators.

The EPA's new $83.5 billion estimate for water-treatment modernization in the next 20 years reflects a 4 percent real increase over its most recent previous assessment, submitted to Congress in early 1987.

Barbara Passes Out Valentines

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — First lady Barbara Bush paid a Valentine's Day visit to a nursing home where she worked as a volunteer while President Bush was in Congress, and told the residents that "his success is yours and my success."

The first lady, in a red blazer and black-and-white checked skirt, took a basketful of signed, handmade valentines on Tuesday for the patients at the Washington Home for the elderly and terminally ill.

"That really means I love you all," Mrs. Bush told a group of patients who chatted with her.

She was given a large posterboard valentine reading: "To Mrs. Bush. Always the first lady in our hearts."

Mrs. Bush is a board member of the non-profit, 189-bed facility.

Mrs. Bush told her press secretary, Anna Perez, that as a volunteer she helped out with whatever the nurses wanted her to do, including such tasks as doing the patients' fingernails.

Experts Say Interest Rates Apparently Will Go Higher

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Interest rates, already at their highest levels since 1984, appear headed still higher despite the Bush administration's fond hope that the Federal Reserve can tame inflation relatively painlessly, a growing number of economists now believes.

"Once an upward wage-price spiral has been triggered, the only way to reverse it is through recession," said David Levine, chief economist at Sanford C. Bernstein & Co., a New York investment concern.

While inflation remains comparatively modest, it is now so firmly entrenched in the economy, Levine contended, that a mere slowdown in economic growth will not be enough to bring it down.

The Federal Reserve nudged interest rates up another notch this week in the wake of last Friday's report of an unexpectedly large 1 percent jump in January wholesale prices, officials said. The federal funds rate, a key short-term interest rate on interbank lending that is closely controlled by the Fed, held at 9.25 percent Tuesday, up from around 9 percent over the last few weeks.

At the same time, long-term bond yields crept up again Tuesday, with the 30-year Treasury bond rising to 9.11 percent from a 9.06 percent yield late Monday. That left it significantly higher than the 8.91 percent yield when the government sold bonds to investors last Thursday.

Most analysts, because they do not see a recession in sight this year, are convinced that the latest Fed move will not be the last.

"The Fed does not stop rising prices merely by announcing it is opposed to inflation," contended David Hale, chief economist at Kemper Financial Services in Chicago. "It has to discipline the system periodically by raising interest rates more rapidly than inflation expectations and, if necessary, threatening to punish it with recession if fine-tuning gestures prove inadequate."

By raising interest rates, the Fed makes borrowing more expensive and forces consumers and businesses to cut back on their spending, ultimately easing the pressures that push prices up.

Hale said that he expects the federal funds rate to rise from 9.25 percent to nearly 10 percent later this year. Levine is even more pessimistic, expecting both short-term and long-term interest rates to rise steadily for perhaps as much as two years before finally toppling the economy into a recession.

"Inasmuch as interest rates have risen only a small fraction of the distance necessary to trigger a recession," he wrote in a recent report, "we believe the cyclical increase in both short- and long-term interest rates has a long way to go."

Because Bush's budget plan relies on lower interest rates to help reduce the cost of financing the national debt, the Fed's credit-tightening moves are expected to make it much more difficult for the White House and Congress to reach their $110 billion deficit target next year.

"The administration's interest rate forecast appears highly fanciful," Hale said. "It is awfully hard to see how the Fed is going to achieve the soft landing it wants."

Some economists, however, hold starkly contrary views. "From early 1987 to the present, the money stock has grown at a rate close to 4 percent per year," argued John Rutledge in the latest forecast by his Claremont Economics Institute in Southern California. "This kind of money growth will not permit the existence of sustained inflation. ... Push as they will, rising cost will have a hard time creating inflation in this environment."

Japanese Arrest 2 Stock Executives

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOKYO — Prosecutors today arrested two top executives of companies at the center of a stock trading scandal, news reports said, bringing to six the number of people charged in the affair.

The managing director of Recruit Co., a fast-growing business information conglomerate, and the managing director of a real estate subsidiary, Recruit-Cosmos Co., were arrested on charges of violating the Securities and Exchange Law, television and news agency reports said.

They identified those arrested as Shunjiro Mamiya of Recruit and Seiichi Tateoka of Recruit-Cosmos.

Prosecution officials refused to discuss the reports, saying they would talk only to reporters from a handful of Japanese news organizations assigned to covering their office.

The parent company sold valuable stocks in the subsidiary to dozens of politicians, their aides and influential businessmen and journalists.

Today's reported arrests came two days after the parent company's founder and three others were arrested on bribery charges.

Prosecutors Monday arrested Recruit's founder, Hiromasa Ezoe, an executive of a Recruit-affiliated finance company and two executives of Nippon Telephone and Telegraph Corp., Japan's largest company.

Recruit-Cosmos sold hundreds of thousands of shares prior to their public listing to the political and business figures. The stocks soared in value after being made available for over-the-counter trading, bringing huge profits to the purchasers.

Those arrested Monday were held on suspicion of bribery involving resale of U.S.-made supercomputers by NTT to Recruit and leasing telephone lines to Recruit at discount prices.

Kemp Offers Incentives For Urban Poor

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Jack Kemp offered tax incentives and enterprise zones to fight "distress and despair" among the urban poor, but the new Housing secretary made no promise to spend more on housing as he toured this city's poor sections.

"Areas that were at one time redlined for despair need to be greenlined for success," Kemp said Tuesday, referring to the practice by lenders of refusing to grant housing loans in neighborhoods they considered undesirable.

Kemp was spending a second day today visiting Atlanta's poor neighborhoods on what he said was the first in a series of visits to troubled inner cities as the administration's new secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

He was led on his tour by the city's black Democratic leadership, including Mayor Andrew Young and Rep. John Lewis on Tuesday, and today was being shown more troubled areas by Coretta Scott King, wife of the late Martin Luther King Jr. He also met with community leaders and developers.

"We've had a national recovery, but folks have been left behind," said the former pro football player, congressman and unsuccessful Republican presidential candidate.

"There is distress and despair in many of those areas of the economy that have been left behind, and that's where I definitely want to focus my attention," he said.

Kemp brought the leaders no pledges of more federal money for permanent housing, which the nation's mayors have said is needed to fight homelessness. But he said he would push for "dramatic incentives" to attract business investment into inner cities, and consider other innovative public and private inducements to bring jobs and housing to blighted areas.

He said he would seek enactment of specific tax incentives, including breaks on capital gains, to create the urban enterprise zones in troubled inner cities. The tax breaks would be contingent on the businesses hiring people who otherwise would be on welfare rolls.

Congress has passed enterprise zone legislation, but without the tax incentives. President Bush's 1990 budget proposal includes such tax incentives.

Some of the redeveloped projects Kemp visited were accomplished with local versions of that — abatements in property taxes.

"We've got to do it at the federal level because only the federal government can provide dramatic incentives," he said.

Kemp was warmly greeted and met bipartisan encouragement, although several local leaders suggested there were needs that exceeded the ability of enterprise zones.

Eugene Bowens, president of Interfaith Inc., a church group, said that around the country many 15- to 30-year agreements with owners of existing subsidized rental housing are due to expire soon. As a result, the units could no longer be available to low-income people.

"That is a big problem and it's going to be happening on my watch," Kemp said, adding that he wants to find ways to "reincentivize" both taxes and housing.

Kemp visited the nation's first public housing project, Techwood, built in 1936, as well as neighborhoods such as Cabbagetown, Bedford Pine and Vine City where redevelopment projects are under way or planned.

Much of the housing Kemp saw was in good shape, newly constructed or renovated. Kemp was not taken to Bankhead Courts, a public housing project that has received national attention for its crime and other problems, but Young said that the areas the secretary did visit had problems that were "identical."

Mandelas Discuss Winnie's Problems

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — Winnie Mandela met today with her jailed husband, black nationalist leader Nelson Mandela, to discuss a controversy that has linked her to alleged abductions, beatings and a possible killing.

As the Mandelas met at a prison farm, police headquarters announced that the body of a boy found in Soweto last month had been positively identified as belonging to 14-year-old Stompie Seipei.

Seipei allegedly was abducted and beaten at Mrs. Mandela's house by young men who serve as her unofficial bodyguards.

Mrs. Mandela, accompanied by her daughter, Zindzi, declined to comment as she passed journalists at Cape Town's airport before driving to Victor Verster prison farm in nearby Paarl.

Mandela, serving a life sentence for planning anti-government sabotage, was transferred to a staff house at the prison farm in December after recuperating from tuberculosis. He heads the outlawed African National Congress.

Mrs. Mandela has denied press speculation that their 30-year marriage has been strained by the controversy surrounding Mandela United, the soccer club whose young members have served as her bodyguards in Soweto, the black township outside Johannesburg.

Methodist Church officials and Soweto community leaders have alleged that members of Mandela United abducted three young men and Seipei from a church residence, then beat them.

The three men, according to their attorney, have made statements saying Mrs. Mandela was "involved in the events" on the night they were allegedly abducted and taken to her home.

Mrs. Mandela, a well-known anti-apartheid activist in her own right, has denied she was present at the time.

Author Salman Rushdie holds a copy of 'Satanic Verses'

Police Guard Author After Death Threat

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Armed police today were reported guarding author Salman Rushdie, whom Ayatollah Khomeini told Moslems to kill for writing "The Satanic Verses." Many Moslems consider the book blasphemous.

Iran's fundamentalist leader said Tuesday that the novel is so offensive to Islam that he had ordered Rushdie put to death. Khomeini said anyone killed carrying out his order would be considered a martyr.

A Scotland Yard spokesman said it was police policy not to comment on matters of personal security. But The Times of London said armed police had been called in to protect the Indian-born writer.

A spokeswoman for Viking said today the publisher could not confirm or deny that Rushdie, a London resident, was under guard. It is rare for British police to guard private citizens.

Rushdie's agent, Gillon Aitken, said a decision would be made soon on whether the writer should go ahead with a planned promotional and lecture tour of the United States, which had been scheduled to begin Friday.

In Pakistan, fundamentalist and opposition leaders called for a peaceful "day of mourning" to protest the book on Friday. Police, however, were preparing to deal with possible outbreaks of violence.

Five people were killed and 83 injured when police opened fire Sunday on demonstrators who stormed a U.S. cultural center in Islamabad to demand the novel be banned in the United States.

One person was killed in a similar protest Monday in northern India.

"The Satanic Verses" has sold more than 100,000 copies since it was published in Britain last September to critical acclaim and heated protests from Moslems in Britain. At least five countries have formally banned the novel — India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Egypt and South Africa. The London newspaper the Daily Mail quoted Moslem leader Sayed Abdul Quddas, the secretary of the Council of Mosques in the northern city of Bradford, as saying Rushdie deserves to die.

It quoted him as saying: "There are any number of our people who would willingly carry out what to us would not be a crime but a justified act. Mr. Rushdie has tortured Islam and he has to pay the penalty. He deserves hanging."

Bradford's large immigrant population includes 60,000 Moslems. Quddas last month led a symbolic public burning there of a copy of "The Satanic Verses" before thousands of Moslems.

Iqbal Sacranie of the U.K. Action Committee on Islamic Affairs told The Daily Telegraph that a death sentence would be consistent with Islamic law, "but the law can only be applied only in an Islamic country."

He said the group's campaign against the book "will continue with peaceful and law-abiding protests."

A London paper, The Independent, quoted another spokesman for the estimated 1 million Moslems in Britain, Hesham El-Essawy, as saying anyone carrying out Khomeini's reported order would be guilty of murder.

It quoted Essawy, the chairman of the Islamic Society for the promotion of Religious Tolerance, as saying: "We very much regret and denounce Khomeini's statement. ... It is a very dangerous development and will give Rushdie sympathy where it is not deserved."

Khomeini's threat emerged Tuesday in a Tehran Radio broadcast that quoted him as saying Rushdie, 41, and his publishers "are hereby sentenced to death."

"I call on all zealous Moslems to execute them quickly, wherever they find them, so that no one will dare to insult Islamic sanctity," it quoted the Bombay-born and Cambridge-educated novelist as saying.

The Foreign Office on Tuesday expressed "grave concern" about Khomeini's reported remarks. Rushdie said he was taking them "very seriously indeed."

The Daily Mail printed a picture that it said showed Rushdie and his second wife Marianne in London on Tuesday but they could not be contacted at home.

Aitken denied Rushdie had gone into hiding but said the author was purposely not being conspicuous.

Moslems revere Mohammed as the prophet who brought God's revelations to mankind in the Koran, the holy book of Islam.

Latin Leaders Call For Contra Breakup, Nicaraguan Voting

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COSTA DEL SOL, El Salvador — A long-delayed summit of five Central American presidents ended with a promise from Nicaragua to hold free elections and agreement to dismantle the bases in Honduras of U.S.-backed Contra rebels.

President Daniel Ortega of Nicaragua pledged as the two-day meeting concluded Tuesday that his leftist government would move up elections to February 1990 and let the opposition help organize them.

The presidents also said they would come up with a plan within 90 days for disbanding the Contra force in Honduras — an estimated 11,000 fighters.

"We're ready to return to Nicaragua when we see that Ortega seriously is going to begin implementing his promises," Adolfo Calero, a member of the Contra directorate, told a news conference.

The United States cut off military aid to the Contras 12 months ago.

The summit produced an eight-page accord the presidents said would reinvigorate the regional peace plan they signed 18 months ago.

President Jose Azcona of Honduras, whose country became the Contras' haven at the urging of the United States, said he expected Washington to back the agreement. There was no immediate comment from the State Department.

"We believe we have adopted a decision in the interest of the five Central American countries. We also believe that the United States ... will respect the accord that we have signed this day," Azcona told a news conference.

What remained unresolved was the issue of verification of progress toward democracy under the Central American peace plan.

Ortega promised to move up national elections, which had been scheduled for November 1990, and to hold local elections at the same time.

His term is to end in January 1991 but members of the ruling Sandinista party have indicated that could change.

Ortega said opposition parties would have equal access to radio and television — which the government now controls — and representation on the national election commission.

He also said the entire election process would be open to international observers.

Nicaragua promised to free about 1,600 imprisoned Contras and members of the National Guard of dictator Anastasio Somoza, who was overthrown in 1979 by the revolution the Sandinistas rode to power.

The five-way agreement on disbanding the Contras, adopted at the urging of both Nicaragua and Honduras, calls for the rebels and their families to be offered voluntary repatriation or relocation to "third countries."

The Contra leaders, consigned to the sidelines during the negotiations over their fate and safe haven, were stung by the agreement.

"I would say whatever accord is reached based on Ortega's promises is equivalent to trying to leash a dog with sausage links," Calero said after the summit.

Costa Rican President Oscar Arias, who won the 1987 Nobel Peace Prize for authoring the regional peace plan, said the international community should help relocate the Contras and their estimated 10,000 family members.

He said "those who sponsored the Contras for many years" should feel most responsible for finding them new homes.

Ortega's promises of democratization, said Contra directorate member Roberto Ferrey, signaled "the burial of the Sandinista dictatorship."

For their part, Sandinista officials said they came to the summit looking for help in burying what Ortega has called the Contra "cadaver" and declaring Nicaragua's readiness for democracy.

That readiness, they said, sprang from the military and political defeat of the Contras and the change of administrations in Washington.

The Bush administration has said it would prefer a diplomatic solution to the eight-year Nicaraguan conflict over the military option the Reagan administration had so vigorously pursued.

The Central American summit at this beach resort 25 miles southeast of San Salvador was the regional leaders' first meeting in 13 months and took place after five postponements.

The last presidents' meeting was in January 1988, the deadline for implementing the provisions of the regional peace plan.

Just The Fax, M'am

Machines Break Out Of Office, Into The Home

By Beth Ann Krier
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — Why are all those home fax machines around here purring away late at night?

Stockbrokers passing hot tips on to blue-chip customers? Movie execs swapping script outlines into the night?

Would you believe homework?

According to fax machine providers, many of the people who own the devices and have teen-agers (who understandably wish to remain anonymous) are likely to have their machines tied up at night with school assignments being faxed back and forth.

And even those kids who do their homework unassisted are eager to use faxes to create electronic study groups -- with parental approval.

"My daughter is just waiting for somebody in her class to have a parent bring a fax machine home," said Bill McCue, president of Public FAX in Orange. "They always forget stuff ... she'll call up a girlfriend and try to figure out how to do math problems. You ever try to do math over the phone?"

It's all part of the growing fax consciousness. Initially introduced as a business tool, facsimile machines — which send and receive copies of documents over telephone lines in seconds — are suddenly being employed for an expanding array of personal uses: everything from playing chess to executing practical jokes to sending holiday greetings.

The number of fax machines in the country has grown to 1.7 million, according to estimates of analysts at Dataquest, a high-tech market research and consulting firm in San Jose, Calif. Most of those machines are still in offices, where business applications are expanding rapidly and becoming far more creative.

Doctors now fax prescriptions to pharmacies. Fire department personnel fax blueprints of buildings to fire fighters at fire sites.

The machines have has also enlivened the formats of radio stations eager to court those who listen at the office (especially since the Arbitron ratings were recently expanded to monitor office listening habits). Numerous stations have invited audiences to communicate with deejays via office fax machines. Some, such as WMMR in Philadelphia, have even asked listeners to "fax us your body parts."

That sport showed up recently on the sitcom "Murphy Brown," when the TV reporter played by Candice Bergen explained her absence from the office Christmas party, saying, "The memory of last year's party is still fresh in my mind. Perhaps you heard about it. I drank all the punch and faxed my chest to the West Coast."

On KABC's "Ken & Bob Co.," a high-rated, morning show in the Los Angeles area, listeners have been asked to fax in such things as stupid instructions that accompany products. The fax format became so popular the duo formed a special club for waxing silly with office listeners via fax.

Not only do fax machines transmit drawings and photographs (minus a few half-tones), they're easy to operate. (Basically, you insert a piece of paper and punch in a phone number.) What's more, prices have come down; you can now purchase a fax machine for as little as $600, up to $2,500.

They're hot, convenient, easy to use and increasingly affordable. Is it any wonder that fax machines are now affecting people's lives from the cradle to the grave?

McCue observes that a Klamath Falls, Ore., public fax outlet "does a husky business with local morticians with a need to get interment papers signed rapidly." And on New Year's Day, one of his Public FAX employees gave birth to a baby at 1:30 p.m. After the baby's footprints were recorded, they were faxed to Carbondale, Ill., to the baby's great-grandparents, who received the prints within an hour of the birth.

But as practical jokers have found, less-than-perfect fax reproduction of documents makes the medium appealing for forgeries of all kinds.

Pervis Ellison Helps Boy Turn His Life Around

By Bob Deitel
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Rebellious teen-age boy meets star athlete at local college and, after a few encouraging words and a touch of inspiration, ends self-destructive ways and turns young life around.

Only in some sentimental storybook, right?

So maybe it's lucky that 16-year-old Tony Barnett didn't read much before he met Pervis Ellison, the acclaimed center on the University of Louisville basketball team.

Before being introduced to his idol, Tony shunned almost everything academic.

"I had the attitude toward school that I really didn't care," Tony says. "It didn't make a difference to me whether I was there or not, whether I did the work or not."

One of his iddle school teachers, Paulette Carey, tried to help.

"I said, 'Tony, what would it take for me to get through to you?' I was expecting him to answer that he'd listen to some rock star or something like that. But he said, 'If Pervis Ellison walked through that door right now, I'd listen.'"

Carey gave the word about Tony to Ed Heymann, an Oldham County businessman and active supporter of anti-drug programs that Carey helped supervise for local teens. A few weeks later, the plan was set.

With Tony and a friend in tow, Carey went to the Louisville practice gym where they met Heymann. Ellison walked over.

"He said to Tony, 'I'd like to talk to you,' or something to that effect," Carey says.

Ellison told of his path to basketball success. He stressed getting an education and staying away from alcohol and other drugs.

"He's a different person," Tony's mother says, adding that his grades are now up to average. "The encouragement of a lot of people has really made a world of difference in him."

Tony visited Ellison again this season. He also met Louisville coach Denny Crum, assistant coach Wade Houston and most of the other players. Heymann wanted everyone involved to find out that last year's efforts paid off.

Ellison says anyone on the team could have done the same.

Doing better in school is a good feeling, Tony says. It's not just his grades that have changed but "my whole outlook on life.

"If you don't act the way you should and take your responsibilities, you could get good grades but it's not going to make you a better person. Just being a better person is what I've been trying to do."

As for his encounter with Pervis, he says: "I guess it just clicked in. In a way, you could say Pervis is my idol, because I just think he's the greatest."

Program Seeks Volunteers

By Karen Simmons
ECU NEWS BUREAU

Adult volunteers are being recruited for an East Carolina University program that will match them one-to-one with Pitt County adolescents who have committed a status offense or exhibited delinquent behavior.

It is hoped that by spending time each week with a caring adult, these adolescents will abandon their delinquent behavior and grow into responsible citizens.

"Youth can make changes in their lives when they experience an atmosphere of acceptance and stability," says Sharon Lermer, director of Project PALS (Preparing Adolescents for Life Skills). "These youth are in need of a caring, stable influence in their lives. All it takes is a little time — just a few hours each week and a lot of sharing."

Initially, 20 Pitt County youths between the ages of 7 and 17 will be accepted for the program. "If we accepted more, we wouldn't be able to monitor them as closely," Lermer said. "We're going to try and work very closely with those 20."

Referrals are expected to come from the juvenile court system, schools, agencies, parents and concerned adults. "Our young people battle such pressures and temptations that they need all the positive direction and support that they can get," said Eve Rogers, chief court counselor for the 3rd Judicial District. "I think the PALS program is a splendid opportunity for this kind of support.

Project PALS was funded by Community Based Alternatives (CBA). "CBA is a section within the N.C. Division of Youth Services," said Mavis Williams, a regional consultant for the division. "Our purpose is to develop alternatives to training schools for juvenile offenders in various counties of North Carolina."

According to Williams, CBA provided $30,031 in state funding to establish the program. The ECU School of Education is providing necessary services such as supervision and office space.

Volunteers will be asked to fill out a three-page form, provide two references and attend two training sessions. "One session will deal with such things as communications skills and relationship building techniques," Lermer said. "The other will provide information on the juvenile court system, drugs and alcohol and youth at risk."

They will aslo be expected to spend at least two hours each with with the youth.

ECU psychology, criminal justice, sociology and social work majors are being encouraged to volunteer if they will commit at least nine months to the program. "The only problem is that a semester lasts four months, and I need a longer commitment than that," Lermer said. "After four months, the kids you are working with in this type program are just beginning to accept that person. Then if the relationship is broken, you are doing more damage than good."

Lermer is also seeking help from individuals, area clubs and organizations.

"There are other ways people can volunteer in this program, such as providing transportation, sponsoring a group activity, fund raising, or offering special services such as tutoring or tours of a company or business office," Lermer said. "A club can sponsor on a one time basis what we're going to call PALS for a Day, when all 20 adult volunteers and kids can come together for a supper, bowling, or any kind of activity."

For more information, contact Lermer at the ECU School of Education-Division of Services, Speight Building, Greenville, N.C., 27858, (919) 757-6164.

League Has Ball Update

Catherene Gavigan gave the program at the meeting of the Greenville Service held Monday.

She gave a preview of this year's Charity Ball theme, "An Evening of Fascinating Rhythm." She is chairman for the annual event.

Laurie Charlton reported that league members participated in three bloodmobile visits during January. Sixty-one worked 210 hours and collected 355 units. Mary Ann Barnhill gave the Laughinghouse Fund report and Joyce Steinback gave the lending chest report.

Jeanette Whitehurst said the sustaining members will have a luncheon Wednesday.

'Harmony Ducks' kit is designed to produce a machine-washable rug or wall-hanging

Rug-Hooking Project Is Fun For All Ages

Pat's Pointers
Pat Trexler

An easy-to-do craft that's fun for all ages describes this latch-hook project, which can be used as a rug or as a wall hanging.

Two mallard ducks swimming serenely among cattails upon "checkerboard" blue-and-white water against an off-white background will enhance your home. The half-round shape measures 17 by 34 inches and is machine-washable for easy care.

To obtain chart and directions for making the Harmony Ducks Latch Hook, send your request for Leaflet No. Z-021289 with $2 and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to: Pat Trexler Crafts, The Daily Reflector, P.O. Box 419148, Kansas City, Mo. 64141.

Or you may order Kit No. N-021289 by sending a check or money order for $29.95 to Pat Trexler at the same address. The kit price includes shipping charges, full instructions, latch hook tool, 100 percent polyester rug, canvas and 100 percent acrylic rug yarn.

While not strictly a needlecraft, latch hooking has great appeal for men and women who enjoy working on creative projects in their spare time. And it's often the busiest people who find it relaxing and refreshing to keep their hands occupied while watching TV or chatting with family members.

With the latch-hook tool, a printed canvas and pre-cut threads, it is a simple technique to learn. You simply fold a strand of yarn over the latch hook, pass it under a canvas mesh, and when you pull it back under the same thread, the latch hook automatically knots the strand.

When working on a project no larger than this small rug, you can work on a table or use a firm cushion held on your lap as your working surface. Large projects such as an area rug are handled more easily on a table.

The cut edges of the canvas should be covered with masking tape before you start. These edges tend to be rough and can scratch your skin or get caught on your clothing.

When your project is complete, the edges can be finished either with rug binding, a lining or simply by folding the raw edges to the back and overcasting in place with heavy carpet thread.

On a piece with all straight edges, you can do the finishing as you hook. To do this, cut the canvas at least three meshes beyond the outside edges of the design. Turn the edge to the back along the outer border of the design, matching meshes exactly, and baste the turned-under portion in place with heavy thread. Then, by working the knots through the doubled mesh of canvas, you finish the edges as you hook.

If you choose to work this project with your own materials using the Trexler Crafts chart, here are a couple of pointers: You can find pre-cut rug yarn in many craft shops. Or you can purchase the yarn in skeins or hanks. If you choose the latter, I strongly recommend that you also purchase a yarn cutter as it would be quite a tedious task to use scissors to cut all the short lengths of yarn you will need.

If you have used graph charts in other projects, such as needlepoint, cross stitch or knitting, you should have no trouble following the chart. The only difference is that in these other crafts, each symbol on the chart represents one knot on the canvas. Various symbols are used to denote the color to be used in that position. Each square of the chart equals one canvas mesh.

Tom Selleck Really Is A 'Mr. Nice Guy'

By Stephen Hunter
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

BALTIMORE — Well, lots of time movie stars do not look like movie stars, they just look like people, and you think, OK, what is so great about this guy? A million bucks?

But the guy getting up across the room looks like a movie star and a million bucks. He is wide where you are supposed to be wide (the shoulders) and thin where you are supposed to be thin (the hips and belly). He has one of those mustaches reminiscent of a delta-winged Stealth fighter and one of those flawlessly rugged faces that reminds you of the Grand Tetons. How can hair be that thick? It isn't fair, somehow. And when he smiles, you think, "Who forgot to close the door on the nuclear reactor?"

But what is neatest about Tom Selleck — and, yes, he is a very neat guy — is that somewhere behind those crinkly macho baby blues he manages to project the sense that it embarrasses him to look so good and that his life has turned out so pleasantly. Call it a lack of vanity: you cannot imagine this guy standing for three hours in front of a mirror and trying to get his collar to rumple just so, and then barking snitfully to his dresser, "Oh, dammit, Bruce, you fix it!"

And now he not only looks like a movie star but he has become one.

This was not a guaranteed shot. Selleck, of course, enjoyed television celebrity for most of the decade because of his "Magnum, P.I." television series. But his early films fizzled, foundering on bad scripts and zero chemistry between star and co-star and the star's own inability to find a big screen persona as attractive as his small-screen persona.

Then came "Three Men and A Baby," one of the most successful comedies of the last few years. And he hopes to follow it up with Hit Movie No. 2 in the same vein, "Her Alibi," which he is now selling all over the air and print-waves like a salesman closing in on the million dollar round table.

(In fact, on the tube it is raining Sellecks; you can brush your teeth to him on "The Today Show" and eat dinner with him on "Entertainment Tonight" and go to sleep to him on "The Tonight Show.")

What brought Selleck to "Her Alibi" was his love of romantic comedy.

"I just like romantic comedies," he said in a recent interview here, "and I think there's a good market for them. I've been looking for a good romantic comedy for years. And I didn't get any during 'Magnum' either, because they didn't fit into my time frame or because the studios just didn't think of me.

"But it was a long-term thing. It wasn't, 'Gee, I did "Three Men," and now I should do a romantic comedy.'"

In "Her Alibi," Selleck plays a neurotic thriller writer whose muse has all but dried up. In a desperate search for inspiration, he goes to court one day and there sees a beautiful young woman (Paulina Porizkova) being booked for murder. She hasn't an alibi; quickly he becomes one, and the two begin an affair, which is complicated by the fact that she may be the killer and may now need to kill him.

In one of the film's best scenes, he is shot by an arrow that Porizkova has fired: is it real or is it accidental? Moreover, as she endeavors to pull the shaft out, Selleck is on the phone with a policeman and the film becomes an adventure in sustained double-entendre.

"I laughed hysterically when I read the arrow scene, but I knew that it depended on how it was interpreted visually. It's not just dialogue," Selleck said.

"Then there's a scene where I'm pushed up against the windshield and water and soap are squirted on me. It was one of those scenes where you think, 'Oh, I know how this is going to work. It's going to work if I'm good in it, that's how it's going to work.'

"But the point is, I have to play those scenes for real. If I get cute or play it as if I know it's funny, I don't think those scenes work."

Despite her performance in the film "Anna," Porizkova, for the past few years one of the world's top models, has had few acting jobs. But as it turned out, Selleck said, "Paulina is almost as enigmatic as the character she plays. ... she has very good instincts. Most new actors do too much. ... She has a simplicity in her work that keeps her in focus. I think she's as well cast as anybody could be."

Window Treatments Are Program Topic

A program on window treatments for the home was given at the meeting of Eta Delta Sorority Tuesday night.

Vickie Marcus, president, gave the program.

A Valentine social will be held at 7 p.m. Saturday The Colonial Inn in Farmville. Xi Gamma Xi chapter members also will attend. Chapter Valentine queens will be named.

A program on making chocolates will be given by Debbie Minnich at the Feb. 28 meeting. Barbara Long and Beth Holland gave special reports on designing sweatshirts using fabric and paint.

How Dumb? Very Dumb

Dear Abby
Abigail Van Buren

Dear Abby: I am enclosing a piece that I have had for four or five years. I had copies made and have sent them to many friends. I don't know who wrote it, but I think it appeared in an advertisement for an insurance or financial company. If you think your readers might enjoy it, be my guest. — M.S. Sejpal, D.D.S.

The Dumbest Person In The World

How dumb? Very dumb.
It's the American who knocks what he's got.

Here's what he's got:
A country of unbounded beauty.
Almost unlimited natural resources.
A judicial system that is the envy of the rest of the world.

Food so plentiful overeating is the major problem.

A ballot box nobody can stuff.

Churches of your choice.
One hundred million jobs.
Freedom to go anywhere you want, with the planes, cars and highways to get you there.
Social Security.
Medicare.
Unemployment insurance.
Public schools and plentiful scholarships.

Opportunities to become a millionaire.

Tucker Speaks To Woman's Club About Soil And Water Conservation

The history of soil and water conservation was given Friday at the meeting of the Greenville Woman's Club.

Ralph Tucker, chairman of the Pitt Soil and Water Conservation District, was keynote speaker. He emphasized that the movement had its beginnings in Anson County. "Soil and water conservation are closely interrelated," he said. Pitt County has approximately 420,000 acres of land that are properly and effectively drained.

Entries in the club's fine arts festival were exhibited. Beverly Bartik is chairing the club's festival. District 15 winners will be selected at 9 a.m. Saturday at the Farmville United Methodist Church.

Dr. Mary Lois Staton said Sandra McMillian is a contestant for the Sallie Southall Cotten Scholarship Award. Miss McMillian is representing the Greenville Club in district competition.

The district winners will compete in state competition in Winston-Salem.

Stock And Market Reports

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market advanced slightly today, bidding to pull out of its recent slump.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 4.82 to 2,286.07 in the first half hour of trading.

Gainers outnumbered losers by about 5 to 4 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 501 up, 397 down and 490 unchanged.

Volume on the Big Board came to 20.42 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

In the economic news, the Federal Reserve Board reported a 0.3 percent increase in industrial production last month.

Polaroid rose 7/8 to 42 3/8. Shamrock Holdings Inc., which is making a hostile takeover bid for the company, said it plans to step up a campaign to replace Polaroid directors.

Jaycees Honor Five For Their Service

Farmville Chamber of Commerce.

During the past eight years, he has assisted with the Home Delivered Meals Program, raised funds for the Farmville Rescue Squad, Ronald McDonald House, Farmville High School Band and the Farmville Community Arts Council.

Anderson has served as a volunteer at PCMH and Guardian Care Nursing home.

He and his wife, Ida, reside in Farmville and have three children.

Copeland, 32, is the crime prevention officer for the Pitt County Sheriff's Department. A Pitt County native, he was the 1988 recipient of the Outstanding Pitt County Law Enforcement Officer Award presented by the Pitt-Greenville Chamber of Commerce.

He has received the Outstanding Achievements in Crime Prevention Award for the Pitt-Greenville Crime Stoppers program, the Outstanding Service to North Carolina Community Watch Award and was named the Pitt County Law Enforcement Officer of 1988 by the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 7032.

Copeland serves on the board of directors of both the N.C. Community Watch Association and Pitt-Greenville Crime Stoppers Inc.

He and his wife, Ann, are members of King's Crossroads Free Will Baptist Church in Farmville.

Teachers Demonstrate

the Legislature — originally was planned by teachers in Mecklenburg County, but the idea spread, drawing teachers from across the state. It closed down the school system in Bladen County because there were not enough substitute teachers.

"Gov. Martin really did us a great favor," said Charlotte teacher Cliff Crocker. "Now we're out protesting, instead of just sitting around the teacher's lounge griping about it."

Mavretic blamed Martin's push for tax cuts four years ago for the present difficulties in raising enough money to pay salary increases and continue the Basic Education Plan, a program to improve course offerings and the number of teachers at every school in the state.

"What I would expect to see from the executive branch is a proposal to raise revenues to give a reasonable pay for a job well done," Mavretic said.

"I suspect in this case the governor got some bad advice and I suspect that corrective action will quickly be taken," Mavretic said as the crowd roared its approval.

"The place to begin your march and to focus your attention is the Capitol, the Executive Mansion and the executive branch of government. Those friends of yours in the House and Senate are still there," Mavretic said.

Despite Mavretic's directions, teachers jammed the state government complex in Raleigh after the rally, as busloads of protesters poured into the lunchtime crush on downtown streets.

The jam of teachers blocked Jones Street in front of the legislature, and protesters eventually jammed the blocklong mall leading from the legislature to the Capitol, where Martin's office is located.

Security guards with bullhorns warned the protesters not to go into the legislative building unless they had an appointment with their legislators. But hundreds poured into the building anyway, jamming the halls and filling the galleries.

As the House and Senate convened, protesters in the street chanted, "Hey, hey, what-a-ya say, let's give Martin teacher's pay."

Vilma Leake, president of the Charlotte-Mecklenburg chapter of the North Carolina Association of Educators, drew a roar from the crowd at the horse arena when she said teachers wanted a 10 pecent pay raise this year, not just a cost of living increase. And she said teachers want merit pay, which was frozen in 1982, restored.

"We are here to talk to our legislators and ask them to have the courage to unfreeze our salaries and to place teachers on the steps they reflect in years of experience," said Ms. Leake, who later met for about an hour with Martin.

Martin, surrounded by his Highway Patrol security force, was trapped in a knot of protesting teachers as he tried to leave the arena. But the teachers only wanted Martin to autograph their protest posters — and listen to some quiet suggestions about where to get the money for raises.

"Hey governor, what about cigarettes?" said one teacher as Martin signed his poster. "We've got the lowest taxes on cigarettes in the nation."

"We've never run into anything quite like this," said Tim Pittman, Martin's press secretary. "It's the first time anybody's asked the governor to autograph protest posters."

The teachers, some wearing facsimiles of dollar bills for corsages and others in green sweatshirts or T-shirts, carried posters urging state leaders to "Defrost Our Salaries."

Others carried similar messages: "We believe in the 3 Rs: Raise, Raise, Raise," "Have a Heart. Loving To Teach Doesn't Pay The Bills," and "Teachers Can't Live On Apples Alone."

Etheridge, the state Superintendent of Public Instruction, was optimistic the message would be heard.

"I don't have the answer all of you are seeking here today," Etheridge told the crowd. "But I do know if 3,000 to 5,000 people show up in Raleigh to tell us something, we'd better listen."

Martin, at his news conference, said he was "offended" by some of the remarks made at the rally. He said he had met with small groups of teachers at the rally and believed he was able to make some points.

"I think they understand the problems I face and I understand a little better where they are coming from," said Martin, a former college chemistry professor.

Martin said there was no need to raise taxes to finance pay increases. He said delaying half of the non-teacher hiring in the Basic Education Plan for one year would pay for a raise. And he said teachers had indicated they wanted whatever money is available for raises to be used to unfreeze the teacher pay scale rather than an across-the board increase.

Soviets Pull Out

guerrillas are massed around the cold, hungry capital of Kabul, which has been blockaded for months.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Vadim Perfiliev said another 15,000 guerrillas were around the eastern city of Jalalabad. Kabul Radio, monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp., reported more insurgents surrounding Herat and Khandahar.

Guerrillas claimed there was heavy fighting around a former Soviet airbase north of Kabul.

Along the muddy, narrow streets of Kabul's bazaar, merchants huddling under thick quilts seemed more interested in bartering for their goods than discussing the Soviet withdrawal.

"The Russians are gone," said one, trying to sell Soviet fur hats. "Now there will be peace."

There was no announcement on national radio or television about the final departure. Only those with access to BBC radio heard the news.

The decision to intervene in Afghanistan was made by the late President Brezhnev and a few close associates, high-ranking officials have said. Pravda said the security threat perceived by them may not have merited sending in troops.

"It is possible to doubt the Brezhnev leadership's evaluation of the level of military threat," the paper said.

The official Tass news agency similarly stated, "All these years, Afghanistan has probably been the greatest pain and worry for our people. Scientists, politicians, soldiers and all other people will be thinking and debating for a long time whether the decision of the government of the country taken at that time was right."

Pravda continued, "It is possible to say that such vitally important decisions as the use of troops cannot be decided secretly by a small circle of people, without the sanction of the parliament of the country."

The Soviet Parliament has been a rubber-stamp body for decades, but recent reforms under President Mikhail S. Gorbachev have strengthened its role.

A spokesman for the Pakistan-based Jamiat-i-Islami guerrilla group said its fighters captured 155 Afghan government soldiers and 10 officers in an attack Saturday on the huge Bagram airbase, 24 miles north of the capital.

He said 10 guerrillas were killed or wounded and that fighting continued today, but he gave no details, and there was no independent confirmation.

Kabul state radio said guerrillas fired five rockets into the capital on Tuesday, killing four children and an old man lined up in the snow for bread.

Soviet soldiers intervened in Afghanistan a year after a Marxist coup touched off civil war with Moslem guerrillas. At the height of its involvement, the Red Army had an estimated 115,000 soldiers in the country.

Under a U.N.-mediated accord signed in Geneva in April, the withdrawal began May 15.

Bids

tions, requires that we go out to bid first. Then we get the actual bid amounts. Once we get those bid amounts, we submit that number in the final application," Turcotte said. "This is half the battle, just getting through the grant stage."

The FAA has already earmarked approximately $800,000 for the project, Turcotte said. The city of Greenville and Pitt County have each agreed to fund $165,000 for the project.

Once the FAA executes the grant, the City Council, county commissioners and authority must sign the document. After that, the FAA will release the money.

Four weeks after the grant application, approximately April 17, the authority is set to break ground on the project. The architectural firm that designed the addition, LPA Group Inc., estimates it will take about 270 consecutive calendar days to substantially complete the project from the time the grant money is released.

The expansion will double the amount of general circulation space at the airport, according to architectural plans, and also add substantial space for a waiting area, security corridor, departure lounge, ticket lobby, airline ticket offices and a security office.

Existing space will also be renovated to add a conveyer belt-type baggage claim area and space for rental car companies.

The new addition will have a vaulted ceiling with a skylight and tinted windows along the side of the building facing the existing parking lot. There will be a covered sidewalk, and the appearance of the building has been designed to complement the existing facility.

Pitt Group Returns

ask the General Assembly to adopt a pay increase of about 4.5 percent for teachers and state workers this year.

Martin's latest proposal asks the Legislature to delay about half of the proposed $800 million increase in the Basic Education Program to pay for the salary increases.

"I don't think anyone is going for the 4.5 percent," William Wahl, a teacher at E.B. Aycock Junior High School, said this morning.

"We are going to be meeting again here within the next week or so, and we'll go and listen to the NCAE proposal on the 23rd. We'll meet again and come up with some more strategies," he said.

The Pitt County chapter of the North Carolina Association of Educators will meet at D.H. Conley High School Feb. 23 to protest Martin's salary freeze, Jackie Wooten, president of District 15 of the NCAE, said. About 40 local units of the NCAE in eastern North Carolina and the legislators that serve those units have been invited. In addition, state NCAE leaders also will meet with the teachers, she said.

Wahl said Pitt teachers met with state Rep. Walter B. Jones Jr. and Sen. Tom Taft at the Legislative Building in Raleigh on Monday night.

"We were encouraged by what they said although they were talking about a proposal of 6 percent. I think there's movement" toward a 10 percent increase in the salary, he said, explaining the more frequent reference to the figure by state legislators. "I think that's becoming more of a reality now," Wahl said.

A Bad Beginning For Sports Year

By Scott Ostler
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

My 4-year-old son isn't into spectator sports, unless they involve monster trucks flying through the air crushing rows of helpless cars. So he hasn't formed any strong team allegiances or developed any sports-hero-worshipping tendencies.

The day is coming, though, when he'll be peppering me with those cute questions, such as:

"Why do horses snort cocaine, Daddy?"

He'll want to know the meaning of sports terms such as "steroids," "rape," "mail fraud" and "parole."

He is missing a hell of a year so far. We're not even two months into 1989 and the old sports-police blotter is SRO with reverse role models.

It's so hard to keep up with it all, so as a public service, or as a one-day late Valentine's present, I hereby offer a 1989 Sports Crime Digest and Top 10 List. My research staff had the day off, so I apologize if I missed any deserving alleged felons or misdemeanorites.

In reverse order of heinousness of allegations:

10. Slam-dunk of the year.

The staff of the Seattle SuperSonics gets Dale Ellis a starting berth in the All-Star game by mass ballot-box stuffing.

Kids, can you say "electoral process?"

Another lesson here for the kiddies is that it's OK to do anything, because — repeat after me — "Everybody else is doing it."

9. Tale o' the Tape.

A University of Missouri assistant coach is fingered for an alleged recruiting violation when a recruit's mother produces a tape recording of the coach offering to buy the recruit an airline ticket.

This isn't exactly original sin, but it's a unique new way to get busted. Times are tough for cheating recruiters.

8. Kissing Bandit.

It's no crime for Morganna to lumber across a court or field and kiss a ballplayer, but gee, can't we make it a crime? Misdemeanor bad taste?

UNC's J.R. Reid slams one home against Old Dominion

Tar Heels, Reid Ease Past ODU

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NORFOLK, Va. — J.R. Reid says he wanted so badly to win a game before a hometown crowd that he may have tried too hard in eighth-ranked North Carolina's 87-77 victory over Old Dominion.

"I missed a couple of easy shots I should have made," Reid, a 6-foot-9 junior, said after Tuesday night's game in which he made five of his nine field-goal attempts, scored 12 points and grabbed seven rebounds.

Coach Dean Smith, who tries to schedule at least one game near the hometown of his upperclassmen, said the players were inspired because they didn't want to embarrass Reid with a loss.

"They didn't want J.R. to live with that all summer," Smith said.

"I thought J.R. played very well, he had pressure on him coming home," he said. "I also think he was very active defensively."

Leading the scoring for the Tar Heels was Rick Fox with 24 points. Scott Williams, who started despite slightly separating his right shoulder on Sunday, added 15 points and 11 rebounds.

The Tar Heels improved to 20-5 and achieved their 19th straight 20-victory season, a school record.

The victory came without Jeff Lebo, who broke a bone in his left foot during the Tar Heels' 85-67 triumph over Virginia on Sunday.

Old Dominion, 14-9, was led by Anthony Carver with 21 points. Chris Gatling and Darrin McDonald each added 19 for the Monarchs.

"We were in the game until the last three minutes, but we didn't play smart, and our kids played a bit too emotional," said Coach Tom Young.

Old Dominion jumped to a 25-17 lead before a sell-out crowd, but the Tar Heels rallied to go up 34-32 on back-to-back baskets by Fox with just over six minutes left before intermission.

The Monarchs' Terrance Jacobs scored a basket to tie the score at 41 before two foul shots from Steve Bucknall and a 3-point goal by King Rice gave the Tar Heels a 46-41 halftime edge.

North Carolina pushed ahead as much as 60-48 in the second half, but Old Dominion climbed to within 67-66 after two baskets by Ricardo Leonard.

North Carolina sealed the victory with a string of seven unanswered points, including five by Bucknall, that made the score 79-70. Fox scored six points in the final minute.

Pirates Hit Road Against Campbell

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

East Carolina's Pirates close out their 1988-89 road season Thursday night, returning to the site of one of their most embarrassing moments last year. The Pirates will face Campbell University at 7:30 p.m. in the Cumberland County Arena in Fayetteville.

Last season, the Camels took a 77-50 win in the meeting, a game regarded by Pirate coach Mike Steele as one of the worst performances by his first team.

The game will be the second meeting of the two teams this year. Earlier this year, the Pirates downed the Camels, 86-72 behind 30 points by Blue Edwards. Four other Pirates scored in double figures in the game, as Kenny Murphy scored 13 and Reed Lose and Gus Hill each added 12. Kevin Staples, no longer on the team, scored 16 in the game.

The Camels, in that contest, were led Sanders Jackson with 17 while Mark Mocnik had 16 and Chris Springs had 15.

However, Campbell's top player — who is being pumped as the Player of the Year in the Big South Conference — Henry Wilson, did not play. Wilson returned two games later and has been in double figures in every game since then, but one.

Mocnik and Springs, two of the starters in that first game, also no longer start for the Camels, who have put together a 13-9 season to date. The Camels come into the game having had a three-game winning streak snapped by fellow Big South Conference member Baptist, 90-75, on Monday.

Last year, the Pirates also scored a victory in the first meeting of the two teams, in Greenville, taking a 61-54 decision.

Conley Avoids Rally

By Tom Morris
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

HOLLYWOOD — With the scoreboard clock not working and confusion reigning, D.H. Conley's Paul Merritt made a last-second play to end the chaos and the game against West Craven.

Merritt picked off an errant pass from West Craven's Lee Becton to end a last-second rally by the Eagles and help D.H. Conley escape with a 37-35 Coastal Conference victory Tuesday.

With the game-time being announced over the public address system due to the malfunctioning clock, West Craven held the ball for the final two minutes, hoping to either win it with a three-point bucket or tie it with a two pointer.

After a time out with 30 seconds remaining, the Eagles worked for the final shot, but Tony Jenkins missed from three-point range with about 20 seconds left. The Eagles' Johnny Gatlin got his hand on the

Defense Keys Rose

By Woody Peele
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Rose High School's Rampants switched defenses at the end of the first half and it led them back from a one-point deficit to take a six point 73-67 Big East Conference basketball victory over Kinston Tuesday night.

Rose High School's girls also claimed their third straight win with a 35-27 victory over the Lady Vikings.

"This was the best game we've played in a while," Rose coach Jim Brewington said. "We really played well in the second half. We had great defense."

Brewington said he moved to a one-three-one defense in the second half and that was able to keep the ball out of the hands of Kinston's Marty Kornegay, who led the Viking scoring with 24 points.

"They're just so big," Kinston's Paul Jones said. "That defense pushed us out so far and we couldn't seem to find the holes in it. And we don't have that good of outside shooters. We struggled in the third period, and I sort of expected it."

Jones said that Rose had used the same defense earlier in the game, but without much success. But when the Rampants brought it back in the third period, it turned the game around.

"We just didn't get the ball inside to Marty as much in the third quarter," Jones said.

Rose, which had trailed by as much as eight points in the first half, was down by only one at intermis-

Knicks Slow Down, Ease Past Charlotte

CHARLOTTE — It isn't always necessary to run and gun in the NBA, and that's just the way the New York Knicks like it right now.

Using their half-court offense to peak efficiency, the Knicks maintained their grasp of first place in the Atlantic Division with a 129-117 victory over the Charlotte Hornets.

The best of those carrying out their assignments was Johnny Newman. He responded with 22 points, six of which came at the beginning of a decisive run that helped New York stave off another defeat before Charlotte's loud fans.

Hitting 11 of their first 13 shots in the third period, the Knicks opened an 81-70 lead after a Gerald Wilkins layup with 5:51 left in the period. The Hornets twice got within five points the rest of the way.

Although Patrick Ewing played 34 minutes, his offense didn't pick up until the second half. He took just two shots and hit one in the first half, and when he had scored six points in the third quarter, a technical foul he received forced Pitino to cool him for a bit. Still, Ewing had 14 points and there was more than enough offense to go around.

Gerald Wilkins had 20, Charles Oakley scored 18 points, Rod Strickland had 14 points, Trent Tucker 13 and Eddie Lee Wilkins 11 for the Knicks.

Pistons 111, Lakers 103

The Detroit Pistons won't let the absence of Magic Johnson take the luster off beating the Los Angeles Lakers.

Guards Joe Dumars and Isiah Thomas had 23 points apiece for Detroit, and Thomas matched a season high with 15 assists. James Worthy had 33 points and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar 21, both season highs, for Los Angeles.

Rockets 137, Celtics 123

Houston rolled to its highest point total of the season and Akeem Olajuwon buried Boston with 35 points and 19 rebounds.

Bucks 132, Nets 91

Milwaukee also had its season-high point total, building a 30-point halftime lead in a rout of New Jersey.

COLUMBIA, S.C. — North Carolina State coach Dick Sheridan is the University of South Carolina's choice to replace the late Joe Morrison as football coach, according to a published report.

But Sheridan is not expected to make a decision on the offer until Wednesday, The State newspaper said in its Tuesday editions. The newspaper said "it is believed Sheridan was offered the job" at a meeting with university officials at an out-of-town site Monday.

The State said the offer "is believed to have called for a five-year rollover contract and a salary in the same range as that paid Morrison," who earned about $95,000 per year.

South Carolina officials have not confirmed reports they intend to meet or have met with Sheridan.

"The university is not in a position at this time to talk about any details concerning discussions between university officials and a potential successor to Coach Joe Morrison," South Carolina said in a statement issued Monday.

Morrison, South Carolina's coach for the past six years, died Feb. 5 of a heart attack after playing racquetball.

The final Courtside Dinner of the 1989 East Carolina basketball season will be held Tuesday in the Pirate Club social room.

A social will begin at 5:30 p.m. followed by dinner at 6:30 p.m.

Pirate basketball coaches will speak following the meal and certificates will be awarded to the men's and women's Players of the Games for the month of February.

The dinners are sponsored by the Pirate Club, but are open to the public. Advanced reservations are suggested by calling the Pirate Club at 757-6178 by Friday.

Tyson-Givens Divorce Becomes Final

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The divorce of heavyweight boxing champion Mike Tyson and actress Robin Givens was made official on Valentine's Day in the Dominican Republic, ending one of the stormiest celebrity marriages in recent time.

Neal Hersh, Givens' attorney, said the television actress signed settlement documents last week. Tyson, 22, went to the Dominican Republic to obtain a mutual divorce because of Givens' acting commitments.

Tyson and Givens, 24, were officially married just over a year. Givens originally filed for divorce last. Oct. 7 in California. Tyson will defend his heavyweight crown at the Las Vegas Hilton Hotel on Feb. 25 against Frank Bruno of Great Britain.

Expos Remaining Mum On Smith Incident

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The front office of the Montreal Expos baseball team was tightlipped Tuesday about the arrest of pitcher Bryn Smith here in a prostitution sweep.

Smith, 33, was among 116 people charged with solicitation during the Feb. 6-8 operation in which six police officers posed as prostitutes along a busy street, said Police Chief Billy Riggs.

Smith faces a maximum of 60 days in jail and a fine of $500 if convicted of solicitation, and local authorities said they would seek the harshest possible sentence.

"The official stance is that we have no comment," said Expos team spokeswoman Monique Giroux. "It's a personal matter."

She said she hoped it would not interfere with Smith's expected arrival at the National League team's training camp, which begins Monday in West Palm Beach. He spends his off-season in his home state of California.

Smith has been with the Expos' organization since 1978 and was brought up into the majors in 1981.

Manager Buck Rogers was unavailable for comment at his California home. Teammate Tim Raines said he was unaware of Smith's arrest.

"It's a bit of a surprise, yeah," said the hard-hitting left fielder, who lives in Orlando.

Petty, Gibbs Want Same Things

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Richard Petty and Mickey Gibbs are on opposite ends of the NASCAR spectrum, with Petty have accomplished just about everything possible in the stock car series and Gibbs trying to get his big league career started.

But the seven-time Winston Cup champion and the Winston Cup rookie have something in common this week: both need a strong showing in Thursday's Twin 125-mile qualifying races to make it into Sunday's Daytona 500.

Petty, 51, will start 20th in the 30-car second race on Thursday, while Gibbs has been added as the final starter in the 31-car opening race.

Petty's 186.185 mph qualifying speed was only 47th among 61 cars which had official laps.

"For some reason, we're farther behind than we were before," said Petty, a seven-time Daytona 500 winner. "Here we are at the biggest race of the year and you're at the biggest disadvantage you'll face all year. It's really disgusting."

Ken Schrader won the pole position at 196.997 mph and Darrell Waltrip took the outside of the front row at 195.916. Positions three through 30 will be filled in the 125-milers, with the rest of the 42-car field determined from previous qualifying laps.

Petty knows he needs a good finish in his race on Thursday just to be assured of making Sunday's race.

"It could be kind of a close thing," he said. "We're just going to keep trying to get a handle on it."

What has Petty and others scrambling is the carburetor restrictor plate that NASCAR now requires at Daytona and at Talladega Superspeedway, the two biggest and fastest tracks on the stock car circuit.

"We just can't find any horsepower with that carburetor plate," he said. "With the plate, you don't draft like what we used to. If you don't run good by yourself, you won't be competitive.

"Before the plates, you'd pick up some in the draft, maybe as much as 7-8 miles per hour. Now, the draft just doesn't help that much."

Asked why some teams seem to have the restrictor plates figured out better than others, Petty said, "Supposedly, everybody is doing the same thing. But, some people aren't."

The Glencoe, Ala., driver crashed Tuesday in the practice preceding the final qualifying session. Gibbs was not injured, but his car was damaed.

Gibbs, 30, had run a qualifying lap of 186.343 on Saturday, but after electing to try again on Monday — which erased his earlier time — a mechanical problem kept him from running.

Maybe it's not fair to lump these three together, but who said this column was fair? And why lump them apart?

Jose Uribe will stand trial in the Dominican Republic for rape, after allegedly spiking the drink of a female bar patron.

Dorsett got 90 days in jail, sentence suspended, along with a fine and public service, for driving drunk.

Canseco was tagged by a cop for driving his new Jag in excess of 120 mph. Must have been racing a PSA commuter jet, or Ben Johnson.

Post-race testing turns up traces of cocaine in horses trained by Wayne Lukas and Laz Barrera, among others.

Because most of these thoroughbreds don't hang out on the streets, you have to assume someone slipped a little surprise into the old feedbag. This gives new meaning to common phrases such as "That ain't hay," "Winning by a nose" and "Get off your high horse."

And it goes to show what can happen if you run with a fast crowd.

2. Whooooooah, Okla-homa!

Some people say the Oklahoma football program is basically honest, but I say it's not fair to label an entire program based on the actions of a few good apples.

In recent months, Sooner players have been accused of shooting guns at one another, of rape, of selling cocaine to an undercover agent, of assault and of vandalism. At least 15 players have allegedly been involved in these lowjinks.

You've heard of the Crimson Tide. Meet the Red-and-White Crime Wave.

The good news: Not a single Oklahoma player has been accused of espionage against the government, or of breaking curfew.

"Ball carried by No. 42; tackle by No. 4739692387324."

This item tops (or bottoms) my crime list, because I score heavily for originality.

I've heard of cramming for a test, but this is ridiculous.

The year is young. As I write this, I hear news of a big-league baseball pitcher busted in a prostitution sweep, and a former college football player who gets six years in the slam on cocaine charges. It's coming off the sports wire faster than I can shovel it.

At the end of the year, the final Top 10 will be dishonored at a lavish awards banquet held at "Jovan," the suburban Michigan tavern where Leon [illegible]nks tends bar and Denny McLain plays the organ.

Vikings Slip Past Eagles ...

rebound but lost it out of bounds.

On the in-bounds play, Terry Williams threw the ball away to Lamont Harris who dished it to Becton. Becton then fired a pass into the lane and Merritt intercepted as the horn sounded ending the game.

"The clock may have been a factor," West Craven coach Lorenzo Jones said. "Lee Becton sees three tics on the clock and he may shoot rather than passing it.

"We wanted a chance to get a three and win it or at least get a two and have a chance for overtime."

Merritt, the Vikings' leading scorer, had only one basket in the game and didn't start because he had missed a practice, as had top reserve Junior Farrow. They both sat out the first half and entered the game with 4:34 remaining in the third quarter.

But, playing deep in the Vikings' zone defense, Merritt came up with the ball at the end.

"I was really concerned," Conley coach Cobby Deans said. "A three-pointer could have won it, (but I also) didn't want to spread the zone so they could a drive. That was a good move on his part. We wanted to make sure they didn't get a three-pointer. Everything else was supposed to be a two."

The Eagles got the attempt at a three, but Jenkins' shot came under pressure and it bounced high off the left side of the rim and only Gatlin was able to get a hand on it, but to no avail.

Both teams suffered through numerous ball-handling miscues in the first half, combining for 19 turnovers over the first two quarters of play as the lead seesawed back and forth, depending on which team was giving the ball away at a faster pace.

"It was one of those non-aggressive games where you pass the ball too much," Deans said. "Our guys that were out there were too timid. The rest of the starters were looking for the two guys (Merritt and Farrow) to come back in. I was hoping we could get by without playing them.

"Tonight, they did a good job of making us play their kind of ball, trying to get as many shots as we did. They wanted to control the ball."

Conley, 17-4 and 9-1, trailed through most of the second quarter before coming back to lead 21-19 at the half thanks to a late basket by Martin Patrick, who along with Williams had 12 points to lead the Vikings.

In the third quarter, Conley forged out to a five-point lead by the end of the period, but the Eagles rallied back in the final quarter to tie at 35-35 on two free throws by Jenkins with just over two minutes remaining.

But Bershaun Thompson fed Patrick for a basket at the other end to make it 37-35 with just under two minutes to go, setting up the Eagles' last ditch effort.

In the girls' game, Lendora Tyson scored nine of her game-high 27 points in the first quarter to help Conley take control early and hand West Craven a 69-33 defeat.

Conley, 16-5 and 7-3, led 15-5 after the first quarter of play and then Glenda Hardy took over, scoring 12 second-quarter points en route to a 22-point performance as the Valkyries led 38-14 at the half.

It was more of the same in the third quarter. After West Craven closed to within 38-19 on basket by Jennifer Poole and three-pointer from Linetta Bryant, Tyson scored nine of the Valkyries' 15 third-quarter points to put Conley ahead 53-29.

Both Conley teams return to action at East Carteret Friday.

Stewart's Coaching Status Still Unknown

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Whether Norm Stewart can return this season to his third-ranked Missouri team remained unknown today as the 53-year-old coach began recovering from cancer surgery.

The beleaguered Tigers, 21-5, meanwhile, were given a day off following their 82-75 loss Tuesday night to Iowa State, their second setback in three games since Stewart fell ill.

Just hours before the game, the team learned doctors on Tuesday morning removed a cancerous tumor from Stewart's colon and took out his diseased gall bladder.

"The doctors said they cleaned (the cancer) all out," said Bob Sundvold, an assistant basketball coach who was suspended with pay last week by the school while it investigates his involvement in alleged NCAA violations.

Hospital officials said Stewart was in satisfactory condition and would be hospitalized at least a week.

"During the evaluation of the source of the gasto-intestinal bleeding, it was found that Norm Stewart was suffering from gall bladder disease and cancer of the colon," a hospital news release said.

"Surgery was performed this morning to remove both the cancerous tumor and the diseased gall bladder. The surgery was successful and Coach Stewart tolerated the procedure well.

"He is currently in satisfactory condition and treatment for his ulcer disease continues. He will remain hospitalized for at least one week."

Beth Morell, a spokeswoman at the hospital, said she could offer no further information.

Stewart collapsed last Thursday, one day after Sundvold was suspended pending an investigation of possible NCAA violations. Stewart had been hospitalized with what doctors said were bleeding ulcers.

The team continued under the direction of Rich Daly, Stewart's recruiting specialist and the only fulltime assistant left.

According to Sundvold, Stewart showed signs of not feeling well as early as last summer. Sundvold said Stewart complained of dizziness last summer on the golf course and had to quit after eight holes. He also said Stewart fell down in the locker room before a game earlier this season.

"We all laughed about it then, but that must have been something like a sign," Sundvold said.

Sundvold said he had no idea how long Stewart might be kept from coaching.

"That tough old boot," Sundvold said. "He might be back in two weeks, yelling at all you guys (reporters) again."

He added it was conceivable Stewart might not return before the end of the season.

"I'm not sure things (basketball) are that important," Sundvold said. "I think Norm realizes that, and he's never been one to make it more important."

The NCAA had said it would await an internal investigation by the school, but has since been observed conducting interviews in the case.

The NCAA probe and Stewart's illness are only the latest in a string of setbacks and controversies overshadowing what many believe is the best team in Stewart's 22 years as Missouri coach.

His wife, Virginia Stewart, has undergone two major operations this month and was hospitalized last Thursday when Stewart fell ill. A spokeswoman said Tuesday she had been released.

Earlier in the season Stewart got into a bitter controversy with a St. Louis Post-Dispatch reporter over remarks which the reporter construed as threatening to his 1-year-old son. Fans at Nebraska became incensed on Jan. 28 when they said Stewart turned to them during a game and insulted Husker coach Danny Nee.

Stewart, a native of Shelbyville, Mo., was an all-conference player for Missouri in the mid-50s and became head coach in 1967 after a six-year stint at Northern Iowa.

In the ensuing decades, he has built the program into a Big Eight showcase. Going into the season, his Missouri record was 400-217 with five conference championships.

"Everybody in the Missouri athletic department just feels like rubbing our eyes and wondering what might happen next," said Joe Castiglione, director of marketing and communications. "Something like winning basketball games doesn't seem as important in light of Norm's illness."

play. It came 22 seconds after the Yellow Jackets' chances looked bleak.

For the deciding basket, the Yellow Jackets went to the play they do best.

"That's our bread and butter," Georgia Tech coach Bobby Cremins said of the final play. "Brian (Oliver) taking the ball into the corner and dumping it off to Tommy inside. That's the shot we want Tommy to take, and we'll win or die with it."

Getting that final shot was a work of perfection by the Yellow Jackets, who pulled into a second-place tie with North Carolina at 6-3 in the ACC standings. Georgia Tech is 17-7 overall.

Maryland had the basketball, a 66-65 lead, and 12 seconds left on the shot clock. The game had 27 seconds left to play.

After calling time out, the Terps got the ball inside to Massenburg, who had a career-high 30 points already. The 6-foot-9 junior tried a turnaround jumper with six seconds left on the shot clock and the shot was partially blocked by Tech's Maurice Brittian.

"I was surprised they shot so soon," Hammonds said. "I thought they'd try to hold it (the ball) to the very last, last second."

With new life, the Yellow Jackets raced the ball to midcourt and called time out.

On the ensuing inbounds play, Dennis Scott had the ball and Brian Oliver flashed into the left corner. Scott to Oliver, who never hesitated in finding Hammonds.

"I came off a double pick and Brian Oliver did a good job of getting me the ball," said Hammonds, who led the Yellow Jackets with 20 points.

Oliver added 17 points and Dennis Scott, who made just four of 15 shots, contributed 13 points for the Yellow Jackets, who have won 15 of their last 17 games against Maryland.

Duke.....98
Harvard.....59

BOSTON (AP) — Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski wanted to give struggling Greg Koubek confidence. Harvard was the perfect overmatched opponent for him to get it against.

The sophomore forward, starting his first college game, scored six of his career-high 19 points during a 15-1 surge in the first five minutes of the second half as 11th-ranked Duke rolled to a 98-59 victory over cold-shooting Harvard Tuesday night.

"I think this was just a one-game start to instill confidence in me and to say, 'Greg, we're going to need you later in the year,'" said Koubek, whose previous high was 14 points last season.

"He deserved to get an opportunity to" start, Krzyzewski said. "He played a good game."

Koubek, who had hit only 39.6 percent of his field goal attempts this season and 69.2 percent of his free throws, was 5-for-5 from the field and 7-for-8 from the foul line.

Harvard made just 22 of 77 shots for 28.6 percent and couldn't capitalize on Duke's season-high 34 turnovers. The Blue Devils made 55.9 percent of their shots.

The game figured to be a mismatch since Harvard, 8-12, plays in the weak Ivy League and Duke, 18-4, plays in the powerful Atlantic Coast Conference.

"We want our guys to shoot for greatness," Harvard Coach Peter Roby said of the decision to play Duke in the middle of the conference schedule. "You've got to feel good about the fact that you can force an ACC team to commit 34 turnovers."

"You can learn something from every game," Krzyzewski said. "The win is not the important thing. We're a good school. We like to play other good academic schools."

Duke led 46-35 at halftime before Ralph James hit a free throw for Harvard 12 seconds into the second half. Then Koubek's jumper from the left baseline began the Blue Devils' 15-point run that made the score 61-36 with 15:45 left in the game.

Duke hit seven of its 11 shots in that span, while Harvard missed its first nine shots of the second half. Mike Gielen broke the drought with a 3-pointer that cut Duke's lead to 61-39 with 14:41 remaining.

ECU-Campbell ...

play poorly and if you are a competitor and have some pride in what you're doing, you want to do well next time," Steele said. "They played extremely well and we played poorly (last year). You would think that our kids who played there would be excited about (this year's game)."

The Pirates come into the game with a three-game losing streak, and Steele would like to snap that and get his team moving toward a winning season in their four remaining home games. The Pirates, 10-12, must win four of the five games left on the slate to have a winning regular season, so the Campbell game takes on that added importance also.

"It's an important game for us in that regard (a winning season)," the Pirate coach said. "We had a close game here, but that was without their leading scorer, Henry Wilson. Now our team is without Kevin Staples. It's an entirely different situation."

Wilson, a 6-7, 220-pound forward, is the leading scorer for the Camels, hitting 17.9 points a game. He's also pulling 5.3 rebounds. Also in double figures is Julius McNeil, another 6-7 forward, at 10.6 points a game.

Jackson, 6-9, plays the center position, and averages 9.0 points a game and 7.8 rebounds, leading the Camels in that category. Starting at the guards are Brad Childers, 9.4 ppg, and Steve Bruce, 3.0 ppg.

Mocnik is averaging 9.1 ppg off the bench, while Spring is hitting 7.2 in a reserve role.

Edwards, who is averaging 26.0 points a game, needs but 24 points to become the 16th Pirate to score 1,000 points in his career. Edwards has accomplished this in just two years, only the second ECU player to do that. The other was Oliver Mack, who scored 1,196 points in his career. Edwards, if he matches his average the rest of the way, would score at least 156 more points for a total of 1,132, which would place him ninth among career scorers.

Pant-Hers Hold To First Place

SNOW HILL — Keisha and Gwen Pilgreen combined for 41 points to lead North Pitt to a 67-48 win over Greene Central Tuesday in an Eastern Plains 2-A Conference basketball game.

The Pant-Hers, 12-6 overall and 8-2 in the conference, used a strong second quarter to get ahead early. Keisha Pilgreen had six of her 22 points in the second period while Gwen Pilgreen had five of her 22 during the quarter as North Pitt led 34-21 at the half and never looked back.

The Pant-Hers are back in action Tuesday in their final home game against South Lenoir. That game could decide the league title.

Greene Central, 7-12 and 3-6, was led by Angel Harrell's 18 points. The Lady Rams next game is Friday at South Lenoir.

Farmville.....72
Pamlico.....39

FARMVILLE — Farmville Central had little pity on Pamlico County Tuesday in an Eastern Plains Conference girls' basketball game, rolling to a 72-39 victory.

Farmville crushed the Hurricanes by 21-1 in the opening period of the game and after that it was just a question of how bad it would be. Farmville ran its lead out to 40-14 at halftime.

In the third quarter, the Lady Jaguars upped their lead to 55-23 and cruised through the final period.

Brenda Reid led Farmville with 20 points while Felicia Barrett had 11 and Vickie Best had 10. Nicole Cooper led Pamlico with 17.

The win boosts Farmville Central to 6-3 in the league 13-7 overall. Pamlico drops to 1-7, 1-13.

North Pitt.....62

SNOW HILL — Greene Central edged out to a small lead in the second quarter and held on to defeat North Pitt, 70-62, in an Eastern Plains 2-A Conference basketball matchup Tuesday.

After going ahead 16-15 in the opening quarter, the Rams, 10-9 overall and 6-3 in the EPC, pushed out to a 33-28 halftime lead as Tyrone Streeter scored five of his 20 points and Johnny Joyner had six of his 14.

The Rams led by as many as 11 in the third quarter before North Pitt, 9-12 overall and 4-6 in the EPC, rallied to within three but that was as close as it would get the rest of the way.

North Pitt, which was led by William Morning's 22 points, returns to action Tuesday at home against South Lenoir. Greene Central is back in action Friday at South Lenoir.

East Carteret.....74

LITTLEFIELD — Ayden-Grifton warmed up for its key Eastern Plains Conference matchup with Farmville Central by taking an 84-74 win over 3-A East Carteret in a non-conference basketball game Tuesday night.

The Chargers ran out to a 24-14 lead in the first period and continued to pull away in the second quarter, 28-21. That gave the Chargers a 52-35 halftime lead.

East Carteret rallied in the third period with a 23-12 margin, trimming the lead to 64-58. But Ayden-Grifton held off the Mariners, 20-16, to claim the victory.

Leon Dixon had his career high to lead Ayden-Grifton, scoring 34 points. Ronnell Peterson added 23 and James Woodard hit 12.

Billy Ellison poured in 32 points to lead East Carteret while Joe Montford added 20.

The win runs Ayden-Grifton's overall record to 16-4, while East Carteret drops to 9-8.

The Chargers play host to Farmville Central on Friday in a game that could decide first place in the EPC.

Missouri Is Upset

Cyclones Upset 3rd-ranked Tigers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Just when Missouri thought its troubles had peaked, the third-ranked Tigers got leveled by a Cyclone.

Iowa State upset Missouri 82-75 Tuesday night, hours after Coach Norm Stewart underwent surgery for colon cancer and a diseased gall bladder.

Stewart, who had been hospitalized last week with a bleeding ulcer, is listed in satisfactory condition.

"I don't think we can use Norm being gone as an excuse to losing," center Gary Leonard said. "It is up to us to get ready to play each game. They told us about the surgery at pregame meal and I thought everyone had gotten over it."

Missouri, 21-5, lost for the second time in three games with Stewart absent. The Tigers fell into second place in the Big Eight at 7-2, one-half game behind Oklahoma.

"We never found a way to play the way we wanted to," said assistant coach Rich Daly, who guided Missouri. Daly is running the Tigers because top assistant Bob Sundvold was suspended recently amid allegations of NCAA rules violations.

Victor Alexander and Terry Woods scored 19 points each for Iowa State, 12-9 and 3-6 in the conference. The Cyclones beat Missouri for the fourth straight time at home.

"It's a terrific thrill to beat the No. 3 team in the country," Iowa State coach Johnny Orr said. "I still hold a lot of respect for Missouri, but we were better tonight. It was the night for us to win. This is one of the great victories in the history of Iowa State."

In other Top 20 games, No. 8 North Carolina beat Old Dominion 87-77 and No. 11 Duke defeated Harvard 98-59.

Missouri led 50-49 with 14:18 left, but Woods made a 3-pointer that put Iowa State ahead for good. The Cyclones increased their lead to eight, Missouri rallied within 66-65 and then Woods and Alexander made consecutive baskets.

Sam Mack added 15 points and reserve Marc Urquhart had 13, including five in the final two minutes, for the Cyclones.

Byron Irvin and Doug Smith scored 16 points each and Lee Coward had 14 for Missouri.

Others

Dana Barros scored 30 points and Steve Benton had 29 as Boston College ended an eight-game losing streak by winning at Notre Dame 83-72. The Eagles, trailing by one with 9½ minutes left, broke away with a 15-4 burst. Boston College is 9-12. The Irish, led by Joe Fredrick's 22 points, are 14-5.

Jason Matthews and Brian Shorter each got 22 points as Pittsburgh stopped St. John's 87-77 in the Big East. The Panthers, 13-10, made 16 of 17 foul shots in the second half with Matthews making all eight of his tries. Jayson Williams scored 30 points for the Redmen, 13-9.

Rampants Win ...

sion after scoring the last two baskets of the half, 39-38. James Teel then tied it up by hitting the front end of a two-shot foul just 16 seconds in the third period.

Carlester Crumpler followed with a short jumper for a 41-39 lead and Teel scored off a fast break with 7:17 left to put Rose out by 43-39.

After a Kinston basket, James Ebron and Teel both scored baskets to up the lead to 47-41.

Kinston rallied, however, on single free throws by Courtney Hawkins and Ben Street and a basket by Kornegay to cut it to 47-45 before Shawn Moore made a free throw, Jamie Brewington scored a three-point basket and Ebron hit a two-point jumper for a 53-45 lead, the largest the Rampants had held in the game at that point.

Kinston rallied once again, however, and cut the lead back to 54-52 on a quarter-closing three-pointer by Curt Ham.

But Rose ran off the first seven points of the final quarter, four by Paul Powers and three by Moore, to give Rose a 61-52 lead. After a couple of exchanges of baskets, Powers and Ebron hit baskets for a 67-56 lead with 3:33 to go, the biggest lead of the night for the Rampants.

Time became a factor for the Vikings at that point and they ran out of time still trailing by six.

Rose had a balanced attack that put four players in double figures, led by 17 by Teel. Ebron and Moore each had 14 while Crumpler hit 10.

"Shawn had a great game. He's going to be a star for us before he's through," Brewington said.

Kinston, in addition to Kornegay's 24, got 13 from Meme Moore and 12 from Hawkins.

Rose improves its record to 7-4 in conference play and 14-6 overall. Kinston drops to 3-8 in the league, 9-10 overall.

In the girls' game, Rose shook off Kinston after one period and rolled to its win.

The Rampettes had only a 9-7 lead after one quarter, but held Kinston to just a free throw in the second period while scoring eight more of its own. That gave Rose a 17-8 halftime lead.

Rose continued to pull away, scoring most of its 12 points in the period before Kinston finally got untracked and scored six of its own. Still, Rose led 29-14 going into the last period. Kinston rallied, 13-6, but was too far back.

Tina Smith led Rose with 12 points while Melvina Barnes had 10 to pace the Valkyries.

Rose improves to 6-5 in the league, 8-9 overall. Kinston drops to 7-4, 10-9.

Rose travels to Wilson Fike on Friday.

"Grandpa Bill"

It's finally happened, we're happy to say,
Bill Grant has finally come of age,
You see, he's a Grandpa as of today!

February 13th Lisa's "David Lee" was born,
That's why the boss has been looking so worn.
But now we know he's not 39 as he has always sworn.

We figure he'll get a rocker, and maybe a cane.
And surely some Bengay for all those Grandpa pains,
An oh yeah, something to remove little "baby" stains!

We're truly happy for Betsy and Bill,
And hope they don't realize they're now "over the hill",
Cause they don't act it now, and we hope they never will.

Housing Sales Up For 1988

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Sales of existing homes in 1988 hit their highest level in nine years as purchases shifted to the lower-cost South and Midwest and consumers opted to buy less costly dwellings rather than leave the market, a real estate trade group reported.

Despite the dampening effect of rising mortgage interest rates, sales for 1988 totaled 3.99 million units, up 2.6 percent from the previous year and the highest since 4.05 million sales were recorded in 1979, the National Association of Realtors said Tuesday.

"We underestimated the buying power strength of the baby boom generation," said Ira Gribin, president of the Realtors group. "The market is being driven by people who are buying in spite of rising rates."

The biggest sales gains were posted in the least expensive regions of the country.

Sales in the Midwest were up 6.1 percent during the last quarter of 1988 from the previous three months and sales in the South rose 5.4 percent. The Northeast, meanwhile, posted a 2.4 percent decline in sales, while the West recorded a 1.4 percent increase.

"The Midwest was a bright star of the nation's housing sector last quarter, and we think its improvement will continue this year," said John A. Tuccillo, the Realtors' chief economist. "We have seen activity pick up in the Midwest and South and subside in the high-cost areas of the Northeast."

Prices of existing homes, meanwhile, rose 4.1 percent in 1988 to a national median of $89,100, meaning half the homes cost more and half cost less. For the fourth quarter of 1988, the median price was down to $87,900.

Democrats Stress Leave, Wage Bills

LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Congessional Democrats have placed parental-leave and minimum-wage bills on a legislative fast track in an effort to force an early showdown with the Bush administration on work-related domestic issues.

Both bills are expected to clear the relevant Senate and House committees next month, and differences between the two houses on the issues are relatively minor.

At the same time, however, two other major social issues on the legislative agenda — child care and mandatory health insurance, neither of which enjoys a consensus of support — are not likely to be dealt with until next year or possibly the next Congress, congressional sources said.

Unlike the last Congress, when the Reagan administration generally opposed all the work-related issues proposed by congressional Democrats, President Bush essentially has embraced the need for legislation on child care and an increase in the minimum wage, and has urged employers to offer parental leave. As a result, Democrats and Republicans have a starting point for negotiations on the issues.

The decision to push early on parental leave and minimum wage appears to reflect expediency and cost. Congress debated the two issues at length last year, even though bills were not enacted. And the cost of both measures this year is comparatively small — giving them a boost in a time of near-legislative paralysis because of the budget deficit.

However, the substantive differences between the White House and Congress on both issues remain large, and the two chambers also will have to reconcile somewhat differing versions of the parental-leave legislation.

The Family and Medical Leave Act, as the bill is called, would require employers to allow parents of newly born, newly adopted or seriously ill children, or workers with seriously ill parents, to take unpaid leave. It also would provide for unpaid leaves for workers with a medically certifiable serious illness.

The Senate bill would grant 10 weeks of unpaid leave for child or parental care and 13 weeks for illnesses in any company with more than 20 employees. The House bill would grant a 15-week medical leave and would only cover businesses with more than 50 employers.

Foreign Flagmaker Suggests Substituting 'Made In USA' Labels

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A manufacturer's suggestion that American companies buy foreign-made U.S. flags and replace "Made in Taiwan" labels with "Made in USA" is causing a small uproar on Capitol Hill.

"In all my years as a member of Congress, few issues have struck me as being as blatantly outrageous" as the label-switch proposal, Rep. Douglas Applegate, D-Ohio, wrote in a letter seeking a Customs Service investigation.

Applegate was one of several members of Congress who asked Customs to look into the issue. The inquiries were triggered by a letter-writing campaign by domestic flag manufacturers.

"I feel we can compete with a U.S. flag labeled 'Made in Taiwan' but we cannot compete with a U.S. flag labeled 'Made in USA' when in fact it wasn't," wrote Vane Scott, general manager of the Colonial Flag Co. in Coshocton, Ohio.

Scott provided Applegate with a copy of a three-page 1987 solicitation on the letterhead of the Ming Teh Flag Co. Ltd. of Taipei, Taiwan, which suggested changing "Made in Taiwan" labels after the flag shipments had cleared Customs.

The copy, which does not show to whom the solicitation was originally addressed, was forwarded to Customs by several congressional offices.

Singles Turning To Church

Many Exchange Seat At The Bar For Church Pew

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH — In a era when churches are fretting about their shrinking ranks and singles are finding emptiness in the bar scene, both groups seem to be discovering each other — and liking it, some North Carolina religious leaders say.

"Anybody that wants to check 'em out, these are not losers," said the Rev. Jerry Hayner, who wrote a book titled "Growing Together — Singles and Churches."

"There was a time when you thought, 'These are losers, they go to church because church accepts everybody.' Well, these are Ph.D.s, leader types at IBM. They're driving their BMWs, a lot of them are very successful. It's beginning to be a very strong kind of thing," said Hayner, pastor of Forest Hills Baptist Church in Raleigh.

Forest Hills Baptist is one of a growing number of Raleigh, Chapel Hill and Durham churches and organizations reaching out to Christian singles.

Hayner says he welcomes more than 250 singles every Sunday. An interdenominational group called SOLO draws hundreds of singles to its Thursday night meeting. Then there are New Life, Singles Unlimited, and SOLO II, for older singles, he said.

Christians are not the first to notice the skyrocketing numbers of singles in the United States. In the three-city area, 41 percent of the adults over 18 were single in 1980, according Arlene Saluter of the U.S. Census Bureau. National statistics show that 37 percent of United States adults are single, the highest percentage of any period in the 20th century.

What are all these unattached people doing?

Some are seeking God, and Christian company.

At SOLO meetings, hundreds of singles sing, pray, and mingle over refreshments every week. They hear talks from group leaders on singles-related topics. The group also sponsors social events like holiday parties and ski trips.

J. Kenneth Maxwell II, 28, a gregarious marketing manager for the state Agriculture Department, attends weekly meetings of the singles group at Edenton United Methodist Church in Raleigh.

"I think we tend to stereotype Christians," he said. "Talking with people in general, there are a lot of problems facing this world today ... the social problems we face, disease, racism. You can get pretty depressed over it. If people look at that, they realize there's got to be something more."

Most Christian groups reject the suggestion that singles join their ranks to find romance.

"This is not a dating service, or a mating service," said the Rev. Waymond Burton, singles pastor of the Christian Faith Center. "We're not discouraging people from doing that, but we're involved in a lot of other activities."

A few years ago, churches had fewer singles to deal with. Often, when young people grew up going to church, their attendance would wane in their early 20s until they had families of their own and went back. Today that interim period is getting longer, Hayner said, and churches and young people do not want to be apart for so long.

Singles need guidance before marriage, Maxwell said. "Before you join your life with someone else, you've got to be able to live with yourself first," he said. "The single-adult ministries believe in that."

But singles ministries also are helping those who have been separated from a partner by death or divorce.

Charlotte Brown coordinates Singles Unlimited, which meets at Raleigh's Benson United Methodist Church on Friday nights — "the hardest night to be single again," Mrs. Brown said.

Not limited to Methodists, the group sponsors Monte Carlo nights, midnight bowling parties and guest therapists, who help singles with problems like "getting through the Christmas blues," Mrs. Brown said.

"It's worked for me. I've learned how to crochet; I've learned how to dance; I've learned how to handle my anger," she said.

Bobbi Tyson of Forest Hills Baptist Church said her church singles group gave her a place to belong after her divorce.

Needy Patients Will Benefit From Evening Of Socializing

By Priscilla Brown
THE DAILY REFLECTOR

Preparations have been under way for about a year. Greenville Country Club was reserved for the night. A band was located and booked. A menu was chosen, invitations mailed and programs printed.

For those who received an invitation, it is an opportunity to rub elbows with some of Greenville's own high society. And so they will turn out Saturday night, dressed to the nines for an evening of gala entertainment and haute cuisine.

It's time again for the annual Charity Ball, a tradition in Pitt County that reaches back more than 50 years, an evening known for its elegance courtesy of the Greenville Service League.

But for every plate of shrimp pontchartrain that's set in front of the guests, for every piece of music that sets feet a tappin', there'll be some grateful families in Pitt County this year.

Because when the Charity Ball guests sent their checks in to purchase tickets, they boosted a hospital fund that offers new hope to needy patients: the Laughinghouse Hospital Fund.

Margie Coburn, special programs representative and financial counseling supervisor at Pitt County Memorial Hospital, has seen the Laughinghouse fund work for each of the 19 years she has been at the hospital.

"I've seen it do some very good things," she said. "It helps people who would help themselves, people who aren't just takers.

"Their stories are all about the same," she added, "all sad, all about a real need."

In 1988, the Laughinghouse fund helped 83 area residents with medical bills. None of those patients were able to afford medical insurance, and none of them qualified for any of the welfare programs available. They were all, Mrs. Coburn said, hard-working people trying their best to make it against insurmountable odds.

Among the families helped by the fund was a Bethel family who had two small children. Both parents worked, but the mother became pregnant again. This time, though, doctors had to intervene to save the mother's life. It was an ectopic, or tubular pregnancy.

"She was in the hospital for three days, plus the surgery — it was a big hospital bill," Mrs. Coburn said. "They came in and talked to me, and agreed to pay $35 a month.

"Their hearts were broken over the loss of the baby, and then they had all this expense. When the Laughinghouse fund stepped in, the lift was emotional as well as financial."

The fund was established in 1939. Helen Laughinghouse Stokes, the Service League's first president, had approached the hospital board in December of 1938, asking if the club could sponsor a hospital bed.

The board responded by saying it would be great if the league would promise $2 per day for a bed. The Duke Endowment would pay for the rest of the bed, at a sum of $1 per day. The league's total annual contribution would be about $73.

In February of 1939, the fund was established, and at a league luncheon in June of 1939, it was dedicated to Dr. Charles O'Hagan Laughinghouse, Mrs. Stokes' father.

He was chosen, club records show, to honor his work and to acknowledge the leadership of Mrs. Stokes.

'89 Charity Ball Takes An Uptown Approach

By all accounts, Catherine Gavigan and her committee have planned a Charity Ball that guests won't soon forget.

The lilting strains of big band music are gone. Formal, engraved invitations have been replaced. Extravagant decorations have been pared down.

In their places are a band which promises a driving beat and a first-rate floor show, invitations that grab the recipient and a dinner of sheer delight.

More than 300 guests are expected at the ball, which is set for Greenville Country Club. Dinner begins at 8 p.m., with the ball at 9.

Guests at the black-tie affair will be treated to a sit-down dinner of Tournedos with Bordelaise Sauce, Shrimp Pontchartrain, Brabant Potatoes, Dilled Zucchini, Fresh Roll Round and Raspberry Sherbert.

And just as the last bit of iced fruit has been consumed, The Fantastic Waller Family will step to the stage.

When they do, the final step of a year-long plan will begin. Mrs. Gavigan and her group began planning the ball last spring, setting it around the theme of "An Evening of Fascinating Rythmn."

Decorations within the club will follow the same design as the invitations which were mailed out in January. A large, four-way folding card flanked by piano keys beckoned this year's guests to the ball.

Beginning with the driveway of the Country Club, the theme will continue. Floating musical notes will greet guests on Saturday, and as they enter the club building, they'll be met with, committee members say, a fantasy world of music.

Mirrors will highlight the table decorations, and the backdrop for the Waller Family will feature silver and black mylar, complete with a five-foot saxophone of black foam board and silver glitter.

Even the ladies' lounge will be decorated with sparkle and glitter.

But those with the most glitter on this Saturday evening may be the teens who are serving as ushers and usherettes for the 1989 ball. Ushers are Wesley Martel Measamer and Jeffrey Allan Likosar.

Usherettes are Suzanne Evans Brewer, Dorothy Lee Nisbet and Katrina Steinbeck.

Outward Bound Charts Inner-City 'Wilderness'

By Jules Loh
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — On a wall in the small office of Rudy Rodrigues, a leader of Outward Bound, hangs a detailed map of the wilderness his charges must conquer in pursuit of survival through self-confidence.

This challenge is particularly tough. The map is of New York City.

America's large cities are asphalt jungles all right, at least in metaphor. But for more than a quarter-century in America, Outward Bound has evoked images of well-heeled executives and well-scrubbed youths in expensive hiking boots breathing clean air on faraway mountains.

So what's a nice program like that doing in a place like this?

"It's long overdue," says Rodrigues, "or would appear so from the results of our first year. This is no experiment. We're committed now, and going all out."

Actually, Rodrigues says, urban Outward Bound programs are a return to first principles. The organization was founded to teach resourcefulness, confidence, compassion, perseverance and self-esteem, but always has tried to include the ideal of service as well.

"It's not easy to stress the service ideal in the wilderness," he says.

"The traditional Outward Bound schools cater to the more privileged, so this is a shift from the traditional. In the city, we serve. Our focus right now is on inner-city youth and the homeless."

Serving, Outward Bound crews have renovated shelters, picnicked with homeless children, distributed food. But, on the theory that most urban discord results from people of varied ethnic and economic stripes threatening and fearing one another, relieving social tensions, Rodrigues feels, might be the best service of all.

Indeed, Outward Bound is so satisfied with its work in concrete canyons that a staff is already setting up a similar program in Chicago and others are planned in Boston, Baltimore, Los Angeles and Minneapolis.

A typical New York Outward Bound program matches a dozen or so corporate executives with an equal number of disadvantaged persons of various ages and cultures and turns them all loose on the town for a few days with an instructor.

The haves live, work and discourse with the have-nots, an unlikely get-together in any town. The haves, moreover, must make do without cab fare, credit cards or carpet slippers.

They will sleep outdoors in blankets, walk where they want to go or ride the subway if they have a token. They find meals as best they can, and as cheaply.

'The traditional Outward Bound schools cater to the more privileged so this is a shift from the traditional... Our focus right now is on inner-city youth and the homeless."

Rudy Rodrigues
Outward Bound leader

Without exception, participants report that the experience gave them a new, less judgmental perception of the lower crust, even a bond with them, and thus a clearer view of the city's social problems.

For their part, the inner-city folk discarded long-held prejudices among themselves. "Black kids and Hispanic kids in New York grow up believing that white kids are weak," one 18-year-old black reported. White participants weren't aware of that.

The corporation picks up the Outward Bound tuition for its own execs and also for their classmates, $60 a day each, same fee as the traditional courses out yonder.

The course relies on proven wilderness techniques transferred to the cityscape with, of course, some compromises.

Instead of testing endurance by dashing across mountain meadows, for example, the New Yorkers take laps around the Central Park reservoir. Instead of going hand over hand across a chasm, they climb in the rigging of a four-master at the South Street Seaport museum. Instead of a white-water raft adventure, they row an eight-oar lifeboat up the East River.

Show Examines Homelessness

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The genesis of the weekly CBS News program "48 Hours" was a riveting documentary called "48 Hours on Crack Street."

After a season on the air, "48 Hours" has fine-tuned its unique, spot-documentary style and on Thursday takes on an equally compelling subject — homelessness. This installment of "48 Hours" produces some of its best reporting, camera work and editing yet.

Correspondents Bernard Goldberg, Betsy Aaron, Harold Dow and Harry Smith spent two days covering various aspects of the problem. Their report is often touching, often enlightening, sometimes depressing and ultimately inspiring. If this doesn't make you want to go out and do something — or at least lend a hand to the people who do — not much will.

The story was covered in New York City, where a huge homeless population finds it can live under the feet of a hardened populace long accustomed to ducking beggars and stepping over derelicts.

Goldberg spent his 48 hours with those with whom the rest of us come into daily contact — panhandlers and street people. "Shorty" takes Goldberg on a sometimes amusing trip through the subway system, where he hops cars and announces to jaded passengers that he is collecting funds to help the homeless. "You gotta sell, and I'm sellin' 'em," he tells Goldberg. On one train, Shorty is chagrined to find he's competing with a guy in a monk's robe with a megaphone.

But an hour of working the subway nets more than $22. As the camera rolls, Goldberg asks Shorty — "just between you, me and the people listening" — if he is really collecting money for the homeless. Shorty, well aware of the camera, admits he's collecting the money for himself.

Cut to needy beggars. But also to a public that is suffering what Goldberg calls "compassion fatigue." A pathetic young, pregnant woman begs coins from passers-by in Grand Central Terminal with little luck. One well-to-do young woman buying a magazine walks hurriedly away.

"Like you weren't even there," Goldberg whispers to the pregnant woman.

"It don't feel too good," she says softly.

Dow followed the final, sad journey of a young Polish immigrant, from the street in Brooklyn where he succumbed to alcoholism and froze to death, to hisburial in a mass paupers' grave.

Aaron went into the harrowing welfare hotels and produced some heart-rending interviews with children who live in tiny rooms with desperate parents and face possible death at the hands of strangers outside. Aaron asks one young girl what she most fears most. "Killing," the girl says.

Aaron took a group of the children to a coffee shop and asked them to tell her about their dream homes. The kids conjure up poignant visions of big houses with swimming pools and backyards filled with animals.

Barry, a 13-year-old, left the hotels, he said, because his mother and aunt did drugs. He lives on the streets, occasionally bunking at the home of a friend.

Actor Willem Dafoe Remains Cool Despite His Controversial Career

By Bob Thomas
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — For an actor who starred in the two most controversial movies in the past years, Willem Dafoe remains remarkably cool.

Dafoe's career exploded two years ago with "Platoon," which won him an Academy nomination and elevated him from a little-known character actor to full-fledged star. Last year he found himself at the center of a firestorm of protest over "The Last Temptation of Christ," in which he portrayed Jesus Christ.

Now Dafoe is starring with Gene Hackman as two FBI agents of differing styles in "Mississippi Burning," a fictional account of the investigation of the murders of three civil rights workers in the turbulent 1960s. Black leaders and have assailed the film for overlooking black participation in the civil rights struggle, and others who took part in or reported the events have decried the alleged distortion of history and the glorification of the FBI.

Director Alan Parker and others associated with the Orion Pictures movie have emphasized its fictional nature. During a recent visit to Los Angeles, Dafoe, who lives in New York, declined to be drawn into the controversy. But he did reflect on his participation in two headlined movies.

"There's no clever anecdote about 'Mississippi Burning'; I just read the script and responded to it," he said. "I was aware of (the civil rights struggle) in 1964, when I was nine years old. I don't remember the actual event, but I do remember a lot of trouble in the South.

"Then in 1968, I remember being very conscious, even by reading the newspapers at 13 and growing up very comfortably, of the feeling that the world was coming apart. That was the time of Richard Specht and the murder of those nurses (in Chicago) and the assassinations of (Martin Luther) King and (Robert) Kennedy. So it's an era that I don't really know first-hand, because I wasn't an adult. But I think it points to things that we're concerned with today."

"Mississippi Burning" was filmed in the same general area where the events took place.

"We got a surprising amount of support from the people down there," said Dafoe. "I think some people, particularly in our locations in Mississippi, were eager to cooperate with us, kind of as a gesture to let people know that things had in fact changed.

"But certainly there were people who commonly said, 'Why do you want to bring these things up again? It's over.'"

Why indeed bring these things up again?

"I don't know. I'm not so good at lessons. But I think the bottom line is: Sure, we can remember things by having this presented to us again. Remember, it is fiction, but it is based on the Shelby County murders."

Volunteers from around the country were invited to take part in the "Freedom Summer" to help register black voters in segregated Mississippi. One was 20-year-old Andrew Goodman, a student at Queens College. On Sunday, June 21, Goodman and two members of CORE (Congress of Racial Equality), Michael Schwerner and James Chaney, were driving to the town of Lawndale where a black church had been burned.

They were stopped for speeding near Philadelphia and jailed for several hours. After being released that night, the workers disappeared. Their bodies were discovered Aug. 4 on a farm outside of Philadelphia.

Dafoe's engagement for "The Last Temptation of Christ" seems equally as casual as his appearance in "Mississippi Burning." Returning from the Thailand locations for "Off Limits," he was summoned to a meeting with Martin Scorsese. After talking to the director and reading the script, "I knew pretty much right then and there that we were going to do this together."

The actor realized the perils of portraying Jesus on the screen and that it was a work that was bound to arouse the wrath of fundamentalists.

"But a man's gotta do what he's gotta do," Dafoe said with a chuckle. "I felt like I was the right person to do that role. Sure, I knew that the ... book was controversial, and I knew there had been a rough history of trying to get this film done.

"I must say I was surprised by how the protest manifested itself. I didn't think the controversy was really going to happen. Maybe I was just putting it out of my mind because I had some work to do and that was the important thing."

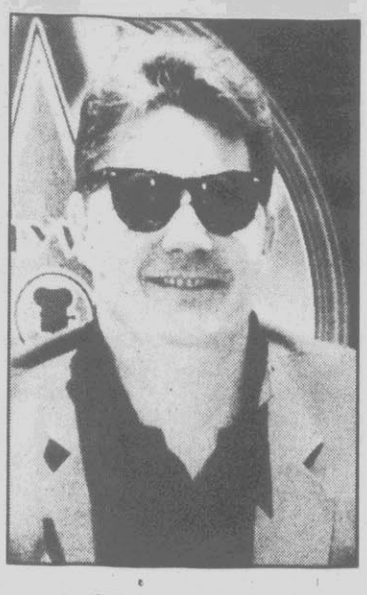
Miller Says 'Born 2B Blue' Was A Labor Of Love



STEVE MILLER

By Mary Campbell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Steve Miller's newest album, "Born 2B Blue," was a work of love for the veteran musician. It was something he just wanted to do, rather than a job to create hits.

The album, his 18th for Capitol Records, includes such staples of pop and jazz as "When Sunny Gets Blue" and "Willow Weep for Me." But there are no Steve Miller tunes on it.

"My own artistic sense told me I could sing that stuff pretty good," the 45-year-old singer-guitarist-composer said. "I couldn't play it." But he got help from a long-time friend, pianist Ben Sidran.

"It's a forward-looking album. I feel like my audience is ready for this. I've been ready for this for a long time."

He'll tour the world for the album next summer. "We need about a $3 million budget to get it ready to take around the world. I think we can do it. If it works we make lots of bucks and on we go for another five-10-20 years. I'd like to be performing the rest of my life. I'd like to drop dead on stage, or off-stage and they can announce, 'Ladies and gentlemen, Mr. Miller has just left the building and the planet.'"

Miller plans to open the shows solo and acoustically, doing a few of his big rock hits. Then Sidran will join him.

"It'll be the Steve and Ben show for awhile," he said. "Then his band will come in. We weave our way through blues, jazz and rock. We've got a real good jazz-rock arrangement on 'Space Cowboy.' We'll invite jazz and blues musicians in that town to solo on 'God Bless the Child' and 'When Sunny Gets Blue.' It'll be a well-rounded evening. I'd like to bring it on Broadway."

Sidran and Miller met in 1961 when both studied comparative literature at the University of Wisconsin. "He worked on my first album, 'Children of the Future,' and co-wrote 'Space Cowboy' with me," Miller said. "This album has enabled us to work together on a mature level.

"His band came out to play Jazz Alley in Seattle. We brought his band over to my studio on five afternoons. I would sing. They would work on the arrangements." That was August 1986.

"They went on tour. I kept the tapes around. Then I started listening to them." Miller decided he'd like it to become his next album. "Ben was down in Los Angeles with the guys. We cut some more. I asked Ben if he would introduce me to some jazz players.

"That's Milt Jackson playing vibes on 'Born to Be Blue.' Phil Woods plays solo on 'When Sunny Gets Blue' and 'Red Top.' I think 'Red Top' is going to be the most popular song on the record." Later, after some live dates with Sidran, Miller redid some vocals and strings were added.

"Born to Be Blue" was difficult, Miller said, because he had to run scales and practice. "It's a Mel Torme tune. I tried to make things seem seamless and effortless. It was a real job. I found out how great Mel is."

Miller had early musical roots. His mother was from a musical family and one of his uncles played violin in Paul Whiteman's orchestra and another uncle played guitat. His father, a doctor and tape recorder fanatic, was best man at Les Paul and Mary Ford's wedding. When Miller was 5, the couple showed him guitar licks and harmonizing.

"I wanted to be Les Paul," Miller said.

Miller's father and T-Bone Walker became friends. "When I was 11, T-Bone taught me how to play guitar behind my head while doing the splits. I started my first band when I was 12. We played intermissions at fraternity dances at Southern Methodist. I taught my older brother to play bass so he could drive me to the gigs.

"I went to college, studied in Copenhagen a year, started my rock 'n' roll career. I was too young and too stupid to go back and see T-Bone. I wish I had. He totally shaped the way; I am a pupil of T-Bone Walker when I play lead guitar."

Miller decided not to get a doctorate in comparative literature and instead went to Chicago.

"My grad work was done at the University of Blues on the south side of Chicago," he said.

Composer Celebrates The Trombone

By Mary Campbell
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The Pulitzer Prize-winning composer Ellen Taaffe Zwilich was commissioned to create a new music piece for the Chicago Symphony because two trombone players wanted her. Sir Georg Solti will conduct "Concerto for Trombone and Orchestra" when the Symphony premieres it this month.

"The orchestra has a very fine first trombonist, Jay Friedman, and now has a wonderful bass trombone player, Charles Vernon. They both asked for me. I love the instrument and I think it's a wonderful solo instrument — with a very small repertoire," said Zwilich, the only woman ever to be awarded a Pulitzer for music.

"To me it's an instrument that should have the stature of the violin or piano as a soloist. So I was thrilled. It's nice to feel you're making a contribution."

ELLEN TAAFFE ZWILICH

When it came to composing, Zwilich said, "What I decided to do was write very different pieces. The one for tenor trombone is very interactive with the orchestra.

"The other, that I'm working on, is for bass trombone and strings and very little percussion. It is less interactive and more brilliantly virtuosic." The piece will be premiered next season.

Her "First Symphony" won the Pulitzer Prize for music in 1983.

Zwilich, who is 49, played violin for seven years in the American Symphony. She played trumpet in school and has had experience with each family of instruments. She didn't play trombone.

"I think one of the wonderful things that's available to a composer today is the good advice of musicians you respect," she said in an interview.

"Both Jay and Charlie have had very strong impact on the pieces I was writing for them. I've sat down with them, with and without instruments. We talk on the telephone. Someone who spends his or her life playing an instrument always has insights the outsider can never have.

"I also sat down with Solti. We talked about other people's music for trombone and orchestra and he told me what he thought the problems were."

The New York Philharmonic premiered Zwilich's "Symbolon" last June in the Soviet Union. It's the first American composition to be premiered there. This season, the Philharmonic will perform that work and the composer's "Concerto Grosso 1985" at Lincoln Center. Based on a theme of Handel, it was commissioned by the Washington Friends of Handel.

Zwilich went on the Philharmonic tour. She relates that one Soviet man said he was surprised to hear a powerful piece composed by a woman. "The translator sort of giggled. She, as well as I, thought it was quaint." However, Zwilich said, Americans also "are sometimes surprised that women composers would have what might be considered a powerful statement to make."

As the trombone concerto was composed for a particular player and orchestra, "Symbolon" was tailored for its debut.

"Two things were uppermost in my mind," she said. "One was that I wanted it to be a piece that would exploit the New York Philharmonic's virtuosity. I wrote a bass solo because the principal contrabass player is from Leningrad.

"The fact it was going to receive its premiere in the Soviet Union was very touching to me. I knew the piece would reflect the powerful and sometimes conflicting emotions that I have about the current world political situation.

Diplomat's Wife Launches Own War On Drugs

By Joan Mower
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Claire Hoess, wife of the Austrian ambassador, does her share of tea-pouring at diplomatic receptions, but her real passion lies elsewhere: she's determined to fight the war on drugs.

"You can't beat this problem from above ... you have to shock the kids," says the English-born Mrs. Hoess, a lanky woman who wears her blonde hair cropped short and likes to relax in jeans.

Soon after she moved here about a year ago, Mrs. Hoess vowed she'd do something constructive to fight drugs in a city which last year had the highest murder rate in the country.

Police blame much of the crime on the drug dealing that takes place in neighborhoods just a few miles away from Mrs. Hoess' residence.

On a trip to New York, Mrs. Hoess visited Daytop Village, a leading drug treatment center where former addicts performed a gritty, improvisational play based on their experiences in the depths of a depraved drug world.

So impressed was Mrs. Hoess with the play, entitled, "The Concept," that she decided to bring it to Washington for two performances.

"I'm not doing this as a social event," Mrs. Hoess said in an interview. "I want it to have an impact."

To that end, Mrs. Hoess arranged for the District of Columbia school system to have high school seniors attend a scheduled performance Monday at a local theater.

Members of the diplomatic corps and other Washingtonians have been invited to a second performance.

"We think it's a great idea," said Marilyn Tyler Brown, an assistant school superintendent. "The students will get to see people who have been through a substance abuse program."

Mrs. Hoess' initiative is "more unusual than typical" in the diplomatic circuit where some women do volunteer work, but few launch out in their own projects, according to Phyllis Moyer, executive director of The Hospitality and Information Service, a non-profit group that helps foreign diplomats adjust to Washigton.

Mrs. Hoess, who sometimes spends her free time driving around the city to get a first-hand look at the seamier parts of town, raised money to bring the troupe to Washington and then convinced a hotelier to donate rooms for two nights. She even got inmates at a local prison, the Lorton correctional complex, to print the invitations.

Mrs. Hoess was awakened to the drug problem in the early 1970s.

CLAIRE HOESS

"I saw what was happening to the friends and their children," she said, citing one case in which a 12-year-old walked through a window.

Back in Vienna, headquarters of the U.N. narcotics bureau, Mrs. Hoess plunged into fighting drugs on an international level. She studied the problem and learned about the drug culture.

Since coming to the United States, she has toured drug rehabilitation centers in New York and Atlanta, and talked to business leaders and bankers about devoting more money to such facilities.

Mrs. Hoess said she likes to be personally involved in issues. While visiting Zaire once, she traveled to a leper colony in the bush that had been set up by Albert Schweitzer.

The staff wanted to give Mrs. Hoess the hands-off tour for dignitaries, but she rejected that idea. "I put on my dirty old jeans and started cleaning the floors like the other people," she recalled.

Outward Bound Moves To City

The lessons apparently have the same results. Says one graduate, "In the boat, all of us were strangers, but until we discovered that we had to pull together we went in circles."

On one expedition, 18 men and youths recruited from a shelter for the homeless in Harlem were taken to Fort Tryon Park — not exactly Yosemite, but it did afford a 40-foot rock wall. All 18 scaled it.

"In the shelter," one recalled afterward, "we didn't trust one another. We fought. We were selfish.

"Out there on that rock there was a guy on top with a rope and my safety depended on him. When it was over, the relationship we had with one another was totally different."

That lesson, and even more so the lifeboat lesson, harks back to the origin of Outward Bound.

During World War II, the head of a British shipping firm, Lawrence Holt, decided that too many of his sailors, despite lifeboats, were being lost at sea when their ships were sunk.

He consulted Kurt Hahn, operator of a prominent boys' school. Hahn, in 1941, opened a school in Wales to teach young mariners self-confidence, small-boat handling, route-finding, rescue — and community service.

Holt named the program Outward Bound, a nautical term for the point at which a ship leaves safe harbor for the open sea.

Now Outward Bound programs thrive in 36 countries. Only two others, Britain and the Netherlands, include urban programs, but according to Rodrigues, the New York director, neither has the scope of the New York operation.

"We conducted 10 programs last year and so far this year we have planned 16 weekend courses and two 16-day courses which will be a blend of the wilderness and the city," he says. "These will run April through November."

Meanwhile, says Rodrigues, beaming, his curriculum includes continuing programs in four of New York's polyglot high schools which have had racial and ethnic clashes.

The high school programs, not surprisingly in New York, use techniques of the theater. Students act out roles, exposing bigotries and foolish fears. The results are especially satisfying to the executive director.

Rudy Rodrigues was born in Kenya in 1941 when it was a British colony. His father was a British civil servant, born in Goa, a Portuguese colony in India. His mother was born in Karachi, then a part of India.

Rodrigues is a lean, swarthy man with vivid brown eyes behind aviator glasses. A mane of thick, black, curly hair lit with strands of silver brushes the neck of his sweater. Jeans and sweaters are the work clothes of his staff as well, in characteristic contrast with the three-piece suits and straight skirts predominant in the mid-town Manhattan skyscraper where they work.

'When I was a boy," Rodrigues was saying the other day, "all the various races in Kenya lived and grew up and worked in isolation of one another. After 10th grade, I went to Outward Bound. It was my first opportunity to be together with people of different races and backgrounds.

"One of my instructors was a British army officer. He kept talking about this place called Sandhurst, the Royal Military Academy. He told us only the best, the creme de la creme, could get in.

"Here I was a kid from a colony, non-English. What chance had I? But because of my Outward Bound experience I decided, hell, I think I'll go. I knew it was up to me. So I went."

After an army tour and a stint with the United Nations fighting famine, Rodrigues moved to New York. The notion of an urban Outward Bound program fascinated him.

"I believe the urban backdrop has a much more exciting dynamic to it than the wilderness," he says. "The wilderness is predictable. The mountains are always there, and the rivers.

"But the environment in the city is constantly changing. I believe the challenges posed in the city are far greater.

"For every reason Outward Bound belongs in the wilderness, it belongs here as well."

Fund Helps Patients

Since then, the fund has expanded. In 1977, its name was changed from the Laughinghouse Hospital Bed Fund to the Laughinghouse Hospital Fund. It helps pay for medication, transportation to and from the hospital for treatment, laboratory fees connected with a hospital visit and a host of other services.

Current fund chairman Mary Ann Barnhill remembered a particularly special beneficiary of the charity. The fund provided money to buy a computer which enabled a handicapped girl to communicate with others.

Paralyzed, the youngster could move only her eyelids. But with the specially designed electronics, she was able to talk, to share with those around her until the day she died.

"The fund is designed to help those people who fall through the cracks," said former league president Barbara Wilkerson. "It helps those who do everything they can to keep themselves from slipping into welfare, yet can't afford medical insurance."

The Laughinghouse fund isn't the only activity sponsored by the Service League. Volunteers staffed about 35 bloodmobiles last year, donating between 250-300 hours of their own time in January alone. They work at the Ronald McDonald House, run the hospital's gift shop (with crafts made by League members), and provide baskets of layette items for indigent mothers.

But that annual account for needy patients has set a lot of hard-working families free from a mountain of expensive medical bills.

Mrs. Coburn remembered a teen who was trying to make it on her own when tragedy hit. With high-school diploma in hand, the young woman had landed a job in a local dentist's office. She was working hard to make ends meet when she got appendicitis.

"Her mother was planning to help," Mrs. Coburn said. "She said, 'We can handle this.'

"But she had complications. She was back in the hospital four times — we almost lost her one time — and before she realized it, she had run up a tremendous bill.

The Laughinghouse fund helped. But its presence accomplished more than paying the bill. "It showed them that there were some resources in the community because people do care," Mrs. Coburn said. "There were some private donors in this case, but it said a lot to this family."

Not everyone qualifies for the fund, which is also supported by occasional memorial gifts from area families. Mrs. Barnhill said the Service League looks for families who are genuinely caught by the system, and requires the attending physician to write a letter on behalf of the patient.

Still, the fund tries to meet a whole range of needs. "I remember when they bought a cane for an ole man who needed one desperately," Mrs. Coburn said. "I know a $20 cane doesn't sound like much, but when you can't walk without it, and you don't have $20, it's everything."

Musician Crusades For Squeezebox

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PEORIA, Ill. — From his two-room apartment in St. Augustine's Retirement Home, Enrico Mastro-Nardi is leading a quiet crusade for a noisy instrument.

He's trying to revive the accordion to its glory days of the 1940s and 1950s, the days of Lawrence Welk and Dick Contino.

Mastro-Nardi, 77, spent 57 years teaching accordion in Chicago and Peoria. Now, he spends up to eight hours a day writing letters and mailing tapes of famous accordionists to the faithful — those who also remember the accordion in its heyday, the days when Mastro-Nardi and his band played six concerts a week.

Those were the days when everyone wanted to repeat the Dick Contino story, and parents couldn't get their kids accordions and accordion lessons fast enough.

Those were also the days when a new accordion cost $250, not the $2,500 a good new instrument would cost today.

Nonetheless, Mastro-Nardi believes firmly that the accordion's golden age is in the future, not in the past.

"The accordion is coming back, and it's going to be better than ever," says the onetime band leader, who now limits his performances to playing with the Peoria Senior Citizens' Band.

"It's only 150 years old, an infant in the musical instrument family," he says. "During those 150 years, it made much progress, but it's going to take another 50 to 100 years to be recognized and respected by the music fraternity around the world."

Mastro-Nardi and his mother came to Chicago from Italy when he was 2 years old to join his father. He started work in a barrel factory when he was 14, earning 25 cents an hour.

A friend pointed out that family celebrations in their Chicago neighborhood invariably featured one of three well-known local accordionists.

"As we understood it, they got $25 for an afternoon," Mastro-Nardi says. "That was a lot of money."

With the help of his father, Mastro-Nardi got an accordion from the Wurlitzer Co. He also got lessons from Andy Rizzo, a famous teacher of the day.

"He taught me to love the accordion for making music, not money," Mastro-Nardi says. "An invaluable lesson."

Don't Ignore That Cough For Too Long

ORADELL, N.J. (AP) — A cough that lasts longer than four weeks should not be ignored or suppressed with cough syrup.

Although often a result of inflammation following a cold, a cough can signal serious disease, including lung cancer, says Patient Care magazine. Once the underlying problem is identified, symptomatic treatment ranges from tea with brandy and honey to codeine.

To diagnose chronic cough, begin with a thorough history, physical examination and a chest X-ray by your doctor.

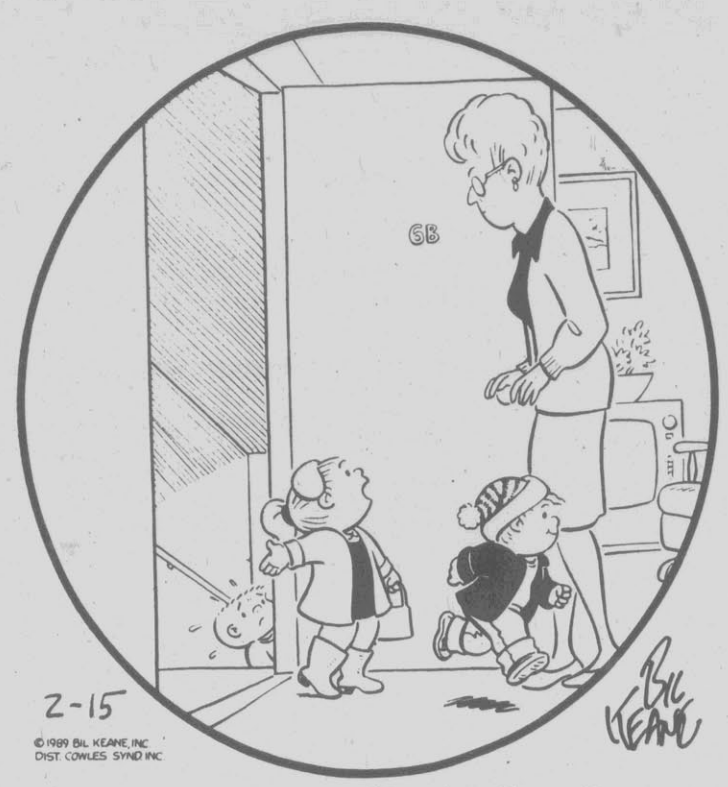
The Family Circus — By Bil Keane



"PJ's afraid to come in, Grandma. Mommy read 'Little Red Ridinghood' to him yesterday."

Horoscope — From The Carroll Righter Institute

FORECAST FOR THURSDAY Feb. 16

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Work has its ups and downs today. Stay clear of perplexing situations. Stay calm if you feel that your work is overdemanding.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): The energy you feel today could lead to overindulgence and excesses. Work is in a favorable cycle. Expect rewards for your efforts.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): Keep your thumb on finances over the next few days. Check on what other family members spend. Job responsibilities could soar.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21): Avoid those with devilish ways that can lead you down the wrong path. Associate with those you trust and benefit from.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21): Fluctuating moodiness will set the tone for the day if you let it. Focus on your mate's love and caring attitude.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22): The workplace brings rewards. An abandoned study course or avocation needs to be refueled and restarted. Siblings are a challenge.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): Avoid kinky people and fast deals. Get-rich-quick schemes rarely work. A romantic attachment could have a negative outcome.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Homelife is a bright spot in your life to enjoy. Financially you gain a little and lose a little, but win in the end.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Self-improvement through education and study will need planning. Ask someone you care about to join in, possibly a friend or mate.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20): Independence urges need to be toned down. You need more organization. Bring added variety to your life. Don't abandon what has been built.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): Romantic impulses could push you into the arms of someone nice. Personal relationships are at a high point. Your charm has benefits.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): A planned short trip may be better than the extended travel you dream about. Friends, who do not keep promises will upset you.

There are times when, left to his own devices, declarer will have no chance to go wrong. In such cases, the Holy Grail for the defenders is to present him with a losing option.

Note South's two-club rebid. Despite the anemic quality of his suit and the fact that he had enough overall strength for a jump bid in hearts, he lacked a sixth heart, so this was a temporizing bid. When he received a heart preference, he rashly went directly to game—a try of three hearts would have been more prudent.

West led a diamond to East's ace as declarer unblocked the king. The spade shift was taken in the closed hand. Declarer cashed his remaining high spade and took the virtually marked finesse of the ten of diamonds. After discarding a club on the diamond queen, he finessed the jack of hearts unsuccessfully.

Prospects for the defense were gloomy. Obviously, East could not have much more in the way of high cards, and the ace of clubs was poorly placed. But West decided that there was a faint hope if his partner held the jack of clubs. He shifted to the seven of that suit.

Suddenly, declarer had an alternative play in clubs—he could play West for either the jack or the ace. He elected to play him for the jack and called for a low club from dummy. East raked in an unexpected trick, and his club return allowed West to score the ace for the setting trick.

Declarer should not have gone wrong. If West did indeed have the jack twice guarded, he could have defeated the contract by not playing a club at all! Rather than presume that West was doing something silly, declarer should have credited him with trying to do something clever. Therefore, he should have adopted the same line available to him after the heart finesse failed by playing West for the ace of clubs.

Life

By Holly Parrott

The water, the soul.
Fresh, glistening, anew.
Through the years the water makes its journey,
Over rough rocks, soft sand and discouraging dirt.
At times it may become cloudy, unclear,
But, as it rolls on, it cleanses itself and begins anew.
When the water is close to the end of its journey,
It becomes weak, feeble.
But still it carries on until the end.
A spring dries, life dies.

Not A Ground Pig!

By Michael Peterson

It was February 2nd and a groundhog was getting out of his pajamas. He put on his super groundhog clothes and flew out of his hole. He flew down a chimney and bumped into a boy. The boy said, "Oh! A brown pig. Maybe he is a ground pig."

David, the groundhog, said, "I'm a groundhog, not a pig!"

Discovery Of Bubble Gum

By Chris Torrez

One day I was in the hills. There were lots of rocks. I took a rock that looked like gold. It was gold. A robber was coming. I didn't have any money except the gold. I stuck it in my mouth. He passed by. I accidently chewed it. It was chewy. And it had a flavor to it. I gave it the name bubble. Because you could make bubbles with it. But I thought I was missing something. I know what to name the gum. That was it! Bubble gum! I could take some of this back to town.

I Saved A Dinosaur

By Joshua Blades

Once there was a dinosaur I played with every day. We were friends. One day tyrannosaurus rex came. He tried to eat him up. I was mad. Then I got mad at the tyrannosaurus rex. I got some sleeping gas. I ran up his back and put it in his mouth. He had not eaten the dinosaur yet. I got him. I was glad I saved him. He was not hurt. I was very glad, too.

I Remember

By Crystal Kite

I love you and you've always known.
I'll always remember your loving touch.
I've always known you were Mr. Right.
I would just like to know why you hate me.
I fell in love with you and I can't let go.
You'll always be my favorite guy.
And I hope we'll never have to say good-bye.
I know you've never loved me, even from the start,
But I just want to say you broke my heart.

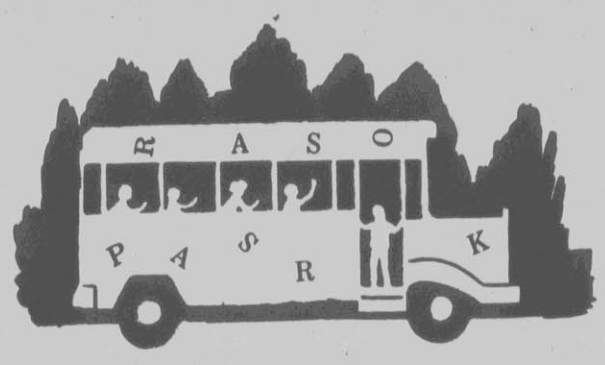
BLACK HISTORY MONTH

The modern civil rights movement started in Montgomery, Alabama. A black lady refused to move to the back of a city bus when she boarded. The blacks of Montgomery boycotted or refused to ride the bus system for 381 days. Locate the name of the lady who refused to move to the back of the bus by finding the letters of her name on the picture of the bus. The correct answer is below.



Answer: Rosa Parks

Soccer

By Dan Whitehurst

Soccer is fun and rough. There are rules. You cannot touch the ball with your hands. You can't trip with your feet. You can't push. You can't kick real high up in the air. That is too dangerous. You can't hold the person. If you break the rules, the coach blows the whistle and you have to sit on the bench. When the other team makes a goal, your team gets to kick the ball. At the end of the game, if the score is a tie, you have to kick off. The team that scores the most goals wins!

Department of Labor

The first woman to ever serve in a Cabinet position was the secretary of labor. In 1933, Francis Perkins was appointed by the president and took office with the Senate's approval. The secretary of labor is 11th in order of succession to the presidency and is a member of the executive branch of government.

Until 1913, the problems of labor were a part of the Department of the Interior. After becoming a Cabinet member on its own, the department increased its power in dealing with the problems of workers. Its major function is to promote the welfare and better the conditions of those in the labor force. The department deals with child labor, minimum wage, overtime and farm workers. It regulates pension plans, deals with labor union elections, and hears appeals from workers concerning wage or salary problems. A major concern of the department is to look after the safety of workers. An agency within the Labor Department is the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA).

The department directs the Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA) which provides job skills and training to the unemployed and the disadvantaged. Additionally, the Justice Department promotes the hiring of women and ensures nondiscrimination in hiring for companies.

Send In Your Entries To Expressions

The Daily Reflector is looking for elementary, middle, and high school students to draw pictures, write stories, essays and poems. Each week we will publish the best writing and drawing. The winner of each will receive $2. We will publish stories and art work we feel should receive special mention.

Entries must be original. Drawings must be in ink, crayon, markers or paint on thick colored paper. Please no pencil. Entries will be held for a period of ninety days and will be considered for that period of time. Entries will be returned if a self-addressed, stamped envelope is included.

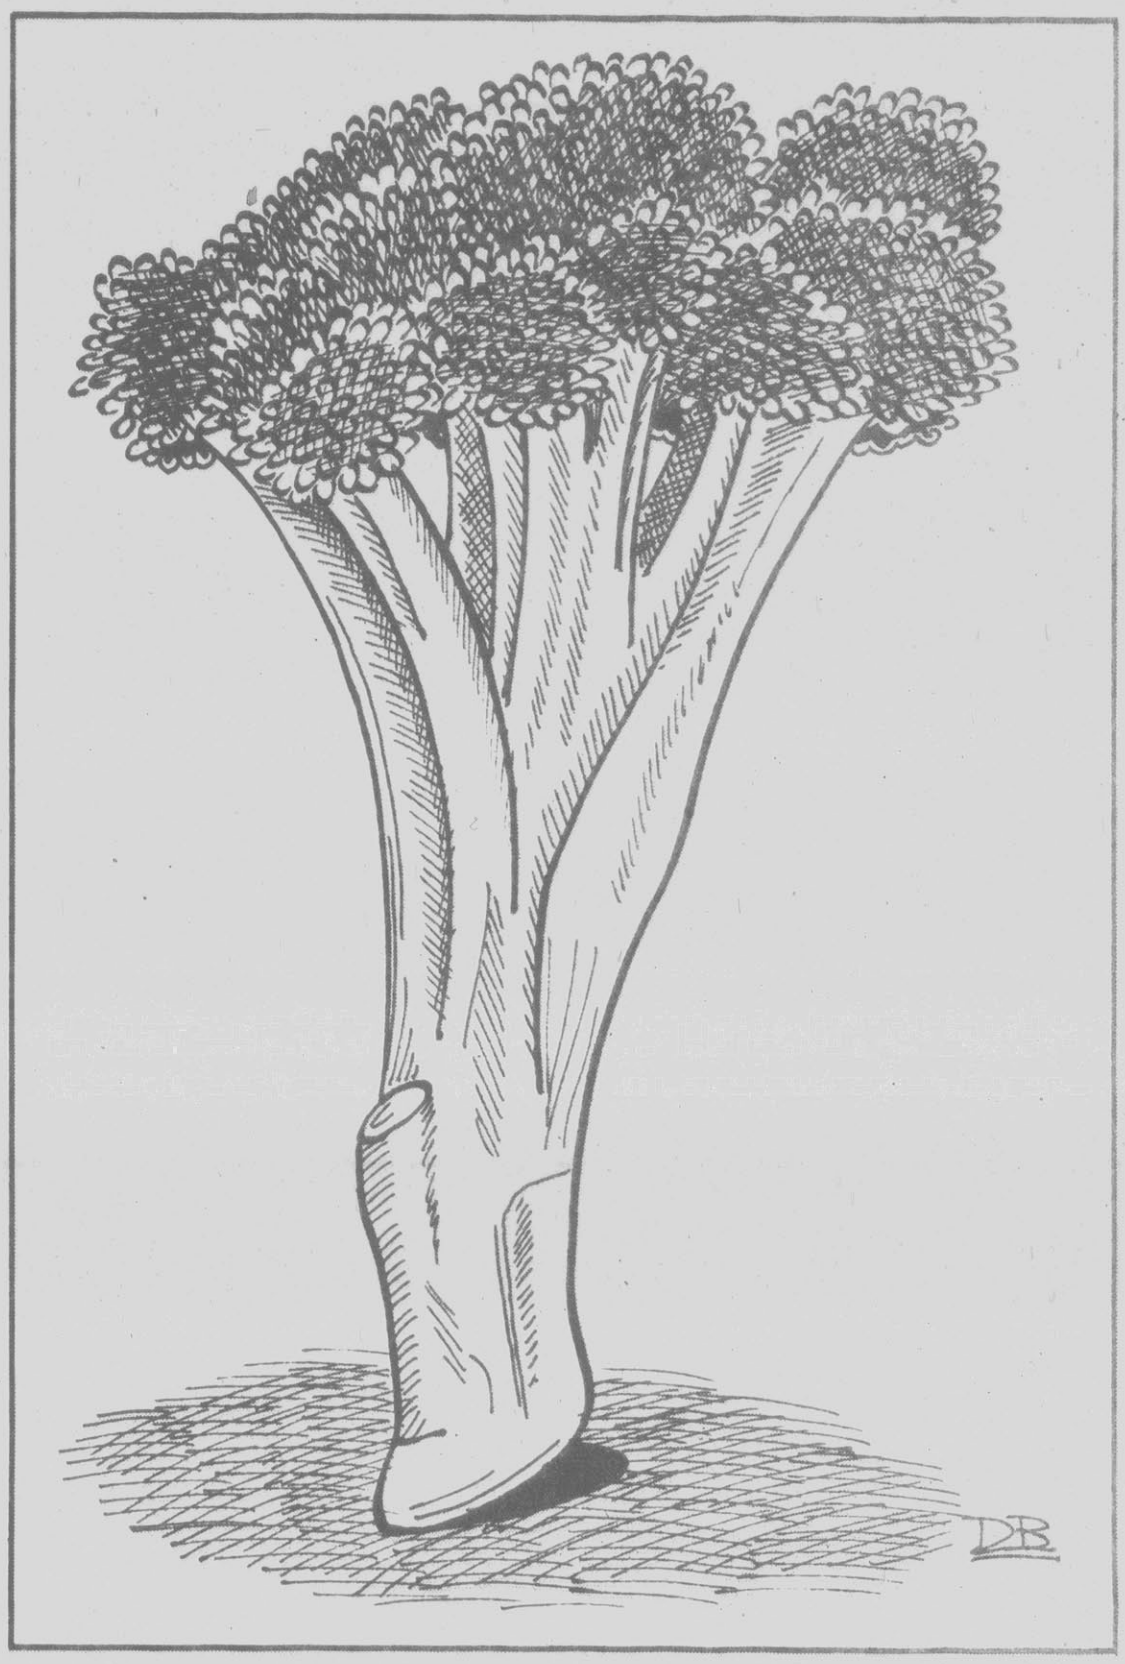
Broccoli: Its Rise To Stardom

By Jonathan Susskind
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE



All the elements of a TV miniseries are here. It begins in the Roaring '20s. It is set in winter-weary Boston and the lush Salinas Valley of California.

It is the story of an Italian immigrant who, through daring promotion and good timing, rises from obscurity to make it big, earning at long last a place in the hearts (and stomachs) of nearly every American.

It is a tale of low esteem and high nutrition, of great expectations, poor preparations and screaming little children throwing their dinner plates on the floor.

We could call it "The Broccoli Saga."

A more startling story could hardly be written for a Hollywood starlet. Only 70 years ago, few Americans had eaten broccoli. Yet two years ago, a Roper poll of almost 8,000 adults at Walt Disney World's Epcot Center reported that broccoli, and its fair-headed cousin cauliflower, are the most popular non-starchy vegetables.

We like broccoli so much that between 1970 and 1987, our per-person consumption of it grew more than sevenfold, from a half pound to more than 3½ pounds annually, the U.S. Department of Agriculture reports (Women like it more than men, the Epcot poll also showed).

Broccoli was grown and consumed in colonial America, where John Randolph of Williamsburg wrote in a gardening treatise in 1775, "The stems will eat like asparagus and the heads like cauliflower."

Why broccoli did not then become a staple of the American table is a gastronomic mystery (and another reason for our miniseries).

Italians brought their broccoli seeds to the United States with them in the late 1800s, growing it for themselves while continuing to import some. But the vegetable was hardly known outside the immigrant communities of the Northeast before the entrepreneurial partnership of two Sicilian brothers, Andrew and Stephen D'Arrigo, in the 1920s.

The bicoastal brothers, Andrew in Boston and Stephen in Stockton, Calif., had formed their own company to ship specialty Italian produce, specifically sweet anise and cactus pears. In 1924, Stephen bought a 24-acre ranch in San Jose and planted imported seeds of broccoli and celery, then shipped the first few iced cartons of broccoli to Boston's produce market.

Then one day in 1926, Stephen D'Arrigo took a snapshot of his 2-year-old old son Andrew, wearing short pants, a faint smile and a bowl haircut, and put the picture on a box of broccoli.

It made food marketing history. The pink "Andy Boy" label was the first trade-marked brand name ever used on a package of fresh produce. It was followed by Andy Boy billboards and newspaper advertisements, and a sponsored radio show, as D'Arrigo Bros. Co. expanded its markets and offerings of fruits and vegetables.

The Andy Boy label is still used on the premium-quality line of produce, said John D'Arrigo, the grandson and great-nephew of the founders and manager of the company's plant in Castroville, Calif.

While fresh broccoli is available year-round, supplies are greatest and cheapest in the coolest months. When shopping for broccoli, D'Arrigo recommends looking for bunches with firm stalks, uniformly smooth heads and tightly closed "beads," the individual flowers. The yellow in the flowers should not be visible, but some yellow in the stalk or underside of the bunches is a trait of a few strains of broccoli and does not mean it is bad, he said.

Keep fresh broccoli refrigerated, as it rots quickly at room temperature. To firm and refresh broccoli if you are serving it raw, soak it in cold water.

Many people, unfortunately, discard the stalk portion of broccoli, thinking it too tough to eat, but it has a good deal of the fiber and nutritional content. If you're one of those people, try to find pre-cut florets Otherwise, save the stalks to make soup, purees or stir-fry dishes; their flavor and texture are similar to water chestnuts.

The bottom end of the stalk, particularly a large one, is often woody. Simply trim off an inch or two. You can peel the stalk with a vegetable peeler, but a paring knife makes it easier. Make a short cut in the bottom of the stalk, twist it out slightly, and pull up toward the head, stripping the stringy skin away from the tender light green interior.

Cutting uniformly sized pieces ensures even cooking during steaming and stir-frying. Stalks may be sliced into rounds, chunks, strips or triangular pieces (To do that last trick, slice a piece from the stalk end crosswise at a 45-degree angle, roll the stalk a quarter-turn, slice again at an angle, roll again and continue).

Some cooks recommend cooking whole broccoli by cutting an X in the bottom of each stalk and standing it in boiling water that does not reach the head, in the same way as asparagus is prepared. The head steams while the stalks cook in the water, but if you're not careful and the stalks are thick, the heads will be mushy while the stalks stay hard.

To blanch broccoli, as many recipes call for, boil enough water to hold all the broccoli. Add the stalk pieces, return to boil, and boil 1 minute. Then add the florets and boil 1 minute more. Quickly drain the broccoli and cool it under cold running water to stop the cooking.

Frozen broccoli does not have all these caveats, but it quickly turns mushy if overcooked, which is why some children and adults have a distaste for any form of it.

Broccoli turns an olive-yellow color if it is cooked too long or is in the presence of acidic ingredients for more than a few minutes. To prevent the unpleasant color change in, say, a salad, add the acidic ingredients (lemon juice, vinegar and the like) at the last minute.

Make broccoli the star of your dinner table with these recipes:

BROCCOLI QUICHE

1 10-in. deep-dish pie crust, frozen or homemade
1½ lbs. broccoli
½ lb. mushrooms
1 onion, 2 to 3 inches in diameter
2 cloves garlic
4 tbsps. margarine
2 tbsps. tamari or low-sodium soy sauce
⅛ tsp. grated nutmeg
⅛ tsp. cayenne
3 large eggs, beaten
1 cup sour cream
1½ cups shredded Swiss, Gruyere or Jarlsburg cheese
Milk or cream, if needed
Nutmeg for garnish, optional

Heat oven to 350 degrees. Prick pie shell, or fill with dried beans, and bake for 12 to 15 minutes, until light golden brown. Remove and cool. Reduce oven heat to 300 degrees.

Cut broccoli florets from stalks and reserve stalks for other uses. Wash and drain the florets. Clean and slice the mushrooms. Coarsely chop the onion and garlic.

Melt margarine in a large frying pan over medium heat and add the onion and garlic. Saute 3 to 4 minutes, until soft. Add the mushrooms and broccoli. Cook until the broccoli turns bright green and add the tamari or soy sauce. Cover the pan and cook until the broccoli is crisp-tender, about 5 to 8 minutes. Remove from heat and drain excess liquid, reserving for next step.

In a large bowl, combine nutmeg, cayenne, eggs and sour cream and mix until well blended. Add a little of the drained cooking liquid or milk or cream if the mixture is very thick.

Mix 1 cup of cheese with the vegetables and put the mixture in the pie shell, smoothing it out. Pour in the liquid until it reaches the inside edge of the crust; you may not need it all. Sprinkle remaining ½ cup of cheese on top and the nutmeg if desired.

Bake on a baking sheet for about 35 to 45 minutes, or until a knife inserted in the center comes out mostly clean. If the edges of the pie crust brown too much during baking, cover them with foil. The filling will continue to set after removal from the oven. Cool 20 minutes before serving, or refrigerate overnight and allow to come to room temperature before serving. Serves six.

CHEESY BROCCOLI CASSEROLE

1½ lbs. fresh broccoli
2 slightly beaten eggs
¾ cup cottage cheese
½ cup shredded Cheddar cheese (2 ounces)
2 tbsps. finely chopped onion
1 tsp. Worcestershire sauce
¼ tsp. salt
⅛ tsp. pepper
¼ cup fine dry bread crumbs
1 tbsp. margarine or butter, melted

Wash and trim broccoli; cut into spears. Cook broccoli, covered, in a small amount of unsalted, boiling water about 10 minutes or until crisp-tender; drain.

Meanwhile, in a bowl combine beaten eggs, cottage cheese, Cheddar cheese, onion, Worcestershire sauce, salt and pepper. Arrange broccoli in shallow 1½-quart baking dish; spoon cheese mixture on top. Stir together bread crumbs and margarine; sprinkle over cheese mixture. Bake, uncovered, in a 350-degree oven 15 to 20 minutes or until heated through and egg mixture is set. Serves six.

BROCCOLI STUFATI

1½ lbs. broccoli
2 tbsps. olive oil
1 cup thinly sliced onions
2 tbsps. capers, chopped
Freshly ground pepper to taste
½ lb. provolone, thinly sliced
½ cup dry red wine
Juice of ½ lemon

Wash the broccoli and trim the outer skin of the stems. If stems are very thick, cut them into ½-inch slices. Otherwise, cut stems lengthwise into ½-inch strips and cut off florets.

Use a large saucepan or casserole with low sides that can hold the broccoli in two layers. Add the olive oil, evenly spread half the onions in the bottom, and cover with half the broccoli and half the capers. Sprinkle with pepper and distribute half the provolone slices on top. Repeat the layering, ending with cheese. Pour in the red wine, cover and bring to a simmer over low heat until the broccoli is cooked but still firm, about 20 minutes. Do not stir while cooking. Add lemon juice just before serving. Serves six.

BROCCOLI IN ORANGE SAUCE

1½ lbs. broccoli, boiled or steamed to crisp-tender
6 tbsps. butter or margarine
¼ cup finely chopped shallots
½ cup fresh orange juice
1 tbsp. grated orange zest

Melt butter or margarine over medium heat in a 3- or 4-quart saucepan. Add shallots and saute until soft. Add orange juice and zest and boil sauce until it is reduced by half. Add broccoli, turn to coat with sauce and reheat, and serve immediately. Serves four.

MEDITERRANEAN BROCCOLI AND MUSHROOM SOUP

4½ cups water or vegetable stock
1 medium onion, chopped
⅓ cup raw barley or orzo (rice-shaped pasta)
2 bay leaves
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 tbsp. olive oil
2½ to 3 cups finely chopped broccoli
½ lb. coarsely chopped mushrooms
1 small turnip, peeled and diced
1 8-oz. can imported plum tomatoes with liquid, chopped
3 tbsps. minced fresh parsley
¼ cup dry red wine
1 tsp. paprika
1 tsp. dried marjoram
½ tsp. dried oregano
½ tsp. dried basil
¼ tsp. dried rosemary
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
Grated Parmesan cheese for topping, optional

Place the onion, barley, bay leaves, garlic and oil in a large pot and cover with 2 cups of water or vegetable stock. Bring to a boil, cover and cook over low heat for 10 minutes.

Add all the remaining ingredients to the pot along with an additional 2½ cups water or stock. Cover and simmer over low heat for about 35 minutes, or until the vegetables and barley are tender. Ideally, this soup should stand at least an hour before serving. If you cooked orzo separately, add it to the soup just before serving. Sprinkle each serving with grated Parmesan cheese, if desired. Serves six to eight.

BROCCOLI WITH BLACK OLIVES

1 bunch (about 1½ pounds) fresh broccoli, trimmed
3 tablespoons olive oil
1 clove garlic, chopped fine
Salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste
¼ cup small block olives, pitted and cut into small pieces
3 tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese

Parboil the broccoli about 10 minutes in a small amount of salted water. Drain. Heat the oil, add the garlic and saute until lightly browned. Add the broccoli and season with salt andpepper. Cook slowly over low heat 10 minutes, adding a little of the water in which the broccoli was cooked if the pan gets too dry. Add the olives and heat two minutes longer. Serve immediately sprinkled with the graded cheese. Serves 4.

BROCCOLI WITH CAPERS

Sprinkle hot drained broccoli with bottled capers and melted butter mixed with a little of the juice from the bottle.

BROCCOLI AMANDINE

For four servings, cook one large bunch of broccoli; drain and arrange on a heated serving platter. To one-half cut melted butter add lemon juice to taste and one-fourth cup coarsely chopped toasted almonds. Sprinkle over the broccoli.

If You're Going To Drink, Do So In Moderation

Kathy Kolasa

Ph.D., ECU Dept. Family Medicine

Q.You mentioned alcoholic beverages sometime ago. I think you should talk more about the dangers of alcohol and amounts. N.Y., Greenville.

A. Several physicians and other health care providers commented after I wrote that some alcohol was OK although not necessary, in a healty promoting diet for women. I was told that I should not encourage drinking because there are some people who cannot tolerate even one glass of wine, beer or alcohol. There are also men and women who have medical reasons not to drink. It is true that the drinking of beer, wine and distilled spirits like whiskey, gin and vodka is a lifestyle behavior that can impact on health. My comments were not to encourage drinking, but to note that several authorities including the American Dietetic Association with issued the Nutrition Guidelines for Women; the U.S. government released the Dietary Guidelines for Americans; and Surgeon General Koop who reported on nutrition and health this fall, all indicated that alcohol in moderation (less than two drinks per day) may not be harmful to health.

So, of you drink alcohol, it is important for you to discuss how this dietary and lifestyle factor affects your health and the health of your family with your family physician. The U.S. Dietary Guidelines for Americans reads "One or two standard size drinks daily appear to cause no harm in normal, healthy, non-pregnant adults. A standard size drink is 12 ounces of regular beer, 5 ounces of wine and 1½ ounces of distilled spirits or liquor. These all have about equal alcohol."

Dr. Nanajan Yakoub, one of our family medicine resident physicians, convinced me that I should clarify some of the questions about alcohol. And so here is a little more information about alcohol and how it affects health. Alcohol can affect many body functions including the person's appetite for food and the digestion, absorption, transport, storage and use of other nutrients. The Surgeon General pointed out that we actually know very little, good or bad, about the effect of moderate or occasional drinking on nutritional well being. We do know, however, that drinking wine, beer, tonics with alcohol, or liquor is a dietary practice that puts some people at increased risk for diseases of the liver, nervous system, heart and certain cancers. Drinking alcohol also contribute calories with few or no other nutrients. Remember, ounce for ounce, that alcohol gives you almost twice the number of calories that starch or protein gives your body. One way some people can reduce their weight is to limit or eliminate alcohol calories.

We do know that excessive consumption of beer, wine or alcoholic beverages by pregnant women may cause birth defects or other problems during pregnancy. You have probably seen warning signs in some restaurants or lounges. In states like California and New York, any establishment that serves alcohol is required by law to post a warning sign. We don't know how much alcohol it takes to damage. The research studies have not been able to show a threshold level of safety for alcohol intake during pregnancy. It probably varies from person to person. So, we are compelled to make the safest recommendation. All pregnant women and those planning to become pregnant should avoid drinking alcohol. And definitely talk over your situation with your doctor. We are beginning to learn too, that alcohol affects women and men differently. While women, like men, who are heavy drinkers have the same higher risks of heart disease, stroke, car crashes, memory loss, and sexual dyfunction, women hav other problems. If they drink heavily, they are at greater risk to osteoporosis and to breast cancer. Studies also show that it takes less alcohol to cause alcohol related diseases like the liver disease cirrhosis for women and for men, regardless of their size and weight.

I have been dwelling on the dangers of alcohol, but realize there are some benefits for some folks. For example, some doctors have patients with poor appetite drink a little wine prior to their meals to increase the urge to eat. There is a scientific controversy over the role of alcohol in raising the HDL or good cholesterol. No doctor that I know recommends that you start drinking to prevent heart disease, however. For some, there are other benefits, to their lifestyle from a moderate intake of beer or alcohol.

I think the U.S. Dietary Guidelines says it the best: "If you drink, do so in moderation, and don't drive.

How Fresh Fish Lands On Your Table

By Carole Sugarman
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

GLOUCESTER, Mass. — Health-conscious Americans have turned to fish. While consumption still trails far behind chicken and beef, in 1987 Americans ate a record amount of seafood — 15.4 pounds per capita.

At the same time, the cost of fish escalated more than that of any other protein food.This demand has not only put a strain on consumers' pocketbooks, but also on the system's ability to provide fish of consistently high quality.

Transporting all this fish from the sea to the plate is a massive and difficult task, a race against the clock that must maximize shelf life and minimize temperature abuse. For example, if a cod fillet is stored at 32 degrees, its shelf life will be 14 days, according to the National Marine Fisheries Service. Seven degrees warmer and that cod's shelf life will be cut in half.

From the water, a fish may go through five owners before it is purchased by a consumer. Because of their sales volume, supermarket chains can buy directly from processors who will ship fish to the chains' main distribution centers. From there, the products are shipped to individual stores.

Specialty fish shops and restaurants usually buy from a wholesaler. But there are many convolutions and exceptions. Often, wholesalers sell to one another.

To consolidate orders, processors often ship fish back and forth with no apparent geographic logic; turbot and john dory caught overseas are flown into Dulles Airport outside Washington and shipped to Steve Connelly's seafood plant in Gloucester, where they are repacked and then shipped back to Washington restaurants. Connelly also buys grouper caught in Florida, processes it and then ships it back to Florida restaurants.

"Quiet, boys!" the woman orders in a distinctive Boston accent. It is 6:30 on a Monday morning, and the start of the Boston Fish Auction.

In a musty room with the atmosphere of a disinterested high-school class, a group of about 20 buyers from Boston's fish-processing plants are gathered to bid on the morning's catch — a load from about seven boats that have returned from a week out on Georges Bank, one of New England's prime fishing areas. These processors ship fish all over the country.

Aside from Boston, there are four other fish auctions in the country — New Bedford, Mass.; the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey; Portland, Maine; and Honolulu.

In Boston the auction is not a display; processors will purchase fish they have not seen.

A blackboard at the front of the room lists the names of the boats, the type of fish and the amount caught: The Carol Ann, the Captain Sam II, the Nancy & Heidi, the True Life, the Reliable. Haddock, cod, grey sole, hake, cusk, flounder. For example, the Carol Ann is listed for 500 pounds of haddock among its catch; the Captain Sam II, for 500 pounds of grey sole.

The buyers are a hardened lot who know the inner workings of this business like the inside of a timepiece. There are people such as Bobby Brandano, in his shiny black jacket with Great Eastern Seafood emblazoned in gold, his onyx pompadour and his tight-fitting jeans.

Brandano keeps close tabs on what boats have gone out to sea and when they are scheduled to return. Fishermen have reputations, and Brandano wants to buy from the best.

There's Mike Vitales from Puritan Seafood, who sells to seafood distributors who in turn sell to upscale markets and restaurants. (Today Foehrkolb will buy 200 pounds of cod, 50 of pollack, 160 of flounder and 120 of grey sole from Vitales.)

"All the haddock is for sale," the auctioneer begins. The bidding starts at $1.50 a pound, ends at $1.75. There are 3 minutes to bid on each species until the buzzer is rung.

During the auction, several of the buyers talk in muffled voices on phones lined against the wall, relaying the bids to their companies as they are shouted, inquiring whether they should up the bid depending on their client's demands. In between, the woman in charge repeats: "Quiet, boys!"

There are a lot of things that are not being said openly here, most of them based on the supply of fish landed elsewhere. By 5 a.m., the buyers were in their offices, calling around to find out the amount of fish landed at other New England ports.

More importantly, the availability and price of fish in Canada also has a crucial impact on the price and quality of fish purchased domestically.

Close to 60 percent of all the groundfish — the cod, haddock, flounder etc. — that are eaten in this country are actually landed off Canada, primarily off the coasts of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. Domestic waters have been largely overfished for these species.

This Canadian product is trucked and-or ferried from the Maritimes into the United States and is called "over-the-road fish." Because the American dollar is worth more than the Canadian, and because the supply of fish is greater, it is less expensive than domestic "dock fish" and can be paid for as much as 30 days later — a great incentive for many processors, according to Connelly.

As a result of the time it takes to get to this country, however, the Canadian fish are "almost never as good quality" as domestic fish, Connelly believes.

Practically all New England processors are forced to buy Canadian fish at one time or another to meet demand, but "as a rule" more of it will go to large supermarket chains, according to Lee Weddig, director of the National Fisheries Institute.

On this particular morning, market-sized cod sell at the Boston auction for 70 cents a pound. Over-the-road cod from Canada are selling for 55 cents a pound, according to one processor.

After the Boston auction, the fish prices are relayed to Gloucester processors, who set their prices accordingly, generally at 3 to 5 cents less per pound because the Gloucester boats are unloaded by workers from the processing plants themselves. The fishermen don't have to pay "lumpers," workers who unload fish at the Boston pier.

The pricing structure gets even more complex: Though Empire paid 67 cents a pound for cod on this day, that price has little correlation to what the supermarket will pay the processor. Because supermarkets need to know prices a week or more in advance to plan for ads, Morris must quote a chain a price even before the fish are caught. "You talk about a crap shoot," he said.

Also, the 67 cents represents what Empire paid for the whole cod, not the fillet. Once the fish is filleted, only about a third of its original weight remains.

Thus, that cod really cost Empire $2.23 a pound. According to the prior arrangement, the processing firm charged Safeway $3 a pound for the cod. The chain then sold it at fish counters for $5.49 — an 83 percent markup.

A piece of good fresh fish can stand on its own: simply baked, grilled, poached or sauteed with a touch of wine, a squirt of lemon or a light sprinkling of herbs. But no matter how much attention is paid to a fish along the distribution chain, it can all go down the drain if it's improperly cooked.

As George Berkowitz, owner of Boston's Legal Sea Foods restaurants put it, "When people tell me they dislike fish, I suspect they probably have spent a lifetime eating it overcooked ..."

To avoid overcooking, Berkowitz offers these basic tips in his book, "The Legal Sea Foods Cookbook" (Doubleday, $12.95):

—Whether it is whole, cut in fillets or left in steaks, bake fish at a high temperature — anywhere from 400 to 450 degrees.

—Whatever the cooking method, use the rule of thumb: 10 minutes per inch of thickness.

LEGAL SEA FOODS' MONKFISH, BEAN AND PEPPER SALAD

½ lb. green beans, trimmed
1 yellow or red bell pepper, seeded and diced
6 scallions (white parts only), thinly sliced
1½ lbs. cooked, chilled monkfish, cut in 1-inch cubes
8 to 10 ripe cherry tomatoes
4 hard-boiled eggs, quartered (optional)

For The Salad Dressing:
1 clove garlic, halved
¾ tsp. dry mustard
Salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste
⅓ cup rice wine or cider vinegar
Scant ½ cup vegetable oil
1 tsp. Dijon mustard
¼ to ⅓ cup chopped fresh marjoram, or a combination of sweet marjoram, parsley and summer savory or other herbs

Blanch the beans in a pot of boiling water for about 4 minutes.

Plunge into cold water to stop the cooking process and then drain them. Toss with the pepper and scallions.

Make the dressing. Steep the garlic, mustard, salt and black pepper in the vinegar for a few minutes. Just before serving, remove the garlic. Stir in the oil, Dijon mustard and herbs. Pour just enough of the dressing over the bean mixture to coat it, and marinate for at least 2 hours.

Assemble the salad. Mound the monkfish in the center of a platter, and surround with the bean mixture. Arrange the cherry tomatoes and eggs on the outside. 4 servings

SOMEPLACE SPECIAL'S CODFISH CAKES WITH GINGER

2 lbs. cod fillets
2 eggs, slightly beaten
⅔ cup fresh white bread crumbs (about 4 slices of bread)
2 tbsps. chopped fresh cilantro (coriander)
1 tbsp. grated fresh ginger root
¼ cup mayonnaise
1 tsp. hot chili oil
Salt to taste
3 tbsps. butter for sauteing

Steam the cod over moderate steam for 7 minutes. Drain off any excess liquid and combine the fish with the other ingredients except butter, mixing gently. Melt the butter in a skillet. Shape the codfish mixture into 7 or 8 patties and saute them over moderate heat for about 3 minutes on each side, until brown. 4 servings

How To Spot Fresh Fish

By Carole Sugarman
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

"It doesn't take a genius to spot fresh fish," says Bob Kinkead, chef and owner at 21 Federal restaurant in Washington. "Real fresh fish has a real glistening, real alive quality. Fish that's been sitting around looks it."

Consumers should demand high-quality fish and complain if it isn't, says Ken Coons, executive director of the New England Fisheries Development Foundation. Coons believes that the marketplace will respond.

To demand high quality, however, you must know what it is. One of the best ways to learn is to compare fish at different stores. Once you see top quality, you'll realize what isn't, and vice versa.

While fish may have a slight seaweed scent, it should not smell fishy, and neither should the store. When selecting a fish, one Washington area wholesaler believes consumers should ask seafood clerks to remove it from behind the display for closer examination and for a whiff.

Other than that, here's a checklist from "The Northeast Seafood Book: A Manual of Seafood Products, Marketing and Utilization."

Whole Fish

Eyes: Look for clear, full, bulging eyes with black pupils. As fresh fish ages, the eyes become cloudy, dry and sunken and the pupils turn gray or whitish. A bloody eye is often an indication of mishandling. Eyes, however, are not always the best quality indicator. Sometimes they may be bloody or cloudy on perfectly good fish.

Gills: They should be red or pinkish red, free of slime and smell like fresh seaweed. With age, their color fades to light pink, then gray and finally brownish or greenish. By then, the gills will have a strong sour odor and may be covered with a thick yellow or gray mucus.

Skin: Check for moist, unbruised, unfaded and shiny skin. As fish ages, characteristic markings and colors fade and become less pronounced, and a thick milky or yellowish slime layer builds up.

Flesh: Look for flesh that is firm, adheres closely to the bones and is elastic to the touch. Test by depressing the flesh with a finger; it should spring back to its original shape leaving no indentation.

Belly cavity (for gutted fish): It should be clean with no traces of blood, viscera, silvery or black belly lining or belly burn. The latter appears as yellowing or browning of the belly cavity flesh. The cavity should not have a strong objectionable odor.

Fillets and Steaks

Flesh: Should be firm, moist and have a sheen to it. It should not look dried out or have an off-color, and should not have separations (gaping between flesh segments). Use the depression test to check the firmness of the meat. After depressing the meat with your finger, it should spring back to its original shape leaving no indentation.

Odor: Should be fresh and mild. Oily fish may have a faint fishy smell, but it shouldn't be disagreeably strong. Do not purchase fish which has an ammonia-like odor as this is an indication of spoilage.

And finally, says Coons, don't go into a store with a preconceived notion about what kind of fish you want. Buy what looks good.

Innovative Recipes Offer Variations For Dates

By Barbara Hansen
LAT-WP NEWS SERVICE

Stuffed dates, date-nut bread, date shakes, Waldorf salad with dates — you would expect to find these old-timers in a collection of recipes dealing with the sweet fruit of the date palm. But times have changed considerably, and contemporary chefs are using the date in innovative ways.

Chef Antonio Jimenez of Cafe Cafe in Los Angeles adds dates to peanut sauce for linguine and spices the unusual mixture with Thai red curry paste. Hugo Molina of the Parkway Grill in Pasadena, Calif., simmers dates with raspberry vinegar, Port, cream and shallots to make a rosy sauce for sliced duck breast.

Roger Pigozzi, executive chef of the Biltmore Hotel in Los Angeles, has a couple of ideas that will come in handy for future holiday seasons as well as for special occasions now. Individual molded souffles that blend wild rice, dates and celery root make a dressy addition to a dinner plate. The date and apricot stuffing that Pigozzi suggests for pork chops and game should also work well with poultry.

The only note of tradition is Georgian chicken with dates, a family recipe from Fred Powers, the proprietor of Gorky's Cafe and Russian Brewery in Los Angeles. The chicken simmers with vegetables, wine and other ingredients in a sauce that is lightly sweetened with sugar and dates.

LINGUINE WITH PEANUT SAUCE AND DATES

2 to 3 tbsps. half and half
½ tsp. sesame oil
½ tsp. Thai red curry paste
½ tsp. sugar
Dash salt
½ cup dates, slivered
1 tbsp. creamy peanut butter
Oil
4 oz. cooked linguine
Chopped parsley

Heat 2 tablespoons half and half and sesame oil in small skillet. Add curry paste, sugar, salt and dates. Heat, blending well. Stir in peanut butter. If sauce is too thick, add remaining 1 tablespoon half and half. Mix with cooked pasta. Heat 1 teaspoon oil in skillet. Add pasta and saute lightly 1 minute. Serve garnished with parsley. Makes 1 serving.

BAKED DUCK BREAST WITH DATE AND PORT WINE SAUCE

1 cup orange juice
½ cup dark beer
½ cup Coca Cola
3 tbsps. mixed fresh herbs (oregano, tarragon, basil)
1 tbsp. Dijon mustard
1 tbsp. black peppercorns, coarsely crushed
1 tsp. chopped garlic
3 bay leaves
4 (8-oz.) duck breasts
Date and Port Wine Sauce

Combine orange juice, beer, Coca Cola, herbs, mustard, peppercorns, garlic and bay leaves in non-aluminum container and mix well. Add duck breasts, turning to coat. Cover and refrigerate 1 hour. Meanwhile, make Date and Port Wine Sauce. Remove duck breasts from marinade and pat dry. Place on baking sheet and bake at 350 degrees 30 minutes. Cut breasts crosswise into thin slices and place on plate in fan shape. Spoon sauce over or around duck. Makes 4 servings.

Date and Port Wine Sauce

1 tbsp. chopped shallots
¼ cup soft unsalted butter
½ cup Port wine
8 to 10 pitted dates, seeded and chopped
½ cup duck or chicken stock
5 tbsps. raspberry vinegar
1½ cups whipping cream
Salt, pepper

Saute shallots in 2 tablespoons butter until tender. Add Port wine and dates and cook 2 minutes over high heat. Add stock and vinegar and cook 3 minutes. Add cream, lower heat to medium and reduce sauce by half. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Cut remaining 2 tablespoons butter into small pieces and add 1 at time, swirling pan to incorporate. Remove sauce from heat, strain through medium colander and keep warm. Makes 1¾ cups.

WILD RICE AND DATES SOUFFLE

3 oz. wild rice (about 2-3 cup)
1 oz. celery root, peeled and cut in fine dice
1 medium onion, diced
½ cup pitted dates, diced
1¼ cups chicken stock
5 eggs
⅓ cup whipping cream
Salt
Nutmeg
¼ cup butter

Clean, wash and cook rice. There will be about 2 cups. Cook celery root, onion and dates in chicken stock until tender, about 15 minutes. Add rice and cool slightly. Combine rice mixture, eggs and cream and season to taste with salt and nutmeg. Place half of mixture in blender and blend 30 seconds. Remove and repeat with remaining mixture. Combine blended ingredients.

Butter individual molds large enough to hold ¼ cup mixture. If desired, larger molds holding ½ cup mixture may be used. Spoon mixture into molds and set in pan of hot water. Bake at 325 degrees 30 minutes for ¼ cup souffles and 45 minutes for ½ cup souffles or until knife inserted in souffle comes out clean. Remove from hot water bath. Run knife around edge of each mold, invert on plate and serve hot. Makes 20 (¼-cup) servings.

DATE AND APRICOT STUFFING

1 small onion, chopped
½ cup butter
1 cup white wine
½ lb. pitted dates, quartered (about 1½ cups)
¼ lb. unsweetened dried apricots, chopped
1 (1-lb.) loaf bread, cut into 1-inch cubes
2 eggs
1 cup chicken stock
1 tbsp. crushed rosemary, or to taste
Salt, pepper

Saute onion in butter until brown. Add wine and boil until reduced by half. Add dates and apricots and reduce by half. Place bread in large bowl. Add date mixture and eggs and mix. Add enough chicken stock to make mixture moist but not too wet. Season to taste with rosemary, salt and pepper. Use as stuffing for pork chops or with game. Makes about 7 cups.

GEORGIAN DATE CHICKEN

1 (4-lb.) roasting chicken, cut into serving pieces
Salt, pepper
Paprika
2 tbsps. unsalted butter
1 medium carrot
2 stalks celery
1 small onion
½ cup dry white wine
2 to 3 cups chicken stock
6 black peppercorns
2 bay leaves
2 tbsps. flour
24 pitted dates
2 tbsps. lemon juice
1 tbsp. sugar

Wash chicken pieces and pat dry with paper towel. Sprinkle with salt, pepper and paprika to taste. Heat 1 tablespoon butter in Dutch oven or large heavy skillet. Add chicken and cook over medium high heat until brown on all sides. Remove to platter.

Cut carrot, celery and onion into ¼-inch-thick slices. Heat remaining butter in Dutch oven, add vegetables and cook over moderate heat until butter begins to foam. Add chicken and wine and cook over medium high heat until liquid is almost evaporated. Tie peppercorns and bay leaves in cheesecloth bag. Add bag and ½ cup chicken stock to Dutch oven. Bring to boil, lower heat and simmer, covered, 10 minutes. Turn chicken. Add another ½ cup stock, cover and simmer 30 minutes. Check after 15 minutes. If stock has reduced too much, add more stock.

In skillet, melt 1 tablespoon butter. Add flour and cook and stir over medium heat 3 to 4 minutes. Add 1 cup chicken stock, lemon juice and sugar. Cook until bubbly and thickened. Pour over chicken in Dutch oven. Add dates, adjust seasoning and simmer 5 minutes longer. Arrange chicken on platter and cover with sauce. Serve with rice or boiled potatoes. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

Senator's Wife Is An Expert On Cajun Cooking

By Carole Sugarman
LAT/WP NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON — Lois Breaux, wife of Sen. John Breaux, D-La., needed a hypodermic needle to prepare dinner recently, but her neighborhood druggist wouldn't sell her one. "I'm just trying to inject a turkey," she told him.

Breaux, who ended up getting it from a veterinarian, gave the bird several shots of spicy broth, then dunked it into a huge pot of hot oil in her Annandale, Va., backyard.

Deep-fried turkey, it seems, is the current rage in home entertaining for Louisianians.

But Breaux won't have to go to the pharmacy or vet for kitchen equipment anymore. The New Orleans Emporium Market and Grill here now stocks Trappey's Cajun Injector, a broth-mix-and-needle combination made expressly for injecting turkeys or roasts — and one of many Louisiana-made products that Breaux brought to the store.

As a part-time consultant and buyer for the market, Breaux has scouted out lots of other Louisiana products that wouldn't ordinarily find their way to Washington grocery shelves: Zapp's Cajun-Flavored Craw-Tators, Bayou Billy's Burgers sweat shirts and "A Dictionary of the Cajun Language" written by the Rev. Msgr. Jules O. Daigle, Breaux's 88-year-old uncle.

It also helps her husband — not that John Breaux, who's been in Congress since 1972, needs much help.

"I may not have made much money, but I've gotten more votes (for John) than I ever did campaigning," laughed Lois Breaux, referring to the excitement and thanks expressed to her by constituent food companies.

Breaux hooked up with the New Orleans Emporium Market when a friend of hers stopped into the shop after it opened five months ago. "I know someone who can really get you started," the friend told the store's manager, Sandy Foucqueteau.

Breaux, interested in the proposition, then talked with Kay Baker, wife of Rep. Richard Baker, R-La., who owns a gift shop in Baton Rouge and has contacts with local Louisiana companies.

"She's a Republican and we're Democrats and we're working together," Breaux said. Kay Baker sometimes acts as a middleman for shipping goods, supplies non-food gift items to the Emporium and helped Breaux decorate the window of the shop when it first opened.

A full-time English teacher at St. Michael's School in Annandale, who fixes dinner (95 percent Louisiana-style) every night for her family, Breaux also happens to be very interested in food.

"I don't recommend any products (to the market) unless I try them myself," Breaux said on a recent afternoon at the Emporium Market. Family members frequently act as guinea pigs, taste-testing several varieties of Cajun seasonings or sampling a new item a company has sent her.

An effusive talker who likes to sling superlatives, Breaux pointed out her two "favorite" products in the shop. The Breaux family has gone through six bottles of Russco's Cajun Sauce since September, she said. "You put it on chicken, meat. I love it on fish!"

Cajun King Gumbo Mix is another, although "Please don't add tomato sauce" as the label directs, Breaux insisted. That makes it Creole gumbo — not Cajun gumbo.

"Blue Plate Mayonnaise. I would rather eat it than any other mayonnaise," Breaux said, adding that for years she has been lugging back cases of the New Orleans product for her own use.

And then there's Tony Chachere's Creole Seasoning, which the Breauxs could not do without. It's a staple on the kitchen table. "We have to have Tony's to eat," Breaux said.

In fact, John Breaux travels with little packets of the seasoning — and little bottles of Tabasco. He puts them in his briefcase and uses them to perk up airline food, Lois Breaux said.

While Breaux predictably thinks that the Cajun craze is far from dead (she organized the March of Dimes Gala last year and said that the biggest line was for Paul Prudhomme's food), she is not pleased with the bastardization of the cuisine.

"I've tasted some awful blackened redfish," she said, adding that it's not an authentic Cajun dish. "Paul Prudhomme made it up."

Breaux has made sure that the New Orleans Emporium Market stocks Community Coffee, a Baton Rouge brand, in addition to the more widely known Cafe du Monde, with which tourists are familiar.

But she is distressed that dishes served in the New Orleans Emporium Grill and sold for carry-out in the market are made from Uncle Ben's Converted Rice, which she believes doesn't absorb flavors as well as rice from Louisiana. In fact, Breaux was frustrated by her own inability to get Louisiana rice in Washington until Giant supermarkets started packaging Riviana rice for their house brand.

And she is somewhat frustrated that Northerners don't think of Louisiana as a source for barbecue sauce. "I wish I could get more people to try Louisiana barbecue sauce," she said, pointing to a bottle of Savoie's. "It has a lot of onions, bell peppers. You can eat it on the side as dipping sauce."

But there is at least one food that started in Louisiana that Northerners have taken to without a hitch — and one that the Breauxs depend on periodically for dinner themselves. It's not more than a quick drive from their suburban Virginia home — to a Popeye's Fried Chicken.

NEW ORLEANS EMPORIUM MARKET

REMOULADE SAUCE

2 cups mayonnaise
¼ cup creole or other grainy mustard
2 tbsps. ketchup
1 cup mire poix (a combination of onions, celery and green bell peppers, finely diced and squeezed of all liquid)
2 tbsps. Worcestershire sauce
¼ cup capers, drained
1½ tsps. lemon juice
2½ tsps. minced garlic
⅛ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. white pepper
¼ tsp. cayenne pepper
⅛ tsp. oregano
⅛ tsp. basil
⅛ tsp. thyme
⅛ tsp. dry mustard
⅛ tsp. paprika
1 tbsp. hot pepper sauce

In a large stainless steel bowl, whisk together the mayonnaise, creole mustard and ketchup. Add the mire poix and stir until well combined. Add Worcestershire sauce, capers, lemon juice and garlic. Finally add the spices and hot pepper sauce. Give a final whisk.

Store in airtight container. It will keep for one week in refrigerator.

To make shrimp remoulade, serve sauce with boiled, chilled shrimp garnished with lettuce, hard-boiled eggs and scallions. Or serve with boiled new potatoes or with the salad below. (Makes about 3½ cups)
